Spores found at postal site that services White House

By Dayid Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The nation's anthrax scare hit the White House on Tuesday with the discovery of a small concentration of spores at an off-site mail processing center. "We're working hard at finding out who's doing this," President Bush said as bioterrorism claimed fresh victims along the East Coast.

Bush said the executive mansion was safe — and twice said "I don't have anthrax"— despite the discovery of spores on a machine at the mail site a few miles from the White House. Spokesman Ari Fleischer said all employees at the site as well as mailroom workers in the White House itself were being "swabbed and tested" for the disease.

The startling disclosure capped a rapidly unfolding series of events in which officials announced additional confirmed and suspected cases of inhalation anthrax, Congress returned to work, and the administration pledged a more aggressive testing and treatment program if additional tainted letters are discovered.

Before the current outbreak, "We had had no cases of inhalation anthrax in a mail sorting facility," said Jeffrey Koplan, head of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. "There was no reason to think this was a possibility."

For his part, Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson pushed Bayer Corp. to lower its price for Cipro, a front-line anti-anthrax drug.

Outside the White House, House Democratic Leader Dick Gephardt said "weapons-grade material" was responsible for spreading infections. And overseas, the

Postal agent calls for people to use some common sense

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The "terrible tragedy" of the anthrax-induced deaths of two United States Postal Service (USPS) mail sorters working near the nation's Capitol, has promoted the USPS to be even more alert to bioterrorism via mail.

"We are doing everything that we humanly can do to assure the safety of both the public and our postal employees," said Sam Prose, a Lubbock-based U.S. Postal Inspection Service agent. "The Postal Service would never intentionally put anyone in harm's way."

Prose said he would "implore people to use some real good common sense (in handling their mail) because at this point, it sure will go a tremendous way."

The U.S. Postal Inspection Service, which investigates criminal activity involving the USPS, has become the USPS voice during the investigation into the anthrax terror, according to Jim Coultress, a San Antonio-based USPS spokesman.

Postmasters, including Midland Postmaster Guadalupe "Chito" Ramirez, and USPS supervisors "are not at liberty to venture forth with any comments," Coultress said.

"This is a serious matter," he said.

Prose noted the Postal Inspection Service is "working hand-in-hand" with other law-enforcement agencies toward detecting anthrax in the mail and in identifying and arresting the terrorists who are sending the deadly anthrax spores through the mail system.

Meanwhile, USPS delivery of mail to U.S. Congressional offices have been suspended temporarily, announced U.S. Rep. Larry Combest of Lubbock, who

Chemical fire forces evacuation

By D. Lance Lunsford
Staff Writer

An explosion at a South Midland chemical company sent black smoke billowing as firefighters, police and sheriff's deputies rushed to evacuate local residents threatened by burning components in the blaze.

Only three people were on the premises of Tetraco, a chemical intermediary, concentrate and blending company, located at 2500 West Francis Dr. At approximately 11:30 a.m., sparks from a cutting torch ignited some of the building's insulation. The fire quickly got out of control despite the use of on-site firefighting equipment.

Midland County's Fire Marshal Dale Little said workers from the Overhead Door Company were cutting a hole in the side of the building where the fire soon spread to two 1,000 gallon chemical storage tanks.

As methanol and diesel caught fire, the toxic smoke forced officials to quickly evacuate everyone within a quarter-mile radius. Little said firefighters quickly attacked the blaze after assessing the danger of the chemical

Local blood donations dropping off

By Evan A. Pierce
MRT Correspondent

During the week following the Sept. 11 terrorist attack, it was nearly impossible to donate blood. Dozens of people trailed out the doors of local blood donation centers. Many had to wait hours. Now, almost as quickly as the Permian Basin's blood surplus was established, it is diminishing.

"It's what we were afraid of," said Stan King, executive director of United Blood Services. "Blood in general is only good for 42 days.

Lee Patrick, associate executive director of United Blood Services said in the week following the attack, an average of 110 pints of blood were being collected in the Permian Basin. That number dropped to 52 pints a day in the following week. Last week that total had fallen down to 22 pints a day. For the area to maintain its blood supply, 55 to 65 pints of blood need to be collected each day.

"That blood was desperately needed," Ms. Patrick said. "The blood supply is diminishing now."

Donated blood has a limited shelf life. Particularly troubling is the fact that all the blood donated in the weeks following the attacks is quickly running out of

Early voting for ED sales tax again tops 700 for second day

By Stewart Doreen
Staff Writer

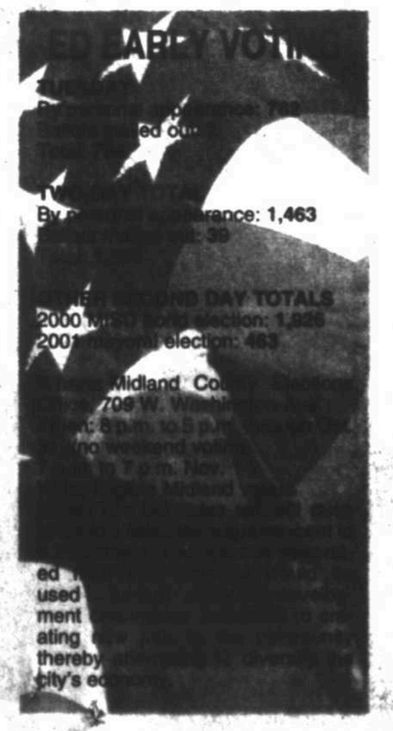

Early voting numbers for the economic development sales tax special election eclipsed 700 for the second straight day.

After 711 voted in person on Monday, 762 cast a ballot Tuesday for a two-day, in-person total of 1,473. Another two ballots were mailed out bringing the official total to 1,502.

If approved, the ED sales tax will raise Midland's sales tax a quarter-cent to 8.25 percent. The revenue generated from that increase would be used to fund an economic development corporation dedicated to creating new jobs in the community, thereby attempting to diversify the city's economy.

Also appearing on the ballot are 19 proposed amendments to the state Constitution.

The two-day total has to be considered a good one. It surpassed the number of first two-day voters (904) from the mayoral election held this spring but was far behind the bond election conducted by the Midland Independent School District last fall. The MISD bond election set a new standard with 1,926 voters on Day 2 and 3,669 after two days of voting.

Odyssey apparently enters orbit around Mars

By Andrew Bridges
Associated Press

The two botched missions also forced the space agency to scale back what had been an ambitious program to explore the planet.

PASADENA, Calif. — NASA's 2001 Mars Odyssey spacecraft appeared to successfully enter orbit late Tuesday around the Red Planet, where the space agency suffered back-to-back failures on its previous two tries.

Engineers and scientists at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory received preliminary indication shortly before 8 p.m. that a programmed engine firing had slowed the spacecraft and allowed Mars to capture it into an egg-shaped orbit.

Mission control at the lab erupted in cheers.

"It's great. It's wonderful. We're back at Mars," said Daniel McCleese, chief scientist of the JPL Mars program. "The orbit looks even better than the predictions. It's really good."

Odyssey dove over Mars' north pole and dipped behind the planet after the burn began, leaving mission team members waiting anxiously. About 20 minutes later the probe reappeared and transmitted a signal to Earth across 93 million miles of space.

Scientists did not expect to know for up to three hours the exact orbital path the boxy spacecraft was traveling around Mars.

The Mars Odyssey, which reached Mars after a six-month, 286 million-mile journey from Earth, is the first mission to the planet since two NASA failures in 1999. For the space agency, the project represented a shot at redemption.

A spacecraft's transition from interplanetary cruising to arrival has proved to be one of the most challenging phases in the exploration of Mars.

In 1993, contact with NASA's Mars Observer was lost as the satellite neared Mars, probably after a fuel-system explosion. Six years later, a mix-up between English and metric units in calculating trajectory put the Climate Orbiter too close to Mars, causing it to burn up in the atmosphere. The Polar Lander vanished three months later, probably because a software error caused it to plunge to the surface.

The back-to-back losses in 1999 underscored the difficulty of getting to Mars: Fewer than one-third of the 30 missions launched to the planet by the United States and other countries since 1960 have succeeded.

The two botched missions also forced the space agency to scale back what had been an ambitious program to explore the planet.

Originally, Odyssey was supposed to be joined by a spacecraft that would put a rover on the surface of Mars. But the lander was scrapped, leaving Odyssey to wend its way alone to Mars after its launch last April.

To avoid another fiasco, NASA added staff, did extra checks on software and took precautions to prevent a repeat of the English-metric mix-up.

Despite the recent failures, NASA has continued to explore Mars from orbit via the Global Surveyor, which arrived in 1997 and has transmitted thousands of highly detailed images of the Martian surface and dust storms in its atmosphere.

Odyssey was equipped with two instruments to map the distribution of minerals and search for water across the dusty surface of Mars. Liquid water is considered a necessary element for life; finding reservoirs could help determine whether life ever existed on the Red Planet.

A third instrument was designed to measure radiation on Mars and how that might endanger humans if they are ever sent to explore the planet.

Odyssey — a box 7 feet long, 5 1/2 feet tall and 8 1/2 feet wide, with a 19-foot solar panel and antennas — was also designed to help pick landing sites for future missions, including twin rovers NASA intends to launch in 2003.

'Genius grants' — foundation awards 23 fellows $500,000 each

CHICAGO (AP) — Astrobiologist Christopher Chyba hasn't had much time to think about his new $500,000 "genius grant" — the expert on the origins of life on Earth has been making recommendations to policy makers about preparations for a biological attack.

"I hope I can find a way to use this to help," said Chyba, the 41-year-old co-director of the Center for International Security and Cooperation at Stanford University.

The John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation announced the 23 award winners Wednesday. Among them are two acclaimed writers, an expert on human rights in China, a Kenyan naturalist, a concert pianist, a pilot who researches Mexico's wildlife and a scholar on punishment in classical Athens.

"These are people who provide the imagination and fresh ideas that can improve people's lives and bring about movement on important issues," said Jonathan Fanton, the foundation's president.

The MacArthur Fellows will each receive the no-strings-attached funding over the next five years.

Sandra Lanham, the pilot researcher from Tucson, Ariz., said she was surprised to receive the award and doesn't consider herself a genius.

"Not one of my qualities. In my case, it's subgenius," said the 53-year-old founder of Environmental Flying Services. "My friends would all laugh."

Lanham often flies her 1956 Cessna over Mexico for four to six hours a day, gathering research on marine and desert ecology. Her work, used mostly by the Mexican government or U.S. nonprofit companies that work in Mexico, helps protect endangered species.

Other winners include Baltimore psychiatrist Kay Redfield Jamison, 55, who used examples in her own life to write about depression, suicide and other mood disorders in such books as "Night Falls Fast: Understanding Suicide" and "An Unquiet Mind."

CDC comes under attack for not testing postal workers

By Erin McClam
Associated Press

ATLANTA — The nation's public health agency faced harsh criticism in Washington Tuesday from lawmakers who suggested "people are dying" because of a breakdown in its response to the anthrax attacks.

Senators said the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, whose doctors are the nation's front line against bioterror, was too slow to test workers at a Washington postal station that handled an anthrax-laced letter sent to Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle.

"I am very concerned about what CDC is doing and how they are operating," said Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, at a bioterror hearing. "Maybe I'm wrong, but it just seems to me that something broke down here. People are getting sick and people are dying."

CDC director Dr. Jeffrey Koplan defended the agency, saying its doctors were acting on the best information they had in an investigation that was unheard of just weeks ago.

"We are health officials," he told a Senate hearing. "These are tragedies for us as well and not something we take lightly. But you've got to know about cases to take action."

Two Washington postal workers died of inhalation anthrax Monday, one week after the anthrax-laced letter arrived in Daschle's office. At least three other postal workers — one in New Jersey — are hospitalized with inhalation anthrax.

All worked in centers that handle mail sent to Congress, but none of those workers were immediately called in for anthrax testing or given preventive antibiotics.

"They closed the House building down while we were in there inhaling it," said Abraham Odom, a package sorter at the Brentwood Road center. "That's not right. That's not fair. This stuff is supposed to be deadly."

The CDC's Dr. Rima Khabbaz, an infectious disease specialist, said the agency was "on a steep curve of learning" and was re-evaluating its response.

Officials said that early testing at some sites led them to believe there was little risk to postal workers. And the anthrax cases in recent weeks had involved skin infections, less dangerous than the inhaled form.

Although Tuesday's hearing produced the sharpest criticism of the Atlanta-based agency, questions about the CDC's response to bioterror had been mounting since the first anthrax death in Florida on Oct. 5.

Public health experts outside the government said the agency was slow to alert doctors to the threat of other bioterror agents and didn't do enough to calm a jittery nation ill-informed on the particulars of anthrax.

CDC was publicly silent as the investigation began in Florida, deferring questions to state and local health officials.

"The only people who can bring order to this is people like CDC," said Dr. Alfred Sommer, dean of public health at Johns Hopkins University. "This is a national crisis. This should be their day."

He questioned why in Florida CDC didn't hold daily briefings to help sort out conflicting information and inspire national confidence that the scare was in the hands of medical experts.

Presenting the image that health workers are directing the response — not politicians or investigators — is a key part of CDC's mission, said Dr. Gregg Wilkinson, epidemiology chairman at the University of North Texas' public health school.

"I think that there's a bit of an overreaction on the part of many members of the public. People are not using their heads," he said. "That's where CDC and public health agencies need to calm people's fears."

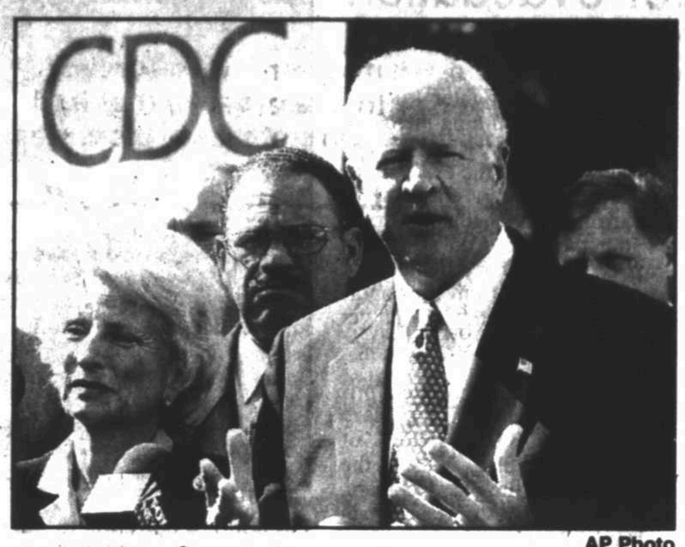

CDC spokesmen say they were initially restricted by the parent agency, the Department of Health and Human Services, and the FBI investigation and federal emergency laws.

Georgia's Sen. Max Cleland came to CDC's defense: "The only time they've been throttled back is for national security. They're the best in the business, and thank God we have them."

Established in 1946 to promote Americans' health by preventing disease and injury, the CDC is accustomed to doing its most dangerous work behind the scenes. It covers everything from tracking the flu to stopping gun violence. It rarely discusses the research it performs in high-security labs on the world's deadliest pathogens.

Soon after anthrax appeared in Florida, the CDC's disease detectives were dispatched to investigate. At its Atlanta headquarters, officials set up a crisis center, with dozens of scientists processing tests.

"We're working around the clock," said Dr. Julie Gerberding, acting deputy director of CDC's infectious disease branch. "Our capacity to address the emerging threats is one that is evolving as the threat situation evolves."

BLAZE: Burning methanol main reason for evacuation

(From 1A)

fire.

"(Firefighters) got a game plan together and attacked it," Little said. "We weren't sure what was in there, so we started evacuating the area until we could figure out what the chemicals were."

Danny Sierman was pulling onto Cotton Flat Road, about 100 yards from the blaze, when the explosion almost knocked him off of his feet.

"It was a good explosion," Sierman said. "I felt it as it blew my hair back. I could see the metal up in the air, but I didn't see flames."

Sierman said less than a minute after the explosion, he could see orange flames dancing and shooting from the roof of the Tetraco building.

Sergio Machuca, a resident living just within the security line, emerged from his home to determine the source of the commotion.

"I heard something," Machuca said. "Inside the house, it was just like a bang or something. I thought it was a car crash. It was just a loud bang."

Midland Firefighter Michael Cota said the burning methanol was a serious threat and the primary reason for the evacuation.

"The (burning) chemical is confirmed as methanol that's within the tank," Cota said. "It is toxic. As liquid, it's lighter than water. Fumes (from methanol) are lighter than air, so it can get down into places like a basement."

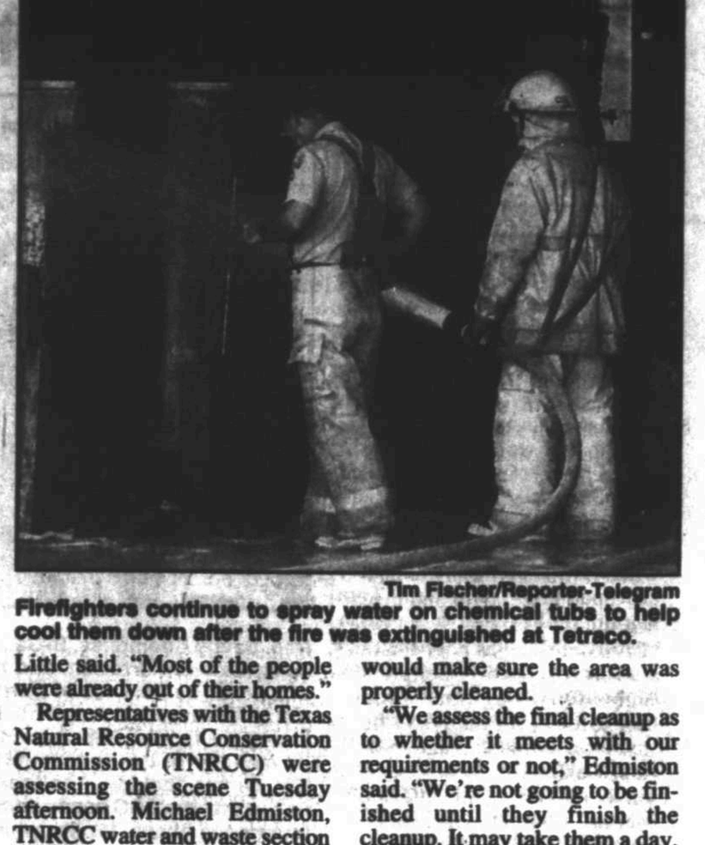

Although the firefighters primarily extinguished the blaze with about 3,000 gallons of water, they also doused the flames with a fire-retardant foam, which is used to suffocate certain chemical fires.

Little said members of the Midland Police Department, Midland Fire Department, Midland County Sheriff's Office, and Department of Public Safety helped evacuate residents and bystanders in the area. Little said the evacuation was a simple process considering the initial concern in the area.

"Most of the people had already heard it (the explosion)," Little said. "Most of the people were already out of their homes."

Representatives with the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission (TNRCC) were assessing the scene Tuesday afternoon. Michael Edmiston, TNRCC water and waste section manager, said Tetraco was responsible for the final cleanup of the explosion, but the TNRCC would make sure the area was properly cleaned.

"We assess the final cleanup as to whether it meets with our requirements or not," Edmiston said. "We're not going to be finished until they finish the cleanup. It may take them a day, it may take them a week, or it may take them a month."

ANTHRAX: Thousands undergoing tests

(From 1A)

State Department issued a worldwide alert warning U.S. citizens to be mindful of the risk of anthrax or other biological or chemical agents.

Six weeks after terrorists killed thousands in Washington and New York, administration officials drew a rhetorical connection to the outbreak of anthrax. The FBI released the text of three anthrax-tainted letters — each of them dated Sept. 11, the date that hijackers flew planes into the World Trade Center in New York and the Pentagon.

Bush believes the spread of anthrax "is another example of how this is a two-front war: that there are people who would seek to do evil to this country; that there are people who mean us harm," Fleischer said. "And they have mailed letters, obviously, to high impact places — the news media, to Majority Leader (Tom) Daschle, perhaps, in this case, to the White House."

The administration has been buffeted by criticism for waiting several days after the discovery of the letter addressed to Daschle before ordering testing at the central postal facility for the nation's capital. Without acknowledging any shortcomings, several officials pointed to changes in their outlook.

"We're going to err on the side of caution in making sure people are protected," said Thompson.

"When a case of anthrax does emerge we will immediately move in at any and all postal facilities that might have handled that piece of mail," he said. He spoke as the U.S. Postal Service offered antibiotics as a precaution to 7,000 employees of six Manhattan post offices that may have been in the path of anthrax-contaminated letters.

Koplan, appearing before a separate panel, said, "the public health system of the United States is severely challenged at this moment."

The latest evidence of that was in the Washington area and New Jersey, at postal facilities known to have processed one or more anthrax-tainted letters in the past few weeks. Both were closed after the presence of anthrax was detected.

Postal Service Vice President Deborah Willhite said of the Washington facility: "It's a crime scene because someone has been murdered."

There, officials confirmed two postal worker deaths due to anthrax, and said the disease had sent more to the hospital. Thousands more mail employees were undoing tests and taking antibiotics.

Large amounts of government mailed were being quarantined in trailers, waiting to be decontaminated before delivery in Washington, a senior postal official said Tuesday, speaking only on condition of anonymity.

District of Columbia Mayor Anthony Williams said final laboratory results confirmed inhalation anthrax as the cause of death of two men who worked at the city's main Brentwood postal facility. Other officials said two more employees remain hospitalized with the disease, and said anthrax was suspected in an additional four cases. Anthrax-laced mail delivered last week to Daschle's office was postmarked in Trenton, N.J., and went through the Brentwood facility.

"We do not need further testing," said Dr. Ivan Walks, the city's top health official. "But we need to treat. And we need to treat quickly." He urged anyone who visited the back area of the central mail facility to come in for antibiotics.

Earlier, New Jersey officials announced that a woman had been hospitalized in the Trenton area and was presumed to be suffering from the inhalation form of the disease. "She's holding her own," said Dr. Eddy Bresnitz, the state epidemiologist.

The woman, whose name was not released, works at a Trenton-area postal facility believed to have processed at least three anthrax-laced letters — one to Daschle, the second to NBC News anchorman Tom Brokaw and the third to the New York Post.

Still later, officials in Montgomery County, Md., said they were checking three postal workers from Brentwood for possible anthrax symptoms at a local hospital. And state officials in Towson, Md., said one patient at a separate hospital is suspected to have the disease.

The FBI released copies of the spiked letters mailed to Daschle, Brokaw and the New York Post. All three contained anti-American and anti-Israeli messages.

"You can not stop us. We have this anthrax. You die now. Are you afraid? Death to America. Death to Israel. Allah is great," said the letter to Daschle.

The discovery of that letter last week touched off the anthrax scare on Capitol Hill that has yet to abate.

The House and Senate reopened for business Tuesday, but the office buildings that house lawmakers and their aides were shut, some of them possibly for days.

"I think we have to assume there is a possibility that other mail could be contaminated," said Daschle, D-S.D. He said some of the mail that has been piling up since last Monday may have to be destroyed.

That vote may be most significant, especially as Midland voters take part in the early voting process to determine the fate of an economic development sales tax.

Tuesday was the second of the 10-day early voting period. Election Day is Nov. 6.

With all the square footage, all the high-tech equipment and all the jobs created — the number is near 800, according to a Cingular representative Tuesday — the call center has been the Council's first and only shot at economic diversification using forgivable loans or enticements or as some opponents call it, "corporate welfare."

"It is a well-kept secret," said District 1 Councilwoman LuAnn Morgan. "I wish (the voters) could have an opportunity to see this place. It is overwhelming when you see the facility. Look at it and how much was invested in the facility. You know it was a good investment."

Cingular will receive $1 million from the city before it is said and done and an additional $250,000 in private funds. In turn, the wireless communications company will hire at least 1,000 full-time employees (including benefits). Possible expansion of the call center also could be in the works.

"It is a tremendous example of what we can do if we have those kinds of monies to work with," Midland Mayor Mike Canon said.

Cingular has been called by some as the "Cadillac of call centers," especially for an area this size. A call center is one of the areas listed on the Midland Assessment and Action Plan (MAAP) report as a target industry. However, with the sheer numbers employed by Cingular, it is believed the economic development corporation and Council could look elsewhere for opportunities — such as out at the airport, college, interstate or hospital.

Some in the community are troubled by the fact that offering public funds provides an unfair advantage and takes away from a market that should be purely capitalistic.

Members of the Council prefer to look at the entire picture. They say those working at Cingular are benefiting from a better reason to go to work, and the community as a whole will benefit because of it.

"Cingular is a great example of what can be done with innovative investing in a public-private joint venture," Canon said.

No one has to tell Cingular representatives Election Day is two weeks away. They realize what an economic development sales tax can do. They see themselves as living proof.

"That is why we are here," said Ms. Freshour of the forgivable loan. "We have exceeded the expectations they laid out for us, and the performance of the employees is unbelievable."

MAIL: Workers can choose to wear gloves, masks

(From 1A)

represents a portion of Midland County.

Tests for anthrax spores in a U.S. House of Representatives mailroom proved positive, Combest noted. And the two USPS workers, ages 46 and 55, who died following flu-like symptoms associated with pulmonary anthrax by inhaling spores of the deadly bacterium, worked at a mail facility that serves Congress.

"I think that this is the appropriate response in order to take the necessary precautions," Combest said in a press release on Tuesday. Combest said he is confident his constituents will appreciate "the delay in mail service" while Congressional "leadership and security officials work to prevent any further anthrax contamination."

While the nationwide search for the anthrax perpetrators heightens, Prose noted the 800,000 USPS workers have the "choice as to whether they want to use it (protective gear such as gloves or masks) or not."

Deadly anthrax cases from Florida to the Northeast came to the forefront following the Sept. 11 crash of hijacked airliners into the World Trade Center's 110-story Twin Towers, into the Pentagon, and in rural Pennsylvania.

"Right now in a time of panic," Prose said it is "more important ... to take the deep breath and think it out" to avoid hazards of anthrax.

Fermin Romo, a Lubbock-based Postal Inspection Service agent who was in Midland Tuesday, said the USPS has made protective masks and gloves available to postal workers nationwide.

"Anybody who wishes to wear them, they are at their disposal," Romo said. "They are not required," however. "They are made available. And they decide individually whether they want to wear them or not."

In recalling the "real tragedy" of the deaths of the USPS mail sorters in the nation's capital, Romo said, "I think the American public has kind of forgotten about the postal employee.

"We're working behind the scenes," he said. "Most of the employees, they toil — kind of like out of sight, out of mind."

In Midland, the USPS employs several hundred workers, including carriers, at the Downtown, Graves, Village and ClayDesta stations and at in the Carl O. Hyde General Mail facility (mail-processing plant) and Main Post Office at Midland International Airport.

The Midland regional mail-processing center daily processes about 350,000 to 400,000 pieces of mail this time of year and up to 1 million pieces per day during the Christmas season.

"The public has not taken into account that we have a lot of employees that, day in and day out, have come to work, and, in my thinking, a lot of them were the first ones to be exposed (to the anthrax spores)."

Despite the threat, "Everybody who has been asked to work has worked," Romo said.

In noting much of the mail-processing is "highly mechanized," Romo said "that's not going to be slowed down.

"I'm not aware of any employee that has refused to work or is afraid to work" due to the anthrax threat. "There's a lot of anxiety just like there is everywhere else, especially when they know a fellow postal employee has died (twice over) because of this.

"I'd like the American public to say 'Thanks' the next time they see a carrier or a postal employee because most of the employees work in obscurity. Nobody sees them sorting the mail."

USPS workers, such as the carriers, "do a fine job, too," Romo said. "They pick up the mail out of the collection box where there could be a (contaminated) letter dropped. There has been nothing confirmed (as anthrax) in the Permian Basin or in West Texas."

BLOOD: Donors can give 6 times a year

time.

"The blood drawn on Sept. 11 either had to be used or discarded as of the 22nd," King said. "We've taken a lot of effort to make sure its been used."

Blood can be frozen — but it is an expensive process.

"You can freeze blood but it adds $200-$300 to the cost of that unit," he said. "We try to get people to come in twice a year so there's no need to resort to freezing."

As small as the amount of blood being donated is, it may not be as bad as it sounds. Ms. Patrick said, "There's a lot of people who couldn't donate because the wait was two to three hours and they can come in and donate now."

Those who gave at the time of the attack had to wait eight weeks before giving blood again.

"People can start coming back in as soon as early November," Ms. Patrick said. "We had such a tremendous outpour of donations we're hopeful these donors that now know the need for blood will come back."

Donors can give blood up to six times per year.

"If everyone that currently donates once a year donated at least twice a year we would have sufficient blood on hand year round," King said.

To combat the blood problem, United Blood Services is planning several blood drives in the near future.

From 3 to 9 p.m. Oct. 31, in Midland Park Mall, a Halloween blood drive is scheduled.

"We wanted to put together an event that would be fun and would encourage blood donations," said Michael Todd, event coordinator and radio personality from 95X FM radio.

United Blood Services remains grateful for every pint collected.

"In general we really appreciate everyone coming out and donating," King said. "Since the 11th we've seen a heightened sense of awareness of the need. We hope we don't lose that."

Civil defense preparations from another era coming back — but in altered form

By Deb Riechmann
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In the 1960s, the drill was "duck and cover." Now it's "don't open, shake or sniff."

At the height of the Cold War, 20 cents bought the latest Life magazine, with headlines like "How you can survive fallout" and "Detailed plans for building shelters."

Now, with daily anthrax scares, nervous Americans are being told to check their supplies of canned food and water, watch for suspicious behavior and treat weird mail tenderly.

"Civil defense has not been in the forefront of people's thoughts for a long time," said Victor Utgoff, an analyst who focuses on chemical and biological warfare.

Since the Sept. 11 attacks, homeland security has been talked about from Washington to state capitals, from town halls to backyard fences. Coordinating it is the job of a new federal agency.

Not everyone is on high alert.

Alma Williams, a retiree in Princeton, N.J., has a fallout shelter in her yard built by previous owners, but hasn't given it much thought. "I don't see too much panic around here," she said.

Around here is only 15 miles from Trenton, the postmark of at least three anthrax-laced envelopes, sent to Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, NBC anchorman Tom Brokaw and The New York Post.

Still, Williams says she has no plans to sweep the cobwebs out of the bunker or stock it with food and water.

"There's not really much we can do with it," she said. "It's a rather humid, damp spot. I can't unscrew the light bulb down there anymore. The fixture is rusted."

Homeland defense was a big deal during World War II. Nearly every neighborhood had civil defense wardens, with white helmets and armbands, to make sure emergency procedures were followed. Black curtains were drawn at night to make homes harder to see from the air.

"It's true that Pearl Harbor scared ... people and there was a lot of sinking of merchant ships off the east coast, but we didn't get bombed like Britain," Utgoff said. "The civil defense stuff started to just look silly."

In the 1960s, fallout shelters were the rage. The federal government drew instruction sheets showing suburbanites how to make an entertainment den that would be the envy of the Joneses, but could convert quickly to a bunker.

In the late 1970s, after the atomic bomb scare faded, civil defense fell out of favor. The emphasis at the Federal Emergency Management Agency switched from preparing for an attack to handling natural disasters like earthquakes and hurricanes.

Fallout shelter signs began to rust. Stockpiles of stale emergency biscuits were removed along with old portable potties and first aid kits.

The underground bunker at the Greenbrier Resort in White Sulfur Springs, W.Va., designed to protect members of Congress in a nuclear strike, is now a tourist site rented out for theme parties.

When congressional leaders were rushed out of Washington for their protection Sept. 11, they went to another secure location in the mountains.

These days, emergency response is back on the priority list. More than half of municipal officials polled by the National League of Cities said they are reviewing emergency plans.

"Now, everyone is scrambling," said William Waugh, who wrote a book on emergency management and terrorism. "I think this is a movement that's going to be fed by billions of federal dollars."

Attorney General John Ashcroft already has called for what amounts to a national neighborhood watch, telling people to keep their eyes open for suspicious behavior.

"We haven't yet seen efforts to start organizing at the local level, but I suspect that you will see that eventually," said Milton Copulos, president of the National Defense Council Foundation, a think tank.

If the current anthrax scares and terrorist attacks die down, however, maintaining that interest may be difficult.

Even in the early 1960s, keeping people alert was a challenge.

There was so much apathy that the Office of Civil Defense, a forerunner of FEMA, put out an album in 1961 called "Complacent Americans." Using sounds of bombs exploding and sirens blaring, the album urged listeners to take civil defense seriously.

On the recording, a fictional "complacent American" who dies in an A-bomb attack speaks from beyond the grave about how he had objected to those sirens.

"Here it is in the middle of the lunch hour and those guys have to test the equipment now," the man recalls thinking.

"Then I remembered a civil defense meeting I had promised to attend. I had told Helen, my wife, 'What a waste of time.' Besides, I was going to bowl that night anyway. So I bowled and never did get to learn anything about civil defense."

Americans must stand up, remain confident

One year ago, it would have been hard to imagine being in the situation in which we find ourselves today.

We see National Guardsmen and police officers stationed at airports across the country.

We hear the postmaster general detailing deaths and illnesses of postal workers who were simply going about their routine duties but appear to have contracted anthrax.

We have witnessed the members of the House of Representatives flee their offices for fear of contamination.

A year ago, it would have been difficult to concoct the strange sequence of events we are witnessing today.

Many of us find ourselves asking, what is our government doing to protect and keep us from harm?

While we have every right to expect the government to provide for us a sense of security, we should also bear in mind that good judgment and sound decision-making are of utmost importance to our individual well-being and in the safety of our families.

Many of us still harbor reservations about flying on commercial airliners after seeing so many innocent American lives claimed in the brutal, cold-blooded Sept. 11 attack. Angered at our loss of freedom, many have complained that the government has not yet taken appropriate steps to guarantee our safety when flying.

Today, many are criticizing the U.S. Postal Service, arguing it should have done more to protect its workers and the recipients of mail.

Meanwhile, there are those Americans who are stocking up on weapons and gas masks and hoarding the antibiotics used to treat anthrax. Some office workers and postal employees are taking the precautionary step of wearing gloves and masks when handling mail.

Who could have imagined Americans would be facing this scenario in what just a few months ago seemed to be a carefree, careless existence?

Every day, we face decisions and challenges.

While the fear of further terrorist attacks looms in the mind of virtually every American these days, we ought to remind ourselves we are blessed. We live in the greatest nation in the world and have strong, capable leaders at the helm who are guiding us through this crisis.

Every day, we make dozens of decisions with regard to our safety and the well-being of our loved ones. Many of those daily decisions are as automatic as buckling our seat belts and looking both ways before we cross the street. Today, those decisions have taken on greater meaning.

Fear and anxiety fuel the terrorist machine.

We cannot allow that to happen.

As Americans, we must show the world we stand together — courageous and confident.

As we go about our lives today, do we choose to show fear or courage?

It's our decision to make.

Today in History

Today is Wednesday, Oct. 24, the 297th day of 2001. There are 68 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

One hundred years ago, on Oct. 24, 1901, Anna Edson Taylor, a 43-year-old widow, became the first person to survive going over Niagara Falls in a barrel. (Mrs. Taylor's dreams of fame and fortune failed to materialize, however, and she died in poverty in 1921.)

On this date:

In 1537, Jane Seymour, the third wife of England's King Henry VIII, died 12 days after giving birth to Prince Edward, later King Edward VI.

In 1861, the first transcontinental telegraph message was sent as Justice Stephen J. Field of California transmitted a telegram to President Lincoln.

In 1931, the George Washington Bridge, connecting New York and New Jersey, opened to traffic.

In 1939, nylon stockings were sold publicly for the first time, in Wilmington, Del.

In 1939, Benny Goodman and his orchestra recorded their signature theme, "Let's Dance," for Columbia Records in New York.

In 1940, the 40-hour work week went into effect under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.

In 1945, the United Nations officially came into existence as its charter took effect.

In 1952, Republican presidential candidate Dwight D. Eisenhower declared, "I shall go to Korea" as he promised to end the conflict.

In 1962, the U.S. blockade of Cuba during the missile crisis officially began under a proclamation signed by President Kennedy.

It's possible to win the war and lose the peace

WASHINGTON — At the conclusion of the Gulf War in 1991, we wrote the following, which seems pertinent today:

America kicked the Vietnam Syndrome because a clear cut objective — ejecting Iraqi soldiers from Kuwait — was achieved through the use of massive force. This contrasts with the Vietnam War, which had no clear American objective and was marked by the now-vilified strategy of graduated response. But the comparison is too simple and the conclusion too neat.

Anderson

Iraq was invaded; its supply lines were cut; the deployment was massive. But what a difference an objective makes!

General Norman Schwarzkopf, commander of coalition forces in the Gulf, explained after the campaign's successful conclusion that nothing stood between his forces and Baghdad. We did not march to Baghdad, however, and this is supposed to be proof that America came to the region as liberators, not conquerors. It was a "just war" — a moral war.

But, wait a minute. Are the Iraqi people less deserving of liberation than the Kuwaiti people? Did not President Bush make it clear from the beginning that we were making war on Iraq's leaders, not on Iraq's people? In fact, we had the military instrument at the right place and time to attain a much nobler goal than restoring the emir of Kuwait to his throne.

We had the means to bring peace and democracy to a region of the world noted for its instability and violence, to a region that has often been called a powder keg which, like the Balkans three-quarters of a century ago, could spark a world war.

Instead, the objective did not match the means. Coalition forces probably killed more than 100,000 Iraqis during the war — not out of hatred, but because that is the nature of war. War is the terrible last resort of politics. And, as such, it ought to render the greatest possible good.

Indeed, three benefits have come out of this war: Kuwait was liberated; U.S. military might was demonstrated to a surprised world; and U.S. influence in the Middle East has been strengthened. Also, there are arguments against going further, militarily: The U.N. did not specifically authorize it; coalition casualties would increase; U.S. troops would be compelled to occupy a hostile nation.

The idea of a MacArthur regency — as was employed in Japan after World War II — is dismissed. Then, abandoning logic altogether, it is argued that Iraq has never been a democracy. Had Japan?

The fact is that the U.N. authorized the use of force to liberate Kuwait, but it did not restrict the scope of actions against Iraq, hence the present occupation of Southern Iraq by coalition forces.

The casualty argument is difficult to comprehend, considering Schwarzkopf's description of opposition as well as the performance of his forces to date. Finally, the job of occupying Iraq is quite different from the task we faced with hostile populations in Japan and Germany in 1945. Clearly, most Iraqis would like to be rid of Saddam Hussein.

By all accounts of the Vietnam War, the United States and its allies defeated the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese forces. Even the Communist Tet Offensive of 1968, which turned U.S. public sentiment against the war and ended LBJ's hopes of re-election, was a resounding battlefield success for American forces.

This scenario set the stage. America would win on the battlefield and lose at the peace table. And this may well be happening again. Saddam Hussein remains in power, and his troops are bloodily suppressing revolts throughout Iraq as coalition forces stand by — militarily potent, politically impotent. We may once again have won the war and lost the peace. The Vietnam Syndrome lives on.

ED sales tax will give us a better Midland

Mr. Lujan's letter of Oct. 7 is really misstating a lot. One small tax increase is one of several answers to Midland's future. Should we be desperate? Yes! Midland lost more than 3,200 oil industry jobs between October 1997 and April 2000. The 2000 Census documented that Midland lost 4,200 in population from 1999 to 2000.

We must diversify our economy and we need the resources to compete with other cities — like Odessa, Big Spring, Abilene, San Angelo and Amarillo — in attracting new jobs to Midland and to just maintain our population. One-fourth of a cent is a small investment for the future of Midland.

The ED plan and sales tax is not a short-lived trend. The state Legislature created the ED sales tax in 1989. Abilene and Amarillo each have used it for 11 years, Big Spring has used it for eight years, Odessa has had it for 3 1/2 years and more than 460 Texas cities have approved an ED plan and an ED sales tax.

There are responsibilities, accountibilities and oversight in the ED plan.

The City Council is required by Texas law to establish a non-profit corporation and appoint a five member board of directors who serve in unpaid positions for a maximum of six years. The members serve at the will of the City Council and board meetings are subject to open meetings laws. The board is required to develop an annual plan, an annual budget and to submit an annual report to the state Comptroller's Office.

The Economic Development Plan can be stopped at any time with a citizens' petition calling for an election or, by an election called by the City Council to abolish the corporation and end the quarter cent sales tax.

A better Midland is not in doing nothing, being against everything and idly watching, as jobs are lost and population drops. A vote of "yes" on Nov. 6 is a vote for more jobs, better pay and a better Midland.

Anthrax headline gave the terrorists what they wanted

When we opened our Reporter-Telegram Thursday morning, Oct. 18, the headlines "Anthrax Fears Shut Down Congress" greeted us. We are outraged!

As President Bush said "You are either for the terrorists or for us." The loyalty of the media in general and in this instance the Reporter-Telegram in particular is certainly in question.

In this time of concern, fear and grief, why would you contribute to the turmoil? Why would you play into the terrorists' hands and give them what they want?

When the people of this blessed country are being very brave, trying our best to resume normal activities, getting back on planes, investing again in our financial future, why would Midland's only newspaper contribute to the panic.

There are many positive headlines you could have created: "Congress Being Prudent in the Face of Anthrax Scare," "Congress Handling Events with Caution," etc. Why would you do this traitorous thing?

I do hope you have rethought your intentions. I have lived in Midland all my adult life and have always been proud of being a part of this community. Today, I am ashamed of our newspaper.

We think you owe all of Midland and indeed everyone in the Permian Basin who counts on you to communicate news an apology.

Thanks to those who helped with annual Dog's Day Out

Lone Star SPCA wished to thank everyone who participated in our third annual Dog's Day Out held at Hogan Park.

Dog's Day Out is part of our commitment to the community to make a difference in the way our pets are cared for and to offer a fun family day for people and their pets. We at Lone Star SPCA know the benefits of the dog as a member of their family.

There needs to be honest debate on foreign policy

Terrorism is always a reaction to policy, and I had hoped the recent atrocity in New York City would at least generate a debate on America's foreign policy. It has not.

Basically, we have two choices. One is the old republican model advocated by George Washington. We offer trade and friendly relations with all countries on an equal basis. We do not get involved in their internal affairs. We do not make moral judgments about their internal affairs. We do not involve ourselves in their quarrels with neighboring countries. In short, provided they leave us alone, we leave them alone and simply do business when it is in our mutual interests. Today this policy is always labeled "isolationism" by advocates of internationalism.

Reese

And internationalism is our second choice and our current policy. This basically involves our country presuming to interfere in the internal affairs of some countries, to take sides in some quarrels between foreign countries, to make moral judgments and seek to inflict economic or military injury on some countries while rewarding others with special favors and aid. I prefer to call it imperialism, since it involves our country's national government acting as if it were the seat of a world empire, allied with certain vassal states and contending with potential rivals.

Just to cite one example: Why should Afghanistan's government take orders from our government? Afghanistan is a sovereign nation, and we have no extradition treaty with it. To simply order the government to hand over Osama bin Laden or face military attacks is about as imperialistic as it gets. We did the same thing when we interfered in Yugoslavia's attempt to put down Albanian rebels in Kosovo.

Well, you might like playing a neo-Roman citizen. I don't. I would like it much better if we could return to our old republican model, when Americans could travel the world safely and hear nothing but praise about their country. Today in many parts of the world, we are hated simply because of the injuries our government has inflicted on people in pursuing its imperialistic policies.

And, yes, those policies are often closely connected with the financial interests of multinational corporations, though our imperial politicians almost never admit that. I've always contended that if a multinational corporation wishes to protect its financial interests, it should hire its own mercenaries and not hijack America's armed forces under false pretenses. No American who died defending the business interests of Kuwait Inc. had any share of those profits. As far as Americans were concerned, we were already buying Iraqi oil, so if Iraq added the Kuwaiti fields, it wouldn't make any difference at all to us.

Some of the bad side effects of imperialism include the constant need to have a foreign enemy in order to justify so large a standing military establishment and so much federal power. Another is the exclusive equation of patriotism with militarism and unquestioning obedience to the government. In fact, a true patriot loves his people and his land; a nationalist loves his government. No American who has unthinkingly jumped aboard a bandwagon to wage war on some country that had done us no harm or even had the capability should look down his nose at the German people of the 1930s. If you're going to surrender your mind to a politician, you are going against the American tradition. Traditional Americans look upon their political leaders as temporary servants, not as fuehrers or emperors.

At least today, you know there is a price to be paid for being a neo-Roman citizen of the New Empire. And I hope you know that no empire in the history of mankind has ever lasted.

Legislation would give police new search powers

By Jesse J. Holland
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Police would be able to secretly search the homes of suspects, tap all their cell and home phones and track their use of the Internet under anti-terrorism legislation moving toward a House vote.

Lawmakers last week reached a compromise between the House and Senate versions of President Bush's measure, which would expand the FBI's wiretapping authority, impose stronger penalties on those who harbor or finance terrorists and increase punishment of terrorists.

House leaders said the bill should pass overwhelmingly, with the Senate expected to take up the bill later this week. The plan is to get it to Bush for a possible Friday signing at the White House.

However, there may be a snag on the Senate side. Sen. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., has threatened to block final approval in the Senate because of a compromise Senate negotiators made to get House approval.

The original Senate bill tinkered with the "McDade amendment," which prevents federal prosecutors from using investigative techniques — such as wiretaps or undercover stings — that are disallowed under ethics rules crafted by state and local bar associations, although not barred by federal law.

The Senate fix would loosen the McDade amendment, named for Joe McDade, a former congressman whose reputation was clouded by an eight-year racketeering case before he won acquittal in 1996.

Former House Judiciary Committee chairman Henry Hyde, R-Ill., and current chairman James Sensenbrenner, R-Wis., have opposed any changes to the amendment. "I believe U.S. Attorneys ought to obey ethical requirements of the state," Hyde said last week.

Wyden wants the fix put back into the anti-terrorism bill and has threatened to delay final approval. By Senate custom, any senator can block a bill, at least temporarily. Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., can override the block.

In Oregon, a court ruling last year said that federal prosecutors must abide by Oregon State Bar ethics rules that prohibit deceit. "Its unintended consequences have led to a complete shutdown of all federal covert investigative methods for over a year," Wyden and Sen. Gordon Smith, R-Ore., said in a letter to Bush.

The Senate's McDade compromise wasn't the only one made during negotiations for the anti-terrorism bill.

The Justice Department gave up on its demands that the new laws immediately become permanent, a major loss for the Bush administration. "No one can guarantee that terrorism will sunset," Attorney General John Ashcroft implored lawmakers, but House leaders said it was unlikely that they would pass the bill without an expiration date.

The Bush administration ultimately decided that having the wiretapping and electronic surveillance portion of the terrorism legislation expire at the end of 2005 was better than having no new laws at all.

The Republican-controlled House gave up its insistence that money-laundering legislation be passed separately and not with the anti-terrorism legislation.

House Republican Leader Dick Armey of Texas said last week that the Senate-passed bill was "loaded up with incomplete money-laundering legislation, so a better option is to get a complete comprehensive look at money laundering, move that separately and do that job as fully and completely as possible, and then get refocused on the anti-terrorism bill."

But Senate leaders repeatedly threatened to scuttle the bill if the money-laundering provisions were taken out, and House leaders relented.

They also dumped a provision, sought by some House members, that would have prohibited the use of credit cards or checks for illegal Internet gambling. Law enforcement authorities have identified Internet gambling as a means for money laundering.

Coast Guard post, boat test negative

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — A mysterious material dropped by a crop-dusting plane over a tiny Coast Guard post on the Mississippi River was fertilizer — not anthrax, authorities said Tuesday.

One person was hospitalized as a precaution after the Monday flyover. Chris Sparkman, deputy commissioner of the state agriculture department, said the flyover appeared to be "accidental."

Spokeswoman Amy Bissell of the Mississippi Emergency Management Agency said the substance included fertilizer, and that tests were continuing to see what else it might have contained.

On Friday, a crop duster about 170 miles upriver sprayed a mist over a towboat and its 17 barges of coal. Investigators have ruled out anthrax in final tests in the towboat case, Sparkman said.

IRA begins to 'decommission' arms in key Northern Ireland peace move

By Shawn Pegatchnik
Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — The Irish Republican Army put an unknown amount of guns and explosives "beyond use" Tuesday, an unprecedented step that satisfied the leader of Northern Ireland's main Protestant party and injected fresh hope into a faltering peace process.

An international disarmament commission confirmed that the IRA "put a quantity of arms completely beyond use" — a secret event that the commissioners had waited five years to witness. The weapons included arms, ammunition and explosives, they said.

But disarmament officials didn't say how much was decommissioned, how or when the IRA had done it or when the group might complete the disposal of an arsenal estimated at more than 100 tons. Revealing those details, the commission said, would not help further the disarmament process.

In a statement, the IRA said its motivation was clear: "This unprecedented move is to save the peace process and to persuade others of our genuine intentions."

The IRA had pledged in May 2000 to put its weapons "beyond use," a euphemism for disarmament. But Protestant anger over the IRA's failure to fulfill that promise threatened to bring down the Protestant-Catholic government created under the Good Friday peace agreement of 1998.

David Trimble, leader of the Ulster Unionist Party, said the step was good enough for him. He said he would urge his party's three ministers in the government to resume their offices by Friday.

And Trimble, who triggered the political crisis by resigning as the government's leader in July, said he would seek re-election to the pivotal post next week.

"This is the day we were told would never happen. This is the day we were told we would never see — IRA arms decommissioning," a smiling Trimble said after meeting Canadian Gen. John de Chastelain, the senior disarmament commissioner.

Trimble said de Chastelain and his deputies were "absolutely satisfied that this material, which they saw being put beyond use, will never, ever be used again."

British Prime Minister Tony Blair hailed the move as "a very significant milestone" and Irish Prime Minister Bertie Ahern said he hoped a big step had been taken toward ridding Northern Ireland of the outlawed paramilitary groups on both Catholic and Protestant sides.

In Washington, President Bush called the IRA's decision an "historic step" and urged all paramilitary groups in Northern Ireland to build on the day's events.

"The people of Northern Ireland are now measurably closer to the lasting peace which they richly deserve," Bush said in a statement.

The British government later reaffirmed its commitment to reshape Northern Ireland's predominantly Protestant police force and to keep cutting its military forces, two key IRA demands.

Blair's secretary of state for Northern Ireland, John Reid, said he would sanction "immediate steps and measures" on both fronts.

"Today has been a huge, liberating leap forward," said Gerry Adams, leader of the IRA-linked Sinn Fein party. "Let everyone else now bear the collective weight of that and bring the process forward."

Tuesday's IRA move ran the risk of creating more recruits for anti-cease-fire dissidents like the so-called Real IRA, who are already responsible for the worst single atrocity in Northern Ireland's 30-year conflict — the Aug. 15, 1998 car-bombing of Omagh that left 29 dead and more than 330 wounded.

"No one should doubt the difficulties these initiatives cause for us, our volunteers and our supporters," the IRA's statement said.

Sinn Fein's deputy, Martin McGuinness, insisted the IRA decision was all about preserving Northern Ireland's peace process, not a reaction to international pressure following the Sept. 11 terror attacks on the United States.

But the Sinn Fein-IRA movement had stirred unease among its American supporters, particularly since August when three suspected IRA members were arrested in Colombia, allegedly training anti-government rebels. Adams admitted on Monday, after repeated denials, that one of those men was Sinn Fein's representative in Cuba.

The disarmament commission, created in 1997 during the negotiations that produced the Good Friday peace agreement, had achieved a disarmament plan with an IRA negotiator in August.

The Ulster Unionists have twice agreed to form administrations alongside Sinn Fein on condition that IRA disarmament followed.

Officials apologize to George Harrison for failing to treat schizophrenic man

LONDON (AP) — Health officials apologized Tuesday to former Beatle George Harrison and the schizophrenic man who stabbed him as a new report disclosed major lapses in the attacker's treatment before he broke into Harrison's home.

The sharply critical report said workers at the British hospitals and clinics that saw Michael Abram failed to properly assess and treat him. It criticized staff who discharged him from one hospital about a month before the attack, leaving him to walk home alone early in the morning, and said he should have been put in a treatment program 18 months earlier.

"We wish to make a full and formal apology to George Harrison and his family and to Michael Abram and his family for the failures in Mr. Abram's care and treatment prior to the appalling events of December 1999," said the statement by the St. Helens and Knowsley Health Authority and Hospitals National Health Service Trust.

"We wish to reassure the Harrison and Abram families that lessons have been learned," it added.

The report was commissioned by the St. Helens and Knowsley Health Authority, which oversees health services in an area northwest of London.

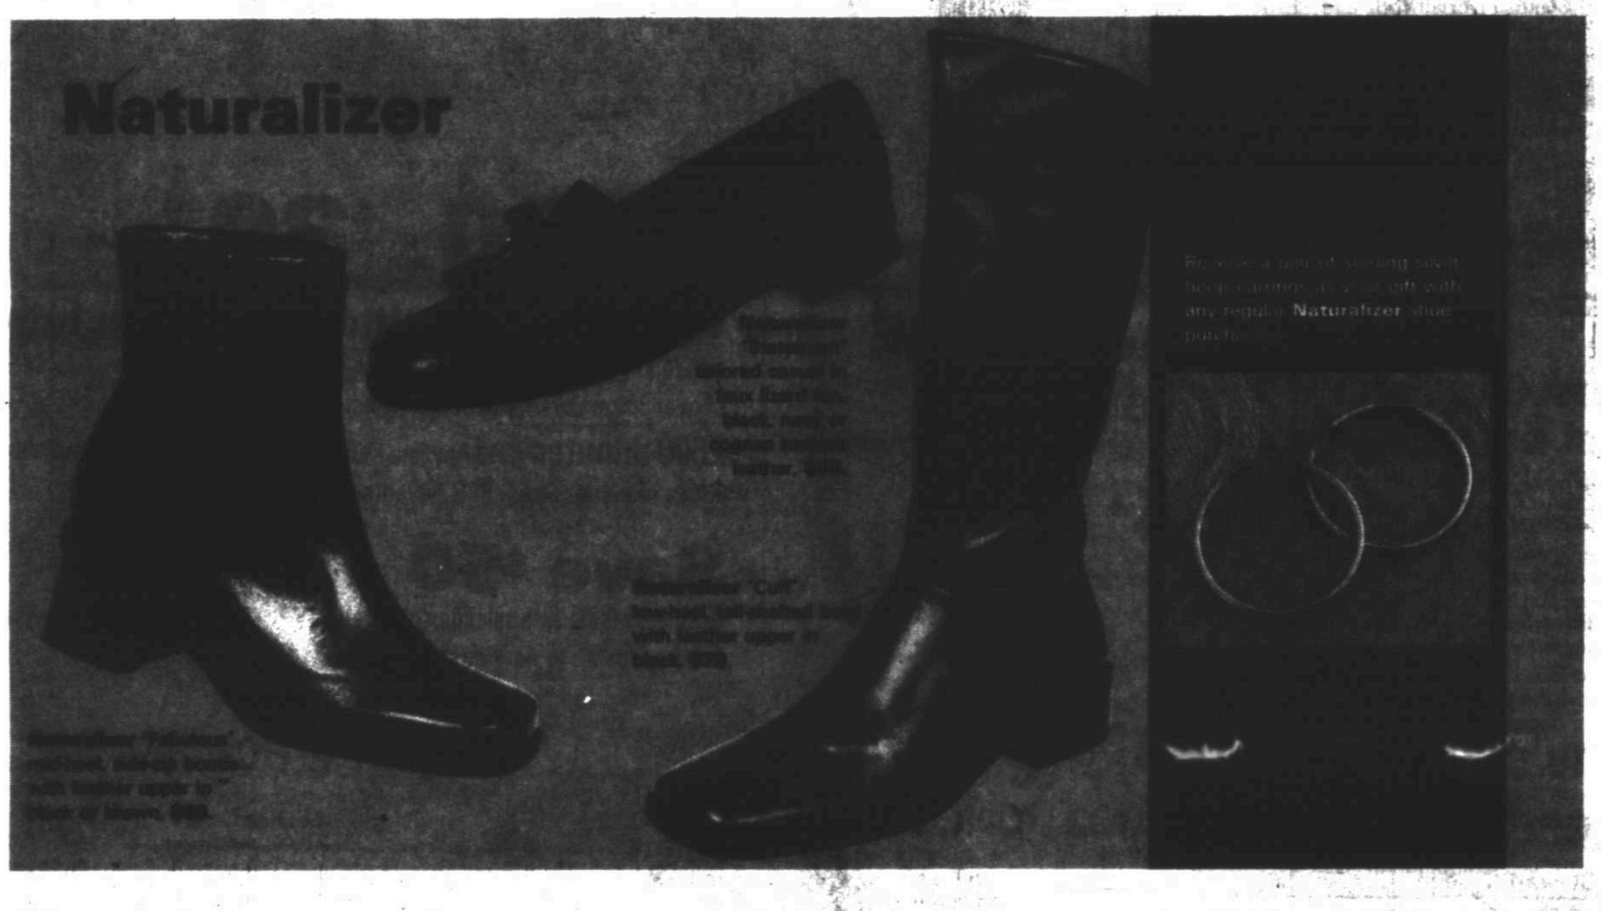

"There is no doubt, with hindsight, that there were shortcomings in the mental health services we provided," said Ken Sanderson, chief executive of the St. Helens and Knowsley Hospitals National Health Service Trust. "Michael Abram had complex mental health problems which we failed to comprehensively assess and manage."

Trustees to Bivins: Finance reform needed

By Hillary S. Condon
Staff Writer

The Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees expressed a need for serious school finance reform to Senate Education Committee Chair Teel Bivins Tuesday before its regularly-scheduled board meeting.

"If you aren't a fast-growing district ... it places us at a very distinct disadvantage," said MISD Superintendent Robert Nicks. "One of the things we'd like to do is continue to promote the concept that we need to be aware that school districts that are losing students or are holding their own are in trouble."

Bivins agreed, but said the issue of school finance is a complicated and hotly-contested one.

"We're about to embark on school finance," he said, but then added, "It is such a difficult, controversial, highly contested issue ... we're dealing with people's kids and their money."

During the brief meeting, the board mostly discussed several ways in which the school district could possibly increase its revenue. Bivins offered no immediate solutions, but promised to continue working with the board to alleviate some of the problems in the next legislative session.

After the meeting, the board held its regular board meeting, where it heard several reports on the status of various programs, including the Volunteers in Public Schools, which is celebrating its 25th year this fall, and CHAMPS, which will graduate a class this Thursday.

The board also decided to hear an action item at the next meeting about a controversial plan to change junior high school curricula to have physical education as an elective, instead of a mandatory class for both years. Junior high principals were on hand to tell the board how the mandatory physical education classes hindered some students' electives in ODESSA — At his second President's Day speech at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin Tuesday, State Sen. Teel Bivins stressed the need for all Texans to enjoy higher education — and higher wages as a result.

Standards climbing for criteria of Texas teacher certificates

By Hillary S. Condon
Staff Writer

As standardized tests for Texas students get more difficult, new teachers also must pass stricter requirements for certification. In the fall of 2002, just before Texas children will be taking the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills, their teachers will have to take a new and more strenuous form of their current exam program.

Teacher certification programs in the Permian Basin are bracing for the change, which they say won't be easy.

"We've actually started making the transition now, it started with the fall courses," said Peter Ienatsch, dean of the College of Education at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. "What we're going from is basically an elementary system that used to include (grades) one through eight, and a secondary system that currently is (grades) six through 12. In the new system, it's going to be early childhood education through fourth grade. Fourth through eighth will be considered middle school and (grades) eight through 12 will be secondary. So, what we've done is align our curriculum to meet those different levels and the TEKS (Texas Essential Knowledge and Skills) that goes along with them."

The changes, recently announced by the State Board for Educator Certification, will supplant the Examination for Certification of Educators in Texas.

Anne McCabe-Way, who coordinates the teacher certification program at the Region 18 Educational Service Center, said the changes are necessary as the requirements for students are changing, but it won't help Texas' teacher shortage problem.

"That has been their objective, to make (the requirements) more difficult," she said. "It's puzzling to us whenever

City's extra Homeland Security measures come at higher price

By Stewart Doreen
Staff Writer

A better protected Midland is in the works, but it will come at a higher price.

Following the Sept. 11 attacks on America, every city has been forced to look internally and upgrade its security. The city of Midland is no different.

At the briefing session Tuesday before the regularly scheduled City Council session, city representatives were updated on the state's Homeland Security.

Local emergency management officials described what is being done in Midland and the Permian Basin to ensure safety. The departments of health, utilities, police and fire all were included.

"Our community and emergency management coordinator, as well as all the entities involved in emergency management, are required to do everything they can to make sure we are as ready as we can be and be prepared as much as we can be for any situation that might confront us," Midland Mayor Mike Canon said.

Two items that came up during the briefing session were a city-wide emergency warning system and the additional overtime being racked up by Midland Police Department officials following heightened security requirements at Midland International Airport.

Morgan

Tuesday, it was announced a city-wide emergency warning system could be in place by next spring.

It is expected the warning system will include strategically placed sirens throughout the city. They are expected to offer warning in case of a disaster or terroristic situation.

The expected cost of the system could approach $400,000 to $250,000 of that total was budgeted last year in Council-approved certificates of obligation.

"You have to look at that," said District 1 representative LuAnn Morgan. "The whole focus of city government is to ensure quality of life and safety for the community. That is part of the job. Right now, we are one of the few cities which doesn't have a system in place."

It also was stated Tuesday that the overtime collected by MPD officers could reach and possibly sur-

MC to announce new aviation partnership

By Hillary S. Condon

Midland College will make another stride in its new pilot training program today, as it announces a new partnership with Mesa Airlines. The agreement will put the program's graduates in line for jobs upon graduation.

In addition to the partnership with Mesa, Durango Aerospace, Midland College's partner in the program, is expected to announce the program's new chief flight instructor, Al Galante.

Galante has logged more than 4,100 hours of flying time and 900 combat hours as a U.S. Air Force command pilot, and as a civilian certified flight instructor for multi-engine, single-engine and instrument ratings. He holds a Master of Science in international relations from Troy State University, and a Bachelor of Arts in history from Manhattan College.

"I am tremendously excited about the opportunities here in Midland College," Galante said. "We have great year-round flying weather, a welcoming community and the best possible partners in Midland College and Mesa Air Group."

According to Mesa Airlines, 98 percent of students who successfully complete the Mesa Pilot Development program are hired by Mesa Air Group as first officers.

'We have great year-round flying weather, a welcoming community ... .'

— Al Galante, program's new chief flight instructor

"Mesa has been a pioneer in 'ab initio' pilot training, and they have top standards," said Durango Vice President of Operations for Pilot Training Phil Handley. "We look forward to a long and mutually beneficial working relationship."

Mesa Air Group is the fourth largest regional airline in the United States and currently operates 116 aircraft with 832 daily system departures to 153 cities, 38 states, Canada and Mexico.

The program is slated to begin training the first students in January, and the program lasts for 20 months. Graduates of the program will be awarded an associate's degree in Applied Science — Profession Pilot, as well as an instrument multi-engine rating.

The announcement will be made at 10:30 a.m. today at Midland College's Aviation Maintenance Hangar at Midland International Airport.

Volunteers play key role in assisting rape victims

By Kasey Kelly
MRT Correspondent

"A violent act of domination and humiliation in which the victim is without power or free will." That is the definition of rape, according to the Texas Association Against Sexual Assault.

But in reality, rape cannot be defined by simple words. The experience of sexual assault is different for every victim and has different meanings for each person.

"We don't know precisely how each person will react, but we (rape crisis counselors) have found most victims feel violated," said Christina Hammon, education director of the Midland Rape Crisis and Children's Advocacy Center (MRCCAC).

Following such an experience, it is natural to feel frightened and powerless, humiliated, degraded, fearful and depressed.

Dawn Coleman, a volunteer at MRCCAC, said every client's experience is different, so it is necessary to take a different approach with each client.

"For me, it's all about being strong," she said. "Sometimes people can use that extra strength."

Many victims may have believed they were going to be killed, leaving them feeling vulnerable, and out of control.

Isolation is a normal response, but according to experts it is an unhealthy response that must be overcome.

'There is something about being face-to-face with someone who is hurting. You can see their expressions and see what they are thinking. It makes it easier to help them.'

— Dawn Coleman, MRCCAC volunteer

"The sooner that a victim gets therapy the sooner they can become a survivor," said Beverly Brock, volunteer administrator of MRCCAC. "We have victims that were assaulted as children and have led lifetimes of alcohol or relationship problems not realizing that their problems were a side effect of the earlier assault," Ms. Brock said.

Getting back to "normal" can take a long time, but one step to recovery is talking about the experience.

Sexual assault crisis centers, such as MRCCAC, provide 24-hour support, counseling, information and referrals for sexual assault survivors as well as for their family and friends. Trained secondary education."

Bivins soon will be the state senator for all of Midland and Odessa if the recent Senate redistricting plan is approved. The results of the United States Census that played a major role in the redistricting plan also showed the population of Texas is getting younger, poorer and more diverse.

Bivins said he and the Senate Education Committee, of which he is the chair, has developed several post-secondary education incentives in response to this need. He cited the TEXAS grant program, which offers a "free ride" — tuition, room and board and books — to any student with financial need and completion of the recommended state program. Bivins said that particular program will not only help push more students toward college by removing the financial obstacles, but will help encourage more students to take the recommended high school curriculum.

Another program offers a joint degree from any Texas institution of higher learning, and combines it with a free ride through medical school. This way, Bivins said, Texas medical students are more likely to stay in the state and become Texas physicians.

"If you look at a map of Texas, you'd be surprised to see the number of counties identified by the Texas Department of Health as medically underserved," he said.

UTPB President David Watts said Bivins's help is much appreciated, especially for the programs that will be of the greatest benefit to rural West Texans.

"This is his third session to serve as chairman of the Senate Education Committee ... and he will soon represent all of Midland and all of Odessa," Watts said. "Needless to say, it is a position of great importance for this university."

other areas.

"If we can have more flexible choices for our students, if we were to work with those kids who are not being successful with the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills, and later with the Texas Assessment of Knowledge and Skills, ... we need that flexibility," said Larry Winget, principal of San Jacinto Junior High.

Assistant Superintendent of Secondary Education Ricardo Torres agreed.

"Abell (Junior High), right now, has a math pilot program that is giving kids a double dose of math, and I know that (Principal Ronnie Elmore) is looking at a similar program for writing," he said. "Under this program, the kids could opt to stay in P.E. or not."

MISD Director of Athletics Davis Corley, who also is a former junior high school physical education teacher, said the program could hurt athletics.

"We're concerned that this program would pull kids away from athletics," Corley said. "I think there are some benefits, but there are also some concerns."

The board also approved a special projects Technology Infrastructure Fund grant, which would provide $41,000 to 16 different MISD schools, providing for new servers, computers and training. Nicks said the grant, one of many new grants announced this fall, is a welcome addition.

"We're having a banner year in attracting grant money," he said. "Every dollar that comes from grants, generally ... is a dollar we don't have to raise locally."

TEACHER: New manner could make teacher placement harder

(From 1B)

SBEC talks about recruiting and retaining teachers, and then they make it more difficult for them to become certified. It's also making it more difficult for programs like ours and for universities who have teacher preparation programs, to certify people."

Midland Independent School District Assistant Superintendent for Human Resource Services Tom Holland agreed. He said the new manner in which the certification is structured will make it harder for districts to place teachers.

"They're making it more difficult to transcend those classes," he said. "What we had was an elementary certificate that was kindergarten through sixth grade, and it meant that we had maximum flexibility in terms of assigning people. What's going to happen now is that we're going to have less flexibility, and that is occurring at a time when we have a major teacher shortage, which makes the job of staffing each year that much more difficult."

pass $50,000 a month. After the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, Midland has been forced to add additional police presence at the airport. Currently, there are an additional 15 officers.

One hope is that the federal government may pass legislation which offers financial support to cities bulking up their security at airports.

"Things have changed overnight, and the overall expense of security becomes a high priority," Ms. Morgan said.

ROLE: Phone volunteer base dwindling

(From 1B)

counselors and advocates are available to help survivors of rape and battery deal with their feelings, make decisions about medical and legal matters and obtain needed follow-up care.

Without the support of volunteers the center could not offer 24-hour-support.

"Our volunteers are incredible," said Ms. Brock. "They all come from different backgrounds and ways of life, but they all offer unique qualities to this program."

Some volunteers do it to make a difference, some do it because they've been there themselves, but one thing is for sure, they all do it because they care.

"There is something about being face-to-face with someone who is hurting," said Ms. Coleman. "You can see their expressions and see what they are thinking. It makes it easier to help them."

But just as there is no strict definition of rape, there also is no end for the need of volunteers.

Midland has had approximately 270 reported sexual assaults this year and MRCCAC has seen more than 500 clients.

"Without the tremendous support of our volunteers the work we've done this year would not have been possible," said Ms. Brock.

But the center could use an additional 20 volunteers to help answer phone calls during off hours and serve as patient advocates.

All volunteers must complete a specialized training and pass a criminal history check. To volunteer, contact Beverly Brock at 682-7273 for additional information.

Fort Worth mayor discourages Halloween trick-or-treating

By Angela K. Brown
Associated Press

FORT WORTH — The mayor is discouraging trick-or-treating this Halloween, citing safety concerns following last month's terrorist attacks and subsequent anthrax cases.

Instead of knocking on doors in search of treats, children should attend parties at friends' homes, community centers or churches, Fort Worth Mayor Kenneth Barr said Tuesday.

"I'm not suggesting we shouldn't celebrate the holiday and enjoy it; ... just use discretion," he said. "And any terrorist-type pranks ... may very well be prosecuted."

There are no credible threats for any Oct. 31 terrorist attacks in the state, said Lori Bailey, spokeswoman in the Dallas FBI office.

But several communities, responding to residents' fears, are putting more focus on alternatives to door-to-door candy solicitation.

Gilmer, a town of about 5,400 people some 30 miles northwest of Longview, started Treats on the Square last year to promote downtown businesses and encourage residents to get to know police officers.

Organizers expect a larger crowd at Saturday's event, saying parents are worried about anthrax-laced candy or other poisoning and prefer treats from merchants and law enforcement.

"You want to think it would never happen here, but you don't want to let your guard down," said Tracy Oller, a Gilmer Police Department employee who initiated the event.

Rusty Black, Waco's parks and recreation director, said he expects a bigger turnout at city sponsored Halloween carnivals this year due to heightened concerns of the potential for terrorism.

Cindy Malcolm of Fort Worth said she may take her children, ages 8 and 10, to a relative's Halloween party.

"I always check their candy, but this year, with all the terrorist incidents, I wouldn't be surprised if somebody tried to do something," Malcolm said.

Gov. Rick Perry, speaking Tuesday in Lubbock, said the state has been working with the national Homeland Security Agency. He said he would use caution during holiday activities with his teen-age son and daughter.

"There's some bad people out there in the world," Perry said. "I stress people to be calm, but I also stress that we be cautious."

If children decide to go trick-or-treating, police say, their costumes should be reflective or bright and masks should not obstruct sight.

Fort Worth police, who will be out in extra numbers Oct. 31, say children should avoid shortcuts through alleys, should carry flashlights and be home by 9 p.m.

Officials in Dallas, Houston and other cities also are reminding parents to accompany young children and only visit familiar neighborhoods.

Children should not eat candy until returning home and parents have inspected it, making sure treats are in original wrappers, officials said.

Many precautions started after a 1974 tragedy in Houston, one of the nation's most horrifying Halloween poisoning cases.

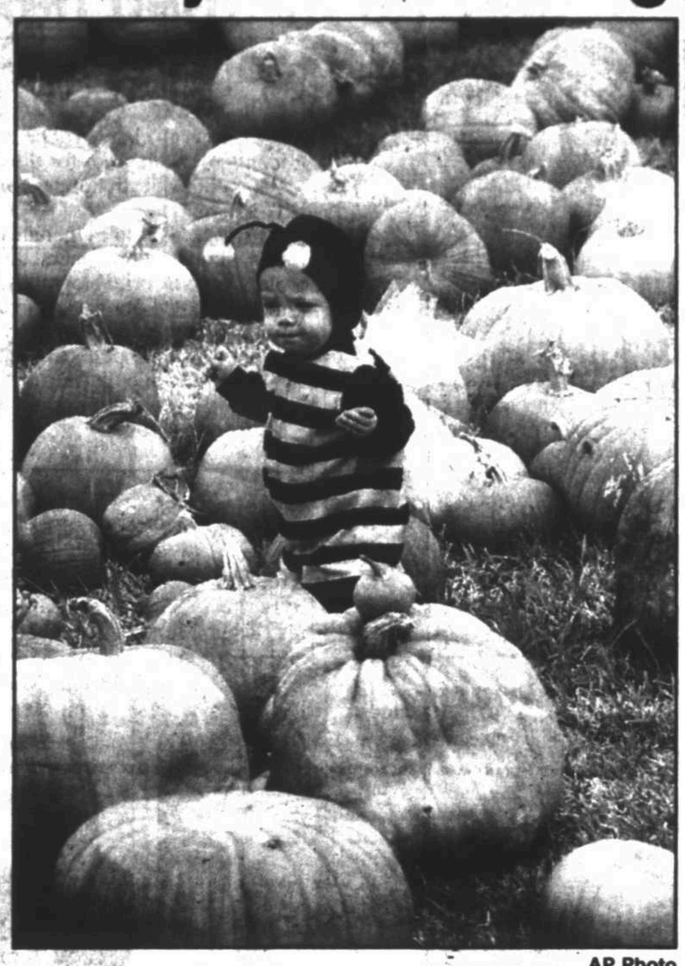

Ronald Clark O'Bryan, an optician, laced five Giant Pixy Stix with cyanide and distributed them to his two children and three young neighbors. Only his 8-year-old son, Timothy, ingested the poison and died shortly afterward.

O'Bryan, who committed the crime for his son's $20,000 life insurance policy, was executed in 1984.

Timothy's poisoning dampened Halloween nationwide for years, though officials in the Houston area say parents might have become complacent again before this year.

"Obviously, what happened on Sept. 11 probably has changed things," said Pasadena police Sgt. J.M. Baird.

Two children die after long border bridge wait in truck

EL PASO (AP) — Two lower Rio Grande Valley children waiting with their parents for almost two hours to cross a border bridge from Mexico have died from carbon monoxide poisoning, law officers say.

Erika Valenzuela and her brother, Daniel, were rushed Sunday night to Del Sol Medical Center where they were pronounced dead. They had been riding inside a camper as their parents returned across the Zaragoza Bridge after visiting a sick grandmother in Juarez, Mexico.

The children's deaths appeared to be accidental due to rust on the pickup bed that let exhaust fumes into the camper, said police.

"We never imagined this could happen to us," the children's father, Francisco Valenzuela, told the El Paso Times for Tuesday's editions. "We're heartbroken."

Law officers did not know whether Erika, 13, and 6-year-old Daniel stopped breathing at the bridge. Their mother, Laura Valenzuela, said they were waved through the inspection booth by an inspector who didn't try to wake the children up.

"There is some discretion on the part of the inspector as long as he is satisfied that they are admissible" into the United States, said Leticia Zamarripa, a spokeswoman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Border crossing delays have worsened since the Sept. 11 terrorists' attacks on the East Coast, but it was unknown whether they played any role in the children's deaths.

A third child, 7-year-old Denise, had been riding in the front seat of the truck and was unharmed.

The victims, as in previous visits to Juarez, had fallen asleep inside the camper in the bed of the family's 1980 Ford F-150 pickup with the back door open.

After an hour and 45 minutes on the bridge, the Valenzuelas pulled into their driveway.

"They tried to wake up the two children, but they couldn't," said Assistant Fire Chief Mike Widtfeldt.

Early signs of poisoning include headaches and drowsiness. Vehicle exhausts are sources for the odorless and tasteless gas.

Officials seek arrest warrant in death of boy

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Mathis police and Texas Rangers are seeking an arrest warrant in the death of a 3-month-old boy after an autopsy showed the boy likely was suffocated while he slept.

Dr. Lloyd White, Nueces County medical examiner, said the death of Isaiah Garcia had to be considered a homicide.

"If someone were to ask me can I determine by autopsy findings alone that it was not an accident, I'd have to say no, but this is probable because the baby has probably more than a dozen fractures, not consistent with accidental injury," White said in a story in Wednesday's Corpus Christi Caller-Times. "We have to construe it as a homicide. Everything adds up."

The recent autopsy report showed no recent signs of trauma, but a dozen fractures were mending. The fractures were on the infant's ribs, shins, arms and skull, the medical examiner's office said.

The boy was found lying on a pillow and not breathing on Sept. 24.

Texas Ranger Oscar Rivera said Rangers are working the case as a criminal matter unless instructed to do otherwise by the San Patricio County District Attorney's office.

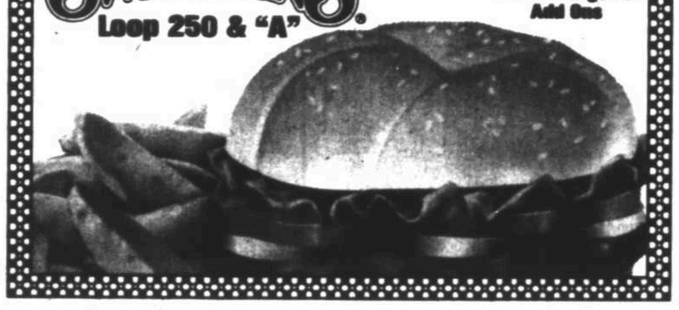

"It still has to be determined if this is a murder case," he said. "It's important to have all the facts in front of you because when you charge someone with a crime, you should have all the facts ready to go to court with."

"We can't let something like this go away," Rivera said. "The only line of defense this baby has is us."

Authorities wouldn't name the suspect or suspects in the case.

"There have been no citations given or arrest warrants, but it is just a matter of time now," said police Lt. Rene Flores.

Black, Franken perform for troops at staging post for war on terrorism

RAMSTEIN AIR BASE, Germany — Country singer Clint Black and comedian Al Franken performed for U.S. troops at this staging post for the war on terrorism, kicking off a tour also taking them to bases in Italy and the Balkans.

About 2,800 people, Air Force personnel and their families, crowded into a hangar draped with a huge U.S. flag for a bill that included other country stars on Monday.

"They came to volunteer their time to honor you and your efforts," organizer Janet Cohen, the wife of former U.S. Defense Secretary William Cohen, told the cheering audience.

The hub for U.S. air operations in Europe, Ramstein Air Base serves as the base for food drops to Afghan civilians alongside the U.S.-led strikes after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on New York and Washington.

Some 40,000 military personnel and their families live and work at Ramstein and the nearby U.S. military hospital in Landstuhl in rural western Germany. American soldiers injured or killed abroad often pass through.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Johnny Cash has been released from the hospital after two weeks of treatment for bronchitis.

Cash checked out on Monday, hospital spokeswoman Jessica Etz said. He was admitted on Oct. 7.

The 69-year-old country singer suffers from autonomic neuropathy, a disease of the nervous system that makes him susceptible to pneumonia. He's been hospitalized with it four times since 1998.

A six-time winner of Country Music Association awards, Cash was elected to the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1980 and inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1992. His hits include "A Boy Named Sue," "I Walk the Line" and "Folsom Prison Blues."

NEW YORK — Before she was the co-host of "E! News Daily," Jules Asner was a model, starting at the same agency with Cindy Crawford and living with her briefly.

"Every agency has these one-bedroom apartments with two sets of bunk beds where they put the girls up, and Cindy and I shared a bunk bed," Asner told Maxim magazine for its November issue.

But being roommates for a little while apparently didn't mean as much to Crawford, Asner said.

"I've been at events with her, like this golf tournament in Switzerland, and I'll bring it up, but she'll just be, like, "Oh ... yeah,"' the 33-year-old said.

"What sticks in my head is that the agency wanted me to spy on what the other girls were eating. They thought that since I was the new girl, I would tell them if Cindy and the other girls were bingeing on Croissan'wiches."

LOS ANGELES — Mariah Carey didn't exactly get glittering reviews for her first foray into acting, but she's trying it again with a guest appearance on "Ally McBeal."

Carey will play the key figure in a lawsuit involving a matchmaking service. She'll also perform "Lead the Way," a song from the soundtrack to her movie "Glitter," in which she made her acting debut and got universally panned.

She's expected to shoot her scenes this week. The episode, in which Jon Bon Jovi makes his debut in a recurring role as a potential love interest for Ally, is scheduled to air Jan. 7 on Fox.

PASADENA, Calif. — James Marsden jokes that he and Josh Hopkins prepared for their new roles on "Ally McBeal" by taking singing and dancing classes.

"A lot of people say, 'Why didn't you go to some law practices to really learn the legal jargon?"' he told reporters recently. "And we're like, 'Well, forget that. What we're going to do most on the show is sing and dance. So we ... really kind of sharpened our dancing skills and singing so we're ready for the show."

Marsden's kidding about the lessons, but added, "I've been known to croon every now and then."

The 28-year-old actor said he's looking forward to working with David E. Kelley.

"The fun of the show is that he's such a freak of nature and I don't know how he writes all these scripts and where he gets most of his ideas," Marsden said. "But I couldn't come up with these ideas if I tried. So it's more of a ride for me. I just kind of sit back and enjoy the ride and see where he wants to take me."

The new season of "Ally McBeal" starts Oct. 29 on Fox.

SPENCERVILLE, Ohio — Neal McCoy says there's nothing better than helping fans in their time of need.

After learning that an Oct. 17 fire had destroyed nearly everything Peggy Yaney owned — including her tickets to his show — the country singer gave tickets to Yaney and eight family members.

"It's not something I have to do, it's something I get to do," McCoy said. "I think it's neat that I can brighten a person's life, whether it's with a phone call, tickets or whatever."

The show will be held Nov. 1 at Veteran's Memorial Civic Center in Lima.

"My family can sit out front," Yaney said. "I'm going to be backstage with Neal."

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, Oct. 27, 2001:

You often spend a lot of energy on domestic or personal matters. Real estate could be a source of interest, so consider investments in this area. You could gain financially, but you will also need to spend a substantial amount on property. Travel, education and foreigners bring you unusual benefits, encouraging transformation and growth. If you are single, you'll meet someone special who could set your heart on fire. If you are attached, your relationship will warm up even more if you allow your feelings to flow. PISCES is always affectionate with you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★ A friend could become demanding without even meaning to. What is going on here? You try to make adjustments and change your plans. You just might be happier staying close to home, doing your own thing. Tonight: You don't have to do anything.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★★★ Aim for more of what you want. A boss will make unusual demands. One-on-one relating helps someone understand you. You might be more uptight than you realize. Make calls and reach out for others. Someone lets you know how much you are cared for. Tonight: Celebrate the weekend.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★ Understand what is happening with a difficult associate. Seeking out answers and asking questions could be upsetting to this person, so back off. At some point, you two will be able to converse. Watch a tendency to go to excess. Just know what you are doing. Tonight: Work as late as possible.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★ Continue your quest to find out important information. Return calls or hop on the Internet. You'll discover that others have a different perspective. Reorganize a project or stall a decision for now. You might not be ready. Others will understand. Tonight: Let your mind and body leave the workplace.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★ In the next few weeks, others will let you know what they like and what they will accept. You also might want to buy a muzzle for a partner! Stay calm and work with key people. Your intuition helps a friend open up in a positive way. Use your charm. Tonight: Dinner for two.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★ Others push and shove to have it their way, especially at work. Meetings add to the moment. Pressure builds with a boss. Emphasize calls and let go of personality issues. You'll gain financially and professionally. Count on a friend. Tonight: Go along with another's plans.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ Though you know you have a lot of ground to cover, you feel good about what you need to do. You know how to court another's favor, especially a boss's. Information and plans might be slow in forming. Add patience to the quotient. Tonight: Try a stress-buster.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★★ Your lightness might disturb an associate or partner. Your devil-may-care attitude could get you into trouble with a sweetie. Try to walk a more conservative path — at least during the day. Tonight: Kick up your heels.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★ Deal with someone astutely and directly. You might not be sure how to deal with someone who tends to go to excess. Another could be down on you. A friend encourages you to let this person call the shots. Don't push him. Tonight: Fun with your sweetie.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★★ A boss lets you see how important you are. Accept his praise. Know that if you keep it up, more will follow. Others indulge you as never before. Worry less about your work. Not every day has to follow a schedule. Tonight: Invite others out.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★ Work with others. Consider yourself part of the team. Give up any need to be eccentric. Trust that your real self will appeal to others. Mars goes into your sign today, adding to your get-up-and-go. A loved one tests your limits. Tonight: Indulge someone.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★ Your personality and magnetism help you navigate past a difficult associate or friend. Your family would like you to spend more time with them. When your playful, loving side emerges, few can say no to you. Pay attention to others. Tonight: Smile away.

Germans arrest Turk trying to board plane

By Geir Moulson
Associated Press

BERLIN — A Turkish man trying to board a flight to Iran was arrested after authorities found a holy war CD-ROM and a protective suit against biological and chemical weapons in his bag, German prosecutors said Tuesday.

Harun Aydin, 29, was arrested at Frankfurt airport on Oct. 17 after his luggage, which also contained a face mask and equipment to make a detonator, was searched before he boarded a plane to Tehran. His lawyer said the bag and the equipment did not belong to Aydin.

The federal prosecutor's office said it was investigating Aydin on suspicion he planned "serious acts of violence as a member of a terrorist group with an Islamic fundamentalist background."

Spokeswoman Frauke Scheuten said that "so far, no connection is discernible" between Aydin and the investigation of a Hamburg terrorist cell that included three of the suicide hijackers involved in the Sept. 11 attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

At a joint news conference in Washington with visiting German Interior Minister Otto Schily, Attorney General John Ashcroft said Hamburg served "as a central base of operations" for the hijackers and three other men sought in connection with the terror attacks.

The three fugitives, Said Bahaji, Ramsi Binalshibh and Zakariya Essabar, are sought by Germany on an international arrest warrant for their involvement in planning the attacks.

"Their connections to the hijackers are extensive," said Ashcroft. The three hijackers — Mohamed Atta and Marwan Al-Shehhi, who were on the hijacked planes that crashed into the World Trade Center, and Ziad Jarrah, suspected of flying the plane that crashed in Pennsylvania — were roommates in Hamburg where they attended school in the 1990s, Ashcroft said. Binalshibh and Atta started a Muslim prayer group there while Essabar went to Florida in February when both Atta and al-Shehhi were known to be there.

Essabar, Jarrah and al-Shehhi all appeared in a Bahaji's wedding video, Ashcroft said.

Meanwhile, in Berlin, Scheuten announced the arrest of another person in southern Germany on espionage charges. She described the suspect as a person of Arab descent but gave no further details.

Aydin was described by prosecutors as a leading member of a militant Turkish group headed by his brother-in-law, Muhammed Metin Kaplan.

Turkish authorities suspect Kaplan was behind a thwarted plot to crash a plane, laden with bombs, into the mausoleum of Turkey's founder, Mustafa Kemal Ataturk, during the country's 75th anniversary celebrations on Oct. 29, 1998.

Kaplan is serving a four-year German jail term for incitement to kill a rival. The organization has long been under observation and listed as an extremist group by Germany's domestic security agency.

Aydin was a co-defendant in Kaplan's trial last year in Duesseldorf where he was acquitted for lack of evidence.

Prosecutors said the CD-ROM found in Aydin's luggage contained "detailed instructions" for fighting an Islamic holy war. The federal prosecutor's office said he is suspected of issuing instructions to carrying out crimes "such as murder and manslaughter."

Aydin's lawyer, Michael Murat Sertzos, said his client opposes violence against innocent people and that Aydin was traveling to Tehran in preparation for a book fair.

"He had no intention whatever of dying a martyr's death," Sertzos said.

In London, anti-terrorist officers arrested a 38-year-old man Tuesday. Police did not identify the suspect but said the arrest was not directly linked to the Sept. 11 attacks.

The British news agency identified him as Yasser el-Sirri, an Egyptian dissident who runs the Islamic Observation Center, which acts as a public relations contact for Islamic fundamentalist groups.

U.S. authorities have arrested or detained over 900 people in connection with the Sept. 11 attacks, but so far no one has been charged directly with plotting or participating in the attacks.

A Saudi man who apparently holds a student pilot's license was arrested in Missouri on a bank fraud charge for cashing allegedly forged checks worth $10,000. The FBI has not tied Adel F. Badri to last month's attacks.

In New Jersey a man detained following the attacks has been charged with lying to an FBI agent about checks he wrote and deposited into his bank account.

Mohammad Pervez lived with two other detainees, Mohammed Jaweed Azmath and Ayub Ali Khan. Investigators have taken particular interest in those two men since they were detained in Fort Worth the day after the attacks, carrying hair dye, about $5,000 in cash and box-cutting knives.

Pervez was accused of lying when he said he didn't know about certain checks and money orders that moved in and out of his bank account, according to an Oct. 16 complaint filed in U.S. District Court in New York City by the FBI.

Authorities in Palmi, Italy, announced Tuesday that Egyptian-born Rigk Amid Farid, who holds a Canadian passport, was arrested on international terrorism charges after being found inside a ship container.

U.S. forces blast Taliban, al-Qaida targets, but Taliban holds ground

By Steven Gutkin
Associated Press

BAGRAM, Afghanistan — U.S. jets struck Taliban front lines and an Osama bin Laden stronghold north of Kabul on Tuesday — attacks the opposition hopes will open the way for an advance on Kabul. But Taliban troops held their ground, launching rockets and mortars toward positions held by the Northern Alliance.

After sundown, American jets also returned to Kabul, repeatedly blasting targets on the outskirts of the city in what appeared to be one of the largest attacks in the capital area.

War planes apparently renewed the attack shortly before sunrise Wednesday as sounds of heavy bombardment were heard near Kabul's airport.

Opposition and Taliban officials also reported U.S. attacks Tuesday around the key northern city Mazar-e-Sharif, where an offensive last week by the opposition Northern Alliance faltered. The Taliban claimed they repulsed opposition attacks that followed the American bombardment.

American warplanes set fire to critical Taliban oil supplies in the Taliban headquarters in the southern city of Kandahar — said to be all but abandoned by its half million inhabitants after weeks of attacks.

In other developments:

■ The Pentagon said two U.S. helicopters came under fire in Pakistan as their crews tried to retrieve the wreckage of another helicopter that had crashed during a covert weekend commando raid.

■ Three U.S. bombs went astray over the weekend, with two landing in a civilian neighborhood near Kabul and the other near a senior citizens' center in Herat, the Pentagon said. The military said it had no information on casualties. The United Nations said a U.S. bomb struck a military hospital in the western Afghan city of Herat but said it had no information regarding casualties. Taliban rulers said more than 100 patients and medical workers were killed Monday.

Pentagon spokeswoman Victoria Clarke said a U.S. bomb went astray near a senior citizens' home in Herat, landing in a field between the home and a military vehicle storage facility. The 1,000-pound bomb was dropped Sunday by an F/A-18. She said it was not know if the so-called senior citizens' center was the same building referred to in the U.N. report.

■ Britain will send troops and equipment to join the U.S.-led military effort against Afghanistan, though just how much has not been decided.

■ Italy offered the United States an armor regiment, attack helicopters, fighter jets and specialists in nuclear, chemical and bacteriological warfare for the coalition against terrorism.

■ BBC-TV reported Tuesday that a U.S. bomb hit a house in Kabul Monday night that was used by the Kashimiri militant group Harakat ul-Mujahedeen. Citing sources inside the organization, the BBC said the bomb killed 22 members of the group linked to Osama bin Laden's al-Qaida terrorist ring.

President Bush initiated the air campaign Oct. 7 after the Taliban repeatedly refused to surrender bin Laden, chief suspect in last month's terror attacks in the United States.

British Secretary of Defense Geoff Hoon said Tuesday that the military strikes on Afghanistan have destroyed nine of bin Laden's terrorist training camps and severely damaged nine airfields and 24 military garrisons.

In recent days, U.S. forces increasingly have shifted the brunt of their attacks to Taliban positions on front lines outside Kabul and Mazar-e-Sharif, hoping to break Taliban defenses around the key cities.

On Tuesday, U.S. jets streaked in high over the front line at Kabul, then swooped in to drop their bombs while as villagers gawked and pointed.

"There it is," residents of the opposition-held community cried each time a white speck appeared in the sky. Nine blasts sounded, one after the other. Witnesses said at least five of those strikes hit the Taliban front line.

"God willing, these bombs will let us move into Kabul," declared one opposition fighter, Saeed Rafik.

Some of the bombs struck the village of Uzbashi, an al-Qaida encampment near Bagram, opposition spokesman Waisuddin Salik said. Arab fighters of bin Laden's network are believed to make up the core of Taliban forces at the front north of the capital.

The bombing, however, seemed only to make the Taliban forces more aggressive. As U.S. jets thundered overhead, Taliban gunners opened up with mortars, rockets and artillery on alliance lines.

One Taliban rocket slammed into the public market at Charikar, 30 miles north of Kabul, killing two people — including a 60-year-old vegetable vendor — and injuring 14 others.

"We want the war to be finished, and an end to the rockets of the Taliban," said Mohammad Nabi, whose son was lightly injured. "Let America bomb them."

Opposition commanders said the Taliban had reinforced their positions and moved them closer to alliance lines in hopes of making it more difficult for U.S. pilots to tell which are the right targets. On Monday, one bomb fell behind alliance lines but there were no reports of casualties.

In the nearby village of Qalai Dasht, Taliban and Northern Alliance fighters face off against one another from roofs of mud huts barely 50 yards apart.

Gen. Baba Jan, the alliance commander of the Bagram brigade, said more airstrikes and "more coordination" with the Americans were needed to dislodge the Taliban and their al-Qaida allies.

Pakistan, a key Muslim ally in the anti-terror campaign, has opposed allowing the alliance to seize Kabul, fearing that the Tajik and Uzbek-dominated movement will not be accepted by the Pashtun majority.

The alliance is made up of factions which fought against each other when they controlled Kabul. The city was largely destroyed and an estimated 50,000 people were killed before the Taliban captured the capital in 1996.

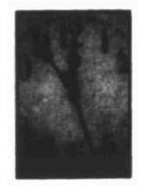

Along the front near Mazar-e-Sharif, a senior opposition commander, Ata Mohammed, said the alliance was massing troops for a major assault on the city, which the Taliban seized in 1998.

Speaking to reporters in Tashkent, Uzbekistan, by satellite telephone, he said a small number of Americans were in the area to coordinate airstrikes.

"We are expecting American airstrikes to back up the attack," he said.

Dallas cuts problem defensive starters Hambrick, Larrimore

By Stephen Hawkins
AP Sports Writer

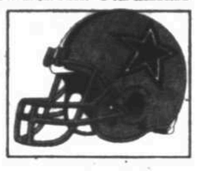

IRVING — Dallas Cowboys linebacker Darren Hambrick and cornerback Kareem Larrimore, starters known as much for off-the-field problems as their play, were released Tuesday.

"This is just the way we wanted to go here," Cowboys owner Jerry Jones said. "There are a variety of things that would come into consideration, not one incident or one thing. It could be cumulative."

Jones refused to elaborate, saying only that Hambrick and Larrimore didn't fit into the "future of where we wanted to go as a football team."

Three weeks ago, the Cowboys released third-year receiver and kick returner Wane McGarity.

Dallas (1-4) plays the Arizona Cardinals at home Sunday after having last weekend off. The Cowboys, who won three Super Bowls in the mid-1990s, are off to their worst start since losing their first eight games in 1989, when they went 1-15 the first year Jones owned the team.

The cuts came after the NFL's trading deadline passed Tuesday. Coach Dave Campo said the Cowboys waited until then to see if there were any other teams interested in the two players.

"Sometimes you make a decision based on the timing of whether or not you can get a trade for somebody," Campo said. "That's part of it. You also make decisions based on cumulative, effective things. Sometimes things just wear out."

Hambrick hasn't caused any problems since the season started, but was vocally upset during the offseason when the Cowboys offered him a minimum contract of $512,000. The fourth-year player reluctantly signed the one-year deal after he got no offers from other teams.

The linebacker last summer missed two of three minicamps, one before he signed the contract and another after that. That

Cowboys facing shortage of healthy wide receivers

By Stephen Hawkins
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — Anthony Wright is still the Dallas Cowboys starting quarterback. But he doesn't know who he will be throwing to Sunday.

Even after having last weekend off, the top four receivers are still bothered by nagging injuries.

Coach Dave Campo said Tuesday that Raghib Ismail (sprained knee) and Darrin Chiaverini (left knee), who both practiced Monday without any additional problems, are probable for the game against the Arizona Cardinals. Joey Galloway (sprained left foot) and Reggie Swinton (right hamstring) are questionable.

Ismail and Chiaverini were the only two receivers left on the field at the end of the last Cowboys game, a 9-7 win over Washington on Oct. 15.

Swinton strained his hamstring during warmups before the Washington game. He fielded the opening kickoff, but then left the game.

Galloway was hurt in the first quarter against the Redskins, when he got tangled with Fred Smoot on a play where the rookie defensive back intercepted a pass.

ESPN series leaves A&M disappointed

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

COLLEGE STATION — ESPN's reality television program "Sidelines" has been too real for Texas A&M officials and a bit of a disappointment to some of the players.

Texas A&M officials gave the cable sports network total access to its football facilities for a 13-episode series dealing with the lives of those involved with the school's football program. But three weeks into the program that airs on Thursday nights, A&M officials have complained about several scenes depicted, including one at a College Station bar.

"We've been led to believe there will be some changes," coach R.C. Slocum said Tuesday. "I would say there needs to be changes. If it continues like this, there's going to be a point that me and my team would not be associated with it.

"It hasn't reached that point yet but I could close the door on it today if I wanted to."

Texas A&M president Ray Bowen last week expressed concerns about the programs' content. On Tuesday, he referred comment to athletic director Wally Groff.

"We'll continue on the basis on the promises they've given that we get back on track," Groff said. "We shook hands on the direction the show was going to take from the start.

"It was supposed to center on Aggie football, not just the X's and O's, but all the characters."

Mark Shapiro, ESPN's general manager for programming, said the network had not promised changes in its approach, only to be sensitive the university's concerns.

Much of the controversy has centered around the second show, which featured two unnamed and apparently intoxicated females at a bar and another segment about a former A&M athlete and her relationship with a female A&M basketball player. Slocum found it difficult to connect bar scenes with his football team.

"They showed several segments where I had a hard time finding it even entertaining and more importantly how it related to the Texas A&M football team," Slocum said.

"We have expressed our concerns. There are a bunch of wonderful stories. I thought that would be the emphasis, stories about players' lives off the field, families coming to games and going out to dinner afterward."

Linebacker Brian Gamble said he was surprised by the content of the series.

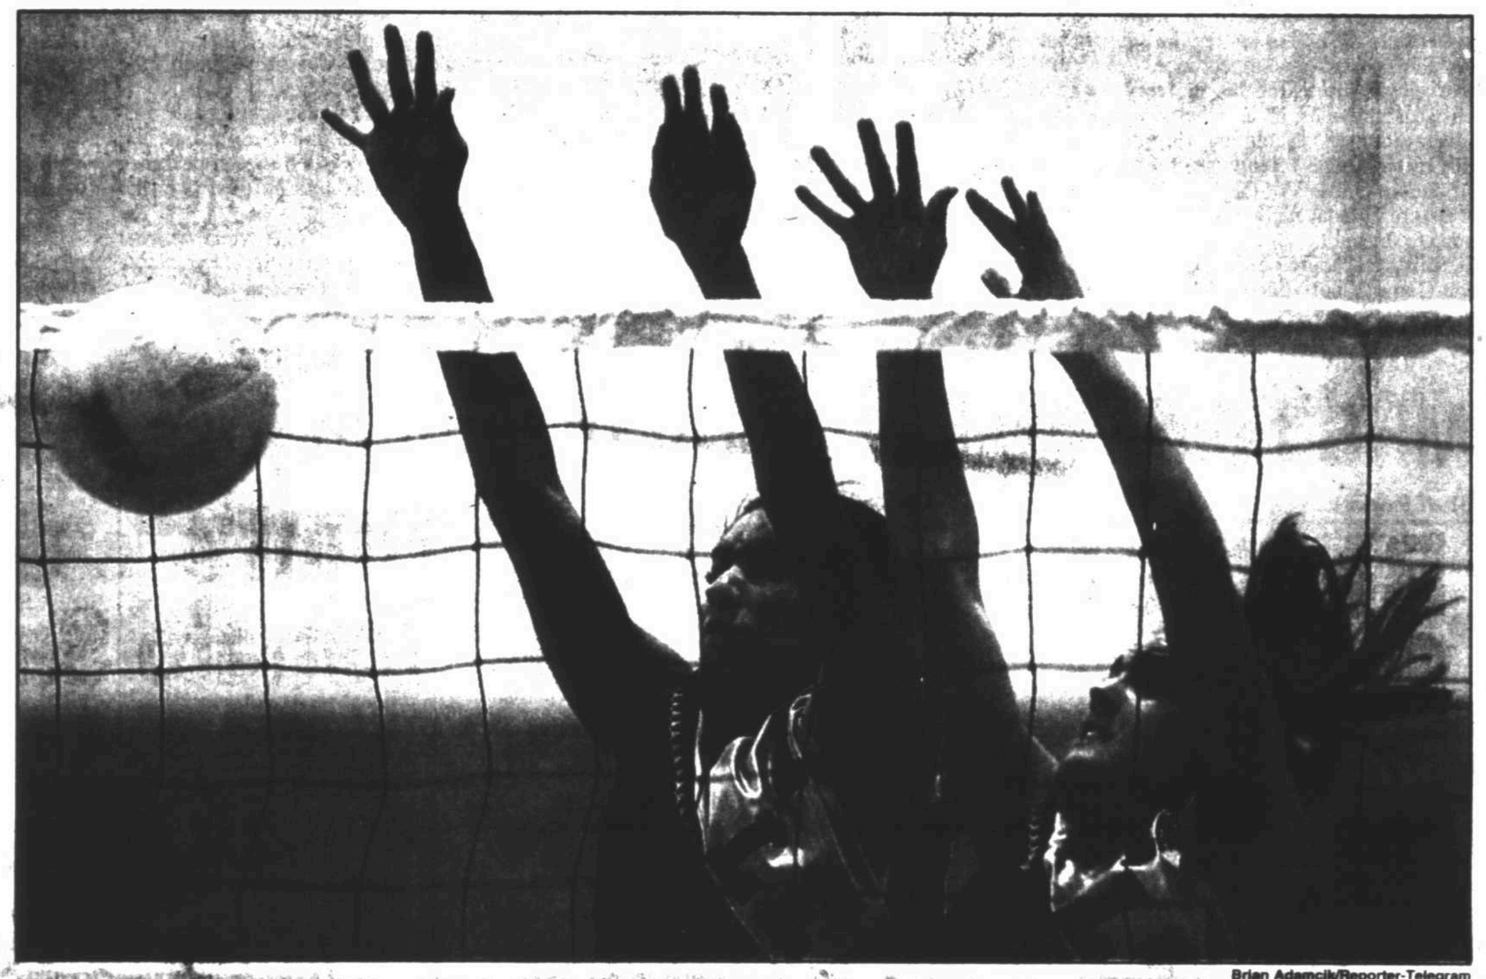

"It's not exactly what we expected," Gamble said. "You can go out in College Station every night and see stuff like that. People aren't interested in seeing that."

Gamble said he would keep watching the programs because they involved his school. Slocum said some of the programming was good, particularly a segment about linebacker Christian Rodriguez.

Aggies quarterback Mark Farris, a 26-year-old former minor league baseball player, was featured in the first episode. Farris had no objection to what was shown about his family.

"I can see both sides," Farris said. "There are parts of college life they have shown that are a part of every college. Anybody that's been around a college age person knows that.

"I think it's too early to tell. Some people want to see more football, some want less football. In the end, if we stay with it that long, we'll be able to see what kind of show it is."

The Midland Lee volleyball team gained a measure of satisfaction at the end of a trying season with a 15-9, 15-12 victory Tuesday night over Abilene Cooper.

The Lady Rebels finished the season with a respectable 18-15 overall record but a disappointing 4-8 mark in District 4-5A. They tied for fifth place.

"I think we needed (this win) for our self-esteem," said Casey Dolan, one of eight seniors on the Lee roster. "To boost it up, we needed a win."

"We kind of got in a slump," said Natalie Taylor, another senior, of the season. "But going out with a win is great for us. Everybody is happy, including the parents and the coaches."

As a bonus, the Lady Rebels' win stalled Cooper's drive towards the state playoffs. Since San Angelo Central defeated Odessa Permian, 15-9, 15-4, on Tuesday, Central and Cooper tied for third place at 6-6 and will have to play off for the third spot. Cooper could have skipped that hassle with a win.

Cooper had early leads in both games on Tuesday. In the first game, Cooper was up 3-0, but Lee scored 11 unanswered points over the next nine rotations. Lee eventually went up 14-6, but Cooper survived game-point five times while scoring three more points before finally succumbing on consecutive kills by Taylor and Wykia Wallace.

Wallace and Taylor, both seniors, led the Lady Rebels with 12 and nine kills, respectively. For Cooper, Laura Cramer had a match-high 14 kills, and Danielle Rosales had nine kills.

Cooper led 4-0 in the second game, and the Lady Cougars looked like they were going to force a third game when they went up 8-4. But

Knight wants Tech to always maintain focus

By Betsy Blaney
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK — The most important word in Bob Knight's coaching vocabulary is concentration.

Maintaining it helps players cut down on mistakes, even ones as fleeting and seemingly undetectable to most fans as a player setting a slightly incorrect angle on a screen, the Texas Tech coach said Tuesday.

"What we're trying to do is say that there's a hell of a difference between doing it almost right and doing it right," Knight said. "The outcome of games, I think, are far more a result of mistakes than they are the result of great plays."

Knight's comments came during a news conference for area media at United Spirit Arena. He seemed relaxed and at ease, eating doughnuts and sipping a soda as he fielded questions.

Occasionally, Knight recounted stories from his coaching years at Indiana and Army, using certain players and circumstances to highlight what he sees as challenges ahead for his Tech players.

Though he declined to discuss individual players "until we play," Knight praised what is going on during the team's practices.

"At this point, what I've been pleased with is effort," he said. "I think the players have given us a really good effort. I think that they have really tried to concentrate on what we want done."

Knight said an important part of practices is evaluating players' talents and skills and tweaking what has been ingrained for years.

"They have some habits of play, some good, some bad," Knight said. "Probably more bad than good. Now, we've got to change those habits."

No easy task.

"Getting them to quit doing something else and doing what we want done is the challenge and

Dr. Destiny looks for some 4-5A heads to roll this week

TW: "Hello, high school football fans. Today we are at the District 4-5A Elimination Jail, which is run by the evil Dr. Destiny.

"Hi, Doc. It's good to see you again. Surely you remember me since we talk every year about this time. Would you please explain to our readers what the function of the Elimination Jail is?"

Williamson

Doc: "Well, we like to get our fingers on those football pretenders and get them out of the way. We clear the garbage, so to speak."

TW: "What kind of year have you had so far?"

Doc: "It's frustrating at this time of year. We have some suspects in 4-5A that we almost have in our grasp, but right now, the jail is empty and that's not good for business. We're trying every week to fill this place up, but again, no one is in the house right now."

TW: "Are you close to getting some occupants?"

Doc: "Of course, I'm an expert on destiny. No one ever wants to give in to me. They like to say things like, "We control our own destiny.' But I get them eventually. It's an elimination game. Never could get those Midland Lee Rebels the last three years, but I'll get them too some day.

TW: "Well, why is your job so hard if you come out on top most of the time?"

Doc: "First, teams always think they can escape Dr. Destiny. But I have time on my side. Second, that darn UIL has helped ruin my business. Now, they have almost as many contenders as pretenders out there. In this district three of the six teams make the state playoffs. I fondly remember the years when this place was occupied after a team lost two games. Last year, we had Abilene High make the playoffs with a losing record in 4-5A play. That's really bad for us because you rarely know until late in the season who is going to fill this place up. Make no mistake, we're going to fill this place up, but we just don't know when. That's bad because I have a staff to pay."

TW: "Who do you think will become your first occupant?"

Doc: "We have a couple of teams on the ropes. Odessa Permian and Odessa High both have two losses. We think that if either one of them lose on Friday, they're toast and will reside here. Both teams, however, 'control their own destiny' as of today. I hate that term."

TW: "Anyone you've given up on?"

Doc: "Abilene Cooper and Abilene High both are at 2-0. If both win this week, they're in the playoffs. I just don't see anything happening to change that. But I'll get them both before the state finals.

"Like I said, I've had problems getting Lee lately. They haven't been in this jail for so long that they won't know where to get clean sheets when they check in. But I was smiling after Friday night. The Rebels had seven turnovers. I was loving it. Just don't be surprised if you see those guys in here before regular season is over. We never give up. We're going after them.

"In fact, last week you said in your column that Lee would need to bring its 'A' game to beat Cooper. Well, the 'B' or 'C' game probably would have done the trick. But seven turnovers, that's a thing of beauty in our business.

"Midland High has been our best customer. They've been in here before regular season ends since 1951. That's 50 years. They once went 9-1 and we greased a coin and got them in here anyway. Like I said, we'll get them all sooner or later.

"Our worst nightmare would be for MHS to down Cooper this week. It'll keep this place under full occupancy for much longer. We hate that. In fact, Permian beating Lee this week doesn't do much for us either, except for the fact that we would really like to get Lee in here. But we're loving Permian now. I can remember when old Mojo was hard to get in here, but they know where the sheets are now."

TW: "Doc, you're evil. You know that. We hate the fact that you are so popular. Everyone in West Texas waits for your axe to fall. We just can't figure out why they keep selling you season tickets."

D-Backs put Anderson back in rotation

By Bob Baum
AP Sports Writer

PHOENIX — Arizona manager Bob Brenly, known for playing hunches and going against the book, is at it again as he prepares to lead the Diamondbacks into the World Series.

Following the team's workout Tuesday night, Brenly told left-hander Brian Anderson that he will start Game 3 next Tuesday night at Yankee Stadium.

"It's strange how things work," said Anderson, who lost his spot in the rotation in August, but twice pitched well out of the bullpen in the postseason.

The decision means right-hander Migeul Batista will go in Game 4, unless the Diamondbacks are in deep trouble and must bring Game 1 starter Curt Schilling back on three days' rest. Anderson recalled the ups and downs of his season.

"I'm in the rotation and a lot of things were expected, then I didn't perform up to my abilities and get taken out of the rotation." he said. "For a while I wondered if I'm even going to be a part of the postseason roster. Then all of a sudden the manager pulls you aside and says you're starting the first game in the Bronx in the World Series."

Anderson was 4-9 in the regular season with a 5.20 ERA. He was moved to the bullpen on Aug. 24 after going 0-3 in six starts.

Between the end of the regular season and his first postseason appearance, Anderson worked on shortening his delivery. In two postseason games, he allowed two runs and seven hits in 7 1/3 innings. He got the victory by working 3 1/3 innings of relief against Atlanta in Game 3 of the NLCS.

Before Tuesday night's workout, which was open to the public, Brenly committed only to Schilling starting Game 1 and Randy Johnson Game 2, but hinted Anderson might go in Game 3.

"The way the ballpark is configured obviously it behooves you to have a left-hander on the mound if at all possible," Brenly said. "After Game 1 and Game 2, there are some options there. We'll see where we are after two games."

The Diamondbacks were finally able to admit they wanted to play the Yankees all along.

"You never want to say anything before the fact, but this seems like the way it ought to be," Brenly said.

"Nationally, it certainly makes for a great story with everything the city of New York and the people of New York have gone through over the past six weeks. Of course, the storybook ending is that they win the World Series," he said, "but hopefully we can do something to prevent that from happening."

Diamondbacks owner Jerry Colangelo repeated his belief that the World Series, which begins Saturday night at Bank One Ballpark, will be "the biggest sports event in Arizona history, without a doubt."

He privately had been rooting for the Yankees to be the opponent in the franchise's first World Series appearance.

"It's the aura, it's the history," Colangelo said, "as you're building your own tradition and your own foundation. They're the defending champions, too. It's fitting. This is our first trip, and to play the Yankees I think is apropos."

Before the American League championship series was over, most of the Diamondbacks hedged when asked if they wanted to face New York or the Seattle Mariners.

"But deep down, every guy on this team wanted to play the Yankees," Luis Gonzalez said. "Why not play the best?"

Several thousand people attended the combination workout and pep rally at Bank One Ballpark, where rock music blared and Thom Brennaman served as master of ceremonies. On behalf of the team, Johnson presented NLCS most valuable player Craig Counsell with a Rolex watch.

When Colangelo was introduced, the crowd chanted "Jerry, Jerry."

The Diamondbacks have lost tens of millions of dollars in their first four seasons, and Colangelo said the World Series appearance would pay dividends, and not just over the next week or two.

"My experience in the NBA when we went to the finals, which we did twice, is you have a carry-over in terms of season ticket sales, marketing packages. People want to identify with a winning franchise," said Colangelo, who also owns the Phoenix Suns.

Knight questions how authentic film may be

LUBBOCK (AP) — Though no one has consulted Bob Knight about a movie about him, the Texas Tech basketball coach knows who he'd cast in the lead.

"Clark Gable," Knight said.

Beyond that, Knight isn't giving much thought to the made-for-television movie, "A Season On the Brink," scheduled for March 10 on ESPN.

Knight told the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal he questions how accurate the movie can be.

"It amazes me that they think they can do anything authentic without my help," Knight said Monday. "I haven't heard the first word from anybody about it at all."

Even if the movie's producer, Stanley Brooks, had contacted him, Knight said he would remain uninterested. The movie's director of development, Bill Sy, said Knight's input hasn't been needed or solicited because it's strictly based on a book, for which Brooks has paid the rights.

"I know what my life is all about," said Knight, who has denounced the book. "I don't need to do something with a movie."

The movie is based on the book by the same name written by John Feinstein. It chronicles the 1985-86 season of the Indiana Hoosiers the year before they won the national championship.

MHS takes Abilene High to limit in loss

Staff Report

ABILENE — The Abilene High volleyball survived a three-game match with Midland High to finish off the regular season with a perfect 12-0 record in District 4-5A.

Abilene High won 15-1, 9-15, 15-6 in a match that didn't mean as much, since the Lady Eagles had already clinched the district championship and Midland High had already clinched second place.

MHS coach Terri McColloch like how her team came back in the second game.

"They could have easily given up, but they didn't," McColloch said of her players. "They fought hard, and they played with a lot of heart.

"We did a lot of good things, but Abilene High is a good team," she said.

McColloch shook up her front line in an effort to stop AHS' strongest hitter, Kanesha Francis. It worked a little, but not enough for the win.

"Amber Zant played middle hitter, and Ashley Burns played the outside," McColloch said. "Zant did a good job, and Burns did a good job on the strong block against Kanesha Francis. She had a lot of hitting errors, but she also had a lot of kills.

"We did it for two reasons," McColloch said. "One reason was to put a bigger blocker on Francis, and we stopped her as well as you can stop her. The other reason is that Ashley's knee is hurting her pretty bad, and playing outside, there is not as much stress as playing middle."

While Abilene High gets a bye in the first round of the Class 5A playoffs, Midland High will play Lubbock Coronado (15-17) in bi-district. It is a rematch of last year's bi-district matchup, which Coronado won. The match is tentatively set for Tuesday in Seminole.

LEE: Lady Rebs win last of regular season

(From 1C)

Lee went on a 7-1 run over the next three rotations to take an 11-9 lead. Later, a three-point run by Cooper pulled the Lady Cougars within 13-12, but a service error stopped the run.

Lee scored two points immediately, ending the match on a stuff block by Wallace.

Serving was a real problem for Cooper, which committed a whopping 10 errors there, compared to three by Lee. The Lady Cougars were serving aggressively, but the three aces they got didn't make up for the service errors.

Cooper looked like a team that knew it was going to play again no matter what, and Lee looked like a team that wanted a win.

"The motivating factor was that it was their last ball game," Lee coach Connie Alexander said. "They knew it was the last time they were going to play, and they wanted to go out on a positive note."

Taylor said that the first meeting between the two — a 15-9, 15-12 win by Cooper on Sept. 29 in Abilene — left a bad taste in the Lady Rebels' mouths.

"They beat us the first time, but we knew we outplayed them," Taylor said. "This win is sweeter because they won the first one."

one of the more intriguing aspects of starting with a new team," Knight said. "We go from day to day and find out a little bit more about players and they go from day-to-day and, I think, find out a little bit more about what we want."

Fans will get a chance to see the Red Raiders squad in a scrimmage at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Tech arena. But don't expect to see any one group of five players stay on the floor for long.

Knight will be mixing it up to see where the team's chemistry hums.

"I'm sure we'll have some trial and error with these kids," he said.

He isn't at all concerned about preseason polls that rank his Tech team 10th in the Big 12, and he's telling his players to pay little attention to what others see and say.

Asked if he is excited about getting the team into action, Knight said "I'll be excited if we play well."

He characterized his overall outlook with hedged optimism.

"There's a very positive apprehension about how we're going to do," he said. "I mean, you're really looking forward to it and you're looking forward to taking these guys totally unacquainted with what you're doing and seeing them develop as a team. But then in the back of your mind you're saying 'I wonder if we'll beat anybody.' That, to me, is what coaching is all about."

CUTS: Jones says more changes ahead

(From 1C)

angered Campo, who demoted Hambrick to second-string for the first half of training camp behind rookie Markus Steele.

Larrimore, a second-year cornerback, was suspended for the Cowboys' final preseason game and the regular-season opener this season. The suspension and fine were because of a curfew violation while the team was in Mexico City to wrap up the preseason.

Before that, Larrimore had already been fined by the club at least 11 times — mainly for being late reporting to camp, practice or meetings.

Larrimore missed the beginning of training camp this year to be with his pregnant girlfriend in anticipation of labor. He called the coaches to tell them of the reason for his tardiness, but that call came too late.

Steele, who has played in every game with three tackles, will replace Hambrick in the starting lineup. Duane Hawthorne, a third-year player, or Pat Dennis, signed when McGarity was released, will take over for Larrimore.

"We are in a time where we need to be giving players the opportunity to play and not investing our time with players that don't fit with our picture around here," Jones said. "A couple of players will get more playing time. That is one part of our decision."

When McGarity was released, he was replaced on the field by rookie Reggie Swinton. That also allowed more playing time for Darrin Chiaverini.

Jones said McGarity didn't fit into the long-range plans for the Cowboys, and the owner indicated then that more changes were likely.

COWBOYS: Leaf working with first team

(From 1C)

"We're expecting some limited practice tomorrow, so I would say he is questionable from the standpoint that it will depend on how he improves the next two or three days," Campo said.

Campo wasn't as optimistic about Swinton, who won't practice Wednesday.

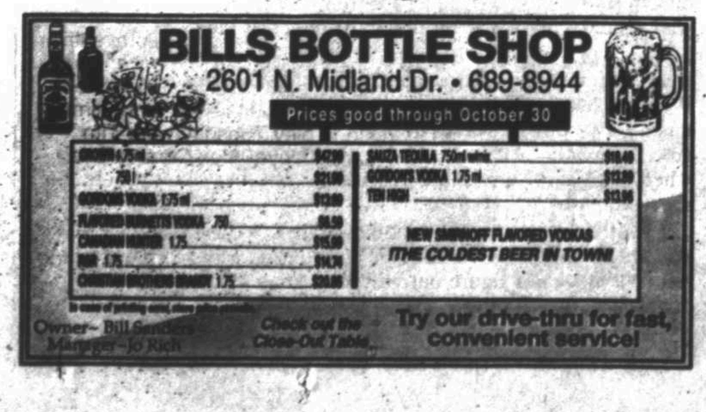

"He worked with the trainers on Monday and did some things, but he didn't do enough to say for sure he will be available," the coach said.

Swinton also became the Cowboys kick returner three weeks ago when the Cowboys waived Wane McGarity. If Swinton's not available, Ken-Yon Rambo will return kicks.

Like Galloway and Swinton, Wright didn't take part in the Cowboys' only two practices last week. But he practiced Monday and showed no ill effects from the swollen knee that kept him out.

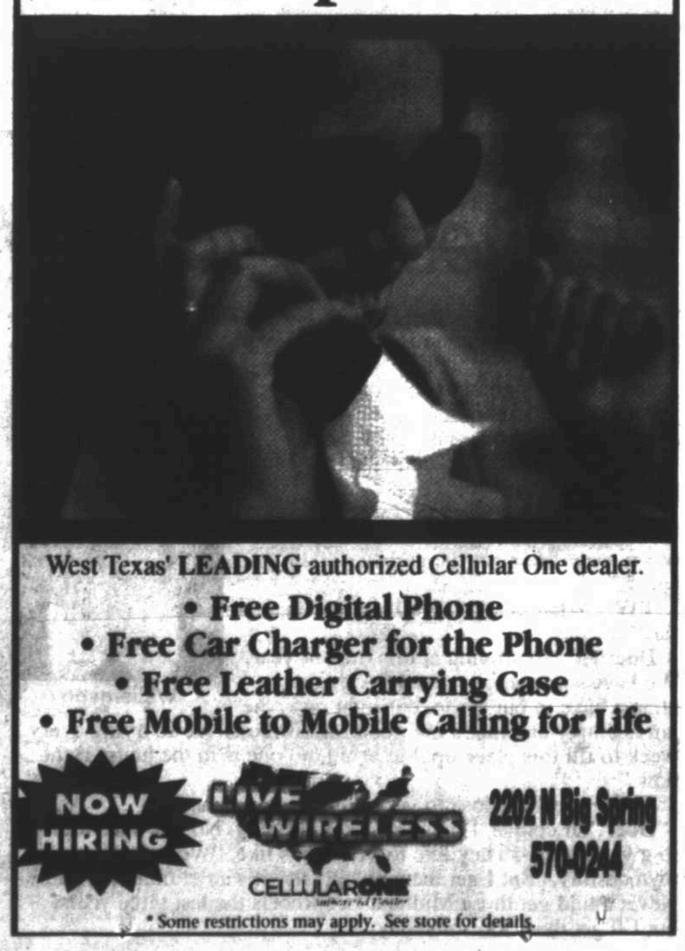

That allowed Ryan Leaf to work with the first team as the Cowboys accelerated his education of the offense. Leaf, the No. 2 overall pick in the 1998 draft, was cut by San Diego after three miserable seasons and then didn't make Tampa Bay's roster during training camp.

The Cowboys signed Leaf after rookie Quincy Carter tore his left hamstring at Oakland on Oct. 7. Leaf is still listed No. 3 behind Clint Stoerner, but he's getting extra work and likely will be the backup Sunday.

Bill would give billions to big firms

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — General Motors, IBM and Kmart are among corporations that would receive billions of dollars in tax refunds under a $100 billion House Republican economic stimulus package. Democrats say it is far too generous to companies and does too little for individuals.

Seven companies would get a total of $3.3 billion in refunds of alternative minimum taxes they paid as far back as 1986. The tax, which the House legislation also would repeal outright, is intended to ensure a basic minimum income tax is paid by companies and individuals that claim numerous deductions and credits.

IBM would get a $1.4 billion refund, according to the nonpartisan Congressional Research Service, while GM would get $832 million, Kmart $102 million and General Electric $671 million. Others specified for big refunds include energy giant Enron, at $254 million; U.S. Steel, $39 million; and grocery chain Kroger, $9 million.

In addition, the study found that Ford Motor Co. would get a refund that could total $2.3 billion, while Chevron's could reach $314 million.

Counting repeal of the tax, corporations would get more than $25 billion in tax relief from these minimum tax provisions in 2002 alone. In addition, the bill would make permanent a temporary tax break for financial services firms doing a lot of overseas business, providing them $21 billion in tax relief over 10 years.

The generous corporate tax breaks are among the most contentious items in the House GOP measure, scheduled for a floor vote Wednesday. Democrats say the measure is certain to change once it reaches the Senate; the Bush administration also has signaled that $100 billion is too costly.

"It's clear the House bill cannot pass the Senate as it is," said Sen. John Breaux, D-La.

For individuals, the House legislation includes a new round of tax rebate checks for workers who didn't get them this summer and a cut in the current 27 percent income tax rate to 25 percent in 2002, four years earlier than under the just-enacted tax cut. The measure also reduces capital gains rates from 20 percent to 18 percent for most taxpayers, enhances business equipment write-offs and allows companies to deduct current losses against taxes paid five years earlier.

The primary sponsor, Ways and Means Committee Chairman Bill Thomas, said in a newspaper opinion piece published Tuesday in USA Today that the legislation "is a shot of adrenaline" that will help restart the economy while not triggering inflation.

"Businesses generate jobs, and jobs are the core of a strong economy," wrote Thomas, R-Calif.

While bipartisan support backs some of the House items, Senate Democrats have been pushing for expanded unemployment benefits and help for workers who lose health insurance. Sen. Max Baucus, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, presented a $70 billion proposal Tuesday that would extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks, provide a 50 percent federal match for COBRA health insurance policies and allow more workers to qualify for Medicaid.

The legislation also includes rebate checks and some business items similar to the House bill but not the capital gains reduction or the alternative minimum tax relief. Tax cuts in the Baucus measure would total $35 billion in 2002, far below the House GOP level.

"This proposal appropriately responds to the sign of the times, helping this nation get back to work and recover quickly," said Baucus, D-Mont.

Other Democrats were working on spending programs. Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said he was putting together a $20 billion package that included hiring extra customs and border agents and food inspectors, augmented security at nuclear plants and purchase of more vaccines.

Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, said President Bush does not want the stimulus bill laden with additional spending.

"Everything in this package needs to be stimulative," Grassley said. "There needs to be more done on the investment side."

Stocks dip

NEW YORK — Caution crept back into Wall Street Tuesday as fears about terrorism resurfaced, but the nervousness wasn't enough to stop investors from trying to move the market higher. The major stock indexes fluctuated before ending the session with modest declines.

The market gave up early gains following a midday news conference by U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft, who reported that three German-based terrorists are being sought for planning the Sept. 11 terrorist assaults on the World Trade Center and Pentagon. Soon after, Washington, D.C., officials confirmed that the deaths of two postal workers were caused by inhalation anthrax.

The news reawakened Wall Street's concerns about national security and how the market will fare as the United States retaliates for the attacks.

But the market's performance wasn't surprising given the Dow Jones industrials' 172-point surge on Monday. While a number of companies on Tuesday reported satisfactory results, analysts said that wasn't enough to sustain a rally, especially given investors' fears about terrorism.

The Dow closed Tuesday's session down 36.95 at 9,340.08.

The broader market also finished lower. The Nasdaq composite index slipped 3.64 to 1,704.44, while the Standard & Poor's 500 index fell 5.12 to 1,084.78.

Crude skids

NEW YORK — Forecasts for a bearish weekly rise in U.S. petroleum inventories along with comments that producing countries wouldn't cut output before Nov. 14 combined to send the petroleum complex at the New York Mercantile Exchange skidding Tuesday.

Front-month December crude lost 41 cents to end at $21.85.

After markets closed Tuesday, new industry data showed an increase in the amount of national stocks of motor gasoline, crude oil and distillate fuels, which include diesel fuel and heating oil.

The president of the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries said Tuesday he expects the group to make a decision on oil output at its extraordinary ministers' meeting in Vienna, Austria Nov. 14.

November heating oil futures dropped .51 cent to close at 62.11 cents a gallon, while November gasoline fell .78 cent to end at 59.01 cents a gallon.

The wholesale price of natural gas fell 12.6 cents to $2.6801 per 1,000 cubic feet.

In London, Brent crude from the North Sea fell 11 cents to $20.94 per barrel.

Dollar rises

LONDON — The U.S. dollar rose against most other major currencies in European trading Tuesday.

The euro was quoted at 88.88 cents in late European trading, down from 89.15 cents Monday. Later, in midday trading in New York, the euro traded at 88.83 cents.

Other dollar rates in Europe, compared with late Monday, included 122.90 Japanese yen, up from 121.93; 1.6646 Swiss francs, up from 1.6579; and 1.5703 Canadian dollars, down from 1.5784.

Gold falls

Gold dealers in London closed at a price of $275.40 bid per troy ounce, down from $276.00 Monday. In Zurich the bid price was $275.88, up from $275.77. Gold fell $2.70 in Hong Kong to $275.55.

BLEEDING THE MYTH

Stakes couldn't be higher for new Dracula theme park

By William J. Cole
Associated Press

SIGHISOARA, Romania — Mist shrouds the Casa Vlad Dracul, where tourists sink their teeth into bloody chops drizzled with Dracula sauce — red and spicy — and wash it down with bottles of Vampire cabernet.

Over at the medieval main square, pallid-faced actors film a scene for "Dracula Resurrection," a new B movie. Down in the dungeon-like Dracula video arcade, teenagers zap virtual vampires while their elders belly up to the bar for a Bloody Mary.

Bleeding the Dracula myth for all it's worth is a way of life here in the Transylvanian birthplace of Vlad the Impaler, the cruel 15th-century count whose penchant for turning his enemies into human scarecrows was the inspiration for novelist Bram Stoker's legendary vampire.

But for the town of 38,000, the stakes are about to get much higher.

Next spring, construction is set to begin on Dracula Park, a $30 million dollar theme park that people here hope will bring cash and celebrity to a corner of Romania that seems frozen in time.

"This town is numb — it's a city asleep. Dracula will wake it up," said Emilia Butnariu, 76, who barely gets by on the $50 a month she earns selling paintings of Sighisoara's sagging fieldstone houses and alleys.

The Disneyesque project is to be built by a consortium of German companies led by Westernstadt Pullman City, which operates an American Wild West theme park in the German town of Passau. Sighisoara's mayor, Dorin Danesan, says the financial blueprint will be complete early in November and the first phase is to open sometime in 2003.

Although details are still being worked out, Danesan said the park will be open year-round and feature amusement rides, a golf course, a Gothic castle wired with spooky effects, a zoo, horseback riding, restaurants and shops, all encircled by a miniature train line.

There are even plans for an international center of vampirology.

"We don't want it to be a kitsch," he said. "But this government wants to do business. We're not afraid to exploit the Dracula myth to save a town that's a national monument."

Chocolate-dipped caramel apples keep Halloween sweet

By The Associated Press

There's something wholesome about apples. They manage to convey an aura of healthy goodness even when they're dripping with toffee and chocolate.

No excuses are needed for the chocolate-dipped caramel apples in Alice Medrich's new book, "A Year In Chocolate: Four Seasons of Unforgettable Desserts" (Warner Books). They are a fine treat to make for Halloween, or any time of year, to eat off the stick or cut into wedges to serve at the table.

Medrich, founder of the Cocolat chocolate shops and a food columnist, lives in Berkeley, Calif. Two of her previous books won James Beard awards for cookbook of the year.

Although chocolate is a year-round passion which she writes about and eats every day, her experience has taught her that "excess may be the stuff of chocolate fantasies, but restraint is sometimes the secret ingredient."

Bearing in mind that "too much of a good thing (yes, even chocolate) can overwhelm an otherwise splendid dessert," in certain recipes she'll call for the delicate use of what she calls just "a whisper," "a slick" or "a little burst" of chocolate.

The book groups recipes by the four seasons; the chocolate-dipped apples are a fall suggestion, putting a new twist on an old favorite.

Homemade vanilla caramel and really good chocolate raise the old-fashioned caramel apple to the status of a fine confection to be sliced into wedges and savored at the table, Medrich says.

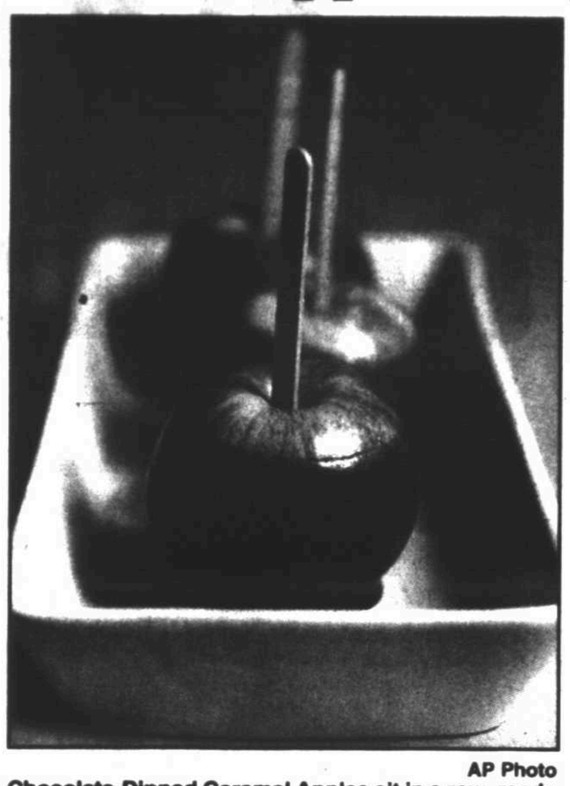

Other tips: "Choose crisp juicy new crop apples that are sensational to eat in the first place. In general, I like sweet but tart Braeburns and Fujis, and the freshest Jonathans, each in their own time.

"But the flavor and quality of apples change from week to week during the season so I often preview several varieties before choosing. I always sample the 'new' antique varieties revived by local farmers while I'm at it.

"There is no need to temper the chocolate for this recipe if you are willing to keep the apples in the refrigerator, which keeps them firm and fresh, anyhow."

Medrich points out that the apples make pretty and delicious gifts. "Make the full batch of caramel even if you want to dip only 8 apples. Leftover caramel keeps for ages. Simply reheat to dip more apples or dilute with cream to make caramel sauce."

The amount of caramel the recipe makes can coat up to 16 apples, Medrich says. The leftover caramel will keep in the refrigerator for at least 2 to 3 months.

Chocolate-Dipped Caramel Apples sit in a row, ready to eat off the stick, or cut into wedges and serve at the table. The apples are a sweet treat to make for Halloween or any time of the year.

In addition to the ingredients, to make this recipe you'll need a candy thermometer, a long-handled silicone rubber spatula or wooden spoon and 6 to 8 popsicle sticks.

CHOCOLATE-DIPPED CARAMEL APPLES

2 cups sugar
3/4 cups light corn syrup
1/4 cup honey
1/4 teaspoon salt
2 cups heavy cream
3 tablespoons unsalted butter, softened and cut into chunks
1 tablespoon plus one teaspoon vanilla extract
6 to 8 small to medium size cold apples
1 pound chocolate, coarsely chopped
5 to 6 ounces chopped toasted nuts, optional

Combine the sugar, corn syrup, honey and salt in a heavy bottom 3-quart saucepan. Cook over medium heat, stirring with a spatula or spoon until the mixture begins to simmer around the edges. Wash the sugar and syrup from the inside of the pot with a wet pastry brush or a wad of paper towel dipped in water. Cover and continue to cook for about 3 minutes. Rinse the spoon or spatula before using it again later. Uncover the pot and wash the sides once more.

Insert a candy thermometer without letting it touch the bottom of the pot. Cook, uncovered, without stirring until the mixture reaches 305 F, 5 to 10 minutes.

Meanwhile, bring the cream to a simmer and keep it hot until needed.

When the sugar mixture reaches 305 F, turn the heat off. Stir in the butter chunks. Gradually stir in the hot cream; it will bubble up and steam dramatically, so be careful. Turn the heat back on under the pot and adjust it so that the mixture boils energetically but not violently. Continue to cook, stirring occasionally until the temperature reaches 250 F, about 30 minutes. Remove the pot from the heat. Stir in the vanilla. Transfer the caramel to a smaller pot or heatproof bowl deep enough to dip the apples. Cool for 10 minutes.

Impale each apple on a stick. Holding the stick, dip an apple into the caramel, allowing the excess to flow back into the pot. Set the apple on a sheet of wax paper. Repeat to coat each apple.

If the caramel gets too cool it will slide entirely off of the apple! If necessary, reheat gently (without simmering), then continue to dip. Let the dipped apples set until caramel is cool and firm, at least 30 minutes, or refrigerate them.

Melt the chocolate in the top of a double boiler over barely simmering water, stirring frequently until almost entirely melted. Remove from the heat and stir until completely melted and warm, not hot. Dip each apple into the chocolate, allowing excess chocolate to flow back into the bowl. Sprinkle with nuts if desired. Set the dipped apples on tray lined with wax paper. Refrigerate to set the chocolate, keep the apples fresh and crisp, and keep the chocolate from discoloring.

The apples can eaten off the sticks or sliced into wedges to serve at table.

Makes 6 to 8 apples.

Strawberry bread pudding glows with fall color, flavor

By The Associated Press

This version of bread pudding combines fresh red fruit with caramel sauce, matching the season in color as well as taste. The combination is a nice way to use fruit for a warm dessert for cooler days, hinting at the hues of autumn leaves.

And let's be practical: It's a great way to use up your day-old bread (or even leftover breakfast pastries).

So go ahead, slather on the whipped cream if you want to indulge.

STRAWBERRY BREAD PUDDING WITH CARAMEL SAUCE

(Preparation 20 minutes, cooking time 55 minutes)

Nonstick cooking spray
4 cups (about 8 ounces) stale egg or white bread cubes (1-inch)
2 1/2 cups (about 12 ounces) coarsely chopped stemmed strawberries
2 cups half-and-half
4 large eggs lightly beaten
1/2 cup sugar
1 tablespoon vanilla extract
1/8 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup prepared caramel or butterscotch sauce, warmed (or alternative chocolate sauce, recipe follows)
Sweetened whipped cream (optional, see note)
Whole strawberries (optional)

Heat oven to 375 F. Lightly coat 9-inch-square baking pan with cooking spray; set aside.

In large bowl, combine bread and strawberries, tossing to combine. Arrange in baking pan; set aside. In medium bowl, whisk together half-and-half, eggs, sugar, vanilla and salt until well-blended; pour over bread mixture. Let stand 10 minutes, pushing bread down into egg mixture occasionally. Bake 50 to 55 minutes or until top is golden brown and knife inserted into center comes out clean.

Serve warm with caramel sauce; garnish with whipped cream and whole strawberries, if desired.

Makes 9 servings.

Nutrition information per serving: 287 cal., 10 g fat, 127 mg chol., 272 mg sodium, 43 g carbo., 2 g fiber, 7 g pro.

Note: To make 2 cups sweetened whipped cream, in mixer bowl beat together 1 cup whipping cream, 2 tablespoons sugar and 1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract (if desired), until soft peaks form.

DEAR ABBY

Toast to life helps widow look for good times ahead

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I know you occasionally print letters about "random acts of kindness." I'd like to share what happened to me in Albuquerque 10 years ago.

Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

I didn't know a soul in New Mexico. I needed to be totally alone to finally acknowledge and accept the fact my husband had died.

One evening, I was in a lovely restaurant. My server placed my order, then proceeded to prepare the corner table next to me. First came a large arrangement of fresh flowers, a champagne bucket, etc. Shortly thereafter, a couple was escorted to the table. The gentleman was a famous personality. I tried to be discreet about glancing their way and wished I'd brought a book to read. I was feeling melancholy. My first vacation without my husband was not a happy one.

Evidently my demeanor was interpreted as "unhappy lady." The server appeared and said, "The couple at the corner table would like to send a glass of champagne to your table. Will that be all right with you?" I glanced at the couple; they smiled. How could I not accept their thoughtful gesture? The glass was placed on my table. I caught their eye and lifted my glass to toast them on their special occasion. The gentleman leaned over and said, "It's not a special occasion, just a celebration of life — to the good times ahead."

Now, whenever I feel the blues coming on, I think of the "celebration of life and to the good times," and a very special couple. — MRS. Z ON LONG ISLAND

DEAR MRS. Z: Indeed. Generous, too. People who are happy are usually inclined to spread the joy around.

DEAR ABBY: I am 36 years old. My boyfriend, "Phillip," is 44. We have been dating exclusively for almost four years. I am ready to get married and start a family.

Phillip asked me to marry him one evening a year ago. He'd had a lot to drink. There was no mention about our picking out an engagement ring. The following morning, he changed his mind and said, "That's not how I planned on doing it."

A year has passed. He hasn't asked me again. He says we should purchase a house first. We haven't looked for one because he says he's expecting a huge raise soon. We don't need his raise to qualify for a mortgage. We make plenty of money.

Abby, I want to get this show on the road. I know Phillip loves me, as I love him. But I'm getting more discouraged with each passing month. What should I do? — RINGLESS IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR RINGLESS: Phillip may love you, but he still isn't ready to make a commitment. Have a serious and sober discussion with him and tell him exactly how you feel. You have nothing to lose by doing so.

You may discover that you and Phillip want different things from this relationship. His answers may not be what you want to hear, but four years is a long enough investment with no guarantees.

DEAR ABBY: I'm in the sixth grade. Many girls in my grade are into makeup, clothes and boys. I have just recently gotten interested in those things, too. But my friends haven't — they couldn't care less.

Abby, what should I do? I have never been popular, and I fear that if I lose my friends, I'll be alone. I feel too mature for them, but without them, I would be totally lost. — GROWING UP TOO FAST IN N.J.

DEAR GROWING UP TOO FAST: Be patient. Many of your friends will soon catch up with you. Those who never do will still be your friends. Make room for people who have different tastes and interests. It's called diversity. It's what makes this world an interesting — and inclusive — place.

Spice up dinner

Using flair from south of the border

One look at the family calendar with activities scribbled on top of activities and there's no doubt it's autumn again. From hectic school day schedules to soccer games on weekends and after-work activities, finding time to prepare a fast family meal that will win raves from your hungry gang is a challenge.

But busy cooks know how to put a little pizzazz in the menu. They reach for a bottle of zesty taco sauce and—almost before you can say Olé! — there's a tasty dish ready to eat.

It's no surprise that taco sauce should be such a favorite for jazzing up meals. More and more, we all are enjoying foods that are spicy and hot — a result of our enthusiasm for Mexican classics like enchiladas, fajitas and burritos.

An inspired cook discovered that a generous splash of taco sauce — a staple in Mexican kitchens — also deliciously spices up American favorites like casseroles, meatloaf, Sloppy Joes or even that most traditional classic, macaroni and cheese. Think comfort food with a touch of heat — seasoned to taste, of course.

Cooks seeking zesty Mexican-style flavor will find it in America's favorite taco sauce from Ortega, a sauce with a well-deserved reputation for great taste. Ortega blends seasonings and tomato purée to make a sauce that's thick and smooth. Its universal appeal and added flavor are just what busy families will enjoy in these everyday dishes with zesty south-of-the-border flair.

More twists using taco sauce

- Along with adding lively flavor to everyday favorites, a splash of taco sauce perks up tomato-based vegetable soups.
- Taco sauce added to bottled Russian salad dressing makes a zesty dressing for spinach and lettuce salads or a snappy vegetable dip.
- Rev up the heat by adding taco sauce to your favorite spaghetti sauce and serve over cooked pasta.

PGA Tour taking on international flavor

By Doug Ferguson
AP Golf Writer

One reason golf doesn't need the Olympics is because it already has a full plate of international competition.

It's called the PGA Tour.

The latest example was at Disney World, where Jose Coceres of Argentina won for the second time this year. He was among six international players from five countries who finished in the top 15 at the National Car Rental Classic.

Just 10 years ago, there were only a dozen foreign players from five countries who played the PGA Tour on a regular basis. That's why Davis Love III was hardly surprised when he spent Friday talking about Kaname Yokoo of Japan, the second-round leader at Disney, then spent the weekend watching Coceres close with rounds of 64-68 to beat him by one stroke.

"It's getting harder and harder to say that the U.S. is the dominant country," Love said. "We're getting the top percentage of players from every country coming to play our tour."

The foreign influence is even more obvious in women's golf. When Karrie Webb of Australia won the U.S. Open, she became the 14th international winner on the LPGA Tour in the first 16 events.

That won't happen on the PGA Tour any time soon, not with Tiger Woods, Phil Mickelson and David Duval approaching the prime of their careers. Ten of the top 12 players on the PGA Tour money list are Americans.

But one only has to consider the membership rolls to realize the PGA Tour is going global. In 1991, there were 11 foreign players who were fully exempt and two who qualified for the PGA Tour through qualifying school.

In 1996, 18 foreign players were fully exempt and four got their cards either through Q-school or by finishing in the top five on the Nike Tour money list. They represented eight countries.

When this season began, there were 32 foreign players who were exempt from having won or finishing in the top 125 on the money list. Sixteen others made it through Q-school or finishing in the top 15 on the Buy.com Tour. Those 48 players came from 18 countries.

"It says a heck of a lot about the wealth of talent outside the United States," said Michael Bodney, senior vice president of international affairs for the PGA Tour.

Some of them are well-trained and well-prepared. Robert Allenby, who has emerged as the top Australian with two victories each of the last two years, went through the Victorian Institute of Sport in Melbourne and had a swing coach, physical trainer, sports psychologist and nutritionist at his disposal.

Some of them are not.

Coceres learned to play by using rocks and tree limbs, equipment that doesn't exactly run afoul of the standards on springlike effect. He didn't own a set of clubs until he was 18. Coceres borrowed a set of clubs for a caddie tournament, then bought them with his first-place earnings.

"Anybody with money can have a teacher next to you and clubs," Coceres said. "But for us, we were a very humble family. We had to win the money so that we could have bread every day, so that we could survive. It wasn't an easy situation."

It wasn't any easier for Carlos Franco.

He received his first pair of golf shoes — used — for winning a caddie tournament in Paraguay at age 14, and a friend gave him his first full set of clubs when he was 18. Franco has three PGA Tour victories the last three years.

"These guys never had a stage on which to perform. They had to take their games outside of the country they live in," Bodney said. "It's pretty amazing to see how well they have risen up through the ranks."

A Japanese player had not won on tour since Isao Aoki in 1983, and only occasionally showed up in the marquee events. Already this year, Toru Taniguchi finished third in the Match Play Championship, Toshi Izawa tied for fourth in the Masters, Shingo Katayama tied for fourth in the PGA Championship and Shigeki Maruyama won the Greater Milwaukee Open.

Australia had 15 players on tour this year — nine with full exempt status, five through Q-school or the Buy.com Tour, and one with conditional status.

Not surprisingly, the top 30 players in the world ranking come from 16 counties. Only six of them are not PGA Tour members.

"The game is growing around the world," Bodney said. "These other tours are very competitive, and they have players who have a desire to get to what is considered the best level in the world."

More could be on the way.

The first stage of Q-school is under way. This year's group includes players from 12 countries, including Switzerland and India.

Nowitzki signs with Mavs for long haul

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — The Dallas Mavericks signed forward Dirk Nowitzki to a maximum contract extension worth roughly $90 million over six years.

Mavs owner Mark Cuban announced the deal, which had been all but done for weeks, to fans in an on-court speech prior to the Mavericks' 113-104 exhibition victory over the Orlando Magic on Tuesday night at the new America Airlines Center.

"It's a great thing," Nowitzki said after getting 14 points and six rebounds while playing through foul trouble. "I'm happy to get it out of the way before the season starts."

The victory gave the Mavericks a 5-3 record to finish the exhibition season.

The contract, which kicks in after this season, had been close to being finished for so long that the team put in its preseason media guide that it was completed Oct. 1. The primary holdup was a medical problem that prevented Nowitzki's agent from traveling to Dallas from Germany, where Nowitzki is a member of the national team.

Nowitzki said he was willing to give up becoming a free agent after this season because he's so happy with the Mavericks. In July, Michael Finley signed a seven-year deal, so the pair are slated to be teammates through 2007-08.

"I love it here in Dallas — the fans, the organization, everything," Nowitzki said. "There's no question I wanted to stay here. That's why I did it now."

Nowitzki is coming off a breakout season in which he led the Mavericks in scoring (21.8 points) and rebounding (9.2), while helping them win 53 games and reach the second round of the playoffs. It was Dallas' best season in 12 years.

Nowitzki showed his toughness by playing through a lost tooth in one playoff game and displayed his ability to take over a game by scoring 42 points and grabbing 18 rebounds in another. He led the team in scoring and rebounding again in the postseason.

The 7-foot, 245-pound forward is versatile enough to play anywhere from small forward to center. He, Finley and Steve Nash are billed as the team's Big Three because so much of the Mavericks' success hinges on them.

"Dirk started his NBA career as an unknown," coach-general manager Don Nelson said. "In the last three seasons, he has developed into one of the finest players in the NBA. This is a proud day for me and the Dallas Mavericks organization."
