PAMPA — A man accused of two shootings and four counts of drug delivery will see the inside of prison after a July 18 guilty plea netted him 25 years.

Robert Albert Conner, 19, pleaded guilty in District Court to a single count of delivery of a controlled substance, a first degree felony. Conner was arrested April 1 when he turned himself in to the Gray County Sheriff's Office. The warrant for his arrest was issued on March 31 - along with warrants for 10 others - as a result of an investigation conducted by the Panhandle Regional Narcotics Trafficking Task Force. It was alleged task force officers purchased cocaine from him on Feb. 16.

Conner was earlier indicted on two counts alleging attempted murder in the shootings of Rhoston Young, 19, and Brian Keith Watie, 21, both of Pampa. Young was shot March 4. Watie was shot in April 5, 1993.

Both attempted murder charges against Conner were dropped because of his conviction on the drug delivery charge, court documents say.

Nicholas Marcel Prentice, 18, pleaded guilty to a single count of delivery of a controlled substance the same day. Prentice, originally charged with three counts, was assessed 10 years in prison, $1,000 fine and $600 restitution. It was alleged that Gray County deputies purchased crack cocaine from Prentice on Dec. 30, 1993.

The two other charges were dropped against Prentice because "he was convicted in another case," court documents say.

PAMPA — Four naked swimmers are in custody today following a predawn romp in M.K. Brown swimming pool, 701 E. Kentucky.

Officer Alvin Johnson discovered four skinny dipers in the city pool about 4:50 a.m., officials say. The group robbed when Johnson approached whereupon he hauled them off to jail on a charge of criminal trespass.

Bond was set at $750 each on Eduardo Hernandez, 19, 1197 Prairie, Gerald Reyes, 17, 433 Hill, Brandy Michelle Romans, 17, Elk City, Okla., and Candy Rayne Vermillion, 19, Elk City, Okla. They were transferred to Gray County jail where they remain.

PAMPA — Dr. Dawson Orr, president of the Greater Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce and superintendent of the Pampa Independent School District, will be the featured speaker at Friday's noon meeting of the Downtown Kiwanis Club.

Orr will be updating the Kiwanis members on a number of projects currently underway by the chamber designed to help promote the community.

Anyone interested in hearing him speak is welcomed to attend the luncheon which is held in the basement of the First United Methodist Church which is located at the intersection of Ballard Street and Foster Avenue.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Christy Henrich was a fierce competitor — a "bull," a "tank" whose nickname was E.T., for Extra Tough. But by 1990, the 4-foot-10 gymnast was so weak from eating disorders, she withdrew from competition.

On Tuesday, she died at age 22.

A victim of anorexia nervosa and bulimia, Henrich died of multiple organ system failure after more than two weeks in the hospital. Research Medical Center wouldn't say how much she weighed at her death, but she had wasted away to 60 pounds a year ago.

"She was an extremely strong person. She was a bull, just a tank," said her former coach, Al Fong, who became estranged from the Henrich family after confronting the teen-ager in 1989 about her eating problems.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A judge cleared the way for DNA testing of blood samples today in the O.J. Simpson murder case amid signs the defense will wage a molecule-by-molecule battle over evidence.

At an emergency hearing Wednesday, Judge Lance Ito affirmed his decision that defense experts could remove 10 percent of each of the samples before the prosecution's testing began this morning. Officials at the laboratory had wanted their own technicians to do the job.

The defense, meanwhile, objected to Ito's requirement that they use the lab's equipment to cut their samples, which were to be stored at the lab until Ito decides if they can conduct their own tests.

The blood undergoing testing was swabbed up at the crime scene, Simpson's white Bronco and Simpson's estate.

A defense expert, Dr. Henry Lee, was seen entering Cellmark Diagnostics in Germantown, Md., shortly before 9 a.m. today, when DNA testing was to begin. Lab officials wouldn't comment on today's testing.

Clean water, but no trucks to distribute it to Rwandans

GOMA, Zaire (AP) — In an effort to reduce congestion and the spread of deadly cholera, relief officials opened four new camps today for the 1.2 million suffering Rwandan refugees jammed in and around this border town.

The new camps bring to eight the number of sites staked out on the rocky, volcanic plain north of Goma for the refugees, who have been dying at a rate of more than 1,800 a day from diseases spread by lack of sanitation and clean water.

Because latrines cannot easily be dug in the hard soil, almost every square foot of the older camps is covered with the slime of human excrement and vomit from victims of the cholera epidemic sweeping through the wretched masses.

Ray Wilkinson, spokesman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, said officials also had won approval from the local government for the Zairian military to truck refugees out of Goma and into the nearby camps.

He estimated between 50,000 and 100,000 Rwandans were in the town itself, which formerly had a population of 80,000. Diseases are beginning to spread through the local population, he said.

The estimated 1.2 million ethnic Hutu refugees fled to eastern Zaire from neighboring Rwanda this month as rebels led by the minority Tutsis routed the Hutu government army.

The Hutus feared rebels would take revenge for the massacre of 350,000 to 500,000 people, mostly Tutsis, by Hutu militias from April to mid-July, although no evidence of reprisals has surfaced.

The camps themselves became immediate breeding grounds for disease and death — a process accelerated by the mounting toll of rotting, unburied bodies. About 18,000 people have died in the past week.

Despite the desperate need for clean water, a U.S. Army purification unit was running at only half capacity because there weren't enough trucks to deliver the water. Millions of gallons are needed.

U.N. organizers said they were searching for tanker trucks in Zaire and shipping in about 10 from Uganda and Croatia.

John Crosthwaite of Britain's Overseas Development Administration said officials hope to get six trucks today. "You should see most of the water go," he said.

U.S. Army engineers churned out 46,000 gallons of clean water Wednesday, but only two trucks — one leaky and the other unable to carry a full load — were available. The engineers slowed production because they had only enough room to store about 33,000 gallons.

"Of course we're disappointed because we have worked day and night to produce this water like the U.N. wanted, and it's just sitting here," said Maj. Eric Hanson, a supervisor at the Army plant at Lake Kivu, contaminated with parasites and floating bodies.

Yards from where the engineers worked, refugees filled up cans from a spring contaminated by human waste.

Some 2,500 French troops have been digging mass graves, using earth-moving equipment and explosives to blast through hardened lava, but they are too few to both handle the burials and protect refugees from ethnic slaughter — their original mission.

Conferees fall short of crime bill compromise

WASHINGTON (AP) — House and Senate negotiators were near agreement today on a compromise $30.2 billion crime bill that includes a ban on assault-style firearms, dozens of new death penalties and life sentences for third-time felons.

Negotiators worked until 2:15 a.m. and then returned a few hours later in their rush to iron out differences between differing crime bills passed earlier by the House and Senate. They hoped to finish today, setting the stage for final congressional passage and sending the legislation to President Clinton.

Clinton was speaking to more than 200 police officers at the Justice Department this morning on the need to pass the crime bill, which also includes billions to put 100,000 more police officers on the street, build new prisons to house more violent criminals and fund dozens of programs to prevent young people and others from turning to a life of crime.

The assault-style firearms ban and a controversy over allowing the use of statistics to help prove racial bias in death penalty cases have drawn the headlines.

But the sticking points at the end — tying up key negotiators behind closed doors for three hours early today — involved such issues as how much prison construction money should be saved for states with tough sentencing laws.

Conferees, wrapping up work on the bill today, agreed to drop the House-passed Racial Justice Act, which would allow the use of racial statistics to help prove bias in death penalty cases.

Nussbaum says meetings with regulators were proper

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former White House Counsel Bernard Nussbaum denied today that he or anyone else at the White House tried to influence the government investigation of the Whitewater affair. He said the meetings he had with banking regulators "were proper."

"I did not, nor as far as I am aware, did anyone else at the White House ever seek to direct the outcome of or interfere with that investigation," he told the House Banking Committee on the second day of its hearing into Whitewater.

Looking back at the mood in the White House in late 1993, Nussbaum said Whitewater was "not a major crisis." He said he was concerned about the possibility that President Clinton and Hillary Rodham Clinton would be questioned about potentially improper campaign contributions from Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan.

Nussbaum said he was told by the Treasury Department's general counsel, Jean Hanson, that there was a referral for a possible criminal investigation of an Arkansas savings and loan — Madison.

"The Clintons were not objects or targets of the investigation. They were potential witnesses" as investors in the Whitewater land deal with the owner of the thrift, Nussbaum said.

Republicans countered that the Clintons were given special treatment by receiving information about the Madison investigation.

Nussbaum recalled his experience as a staff lawyer on the House Judiciary Committee during its Watergate investigation and said he would never be part of any effort to "obstruct justice."

Describing a series of meetings he had with government officials, Nussbaum said, "We recognize that as a general proposition, they should not occur. However, there was no flat prohibition."

But Nussbaum said the discussions were justified because the White House needed to be informed to respond to press leaks about the investigation.

He spent considerable time explaining the one contact that his successor, White House Counsel Lloyd Cutler called improper.

Nussbaum acknowledged that he questioned whether it was proper for Roger Altman, the acting head of the RTC, to recuse himself from the investigation last February.

Altman was an old friend of the president and also served as deputy secretary of the Treasury — a top administration position he still holds.

Cutler testified Tuesday that Nussbaum's comments "may have influenced Mr. Altman's decision on Feb. 3 to defer recusal." Cutler said the conversation did not violate ethical standards, but "this discussion should not have taken place."

Nussbaum told the panel today that there was "no legal or ethical" reason for Altman to step aside, and therefore it would have "set a bad precedent for the Clinton and future administration."

Nussbaum said it was his conviction if there were no conflict of interest an official like Altman has a responsibility to do "his or her sworn duty."

Nonetheless, Nussbaum said he did not order Altman what to do. "I left it to him to make his own decision."

Meeting by meeting, Nussbaum explained the contacts he and his office had with regulators between the fall of 1993 and this spring concerning the RTC investigation into a failed Arkansas savings and loan

Two men free after shootout arrest

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS

Two of three men accused Monday of engaging in a gun battle along US 60 near the Cabot Plant have been released from Gray County jail without being charged in the exchange.

Darrin Keith Hughes, 21, and Jerol Ramonda Toms, 21, of Amarillo were released from jail about 3:15 p.m. Wednesday with no charges filed against them. The pair plus another Amarilloan, Patrick O'Neil Howard, 22, were taken into custody Monday evening after a 911 caller reported an accident and gunfire near the Cabot Plant.

Sheriff's deputies reported Tuesday occupants of two cars, a 1982 Dodge and a 1982 Buick, were exchanging gunfire as they traveled west on the highway. It appeared one car pulled in front of the other in an attempt to stop it and both crashed. Both cars had dealer tags from used car lots in Amarillo.

Howard was charged Wednesday with attempted murder and his bond set at $20,000 by Justice of the Peace Bob Muns. The warrant charging him with the offense was served in county jail about 3:15 p.m. Wednesday, said Gray County investigator Jess Wallace.

Wallace said the men apparently began to quarrel in Amarillo about three weeks ago. The investigator said he is aware of two or more related incidents in which Hughes, Toms and Howard reportedly shot at each other.

Apparently on Monday, Hughes and Toms traveled together to visit a Pampa resident, while Howard traveled to Pampa to visit another Pampian, Wallace said. The trio met on US 60 and Howard fired off at least six rounds from three different weapons including a 12-gauge shotgun, 9 mm pistol and .40-caliber pistol. There is no evidence Hughes and Toms shot at Howard, Wallace said.

The Buick, in which Hughes and Toms were traveling was destroyed in the collision. There were two bullet holes in the car body. The Dodge body showed no evidence of gunshots, Wallace said.

Attorney files suit against former clients

By JEFF CARRUTH
Staff Writer

One law suit has been filed and a Houston attorney says another one is imminent as allegations of malpractice, fraud and conspiracy are traded in the aftermath of the settlement of a lawsuit against Hoechst Celanese.

Amarillo attorney Tom Upchurch, Jr., on Monday filed a suit in Potter County's 47th District Court against about 40 of his former clients who agreed to a settlement in the Celanese suit. Upchurch claims in court documents that the parties committed fraud, conspiracy to commit fraud and interfered with contracts between him and his clients.

The suit alleges that the then-plaintiffs made false representations to Upchurch so that he would settle the case and they could later pursue action against Upchurch.

Upchurch, through his attorney, alleges in a petition that his former clients were listening devices to "set up" their attorneys for coercion claims.

The document also says investigator Larry Sexton told Celanese plaintiffs to accept a settlement and "then later renounce this settlement as having been coerced."

Court documents also accuse the attorney's representing the settling plaintiffs of solicitation before the Celanese case was settled and they interfered with the relationship between Upchurch and his clients.

Celanese and all but a few of more than 800 plaintiffs agreed in May to a $25 million settlement in law suits alleging environmental emissions caused health problems in area residents.

The action by Upchurch comes after attorney's for the settling plaintiffs, including Houston malpractice attorney Larry J. Doherty, sent letters giving notice of a malpractice claim to Upchurch and two other lawyers, Wayne Barfield and Tom Hayden, who worked on the Celanese suit.

Doherty said all the parties listed as defendants in the Upchurch petition signed the settlement and are listed as plaintiffs in the letters sent to Upchurch.

Doherty called Upchurch's suit retaliatory. Doherty said the filing of a malpractice suit was eminent since there have been no responses to the letters. Parties served notice of a malpractice claim in a letter have 60 days to respond before a suit can be filed under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act.

According to Doherty, his clients claim Upchurch, Barfield and Haydeg coerced them to agree to the settlement and that the amount of the settlement was inadequate. The complaint also alleges that the attorneys were unprepared for trial and signed the settlement agreement on behalf of a dozen plaintiffs without their knowledge.

Doherty alleges his clients previous attorneys turned down a much larger settlement in hopes of winning a test case.

Barfield has filed a non-suit which separates him from the law-suit filed by Upchurch.

Upchurch and Sexton were not available for comment. Two parties involved in the malpractice claim refused comment.

Petroleum council proposes marginal well tax incentives

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tax credits are needed to reverse the shaky economic outlook for operators of the nation's more than 500,000 marginal oil wells, the National Petroleum Council recommended Wednesday in a report to Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary.

Such a safety net could prevent the abandonment of 50,000 marginal wells and help stabilize a segment of the energy industry that accounts for almost one-quarter of domestic production, the advisory group said.

"Marginal wells are by definition endangered," said the study, which was presented at a council meeting. "It is important to recognize that marginal wells almost always run out of money before they run out of oil and gas."

The report, requested last year by O'Leary, offers some recommendations that parallel a tax relief package being pushed on Capitol Hill.

The tax credit proposed by the Petroleum Council would provide marginal well operators a certain dollar amount per barrel of oil, with the credit kicking in if the average price of oil fell below a certain amount.

Marginal wells are defined as those producing 15 barrels per day or less, or those producing heavy oil. They account for some 700 million barrels of production a year.

"Preserving marginal wells is central to our energy security," said council member John Miller, who presented the study.

While the report didn't recommend a scale, council members privately had kicked around proposals that would phase out either at $16 or $20 a barrel. Under one scenario, the report examined a $3 per barrel tax credit if oil prices dip to $8 a barrel, with the credit diminishing as prices rise.

The plan being touted by Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., and a coalition of dozens of other lawmakers would phase out at $20 a barrel.

During a meeting last month with interested lawmakers, President Clinton stressed that any tax relief could not add to the federal deficit.

'Reform Riders' continue voyage into Oklahoma

Protesters wave signs and yell slogans as the Health Security Express pulls out from the Arlington Convention Center on Wednesday. Associated Press Writer

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The Clinton Health Security Express hits the road again today, taking its "Reform Riders" and push for universal health coverage to northeastern Oklahoma.

A bus carrying Henry Cisneros, the U.S. Housing and Urban Development secretary, and about 20 supporters of President Clinton's health reform plan stopped in Oklahoma City on Wednesday.

Cisneros hailed the first leg of a trip from Texas to Washington, D.C., as history in the making, saying it would help ensure the passage of universal health coverage.

"I don't know what plan it will be in," Cisneros said, "but it will include universal coverage, just you watch."

"I don't see congressmen being able to go to the public and explain why they didn't vote for universal coverage," he said. "That's where the spotlight is."

Cheers from about 400 supporters of the plan and boos from an equal number of opponents greeted the bus as it arrived at an Oklahoma City union hall. Chants of "Health care now!" were answered by "Who's gonna pay? Who's gonna pay?"

More protesters are expected to turn out in Tulsa today when the bus stops for lunch at a Unitarian church before continuing on to Springfield, Mo.

St. John Medical Center, a member of the Catholic Health Association, had been selected as a stop for the caravan in Tulsa. However, the hospital said Wednesday it would not be on the agenda because of its opposition to abortion.

"We urge the White House and Congress to consider abortion as an issue separate and distinct from health care reform," the hospital said in a statement.

Several Health Security Express buses are rolling across the nation toward Washington to gather middle class support for the Clinton plan as Congress nears the wire in approving some health care reform proposal in 1994.

One reform rider from Athens, Texas, gave tearful testimony on Wednesday about how his middle class family fell through the cracks.

John Cox, 59, said his family lost health insurance when he changed jobs, and his wife, Jan, avoided going to the doctor until her stomach pain became unbearable. Doctors diagnosed her as having stomach cancer, he said.

"We didn't have the money to go see the doctor, and because of that, my wife is dying," Cox said.

Cisneros touted the benefits of the Clinton plan, emphasizing that all of the nearly 39 million Americans who currently lack insurance would be covered. He also cited reports showing that one out of every four Oklahomans goes without coverage.

"Tell me Oklahoma is not going to be a winner" under the plan, he said.

The secretary's audience was comprised mostly of a group of retired United Auto Workers who arrived in four busloads from a regional meeting in Norman.

Several supporters said they weren't there to necessarily back the Clinton plan but to lobby for health care reform in general.

Richard Ross, of Holsville, Texas, was chosen to make the bus ride after writing letters to his congressmen about his difficulty in getting coverage for his family. But Ross, 39, also hesitated to pledge his support to the Clinton plan.

"I don't want to see what happened to me, happen to those other people," Ross said, pointing to the protesters. "I support universal health coverage. If the Clinton plan is the only one with that, then I'll support it."

Most of the protesters came from three groups: Citizens for a Sound Economy, United We Stand America and the National Taxpayers Union.

"We thought we'd be here to show them Oklahomans don't want government-run health care," said Larry Stein, president of the Oklahoma branch of Citizens for a Sound Economy.

Spokesman denies 'spy' charge

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — A spokesman for U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas, says an allegation that a spy was planted in the campaign of her Democratic opponent Richard Fisher is "totally frivolous."

Fisher campaign manager Robin Rorapough says she learned about the spy rumor when she overheard a conversation on a crowded airliner, where she was inadvertently seated near Mrs. Hutchison's husband, Ray, and other GOP officials.

"Dirty tricks like these demean the office of U.S. senator and the entire electoral process," she said. "This kind of cloak-and-dagger backroom dealing merely reinforces voter cynicism about government."

Mrs. Hutchison's press secretary David Beckwith said the allegation wasn't true.

"I'm surprised she didn't accuse Ray of stealing her salted peanuts on the plane," Beckwith said.

In a complaint sent Wednesday to the Federal Election Commission, Ms. Rorapough said she found herself seated on the airliner near Ray Hutchison, state GOP Chairman Tom Pauken, Dallas County Sheriff Jim Bowles and Kay Ryon, an aide to GOP lieutenant governor candidate Tex Lezar.

During the Monday morning flight from Dallas to Austin, Ms. Rorapough said, Hutchison told the others: "We've had a spy over there in the Fisher campaign since May. We know everything they're doing."

Ms. Rorapough alleged that Hutchison also quoted figures from "private internal Democratic Party polls" and asked Pauken to help get the National Rifle Association "to spend some money to help us" in the senator's re-election bid.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Clinton pays a high price for free market

Perhaps we missed the announcement. When Bill Clinton managed to scrape together the votes of 43 percent of those Americans who chose to turn out in 1992, did he also become president of Poland?

If so, it hardly bodes well for the people of Poland, since the U.S. president seems to have so little comprehension of what really creates and drives a free-market economy.

It was difficult to figure out which country Clinton considered himself leader of when he spoke to the Polish parliament on his visit: "Today we are announcing new initiatives that will pump hundreds of millions of dollars into the Polish economy," he said. "For example, our government, along with some of our nation's largest labor unions, has established a $65 million Polish partners fund to promote new investments in business. We are also working to quicken the speed of privatization, to assist people in finding new jobs and housing, to help protect you and your citizens from the economic pirates of organized crime."

Altogether, Clinton announced more than $200 million in aid to Poland — $25 million in military aid (of a total of $100 million he will ask Congress to take from American taxpayers), $75 million to promote private ownership, $25 million in loan guarantees for housing construction, $20 million in loans to small businesses — and the $65 million to encourage foreign investment.

This is supposed to be part of a program to speed the transition from a centralized, government-controlled economy under communism to a free-market capitalist economy. Pardon us if it sounds more like a transition from one form of socialism to another form of socialism.

A genuine free-market economy isn't built on loans and favors from governments, either foreign or domestic. It is built on the willingness of entrepreneurs to take risks. You don't build that kind of economy with subsidies and market-distorting incentives.

Clinton has the equation backwards. What a society building a free economy needs more than money seized from productive Americans is the promise of freedom. Free people who are assured they will be able to keep the fruits of their labors will then find the money or create new wealth.

To be sure, with the death of communism, the president of the United States (whoever holds that position) has become the most important and influential leader in today's world. But our president doesn't have unlimited power to send money to fix every problem in the world — and it wouldn't work if he did.

American politicians, if they had the wit and humility to listen, could probably learn a great deal from the former subjects of communism about how freedom is more important than money. But President Clinton seems to prefer to sweep through Europe with our checkbook, like some sort of international social worker. That's hardly the description of real leadership.

"Say, that reminds me — I've got to get back to WASHINGTON."

Living up to Clinton's promises

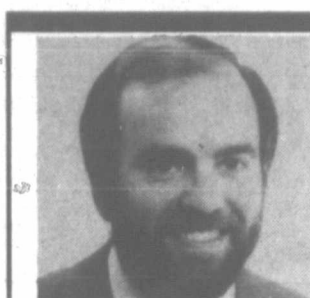

Americans have often been distressed to learn that there isn't necessarily any connection between what Bill Clinton promises and what he does. In the case of Haiti, however, the vexation arises because he may actually end up doing what he is now merely yammering about — namely, using military force to remove the existing dictatorship. That option looks likely not because the president has suddenly acquired a backbone but because he has deftly managed to deprive himself of every other choice.

Clinton insists that the current rulers must step down and accept the return of exiled president Jean-Bertrand Aristide, whom they evicted in a 1991 coup. "We have got to put an end to this," he announced after they ordered the expulsion of international human rights observers this month.

But the economic sanctions Clinton has used against the regime have not had the desired effect. And they have had an unwanted result: inducing tens of thousands of Haitians to flee toward the United States by sea to escape their collapsing economy.

That exodus has also been stimulated by the president's policy toward Haitian refugees — which was to allow the processing of asylum seekers on boats and in nearby countries, abandoning his previous policy, which was to forcibly return them to Haiti. This new approach generated such a deluge of refugees that it was quickly replaced by another, which is to place Haitians in temporary "safe havens" outside the United States. If that doesn't work, we can always invade.

Americans may have trouble understanding why we need to send the Marines to stop a surge of refugees that is largely caused by a U.S.-sponsored economic embargo. The administration prefers to blame the outflow on political repression, but even in the tyrannical days of Baby Doc Duvalier, the number of Haitians coming here amounted to only a few thousand a year. The flood didn't come until after the sanctions made it impossible for ordinary Haitians to earn a living.

Lifting the embargo would stem the tide, but it would undermine the administration's other and more important goal, which is to revive democracy by returning Aristide to his elected office. One problem is persuading Aristide to accept our hospitality: "Never, never would I agree to be restored to power by an invasion," he proclaimed recently.

The coup was a defeat for democracy, but that doesn't mean Aristide's return would be a victory. In the first place, he hardly governed like a democrat: A radical leftist, he encouraged mob violence, spurned the elected parliament and preached Marxist "liberation theology." His refusal to build bridges to the military and the opposition eventually precipitated the coup that sent him into exile. Aristide is a casualty of Haiti's instability but also a cause of it.

Unscheduled transfers of power are nothing new to Haiti, which has never enjoyed anything resembling stable representative government. Democracy was supposed to flower when Duvalier fled the country in 1986, but it proved too fragile a plant for Haiti's barren soil. There is no reason to think it can survive on its own today.

If the United States wants to assure that Aristide will not just regain power but be allowed to keep it, outside military forces will have to hang around for the remainder of his term. To preserve democracy, they'll have to stay even longer. In either case, they may get to fertilize Haitian democracy with their blood.

The administration would like to leave that onerous duty mostly to others, preferably neighboring countries, so we can make a quick getaway. But Clinton's search for help in this hemisphere has so far gotten him nothing but doors slammed in his face. The deputy foreign minister of Mexico says that "non-intervention is the position of the whole region, with very few exceptions."

Mexico has particular reason to be alarmed at the idea that the United States has the right to invade any country sending too many migrants. Even Panama's new president, who owes his office partly to the 1989 U.S. invasion, says his government "could not approve of a unilateral invasion of Haiti." If the United States wants to undertake the long-term reconstruction of Haiti, it will have to do the job itself.

Turning Haiti into a ward of Washington would be an expensive and possibly futile enterprise. It would also be a surprising arrangement for Aristide, who has made a habit of denouncing U.S. power. A few years back, he said, "It is monstrous to come down here and impose your will on another people."

But Aristide could probably learn to love seeing the United States impose its will. It may be easier for him than for the American people, who can take some comfort from the knowledge that if this action leads to disaster, their president has lots of practice at changing his mind.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Thursday, July 28, the 209th day of 1994. There are 156 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Two hundred years ago, on July 28, 1794, Maximilien Robespierre, a leading figure of the French Revolution who was the principal spokesman for the Reign of Terror, was sent to the guillotine, a day after he was overthrown and arrested.

On this date:

In 1540, King Henry VIII's chief minister, Thomas Cromwell, was executed.

In 1750, composer Johann Sebastian Bach died in Leipzig, Germany.

In 1821, Peru declared its independence from Spain.

In 1868, the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, guaranteeing due process of law, was declared in effect.

In 1896, the city of Miami, Fla., was incorporated.

We all outlive styles and methods

Charley Reese

Hamp Gandy, who was chief of detectives in the county sheriff's office where I began my career as a reporter, would not fit the image of the L.A. cops with their suits and college degrees and neat haircuts.

Hamp had an overhang around his belt line, favored sports jackets and slacks off the discount rack and invariably wore a soggy, 3-inch cigar in the corner of his mouth. Still, he was a fine old cop, without fear and quite shrewd in his investigations.

Our first meeting, though, was somewhat stormy. The old cop-beat reporter had taken me out to the county jail to introduce me, and there had been a murder the night before. We got all the information about it that we needed from the uniform guys who were already back from the scene.

As we were leaving, however, Gandy arrived. The body had been found in a swamp and Gandy was wet and mosquito-bitten. He'd been up most of the night and was not in the best of moods. The old reporter introduced me as the new kid who would be covering the beat and Gandy said, "Well, come on into my office, and I'll tell you about this murder."

At that point, I made big mistake. I was only 19, but still I should have known better.

"Well, thanks a lot," I said, "but we already have all the information we need."

Maybe you have seen the space shuttle go off. You know how it sort of sits there, trembling and rumbling for a moment before taking off. Well, old Hamp did the same thing and then exploded. He snatched the cigar out of his mouth, slammed it on the floor and commenced to shout in a voice that could be heard five blocks away, while pacing up and down, waving his arms, jamming his finger at my direction and looking much put upon.

"Well, don't this beat all. Don't this just beat all. I spend the whole (expletive, expletive) night wading around in a (expletive, expletive) swamp and I come in here and some (expletive, expletive) snot-nosed kid knows more about the (expletive, expletive) case than I do..." Etc. and so forth for about five minutes.

Well, I never made that mistake again. I never told anybody what I knew if they wanted to tell me something. No reporter ever should, because no matter how many different people tell you something, they will often add some tidbit of information you don't already have.

Both policing and reporting were a lot more informal in those days. I made a lot of good friends and used to ride with officers on the midnight shift on my own time. In fact, I liked it so much I seriously considered giving up journalism to become a full-time cop. My best friend, a deputy, talked me out of it, though.

He was right, too, because I don't have the temperament to make a good law enforcement officer. I would never, for example, be able to get a child abuser to jail alive. I've seen a lot of people shot, cut, stabbed, beat to death, burnt, drowned, mangled and mashed in accidents, and in various states of decomposition, and none of it bothered me too much as long as they weren't children. But I can't abide a child harmer.

It's just as well, because policing wouldn't be as much fun today, just as newspapering isn't as much fun today. Both of our trades have been more or less bureaucratized, no doubt due to the excessive numbers of lawyers and accountants who have sprung up in the country in the post-war years.

But it used to be a lot of fun, and I know how men who do it get hooked on the excitement. Even on a slow night, with a few calls, there is always the anticipation that any moment you'll be right in the middle of an adrenalin-pumping action.

Old Hamp lost his job when the sheriff got defeated, and ended his days as a private detective. He had outlived his times. His style and methods and way of life were no longer fashionable. We all outlive our times eventually, if we don't get killed soon enough.

Surviving those harried summer get-aways

As I contemplate my upcoming vacation, I've found this thought coming to mind more and more: Do you think if I just told everyone I was going somewhere swell, then contracted with some underpaid secretary at the Chamber of Commerce there to sign my name to some postcards and mail them to my friends, I could just stay home in the air conditioning, order pizza in and read a couple of good books?

Some people are unlucky in love; I'm unlucky in vacations. One of my problems is that I'm motel-impaired. If there is only one hell-pit among an entire mile-long strip of motels, I will find it.

I have stayed in a motel run by a family from a country so foreign I expected to see an aproned goat pushing the maid's cart down the hall the next morning. The smells wafting from their kitchen when I checked in reminded me of the time my dad put all the bagworms off our trees in a big pile and burned them.

Twist ties and beer-can tabs held fast to the shag carpeting in my room, where a small boy stood on a kitchen chair trying to get the cable connection to work. As soon as he'd step down, the screen would collapse into snow. "I see if Mom let me stay here a while so you have TV," he offered. I declined.

But the worst motel was just outside Dallas, the one with the big neon sign broadcasting "$29.95 for two." When the clerk conducted business through a sheet of bullet-proof glass, that should have been my first clue. When I discovered the $29.95 was only for two hours and the entire night would be $80, that should have been my second.

Sarah

And when I heard cars coming and going more frequently than at the drive-up window at McDonald's, that should have sent me right back into my car and onto the interstate. But noooooooo. I had to stay until I heard gunshots.

Vacation problem No. 2 is that I can't seem to pass a convenience store without thinking I have to have something to drink, yet I never seem to need to go to the bathroom until I'm on a lonely stretch of road that hasn't seen a gas station in 20 years.

That certainly makes for some big road-trip fun, especially if you're traveling with a man who avails himself of every rest stop in North America (and, by the way, is unfairly equipped by nature to make a discreet pit stop at the side of any road if necessary). You're on the turnpike and he's yelling at you, "You should have thought of this before we started out!" And you're begging tollbooth attendants, "Just let me go wherever it is you guys go! I know you must have a bathroom in there!"

Problem No. 3 is that I'm somewhat deficient in the houseguest department. I don't like having to share anything, much less a bathroom with five other people. Would you like to stay with a person who strings jars of makeup and goober goo on every inch of a vanity, someone who holes up in the only bathroom for an hour and a half every morning? Well, neither do my hosts.

I don't like to hear the shrieking of small children before 10 a.m., even if they are my godchildren and there's a smiling photo of me with them on their parents' mantel. I don't like to hear them whining in the shopping malls, no matter how long we've dragged them around by their little arm sockets while we look at clothes.

But perhaps my most damaging problem is that I never leave myself enough time to recuperate before going back to work. I allow just enough time to drive home, catatonic and not speaking to anyone, the day before I'm due back. I leave the car loaded up and fall into bed with my clothes on, all my underwear dirty and wadded in a trash bag. Sandwiches rot in the warm cooler in the back seat.

I stumble out to the car the next morning and pop the top on a warm Diet Pepsi from the cooler. I go to work loaded up like the Joads on the way to California, and just hope I recover before the next three-day weekend rolls around.

"I composed this music dreaming about beautiful future with blue sky, green grass and happy children," writes 8-year-old Nadia Artamonova from the former Soviet Union.

"It may be that the old astrologers had the truth exactly reversed, when they believed that the stars controlled the destinies of men. The time may come when men control the destinies of stars," writes 76-year-old science fiction writer Arthur C. Clarke.

Their thoughts and those of nearly 40,000 other Earthlings — captured on an optical tape along with offerings of music and pictures — were to blast into space tonight, tucked inside a small metal capsule aboard a satellite rocketing into orbit 22,300 miles overhead.

It's treasure trove expected to circle Earth for eternity.

"This is an archive that will await future discovery by an archaeologist or an individual of a future age — archaeology in reverse," said Jim Ferren, director of the not-for-profit SpaceArc project at the Rochester Museum and Science Center in Rochester, N.Y.

Some of the estimated 39,800 messages of immortality that will stay bottled up in space for millions of years came from: Apollo 17 commander Eugene Cernan, last man to walk on the moon; Mercury astronaut Donald "Deke" Slayton, who died last year; Vice President Al Gore; more than 200 prisoners; more than 1,000 members of The Compassionate Friends Inc., a support group for parents whose children have died; and more than 1,000 terminally ill youngsters.

The dying children were always positive, Ferren said. "I can deal with anything that's coming my way," they wrote, "but the only thing

I worry about is how my parents will feel."

The prisoners were contrite: "Most of them talked about how much they wished they hadn't screwed up."

No message was refused. Abortion, capital punishment, drugs, religion — you name it, there's a message. Usually extreme: "By the time you find us, we're probably going to be extinct and if we are it's because of the following reasons ..."

"(Censorship) would have skewed the value, the content of the archives," Ferren said. "In order to give an accurate position of what our society or civilization was like in the early 1990s, we left it in there."

For an even broader view, Ferren enclosed CD-ROMs of Compton's Encyclopedia and the CNN program "1993: The 100 Defining Moments" and a compact disc featuring the music of 18 groups, including Peter Gabriel and Jimi Hendrix.

The messages, from 50 countries, have been coming in since 1988. In many cases, organizations from school districts to the British Broadcasting Corp. and the Voice of America paid the nominal entry fee. NASA promoted the project in classrooms around the world.

For Ferren, the idea of someone finding the capsule someday is the romantic part of the project he dreamed up for a high school paper in 1972. What interests him even more is the creative, introspective process behind the messages.

Hughes Communications Inc. donated space on its DirecTV satellite for the 8-pound time capsule. The satellite will be boosted a few hundred miles after its 12-year working life. At that altitude and barring a collision, the craft and its contents should last indefinitely.

Unlike NASA's Pioneer 10 hurtling deeper into space with a plaque on the outside, there's no message on the exterior of this satellite, no hint at all of what's inside.

"To us, it seems just as exciting and romantic if it just remains there kind of as a hidden jewel, never unearthed, never found," Ferren said.

High-stakes communications auction goes into fourth day

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a high-stakes game, companies are attempting to outbid each other in the fourth day of a federal auction for new communications licenses.

Auction officials from the Federal Communications Commission had expected the bidding frenzy, which started Monday, to wind down by Wednesday, with winners being declared. But it didn't.

"These companies don't want to quit," said FCC spokeswoman Susan Sallet.

Winners could be declared at any time. Under the rules, bidding continues round by round until there are no new bids for any of the 10 licenses.

By the last round for Wednesday, total bids increased fivefold to $513 million from nearly $100 million Monday.

From the start of bidding Wednesday, total bids rose by nearly 30 percent, from $395 million to $513 million.

The 27 companies are vying for 10 licenses to offer a vast array of advanced wireless services — including two-way messaging and paging — on a nationwide basis.

Proceeds from the FCC's first auction of slices of the airwaves go to the U.S. Treasury.

The FCC will auction licenses for regional and metropolitan-sized markets later this summer.

Under licensing rules, consumers will have a choice of service providers in every city across the country. The FCC's plan is designed to create competition among companies, which, in theory, should lead to the lowest prices for consumers.

"The more these companies pay for a license the more they will have to compete to offer low-priced services to consumers in order to turn a profit on investment," FCC Chairman Reed Hundt said in an interview.

The 10-year licenses are for different-sized chunks of the public airwaves, with the big ones more likely to fetch larger bids.

What cost test tube baby? Study: $72,000

BOSTON (AP) — While a single attempt to make a test tube baby costs about $8,000, the procedure fails so often that the average price of a successful pregnancy approaches 10 times that, according to a study published today.

Sometimes couples are able to produce babies on their very first try at in vitro fertilization. But usually they must make several attempts, and even then they may fail.

So researchers set out to find the average cost to society when the many misses are weighed against the occasional successes.

Their conclusion: The average price is $72,000, depending on how many times couples try.

The study conducted by Dr. Peter J. Neumann of Project Hope in Bethesda, Md., was not intended to answer the question of whether it's worth it.

"That's the important question that comes out of this, but it's not a question that can be answered unless you compare it to other things," he said.

Big price tags are hardly rare in medicine. The average cost of a normal delivery is $10,000. Costs go up as people grow older. A coronary bypass operation to relieve chest pain — one of medicine's most routine major procedures — may add up to $40,000 or more.

Some insurance companies routinely pay for in vitro fertilization; many do not. Eight states require companies to cover it.

Neumann's study is the first to put a price on success. He said insurance companies might use the data to decide how many tries to pay for.

The study, published in the New England Journal of Medicine, was based on a review of charges at six large in vitro fertilization centers.

In this procedure, a woman receives fertility drugs to stimulate egg development. Eggs are then removed, mixed with her partner's sperm and put back in her uterus.

The first time around, there is a 12 percent chance of success. With each successive try the overall odds that couples will achieve a pregnancy grow worse.

Army begins coed basic training

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The Army will begin putting male and female recruits in the same training units later this year, making permanent an experiment the military began last year at Fort Jackson, The State newspaper reported.

Secretary of the Army Togo West will announce the new policy in a visit to the fort on Aug. 4, an Army spokeswoman told Columbia newspaper Wednesday.

The Army will create coed squads and platoons for basic training, said Sgt. Dawn Kilpatrick, an Army spokeswoman in Washington.

The news come in the same week that the Army announced it is opening about 32,000 jobs to women, including slots in attack helicopters and air defense units.

The Army attempted to integrate male and female basic trainees in the late 1970s, but abandoned the practice after disappointing results. Among the problems were high dropout rates for women because of injuries such as muscle pulls and shin splints, the newspaper reported.

Panel votes against Rogaine without prescription

By PAUL RECER
AP Science Writer

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Upjohn Co.'s hopes of selling the anti-baldness drug Rogaine without a prescription are receding. A scientific advisory panel gave the potentially lucrative marketing idea a thumbs down, with one expert calling Rogaine a "marginal product."

The committee, composed of doctors and pharmacists, voted 10 to 4 Wednesday to recommend to the Food and Drug Administration that Rogaine not be sold over-the-counter.

The agency generally follows the recommendations of its advisory committees, but is not required to.

Upjohn, which has sold Rogaine as a prescription drug in the United States for six years, had asked permission to market the drug so that patients could buy and use it without physician supervision.

But a group of FDA scientists that reviewed the Upjohn proposal did not endorse the Upjohn request.

"We ... feel that this is a marginal product to grow hair in male and female" baldness, the FDA's Dr. Seymour Rand told the panel.

He said the FDA found that about two in five men using the product "will grow moderate amounts of ... hair ... within four to 12 months."

For women, he said, one in five will grow "modest, discernible" hair within eight months.

To keep the new hair, said Rand, both men and women have to continue using the drug.

Committee chairman Randy P. Juhl, dean of the School of Pharmacy at the University of Pittsburgh, said the committee felt that even the modest benefit of Rogaine could be lost to patients who take the drug without medical supervision.

"There's a tremendous investment of patient time, energy and money, and the committee was concerned that people would not have realistic expectations" without a doctor's guidance, said Juhl.

He said that trials showed that 26 percent of men who use Rogaine had some hair growth after four months, while about 11 percent of a control group, who used a product lacking the key Rogaine ingredient, showed hair growth.

"The effectiveness seen in clinical trials may not hold if the patients aren't seeing a doctor," Juhl said.

Upjohn is "disappointed" with the recommendation, said Dr. Joann L. Data, a company vice president. "But the final outcome will be made by the agency."

Upjohn officials presented extensive studies Wednesday showing Rogaine has been used safely by 3.8 million people worldwide, even if patients have other medical conditions.

"This drug is remarkably safe," agreed Dr. Robert L. Reitschel of the Ochsner Clinic in New Orleans, who said he has used the drug on more than 1,000 patients since 1982 and found no side effects.

Rogaine, or minoxidil, is now on the market as a prescription drug for inherited pattern baldness in men and women. Patients spray the medicine on the scalp twice daily, and Upjohn researcher Dr. Paul C. Strauss said 60 percent of men and 40 percent of women tell the company they look better after four months of use.

But by hair count, that benefit is fairly small, said FDA researcher Jonathan Wilkin.

Double agent offers rationale

NEW YORK (AP) — Turncoat CIA agent Aldrich Ames claims he was only "leveling the playing field" and thus helping end the Cold War when he decided to pass secrets to the Soviet Union.

In a lengthy interview with The New York Times, the imprisoned spy said he had concluded the Soviet Union was gripped by its own version of McCarthy-era paranoia, wrongly convinced the CIA had infiltrated all its institutions.

Ames said he decided that if he could show the Soviets that wasn't true, they would realize the country's problems reflected the weakness of the communist system itself.

"Leveling the playing field," as Ames put it, was accomplished by giving the Soviets the names of the best people secretly working for the United States within the Soviet system.

His betrayal, carried out over nearly a decade, resulted in the execution of perhaps a dozen American spies by the Soviet Union — and earned Ames about $2.5 million.

The executions troubled him, Ames said, mostly because it alerted the Central Intelligence Agency that it had a mole.

"It was as if neon lights and searchlights lit up all over the Kremlin, shone all the way across the Atlantic Ocean, saying, 'There is a penetration,'" Ames told the newspaper.

Ames said he believed that the 1980s scandal at the American Embassy in Moscow — where buildings were found to be riddled with bugs and a Marine security guard was convicted of working with the Soviets — was in part a KGB diversion to throw the CIA off his trail.

Ames, 53, was arrested in February. He was sentenced to life in prison without parole in the most damaging espionage case in U.S. history.

Truck crash hurls propane fireballs into neighborhood

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Pal Margittay thought war had come to Westchester County.

"It was like the Hiroshima bomb," Margittay said of the fireball that burst from an exploding tanker 300 yards away and pushed his parked car along like a toy.

That fireball was part of the blaze that seared his sleeping neighborhood early Wednesday when a propane truck crashed, killing the driver, injuring 23 residents and demolishing several houses.

As federal investigators began examining the ruins, attention focused on the problem-plagued records of the truck driver and his employer.

The tanker loaded with 9,200 pounds of propane was traveling from Port Reading, N.J., to a fuel depot on Long Island when it smashed into an overpass support on Interstate 287, about 20 miles north of New York City.

The shimmering heat of the blast washed the midnight sky orange. Fire and truck shards rained down on houses, blackening trees and lawns, turning dozens of cars into smoking metal shells. The force of the explosion hurled the tanker off the road, over a bank of trees and into a house a quarter-mile away.

Ana Espinal, seven months pregnant, was believed to have lived in the house. After an induced labor, she gave birth to a 4-pound, 6-ounce boy who was in satisfactory condition today.

The 27-year-old woman, her husband and her 2-year-old son were all in critical condition, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Others got away. Herman Garcia awoke to hear the explosion and see balls of flame rolling across the floors of his two-story house.

In an intensive care unit, his burned feet and hands heavily bandaged, Garcia said he woke his wife, Blanca, and daughters, Claudia, 13, and Geselle, 9, and called for them to follow him.

"Don't worry," he yelled as they raced toward the roof, the soles of his bare feet scorched from the flames licking his heels.

Neighbors who heard their screams rescued them with ladders. Mrs. Garcia and Claudia were in stable condition and Geselle was in serious condition today.

A total of 16 people remained hospitalized today.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I teach fifth grade in a public school. Many students face a great deal of adversity and disappointment.

Last month, I gave them an assignment that entailed writing a "Dear Abby" letter — either real or imaginary. Needless to say, there were many letters dealing with the usual complaints about siblings; however, one student submitted a letter about one of the biggest problems affecting children today: Parents who fail to keep their promises.

I am sending that letter to you. If you publish it, perhaps parents will take notice.

PHOENIX SCHOOL-TEACHER

DEAR ABBY: Sometimes I get so mad at my mom because she says she is going to come home at a certain time, but she never does. She also tells me she is going to take me somewhere when she gets home, so I wait and wait and wait. No mom. Then when she finally gets home, it's too late to go. This really gets me mad.

What advice can you give me? STEAMED IN PHOENIX

DEAR STEAMED: Calmly tell your mother that her broken promises disappoint and anger you. Explain how important it is to you to spend time together.

All parents, regardless of how busy they are, must first be there for their children. If they have to schedule time together, so be it; that's a fact of modern life. But parents who make promises to their kids, and then continually break them, are setting the stage for a bitter and loveless relationship.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 63-year-old man who has no children — but loves them. A letter in your column a few months ago about a child who had an allergic food reaction and suffered memory loss sent me to thinking: During World War II, I was 9 years old, and just about everyone wore circular metal ID tags stamped with their name, age and address — in case New York was ever bombed.

Almost every Sunday, I see ads in the newspapers where dog owners can send for identification tags for their pets. However, I cannot understand why there are ID tags for pets, but not for children (or even senior citizens) who, at times, don't know who they are or where they live.

For that matter, if children wore the tags in plain view, and those tags were printed with warnings about allergies or medical problems, there would be fewer incidents like the one that was in the article I read.

WALTER KARLAK, WOODSIDE, N.Y.

DEAR MR. KARLAK: Your idea is excellent for people of all ages. There is a company that produces "medic alert" bracelets, necklaces and key chains to be worn at all times to alert potential caregivers to serious medical conditions. These items can be obtained from some pharmacies, medical/surgical supply stores, or by asking your doctor.

DEAR ABBY: I hope you won't think this is too dumb to answer, but when I kiss my boyfriend, I always keep my eyes closed, but sometimes I open them for a split second just to see if he has his closed, too.

Abby, his eyes are always open. Does this mean anything? I think if a fellow is really enjoying a kiss as much as he should, he would keep his eyes closed. Am I wrong? And should I mention this to him?

MELANIE

DEAR MELANIE: Maybe he keeps his eyes open to see if anybody is watching. Don't make an issue of it. Traditionally, love is blind.

Vacationers hooked on Missouri's trout streams

Vacationers enjoy the scenery at Roaring River State Park near Cassville, Mo. Roaring River is one of Missouri's four trout parks. In addition to fishing and camping, they offer nature walks and relaxation for non-anglers. (AP photo/John S. Stewart)

By JERRY NACHTIGAL
Associated Press Writer

CASSVILLE, Mo. (AP) — The thermometer read a steamy 85, but along the banks of the Roaring River the temperature felt 20 degrees cooler. And the living was easy, even if the trout weren't biting.

"Beats the heck out of working, doesn't it?" said Brian Junker, grinning from a lawn chair as he lofted another cast into the fast-flowing current. The spring-fed stream is 58 degrees year-round.

Junker, of Tulsa, Okla., has been bringing his family to Roaring River State Park for summer vacations for about a decade. They pitch a tent at one of 190 campsites, catch and fry a few rainbow trout and explore some of the 3,300 acres of deep hollows and lush woods where Indians once hunted and camped.

The Junkers are among thousands of families who vacation in Missouri's trout parks each year.

Besides offering anglers of all ages a chance to hook a rainbow trout, the parks feature camping, hiking, swimming and a host of other recreation opportunities that appeal to anglers and non-anglers alike.

Roaring River State Park sits in a rugged valley about 70 miles southwest of Springfield.

The state's other spring-fed trout parks are at Bennett Spring State Park near Lebanon and Montauk State Park near Licking. There's also a privately managed trout stream at Meramec State Park near St. James.

Trout season runs from March 1 to Oct. 31. The daily limit is five with a possession limit of 10. A state fishing license is required except for those 16 and younger or 65 and older.

And each angler, regardless of age, must buy a $2 daily fishing tag.

Each park has its own hatchery operated by the Missouri Department of Conservation. Raceways are black with thrashing trout, which take 15 months to grow to the 12-inch length at which they are ready to be stocked.

A designated number of rainbows, most weighing around one-half to three-quarters of a pound, are loaded into hatchery trucks each night and released into the crystal-clear streams to await anglers at sunrise.

"Early in the morning, those trout are pretty vulnerable," said Ron McCullough, hatchery manager at Bennett Spring. "They haven't been exposed to fishing pressure, and they aren't very wary."

But the fish that survive get smarter and warier of hooks, posing a challenge to experienced anglers.

Some of those fish survive to become lunkers. And good-sized brood fish occasionally are added to the streams when they are no longer productive.

"Every once in a while, someone will catch a trout 12, 13 pounds we know wasn't a brood fish," McCullough said.

When the fishing is done, there are plenty of other adventures available at Missouri's trout parks.

At Roaring River, park naturalist Merle Rogers leads visitors on wilderness tours to identify wildlife, wildflowers, aquatic life — even spiders. Those who complete the spider tour receive official cards as members of the "Spider Sniffer Society of Missouri."

A hike along the 3 1/2-mile Fire Tower Trail is a respite from the stress of modern life. The only interruption in the wilderness of prairielike glades and wildflower-dotted meadows comes from the drone of a distant airplane.

The elk, bison and wolves are long gone, but armadillos, bobcats and elusive black bears still roam around Roaring River.

Each of the state parks where trout fishing is featured offers tent and trailer campsites, plus cabins for rent. Stores at each park sell licenses and everything needed to catch fish.

Ozarks scenery surrounds the state parks. Near Bennett Spring, several vendors offer canoe rentals and shuttles for float trips down the Niangua River. And the Current River, one of the Midwest's top canoeing rivers, has its headwaters in Montauk State Park.

While the soothing waters of the springs offer a break from summer heat, the surrounding forests are a visual splendor in fall when the oak, sycamore, hickory and other trees explode with color.

"The foliage and the fishing are excellent in October" at Roaring River, Rogers said. "For whatever reason, the fishing is just better. The days are mild, and some lunker fish are caught that are just beautiful."

National arts festival shows black artists

ATLANTA (AP) — This year's National Black Arts Festival will combine its arts program with special events in collaboration with the Olympic Games Cultural Olympiad.

This is the fourth of these biennial festivals, which celebrate artists of African descent, and it is scheduled to take place from July 29-Aug. 7, with actor Avery Brooks serving as artistic director.

It will feature more than 150 events, with a wide range of performing, visual, media and literary arts. The focus of the Olympic Games programming will be "Celebrate Africa!," described as a showcase for several of the continent's leading contemporary artists.

Academy award goes to a poet

NEW YORK (AP) — The chancellors of the Academy of American Poets have named their recipient of the academy's 60th fellowship: this year's winner is David Ferry.

Ferry, professor of English at Wellesley College and a native of Orange, N.J., is the author of volumes of poetry and works on English literature. He is also a translator of poetry; his most recent book is "Gilgamesh: A New Rendering in English Verse."

The twelve chancellors of the academy, who elect fellows annually, are eminent poets. Past recipients of the award include Robert Frost, Ezra Pound, Marianne Moore and Adrienne Rich.

The academy, now celebrating its 60th anniversary, was founded to assist poets and develop the audience for poetry. In addition to the fellowships, it organizes four major book awards, poetry prizes at 150 colleges and universities, and readings and symposia across the country.

PAMPA — Pampa High School tennis practice begins Aug. 3, beginning at 1 p.m. at the PHS courts, coach Larry Wheeler announced today.

All incoming freshman and new athletes in the program should have physicals completed at this time, Wheeler said.

Athletic can contact Dr. Keith Black at 665-7214 to obtain a physical. Each player should bring a water jug and towel to practice.

BASKETBALL

LAS VEGAS (AP) — UNLV and former basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian ended three years of rancor and litigation today by announcing that Tarkanian has agreed to drop his lawsuits against the school.

"This brings a conclusion to the litigation between the university and the individual defendants and the Tarkanians," interim UNLV President Kenny Guinn said. "After today, I will not be speaking about this matter."

Guinn said Tarkanian and his wife, Lois, agreed to drop their lawsuit so the financially troubled school could spend as much money as possible on students, rather than on settlement.

"They were willing to forego the merits of the university," Guinn said.

In the deal, UNLV agreed not to appeal a District Court order that it pay Tarkanian $250,000 in legal fees for a decade of battles with the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

UNLV also agreed to pay Tarkanian at least $38,000 in sick pay and vacation pay and to cover $60,000 to $75,000 in legal fees the Tarkanians accumulated after filing a second lawsuit against three university officials in September.

"I feel good," Tarkanian said. "I'm glad this is over. We loved the university, we always have. I'd like to be part of the university, to help any way I can."

Along with the university, the Tarkanians sued former UNLV president Robert Maxson, former interim athletic director Dennis Finrock and former university system counsel Brad Booke.

The three, who were accused in the complaint of slander and conspiracy in connection with the coach's 1991 ouster, have since left the school.

"The lawsuit we had was pretty much against them, three people who are no longer here," Tarkanian said.

He credited Guinn with bringing about the settlement, saying no compromise would have been possible before Guinn took over as interim president in May.

"It's such a change to talk to a guy who, after you finish talking to him, you can believe what he said," Tarkanian said. "The best part of all this is you've got a president you can believe and if he says, 'good morning,' it's probably morning."

BASEBALL

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Texas slugger Jose Canseco, who has complained the last few weeks about an expanded strike zone, was thrown out of Wednesday night's game against Minnesota for arguing a called third strike.

Canseco has been arguing about called strikes since the All-Star break and it caught up to him in the seventh when home plate umpire Terry Craft ejected him for the first time this season.

Will Clark, the Rangers' next batter, tried pushing Canseco toward the dugout, but he fended off his teammate to continue arguing with Craft after he had been tossed. He left the field without further incident.

FOOTBALL

AUSTIN (AP) — He plays in the backfield for the Dallas Cowboys and will earn $1.4 million although he rushed for less than 100 yards in 1993.

The Super Bowl champions don't pay "The Moose" for yards he gains rushing. He gets his checks for Emmitt Smith yards.

Daryl Johnston is one big reason Smith will be gunning for a fourth consecutive NFL rushing title this year. "I can't do without the 'Moose,'" says Smith. "The 'moose' moves people."

Johnston rushed 24 times for 74 yards last year and each time "MOOOO- SE" calls rumbled through the stadiums no matter whether the Cowboys were at home or on the road.

Johnston may be the most popular fullback in the NFL since Vietnam veteran Rocky Bleier cleared the way for Franco Harris at Pittsburgh.

The nickname all started innocently enough. Former Cowboys quarterback Babe Laufenberg decided Johnston looked like a runaway moose as he charged downfield trying to find a defender to destroy.

The "Moose" tag spread through the media to Cowboys fans from coast to coast.

Little did Laufenberg realize he would trigger a nickname that would help make the former Syracuse star a folk hero.

Now, Johnston has deals for beer and rubber moose antlers and other commercial endorsements.

"The nickname has helped me tremendously in my career," Johnston said. "It's been a real surprise, especially when you know how it started out. I've received a lot of notoriety that I probably wouldn't have received without the nickname."

Johnston is more than just an ungainly moose. He has hands. And soft ones.

He caught 50 passes for 372 yards last year. The combination of Johnston as a blocker, pass receiver and runner caught the eye of his colleagues.

There was a "Moose" voted into the Pro Bowl last year.

"He's a winner and that's why he gets the big bucks in a position not many people notice," said scouting director Larry Lacewell. "Is there any other fullback you'd rather have in the NFL?"

Johnston has begged new offensive coordinator Ernie Zampese for more chances at running the football.

"Not likely," Zampese smiles. "We like No. 22 (Smith) to do that."

Johnston said the Cowboys shouldn't have much dropoff this year even though Jimmy Johnson got a $2 million retirement check from owner Jerry Jones.

"There is no need to make comparisons between Jimmy and Barry (Switzer)," said Johnston. "What we have here is two coaches with extremely different personalities, but a common goal."

Browning, DeLoach share lead at Tri-State

Joe Bob Browning of Amarillo and Dill DeLoach of Carrollton each shot 69 to tie for the lead in Wednesday's first round of the 60th annual Tri-State Seniors Tournament at Pampa Country Club.

The highlight of the day was a hole-in-one by Loyde Moon of Midwest City, Okla. Moon won free airline tickets with his ace on the No. 5, par 3, 150-yard hole.

"That made my day," Moon said.

It was his fourth career hole-in-one.

Southwest Regional Bambino tourney starts Friday in Pampa

Barbeque planned tonight at Optimist Park

State champions from four states begin arriving in Pampa today as registration for the 1994 Southwest Regional 10 and Under Bambino Tournament got underway at the Optimist Club.

More than 250 people are expected at a welcoming outdoor barbeque at 7 p.m., according to Garry Moody, tournament director. Kevin Davis, May Davis and Jeannie Davis are co-chairs of the barbeque. John W. Warner, an Optimist baseball coach for the last 21 years, will be the speaker. His topic is "Building Better Boys by Baseball."

Tim Hill has headed a grounds crew which has manicured the 11-12 year-old ballpark, which will be the park used for the tournament. Bill Simon is in charge of printing a tournament program.

Terry Ward, with help from Mike Lancaster and Tracey Wright, has gathered souvenirs for the players. The Optimist-Mrs. Club will be in charge of the concession stand during the next week. Whitney Davis is heading up this effort.

James Schaub will serve as the official scorekeeper of the tournament. Robert Dixon Sr., Lanny Schale and Warner will serve as announcers.

Brenda Moody is the tournament coordinator. Overseeing the tournament is Assistant Southwest Region Commissioner John Witherington of Pine Bluff, Ark.

Regional tournaments are being held in seven other locations across the country.

The Pampa National League all-star team is the host team in the tournament. The Pampa National League All-Stars, who won the West Texas State championship last week, will also compete.

The EZO offense

AUSTIN (AP) — Ernie Zampese has often wondered what it would be like to have a great quarterback, great running back, great tight end, great receivers and a great fullback behind a great offensive line.

And all on the same team. Now he knows. Zampese and his famed passing game has found football heaven.

"I don't feel any pressure because of the talent on this team," said Zampese, who replaced now Washington Redskins coach Norv Turner as offensive coordinator. "These are tremendous athletes who respect each other. There's no reason their performance should drop off."

Zampese, who coached Dan Fouts into 3,000-yard passing seasons, said it has been interesting for him to watch Troy Aikman perform.

"Norv did a tremendous job with Troy," Zampese said. "He had the arm and all the talent in the world. Norv helped his confidence. Troy is perfect in this offense."

"I never thought I'd be around a quarterback with this kind of talent again. He's the best quarterback in football. I've never seen anyone any more competitive."

Zampese chuckled at something Turner once told him. "He told me that Troy would go a whole practice without missing a pass," Zampese said. "I believe him now. I've seen it."

Zampese said Aikman is "the most down to earth superstar I've seen. He drives around in a truck and likes to go drink a beer with his offensive linemen. He's such a good person. You'd like to have him for a son."

Zampese got something of a shock when owner Jerry Jones and coach Jimmy Johnson had a parting of the ways. But Zampese has been given a free run by new coach Barry Switzer.

"I was stunned when it happened," Zampese said. "There was a little apprehension. You never know about a new coach coming in."

"Barry has made us feel good. He has told us just to keep on doing what we are doing."

Aikman said getting Zampese from the Los Angeles Rams will make sure the Cowboys offense doesn't miss a beat.

"It was great with Norv, and it hurt when he left. But getting Ernie was the best thing we could have done," Aikman said.

Irvin had another way of putting it.

"People used to call Norv Turner a genius," said Irvin. "But Ernie is the man who taught Norv. If Norv's a genius, Ernie must be Einstein."

Astros down Reds

CINCINNATI (AP) — No wonder the Houston Astros celebrated loudly before leaving town — they'd accomplished twice as much as they'd hoped to.

The Astros knew what they were up against when they arrived for their three-game series against Cincinnati. The Reds led them by one game in the NL Central, had the best home record in baseball and almost never lost in extra innings.

"We came in here saying, 'We've got to win one game,'" manager Terry Collins said. "We didn't want to go out of here four back."

They left with a roar Wednesday after beating the Reds at their own game to claim a share of first place. Jeff Bagwell hit his 34th homer and singled home the tie-breaking run in the 12th inning — his 103rd RBI — for a 7-1 victory that gave the Astros two of the three games.

Afterward, the congratulatory yells in the clubhouse could be heard through two closed metal doors.

"They should be excited," Collins said. "To win two out of three is tremendously important."

"We've gotten ourselves to even," said Bagwell, the man most responsible for the share of first place. "Whoever plays the best to the end of the season is going to be the champion."

PUBLIC NOTICE

TO ALL INTERESTED PERSONS AND PARTIES:

You are hereby notified that Jones Energy, Ltd., has applied for Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission (TNRCC) Air Quality Permit No. 25528. This permit, if approved, will authorize construction of a Natural Gas Processing Plant near Pampa, Gray County, Texas. The location of the existing facility is approximately 2 1/2 miles north of Highway 60 on FM 2391. This facility will emit the following air contaminants: sulfur dioxide, hydrogen sulfide, carbon monoxide, nitrogen oxides, and unburned hydrocarbons.

A copy of all materials in the public file is available for inspection and reproduction at the TNRCC Amarillo Regional Office, Air Program, located at 3918 Canyon Drive, Amarillo, Texas 79109-4996, telephone (806) 353-9251, and at the TNRCC Central Office, 12124 Park 35 Circle, Austin, Texas 78753, telephone (512) 239-1000. The facility's compliance file, if any exists, is available for public review in the regional office of the TNRCC. Inquiries about the permit application and any information concerning any technical aspect of this application can be obtained by writing Mr. Greg Nudt, TNRCC Office of Air Quality New Source Review Program, P.O. Box 13087, Austin, Texas 78711-3087 or the TNRCC Amarillo Regional Office.

You may submit written comments concerning the permit application to the Office of Air Quality, New Source Review Program in Austin. All written comments received within 30 days after the second publication of this notice shall be considered by the Executive Director in determining whether to issue or not issue the permit. All written comments will be made available for public inspection at the TNRCC Central Office in Austin. This notice is to be published on July 28, 1994 and July 29, 1994.

Any person who may be affected by emissions of air contaminants from the proposed facility may request the Commission to hold an informal public hearing and/or contested case hearing on the permit application pursuant to Section 382.056 (d) of the Texas Health and Safety Code. The Commission is not required to hold a contested case hearing if the basis of a request is determined to be unreasonable. All requests for a contested case hearing must be received in writing within the 30-day comment period regardless of whether an informal public hearing has been held or scheduled on this matter. If you wish to request a public hearing, you must submit your request in writing. You must state (1) your name, mailing address and daytime phone number; (2) the permit number or other recognizable reference to this application; (3) the statement "I/we request a public hearing"; (4) a brief description of how you, or the persons you represent, would be adversely affected by the granting of the application; (5) a description of the location of your property relative to the applicant's operations; and (6) your proposed adjustment to the application/permit which would satisfy your concerns and cause you to withdraw your request for hearing. Requests for a public hearing on this application should be submitted in writing to Bill Ehret, Assistant Chief Hearings Examiner, Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission, P.O. Box 13087, Austin, Texas 78711-3087, Telephone (512) 305-9087.

Before a permit can be issued for this facility, the applicant must demonstrate that all emission sources are in compliance with all TNRCC air quality Rules and Regulations and all applicable Federal Regulations. This includes the application of "best available control technology" to each new or modified emission source and compliance with all ambient air quality standards. B-65 July 28, 29, 1994

Israel urges better security for Jews abroad

JERUSALEM (AP) — Fearful that bombings in Britain and Latin America could multiply into a deadly wave of terrorism against Middle East peacemaking, Israel demanded tighter security at Jewish sites around the globe on Wednesday.

In New York, police put 10 garbage trucks around the Israeli Consulate to prevent any car bombs from being parked near the high-rise office building. The trucks eventually will be replaced with cement barriers.

"Based on all the things that have happened around the world, we're being as careful as we can," said Lt. Raymond O'Donnell, a police spokesman.

In Jerusalem, officials accused Britain of ignoring warnings before two car bombs went off outside the Israeli Embassy and a Jewish charity building on Tuesday and Wednesday. Nineteen people were injured in all.

The violence in London comes only eight days after an explosion at a Jewish cultural center in Argentina killed at least 95 people and the bombing of a commuter plane in Panama killed 21, including 12 Jews.

All four explosions had Jews concerned that they were facing the worst wave of terror attacks since the mid-1980s, when bombs hit several synagogues and airlines in Europe.

There were no claims of responsibility for Tuesday's bombs. A group called Ansarallah, which is allied with Shiite Muslim Hezbollah guerrillas, said it was responsible for the attacks in Latin America.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin has blamed Iran and Hezbollah, its satellite guerrilla group in Lebanon, for the attacks in Argentina and London, calling them attempts to derail peace efforts. The bombings in Britain seemed timed to sour the atmosphere as Israel and Jordan ended a 46-year state of war.

Yehuda Milo, a deputy director-general at the Israeli Foreign Ministry, said Israeli diplomats would ask governments worldwide for better protection for Israeli and Jewish offices.

"It must be made clear to local authorities everywhere that the peace process has enemies and brutal ones ... who out of a distorted vision will try to sabotage it," Milo said on Israel radio.

Rabin's adviser on terrorism, Yigal Pressler, warned Israeli travelers to be alert for suspicious objects and behavior while vacationing abroad.

The radio reported beefed-up security at Jewish offices in France and the Netherlands. Police officials in Paris confirmed that steel barriers and extra agents were posted outside certain buildings to prevent car bombs.

Circulars counseling better security awareness have also been put out by Jewish groups in the United States, said an American Jewish official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Milo said a keener alert by British authorities, who were urged to improve security for Israeli and Jewish sites after the July 18 bombing in Buenos Aires, may have prevented the London attacks.

Brig. Gen. Azriel Nevo, the Israeli military attaché in London whose car was charred in the embassy bombing, was more blunt. He told army radio that said the attacks were a result of "what was really a true blunder of the locals here."

Police in London later promised round-the-clock protection to more than 100 Jewish and Israeli sites.

Mohammed Nazzal, a Jordan-based spokesman for the Muslim fundamentalist movement Hamas, denied reports that his group was to blame for the London bombings.

Tutsi refugees surrounded by former killers

By MORT ROSENBLUM
AP Special Correspondent

GOMA, Zaire (AP) — The 4,000 refugees at Kituku Camp, with sturdy tents, medical care, and plenty of water and food, fear another killer than cholera.

They are Tutsis, surrounded by the remnants of a vengeful Hutu army. From within their compound, some shout in frustrated fury at the same men they watched butcher their families back home.

Rwanda is only a few hours' walk from the camp, which is on Lake Kivu at the edge of Goma, Zaire. But to get back to Rwanda alive, the Tutsis say they need a ride, with neutral armed troops riding shotgun.

"I want to go home, today," said Bernard Mbwigaba, 24, who no longer ventures beyond the barbed wire surrounding the camp. Last week, he and Xavier Kakari left to cut wood. A woman yelled, and Hutu soldiers came.

"They took us to their camp and beat Xavier to death," he said. "I got away by lying, saying I was Hutu." Like many Rwandans, he has a parent from each tribe. Nothing is simple in this drama.

The little camp is a telling vignette from the big picture here, a piece of the mosaic that explains why what has happened since April is not likely to be smoothed over any time soon.

Dutch Doctors Without Borders and the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees built the tidy compound — a paradise compared to the new makeshift camps — in June to house Tutsi refugees from the massacres in Rwanda.

As many as 500,000 people, mostly Tutsis, were killed by Hutu militias in Rwanda from April to mid-July.

But after Tutsi-led rebels won control of Rwanda earlier this month, sending more than a million Hutus fleeing to Zaire, the defeated Hutu army ended up camped less than a mile from the Tutsi compound. All around the compound, in every direction, are Hutus still in the mood to murder.

Edouard Rutaganira, a primary school teacher, also wants to leave immediately. He is frightened and homesick. But after the cataclysm, he does not know where home is.

He was teaching at Gisenyi, just across the border from Goma, when Hutu militias began a systematic slaughter of the Tutsi minority, which had ruled the mountains of Rwanda and Burundi for centuries.

Although Hutus had held political power in Rwanda since 1962, Tutsis loomed in the shadows. The spark that ignited the latest bloodletting came after peace accords between Hutu leaders and Tutsi rebels brought new power to the old masters, and was fanned by the death of the Hutu president in a suspicious plane crash in April.

"My wife and three kids were home with my family for school vacation when the killing started," Rutaganira said. "I wanted to run, but first I waited for news of my family."

News came from a friend. "My parents were exterminated," Rutaganira said. "My brother and sister were exterminated. And my wife and children, they were exterminated. I was the only one left. So I came here."

Now the Tutsi rebels have taken over the government, Rutaganira wants to find a new home, with no memories, somewhere in Rwanda.

In recent days, about 1,500 Tutsis have risked the trip back to Rwanda, mostly leaving on foot, said Josias Ntazinda, the camp's elected chief.

French troops trucked out some, but most Tutsis are suspicious of France, which armed and trained the Hutu army. Ntazinda asked the United Nations to provide safe transport, but officials say they are overwhelmed for the moment.

Ntazinda, a 34-year-old hotel worker, managed to escape when the death squads decimated Kibuye, on the other shore of Lake Kivu.

"They killed 8,000 people in the stadium with machetes," he said. "And 5,000 in the Catholic Church, and 3,500 at the St. Jean Home. They did not spare children, pregnant women, old people."

He hid in the forest for a week with no food and then made his way to Zaire.

The massacre was carried out mainly by Hutu militias with a name that means "Those Who Attack As One," as well as Rwandan army soldiers. Escaped victims recognize murderers among their neighbors.

"They are here, with generators and food in the refrigerators they looted," Ntazinda said. "If they catch us outside or in town, they beat us."

Both Hutu and Tutsi refugees had their weapons taken away when they crossed the border into Zaire.

Alphonse Rurangirwa, 48 and almost seven feet tall, is an Evangelist who preaches good deeds. In Goma, he came upon a dying Hutu and took him to the hospital. Later, he returned to bring food.

"Hutus demanded to know what I was doing with that man," he said. "They accused me of having some secret purpose and began clubbing me. If Zairian soldiers had not come, I'd be dead."

A wound on his forehead has not healed.

In the camp's spotless, well-stocked dispensary, chief nurse Bertin Baforo, a Zairian, explained how quickly adequate care can turn around a desperate situation.

Children who arrived close to death from their long flight are healthier than Zairians their age. Adults are fit and ready to travel.

The problem now, he said, is not physical. Like many of the Hutu refugees dying of cholera nearby, the Tutsis at Kituku are mostly bystanders paying the price of old enmity and fresh politics.

Baforo shrugged and recalled an old African proverb: "When elephants fight, the grass is trampled."

Pope defends church opposition to ordaining women

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Two months after declaring the issue closed, Pope John Paul II on Wednesday defended the church's opposition to women becoming Roman Catholic priests, calling it the will of Christ.

The pope's speech during his weekly general audience may have been in reaction to criticism from feminists and liberal Catholics to his May 30 letter to bishops ruling out the possibility of women priests.

John Paul said then that the church "has no authority whatsoever to confer priestly ordination on women and that this judgment is to be definitively held by all the church's faithful."

Although the letter repeated often-expressed views, the pope intended it to end debate on the matter within the church. That didn't happen.

In his remarks Wednesday, the pope appeared to acknowledge this. He said that calls "even from Catholic circles" for women to become priests have come "in rather recent times."

But he said the idea was an "unsustainable supposition" and that entry into the priesthood was not based on sociological or legal reasons "but only in obedience to the will of Christ."

The pope repeated the position that Christ chose only men as apostles even while asking women to follow him.

He said Christ was not making men superior "but calling them to a humble service."
