Flood fury

SHADYSIDE, Ohio (AP) — Cement blocks were all that remained of homes, fallen branches stood where trees used to be and muddy streams meandered through the outskirts of this Ohio River town after a furious flash flood.

Residents donned shorts and hip-waders Friday to begin putting their lives back together after 5½ inches of rain fell in 3½ hours late Thursday, churning floodwaters that left at least 11 people dead and 51 others missing.

Bucharest calm

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — The streets of Bucharest were calm for the first time in four days today after coal miners went home at the behest of President-elect Ion Iliescu, who thanked them "with all my heart" for helping put down unrest.

The state Rompres news agency quoted railway official Ion Tica as saying the last train of miners left Bucharest late Friday night for western Romania.

Family man?

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — On Music Row, he is known as a ladies' man, but country music star Lee Greenwood says he's also quite a family man.

Greenwood

In fact, the 47-year-old Greenwood is a proud grandfather — three times over. But he wasn't always thrilled with his "grandpa" status.

"It was a negative to me until I saw an ad some years ago with Tom Jones carrying his grandchild. I said, 'Man, he looks cool with that little baby.' "

Greenwood, who has been married four times and is considering marrying Miss Tennessee Kim Payne, says he does try to stay out of his offsprings' lives.

"My mother and father were divorced when I was quite young and there was a big battle between my mother and grandmother to raise me.

"Too much input from grandparents, I think, is not good. I don't want to overshadow my children's lives."

Oil slick threatens sea turtles

■ The fire is out, but oil from the supertanker Mega Borg continues to seep into the Gulf of Mexico, threatening wildlife along the Texas coast.

By Laura Tolley

GALVESTON (AP) — A group of loggerhead sea turtles were threatened Saturday by an oil slick that moved closer to shore from the crippled supertanker Mega Borg as it continued leaking oil into the Gulf of Mexico.

Edward Klima of the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration said divers were planning a rescue mission to pluck about five loggerhead turtles from the waters near the slick.

Loggerhead turtles are a threatened species that can grow two to four feet long and weigh up to 200 pounds, he said.

He said if the turtles eat tar balls formed by the slick, they could die. No other marine life appeared to be threatened, he said.

About 4.6 million gallons of oil has spilled from the Norwegian tanker since an explosion on board June 8, Coast Guard

■ Coastline a sensitive area/ 12B

Lt. Cmdr. Frank Whipple said Saturday. The spill is the fifth worst in U.S. history.

Coast Guard officials believe all but 12,000 to 40,000 gallons of the spilled crude evaporated, burned or has been collected in cleanup efforts.

The remaining oil is "almost hanging out there," Whipple said. The 45-mile slick of Angolan crude oil is about 20 miles from Galveston.

Coastal officials braced for an onslaught of tar balls from the spill that could reach Texas beaches by Sunday, said Sharon Christopherson of NOAA. But, she said the tar balls may not reach shore for several more days.

Officials could not precisely determine where the tar balls would wash up, but the latest estimate was in an area between

Taxing entities consider abatement plan

■ A proposal to postpone for up to five years the assessement of property taxes may help attract new businesses to Midland.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Giving new and expanding businesses time to get rolling before the property tax hatchet falls has been a recent Midland Chamber of Commerce goal.

City, county, school, hospital and college administrators this month have been reviewing the chamber's tax abatement proposal. The plan is designed to attract new industry and encourage existing ones to grow.

The five-year abatement policy, proposed by a chamber committee, would allow tax relief for businesses meeting certain criteria. Abatement would be granted based on a system of points accumulated for projected payroll size, jobs created and taxable value among other factors.

The industries would have to be located in the city's enterprise zone, a designated area located mostly in south and east Midland.

The city of Midland and Midland County already have approved the plan, while hospital, school and college officials are expected to make a decision before the end of the month. The plan goes into effect July 1.

"The purpose behind tax abatement is to maximize our effort in economic development by using this as a tool to increase jobs and payroll," Mike Strotheide, interim chamber manager, said last week. "We'll be sending a message to our businesses and others in other areas that we are encouraging economic development."

Business representatives here and outside the community have questioned why Midland has no tax abatement policy, Strotheide said. Chamber representatives make regular public relations visits to local, state and even to out-of-state industries, he said.

"Nearly every industry I visited with has had at least one question on whether we have a tax abatement policy or a tax abatement zone," he said. "When they look at a community, tax abatement is one of the items on their checklist."

Strotheide said Midland, by not offering tax relief, risks losing businesses to communities that have the plans.

By approving the chamber's plan, local taxing entities empower the chamber committee to evaluate a new or expanding business and decide whether it qualifies for full or partial abatement. Representatives from the business community

Texas ranches fed Confederacy, speaker reminds local gathering

■ As the Sons of Confederate Veterans convene at the Midland Hilton, Byron Price of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame reminds them of the role Texans played in the Civil War.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Price

Ranching during the Civil War — though plagued by drought, the draft and rustling — was "quite active" in Texas to the feed the Confederacy.

"Texas had more cattle than all the rest of the Confederacy combined and, thus, was looked upon as a principal supplier of livestock and other kinds of foodstuffs," Byron Price, executive director of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City, said in Midland Saturday.

Price was in town to speak on the Texas cattle business in the Civil War at the Sons of Confederate Veterans' convention in the Midland Hilton.

Today, Price is to speak on ranching at a Texas history symposium conducted at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library in Midland.

Early in the War Between the States, drovers routed cattle, mostly Longhorns, across the Mississippi River and into the Eastern Theater of war.

Packing plants, which processed "thousands of head of beef" in salt for the soldiers, were established at Alexandria and New Iberia, La. Later into the war, packing plants were developed in Texas — particularly after the fall of Vicksburg, Miss., in mid-1863.

"Once the fall of Vicksburg occurred and the Union Army gained controlled of the Mississippi River," Price said. "It became increasingly difficult to drive stock to the Eastern Theater because you had to swim them or else take them

A Romanian policeman sifts through the property of the National Peasants Party after its headquarters was ransacked by mobs of miners during disturbances in Bucharest. The opposition party has been accused of supporting the demonstration in University Square.

Romanian parties say they'll renew struggle

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Two opposition parties on Saturday pledged to resurrect their pro-democracy movements, which were targeted in a two-day rampage by coal miners backing President-elect Ion Iliescu.

Iliescu said he was contemplating creation of a national guard to protect the government. He said it would be composed "of clean, loyal, honest people who can act resolutely at exceptional times."

"We know that we can rely on you," Iliescu told the miners Friday before sending them home. His comments were carried on Romanian radio and monitored by the BBC.

The center of the city was quiet Saturday. Helmeted police with automatic weapons guarded government buildings and University Square, the site of a 53-day anti-government rally that riot police ended Wednesday by firing on demonstrators.

The state news agency Rompres said six people were killed and 502 injured in violence from Wednesday through Friday, the worst in Romania since the uprising that toppled Communist dictator Nicolae Ceausescu in December.

At least 110 people were still hospitalized, seven of them with very serious injuries, Rompres quoted Health Ministry officials as saying.

Security officials detained 1,021 suspects in the anti-government rioting, the government said Saturday.

The miners had been asked to restore order on the square. Protesters gathered there had demanded ex-Communists like Iliescu be banned from politics.

The miners, swinging iron bars and clubs, swarmed Bucharest on Thursday and Friday, attacking anyone they suspected of being against the government.

Among their targets was the headquarters of the National Peasants Party.

Standing there Saturday among shards of broken glass, smashed typewriters and furniture, party secretary-general Liviu Petrina said the struggle for democracy would continue.

"Emotionally we are ready to start today," he told a reporter. "Logistically, it could take weeks."

The Liberal Party headquarters also were trashed by the miners.

Calin Tarceanu, a Liberal Party official, said leaders "are afraid for our lives, because nobody is protecting us."

Dinu Patriciu, another party official, said the Liberals would "continue to function as a free political party" despite the intimidation.

The miners injured or threatened other government critics and student leaders who contended Iliescu and other key figures of the government sought to revive totalitarian rule.

Lithuanian leaders suggest compromise

MOSCOW (AP) — Lithuania on Saturday proposed that its parliament compromise with the Kremlin and impose a moratorium on its declaration of independence, officials said.

The proposal from the republic's Council of Ministers appeared to coincide with a compromise offered Tuesday by Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, and the official news agency Tass said it "could mark the beginning of the solution of all the so-called 'Lithuanian problems.'"

Also Saturday, Soviet authorities began pumping natural gas to a fertilizer plant in Lithuania, partly easing the 2-month-old blockade of fuel they imposed to pressure the Baltic republic into renouncing its March 11 declaration of independence.

The Lithuanian government suggested the declaration remain valid but its implementation be frozen while negotiations were under way with Moscow, said Algis Cekuolis, a consultant for the Baltic republic.

However, Cekuolis said it was unclear whether the compromise would have enough support to be passed by the republic's legislature, which will probably consider it Monday.

"It will be received in parliament by very strong opposition," he predicted.

The Lithuanian government, under Prime Minister Kazimiera Prunskiene, is considered far more disposed to compromise with the Kremlin than the parliament, which is led by President Vytautas Landsbergis and dominated by members of the pro-independence Sajudis popular front.

Gorbachev proposed compromises Tuesday in a meeting with the leaders of the three secessionist Baltic states. He told the national Supreme Soviet legislature earlier that day that "if Lithuania will suspend the implementation of this act of independence, we may start to talk."

Similar proposals have gone back and forth between the Lithuanian capital of Vilnius and Moscow in telegrams and informal talks "like a ping-pong game" for weeks but "this is the first time it's on an official level," Cekuolis said.

A spokesman for the Lithuanian parliament, Aidas Palubinskas, said he was told on Saturday by a pipeline dispatcher that natural gas was again flowing from the Soviet Union to the Azotas fertilizer plant in the city of Jonova.

Farmers suspend protests following talks with Walesa

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa persuaded farmers Saturday to suspend a protest over low milk prices that had blocked roads and shut down dairies in northern Poland.

It was the second such success for Walesa in three weeks. On May 28, he got railroad workers to end a strike that was paralyzing Poland's Baltic ports.

The announcement that the protest in the Mlawa region, 80 miles north of Warsaw, was suspended until July 3 came after three hours of talks between Walesa and disgruntled farmers.

In both disputes, the protesters demanded government intervention to protect them from the harsh effects of the government's shock treatment to transform Poland's socialist economy into a free-market system. The government, however, has stuck to its vow not to make special concessions.

The farmers complained that their local dairy, deeply in debt, has not yet been paid for milk delivered in May and that the price it paid for their milk was cut to 2 cents a quart in June, compared to 5 to 6 cents in April.

Arriving in Warsaw from Switzerland, where he addressed a meeting of the International Labor Organization on Friday, Walesa drove straight to Mlawa to try to solve the dispute.

Authorities catch suspect in air base bombing

By MarK Fritz

EAST BERLIN (AP) — A woman who allegedly helped bomb a U.S. air base and kill three Americans was captured in East Germany, officials said Saturday, the latest in a remarkable string of terrorist arrests.

Sternebeck

Sigrid Sternebeck, 40, was the seventh reputed member of the left-wing Red Army Faction arrested in East Germany in a 10-day span, German officials from both countries said.

She was captured Friday night in the East German town of Schwedt, a district of Frankfurt an der Oder near the Polish border, East Germany's Interior Ministry said in a statement.

It said she did not resist arrest.

Among the seven Red Army Faction members arrested, Ms. Sternebeck is the first directly linked to a major attack involving American fatalities.

The others were accused in a series of shootings, kidnappings and bombings that included the deaths of several prominent West German businessmen in the 1970s and 1980s.

Ms. Sternebeck is charged with the slaying of U.S. Army Spec. 4 Edward Pimental in Wiesbaden, West Germany, in August 1985, said Hans-Juergen Foerster of the West German federal prosecutor's office.

Pimental was lured out of a bar by a woman and was found the next day, shot through the head.

Pimental was killed so terrorists could obtain his identity card and gain entry by car to the sprawling U.S. Rhein-Main Air Base at Frankfurt, West Germany, Foerster said.

The car, laden with explosives, was detonated outside the base headquarters, killing two more Americans and injuring 20 other people.

At the prodding of West Germany, authorities from both countries have launched a concerted effort to round up fugitive terrorists in East Germany as the nations move closer to unification.

Wanted posters have been plastered across the country and law officers have acted on West German intelligence information that West German officials say had been ignored by the former Commmunist government in East Germany.

East German authorities had no comment on the latest arrest, other than a brief statement by Interior Minister Peter-Michael Diestel to the government news agency, ADN.

The government had announced Friday that it had captured three more terrorists, but later said it was mistaken and had arrested the wrong people.

At least 24 other key members of the Red Army Faction are being sought.

ADN, meanwhile, reported its office in the East German city of Rostock received an anonymous phone call from a man claiming to be the spokesman for the Red Army Faction. It reported that the caller said the group would "liquidate" certain people in reprisal in the next week.

The Red Army Faction has in the past normally communicated by letter, and only when claiming responsibility for an attack that already had occurred.

One of the seven reputed terrorists arrested since June 6 was freed because the 12-year-old warrant on her had expired. West Germany has not said whether it would seek a new warrant.

Neither Foerster nor the East German Interior Ministry would say whether Ms. Sternebeck was living in East Germany at the time of the terrorist attack on the U.S. base.

West German Finance Minister Theo Waigel, meanwhile, said East Germany should investigate whether officials in the current democratic government knew that the country was harboring long-sought terrorist suspects.

Several former Communists, including former Premier Hans Modrow, hold seats in Parliament.

West German authorities have said they offered tips to the former Communist government as far back as 1986.

Former spy chief seeks disbanding of KGB

MOSCOW (AP) — A self-described former KGB intelligence chief said Saturday that the spy agency — still feared despite Soviet reforms — has too much power and should be closed down.

Up until now, no former KGB official here has publicly proposed that the agency be dismantled. As a rule, KGB officials who break with the agency flee abroad or disappear.

"The KGB has too much political power, and this way will remain a threat to democracy because it may be manipulated," said Oleg D. Kalugin, who identified himself as a onetime major general in charge of foreign counterintelligence.

"I would abolish the KGB as such," said Kalugin, 55, who spoke with reporters after a speech to the Democratic Platform, Communist Party members who are considering breaking with the party.

He displayed what he said were his KGB credentials, but no one could be reached at the agency Saturday to comment on Kalugin's remarks or verify his former title.

However, CIA spokesman Mark Mansfield in Washington confirmed a man named Oleg Danilovich Kalugin was at one time a KGB major general in charge of foreign counterintelligence.

"We find it encouraging that an increasing number of Soviet officials are speaking so candidly," Mansfield said.

The KGB, or Committee on State Security, once terrorized Soviet citizens and harassed foreigners. It has said it is re-orienting itself toward the struggle against organized crime and drug trafficking in cooperation with other foreign intelligence agencies.

High near 100 expected

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high around 100 and winds from the south at 10 to 20 mph, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight is expected to be partly cloudy with a low in the mid-70s. Monday will be sunny with a high near 100.

Saturday's high was 101 compared with the record high for that date of 105 set in 1975. The overnight low was 75. The record low for that date was 49 in 1981.

STATE

Oppressive heat and humidity joined forces Saturday, sending heat index temperatures soaring above the 100-degree mark and prompting an excessive heat advisory for parts of North Texas.

Scattered thunderstorms developed over the Trans-Pecos region late Saturday afternoon, but most of the state had fair to partly cloudy skies.

South to southwest winds breezed across most of the state at speeds of 10 to 20 mph. Guadalupe Pass reported a peak wind of 44 mph.

Temperatures were in the 80s over parts of the Coastal Plains and in the mountains of far West Texas. The rest of the state had readings mostly in the 90s, with late afternoon extremes of 86 degrees at Guadalupe Pass and 102 degrees at Wink.

The forecast calls for continued heat, humidity and warm night temperatures. The daytime heat index temperature is expected to be in the 105 to 110 degree range for most of North Texas. Highs statewide should be mostly in the 90s and low 100s, with 80s on the beaches.

NATION

The Raccoon River, swollen with recent rains, rose to record levels and flooded parts of Iowa and Illinois, while Nebraska was hit with hail the size of golf balls Saturday.

Six inches of rain overnight brought the Raccoon River out of its banks. The crest was expected to reach Van Meter in central Iowa Sunday, nine feet above flood stage and slightly higher than the record set in 1958. The river was expected to crest at Des Moines, Iowa, near its 1947 record.

Flooding closed a large number of roads and washed out bridges in northeast and east-central Iowa and northwest Illinois. And nearly 6 inches of rain left roads and basements flooded in southwestern Minnesota.

The Mississippi River was more than four feet over flood stage at Red River Landing, La., and slightly higher than flood stage at Donaldsonville, La.

A tornado touched down during the morning west of Monroe, La., and thunderstorm wind gusts caused damage south of Ottumwa, Iowa. Golf-ball size hail fell south of Chadron, Neb.

Rainshowers and thunderstorms continued into the afternoon from upper Michigan across Wisconsin, southeastern Minnesota, northern Illinois, much of Iowa, northwest Missouri, northeast Kansas and southeast Nebraska.

There were showers and storms from western Oklahoma across northwest and west-central Texas, and over southern Louisiana, Mississippi, southwest Georgia and the northern portion of the Florida peninsula.

Policeman 'stable' following accident

Staff Report

A Midland police officer was in stable condition Saturday night at Midland Memorial Hospital after he was involved in a car accident at the Main Street and Florida Avenue intersection while responding to a call.

Hospital officials said Alvin Navarette, 25, was admitted for observation. No one else was reported injured in the two-car wreck, which occurred shortly before 7 p.m.

Witnesses at the scene said Navarette's car was southbound on Main when it attempted to go through the intersection against the light and struck a car westbound on Florida.

According to police, Navarette, was responding to a disturbance call when the accident occurred. Navarette, whose patrol car had its lights and sirens on, entered the intersection with caution, police said.

The driver of the second car, 39-year-old Rosie Shaw, said she was driving through the intersection on a green light when Navarette's car, emergency lights flashing, collided with her car.

She said Navarette did not have his siren on at the time of the accident.

Shaw was issued a citation, police said.

RANCHERS: Texas had Civil War role

(From 1A)

across in little flats or skiffs. It became quite dangerous.'

And because of Union control of the Mississippi, Price said, "it became more difficult to utilize the great bounty" of beef.

However, that did not kill markets for Texas livestock, Price said.

Both Mexico and the Union Army were after Texas beef. Mexico was revolting against French occupation.

"There was a real shortage of livestock in the Northern Provinces" of Mexico, Price said.

The Comanches were rustling cattle and supplying them to Union forces in New Mexico.

"There was also a tremendous drought that began in some places in 1862 and lasted until 1865 or later in some places, including Texas," said Price.

In South Texas, thousands of cattle died. The surviving cattle were headed to a "ready market" along the Rio Grande.

"There were some interesting long drives down to Mexico during the Civil War, primarily from the frontier counties," which were experiencing tremendous hardships.

"The Confederacy tried to control this trade, feeling that some of it was bound to end up in Union hands," Price said.

"So they tried vigorously through the use of troops to confiscate herds, because, among the drovers, there were a few that were strictly in it for the money and not in it just to take care of their families."

As the war raged on, there became a shortage of manpower both on the front lines and on the range.

The draft became "increasingly onerous" as it included teen-agers.

"And it became increasingly difficult for ranchers to find enough hands to take care of the work," Price said. "So, consequently, there were quite a few slaves pressed into service. There were a lot of young kids, some of them 5 and 6 years old, that were doing man-size duties in keeping up the family stock. There were some sizeable roundups and some sizeable drives."

And the Indians "understood there were ready markets" for beef in Mexico and New Mexico.

"A lot of Texas beef was stolen by the Indians or driven off and delivered over into New Mexico to feed the Union Army," Price said. And there was the problems with "Jayhawkers from Kansas and Indian Territory that swept into Texas and gathered off herds."

The Confederacy did what it had to in order to survive.

"The Confederate Army became desperate" and many cattle were seized by the government, Price said.

Many ranchers fared well during and after the war.

Price said many Texas ranchers "really made their money early on in the cattle business without the benefit of Eastern or foreign capital that came along later.

"Most of them did not leave Texas during the Civil War," he said. "Most of them were either in the frontier forces or had some military beef contract.

"By being nearer the supply and by pursuing their livelihood while the war was going," Price said, those ranchers had a "leg up whenever the war was over. They were better organized; they were at home. They were better able to be the first to exploit the new market in the post-war era."

But for "some of the others coming back from the war," Price said, it took "quite a bit of time and a lot of hardship before they could get into the (cattle) business."

ABATEMENT: Chamber backs plan

and taxing entities serve on the committee.

Fully qualified industries would receive 100 percent tax immunity the first and second years, 90 percent the third year, 80 percent the fourth year and 70 percent fifth year. The abatement would be for up to $50 million of the industry's property value.

Based on the point system, industries with more than 80 points qualify for the full abatement plan. Businesses with fewer than 80 points would be evaluated individually to determine the amount of partial abatement, Strotheide said.

The abatement plan is designed to a similar one in Orange which has no point system, he said.

"The idea is not something that's new under the sun," he said. "It's been around for awhile in other states."

As of February, the state had 57 industrial zones with tax abatement policies, Strotheide said.

Midland's point system, originated by the chamber committee, is an incentive for businesses to be bigger, he said.

"The point system is a system set up to promote employment, Strotheide said.

Midland City Council unanimously approved the plan at a meeting last Tuesday.

Mayor Carroll Thomas, who has made economic diversification one of his political goals, said tax abatements would be an effective tool for industrial development.

"We're talking about new construction," Thomas said. "It looks to me like a no-lose proposition."

However, Councilman J.D. Faircloth expressed concern that the abatement planned offered little incentive for small businesses.

"You're going to have to be General Motors to come in here and qualify for the 80 points," Faircloth said.

Strotheide, however, said it is up to the discretion of chamber committee members to decide whether a business will receive partial or full abatement.

Midland County commissioners, with little discussion, unanimously approved the abatement proposal last Monday.

The plan is expected to go before Midland Independent School District board members and Midland College trustees at their respective meetings Tuesday. Midland County Hospital District directors are not expected to review it until June 27.

MISD, the county's biggest taxing entity, would stand to lose the most from having to wait five years to fully tax an industry.

But Superintendent Joe Baressi pointed out that the district could lose a valuable long-term income source if a business chose not to expand or move here because the area has no tax abatement policy.

"We're positive about the (tax abatement) concept," Baressi said. "It's a situation which we don't have anything to lose.

"But it is something the school district has to consider very closely and carefully."

Midland College President Jess Parrish said he supports the tax abatement policy.

"I think it's a good thing for the community and reasonable thing for the college," Parrish said.

However, he said he will not make a formal recommendation to trustees unless they seem amenable to th lea. He said he would speak informally with them before Tuesday's meeting.

"I'm not going to recommend if I find that a bunch of people are against it," he said.

Midland Memorial Hospital spokesperson Laurie Johnson said hospital officials haven't had a chance to fully study the proposal and have no recommendation yet.

OIL: Slick heads for shoreline

(From 1A)

High Island and the west end of Galveston Island.

There were no confirmed reports of tar balls Saturday.

The Land Office spent hours training about 1,200 volunteers from the Adopt-a-Beach program to clean up the tar balls, should they reach shore.

Tony Redding, spokesman for Smit America Salvage Inc., said the fire aboard the 886-foot supertanker was officially extinguished at 10 a.m. CDT Saturday, although no flames had been visible since Friday.

"The fire was located in the engine and pump rooms and both spaces were flooded. The fire was fueled by oil from the damaged No. 4 center tank," Redding said.

Crews continued to douse the hull of the ship throughout the day to cool the sagging Mega Borg enough to begin shifting its oil cargo.

"We will be continuing to monitor for hot spots around the tanks and around the seat of the fire," Redding said.

"We'll be making preparations for the ship-to-ship transfer of the cargo to a lightering tanker," Redding said. Lightering is the process of transferring oil from a tanker to a smaller cargo ship.

Smit officials planned to transfer the remaining oil in the No. 4 tank to an empty tank later Saturday.

A small, but undetermined amount of oil, continued to leak from the ship, Whipple said.

Geert Koffeman, project manager for Smit America, said the possibility of the vessel sinking was "next to nil."

Whipple said most of the slick consists of a light sheen that is "almost impossible" to collect off the water because it is so thin.

Skimmers and booms were used to vacuum up more concentrated oil spots.

Eight men arrested

DALLAS (AP) — Eight men have been arrested on weapons and drug charges in New Mexico, Texas and Oklahoma as part of a nationwide federal sweep for members of violent, drug-dealing street gangs, authorities said.

Two were arrested in Fort Worth, one in Dallas, one in Albuquerque, N.M., and four in Oklahoma on Friday, said Mike Huckaby, special agent in charge of the southwest district office of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

WORLD in brief

Greece protests border blockade

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Greece protested to Yugoslavia and the European Community on Saturday after Yugoslav shopkeepers blocked the border between the two countries for the second time in a month.

"Not only is the border blocked illegally, but Greek-Yugoslav relations worsen dangerously," the Foreign Ministry said in a statement.

Several hundred shopkeepers and craftsmen from the southern Yugoslav republic of Macedonia blocked the border with cars and trucks early Friday.

Thousands of vehicles were backed up at the three border posts by early afternoon when a local radio station called for an end to the blockade, said Prokopios Mantzouranis, Greece's consul in the Macedonian capital of Skopje.

Demonstrators were demanding the abolition of Greek visas for Yugoslavs and recognition for ethnic Macedonians in Greece. The demonstration was similar to a one-day border traffic blockade on May 19.

Greece does not recognize Macedonians as an ethnic minority.

Pollution targeted

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Environment ministers from across Europe agreed Saturday to work at cleaning up heavy pollution in East bloc nations.

"The problems that have been described were horrendous and far beyond our forecasts," Environment Commissioner Carlo Ripa di Meana of the European Community said.

He spoke after ministers from seven Eastern European nations reported on pollution in their countries at a one-day meeting in Dublin with ministers of the European Community.

The ministers from 19 nations planned an attack on industrial contamination of the air, water and land that has built up over decades.

They signed a communique setting out ideas to tackle nuclear and toxic waste, acid rain and water pollution in the emerging democracies of Eastern Europe.

It stressed that protection of the environment was one of the most urgent political priorities.

The agreement commits Poland, the Soviet Union, Hungary, Yugoslavia, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and the European Community members to look at ways of effective pollution monitoring and curbing harmful practices that poison the environment.

Transfusion ordered

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — A 2-year-old girl suffering from leukemia was given a blood transfusion Saturday by government order, despite the religious objections of her parents.

The girl's parents, Titos and Eleni Charalambous, are Jehovah's Witnesses, a fundamentalist Christian sect that forbids blood transfusions.

They had snatched their daughter from a British hospital, where she was being treated, to avoid a blood transfusion and later defied a Cypriot court's order to agree to a transfusion.

In an unprecedented move, the government Friday declare the child, Stephanie, a ward of the state, making the transfusion possible without the family's approval.

"We had to rescue the child from death," said Helen Soteriou, a British-born leukemia expert at Nicosia's Evangelistria Clinic. She conducted the transfusion.

Cease-fire called

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone (AP) — The government of Liberia and rebel forces on Saturday called for a cease-fire in their 5½-month-old civil war that has left more than 1,000 people dead.

Government forces and rebels from the National Patriotic Front had not clashed for the last 10 days, but Saturday's agreement was the first time the two sides agreed to a cease-fire.

The truce came Saturday after five days of peace talks in the U.S. Embassy in Freetown in this neighboring country. In a statement issued after the meeting, the two sides agreed to resume talks Monday.

"Meanwhile, it is the expectation of both parties that each side will exercise self-restraint in the use of military force," the two sides said in a statement.

The sides also agreed to permit international relief aid to civilians in areas under their control.

Central American summit focuses on development

ANTIGUA, Guatemala (AP) — Central American leaders on Saturday opened a summit meeting they hope will usher in an era of peaceful prosperity after years of war and economic crisis.

"The problems of poverty, injustice and political and social differences have been confronted by disappearing opponents, by conflict, by death and by assassination," Guatemalan President Vinicio Cerezo said at the opening of the gathering.

"We don't want to repeat this history. Now we have to begin taking other paths," he said.

Cerezo said peace and democracy cannot survive without prosperity, a key theme of the two-day economic summit.

The presidents hope to duplicate the success of their regional peace plan with a concerted development effort, including attracting substantial foreign support.

The peace plan helped bring about free elections and an end to the war in Nicaragua and peace talks between leftist rebels and the governments of El Salvador and Guatemala.

"Central America has to show the world that it ready to confront underdevelopment and create options for prosperity for its people the same way it resolved the problem of war in the 1980s," said Honduran President Rafael Callejas.

Callejas, a 46-year-old economist who took office in January, says Central America needs $2.25 billion over the next three years to begin rebuilding.

"The international community and the Western world should channel these resources to Central America," he said at a news conference in the Honduran capital of Tegucigalpa this week.

Callejas and Cerezo are meeting with Presidents Alfredo Cristiani of El Salvador, Violeta Barrios de Chamorro of Nicaragua and Rafael Calderon of Costa Rica. Panamanian President Guillermo Endara is attending as an observer.

The Central American leaders, concerned about competing demands from Eastern Europe, are encouraged by Secretary of State James Baker III's decision to come to Antigua.

Baker was to arrive late Sunday and will meet with the five Central American presidents and Endara on Monday.

He is expected to propose a plan for coordinating aid, trade and investment from various nations and organizations. The United States is expected to manage the program with Japan and the European Community as co-chairs.

"In a world of redefined hegemonies, the United States is again making its claim: This (Central America) is our turf, and there is no doubt about it," one regional development expert said of the proposal. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

The summit's opening was delayed almost an hour — until halftime in the World Cup soccer match between Costa Rica and Brazil. Diplomats, international bankers, development experts, bureaucrats and reporters huddled around televisions in this colonial city 27 miles from the capital.

This is the first summit to focus on the devastated economies of the region.

Enrique Iglesias, president of the Inter-American Development Bank in Washington, said that despite competing national interests, there are ample possibilities for economic cooperation in the Central America.

"Energy, roads, communications — these are issues which deserve a regional approach," he said in an interview from the bank's Washington headquarters.

Political issues were expected to be raised as well.

Basic needs in short supply in Sudanese camps

AP Laserphoto

Sudanese Roman Catholic relief workers care for about 150 children orphaned by the civil war — but they find supplies increasingly scarce.

By Mohamed Osman
Associated Press Writer

AWEIL, Sudan — Aweil is a place where everything is in desperately short supply: food, money, medicine, hope.

Especially hope, when survival can depend on whether the train from Muglad arrives.

As recently as December, 4,750 families waited in Aweil's refugee camps — about 30,000 people driven into the town by a seemingly endless civil war. Despair drove most of them back to the countryside, to the risk of death from war, lawlessness or famine.

Only a few hundred women, children and old men are in the camps now.

"Most of the families who left had been waiting for six to seven months for the relief train," said Mohamed Ali of the local relief committee. "They saw no ray of hope so they moved out to the villages, where they might find something to eat."

There is food at Muglad, a relief-distribution center 160 miles north of Aweil at the northern terminus of a rail line. Goods shipped from Khartoum, the capital 450 miles to the northeast, are stockpiled there under Operation Lifeline-Sudan, a relief program coordinated by the United Nations.

Operation Lifeline was created after the famine of 1988, which took between 250,000 and 500,000 lives and resulted from a civil war that has raged in the southern part of Africa's largest nation since 1983.

Black rebels in the south, which is predominantly Christian and animist, demand greater autonomy from the Arab, Moslem north.

The communual water pump attracts refugee boys on a hot day in a camp for southern Sudanese people displaced by the country's 7-year-old civil war. As late as December, 4,750 families were awaiting help in Aweil's two makeshift camps. But failure of food and other supplies to arrive has driven all but a few hundred women, children and old men back to the countryside to scavenge.

The relief project was credited with preventing a recurrence of the 1988 disaster last year, but getting supplies into the area has been difficult.

Trains often are weeks or months late in making the 160-mile journey from Muglad to Aweil. Reasons range from the dilapidated track and the danger of land mines or attacks by rebels, renegade soldiers or bandits to bad weather, bureaucracy, inadequate equipment and the reluctance of crews to risk the trip.

At the end of May, a 150-car train with 1,500 tons of grain had been waiting at Muglad for six months.

"We have only 400 gallons of edible oil and nothing else," said the Rev. Akili Malweth, the local Roman Catholic bishop. "Our stores are as empty as a hungry man's stomach."

Four trains have brought supplies to Aweil since Operation Lifeline began in 1989. On the return trip north, each carried thousands of people trying to escape and survive.

"Those who could not move out of the town are the poor, the old, the tuberculosis victims and the children," said Mohamed Ali, who also is the local representative of the Sudanese Commission on Relief and Rehabilitation.

Nearly all those remaining are women, children and old men. They are housed in two makeshift camps and few have money to buy anything.

One camp has nine large huts that accommodate 20 families each and the other is in the school. Alino Kolong, Aweil's education commissioner, said those who lived in the school cleaned it each morning before classes began.

The women, and many of the children, try to find work.

Refugee women till other people's gardens and carry firewood and water from the center of town to outlying houses in Aweil, which has a normal population of 11,000.

"Women here work in all sorts of jobs," said Majack Khawaja, a resident of the town. "Even building houses, which traditionally has been a man's job, is now being done by women."

Even if the refugee women can find work, they seldom make enough money to buy food.

A cup of tea costs 10 Sudanese pounds, nearly 85 cents, double the daily wage for the best-paying jobs available.

"They cannot afford to buy one sack of sorghum at the unimaginable price of 900 pounds," or $75, for the 88-pound bag, Kolong said. Sorghum is the staple food in Sudan.

On a recent inspection tour, officials of the U.N. agencies running Operation Lifeline found the refugee families had no materials for cooking and were grinding peanuts in large bowls, making paste so the nuts would go farther.

"All the people here eat is peanuts," Mohamed Ali said. "It's not because they like them; it's because they're cheaper."

Although the people of Aweil looked relatively healthy, relief officials said most had chronic tuberculosis or suffered from malaria or other water-borne diseases.

Feeding center's 'lifeline' tenuous for Sudan's orphans

AWEIL, Sudan (AP) — Relief workers call the two mud-and-grass huts a feeding center, but for 150 Sudanese war orphans, the lifeline is increasingly tenuous.

The children, whose parents and relatives were among hundreds of thousands of civilian victims of civil war and famine, live with hundreds of other refugee women, children and old men at Aweil, in the embattled Bahr el-Ghazal region of southern Sudan.

Each orphan has a tag attached to an arm or leg showing when he or she entered the center and detailing medical care. Each has been given a name, a nurse said, because "everybody has to have a name, you know."

All the children are members of the predominant southern Dinka tribe. They have nothing outside the feeding center's two crude huts, and inside they sleep on the earth floor.

They have food — cookies, high-protien gruel and milk provided by the Roman Catholic charity Sudanaid — and most are in relatively good health.

Considering the limited expectations of Aweil's children, that makes the orphans of the feeding center luckier than many of their famished and impoverished fellows, at least for now.

The Rev. Akili Malweth, the local Catholic bishop, said the center's food was being exhausted rapidly, and "after that, we will be at the mercy of the train."

His reference was to a relief train that had been waiting for six months in Muglad, 160 miles away, to bring 1,500 tons of grain.

Caretakers like Bishop Malweth try to maintain a semblance of normality for the children of Aweil's camps, but it is difficult.

Alino Kolong, the town's education commissioner, said fewer children were attending school.

"Not all families can afford to buy school materials, and many of the children here are orphans," he said.

A notebook costs 25 Sudanese pounds, about $2, and a pencil 10 pounds, or 85 cents. There is little work for the refugees and none that pays more than 5 pounds a day.

Many pupils also stay away from school because "some of the families cannot afford to buy clothes for their children," Kolong said, and "we can't leave a naked child in the classroom with the others."

Aweil has a hospital and a doctor. The hospital has only 75 beds in a capacity of 150, and often is virtually empty because many Dinka people prefer witch doctors.

"Sometimes a child is brought here and we hospitalize it," Dr. Samuel Deng said. "After 10 to 12 hours we discover that the child has vanished," taken to a traditional healer by its mother.

Most of those children die, he said.

Reopening of six West Bank colleges seen as test case

RAMALLAH, Occupied West Bank (AP) — The Israeli authorities on Saturday reopened the first of six colleges in the occupied lands that have been closed for 30 months due to the Palestinian uprising.

The reopening of Ramallah College of Paramedical Sciences is seen as a test case. If it goes well, the other Arab universities in the occupied territories could be allowed to open again, too. The schools have a total of 18,000 students.

The Palestinian institutions of higher learning were closed by the Israeli military shortly after the uprising erupted in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in December 1987. The military contended the schools were hotbeds of unrest.

The shutdown drew sharp criticism from the United States and Western Europe, which said it amounted to collective punishment. The European Parliament at one point recommended that scientific cooperation with Israel be frozen until the universities and colleges in the occupied lands were reopened.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir ordered the gradual reopening of the schools on May 14. But the order was suspended for a month following the May 20 massacre of seven Gaza laborers by an Israeli gunman near Tel Aviv and the subsequent wave of riots in the occupied territories.

There were virtually no classes at the Ramallah school on Saturday because many students failed to appear. On the nearby Jerusalem-Ramallah road, long lines of cars were seen at army roadblocks, and some students said it was hard to pass through.

The college director, Farsin Arabikian, that while the school was closed, some students got married, others went abroad and some were jailed. Only 15 of the former 38 nursing students had re-registered, she said.

"The fate of the college is unpredictable and students are affected by what is going on outside the college," she said.

Arabikian expected about 150 students to pursue studies this year in the college's three departments — nursing, X-ray and medical technology.

On Saturday, about a dozen students standing outside the college, a branch of Jerusalem University, said they hoped their studies could continue.

"There is a decision by the uprising leadership not to use the academic institutions as centers for demonstrations and other activities," said Halil Mustafa Sarahne, 23, from Hebron in the West Bank.

While the school was closed, Sarahne spent 10 months in detention at the Ketziot prison camp in the southern Negev desert for uprising-related activities he declined to specify.

Now this medical technology student carries a special identity card that prohibits him from passing through Jerusalem on his way to the college.

"If police stop me in Jerusalem I will automatically be served with six months in administrative detention" without trial, Sarahne said.

Underground leaders of the rebellion have said in recent leaflets that resumption of studies was a top priority, and that students must not give the army an excuse to close schools.

Cheers greet Mandela in Netherlands

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — A crowd of 10,000 people on Saturday gave a joyous welcome to African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, who thanked them for staunch Dutch support of the anti-apartheid movement.

"You made it possible for me to be released from prison and to be able to stand before you today," Mandela told the crowd that jammed a square in central Amsterdam.

The 71-year-old black nationalist leader was freed in February after spending 27 years in South African jails.

The crowd waved ANC flags and banners that said "Welcome Mandela." Some people climbed lampposts to catch a glimpse of him.

Later Saturday, Mandela flew on to Britain for an overnight stopover. The ANC's office in London said Mandela would consult briefly with ANC president Oliver Tambo in Britain, but would not make any public appearances.

The British Foreign Office said it could not confirm Mandela's arrival since it was an unofficial visit, but the British news agency Press Association quoted government sources as saying he had arrived safely.

He was to fly to Canada on Sunday.

Mandela said it was of "special significance" that his Dutch stop coincided with commemorations of the June 16, 1976, uprising in the black township of Soweto, which left hundreds dead.

"That is the day on which the South African government decided to shoot down our children," Mandela said. "If you ignore that it is the masses of the people who put pressure on their governments, we cannot win liberation for our country."

Earlier Saturday, Mandela met with Dutch Premier Ruud Lubbers and Foreign Minister Hans van den Broek. Mandela also was granted an audience with Queen Beatrix, a rare honor.

Mandela's Dutch stop was announced only last week as a last-minute addition to the six-week tour that is taking him to 14 countries in Africa, Europe and North America.

The trip is to thank the world for pressuring the South African government to remove the ban on the ANC and free him and his colleagues. Mandela is also urging that economic, cultural, diplomatic and sports sanctions be maintained against South Africa until apartheid is completely abolished.

Mandela is to arrive in New York on Wednesday and begin his 10-day U.S. visit with a ticker-tape parade in Manhattan.

President Bush and Congress will receive Mandela in Washington during his eight-city visit, which also will include a speech at the United Nations.

South African rallies mark 'Soweto Day'

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Blacks staged dozens of peaceful rallies nationwide on Saturday to commemorate the 1976 Soweto student uprisings that shaped an entire generation of anti-apartheid activists.

About 20,000 blacks, most of them young, packed a Soweto stadium to observe June 16, 1976, or Soweto Day, when police opened fire on black students protesting the education policies of the white-led government.

"The youth of Soweto is now a great symbol of resistance and defiance throughout the world," African National Congress leader Walter Sisulu told the crowd.

Soweto, 10 miles outside Johannesburg, is the country's largest black township with 2.5 million residents.

The 1976 police shootings in Soweto touched off an unprecedented wave of unrest that spread throughout the country and lasted several months. Some 500 to 700 blacks died and thousands fled the country to join the ANC.

Many blacks point to the 1976 riots as the time when they became active opponents of the white-led government and its apartheid policies of racial segregation.

"Fourteen years ago we mourned and complained, but today we are counting our victories," ANC spokesman Popo Molefe told tens of thousands of blacks at a rally outside the southern city of Port Elizabeth.

The ANC, the country's largest black opposition group, was legalized in February after being banned for 30 years. ANC leader Nelson Mandela, the country's best known anti-apartheid figure, was released Feb. 11 after 27 years in prison and is on a highly publicized tour of Europe, North America and Africa, urging other nations to maintain economic sanctions on South Africa.

Dozens of peaceful Soweto Day events were held Saturday around South Africa, most of them staged by the ANC or the rival Pan Africanist Congress.

Since coming to power last year, President F.W. de Klerk has allowed peaceful protests that have official permission.

Saturday marked the first time since the 1976 riots that widespread demonstrations have taken place on Soweto Day without major police intervention.

In one incident in downtown Johannesburg, police fired tear gas to disperse a few dozen black demonstrators, saying they did not have permission for the protest. A black journalist was taken into custody, according to witnesses.

Police also used tear gas to disperse rallies in Natal Province, the one region where a 4-year-old state of emergency remains in effect. De Klerk lifted the emergency in the rest of the country June 9.

In the central town of Welkom, about 250 members of the white supremacist Afrikaner Resistance Movement marched to protest the detention without charge of two whites.

Members dressed in khaki uniforms gave stiff-armed, Nazi-style salutes and chanted, "Hang (Nelson) Mandela."

The two men are being held in connection with separate bomb attacks in Bretoria and Welkom, but no one has been charged in either case.

The 1976 protests were triggered by a government policy to teach classes in Afrikaans rather than English. Afrikaans is the language of the Dutch-descended Afrikaners who dominate the government and many blacks consider it the "language of the oppressor."

Every year since 1976 blacks have observed June 16 as an unofficial holiday. Most blacks stay home from school and work.

Firebombs thrown at motorcycles fuel explosion that kills at least 16

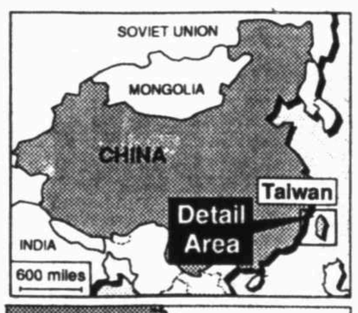

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — A man tossed several firebombs at motorcycles parked outside a commercial building today, triggering an explosion and fire that killed 16 people, police and fire officials said.

The man, in his twenties, fled immediately after tossing the firebombs, witnesses told police. There was no explanation for the incident in downtown Kaohsiung, 215 miles south of Taipei.

Police said they suspected a gang of arsonists who have been setting fire to motorcycles parked on the streets of the city in the past month. No one had been injured in those fires, and the motive was not known. There have been no arrests.

Fire Chief Tao Chi-yu said the fire spread quickly through several floors of the six-story building that housed an all-night video parlor, trading firms, boutiques and apartments on its top two floors.

Tao said most of the 16 dead were trapped in video screening rooms on the third and fourth floors, and were burned beyond recognition. He blamed the high death toll on furniture and other objects that blocked emergency exits.

AP

Firemen rescued about 30 people from the building. Police were searching for the suspect.

Damage was estimated at $1.8 million.

4 more flood victims found

SHADYSIDE, Ohio (AP) — Searchers recovered the bodies of four people Saturday, bringing to 15 the confirmed death toll from a flash flood that raged through eastern Ohio, authorities said. About three dozen people remained missing.

A 5-year-old Glencoe girl, Tiffany Webb, was found dead in McMahon Creek early Saturday, said Chuck Vogt, Belmont County Coroner's investigator. The girl and her 6-year-old brother, Donald Andrew Webb, were killed when Thursday night's flood swept their mobile home from its concrete mooring.

Later in the day, Vogt reported two additional victims, Danny Humphrey, 8, hometown unknown, and Mary Grimes, age and hometown unknown. A fourth victim, who was not identified, was discovered in the Ohio River late in the afternoon, Vogt said about 8 p.m.

Capt. Jim Boling of the Ohio Air National Guard said the number of people missing was revised Saturday evening to 34. Previous reports from Belmont County authorities had given the number as 51.

Ohio Emergency Management Agency spokesman Ned Martin said some of those listed as missing had informed relatives or authorities they were safe. Boling said others found dead may never have been listed as missing.

In all, some 700 rescue workers — including 341 members of the Ohio National Guard — are assisting flood victims.

"We have 26 dog teams from Maryland, Kentucky, West Virginia and Athens County, Ohio," Boling said. "They have nearly completed an initial sweep of the affected area."

Boling said 12 boats would search the Ohio River until dusk. "We also have teams of volunteers walking the banks of the (Ohio) river."

Utility crews and local volunteers used chain saws, axes and shovels to clear the debris of more than 100 homes destroyed or damaged by a careening wall of water that washed over the banks of three creeks.

Gov. Richard Celeste, who toured the area for the second time Saturday, repeated how shocked he was at the destruction.

"The damage ... was extraordinary. It was something that was beyond what I've seen from tornadoes and floods. One can only imagine what it was like," Celeste said at a news conference. "The shock of the wall of water as it roared through a very confined area literally flattened everything."

Celeste said state and federal authorities planned to set up an emergency assistance center at Shadyside High School.

Trucks hauled stacks of flattened cars out of a gully south of the town. State Highway Patrol troopers and National Guardsmen used the dogs to sniff through the rubble and along the banks of the Wegee and Pipe creeks in Belmont County looking for survivors or victims.

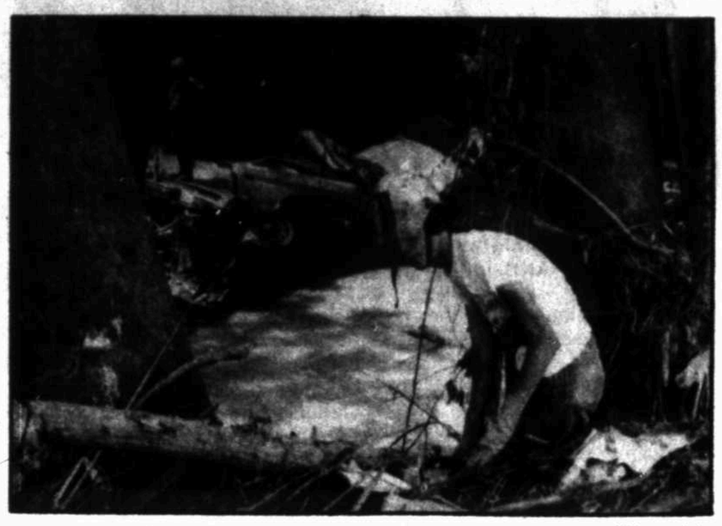

Searchers were stunned by the devastation, said Salvation Army Capt. Ginny Muir.

"The mood is like disbelief," she said. "As far as helping, nobody's getting tired or discouraged."

Authorities allowed a few reporters at a time into the most heavily damaged area but they would not let onlookers downstream, where the dogs were searching. The search extended five miles south of Shadyside along the Wegee and Pipe creeks, which empty into the Ohio River.

Workers were also sifting through debris that collected at the Hannibal locks and dam, about 25 miles south of town.

A cloudburst that dropped 5.5 inches of rain in 3½ hours Thursday night surged through the low-lying community in the Appalachian foothills, washing away houses and destroying roads.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency on Friday declared Belmont, Jefferson and Franklin counties disaster areas, making federal aid available to residents.

Vogt said most of the victims were from Shadyside and Mead Township, where the two creeks run south of the village, or Glencoe, near McMahon Creek.

A temporary morgue for flood victims was set up at the Bauknecht Funeral Home In Shadyside, about 10 miles south of Wheeling, W.Va.

174 arrests made in roundup of drug-dealing gang suspects

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Arrests totalled 174 by Saturday in a nationwide dragnet for members of violent, drug-dealing street gangs, authorities said.

Federal agents and local police in 11 states began executing warrants Thursday in a crackdown aimed at the Crips and Bloods, which have grown from Los Angeles street gangs into multistate drug-dealing operations.

Despite the scope of the roundup and volume of arrests, Operation Streetsweep was going safely, according to Jack Killorian, spokesman for the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms

"We've had no injuries, no shooting incidents," he said.

Arrests and seizures of drugs and weapons were expected to continue through the weekend. More than 200 arrests were anticipated.

Arrests were made in California, Louisiana, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Oregon, Washington and two other states that weren't identified because warrants were still being served.

Air Force C-5A transport planes were used in the operation to shuttle ATF agents and vehicles from Dover Air Force Base, Del., across the country.

The operation against them had been planned for months.

Seattle police conduct wrongful raid

SEATTLE (AP) — Police looking for a marijuana-growing operation mistakenly raided the home of the state's Horse Racing Commission chairman, whose wife says officers threw her to the ground and frightened her 90-year-old mother.

An apology was made to Warren Chinn and his family, and an investigation is under way, said police Chief Patrick Fitzsimons.

Chinn's wife, Honoria Chinn, 50, said Friday she was at home with her mother about 12:45 a.m. Tuesday when her front door was broken open and at least five plainclothes officers rushed inside.

Mrs. Chinn said one of the men grabbed the telephone she was holding, handcuffed her, threw her facedown on the floor, put a gun to her head and demanded, "Where's the man, where is he?"

The officers gave no warning before battering down the door and offered no identification, she said.

"I'm still in shock," Mrs. Chinn said. "I can't sleep. I get nightmares every time I close my eyes."

The Chinns said police officers apparently used a chemical spray to subdue their two dogs, which were outside.

After emptying drawers in two bedrooms and checking the rest of the house, the officers left, Mrs. Chinn said.

"They didn't say a word," said Mrs. Chinn, whose niece, Maxine Chan, is a Police Department specialist on relations with the city's Asian community.

Police were acting on information from a person arrested for possession of marijuana, said department spokesman Mark Amundson.

It was "completely the wrong location," said Fitzsimons.

"It was a mistake of great magnitude as far as we are concerned," the chief said.

Big-city mayors divided over seeking constitutional change

CHICAGO (AP) — The nation's mayors took time out Saturday from bashing Washington to fight among themselves over whether the Constitution should be amended to guarantee cities a set percentage of federal revenues.

The debate came as more than 200 mayors got down to business at their annual summer conference, taking committee action on dozens of proposed policy statements on issues ranging from taxes and transportation to housing and AIDS research.

The U.S. Conference of Mayors human development committee endorsed a resolution calling on Congress to pass legislation mandating that a "fair" percentage of federal revenues be channeled directly to cities. If Congress refused to pass such a law, the resolution would put the mayors on record in favor of a constitutional amendment requiring the revenue sharing.

Philadelphia Mayor W. Wilson Goode led the support of the measure, saying the mayors needed to make a forceful statement to win attention for their concerns in Washington.

But a separate committee, the mayors' panel on urban economic policy, voted unanimously to oppose the provision calling for a constitutional amendment. The proposals endorsed Saturday need to clear another committee Sunday in order to be presented to the full gathering next week.

"The Constitution should not be part of the budget process," Fort Wayne, Ind., Mayor Paul Helmke said.

That dispute was the only diversion from a day spent largely following up Friday's opening session attack on Congress and the Bush administration for not sending more aid to cities. The mayors are virtually unanimous in saying that aid cutbacks in the 1980s exacerbated urban housing and education problems and left cities too poor to provide drug treatment and other services to the needy.

"Solutions hinge on the federal government making the urban areas and people a top priority," host Mayor Richard M. Daley of Chicago said at a morning news conference. "We basically need an administration willing to have some courage and strong leadership."

But many of the proposals popular with the mayors are viewed with trepidation in Washington — among them the mayors' position that the federal government needs to raise taxes and give some of the money raised to cities.

Also high on the mayors' agenda but controversial in Washington are proposals to spend more of the billions in aviation and highway trust funds for airport and road improvements.

The mayors rarely fight among themselves or criticize each other, but there were a few objections to the attacks on the Reagan and Bush administrations led by big-city Democratic mayors.

GOP Mayor Jimmy Kemp of Meridian, Miss., who was first elected as a Democrat but switched parties, complained that most of the resolutions being debated blamed urban problems on Republican presidents.

"That's a bunch of bull," he said during the meeting of the urban economic policy committee.

AIDS discrimination thriving, ACLU says

NEW YORK (AP) — Fear of the AIDS virus is so prevalent in the United States that one-third of the people who reported AIDS-related discrimination do not even have the disease, an American Civil Liberties Union report said Saturday.

"This study shows how extraordinarily persistent discrimination remains in this country, even after science has proven there is no risk of casual transmission," said Nan D. Hunter, principal author of the study.

The ACLU study, "Epidemic of Fear," will be presented at the Sixth Annual Conference on AIDS in San Francisco this week. The study was compiled from information provided to the ACLU by 260 legal and advocacy groups across the country.

Discrimination hurts the fight to control AIDS because many who have the disease refuse to be tested out of fear they will become victims of intolerance, experts say.

About 13,000 complaints of AIDS or HIV-related discrimination came into the 260 agencies between 1983 and 1988. HIV is the virus that causes AIDS.

Discrimination reports increased by 50 percent during 1988, following an 88 percent increase in 1987, the report said.

The study found that AIDS-related discrimination occurs nationwide, cutting across lines of race, gender, ethnicity and sexual orientation. Even people who do not have the disease but associate with people who do are frequent targets of discrimination, the report said.

Most discrimination cases were based on fears of catching the disease, racial prejudice, or anti-homosexual prejudice, according to the study.

Thirty percent of the people who reported discrimination were not HIV positive, the study said. Twenty-one percent of the discrimination complaints were from victims who thought they were targeted due to their risk of becoming HIV positive through a job, lifestyle or other factors.

Nine percent felt they were the victims of discrimination merely because of their proximity to someone who was HIV positive. That closeness might be through a family relationship or by providing care or some type of services to an infected person, the report said.

"HIV discrimination is the No. 1 obstacle to controlling the epidemic in this country because people are afraid to come forward and be tested," said Carisa Cunningham, a spokeswoman for the Gay Men's Health Crisis in New York.

Consistent anti-discrimination laws are needed around the country because some states have strict laws while others have no laws, the study said.

OK Mozart Festival gains fame

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Strains of Mozart from the Solisti New York Chamber Orchestra whistled across the rolling Osage Hills, beneath a lodge where oilman Frank Phillips and humorist Will Rogers once spit tobacco juice on the front porch.

The outdoor concert at Woolaroc wildlife preserve attracted a sellout crowd, as it does every year. More than 3,000 people arrived two hours early to claim the best slate-rock seats or to set up lawn chairs and blankets for a meal of buffalo burgers and beer.

"We like to clash, as long as everything is authentic and done in the best quality," says Nan Buhlinger, executive director of the OK Mozart International Festival.

Quality is not questioned during the nine-day festival that wound up Saturday. The festival has grown so fast "people are killing for tickets," says Ransom Wilson, a renowned flutist and artist director of the festival.

The Solisti New York is complemented by Robin Sutherland, pianist for the San Francisco Symphony; by French-born conductor Catherine Comet, by the Boston Chamber Music Society and several other nationally acclaimed artists from around the nation.

All of them set aside two weeks in June to come to this northern Oklahoma town known more as the headquarters for Phillips Petroleum Co. than for aficionados of fine arts.

"All you have to do is come once," said Sutherland, who has been to every festival here since it began in 1985. "I feel sorry for those who can't come here or won't come here. The high point of my year is to come here and collaborate with these people."

The festival could be considered unique because of the outdoor concert at Woolaroc, where artists don black and pink T-shirts and concert-goers smell more of bug spray than pricey perfumes.

But the concert hall in the Bartlesville Community Center holds the key to the festival. It was there, in 1982, that Wilson directed a symphony and fell in love with the acoustics.

Sutherland, who has known Wilson since they attended the Julliard School in New York City, said Wilson asked him to come for the first OK Mozart festival.

"The first year was hard," Sutherland said. "I knew nothing about this place. Ransom said it was the coolest hall we know of."

So how does a city of 35,000 come up with a concert hall that artists from Boston, New York and San Francisco rave about?

"It's a matter of luck," Sutherland says. "There are accoustians who claim that different scientific factors determine the quality. But if it comes down to science, why are there so many rotten walls?"

Ms. Buhlinger said this year's festival drew about 30,000 from 31 states. Because Bartlesville doesn't have the activity of a metropolitan city, she developed the Festival Showcase, a gamut of displays and events that blend Mozart with the heritage of Oklahoma.

The Showcase involves local residents, something Wilson said was instrumental in the rapid growth and national recognition the festival has achieved.

"What makes this unique is there are two festivals at the same time," Wilson said. "It's not just the concerts, it's the showcase events every day. You get a real Oklahoma flavor and the everyone's participation is the key to the success."

If nothing else, Ms. Buhlinger said the Mozart festival goes a long way in dispelling myths of Oklahoma built on the days of Cowboys and Indians and the dust bowl.

"I think most people are absolutely surprised," she said. "Everybody doesn't walk around here with straws in their teeth. I think some people come here and expect to see wild horses running through the streets."

Sutherland said all he needed was dinner in one resident's home to remind him that Bartlesville has plenty of culture.

The charm of the small town mixed with an international corporation leads Wilson to claim that "all the smart people are here."

"There's not another town like it that I have come across in the United States," Wilson said. "It's got a population of 35,000, yet it has its own cultural institution. They are educated people from all over the world and they demand culture."

And, says string bassist Carolyn Davis of the Solisti New York, they cling to it.

"It's unique to have a town where everyone jumps on the bandwagon and is so enthusiastic," said Ms. Davis, who said she receives Christmas cards each year from festival friends of four years ago. "You don't need that much knowledge to understand the music and enjoy it.

Writer remembers Dad as he lived, died

By Tad Bartimus
Associated Press Writer

March 19, Monday:

My father is dying.

It is my worst childhood dread, the terror in the night come true. I sit by his bed and hold his hand, trying to ward off my fears. I am failing in my duty. I cannot save him.

There is a scene in the film "Terms of Endearment" where the mother stands at the nurses station and screams for another pain shot for her terminally ill daughter. Now I, too, stand at a nurses station and say quietly, politely: "I think it is time for my dad's shot."

They look up at me, these kids, many of them young enough to be my own daughters, and say, "OK, we'll get it in a minute," and then go back to talking about last night's date, a friend's birthday party.

I feel my face contort. I have become Frankenstein. I stand there and fidget, my hands balling into fists, my eyes welling with tears. My eyelids are already so swollen I can hardly bear to touch them. I say again, between clenched teeth: "I'm sorry to trouble you, but it is time NOW for my dad's shot. NOW!"

My breath gets shorter. My voice rises to a screech. I turn into a monster in that antiseptic hallway. I hate myself for being this way, but I seem to have no control over my rude behavior. It seems my only way to fight back against a medical system that has my whole family in its strangling grip of tubes, wires, needles, thumping noises, offending smells, and cadre of strangers invading at their convenience our tiny cubicle of pain and grief.

CANCER HAS transformed me, molded me into a 42-year-old daughter whose only aim in life is to help her father die as comfortably, and with as much dignity, as I can provide.

Three months ago my father was on the golf links, an active 68-year-old retired pilot with a wide circle of friends, a keen intellect, a comfortable life. We were so pleased because he'd shed much of the extra weight he'd carried around on bad knees since his 40s. He was proud of himself as his pants sizes kept shrinking. Christmas brought a new wardrobe. But my mother was having secret fears she revealed in the darkened room we often share together with the quiet man in the bed: too much weight, too fast. But never mind. Worry about it tomorrow. The old saw is true: we see only what we want to see.

There was no cancer in our family, ever. As a journalist, I read the statistics, I kept up with the developments, but until Jan. 7, when the dreaded phone call came, I thought of cancer only with a detached, clinical interest. Now the disease invades my heart, my mind, my very soul.

My father has become a statistic. Lung cancer. But where is the primary tumor?

"We may never find it," said his oncologist, a father of five daughters. He has just a few more answers than I, the layman. The killer cell, the rogue that launched the insidious assault on my father, will always elude the CAT scans, MRIs, X-rays, blood tests, and all the other diagnostic invasions inflicted on the silent man in the bed.

We will never know how it began. But we know, with terrible finality, how it will end.

MARCH 23-24, FRIDAY AND SATURDAY:

Like Hansel and Gretel's crumbs scattered through the forest, my father's hospital room is littered with reminders of the long journey we have traveled together.

Books and magazines for when he could see; the television for when he cared, as he passionately once did, about the revolution in Romania and the deficit and the verdict in the trial of the Exxon Valdez captain; lotions for when he still complained about aching muscles, juice for when he could still sip through a straw.

Finally, the last supper: 1 sugar packet, 1 salt substitute packet, strained cream of chicken soup, 2 milks, Coke, vanilla ice cream cup, cranberry juice, coffee. The tray was set aside, untouched.

It is nearly over. The nurses, every one a father's daughter, increasingly care for us as well as him. They have become allies, friends, the only constant in a situation out of control. They never pass me now without a touch, a pat, a hug. They have done this before. They know how close we are to saying farewell — to each other, to him.

My father's doctors call in from restaurants, their own beds at 3 a.m. We are consulting hourly now. I am making decisions I never knew anyone had to make, making them with a cold detachment that stuns me. Yes, increase the Demerol. No, it isn't working, so yes, I think we should switch to morphine, increase the morphine. More. More.

I hear myself issuing opinions, but I keep looking at the still figure under the blue blanket, half waiting for him to sit up and contradict me.

He was always in charge. I never had a say in what we did, where we went as a family. He was the leader of the band, the chief of the clan, the only voice of authority. When did the torch pass? I do not want it. But I cannot give it back.

There is no privacy in a hospital. I discover the linen closet down the hall, and retreat there, behind the boxes of plastic-coated pillows. In that tiny sanctuary I hyperventilate, cry until I hiccup, pull myself together enough to go back into the darkened room.

It is the cusp of spring, but the last storm of winter has hurled itself out of the west and paralyzed Kansas City. Nothing moves on the streets. The lamps glow yellow in the reflected snow. The world is silent, suspended.

My father and I are alone in the middle of the night. I am half on the bed, cradling him like the Pieta, telling him all my secrets, all my hopes. I am racing the clock on the wall, my new enemy, trying to cram the dialogue of my entire life into the last precious hours I will have with my daddy.

I sob. I laugh. I talk about the dog of my youth who blew to us in a tornado and learned to play second base. I remind him of the time the cat ate the Christmas goose. I thank him for the blue bicycle, for teaching me to drive, for sending me to college, for waving goodbye with a smile on his face when I boarded the plane for Vietnam, for all the money spent on phone calls to find me halfway 'round the world. I thank him for all that extra champagne at my wedding, and for all the steaks he barbecued for my journalism gypsies who've dropped in from Beirut and Bombay over the years.

Above, AP Moutain States regional reporter Tad Bartimus poses with her father, James L. Bartimus, in 1987. At right, Lt. Col. James Bartimus stands proudly next to his plane in 1943. Bartimus is remembered as a loving man and a true hero by his daughter.

I feel closer that night to my dad than I've ever felt before. Occasionally his eyes open, and I look deep into them and whisper in his ear "I love you" because everybody says no one knows what he hears, what he thinks. Those three words become my mantra, chanted over and over and over 'til dawn.

I also tell him how proud of him I was, and am, how his exploits as a fighter pilot reflected on us, made us feel special. I reassure him of my happiness in my marriage. I promise to look out for mother, to love his grandsons forever, to treasure every snapshot, every scrap of advice. I pledge to be good. I promise to remember.

And then I give him permission to let go. I say goodbye. I feel as if I am dying, too.

"You can go now, daddy. It's OK. Honest. I love you. You can go now, daddy."

I carry on a one-sided conversation for more than 12 hours. There is no other sound in the room except my hoarse voice. The only tube left is the morphine drip. The nurses glide in and out. There is pain in their eyes. The young doctor who has become my lifeline, my greatest source of strength, stands at the foot of the bed.

"When?" I ask.

"I don't know," he replies. There are tears in his eyes.

My father picks his own time, as he has his whole life. He waits for my mother and my brother. At high noon, the storm over, the blinding sun of spring flooding the window, he opens his eyes. He speaks. "Love!" he says, as they hold him in their arms.

And then he is gone.

MARCH 27, TUESDAY:

Despite the request for no flowers, the church smells like a garden. The formal photograph propped on the table in front of the altar shows a smiling young man in a 50-mission hat and a dashing Army Air Corps trench coat. A white silk scarf is draped over the edge. A velvet board displays the medals awarded for bravery, daring and endurance. Two freshly picked hyacinths from a neighbor's yard complete the memorial tableau.

The church is full. Many faces are unknown to me; others are mileposts of my years. I take a deep breath and pray one last time for strength and composure, and deliver his eulogy.

"The newspaper obituary," I began, "gives you the frame surrounding the portrait of the man. This is the true picture.

"He loved the song of a single bird in the morning, the sight of a chevron of wild geese at dusk. He was sentimental and loved cards that rhymed. ...

"He could untangle any fishing line and fix any toy. ... He and mother danced together like Fred and Ginger. ... He taught his children that only people mattered, not things. ...

"He was a fisherman, farmer, civil servant, lifelong Democrat, loyal American.

"But at the core he was a pilot. A true hero. Dad's pilot buddies said no man ever flew an airplane with such grace and skill and that God-given gift that only angels have for flight. ... A friend, trying to comfort me, said she knew why dad took his own time in leaving us. He did not go in the dark of night when the blizzard raged. Instead, he left with the sun high overhead. He waited, she said, for clear skies to take off. ..."

At the end, I borrowed the words of a friend who'd walked this path before:

"Daddy," she wrote, "just follow the heading Peter Pan gave Wendy Darling. As they surveyed the stars spread across the night sky, he showed her the way like you have shown me:

"Second to the right, then straight on 'til morning. Have a wonderful flight. We'll all meet you there."

And then the pianist broke into a resounding rendition of "Wild Blue Yonder" and my duty was done. I had used the only true gift I had, the ability to string words together, to say farewell. I believe he heard me.

MARCH 29, THURSDAY:

I was in the dream house my parents built when they retired. Stumbling around in the dark, I reached into my open suitcase for a bathrobe. My hand touched something that hadn't been there an hour before. Turning on the light, I found an intricate paper airplane folded out of a dietitian's form from the hospital.

Even though it was late I called my husband, who'd flown back home that day. I thanked him for leaving me the wonderful airplane. After a long pause at the other end of the line, he told me, as one would speak to a slow-witted child, that he hadn't made me a paper airplane.

The next morning I showed my mother. She had no idea where it came from. I am sure there is a logical explanation. I just haven't found it. Until I do, I've put the delicate little plane away in a box in my hope chest, along with my most precious treasures.

"Take my hand," wrote the friend who is a year ahead of me. "We'll walk together on the twisting road back." She exhorted me to "look for the signs." And so I took the little paper airplane to be the first one.

FATHER'S DAY, JUNE 17, SUNDAY:

Father's Day was the weekend we always used to pick cherries from the backyard tree and bake daddy a pie. Or clean out the garage for him. Or endure a hot afternoon at the old fishin' hole. There were shirts to buy and ties to wrap and cards to sign.

But not this year. Or next. Or ever again.

I look out my Colorado kitchen window, eastward, toward my roots and my past in Missouri. There is an old, majestic Ponderosa pine tree across the way. In recent days an owl has perched on the highest tip of the highest branch. Occasionally he leaves his aerie to soar over my house in a graceful arc, his vast wings barely moving, catching the thermals and letting the breeze take him high, higher, highest.

I watch him in wonder and delight. I believe, as Wendy Darling believed in Peter Pan. As long as there are larks to sing and eagles to fly and owls to look down from the highest tree, my father will live on.

NATION IN BRIEF

'Peace pilots' killed in crash

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — A small-plane crash killed a retired air force colonel and a college professor about to wrap up a 48-state peace tour.

Retired Air Force Col. Frank Martineau, 69, of Bethesda, Md., and Marjorie Zeuch, 67, of Warwick, R.I., died Friday when their single-engine plane crashed short of an airport runway, said Maj. Robert Wolfe of the Air National Guard in Charleston.

The two also were trying to set a speed record for flying a single-engine plane to all capitals in the contiguous 48 states. Charleston was their next-to-last stop before winding up the trip later Friday at Washington National Airport in Virginia.

The four-seat plane clipped a tree in a park about one-half mile short of the Yeager Airport runway, Wolfe said. The plane spun around and landed on its nose, with the right wing torn off in several pieces, said Sgt. Vic Gazitano of the Kanawha County Sheriff's Department.

The 4,000-mile trip, dubbed "Operation Appleseed," was taken to promote Zeuch's World Friendship Association, said Chuck Davenport, managing editor of Association Trends, a national weekly newspaper founded by Martineau.

The association, a 2-year-old charitable organization, was "dedicated to bringing ordinary people of the world closer together for permanent peace," Davenport said.

Soviet pilot critical

SEATTLE (AP) — A Soviet pilot who was a hero of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster was in critical condition Saturday with a lung infection, said officials at the hospital where he recently underwent a bone-marrow transplant for leukemia.

Anatoly Grishchenko, 53, who had been in stable condition after the April 27 transplant, developed a fever and breathing difficulties late Thursday, and doctors at the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center placed him on a respirator early Friday, center spokeswoman Susan Edmonds said.

His doctors "say it doesn't look good," she added.

Grishchenko made four flights in five days through hot radioactive gases to dump sand and wet concrete on the Chernobyl nuclear plant.

The plant, about 80 miles north of Kiev in the Soviet republic of the Ukraine, exploded and burned April 26, 1986. At least 31 people died in the disaster.

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev praised Grishchenko in a recent letter as a national hero and a "brave man who didn't spare his life in the line of duty." The letter was delivered while Gorbachev was touring parts of Minnesota and California earlier this month after the summit meeting in Washington, D.C.

Baby not threatened

LARAMIE, Wyo. (AP) — A woman who was cleared of child-abuse charges that alleged she drank too much while pregnant has given birth to an apparently healthy boy, a doctor said.

Diane Pfannenstiel had her baby Thursday evening, said Dr. Katherine Kohler, an obstetrician here.

"He's a beautiful, healthy 7-pound boy," Kohler said.

Pfannenstiel, 29, was about four months pregnant when she was arrested Jan. 4, two months after another judge ordered her to remain alcohol-free.

A test revealed she had a blood alcohol level of just over 0.1 percent, the level at which a person is considered intoxicated under state law.

Albany County Attorney Cal Rerucha said he filed the child-abuse charge to protect Pfannenstiel's unborn children from suffering an ailment such as fetal alcohol syndrome.

But Judge Robert Denhardt dismissed the complaint, saying the state did not produce probable cause that her fetus had been injured.

High court denies stay

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court on Saturday denied condemned killer John Edward Swindler's last-ditch bid to avoid becoming Arkansas' first prisoner executed in 26 years.

The Supreme Court denied the stay request in a 7-2 ruling issued shortly before noon, with Justices William Brennan and Thurgood Marshall dissenting, said high court spokeswoman Toni House.

Swindler, 46, is scheduled to be electrocuted at 9 p.m. Monday for the 1976 murder of a Fort Smith police officer. He would become the first person put to death in the state since 1964.

More Baptists convene

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Less than a week after the Southern Baptist Convention, a predominantly black Christian group will convene here for its annual meeting.

The National Baptist Sunday Church School and Baptist Training Union Congress will meet June 19-24 at the New Orleans Convention Center. More than 20,000 representatives are expected.

Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and U.S. Rep. Floyd Flake of New York, will address the congress. Olympic gold medal winner Wilma Rudolph will speak to the younger members during the five-day event.

Highlights of the congress include a 1,000-member mass choir from throughout the New Orleans area performing Tuesday at 7 p.m.

'DAD' fathers' group gives youngsters 'natural highs'

NEWTON, N.H. (AP) — Whipped cream, squirt guns and balloons may not seem like conventional weapons in the war against drugs, but they are an important part of a New Hampshire psychologist's arsenal.

Lee Wotherspoon approaches the battle against addiction with his own army: a group called DAD, or Drugs Are Dangerous.

The organization's mission is to show young people how to have fun without drugs, and to encourage fathers to get involved in their children's lives.

Wotherspoon co-founded DAD with Ed Ahlman of Kingston, whose son Chris committed suicide in 1988. Wotherspoon had counseled Chris, who was addicted to drugs, before his death.

"We got together to decide what we could do about the problems facing kids, especially drugs," Ahlman said, adding that the group currently has hundreds of members in New England.

"The deficit is for fathers. Women are out there wanting to do whatever they can to help their kids and feeling torn when they're struggling between work and family and children," Wotherspoon said. "The fathers forget. They need to have it pulled together for them."

DAD sponsors, among other things, "Natural High" parties, which feature activities such as squirt gun fights, whipped cream battles, balloon volleyball and limbo contests in the mud. Fathers are encouraged to bring their children to the free events and join in the fun.

"I don't drink, I don't do drugs, I don't smoke, and if I'm going to have a party, I don't want to have a party where people stand around and wonder when the next drink is going to be served and talk small talk," Wotherspoon said. "That's boring to me. If I'm going to do one, let's have fun with it."

Lori Knight, 17, a student from Kingston, is a veteran of several Natural High parties.

"I think when kids go to the parties they think of the positive things that they can do instead of drugs, and the fun times they can have," she said.

Apart from the Natural High parties, DAD also sponsors support groups and a help-line and provides "tool kits," packages of advice that help fathers deal with children's problems.

Wotherspoon said it's important not only to give kids alternatives to drugs, but to start driving the message home early.

"We can't wait until our kid's lives get burned to throw foam on the fire. We need a fire prevention program. And that's what DAD tries to do," he said.

"I'm giving kids an anti-addiction message at these parties, but it's not preaching at them. It's showing them, giving them an experience, of what it's like to get a natural high. But I'm also showing them — hey, you can play life for higher stakes."

Wotherspoon's idea for drug-free fun has counterparts across the country. In Bowling Green, Ohio, a group called PARTY, for Promoting Awareness Toward Yourself, uses Wotherspoon's principles.

In the Midwest, a group called Mad Dads Inc., or Men Against Destruction Defending against Drugs and Social Disorder, has taken a more militant stance.

Hundreds cheer Juneteenth parade

■ The holiday celebrating the arrival of the Emancipation Proclamation in Texas is a time for blacks to have fun and recall the accomplishments of the past 125 years.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

The United States declared its independence from England on July 4, 1776, but it was another 89 years before Texas blacks shared in that freedom on June 19, 1865.

That was when U.S. Army forces arrived in Galveston to enforce the Emancipation Proclamation — more than two years after it went into effect on Jan. 1, 1863.

Descendants of freed slaves still celebrate the "Juneteenth" liberation — with the same enthusiasm others reserve for the Fourth of July or Cinco de Mayo.

"I think it's the best holiday of the year," exulted 21-year-old Mary Mitchell, who was at Washington Park Saturday afternoon following the annual Juneteenth Parade. "We get to show how we feel. We're keeping our race alive."

Hundreds of spectators cheered Saturday's parade as it made its way down Lamesa Road. Sponsored by the Tall City Lions Club, the parade featured several dozen brightly festooned cars and floats, dance and choral groups, military vehicles and a few horses.

After the parade, celebrations began in earnest at Washington Park, where hundreds gathered to picnic, play games, and eat barbecue. The day's entertainment included speakers, music, and dance contests.

Many parade marchers represented local churches, and the Rev. Hadley Edwards of Hollowell United Methodist Church said this was entirely appropriate.

"The church has played a significant role in freeing our people," Edwards said before addressing the park crowd.

"Most black leaders, civil rights leaders, have come out of the church. The church has been that free agent ... that reminds people that we have been emancipated, that we have been set free through Jesus Christ."

Edwards was not alone in citing the civil rights movement of the 1950s and '60s as being almost equal in importance to the actual freeing of the slaves.

Ella Mae Gibson, 64, said it has taken blacks a long time to achieve true equality and freedom. Now, she said, blacks have "more opportunity than in any other country. We have come a long way."

Parade Marshal Mary Brown said Juneteenth is a joyous time, but she doesn't really consider it in terms of personal liberty.

"I celebrated Juneteenth because my parents did," she said. "On Juneteenth we didn't go to the cotton field, so it was a day of celebration. But as far as freedom, I've been free all my life."

For some, Juneteenth has become a celebration divorced from its origins.

Jimmy Coley, 49, said Juneteenth is less meaningful these

Midland College bookstore moves into new quarters

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Kyle Rosson is ready to turn the page on the relocation of Midland College's bookstore — and an inventory of 4,000 plus books — to sparkling new quarters.

The Midland College bookstore manager — literally up to his neck in academic tomes — is quick to invite any curious passersby on campus to roll up their sleeves and "pitch in and help."

Rosson and his crew began the task of moving books, supplies and retail items from the bookstore's old cramped quarters 7 a.m. Friday to the spacious 1,200-square-foot building behind the original store.

H.A. Tuck, Midland College public relations director, said the new bookstore is part of the expansion of the Student Center, a $1.5 million project, which was constructed with available funds.

"We will effectively double our sales floor and warehouse space by moving," Rosson said. Tuck said the student center space will also be doubled.

Although Rosson said he would have liked three weeks to move, the two-day move was completed Saturday.

"We will be open and ready for business Monday morning," Rosson said. "We may not know where everything is," he said, laughing, "but we will try to find whatever anybody needs."

The new bookstore location will include new offices, three cash registers, more shelf space, a new computer system for purchasing items with inventory control, and public rest rooms.

The bookstore, previously located in the southeast corner of the student center, now will be located in the northeast corner.

MC professor says survey data indicate more study necessary

■ The biologist admits he rounded off some statistics in the survey of cancer among county residents, while a MMH official says the results may be skewed.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

A private south Midland County health survey is complete after six months. But the man who coordinated the study says he isn't prepared to stake his reputation on it.

The survey was taken in response to residents' concerns that groundwater in a neighborhood south of Interstate 20 might be contaminated and responsible for some health problems.

Some 11 percent of neighborhood respondents reported having some kind of cancer, the survey showed. That compared with 3 percent of respondents from a control group of city residents.

Carl Frailey, a Midland College biology professor, coordinated efforts beginning in late January to document neighborhood cancer and illness rates.

Frailey, who conducted the survey as a private citizen and not in his capacity as an MC professor, said the study justifies some of the health fears of county residents.

"I'd say based on this survey there is reason to look further," Frailey said.

The survey also showed 13 percent of county respondents complaining of headaches, and 25 percent complaining of "digestive disorders." Only 2 percent of the city control group reported either ailment, the survey showed.

Army worms march across cotton fields

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

Standing in the middle of a row of young cotton plants, you can almost hear the ominous sound of crunching. Bending near the diminutive plant, you may see a fat yellow and olive worm munching a lacy pattern in a leaf.

The Beet army worm is on maneuvers.

The worms don't wear flak jackets or carry Uzis, but they cause as much damage to the fields as an invading force. This year the worms and their camp followers, cotton aphids, have arrived earlier in the season and in greater numbers than usual. Local entomologists are worried.

Stanton-based agricultural extension entomologist Victor Lucero is afraid the worms will cause a delay in the development of the crop because they favor the new growth of the cotton terminal.

"It takes three weeks to restart the terminal if it's chewed below its growing point," Lucero said.

Charles Allen, a Fort Stockton-based agricultural extension entomologist, said the worm problem is decreasing in his area, but cotton aphids are everywhere.

"The aphids suck all the sap out of the plant and remove all the water and photosynthate from it, and it takes time off the growing season," Allen said.

Both entomologists spend most of their time out in the fields at this time of the year, randomly checking cotton plants for signs of infestation. They recruit "bug scouts" — high school and college students on summer break — to help in the huge task of insect census taking.

In mid-June, the cotton is in a sensitive growing stage, when infestations and other setbacks can push the harvest season dangerously close to early freezes.

It's also the time when cotton is particularly tasty to pests.

"I've found that when the plants are about 4 inches tall, at about

GARY OTT

News flash: Editor undergoes conversion experience

When the switchover occurred, frankly, I was skeptical. After all, my life would be directly affected.

But, two months later, things are working out quite nicely.

Let me take you back in time.

It was April 2 and the Reporter-Telegram had decided to make the big change. Instead of publishing an afternoon newspaper, the decision was made to "go morning."

Ott

As a result, most of us in the newsroom experienced a drastic change in working hours. It used to be semi-normal. Arrive at the office at 7 a.m. Go home at 5 p.m.

We were basically on the same schedule as other people.

Now, it all has changed.

Go to work at 4 p.m. Get home at 1 a.m. That's strange enough, but the real problem is what to do with yourself once your workday has been concluded.

As you might expect, it is virtually impossible to go straight home and immediately hit the sack. You are too wired; too keyed up. So you must find other ways to entertain yourself. And at 1 a.m. on a weekday that is not always a simple endeavor.

For example, there are several things you don't do.

Topping the list is stopping by a friend's house for a surprise visit. Even the best of friends get a bit testy when you ring the doorbell at 1 a.m.

Likewise, it is not a good idea to drink a pot of coffee. That, of course, will keep you awake until the sun rises and there is no telling what kind of mischief you'll get into then.

So what can you do?

I'm glad you asked. This is generally how it works:

1:10 a.m.: Arrive home, glance around the apartment and make a mental note to clean it up tomorrow.

1:11 a.m.: Forget that mental note.

1:15 a.m.: Talk to yourself. Topics that can be discussed include national politics, your lack of a love life, your failing finances and whether or not war will break out in the Middle East any time soon.

1:17 a.m.: Turn on the television set and make a quick run through the cable stations. Narrow your choices to a "Mr. Ed" rerun and CNN News.

1:18 a.m.: Choose "Mr. Ed" and pour yourself a stiff drink.

1:20 a.m.-1:30 a.m.: Become excruciatingly bored and talk to the characters on the TV program. If they want you to believe a horse can talk, then it is quite all right for you to talk to him, too.

1:40 a.m.: Decide you need to be intellectually challenged. Switch the channel to something heavy, such as one of those Tennessee Williams' plays where the two main characters — a balding, brooding husband and his sexy but frustrated wife — spend the bulk of their time on a large porch in the Deep South sweating and screaming insults at one another.

1:45 a.m.: Determine you have had enough intellectual stimulation and switch back to old reruns. "Donna Reed" should be on by now.

1:50 a.m.: Comment to yourself that they sure don't make TV programs like they used to and refill that drink.

2:05 a.m.: Read a two-month-old magazine article from "Newsweek."

2:15 a.m.-2:30 a.m.: Get into an argument with yourself over the content of that magazine article.

2:35 a.m.: Worry about your sanity.

2:36 a.m.: Put aside that thought.

2:45 a.m.: Become somewhat sentimental and call an old girlfriend so you can apologize for a rude remark you made to her three years ago.

2:46 a.m.: Become horrified at her filthy language and make a mental note to discuss it with her at a more reasonable hour. Hang up.

2:50-3:10 a.m.: Pour a final drink and discuss with yourself the "meaning of life."

3:15 a.m.: Realize there is no "meaning to life."

3:16 a.m.: Sing that line from the old country-western classic, "...and tomorrow starts the same old thing again."

3:17 a.m.: Laugh at the irony and hit the sack.

"It used to be a black holiday for the black people to get out and celebrate freedom," he said. "Now it's just another day. I'm just here to watch the parade."

Younger revelers, however, seemed to be in touch with the history behind Juneteenth.

Speakers urge Texans to fight legacy of slavery on Juneteenth

FORT WORTH (AP) — Texans should continue to fight the legacy of slavery and the lingering attitude that the celebration of Emancipation Day is itself demeaning, some black leaders say.

"When racists ask questions of us long enough, we have to ask questions of ourselves," said the Rev. Howard Caver.

Caver and other panelists discussed the question, "Why should we celebrate Juneteenth?" during a ceremony Friday at Fort Worth City Hall.

Juneteenth commemorates the arrival of U.S. Army forces in Galveston to enforce the Emancipation Proclamation, more than two years after it went into effect on Jan. 1, 1863. On June 19, 1865, Maj. Gen. Gordon Granger read the declaration at Galveston.

The traditional holiday is celebrated by picnics in parks, music and dance performances, talent contests, parades and history exhibits and speeches.

But Juneteenth has been ridiculed by racists and also was questioned by blacks during the height of civil-rights activism in the 1950s and 1960s.

The growth of popular interest in black history in the 1970s slowly revived the celebration, and June 19 became an official state holiday in 1979.

Pamela Dunlop, president of the Fort Worth Minority Leaders and Citizens Council, said that blacks should remember slavery and its termination. She also said blacks should remind whites to "reflect on slavery," just as the Jewish community reminds society of the Holocaust.

When she moved to Texas about 20 years ago, Ms. Dunlop said her first reaction to Juneteenth was, "We are celebrating learning of our freedom some 2½ years after the rest of the country."

But she said her attitude changed over the years.

"Freedom is always worth celebrating," she said.

Caver and other panelists said blacks continue to face the pain of enslavement.

On a recent visit to Tarrant County Jail, "I saw beautiful, intelligent young black men, some of them in chains," Caver said. "I thought of slavery. Some of them enslaved themselves."

Lenora Rolla, president of the Tarrant County Black Historical and Genealogical Society, also invoked images of chains, "not only on my legs where I couldn't go where I want to go, not only on my arms and wrists where I couldn't do what I want to do, but also on my mind, and that is where it hurts."

Midland man dies in accident south of Marfa

Staff Report

MARFA — A Midland man was killed and three others injured in a one-car accident Saturday about 26 miles south of Marfa on U.S. Highway 67, the Texas Department of Public Safety reported.

Auden Vasquez Bejarano, 27, was pronounced dead at the scene at 2:16 a.m. by Judge Richard Elmendorf following the accident which occurred about midnight, officials said.

According to DPS officials, Bejarano was driving a 1981 four-door Buick south on Highway 67 at a high rate of speed when he failed to negotiate a right-hand curve, causing the vehicle to go off the east side of the road and overturn 3½ times.

Gabriela Bejarano, 23, Bianca Gabriela Bejarano, 5, and Samantha Bejarano, 7 months, all of Midland, were injured in the accident. All sustained head injures and were in Big Bend Regional Medical Center in Alpine in stable condition Saturday.

No one was wearing seat belts and alcohol was determined to be a contributing factor, DPS reported.

Suspect arrested in Big Spring killing

Staff Report

BIG SPRING — Big Spring police arrested a suspect Saturday in connection with the murder of a Big Spring man whose body was found Wednesday morning in Comanche Trail Park, officials said.

The suspect, a 16-year-old white male whose name has not been released because of his age, was arrested in connection with the homicide of 52-year-old Richard Wayne Lauderdale.

Lauderdale was found dead from a single stab wound to the chest about 7 a.m. Wednesday. Lauderdale's family had reported that he was missing the night before.

The suspect was being held at a juvenile detention center Saturday night awaiting a detention hearing Monday, officials said.

Police said they were in the process of trying to recovering a murder weapon and were continuing to investigate the incident.

STORE: New location will have more shelf space, 3 registers

(From 1B)

Access will be limited through one door.

Rosson said the new spacious quarters will end the previous registration nightmare of "150 students standing wall-to-wall" waiting to buy books in the smaller store.

The student center, which includes the cafeteria and game rooms, will also be the site of student in-service offices, including the registrar, student records and the dean's office.

The Midland College campus was constructed with a $5.3 million bond in 1973.

"Voters approved a $6.1 million bond in February 1976 which was used to build Chaparral Center, the fine arts building and the occupational technical building," Tuck said. "Current construction is from available funds."

Once the bookstore supplies have all been moved to the new location workmen will begin tearing out more walls from the old bookstore and will include the area as part of the student center expansion. Tuck expects the construction will be completed by Aug. 27.

Rap album can be sold in Austin

AUSTIN (AP) — Although the Travis County attorney's office has received a stream of telephone calls about the controversial 2 Live Crew rap album, the album will not be banned from local stores, said Ken Oden, Travis County attorney.

However, the album, which features sexually explicit lyrics, has been pulled from the shelves of one local store. The national headquarters of Hasting's Records, Tapes and Videos — which also has a store in Midland — Wednesday advised its stores to remove the album.

Darrell Zimmermann, assistant manager of the Hasting's store across from the University of Texas campus, said he was told to pull the album "As Nasty As They Wanna Be" because of a Broward County, Fla., ruling.

WORMS: 'Bug scouts' hunt hidden insects

(From 1B)

"It may be that the adult (army worm) moth is more attracted to the lush, tender growth because it's better for growing Beet army worms. I don't know, except that I haven't seen them on older or younger cotton," Lucero said.

Ecology may be the best defense for the crop.

Beneficial insects such as wasps, spiders, pirate, damsel and assassin bugs and green lace wing larvae parasitize the army worms, feeding on them and laying their eggs in them. Because they are a few weeks behind the worms in development, the worm population has mushroomed unchecked until now.

As for the aphids, their own booming population can spell disaster.

"If they build up large enough numbers on the plants, their populations can just crash," Allen said. "They trigger a condition in the leaves that makes them unable to support the aphids."

"If that happens we may not have a late summer aphid problem," he said.

Greenwood farmer Roy Graham said his fields have gone through the worst of the infestation. He had had the scouts out in his fields Friday to check worm and aphid numbers.

"We've had a rough time but I'm more encouraged this week than the week before," said Graham. "Maybe we're over the bad part."

But Graham is watching the weather. He said the dry spell caused an insect migration to irrigated land, where the plants are greener.

"We won't have to worry about insects without some rain," he said.

The question is, how long should a farmer wait for Mother Nature to control her own?

Both entomologists say a certain number of pests should be tolerated.

"They give the beneficial insects something to eat on," Lucero said.

Lucero said growers should wait to treat their crops until the cotton destruction has reached an economic threshold. He suggested a count of 10,000 to 20,000 larvae per acre of irrigated land and a terminal damage rate of 10 to 20 percent of plants to trigger control measures.

'We've had a rough time but I'm more encouraged this week than the week before. Maybe we're over the bad part.'

— Greenwood farmer Roy Graham

He said the best insecticide to use on the worms is Larvin, because it controls the worms without harming beneficial insects. But Lucero is wary of full-scale chemical strafing to knock out the worms.

"The worst thing to do is spray just because your neighbor is," he said.

Allen said spraying too early in the season could aggravate the problem by building up the insects' tolerance to insecticides.

"We're advising them to play their hands carefully," he said. "They need to tolerate the situation as long as possible."

Allen said agricultural scientists are experimenting with non-insecticide controls for pests, including aphid-resistant cotton and a synthetic alarm pheromone, or message scent, that encourages the aphid to leave the leaf.

Charlie Wright, general manager of the Midland Farmers Co-Op Gin, is philosophical about the difficulties of growing the cotton crop.

"If the cotton makes it past the army worms, every thrip and aphid'll get it, then about the time the aphids are through, the boll worms come," he said.

SURVEY: Control group of city residents used

(From 1B)

The control group was drawn from Midland College students and members of Midland's League of Women Voters chapter, Frailey said. He said 246 county residents responded to the survey and 319 people were in the control group.

Frailey admitted that he "rounded off a lot of statistical corners" during the study, which he said was done in "quickie" fashion. He declined to release survey copies to the media and said he did not wish to stake his professional reputation on survey results.

Nevertheless, he said the survey was valid.

"It's purpose was never to be definitive," Frailey said. "It's purpose was to see if there was actually some justification for looking into this further."

Dr. James Corwin, medical director of the Midland Memorial Hospital Allison Cancer Center, said many factors could "skew" the results of a door-to-door survey like the one Frailey conducted.

He said survey takers might not be qualified to determine the true nature of respondents' illnesses, and said he did not believe survey questions adequately distinguished between malignant and non-malignant tumors.

Corwin said the percentage of Midland County residents with confirmed cancer cases is actually slightly lower than the percentage of city residents with cancer.

Hospital pathology reports indicate that there were 415 cancer patients in the city of Midland between 1985 and 1987, or 0.6 percent of the 71,692 population. Midland County, excluding the city, had 57 cancer patients during the same period, or 0.52 percent of a 10,944 population. Population figures are based on the 1980 census.

Frailey and others have pointed out that Midland Memorial's cancer figures do not include those people who seek cancer treatment outside Midland. Frailey suggested last week that there could be more county cancer cases than the hospital is aware of.

Tim Rainbolt, Texas Department of Health assistant epidemiologist, said in a June 8 letter to hospital officials that approximately 18 percent of Midland County's cancer patients sought treatment elsewhere in 1986 and 1987. The 18 percent includes city and county residents.

Corwin said he expected the 18 percent who sought treatment elsewhere would be proportionally distributed among city and county residents.

If anything, he said, city-dwelling cancer patients would be more likely to seek treatment outside Midland because they would tend to have more money.

He said he could not determine from hospital and state reports whether cancer rates in the particular neighborhood in question were unusually high.

"If we just look at the map, it doesn't appear that we're going to have a difference" between that neighborhood and the rest of the county, Corwin said. He referred to a wall map prepared by his staff showing the occurrence of city and county cancer cases.

The Texas Water Commission and several individuals have tested wells in the south county area in response to contamination concerns. The test area, and health survey area, is in the vicinity of South County Road 1220 and 1210 near Interstate 20.

Chloride levels above state standards were found in 20 of 36 wells tested by the TWC this spring. Traces of volatile organic compounds not in excess of state standards were found in seven other wells.

Celebrity charity softball game set for June 24

Tickets are $3 per person and can be purchased at any of the following locations: the Furham Center, 3301 Sinclair; Visiting Nurses Services, 1015 N. Dixie, Odessa; Dellwood Senior Center, 3303 W. Free trade pact will take effort

Mexico and the United States share a 1,933-mile border and, generally, have maintained acceptable relations over the span of a century and a half, which makes it rather peculiar that the two nations do not share a free trade agreement.

President Bush and Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gotari are said to favor free trade. But there are problems that first must be resolved or at least significant agreement reached toward that end. The two men talked about those and other matters early last week in Washington, D.C.

While a free trade agreement obviously would be to the advantage of both nations and while both nations are interested, such a pact won't come about quickly or without the diligent efforts of both. Too many problems lie in the way.

One is, of course, the heavy flow of illicit drugs from Mexico, Central and South America into the United States. In recent weeks, Salinas has indicated that he is willing to work with U.S. officials toward the goal of stopping that flow.

Yet being interested in making such a change and actually bringing it about are two entirely different matters. Corruption on the part of Mexican officials and law enforcement officers historically has been much more widespread and socially acceptable than similar abuses in this country, making change difficult to effect.

Economic troubles in Mexico, too, need the attention of Salinas, although both he and Bush view free trade as the key to reviving the Mexican economy. Since the mid-1980s, the Mexican trade surplus has been eroded by falling oil revenues and increased imports of U.S. auto parts.

Ideally, a free trade agreement would be patterned after the pact worked out between the United States and Canada last year. That agreement provides preferential tariff treatment for imports from both countries, lowers investment barriers between the two and establishes ways to resolve disputes.

Potentially a free trade pact would lead the United States and Mexico to work together in other areas of mutual concern, and make the agreement significant socially as well as financially. Perhaps, down the road, a three-way agreement could be worked out including Canada.

It will take time to bring about such an agreement, but Bush and Salinas are moving in the right direction in the interest of their nations.

No session on flag?

AUSTIN — There is no doubt that Texas legislators will bow to political realities and ratify a constitutional amendment to the Bill of Rights outlawing burning or other desecration of the flag.

My only question is why Gov. Bill Clements, who said he feels in his bones there will be one more special legislative session before January, doesn't take this opportunity to call one.

Brown

Maybe he feels making so much political hay so easily is unseemly, but somehow I doubt it.

President Bush says such a constitutional amendment "is in the best interests of the country," a statement that is hard to buy.

The proposed amendment, successfully added to the U.S. Constitution through ratification by three-quarters of the state legislatures, would make the first change ever in the Bill of Rights.

If the integrity of the document has held up for more than 200 years without an amendment, will changing it now make us stronger or weaker as a country? I think weaker.

Those who feel we should follow through with this further constraint on free speech make a lot of arguments, but I'd like to talk about just one.

It's my favorite, having an odd kind of "protect me from myself" overtone.

This argument takes its cue from Oliver Wendell Holmes' famous opinion that free speech ought to have enough limits to prohibit, for example, someone yelling "fire" in a crowded theater when no fire exists.

Holmes' opinion is a victory of practicality over ideology, something we need more of. But his fine, clear example clouds as we attempt to apply it to the flag-burning situation.

Those on the right would argue that a flag-burner is a similar kind of instigator — a provacateur seeking to distrupt the normal order of things.

If our rightist friend happens to be running for office, he might even take a swing at the guy — thus the idea we should protect him from having to use violence.

This way, of course, lies anarchy or worse. Instigation on its own should not provide grounds for censure, or else we might as well give up and declare ourselves the new Russia.

As an aside along that line, there was a victory for free speech in Russia and all the other Soviet states this past week as the Soviet parliament (that has a nice ring to it, doesn't it?) approved laws allowing free publication of newspapers.

We in this country must realize we do have limits to free speech. As a writer, for example, I am breaking the law if I maliciously libel somebody with untruths.

Congress also has seen fit to outlaw speech that advocates the violent overthrow of the government.

However, the flag-burner is an another matter — if his protest is not endangering anybody with violence, nor advocating violence itself.

Holmes himself set the test. He said if words or actions present "a clear and present danger" that Congress has a right to prevent, then such speech or actions may be outlawed.

Laws against flag-burning have fallen twice before the Supreme Court recently because they could not pass that test.

Now, for political reasons, we are facing a change to one of our most precious statements of who we are, the Bill of Rights, a document that has stood unaltered for 200 years.

I am pessimistic that enough state legislatures will resist voting to make the change, and I feel diminished as a citizen because of that.

Military doctors denied basic rights

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon spends a fortune putting people through medical school so the military hospitals of this country can be staffed by competent doctors. But, increasingly, the best and brightest are bailing out of the service as soon as their obligatory stint is finished. Contrary to what you might think, the lure of big money in private practice is not the only thing that drives them out.

Anderson

Physicians in the military are finding out that serving their country can be tantamount to second-class citizenship. You have heard the stories of abysmal treatment in military hospitals. This is the flip side of that story viewed through the eyes of the doctors.

Recent government surveys show that many doctors leave the military because of low salaries or the lack of support staff. But a growing number of physicians are also getting out because they are denied basic civil rights.

Many are whistleblowers who are harassed when they try to expose gross negligence in military medical care. Others are victims of personal vendettas by commanding officers who think a hospital can be run like boot camp and a doctor can be browbeaten like a foot soldier. When these harassed doctors complain, they are denied the due process afforded private citizens.

We reported recently on the all-too-common phenomenon of perfectly sane military doctors who are forced into psychiatric treatment simply because they complain about their working conditions. Pending legislation introduced by Rep. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., would make it illegal for the military to punish whistleblowers with psychiatry. But the ingenious military has other ways of making doctors suffer.

A former dermatologist at the Wuerzburg Army base in Germany told us that personality conflicts with one of his commanding officers spilled over into his records. The commanding officer filed formal complaints about the doctor. Colleagues of the doctor told us the commanding officer "looked for anything to get (the doctor)."

The doctor protested the bad rap in his file before a hospital credentials committee and won, but then found out later that a list of complaints against him was still in it.

After he was transferred stateside, the doctor found that the bad file tailed him. He had to explain why his credentials from Wuerzburg labeled him only borderline competent. The doctor got full credentials at his new hospital only after he put together an aggressive case to prove himself.

He continued to protest to the Pentagon about the damaging entries in his file. But eventually it wasn't worth the hassle. The qualified doctor left the military and is now in private practice. His file has yet to be corrected.

This doctor is not alone. The permanent credentials of many others we talked to have been damaged by hearsay and petty military infighting. Many are powerless to clear their names because the person who smeared them also out ranks them.

The Pentagon has formal procedures for a doctor to appeal a bad rating and the military may sanction an investigation. But one lawyer told us, "If you're looking for the military to make your case for you ... don't count on it."

GEORGE WILL

Issue of arts funding doesn't fly with flag

WASHINGTON — "This," says Rep. Newt Gingrich, speaking of (and like) George Bush, "is a traditional values kind of guy." This testimonial was elicited not by Bush's stand against the menace of flag burning but by his reversal of position regarding subsidies for the arts.

Will

Bush no longer opposes restrictions on grants from the National Endowment for the Arts. Now he favors support for "good projects" but not obscene ones.

The controversy about protecting the flag testifies to a consensus so strong that no action is needed. The controversy about the arts testifies to the absence of the sort of consensus needed to justify the NEA.

The flag merits special protection as a symbolic summation of national values. Thus the Supreme Court is wrong in ruling that the Constitution, which both depends on and establishes those values, forbids criminalizing desecration of the flag.

The public is far more volatile regarding the flag than art. What is notable is not that some art scandalizes but that so little art does. What distinguishes 1990 from, say, 1875 is the indifference of the public to art.

Robert Hughes, writing in The New Republic, says, "When Parisian gallery-goers in the 1870s recoiled in horror from the 'leprous' blue shadows in a Monet, it was because they felt an important contract had been broken — the agreement between painting, as a primary form of social discourse, and reality." Painting has long since lost almost all its power to engage the public's passions.

Even before it lost its primacy to photography (a subsidized exhibition of homoerotic photographs triggered the current controversy) and other modern media, painting had lost its power by shredding the contract Hughes speaks of. That contract was shredded by the stance of modernism, with its aura of anger and repudiation toward the inherited culture and the traditional task of transmitting the culture's values.

Today the problem with public funds for the arts is not just that subsidies sometimes go to projects in which urinating (and simulated sex acts and whip handles in anuses) is important. The large problem is that there is no consensus about what art is, or why it is important.

The definition of art has been democratized: Art is whatever anyone calling himself an artist says it is. This is the philistinism of the elites. It makes the "arts community" (the phrase connotes ostentatious separation from the larger society) the most arrogant lobby.

If art has no improving purpose, it has no claim on public resources. Anyway, when there is no consensus concerning the purpose or even the nature, of art, political institutions are especially ill-suited to the task of formulating standards for the intelligent disbursement of subsidies.

Some artists seeking subsidies accept the need to acknowledge a public purpose and they say: Shocking, provoking and discomfiting the public is good for it. Fair enough. They are free to do so.

But the perverse result today is that political institutions, rendered passive by the fear of being branded philistine, acquiesce in the demand for unrestricted subsidies to support the shocking, provoking and discomfiting of the subsidizers. Mark my words. It is only a matter of time before someone burns a flag, calls it "kinetic art," and gets a grant to take his act on the road.

The argument for subsidizing the arts has a distinguished pedigree. It holds that the arts elevate the public mind by exposing it to beauty that gives rise to ennobling sentiments that leaven society. But nowadays if you speak of art's public purpose, or discuss standards for what is elevating and ennobling, you are apt to be denounced as an enemy of "artistic freedom."

Fair enough. Let artists be free from the taint of public purpose, and thus from the burden of public funds.

RUSSELL BAKER

Staying young one secret of the trade

Dave Barry, the humor columnist, has turned 40. The news is embedded in the best-seller charts with a book titled "Dave Barry Turns 40" by Dave Barry.

It proves that some columnists will do anything to get material.

Baker

Their agents would probably ask, "And why not, especially if they can parlay it into a best seller?"

Well, I'll tell you why not, you greedy agents:

And I'll tell you, too, old Dave Barry:

Because there is such a thing as loyalty to the reader in the column business, that's why.

Oh sure, there are also such things as grammar, spelling, the occasional idea, and eschewing tautology, redundancy and ambiguity, as well as writing a column every six months or so that's worth reading all the way to the end.

But none of that's worth a hill of beans without loyalty to the reader. And one thing no columnist should ever do to his readers, even for the sake of getting on the best-seller list, is turn 40.

A few years ago an editor tried tempting me to turn 40. The reason nobody read my column, he said, was that it read as if it were written by a 15-year-old.

"Why don't you announce you've just turned 40?" he suggested.

"But that would be a lie!"

"But think how depressed it would make you feel. Imagine: 40 years old. Talk about depression! Pretty soon you'd start analyzing Gorbachev, Congress and Mrs. Bush's commencement speeches. Next thing you know, you'd have readers a columnist could boast about."

I threw that editor out of my office. Not, however, before I gave him a piece of my mind.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself," I said, "asking a 29-year-old to lie about his age just to attract readers. That's tantamount to trying to corrupt the young."

"Twenty-nine, hah!" he cried, as he tumbled down the steps. "Twenty-nine-year-olds don't have 11 grandchildren."

He was referring to several recent columns of mine about grandchildren. As noted above, a columnist will do any number of things to get material, and I, in order to produce some columns about grandchildren, which seem to be having a brief vogue, had borrowed several tykes.

Dave Barry later said that this was part of a scheme of mine to head him off at the bookshop with a work titled "Russell Baker Turns 80," but he has apologized after meeting me for the first time and observing, as he put it in his enviably limpid though somewhat redundant style, "that for such a mere broth of a boy, 80 is so remote as to be inconceivable, nay, unthinkable."

It was already widely known in columnizing circles that Dave was toying with the idea of turning 40. I was tempted to advise him against it, but decided to keep quiet, figuring it would look arrogant for a person my age to be advising an old fellow like Barry.

Now that he's done it, of course, he has set himself up to do a nice sequel. Something like, "Having Turned 40, Dave Barry, Saying 'This Is the Dumbest Move I Ever Made,' Turns Back to 39."

Of course publishers will say the title needs work, but what do publishers know? With a nice long title, you can run it through 50 or 60 inside pages and not have to write so much small-print stuff.

Still, it's doubtful Dave can get back to 39 now. Once you turn 40 you've had it as far as the public is concerned. It gives them the chills seeing somebody suddenly slip over the horizon toward old age.

We columnizers speak to masses who 20 years ago said, "Never trust anyone over 30." They have upped the trust line to 40. Does this mean that in 20 years, American have become only 10 years older? Not at all. All it means is that this is a land where millions get the creeps at the thought of turning 40.

That's why I won't do it. It would be disloyal to the reader.

Litter, exhaust major problems

Dear Editor,

People aren't taking good enough care of our earth. I would like to make some suggestions for people in Midland.

Air pollution is a main problem. It is caused by exhaust pipes on cars, trucks' fumes, refineries and aerosol sprays. My solution is cleaner fuel or better exhaust filters and don't use aerosol sprays.

People littering Midland is another problem. Midland is so littered that it's hard to see pretty land without trash blowing everywhere. My solution is to place more trash cans in more useful places.

Newspaper recycling should be considered more. Our family and other families have at least seven or eight newspapers every week. Midland Reporter-Telegram, what do you do with your leftover newspapers? My solution is to build a recycling place in Midland for newspapers and convenient drop off places like grocery stores.

There aren't enough trees in the world. Many trees are chopped down for papers. People don't replace the trees with new ones. The lack of trees is destroying nature's life cycle. I challenge each school to plant one tree each year to celebrate Earth Day.

I hope these suggestions will help people care much more about our Keep Midland Clean program!!

Litter control plan suggested

Dear Mr. Mayor,

I'm writing to give you some suggestions on how to reduce littering and improve litter cleanup in Midland.

Here are some ways to do this. Put trash cans on highly littered street corners. Have the police drive around in unmarked cars and give tickets to people who litter, and for the fine make them clean up the littered area.

Most kinds of litter can be recycled. If there was a recycling program in the schools and supermarkets, people could bring the litter they collect and find, so it could be recycled. Recycling would also help unemployment because you would have to hire people to sort the trash and to run the recycling machines. The recycled materials can be sold to pay for the plant and its operation.

If you charged a five cent deposit on each aluminum can, people would be less likely to throw them away. Any deposits not reclaimed could be used for litter cleanup. This plan is working in Oregon.

Littering is one of the main causes of soil pollution. Trash decomposes very little in landfills, to be recycled by nature it takes 500 years for an aluminum can to decompose. Each person in the U.S. generates about four pounds of trash each day, that's twice as much as other countries.

To reduce littering and increase recycling our government needs to encourage people to care by making them pay if they litter and paying them to clean up.

Parks designed for enjoyment

Dear Honorable Mayor,

What is becoming of our community?

Our own citizens are guilty of doing everything destructive to our parks and public places including deliberately trashing them. On numerous occasions I've seen graffiti on walls, trash scattered everywhere and sometimes even damaged equipment.

I feel that we should do something about this major problem, because our parks are really here for everyone's enjoyment.

Here are some suggestions that might help us win this battle of keeping Midland beautiful. First, at every park make a new rule which states that all types of littering will be strictly prohibited. Second, enforce this rule by having uniformed policemen patrol the parks more often. Third, allow city workers or volunteers to thoroughly clean all parks and public places. Finally, inform all citizens of these guidelines by having a public announcement.

I feel that these suggestions are timely because we celebrate Earth Day's 20th anniversary this month. I am personally affected because one small park, Lloyd Park, off Cuthbert and Big Spring streets, is named for my great-grandfather.

I hope this letter will affect your plans on making all of Midland a cleaner city.

Direct mailing not environmental culprit

Your May 13 edition's column (KRTN Graphics, Source: Earth-Works Group) on name removal from mailing lists and the environment has come to our attention, and we would like to offer another point of view.

You note that 44 percent of direct mail is never opened or read. It may interest you to note that in 1989, 91.7 million adults shopped by mail or phone, according to the Simmons Market Research Bureau. And, a recent survey by the United States Postal Service found that 82.5 percent of catalogs are considered useful or interesting, and 91.3 percent of households are satisfied with mail-order companies' service. These statistics indicate that people are happily shopping by mail in growing numbers.

Mail Preference Service was created in 1971 to provide consumers with a choice of whether or not to receive direct mail. Further, we do not believe that the solution to the environmental problems is as simple as being removed from as many mailing lists as possible. Consumers who shop by mail are not polluting the environment with exhaust fumes from cars used when shopping in stores.

In order to identify ways in which direct marketers can support environmentally sound practices, the Direct Marketing Association has formed a Task Force on Environmental Issues. We have indicated our commitment to helping to save the environment for future generations by its formation. Toward that end, the task force is conducting a survey of the DMA membership to determine the level of awareness and action on the part of its individual member companies.

We would be happy to act as a resource on future stories on any aspect of direct marketing. Please call on us if we can be of help.

Jerries have ruined 'America's Team'

If the Dallas Cowboy football team ever starts winning again, they will no longer be known as "America's Team."

The two Jerries, Jones and Johnson, have no conception of what the words honesty and ethics mean. The former coaches and management of the team were sincere, reputable and won the admiration of many of this country's citizens. Not so with the present owner and coaches, who are not straightforward nor honest in their dealings with the players nor the public.

Listeners unhappy with all-talk radio

There are some Midland citizens who are disappointed that the "melody no longer lingers on" from 3 to 5 p.m. weekdays on a certain radio station.

The nice listening music has been replaced with a talk show hosted by a very verbose person.

Radio stations playing easy listening music are in short supply across the country, so when music is replaced with talk, music lovers are unhappy.

Police in high-speed pursuit

It wasn't officers who started it

This letter is in reference to Joanne DiSalvo's letter written on June 10, 1990.

It never ceases to amaze me when people like Ms. Joanne DiSalvo have the ignorance to judge without the facts. The officers did not initiate the high-speed chase. It was not their fault that a citizen of Midland had the audacity to steal a car and go for a high-speed joy ride.

What were the officers supposed to do? Just let him pass by and wave? They were trying to get him to stop. But did he want to listen? No! It also amazes me when an incident involving a police officer and a person committing a crime that everyone is more inclined to blame the officers instead of the person committing the crime. These men are on the streets risking their lives every minute protecting us and Ms. DiSalvo still is not satisfied. Yes, it's by their choice, but they seem to lose if they do, and lose if they don't.

Ms. DiSalvo should walk in their shoes and think about what she would have done at 2 a.m. that Saturday, while she was sleeping "safely" in her home.

Three of the officers who assisted in the rescue were not involved in the pursuit, but were in the area to assist if needed, and thank God they were nearby.

Who improves the quality of life for the police officer when their lives are turned upside-down by what they see and do everyday? You hear about one accident and they see hundreds. Drugs, child abuse, accidents, et cetera, I could go on and on.

Mrs. Demaray's quality of life may have gone down, and we are saddened by that, but she is alive! The officers involved in the accident burned their hands, hair, clothes, got cuts and bruises, but do you care? Would you rather they do nothing, and if so, next time you need an officer, maybe you should call a crook.

Olga Robledo

Let's all just turn our heads

This letter is in response to Joanne DiSalvo's letter to the editor on June 10.

It seems to me that DiSalvo would prefer that our policemen turn their heads to a criminal's actions. The police officers involved had no way of knowing that such a tragedy would occur as an end result of the chase.

One of the officers at the scene was burned removing the children and Ms. Demaray from her burning vehicle.

Any of these officers could have stood back and let an already horrible situation grow worse, but they didn't, they risked their lives to save Demaray and her children. I suppose that if it were up to Joanne DiSalvo, the police would do nothing but ride around and stare into space, but then what kind of community would we live in if this was all the police did?

It angers me that there are people who sit in judgement of our policemen, and these same people do not understand and do not want to understand what their service is to our community.

If DiSalvo is looking for someone to blame, maybe she should do a little more research into the case and find out who let such a dangerous criminal back onto the streets of Midland.

It is better to remain silent and let people think you are ignorant, than to speak and remove all doubt.

Laura Turner
Midland

... What about medical crew?

Joanne DiSalvo feels that, far from being heroes, the Midland Police Department, "who initiated a high-speed chase," should pay for the medical costs and rehabilitation expenses of Michele Demaray. What an original idea!

But she erred in placing the blame; obviously, if the Midland Fire Department EMS personnel hadn't meddled in the accident, and if the emergency room medical staff had minded their own business, there would be no expenses to pay (after funeral costs), so they should at least have to help the guilty officers make the payments.

Joanne feels that "pursuing ... criminals ... should be outlawed ... " and I couldn't agree more. It would probably be many years before anyone noticed that merely driving away from a police car attempting to stop a vehicle would cause the officer to turn off his emergency lights and pull over, and for at least that time no one would have to fear being in an accident caused by a rapist, armed robber or habitual traffic violator being pursued by police.

What a wonderful, idyllic little town we will all have then, all thanks to the well-thought-out suggestion of Joanne DiSalvo!

Responsibility is criminal's

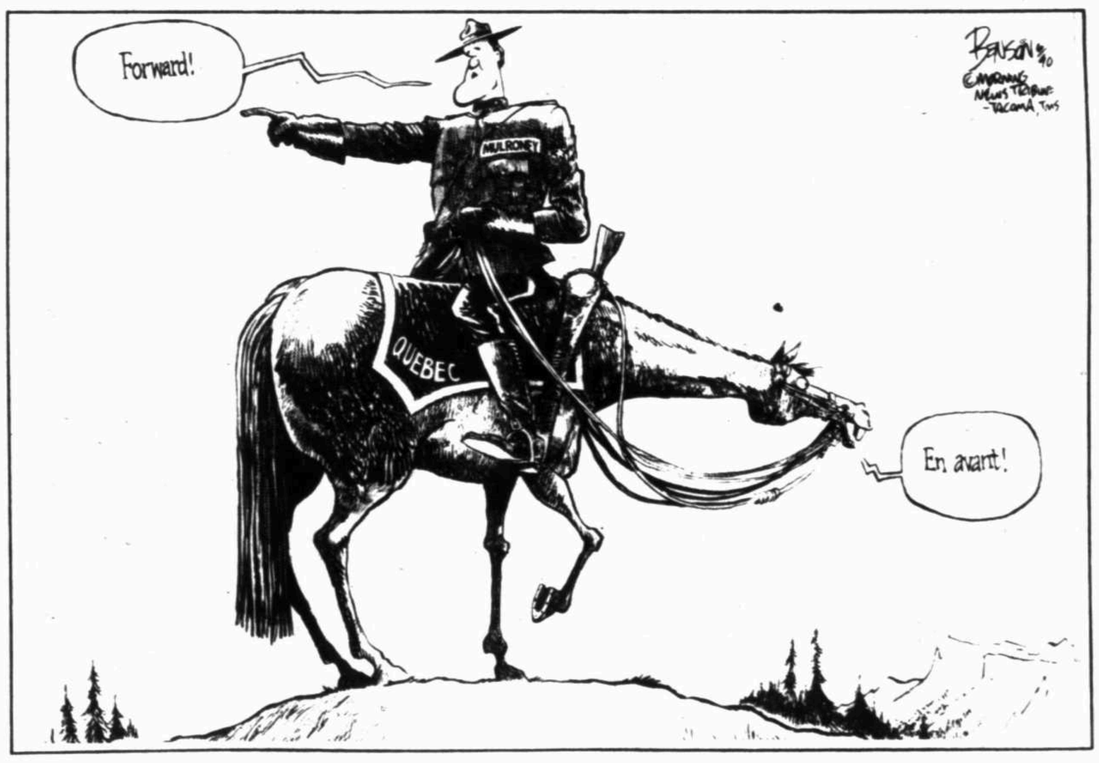

I do not understand Ms. DiSalvo's position concerning outlawing chasing criminals on the streets of Midland.

The police officers were chasing Robert Dudley because he had stolen a pickup. Dudley was the one traveling at the high rate of speed and he was the one who turned on Michigan going west even though it is a one-way east.

What does she think officers should do — make no effort in apprehending any suspect who tries to elude them?

The police officers were doing their job. Robert Dudley is responsible for his actions and is responsible for the injury of Michelle Demaray and her children. No one else.

Gorbachev has taken some positive steps after summit

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — The good news this week is that Mikhail Gorbachev clearly seems to have decided — with a little help from his friends in the West — to take some positive steps in dealing with the Baltic states' demand for independence and, for that matter, with the future political structure of the entire Soviet Union.

Hearst

Little more than a week after returning home from his summit meeting with President Bush, Gorbachev took steps to ease the two-month-old embargo he imposed against Lithuania when he restored some fuel and raw material supplies to that republic.

The Soviet leader also announced he's willing to agree to a new and "looser" relationship among the 15 republics that make up the Soviet Union, one that will give their hitherto puppet governments genuine "sovereignty."

Gorbachev also has started talks with the leaders of the three Baltic republics, Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia, who have already unilaterally declared themselves independent or in the full process of becoming so. For months, he'd been saying he wouldn't meet with them unless and until they withdrew their declarations of independence.

But they didn't do that and the talks began, anyway.

Latvian President Anatoly Gorbunov disclosed that Gorbachev made a "firm offer" to negotiate that was "absolute recognition of the legality of our resolution that Latvia has begun the independence process. ... This is something new (from Gorbachev)."

That's not the end of the matter, of course, but I think we can stop worrying about the Red Army settling the Baltic crisis in the usual communist fashion of the past by using raw force.

If there were military fireworks after this, Gorbachev would be completely discredited. He's too shrewd and intelligent not to realize that.

The fact that he's moved to unblock his country's internal political crisis so soon after returning from Washington looks like anything but a coincidence to me.

One of Europe's most respected newspapers, Switzerland's Neue Zurcher Zeitung, agrees. It said the Soviet leader arrived home "in a more reasonable frame of mind than when he left."

The Swiss paper believes that Bush was at least partly responsible.

"He's a man who induces reasonableness in his interlocutors," it observed, adding that there is "a hard core of common sense in Gorbachev which emerges when he is approached in the right way. Bush seems to have employed the right approach."

The president avoided twisting Gorbachev's arm too hard or too publicly, but the Soviet leader gives every impression of having gotten the message.

Gorbachev tacitly admitted as much in his speech last week to the presidents of the 15 Soviet republics by conceding that the U.S.-Soviet trade agreement signed at the summit, which he was so eager to obtain, was opposed by many Americans and might not be ratified by Congress "until (we) grant independence to Lithuania."

In my opinion, what this signifies is that the Soviets have finally joined the rest of the world — which is the most important development of all.

Gorbachev, in starkest contrast to his mostly ignorant and parochial predecessors, knows he can't act in isolation. Or, rather, he can, but only at the price of leading his country to ruin with no prospect of recovery.

If he needed prodding on the Baltic problem, he's had it, not only from Bush, but from other Western leaders.

Three months ago, I suggested in this column that French President Francois Mitterrand act as mediator in the Lithuanian situation. Soon afterward, he and Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany jointly intervened, urging Gorbachev to seek a negotiated settlement.

That was at a moment when Soviet tanks were rolling menacingly through the streets of Vilnius, Lithuania's capital, and troops were forcibly taking over government buildings. A military crackdown appeared imminent.

Following the Mitterrand-Kohl declaration, Moscow's threatening gestures started to subside, although an economic blockade was imposed.

On the other side, Gorbachev's home-grown opponents seem to me to have begun acting more prudently, reining up before they plunge over the precipice into anarchy and, maybe, civil war.

The huge Russian federation, the republic that's far bigger than all the other Soviet republics put together, went ahead last week to claim a limited form of sovereignty, ruling that its laws from now on take precedence over Soviet laws and decrees.

But the federation's parliament stopped short of the virtual secession promised earlier by its new leader, Boris Yeltsin.

None of this means the Soviet Union's problems — which, in a sense have become our problems — are all wrapped up. Far from it.

The way ahead is going to be grueling, at best. Success isn't assured.

After all, civil strife has been raging among Soviet Moslems in Central Asia, with hundreds reported dead and wounded. And many of the other Soviet republics — the Ukraine, Byelorussia, Moldavia, the Caucasus territories of Georgia, Armenia and Azerbaijan — are stepping up pressure to break loose from the Kremlin.

Gorbachev will need a lot of luck. If he's wise, he'll also go on listening to the sage advice of President Bush and his other well-wishers in the West.

EDUCATION

Reforms put professionals on hot seat

■ The Legislature's educational reforms will affect much more than school financing, making school districts' accreditation rest on five "excellence indicators."

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State education professionals say the Legislature's recent school reforms will put teachers, principals and superintendents on the hot seat more than ever in improving student performance.

Parents and taxpayers should have more access than ever to campus-by-campus student improvement reports under the new law.

Lawmakers also set out a formal goal-setting process that will have teachers, administrators and board members sitting down together for the first time in some districts.

"I think we're entering a period when not only the principal but also classroom teachers and even the superintendent are going to be viewed more critically in terms of student performance," said Johnny Vaselka of the Texas Association of School Administrators.

His opinion is evidence that Gov. Bill Clements signed far more than a school finance package to get the state off the hook before the Texas Supreme Court in providing equal access to state money.

The new laws are the latest in a long string of changes the Legislature has prescribed for the state education establishment during the last 10 years.

"We passed House Bill 72 (in 1984) and kept talking about fine-tuning it," said Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur and author of the legislation.

"I think this is a major tune-up."

Attorneys for poorer school districts that filed the Edgewood v. Kirby lawsuit say they will argue to strike down the school finance portions of the law in a June 25 hearing in state district court.

BUT EVEN IF those portions fall, the legislation holds that its other reforms, new regulations that have little to do with actual school finance, will stand.

Many of those regulations are built around five measurable "excellence indicators" which, among other uses, provide a new footing for the accreditation process.

Previously, the state's central school administering agency, the Texas Education Agency, accredited districts on the basis of availability of specified programs.

But now, the five new yardsticks must come into play. Test scores, graduation rates, student attendance and enrollment in advanced academic courses are four of the indicators. The fifth one is the amount of measured change a district can achieve in each of the first four.

The law gives the education commissioner the power to order a state takeover of a district that fails accreditation in two successive attempts, or to order its annexation to a neighboring district.

The excellence indicators also help determine whether schools and school districts may free themselves from certain state regulations. Those judged "exemplary" in reaching their goals are rewarded with fewer hoops to jump through.

Among regulations exemplary schools can avoid is a previous legislative mandate that elementary schools maintain student-teacher ratios of 22-to-1.

However, districts that de-emphasize the classroom ratios must show that student learning does not suffer.

JOE BARESSI, Midland Independent School District superintendent, said that doing away with 22:1 would be impossible "PR-wise" since parents have drawn a connection between smaller class sizes and better student performance.

Setting goals in terms of the indicators is a process that brings parents, teachers, administrators and other community members together on panels at the campus and district levels.

One controversial aspect of the bill is that teachers may elect their representatives to panels at both levels.

During legislative negotiations, Parker was forced to accept a provision stating specifically that the election and teacher representation clauses in no way are intended to lead to a collective bargaining situation between teachers and the district.

"I think testing has its place, and at this point, I wouldn't say its overemphasized.' However, publishing the scores is 'not always the fairest way to compare the efforts of students and faculties.'

—MISD Superintendent Joe Baressi

Baressi said the district already uses a peer-selection process that assists in choosing professionals to help set goals. But the president of the largest state teacher organization saw the process prescribed by the bill as more formal.

"It's not happening anywhere, and don't let anybody tell you that it is," said Ollie Besteiro, president of the Texas State Teachers Association. "What they have are consultation committees," she said.

One integral part of the indicators is a yearly report card school boards must present in a public hearing setting. Included in the report card are a campus-by-campus outline of goals and an account of what progress the school has made toward realizing the goals.

A NEW LEVEL of standardized testing in fourth, sixth, eighth and 10th grades will help provide data for the report. Students already undergo TEAMS testing at other grade levels.

Baressi said the district already uses a nationally recognized exam to test students in grades one through 10.

"I think testing has its place, and at this point, I wouldn't say its overemphasized," he said.

However, publishing the scores is "not always the fairest way to compare the efforts of students and faculties," he said.

The legislation seeks to hold principals accountable for reaching campus-level goals by using the excellence indicators as a basis for job evaluation.

Having provided such a stick, the Legislature also provided principals with a carrot: they may approve personnel appointments at their schools based on criteria developed after informally consulting with faculty.

Parker said parts of the bill that hold out the prospect of reduced regulation mean school professionals "are going to have to educate themselves on ways that will maximize freedom."

But, as with any new plan for sending money to school districts, the professionals also will have to educate themselves on ways that will "maximize funding," he said.

Parker said he hopes this particular bill will prompt districts to enroll more kids in core academic courses such as physics, chemistry, literature and biology, which is his intention.

He has criticized school districts that encourage lower-achieving students, especially those in middle schools, to take vocational education courses, for which the districts receive higher stipends from the state.

"DISTRICTS JUST seem to have a way of funneling kids into the courses that pay more," said the senator, with a rueful laugh.

Moving away from the local level, the new law also mandates a reduction in the power of the 15-member State Board of Education.

One member, Carolyn Crawford, a Beaumont Independent School District administrator, acknowledged that an overactive state board had become "the villain" in the school finance drama.

The board now has lost the power to appoint the education commissioner, a duty given to the governor, with confirmation by the Senate.

The board also must conduct a three-year review of all regulations it has approved, a process that Olga Garza of the Texas Association of School Board Members said may prove the most "volatile" of all the new law's provisions.

The Legislature's intent is that the state board pare down the number of regulations, but Crawford was not optimistic. The board "might eliminate a lot fewer rules than what people think," she said.

Midland Freshman, Jane Long teachers honored

Staff Report

The Midland Chamber of Commerce has announced its May Teacher of the Month honorees.

The elementary Teacher of the Month is Nancy Wilson, who teaches fourth grade at Jane Long Elementary School. Ms. Wilson holds a bachelor's degree from Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene.

Wilson

Kristen Knight, one of Ms. Wilson's students, said Ms. Wilson is "great."

"She does all the lessons in a creative way," Kristen writes. "For example she puts in something funny at the end sometimes. I used to go to Santa Rita. I didn't want to go to Jane Long but I was wrong. ... I think it's fun to go to school and hope the year will never end!"

Underwood

In nominating Ms. Underwood, student Elizabeth Braun wrote: "Mrs. Underwood is involved in many activities. She teaches Latin and Advanced English courses. Mrs. Underwood is also the sponsor of Student Council. She is a very good teacher and she is also concerned with the youth of today. Mrs. Underwood has always made extra time to help her students learn and excel in their education. Mrs. Underwood always takes time out of her life to help others."

Another student, Charlotte Scharbauer, wrote: "In her class she really has a way of getting to know each student really well and her students in her class really get to know each other. She helps everyone individually if they need the help. She also takes time out for your personal problems too. ... She keeps the class awake and actually makes English fun. She also takes time out to go to our basketball games and football games."

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

College board wrangles with budget

By H.A. Tuck

Tuesday is the regular time for the college's Board of Trustees to meet. The 4 p.m. session is expected to include a preliminary draft of the 1990-91 operating budget, along with numerous personnel items.

Tuck

Trustees generally get their first look at the coming year's budget in June, with final approval made at the August meeting. College administrators and staff personnel have been wrestling with budget items since March, but always with an eye on what was happening in Austin. That's because no one knew exactly what would be done regarding public school financing which might affected community college and public university funding from the state. Since about 50 percent of Midland College's budget comes from the state, that was a vital concern.

Planning has started for the 1991 National Junior College Athletic Association's championship golf tournament, which is being hosted by Midland College. This is a big event, with more than 40 teams expected to compete in the week-long event.

Courses at both Greentree and Mission country clubs will be used for the tournament, which actually includes separate competition for Division I and Division II teams. Those in Division I provide scholarships for their players.

And Midland College turned in some good results at the recent NJCAA golf tourney in Scottsdale, Ariz., finishing third after receiving an at-large invitation. Dean Robertson won the special tournament that was limited to the 24 regional medalists. He was runner-up to the tournament medalist after 72 holes, when the medalist chipped-in from off the green to take the medalist honors. Robertson, a native of Scotland, still has a fall semester of eligibility left and may return to MC in August.

In addition to Robertson's first team NJCAA All-American, sophomore Mark Kochan was named second team All-American. Since four of the five Chaps were sophomores, coach Delnor Poss now is hot on the recruiting trail.

And MC tennis coach Joe Williams and two of his players have been gathering up lots of post-season honors. Williams was named the Wilson ITCA (Intercollegiae Tennis Coaches Association) national men's coach of the year, plus receiving another national women's coach of the year award from the NJCAA.

Freshman Jesper Witt, who played number one for the Chaps and won 40 matches this season, was named ITCA Male Rookie of the Year.

Taking the ITCA Female Rookie of the Year was MC's freshman Janneke Garos, who won the ITCA's Rolex Small College Singles Championship and teamed with sophomore Sharla Barone to take the ITCA Rolex Small College Doubles Championship.

With the women's team capturing their sixth NJCAA championship and a fourth place NJCAA finish by the men, it was another great year for Chaparral tennis.

How They Voted

KEY SENATE VOTES

Senate sustains Amtrak veto. The Senate failed 64-36 Tuesday to reverse President's Bush's veto of a bill reauthorizing federal funding for Amtrak, the U.S. passenger railway. Congress has yet to override a Bush veto.

The vote was three shy of the two-thirds majority needed in the Senate to pass the bill and make it law. Earlier this month, the House voted to override the president's veto, but the bill must pass both chambers by a two-thirds margin to become law following a veto.

In rejecting the bill, Bush cited a provision requiring the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) to review proposed acquisitions of major railroads by non-railroad companies.

Supporters of the overrride argued that the bill's Amtrak funding was needed, and the attached ICC provision would not re-regulate the rail industry as the president claimed.

"All this provision does is eliminate an anomaly in current law that requires ICC review if a non-railroad wishes to acquire a few miles of track from a railroad, but does not provide for review if the non-railroad wants to buy the entire railroad company," said Jim Exon, D-Neb.

Many opponents said that while they favored funding for Amtrak, they were against adopting a provision that would specifically extend ICC regulation to railroad acquisitions.

"The ICC provision is directly counter to the deregulatory approach that has rescued what was a dying industry," said Bob Kasten, R-Wis.

Bentsen (D).
Gramm (R).

Senate fails to end debate on air travel rights for the blind.

The Senate failed to end debate Tuesday on legislation that would prohibit commercial airlines from restricting seating assignments on the basis of blindness. The 56-44 decision was four votes short of the 60 needed to invoke cloture and bring the bill to a final vote.

If passed, the bill would allow blind airline passengers to sit in emergency exit rows. Currently the Federal Aviation Administration takes the position that "only those people who can help other passengers get off the plane safely and quickly should sit in exit rows."

Voting to invoke cloture:
Bentsen (D).
Voting against cloture:
Gramm (R).

There were no key votes taken in the House this week.

Trump may miss bond payment, but he doesn't miss birthday party

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Donald Trump, who turned 44 the day before he failed to make a critical debt payment, told casino workers throwing him a huge birthday bash Saturday that he's not washed up in the business world.

"Nobody wants to write the positives," Trump told about 1,000 cheering employees at his Taj Mahal Casino Resort. "Over the years, I've surprised a lot of people. The largest surprise is yet to come."

Trump, who turned 44 Thursday, did not specifically mention his failure Friday to make an estimated $31 million bond payment on his Trump Castle casino-resort, but criticized news reporters for focusing on his financial woes.

News about his debt crunch overshadowed any coverage of gaming revenues produced last month by the Taj Mahal, which set a citywide record, he said.

Trump arrived by limousine flanked by body guards and did not speak with reporters before climbing onto a stage fronting the Atlantic Ocean.

Those looking for reports in the Taj Mahal of Trump's money troubles were disappointed. Any newspaper with headlines about Trump's problems was not for sale inside.

Outside, newspaper stands on the Boardwalk near the stage were stocked with New York City papers headlined "DONALD DUCK$!" and "Jilted By Lady Luck." Under foggy skies and surrounded by birthday cards signed by the 13,000 employees at his three casinos, Trump thanked workers for their loyalty, calling them "absolutely fantastic."

The Manhattan real estate mogul who also owns the Trump Plaza Hotel and Casino in Atlantic City left without speaking with reporters.

Before he arrived, at least a dozen workers told the crowd that Trump would weather his problems and they thanked him for providing jobs. The speeches of support punctuated performances by gyrating belly dancers, stand-up comedians and a five-piece band.

DALLAS (AP) — Jimmy Vaughan is leaving the Fabulous Thunderbirds after 15 years, but he's not going away mad, the rock band's manager says.

"Jimmie's not leaving the band on a bad note," said manager Mark Proct. "He's real happy. Obviously no one in the band wanted to see him leave. But it's a decision Jimmie made on the basis of his personal life and his family."

Vaughan, who helped found the group and shaped its sound with his bluesy guitar licks, will be replaced by two guitarists — Duke Robillard, founder of Roomful of Blues, and Doug "Kid" Bangham, formerly of the East Coast band Sugar Ray and the Blue Tones.

Vaughan is working with brother Stevie Ray Vaughan on a project scheduled for release in September. The two brothers are considered to be among rock music's leading guitarists.

NEW YORK (AP) — A collection of speeches delivered by Nelson Mandela since his release from prison has arrived in the United States just days before the deputy president of the African National Congress gets here himself.

Mandela

"Intensify the Struggle to Abolish Apartheid" is a salute by Pathfinder publishers to Mandela's "historic tour of North America," editorial director Steve Clark said Saturday.

Mandela arrives Wednesday in New York to begin a 10-day visit.

Included in the 74-page collection of 1990 speeches is Mandela's 1989 letter from prison to South Africa's state president; his post-prison speeches to mass rallies in South Africa; his speech to 80,000 anti-apartheid activists in London and his May 23 talk to South African business executives.

The book also contains the ANC's historic Freedom Charter, photos, maps and historical information.

NEW YORK (AP) — The South Carolina judge overseeing singer James Brown's work-release program was asked to please, please, please let the Godfather of Soul testify at the Rev. Al Sharpton's fraud trial.

Brown

"Mr. Brown's testimony ... is relevant, material and necessary to the case," attorney C. Vernon Mason wrote last week to Circuit Court Judge Rodney A. Peeples. The judge would have to approve Brown's trip to New York.

Sharpton, a flamboyant civil-rights activist who recently lead protests in the racially torn Bensonhurst section of Brooklyn, is on trial in state Supreme Court in Manhattan on charges he stole $250,000 from the non-profit National Youth Movement. He once worked as Brown's hairdresser.

Brown was released to a halfway house for the work program earlier this year after serving 15 months of a six-year sentence for aggravated assault. The defense in Sharpton's case begins Tuesday, but there was no word on whether Peeples would allow Brown to take the stand.

During the exercise, conducted in the 3rd Fleet, more than 55 ships, 200 aircraft, 50,000 sailors, airmen, Marines and soldiers from Canada, Australia, Republic of Korea, Japan and the U.S. participated in training operations to improve the tactical capabilities of all participating units.

A 1983 graduate of Midland High School, he joined the Navy in May 1989.

Firefighting school set at college

Staff Report

Training opportunities for potential firefighters and regional volunteer fire department members have been scheduled by Midland College in cooperation with the City of Midland.

Area volunteer fire department chiefs will hold a planning session at Midland College on Thursday, June 28, to outline training classes for a Volunteer Firefighter Weekend Sept. 29-30. The planning meeting is being held at 7 p.m. in Room 203 of the Midland College Health Sciences Building.

A course, which is part of a Regional Recruit School, is planned July 23-28 to provide essential training for an Emergency Care Attendant. An additional school for firefighting is scheduled July 30-Oct. 19. The ECA course is 48 hours of First Aid Training that is required for basic certification as a firefighter in the state of Texas. The firefighting course is 400 hours which is applicable toward a Basic Firefighter's Certification.

Cost of the ECA course is $150, $350 for the firefighter session, or $500 for both sessions. Students will be attending classes from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Those accepted must have a high school diploma or equivalent, proof of a medical physical examination, and must pass a physical performance exam.

"Although these courses are required for employment with a fire department, such employment is not guaranteed," said Rebecca Bell, Midland College's account coordinator. "Midland firefighters are required to complete the more comprehensive EMT (Emergency Medical Technician) certification rather than the ECA, which is the basic requirement."

The Volunteer Firefighter Weekend costs $12 per person per day. The weekend provides 16 hours toward Volunteer Firefighter Certification. Registration information for this training will be available after the June 28 planning meeting.

Persons wishing more information should contact the Midland College Department of Continuing Education, 3600 N. Garfield, Midland, Texas, 79705, or call 685-4639 between 7 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

Lawyer charged with assaulting paramedic

HOUSTON (AP) — A lawyer who used artificial respiration to revive an unconscious woman has been charged with assaulting a paramedic who reportedly tried to discourage the victim from going to the hospital.

Madeline D. Sitzes was charged with the misdemeanor assault of Michael J. Herman, a Houston Fire Department paramedic, outside a Harris County courtroom.

The lawyer kicked Herman, the charge states, apparently after a dispute over whether the stricken woman should be taken to a hospital.

"I can't believe that she's been charged with anything," the woman, Merce Ortega Salazar, said. "It's terrible. Nobody can even help nobody out no more," the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday.

Ms. Salazar, 42, collapsed Tuesday in a crowded hallway of the Harris County Criminal Courthouse.

When paramedics arrived on the scene, the dispute began.

Ms. Sitzes said she became angry after Herman tried to convince Ms. Salazar that she did not need to go to the hospital.

According to Ms. Sitzes, Herman then stepped on her foot.

"At first, I don't think it was intentional, but then he squashed and dug his heel in and I kicked him in the right leg," she said.

Ms. Sitzes said friends had urged her to file assault charges, but she said, "It's all so ridiculous that I'm not about to run down there and waste the taxpayer's money," she said.

Ms. Salazar eventually was taken to St. Joseph Hospital, where she was treated for a concussion and underwent a series of tests.

Ms. Sitzes "literally saved this woman's life," said defense attorney Rick Trevathan.

With or without partner, the class is designed to help students meet new friends, have a good time, and learn the basic steps to the Cotton-Eyed Joe, polka, schottische, waltz, and the Texas two-step. The participant will also be prepared for the fun-filled and challenging intermediate class. For this popular class, class size is limited to 20 students. Students are asked to wear slick soled-shoes or boots. Enrollment with a partner is helpful but not required. Course fee is $19.

Retail Management will be taught by Molly Harvey from 1-5 p.m. on Thursday, June 28. Participants will learn techniques for effective management of small retail operations. The seminar will include an appraisal of consumer behavior, market research, site selection, merchandise planning and layout, advertising, inventory control systems, pricing, and customer service strategies.

Also included will be a brief history of retail marketing from ancient bazaars to the formation of retailing giants, as well as current takeovers and mergers within large retail department stores and grocery chains. The course fee is $15.

Imagination prolongs life of the Ogallala

EDITOR'S NOTE — It's an underground sea of fresh water that helped transform The Great American Desert into fertile farmland that last year produced $20 billion worth of food and fiber. But can the Ogallala Aquifer survive the onslaught of man's insatiable hand on the spigot and chemical barrel? Maybe yes, maybe no.

By Sid Moody
Associated Press Writer

OGALLALA, Neb. — A sign of terrible times on an abandoned sod hut in the 1800s on the treeless, dry, heartless heart of America:

"90 miles to wood, 20 miles to water. Gone back East to wife's family."

A westbound migrant, aglow with his future on the High Plains: "This would be fine country if it just had water."

Little did they know that only feet below their dusty wagon ruts lay an underground ocean, one of Earth's miracles. It is called the Ogallala Aquifer.

In its sands and gravel and strata is buried enough fresh water to inundate all 50 states beneath almost 1½ feet. It holds as much water as Lake Huron plus one-fifth of Lake Ontario.

The Ogallala stretches from South Dakota and Wyoming south through Nebraska (which overlies two-thirds of its volume), Colorado, Kansas and Oklahoma to Texas and New Mexico.

Once this was all dismissed as The Great American Desert. Modern irrigation has transformed it into an 800-mile green belt made possible by, in effect, upside-down rain.

The Ogallala region today produces up to 40 percent of America's beef, from 20 percent to 25 percent of its food and fiber, notably feed grains and cotton. This output that helps feed and clothe a nation was worth upward of $20 billion in 1989 and fuels an ancillary economy that may reach $50 billion.

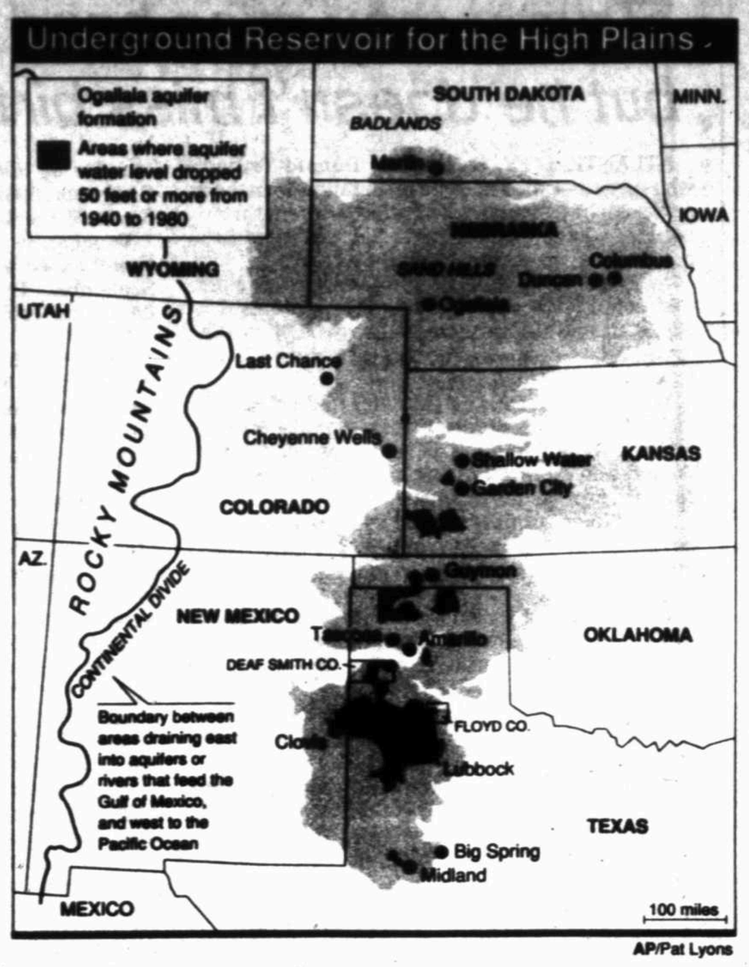

WITHOUT IRRIGATION, says Nebraska Sen. Loran Schmit, the state's gross product would drop 70 percent.

During the Dust Bowl's historic drought, haggard plainsmen watched red-eyed as their farms and ranchland blew away in the sleepless wind. Salvation lay but a pipe's length beneath their very feet. But they didn't have the tools to reach it. They do now.

Irrigation can produce as much as three to four times more than dry-land farming. The Ogallala became found money. Pumping on a grand scale began in Texas where the High Plains became a mammoth cotton plantation.

Envious farmers peered over their fences at what their irrigating neighbors were doing and the practice moved inexorably northward. In one region of southwest Nebraska, 111,600 acres were irrigated in 1950. By 1983, 973,000 acres were. In Yuma County in northeast Colorado it was 11,000 acres in 1959, 446,000 in 1987. The Lubbock, Texas, area had 3,627 irrigation wells in 1953, 46,906 in 1989.

Between 1940 and 1980, 400 million acre-feet of the Ogallala's 3.6 billion acre-feet were pumped to the thirsty wells. (An acre-foot covers an acre with 1 foot of water and equals 325,848 gallons.) The result was predictable.

AP/Pat Lyons

Water levels declined up to 200 feet in Texas, with 23 percent of the water gone as of 1983. Kansas has pumped 38 percent of its water by one estimate. Its farmers pumped 4.4 million acre-feet in 1985. About 40 million acre-feet remain underground. In Kit Carson County in Colorado, water tables have been dropping up to 5 feet annually.

GOOD RAINFALL, dramatically rising costs of pumping fuel, state regulation, federal farm programs and a greater awareness of conservation have combined to stem the flood. Ground water use declined 19 percent from 1980 to 1985.

Many echo grain farmer Ed Ediger of Hampton, Neb.: "Let's leave some for our grandchildren.

In Scott City, Kan., Keith Lebbin, state water district manager for west-central Kansas, describes the local situation as "bleak." But even something as ancient as agriculture is feeling the effects of technology.

New techniques, new irrigation devices are coming from, of all places, Texas. Innovations promise to set a pattern that conceivably will make the aquifer a self-sustaining resource, or at least prolong its future unto Ed Ediger's grandchildren's grandchildren.

"Today's farmer is much better educated about water," says Bill Kastner, a U.S. Geological Survey hydrologist.

It took eons for geology and climate to make this national treasure. In less than a lifetime irrigation has pumped some of it dry. Since World War II new technology has released a flood far, far beyond nature's drip-by-drip ability to replace it.

Water thickness in the Ogallala ranges from a few feet in Kansas and Colorado to 1,300 feet in the Nebraska Sand Hills. The average is 200 feet. Perhaps 11 percent of the aquifer has been pumped since the late 1930s. The maximum decline by 1980 was 200 feet in Floyd County in the Texas Panhandle. By one estimate a quarter of the aquifer will be gone by 2020.

THE AQUIFER has been both mindlessly squandered and utilized with great intelligence, foresight and self-restraint.

In places, it is also slowly being contaminated. In 1987, Nebraska farmers and ranchers put 775,000 tons of fertilizer on the land. And 16,500 tons of pesticides and uncounted tons of herbicides. Cows and hogs produced an additional 235,000 tons of manure. Gradually quantities of this leached downward toward the water.

Can the Ogallala survive the onslaught of man's insatiable hand on the spigot and chemical barrel? To be cautiously Delphic, maybe yes, maybe no. It depends if what CAN be done WILL be done. It is past high noon atop the Ogallala. But it is not, in most places, too late.

Being underground — hence invisible — aquifers are not readily identified nor easily understood once discovered. A pioneer in Nebraska Territory could, and did, hit water digging a post hole. He can be forgiven for crediting good luck, the deity or a forked dowser's stick. His mind-set was local, hardly geological. Wiser heads than his had dismissed the region's potential outright.

Maj. Stephen H. Long explored the High Plains in 1819-20 to utter an all-time wowser in the annals of soothsaying:

"In regard to this extensive section of the country, I do not hesitate in giving the opinion that it is almost wholly unfit for cultivation, and of course uninhabitable by a people depending on agriculture for their subsistence."

THE HIGH PLAINS are dry, not barren. The 10 inches of rain in the west, up to 30 in the extreme east, are enough for native grass and cottonwoods in river bottoms. The Sand Hills are rolling. Kansas plains are so flat you could slide a steel shuffleboard disk till it dropped over the edge of the horizon.

One of the first to put his ear not to the ground but below it was a Swiss geologist named Jules Marcou, who in 1854 was making a survey of the Texas Panhandle for the Army. Ground water "may be found everywhere," he said, accurately. Sand Hill immigrants found you could poke a stick in the soil and the end would come up wet.

Post-Civil War pioneers were misled by settling in during abnormally rainy years. The myth of The Great American Desert was replaced by another; the myth of the garden.

In 1888 the Tascousa Pioneer in the Panhandle reported: "Wagons and wagons, rope-bottom chairs, towheads, brindle cows, yellow dogs and a pervading air of restlessness have poured through this week in the direction suggested by Horace Greeley."

STATE

Boosters and fast-buck speculators urged men young and old to follow journalist Greeley's advice to go west to a "veritable paradise." Land promoter Charles Dana Wilber gave birth to another myth: "Rain follows the plow." It doesn't.

Drought hit western Kansas in 1886 and hung on. Blizzards in 1887 drove out cattlemen in droves. In 1889 there were dust storms. When they were done, Floyd County in Texas had 55 farms where 176 had been. The population of western Kansas was down by half.

"IN GOD we trusted, in Kansas we busted," became a truism.

The vital fact of water in settling the plains is underscored by the names of towns that sprung up at self-describing locations: Big Spring and Sweetwater in Texas; Shallow Water, Kan.; Broadwater, Neb.; Cheyene Wells and Last Chance (for water), Colo.

Once dug, wells produced bounteous water, giving birth to another myth. The ground water came from an underground river of limitless flow from somewhere up near Yellowstone. An enduring myth of an inexhaustible supply which was to bode the Ogallala no good.

Meanwhile, homesteaders came and went with the cycle of rain and drought. Noted one observer: "Every such wave left behind it a mass of human wreckage ...broken fortunes, deserted farms and ruined homes." The search for water took every expedient, wrote historian Walter Prescott Webb.

But technology was at hand. In 1854, John Burnham took the idea of a self-governing windmill to Daniel Halladay, a mechanic in Connecticut. The result became a ubiquitous landmark of the plains. It used the eternal wind to pump shallow water for stock, a few rows of fruit trees, a garden, the Saturday night bath.

BUT DOWN IN the Panhandle was D.L. McDonald, a land agent, former druggist and salesman of automobiles from Pennsylvania who had been told to get out of doors for his health. He was as "amazed as Moses" to see water gushing out of the ground through an irrigation pipe. By 1909 he had hooked a steam engine to a wellhead and became known as "the father of irrigation."

McDonald's pump, combined with the discovery of oil in Texas, set off a flood of irrigation by gasoline pumps.

Taxes going up

AUSTIN (AP) — Beginning July 1, Texans will be paying more for most merchandise they buy, the cigarettes they smoke and alcoholic drinks they order in taverns and restaurants.

The new taxes — raised by the Legislature to provide some $530 million more for public schools — will boost the Texas levies to some of the nation's highest.

Going up are:

■ The sales tax, from 6 cents on the dollar to 6¼ cents. That boost raises Texas from fourth in the nation to third, tied with Illinois and behind only Connecticut and Washington state.

The state comptroller's office estimates this new tax will cost Texans $279 million the first full year it is in effect.

■ The cigarette tax, from 26 cents per pack to 41 cents. That will become the nation's highest, as Texas' rate leaps from 18th to first ahead of the previous top cigarette taxer, Connecticut, which charges 40 cents per pack.

The comptroller says this increase will cost Texas $178.6 million the first full year.

■ The tax on mixed drinks. This is a gross receipts tax on those with alcohol permits, and it goes from 12 percent to 14 percent, and will raise another $25.6 million.

But that's not all.

Because cities, counties and metropolitan transit authorities in some areas levy their own sales taxes on top of the state rate.

Mornings Keep Getting Better!

STATE IN BRIEF

Vet's bond set at $1 million

ENNIS (AP) — A Houston veterinarian was arrested at his attorney's office in Houston and flown to Ellis County to face murder charges in the shotgun slayings Thursday night of his brother-in-law and nephew, authorities said.

Ronald David Ludwig, 38, was taken into custody by Texas Rangers on Friday outside the office of his attorney in downtown Houston, officials said.

Joseph David Torjacek, 31, and his son, Matthew, 5, were watching television about 10 p.m. Thursday night in the Torjacek home a few miles northeast of Ennis when they were struck in the head by two shotgun blasts through a door, Ellis County chief sheriff's deputy R.D. Browning said.

Ludwig was taken before a state district judge in Houston who set bond at $1 million on two murder warrants, Department of Public Safety spokesman David Wells said.

Investigators said Ludwig and his wife, the former Theresa Trojacek, sister of Joseph Trojacek, are obtaining a divorce in Houston, a suit that involves a custody battle for their 7-year-old son. Ludwig's wife had been awarded temporary custody of the child.

Pilot injured in crash

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The pilot of an ultralight airplane was seriously injured when his craft apparently was forced to the ground by a strong gust of wind in west Fort Worth.

Fort Worth police said they were called to the site of the crash just before 9 a.m. Saturday.

The pilot, 28-year-old Stewart Turner, suffered broken bones and head injuries, and was listed in serious but stable condition Saturday evening.

Authorities said Turner was conducting an air demonstration for a potential buyer of the small plane when the crash occurred.

Mall bans teen-agers

FORT WORTH (AP) — Teen-agers who use a south Fort Worth shopping mall as a hangout on Saturdays will have to find someplace else — unless they start bringing their parents.

Dan Cetina, general manager of the Fort Worth Town Center mall, said at a news conference Friday that, effective immediately, no one under 19 will be allowed in the mall between 1 p.m. and 9 p.m. on Saturdays unless accompanied by parents.

He said security guards would be at each mall entrance to check identification cards.

"We cannot continue to maintain a pleasant shopping environment late Saturday when hundreds and hundreds of teen-agers are loitering in the mall with no intention of doing any shopping," Cetina said.

Teen-agers didn't take kindly to the announcement.

"That's discrimination. This is where the teens like to be," said Akram El Shayeb, 17, of Burleson.

Raid nets ex-judge

ALAMO (AP) — Seven people were arrested, including former Hidalgo County Judge Santos Saldana, in a gambling raid on a Rio Grande Valley home.

One of the men arrested was identified as Liboria Trevino, who is married to newly elected Pharr Justice of the Peace Rosa Trevino.

Saldana served as a county judge from 1983 to 1986, when he was succeeded by the present judge, J. Edgar Ruiz. Saldana also served as county clerk from 1966 to 1982.

Officers conducted the raid confiscated about $7,000 in cash, a small amount of cocaine, and dice gambling equipment, officials said.

The raid occurred after an undercover investigator went to a garage next to Saldana's home on the pretense of being a gambler. Saldana's home is located just south of this Rio Grande valley town.

Students tout car

AUSTIN (AP) — A solar car designed by University of Texas engineering students and dubbed "Texas Native Sun" is set to compete in a race from Florida to Michigan with other universities' solar vehicles.

On July 9, UT-Austin said it and 31 other universities will send their solar cars to Orlando, Fla., for an 11-day, 1,800-mile race to the General Motors technical center in Warren, Mich.

The first team to reach Warren will receive an expense-paid trip to the international competition in Australia in November.

Capitol trees dug up

AUSTIN (AP) — In environmentally sensitive Austin, work crews waited until after dark to remove about 30 trees around the state Capitol.

The tree-cutting operation, begun late Friday night and finished early Saturday morning, took both preservation officials and environmentalists by surprise.

"Maybe they're out there at night because it's cooler — cooler in more ways than one," said Earth First! spokesman Tim Jones.

The tree removal is part of the $155 million project to build an underground extension to the Capitol, scheduled for completion in 1994. In January, state officials said as many as 40 shade trees on the Capitol grounds, including some 200-year-old oaks, might have to be removed for the expansion project.

David Stauch, construction director for the state Preservation Board, said he did not want to remove the trees during the day because so many people crowd around to view such operations.

"Once the construction is completed, the trees will go back," Stauch said.

'Road Party II' slated

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County will put on a free concert July 7 to celebrate the official opening last leg of the 28-mile-long Sam Houston Tollway in Houston — a 13-mile segment between U.S. 290 and Interstate 45.

Some 100,000 people are expected to turn out for what's being billed as "Road Party II."

Huey Lewis and the News will be the main attraction of the concert to be staged on the tollway, with the celebration kicking off at 5 p.m. with Jerry Lightfoot and The Essential Blues Band.

The event will be held on the tollway near where it intersects I-45.

County Judge Jon Lindsay predicted Friday that Road Party II will draw many more people than the 60,000 fans who turned out last July to see the Bangles at the county's first Road Party, which celebrated the completion of Sam Houston from I-10 to U.S. 290.

Texas inventor praised

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Pete Domenici paid tribute to computer pioneer Robert Noyce on the Senate floor this week, calling him "an extraordinary model American."

Noyce invented the integrated circuit, founded Intel Corp. and became the first chairman of the Austin-based Sematech research consortium. He died two weeks ago of a heart attack in Austin at age 62.

Domenici, R-N.M., is the ranking minority member of the Senate Budget Committee. He also serves on the Energy and Natural Resources Committee.

In a speech Thursday, Domenici recalled a trip to Japan with Noyce to negotiate a semiconductor agreement and numerous meetings where Noyce "was always an incredible source of good counsel and wisdom."

"His work has been the catalyst for the miniaturization of electronic products in the past three decades," Domenici said.

"He was truly a dynamic leader, a brilliant engineer and a remarkable human being," the senator said.

Doctor arrested again

EL PASO (AP) — A pediatrician was jailed Saturday on a charge of aggravated sexual assault of a child minutes after losing custody of his 5-year-old adopted daughter who he also is accused of molesting.

Dr. Lawrence Hooper Jr. was led away in handcuffs from an El Paso County court. He later was arraigned in Sierra Blanca on charges of abusing a Utah girl eight years ago, said Hudspeth County Jail Administrator Bub Lewis. Bail was set at $50,000 by Justice of the Peace Robert H. Dart.

Hooper, a faculty member at Texas Tech University Medical Center, has been free on $20,000 bail since Tuesday when he was arrested on two counts of indecency with a child. Hooper also is accused of molesting his daughter's 10-year-old playmate.

Texas beaches not pristine, but pretty important refuge

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND, Texas (AP) — The word "pristine" doesn't apply to Texas beaches. Petroleum gunk and maritime garbage make regular visits to a coastline coming under yet another assault from the leaking Mega Borg super tanker.

Despite the abuse, though, Texas' 600 miles of Gulf Coast encompass some vital wildlife areas.

"Texas beaches normally aren't what you'd call pure white sand," said David Sager, in charge of keeping up environmental contamination for the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department.

In the latest spill, more than 4 million gallons of oil escaped from the Mega Borg after the Norwegian tanker exploded June 8 and caught fire 57 miles off the coast of Galveston. Coast Guard officials said most of the spill either burned or evaporated, and that less than 14,000 gallons remained in the water in a slick stretching for miles and heading toward the Galveston area.

Scientists originally thought the oil might come ashore between Freeport and Corpus Christi. That is where endangered brown pelicans breeding this time of year could have suffered a devastating blow from the oil slick, said Kenneth Schwindt, assistant manager of the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge.

It also could have hurt the area's struggling endangered southern bald eagles, peregrine falcons and sea turtles.

The world's only breeding flock of whooping cranes winters at the Aransas Refuge, but the spill probably would not have hurt the more than 150 whoopers expected to return this year, Schwindt said.

Morgan a grad

HAYWARD, Calif. (AP) — Joe Morgan, in cap and gown, got a big hug from his mother Saturday after fulfilling a promise he made before signing his first professional baseball contract 27 years ago.

Morgan

"My father and I wanted me to sign. My mother wanted me to continue my education," the Hall of Fame second baseman recalled. "I promised her I would get my degree.

"Luckily, I didn't say when."

Morgan, 46, was among the 2,565 new graduates of California State University at Hayward receiving degrees at an outdoor ceremony. His mother and father were among the family members who offered congratulations later.

Nolan's the name

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Rangers pitcher Nolan Ryan is leaving his mark on baseball in more than just his exploits on the field.

At least nine current and former teammates of Ryan have sons named for the high-velocity pitcher. The most recent to choose the name was Rangers pitcher Mike Jeffcoat, who bestowed the name on one of his twin sons born June 1.

Nolan

"Besides the obvious fact of the numbers he's put up, it's a sign of respect for the person he is," Jeffcoat said. "I used to think he was one of those guys with a 1-in-a-million arm, but since I've been around him I realize what an outstanding person he is."

Leaders fall at Medinah

■ Scott, Tim Simpson blow late third-round leads to give way to Mike Donald and Billy Ray Brown with 18-holes remaining.

N.Y. Times News Service

MEDINAH, Ill. — In a birdie-filled championship, a bogey-filled finish by the leaders on Saturday brought nearly half the field back into contention for the final round of the 90th United States Open.

The 54-hole leaders are Mike Donald and Billy Ray Brown at seven-under-par 209. Donald shot an even-par 72, while Brown, a 27-year-old Texan in his third year on the tour, shot a three-under 69.

They inherited the lead from Scott Simpson, Tim Simpson, and Mark Brooks, all of whom played the last three holes in at least two over par.

Of the three, Scott Simpson had the biggest wreck. Leading at nine under par through 15 holes, he bogeyed the par-4 16th after driving in the trees.

Simpson, the 1987 champion, met disaster on the 168-yard, par-3 17th. He bunkered his 7-iron tee shot, failed to get out on his first swing, exploded over the green and took three more to get down for a triple-bogey six. He then bogeyed the final hole after bunkering his drive to shoot a 73, which dropped him to four-under-par 212.

Both Brooks and Tim Simpson were at eight under after 15 holes. They then bogeyed the 16th and the 17th before parring the 18th.

The leaders' collapse brought a host of prominent players back into the tournament, most notably the defending champion, Curtis Strange, who now has a strong chance to win his third straight Open. Strange fired a four-under-par 68 on Saturday for a three-round total of five-under-par 211, only two shots behind Donald and Brown.

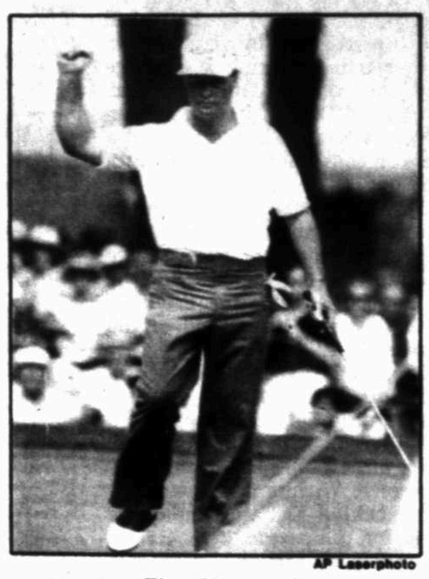

"I'm sure Curtis wasn't shedding any tears for me at the end there," said Scott Simpson. "He's right back in it. Obviously, he's got some good memories in the Open to draw on."

Between Strange and the leaders at six-under-par 210 are Brooks, Tim Simpson, Jeff Sluman, and the 1983 champion, Larry Nelson.

Jack Nicklaus fired a 68, which put him at three-under 213, tying him with a group of players that included Seve Ballesteros and Paul Azinger.

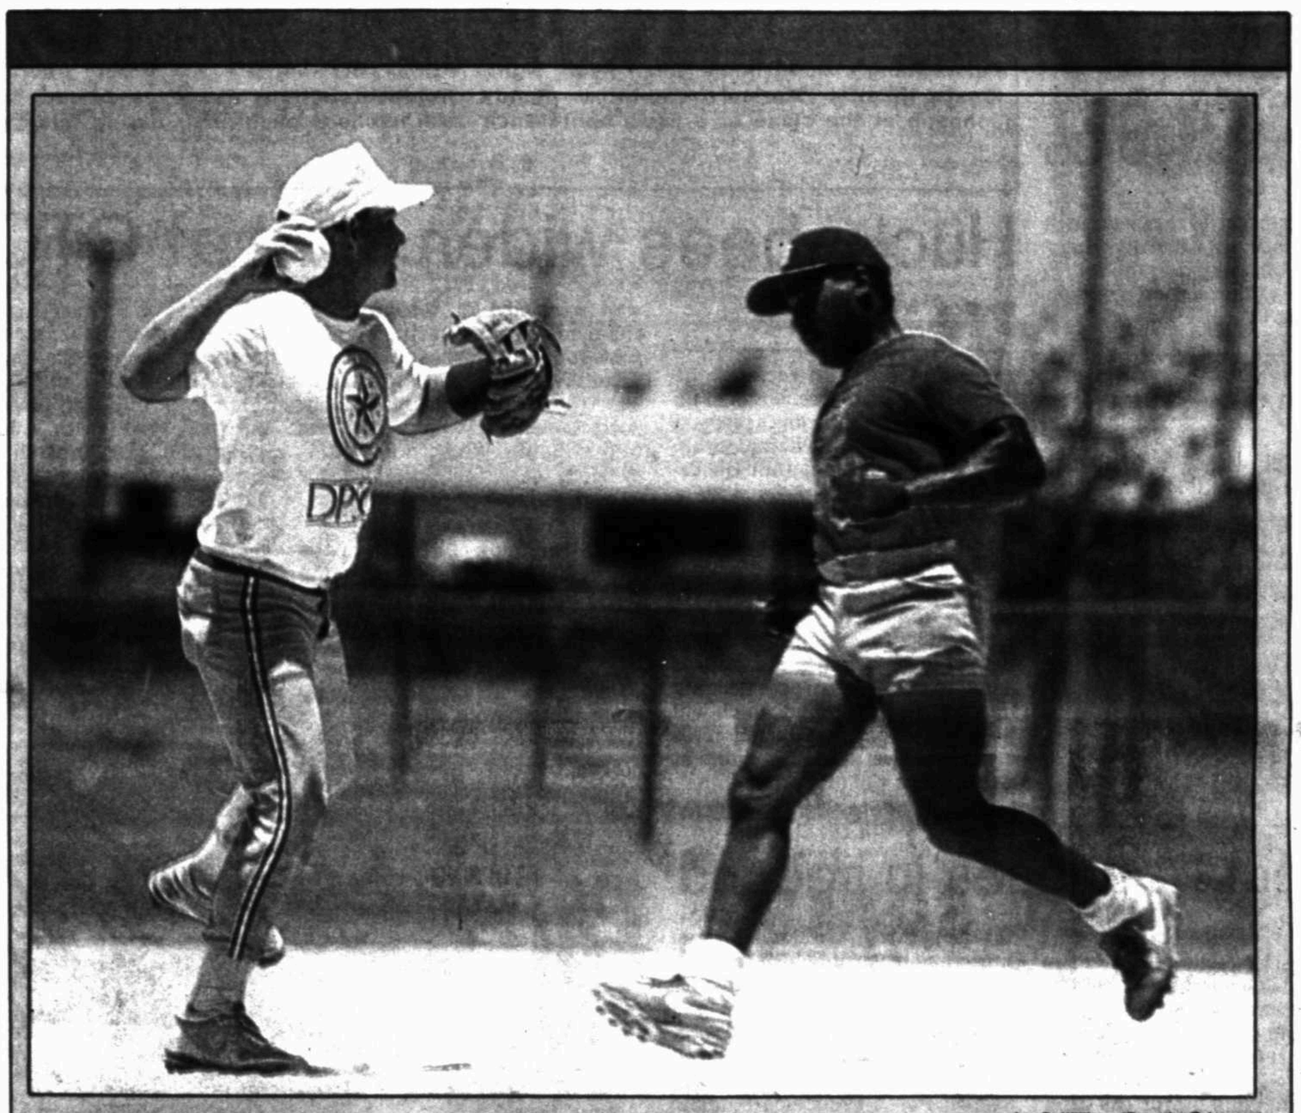

The 90th Open has so far been distinguished by the biggest barrage of birdies in the history of the championship. By the ■ Twice beaten by Henry Tillman, Ironman Mike scores a revenge and takes just 2:49 to complete his task.

Tyson returns to form

Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Mike Tyson marked his return to the ring Saturday night with a single smashing right hand that knocked out Henry Tillman in the first round.

Tyson then helped the stricken Tillman to his feet.

It was Tyson's first fight since he lost the heavyweight championship on a shocking 10th-round knockout to James

■ Foreman KOs Rodrigues/2C

"Buster" Douglas on Feb. 11 at Tokyo.

Tyson made sure there was going to be no surprise on this 87-degree night, though.

A 20-1 favorite, Tyson came swarming out of his corner at the opening bell and kept the pressure on Tyson until the end, which came at 2 minutes, 47 seconds.

Tyson was a little wild as he lunged after the circling Tillman, who caught the former champ with a right hand to the head 30 seconds into the fight. It had no affect.

Tyson hurt Tillman with a right hand to the body at the 1:30 mark and landed a grazing right hand high on the head at 2:20 that signalled what was about to happen to Tillman, who beat Tyson twice as an amateur.

"Let everybody see it," crowed promoter Don King, as he led Tyson around the ring. "He's back."

Tyson's victory followed a second-round knockout by George Foreman of Adilson Rodrigues. Foreman knocked out the Brazilian with a three-punch combination to the head at 2:39 of the round to run his record to 22-0 with 21 knockouts since he began a comeback in

Thomas angrily denies charges

Associated Press

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich. — An angry Isiah Thomas denied reports Saturday that he ran high stakes dice games in his home and was the target of a federal gambling investigation.

Thomas, just selected as most valuable player of the NBA Finals, met with reporters following news reports that he was the target of the probe by the FBI and Internal Revenue Service.

"I'm mad and I'm angry," Thomas said. "I don't even know how this happened. I think (Detroit fans) all know the kind of person I am. No one has given me anything in this world. Everything I've gotten out of this world, I've worked for.

"I don't believe you should gamble. I think gambling is one of the stupidest things you can do. You always lose," said Thomas, who was accompanied by his lawyers, accountant and Detroit Pistons officials.

Earlier, he met for about two hours with FBI agents at his lawyers' offices to explain his relationship with other alleged targets of the probe.

Closing that confounded hole in the roof

Finally, after all these what seem like eons, an intelligent decision has been made.

Patterson

Some 473 days following Black Friday, a statement from Cowboy owner Jerry Jones that we can all be in support of.

It is time, Jones says, to close that ridiculous hole in the Texas Stadium roof. Hear, hear!

Since the early '70s, Cowboy fans have had to endure unending heat and bitter cold to watch their once-beloved team. And finally, a constant 76-degree reading seems possible if Jones has his way.

Jones still has a long way to go before he overcomes his assorted public relations snafus of the last several months, but at least he's headed in the right direction.

I remember sitting watching the Cowboys play Denver in a meaningless exhibition game back in the '70s when temperatures reached 120 degrees one August. I remember my father suggesting I put my legs in a paper bag to keep them warmer during the cold of December. (It didn't work, but I never let on.)

And I remember Bum Bright, wonderful thinker that he's always been, giving the OK to install what amounted to gargantuan ceiling fans to "circulate" the air in Texas Stadium. Only made things worse by swirling around the heat.

There's always been the joke about how builders of Texas Stadium left the hole in the roof so God could watch out over America's Team. Maybe Jerry just wants to cover the hole so God can't see anymore ...

Who needs the World Cup? America sure doesn't want the headaches and the crazed madmen that come with it. If people want to be violent they can just move to Detroit and help the Pistons celebrate.

It's beyond me why soccer is so popular overseas. Popular to the point that the Pope postponed a mass, and that two people keeled over dead of heart attacks after their favorite team scored a goal. Somebody needs to tell these people it's just a game, for crying out loud.

Best line heard on soccer in a while, from Mark Wicker of The Register in Orange County, Calif., who says the best thing about playing soccer is that at least when you're playing it, you don't have to watch it.

And the best headline regarding same, from the Fort Worth Star Telegram, which referred to the World Cup as "The Rest of the World's Cup," a reference to how America can take the game or leave it. Least that's the way I choose to take it.

Until their recent winning ways, the Texas Rangers were one of the two worst teams in the American League.

What's wrong? Could have something to do with the attitude of Ranger pitcher Brad Arnsberg.

In last Sunday's Fort Worth Star Telegram, the players were surveyed on who they would go see if they had to pay to get into a sporting event. Arnsberg said he'd pay to see Ranger outfielder Pete Incaviglia.

You'd think Arnsberg sees enough without having to pay for it, too.

Angels make it two straight over Diablos

Staff Report

EL PASO — Midland survived an error and a walked batter that loaded the bases in the ninth inning Saturday night, as the Angels came away with a 5-2 win over the El Paso Diablos here.

Halo starter Joe Grahe, who picked up the win to go 5-5 for the season, sat down after the eighth and was relieved by David Martinez. Martinez, taking a 5-1 edge into the bottom of the ninth, allowed the Diablos to score a run before a Kevin Flora error and a base on balls loaded the bases with one out.

Frank DeMichele then came to the mound, and saw Flora redeem himself as pinch hitter Greg Edge hit into a 6-3 groundout to end the game. DeMichele was credited with the save, his second of the season.

Despite the loss, the Diablos still maintained a foothold on first place in the Texas League's Western Division with a 37-28 record. With three games left in the first-half race, Wichita (35-28) is a full game behind El Paso. Midland is 24-40 for the season.

Offensively, Midland scored two runs each in the sixth and seventh inning, and added one in the ninth. Angel first baseman Mark Howie drove in a pair of runs, while Flora tripled and batted in a run. Also, catcher Mike Knapp went 2-for-4 from the plate and scored two runs.

No-Hitters meet

Hill leads Seniors Classic

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Mike Hill recovered from two double bogeys to finish with three consecutive birdies to tie defending champion Jim Dent for the second-round lead in the Syracuse Senior Golf Classic.

Hill and Dent each shot 67's on Saturday and were at 11-under-par 133 after 36 holes of play at the Lafayette Country Club.

"I've never actually had two double bogeys in one round. I've never hit the ball out of bounds twice, either," said Hill, who is trying to win the tournament his older brother, Dave, won in 1988.

"But I played good. I hit a couple bad shots. Anytime you can make seven birdies and an eagle, I think you can say you played good," Hill said. "You have to take the good with the bad, hang in there and go about your business."

Larry Mowry was tied with Hill and Dent until he bogeyed the final hole, settling for a 68 and 134.

George Archer, whose 65 was the best round of the day, and Charles Sifford were at 135, and first-day leader Dick Hendrickson, Art Wall and Dan Morgan were at 136. Sifford shot 66, Hendrickson 71, Wall 67 and Morgan 68.

Hill started with a birdie on the first hole, moving into a tie for the lead with Dent, who also birdied, and Hendrickson. Hill kept pace with the leaders with a birdie at No. 5 that dropped him to eight under.

The expansion Texans won their second game in as many starts, coming from behind in the fourth quarter for the second consecutive week.

Huckabees widen lead at GTCC Jamboree

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

Some of the tight races in the Green Tree Jamboree loosened up a little after Saturday's second round, especially in championship play where Ron and Dub Huckabee shook off the field with a scramble induced 60 that allowed for a three-stroke lead with a round to play.

The Huckabees, former winners of the annual three-day tournament, added their Saturday scramble score to Friday's best-ball 65 and have 125 total strokes heading into today's final round which will be decided on total team scores over the West and East links at Green Tree Country Club.

Wayne Youngs and John Bettis, who were tied for first place in championship play after Friday's first round, recorded a solid 63 Saturday only to fall into a three-way tie for second place with Scott Lovett and Harry Bettis as well as Bobby Welborn and Mickey Scott, teams that scrambled for 62 and 61 strokes respectively.

The St. Andrews Flight remained the most uncertain of the tournament as Mike Spradlin and David Johnson found themselves in a tie for first with Gary Jones and George Tucker at 130. Bill Baker and Kelly Cook are only a stroke back at 131 in the only flight that shows a tie for the top spot.

Five of the tourney's eight flights had first-place ties after the first round.

A 63 gave Dennis Kruse and Mark Clarke three strokes of breathing room in the Carnoustie Flight, while Bill Kent and Terry Smith leapt into first place in the Muirfield Flight with a 66.

Don and Roy Cantrell hold a one-stroke edge over Les Opperman and Jim Shipp in Gleneagles play, 136-137. And Miles Goree and Tracy Krietz bounced out to a three-stroke lead in Troon competition with a 70 Saturday.

Terry Newman and Troy Fraser lead the Birkdale Flight by a stroke, and Ted Harrington and Steve Maine are one up in the Turnberry Flight.

Result of the top three places in each flight of the three-day Green Tree Country Club Jamboree being played on the West and East courses at GTCC. Par is 71, and the scramble format was used Friday.

Foreman knocks out Rodrigues in second

Foreman caught Rodrigues with a left jab, then followed it with a right hand and a left hook that put the Brazilian down. Rodrigues struggled to get up but was counted out by referee Carlos Padilla at 2:39.

Foreman, winning for the 22nd straight time since returning to the ring three years ago, wasted little time in earning his $1 million payday before a near-capacity crowd of about 15,000 at an outdoor arena at Caesar's Palace.

Three-way tie atop LPGA

N.Y. Times News Service

SOMERS POINT, N.J. — Pamela Wright shot a six-under-par 64 Saturday at the Sands Country Club course to tie the Atlantic City Classic record for a round and move into a three-way tie for the lead.

The 25-year-old Wright, a native of Scotland who was the rookie of the year last year on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour, shot the lowest round of the year on the tour.

She was tied with Dale Eggeling and Chris Johnson at five-under 205.

"I was very focused," Wright said after shooting the lowest round of her career and her second consecutive round in the 60s. She carded 69 in the second day after going 33 rounds in the 70s.

Because of injuries to both shoulders during the winter, Wright was having a bad year after last season's success.

She missed the cut five times and her best finish in her 12 events thus far was a tie for 27th. She has earned $17,879.

"I had fun and I was patient," said Wright.

She is without a victory in her two years on the tour but won the Pacific-10 championship twice at Arizona State.

Nancy Lopez, the defending champion, rewarded her large galleries with a two-under 68 Saturday and was two shots behind the leaders. She had three birdies and a bogey.

Lenore Rittenhouse, Nancy Brown and Robin Walton were next at 209, a shot ahead of Ayako Okamoto and Juli Inkster, twice the winner in the five-year history of the tournament.

Sherri Steinhauer, who started the day tied as the leader with Johnson at four under, bogeyed the first three holes and never recovered.

She shot 75 and was at 211 with Tracy Kerdyk.

Eggeling shot 67 Saturday in another bogey-free round on the 6,015-yard course.

Johnson, who at one time had a four-stroke lead, ended up with a 69 on five birdies and four bogeys, including a bogey on the 18th, which prevented her from being the sole leader.

"I got a little tired around the 15th," said Johnson, who tied for second in this event last year. "I was happy with the early start. I don't mind the wedding at all."

A wedding reception was booked well in advance, when the date of the tournament was uncertain. That forced a change in format from 54 to 72 holes, required early play Saturday, and became a prime topic of conversation in the $300,000 tournament.

The change in format was neceeary to reduce the number of players for Saturday's round so the course and its facilities could be cleared early enough for the wedding reception of Bob and Janet Castorani.

A number of the players were diplomatic in their reaction to the early start for the third round.

Some joked that they had heard of sporting events yielding to accommodate television but that this was the first time they had heard about yielding to a wedding reception.

Astros' Deshaies shelled by long balls; San Francisco wins again

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Boom! Boom! Boom! Boom! Boom! Those were the sounds of the Cincinnati Reds' bats.

"Tora! Tora! Tora!," said Houston pitcher Jim Deshaies, major target of the Reds' bombing raid Saturday night.

The Reds, with only 40 home runs in 57 games, hit a season-high five, including consecutive shots by Chris Sabo, Barry Larkin and Eric Davis to start the fifth inning, and beat the Astros 6-2.

Glenn Braggs hit his first National League homer, a two-run shot, Todd Benzinger also homered and Danny Jackson (2-2) earned his first career victory over the Astros after losing to them three times in 1988 and once in 1989.

Braggs' homer and two RBI singles by Houston's Glenn Wilson accounted for a 2-2 tie after 4⅓ innings. But Sabo hit the first pitch in the bottom of the fifth over the left-field wall for his 13th homer, Larkin drove a 1-1 pitch into the same location for his second homer and Eric Davis jumped on a 2-1 delivery and hit a 441-foot drive into the center-field seats, his fifth.

"All three of them looked as if the batters were guessing right with me," Deshaies (3-4) said. "They are not the kind of team you expect to see hit the ball like that. They are a good offensive team, but you don't expect the long ball as a rule."

Reds manager Lou Piniella loved it.

"All I had to do was fill out the lineup card, sit back and wait for it to happen," he said. "I've never been involved with three like that although I've been in games where it's (three straight homers) happened."

"I've never even seen that happen before. I just couldn't believe it," Larkin said.

Davis credited an extended batting practice session with getting his weight shifted properly.

"I just stayed back and I get the extension that way," he said.

The last time the Reds hit three straight home runs was May 27, 1980, against Los Angeles.

After pitching three hitless innings, Deshaies gave up Braggs' two-run homer in the fourth and was chased by the three solo shots in the fifth.

Braggs, who was traded from Milwaukee on June 9 after hitting three home runs for the Brewers, batted cleanup in his fourth start for the Reds.

"I felt comfortable since my first day here and feel confident that this is the type of hitters they have here," he said.

Benzinger closed out the scoring with his second home run of the season in the eighth off Larry Andersen.

"After 60 games, I was beginning to wonder if I'd ever get another," he said.

NL Roundup

Houston runs seven hits in five innings-plus, got relief help from Tim Layana in the sixth and Rob Dibble, who went the last three innings for his seventh save.

Giants 7, Braves 0

The San Francisco Giants continued their June rampage as Scott Garrelts pitched a three-hitter and Matt Williams drove in three runs in a victory over the Atlanta Braves.

The victory was the Giants' seventh in a row and 14th in 15 games this month. They moved three games above .500 for the first time this season. San Francisco has beaten Atlanta seven times in nine games this season, outscoring the Braves 82-29.

Garrelts (4-6) improved his June record to 3-0 following a 1-6 start by matching the low-hit outing of his career. He struck out five, walked three and allowed only Greg Olson's leadoff double in the third, Lonnie Smith's one-out single in the sixth and Dale Murphy's single in the ninth for his first complete game of the season.

Garrelts also pitched a three-hitter against San Diego on April 18, 1986.

Williams extended his hitting streak to 13 games, during which he has four homers and 18 RBIs.

The Giants scored twice in the first off loser John Smoltz (3-6). Mike Kingery and Will Clark walked with one out. Kevin Mitchell followed with a run-scoring double, and Williams added an RBI grounder.

Dodgers 5, Padres 2

Ramon Martinez pitched a four-hitter and took over the major-league strikeout lead as the Los Angeles Dodgers broke a five-game losing streak with a victory over the San Diego Padres.

Martinez (7-3) won for the fifth time in his last six decisions while striking out eight to increase his major league-leading total to 102. Boston's Roger Clemens leads the American League with 96 strikeouts.

It was also Martinez's league-leading fifth complete game.

National League RBI leader Joe Carter had two hits, including a two-run single in the third inning that gave the Padres a 2-1 lead and increased his RBI total to 54.

Phillies 2, Cubs 1

Darren Daulton hit a tie-breaking two-out home run in the seventh inning, giving the Philadelphia Phillies a victory over Chicago that saddled both the Cubs and Greg Maddux with their sixth consecutive loss.

Darrel Akerfelds (2-0), the third Philadelphia pitcher, pitched three scoreless innings, yielding one hit, and earned his second victory in two nights.

Pirates 11, Mets 6

The Pittsburgh Pirates gave red hot New York a taste of its own slugging medicine, rapping out 15 hits, including Sid Bream's insurance three-run homer, and came from behind twice to beat the Mets.

The Pirates withstood homers by Darryl Strawberry and Daryl Boston and rallied from four- and two-run deficits against Frank Viola (9-3), trying to become the National League's first 10-game winner.

The Mets had scored 50 runs in winning their previous four games and 79 runs in winning seven of eight. The victory dropped New York back into fourth place in the NL East, seven games behind first-place Pittsburgh and one game in back of Philadelphia.

Cardinals 5, Expos 3

Willie McGee delivered a tie-breaking single in the seventh inning and the St. Louis Cardinals snapped a five-game losing streak with a victory over the Montreal Expos.

Winning pitcher Bob Tewksbury (1-0), just back from the minors and making his first start of the season, gave up all three Montreal runs and six hits in seven innings. Tom Nidenfuer pitched 1 1-3 innings for his first save, allowing no hits.

Tewskbury appeared in eight games in relief during the first month of the season before he was sent down to Louisville.

Boddicker wins seventh straight

Red Sox down Orioles for 10th win in last 14 games

Associated Press

Mike Boddicker won his seventh straight game and Wade Boggs broke out of an 0-for-13 slump with three hits and two RBIs as the Boston Red Sox beat the Baltimore Orioles, 6-3.

Boston has won 10 of 14 while the Orioles have dropped four straight, all at home.

For Boddicker (8-3), who has not lost since April 25, the streak is a career best. He allowed seven hits, four by Phil Bradley, struck out seven and walked one in eight innings. Rob Murphy got the final three outs.

Boggs went 3-for-5, including his fourth home run to lead off the ninth.

After stranding runners in scoring position in each of the first two innings, the Red Sox scored four runs in the third against John Mitchell (0-1), making his first start since being recalled from Class AAA Rochester on Friday.

Singles by Boggs, Jody Reed and Mike Greenwell started the inning. One out later, Dwight Evans' sacrifice fly made it 1-0. Ellis Burks grounded a double inside third base to score Reed and Carlos Quintana followed with a two-run single to left.

In the foruth, the Orioles made it 4-1 when Steve Finley reached base on a groundout, stole second and scored on Mickey Tettleton's two-out single.

Boston added a run in the sixth inning. Quintana doubled off the center field wall and took third on a sacrifice. Mitchell then hit Luis Rivera with a pitch before being relieved by Kevin Hickey.

Boggs, 0-for-5 lifetime against Hickey coming in, scored Quintana with a double to left and Reed walked to load the bases. Greenwell then grounded into a double play, one of four turned by the Orioles.

Baltimore then cut it to 5-2 in the sixth when Bradley, who had three singles and a double, scored on a two-out single by Randy Milligan.

AL Roundup

Tigers 6, Angels 2

Mark Salas had three hits, including a two-run homer, to lead the Detroit Tigers to their fourth straight victory, a win over the California Angels.

Salas, who has caught the last eight games in place of injured Mike Heath, has hit three home runs in that stretch.

Jack Morris (6-7) allowed eight hits in seven innings to win his fourth straight game and snap a three-game losing streak against California dating to 1988. He walked three and struck out four before Mike Henneman finished up.

Indians 10, Brewers 9

Jerry Browne scored from second base when Milwaukee failed to complete an inning-ending double play in the bottom of the ninth, giving the Cleveland Indians a wild victory over the Brewers.

The Indians scored eight runs in the final two innings and the Brewers six in the final three.

Bob Sebra (1-1) walked Browne to start the ninth and Browne moved to second on Chris James' sacrifice. After Candy Maldonado was intentionally walked, Brook Jacoby hit a ground ball to Sebra, who threw to Bill Spiers at second to start an apparent double play.

Royals 5, Twins 3

Streaking Danny Tartabull and Kevin Seitzer hit two-run homers as the Kansas City Royals beat Minnesota, handing the Twins their season-high ninth loss in a row.

Tartabull has homered in consecutive games and has hit in nine straight. He has four homers and eight RBIs during the run

It was the first time since May 21 that the Royals, with only 27 homers this season, hit more than one in a game.

Blue Jays 2, Yankees 1

A single by Pat Borders drove in the tie-breaking run in the 11th inning, giving the Toronto Blue Jays their fifth straight victory and ninth in 10 games, over the hapless New York Yankees.

ISIAH: Sources say MVP ran thousand-dollar dice games

From 1C

"The whole meeting today was, 'We're sorry we are here,'" Thomas said of the FBI agents. "They informed me that I wasn't a target of their investigation and the only reason they were talking to me was because this story broke."

Sources told WJBK-TV in a report Friday and the Detroit Free Press and Oakland Press in stories published Saturday that a grand jury had subpoenaed checks totaling at least $100,000 that Thomas cashed at a grocery store owned by a neighbor and friend, Imad Denha.

Both Thomas and Denha ran craps games with thousands of dollars at stake at unspecified times at their homes in Oakland County's West Bloomfield Township, the sources said.

Asked about that allegation, Thomas shook his head, muttered a four-letter expletive, and said, "No ... I can count on one hand the number of people that have been in my home."

Thomas said he called the FBI about 12:30 a.m. Saturday after arriving home about 1½ hours earlier.

"I came home and my wife's standing in front of the TV set crying," he said. Thomas added that Friday was his son Joshua's second birthday.

TYSON: Comeback impressive

From 1C

1987, 10 years after the former heavyweight champion had retired.

Foreman wants to fight Tyson, but it doesn't appear the two men will meet each other in their next fights. Tyson is supposed to fight Alex Stewart on Sept. 8 while promoter Bob Arum said he hopes to have Foreman fight Francisco Damiani of Italy sometime in September.

Asked how he felt the Tokyo loss would affect Tyson, Douglas, who attended the bout outdoors at Ceasars Palace, said, "Defeat can make you or break you. It's up to him."

Tyson obviously had one thing on his mind from the time he took a first step toward Tillman: Destroy him. "I'm still the greatest fighter in the universe," Tyson boasted.

"I didn't prepare myself properly," Tyson said of the loss to Douglas. "I was in shape physically, but not emotionally."

Tyson weighed 217 pounds, 3½ less than he weighed for the Douglas fight. The 29-year-old Tillman weighed 215 pounds.

Tyson, who will be 24 on June 30, scored his 34th knockout in boosting his record to 38-1. He earned $2 million.

Tillman, the 1984 Olympic heavyweight champion, is 20-5 with 14 knockouts.

Tillman outpointed Tyson in the Olympic Trials final and also in the box-off. He was more experienced than Tyson at that time, but Tyson had much more experience as a pro than Tillman, who was fighting for only the fifth time since 1987.

North Central teams advance in A tourney

Staff Report

Both North Central Little League teams took wins in the opening day of the Joe Mowles Memorial A League baseball tournament Saturday.

The North Central Angels dropped the Greenwood Rangers 1-0 as Angel pitcher Keith Lant threw a no-hitter and struck out 13. Nick Benavidez scored the only run of the game when he stole home after tripling in the first inning.

In the other game featuring a North Central team, the North Central Rangers defeated the Mid City Rangers 3-2. Mark Holly took the win for the victorious Rangers, as he recorded 16 strike outs.

In other Saturday play, the Mid City Angels downed the Eastern Mets 9-3 and the Tower Astros beat the Western Angels 10-8. Mid City Angel pitcher Clay Johnston had 11 K's, and Tower hitters Lance Watters and Bennie Acosta both homered. Tower pitcher Cary Patteson picked up the win while also hitting a triple and a double.

Tower and Mid City will play Monday in winner's bracket at 6 p.m., and the North Central Rangers and North Central Angels, who finished first and second in regular season, will play Monday at 6 p.m.

Baton-wielding Italian police disperse English hooligans in downtown Cagliari, Italy, who were rampaging through the streets on their way to the World Cup match between England and the Netherlands.

Soccer rears its ugly head

English fans clash with police, the latest in a violent World Cup

N.Y. Times News Service

CAGLIARI, Sardinia — Several hours before the kickoff of the World Cup match here Saturday night between England and the Netherlands, hundreds of English soccer fans clashed with police officers in an exchange of rocks and tear gas.

According to early reports, the police held dozens of youths and there were injuries on both sides in a skirmish that began when English youths stormed police barricades set up near Sant'Elia Stadium, on the outskirts of this southern Sardinian city.

The police, clearly reacting strongly to the first sign of trouble, chased fans down back streets and alleys in a battle that altered what had been a peaceful day, and deepened worries that a night of trouble lay ahead for what already was the most dreaded match of the World Cup finals.

Both England and the Netherlands are notorious for soccer hooliganism; their teams trailed by packs of rabid fans out to prove they are the nastiest around.

For months, people here have braced for the estimated 8,500 Dutch and 6,000 English fans who poured onto this island in the last few days from planes and ships.

They were greeted with the tightest security net thus far in the month-long tournament.

About 3,200 extra police officers were assigned to duty in and around Cagliari, raising the total force here to 4,000; equivalent to one officer for every 60 residents.

They have closely patrolled every Sardinian airport and ferry landing, using dogs to sniff each arrival for drugs and pulling aside those suspected of being possible troublemakers.

At least 1,500 officers stood guard Saturday night at the stadium, where no one could get in without undergoing a body search or a metal-detector inspection.

The first of several checkpoints was set up nearly a mile from the stadium, and the police confiscated sticks, bottles and anything else that might be hurled at players on the field.

Large groups of English and Dutch fans were escorted by armed police into the stadium.

One contingent of about 75 English youths was completely surrounded and ordered to maintain strict ranks by rifle-carrying officers.

There were plans to keep the English and Dutch fans apart inside the stadium, but a brisk trade in scalped tickets made it likely that the security precautions had been breached.

Starting at midnight Friday, alcohol sales were banned throughout Cagliari and nearby towns, a restriction that has been in force on match days in Italy's 12 host cities, to the consternation of bar and restaurant owners and to all Italians who insist it is their inalienable right to drink wine with their meals.

Restaurant owners in Rome and Milan were so outraged last week that many closed their kitchens for a day in protest.

Here, many soccer fans, including many young Englishmen, have camped out for several days, drinking and behaving raucously on the streets.

Yet for most of Saturday, along Via Roma, a porticoed boulevard of shops and cafes that is this port city's waterfront promenade, it was generally quiet until the clash just before the 9 p.m. kickoff.

That street and its nearby train station were considered likely battlegrounds.

Dutch fans, wrapped in banners of orange, their team's color, marched and chanted along the boulevard as they walked the two miles to the stadium.

But they avoided contact with the English youths who also cruised the street.

Some fans spent idle time at sidewalk cafes, where the strongest drink they could buy was a stiff cup of Italian espresso.

"We're pleased with the way things have gone so far," Kay Coombs, a spokeswoman for the British Embassy in Rome, said before Saturday evening's skirmish.

The embassy had set up a special office in Sardinia, where the English team has been exiled for its three first-round matches to make it easier to monitor its fans.

One unexpected source of trouble turned out to be young Sardinians out to prove themselves against the northern Europeans with tough reputations.

Late Friday night and early this morning, several scuffles were reported near the train station and witnesses blamed the trouble for the most part on local youths.

That is not to say that the visitors have been angels.

Eight English hooligans were arrested Thursday after a barroom brawl, and another one was expelled from the country for pushing two Italians off a motorcycle.

Last Monday, riot police charged bottle-throwing fans who had fought with local youths after a match between England and Ireland.

In all, Coombs said, 32 English fans were in jail pending trial and three were serving sentences of 20 days each.

That was as of mid-afternoon Saturday, before Saturday evening's brawl.

Despite the focus on Sardinia, the worst World Cup violence before Saturday had come from young West Germans who rioted in Milan last Sunday as their national team played Yugoslavia.

The police fired tear gas after the youths smashed store windows, attacked a trolley car and vandalized subway stations in a rampage that lasted several hours.

Afterwards, at least 45 Germans were expelled from the country, and seven others, plus a Swiss, were given eight-month prison terms.

Police baffled at why celebration went bad

DETROIT (AP) — A Pistons victory celebration that turned ugly on the streets of Detroit left police Saturday investigating 141 arrests and identifying at least seven people killed and several injured.

"I don't know what it is that makes people violent when they're celebrating like this," police inspector Fred Williams said Saturday. "We're trying to figure it out. Most of the people were well-behaved, but it's the others that we have to worry about."

Police arrested 68 people on disorderly conduct charges, 15 on assault charges, two in connection with fatal hit-and-run accidents, 31 on breaking-and-entering, six on miscellaneous destruction of properties and 19 on traffic violations, Williams said.

Police were holding two men pending charges on separate hit-and-run accidents early Friday. Arraignments were to be scheduled, he said.

Four people were killed and one person was injured when a car plowed into a group of pedestrians celebrating on the city's east side at 1:15 a.m. Friday. A 41-year-old Warren man was being held pending charges, Williams said.

The accident killed Keith Brown, 10; Frederick Moore, 9; Alisha Stanfield, 15; and Sony Deon Hogan, 21, all of Detroit. Daniel Baker, 18, Brown's cousin, was injured.

In a separate incident, Carl Sherley, 32, of Detroit, was struck by a car as he walked home from friends' house where he was watching the game, police said. A Detroit man was being held pending hit-and-run charges.

Rob Galbraith, 25, of Southfield died after he fell from a Detroit apartment roof where he was trying to light a Roman candle in celebration of the Pistons' 92-90 win Thursday night, which sealed their second straight NBA championship.

"The force of the explosion sent him back, hard enough to catch the back of his knees on the edge of the roof," his friend, Dan Roth, said.

The seventh victim, 4-year-old Gregory Allen, was struck and killed by a car during a street celebration in River Rouge, a southern suburb.

"He was the smartest little 4-year-old you ever saw in your life," said his great-grandfather, Tyree Simmons.

A man whose name and age weren't released died after he was hit by a car outside a party store in Detroit, police said. However, his death was not attributed to victory celebrations.

The violence was reminiscent of 1984, when the Detroit Tigers won the World Series. More than 100,000 people poured into the streets, overturning cars, looting and causing widespread damage.

Last year, carloads of boisterous fans also jammed streets after the Pistons, the "Bad Boys" of basketball, swept the Los Angeles Lakers in four games.

And on the field ... teams battle to 0-0 tie

Associated Press

World Cup

England had two goals disallowed in a 0-0 tie with the Netherlands that was preceded by a confrontation between English fans and Italian police.

Two hours before the game, police had to use tear gas to disperse a group of about 1,000 English fans who charged a security cordon during a march from the city center to Sant'Elia Stadium. Two police officers and at least three fans were injured in the fighting, while about 500 English fans were detained.

There were no immediate reports of crowd trouble during a game that authorities feared could result in clashes between the English and Dutch fans.

The tie gave both teams two points with one game left in Group F, keeping them in the running for the second round.

The Netherlands, the European champion, played cool, composed soccer and had more possession, but England created more scoring chances.

England's supporters thought their team had won in the final seconds when fullback Stuart Pearce slammed an indirect free kick into the net. The ball did not touch another player on its way to the net and was ruled illegal.

Brazil 1, Costa Rica 0

Brazil outplayed Costa Rica for 90 minutes but could only manage a goal by Muller in the first half for a victory in the World Cup.

Still, the win gave Brazil four points from its opening two games in the 24-nation tournament and assured it of a spot in the second round. The three-time champion joined Cameroon, Italy, Czechoslovakia and West Germany, which already had clinched second-round berths.

The heavily favored Brazilians had no trouble with the Costa Rican defense. But goalkeeper Luis Conejo, a star in his team's 1-0 win over Scotland, was just as good this time.

Muller scored in the 33rd minute when his hooked shot flew past Conejo after it deflected off defender Mauricio Montero. That was all Conejo allowed, making nearly a dozen difficult saves.

Conejo's performance kept alive Costa Rica's chances of advancing. The Central American nation, which qualified just ahead of the United States in the CONCACAF group, plays Sweden on Wednesday.

Scotland 2, Sweden 1

Scotland made wholesale changes and used them well to beat Sweden and keep alive its hopes of reaching the second round of the World Cup for the first time.

Midfielder Stuart McCall scored from close range in the 11th minute and striker Mo Johnston converted a penalty kick to put the game away with eight minutes to play.

"We were tired at the end," said Scotland's coach Andy Roxburgh.

McCall's early goal followed a corner kick by Murdo MacLeod that found David McPherson, who headed it on toward McCall. He beat the Swedish defense to score.

Strange returns to familiar territory

After scraping by Friday, Strange is in the hunt for third straight title

Associated Press

MEDINAH, Ill. — He watched his putt bend to the left as if it had been swept up by a whirlpool. It fell in the hole, and Curtis Strange was back in the U.S. Open.

Trying to become the first man in 85 years to win three straight U.S. Opens, Strange was worried about making the cut a day earlier. On Saturday, he shot a 4-under-par 68 that put him at 211, five under for the tournament and only two off the lead shared by Mike Donald and Billy Ray Brown.

Strange was in the chase.

"When I made that putt at the 17th, I was back at the U.S. Open," he said. "Winning that trophy and being the reigning Open champion, you just don't want to let go. At least, you don't want to let go easily.

"I feel like I've got a chance now."

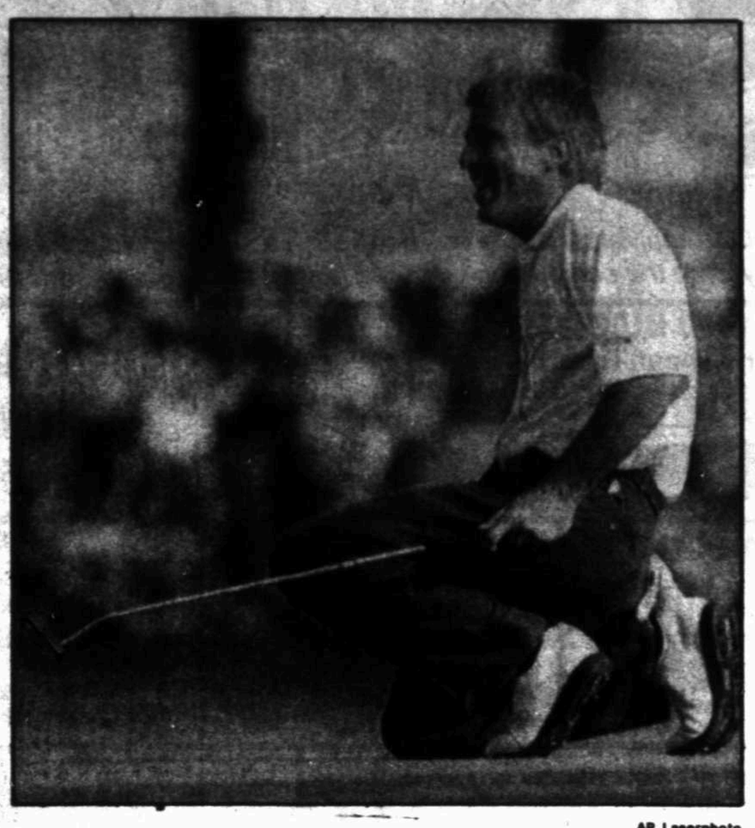

Strange's putt, which he estimated at 20 feet, gave him the last of his four birdies in a bogey-free third round.

"I must have started the ball eight feet left of the hole," Strange said. "It was going sideways, but it went in."

He watched the ball drop, took six steps to the hole, retrieved the ball and waved to the crowd. He shook hands with his playing partner, Mike Reid, and walked off the green.

"The atmosphere — making three birdies in five holes, feeling good about things, and having all those people pulling for me — that's what made it like the U.S. Open again," he said. "I realized I was back in the golf tournament."

Strange hit every fairway and every green in regulation. His first birdie came on the 434-yard, par-4 fourth hole when he hit a 5-iron to 4 feet and made the putt.

AP Laserphoto

He made routine pars until the 13th, a 199-yard, par-3 over water. He hit a 5-iron within 15 feet and made that one.

"When I made the putt at 13, I think that got me going a little bit," Strange said. "I felt like I would be in the thick of things if I made a couple more birdies, and I did."

He parred 14 and 15, then hit the pin with a 4-iron second shot on the 426-yard par-4 16th. The ball dropped about 4 feet from the hole, and he made birdie from there. His approach shot on the 17th was a 7-iron.

Once again, he was in hot pursuit of the Open title. Last year at Oak Hill Country Club in Rochester, N.Y., he became the first man since Ben Hogan in 1950-51 to win consecutive Opens. The only man to win three in a row was Willie Anderson in 1903-04-05.

"Now, I'm anxious to get going again tomorrow," Strange said. "I wouldn't mind being a little closer, but just give me a chance.

"When I came off 17 today, I was ready to go 18 more. I've changed drastically in the last two days. I'm not moping around anymore. I'm ready to go."

Strange had rounds of 1-over 73 and 2-under 70, coming into the second round at 1-under 143, two shots better than the cut of 145. The first two rounds started with bogeys on the first hole, a mild 385-yard par-4. On Saturday, he parred No. 1, and that might have been his most important hole of the day.

"I was only 107 yards away, so I figured I could make par," Strange said. "You want to get off to a good start, and it was important because No. 1 is one of the few holes here that you feel you should make birdie on. But I made a good, solid par."

Strange said playing conditions once again were perfect from heavy rains the day before the Open began. The fairways are perfect, the greens are soft, and "Medinah is defenseless."

And there's been very little wind to dry things out or buffet shots into the rough. A little more wind on Sunday might help Strange catch up.

"If it blows tomorrow, it'll be tougher for me, too," he said. "But I'm behind. I'm in a position where I have everything to gain and nothing to lose. Sure, I want some wind, but I don't want it to knock me down."

Jack Nicklaus would become the first to win the U.S. Open five times and in four different decades.

Nicklaus again has chance at history

Associated Press

MEDINAH, Ill. — In this most open of U.S. Opens, Jack Nicklaus figures just about anything can happen during Sunday's final round. Why, even a 50-year-old grandfather can win it.

That would be Nicklaus, of course, and the idea is not just an aging golfer's folly.

Never mind that no 50-year-old has ever done it, that no one has ever won five Opens, that no one has won opens in four decades.

Nicklaus won in 1962, 1967, 1972 and 1980, and he's serious about his chances now, especially after a bogey-free, 4-under-par 68 on Saturday that put him on the leader board at 3-under 213 after 54 holes.

"I think I've got a chance of winning unless somebody runs away," he said. "I'm thinking that a 64 would put me 11 under par, and 11 under par can win the championship. And 64 can be shot on this golf course."

That in itself is remarkable, but the 7,195-yard Medinah layout — longest ever for an Open — was left defenseless by rain-softened greens and a lack of wind.

"No question about it," he said. "Your mental approach at the U.S. Open is not to shoot 65, but par or a little under to be in it. I could not believe that 2-over didn't even make the cut."

Because of the conditions, Nicklaus said, "a lot of guys have a chance to win this thing. A lot ... a lot of things can still happen."

"I had a lot of opportunities" Saturday, Nicklaus said, but he missed at least five birdie putts inside 15 feet.

Nicklaus, who corrected a flaw in his swing this week, hit 17 greens in the third round, missing only the 18th when he put a 5-iron approach into the rough. But he chipped on and made a 6-footer for par.

"I got sloppy at the top of my swing, and worked on it," Nicklaus said. "Getting firmer at the top allowed me to use the lower body and hit into the ball well."

If Nicklaus has had a shortcoming this week, it has been on the four par-5 holes, once a particular strength of his game.

"I just haven't been able to convert the par-5's," he said. "I have had three short putts on No. 5 and made one of them. I made bogey missing a short putt on No. 7. In one round at No. 10 I three-putted from 10 feet. At No. 14 I've had it close three times and missed them all.

"I need a little wind to get home (in two) on the par-5's and the only one I could reach was No. 5 and I hit bad tee shots there."

OPEN: Entering final day, several still have a chance end of the second round, there had already been more under-par rounds at Medinah, 86, than in any other Open.

Two major factors have caused the assault on par. The first is Medinah's 18-hole par of 72, which includes four par 5's. Most Opens are held on courses with a par of 70 that have only two par 5's. Since 1950, only three other United States Open courses have carried a par of 72: Oakmont in 1953, Hazeltine in 1970 and Pebble Beach in 1972 and 1982.

But the biggest factor is that despite lush rough and severely sloped greens, Medinah is still essentially defenseless after being softened by rain from a thunderstorm the night before the first round.

On Saturday, a gloomy, humid haze that hung in the still air did little to dry the course out. It kept the the immaculately prepared fairways and greens just moist enough for perfect scoring conditions.

"Normally on the first tee of a U.S. Open, some guys have fear in their hearts," said Strange. "Today, the guys on the practice putting green can't wait to get on that first tee.

"Medinah is a great old course, but right now it's pretty defenseless."

Strange was encouraged by a round in which he hit every fairway and green in regulation and made some difficult putts. He believes he still has a chance to win his third straight Open.

"From where I came from, I feel pretty good," said Strange. "A good little round tomorrow may scare somebody. I'm kind of in the situation where I have everything to gain and nothing to lose.

"The wind could come up a little to make it a little trickier. That and just Sunday at the U.S. Open could bring scores up."

Tied with Strange was Jose-Maria Olazabal, who shot a second straight 69. Greg Norman, who barely made the 36-hole cut at 145, fired a 69.

"The course is not playing like a U.S. Open course," Norman said almost wistfully. "The greens are soft, and guys are just firing at the bottom of the flagstick. This week seems more like a putting competition than a striking competition."

Norman said that the easier conditions would give more players a chance to win the tournament. With too much water having doused Medinah's fire, the usually fearsome course is not that different from an average stop on the PGA Tour.

"Peter Jacobsen said it best this morning in the car park," said Norman. "He said, 'It feels like the Anheuser-Busch.'

"It's just sad what happened Wednesday night. The golf tournament really stopped on Wednesday night."

Soon after the thunderstorm, the record-breaking started. Tim Simpson's nine under par for 36 holes total set an Open record for most under par by a 36-hole leader, breaking the previous record of six under par set by Nicklaus at Baltusrol in 1980.

The 47 rounds under par posted on Friday broke the championship record of 39 set on Thursday. The total of 86 subpar rounds through 36 holes broke the record of 64 set at Brookline in 1988.

Windy weather opens Open to half the field

MEDINAH, Ill. (AP) — The wind returned to Medinah just in time to blow the U.S. Open wide open.

After the better part of three days with barely a breeze, the wind kicked up on the leaders' last seven holes, and none of the last eight players on the course could break par.

Scott Simpson was the biggest victim.

Standing at the 16th tee, he was nine under par and one shot ahead.

By the time, he came off the 18th green, he was four under and three shots behind after finishing bogey-triple bogey-bogey.

"Nine under to four under. That's not finishing it too good. It's hard to believe 73," Simpson moaned. "The wind came up on the last four holes and made it a little tougher."

The worst of it was No. 17, 168 yards with water in front of the green and a bunker behind it.

Simpson pulled a 7-iron shot into the bunker, needed two to get out and another shot to get on, chipping to six feet. From there, he two-putted.

"It borders on being unfair," Simpson said. "I didn't think I hit that bad a shot to get triple bogey."

Tim Simpson, spooked when the wind kicked up on 16, overshot the green and found himself buried in the deep fringe. Bogey. At 17, he three-putted from the back fringe. Bogey.

"The sour notes were hitting good shots on 16 and 17 and walking off with bogey," he said.

Unless you happen to be an avid antique-car buff, it's likely that you never heard of the Mors automobile (illustrated). However, it was a fairly popular import from France in the early years of this century.

But it certainly was not cheap: The $8,800-plus purchase price would buy a fine, new 12-room house back then! As a matter of fact, the modest house you see in the background of this picture would probably have sold, then, for only a third to a fourth of the cost of a new Mors! Most cars of 1904 that were priced over $2,500 were considered "rich men's toys."

Although a few light cars like the Oldsmobile, the Brush, the Maxwell, etc. were popular in the pre-1910 era, it was Henry Ford's famous Model T that brought prices way down and helped to put most of America on wheels by the 1920s. During the 1920s, Ford's cheapest Model Ts (roadsters, without electric starters) were available, new, for as little as $290!

Notice the surrey-like, rigid "canopy top" on this Mors. The canopy top was installed on a number of 1904 touring cars, but since the sides and rear of the body were still open to the elements, this type could not be considered a truly "closed" car.

Before the mid-1920s — with few exceptions — fully closed cars were usually more expensive than open models, so most families and individuals purchased more affordable touring cars and roadsters. Later in the 'teens, glassed-in superstructures were available for installation on open cars, making them far more comfortable in bad weather. One such addition was the old "California Top."

HOMES

SIMPLY Elegant

By JILL HANCOCK

The baby-boomers that grew up in the '50s, who lived in tract housing that had a chrome dinette set, have matured into the '90s with a sophisticated lifestyle. Home has taken on a different meaning for this fast-paced generation because they are using their homes as a base for leisure and a place to hide out. These homes display private areas for both children and adults, in addition to elaborate floor plans, state-of-the-art kitchens and baths, huge windows and skylights.

Tucked away on a private cul-de-sac in Polo Park, just a sidewalk away from a maintenance-free pool, is a two-story, red brick home that features a dynamic interior. The elegant appointments of builder Jim Rasnick can be seen throughout this four-bedroom and two-and-a-half-bath home.

Please see SIMPLY/2D

(From 1D)

The vast, open feel that this week's featured home affords is evident as soon as a person enters the foyer. The ceiling spans into the second floor and windows which surround the front door brighten this area. A staircase that leads to the three bedrooms on the second floor is situated across from the front door. The formal living areas are located at each end of the foyer.

The formal living room, to the right, has a brick fireplace which flows into the tall tiered ceiling and is framed with crown moulding. A gorgeous crystal chandelier adds a touch of elegance into this room which has three windows that overlook the front and side yards.

A guest bath is situated in a hallway that is next to the formal living room, as well as a customized walk-in closet that can be transformed into a wet bar. This corridor extends into the family room.

To the left of the entrance, the formal dining room is highlighted by a bay window along one wall. This window also frames the front yard and a second window is placed on an adjacent wall. A doorway in the dining room leads into the kitchen.

A corridor in the foyer extends pass the staircase and opens into the family room. The design of this area is truly unique. The ceiling changes drastically in this room — towards the right end of the room, the ceiling heights changes into one that ascends into an angled ceiling in the second story. Sunlight streams through two skylights in the ceiling down onto a cozy area in front of the brick fireplace. A desk is inset along one wall in the family room with bookcases above.

A French door next to the fireplace opens onto a private side yard that is beautifully landscaped. Owners will enjoy sitting under the covered patio in the morning with a cup of tea or in the evening as the summer sun is setting.

The kitchen and breakfast room are situated to the left of the family room. A floral wallpaper in shades of blue and rose decorate the walls in this area. The kitchen features Whirlpool appliances that include a self-cleaning oven, microwave, cooktop and dishwasher.

Three windows, which view the yard, are placed along an angled wall in the spacious breakfast room. The utility room is situated across from the breakfast room and has built-in cabinets and a sink. One cabinet is designed with a knee-space and can be used for a computer or as a sewing area.

Access into the rear-entry, two-car garage is made through a short hall next to the breakfast and family rooms. The paneled garage also has automatic door openers.

The master suite is sequestered downstairs next to the family room. A tiered ceiling with recessed lighting accents the interior of this room. An atrium door provides a private access onto the patio in the side yard.

Inset in one corner of the master bedroom, two doors open into the master bath. A marble tub is tucked away in one corner of the bath and serves as the focal point. Two windows above the tub and a skylight brighten this entire area.

The bath also features separate his and her vanities, an oversized marble shower and a spacious closet with mirrored doors. A paper in soft hues of gray and blue adorns the walls.

Upstairs, three bedrooms and a hall bath provide a private haven for children. Each of these bedrooms are uniquely designed. One has a bay window, complete with a window seat, where a child can sit among a lot of favorite stuffed animals and gaze out the window into the neighborhood below. The second bedroom has two windows placed along an angled wall and the third has a nook that can be used as a study or sitting area. Each of these rooms also were planned with spacious closets.

The hall bath has a floral peach wallpaper, a marble vanity with two sinks and storage cabinets. The separate bathing area features a tub with glass doors.

The other amenities in this five-year-old home are an alarm system, ceiling fans, additional parking next to the garage, ceiling fans and a sprinkler system.

Lanier & Co. is offering this home which contains over 2,900 square feet for $169,900.

Harvey advises prospective home sellers about Realtors, marketing efforts

Many prospective home sellers don't know what they should look for in a Realtor or what they can do to help with the marketing effort, according to Don Harvey, owner and president of Don Harvey, Realtors, who has been in the real estate business since 1963.

"To help Mr. and Mrs. Seller be better prepared to select the right Realtor in the marketing effort of their home," said Harvey, "they should consider the following when selecting a Realtor."

Track record: Usually the best indicator of future performance is a proven track record. Some things the seller might determine are:

■ How long have they been in business?

■ What is their reputation in the community for listing and selling real estate?

■ How many successful transactions do they complete each year?

Market exposure: Can they provide comprehensive effective exposure for your property? Some indicators are:

■ How many number of Midland Board of Realtors recognized award winning associates do they have?

■ How much total dollar volume do they produce each year?

■ Do they also use the other creative forms of advertising to generate prospects?

■ Are they a member of one or more major national referral networks that would send them prospective buyers?

■ Do their agents have the needed knowledge, experience and training? Do they have an ongoing training program to keep them informed of changes in the market and industry as a whole?

Service Orientation: Make sure you select a Realtor that is truly committed to conscientious service as exemplified by such things as:

■ Will they stay in touch with you on a regular basis?

■ Will they always keep you informed of your marketing progress and share the feedback they've gathered?

■ Will they be constantly working to generate excitement and activity about your home in the real estate community as well?

■ Will they be easily accessible at all times to answer questions and help you solve problems?

■ Do they clearly understand the Principal/Agent responsibilities: i.e. the person paying the fee, usually the seller, is the client even if they are also working with the buyer?

In summary, to successfully market your home, first be sure you've selected the right Realtor to do what they're supposed to do — sell your home. Year-to-date, Don Harvey, Realtors has closed approximately 70 percent more listings than our closest competitor. Don Harvey, Realtors has also closed more sales year-to-date that any of our competition. When you're in need of real estate assistance call and let them show you why we are Midland's leading real estate company.

Don Harvey

'Make sure you select a Realtor that is truly committed to conscientious service.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

Banner week for company

Langston

Last week had to be one of the most exciting in Langston Realtors 24 year history! Everyone in the office was celebrating the news of what may be our biggest month ever, of a highly successful reception and presentation for the Hobbs transferees, and of word from our Corporate Services Director that the market is finally showing signs of appreciation.

The first good news came Monday when Richard Langston, our financial director, completed our company's May sales report showing 6⅓ million in sales in the residential market for the month! Our stats in the "wow" days of the early '80s are buried in files, but I don't remember such totals even then. Let me do explain, however, that because there are two sides to the successful closing of every property, the listing and the selling side, we, as most Realtors, count a listing sold in-house twice, while our listings sold by another firm, or our sale of another firm's listings are counted once. This is done to be able to give full credit to both selling and listing agents of a transaction. But even just a one time accounting of our May sales shows a banner month, a 30 plus percent share of the market! Thanks to all you sellers and purchasers who helped us achieve this top-place in the market.

The second cause for celebrating was our very successful trip to Hobbs to introduce Midland to the Chevron and other summer transferees. Our chartered bus was filled with 19 sales associates plus representatives from the hospital, school system, retirement communities, mortgage companies, insurance companies, builders, Midland Reporter-Telegram and at least a ton of information on every aspect of our community. Our reception at the Hobbs Country Club was beautifully handled by Manager Dale Telford. We received much positive feed back from the 100 plus in attendance and everyone certainly had ample opportunity to learn about Midland. Our invitations said "Meet Midland from A to Z", from "Angles Baseball" all the way through the alphabet to "Zee You There!" And what did we dream up for "X"? "Xylophone as in the Midland-Odessa Symphony" of course!

Perhaps one of the most significant reasons for celebrating last week was news from our Corporate Services Director, Penny Willhite that the market after seven years, has finally shown some signs of appreciation — up to 5 percent in the past 12 months! She identified this by pulling up "pairs", homes that sold within the past 12 months and then resold on today's market. These pairs can be found in most areas of the city and most show the current sales price as approximately 5 percent higher than the earlier one. Appraisers, are you listening?

Color determines feel of a home

Copley News Service

Psychologists say the color of your walls can affect the "feel" of your home. So, if you're about to repaint or re-wallpaper a room, keep some rules in mind:

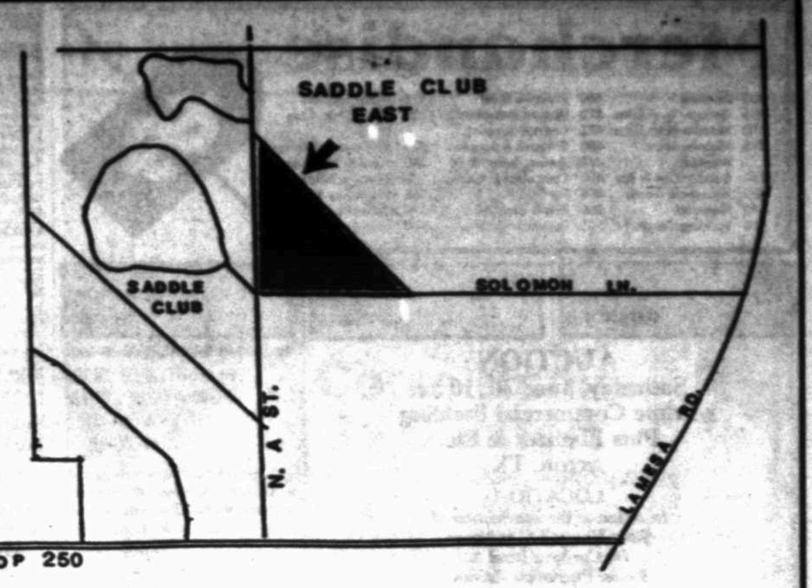

Blues and greens are "cool colors" and will make a room feel more comfortable in summer, while "warm colors," such as reds, pinks and orange will make a room feel warmer in winter.

Complete the color scheme by coordinating the room's floor and window coverings and furnishings in the same color family.

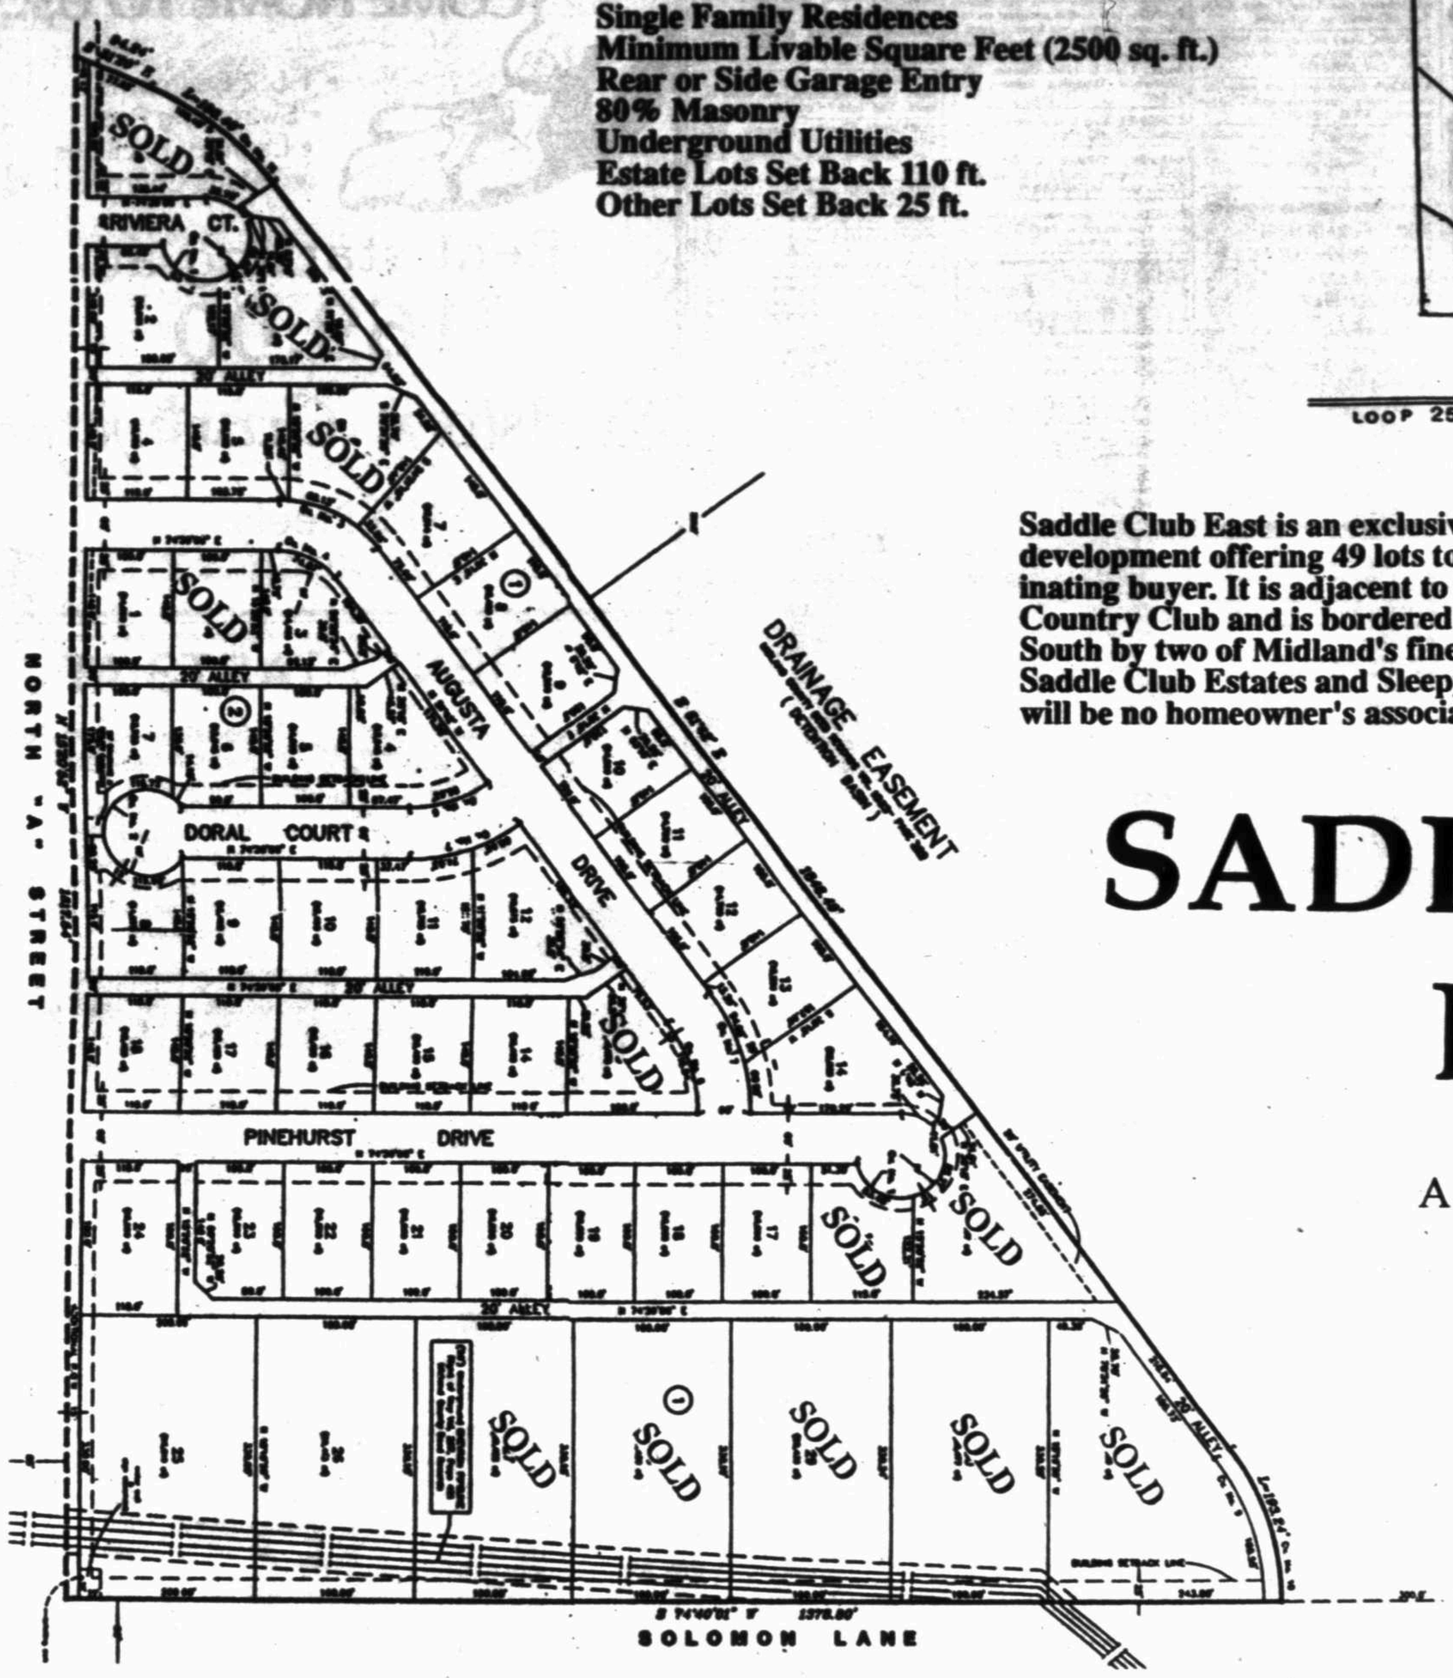

To implement the "cool color" strategy without redecorating, use accessories in blues or greens.

The ideal color strategy would combine neutral tones — such as white, ivory or beige — on permanent features, with seasonal accessories in "warm" or "cool" colors. Owners can also use colors to visually stretch the space in a small room by selecting wall coverings with small airy patterns in light hues. If a room's space is big or long, reverse the illusion with rich, dark coverings that make the room feel warmer, more people-sized.

SURVIVING CANCER: DAY BY DAY

Byran Liptzin

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a six-part Sunday series giving an in-depth look at the fight against cancer. The series is a special Hearst project which was written by Faith Keenan of the Washington Bureau with photographs and graphics prepared by staff members of the San Antonio Light. The series has a wide scope, from stories on the state of medical research and the human suffering brought by the disease to the politics of federal research money.

Next Sunday's presentation will focus on the way cancer has crept into virtually every form of our lives, the increasing impact the disease is having with minorities and how the looming threat of getting cancer has changed our behavior.

By Faith Keenan

POTOMAC, Md. — Milly and Dick Gimer seem to live a perfect life. He's a successful Washington lawyer. She's a travel consultant in this affluent suburb of sprawling homes, country clubs and shopping centers selling designer cookies.

A curving driveway weaves through lush sod to the rich cherry doors of their country-French home. An invisible but invasive threat looms behind those doors.

Cancer has that kind of presence.

Milly, 49, was diagnosed with breast cancer in late 1988. She had noticed a difference in her left breast, but thought it might be a bra problem, so she bought a new one. A few weeks later, when the problem didn't disappear, she went to the doctor for a mammogram.

The tumor measured 4 cm — fairly large in cancer — when it was diagnosed. Four days later, she had a modified radical mastectomy. A biopsy showed the cancer had spread to her lymph nodes. Six months of chemotherapy and radiation followed.

WHILE MILLY bears the obvious scar, her husband and three grown children have had their own bout with cancer — and with each other — as they struggle to come to terms with the disease afflicting their wife and mother. Cancer leaves its indelible imprint on people close to the victim.

"Cancer has as much or more of an impact on significant others as it does on the patient," said Dr. Gary Morrow, a behavioral psychologist at the University of Rochester Cancer Center who studies cancer's affect on families.

It's impossible to predict how a family will react to cancer, he said. The disease can create unbridgeable rifts in previously close families or it can unite those formerly divided by space, generation or personality.

"Those who are around don't know what to do and there isn't anything they can do," said Morrow. "That leads to a lot of frustration and anger. Families can be ripped apart."

According to their oldest daughter, Melissa, the Gimers were always together but apart. Dick, from an Iowa family that exalts the work ethic, always worked long hours at his law firm. He continued to

Breast cancer cures, causes prove elusive

By Faith Keenan

PITTSBURGH — Breast cancer research has consumed billions of dollars and countless lab hours, but scientists still know little about what causes or how to prevent the disease that will strike 150,000 women this year.

Treatment options are a bewildering smorgasbord that confuses patients and their physicians.

"It (breast cancer) is very prevalent and we don't understand a lot about it," said Dr. Philip Leder, chairman of Harvard University's genetics department.

"Of the many cancers, it is the one which I think is the least understood. We have very few clues about what we can do to avoid it or lessen the incidence of it."

Unlike lung cancer, which has been clearly linked to smoking, researchers don't have clear proof on what causes breast cancer. Scientists believe it runs in families. A high fat diet may place some at higher risk of developing the disease, and pregnancy before the age of 30 is associated with a modest protection against it, said Leder. Otherwise, there's not much you can tell a person to do that will lower their risk, he said.

"We now understand that it's not a simple disease," said Dr. Bernard Fisher of the University of Pittsburgh and the grandfather of research on adjuvant chemotherapy — chemotherapy in addition to surgery — in breast cancer.

"We're finding out that it's more heterogeneous than we even thought. It's a heterogeneous disease occurring in a heterogeneous group of women, treated by heterogeneous groups of doctors with heterogeneous therapies."

However, only 23 percent of women surveyed by the Gallup Organization in 1987 said they do monthly self-exams. Forty-eight percent said they do it three or more times a year.

And even some of the most conscientious women don't know a lump when they feel it. Milly Gimer, of Potomac, Md., said she did self-examinations religiously but missed a tumor measuring 4 cm —fairly large for cancer tumors.

"Evidently, I wasn't doing it in the proper way," she said. "It was a very large tumor, yet I didn't feel it."

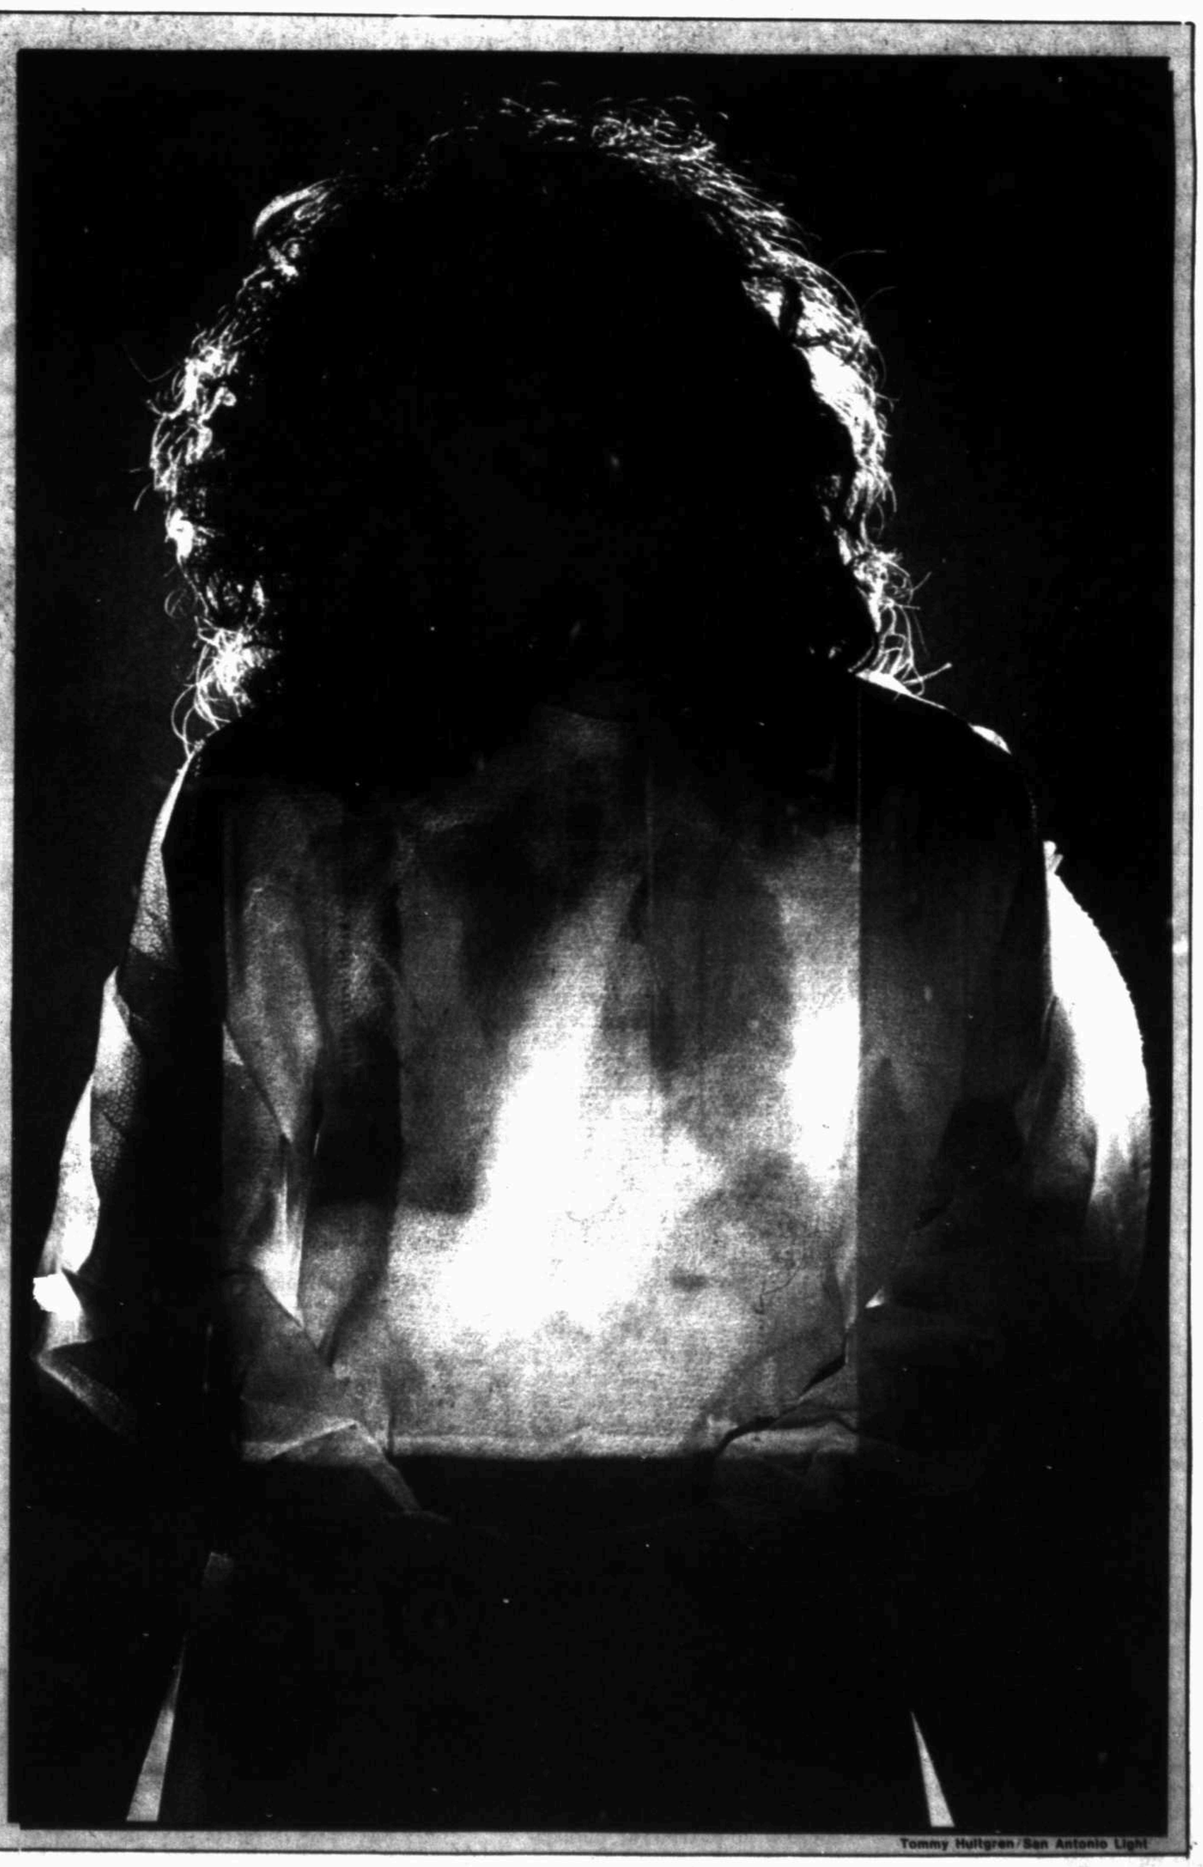

Gimer criticized physicians for what she feels is laxity in screening women for breast cancer. Only 37 percent of physicians surveyed in 1989 by the American Cancer Society follow the recommended guidelines for conducting mammograms.

"Your dentists sends you a card every six months and says it's time to come in for your checkup," said Gimer. "Does your gynecologist or mammogram person? Mine didn't, and I don't know anybody else's who has."

When a woman is diagnosed with breast cancer, she and her physician must choose between treatment options that include a modified radical mastectomy, or removal of the breast and surrounding lymph nodes; mastectomy, or removal of the breast; or lumpectomy — removal of just the tumor.

Those might be preceded or followed by radiation, chemotherapy or hormonal treatments or a combination of all three, depending on the patient's age, size of the tumor, its growth rate, whether it has estrogen receptors that will make it respond to hormones, and other factors that are just emerging in research.

The festivities included a box supper with the girls decorating their boxes in a Graduation '90 motif. Scrapbooks and picture albums were on display, and autograph books were presented to the girls.

As a special surprise, the stage was set with the scenery depicting the story of "Early Midland," which troop members performed in the sixth grade.

Troop leaders Nickie (Mrs. Les) Oppermann and Gayle (Mrs. Doc) Dodson were dressed in their original leaders' uniforms, and the girls were asked to wear at least one part of their uniforms.

The former Scouts started as Brownies in the first grade at Bowie Elementary School and continued through the sixth grade together. Those present were Anna-Margaret Ray, Robyn Jones, Christi Green, Mari Sanchez, Charla Jackson and Jamie Dodson. Family members also were guests.

DARLA GRAHAM, a 1990 graduate of Greenwood High School, was honored with a banana split party recently in the Midland home of Joyce and Jimmy Lucas.

Hosting the event were Darla's aunt, Joyce Lucas, and her cousins, Darrell Lucas, Elaine (Mrs. Marty) Golden, Dawn (Mrs. David) Lucas and Stephanie (Mrs. Bobby) Stovall.

Guests enjoyed games, and an oversized nightshirt of purple and gold was autographed by each guest and presented to the honoree.

STACEY STAPP and Ivan Gutschke were honored at a series of parties prior to their May 26 wedding in First United Methodist Church. A reception followed at the home of the bride's parents, Frances and Larry Stapp.

Festivities began in the groom's hometown of Shallowater with a miscellaneous shower given by family friends.

In Midland, pre-nuptial events included a Mexican supper and "Honey-Do" party in the home of Brenda and Alton Yowell. Also hosting were Donna and Joe Campbell, Jody and Jerry Green and Faye and Copper Daughertry.

A kitchen shower and brunch were held in the home of Sue (Mrs. Dan) Secker, with Linda (Mrs. Rodney) Satterwhite, Sherry (Mrs. Jerry) Hewett, Penny (Mrs. Jerry) Hudgeons and Sharon (Mrs. Clyde) Pine as co-hostesses.

The home of Sarilyn and Bill Black was the scene of a backyard supper. The party was hosted by the Blacks' daughter, Amy, and Martha and Dan Kallus and daughter, Elizabeth.

The bride's grandmother, Frances (Mrs. L.E.) Newton made the bride's wedding gown and bridesmaids' dresses, and family heirlooms were used as serving pieces at the reception.

CANCER: Doctors continue to modify, not cure disease

(From 1E)

After all that, many patients may live longer than they would have without treatment, but they will still eventually die of a breast cancer recurrence. Five-year survival rates range from about 90 percent for localized disease to 18 percent in cases where the disease has spread widely in the body.

Still many patients will recur up to 20 years after initial diagnosis.

"We are not curing most breast cancer patients, very few if any," said Dr. Claude Jacquillat of the Hospital Salpetriere in Paris. He spoke at a recent conference on adjuvant chemotherapy at the University of Arizona. "We are passing our time until we get new drugs trying to understand the disease."

"Until we have a whole new class of drugs, we will continue to modify the disease, not cure it," said Dr. William McGuire, a breast cancer expert from San Antonio.

Meanwhile, adjuvant chemotherapy can at least prolong life in many cases, so it's use will continue until something better comes along. "None of us would feel that (adjuvant chemotherapy) has been successful enough," said Fisher at the Arizona meeting. "Nonetheless, there has been some success there ... The best admonition is the same one you give to workers in a fireworks factory when the lights go out: That it is better to remain in the darkness than to light the wrong candle."

'Until we have a whole new class of drugs, we will continue to modify the disease, not cure it.'

—Dr. William McGuire
breast cancer expert in San Antonio

The debate over adjuvant chemotherapy as a breast cancer treatment has intensified over the last two years and doesn't promise to cool soon.

The spark came when the National Cancer Institute in 1988 issued a directive saying adjuvant chemotherapy should be an option for patients with "node-negative" disease — cancer that has not spread to lymph nodes in the chest or armpit.

Cancer-free nodes are generally considered a good sign for prognosis. But they are no guarantee the disease will not return. About 30 percent of the 75,000 patients that will be diagnosed as node-negative this year will have cancer recurrences within five years.

The controversy in the oncology ranks lies in whether all node-negative patients should have to endure side effects to ensure that the few who will benefit will be covered.

McGuire leads those cancer specialists who decry across-the-board chemotherapy treatment for node-negative patients.

He has strongly advocated looking at signs or "markers" such as tumor size, growth rates and the shapes of tumor cell nuclei to determine which patients' cancers are most likely to recur. His research has also shown that the presence of Cathepsin D, a protein that eats through cell walls to allow tumor spread, can help predict who will and who won't have recurrences.

"In the current climate, it's more important to identify things putting patients in a good risk group," said McGuire. "It's a more intelligent, rational way to arrive at a decision instead of just throwing up your hands and saying, 'Well, we can't tell these patients apart, so we've got to treat them all.'"

The treatment for all proponents say Cathepsin D looks interesting, but its usefulness still must be proven by further research.

This pro-therapy side is not necessarily against using prognostic factors, but they say they are not good enough yet to tell who is most at risk of recurrence. Until they are, no one should be deprived of potentially beneficial treatment, they maintain.

"We still don't have a set of markers that will predict even with 90 percent accuracy those who will respond to treatment and those who won't," said Dr. Andrew Dorr of NCI's cancer treatment evaluation division. Dorr is organizing a "consensus conference" on the issue at the NCI this June.

Many physicians, he said, feel those numbers aren't good enough and they don't want to play God and make that decision for people.

If past conferences are any indication, the experts are likely to continue to agree to disagree until more and better data moves the sides closer together.

Healing wound emits light

N.Y. Times News Service

SENDAI, Japan — Japanese researchers said they have measured for the first time the increase in light particles, invisible to the human eye, that are emitted from the healing wounds of living things.

Researchers at Tohoku University used a device similar to a Geiger counter to measure the light, called biophotons. They revealed their findings May 10 at a meeting of the Japan Medical Electronics Society.

Scientists have long known that all living things emit biophotons, which are produced by chemical reactions. But the Japanese researchers said they were unaware of any previous efforts to measure the amount of biophotons emitted from wounds. They acknowleged that there are no practical uses for the information they obtained in their tests, but expressed the hope that someday it might be useful.

The researchers cut away a 0.06-square-inch portion of skin from a mouse's back while it was anesthetized and observed the number of biophotons emitted from the wound. Compared with the average 50 biophotons emitted every two minutes from undamaged skin, emissions from the wound gradually increased for five days until reaching a peak of 3,600 biophotons every two minutes, the researchers said. The increase may be the result of the increased chemical activity involved in the healing process, the researchers said.

The intensity of the light is about 1,000 times weaker than light that is visible to the human eye.

The study was sponsored by the Research Development Corp. of Japan, which is affiliated with the Science and Technology Agency. Such studies are meant to answer criticism that Japan does not perform enough original research, according to one of the Tohoku University researchers.

Wedding guests dress in style

N.Y. Times News Service

These days brides wear whatever they want. Guests are pretty loose about their dress etiquette, too, but there are still a few dos and don'ts for them.

A female guest at a big afternoon or early evening celebration this time of year should wear a short dress or a suit in a pretty color with printed or plain fabric can be printed.

The suit choice is easy this season, as there are so many meltingly colorful suits out there. Even a tailored blazer suit is fine. The newest suits have soft, breezy skirts fluttering underneath tailored jackets. A dress could be fairly bare on top, but not strapless.

Pants fans could wear a pants suit if it is in a pale color. Better yet would be a soft pajamalike outfit in a flowing fabric. A brimmed hat would be great with that.

Hats as well as gloves have long since ceased being de rigueur.

Lots of guests now wear all black, but it still doesn't seem right. On the other hand, black and white combinations or prints couldn't be smarter.

But please, never wear all white. That privilege, even if she doesn't exercise it, belongs to the bride.

'Jet lag' controlled by adjusting routines

Copley News Service

Chronobiologists working with NASA say the best way to jettison jet lag is to adjust eating and sleeping times up to one week before departure. Make adjusted times equal those of your destination.

Then just before taking off, eat a high-protein but low-carbohydrate meal and back it up with a high-carb meal upon arrival. And go slow on the booze. But do drink lots of water.

Surgeons find new technique 'fashionable'

Copley News Service

Plastic surgeon Joel Feldman says sagging necks can be fixed with a technique that works like a woman's girdle.

He says as people age they get "turkey necks" — the neck muscle begins to sag and it looks like there are long, stringy cords from the chin to the collarbone.

The Boston face fixer says the procedure works the same as a girdle — only he uses stitches to tie together the droopy neck muscles.

By pulling the muscle tight across the Adam's apple, you get a younger-looking neck and a jawline resembling a model's.

Feldman says he has performed over 70 operations using the girdle technique, and the effects are long lasting.

He usually does the operation along with a face-lift for about $8,000.

SURVIVING: Illness brings family problems to focus

do so after his wife's surgery.

Melissa, 26, moved back home during her mother's ordeal, but not just for her mother. She was also trying to re-order her own life.

Jennifer, 24, was — and still is — attending law school at Duke University. She was removed from the situation, and felt helpless because of it.

Tom, 19, lives at home and attends the University of Maryland. He says his mother's cancer hasn't affected him much. His sisters say he tried to be nicer and stay out of his mother's way during her treatment, but his good behavior eventually faded. He's as rebellious as ever, all the family members say.

Cancer did not turn the Gimers into the Waltons. They never were one big happy family and they're not now. Instead, Milly's illness seemed to bring family problems into sharper focus.

"I love my parents a lot," said Melissa. "But I still think that my mom has a temper and that my dad doesn't spend enough time with us. (Cancer) hasn't changed a thing."

Dick, 50, still spent 12 hours a day at the office and rarely accompanied Milly to her chemotherapy treatments.

"Every time I had chemotherapy, it seemed he had a meeting in Chicago," said Milly. "He had just gotten on the management committee, a position for which he had worked very long and very hard, and I was willing to go through chemotherapy alone. I could've said you must be there, but that's just not the relationship I have with him anyway."

Indeed, Dick's job has always been his top priority, according to his wife.

"He's always put his career and his things first. Even the kids felt the important thing wasn't their mother; it was the job. But I let him do it. There was a trade-off — I had nice things; I do what I want to do."

MELISSA TOOK her mother to the Lombardi Cancer Center at Georgetown University Hospital for treatment.

"I knew that it was going to be my responsibility to go to chemotherapy with her," she said. "They've spent the bulk of their marriage being so independent of each other. They've been together but separate always."

Jennifer said her father's behavior was typical for him. He was always a workaholic and even cancer in the family couldn't kill the work ethic.

"He wasn't at the hospital when I was born," she said. "It's just him, and my mom knows that about him."

Sitting amidst neat piles of papers that line his office carpet, Dick says his coping strategy was to cling to routine, to find solace where he always did — in his work.

"Work is my anchor," he said. "I tried to keep as much of my work as normal as it could be because then I wouldn't have that anxiety." He believed the rest of the family would find it as reassuring.

"I wanted to be optimistic and therefore I thought the role I should play was to just be dependable, keep the ship straight and have as much of life as routinely recognizable as the past," said Dick.

While her husband tried to stay in his groove, Milly decided to do things differently. When her hair fell out from the chemotherapy treatment, she wore a wig or a turban to bed. Dick can't remember ever having seen her bare scalp.

She began to dress in the closet, self-conscious about her scarred sexuality. Dick says they did not talk about it much, they just stayed on their own sides of the bed at night.

"I did feel less desirable after having surgery," said Milly. "I'm not as open in things I wear around the house. None of us ever walked around naked, but I certainly didn't dress in the closet like I sometimes do now. It bothers me what my husband might think."

AND DICK WAS worried about what she was thinking.

"I think that she probably was thinking that I should have made an issue of it (the scar) and insisted on seeing it and saying something to console her," he said. "From my standpoint, I was thinking, 'Hey, she's self-conscious about this and embarrassed and uncomfortable, so I'm not going to mess with her about it, just let her handle it in her own way.'"

"I think he/she thought that I thought" is a common phrase when Milly and Dick discuss their personal relationship. It's a memorable event when Gimer family members actually say what's on their minds:

"She eventually let me know that she thought that I was staying away from her because of (pause) This," said Dick. "I was happy to have her say that because that's obviously what she was thinking. But in my mind I said that's not true."

Otherwise, the Gimers' intimacy matched that of the pre-cancer days, according to Dick.

"I was basically letting her decide what our existence was going to be like. And it's not terribly different from the way it's always been. We basically went to bed and slept on our sides of the bed."

In fact, Dick thinks Milly blames their tepid sex life for the late detection of her tumor.

"I think Milly thinks if we had had any sex life to speak of, this would've been noticed," he said.

On the other hand, Dick tends to blame Milly for the late detection on the basis that she had undergone a mammogram in 1987 and, at the time, thought her doctor had botched the job.

Finger-pointing — a family characteristic, according to Dick — was not erased by cancer.

THE GIMERS have not experienced cancer's ability to sometimes make families forget past differences in the face of impending death. "I thought cancer would be a great leveler — that suddenly everyone would rally to their poor sick mother and everyone would be nice," said Milly. "Everyone is still pretty independent, selfish, doing their own thing."

"We're trying to be nicer to each other," Dick said. "That's not every day. That doesn't mean that we've converted to sweetness and light. No. In many respects we deal with each other just like we always have."

Jennifer said she heard from a friend that her parents were acting like newlyweds shortly after the surgery.

"That would've been a sight to see," she said. "I think that's for a large part gone now."

Tom had little to say about the family's experience with cancer except that they still fight, he still gets grounded, and that his mother will be OK because "I've had a lot of big-time accidents and I've been OK. So, I figured she'd be OK."

Milly says her suffering may have made her a better person.

"I feel I'm not as critical, I'm more appreciative and just more thoughtful," she said. "Things don't bother me anymore. They're just not that important."

Life with cancer was at first like a "really bad movie," Melissa said. "I didn't think I would ever get out of it. There will never again be the same blissfully ignorant feeling that things are always just going to kind of be there."

ALTHOUGH MOST of the family doesn't think about cancer around the clock, Milly says it's always in the back of her mind.

"The thing that's there isn't that I have cancer, it's things like we just have a new puppy that we got for my husband's birthday, and it's going to replace the dog that we had and ran with ... And I think this puppy may be around after I'm not," she said, beginning to cry. "I want to be around when my daughters get married, and I want to see grandchildren. And I never thought that I'd ever, ever have to worry about that kind of thing.

"Or I was in the middle of redecorating and I said, 'Why bother?' Then I broke a tooth. This is even sillier. I thought, well should I go have my tooth fixed? Why bother? When you know the future is tenuous you just don't plan for it as much. Or the plans that you do make, you're thinking, will I be around to enjoy that?"

Dick thinks that's nonsense.

"When she puts that 'this may be the last season in the pool' slant on things, I treat that talk as being inappropriate," he said.

But eventually there may just be a last season in the Gimers' new backyard pool.

"My percentages are not the greatest," Milly said. "They tell me I have a 60 percent chance of recurrence in five years. I tell myself — sometimes 50 times a day — that I'm going to be all right."

"I've done what reading I can, I've made changes in my life" — better diet, cutting stress, drinking less, trying to laugh more, thinking positively. "At this point I'm just playing a waiting game. That can go on forever, there are people who recur after 18 years. And I hope if I do, that will be the time that I do it."

It's here that Dick realizes he may not be as sure or as strong as he wants to be.

"I'm committed in my mind that she's going to be all right," he said haltingly as tears slowly slid down his cheeks.

"The problem is that even though you tell yourself that things will be all right, you know that you don't have any control over them and that you could be just kidding yourself.

"I'm dealing with this whole thing as though it's going to come out all right. But what if we're on the wrong side of the statistics?

"I'll feel unforgivable if it doesn't (come out all right)," he said. "I would feel I've made all the wrong decisions."

Pancreatic cancer is among deadliest of all

By Faith Keenan
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

BOSTON — In an era when medicine can cure many cancers and dramatically increase the survival rates for others, there's still one form of cancer that confounds physicians and is nearly always deadly within months of diagnosis: cancer of the pancreas.

"It's a devastating disease, one of the very worst," said Dr. John Mendelsohn, chairman of the department of medicine at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York.

Cancer of the pancreas is the second most deadly cancer, behind a form of brain cancer — glioblastoma multiform — that is nearly 100 percent lethal. Many patients with pancreatic cancer will confront almost certain death within months of diagnosis.

That's why Dr. Robert Mayer, a specialist in gastro-intestinal cancers at the Dana-Farber Medical Center in Boston, advises patients to strongly consider whether they want to spend their final days undergoing virtually hopeless treatment or doing what they've always dreamed of doing.

"If someone has always wanted to see the pyramids along the Nile, I suggest it's time," said Mayer, also a professor of medicine at Harvard Medical School.

The dismal survival rates for this cancer suggest Mayer's advice may be the most realistic a physician can offer. Only 3 percent of the estimated 27,000 people who develop localized cancer of the pancreas every year can expect to live more than three years, according to statistics from the National Cancer Institute's Surveillance and Operations Research Branch. That's compared to 53 percent of patients with colo-rectal cancer or 66 percent of those with uterine/cervical cancer at all stages.

But even for localized pancreatic cancer, the rate only inches up to 7 percent. The rates for localized colo-rectal and uterine/cervical cancer jump to 84 and 88 percent respectively.

"You don't want to see this in your life," said Dr. Naguib Samaan, professor of medicine and chief of endocrinology at the University of Texas/M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston. "It progresses quickly and you die quickly."

The risk of developing pancreatic cancer increases with age, and the highest incidence occurs between the ages of 65 and 79. Smoking may contribute to its development. Although several members of former President Jimmy Carter's family have developed the disease, physicians say it is rarely hereditary.

The pancreas is a carrot-shaped organ located behind the abdomen that secretes enzymes used in digestion. Other cells in the gland produce insulin, a hormone that helps the body process sugar.

Late diagnosis is the fundamental reason pancreatic cancer is so deadly. Symptoms such as pain and weight loss don't appear until late in the disease's development and are often so vague that they don't immediately pinpoint their source.

"There is no good test to point to the pancreas," said Mayer. "Blood studies are often normal, and fancy scans don't show anything because the cancer can be relatively small — the size of a plum pit."

Until the 1960s, physicians often misdiagnosed pancreatic cancer as mental depression. Unable to detect a physiologic reason for a patient's weight loss and pain, physicians would recommend they see a psychiatrist.

Today, a biopsy is the only sure way to detect a malignancy. But sometimes even that fails, said Mayer, because the procedure withdraws non-malignant "irritation cells" that surround the cancer, not cancer cells.

By the time the disease is detected, it is often too late. More than 90 percent of cases of pancreatic cancer occur in the head of the pancreas, close to the center of the body, where major organs such as the liver and stomach and major arteries converge. As the cancer grows, it spreads quickly to these organs and wraps around the nearby arteries, making surgery impossible, said Dr. David Kelsen, chief of the gastrointestinal service at New York's Sloan-Kettering. Patients also may be too old or too weak from weight loss to withstand surgery.

"You can sacrifice parts of the stomach, the pancreas, the liver and the bowel, but you can't sacrifice crucial arteries," he said. At that stage, average survival time is less than six months.

Surgery, however, is possible for the small percentage of patients who develop cancer at the other end of the organ, in the eyelet cells that make insulin.

STEPPING INTO A NEW FAMILY

'Becoming a father is easy enough,
But being one can be rough.'

—Wilhelm Busch
from "Julchen," 1877

Approximately 7 million Americans plan on giving their dads and granddads ties for Father's Day today, according to an independent survey by The Dallas Menswear Mart, but these ties will be worn around dad's neck, not in his heart.

But Midlander Kurt Shedeck is a father who has received a different type of tie, a family tie between him and his new wife and her sons. It is a tie he has worked for and loves. On Valentine's Day, Shedeck and his wife, Susan, were married and he became the stepfather of two young boys — Joey Lindquist, 12, and Bryan Lindquist, 4 — a ready-made family.

Although Shedeck has been a father before — he has two daughters, Patricia Lee, a recent salutatorian graduate of Rankin High School, and Claire Shedeck, 13, of Rankin, from his first marriage — he admits there is a difference in rearing girls and rearing boys. "Daughters are a lot easier," he said.

The role of stepfather — or stepmother for that matter — is a role that many more parents are experiencing every year. In fact, by the year 2000, it is estimated that 65 percent of American families will be blended families. Yet little attention is being given to the difficulty these stepparents face as they enter into a new family relationship.

"Unfortunately, the role of the wicked stepmother, or stepparent, is more commonly associated, making the task even more difficult for these new parents," said Tom Vermillion, director of counseling and minister of singles for Golf Course Road Church of Christ.

Under "normal" circumstances, when a man becomes a father, he has a certain amount of built-in adjustment time, Vermillion said. "First he is married and the couple has a while to adjust to each other. Then he finds out he is going to be a father and has several months to get used to the idea. Once the baby arrives, the parents perform general maintenance for the first six months or so. You can keep the baby corralled," he said. This allows parents more time to adjust to being parents, to gradually grow into their responsibilities.

However, Vermillion said, "A man who marries a women who already has children walks into a situation that may carry a lot of baggage from former relationships that he had nothing to do with, and he must deal with it all.

"It takes a very special person to chose to take that on, to be willing to take that responsibility," Vermillion said, adding that the same difficulties are incurred by women who marry men who have custodial care of their children, although that situation is not as common.

The Shedecks have not encountered many of the problems that stepfamilies often must deal with, primarily due to steps taking before the couple was married.

"We had a lot of rocks before we got married," Shedeck said. But those rocks were really stepping stones to the family ties they now share. Before the Shedecks were married, "we spent a lot of time in learning what our situation would be," Shedeck said.

Premarital counseling is a must in Shedeck's book for any couple getting married.

"We worked with Gary Grady, he's the family minister (at Golf Course Road Church of Christ). We used a workbook called 'Strengthening Your Stepfamily' to go through the steps," Shedeck said. "We have a dedicated prayer life and we both wanted to make our family happy. Premarital counseling was our number one goal. We know in order for our children to be functional, we must have a happy marriage."

For couples who don't want to have premarital counseling, Shedeck strongly recommended them reading "Love for a Lifetime" by James Dobson as an alternative.

The main function of premarital counseling is to help the family communicate. Communication is the key that makes the family tie work.

"Disagreements are OK as long as you know how to communicate and resolve them," Shedeck said.

Communication also helps avoid disillusionment, Vermillion said. "Many couples have very high expectations. They go into a blended family believing it can be like a biological family, but with older children this is very difficult. The man may want to love the children like his own, but they're not his own. The love he feels for them must be a different love and he must realize it will be different. He can't expect the child to come jump in his lap."

Vermillion said couples entering a blended family relationship also must communicate and work together to discipline the children.

"Sometimes the man may think that the children are not properly disciplined, that their mother is too easy on them and he is going to move in and shape everyone up," Vermillion said. "But the kids don't feel he has the right. There is something built-in that makes us think only flesh and blood has the inherent right. But, at least initially, the children will really balk at the stepfather disciplining them, particularly if it's physical discipline.

"A guy must be very sensitive and patient, and he must be a good communicator. He must love them (the children) before disciplining them," Vermillion said.

During their premarital counseling, the Shedecks agreed that the boys' mother would be the primary disciplinarian in the house, but that the boys would know Shedeck back her decisions 100 percent.

"The boys know I'm behind her," Shedeck said. "Every family must have a a balance between discipline and happiness.

In stepfamilies, discipline must be done mainly by the biological parent. But I impress on them that they must obey their mother. I've told them that the way they treat their mother is one step toward the respect they will show their wives," he said.

"Sometimes I'm challenged, but I try to leave the discipline to Susan. If she has a problem, I'm

STEPFATHER: Communication is key to family ties

there to help out."

Before getting married to marry, Shedeck and Vermillion both recommend keeping the children very informed on what is happening and allowing the children the time they need to adjust to the changes in their lives.

"Dating a long time is a good idea, to give the kids time to become comfortable with the situation," Vermillion said. "Be good with the kids, be there for them, but don't try to buy them or try to win their love.

"Kids may need more time (to accept the new relationship) even though the adult is OK," Vermillion said. "Kids are dealing with a lot of emotions. 'If we like the new guy, are we being disloyal to their biological parent? Is the new guy trying to replace their biological parent? If mom marries this guy, then there's no chance that mom and dad will get back together.' Kids can undermine a relationship if they are not kept informed."

VERMILLION SAID children often have difficulties accepting a stepparent after the death of a parent as well. "They often tend to immortalize the parent who has died, to idealize the relationship, remembering only the good things and the good times. This makes it even more difficult for someone else to be in a parenting position because they can never be as good as the memory the child has," Vermillion said. "If there was hurt or anger before the death, there can be a great deal of guilt involved."

"We asked the boys how they would feel about it (the marriage) before we were married," Shedeck said. "You have to give them plenty of space. You don't want to force anything. We all have walls that must be slowly melted down."

Before the couple was married, Shedeck said he and boys "formed a strong friendship. The friendship factor is the main factor. I told them I'm not trying to replace their dad."

"A lot of what happens (when there is trouble in the stepfamily) is that the new relationship is just too soon (after the divorce or death). There has not been enough time for grief. Often, someone is trying to fix the grief instead of working through it," Vermillion said.

Although there is no set time frame as to how long a person should wait before beginning a new relationship, there is a way to help the process along. "It's not so much how long, the key is what you're doing with the time," Vermillion said.

IF THE TIME is spent communicating and understanding why the relationship didn't work, or working through the grief of a lost spouse and parent, then a family might be ready for a new relationship inside two years, Vermillion said. "If there is no work being done, it could be five years, it could be never. ... Time alone does not heal everything."

According to Vermillion, when children are trying to make the transition into a stepfamily, the best thing that can happen is for the children's father to give his permission for the kids to love the stepparent. "That way the kids don't feel disloyal, or like their feelings for the new person are wrong," Vermillion said. He added that when an ex-spouse slowly leaves the relationship, it makes it easier for the kids to love the stepparent.

"The non-custodial parent often feels threatened and will voice their opinions to the children," Vermillion said, making a new relationship with the stepparent very difficult.

The Shedecks' toughest times have been when Bryan has been unable to see his biological father when a visit is normally scheduled. "The boys like seeing their dad, but if something comes up and Bryan doesn't get to see his dad when he is suppose to, he gets real hard to handle. ...Bryan keeps a lot of things inside, we realize that. He just hasn't been able to talk about some things," Shedeck said.

ALTHOUGH THE road to successful family ties in a stepfamily is not an easy one, Vermillion said there is a positive side. "These couples go into the relationship with the positive hope thinking 'we can move in and make this family the family we never had; we can make this work. We can make a stable environment. We can try to be understanding and loving.' But you have to work at making it work," Vermillion said. " 'The Brady Bunch' is not a reality."

"I'm proud of my family. We have our ups and downs, but so does any other family. I'm really proud."

For those who may be in the situation of becoming or are a stepparent, Vermillion suggests the following books and booklets:

- "The Stepfamily — Living, Loving and Learning" by Elizabeth Einstein.
- "Successful Step-parenting — Loving and Understanding Step Children" by David J. Juroe and Bonnie B. Junoe.

Dad-oriented videos abound

By Max McQueen
N.Y. Times News Service

Father's Day is a perfect opportunity to buy a video that might mean something extra special to dear ol' dad.

Many a specialty video is designed with fathers in mind — not because video distributors are especially sensitive to paternal needs, but because the vast majority of video equipment buyers are 30 to 50 years old. And they just can't get enough tapes for their entertainment centers.

For instance, who in the world do you think would want "Baseball's Greatest Hits," a video collection of baseball songs? Not any woman or child I know. But middle-aged male baseball lovers would go crazy over this cute compilation of musical tributes to the national pastime.

It's got the Les Brown orchestra and vocalist Betty Bonney singing Joe DiMaggio's praises on "Joltin' Joe DiMaggio," a 1941 Top 40 hit. It has Mickey Mantle crooning with Teresa Brewer on "I Love Mickey."

But the most fascinating title is "Van Lingle Mungo," a jazz-tinged tune that be-bops through the names of dozens of baseball greats. At $14.95 (on Rhino), "Baseball's Greatest Hits" is priced right and will surely rate a grand slam with baseball-loving dads.

For golfing dads, Vestron Video has four Arnold Palmer tapes, "Course Strategy," "Mastering the Fundamentals," "Practice Like a Pro" and "The Scoring Zone." Each is an hour long and costs $39.98.

Also on Vestron are two Jimmy Connor tennis videos: "Match Strategy" and "Winning Fundamentals." An hour each, they sell for $39.98 per tape. Last but not least from Vestron are three fishing tapes by Joe Humphreys. "Dry Fly Strategy," "The Fundamentals" and "Nymphing Strategy" cover fishing from A to Z. They are 60 minutes each and priced at $29.98.

HBO has six boxing titles under the banner of "Boxing's Best." They vary widely in watchability, ranging from a puff piece called "Ringside With Mike Tyson" to the relatively in-depth "Rocky Marciano." They are $19.95 each.

As a non-boxing fan, I appreciated the Marciano story the most, as I felt I got to know the deceased heavyweight champion as a person, more so than as a boxer. The same goes for "Joe Louis." Helping get an overall look at Louis and Marciano's lives are interviews with family, friends and colleagues.

Plenty of tapes are available for those fathers who are war buffs.

RCA/Columbia has just released Frank Capra's acclaimed World War II series: "The War Years." The titles for these hourlong $19.95 tapes are: "Attack! The Battle for New Britain," "Here Is Germany," "Know Your Ally — Britain, Know Your Enemy — Japan," "The Negro Soldier," "Tunisian Victory Parts I and II" and "Two Down — One to Go."

Frank Capra Jr., hosts these documentaries made by his dad for the Army. Gen. George Marshall narrates. Believe it or not, they were written by Ted Geisel, otherwise known Dr. Seuss.

Vidmark adds two more tapes to its "Great Air Battles" series. "The Flying Marines" looks at the contributions the Marine Corps Flying Forces made to World War II. "Target Air Strikes" captures decisive World War II air battles. Each costs $14.98.

Message to deadbeat dads: Do your duty and pay up!

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: After last Father's Day, I ran a letter from Dennis Cohen, who founded the Center for Enforcement of Family Support. It prompted such an impressive response that I'm running it again:

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am writing on behalf of a large group of children who had no father to honor on Father's Day. Their fathers are not dead; they are "deadbeats" who make up the 2 million absent parents nationwide (95 percent of whom are fathers) who don't pay their child support.

The following statistics are appalling, and reflect a social problem that has reached crisis proportions:

Fifty percent of fathers do not pay their child support — leaving $3.7 billion unpaid each year. If the trend continues, over one out of four children born today will be a welfare recipient at some time before they reach the age of 18.

Affluent fathers are just as likely not to pay their court-ordered support as fathers earning less than $10,000 a year.

As an attorney and founder of the Center for Enforcement of Family Support, I've seen the effect that non-payment has had on children.

On this Father's Day, I believe it is important to send a message to those absent fathers — a message that can best be given in the words of the real victim: the child. Thus, I enclose a letter that I hope you will print. It could change a life. — DENNIS A. COHEN, CENTER FOR ENFORCEMENT OF FAMILY SUPPORT, 6404 WILSHIRE BLVD., SUITE 500, LOS ANGELES, CALIF. 90048.

P.S. For information, please send a business-size, self-addressed, stamped envelope.

The child's letter:

DEAR DAD: I wanted to give you a card today, but I know I won't see you, and I'm not even sure where to send it. Besides, I'm really mad. How could you just go away and forget me? Is there something wrong with me? Don't you love me?

Maybe you don't know how it feels. Let me tell you. It hurts. It hurts when months go by and we don't hear from you, and you don't do what you're supposed to do to help out.

I hate feeling different from other kids and having to wear old clothes that don't fit and look funny. I feel guilty because Mom works so hard, and I know that if she didn't we'd be on welfare. Why don't you help? Don't you work? Are you broke?

You know what, Dad? My teacher says it's against the law not to take care of your kids. She says that thousands of parents are breaking that law and nothing happens to them. It makes me feel like, if you don't obey the law, why should I?

I'm sure it's hard for you too, Dad. Mom gets so mad at you. She really let you have it the last time you guys talked. I get mad too, especially when I don't hear from you. You're still my dad and I love you, but I want to be able to look up to you. I want a dad who loves me and shows it. Please don't forget me. Please be my daddy again, so that next year I can say Happy Father's Day in person and really mean it. — YOUR FORGOTTEN SON

AT WIT'S END

Making a baby is not raising a child

By Erma Bombeck

Making a baby is one of the greatest non-skilled acts in the world. It requires virtually no experience, no talent and no expertise. People who can't type, use chopsticks, throw a Frisbee straight, work a VCR or hold down a job can make a baby.

Bombeck

I've often thought that before a couple contemplates producing an offspring, they be required to exchange vows like the ones in a marriage ceremony — just to give them some guidelines.

Since it's Father's Day, these would be good promises for prospective dads. If you agree, answer, "I will."

Will you take this child to the bathroom when your basketball team is tied in the championship game with 40 seconds left on the clock?

Will you restrain your temper when your child goes to a restaurant and orders an $8 hamburger plate and eats only the pickle?

Will you gladly spring for a pair of $60 tennis shoes that he will wear only when his feet are on the furniture?

Will you abort a planned getaway weekend to watch your daughter break out in measles?

Will you drive your old car for another five years so you can afford to have your son's teeth straightened?

Will you travel 300 miles to deliver your daughter to college for the sole purpose of carrying her footlocker up to the third floor?

Are you willing to be awakened from a sound sleep at 3 in the morning to pick up your son who ran out of gas?

If the marriage fails, do you promise to assume emotional and financial responsibilities for the children, who had nothing whatsoever to do with a faulty marriage?

Will your daughter still be "Daddy's little girl" when she chooses a Moroccan caterer for her wedding reception at $150 a head?

Do you promise to have the courage to challenge your children when they are wrong, praise them when they're right, and love them no matter what?

Will you love them through loans and love affairs, failures and triumphs, for the rest of your life?

Most couples don't get beyond the counting of those precious little fingers and toes in the nursery and haven't the foggiest idea what is meant by all that bonding/nurturing/quality-time rhetoric.

For those today who have done it well — happy Father's Day.

Crayolas go brighter, bolder

By Carol Lawson
N.Y. Times News Service

The children of America have spoken. And the people who manufacture Crayola crayons have been listening.

As the Crayola people tell it, youngsters find their crayons less than exciting these days. They are pointing their little fingers at the colors, saying they have become, well, dull.

And so, for the first time since 1972, Crayola is renovating its line. The company is dropping eight colors and introducing eight new ones. The corporate hope is that hues like cerulean and vivid tangerine will succeed where maize and raw umber have failed.

"Kids want brighter and bolder colors in their crayon box," said Brad Drexler, a spokesman for Binney & Smith, the Easton, Pa., company that makes Crayola crayons. "The new colors are much more vibrant than the old colors."

Crayola hopes this vibrancy will brighten company profits. Crayon-making is what Wall Street analysts would call a mature industry, for it is not growing.

According to Drexler, Crayola's sales have remained steady at two billion crayons a year for the last two decades. The Crayola brand accounts for 80 percent of the crayons sold in the United States.

"We hope the color decision will create some excitement for our sales," Drexler said.

The colors that are about to disappear from what Crayola calls its company palette are maize, raw umber, lemon yellow, blue gray, violet blue, green blue, orange red and orange yellow. They will be replaced by cerulean, dandelion, wild strawberry, vivid tangerine, fuchsia, teal blue, royal purple and jungle green.

TRAVEL

Exotic, mysterious East becomes vacation spot

By Evelyn Kieran
Copley News Service

The mystery of the lands and people who inhabit the far side of the Pacific has always been a magnet for those who dwell on its eastern shores. That mystery has faded considerably since the days of the first explorers, the colonial rulers and the writers who told us tales of fabulous riches, sloe-eyed beauties and exotic customs.

We know now that we have much in common with these lands and people. Waves of immigrants have familiarized us with the looks, the religions, the philosophies, the foods and the customs of the East. But there are still intriguing differences, and it is to discover those differences that we travel.

Thailand started the programs to encourage Americans to visit Southeast Asia with its "Visit Thailand" plan in 1989. The charms of such unusual events as the annual elephant roundup, the festivals in the hill towns of the north and the beauties of the ancient temples along the rivers were well-publicized and continue to draw visitors anxious to see the "real" Thailand, far from the nightmare traffic of the capital city, Bangkok.

1990 IS the year to "Visit Malaysia." There is a concerted effort to draw visitors to that lush country, which drops off the southern tip of Thailand, looks across the Strait of Malacca to Indonesia, blunt ends at the bridge to Singapore then leaps across the China Sea to Borneo to encompass the provinces of Sarawak and Sabah.

It is an amazing land, offering miles of beaches beautiful beyond belief; mountains that challenge the experts (Mount Kinabalu in Sabah is the highest peak in Southeast Asia); a capital city, Kuala Lumpur, that is architecturally one of the most satisfying in the world; and jungles still filled with the cry of gibbons.

The legacy of colonial conquerors is still evident in the Dutch-style brick buildings of the city of Malacca, a port that caught the best of both winds in the early days of the China trade and a strange language called Cristao, a medieval dialect once spoken in southeast Portugal.

The fading glory of the very British E&O Hotel in Penangjung lures you to stop and sip a very British gin and tonic. The gracious colonial villas, great white frame buildings edged in cast-iron lace, along the edge of the sea are now mostly restored as offices, central air conditioning replacing pukkah fans.

The two mansions of Sir Frank Sweetenhamn, Britain's resident administrator in Kuala Lumpur at the turn of the century, have become one of the most luxurious hotels in the Orient, the Carcosa Seri Negara — a place to lose yourself in sybaritic dreams.

YOU CAN watch Wayang Kulit, the ancient shadow puppet dances, in many places: traditional puppet theaters, hotel dining rooms and modern nightclubs. And you can buy the puppets in all shapes and sizes in dozens of souvenir stands in the open markets.

You can enjoy traditional Malay dishes — satay and nasi padang —

CNS Graphic

and your choice of some of the most exotic fruits in the world everywhere from street stalls to fine hotel dining rooms.

And everywhere you go, you will find the people warm, friendly and eager to make your acquaintance and show you the beauties of their country.

Like its neighbor across the Strait of Malacca, Indonesia is a kaleidoscope of natural and ethnic diversity — so many pieces in so many colors and shapes, you could spend a lifetime exploring and enjoying its endlessly changing patterns.

Sprawling in a great arc across the southern rim of the continental shelf, it is a nation intent on making harmony of its 300 languages, more than 100 ethnic groups, three major religions and a heritage as diverse as its people.

Indonesian tourist authorities have declared 1991 as "Visit Indonesia" year and have planned a range of activities for tourists based around festivals in Jakarta, Yogyakarta, Solo, Borobudur, all on Java, and Nusa Dua in Bali.

Other events include an international yacht race starting in Darwin, Australia, and ending in Ambon; a kite festival in Jatiluhur, West Java; canoe races in North Sumatra; and traditional ceremonies to mark the founding of the town of Tenggarong in remote East Kalimantan.

THE SHORES of Lake Toba, high in North Sumatra, will be the scene of cultural and sporting events while the Bay of Manado in North Sulawesi will host similar activities.

Tourists may plan to visit a midnight religious ceremony on the crater of an East Java volcano, traditional jousting on the island of Sumba, bull races at Madura in East Java and celebrations to mark the Balinese new year in March.

For those more adventurous in spirit, descriptions of exploring the wild places of Indonesia in "Islands of Fire, Islands of Spice," a Sierra Club book by Richard Bangs and Christian Kallen, are the stuff of dreams. The two explorers have led, and continue to lead, trips that delve deep into the heart of the magical wilderness areas.

Indonesia is home to the greatest concentration and variety of wildlife in Asia and to approximately 10 percent of all the plants and trees in the world, according to the authors.

"In these islands of diversity, the extremes are stupefying, from miasmic lowlands swamps, where even the gnarled wood is the color of rust, to glaciated ranges, where pyramid peaks pierce the obscuring clouds and allow the sun's rays to reveal dark, steamily oppressive and luxuriant forests that seem to pant for release."

The authors divided the island nation and each explored half, reporting on their adventures in a style you'll never find in any guidebook and whetting the appetite of any traveler who seeks the wisdom found in wilderness.

SEVERAL CRUISE lines have also discovered the lure of the lands and islands of Southeast Asia and have planned itineraries to bring travelers to Malaysia, Indonesia, parts of Thailand and some of the remoter island groups in varying degrees of comfort and luxury.

Days are spent ashore, visiting the obvious attractions, receiving a sampling of life and custom and sometimes exploring. The islands offer magnificent diving and snorkeling opportunities, and short treks and easy hikes are often included in the varied programs.

Many of the ships bring along experts in the natural sciences to acquaint and explain the beauties that abound.

Adventures packaged as family vacations

Associated Press

Even adventure comes packaged these days.

There are packages for traveling in relatively uncharted territory in South Africa, including one 17-day tour that crosses the world's oldest desert for sightings of rare desert elephants or 5,000-year-old rock engravings before moving into Bushmanland to make contact with some of the remaining "little people." Travel is by all-terrain vehicles carrying supplies and camping equipment, according to the South African Tourism Board. Other trips include a photo tour of little-visited areas in the northern area of Kruger National Park, known for its elephant herds, or ranger-led trail walks in the park lasting three or four days.

Tanzania and Kenya expeditions are offered by the Los Angeles-based Tusker Trail & Safari Co. Travel is by four-wheel-drive vehicles and most accommodation is under tent canvas, though the Kenya safari, climbing through the foothills of Mount Kenya, stops at the Mount Kenya Safari Club. The Tanzania trip includes exploration of the Serengeti wildlife reserve and the Tarangire National Park.

An outfit called Idaho Afloat takes the rough edge off river journeys and camping along the Snake River. "Many people were put off by the idea of camping trips, as they were viewed as experiences on which one has to rough it," says Scott Fasken, owner-operator of the tour service. His 22-foot cargo raft comes equipped with kitchen and gear for deluxe camping along the way, including tables, chairs and large guest tents. Fasken adds that his guides take special care to teach children about the wildlife and history of Hell's Canyon and lead them on hikes to explore archaeological remains, Indian burial sites and abandoned homesteads. Meanwhile, parents can divert themselves with hiking, swimming, photography or whatever else they choose. Idaho Afloat is based in Grangeville, Idaho.

Rafting the Katun River in Siberia for two weeks and camping out in a wilderness encompassing glacial valleys, steep gorges and forested canyons is possible through a tour organized by Prescott Mallory Howe of Huntington, N.Y. Participants, who must be in good physical shape and able to swim, will learn rafting skills and meet the people of some remote Siberian villages, some of whom have never seen Americans before. The trips are arranged under a Soviet-American exchange program called Project RAFT.

Hong Kong is place where East, West meet

By Philip Sousa
Copley News Service

HONG KONG — The ornate Wong Tai Sin Temple struck me as an unusual setting for a chat on politics. But then surprises and contrast greet visitors at every turn here.

For example, a man's best friend is not a dog but a prized songbird; real dumplings and mythological dragons are revered with equal zest; the Western District is 100 percent Chinese; many a Wan bears "Henry" as his first name, while a lovely Chiang goes by Lillian; and most of the locally born business upstarts speak English with accents picked up while doing graduate work at Oxford, the University of California at Los Angeles or Harvard.

Considering those and other twists noted during frequent visits over the years, I was taken aback but not shocked recently when a university student asked my political views as I took pictures in the open-air prayer terrace of one of Hong Kong's busiest Buddhist shrines.

"What do you think will happen to us after '97?" asked Henry Wan, 21. "How do you see what's about to take place here?"

POINTING AROUND us to the red-pillared structures with their golden roofs, I told him I was just touring after a year's absence and far from able to answer his question.

"Even if you had been here six months ago," he said, "you'll find that much has changed — and I don't mean new buildings."

Lifting my eyebrows in question, I encouraged him to go on.

"Scratch the surface," Wan said with a weary smile, "and you will find that most of us fear our lives will not be the same after '97, maybe even earlier."

His was a cry of anguish, frustration and disappointment I was to hear often, primarily from young men and women, during my latest visit to this bastion of Western capitalism at the door of a giant communist dragon.

I had been at the Wong Tai Sin Temple briefly a couple of days earlier in the company of an official guide. But I had returned because I wanted a longer and better look.

Surrounded by a huge housing complex in Kowloon, across the harbor from Hong Kong Island, Wong Tai Sin is relatively new, but it is an excellent example of a traditional Chinese temple.

It overlooks a row of fortune-tellers and scores of stalls selling joss sticks, paper money and other religious offerings. Believers, especially those seeking horse-racing tips and cures from illnesses, throng the place throughout the day. It is a great spot for watching and meeting locals.

Most of the faithful were there to consult with the fortunetellers or to pray.

Subconsciously, I might have gone there to "scratch the surface," as Wan had suggested.

AS THE ongoing events in Eastern Europe have shown, major political and social shifts seldom arrive according to an agreed-upon schedule.

But they do here.

On July 1, 1997, under an agreement between Britain and the People's Republic of China, this jewel among the great British colonies will revert to Chinese rule.

Unlike their East European counterparts, though, the nearly 6 million people of Hong Kong — 98 percent of whom are Chinese — had no voice in the matter. Beijing and London made the decision for them.

While the Chinese government has said it will allow the colony to retain its capitalist system for 50 more years, few in Hong Kong dare predict what the fateful year 1997 will usher in.

Adding to the concern of the colony's mostly democratic-minded residents, the new "Basic Law" or constitution approved by China in early April gives Beijing final power to interpret such clauses as those banning subversion and allows it to station troops here after it assumes control of the territory.

Wan said that what he and most of his young friends most fear is an encore of Chinese authorities' violent response to last spring's pro-democracy demonstrations in Beijing's Tiananmen Square.

"The freedoms we got from the British are very much at stake," he said.

The name of the colony, which seven years from now is to become one of China's so-called "special administrative regions," likely will change, at least officially, from Hong Kong to Xianggang. Beyond this, only open questions surround the transfer of rule to Beijing.

MEANWHILE, THIS economic powerhouse remains one of the most exotic and fascinating destinations on Earth to most Westerners.

Getting around is easy.

This is a compact place. It is made up of 236 islands, the Kowloon Peninsula and a sliver of land on China's mainland known as the New Territories. But it covers only 413 mostly mountainous square miles. Furthermore, there is a seemingly bottomless list of organized sightseeing tours. Those wishing to venture off on their own can use the excellent and very reasonable public transit system that includes traditional breeze-cooled, double-decked street trams and a state-of-the-art air-conditioned subway.

What most visitors find lacking here is time for all there is to see and do.

I've found that a week is hardly enough, especially if you want to take a look at the peaceful countryside of the New Territories or the equally attractive and uncrowded outlying islands.

I only had time for Hong Kong Island — the colony's government and financial center — and a brief spell in Kowloon — the shopping, hotel and entertainment mecca. Exploring the two areas, I encountered both cherished old staples and impressive new sights.

Staple: The least expensive and probably most fabulous water ride anywhere — the 10-minute Star Ferry run between Hong Kong Island's Central district and the Tsim Sha Tsui quarter at the tip of Kowloon — was still mine to enjoy for less than a dime.

CNS Photo

THE SHORT journey across Victoria Harbour unveils a kaleidoscope of wondrous sights: On one side, the skyscraper-studded north shore of Hong Kong Island backdropped by 1,662-foot Victoria Peak and the jagged green hills around it; across the dark jade waters, Kowloon's maze of giant neon signs and its own share of contemporary structures seemingly running all the way to the mountains near the Chinese border. And between and around the two ferryboat terminals, the largest and most diverse gathering of freighters, visiting warships, fishing junks, yachts, hydrofoils and other craft.

New: From one of the green-and-white ferryboats approaching Kowloon, the view of one of my all-time favorite hotels, the legendary Peninsula, was partly blocked by a contemporary newcomer. The intruder, its soaring roof lines and waterfront location reminiscent of Sydney's Opera House, was the otherwise splendid Hong Kong Cultural Centre, opened by the Prince and Princess of Wales last November.

Staple: Aberdeen, a typhoon shelter on the south shore of Hong Kong Island about 20 minutes by bus from Central, has become more residential in recent years. But its reputation as a major boat-building port and home to thousands of local fishermen who live on their boats remains as undiminished as its bustle and character. The Jumbo and the Tai Pak, two large and ornate floating restaurants, still pack in locals and tourists as they have for ages.

New: Next to the 180-acre Ocean Park, a marineland and amusement park that is Asia's largest, the recently opened Middle Kingdom village takes visitors on a stroll through 5,000 years of Chinese history. Guides in traditional garb lead walks through re-created temples, palaces and street scenes from China's 13 dynasties.

LION DANCERS, magicians, acrobats and others entertain in an open-air theater throughout the day, and a restaurant built along Tibetan lines offers specialties from all the provinces in the Chinese mainland.

Staple: The core of the original colony, the portion of the Central and Western districts behind the harborside skyscrapers on Hong Kong Island, retains much of its pronounced Chinese flavor with all manner of traditional shops, temples, streets, food stalls and markets.

New: A self-guided walking tour, designed by the very efficient and helpful Hong Kong Tourist Association, takes in the highlights of the two districts.

It takes about 3½ hours at a leisurely pace to cover the whole route. The itinerary is divided into six easy sections — clearly marked on the map that comes with the walk's descriptive booklet — to suit your interests and time. It officially starts at the Star Ferry terminal in front of Edinburgh Place, but of course you may begin where you wish.

Worthwhile sights glimpsed during my three-section stroll included the once-ubiquitous man-powered rickshaws. Originally designed by an American missionary in Japan, the two-wheel vehicles first appeared here in the 1870s and served as a means of transport until the arrival of motorized taxis.

Those found these days at the Star Ferry Concourse will take you no farther than around the block for about $7; most visitors, though, opt for a "photo session" for about $1.50 to $3, depending on your ability to negotiate.

THE CENTRAL Market, the biggest of more than 60 similar operations in the colony, is worth a walk-through, especially before noon. Here, more than 300 stalls offer a huge array of fresh produce, seafood and poultry.

Next on the walk's route is Des Voeux Road Central, a bustling artery packed with shops. It's a good spot to take pictures of Hong Kong's colorful trams; they look like rolling billboards and run the length of the island's north shore.

Wing On Street, known locally as Cloth Alley, will remind you of a covered lane in a Moroccan souk. Every type of fabric, linen or other cloth material made in the world is found here.

On nearby Wing Sing or Egg Street, you can watch as fast-moving handlers check tons of duck, quail, pigeon and other eggs distributed daily to restaurants and other retail outlets.

Man Wa Lane, just off Wing Lok Street, has a concentration of shops that specialize in "chops," or seals. Made with a variety of materials — including bronze, jade, clay, porcelain, soapstone and even plastic — chops have been used in China since 1300 B.C. to give personal identification to documents and works of art. In recent years, chops with Chinese characters representing the owner's name or company have become one of Hong Kong's most popular souvenirs.

SHOPS SELLING rattan furniture, place mats, napkin holders, toys and other items crowd Bonham Strand. There also are medicinal herb shops, and a stretch of this street is lined with cages holding what the Chinese consider a delicacy — snakes.

Pak Shing, originally built in 1851, and two other fascinating Chinese temples stand at the corner of Tai Ping Shan Street and Pound Lane. Nearby Hollywood Road is full of antiques, curio and furniture shops.

The antique stores sell both originals and reproductions; according to local friends, the most reliable of these shops are those with the Hong Kong Tourist Association member's logo on their door or window.

Nearly a block long, and better known as Cat Street, Upper Lascar Row is a mind-boggling collection of stalls and tiny stores selling such odds and ends as brass kettles, Mao badges and old oil lamps. Around the corner, on Lok Ku Road, Cat Street Galleries is a required stop for anyone interested in Oriental and Western antiques; the elaborate structure itself is worth a look and a picture.

The walk, like Hong Kong, went on. But I retraced my steps a few hundred yards back to Hollywood Road for a short rest in the smoky confines of the Man Mo Temple, one of the most important in town.

Unlike the Wong Tai Sin shrine in Kowloon, where I had met Henry Wan, the Man Mo had only a handful of people.

THE CONTRAST was as startling as Hong Kong itself.

New: Work has begun on Lantau Island for construction of a new international airport that will operate 24 hours a day and be able to handle 60 million passengers a year. The project — including a new town for about 150,000 people, commercial and industrial centers, support facilities for the airport and transportation links to Hong Kong Island and Kowloon — will cost an estimated $16 billion in U.S. currency.

Interestingly, the first of the facility's two main runways is scheduled to start operation in 1997.

Hong Kong land of fantasy

By Don Chapman
Copley News Service

HONG KONG — Culinary chronicles and shopping sagas about this corner of the Orient are legend. But what treasures await the traveler intent on returning home with more than a hefty waistline and a slim wallet?

That's the question we hoped to answer as our plane lifted off to the west in pursuit of pleasures in the Far East.

I'm pleased to report that each new day brought with it myriad joys, proving what aficionados of this dazzling destination have told us for years: Hong Kong is a haven of its own, worthy of far more than the standard two- or three-day gastronomic and shopping spree that often serves as a prelude or footnote to more comprehensive tours of the Orient.

CNS Photo

The air is choked with smoke from burning incense as worshipers flock to Hong Kong's Wong Tai Sin Taoist Temple to have their fortunes told or pray for family members.

VICTORIA PEAK

Climb aboard the tram, this year observing its 101st anniversary, and eight minutes later you'll be enraptured by one of the most stunning sights to be found anywhere in the world.

On a clear day you may not see forever, but the view from Victoria Peak — 1,100 feet above the city — will provide insight into the unique blend of East and West that is Hong Kong.

Directly below, the sun glistens off dozens upon dozens of steel and glass high-rise, high-tech buildings — ample evidence of the territory's station in the fast-paced world of international finance.

In the crowded bay beyond, sampans vie for position with commercial vessels as they carry a new generation of Chinese fishermen to sea. In the sky above, jet aircraft soar to and from the busy international airport at Kowloon.

Hire a cab and return to the city via Peak Road. You'll enjoy entirely different views as the vehicle snakes its way down the mountainside.

HONG KONG HARBOUR

It's a case of marine gridlock. Deposit a population of more than 5 million on Hong Kong Island and the Kowloon section of the Chinese mainland — a total of 34 square miles — add thousands of visitors daily, attempt to provide sufficient transportation between island and mainland even with a vehicle tunnel under the channel and you begin to understand the magnitude of the problem.

Piloting a vessel here, be it a Star Ferry, luxury ocean liner or fishing sampan is no job for the faint of heart. Yet it is in the harbor where one can almost reach out and feel Hong Kong's role as an East-West melting pot.

Most fascinating is the fishing community where the boat people of Aberdeen hold sway. Theirs is a culture unto itself, best observed by chartering a sampan for an hour's cruise. Operators will ask $6 (U.S.) per person but bargain well and you'll be able climb aboard for half that price.

One concession to modern times is that today's sampans are motorized, unlike the sail-powered junks of yesteryear. But tradition remains the same. Generation after generation of fishing families are born and raised on these boats, marry into the families of other fishermen, have their own families and eventually die aboard.

Weaving among the boats we hear dogs bark and wave to children who appear every bit as interested in us as we are in their world. Smoke rises from beneath cooking pots and families press bowls and chopsticks to their lips. Women hang squid out to dry on huge wooden racks and men repair their nets.

Workers shout and hammers pound as we pass a large dock where old ships are repaired and new ones are being built.

Elsewhere, flashing neon and the tantalizing smells of food in preparation welcome diners to the Jumbo Floating Restaurant. Sampans carrying patrons from around the world line up in front while those carrying foodstuffs make their way to the back.

As our tour comes to an end we gaze at the nearby hillside, a maze of high-rises separated by an occasional Buddhist temple where the wives of fishermen go daily, offering prayers that their men will return safely from the sea.

FLIGHT OF FANTASY

I lower my head to slip under light bulbs strung past the stalls of vendors.

It's early on a Sunday morning and the strange things about this marketplace are twofold — the customers are locals and all are men.

Upon closer inspection we find that the few patrons who aren't already carrying bird cages are haggling over the price of one. The bargaining, often quite animated and boisterous, adds to the cacophony emanating from row upon row of still other cages containing a wide variety of beautiful birds in varying shades of red, yellow and blue.

We are on the aptly named Hong Lok (Birds) Street, a Hong Kong institution since 1935 when bird fanciers first gathered to display their prized warblers and the often-magnificent cages that house them. Interest took further wing after World War II when Singapore, mainland China and Thailand contributed to the bird frenzy.

Just how serious are these hobbyists? Well, some have been known to pay up to $6,500 (U.S.) for a cage carved out of pure ivory.

'Less-trodden areas of North America' visited

Copley News Service

Clipper Cruise Line has developed a close-up routing along America's Last Frontier for a series of one-week voyages aboard the 138-passenger Yorktown Clipper to parts of Alaska that are often bypassed by large cruise ships.

The season began with an inaugural 14-day voyage that departed from Seattle May 26 for Juneau via British Columbia and the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Starting June 9, the Yorktown is making one-week voyages between Juneau and Ketchikan that will continue through late August. The season concludes with a 14-day voyage departing Juneau Sept. 1 for Seattle.

The line says the new program reinforces its commitment to provide travelers with a substantial, destination-oriented travel experience in less-trodden areas of North America.

Experienced naturalists will accompany each voyage to enhance passengers' understanding and appreciation of the sights along the way.

Rates for the "Alaskan Odyssey" programs start at $1,750 per person, double occupancy. Airfare is additional. For more information contact Clipper Cruise Line, 7711 Bonhomme Ave., Department 102, St. Louis, Mo. 63105; (314) 727-2929.

The Seiko Receptor, which took four years to develop, is scheduled to debut next month in Portland, Ore., at an introductory price of $255 and may gradually appear for $275 in other U.S. cities, Hattori Seiko Co. spokeswoman Noriko Kuriyama said Wednesday.

The company also is studying plans to expand sales to Europe and Asia, she said.

Like Tracy's famous radio, the new wristwatch pager receives radio signals. The Receptor translates the radio waves into written messages up to 16 characters long. Many U.S. pager companies already provide similar services for beepers, but these devices aren't contained in a wristwatch.

The wristwatch pager is manufactured by Seiko Epson Co., a Hattori Seiko subsidiary. It can store up to eight messages.

Dallas-based Pearle, Inc. says it is selling its Texas State Optical subsidiary to a corporation formed by a group of investors led by Merrill Lynch Interfunding, Inc. and Lord Capital Corp.

The parties expect to close the transaction by late July or early August, subject to regulatory approval and other customary conditions, Pearle announced Wednesday in a news release.

Eighty percent of the 45,800-square-foot project will be underground.

Most of the sumptuous 35,800-square-foot main house will be built into a steep hillside. The 10,000-square-foot balance will be used for an underground garage that can hold at least 20 cars, a caretaker's house and a lakeside pavilion with hot tub and barbecue.

Among the subterranean aspects are a swimming pool, three kitchens and a high-tech television room and theater.

Plans also call for a sports court for racquetball and volleyball, a 100-foot, two-slip dock and an artificial estuary and creek, circling the house and running down to the lake.

Cost projections range from $5 million to $10 million. It will take at least two years to build the house on Gates' 4½-acre property.

The federal judge who will consider the bankruptcy petition of the nation's largest intercity bus carrier is no stranger to life on the highway himself.

In fact, U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Richard S. Schmidt drove about 140 miles to Brownsville for the hearing in which Greyhound Lines Inc. will begin seeking reorganization of its $540 million debt.

The judge, who will find himself in the spotlight as Greyhound squares off against creditors and organized labor officials, handles cases in several South Texas cities.

He drives more than 1,000 miles monthly as he tries to keep up in an extremely busy Southern District of Texas, which has an estimated 5,000 cases pending.

"We call him the mobile judge," said his secretary, Jean Carpenter.

Mobil 3D project may set the pace

■ The results are not in yet, but a Mobil seismic project in an old field could attract attention to a new technology and have far-reaching implications for the Permian Basin.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

A massive 3D seismic project underway by Mobil could be the catalyst for launching a new technological era in the Permian Basin — one that many predict could do as much for recovering oil in the Permian Basin as waterflooding did in the fifties.

Mobil is now completing what is one of the largest 3D surveys ever undertaken in the Permian Basin. When completed the survey will cover 33 square miles of the Pegasus field, 25 miles southwest of Midland, and will consist of 77,000 migrated seismic traces in a 110-foot by 110-foot grid.

While there are other 3D surveys being conducted by other major oil companies and the Pegasus will not be the largest, there is a suspicion that the Pegasus survey may unlock geological secrets that could have far-reaching applications for the Permian Basin.

One of the geological features the survey will be looking for is "caving" in the Ellenburger. This is a phenomenon in which large sections of the limestone reservoir erode and collapse, creating "caverns" of high porosity and often prolific production.

If the "caving" concept, which was advanced by Mobil explorationist Bill Purves, proves valid, it could set off a flurry of 3D Ellenburger inspection throughout the Basin. "If it (the survey) works here, it will work in almost any field," said Lloyd Weathers, area geophysicist.

Weathers said the geological concept evolved about two years ago, when a 2D survey indicated that the caving anomaly might exist.

He noted that the company now normally considers the more expensive 3D as a first choice rather than a second choice. Total cost of the Mobil project, which is being shot by Western Geophysical and was designed and managed by Geostrat of Midland, is slightly under $1 million. But in the scope of extensive development plans for the field which could get underway in 1991, that amount is considered a bargain. Mobil calculates that the elimination of one dry hole could pay for the entire cost of the survey.

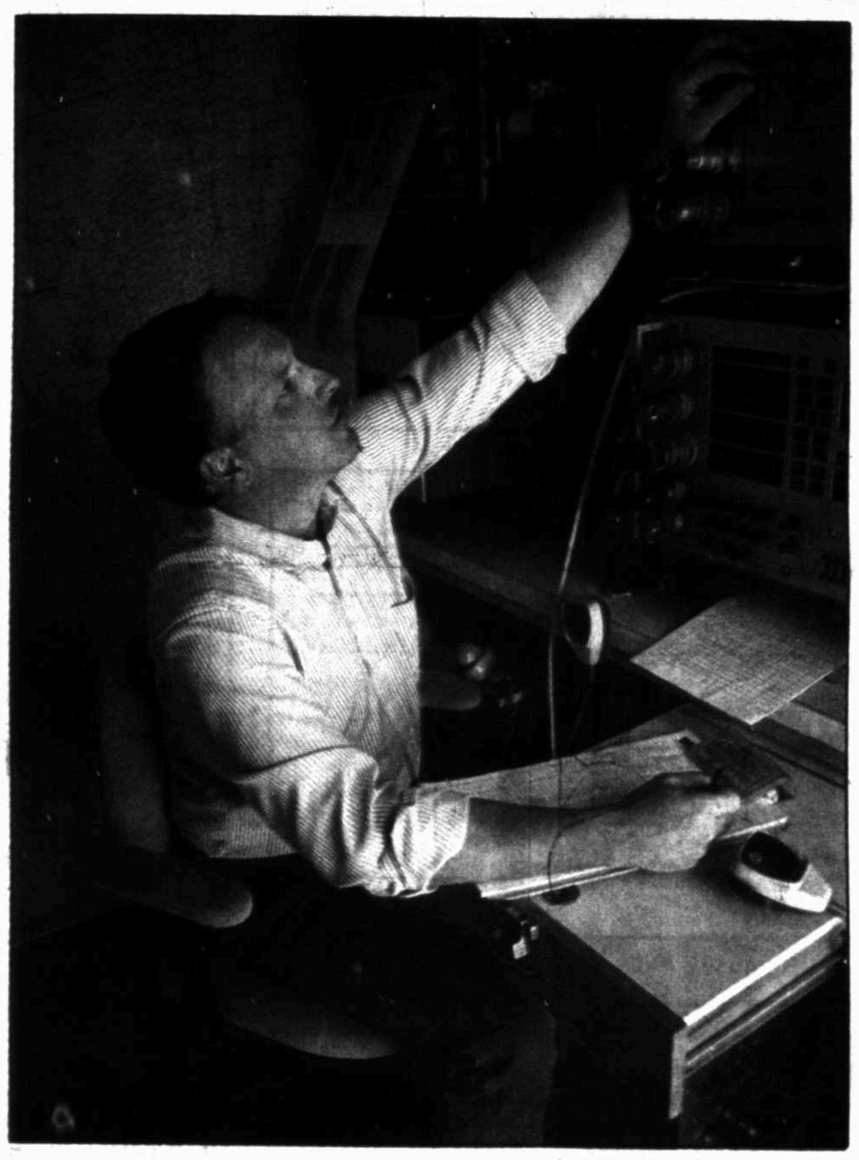

When completed in August, the survey will be delivered to Bill Purves and Andy Hooker of Mobil for processing on a Landmark work station.

Mobil says the seismic data will be used for many years to guide development of the field from the Ellenberger through shallower zones, and would be used to modify its waterflood project in the field.

Mobil, like most major oil companies, does not comment on reserves and de-

Basin may be looking at 3D seismic future

■ The 3D seismic survey could be the oil finding tool that will carry the Permian Basin into a new era of technology and recovery.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

"This is probably the one we have been waiting for," says George Underwood, president of Geostrat and consultant to Mobil on the Pegasus 3D survey. "Everyone has wondered what technological innovation would come along to extend the life of the Permian Basin after waterflooding and carbon dioxide flooding. Now it looks like it will probably be 3D seismic surveys."

Three dimensional seismic surveys utilize extensive geophone lines, many channels of recording equipment and high-powered computers to obtain a more accurate multi-direction view of the sub-surface.

"These surveys are wonderful tools and there is little telling how much more oil they will eventually find in the Permian Basin," says Underwood.

He says they will be used to find fault traps, sub-surface channels, porosity stringers, stratigraphic structures, vertical fractures, overthrust situations, reef detrital and caving situations as in the Ellenburger that a 2D survey might not be able to detect.

It will also be used to look under old fields held by shallow production to determine if there is oil in deeper traps.

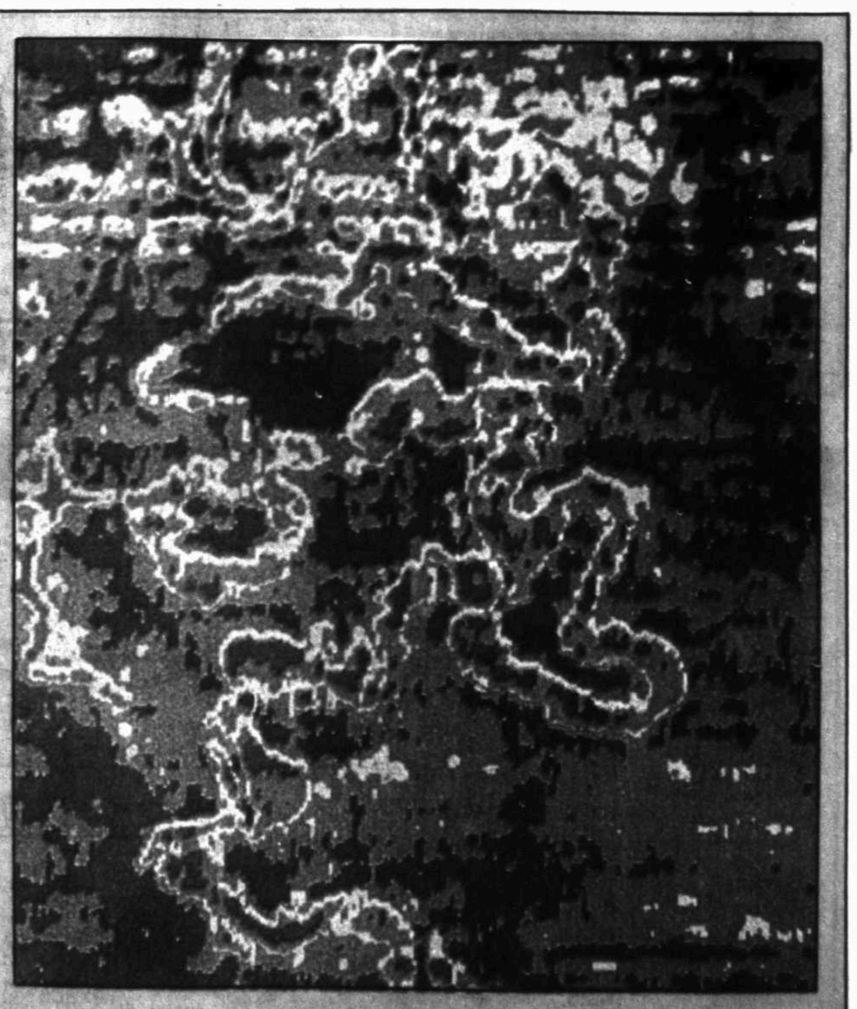

Underwood, who designed the Pegasus survey and quality-managed the project, says 3D seismic survey reduces the risk of drilling a well from about nine-in- one to four-in-one. He also notes that it can be used to guide the drilling bit in horizontal projects to greatly improve production from a single well.

"Horizontal drilling has been highly successful in the Austin Chalk in drilling across vertical fractures, but it can also be used to drill across the tops of several highs, through a series of porosity stringers and to connect several faults," he said. One of the biggest applications, says the geophysicist, will be to drill down sub-surface channels to increase well bore exposure.

"This technology is so sensitive that it can pick up a high on a high," he said.

Texas lags in renewable energy

By Anne Reifenberg

DALLAS (AP) — Baked by the sun and buffeted by the wind, Texas is a convenient spot on Earth to use its renewable powers as energy.

But the state also is positioned to take ample advantage of the planet's finite resources. And that is what it has done, pumping crude oil and natural gas from nearly 900,000 wells drilled in all but 37 of its 254 counties since 1889 and making lucrative collections from production taxes in the process.

In 1990, with hindsight heightened by fears of global warming and acid rain, Texas' wisdom in choosing the nonrenewable path and remaining on it is questioned. In a report issued recently in Washington, it also is harshly criticized.

The report — "The Power of the States: A 50-State Survey of Renewable Energy" — applauds 17 states for satisfying more than 10 percent of their energy needs with such environmentally benign sources as the sun, wind and water.

"Other states have a dismal record," says the report, prepared by the non-profit organization Public Citizen, founded by consumer advocate Ralph Nader.

"Texas, the state emitting the largest amount of carbon dioxide, derives less than one-half of 1 percent of its energy from renewable sources," the report notes. "Big energy consumers, such as Texas, should be particularly aggressive in developing renewable sources of energy since they are bigger contributors to energy-related environmental problems."

Texas is not singled out for reproof. Of the 50 states, 21 get less than 5 percent of their energy from renewables. In addition to Texas, those on the Public Citizen black list are Kansas, New Jersey, Indiana and Illinois.

But Texas is called to task because in the sheer consumption of energy from any source, it beats out every other state, eating up 8,996 trillion British thermal units every year. California is second, with a yearly consumption of 6,576 trillion Btu.

Said the report's author, Nancy Rader: "When you look at how much energy Texas uses, it is definitely the worst."

According to Public Citizen, renewable sources presently supply 13 percent of the nation's electricity and nearly 10 percent of its energy overall.

The direct use or conversion of biomass (any organic material, including wood, agricultural crops, municipal wastes, even manure) is the single largest renewable generator of power in the United States — and accounts for 5 percent of all U.S. energy production.

Approximately 1.4 million active solar collection systems are at work across the United States, according to Public Citizen, and Texas is among the top nine states boasting between 10,000 and 25,000 systems within its borders.

But in the use of biomass resources, Texas ranks 32nd, deriving just 22,942 billion Btu from organic sources compared to top-ranking (and well-forested) Georgia with 335,388 billion Btu.

Broker makes case for lower interest

By Scott Burns

Burns

BOSTON — High on the 24th floor, Keith Brodkin's office is a little disconcerting. As expected, windows view downtown Boston and the harbor beyond.

The usual totem objects, however, are absent.

Mr. Brodkin, president and chief investment officer of MFS, a $25 billion mutual fund and investment management firm is a closet Texan, complete with 200 acres of future horse farm outside of Austin.

But first he is a bond man. One of the early practitioners of active bond portfolio management, Brodkin now oversees all fixed income investment activity at MFS and travels around the country telling brokers and investors what he sees in the future for bonds.

He likes what he sees — a future with lower interest rates and rising bond prices.

"I think the savings rate is a great story," said Brodkin. "The savings rate has gone from a low of only a few percent points to nearly 6 percent. Each 1 percent change is the equivalent of $35 to $40 billion in savings. So one could say we have increased the savings rate enough to finance the Federal deficit."

I asked what he thought caused the increase in savings.

"It's from caution and demography," said Brodkin. "As people get older, they save more. When I hear this business about the Japanese not buying Treasuries (and forcing interest rates up), I think that's baloney. I'm not sure of the actual numbers but I think foreigners were net sellers of Treasuries in 1989.

"The trade deficit is another lesser problem. It appears to be about $60 billion, down from $150 billion.

"Another big thing is that the growth of debt is down. It was 14 percent a year, now it's 7 percent.

"There is a lot of good news out there. I don't know why we aren't hearing it more. For instance, let's consider the money supply. I think we have a very tough Federal Reserve. On inflation, director Alan Greenspan is a hawk. M 3, which is a wider measure of money supply that reflects expansion in credit, is growing at only 2.8 percent.

"In REAL terms that's negative... roughly 2 percent negative. This is a 20 year LOW! Debt creation is slowing.

"Add all those things — higher savings, less borrowing, a reduced trade deficit, and slow growth of the money supply — and you get lower interest rates."

Nor does the list of forces favoring lower inflation and interest rates stop there.

"I don't know," said Brodkin, "how you can view the overhang of real estate as anything but a disinflationary event.

"Another thing is state and local governments going into deficit. That means more taxes and THAT's disinflationary — you're taking money that would otherwise go into consumption.

"Companies continue to say that it is difficult to raise prices and average hourly earnings may be starting to roll down.

"If you look at all that evidence, you come away with the view that the world economy is slowing and that, combined with credit problems, means lower interest rates. That's why we like the government market here.

"We also like the high yield market. The valuation (of junk bonds) has been driven down to such levels that they're a good bet. The junk to Treasury spread (the yield difference between comparable maturity low quality bonds and Treasury bonds) is now 750 points. We're buying in the funds where we can do so."

Interestingly, while many analysts see the Japanese as an ongoing threat, Mr. Brodkin takes a contrary view.

"I'm not worried about the Japanese," he said. "They have an aging work force. They have an inflation that's heading up. They have a money supply that's growing too fast. They have real estate values and prices that are crazy — it costs $1 million to join a country club and $2 million to buy a two-bedroom house. I see a tremendous correction coming in Japanese real estate and equities. I don't know what will happen. Some say the yen will go home. I believe (instead, that) many investors will go to the United States in a flight to quality."

An odd idea?

"When world markets declined in '87, the U.S. bond market was up 15 percent in two weeks," Mr. Brodkin notes.

Many disagree with Mr. Brodkin's assessment and point to rising inflation rates earlier this year. But whatever the month to month figures, it remains that major disinflationary forces are at work and should not be ignored.

Miller begins production in Texas

N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH, Texas — With beer sales going flat and brewers engaged in a barroom brawl for market share, Miller Brewing Co. is spending $110 million nationwide to expand production of its successful new brand, Miller Genuine Draft.

The company launched Genuine Draft production at its Fort Worth brewery Tuesday, saying it had spent about $18 million to install its cold-filtration process there.

"Consumer response is the reason we're here," said Chuck Schmid, senior vice president for marketing. "We have consistently added production capability for Miller Genuine Draft every year since the brand was introduced.

"With the introduction of the production line in Fort Worth we are now producing Genuine Draft in five of our six breweries."

Industry analysts credit the new line with keeping the Miller name from fizzling and possibly with stopping the brewer's parent, Philip Morris, from spinning Miller off as a separate unit.

Sales of mainstay Miller High Life had dropped from 23 million barrels in 1980 to 12 million barrels by 1985, when Miller launched Genuine Draft regionally. It began selling Genuine Draft nationwide in 1986.

Sales of Genuine Draft have increased from 100,000 barrels in 1985 to nearly 5 million last year, serving to slow High Life's slump, analysts say. During the past five years Genuine Draft became the 10th-best-selling beer in the United States, knocking Michelob — made by archrival Anheuser-Busch — off the list.

In Fort Worth, the addition of the new brand has contributed to the recent hiring of 20 workers, bringing the brewery's total employment to 986. An additional 125 workers are employed by Miller at an adjoining container plant.

The 21-year-old facility produces 7.5 million barrels of beer a year, the equivalent of 413 million six-packs. But plant manager James Grandinetti said the plant may extend capacity this year by adding overtime if market demand for its products is strong.

Texas designer's clothes collectible

By Cynthia Puckett

GROOM, Texas (AP) — When Laura Britten first displayed her clothing designs at the Dallas Apparel Mart three years ago, buyers looked at her line as they came in to see the work of other, more well-known, designers.

"Now they go to the apparel mart to see my designs," said Britten, owner of Once Upon a Time, a clothing factory on old Route 66 about 44 miles east of Amarillo.

The 15 full-time employees at the factory help assemble women's and children's jumpers, rompers, sweatshirts, shorts and dresses, all of which sport Britten's original "scenes."

Britten draws the highly detailed scenes herself, illustrating them on the clothing using paint, appliques, ribbons, buttons and wooden cutouts.

Some of her designs, such as the annual school yard scene, have become collector's items, Britten said.

Britten said she shows the designs in Atlanta, Miami, Charlotte and Orlando, and is currently selling in 32 states and Puerto Rico.

She also has filled some special orders, such as sweatshirts for the Baltimore Zoo and T-shirts for a sorority at Baylor University in Waco.

Once Upon a Time had gross sales of $90,000 the first year, and Britten estimates that her sales will reach $500,000 this year.

Britten, a graduate of Texas A&M with a degree in environmental design, said her start in the clothing factory was all by accident.

"I worked out on the porch when I started. I did the wood and the painting on the dresses and then shipped them out," she said.

"We operated for a year and a half out of a one-car garage and bought this building in 1988," Britten said.

"We keep changing everything," she said, explaining that she makes simple changes to the popular designs such as using a different waistline or skirt.

If a type of scene doesn't sell, Britten said she pulls it out of the collection for the next season.

Experts don't write Trump off

By Rick Hampson

Trump

NEW YORK (AP) — Donald Trump begins his best-selling guide to entrepreneurial success, "The Art of the Deal," by declaring: "I don't do it for the money. I've got enough, much more than I'll ever need."

The same man lately has been telling a parade of bankers to his Trump Tower office in midtown Manhattan that money — about $100 million — was precisely what he needed.

After a decade of buying hotels, casinos, aircraft and land, a decade in which he came to personify the rich braggart and shameless self-promoter, Trump has been slowed down by simple math.

He's taking in less than he needs to finance his debts — $770,000 a week less, according to Forbes magazine.

Bankers seem willing to help Trump, but — given a drop in the value of the 44-year-old developer's Manhattan real estate and in the tenuous revenue projections from his Atlantic City casinos — not entirely on his terms.

Trump had to put up new collateral and "he's trying to sell the yacht, the plane and the helicopters," said a source familiar with Trump's affairs, who spoke on the condition of anonymity. "You know, the smaller assets."

Whatever its resolution, Trump's cash crunch threatens his prized ability to control his empire, do his deals, indulge in his extravagances.

Above all, it has weakened his most impressive edifice — his legend, which lured tourists to his hotels, gamblers to his casinos, celebrities to his Manhattan apartment towers.

It might even have led bankers to give too much credit for his own good.

"People tend to be mesmerized by his personality and his attitude and his record," says Benjamin Schore, real estate professr at Columbia University's business school. "Sure, bankers are affected by it. They're human."

The story of Donald J. Trump has been told many times, often by Donald J. Trump: how he dreamed of expanding his father's real estate business, how he obtained tax breaks and built the Grand Hyatt Hotel when no one else was building anything in Manhattan, how he snapped up the site for Trump Tower, how he wore burgundy suits.

Whatever his taste, young Trump was by most accounts a single-minded, hard-working developer. Unlike some older and more successful competitors, when visiting construction sites, he wasn't afraid to get his patent leather shoes — which matched his suits — dirty.

Trump also developed a reputation for hiring the best people and paying them accordingly, and for financing his projects by taking on partners.

Trump operated on two assumptions: that the New York real estate he owned got more valuable by the day and that any other acquisitions would soar in value if adorned with his name.

Banks happily helped. When Trump bought what became the Trump's Castle casino from Hilton Hotels, a group of banks lent him the down payment and gave him a five-year grace period for the first repayment.

What Trump calls "the beat-up Trump months" began in February because of a dispute with his wife, not his bankers.

Donald and Ivana Trump were breaking up. Mrs. Trump's determination to seek a large share of her husband's assets focused attention on their real worth.

Trump kept a straight face, even when he scrapped free coffee on the Trump Shuttle and announced the shuttle was for sale, a year after he bought it.

"Cash is king" he announced, explaining that he wanted to be able to grab bargains as prices dropped.

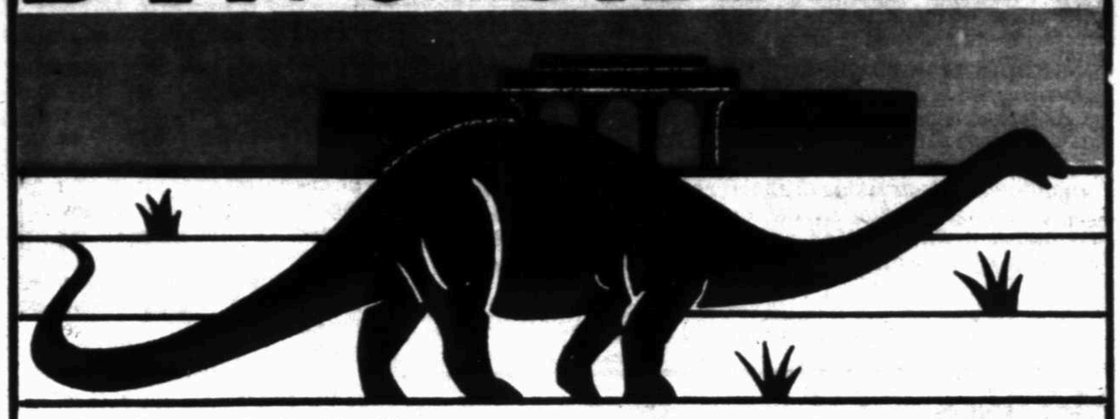

Then Forbes magazine reported Trump's worth, which it had estimated at $1.7 billion in 1989, had sagged to about $500 million.

Publicly, Trump was ridiculing the article; privately, he was calling bankers for more cash. His problem became clearer two weeks ago, when banking sources confired he was conferring with lenders who wanted more collateral.

3D: The future is here

pocket of reserves and to disqualify a drilling prospect. Marathon, Exxon, Texaco, Arco and Phillips have also conducted 3D surveys to guide development, and Underwood predicts that sooner or later nearly every field in the Permian Basin will be subjected to a 3D survey in an effort to find additional trapped oil or by-passed oil.

Up until now 3D surveys have been viewed as an expensive tool only for the majors, but declining cost and effective drilling is quickly bringing them into the camp of the independent oilman. At least two independents are now considering 3D surveys — one to develop a newly discovered field and another to develop an older field.

Underwood says that 2D surveys will still be around in the future, but eventually nearly all surveys will be 3D.

Lloyd Weathers, area geophysicist for Mobil, notes that the cost of doing several 2D lines quickly adds up to the cost of a single 3D survey.

While 3D surveys have been around since 1975, they are just now coming into their own as a tool because of a host of refinements in computers and recording equipment and a declining cost.

"In 1975, we were using 120 channels, but now it is possible to get up to 5,000 channels even though it is not practical to go that high," said Underwood. He noted that only 480 channels were used to survey the Pegasus field.

He said geophones had become much lighter and durable and more could be placed quicker.

"But the bottomline in reducing cost and expanding technology for 3D surveys has been smaller and more powerful computers," says Underwood.

MOBIL: Seismic project may create new 3D interest

(From 1G)

Mobil, like most major oil companies, does not comment on reserves and declined to reveal potential reserve increases for the Pegasus field after 3D-guided development. But there is anticipation that the survey and consequent development will yield significant production increases.

Enthusiasm for the project is running so high on the Geoscience Technical Team that area geophysicist Lloyd Weathers hosted a barbecue to which all the employees of the Midland office were invited for a briefing.

However, Dan Zivney, asset manager of the Pegasus field, said seismic data collected from the field had not yet been analyzed and that it was premature to become too optimistic. "At this point any speculation about potential recovery is pure specualation," he warned.

Zivney said that the standard development practice in the 40-year old field had been to drill to the Ellenburger and then move up hole to look at the potential of seven different producing reservoirs in the Pegasus. "We will now be able to take a much closer look at all of the reservoirs with the 3D survey," said Zivney, "and we will be able to better optimize our waterflood."

If Zivney is non-committal about the potential for dramatically increased reserves in the field, he is not as guarded in his assessment of 3D surveys: "I think it is safe to say that 3D may eventually do more for the Permian Basin in terms of recovery than waterflooding," he commented.

Bosses range from winners to losers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A partner in a Cleveland brokerage firm who held "forgery contests" among secretaries to see who could best trace clients' signatures on stocks and bonds is a "bad boss" winner in a national contest.

Other dubious "winners" in a contest titled "The Good, the Bad and the Downright Unbelievable" included a Philadelphia businessman who asked his secretary to scout for good-looking women at a local pub and then call him on a beeper to tell him of his prospects.

A New York supervisor who followed female employees to the restroom and stood outside to time them was also cited.

So was the manager of an insurance company in Boulder, Colo., who yelled at a female worker to bring coffee and added, "You squaw; me chief."

The contest, sponsored by a Cleveland support group for clerical workers called 9to5, National Association of Working Women, also honored "good" bosses.

Those included the president of a computer services company in Birmingham, Ala., for progressive family leave policies; a department chairman at Hofstra University in Hempstead, N.Y., for advocating pay raises; and the chairman of Northwest Airlines for making company employees "feel like an asset to the airline."

Identities of the unbelievable and bad bosses were not released.

A Philadelphia secretary who nominated her boss said she was asked "to go to a 'beef & beer' to check out girls before he entered."

"He told me to beep him if there was anyone good-looking in the bar so he wouldn't waste his time," the woman wrote.

Another bad boss was nominated by a state worker in Madison, Wis., whose mother was hospitalized after suffering a heart attack. The next day, the worker asked for the afternoon off to visit her.

"Well ... go ahead. But next time you should plan these things better," the boss responded.

"Common themes emerged in both the good and bad boss stories," said Ellen Bravo, associate director of 9to5. "People want to be appreciated and to be treated like human beings — not like machines or peons. And businesses that show regard for their employees inspire loyalty and prosper as a result."

Judges who reviewed hundreds of entries submitted by office workers nationwide included Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo.; Washington Post columnist Bob Levey; and Roberta McKay, who heads the Labor Department's women's bureau.

Exes nix Big Easy

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Almost three-fourths of the New Orleans executives responding to a poll said that if they had their choice, they'd locate their businesses somewhere outside of Louisiana.

Deloitte & Touche conducted the poll of 1,650 business people and got 275 responses. A report on the responses was titled, "New Orleans: The Decade Ahead — A Place to Live." It follows a 1989 survey called "Decade Ahead: A Place for Business."

The report said 74 percent of the business executives said they would pick another city, if they had the option to do so, and 70 percent said they'd pick another state.

"How can we expect them to be goodwill ambassadors, if three-fourths of the sample would relocate somewhere else?" asked Lloyd A. Tate, managing partner for Deloitte & Touche's New Orleans office.

Tate said the findings reinforce the need for business and government leaders to "focus on the area's strengths and correct the weaknesses."

New Orleans has to shed its "Big Easy" image and improve its quality of life, the report said.

"What these statistics seem to suggest is that our city is focusing on developing as a place to visit and ignoring its development as a place to live," the report said.

The strategy "seems an unlikely approach for attracting new and permanent business to the area," the report said.

Respondents said they liked some things about New Orleans, including its health care professionals and hospitals.

Colleges are OK, but the private universities are too expensive, and the public universities are handicapped by Louisiana politics, the businessmen said.

And there are advantages to being a tourist and convention center, they said.

Tim Ryan, an economist at the University of New Orleans, said elected officials must realize the importance of quality of life to keeping and attracting businesses and jobs.

Ryan is executive director of MetroVision, a task force that the Business Council created to develop a long-term economic strategy for the metropolitan New Orleans area.

Arty autos

Inventors and designers have been dickering with horseless carriages since French Army captain Nicholas Cugnot's three-wheeled steam tractor made its first trip in 1770. Traveling three miles an hour and stopping every 10 to 15 minutes to build up steam, the tractor was built for hauling cannon.

The ability to transport passengers arrived in 1801 when English inventor Richard Trevithick built a four-wheeled steam wagon. Yet, automobiles were still considered so new in the 1890s they were shown in circuses.

In the 1980s, slightly less than 100 years later, about 340 million passenger cars travel the world's highways. In the United States alone, nine out of 10 households in the United States own one car and half own more than one car.

ODESSA — The staff of the Art Institute for the Permian Basin searched for an exhibition idea which would intrigue and capture the public's attention only to discover they all owned at least one.

"One of the things that America is known for more than anything else is the automobile," says Marilyn Bassinger, director. "I guess we have more automobiles than anyone else in the world.

"We thought that would be something that would be interesting to the people in our area. We decided to see what kind of exhibit we could come up with and what you are going to see is the result of that. A lot of people have worked hard to make it work."

The exhibition "The Auto: America's Love Affair," combines materials drawn from the Auburn-Cord-Dusenberg Museum, Auburn, Ind., and those assembled by the Art Institute staff, including Karen Hembree, exhibit chairman, and Letha Hooper, assistant curator.

"The Auto: America's Love Affair" hangs through July 8 and contains original drawings and photographs of designs from the 1920s and 1930s by Alan Leamy.

Leamy designed an automobile called the F-D 4 Place Cabin Speedster and today's museums and collectors of fine automobiles place his

Colonial Texas brought to life in symposium

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Colonial Texas comes alive this Father's Day during a free symposium at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library.

Speakers for "Lone Star Horizons: A Texas Symposium" include B. Byron Price, executive director, National Cowboy Hall of Fame, oil historian Dr. Roger Olien, Midland, and Dr. M.E. Bradford, Dallas.

Olien, who speaks last, plans first to sketch a general history of the oil business in Texas and Oklahoma. Then he will chose people he thinks "represent the kind of imagination and risk-taking that have generally been associated with the industry.

"For example, Tom Slick of Oklahoma, who during his lifetime was often called the 'King of Wildcatters.' He brought in the great Cushing Field in Oklahoma. And then really the Texas pioneers at Spindletop in 1901 — the day that will live forever — Jan. 10, 1901. Never forget that date. That's when Texas really entered the 20th century. Ten days late, but it made it."

Olien, who teaches at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, has authored one book on the Texas Republican Party from 1920 to about 1980 and co-authored, along with his wife, Diana Davids, several books, including "Oil Booms," "Wildcatters," "Easy Money" and "Life in the Oil Fields."

The two, who met when they were both on faculty at Southern Methodist University, Dallas, are currently working on their fifth collaborative book to be published by the University of North Carolina Press this fall. Olien says the two have no difficulty working together.

"We talk. We plan what to do fairly thoroughly and then talk about it all the time. I can't exactly explain how the chemistry goes. It just works, even to the point when a given book comes out we can't remember who wrote a given sentence because we've both worked through the book so much."

He laughs as he recalls a humorous moment in a talk show interview with Olien and Ms. Davids.

"It was funny. When 'Wildcatters' came out about '84, we were doing a talk show somewhere like Dallas or Houston. The people who were conducting kept pressing. 'How can you work together?' "

Olien replied, "Well, I guess we can do it because we don't keep analyzing it the way you want us to. We just do it. It's a little like bike riding. If you start analyzing the mechanics of it, you'll fall off."

A native of Wisconsin, Olien specializes in southwestern history and business history. He traces his interest in the oil business back to his days in Dallas. When the couple moved to Midland in 1973, much of the motivation was the opportunity to study the oil business.

"After we moved out here, there wasn't much material for Diana to work with in British history on the Permian Basin," Olien says., "That was the point I was getting pretty seriously into oil, and she got interested."

Before that time, Ms. Davids, whose speciality includes British history and women's history, had published a biography, "Morpeth," on Lord Morpeth, the author of the first public health act in Great Britain.

Olien sees a common thread present in the talks being given today from 10 a.m. to noon and 1:30 to 4 p.m. at the Haley Library, 1805 W. Indiana Ave. the talks are free and open to the public.

"The other people will talk about exploration and the development of the cattle industry,"

AUTOS: Our love for auto celebrated

(From 1H)

creations among their most highly regarded possessions, states the 20th Edition of the "Automobile Quarterly." His ideas included narrow windows, designs with a horizontal line, flared fenders, the raked windshield and boattail and the radiator shell of the Duesenberg.

Also, "The Auto: America's Love Affair" features fine art pieces with the automobile theme by members of the Automotive Fine Arts Society, an organization made up exclusively of dedicated automotive fine artists worldwide. Those members include Hector Luis Bergandi, Bill Neale, William A. Motta and Mark Stehrenberger.

In putting the exhibit together, Mrs. Bassinger talked with all of the artists. She found Bergandi, from Argentina, fascinating.

"I would love to meet him," she says. "Before his second birthday, he could do shapes of ducks — small animals — that were recognizable as animals. When he was 4 years old, he did a steam locomotive, and it could be recognized. All the parts were there, they may not have been quite in the right place, but they were there. Quite unusual.

"His father was a window dresser and painter of signs on windows. He was always around paint brushes and arts material. His best love was to draw. He was very curious about everything. When he was in high school, he would do illustrations for advertising and signs for the highway."

Bergandi helped support his family as a sign painter and newspaper advertising artist when he was 14. Soon therafter, he moved to Buenos Aires where he worked for Corsa, an automobile racing magazine. He has lived in the United States since December of 1984.

Of his work, Bergandi says, "I draw cars because I am good at it. It makes me a good living. I probably would enjoy doing landscapes and drawing horses just as much, but these are the things that made a living. There may be a better artist than I am, but not a better illustrator."

Neale, who has a bachelor and master's degree in advertising art from North Texas State University, is from Dallas. He has a "passion for race cars," Mrs. Bassinger says.

His passion began when, as a young man, Neale watched the Indy cars run at Arlington Downs between Dallas and Fort Worth. Then, while studying art in Los Angeles, Neale saw his first MG-TC.

"He was hooked on road racers," she says.

Neale, an amateur road racer himself, spent numerous weekends at the local airport sketching "foreign" cars.

"His talent was discovered at a race course in Texas where he was immediately commissioned to paint a Maserati 2-liter sports racer," Mrs. Bassinger says. "He's been painting cars since."

Motta is the design director with Road and Track magazine, a publication he has worked with for more than 30 years. His paintings hang in both private and institutional collections in the United States and abroad including Mercedes and Alfa Romeo. He has selected and photographed many of the cars that appeared in the salon section of the magazine during his years there.

The illustrations of Swiss-born Stehrenberger, who moved to the United States in 1964, appear on a regular basis in 18 major car publications around the world.

"Being specialized in automotive marketing research, conceptual design research and actual three-dimensional development forces me to be on top of the latest developments and enables me to help shape future trends," Stehrenberger says in his artist's statement.

"Thus, my drawing style is based on this solid background and enables me to make a statement to the industry as to how a specific future car model should appear. By doing this, I like to think that, in many ways, I have influenced young designers and students alike. And that, in my opinion, places extra importance on my work."

In addition, "The Auto: America's Love Affair" includes Bill Wiggins' sculptures constructed from hood ornaments, steering wheels and other automobile parts are on exhibit, along with early vintage gasoline pumps and memorabilia pieces.

Wiggins, a painter and sculptor from Roswell, N.M., says in his artist's statement, "This exhibition of hood ornaments sculpture pays homage to the great artists who designed these beautiful car mascots. Their designs include various birds, flying ladies, armored knights, conquistadors, ships, greyhounds, rams and bulldogs.

"Most of these ornaments were found in wrecking yards and were mounted without any attempt at restoration. Some are in excellent condition while the chrome is completely worn off of others. The pieces shown here are from the 1920s and into the 1960s. As I am not knowledgeable about cars some of the names and dates are unknown."

"The Auto: America's Love Affair" is sponsored in part by the Odessa Cultural Council, who also sponsors the Institute's Summer Exploration of Art Program which offers free classes to elementary through high school students.

The Art Institute, 4909 E. University, is open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. No admission is charged. For more information call Mrs. Bassinger. 1-368-7222.

"Our exhibit is a celebration of the art of auto design and expresses the fascination that Americans have with autos of all periods," Mrs. Bassinger says. "In the Permian Basin, as in other areas, there's a terrific interest in automobiles from the earliest models to the cars of the future.

"This is evidenced by the racing enthusiasts in this area, by the large membership in the antique car clubs of the area, by the fascination with collections of auto memorabilia pieces and by the number of children that we had to turn away from our 'Design the Car of the Future' class."

Rap group

HALEY: Library hosts symposium

(From 1H)

Olien says, adding that he will come along and say, "Hey guys, the days of exploration and adventure aren't over. The nature of it has changed."

The list of topics for the symposium include "Colonial Texas: A Successful Failure," Dr. Odie Faulk' "Two Varieties of Revolution: A Texas Perspective," Bradford; "A Cowboy For To Be," Patterson; "The Treatment of Texas History in Art," Dr. Sam Ratcliffe; "Cowhunts to Roundups: The Texas Range Cattle Industry," Price; and "Texas Oil Frontiers," Olien.

"What has always interested me about the oil industry is the extent to which it is in modern times the equivalent to pioneering, or westering. Again, because it involves taking risks and doing things people haven't done before, and in a literal sense going places people haven't gone before.

"To me, it's what ties American experience together in terms of experience and pioneering. It's kind of the bridge experience in America or can reflect it because if you want the connections between the Lewis and Clark Expedition at the beginning of the 19th century and space exploration today you can see it reflected in endeavors like the oil industry."

The trend Olien has observed in 20th century America is that exploration has come to rely less on physical agility and more on mental abilities.

"The risks are intellectual and financial, not physical in modern times. As a culture, we often still think of pioneering in the way Hollywood has depicted it. Pioneers headed west; explorers headed up the rivers. This is how many people today conceive of exploration. It receives massive reinforcement from television and motion pictures and movies. If you ask somebody to identify pioneers, these are the images that you get back."

These distortions lead to an industry which is misunderstand, Olien says.

"We're in danger of not understanding where we are. It's really a very complex and demanding business in which science, technology, risk management and intellect have the major roles."

In addition to today's speakers, the symposium includes a by-reservation luncheon complete with a special program given by Paul Patterson of Crane. He will speak on his experience as a cowboy in the Permian Basin. Patterson is a nationally known writer, storyteller and cowboy poet. He taught school in the Permian Basin and has authored several books on area ranch life.

The Haley Library also is hosting an exhibition by Odessa artist Clyde Heron during the symposium. The exhibit, "American Heroes," features western military art focusing on campaigns against the Comanches and Apaches in Texas and New Mexico.

"Mr. Heron's work is noted for its extraordinary attention to detail in history, geography and culture," says Richard Mason, development director. "We want to offer a snapshot view of the immense diversity over time and space in the great state of Texas. We hope to educate and to entertain."

Wink prepares for festival

Orbison celebration should grow

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

The time is August 1989. The place: Wink, Texas, hometown of rock 'n' roll great Roy Orbison. The event: a concert at Wink High football stadium.

Outfitted all in black — including an ebony guitar, dark glasses and jet black page boy coiffure — the performer stands on a makeshift stage of two flat-bed oilfield trailers and pours his soul into "The Lonely One." The crowd of 3,000 Orbison fans packed into the football stadium screams, whistles and stomps its pleasure.

The audience catches on and the roar of applause intensifies.

The backup singer is Wesley Orbison, eldest son of Roy Orbison, and he is making his first public appearance only a few hundred feet from the high school auditorium where his famous father made his public debut in 1953 as 17-year-old leader of the Wink Westerners, a country music band.

Rather, he is Kenny Morrill, an incredible Orbison look-alike and sound-alike who has been portraying the legendary singer — and wowing sell-out concerts in Las Vegas — since Orbison's death in 1988.

"When I saw that exchange between Morrill and Wesley, I literally had to choke back the tears," said Dennis Grubb, a friend of the late Roy Orbison and promoter of the annual Roy Orbison Memorial Music Festival. "It was almost like a father and son bond. They seemed to be tuned together into something spiritual."

Afterwards Grubb would tell the nervous young performer: "I felt like your father was present on that stage tonight." Wesley, one of three sons Roy Orbison had with his first wife, Claudette, and the only one to survive a tragic Nashville fire that claimed his brothers, would answer: "So did I."

IT IS electrifying happenings such as this that have earned the Wink music extravaganza a reputation, in only one time out, as one of the prime musical events of West Texas, said Grubb, who also promotes concerts by major recording artists in Midland and Odessa.

"It wasn't exactly intended to be an annual affair," he said, "but the chemistry and spirit that was created at last year's concert almost dictated that it continue." He says he expects attendance to double this year.

The event was started by the town folks of Wink as a means to raise funds for a Roy Orbison Museum and a life-sized bronze statue of the singer. Now there is great expectation in the tiny oilfield town that its tribute to its own Orbison will one day be an event of major proportions.

"We are hoping that the Roy Orbison Music Festival will one day be to Wink what Bob Wills Day is to Turkey, Texas," said Wink Mayor Maxie Watts, who is also principal of Wink High School.

Nostalgia, in the form of appearances by the Texas Playboys, played a hand in building the Turkey event. It is also playing a role in building the reputation of the Orbison affair in Wink.

Last year members of the Wink Westerners, Orbison's first band formed when he was in high school, and members of the Teen Kings, the recording band with which he launched his career, were present. They will be back this year with Morrill, Wesley Orbison and other musical acts from across the state.

"We had a hard time getting acts to appear for nothing the first year," said Grubb, who provides his promotional services to the City of Wink, "but this year we have had terrific acts calling us, wanting to perform for free. That's how the festival's reputation has grown."

ROCK AND ROLL great Carl Perkins, an Orbison contemporary, had wanted to appear at the music festival but had to decline because of a conflict of dates.

One of the "hottest" acts to sign on to this year's lineup is Austin-based Rotel and the Hot Tomatoes, which performs '50s and '60s rock 'n' roll. Stephen Pride, younger brother of Charlie Pride, also will appear with a number of performers from the Making Texas Music Festival including: The Medder Sisters, John Secord, Stuart James Project and Tim Thompson, 1990 winner of the festival.

Billy Dee and the Debonairs, a well-known '50s rock 'n' roll band, will head up groups like the Showdown Band and the Bad Breaks Band.

"We had 3,000 for the concert last year, but we expect to have nearly twice that many this year," said Watts. The concert is set for Saturday at Wink High School football stadium, with the music lasting from 5 p.m. to midnight.

"We start late because of the heat," said Watts.

As for young Wesley Orbison, many agree that he may have what it takes to follow in his father's footsteps.

"There's no doubt that he has his father's voice," said Morrill, who has made a career of sounding like Roy Orbison. "With a little more training and confidence, he just might be able to follow after his dad."

THOSE WHO GREW up with Roy Orbison agree that the vocal similarity between father and son is uncanny.

"When I talked to Wesley on the phone," said Ronnie Slaughter, a local rancher who once sang with Roy Orbison in a high school quartet, "I nearly flipped. He sounded just like Roy."

Until now the incredibly shy Wesley Orbison, who has designs of becoming a professional bowler and suffers from stage fright, had not elected to pursue a music career, but that could change with the encouragement he is getting from friends and performers.

"It would be ironic if a second Orbison legend could be launched at Wink," said one of the original Wink Westerners.

About being a performer, Wesley Orbison said: "Now I know what my dad went through all those years." Like his son, Roy Orbison was also painfully shy.

Sonora dinner show reopens

SONORA — The Covered Wagon Dinner Theater, in its fourth season, opened in the ampitheater at the Caverns of Sonora, according to a news release. The season runs through Saturday, Aug. 11, with shows held each Friday and Saturday evening. The well-known caverns are located eight miles west of Sonora, exit 392, off IH-10.

The opening show featured two regulars on the Dinner Theater stage, Biscuits O'Bryan as storyteller and Julie Ann Carpenter as entertainer.

Biscuits, an old camp cook who tells delightful tales of life on the cattle range, is portrayed by the Rev. Monte Jones, pastor of St. John's Episcopal Church. The Covered Wagon Dinner Theater is the birthplace of the now well-known character Biscuits O'Bryan.

Twelve-year-old Julie, National Fiddle Champion from San Angelo, is returning for the third season. Julie's first fiddle album, recorded in Nashville with the legendary Smoky Mountain Boys, was released in April.

Although different storytellers and entertainers are featured at every show, the Covered Wagon Dinner Theater provides a family-oriented evening walk through the pages of history.

Dinner theater tickets, which are sold only at the gate, are $12 for adults and $6 for children 6-12. Children under 6 are free with free set-ups provided for their meal. Dinner is catered by the famous Sutton County Steakhouse.

For additional information or to obtain a complete performance schedule for the 1990 season, call 1-387-2381, or write Covered Wagon Dinner Theater, P.O. Box 885, Sonora 76950.

'Texas' surprises in store

CANYON — Four premiere performances and a sprinkling of new show surprises open the 25th anniversary season of "Texas" as the musical drama prepares to entertain another 100,000 this summer beneath the towering cliffs of Palo Duro Canyon State Park.

"Texas" plays nightly, except Sundays through Aug. 25, at 8:30 p.m. in the Pioneer Amphitheater near Amarillo and Canyon.

The 10,000th person wins accomodations at the Hudspeth House Bed and Breakfast in Canyon, and every 25,000th person gets a cowboy hat, courtesy of Boots & Jeans in Amarillo.

The 50,000th and 100,000th persons win the grand prizes, free trips back to Texas, courtesy of American Airlines.

The traditional chow call triangle, given nightly to the person who travels the farthest distance to "Texas," is silver this year. This award has not gone to anyone in the continental United States since 1986.

Written by Pulitzer Prize winning author Paul Green, "Texas" is the story of the settling of the area. A cast of 80 relives the struggles between the farmers and the ranchers and how their eventual collaboration brings prosperity to the area.

Director Neil Hess blends lively acting with dramatic song and dance and accents it with the latest sound and light. This year he has added several 25th anniversary sensations that must remain surprises until opening.

Even though the basic script remains the same, it is this constant upgrading of sets, costumes and special effects that continues to draw spectators from every state and a hundred different foreign countries each year.

Two million have seen the production in the past 25 years and 80 percent travel over 100 miles. Over half the audience returns to see "Texas" again.

Part of the attraction of the nation's "largest" (according to figures released by the Institute of Outdoor Drama) outdoor drama is the inability to see all the action in one performance.

Visitors find a variety of action in unusual places: on cliffs, on rocks and on horses. Trains and surreys cross the terrain. Lightning strikes the canyon wall, exploding a tree that sizzles and burns.

Another charm is the patriotism that exudes from the stage as flags and horsemen mingle in the beginning, middle and end, reminding viewers of their heritage.

For reservations or information on "Texas," write P.O. Box 268, Canyon 79015, or call (806) 655-2181. Tickets are $10, $8 and $6 for adults and $10, $4 and $3 for children.

An optional chuckwagon barbecue is served by Sutphen's of Amarillo from 6:30 to 8 p.m. for an additional $6 per person.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	1 ♡	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ♡

You have seen this hand before, albeit in a different guise. Do you think you can guarantee four spades after the lead of the deuce of hearts?

The auction meets with this department's approval. Since North is a passed hand, chances of his having the right cards for slam are negligible. Rather than risk a bidding disaster or an auction that steers the defenders to the winning defense, South elected to blast immediately into four spades.

On the opening heart lead, East made the discovery play of the nine, taken by declarer's queen. With two sure diamond losers, declarer realized he would have to ruff at least one heart if he was going to make his contract. So he blithely plunked down the ace of hearts. Unfortunately West ruffed and returned a trump and declarer eventually had to lose three more tricks in the red suits for a one-trick set.

West's deuce of hearts had all the earmarks of a singleton, so declarer should have realized his ace would be ruffed away if he tried to cash it before trumps were drawn. Since declarer could afford to lose one heart and two diamonds, he should have conceded a heart trick to East at trick two by leading low from hand. The best East can do is return a trump. Declarer wins in hand, ruffs a low heart with the jack of spades, then returns to hand by trumping a club to draw the last of West's trumps. Now the ace of hearts can be cashed in peace and comfort for the game-fulfilling trick.

Playhouse announces new season

ODESSA — The Permian Playhouse of Odessa has announced its 1990-91 theater season.

According to the director, Coy Sharp in a news release, "The Play Selection Committee works all year to arrive at the best season possible to present to our board of directors. As I begin my eleventh season at the Playhouse, I believe this is one of the strongest seasons we have offered to Odessa."

The season opens in September through October with a new comic musical, "Nunsense," a talent show staged by the five survivors at the Little Sisters of Hoboken nunnery, the rest of the sisterhood having succumbed to botulism after eating vichyssoise prepared by Sister Julia, Child of God. The remaining "little hobos" parade their talents at a variety show staged to raise funds so that the last four of the dearly departed can be buried.

In November, the season continues with "Play On," the story of a theater group trying desperately to produce a play, amid all types of maddening interference from its haughty playwright who keeps revising the script until almost opening night.

Back by popular demand, the Playhouse will again present "The Best Christmas Pageant Ever!!" in December. This production will be a box office ticket production only.

In January, the Playhouse joins the world in celebrating the 100th birthday of Agatha Christie. As one of the greatest mystery authors in the world, the Playhouse presents "The Hollow," a favorite stage mystery of Christie's.

The American Classic Series, began by Sharp when he joined the Playhouse in 1979, adds "Picnic" by William Inge to the season in March. Winner of the Pulitzer Prize and the Critic's Circle Award, "Picnic" has both poignant and comic moments for the enjoyment of the audience.

"Woman in Mind" is a comedy that will play in April. Alan Ayckbourn, the Neil Simon of Great Britain and playwright of middle class life, presents this play about Susan, who is a housewife married to a boring clerk named George.

The new comic musical "Is There Life After High School?" concludes the season in May and June. Remember when eternal love could be born during sixth period math? When being popular was a matter of life or death? This fun musical explores the love-hate relationship that lingers through our memories of high school.

The Play Selection Committee of the Playhouse is appointed by the president of the board of directors and is composed of board members, volunteers of the Playhouse and citizens of Odessa.

The committee works from August to March of each year reading and meeting to discuss the plays to be presented to the board of directors in February or March of each year.

For more information on the 1990-91 season, call the Playhouse at 1-362-2329.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Father's Day activity today

Activities for the whole family are planned for Father's Day at the Museum of the Southwest including a kite-making workshop and the start of the Summer Sundays Concert series.

Kids, dads and moms can have a great time together "Raising a Family" at the kite class in the Children's Museum "To Catch the Wind" kite exhibition, says a release from the Museum.

This activity for all ages is a "come and go" affair, starting at 2 p.m. and ending at 4:45 p.m.

Sunday at 7:45 p.m., the Museum's popular Summer Sundays Concerts begin on the grounds of the Museum. Midland Community Theatre Singers will give the first performance in the series.

Everyone is invited to bring lawn chairs or blankets and a picnic supper to enjoy with the talents of West Texas performers.

There is no charge for any of these activities.

The Museum of the Southwest is at 1705 W. Missouri Ave. Regular hours are Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m.

Bluegrass offered

CLOUDCROFT, N.M. — Family entertainment is coming to Cloudcroft when the first Bluegrass Festival rolls into town June 23 and 24. This musical event will take place in Zenith Park's open-air pavilion, located next to the tennis courts.

Bluegrass is original American folk music, and our bluegrass artists will play all day with a special performance at 2 p.m. on Saturday. Bring you chair, guitar or banjo along with your mind tuned to for fun and join in.

For more information, call the Cloudcroft Chamber of Commerce at (505) 682-2733, or write P.O. Box 125, Cloudcroft, N.M. 88317.

Trivia quiz planned

ODESSA — Start your celebration of the Fourth of July off with a twist! Take a trivial pursuit excursion through the Presidential Museum. Try to stump the Museum experts as you answer questions about our presidents and first ladies; designed for the inquisitive, analytical and curious mind.

Visitors will pick up the museum's trivia quiz sheet at the reception desk. Celebrating our original 13 colonies, 13 curious questions will be asked.

This exercise in trivia madness will be held June 30 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Prizes will be given to the first 50 visitors (celebrating the states) who answer the quiz correctly.

The Presidential Museum is located at 622 N. Lee in Odessa. Admission is free, with museum hours Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The museum will be closed July 4.

Jaeger conducting

Don Th. Jaeger, music director and conductor of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, will serve as guest conductor at music festivals in Ohio and Pennsylvania in June.

The first performance of all Mozart concertos will take place at the Ohio Chamber Music Festival in Athens, Ohio, on June 28, with a repeat performance on June 29. The final concert will take place in Mt. Gretna, Pennsylvania, on July 1 under the auspices of Music at Gretna, an annual summer festival in southeastern Pennsylvania.

These performances will feature guest artists Frank Kowalsky, clarinetist, from Tallahassee, Florida; violinist Erica Kiesewetter of New York City; oboist Tom Gallant of New York City; and pianist Cameron Grant, also from New York. The orchestra is comprised of musicians from the New York, Baltimore and Washington, D.C. areas.

Writers to gather

SAN ANGELO — The Western Writers of America will have its 37th annual convention in San Angelo June 25-29.

At that time, the organization will give out eleven awards in different categories of literary achievement. These awards are bestowed upon the basis of the winner's talent, without regard to whether the person is a member of the Western Writers of America.

The top award, The Saddleman, a statue of a cowboy with his saddle slung over his shoulder, is given to a living individual who has made an outstanding contribution to the American West, whether a writer or not.

For more information, call Stan Paregien, 1-573-5956.
