Panel won't 'cure' Central American ills

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's announcement of a Central American commission headed by Henry Kissinger will not still the clamor in Congress over administration policies in the troubled region, critics say.

The development "might defuse some of the criticism" but will not derail congressional efforts to end undercover operations in Nicaragua, House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, told reporters Monday.

"I would hope the president was not so misguided as to believe this would be an asset, because I don't think it is," said Rep. Clarence Long, D-Md., chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations.

The House planned to close its galleries to the press and public for four hours today for a briefing and debate on a bill that would halt undercover operations in support of Nicaraguan rebels by the end of the year.

The bill would substitute $80 million in open assistance to friendly Central American governments to halt gun-running to communist-backed rebels in El Salvador.

A vote is scheduled for next week, after another 12 hours of debate in open session.

Reaction to appointment mixed

Controversy over the Kissinger comeback began to swirl within hours after his appointment Monday by President Reagan as head of a bipartisan commission on Central America.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said he will call the former secretary of state as a witness to find out "what if anything he knows about Central America."

"There may be someone in this broad land who is lower on my list of choices than Mr. Kissinger but I can't think of him," said Helms, R-N.C., the conservative chairman of the Western Hemisphere subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

"I hope it is only a trial balloon, and as far as I am concerned, I would like to see it shot down," said Rep. Clarence Long, D-Md., a liberal whose House Appropriations subcommittee must approve funds for the administration's Central America policy.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, taking note of the criticism of Kissinger, today said that "certainly the president understands people have strong opinions about the secretary of state."

Speakes said Kissinger was "known for his expertise and knowledge of foreign affairs and everyone accepts him as a leader in the field, with as much expertise as anybody."

Earlier, Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said, "Few public servants enjoy such a distinguished background, and few carry with them such international acclaim and trust" as Kissinger. Support for Kissinger also was expressed by House Majority leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, and Sens. John Stennis, D-Miss., and Charles McC. Mathias, R-Md.

Critics in Congress maintain the covert operation violates a law passed last December against the use of U.S. intelligence funds to overthrow Central American governments.

As the House prepared for its first closed session in three years and only the third since 1830 — House records before then are unclear — both critics and supporters of administration policy on Central America were rallying on Capitol Hill.

Four West Coast Democrats just back from a trip to Nicaragua planned a news conference to outline policy alternatives. The four are Reps. Don Edwards of California, Mike Lowry of Washington, Les AuCoin of Oregon and George Miller of California.

On the other side of the Capitol, United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick and Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., were among scheduled speakers at a meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee for Democracy in Nicaragua. Organizers said former Salvadoran and Nicaraguan guerrillas would also speak.

the administration is planning another exercise in Honduras early next month to show U.S. military commitment to Central America.

The sources, who declined to be identified, said some 4,000 to 5,000 U.S. personnel and the aircraft carrier

Ranger will take part in the exercises, which will be about twice as large as last year's "Big Pine" operation in Honduras.

The exercises will include work on rough-terrain airfields designed to accommodate C-130 transport planes, which the Hondurans use to move troops around the country.

The exercises, officially described as routine, were actually intended as a warning to Nicaragua and Cuba that the United States has the means to stop the shipment of military supplies. The New York Times today quoted administration sources as saying.

The administration says its covert assistance to the rebels in Nicaragua is needed to keep that country's leftist government from funneling

Man given probation in mercy-killing attempt

HOUSTON (AP) — Billy Ray Clore, sentenced to three years' probation for shooting his comatose father in an attempted mercy killing, says he just wants his life to get back to normal.

"A lot of things have been going through my mind. I just want to get back to work," he said after being sentenced Monday for the attempted murder of the man he called his "best friend."

Jury foreman Royce Sewell said he and fellow jurors felt the shooting by Clore was "very definitely a case of love for his father," who died two weeks after the shooting without regaining consciousness.

Clore, 26, who ran a tire business with his father, could have been sentenced to 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

But the Harris County jury of nine men and three women, which convicted Clore on Friday, took less than three hours of deliberation Monday to decide to allow him to return home to his family.

"I'm so happy, so very happy," said Clore's mother, Hazel. "I didn't know what to expect. My mind was blank (when the jury was returning). I was trying to say a little prayer."

Clore insisted repeatedly during the two-week trial that he was trying to put his 62-year-old father out of his misery when he shot him at a nursing home March 21. Robert Clore suffered from a variety of life-threatening ailments and had been comatose for some time.

Clore was tried on a murder charge and faced possible life imprisonment if convicted. However, the charge was reduced to attempted murder after medical experts testified that they could not prove that the gunshot wound, not the other serious illnesses, had caused the elder Clore's death.

"I hope it (the outcome) doesn't encourage anyone to do the same thing," Clore said after sentencing. He showed no emotion as the decision was read, but a tearful, joyous reunion with his family followed District Judge Ted Poe's adjournment.

"It's still wrong," added juror Jeff Bibler. "However, in these circumstances, incarceration would really do no good for the community, for Billy, for his family."

Clore's deep love for his father was the subject of testimony by family members, both at the trial and again at the pre-sentencing hearing on Monday.

"I just humbly hope and pray that they (the jurors) feel Billy is not a criminal," Betty Clore, his grandmother, testified. "He's never hurt anyone. I feel he ought to be able to live with us."

"He's not going to hurt anybody. He's not a danger to anybody," said defense attorney Jack Zimmermann, urging the jury to give Clore two years' probation. "He's a boy who loved his dad too much."

Suspect indicted for capital murder

RANKIN — Upton County grand jury indicted Thomas Graham, 18, on charges of capital murder Monday in connection with the shooting death of Upton County Deputy Sheriff Charles A. "Chuck" Renfro.

Renfro, 45, was fatally shot Friday when he answered a burglar alarm at a McCamey lumber and hardware store.

The grand jury dropped charges against Graham's 19-year-old sister, Terri Graham. She had been arrested when authorities discovered that a truck registered to her was used as a getaway vehicle.

Graham remained in critical condition in the intensive care unit of Odessa Medical Center this morning with shotgun wounds to the face and shoulder. An Intratec Company natural gas processing plant supervisor shot Graham and killed his father, 40-year-old Thomas Graham, on the grounds of the plant late Saturday. The supervisor said the pair was attempting to steal a pickup from the site, located 20 miles east of Fort Stockton and 20 miles south of McCamey in Pecos County.

The two Grahams had been the subjects of a massive manhunt in connection with Renfro's death.

Pecos County grand jury met Monday to decide what action, if any, should be taken against the unidentified supervisor. No details were available early today.

Landman wins injunction against FNB

By ED TODD

Midland oil operator-landman Bill Mathis on Monday won an injunction in Midland's 142nd State District Court to preclude the foreclosure and sale of his 4,500-acre ranch until the outcome of a lawsuit against two banks and a bankrupt Midland oil company.

Mathis is complaining that The First National Bank of Midland (FNB) and Wood & Locker Inc. used "trickery and deceit" and deceptive trade practices to get his signature on a $3.5 million note for a loan he says he's not liable for.

In 1981, said Mathis, Wood & Locker borrowed $3.5 million to buy for Mathis the 4,500-acre ranch in Erath and Hood counties in Central Texas. In exchange, Mathis gave Wood & Locker his options on extensive oil-and-gas leases in the Overthrust Belt of Montana.

"They (John Wood and Walt Locker) had recently made a big deal and were looking for a deal with pizzazz," Mathis said in the hearing before Judge George Kelton of Odessa. "We were trading like property for like property," he testified. "We made a non-taxable exchange."

Under questioning of his attorney, Bill Browder, Mathis said Wood & Locker would "end up owning all the leases, and I'd end up owning the ranch."

Wood & Locker defaulted on the $3.5 million loan payments and later declared bankruptcy. In the meantime, FNB, which asked Mathis to pay on the note since his signature was on it, transferred the note to Texas Commercial Bank of Houston. Mathis refused to assume liability on the note, and TCB moved for foreclosure and to auction the ranch in a trustee sale to recoup the $3.5 million.

Kelton ordered a halt to the foreclosure until outcome of a trial.

Mathis said Locker, vice president of Wood & Locker, signed the FNB note on behalf of Wood & Locker. Mathis said he, too, signed the note at the request of the loan officer, then Executive Vice President Joel Mays. Mathis testified that Mays said he needed the signature "just...for banking purposes" and that he (Mathis) would not be liable for the note.

"Wood & Locker are old customers of ours," Mathis said Mays, who resigned from his position in May, told him. "You're an old customer of ours. We're just trying to help you all with a deal. We're not going to foreclose on you."

Mathis said had he been apprised that he shared liability on the note and that he might lose the ranch were Wood & Locker not to meet the $3.5 million obligation, "There wouldn't have been anyway I would have signed it. I would have taken my (Montana) leases and gone on."

Mathis said he had no reason not to believe Mays when the banker allegedly told him that his co-signing the note would not make him liable for paying off the note.

"I've been banking there (FNB) for 27 years," Mathis said, "and they have never told me anything that wasn't 100 percent." He said he had enduring respect and trust in former bank presidents C.J. Kelly and Wilbur A. Yeager Jr.

"You could depend on it. If First National Bank told you something, that's the way it was," Mathis said.

Mathis said he signed a renewal on the note in April 1982. The original note and the deed of trust to the ranch were signed in October 1981.

He said he understood that his signature was "for banking purposes to keep everything looking nice."

Another one of those days...

Some days nothing goes right. Late Sunday night, Southwestern Bell discovered that a broken water main had soaked a phone cable which serves about 1,000 of its customers on the northwest side.

Repairs were made and service restored by 8 a.m. Monday. So far, so good.

But a scant 2 1/2 hours later, a utility crew placing a pole at the intersection of Neely Avenue and Big Spring Street cut a cable and...

You guessed it. The very same 1,000 customers were without phone service again as well as 900 more Midland residents for a total of 1,900 customers.

Unless something else goes wrong, repairs should be completed by 5 p.m. this evening with service returned to normal.

We've found bay's enemy, it is us

By ANGUS PHILLIPS The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

ANNAPOLIS — Researchers say they have identified the villain in the decay of the Chesapeake Bay and not surprisingly, it is us.

Scientists wrapping up a six-year federal study say nutrients — mostly phosphorus from man's urban sewage treatment plants and nitrogen washing off his rural farming land — have overenriched the bay, spawning algae blooms.

When a similar problem existed in the Potomac River here almost two decades ago, the solution — upgrading Washington-area treatment plants to remove phosphorus from the effluent — was expensive: $1 billion.

Now come algae blooms in the Chesapeake, though not yet as noxious as the Potomac's, and concurrent steep declines in rooted aquatic plants, oxygen levels in the water and populations of desirable fish and shellfish.

"It's exciting," said William Eichbaum, who heads Maryland's health department, "because it's doable."

A bay cleanup is "something I would look back on with pride," said Betty Diener, Virginia secretary of commerce and resources.

MX missile debate stretches out

WASHINGTON (AP) — Liberal senators fighting to kill the MX missile are grumbling that advocates of the nuclear weapon are not listening to their arguments or challenging them.

As a result, the big floor debate they had planned on the nuclear weapon has turned into a week-long, sporadic series of unanswered speeches on the alleged dangers of placing the missiles in underground silos vulnerable to Soviet attack.

Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., one of about 15 senators in an anti-MX coalition headed by Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., complained to a nearby deserted chamber Monday that "little attention has been paid to our discussion."

"The reason may be that there has been no response by the other side," Moynihan said, referring to the

The mandate of the commission is to undertake a study of the Central American situation and make policy recommendations to Reagan by Dec. 1.

An administration source who requested anonymity said Monday that former Democratic national chairman Robert S. Strauss and Cardinal Terence Cooke of New York had been named to the panel.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., said today other members of the commission include Texas Gov. William P. Clements, San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros and Boston University President John Silber.

Jackson and three other senators were named today as senior counselors to the commission.

Senate leaders announced the appointment of Jackson, fellow Democrat Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, and Republicans Charles McC. Mathias Jr. of Maryland and Pete V. Domenici of New Mexico as non-voting advisers to the panel.

Mathias and Jackson were early advocates of the commission concept, while Bentsen and Domenici were picked largely because they represent border states, leaders said.

Reagan's goal is to bring together a bipartisan group from government, business, academia and other professions. He hopes the result will be a series of recommendations leading to a public consensus.

One possible commission recommendation is a "Marshall Plan" for Central America to deal with the region's serious social and economic problems.

High unemployment continues in 19 states

WASHINGTON (AP) — At least 19 states still had unemployment rates of 10 percent or more in May, with West Virginia and Michigan recording the worst jobless figures, the Labor Department reported today.

However, the report noted rates were declining in 37 states, an encouraging figure that appeared to be in line with other indications of recovery in the national economy.

In May, West Virginia's unemployment rate still topped the list but was down to 18.2 percent from April's 19 percent.

West Virginia was hard hit by layoffs at mines during the recession and Michigan was hit by slow business in the auto industry.

However, relatively high rates were still recorded by Alabama and Ohio with 12.9 percent of their workforce unemployed.

He said that Wood & Locker's indebtedness to the bank ranged up to $10 million.

Mays said that "that eventuality" of Mathis paying on the note was never explored. "I didn't tell him that (Mathis had no liability). It wasn't discussed."

Commented Mays: "Anytime someone signs a note, he can become liable for that note."

Otherwise, Mays said "We knew what the (Wood & Locker-Mathis) arrangement was. It looked like it had a good chance of success."

Investors announce Stockyards venture

FORT WORTH (AP) — Las Vegas entertainer Wayne Newton and Fort Worth nightclub owner Billy Bob Barnett have joined hands in a proposed western entertainment complex — a venture that could turn the Stockyards district into a major tourist attraction, a developer says.

The $45-million, 86-acre development, which would include museums, restaurants, bars, rodeo arenas, carnival rides and an international market, could draw as many as four million people a year, Fort Worth developer Bill Beuck said Monday.

Newton, Beuck and Barnett, co-owner of the giant country-western nightclub Billy Bob's Texas, located in the Stockyards, are the principal investors in the project.

The project was announced at a city council meeting Monday on a proposed $12.5 million federal urban development grant. A second hearing was scheduled today and council members were expected to approve an application for the grant.

Newton, board chairman of Wayne Newton International Resorts Inc., became acquainted with the Stockyards and Barnett when he performed at Billy Bob's Texas three months ago, Beuck said.

"I have fallen in love with the Stockyards and with Fort Worth," Newton, who did not attend the hearing, said in a prepared statement.

"The strength of the Stockyards — and the thing that makes it so exciting — is the fact that it's real. I've never seen a place with more potential."

Beuck said the complex will blend the personalities of Newton and Barnett.

"Each sees from a little different perspective the opportunity we have here," Beuck said. "It actually was Wayne who caused us to see the broader national and international market we have."

The complex will be constructed in two phases; the first is expected to be completed in April 1984 to tap the crowds expected at the Republican Party national convention in Dallas the following August.

The second phase, which will include an amphitheater, is expected to be finished in April 1985.

The project is dependent on getting the federal grant needed to build parking space, improve streets and add lighting and landscaping, Beuck said.

Beuck said the complex will attract two to four million people each year.

Fort Worth Mayor Bob Bolen said he supports the project but plans to review the investment group's plans before recommending approval.

"I'm supportive of it so far, but I want to take a closer look at it," Bolen said. "As far as the concept, I think it will be a tremendous benefit to the city."

Desert shrub's yield of rubber could double

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — A new process for extracting rubber from a wild American desert shrub could double production from the plant and free the United States from dependence on foreign rubber, say scientists in Texas and California.

A team of researchers headed by Dr. Chauncey Benedict of Texas A&M University and Dr. Henry Yokoyama of the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Pasadena, California reported their discovery Monday to the National Science Foundation, which funded the research.

The scientists said they have found a new, natural treatment for guayule — pronounced wai-yoo-lee — a shrub native to the desert of South-West Texas and northern Mexico. In 1970, the shrubs provided 50 percent of America's rubber supply, but later in becoming cheaper to buy from abroad, the natural rubber shrub was abandoned from the natural rubber market.

Their discovery brightens prospects for reducing our dependence on foreign materials for rubber production through expanded production of guayule plantations, said Dr. Neville Clarke, director of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, a state agency that supervised the research.

The treatment increases rubber production by regulating the chemical and physical processes involved in the formation of rubber in the plant, he said.

The researchers said the same technique could be used on other food crops.

Since present supplies of natural rubber are strategic, foreign-produced material has been in short supply from time to time, Clarke said.

Debating the synthesis of rubber in guayule was accomplished with the application of a bioregulator called D-124 to the plant, the scientists said.

Nutrition program for needy hurt by lack of manpower

HOUSTON (AP) — Filling 10 positions in a program designed to ensure that pregnant women and newborns do not go hungry may interrupt service to 3,000 people for a month, the group's director says.

M.T. Di Ferrante said Monday four clinics from which the nutrition program for impoverished women, infants and children is administered will be shut down until 10 temporary workers can be replaced. The program, federally funded but administered by the city Health Department, served 9,736 people in June, she said.

The jobs were cut from the city payroll in a general elimination of temporary positions, Mrs. Di Ferrante said. She said city officials were not swayed by her argument that the U.S. Department of Agriculture reimburses Houston for those workers' wages.

NRC: Designs must be checked

DALLAS (AP) — The adequacy of engineering designs at the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant must be checked before the facility receives an operating license, according to a spokesman for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Representatives of Texas Utilities Co., the plant's primary owner, are scheduled to meet with NRC officials to discuss the matter Wednesday at agency headquarters in Bethesda, Md., NRC spokesman Frank Ingram said.

Earlier this year, the NRC said an independent study is needed to verify that plant designs have been followed, and the agency asked the utility to submit a proposal for that purpose.

On Monday, Byrd rejected a plea bargain offer from prosecutors and pleaded not guilty to the misdemeanor charge of driving while intoxicated.

UTEP officials to choose between science, football pressing academic problems" before tackling its athletic problems. UTEP Engineering School Dean Robert Grievens said.

The school is in desperate need of about $1.1 million in teaching aids and computer equipment, he said.

College of Science Dean William Herndon, echoed Grievens' complaints, saying it had been about five years since his department had been able to afford new equipment. Herndon also said he could personally do without football.

William Erskine, vice president of business affairs, said money for the stadium would come from leftover funds of capital projects, and not from money appropriated for academic purposes.

The stadium proposal is a controversial one. UTEP officials are divided on whether to spend the money on science or football. Some officials think the money would be better spent on science, while others think it should be spent on football.

Study examines cities' growth

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — San Antonio ranked 199 among U.S. metropolitan areas in population growth between 1980 and 1982, beating Dallas, Fort Worth and the Dallas-Fort Worth area, according to a study by the Texas Department of Economic Development.

Oil-related economic slumps, extended population growth in other Texas cities, including Midland, Odessa and the Brownsville-Port Arthur-Orange corner of East Texas, the regional study shows.

Texas as a whole, said a California and Texas economic drawing cards for thousands of transient jobs, a study analyst said.

In the Southwestern states, "An increase in economic activity spurred the increase in population," said Bill Van Zverden, an economic executive with Doonell, Marketing Information Services.

Six of the top 20 growth areas were in Texas, including Austin, which ranked third in the nation behind Las Vegas and Reno with an 11.6 percent surge in population according to the study performed for Dun & Bradstreet Corp.

Despite a boom gone-bust syndrome in the oil fields of Midland-Odessa, population rose from 314,112 in 1980 to an estimated 334,110 in 1983, the study states, a 6.4 percent shift placing the West Texas cities 27th in the nation.

A Midland Chamber of Commerce spokesman said the increase can be attributed to corporate consolidation of offices in Midland and a construction boomlet.

"We've pretty well bottomed out," said Randle Lee, assistant manager of economic development. "Everyone's down to the personnel levels they can reach without hurting themselves," he said.

Odessa Chamber of Commerce representative Cassie Gittings said, "We've lost a lot of people."

Gittings, assistant director of economic development, said only the retail sector of the Odessa economy shows signs of strength. Oilfield workers have left in search of employment, she said.

Houston and the Tyler-Longview area fell behind Austin in the rankings, with 11.2 and 8.6 percent increases, respectively.

San Antonio and the Brownsville-McAllen-Harlingen areas each experienced 8 percent increases.

Your horoscope

By JEAN DEAN

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY Book publisher and New York Mayor Walter Reuther's birthday shares this to-day with you and your center, St. Edmund's Hospital, actress Diana Rigg and California Angels pitcher Mike Witt. Reduce your commitments in the months ahead and you will make swifter progress. Your personal relationships improve when you have time to nourish them. A friendship could turn romantic while you are on a trip. Go slow! An impulsive decision may backfire. Be careful not to spend too much money when you see the financial picture brightening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A desire to get away from routine tasks leads you in new directions. Use diplomacy with touchy people. You cannot afford to neglect your regular work while promoting your talents.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Romance is erratic. Re-evaluate your priorities. A new work relationship is enjoyable and productive. Share secrets only with those who really care about you. Control your temper when speaking with higher-ups.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not quit your present ing money. Influential people will be impressed by your tenacity and steady effort on the job. If you tend to be absentminded, let someone else do the driving!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Romance may be frustrating. Concentrate on work for the time-being. Comparison shopping is the key to stretching family income. Postpone signing a contract until more information is available.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Give more thought to the future. Check your insurance coverage. Prominent people may be difficult to deal with today. Concentrate on solo projects. An evening meeting could give you new inspiration.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Go all out to advance your business plans. Mixing business with pleasure should work out very well. Accept changes gracefully. Arrange a lunch date with someone who can help your career.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Learn to take things in stride. False information could confuse you. Earn the extra money you need through normal channels. Regular employment activities hold few worries.

Actors, athletes on new series

NEW YORK (AP) — The players who won't be in the lineup for NBC's new dramatic baseball series "Bay City Blues" are athletes who can't act, and actors who can't throw.

We're not requiring a professional level of skill," says Steven Bochco, the show's executive producer. "But they have to be good athletes and have rudimentary skill."

Auditions are scheduled as double headers. "First they act, then we take them out to the parking lot," says Bochco. "We won't take anybody who's not coordinated enough to be credible as a baseball player."

In casting pitcher Frenchy Knuckles, a New York actor was flown to Hollywood. But then we found out he threw like a girl," says Thom Mordenti, creative consultant and writer on the show.

Greg Hoblit, executive producer, worked out in New York's Central Park with actor Jeff McCracken, who has been cast as first base man. "McCracken had a 12-inch intrusion to the hip leagues. Accustomed to playing softball in the Bronx, he of the handball tosses puzzled him. The superintendent of the facility, a sports scientist,

"We've got to get from an athlete who never learned a baseball," says Mordenti. "The training that most of them do is..."

The difficulty is that the actor has to be able to play the game. "I've seen the film which would start out of NBC's baseball league when we produce the film and dreams of the minor league club in a blue collar town debut Oct. 25."

Real life athletes haven't been seen as interested with each other was talked of as a "hardcore Pittsburgher" during the White Star League era.

West led the king of spades, and the East's face paled. He had seen his side was going to take two spade tricks and the trump ace, but where was the setting trick going to come from? South's hand held six hearts to the king-queen, so it seemed as if declarer was going to prevail.

East realized that his only hope was that his partner held the nine of hearts. So a trick one he started an echo with the seven of spades. West dutifully continued with the ace of spades, and East completed the false picture of his hand by following with the two. Now West led a third spade.

East had convinced declarer that he had started with only two spades. So declarer opted to ruff the third spade on the table, instead of letting it ride round to his queen. East's coup had succeeded. West had taken two spade tricks and the trump ace, and East had taken the setting trick. The king-queen of hearts was still in the hands of the declarer, but it was no longer a threat.

Cuban makes hijacking fourth case this month

MIAMI (AP) — A Cuban man who passed around copies of a note claiming to have a "blockbuster" bomb in his briefcase hijacked a Miami-bound Eastern Airlines jumbo jet to Cuba today in the second case of air piracy in 48 hours, federal aviation officials said.

Eastern Flight 1, with 232 people aboard, landed safely back at Miami International airport at 4:47 a.m. "minus one male hijacker," said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Jack Barker.

It was the fourth case of air piracy this month and the eighth since May 1. No one was injured. The hijacker did not have a weapon but "he claimed to have a bomb in his briefcase," Barker said.

THE FLIGHT, carrying 221 passengers and a crew of 11, had originated Monday night at John F. Kennedy International Airport in New York.

Jim Freeman, assistant special agent in charge of the FBI in Miami, said the hijacker had an employee identification card from the Chase Manhattan Bank.

"The name on the papers he carried was J.C. Montero," said Freeman. That name wasn't listed on the passenger list, Freeman said.

The man "passed a note to a flight attendant to give to the captain," Freeman said. He also passed photocopies of a note to the passengers, "indicating his desire to go to Cuba and the threat of a bomb."

The man carried papers indicating he had corresponded with U.S. military authorities, Freeman said. Cuban authorities took the correspondence when they arrested the hijacker in Havana, said Freeman.

The L-1011 was about 40 miles northeast of Miami shortly after midnight when the pilot told the FAA control tower he was heading to Havana. The plane landed at Jose

Marti International Airport in Havana at 1:07 a.m., Barker said.

PASSENGERS described the man as "very skinny," in his 20s, who was wearing blue jeans and a red shirt and carried a brown attache case. Frank Bertolino, 35, of Tucson, Ariz., said he found a mimeographed sheet on his seat when he returned from the rest room.

A portion of the note said: "I like say in me letter what we like go to the Havana, Cuba now because I have one (bomb) (blockbuster)."

At least three copies of the note were circulated among the passengers.

Barbara and Ken Gerwit of Miami, who were returning from their honeymoon, overheard the hijacker talking to a flight attendant. "He kept saying he believed in God" and that he wanted to go back to Cuba, Mrs. Gerwit said.

The passengers spent about two hours in Havana. "All the stores in the airport seemed to be well stocked for us to spend our money in," said Mark Mayrhoon of Miami.

ON SUNDAY, three Spanish-speaking men held a stewardess at knife-point and threatened to ignite an aerosol spray as they diverted a Delta Air Lines Miami-to-Tampa flight to Cuba.

The FAA has tried to discourage air piracy since a rash of hijackings began May 1, increasing the use of sky marshals and studying security at Miami area airports.

Barker said he did not think there were any sky marshals on Eastern Flight 1.

"They (the hijackers) go to prison in Cuba which makes the whole thing very mysterious," said Barker.

On July 6, Cuba told the U.S. State Department it was handing out prison sentences of up to 20 years for air pirates. On July 7, another plane was skyjacked to Cuba.

"Losing Hair?" Try This At No Risk

HOUSTON, Texas — For years "they said it couldn't be done." But, now a firm of laboratory consultants has developed a treatment for "sebum" hair loss, that is not only stopping hair loss...but is really growing hair!

They don't even ask you to take their word for it. They invite you to try the treatment for 32 days, at their risk, and see for yourself!

Naturally, they would not offer this opportunity unless the treatment worked. However, it is impossible to help everyone.

The great majority of cases of excessive hair fall and baldness are the beginning and more fully developed stages of male pattern baldness and cannot be helped.

Study: American schools short-change students

NEW YORK (AP) — A new study says "American schools are in trouble" and finds that many students leave school "ill-prepared for jobs and effective citizenship."

"A Study of Schooling," a comprehensive study that took more than eight years and included about 27,000 interviews, found the problems of the American educational system to be "deeply entrenched and virtually chronic." Also, the study said, the schools should undergo "far reaching restructuring."

The study characterized the system as one of talky teachers addressing uninterested students who face unclear goals and study in an environment of serious social and educational inequities.

John I. Goodlad, former dean of the Graduate School of Education at the University of California at Los Angeles, and the director of the study, said, "American schools are in trouble."

Large numbers of students are leaving school ill-prepared for jobs and effective citizenship, and even many of those who appear to be making it are short-changed," he said.

The study was sponsored by an independent research organization, the Institute for the Development of Educational Activities, and consisted of questionnaires, interviews and classroom observation by 43 researchers in 13 communities.

Among the changes suggested by Goodlad include:

—Accelerating schooling by two years, with children starting formal education the month after they reach the age of 4 and graduating high school at age 16.

—Having high school curriculums that require a core of "general education" courses for all students, including those in vocational programs.

—Naming "head teachers" who would have Ph.D.'s and would receive higher salaries. This would serve as an incentive for capable teachers, he said.

Goodlad said a typical day of instruction in a junior or senior high school included 150 minutes of talking of which "only seven minutes is initiated by students."

As they progress from grade to grade students become less and less involved in their school work, the researchers found.

Protests mark opening of retrial of Johnny Harris

BAY MINETTE, Ala. (AP) — The retrial of Johnny Harris, a black death-row inmate convicted of murdering a prison guard, shows the "legal injustice" of the death penalty law, according to protesters at the trial's opening session.

Harris's supporters, claiming he is a victim of racism, organized protests on the steps of the Baldwin County courthouse here and near the state Capitol in Montgomery as the trial opened Monday.

Harris, 37, is charged under a Civil War-era law for his alleged role in the stabbing death of a prison guard during a 1974 inmate uprising. The law makes the death penalty mandatory for a prisoner who is convicted of murder while serving a life sentence.

Sentenced to die by an all-white jury at his 1975 trial, Harris was granted a new trial when a state court ruled last year that potentially significant evidence was withheld from the Harris defense.

ABOUT TWO DOZEN supporters gathered on the steps of the courthouse as the Rev. John Nettles, state president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, called the retrial "a legal injustice." He said the death penalty was reserved for "poor whites and blacks."

"It is an extraordinarily sad commentary on the judicial system of Alabama and America that officials would use an old, little-used law... to prosecute brother Harris, not once but twice," Nettles said.

In Montgomery, 10 ministers and prison reform advocates held a brief prayer vigil outside the office of Alabama Attorney General Charles Graddick, whose office is handling the prosecution.

Harris, who has been on death row eight years and remains there pending the outcome of the retrial, attended Monday's proceedings dressed in a blue suit, without handcuffs or shackles.

PROSECUTION and defense attorneys began questioning potential jurors from a jury pool of 154 whites and 11 blacks. Two of the blacks and one white later were excused from the jury pool by the judge, who cited their inability to read.

Don Valeska, an assistant state attorney general who is the chief prosecutor, said he is hopeful blacks will be on the 12-person jury. But he said race would play no part in his decisions to reject or approve jurors. "I don't care if they're green," he said.

The Harris case once inspired numerous letters and commentaries in Soviet-bloc journals. They described Harris as a black freedom fighter being cruelly persecuted.

Prosecutors contend Harris was armed during the 1974 inmate rebellion at Fountain Correctional Center and deserves the death penalty for actions leading to the slaying of prison guard Luell Barrow, whether or not Harris actually stabbed the guard.

Eleven-year-old awaiting liver donor

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — An 11-year-old girl who suffers from cirrhosis of the liver has slipped into a coma that could mark her last hours, say her parents in a last-minute appeal for a liver donor.

Michelle Heckard "is losing ground very fast at this point due to complications," said Dr. John B. Watkins, director of the gastroenterology division at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

Watkins said doctors do not know how the girl contracted cirrhosis, which causes scar tissue to replace normal cells. Michelle was normal until May 14, when she began showing symptoms of liver damage, according to her parents.

Watkins said the donor for Michelle must be about the same size, 70 to 110 pounds, and have the same blood type — O positive.

Getting Tough

It is time to get tough on the educational institutions that are failing our children. The current state of education in Texas is a disgrace. The standards are too low, the funding is inadequate, and the results are abhorrent. We must demand that our schools meet the same high standards that we expect in other areas of our society. It is time to stop accepting mediocrity and to start demanding excellence. Our children deserve nothing less.

CHARLEY REESE Only 546 people run your life

We are a nation of about 240 million people, but only 546 individuals control the federal government. 100 members of the House, 100 members of the Senate, one president and nine Supreme Court justices. Take it all if you want to change the president.

TODAY IN HISTORY

One year ago, Census Bureau figures showed the percentage of Americans at or below the poverty level at 14 percent — the highest percentage in 15 years.
Today's birthdays: Former presidential candidate George McGovern is 61. Actor Pat Hingle is 59. Singer Vicki Carr is 41. Tennis star Ilie Nastase is 37.

Cuban makes hijacking fourth case this month

MIAMI (AP) — A Cuban man who passed around copies of a note claiming to have a "blockbuster" bomb in his briefcase hijacked a Miami-bound Eastern Airlines jumbo jet to Cuba today in the second case of air piracy in 48 hours, federal aviation officials said.

Eastern Flight 1, with 232 people aboard, landed safely back at Miami International airport at 4:47 a.m. "minus one male hijacker," said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Jack Barker.

It was the fourth case of air piracy this month and the eighth since May 1. No one was injured.

The hijacker did not have a weapon but "he claimed to have a bomb in his briefcase," Barker said.

THE FLIGHT, carrying 221 passengers and a crew of 11, had originated Monday night at John F. Kennedy International Airport in New York.

Jim Freeman, assistant special agent in charge of the FBI in Miami, said the hijacker had an employee identification card from the Chase Manhattan Bank.

"The name on the papers he carried was J.C. Montero," said Freeman. That name wasn't listed on the passenger list, Freeman said.

The man "passed a note to a flight attendant to give to the captain," Freeman said. He also passed photocopies of a note to the passengers, "indicating his desire to go to Cuba and the threat of a bomb."

The man carried papers indicating he had corresponded with U.S. military authorities, Freeman said. Cuban authorities took the correspondence when they arrested the hijacker in Havana, said Freeman.

The L-1011 was about 40 miles northeast of Miami shortly after midnight when the pilot told the FAA control tower he was heading to Havana. The plane landed at Jose

Marti International Airport in Havana at 1:07 a.m., Barker said.

PASSENGERS described the man as "very skinny," in his 20s, who was wearing blue jeans and a red shirt and carried a brown attache case.

Frank Bertolino, 35, of Tucson, Ariz., said he found a mimeographed sheet on his seat when he returned from the rest room.

A portion of the note said: "I like say in me letter what we like go to the Havana, Cuba now because I have one (bomb) (blockbuster)."

At least three copies of the note were circulated among the passengers.

Barbara and Ken Gerwit of Miami, who were returning from their honeymoon, overheard the hijacker talking to a flight attendant. "He kept saying he believed in God" and that he wanted to go back to Cuba, Mrs. Gerwit said.

The passengers spent about two hours in Havana. "All the stores in the airport seemed to be well stocked for us to spend our money in," said Mark Mayrsohn of Miami.

ON SUNDAY, three Spanish-speaking men held a stewardess at knifepoint and threatened to ignite an aerosol spray as they diverted a Delta Air Lines Miami-to-Tampa flight to Cuba.

The FAA has tried to discourage air piracy since a rash of hijackings began May 1, increasing the use of sky marshals and studying security at Miami area airports.

Barker said he did not think there were any sky marshals on Eastern Flight 1.

"They (the hijackers) go to prison in Cuba which makes the whole thing very mysterious," said Barker.

On July 6, Cuba told the U.S. State Department it was handing out prison sentences of up to 20 years for air pirates. On July 7, another plane was skyjacked to Cuba.

"Losing Hair?" Try This At No Risk

HOUSTON, Texas — For years "they said it couldn't be done." But, now a firm of laboratory consultants has developed a treatment for "sebum" hair loss, that is not only stopping hair loss...but is really growing hair!

They don't even ask you to take their word for it. They invite you to try the treatment for 32 days, at their risk, and see for yourself!

Naturally, they would not offer this opportunity unless the treatment worked. However, it is impossible to help everyone.

The great majority of cases of excessive hair fall and baldness are the beginning and more fully developed stages of male pattern baldness and cannot be helped.

But, how can you be sure what is actually causing your hair loss? even if baldness may seem to "run in the family", it is certainly not proof of the cause of YOUR hair loss. Many conditions can cause hair loss.

Hair loss caused by sebum can also run in your family, and if you wait until you are slick bald and your hair roots are dead, you are beyond help.

So, if you still have any hair on top of your head and would like to stop your hair loss and grow more hair...now is the time to do something about it before it's too late.

Loesch Laboratory Consultants, Inc. will supply you with treatment for 32 days — at their risk — if they believe the treatment will help you. Just send them the information listed below. All inquiries are answered confidentially, by mail. ADV.

Study: American schools short-change students

NEW YORK (AP) — A new study says "American schools are in trouble" and finds that many students leave school "ill-prepared for jobs and effective citizenship."

"A Study of Schooling," a comprehensive study that took more than eight years and included about 27,000 interviews, found the problems of the American educational system to be "deeply entrenched and virtually chronic." Also, the study said, the schools should undergo "far reaching restructuring."

The study characterized the system as one of talky teachers addressing uninterested students who face unclear goals and study in an environment of serious social and educational inequities.

John I. Goodlad, former dean of the Graduate School of Education at the University of California at Los Angeles, and the director of the study, said, "American schools are in trouble."

Large numbers of students are leaving school ill-prepared for jobs and effective citizenship, and even many of those who appear to be "making it" are short-changed," he said.

The study was sponsored by an independent research organization, the Institute for the Development of Educational Activities, and consisted of questionnaires, interviews and classroom observation by 43 researchers in 13 communities.

Among the changes suggested by Goodlad include:

— Accelerating schooling by two years, with children starting formal education the month after they reach the age of 4 and graduating high school at age 16.

— Having high school curriculums that require a core of "general education" courses for all students, including those in vocational programs.

— Naming "head teachers" who would have Ph.D.'s and would receive higher salaries. This would serve as an incentive for capable teachers, he said.

Goodlad said a typical day of instruction in a junior or senior high school included 150 minutes of talking of which "only seven minutes is initiated by students."

As they progress from grade to grade students become less and less involved in their school work, the researchers found.

Protests mark opening of retrial of Johnny Harris

BAY MINETTE, Ala. (AP) — The retrial of Johnny Harris, a black death-row inmate convicted of murdering a prison guard, shows the "legal injustice" of the death penalty law, according to protesters at the trial's opening session.

Harris's supporters, claiming he is a victim of racism, organized protests on the steps of the Baldwin County courthouse here and near the state Capitol in Montgomery as the trial opened Monday.

Harris, 37, is charged under a Civil War-era law for his alleged role in the stabbing death of a prison guard during a 1974 inmate uprising. The law makes the death penalty mandatory for a prisoner who is convicted of murder while serving a life sentence for another crime.

Sentenced to die by an all-white jury at his 1975 trial, Harris was granted a new trial when a state court ruled last year that potentially significant evidence was withheld from the Harris defense.

ABOUT TWO DOZEN supporters gathered on the steps of the courthouse as the Rev. John Nettles, state president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, called the retrial "a legal injustice." He said the death penalty was reserved for "poor whites and blacks."

"It is an extraordinarily sad commentary on the judicial system of Alabama and America that officials would use an old, little-used law ... to prosecute brother Harris, not once but twice," Nettles said.

In Montgomery, 10 ministers and prison reform advocates held a brief prayer vigil outside the office of Alabama Attorney General Charles Graddick, whose office is handling the prosecution.

Harris, who has been on death row eight years and remains there pending the outcome of the retrial, attended Monday's proceedings dressed in a blue suit, without handcuffs or shackles.

PROSECUTION and defense attorneys began questioning potential jurors from a jury pool of 154 whites and 11 blacks. Two of the blacks and one white later were excused from the jury pool by the judge, who cited their inability to read.

Don Valeska, an assistant state attorney general who is the chief prosecutor, said he is hopeful blacks will be on the 12-person jury. But he said race would play no part in his decisions to reject or approve jurors. "I don't care if they're green," he said.

The Harris case once inspired numerous letters and commentaries in Soviet-bloc journals. They described Harris as a black freedom fighter being cruelly persecuted.

Prosecutors contend Harris was armed during the 1974 inmate rebellion at Fountain Correctional Center and deserves the death penalty for actions leading to the slaying of prison guard Luell Barrow, whether or not Harris actually stabbed the guard.

Eleven-year-old awaiting liver donor

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — An 11-year-old girl who suffers from cirrhosis of the liver has slipped into a coma that could mark her last hours, say her parents in a last-minute appeal for a liver donor.

Michelle Heckard "is losing ground very fast at this point due to complications," said Dr. John B. Watkins, director of the gastroenterology division at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

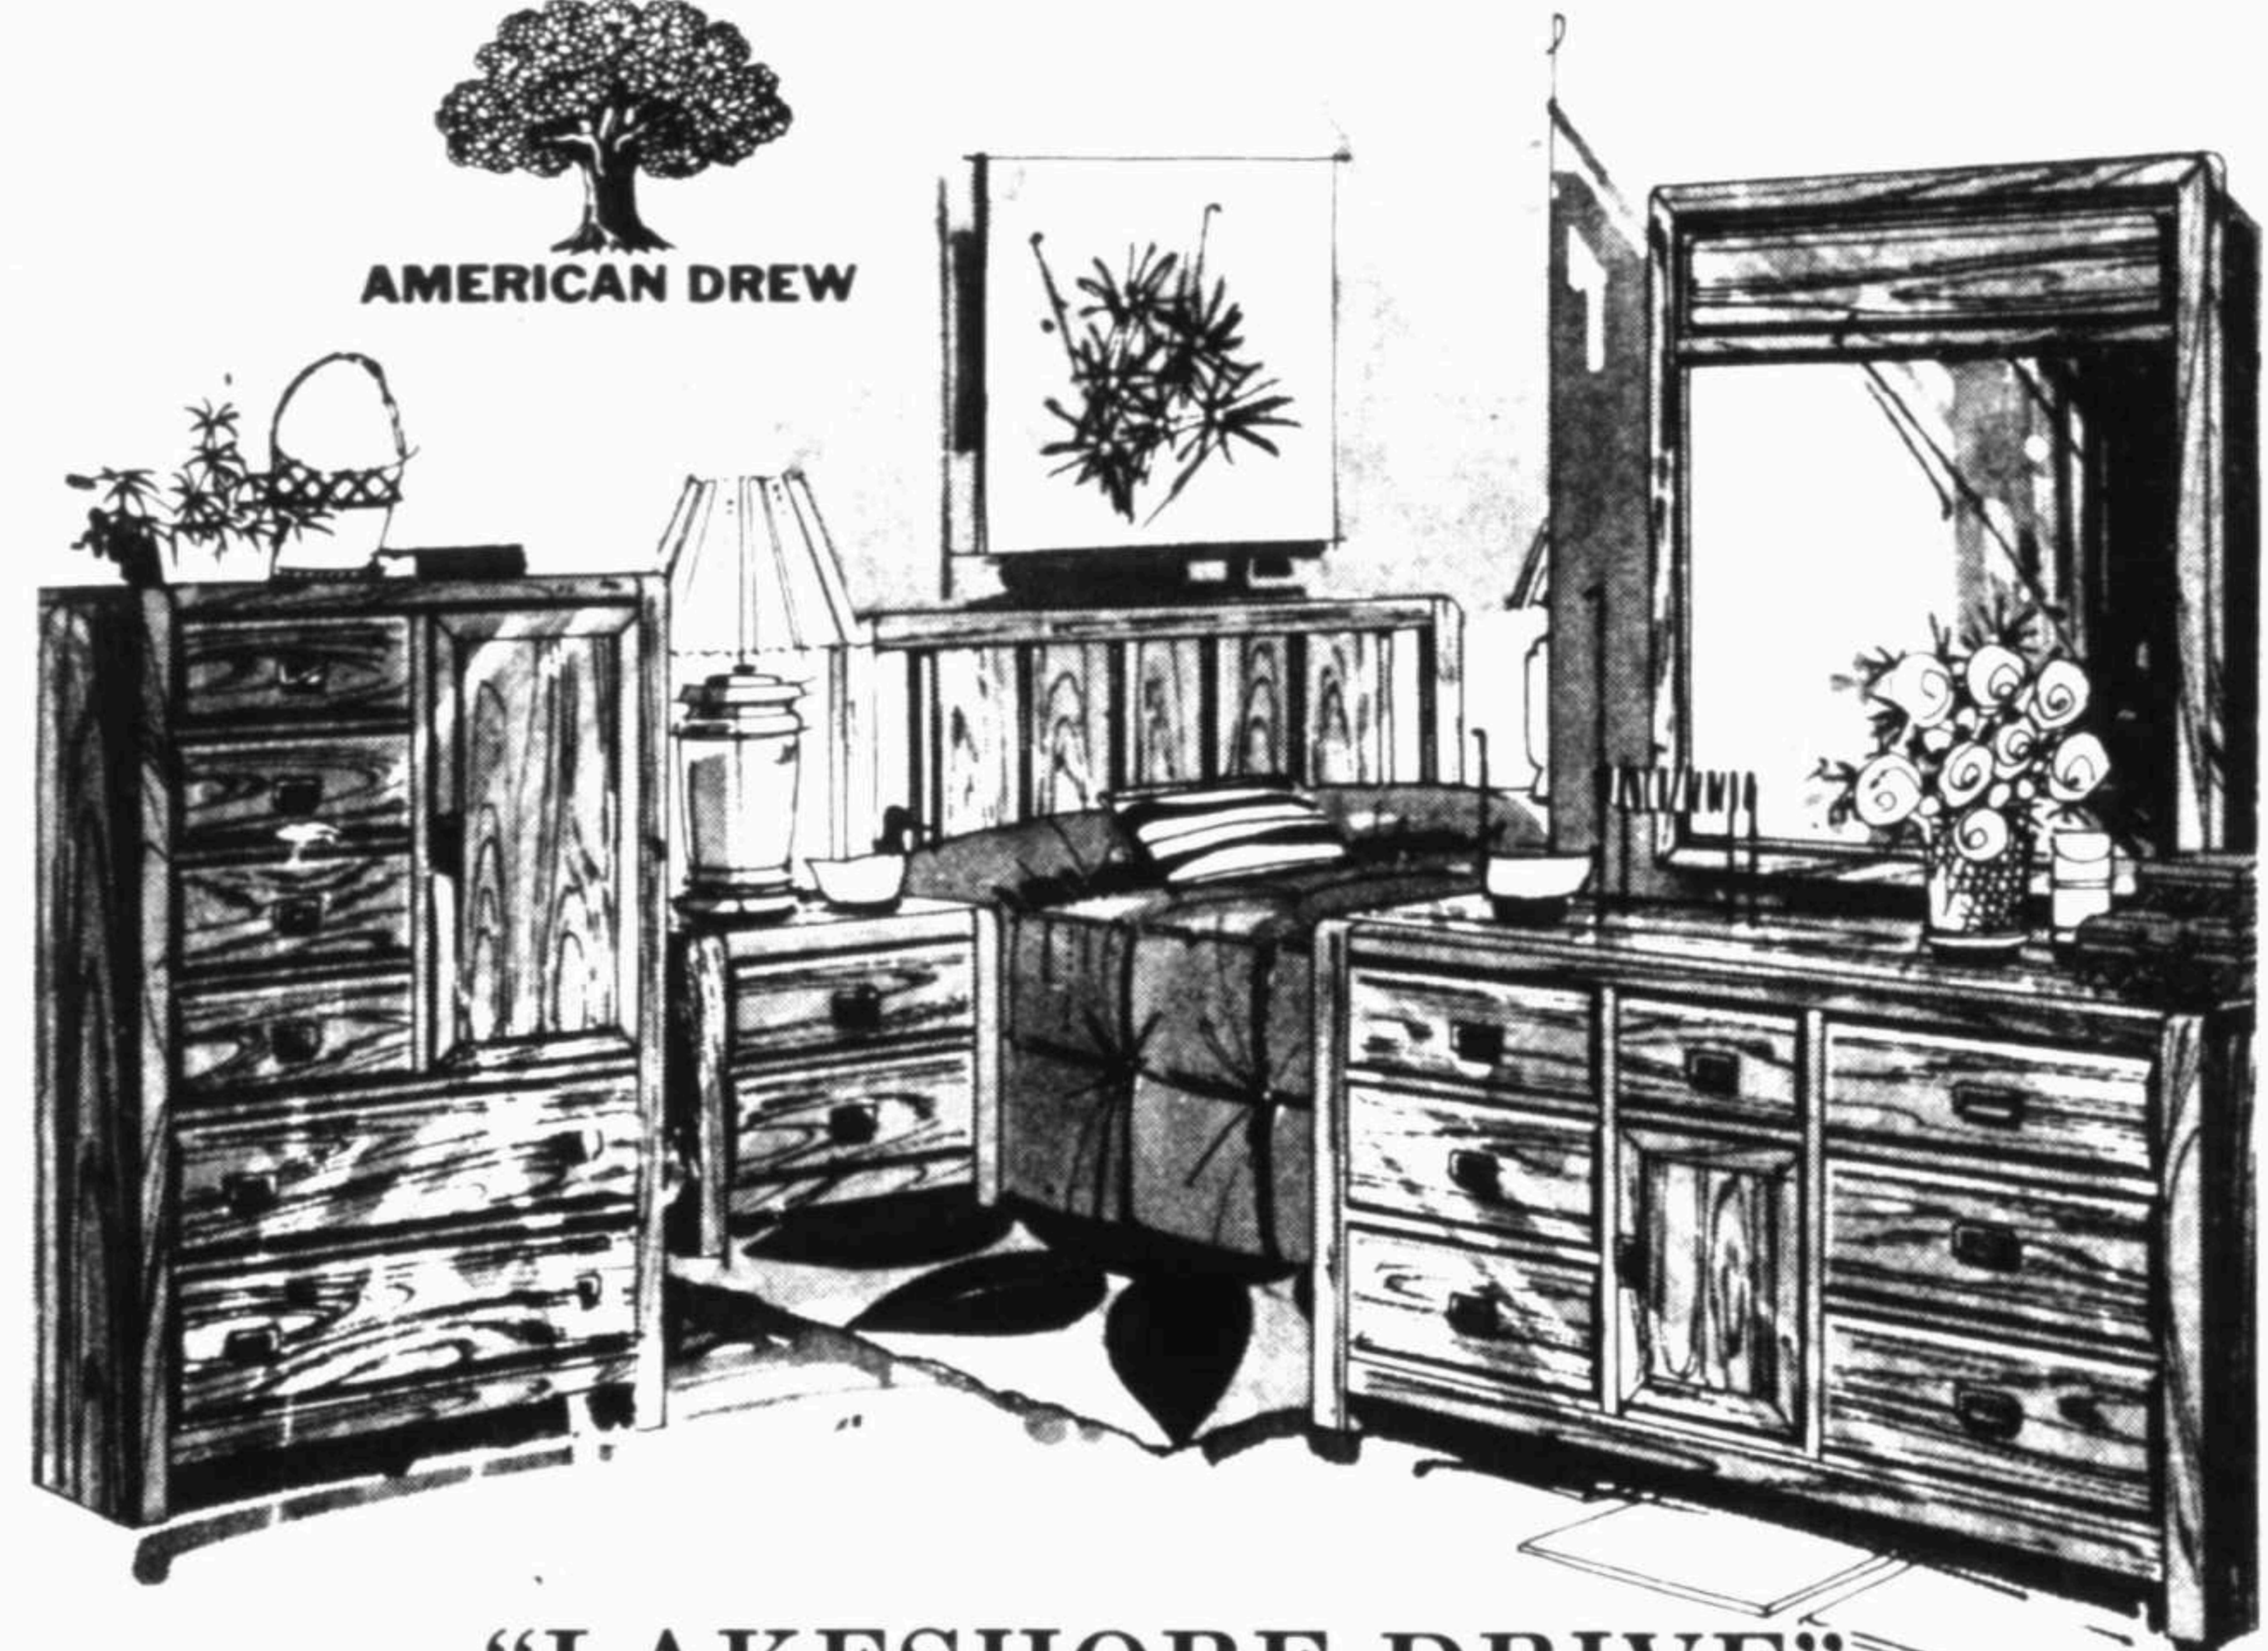

Watkins said doctors do not know how the girl contracted cirrhosis, which causes scar tissue to replace normal cells. Michelle was normal until May 14, when she began showing symptoms of liver damage, according to her parents.

Watkins said the donor for Michelle must be about the same size, 70 to 110 pounds, and have the same blood type — O positive.

Soviet pentecostals in Vienna en route to freedom of West

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — A family group of 13 Siberian Pentecostals left for the United States today after a one-night stay in Vienna, their first stop in the West after a 20-year struggle to leave the Soviet Union.

They included Maria Chmykhalov, one of the seven people who dashed into the U.S. Embassy in Moscow in June 1978 to seek refuge and help in emigrating on grounds of religious persecution.

Mrs. Chmykhalov, her son Timofei and five members of the Vashchenko family, their former neighbors in the Siberian city of Chernogorsk, lived four years in the basement of the embassy as Western sympathizers worked for their release.

The Vashchenkos, along with 10 other family members, were permitted to leave in April and June. They went to Israel.

Timofei, 21, said Monday night he and his new wife Tatiana wanted to go to Israel, which they consider their spiritual homeland. An Israeli Embassy official said the pair also could leave today, but their exact travel plans were unknown.

The 15 arrived Monday night looking exhausted, carrying babies and toting bundles that appeared to have been hastily packed.

Mrs. Chmykhalov, accompanied by her husband Pyotr, 57, said the main group would travel to St. Louis, Mo., where they hoped to find jobs and start a new life. She did not say why they chose St. Louis.

The Pentecostals claim they were persecuted for their religious beliefs by the Soviet government, which espouses atheism and restricts the activities of religious communities.

Members of the Pentecostal faith, a Protestant sect, believe individuals may communicate directly with the Holy Spirit and speak in divinely-inspired tongues.

Pentecostals' release 'sets stage' for summit talks

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Foreign Affairs Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — The Democrat who was President Reagan's secret envoy to Moscow in negotiating the release of 15 Siberian Pentecostals said that their freedom Monday after a decade-long struggle to emigrate "sets the stage for a summit if Reagan and Andropov decide that is what they want to do."

Dr. Olin Robison, a former State Department official who was asked by President Carter, a Baptist, to undertake two similar missions to Moscow in the Fall of 1978, paid unusual tribute to Reagan for keeping his own vital behind-the-scenes role secret throughout the lengthy negotiations.

"He deserves high marks. By being done quietly, the president has demonstrated to himself and to others that he is willing to privately and in good faith pursue negotiations with the Russians," Robison said. He explained that "both the U.S. and the Soviets regarded this as a litmus test issue."

Reagan, in an interview with the Hearst Newspapers in December, 1982, disclosed that he had mentioned the Pentecostals, who took refuge in the U.S. Embassy basement in 1972, in his first message to Yuri Andropov as a specific example of what the Kremlin could do to improve relations.

After disclosing the personal message to the new Soviet leader, Reagan caught himself and told the Hearst editors "I should not have said that because to say it publicly then makes it impossible for the other fellow to do it." But Robison said Reagan's efforts were the key to their release this week.

"The Soviets looked at this and concluded by virtue of Reagan's communication with Andropov and Reagan's subsequent meeting with (Soviet ambassador Anatoly) Dobrynin that this was a very important item for him. He put this at the top of the list," Robison said.

"I told them (the Pentecostals) that for reasons almost extraneous to yourselves, you have now come to the top of the Soviet-American agenda," Robison said in detailing his secret mission to negotiate with Soviet officials conditions under which they would be guaranteed a safe exit.

He described a scenario under which Reagan deftly succeeded in an area particularly close to Carter's heart — the fate of these devout evangelical Christians. Aware of Robison's previous involvement, Reagan secretly sent Robison to Moscow in April with a personal message for the Pentecostals.

"I hand carried letters from him to them," Robison, who is president of Middlebury College, said in an interview. The Reagan letter said in effect "he's my messenger," Robison said. "I had some advice to give them. The advice was the time had come for them to leave the embassy."

That was a dangerous thing for them to do because the Soviets had threatened the family with arrest. "The Russians never at any point said what they were going to do," Robison said, "but we had reached a point with them where we thought arrangements had been made sufficient to safeguard their safety."

"There came a moment where they had to accept my advice to walk out of the embassy," Robison said. "I told them that in my judgment there will never be a better time than right now. I sat there and said to them 'don't put the Soviets in a terrible bind.'"

"I told them the Soviets are going to do this and not do that," he explained, citing the example of a draft age youth being freed who feared he would be prosecuted for draft evasion as soon as he left the embassy. The Soviets quietly promised that would not happen, Robison disclosed.

"There is no precedent for this," he said. "This is the first time that citizens who have been permitted refuge in a foreign embassy and then been the subject of a sustained negotiation have been allowed to go back to their homes and allowed to emigrate."

Robison said Reagan knew about the Pentecostal case "from the very beginning of his campaign" for the presidency. He said he believes it was the "very straightforward human dimension" of the case that attracted Reagan's attention.

"For whatever reason the president decided to make this one issue a test of whether he and the Russians can do business," Robison said. "I have no doubt this is a litmus test issue. It sets the stage for a summit if Reagan and Andropov decide that is what they want to do."

Officials fear for kidnapped girl as no calls come

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The Vatican's No. 2 official received no calls today during an hour designated for talks with kidnapers of the 15-year-old daughter of a Vatican messenger, and police said her life may be in danger.

After analyzing a tape recording from the kidnapers who demanded the terrorist who shot the pope be freed by Wednesday, the police said there appeared to be a threat to kill Emanuela Orlandi if the demand was not met. The Vatican already has rejected the demand.

"In case of a totally negative balance, we would be forced to change our considerations of the young life of citizen Emanuela Orlandi, foreseeing for her a status without the elementary right of survival," police quoted a male voice on the tape as saying.

The Vatican had assigned Cardinal Agostino Casaroli to answer a special telephone during a one-hour span. But deputy spokesman the Rev. Pierfranco Pastore told reporters, "I am authorized to inform you that during the scheduled hour, no message was received."

Vatican officials said the phone number remained operational after the one-hour period. However, it no longer would be answered by Casaroli but by an answering machine that automatically records conversations, they said.

Earlier, Pastore read a statement that said Pope John Paul II already had "sincerely pardoned," Turkish terrorist Mehmet Ali Agca, that the Vatican has no power to free him because he was tried in an Italian court, and that Agca himself has declared he wants to remain in prison.

A Vatican official who spoke on condition he not be identified said the Holy See "sees no logic in the kidnapers' demand" and is powerless to meet their demand.

The statement was issued shortly before the Vatican opened the direct telephone line to enable Casaroli to speak with the abductors of Emanuela.

Vatican officials agreed to have Casaroli available to them after police and Emanuela's family listened to tape recording of a female voice's hysterical screams. Relatives said part of the tape sounded gen-

The self-proclaimed kidnapers, in the tape recording found Sunday, demanded that Casaroli, the Vatican's secretary of state, work out details for Agca's release from prison and his passage out of Italy.

Agca, who tried to assassinate the pope on May 13, 1981, is serving a life prison term in Italy. The suspected abductors demanded he be let go on Wednesday and said the girl would be released when he is freed.

"We will deal exclusively with Cardinal Casaroli on the technical details for Ali Agca's departure from the country," said a man's voice on the tape recording that also contained the hysterical screams.

Only the president of Italy can pardon the Turkish gunman.

After the Vatican announced that Casaroli would talk to the kidnapers, an anonymous telephone caller told the Italian news agency ANSA, "There is nothing to negotiate. The telephone call will only serve to define the way, as said in the statement, to get Agca out of Italian territory."

American girl given medal during tour of theater

MOSCOW (AP) — Samantha Smith got a medal from the Bolshoi Theater today, and gave theater officials a small pin from her home state of Maine. She also had lunch with U.S. Ambassador Arthur Hartman.

The 11-year-old from Manchester, Maine, received the medal during a tour of Moscow in what has become her customary transport — a black Chaika limousine escorted by a police car and trailed by reporters and officials.

Unable to see much of the Bolshoi, which is undergoing summer repairs, Samantha was nonetheless received with full honors by the first deputy general director, Pyotr I. Khomatov, and the chief administrator, Vladimir I. Karakanov.

The two pinned a special commemorative medal usually given only to top Bolshoi performers on Samantha's jumper and also gave her a book about the theater.

Samantha confessed she was "embarrassed" to have only a small gift to give in return — a Maine pin.

Samantha has been showered with gifts throughout the 12 days she has spent in the Soviet Union. She was invited by President Yuri V. Andropov after writing a letter expressing concern about nuclear war.

At the start of her tour today, Samantha got a panoramic view of Moscow from the Lenin Hills near the state university, one of the seven Stalinist "wedding cake" skyscrapers in the capital.

She also briefly toured Novodevichy Monastery, where Peter the Great imprisoned his sister Sophia. From there she went to an animal show attended by some 150 Young Pioneers. After the animal show, Samantha and her parents, Arthur and Jane, had lunch with Hartman. What they discussed was not immediately known.

On Friday, Hartman pronounced the Smith family ideal representatives of the United States on their tour of the Soviet Union.

Polish prisoners may not be freed

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Communist Party daily Trybuna Ludu reminded Poles today that some political prisoners may not be freed by an expected amnesty when the government lifts martial law.

The article appeared shortly after a senior Parliament official said the authorities might delay ending martial law because they fear pro-Solidarity demonstrations during the outlawed union's third anniversary next month.

"We have to make clear that amnesty bills are not abstract acts of mercy in politics and social life," Trybuna Ludu said. "If the bills were to contribute to the return of anarchy and threats of civil war, they would speak against themselves."

About 450 people still are held for martial-law violations. The government has said previously that about 40 of them will not be freed when the military crackdown ends.

Among those not likely to be released are five members of the dissident group Committee for Social Self-Defense, and four members of the outlawed anti-communist Confederation of an Independent Poland.

"There are individuals who do not want to understand, who are ready to destroy the calm which has been built with such difficulty," the paper said.

Late Monday a senior Parliamentary official, who declined to be identified, said the prospect of pro-Solidarity outbreaks in August had made some government leaders hesitant to rescind the 19-month-old state of emergency.

"They are afraid of everything," the official said. "A large number of politicians is expecting the lifting of martial law soon, but we are not sure of that."

The official reported the possible delay after the state-run news agency PAP said military leaders had agreed formally to end the state of emergency.

It was not clear if their decision meant martial law would end on Friday as widely anticipated because the day is Poland's national holiday.

The 21-member Military Council for National Salvation, headed by premier and Communist Party chief Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, set no date or conditions for ending martial law. PAP only said the "appropriate decisions" were taken.

Jaruzelski decreed martial law on Dec. 13, 1981, ending 16 months of strikes and political defiance by Solidarity, the first union free of government control in the Soviet bloc. The union, formed during Gdansk shipyard strikes in August 1980, was outlawed last October.

The Communist-controlled Parliament convenes Wednesday, and had been expected to endorse an end to martial law. But lawmakers have been busy drafting changes in Poland's criminal and penal code to replace martial-law edicts once military rule ends.

Dissidents say the changes will have the same effect as martial law by crushing dissent from students and intellectuals, banning unauthorized union activity and punishing those who challenge the Communist Party's monopoly on power.

Solidarity leader Lech Walesa said Sunday that the changes are "just something I cannot accept. I looked at the proposals of the government and the new laws and I just hope they will be rejected. I would prefer martial law to that."

Walesa received a tumultuous welcome by 5,000 workers when he returned to his Gdansk shipyard Monday after taking an unauthorized two-week vacation.

He said officials had approved his time off and authorized him to take two more weeks of vacation, despite an earlier threat to fire him for a breach of workers' rules. Walesa claimed he was entitled to the time.

Walesa said he plans to leave Gdansk for the additional two weeks off, and has hinted he is using his vacation time to plan new political strategies. He has refused to rule out new strikes and protests.

Last year, workers marking Solidarity's second anniversary clashed with police in several cities.

Cox silences Cub bats, 5-0

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. - The Midland Cubs met up with another pitching wizard Monday night and were shut out by the Arkansas Travelers, 5-0. Dan Cox stymied the Cubs on three hits and the Travs handed the Cubs a loss for a going home present as the Texas League takes a break for the All-Star game Wednesday night in El Paso.

It was another night of no offensive production from Midland, losers of a dozen of their last 15 games. Midland was limited to a paltry trio of singles, and the top six Cub batsmen went a combined 1-for-20 against the hard throwing Cox.

Cox was reassigned to AAA Louisville after the game. In 86 innings, Cox has struck out 73 batters and allowed only 59 hits. Derren Thomas, son of St. Louis Cardinal farm director Lee Thomas, made his Texas League debut a positive one by scoring the game's first run. After drawing a walk and moving to third on Gotay Mills' single, Thomas scored on a Rod Booker ground out. Then things got very tough for the Cubs, especially for right fielder Randy LaVigne.

A Cowboys spokeswoman said those released were cornerback Roger Clay of Louisville, running backs Gregg Drew of Boston, Danny Felts of Memphis State, Clyde Mackie of Georgia State and Gary Woods of Tulsa, tight ends Ottis Gillespie of Sacramento State and Mike Tissaw of Duke, punter-kicker Chris Mangold of Oregon State, linebackers Levi Morrison of Howard Cowboys veterans underwent physical exams Monday. The Cowboys spokeswoman said there are now 72 rookies and 24 vets in camp. She said that on Wednesday the Cowboys rookies will travel to Cal State Fullerton for a noon scrimmage with the Los Angeles Rams rookies.

Packer's Butler jumps to USFL

MILWAUKEE (AP) - Two Green Bay Packers veterans are wondering about the team's frugality which led to defensive end Mike Butler's defection to the United States Football League. And they're wondering if the Packers might not have been penny-wise and pound-foolish. 'From a pure business standpoint, the Packers made a bad deal,' James Lofton said. 'They lost someone who has been a first-round pick, a starter, and they got zero for him.' 'I think it's a great loss to our team,' Greg Koch said. 'I hate to see it. I think Mike was as important as anybody we have on defense. He was a leader for our defense. He's a player with great skills. And I think it's a real shame that when we finally have a chance to be a contender, something like this comes up.' 'The Packers are going to have to realize that the USFL is here. There's a new kid on the block, and to keep a good player, you have to pay him.'

Astros beat Phillies, 8-2

Carlton suffers rare defeat

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - The Houston Astros apparently forgot that they're supposed to swoon when Steve Carlton pitches. Carlton owned a 31-11 lifetime record against the Astros before they jumped on him Monday night.

Houston bashed Carlton, 9-1, for nine solid hits in 3 1/2 innings, and went on to collect 17 hits in an 8-2 triumph over Philadelphia, dampening the return of Paul Owens as the Phillies' manager.

Houston made it 3-0 in the third after Thon singled with two outs. Garner doubled and Cruz singled across two runs. The Astros boosted their lead to 5-0 in the fourth. Doran walked, George Bjorkman doubled and both scored on Puhl's two-out single.

'I can't remember getting nine hits off Carlton,' said the Astros' Ray Knight, who went 3-for-5 to tie George Hendrick of the St. Louis Cardinals for the National League batting lead with a .342 average. Carlton did strike out five to go four ahead of Houston's Nolan Ryan in their continuing battle for the major league all-time strikeout lead. Carlton now has 3,587 career strikeouts.

Carlton now has 3,587 career strikeouts. But the Astros are as hot as the 90-degree-plus weather choking Philadelphia. 'We've been getting the hits when they count,' said Manager Bob Lillis. 'Everybody is just working a lot harder, plus everything is jelling for us.'

Things aren't so jelled in Philadelphia, where Owens, the team's general manager, replaced Pat Corrales, who was fired earlier in the day. In 1972, Owens took over the Phillies on an interim basis when he replaced Frank Lucchesi. Owens guided Philadelphia to a 33-47 the rest of the way.

Four Astros drove in two runs each - Knight, Jose Cruz, Bill Doran and Terry Puhl. Joe Niekro, 38, pitched a seven-hitter for his eighth victory against seven losses, and his fifth complete game. It also was Niekro's fifth straight victory. 'Joe's been pitching great for us,' said Lillis. 'His record is no indication of how he's pitched.'

Owens' remark that Carlton hung a few pitches was one of the understatement of the night. The Astros treated the four-time Cy Young Award winner like a batting-practice pitcher. They took a 1-0 lead in the second on a consecutive singles by Phil Garner, Cruz and Knight.

Cruz then was intentionally walked, loading the bases. Knight beat out an infield single to knock in one run, and Doran singled across the other two. The Phillies picked up a run in the ninth on a single by Bo Diaz, Joe Lefebvre's double and an infield out.

Brewers win two from Texas

Ladd gets save in both games

MILWAUKEE (AP) - Pete Ladd's relief pitching saved both ends of a doubleheader for Milwaukee and pushed the Brewers' winning streak to eight games.

That inspired Ted Simmons to remark: 'People say that we can't win without Rollie Fingers,' a Cy Young Award winner who helped Milwaukee toward the 1982 American League pennant before an arm injury sidelined him.

to tie the score. Robin Yount walked to reload the bases, and Cooper hit his sacrifice fly to make it 4-3. Simmons then hit what proved to be the winning run.

That gave the victory to Tom Tellmann (6-2), who had relieved starter Bob McClure in the sixth. Tellmann was replaced in the ninth by Ladd when Texas scored its fourth run on a Larry Bittner double. Ladd, getting his seventh save of the year, 'deserves the credit,' Simmons said. 'He came in tonight and blew people away in both games.'

In the opener, Texas went ahead 3-2 in the sixth inning on doubles by Bobby Jones and Buddy Bell, chasing Bob Gibson in favor of Jerry Augustine.

Augustine (3-3) got the victory, but not without relief help in the eighth from Ladd. Doubles by Cooper and Roy Howell off Hough gave the Brewers a 1-0 lead in the second inning of the second game.

Ladd relieved in the eighth inning of the opening game Monday and helped Milwaukee to a 4-3 victory over the Texas Rangers, then relieved in the ninth inning of Milwaukee's 5-4 nightcap.

In the seventh, Yount got a walk off loser Danny Darwin (7-9). Cooper singled, Ranger center fielder George Wright bobbled the ball, and Yount was able to score the tying run.

The Rangers took a 2-1 lead off McClure in the fourth when Mike Richard walked and Larry Parrish followed with his 18th home run of the season.

Cecil Cooper's sacrifice fly was fly was essential to Milwaukee's four-run eighth inning that overcame Texas' 3-1 lead in the second game, giving the Brewers an 18-4 record since slumping to last place in the East Division June 24.

Simmons then hit a single to score the winning run. Brewers manager Harvey Kuenn credited Yount's walk and footwork with having set the stage for victory.

They made it 3-1 when Dave Hostetler hit his fourth homer of the year in the fifth inning.

Rick Manning hit a one-out single, the Brewers got two walks from losing pitcher Charlie Hough (8-8) who was relieved by Dave Schmidt, Jim Gantner got two RBIs with a single

'Robin forced the whole thing,' Kuenn said. 'He did it with his base-

In the opener's first inning, Milwaukee made it 1-0 when Yount doubled and scored on a single by Cooper. Molitor tripled and scored on a double by Yount to make it 2-0 in the third.

Wally Kleine: Hoping for luck of the Irish

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY Sports Writer

Perhaps the most obvious thing one notices about Wally Kleine is his imposing size. Kleine stands 6-foot-8, tips the scales at 275 pounds, and is looking to even bigger things. The Midland High product will soon begin his second year at Notre Dame. The Fighting Irish have traditionally been one of college football's superpowers, but has sputtered through two erratic seasons under coach Gerry Faust, 5-6 in 1981, and 6-4-1 last year.

adjusted to the culture shock from life in West Texas to life in South Bend, Ind. 'When I went up there, I was just 17,' Kleine said. 'I was young, plus I had my knees orthoscoped. The decision to redshirt was a mutual decision.'

agreed: 'We talked about it, and we agree it's best for me.' Kleine's journey from high school to Notre Dame is Hollywood stuff, but without a storybook ending - so far.

ONE OF the first challenges facing the young Kleine was learning a new position. Recruited out of Midland High as a tight end, Faust convinced Kleine to switch to defensive tackle. 'I went up there as a tight end,' Kleine says, 'but I'm too slow. The main thing is playing.' Faust originally told Kleine that he could try tight end for a year. But All-American Tony Hunter, a first round NFL draft choice in May, had a lock on the spot last year. Faust felt Kleine could make more of an impact at DT, and Kleine at MHS, Kleine was midway through his junior year before getting a chance to play tight end. Even after the switch was made, he saw little action on the receiving end. As a senior, Kleine had average stats on a 3-7 team, but that size and ability drew attention from football coaches nationwide.

WHEN it came time to make his decision, Wally had narrowed the choice to four universities - SMU, Texas, Penn State and Notre Dame. SMU was tempting in light of their recent success, and Kleine liked Penn State coach Joe Paterno. But the Nittany Lions were 'too east', according to Kleine, and Texas did not offer the overall program he wanted, despite the encouragement of MHS football coach Pat Culpepper, a former UT All-America linebacker and a close friend of Kleine's. So last August, South Bend had a large, new resident in size 16 sneakers. Kleine originally hoped to room with his cousin, Joe. Joe spent a year at ND before transferring to Arkansas, where he garnered basketball Newcomer of the Year honors last season in the Southwest Conference as a center. 'I was upset when he left,' Kleine said. 'But Wally adjusted once again. Notre Dame, unlike most schools, has no athletic dorm and generally shows no favoritism towards its athletes. Once it became apparent Kleine would redshirt, he threw himself into the rigorous Notre Dame academic life. He finished year one with a 2.75 GPA in business, no small feat for someone having to spend almost as many hours on the practice field as in the classroom. KLEINE HAS had to accept the challenge of being away from home for the first time and says the adjustments were made easier with the help of his family and high school coach Culpepper. 'I couldn't have made it without them,' Wally said. Kleine and his father are especially close, not surprising since Wally is the only son of Bill Kleine. Kleine, his mother and three sisters comprise a closely knit family, but Wally and his father are buddies. 'He was a coach of my flag football team when I was a kid. He's a great dad. I admire and respect him a lot. I'm lucky. I have a good family.' In football, Kleine began relearning the game from the defensive side. Faust thinks his progress is on schedule. 'Wally's got great potential as a football player and a big future here at Notre Dame. He is a quality human being and he represents Midland well as an athlete and a person. He's been a real pleasure to coach,' said Faust, adding 'He can be a heckuva player.' The Irish have totaled an 11-10-1 record in the Faust era, but Kleine has not been active in those seasons. After finishing spring practices as a second team defensive tackle, and with four years to perfect his talents, Kleine is eager to get started this fall. (See KLEINE, Page 3B)

Cowboys' Schramm prefers marijuana to cocaine

Modern drug abuses causing rougher problems than those of decade ago

DALLAS (AP) — Pete Gent left the Dallas Cowboys over a decade ago after clashing with the team management over marijuana use. Now Cowboys General Manager Tex Schramm says he would gladly take the marijuana back if he could trade his current problem — cocaine.

The names of five Dallas Cowboys have surfaced in connection with cocaine investigations. Federal authorities say they have questioned running back Tony Dorsett, wide receiver Tony Hill, defensive ends Harvey Martin and Larry Bethea and fullback Ron Springs.

In separate interviews, Schramm and Gent philosophized about drug use from two distinctly different points of view.

Schramm is openly worried about the image of "America's team." Gent says the Cowboys have a history of hiding from players' drug problems.

"In those days it was marijuana, not cocaine," Schramm said in an interview with the Dallas Times Herald. "And there wasn't any serious crisis. It's always a catastrophe that has to bring something to a head. It's just human nature that it works that way. You go along until something happens, and then you do something about it."

GENT WROTE about his experiences as a Cowboys wide receiver in the successful novel "North Dallas Forty," the tale of a mythical Texas pro football team where hypocritical coaches give player drugs so they can play, but persecute the ones who take illegal drugs for fun.

"Yeah, I brought it all on 'em," Gent said with a laugh in a telephone interview from Wimberley, where he now lives. "He (Schramm) can hire me to come counsel those guys. That's what happens to a problem when you don't deal with it."

"Believe me," Schramm said, "if I went back and read 'North Dallas Forty,' I would settle for it being that way versus the problems that we have today."

Gent, who works as a freelance journalist when not writing novels, said that two years ago when he did a story on former Cowboy Thomas "Hollywood" Henderson — who had admitted to a cocaine habit — he was alarmed by the Cowboys' drug use.

"I was pretty amazed at how openly those guys were doing cocaine," Gent said. "They didn't seem to be at all aware of the fact that they were so high profile, and that when they were doing coke in public, everybody was watching them."

SCHRAMM SAYS he does not think a player is entitled to a private life — that that's the trade-off for the six-figure salary and the public adulation.

"I think it is realistic to expect that of people in sports who are making that kind of money just as you would expect that of people who are representing you in government," Schramm said.

But Gent says the Cowboys themselves encourage drug use.

"To get into cocaine so openly and so casually and so unconcerned about the consequences — I don't believe they learned that on their own," Gent said of the players. "I believe they learned that playing for an organization that says as long as you win, it's OK."

"It's just that that's the whole problem of drugs in our culture," Gent said. "It's OK to take a Contac and go to work, and it's OK to take powerful narcotics to play a game, but it's not OK to take recreational drugs."

"There's no difference," Gent said. "There's no difference between pro football and society as a whole."

SCHRAMM TOLD the Times Herald that the public "knows that athletes aren't perfect," but that they still want "to perceive the players as being their heroes."

"They refuse to confront life as it really is," Gent said. "They're still the Cowboys. They're still putting on the show."

Schramm is worried about the effect of cocaine on his players as football players. He says he is afraid it will hurt their game and let their teammates down.

Gent, speaking from a knowledge of drugs and athletics, predicts a darker fate for a player who gets too deep into something he does not know how to handle. He says guns and big money go hand-in-hand with cocaine.

"That guy selling the $40,000 worth of coke probably knows a gambler," he said. "Then you get to where you can't afford the cocaine, and he makes you a deal."

"They don't know what to do," Gent said of the Cowboys. "They don't know how to save any of these guys. If they continue at the rate they were in 1980 — God knows who knows what about who. Who knows who's on what payroll."

"You can sure run a lot of dollar bills up your nose. It's a wicked drug."

Walls ready to retire before accepting what Dallas offers

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — If dissident Dallas Cowboys cornerback Everson Walls decides to retire instead of report to training camp, he will be making "a big mistake," club President Tex Schramm said Monday.

Walls told Home Sports Entertainment sports director Norm Hitzges Monday that he planned to call Schramm before Tuesday and say he was retiring. "In no way will I sign for what the Cowboys offer, nor will I even consider reporting until there's been movement," Walls told the cable sports channel.

"We have offered him a very lucrative contract, a long-term one, and by not reporting he only hurts himself and his teammates," Schramm said.

Schramm said any talk by Walls of retirement is just a "scare tactic ... we've seen it before. It would only solidify our position. He is just getting some bad advice."

ASKED IF the Dallas fans would have sympathy for Walls, Schramm said "Find me a fan who has sympathy for someone making seven figures."

Club Executive Vice President Gil Brandt said of a possible retiring tactic: "Everyone does that. It would be an attempt to get out of paying a fine. I sure hope his agent (Steve Weinberg) can find a $175,000 a year job for him somewhere."

Brandt said Schramm would not step into the negotiations because "He knows better than to get involved. Once he does it destroys my credibility."

Brandt said he is willing to split the difference and give Walls a four-year contract.

"He can have a four-year contract but less money than we are offering with a five year contract," Brandt said.

The Cowboys have offered Walls, who has led the National Football League in interceptions the last two seasons, a five-year contract at $125 million.

Walls would make $175,000 this year under the renegotiated contract.

The third-year veteran said he wants a three-year contract at $900,000 and is "99 percent sure" he won't report to training camp here Thursday unless he gets it.

Walls played for only $37,500 last year and has two years remaining on his current contract. If Walls reports to camp and does not sign the renegotiated contract he would make $62,000 this year.

"We've offered Everson an excellent contract," said Brandt. "We can't go any further but we are willing to settle on a four-year deal at less money."

Walls could be fined $1,000 a day if he fails to report Thursday by the 7 p.m. deadline for veterans.

"It's hard to say what Everson might do because of his agent, Weinberg," Brandt said. "I think he (Walls) has gotten a lot of bad advice."

In another contract matter, safety Dexter Clinkscale has threatened not to report to camp Thursday. He has said he would prefer to wait until an arbitration ruling Aug. 1.

National Football League arbitrator Sam Kagel is determining the length of Clinkscale's contract.

Phillies fire Corrales

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia Phillies, in first place in the National League East Division by a fraction of a percentage point, fired Manager Pat Corrales Monday and replaced him for the rest of the season with General Manager Paul Owens.

"We felt the team has not performed as well as we had hoped and anticipated," club President Bill Giles said.

"And we think that Paul is the man who can make it play up to the expectations that we have had," Giles said in announcing the change at a news conference several hours before Monday night's game against Houston.

This is the second time Owens has left his desk job to become the Phillies' manager. In 1972, he took over the coaching job after Frank Lucchesi was fired.

"It was a tough decision for us," said Owens. "I'm going to go down with the idea of trying to straighten things out. I wouldn't go down there (the dugout) if I didn't think I could do the job."

Despite their first-place standing, the Phillies have been struggling most of the season, especially the hitters. The team's longest winning streak was just five games, and their record before Monday's game was 43-42.

Stars such as Mike Schmidt, Gary Matthews, Joe Morgan, Von Hayes and Bo Diaz are hitting up to 40 points below their capabilities, Giles said.

"There is something wrong with this club," Giles said.

"We were hoping and praying that Pat could do it (turn the team around) but he didn't," he said.

Owens said Corrales, who signed a two-year contract extension last winter, was stunned.

"I explained that it was a business situation, nothing personal. He wished us luck and said he was going home" to Pine Hill, N.J., Owens said.

Corrales was hired after the 1981 season, when the Phillies won the World Series under Dallas Green. When Green resigned to become general manager of the Chicago Cubs, he recommended Corrales as his successor.

Giles emphasized that a new manager would take over next year.

Owens said he would not make changes in the coaching staff, and that he would rely heavily on the coaches' judgment while he concentrated on trying to motivate the players and to improve communications.

"I feel we have talent down there and it's too good a ball club to be struggling," Owens said.

Owens has insisted since spring training that the team is the best club he has assembled since becoming general manager in 1972.

"It's a big challenge because I think we have a club that can win," Owens said.

When Owens took over from Lucchesi in July 1972, the Phillies were rebuilding and in last place.

Now, Owens takes over a team that is 43-42 and just a fraction ahead of the St. Louis Cardinals, with Montreal and Pittsburgh breathing down their necks.

Owens joined the Phillies organization as playing manager of the Olean, N.Y., farm team. In 1959, he became a scout after managing the Bakersfield, Calif., team.

Six years later he was named director of the club's minor league teams and scouting. In 1972, he succeeded John Quinn as general manager.

Since Owens took over as general manager, he has built the Phillies into a contender. The club, starting with 1975, has ended each year with a winning record. They won five division titles and the 1980 Series.

Corrales guided the Phillies to second place in the NL east last season, losing out when the club went into a September hitting slump.

Giles said the players' reaction to the change has been positive.

But Pete Rose and Matthews disagreed.

"I can't ever remember a guy in first place being fired," Rose said.

"He did some good things and some bad things. So do all managers. He had some communication problems with some of the players, and some of them had communications problems with him."

Beaumont's Gillaspie hits 100th RBI

By The Associated Press

Beaumont's Mark Gillaspie reached an offensive milestone — just in time for the Texas League's All-Star break.

Gillaspie blasted his 100th RBI of the season Monday night to help the Golden Gators beat Jackson 5-3.

Carlos Ponce hit a solo homer to give El Paso a 6-5 win over Shreveport.

A game between Tulsa and San Antonio was postponed because of rain in the Alamo City.

Gillaspie's two-run homer in the first gave the edge to Beaumont, which went on to score three more runs in the fourth.

Jackson got its runs on single hits in the second and fourth innings, and on Kevin Mitchell's double in the third.

Walt Vanderbush, 9-8, was the winning pitcher. Calvin Schiraldi, 1-3, was the loser.

Ponce's eighth-inning blast, his 18th of the year, snapped a 5-5 tie. Stu Davis had a two-run homer for the Diablos in the first.

Chris Brown hit a two-run homer for Shreveport in the fourth, while teammate Rob Deer hit a 26th homer of the season, a solo shot, in the fifth.

Ray Gallo, 3-6, picked up the win in relief. Shreveport starter Benji Biggus, 9-4, was tagged with the loss.

Most of the league will be enjoying a few days off. Regular-season play won't resume until Friday night because of Wednesday night's All-Star Game in El Paso.

Unknown gets shot at title

NEW YORK (AP) — Lightweight Orlando Romero, a mystery man from Peru, has burst upon the bigtime boxing scene to fight for the World Boxing Association title.

Though ranked as the WBA's No. 1 contender, Romero is virtually unknown in the United States. His 31 fights all have taken place in either his country or the Dominican Republic against opponents most of whom were as little-known as he.

"I know enough," said Ray "Boom Boom" Mancini, who will make a mandatory defense of his WBA crown against Romero Sept. 15 at Madison Square Garden.

"I know he is unbeaten, so he must be pretty good. I know he's a good-looking fighter from the films I've seen."

Mancini also knew that the 23-year-old South American was a left-hander.

"That should be no problem," Mancini said Monday at a news conference at which promoter Bob Arum announced the fight. "The only time left-handers are a problem is if they move around the ring a lot. Then, they're hard to pin down. But he's going to be coming at me. He wants to take my title."

Romero, who speaks no English, smiled when an interpreter explained what Mancini had said.

The fight to be televised someplaces on closed circuit and others on cable outlets, will be Mancini's first since Feb. 6, when he won a 10-round decision over George Feeney in Italy, and his first title defense since Nov. 13, when he knocked out Duk Koo Kim in the 14th round in Las Vegas, Nev. The South Korean challenger never regained consciousness and died of brain injuries.

Mancini acknowledged he was not as sharp as he would like because of the inactivity. But he said he was in good physical shape except for the after-effects of a viral infection that hospitalized him for two days earlier this month.

"The infection knocked me out," said Mancini, who described the illness as "worse than a bad cold. My white blood cell count was low and they wanted me to rest."

"Now I'm underweight," he complained. Mancini said he weighed only one or two pounds over the 135-pound lightweight limit. "At this stage, I should be 141 or 142, but I'll be all right when I get to training camp."

The Youngstown, Ohio, boxer said, "I always stay in condition. Even when I had my broken collarbone, I ran."

The injury to Mancini's right collarbone canceled his May 27 title fight with Ken Bogner in Bophuthatswana.

Mancini, 22, has a record of 26-1, his only loss a knockout at the hands of Alexis Arguello in a World Boxing Council lightweight title fight on Oct. 3, 1981. He has scored 20 knockouts.

The only blemish on Romero's record was a draw with Miguel Macias in his fifth professional fight on July 21, 1979. He has 12 knockouts.

Chandler announces retirement from football

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Injury-plagued wide receiver Bob Chandler of the Los Angeles Raiders has officially retired, the National Football League team announced Monday.

Chandler, 34, was originally drafted in the seventh round by the Buffalo Bills in 1971 after leading the University of Southern California in receiving for three straight years.

Chandler played for the Bills until he was traded to the Raiders prior to the 1980 season, when he became an immediate starter.

The 6-foot-1, 180-pounder caught 49 passes in 1980, 10 of which went for touchdowns. The following year, he had 26 receptions for an average of 17.6 yards per catch, best of his NFL career. He missed much of the season because of emergency surgery to remove his spleen.

Last year, he was on the Raiders' active roster for only two games because of a knee injury and didn't catch a pass.

"Even though Bob was with us a short time, he contributed tremendously to our brand of football," said Coach Tom Flores of the Raiders. "He helped us win a Super Bowl (No. XV against Philadelphia) and was one of our leaders."

"I wish him well. I am sure his future his bright in law, broadcasting or whatever. Even though he feels capable of playing professional football, he feels, due to the problems with his knee, he would not be able to play up to the capabilities and standards he set for himself."

Earlier in the day, the Raiders acquired veteran offensive tackle Charley Hannah from the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in exchange for defensive end Dave Browning and an undisclosed future draft choice.

Kleine confident he'll have plenty of action

"I'm confident I'll be playing quite a bit," Kleine said. His competition is more experienced, but Faust's coaching staff must see promise in a rookie second teamer that had previously never played the position.

As for Faust, and the pressures facing a team noted for excellence but coming off of two consecutive sub-Notre Dame seasons, Kleine is optimistic. "Coach Faust always says that when you put on the gold helmet, you put it on for a lot of people around the country. Faust is the main reason I'm there, and he's just what Notre Dame wants as a coach."

Kleine recognizes the pressure on the Irish to deliver national championship, a pressure common to only the top notch football programs at places like Notre Dame, Oklahoma, USC and Alabama. "I'm home a few. He also sees the strain that pressure puts on a coach. He's under a lot of pressure," said Kleine, "but he can't do it over night. We've got a good coaching staff, a good program, good facilities. We've had great recruiting classes the past three years. We've got so much talent."

"Whenever somebody plays Notre Dame," Kleine said in summing up the pressure cooker world of Irish football, "it's their bowl game."

In 1983, the sky could be the limit for Faust's Irish. After enduring the past two lean years, the Irish are the team to fly. One national magazine has already labeled the Irish as the leading challenger.

for this year's season and the pressure will be low.

Kleine takes a good deal of pride in being the best backfield in the country. "I've got a lot of defense and offense. I've got a lot of talent. Those positions are the most important. They're incredible."

Notre Dame's reputation as a national powerhouse is well known. "We're a lot of people around the country. Faust is the main reason I'm there, and he's just what Notre Dame wants as a coach."

Ayala's search for answers

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — San Fernando Gym, alias The House That The Ayalas Built, remains the identical sweat box that it is every July. The dozen jump ropes hang in the same corner of the sparring ring where they have hung for years. The customary row of vitamin pill bottles are lined up like rows of soldiers on the ringside table. The same old fight posters heralding the upcoming bouts of Sugar Ray Leonard, Tommy Hearns, Danny "Little Red" Lopez, Muhammad Ali and Alexis Arguello remain lined up on the pale green walls. The posters promoting the matches of Mike Sammy, and Tony Ayala Jr. retain their prominent position. "The Old Man" as Tony Ayala Sr. is respectfully called, continues to bark commands to the assembled amateurs and pros who bob and weave or hammer body bags. But the gym's cast has been forever altered. Once four Ayalas trained here. Now only Sammy sweats at San Fernando. Mike trains in New York. Tony Jr. sits in a New Jersey jail, pending appeal of his rape conviction. Paulie has been exiled from boxing by his father. "We've got to get San Antonio on the fight map again," said Tony Sr. "It's a drought now, but remember: the Ayalas are alive and well as far as I'm concerned." The Ayalas suffer from the Howard Cosell syndrome. San Antonians either love them or hate them. The Old Man knows many people were elated to see his son's New Jersey conviction. Others sighed and cried about the family's crumbling hopes for a world boxing championship. The elder Ayala still gets a knot in his throat when someone mentions Tony Jr.'s predicament, but that has not affected him in the least. "What has happened to Tony has given me no incentive to develop talent in this area," Ayala said. "Mike may not train for me any more, but he still has a chance to become a world champion. Sammy is 140 in his comeback and will be fighting more ranked fighters." Ayala's obsession with an Ayala achieving a world championship continues. "I feel I've been dealt a wrong card," said Ayala. "I've come close with Mike and Tony. But God didn't want it in the cards. I still believe, though, that Tony is innocent and the victim of a lot of events." Tony Ayala Jr. received a 35-year sentence. "We've received mail from all over the country and some of the people have wondered how the guy who killed Robert Kennedy could get less time than Tony did. "I don't want to think that Tony Jr. is a victim of racism, but what else can it be?" sighed Ayala. "Yeah, I think the media is out to get the Ayala family. Here we are, nearing the year 2000, and people still haven't reached equal status." Ayala claims his sons are the victims of police overreaction because of Mike and Tony Jr.'s past scrapes with the law. "Sammy was having a beer at a bar and some girl called the police," Ayala said. "The police took him outside for no reason and he got a bruise on the cheek from a nightstick. "Paulie was stopped and the police searched the whole car for no reason," he said. "Then they gave him a ticket for a defective tailpipe." The New Jersey trial, which Ayala did not attend at the urging of his son's attorney, still resounds in his mind. "The prosecutor got a free ride from the judge," he said. "A reporter from here told my wife it was a kangaroo court."

Clampett covers 7000 miles in Jet Lag Traveling

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It was a day of jet lag for Phil Clampett, who has covered 7,000 miles in the past few weeks. The former NFL player is now a travel agent and is helping people deal with the effects of jet lag.

Clampett, who played for the Philadelphia Eagles, has traveled to many different parts of the world. He has learned a lot about jet lag and how to deal with it. He has found that the best way to deal with jet lag is to get plenty of rest and to stay hydrated.

No one has kind word for natural gas bill

By SARAH MCCLENDON
Washington Bureau

An Analysis

WASHINGTON — "The most complicated bill ever in the United States Senate" — that is the way Senator John Warner, (R-Virginia), described the Natural Gas deregulating bill which his committee on Energy is now drafting into law.

Others have names for it that are more descriptive. Of course some use four letter words.

But then considering the framework agreed upon by Senators James McClure, (R-Idaho), committee chairman, Bennett Johnston, (D-Louisiana) and Wendell Ford, (D-Kentucky), some analysts of the oil and gas industry term the bill "unreasonable."

Some say it is serving "special interests." Producers call it a "pipeline owner's paradise." And some who are familiar with basic law and justice call it a "downright conspiracy" headed for the U.S. Supreme Court in a battle that will see this bill hauled out of the books.

The bill's purpose was to correct the inequities of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, which Rep. Tom Loeffler, (R-Texas), a student of the natural gas industry, says was written "with bias to hurt the oil and gas men whom some segments of this country view as robber barons."

Now as this bill is written, live drama is being played out on the Senate committee stage. Any minute as tempers flare, one expects to see guns flashing as in western barrooms of old. Only this time, the explosions are not guns but words. And at times, the innuendo is so blatant that one almost knows Senator Bill Bradley, (D-New Jersey), is wondering what crooked sneak attack Johnston is plotting now to slash profits for the big gas companies, with vested interest in his state, and Senator Ford is wondering what special producer is being benefitted by Senator Don Nickles', (R-Oklahoma) latest amendment.

DISTRUST WAS written all over Senator Bradley's face as he listened to Nickles say mildly "let's let a contract about to expire, expire."

"I need a couple of weeks to think about that," said Bradley.

Sen. John Melcher, (D-Montana) commented "We ought to take into consideration what pipelines are affected... How much would gas sell for if freed?"

Senators John Chafee, (R-Rhode Island) and John Heinz, (R-Pennsylvania), suddenly began to realize all their gas comes through at least one of those pipelines originating in the Southwest.

Senator Pete Domenici, (R-New Mexico), looks with six slanted lines at Senator Ford, who said he is in any proposal to give a special price for Southwest producers.

Domenici plays his cards straight, like the old West, "I don't want to protect the train. I want to get out here and find this..."

people who will not be exploring when we need energy in the future, he said.

JUST AS STRAIT IT is the man whose name the pipes that whose substitute the bill. It is Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, (D-Ohio) senator from Ohio who is absolutely himself "I don't want to let a regulation bill."

They all look at each other with a feeling of "I don't want to let a regulation bill..."

Sen. Mark R. Warner, (R-Virginia) who had not even voted on the bill, called for a "downright conspiracy" headed for the U.S. Supreme Court in a battle that will see this bill hauled out of the books.

Sen. John Warner, (R-Virginia) described the Natural Gas deregulating bill which his committee on Energy is now drafting into law.

consultants who are posted directly behind each senator whispering into his ear, and the hundreds of Washington representatives of the gas companies, pipelines, majors, independents, investors, trade associations, who have to stand in the rear.

The lack of a consensus for provisions is evident not only in the Congress but in each state, many regional, state houses and even cities, like Houston. Senators have a hard time meeting with divergent groups in their states. House members often keep quiet.

Just to get the bill to a working stage it was necessary for McClure, who is an even-tempered, cool, performing man, to call this "Natural Gas Compromise and Classification Act." The document is frequently referred to as the "concepts."

DO NOT LET an innocent look like this is an innocent. The outcome is dynamite. If the bill is not passed to bring relief to consumers, a number of congressmen may be defeated. They know it. If it is passed, the bill may become noted for being a farewell to justice.

Take Senator Nickles' attempt to let expiring contracts expire: it seems this bill would force contracts to continue at least for 3 1/2 years. Bradley asked "Are we as a body of law continuing a contract that the parties said would expire?"

As the drama in the hearing room extended, the senator's door opened and shut every five seconds, one in, two out, perhaps a dozen more leaving their proxies.

Senator Metzenbaum, realizing it would take a "miracle to get my substitute passed," said "There is only one clear group to benefit most from this bill and it won't be the consumers, the pipeline owners or the producers — it will be the lawyers. They will do well, the consumers very poor."

OPEC haggling over chief demands

HELSINKI, Finland — Oil ministers of the 11-member Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries met today over the possibility of a new agreement to reduce production and stabilize prices. The group agreed to maintain production at current levels.

The meeting was held after a week of talks in London. It was reportedly a "stalemate" as the delegates from the 11 nations, including Saudi Arabia, Algeria, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Libya, Nigeria, and Venezuela, failed to reach a deal.

The report that the meeting would not be held until Monday, from a source in the Arab League, was the most information available. Saudi Arabia is the world's largest oil exporter.

The benchmark price for oil has risen to $22 a barrel, up from $18 a barrel in May. Both prices were determined at a meeting of the organization

There was widespread speculation, however, that the meeting was a special October meeting of the OPEC's market monitoring committee, which considers whether to increase production.

Deregulation makes banking complex

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

"Banking these days is like confronting a Chinese menu," says television newscaster Phyllis Eliasberg in New York. "There are lots of dishes, all in Chinese, and nobody can tell you clearly what's in them. So you just spring for the Loo Goo Gai checking account with interest on it and pray that it is the right thing for you."

Used to years of good gray banking, with basic checking or savings accounts and a few "high" interest certificates, today's consumer gets NOW, Super Now and "money-market" checking accounts, plus savings plans for almost any term from 7 days to 3 1/2 years — all with different interest rates and ground rules.

Small wonder banks post menu boards, covered with items that nobody seems eager or able to explain, let alone sell. "Our plate is too full," groan the bankers, rushing to explain that it is not their fault but government regulation.

Actually, that it is supposed to be deregulation. What happened is that America's banks, regulated to the teeth since the Depression, were losing a lot of deposits to the brokerage houses' new money-market funds. So they pressed Congress in 1980 to create a Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee to remove all ceilings from their interest rates by 1986. A few at a time, DIDC prescribed all kinds of new, complicated, higher-yield plans that brought them little new money, until, at the end of 1982, they got the new Super and money-market accounts that finally pulled money back from the brokerage funds.

IT WAS "a piecemeal kind of approach," says Gregory Bjorndahl, senior vice president at Security Pacific National Bank in Los Angeles. But it was meant to ease the transition from what Citibank Vice President Arthur Bassin in New York calls a time of "everyone offering plain vanilla to that time when the consumer is offered a variety of products from a variety of organizations."

That's a good definition of retailing, but one new to banking and the change isn't easy. "Up until a few years ago," says Bjorndahl, "most banks didn't have to manage change, because there wasn't any change."

Not used to moving fast, they had to plan money-market accounts with "no final specifications until four weeks before, (so) there were bound to be imperfections," says Bank of America Vice President Charles Rand. Not used to offering selection, they now had to sell products that were essential to competing with each other, says Sarah Bennett, vice president of First Interstate Bank. "What's more, an industry that had to be only two or three interest rates in mind, had to change a lot of its interest rates every Tuesday, following government rates."

Given this challenge, industry leaders — state and national — seized upon the idea of product management, developed in the big packaged food companies, which constantly push out new products. Its meaning in banking is giving consumers a complete line of products of many different types of design, and a system of marketing and sales.

One employee in three had the correct interest rate for Individual Retirement Accounts (she was overruled), and no one at a Bank of America branch knew the correct day in a given month to close a "Cash Maximizer" without losing interest, although the corporate office sends them schedules. Nor can officers always offer guidance on the advantage of one account over another, one Bank of America employee snapped that the difference between a "money market" and a "Cash Maximizer" account was a bit of yield for a year.

"We thought we were prepared, but our ears were deaf to the masses' needs," says one manager.

Actually, product management at the corporate level doesn't seem to be making the banking industry better off. "It's a complete mess," says one industry executive. "It's a mess of products, services, and rates that are being offered by banks that are not prepared to handle them."

It's not even easy to see how a process that worked for the makers of Pampers, Tab and Sanka will ever be appropriate to such financial institutions. They will never really have products that speak for themselves on a counter, in bright graphics, and they all have essentially the same product — money. What they have to sell is service. Just as before, but, ironically, that it is no longer their emphasis.

Industry members still feel they are in their way to what Citibank's Bassin labels "a blend of branch banking with consumer marketing skills." They are sure they will create better products when they are totally deregulated, and won't "have to put them out on the (same) crash trip," says Rand.

Banks, S&Ls pushing credit cards

By RICHARD R. BONNER Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Banks and savings and loan associations have begun pushing credit cards again. For competitive reasons, they won't give many details on what they're doing, but Spencer Nilson, publisher of the Los Angeles-based Nilson Report for credit-card executives, says all the big banks are doing stent mailings.

It seems to be paying off, too. Visa reports that by the end of the first quarter — when Americans didn't yet know they'd pulled out of the recession — the number of accounts had grown to 432 million, up from 42.1 million a year earlier. Last purchases had risen to $11.4 billion from $8.2 billion a year earlier.

Cardholders also have increased their Visa debt. Average outstanding balances reached $642.74 by the end of the first quarter, up from $579.13 deep in the recession a year earlier. And the percent of cardholders with outstanding balances rose to 67.1 from 63.7.

Banks obviously aren't sending the cards out unsolicited or with minimal screening, as they did back in the 1960s and early 1970s — regulators won't allow that anymore. But clearly, banks and S&Ls want more credit-card customers.

"We're seeing a lot of competition for the business," says Charles H. Rand, senior vice president for retail products at Bank of America. "We've always mailed heavily in California — about a million a year — but our big increase has been out-of-state."

The reasons for the renewed push are several. Banks and S&Ls now find themselves flush with funds. The new money market checking accounts, super NOW accounts and Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs) have drawn in more than $150 billion in new money so far this year, according to the American Bankers Association. And because banks are paying hefty interest rates for this new money — 8 percent and more — it's imperative that they lend it back out at even higher loan rates.

Credit cards offer one highly visible outlet for the funds. That's especially true now that the average cost banks pay for deposits has dropped a few percentage points, enough to make credit cards profitable again after several years of red ink.

"The average household's financial position is the best it's been for quite some time," says Tom Lieser, an economist at Security Pacific Bank. Overall consumer installment debt, he continues, fell to 12.9 percent of total personal income by the first quarter — the lowest in seven years. That's down from 13.1 percent a year earlier, 13.4 percent two years earlier and 14.9 percent in 1980.

That ties in nicely with the problem of the continued slack demand for business loans, adds Bruce Carrier, senior vice president at First Interstate Bank of California. Until the recovery gets far enough along to spur stronger demand for business credit, the consumer will help take up the slack. In the process, the consumer not only leads the way, but eventually gives the banks the need to borrow to fund expansion and output.

Donna Mace, vice president of product management at Security Pacific Bank, notes another reason that banks and S&Ls have begun pushing credit cards is the expected approval of new banking within the not too distant future. When banks and S&Ls finally get regulatory autonomy, they'll be able to tap on already established customer bases in other states.

So much for the officers' club.

Whaling violations alleged

NOME, Alaska (AP) — Anti-whaling activists claim they photographed Soviet whaling violations during a spy-like mission in Siberia that led to the capture of six Americans and one Canadian, including one man plucked from a boat while racing for Alaska.

The Rainbow Warrior, the activists' 150-foot trawler, made it to international waters Monday after a chase by a Soviet merchant ship and helicopters, said Greenpeace Foundation spokeswoman Vivian Boe.

The ship was en route to Nome today, she said, leaving seven of its crew members — including U.S. Greenpeace director Chris Cook, 35, of Washington, D.C. — in the hands of Soviet authorities.

Gemayel, Hussein hold talks

By The Associated Press

Lebanese President Amin Gemayel, en route to Washington to seek more money and peacekeeping troops, met privately with Jordan's King Hussein in France "to coordinate our actions with our friends," Lebanon state radio said today.

The radio said the two leaders met Monday night in a heavily guarded villa between Nice and Cannes. Hussein stopped in southeast France on his way back to his capital, Amman, from a private visit in the Canary Islands.

The unexpected meeting came while Gemayel is seeking help to break the deadlock over withdrawal of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian forces from Lebanon, and Hussein may have offered advice or help.

None of the king's aides commented on the talks, held as reports surfaced in the Middle Eastern press that the current split in the Palestine Liberation Organization has encouraged Hussein to consider anew his participation in overall Middle East peace negotiations.

Religious festival disrupted

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Anti-government insurgents spoiled the celebration of a religious festival by Afghan soldiers last week by stealing their holiday bonuses, according to a Western diplomatic report today.

The Id festival is celebrated by feasting and the exchange of gifts and is eagerly awaited by devout Moslems as it marks the end of month-long fasting during Ramadan.

The Soviet-backed Afghan government of President Babrak Karmal decided to make Id merrier for soldiers in Paghman, an old summer resort city nine miles west of Kabul, the diplomatic report here said.

A jeep-load of money withdrawn from the Afghan bank in the capital was dispatched to Paghman July 9 with an armored personnel carrier as escort. Anti-communist rebels, who apparently had advance word of the shipment, ambushed the two vehicles and stole the cash, the account continued.

Copter wreckage recovered

LONDON (AP) — Salvage experts lifted the wreckage of a British Airways helicopter from the English Channel seabed today, but found inside only one of 20 people missing and presumed drowned, the Transport Ministry said.

The bodies of 19 other people who went down with the chopper in Britain's worst helicopter crash Saturday apparently had been swept away by swift tides.

The Sikorsky S-61 was hauled to the surface about two miles off Scilly Isles by a crew aboard the diving support ship Seaforth Clansman.

He said the fuselage will be taken to the government's Royal Aircraft Establishment at Farnborough, south of London, for examination to determine what caused the crash.

A Royal Navy diver located the fuselage Monday after a 48-hour underwater search.

Prayers said for missing man

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Friends and colleagues of David S. Dodge, the acting president of the American University of Beirut who was kidnapped during the Israeli invasion, prayed today for his safe return on the anniversary of his abduction.

"We humbly beseech Thee for the safe return of David Dodge among us," the congregation in the university chapel prayed in unison.

"As a close colleague, I miss him and hope he's well.... Could our prayers lead to his release," University Vice President Samir Thabet told about 100 people at the chapel.

Sources close to the investigation say there is no solid evidence whether Dodge is dead or alive.

Dinosaur skeleton discovered

LONDON (AP) — The skeleton of an unknown species of dinosaur, a flesh eater with foot-long claws which lived about 125 million years ago, has been discovered in southern England, London's Natural History Museum announced today.

The museum said it could be the most important find of its kind in Britain this century, and the creature, possibly similar to the Tyrannosaurus rex, will require a new Details of the find are to be revealed at a news conference Wednesday.

Debt program begins today

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government says its plan to help private companies pay their foreign debts will get underway today and continue through mid-December.

Under the plan, originally announced last December, Mexican companies will be able to buy dollars at a special low rate to pay off their short-term debts.

To be eligible, a company must have contracted the foreign debt prior to Dec. 20, 1982 and registered the transaction with the Finance Ministry, a statement from the Banco de Mexico, the government's central bank said Monday night.

It said the plan would only benefit holders of short-term debts of one year or less and noted that debt payments must be made by Dec. 19, 1983, when the plan will expire.

Cocaine smuggler arrested

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Police at Mexico City's international airport arrested a French citizen whose two suitcases hid false bottoms packed with nearly nine kilograms of cocaine, the attorney general's office says.

Lawyer denies saying photos were client's

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — The attorney for a man accused of killing seven men, including a Marine, denied saying that photos of seemingly dead young men with boot-camp haircuts were found at his client's home.

The Long Beach Press-Telegram reported Saturday that attorney Doug Otto confirmed such photographs were among 2,000 found at the home of his client, Randy Kraft.

"I know that there were some photos taken from his home, but I have no reason to believe that they depict anything and I think I would know if they did," Otto said Monday. He said he did not believe 2,000 photos were found at Kraft's home.

He said he last talked to a Press-Telegram reporter weeks ago, and never discussed any photographs with him.

"We stand by our story," said Mike Schwartz, Press-Telegram city editor for urban affairs.

Orange County investigators declined to comment on whether such photos exist, or on the paper's report that the alleged photographs are being checked against those of Marines missing from the area over the last 10 years.

Sheriff's Lt. Andy Romero said lists of Marines missing from Camp Pendleton and El Toro Marine base had been requested by investigators a month and a half ago.

But he said the lists were intended for use in trying to identify "four or five John Does" among about 25

Orange County murder cases in which Kraft is being investigated.

The lists have yet to be compiled, Romero said.

In Washington, Marine Corps spokesman Maj. Fred Lash said that nationwide, 4,396 Marines since January 1973 have been listed as deserters who have not "returned to military control."

Romero said photographs were found at Kraft's home, but they numbered "well under" 2,000. He refused to give an exact number or say whether any were of young men with Marine-style haircuts.

"The 2,000 photos are mostly the ones we took," Romero said.

Kraft, 38, a computer analyst, was arrested May 14 after a California Highway Patrol officer stopped his car on Interstate 5 about 55 miles south of Los Angeles and found the body of Terry Lee Gambrel, a 25-year-old Marine from El Toro, in the passenger's seat.

Kraft, who is being held without bail in the Orange County Jail, has since been charged in the Gambrel slaying and four other Orange County murders.

He also has been charged by Kent County, Mich. authorities in the murders of two Grand Rapids-area farmers.

The prosecutor in the Michigan cases, David Sawyer, has said Kraft is being investigated in 65 murders over the past decade in Michigan, Washington state, Oregon and California.

Jackson calls audit 'politically suspicious'

CHICAGO (AP) — The leak of a federal audit that raised questions over how Operation PUSH spent $1.7 million in federal funds was "politically motivated," says the Rev. Jesse Jackson, head of the civil rights service group.

A four-month audit found that PUSH — People United to Serve Humanity — either has not accounted for or misspent $779,000 and another $925,000 was used for "questionable" purposes, according to a WBBM-TV report Monday.

Jackson, reached by telephone in Washington, D.C., said Monday night that PUSH lawyers and government auditors had been meeting for three years, ever since the organization stopped receiving grant money.

"The leak of an incomplete audit is politically motivated," Jackson said. He said the preliminary audit reported no criminal activity.

"Whatever a final settlement is between our lawyers and their auditors, it will be honored," he added.

The WBBM-TV report said that of $6.5 million in grants, $779,000 was misspent on unauthorized expenses and salaries and that $925,000 was questionably spent without adequate documentation.

Much of the probe has focused on the PUSH-EXCEL education program, an experimental approach devised by PUSH to motivate disadvantaged children.

In another investigation two years ago, the U.S. Education Department cut off $825,000 in funds for the EXCEL program, but later released the money when Jackson agreed to an audit. Earlier, a study commissioned by the Education Department said the EXCEL program was having trouble meeting its objectives.

Secretary of state keeps February primary date

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A suggestion to delay New Hampshire's presidential primary — which by law must be the first in the nation — was turned down by the secretary of state, who said a postponement would cause the primary to coincide with balloting in Vermont.

"The law that we have says we shall hold our primary one week ahead of any other in the year of a presidential election," said Secretary of State William Gardner on Monday.

The Democratic National Committee had set aside March 6 for New Hampshire's primary, with all other binding primaries held between March 13 and June 12.

Gardner said he has not received a request from state Democratic Party Chairman George Bruno to change the date from Feb. 28 to March 6, but that it won't make any difference. Bruno had said last week he would ask Gardner to reinterpret state law.

Vermont is holding its primary March 6, but Bruno said he has received written commitments from the six candidates for the Democratic nomination to keep their names off the Vermont ballot and not to campaign in the state.

Court cuts Burnett's award

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A state appellate court has slashed $600,000 from Carol Burnett's $750,000 punitive damage award against the National Enquirer tabloid.

But in a 2-1 ruling Monday, the court upheld an award of $50,000 in general damages for Miss Burnett's emotional distress and mental anguish in her libel suit against the Enquirer.

The court ordered that Miss Burnett receive a total of $200,000, the general damages plus $150,000 in punitive damages.

The suit involved a 1976 gossip column item that suggested Miss Burnett became intoxicated at a fashionable Washington, D.C., restaurant, became involved in a loud argument with Henry Kissinger and spilled a glass of wine over another diner.

In 1981, a Los Angeles Superior Court jury awarded Miss Burnett $1.6 million, but the trial judge ordered that the celebrity either accept half that amount or go through with a new trial. Miss Burnett took the lesser amount.

"We have no doubt the conduct of (the National Enquirer) was reprehensible and was undertaken with the kind of improper motive which supports the imposition of punitive damages," the appellate court said in an opinion written by Presiding Justice Lester Roth.

However, the ruling said, the court must intervene "where punitive damages are so palpably excessive or grossly disproportionate as to raise a presumption they resulted from passion or prejudice."

Barry Langberg, an attorney for Miss Burnett, said the appellate court's order was "almost exactly what I predicted."

Langberg said he had received no instructions from Miss Burnett as to whether she wished to settle for the reduced award or press for a new trial.

John G. Kester, an attorney for the National Enquirer, said he had not yet seen the opinion.

Great white shark caught nine miles from shoreline

CAPE MAY, N.J. (AP) — A veteran angler who already had a freezer full of shark meat says he is "a little sore and real tired" after a 2½-hour battle to snare a great white shark that set a state record at 501 pounds.

Charles L. Stulz, a Leesburg State Prison guard, pulled the shark to shore here after subduing it with two blasts of a 12-gauge shotgun.

The 34-year-old Williamstown resident said he spotted the shark's fin at about 5:30 p.m. Sunday while scouting tuna.

"This was more or less an accident," he said.

He used mackerel bait to lure the shark, hooked it with a pole about 1½ hours later, then fired two shots while tying 9¼-foot-long creature to the side of his 22-foot motorboat.

"He continued to fight real good the whole time," said Stulz, adding that the final shot aimed at the shark's head severed its spinal column.

"I'm a little sore and real tired," Stulz said.

The catch sets a state record, surpassing a 345-pound shark hooked off Point Pleasant in 1980, Cape May County spokesman Lou Rodia said Monday.

The carcass is being kept at the South Jersey Fishing Center, said Paul Hoffman, a spokesman for the center.

Inmate suing county, sheriff

By ED TODD

A Texas penitentiary inmate who claims he was unjustly treated while he was locked up in the Midland County Jail in 1981 said Monday in federal court that he was denied his dessert, showers, "Time" magazines, law books and visitors.

For those inconveniences, the inmate, Joe Delores Duran, 28, is suing Midland County and Sheriff Dallas Smith for $1 million in damages.

"They took away all my privileges" for 26 days, Duran testified in the civil trial before U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton. The inmate said he was denied candy bars, potato chips, soda water, tea and punch and was not told why his privileges were withheld.

"They probably wouldn't let you have beer, too," quipped the presiding judge.

DURAN COMPLAINED that his privileges were denied him from early July until Aug. 1, when he was bussed to the Texas Department of Corrections to serve a life sentence as a habitual criminal. In June of 1981, he had been convicted in Midland's 142nd State District Court for indecency with a child, a 7-year-old girl, by sexual exposure.

Duran had been convicted in the mid-1970s of aggravated assault by beating up a fellow prisoner in Midland City Jail where he had been held on a drunkenness charge and of committing sodomy in City Jail in 1980 after he again had been arrested for public intoxication. His probation for the assault in jail was revoked, and he served four years of a five-year sentence in TDC. For sodomy in 1980, he served 18 months of a three-year sentence.

"I GOT MY probation revoked for robbery," he told the judge.

"Who did you rob?"
"Some old guy."
In the trial before Bunton, Mark H. Dettman represented Midland County and the sheriff, Duran, who said he needed an attorney, was denied counsel by the judge. "You're competent," he told Duran. "You know what happened to you." Bunton has withheld a ruling on the case.

More than a year after Duran had started serving his life sentence in August 1981, the indecency conviction was reversed due to jury misconduct. Duran was ordered a new trial by the Texas appellate court.

"Your lawyer (William B. 'Bill' Smith) did a good job for you then?" Bunton asked.

"Yes, sir."
Instead of going to trial again, Duran said he pleaded guilty to indecency and was sentenced to 15 years in prison. He said the first trial was not fair.

"You copped out, which meant you pled guilty," said the judge.

Duran, though, said his lawyer, David Lashford, "didn't want to go along with me." He said Lashford wanted him to accept a plea-bargaining agreement for a 60-year sentence. "They got it down to 15."

Darrell Frank Smith

Midland attorney sworn in as magistrate

Federal Judge Lucius D. Bunton tossed in a touch of levity Monday, when he swore in Midland lawyer Darrell Frank Smith as part-time magistrate for the Midland-Odessa Division of the federal court system's expansive Western District of Texas.

"The FBI did their (background) check" on Smith, Bunton said in the brief courtroom ceremony in the George Mahon Federal Building. "As far as they could find out, they don't have any charges pending against you. The IRS (Internal Revenue Service) has cleared you, too."

Smith, 40, was unanimously selected by the Western District's six active judges "as the most qualified" of the candidates for magistrate, Bunton said. Lawyers from Dallas, Austin and Midland applied for the job. Smith succeeds J. Michael Cunningham, 32, magistrate since 1979. His term in office is for four years. The Midland-Odessa Division takes in the counties of Andrews, Crane, Ector, Martin, Midland and Upton.

School officials unruffled by ruling

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Maybe it's because Texans are more easy-going and seem to take life in stride, while Yankees have a reputation for being more active, scurrying about as if they are always ten minutes behind.

Whatever the explanation, local colleges and their students — unlike university campuses in Minnesota — seem unruffled by a recent Supreme Court decision requiring students to have registered with Selective Service to be eligible for federal financial aid. The action reversed a ruling by a Minnesota federal district judge which said such a requirement was unconstitutional.

The issue has been an ongoing one for years. Originally Judge Donald Alsop of Minnesota issued a temporary injunction against the provision, which applies to federal financial aid such as Guaranteed Student Loans, Pell Grants, PLUS program loans and Title IV aid. Alsop made the injunction a permanent one June 16, and June 29 the Supreme Court lifted the order and ordered post-secondary schools to enforce the so-called Solomon Amendment.

Students and officials of local colleges were unaware of any individual or student organizations who actively opposed the requirement. In comparison, several students and organizations on university campuses in Minnesota joined in the action against the Solomon Amendment, and encouraged students not to voluntarily submit their status with Selective Service.

The ruling does not go into effect until Aug. 1, and officials at all three local colleges said the schools should have no problem complying with the regulation.

"We have geared up for this anyway," explained Bill Burns, director of financial aid at Midland College. "We kind of expected this would happen. We do not grant our awards until the latter part of August, so it applies to all students at Midland College receiving financial aid this year." He said he did not know of any students who would be disqualified from receiving aid because of the Solomon Amendment.

All students receiving federal aid must sign a statement of registration compliance, which says he or she has either registered with Selective Service or is not required to do so.

"The college will notify them (of the new regulation) during the registration process," Burns said. "When we set up their (aid) package we will require them to sign at that time. As long as they sign they're home free."

"If they don't sign we cannot issue any federal aid," he continued. "If they do sign it and we find out later they haven't registered, they will have to repay their grant or loan." Students could also be subject to prosecution.

Currently, the schools do not have to prove a student is registered. "All we are required to do is to have them sign," Burns stated. "They (Selective Service) will probably follow up on a certain percentage of students."

However, it gets a little more complicated in a few years. According to Glenn Davis, financial aids director at Odessa College, in 1985-86 financial aids officials will have to verify a student's compliance.

"They will have to have proof they are registered," Davis said. "The law may be a good law, but it's putting all the burden on the colleges to determine whether or not a student is registered. I think that's the responsibility of Selective Service."

"I am worried about the students who flat don't have the funds to go to school," he added, saying verification of compliance can be a lengthy process for some.

About 150 students receive federal financial aid at MC, and more than half of those are not required to register because they are female, on active duty in the armed services, under 18 or born before 1960. Burns said approximately $150,000 in federal aid is awarded to MC students each year.

Neither Burns nor Davis commented publicly on his personal feelings about having financial aid dependent upon compliance with Selective Service.

Pinworms can affect Midlanders

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Although generally thought to be typical of tropical climates and less-sanitary urban areas, pinworms can affect Midlanders — often without them ever realizing it.

The tiny parasite could be more prevalent than many think, especially with the lifestyle of today's Midland residents.

"(Studies) say up to 15 percent of the (national) population has or has had it," said Mimi McKnight, infection control nurse at Midland Memorial Hospital. "But I would think that in our lifestyle, it must be higher. If our kids aren't in day-care, they're in dance or something."

Organized group activities for children may bring the pinworm, which usually infects children ages 5 to 14, into the house. There the infestation can spread to all members of the family.

Enterobius vermicularis, the type of pinworm which infects humans, lives in the upper part of the large intestine after being ingested orally. The female crawls out of the anus, usually at night, to deposit eggs. Although the most common symptom is itching, often there are none, according to Ms. McKnight.

Sometimes the worms can be detected in the person's stool, she noted. Other times, "flashlight tests" may be conducted to spot the worms around the anus at night while the child is asleep.

If the eggs drop into bed linens, others may breathe them in while sleeping in the infested bed linens or while shaking the linens when making beds.

While the pinworm dies inside the body, a child usually re-infests himself by scratching the area where the eggs were deposited and then putting his hand into his mouth, beginning the cycle again.

"The eggs can live for several days," Ms. McKnight said. "They can live in clothes, bed clothes, on toilet seats. Once it gets into a family, it can really spread."

The eggs can be transmitted through water — as with children who bathe together — from passing objects back and forth and from holding hands. The eggs also can live in dry dust for several days.

Treatment used to depend on the size of the infested person; however, now medication has been simplified. Most physicians will prescribe a pill that can be taken daily for a period of time.

Even though health complications from pinworms are extremely rare, to keep the infestation to a minimum, Ms. McKnight said bed linens should be washed daily and those with pinworms should take showers instead of baths until the problem is alleviated. Underwear should be worn to bed at night and a fresh pair put on each day.

When pinworms are detected in any member of the family, she suggests contacting the family physician immediately. If children are involved, officials at the child's school should be notified.

"Kids should really be encouraged to wash their hands, particularly after using the bathroom and before eating," Ms. McKnight said. "Also, (parents) should try to keep kids from putting things in their mouths."

She added the eggs often accumulate under fingernails and extra attention should be given to those areas.

Was West Texas scene of failed horror movie?

As I started to enter the newsroom one recent sunny morning, I looked up above the door. There it was.

It was something black — the size of a sirlion steak sticking to the side of the brick wall.

It was perfectly obvious to me. It was a bat. It probably had rabies.

I quietly backed away and ran around the building to the front door, knowing I could have my blood sucked out of my body any minute.

I was breathless. "Dark Shadows" was on my mind. I immediately notified the secretary, the newsroom staff and anyone who would listen that a bat, probably rabid, was lurking outside the door and no one should leave the building.

No one would believe I had seen a bat. I knew I had to produce evidence. Hoping the rabid creep was still there waiting to attack some unknowing victim, I walked to the door and pointed to it through the glass.

My editor heard the commotion and came to see what was going on. "Where," they all asked in disbelief.

The courageous editor opened the door and stared it boldly in the face. "Can you believe it? He's so big!" I shrieked. "I know a mean bat when I see one."

"It's a moth," he chortled.

"Come on," I said. I was embarrassed for him because he didn't know the difference between a bat and a moth.

"That whole thing is a moth?" Several other characters of great "insectology" knowledge analyzed the situation and drew the same conclusion my editor did.

I was devastated.

When I left for home that day, it was still there.

Since my days of naivete, I've learned to control such outbreaks of panic when I see a standard Texas-size bug in the West Texas wilds.

I have bravely dodged tarantulas on the Rankin highway, calmly encountered my first scorpion in Kerrville and was awestruck with a fluorescent green and yellow grasshopper the size of my foot at a Dairy Queen in Sonora.

I see cute little spiders painted like fancy racing cars and routinely splatter them along the walls of my home.

I take pride in not overreacting as a hysterical female. I simply observe bugs and enjoy the beauty of nature — attempting to become one with the earth.

Just the other day I went to the same door where, once, I was silly enough to believe I had seen a bat.

I looked to the brick corner as I opened the door.

Not a moth, this time, but there it was. It was the shape of a giant cigar and bigger than a hotdog.

It didn't look rabid. I threw open the door and, once again, invited all knowledgeable newsroom "insectologists" to "step forward, please and name this bug."

"What is it? Another bat?" someone jeered in sick sarcasm.

Other reporters were eager to practice the skepticism they know so well.

I felt proud, this time. This one was different. They wouldn't even know a name for it. It wouldn't fit into one syllable or one word, or maybe even an entire bug book.

My brother would have enjoyed bringing it home to throw down my back.

"It's a roach," said our female assistant city editor.

"A measly roach? That whole thing is only a roach?" I said hoping no one would notice me blush.

It couldn't have been. It looked more like something from "The Attack of the Atomic June Bugs."

"But it's gross," she said to the half-listening skeptics.

It was consoling, I suppose, to know that at least this time I got a "gross."

There is no logic for bugs to be this size.

Insects were intended to be small pesky creatures that annoy people on picnics.

What I think we have in Texas are atomic bugs. They are probably radioactive. Some of them have rabies, no doubt and they are probably all poisonous.

I suspect what happened is this: A few years ago some second-rate movie production company came in to film "Great Horrors That Fly, Crawl and Bite."

It was a flop. People in the movie opened their mouths to scream and three seconds later it could be heard on the screen. The film was shown on TV at 4 a.m. The bugs won. The people felt so creepy they died.

When the filming was over, the bugs had nowhere to go.

To this day they roam the miles of Texas.

And now they are invading newsrooms.

My mission: To save the skeptics.

Luis Morera, director of prosthetics at the East Texas Treatment Center in Kilgore, poses with a few of the artificial legs he has built. Morera, 37, a native of Spain, has been at the Kilgore facility for more than five months.

Man helps amputees live productive lives

KILGORE (AP) — The people who come to Luis Morera have been through a devastating experience.

They've had an amputation or lost a limb in an accident, and it's up to him to make them a new one — one that will be functional and look good.

"It's a big responsibility," he said. "I can be very influential in a person's future because if they are uncomfortable with the leg, they won't be able to work as many hours as they could otherwise. If a person is not feeling good, it can create problems even with the people one lives with."

Morera, 37, is director of prosthetics at the East Texas Treatment Center in Kilgore, a service added to the center three months ago. Before the center opened, people needing prostheses had to go to Dallas or Shreveport.

During the first three months of service, Morera has helped 19 amputees. Most have needed legs for below the knee.

To make a prosthesis, he first covers the person's stump with plaster, making a mold. Then he fills the mold with plaster, creating a replica of the stump. Next, he coats it with a liquid that hardens into a tough shell. That, basically, is the leg.

Before he's finished, he covers it with another liquid that, when hardened, can be carved and sanded to resemble the person's other leg.

It takes Morera four to six weeks to fill an order and costs the patient $1,400. Each must be made with precision, joining the foot at just the right angle and distributing the person's body weight evenly.

Morera also makes feet, arms, and fingers. Sometimes he has to improvise. He recently saw a man from Dallas, for example, who had lost all his fingers and part of his left hand in an industrial accident.

Specialists in Dallas said they couldn't do anything for him. But Morera said he could. He made a plastic strip that attached to the man's forearm and had a cable connected to a back harness. When the man moved his shoulder forward, the cable opened the flap, enabling him to hold a telephone, magazine or pen. It may not have been slightly, but it was functional.

"I try to explain to them they cannot always have both, they can have something cosmetic or something functional," he said. "Usually they pick something functional, although I want it to look as pretty as possible."

Morera is a native of Spain who came to the United States in 1963, knowing no English. He took a job sweeping floors at the office of a prosthesis and gradually learned the profession.

He later went to New York University, graduating in 1977, and studied in Europe three more years before moving to Dallas.

Most of his patients are elderly. And most are appreciative. He has already been given cookies, cake and some Portuguese wine by patients who are living better lives because of Morera's work.

Inmate suing county, sheriff over treatment

BACK IN 1981, Duran said his constitutional rights weren't violated from mid-February, when he was arrested for indecency, until early July, when three inmates bound for the penitentiary escaped from the Midland County Jail. All were later recaptured.

Duran said his privileges were taken away after he and two others refused to sign a statement connecting them to the escape.

"They (sheriff's deputies) told me if I didn't sign that statement, they were going to take my privileges away."

For 26 days, Duran said he had no visitation, no commissary privileges, no shower, no reading material. "I bathed my own self" with water in a cup, he said.

"They even took my dessert off my tray," he complained.

The judge asked Duran what his physical height was and how much he weighed. He said he was 6-foot-2 and weighed 231 pounds.

"I just wonder if you really needed that dessert, Mr. Duran," Bunton said.

Duran said he was allowed to call his attorney but not anyone else and that he was withheld reading material.

"What did you miss?" asked Bunton. "Three issues of Time?"

FURTHER, DURAN said he was denied access to the county's law library. He said he could not use the TDC's law books. Bunton asked Duran if he had access to the county's library before his privileges were taken away. He said no.

"Did they (jailers) ever 'get' you," Bunton asked. "They never abused you?"

"No."

Duran complained that he was never told exactly why his privileges were denied him and that he was never taken before the sheriff's Disciplinary Committee.

Sheriff's Chief Deputy G.W. Thompson, however, testified that he told Duran in person and in writing why his privileges were being withheld: due to the investigation of the jail escape.

Duran further complained that he was not afforded recreation, such as the use weight-lifting equipment and outside exercise. He said he hears, by way of the grapevine, that prisoners exercise "on top of the jailhouse" in San Antonio and Austin.

"You're saying Midland is not up to Dallas and San Antonio?" asked Bunton. "Is that what you're telling me?"

Though he initially complained of his withheld privileges, Duran later said he was disturbed, since he wasn't apprised why his privileges were taken away. Thompson said he was so informed.

"They were saying I had something to do with the jail break," Duran said. "I didn't already had a life sentence, and I didn't escape. I wasn't involved in it. I don't know why they took my privileges away."

State educator says it's 'get the culprit' year

AUSTIN (AP) — It's "get the culprit" year, says State Education Commissioner Raymon Bynum, and Texas school superintendents are going to find fingers of blame pointing in their direction.

"If you haven't got a tough hide, and if you don't understand that we are going to have an open discussion, and they're going to criticize us...then you are in the wrong business," Bynum told school administrators at a Monday meeting.

A special committee, headed by Dallas businessman H. Ross Perot, last week began a comprehensive review of Texas education. The panel's recommendations are expected to be the basis of a program Gov. Mark White will try to sell to a special session of the Legislature.

"This is going to be the year of 'get the culprit, whoever it is.' The easiest person to blame is the superintendent," Bynum warned.

The commissioner said Texas' education problems include teachers of questionable quality. He said there is no shortage of teachers, but education is "no longer attracting the brightest boys and girls, particularly girls."

"The people who are coming into teaching do not have the high scores," according to Bynum.

The former math teacher said Texas needs better math and science instructors.

"I am totally convinced the biggest problem we have in mathematics is not the high school teacher, not the middle school teacher. It's the fact the elementary teacher doesn't really understand math and doesn't want to teach it," he said, adding that elementary teachers "spend twice as much time on arts and crafts as they do on math."

Prior to Bynum's comments, U.S. Department of Education official Jim Horn told the superintendents, "I look at Texas and hold it up as an example of what education should be."

Bynum said that comment left him "kind of concerned."

"We don't have any trouble finding problems," he said. "If we're in that good a shape, God bless the rest of the country."

Pinworms can be problem, especially for youngsters

"There are some people who never even know they have them," she said. "They go through the cycle and wash them off. But since the eggs can live for several days, you may get rid of it, but your husband or kids could pick it up."

Pinworms are the most common helminth, or worm parasite, in countries where sanitation is strict, she said.

"The most common here is pinworms. Most of the (tropical and less sanitary) countries don't pay any attention to it because they have worse (health) problems," she said.

After Smith vowed that he would "administer justice," Bunton introduced the magistrate's family, including his wife, Janet, to jurors and other spectators. "That's the magistrate's boss," said the judge. With her were two of the three Smith children, Dinah, 13, and Darrell Lord, 9. Not in their midst was Frances, 4. On hand was Smith's father, Darrell Smith.

"It's a real privilege and pleasure," Smith told the judge, "to serve under the able leadership of a fine jurist like yourself."

Police 'stumped' by horse mutilations

DALLAS (AP) — Police say they are "really stumped" by the recent sexual mutilation and killings of eight horses and haven't ruled out the possibility that a cult is involved.

But psychologists have told investigators to look for a crazed animal hater who also is a bed wetter and an arsonist, Dallas police Sgt. W.B. Wilson said Monday.

An Appaloosa mare was found dead in far south Dallas Friday and, in four other incidents dating back to March, seven other horses were killed and sexually mutilated.

"To be quite honest, we're really stumped on it," Wilson said. "We've gotten some information on it and we still have a few leads to check out."

Wilson said police have "no indication" a cult is involved, but have not ruled out that possibility.

The seven previous killings occurred on brightly moonlit nights and the attacker's weapon was always left by the carcass. But, said Wilson, "if they used anything in their little sessions, there's nothing left to indicate it's a cult."

Wilson said police had psychologists develop a profile of a person who would sexually mutilate horses.

"They've given us an idea of what to look for. They indicated that these types of people — people who act cruelly to animals — are known as bed wetters or possible arson suspects. Those three traits often go together," Wilson said.

"But we still don't have any suspects."

The eighth killing took place in a different area of southern Dallas County, and may not be related to the other cases, Wilson said. A veterinarian contacted by police raised the possibility that the horse died of cholera.

"Because the horse was seized and picked up by the sanitation department and already buried there is no way to verify if it was killed or it died by cholera. The owner of the horse believes foul play was involved," Wilson said.

Inmate: Decision to represent himself 'mistake'

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — David Leslie Culverhouse, standing before jurors in leg irons and handcuffs, told jurors in his attempted murder trial that his decision to represent himself was "a terrible mistake."

"Even though, as you can see, I am shackled," Culverhouse told jurors at the beginning of his trial Monday, "that does not mean that I am guilty."

Culverhouse, 24, is serving a life prison term in the Texas Department of Corrections for his conviction in the January shooting death of his girlfriend, Donna Ray, 24, of Grand Prairie.

He is being tried in Huntsville on a change of venue from Rusk County in the shooting of Henderson Safeway store clerk, Layton Cummings. Prosecutors say Culverhouse shot Cummings after machine-gunning Miss Ray, who had run into the store.

Cummings is expected to testify later in the trial.

Police say Culverhouse barricaded himself in a Jacksonville motel following the shooting spree. The Waco man surrendered to police after a 19-hour standoff.

Culverhouse was ordered shackled at the waist and ankles for this trial because he attacked his court-appointed attorney with a metal water pitcher in the last trial, court officials said.

His former attorney, Joe Shumate, was standing by in the courtroom in case State District Judge Donald Ross determined Culverhouse needed legal assistance.

Ross rejected Culverhouse's requests to have his chains removed but did allow him to have the handcuffs loosened so he could make notes and handle papers.

"The main reason I am representing myself in this case is because there exists a very serious conflict of interest between myself and my court-appointed attorney," Culverhouse told potential jurors during the selection process Monday. "I am too poor to hire a lawyer."

Calling his decision to represent himself "a terrible mistake," Culverhouse told the jury, "The law does not require that I produce the person to you that actually committed this crime. I stand here before ya'll now innocent."

Prosecutors introduced as evidence an arsenal of guns they said belonged to Culverhouse, including a rifle modified into an automatic machine gun, then presented witnesses who were in the Safeway store at the time of the shootings.

Culverhouse cross-examined the witnesses, including Tony Montgomery, 18, a store employee.

"You didn't see anybody getting shot, did you?" Culverhouse asked Montgomery.

"No sir, but I saw a man shooting," Montgomery said.

"Did you actually see the woman being shot?" Culverhouse asked.

"No, sir," Montgomery replied.

Culverhouse faces a prison sentence of two to 20 years and a $10,000 fine if convicted of the attempted murder charge. He is being held in the Walker County jail during the trial.

Three military bases to be used in war against drug smuggling

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Fort Sam Houston, in San Antonio, Fort Bliss, in El Paso, and Fort Huachuca, Ariz., will be sources of equipment, personnel and supply for the new war in drug smuggling across the Mexican border which Vice President George Bush is directing.

Horace Cavitt, coordinator of the National Narcotics Border Interdiction System from Brownsville to California, said Monday that "when need arrives and we prepare for an operation in Texas, we will definitely be calling on Fort Sam Houston at San Antonio as well as the other bases."

Cavitt doubles as head of the U.S. Customs inspection service in the El Paso area.

It was reconfirmed Monday that technology from some of the Army's best ground to air radar defense weapons, including the Hawk missile, will be used in the combined military and civilian operations. Bush's office did not wish to be specific, saying "we do not want to alert the bad guys."

In addition, AWAC planes will patrol the border. They have been used in the past "when they were available," according to a spokesman in Vice President Bush's Washington office, but unfortunately these planes were not often available. The spokesman said "in fact the AWAC is one of the best aircraft we can use as they have such a wide range and this is such a long border."

Other military aircraft that will be called into service will include the Navy's E2C, which is radar equipped, the OV-10 Helicopter, the Cobra and Blackhawk helicopters.

Cavitt said new military personnel, transferred from other centers, are joining the office force at El Paso. Also arriving daily are experienced civilian government employees. He expects about 30 in the El Paso office. They will be augmented from time to time by trained military personnel and if need be, trained civilian radar technicians.

Asked which area of the border is the worse for illicit air flights across the border, Cavitt said: "We are now preparing what we call 'a threat analysis' to help us decide where is the hottest spot. That is what we will be going after."

Bush's office, in explaining the new authority given by Congress in 1981 for military resources to augment civilian law enforcement agencies, said that while the military will provide equipment, personnel, and other administrative, supply and warehouse facilities, no arrests of civilians will be made by the military.

Quality makes the difference

The owners of Foto-Makers believe in doing more than just developing film for their customers. As certified photographic counselors, certified by Photomarketing Association International, the owners are available at all times to help you with advice about your camera and how to get the best possible shots from each roll of film you shoot.

Iridology: the study of the iris

"The eyes are the windows of the soul"

Iridology is the study of the iris of the eye. This term is derived from the roots: irid-iris and ology-study of, or simply the study of the iris.

A special introductory offer is now available in Midland through Verna J. Stevenson. Verna explains that the science of Iridology "does not prescribe, predict or diagnose." Verna is offering to share her knowledge of iridology to inform people of this fascinating natural phenomenon.

The theory of iridology was first devised by Dr. Ignatz Peczely in the 17th century. Today, Dr. Bernard Jensen is the modern father of Iridology. Dr. Jensen's world acclaimed text, The Science and Practice of Iridology, spells out the effects of proper iris analysis and the natural healing practices.

Iridology is a part of "the natural law," the human body was designed to cure itself. Verna believes that "people are sick and tired of being sick, people have finally taken their health into their own hands."

She goes on to explain that this is not to belittle the advancements and technology of physicians today. It simply means that illness can be prevented through proper nutrition, herbs and a natural cleansing program. Moreover, the number of physicians utilizing the science of iridology to diagnose weaknesses in the body is growing daily.

The iris, one of the most complex tissue structures of the human body, through a reflex association with the nervous system, shows us your health. The iris has the same reflex association through the nervous system with our human body. This means that if your liver, for example, is not healthy, it shows up on a certain place on your iris, the colored part of your eye.

Trained Iridologist Verna J. Stevenson displays her collection of herbs. Verna is a distributor of Nature's Way products. For herbal information call 685-1950.

Through the use of natural foods, the photograph of a human body, the reverse order of the body. This photograph was developed by Verna J. Stevenson and Dr. Bernard Jensen.

Through the use of natural foods, not inorganic, unnatural or synthetic - the human body has the capability to cure itself. Verna explains "you must purify and clean your blood - healing the body from the inside out." This theory is that of Herring's Law of Cure, cleansing from the head downward then again in reverse order. Although this science is little known in the United States, there are over 3,000 Iridologists reported in Germany alone. Midland is fortunate enough to house a trained Iridologist Verna J. Stevenson.

Developed by Dr. Bernard Jensen, D.D.

Ribbon cutting ceremony of the Midkiff Shopping Center was held June 17, 1983. This grand opening was attended by the attendance of 1 to the Midland Chamber of Commerce, member Conrad Dwyer, Executive V. P. of the Chamber Grand Building, owner Olin B. Lane, project manager Dan Boyd, Midland's Judge Anderson, owner Ben Tisdale and M Squad member Mike Higgins.

Rapid progress made in organ transplants

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have read your article on organ transplants. It is very interesting and informative. I have a question about the survival rates of organ transplants. You mention that the survival rate for kidney transplants is 55 to 65 percent. Is this for the patient or for the organ? Also, you mention that the survival rate for liver transplants is 50 to 60 percent. Is this for the patient or for the organ? Thank you for your article.

Dear Mrs. G.: The term "functional disorder" may mean different things to different people. In your case, it may mean a condition that is not caused by a physical problem. I would assume it refers to an emotional or psychological problem as opposed to a physical one. If you are concerned about your health, I would suggest you consult with a physician.

Hot new act? Flames from a nearby hotel fire seem to be coming out of pianist Liberace's head, but the giant billboard in West Hollywood, Ca., was in no danger of burning in the blaze early Monday morning. Fire officials said arson was suspected in the fire which heavily damaged a five-story apartment building, which is owned by British rock star Rod Stewart. The building was vacant at the time of the fire, and no injuries were reported.

'Papers tightly kept, but obtained by Reagan'

TOKYO (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter said today that "a long series of losses" of documents — including material so closely guarded that his top campaign strategists did not see it — was obtained by Ronald Reagan's staff during the 1980 presidential campaign.

From the papers which have been turned over to the press and to the Justice Department by the White House, it's obvious that there was a long series of losses of papers from the White House, not just one batch of papers at a particular time," Carter said.

In his most detailed comments yet on the issue, Carter said Reagan staffers apparently had access to secret poll results defining major campaign issues, political weaknesses and past mistakes of both candidates, plus papers dealing with only a few intimates — not including Carter campaign manager Robert Strauss or political strategist Hamilton Jordan.

Those aides, he said, "never saw the material. It was tightly held among a few people at the White House itself, but it became available in some fashion to Reagan supporters and helpers."

Carter, who said previously he had no idea who might have been a "mole" in his campaign organization, did not identify any aides who did have access to the material.

In his most detailed comments yet on the issue, Carter said Reagan staffers apparently had access to secret poll results defining major campaign issues, political weaknesses and past mistakes of both candidates, plus papers dealing with possible challenges by Carter to Reagan's platform and responses to charges by the Republican challenger.

Carter said other leaked material, "what has been referred to by Richard Allen," apparently came directly from the National Security Council. He did not characterize this material, but said the NSC did not have access to domestic campaign documents.

Allen, a foreign policy adviser to Reagan during the campaign and later his National Security Council director, has said material he saw from Carter's National Security Council contained information about the "atmospherics" of the council but nothing of crucial significance.

Carter, however, said the material reaching the Reagan camp dealt with "the most crucial and important" issues of the campaign.

"Whether he (Reagan) had all of this, it was obviously of great benefit to him, but I'm not prejudging what he had," Carter said.

"I don't think it's proper for a campaign to pilfer documents of this kind from another," he said. "It's not a normal or accepted policy in the political society of our nation. I think examples of this in the past would be quite rare."

Carter said he had learned of the losses of campaign documents from his former press secretary, Jody Powell.

"He's described to me the papers that have been turned over to the press and the Justice Department by the White House," Carter said.

'Staying Alive' tops box office list despite reviews

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Despite poor reviews and competition from a bumper crop of summer films, "Staying Alive" — the sequel to "Saturday Night Fever" — headed the weekend movie moneymaking list by drawing $12.1 million during its first three days.

"Staying Alive," a Paramount release which opened Friday at 1,660 theaters in the United States and Canada, became the second film to topple "The Return of the Jedi" from the top of the box office scoreboard since "Jedi" opened in late May.

"Superman III" accomplished the feat during its opening weekend.

"Jedi," the third installment of George Lucas' popular "Star Wars" trilogy, was firmly in second place, collecting $8.3 million at 1,644 theaters during the Friday-through-Sunday period, upping its total gross to $178.5 million, 20th Century-Fox reported Monday.

"We're number one!" exulted Paramount Pictures spokeswoman Marcy Bolotin.

"Paramount was No. 3, too, with "Trading Places." The Eddie Murphy-Dan Ackroyd comedy yanked in $4.3 million at 1,277 houses for a 40-day total of $53.1 million.

Paramount's other dance-oriented film, "Flashdance," racked up $2.2 million and is now up to $62 million after 94 days.

"Staying Alive" marks the return of a superbly muscled John Travolta in the role of Tony Manero, transplanted from a Brooklyn disco to the Broadway stage. Travolta's performance was well received by most critics, but Sylvester Stallone — the film's director, co-writer and co-producer — was almost universally panned.

Studio officials hope the film will not suffer the fate of "Superman III" which after a few weeks of huge grosses began slipping badly. Last weekend the film took in $2.8 million at 1,173 theaters for a 31-day total of $52.5 million.

It was outperformed last weekend by both of MGM's two summer biggies, "WarGames" and "Octopussy." "WarGames" took in $3.1 million at 948 theaters for a total gross of $46.8 million in 45 days. "Octopussy" drew $3 million at 1,149 theaters for a total of $47.2 million after 38 days.

Fox's "Porky's II" picked up $2.6 million at 1,213 screens for a 24-day total of $25.8 million. Warner's "The Twilight Zone" scared up $2.1 million at 957 theaters, bringing its total to $24.5 million after 24 days.

In the $1 million to $2 million range were Universal's "Stroker Ace" and "Psycho II" and Columbia's "Survivors."

Tighter security sought for suspect

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The man accused of killing model Vicki Morgan needs tighter security in jail because some people "might be interested in not seeing him go to trial," his lawyer says.

Arthur Barans, attorney for Marvin Panoast, 33, refused to elaborate Monday on why he had asked the Sheriff's Department to beef up the protection.

Sheriff Sherman Block had not yet decided what action to take, Sgt. Clyde French said.

Meanwhile, the controversy over whether videotapes of politicians at an alleged sex party exist continued, with a man who says he's a psychic claiming Monday that Miss Morgan, 30, gave him such a videotape.

Attorney Robert K. Steinberg says tapes exist showing Miss Morgan and other women cavorting with a congressman, "ambassadorial-level" government officials, prominent businessmen and Alfred Bloomingdale, a department store heir and member of President Reagan's "kitchen cabinet" of advisers.

No evidence of the tapes' existence has been produced. But noted celebrity divorce attorney Marvin Mitchelson, who last year filed a $10 million palimony suit against Bloomingdale on behalf of Miss Morgan, said Sunday that "two separate sources" have convinced him the tapes are real. He said he hasn't seen the tapes.

Bloomingdale died of cancer last August, shortly after Miss Morgan sued him and his wife, contending the model had been promised lifetime support. A judge dismissed much of the suit, saying Miss Morgan simply was Bloomingdale's mistress.

The tapes controversy began July 11 when Steinberg claimed a woman who refused to identify herself visited his office July 9 and gave him three videotapes of orgies.

A few hours after authorities asked to see them last Tuesday, Steinberg reported the tapes stolen.

At a news conference Monday, self-styled psychic Ernesto Montgomery said Miss Morgan gave him a tape during a visit to his Hollywood office July 6, the day before she was beaten to death at the apartment she shared with Panoast. Montgomery said the politicians conspired to "have her silenced."

However, Montgomery failed to produce the tape and he had mailed it to a reporter for the National Examiner tabloid in Florida. The reporter said from West Palm Beach, Fla., that he had not received the purported tape.

Wilderness leader criticized

ROCHFORD, S.D. (AP) — A wilderness leader who let two boys wander in an area where even seasoned hikers have trouble was "irresponsible" and "inexperienced," says a sheriff helping in the search for the missing youngsters.

Search and rescue teams, law enforcement officers, the Civil Air Patrol and volunteers Monday were unable to track down Christopher Estas, 11, and Erik Laub, 13, both students at a Massachusetts private school.

Donald Holloway, sheriff of Pennington County, criticized Daniel Senecal, a sixth-grade teacher at the Fessenden School in West Newton, Mass., for leaving the boys in an area where even experienced hikers have problems.

"I think it was irresponsible to turn those kids loose in the first place," Holloway said. "It was very inexperienced counselor who would turn loose 11- and 13-year-old boys, without a compass or map, in an area where experienced hunters and campers have difficulty. I don't know what he was trying to accomplish."

The boys disappeared last weekend while taking part in a 24-hour survival hike sponsored by a group called Explorers East, which is run by Senecal. Officials had feared they strayed into mountainous terrain, Pennington County Civil Defense Director Illa Cannon said.

But bloodhounds led searchers to the intersection of two U.S. Forest Service roads before losing the boys' scent Sunday, prompting speculation they might have been picked up by a motorist.

"We've covered 100 square miles out there, and we haven't found any sign of them — nothing, zero," said Steve Malone of the Pennington County search and rescue squad. "We're running out of areas to cover."

Mrs. Cannon said the boys may have run away, but Erik's mother said her son is "not that type of boy."

Laub, Estas, 27 other boys and two girls were ending a five-week nationwide camping trip. The youths were to spend Friday night on an eight-mile hike from the Black Fox Campground to Rochford and then were to camp within 200 yards of the road, said Senecal.

The exploration group is not officially connected with the private school where Senecal works, said assistant headmaster William Lyons Jr.

If the boys are still lost in the Black Hills, Senecal said they could survive for weeks if they aren't injured. They were carrying sleeping bags and enough food to last 24 hours.

Estas' parents live in Saudi Arabia, officials said. Laub's father was reportedly en route to Rapid City.

Imprisoned man indicted

NEW YORK (AP) — Imprisoned businessman Irwin Margolies has been indicted as the mastermind and paymaster behind the murders of two of his former employees and the botched attempted murder of a lawyer who was investigating his company.

The indictment charged that Margolies, 47, "solicited, requested and intentionally aided" convicted contract killer Donald Nash to murder Margaret Barbera, 38, of Queens, former comptroller of Margolies' Candor Diamond Corp., and Jenny Soo Chin, 46, of Teaneck, N.J., a bookkeeper at the company.

Nash, 47, of Keansburg, N.J., was convicted May 24 for the murder of Miss Barbera and three CBS technicians who tried to help her as he was trying to abduct her from a rooftop parking lot at Pier 92 on Manhattan's West Side in April 1982.

Assistant District Attorney Gregory Waples argued during Nash's trial that the defendant had also killed Mrs. Chin in January 1982, although he was not specifically charged with her murder. Her body has not been found.

Waples said, however, that even without Mrs. Chin's body, Margolies could legally be tried for her murder if her death was established at trial.

Margolies, who was president of Candor and formerly of Greenburgh, N.Y., allegedly hired Nash to kill the women because they were potential federal witnesses against him in a 1981 case in which Candor defrauded the John P. Maguire Co., a financing firm, of $5.6 million.

Margolies now faces two counts of second-degree murder, two counts of conspiracy and one count of criminal solicitation in the deaths of the two women. If convicted he could be sentenced to more than 50 years in jail. He is currently serving 28 years in the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kan., for the Maguire fraud but is being temporarily held at the Metropolitan Correctional Center in New York.

Margolies was not charged with the murders of the technicians because there was no evidence that he intended their deaths.

The indictment, announced Monday by Manhattan District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau and U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani, said Margolies also plotted to murder a lawyer who participated in the 1981 federal investigation of Candor.
