With Father Coughlin and Rev. Gerald Smith represented, it appears that now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the third party.

ALLRED NAMES GARNER IN A ROUSING TALK

PHILADELPHIA, June 27.—Democrats who in five convention days ratified new deal and renominated their Roosevelt-Garner ticket, gathered tonight to notify the candidates that the political party is on.

They were renominated today in staid ceremonies of a democratic national convention which reshaped the party.

The convention adjourned since at 2:20 p. m. after a brave but unavailing effort to duplicate for Garner the demonstrations which greeted the name of Roosevelt last night and early today.

Then by tens of thousands the delegates moved toward the scene where Roosevelt's acceptance speech will be delivered.

Gov. Allred of Texas, a likely young man who has his eye on a seat in the United States Senate, put the name of Garner before the convention—probably the last to be put before such a gathering from such humble beginnings. Allred did not forget that homely and once politically potent touch.

Allred was talking against the clock and the eagerness of a scanty assembly to get done with this business and go elsewhere. The governor lashed out at the republican party and told the story of that candidate from the rude cabin to the legislature and finally the vice presidency.

Texas down front and squirming for a parade were ready with a cheer for every word.

"He needed only a loaf of bread under each arm," Allred shouted, "to suggest another Benjamin Franklin." Yipeses from Texans and others in the hall.

"His services as speaker and vice president have compelled the tribute of the nations," the governor continued. "I am honored—"

Allred was now roaring into the microphone—to present in nomination for the high office of vice president of the United States the name of our beloved John Nance Garner of Texas.

Into the aisles for the last time delegates swarmed in brave array, but their punch was gone. They were arm-weary and tired.

Thompson Trial On Spy Charges To Start July 3

LOS ANGELES, June 27.—Henry Thompson, 28-year-old suspected spy, will be tried July 3 on charges of helping to obtain and sell government secrets. His bond was placed at $10,000 in federal court.

County Group and Case Workers Talk On Relief Problem

The county's increasing responsibility in relief work was discussed Saturday afternoon at Eastland County Welfare association with members of commissioners' court.

Henry V. Davenport, president pro-tem of commissioners' court by the absence of Judge Clyde L. Garrett, stated discussion revolved on individuals who will not be eligible for old-age assistance and emergency relief cases.

It was brought out that Texas Relief commission aid expires July 1. Checks for June have already been received.

The county welfare association was formed recently by cooperation of Ranger, Cisco and Eastland city commissions with the county for distribution of federal surplus commodities and clothing.

Passage of the deficiency relief appropriation by congress recently will be an aid to local agencies in the relief problem, it was indicated by commissioners.

Snake Venom Is Exhibited at Trial

LOS ANGELES, June 27.—Tiny black crystals of snake venom today were added to the trial of red-haired Robert James, barber shop Romeo, accused of murdering his seventh wife.

The prosecution brought the crystals into the courtroom to try to prove he might have killed his wife painlessly but instead shoved her bare leg into a box of live rattlesnakes.

Rowland Kirby, from whom he said James tried to buy snakes, juggled the crystals and identified them as the ones he had given James to experiment with.

PENSIONS TO BE PAID BY NEXT TUESDAY

AUSTIN, June 27.—First old age assistance checks for the needy will go into the mails Tuesday.

Delivery of July payments for 40,000 will be made to the pensioners at their homes by postmasters, postmen and rural letter carriers.

The check from the state and federal government will be $20, it was estimated. The amount is based on need in compliance with both state and federal acts.

Today 38,000 "notices of approval" had been sent out. These are notices the application has been approved and specifying the amount allotted.

First checks will be for July only. The state has received $1,181,000 in federal funds to make the payments to be used in July and August and about $1,500,000 state funds raised from liquor taxes.

Blanton Is Still Busy at Capitol

A letter received from Hon. Thomas L. Blanton today reveals the fact that he will return to Texas as soon as possible. Congressman Blanton is a tireless worker and the accumulation of mail and other business matters and the late adjournment of congress has made it necessary that he stay at his post until the above things are straightened out.

Blanton has prepared some documents and a copy of each is being sent to the citizens in his district and he is very anxious that they be "preserved and read as much expense and time has been incurred in preparing same."

Congressman Blanton is scheduled to speak in Ranger on the afternoon of July fourth and will make an active campaign of his district just as soon as he returns to Texas.

Platform Carpenters Confer

The Democratic platform most likely was the topic of these two noted New Yorkers as they conferred at the party's convention in Philadelphia. Senator Robert Wagner, left, was chairman of the resolutions committee and Gov. Herbert Lehman, right, was a strong advocate of plank that would protect women and children in industry in the matter of wages and hours.

Other Events Are Scheduled Throughout The Day In Ranger.

America Can't Ignore Rest of World

Because of the great American habit of believing that all the republic's problems can be solved within the republic's boundaries, there is a certain air of unreality to the efforts of the political platform makers.

A party convention meets and its delegates devote a roomful of assorted headaches to the job of figuring out what is wrong with the country and what ought to be done about it.

In due time they reach agreement. They decide what should be done about the currency, about the farm surplus, about industrial over-production, and about unemployment. Then, wrapping it all up in a ball and handing it to their chosen candidate they go home well content.

And all the while a current may be setting in from some far-off and unheard-of spot—like Serajevo, for instance—that will make all their solutions look foolish.

For we live in a world community nowadays, and national problems are but one side of the world's problems. Which is to say that a plank on foreign relations might well be the most important part of the entire platform.

It doesn't get treated that way, of course. A party will declare for neutrality in case of foreign war, for adequate national defense, for non-entanglement in overseas politics, and for a revival of foreign trade.

Seldom or never will it go beyond that, or offer any concrete plan for attainment of these ends.

And yet it is precisely there that the most detailed plans and the most carefully thought-out programs are necessary.

For everything else in the platform may, unexpectedly, come to depend on what is done in the field for foreign relations.

You may set up the most elaborate devices for restoring farm prosperity, quickening industry, ending unemployment, and balancing the budget; overnight there may come a European war to make all those plans utterly worthless.

Then you will find that your entire domestic program hangs on what you do in the foreign field.

Indeed, it does not take a foreign war to do it. The mere threat of war may do it.

A far-away financial disaster, like the crash of the Austrian Credit-Anstalt in 1931, may undo everything you have tried to do.

A new British Empire trade agreement or a Japan aggressively pushing a new export plan, may have the most profound effect on your domestic economy.

It would be refreshing to see a great political party frankly admit all this, and devote its best thought to the writing of a platform which would take a world view of America's difficulties.

But because the subject is extraordinarily complex, and because Americans have a child-like faith that the Atlantic ocean is just as wide now as it was in 1800, that doesn't happen.

Instead, we write the usual, 100-per-cent-American platform—and trust to luck that Europe will let us carry it out.

One of the Big Problems the Democrats Must Face

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—To a considerable—and perhaps even conclusive—degree, the presidential campaign will be a contest between the personalities of the candidates.

Platforms will be much the same. Landon's campaign managers are at least as shrewd as Roosevelt's.

The Roosevelt record is either a great asset or a net handicap, according to your views, and you either prefer it to Landon's record as governor of Kansas or you don't.

Under these circumstances, although it's to be remembered that the record of each man is the best indication of what he would do in the White House from 1937 to 1941, personalities become important.

The infectious smile of the gay and glittering Roosevelt will be opposed to the winning, friendly grin of the folksy, small-town Landon.

The wealthy, patrician background of the "Squire of Hyde Park" will be opposed by the rugged setting of prairie, oil field, and Main Street from which steps "the Kansas Coolidge."

This conflict with its possibilities for dramatization, plays a large part in the plans of Landon strategists and it already is causing concern in the New Deal camp.

It seems there are many small towns in the country, and although Landon is several cuts above the average man, his appeal to the average man is so direct that any personal, derisive attacks from Farley, who is widely regarded as a Tammany city slicker with no lofty ethics, aren't likely to do Landon any harm or Roosevelt any good.

The country is rapidly getting the picture of Landon—old-fashioned and homely virtues, warm and friendly small-town manner, well-to-do family man who likes to go catfishing and walks down every day for lunch to a Main street cafeteria, commonplace but shrewd, enough hard-headed common sense—horse sense if you like—to pay his own debts and his state's, the boy who sold eggs to neighbors at the age of 10, shirt sleeves and open collar on any hot day, office door always wide open to the folks, honest, thrifty, modest, kindly, tolerant, and so on.

All that, along with the alleged virtues of Kansas—with a soft pedal on prohibition laws, anti-cigarette laws, and certain past or present peculiarities—is the bill of goods which Chairman John Hamilton and his host will be trying to sell the nation in the next few months.

It may go over well or it may flare back. Much depends on the skill with which the New Dealers handle it, and no one can tell.

The Landonites expect the candidate's personality and background to draw in votes of millions of farmers, city workers, and small-town business men everywhere.

On the other hand, Roosevelt has exhibited as popular and appealing a personality as any man who ever parked in the White House. His charm is famous and his direct method of appealing personally to the masses of the people has been his greatest political asset.

Negro Car Thief A Little Careless Picking Customer

By United Press

DALLAS—A negro buttonholed Detective E. L. Warnack in the Dallas downtown business area.

"I can get you any kind of an automobile you want for a little money if you're interested," he confided.

Detective Warnack, whose duties consist of arresting automobile thieves and recovering stolen machines, admitted he was interested slightly.

The negro then said, "We'll have to drive a short distance out of town. I've got a car there I stole."

Detective Warnack considered. "Well," he said, "wait until I call my brother. He's got a car."

The officer went to a telephone and called headquarters and asked for his "brother." The "brother" was Detective M. M. Bullick and the car was a police squad car.

The two detectives and the negro drove into a deserted field north of town, and there found a small coupe hidden behind high grass.

"This is it," the negro said. "So are you," said Detective Warnack, slipping on the handcuffs.

NEW YORK—Clubs have changed a lot in a quarter of a century. The ball has undergone revolutionary changes. Courses have been improved. But, as Walter Hagen points out, the same mental quality that decided golf championships when he participated in the first of his 22 United States Opens in 1913 still is paramount—concentration.

"There were 30 golfers at Baltusrol who had the mechanical skill required to win the United States Open, but how many of them could keep on concentrating for 72 holes?" asks Hagen. "How many could dismiss a bad shot as soon as it was made and focus their minds on the next stroke?"

"I could do that once, but my mind strays now. "Mechanically I'm hitting the ball more soundly than I did 20 years ago. I'll go along fine for five or six holes, and then miff a simple little shot which looked impossible to miss. That means that my mind slipped a cog. Something distracted my attention momentarily. I still concentrate on the tough shots, but I can't rivet my thoughts on the easy ones as in years gone by.

"Bobby Jones could concentrate to a greater degree than any other golfer. Here is an example of how the Georgian walled off his mind from all outside happenings.

"When Jones won the National Amateur at Braeburn in 1928, one of his drives hit a spectator. The victim dropped as though beamed by an ax. They rang for an ambulance.

"Such an accident would have unnerved most competitors, but

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

BY MARY E. DAGUE

NEA Service Staff Writer

When you're planning cool and tempting meals for hot summer days, don't forget the appeal of crisp, snowy linen, crystal and gleaming silver.

An inviting table can go a long way toward propping up wilted appetites and soothing worn nerves. The wise housewife gives special attention to table arrangements during the warm weather.

Flower arrangements should always be fresh, so be sure to use bowls that are deep enough to hold plenty of water. Some authorities advocate immersion of the entire flower stem in water, and if you can use crystal bowls the effect of tender green stems through the clear glass is lovely.

To Care for Silver Those who are fortunate enough to own sterling silver need have no hesitancy in using it on the table every day. With proper care, you will never wear it out. To be sure, it shouldn't be used in the kitchen for scraping and stirring because the edges will wear down, but daily use on the table will not even dim its gleam. If you wash sterling silver in hot soap suds, rinse it in scalding water and wipe it dry on a clean linen dish towel, it will keep its luster indefinitely. Rub off food stains with each dishwashing, so that the silver is bright and shining at every meal. This adds immeasurably to the beauty of any table and keeps the silver in perfect condition.

There's a dignity about heavy silver damask and crystal with white that few other color schemes achieve. I have some fine old damask that belonged to my grandmother and it's as satiny today as when she used it more than fifty years ago.

The contrast of the pure white linen with colored foods is most effective, too. Your menu may be anything you choose because there can be no clash in color with white.

Of course there's nothing like a plate of hot soup to cool one off, but you can't make a mistake with a tomato juice frappe, either.

Tomato Juice Frappe Two cans of your favorite brand of tomato juice, 2 lemons, 1-2 teaspoon celery salt, 1-4 teaspoon onion pepper, 4 teaspoons sugar, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 1-8 teaspoon pepper, 2 drops tabasco sauce.

Open tomato juice and turn into a pitcher. Add remaining ingredients, stirring until sugar and salt and other seasonings are thoroughly dissolved. Pour into freezing trays and freeze until mushy. Serve in glasses with a slice of lime.

Follow the frappe with broiled minute steaks which may be anything from a cut of round to the filet. Have them cut thin and broil them quickly. Top with grilled mushrooms, just as you serve them, and add a bunch of crisp watercress if it is available.

Legionnaires
 Story of Their World War Experiences

First Lieut. W. Ross Hodges, Veterinary Corps, A. E. F., Melve Bulcy, France, on Easter Sunday, 1919.

Editor's Note: This is the seventeenth of a series of World War biographies being written by B. H. Peacock, Commander of the American Legion Post of Ranger, covering the experiences of members of the local Post. The biography of another veteran will appear in next Sunday's issue.

W. ROSS HODGES

Possibly one of the most unusual experiences to happen to a soldier during the World War outside of those that took place at the front fell to the lot of Lieut. W. Ross Hodges of 906 Cherry Street, Ranger, Texas.

"I had been assigned to duty with the Thirty-fourth Division at Deming, N. M., in November of 1917," stated Hodges. "At that time the army was experimenting with a new type of saddle which was patterned jointly after both the French and the American officers' saddle. Orders were received from the War Department to give this saddle a very severe and comprehensive test. I was thereupon detailed as veterinarian to accompany four troops of cavalry on a 1,000-mile forced march through the states of New Mexico, Arizona and Texas, and thence back into New Mexico. We made the march in thirty days, our rations consisting of hardtack, beans and coffee. My big moment was naturally when we again reached camp."

The life of a veterinarian, like that of all other branches of the service, had its ups and downs. It was shortly after the declaration of war that on June 21, 1917, Dr. W. Ross Hodges discarded his civilian attire and accepted a commission as veterinarian in the United States Army. He had some five years previously thereto graduated and received the degree of doctor of veterinary medicine from the Kansas City Veterinary College. Then came five years of practice in his chosen profession in partnership with his brother, Dr. R. H. Hodges, in the city of Waco.

The first assignment for the lieutenant was at Fort Bliss, near the city of El Paso. "And in addition to my first soldiering experience there," stated the doctor, "I shall never forget those famous sandstorms which visited our barracks occasionally. The sand literally went through the brick walls, it seemed, due to its exceptional penetrating nature."

Those in the veterinary corps, according to Dr. Hodges, were always assigned to some particular branch or department to which their services were required. Naturally, the cavalry were very generous in the use of their services, for without the expert advice and training of these men in the care and maintenance of the horses and mules, the mobility of this branch of the service would have been greatly impaired.

Breckenridge Team Defeats Texaco In Nine-Inning Game

The Bender's team from Breckenridge defeated the Texaco team from Ranger Friday night at the Municipal Softball field by a score of 10 to 8 in a nine-inning game, the only game played.

The game was not started until 8:54, but an announcement was made at the park that in the future all games would be started promptly at 8 o'clock, whether the crowd had arrived or not and the teams must have completed their workouts in time to get the games started promptly at 8:00 o'clock.

The Texaco team showed considerable improvement behind the pitching of Cleo Gray, and had more pep and fight than at any time this year. All through the game they presented a serious threat that looked like it might be turned into a victory at any time.

Only a small crowd attended the game as it had not been advertised and but a few knew a game was to be played.

Ranger Santa Anna Play at Brownwood

Dress July Fourth Luncheon Table with Flags, Firecrackers

Patriotic color scheme can be smartly employed in Fourth of July entertainments, whether you are entertaining indoors or out-of-doors. It's all in selecting your menu, and since so menus have become decorative what could be more appropriate than decorations of flags, and firecrackers? Of course these firecrackers are harmless ones, though of the giant size. They're merely of red paper, closed at the ends, with realistic fuses protruding. Four of them, framing a bowl of flowers, makes a most inviting display.

Any red, white and blue flowers may be combined for the centerpiece.

Ham is Main Dish

If you want a rather pretentious luncheon menu, built around the patriotic colors, you can make no better choice for the main dish than baked ham served with potatoes. Cut beets in pencil-like strips, after cooking, and reheat in lemon butter. Put a thread of shredded coconut at one end of each strip to make them lighter and arrange on plates to look like a part of a package of firecrackers.

For the salad, cannon balls of cream cheese, piled up with a tiny flag in the top of each, will carry out the color scheme. You can use a thick slice of tomato which has been marinated in well seasoned French dressing for the base of the salad.

Cantaloupe ring with black cherry sauce is a dessert that is delicious and easily made. Here is the recipe:

Cantaloupe Ring a la Mode With Black Cherry Sauce
Wash and chill cantaloupe. Cut in rings 1 1/4 inches thick. Peel and remove seeds. Put a ring on each dessert plate and fill with a generous serving of vanilla ice cream. Pour over chilled black cherry sauce over the ice cream and serve.

Use canned or fresh cherries. If you use fresh cherries it will take a quart. Stone, having the juice, sprinkle with 1 cup granulated sugar and let stand 1 hour. Add juice and bring to the boiling point. Drain off juice. There should be 1 1/2 cups.

One and one-half cups cherry juice, 5 tablespoons granulated sugar, 2 1/2 tablespoons cornstarch, 2 tablespoons cold water, 1 tablespoon lemon juice.

Heat juice and add sugar. When dissolved add cornstarch which has been mixed to a smooth paste with cold water. Cook and stir for 15 minutes. Cool, and while still warm add lemon juice. Chiffon thoroughly and add cherries.

Salted nuts and candies complete a seasonal and fitting menu for a Fourth of July supper or 1 o'clock luncheon.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

On her wedding day MARCIA CUNNINGHAM held her hand to Bob HASKELL, holding one of the bridesmaids, KEVIA, that he loves her but can't afford to marry her.

Marcia burst and blundered, said alone on the trip that was to have been a honeymoon. On the ship she met PHILIP KIRKBY, engineer. Phil is going to Paris to ask CAMILLA HOWE, to whom he has been devoted for years, to marry him.

In Paris Marcia meets Camilla. Bob arrives and the four go about together from that time on.

At night they meet ROSITA, a dancer, and Pierre, a flake. Some blacklight photographs are made. Later Pierre and Rosita, using the photographs, try to blackmail Marcia, demanding 50,000 francs.

Marcia confides in Camilla. Bob and Phil, the men promise to deal with the blackmailers. Marcia, thoroughly alarmed, is willing to pay the 50,000 francs, but Camilla refuses to let her leave the hotel.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER IX

It was late afternoon when Camilla's telephone rang again. "Good news," Phil's voice said. "Is Marcia with you?"

"She is. Under padlock. Come on up. We're bursting to hear."

Turning, she threw off the violet negligee and slipped her arms into a violet chiffon afternoon dress. "You're saved, Marcia. So are the 50,000 francs. Oh, I'm so glad!"

Marcia gave a long, shuddering sigh. "Camilla, I'd have paid it."

"I know you would. And, once they had that, they would have bagged you for life. There's the door."

Phil entered alone. "Bob will be along pretty soon. He laid out that four-flasher and got a nice sock of his own."

"And what about this?" Camilla swung him around until a cut on his cheek was in plain sight.

"The chap was wearing a diamond ring and it scratched. Nothing much."

"You're sure Bob will be all right?" Marcia was saying.

Strange that he should be disturbed because this girl with the red hair was asking so concerningly about another man, Phil reminded himself. Well, if she felt that way about him—and of course she did—hadn't he known it all along? Well, since she did, he might as well have the laurels on his own neck and for all.

"How did you find the evil-doers?" Camilla asked.

"Money. It talks. Somebody who should have kept still gave us an address and somebody there thought we were friends and gave us another and pretty soon we landed at the room."

"Then what happened?" Marcia was standing in front of him, hands crossed like a child's.

"We asked for the negatives, a nice exchange names took place among us, and in the scrimmage—two against one, which wasn't fair to the gigoles—we found the negatives and two sets of pictures which we tore into 7000 pieces. Then he yelled for help—after all, we were rifling his home—and help came. That was where the fun began. I held the gigoles and Bob knocked out a couple of people and tore the pictures and then tossed Pierre—the one with the grin named Pierre—we left him with a bump on his head."

WHEN Bob came, with a bandaged eye, it was decided to go somewhere and celebrate.

In the end, they chose Rheims. "I want to see the cathedral by night," Marcia said. "Up to it, Phil?" Bob asked. "After the way you trounced three people I should think you would be tired. I carried away the spoils on my face and Phil did the work."

Marcia's eyes met Phil's. Phil had tried to make Bob a hero for her! Then he must want her to be pleased. Or perhaps he didn't care what she thought of him, anyway, and that was why he gave the credit to another.

Camilla's eyes, too, sought Phil's. For a different reason. If he cared enough for Marcia's happiness to give credit to a man who mattered in her life, he must care for her.

Marcia sat in front of her mirror a little later, watching the tones of her make-up. Thinking she had loved Bob for a long time—she had been hurt when he had danced too often, smiled too often, at somebody else. She could not understand why he had ceased to be important when for so long he had been the pivot of every plan. She had almost married him!

"If love can be turned off just like pressing a button and putting on a lamp, or wiggling a spot and making the hot water stop—if that is love, then what's the use of it?" she asked her reflection.

MARCIA came down to the lobby, to meet the others, a little late.

They went to Rheims in an automobile, long and swift, which Phil had rented somewhere. He drove, and Camilla sat with him. From the rear seat, Marcia watched his shoulders and the profile that she glimpsed when he turned to speak to the girl at his side or to toss a remark to her and Bob.

Marcia became aware, during the simple dinner in the Rheims hotel, that Camilla was gazing at Bob with the adoration that girls had given him always. Camilla's Marcia caught her breath. Why?

IN her room, Marcia sat by the window for a while. "Don't let anything happen to you." He might not come back to Paris from this trip. He could catch a boat at Havre and escape Paris. Or he might come back and she would be gone. She must go home some time.

Phil was in love with a girl whom he had followed just as Bob had followed her, she reasoned. She, Marcia Cunningham, had made a mess of everything and now she ought to get some sleep. But she couldn't. She put her wrap on, instead, and went down to the lobby. There was a restaurant across the street where she could get some hot milk. She was nearing the exit when a familiar voice caught her attention.

"Running out on us again?" It was Phil. "—not some milk. I couldn't sleep."

"You need a protector. May I go along? I've been looking up routes to the south."

They stepped out of the hotel door into a soft, warm night, where a yellow moon swung low above.

Phil was gay, impersonal, deferential. Marcia took the cue and laughed at trifles. At the door of the restaurant she paused. So did Phil. Camilla and Bob were sitting together at a corner table.

Camilla had Phil, who was everything a girl could want: Phil who built bridges and tramped the hills at night and never let people down. Still, if Camilla looked at Bob with such affection in her tired eyes—they were tired, Marcia admitted—Camilla might not care for a shack on a hill.

Phil looked puzzled. When he smiled at her, Marcia thought his grin half-wary and half-wistful. "Whom will you rescue tomorrow?" she asked finally to break a long silence. "You were out in a very good cause today. What do you want for rewards?"

"Oh, we're generous members of the Round Table," Phil retorted. "Maybe I'll help in several tournaments next week. I'm going to take a bicycle trip through the south of France."

"When did you make up your mind?" Camilla asked.

"Just now. I'm getting restless. I'll be gone a week or two." No one spoke very much on the ride home and when Phil said good night at the elevator he added goodby to the phrase.

"Goodby!" Marcia repeated. "I'll be off in the morning before you are up. I want to get a good start. Don't let anything happen to you."

Phil was in love with a girl whom he had followed just as Bob had followed her, she reasoned. She, Marcia Cunningham, had made a mess of everything and now she ought to get some sleep. But she couldn't. She put her wrap on, instead, and went down to the lobby. There was a restaurant across the street where she could get some hot milk. Phil entered alone. "Bob will be along pretty soon. He laid out that four-flasher and got a nice sock of his own."

"And what about this?" Camilla swung him around until a cut on his cheek was in plain sight.

"The chap was wearing a diamond ring and it scratched. Nothing much."

"You're sure Bob will be all right?" Marcia was saying.

Strange that he should be disturbed because this girl with the red hair was asking so concerningly about another man, Phil reminded himself. Well, if she felt that way about him—and of course she did—hadn't he known it all along? Well, since she did, he might as well have the laurels on his own neck and for all.

"How did you find the evil-doers?" Camilla asked.

"Money. It talks. Somebody who should have kept still gave us an address and somebody there thought we were friends and gave us another and pretty soon we landed at the room."

"Then what happened?" Marcia was standing in front of him, hands crossed like a child's.

Anne Elizabeth Day and Charles Dean Married Thursday, to Live at Ranger

Anne Elizabeth Day, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Day, and Charles Terrell Dean of Ranger, son of S. J. Dean, were united in marriage at the home of the parents of the bride, Thursday evening just at dusk, in a candle lighted setting that diffused a soft radiance about the improvised flower banked altar of ferns and daisies, flanked either side by tall seven branched candelabra, holding white cathedral candles, and with tall white lighted tapers on the mantel, starring the lace foliage that veiled the background.

The groom entered with William Driehofner, his best man, and met the bride attended by her bridesmaid, Miss Dorothy Day.

The impressive ring ceremony was read by Dr. Charles W. Estes, pastor of the Presbyterian church.

The bride was stunning in a navy blue going away sheer, white hat, with blue trim, white shoes and accessories, and wore a corsage of white gardenias. She carried a point lace handkerchief, 100 years old, heirloom of bridegroom's family, and carried by their brides through this span.

The bridesmaid was in dusty pink, smart knitted suit with corsage of sweetpeas.

Guests were received prior to the ceremony by the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Day; Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Day; Mrs. R. E. Sikes, Mrs. and Mrs. Earl Conner, Jr., and the groom's sister, Miss Sue Dean of Ranger.

Following the ceremony a reception was held for the one hundred guests, the personal relatives of either bride or groom, and a few close friends.

The dining room, softly candlelighted, had a charmingly arranged bride's table laid in lace, over pink silk and centered with the four tiered wedding cake, iced in doves, and little roses, and topped with a tiny bride and groom.

The confection centered the reflection mirrored with white ribbons and lace ferns.

Tall silver sticks with lighted white tapers encircled the reflector. Mrs. E. Roy Townsend presided over the cake, after the bride had cut the first slice, and was assisted by Mrs. Milton Lawrence and Mrs. W. A. Martin.

Lead frosted punch was served with the cake by Misses Margaret McLaughlin, Jo Wood, Rachel Pontreco; Mrs. William Dreinhofner; Miss Helen Weisner of Ranger and Mrs. E. L. Young, Jr., of Declaring that he wanted the state to hang him, so he could be free of the ghastly complex that made him hate all women, Albert Walter, 28, New Yorker, is shown above in San Francisco jail, after confessing he strangled Blanche Cousins, 24, business student. The court refused his guilty plea. He admitted killing the girl during a San Francisco date, after they had met on a long bus trip.

Legislator Gives Pledge to Correct Age Pension Laws

George A. Davison Jr., candidate for re-election to the legislature from the 106th district, Saturday in speeches at Gorman, Cisco, and Ranger, "dedicated" himself to "correction" of the old age pension.

"The old age pension," said Davison, "as originally written by Mr. Calvert, Mr. Hoffbeins and myself was amended by the senate so that it does not conform to the constitutional amendment by the people. I dedicate myself to the correction and the adjustment of these discrepancies as they now exist in the old age pension."

Davison predicted that unemployment insurance will become a reality since the constitutionality of the social security act has been upheld. He said the house unani-

Indian Mecca Believed Found

By United Press

CHICAGO—Excavations on the ruins of an ancient Pueblo village led by Dr. Paul S. Martin, curator of an ethnology at Field Museum of Natural History to believe that the Mecca of the Holy Land had its counterpart a thousand years ago in southwestern Colorado.

"Lowry Ruin," shrouded in mystery for hundreds of years, was rebuilt six different times. Dr. Martin found, a phenomenon not encountered in studies of other southwestern prehistoric ruins.

"It indicated," he said, "that Lowry may have been a holy place to which pilgrimages were made."

The underground kivas, chambers for religious ceremonies, is one of the largest ever discovered, he said.

It was deserted by its builders hundreds of years before the coming of the first white men, the archeologist found, the tribe presumably migrating out of Colorado in the face of a stranger invader.

The people probably were ancestors of the Pueblo Indians found in Arizona and New Mexico, Dr. Martin believes. The invaders who drove them out probably were the stronger Navahos.

The great kiva, with certain structural modifications, was preserved through all the occupancies of Lowry Pueblo.

Dr. Martin, who spent four summers examining the ruins, said he believed the population of Lowry and its surrounding area, apparently was sparse at all times, not more than 50 or 60 persons living in the pueblo at any one time.

There were no fortifications or signs of fire or battle. The population presumably fled peacefully before the Navahos.

Tree rings in timbers, such as roof beams, were used to compute dates.

"Leonardo da Vinci spent 15 years painting the tips of Mont Lisa." According to their handy, modern women can touch up their own quicker than that.

I ask my Constituents please to preserve and kindly read two documents which I have gone to much expense in printing and mailing to them, one entitled "What is to become of Congress if we are influenced by threats," which embraces my Government Printing Office Report, about which in 1921 Mondell tried to put me out of Congress, and the other is entitled "What Blanton's 12 Counties have received from the Government since 1933." Legionnaires and Their Stories—

"It was odd but nevertheless true," stated Hodges, "but the army in a sense gave more attention and personal care to its horses than it did to the men." It was absolutely necessary that these bearers or burden upon which the army depended so much should have the very best of care and attention.

The Thirty-fourth Division left Camp Deming on June 7, 1917, and arrived at Hoboken some eight days later. It was while the outfit was temporarily halted at Camp Dix, New Jersey, that orders were received advancing Lieutenant Hodges from junior to senior grade.

The English freighter Critic, together with seven other ships and two destroyers, formed the convoy that carried a portion of the Division across.

In order to escape contact with the dreaded German U-boats, the convoy elected to take the extreme northern, or Great Circle route, which carried them near the coast of Newfoundland. It was on this occasion that Lieutenant Hodges saw his first and only iceberg.

"No submarines were encountered on our trip to England," stated the lieutenant, "but we did encounter a storm at sea, in which three of our men were washed overboard. Two of them were recovered, however, but the third was never found. Due to sickness and other causes, several of our men died and were buried at sea. And not until then did the full import of the great adventure impress many of our men so much as on that occasion. Taps were gently blown by the bugler, the volley fired and the body of the soldier, who had given all for his country, was lowered into a watery grave."

After some seven or eight days on the water, the Thirty-fourth landed at Liverpool, entrained shortly for Winchester, and then to Wimbledon Downs, where camp was made. It was while at Wimbledon Downs that Lieutenant Hodges, together with other fellow officers, was invited to a party given by Lord Shelley at his country estate, where many of the dignitaries of the British Empire had gathered to do homage to the American soldiers.

Lieutenant Hodges next experienced the rare opportunity of being detailed as an official escort for 200 American nurses and ten telephone girls who were en route across the Channel and for service in France. "After having gone some piece out in the Channel," stated Hodges, "we were chased back by one of Kaiser Wilhelm's U-boats, and it was several days before we attempted and completed our passage over to the mainland."

Lieutenant Hodges finally landed at LeHavre, however, and from there was ordered to Paris and later to the hospital center at Melve Buley. This was about the first of August, 1918, and Lieutenant Hodges' experiences for the balance of the period of the war carried him in and out of Melve Buley in attached duties with the Service of Supply. At this place his services as veterinarian were in connection with the building of the 40,000-bed base hospital, which at one time cared for 50,000 patients. "It was an immense organization in itself," stated Hodges. "A total of 2,000 nurses, as well as thousands of attendants, were required to handle the trainloads of sick and wounded that were brought in from day to day from the front. And as for the American girls who went over to do their bit as nurses, the army would have done itself proud by giving every one of them a medal of honor. We must remember that they were all volunteers, and the eighteen to twenty hours per day which many of them put in so unselfishly, should not go unnoticed by the government which they served."

The main weakness or disease which the army horse and mule suffered was that of distemper in America and mange and blood poisoning in France. Many that were exposed to the mustard gas of the Germans suffered terrible sores, and from which quite a few of them either died or became unfit for service.

"After the armistice," stated Dr. Hodges, "we sold quite a number of the horses to the French for food purposes. The horse was a fairly delicate dish with them, and the surplus left over after the war was disposed of mainly in that manner."

The months after the armistice and to the date of sailing for home was consumed in a more or less routine manner by Hodges and his buddies. Invariably after pay day, several of the men, including Hodges, would take an excursion down to either southern France, Italy, Spain, or to Paris.

On August 3, 1919, Hodges and his outfit set sail from St. Nazaire and some eight days later landed at the port of New York. Transfers carried them to Camp Dix, and later to Fort Dodge, Iowa, where on August 27, 1919, they were given honorable discharges from the army of the United States.

Again in civil life after over two years in the military service, Dr. Hodges went back to his old home in Ranger, where he practiced his profession for some two years. It seemed to be a habit with all of the soldiers, for on September 15, 1921, the doctor became married to Miss Faye Boyd of Durant, Okla. Later treks carried them to Mexico, and again in 1926 back to Ranger. And he it said to the honor of Mrs. Hodges that not only the Hodges family but the Boyds as well did their bit in the fight for democracy across the seas. Spurrier, a brother of Miss Boyd, went across and paid the supreme sacrifice while over there. A beautiful tribute from a buddy, Private Charles E. Dyer, spoke in glowing terms of the attributes of this soldier and of his fidelity to the cause in a letter received by the sister and postmarked Allery, France.

Dr. and Mrs. Hodges and their young son now reside in the city of Ranger, where he is practicing his profession of veterinary medicine. They are both quite active in the civic and religious life of the community, being substantial members of the First Baptist Church of this city. Dr. Hodges is an honor member of the Lions Club and the American Legion, and his friends are numbered in the host of acquaintances which he has made.

The American Legion and other organizations take deep pride in announcing the affiliation of soldiers such as this.

The hours between 12:30 and 1:30 will be for lunch and in the afternoon more political speaking, ball games, terrapin race and horned frog race with prizes in both events.

The automobile event will take place at the swimming pool at 5 o'clock and immediately following this the soft ball games will be played, the fiddlers contest to be held in the evening and the close out of the day will be with another softball game at night. The last game of the day will be the only thing for which a charge is to be made. This is made necessary because of the extra expense for the lights at the field.

There will be many prominent speakers present. Hon. Thos. L. Blanton will be here at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Roy Sanderford, candidate for governor will be on the program in the early part of the day as well as speakers for state senator, county representatives and flatorial representatives, besides a number of the county candidates, all of whom will be given as much time as possible on the program. The grounds are being arranged so that plenty of shade will be available with plenty of parking space so all can come and go as they choose.

A big time has been arranged for the entertainment of the people for the entire day and everyone is invited to come and spend the day. E. A. Ringold is master of ceremonies of the political speaking and is arranging the program for that part of the celebration.
