Residents divided on election

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Early-morning reactions to Saturday's tax rollbacks in Ector County showed that residents remain sharply divided on the tax-cutting question.

While several persons had strong opinions for and against the rollback, some polled Monday were unsure what the rollback will mean to them and to the two entities that must limit their effective tax rates to 8 percent above the previous year.

"It isn't going to help anyone that much," said Elsie Hail of 408 Seminole. Hail pointed out that oil companies, which pay 45 percent of the tax roll (down from 65 percent), stand to profit the most from the rollback.

"I felt that it was something that needed to be done," said Carolyn Hunter of 4021 Kermit Highway. "Maybe it should have been done sooner." This was the first year the school district and county were subject to rollback provisions set by the new property tax code.

"I'd hate to see anybody else lose their jobs," said Mrs. Mark Cowart of 4425 Esmond. A mother of two, Mrs. Cowart wondered about the effect on her children's education.

"It might hurt them down the road," she said.

"Where were these people that are complaining when they redid the appraisals," she said. "That's when they should have been complaining."

New appraisal of property by the Ector County Central Appraisal District — also the product of the new tax code — caused individual property values to double in many cases.

Marion Rutledge of 4512 W. 11th called the 65-percent victory a "good thing."

"It showed them to tighten up in their money spending and see where it's going," he said.

On the other side of the issue were the Salmons of 119 Santa Rita in Odessa. "We voted against it," said Tommy Salmon. "We were very much against it.

"We felt like there was not enough of a savings for the individual taxpayer and it would be detrimental to the county and school — particularly the school district," said Salmon, "We were very disappointed."

Mrs. J.W. Tyler of 2615 Beechwood said "it was needed."

One person who asked not to be named said, "I voted, but I don't know why."

Apparently unsure of the effect of the rollbacks, this person who voted for the rollback said, "I don't know what it means."

Because she worked 16 hours Saturday, Connie Hunt of 301 Patterson said she didn't see the outcome."

County Commissioners plan to begin another round of budget hearings this week to find cuts that must total about $880,000, after slicing $1.86 million from their present year's budget to give them a cushion against deficit spending and replenish cash reserves.

The school district is not affected until its next budget year, but will need to cut about $2.2 million at that time to keep its tax rate below the 8-percent ceiling set by voters approving the rollbacks.

Going out

Attorney General William French Smith leaves his Washington residence this morning. He told President Reagan last Wednesday of his intention to resign. Reagan is expected to make a formal announcement today.

Meese expected to be named as attorney general

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential Counselor Edwin Meese III is expected to be named to replace Attorney General William French Smith, who is resigning after conducting the most wholesale reshaping of Justice Department policy in decades.

Administration sources, who spoke on condition they not be named, said Reagan was expected to announce today that the 66-year-old attorney general was the sixth member of his Cabinet to leave and might name a successor at the same time.

A White House source said Reagan probably would nominate Meese, a former deputy district attorney from California who served Reagan as chief of staff when he was governor there. Meese, 52, has been one of Reagan's top three White House aides, concentrating on domestic policy and advocating tough law-and-order measures.

Smith, a multimillionaire corporate lawyer who has served Reagan for many years as his personal attorney and financial and political adviser, told the president of his decision during a private meeting Wednesday in the Oval Office, the sources said.

They said Smith was not pressured to leave and Reagan told Smith during the meeting that the Cabinet post was his as long as he wanted it. But Smith simply felt that after three years in office he had accomplished his major goals and it was time to go, they added.

One source said that Reagan's anticipated re-election campaign played a role in Smith's decision. The source noted that Smith had been active behind the scenes in every Reagan campaign and told the president he wanted to play the same role again, but felt it would be inappropriate if he remained as attorney general.

Rather than taking a formal campaign post, Smith was expected to return to his Los Angeles law firm, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher.

He has agreed to remain until a successor is confirmed, the sources said. They added that Deputy Attorney General Edward Schmults has often told associates he would leave whenever Smith did.

Most of Smith's associates at the department were as surprised by his departure as longtime department observers had been by the breadth of policy changes he implemented there.

A novice in public office, Smith nevertheless implemented major shifts in civil rights, antitrust and criminal enforcement policies.

Among the changes in which he played a key role were:

—The appointment of the first woman, Sandra Day O'Connor, to the Supreme Court. Sources said this move reflected Smith's influence with Reagan, because Meese was advocating that a man be chosen.

—Bringing the FBI for the first time into drug enforcement, a move previous administrations had considered but shied away from.

—Legislation overturning a 100-year-old ban on military aid to civilian law enforcement. He brought the military into tracking planes and ships smuggling cocaine and marijuana from South America.

Midland, Odessa unemployment rates fall

By JULIE FAUBEL
Business-Energy Writer

December's unemployment rate fell in Midland and Odessa as the labor force grew in both cities.

Midland's unemployment rate was 5.0 percent compared to 5.2 percent in November and 4.6 percent in December 1982 according to figures released by this morning by the Texas Employment Commission.

Odessa's unemployment rate was 6.9 percent in December compared to 7.5 percent in November and 6.7 percent one year ago.

Both cities fell under the national average of 8.0 percent and the state average of 7.1 percent. Midland ranked fourth in the state while Odessa ranked 12th. The lowest unemployment in the state was recorded in Bryan-College Station, with 3.2 percent. Laredo continues to lead the state with the highest unemployment of 22 percent.

San Angelo reported an unemployment rate of 5.5 percent which ranked it sixth in the state, tied with Waco. El Paso's unemployment was 11.3 percent in December.

Midland's civilian labor force in December was 70,400 — up 1,100 from November and up 6,800 from December 1982. Odessa reported a total labor force in December of 75,500 — up 800 from November and up 4,000 from one year ago. Paul Adams, TEC labor market analyst for Midland and Odessa, said the growth was due to seasonal hiring and a real increase in hiring by manufacturing and oil-related companies in the area.

Ed Miller, TEC-Midland manager, said, "In December, people took temporary jobs for the Christmas season and for inventory. In addition, there were projects which had to be started before the end of the year, since it's the end of most businesses' fiscal year. All this caused an increase in our employment."

Miller was pleased with the drop in the unemployment rate and said he "would like to see it drop further."

"It's (5 percent unemployment rate) is probably the best we've had all year, since December of 1982, I believe." Miller said, "I think we'll see a slight increase in unemployment for January for season and weather reasons.

"We have to look historically at the oil industry. The first quarter is notoriously down. But, as far as drilling is concerned in the Permian Basin, we seem to be drilling quite a bit. It looks like, if everything stays the way it is, perhaps we'll see an upswing in the oil industry around the first of April," Miller said.

New tools diagnose stroke

EDITOR'S NOTE — In laboratories across the United States and elsewhere, researchers are gradually bringing humanity's most feared diseases under control. In Part One of a 10-part series, AP science writer Paul Raeburn deals with the steady — and sometimes remarkable — progress that has been made.

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Writer

It can begin with a slight numbness in the hand or arm. Seconds later, the tingling may spread to the face. Speech may be slurred, vision may dim.

In as little as a few minutes, the odd symptoms may vanish. But they shouldn't be forgotten. They may be a warning that a stroke is on the way.

In the last few decades, doctors who were once almost powerless to predict, prevent or treat strokes have learned the importance of these attacks as stroke warning signs.

Quiet Victories:
Stroke

Roughly a third of the 500,000 Americans who have strokes every year have had previous brief attacks, according to the American Heart Association.

These attacks are only one of the stroke risk factors that have now been identified. (High blood pressure, obesity, smoking and stress are among the others.)

Fortunately, as doctors have refined their ability to predict who will get strokes, they have also made tremendous improvements in their ability to pinpoint the damage caused by a stroke and find its cause.

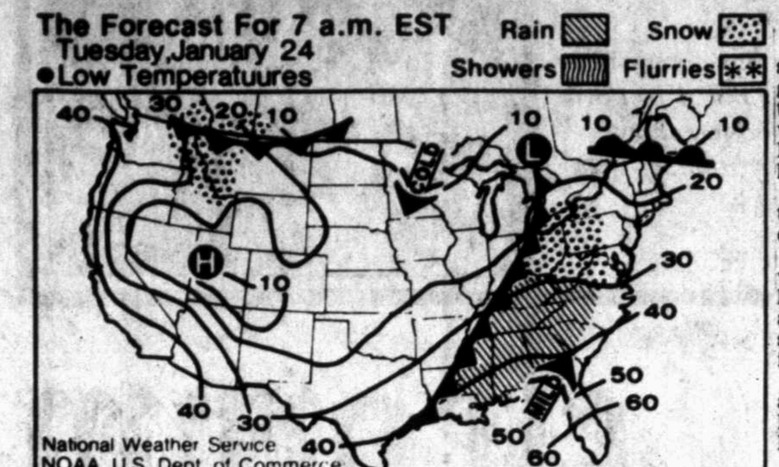

"We now have technology to investigate the patient and new treatments," says Dr. Louis Caplan, chairman of the department at the Michael Reese Hospital in Chicago. "Ten years ago, we didn't have either — we didn't have the treatments, we didn't have the technology...It's a virtual revolution."

The major reason for the change, says Caplan, has been the advent of dramatic new tools for diagnosing strokes. Foremost among them is the CT scan (or CAT scan), a sophisticated, computerized X-ray machine that produces much better images of the brain than ordinary X-rays.

"It's changed a lot of people's ideas," Caplan says. "For example, a lot of smaller strokes which people thought were due to lack of blood flow now turn out to be due to small hemorrhages."

The National Weather Service forecasts snow for Tuesday for parts of Idaho, Montana, Ohio, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, New York and Virginia. Rain is forecast for parts of Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, Tennessee, South Carolina and Virginia.

Warmer temperatures forecast

Fair skies and warmer temperatures will continue through Tuesday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The mercury will drop into the middle 20s tonight, but should reach into the middle 50s once again Tuesday.

Winds will be from the northwest at less than 10 mph tonight, increasing to 5-15 mph Tuesday.

Sunday's high of 56 was 27 degrees cooler than the record high of 83, set for that date in 1950. The overnight low of 29 was 22 degrees warmer than the record low, set in 1966.

Congress' top issues Marines, deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional session that seems likely to generate more election year smoke than genuine legislation is opening with the presence of U.S. Marines in Lebanon and the federal deficit likely to be top issues on the agenda.

The House and Senate return today following a nine-week recess, one of the longest in recent history.

There is general agreement that with a presidential campaign, 435 House members seeking re-election and 33 Senate seats up for grabs, the second session of the 98th Congress is likely to be a short one.

"It should be a very quiet year around here," said Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

"We had politics in '83 but we're sure going to get a bigger dose in '84," said House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois.

In the Democrat-controlled House, opponents of President Reagan's Middle East policy are expected to push a new deadline for the withdrawal of the 1,600 Marines now dug in around the Beirut airport.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. compromised with Reagan last September and Congress approved an 18-month War Powers Resolution that would bring Marines home by April 1985.

But that was before the truck-bomb explosion that killed 241 U.S. servicemen in Beirut in October, and the political pressure for an early withdrawal has been building during the recess.

O'Neill is reviewing his own support of the April 1985 date. One House Democratic source who requested anonymity predicted that the president would probably find a way to pull out the U.S. troops before the House acts.

Whatever the House does, the Republican-led Senate is likely to support the president, especially in an election year.

The first round of hearings on Lebanon are scheduled in a House foreign affairs subcommittee on Jan. 26, the day after Reagan delivers his third State of the Union address.

The congressional debate on the economy will also begin early, with testimony by Treasury Secretary Donald Regan before the House-Senate Economic Committee on Thursday.

Both Republican and Democrats are worried about the impact of $200 billion deficits on the economy and their own political fortunes.

But the two recommended prescriptions for slowing the flow of red ink — deeper budget cuts and higher taxes — are both political anathema in the election year.

Whether there will be any real action on the deficit is "iffy," said Sen. Lawton Chiles, senior Democrat on the Senate Budget Committee. "Election years are always difficult and this one has a lot of players. It may be more of a caretaker year."

Republican Leader Michel said, "I see a lot of rhetoric and talk (about deficits.) Eventually Congress has to address itself to it. But unfortunately, it gets so political — once you ask members, 'you tell me where to cut (spending).'"

Reagan is expected to ask Congress this year to give him authority to veto specific items in spending bills, while leaving the rest of legislation untouched. But this so-called "line-item veto" power is perceived by most Democrats as a way for Reagan to spread the blame to the House and Senate for the deficits, and is unlikely to be approved.

There are pending proposals to cut spending by $10.3 billion and raise taxes by $8 billion. The Senate Finance Committee headed by Dole will look at a bigger, three-year $150 billion package of spending cuts and tax increases in February.

Whatever the election year Congress does or does not do in the long run, little is expected in the first month except for Reagan's appearance in the House chamber to lay out his agenda for 1984.

There is one pending foreign policy issue on which both Houses will likely move quickly. Reagan vetoed a requirement that U.S. aid to El Salvador be tied to progress in human rights.

With the pressure building in El Salvador for an end to death squads and other right wing terrorism, that requirement will likely be approved again by an overwhelming margin and with the support of Republican leaders, including Michel.

Nation gets relief from low temperatures

By The Associated Press

The nation got relief today from a dome of cold air that dealt some cities their lowest temperatures ever known, but a new winter headache developed with freezing rain icing highways in many areas from Dallas to Chicago.

At least 43 deaths in 14 states were blamed on the weather as the Canadian-born cold wave moved slowly from the Rockies to the Atlantic coast last week and drifted off to sea Sunday. In its wake it left at least 100 record low temperatures.

The victims included nine people on a Montana school bus who died in a collision with a truck, and a New York State man who police said froze to death when he was locked outside a friend's residence overnight while intoxicated.

Temperatures in the Northeast were 20 to 40 degrees warmer this morning than they had been Sunday morning. Washington hit minus 18 Sunday morning but was at 20 degrees today. In Concord, N.H., it went from minus 33 Sunday to minus 4 today.

As the temperature in Idaho rose to 20 degrees Sunday, ice on the choked Salmon and Lemhi rivers began breaking up and rescue workers said residents of 127 evacuated homes could begin returning as floodwaters that reached 6 feet began to subside.

"Right now we're pretty much in command of the situation — for a change," said Dick Smith of the search and rescue unit in Salmon, where the rivers began overflowing late last week in temperatures down to 25 below zero.

But in the South and East, even a rapid rise in temperatures that had fallen Sunday to between zero and 10 degrees in Alabama and Mississippi offered little to cheer about as a moist air flow from the Gulf of Mexico turned to freezing rain early today.

Firemen survey the scene of a school bus-fuel tanker truck collision in which nine people were killed and 17 injured Saturday night on U.S Highway 2, about 22 miles southeast of West Glacier, Mont. The school bus was carrying a high school wrestling team.

Numerous traffic accidents were reported and some roads were closed around Kansas City, Mo., early today, and travelers' advisories warned of treacherous morning driving conditions in north central Texas, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Iowa, western Tennessee and western Kentucky. Light snow fell over Illinois, prompting warnings to motorists there.

The air felt warmer Sunday in many places, but only in comparison to Saturday when 50 cities had record lows. More than two dozen low-temperature records were broken Friday and again early Sunday.

One of 50 firefighters battling a blaze early Sunday at a vacant house in Carroll County, Maryland, suffered frostbite, said Gamber Community Fire Co. Chief John Warner.

"Someone said it was minus seven" when fire units arrived, Warner said. "While the fire was burning it was nice. While (the cleanup) dragged on, the firefighters took the cold."

Sunday's low temperature as reported by the National Weather Service was 36 below zero at Canaan, Vt., and Old Forge, N.Y.

Mountains of ice rose from the gorge of Niagara Falls, halfway up the 167-foot American side, as spray froze. A state park police officer said the ice mountains are common in January and February but "for this time of year they're unusually high," although they did not threaten to freeze the falls."

"It's the coldest it's ever been in this century" in Massachusetts, said David Parrett, National Weather Service observer in the western Massachusetts town of Chester, which hit an unofficial national low of 40 below zero, along with Guilford, Maine.

Record lows were reported Sunday in New York, Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey, Virginia, Delaware, West Virginia, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi.

In western Pennsylvania, the cold air system still had enough punch to refrigerate the town of Ridgway to 31 below. Pittsburgh had 7 below, an improvement on Saturday's 13 below.

And at Elkins, W.Va., well up in the Appalachians, Sunday's record of 23 below equaled Saturday's record. That was the town's second coldest January reading — the coldest was 24 below on Friday.

In New York City, Jack Deacy, spokesman for the city's Human Resources Administration, said the 6,239 single men and women sought relief in 18 shelters for the homeless Saturday night, the largest such number "since the '30s, when the city was housing 30,000-40,000 people a night."

The 43 weather-related deaths last week included four blamed on the cold in New York, two deaths each in Wisconsin, Delaware and Pennsylvania, and one each in Colorado, Missouri, Kentucky, North Dakota and Illinois.

Traffic accidents on icy highways claimed nine in a Montana truck-school bus collision, five lives in New Jersey, four in Pennsylvania, three in Delaware, two in Maryland and one in Iowa.

In Pennsylvania, two men died of cardiac arrest after shoveling snow and a third was killed in a sledding accident. In Nebraska a man was found dead from asphyxiation after he tried to heat his bathroom with a charcoal grill.

Blind man trains own seeing-eye dog

POMONA, Calif. (AP) — Henry Eschelman knows just how he wants his seeing-eye dog to perform and he's certain he'll get it from Lea, even if training the young German shepherd himself means running smack into a telephone pole now and then.

Although he says he's been told that the blind cannot train their own dogs, the 59-year-old Eschelman — who lost his sight at age 3½ — has already schooled one German shepherd and is now on his second.

Lea graduated at the top of her obedience training class and has already learned to walk at Eschelman's fast clip and to lie quietly at his feet when they board a bus.

She can also negotiate an obstacle course consisting of a bus bench, fire hydrant and three telephone poles near Eschelman's mobile home.

"I know exactly what I want out of a dog," explains Eschelman, 59, who also trained Lea's late predecessor, a German shepherd named named Pepper.

Because of her youth, Lea is sometimes distracted and wanders off the sidewalk to sniff the grass. Eschelman says he simply tugs her harness firmly to put her back on course.

Fortunately, "I've always had a good sense of direction," Eschelman said, adding that he is also relying on a cane and his acute sense of hearing while Lea is learning.

On their first venture downtown, he recalls, Lea crossed an intersection diagonally, led Eschelman head on into a telephone pole and bumped him into a parked car.

Eschelman retraced their steps until she learned how to cross streets properly. He also pushed her hard against the telephone pole and automobile to show her that they could inflict pain.

Authorities don't condone his undertaking, Eschelman said, adding that "not all blind people would be capable trainers. In fact, I don't profess to be a dog trainer — simply do it for my own satisfaction."

Meese expected to be named attorney general

—The most extensive revision of immigration laws in three decades, which even his opponents concede is likely to pass Congress this year.

—A halt to Justice Department advocacy of mandatory busing to desegregate schools and of hiring goals to remedy job discrimination, which four previous administrations of both parties had endorsed. But Smith was not able to convince the Supreme Court to overturn the legal precedents supporting those remedies.

—The relaxation of rules against corporate mergers, which had not been changed in 15 years.

—A presidential order, blocked by Congress for the time being, instituting lifetime censorship for the writings and speeches of former government officials with access to the most sensitive intelligence and a major broadening of the use of the polygraph, or lie detector, machine in leak investigations.

During Smith's three-year tenure, the Justice Department prospered in a time of extraordinary federal belt-tightening. The department's budget was increased by 50 percent, a larger percentage increase than even the Pentagon received from Reagan and the Congress.

His policies on school segregation and job discrimination infuriated black civil rights groups and women's organizations. The anti-trust policies implemented by his assistant, William F. Baxter, angered some consumer groups and Democrats in Congress.

The informal leader of a group of California millionaires, known as the "Kitchen Cabinet," who guided Reagan's transition from Hollywood to politics, Smith also drew fire for his personal finances and patrician style.

His regular appearances at parties given by administration figures drew critical comments from some career department attorneys who opposed his policies.

He was attacked for his extensive foreign travel, which was unprecedented for an attorney general. His foreign trips, with his wife along at government expense, included a 1982 trip around the world that cost more than $600,000. But Smith said the trips were necessary to convince foreign officials to help stop drug smuggling into this country.

In 1982, Democrats, including Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, criticized his investment in two oil and gas drilling tax shelters and his acceptance of a $50,000 severance payment when he left the board of directors of the Jorgensen Steel Co. to become attorney general.

Smith diffused that controversy with his surprise decision to return the $50,000 and to limit his tax deductions in the two ventures to the amount of his cash investment.

New tools being used to diagnose stroke

A stroke, a disruption in blood supply to the brain, can be caused by either the blockage of an artery or the rupture of a blood vessel, he explains. Use of the CT scan to determine which has occurred is critical; treatment that would save a life in one case could be fatal in the other.

But the CT scan is only the first of a new generation of scanning devices that are offering better and better pictures of the brain and the blood vessels that nourish it.

The PET scanner (for positron emission tomography) measures the movement of radioactive substances injected into the body, and gives much better information than the CT scan about which brain tissue is already damaged or dead.

That can help doctors determine whether to do an operation. "If you knew it was dead tissue, you would be foolish to do it," Caplan says.

The problem with the PET scan is the machinery it requires is extremely expensive, and thus will never be available outside specialized research centers. But an even newer device, the SPECT scanner (single photon emission computerized tomography) is less expensive and may be just as good, Caplan says.

Another improvement is an X-ray technique called digital subtraction angiography, or DSA. It uses a computer to refine images of the carotid arteries into the neck, among the most frequent sites of blockage leading to stroke.

"With all this technology, you may now be able to learn a lot about the individual's blood flow and blood vessels that wasn't obtainable 10 years ago," Caplan says.

Better medical treatment of stroke has already begun, and one of the most interesting drugs in use is one found in every medicine cabinet — aspirin.

"It clearly has a protective effect in the population that have had a warning attack," says Dr. Oscar Reinmuth, chairman of the neurology department at the University of Pittsburgh.

On the other hand, he says, "it's a little unclear whether people who have never had a warning should take it" to prevent stroke. Many doctors are, however, beginning to use it that way, and Reinmuth agrees.

A sensible recommendation, he says, is to take two aspirin twice a day. "I think I'd tell some people to treat it like a vitamin pill and keep on taking it," he says.

Other promising drugs are being tested, Reinmuth said, and new surgical treatments are appearing. One operation, to correct narrowing of the carotid artery and forestall possible blockage, was done on 73,000 patients in this country in 1981, Reinmuth said.

That worries him. "Although it's a marvelous therapy," he says, "it's clearly being overdone."

While research continues, the incidence of strokes in this country, like that of heart disease, is dropping. Doctors are not sure why. The decline began as far back as the turn of the century, but became more pronounced in 1968 and again in 1972. Now there is a 4 percent drop every year, Reinmuth says.

Most researchers see a bright future for the diagnosis, treatment and prevention of stroke. "There is a lot of excitement," says Caplan. "It's not reached the point where we have a cure for every condition," he says — but it's getting there.

Trobaugh attended Clemson College in South Carolina from 1937 to 1939, and continued his education at the University of Southern California, graduating in 1948 with a bachelor of engineering degree. He did graduate work at USC from 1949 to 1950.

He served in the U.S. Army Air Corps during World War II from 1941 to 1946. Trobaugh saw 18 months of combat duty in the European Theatre from 1943 to 1945. Awards and decorations include the Silver Star, Distinguished Flying Cross, Air Medal with six Oak Leaf Clusters and Presidential Unit Citation with Cluster.

He had lived in Midland since 1950 where he worked as an engineer. Trobaugh was a former partner in BTA, and an independent oil producer.

He was married Aug. 21, 1950, to Melba Irene Yearian of Williamsburg, Iowa.

His work in civic organizations included the Advisory Board of the 1980 Objectives for Midland, president of United Way board of directors in 1979, three terms as president of Midland Metropolitan YMCA board of directors and a board member since 1967, past director and board chairman for High Sky Girls Ranch, president of Human Relations Council in 1972-73, past director and board chairman for First Christian Church and director of Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Trobaugh also held directorships in PBCP Services, Inc., First National Bank of Midland, Magnatex Corporation and Midland College Foundation Board. He served as an adviser to Trinity Towers.

Survivors include his wife, Melba; three daughters, Georgia Kay Trobaugh, Sidney Virginia Trobaugh and Susan Ann Trobaugh, all of Midland; a son, Thomas Allen Trobaugh of Midland; and a sister, Virginia Trobaugh Deaver of Jonesboro, Ga.

The family has asked that memorials be directed to one's favorite charity.

Shultz says U.S., Soviets having 'good discussions'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz says the United States and the Soviet Union are talking informally about arms control and could soon be negotiating face-to-face over reduction of conventional forces.

"We have pretty good discussions going on now on the hot line," Shultz said Sunday without pinpointing the subjects. "That's a form of arms agreement."

Shultz also said the United States is agreeable to a Soviet proposal that the estranged superpowers resume their suspended talks aimed at reducing the level of conventional military forces in Eastern and Western Europe.

And Shultz said rising terrorism in the Middle East is "increasingly originating in Iran...with the acquiescence of Syria." He named Iran, Syria, the Soviet Union and Libya as nations that have encouraged and aided terrorist groups as part of their strategy for gaining influence in the Middle East.

The secretary said on ABC-TV's "This Week with David Brinkley," that the Soviets have suggested resumption of the negotiations on March 16 in Vienna.

Shultz offered no similar hope regarding the stalled talks over strategic and intermediate nuclear weapons, but he said Americans should "take heart" because the Reagan administration's military buildup has lessened the threat of nuclear war.

However, Shultz also moved away from the long-standing administration scenario that placement of U.S. cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Western Europe would pressure the Soviets into serious talks about limiting the spread of intermediate-range nuclear devices.

"I don't know whether they'll come back or not," he said. "That's something they have to determine...Our position is to be realistic about what they are doing, to be strong in our own capabilities and to be ready to engage in reasonable negotiation."

Asked to characterize U.S.-Soviet relations, he replied: "There are some positive things. There are some negative things. It's kind of a mixed picture."

Nevertheless, Shultz said, "the American people should take heart" because a stronger United States is in a better negotiating position.

Questioned about Lebanon, Shultz indicated that the Reagan administration has no plans to withdraw U.S. Marines anytime soon.

"It's important to show the world that we have resolve, but we also have to pay attention primarily to our objectives there," he said.

Trusted midwife helps deliver more than 2,000 children

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — The women who come to Emma Porter are black, white and Hispanic. Some are poor, and some just want to have their babies at home.

Although their backgrounds may vary and their religions may differ, these mothers who deliver at home with Mrs. Porter's help all have one thing in common: they trust her.

At 66, Mrs. Porter is a semi-retired midwife, but when the need arises she's willing to make another trip to another home where a woman is gripping the bedpost preparing to give birth.

She's delivered more than 2,000 babies that way, making the trip to the new parent's home, doing the job and, sometimes, even having her picture made with the newborn afterwards.

This midwife who has been practicing since 1959 in the East Texas area describes herself as real patient and says she knows what she's doing.

And if a problem occurs during a birth, she's the first to admit it and quickly seeks help.

Closing her sweater more firmly around her small-framed body, she leans her head back and recalls the deliveries she's made in her 24-year vocation.

"From 1959 until about 1980, I delivered in the boundary of 2,000 babies," she said. "Since then, I've been slowing down.

"I delivered more in Longview and Big Sandy than I have anywhere else," she said.

"Well, I deliver different people, colored and white and Mexicans and all different denominations of people. They come pick me up and then bring me back home afterwards. They've been doing that ever since I started," said the Panola County native who moved to Longview in 1934 after she married.

"They hear about me through their friends and through the medical center behind the hospital (Good Shepherd Medical Center)," Mrs. Porter said.

"I learned a long time ago if you didn't force it and let — as old people say — nature take its course, it will work out a whole lot better than all this forcing and being in such a big hurry," she said. "I never did try to force.

"That's part of the reason I don't have .... well, God was in the plan .... why I don't have a son, but the doctor pulled my baby's head out. That affected his neck. He didn't say it was a broken neck, but I know my son didn't live," she said shaking her head slowly.

"At first, they were coming to me because they knew me and they knew what I could do and couldn't do and what I would do and what I wouldn't do.

Responding to the question 'What won't you do?,' she laughed. "When a case gets too rough, I go with my patient to the emergency room," she answered. "I call there first and then we be on our way as soon as I hang up the phone," she said.

Emma Porter, 66, a semi-retired midwife, sits in her Longview, Texas home and discusses the more than 2,000 babies she says she has brought into the world. She's been practicing since 1959.

That happened only once, she recalled.

"The afterbirth was coming first. And I didn't have tools at the home to turn it around and do the right thing, and the best thing to do was to take her where they did have them — the hospital," she said.

As a midwife, she cannot perform an episiotomy on women giving birth.

But she doesn't believe this is necessary when nature is allowed to take its course.

"I can't give medication for pain either," she said. "I allow them to have a swallow of water to keep their throat from being so dry, and that usually helps," she said.

Recalling some of the births she attended, Mrs. Porter laughed and said, "I remember those little girls — I call them little women — who lived next door to me. They could really go on and get it over with. Five sisters of them. All five had children, and I delivered all of them. Out of those children, only one had to be rushed to the emergency room, and he was premature.

THE BETTER HALF

"Aunt Harriet, I'm going to be 5 next week. Do you think I'm over the hill?"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, January 24, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actor Ernest Borgnine, singer Neil Diamond, "Family Feud" producer Mark Goodson, evangelist Oral Roberts and football's Monte Clark share your birthday. Also born on this date: Pulitzer Prize-winning author Edith Wharton. Family relationships grow more rewarding now. Let a friend play matchmaker, but keep your own eye peeled too. A child who asks questions should be told the truth, especially if his heritage is involved. New business opportunities give you a positive attitude. You should be in much better financial shape by this time next year. Be careful not to take a long-time associate for granted. Her support is valuable.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your thoughts turn to romance just when you need all of your energies to win a business struggle. Concentration is the key to success. Organization makes a project go like clockwork.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take a survey before moving forward with a new idea or project. A windfall reduces your worries about the future. Do what you know is right. Financial matters continue to require your personal attention.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Go ahead and return to the scene of your youth. Mate will respect your direct approach to a problem that is affecting the entire family. Encourage a child to study.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may have mixed feelings about romance. Let mate know that you need to have a clearer picture of what the future holds. Reclaim what belongs to you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A period of great productivity lies ahead. Meet deadlines on time. An idea will have little value unless it can be applied in a practical way. Refuse to make promises you cannot keep.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Artists find benefactors in unusual places. A phone call changes your whole outlook. Business soars. Postpone making a decision if the other party seems in too much of a hurry.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The arrival of a check or letter boosts your morale. You may have to work overtime on a business project to meet a deadline. Call home so loved ones are prepared.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A new field holds great financial promise. Do everything you can to prepare yourself for a promotion. Conversations with experts give you the information you need. Make a decision stick.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Those buying or selling property today are in luck. Romance is the happiest it has been in some time. A financial situation takes a turn for the better.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A humanitarian proposal gains widespread support when you get behind it. Make a firm decision about a major work project. You are right to be curious about changes in your company.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Things may not be what they seem. Reserve judgment untill the accused has had his say. A social function could throw you into the arms of someone you love.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A close associate's new enthusiasm cheers you. You will both profit from working as a team. An upbeat phone call solves a romantic crisis. Volunteer to help an older person.

Networks recycling outtakes

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — Television, which specializes in reruns, thin copies and milking the skimpiest of ideas, has found another form of recycling. Two "clip" shows featuring outtakes of mistakes and pratfalls have become network replacement shows.

Hollywood may not have an original thought in its caverns, but you must admire the shamelessness with which it borrows and varies the themes. Tonight, it's "TV Bloopers and Practical Jokes" on NBC. On Tuesday nights, it's "Foul-Ups, Bleeps and Blunders" on ABC.

These patched-together shows represent second-generation TV at its most "creative." And self-perpetuating.

"The possibilities are limitless," said Dick Clark, co-host of NBC's 'Bloopers.' "As soon as we do something wrong on one of our shows, we say let's hold it for 'Bloopers.'"

One could say these programs proved that midseason series development was light at NBC and ABC. NBC chairman Grant Tinker, whose network was not prepared for the failure of all nine new fall shows, admitted as much: "We didn't have enough product in the pipeline."

But one could also say the networks are giving audiences what they want, as they seem to revel in other people's embarrassments and humiliations. Last week's ratings, reflecting the shows' debut performances two weeks ago, had "Bloopers" the No. 5 show and "Blunders" the 13th-rated program.

"We stumbled into a way of doing variety shows in the 1980s without singing and tap-dancing," said Clark. "Our show is not planned to improve your life. We know there's no socially redeeming value in it."

"Bloopers" does have its funny moments, and it's much better than the ABC version, proving there are many degrees of schlock.

First of all, the NBC program uses two production companies experienced in putting together these tape jobs. Carson Productions did the nostalgic and humorous commercial specials and the Dick Clark Co. did blooper shows.

Second, Clark and Ed McMahon, Johnny Carson's human laughtrack, are thoroughly professional and compatible as co-hosts. "We're not the star, the show's the star," McMahon said.

On ABC, the odd couple of Don Rickles and Steve Lawrence doesn't have the same chemistry, and the humor is forced.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q6 ♡AQ96 ◇K105 ♣AJ87
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—You have a very good hand and game or better is a near certainty. But which game? Since partner might have only three hearts for his raise, three no trump or five clubs might be a superior contract. The best way to explore the possibilities is to bid three clubs. After you have found a major-suit fit, a return to partner's minor by you is an unconditional force. Partner's next bid will give you a better picture of his hand.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ93 ♡AK1092 ◇K85 ♣3
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond. What action do you take?

A.—There would be no problem if your minor-suit holdings were reversed—the takeout double would be a clearcut action. On this distribution, it is close between a takeout double and an overcall of one heart. We favor the double. Should partner respond two clubs, you are just about good enough to bid two hearts. The overcall risks losing a spade fit.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A105 ♡AKJ63 ◇Q5 ♣A83
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	Pass	2 ♣

What action do you take?

A.—Obviously, you have the best hand at the table, but what would you like to do? Remember, partner did not have enough to act over your opening bid. If you take any action now, you run the risk of an expensive penalty double should West have a heart stack. Pass, and hope the opponents get into trouble.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J109765 ♡A98 ◇K10 ♣A7
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Although your hand might not be impressive in terms of high-card points, your cards are all prime controls and the auction has developed favorably. We like a jump to six spades, but we don't mind if you choose some other route, as long as you have no intention of stopping short of slam.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQJ6 ♡7 ◇K93 ♣AK1065
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—Despite your plethora of high cards, you have no idea where you want to play the hand. Therefore, this hand does not qualify for a jump shift. For all you know, game might be out of reach because of a misfit. Bid one spade. Unless partner can take some action over a nonforcing rebid, you are unlikely to miss game.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠7 ♡953 ◇J5 ♣AKQ10652
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
3 ♠	3 ♠	Dble	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Partner has heard your opening bid and said that, despite the fact that you have promised no defensive values, he expects to defeat three spades. Actually, you have a very good hand for him. Pass happily—you can expect a fair profit.

Almost justice

We've all heard that the standard for a salesman is the ability to be able to sell an icebox — to an Eskimo.

Now comes word from Bahrain, an island country in the Persian Gulf in southwest Asia, that a British company has won a contract to export sand to — you guessed it — Saudi Arabia!

Now it is true that Saudi Arabia is 95 percent desert and a lot of people may be wondering why in the world the Arabs would want even more. But, says the news report, the contract is valid. The sand that the Saudis are buying will be used in concrete for a new vault at a bank in Jedah.

The Gulf Daily News in Manama, Bahrain, was quick to point out that the imported sand is finer than domestic Saudi sand and does not contain impurities found in desert sand.

For Americans there has to be poetic justice in that announcement. After all, for much of a decade we suffered at the hands of OPEC oil barons and watched as their pricing antics created havoc within our economy.

Two facts dampen our enthusiasm for the revelation. First, Americans aren't the ones selling the "iceboxes" to these "Eskimos." Secondly, the vault the Saudis are building undoubtedly will be filled with many American dollars.

Communist gift horse

The Red Chinese unofficially have come up with a proposal for the disposition of Hong Kong after 1997 that seems almost too good and fair to be true. Negotiations between the British, whose lease over most of the Hong Kong territory expires 13 years hence, and the colony's big Communist neighbor have been going on for more than a year and reportedly are deadlocked.

Now, however, a Peking magazine has published an article setting forth the views of a high Chinese official on Hong Kong's future which, for the moment at least, should relieve the fears of the colony's present population.

This official says that under the special administrative status which Red China envisions, Hong Kong would be permitted to continue its capitalist economic system for another half century and that current foreign investments there would be protected. Moreover, Hong Kong would be allowed to have its own legislative and judicial systems.

The willingness of the Chinese to tolerate a thriving capitalist community on their doorstep could be regarded with some suspicion. We're inclined to want to look into the mouth of any gift horse, particularly one from a society committed to communism.

But, perhaps they are pragmatic enough to see the value of access to Hong Kong's banks and financial markets — barring, of course, a revival of Maoism.

Another View:

Poll just fed hungry

This week John Glenn charged that a Washington Post-ABC News poll after the Democratic candidates' televised New Hampshire debate, and The Post's report of that poll on Tuesday, were "unprofessional and irresponsible." The survey in question interviewed 1,518 people, but highlighted in the report — and printed separately in table form — were the responses of 160 New Hampshire registered Democrats and registered independents who lean Democratic. Mr. Glenn got 16 percent of the votes of the 103 of them who didn't watch the debate, but only 5 percent of the votes of the 57 of them who did. A later, regularly scheduled ABC-Post poll, with a larger sample, showed Mr. Glenn with 22 percent nationally — a significantly better result.

Was the special poll a sufficient basis for saying that Mr. Glenn lost support as a result of the debate? No. The Post's Barry Sussman was careful to say only that Mr. Glenn "apparently did himself the least good," adding in the next paragraph that "the surveys are small and therefore provide only rough gauges of sentiment." The margins of error are on the order of plus or minus 6 percent; technically, it's all right to say there is a statistically meaningful difference between the two numbers. But the two integers — 16 and 5 — suggest to the untutored and fast-moving eye a degree of precision that is never present in poll results.

Moreover, the opinion that this poll is seeking to measure is wispy and evanescent. Voters' knowledge of these candidates is very limited, and their opinions are subject to vast change. The debate may turn out to be the turning point in shaping voters' responses to Mr. Glenn and other candidates. But no poll — not even one whose sample size and definitions of the primary electorate met the Glenn camp's complaints — could tell with the mathematical precision suggested by its numeric results just what the effect of the debate is. A poll at this stage is, at best, one bit of information those of us hungry to know what is going on in voters' minds can seize on. Mr. Glenn is right to point out that these figures don't prove anything at all — let alone establish that there was an exodus from his ranks in New Hampshire as a result of the debate.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

'Death squads' anti-communist

WASHINGTON — I have been investigating the Latin American "death squads," which practice politics by assassination. Not only do they belong to a subterranean network of right-wing groups that cooperate across international boundaries, but they reportedly are connected to a political "front group" that retains some respectability.

Jack Anderson

This is the word of a death squad member in Honduras — a physician by day, an assassin by night — whom I've given the pseudonym El Lobo. "Our movements are all coordinated out of Mexico by our front group," the assassin told my associate Jon Lee Anderson.

El Lobo identified the group as the Latin American Anticommunist Confederation, which is a member of the World Anticommunist League.

The league is an ultraconservative worldwide organization, founded in Taiwan in 1967. It operates in the open and holds annual conferences of its affiliated groups.

In recent years, league watchers have noted the inclusion of known neo-Nazi, white-supremacist groups in the organization. There is concern that the World Anticommunist League was taken over by fascist elements in the 1970s. El Lobo's information now gives credence to this concern.

— Its Latin affiliate, according to El Lobo, secretly bankrolls a well-known, right-wing weekly newsmagazine, Replica, based in Mexico. At the 1978 league conference in Washington, D.C., the delegation from Mexico reportedly handed out copies of Replica containing an article attacking the "Holocaust" television series as "Jewish propaganda."

— Each country's underground death squad has an unacknowledged front group to lend legitimacy to the anti-communist movement. El Lobo identified his squad's political associate as the Honduran Anticommunist Action Movement. "It takes charge of propaganda activities," he explained. "If we confirm, for example, that you are a Marxist, the movement will have posters with your photograph on them plastered on walls all over the country the next day, denouncing you as a communist traitor."

— El Lobo acknowledged that his underground death squad "receives assistance" from the Honduran armed forces. But he stressed that the aid is "unofficial, mostly training and weapons provided by sympathetic junior officers." The Honduran death squad started out as a group of right-wing graduate students at the National Autonomous University in 1979, but later expanded to include police and military men.

While his group is a mixture of civilians and military, El Lobo said that the related underground group in the industrial city of San Pedro Sula is made up entirely of police officers. "They are known simply as 'el escuadron de la muerte' (the squadron of death), and they kill common criminals," El Lobo said, "but occasionally they will do us a favor and kill communists we have fingered."

El Lobo's revelations about international coordination and the assistance of government security forces confirms what human rights groups and investigative reporters have suspected for years. In some countries, such as Guatemala, Argentina and El Salvador, official support for the death squads has been traced to top military headquarters and even presidential palaces. In Honduras, though El Lobo's group is publicly disavowed by the military, the unofficial assistance is well known to the high command.

"We have to be careful and remain clandestine," said El Lobo. "We have enemies in this country. Our victims' relatives have formed a Committee of the Families of the Disappeared Ones."

BOONDOGGLE OF THE WEEK: Ever solicitous of defense contractors' slightest wishes, the Pentagon is allowing widespread abuse of a procedural shortcut intended to help small contractors collect their payments without long delays. And the taxpayer is being shortchanged.

"Fast pay procurements" let contractors collect for goods worth less than $25,000 by simply submitting their invoices. They don't have to prove that the goods were satisfactory — or even that they were delivered.

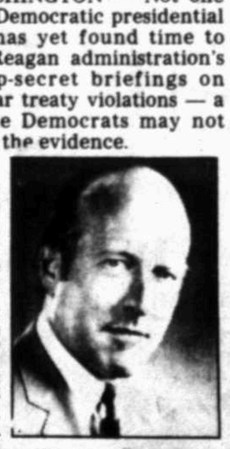

The predictable result was reported by the Defense Department's inspector general: "We estimated that $24 million of materiel purchased by DOD under the fast pay procedures ... was not received, and the receipt of another $103 million of material was uncertain."

INSIDE REPORT:

Hopeful Democrats hear no evil

WASHINGTON — Not one of the eight Democratic presidential candidates has yet found time to accept the Reagan administration's offer of top-secret briefings on Soviet nuclear treaty violations — a sign that the Democrats may not want to hear the evidence.

Rowland Evans

That would preserve the campaign line that the sorry state of U.S.-Soviet relations is the fault of President Reagan, not the Kremlin. If front-runner Walter F. Mondale and the other Democrats cannot find the time to accept the White House briefing offer, they can disagree with the charge of treaty violations.

Robert Novak

Reagan is sending arms control administrator Kenneth Adelman to Plains, Ga., next week to brief former president Jimmy Carter. The other two former presidents, Richard Nixon and Gerald R. Ford, also will be briefed.

STRAUSS FOR MONDALE?

Supporters of Walter F. Mondale expect former Democratic national chairman Robert S. Strauss to make his long-awaited presidential endorsement of their man before the New Hampshire primary Feb. 28, but he may wait a while longer.

The reason: New Hampshire Democratic chairman George Bruno has invited Strauss to be moderator when all eight Democratic presidential hopefuls appear at the state party dinner in Manchester Feb. 24. Strauss would like to accept and believes he could hardly do so as the supporter of one candidate.

But there is not much doubt that Strauss, once considered a likely backer of Sen. John Glenn, eventually will support Mondale. In private, he was particularly enthusiastic about the former vice president's performance in the Jan. 15 debate at Dartmouth.

SHULTZ'S CHEMICAL SOLO

When Secretary of State George Shultz in Stockholm proposed a ban on all chemical warfare weapons, it came as a surprise not only to his frequent adversaries in the Pentagon but to upper-level officials in his own State Department.

"George was flying solo," one well-placed administration official told us. Shultz did not submit his chemical warfare proposal to staff scrutiny that would have been certain to produce opposition and perhaps shoot it down before it ever got to Stockholm.

A footnote: Shultz's efforts at rekindling U.S.-Soviet detente also were reflected in the original State Department version of President Reagan's Jan. 16 peace speech. Only half a sentence dealt with Soviet arms treaty violations, but that was expanded somewhat by the White House in the final version.

A LADY V.P.?

New Hampshire Democratic leaders want Rep. Lindy Boggs of Louisiana to appear with the eight presidential hopefuls at the state party dinner four days before the presidential primary there — kicking off her unannounced vice presidential drive.

Mrs. Boggs, widow of House Majority Leader Hale Boggs and permanent chairman of the 1976 Democratic National Convention, is known to be interested in getting on the national ticket. But she could face competition from two fellow House members: Reps. Geraldine Ferraro of New York and Patricia Schroeder of Colorado.

Even if none wins the vice presidential nomination, one or more may well be on the final list of the eventual Democratic presidential nominee. So much campaign talk about a female running mate has set the candidates to searching for possibilities.

JOHN ANDERSON'S DECLINE

The latest dose of bad medicine was administered to independent presidential candidate John Anderson last week when his last paid staffer, field operations director Jane Fowler, quit — mostly because of disillusionment over the rocky course of the unannounced campaign.

The former Illinois Republican congressman's efforts in Ohio to qualify his National Unity Party for that state's November ballot appear to have fallen short. The same is true in California, another big state ticketed last fall by Anderson as a must for ballot position in the election.

With his formal candidacy expected to be announced soon, he is running far behind his 1980 pace, when he received 7 percent of the national vote. Unless he qualifies for ballot position in at least 10 states, Anderson may not be able to pick up the $5 million in federal campaign funds for which he is eligible as a result of his 1980 race.

CHARLEY REESE

Morality keeps world honorable

One of the basic premises of the 20th Century is that morality is nothing but superstition and is of no practical use. Everything is relative, including morality. That's wrong. That's why the 20th Century is in a shambles.

Charley Reese

The old moral values like honor, truth, courage, and honesty came from a source wiser than these idiots who pose as intellectuals these days. And they are as practical and useful as a hammer and a saw.

I'll give you an example. The United States Government acted dishonorably toward the Republic of China on Taiwan. For the sake of expediency, then President Jimmy Carter abruptly and unilaterally abrogated a mutual defense treaty, broke diplomatic relations, and ousted the ROC representatives without even a courteous farewell. This was what the Communist Chinese demanded and he caved in to their demands.

So what, the moderns sneer. Honor doesn't matter. In the world, only size and selfish-interest matter.

Well, let's see about that. Shed for a moment the abstract images we form in our minds and look at the world as it really is: lumps of dirt and rock separated by water. The lumps are inhabited by people and divided up, more or less by chance, into nations. The people who rule the nations, however, are human beings exactly like you and me. A ruler may have the title of king or commissar or prime minister but his brain and body work exactly the same way ours do.

And how do you and I regard the matter of honor? If a neighbor or a fellow worker lies and breaks his promises, do we just go on ignoring that? If he treats us shabbily just to make a brownie point with the foreman, do we keep on extending the same friendship? Of course not. We adjust our relationship accordingly. We don't respect the person. We don't trust him. We don't confide in him. We may even figure that if he uses us, we'll use him.

Well, the human beings sitting in exalted positions of power operate the same way. They have eyes and ears. They see the conflict between the United States and the Soviet Union. They are interested in survival. And to a small nation survival usually means picking the winner in a contest between giants.

When they see an American president do a 180-degree turn and dump an ally like Taiwan to appease an enemy, they draw the very logical conclusion that it is a risky business to trust their destinies to the word of the United States.

Now observe the Soviet Union. It may not be a pleasant country and you pay a terrible price if you are its ally. But, if you are its ally, you can count on it. The Soviet Union said it would defend socialism and it does. The Soviet Union said it would support wars of national liberation and it does. When a Soviet-allied regime is threatened, the Soviets don't worry about public opinion. They send in the tanks. The Soviets never stopped supporting North Vietnam. We stopped supporting South Vietnam. They never even considered dumping Fidel Castro during detente just to curry favor with us.

During the Carter Administration, the United States decided three long-time allies were no longer "worthy" of our support. Two of those countries, Iran and Nicaragua, are now in the hands of people extremely hostile to the United States. The third, Taiwan, is hanging on to the hope that the American people will repair the damage done by Carter and continued by Ronald Reagan.

You see, it doesn't matter a hoot whether nations like us. Most of them never will. But if does matter that they respect us and believe that if we make a commitment, we will keep it. It is important they see that we are led by honorable men.

Otherwise, we will end up like the Lone Ranger. You probably know the story. The masked rider and his Indian friend, Tonto, rode up out of a ravine and there on the plain in front of them were 3,000 hostile Indians. The Lone Ranger turns to Tonto and says, "What shall we do?"

And Tonto replies, "What do you mean, we, white man?"

The old morality is the only morality. Lying, treachery, cowardice, and opportunism may become fashionable, but they will never become moral — or practical.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Jan. 23, the 23rd day of 1984. There are 343 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 23, 1968, North Korea seized the U.S. Navy ship Pueblo, holding its 83 crewmen as spies.

On this date:

In 1845, Congress decided that all national elections would be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November.

In 1932, New York Gov. Franklin Roosevelt announced his candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination.

In 1964, the 24th Amendment to the Constitution was ratified, eliminating the poll tax in federal elections.

And in 1973, President Richard Nixon announced that an accord had been reached to end the Vietnam War.

Ten years ago: President Nixon asked for greater taxation of oil companies' foreign profits, and proposed a two-year freeze on auto emissions standards.

One year ago: The nuclear-powered Soviet satellite Cosmos 1402 plunged through the atmosphere and fell harmlessly over the Indian Ocean.

Paper struggle focuses on groups' ideology

WASHINGTON (AP) — The fight over "Circular A-122: Cost Principles for Non-profit Organizations" is one of those nearly invisible free-for-alls that occur in Washington, rarely making the newspapers, bewildering to bystanders, dragging on for years.

It has been going on ever since the Reagan administration took office. It caused a great outpouring of correspondence to government, with some 31,800 people writing in favor of revising Circular A-122 and another 16,500 writing in opposition.

All this fuss over an issue that, to most people, may seem minor — an attempt by the Office of Management and Budget to revise the Carter administration's Circular A-122, which limits the lobbying activities of non-profit organizations that get federal funds.

The episode reveals much about government: its dependence on outside contractors to do what Congress says it should do, and the difficulty of an administration of whatever ideology in reshaping the government into its own image.

The government pays non-profit groups to do many of the things that the government decides should be done.

They run child abuse shelters, Headstart programs, Meals on Wheels, programs for drug rehabilitation, birth control, the handicapped, ex-convicts. The sheltering of thousands of Asian refugees has been largely handled, with government largess, by Catholic charities.

No one is sure how much the government spends on grants and contracts to non-profit groups.

Independent Sector, an umbrella organization that represents 550 foundations, corporations and voluntary organizations, estimates that between 30,000 and 40,000 groups get between $2 billion and $3 billion in grants from the government.

Howard Phillips, president of the Conservative Caucus, says the figure is closer to 100,000 organizations sharing "a $40 billion honeypot."

Many of the groups get non-government contributions, too, which they are free to spend as they please. Many use these private funds to pay for lobbying, especially on legislation affecting their areas of expertise.

Existing regulations prohibit these groups from spending federal funds to pay for their lobbying activities, and they don't argue with that.

But they argued aplenty against the Reagan administration's proposed new version of A-122.

They said it would have prohibited virtually all communication between them and elected government officials and would compel them to reveal information of no concern to the government — where they get the non-government money they spend on lobbying and how they spend it.

At a hearing, Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas, chairman of the House Government Operations Committee, called the proposal "one of the most blatant attacks on the First Amendment rights witnessed in this nation in a long time." Republican Frank Horton, N.Y., called it "positively outrageous."

The committee issued a report under this title: "Administration Proposal Threatens First Amendment Rights of Government Grantees and Contractors."

But conservative groups campaigned for the revision. Conservative Digest magazine devoted two issues to the subject.

It printed form postcards to be sent to the Office of ManagemenuM and Budget, which started: "I am very upset about the funding of liberal groups and projects with my tax dollars..." The forms accounted for much of the mail the agency received.

In the face of the outcry from Congress and non-profit groups, including business groups like the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the Reagan administration retreated and agreed to modify its proposal.

The revision was published last November. Then it was the conservatives' turn to express anguish.

Phillips called the revision "a monumentally blunderous policy sell-out."

The conservatives argue that liberal organizations use federal money to lobby Congress for more money for liberal causes. When President Reagan took office, conservative groups adopted the battlecry: "Defund the Left."

Teachers mobilize for Mondale; Cranston courts freeze-backers

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Teachers and labor are mobilizing to try to deliver the nation's first presidential primary for Walter F. Mondale. Sen. Alan Cranston is hoping to counterbalance that with support from the state's nuclear freeze movement.

Other Democratic presidential candidates are counting on their own cadres of supporters to seek out votes in the Feb. 28 New Hampshire primary.

Sen. Gary Hart buses students into the state to ring doorbells and former Gov. Reubin Askew of Florida is using his Sunshine Brigade.

"We have got members living in every town, village and hamlet in this state," said Mel Myler, executive director of the National Education Association, the politically potent teachers union.

Four years ago, the NEA was an important force supporting the Carter-Mondale ticket against the nomination challenge of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

This year the NEA is firmly backing Mondale for the nomination and, according to Myler, has identified 600 volunteers in the state — "twice as many as four years ago."

The teachers are veteran participants in primary campaigns. The AFL-CIO, neutral in past nomination fights, broke that precedent last year and endorsed Mondale.

WHEN MONDALE supporters met around the state recently to choose the individuals who will be the former vice president's convention delegates if he wins the primary, the state AFL-CIO demonstrated its potential strength in this campaign.

All of the six delegates chosen in the First Congressional District caucus were either AFL-CIO union members or teachers.

Harland Eaton, president of the state labor council, said later, "We had people on buses...We chose Walter Mondale to be our candidate. We're trying to put together an organization."

With the support of the AFL-CIO and the NEA come the readily identifiable resources, the mailing lists, the computers and the telephone banks that are invaluable tools for any campaign.

What Cranston might get from the nuclear freeze movement is less certain.

The Freeze Voter Political Action Committee will not endorse a candidate in the presidential primary, but Curt Ehrenberg, chairman of the group and a Cranston delegate, said "the bulk of support" within the freeze movement is going to the California senator, who has made arms control the centerpiece of his campaign.

Ehrenberg said his group is calling voters trying to identify those for whom the freeze will be a determining issue. He estimated that number could be "between five and ten thousand, probably closer to five."

Those voters will receive information packets outlining the positions of the various candidates on arms control issues.

EHRENBERG SAID Cranston, Mondale and Hart will "come out looking very well" in the information packets. George McGovern and the Rev. Jesse Jackson also will look good, he said.

Cranston, Mondale and Hart were listed by Ehrenberg as the three seen within the freeze movement as viable candidates for the nomination, though he added that "I've been somewhat surprised by the amount of support" for Jackson.

Askew and Hart have worked hard at trying to generate organized blocks of their own.

Hart has campaigned hard for student support and had 90 young people in the state ringing doorbells on his behalf early in January. More groups of students will campaign for Hart in the weeks leading up to the primary.

Askew's Sunshine Brigade consists of volunteers from Florida who ring doorbells and work telephone banks. They include businessmen, doctors, lawyers and politicians and are patterned after the Peanut Brigade of Georgians who worked for Jimmy Carter in 1976 and 1980.

Elsewhere on the presidential campaign circuit:

— The chairman of the Iowa Democratic Party, David Nagle, assessed the outcome of a weekend forum on farm issues by saying long-shot presidential candidates McGovern and Hart improved their chances while front-runner Mondale "held his own."

Bad weather hampers search for airplane

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The pilot of a single engine plane radioed the airport at New Orleans that he was going down in the Lake Pontchartrain area early today, but bad weather was hampering a search for the aircraft, the Coast Guard said.

"We didn't find anything. The weather was rainy and drizzly," said Keith Spangler, a Coast Guard spokesman.

Spangler said a helicopter and a 41-foot boat were dispatched almost immediately after the Guard was notifed that the plane was going down at 2:15 a.m. The helicopter, however, returned to land because fog made an air search impossible. It was to be sent out again once the fog cleared, Spangler said.

Air traffic controllers at New Orleans International Airport lost the aircraft on radar after it had descended to about 400 feet, Spangler said.

Anti-satellite weapon launched

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon has announced the first airborne launching of a U.S. anti-satellite missile, saying the new weapon is necessary to keep pace with Soviet developments in the field.

The test shot, which took place Saturday over Vandenburg Air Force Base in California, had been postponed since last summer because of technical problems.

Air Force spokesman Maj. Ron Rand said the missile was fired from an F-15 fighter and no target was involved. He said the Air Force had been conducting "captive carry" tests over the past year, but that Saturday's test involved the first actual firing of the Air-Launched Miniature Vehicle Anti-Satellite.

The $4 billion U.S. system uses an 18-foot, three-stage rocket carried beneath an F-15, the Air Force's top fighter. After it is launched from an altitude of about 60,000 feet, the missile streaks toward the target with a small homing vehicle designed to destroy a satellite by high-speed impact.

The Soviet system, by contrast, involves an ASAT craft launched atop a large booster rocket. The killer vehicle goes into low orbit, maneuvers near its target and then explodes, destroying both itself and the target.

About half the 20 tests conducted by the Soviets since 1968 have been successful, according to published figures.

Pentagon officials have said that the United States must have its own effective anti-satellite missile to prevent the Soviets from posing an unanswered threat to American commercial and military satellites.

Britain's first test-tube triplets, including the world's first identical twins (boys), flank their sister at Portland Hospital in London today. They were born to Mrs. Anne Maaye, the 35-year-old wife of a Middle Eastern businessman, on Jan. 21. The girl was born first, then the twin, left, second, and finally his brother, right. Five weeks premature, the triplets were delivered at one-minute intervals by Caesarean section.

At least 60 killed in Moroccan riots

RABAT, Morocco (AP) — King Hassan II has canceled a government plan to raise food prices after bloody protest riots erupted in the northern region along Morocco's Mediterranean coast.

There was no government announcement on casualties, but diplomatic sources said today that at least 60 civilians were killed in the unrest last week. They said Spanish press reported that as many as 200 people had been killed in the Mediterranean coastal region, a former Spanish colony, were "greatly exaggerated."

Hassan, in a speech broadcast over national television and radio Sunday night, referred to an earlier announcement that planned price increases for food and other commodities would not affect the poorest sectors of the population.

"I ordered an inquiry to determine how many people would be exempt from the increases. When I saw the results, I decided there would be no increases in basic foodstuffs," the king said.

Tunisia's President Habib Bourguiba took a similar step earlier this month in rescinding government-ordered food price increases after more than 80 protesters were killed in riots.

Hassan said he had ordered a freeze on prices of essential food — presumably bread, cooking oil and sugar — because he found that too many Moroccans were unable to afford them. He did not refer to strong pressure from the World Bank for the government to abandon its program of food subsidies, nor indicate how long the freeze would remain in force.

The riots also were believed fueled by rumored increases in tuition fees. The government denied such increases were planned.

Hassan said the riots were caused by a coincidental overlap of interests of communists, Israelis and Iranians, who he said sought to disrupt the Islamic summit conference in Casablanca.

The three-day summit ended Thursday with an invitation to Egypt to rejoin the 45-nation Islamic movement which expelled it four years ago for making peace with Israel. Syria, Libya and other militant Arab nations bitterly opposed the move and Iran boycotted the meeting altogether.

Three groups tried separately to disrupt the summit, Hassan said:

—"The Marxist-Leninist Communists who wanted to prevent the Afghan freedom fighters from speaking of their successes against the (Soviet) invaders, and wanted to prevent the summit from expressing its solidarity with Bangladesh and Pakistan who recently had to suppress similar riots."

—"The Zionist Secret Service, whose intelligence and effectiveness are well known," was determined to prevent any move to bring back Egypt into the Islamic fold, Hassan said, because this would "greatly strengthen the basic Islamic position against Israel."

—Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and his supporters in Iran, who seek to spread "evil and godless revolution" throughout the Islamic world.

The diplomatic sources, who insisted on anonymity, discounted Hassan's theory.

"The truth is that there is some very deep-running discontent in Morocco caused by the generally declining purchasing power and the ever-growing gulf between the rich and poor," one diplomat said.

Hassan read excerpts from what he said were pro-communist and pro-Iranian pamphlets distributed in Morocco — including one which declared "Hassan is a murderer." He claimed these had sparked the rioting.

One tract allegedly inspired by Khomeini denounced Islamic nations for falling under the domination of "the great Satans, the United States and the Soviet Union."

Disarmament conference not likely to aid East-West detente

By DAVID MASON

An Analysis

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The week-old Stockholm Disarmament Conference was heralded as a setting for revival of the East-West dialogue that was stifled by a breakdown of arms talks.

The dialogue was vigorously renewed in the opening days of the conference last week, but officials and observers at the 35-nation meeting were hard-pressed to see progress toward detente.

The first priority of the conference is establishing new confidence-building measures to reduce the risk of war. Countries represented are the United States and Canada, the Soviet Union and all of Eastern and Western Europe except Albania.

During the opening days of the conference, when foreign ministers were on hand, the superpowers were the focus of attention.

The main hope of U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz and his NATO allies was that Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko would give a hint of readiness to return to the Geneva negotiations to reduce medium- and long-range nuclear missiles.

The Soviets abandoned the medium-range talks Nov. 23 after NATO began deploying new American missiles in Western Europe, and Moscow refused Dec. 8 to set a date for resuming the parallel talks on long-range missiles.

Western delegates looked for a more hopeful tone in general East-West relations.

But Gromyko, in his 27th year as foreign minister, delivered one of his most vituperative speeches, declaring that the main threat to peace is "the aggressive foreign policy of the United States." His polemic-laced speech made clear the Soviet Union has no intention of returning to the medium-range missile talks because of the NATO deployments.

West Germany buys prisoners' freedom

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — More than 200 people risked their lives to flee East Germany last year, a sharp rise over 1982. They dodged bullets, traversed mine fields and stole over the Berlin Wall.

Thousands more were "bought out" of their communist-governed homeland — at a cost of $7,000 to $21,000 each, according to a human rights group — by the West German government after negotiations with East German officials.

Others defected while on visits to the West, or made their way to West Germany through third countries.

The East German side of the 875-mile border is one of the most heavily fortified frontiers in the world. It is laced with land mines, bathed in floodlight, strung with barbed wire and patrolled by soldiers with orders to shoot escapees on sight.

Despite the dangers, a steady stream of East Germans has crossed or circumvented the frontier since Germany was separated into Soviet and Allied sectors at the end of World War II in 1945.

The number of those who risk their lives by taking dangerous routes varies from year to year. In 1982, 83 escapees fell into this category, in contrast to the record 1,842 in 1973.

"There will always be people getting out, regardless of the obstacles," said Erhard Goehl, a spokesman for the Frankfurt-based International Society for Human Rights.

In the first 11 months of 1983, 216 East Germans stole across the frontier, according to West German Interior Ministry statistics. Two more escapes were reported by West German border police in December.

Last April 5, two youths used a bow-and-arrow to shoot a cable across the Berlin Wall to rooftop accomplices on the other side. Attaching pulleys, they silently slid down the wire to the West in a glide over East German guardposts.

On Sept. 3, East German border guards fired at three escapees. Two dodged the bullets and made it across; their companion was killed.

In December, two men swam the chilly waters of the muddy Spree River that cuts Berlin in two.

Dozens more picked their way through minefields at night.

In the latest episode, six East Germans were escorted to freedom in West Berlin on Sunday, two days after they had fled into the U.S. Embassy in East Berlin and asked for political asylum. Their safe passage was negotiated by West German officials.

But most East Germans who made it to the West in 1983 arrived after years of effort, and with the approval of East Berlin's authorities.

The West German statistics show that about 11,000 East Germans resettled in West Germany last year, down from the 13,208 who arrived here in 1982.

Most of last year's defectors were pensioners, political dissidents and others that the East German government either forced out or allowed to emigrate. For many, there was a hefty price for their ticket to the West, with the Bonn government paying the bill.

Last year, the West German government bought freedom for 1,034 political prisoners in East German jails, Goehl said.

Hundreds of other East Germans who were not in trouble with communist authorities were also "bought out" by Bonn. Many were citizens who repeatedly had sought permission to be reunited with relatives in the West.

Joseph Dolezal, a spokesman at Bonn's German Affairs Ministry, said the government does not disclose how many people it buys out of East Germany or how much their freedom costs.

But Goehl's watchdog agency, which monitors human rights in Eastern Europe, keeps tabs on East German political prisoners the West German government buys out of custody.

They are thought to be a "fairly small" percentage of the total number of East Germans bought out by Bonn, he said.

Since 1963, the West German government has paid East Berlin for the release of about 20,000 political prisoners, according to Goehl.

They arrive by bus, without fanfare, at transit camps in West Germany, where they are given pocket money, a West German passport and a train ticket to the German city of their choice.

Goehl said Bonn paid between $7,000 and $21,000 for each political prisoner in 1983, depending on the jailed person's profession, education and sentence.

Troops live it up on island

GRAND ANSE, Grenada (AP) — The beaches are inviting, the people are friendly, and the army barracks is a resort hotel.

For the 260 U.S. soldiers stationed here, duty may be better than the most extravagant promise ever dreamed up by an Army recruiter.

The last sniper attack was Nov. 21. The most recent casualty was a soldier who injured his back diving into a wave in the blue-green Caribbean Sea.

Almost as an understatement, Lt. Col. Arthur Graves, commander of U.S. forces here, observed: "As a rule, most people really enjoy it here. Anyone with any ingenuity isn't going to be bored. There are pretty decent surroundings."

When not using the beach or hotel pool, off-duty soldiers are entertained by movies or steel bands hired by the Army. Or they can go into St. George's, the capital five miles away, where their uniforms still attract hero treatment.

Michael Roberts, 10, carried an armload of fruit toward the Army barracks.

"I'm taking these to the American soldiers," he said. "They are our friends, and we want them to stay with us."

Townspeople wave as Army jeeps pass. Graves, who has been here since Dec. 1, said he knows of no incidents in which U.S. soldiers have been heckled or otherwise bothered.

Everything Redskins do, Raiders do better

Washington left without even loin cloth

From Wire Reports

TAMPA, Fla.— Everything John Riggins and the Washington Redskins were supposed to do, Marcus Allen and the Los Angeles Raiders did better. When it was over the Skins weren't even left with a loin cloth.

Riggins said he'd run roughshod over the LA defense just as he thundered through Miami's for a Super Bowl-record 166 yards a year ago. He wound up with 64 yards on 26 carries and it was Allen who ran over, through and around the Redskins for 191 yards on 20 carries. Two were five and 74 yard touchdown runs against what was billed as the NFL's stoutest rushing defense. Stout, it may be.

The result was a 38-9 embarrassment for the defending champions.

THE REDSKINS had a reputation for avoiding the mistake and cashing in on the opposition's boo-boos. But the Redskins made the errors that paved the way for the most one-sided Super Bowl win in the XVVIII history of the game.

Two turnovers resulted in sudden, demoralizing touchdowns. Derrick Jensen recovered a punt he had blocked for a touchdown in the first quarter to make it 7-0. Then with the score 14-3 and only five seconds left in the half, Jack Squirek intercepted Joe Theismann's lazy lob of a screen pass intended for Joe Washington and streaked five yards into the end zone. That made it 21-3 at half and school was out. The fat lady could be heard practicing in the background.

"We lost in every way," Washington Coach Joe Gibbs said, "It wasn't Redskins football. I think overall credit has to go to LA. They did such a great job. They rushed the ball on us. We never really got into the groove. They did a good job of pressuring us. We never really got in the groove."

"I felt we were going to play well," said Coach Tom Flores, whose Raiders committed only one harmless turnover and limited Washington's grinding relentless offense to 283 yards. "We were prepared for anthing they might do."

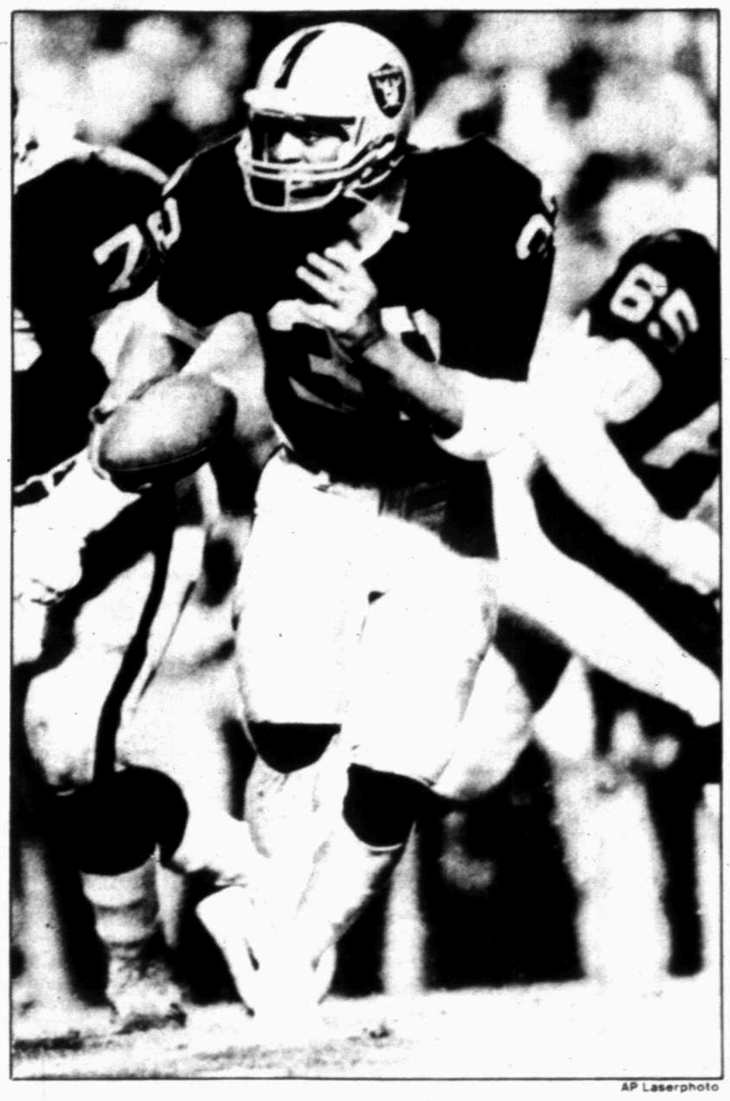

THIS WAS NEVER more evident than on the fatal, for Washington, Squirek interception. Charles Sumner, the linebacker coach, remembered the Redskins faked a long pass and pulled off a 60-yard screen pass when the two teams met during the regular season, a 37-35 Washington win.

With 12 seconds in the half, Washington sent three receivers wide to the right, an apparent long pass in the making. Instead, Theismann looked to his right, turned left and flipped a pass toward Joe Washington, pulling away from defensive end Lyle Alzado.

Squirek stepped in, caught the ball and was in the end zone in a flash.

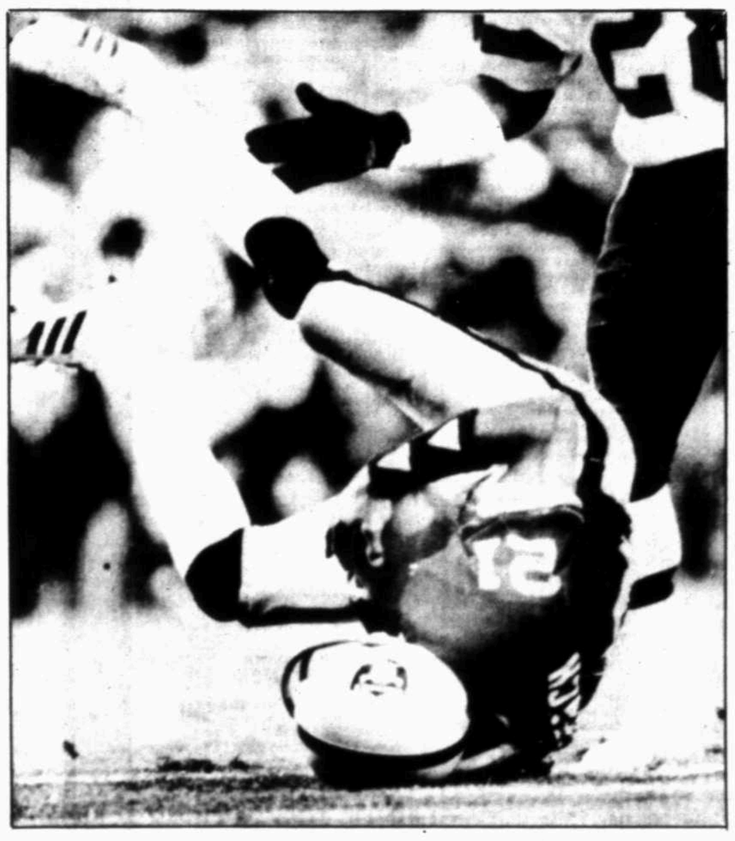

"It felt like a dream. It dawned on me when everyone started beating me in the end zone," he beamed.

Chaps to face No. 1 Howard

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING—Midland College, 4-2 in Western Junior College Conference, faces league leading Howard College, 6-0, 8 p.m. tonight in the Dorothy Garrett Coliseum and if you are wondering what kind of a task confronts the Chaparrals, listen to Amarillo College Coach Mark Nixon.

"They beat us by five, but the are awesome, easily the best team in the conference."

Nixon was just coming off a 54-52 victory over Midland College last Thursday, a game in which his team led for only two seconds. That loss makes it all the more imperative for the Chaps to do something big tonight.

Howard is 16-1 for the season. But Coach Mike Mitchell's bunch has demonstrated a mortal tendency or two in running up that record. The Hawks' lone loss was to Barton County, Kan., 83-79, at the Chap Center during the Midland College tournament back in November. Western Texas College also extended Howard to overtime before it could pull out a 70-66 victory. Also six victories have come at the expense of JVs teams of four-year colleges.

Still, that 6-0 WJCC record speaks for itself.

"OUR GAMES this week are really critical," says MC Coach Jerry Stone as he appeals for all the vocal help he can get in tonight's game. "Tonight's game with Howard is close enough so we should have good fan support at Big Spring. And we'll need all we can get."

Mitchell, although out of the league for several seasons, has a history of winners in the WJCC. While at Western Texas in Snyder, he guided the Westerners to their first National Junior College championship 10 years ago and his WTC teams dominated the league until he left for Idaho and eventually Oklahoma City University.

MIDLAND'S task will be to put a lid on Dwight Harris (25.5), the leading scorer in the WJCC, and Jerry Stroman (19.6), the No. 4 scorer. Joe Johnson, 5.7 per game, and Stroman (5.6) are the Hawks' leading rebounders.

Harris is also sixth in field goal percentage and seventh in free throw percentage.

Six-11 Teviin Binns tops the MC scorers with 16.0 a game with Jackie Phinnessee 13.7 and Brian Essary 13.5 not far behind.

MHS, Lee girls meet tonight

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

With a 5-3 District 4-5A record, the Midland High girls' basketball team can't afford anymore losses if they want to keep their already dimming playoff hopes alive.

Midland Lee, with a 7-1 record, can afford a loss and still be in control for a playoff berth, but a defeat now would do serious damage to the Rebel hopes of repeating as 4-5A champions.

Unfortunately, one of the two Midland schools must lose tonight as the Rebels and Bulldogs square off in Midland Gym at 8 p.m.

Lee trails 8-0 San Angelo in the standings, the only team to have beaten the Rebels in league play this year while Midland High and Odessa Permian are tied for third and hold the only other reasonable playoff hopes.

IN TWO previous meetings this year, the Rebels have come out on top both times, including the one that counted toward the district standings, 52-42.

"This is a real important game for us, a crucial game for us if we want to be in the playoffs," said MHS head coach Jane Young. "We know they are going to be a tough team to beat and we know we have to beat them. We have to stop them and I feel like we're as ready as we're ever going to be."

Since MHS and Lee have already played twice, there should be few secrets revealed to either team tonight.

"We know that we have to contain Denise Lanz and we know we have to contain O.J. Johnson but any time you do that you're leaving some people open that can beat you," said Lee coach Shirley Stephenson. "We hope to go and play our regular game and try and contain everybody at the same time.

"By this time of the year, we both know each other pretty well," continued Stephenson. "We know what they like to do and they know what we like to do. Both teams are going to be going at it, scratching, clawing."

"For us to beat Lee, we're going to have to have a good game from everybody," said Young. "We're going to have to have more than two scorers. We have to have Denise, OJ, Deidra (Knapp), Terez (Robinson), we have to have everybody. Lee has so many good shooters."

Lee's shooters are led by Felicia Farias with a 17.7 average, Tunya Mayberry at 12.3 and Stacy Harmon at 10.9. However, half the battle of stopping those three is keeping the remaining eight Rebels that share playing time from feeding them the ball.

"They can't shoot it if they don't get it," is one of Stephenson's favorite sayings.

The Bulldong attack is led by Lanz, 13.6 and Johnson, 12.7.

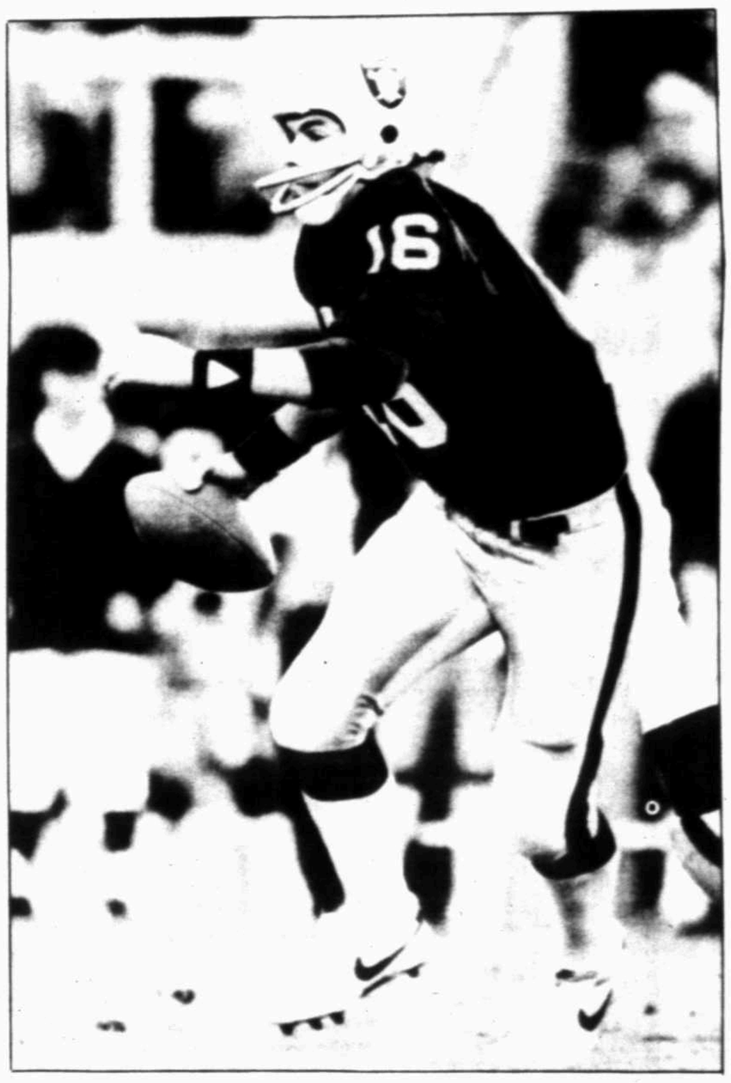

Elsewhere in the 4-5A tonight, Odessa Permian will take on Odessa High at OHS while San Angelo is at Big Spring and Abilene Cooper faces Abilene High.

TED BATTLES

A True Super Bowl classic

It was a game in the truest tradition of Super Bowls, a Super Bowl to top all Super Bowls.

I mean, you've got to go back a long way to find one that surpassed Sunday's thud in Tampa. Go back and you still won't find one and that's saying something.

In a game noted for its big buildups and bigger letdowns, this one had to be Super-Colossal. No letdown equalled this one since never before have expectations been quite so high.

Never has the anticipation been so great and the score so lopsided.

AGREEMENT was virtually unanimous before kickoff that for once the two best teams had reached the National Football League's grand climax. This was a game worth putting up with all the fabricated hype and superlatives that lead up this game.

So what happened to the Redskins on the way to Washington?

Washington played like the home team...Tampa Bay's Bucs, that is.

The team that had dominated pro football for two years with the : ¬ came out throwing. John Riggins had a cold so the Redskins strategy apparently was to wear out the Raiders' secondary with long incomplete passes. It didn't work. All it did was wear out the Washington receivers.

The Redskins played like that hadn't got in from Saturday's night on the town until just before kickoff.

Washington looked like a team that hadn't even looked at the Los Angeles game films. It may have been the most poorly prepared team ever to play the Super Bowl. If not, they were just the poorest team ever to play in the Super Bowl.

IN ANY case, the Raiders owned the Redskins in every phase of play. It was 38-9, but the Raiders were kind. They could have had two or three more touchdowns if they'd carried a grudge.

Washington had to call a time out in the first half because a cornerback forgot he was supposed to be on the field. Shortly thereafter the same cornerback was out to lunch when Cliff Branch caught two passes for most all the yardage on a 65-yard touchdown drive.

On the point after Washington's lone touchdown, the Skins again were a man short.

Washington's heralded Pigs were a feast for the wolves on the Raiders' defense.

Joe Theismann was so far off target that you began wondering who the back up quarterback was before the first quarter was over.

THE RAIDERS were superbly prepared and their execution so precise, the only wonder was that they lost four games during the regular season, twice to Seattle, no less.

If the Redskins had a game-plan, it was rendered obsolete after the blocked punt that led to a touchdown early in the game. What the Skins did was come out throwing.

Theismann tried to take advantage of the wind with long passes in the first quarter, but couldn't handle it. Jim Plunkett, who is supposed to go deep, beat the wind with short passes into the flat in the first quarter and beat the Redskins with the long ones to Branch in the second quarter. By that time Plunkett had the Washington defense so confused and disoriented, the Raiders' Marcus Allen could do anything he wanted, short passes, runs wide, up-the-middle. The five-yard interception before five seconds halftime finished a team that was already beat and the rest of it were just showtime.

In view of the Washington deficiencies exposed by Allen, Plunkett, Branch, and the defensive secondary, the disturbing question is why the Cowboys didn't exploit those same weaknesses?

Purtzer 1st in Phoenix

From Wire Reports

PHOENIX, Ariz.—Tom Purtzer treated a gallery of friends, neighbors and relatives to a come-from-behind victory in the Phoenix Open Sunday.

Purtzer, 32, a Phoenix native, came from two shots off the pace to win with a 65-268, his second title in a 10-year PGA Tour career.

That put him one stroke in front of Corey Pavin, the rookie who led the first three rounds.

Curtis Strange and Larry Mize tied for third at 270 after final rounds of 67 and 68, respectively. Although a consistent money winner with more than $100,000 for five straight seasons, this was Purtzer's first win since the 1977 Los Angeles Open. The Phoenix was worth $72,000.

Purtzer, two back most of the day, took a share of the lead with birdies on 14 and 15 and went to the final hole tied with Pavin.

Pavin drove the 524-yard par five hole into tree trouble and had to waste a stroke returning to the fairway. Mize put his second shot just short of the green and Purtzer came out of the rough and into a pot bunker in front of the green.

Miller to purchase Dallas Cowboys

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Dallas real estate developer Vance C. Miller says he has reached an agreement in principle to purchase the Dallas Cowboys, the Dallas Times Herald reported Sunday.

Miller and W.O. Bankston, a Dallas car dealer, have been negotiating recently to buy the National Football League club, which was put on the block last year by Clint Murchison.

Miller, who arrived here Saturday for the Super Bowl, said he felt his group has "the blessings of the Cowboys."

"As far as the price goes, yes, we have reached an agreement," Miller said. "Right now I would say I'm feeling pretty positive about the deal. We need to get the lawyers from both sides together, and we need to get the approval of the NFL owners. We have some technical things to work out."

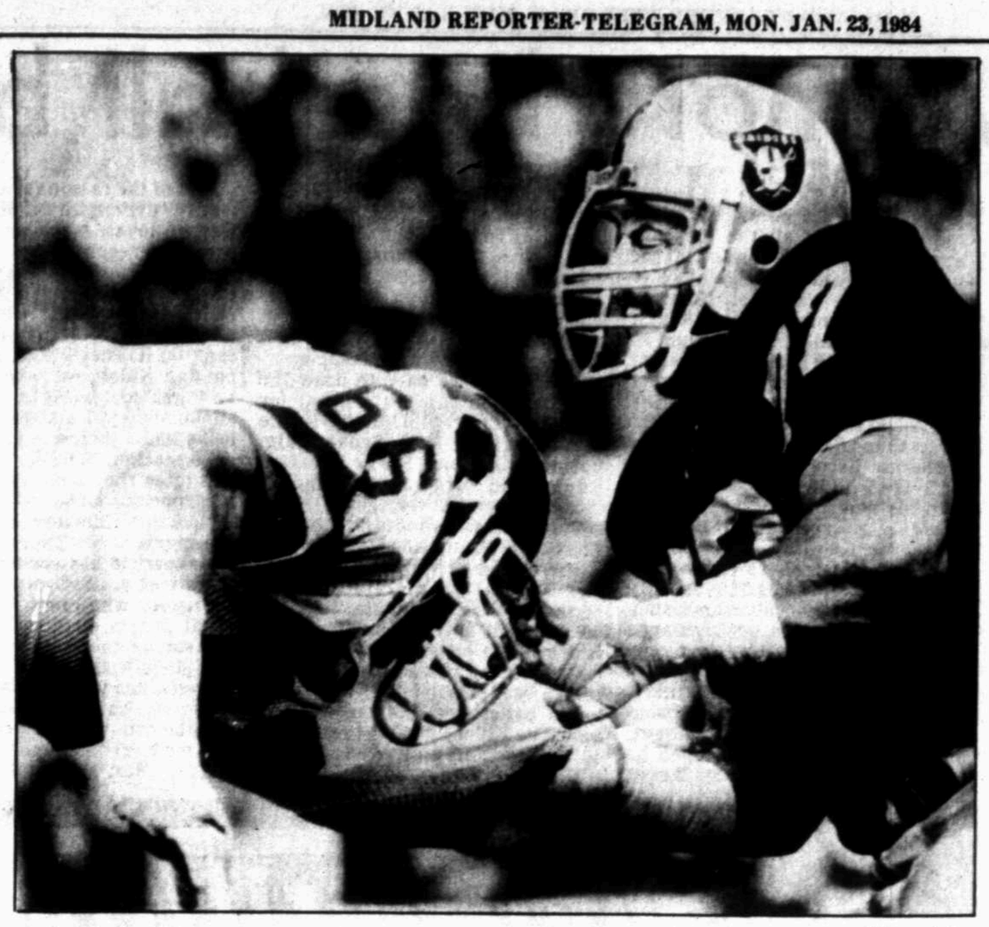

Cowboys President Tex Schramm, who has been interviewing potential owners, refused comment Saturday night, the Times Herald reported. However, Schramm arranged tickets for Bankston and Miller and planned to sit with them during Sunday's game, according to the newspaper.

Coaches Clinic set Feb. 4

Allen would rather chop up MVP award

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

TAMPA, Fla. — Marcus Allen, the offensive star of the Los Angeles Raiders' smashing victory over Washington's favored Redskins in the Super Bowl, won election as the game's Most Valuable Player with his running.

If he had his way, you get the impression that the personable 6-foot-2, 220-pound Heisman Trophy winner would chop his Super Bowl award into small pieces and pass it around, particularly among the defensive unit.

"I took a lot of pride in the Heisman," he said. "I considered it an individual prize. But the MVP in this game? Listen, it was a team thing.

"How about those defensive guys — blocking punts and extra point attempts, intercepting passes and stopping Joe Theismann and John Riggins?

"I just happened to have a few big plays that stood out."

That he did, indeed.

Altogether, he rolled up 191 yards from scrimmage, breaking the game open with a record 74-yard touchdown run, and scored twice in the Raiders' runaway 38-9 triumph.

His total yards wiped out the mark of 166 yards set by Riggins in last year's Redskin victory over Miami and his single effort of 74 yards erased a mark which Tom Matte of Baltimore had set against the New York Jets in Super Bowl III.

Allen, closing out his second season as a pro, could have basked in the limelight of his spectacular run at the end of the third quarter, but he said he actually had goofed on the play and was lucky to get away with it.

"I was supposed to follow my blocker but I got impatient," he said. "I cut smack into the linebacker. But they seemed suprised. I saw a tunnel and I was off to the races."

In his first two years at Southern California, Allen was used at fullback and blocked for Charlie White. It wasn't until his junior year that wraps were taken off him and he was allowed to sprout wings.

"I've only been a running back for four years now," he said. "I have set high goals for myself which I don't feel I have attained. But I think Mr. Davis (Al Davis, boss of the Raiders) knows my value."

Not only was Allen the Heisman Trophy winner in 1981, after recording 2,342 yards rushing, but he was the Raiders' No. 1 pick in the National Football League draft and Rookie of the Year his first season as a pro.

He also was the only starting rookie in last year's Pro Bowl game, an honor which he failed to repeat much to his personal chagrin.

"I ran for more than 1,000 yards (1,014, to be exact), caught 68 passes and threw three for touchdowns. That's not all that bad."

Earlier in the year, he felt he didn't get the ball often enough but this changed as the season aged and he was an offensive spearhead in playoff victories over Pittsburgh and Seattle, gaining more than 100 yards in each game.

However, he didn't have a run over 19 yards.

"People have said I couldn't break a long one because I didn't have that much speed. I set very high standards. I expect more of myself than anyone would have imagined. I'm still learning."

While Allen was gaining on his goals and comeback quarterback Jim Plunkett was completing 16 of 25 passes for 172 yards, the Raiders' fierce defensive team was softening the favored Redskins up for the knockout.

It was, as Allen so magnanimously pointed out, a defensive effort worthy to be preserved in concrete.

It started when little-publicized special teams player Derrick Jensen plunged in to block a punt by Washington's Jeff Hayes in the opening minutes and covered it in the end zone for the touchdown that got the Raiders off flying.

Late in the second period, reserve linebacker Jack Squirek snared a short, flat pass by Theismann and ran it 5 yards into the end zone for another score.

Thus two defensive men had accounted for 12 of the early points. When the Redskins finally marched to a touchdown at the start of the second half, Mark Moseley's extra point attempt was blocked by a guy named Don Hasselbeck.

Hey, we haven't been reading about guys named, Jensen, Squirek and Hasselbeck. We've been reading about Lyle Alzado and Ted Hendricks.

They did their job, too, as did those superb secondary twins, Lester Hayes and Mark Haynes, who held the great Riggins to 64 yards rushing — 2.5 a try — and allowed Thiesmann to connect only a little more than half of his passes, 16 of 35.

Baylor shoots bricks

By Associated Press

The Baylor Bears, who have been shooting basketballs like they're bricks, tumbled down the steps of the Southwest Conference basketball cellar over the weekend and there's no hope of immediate escape.

The "Bad Touch Bears" went into an incredible cold shooting spell Saturday night against Texas in a 67-47 loss.

They hit only ONE of their first 21 shots against the Longhorns and watched a 37-32 halftime lead go down the drain.

How cold were the Bears?

Baylor, which entered the game shooting only 38 per cent for the season, MISSED 28 off 33 shots in the second half.

"We missed eight shots within two feet of the basket," said Baylor Coach Jim Haller. "You explain that to me and I'll write a book. How can a defense have anything to do with you missing a two-foot shot."

What also hurt the Bears was losing to a hapless Texas team.

It was only the Longhorn's second SWC victory in 21 games since Bob Weltlich became head coach two years ago.

A total of 11 players have quit the Texas team for various reasons during that span. The Longhorns had lost 16 straight SWC games.

Baylor's 0-5 record qualified the Bears for at least temporary possession of the cellar, and they play two of the SWC's elite teams this week.

Baylor must travel to Lubbock Wednesday night to meet Texas Tech, which is tied with Southern Methodist for third place, and the Bears host No. 4 ranked Houston Saturday night.

In other SWC games Saturday night, Arkansas remained tied with Houston for the league lead at 6-0 with a hard-earned 67-57 victory over Texas Tech while Texas A&M dropped Texas Christian 68-62.

SMU was idle.

The top three teams draw byes into the SWC post-season tournament at The Summit in Houston.

Arkansas and Houston don't meet until Feb. 25 then they play at Hofheinz Pavilion in Houston then turn around and play again on March 4 in Fayetteville.

Two down, two more baseball biases left

By THOMAS BOSWELL
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Two baseball biases down and two to go.

Now that a chubby slugger with a low average and a speedy Latin shortstop have found their rightful way into the Hall of Fame, maybe next year baseball can find a place for a bald knuckleball reliever and a tiny second baseman with no power.

Now that Harmon Killebrew and Luis Aparicio have been voted into Cooperstown, so belatedly as to constitute an insult, maybe my baseball writing brethren will soon make room for Hoyt Wilhelm and Nellie Fox.

The recent Hall of Fame results were a prime example of the difficulty the game has in distinguishing reputation from reality. Baseball is as guilty of judging by appearances, mistaking style for substance, as other walks of life.

Baseball prefers heroes who are 6 feet 5 and handsome as Hollywood leading men. It likes its Hall of Famers to throw 95-mph heat, win strikeout titles, knock down hulking hitters with a smirk and play for World Series teams in both New York and Los Angeles. Such fellows should pitch in tandem with Sandy Koufax and have a record 58 consecutive shutout innings; then, they should stay in the limelight by getting a national TV contract as a commentator.

Those factors are a big part of why Don Drysdale will join The Killer and Little Luis on the veranda overlooking Lake Glimmerglass this summer.

Drysdale, a very good, but not a great, pitcher, never had to apologize for a paunch or a pate like Killebrew and Wilhelm, nor did he have to struggle with mediocre teams, as they did. He isn't a shrimp who played an underrated middle-infield position, as Aparicio and Fox did. He didn't live by a finesse skill comparable to Aparicio's stolen bases or Fox's bunts. He didn't speak with a Venezuelan accent like Aparicio. He didn't disappear after he retired.

Nobody likes to be a scold, especially in light of all the pleasure Drysdale brought to fans and all the appealing bravado that Big D took to the mound. He was a star. Nonetheless, somebody needs to insist that if Drysdale is a Hall of Famer, then an embarrassingly large number of other players clearly have career records that are as good or better.

Drysdale had more losing seasons (three) than 20-win years (two) in his 14 seasons. Records like 12-13, 15-14, 19-17, 18-16, 13-16, 13-16, 5-5 and 5-4 were his norm. From 1956 to 1969, Drysdale played on contending Dodger teams with a .539 winning percentage; Drysdale's career percentage of .557 (209-166) is only slightly better than his team's standard. Drysdale never led his league in ERA or complete games and only had one victory title.

If 14 seasons and 209 wins is enough durability and four seasons of 18 wins is enough excellence, then Cooperstown should open its doors unquestioningly to the likes of Jim Kaat, Jim Bunning, Mickey Lolich, Don Sutton, Luis Tiant, Lew Burdette, Tommy John, Vida Blue, Phil Niekro, Jerry Reuss, Bert Blyleven and a host of others. Check their numbers if you doubt the comparison. Several of them put Drysdale in the shade on all counts. Maybe Milt Pappas should Xerox his resume.

Somewhere we have to draw the line between the truly great (or incredibly durable) pitchers like Steve Carlton, Tom Seaver, Jim Palmer, Gaylord Perry, Catfish Hunter and Fergy Jenkins and all those who are just very good.

Cooperstown shouldn't become The Hall of Pretty Good.

The degree to which appearances and reputation dictate a man's chances of reaching the hall are documented by the Killebrew case. How could a player with 573 career home runs be passed over until his fourth year of eligibility? Only Ruth had a better ratio of homers to at-bats. The Killer had eight seasons of 40 homers and eight years of 110 RBI.

Part of the reason for the ugly Killebrew oversight is, perhaps, the way he looks. It's been a ballpark prank in recent years to nudge a friend in the ribs and say, "Pick out the man with 500 major league home runs who's standing within 10 feet of you." Most of the time, people can't do it. They'll look right at the balding Killebrew, who's only 5-10 and has lost weight for his TV announcing job, and see a man who looks like a junior high school science teacher. Whisper "Killebrew" and often they still can't figure out which person he is.

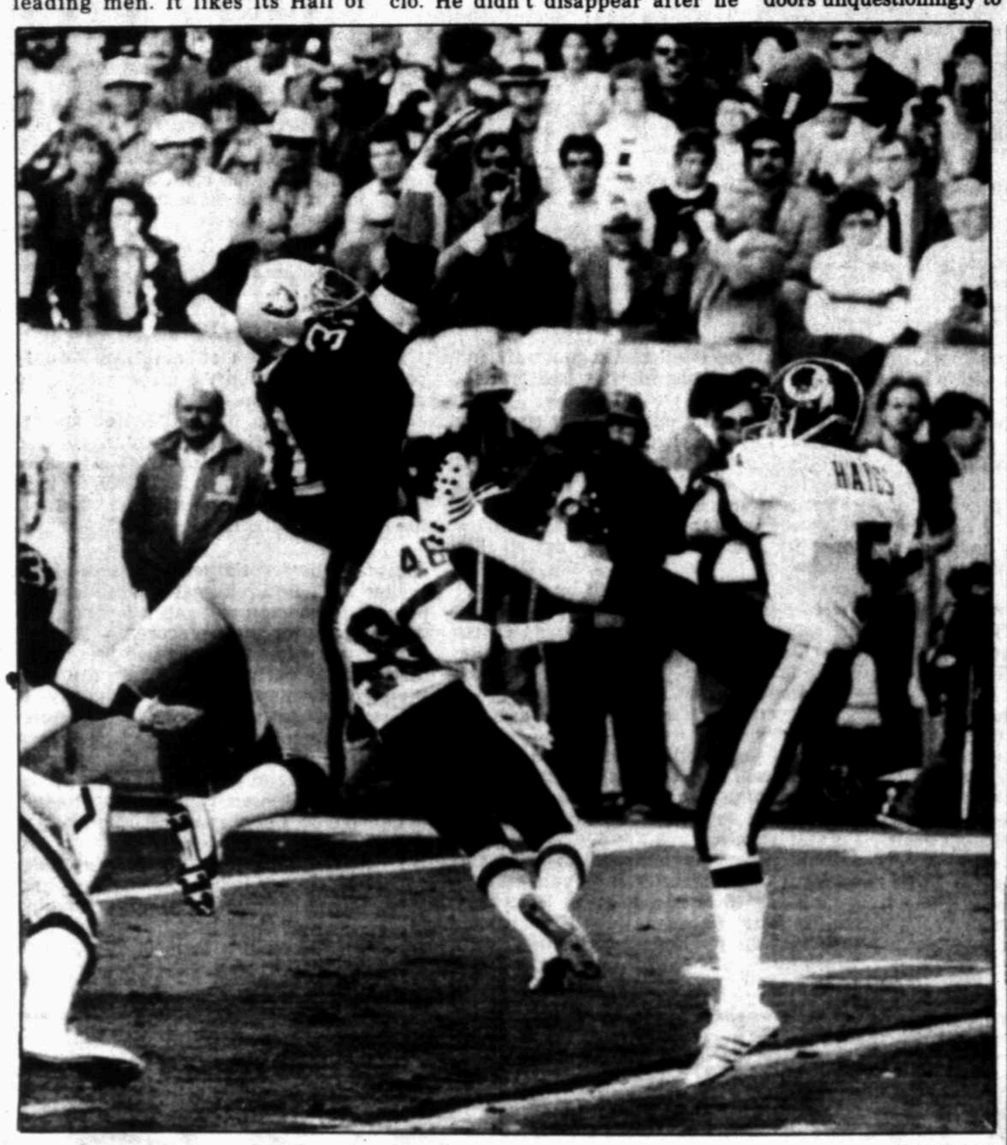

Now that Killebrew has overcome the stigma of his .256 career average and Aparicio has surmounted baseball's bias against superb defensive shortstops who don't happen to be great hitters, maybe Wilhelm and Fox can get their due.

Wilhelm missed election by only 13 votes this year and will probably make the hall next year. Wilhelm was the man who defined the role of the modern one-pitch reliever. His stats — most games pitched in history, a top-10 career ERA — are eloquent. Also, the only new candidate next year with powerful credentials is Lou Brock. Attention won't be deflected from Wilhelm.

A more pressing question is Fox. His 15th and final year on the BBWAA ballot is coming up.

The durable Fox had a .288 average, 2,663 hits and six seasons as a .300 hitter. Often forgotten is Fox's defense. He led the AL in double plays six times, in assists five times, in putouts 10 times, in percentage six times and, most important, in chances per game six times. If Fox, the American League's MVP in 1959, doesn't get into Cooperstown, it won't be a crime, but it will be a shame.

Even if the Drysdale vote offends purists, the selections of Killebrew and Aparicio this week are an excellent sign that baseball writers are brushing up on the dreary job of studying the record book. For reference, Fox and Wilhelm can be found on pages 563 and 1,183 of the Baseball Encyclopedia.

Raiders' Derrick Jensen blocks punt and eventually recovered it in the end zone for Los Angeles' first touchdown in 38-9 win over Washington.

Raiders sack Redskins, 38-9

Theismann completed only 16 of 35 passes for 243 yards, was intercepted twice and sacked six times. Still, he rallied the Skins briefly in the second half a 70-yard drive that led to Washington's only touchdown, a one-yard slam by Riggins.

"We felt like we could come back, and we did," said Theismann, "But they came back too."

The Raiders never missed a beat, however, counter-punching 70 yards for the touchdown that snuffed out the last shred of resistance. After that the Skins were just going through the motions.

Allen took it in from five yards out but it was a pass interference call against Darrell Green, a reputed defensive back, for 38 yards that set up the Raiders on the Washington 31.

ALLEN CAPPED off the touchdown production in the fourth period on an impromptu 74-yard run, longest ever in postseason play—off a busted play.

Allen, after a hand off, started left, saw safety Ken Coffey and then freelanced it from there, reversing his field and cutting back up the middle before the Skins could recover. "It was kind of my fault that it happened that way," apologized Allen. "I should have been inside the blcokers, but was outside , so I had to make something out of nothing."

The Hogs, Washington's massive frontline, was no match for the Raiders' nameless defense.

"Our front seven has a nickname now," Raider end Howie Long boasted, "It's the Slaughterhouse Seven. I'd never had Hog before. It tasted so good."

Quarterback Jim Plunkett, who wound up 16 of 25 for 172 yards, passed the Raiders to a second period touchdown on 50 and 13 yard passes to Cliff Branch that left the Redskin defense befuddled.

The win was the third for the Raiders in four tries. Only the Steelers, with four, have won more Super Bowls.

Wildcats end string

Kentucky beats Houston, 74-67

From Wire Reports

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Sophomore Kenny Walker scored 20 points and senior Mel Turpin added 19 as third-ranked Kentucky snapped Houston's six-game winning streak, 74-67, Sunday.

Sam Bowie dominated the boards, grabbing 18 rebounds for the 14-2 Wildcats. Houston fell to 16-3.

Akeem Olajuwon, the Cougars' 7-foot center, fouled out with 6:14 remaining and Kentucky leading 61-54.

Alvin Franklin, sophomore guard who scored 25 points, kept the Cougars in the game.

Houston pulled to within 70-67 with 1:58 remaining as Franklin hit his 10th straight point.

The game then became a foul shooting contest as the Cougars fouled in order to break up the Wildcats' stalling tactics.

Freshman Winston Bennett made three of four free throws in the last 31 seconds to cushion the Kentucky margin. He finished with 11 points.

Michael Young added 19 and Olajuwon 14 for Houston.

Houston led at the start 7-0 and 11-1 before Kentucky got rolling as Bowie collected 10 rebounds in the first half. After three ties Kentucky led at halftime 35-31.

Walker's alley-oop stuff with 8:00 left gave the Wildcats their largest margin 61-51.

Helping Bowie on the boards were Turpin with 11 rebounds and Walker with 10 as Kentucky outrebounded UH 51-45. Olajuwon had 12 rebounds and blocked five shots.

Kentucky outshot Houston 49 percent to 34, helping overcome 24 turnovers to the Cougars' 13.

Cards batter Bruins

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Charles Jones pumped in a career-high 27 points and grabbed 15 rebounds as Louisville won 86-78 over No. 9 UCLA Sunday.

The game was a designated Metro Conference contest for Louisville and the victory upped the Cardinals' record to 11-4 overall and 4-0 in the conference. UCLA fell to 11-3.

Louisville blew the game open in the first half, outscoring UCLa to take a 14-4 lead with 16:58 left in the half. Jones had six points during the run.

Louisville then outscored UCLA 20-9 to go up 34-13 with 9:55 left in the half.

Louisville led by as many as 23 points in the first half, as the Cardinals shot a blistering 67.7 percent from the field, while holding UCLA to 42.4.

UCLA then began its first comeback, outscoring Louisville 14-5 to pull within 49-35 at halftime.

UCLA trimmed the lead to nine several times in the second half, the first time at 57-48 with 14:12 remaining.

But a free throw by Jones ignited a 10-2 spree that put Louisville back on top 67-50 with 9:37 left.

UCLA closed the gap again in the closing minutes but consistent free throw shooting by Louisville preserved the victory.

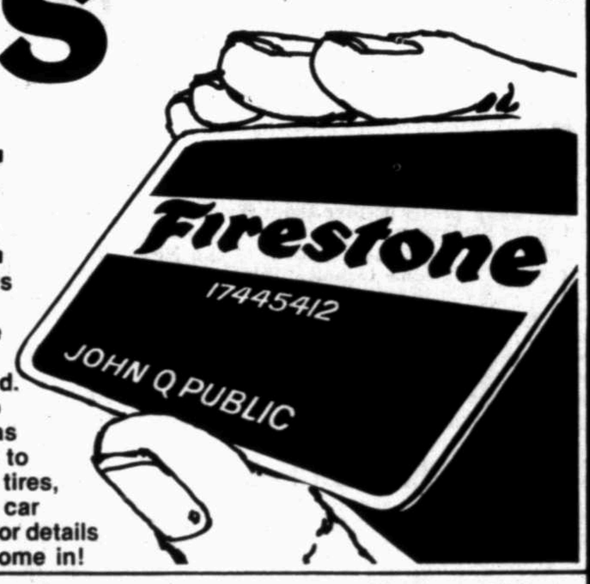

Milt Wagner added 18 and Billy Thompson 17 for Louisville. Manuel Forrest contributed 11.

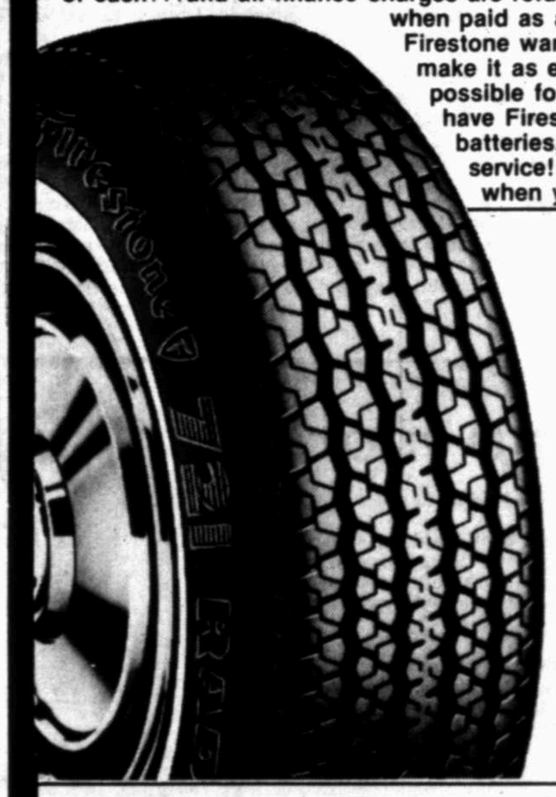

Kenny Fields led UCLA with 25. Ralph Jackson added 19 and Stuart Gray had 10.

Apple's Macintosh preparing to challenge IBM's dominance

By JAMES PELTZ
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Apple Computer Inc. returns to its roots Tuesday to challenge IBM's growing dominance in personal computers.

That's when Apple will unveil its Macintosh computer at its annual meeting in Cupertino, Calif. — a machine Apple says embodies the innovation with which it pioneered the industry back in 1977 with its Apple II.

Apple has tried before, with disappointing results, to find the next-generation computer with the same widespread appeal as the aging Apple II, now called the Apple IIe.

If Macintosh falls short, Apple's ability to retrieve dominance in the personal-computer market is widely perceived as slim.

APPLE CHAIRMAN Steven P. Jobs disagrees, saying the magic pieces are again in place.

"Macintosh is getting back to our roots of what we do best, which is taking great technology and pulling it down to a price that is affordable to lots and lots of people," he said in a recent interview to demonstrate Mac.

At $2,495, Mac features a more-powerful engine than most personal computers, so it can operate sophisticated software and display high-quality images.

Many computer dealers and analysts are impressed with Mac, which is said to be extremely easy to use and to have superb graphics and a competitive price. However, some said its storage capacity might initially be too limited for business users.

MAC'S MAIN challenge is whether it can slow the rapid success of International Business Machines Corp.'s Personal Computer.

Some observers doubt whether Mac can erode the attraction of IBM's logo and the world's largest computer maker behind it.

Mac's success "hinges on whether the technology encompassed by Mac can sufficiently offset the industry's desire for IBM-standard products," Michele Preston, analyst at L.F. Rothschild, Unterberg, Towbin, said in a recent report.

Esther Dyson, president of the research firm Rosen Research Inc., said after she used Mac: "I like it. It's more accessible to a user than your typical run-of-the-mill PC. It will be a good alternative to IBM. But it's not mother's cooking."

AFTER ARRIVING in August 1981, the IBM PC held 12 percent of worldwide personal computer shipments in 1982, while Apple led with 36 percent, according to the research firm Dataquest Inc.

The next year Apple's share slumped to 24 percent while IBM's climbed to 24 percent, Dataquest estimates, and others place IBM's corporate share at above 30 percent.

In the U.S. market alone, Apple's share fell to 28 percent last year from 47 percent in 1982, Dataquest says.

Meanwhile, Apple invested heavily in Mac and other new products, and its fiscal fourth-quarter profit, ended last Sept. 30, fell 73 percent from a year earlier to $5.1 million from $18.7 million.

APPLE'S STOCK felt the pressure, tumbling from $63.25 a share last June to $20.87½ in November. It since has climbed to nearly $30.

IBM's success led many computer makers to produce machines able to run the vast independent software designed for the IBM PC. Such compatibility is considered by some the only way for certain computer makers to survive.

But Apple has no intention of following Big Blue to stay in the hunt.

"IBM is an American treasure and we have a great respect for them," Jobs said. "Apple wants to be a great American gem, too, but in our own way."

He thinks Apple's technology is needed to attract the millions of people who have not yet used a computer and who will demand a machine easier to use than current models.

THAT TECHNOLOGY first arrived a year ago with Lisa, a $10,000 machine Apple unveiled with much fanfare but whose sales Apple concedes are well below expectations.

Jobs said the problem with Lisa was not technology but marketing.

Deliveries came months after Lisa's introduction, third-party software was limited and its price was seen as relatively too high.

But on Tuesday, Apple also will unveil three new Lisas costing between $3,500 and $5,500, making them more mainstream products, Jobs said. The Lisa sisters can run Mac's programs, but Mac cannot run the Lisas'.

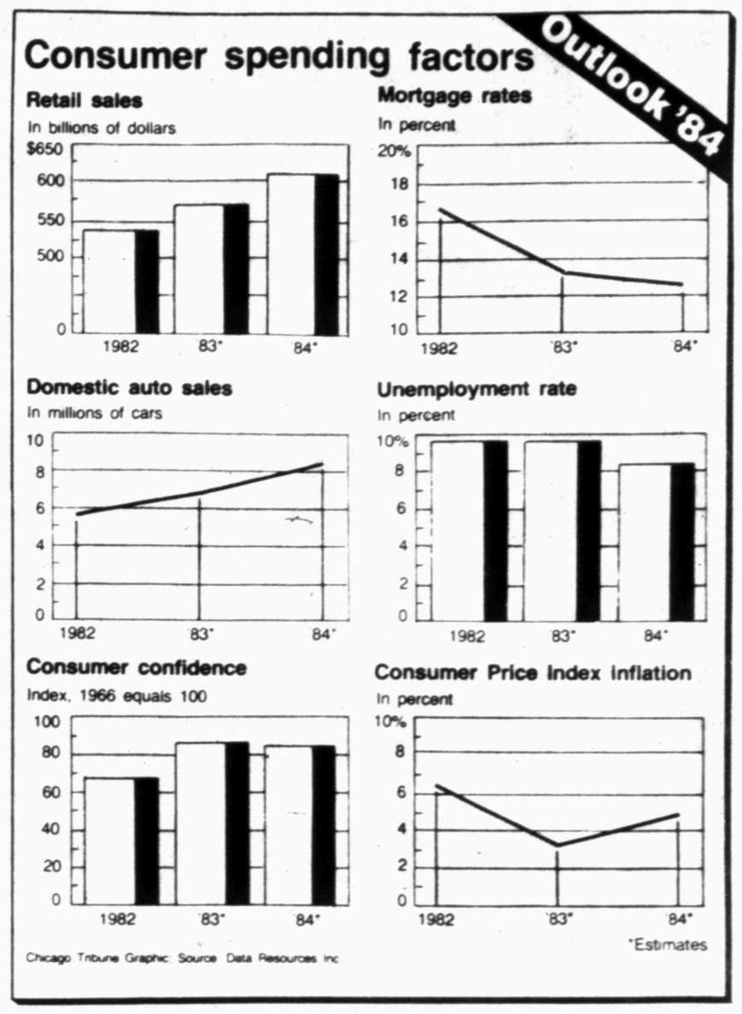

Still, many of the technological highlights of Lisa are in Mac, such as the "mouse" pad. Users can handle tasks by pointing to symbols on the screen with an arrow controlled by the hand-held pad.

APPLE OFFICIALS made a nationwide blitz recently to promote Mac to dealers and analysts. Mac has been in the hands of software developers for months, which Apple said ensures a wide selection of software beginning Tuesday.

Mac also will be in stores Tuesday, and Jobs said Apple already has $50 million worth of Mac sales in hand.

Whether Mac is the next Apple II probably won't be known for several months.

But Miss Preston of L.F. Rothschild says that if Macintosh is established as a second standard of computer design, "Apple will have staged a major coup in reversing the overwhelming demand for IBM-compatible personal computers."

BankAmerica ups investment in Seafirst Corp.

By The Los Angeles Times—
Wahsington Post News Service

BankAmerica Corp. has provided its Seafirst Corp. subsidiary with another $150 million in capital, bringing its total investment thus far in the ailing Seattle banking company to $600 million.

BankAmerica, San Francisco-based parent of Bank of America, said Friday that it provided the additional cash at the fourth quarter's end to help Seafirst cover further possible losses in its loan portfolio.

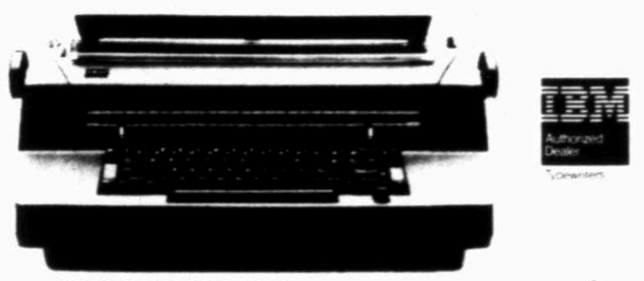

Robert W. Frick, executive vice president and chief financial officer of BankAmerica, said that the company had anticipated a need for additional funds following the merger last July 1, when it paid $250 million in cash and stock for Seafirst and provided the Seattle company with an initial burst of $150 million in new operating capital. BankAmerica provided another $50 million in October, as well as the most recent installment of $150 million.

Frick said that BankAmerica is "constantly evaluating the situation" at Seafirst and may provide additional funds to the subsidiary.

Banking analysts said that the increased investment is not necessarily a drain on BankAmerica, depending on whether the funds provided Seafirst can revive the once highly profitable company, the largest banking company in the Pacific Northwest. Seafirst is the parent company of Seattle First National Bank.

Seafirst was forced to find a strong merger partner in early 1983 after huge losses on energy loans ate up its profits and began to erode its stockholders' equity. By the time the two companies merged July 1, Seafirst's stockholders' equity had dwindled to $163.5 million — by regulatory standards a slim cushion between solvency and failure for a bank with $7 billion in loans.

Computers check out groceries

WASHINGTON (AP) — The supermarket line moved quickly, as one shopper bought a 13000 00248, a second had a 35000 50925 and the last person only wanted a couple of 12546 61422s.

While those items might sound like an esoteric shopping list of the future, they are, in fact, quite normal purchases today. The numbers are computer language for Weight Watcher's Apple Snacks, Colgate toothpaste and Trident chewing gum.

Computers invaded supermarkets just 10 years ago, and can be found today in one of every four grocery stores across the country.

The two most visible manifestations are those little patches of stripes and numbers on products, and the computerized checkouts that "read" them.

Jack Cergol of the Food Marketing Institute said his latest survey showed that 7,331 of the 29,000 supermarkets in the country were using automatic checkouts, up from the eight stores that pioneered use of the system in 1974.

He said the number is expected to reach 10,000 stores by the end of 1985.

"We've had a very positive response" from shoppers about computerized checkouts, said Susan Portney, spokeswoman for Giant Food Inc. of Landover, Md., which operates 132 stores in Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Giant was one of the pioneers in installing the automated checkout system. In 1979, it became the first major supermarket chain in the country to complete installation of computer scanners in all its stores.

Ms. Portney said there was concern about accurate pricing at first, so Giant initiated a policy, now in widespread practice, of offering a disputed item free if the computer price was higher than the price marked on the shelf.

"We've had to give away very, very few items," she said.

Nonetheless, the scanning systems aren't perfect.

A survey last summer by James Barry, New Jersey's state consumer affairs director, found price errors in 2.36 percent of the items bought in supermarkets with computer checkouts in that state.

The most frequent errors, he said, involved failure to include special discounts, coupons and two-for-one offers.

"The careful shopper, the one who is looking for the bargains, using coupons, taking advantage of special offers, sales — those are the areas where we see more errors in programming," he said.

Barry's survey was criticized by the industry for not also including stores with manual cash registers.

The major controversy stemming from use of computer scanners has concerned the absence of prices on individual items.

Consumers have complained that they cannot check the price charged unless it is printed on each product. Supermarkets prefer to post prices only on shelves to save money.

Consumer's Union has taken the position that products should be individually marked no matter whether computers are used.

Martin Sloane of the Natibnal Alliance of Supermarket Shoppers in Franklin Square, N.Y., said eliminating the prices from individual items "hampers your ability to comparison shop and makes it much more difficult to find a mistake if there is one."

Trees serve as shade, windbreak, traffic buffer

Trees are an important part of any home landscape, and homeowners need to be aware of the many varieties and uses of trees before making their selections. Select trees to perform specific jobs or solve certain problems in the landscape.

For example, they can be used as shade, as a windbreak or as a buffer against traffic or other noises. They can have aesthetic qualities, such as enhancing a view, serving as a background or screening an objectionable sight. Limbs and foliage provide pattern and texture while a variety of flowers, fruit and foliage provide color and beauty.

Giving a little thought and consideration to selecting landscape trees can provide much satisfaction in the finished landscape planting. It can also prevent costly maintenance, or even replacement, at a later date.

Consider the different characteristics of trees, such as shape, ultimate size, foliage texture and color, and growth rate, when making your selection.

Be cautious in selecting fast-growing trees, since many of these are also soft and brittle, easily damaged by wind or ice, or have a relatively short life.

At the same time, many slow-growing trees, including live oak and bald cypress, will grow rather rapidly if watered and fertilized properly.

When selecting a young tree, remember that the biggest size is not always the best. A young tree with a 1- to 2-inch trunk diameter will usually become reestablished faster and surpass a much larger tree planted at the same time.

Phylloxera, tiny yellow, soft-bodied insects that look like aphids, can damage pecans severely unless controlled this time of year. The pests attack leaves, tender shoots, leaf stems, catkins and nutlets.

Phylloxera can be controlled with dormant oil or the insecticides, malathion and phosalone (Zolone).

Apply dormant oil at the rate of four gallons of 97 percent oil emulsion per 100 gallons of water. Spray prior to bud-break and when the temperature is between 40 and 70 degrees F. Be sure to thoroughly cover the tree's trunk and branches.

Malathion and phosalone may also be applied at bud-break. Use 25 percent WP malathion at the rate of three pounds per 100 gallons of water. Apply 34.4 percent EC phosalone at one and one-thirds pints per 100 gallons of water, at three-day intervals, until leaves are one-third grown or until egg-hatch ceases.

Phylloxera overwinter in the egg stage and can be found in protected areas on pecan trees, such as under bark and in crevices. Overwintered eggs hatch in early spring and migrate to newly developing leaves and twigs.

The tiny pests insert their sucking mouthparts into young tissue and begin to feed, causing galls to form. These galls continue to grow and envelop feeding phylloxera.

Inside the galls female phylloxera lay many eggs which hatch in just a few days. Adults and nymphs continue to feed inside galls for one to three weeks. Galls then split, releasing phylloxera to migrate and lay eggs for a second generation. Second generation females produce eggs which lie dormant on the tree until the following spring.

Commercial pecan growers, as well as homeowners, interested in nursery pecan trees to plant this winter should inspect them closely for freeze injury before making a purchase, according to Dr. George McEachern, horticulturist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System. He suggests slicing the buds, cambium (layer of growth just under the bark) and crown (base of plant) to check for brown tissue, which would indicate freeze damage.

The horticulturist also advises against pruning back existing trees until mid-May to determine the extent of freeze injury. "Freeze damage can be deceiving," says McEachern. "Pecan trees that have been frozen often bud out and look healthy in April. This growth can be 6 to 12 inches long before it wilts and turns brown a few weeks later. The cambium layer of freeze-damaged pecan trees will have a brown color and a syrup-sugar smell in late April." McEachern advises growers and homeowners to keep a close check on their pecan trees in the coming months to determine the extent of freeze injury.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

You don't have to pay tax on someone else's mistake

By BILL DOYLE

Q. In November, 1982, I received a statement from a mutual fund indicating I had purchased $10,000 of the fund's shares. I hadn't and contacted my stock broker immediately. He said the mistake would be corrected. It wasn't and I have received a statement from the fund every three months. I called my broker and the fund every time I received a statement and tried to get things straightened out.

One statement showed $1,157.28 in dividends and capital gains distributions had been credited to my account, making me the owner of shares worth $11,157.28. Finally, I received a statement showing the initial $10,000 purchase had been canceled, but still leaving $1,157.28 in my account.

If this situation is not corrected will I have to pay income tax on the $1,157.28 that is not really mine?

A. There's no reason in the world for you to report that $1,157.28 on your income tax return and no way you can be forced to pay tax on it.

Doyle

Somewhere along the line, there was a goof — either at your brokerage firm or at the mutual fund. Once the $10,000 of fund shares were credited to your account, all dividends and capital gains distributions paid on those shares were automatically added to your account.

If the fund removes the $1,157.28 payment from its records before it reports its 1983 dividends and capital gains to the Internal Revenue Service, you'll be off the hook. However, that probably won't happen.

More likely, the IRS will get a record of that payment to you. Then, when you don't report the $1,157.28 on your income tax return, the IRS computers will go "tilt" and you'll get one of those dreaded IRS dunning letters.

At that point, you'll have to prove you filed an honest 1983 return. Get a letter from your broker or the mutual fund spelling out the details of this foul-up. Present that as proof you don't owe taxes on the $1,157.28.

It must be noted that you are a straight arrow. In your situation, some people would have been tempted to redeem the fund shares and pocket the cash.

Q. I have a money market mutual fund account and have made withdrawals and deposits several times in past years. Being in need of money, I wanted to close out this account. The fund said I couldn't do so, unless I have my signature guaranteed by two commercial banks. Is this standard practice?

A. Not at all. The vast majority of money market mutual funds — including the one you named in your letter — have check-writing privileges. When you have such an account and need cash, the standard practice is to write a check against the account. Isn't that the way you have withdrawn money from that fund in the past?

Most money market mutual funds set minimum check sizes — such as $100, $250 or $500. Assuming the balance in your account is equal to or more than the minimum check size that fund allows, you can write a check for the account's balance. That will close out the account.

As for the two signature guaranties, I suspect you were misinformed by the person you spoke to at the fund. Either that, or you misunderstood what you were told.

• • •

Q. I have $100,000 in a rollover individual retirement account. A broker wants me to put part of that money in a municipal bond unit trust paying tax-free income. Would that be my best move?

A. Absolutely not! It might be about your worst. The tax-free interest from municipal bonds and the tax-free dividends from unit trusts and mutual funds holding municipal bonds are lower than interest and dividends available elsewhere.

More important, the earnings on an IRA are sheltered from income taxes only until you withdraw them. Then they become taxable. By putting your IRA money into a municipal bond unit trust, you would turn a tax-free investment into a taxable one. At the same time, it makes no sense at all to put municipal bonds, municipal bond unit trusts or municipal bonds mutual funds, which are completely tax-free, into an IRA.

'Eating for two' not same as gaining for two

Dear Dr. Solomon: Now that I am pregnant, my mother keeps reminding me that I have to eat for two. Just what does this mean? I doubt that it means that I should eat twice as much as I used to. How much weight should I gain during the time I am pregnant? —Mrs. D.P., Bakersville, Calif.

Dear Mrs. P.: "Eating for two" does not mean eating twice as much as you used to, but it does mean eating a little more than you probably were accustomed to.

You should count on gaining from 20 to 30 pounds during your pregnancy. Usually — and this is only an average — you may count on gaining from three to four pounds during the first three months, and from three to four pounds per month for the remainder of your pregnancy."

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been reading about highly purified insulin. Do you recommend it for your patients? It seems that something that is highly purified would be better than something that isn't. — Russ, Los Angeles

Dear Russ: Highly purified insulin may have some beneficial effects on some patients, but that doesn't mean it's for everyone. Some patients who take insulin develop an area of redness, itching, and swelling at the point of injection, and others develop systemic allergies. The highly purified insulin may be helpful in reducing such reactions.

However, this does not mean that everyone should switch to the highly purified insulin. In the first place, it costs more. In addition, according to Dr. Arthur H. Rubenstein, of the University of Chicago Pritzker School of Medicine, there is no evidence that these insulins are more effective in postponing the complications of diabetes than are conventional insulins.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

Artistic spirit

Midland geologist Woody Erskine carved the haunting faces of this couple from a single piece of driftwood picked up at Padre Island.

This clock — which actually works — was honed from walnut. The face is hand-carved alabaster.

This finely detailed work was once just another piece of driftwood.

Driftwood to most people is something you put on the mantle or coffee table as a conversation piece. But the artistic spirit in Midland consulting geologist Woody Erskine sees images in need of enhancement.

So he puts carving knife and spare time to work, chipping and honing away until pieces of wood are transformed into works of art — two of which grace the National Audubon Society's headquarters in New York.

His talent is such that Midlander P.B. Holley, whose bird carvings adorn homes and mansions around the world, considers himself a mere whittler next to Erskine.

It's an ability not confined to wood alone. His untutored hands work on bronze, jade, marble, "just plain rocks sometimes" and broken bird bones — which are hollow and difficult for even veterinarians to set.

He once turned a 4-foot mahogany tree stump into the figure of a monk. It's now on display in the art collection of a prominent Midland oilman.

IN THE same collection is an 8-inch high, 4-inch thick Navaho woman weaving a rug. Before Erskine put blade and chisel to her, she was just a piece of walnut.

Among his most unusual creations — all of which are honed from single chunks of wood, stone, metal or whatever medium he's working with — is a pair of dung beetles rolling their load, as it were, across the ground.

It's one of the two works on display at Audubon headquarters. The other is a pair of intricately carved bees on an equally detailed block of amber-hued honey comb cells.

But the detail on a pecan branch carved to scale from a plain old piece of wood taught Erskine a lesson.

The branch — now in the possession of Midland nurseryman Tom Wilmeth — features leaves, hulls, and nuts protruding from the hulls. It appears so real that "people don't believe it's a carving," said Erskine. "That's when I learned not to carve to scale."

NONE OF HIS works is painted. Instead, they're coated with a mixture of beeswax and turpentine, giving them a slight sheen without destroying their natural appearance.

Born in Dallas but raised in St. Louis, Erskine is descended from a San Antonio ranching family who refused to acknowledge their close hereditary link with Sam Houston because they considered him "a scoundrel" whose interest in women and whiskey was a bit more than the family considered proper.

An only child, Erskine carved a little leaf and flower at age four. When he married at age 30, his mother presented it to his bride as a wedding gift.

In addition to an artistic side that works solely "by sight and feel," he also possesses an inventive nature which has produced such things as a horizontal drilling device that lays its own pipe as it goes, a home burglar alarm system which employs a fish hook as one of its components, and a water distiller made from glass and porcelain.

Erskine chips away at "Indian Woman With Papoose" — just one of the many artistic works his talented hands have created from wood, stone and metal.

THE STILL is hooked into his city water system at home and turns "yuck" into chemical-free drinking water at a cost of about 10 cents a gallon. The device contains marble chips and an air bubbler to eliminate the flat taste often found in store-bought drinking water.

"It could be mass-produced for less than $150 a unit," he said. "The prototype was made from flower pots and two 4-foot fluorescent tubes with the ends cut off."

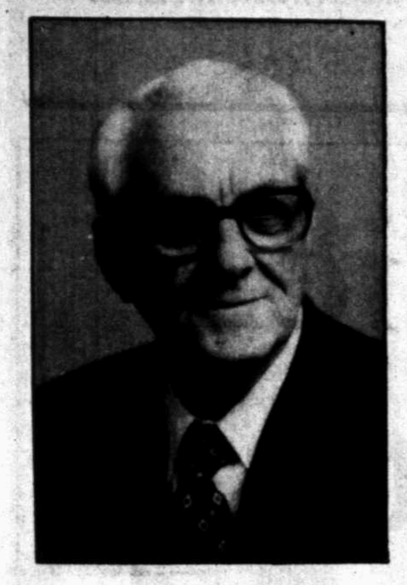

But it's not likely that his practical creations will ever be mass-produced.

That's because, like his carvings — which are generally either kept or given away — his inventions derive more from the need to relax than from a desire for money or fame.

Frances Weaver of Duncanville holds her 3-month-old daughter, Catherine Nicole, after three people claiming to be from the Dallas county Child Wefare Department showed up at her door and tried to take the child.

'Officials' want baby

DUNCANVILLE, Texas (AP) — A terrified new mother says she refused to turn her 3-month-old daughter over to two men and a woman who claimed to be child welfare officers and accused her of abusing the baby.

Afraid that the three imposters might be involved in a child-snatching operation, police in this Dallas suburb have alerted nearby departments and are warning local families about the incident.

Frances Weaver, 23, said the cool, well-dressed trio showed up on her doorstep Jan. 14 and identified themselves as Dallas County Child Welfare Department officers, even displaying an official-looking badge.

They then demanded that she give them her daughter, Catherine Nicole. When she refused, Mrs. Weaver said, the three persisted, leaving only when she threatened to call police.

Police and child welfare officers say genuine county welfare employees would show proper identification and, unless a child is in immediate danger, would conduct an investigation and obtain a court order before trying to take a child from its parents.

But Mrs. Weaver didn't know that. She only knew, she said, that she was frightened at the prospect of giving up her child.

The men, both of whom wore dark suits and ties, said they were Mr. Smith and Mr. Michaels from the welfare office, Mrs. Weaver said. The man who said his name was Michaels had a badge in his wallet. The woman didn't identify herself.

Because it was dark and her husband was at work, Mrs. Weaver refused to unlatch the door chain when the trio demanded the baby.

Properties committee to meet Thursday

The Special Committee on State Properties will meet from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Thursday in the Midland Hilton ballroom. An informal press conference will precede the session at 9:45 a.m. in the ballroom.

The committee has been conducting a review of management policy concerning state-owned oil, gas and hard mineral leases, as well as various surface leases. The members are charged with determining if highest and best use of state property is assured, and whether maximum return to the state is provided. Their findings will be reported to the 69th Legislature next year.

Thursday's meeting will focus on the Relinquishment Act, minieral leasing, grazing and other surface leases, and access to mineral lands in West Texas.

Committee members are: Sen. Ed Howard, chairman; Rep. Tip Hall, vice chairman; Sen. Ray Farabee; Rep. Joe Hanna; Sen. Grant Jones; Rep. Pete Laney; Sen. Bill Sims; Rep. Wayne Peveto; Garry Mauro, state land commissioner; Homer Foerster, executive director of the state purchasing and general services commission; Edwin L. Cox Jr., chairman of the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission; and James Crowson, general counsel for The University of Texas System.

The UT System lands will be studied as a model for possible state procedure changes.

PBRPC to hold its board meeting Friday

The Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission will hold its board meeting at noon Friday in Monahans with State Land Commissioner Garry Mauro as featured speaker.

After lunch, the directors will tackle seven items on the agenda, ranging from highways to funding Head Start and airport programs.

State Department of Highways and Public Transportation has submitted a proosal for reconstructing a portion of State Highway 158, FM 2020 and to build a new Farm-to-Market road from Highway 158 in Gardendale 7.5 miles south to Loop 338 in northeast Odessa.

City of Odessa is submitting a request for funding assistance to develop a linear park along Monahans Draw in south Odessa.

Odessa College is seeking funding to construct a new UHF television station. This is the second time such an application has come before the PBRPC. National Telecommunications and Information Administration asked for some changes.

Community Council of Reeves Council is seeking approval of its application for the Saragosa and Pecos Head Start programs. And the city of Pecos is applying for airport improvements funding from the Federal Aviation Administration.

'Black West' preserved at museum

Helping preserve records of black pioneers of the West is the Black American West Museum in Denver, Colo., operated by Paul Stewart. He has tape-recorded some 800 interviews, with black pioneers, including many cowboys. The museum has over 15,000 old photographs and some 6,000 other items collected from black Western families.

Carr to run for sheriff

From Staff Reports

Police department Det. Sgt. Joe Carr has announced his candidacy for sheriff, marking his second bid for the post now held by Republican Dallas Smith.

Carr, 44, is running on the Democratic ticket. He has 20 years' experience in law enforcement, 18 of it in Midland.

During a news conference this morning, Carr said, "The population of Midland County outside the city limits has grown tremendously the past few years.

"Small businesses, oil-related industries, farmers and ranchers, and citizens who live and work in the county must be afforded more effective, responsive and efficient protection. They deserve no less.

"A major problem facing Midland County, as well as our nation, is the illegal sale and distribution of narcotics. Having worked in the narcotics division of the Midland Police Department, I can and will utilize that experience to combat the problem."

Carr also said he would "re-establish and maintain good employee relations within the sheriff's department to reduce the tremendous turnover in employees."

In addition, he indicated he would work for better communication and cooperation between the sheriff's department and other law enforcement agencies.

He also pledged "an open door policy, always receptive and responsive to the taxpayer."

Carr was defeated in the last election by a 69 percent margin. Smith announced his re-election bid a week ago.

Police seek robbery suspect

ODESSA — Police are looking for a suspect that reportedly stole about $2,000 and $105 in credit-card receipts from an east side pizza parlor late Saturday night.

Gregory Simmons, manager of Pinnochio's Pizza at 4550 E. University, told investigators he was moving his car parked behind the restaurant when the robber came up behind him and stuck something in his back.

Simmons, an Odessa resident, had no description of the robber, who fled the scene on foot.

Officials to inspect condos

DALLAS (AP) — Federal regulators from Washington plan to meet in Dallas this week with state savings officials and inspect condominium developments along Interstate 30 as part of a continuing prove of developers' financing.

Representatives of the Federal Home Loan Board and its subsidiary, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., planned to travel to Dallas today, said FHLBB spokeswoman Rebecca Speece.

The FHLBB and the Texas Savings and Loan Department are among several financial regulators and law enforcement agencies examining more than $500 million in loans that were used to finance condominium developments near Lake Ray Hubbard.

"Staff members from Washington will be looking at the I-30 corridor development as part of an ongoing review of what is going on out there and the investment activities that have taken place," Ms. Speece said.

The construction boom along I-30 has created a potential 12½ year oversupply of condominiums, real estate experts say.

The loans and related real estate transactions are under scrutiny by federal, state and local criminal investigators, including the FBI, the Internal Revenue Service, the Dallas County district attorney's office and the criminal investigation service of the Texas Department of Public Safety.

A two-month investigation by The Dallas Morning News revealed that Empire Savings and Loan Association of Mesquite and other Texas savings associations made large blocs of loans to condominium investors whose investments had been pre-packaged by development companies based in the Lake Ray Hubbard area.

Farmer's touch makes Texas stone come to life

ANGLETON, Texas (AP) — Lloyd Adams looks at a piece of roughstone and envisions a map of Texas, a little church complete with miniature benches or a stone Bible. He sees butterflies and longhorns, cowboys and cougars, all crafted from stone.

Adams has cut and polished them all, taking a year to complete the more complicated pieces. He doesn't do it for profit, and he doesn't consider himself an artist. Lapidary is a hobby, he says, not much more.

A rice farmer until 1967 when doctors told him to retire, Adams prefers to describe rather than tell his age. "I'm young enough to look at young things," he says, "and old enough to know not to touch them."

His work has received ribbons and awards at rock shows and fairs, but Adams says that's not the reason he carves stones. "One of those ribbons and 50 cents will buy you a cup of coffee," he says.

Adams continues to participate in shows and fairs, but only to exhibit his projects, not to compete. "I never knew what category to put them in. When you talk of lapidary work, most of the time you speak about jewelry. This is more or less like making a jigsaw puzzle. You make the individual pieces and fit them together."

The first figure Adams cut from stone was a wolfhound. If a man is going to be a rock hound," he explains, "he ought to have a rock hound, so I made one."

Then he made a sheep, a cow, a skunk — "It's not a real skunk, because the stripe is in the wrong place" — and a cabinet full of other animals.

"Then my imagination got to be too big. I couldn't find the rocks to make larger subjects. That's when I started splicing stones together."

Not too much splicing, though — just enough to pick up where Mother Nature left off. "I use all of the good Lord's mixings before I start mixing myself," he says.

Under a Plexiglas cover in Adams' Angleton home stands a stone church, equipped with a stone roof, stone painted-glass windows, stone benches, and a stone Bible.The only items missing are the stone preacher and congregation.

He worked a year on the church, piecing it together as he found the stones he needed.

Finding the stone to fit the subject is not that easy, says Adams. Only one business in Brazoria County sells decorative stones. Houston has more stores, but they don't always carry what he needs.

"I looked three years for a rock before I found it. I knew what I was looking for, but I didn't know what it was called. I wanted to make a giraffe." The stone, he learned, was green and gold moss agate.

A mosaic map of the United States is another project that took a year to complete. Adams says it would have taken longer, but he had already cut and polished some of the stones. Every stone represents a different state, and no two stones are alike.

Decorating a wall is a longhorn skull covered with stones. A map of Texas highlights its forehead.

Inside a glass display box Adams has created an entire western scene complete with cowboys, horses, wagons and another skunk with the line in the wrong place, all made of stone.

The Bedrock environment continues with a couple of stone clocks in the dining and living rooms; colorful stone butterflies occupy the walls; and Adams even digs up a small rock rocking chair.

A circular saw, a grinding wheel and a polishing pad are the tools he uses — along with a lot of patience.

"It's tedious work. You can't do it for long periods of time," says Adams. The church windows, which Adams pared from a slice of rock to a translucent sliver, took hours of polishing.

Hoss Bennett takes a call at Snipes Bar and Store in Cecilville, Calif., which still has a 16-party, hand-cranked phone line. The gadget at right is a magneto.

The Cecilville Farmers Line phone book shows how many rings are needed to summon the users of the 16-party phone line in Cecilville, Calif. The line is one of the last hand-cranked telephone systems in the United States.

Party(line)'s not over for California town

Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

CECILVILLE, Calif. — A bare, single-strand wire strung tree-to-tree through 37 miles of mountain wilderness links this tiny community to the rest of the world.

At one end is a modern microwave station. At the other end, isolated in the forest, is Cecilville, with a population of 15, no electricity and one of the last hand-cranked telephone systems in the United States.

This slice of old-time Americana is the Cecilville Farmers Line, a 16-party line.

A few weeks ago when hand-cranked telephones in Bryant Pond, Me., were replaced by dial phones, news stories reported many mourning the passing of the nation's last hand-cranked phone system.

"Hell, we're so far back in the mountains, I reckon nobody ever heard of the Cecilville Farmers Line," snorted Al Esotoff, 92. Long-short-long is the ring for Esotoff and his wife, Nellie, 81.

"Our hand-cranked phones are good enough for our needs," insisted Dove Kaiser (three long rings), 60, a lifelong Cecilville resident. Her husband, Henry, 69, manages the user-owned line.

"Heck, I've talked to Florida and it was just like talking to somebody on the other side of the mountain," said Dove Kaiser, who was postmistress here for 25 years until she quit in 1973. When she quit, the post office went out of business. She is also the only barber for 50 miles.

The 16 phones are in Snipes Bar and Store, the U.S. Forest Service ranger station and 13 isolated homes and cabins scattered for 17 miles through the woods. The wire extends another 20 miles over Bear Mountain to Sawyers Bar where it ties into the microwave.

When any of the 16 numbers are called, every phone on the system rings.

"Everybody lifts up the receiver and listens in just about every time," said Mary Ann Snipes, 29, (two shorts, two longs) the local bartender. "People have nothing better to do. It's the only show in town."

Everybody on the system agrees that it is hard to hear because so many are on the line eavesdropping, but all deny they do it.

"Not me." "I sure don't listen." "I'm too busy for that kind of foolishness," are the kind of answers given when people around town are asked if they ever listen in.

Mike Sherry, 33, a welder, and his wife, Laura, 28, (long, two shorts) are the newest couple on the line. "I had seen hand-cranked telephones on 'Petticoat Junction' but I never knew they still existed till we moved up here," Laura Sherry said.

The Cecilville Farmers Line dates from the 1890s. The hamlet was named after an old miner named Cecil. Nobody remembers his last name.

Small family-owned bakery rolls out recipe of success

Los Angeles Times — Washinton Post News Service

ESCONDIDO, Calif. — The thought of finding another way to make a living often hit Edward and Mary Smith during the long nights they spent squeezing cheesecake batter in a small plastic tub on a picnic table in their kitchen.

But they also nurtured dreams of success. One dream involved a house and a mountain that Smith first saw jutting out of the flatlands of Escondido at dawn while delivering cheesecake in a borrowed truck. "I told myself, 'One of these days I'll have a house up there'," recalls Smith, who recently bought the house and the mountain for more than $1 million.

Another dream, to own the largest bakery on the West Coast, is yet to be realized. But the two are working on it.

Today, the Smiths, both 30, own Ne-Mo's bakery, a thriving enterprise supplying clients such as Jack-in-the-Box with croissants and 7-Eleven stores throughout California with carrot cake. While declining to discuss net profits of their privately held company, the Smiths say they expect gross revenues this year of $10 million, up 50 percent from last year.

But the company has grown far beyond the limitations of their original mom-and-pop-operation based on a philosophy of "common sense," Smith said. So the couple is preparing to hand over control to a management team. Most of the members of the team worked their way up within the company since its incorporation in 1979. Others gained managerial experience at other companies and were pursuaded to join Ne-Mo's as it became successful.

THE MOVE WILL take a lot of trust on the part of Ne-Mo's founding family. But the Smiths are confident that they have assembled a group of worthy professionals.

"It'll take time for me to have enough faith that they will be making more good decisions than bad," said Smith, who is looking forward to spending more of his time looking for new business opportunities. "You've got to be able to let a guy make a mistake."

"But now we're competing with the big boys," reminds Mrs. Smith, referring to large, established competitors such as Kitchens of Sara Lee Worldwide, a division of Consolidated Foods Corp. "We have to make the right decisions every time or we're going to lose." Then, she wondered aloud: "Can they (the new managers) protect everything we worked so hard for?"

"This is a problem common to small businesses," said John Tumpack, Small Business Administration spokesman in Los Angeles. "Sometimes a small business will fail after it is established because...they (the original founders) tend to want to continue to control the entire operation themselves when it is physically impossible to do so due to the size of the company."

Nevertheless, Tumpack said, "As a company grows, the managers have to develop the ability to delegate authority and surround themselves with a management team."

THE STORY of Ne-Mo is one that the Smiths relate with gusto. It begins when they married out of high school in 1971, and moved to Encinitas from Chicago a year later.

Six months after they moved, while sitting next to a pickup truck one afternoon, Smith and a group of friends began brainstorming for ways to make money. After his third beer, Smith exclaimed: "I've got it! We're going to take that old truck and haul trash."

A few days later, Smith and his friends were cruising the Encinitas area in the truck when Smith spotted a building with a huge pile of trash outside. The owners of the building, which housed Demar Cheesecakes Inc., a local franchise of a New-York-based cheesecake-maker, at first turned down Smith's offer to haul the trash for $100. But a week later they called.

Smith raised the fee to $200 because, he said, "the pile had grown." He also seized the opportunity to ask: "Do you need a dish-washer, a cook, a floor-sweeper, anything?"

Two weeks later Smith was working for Demar as a cheesecake pan-washer making $2.50 an hour.

Soon, he was alternating between making cheesecake one day and delivering it the next, trying to absorb as much information about the business end of the operation as he could.

BY 1974, two years after he took the job, Smith said he had learned enough to realize that Demar's "management had failed to develop a marketing strategy.

He quit Demar just before it folded that year for a higher-paying job at a small bakery nearby. At a beach party later, a friend offered to sell a small bakery business selling honey-cheesecake to health food stores in the local area.

"She wanted $500," Smith says. "I offered $250, with the remainder to come." She accepted.

Without equipment, experience or working capital, the Smiths threw themselves into a business with a mere 10 clients.

"Mary got pregnant, and we started mixing ingredients in the baby tub," Smith says. "We imposed on all our neighbors for help (such as for the use of their refrigerators)."

About that time, the Smiths received a call from a co-owner of the defunct Demar franchise who said some former customers were still clamoring for his cheesecake. Without hesitation, the Smiths began cultivating Demar's list of former clients, including the Hyatt Regency and Hilton hotels in San Diego. They also added carrot cake to their product line.

Unknown to the Smiths at the time, Sandy Ginsberg, who distributes food items to 500 7-Eleven stores on the West Coast through his Los Angeles-based Sandy's Enterprises Inc., was in the market for good carrot cake. At a restaurant in San Diego, Ginsberg said he tasted what he called an extraordinarily rich and moist carrot cake with a light frosting that practically sold him on the spot. The restaurant owner said it was produced by "Ne-Mo's of Encinitas."

The surroundings seemed humble, but Ginsberg took a shine to the way that Ne-Mo's carrot cake was hand-wrapped in plastic, giving it a "home-made" look. Feeling that he had a winner, Ginsberg contracted with the Smiths to sell carrot cake to 7-Eleven stores in California — doubling Ne-Mo's business almost overnight.

NE-MO'S LIST of clients has grown since to include American Dietary Products, a division of American Hospital Supply Corp., and the Carl's Jr. restaurant chain, among others.

Child-resistant caps saving children's lives

McLEAN, Va. (AP) — Despite the extra effort required to open one of the child-resistant closures, the American public opened 2¾ billion CRCs in 1983 — thereby saving lives, an industry official reports.

Since the 1970 Poison Prevention Act was passed requiring child-resistant safety caps on medicine and certain household products, there has been a significant decrease in accidental childhood poisonings, said John B. Carroll, executive vice president of the Closure Manufacturers Association. The membership of the CMA, with headquarters in McLean, is largely responsible for creating and manufacturing child-resistant packaging.

For example, in 1973, ingestion of oral prescription drugs by children under 5 accounted for 4,180 hospital visits nationally. In 1981, the latest year for which complete figures are available, the number had dropped to 2,688 and has steadily fallen each year since the CRCs have been used.

Sevres vase

Antiques: Museum can help determine Sevres vase's age

By JAMES G. McCOLLAM
Antique Appraisers Association of America
Copley News Service

Q. I have been told that the marking on the bottom of this vase indicates that is Sevres. Can you confirm this and tell me its vintage and value?

A. The National Manufactory of Sevres (France) used at least 50 different marks during their 250-year history. The mark on your vase would determine the vintage. However, Sevres porcelain was copied by many of its competitors — not just the styles but also the marks.

The only way you can be sure is to take your vase to a local museum where they can actually examine it.

Q. My porcelain chocolate set (pot with four cups and saucers) has a pearlized finish decorated with roses.

I have attached a sketch of the mark on the bottom. I would appreciate any information you can provide.

A. RS Prussia porcelain was made by both Erdmann and Reinhold Schlegelmilch in Suhl and Tillowitz, Germany.

Your chocolate set was made around the turn of the century and would sell for $500 to $600.

Q. How do you tell the difference between a genuine Currier and Ives print and a reproduction?

A. The original prints were made in three sizes:

Small — 7.8 by 12.8 inches.
Medium — 13 by 20 inches.
Large — 18 by 27 inches.

These measurements are for the printed area — not including the margins, which should not be cut off.

If the size is right, examine the print with a magnifying glass. The colors should be solid areas — not a series of small colored dots.

DEAR ABBY

Christmas suggestions don't please all

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Bless your heart for repeating that column on what to give and what not to give older people for Christmas.

This year instead of getting perfumes, dusting powder and a lot of useless jewelry and trinkets for the house, I received tins of tuna, chicken, ham, packets of instant soup mixes, herbal tea, assorted cheeses and fancy cookies for guests. What practical gifts!

Please run that column every year, Abby. — LOVE YOU IN BENTONVILLE, ARK.

DEAR LOVE: Thanks, but not everybody in Arkansas "loves" me. Witness this letter from Fayetteville:

DEAR ABBY: I wish to high heaven you would stop putting out that list of gift suggestions in which you recommend food for elderly people.

Ever since you put that out, we have gotten great heaps of food for Christmas, and we simply loathe it! Not only do we not need it, we can't eat half of it.

Last year we got enough cheese to keep all the mice in Christendom happy. I don't like cheese, and my husband can't tolerate dairy products of any kind.

We were given a whole smoked ham, which we gave away because neither of us can eat smoked meat, and what is more, we don't care for it. We also got candy and fruitcakes — unwelcome gifts because they make us bulge in the wrong places. I could go on and on.

Abby, we do not need food. I love jewelry, perfume and nice things for the house and my husband loves records, books and camera equipment.

Now for heaven's sake, please stop recommending gifts for older people! — ELDERLY BUT NOT HUNGRY IN ARKANSAS

DEAR ABBY: I'll make this short and to the point. Last year I had a rather brief affair with my boss. (He's married, I'm not.)

I thought I was pregnant in August, so I told him and he quickly gave me $300 for an abortion. Well, as it turned out, it was a false alarm, so I spent the $300 on clothes and never told him the abortion wasn't necessary.

He still thinks I had the abortion and my conscience is bothering me. I rationalize it in my own mind by telling myself that the scare was worth the $300.

What do you think? — GUILTY CONSCIENCE

DEAR GUILTY: Scare up $300, give it to your boss and tell him the truth.

DEAR ABBY: May I use your column to send a message of thanks to the people back home?

I'm sure I can speak for everyone here in Lebanon when I say that we are proud to serve our country as multinational peacekeepers.

I want to thank every kind person who sent us Thanksgiving and Christmas cards, as well as care packages and gifts. Their generosity showed the true spirit of love and caring, and made the holidays a little brighter for those of us who were thousands of miles from our families.

Protecting freedom requires losing some, but the taste of giving is sweet! — K.J. BLACK, ROCHESTER, N.Y., DEPLOYED IN BEIRUT, LEBANON

Coupons: Is using them really worthwhile?

Copley News Service

Perhaps it has happened to you.

You are in a hurry to pick up a package of cereal so you can run back home for a quick breakfast before rushing to work. However, the shopper in front of you has an expansion file full of coupons and she stands in front of the corn flakes, which is what you want, searching through the coupons for the right one. Her shopping cart and eight children block your path to the shelf.

Then when you get to the express lane, cereal in one hand and a half gallon of lowfat milk in the other, you find that the shopper ahead of you has 12 items, each with a manufacturer's coupon (at least two are out of date) plus three of the store's double-the-value coupons, and you must wait until the cashier sorts it all out.

And you wonder, are coupons really worth the trouble? And is there really such a thing as an express lane?

Forget the latter. Cornell University has done research on coupons, however. The findings? Coupons can save you money — and if you don't use them, you are simply supporting others who do. However, studies also have turned up coupon drawbacks, some you may not have even wondered about.

ADVERTISERS love cents-off coupons, whether you actually use them Or not. They get your attention and fix brand identity. You read them, study the terms and often clip them out and store them. And that's an advertiser's dream.

Louie Gonzalez, a spokesman for Safeway, said that supermarkets such as Safeway have no role in the issuing of cents-off coupons like those in newspaper advertising supplements.

However, he said supermarkets will try to capitalize on the manufacturer's offer by publishing "double coupons" to attract customers using the discounts into their stores. Within some limits, a double coupon from a store doubles the value of a cents-off coupon.

He said if there is a large volume of coupons, the store will gain economically because it is reimbursed a few cents for handling each item.

Cornell reports that coupons have become a standard in food and related advertising. In 1982 alone, 120 billion of them were distributed. Six billion were redeemed. They averaged in value 21.7 cents each and saved consumers using them $1 billion. However, the industry lost $350 million through fraudulent use of coupons.

Home economists will advise you that if you use coupons on products you normally buy, they save you money you would otherwise have spent. However, if you use them compulsively, you may be spending money you otherwise wouldn't have spent.

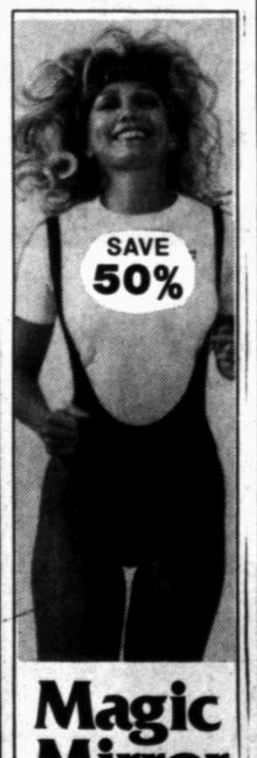

For example, coupons — found in newspapers, magazines, mailers or inside product containers — are most often offered for packaged foods that are easily stored and distinguished by brand name. Instant coffees like Taster's Choice, Folgers and Maxim often offer coupons ranging from about 40 to 50 cents off on jars of the products.

HOWEVER, THESE products tend to be highly processed and heavily advertised and are more expensive than products of other competitors, Cornell reports. So the item promoted by coupon is not necessarily the least expensive product within the product category.

Fix 'leaky' windows

NEW YORK — Many homeowners do not realize that up to 45 percent of a home's heat can be lost through "leaky" windows that have loose frames and can't be tightly shut, according to Ralph Vasami, chairman of the Vinyl Window and Door Institute.

A simple indoor test for leakage, he said, is to move a candle around the frame on a cold, windy day. If the flame flickers or dies out, the window is leaky.

Kea Tawana, 46, stands on a roof next to the ark he is assembling from scraps and scavenged lumber on the lot of a Baptist church in Newark, N.J. Tawana hopes to have the 86-by-18-foot sailing ship ready by this spring. He plans to take to the water because, he says, "things have gotten so disgusting on land."

Caretaker constructs new ark to sail away from Newark

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A church caretaker is fashioning scrap and debris from abandoned buildings into a modern-day ark, hoping to sail away from the blight that surrounds him to "live in peace" on the seas.

Kea Tawana has been working on the wood-frame vessel since August 1982. He says the 125-ton, four-masted ship, which is 86 feet long and 18 feet wide, will be ready to sail this spring.

"It will have three decks, just like the original ark," said the 46-year-old Tawana as he nimbly climbed through his vessel in the neighborhood where he has lived for 10 years.

There will be "no two of everything, just me and my three cats," he said with a smile, adding he plans to recruit a crew of six former merchant seamen — his former vocation — when launch time draws near.

"Things have gotten so disgusting on land," Tawana said with a shake of his head. "There's no peace on land. I'm going to build a ship so I can live in peace on the great seas. The original ark was for man's salvation. This is for my salvation.

"I can sail up the Great Lakes and tie up in some cove until they build a superhighway and when the neighborhood gets too crowded, I can sail away," he said.

Tawana lives next to the ark in a small house he built on truck wheels in case he had to move. His yard is filled with piles of wood and scrap metal.

The ark will have four canvas sails and a diesel engine from an old truck. A gasoline-powered generator and transformer taken from an elevator shaft will provide electricity and light.

Tawana said the hull and ribs of the ship — bound in iron from fences that once rimmed lawns and fire escapes — will be able to break through three feet of ocean ice.

USIA begins world television network

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Information Agency has launched an international television network to help American officials explain the Reagan administration's policies around the world.

Due to the hotly competitive nature of the international news business, however, the broadcasts have stirred controversy among U.S. journalists who want to monitor the programs and broadcast portions of them. But questions of congressional intent are keeping U.S. dissemination of the material at a trickle.

The system, known as Worldnet, carries programs beamed over complex satellite hookups to American embassies. They offer the chance to foreign journalists to interview U.S. officials about major international issues.

The network is the brainchild of USIA Director Charles Wick.

"It's a technical nightmare," said Jan Hemming, a special assistant for media relations at the agency, but adds that "it's amazing how it has all fallen into place."

In two recent programs, Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Henry A. Kissinger, chairman of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America, answered questions posed by journalists in 13 foreign capitols.

Shultz, in a Washington, D.C., studio, took queries from journalists in the embassies in London, Rome, The Hague, Brussels, Bonn, Paris, Geneva and Stockholm.

Several hours later, Kissinger — who was in Brussels — was interviewed by journalists in Mexico City, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Caracas, Venezuela, and Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Questions from the journalists — who must be invited by the embassy to participate — ranged from Kissinger's recently issued report on Central America to U.S.-Soviet relations and the deployment of U.S. nuclear missiles in Western Europe.

Since November, the agency has broadcast about 15 such programs to Europe. The Kissinger program was the first to inaugurate the links to Central and South America, she said.

The programs last for about an hour, often giving the foreign journalists a longer chance to question the official than he or she would permit reporters to do in the United States. They are also "on the record," which means the official's name and comments can be used in the journalists' news stories or on local television and radio news shows.

But the new television programs will not be seen in the United States in their entirety because the agency is barred by Congress from disseminating its product within America's borders. This is to prevent the system from becoming a government-run propaganda organization, according to staff from the House Foreign Affairs and Senate Foreign Relations committees.

U.S. and foreign journalists based in Washington have expressed their concerns to USIA about whether the interview programs offer journalists abroad more access to Washington officials than they get. The Washington journalists argue that they should be able to monitor what U.S. officials are saying to listeners overseas.

nation in brief

Trees may have saved family from crash of small aircraft

PEQUANNOCK, N.J. (AP) — A row of trees probably reduced the impact of a small airplane which grazed a house and then crashed, says the homeowner, who with his family escaped injury although all four people aboard the plane died.

The pilot of the twin-engine Cessna 310 reported engine trouble shortly after taking off from the Lincoln Park Airport and apparently was trying to turn back when the crash occurred at 1:30 p.m. Sunday, an airport spokesman said.

Homeowner Stephen Van Sant, 28, said the plane's right wing was sheared off by a 30-foot fir tree. The plane damaged the roof, pulled off gutters and shingles and knocked a hole in a first-floor wall.

Aid diverted to businessmen

CLEVELAND (AP) — El Salvador's Central Bank has taken little action to halt diversion of U.S. economic aid back to the private American bank accounts of Salvadoran businessmen, officials quoted by the Plain Dealer say.

No concrete figures exist on how much aid has been siphoned off by such transfers to dummy U.S. companies through inflated requests for aid, the Plain Dealer newspaper reported Sunday.

It said a confidential study done by Arthur Young & Co. for the U.S. Agency for International Development cited the fund transfers as a problem, although an AID official at the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador said the transfers are rare.

U.S. loses bid-rigging case

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — The government lost a bid-rigging case against four of the nation's biggest electrical contractors because it "couldn't produce a single witness" who would testify that the alleged scheme took place, a defense lawyer says.

The two-month U.S. District Court trial was based on an indictment charging the firms with rigging bids to share contracts on five nuclear plants in Washington and Indiana. It ended Saturday with acquittals for the companies and six of their executives.

Defendant corporations were Lord Electric Co. Inc. of New York City, L.K. Comstock Co. Inc. of Danbury, Conn., Commonwealth Electric Co. Inc. of Lincoln, Neb., and Fischbach & Moore Inc. of Dallas.

Frontier DC-9 lands safely

IRVINE, Calif. (AP) — Fire trucks and ambulances stood by but proved needless when a Denver-bound Frontier Airlines DC-9 Super 80 returned safely to John Wayne Airport because of engine and landing gear problems on takeoff.

Cincinnati's nuclear power plant to burn fossil fuel

CINCINNATI (AP) — The announced conversion of the nearly finished Zimmer nuclear power plant into a coal-burning facility would be the first such transformation and could set a "new benchmark" for other utilities, officials said.

Three utilities building the plant on the Ohio River near the town of Moscow halted construction Saturday and, citing costs expected to rise to $3.1 billion and the uncertainty of securing an operating license, announced that Zimmer would be converted to a 1,100-megawatt, coal-using facility.

When announced in 1969, the estimated pricetag for the plant 28 miles east of Cincinnati was $240 million.

But Zimmer, 97 percent complete, has cost $1.6 billion so far, and critics plan to watch the conversion to see what it means for consumers.

"It's never been tried before," said Brewster Rhoads, local director of the Ohio Public Interest Campaign, a consumer group opposed to the nuclear plant. "They will be setting an industry first, a new benchmark from which to compare similar conversions around the country."

He added, "We're concerned that we may end up with a Rolls Royce coal conversion plant when a freshly built Ford Escort version would do just fine.".

W.S. White Jr., chairman of the Columbus & Southern Ohio Electric Co., said he knew of no other conversion of a major commercial nuclear plant to coal use.

White said estimates were that the finished coal-fired facility would not cost more than the $3.1 billion for a nuclear Zimmer. However, another partner, Dayton Power & Light Co., has estimated the conversion would cost an additional $350 million.

Officials of the three partners, which also include Cincinnati Gas & Electric Co. — said many details haven't been decided. However, they said it could be finished by 1991.

"All we've done is agree in principle what we're going to do," said project manager William Dickhoner, president of CG&E.

Air Vermont works to regain wings

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — Air Vermont kept its 17 planes on the ground for a third day today as airline officials worked to solve maintenance problems that the Federal Aviation Administration said "threaten flying safety."

But the commuter airline hopes to be flying again Tuesday or Wednesday, said Air Vermont executive vice president, Joel Blumenthal.

"We're revising our manuals and getting our paperwork straight, which is essentially what the problem is," Blumenthal said.

"They want to see the Ts crossed and Is dotted the way the regulations state," he said, adding that because of the airline's recent growth, "We haven't been able to keep up with our managerial system."

OVER the past year, the number of passengers Air Vermont carries has jumped from 1,700 to nearly 10,000 a month, Blumenthal said. Its fleet includes eight- and 15-seat planes.

The FAA is continuing its inspection at the carrier's Burlington base, and has said the suspension will remain in effect until the problems are cleared up.

The commuter airline, which serves New England, New York and Washington, D.C., voluntarily grounded its planes Friday night.

Robert Whittington, director of the FAA's New England region, said the problems uncovered by the agency involved aircraft maintenance practices and were "serious enough to threaten flying safety."

The FAA has refused to detail the problems.

AIR Vermont is the second U.S. carrier to ground its planes after an unfavorable FAA review in recent months. Air Illinois also voluntarily surrendered its certificate last month, but has since resumed operations.

Two weeks ago, the FAA investigated an unscheduled takeoff by a plane that Air Vermont was in the process of buying.

Last October, an Air Vermont plane skidded to a safe stop after landing gear collapsed during a landing.

The carrier has had some other mishaps, but Blumenthal said they were not related to the FAA review. He confirmed the bottom half of a door blew open during a Jan. 10 Burlington-to-Boston flight because a latch wasn't fully closed. No one was hurt.

"IT happens to aircraft every day. It's not that exotic an incident," he said. "I don't mean to downplay it, but it does happen."

Blumenthal said the airline is optimistic the FAA review will prove the airline is perfectly safe.

He said alternative flights had been found for everyone who booked flights on Air Vermont through Monday.

Life in Tibet

The Potala Palace in Lhasa, Tibet has been the seat of the ruling Dalia Lama since the 16th century.

LHASA, Tibet — The yak-butter lamps that burn before the Lord Buddha in the Potala Palace and the Jokhang cathedral here must never go out, according to Tibetan legend, or the whole country will plunge into a preternatural darkness.

During China's decade-long Cultural Revolution, however, the lamps were extinguished, and Tibet is only now emerging from the darkness that religious Tibetans attribute to this sacrilege.

Most of Tibet's 1.9 million people lived for more than a decade at what is officially acknowledged today as a bare subsistence level. Some probably starved, because of mistaken agricultural policies imposed by Peking.

Tibetan villages and nomadic herdsmen alike were reorganized along Chinese lines, bringing social disruption. Work was collectivized, fields and herds merged, cottages were taken over by the state, village headmen were replaced by Communist Party cadres.

Religion, which for Tibetans gives life its meaning and measures its rhythms, was brutally truncated by the closure of all monasteries and temples, the destruction of most of them and the forced secularization of almost all the lamas, or monks.

"RETRIBUTION," said a wizened lama at Drepung Monastery, once Tibet's largest with more than 10,000 monks. "Retribution. There are some things that are forbidden, and when man attempts them anyway, there is retribution. Life has a harmony and it must be observed."

For Tibetans, some of that harmony is being slowly restored as China revises its policies in Tibet, which it "liberated" in 1951 and put through "democratic reforms" after an abortive rebellion by the local aristocracy in 1959. Before then, the Himalayan mountain kingdom, three times the size of California, was virtually a medieval theocracy, ruled by the Dalai Lama — whom Tibetans revere as the reincarnation of the Buddha of Mercy — his lamas and a feudal nobility.

Now, religion is in a period of extensive revival with monasteries being restored and new monks recruited. Despite a severe three-year drought, most farmers and herders are substantially better off than at any time in the past two decades, and supplies of food and consumer goods in the markets appear to be ample.

Tibetan officials are starting to take charge of the regional government, nominally autonomous but always controlled by ethnic Chinese. And Tibetan culture, though not flourishing, is no longer regarded as a threat to Chinese sovereignty over the once-independent mountain kingdom.

"Mistakes are being corrected," said Yong Pei, director of Tibet's nationalities affairs commission, "but it will take time, some more years, before we can do all we need to do."

TIBET IS China's most backward province. Its per capita income is $111 a year. All development efforts and most government operations must be financed by Peking, which this year will provide $300 million in aid.

Although Tibetans have transistor radios, tennis shoes and factory-made felt hats, their adobe houses are heated by burning yak dung, and their diets of yak meat, milk, butter and roasted barley have declined in nutritional value since 1960, according to Chinese studies.

Just 56 percent of school-age children attend classes, and only 22 percent complete five years of primary education. Nearly 70 percent of Tibetans are illiterate in their own language, and those able to read and write Chinese well are put officially at "a few per cent."

To raise living standards quickly, Tibetans will pay no taxes until 1985, and the province is getting increasing funding, 10 percent more each year, from the central government. Peasants are, basically, to be allowed to grow what crops they want and be paid premium prices for whatever they sell to the state; herders may keep — or sell — as many head of livestock as they wish.

"Policy regulations should be relaxed, relaxed and relaxed again," Hu Yaobang, the Communist Party's general secretary, told officials here during a 1980 visit that some Tibetans call their "second liberation." For five years, the government should concentrate on correcting its past mistakes and on raising living standards, Hu said; later, it could embark on a broader development program reaching into the 1990s.

BEFORE THE current reforms, at least a third of Tibetans were acknowledged by officials here to be worse off than they were before 1959, when the Dalai Lama fled into exile in India and Chinese took over administration, and only a year and a half ago officials said that more than 100,000 were still living "just above the starvation level."

During his visit here three years ago with Vice Premier Wan Li, Hu blamed "ultraleftism" for most of China's mistakes in Tibet over the years. But the solution of greater autonomy implied Peking's recognition that its rule had been too heavy, that Tibet may be part of China politically but that Tibetans are not Chinese.

"Autonomy means having the right to decide for oneself," Hu declared, though there are definite limits to those rights within China's communist system. "Anything that is not suited to Tibet's conditions should be rejected or modified," he added.

Implementing those instructions, however, is proving hard. The reasons include these:

—There are not enough educated, experienced Tibetans to staff the government, particularly its economic organs. In 1980, there were 120,000 ethnic Chinese working in Tibet, but more than 20,000 of them have been transferred in the past two years, their posts taken by Tibetans, according to officials here, and 8,000 to 10,000 more are expected to leave this year.

BUT THE outflow will then slow, the officials said, and more Chinese technicians and scientists will be recruited to work in the new development drive. No plans have been announced to reduce the huge Chinese military presence, estimated at 150,000 to 300,000.

About 70 percent of government officials, including department directors and their deputies, are Tibetans, an increase from 56 percent three years ago, but such a large proportion of them are from neighboring provinces — more than 2 million Tibetans live outside Tibet — that local Tibetans hold only half of the government and party posts here.

Ethnic Chinese stationed in Tibet, an assignment they regard as the ultimate hardship post because of the high altitude (even the valleys are above 12,000 feet), severe climate (winter temperatures of minus 40) and poor living conditions, were told to learn Tibetan and to respect Tibetan culture. Still, few can manage more than a phrase or two in Tibetan, and the deep division between Chinese cadres and the Tibetan people is evident everywhere.

"From the time we arrive, we are counting the days until we can return home," a middle-aged electrical engineer on a five-year tour said. "No one likes the place, and the Tibetans resent us. But what's to be done?"

—TIBETAN farmers are again growing barley, their staple, on about 60 percent of their land, rather than wheat, which Peking ordered cultivated in 1972 in the belief that it was a "superior grain." Their fields, however, have not regained the fertility lost as the wheat depleted the soil of nutrients, and the worst drought in 53 years seems certain to cut the harvest by 10 percent to 15 percent again this year.

Tibetans are also moving away from collectivized agriculture, but local government officials, nervous about this departure from Maoist orthodoxy, are imposing more stringent limits than in many places in China.

—In culture, Tibetan songs, dances, and literature are again encouraged after long being banned as "nationalistic," but 25 years of Chinese influence has left a strong mark in both subject matter and style.

Traditional Tibetan dances are choreographed as Chinese dances would be, and songs are in praise of the Communist Party. The national Tibetan epic has been republished in enough copies so that almost every family here can have one, but the themes chosen by young Tibetan writers on the state payroll are indistinguishable from those elsewhere in China.

Tibetan art, which always found its inspiration and subject matter in religion, is now largely a matter of handicraft work.

"OUR WRITERS, musicians and artists must first of all be patriotic," the director of a music and dance school, an ethnic Chinese commented. "We want no chauvinism."

—Politically, most officials remain several years behind the thinking in Peking; indeed, pictures of Hua Guofeng, deposed as the party chairman in June, 1981, for leftist mistakes, were taken down only a few days before a visit by foreign correspondents this month.

Officials also stress that the revised policies do not amount to a return to the old Tibet with its feudal political and economic system when 95 percent of the people were serfs and land was largely held by the monasteries and the aristocracy.

"The rebellion in 1959 was bad, but it brought good," said Yong Pei of the nationalities commission. "Because of the rebellion, Tibet was completely liberated, the slaves freed and peasants were given their own land. Great changes have taken place in Tibet since liberation."

In short, there is no going back. The Dalai Lama, who is negotiating terms for a visit here in 1985, could return as the spiritual leader of Tibetan Buddhists, but not as their ruler. The aristocracy and the lamas are being rehabilitated, often after long periods in prison or labor camps, and some are getting government positions, but the Communist Party has no intention of yielding real power to them.

Religion will be tolerated "for generations and centuries to come," as officials put it, but it will not again be the creative cultural force it was earlier. Monasteries will be rebuilt, but in limited numbers so they will not become the center of life in every village.

New monks must prove their "patriotism" before they are admitted to the monasteries. Religious freedom, even Buddhist leaders now say, is allowed only "under the leadership of the Communist Party."

The expressive faces of some Tibetans, young and old, reflect their lives. Tibet is China's most backward province, with a per capital income of $111 a year. But Tibet is in a period of religious revival and Tibetan officials are starting to take charge of the regional government, which is nominally autonomous, although still controlled by ethnic Chinese.

Two merchants cut into a big hunk of yak butter at central market in Lhasa, Tibet. The butter has been packed inside a yak stomach lining.
