U.S. voters' moods sour

Lawmakers feel heat of constituents' anger

■ After brief flurry of hope, optimism, voters once again have grown sullen, distrustful of Washington politicians.

By Dave Montgomery
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — On a recent trip to his home district in Fort Worth, Rep. Pete Geren made his traditional Saturday morning pilgrimage to the Paris Coffee Shop on Magnolia Avenue, but the visit was less than cheery. For every mouthful of scrambled eggs and grits, he got an earful of anger from disgruntled hometown constituents.

"People were really motivated to come over and give me a piece of their mind," the Democratic representative recalls. "If there was anybody defending what we were doing, they kept quiet."

Geren's soundings in his Metroplex district echo what lawmakers are hearing from the docks of New York to the beaches of California. Rep. Jake Pickle of Austin, a Lyndon Johnson protege who has been in office for 30 years, says he has never seen voters in a darker mood.

The anger is reminiscent of last year's "election of discontent" when voters booted out George Bush and replaced him with Bill Clinton. After the brief flurry of hope and optimism that accompanies every new presidency, the voters have once again grown sullen and distrustful of the politicians in Washington.

Clinton, as the nation's leader, obviously bears the brunt of the public's wrath. Six months after his Inauguration Day promise to end "deadlock and drift," he has repeatedly confronted setbacks and has yet to deliver

Richards kills Craddick bill, adds 4th court

■ 385th district court of Midland County is expected to relieve area casework.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Gov. Ann Richards completed reviewing the Legislature's work by vetoing several bills, including one — which had been introduced by State Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland — that would have prevented highway speeding tickets under 70 mph from being reported to the driver's insurance company.

Richards had until midnight Sunday to complete action on measures passed by lawmakers during the regular legislative session that ended May 31.

The Craddick bill would have prohibited the Texas Department of Public Safety from giving the names of speeders to other law-enforcement agencies or insurance companies unless the driver was exceeding 70 mph on a state or interstate highway.

In another matter, the governor did not veto the bill to add a fourth district court in Midland County, which in effect made it law.

"It became law at 12:01 a.m. Monday and will go into effect Jan. 1, 1995," said Midland County Commissioner Charles "Bro" Seltzer. "It will the 385th district court of Midland County."

The new district court is expected to relieve casework in the area. Since the creation of Midland County's last district court in 1977, the number of civil cases has risen 54 percent and the number of criminal cases has jumped 227

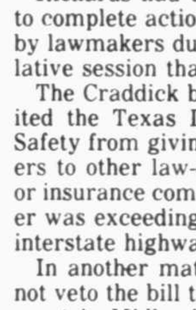
16-month-old child receives liver transplant

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

Relief and fear were the two emotions the Whitakers experienced when doctors told them a liver donor had been located for their 16-month-old daughter Alexi.



Alexi Whitaker should be able to check out within weeks.

The couple was awakened at 1 a.m. on May 30 by a phone call announcing that the organ had been found and the surgery would be performed that afternoon.

Alexi needed a new liver because of hepatoblastoma, a form of liver cancer. She was diagnosed with the disease in December 1992. In April of this year surgeons removed 95 percent of the tumor and 85 percent of her liver.

Doctors told Whitaker that a transplant was the only chance his daughter had to survive.

Whitaker said because Alexi was high on the list of donor recipients she was staying in Children's Medical Center in Dallas. She also was scheduled to receive a chemotherapy treatment, but

Insilco to pull out

Officials of Insilco Corp. announced Monday that the company is leaving Midland. It will move its corporate headquarters from Midland to a site near Columbus, Ohio. The move, which will affect all of the approximately 30 full-time employees in the headquarters, is expected to be complete by this fall, said Insilco spokesman Grant Billingsley. He said that as a part of the company's recent reorganization, management wanted to move the headquarters to a location nearer and more accessible to the majority of its operating locations, which are in the Northeast, Midwest and Southeast. Insilco, which has been headquartered in Midland since 1989, is a diversified manufacturer of specialty consumer and component products that employs approximately 5,600 worldwide in 10 separate operating units divided into four primary business segments./1C

Lindsey thinks her punishment was right for her.

At 16, she helped steal a car, was caught, placed in Culver Youth Home for 10 days, released, stole a car, placed in Culver for 10 more days, and released to complete the cycle a third time.

"I didn't think about stealing the cars and the consequences," she said.

Eventually, Lindsey was sentenced to a year probation.

"I expected more," said Lindsey, who has run away from home about 10 times.

On a Saturday evening last fall, Steven, then 16, called a police officer an obscenity in a parking lot off Midkiff Road and Andrews Highway — Midland's strip for youngsters.

"I was drunk and we got pulled over," Steven said.

Police searched the vehicle and uncovered a 12-pack of beer, a machete, a pocket knife, a baseball bat, a 3-foot stick and a cane sword.

"We were going to beat up these guys that night," Steven, who owned the stick, recalled.

The driver, 20, and two 17-year-olds were arrested. Steven was taken to Culver Youth Home.

His parents retrieved him from Culver, although his mother was reluctant to do so.

"They (the authorities) didn't call me for about two months," he said.

Steven was given the choice of going to trial, and maybe getting 12 months formal probation, or take six months informal, or voluntary, probation. He chose the six months.

Steven, who had never been taken into custody before, explained why he called the police officer a name. "Because he pulled me over a week or two before that and made me pour out my beer," he said, adding that he was drunk during that first encounter.

Six months probation was fair for the charges of minor in possession and unlawfully carrying a weapon, Steven said.

And the discrepancy between the juvenile and adult justice systems are understandable, he said.

"You're younger and don't know what's going on," Steven said. Asked about himself and his trouble, Steven said he knew what he was doing.

State youth security facilities try to avoid being prison-like

On a scale of 1 to 10, delinquents committed to the West Texas State School — a maximum-security facility for youths — rated the home a 9.

From Interstate 20 near Pyote, the institution — despite the 15-foot-high surrounding fence — could be mistaken for military housing or a private school.

On closer inspection — from the inside — the facility appears less intrusive. Youngsters often play basketball on the streets. An occasional car will pass, similar to weekday traffic in a quiet suburb.

The youngsters — the majority of whom are minorities — live in cottages, usually two or four per room. When it's lights out at 10 p.m., those rooms remain unlocked. The front door is locked.

They get up at 6 a.m., tidy their living quarters and prepare for the day. Breakfast is served at 7 a.m. in the cafeteria, and school begins at 7:45 a.m.

Expect some clouds, 90

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a 20 percent chance of rain, a high near 90 and south to southeast winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of rain and a low in the upper 60s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Wednesday should be partly cloudy with a high in the lower 90s.

After an overnight low of 65, Monday's high reached 90, compared to the record high for that date of 107 set in 1934. The record low was 60 set in 1973.

STATE

Flood and flash flood watches continued for most of South Texas Monday as remnants of Tropical Storm Arlene dissipated.

Raymondville, about 35 miles south of Corpus Christi, was hit with some flooding with water flowing through the streets as deep as 3 feet. Downtown roads were closed to all vehicles except boats.

The U.S. Coast Guard brought in small boats to encourage people to evacuate about 250 homes in north Raymondville late Monday afternoon.

Showers and thunderstorms were expected to continue over South Texas through Tuesday.

Temperatures ranged from the mid-70s to 90 Monday afternoon in South Texas.

Lows Monday night were in the 70s. Highs today will be in the 80s.

Showers and thunderstorms persisted throughout North Texas Monday afternoon, and a flash flood watch was in effect Monday night in some areas.

Chances of thunderstorms continue through today.

Highs ranged from 76 to 88, and winds were generally from the east at 5 to 10 mph.

Highs today are expected in the 90s. Lows are expected in the 70s.

Wednesday should be partly cloudy with a chance of thunderstorms. Highs Wednesday should be in the high 80s and low 90s.

Unlike most of the state, West Texas was mostly sunny Monday, with the temperatures in the 80s and 90s.

Extremes were 85 degrees at Amarillo to 95 degrees at El Paso.

A chance of showers or thunderstorms was expected throughout the West Texas-Oklahoma Panhandle through tonight.

Lows Monday night were in the 60s and 70s, and expected to be the same tonight.

Highs today should be in the 90s, except for the Big Bend River valleys, which expected temperatures over 100.

NATION

The remains of Tropical Storm Arlene caused flooding in parts of Texas on Monday. Thunderstorm winds toppled trees and broke windows in Ohio and a rain-swollen river kept residents from their homes in Wisconsin.

Sunny, warm weather was over the Plains and the upper Mississippi Valley. Temperatures in the Southwest were above 100 degrees.

In Marion, Ohio, about 40 miles north of Columbus, utility poles were knocked down and windows broken when a storm hit a business district.

The National Weather Service said funnel clouds were in the area. Trees were downed in Claridon.

Near Black River Falls, Wis., about 700 residents remained away from their homes for a second day due to flooding from the Black River, authorities said.

In Shreveport, La., a fourth day of rain Monday brought floods that forced at least 100 people out of apartment buildings and overturned one rescue boat, sheriff's officials said.

More than 6 inches of rain have fallen at Shreveport since Sunday.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Sports riots

Reminders abound that fan is short form of 'fanatic'

By Fred Bayles
Associated Press writer

Let's not forget the word "fan," as in sports fan, is a shortened form of "fanatic."

Reminders of this have come fast and furious recently as championship victories have led to riots in such diverse cities as Montreal, Dallas and, on Sunday night, in Chicago.

"It could be seen as a way of allowing fans to vent the frustrations of everyday life," said Richard Lapchick, director of Northeastern University's Center for the Study of Sports in Society. "The irony is that sports is an escape from everyday life, from the problems and violence of society."

The latest celebration to turn ugly followed the Chicago Bulls' third-straight National Basketball Association championship.

Two shooting deaths were linked to the celebrations, and nearly 700 people were arrested on charges including disorderly conduct and vandalism.

It was the third time in as many years that a Chicago NBA title has resulted in violence.

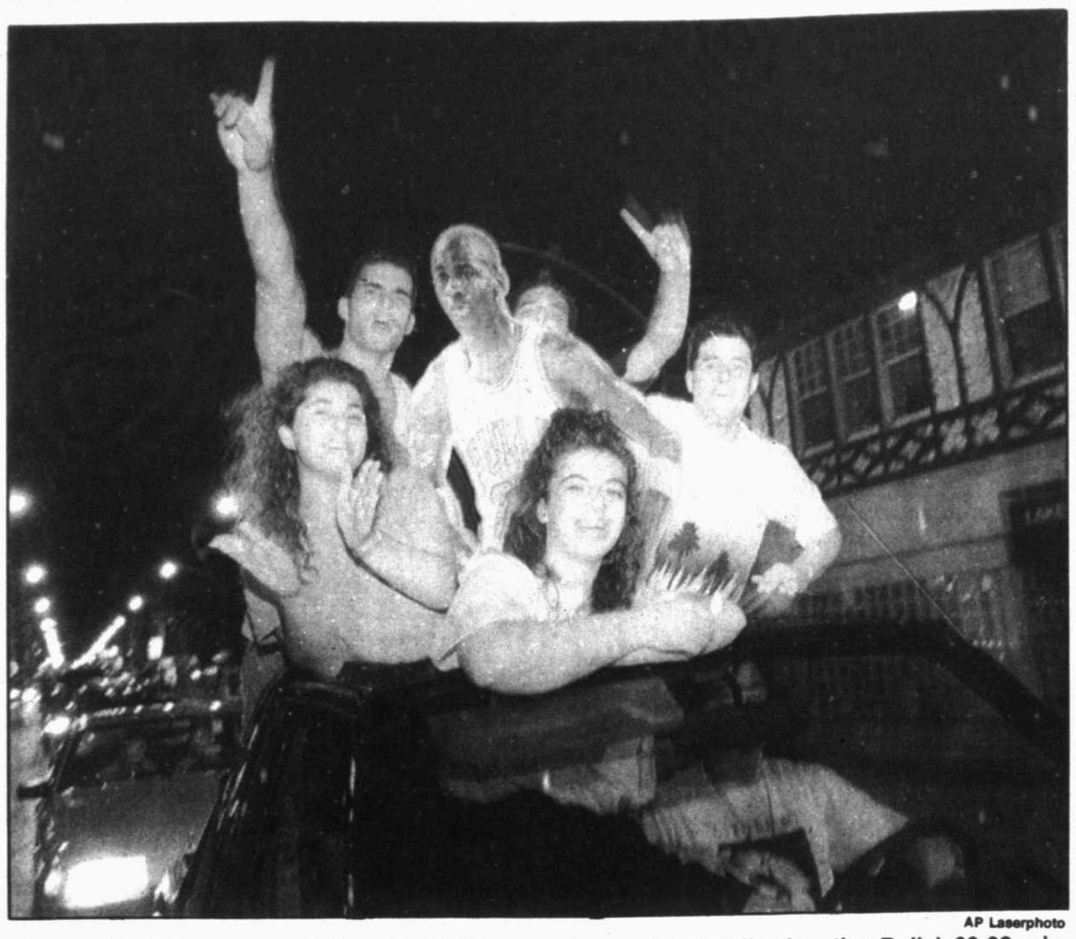
But such sports-inspired street rumbles are not unique to Chicago.

Earlier this month, hockey fans joined crowds outside Montreal's Forum for a rampage following the Canadiens' Stanley Cup victory over Los Angeles. Stores were trashed along with police cars, buses and subways. Some 115 people were arrested and 168 were injured, including 49 police officers.

In February, a rally celebrating the Dallas Cowboys' Super Bowl victory left 18 injured and 26 under arrest. Groups of youths among the crowd of 400,000 attacked bystanders.

The past decade has seen similar disturbances in Detroit and San Francisco. While troubling, such incidents are not new.

Fighting and vandalism associated with sports were common in the 19th century. Authorities in this country and Canada even banned boxing in many places because of violence that followed the fights.



AP Laserphoto

Chicago Bulls fans celebrate Sunday in Chicago by driving with a life-size cut-out of Michael Jordan following the Bulls' 99-98 win over the Phoenix Suns.

The University of Missouri's Charles Korr, an expert on the social history of sports, recalls living near the baseball stadium in Philadelphia, watching angry fans reacting violently to an umpire's disputed call.

"The biggest thing that's new is the ability to instantaneously see the riot taking place in Montreal," Korr said. "People see that, and in their minds they say, 'We got to show them we are as happy as the people in Montreal about our victory.' "

Soccer hooliganism is rampant in Europe, where Dutch fans have even tossed bombs at each other. Korr said British police now use a sophisticated network of informers and computerized projections to determine where best to marshal their forces each week.

"If you walk to a first division match, you'll see the police lining the streets, at other matches you'll see nobody," Korr said.

What motivates fans to violence? Lapchick believes being part of a crowd gives some a license to misbehave.

"It's a situation where people act in ways they wouldn't on a day-to-day basis," he said. "They think that they can do on this particular night something they can't do on another night."

Bruce Kidd, a sports historian and political scientist at the University of Toronto, calls it a situation of "permissive misrule."

"It's a moment of social leveling," he said. "People say, 'If our guys won everything than maybe for a moment we can act like kings and do anything we want.' "

Korr believes there is a misplaced sense of connection that gives fans such a strong emotional response to a victory.

"There is a sense that we can identify with a team in a way we no longer do with any other civic enterprise," he said. "It used to be your church, your parish, your community. What can you show that you belong to anymore, except a sports team."

LIVER: Midland child undergoes transplant

doctors decided to postpone it because of the chance that a donor organ would be located.

Whitaker said doctors told him the combination of the weekend and the holiday increased the chances of accidents, therefore increasing the number of potential donors.

The donor for Alexi was a little boy from Oklahoma City who died in an automobile accident.

Whitaker experienced "strange" feelings when he saw surgeons carrying a cooler containing the liver toward the operating room. Alexi was in surgery at 11:45 a.m. and she was out by 6:30 p.m.

Alexi was in the Intensive Care Unit for two days and on her feet within five days. She remains in the hospital, but should be able to check out within the next few weeks.

She will go through another chemotherapy treatment this week followed by another within four weeks. Whitaker said his daughter will get the chemo treatment because cancer could have remained in the artery that connects with the liver. He said there is a 45 percent to 50 percent chance that the tumor will come back, but a 75 perecent to 80 percent success rate with the new liver.

But, now that the transplant is over, Alexi will have to endure the tests and treatments. Currently, she is taking 11 different medications orally.

She'll remain on at least 10 medications for at least one year, including having intravenous antibiotic for four hours once a week and taking steroids for two years and monthly tests.

Hopefully, Whitaker said, it will all get down to one medication — the anti-rejection medication — forever.

Whitaker said the first six months are the most crucial, but they can relax somewhat after the first year.

The proud father said his daughter has a winning attitude despite all the poking and prodding. She is starting to talk, wave and blow kisses.

The Whitakers are thankful that their daughter has been given a second chance at life. But they also are grateful to the people who have supported them throughout the ordeal.

Whitaker is especially indebted to his employer, Southwestern Bell Mobile Systems. He said he has been allowed to leave at any moment when his daughter's health was in question. "How do you pay that back?" he said.

A trust fund was set up for Alexi at a local credit union in April to help with her medical expenses. A clerk at the bank related a story to Whitaker of a $5 donation made to the fund by a homeless man who rides a bicycle with his dog.

Whitaker said he is extremely grateful to everyone who has made contributions to the fund, although it is nowhere near the $1 million mark he expects to pass when all the bills have rolled in.

Donations may be made to the Alexi Whitaker fund, Permian Telco Federal Credit Union, 1408 W. Wall St., Midland 79701.

VETOES: Gov. Richards cuts Craddick bill percent.

"The court system in Midland County is bulging at the seams," Craddick said at the time the Texas Senate passed the bill.

But it was not a good day for Craddick's "speeding ticket bill."

The governor made sure of that.

"The effect of this bill would be to abolish speed limits between 55 and 70 miles per hour, causing an increase in traffic accidents, injuries, and deaths. It would also lead to escalating auto insurance costs," Richards said in a veto message released Monday.

Richards said that under the bill, federal highway construction funds could have been transferred to safety programs because Texas' compliance with national speed limits would have been reduced.

In addition, she said, the bill would have been an administrative nightmare for the Department of Public Safety because the agency would have had to establish two sets of records for speeding violations.

"The 55 miles per hour speed limit has contributed to an almost 50 percent drop in auto fatalities since 1981. The savings in lives alone is sufficient reason to veto this bill," Richards said.

A message left for Craddick by The Associated Press was not immediately returned.

Earlier, Craddick had said his bill wouldn't encourage speeding. He said it would allow people to drive as they already do without risking higher insurance rates because of speeding tickets.

In addition, Richards vetoed measures that would have:

- Allowed hospitals to commission peace officers. "The public safety would be better served if these hospitals would coordinate their efforts with local law enforcement agencies," Richards said.
- Allowed local governments to purchase insurance without having to go out for bids.
- Stopped the state from paying the employee's portion of Social Security taxes for new state employees. Richards said this was not needed to balance the state budget, and would result in current state employees getting paid more to do the same work as future state employees.

MOODS: Lawmakers feel heat

an installment on his campaign promises to overhaul the economy and reform the health-care system.

Nevertheless, Congress is held in equal contempt, prompting incumbents in both parties to become increasingly jittery with the approach of the 1994 mid-term congressional elections. Sen. Bob Krueger's near-record defeat in the June 5 special election in Texas strongly suggested that their fears may be justified.

According to a Los Angeles Times poll last week, trust in Washington has fallen to an all-time low, and only 24 percent of the American public believes the country is moving in the right direction.

Of those surveyed, only 42 percent approved of Clinton's performance, while 49 percent disapproved. In contrast, the last three presidents — Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan and George Bush — had a 2-to-1 approval rating at this stage of their presidencies.

The survey suggests that more and more Americans think Clinton betrayed them when he promised to focus "like a laser" on the economy. Most Americans, according to the poll, no longer believe that Clinton can bring about prosperity or reduce the deficit.

"They thought the new president would be able to turn the world upside down in the first month," says Rep. Martin Frost, D-Dallas. "There were expectations that we were going to do something about the deficit, that we were going to do something about health care, and it hasn't happened yet."

Frost says Americans will soon become "very, very sour" if Washington doesn't act swiftly to cure the nation's economic problems. "They want to see some action," he says. "And it doesn't bode well for anybody in office if we don't produce."

Geren said his constituents exude a "sense of betrayal" and are angry at the prospect of incurring new taxes under the Clinton economic plan. Although voters in his district shook off their election-season doldrums at the outset of Clinton's presidency, he said, the public's mood has steadily "gone down hill" since the inauguration.

"It's palpable on the coffee-shop circuit," said the Fort Worth Democrat. "What I heard over and over again is that you're back to your same old tax-and-spend ways."

Earl Black, a political scientist at the University of South Carolina, says the volatility endangers the Clinton presidency and is tailor-made for iconoclast Ross Perot, who remains a powerful political force after drawing 19 percent of the vote as an independent presidential candidate last year.

YOUNG & VIOLENT

Many say system due for complete overhaul

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

Based on the premises that a significant number of delinquents become adult criminals and youngsters are committing more crimes and showing more violence, society must change to counter that destructive path, a group of observers agree.

And, that means more success in treatment of delinquents and slowing down what feeds the problem.

Solutions range from eliminating the juvenile justice system and letting delinquents fare the same punishment as adults, to concentrating solely on prevention.

"We've been using the same old system year after year and it doesn't seem to be working," said Chuck McDaniel, director of detention services at Culver Youth Home.

Some critics say the current juvenile system originally was structured during a time predominately concerned with runaways and truants. As a result, the system has become outdated and cannot adequately handle the increased load and violence of today.

"The juvenile justice system needs a complete overhaul because the children are not made to realize they have to be responsible for their actions," said Sgt. Joe Matlock, head of the juvenile division of the Midland County Sheriff's Office.

"They (the public) need to be worried about it where they get Texas law changed and put some teeth into it," said John Miller, chief of security for Midland Independent School District.

Those sentiments arise because crimes committed by juveniles today are as serious as their adult counterpart.

"A 2-foot rattlesnake is as dangerous as a 6-foot rattlesnake and we've got a lot of 15- and 16-year-old rattlesnakes out there," said State District Judge Janice Warder of Dallas. A former juvenile judge, Ms. Warder advocates a revamping of the juvenile system.

Some critics said making examples out of delinquents rather than half-hearted attempts at rehabilitation would be more successful at reducing crime.

Others said many delinquents are incorrigible, like adult criminals, and should be treated as such. Still others compromise and suggest lowering the age a youngster can be certified as an adult to stand trial.

But making adults out of delinquents also will contribute to the prison overcrowding problem. "Texas cannot continue to lock up people because taxpayers can't pay for it," said Johnny Williams, superintendent of the West Texas State School.

Nevertheless, Williams said he believes youths that commit violent crimes need to be kept in an institution. "One thing I'm doing here, I'm preventing crime," he said of youths who are not a threat while confined to Texas Youth Commission.

Those against pairing juveniles with adult offenders claim shifting youngsters from one ineffective system to another solves nothing.

"I'd ask one question. Give me empirical data that show the adult system is working," McDaniel said.

Some critics feel the juvenile system already too closely resembles the adult system, which institutionalizes rather than makes positive change. Incarcerating delinquents only sets them up for prison life, some argue.

Conversely, those who support delinquent institutions many times criticize placement restrictions and limitations.

"I think overall we need more prison space and more TYC space," said County Attorney Mark Dettman.

Because TYC limits new intakes (Midland County is allowed nine per year), officials have considered more community placement.

Area officials agree that doubling the size of Culver Youth Home — which can currently house 20 — might alleviate the problem.

"I'm sure if we built a facility to house 200, we could come close to filling it after a while," McDaniel said.

Culver had 969 referrals in 1992, compared to 971 in 1991, 825 in 1990, 618 in 1989, 425 in 1988, and 344 in 1987. Not all endured any stay at Culver; many were released in the custody of their parents.

But enlarging Culver would not be financially feasible, officials said.

Possibly cutting long-term holdings from nine to five, and contracting additional beds elsewhere would suffice, said County Court At Law Judge Al Walvoord.

Nevertheless, something needs to be done to keep up with the increase in referrals, officials conceded.

"We either change with that problem or the community is more inundated with that problem," Walvoord said.

Some observers said current rehabilitative attempts are going nowhere and need to change.

One national trend seeks to keep delinquent youngsters in the community for rehabilitation, through counseling, community service and other programs other than incarceration.

A mother of a Midland delinquent thought community service would have been worthwhile. No such local program exists, with any future possibility financially restricted, officials said.

And community service may not work for all delinquents. Still, a greater variety of alternatives to tailor to individual delinquents might show a better rehabilitation rate, some officials said.

At the state delinquent facility near Pyote, many residents say the most infuential reform comes from the religious programs, said superintendent Williams.

Another suggestion would be to introduce boot camps to juveniles, which may not be legally realistic. Boot camps show success when used with 17- to 21-year-olds, advocates argue. Opponents rebut that boot camps don't work unless the structure continues over several years.

Many suggestions entail merely revising the current system. Most advocate looking at new, innovative and seemingly successful programs from other communities.

But introducing new programs or expanding old ones has one major obstacle: lack of money.

And just pumping money into the juvenile justice system won't quell the problem either.

"I think a lot more people being involved may make a difference," McDaniel said, echoing the sentiments of many justice officials, teachers and administrators, law-enforcement officers and concerned citizens.

That means across-the-board changes in a youngster's surroundings.

"We have that kid (at a youth home) for six months to a year, and he returns to his environment," McDaniel said. "We've got a lot of kids where the family is into the same type of behavior, or at least some of the family members."

Because of that and other environmental factors, the youngster may easily fall back into his previous delinquent habits. "And the system has to start all over again with that kid," McDaniel said.

In addition to changing the home life a youth returns to, the community needs to examine the environment that witnesses — and possibly breeds — early delinquency.

"The child is not seen on a regular basis in the community but is by his teacher and parents," Walvoord said.

"I've raised my kids. I want to teach," countered one teacher going into her 17th year.

And some teachers and school administrators complain that parents, police and the courts don't demonstrate their influence and power over trouble-making youths. Each agency makes the same complaint.

All agree that potential delinquents need to be dealt with at a young age.

"We have to admit, oftentimes, that we intervene in that child's life too late," Walvoord said. "Nobody's ever called him down before. There's never been any consequences before."

Prevention begins at birth. Social workers largely believe that family helps mold delinquent behavior.

Prevention via the family means parenting classes. Some observers advocate mandatory parenting classes for those who receive government help.

As children grow older, they should be monitored by parents, teachers and others who make regular contact.

"There are things kids do that are projective of what we might see down the pike," said Tom Wynne, vice-president of clinical services and a social worker with Family Services of Midland. Such acts include hurting animals or other children, setting fires and other anti-social behavior.

Although many youths drop out of school because of other problems, many educators and justice officials said keeping students in school helps prevent delinquency.

About 25 percent of youngsters who enter junior high school in Midland drop out before graduation, and 40 percent statewide, a local official said. Those rates have been exaggerated by new graduation requirements, officials added.

"Most of the kids that are repeat offenders are not attending school and are doing poorly," said assistant County Attorney Jane Belazi.

Critics of the juvenile justice system admit that changing many influences is not realistic or readily done. Poor children who steal can't all be outfitted with brand-name athletic shoes, and single-parent households can't magically adopt a second parent.

Some youngsters who appear destined for problems grow up unscathed by their environment. Whether it's a role model outside the home, or another factor, this exceptional group may be the answer to prevention, observers said.

In light of cries to confront the delinquency problem, some changes are being made locally.

A task force of concerned citizens and officials formed following a special grand jury report released in February. The investigative grand jury pointed out problems with youths and alcohol, drugs and gangs, and made recommendations for a task force.

Midland Independent School District, plagued with a rash of guns on campus last semester, has plans for random weapons checks with hand-held metal detectors, and to boost the school's Crime Stoppers program.

The Midland Police Department recently expanded its juvenile division and plans to concentrate more on drug use.

Midland County Commissioners agreed to hire four part-time workers for Culver Youth Home to make the facility more secure and effective.

The County Attorney's office has began using a law that allows taking away a youngster's driver's license for a year or until he turns 17, whichever comes first, for drug-related and drunk-driving offenses.

But that's not enough, officials involved said.

Of the youngsters committed to TYC, about four out of 10 will eventually be sent to prison, TYC officials said.

That aligns with a study that estimated 38 percent of inmates in state prisons in 1986 had prior juvenile convictions, according to the Bureau of Justice Statistics.

Some criminologists and law enforcement officers estimated a higher percentage — about double.

As a result, many officials believe that if more money — and involvement — were pumped into the juvenile justice system and prevention programs, overall crime in America may be reduced.

law get probation at home, according to County Court At Law Judge Al Walvoord.

"The home environment is so important in the probation process, especially with juveniles," said Adolfo Salcido, chief officer of juvenile probation. "And if you have a set of parents that don't care if you follow up on them (the rules) or not . . . they are helping set you up for failure."

If offered, delinquents can avoid court and opt for voluntary probation, which generally lasts six months. Court-ordered probation usually runs one year.

Both include various conditions such as curfews, not associating with specific people, random drug and alcohol testing, and attending school.

Delinquents usually are required to report to their probation officer weekly, but in some cases as infrequently as once a month.

Probation officers can check on a youngster at home or school, but rarely do because of time restraints. Midland's five officers each carry a caseload of 45-55 youngsters, while state guidelines recommend not more than 35.

Nevertheless, "The majority of these guys we put on probation, we don't see again," Salcido said.

If a youngster breaks probation, the options are limited. Possibilities include an extension of probation and incarceration at Culver Youth Home pending a detention hearing. Authorities also can threaten to send the youth to the Texas Youth Commission, and, ultimately, do so.

If home life isn't conducive to shaping up, a youngster can be ordered to serve up to a year probation elsewhere. A judge can place the delinquent in Culver Youth Home (or a contracted youth detention center), or a child-care facility, which predominately houses abused and neglected youngsters.

The average cost runs from $65 to $75 per day per child.

Youngsters deemed not responsive to probation can be committed to TYC, the state juvenile corrections agency.

That option is seldom used, but not because of lack of delinquents or the hesitation of a judge. A serious violent crime or a third felony typically warrants TYC consideration in Midland County, a prosecutor said.

"I'm limited to sending nine of our worse (per year) . . . so that's a restriction I wish we didn't have," Walvoord said.

Sending more than nine would result in a loss of state funds to Midland County, which officials said can't be afforded.

An alternative would be a year probation at Culver.

"We've got 20 beds and we can't do much with 20 beds," Walvoord said.

But because that facility is frequently used to hold juveniles pending detention hearings and for a short-term lockup, long-term use isn't feasible, officials said.

Long-term detention increases the chances of the facility not having enough room to house new offenders. And federal law prohibits incarceration with adults at the Midland County jail.

Crowded conditions can contribute to unrest, such as an incident in May, when delinquents caused a small riot and eight escaped.

Another reason against long-term placement is that Culver doesn't provide the level of professional help available at TYC, officials said. And funds don't allow but a few beds contracted at neighboring facilities to hold Midland delinquents.

"It's a mess," Walvoord said of the state's juvenile justice system.

There's not enough money and not enough interest from the Legislature, he said.

Assistant County Attorney Jane Belazi agreed: "A lot of what happens to kids is dictated by funds. I think the general attitude of the public is, we don't do much. But I think they don't understand we are limited."

"Basically, we don't have a lot of places to place kids. . . . It basically depends on the openings we have," Ms. Belazi said. "Some kids we can't do anything but probate them back to their parents. It's sad.

"Any place we put them they will get more structure. When we put them back on the street, they get in trouble again," she said.

Justice workers have taken advantage of alternatives such as the determinate sentence hearing, and certifying a youngster as an adult for adjudication in a district court.

But that's not always the answer.

Although a youngster may be of age for adult certification, he may be a better candidate for rehabilitation offered in the juvenile system, critics argue. But there may not be the resources due to lack of funds.

And when a juvenile is deemed an adult and justly tried, the punishment may not fit the crime.

"What is that jury going to do with that kid? They are going to have every sympathy for that kid," Walvoord said. "A jury gives them two or three years probation. Well, we can do that down here" in juvenile court, he said.

District Attorney Al Schorre agreed: "No doubt jurors are influenced by the appearance of a young offender."

In light of their treatment, juveniles are aware of the limitations and leniency afforded. As a result, many in the juvenile justice system acknowledge frustrations.

"They catch on pretty fast. They are not going to TYC (so) there's not much deterrent factor," Ms. Belazi said. "Sometimes I feel like I'm spinning my wheels," she said.

In addition, police officers, parents, teachers and administrators, and the general public — including youngsters — have voiced concern about the system, which many perceive as too lax.

"A lot of parents would just as soon say, 'Judge Walvoord, would you take this child off my hands?' " Walvoord said.

IN THIS SERIES

Sunday 20	In a new age of youngsters and violence, both local and national statistics point toward increases in most types of crimes being committed by teens. Weapons at school, burglary and theft, violent offenses and other crimes have raised many concerns.
Monday 21	Crime by juveniles does not exist in a vacuum. The social costs include the emotional burdens inflicted on victims as well as the frequent incidence of abuse and dysfunction that many offenders have experienced earlier in childhood.
Today 22	Is the juvenile justice system keeping up with the changing times? Its provisions differ greatly from adult criminal justice, but is it having the desired effect of rehabilitating youngsters and derailing them from a potential lifelong pattern of crime?

tween this and a regular school is there's no girls," added Dan Humeniuk, assistant superintendent.

Youngsters have three minutes between their six periods. At times, students can be seen milling around the hallway.

They wear bluejeans and T-shirts, athletic shoes, or whatever they want. Some of the clothes come from home, some from the state. But the administration shies away from reds and blues similar to gang colors.

At lunch, they again eat in the cafeteria. Baked chicken, broccoli and rice were on the menu one recent day.

Then it is back to classes, which are standard curriculum.

One that's not, however, is a "skills program," which one day included an examination of decision-making and how a youngster landed in the Texas Youth Commission.

During a portion of that session, the instructor discussed crimes that some of the youngster had committed.

"How many have robbed someone?" the teacher said.

"Ooh, boy, ask me," said one boy, his arm waving for attention.

Some acknowledged committing robberies; others appeared indifferent.

School lets out at 2:45 p.m.

For the next couple of hours, the boys enjoy free time or recreation.

During free time one day this month, most youngsters watched cartoons on television, while others wrote letters, read books and lay on their beds. A few sat quietly in chairs in the hallway — "time out" punishment for breaking a rule.

When a youngster first arrives at the facility, he spends about three weeks in the orientation dormitory, learning the rules and being accessed by the staff.

"It's all right. I don't have anything against it," said one newcomer.

There are usually about 25 youngsters in orientation. On this particular day, there were 34.

Most reside at the facility less than a year, Humeniuk said.

Their rooms are clean. Many of the youngsters have snapshots affixed to bulletin boards near their neatly made beds. Clothes and belongings are stored in open-faced closets.

The boys have levels of privileges, based on behavior.

If something is to their disliking, a youngster can file a complaint with a grievance coordinator, a fellow youth who relates the complaint to administrators.

Jason (not his real name) "said staff grabbed him and he didn't like it, so he wrote a complaint," said a grievance coordinator flipping through his record notebook.

The youngster said complaints are reviewed fairly.

The final meal of the day is at 5 p.m. At 6 p.m., juveniles participate in "group" counseling at their cottage, for an hour each day, five days a week.

Each youngster also gets individual counseling for 45 minutes a month.

At 7 p.m., residents enjoy more free time or recreation, followed by showers, chores and clean-up at 8 p.m.

Currently, 202 boys reside at the facility, mostly non-violent offenders. The center has been budgeted for 192 and holds up to 216.

To run the institution takes 237 employees.

None are armed. Firearms are prohibited.

The fences — curved at the top — have sectioned electronic sensors to alert security to escape attempts.

A few surveillance cameras are strategically placed.

One building houses several secure cells — with small oblong windows in the doors and to the outside — to use as needed. Most remain empty.

Youngsters react to strangers differently. Some are friendly, others indifferent, and a few, when looked at, show a hostile, challenging stare.

Housing a youngster at a Texas Youth Commission "training school" costs about $81 per day, according to TYC officials in Austin. That adds up to $29,565 for a year's stay.

In addition to the West Texas State School, four others exist in Texas: in Brownwood, Crockett, Gainesville and Giddings.

"The campuses typically look like high schools," said TYC spokesman Gary Fuchs.

Of the approximately 100,000 youths brought before the Texas juvenile justice system, TYC — considered a last resort for delinquents — gets about 2 percent, according to Fuchs.

The average stay is just over six months, with offenders who have killed someone having a two-year minimum stay, he said.

"Our mission is rehabilitative," Fuchs said.

During the early 1980s, about 15 percent of TYC commitments were violent offenders compared to about 35 percent today, he said. As a result, non-violent offenders are being released earlier to make room for those who have committed violent crimes, he added.

In the last five years, the overall population has remained steady at a couple of thousand, Fuchs said. Various sources indicate that judges are limited to how many juveniles they can send to TYC.

"Unfortunately, the adult system gets most of the funds," Fuchs said.

Similar sentiments have been expressed in Midland County.

Delinquents housed locally at Culver Youth Home are usually kept on a short-term basis: overnight or less than 10 days.

The public "thinks we have the little minor thefts and truancies . . . but any crime imaginable we are holding up out here from time to time," said Adolfo Salcido, chief officer of juvenile probation.

Life at Culver runs similar to the TYC facility. Youngsters do chores, attend classes, receive some counseling, and have recreational and free time.

The facility has 20 rooms with tile-lined walls. Ten of the rooms are heavy security and resemble jail cells.

"We have a jail-like facility, but the object is not to be like a jail," said Judge Al Walvoord during a recent annual inspection of Culver.

Youngsters who have spent time in Culver have mixed reviews.

"It's all right. It's a little bit laid-back. They got it easy in there, but they still complain," said a 16-year-old boy who spent 10 days at the home.

Before spending time there, the youngster said he heard from other juveniles that the home was both easy and hard.

One girl, who has been in and out of Culver a few times, said she was scared and rebellious during her initial stay. That changed.

"Culver's a nice place, like home, but you can't get out," she said.

Some youngsters apparently like Culver and other institutions because they beat home life. Others resent the restrictions.

In May, eight of 14 teens confined to the home caused a riot and scaled a 10-foot wall to temporary freedom.

"A couple of the kids just wanted out. . . . They didn't want to be locked up. The plan was for the others to go with them," an official said after the incident.

In addition to Culver and TYC, the juvenile judge can send a youngster to a contracted facility.

Midland County pays for two beds at the Lubbock Youth Center at $75 per day each. Midland youngsters generally stay for six-month programs, and both beds remain full.

Officials plan to cut use at Lubbock in half, and contract two slots at a private juvenile facility scheduled to open August 1 near Sweetwater. The two new places will cost $45 per bed per day unused and $79 per day per bed occupied.

The length of stay at the Sweetwater facility can be determined by Midland County. Both spaces are expected to remain full.

In addition, Midland authorities can place youngsters in various facilities on a per-use basis. These include residential drug rehabilitation centers and basic child care homes.

Summer workers can prove valuable

It used to be that summer was the time for young people to get a "summer job" that would provide their spending money, hopefully teach them some useful work skills and provide worthwhile activity to fill what otherwise might be lazy summer days.

Society has changed considerably since a teenager could make a reasonably good amount of money in three months of mowing lawns and washing cars in the summertime. The needs of employers have changed at the same time. Today one is more likely to find teenagers holding down part-time jobs year-round at fast food restaurants and on delivery routes. Regardless, the summer months still are the primary ones in which more youngsters are out looking for work.

It's important for businesses to keep that in mind and to try to hire teenagers who are looking for temporary jobs during the summer. Those jobs are essential not only because they give the youngsters "something to do" during the summer months, but they also give the teen-agers entry into the workforce and permit them the opportunity to develop work skills that will benefit them throughout their lives. Jobs also teach responsibility.

In many instances what begins as only a summer job may be developed by a young person into what later can be fulltime employment. In such a case, both the young person and the employer benefit, and that serves the community of Midland well. Your relationship with your new employee could give both of you a refreshing view of how the other is faring in today's world.

So, if the opportunity arises for you to give a young person a job this summer, consider it strongly before saying no. Youngsters — like everyone — are having a tough time in today's economy and need the employment.

Besides, you could find that you've got a valuable new friend and employee.

Guinier fiasco showed Clinton's own indecision

There is far more to the Lani Guinier fiasco than the appalling political ineptitude displayed by the White House. At the heart of the debate is an internal struggle over the fundamental direction of Bill Clinton's presidency.

What is most troubling is that Clinton himself appears to be the epicenter of the confusion.

Most of the president's major actions since Jan. 20, including the nomination of Guinier to head the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, have served the agenda of the Democratic Party's liberal wing.

Yet, now that his claim to be a new kind of Democrat has been badly undermined and his approval rating has sunk to a record low, the president appears to be searching for a new course.

This uncertainty and vacillation that characterized his mishandling of the Guinier episode are symptoms of Clinton's own indecision.

Taxpayers have sacrificed, now it's Congress' chance

Democrats in Washington are planning the largest tax increase in history. Democrats want sacrifices from the "rich" (who in some cases earn only $25,000 a year) — sacrifices Democrats in Congress refuse to make.

Republicans tried to get the House of Representatives to cut its $1.8 billion budget by 25 percent. Democrats voted down the motion 226 to 185. Democrats even crushed an effort to nip 5 percent off the congressional budget.

Democrats argue that there have been reductions in congressional spending. Franking privileges — the ability to mail letters to constituents free of charge — have fallen from $60 million in 1982 to $40 million this year.

Congressional Democrats argue that their staff hasn't increased in size, and that their staffers are paid less than their counterparts in the Senate and at the White House.

A better comparison is with the staffing of Sears, IBM, General Motors or any major corporation in America.

"These same Democrats continue on their drunken spending spree, refusing to cut their own budget," said Rep. Gerald Solomon, R-N.Y.

Americans are tired of hearing about sacrifice from people who make $133,000 a year in tax-paid salary alone. Americans are tired of hearing about soaking the rich from people who travel around the world on taxes and who collect millions in "campaign donations" from special interests.

Taxpayers have made their sacrifices, to the tune of $1.2 trillion a year in federal taxation. It is now Congress' turn.

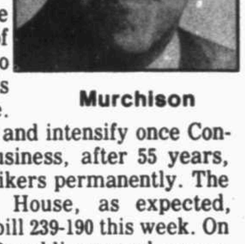
Strike pops out when button is pushed

It's time to stop laughing at Bill Clinton and to start thinking of him as powerful enough to saddle us with follies like — well, the Pushbutton Strike bill.



Murchison

Big Labor has its own name for S. 55/H.R. 5 — the Cesar Chavez Workplace Fairness Act. You can see why. A bill this bad needs all the moral cover it can steal from dead social activists.

The "pushbutton" moniker, hung on the bill by Reed Larson of the National Right to Work Committee, is more descriptive. Strikes would multiply and intensify once Congress wrested from business, after 55 years, the right to replace strikers permanently. The Democratic-controlled House, as expected, passed the pushbutton bill 239-190 this week. On to the Senate, where Republicans and conservative Democrats will try to throttle it by filibuster. Not even Democrats are enthusiastic about a bill sure to drive up business costs and hamper job-creation. "Why in the world are we doing this?" inquires Fort Worth's Pete Geren.

Why? Chiefly because candidate Clinton made extravagant promises to the labor unions to secure their support for his election. The unions, their political and economic clout diminished by declining membership, are laying hands on every coercive tool available to them. Should the Pushbutton Strike bill pass, the president would smilingly sign it, or, anyway, he has said he would. (With President Rubberspine, you are required to draw such a distinction.)

There is nothing new under the sun, the Book of Ecclesiastes tells us; the controversy over striker replacement certainly isn't new. Business always has insisted on, and labor always has bitterly opposed, the use of replacement workers (whom strikers traditionally demonize as "scabs"). The Wagner-Connery Labor Relations Act of 1935 required business to fire replacements once a strike ended. Three years later, the U.S. Supreme Court overturned the requirement.

The decision turned out not to matter that much, from labor's standpoint. The glory decades lay ahead for the AFL-CIO and its constituent unions — nationwide strikes that brought industry to heel, fatter and fatter wage and benefits packages, labor barons ever at the right hand of the powerful: flattered, courted, besought.

It hasn't been that good — or that bad, depending on your viewpoint — for 20 years, when the big industrial unions started declining. Only 16 percent of workers presently belong to labor unions. But the unions know how to fix that. Among other tactics, including repeal of right-to-work laws, they seek to escalate the costs of fighting a strike. If the company can't fire the strikers and hire permanent replacements, and if substantial numbers of workers decline to walk out, business grinds to a halt. The company makes peace on the union's terms.

In collective bargaining, the playing field is supposed to be as level as it can well be made. The Pushbutton Strike bill would build into the field a 30-degree slope — unions at the top, employers at the bottom. A Time/CNN poll shows 60 percent of Americans opposed to the principle the pushbutton bill embodies.

The concept of government as our One Great Sugar Daddy goes back to the New Deal. How Franklin Roosevelt rejoiced in it then and the Clintons revel in it now! Hillary's health care plan has government at the center of everything and the rest of us sitting around asking, in wide-eyed wonder, "Yes? What should we do now?" — the plan is pure Roosevelt.

Sure, let's just pretend, in keeping with this historical worldview, that unions are poor, pitiful Pearls needing all the government help they can get. The Clinton administration so pretends. That's the meaning of the Pushbutton Strike bill — that, plus the payback due the unions for past political support.

Conservative senators will have a lot to say about such a bill. It may be, in fact, they'll have so much to say the thing never will come to a vote. Wouldn't that be just too bad?

CHARLEY REESE

America's debt is hyperinflationary time bomb

With the president's budget package in the Senate/lobbyist meatgrinder, we should remember what government can and can't do.

Reese

It cannot stimulate the economy with a tax increase. Tax increases subtract money from the private economy. If the government spends back into the private economy, the net effect is zero. That's obvious if you think about it. If you subtract $100 from the economy and then add $100 to the economy, you're right where you started.

For exactly the same reason a tax increase should not normally depress the economy, provided the money is spent. Of course money taken by taxes out of the American economy and spent in Timbuktu represents a net loss to the American economy. Money taken by the government that would have been spent for production and is spent by government for consumption doesn't help the economy grow.

The only genuine justification for tax increases at this time is to reduce the deficit. The deficit is the difference each year between what the government spends and what it takes in. The accumulation of these annual deficits constitutes the debt, which now stands at roughly $4 trillion — twice as many dollars as there are stars in our galaxy.

A debt of this size is scandalous and a looming catastrophe, a hyperinflationary time bomb. It's remarkable how successful politicians have been in convincing people that it doesn't matter very much.

If we do not seriously begin to reduce these annual deficits, people will conclude investing in our government debt is a bad risk. The government will have to pay more interest or resort ultimately to massive inflation.

Inflation is a form of robbery. When the dollar is devalued, everyone holding dollars is robbed; people with life insurance policies are robbed; people living on wages or pensions are robbed; and creditors are robbed.

It's hard for the government, however, to screw the very rich. The very rich got that way by being very smart about money and they usually stay two steps and a hop ahead of government. The only thing they cannot outrun are the bullets used, from time to time, to readjust the maldistribution of wealth. Such methodology is called revolution.

Who gets screwed are the ordinary people. They lose their jobs, their homes, sometimes even the ability to survive. It's bad and ugly and dangerous and we ought to keep this picture in mind when we listen to fat-pocket politicians in $600 suits spread bull instead of seriously addressing the fiscal mess they created.

As to improving the economy, there are no good choices right now. Spending borrowed money (deficit spending) does stimulate the economy. That was the Ronald Reagan boom, the origin of the $4 trillion debt. Reducing the deficit will depress the economy. The examples are the people now unemployed who worked in the defense industries, and the college graduates who can't find jobs in those same defense industries.

Reducing the deficit is not going to be pleasant nor will it immediately improve the economy. It will cost jobs. We have to do it because not to do it would produce far worse conditions.

The drama of human history is the drama of people evading reality and then being punished by the consequences of evading reality.

There is no way to create wealth except by working. That's true for individuals or for governments. Governments do not create wealth, they confiscate what's already created and redistribute it. In the private sector those, like Michael Milken, who get wealth instead of earning it, can get it only from those who did earn it. The millions held by the financial wizards came from the labor and savings of ordinary people.

For a number of years now, we've been evading reality. Now reality is going to beat hell out of us.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Baseball fans remember when the Braves weren't

Sonny Jackson. Remember that name? If you're old enough not to want to pay a lot of money to see a movie about billion-year-old large, green lizards coming to life, and you're any sort of a baseball fan, you should.

Grizzard

Sonny Jackson was the shortstop for the Braves in 1968, back when it cost a buck to get into the movies and the kid serving you the 50-cent popcorn wasn't wearing a nose ring.

Sonny Jackson played lousy shortstop for a lousy Braves team. There was a photograph of him on the wall of a popular Atlanta drinkery that summer.

Under the photograph were these words: WANTED: For impersonating a major league shortstop.

Of Sonny Jackson, it was once written, "He never made an inconsequential error."

Want some more names?

Gil Garrido. He was a Braves shortstop, too. How many All Star teams did he make?

Denver Lemaster: He was supposed to be the Braves next great pitcher, the next Warren Spahn. Bill Clinton was supposed to be the next FDR, too.

The Braves once put a battery on the field that included a one-eyed knuckle ball pitcher throwing to a one-eyed catcher.

Denny McLain: The last 30-game winner in the major leagues once played in Atlanta. Unfortunately by that time in his career, he was much closer to his prison term than winning 30 games again.

I could go on. I will. Pitcher Mike McQueen, who won 5 games in four years for the Braves (1969-'72). The time Braves outfielder Terry Harper dislocated his shoulder waving in a runner from third; the time infielder Randy Johnson injured his thumb putting on his socks; the Braves team that was 25 games out of first place by the All Star break.

Atlanta was a major league baseball garbage heap. Of Braves hitters it was said, "I've seen better swings on condemned playgrounds."

Of their pitchers, it was said, "Get the married men out of the outfield before one gets hurt and can't support his family."

It's June 1993. I looked at the National League West standings before sitting down to write this, and the Atlanta Braves were still in the pennant race. That's very unusual in Atlanta major league baseball history. Most past seasons, by this time, the Braves were at least geometrically eliminated from the pennant race, and Einstein couldn't think of an angle to get them back in it.

But now we're talking about a club that's been to two straight World Series, draws two million in attendance, calls itself America's Team, and still isn't, but the team is in the running for a third straight National League pennant.

Yet, because the San Francisco Giants are riding high in first place, the Braves' fans are in a twit.

"Bunch of losers," I heard a man say. "I'm through with 'em," said somebody else. "When do the Falcons open?"

This is why I like Cubs fans. The Cubs haven't been to a World Series since Hitler, but Cubs fans keep hope alive.

It's still very early in the baseball season. Darryl Strawberry of the Dodgers hasn't even reinjured himself yet.

Deion Sanders takes that jewelry store from around his neck so he could see the ball to hit it, and the Braves find a catcher who can hit .240, and they're back.

Not to mention the fact that Braves shortstop Jeff Blauser is going to the All Star game. If this were 25 years ago, we'd give him a downtown parade and free box seats to "Jurassic Park."

Europeans press Bosnian Muslims to accept division

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — Following the failure of an international peace plan, European Community leaders tried Monday to persuade Bosnia's Muslim president to accept the division of his country into three ethnic regions.

President Alija Izetbegovic emerged from the meeting without making a commitment to attending peace talks scheduled Wednesday on the Serb-Croat plan for dividing Bosnia. But he did not rule out negotiations.

"We have to go back to Sarajevo and we have to make consultations with both the Parliament and the government of Bosnia-Herzegovina," he told reporters who asked if he would attend peace talks that are to begin Wednesday in Geneva.

Bosnian radio reported late Monday that he had asked for a delay of the Geneva meeting for consultations back home.

Izetbegovic also criticized European and other nations for opposing an end to the arms embargo on the outgunned Muslim-led government. He said the embargo, which the Clinton administration sought to lift, has supported the Bosnian government's defeat and "the primacy of force over right."

After his meeting with the British, Belgian and Danish foreign ministers, European Community officials said Izetbegovic sought a sign of good will that the Geneva talks would not simply continue while Serbs and Croats roll back Muslim-led forces farther.

"We have the support of the European Community that they will support the integrity of Bosnia-Herzegovina as one," Izetbegovic said, referring to community statements about maintaining Bosnia's territorial integrity.

But he left Copenhagen with no concrete explanation of how the community or any other international organization would preserve a Bosnian state divided into three ethnic zones. Western nations have shied from military involvement in the Balkans conflict.

Conservatives split Japanese ruling party

TOKYO (NYT) — Ten defectors from the ruling Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) formed a new conservative party June 21, criticizing established Japanese "politics" as being incapable of "responding to conditions in the post-Cold War era."

The new party, called Shinto Sakigake (literally New Party Harbinger), consists of 10 former junior Lower House members belonging to the LDP, including leader Masayoshi Takemura. Disappointed with the LDP, all left the once-powerful party June 18.

Their defection came immediately after the Lower House voted against Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa in a no-confidence motion June 18. The opposition introduced the motion because the prime minister failed to keep his pledge to carry out political reform.

Thirty-nine of the 274 LDP members in the Lower House voted against Miyazawa, who is also president of the scandal-tainted LDP.

The Lower House was dissolved as a result, with general elections slated for July 18.

Members of the LDP's Hata faction, led by former Finance Minister Tsutomu Hata and former LDP Secretary-General Ichiro Ozawa, are also expected to leave the LDP in a few days and form another new political party on June 23.

The establishment of these new parties is expected to speed the reorganization of Japanese politics, which have been dominated by the LDP for nearly four decades. Most major opposition parties have expressed interest in cooperating with the new parties, with the possible formation of a coalition government after an LDP defeat in the general elections in mind.

While saying the party wants to be on its own, Takemura hinted at a news conference June 21 that the party may cooperate in the July general elections with the Japan New Party, a political party started by a former LDP politician last year.

However, Takemura denied that Shinto Sakigake will join hands with Hata's new party during the election campaign.

According to the party declaration released June 21, Shinto Sakigake will work on "the formation of new, responsible forces" because "established Japanese politics have lost the ability to respond to conditions in the post-Cold War era."

The party pledged to respect the current Constitution, although it "will try to review it in response to the demands of the times." It vowed it would not aspire to make Japan a military power or repeat foreign invasions.

The party statement, however, did not mention such hot issues as election system reform and political corruption.

When asked how the party will sell voters on its ideas on election reform, Takemura said, "We haven't specifically discussed the issue yet. We have saved it as an important theme."

"We won't try too hard to be different from the LDP. We would rather take it easy in a natural manner," another member said when asked about the differences in policies between the new party and the LDP.

Foreigner phobia envelops European cities

By Bernard D. Kaplan

News Analysis

Physical attacks against immigrants have occurred in France, Spain, Italy and Holland.

PARIS — The new French government's swift introduction of a "zero immigration" bill is the latest sign of the immigrant-phobia sweeping Europe.

The world's attention and condemnation have been concentrated on the violence directed at Turks and Gypsies by German skinheads and bands of neo-Nazis.

But antipathy toward foreigners also has risen dramatically across the rest of Western Europe, a development that has attracted far less media coverage. In recent months, physical attacks on immigrants, including several deaths, have occurred in France, Italy, Spain and Holland.

Winston Churchill, a Conservative member of parliament and grandson of the World War II leader, added to the polemic a few weeks ago by calling for a ban on further immigration to Britain before, as he claimed, the racial balance in many of that country's cities permanently swings in favor of Asians and West Indians.

An almost identical message is being delivered by France's Interior Minister Charles Pasqua, author of the bill expected to be passed soon by parliament here to impose what he insists will be a virtual ban on further immigration.

Pasqua, an outspoken politician known for his instinctive grasp of what makes the average French citizen tick, initiated the parliamentary debate on the legislation by declaring its purpose was to ensure that "France remains the mistress of her own identity."

The scarcely coded language was crafted to touch on what has become a crucial concern for many French people, according to political analyst Thierry Spanier.

"In spite of a poor economy and high unemployment, the anti-immigrant mood here, as well as elsewhere in Europe, is being fueled much more by cultural and social fears than by economic considerations," Spanier says.

The effort to rush tough immigration controls into the statute books is aimed at fulfilling one of the chief campaign promises of the center-right coalition that won a top-heavy victory in France's legislative elections in March.

Supreme Court upholds policy of sending Haitians home

WASHINGTON — The U.S. policy of picking up Haitian refugees in the Caribbean Sea and returning them to their strife-torn homeland does not violate federal law or a United Nations treaty, the Supreme Court ruled Monday.

In an anxiously awaited 8-1 opinion, the court ruled that even though a 1980 U.S. law on asylum and a 1967 U.N. protocol say that the government cannot forcibly return a refugee in danger of political persecution, the rules do not apply to those picked up on the high seas by the Coast Guard.

The ruling comes at a time of growing national concern about the impact of immigration on the quality of life in the United States and about whether the asylum law is acting as a magnet for thousands of newly arriving immigrants.

The arrival in San Francisco, New York and other places of tramp steamers laden with Chinese immigrants has underscored the dramatic rise in illegal immigration in recent years, as well as the difficulty that overwhelmed federal immigration authorities face in distinguishing legitimate political asylum claims from bogus ones.

Monday's ruling effectively ended the hopes of Haitians fleeing by the thousands since a Sept. 30, 1991, military coup that forced the democratically elected government of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide from power. Since then, the Coast Guard has interdicted and returned more than 30,000 to Haiti.

The court's decision is a victory for President Clinton.

President refuses to predict energy tax

Clinton says final tax bill must include money for job training, employer equipment, small business.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton refused on Monday to predict what kind of energy tax Congress will pass for deficit reduction but insisted the bill include new spending to create jobs and a targeted capital-gains tax cut.

Clinton used appearances on six radio talk shows to rally support for his economic program, which faces votes in the Senate later this week. While he touted his plan as essential for economic growth, Republicans were putting together amendments to eliminate the tax increases and force even more spending reductions.

"This is a good plan, and it's still the only real plan on the table," Clinton said from the White House in an interview on KABC, Los Angeles. "A lot of people have criticized it, but it's hard to quarrel with the results of it."

He said just having the plan debated has cut interest rates significantly and created 700,000 jobs.

The president said the final bill, whose chief aim is to reduce the deficit by about $500 billion, must provide spending for job training, employer purchases of equipment and investment in risky small businesses.

Those provisions are stronger in the bill passed by the House in May than in the version that was approved by the Senate Finance Committee last week. For example, Clinton's limited tax capital-gains tax break for investment in small business was watered down by the House but eliminated by the Senate.

"I think one thing you can look forward to (in the final bill) is a so-called venture capital gains or new-business capital gains tax where people who put their money into new businesses will be given big incentives to do so," Clinton said on WJR, Detroit.

The biggest difference between the House and Senate plans is that the House bill contains the broad energy tax requested by Clinton while the Senate plan substitutes a 4.3-cent-a-gallon increase on gasoline and other motor fuels.

The president would not say how he expects that difference to be settled.

Gore kicks off national youth service corps

SAN FRANCISCO (HNS) — Vice President Al Gore happily preached to the converted, delivering a rousing pep talk to 1,500 young adults on Treasure Island Naval Base who have been selected as the vanguard of the Clinton administration's national youth service corps.

"This is the beginning of national community service in our country," Gore told the crowd of young people, ages 17 to 25. "And you are the first. You'll be able to tell your grandchildren someday that you were here on the first day."

In his 20-minute talk at Monday's outdoor rally, Gore drew analogies between the Clinton plan and the creation of earlier public service programs, calling the start of the Peace Corps in 1961 the "electrifying event of my generation."

But, he said, the '90s are a time for solving the problems at home.

"With each day's work, you will be building America's future and building your future," he roared. "Are you ready? Let's go do it!"

The 1,475 participants in the "Summer of Service" program cheered enthusiastically as Gore spoke. They have come to Treasure Island from across the country for a weeklong training session and then will return to their communities for eight weeks of work to help disadvantaged children.

The $9 million pilot program, financed with congressional grants, is the model for Clinton's larger plan to employ 150,000 youths in year-round community work by 1997. That program was a popular Clinton campaign theme with the middle-class last year because the young people would earn educational grants in exchange for their service work. It is now before Congress.

Shuttle Endeavour lifts crew on mixed mission

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The space shuttle Endeavour and its crew of six bolted into the sky in a hail of fire and smoke Monday on a mission to retrieve an orbiting European science laboratory and to practice space-walking techniques.

After lifting off at 9:07 a.m., about 22 seconds late after an unidentified small aircraft appeared to intrude into restricted airspace near the Kennedy Space Center, the Endeavour pierced a cloud bank and began a three-day orbital chase to track and catch the satellite.

It was the Endeavour's fourth space flight, and the 56th of the shuttle program.

The satellite being pursued, the European Space Agency's European Carrier, or EURECA, weighs 9,800 pounds and holds 15 scientific instruments, including a telescope and solar monitors. The craft, deployed by the shuttle Atlantis last July, was designed to be retrieved and reused, but its sponsors say it probably will not fly again because of recent reductions in space spending by European countries.

EURECA controllers in Germany recently lowered the spacecraft's orbit to 296 miles above Earth so that the Endeavour could reach it after three days of orbital maneuvers that are to include firing its engines to adjust its orbit. Two Air Force colonels, Ronald J. Grabe, the mission commander, who is on his fourth space flight, and Brian Duffy, the pilot, who is on his second mission, will conduct the maneuvers.

On Thursday, astronauts plan to use the shuttle's robot arm to grab EURECA and lower it into the Endeavour's cargo bay for the trip home.

Although the mission is officially scheduled to last seven days, officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration plan to extend the flight by one day if there are sufficient power reserves aboard the shuttle.

The mission needs the extra time for a four-hour space walk on the fifth day, one of several such walks added to shuttle flights this year to get more experience.

The payload commander, G. David Low, who is making his third space flight, and a mission specialist, Peter J.K. Wisoff, a rookie, are to experiment with tools and procedures that astronauts will use to repair the Hubble Space Telescope later this year.

TUESDAY

DAY WATCH

TODAY'S AGENDA

Music, puppets and the magic of make-believe are a few of the tools educators are using to teach young children higher thinking skills.

Educators, parents and day care workers are invited to attend an early childhood mini-conference today which features these skills.

Midland Independent School District, and DLM (Development Learning Materials) Company are hosting the conference from 8:15 a.m.-3:30 p.m. at San Jacinto Junior High School, 1400 North 'N' St.

The conference is being offered free of charge and is available for in-service and AAT credit hours.

Sharron Lucky, an author for DLM, will present several sessions at the conference, including the "Magic of Stories, Music and Make Believe," and "Playful Puppetry with a Purpose."

Other sessions will include "Higher Thinking and 7 Intelligences" which will describe methods to teach these skills; and "cooperative learning" featuring ways to increase learning by teaching students to work together to solve problems, "Don't Throw Away that Junk," offering ideas on using recyclables in science experiments; and "Making Books Exciting."

Registration for the mini-conference is set for 7:30-8:30 a.m., followed by a 15-minute introduction session in the school auditorium.

The first session, 8:45-10:15 a.m. will include a puppetry presentation by Ms. Lucky. A "browsing break" will follow from 10:15-10:30 a.m.

Sylvia Salcido will present a higher thinking workshop 10:30-11:45 a.m. in the cafeteria. Other presentations offered at the same time in other classrooms include cooperative learning by Martha Martinez, and a presentation by Ms. Lucky.

Lunch break is set for 11:45 a.m.-12:45 p.m.

Afternoon sessions are scheduled for 12:45-1:45 p.m., and 2-3 p.m. The sessions offered after lunch will include "Don't Throw Away That Junk."

Students sweat over scholarships

■ Midland College has already received more applications than there are scholarships available.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

Monday was the first day of summer, and some Midland high school graduates have said it's not just the weather that has them sweating.

"I'm sweating it out wondering if I will get an Abell-Hanger scholarship. I've heard returning sophomores will get scholarships first, and freshman will get what's left," said one recent Midland High School graduate.

He's right. Returning Midland College sophomores will get preference when scholarships are awarded this semester.

The stakes were raised this year for the well-known scholarship, unique to Midland, which has been paying tuition for hundreds of local students since 1986. The scholarship used to be available for every high school graduate in Midland County who graduated with a grade point average of 2.75.

The scholarship, renewed annually by the Abell-Hanger Foundation, was once a given for local graduating seniors. However, in February, MC President David E. Daniel, announced that the foundation had committed to providing the funds for four years, to the tune of $1 million paid out at $250,000

Tuition to require services

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

Students receiving Midland College's Abell-Hanger scholarship will be required to volunteer 10 hours per semester serving in the community, a concept which is gaining favor nationwide.

President Bill Clinton has suggested a national service program for students to pay back tuition through volunteerism.

America's college-bound students are in favor volunteering in their communities to demonstrate their appreciation for scholarships, according to a recent survey conducted by Who's Who Among American High School Students.

According to the survey, eight out of 10 high-achieving students favor a national service program. Many indicated that they feel a deep sense of obligation to serve America and they are concerned about college costs.

"The 1980s decade of greed is over," said Paul Krouse, publisher of Who's Who. "Virtually all of these students feel an obligation to serve their country. They are volunteering now, and they want to continue to do so. A national service program seems to be a logical way to encourage these students'

Women help handicapped 'read' books

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

When Mayme K. Martin takes on a challenge, such as dealing with blindness, she straightaway attacks the problem and enthusiastically goes about her business of helping others and herself.

Four years after she was diagnosed as going blind at age 50 in 1959, Mrs. Martin founded in 1963 what has become the Recording Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped in Midland and the first free library of its type in the nation.

"I wasn't going to sit down and do nothing," recalled the widowed Mrs. Martin, who had sold her Kroenlein Geological Records Services business due to her encroaching blindness. "I wasn't going to cry about it. Laugh, and the world laughs with you. Cry, and you cry alone. And I don't want to be alone."

She decided to keep on smiling and laughing.

"I wanted to help people," said Mrs. Martin, who noted that those Midlanders called "volunteers" are eager to help their fellow citizens.

"I've come to the conclusion," she said, "that we had better take care of our own, do what you can as it comes along, and don't depend on the government. That goes back to Scripture, and it certainly goes back before FDR (Franklin Delano Roosevelt)."

Mrs. Martin's insight sped the library from dream to reality.

Jury hears testimony in Rivera case

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

Convicted murderer Gilbert Rivera Jr. was in court again Monday this time facing charges of criminal mischief alleged to have occurred in an exercise room at one of the Midland County jail facilities last December.

A jury was seated Monday morning and testimony was heard in the afternoon. The trial will continue Tuesday morning with the jury's decision anticipated by afternoon.

The 28-year-old Rivera, who was convicted in September 1992 of killing his pregnant, estranged wife on Feb. 25, 1992, was sentenced to life in prison and was doing his time in the county jail facility on the fifth floor of the courthouse when the alleged criminal mischief occurred.

Rivera is charged with destroying a telephone, a window and two cameras in the exercise room of the downtown jail facility on Dec. 31, 1992.

Testifying in his own defense, Rivera told the jury he was led to the exercise room by a deputy and proceeded to use the phone in the room, although he was on phone restriction and knew he was not supposed to use the phone.

Rivera said the deputy told him to get off the phone and he said he would when he was finished with his conversation.

City's first major shopping center is reborn, renamed

By Mella McEwen
Staff writer

Like the mythical Phoenix, Midland's first major shopping center, Dellwood Mall, is rising from the ashes of years of neglect and vacancy.

There was a time, though, when it seemed the center wouldn't survive ownership by first a group of Belgian investors and then a New York bank that acquired it in a foreclosure.

"The bank in New York was planning to level the property," recalled Mike Lewis. "They didn't want to put the money and effort into the physical improvements and leasing out the property needed to make it viable again.

"That's when we decided we'd purchase the property and try to revive it."

Lewis, along with partners Gerald Borron and Jimmy Smith, bought the mall from the New York bank and began the work of reviving it.

First, Lewis said, the group talked with officials of the HEB grocery store chain about leasing most of the property apart from the Dunlaps store.

"There wasn't enough land," he said. "They loved the site, but it wasn't enough.

"That told us our only alternative was to redo the property and try to lease it."

That decision made, the partners began a three-phase renovation. First they completely dug up and repaved the parking lot. Next, the center's exterior has been renovated and repainted and lease space built out.

Financing has been provided by Midland American Bank.

Insilco Corp. plans move to Columbus

Staff report

Officials of Insilco Corp. announced Monday that the company is leaving Midland.

It will move its corporate headquarters from Midland to a site near Columbus, Ohio.

The move, which will affect all of the approximately 30 full-time employees in the headquarters, is expected to be complete by this fall, said Insilco spokesman Grant Billingsley.

He said that as a part of the company's recent reorganization, management wanted to move the headquarters to a location nearer and more accessible to the majority of its operating locations, which are in the northeast, midwest and southeast.

Insilco, which has been headquartered in Midland since 1989, is a diversified manufacturer of specialty consumer and component products that employs approximately 5,600 worldwide in 10 separate operating units di-per year.

In an innovative move, the foundation also stipulated that scholarship recipients volunteer at nonprofit agencies for at least 10 hours per semester.

"Students should be obligated to give their best effort and give back to the community what George T. Abell has given them," said David Smith, at an April news conference announcing the changes. Smith, the executive director of the foundation, said it was notable that the Abell family chose to award scholarships to hundreds of students they have never seen.

Daniel said the community service requirement encourages students to be responsible citizens and show their appreciation for the scholarship.

He noted that the brunt of scholarships will be given to students who earned at least a 2.75 grade point average during their high school career.

Peggy Bartay, MC assistant director of financial aid, said about 384 Abell-Hanger Scholarships of $650 (or $325 per semester) will be awarded this year. Of returning sophomores, 137 have already applied to receive the scholarship. That leaves 247 scholarships for freshmen.

"It will hurt some," Ms. Bartay said, noting that the college has already received 289 transcripts from local high school students — as of Monday afternoon — for the 247 scholarships available, and the deadline to apply, July 1, is still more than a week away.

Ms. Bartay said a total of 657 students attended the college on the scholarship last year. If close to that number of students apply again this year, more than 270 could lose out on the funds.

Nonetheless, several students who called the Reporter-Telegram to ask about the changes in the scholarship, all agreed, "it's the best deal in town. It's just tougher to get."

Giving the students something else to reach for, the foundation also created the Abell-Hanger Society, based on earning a specific grade point average at the college.

Ms. Bartay said the scholarship has peaked in "bust years," specifically in 1988 and 1989.

The scholarship is available to local high school students, including Greenwood and private school graduates, who earned a 2.75 GPA or better.

Ms. Bartay said students selected for the awards will be notified about July 12 or 13. Scholarship recipients will be required to attend a July 20 "mandatory meeting" to get specifics on the scholarship and earning community service hours.

MC president Daniel noted that some students — who don't receive the Abell-Hanger Scholarship — may qualify for other forms of financial aid.

And another consolation for students who don't get any assistance with college fees, "tuition is still pretty low compared to other schools," one prospective freshman said.

JAIL: Murderer returns to court on new charges

(From 1B)

Convicted murderer Gilbert Rivera Jr. was in court again Monday this time facing charges of criminal mischief alleged to have occurred in an exercise room at one of the Midland County jail facilities last December.

A jury was seated Monday morning and testimony was heard in the afternoon. The trial will continue Tuesday morning with the jury's decision anticipated by afternoon.

The 28-year-old Rivera, who was convicted in September 1992 of killing his pregnant, estranged wife on Feb. 25, 1992, was sentenced to life in prison and was doing his time in the county jail facility on the fifth floor of the courthouse when the alleged criminal mischief occurred.

Rivera is charged with destroying a telephone, a window and two cameras in the exercise room of the downtown jail facility on Dec. 31, 1992.

Testifying in his own defense, Rivera told the jury he was led to the exercise room by a deputy and proceeded to use the phone in the room, although he was on phone restriction and knew he was not supposed to use the phone.

Rivera said the deputy told him to get off the phone and he said he would when he was finished with his conversation. The deputy testified that he then notified another officer to disconnect the phone line.

When the phone went dead, Rivera said he "just snapped" and didn't remember his actions. He said others told him that he tore the phone off the wall, threw part of it at the surveillance cameras and another part of it into a window. Damage totalled $967.

Rivera testified that although he had been placed on phone restriction on Oct. 16, deputies and jailers had routinely allowed him to use the phone as long as he did so responsibly. He said the deputy that ordered him off the phone had previously allowed him to use it despite the restriction.

He also admitted that he had problems controlling his temper, both in jail and out "in the world," but that he was "working on it."

The defense called several inmates, who were present when the incident allegedly occurred, to testify. One of those was convicted murderer Curtis Purser.

Purser said he was in the room when Rivera became angry at having the phone cut off during his converation. He said Rivera pulled the receiver from the wall, hit the cameras with it and then took the metal plate from the back of the phone and threw it through a window.

Another inmate said Rivera "just went crazy" when told to get off the phone.

Both sides rested and closing arguments will be made this morning.

MALL: First shopping center to rise again

(From 1B)

"When the Belgian investors did a quasi-remodel on the mall, their idea was to close most of the exterior entrances and force people to enter through the mall," he said, noting that the exterior facelift included outside entrances to the stores. "We wanted to go back to a strip center look, with close-in parking and easy access."

The next phase, Lewis said, will be the interior of the mall. He hopes to remove the center fountain and add an atrium with plants. And he hopes to add some small kiosks for small businesses who only want retail space for a few days a month, or for community groups to use. Lewis emphasized he wants to make the mall available for community activities.

Perhaps the most difficult change Lewis made was in the name. The center is now known as Kingsway Center.

"The only reason we changed the name," he said, "was because people felt there was something fundamentally wrong with the center. When you said Dellwood Mall, businesses turned away."

Once exterior renovations began, Lewis said response was immediate. He said he got calls from residents around the mall, glad it wasn't going to be torn down, and that there was going to continue to be retail services in the area. "There's a lot of sentiment about this center," he said.

And he got calls from potential tenants, leasing out all but two of the spaces without having to do any marketing. And he is in negotiations to lease out the remaining space.

After selling a wing to Midland's Senior Citizen Center and the former Thornton's space to Crestview Baptist Church for its Student Activities Building, Lewis has leased space to REDA Rentals and Stockton Finance, which is already occupying its store. Sonshine Corner, a Christian bookstore, will soon occupy a space in the mall, as will Slumberland Sleep Shop of Lubbock and Midland Fitness Center, which is building out the former Dellwood Lanes bowling alley.

And Family Dollar Store out of North Carolina will establish Store No. 2,000 in the former Firestone location.

"This just proved to me that this is still a good part of town for businesses," Lewis said. "This center can be viable, it just needs some tender loving care."

He said the mall is located at an intersection with one of the city's highest traffic counts and there are 12,000 homes within a one-mile radius. With 200 to 300 senior citizens visiting the center everyday and teens visiting Crestview's student center, Lewis said, the mall has a good mix of customers and, once all the spaces are occupied, the mall will offer a strong mix of goods and services.

He added that the mall's rebirth is just part of an economic growth wave headed for the Tall City.

"For the first time in 10 years," he said, "Midland is getting a lot of attention from national and regional stores. They cannot believe that, having gone through the bad times with the oil industry, that our population is still growing and prospering and retail sales are still good. They're amazed, and they figure if sales have grown in the bad times, they can't imagine how good retailing will be when the economy is really strong."

Once he concludes renovating Kingsway Center, he said, he plans to concentrate on the former Gibson's building on Cuthbert, which he recently purchased, hoping to work the same miracle on that building that he did on Midland's oldest shopping center.

LIBRARY: Handicapped hear taped books

home from 1963 to 1970, when the library's present building was constructed on property of the First Presbyterian Church at 202 N. "C" St. Building funds were donated by Midlanders, who today continue to support the free-tape lending library, which shuns any governmental financial aid.

"If this becomes government supported, I'm out of it," said Mrs. Martin, who is "not going to fool with government red tape. I've been that way since I can remember."

The library is replete with recording studios, where Midlanders who are conscientious about enunciation, inflection, emphasis and mood read works which are recorded, monitored, and reviewed to stay true to the authors' meaning.

"We try to avoid the Texas accent if possible," said Sandra "Sandy" Davis, executive director of the library. "It becomes distracting. You try to find a voice that is pleasant to listen to."

The people for whom the tapes are made "depend on us to pronounce every word correctly," Ms. Davis said, "because they can't look them up in the dictionary."

The library is designed to serve Midland-area people, regardless of age, position, or financial status, who could benefit from the library's tapes.

The library is "no respecter of persons rich or poor," Mrs. Martin said. "There are a lot of people who are discriminated against because they are rich. We do not discriminate. It's free to them."

Works on tape include fiction and non-fiction books, including biographies and autobiographies, and essays, self-help books, and technical, medical, scientific, historical, religious and geographical works. Various versions of the Bible are on tape.

"We read any of the books which the (blind and handicapped) kids need for their schooling: chemistry, physics, literature, history and a lot of math," Mrs. Martin said. "Whatever the child needed."

Dyslexic children's reading abilities are helped by their listening to the spoken word at the same time they read the corresponding written word, Mrs. Martin said.

In the library's earlier years, "the schools gave no help" by way of recording material to the children, Mrs. Martin said. The library, formerly known as the Free Tape Lending Library, filled that gap.

Mrs. Martin, the daughter of a St. Louis railroad mail clerk, recalled first becoming familiar with the problems associated with blindness after her mother went blind. Pieces of kindling wood which she was chopping flew into her eyes and injured them.

"That was the first time I knew anything about this," she said. "That's what gave me the interest" in the effects of blindness, the degrees of being legally blind, and the means of compensating for blindness.

Partaking of the written word through books or audio tapes is a life enhancer.

"You have to learn to listen, too," Mrs. Martin said.

"What I've learned over the years," Ms. Davis said, "is our volunteers love to read, and they think the world would be a horrible place without books."

People who could benefit from the library's services should not hesitate to use them.

"You have to be as willing to receive as you are to give," Mrs. Martin said. "That's awfully hard to accept. It's hard to accept others' help. I know."

Mrs. Martin, who also founded the Visual Aids News Mobile for the handicapped, said that the volunteer "work" which she does is anything but work.

"A fellow told me that if you find what you like to do in life, you'll never work a day in your life," Mrs. Martin said. "I've never worked a day in my life."

natural altruism and to help them pay for college."

Who's Who surveyed more than 400 high-achieving high school students nationwide.

It should be noted students selected for Who's Who, are partially selected based on leadership ability which includes community service.

More than half of the students surveyed (56 percent) said they are already involved in volunteer work. Nearly half (49 percent) said they were most interested in teaching or tutoring children as their community service. The second most popular choice (selected by 28 percent of respondents) was cleaning up the environment. Less popular options included helping the homeless (10 percent), working with the elderly (7 percent), and assisting the police in crime prevention (5 percent).

Less than 1 in 10 students (7 percent) said they would prefer to fulfill their community obligation by joining the Peace Corps, or serving in the military (9 percent selected that option).

"We might actually be seeing a renewed sense of commitment, caring and community," Krouse said.

It's a Party

When David and Jerri Riplinger were married It's a Party supplied the gorgeous 4-tiered white wedding cake. Embellished with peach roses and hand made mints to match, it was the centerpiece to a beautiful reception.

For more information about made to order cakes and other wedding and party supplies, call It's a Party at 570-1222

The cool, balmy days of early summer are traditionally the favorite time for couples to get married. Although this is probably one of the happiest times in peoples lives, a wedding can be the source of considerable frustration; with everything to get ready for the big day the little details can sometimes be the ones that get forgotten.

Having somebody who will take care of those little details for you can help make the great day run smoothly and give it that extra special touch.

'It's a Party' specializes in parties of all kinds, shapes and sizes and they have considerable experience in wedding receptions and other functions.

They stock decorations and gift ideas for all of those important parties, from bridal and baby showers to the wedding reception itself as well as special services such as printing invitations and making gorgeous custom cakes to order.

Being able to supply the things that help to make weddings special is second nature to It's a Party; they can deal with all the little but important things, invitations, napkins and even matchbooks can all be personalized in house, as can other types of wedding stationary to make your special day extra special.

The idea is that once you have booked the caterer and the hall, give Its a Party a call for all the other things.

Balloons, cake tops and wedding cards and wrapping papers are just a few of the different items that Its a Party stocks for weddings, so before you celebrate, give Susan Gaethje a call at 570-1222 or drop in at the Colonnade Shopping Center, 4610 N. Garfield # B2 to arrange your wedding accessories.

Children's parties, not wedding receptions are the biggest source of business for Its a Party, and they really do have everything for every conceivable style or theme.

Whether your child's party is going to be in the theme of 101 Dalmations or the Little Mermaid, or whether you want to have dinosaurs running around with your children in the front room, Its a Party can supply paper plates and napkins as well as all the other little things such as decorations, balloons, wrapping paper or novelty sweets to match whatever style you and your children have chosen.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, JUNE 22, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Get in step with bright, influential people and you will be able to scale new heights. Teamwork allows you to expand your horizons. Put money management in the hands of experts you trust. Come autumn, be careful not to go off half-cocked about a clever idea or product. Wait for a trend to develop. The more flexibility you have, the better your chances of landing a promotion or job in early 1994. Be more loving with family members.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Meryl Streep, fashion designer Bill Blass, actor Kris Kristofferson, basketball star Clyde Drexler.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You find yourself the center of attention at work. New insights result from a candid conversation with someone you respect. A political choice is nobody else's business.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stay three steps ahead of the crowd and success will be yours. Your winning personality and quick wit make you popular with members of the opposite sex. Plan for the future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are breaking new ground now, so go slow. Outside forces favor a new relationship. Pay more attention to details and you will save an employer money.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Keep an appointment with a doctor or dentist. A checkup could convince you to do some serious thinking about your lifestyle. Change what you do not like.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Meditation leads to greater self-knowledge. Doing business with a friend who has romantic intentions is not a good idea. A dream comes true. Celebrate with your favorite person.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Hard work brings big gains now. Taking a realistic approach has paid off. Your creativity is at a peak. Make the most of it! Pay attention to a strong hint from romantic partner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Harmony on the home front puts you in a cheerful mood. Tackle projects you can complete on your own. Put your best foot forward at a difficult meeting.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Keep your emotions under control even if someone drops a bombshell. You need to clear up something in your family's past. Opt for comfort if decorating your home.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): VIPs are more congenial than usual. An influential friend delivers on a promise. Your reputation shines, thanks to teamwork. Business and pleasure seem to mix nicely.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan.19): Continue to work hard even if authority figures do not seem to notice. Eventually, they will realize who is really indispensable. A romantic relationship enters a new stage.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You and your associates are in agreement about basic issues. A willingness to make intelligent concessions leads to rapid progress. Your intuition is right on target.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Harping on past mistakes could prove costly. Play down any areas of disagreement and emphasize your good will. Romance could have you on an emotional rollercoaster. Keep cool.

Do you consider yourself a "finesse maven?" If so, here's a chance for you to shine. How would you play to make six spades after a heart lead?

You have conducted a good auction to reach an excellent slam with only 29 high-card points in the combined holding. Now you have to justify your fine bidding.

You can plan to take both finesses, if you so desire, even though your only entry outside the trump suit has been knocked out by the opening lead. However, beware of the diamond finesse. If it fails, you will still have to take the club finesse. That is not true of the club finesse because, if it loses, dummy's clubs will take care of all your losers in the diamond suit.

Once you've reached that conclusion, you may as well draw trumps after winning the first trick with dummy's ace of hearts. You end up in your hand when the third round removes the outstanding trump and run the queen of clubs. It holds. What have you learned about the hand?

That depends on the skill of the defender sitting in the East seat. If he's good, you have learned absolutely nothing—it is routine to duck the king of clubs in this situation. To repeat the finesse would invite defeat if it loses. However, your slam is now secure. Continue by leading a club to the ace and your only loser is a diamond.

Actually, here your technique will reap an unexpected reward. East ducked the club despite holding only a doubleton king and when his majesty drops under the ace you score an overtrick.

Hollywood coiffeur denies first family's glitzy image

LOS ANGELES — Cristophe, President Clinton's coiffeur, wants to clear up some confusion over the so-called Hair Force One scandal.

For one thing, Clinton is "not into hair," the First Stylist said in an interview published Sunday in the Los Angeles Times.

And last month's trim on the tarmac at Los Angeles International Airport didn't cost $200, as widely reported, Cristophe said.

The Beverly Hills barber, who's fluffed the manes of celebrities such as Farrah Fawcett, Dustin Hoffman and Julio Iglesias, wouldn't divulge what Clinton's cut cost. A card posted in his salon lists his prices at from $125 to $250; the White House has said the Clintons pay for a contract with Cristophe out of their own pockets, and that cost wasn't disclosed.

Cristophe complained that reporters distorted the truth, painting Clinton as a vain, self-indulgent, Hollywood wanna-be.

"I am not saying this in a negative way," Cristophe said, "but honestly, do you really think that Hillary or Bill Clinton, from what you can see, is very concerned about their appearance?"

DALLAS — T. Boone Pickens is giving up his home — complete with seven-car garage and natural gas fueling station — in favor of high-rise living.

Pickens

If you have $8.9 million, you can have the oilman's fully renovated home, which boasts six bedrooms, a two-story trophy room and 2.3 acres of ground. The natural-gas pumping station fuels the Pickens' vehicles, which have been converted to run on natural gas instead of traditional gasoline.

Pickens, the chairman of Mesa Inc., bought the Tudor-style house in 1989 when it was listed at $2.9 million. He has poured plenty of money into sprucing it up, says Realtor Ellen Terry, who's marketing the estate.

A Mesa spokesman says the Pickenses already have bought a high-rise condominium under construction at the exclusive Mansion on Turtle Creek hotel. Condos there start for more than $2 million — interior not included.

Parking will be available, said hotel spokesman Jody Mansfield, but he couldn't give details.

NEW YORK — Michael Eisner, Regis Philbin and Kathie Lee Gifford will be joining Mickey Mouse, Donald Duck and Goofy on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House for "Disney's Symphonic Fantasy."

Eisner, the Disney Chairman and CEO since 1984, will guest narrate the opening night of the musical production July 6.

Philbin and Gifford, co-hosts of "Live with Regis and Kathie Lee," will be guest narrators of the July 8 performance of the show, featuring Disney characters and music from Disney films including, "Fantasia," "Snow White" and "Beauty and the Beast."

WASHINGTON — Love blooms in Democratic Washington: Tony Rodham, 38, the younger of Hillary Rodham Clinton's two brothers, and Nicole Boxer, 25, the daughter of Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., have become engaged and will be married in the spring. The engagement was announced on Thursday by the Boxer family in Marin County, Calif., and by Dorothy Rodham, Rodham's mother, in Little Rock, Ark. Rodham's father, Hugh Rodham, died in May.

No date or location for the wedding was announced, and spokesmen at both the White House and Senator Boxer's office refused to comment.

MADRID, Spain — Paul Bowles, the American expatriate author and reluctant traveler, was in Madrid on Monday for a performance of his musical compositions.

Bowles, 82, who has lived in Tangier, Morocco, for decades, told reporters he enjoys composing more than writing novels and short stories, for which he is more famous.

The author made the rare trip to Spain, his first in 40 years, to hear a performance of his compositions at a concert sponsored by a Spanish publishing house. "I haven't been able to listen to any live performances of my music in Morocco because they don't know it there," Bowles said.

Bowles studied composition with Aaron Copland in Berlin in the 1930s and wrote more than 50 pieces, including operas, ballets and songs, before publishing his first novel, "The Sheltering Sky," in 1949.

The book was made into a 1990 movie by Bernardo Bertolucci. Bowles said he didn't like it very much.

"The film has beautiful images, but I modestly prefer what I wrote," said Bowles, who had a cameo role in the film.

Hutchison settles into Senate amid whirlwind of controversy

AUSTIN, Texas — From the White House to the courthouse, last week was big for U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison.

She was sworn into office June 15 as the state's junior senator. By Wednesday, a grand jury investigation involving her took a turn with reports that a Houston businessman had offered prosecutors testimony that he was the middleman for a deal in which Hutchison offered a job at the Texas Treasury in exchange for a political endorsement.

Her advisers say it proved one thing: The 1994 Senate race has begun.

"It (the allegation) is clearly an attempt to tarnish Kay and soften her up for '94," said Dave Beckwith, a former Time magazine reporter and Washington media adviser whose clients have included former Vice President Dan Quayle.

Beckwith was press spokesman for Hutchison's Senate campaign, but he has stayed in Austin to spearhead a counteroffensive designed to show that high-level Democrats are pushing the investigation.

A common target for the Republicans is former Attorney General Jim Mattox, who considered but decided against running for the Senate this spring.

"The stakes are very high," Beckwith told reporters from the state's five largest newspapers at a briefing last week. "If Kay Hutchison leads the ticket for the Republicans in 1994 with 65 percent (of the vote) plus, the potential for a wipeout of the Democratic Party in the state of Texas is very, very high."

Mattox disputes allegations that he is pushing the investigation and says he has had "absolutely no contact" with Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle. Mattox and Earle have a long-running political feud that dates to 1983, when Earle unsuccessfully prosecuted Mattox on commercial bribery charges.

"My only comment was before the election," Mattox said. "I said she was going to face a grand jury investigation, which is a fact."

As Travis County district attorney, Earle, a Democrat, has special statutory authority to investigate public officials.

The grand jury is looking into both felony and misdemeanor allegations that Hutchison may have used state offices and equipment for political purposes, that she may have required state employees to perform personal chores, that records of a phone line she leased at the Treasury may have been destroyed, and that she hired former San Saba County Judge Tom Bowden in return for a political endorsement.

She has said the allegations are unfounded.

Democrats note that the allegations that Hutchison abused state employees and misused state equipment and offices were raised during the Senate election first by former state Treasury employees and then by fellow Republicans, including Rep. Jack Fields, R-Humble.

A key figure in the investigation is Bowden, who ran for Texas treasurer as a Democrat in 1990. He lost in the primary and endorsed Hutchison in the general election. She hired him for a newly created $31,000-a-year job in January 1991, only a few days after she was sworn in.

Both Hutchison and Bowden say they never discussed a job in return for the endorsement.

Bowden said he has not talked to the district attorney or appeared before the grand jury. He has offered written testimony that alleges that Democrats offered him immunity from prosecution, a job and free legal representation by Mattox if he would sign an affidavit saying only that he endorsed Hutchison and Hutchison gave him a job.

Bowden said he declined the offer because he was afraid it would be used against Hutchison.

Prosecutors are also investigating the possibility that Bowden may have illegally used campaign money or failed to report contributions in his 1990 treasurer's race.

Bowden's written statement bolsters that possibility.

Bowden says Michael and Patrick Graham, brothers connected with N-Group Securities of Houston, contributed $25,000 to his campaign in the form of two checks.

A review of Bowden's campaign finance report filed with the Texas Ethics Commission did not show the contributions.

Michael Graham is another figure crucial to the investigation. The Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Wednesday that Graham has told prosecutors that he was the middleman in the alleged Hutchison-Bowden deal.

Prosecutors, however, have not moved the allegations to the center of the investigation.

Houston jails must transfer state inmates

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Monday let stand a ruling that ordered Texas officials to remove from overcrowded Houston jails those inmates sentenced to state prisons.

The court, without comment, rejected the argument that federal courts lacked authority to rule in the long-running dispute.

The justices rejected a similar appeal last year.

The dispute began when jail inmates in Harris County, which includes Houston, sued in 1972, contending severe overcrowding violated their constitutional rights.

County officials blamed much of the problem on state officials, who they said refused to accept transfer from the county jail of many convicted felons who had been sentenced to state prison.

State officials were added as defendants in 1989, and the state was ordered to pay Harris County $12.6 million for the cost of housing state inmates in the county jail.

A federal judge ruled in 1989 that state and county officials were responsible for unconstitutional overcrowding in the county jail. The judge ordered the state and county to limit the number of county jail inmates and to transfer inmates to jails in other counties if necessary.

Texas lawmakers enacted legislation in 1989 that essentially adopted the judge's plan. But county officials contended that the state continued to leave too many of its inmates in the county jail.

Last September, a federal judge issued a new order requiring the state to reduce its share of the county prison population and pay fines of $50 per prisoner for each day the limit is exceeded.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld that ruling. It said the state knew that by refusing to accept the inmates it was causing severe overcrowding in Harris County jails.

In the appeal acted on Monday, state officials argued that federal courts "lack authority to decide these hard questions of exclusively state law."

State courts have not issued a final ruling on those questions, the Texas officials said.

Clemens out

BOSTON — Roger Clemens was placed on the disabled list Monday because of a groin strain, deepening the frustration in this half-season of injury and inconsistency for the three-time Cy Young Award winner.

Clemens, who battled an injured pitching elbow earlier this season, will be eligible to return to the embattled Red Sox — who had lost 16 of 19 entering Monday night's game against Minnesota — on July 4.

The Red Sox, who placed Clemens on the 15-day disabled list retroactive to June 19, said they will purchase the contract of minor-league pitcher Aaron Sele to replace Clemens.

Young's chance

NEW YORK — Anthony Young's chance to break his 22-game losing streak has been moved up a day.

Young, one short of tying Cliff Curtis major-league record, will pitch for the New York Mets against Montreal on tonight instead of Wednesday. He is 0-8 this season.

The Mets said Dwight Gooden was scratched from his start because of stiffness in his right shoulder. Frank Tanana will pitch for the Mets on Wednesday.

McHale has job

MINNEAPOLIS — Retired Boston Celtics star Kevin McHale will return to Minnesota to work with the Timberwolves and add commentary to game broadcasts.

Agassi starts defense

Defending champion Andre Agassi is in typical hair flying and winning form after the first day at Wimbledon, beating Bernd Karbacher.

■ Armed with a new tomahawk chop serve, Andre Agassi is off and running again at Wimbledon.

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Andre Agassi brandished his new tomahawk chop serve Monday at Wimbledon, racket cocked high and crooked with as little backswing as most beginners.

It looked odd but worked just fine for an opening-round, straight-sets victory featuring 10 aces, his highest total ever in a match here and one more than he had in winning the championship a year ago in two more sets.

The top three women, Steffi Graf, Martina Navratilova and Aranxta Sanchez Vicario, open play today. Fourth-seeded Gabriela Sabatini beat American Carrie Cunningham, 7-5, 6-2.

Agassi slugged the same old punishing groundstrokes, full-strength forehands with a black brace on his tender right wrist, leaping two-fisted backhands that skidded off the grass.

Wasn't he supposed to be rusty and overweight? He sure didn't look it.

Agassi staged a confident comeback in the first set Monday and got better the longer he played, saying he never felt the slightest pain and wouldn't have minded going 10 sets on this sun-kissed day.

"I didn't want to leave the court," he said, truly meaning it.

And at the end of an emotional and triumphant return in defense of his title, after winning his first match since April, Agassi blew a kiss to the adoring crowd on Centre Court, bowed deeply to the Royal Box and punched the air in sheer delight.

AP Laserphoto

No. 4 seeded Gabriela Sabatini ...survivor of first round

"It was the second best feeling of my life," he said, beaming after his 7-5, 6-4, 6-0 romp over dangerous but erratic serve-and-volleyer Bernd Karbacher. "The first one was winning it."

Nothing may ever rival for Agassi that moment a year ago when he survived a blitz of 37 aces by Goran Ivanisevic to win his first Grand Slam title on a surface he once disdained as unsuited to his baseline game.

Now he looks as comfortable here

Tuinei visits Midland for youth grid camp

■ A stream of Dallas Cowboys is expected for Kent Oil/Coca-Cola football camp this week, but turnout Monday was smaller than expected.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant sports editor

Mike Hughes, director of this week's Kent Oil/Coca-Cola Football Camp admits not all has gone quite as planned, but Hughes and the rest of the coaching staff at the camp being held this week at Midland Lee still have two goals in mind that they feel they can attain: Teaching football and having a good time.

The camp drew only about 100 kids, from second to eighth graders, which is less than half the number for which camp coordinators had hoped. Previous camps in Dallas and Plano this year drew 250 youth football players.

In addition, Dallas Cowboy offensive guard Kevin Gogan missed his Monday flight to Midland from Seattle. Gogan was scheduled to appear with tackle Mark Tuinei, who did appear for Monday's session. Gogan has been rescheduled to appear later in the week, along with fellow members of the 1993 Super Champion Cowboys, including Jimmie Jones and Tony Tolbert on Tuesday, Mike Saxon and Lin Elliot on Wednesday, and Vinson Smith and Larry Brown on Friday.

"This is just my way of giving back," the affable Tuinei said, "and it gives me a chance to mess around with the kids. I've got 16 nieces and nephews, so I love kids.

"Kids today, they're a whole different breed. Very inquisitive. Asking me all about Troy's (Aikman) surgery and when he's going to be back. Asking me if we ate Buffalo meat before the Super Bowl. Kids are great."

Tuinei has already done two camps this summer, helping fellow Cowboy Jay Novacek, as well as Al Noga, of the Minnesota Vikings, in his camp in Hawaii, where Tuinei grew up and attended college.

Tuinei said all he knows about Aikman's surgery is "that it was successful. It ought to relieve some of his pain. I know he was in pain. He never was the most flexible person, as far as (physical) flexibility is concerned."

Following his Monday afternoon session, Tuinei flew to Cowboy headquarters at Valley Ranch where he and several other teammates will complete physical testing this week. Cowboy veterans report to St. Edward's University for training camp in three weeks, beginning July 14.

"Our main goal is to teach the kids some basic skills and to have fun," said Hughes, also the offensive coordinator at Plano High School.

Hughes blamed a lack of advance promotion for the lack of numbers at the

Swoopes drained

LUBBOCK — Incessant dribbles, giggles and shrieks from a hundred preteen girls echo through a Texas Tech gym this muggy summer morning.

Sheryl Swoopes watches the clumsy layups and haphazard passes with a smile.

Swoopes had yelled herself hoarse helping coach the girls' camp. But this morning she is relaxed and joking, her 6-foot frame sprawled on low bleachers.

"Some of these little girls here are better than I was in Little Dribblers," the national Division I player of the year says. "I tell them that, and they say, 'No way.'

"I tell them you never know — you could be better."

Historic Threepeaters need NBA role defined

By Bill Barnard
AP Basketball Writer

PHOENIX — Now that the Chicago Bulls have won their third straight NBA title, the question must be asked: "How do the Bulls stack up against the best teams in NBA history?"

"How many did the Celtics win in a row, eight?" Phoenix star Charles Barkley asked midway through the championship series. "When the Bulls win eight in a row, then they'll be the greatest. They've got a long way to go."

But no means is Boston, which won the NBA title each year from 1959 through 1966, universally considered the best team in NBA history.

The Celtics of that era generally get no more respect than the 1972 Los Angeles Lakers or the 1967 or 1983 Philadelphia 76ers, each of whom shone brightly for one year but couldn't manage even a repeat title, much less three straight.

Michael Jordan, who joined Magic Johnson as the only three-time MVPs in the finals, sees the Bulls' accomplishment as significant because it surpassed the level of excellence of his contemporaries — Johnson, Larry Bird and Isiah Thomas.

Bird's Celtics won three titles in the 1980s, but never two straight. Johnson's Lakers won five championships, including 1987-88, and Thomas' Detroit Pistons won in 1989-90.

"Magic, Bird, Isiah never did this, so this meant a lot for us to do it a third time," Jordan said. "To say we won three in a row and I was part of that team means a lot to me."

Jordan, whose 41-point average broke Rick Barry's finals mark of 40.8, says Chicago deserves consideration because the Celtics and Minneapolis Lakers of the 1950s and

Diablos slip past Angels

Staff report

EL PASO — The Midland Angels dropped its first game of the second half, an 8-6 decision to the El Paso Diablos here Monday night.

Colin Charland (2-1) picked up his first loss as an Angel.

In the third inning, El Paso's Duane Singleton led off with a single, stole second and scored on Wes Weger's single to left to tie the game, 1-1. One batter later, Jeff Cirillo hit a two-run homer to left field for a 3-1 El Paso lead.

In the fifth, the Diablos broke open the game with three runs. Ed Smith hit a bases loaded double to left to score Weger, Mike Basse, Cirillo to make the score 6-1.

Midland mounted a mild comeback as John Jackson doubled to start the sixth. One batter later, Jeff Kipila hit his third homer since being sent down from Vancouver, a line drive over the left field fence, to cut the score to 6-3.

In the seventh, Brian Grebeck walked with one out. Emmitt Cohick singled and Jackson doubled to score Grebeck and trim the lead to 6-4.

In the ninth, Cohick and Jackson drove in runs for the final 8-6 score.

Game 4 the of series is tonight with an 8 p.m. CDT start. John Fritz (7-2, 3.24) will start for Midland and Scott Taylor (5-6, 3.70) will start for the Diablos.

ANGEL NOTES: P.J. Forbes was named the Texas League Hitter of the Week for the week of June 14-20. In seven games he was 15-of-29 (.517), scored 11 runs, drove in five runs, five doubles and one home run.

Trying times for Pirates

PITTSBURGH (AP) — These are trying times for the Pittsburgh Pirates.

General manager Ted Simmons, recently discharged from the hospital following a heart scare, resigned Saturday night for health reasons.

That was the latest setback for the Pirates, who are having a bumpy ride this season after coming within one out of an NL pennant last season.

Barry Bonds, Bobby Bonilla and Doug Drabek — stars who helped Pittsburgh earn the best record in the majors from 1990-92 — are gone now. And the Pirates are struggling, taking a 32-35 record into Monday's against the Chicago Cubs.

Manager Jim Leyland, pitching coach Ray Miller and the few returning big names like Andy Van Slyke and Jay Bell saw it coming. Team president Mark Sauer and the man who privately controls the purse strings and the destiny of the franchise — former chief executive officer Doug Danforth — didn't.

Everyone knew in spring training there was no power, virtually no relief pitching and little prospect of any farm system prospects contributing in the near future. Yet the front office plunged into the season with a roster loaded with wannabes, never-weres and never-will-bes, determined to prove the Pirates wouldn't be bullied by millionaire players and their agents.

This season the Pirates have been bullied by the Florida Marlins, who swept them in a four-game series last weekend that was the most embarrassing performance by Pittsburgh since a 104-loss season in 1985. Despite some weekend success against the lowly New York Mets, the Pirates are out of the race.

Leyland knows it didn't have to be this way. The team that won 289 games the last three years didn't have to be systematically dismantled just to prove a point; a franchise that won three straight division titles didn't have to be totaled. But it was.

Other major league teams watched salaries spiral — $43.5 million here, $33 million there — and refused to pay them. But they still managed to remain competitive, astutely combing other rosters for bargains like Andres Galarraga and Ellis Burks.

Braves cool Phillies

■ National League Roundup

PHILADELPHIA — Sid Bream had four hits and drove in three runs as the Atlanta Braves beat the Philadelphia Phillies 8-1 Monday night for their third straight victory.

Greg Maddux (7-5) gave up seven hits and one run in eight innings for the victory before Mike Stanton finished.

Curt Schilling (8-2) lasted only 2⅓ innings for the Phillies, giving up eight hits and five runs as the Braves snapped the Phillies' three-game winning streak.

The start of the game was delayed 2 hours and 7 minutes by rain.

The Braves took a 4-0 lead in the second with five hits, including a pair of doubles and Deion Sanders' two-run triple. Terry Pendleton opened things with a double, extending his hitting streak to 11 games, and scored on Bream's one-out double. Mark Lemke singled home Bream, advanced to second on Maddux's single and both scored when Sanders tripled.

Cardinals 4, Marlins 3

MIAMI — Joe Magrane won his fourth consecutive start and Gregg Jefferies hit his 10th home run, leading St. Louis past Florida.

The Cardinals climbed to 10 games over .500 for the first time this season. Florida has lost seven of eight since sweeping a four-game series against Pittsburgh.

Magrane (6-6) gave up five hits in eight innings. He allowed only one earned run — on Jeff Conine's first-inning homer — and retired 12 in a row during one stretch.

Lee Smith gave up two hits and a run in the ninth but still earned his 24th save, the most in the majors. Orestes Destrade drove home the run with a sacrifice fly, but with the potential tying run at second base, Junior Felix struck out and Dave Magadan lined out to right to end the game.

The red-hot Jefferies put St. Louis ahead in the first inning with a solo home run, his 10th of the season. It was just the third homer against Luis Aquino (4-5) in 74⅓ innings this season.

Jefferies also singled and is hitting .448 in his past 16 games.

Todd Zeile doubled home two runs against Aquino in the third, then scored on a single by Tom Pagnozzi.

Cubs 5, Pirates 1

PITTSBURGH — Jose Bautista won as a starter for the first time in four years, pitching four-hit ball over eight innings to lead Chicago over Pittsburgh.

Sammy Sosa's three-run triple followed Bautista's first major league hit in a four-run second inning as the Cubs stopped Pittsburgh's four-game winning streak, a season high. The game took just 1 hour, 56 minutes.

Bautista (2-1), making only his second start in 21 appearances this season, retired his first 10 batters and didn't allow a runner to second until Jeff King's leadoff double in the fifth. Ben Shelton's first career home run came in the eighth and ended Bautista's bid for his first career shutout.

Bautista, making only his 37th major league start in 13 seasons of professional baseball, struck out seven and walked none.

Mets 8, Expos 3

NEW YORK — Bobby Bonilla homered and drove in four runs, and Dave Telgheder won in his first major-league start as New York beat Montreal, stopping a six-game losing streak.

Bonilla hit a two-run double in the first off Brian Barnes (2-2) and added a two-run home run in the fifth off Jeff Fassero following a 1-hour, 10-minute rain delay. It was Bonilla's 18th home run and his third game this season with four or more RBIs.

Rockies 5, Reds 4

DENVER — Dante Bichette's run-scoring single with two outs in the 10th inning gave Colorado a victory over Cincinnati.

After consecutive singles by pinch-hitter Daryl Boston and Alex Cole with one out, Bichette hit Jeff Reardon's pitch over the head of center fielder Bobby Kelly into right-center field.

Rockies reliever Steve Reed (3-2) got the win for the second straight game. Reardon (1-1), who relieved starter Jose Rijo in the ninth, took the loss.

■ AL Roundup

KANSAS CITY — Chuck Finley won his third straight decision and the California Angels beat the Kansas City Royals 4-3 Monday night, creating a three-way tie for first place in the AL West.

The Angels, Royals and Chicago White Sox are all 35-32.

Chili Davis hit a two-run double in the first inning and Greg Myers hit a solo homer in the second for the Angels. Gary DiSarcina singled home another run in the seventh inning for a 4-2 lead.

Finley (8-5) gave up two runs on nine hits in six innings. He struck out five and walked three in beating the Royals for the third straight time.

Julio Valera relieved to start the seventh. Steve Frey got four outs for his eighth save.

Athletics 5, Mariners 3

SEATTLE — Craig Paquette hit a two-run single in the eighth inning that gave Oakland a 5-3 victory over Seattle.

Oakland has won three of four against the Mariners this year. The A's have beaten Seattle in 15 of 17 games in the past two seasons.

Steinbach doubled home an insurance run in the ninth.

White Sox 7, Rangers 6

CHICAGO — Jack McDowell, backed by home runs by Frank Thomas and Robin Ventura, struggled to his major league-leading 11th victory and Chicago defeated Texas.

Carlton Fisk of the White Sox played his 2,225th game as a catcher, tying the major league record held by Bob Boone. Fisk is expected to break the mark tonight with a start against Texas.

Thomas hit a three-run homer, his 13th, capping a four-run second inning. Ventura hit his 12th off Kevin Brown (5-6) in the fifth inning.

Red Sox 6, Twins 3

BOSTON — Billy Hatcher hit a three-run homer and Boston, after waiting through a two-hour rain delay, broke a four-game losing streak.

The loss was the seventh straight for Minnesota, which has been outscored 43-15 during its slump.

Indians 3, Brewers 0

CLEVELAND — Tommy Kramer pitched 7⅓ scoreless innings and Carlos Baerga and Albert Belle homered as Cleveland beat Milwaukee.

Kramer (3-2) outpitched Jaime Navarro and sent the Brewers to their third straight loss, limiting them to four hits, walking three and striking out four. Jeremy Hernandez got the last five outs, fanning four, for his second save.

Navarro (5-4) gave up three runs and eight hits in his third complete game but saw his personal five-game winning streak end.

SWOOPES: Celebrity status makes champ more mature

Lubbock can't seem to forget her 47 points against Ohio State, a Final Four single-game scoring high.

Swoopes was doused in attention. Best of all were the White House accolades, the standing ovation from the Legislature, the "What's up?" from idol Michael Jordan at a Chicago Bulls workout.

"It's been wild and crazy," she said, declaring herself physically and emotionally drained.

Everyone wants to buy her dinner, call her at home, get her autograph. Anonymous trips to the mall or grocery store aren't possible.

"I only mean to go for 10 minutes but I end up staying for an hour. I don't have any privacy anymore," she said.

Celebrity status — tiresome as it may be sometimes — has helped her become more mature and patient, she said.

"If I'm not in the mood to sign something, I just stay home."

In April, Swoopes became just the third woman drafted by a United States Basketball League team. The Daytona Beach Hooters, who made Swoopes the 44th selection overall in a 48-player field, said the move wasn't a publicity stunt.

Swoopes didn't take up the offer.

"It was a great honor, but I wouldn't have gotten to play," she said. "I would have been taking them (male players) water, giving massages."

Instead, her crowded calendar this summer includes finalizing a contract to play in a women's basketball league in Europe. Swoopes, 22, said she wants to finish her degree at Texas Tech after about one year in Italy.

Then, she hopes, she will make the 1996 U.S. Olympic basketball team. Her right knee has healed after being injured in the 1992 Olympic tryouts.

Swoopes envisions herself coaching college basketball one day.

In the meantime, several endorsement deals could come through within weeks. She gave no details.

Women's basketball legend Nancy Lieberman-Cline, who is handling Swoopes' marketing and promotions, said Swoopes gave the sport a marquee name.

"People want to see Magic and Michael and Chrissie and Sugar Ray. Those people are magnets," Lieberman-Cline said. "They draw attention and then you see everybody else."

Some observers have estimated Swoopes could earn about $200,000 in her first year overseas from her salary and endorsements. Leiberman-Cline declined to make a prediction.

Swoopes says she is frustrated that men have more opportunities to play professionally, and to make more money doing so.

Even so, thoughts of the future leave her "excited and scared and nervous."

But memories of the past remain fond.

Swoopes often talks about growing up in Brownfield, playing basketball with her brothers and other boys. She remembers shooting by herself and talking aloud through the solitary drills. At night she would practice ball-handling in the dark.

The little girl's awkwardness turned to poise and precision few defenders could stop. She developed her blink-of-an-eye moves, subtle pauses and ability to nail clutch baskets.

She was intense and driven to please her mother, Louise, a single mother.

"I wanted to show people just because I didn't have a dad there, that I could succeed," she said. "I wanted her to be proud of me."

Pro athletes paid just like average Joe

By Carlton Thompson
The Houston Post

HOUSTON — Imagine if you can going to the bank armed with an $80,000 paycheck.

Not $80,000 for the year, or even $80,000 for the month. Try $80,000 every two weeks.

For most, that's a bi-weekly figure too high to conceptualize. However, that's roughly what your favorite million-dollar baseball player hauls in twice a month.

"Most people don't realize it, but ballplayers are paid just like the average joe," said Chicago-based agent Barry Meister, who represents Mark Portugal, Xavier Hernandez, Juan Agosto and Tom Edens of the Astros.

"The procedure is basically the same. It's just that the numbers are so much bigger. But the deductions are also a lot bigger."

Most major league teams offer players the option of having their salaries paid over a six-, nine- or 12-month period. Meister said most players opt for the six-month plan.

Take a player whose annual base salary is $1 million. If he chooses to be paid over a six-month span, his bi-weekly checks will total $83,000 and some change before ded tions.

Incentive clause bonuses are paid at the end of the year in one lump sun.

"People would be surprised how normal the financial life of a ballplayer is," Meister said. "They're concerned about the tax codes and paying bills just like everyone else is.

"I recently talked to a player who makes $2 million a year and he was concerned because his washer and dryer just went out. Their concerns are just like ours, just on a larger scale."

Some players prefer to be paid by direct deposit, while others get their checks hand-delivered by the team's traveling secretary somewhere around the 1st and 15th of the month.

Trying to deposit a check that large tends to turn a few heads at the bank.

"I can remember going to the bank with a $10,000 check and having the teller say 'What are you doing with that?,'" said former Astros relief ace Joe Sambito, who now works for Alan and Randy Hendricks' sports management firm. "I eventually explained it to them, but they were a little hesitant to take it."

In addition to the large salaries players receive, major league rules require teams to give each player $60 a day in per diem while the team is on the road. The per diem is considered taxable income.

There are even times when the ballclub will pick up the tab for a player who has been fined, but that isn't usually the case.

"When a player is fined, he usually just writes a check to the league office," said Tommy Tanzer, who represents Astros center fielder Steve Finley. "And if a player gets suspended, a lot of teams refuse to pay him for the games he missed. The policy differs from team to team."

There was a time when deferred payments were popular, but new tax laws have made that practice almost nonexistent. With deferred payments, the player would agree to take less money up front for a greater return over the long haul.

"You don't see as many deferred payments as you used to," Meister said. "The way the tax laws are now, it's just too difficult to defer compensation."

In the absence of deferments, players have found other ways to make their money work for them.

Although most agents have an accounting background, they usually recommend a financial adviser to assist with investments. Still, the agent serves as a second-line of defense.

"Almost exclusively, players are involved in investments," Meister said. "I think the best thing you can do is recommend a qualified financial adviser who will see to it that the player makes very conservative investments. I don't leave them at risk. The temptation is to make risky investments because they bring a large return. But remember, you could also lose big.

"As an agent, you really serve as a protective person for your player. It's to the players's advantage to have solid, trustworthy people working for him."

Tanzer said he is not surprised when he hears about the financial struggles of some athletes.

"A lot of players don't want to pay someone to look after their money," he said. "They try to handle it themselves and all of a sudden it's gone because they don't know what they're doing."

National Football League teams vary in the way they pay players. Most teams hand out checks weekly over the course of the season.

Ryan would shake baseball

By Nolan Ryan
N.Y. Times News Service

The other day, in a news conference at Anaheim Stadium, somebody made a reference to the fact that we don't have a commissioner, and I said I would apply for the job.

Actually, the remark was made in jest, I have other plans for when I retire. But, if I just happened to be the commissioner, I might have a few ideas about what needs to be done.

The main thing is we definitely need a governing board and a strong commissioner and, without one right now, it might be a good time for baseball to restructure the position.

A committee made up of represenatives of the Players Association and the owners should select the commissioner and it's a position that should be paid for by half of each side.

If they have somebody that they both agree upon, then the comissioner has full power over the players and the owners and, that way, everybody has to be held responsibe.

A comissioner has to be able brings some discipline to the game and be able govern effectively. He can't allow certain strong owners to have influence over others and he has to be able to deal with the strong personalities that you have in baseball.

The only way you can do that is by acting in the best interests of baseball and not letting personalities or egos to get involved in the situation.

The players and the owners have to work together in the best interests of the game to be more compatible and not so antagonistic toward each other. They need to make a better effort to come to an agreement on things and not let a deadline become a bargaining tool. They can't let things develop to a point where it becomes emotional, tempers flare up and you have the threat of a strike or a lockout and all that bad publicity that comes with it.

One thing that has to be addressed is the problems of the small markets and the revenue they generate compared with the large markets. There's going to have to be some kind of revenue sharing so that the smaller markets are able to compete effectively.

And if they can't compete effectively on that basis, if a city is unable to support a major-league baseball team, then maybe they should be allowed to move the franchise to a place like Tampa-St. Petersburg, (Fla.) where they seem to have strong support for major-league baseball.

I think there are a lot of areas we need to address. Baseball seems to have more issues up in the air than ever.

One thing we need to do is find a better way of promoting both the game and and the players.

We need to get our players out in front of the public. If kids are looking up to major-league players, then I'm a firm believer that we need to promote the type of people that will send a good message to the public and present the image that this is a family game.

I'm for realignment because of the number of teams that we've reached, the travel and the number of games that we're playing. Through realignment, we can reduce the physical stress and strain of travel.

We can also keep fan interest higher with more teams in the playoffs and sell more tickets, which is tough when you don't have a pennant race going, like in the National League East, where the Philadelphia Phillies have such a big lead. If it stays that way after the All-Star break, it's going to hurt attendance.

I'd also like to see some interleague play from the standpoint that our fans get to see some different teams that they normally don't get to see. It can stimulate some regional interest and it gives the players a chance to break up the monotony of going to the same cities all the time. You could have each team play four other teams from outside their own league and have a home-and-away series.

I'd like to see them unite the umpires into one set and have them rotated throughout both leagues so you see very little of the same crew, maybe twice through the whole year.

I'd like to see them do away with the designated hitter and go back to pitchers hitting in the American League, another thing that would help standardize the game.

I know people are concerned about the influence of television — what happens with the schedule and what time teams play. But the electronic media has put so much money in the game and the game has become so dependent upon on that resource, I understand that the television networks and the cable companies are going to call the shots now.

Northern's Mets win LL City title

The Northern Mets won the Midland Junior Baseball Association's Joe Mowles Little League City Tournament title over the weekend with a 14-2 win over the Northern Braves, a regular season foe.

Greg Moore was the winning pitcher with a one-hitter while Blake Morgan hit a home run and had three RBIs. Blake Johnston and Michael Glover delivered doubles in the win.

Chance Finley, Mark Stoltz and Jeff Thomas pitched for the Braves.

The Mid City Braves placed third and the Mid City Angels were fourth. Twenty-nine Little League teams played in the double elimination tournament, which began on June 4.

The Northern Braves earned the right to face the Mets with a 1-0 win over the Mid City Braves behind the pitching of Blake Crume. The Mid City Braves eliminated the Mid City Angels with a 1-0 win as Justin Stumbaugh recorded the victory.

Golfers qualify

ODESSA — Four of 14 teams qualified in the Pinehurst Qualifier golf tournament at The Club at Mission Dorado Sunday. They will advance to Pinehurst in August.

The team of Gary Johnson, Gary Mason, Donald Thomas and Royal Caswell combined for a 62 for the best qualifying score while three teams had a 65.

The other teams were James Newton, Jay Floyd, Ted Smith and Tom Hill; Darren Seglem, Scott Morroquin, Jim Brown and Dr. O'Neill; and the team of Larry Phillips, Glen Elliot, Frank Bice and Jim Arnold.

Hanley turns ace

Tony Hanley had a hole-in-one Saturday, but was this on the wrong course?

Hanley, a member of Green Tree Country Club, aced a 169-yard hole with a five-iron at Midland Country Club while playing with Tom Johnson and Bob Koen.

Lakers trade for Bowie

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — The New Jersey Nets traded center Sam Bowie and a conditional second-round draft pick to the Los Angeles Lakers on Monday for center Benoit Benjamin.

Nets general manager Willis Reed, who coached Benjamin at Creighton, said New Jersey is getting a physical, low-post threat who is four years younger than Bowie and who could benefit from a "change of scenery."

Reed said he expects the 7-foot Benjamin can average in double figures in scoring and rebounding, taking some pressure off power forward Derrick Coleman.

"We have just acquired one of the more physical centers in the league," Reed said. "He possibly can play for us five or six years, which gives us a shot to have a nucleus for quite a long time.

"Definitely, he has not reached his potential. Now, he probably understands the pro game a little better."

Asked what effect the deal would have on the Nets' effort to re-sign center Chris Dudley, Reed said he still wants Dudley. He added re-signing him looks increasingly unlikely as a July 1 deadline looms for Dudley to become an unrestricted free agent.

The 7-1 Bowie, 32, averaged 9.1 points and 7.0 rebounds in 79 games last season. He has career averages of 12 points, 8.2 rebounds and 1.9 blocks.

"Obviously, in our business these things occur," Bowie said. "I'll miss my teammates. I'm excited I'm going to an organization with a first-class commitment to winning."

Bowie said he was proud of his time with the Nets.

Prices slip

NEW YORK — Crude oil prices finished slightly lower on Monday after a late burst of selling.

July delivery of West Texas Intermediate settled at $18.62 per barrel, down a nickel, at the New York Mercantile Exchange. The August delivery contract, which fell 6 cents to settle at $18.91 per barrel, dominated futures trading Monday because the July contract expires on Tuesday.

Prices moved about 24 cents above Friday's close after reports surfaced that the U.N. secretary general told Iraqi representative Tariq Aziz that Iraq must comply with U.N. resolutions before economic sanctions were lifted.

NGPA to meet

The Natural Gas Producers Association will meet Thursday at the Petroleum Club beginning at 11:45 a.m.

Guest speaker will be Ed Capen, who will speak on "The Natural Gas Markets' Common Denominator — Chaos." He retired from Atlantic Richfield in 1992 after 35 years service. During his career with Arco, he held various positions, including research geophysicist, director of research planning and evaluation, director of decision analysis for the exploration and production company, manager of capital administration and expense c ontrol for the corporation in Los Angeles, senior exploration advisor and distinguished management advisor.

Dollar surges

NEW YORK — The dollar surged by nearly a yen Monday in an extension of Friday's powerful rally, as expectations persisted for political uncertainty in Japan and economic stagnation in Germany.

In New York, the dollar fetched 110.65 yen, up from late Friday's 109.75 yen.

The dollar also gained new ground against the German mark Monday. It continued to rise in New York before slipping somewhat in late trading to close at 1.6875 German marks, up from 1.6805 late Friday.

The British pound fell to $1.4886 in New York, more than late Friday's $1.4970.

Stocks gain

NEW YORK — The stronger dollar helped lift the stock market Monday by further diminishing fears of inflation and higher interest rates.

But investors remained skittish, paying more attention to individual company news than to any broader trends in the market, analysts said.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 16.05 points to 3,510.82.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 11 to 8 on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Nasdaq composite index fell 0.85 to 688.74. The NYSE composite index rose 1.25 to 246.19, while the American Stock Exchange market value index fell 0.18 to 436.64.

Clean Air Act suffocates refineries

■ For nation's refiners, Federal Clean Air Act represents triple financial whammy that increases costs, headaches.

N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — In the refining business, Clean Air is a dirty joke.

The new federal regulation designed to clear the nation's air will cost oil refiners tens of billions of dollars over the next several years, industry officials say.

And with refining profit margins languishing, the result could be the demise of dozens more refineries nationwide.

"The refining industry is being challenged more than at any other time in its history," said Kevin Lindemer, director of petroleum markets for Cambridge Energy Research Associates.

The landmark Clean Air Act of 1990 created a complex schedule of federal regulatory changes aimed at substantially reducing the amount of pollution being dumped into the air annually.

For the nation's refiners, the Clean Air Act represents a triple financial whammy.

First, they must reduce emissions of pollutants from their own operations.

Second, they must restructure their plants to produce a reformulated gasoline blend for use in nine cities with the dirtiest air.

And third, they must prepare for losing sales to alternative fuels.

Just how much money the refining industry will have to come up with to comply with the new environmental rules is difficult to figure. The National Petroleum Council — made up of industry executives and government leaders — has spent more than two years trying to calculate the financial repercussions of the legislation.

While the petroleum council has not released a draft of its study, sources say the report predicts the industry will spend nearly $36 billion through the end of the decade to comply.

The new regulations come at a tough time for the industry.

Refining margins — the difference between the amount of money a refinery spends to buy and refine crude oil and the price at which the company can sell the refined product — are very slim.

Refiners are running their plants at full tilt — an average 92 percent of capacity — to produce as much profit as possible. The result is an oversupply that is further depressing margins.

In response, refiners are winnowing out older, less efficient plants.

Since the beginning of last year, 24 refineries have shut their doors or are scheduled to close, said Pete Killen, executive vice president of Wright Killen & Co., a Houston-based management consulting firm.

Together, those closed facilities had refined about 834,000 barrels of oil per day, nearly 6 percent of the nation's total capacity.

Of the 170 remaining refineries in the United States, Wright Killen officials have identified nine more as "most likely to fail," with another 12 placed on Wright Killen's endangered list.

On Oct. 1, a law will go into effect requiring refiners to lower the amount of sulfur in diesel fuel made for trucks and other vehicles driving on U.S. highways.

To comply with that regulation, a typical 50,000-barrel-a-day refinery would have to spend between $10 million and $30 million on the necessary sulfur-removing equipment, with the price tag "depending on whether you revamped an old unit or bought a new one," Warn said.

A refinery of that size would produce about 18 million barrels of diesel in a year's time. But with refining margins being squeezed so much, Warn says it would be difficult to get a dollar per barrel.

AAPG elevates 'Toby' Carleton

■ Midlander becomes second area geologist in past 10 years to lead association.

Staff report

Carleton

Midland geologist A.T. "Toby" Carleton has been named president-elect of the 33,000-member American Association of Petroleum Geologists.

Carleton, president of Tocor Investments and Tocor Exploration, will serve a year as president-elect and will assume the 1994-95 presidency of AAPG. He becomes the second Midland geologist in the past 10 years to lead the association.

Midland geologist Bernold M. "Bruno" Hanson served as president of the AAPG in 1986-87. He is currently president of the AAPG Division of Environmental Geosciences, a newly formed group devoted to bringing geological and professional information to both environmental and petroleum geologists.

Carleton, a Houston native, received both his bachelor's degree and master's degree from the University of Texas at Austin, coming to Midland in the 1950s with The Ohio Oil Co., now Marathon. He then joined Zapata Petroleum Corp., rising to the position of chief geologist. he became an independent geologist and also was with Structurmaps Ltd. in Midland before joining Pogo Producing, becoming vice president and western division manager. He later left Pogo to form his own companies.

He has been active in various professional organizations and previously served on the AAPG Executive Committee and chairman of the House of Delegates.

The AAPG is the world's largest geoscience organization with 33,000 members in 107 countries.

Northwest cuts fares to raise badly needed fast cash

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's three largest airlines cut fares Monday by as much as 30 percent on certain domestic routes, matching a discount by financially troubled Northwest Airlines.

United, American and Delta cut their fares on the routes where they compete with the Minnesota-based airline, which reduced its prices Saturday. In Detroit and Minneapolis, where Northwest is dominant, the discounts are smaller — closer to 20 percent.

That good news for summer travelers reflects Northwest's desperate effort to raise money in case it has to file for bankruptcy.

"This is further evidence they are scrounging for all the cash flow they can get," said Phil Brannon, an analyst at the New York investment firm of Mabon Securities Corp.

Higher fares would help the airline's outlook, but the company needs lots of quick cash to pay its bills and provide a cushion if it does seek court protection from creditors while reorganizing its finances.

The Northwest ticket sale, its third since the spring, gives passengers until Friday to buy tickets for travel that must be completed by Sept. 15. The discounts apply to tickets bought seven to 14 days in advance, depending on which days of the week the passenger flies.

United, American and Delta responded with the same deal.

Sources familiar with Northwest's plans have said it might file for bankruptcy by the middle of next week.

Aiming to quell customers' fears about any imminent bankruptcy, a recorded message for employees offers possible responses to passenger questions, stressing the airline is considering nothing that would disrupt flight schedules or cancel tickets bought in advance.

Office of Thrift Supervision oversees FSBs

By Bill Doyle

Q: My FSB, which formerly was a savings and loan association, has been making the annual distribution from my rollover individual retirement account in early December instead of the last day of the year as our agreement reads.

Doyle

This early withdrawal results in a reduction in the amount of interest my IRA earns in the fourth quarter. My complaining each year has not obtained satisfactory results to date.

To whom and where can I complain, hoping to get a complete audit, all the way back to the opening of the account? Other than the rollover of money from a retirement plan, I have made no other deposits in the account. The only withdrawals have been the annual distributions.

A: Most FSBs are regulated by the Office of Thrift Supervision, the federal agency created by the S&L bailout law to replace the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. "FSB" stands for "federal savings bank."

Take your gripe to OTS' consumer affairs department, 1700 G Street NW, Washington, DC 20552. If it happens that the OTS does not oversee your particular FSB, you will be told which agency does.

Based on your letter, you have good reason to be unhappy. If your account is sizable, as many rollover IRAs are, pulling money out before a scheduled distribution date can greatly reduce the interest earned.

Whether you'll be able to have the account audited back to the date you deposited the lump sum distribution is questionable. But give it a try.

Q: My wife and I have $240,000 in certificates of deposits at various S&Ls and $60,000 in Series E U.S. savings bonds. We plan to put these in a revocable trust at a bank.

If the CDs, bonds and, say, $150,000 in cash go into the trust, will the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. protect all our holdings? I am thinking the bank's trust department might convert some of our S&L CDs to the bank's own CDs.

A: You needn't fret. Everything you put in the trust would be safe.

To begin with, holdings in the trust would not be included in the bank's assets. So, if the bank fails, its creditors could not claim your holdings. That applies to banks with national charters as well as state-chartered banks.

Also, a national bank acting as trustee is required to pledge and set aside, under the control of its trust department, U.S. Treasury securities and other eligible securities as collateral for the protection of trust funds on deposit in the commercial bank department to the extent that the funds are not insured by the FDIC.

Boiled down, it means cash and other assets in a trust at a bank with a national charter are well-protected.

The rules on state-chartered banks vary a bit from state to state but generally are similar to those of national banks.

Q: How do I know if my bank has a national charter or a state charter?

A: Your banker can tell you. But a quick way is to look at the bank's name. Nationally chartered banks have "National" in their names or the initials "N.A." after their names.

Q: I'm a grandmother, 80 years old. My son and daughter-in-law are going to get a divorce. How can I make sure she doesn't get any of my money or anything else I own — at any time?

A: In the most unlikely event you've been making gifts to your daughter-in-law, stop that giving right now.

If summer crude prices fall, oil stocks may follow

By Thomas C. Hayes
N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — Stocks of many major oil companies have lost a little ground since trading at or near their all-time highs in April and May. And if the discord at OPEC's Geneva meeting two weeks ago sends oil prices down this summer, as many analysts expect, the oil stocks also will head lower.

Kuwait rejected urgings by the 11 other OPEC members at the meeting to limit its daily production to 1.6 million barrels, and will raise its production instead to 2 million barrels by July 1 on the way to what the Persian Gulf emirate hopes will be 3.5 million barrels by 1995.

With Iraq still on the sidelines, with a production capacity of three million barrels, and Iran, Nigeria and other OPEC members already cheating on their production limits, analysts say that another glut of world oil supplies is taking shape.

'I don't look for a price collapse, but gradual price erosion.'

— William L. Randol at Salomon Brothers Inc.

"The supply-demand balance is not that far out of whack, but we see the potential fight for market share sending prices lower," said William L. Randol at Salomon Brothers Inc. "I don't look for a price collapse, but gradual price erosion."

Oil prices were little changed Monday, at $18.69 a barrel for domestic crude, but Randol and others see prices falling below $18, perhaps in the next few weeks.

Since stocks of many major oil companies reached or approached their highs in early May, oil prices have dropped by 7 percent while prices of the dozen biggest oil majors have dropped only two percentage points — matching the drop in the Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials.

Michael L. Mayer, oil analyst at Wertheim Schroder, thinks investors have been slow to react to the bearish developments at the OPEC meeting.

After riding gains of 20 percent or more from December through April in many stocks of Big Oil that he tracks, Mayer concluded on May 27 that most would underperform the market for several weeks, falling 5 to 10 percent.

Royal Dutch/Shell, Exxon, Chevron and Mobil were among the large international oil companies that reached price records this spring. But when Mayer saw that those prices in some cases were approaching the highest levels of the last 20 years, compared with earnings and cash flow, he figured it was time to stop buying.

"The OPEC agreement is not a disaster for oil prices, but it removes any meaningful upside for oil prices over the next few months," Mayer said. "The only attractive thing is the yields, and they aren't as good as they had been."

In UAW deal, GM to shift some work from Mexico

By Doron P. Levin
N.Y. Times News Service

Move to create up to 1,000 jobs at Lansing, Mich., assembly complex.

DETROIT — General Motors Corp. said Monday that it would move some of the production of its Chevrolet Cavalier subcompact car from Mexico to Lansing, Mich., next year.

The move will create up to 1,000 jobs at GM's Lansing assembly complex that will be filled, at least partly, by laid-off workers.

GM also said Monday that it had increased its projection of 1993 domestic car and truck sales to 14 million from 13.7 million, based on an "improving market."

GM's plan to shift jobs from Mexico to Lansing was negotiated with the United Automobile Workers union, which is to begin talks on Wednesday for a new national contract with GM

The issue of U.S. automotive jobs being lost to Mexico, where labor costs are cheaper than in the United States, has been a sore point between the union and the Big Three automakers, particularly since the advent of the North American Free Trade Agreement.

The Big Three have supported the Nafta, which would allow most goods to flow across the U.S.-Mexico border free of duties, encouraging U.S. companies to set up more operations in Mexico.

They say any U.S. auto industry jobs shifted to Mexico will be more than offset by job gains in the United States that would be created by new opportunities to export to Mexico.

But the union has opposed the agreement, saying it will cost American jobs. And some lawmakers in Washington have called on the auto industry to state that no net job losses will occur.

Monday, however, GM and the UAW hailed the Lansing jobs plan as an example of mutual cooperation. They said that local union officials in Lansing had agreed to the plan, but that it must still be ratified by local union members.

The issue of job losses has made GM's relations with the unions more hostile in recent years than those between the unions and Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. Last fall, a walkout at GM idled 40,000 workers; that dispute centered on the contracting of tool and die work to nonunion companies.

With the U.S. automotive market improving after three sluggish years and its own financial condition precarious, GM wishes to avoid hostility that could lead to another disruption of work.

Thus, the automaker took pains Monday to highlight the U.S. jobs created by the Lansing agreement and to stress the mutual benefits of working with the union.

At the announcement ceremony in Lansing on Monday, John F. Smith Jr., GM's president and chief executive, was flanked by Stephen P. Yokich, the UAW vice president, and Gov. John Engler of Michigan.

Yokich said, "This is the kind of mutually beneficial, problem-solving and cooperative atmosphere we need throughout the corporation."

Rival discounters' big merger could cramp Wal-Mart's style

By Arthur M. Louis
N.Y. Times News Service

Until last week, Wal-Mart Stores Inc., the biggest retailer in the world, seemed well on its way to becoming the biggest company of any kind by early next century. Then a funny thing happened: Costco Wholesale Corp. and Price Co., Wal-Mart's leading rivals in the highly competitive warehouse-club business, announced plans to merge.

Investors greeted the news on Wednesday by bidding Costco and Price Co. shares up sharply, while pushing Wal-Mart's stock down slightly. Experts say that this seems a fair approximation of the potential impact the merger will have on each of these companies.

For Costco and Price Co., with revenues last year of $6.5 billion and $7.3 billion respectively, the merger will create the biggest warehouse-club operation of all. It could boost profits by eliminating head-to-head competition between these formerly bitter rivals.

The merged company, to be known as Price/Costco, will be able to take greater advantage of economies of scale, such as volume discounts on the merchandise it buys. It will then have the happy choice of either passing savings along to customers — putting a squeeze on its competitors — or carrying the savings down to the bottom line, enhancing the value of its stock.

Wal-Mart's warehouse-club operation, called Sam's Club in honor of the company's late founder, Sam Walton, had been the biggest before the merger. It grossed $12.3 billion in the fiscal year ended last January, accounting for 22 percent of Wal-Mart's $55.5 billion in total revenues. The Sam's Club operation has nearly doubled its revenues in the past two years, and boasted a total of 282 outlets as of June 1, with about 60 to be added each year over the next several years.

Patrick F. McCormack, a Dean Witter analyst, predicted before the Costco-Price Co. merger announcement that Wal-Mart's total revenues would rise above $140 billion by the fiscal year ending January 1998, and that $30 billion of this would come from Sam's Clubs. No company in the world had revenues as high as $140 billion last year. The leader by far was General Motors, with $132.8 billion, and GM's revenues have remained virtually stagnant for years.

McCormack says the merger doesn't change his projections, but that it may change Wal-Mart's behavior He sees it as potentially the start of a major consolidation in the warehouse-club industry, which has become overcrowded in the past year or two, dragging down profits for some companies.

Low-growth word drops Nike stock

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — Shares in Nike Inc. took a beating Monday after the athletic shoe manufacturer's disclosure late Friday that it expects 1994 fiscal year earnings to be well below Wall Street estimates.

Nike's shares fell $4.125 today to close at $57.875 on the New York Stock Exchange. Nike made its announcement late Friday after the stock market close. In after-hours trading Friday, the stock plunged $5, to $62.

Since reaching a 52-week high of $90.25, Nike's shares have lost roughly a third of their value.

Philip H. Knight, Nike's chairman, stated Friday that the continued weakness in several European economies have prompted the company to scale back its growth projections.

DEAR ABBY

Catastrophic tales are categorically denied by cat lovers

DEAR READERS: Our feline friends have had a lot of bad press in this column lately. In the interest of even-handedness, let's hear it from some readers who should know:

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: When I was an infant, we had an adult female cat. She was a short-haired Siamese named Muffy. While I remember Muffy only from my later years, my parents have told me many things Muffy did when I was an infant.

Not once was Muffy seen trying to smother or hurt me. In fact, she would sit on the floor near my cradle, and whenever I cried out, she would race out of the room to find my mother; then she would meow persistently until my mother followed her back to my room. Then, after Mother had done whatever was necessary to quiet me, Muffy would resume her "post" by my crib. — KAREN STEIMAN

DEAR ABBY: People who insist that cats suck the breath out of babies belong in the same category as those who swear they have been guests on UFOs or "know" the earth is flat. These people may be sincere, but are confused at best.

I have known and loved hundreds of cats, and never have I seen one act out of jealousy or malice. On the other hand, dogs, whom I love equally, are often jealous, but do little more than just push the object of their jealousy aside.

Cats will always seek the warmest place in the house. Sometimes it's my chest when I'm lying down. It could be a baby's chest, so I agree, it may be best to keep cats away from sleeping babies. The cat does not know that it can suffocate an infant.

But as for sucking the breath out of a baby, or doing harm out of jealousy — utter nonsense! — THEA COLLINS, STUDIO CITY, CALIF.

DEAR THEA: Hundreds of readers have related stories of having caught cats in the act of sucking the breath out of the mouths of infants. An equal number of readers have written to say that cats are not malicious. However, they have a keen sense of smell, and when they smell milk on a baby's lips, cats, loving milk the way they do, go immediately for the baby's mouth. But they would never intentionally harm a baby. On the contrary, cats have been known to protect an infant should it be threatened.

DEAR ABBY: I was dismayed to read those letters from people who witnessed cats attempting to suck the life out of infants. What poppycock!

I have had dozens of cats over the years, and there is nothing a cat enjoys more than curling up next to a warm human. When my cats try to share my pillow, I make them move; a helpless infant would not be able to do so, and might be suffocated by a very large and heavy cat — but certainly not due to evil intent or jealousy on the part of the cat.

Abby, letters such as those you published only add to the already staggering amount of ignorance and human hatred of one of God's most misunderstood and often-abused creatures. — PAMELA J. FRIZELLE, SULTAN, WASH.

DEAR PAMELA, THEA AND KAREN: All right already. I'll take 20 whacks — with a cat-o'-nine-tails.

To receive a collection of Abby's most memorable — and most frequently requested — poems and essays, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's "Keepers," P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

AT WIT'S END

Thank you for brief award thank-yous

By Erma Bombeck

When the heroes and heroines of this century are remembered, somewhere near the top of the list will be the name of Gary Smith.

Bombeck

His significant contribution to this planet is that he was the executive producer of the June 6 Tony Awards who limited acceptance speeches to 30 seconds.

In a bold stroke of compassion for mankind, he also had winners submit all the names of the "little people" who helped them get to this moment to be flashed on the screen like credits while the acceptance speech was being delivered.

This may seem like a small thing, but let us examine what award shows are all about. Generally, the public doesn't give squat who wins. They want to see what stars are not wearing. They want to know if Ted Danson will appear in his rug. Will Reba McIntyre be struck speechless? Will Susan Lucci stop smiling and slap someone? Will Jack Palance lift the first three rows with his teeth, with one arm behind his back? Can Jodie Foster wave wearing a one-button jacket with nothing under it?

We are not looking for a performance from the winners. We are looking for honesty. What are these people about when they have to dress themselves and write their own scripts?

The sorry truth is no one wants to know how the Academy votes or who are the geniuses behind special effects.

It is wrong that award ceremonies last longer than most marriages.

Collector believes tintype is rare outlaw picture

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — When Gail Garrett plopped down $160 and offered three of her own paintings for an old tintype that said "Wild Bunch" on the back, she wasn't sure what she was getting into.

"It's a gambling game. Sometimes you win, and sometimes you lose," she said. "I took the chance."

And it appears she's won — big.

The collector of rare pictures has acquired what she believes to be one of the few known photographs of Butch Cassidy, the notorious robber who roamed the Old West with his gang of bandits around the turn of the century.

"It's really fascinating because we've never been able to see him so completely," said Ms. Garrett, a hotel chain sales director in San Antonio. "It's a part of our history. We don't have a whole lot. We're a fairly young country."

Ms. Garrett bought the tintype in April at a Western collectible show in Dallas.

It shows two men in full view sitting at a table drinking beer — one of them apparently Cassidy — and another man standing behind them. Ms. Garrett said the tintype was taken in 1902 in New York. Cassidy fled to Bolivia with the Sundance Kid shortly thereafter.

Once she bought it, Ms. Garrett set out to verify the photograph. She started by enlarging it, then began searching dozens of books to find other photographs of the bandit.

There are five known photographs of Cassidy, though Ms. Garrett said only two show his face clearly. One is of Cassidy with his gang in Fort Worth. The other is of Cassidy at age 27 in a Wyoming prison.

Carefully comparing those pictures to hers, Ms. Garrett tried to determine whether they were of the same man. She believes they are, based on the similarities between Cassidy's watch fob, unusually large hands, broken middle left finger and facial scars on his eye and lip.

"You always worry about one of these things. You say, 'Is somebody imitating it?' " she said, adding that she has sought the opinions of experts and museum officials.

Students injured in bus accident

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — As many as two dozen high school and college students from Illinois were injured Monday when two of their three buses were involved in a chain-reaction collision, police said.

The accident took place about 5:11 p.m. as the buses were northbound on I-35W, said Sgt. Gianni Ghilespi of the Fort Worth Police Department.

A dump truck cut in front of the first bus, which was rear-ended by the second bus as the drivers slammed on the brakes, Ghilespi said.

The truck driver did not stop, but may not have noticed the accident, Ghilespi said.

"We don't even know if they were aware of what they caused," he said.

At least 17 students were taken to hospitals for treatment of minor injuries, Ghilespi said.

The students had spent more than a week in the El Paso, Texas, area and had been working with churches in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, said Pastor Bob Schmidgall of Calvary Temple Church in Naperville, Ill.

Haitian military OKs Aristide return to prevent embargo

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Little more than a day before the imposition of a worldwide oil embargo against Haiti, the country's military chief offered Monday to meet with ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to negotiate a return to democracy.

Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, who had rejected such U.N.-mediated talks several weeks ago, also appealed to the world body to halt the embargo, scheduled to start at 12:01 a.m. Wednesday, New York and Haitian time.

Cedras, in a communique to U.N. envoy Dante Caputo, asked that the talks take place in a neutral country. The letter to Caputo, sent following a lengthy afternoon meeting of the army high command, was broadcast on state radio.

At the United Nations, Caputo confirmed receiving the letter, but said he needed more time to analyze its contents and would make no comment Monday.

Caputo, rebuffed by the military during months of negotiations, has made it clear that he would not reopen talks with the army unless it is willing to restore democracy and civilian rule.

There was no immediate comment by Aristide, who has been living in exile in the United States.

The military has been the real power in Haiti since it ousted Aristide and killed hundreds of his followers in September 1991, seven months after Aristide took office as the country's first freely elected president.

Cedras had maintained that nominal civilian officials were in charge of the country and the army could not formally negotiate. But he said he made himself a direct part of the process because of a parliamentary appeal for army involvement.

"The armed forces have decided to rally to the wish of the Chamber of Deputies in the person of the commander-in-chief (Cedras)," the letter says.

The army chief said that when meeting Aristide, he would "pose the real problem of the survival and life of the nation."

Cedras asked Caputo to consider "the urgency of the situation," the need for a neutral site for the talks and adequate security for participants.

"I am persuaded that you will see that the imposition of the (embargo is) not justified for the moment," Cedras' letter says.

Cedras added that the sanctions could turn Haiti, already the Western Hemisphere's poorest country, into a land "where life would be more terrible than death."

In a separate statement, Haiti's Chamber of Commerce urged the conflicting parties to "find as soon as possible, through mutual concession, a way out of the crisis by the immediate and unequivocal return to constitutional order."

The Chamber's statement Monday night reflected a desire by the ailing middle class to end the army-Aristide showdown, and said a worldwide embargo would bring "tragic consequences."

Haiti's military and civilian elite have resisted all previous efforts to restore Aristide, who enjoys widespread support among the poor. The military and elite have said Aristide preaches class division, and they want guarantees against retribution before even considering his return.

The Security Council voted unanimously last Wednesday to clamp the oil and arms embargo on Haiti in a week unless the military government begins the process of restoring democracy.

The embargo would also ban the shipment of arms to Haiti and freeze the government's overseas assets.

In anticipation of the embargo, the army has stockpiled several months of fuel supplies. But the military has warned against hoarding by the general population.

Aid officials say that an embargo, if applied and maintained, could deprive most of the 600,000 Haitians receiving emergency food of their main meal for the day.

The figure represents nearly 10 percent of Haiti's entire population. Most of those affected by interruptions in food aid would be children under 6.

Former communist countries seek hazardous nuclear plants

PARIS (NYT) — A confidential report on nuclear energy in the former Soviet bloc, to be presented to world leaders next month, says 25 of the most dangerous nuclear reactors in six nations could be closed down in the next few years and replaced by energy supplies like gas-fired power plants.

However, the report says, the former communist countries oppose such a plan and want to keep their nuclear plants going as long as possible, which could prove more dangerous and costlier for the West.

The report, drawn up by the World Bank and by the International Energy Agency in Paris, is to be presented to President Clinton and the leaders of six other major industrial democracies at their summit talks in Tokyo.

Russia, which will require almost half of the West's multibillion-dollar plan to improve nuclear safety, insists on nuclear energy because it wants to reserve its natural gas supplies for export in order to earn hard currency, the report says. Other former communist countries resist importing natural gas because such imports are more expensive than nuclear energy.

The report was ordered by the Group of 7 at their last summit meeting, in Munich in July 1992, when they called for extensive Western contributions to alleviate the serious threat of nuclear accidents in the former Soviet bloc. The leaders meeting in Tokyo are expected to discuss the strategies laid out in the World Bank report.

The report, which is dated March 1993 and is to be updated in July — estimates that $18 billion will be needed between 1993 and 2000 if the "higher-risk nuclear plants" are shut down as soon as possible and replaced by gas-fired plants; the less dangerous nuclear plants would be refitted with modern safety features. The reports says it would be technically feasible to do this "by the mid-1990s."

Alternatively, the report says, it will cost about $24 billion to improve "all the higher-risk and other nuclear plants" to keep them operating "until the end of their planned design life," and to finish those under construction.

For each alternative, the huge investments now estimated are considerably higher than those discussed in Munich, where Germany said such a program would cost about $9 billion and the United States suggested that costs would range between $11 billion and $20 billion.

Chinese use ultrasound in quest to abort unwanted female fetuses

BEIJING (AP) — Ultrasound testing to determine the sex of unborn babies has become widespread in China, with the result that many girls are being aborted, a newspaper said in a rare report.

China's population control policy allows each couple only one child, and, traditionally, boys have been favored over girls because they carry on the family name.

Population figures show that for every 100 girls born in China in 1990, 113.8 boys were born. Family planning officials say more girls are being born than reflected in the figures but many couples aren't reporting the births, giving themselves another chance to try for a boy.

But the report in Sunday's Yangcheng Evening News suggests the lopsided sex ratio may not be that far off the mark.

In one county, which the paper did not name, residents used ultrasound to determine the sex of 2,316 fetuses, and aborted 1,006 girls since 1991.

The report said the practice is just as common in cities, contrary to popular belief that less traditional city residents aren't as desperate for boys.

Boys accounted for 74.8 percent of all births in one city last year, the highest percentage ever in modern China. The report said sources disclosed the reason was ultrasound testing.

Census figures show China had 36.2 million more males than females in 1990. Experts predict that if the trend continues, 48 million young men will be unable to find wives.

The government in recent years has repeatedly ordered a halt to the use of ultrasound to determine sex but many hospitals continue to provide the lucrative service.

Private businessmen have gotten into the act. One earned $6,631 a year from disclosing the sex of unborn babies, the newspaper said. That's more than 12 times the average urban worker's salary.

Ultrasound machines in China can cost as little as a few hundred dollars.

The report warned that repeated abortions may damage a woman's health. It related the case of one woman who had four abortions before giving birth to a baby boy who is retarded.

Terrorist bomb attacks in Madrid kill seven people, wound dozens more

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Car bombs rocked two busy streets in a well-to-do neighborhood during the morning rush hour Monday, killing seven people and wounding two dozen in an attack blamed on Basque separatists.

The bombings are fresh evidence that even with its top leaders in jail and its members on the run after a 25-year campaign of violence, the ETA terrorist group is capable of inflicting deep wounds in Spain.

All of the dead — six military personnel and a civilian driver — were riding in an army Land Rover wrecked by the detonation of a parked car loaded with explosives. Two of the most seriously injured were children waiting nearby for a bus when the bomb exploded on Joaquin Costa street near the city center.

A second car bomb caused three injuries but no deaths an hour later, about a third of a mile away on Serrano Street near the U.S. Embassy. No Americans were wounded.

The blasts caused severe damage to cars and shattered windows in buildings.

"I was driving along ... when it exploded ... then there was glass everywhere and my car was a mess," Juan Luis Sobrino, 30, who was injured by the first bomb, said on national television. "I managed to get out of the car. There were people running and crying everywhere."

No group claimed responsibility for the attacks, but police said they bore the hallmarks of ETA, which has carried out at least a dozen car bombings in Madrid the past 10 years. It is the only terrorist group operating in Spain that admits to using car bombs.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING ON APPLICATION FOR WASTE DISPOSAL PERMIT AMENDMENT

DYNAGEN, INC., P.O. Box 2032, Odessa, Texas 79760 has applied to the Texas Water Commission for an amendment to Permit No. 00817 in order to add two (2) outfalls (Outfalls 001 and 002) which will regulate the discharge of stormwater. The permit currently authorizes the disposal of process wastewater effluent by evaporation at a volume not to exceed 821,000 gallons per day which will remain the same. The application operates a synthetic rubber manufacturing plant. The permit does not authorize the discharge of process wastewaters into State waters.

The plant site is in the southeast quadrant defined by the intersection of Interstate Highway 20 with Dixie Boulevard, south of the City of Odessa in Ector County, Texas.

The effluent is discharged from the eastern edge of the plant through Outfalls 001 and 002 to the west barrow ditch along South Industrial Avenue, to a natural drainage ditch going east through going east through a field to a playa lake; the playa lake is in the drainage basin of Monahans Draw which flows into the Midland Draw; thence to the Mustang Draw; thence to Beals Creek; thence to the Colorado River Below Lake J.B. Thomas in Segment No. 1412 of the Colorado River Basin.

In accordance with the Texas Surface Water Quality Standards, the commission staff must determine the existing uses for the receiving water in the area of the proposed discharge and whether the proposed discharge will cause significant degradation to any high quality waters in the area. The unclassified receiving waters in the vicinity of this discharged have no uses other than stormwater evaporation. The effluent limitations in the draft permit will maintain and protect the existing instream uses. No significant degradation of high quality receiving waters is anticipated. All determinations are preliminary and subject to additional review and/or revision.

The Executive Director of the Texas Water Commission has prepared a draft permit based on the application submitted by the applicant and other information presently available.

A Hearings Examiner of the Texas Water Commission will conduct a public hearing at 9:00 A.M. - Thursday, July 29, 1993
Odessa City Hall - Council Chambers - 5th Floor
411 West 8th Street, Odessa, TX 79760

to receive evidence on the conditions, if any, under which the permit may be issued, and determine whether State Certification in accordance with Section 401 of the Federal clean Water Act may be issued. This hearing will be held under the authority of Sections 26.020, 26.028 of the Texas-Water-Code and the Rules-of-the-Texas-Water-Commission.

The record of this proceeding will include evidence and testimony taken at the public hearing. The hearing may be continued from time to time and place to place, if necessary, to develop all relevant evidence bearing on the subject of the hearing. The Texas Water Commission reserves the right to schedule or reschedule hearings as it deems necessary. Further information concerning any aspect of the application, if available, may be obtained by contacting Kevin McLeod, Staff Attorney, telephone (512) 463-8069. Information concerning any procedures of the hearing may be obtained by contacting Robert M. Rogan, Hearings Examiner, telephone (512) 463-7875. Information concerning public participation in hearings may be obtained by contacting the Acting Public Interest Counsel, Cynthia Hayes, telephone (512) 643-8030.

Persons desiring to protest the granting of this application, who have not previously requested a hearing in writing, should file written protests with the Commission prior to the hearing date and serve copies of the written protest on the applicant and all designated parties, if any. The written protest shall: show the name and address of the protestant; identify the pending application; state the basis of the protestant's interest and any relevant facts conclusions; describe the location of the protestant's property relevant to the application; and propose any amendment or adjustment to the application which, if made, would result in withdrawal of the protest. Persons desiring to present information relating to the application must appear at the public hearing either in person or by representative and present such information, subject to all applicable rules of evidence. Information offered in written form without the writer's presence will be noted by the Commission but will not be considered as evidence since the right to cross-examine is absent. No person will be admitted as a party to the proceeding unless the person complies with Commission Rules which require a justiciable interest and attendance at the hearing either in person or by qualified representative with settlement authority. Additionally, any representative who has been retained for this proceeding will be expected to attend the hearing and to participate in settlement negotiations and other matters.

Persons with disabilities who plan to attend this hearing and who may need auxiliary aids or services such as interpreters for persons who are deaf or hearing impaired, readers, large print or braille, are requested to contact the Hearings Examiners office at 512/463-7875 or 1-800-RELAY-TX (TDD) at least two (2) work days prior to the hearing so that appropriate arrangements can be made.

Issued this 16th day of June, 1993.

TO ALL INTERESTED PERSONS AND PARTIES:

You are hereby notified that GPM GAS CORPORATION has applied for renewal of Texas Air Control Board (TACB) Permit No. 5665A to continue the operation of a Sprayberry Cryogenic Plant in Midland, Midland County, Texas. The location of the facility is 17 miles east of Midland, Texas. This facility will emit the following air contaminants: nitrogen oxides, carbon monoxide, particulate matter, and hydrocarbon compounds.

A copy of all materials in the public file is available for inspection and reproduction at the TACB Odessa Regional Office at 1901 East 37th Street, Suite 101, Odessa, Texas 79762, telephone (915) 367-3871, and at the TACB Central Office, 12124 Park 35 Circle, Austin, Texas 78753, telephone (512) 908-1000. The facility's compliance file, if any exists, is available for public review in the regional office at the TACB. Inquiries about the permit renewal should be directed to the TACB Permits Program in Austin or the TACB Odessa Regional Office.

You may submit written comments concerning the permit renewal to the TACB Executive Director in Austin. All written comments received within 15 days after the second publication of this notice shall be considered by the Executive Director in determining whether to renew the permit. All written comments will be made available for public inspection at the TACB Central Office in Austin. This notice is to be published on 6-21-93 and 6-22-93.

Any person who may be affectd by emissions of air contaminants from this facility may request the Board to hold an informal public meeting and/or contested case hearing on the permit renewal pursuant to Section 382.056(d) of the Texas Health and Safety Code. The Board is not required to hold a contested case hearing if the basis of a request is determined to be unreasonable. All requests for a contested case hearing must be received in writing within the 15-day comment period regardless of whether an informal public meeting has been held or scheduled on this matter.

Before a permit can be renewed for this facility, the applicant must demonstrate that all emission sources are in compliance with all TACB Rules and Regulations and all applicable Federal Regulations.

TO THE SWEET YOUNG WOMAN IN THE DARK COLORED VAN...
Friday afternoon around 3:30 pm at Alberston's Parking lot. You caught me on heavy traffic on Andrews Highway to give my purse to me. I had lost it off my car hood.
I truly THANK YOU and wish I had gotten your name.
Thanks so very much!

DELIVERY
MOONLIGHTING!
The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals.

Often Asked ????
Is it worthwhile for adults also?
Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth.

Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have F/T jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?
Depending on the size of distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly!
Some make even more!

How long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subsribers'papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 a.m. Monday-Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or a family member to substitute a for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!
