Lefors expects completion of water well by September

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

LEFORS — The target date for completion of a water well by the city of Lefors has been set at Sept. 1, Mayor Gene Gee said Monday.

Gee said a contract has now been signed with Pat Youngblood regarding water rights acquisition and the procedure is in place for the next step of the water well grant from the Texas Department of Commerce.

He said an environmental assessment will take two weeks and the Department of Housing and Community Affairs will then review the plan during another two-week period. Following that, Gee said, bids will be taken for the work.

"We are pleased we are off center and moving," Gee said during a City Council meeting. "My best guessimate is September 1 for turning on the tap. That is a guessimate, but let's shoot for that as a goal date."

Work on the project had been put on hold after water tested where the city originally proposed the new water well turned out not to pass state standards.

Of the water where the city now plans to drill, Gee said, "The quality will be a 2,000 percent improvement over what we have now."

Lefors water now has a high salt content and the new well water is expected to be mixed with other well water to dilute the salty water.

In unrelated business, Gee said the city has incurred problems with the present trash-hauling service. The city began hauling trash in September 1991 after the city landfill was closed.

"When the city assumed the hauling, I recommended to you the plan was not a workable plan," Gee said.

The mayor said he would like to go back to a system where the residents haul their own trash to a central location.

He said the recent build up of trash at residents' barrels has been because the city of Pampa landfill has been closed due to rainy weather and Lefors has been unable to get in the landfill.

"There is no way we have room to be a collection site until Pampa opens," Gee said. "At this stage, this system we have right now is not working."

"Folks, I hate to say this, but everything we do is going to cost money," he said of how to overcome the problems.

Council Member Bobby Barnes encouraged residents to call the mayor or City Council members and let them know if they would like the city to continue to collect trash in alleys or whether residents would prefer hauling their own trash to a central location.

Gee said he plans to set up a work session in the near future to discuss the trash issue.

In other business, the City Council learned from Gee that streets had not been graded recently because the equipment was not working properly. He also said fewer streets had been lost because they have not been graded during the rainy weather.

However, Lefors resident Steven Franks, disagreed, saying the streets are going to get too much damage from erosion if the city does not start grading them sooner after rainy weather.

Resident Shorty Minter said, "I've been there (at his residence location) for 45 years and this is the worst I've ever seen it (the road condition at his residence)."

Gee said he is in the process of negotiating with the county to help provide road maintenance for one or two days a month, and added, "it's going to cost money."

unanimously approved using Stacey Hughes and Jerry Greenwell as independent contractors to tear down a house and clean several pieces of property in Lefors for a total charge of $900.

received a presentation from Gary Stevens with Southwestern Bell Telephone regarding a possible new ordinance between the city and the telephone company. The ordinance would call for increased payments to the city for the use of alley ways, etc., but would also increase a rate on a typical residence customer's monthly telephone bill from 19 cents to 50 cents the first year and 85 cents a month thereafter.

The city received $646 from the telephone company in 1991. Under the new ordinance the city would receive $2,000 the first year and not less than $3,300 the second and subsequent years of the five-year contract.

unanimously approved a proposal from the Lefors Art and Civic Club to take on the Civic Center as a project. The club has proposed a work day in the kitchen and said the group will pay a reasonable amount to paint the ceiling and purchase the paint and help paint the bottom of walls.

The group also said it was willing to pay a professional to come in and strip, clean and polish the Civic Center floor.

Earth Summit peaks, forms new U.N. body

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — After 2 1/2 years of tedious negotiations, Earth Summit delegates have approved a new United Nations body to monitor compliance with environmental treaties and gauge progress toward the summit's goals.

Environmentalists praised the establishment Monday of the U.N. Commission on Sustainable Development, calling it one of the summit's major accomplishments.

In a joint news release, four environmental groups said the commission will provide a way to hold governments accountable for their actions on the environment.

It will also be a forum for the continuation of negotiations begun at the Earth Summit, they said.

"I think it's one of the most significant accomplishments" of the gathering, said Kathy Sessions of the United Nations Association of the United States.

Although the commission's regulations will not be legally binding, they will create what Sessions called "soft law" that can lead to legally binding treaties.

Scott Hajost of the Environmental Defense Fund was more circumspect about the commission. "The proof is going to be in the followup by governments," said Hajost, a former State Department attorney.

He praised the United States for its role in the negotiations establishing the commission. "The United States was fairly constructive on this issue." While the United States was being praised for its work on the commission, it was being criticized for pressing some of its European allies not to split with it over the issue of global warming.

U.S. officials sent letters to Austria, Switzerland and Britain urging them not to support the so-called "like-minded countries" declaration, drafted by the Austrians, Swiss and Dutch, according to European officials.

The declaration calls for the reduction of carbon dioxide emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2000, a provision that European countries had wanted to include in the global warming treaty prepared for the Earth Summit.

United States opposition forced the Europeans to drop their demand, and the treaty now suggests — but does not require — that emission levels be reduced. The release of carbon dioxide and other gases, most often through the burning of fossil fuels, is believed to contribute to global warming.

Michael Young, deputy head of the U.S. summit delegation, was asked about the pressure tactics at a news briefing. He drew peals of derisive laughter when he said, "The United States never puts pressure on anybody."

The controversy over the like-minded countries declaration threatens to widen the rift between the United States and some of its allies over Washington's steadfast opposition to the treaty on preserving the globe's biological diversity.

President Bush on Sunday reiterated his position that the treaty would hurt U.S. industry and cost American jobs.

Led by Germany, the European Community, which has expressed concern about the isolation of the United States at the summit, is drafting another, weaker declaration that it hopes to offer as a substitute for the like-minded countries declaration, said Lauren Jan Brinkhorst, the European Community's spokesman.

But Brinkhorst insisted that the industrial powers — including the United States as the world's biggest producer of carbon dioxide — must show a commitment to halting global warming.

"This is a signal to the world, of course also to the United States, that industrialized countries are willing to take the heat and take our responsibilities seriously," he said.

Critics attack LA police chief's threat

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police Chief Daryl F. Gates called it a bluff. His critics called it an attempt to hold City Hall hostage.

Gates said Monday he wasn't serious when he said he might postpone his retirement at the end of the month because of a dispute over the promotion of commanders. But that did nothing to soothe those who want him out.

"The bully backed down this morning," said Ramona Ripston, executive director of the Southern California American Civil Liberties Union.

Mayor Tom Bradley said Gates was well aware his threat would be disruptive.

"It's very clear that for his own heady reasons he was trying to hold the city hostage," said Bradley, who a year ago had called for Gates' retirement.

"He has left that Police Department in a total shambles. He has left this city in a lurch," Councilman Zev Yaroslavsky said. "That's the thanks he gives to the people of this city. He gives them the big finger."

Gates, who already has placed his retirement on hold once, said last week he might do so again to take a stand on behalf of captains up for promotion.

The threat stirred City Hall, which already was reeling from riots that left 52 people dead after four officers were acquitted in the Rodney King beating. Under civil service rules, Gates can be removed for misconduct only.

At a news conference Monday, however, Gates said he still plans to leave by month's end.

"I will admit that that was a threat, a bluff, but it's the only thing a lame duck has these days," he said.

Gates has been under pressure to step aside since the videotaped King beating more than a year ago.

Gates said he merely wanted the city to keep the captains on a 2-year-old civil service list that expired this month.

His successor, Philadelphia Police Commissioner Willie Williams, spent Monday packing for his move to Los Angeles.

"I think that what we saw in California was the fact that when people push Chief Gates' button he reacts, and when he pushes people's buttons, they react. It was a lot of gamesmanship going on," he said.

Lefors officials discuss utility free-bees

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

LEFORS — Lefors City Council on Monday revised a decision last month to give utility discounts to full-time employees, Council members and volunteer firefighters.

Last month, the City Council voted to give the employees, themselves and firefighters free water for any over the first 2,000 gallons for which there is an $8 basic rate charge.

Mayor Gene Gee explained that the action taken last month actually created a monetary decrease to some of the firefighters, who had been receiving the first 2,000 gallons of water — or $8 — for free.

Instead, Gee recommended the Council change the action to provide the $8 basic rate on the water and the $8 monthly rate on the sewer at no cost to the employees, City Council and firefighters.

The $16 in free-bees each month per household was unanimously approved on a motion by Council Member Bobby Barnes, seconded by Council Member Wendell Akins.

Council Member Derl Boyd, who abstained from last month's vote, was not present at Monday night's meeting.

Gee said in May the action would affect about 18 accounts and would be a loss of revenue of about $180 a month for the city. Under the revision approved Monday, the city would receive a loss of about $288 a month.

In unrelated action, the Council unanimously approved the purchase of a building from Ross Blasingame at a cost of $3,500. The building is being renovated to be used as offices for the city marshal, city judge and Precinct 1 Justice of the Peace. The Council also expressed a willingness to provide office space for the sheriff.

Precinct 1 Justice of the Peace Bob Muns pays $50 a month to rent office space in the Civic Center. That money will be applied to help pay for the purchase of the building.

The Council unanimously approved an estimated $300 expenditure for title insurance on the building, which is south of City Hall, and approved the transfer of $5,000 from an interest-bearing account. The $5,000 will be used to purchase the property, to buy the title insurance and to pay for items needed to renovate the building.

Perot's EDS restricted employees' dress, personal conduct

WASHINGTON (AP) — Employees who went to work at Ross Perot's Electronic Data Systems signed contracts that gave the company the right to investigate their private lives, prohibited them from leaving to compete with EDS and stipulated how they could dress at work.

One form obtained by The Associated Press, dated May 1980, notified each new employee that EDS reserved the right to scrutinize his "character, general reputation, personal characteristics and mode of living." EDS workers were required to read and sign the document as a condition of employment.

An 88-page EDS employee manual obtained by the AP contained a section entitled "Personal Standards," and explained that a worker's "character, integrity and behavior, both on and off the job, determine the image EDS has in the community. Therefore, your standards of conduct must at all times be above reproach."

Perot, preparing an independent run for the White House, did not respond to a reporter's written list of questions about the personnel documents.

But last week, Perot said he strongly believes in an individual's right to privacy.

"I have said again and again that what people do in their private lives is their own business," Perot said on NBC.

Millidge Hart III, who was president of EDS from 1962 to 1978, said that while the company conducted background checks of prospective employees, he did not recall a document that could authorize probes after a worker was hired.

"I don't remember the 'mode of living' thing, but there was nothing of that nature happening when I was there," said Hart, now a businessman in Dallas. "I don't think we ever investigated anyone."

Perot founded EDS in 1962 and built the computer services company into a multi-million dollar concern before selling it to General Motors Corp. in 1984.

He ran a tight ship at EDS, and insisted on tough standards for his employees.

The handbook for new employees spelled out what men and women could wear on the job.

Men were expected to wear "conservative shirts. ... Following approval by the location manager, short-sleeved shirts may be worn during the warmest summer months."

These shirts were to be worn with "a conservative business suit," and complemented by "a conservative business tie, color-coordinated with suit and shirt." Footwear was to be "all-leather, lace-up, slip-on or wing-tip shoes."

"Neatly trimmed" moustaches were acceptable, but full beards were not, and hair could not be below the collar, the document shows.

Women were expected to wear "a skirted suit, dress, skirt and blouse or skirt and sweater." Pantsuits were not to be worn by "management personnel, systems engineers, corporate and financial personnel or secretaries," but exceptions could be made "during the coldest winter months."

A separate handbook prepared for clerical employees and some secretaries was less strict on the dress code.

Hart explained the dress code by saying, "Some of the managers said their guys had no idea what kind of clothes to buy. So we wrote up a document spelling it out."

Tony Goode, EDS's current spokesman, called the Perot-era dress code "very, very strict." In those days EDS was simply following the lead of computer giant IBM, he said.

Quayle addresses Baptists who support his values stance

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle today urged Americans to stand up for traditional family values and ignore the scorn of "the cultural elite."

Speaking to 15,000 people at the meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention, Quayle built on the message of his recent criticism of the TV character Murphy Brown for bearing a child out of wedlock.

Those remarks triggered a nationwide discussion of moral values that he welcomes, and a wave of criticism that he happily endured, he said.

"Moral values are what the American people care most about," he said. "This is what I mean about the scorn of the media elite. I wear their scorn as a badge of honor."

His remarks drew a standing ovation at the Hoosier Dome.

He said most Americans agree with him, that the strength of the nation lies in faith, family, and freedom. And he blasted the elite in the media, Hollywood, and academia, who he said exhibit a "moral cynicism" about the social problems of the day.

"The elite's culture is a guilt-free culture," said Quayle. "They believe in the right to dispose of life. We believe in the right to life."

Amid the criticism following his Murphy Brown remarks last month, Quayle said, he discovered "the real intolerance is to be found on the other side."

City plans fireworks display

Plans are under way for the city of Pampa's third annual July 4th fireworks display at Recreation Park, off U.S. 60 east of Pampa, officials announce.

The fireworks show is expected to start at dusk which falls at approximately 9:30 p.m. July 4. Fireworks will be set off on the softball field on the southwest side of the four-plex on the east side of Recreation Park.

Bill Hildebrandt, director of Community Services, reported recently to the Retail Committee of the Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce that the cost of this year's event is $4,500, the same as it has cost the two preceding years.

In 1990, the city received 57.77 percent of the cost in donations and 28.84 percent in 1991, he said in his report.

This year, Hildebrandt suggests that several retailers in the city allow jars to be set out in their businesses for Pampa residents to contribute to the fireworks show.

Organizers say they feel more than a few local businesses should help underwrite the cost of the show since its purpose is to entertain the general public as a whole.

Approximately 3,500 attended the 1991 fireworks display, officials estimate.

Officials say they also plan to use the information on donation trends to determine the degree of support the public has for the show. However, they point out that the fireworks show will not end if there is not an increase in donations.

3-D glasses will be available for $1 each at both city pools the week of the show and also at Recreation Park on July 4. Proceeds from the glasses sales also go toward the cost of the fireworks show.

Officials remind citizens that Recreation Park is city property and it is illegal to set off any pyrotechnic device, such as firecrackers and bottle rockets, without the city's written permission.

DPS officials also remind the public that parking is discouraged on the Loop 171 bridge, although parking anywhere else on the Loop is not prohibited as long as the vehicles and citizens are off the roadway.

U.S., Russia conclude arms talks

By DONALD ROTHBERG
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and Russia, concluding another round of nuclear weapons negotiations, appeared close to agreement today on deep cutbacks in their long-range missiles, bombers and submarines.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev went to the White House to report their conclusions to President Bush. Russian sources told The Associated Press "the layout of an agreement" had been reached.

Baker and Kozyrev have been working on a follow-up to the START missile-reduction treaty that would be announced next week by Bush and visiting Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin.

The idea is to cut strategic nuclear weapons by the end of the century up to 50 percent below current levels. The sources, insisting on anonymity, said the ceiling on long-range warheads was likely to be reduced to 4,700 on each side. The treaty calls for a cutback to 6,000.

Negotiators worked into the night and it was not clear whether the 4,700 figure would be final.

Also, the source said, Baker and Kozyrev apparently agreed on which kinds of missile arsenals are to be reduced. This is the "mix" element that Baker has stressed is as important as the overall numbers.

Police investigate reports of aggravated assault

A 20-year-old Pampa man was arrested on a warrant charging aggravated assault Monday evening following a fight with another man in Prairie Village Park, according to Pampa police.

Antoin Alexander Wallace of 504 S. Finley was arrested about 7:30 p.m. in the 1000 block of South Barnes on the aggravated assault warrant.

According to police reports, Wallace allegedly fired three shots from a handgun at Rodney Harris, 23, 1004 Prairie Drive, after the two had a fight. The report indicated none of the bullets hit Harris.

A police report indicated Harris had scrapes and abrasions on his face.

Wallace also filed a reported of aggravated assault against Harris. Wallace reported Harris beat him with a pipe in the face and the chest in the fight about 6:30 p.m.

The police report indicated Wallace had bruises and lacerations to his right temple, his left eye and left chest and a large bump on his head.

Racism probe begins; report due in August

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Military investigators interviewed witnesses Monday as they began a probe of racial discrimination claims against the Texas National Guard.

A federal military team, accompanied by a state-appointed investigator, will hear from soldiers, most of them Hispanic, who say they have been denied promotions, were wrongly discharged or are being pushed out for minor offenses, simply because of their race.

The soldiers say that others remain in the service despite similar infractions.

The team will spend three days in Corpus Christi, before moving on to San Antonio, then Austin. A Guard spokesman said investigation results won't be available until late August.

The investigators expect to interview 60 witnesses, of which nearly half have brought complaints, said Maj. Toivo Nei, a spokesman for the National Guard Bureau, the coordinating agency for state guards.

The investigators will produce two reports, one by the federal team and the other by former Texas legislator Juan Hinojosa, a special investigator appointed by Gov. Ann Richards.

Hinojosa will submit his report to Richards. The military team will forward its report to the governor and the chief of the National Guard Bureau.

The investigation was prompted by nearly 30 complaints filed by the Corpus Christi chapter of the American GI Forum. An internal Guard investigation last summer of the first six complaints found some mismanagement at the Corpus Christi armory, but no racial discrimination.

State Bar rejects call to mandate free work

AUSTIN (AP) — After a year of study, the State Bar of Texas has rejected requiring lawyers to perform free work for the poor, but recommended that they donate at least 50 hours of work.

"After studying and debating the topic for a year, it is clear that the best way to address the needs of indigents in the state will not involve creating a new layer of bureaucracy by initiating mandatory pro bono for attorneys," said Bob Dunn of Houston, president of the State Bar.

But Austin lawyer Jim Harrington, who sued the State Bar on behalf of three farm workers to require free work, said he was not satisfied by the recommendation.

Last year, a state district judge dismissed Harrington's lawsuit, saying the Texas Supreme Court held jurisdiction in cases involving the State Bar. Harrington has said he will press on before the high court.

Harrington said lawyers owe society some free work because they have an exclusive license to practice law, and that individuals cannot gain access to the courts without an attorney.

"And in return we ought to give something back. I can't imagine why some lawyers don't think they have that duty," he said.

But some lawyers say that if they are required to do free work so should other professionals, such as doctors, school teachers, plumbers and electricians.

Walker Arenson, a board director for the Travis County Bar Association, said requiring lawyers to perform free legal work will take away from time they devote to other public service projects.

Woman mowing grass victim of bee attack

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A city parks department worker has been stung more than 50 times by a swarm of bees she accidentally disturbed while mowing grass with a tractor.

Health officials say they believe the bees that stung 35-year-old Paulette Tynes on Monday were common European honey bees.

However, tests were being done at a Texas A&M University laboratory in College Station to determine whether the insects were Africanized bees.

If they were the so-called killer bees, it would be the first recorded attack in Bexar County since it was quarantined earlier this year because of the presence of the northward-moving insects.

Church mourns teens who died in van wreck

By JEAN PAGEL
Associated Press Writer

RICHARDSON (AP) — One of the Dallas area's largest Chinese Christian churches today was mourning the deaths of five retreat-bound van occupants in a fiery collision that also injured 10 others.

Nine teen-agers remain hospitalized, seven in critical or serious condition.

Authorities said Betty Lim, 26, of Dallas ran a stop sign Monday at a wooded intersection near Mineola in East Texas. A cement truck on U.S. 69 Highway broadcasted the Dallas Chinese Bible Church van on Farm-to-Market Road 564.

The van was one of three headed together to the Brookhaven Youth Camp in Hawkins for a weeklong retreat.

Funeral arrangements are pending at Restland Funeral Home in Dallas for the five: Ms. Lim; Audrey Chiang, 16, of Arlington; Jonathan C. Fang, 17, of Irving; Adelina Lau, 18, of Arlington; and Raymond Ng, of Arlington, age unknown.

A recording Monday night at the Hawkins camp announced the camp had been canceled this week because of the tragedy. "Would you please pray for those families that lost loved ones," said a man who identified himself as Tom Hanson.

Relatives and friends waited for word together at the worship center in the Dallas suburb of Richardson, where a sudden spring thunderstorm forced many to sprint toward fellow congregation members standing at the door.

They greeted each other silently, often with hugs and tears.

"Everybody is praying for comfort from the Lord and for their safety," congregation member Sharon Tung said. "We're kneeling down."

Reporters were not allowed inside.

"We are having a tragedy. I'm sorry," said spokesman Christopher Chen, shutting the church's door.

The accident occurred at about 12:26 p.m. in Wood County, about 80 miles east of Dallas.

"This is the worst accident I've seen in eight years as an EMS pilot," said Doug Zink, a pilot for East Texas Medical.

Skid marks marred the width of the road. Grass was scorched where the burning van halted.

At least 23 collisions have occurred at the intersection in the past decade, Department of Public Safety spokesmen said.

Mineola city administrator Thomas R. Taylor two years ago asked the highway department to study the wooded intersection where stop signs apparently are hard to see.

In response, the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation added "U.S. 69 TRAFFIC DOES NOT STOP" signs under the stop signs on Farm-to-Market Road 564.

Nothing more was necessary, highway department spokesmen said.

Those hurt Monday include Anita Chang, 16, of Richardson, who is in critical condition with an injured spleen at East Texas Medical Center in Tyler.

Others at that facility are Alice Lai, 16, in serious condition; Grace Soong, 17, of Dallas, in serious condition with a fractured femur after coming out of surgery at about 11 p.m.; Christine Tan, 16, of Garland, in serious condition with an injured spleen; and Miss Tan's brother, Stephen Tan, 15, of Garland, in fair condition with a fractured arm and burns.

Two were transferred to Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas: Jenny Tsang, 16, of Plano, in serious condition with burns; and Audrey Chan, 16, also listed in serious condition with burns.

Tereza Lo, 17, of Carrollton, remained in fair condition with a dislocated shoulder at Mother Frances Hospital in Tyler.

John Trinh, 16, was in serious condition early Tuesday at Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas, said a spokeswoman.

Trinh had been originally been taken to Wood County Central Hospital in Quitman, which also treated and released David Wang, 23, of Dallas.

The cement truck is owned by Transit Mix LaFarge Corp. in Tyler. Truck driver Gene Caskey, 61, was not seriously injured, company officials said.

The Dallas Chinese Bible Church has about 500 members and was founded in the late 1960s.

Two state employees fired in alleged lottery theft

AUSTIN (AP) — A lottery claim center manager and a co-worker have lost their jobs after admitting they stole 2,000 tickets, Texas comptroller's officers say.

The agency fired the manager, Mark Thierry of Houston, and Burk Stutes, an enforcement officer in the comptroller's Houston office, after the two tried cash in a $50 prize ticket.

The comptroller's office says Thierry, 27, and the 20-year-old Stutes face possible criminal prosecution in Harris and Travis counties.

"Any thief's worst career move in this state would be to steal from the Texas lottery," Lottery Security Deputy Steve Barber said after the firings Monday.

Officials said all of the allegedly stolen tickets have been accounted for. They said Thierry and Stutes earlier could not account for all of the free lottery tickets allotted for the May 28 lottery kickoff party in Houston.

"Integrity and honesty are absolutely critical to the long-term success of any lottery," Barber said.

"But those cases involving comptroller's office personnel — who must adhere to extremely strict standards of ethics and public accountability — will receive special attention," he said.

Thierry has worked for the comptroller's office since May 20 at an annual salary of $25,800. Stutes has worked for the comptroller's office since May 1 at a salary $18,306.

The dismissals came the same day a southwest Houston woman was arrested after allegedly attempting to redeem an altered lottery ticket for $10,000. It was the ninth arrest in Houston for theft or forgery of the tickets since the Texas Lottery began May 29.

A Dallas woman was jailed after a grocery store cashier said she tried to cash an altered lottery ticket for $100.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Expensive 'toys' aren't necessary

In Microcosm, George Gilder described how the microcomputer is liberating people to do more with less, enriching the lives of everyone on the planet. Computers are advancing personal liberty while reducing pollution. They helped break through the communications Iron Curtain imposed between East and West by communism, leading to the fall of the Berlin Wall. Computers right on the scene helped publicize Boris Yeltsin's revolution last August in Moscow.

Unfortunately, not only private citizens, businesses, and freedom fighters gain from computers. So do governments. Under communism, the KGB used computers to control citizens; post-communism, it still maintains a vast, computerized data base and typing apparatus.

In the June issue of Bytemagazine, User's Column author Jerry Pournelle laments, "There are 100 million small computers in the U.S., but efficiency experts claim they've had little or no effect on productivity, and the experts are puzzled. They needn't be."

Pournelle explains why: "What happened is that small computers made it possible to comply with more government regulations and bureaucratic red tape.

"Since that kind of work always expands to fill the available capacity to do it, we ended up with an ever-increasing stream of new regulations.

"Worse, computers make it easier for the government to force compliance. We have plenty of new productivity: You just don't see it because it's been absorbed in regulations and compliance documents."

Computers also have allowed congressmen to automate franking - taxpayer-paid mail. To cadge votes, powerful microcomputers attached to high-speed laser printers punch out thousands of letters an hour. Automated machines stuff the letters in official U.S. Congress envelopes. The U.S. Postal Service picks up the mail and delivers it to unsuspecting citizens - even those living in areas which will be represented by him should he be re-elected. Taxpayers pick up the tab for this voluminous, unsolicited correspondence - an Everest of junk mail.

What should be done? Cut government computer budgets. Let these unwanted pencil pushers go back to their No. 2 graphites and erasers. They'll continue to do immense damage to our pocketbooks and liberties, but taking away their expensive toys will be a start.

Sources of our discontent

In an age of advanced technology, Americans habitually use gadgets whose inner workings they don't comprehend - cars, computers, copying machines. When something doesn't work exactly right, they turn it over to someone who does understand such matters and who, it is hoped, will promptly identify and repair the malfunction.

In the 1992 election, Ross Perot is betting that the American people have given up trying to figure out what the government should do, or how it should do it, and will give it to him to overhaul however he wants.

It's not unusual to find the electorate angry during an election year. But in times past, the fury usually had a focus - the economy, the Vietnam War, Watergate. This year, in contrast, Americans are behaving like an inconsolable child who refuses to stop screaming and refuses to reveal what he's screaming about.

Besides wanting someone to make them happy, the voters want something to figure out what it takes to make them happy. No issue dominates the political debate, because the dissatisfaction is so undefined.

That helps explain the success of 1992's anti-establishment mavericks (Pat Buchanan, Jerry Brown and now Perot), who have few answers to any particular problem. Their main appeal is that they aren't in a positive to be blamed for anything that's happened lately. They all draw on the Oliver Stone vote - people who fantasize that the government has been hijacked by shadowy cabals which run things for sinister ends, in opposition to the basic needs of the average American.

The voters' frustration is easy to understand but hard to relieve. Perot has enjoyed a surge of popularity because problem-solving is supposedly his talent, as proven by his business success. If he makes it to the White House, however, he'll face some obstacles he didn't encounter in the corporate world.

The first is that voters, unlike customers, expect to get something for nothing. The appeal of the modern welfare state is that it promises to take from you and give to me. The trick - which grows harder as the government's duties and costs expand - is to persuade most people that they get more than they pay. When they believe they're paying too much and getting too little, as they do now, voters turn sullen and vengeful.

The second problem is that not every voter can get something to suit her individual taste. If Americans all had to buy exactly the same car, selected from just two or three models by a majority vote of the entire country, most of them would be less than joyful with what they got. If the car performed worse than its admirers expected, yet couldn't be fixed or replaced for four years, the unhappiness would spread.

Yet this exceptionally clumsy method is the one we use to pick presidents and national policies. The wonder isn't that we're so often displeased with the results, but that we're ever even moderately satisfied.

Perot, and his supporters, will also find that while a business is set up to facilitate prompt action and establish clear accountability, the government of the United States is not. The separation of powers and checks and balances established in our constitution were meant to prevent action and diffuse authority. Even when everyone agrees on the existence of a problem and the way to solve it, the federal apparatus moves slowly and clumsily. When disagreement abounds - as it does today on most issues - the government often doesn't move at all.

The framers didn't welcome Washington's exercise of power; they feared it. So they schemed to put plenty of molasses in the governmental gears. We've gone further in recent decades by pairing each Republican president with a Democratic Congress - assuring that neither party can govern on its own.

The framers' creation is ingenious if the purpose is to keep the government from doing too much. But in an age when people expect the government to do everything, it gets in the way. When the health care system doesn't provide everyone with the best treatment possible, or when riots erupt in Los Angeles, or when wealth doesn't get distributed in some ideal pattern, Americans automatically assume the government-can and should solve the problem.

When it fails, they mistakenly assume the problem is with the people in charge, not with expectations that either this nor any other government is able to meet. Ross Perot might not be a bigger disappointment as president than George Bush or Bill Clinton, but there's no reason to think he'd be a smaller one.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, June 9, the 161st day of 1992. There are 205 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 9, 1954, a dramatic confrontation took place during the Senate-Army hearings as Army counsel Joseph N. Welch assailed Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy for his verbal attack on a member of Welch's law firm, Frederick G. Fisher. Said Welch: "Have you no sense of decency, sir? At long last, you have left no sense of decency?"

On this date:

In 1860, the first dime novel - "Malaeska: The Indian Wife of the White Hunter" - was published.

In 1870, author Charles Dickens died in Godshill, England.

In 1969, the U.S. Senate confirmed Warren Burger to be the new chief justice of the United States, succeeding Earl Warren.

Hoe, hoe, hoe ... back to the soil I go

The way I figure it, you spend the first half of your life attempting to get away from your roots and the second half trying to get back to them.

My roots are deeply bedded in the Georgia soil. My grandfather had 12 acres of the stuff, and from it he grew countless tables filled with fresh vegetables.

Perhaps what made them even better was the fact he did most of his growing from behind a mule. Tractor vegetables are OK but mules vegetables have a more honest and genuine flavor, I think.

I was drafted at an early age to help in the activity of growing. My grandfather even allowed me to hold the plowshares occasionally as the mule trudged down the row.

Many times, the mule took control of me and began veering off its course and ignored my pleas of "gee" (go right) and "haw" (go left). But my grandfather was always right there to bring the mule to order.

But I did other things such as gathering plowed-up potatoes, hoeing weeds and pulling corn.

To be honest, it didn't take long to realize that agriculture wasn't in my future.

It was hot, dirty, tiring work. I envisioned myself in an air-conditioned office rather than as a toiler in the fields.

Lewis Grizzard

So when the opportunity arose, I split. And it had been 30 years, the reign of Johnny Carson, since I had involved myself in any sort of activity that dirtied my hands.

But then, I began to notice those smells again - the smell of rain, the smell of rain upon dusty earth, even the smell of freshly plowed ground. Oddly enough, most of these scents came back on golf courses.

They began to haunt me. I even began picking up handfuls of Southern soil, just to smell it and feel its wondrous texture again.

There was something missing in my life. Get a grip. Here's what I decided to do.

Plant a garden.

Long removed from the furrowed fields of my youth, I decided to see if I could grown anything.

I had some help. Tom broke up a small plot in my urban back yard. Dedra and Jordan helped with the planting.

I dug the holes with my hands and Jordan, who is nearly 4, dropped in the speckled heart butterbeans.

Tom had brought me some gloves. I refused to wear them.

"Real gardeners don't wear gloves," I said to him.

So the three of us set out butterbeans, tomatos, squash, okra, peppers, cucumbers and watermelon, and Tom took pictures so I would have proof.

I also worked barefoot and got my feet and my hands marvelously dirty.

That was a week ago. I've watered and fertilized, and things do seem to be growing. Even the butterbeans Jordan and I planted are meekly sprouting.

So if I can keep the bugs and the birds away, I might soon be able to sit down to a plate of food I actually grew myself. Imagine that!

The headline should read: "Grizzard Returns to the Soil; Garden Said Mild Success."

I may even expand next year and plant the entire back yard.

Anybody know where there's a good mule for sale?

This time the system failed miserably

The paperwork to get my friend's daughter into college seems endless: application after application, packets of financial disclosures, high-school transcripts, tax returns, ACT scores. College A swears it didn't get the financial disclosures, and College B hasn't received the transcript. It's past Memorial Day already and we still haven't heard about financial aid from College C, the one that my friend's daughter absolutely must get into if her life is going to be worth living. Is it time to panic yet?

College, 1992. Scary. The news treats us to stories of recent college graduates bagging fries at McDonald's; the December grad making minimum wage in our office is sweating September when he has to start paying off his $8,000 college loan. My neighbor is wistful about the $50,000 she spent buying her daughter a communications degree at a small liberal-arts college. "For $50,000, all she can find is part-time work on a horse ranch!" she tells me. "I'd have done better just investing the money and giving her the interest each month!"

This is nothing like 1969 when my friend and I were enrolling in college. My parents had bought savings bonds toward my education every birthday since the week I was born, and had the $90 a semester I'd need for the local state university. I gladly went where my folks told me to because they had been unable to finish college during the depression, and I felt darned lucky to be going at all. My friend chose a "sensible" private university and got a loan that he felt assured of paying off because other grads were having no problems finding jobs.

1992 again. My friend brain-wrestles his daughter over the possibility of choosing a less-expensive college, and wishes she had put some of the money she made in a part-time job toward her education instead of a car. He second-guesses the decision that he and his ex-wife made for her to stay home with the kids instead of working and putting money in the bank for their college educations.

In the midst of all this blood-letting and hair-shirt-wearing we see this on the front page of the newspaper: Sandra Rosado, growing up in a fatherless family of eight and living with the help of Aid to Families with Dependent Children, held a part-time job in high school and saved $4,900 for college. She would be the first in her family to attend college. Then, during a routine scan of state bank accounts, the state of Connecticut discovered her savings and declared that it made the family ineligible for AFDC. They ordered Sandra's mother to repay the $9,342 she collect while Sandra's "assets" had been in the bank.

Upon advice that Sandra's mother says she received from the state, Sandra spent the money on clothes and other things a kid dreams of, believing that would restore the family's AFDC eligibility. The state still asked for repayment, and its Supreme Court recently ruled Sandra's mother must pay it. Devoid of her money, Sandra entered community college part time on an academic scholarship.

My friend and I were slack-jawed. We middle-class drones scrape to send our kids to college and here is this exceptional poor kid who works to save almost $5,000 for college. She is everything we want our kids to be and everything taxpayers wish all poor people were, and what do we do? We make sure she can't use her money to better herself. We deplete her college fund in a 60-second phone call.

My friend and I read on and discover that the limit on assets a poor family can own is $1,000, the same as it was in 1980 when a four-door sedan cost half what it does now. We are embarrassed. We're both journalists and try to keep current on a variety of social issues. We knew the welfare system was stacked against the self-reliant, but we didn't know how badly.

I'm sure this won't make Sandra Rosado feel much better, but the lesson isn't lost on us. We hope it's not on you, either.

Brooks takes top '92 Country Award

By TERESA M. WALKER
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Alan Jackson won three awards and fans voted Garth Brooks entertainer of the year at the 26th annual TNN-Music City News Country Awards show Monday night.

Brooks, who has sold more than 17 million copies of his three albums, including his latest, "Ropin' the Wind," had been nominated in five categories, but won only entertainer of the year.

He wasn't present to accept during the show televised live from the Grand Ole Opry on The Nashville Network.

The winners were chosen by subscribers to the monthly country music publication Music City News who mailed in written ballots, and by TNN viewers who voted by calling a 900 telephone number.

Jackson, co host of the show, once worked in TNN's mailroom. He was nominated for six awards this year, winning for male artist of the year and album and single of the year for "Don't Rock the Jukebox."

"The last two years I've been real fortunate, and so many people have been involved," Jackson said.

Cowboy star Roy Rogers was honored for his more than 25 years in entertainment with the Living Legend award. Singer Emmylou Harris was honored for her humanitarian work with the Minnie Pearl Award.

Dolly Parton and Ricky Van Shelton, who recorded the hit "Rockin' Years," upset the Grammy-winning New Nashville Cats (Vince Gill, Mark O'Connor, Ricky Skaggs and Steve Wariner) for the vocal collaboration award. The two also won the video award for the song.

Other entertainers held onto strangleholds in their categories. The Statler Brothers collected the vocal group award for the 21st time in the awards' 26-year history. The Statler Brothers last lost in 1983 to Alabama.

"What do we do for longevity — we eat a lot of beans," said Don Reid. "We're very fortunate. The fans like what we do, and they continue to like what we do."

The Judds picked up the vocal duo award for a seventh straight year despite the fact that daughter Wynonna has been working as a solo act since their final concert last December.

Ray Stevens took home comedian of the year for a seventh straight year, and the Chuck Wagon Gang won the gospel group award for the third time since 1988.

Reba McEntire added to her collection with her seventh female artist award in the last eight years, while Gill was named instrumentalist of the year for the second consecutive time.

The show helped kick off the weeklong 21st International Country Music Fan Fair, which has drawn more than 24,000 people to town to meet their favorite country stars.

Study: Teen shootings triple in some areas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Flying bullets now kill more black males between the ages of 15 and 19 than any other cause of death in the United States, the government reported today.

For all youths ages 15 to 19, firearms are the second-leading cause of death behind traffic accidents, according to a study by the National Center for Health Statistics.

The report found that a gun is by a wide margin the murder weapon most favored among teens, and that the number of young black males killed by gunfire is increasing at a faster rate in the major metropolitan areas of the country.

In the decade from 1979 to 1989, the number of homicides by firearms for all youths aged 15 to 19 increased by 61 percent, while the number of homicides with other weapons actually declined by 29 percent, the study found.

"The increase observed in the total homicide rate among (this age group during the decade) resulted solely from increases in firearm homicides," said the study, published today in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Researchers said the reasons for the increase were relatively easy to spot: "crack cocaine, changes in the types and lethality of firearms, urban poverty and a myriad of sociologic factors."

Among all 15-to-19-year-olds in the central counties within major metropolitan areas, the study found, the firearm homicide rate was 27.7 per 100,000 people, a rate four to six times higher than in less-populated counties.

For black teen-age males in the central county of major metropolitan areas, the firearm homicide rate was 143.9 per 100,000. For white teen-age males, the rate was 21.5 per 100,000. For black female teens, the rate was 13.4 per 100,000, while the rate was lowest for white female teens, at 2 per 100,000.

Comparing the latest figures with those from earlier eras, the study found that the firearm homicide rate generally declined between 1979 and 1984 in both large and small metropolitan counties. But, from 1984 to 1987, firearm homicides increased by 10 percent to 14 percent in metropolitan areas.

Then, in the two years ending in 1989, the increases in firearm homicides "were considerably steeper ... ranging from 23 to 35 percent," the study said.

In non-metropolitan or rural areas, however, there was virtually no increase in firearm homicides.

Big-city teen homicides with weapons other than guns actually declined from 3 percent to 5 percent a year from 1979 to 1989, the study found.

A separate study by the National Center for Health Statistics, an arm of the Department of Health and Human Services, compared the rate of firearm homicides among black males aged 15 to 19 in 79 counties and the District of Columbia with at least 10,000 of the target population.

Researchers found that from 1987 to 1989, the rate of firearm homicides among this population increased by 71 percent, to a total for the 80 jurisdictions of 85.3 per 100,000. The death rate from automobile accidents for the same age and racial group in the counties declined by 3 percent, to 26.5 per 100,000.

In total, the study said, firearms claim the lives about 1,000 black teen-age males annually in the United States.

Of the 80 areas studied, the District of Columbia showed the highest rate of black teen-age firearm homicide, with a rate of 227.2 per 100,000 for the period 1987 to 1989. Los Angeles was second with 226.

Government plan gives action back to states

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alice Rivlin has a new idea — or maybe an old one: Give some of the federal government's job back to the states.

Ms. Rivlin, the former president of the American Economic Association and the first director of the Congressional Budget Office, wants to undo the New Deal and reassign responsibilities for domestic problems that Washington assumed during the nation's worst economic crisis, the Depression.

In "Reviving the American Dream," published Monday by the Brookings Institution, Ms. Rivlin argues that the federal government can't do all that is expected of it without a massive tax increase.

So she would strip the federal government of all programs in education, housing, highways, economic development, job training and social services such as welfare.

Ms. Rivlin describes herself as "a fanatical, card-carrying middle-of-the-roader," but one who worries that the American democratic system no longer confronts the problems that concern citizens most.

Even if the federal government had the money, she said, it is not equipped to deal with those problems.

Street crime, drug use and teenage pregnancy are problems it "can deplore but cannot fix," she said; they benefit from local innovation and "bottom-up community effort," not presidential photo opportunities.

And giving the job to the states would "make it easier for citizens to understand what each level of government does and to blame the right set of officials for poor performance," she wrote.

That would require more money for the states, she conceded, but "voters appear more willing to pay taxes if they know that revenues will be used for identifiable services important to them."

To raise the money and level disparities between rich and poor states, Ms. Rivlin proposed what she called "common shared taxes" — a nationally uniform sales tax, for example, on goods and services.

Revenues would be distributed on the basis of state population. A uniform corporate tax, a value-added tax, or uniform energy taxes could be alternatives.

One result would be an end to competition among states to reduce taxes out of fear of losing residents or businesses.

The federal government would have a better chance at balancing its budget, making more money available for private investment — a goal shared by politicians and economists of every persuasion.

Under the plan, the federal government would retain control of international affairs and problems that overlap state lines, such as basic scientific research, air traffic control and combating pollution. It also would take control of health care costs and ensuring basic health care for everyone.

When the federal government took over what had been state functions in the 1930s, Ms. Rivlin notes, state legislatures were unprofessional, dominated by rural interests and unresponsive to city dwellers and minorities.

Now, it is the federal government, she said, that looks like "a giant conglomerate that has acquired too many different kinds of businesses and cannot coordinate its own activities."

Ms. Rivlin conceded that the total amount of taxes paid would have to rise because government at all levels is in serious financial difficulty. "If simple, painless solutions to public problems existed, they would have been found long ago," she wrote.

She parted company from economists who think America is destined to decline into the status of a third-rate power.

"Americans have always been ingenious, creative and hardworking; the U.S. economy has far greater resources than most others. The challenges it confronts pale beside those facing the crumbling economies of the former Soviet bloc. I do not believe we will be so shortsighted or irresponsible as to wander unnecessarily into terminal decay."

Henry the Rooster now faces life behind bars

CHESHIRE, Conn. (AP) — For nine months, Henry was the talk of the town, a free-as-a-bird rooster who feasted on cookies and fruit left by beguiled townsfolk.

His flirt with freedom came to an end one night three weeks ago when his owners decided it was time to reclaim the bantam.

"It's too bad, but he's too flighty," owner Roberta Bonaminio said last week. "At least he's safe now from the raccoons."

Henry's fling began last fall, when he flew his coop at the Cheshire Grange Fair and darted across the road to The Picture Framer's parking lot.

No one knew who owned the rooster, so Louise Bartholomew, who owns the framing shop, began looking after him. She started addressing him as Henry, just to have a name to call when she left out cracked corn and Fig Newtons.

Worried about the coming winter, Mrs. Bartholomew called the press, hoping the publicity would prompt somebody to adopt him. Reporters flocked to town — even The New Yorker magazine profiled him — but Henry shunned the spotlight, migrating to Mary Denos' nearby backyard. She looked after him for months.

"He'd stand in the street and tap dance," Mrs. Denos said. "I was just waiting for a car to make a pancake out of him. Henry had the run of the neighborhood."

As the weather warmed, feelings toward Henry cooled, especially when he'd crow at sunrise and wake those who had left their windows open.

"We heard him a lot," said Jill Bourmival. "Everybody was getting fed up."

Those awakened were soon throwing slippers, rocks and other objects at poor Henry.

Mrs. Bonaminio, who keeps about 50 roosters and hens and other livestock, figured Henry was hers when she read about him in the newspaper. But she and her husband saw no particular reason to go after Henry.

"All they do is wander around here," she shrugged.

Mrs. Denos eventually found

Henry a home with a convent in Meriden. But the night before the nuns were to pick up the bird, the Bonaminios decided to reclaim him.

Henry, who had been sleeping in a pine tree, bolted when he saw the lights of the approaching posse. He flew into the side of a barn, knocking himself silly. His captors scooped him up in a net.

Henry now paces in a cage on the Bonaminios' property, clucking furiously and flapping his reddish-brown wings at those who approach.

But he remains a celebrity in this town about 25 miles southwest of Hartford. He rode in a Memorial Day parade float. This fall, he will be an honored guest at the fair where his adventure began.

Forest fires destroy homes, thousands of woodland acres

By JEFF BARNARD
Associated Press Writer

Firefighters in Oregon today battled two wind-driven wildfires that destroyed five houses and forced scores of people from their homes overnight.

In Washington, a blaze believed to have been started by sparks from a railroad track maintenance vehicle burned for a fourth day today.

The fires in Oregon burned near Sisters at Sage Flat, about 80 miles southeast of Portland, and near Haner Butte, 10 miles west of La Pine.

Residents of about 50 homes near Sisters and 60 homes near La Pine were evacuated Monday, Sheriff Darrell Davidson said.

"It looked like World War II," said Bill Smith of the Oregon Department of Forestry. "Flames were shooting a couple hundred feet into the air."

Five homes were destroyed and about 700 acres burned near Sisters, authorities said. Forty miles to the south, about 400 acres burned near La Pine, said Lou Torres, a spokesman for the Oregon Department of Forestry.

Firefighters worked through the night to establish firebreaks.

The cause of both fires was under investigation.

A 2,240-acre range fire on the Yakima Indian Reservation in south-central Washington destroyed six homes, including two mobile homes, before it was contained late Sunday. Firefighters continued to douse hot spots on Monday.

Authorities said the blaze was started by someone burning weeds.

Four firefighters were treated for smoke inhalation and heat exposure, authorities said.

About 400 firefighters and several helicopters battled a 250-acre blaze near Skykomish, Wash., in the Mount Baker-Snoqualmie National Forest.

Roads and trails into the area about 40 miles east of Seattle were closed, and several hikers were evacuated.

The fire was dubbed "Big Grinder" because it was started Saturday by a machine that grinds down bumps on railroad tracks, Forest Service spokesman Ron DeHart said.

Fire season came to Oregon about a month early this year after as much as eight years of drought and a low snowpack in the mountains left forests drier than normal.

"The weather conditions and fire behavior makes it seem like it is mid-August," Smith said. "We had a warm spring and an early summer and we're seeing the cumulative effects."

Meciar was ousted as Slovak premier in May 1991 by Havel allies, and has made no secret of his dislike for the playwright-president.

"The federation is lost and according to HZDS, a common state is lost as well," Klaus said after the talks.

But he added that Meciar's people had said a final verdict on Czechoslovakia's future could come only in a referendum.

Meciar has said this should take place by year's end.

"In that case, the only way is to hold the same referendum, with the same question, in the Czech republic," Klaus told CSTK.

Milan Knažko, deputy chairman of Meciar's movement, spoke briefly to reporters and said agreement was reached in principle on forming new federal authorities. He did not provide details.

Czechoslovakia was formed in 1918 from parts of the Austro-Hungarian empire.

Since communism fell in 1989, Czechs and Slovaks have seemed more divided by different historical traditions than drawn together by their near-identical languages and common problems inherited from four decades of Communist rule.

Under the previous government, two years of talks failed to reach agreement on constitutional reform to accede to Slovak demands for more autonomy from Prague.

Restorers begin work on looted art treasures

By NEIL MacFARQUHAR
Associated Press Writer

KUWAIT CITY (AP) — Gems and jewelry are missing, pottery is broken and the neck of an ancient painted bottle is held on with tape. Like the emirate itself, Kuwait's art treasures suffered from the Iraqi invasion and occupation.

Kirsty Norman, an antiquities expert, held up a bronze candlestick forged in 14th century Egypt. Green spots of corrosion could be seen among the copper and silver inlays.

The art collection was taken to Baghdad after Iraq occupied Kuwait in August 1990 and was returned under Gulf War cease-fire resolutions.

Many pieces were damaged and some have not been returned, including three 400-year-old carved Indian Mogul emeralds. The largest, 234 carats, was insured for $20 million when it was exhibited in the United States.

Restoration work has begun, but the collection's future is unclear. Its former home is a blackened wreck, destroyed by Iraqi forces as they retreated before allied forces.

For lack of more appropriate storage space, some of the artifacts are kept in battered wooden kitchen cabinets in the borrowed villa where the work is being done.

Stopping the metal corrosion "is the sort of on-the-spot urgent work that has to be done now," said Mrs. Norman, a former British Museum conservator who is working on the collection.

The more than 2,000 pieces, owned by Sheik Nasser and Sheika Husa al-Sabah, are on loan to Kuwait's Museum of Islamic Art. During the unpacking in May, the museum staff had its first good look at the artifacts since they were returned in October 1991. More than 5 percent of them were damaged.

Millions of dollars worth of jewelry, rugs and books also disappeared from the Sabahs' house during nearly seven months of Iraqi occupation.

Senior antiquities officials from Baghdad supervised the removal of the museum artifacts — to protect them from war damage, they said.

Afterward, Iraqi soldiers tossed fire bombs into the museum. A huge 14th century carved door from Fez, Morocco, was among the items burned.

No price has ever been put on the collection, which cost tens of millions of dollars to assemble. Some items are unique and considered priceless.

Most of the pieces returned were wrapped in tissue paper and stuffed into tin trunks. A 16th century linen shirt worn by an Egyptian Mameluke king was used as packing material in one trunk.

More than 30 pieces of pottery were broken or cracked, rock crystal objects were crushed and semi-precious stones came loose from their settings.

Some objects, such as 10th century stucco panels, will never be the same.

"When you do restoration work to that extent, you end up with a different object," Mrs. Norman said, looking through stacks of black-and-white photographs of the material.

"It's very sad. It inevitably diminishes the value of the objects."

The Sabahs started the collection in 1975. The Kuwait National Museum housed it in one of the four buildings of a waterfront complex.

Sheika Husa said the museum should remain in its ruined state, as a memorial, because "we need at least one building that will show forever what the Iraqis did."

Plans for a new museum building drawn by the late Egyptian architect Hassan Fathi disappeared after the invasion. If they find an appropriate site, the Sabahs may commission another design.

Royal woes provoke debate

LONDON (AP) — London newspapers, not normally known for self-restraint, have seized on reports of trouble in the marriage of Prince Charles and Princess Diana with potboiling glee.

The sea of sensationalist headlines is provoking emotional accusations of betrayal and sordid behavior — mostly among rival newspaper editors.

The story itself is another public blow for the royal family, which has already been shaken by the recent separation of Charles' brother Prince Andrew from the former Sarah Ferguson, and the divorce of his sister, Princess Anne.

"Diana: Her True Story," by former tabloid reporter Andrew Morton, went considerably further than the traditional circulation-boosting stories of royal discord.

Morton quoted by name two friends of Diana as sources for some of the saga of the princess. He said she was driven to suicide attempts by Charles' coldness and indifference during the 11-year-old marriage.

He also said the 30-year-old princess suffered from an eating disorder, bulimia, and was jealous of Camilla Parker-Bowles, 43, a long-time friend of Charles.

For Britain's often free-wheeling press, the ruckus comes less than two months before the end of an 18-month "probation" period for demonstrating that it can restrain itself.

The Press Complaints Commission, a private body established by the industry, on Monday accused journalists of "dabbling their fingers in the stuff of other people's souls" and warned that newspapers are in danger of provoking privacy legislation to restrain them.

Archbishop of Canterbury George

Carey, spiritual head of the Church of England, said the Charles and Diana stories exceeded the limits of a "society claiming to respect human values."

The book's serialization began this week in The Sunday Times, companion to the daily Times of London, the upmarket flagship of Rupert Murdoch's British holdings.

Sunday Times editor Andrew Neil, under onslaught from rival editors as well as the commission, insisted the book had Diana's tacit approval.

He argued that the story was a healthy contrast to British press silence before the abdication in 1936 of Charles' great-uncle Edward VIII to marry American divorcee Wallis Simpson.

"When the abdication broke you had to buy Time or Newsweek to find out that Mrs. Simpson even existed," Neil said during a shouting match on BBC radio with Max Hastings, editor of The Daily Telegraph.

Hastings derided the book and the author. "If you can't get a job as a pianist in a brothel you become a royal reporter," he said.

Among Britain's 11 fiercely competitive national newspapers, only The Daily Telegraph and The Financial Times ignored the story Monday.

The tabloids featured pictures of a grim Diana returning Sunday to London after a weekend with Charles and their children, Prince William, 9, and Prince Harry, 7, at their country estate.

Talks break up without agreement between groups in Czechoslovakia

By ALISON SMALE
Associated Press Writer

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Talks between the two rivals charged with governing Czechoslovakia broke up today without agreement on how to prevent the country from breaking apart, media reported.

"The federation is lost," Vaclav Klaus, a Czech, was quoted by the state news agency CSTK as saying after talks with populist Slovak leader Vladimir Meciar. Klaus, the conservative federal finance minister, was tapped as federal premier after weekend parliamentary elections.

There was no immediate comment on the talks from Meciar, whose party fared strongest in the weekend balloting in Slovakia, the poorer, eastern third of the country.

"The talks revealed deep and fundamental differences ... on the future structure of Czechoslovakia," Klaus told reporters.

Klaus said there would be new talks Thursday on who should sit in the new federal Cabinet. It was not immediately clear, however, whether Meciar's movement would designate anybody to take part in the federal government.

Klaus supports a continued Czech-Slovak federation and his party won elections in the Czech lands, the more populous and industrialized western two-thirds of the country, on that program. He is the driving force behind economic reform, which has caused hardship in less-developed Slovakia.

Meciar, by contrast, campaigned for Slovak sovereignty — one step short of independence — a separate Slovak constitution and a referendum on whether Slovakia breaks away from the federation.

He heads the Movement for a Democratic Slovakia, or HZDS in Slovak. It won almost 38 percent of the vote for the regional Slovak parliament. Meciar said Sunday that the body could declare sovereignty soon after it meets on June 23.

The outcome of the first Klaus-Meciar talks made the future look bleak for President Vaclav Havel, who indicated through his spokesman Monday that he will not stand for re-election by the new federal parliament if Czechoslovakia heads for a split.

The spokesman, Michael Zantovsky, told reporters that Havel's candidacy depends on the continuation of a common state and economic and political reforms begun with the 1989 "Velvet Revolution" that unseated the Communists.

Klaus said he insisted at the talks with Meciar that Havel be re-elected president. Meciar said Sunday he rated Havel's chances of re-election as "minimal."

Drug puts paraplegic in bed that stays dry

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to thank you for your article printed in the Las Vegas Review-Journal about the woman with twin boys, age 20, who still wet the bed; then a chiropractor prescribed DDVAP, which put an end to their bed-wetting.

I immediately called my chiropractor to ask about it, and he said in Nevada they are not allowed to write prescriptions, so I called my physician and got an OK for same.

My son, who is a 42-year-old paraplegic, was taking Daracon, which worked well for him, but recently they stopped making that medication. He tried the DDVAP nasal spray, and it has worked every night this past month. It's not cheap, but it's well worth it.

I am very grateful to you, Abby, and have probably learned more in my 66 years from reading your columns than from any book or school. Thanks again, and the very best to you.

incontinence? Well, the day has finally arrived, much to the relief of the more than 10 million Americans who suffer from that disorder.

A government-sponsored panel of medical experts has announced new guidelines for detecting and treating urinary incontinence — a condition they say can be significantly improved or cured in 80 percent of the cases. The group said that sufferers often ignore symptoms, and end up depending on absorbent materials without seeking any medical help.

The guidelines the government has set provide important information to patients on various treatments for the ailment. But what may be most important in curbing incontinence is the role of the physician. He/she needs to ask the patient about the condition routinely and aggressively, and then run tests to determine the cause. Educating both the patient and the doctor is a one-two punch that should virtually knock out this highly stigmatized disorder.

The guidelines are in a booklet, "Urinary Incontinence in Adults," which is available free of charge. Write to P.O. Box 8547, Silver Spring, Md. 20907-8547. (Allow six to eight weeks for a response.)

Hypertension can be helped by food, habit changes

By AMERICAN HEALTH
For AP Special Features

One of the major risk factors for heart disease, the nation's leading killer, and stroke, third on the list, is a condition affecting one in five Americans. Yet about 20 percent don't know they have this easy-to-diagnose disorder.

High blood pressure or hypertension affects 50 million Americans, but only one-third have it under control. Most cases of hypertension, sometimes called "the silent killer," can be easily treated with drugs and/or lifestyle changes, including salt, alcohol and weight reduction and exercise.

Dr. Patrick Mulrow, vice chairman of the American Heart Association's Council for High Blood Pressure Research, states, "When blood pressure is severely high, you may get headaches. But most of the time you feel perfectly healthy until extensive damage has already been done to arteries in various parts of the body."

High blood pressure ranks as the main cause of stroke because it weakens arteries in the brain, paving the way for a rupture or blood clot. It also contributes to coronary atherosclerosis (the buildup of fatty deposits in the arteries that nourish the heart), which increases the risk of a heart attack and other health problems.

More than 90 percent of the time no specific cause can be found for hypertension. Most experts believe genetic influences play a major role. Clearly, hypertension runs in families. "If you have one parent with hypertension, you have about a 25 percent chance of developing it," says Dr. William Manger, chairman of the board of the National Hypertension Association. "If both parents are hypertensive, your risk of developing it rises considerably, probably to more than 60 percent."

Hypertension treatment clearly prevents death and illness. Recent studies reveal that for mild and severe hypertension, antihypertensive drugs reduce the incidence of strokes by 42 percent and of heart disease by 14 percent. (When drugs are used to treat mild hypertension, it's less clear that their benefits outweigh risks that may include elevated cholesterol levels.)

"There's nothing worse than having a problem that doesn't cause symptoms and being asked to do something about it," says Dr. Norman Kaplan, a hypertension expert at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center in Dallas. "You're asked to take a bunch of pills that'll make you feel worse in one way or another — and the payoff won't come for another 20 years. It's obviously a setup for people not to do what we ask them to do."

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Be discriminating with regard to your social involvements, as well as your companions, today. Individuals who are needlessly aggressive could cause you problems. Gemini, treat yourself to a birthday gift. Send for Gemini's Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead by mailing $1.25 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. CANCER (June 21-July 22) Priority should be given to a matter you've been wanting to finalize but have been unable to get a handle on. It can be concluded to your satisfaction today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You'll be responsible to constructive suggestions today but resistant to the dictates of others. Avoid involvements with individuals who fall into the latter category.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Debit spending for non-essential purposes today could cause you problems down the line, when you need the resources you fiddled away. Be prudent.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Someone who is pertinent to your present plans might lack your cooperative spirit today and be more of a hindrance than a help. This individual must be handled with kid gloves.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) If you don't know how to say "no" today, others might unload their responsibilities on you instead of taking care of them. Be helpful, but also be smart.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) There's a possibility you might have a misunderstanding today with someone you truly like over something rather silly. Even if you're not at fault, make the apology.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Usually, when you set your sights on a specific objective, you are tenacious in striving to achieve it. Today, these qualities might be absent from your repertoire.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Subdue the inclination today to take yourself and your involvements too seriously. If you have fun with what you do, you'll enhance your productivity.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) This might not be a good day to remind someone who is indebted to you of the obligation. There's a chance you will be reprimanded rather than repaid.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) In an endeavor that requires a team effort today, strive to be supportive, not adversarial. Success of the venture is more important than your ego.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) There are a number of things you should do today, but you won't be able to take care of them all. To be productive, you must be selective regarding what can be accomplished.

Majorly disappointed

Norman falters at U.S. Open qualifying round

By The Associated Press

It looks like Greg Norman's in for another major disappointment.

And even worse, the Australian's heart-wrenching losses in golf's major tournaments seem to be repeating themselves.

In 1987, Norman lost a playoff for the Masters championship when Larry Mize holed out a 140-foot chip shot for birdie.

Maybe the circumstances five years later are a little less dramatic, but another birdie by Mize in another playoff is likely to keep Norman from the U.S. Open field unless a qualifier for the event can't make it.

Norman settled for an alternate's spot in U.S. Open sectional qualifying at The Lakes Club in Columbus, Ohio, one of 10 qualifying sites on Monday.

Norman, who's built a reputation for coming close to winning majors only to lose in back-breaking fashion, was in an eight-man playoff for the final four qualifying spots.

Norman watched as Kirk Triplett and Mize birdied the second playoff hole. Peter Jacobsen and Brian Claar had assured themselves of Open slots with birdies on the first playoff hole.

"I'm disappointed, but at least I tried," said Norman, who got on the waiting list with a par on the third extra hole.

Asked if he agreed with having to go through a qualifier to reach the field, he said, "That's the conditions to get in their tournament. You've got to do what they say you have to do."

There were 57 qualifiers Monday for the U.S. Open, held at Pebble Beach on June 18-21.

Qualifying continues at three more sites today — Forest Hill Country Club in St. Louis, Century Country Club in Purchase, N.Y., and Farmington Country Club in Memphis, Tenn.

At the Golf Club of Georgia in Alpharetta, Ga., play was suspended after 18 holes due to rain and will be finished today.

Low scorer at The Lakes course was Tom Lehman, the 1991 player of the year on the Ben Hogan Tour who had rounds of 66 and 70.

Joining Norman on the other side of the gallery ropes are former U.S. Open champ Johnny Miller, 1984 Masters winner Ben Crenshaw and teen sensation Tiger Woods.

Miller and Woods competed at the Lake Merced Golf and Country Club in Daly City, Calif.

Miller, who blitzed Oakmont for a closing 63 to take the 1973 Open, shot a pair of 77s and was well behind. He was trying to reach the tournament for the first time in five years.

Woods, at 16 the youngest player to tee off in a PGA tournament when he played at the Los Angeles Open in February, had a 151.

Brandt Jobe shot a 69 in the final round to lead 10 qualifiers at 142.

Crenshaw had a 145 at Champions Golf Club in Houston and failed to reach the U.S. Open for the second straight year.

"I didn't play well and I didn't putt well," said Crenshaw, considered one of the game's best putters. "I just never got things going. You've got to put two good rounds together and I just didn't get the job done."

Tray Tyner and Tom Jenkins each shot 138 to lead four qualifiers at the Houston course.

Warren Schutte of South Africa, the 1991 NCAA champion from UNLV, had a 142 and led four qualifiers at Big Foot Country Club in Fontana, Wis.

Brandel Chamblee and Steve Gotsche each shot 9-under 135s to qualify at the Columbine Country Club in Littleton, Colo.

Darryl Donovan, a former Cobra helicopter pilot who turned pro seven months ago, had a 139 to top three qualifiers at Royal Oaks Country Club in Vancouver, Wash.

At the Bay Hill Club in Orlando, Fla., Denis Watson had rounds of 69 and 67 to head six qualifiers. Watson, who recently returned to the PGA Tour after missing seven months with a shoulder injury, was competing for just the third time since he left in November.

Webb Heintzelman birdied eight of the last 22 holes at the Woodmont Country Club in Rockville, Md., to reach his fourth U.S. Open. Heintzelman, who plays on the Hogan Tour, had a 139 to head up five qualifiers and beat Houston Open winner Fred Funk by two strokes.

John Flannery, who won the Ben Hogan Quicksilver Open on Sunday, shot a pair of 69s to lead five qualifiers at the Sharon Golf Club outside of Cleveland. Flannery's 138 total tied Jerry Anderson and Rick Dapalos for first.

Michael Walton shot a course-record 7-under 65 at the Golf Club of Georgia course and was five shots in front when rain suspended play midway through qualifying.

Two PGA Tour players, Tim Simpson and Peter Persons, withdrew. Simpson left on the 15th hole with a wrist injury and Persons departed after shooting 74.

Jordan puts handcuffs on Portland

By MIKE NADEL
AP Sports Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Everyone's talking about Michael Jordan. What else is new? The guy's so good that any reference to him immediately brings images of slam dunks and shoe commercials.

Michael is Michael. Perhaps the best offensive weapon in NBA history. Need anyone say more?

During the NBA Finals, though, more is being said. Like: Michael is so good offensively, it's easy to forget that he's a defensive wonder.

While his offense was limited because of a heel injury — he "only" had 26 points, 8.1 below his postseason average — Jordan's defense helped Chicago beat the Portland Trail Blazers 94-84 Sunday.

The Bulls have a 2-1 series lead going into Game 4 Wednesday night.

Clyde Drexler has noticed Jordan's defensive excellence. It would have been hard for him not to have noticed; Jordan is often so close to Drexler that the pair seem to be glued together.

Drexler, who finished second to Jordan in league MVP voting, is shooting 43 percent and has committed nine turnovers in the series.

"Michael's a pretty good defensive player," Drexler said Monday.

Pretty good?

"He's very good," Drexler said. "He's quick and active. He can gamble and he still has the speed to get back into the play."

Jerome Kersey has noticed, too. Because the Bulls do a lot of switching on defense, Jordan, 6-foot-6 and 198 pounds, often finds himself guarding the 6-7, 225-pound Kersey.

"Jordan's a hands-on defensive player," Kersey said. "He gets his hands and body into you and pushes you harder than you thought he could. He's always overplaying you, always looking for the steal."

And he often gets it. Jordan led the NBA in steals in 1988 and 1990, was sixth this season and is averaging 2.11 steals per playoff game.

Statistics, though impressive, don't fully measure his defensive impact. Jordan wreaks havoc on an offense because he seems to be everywhere on the court — switching to double-team post players, scrambling to disrupt 3-point shooters, trapping along the baseline, blocking 7-footers' shots from behind.

All the while, he's keeping his own man in check and scoring 30-plus points at the other end.

Clyde Drexler

Michael Jordan

"You've always got to keep an eye out for Michael," said Portland point guard Terry Porter, who also has been stopped by Jordan in the series.

In 1987-88, Jordan was the NBA's Defensive Player of the Year.

"It's one of the most valuable awards I've gotten because it told everybody that I didn't just play offense," said Jordan, who just completed his fifth consecutive season on the league's All-Defensive Team.

Any recognition he gets for his defense is overshadowed by his 32.3-point career scoring average. Nevertheless, Jordan said, "I always thought defense was important."

"Everyone says that defense is hard work and I've never walked away from hard work," he added. "It's a challenge to try to play well at both ends. You're known for your offensive skills, so to come back and try to make an effort on the defensive end takes dedication."

Jordan is dedicated to keeping the Bulls on top of the NBA heap. He didn't practice Monday because of the pain in his left heel, but vowed:

"Come game time Wednesday, no problem. I'll be ready for game time."

Howe's teammates saddened by suspension

Yankee pitcher pleads guilty

NEW YORK (AP) — Catcher Matt Nokes, Steve Howe's best friend on the Yankees, just felt sad when he heard the news.

Nokes and the rest of the New York Yankees learned when they arrived at the ballpark on Monday that Howe was suspended for the seventh time after pleading guilty to a misdemeanor charge of attempting to buy a gram of cocaine last December in Montana.

"It's like jumping into a cold pool of water," Nokes said. "You know what's coming but it's still a shock. For me, it's very sad."

Since Howe's arrest last December, most of the Yankees knew this day would come sooner or later.

"I don't know a lot of the facts because I didn't think this was going to happen to him," Yankees captain Don Mattingly said. "I feel bad for him, we're going to miss him. We just have to go on in the same sense he was hurt."

The immediate problem for manager Buck Showalter is to figure a way to restructure his bullpen without Howe, one of the best relievers in baseball this season.

"I'm disappointed," reliever Steve Farr said. "I was hoping he was going to make it through the whole year. It will change it for Buck Showalter. He won't have the luxury of another left-hander in the late-inning situation."

All of Howe's seven suspensions, dating to 1983, have been related to drugs and alcohol.

"I used to think two chances were enough, but now I'm not sure six is enough," Yankees general manager Gene Michael said. "I've learned to have some understanding, some compassion for these people."

Michael and Yankees general partner Joe Molloy met with some of the players and the media 90 minutes before the game against Toronto.

"It's a sad day for the Yankees," Molloy said. "We gave him the opportunity and he pitched well for us."

Howe, who joined the Yankees in May 1991 after being out of the majors for three seasons, appeared in 20 games this season. He had a 3-0 record, six saves and a 2.45 earned run average in 22 innings, with 12 strikeouts and three walks.

"It puts us in a spot where we have to make adjustments, but you can't prepare for it," Michael said.

Steve Howe

"I know we went out on a limb to sign him, but I can take that. I'm not disappointed for giving him the chance."

Texas sinks slumping Mariners, 14-3

Gonzalez is Juan hot Ranger

ARLINGTON (AP) — Juan Gonzalez has been slow to meet expectations of the Texas Rangers, who want him to try to pull every pitch.

But Gonzalez is pulling out of a season slump. He hit homers in the second and fourth innings Sunday off Scott Erickson, then added a two-run shot off reliever Mark Guthrie in the eighth in Texas' 5-4 victory over Minnesota.

"It was a great moment for me," said Gonzalez, with 12 homers and 32 RBIs so far. "It was exciting, something I'll always remember. I've been getting a little frustrated."

All the homers against the Twins came to center or right-center field. He added another last night against Seattle.

Gonzalez last year had 27 homers and 102 RBIs in his first full major league season, when he was primarily a pull-hitter.

This season's slump came as pitchers adjusted to exploit his lack of patience at the plate and his tendency to try to pull everything.

what happened tonight," Newman said. "We had a good opening road series and the guys were just loose and ready to swing tonight. As players you remember that and you can't help it."

Brown, one shy of his victory total for 1991, gave up five hits over six innings before being relieved by rookie Danny Leon to start the seventh. Brown wasn't thrilled with his performance, which

For the last 10 games, Gonzalez had been hitting just .195. He saw his average drop from .339 on April 19 to .257 Sunday. He had a streak of 84 homerless at-bats in May.

Opponents knowing his tendency to pull every pitch threw only on the outside half of the plate, robbing Gonzalez of his power. Gonzalez struck out three times Saturday night when John Smiley went with the scouting report and threw nothing inside or down the middle.

"He's a young guy who has to understand," Rangers manager Bobby Valentine said. "When he hits the ball to the opposite field, he can be a monster."

It was the fifth time the three-homer performance has been accomplished in Rangers history. Others were by Willie Horton (1977), Al Oliver (in 1979 and 1980) and Larry Parrish (1985).

But Gonzalez is the first player with a three-homer game since Oakland's Dave Henderson last Aug. 3 against the Twins.

Gonzalez, at 22 years, seven months and 22 days, is the youngest player to hit three homers since Johnny Bench did it on July 26, 1970, when he was 22 years, seven months, 19 days.

A fastball was pounded away for his first homer, which traveled 423 feet to center field. Then, in the fourth, Erickson tried a slider even farther away, and Gonzalez clubbed it 389 feet to right field.

"The pitches he hit out weren't that bad," said Erickson. He has allowed three hits to Gonzalez, all homers.

Leading 4-3 in the eighth, Guthrie went with a first-pitch split-finger fastball on the outside half of the plate. Gonzalez waited on it and hit it the game-winner to right.

"That's what we've been waiting for from him," said Valentine. "His natural stroke is to right field. Julio Franco is always yelling at him, 'Right field, right field.'"

Gonzalez received a standing ovation as he ran to his position in center field for the top of the ninth.

Gonzalez followed his three-homer performance Sunday against the Minnesota Twins with a 440-foot solo blast in the third off starter Clay Parker, 0-2. Gonzalez's 13th home run of the season was the longest at Arlington Stadium this year.

Sierra added a two-run homer in the sixth, the 149th of his career to tie him with Larry Parrish for the all-time club lead.

Cleveland's Sandy Alomar Jr., left, kicks Detroit pitcher John Doherty and triggers a bench-clearing brawl in the sixth inning Monday night in Detroit.

San Angelo's Morenz ponders future

AUSTIN (AP) — San Angelo's Shea Morenz, who is weighing whether to play quarterback for the University of Texas Longhorns or sign with the Toronto Blue Jays, says he knows one thing for sure: he won't do both.

In an interview with the Austin American-Statesman published today, Morenz said he appreciated the fact that Texas football coaches weren't pressuring him to make a quick decision.

"Nobody has to sell Texas to me," he said.

Morenz is considered one of the nation's top quarterback recruits. A week ago, he was drafted as an outfielder by Toronto in the sixth round. This spring, Morenz batted .507 with seven home runs and 25 RBIs and was named the 25th-best prospect in the draft by Baseball America magazine.

There had been speculation he might go higher, perhaps even as high as the top pick in the draft, but his desire to play college football pushed him to the sixth round.

NCAA rules would allow him to play professional baseball and participate in college football if he paid for his football scholarship. But Morenz says it will be one sport or the other.

"It would be really difficult to do (both). I can't try to do both for the simple fact I'd get too far behind. Those guys (in baseball) devote a year to their sport. They play year-round," he said.

Morenz said his father would negotiate a baseball contract for him.

He said he talked briefly with Toronto last week, but he wasn't sure which way he was leaning and had no idea what kind of salary Toronto would have to offer to win his signature.

Although Texas freshmen football players are scheduled to report Aug. 7, Morenz said he had not set a timetable for a decision.

"I'm not really sure, although I do know that I value my education. It will be hard for me to give up my education and give up football," he said.

"I don't know what I'll do. I don't think there's such a thing as a gut feeling. Everybody has a different opinion. The people close to me just want me to do what's best for me," Morenz said.

If he does choose Texas, Morenz likely will play baseball and football for the Longhorns. He said he has talked with Texas baseball coach Cliff Gustafson.

Detroit pounds Cleveland; Alomar pummels Doherty

By The Associated Press

The game already was out of hand when Sandy Alomar decided to take matters into his own hands.

After Cecil Fielder hit a three-run homer in the first inning and Milt Cuyler got his second career grand slam later in the inning, the Detroit Tigers were well on their way to a 9-2 victory over Cleveland. When Glenallen Hill was hit by the first pitch from Tigers reliever John Doherty in the sixth and Alomar nearly had his head taken off by Doherty's next pitch, the Indians' catcher charged the mound.

Both dugouts and bullpens emptied. Doherty and Alomar were the only players ejected. No punches were thrown, although Cleveland's Carlos Baerga and Detroit's Tony Phillips both had to be restrained by other players.

"That has never happened to me before, not even in Little League," Doherty said. "I wasn't throwing at either batter, and especially not after I hit the first one."

The problems started in the fifth with Detroit leading 8-1 and Mickey Tettleton at bat. After Dennis Cook got ahead 0-2, Tettleton had to dive from two head-high fastballs.

"I would assume that they thought we were throwing at Tettleton, but we weren't," Indians manager Mike Hargrove said. "After they hit Glen and almost hit Sandy, we thought they were throwing at us, but Sparky and Mickey (Tettleton) said they weren't, and I have to believe them."

When Doherty hit Hill, the batter took a couple of steps toward the mound, then stopped. Home plate umpire Drew Coble tried to calm the Indians dugout.

"Drew came over and said that he felt the pitch had gotten away from Doherty and he didn't want anything to happen," Hargrove said. "But the one to Sandy was curious."

It apparently was more than that to Alomar, who refused comment after the game.

American League

In the game, Kurt Knudson shut down the Indians on two hits in the last four innings for his first major league save.

In other games, it was Toronto 16, New York 3; Baltimore 5, Boston 2; Milwaukee 6, Oakland 2; Chicago 5, California 1; Kansas City 9, Minnesota 6; and Texas 14, Seattle 3.

Blue Jays 16, Yankees 3
At New York, the Jays set season highs for runs and hits (21). An eight-run fourth inning broke it open. Toronto sent 14 batters to the plate in the inning, which took 37 minutes to play.

Jeff Kent tripled, homered and drove in four runs, as did Manuel Lee. Second baseman Roberto Alomar left in the third after slightly spraining his left knee in a play at the plate. Every other Blue Jays starter had at least one hit.

"I guess we broke out of it tonight," Dave Winfield said of Toronto's hitting woes: the Blue Jays' average had fallen to a season-low .253. "We had not been hitting the ball."

Before the game, Yankees reliever Steve Howe was suspended by commissioner Fay Vincent after pleading guilty to a misdemeanor charge of attempting to buy a gram of cocaine during the offseason.

Orioles 5, Red Sox 2
At Baltimore, Bob Milacki (5-3) gave up four hits and two runs in the opening two innings, then blanked Boston on three hits until giving way to Storm Davis, who got the last out in the eighth. Gregg Olson pitched the ninth for his 15th save.

It was Milacki's first win against the Red Sox in seven career starts. The Red Sox were the only American League team he never had beaten.

Cal Ripken went hitless in four at-bats, ending his hitting streak at 16 games, the second-longest string of his career.

Brewers 6, Athletics 2
At Milwaukee, with three singles

Robin Yount moved into 21st place on the all-time list. Yount moved past Jake Beckley and Rogers Hornsby on the career list. He now has 2,931 hits.

"If I end up at first, (first base coach Tim) Foli lets me know. I could do without that," Yount said.

Bill Wegman allowed four hits, walked one and struck out five, including home run hitter Mark McGwire three times, in eight innings. Doug Henry pitched the ninth and did not allow a hit.

"I made my best pitches to Mark," said Wegman. "When he was looking in a certain place, we were throwing it opposite. We just kept him off-stride."

White Sox 5, Angels 1

At Chicago, Jack McDowell (8-3) ended a personal three-game slide as he yielded four hits in 7 2-3 innings, walking three and striking out eight. Bobby Thigpen earned his 13th save.

The Angels dropped their fourth straight and 18th in the last 22 games.

John Wathan, acting Angels manager, said he thought McDowell "threw well, but with the way we've been swinging the bats lately, it's hard to tell if McDowell was on."

Royals 9, Twins 6

At Kansas City, the hosts overcame a 5-1 deficit as Keith Miller was 4 for 4, including a homer. The Twins helped the Royals to a five-run sixth by committing errors on three successive plays as Kansas City scored all its runs with two outs.

Reliever Tom Gordon pitched 2-3 innings for the victory. Gordon (1-6) had lost 10 straight decisions since his last win on Aug. 14, 1991.

"I feel real good at the plate," said Miller, who is 7 for 10 in his last three games after an 0-for-12 stretch. "I've slowed my approach down and I'm not jumping out at the ball, which is what you have a tendency to do when you haven't played."

Montreal's Hill one-hits Mets

By The Associated Press

Ken Hill pitched his first career one-hitter, and some of his Montreal teammates thought it should have been even better.

The only hit off Hill was starting-pitcher Anthony Young's infield single to shortstop with two outs in the fifth inning. Hill went on to beat the New York Mets 6-0 Monday night at Montreal, but after the game everyone was talking about Young's hit.

Shortstop Tom Foley ranged to his right and might have thrown Young out had he made the play, but he bobbled the ball. Official scorer Bob Mann said he ruled the play a single because the ball was hit deep into the hole.

National League

"If there was any question on the part of the official scorer, he should have put an error up and waited for a clean hit," Foley said. "We're at home and Ken's pitching a great game. I know the official scorer has to make a decision on the spot. I feel bad personally. It wasn't a sharply hit ball. I couldn't find the ball. I just wish it had been an error. It's a tough play going into the hole backhand."

Young agreed with the way Mr. Mann saw it. "It was definitely a hit. He made a good play just to get to the ball. The way I run, it would have been close," said Young, a former defensive back at the University of Houston.

Several Expos disagreed with Mann's call and made motions to the press box after the game ended.

"If Foley had come up cleanly, he would have thrown him out," Hill said. "But I'm just happy to win. I felt real on. I don't know what it's about with the Mets, but I have good success against them."

Hill, who struck out eight and walked four, blanked the Mets 4-0 with a four-hitter at New York on April 10 — the Mets' home opener. He's 6-1 lifetime against them.

Elsewhere in the NL it was Philadelphia 7, Pittsburgh 0; Cincinnati 4, San Francisco 1; San Diego 3, Houston 2; Atlanta 4, Los Angeles 2; and Chicago swept a doubleheader from St. Louis, 5-2 in 13 innings and 6-4.

The Mets were shut out for the second straight game, losing 3-0 to Pittsburgh's Randy Tomlin on Sunday, and for the ninth time in 56 games this season. New York, which has lost eight of 11 to fall to .500, was shut out nine times all of last season.

"I have no explanation. I have no idea," manager Jeff Torborg said about the Mets' hitting slump. "We've run into good pitching lately. I'm not worried about reaching .500. I'm just worried about playing good baseball."

Archi Cianfrocco and Rick Cerone each drove in two runs for the Expos.

Phillies 7, Pirates 0

At Veterans Stadium, Curt Schilling pitched a three-hitter for his first major league shutout and doubled in two runs in Philadelphia's six-run second inning.

Schilling (5-3) struck out one and issued an intentional walk as the Phillies handed the Pirates' their sixth straight road loss and ninth in the last 10 away from home.

New York's Willie Randolph throws to first after forcing out Montreal's Marquis Grissom in Montreal Monday.

Mariano Duncan hit a three-run homer in the big second inning and Darren Daulton homered in the seventh.

Reds 4, Giants 1

At Candlestick Park, Greg Swindell, after giving up a leadoff homer to Darren Lewis, pitched eight strong innings for Cincinnati. Chris Sabo homered and drove in two runs for the Reds, who have won 11 of their last 14 and lead the NL West by 2 1/2 games.

In eight-plus innings, Swindell (5-2) gave up eight hits. Cory Snyder led off the ninth with a double and Rob Dibble got the last three outs for his eighth save. Gil Heredia fell to 2-2.

Padres 3, Astros 2

At Jack Murphy Stadium, Bruce Hurst, backed by homers from Tony Gwynn and Darrin Jackson, pitched a four-hitter to beat Houston. Hurst (6-4) won his third straight game and fifth in his last six, four of which have been complete games.

Gwynn broke a 2-2 tie with one out in the seventh with his fifth homer.

Pete Harnisch (3-6) allowed eight hits in 6 1-3 innings.

Braves 4, Dodgers 2

At Dodger Stadium, David Justice homered and drove in three runs as Atlanta edged above the .500 mark for the first time in two months. The Braves' fourth straight victory — and their ninth in 10 games overall — gave them a 29-28 record.

Charlie Leibrandt (5-2), allowed an unearned run and five hits in five innings as he remained unbeaten in his last six starts. Ramon Martinez (3-3) allowed six hits and all four runs in five innings.

Cubs 5, Cardinals 2 (13)

Cubs 6, Cardinals 4

At Busch Stadium, Gary Scott and Jose Vizcaino, each batting under .200, keyed a four-run 13th-inning rally for Chicago in the first game of a doubleheader.

Chicago completed a sweep with a 6-4 victory behind Ryne Sandberg, who homered and drove in three runs. Frank Castillo worked six innings for the victory.

Sandberg was 4 for 10 in the doubleheader with four RBIs after entering the night 3 for 19 against St. Louis pitching. He's 25 for 62 (.403) in his last 15 games with four home runs and 17 RBIs.

Rotary keeps rolling

Rotary chalked up win number five with a 12-5 decision over Duncan last weekend in a Major Bambino League game at Optimist Park.

Chad Clardy, the winning pitcher, had six strikeouts in the first four innings. Reliever Aaron Whitney recorded six strikeouts in the last two innings.

Pampa's Palmer wins four events

But he misses his own record

Pampa's Wendell Palmer won four events at the Dallas Masters track and field meet last weekend on the Southern Methodist University campus.

Palmer, who competes in the 60-64 age division, placed first in the 5-kilo shot (43-4), javelin (120-0), hammer (127-0) and 1-kilo discus (177-0).

"I was going for my world record in the discus, but I just couldn't get it there. If there had been some good crosswinds, I may have been able to do it," Palmer said.

The Pampa Middle School teacher currently holds the world Masters record in the 1-kilo discus with a 189-0 toss.

"I'm going to a meet at Andrews next weekend and I'll try it again. Generally, they have some good crosswinds there and that should help me," Palmer said.

In a Masters meet last month in Ponca City, Okla., Palmer broke the world record in the 1.5-kilo discus with a 155-10 throw in the 60-64 age division. The record had been held by Jose Celaya of Spain since 1971.

(AP Photo) Convicted Nazi war criminal John Demjanjuk is surrounded by news photographers in the Supreme Court of Jerusalem today before the start of the final defense summations in Demjanjuk's appeal hearing. Demjanjuk was convicted of being "Ivan the Terrible," the gas chamber operator in Treblinka death camp in World War II and was sentenced to death for the crime.

Judge: Demjanjuk should be released if evidence does not support conviction

By KARIN LAUB
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — A Supreme Court judge said today he would have to release John Demjanjuk if the prosecution didn't present an iron-clad case that he was the gas chamber operator "Ivan the Terrible" of the Treblinka death camp.

Justice Ehud Barak was responding to prosecutor Michael Shaked, who argued that even if the high court throws out the Treblinka conviction, there is proof Demjanjuk was a Nazi guard at another death camp, Sobibor, and participated in genocide.

But Barak said Sobibor was only mentioned as an aside in the indictment to back up the main charges involving Treblinka.

"That's why I would have to release him if he was only a guard," Barak told Shaked in a stormy exchange. "If you have no proof beyond a reasonable doubt that he was at Treblinka, then there is no point in proceeding."

Shaked spoke in his last day of final arguments in the former Cleveland auto worker's Supreme Court appeal. There is no indication when the Supreme Court might issue its ruling.

The Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk, now 72, was convicted in April 1988 of being "Ivan the Terrible" and sentenced to death. The verdict rested on five Treblinka survivors who identified Demjanjuk as the sadistic guard who ran the gas chambers and brutalized victims on their way to death.

Some 850,000 Jews were killed in Treblinka in Nazi-occupied Poland in 1942 and 1943.

Demjanjuk says he is a victim of mistaken identity. He says he spent the time in question in prisoner-of-war camps after being captured by the Germans in May 1942 while serving in the Soviet army.

The defense bases its appeal on testimony by Treblinka guards who say the gas chamber operator was Ivan Marchenko. Most of the guards' descriptions don't fit Demjanjuk.

The guards testified in Nazi trials in the Soviet Union in the 1940s through 1960s, and were executed. Israel won access to the files with the collapse of the Soviet Union, midway through the appeal.

Japan moves toward sending troops abroad

TOKYO (AP) — For four long days and nights, an exhausting ritual of Japanese democracy known as the "cow walk" demonstrated just how desperate opposition parties can get after 36 years without a taste of power.

The delaying tactic did not prevent the passage through parliament's upper house early this morning of legislation to send troops overseas for the first time since World War II for peacekeeping operations.

The "cow walk" is the last resort for the Socialists and other minority parties. The conservative Liberal Democrats' parliamentary majority has kept them in power since 1956.

Even the slowest cows move faster than the Socialist politicians who gazed around the Diet chamber and absentmindedly searched their pockets for "misplaced" ballots.

Marching in place and using baby steps to sidle up the stairs to the ballot box, they took up to 30 minutes to travel the few dozen feet to the podium.

Voting was necessary eight motions they had introduced to stall a vote on the troops bill. The final motion took 13 hours to defeat.

Opposition parties contend the bill, which would allow up to 2,000 Japanese soldiers to participate in U.N. peacekeeping, is a step toward militarization.

The bill now goes to the lower house, where the Liberal Democrats hold a strong majority, although they may face a few more days of cow-walking.

The Socialists last used the "cow walk" in 1988 after brawls and other maneuvers failed to prevent passage of a controversial tax reform bill.

The troops bill was introduced almost two years ago, after Japan was sharply criticized for not contributing forces to the U.N.-mandated effort to oust Iraqi troops from Kuwait.

Japan's constitution bans the use of military force to settle international disputes.

Sarajevo bombed

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — While terrified residents rushed for shelter past corpses and fires in the Bosnian war's heaviest bombardment, the U.N. Security Council approved sending 60 military observers to Sarajevo.

The council, meeting in New York, voted for the observers late Monday as a first step toward securing the Bosnian capital's airport for relief flights. The city's besieged people are in desperate need of food and water.

U.N. diplomats said, however, that fighting would have to settle down for a few days if the mission is to go ahead.

Earlier Monday, U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali asked the Security Council to authorize 1,000 peacekeepers to secure the airport. Gunmen from both sides in the conflict have agreed to put their troops around the airport under U.N. guard.

If the advance team can gain the withdrawal of anti-aircraft guns from the hills around the airport, the full contingent could follow. That would put U.N. peacekeepers on the fiercest battlefield of the Yugoslav civil war.

In a war where agreements seldom hold, the troops could be exposed to attack, increasing pressure for foreign military intervention.

As the diplomats met in New York, machine guns chattered in Sarajevo's streets, rockets shrieked overhead and the whine of incoming artillery shells mixed with the thuds of explosions.

Barrages from cannon, mortars and multibarrel rocket launchers set buildings ablaze across the city.

At the main hospital, doctors said that they were low on antibiotics, anesthetics and oxygen, but that response to broadcast appeals for blood had been good.

At least 14 people were killed and 350 wounded on Monday, hospital officials said. Another seven people died and 21 were wounded elsewhere in Bosnia, news media said.

Three fighters left a dead comrade wrapped in a blanket outside the morgue when no one responded to their knocks. They wrote his name on a piece of cardboard stuffed in his boot.

No survivors found in Panama air crash

PANAMA CITY (AP) — Searchers today reached the wreckage of a Panamanian airliner that crashed in remote jungle-covered mountains and said all 47 people aboard were apparently killed.

The COPA airlines Boeing 737 went down during a storm late Saturday on a flight from Panama City to Cali, Colombia, Civil Aeronautics officials said. The plane was spotted by teams of helicopters near Tucuti, a village 120 miles southeast of Panama City.

At this time of year, the area is virtually cut off by torrential rains. U.S. Army paramedics who struggled to the wreckage today said in a television broadcast from the site that there were no signs of life in the vicinity of the plane. The broadcast showed dense, burnt vegetation.

Area residents told the national television station that they had seen a huge fireball falling from the sky on Saturday night. Searchers said debris was scattered over a six-mile area.

"Clothes and suitcases can be seen on top of the trees," COPA director Maj. Cristobal Fundora said on a television broadcast from the site.

There was no immediate report on the cause of the crash.

Aviation officials in Panama and Colombia said two of the 40 passengers were from the United States, but their names were not immediately made public. Others aboard were 35 Colombians, one Italian and nine Panamanians, including the seven crew members.

Later, the newspaper La Prensa said it had obtained a passenger list that identified the Americans as Edgar Sanchez and W. Rendon, but it did not give ages or hometowns.

The flight left Panama City at 8:40 p.m. Saturday. Two minutes before the jet disappeared from radar, the pilot, Capt. Rafael Chial, told air traffic controllers he was changing course to avoid a storm.
