He's making Christmas 'extra special'

By JAMES R. KING
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — A businessman who reunited a Detroit-area family separated by economic hard times says the gesture brought back the true meaning of Christmas for him.

"Christmas to me has meant very little in the last 10 years," said Victor Franco, 52, a modern-day Good Samaritan who spent $2,000 helping a displaced family get settled in Houston Monday. "But this year it's going to be extra special."

As Franco spoke, the beneficiaries of his good deed, Gregory and Barbara Hilts, hugged and kissed their three children in a tearful reunion near an arrival gate at Houston's Intercontinental Airport.

"It's going to be the best Christmas ever now," said Mrs. Hilts, wiping tears from her face.

She and her husband, both laid off from their jobs at Ford Motor Co., came to Houston two months ago hoping to find work. But they did not have enough money to bring their children — Christopher, 14, Shelly, 12, and Michael, 11 — so the youngsters stayed behind with grandparents in Ypsilanti.

Franco heard of the plight of the Hilts family on a television show and remembered a promise to help people in need he made two years ago when he was lost at sea.

When they were interviewed on ABC's "Good Morning America" two weeks ago, Hilts said since moving to Houston he had landed a job in a factory for $7.25 an hour and his wife was working as a waitress at a truck stop.

But they still had not raised the money to bring their family back together and even if they could, they did not have a home big enough for the whole family.

Franco said that when he saw them on television, "It was a spontaneous thing...I said, 'That's somebody I'd like to help.'"

Franco, who owns a used-car dealership, leased a home for the Hilts, paid their rent for three months and paid air fare for their children and the family's four dogs.

"Christmas is going to be fantastic this year," Franco said as he watched the Hilts in an emotional reunion. He then took them to their new home in his car.

"They've probably made my Christmas as much fun as theirs is going to be," he said.

Franco, who commutes weekly between his business in Houston and a home near Albuquerque, N.M., said he spent about $2,000 to help the Hilts, taking the money from a personal fund he set up to help people in need.

The fund stems from a promise he made when he nearly died in an accident two years ago. He was sailing alone off Key Largo, Fla., when his boat capsized, leaving him in the water without a life jacket. He said he began to take on water and had all but given up hope.

"While I was drowning, I was promising just about everything," he said.

Among those promises was that if he survived, he would help other people and not expect anything in return.

Minutes later a stranger happened along and rescued him.

After he returned home, Franco kept his word and began setting aside $20 to $50 each payday until the fund reached about $3,000.

"It's the best thing I've had going in 50 years," Franco said. "There's got to be something better than being a car salesman."

Tide expected to turn against effluent release

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

AUSTIN — The city of Midland's efforts to legally dump its sewage effluent down Midland Draw seem to have been in vain here Monday during a hearing before the Texas Department of Water Resources board.

Midland, faced with the dilemma of too much waste water and no where legally to put it, may become an "outlaw" after all. Early signs are that the TDWR commissioners apparently will not grant Midland permission to discharge the water that is threatening to overflow and break the dikes at the city's holding ponds.

The commissioners tentative staff-produced recommendation officially is to let the issue slide by, to forego penalizing the city for breaking the law, to ask that the city monitor the flow down the draw and to "minimize nuisance conditions."

Midland County Commissioners and city officials squared off last week for the battle before the water board with the county threatening to sue the city if effluent is dumped into the draw.

"IT IS KIND of a bastardized solution," said Reagan Legg, a hired Midland lawyer fighting the city's dumping proposal. "If they discharge, I think we will have to file a lawsuit against the city."

The water commissioners' tentative ruling is that the "discharge would not be in the public interest" and would cause "unreasonable property damage."

The as yet unsigned order by the three water commissioners was prepared by the water resources department's legal staff and readied for signatures by the commissioners even before testimony had begun here Monday afternoon.

Commissioners Felix McDonald, Dorsey B. Hardeman and Lee B.M. Biggart heard testimony from opposing attorneys, a city-hired hydrologist and,among others, Midland Public Utilities Director John Lowe. However, the commissioners ran into their 5 p.m. quitting time before they had heard testimony from Greenwood, Valley View and far east-side Midland residents and landowners along the draw.

These people are fearful that the nitrate-laden effluent will percolate into the underground water system and "contaminate and pollute" their household water.

The city's contention is that the effluent would not be damaging to the underground water. However, Midland has no immediate choice but to pump the water down the draw.

The oilboom-induced exploding population, by some accounts, and the rising water table are placing Midland sewage volume at the 1994 levels. City officials estimate Midland's population approaching 100,000.

THE WASTE WATER flow into the 126 acres of holding ponds runs between 8 and 9 million gallons per day and is far more than that used through evaporation and irrigation of agriculture lands.

In the mid-1970s, the city, which then was approaching 65,000, lost a bid to discharge water into the draw.

"I fought this thing six years ago, and if it was not legal then it's not legal now," said Legg. "It's that simple."

About 25 Midland County residents showed up at the hearing.

City Attorney Joe Nuessle testified that the city is in a dire situation. One dike is particularly critical.

"We consider this an emergency situation because if the dike starts going, they all will go...and not only endanger property but possibly lives." Nuessle said the city had not anticipated the population surge which, judging by the volume of effluent, is at levels projected for 1994.

The waste water influx was "totally unexpected" and it was fed by "an explosive growth that no one expected," Nuessle said.

Adverse attorney Legg reminded the commissioners that in 1975 they didn't grant Midland a permit to discharge effluent into the draw. Since then, the city essentially has done nothing to bolster its case before the commissioners.

"THERE ARE NO long term different solutions to the problem today," said Legg.

Attorney Ted Kerr, who has joined Legg in the fight against the city, said that "pollution to the underground water is our main concern." Kerr's main role is "to determine if there are other alternate methods" to get rid of the water other than discharging it down the draw. Kerr is suggesting the opening of additional land for irrigation.

Situation in Poland looks promising

By The Associated Press

Polish authorities say they will not use force to get nearly 3,000 coal miners to leave two mines in southern Poland, and Roman Catholic Church sources report encouraging signs in the church's negotiations with the country's ruling military council.

Uncensored dispatches from Poland today quoted sources close to Polish Catholic primate Archbishop Jozef Glemp as saying that progress was being made. But the nature of the church's negotiations was unclear. The church has been demanding early release of detainees in exchange for its support in calming public reaction to martial law.

It was not known how many Poles have been jailed. Government spokesman Jerzy Urban on Monday denied independent reports placing the number as high as 50,000. He said approximately 5,000 people have been interned since Premier Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski proclaimed martial law Dec. 13, and about 1,200 of them sentenced for violating the military decree.

On Monday, dissident Poles continued strikes at coal mines in the south and refineries in the north. The government said the majority of workers were back on the job, but conceded that Solidarity "extremists" had shut some plants and mines.

Radio Warsaw reported that nearly 3,000 Polish miners have controlled two mines in the Silesian coal fields since last Tuesday. It broadcast an appeal to miners to break their strike and go home for Christmas.

"Christmas is near; your families are awaiting you," the broadcast said. Government authorities said they were trying to talk the miners out rather than have a repeat of last week's violence in Wojek, which left seven miners dead. Church sources said it appeared the government strategy was to allow the miners to stay underground until they come out on their own.

The Soviet news agency Tass had earlier claimed Solidarity activists had dynamited shut one of the entrances to the Ziemowit mine in Tychy region and threatened to close the other outlet — trapping 1,300 miners inside — if the government tried to apply force.

But Urban told foreign reporters in Warsaw there "has been no explosion at the Ziemowit mine."

Warsaw Radio claimed Solidarity strike leaders "have restricted all information, distorting news from the miners' families, and are using intimidation. Today they refused to allow doctors, mining office experts and priests down the mine. Contact is being maintained by telephone. The strikers are receiving food parcels from their families and soup cooked in the mines."

Church sources reported that priests have conducted Masses for the striking miners.

The radio said 874 miners had quit the protest and authorities hoped to resolve the impasse without force.

Tass reported Monday that "Solidarity thugs" were barricaded in the Katowice steel works, not far from the Tychy mines, and were blackmailing authorities by threatening to blow up the furnaces. The news agency did not say when the incident began or how many strikers were involved.

A recent visitor to the Baltic port city of Gdansk, birthplace of Solidarity, reported seeing "hundreds of spent teargas cannisters" in the streets and broken windows near the Lenin shipyards.

Midland man dies in mishap near Marfa

MARFA — A Midland man is dead after the car he was driving went out of control and rolled over near here Monday afternoon.

Oscar Gutierrez, 41, of 609 N. Minelo St., was dead on arrival at Big Bend Memorial Hospital in Alpine. According to the Department of Public Safety, he was southbound on U.S. Highway 67 about 3:45 p.m. Monday when his 1978 Chevrolet ran off the road, hit an embankment and rolled over on top of him.

The accident occurred about 24 miles south of Marfa in Presidio County. Gutierrez' body was taken to the Geeslin Funeral Home in Alpine, where services are pending.

Reagan retains development program

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has overruled budget director David A. Stockman by deciding to keep intact nearly $4 billion in urban development programs, administration officials say.

In the wake of extensive lobbying by state and local officials to save the programs, Reagan rejected a proposal by Stockman to halt all new spending for Community Development Block Grants and Urban Development Action Grants, or UDAG, after 1983, officials revealed Monday.

Instead, the president is proposing that the politically popular programs operate at least through 1984 at an annual budget of $3.8 billion — only a slight reduction from the $3.9 billion level approved by Congress for 1982.

Samuel R. Pierce Jr., secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, told departmental employees of the decision Monday. Pierce had appealed to the president personally last week for restoration of the programs.

Reagan's decision marks the second time Stockman has failed to eliminate UDAG. Last winter, he also proposed phasing it out, but Pierce and state and local officials persuaded Reagan to reject the proposal. It was one of the few instances in which Stockman did not get his way on the budget.

Although Pierce again prevailed on the grants, Stockman won the president's endorsement — over HUD opposition — for drastic reductions in federal housing subsidies for poor Americans, according to administration sources.

The housing cuts are part of a Stockman plan for trimming more than $30 billion from non-defense areas of the budget for fiscal 1983, which begins next October.

Reagan, who has spent the last two weeks hearing Cabinet secretaries appeal Stockman's proposals, is expected to sign off this week on a package of cuts to send Congress next February.

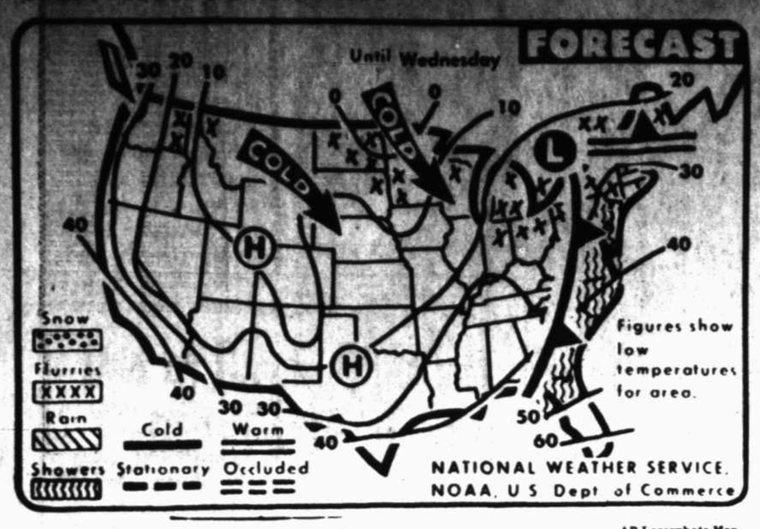

Among the other Cabinet secretaries who dodged some swings of Stockman's budget ax was Agriculture Secretary John R. Block.

He derailed a Stockman plan to impose user fees on slaughter plants and processors to pay for the costs of federal meat inspection, a source said Monday.

The source, who asked not to be identified, said Block also got more than $50 million reinstated in agricultural research funds and headed off drastic cuts in Soil Conservation Service funds.

A memo supplied by the source also said Block was able to counter Stockman's arguments for holding the lid on farm operating loans offered by the Farmers Home Administration.

Accident victim in satisfactory condition

A Midland woman was admitted to Midland Memorial Hospital following a traffic accident at the intersection of Big Spring Street and Wadley Avenue about noon Monday.

Listed in satisfactory condition this morning was 26-year-old Debbie Beyers of 3101 N. Midland Drive. She suffered facial lacerations and a fractured pelvis in the accident, which also injured 22-year-old Ronald D. Falck of 415 W. Scharbauer Drive. He was released following emergency treatment.

According to police, Ms. Beyers was northbound on Big Spring Street and was attempting a lefthand turn onto Wadley Avenue when her car and Falck's southbound 1973 Dodge collided.

Red Cross makes appeal for Poland

An appeal for financial donations has been issued by the local Red Cross to assist the Polish Red Cross Society during the present crisis in Poland, according to Elvis L. Curb, Red Cross executive director of the Midland County Chapter.

A contribution of $100,000 from the American Red Cross has been transmitted to the Geneva, Switzerland, headquarters to begin relief operations.

Curb said that only financial donations will be accepted because of the high cost of transportation, adding that donated funds will be transferred to Geneva to purchase food, clothing, blankets and other needed supplies. The Polish Red Cross will distribute the supplies from seven designated warehouses operated by the organization.

Individual contributions into Poland are being discouraged, Curb said, but, checks marked for "Polish Emergency Relief" may be mailed to the local Red Cross in Midland, P.O. Box 1706, Midland, 79702. All contributions will be forwarded through international Red Cross relief channels.

RANKIN — James Raymond Baker, 41, of San Angelo was killed in an oilfield accident 14 miles northwest of here about 8 a.m. Monday.

Peace Justice C.G. Taylor of Rankin returned a ruling of accidental death.

Baker, an employee of Tom Brown Drilling Company, was helping lay pipe at a rig site eight miles north and eight miles west of Rankin when a section fell and crushed him, according to an Upton County Sheriff's Department spokesman.

Dallas jail inmate dies of asphyxiation

DALLAS (AP) — A 26-year-old Dallas jail inmate who had threatened suicide died of asphyxiation after a civilian jailer used a "choke hold" to restrain him and move him to a padded cell, police say.

Homicide and internal affairs investigators planned to meet with the Dallas County medical examiner today to determine if the cross-arm restraining hold caused the death of Jose Young.

Young was found unconscious Friday, 10 minutes after jailers grappled with him. He was transferred from the Dallas City Jail to Baylor University Medical Center, where he died at 7:40 p.m.

A police officer, four jail guards, a sergeant and a prisoner told investigators that Young was breathing when he was placed in a padded cell, said Capt. Bill Newman of the Internal Affairs Division.

Johnson decides to return to rank of assistant police chief

By ANDREW M. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Police Chief B.K. Johnson decided himself to step down from his position and return to the rank of assistant chief, according to Mayor-elect Kathy Whitmire.

Mrs. Whitmire, in a telephone news conference from New York, said Monday that when Johnson informed her of his decision, she had not yet decided whether to keep him on as chief or to appoint someone else.

She said Johnson told her Friday that he had discussed the matter with his family and decided "it was not in his best interests to continue" as chief. She said he did not elaborate.

Johnson, 49, receives an annual salary of $74,984 as chief. Assistant chiefs make $57,808 a year.

Mrs. Whitmire, who was out of town to deliver city bonds and appear on a national television news show Monday, has chosen Assistant Chief John Bales to be acting chief.

Bales, 42, a 19-year veteran of the force and head of the Investigation Command, said he had two meetings with Mrs. Whitmire last week.

"The decison was made Friday that I would be appointed acting chief right after the first of the year," Bales said.

Stepping down from the chief's job was one of Johnson's options according to police policy. He could also have retired or retained the job subject to Mrs. Whitmire's approval.

Mrs. Whitmire said she would consider appointing a task force to nominate candidates for the vacant post and that she would consider nominees from inside and outside the Houston force.

Bales said he has expressed an interest in the chief's job and Mrs. Whitmire's office said he will be considered for the post. Bales acknowledged mixed emotions about accepting the post, saying he was concerned about the short-lived careers of many Houston police chiefs.

Johnson's resignation ended weeks of speculation, but he refused comment on the action. His future with the department has been the subject of conjecture since Mrs. Whitmire beat Harris County Sheriff Jack Heard in the Nov. 17 run-off election for mayor. Johnson was appointed by the present, lame-duck mayor, Jim McConn.

The mayor-elect's office said Mrs. Whitmire "expressed appreciation for Johnson's cooperation providing her with substantive suggestions based on his knowledge of police department procedures."

Bob Thomas, president of the Houston Police Patrolmen's Union, lauded the announcement. He said his organization and Johnson ended communications in June, when the union complained that Johnson had stopped answering their letters concerning proposed changes in the department.

B.K. Johnson

Dave Collier, president of the 2,500-member Houston Police Officers' Association, said his organization was not opposed to Johnson personally but that it did not consider him a strong administrator. He said the new chief's main problem will be improving morale.

TDWR considering Midland's request

draw. That threat brought the two government bodies before the water board this week after moving up the hearing from a date in January.

Consulting engineer Glen Doty with Black & Veatch said a study in 1968 indicated "that the (sewage treatment) facilities were obsolete, were going to be obsolete."

Doty tried to trace the background behind the rise in the sewage volume but McDonald, who is chairman of the board, didn't want to hear it in full.

"I'm not too concerned about how you got yourself into this mess," said McDonald, who tried to hasten the parties into a conclusion.

Unlike Nuessle, Doty blamed the excess effluent on the rising water table and not so much on the population explosion. Doty, whose firm Black & Veatch, was retained by the city, said two million gallons of water daily "infiltrate the sewage line." He said the water came from, among other places, heavy rains in 1980.

Doty said that by 1980 it had become "perfectly obvious that some drastic measures had to be taken. The water table is well above the flow of the sewage."

Legg asked Doty "what's the excuse other than the rainfall" for the rising water.

Doty's reply was: "weather reversal."

Like Kerr, Legg said pouring effluent down the draw "would contaminate and pollute the water table along the draw." And Doty wasn't in total disagreement.

"IT PROBABLY would raise the nitrate level, but not by much," he said. "It would probably improve the chemical quality of it (underground water)."

Doty said that additional irrigation to disperse the effluent is prohibited because farmland used for irrigation is saturated with water. He noted that the city "only owns and is privileged to abuse 500 acres of land."

He advocated the release of effluent down the draw. Otherwise, the dikes might break and lagoons rupture and "not only endanger property but can endanger lives."

John Lowe, Midland's director of utilities since 1970, testified there was not enough city-owned private land to irrigate and thus lower the level of water in the ponds. "We are at maximum capacity right now. We're going to have the ponds so full, they're going to run over."

Lowe recommended dumping the treated waste water down the draw at a maximum rate of 20 million gallons a day over a 14 day period. He said the water would be chlorinated. Four 20-inch culverts at County Road 140 South behind the draw can only handle 20 million gallons per day, he noted.

"If one dike goes," said Lowe, "it's almost like a stack of dominoes" — the other dikes will likewise collapse.

Under questioning by Legg, Lowe said the city has other great problems — failure of a 27-inch sewer line. But Lowe said that the city is now working toward putting in an additional line to handle the flow from the city.

In a rhetorical manner, Legg reminded Lowe of his 1975 water board testimony about Midland Draw, claiming that Lowe had said the effluent "probably would contaminate and pollute the underground water."

"No sir," said Lowe. "I don't believe I said that."

"It's in the record," retorted Legg.

Throughout the testimony McDonald occasionally would interject some of his "down-home" comments. "I think it is clear that the city has messed around," he said.

Lowe referred to alternate methods to dispose of effluent: To pipe effluent to J. "Timber" Floyd's land southeast of the city to a closed hydrological salt lake.

In additional testimony County Attorney Henderson said proposed discharge down Midland Draw might adversely affect underground water in the Greenwood area.

"I SENSE that if that were to happen," commented McDonald, "we would be in a hell of a mess."

Hydrologist Ed Reed recommended the water be discharged into the draw as an immediate but temporary solution to the problem. "We thought of every conceivable way of adding water to the soil." Reed said the treated effluent discharged into the draw would have no impact on the quality of the water.

"The draw does recharge that aquifer, doesn't it," Legg asked Reed.

And Reed agreed.

Toward the end of the hearing City Attorney Nuessle urged the commissioners to make a ruling favorable to the city. "We may not have that much time. We're fixing to lose those dikes down there."

The hearing was to resume at 9 a.m. today.

Christmas 'tis the season to be careful

By JACK KEEVER
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Christmas 'tis the season to be jolly — and also to be very careful, at home and on the road.

Perhaps more than ever, state agencies and associations are telling Texans not of the joys but of the dangers of the holiday season.

There is, however, one surprising statistic. Despite published reports of festive holiday periods often bringing on acute depression, December was the low month for suicides in Texas last year with 124.

"Stockings should be hung by the chimney with care — and so should a lot of other things at Christmas to avoid a holiday tragedy," says the State Health Department.

Danger, it appears, lurks for humans and household pets in Christmas trees, holiday snack food, colored lights and balls, gift-wrapping paper, tinsel, string, electric wires, fireworks, poisonous plants such as mistletoe and poinsettia, as well in holly berries and — of course — on the streets and highways.

"In homes with fireplaces, don't hang decorations of tinsel, Christmas cards or tree branches from the mantel where they could become ignited," says Harold Ray, director of the health department's Product Safety Division.

"And once those presents under the tree are opened, gather up all the wrappings and remove them from the home," says Ray. "Many colored gift wrapping papers contain lead and sometimes chromium, copper and zinc. These materials can cause toxic fumes if burned in the fireplace and can be harmful to children if they chew on them."

"Fires in homes and other family dwellings represent almost two-thirds of all fires and a significant number of these occur during the Christmas season," said State Fire Marshal Ernest Emerson.

Emerson's safety tips include never installing electric lights on metal trees, because the trees can become charged with electricity if the lights are faulty; using no more than two sets of lights per extension cord, and using special wiring on outdoor lights.

"Wrapping materials burn extremely hot and can cause soot deposits in the chimney to ignite, resulting in a dangerous chimney fire," Emerson says.

The American Lung Association of Texas says, "Holiday times, with attention-getting ornaments, decorations and parents distracted by dozens of activities, is a particularly dangerous time for curious toddlers who instinctively grab for objects and put them in their mouths."

Keep tiny ornaments, as well as food such as peanuts and popcorn, up high, where preschoolers can't reach them, the association says, and avoid presents that have button eyes or tiny wheels that can come loose.

Dr. Ben Johnston of the Texas Veterinary Medical Association warns, too, that "inquisitive, frisky pets may decide to munch, crunch, attack or swallow decorative tree items such as glass balls, electric light wires, tinsel and string."

"Dogs and cats find ornaments and tinsel attractive, and they chew them and swallow them as if they were a bone," says Johnston, a Houston veterinarian. "Glass ornaments splinter on contact and cause perforation of the animal's gastric or intestinal walls. Tinsel and string are also harmful because they can ball up in the intestine and cause blockage. Chewing on the wires of colored lights can cause electric shock and has proved fatal to many pets."

The Department of Public Safety predicts 51 people will die on Texas streets and highways from 6 p.m. Thursday — Christmas eve — to midnight Sunday, Dec. 27. Sixty-four people died in motor vehicle accidents during the Christmas holidays last year.

Majority favors disarmament if Soviet Union agrees

By TIMOTHY HARPER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A majority of Americans favor nuclear disarmament — if the Soviet Union agrees to disarm as well, the latest Associated Press-NBC News poll says.

But only about one-third of the 1,602 respondents telephoned Dec. 14-15 in a nationwide scientific random sampling said they favor a freeze on the production of nuclear weapons in this country.

The poll also said three of four Americans think the United States will become involved in a war during the next few years, though a majority said they are not worried that President Reagan will get the country into war.

Public opinion was almost evenly divided, however, over whether Reagan and his administration are talking too much about the possibility of using nuclear weapons, and whether such talk increases the danger of nuclear war.

Fifty-one percent said the United States should move toward nuclear disarmament only if the Soviet Union agrees to disarm as well. Twelve percent said the United States should disarm on its own, 27 percent said the United States should not disarm and 10 percent were unsure.

But on whether the United States should stop producing nuclear weapons, 49 percent said no, 34 percent said yes and the rest said either they were not sure or only if the Soviet Union stops producing nuclear arms, too.

Seventy-six percent said it is either very or somewhat likely the United States will become involved in a war during the next few years, an increase from 68 percent in the September and October AP-NBC News polls and 57 percent in the August poll.

Yet a majority does not think a war will be Reagan's fault: 59 percent said they are not worried that Reagan will get the country involved in a war.

At the same time, respondents split 48-44 in saying Reagan and his administration are talking too much about the possibility of using nuclear weapons, and 48-46 in saying such talk increases the danger of nuclear war.

Respondents split 52-38 in favor of reinstatement of the draft for the armed forces, marking a continuing decline in support for the draft. Reinstatment was favored by 59 percent in the July AP-NBC News poll and 65 percent in the January poll.

There was no significant change, however, on three other questions:

Forty-three percent said Reagan is doing a good or excellent job in handling foreign affairs.

Sixty-six percent said he has set the right tone in his dealings with the Soviets.

And 38 percent said the United States and Soviet Union are equal in military strength, while 39 percent said the Soviet Union is stronger, 13 percent said the United States is stronger and 10 percent were not sure.

As with all sample surveys, the results of AP-NBC News polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variations in the sample.

For a poll based on about 1,600 interviews, the results are subject to an error margin of 3 percentage points either way because of chance variations. That is, if one could have talked this past week to all Americans with telephones, there is only one chance in 20 that the findings would vary by more than 3 percentage points.

Of course, the results could differ from other polls for a number of reasons. Differences in the exact wording of questions, differences in when the interviews were conducted and different methods of interviewing could also cause variations.

Boys spend night in cold night air

HELOTES, Texas (AP) — A mother, shouting their names in a dense fog, found her two missing sons in a brushy area not far from their home after they spent a damp, cold night in a brushy area.

Mrs. Erick Urban told authorities she found Troy Urban, 12, and Skipper Urban, 10, when they responded to her calls shortly after sunrise Monday near this San Antonio suburb.

"They were a little dirty and wet, but in good condition," said Lt. Alvin Johnson of the Bexar County Sheriff's Department. "They got into a dry place and were sheltered from the moisture."

The two boys were reported missing about 8 p.m. Sunday and were located about 7:30 a.m. Monday.

Snelson announces children's program

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Sen. Pete Snelson, D-Midland, and state agency officials held a press conference here today to announce the start-up of an early intervention program for developmentally delayed children.

Snelson carried the legislation for the program in the legislative session held earlier this year.

At the press conference, Snelson said the program was an attempt to coordinate existing services rather than establishing a new program.

Only Texas and Maryland have implemented such programs, Snelson said, commenting that he feels the effort will serve as a model for other states.

He praised the agencies involved — Department of Health, Department of Mental Health-Mental Retardation, Department of Human Resources and Texas Education Agency — for being willing to "give up some of their territory" for a joint approach.

The program, he said, shows "state government does care" about the needs of such children.

The program is aimed at children ages "zero to three" with handicapped conditions or who are developmentally delayed.

Target groups include children with learning disabilities, speech handicaps, mental retardation, autism, orthopedical handicaps, visual handicaps or emotional disorders.

Snelson's legislation made $6.25 million available for the intervention program and established an Early Childhood Intervention Council to coordinate the work.

Bombs: An El Salvadoran Christmas present

By DIAL TORGERSON
Los Angeles Times

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — The holiday season has come to San Salvador — a time of Christmas carols and bombs.

With tinsel, ribbon and bright packages, the people here are trying to forget the kidnapings, the bodies thrown to the vultures, the civil war in the hills that takes its daily toll, and the echoing bomb blasts that remind San Salvador it cannot escape its small, sad place in history.

People who have money are spending it. In the Metrocenter shopping mall on the prosperous north side of El Salvador's capital, the shops are packed with holiday throngs. Escalators carry shoppers from one level of air-conditioned shops to another. Children gather in front of animated Walt Disney figures in store windows.

In the jammed, narrow streets of downtown San Salvador, the crowds have less to spend. But the little shops there are busy, too, selling merchandise that costs less but comes as brightly wrapped. Like the rich, the poor of El Salvador have much to forget this Christmas of 1981.

Since late 1979, a war between leftist guerrillas and the civilian-military junta here has escalated, a bloodletting in which tens of thousands have died or disappeared.

Marta, a pretty secretary in her early 20s, was told by an American acquaintance last week that he would not look forward to Christmas in San Salvador.

"I'm not looking forward to it, either," Marta said, "because my cousin isn't here."

Where is he?

"He disappeared in April," she said. "He was 17."

Her cousin is among those whose deaths will never be explained.

At El Playon, a moonscape-like lava bed west of San Salvador, the remains of perhaps 30 bodies lie scattered among the black rocks, prey to vultures and wild dogs. The victims of vigilante justice, they will never be identified. And — in the callousness toward death that has become a Salvadoran characteristic — medical students have carried away some of the picked-clean skeletons to use as study aids.

In San Salvador, the living play to forget the death that lies just beyond the sound of music. Christmas here looks like the holiday in an American city: Christmas trees, Santas, all the trimmings. The Christmas carols are American, the dance rhythms Latin. It is a festive holiday, not particularly religious.

At the U.S. Embassy, a fortress of concrete block walls and sandbags, employees wrapped Christmas presents for the children of the Zaragoza Catholic Orphanage, where boys and girls left homeless by the war are cared for. The toys will be taken to the orphanage by members of the embassy's Marine Corps guard.

Many other orphans still roam the streets. One of them is Ricardo, age 7 and no taller than a yardstick, who sells papers in front of a posh San Salvador hotel.

Noting his layers of dirt and his strict honesty in counting change, a European television cameraman and his wife took him to their hearts. The cameraman led him to the shopping center across the street and bought him all new clothes. The couple let him shower in their suite.

He came every day to learn how to read and write from the European woman. In the three months they were here, he learned to type "My name is Ricardo" on the TV man's teletype machine.

But Christmas came, and the couple returned to Europe for the holiday — for good. After all that had happened to him, Ricardo was stunned. One woman, a producer for another network, offered to help him. "But he never showers anymore," she said. "He has forgotten how to read. His older brother stole his clothes, and now he dresses in rags again.

"What he has had," she said, "is a real San Salvador Christmas present."

From the guerrillas come other presents. From hideouts on the towering volcano that lies behind San Salvador's best residential neighborhood, they slip out to bomb the towers that carry the capital's power lines. They also blow up telephone relay stations.

Sometimes the explosions come three, four, perhaps five in a row, echoing across the city, as the Christmas lights blink out and neighborhoods fall into darkness. The guerrillas' message is that the war is not to be forgotten. It hapens several times a week: a real San Salvador Christmas present.

Poland not expected to default on its loans from Western banks

By CHRISTOPHER LINDSAY
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Analysts doubt Poland will default on billions of dollars in loans due the West but say even if the worst were to happen, the banks could absorb the writeoffs with little pain.

Poland owes an estimated $25 billion to Western banks and governments. The country will be in default, at least technically, if it does not pay by Dec. 28 about $500 million in interest on $2.4 billion originally due this year.

However, the banks are unlikely to immediately declare Poland in default, analysts said Monday. Among 460 Western banks that are owed about $15 billion are 63 U.S. banks which have loaned Poland about $1.4 billion. An additional $10 billion is owed Western governments.

A group of Poland's lenders gathered in a closed meeting in Zurich, Switzerland on Monday to discuss the debt to the West as the Polish military continued to crack down on the free labor movement, Solidarity.

While no statement was issued after the meeting, presumably among the topics discussed was Poland's request last week for another loan of $350 million to help it pay the interest it owes.

Irving Geszel, a bank analyst with the investment firm of Bear, Stearns Inc., said even if Poland made no payment by Dec. 28 it would not formally be in default unless declared so by the banks.

He said banks had options to declaring default, including "sitting it out" in hopes Poland could pay a portion of the interest or that the Soviet Union, a frequent and well-regarded borrower in the West, would aid Poland.

Paul Kelly, managing director of Merrill Lynch White Weld Capital Markets Group, agreed, saying: "No matter what happens politically (in Poland), you have to turn the economy."

He suggested the Soviet Union would intervene economically if need be to maintain the credit credibility of the Eastern European nations of the Soviet bloc.

He also predicted banks would wait well into mid-1982 before deciding they had to write off the loans, if not paid.

Even in the worst case, Kelly said, the banks would write off the loans over a period of perhaps two years, and the bad-debt loss would only amount to an earnings drop of "5, 6 or 7 cents a share."

"Only if the Russians said: 'We're not going to pay,' and slam the door shut" would there be an absolute writeoff, Kelly said. "I cannot imagine the Russians doing that. They need hard currency."

Even if Poland totally defaults, the banks can "absorb that and continue to run," Kelly said. While the amount of money involved is not inconsequential, it won't bring the banks "to their knees," he said.

For example, San Francisco's Bank of America is said to have the largest Polish loan portfolio among U.S. banks: $125 million to $150 million, but only about two-tenths of 1 percent of its total outstanding loans of $62.5 billion at the end of 1980.

What's most likely, Kelly said, is that by mid-1982 the "current turmoil will have calmed down to some degree, there will be some restoration of a normal economy" and the loans will be renegotiated.

Under a tentative agreement earlier this year, a coalition of Western banks agreed to reschedule Poland's debt if a number of conditions were met, including payment of the $500 million interest due this fourth quarter. Now, said Geszel, "a lot of it's in the hands of the German banks."

West German banks have the biggest stake in the Polish debt, with more than $1.5 billion owed six German banks alone.

Kelly, Geszel and others agreed that banks routinely allow borrowers to repay loans even if the original terms have been breeched.

Foreclosure — and "attachment of assets" — raises some interesting questions in the case of a country like Poland, Kelly said. "You might get a case of pork sausage," he quipped.

Pope sees threat to world peace

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II warned today that crises in his native Poland and elsewhere are posing serious threats to world peace.

He declared his solidarity with workers and appealed that his fellow Poles be spared any more suffering.

In a message to cardinals reviewing the year, the pope recalled "with emotion" his meeting last January with Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, who has been detained since martial law was declared in Poland Dec. 13.

The pontiff addressed the cardinals shortly after meeting with an emissary of Poland's Roman Catholic bishops in his first direct contact with clergy from his homeland since the martial law clampdown.

The pope said "dark clouds" threatening peace have arisen from Poland, the Middle East and Central America. He also denounced the rise of "international terrorism" and its aims of destabilization, noting that he and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat were both targets of assassins in the past year. Sadat was killed Oct. 6 in Cairo. The pope was wounded May 13 in St. Peter's Square.

Turning to Poland, the pope said in Italian, "Once again I implore that further suffering may be spared to my country, already so tried by war events during its tormented history. I entrust to the Madonna the situation which has been set by the declaration of martial law.

"I pray to the Madonna of the Poles and I appeal for a peaceful solution in the mutual collaboration betweeen authorities and citizens, in the full respect for the civil, national, spiritual and religious identity of this country. My thoughts and my affection, the anxiety and wishes of the entire world are addressed to Poland in this dramatic moment."

He declared that the Roman Catholic Church "is on the side of workers."

All sales are not created equal

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Christmas is only three days away and that means post-holiday sales are just around the corner, with big savings for consumers who know what to look for and how to buy.

The words used by retailers to promote their wares are important; all sales are not equal.

Take the phrase "manufacturer's list price." A reduction from the list price may not mean much. The U.S. Office of Consumer Affairs says that almost all stores regularly sell items below list price.

Irregulars, imperfects and seconds frequently are available at discount prices, particularly at factory outlets. All the products are defective or fall below the manufacturer's standards for top quality, but the range of defects varies. Irregular or imperfect items may have only a tiny flaw, in color or weave for example. But seconds generally have bigger problems, such as a tear in the fabric which can affect usability or durability.

Buying out of season is one of the oldest and best money-saving techniques, but you need an organized shopping schedule to make the most of it.

Draw up a personal calendar, with dates of regular medical check-ups, car tune-ups, school holidays and other things which can mean extra expense.

Check appliances and family's clothes with an eye toward items that will have to be replaced in 1982. A little planning now, and you can get what you need when you see a good buy.

Make a gift list — names, occasions and possible presents. When you spot something that looks right and fits your budget, buy it, wrap it and store it. You'll save time as well as money.

January: Look for holiday cards, decorations and wrapping; white sales for household basics; Christmas favorites like perfumes or jewelry which also make good gifts for Valentine's Day.

February: Shop Washington's and Lincoln's birthday sales for furs, fabrics, appliances and furnishings and final markdowns on January leftovers. Home gardeners should start checking seed catalogs.

March: Sales on china, glassware, housewares and made-to-order drapes and slipcovers. Buy spring finery at pre-Easter promotions.

April: Stock up on materials for spring cleaning and do-it-yourself projects around the house; think ahead to Mother's Day and check post-Easter sales for women's dresses and coats.

May: Look for blankets for next winter and for summer sportswear, garden items and luggage. Keep Father's Day, June graduations and weddings in mind. Now is also the time to buy firewood.

June: Sales on school supplies, including typewriters. Also worth checking: storm windows and building supplies, tires and menswear.

July: Specials on furniture, bedding and white goods. You'll see store-wide clearances near the end of the month, with marked-down air conditioners, bathing suits and other summer specialties.

August: Watch for further markdowns on beachwear, garden furniture, etc. and look ahead for back-to-school needs. Auto sales start near the end of the month.

September: Labor Day sales, school tie-ins and preseason winter specials are your best bet. If you're a theater or concert-goer, check on season tickets at a discount.

October: Auto batteries, electric blankets, women's coats and gloves are on sale this month. Look for preseason deals on ski equipment, and start holiday shopping.

November: Paint, hardware and home-improvement supplies provide the biggest bargains. Also check blankets, stoves and water heaters and look for pre-Christmas sales.

December: Real savings are few, but if you've planned wisely you won't need to shop. You can avoid both crowds and high prices.

Syrian president begins tour against Israel annexation

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Syrian President Hafez Assad flew to Saudi Arabia today, beginning a tour of oil-rich nations on the Arabian peninsula. He is seeking a united Arab front against Israel's annexation of the Golan Heights, the official Saudi press agency said.

The agency said King Khaled and Crown Prince Fahd were on hand at Riyadh Airport when Assad's plane landed. No other details were given.

Syria's state radio earlier said Assad will be visiting unnamed Arab states on the Persian Gulf. Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates as well as North and South Yemen are believed to be on his itinerary.

"What is needed is the use of all Arab weapons to deter aggression and force the Zionists to back down on their decision (to annex the Golan)," Syrian radio said.

The Golan Heights were captured by Israel in the 1967 Arab-Israeli War. The Jewish state has refused to return the occupied plateau to Syria because Syrian troops used to mount it to shell Israel's Northern Galilee.

The state-run radio said Arab solidarity needs to be re-established, and "all Arab potential" should be invested in "the battle of Arab destiny."

Arab nations have been in disarray since leftist heads of state, including Assad, stayed away from an Arab summit conference in Morocco last month. The boycott blocked endorsement of Saudi Arabia's plan for achieving peace with Israel. In effect, the plan called for Arab recognition of Israel's right to exist.

By choosing Saudi Arabia as his first stop, Assad may hope to dispell any bitterness the conservative Saudis might harbor after the aborted Morocco summit.

Announcement of Assad's visit coincided with the Saudi government's calling upon President Reagan to "take a firm stand to put an end to Israeli aggression and encroachment against the Arab nation."

'Heidi' director dead at 96

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Allan Dwan, the director of "Heidi" and more than 400 motion pictures from the days of silent films to the 1960s, is dead at the age of 96.

The pioneer director suffered a stroke Nov. 12 and was moved Friday from St. Joseph Medical Center and Television Country House. He died Monday, said his housekeeper, Bonita Simmons.

"He was the entire motion picture industry," said director Henry Hathaway. "He started it in 1908 in La Mesa. I worked for him as a prop man and as a kid actor. He did every kind of picture on earth."

Actress Shirley Temple Black, who worked as a child star under Dwan's direction, said, "He was a sweet man."

A funeral Mass was planned for Wednesday in St. Cyril's of Jerusalem Roman Catholic Church in Encino.

Born Joseph Aloysius Dwan on April 3, 1885, in Toronto, he came to Chicago with his family in 1893. As an engineering student at Notre Dame, he helped develop a mercury vapor lamp for the Chicago Post Office. The lamp attracted the attention of silent film producer G.K. Spoor who wanted to use it on his movie sets.

Dwan learned through his association with Spoor that he could make money on film scripts, and sold several stories he had written for the school.

Citrus growers await decision on fumigation

By SUSAN STOLER
Associated Press Writer

HARLINGEN, Texas (AP) — Texas citrus industry officials say they are trapped in a "Catch-22" situation between California and the federal government and that it could cost them a large wholesale market.

"Twenty percent of our citrus produce is sold to California," said Dave Hardison, who awaited word today on whether a squabble over fumigation practices would take Texas fruit out of the California market.

Under rules from the U.S. Agriculture Department, Texas has fumigated orange and grapefruit shipments to California to prevent spread of the Mexican fruit fly.

The pest is a less destructive cousin of the more famous Mediterranean fruit fly.

However, California this fall enacted stronger worker safety restrictions on the chemical, ethylene dibromide (EDB), used by Texas shippers to fumigate fruit. Texas appealed to the USDA after most California buyers refused to handle Lone Star citrus instead of trying to comply with the tougher rules.

The USDA lifted the fumigation requirement but now is considering reimposing the rule Jan. 1.

"If we do have to go back to fumigation, it's going to be a bad situation," said Bill Weeks of the Texas Citrus and Vegetable Shippers and Growers Association.

Texas ranks third behind California and Florida in grapefruit and orange production.

In a six-week period ending Dec. 10, Texas growers shipped to California 425,000 cartons of fruit valued at $2.1 million.

Fumigation had been required to protect California, Arizona, Florida and some sections of Louisiana from possible spread of the Mexican fruit fly. Texas citrus bound for other states is not fumigated.

The USDA lifted the fumigation rules in November for 65 percent of the Texas crop, which was grown in an area covered by a sterile fly release program.

USDA officials from Washington met informally Thursday with Texas industry representatives about the issue.

Texas shippers could meet the EDB concentration requirements imposed by California but not other rules, said Les Whitlock of Texas Citrus Mutual.

"We can't overcome other trade regulations, such as monitoring the air (in receiving areas); receivers being liable for any worker harm now and the next 20 years; and special, expensive equipment for workers, which we feel is not needed," said Whitlock.

AGRICULTURE

Hardison said citrus, like everything in agriculture, is suffering this year, although the Texas crop production is up from last season.

Predictions of a large crop in Florida, whose season parallels Texas, sent wholesale prices plummeting in November, Hardison said. The fumigation issue along with general economic problems have made for a frustrating season so far, he added.

The USDA forecast for Texas grapefruit production this season is 440,000 tons, up 60 percent from last year; 162,000 tons of early oranges; and 102,000 tons of Valencia oranges.

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — All the details won't be known for five weeks or so, but it appears Agriculture Secretary John R. Block has successfully defended some of his turf from budget director David A. Stockman's spending ax.

One victory was the scrapping of a Stockman plan to impose user fees on slaughter plants and processors to pay for the costs of federal meat inspection, a source said Monday.

The source, who asked not to be identified, supplied a copy of a memo which outlined Block's "head-to-head confrontation" with Stockman last week at the White House.

No details were available, however, on what major cuts will be in store for the Agriculture Department in fiscal 1983. President Reagan is to announce his budget recommendations next month.

Reports have circulated that government food programs may be targets for cuts. Also among the possibilities are block grants to states which would replace the current system of allocating money for food stamps, school lunches and supplemental family food donations.

The memo said Block "was able to get more than $50 million reinstated in agricultural research funds, which will allow the Department of Agriculture to increase its 1983 funding for research." Stepped-up research has been one of Block's personal goals for some time.

"A Stockman proposal that would have made a drastic cut in Soil Conservation Service funds and staffing out in the country struck at the heart of another one of Block's personal high-priority goals," the memo said.

No dollar figure was included, but it said Block "fought for a plan that allows minimum cuts" in agency funds "but keeps the soil conservation program intact" and able to continue with a strong program.

The memo also said Block was able to counter Stockman's arguments for holding the lid on farm operating loans offered by the Farmers Home Administration.

"Stockman stood against any increase," it said. "Block came away with some increase in funds for farm operating loans."

The FmHA, as the agency calls itself, is basically a lender of last resort to farmers who cannot qualify for credit at banks and other commercial lending institutions.

"Stockman also came up with a proposal to reduce the USDA budget by putting federal meat inspection on an across-the-board user fee basis," the memo said.

"Block argued that this would introduce a fundamental question of the integrity of our food safety system if meat processors were required to pay for the meat inspection in their own plants."

According to the information, Block "also argued that the meat packers would simply take the user fee costs out of the prices paid for livestock at the farm end" and would charge consumers more at the retail end.

Food supply abundant

WASHINGTON (AP) — Inventories of major food items are so large that "holiday feasts needn't end in December," says the Agriculture Department.

"There'll be plenty of grapefruit, fresh winter pears, fresh apples, chicken, turkey, red meat and pork to bring in the new year," the department said Monday.

Turkey supplies in January, for example, will continue at record levels, up 18 percent to 22 percent from year-earlier levels and 22 percent to 26 percent more than the 1979-81 average for the month.

Production of broiler chickens, pork and beef will be "nearly the same or slightly less" than last January, the report said. Even so, there will be "ample" supplies for consumers.

"Beef supplies are expected to be near year-earlier levels, but about 2 percent above the 1979-81 average for the month," it said. "Predictions for pork show supplies averaging 4-6 percent below last year's record level, but about 4 percent above the average for the last three years."

Attacking the problem

Institutions tend to react to criticism in much the same way that the average person does; namely, by rationalizing failures, minimizing shortcomings, and generally taking refuge in comforting self-deception. So it has been with the Navy and Marine Corps on the subject of drug abuse in the ranks.

What was obvious to any enlisted man — that drug abuse had reached epidemic levels among young servicemen — seemed too often lost on Navy flag officers and Marine Corps generals.

For example, Navy officers in particular complained vigorously about news reporting on drug abuse. At times, the Navy seemed far more interested in disputing the facts reported than in declaring war on the drug abuse detailed in the reports.

Understandably, all this sniping at the bearer of bad news did nothing to correct a problem threatening military efficiency, discipline, and morale, not to mention the health and welfare of too many young sailors and marines.

This is not to say that the Navy and Marine Corps were ignoring the drug problem entirely, or that they had no programs in operation for dealing with this destructive phenomenon. On the contrary, drug counseling, rehabilitation, and investigative efforts aimed at identifying drug dealers and users existed throughout the Navy and Marine Corps.

What was plainly lacking, however, was the essential sense of urgency and wholesale commitment without which there can be little hope of reducing drug use to manageable levels among service personnel.

It now appears that this critical deficiency has finally been corrected. Chief of Naval Operations Adm. Thomas B. Hayward and Marine Corps Commandant Gen. Robert Barrow have personally put their services on notice that tough, new anti-drug policies are the order of the day.

In a videotaped message circulated to officers and chief petty officers, Adm. Hayward called drug abuse a "cancer residing among us." He added that the Navy was to make a "180-degree turn from its present stance of indifference, passiveness, and non-responsibility" toward the problem. There can be no mistaking the intent of this kind of language from the CNO.

Gen. Barrow spoke in equally unambiguous terms to those under his command. And he echoed Adm. Hayward's directive calling for discharge under less-than-honorable conditions for any officer or senior enlisted personnel found using drugs. And why not? Those charged with leading by example must do just that.

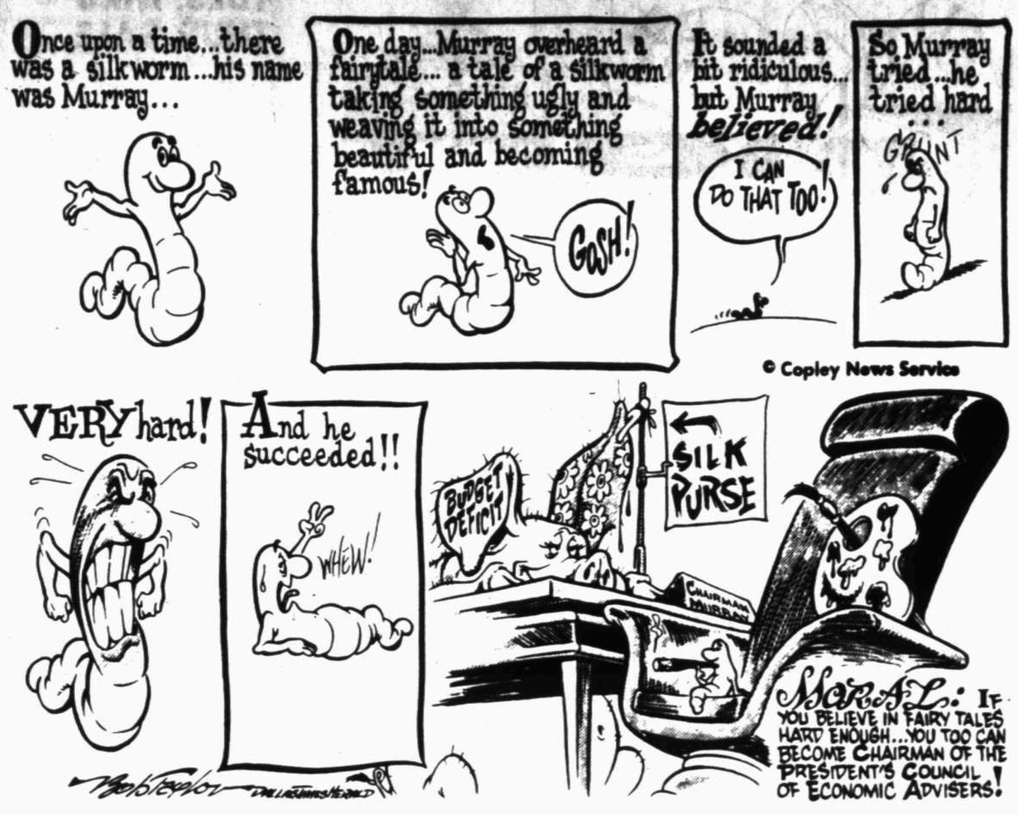

Part of the Navy-Marine crackdown will be an overdue effort to curb the traffic in drugs via mail sent to service personnel. The Navy and Marine Corps are currently consulting with Congress, the U.S. attorney general, and postal authorities in search of ways to attack this major route of drug delivery.

Existing Navy and Marine Corps drug programs are to be strengthened across the board, and greater emphasis will be placed on discharging those with a history of drug use. Offenders whose drug habits endanger themselves and others won't be missed.

The best available statistics indicate that half or more of lower ranking Navy personnel use marijuana or hashish at least occasionally and that the use of amphetamines and cocaine is also widespread. Comparable percentages for the Marine Corps are lower but still clearly excessive. The information available to Adm. Hayward and Gen. Barrow leaves no doubt that significant percentages of those in uniform actually report for duty under the influence of drugs.

Adm. Hayward and Gen. Barrow are to be commended for their candor in acknowledging the full extent of the problem, and for their evident determination to excise what the chief of naval operations quite rightly called a cancer.

MARK RUSSELL SAYS

Sen. Jesse Helms will lead a filibuster to prevent the ratification of a treaty outlawing genocide. That's right, Senator — once you let them outlaw genocide, the next thing you know, the liberals will start badmouthing bubonic plague.

The Senator must be kidding — or is there a risk these days in being labeled soft on genocide? When senators go home, do people grab them on the street and say, "Whatta ya got against genocide, buster?"

Washington is so bizarre lately. I expect any day now to be invited to a cocktail party and fund-raiser to save genocide.

There should be a big turnout for the big genocide filibuster. It ought to be held in the Coliseum in Rome. Or, better yet — the Olympic Stadium in Munich.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Guatemala bleeds while arms aide pends

WASHINGTON — While the Reagan administration has trained its Central American rhetorical artillery on the violence in El Salvador, little has been said about an even worse situation in neighboring Guatemala.

Jack Anderson

The killings and repression in that unhappy country have reached the proportions of a blood bath in recent months. And while it is at least arguable that the ruling junta in El Salvador is not directly responsible for the terrorism that is tearing the country apart, no such case can be made for the right-wing regime of Maj. Gen. Romeo Fernando Lucas Garcia in Guatemala.

Impartial groups such as Amnesty International and the Organization of American States have asserted that the violence in Guatemala can be traced directly to the highest level of the government. As Amnesty International concluded recently, "the selection of targets for detention and murder, and the deployment of official if extra legal operations can be pinpointed ... to secret offices ... under the direct control of the president of the Republic."

Reports of atrocities — such as destruction of entire villages by government troops — have caused serious concern among members of both parties in Congress. The Guatemalan government, as one source told my associate Lucette Lagnado, has been "killing 10,000 to get 10 Communists."

What bothers the lawmakers is evidence that the administration is planning to send a modest amount of military aid to Lucas Garcia — about $2 million worth of helicopter spare parts. Under the Arms Export Control Act, military aid amounting to less than $7 million can be dispatched without congressional approval; all that's necessary is for the administration to notify Congress after the fact.

This has led some members of Congress — both Republicans and Democrats — to suspect that the White House will delay its decision on the Guatemalan arms package until Congress adjourns for the holidays. This would avoid any immediate outcry from Capitol Hill if the administration's decision is to go ahead with the sale.

Congressional sources report that State Department officials have secretly visited key legislators in the House and Senate to test their reactions to the proposed military aid. Among those who have reportedly been called on are Sens. Charles Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb., ranking minority member of the Latin American subcommittee; Reps. Michael Barnes, D-Md., chairman of the House Inter-American Affairs subcommittee, and Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y.

According to Capitol Hill sources, the State Department emissaries have met almost universal negative responses in their visits to Congress. But at least some of the legislators got the impression that the administration was not deterred by their objections.

Zorinsky, a vocal critic of the Guatemalan regime, hopes to prevent an end run around Congress during the holiday recess. He has insisted that — whatever the actual amount involved — any military aid to Guatemala should have the concurrence of Congress, in advance.

Zorinsky's concern prompted Percy to promise on the Senate floor that "I will request that the State Department consult with the (Foreign Relations) Committee prior to any and every increment of military assistance, including private sales, to Guatemala."

Percy also promised to oppose any such assistance until the committee has had a chance to review the proposals. Zorinsky later wrote a private "Dear Chuck" letter to Percy, pointedly reminding him of his pledge. And Reps. Barnes and Solarz have introduced legislation designed to prohibit military sales to the Guatemalan dictatorship.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES: Director Gerald Carmen of the General Services Administration has recreated the two faces of Scrooge in the past month. In a "Bah! Humbug!" incarnation, his personnel directors notified GSA employees that more than 900 of them would be out on the street by mid-February. To keep the employees on tenterhooks over the holidays, the names of those hit by the reduction-in-force won't be announced until sometime next month. Then last week Carmen became the "born again" Scrooge of the Dickens classic: He handed out $150,000 in bonuses — not to the Bob Cratchits and Tiny Tims of GSA, but to 23 high-level employees, who got anywhere from $5,000 to $9,500 each.

— Newspaper, wire service and magazine reporters in the Senate Press Gallery are up in arms over threatened encroachment on their turf by the glamour gentry of radio and television. The impudent electronic media types have asked for a bigger share of the finite press gallery space. One Senate aide noted that the print media people even have room for couches here and there, while the broadcast networks are confined to a space "the size of a senator's private bathroom."

WATCH ON WASTE: Working at an intercontinental ballistic missile site can be pretty dull. To give its Minuteman crews a productive way of passing their off-duty hours, the Air Force several years ago instituted the "Minuteman Education Program." Instructors are brought in to teach post-graduate business courses, and schedules are arranged to fit the missile crews' irregular hours. The cost is $2 million a year. A recent Air Force audit disclosed, however, that approximately 40 percent of those enrolled in the Minuteman program are not missile crew members.

INSIDE REPORT:

Haig-Brzezinski talk signals tougher stance in Poland

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Alexander Haig conferred with Zbigniew Brzezinski on the Polish crisis for one hour in the State Department Dec. 16, the first time he has sought advice in a foreign crisis from Jimmy Carter's national security adviser.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Polish-born Brzezinski, who was under continuous attack by soft-line liberals in his own Democratic party as an anti-Soviet hardliner during his White House duties, has strong views on how the U.S. should deal with the imposition of martial law in Poland. Brzezinski believes that the martial law powers ordered into force by Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski are as harsh as those imposed by the German Nazis when Hitler occupied Poland in 1939.

Brzezinski's advice to Haig is not known. The fact that Haig invited him in for their long talk, however, indicates that Haig is moving toward a harder U.S. line against the Polish strongman and his Soviet backers.

RICHARDS SURVIVES

A senior staff meeting at the White House the evening of Dec. 11 decided that Richard Richards will stay on as Republican national chairman at least for the next several months and probably through the 1982 elections.

Michael K. Deaver, White House deputy chief of staff, agreed with the president's political aides that Richards had put his foot in his mouth so frequently that he should be replaced at once, before planning for the 1983 campaign is too far advanced. But James Baker III, the chief of staff, decided that amidst so much apparent disarray in the administration, Richards should stay.

Baker's decision may have been determined by reluctance to fire Richards, a longtime Reaganite, while hiring Rich Bond as deputy national chairman. Bond was a key political operative in candidate George Bush's 1980 campaign against Reagan. Earlier, on Dec. 11, Richards had protested to Baker that Bond was being installed as the White House man at national party headquarters.

ALLEN'S PARTY

The large turnout for that Dec. 16 luncheon honoring Richard V. Allen, who is on "administrative leave" from his White House post, did not help his cause inside the White House, but it bolstered the spirits of the witty national security assistant.

The fault was not Allen's, but some White House aides — particularly those close to Chief of Staff James Baker III — resented cracks by Allen's conservative friends aimed directly at Baker. White House staffers also told us that if President Reagan viewed the luncheon as a pressure move to get Allen reinstated, it would hurt — not help — his longtime friend.

Will Allen be invited back? The odds are strongly, but not yet definitively, against it. Leading contenders are U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick and Deputy Secretary of State William Clark, but no quick decision is expected.

A LANCE COMEBACK

Bert Lance, whose forced resignation as budget director in 1977 began the Carter administration's long string of troubles, will be the man to beat if he enters next year's race for governor of Georgia.

Insiders have felt that Lance's decision to build a mansion in his hometown of Calhoun, Ga. suggests little interest in the governorship. But Lance became a statewide hero in winning acquittal on charges of federal banking violations, and therefore needs no big preliminary buildup. He has told friends he will wait until the last minute before deciding whether to run.

A footnote: Jack Watson, the last chief of staff in the Carter White House, has been running hard for governor of Georgia. But he still has lots of ground to make up and must overcome his liberal image, no asset in Georgia.

HUNTING BYRD

Sen. Robert Byrd's difficulty in fielding questions over CBS's "Face the Nation" Dec. 6 has rekindled interest in dumping him as Senate Democratic leader for the new Congress convening in January 1983.

Byrd could not articulate his party's position substantiating complaints by fellow Democratic senators that he has proved a poor spokesman for the Senate minority. Before facing any purge effort, however, Byrd will encounter in 1982 the first serious Republican challenge against him in West Virginia since his first election to the Senate in 1958.

The most obvious alternative to Byrd would be the Senate's No. 2 Democrat: Sen. Alan Cranston of California, the Senate minority whip. But some Democratic senators prefer a relatively fresher face — such as Sen. Dale Bumpers of Arkansas.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On Dec. 22, 1971, 10 years ago today, Kurt Waldheim was sworn in as U.N. secretary-general.

On this date:

In 69 A.D., Roman Emperor Vitellus was assassinated.

In 1894, Alfred Dreyfus was convicted of treason by a French court martial and ordered imprisoned on Devil's Island, in French Guyana.

In 1943, President Franklin Roosevelt, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill and Chinese leader Chiang Kai-Shek agreed at a Cairo, Egypt meeting on measures to defeat Japan in World War II.

One year ago: The State Department said it believed some of the 52 American hostages in Iran might have been in prisons while others were suffering inadequate medical attention.

CHARLEY REESE

Inflation still United States' worst enemy

Both liberal Republicans and liberal Democrats are trying to make you forget that inflation is still your most dangerous domestic enemy. President Reagan's first step toward fiscal sanity is barely a month old and the liberals are already pronouncing it a failure and calling for retreat.

Charley Reese

Don't let them con you. Inflation steals your savings and your insurance while you sleep. It erodes your paycheck. It takes food, housing and health care away from millions of honest, hard-working Americans. No remedies for any of our ills will work until we restore the value of our currency and stabilize it.

Look at the way the liberal con game is constructed. They appeal to our sympathy for the poor. No one, however, is unwilling to help the disabled, the indigent elderly, and the orphan. But so long as you have inflation, you are playing a cruel joke on them by offering them dollars with one hand and stealing them back with another.

Furthermore, there simply aren't that many disabled, indigent elderly and orphans to justify the multi-billion monstrosity on the Potomac. The bulk of government tax dollars go to people who are not truly needy.

In the meantime, inflation is just killing a large group of people who don't qualify for all of these government giveaways. I'm talking about small business people and people who work for wages in the low to middle income brackets. Their income never catches up with inflation. Inflation takes first their discretionary income — that money left-over for savings, vacations, and nesteggs. Then it begins to eat into necessities like an adequate diet, housing and medical care.

It's a terrible thing for people to work really hard but to have no margin of safety. There are too many people in that predicament. They break their backs and then their car goes on the blink or a child gets hurt or sick or the washing machine goes out and their whole budget crashes. They are the people most hurt by inflation.

Inflation doesn't especially touch the rich. They have a wide margin and can absorb a lot of lost purchasing power before they feel any pinch. Furthermore, they have the cash flow to put money to work for them. One reason we have inflation is because a certain powerful segment of the economy profits from it. In addition, the Congress has voted itself into the category of people who aren't hurt by inflation. Did you know that a Congressman makes more than 95 percent of the American wage earners? And that — as one delighted first-termer put it — "is just salary alone."

If those who are hurt by inflation want to whip it, we will have to pressure the Congress to abolish the Federal Reserve System which is neither federal nor a system. It is a federally-chartered private corporation, a central bank, owned by banks. It is the principal engine of inflation and the perpetrator of most recessions. It causes one by inflating the money supply and the other by raising the price of money.

We will also have to force reductions in government spending at every level, from city hall to the White House. Presiden Reagan has taken only taken only the tiniest bite out of the whale and it is already bellowing like it received a mortal blow. You would never know, from reading all the garbage about Reaganomics, that the Reagan budet is bigger than the last Carter budget.

That's going to mean reforming Social Security and taking a meat axe to the subsidies, grants, and pork barrel projects. Politically, it's going to be just shy of impossible but the alternative is economic collapse either by runaway inflation or one wing-dingy of a depression.

'Ski-mask rapist' sentenced to 18 life terms

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Jon B. Simonis, who confessed to crimes attributed to a "ski mask rapist," has been sentenced to 18 life terms plus 2,046 years in prison for sexual attacks, robberies and other crimes in Louisiana.

He still faces charges in Texas and other parts of Louisiana, and authorities in 10 other states have made inquiries about him to Louisiana state police. Simonis, who has been linked to 80 crimes, has admitted to rapes in which the attacker wore a ski mask to hide his face.

Two judges in Baton Rouge accepted Simonis' guilty pleas Monday and imposed sentences adding up to 15 life terms plus 1,389 years on 39 counts of armed robbery, aggravated rape, aggravated crime against nature and aggravated burglary.

Those sentences were added on to three life terms and 657 years imposed after Simonis pleaded guilty to related crimes earlier at Jena and Gonzales.

A 26-year-old Lake Charles man accused of being an accomplice, John G. Dickinson III, pleaded innocent Monday to rape, armed robbery, crime against nature and attempted rape in an attack that oecurred on June 7 and 8 of this year.

Dickinson's trial was scheduled for May 3, the same date that an associate, Frederick A. Boerman Jr., 27, of Lake Charles, stands trial for armed robbery and burglary.

Like the sentences at Jena, those imposed Monday on Simonis ruled out any chance of early release through probation, pardon or parole. They involved seven attacks dating back to March 8, 1979.

When asked by Louisiana district judges in separate courtrooms if he committed the crimes he was accused of, Simonis politely responded, "Yes sir, your honor."

District Judge Leo Higginbotham sentenced Simonis to 10 life terms and 858 years for 24 crimes and District Judge Doug Moreau added five life sentences plus 531 years for 15 other crimes.

Simonis, 30, also has been indicted at Woodville, Texas, and still faces charges in DeRidder and in his hometown of Lake Charles.

State police said inquiries about Simonis have been received from California, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Michigan, Mississippi, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma and Wisconsin.

Troopers said most of the inquiries involved cases in which a masked intruder broke into a home, forced a husband or boyfriend to watch one or more sexual attacks, took valuables and fled in his victim's car.

Birth certificates lead to arrest for murder

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman accused of killing a would-be defector from a commune was seized after agents investigating a Brink's holdup linked to underground terrorists heard that someone in New York was asking for birth certificates of dead people.

The killing at the California commune — which has been linked to terrorist groups — was unrelated to the Oct. 20 Brink's holdup in suburban Nanuet that led to the arrests of eight people, including members of the Weather Underground and the Black Liberation Army, authorities said.

But investigators said they were looking into whether a suspect in the California killing, Betty Jean Abramson, played a role in the Brink's robbery.

FBI spokesman Joseph Valiquette said Monday that Miss Abramson, 28, was arrested Saturday at an unidentified business address where she received her mail. Agents had staked out the address for a week and arrested her on a "Jane Doe" mail fraud warrant, Valiquette said.

Authorities learned Miss Abramson's identity through fingerprints and found she was the subject of a federal warrant for unlawful flight to avoid prosecution for murder in California.

Miss Abramson, wearing faded jeans and a checked shirt, was arraigned in New York City on Monday on the unlawful flight warrant and held on $500,000 bail. A preliminary hearing was set for Dec. 31.

Valiquette said that during the investigation of the Brink's robbery, in which a guard and two policemen were killed, the FBI found a photograph of Miss Abramson in a "terrorist safe house" in East Orange, N.J., rented by fugitive Marilyn Buck, said to be the only white member of the BLA.

The murder warrant alleges Wendy Sue Heaton held Miss Goustin to the ground while Miss Abramson shot her in the head with a handgun. Miss Heaton is still at large.

Valiquette said that after the Brink's heist, the FBI alerted state bureaus of vital statistics to watch for suspicious applications for birth certificates from the New York area.

In North Carolina, the registrar of deeds for Onslow County, Mildred Thomas, said she received a birth-certificate request in November from someone identifying herself as Sharron L. Jarrell.

Mrs. Thomas, who works in Jacksonville, N.C., went to pull her copy of the certificate and saw it was marked "Dead." Sharron L. Jarrell died May 22, 1953, the day after she was born, the certificate said.

Mrs. Thomas said the request looked suspicious.

"It really surprised me that she had my complete address, the room number, the correct building, everything," she said. Most of her mail is addressed, "To the Onslow County Courthouse."

Edward Warren, head of the vital records branch of the North Carolina Department of Human Resources, said he got a request for the birth certificate of another deceased person. Both requests had the same New York address — the place where Miss Abramson was arrested.

"One request is just a false identity," Warren said, "but two requests to two different counties from the same company indicated that someone had come down and looked for someone the right age."

Warren said North Carolina is a prime target for people looking for false identities because records are kept in every county.

In the Brink's robbery, $1.6 million was taken but recovered immediately.

UAW takes steps toward rewriting contracts with auto companies

By STEPHEN JONES
Associated Press Writer

DETROIT (AP) — The United Auto Workers union is taking a major step toward rewriting its contracts with General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. due to the continuing industry slump and growing numbers of layoffs, UAW officials say.

The union announced Monday its Ford and GM bargaining councils will meet Jan. 8 in Chicago to discuss the automakers' plight and company demands the UAW accept wage and benefit cuts before current contracts expire next September.

Ford and GM hailed the announcement as a "positive move."

"The depression in the auto industry has gone from bad to worse," said UAW Vice President Don Ephlin, who heads the union's Ford Department.

"This is the 23rd month in which indefinite layoffs have been more than 150,000 workers," he said. "I want to discuss the disastrous shape Ford Motor Co. is in and what can be done to protect the jobs of Ford workers."

Owen Bieber, vice president and head of the union's GM Department, said discussion of GM's condition also is needed.

"Indefinite layoffs at GM right now are at their highest level in months and the prospects for the immediate future don't look optimistic," he said. "The time has come to meet as a council and talk about these difficulties."

GM and Ford responded quickly and positively to the union's action.

"We view today's announcement as a positive move by the UAW," Ford Chairman Philip Caldwell said. "We hope that this is a step toward negotiation of a new contract for which there is such an urgent need. We have all got to face the reality of the situation together."

"We remain hopeful that we can get to the bargaining table early in the new year," said Alfred S. Warren Jr., GM vice president for industrial relations.

The automakers have been pushing since early this year for renegotiation of the current contracts, saying they need labor cost reductions to become competitive with foreign manufacturers.

GM and Ford say they pay about $8 an hour more for labor than their Japanese competitors. Both companies have threatened to move more production and jobs overseas if that cost difference is not reduced.

When the union's Ford and GM councils met March 19 in Washington, they rejected renegotiation of the current pacts and the UAW held to that position until earlier this month.

On Dec. 9, the union's executive board lifted the ban on renegotiation and said each bargaining council could make its own decision on whether to reopen talks on current contracts.

The union's American Motors Corp. council met last week and voted to seek further details from AMC before deciding whether to consider a company plan for worker investment of $150 million in the automaker's future product programs.

Truck driver arrested for selling goods

SELIGMAN, Ariz. (AP) — A Texas truck driver was arrested here by the state Department of Public Safety after he allegedly went into business for himself with the goods he was carrying from California to Oklahoma.

DPS officers said Eldon Fink, 36, of Dallas, is in the Yavapai County Jail charged with theft.

A DPS spokesman said Fink was being held in connection with what investigators termed a "tailgate" business.

Baba

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Enough evidence has been gathered to court-martial a 21-year-old ensign on charges of passing secrets to South Africa, Rear Adm. Paul T. Gilcrist says.

Gilcrist made his announcement Monday after five days of a pre-trial hearing in the case of Ensign Stephen Baba of Gaithersburg, Md. Baba faces a variety of other charges too, including desertion and hitting a female superior officer. He would face up to 40 years in prison if found guilty of the charges, the Navy said.

The hearing, now dealing with Baba's defense, was to continue today.

A three-officer board to conduct the court-martial will be named once preliminary hearings are completed.

Baba was described by a Navy spokesman as a brilliant student who finished far ahead in high school and at the University of Maryland. No explanation has been offered for his alleged behavior in uniform.

The allegedly misappropriated Navy documents dealing with electronic warfare were received by a naval attache at the South African Embassy in Washington, where they were promptly turned over to the U.S. government, the Navy said.

The documents were identified as an "Electronics Warfare Evaluation and Education Quarterly" and two bits of microfilm entitled "K[illegible]word Index Report" and bearing a warning against revealing their secret contents to a foreign nation.

Baba, on a second count, was charged with sending the documents Sept. 28 "with intent or reason to believe that the information was to be used to the injury of the United States or to the advantage of a foreign nation." The Navy has declined to say whether any request was made for money in return.

Baba was an electronics material officer on the San Diego-based frigate Lang at the time.

The charges also include two counts of unauthorized absence and another of trying to extort money from the Naval Federal Credit Union on the Amphibious Base at neighboring Coronado by threatening to blow it up with a bomb.

New Mexico man indicted in slaying of Odessa woman

ODESSA, Texas (AP) — A New Mexico man has been indicted in the mutilation slaying of an 18-year-old woman after medical sleuths linked him to bite marks found on her nude body.

Murray W. Galloway, 44, of Clovis, N.M., already was being held in the Ector County Jail on $300,000 bond on an apparently unrelated kidnapping charge. Officials said Monday that Galloway would be arraigned on the murder charge within two weeks.

The body of Carmen Melinda Croan of Odessa was exhumed so the medical experts could search for bite marks, officials said.

Monday's indictment followed a four-month investigation into the death of Ms. Croan, whose body was found Aug. 23 near a remote oil pump jack in North Ector County.

An autopsy showed she had been stabbed 12 times with a large, fixed-blade knife, and gutted. An oil-field worker found a bloody shirt and pair of pants about two miles away.

The evidence was sent to Dr. Homer Campbell, chief consultant for Medical Investigators, a private forensic organization in New Mexico. Campbell, an expert in dental pathology, said Saturday that he searched for individual characteristics in his study of teeth marks found on the body.

Ector County District Attorney Mike Holmes, who announced the indictment, declined to speculate on a motive for the killing. He added, however, that Galloway had a history of mental illness.

Ms. Croan last was seen alive about 11:30 p.m. Aug. 22 at Graham Central Station, a central Odessa disco. Her car was found later in the club's parking lot.

Ector County Sheriff Bob Brookshire said a $10,000 reward offered by the owner of the nightclub has been returned, because no witnesses came forward.

Galloway, a one-time jewelry salesman, has been behind bars since Oct. 12, charged with the aggravated kidnapping of a 28-year-old Odessa man who was abducted at gunpoint in October.

Three people injured in mysterious explosion

SYLACAUGA, Ala. (AP) — Officials and residents agreed that a mysterious, fiery explosion that rocked a section of town could have caused more injuries had it occurred later than it did on the morning of a busy shopping day.

Three people were reported injured in the blast Monday.

"Thank goodness it wasn't later," said Sylacauga Mayor Gene Stewart who was driving down Norton Street when an explosion leveled three businesses and damaged a fourth at about 8:25 a.m. "It's a sad occurrence, but it's just fortunate" more people were not hurt, he said.

Grady Green, who manages the Sylacauga Billiard Club across the street, surveyed the broken windows and scattered glass fragments that reached the back of his store-front pool hall, and shook his head. "If it'd been 11 o'clock, it would have been full of people," he said.

Green was sitting in a car behind the building when it exploded. The explosion dropped a "brick wall" on his car.

Police Lt. Billy Hay, one of the first officers on the scene, said he felt the blast down the street at City Hall.

"It rocked the whole town," he said.

Forty stores in a four-block area received some kind of damage from the blast in this eastern Alabama town, located 45 miles southeast of Birmingham.

The cause of the blast was unknown early today. Investigators from the state fire marshal's office, the Public Service Commission, and local fire and safety departments spent much of Monday probing the wreckage on the edge of the central business district.

"Most likely, it will be two or three days before we know what caused it," Fire Chief T. A. Herd said Monday. "We're going back out there tomorrow, and if we don't find anything we'll be back the next day."

Officials of the city utility board, checking for gas leaks after the blast, found a broken gas main, but it was not known if the main was broken during or prior to the blast.

Evelyn Green, 59; John Gann, 66; and Robert Walker, 19, all of Sylacauga were injured. Gann and Walker were treated for burns. Mrs. Green was treated for a back injury. She was washing clothes at a laundry when the blast occurred.

She and another woman, Helen Vinzant, escaped through a hole in the back of the collapsing building. Mrs. Vinzant received bruises, but did not require treatment.

HOUSTON (AP) — A defense lawyer for a woman convicted of painting communist slogans on the wall of the Exxon Building here says his client was framed because of her well-known revolutionary activities.

"She looked like a good target," Glenn Van Slyke said after Betty Sullivan, 32, was sentenced to two years in prison for criminal mischief. "It is definitely an unjust sentence, a vindictive sentence."

Van Slyke says Bob Price, the cab driver who testified against Ms. Sullivan, could not identify her for two days after the April 28 incident, when police showed him photos taken at protest rallies.

He said Price's original description did not match Ms. Sullivan's appearance.

The slogans read, "Fly the red flag May Day" and "Red, white and blue we spit on you May Day."

"If she'd painted, 'God bless America' or 'Jesus is coming' on the side of the building, we never would have been in court," Van Slyke said. "Or 'Nuke Iran,' which I've seen painted all over this city."

Prosecutor Dave Carlson agreed the sentence was unusual.

"I think they (the jurors) were impressed with a citizen who took the time to get involved," Carlson said of Price. "And also, she wore little communist pins to court every day."

But, he said, "We made it clear that we weren't trying her for what she wrote."

Ms. Sullivan said she was at home asleep when the messages were painted, but offered no one to testify on her behalf, Carlson said.

"It was basically a one-witness swearing match," he said.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: One of the toughest tasks a church faces is choosing a good minister. A member of an official board undergoing this painful process finally lost patience. He'd watched the Pastoral Relations Committee reject applicant after applicant for some fault, alleged or otherwise. It was time for a bit of soul-searching on the part of the committee. So he stood up and read a letter purporting to be from another applicant.

"Gentlemen: Understanding your pulpit is vacant, I should like to apply for the position. I have many qualifications ... I've been a preacher with much success and also some success as a writer. Some say I'm a good organizer. I've been a leader most places I've been.

"I'm over 50 years of age. I have never preached in one place for more than three years. In some places I have left town after my work has caused riots and disturbances. I must admit I have been in jail three or four times, but not because of any real wrongdoing. My health is not too good, though I still get a great deal done. The churches I have preached in have been small, though located in several large cities. I've not got along well with religious leaders in towns where I have preached. In fact, some have threatened me and even attacked me physically. I am not too good at keeping records. I have been known to forget whom I have baptized.

"However, if you can use me, I shall do my best for you."

The board member looked over the committee. "Well, what do you think? Shall we call him?"

The good church folks were aghast. Call an unhealthy, trouble-making, absent-minded ex-jailbird? Was the board member crazy? Who signed that application? Who had such colossal nerve?

The board member eyed them all keenly before he answered. "It's signed, 'The Apostle Paul.'" — AUTHOR UNKNOWN (Submitted by the Rev. C.W. Kirkpatrick, Union Church of Christ, Ludlow, Mass.)

DEAR ABBY: My daughter is 25 and a college graduate. For the last three years she has been living with a man I'll call Bill, and now they are getting married. She has asked me to attend her wedding and give her away. Abby, I never approved of her living with Bill, and as far as I'm concerned, nobody has to "give her away" - she did that herself three years ago.

I have been a widower for five years, and my family thinks I should go along with my daughter's wishes, but I'm afraid if I do, it will look like I approved of her former lifestyle and have forgiven her for it.

I need help in deciding what to do. — OLD-FASHIONED FATHER

DEAR FATHER: I think you will have fewer regrets if you were to go along with your daughter's wishes. I vote go and perform your fatherly duty.

How designers cope with the holidays

By GARRY ABRAMS
(c) 1981, Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Tis the week before Christmas, and Los Angeles designer Phyllis Sues is in a tizzy. "I haven't really done anything," she says. "I'm really putting it off. I'm really terrible at Christmas time; the only thing I can plan is my party."

So it seems likely that Sues will be joining the other last-minute gift seekers in a rush to be ready for the yuletide. Sues was one of several Los Angeles designers surveyed by the Los Angeles Times' Fashion 81 to find out how the tastemakers cope with the holidays. Their answers are as diverse as the clothes they make.

Sun Le Sun admits that he "pretty much ignores the season" and that he may not please some of his friends with this year's gift — a chocolate mousse roll. "I think I'll offend a lot of people on diets," he says. Food, however, simplifies the search for presents, says Sun, who believes that inedible gifts require extensive knowledge of a person's likes and dislikes.

Christine Albers is another food-giver. This year she's baking German stollen — a concoction that includes nuts, raisins and marzipan — because she likes to do "something personal" for her friends. "There's enough gaudy stuff in the stores," she says.

Sun and Albers are a minority among their peers. The majority adopts a traditional approach to the season, agonizing over lists and searching the stores for just the right items.

Of this group, Patti Cappalli is probably the only one who can be labeled super-efficient. "I read all of the Christmas catalogues I start getting in August, September and October. What I try to do is buy gifts that people would not buy for themselves," she says. The catalogues go into a file along with a list of people she will buy for so that she can keep track of what's been done. Cappalli buys first for those whose gifts will have to be mailed, she says.

Cappalli says she prefers to buy gifts for the home. This year her selections include a pasta machine and floating pool chairs. Like several other designers, she prefers not to give clothes. "I only buy apparel for people who expect pajamas and socks — conservative New Englanders mainly," she says.

Cappalli explains that her goal is to have all her shopping chores done two weeks before Christmas so that she can enjoy the social aspect of the season.

Irene Kasmer is a close second in terms of being organized. Her shopping began in earnest about three months ago, she says, after a careful study of newspaper and magazine ads for ideas. "I definitely try to buy something very unusual or very serviceable," she says. This year her favorite gifts are pottery by California artists, and shawls, which she calls "an accessory to any outfit."

Nearly all designers say they enjoy the Christmas season, but Kasmer apparently qualifies as head cheerleader. "I think people should get into the spirit and spend money because it makes you feel good. I think people get rich spending. A gloom-and-doom attitude does not help Christmas."

The group also includes examples of backsliding and self-improvement.

Rudi Gernreich confesses that, this year, "I haven't even started yet. I'm panicked at this point because I usually shop very early." The press of other business, including designing costumes for a ballet, put him behind schedule. Typically, Gernreich says, he shops all year round, with many of his purchases coming from the Museum of Modern Art's gift shop.

Sue Wong, on the other hand, has her act together in 1981. "This year I've been very, very good. I started about a month early. I even had my decorations up before the end of November," she says.

Wong prefers to give works of art — such as Oriental porcelain — "whenever I can afford it," but her principal aim this year is to have enough time to shop for the 100 persons on her list. (The other designers say they buy gifts for 30 to 40 friends and relatives.)

Norma Fink is the only designer who turns her factory into an imitation of Santa's workshop to produce gifts. For a week to 10 days, Fink says, her employees' time is devoted to producing pillows, appliques and "robes, robes, robes," none of which are typical of her design. However, her favorite gift this year is books because "I Like them so much myself."

Holly Harp also gives clothes but she, too, doesn't make them a season staple. She says that Christmas shopping is "like a busman's holiday" so she doesn't "turn out heavy creativity." Her way of celebrating Christmas is to do "basically Ladies' Home Journal stuff. Last year I gave a party and I cut the napkins so that when they were unfolded they looked like snowflakes," she says.

Bradshaw speaks at PDAP banquet

"This is an enormous problem. It's a national problem, it is everybody's problem. Somewhere down the line you're going to be affected by it," said John Bradshaw of drug abuse at the Palmer Drug Abuse Program (PDAP) annual banquet held recently.

Bradshaw, a recovered alcoholic, was the guest speaker at the banquet. He does counseling and consulting for both individuals and in conjunction with corporations who offer counseling services.

He spoke on the problems associated with drug abuse, relating his experiences as an alcoholic and the difficulties he encountered while trying to stop drinking.

"We are losing the youth of our nation (to drug abuse)," Bradshaw stated. He noted that children are this nation's greatest natural resource, yet "40 percent of them are in some kind of trouble with chemicals. Seventy percent are experimenting with mind-changing chemicals. It's an awesome problem."

"We've got to understand why this (drug abuse) is so appealing if we're ever going to deal with it. We've got to know what to replace in people if we think we're going to correct a problem like this," he said.

Bradshaw said he believes that many people turn to drugs because they can't express their feelings.

"Many people are taught that it's not okay to feel," he explained. "If you can't feel what you feel, then you're kind of dead. Drugs make you come alive again."

He said that people who use drugs create a pseudo-self through drugs to help them deal with their feelings.

"My belief is that everybody's responsible, but nobody's to blame," he said, "but blaming never helped anybody. Forgiveness is what heals people, not blaming."

Of the local chapter of PDAP, Bradshaw said, "I really believe that this is probably the showpiece of PDAP." He attributed the success of the program to community involvement.

"It was the community that allowed this program to begin. We (PDAP) have never had any federal funding or any state funding," he noted. "We've always been a program of the community."

Bradshaw said that there are steps to kicking the drug habit — reduction of the ego, belief that you need God's help and then to carry the message.

He charged those who attended the banquet to go out and celebrate what they have accomplished.

"Go out from here tonight and celebrate your sobriety. Parents, celebrate your family reunions. Businessmen, celebrate your fundraising. Pastors, celebrate the giving of your churches and your support. Couselors, celebrate the goodness of your commitment," he stated. "But let's remember that there are millions out there who need us."

Costume jewelry can accent the positive

NEW YORK (AP) — You can play up your strong points with jewelry, which can be a woman's best friend, says Nan Wigger, fashion consultant for a fashion jewelry company.

"A woman can make the most of what she's got by understanding balance, proportion and her own individual style," says Ms. Wigger of Trifari. "The right type of necklace or earring can draw attention to what's good about your body and keep the eye away from what isn't.

"Once you understand the ABCs of accessorizing, you'll find lots of ways to improve upon your looks," adds Ms. Wigger, who offers these tips on making the most effective use of fashion jewelry:

—Widen a long, thin face with round earrings and short, statement-making necklaces. The larger and rounder the beads, the more width is suggested. A lapel pin, worn high on a jacket or dress, will also give the illusion of a fuller face.

—You can shorten a long nose and make it appear smaller by wearing large earrings with the hair pulled back away from the face. However, don't wear earrings so large that it makes the eyes seem smaller.

—If your arms and hands are heavy, wear bracelets and rings that have moderate to wide designs. Large rings or several small bands will make your fingers appear smaller. Conversely, a woman with thin arms and wrists should choose jewelry on the delicate side in order to play down their smallness. A heavy bracelet on a thin arm will make it appear even thinner.

—If your face is round or if you're slightly overweight, think long. A round face will appear thinner if earrings are narrow, oval or pointed in design. Avoid bulbous, button shapes. The longer the beads, the more oval your face will appear. A chain or necklace should fall below the base of the throat forming an oval.

—If you have a strong jaw line, it can be balanced with heavy jewelry. Wear a fair amount of good-size jewelry to offset the lean look that is usually present with this type of face. Dramatic earrings with pendants are one example.

—If your face is perfectly oval, wear medium-size earrnings and a flat close-to-the-ear design that will emphasize the perfect shape of the ear lobe.

— If you are large-busted, wear less conspicuous pieces of jewelry around your neck and avoid pieces tht will draw attention. Never wear a clip or a pin at the depth of a V-neckline.

— You can lengthen a short neck with earrings that fit close to the ear. Avoid making the neck appear even wider by wearing a tight choker or a heavy necklace. Instead, choose a chain or necklace of medium length (16-18 inches) to give breathing space between chin and jewelry, giving the illusion of a long neck.

— If you want your neck to seem wider, choose oval or round beads or pearls as in a choker, or wear a wide ribbon band.

— Choose jewelry with an eye toward your body scale. A tall woman can wear longer necklaces, wider bracelets and larger pins than a shorter woman, whose best choice is delicate, lighter pieces.

— Try your jewelry on in front of a full-length mirror. Study your facial structure in a three-way mirror to discover the side of your face that is more attractive. Usually it's the left side. Whichever is true for you, wear your accent piece on the best side.

Ms. Wigger suggests experimenting with jewelry to update last year's suit or dress. "Nothing is easier to spark up a costume than using a new chain, bracelet or pair of earrings."

Glittering stones, pearls and natural leaf motifs are the leading fashion jewelry accents to go with this season's fashions, says Ms. Wigger. The natural looking materials like golden-tone metals, oriental-looking jade, pearls and the look of semiprecious stones give women a variety of accents to choose from.

Large camera gets negative results

AT WIT'S END

Get her something sexy

By ERMA BOMBECK

I hate to dwell on Christmas past, but for the last 30 years, I have never felt my husband really knew what he married: a sensuous temptress in an industrial-strength body.

I think he perceives me as your basic-no-nonsense-practical-down-to-earth wife and mother who sees a Mr. Frederick window and crosses to the other side of the mall to avoid embarrassment.

Wrongo.

I don't know how to tell him, but I was not turned on the first Christmas of my post-natal depression by a pen-and-pencil set.

The food slicer with 18 attachments and the candle-making kit didn't do it either. Nor did the cookie press that also made my mashed potatoes into rosettes.

I always wanted the ultimate nightgown that you had to dry clean. A gown so filmy that when the doorbell rang or one of the kids came into the room, you had to throw a coat or an afghan over yourself to avoid arrest. It would have enough fur around the bottom to put in a fur storage for safe-keeping and maybe just a touch of Astroturf to fight the NFL.

I always wanted a jumpsuit made out of fake animal, preferably leopard or cheetah, and fingernails so long I couldn't make meat loaf without losing half the hamburger under my nails.

I always wanted a pair of eight-inch heeled bedroom slippers that killed your feet but made your ankles look like something that carried messages. Slippers so impractical that the only thing they were good for was dangling from your toe or drinking champagne out of.

It's difficult for men to look beyond the chapped hands, the sagging bodies and the Olivia Waltons they come home to each evening and see the fantasy that lives in us all.

I waited this long to say something so I could catch husbands just before they started their Christmas shopping. Go for it, Bunkies. The labels with washing instructions in a foreign language, the impractical silks that you can't sweat in, the scent that says she didn't marry the boy next door.

I'm warning you, if you get her a vegetable steamer, she'll regret you the rest of her life.

Here's the answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — I am going to have to put several dry wells on my property to take care of the rain water. Can you advise me of the best way to do this? I have inquired at several places and have received different answers.

A. — The details of making a dry well can differ in many respects, yet all of them can be correct. Presumably, you are talking about the rain water that exits from the downspouts around your house. Generally, it is important that each dry well be at least 12 feet from the house, but the container in which the water is to flow can be of various materials. One of the simplest ways to do this is to use an old metal drum in which oil or some other liquid had been stored. Remove the top from the drum, then drill 20 or 30 holes in the sides of the drum, spread around rather evenly. Then make one large hole in the drum about a foot from the top rim into which drain tile will fit. Bury the drum in the ground so that the top of it is a few inches below the surrounding surface. Fill the drum with large stones. Run the drain tile from the bottom of the downspout to the hole in the drum. The tile must be below the surface and slanted so that water running through it moves easily into the drum. The end of the tile at the downspout end should be cemented into place. Cover the drum with heavy boards or some kind of concrete cover, then replace the earth.

Q. — We are buying a house that is 22 years old. In the kitchen are blonde kitchen cabinets that need refinishing badly. Can these be sanded and stained a darker shade? If not, is there anything we can use over the old finish to darken the cabinets?

A. — You must remove the old finish to get down to the bare wood if you intend to use stain. If you can sand the old finish so that the wood is perfectly smooth, you can use almost any kind of pigmented finish. A dark enamel would be fine. If you do remove the entire old finish and then stain the wood, use a sealer over it before putting on the final finish.

Q. — Some time ago you answered somebody who asked about finishing fir plywood because, he said, he stained and varnished it and the grain showed through. I clipped it but have lost the clip. Can you repeat the information for me, as I am sure a lot of other people have the same trouble.

A. — Because fir plywood has what is known as a wild grain, it must first be sealed with a special sealer made especially for that purpose. There are two kinds of such a sealer. One is for fir plywood which will be given a clear finish, the other is for fir plywood which will be painted. Get the appropriate kind and follow the directions on the container.

Q. — When mixing shellac with denatured alcohol, what is the correct proportion of each?

A. — For most projects, make a 50-50 mixture. After you have used shellac a few times, you will develop a sense of knowing how much alcohol to mix it with for different jobs.

(The techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, remover, bleach, stain, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P. O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.)

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Rx for the warped record

DEAR HELOISE:

Got a warm spot in your house, like the top of a TV set? Just place the record on top of a flat, warm surface, then stack a few heavy books on top.

Leave it that way for several hours or days, depending on the damage, and your records should be as flat as pancakes once again! — Heloise

ELECTRIC BLANKETS

Dear Heloise: When an electric blanket finally refuses to function any longer, I rip out all the wiring and threads which hold the wiring in place and use it as a nice, extra blanket for guests.

The wires can be stripped out easily by cutting tiny slits at the end of the wires at the head and foot of the blanket. Just grab hold and pull them out.

On some blankets it may be necessary to remove the binding, cut the wires, then pull them out.

You'll end up with a blanket that can be easily laundered and still be useful for many more years. — L. Berliner

FLOOR COVERING

Dear Heloise: This may not be a new idea to you or to many of your readers, but I was happy to find that using remnants of vinyl floor covering as shelf paper is great!

It never curls on the edges or shifts around and it's easy to wipe clean. Very durable for pantry shelves as well as those that take a beating, like where pans and small appliances are stored. — J.P.

HOT ROLLS

Dear Heloise: When making hot rolls, to help them rise a little faster, I place a heating pad on my counter top, plug it in and turn it to high.

I then place my pan of dough on top of the heating pad. The dough rises evenly and properly. — W.G.

STOCKING HANGER

Dear Heloise: Since we don't have the traditional fireplace mantle on which to hang our children's stockings, we use a planter pole.

HINTS FROM HIM

Dear Heloise: When baby graduates from a baby tub to the large adult-sized bathtub, buy a sturdy plastic laundry basket with mesh sides.

An oblong shape works best, as it gives baby more room. Just set the laundry basket into the large tub, fill the tub to the proper water level, then set baby inside the laundry basket.

The child will feel more secure plus you can put the water toys right inside the basket with baby where they won't go floating off.

BRACELET HOOKING

Dear Heloise: Many people, especially if they are shaky or have poor eyesight, have trouble hooking those tiny bracelets on their arms.

To solve the problem, tape one end of the bracelet to your wrist and hook the opposite end onto it.

No losing grip of the bracelet and it's easily hooked. — Kerry DiBlasie

If you're baffled by a housekeeping dilemma, could be you'll find the answer in "Help! from Heloise" (Arbor House), the new problem-solution book by Heloise. You can check it out at your local bookshop or public library.

Oil extraction

HAIFA, Israel (AP) — At the Technion in Haifa, Israel's MIT, scientists are making progress on a way of extracting oil from shale without having to mine it.

Narrow boreholes are sunk into the shale and a laser beam aimed down the hole is used to ignite the oil in the shale. The rate of combustion is controlled by the amount of air pumped through a pipe into the underground cavity. The heat of combustion frees the oil from its mineral matrix and it is extracted through a seamed pipe.

The system is still in the experimental stage, but studies suggest oil can be produced for about $20 a barrel.

The 23,000 young people who converged on Kansas City were all members of the Future Farmers of America, an organization which has held its annual convention here since 1928.

Lights on

KANSAS CITY (AP) — The widespread tradition of outlining buildings with Christmas lights is claimed to have started here at the Country Club Plaza, which boasts it is the nation's first shopping center.

The tradition reportedly started in 1925, when a six-foot strand of colored bulbs was installed over an arched doorway.

Holiday appetizers make entertaining easy

If you like to entertain during the holidays, but the idea of formal, sit-down dinners for ten sounds intimidating, try a system that many working couples have been adopting for party-giving. Particularly when many of us are eating "lighter" these days, there's no need for large, multi-course meals—instead, serve a variety of satisfying appetizers and let the guests "call it dinner" if they wish. This makes for informal entertaining, and less harried hosts and hostesses.

Build your appetizer buffet around some appealing hors d'oeuvres that don't require a lot of last-minute cooking and fussing. Chicken wings are a popular choice for both the hostess and guests, since they are economical as well as tasty. The classic flavor of Parmesan Chicken adapts particularly well to appetizer servings.

Parmesan Chicken Wings

2 lbs. chicken wings
3/4 cup (3 ozs.) grated parmesan cheese
2 tablespoons flour
1 teaspoon basil laves
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 cup milk
1/4 cup margarine, melted

Cut chicken wings at joints; discard small ends. Combine cheese, flour and seasonings in plastic bag. Dip chicken in milk. Add several pieces at a time to cheese mixture; shake to coat. Place in greased 15-1/2x10-1/2 inch jelly roll pan; pour margarine over chicken. Bake at 400 degrees, 15 minutes. Turn chicken over; continue cooking 20 minutes.

Tasty Tarts

1 cup flour
1/4 teasoon salt
1/3 cup margarine
3 to 4 tablespoons water
1/2 cup (2 oz.) grated parmesan cheese
1/4 cup finely chopped mushrooms
1/4 cup finely chopped onion
1 egg

Combine flour and salt; cut in margarine until mixture resembles coarse crumbs. Sprinkle with water while mixing with fork; form into ball. Divide dough into twenty-four balls; press each onto bottom and sides of miniature muffin pans. Combine remaining ingredients; mix well. Spoon over dough. Bake at 400 degrees, 15 to 17 minutes or until golden brown.
Variation: Add 1/4 teaspoon oregano leaves to filling mixture.

Oriental Party Log

1 8-oz. package cream cheese
1/3 cup (1-1/2 ozs.) grated parmesan cheese
1/2 cup finely chopped celery
1/4 cup chopped water chestnuts
1/4 cup sliced almonds
2 tablespoons chopped onion
Dash of ginger
Chow nein noodles

Combine softened cream cheese and parmesan cheese, mixing until well blended. Add remaining ingredients except noodles; mix well. Chill. When ready to serve, shape into 6-inch log; roll in chow mein noodles. Serve with assorted crackers.

Reagan and New Deal fascism

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says many New Dealers in the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt espoused fascism.

But he says Roosevelt, unlike those around him, saw the reforms of the New Deal as crisis remedies for the Depression that he would have tried to roll back after World War II.

Reagan makes those points in an interview on the Public Broadcasting Service program, "Ben Wattenberg at Large," that will be broadcast Friday night. Wattenberg conducted the interview last week. A transcript was made available to The Associated Press.

Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr., a Roosevelt biographer who was questioned about Reagan's assertions in a telephone interview Monday, disputed the president's view of Roosevelt on both counts.

Schlesinger said "it is a gross distortion of history" to say that Roosevelt's appointees advocated fascism or that FDR made only a temporary commitment to help those who needed help.

In the interview, Reagan said "the Roosevelt that I voted for had promised to cut federal spending by 25 percent" but, once in office, saw a crisis and advocated temporary aid "in the nature of medicine for a sick patient."

"But, in the meantime, my own analysis is that people attracted to government and to government positions in those years, in many instances, did not view the medicine as temporary," the president said.

He added: "If you remember, I was assailed during the campaign for saying that many of the New Dealers actually espoused what today has become an epithet — fascism — in that they spoke admiringly of how Mussolini had made the trains run on time.

"In other words, they saw in what he (Roosevelt) was doing a planned economy — private ownership, but government management of that ownership and that economy.

"Harold Ickes (Roosevelt's secretary of the interior), in his book, said that what we were striving for was a kind of modified form of communism," Reagan said.

"Well, I don't believe that was really in Roosevelt's mind and, I think that, had he lived, and with the war over, we would have seen him using government the other way."

During the 1980 election campaign, Democrats recalled that in a May 17, 1976 Time magazine interview Reagan had said, "Fascism was really the basis of the New Deal." Reagan, questioned by reporters, said then that evidence of that view could be found in "the writings of the members of the brain trust of the New Deal."

Schlesinger, winner of Pulitzer prizes for history and biography, said fascism "was the last thing in the mind of Roosevelt or anyone around him."

A dictionary defines fascism as "a system of government characterized by rigid one-party dictatorship, forcible suppression of opposition, private economic enterprise under centralized governmental control, belligerent nationalism, racism and militarism."

Said Schlesinger: "There was no hint at any point during the Roosevelt presidency of any desire to establish a one-party state — and that's what fascism was all about, the suppression of all political opposition."

As for Roosevelt being a conservative at heart, Schlesinger said the best statement of his post-war views is his 1944 State of the Union address advocating an economic bill of rights and job, housing and education programs.

He said nothing in Ickes' writings supports fascism or communism.

In the same interview, Reagan aroused the ire of some disarmament leaders with a statement that this fall's mass peace marches in Western Europe were all communist-backed.

The president was asked about the protests, such as that which took place Dec. 5, when hundreds of thousands marched in Denmark, Switzerland, Italy, West Germany and Romania against U.S. and Soviet arms policies.

"Oh, those demonstrations," Reagan said. "You could have used newsreels from the '60s in America. Those are all sponsored by a thing called the World Peace Council, which is bought and paid for by the Soviet Union."

U.S. peace group spokesmen did not quarrel with Reagan's description of the World Peace Council but disputed his view that "all" the demonstrations are sponsored by the council.

"He's all wet," said John A. Sullivan, associate executive secretary of the American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker peace group. "He shows a profound ignorance of the peace movement of the 1960s and what American citizens were up to and that seems to me to be matched by his observations about the peace movement in Europe today."

Sullivan said the European disarmament movement is supported by many organizations that are "religious and moderate in politics."

Dr. Herbert Scoville, president of the Arms Control Association and formerly a top CIA official and assistant director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, also took issue with Reagan.

"I believe that President Reagan greatly underestimates the strength and breadth of the anti-nuclear movement in Europe," said Scoville. "It is not just composed of communist-supported youths."

Iranian expelled from Bahrain

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The government has expelled an Iranian diplomat from Bahrain on charges he tried to launch a coup in this Persian Gulf island state, a Bahreini newspaper reported today.

The Arab-language Akhbar al Khaleej said Iranian charge d'affaires Hassan Shushtri left Manama for Tehran on Monday night at the request of the Interior Ministry.

Security sources said Shushtri was linked to a group of 60 conspirators under arrest here for allegedly trying to topple the ruling family of Sheik Isa bin Salman al Khalifa.

The sources, who declined to be named, claimed a coup attempt had been scheduled for Dec. 16, when the plotters planned to mount gunfire attacks on police stations and the Government House here.

The conspiracy called for taking all Cabinet ministers hostage, killing a number of high officials, and fomenting street riots and gunfights with police, the sources said.

If the coup bid went as planned, they added, the plotters were to have broadcast a statement over Tehran Radio asking the people of Bahrain to rally behind the "Islamic Revolution" of Iranian patriarch Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Saudi Arabia joined Bahrain in formally denouncing the Iranian leadership for allegedly arming, training and inciting the plotters. On Sunday Bahrein signed a joint security pact with the neighboring oil-rich kingdom.

"The Iranians have become the terrorists of the gulf," Saudi Interior Minister Prince Nayef bin Abdel Aziz al Saud said after signing the pact with his Bahraini counterpart, Sheik Mohammed bin Khalifa al Khalifa.

Bell: Government using civil rights wrongly

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education Secretary T.H. Bell says the government has been wrong in using federal financial aid rules as a lasso to bring small colleges under civil rights rules.

Bell, whose attempt to exempt some institutions from the rules has come under sharp attack from women's and civil rights groups, said the real issue is federal intrusion onto college campuses.

Bell is seeking to exempt colleges which get no federal aid other than the federally subsidized loans and grants paid to their students. One such school, Grove City College in Pennsylvania, is locked in a federal appeals court battle in Philadelphia with the government over the rules.

Bell said he and Attorney General William French Smith "have not finally determined our position on it."

"We think here in this department that the government has been on the wrong side of that. Don't construe that to mean that Ted Bell is not in favor of civil rights and equal opportunity and all the rest of it," Bell said in an interview Monday.

The issue pits "the tendency to leave alone to the extent you think it's prudent and wise vs. the tendency to pitch in there and manage and regulate and direct and sort of hustle and hassle," he said.

"It's no surprise to anyone in this town that ours is an unapologetic conservative approach to government," he said.

He said he supports the "central point and purpose of Title IX," the 1972 law against sex discrimination in federally-aided schools.

"There are blatant violations that have taken place with respect to athletic programs on school and college campuses in this country, where women have had to satisfy themselves sitting in the stands or wearing cheerleaders' uniforms," he said, adding that sex stereotyping is used to steer females into careers as nurses and legal secretaries instead of physicians and lawyers.

But Bell decried "the lunatic fringe" who have tried to use Title IX to get all-male choirs outlawed as discriminatory.

"This Grove City thing is part of that," said Bell. "It's where you draw the line."

Bell's general counsel, Daniel Oliver, advised him in a recent memo that he should press ahead with the change in the rules, despite indications from the Justice Department that courts would strike it down.

Federal courts have ruled that G.I. benefits amount to federal aid to the institution the veteran attends, and subjects that college to regulation.

Bell said he believes a college should be regulated if it participates in one of the campus-based student aid programs.

But he said Guaranteed Student Loans are a transaction between the student and a bank, and he argued that Congress set up an alternate method of paying Pell Grants directly to students, instead of through colleges, because "they had sympathy to the Grove Cities that didn't want to be caught up in all this (regulation)."

On another topic, Bell said he has gotten a "mixed" response so far in private talks with key lawmakers about his proposal to turn the Education Department into a non-Cabinet foundation.

Bell said, "Some are saying wait until January 1983," after the next election before trying to get a bill to dismantle the department through Congress.

Editor leaves news agency

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bernard H. Kamenske, chief news editor of the Voice of America, says he's leaving the agency to become a Washington-based senior news editor at Cable News Network.

Kamenske said Monday he's leaving voluntarily after receiving "an offer I could not refuse." But his departure comes at a time of turmoil in the agency.

'Radio wars' between U.S., Cuba possible

By NORMAN BLACK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government official says the United States is willing to negotiate with Cuba to avert a radio war in the Southeast even though Cuba has refused to sign an international agreement on broadcast frequencies.

"The ball is in their court," said Kalmann Schaefer. "We are certainly prepared to engage in bilateral discussions. Cuba will have to realize that mutual interference doesn't serve anyone's interests. Without an agreement, all parties suffer."

Schaefer returned to work at the Federal Communications Commission on Monday after six weeks in Rio de Janeiro, where he headed the U.S. delegation to a 24-nation hemispheric conference on AM radio policies.

By JENNIFER PARMELEE
Associated Press Writer

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — If you are a communist pilot willing to fly to the West from Afghanistan, Laos or Cambodia with a cargo of deadly biological weapons, Robert K. Brown has a deal for you.

In the January issue of Soldier of Fortune, Brown, the magazine's 49-year-old editor and publisher, is offering a $100,000 reward, payable in gold or any other currency, to a willing defector.

Brown says it's his way of getting the United Nations to "admit that communist forces have employed lethal chemical and/or biological weapons" in Southeast Asia.

The bounty is just the latest of the controversial magazine's forays on the dark side of advocacy journalism.

TWO YEARS ago, Soldier of Fortune offered $10,000 for information leading to the capture of deposed Ugandan President Idi Amin. It also started an "Afghan Freedom Fighters Fund" for the anti-Soviet resistance in that country.

"We see ourselves as more than journalists," said Brown, twisting the tiger's tooth hanging from his neck. "We do more than simply report what occurs. We get involved. We want to help the West in any way we can."

Brown makes no bones about which side he's on. His magazine is unabashedly devoted to "the professional adventurer," a phrase critics translate as armed mercenaries.

Soldier of Fortune has been targeted by a Colorado citizen's group for allegedly violating federal law by illegally recruiting mercenaries to fight in foreign countries — an offense punishable by a $1,000 fine, a 3-year prison term or both.

BUT THE Justice Department said it investigated the charge and could find nothing wrong.

"Unsubstantiated allegations — balderdash!" says Brown. "I don't agree with the law (against recruiting mercenaries), but I'm not going to (violate it and get) free room and board at prison."

Yet Brown doesn't deny having distributed information on how to join a foreign force — such as that of the Sultan of Oman or the Rhodesian security forces — nor having referred numerous inquiries about "merc" employment to known recruiters in the United States and abroad.

"I'm of the theory that, well, better dead than red," he says in admitting sympathy for a variety of mercenary causes. "One man's terrorist — or mercenary — is another man's freedom fighter."

Advertisements in the magazine tout the latest in do-it-yourself plastic explosives, automatic weapons and Italian stilettos. Invitations to "high-risk employment" and from individuals who claim they'll do "anything for the right price" fill the classified section.

"THOSE ADS appear in other publications," says Brown, shrugging his muscular shoulders. He says Soldier of Fortune has rejected ads from Neo-Nazi groups and the Irish Republican Army.

Once a basement operation, Soldier of Fortune, founded in 1975, is now a slick, professional-looking magazine with a readership of 200,000, most of them in their 20s and 30s, male, of above-average income, and gun-owners.

"We're obviously looking at the macho male," says Brown, who has a rugged look with gray, closely cropped hair and a broad moustache that still holds a hint of red.

SITTING IN AN office cluttered with badges, books and posters attesting to his extensive paramilitary and military background, Brown is at ease fielding questions, but a trifle embarrassed when his mother, who lives in town, interrupts the interview to place a bag of chocolate chip cookies on his cluttered desk.

The official Soviet news agency Tass criticized it for "openly patronizing hired assassins and their recruiting agents," while a radio station in Botswana hinted that the magazine was somehow behind the recent failed coup attempt in the Seychelles Islands.

Brown dismisses the Seychelles allegation. "If it had been us," he says, "we wouldn't have failed."

IN THE meantime, the magazine says it has obtained three samples of deadly toxins at a Thai refugee camp and turned them over to Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, who gave them to the Defense Department for testing.

Brown claims the toxins were dropped by a Soviet bomber in April. The United Nations was interested, but found the evidence "inconclusive."

Nevertheless, earlier this month, the U.S. House unanimously passed an amendment to the 1983 Foreign Aid Bill introduced by Leach that condemns the use of biochemical weapons by Soviet-backed Communist forces in Indochina and Afghanistan.

Test tube baby clinic won't open

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — The Erie County Medical Center has canceled plans to open up an experimental test-tube baby clinic, it was announced Monday.

In a short statement, hospital administrator Louis Russo said he had asked obstetrician-gynecologist Dr. Jack Lippes not to follow through on his plan to open his planned fertilization center there and that Lippes had "graciously consented" to the request.

Russo declined to elaborate on his reasons for seeking the dropping of the idea, other than to suggest that there had been "ethical and pragmatic considerations" involved.

In September, Lippes, inventor of the intrauterine contraceptive device known as the Lippes Loop, announced his intention to open the clinic in the county hospital.

But the idea quickly drew loud opposition from various segments of the community, including the Roman Catholic Church and others who testified against his plan in October hearings in the County Legislature.

Chinese giant pandas aren't dying off as fast

PEKING (AP) — (AP)— China's giant panda population has stopped declining as scientists find ways to save the prized "living fossil" from extinction, the official Xinhua news agency said today.

Xinhua did not give a current estimate for the number of pandas living in China — mostly in the southwest bamboo forests of Sichuan province. But last year China's Forestry Ministry estimated that more than 1,000 remained.

The big drop in population occurred in 1975-76, when 138 pandas died. The ministry blamed the deaths on starvation due to the scarcity of bamboo. The panda's native food grows in 60-year cycles, at the end of which wide patches of it die out

Xinhua said scientists have developed a substitute bamboo strain and began planting it three years ago at the 494,000-acre Wolong giant panda conservation center in central Sichuan.

Winter awnless wheat might be another substitute, it added.

He'll try again to convince postal service he's healthy

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A 29-year-old heart transplant patient once denied a job with the U.S. Postal Service is trying again to convince doctors that he is healthy enough to carry mail.

Jim Hayes can point to a 3,000-mile bicycle trip as proof that he is fit to handle the job.

Doctors for the postal service turned down Hayes' application for a mail handler's job in Charlotte, N.C., earlier this month. They said he wasn't healthy enough to load and unload letters and packages from trucks all day.

But Hayes, who takes four dozen pills a day to keep his heart healthy, said Monday that local post office officials had hired him to be a city mail carrier. He hopes to hear within two weeks whether postal service doctors will OK his physical examination for the job.

"This time I've given them all kinds of stuff," said Hayes, who included stress test results and letters from several doctors in his latest application.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union and the United States should abandon "the senseless arms race" and "return to the path of normal relations," says Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev.

Responding to written questions from NBC chief diplomatic correspondent Marvin Kalb, the Soviet leader said the current arms negotiations the two nations are holding in Geneva "will determine whether the danger of outbreak of nuclear war will increase or decrease."

Brezhnev, the network said Monday, expressed a concern that his country and the United States are sliding toward a confrontation. "The dangerous zeal in stepping up the arms race must be curbed," he said.

"It is necessary to reduce the heat of the tensions, to extinguish the dangerous hotbeds of crisis situations, to abandon the policy of the senseless arms race and to return to the path of normal relations between states ...," he said.

"ARTIFICIAL obstacles" are preventing the improvement of U.S.-Soviet relations, said Brezhnev, adding that his country is ready to resume strategic arms control negotiations, according to NBC.

"It would be far better for our countries if such obstacles were removed and did not ever emerge altogether," said Brezhnev. He did not explain what the artificial obstacles are.

Discussing the SALT negotiations, which have been stalled since 1979, Brezhnev said his country is "prepared to resume negotiations," adding, "It's now up to Washington."

Asked about Brezhnev's statements, the chief U.S. arms control negotiator, Eugene Rostow, said on NBC's "Today" show this morning: "He's trying to separate the United States from its allies and he's trying to head off the attempt to modernize and restore the balance of our forces, both nuclear and conventional, which President Reagan has begun ....

"THE SOVIET interest in preventing Western rearmament, the restoration of the military balance between the United States and the Soviet Union, is profound, and he misses no opportunity for making that point, as he did in these talks," Rostow added.

The Soviet leader, who recently visited West Germany, said he welcomes West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's "increasing role as an intermediary" between Moscow and Washington and urges other NATO countries to follow West Germany's lead.

But Rostow disputed that point and dismissed the talk of a West German intermediary role as an attempt to split the Western alliance.

"I'VE TALKED recently with Chancellor Schmidt and I can assure you that no such idea could be further from Chancellor Schmidt's mind," the U.S. official said. "He is a loyal, tenacious ally of the United States, fully committed to NATO and to the positions which have been arrived at after consultations between the United States and its allies."

The Soviet president's responses to the questions came before the crackdown by the Polish government against the Solidarity labor movement a week and a half ago. He did not mention Poland.

Although saying the Soviet Union seeks agreement in the U.S.-Soviet intermediate missile negotiations now under way in Geneva, Brezhnev added, "This matter does not depend on us alone."

"The key to successful negotiations lies in the observance by both sides of the principle of equality and equal security," he said. "No violation of this principle must take place."

Begin disappointed after high hopes

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — An Israeli newspaper reprints an old picture of Prime Minister Menachem Begin embracing Jimmy Carter. The caption has the former president saying: "Well, Menachem, are you missing me already?"

With Ronald Reagan's election, Israel anticipated four years of cooperation and an end to the pressure politics of the Carter White House.

But now Israel is in its worst crisis in decades with an American government. Begin vented the accumulated rancor Sunday when he accused the United States of treating Israel like "a vassal state" and a "banana republic."

In his election campaign, Reagan stressed Israel's role as a strategic ally and flatly condemned the Palestine Liberation Organization as "terrorist." A warm friendship was predicted for Begin and Reagan, two old cold warriors who saw the world in black and white terms.

Now Israeli newspapers headline rumors that Washington is flirting with the idea of bringing the PLO into peace talks by amending the U.N. resolutions that provide a framework for Middle East peace efforts.

And, in reprisal for Israel's annexation of the Syrian Golan Heights, Washington has suspended the watered-down strategic alliance it signed with Israel on Nov. 30. The suspension infuriated Begin, who announced he considered it a cancellation of the agreement.

It was the third time in six months that the Reagan administration had tried to punish Israel, Begin said.

In June, after Israel destroyed Iraq's nuclear reactor near Baghdad, the United States delayed shipment of four F-16 fighter planes. It was the first time Washington had stopped an arms delivery already in the pipeline.

In July, Washington held up still more aircraft after the Israelis bombed Palestinian headquarters in downtown Beirut.

"Are we 14-year-old boys who get their fingers slapped when they don't behave?" Begin asked the U.S. ambassador Sunday.

Begin's disillusionment with Reagan was a long time in building. It began in March when the Reagan administration offered to sell Saudi Arabia AWACS radar planes — the first time the Arabs were offered something more sophisticated than what was in the Israeli arsenal.

To Israel's dismay, the tilt toward the Saudis continued when the Reagan administration made defense of the Persian Gulf the cornerstone of America's anti-Soviet global strategy.

Begin's opposition to the AWACS sale began low-key but gradually escalated. By fall, Reagan accused Israel of interfering in U.S. foreign policy. The president's supporters said Congress had to choose between Reagan and Begin, prompting the Israeli leader to charge Sunday that the AWACS fight "was accompanied by an ugly anti-Semitic campaign."

Reagan's partial support of the Saudi eight-point peace plan, which Israel flatly rejected, fueled Begin's fury over the administration's pro-Saudi stance.

But sources close to Begin say the U.S. failure to defuse the Lebanon crisis embittered the Israeli leader even more than the Saudi affair.

Irish protest State Department Paisley ban

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Paramilitary backers of Protestant extremist the Rev. Ian Paisley rallied and marched through two towns to protest the State Department's decision to ban him from touring the United States.

Local residents said about 200 men in military clothes assembled on a hillside Monday night near the towns of Glenarm and Carnlough north of Belfast, sealed off the towns and patrolled streets. No incidents were reported.

Residents said the men belonged to Paisley's "Third Force" Protestant vigilantes, mobilized to combat Irish Republican Army guerrillas. The IRA, backed by Northern Ireland's Roman Catholic minority, is fighting to unite the Protestant-dominated British province with the mainly Catholic Irish Republic to the south.

The State Department announced Monday that Paisley, an admitted anti-Catholic, would not be granted a visa to join other Northern Ireland Protestant politicians on a two-week U.S. tour because it was against the public interest. Political observers said today that Paisley's wife, Eileen, might go in his place.

"This exposes the cant and hypocrisy of the U.S. government, which continually allows IRA sympathizers to come and go from the States without let or hindrance," said Paisley's spokesman Jim Allister.

Paisley told reporters in Belfast the American decision was part of an international conspiracy. He accused U.S. House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., of pressuring the State Department into banning his visit.

In Washington, O'Neill said: "Mr. Paisley has been and continues to be a major obstacle to achieving a peaceful political settlement in Northern Ireland."

Paisley's Third Force, with a claimed strength of 15,000 men, was formed last month amid growing Protestant anger at IRA shootings and bombings. The vigilante group was denounced by British officials.

Paisley, Northern Ireland's most outspoken Protestant leader, founded his own church and party — the Free Presbyterians and the Democratic Unionist Party — and is a member of the British Parliament.

The U.S. tour was organized by the late Rev. Robert Bradford, a Paisley ally in the British House of Commons. A Methodist and member of the Democratic Unionist Party, Bradford was shot to death by IRA gunmen in Belfast Nov. 14.

Japan adopts budget

TOKYO (AP) — The Japanese government today adopted austere budget plans for fiscal 1982 that would hold spending for most programs to current levels.

However, there would be increases in defense, energy and foreign aid programs.

At a special Cabinet meeting, the government approved a budget plan that will now go to various government agencies for review.

Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki said he hopes to submit the budget to Parliament by January and complete debate by the time the new fiscal year starts in April.

Bush voices concern for Walesa

Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — Vice President George Bush voiced concern Friday for the safety of Polish Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, warning "those who are holding him" that "the whole world is watching; the whole world is waiting."

In San Diego for a Chamber of Commerce speech, a congressional fund-raiser and a press conference, Bush said he could not be more specific on what the administration would do if the situation worsens in Poland or if Walesa is harmed.

He said his statements "ought to be just taken at face value. We are very much concerned."

"I think we're dealing with a very delicate matter," Bush told reporters. "And I think we've got to contain the overpromise and not get involved in high-decibel counts of rhetoric.

"I THINK we've found the proper balance here, doing the things diplomatically that have to be done."

He would not specify what has been done diplomatically and would not comment on the possibility of a reimposition of the embargo on American grain sales to the Soviet Union that was lifted earlier by President Reagan.

But the vice president spent much of his luncheon speech on the developments in Poland.

Bush told 1,100 persons in attendance that the imposition of martial law has amounted to "the cruel suppression of the human rights of the Polish people."

Bush described Walesa, who has not been seen in public since martial law was imposed last Sunday, as "a man who, though at the center of it all, has been cut off from his family, his supporters and his compatriots.

"BUT IF HE has been momentarily silenced, his bravery speaks loudly," said Bush. "To those who are holding him, I say, the whole world is watching; the whole world is waiting."

The vice president mocked Soviet claims of "non-intervention" in Polish affairs, noting the Soviets maintain 20,000 troops and more than 600 tanks in Poland.

"Soviet non-intervention is now a well-established historical tradition," he said. "The world well recalls their non-intervention in Hungary in 1956, their non-intervention in Czechoslovakia in 1968 and, of course, their continuing non-intervention in Afghanistan."

Speaking strongly despite a recent bout with the flu, Bush was well-received by the crowd inside the well-protected hotel.

Outside, accompanied by one of the most impressive security teams ever assembled for a visitor here, about 100 demonstrators stood with signs protesting Reagan administration policies. Others carried signs in support of the vice president.

MANY OF THE protesters were mobilized by the Peace and Justice Coalition, a group that included, among others, members of the Committee Against Registration and the Draft, the National Lawyers Guild, San Diego Students for Peace, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom and the Committee Against the New Right.

The vice president's trip here was only his second outside Washington, D.C. since the recent furor over alleged Libyan "hit squads" of assassins intent on targeting top administration officials.

Security was evident throughout the visit as guests at the Chamber of Commerce lunch and later at a fund-raiser walked though metal detectors and outside protesters were watched by hundreds of security guards on rooftops and on the ground.

Bush and security officials declined to talk about the security. Bush also defended the administration against the contention it had made too much of the Libyan threat. But he recommended less public attention be paid to the Libyans.

"We think an awful lot too much has been said about them. We believe that we have the best possible security and we believe measures have been taken," he said. "We feel too much has been said, not because we want to deny the American people the right to know, but for counterintelligence to be as effective as it can sometimes some information must remain secret."

BUSH TOLD reporters and the audience he was pleased with the administration's first year — even with his low-key public image.

"I don't seek out a lot of publicity," he said. "I don't go on all these talk shows and I think I can be more effective in helping the President and helping him with the specific assignments I have, if it's not an overly high profile.

"It doesn't bother me. What counts on this job is the relationship you have with the President, the ability you have or might not have to carry out specific assignments and to do that effectively. I am not the President. I don't have the responsibility for making a lot of these decisions.

In a tub of spaghetti

BATESVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Lynn Helms doesn't think spaghetti will be her favorite food anymore after she finishes 66 hours of sitting in a tub of it as a charity fundraiser.

The 21-year-old sports director of radio station WRBI has been sitting in a cast-iron tub in a furniture store window since 8 p.m. Friday.

The tub in the front panel of the Walsman Co. was filled with about 160 pounds of dry spaghetti, then soaked. "Wet, it weighs about 400 pounds," she said Sunday.

Miss Helms, who was to climb out at 4 p.m. Monday said the idea for the project sprang from the fact that "spaghetti was my favorite thing to eat," and that she had heard about a New York disc jockey who sat in a tub of spaghetti for 43½ hours to earn a place in the Guiness Book of World Records.

"I sleep here and everything," Miss Helms said, adding she gets up every few hours to walk around.

"I change my clothes every several hours if they get real gross," she said. She expected to go through seven changes of clothes before stepping out of the tub for good.

She passes the time watching television, reading, talking on the telephone and waving to passers-by.

She said donations were "going real well" but neither she nor station officials knew how much had been raised.

Book tells how to fire

CINCINNATI (AP) — It's being billed as the perfect stocking-stuffer for the boss, but many employees might hesitate to buy "The Termination Handbook."

The book, written by Robert Coulson, president of the American Arbitration Association, is being marketed nationally, but the author doubts that many workers will plunk down $15.95 to tell their bosses how to fire them.

"Maybe a few bosses will buy it," Coulson said. The author was in Cincinnati on Friday to mark the 55th anniversary of AAA, which promotes out-of-court settlements for disputes through submission to impartial arbitrators.

Coulson said he wrote the book for employees who are fired or about to be fired, and for bosses who must do the firing.

He recommends that workers who sense impending job termination be "up front" with the bosses.

"Talk to them and see if there is some way to salvage the job, or maybe change the job description or get a transfer," he said.

"It's better to have it out on the table than to have the sword of Damocles hanging over your head and not knowing when it is going to happen," he added.

Santa Claus . . .alias St.Nick, alias Kris Kringle

By HUGH A. Mulligan
AP Special Correspondent

LATITUDE 90 NORTH, OR THEREABOUTS (AP) — Who is this Santa Claus person anyway?

Despite the advances in astrophysics, the probes of Venus and Saturn, the moon walks and the information relayed by space shuttle Colombia, precious little is known about the creature. If anything, the mystery deepens each year.

The 7-year-old urchin up the street wants to now if the Big S.C., as his precocious siblings have taught him to call this midnight visitor, wears an asbestos suit. The family has just installed a woodstove in the fireplace and he is concerned about his loot and its bearer.

When you get right down to it, not much is really known about this paunchy, bearded, benevolent bagman who drops down people's chimneys one night each year under the pretext of bribing their children into better behavior.

Thousands upon thousands of words have been written about this elusive harlatan, but he has never submitted to an interview.

Artists, sculptors, cartoonists and window dressers have attempted to capture his likeness for posterity, but no recognizable photograph is known to exist of him. His clones, multiplied into the thousands, turn up about this time every year on street corners and in toy departments around the world, all looking vaguely similar and echoing that idiotic laugh.

Children everywhere attest to his legendary legerdemain on Christmas morning, but he has never been caught in the act of breaking and entering to distribute the goodies behind this good conduct scam. Why have the police never issued an APB, an all point bulletin? Where was the FBI and Interpol?

The exact location of his toy cartel, a massive underground workshop operating night and day on a year-round basis somewhere in the frozen wastes of the arctic, has never been discovered, despite repeated polar expeditions by Peary, Amundsen, Ellsworth and Byrd. Why has AWACS never picked up his movements on a radar screen? Surely an eight-reindeer team should make some sort of a blip. What good is the DEW line? Where is the much feared Soviet intelligence?

Does Santa recruit his help in Siberia? Are they disillusioned oil workers from the North Slope? Do they hold union cards? Whence come the raw materials for this Claus person's immense foundaries and assembly lines? Has this top-of-the-world Christmas conglomerate long ago mastered the secrets of the atom? Or does it run on solar energy in a land where half the year there is no sun?

Getting down to the nuts and raisins of this holiday fruit cake, what right does he have to monopolize the minds and hearts of millions for an entire day every year, depriving them of their pet peeves, grouches and prejudices? Who grants him safe conduct down the chimneys of the world?

I have asked these questions before, long before investigative reporting came into vogue. They loom larger than ever now, as once again this Christmas Eve he sets out on is nocturnal mission of reverse burglary.

Traveling under aliases like Kris Kringle, Good St. Nick, Jolly Old Elf and just plain Santa, this elusive undercover operative has tested the patience and credulity of innocent victims since time immemorial. Does he really exist? Will he come again this year? Have I been good? He thrives on guilt feeling.

The known facts about this most wanted character are sketchy and contradictory. In a police line-up, you would look for someone short (perhaps a midget), fat (some liken his abdomen to a gelatinous substance), rosy cheeked, given to fits of prolonged and inane laughter. He has been observed smoking a long Dutch pipe known as a "church warden." Besides illegal entry and child bribery, the complaint record includes driving an unlicensed reindeer-pulled sled in a reckless manner, parking precariously on rooftops to avoid feeding meters and nipping at the household sherry.

Latest reports indicate he still wears gaudy red trousers held up by old-fashioned galluses, matching jacket and mittens trimmed in white fur, a leather belt with a big brass buckle and kinky black patent leather boots.

Distinguishing characteristics include a bulbous red nose, twinkling eyes and long flowing white beard depended from several chins. Overweight and asthmatic, he is said to be about middle aged, and has been for a number of centuries.

He is known to be armed (with a bottomless bag of presents) and dangerous (in his insistence on spreading good cheer in every direction, even where none is wanted).

Peace officers everywhere are urged to be on the alert for his speedy apprehension. This year nuclear submarines have been dispatched from the northern NATO forces beneath the frozen Arctic and Bering Sea to track his movements and, if possible, intercept his flight path.

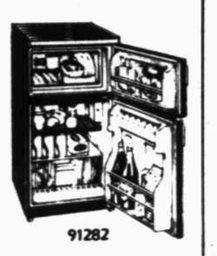

OBJECT: to turn the tables and wish him a Merry Christmas.

Persons having information as to his whereabouts are urged to hang their stockings by the chimney with care, try not to panic, get a good night's sleep and await further developments.

Holiday trappings absent in Jerusalem

By WILLIAM CLAIBORNE
The Washington Post

JERUSALEM — Christmas in Jerusalem stirs the Nazarene spirit, if you have it. Or if you don't, it merely taxes your comprehension of two millennia in the history of mankind. Either way, it is not a trivial thing.

This is the very place of the mystery of Jesus, the place of His passion, His death and His resurrection. Christ walked here, taught His gospel here and found His destiny here.

That is enough if you are a believer.

But because the human and the divine and the sacred and the profane have been intertwined in this place for nearly as long as man has been recording his own history, Jerusalem — the city of peace — has also been the stage for endless conflict.

For 3,000 years, armies of the Assyrians, the Babylonians, the Greeks, the Mongolians, the Persians, the Romans, the Crusaders, the Mameluks, the Turks, the British, the Jews and Arabs fought over and sometimes laid waste to the City of Peace.

THAT IS ENOUGH if you are a reader of history.

The view from the living-room windows of our house at the edge of the German colony of Jerusalem takes in a fair chunk of history: the imposing stone walls and ramparts of the Old City, built by the Ottoman sultan Suleiman the Magnificent in 1541, seem to jump out at you if you look in that direction. Behind the walls lie the crossroads of the three great monotheistic religions, Judaism, Christianity and Islam. It is here where some of the most important chapters of the Old and New Testaments were played out, and even for casual Christians at Christmastime, it is hard to look at this place and not feel something.

Our children have become blase. We take them to the forum in Rome and they look for beer cans for their collection. In Florence, the art treasures become a blur, and they think of hamburgers. In Greece, the remnants of an ancient civilization become just more rubble to have to walk through.

But the Old City of Jerusalem penetrates that youthful nonchalance. It excites even the jaded teen-ager with its mystery, its passion and its wealth of Biblical lore.

We walk up the Via Dolorosa on a mundane errand. Not with the throngs of gawking summertime tourists, but on a drizzling Tuesday afternoon in the dead of winter in search of the Arab leather-worker whose tiny niche in the labyrinthine alleyways of the Old City seems to defy sense of direction every time we look for it. But some shoes need repairing.

The stations of the cross go unnoticed as we thread our way through overburdened donkeys being prodded along by Arab merchants — past the place where Christians believe Jesus fell for the first time as he trekked toward cavalry, past the place where Veronica wiped his face, past the place where Simon helped carry the cross.

THE CHILL RAIN doesn't encourage leisurely reflection upon the enormity of what happened at these places and its impact on civilization. Besides, we have been here countless times since our first Good Friday in Jerusalem, when we saw pilgrims struggling up the stone path, their faces contorted in re-enacted anguish as they labored under the weight of styrofoam crosses, or crosses with small wheels attached to the stem. Such sights can take the edge off mystical musing.

Our way is blocked by workmen digging a deep trench for some kind of sewer installation, and there is a momentary feeling of annoyance at the inconvenience of the obstacle and the prospect of having to detour in the steadily quickening rain. But wait a minute. The workmen seem to be extracting huge stones from the 12-foot-deep trench, and depositing them aside. The tops of the stones are smooth, as if worn from centuries of trodding by man and beast, and the realization of what is happening here is mind-numbing.

These are the stones the archeologists have been talking about, the original stones that date to the time of Jesus in the Second Temple period! Never mind that there is a continuing dispute among scholars over the exact route Christ took to his crucifixion; these stones that anonymous Arab workmen piled into an annoying obstacle on our route are 2,000 years old and were here when Christ was here. Since then, they have been restored along the surface of the present roadway and noted in new editions of all the slick tourist guidebooks that are hawked along the Via Dolorosa during the season. But there is something special about having discovered them on a rainy Tuesday afternoon while making a tedious errand in the Old City.

This is our fourth Christmas in Jerusalem, and it has taken that long to get used to the differences from our Christmases past. For all its Christian lore, Jerusalem is, after all, the capita of the Jewish state of Israel, and it could hardly have come as any surprise to us that it would be different.

For one thing, Christmas in the United States begins in November, when the commercial blitz is unleashed and toys scream from the television tube, lest you forget the gift-giving day is approaching. By Thanksgiving, the department stores are in full swing and you start to get that feeling of moving through the holiday season in slow motion. It almost seems that, chronologically, Christmas should already have come and gone.

HERE, CHRISTMAS sneaks up on you, because the trappings of the season are missing. The stores are not decorated. The radio does not play carols. The Judean desert hills are not covered with white snow. There are only your children to remind you of the impending festival, and after a while even their chatter can become like Muzak, barely piercing the outer layer of consciousness.

But the seasonless aspects of Christmas in Jerusalem are not without their advantages. When our Lisa writes a letter to Santa Claus, it's not satiated with commercialism, and when her parents set out to do the Christmas shopping, they are not distracted by piles of Christmas "specials" and marketing gimmickry. Crowds are not a problem, and there are just as many parking spaces downtown as at any other time of the year.

Granted, you have to use your imagination sometimes to overcome small obstacles. Christmas cards can be found in Christian Arab shops in East Jerusalem, but they are scarce and very expensive, so we sometimes use Rosh Hashana cards that open up backwards and say "shana tova" on the front. Red and green kitchen shelf paper suffices for wrapping presents, and we make our own gift cards.

Because heavy import duties have made toys in Israel very pricey, the kids have learned to live without video games and other hot-selling items on the American market. They've rediscovered the joy of opening a present and finding a good book.

A few days before Christmas, we trek out to the Jerusalem National Forest where Keren Kayemeth (the Jewish National Fund) graciously provides about 1,500 Christmas trees to foreign diplomats, United Nations peacekeeping soldiers, Christian clergy living here and foreign correspondents. Blue spruce or balsam pine they are not (they are the tops of cypress trees cut in the annual forest thinning), but the price is right: they are free, and we always get a 14-foot-high tree which easily fits under the lofty ceilings of our big, old stone Arab house.

OUR FRIEND Jonathan Broder of The Chicago Tribune never seems to get up early enough to get the best pick, so he takes two skinny trees and lashes them together to make one fat tree. One year when he couldn't find any artifical snow to put on the tree, Broder sprinkled it with flour. It looked quite nice, but his place was overrun with ants the next morning.

The ultimate challenge of Christmas in Jerusalem is ornaments for the tree. Not wanting to risk shipping our glass ornaments overseas, we had to mount an expedition to Nazareth our first year in Israel and prowl the Christian Arab shops in the souk where we found lights and decorations that could be added to the olivewood ornaments we found in Bethlehem. (Later we discovered that two or three shops in west Jerusalem sell — very discreetly — a small stock of ornaments.)

Add some perforated telex tape from the office, popcorn strings and a homemade star and, voila, a tree that would be passable anywhere. For Israel, it's a standout.

Before we arrived, most of Sarah and Lisa's Israeli friends had never seen a Chrismas tree, so when ours goes up they very shyly ask if they can come in and see it. Then they will stand there for a long time, wide-eyed, saying "yafeh meod" (very beautiful) and scrutinize every ornament. Adult Israeli friends, especially American immigrants who could never escape the holiday in the states and admit that they miss the festive trappings of Christmas, either drop in or fish for invitations to see the tree or help decorate it.

Christmas dinner is another challenge. Cranberries are not grown in this part of the world, and when you ask the neighborhood grocer for pumpkin, a blank look passes across his face. So for pumpkin pie, we use a local-grown orange-colored squash which, when steamed, pureed, liberally seasoned and baked, comes pretty close to pumpkin pie.

THEN IT is time to deal with our butcher, Chaim.

Chaim the Butcher loves Christmas. He also likes Thanksgiving, because turkeys, even at about $4 a pound, are a very hot item. But Christmas is when the goyim really go crazy in Chaim's non-kosher butcher shop, just down the street from where Prime Minister Menachem Begin lives.

When Chaim closed his shop for nearly a year in 1979, a lot of foreign diplomats, officers from the United Nations peacekeeping force, foreign correspondents and Christian missionaries wandered around Jerusalem like lost souls, anxiously looking for smoked hams, loin of pork, shrimp and bacon. Some of them ended up in Sinore's, an Armenian butcher shop in the Old City, just inside Jaffa Gate. But it wasn't quite the same as Chaim's. He was welcomed home with open arms.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second installment of a four-part Christmas series about the region that nurtured Jesus and his people, the Middle East, with its creative, fluctuating past, volatile present and uncertain eventualities.

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

The toll was heavy. Floggings, stonings, a torrent of executions and assassinations. The vengeance rolled on like an ominous drumbeat. "America, mother of corruption!" "Traitors!" "Western lackeys!" "Zionist filth!" The shouts and condemnations came with occasional pauses in Iran, the modern name of ancient Persia.

There, in a bygone time, the learned Magi scanned the stars, watching for a sign.

These scholarly priests of Zoroastrianism, once the predominant faith of Persia, were royal counselors, masters of recondite lore, analysts of dreams and nature's phenomena, finding divine signals of human affairs in the patterns of the heavens.

From various evidence, they're presumed to have been the "wise men" ("Magi" in original New Testament Greek) from the East who sighted the extraordinary "star" that led them to Jesus' birthplace in Judea.

The recent violence and fulminations in present-day Iran may seem in strident contrast to that bright and hopeful reckoning of long ago, yet in Jesus' time, too, there were enmities, strife and horrors, including those directed against him even in his infancy.

The oppressions, slaughters and rebellions have been part of the makeup of the Middle East, that taproot region where civilization and its major religions, Judaism, Christianity and Islam, had their origins.

It is seminal ground, the place where recorded history commenced, laden with modern harbingers of its future, a determinative hotbed of humanity's past with ascending power over its future, possessed of the bulk of oil for sustaining a mechanized world.

The region also shaped the contour of Jesus' time on earth and his far-flung influence since.

Persia in his day was regarded as an ally of his people, the Jews. In their opposition to Roman hegemony, Jewish leaders had the sympathies of the Parthian dynasty that ruled Persia at the time.

That link and that "light" betokening a divinely sent son to the Magi are part of the long-range reality of a country which recently has shuddered with bombings, street shootouts, crowd passions and, in the past six months, about 2,000 executions, more than 10,000 imprisonments, and assassinations of a president, prime minister, prosecutor general, chief justice and more than 300 other government and clergy leaders.

A "terrifying fire," said former Prime Minister Medi Bazargan.

It has raged with cyclic intensity since the rigid, autocratic Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, 81, returned from exile Feb. 1, 1979, to set up a theocratic Islamic state after uprisings a year earlier had driven out the late Shah Mohammed Riza Pahlavi.

"The holy one has come!" crowds hailed the bearded ayatollah, accorded a holy and authoritative status as "imam," an exaltation rooted in the Shi'ite branch of Islam predominant in Iran, but not among the more prevalent Sunni Moslems elsewhere. "The light of our lives!"

But it plunged Iran into darkened chaos. Hundreds (Amnesty International says 1,600) of opponents were executed by the early "revolutionary courts." The U.S. embassy was stormed and 52 American staff members held hostage for 444 days until Jan. 20, 1981, and after midyear, terror and repression swelled unpredictably as socialist guerrillas, the Mujahedeen, shot, bombed and booby-trapped members of the clergy regime. It retaliated with massive executions.

Ordering purges of "deviating elements," the dominant Khomeini said, "Any leniency will be like showing mercy to a sharp-toothed tiger."

Such harshness has not characterized Persia through its history. Rather, it has been regarded as comparatively benevolent until the modern era, even in its olden days of mightiest empires. It twice, each time over several centuries, controlled much of that foundational region, the Middle East.

Persia's scholars at the time of Jesus' coming were acquainted with the prophetic books of the Jews, who had been liberated from Babylonian captivity long before by the Persian King Cyrus, founder of the first Persian empire of 550 to 331 B.C. The freed prophet Daniel, whose tomb is a shrine at the Iranian village of Shush, had written that a sanctified "one like the Son of Man" would come and be given "glory...everlasting dominion."

The Persian sages, the Magi, in keeping with Zoroastrian teaching, conceived of a supreme, universal deity called Ahura-Mazda, the "wise Lord," a virtually monotheistic faith going back at least to 600 B.C., yet younger than monotheistic Judaism. The Magi, too, foresaw a redeemer, a "soiosh," accomplishing eternal goodness for humanity.

"For to us a child is born, to us a son is given," the Jewish prophet Isaiah had written. "...And his name will be called Wonderful Counsellor, Mighty God...Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there will be no end."

The birth of Jesus occurred about 6 B.C. (a date calculated through correction of errors in the early calendars), and various astronomical calculations have indicated triple planetary conjunctions at that time. Also, speculation has suggested a close-swinging comet or stella nova, a new star.

Whatever its nature, the Magi spied it and set out on their 1,000-mile journey. It must have taken more than a year.

The Parthian empire, built by a Persian tribe of that name, extended at that time from the Euphrates river in the middle of modern Iraq on the west, eastward across contemporary Iran, Afghanistan and most of Pakistan.

About three centuries earlier, the first Persian empire had gone down in 331 B.C. before the deftly led, experienced armies of Alexander the Great of Macedonia (modern Greece). He built an empire larger than any before him, reaching from his homeland westward across modern Turkey, Syria, Iraq, Iran, Afghanistan, Pakistan and into India, southward through modern Israel, Jordan and Egypt.

An astute, diplomatic strategist, tutored by Aristotle, Alexander had his soldiers marry indigenous women. More than 1,000 of them were married to Persian girls in the Persian city of Susa. In Egypt, he was hailed as pharaoh, a descendant of gods. But he died 12 years after his swift, huge empire arose. His generals divided it up in a long struggle.

Syria, under Seleucus I and his successors, emerged as the dominant power of the Mideast, amassing all that Alexander had conquered except Egypt, wreaking carnage in Jerusalem and installing an idol to Zeus in the Jewish temple.

But Syria's harsh military domain began crumbling when Persia's Parthian warriors won back the Persian kingdom in 250 B.C., and Jewish guerrillas led by the Macabees drove out Syria's overwhelming larger armies in 165 B.C., regaining Jewish independence for more than a century.

The Parthian empire, friendly with Judea and never thrusting across that area, continued until 222 A.D., when another Persian dynasty took over. It and its successors lasted, through intermittent conflicts and shifting borders, until the sudden sweep of Islam out of Arabia in the seventh century A.D., amassing a vast empire of it own.

Long before, however, the rest of the Middle East had fallen to the tramp of Rome after the Roman general Pompey in 63 B.C. captured Jerusalem. At the time of Jesus' birth, Rome encompassed the Mediterranean Sea, reaching from Spain across southern Europe and northern Africa through modern Egypt, Israel, Jordan and Syria — but not Persia under the Parthians.

Judea was ruled by a Roman satrap, King Herod the Great, when the Persian Magi reached Jerusalem, inquiring of him, "Where is he who has been born king of the Jews? For we have seen his star in the East, and have come to worship him."

The suspicious, disease-ridden and often delirious Herod had built lavishly in Judea but slaughtered wantonly, even in his own court and family. He questioned the Magi uneasily about this new "king."

The Magi cited the Jewish prophet Micah's writings, "And you, O Bethlehem...from you shall come a ruler who will govern my people Israel."

Herod dispatched them to the little town to the south, adding cagily that when they found the child to report back to him that "I too may come and worship him." But Herod planned otherwise — to eliminate that child as he had eliminated so many other assumed threats to his throne.

The Magi, jubilant that their arduous quest neared fruition, hurried to Bethlehem. At the house of Mary and Joseph, the visitors knelt in adoration before the child, Scripture recounts, and presented gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh.

It was an initial acknowledgement of him by a wider world than Judaism, for Persians are not largely a Semitic people as are most of those in the Middle East, including Arabs who predominate the area. Most Persians are racially of an Indo-European stock, often termed Aryan, stemming from some influx of mid-Europeans far back in antiquity.

"And the gentiles shall come to thy light," the prophet Isaiah had written 800 years before. "... They shall bring gold and incense; and they shall show forth the praises of the Lord."

Those gentiles, the Magi, had come, and they came from a land of rich history, artistic creativity and age-old endurance. Iran now is a country of about 35.2 million, 93 percent Shi'ite Moslems, two-thirds illiterate. It is high tableland country of deserts, mountains, sparse fields, but rich in world-coveted oil.

That high country lately has been shaken by terror and death, as was Bethlehem long ago in the wake of the visit by the perceptive Persian scholars. In their present-day homeland, Massoud Rajavi, leader of the Mujahedeen, said of the ambushes and slayings:

"There is no other solution."

And the stern, old "imam," Khomeini, who exhorted willing "martyrdom," said, "Islam is revived through this kind of bloodshed."

His adherents banned Western music and movies, decreed death for sex offenses, shut down opposition newspapers, ousted most outside news agencies, segregated sexes in schools, demanded a return of the women's veil and exacting compliance with Islamic law. Opponents, Khomeini said, faced "incessant sword strokes to the head."

The killings multiplied. In the town of Kerman, two men and two women, accused of sex crimes, were buried chest-deep and stoned to death in a 15-minute barrage. Some victims were publicly flogged, given 70 lashes. In Teheran's Evin prison and elsewhere, a steady stream of suspects were executed by firing squad, including teen-age girls. Most were termed Mujahedeen leftists. Khomeini urged relatives to turn in family members opposing the regime as "informers for God."

At times, the violence and occasional street battles seemed to verge on civil war, and in late 1981, the eventual consequences remained unguessable, so recurrent was the staggering turn of events.

In Bethlehem, the traveling Magi were warned in a dream of Herod's intent and did not report back to him but headed for Persia by a different route. Learning they had tricked him, the raging Herod sent his troops to kill all male children under 2 in Bethlehem and its vicinity, unleashing a pandemonium of bloodshed, screams and innocent death.

But premonitions had sent Joseph and Mary fleeing with the child the night before to another country.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is being urged by 14 Democratic senators to veto what they call an effort to undermine the FHA and VA home loan guarantee programs.

The senators, led by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, sent Reagan a letter Saturday objecting to budget director David Stockman's reported recommendation to phase out the Government National Mortgage Association, better known as Ginnie Mae.

GNMA buys mortgages that are guaranted by the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration.

"It would be a national tragedy" to undermine the programs, the letter said.

Gun control might hinder Santa Claus

WASHINGTON (AP) — Strict gun control laws such as those in Washington and New York City might prevent Santa Claus from making his annual rounds, according to a lobbyist who has sent a pro-gun Christmas card to members of Congress.

The card, from John Snyder of the Citizens Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms, shows Santa Claus pulling a handgun on a thief who is stealing presents.

"I really object to this kind of violent imagery," said Rep. Jonathan Bingham, R-N.Y., who supports stringent gun controls. "Obviously this Santa comes from the 'shoot first, ask questions later' school," said Bingham.

Plainview's Gil Wright wrecks Bulldogs, 67-64

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Plainview Bulldog Gil Wright was a terror Monday night against the Midland High Bulldogs. He canned nine field goals and eight free throws enroute to his game-high 26-points as he paced his team to a 67-64 nonconference victory at MHS gym.

"Gil Wright is as good as anybody I've seen this year and I've seen a lot of ball players," said MHS coach Jack Stephenson, "and he's only a junior."

WRIGHT HELPED Plainview (8-7) open up its game plan against Midland High's wave attack. Both teams played hard in the first quarter but Plainview seemed to have the edge from there on out. Their Red Bulldogs didn't exactly pull away from Midland's Purple and Gold, but they did maintain control of the scoreboard throughout most of the contest.

In the first quarter of play, both teams chalked up 16 points. Plainview won the second quarter 23-18 for a 39-34 halftime score and then added another two points to their lead at the end of three, 49-42. Midland fought back hard in the fourth quarter, but couldn't quite overcome the defecit.

The Purple Pack pulled to within two points, 58-56, with less than three minutes remaining in the game. With the score remaining the same and still 2:29 left in the game, Midland postman Jim Gunnels was zapped with his fifth personal. Plainview then canned seven unanswered points to gain a strong hold on the flow of the game and went on to claim the victory, its eighth against seven losses.

FOUL TROUBLE was a key to Midland's loss. Preston Robertson, who leads the team in scoring with a 21.6 average was hit with three fouls early in the first half and was on the bench most of the second quarter. Gunnels, who ended up fouling out, was in foul trouble most of the night.

"Anytime we have Jim Gunnels sitting beside me, it hurts our team," said Coach Stephenson about his player's foul situation. "It seemed like every time I looked up, he was over there. We conversed quite frequently during the game. Jim is an outstanding basketball player and I need him in the game."

But, Midland's players weren't alone in foul trouble. Three Plainview starters had three personal by halftime and a fourth picked up his third shortly after intermission. The main difference in fouls, though, was that Plainview was able to go to the line during the second half while Midland didn't even reach the one-on-one situation until 11 seconds were left in the game. The Purple Pack never did get a shot from the line in the second half.

ANOTHER DIFFERENCE in the game was Plainview's defense against Midland's inside attack to Robertson. Plainview did a good job of jamming up the inside game forcing MHS to take an unusual number of long shots.

"They were good shots though," said Coach Stephenson. "When they back off of you and close down the inside game you've got to shoot the ball. Maybe they'll go in next time.

"Everybody plays us tough," continued Coach Stephenson. "We didn't execute tonight and that's what concerns me, we flat didn't execute. We did some good things tonight though, I'm not taking anything away from Plainview. They've got a good ball team."

With the Christmas holiday knocking on the door, Midland will wind up its practice session for the week today and then resume for the Bulldog's game against Lubbock Estacado on Jan. 2 in MHS gym. After three tough tournaments, especially the one this weekend, Coach Stephenson feels his team deserves a break and that a difference will be seen next week.

"We were tired tonight," he said. "I think fatigue might have hurt us. We played some tough teams this weekend. We'll take the week off and I think you'll see the difference."

ALTHOUGH PLAINVIEW did a good job of playing the inside game, Robertson was still able to score well, usually with a player or two defending him. On the night he connected for 22 points. Raymond Parker and Don Sharnowski did well from the outside with 15 and 14 points respectively.

Along with Wright and his 26 points, Plainview got 13 points from Jerry Walker and 11 from Alton Jackson.

In junior varsity action, Midland High (11-5) got 18 points from Jerry Johnson and 17 from Rob Franklin enroute to a 58-56 victory over Plainview. Plainview was paced by Randy Roberts with 13 and Quennoth Dunlop with nine.

Plainview (67): Alton Jackson, 3-5-1-11; Arthur Washington, 1-1-4-3; Kenneth Hallman, 2-3-3-7; Todd Denton, 0-0-1-0; Craig Williams, 2-1-3-5; Kevin Hearn, 1-0-0-2; Jerry Walker, 6-1-3-13; James Ellis, 0-0-1-0; Gil Wright, 9-8-4-26. Totals: 24-19-23-67.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Once the San Diego Chargers saw an Oakland defense designed to shut down the National Football League's top passing game, Coach Don Coryell had a move of his own.

It wasn't flamboyant, but it was effective as the Chargers methodically rode to a 23-10 victory Monday night over the Raiders to nail down the last NFL playoff spot.

"They (the Raiders) were playing the 'nickel defense' (five defensive backs) almost all the time, and that made it tough to throw," explained Coryell.

"We had to play a more balanced game in order to keep the ball. If we just threw the ball, we would be playing into the defense's hands," he said.

SO SAN DIEGO effectively sprinkled the running of Chuck Muncie and the passing to claim a third consecutive American Football Conference title and snap Oakland's near-invincibility on Monday night television in the final regular season game of the year.

"By being more balanced, we were able to throw the ball when we had to," said Coryell.

Fouts passed for only 222 yards, one of his lowest totals of the season, but it was enough to set three NFL one-season records for passing yardage, most passes and most completions.

Rolf Benirschke, cut by the Raiders four years ago, got a measure of revenge by kicking three field goals.

The Chargers, on the brink of elimination Sunday until Chicago upended AFC West leader Denver 35-24, finished in a tie for first with the Broncos at 10-6, and won the title by virtue of a better intra-divisional mark.

CASHING IN on two Oakland turnovers, San Diego built a 17-3 halftime lead against the injury riddled defending Super Bowl champions, who had not lost on Monday night in 15 games dating back to 1974.

Fouts completed 14 of 27 attempts, giving him 4,802 yards, bettering the mark of 4,715 yards he set last year. He passed for one touchdown in the title-clinching victory. His 360 completions broke the mark of 348, and his 609 attempts snapped the old record of 589, both set by Fouts a year ago.

Oakland, now 18-2-1 in Monday night appearances, finished 7-9 for the season, the Raiders' first losing season since 1964. It was the first sweep in the tradition-rich rivalry since 1965.

The Chargers, who won four of their last five games to cap the comeback, meet the AFC East champion Miami Dolphins, 11-4-1, on Saturday, Jan. 2.

Fouts' record-breaking performance a few days after the NFL Players Association lifted a suspension threat against the veteran quarterback for his refusal to pay union dues.

Rookie running back James Brooks sent San Diego ahead 7-0 with an electrifying, tackle-busting 28-yard run midway through the first quarter. The touchdown came three plays after veteran Chargers safety Glen Edwards recovered a fumble at San Diego's 32.

AFTER OAKLAND got a 34-yard field goal from Chris Bahr early in the second quarter, the Chargers retaliated with a 10-play, 77-yard drive, climaxed by Benirschke's first field goal, a line drive from 24 yards out.

Leading 10-3 with less than two minutes remaining in the first half, veteran cornerback Willie Buchanon's interception set up San Diego's second touchdown. Two plays later, Fouts lobbed a 29-yard strike to wide receiver Charlie Joiner for a touchdown.

Oakland had a chance to cut the margin in the closing seconds of the first half, but two Marc Wilson passes fell incomplete, the last as time ran out. That thwarted an opportunity to get Bahr on the field for a field goal try.

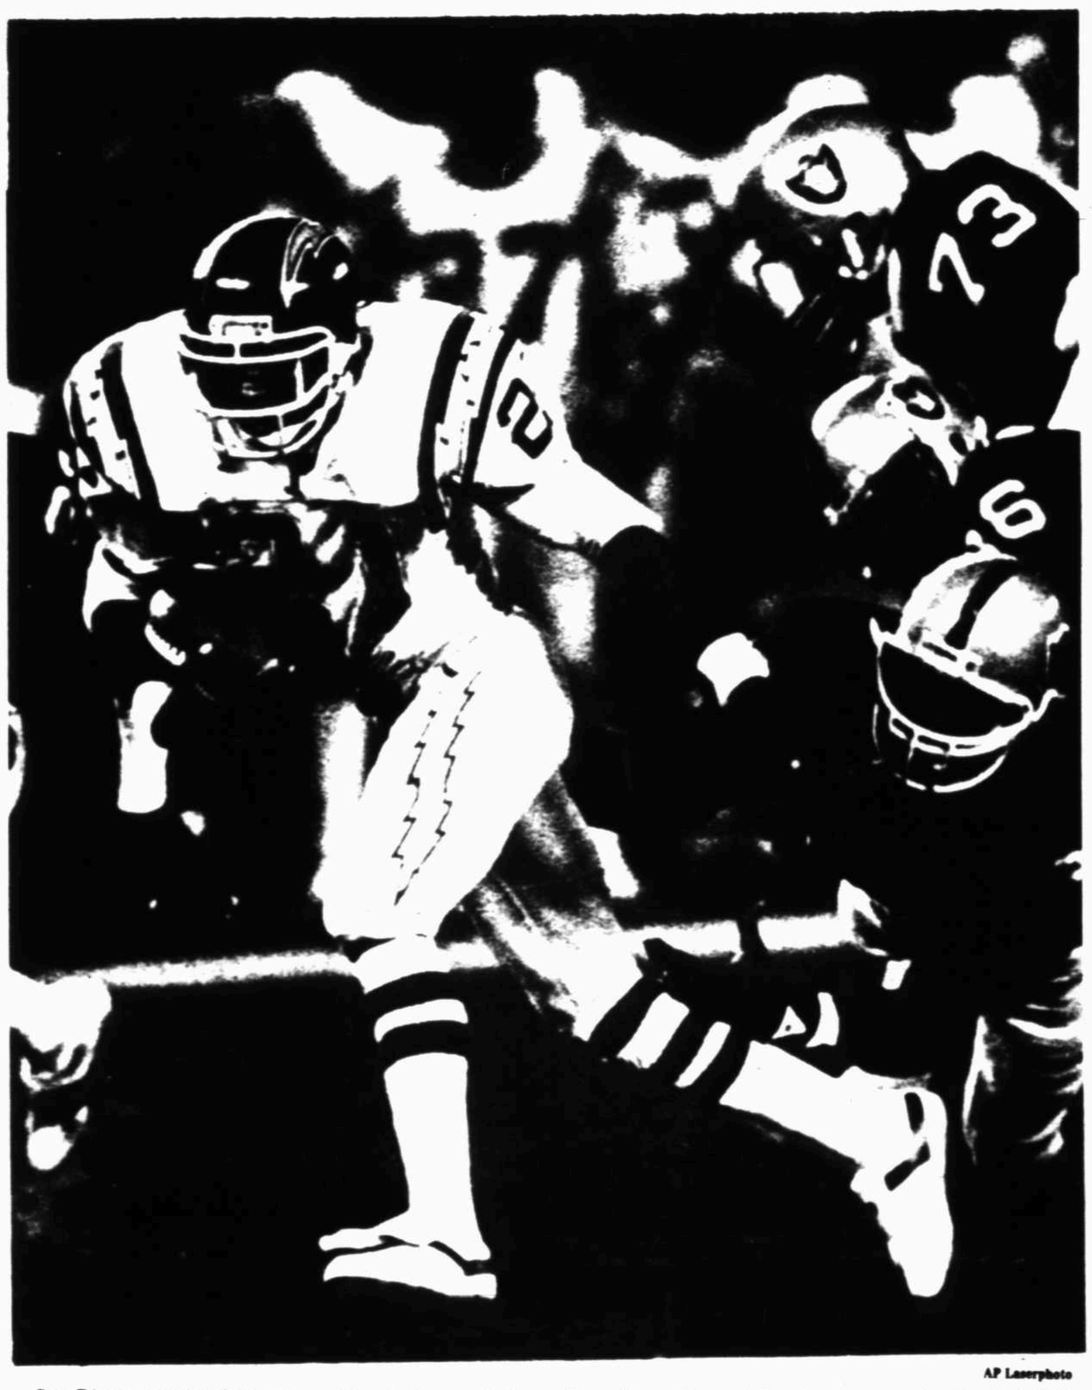

Oakland opened the second half with a 15-play, 71-yard drive to narrow the margin to 17-10 on a one-yard run by Mark van Eeghen.

Again, the Chargers answered, this time with an 11-play, 56-yard drive that set up Benirschke's second field goal, a 27-yard shot.

BENIRSCHKE ADDED his third field, a 39-yarder, with 3:46 remaining in the game, and the Chargers ate up the clock to preserve one of the most satisfying victories in the club's 21-year history.

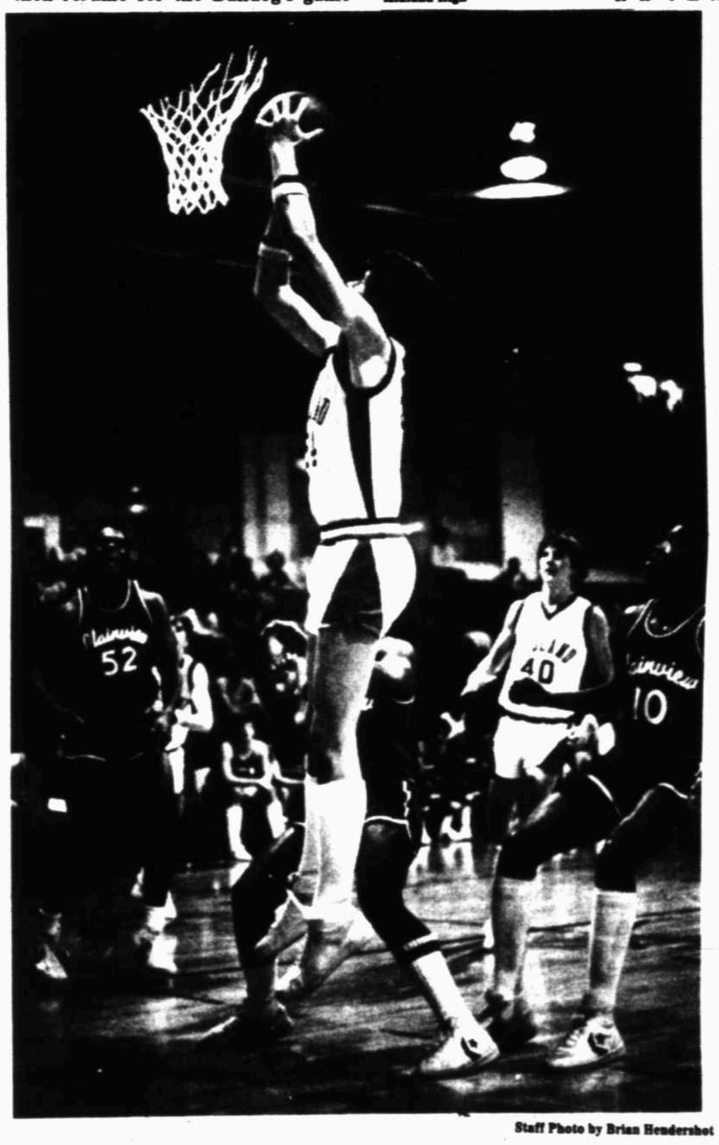

Wilson, who wasn't expected to play because of a sprained thumb, entered the game after two unsuccessful Oakland drives when starter Jim Plunkett was removed after complaining of flu-like symptoms.

Kush named new Colt coach

OWINGS MILLS, Md. (AP) — Frank Kush, the Baltimore Colts' new head coach, was interviewed by members of the National Football League security staff before he was named to the job, but a league spokesman says there is no reason why his contract would not be approved by Commissioner Pete Rozelle.

Jim Heffernan, the NFL's director of public relations, said Monday night he assumed Kush's talks with the security people had to do with litigation in which the former Arizona State coach had been involved. Kush, fired from his college job in 1980 after allegedly slapping one of his players, was sued by the player, Kevin Rutledge.

"We were asked by clubs to be updated on Frank Kush's situation regarding the litigation," Heffernan said, "and we have provided the information to the clubs making the inquiries."

KUSH WAS named to the Baltimore job Monday, replacing Mike McCormack, who was fired after a 2-14 performance by the Colts this year.

League approval is needed for every NFL contract, Heffernan said, but, he added, "We don't look into every coach who is hired."

"I've not done anything that I am embarrassed about," Kush said.

"Yes, I'm not going to slap a guy's headgear," he added in reference to the incident at Arizona State.

"I am going to work them hard, they're going to run, they are going to do the fundamentals," Kush said.

"I think I've been tabbed by the media as a tough football coach, I don't think I'm any different than any high school, college or pro coach going through the fundamentals of the game," Kush said.

Kush, who this year led the Hamilton Tiger-Cats to an 11-4-1 record in the Canadian Football League, was criticized by players for his tough training methods. The complaints ended after several players were traded and the Tiger-Cats clinched the Ealtern Conference title six weeks before the season ended.

"When I got there I felt I had to change their attitude," Kush said. "Attitude, I think, is a very significant factor. They all have to be thinking the same line.

"If you have that burning desire to win, the win will take care of itself," he added.

KUSH SAID he was not discouraged by the Colts' dismal record. "I don't think there's a great deal of difference in the NFL between one club and another.

"I think a team may be down but you can bring it back. There's no magic to it. It takes a lot of hard work."

But Kush told reporters he sought and obtained a five-year contract to give him time to build a winner. "If I can't do it in that period of time, I ought to be gone," he said.

Kush, who has a lifetime coaching record of 187-58-2, led Arizona State to winning seasons in 20 of his 21 years as head coach. In 1975, the No.2-ranked Sun Devils defeated Nebraska 17-14 in the Fiesta Bowl to complete a 12-0 season.

The Rebel boys (9-4) are looking to get back on the winning track tonight after suffering a pair of losses in the Reese Air Force Base Christmas Classic in Lubbock. They opened the tournament with a victory over Canyon and lost their second game to Amarillo. The concluded play by losing to Lubbock Coronado.

The Lee girls (9-4) are coming off a big weekend that saw the Rebels win three games in the Girls Tall City Invitational including a 58-57 overtime victory against Midland High in the championship game and are looking to continue their winning ways against Alpine.

Tampa Bay not fearful about playing Cowboys

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Coach John McKay said Monday that confidence keyed the Tampa Bay Bucs' drive into the National Football Conference playoffs, and after whipping Detroit on the road, they're not fearful about playing Dallas in Texas.

"We're not void of talent. I think we were void of confidence," said McKay. "I think our play in the last four or five weeks has given the team what you have to have to ever be a winner. You have to believe you can win. You have to have confidence."

He talked about last year when the Cowboys beat Tampa 28-17 at Irving. "We felt pretty good going in last year. We moved the ball extremely well. We got a couple calls that hurt us badly. But I thought it was a pretty even game."

McKay called Sunday's division-clinching upset his proudest, most rewarding moment, of the year, but said the Bucs didn't play as well as they had in the previous few games.

"I thought it was a great thing. Not too many people gave us a chance," he said.

"We didn't play that well," said McKay. "What we did do is we did not give the ball to them. We said if the're going to beat us they're going to beat us another way."

McKay, Tampa's coach since the 1976 expansion season, has headed a team that started its National Football League life with 26 straight losses, came within a 9-0 NFC championship loss to Los Angeles to the 1979 Super Bowl, then slid to the division bottom with a 5-11 mark last year.

This season looked like another loser, especially after successive thumpings of 25-10 by Minnesota and 24-7 by Denver.

McKay had a talk with the players. After that they won four of their last five games.

"I told them 'you're either quitting out there or we're doing a bad job coaching. There's something wrong when we can't play better than that."

It was the eighth straight victory for the Ranger boys (11-1) since their only loss of the season on Dec. 12 against Pecos in the opening round of the Crane Tournament and the stage was set for this one relatively early.

Greenwood went up by an 18-12 score at the end of the first quarter of play and led 41-24 by halftime. The Rangers increased their lead to 59-36 at the end of three and outscored the Owls 24-15 in the final frame to post the victory.

THE RANGERETTES (8-2) had a pretty easy time of it also. They started by taking a two-point 18-16 lead in the first quarter and ran it up to 35-28 by the half. The third quarter was their big one as Greenwood outscored Reagan County 20-9 and came back by winning the final frame 14-10.

It took seven OTs, but Bearcats win

By The Associated Press

It was one of those games that you could play and play again.

In fact, that's what the Cincinnati Bearcats and the Bradley Braves did Monday night.

When it was over, Cincinnati had beaten Bradley 75-73 in seven nerve-racking overtimes to set a Division I college basketball record.

"We just couldn't get a break," said Bradley Coach Dick Versace after watching Doug Schloemer's 15-foot shot drop in for Cincinnati with one second left in the seventh overtime. "They got lucky — we didn't. Our guys played so hard, that you can't really fault them."

Neither team had scored in the final overtime frame prior to Schloemer's winning basket. Bradley's center Kerry Cooks launched an 18-footer after a long inbounds pass but the shot bounced off the back of the rim, ending the three hour and 15-minute marathon.

"I knew I had a 50 percent chance of taking the last shot," said Schloemer. "Most of our shots are from the wing — and I thought it would be either me or Bobby Austin."

Regulation play ended with the teams tied at 61 after the Bearcats ovehcame Bradley's 61-57 edge with 45 seconds to play. Jump shots by Kevin Geffney and Austin tied the contest to send the game into the first extra period.

Both teams played keep-away throughout the overtime periods and only once, in the fifth overtime, did either team manage more than a two-point lead.

The old Division I record of six overtimes was held by two games, one in 1955 when Minnesota beat Purdue, 59-56, and the other in 1953 when Niagara beat Siena, 88-81.

In games involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 4 Virginia routed Brigham Young-Hawaii 118-84; Kansas State upset No. 5 Minnesota 62-52; No. 9 Missouri walloped Youngstown State 97-60 and No. 12 Alabama trimmed Biscayne 94-63.

Top Ten

Kansas State Coach Jack Hartman credited junior center Les Craft with playing a pivotal role, even though he didn't score any points. Craft held the Gophers' 7-foot-3 center Randy Breuer to 12 points, 11 under his average.

"Les did a great job on Breuer," Hartman said. "And the rest did an equally good job of supporting him. The only way to stop Breuer is not to let him get the ball."

Ricky Frazier scored 16 points and grabbed four rebounds to lead Missouri over Youngstown State. The victory was Missouri's 24th consecutive victory at home, a school record.

Second Ten

Eddie Phillips had 22 points and 11 other Alabama players broke into the scoring column as the Crimson Tide defeated Biscayne College. Alabama, 7-0, went into the dressing room at halftime with a 48-28 lead, and the game was never close after that.

Biscayne Coach Ken Stibler said he was extremely impressed with the Alabama team. "They wore us down physically by their depth and their domination on the boards. Alabama is definitely a Top Ten team barring injuries," he said.

Elsewhere, Jacques Tuz scored 14 points and grabbed eight rebounds, leading Colorado to a 58-52 victory over Idaho State in a first-round game of the Rebel Roundup tournament. Larry Anderson scored 20 points to pace Nevada-Las Vegas to a 66-59 victory over Stetson in the other first-round game.

Greg Palm scored 21 points and pulled down 15 rebounds, leading Nevada-Reno to a 93-85 victory over Loyola Marymount in the first round of the Wolf Pack Classic. St. Mary's held off a last-ditch rally by North Texas State and Franklin Rhodes hit two free throws to wrap up an 88-86 Gaels' victory in the other opening-round game.

Elsewhere, Howard Carter scored 23 points as Louisiana State coasted past Texas-El Paso 71-59; Mark Jones had a career-high 27 points and Eric Stover added 21 to lead St. Bonaventure to a 93-68 victory over Maryland-Eastern Shore; Brad Seller scored 15 points as Wisconsin defeated Northern Iowa 65-53; Guy Morgan scored a career-high 27 points and pulled down 11 rebounds to pace Wake Forest to a 98-72 victory over North Carolina-Wilmington and Marcus Newbern and David Jenkins teamed for 34 points as Bowling Green routed Wisconsin-Superior 88-44.

Also, Mike Phillips scored a career-high 25 points to lead Niagara to an 85-73 victory over Western Michigan; Dwayne Wallace and Darrell Gissendanner scored 12 points apiece as Pittsburgh defeated Utica College 64-47; Shelton Gibbs scored a career-high 32 points to lead St. Peter's (N.J.) to a 109-83 victory over St. Francis (Pa.); Darrell Lockhart led six Auburn players in double figures with 17 points as the Tigers routed Cal State-Chico 104-61 and Dwight Gibson tossed in two free throws with less than a minute left to lift Penn State to a 60-58 victory over Nebraska.

Matt Clark contributed 16 points and all 12 other Oklahoma State players scored as the Cowboys thrashed Cleveland State 92-66; Jeff Taylor scored 24 points, leading Texas Tech to an 83-71 over Long Beach State; Jerry Beck scored 11 points — seven of them in overtime — to lead Middle Tennessee State to a 67-63 win over Samford and New Mexico State's Jaime Pena hit two free throws with three seconds left to preserve a rugged 59-56 win over New Mexico.

MHS rips Alpine

ALPINE — Midland High's girls basketball team shook off the disappoint of Saturday's overtime loss to Midland Lee to post a convincing 61-36 win over Alpine here Monday.

Shelia Christian had the hot hand for the Purple Pack as she ripped the cords for 19 points. Janice Littlefield and Vergie Cooks backed Christian with 12 points each. Carolyn Gallegos tossed in 14 tallies to lead the Fightin' Bucks.

Midland High started slowly, holding only a 12-10 advantage at the end of one, but outscored Alpine 16-2 in the second quarter to take a 28-12 lead at intermission.

The Bulldogs didn't let up in the third stanza as they ripped the Bucks 14-6 to take a commanding 42-18 lead into the final eight minutes of the contest. In the final quarter, Alpine managed 18 points but it wasn't enough to overcome the Purple Pack's 19-point production as Midland High coasted to the victory.

Midland High, now 10-7, will be off until after Christmas. The Purple Pack's next game will be Tuesday when Crane comes calling at Midland High gym for games at 6:15 p.m. and 8 p.m. The Crane contest will be the last game before the Bulldogs start Distrct 5-5A action.

Six-year, six-figure pact to Schmidt

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mike Schmidt, possibly baseball's best player, has become one of its highest-paid by agreeing to a six-year contract with the Philadelphia Phillies worth between $7.2 million and $10 million.

"I'll be financially secure for the rest of my life," the 32-year-old third baseman, winner of the National League's Most Valuable Player award the past two seasons, said Monday. "I won't have to go out and get a job once I stop playing."

Neither Schmidt nor team President Bill Giles would say how much the contract was worth. But estimates on the pact — which runs through the 1987 season — were upward from $1.2 million a year.

Giles said Schmidt's contract "is not as high as Winfield's," though Schmidt may have become the NL's highest-paid player.

Schmidt, the all-time Phillies home-run king, could have become a free agent at the end of the 1982 season, when his current six-year, $560,000-a-year contract expires.

"I could have gotten a bigger and better contract, possibly, by becoming a free agent, but I wanted to stay in this city for a lot of reasons," he said.

The six-time All-Star said friendships with teammates, the club's future and his relationship with the Philadelphia fans and community made him want to remain with the team.

"It also helped for the Phillies to feel the way they did about me," Schmidt said after Giles predicted the third baseman would eventually "be put in the same class as the Joe DiMaggios, Willie Mayes, Mickey Mantles, Babe Ruths, Stan Musials."

The contract also includes a three-year, no-trade clause, though Schmidt said he would have liked to have had a no-trade clause for all six years.

"It's a little mind boggling. But I'm getting paid in such complicated ways that I have no idea what's available for me to spend," he said with a laugh. "I do know that I'll have more money to lose on the card games on the team plane."

The slugger, with 314 lifetime homers, has a career batting average of .263, including a .286 average in 1980 and a career-high .316 last season.

Schmidt led the league in six offensive categories last year while hitting 31 homers and knocking in 91 runs during the strike-shortened season. His homer won the All-Star game for the NL in August.

In his nine full seasons, Schmidt has won six Gold Gloves and was named the 1980 World Series MVP.

An AP Sports Analysis
By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

Marques Johnson, the splendid Milwaukee forward who signed an eight-year contract estimated at $1 million per year last week, says that during his holdout there were times he believed he would have to sit out the season or sign with another team.

"I felt a lot of times that progress with the Bucks wasn't what I'd like it to be," says the former UCLA star now in his fifth National Basketball Association season. "I thought it might mean missing the whole season. And there was a point where I thought the best thing would be to go to another team.

Johnson said the Milwaukee media were generally fair during his holdout, which caused him to miss all of training camp and the first 18 games of the regular season.

"There was some negative press, like when it was said I turned down a $1 million a year contract for eight years," Johnson said. "I'm not dumb enough to do that."

He and the team have agreed not to publicly discuss the specifics of his contract, but he said the difference between the final agreement and what he turned down earlier had more to do with insurance, guarantees and deferred payments than dollar amounts.

"There were some boos the first night I came back, and that's understandable," Johnson said. "A lot of people thing I did something wrong, but as an all-star forward (the last three years) I wanted to be paid fairly."

Johnson had two years remaining on his original six-year contract with the Bucks and had wanted a new one for three years.

Despite his misgivings about re-signing with the Bucks, he finally stayed in Milwaukee because he didn't believe his image had changed from "good guy" to "bad guy" in the city.

Leonard after Benitez engagement says Duran

NEW YORK (AP) — "I am looking forward to Leonard, and if I lose, it's all over," says Roberto Duran.

The 30-year-old Panamanian was talking Monday about another fight with Sugar Ray Leonard if he beats Wilfred Benitez, who also is looking forward to fight Leonard again.

Duran quit against in the eighth-round when he lost the World Boxing Council welterweight title back to Leonard Nov. 25, 1980 for only his second loss commpared to 74 victories.

"I said before, anybody gets sick," said Duran who has always contended he stomach cramps when he fought Leonard from whom he won the title June 20, 1980.

A victory against the 23-year-old Benitez, of Puerto Rico, at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas, Nev., Jan. 30 would make Duran, who held the lightweight title for most of the 1970s, a triple champion and earn him another fight against Leonard.

Benitez already is only one of six men to be champion in three weight classes. He lost the junior welterweight title (which he won at age 17) for failure to defend, then he was stopped by Leonard in the 15th round of a welterweight title defense Nov. 30, 1979, for his only loss against one draw. He won a share of the 154-pound class championship with a 12th-round knockout of Maurice Hope of Britain last May 23 at Las Vegas.

"This fight doesn't need any hype," said promoter Don King of the Benitez-Duran bout for which each boxer reportedly will get about $1 million plus a percentage of various revenues. It will be telecast by Home Box Office, a cable television company, in a show from 9 p.m. to 11:30 p.m., EST, with the main event to start at 10 p.m. There will be closed-circuit television in areas not reached by HBO.

But King wasn't unhappy about a scuffle that broke out between the two fighters while they were posing for pictures. Duran pushed Benitez, was slapped by Benitez then hit the champion with a grazing right that marked him about the left eye.

Erhardt expected to get canned by New England

BOSTON (AP) — The New England Patriots, who shared the poorest record in the National Football League and a $1-million budget deficit this year, plan to fire head coach Ron Erhardt, according to published reports.

But Erhardt, who met Monday with owner Billy Sullivan, says he hasn't been told he's out.

"I don't know what's going to happen," Erhardt said after telling a news conference that Sullivan told him no decision had been made about his job. "Your guess is as good as mine. I hope wherever I go I get the same kind of treatment."

ACCORDING TO published reports, however, Sullivan plans to retain Erhardt only if none of his choices agrees to take the job.

Those reports said the frontrunners are college coaches Joe Paterno of Penn State, Johnny Majors of Tennessee, Don James of Washington, Johnny Robinson of Southern California, Darryl Rogers of Arizona State and Ron Meyer of Southern Methodist.

Also mentioned were NFL assistant coaches Marion Campbell and Fred Burney of Philadelphia and Dan Henning of Washington, and Hugh Campbell, head coach of Canadian Football League's Edmonton Eskimos.

"I've postponed making a decision on Ron because I was hoping the team could turn things around," Sullivan said a separate news conference.

"If we could have beaten Miami and Buffalo and made an impact on the race, I would have favored keeping Ron. But it didn't work out that way.

"The past few weeks I've had a lot of letters from season ticket holdes ... who say that while they knew the coaching staff wasn't at fault ... that if we didn't make a coaching change that we could count them out ... next season.

"This has been our worst year at the gate since the merger. We'll be coming in over a million dollars below budget. Obviously, the empty seats at our games have to be a factor in the decision," Sullivan said after meeting with Erhardt.

THE PATRIOTS had a 2-14 record, the worst in the team's history.

Aggies top Loboes

LAS CRUCES (AP) — At a time when peace and goodwill are the fashions of the season, New Mexico State and New Mexico chose fists over field goals in the latest renewal of their basketball rivalry.

The state's two major college basketball teams literally clashed Monday night at the Pan American Center in Las Cruces and after three fights, 43 fouls and plenty of hard feelings, the Aggies emerged with a 59-56 win.

The victory gives NMSU a sweep of the annual two-game series between the two in-state rivals. The Aggies scored an 85-81 win in Albuquerque 10 days ago.

Pena led a balanced NMSU attack with 17 points. Guard Ernest Patterson added 14 and center Renault Moultrie 11.

New Mexico, which lost for the third time in its last four outings, was led by sophomore guard Phil Smith with 20 points. Smith, however, was the only Lobo in double figures.

The Lobos trailed from the opening seconds but Smith forged a 54-54 tie with a 20-foot jumper with 51 seconds left. The Aggies retaliated with a basket from sophomore guard Steve Colter and a free throw from guard Gil Williams.

New Mexico's Brad Evangelho hit a layup with four seconds left, but on the inbounds pass Pena was fouled and he converted the two free throws that clinched the win.

After the game, both New Mexico Coach Gary Colson and New Mexico Sta us," Drew said. "If they were going to get us, it was going to have to be from the outside."

New Mexico State's zone forced New Mexico into a 40.3 percent shooting performance. But the Aggies also benefitted at the free throw line, where they converted 17 of 30 free throws, compared to the Lobos' six of 11.

Eddie Biles not sure what to do with Earl Campbell

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oiler Coach Eddie Biles has inherited the same dilemma that confronted former Houston Coach Bum Phillips — what to do with Earl Campbell.

Phillips built his offense around Campbell, and then Tyler Rose ran to three straight National Football League titles. But Phillips was accused of overusing Campbell in an oversimplified offensive alignment. Oakland's Lester Hayes said it was "high school."

Biles came along and announced plans to diversify the Oiler offense with Campbell running less and gaining just as many yards as ever.

It didn't work out. Campbell finished the season with 1,374 yards, the lowest total of his four-year career. He had only 24 yards on 13 carries in Sunday's finale, a 21-20 victory over Pittsburgh.

THERE HAVE been season-long rumors that Campbell was unhappy and would be traded, all denied by Biles and Oiler owner Bud Adams. "Earl Campbell is stuck in Houston whether he wants to be or not," Adams said.

Campbell says he wants to stay and Biles wants him, but following Campbell's sub-par performance Sunday, his 10th straight game under 100 yards, Biles was reduced to praising Campbell's blocking.

"I think what people need to realize about Campbell is that he is becoming a complete football player," Biles said Monday. "He had the best blocking day of his career yesterday.

"The way the rules have changed, a running back has to be able to block and pick up the blitzes. Earl has also improved as a receiver and he'll be better next year."

Biles said the plan for next season will be to exploit a team's weaknesses rather than have Campbell pound monotonously at the opposing defense.

"We've been accused of running up against a brick wall," Biles said. "We want to be able to put the ball in the air against teams with weak pass defense without huring anyone's feelings.

"And if we play a team that is weak against the run, we certainly have a runner like Earl who can take advantage of those weakensses."

While Campbell is adjusting to his expanded duties, veteran quarterback Ken Stabler may have to get accustomed to a backup role. Biles said Monday tht Gifford Nielsen, who engineered the victory over Pittsburgh, had earned the No. 1 quarterbacking tag going into training camp.

"Gifford's performance was good, bordering on outstanding," Biles said of Nielsen's three-touchdown performance against the Steelers.

"We will go to training camp next summer with Gifford as the No. 1 quarterback.

"That doesn't mean the preseason games can't change things around. But as of now there is no doubt who will be No. 1 at the start."

Biles said Stabler, who will be expected to live here in the off-season and keep closer ties with the Oilers, was aware of his decision and understood the situation.

"Kenny still wants to play football and he realizes this is a competitive situation," Biles said. "He also knows that I am not hard-headed about this decision and my mind can be changed at training camp."

Opening lead: ?

It was with great regret that we learned of the death of Barclay Cooke of Englewood, N.J. He was one of the world's great backgammon players and an enthusiastic bridge player — and our friend.

A graduate of Yale University, Barclay's knowledge of the classics seeped through his writings on backgammon. But when it came to bridge, he was an avid reader, and our week would not have been complete without his telephone call to take issue with at least one of the answers to our weekly bridge quiz.

Consider this hand with a club lead. Declarer ruffs, cashes the ace-king of diamonds to take a spade discard in dummy, cashes the ace-king of spades and then embarks on a crossruff. As the cards lie, East cannot overruff dummy and West must follow to three more rounds of clubs and three more rounds of diamonds as declarer ruffs. Declarer ends up scoring four tricks in side-suit high cards, four ruffs in dummy, four ruffs in his own hand and the ace of trumps for a total of thirteen tricks.

Whatever else anyone might have thought of Barclay, no one denied that he was one of the shrewdest men around. He was given the bidding and the West hand as an opening lead problem against seven hearts. It didn't take him more than a split second to realize that there wouldn't have been any problem if a lead in a side suit would have defeated the grand slam. So quick as a flash he replied: "I lead the king of hearts!"

The stunned questioner turned away wondering how anyone could have found the only lead to defeat the hand, and an unlikely one at that, in so little time. You try and make it after that lead.

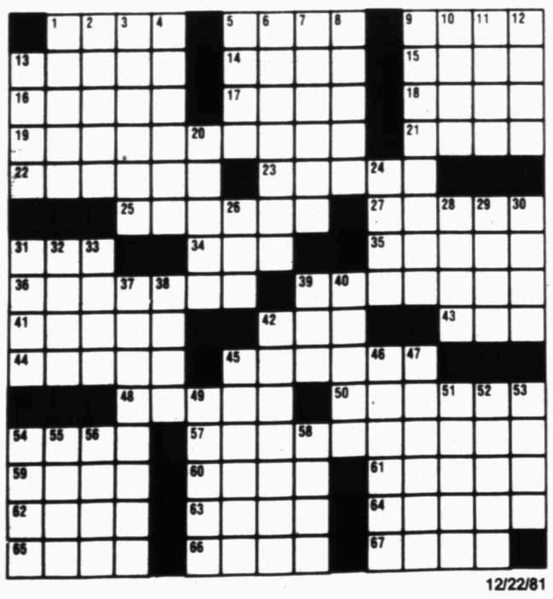

We will miss him.

Alien smuggling ring broken in California

By BILL OTT
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — A sophisticated smuggling ring that was able to disburse illegal aliens throughout the nation was believed broken last week with the indictment of 24 persons in the San Diego area, Los Angeles and Mexico.

U.S. Attorney William H. Kennedy said the well-organized ring was believed to have been netting $1 million a year at a "conservative estimate."

The organization allegedly employed recruiters, who sought out aliens in Tijuana, Mexico, and Mexico City, as well as several guides who slipped them into the United States.

A federal source who declined to be quoted by name said one driver admitted moving as many as 7,000 aliens to Los Angeles over a three-year period.

Assistant U.S. Attorney General Maria Arroyo-Tabin identified Cesario Gabaldon-Morales and his wife, Juana Gabaldon, as the alleged ringleaders. Juana Gabaldon was arraigned before U.S. Magistrate J. Edward Harris, who set corporate surety bond for her release at $25,000. The woman's husband was in custody yesterday on $100,000 bond.

Arroyo-Tabin, in urging high bond, said the couple lives in a home used as a "drop house," where aliens await transportation. She said the Gabaldons also own a four-unit apartment house in Los Angeles, also used as a drop house.

Officials said another such house was located in Spring Valley, Calif., at the residence of James Martin Connor, who also is charged in the indictment.

Culminating six months of investigation by the Border Patrol's anti-smuggling unit, the indictment alleges conspiracy to smuggle, transport and harbor aliens, illegal transportation and harboring of aliens and inducing illegal entry.

The indictment alleges that Gabaldon-Morales and his wife received payment from aliens and their representatives by cash, personal checks, Western Union telegrams and money orders. Arroyo-Tabin said the ring charged set rates of $1,000 per alien to Chicago and New York and $250 to Los Angeles.

Kennedy said in one instance a money order was received from Paterson, N.J., and another from Cleveland, Ohio, indicating the ring's capability to locate aliens in distant cities.

Gabaldon-Morales and Connor were indicted on Dec. 3 on conspiracy charges and the latest indictment expands the conspiracy allegations that were made earlier. A break in the case developed last Aug. 21 when San Diego police officers executed a search warrant at Gabaldon's house in an unrelated matter. Discovered at the time, however, were records allegedly reflecting alien smuggling contracts and $8,000 in cash.

Cheese may be freed by White House

By PHILIP J. HILTS
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The White House will take up the question of whether to free the cheese this week.

According to White House farm policy adviser Burleigh Leonard, the hundreds of millions of pounds of surplus cheese that are accumulating in caves and warehouses around the country are on the agenda of the White House's Cabinet council on food and agriculture, which is meeting Monday and Tuesday.

After Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block pointed out the growing surplus of cheese and what it is costing to grow vast colonies of cheese mold, consumer groups have been sending "free the cheese" petitions and telegrams to the White House. They've suggested giving it to the needy as a giant Christmas present.

It may be illegal for the government to give "in-kind contributions" — that is, non-money gifts — to families, Leonard said Saturday. The food stamp law would seem to prohibit it because it would complicate the calculations that determine food stamp eligibility.

If it turns out to be illegal, it may be possible to go to Congress to get the authority for a one-time cheese bonanza for poor families of the nation.

Conservatives battle for New Jersey senator's innocence

By SKIP WOLLENBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Harrison A. Williams Jr., the liberal senator from New Jersey, is attracting unlikely — and unsolicited — support from two conservative ideologues in his battle against expulsion from the Senate.

One ally is fundamentalist preacher Carl McIntire, who says the recent delay in Senate proceedings against Williams is "an answer to prayer."

The other is Lyndon LaRouche, twice a presidential candidate and now leader of the National Democratic Policy Committee, which is using the additional time to exhibit a 30-minute film that champions Williams' cause.

McIntire and LaRouche also have had their differences with the government in the past. Some observers suggest it is a measure of Williams' desperation that he has accepted the support of two men he might once have shunned.

The pair has enlisted in the four-term senator's effort to focus attention on the government's tactics in the Abscam political corruption investigation in which he was implicated.

Says Williams: "Anybody who feels as I do that our constitutional provisions have been violated massively by the operation of parts of the government and wants to fight it, it's the fight I'm in and I'm glad that others are fighting it."

Government could be suit victim

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. government may be the target of class-action suits totaling about $200 million in connection with mysterious Soviet microwave beams aimed at the American embassy in Moscow, says a State Department medical consultant.

Dr. Herbert Pollack made the disclosure at a meeting of two federal scientific advisory panels.

U.S. officials have said the existence of the mysterious Soviet microwave beams was technically verified in late 1962 and that the radiation, whose purpose remains unclear, may have been present as early as 1953. It ended in 1979, according to U.S. officials.

Study: Students abusing grants

By CHARLES R. BABCOCK
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — One student at Boise State University in Idaho who received more than $4,200 in federal aid while in school got a degree in social science after taking 13 physical-education courses, including "Coed Bowling," "Coed Billiards," "Advanced Weight Training" and "Coed Jogging."

His best grades were in independent study courses on "Sexuality and the Male Athlete" and "Behavior of the Christian vs. Non-Christian Child." He got 4 Fs, 11 Ds and withdrew from eight courses; the school waived its usual standards to let him graduate.

A student at Morris Brown College in Atlanta collected nearly $16,000 in government aid in five years but earned only 65 credit hours and had a 1.35 grade point average. During his last two years he passed only one course and should have been ineligible for his last $9,000 in federal assistance.

A student at State Community College in East St. Louis, Ill., received $8,400 in seven years while completing only 35 of 215 credit hours. She took the same speech course eight times and the same sociology course five times without passing either.

Another student at Morris Brown received nearly $12,000 in aid in three years but because of withdrawals, earned only 14 credit hours with a .62 grade point.

A new General Accounting Office report cites such examples to support its conclusion that some schools have set inadequate "academic progress standards" for students receiving federal financial aid and have failed to enforce the standards set. As a result, it said, many students are abusing programs that totaled nearly $8 billion in fiscal 1980.

Too often, it said, students whose grants it reviewed had low grade points, or withdrew or failed so many courses that they were far behind any generally accepted pace toward graduation. About 20 percent of the Pell grant recipients studied had less than the 2.0 grade point required for graduation, and about 10 percent had less than a 1.5, a D.

Although the report made no attempt to project its results nationwide, it estimated that millions of dollars are being spent unnecessarily on students who probably won't graduate. The problem, it said, "threatens to undermine the integrity of the financial aid programs."

The study was begun by GAO and completed for Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee. It contained examples without the names of the schools or students because it was trying to illustrate a potential national problem. The students' names are protected by the Privacy Act.

During their survey GAO investigators examined a random sample of nearly 6,000 student transcripts at 20 colleges scattered across the country. They ranged from the University of Florida and Southern Illinois University to Miami-Dade Community College and Xavier University in Cincinnati.

Presidents of the affected schools expressed disbelief or chagrin at the news in the report. Rosetta Wheadon, head of State Community College, said she couldn't believe a student could go to her school for 7 years and earn only 35 hours.

Robert Threatt, president of Morris Brown, acknowledged that "to some extent, maybe we didn't monitor satisfactory progress as closely as we could have." But he said the school had tightened its standards.

Richard Rapp, financial aid officer at Boise State, said he didn't recognize the student from his school but said "there's bound to be some cases" on a campus where one-third of the 12,000 students receive financial aid.

Of the grants that were reviewed, $3.9 billion worth were administered by the Department of Education; $2.3 billion by the Veterans' Administration and $1.6 billion by the Social Security Administration. Several million college students receive such grants each year.

The GAO concluded that the VA had the best standards but said a uniform federal policy on "academic progress" is needed. Supporters of the programs responded that stricter voluntary guidelines had been approved for many universities and colleges earlier this year.

The report comes at a time when budget director David A. Stockman has proposed cutting the basic Education Department program for low- and middle-income students, the Pell grants, from the current $2.6 billion a year to $1 billion in fiscal 1983.

Jack Peltason, president of the American Council of Education, an umbrella group for higher education, said that such cutbacks would be a "revolutionary" change in the relationship between the federal government and the higher-education community. "The states and the private sector couldn't possibly pick up the slack," he said.

He fears that as a result only children from wealthy families will be able to attend top private colleges, he said.

Charles Saunders, ACE director of government relations, said the proposed cuts would slash the Pell recipient rolls by 70 percent, or 1.9 million students, and lower the income eligibility to $6,000, below the poverty level.

Peltason said that the nation's universities "do not countenance any kind of cheating, and we have moved vigorously to stop it. But if you have millions of students getting grants, there are going to be some abuses."

James Moore, a Department of Education student aid official, said voluntary standards developed by ACE to monitor academic progress would be included in regulations the department expects to issue early next month. "Then we'll have to burn a few institutions to make them know we're serious," he said.

Moore said that if department auditors found students receiving aid in violation of the academic-progress standards, their schools would be forced to pay back the grant money. "There will be a few public hangings," he said.

Actress Elizabeth Taylor appears with her husband, Sen. John Warner, R-Va., in New York in June, following her performance in the Broadway revival of "The Little Foxes." The couple has announced its decision to separate after five years of marriage.

Liz Taylor, John Warner reveal legal separation

By DOLORES BARCLAY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — "The sun came out and smiled on us," Elizabeth Taylor said on the day of her marriage to Sen. John Warner on a hilltop at his Virginia farm five years ago.

But the skies have darkened and what long had been rumored was made official Monday — the oft-married movie queen and her Republican husband had agreed to a legal separation.

"Each party accepts this change in their relationship with sadness, but with no bitterness between them," Miss Taylor's spokeswoman Chen Sam said. A divorce was not immediately being considered.

Irene Ford, a spokeswoman for Warner in Washington, said the 54-year-old senator will "spend some time over the holidays with Mrs. Warner.... It's not like they won't see each other again."

Earlier this year the Warners sought retraction of a National Enquirer article that said their marriage was "crumbling."

Miss Taylor, 49, had been married six times before marrying Warner, a youthful-looking Washingtonian who was divorced from Pittsburgh heiress Catherine Mellon in 1973. The film star's marriages became an issue in Warner's Senate campaign.

"It's nobody's concern," Miss Taylor said in an interview with The Associated Press at the time.

"I think it's fairly obvious why I was married. As strange as it may sound, I am a very moral woman. I was taught by my parents that if you fall in love, if you want to have a love affair, you get married. I guess I'm very old-fashioned."

Eight months later, Liz was in divorce court, tearfully complaining that Nicky was more interested in gambling than in her.

She was 19 when she married 39-year-old Michael Wilding, the British actor. They had two sons, Michael Jr., and Christopher Edward.

Miss Taylor was single again 4½ years later. This time, she attracted the flamboyant film producer, Michael Todd — also 20 years her senior. They had a daughter, Elizabeth Frances. Little more than a year after their marriage, Todd was killed in a plane crash.

Six months after his death, Miss Taylor began seeing singer Eddie Fisher, who was best man at Todd's wedding.

Miss Taylor, who had embraced Judaism, married Fisher a few hours after his divorce from actress Debbie Reynolds became final. The Fishers moved to London and Miss Taylor began work on "Cleopatra."

She fell in love with her leading man, British actor Richard Burton. He became her fifth husband in 1964. She was 32; he was 38. They divorced and then remarried — each other.

Miss Taylor met the multimillionare Warner a few months after a brief romance with Iran Ambassador Ardeshir Zahedi, according to a recent biography by Kitty Kelley.

Warner, former navy secretary and director of the Bicentennial Commission, flew to Vienna to visit Miss Taylor while she was shooting the film "A Little Night Music" in October 1976.

At their Dec. 4, 1976 wedding at Warner's estate near Middleburg, Va., Warner slipped a ruby, diamond and sapphire ring on her finger. She had given him two cows and a bull as an engagement present.

Miss Taylor stayed on the campaign with her husband. He won the election by a razor-thin margin. Miss Taylor rarely involved herself in politics, saying, "it's John's vote (in the Senate) that's going to count.... My opinion of issues is of very little importance."

To roles of senator's wife and gentlewoman farmer she recently added another — Broadway star, as the movie queen opened in the hit revival "The Little Foxes" earlier this year. She is now starring in the Los Angeles production of the show. In November, she made a guest appearance on the television soap opera "General Hospital."

'Star Wars' composer signs contract for two more years with Boston Pops

Williams

BOSTON (AP) — "Star Wars" composer John Williams, who succeeded Arthur Fiedler as conductor of the Boston Pops, says he has signed a new two-year contract with the orchestra.

"My first two seasons with the Boston Pops have been periods of great musical satisfaction for me," Williams, who took over after Fiedler's death two years ago, said Monday. "With the full sense of the history of this unique institution, one works with the feeling that we are building toward a future which will be as bright as that glorious past has been."

He is the 19th conductor of the Boston Pops, which is part of the Boston Symphony Orhcestra. The Pops became world famous under the direction of Fiedler, who was conductor for 50 years.

In addition to "Star Wars," Williams composed the scores for "Jaws" and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

Byrne's aides, cabinet members, other statehouse employees and their children, as well as 30 children from the nearby Mount Carmel Guild Day Care Center, were invited to the annual party Monday.

The identity of Santa Claus was not disclosed, but Senate President Joseph Merlino was notably absent from the proceedings.

For Byrne, Santa said, there will be "a helicopter under his tree. We wouldn't want him to be unable to move around the state as a private citizen."

Kean's gift was that "Senator Merlino won't be around next year to make life difficult for him," Santa said.

Merlino, a Democrat, served during the gubernatorial campaign as deputy campaign manager for Kean's opponent, Democrat Rep. James Florio, and often criticized Kean. He will be leaving office Jan. 12.

SEATTLE (AP) — Morris II, the successor to that quintessentially finicky star of cat food commercials, boasts the same feisty personality and humble origins as his predecessor, his trainer says.

Morris, who whirls through supermarket promotions and cocktail parties for cat food buyers on his business trips with trainer Bob Martwick, was in Seattle this week to promote a new line of cat food.

Morris has the run of the house at Martwick's Chicago estate, eats once a day and sleeps "anywhere he wants," the trainer said.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Alcohol can cause Antabuse reaction

Dear Dr. Solomon: The way I understand it, if a person taking Antabuse tablets drinks alcohol, he gets sick. This teaches him not to drink. The other day I had a drink while taking an antibiotic, and I began to sweat and vomit. Is it possible the antibiotic acted like Antabuse and made me sick when I had a drink? — Sal, Hutchinson, Kan.

Dear Sal: A number of drugs have been known to produce an Antabuse-type reaction in people who drink alcohol; therefore, it is certainly possible that you experienced such a reaction when you drank alcohol while taking an antibiotic. If you plan to drink while on medication, it would be a good idea to ask your doctor about any possible reactions.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been told that I need an operation for a hernia, and the doctor has given me the choice of having it done in a hospital or as an outpatient. If I don't go into the hospital, I'll save quite a bit of money, as I don't have hospitalization insurance, and I sure could use it for other things besides an operation. But I don't want to be used as a guinea pig in some experiment.

Dear Arthur: As you've probably heard many times, treatment has to be tailored to the individual needs of each patient. In general, however, I can tell you that hernia repair performed on an outpatient basis is not an experimental procedure. With some surgeons, in fact, doing the operation in a hospital is the exception rather than the rule.

Dr. Latham Flanagan, a surgeon in Eugene, Ore., reports that he chooses to do the operation under local anesthesia on an outpatient basis about 90 percent of the time. He says the patients tolerate the procedure well, and it is at least as safe and free of complications as when the operation is done under general anesthesia in a hospital.

There may be specific reasons why you do not fall within this 90 percent; for example, Dr. Flanagan will not operate on an outpatient basis on someone who is very obese. But you don't have to be afraid that oupatient hernia repair is an experimental procedure.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Although it is true that a recent article in a distinguished medical journal expressed the opinion that "the tuberculin test is no longer appropriate as a screening procedure," I know of no recognized tuberculosis expert who does not advocate the use of the tuberculin skin test to screen persons with a high risk of having tuberculosis.

Millions of Americans have a positive tuberculin skin test. In the absence of chest X-ray findings or other evidence of disease, this test indicates the presence of organisms which can, in a small number of people, produce disease in later life. To prevent the development of tuberculosis, such individuals should take preventive therapy or receive periodic evaluation by their physicians. Clifford H. Cole, M.D., M.P.H., Director, Community Tuberculosis Control Service, Jacksonville, Florida.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Would you please comment on the use of trampolines in school? My son goes to a college where a trampoline is available on an optional basis during gym classes. It seems to me that using a trampoline is asking for trouble, but I wonder if I'm not being overly concerned about a problem that doesn't exist. — Mr. T.O., Sacramento

Dear Mr. O.: Apparently it's not using trampolines, but misusing them, that gives rise to trouble. A few years ago, the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) called for a ban on the use of trampolines in schools, claiming they were responsible for a number of serious injuries. Now the AAP suggests that trampolines can be used, but with certain safeguards.

Of course there is no guarantee that the use of any equipment, or participation in any athletic activity, will not lead to injury. But the evidence is that most serious trampoline-related injuries are caused by attempted somersaults, and are not an inherent part of the equipment.

A committee headed by Dr. Kenneth S. Clarke, of the University of Illinois in Urbana, has recommended a ban on somersaults and the institution of additional precautions, rather than an outright ban on the equipment. The AAP has adopted the committee's recommendations; it advises that trampolines not be used in general physical education classes, that somersaults be attempted only by advanced students, and that trained supervisors always be present when the equipment is in use.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D, 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

British Telecom starts technology 'revolution'

By MERRILL BROWN
The Washington Post

LONDON — The British government, pressed to revitalize sagging industry, is placing heavy emphasis on developing a telecommunications business that is competitive despite being government-controlled.

The first step in the process took place two months ago with the birth of British Telecom, which separated the government's telephone company from the Post Office. "We are going through an extraordinarily revolutionary situation here," Sir George Jefferson, former head of British Aviation and now chairman of British Telecom, said in a recent interview.

The spinoff is the first major product of the the British Telecommunications Act, which officials, particularly Kenneth Baker, the Industry Department Minister of Information Technology, are calling "the most important industrial measure" enacted by the government.

But despite the enthusiasm for the venture, BT seems caught in the web that tangles much of this nation's business: the uncertainty that surrounds the relationship of a government-owned company with the private sector. Although the telephone organization is being asked to compete in world markets, it is having difficulty getting the unprecedented authority to raise funds from non-governmental sources.

There are certain parallels between the telecommunications revolutions in Britain and the United States. Both revolutions are driven by technological developments that permit the linking of private computers via satellites in what are already competitive businesses. Both involve the awakening of sleepy but enormous organizations — in the United States, American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and in the United Kingdom, the British Post Office.

The policies of the Federal Communications Commission over the last dozen years or so have been designed to permit AT&T into new, unregulated markets, such as the burgeoning data processing field, while at the same time opening AT&T's historic monopolies, such as the telephone-equipment and long-distance-service fields, to competition.

The British program has two goals: one is to bring competition into the sales of telephones, telex machines, common switchboard and call-switching devices. The second is to permit other companies to use the nation's telephone network — the world's fourth largest — for a variety of computer services.

Historically, most of British Telecom's equipment was purchased from three firms: General Electric Co. (no relation to the U.S. company), Plessey, and Standard Telephone and Cables (an International Telephone & Telegraph subsidiary). The act allows other firms to compete for the $300 million to $400 million subscriber market there, the world's third largest. At least one U.S. firm, General Telephone & Electronics, is seeking a piece of that business.

The problem with the system, for people who want to sell products in competition with the British telephone company, is that they must receive approval from the complex bureaucracies of the British Standards Institution and the British Electronic-Technical Approval Board. Until those groups finish their work, BT is in the difficult position of having to approve new products of its competitors. "We shall inevitably be criticized, but we have no intention of being laggardly," Jefferson said.

A consortium led by Cable and Wireless Ltd., the phone company that serves a number of nations formerly part of the British empire, such as Hong Kong, has proposed taking advantage of a provision in the act that allows private concerns to set up a network in Britain in competition with BT, an idea that sources say Jefferson opposes.

But the even stickier political problem involves the funding of BT's new ventures. The company, which is spending about $4 billion in capital improvements this year, already is laying the world's longest high-speed optical fiber link between here and Birmingham. Electronic mail service, run by BT, is due to start early next year and the organization is also putting together a high-speed data service.

The company is continuing to expand its Prestel "viewdata" system, an electronic data-retrieval system featuring about 700 information providers that serves some 14,500 sets in England. That venture has advanced far beyond similar but experimental efforts in the United States by AT&T and others.

But BT (which invests more money every year than any other British venture and has assets worth about $30 billion), while endorsing the competitive principle, is concerned that the competition in equipment and long-distance services will rob it of revenue it needs to maintain local telephone service, which it operates at a loss.

As a result, BT is in the uncomfortable position of seeking permission from the government to issue bonds to raise as much as a $1 billion over the next several years. "If we are to be market-responsive, we can't be stuck with government financial policy," Jefferson said. "I hope we're close to a solution." So the government entity is challenging its opponents within the Thatcher treasury, who worry about the precedent and the risk to the government.

BT's promotional literature speaks directly of the need to borrow about $200 million this year to meet its investment needs. "At present British Telecom must borrow from the government, which will not lend as much as we require," the company said in one newsletter. "We need increased flexibility, including the ability to borrow in the private money markets."

CONTRACTORS

There are over 90,000 Homeowners and Businesses who place three or more calls a year needing a contractor's services.

The consumer has three main sources to locate a contractor besides direct advertising: the yellow pages, classifieds, and word of mouth.

Starting January 1, 1982, there will be another way. The Contractors Bureau — through extensive advertising — expects to have at least 25% of these calls channeled through its office. This means Contractors Bureau will refer 1,900 contractors each week.

Contractors Bureau is now compiling files on contractors that offer services in the Midland & Odessa area. If you, the contractor, are not already listed in our files, call 686-7623.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although the government has accused oil companies of billions of dollars in overcharges, the cases are being settled for about 15 cents for each $1 of alleged violations, an Energy Department official says.

Alleged amounts of pricing violations in Energy Department accusations against oil companies have been "grossly inflated," according to Rayburn Hanzlik, head of the department's Economic Regulatory Administration.

The Energy Department has accused the 35 largest oil companies of $14 billion in pricing violations stemming from the eight years that domestic crude oil and refined products were under price controls. Overcharge cases involving small oil companies have been estimated at another $6 billion.

But during the past seven years, said Hanzlik, the government has been agreeing to out-of-court settlements calling for about 15 percent of the amount it alleged was overcharged.

When the audits were reviewed by government attorneys to determine what accusations could stand up in court, the charges were reduced substantially, he said.

Hanzlik said he hoped to finish up a backlog involving some 900 companies by Sept. 30, the date the Reagan administration has scheduled his agency to go out of existence.

Any remaining cases are slated to be forwarded to the Justice Department, where Hanzlik said lawyers would try to file court cases instead of working on the out-of-court settlements the Energy Department has been emphasizing.

The administration has come under heavy criticism from congressmen unhappy over sharp budget cuts in the enforcement program, which they allege will have the effect of granting amnesty to the oil companies.

But Hanzlik said he was determined to enforce the law with a reduced staff and not "make life easier or give anything away to these companies."

Of the companies with cases pending, the largest number — 250 — are being investigated for crude oil reselling practices. While most of the investigations have involved civil cases, Hanzlik said the crude oil reselling area was "more prone to criminal activities."

Department investigators have alleged that scores of crude oil middleman companies were formed during price controls to provide a cover so that oil companies could sell price-controlled oil for higher prices.

Feds could restrict Texas gas supply

AUSTIN — Texas consumers' access to natural gas supplies could be restricted if a federal agency turns thumbs down on a case pending before it, Texas Railroad Commissioner Mack Wallace warned recently.

The central issue of the case before the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission involving Northern Natural Gas Co. of Omaha, is the ability of intrastate pipelines to obtain excess gas supplies from the interstate market for resale to Texas customers.

Wallace, in a statement filed with the FERC, urged the agency to adopt a policy which encourages, without penalty, access by intrastate pipelines to short-term excess gas supplies which may exist in the interstate market.

Wallace said he is "deeply concerned" that an adverse FERC decision in the Northern case "may further impede the abiligty of Texas intrastate pipelines subject to the Railroad Commission's jurisdiction to acquire additional gas supplies for Texans."

For the past two years, Wallace has sponsored positions adopted by the Railroad Commission which call for actions to be taken to prepare the state to respond during periods of natural gas shortages, should they arise.

"These actions were made necessary because of federal price controls perpetuated by the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 (NGPA) and administrative policies which forced Texans to pay more for natural gas, while at the same time restricting their access to adequate supplies," Wallace said.

"This nation should have learned its lesson from the experience of the old Federal Power Commission — for wherever the writ of the FPC ran, so ran shortage," he said.

Wallace, the senior member of the Railroad Commission, noted that prior to the passage of the NGPA, Texas and other producing states permitted a free market system for gas produced, sold, and consumed within the state.

By contrast, he said, the federal government cosntrolled and regulated the price of gas produced within a state but sold outside the state.

The net result of those differing policies, Wallace said, was a dual market in which absence of regulation placed the intrastate pipelines at an advantage to compete with interstate pipelines for a sufficient supply of natural gas.

He said the enactment of the NGPA, which Congress passed to negate the intrastates' natural gas supply advantage, has gone far afield from equalizing interstate/intrastate access to natural gas supplies.

The Russians were there, too

A world class event has to have international participation to be worthy of its status. In this regard the World Oil and Gas Show in Dallas last week, did qualify as a world class event.

There were exhibitors from Canada, Italy, and, rather surprisingly, from the U.S.S.R. — which didn't set well with a few who attended the show, considering recent events in Poland.

T.D. Mamatsashvili, and electrical engineer from Soviet Georgia, seemed to be the spokesman for the group — representatives of the Soviet firm V/O Licensintorg. (Other members of the party were less talkative and more reserved.)

Mamatsashvili said the firm is the international trade representative of a number of Soviet inventors and industrial associations. Licensintorg sells licenses for its constituents, which give persons outside the U.S.S.R. the right to use technologies developed and patented in the Soviet Union.

There are now 37 licenses in force in the United States, Mamatsashvili said. They cover a wide variety of technolgies. "We can help you in any field," he said.

Licensintorg hopes to expand its business in the United States, Mamatsashvili said. It now has "big business" in Europe and Japan.

Some of Licensintorg's technology is of interest to the oil industry. One thing the firm had to offer was a licnese to use certain technology employed in deep drilling. According to a crudely done pamplet on the technique, "The disclosed drilling method has been intensively tested under actual drilling conditions with the range of depths from 400 to 11,000 m and under operating temperatures up to 480 K."

In addition to selling technologies, Mamatsashvili said, the Soviet firm also purchases the rights to foreign technologies. Techniques developed by a number of large American businesses are now being used in the U.S.S.R. as a result of Licenintorg's activities.

Mamatsashvile said that although he is an electrical engineer, he had been impressed by some of the mechanical devices he had seen at the World Oil and Gas Show, and that when his group returned to Moscow they would likely recommend the purchase of some of the items.

The Queen is ready for business

By PAUL DEAN
The Los Angeles Times

LONG BEACH, Calif. — There's a new bustle to the Queen Mary. It could be another coronation. it might also be no more than a splashy requiem for a deadbeat. Yet to all who have reluctantly accepted seediness and makeshift as all there will ever be to this vessel...

Superstructure paint, the first coat in 10 years and the 111th layer in her lifetime, is a bright, squinting white. Shipfitters are recaulking and repegging decks and sanding teak before buffing. Gangway dodgers have been replaced by taut, new, orange canvas. From stem to stern there's the sweet reek of spar varnish.

Personnel. A gold-braided and uniformed captain, the liner's 34th skipper, has been appointed.

Restaurants. The Capstan coffee shop (were colonial hash browns ever served aboard the Queen Mary at sea?) has been darkened and will be demolished, to be replaced by a swimming pool. In remaining shipboard restaurants, Europeans schooled at Maxim's and the Ritz in Paris are overseeing meals that will be created, not merely prepared.

Entertainment. Watch for the return of big bands and ballroom groups and a singing trio close to the Andrews Sisters.

The intention, say the new operators of the Queen Mary, is to relaunch the ship as an experience, not simply a place to visit and sense frustration over what could be; package stays will offer a cruise to nowhere and gaiety at sea with none of the seasickness.

Such work and resolve have been in quiet effect since September. That's when the Wrather Corp. of Beverly Hills, Calif., diversified owners of commercial contrasts from the Disneyland Hotel to world rights to Lassie and the Lone Ranger, signed a 40-year lease (on a rental scale ascending from a minimum $600,000 a year) to operate the Queen Mary, its Mary's Gate Village and surrounding 45 acres. Within the corporation, however, a more important piece of paper has been circulated among Wrather executives and supervisors. It is known as "That Famous Memorandum."

Now hear this, ordered President Jack Wrather, veteran of a dozen trans-Atlantic crossings aboard the Queen Mary in her prime. The sole intent of the company's work, he said, is to restore this ship to the style and elegance of the 1930s.

"We — myself and the three kids — had been to Disneyland and Knott's Berry Farm but hadn't done the Queen Mary. I'd heard all the horror stories and the lunch was crummy. But the woods (paneling) were fascinating and the tour was interesting."

Of greater fascination and interest to Stevens, 51, Long Beach-born and a former career Army officer medically discharged into the hotel business after the Korean War, was that Long Beach was projecting a $2.5-million loss for the Queen Mary in 1981. Further, Long Beach Harbor Department was again considering selling, leasing or scrapping its red, black and white elephant.

Stevens contacted Wrather. They telephoned Long Beach officials. In not much more time than the Queen Mary used to take on its round trip between Southampton and New York, existing leases had been bought out by the city, the Long Beach-Wrather proposal had cleared the California Lands Commission and Wrather Corp. was commanding the liner's bridge.

September and October became landmark months. Wrather netted $251,000 after lease payments from Queen Mary operations. It may well, believes Stevens, be the first time anybody has made a profit on the ship since it was brought to Long Beach for refitting in 1967.

In the past, Queen Mary operations have wallowed beneath numerous commands; one master lessee, one sub lessee for the hotel operation, another for the food concessions and others for tour and museum sections. Too many cooks. With Wrather, all operations, with automatic consolidation of accounting, marketing, promotion, security, purchasing and other departments, have been housed within one hull with a subsequent and massive reduction in overheads.

Now, says Stevens, comes the big work, with Wrather as visionary, Stevens as executor and Bob Liljenwall, the company's marketing expert, as executive implementor.

Their scheme is vast. The Queen Mary will not be expected to sink or float alone. She will become a portion of what is being drafted as Port Adventure, a total experience (Liljenwall's constant reference) subdivided into land, sea and air attractions.

Sea, obviously, is the Queen Mary, and also blueprints for a marina and maybe purchases of classic yachts to be converted into "floatels."

Land is elevation and expansion of the quality of Mary's Gate Village, a new hotel and other plans that Wrather officials say are too tentative for early announcement.

And the air will be represented by shipside display of the late Howard Hughes' legacy, his eight-engine flying boat, the Spruce Goose, another world phenomenon after 34 years in seclusion prior to last year's transfer to the Aero Club of Southern California.

Costs are as huge as the project. Wrather says it will spend $10 million on major, not just cosmetic, surgery for the Queen Mary. A budget of $9 million has been estimated to hangar and display the Spruce Goose. The marina will gobble up more than $40 million.

Stevens — who describes himself as an ambitious specialist in reclaiming projects that no other companies want to fool with — believes that Wrather constitutes a final reprieve for the Queen Mary.

Stevens takes a diametric view of the vessel.

"I'm not romantically involved with this ship," he admits. "But I am challenged. I want it to win. Yet it doesn't make much difference if it is the Queen Mary or the Titanic."

John W. Gregory just has to be, must always have been, a salt-blooded aristocrat in command of glamorous liners.

The uniform, black and braided and bemedaled and topped by a cap of gold leaves and gilt badge, fits as though this man's form has never worn a sportshirt and slacks.

Yet John W. Gregory, it must be noted, is no more a sea dog than Happy, the spaniel-terrier mutt who trails his heels as this 34th captain of the Queen Mary does rounds of deck and dining salon.

His skipper's suit came from Quartermaster's, a Long Beach uniform supplier. The cap badge — after formal clearance to wear it had been requested — was a gift from Cunard. Gregory's maritime career hasn't extended much beyond watching RMS Queen Mary — propelled by gravity and a bottle of Australian wine swung by HRH Queen Mary — slide into the Clyde for her 1935 launching.

Yet a landlubbery life matters little to what Gregory does today. For the Queen Mary, 46, is beached and retired, as is its new captain, 70. Gregory needs no weather eye, celestial navigation skills nor masters ticket. The Queen Mary requires only a uniformed pretender with the patience of a minister, the bearing of a military officer, the salesmanship of a chamber of commerce official and the soup-to-nuts skills of a hotel manager.

Gregory was ordained in 1951 by the Church of Divine Power. He is a retired Air Force reserve officer. And he has directed affairs for a Chamber of Commerce in Southern California and august hotels in Europe and the United States.

You Know It's Worth $2,500 To Become One.

The only thing stopping a lot of good truckers from becoming owner/operators is the tractor cost. That's why Aero-Mayflower developed a new tractor lease program. It's a way for owner/operators to get started. All it takes to begin is $2,500. As an owner/operator with Mayflower you'll get:

1. 56% of the line haul ($560 out of every $1,000.)
2. If the fuel goes up, so does your fuel surcharge.
3. Training (if you need it) at our expense.
4. Your own business with a very successful company behind you.

We'd like to tell you more. Call 1-800-428-1220 (in INDIANA call 1-800-382-1212) between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Eastern Standard Time.
