Amtrak derails over culvert

Workers try to clear debris and cut their way into the damaged cars of Saturday's wreck of the Amtrak train. A washed-out culvert caused the accident.

WILLISTON, Vt. (AP) — An Amtrak passenger train with 278 people aboard derailed while crossing a washed-out culvert Saturday, tumbling cars into a streambed, killing at least three people, injuring more than 130 and trapping passengers in a crushed sleeping car.

Workers using a crane and blowtorches rescued at least five people from the crushed car, but two passengers remained trapped inside more than 12 hours after the accident, said John Mechado, an Amtrak safety officer. Rescuers used stethoscopes against the side of the sleeping car to detect movement within, but they said there were no signs of life.

Nine cars of the 13-car Montrealer jumped the weakened track around 7 a.m., officials said. Three cars were mangled as they piled into each other after plummeting down a 30-foot gully in northwestern Vermont.

Two people were pronounced dead at the scene and one died in the operating room at the Medical Center Hospital of Vermont in nearby Burlington, said Sue Elliott, a hospital spokeswoman.

The death toll was expected to climb once rescue workers were able to open up the crushed car at the bottom of a three-car pile-up. A 125-ton crane was brought in to lift off the top cars, each weighing 125,000 pounds.

Rescue workers were unable to get into six compartments in the crushed sleeper. Asked if it was likely all of those passengers were dead, Amtrak spokesman Clifford Black said, "I think there is a possibility that is the case."

"Bodies were just falling every which way. People were screaming for help," said passenger Frank Coles of New York City.

One worker who was able to crawl close to the bottom mangled car said he spotted several bodies. Witnesses said they saw at least two bodies taken to a baggage car, which was being used as a temporary morgue.

Tax adds bookwork for businesses

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

For the people who manage service industries, the tax bill passed last week by the State Legislature "is terrible" in terms of added bookwork. But Midland city and county governments will benefit as they skim off their share of the increased taxes.

Gov. Mark White has yet to sign the three-year $4.6 billion tax bill and Midlanders are waiting to get instructions before they can determine the exact impact on their businesses. If signed, the bill will go into effect Oct. 1.

Under that bill:
—Sales tax will go from 4 to 4.125 cents on the dollar;
—Auto taxes would be raised from 3 to 4 cents on sales and rental of autos;

—The gasoline tax would be doubled from 5 to 10 cents a gallon;

—Auto license fees would be hiked $12.50 next year, $6.25 in 1986 and $6.25 in 1987;

—Cigarettes would see another 2 cents per pack and the packs would be included under sales tax for the first time.

—Taxes on beer, wine and spirits would be raised 20 percent.

—Hotel tax would go from 3 to 4 cents on the dollar.

—Sales tax would be expanded to include numerous services including cable television, newspaper sales, parking, home fertilizer, some computer programs, movies, concerts, dry cleaning, some insurance premiums and a wide range of repair services.

—Corporate franchise tax will rise from $4.25 to $5.25 per $1,000 of property or capital stock.

THE CITY currently adds a 1 cent sales tax to the city and this money is returned to City Hall, where it is considered part of the revenues in the General Fund budget. For the past two years sales declined in Midland and the tax rebate descended proportionately.

City Finance Director Troy Gifford said the tax bill "would definitely have an effect on our sales tax rebate. It would mean we would have less of a dent in our surplus next year, less of a deficit budget. It may take several months to figure out how it's affecting us."

Soviets not likely to listen to Jackson

By ANDREW ROSENTHAL
The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Jesse Jackson's hopes for a Kremlin audience to seek release of Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov put him into a battle that has been waged without success by the pope, presidents, human rights activists and scientists.

An Analysis

Jackson says he has "a good track record" in obtaining the release of political prisoners, and he has referred to Sakharov in that context, without being more specific as to what he wants the Soviets to do in the Sakharov case.

Sakharov has been in internal exile in the closed city of Gorky. He has not been charged with any crime but it is unclear where he is being held. He has asked that his wife, Yelena Bonner, be allowed to leave the country for medical treatment.

Sakharov has said he would emigrate from the Soviet Union if he could, but government authorities have said there is no chance of that because of his sensitive work as a nuclear physicist.

So far there has been nothing in the Soviet reaction to previous pleas for Sakharov or to Jackson's other missions of mercy to suggest he might get a more sympathetic hearing than his predecessors — if he gets permission to visit at all.

Dissidents ram truck into Iraqi headquarters, Iran claims

The Associated Press

Iran's official news agency said Saturday that an Iranian-backed Iraqi dissident group blew up a truck crammed with dynamite at the headquarters of an Iraqi paramilitary force in Baghdad, "killing dozens of Iraqi agents."

The Iraqi News Agency carried nothing on the purported suicide attack and sources in Baghdad, capital of Iraq, said they knew nothing of it.

The Islamic Republic News Agency, quoting a communique issued in Tehran, said scores of Iraqis were wounded in what it said was a bombing attack at the Iraqi Popular Army headquarters. Several ammunition and weapons depots were set ablaze, said IRNA, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus.

Later, IRNA quoted an unidentified spokesman of Iraqi dissidents as saying 10 commanders of the Iraqi Popular Army were among those killed in the attack.

The communique, issued by the Supreme Assembly of the Islamic Revolution of Iraq, claimed that the "martyr Fallahi" group drove a truck laden with 220 pounds of dynamite against the building in the Iraqi capital's Zafaraniyeh section early Friday morning.

It said the attackers belonged to the Islamic Amal organization of Iraq, one of the groups making up the Islamic Revolution of Iraq, also known as SAIRI. SAIRI was formed in Tehran last year to coordinate the actions of Iraqi factions opposed to the socialist Baath Party rule in Baghdad. It is headed by Ayatollah Baker Hakim, an Iraqi religious leader allied with Iran.

The statement carried by IRNA warned "arrogant governments, especially France and its agents in the region," to stop financial and military aid to Iraq. "They must understand that (Iraqi President) Saddam Hussein is not going to stay," the statement said.

The Iraqi Popular Army is a paramilitary force whose units support the regular Iraqi army in the war against Iran.

Meanwhile, Iraq said Saturday it would pursue air and sea attacks to prevent Iran from exporting crude oil, despite Iranian warnings that it would retaliate by closing Persian Gulf shipping lanes used by other Arab nations.

Also Saturday, high-ranking officers and military experts representing the armed forces of the six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council met behind closed doors in Kuwait to weigh combined strategies against Iranian attacks on commercial shipping in neutral gulf waters.

In the latest war front developments, Iraqi gunners and combat patrols attacked Iranian positions along the 733-mile common border and destroyed a 106-millimeter recoilless gun, an infantry bunker and an ammunition dump, according to a war communique issued in Baghdad.

Summertime in Midland not so bad

Climate is temperate, climatologist says

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Summertime in Midland, and the living is easy — oilfields are pumping, and the temperature is high. And even if your daddy's not rich and your ma's not good looking, if you have air conditioning, you'll probably get by.

Summer in Midland may not be April in Paris, but it's a lot more temperate than many people might think, says J.E. Becht, a climatologist who is also dean of the business college at the University of Texas at the Permian Basin.

"One of the secrets of the climate here is the cool nights and mornings, which combine with the low relative humidity to give us a comfortable, temperate climate," Becht says. "A lot of folks don't even turn on their air conditioners until the middle of June."

Certainly, humidity isn't much of a problem here; average humidity levels are in the low 40s at noon during June, July and August, and they go down to the low 30s by the late afternoons. (Humidity is much higher at night and early in the morning, because the air is cooler.)

But with average daily high temperatures in the mid 90s during July and August, and the nearest sea breezes hundreds of miles away, it would be difficult to sell Midland as a summer vacation paradise.

And during the sweltering days of late July and early August when temperatures are at their highest, it might be hard to credit Becht's contention that "West Texas isn't as hot as people think it is."

Education bill seen as White victory

By KEN HERMAN

An Analysis.

AUSTIN (AP) — The organized poor, a budding political force, jammed the lobby outside the Texas House and cheered Gov. Mark White as he emerged to declare victory for education reform. He told the cheering crowd it was "for the people of Texas."

But the moment belonged to one Texan — White.

A year after his teacher pay raise plan died in the Legislature, he had pushed through a broad education reform package and a billion-dollar tax hike to pay for it.

In the eyes of many, White is riding high, the hero in a scenario reviewed with superlatives, many of which were his own.

"We can now look proudly back and say we had the finest education reform package of any state in the nation," White said as the special session ended Tuesday night. "There will be opportunity for a great deal of glory for everyone who has participated in it."

HOW LONG THE glory will last, and whether it will fade into ignominy, is a matter of conjecture.

"I will agree it looks that way and may well prove to be that way," Republican Rep. Lee Jackson said of the "hero" tag some are putting on White.

The Dallas lawmaker called White's effort a "dexterous performance," but predicted it could turn on the governor.

"A test of how permanent this accomplishment is will be the writing of the state budget for the coming biennium," Jackson said.

"If that project is bitterly difficult, and if the changes in the education system are not immediately visible, then I think people are going to ask just how wise it was to rush into a major spending and taxing program in 1984," Jackson said.

EITHER CREDIT or blame might be overly heaped on White, according to Jackson. He said Speaker Gib Lewis and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby — not White — were the driving forces.

"The (legislative) leadership stopped his program last spring. The leadership passed his program this summer," he said.

To Texas Democratic Chairman Bob Slagle, the performance of his party's governor was a mark of permanence.

"It demonstrates he clearly has his feet on the ground now. In his first regular session (1983) he was trying to do too many things at once," Slagle said.

Slagle's Republican counterpart, George Strake, also seems pleased with White's performance. Strake is counting on it to lead to White's political demise.

"I WAS surprised he was running around with a big smile on his face, happy about the fact he orchestrated the largest tax hike in history," said Strake, who believes $500 million extra could have been found in the current budget. "The tax implications will show up before the education reforms do."

Strake is right. Most of the tax hikes — including a 0.125 percent hike in the sales tax — are effective Oct. 2. Most of the education reforms go in effect when school starts, but it could take years to see the results.

Strake says White's star will fall "around mid-1985 and into 1986," just in time for the next gubernatorial election.

"I don't see him coming out as a big hero in this thing. He got the Legislature to change its mind and vote for the largest tax increase in history," said Strake.

H. ROSS PEROT, a White appointee as chairman of the Select Committee on Public Education, said he could not predict the political effects on White.

'King of Bluebonnets' dead at 57

KERRVILLE (AP) — Carroll Abbott, known as "The King of Bluebonnets," has died of cancer in Kerrville, where he devoted the last years of his life to the preservation of Texas wildflowers that had captured his fancy as a youth.

A former newspaperman and political consultant, Abbott retired in 1970 and began a long study of the state's wildflowers. He eventually became an unpaid lobbyist for more than 5,000 species of Texas wildflowers — including the bluebonnet.

Services for Abbott, who died Thursday at the age of 57, are scheduled for 10 a.m. Monday at Kerrville Funeral Home.

A Kerrville resident for 29 years, Abbott was born Dec. 6, 1926, in Texarkana. He was a botanist and operated a Kerrville nursery.

During his career, Abbott worked for the Houston Post and Houston Press. He also owned and operated the Comfort News, was a former Kerrville Daily Times editor and formerly was associated with radio station KERV. He attended the University of Southern California and worked for the Los Angeles Express newspaper.

Abbott also worked as a publicist for campaigns of John Connally and John F. Kennedy. He was in charge of a banquet in Austin for President Kennedy on Nov. 22, 1963 — an event that never was held. Kennedy was assassinated earlier that day in Dallas.

Abbott once said he remembered the first wildflower he saw "in the days when little boys didn't express an interest in things like wildflowers."

He kept notes on the best places to see wildflowers when he was traveling on political business. He decided to spend his time on the wildflower trail in 1970 and immerse himself in the lore and study of native Texas plants.

Abbott gathered seeds, roots, and cuttings on the property of cooperative ranchers and farmers. He sold them through a mail order business and began writing the Texas Wildflower Newsletter.

"I'm flat broke but awfully seedy," he once said.

"The first three years in wildflowers I made less than I made in a month when I was in politics. During our first year my pickup truck was repossessed one night," he said.

Abbott later was in demand as a speaker on the subject of Texas wildflowers.

Computer's broken wire grounded shuttle

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — A microscopic, broken wire in a backup computer forced NASA to scrub the maiden voyage of the space shuttle Discovery last month, a spokesman for the computer's manufacturer said Saturday.

The broken wire was an integrated circuit within one of the Discovery's five identical computers, which control all the ship's functions, including communications, navigation and guidance, said Joe Militano, spokesman for International Business Machines.

"Engineers isolated the problem to an open in an integrated circuit in a memory core unit in the computer's input-output processor," Militano said.

Discovery's maiden voyage as the third shuttle in NASA's fleet was set for June 25, but a backup computer failed just a half hour short of takeoff. The next day, engine failure grounded Discovery just four seconds before a rescheduled launch.

IBM scientists in Owego, N.Y., studied the defective computer removed from Discovery and determined the problem had been "a random part failure," Militano said.

He said engineers still were trying to find out why the wire broke.

Owner of large liquor store chain 'absolutely a teetotaler'

HOUSTON (AP) — Spec Jackson is the owner of one of the world's largest liquor store chains and has made a fortune over the last three decades selling bottled goods.

But the 54-year-old merchant won't touch a drop of what he sells in his chain of 24 Spec's Liquor Warehouse stores.

A year ago, Jackson and his wife, Carolyn, started a program to provide free rides home for bar patrons who become too drunk to drive. It was an effort to encourage what he calls "a responsible use" of alcoholic beverages.

And he realized that if he was serious about it, that "responsible use" should start with himself.

"I'd always been a very moderate drinker because I knew I didn't handle it well," said Jackson. "Now I'm absolutely a teetotaler."

The liquor store owner provides free taxi trip tickets to all of the bars and restaurants that are his wholesale customers. When patrons become too drunk to drive, bar owners are encouraged to send them home in a taxi and ol' Spec picks up the tab.

In the last year, Jackson has paid out $2,000 to $3,000 a month for the taxi service, but he thinks it's been worth every dime.

"We in the liquor industry are as anxious as anybody else to get the drunk driver off the road," he said.

Jackson said it is impossible to demonstrate the effect of the program because accidents that didn't happen can't be counted. But he is confident the effort has been worthwhile and plans to continue it.

"You take that many (drunk drivers) off the streets and it's got to have done some good," he said. "We feel a need to act responsibly in our market place. Maybe we've saved some lives just by spending a little of our money."

"You take that many (drunk drivers) off the streets and it's got to have done some good," he said. "We feel a need to act responsibly in our market place. Maybe we've saved some lives just by spending a little of our money."

Jackson said the whole liquor industry, from the distillers and brewers, to the tavern and bar owners, are making an effort to assure that their products are not abused.

The drunk or the alcoholic, he said, is not where the liquor industry makes its profits.

"My business depends upon reasonable, sensible people who use our product in moderation on social occasions or as gifts," he said.

"That's where 98 percent of our business comes from. We could do without the one or two percent who abuse the product."

Jackson said society tends to attack his industry to correct the problem of alcohol abuse when actually the solution is in education.

"We (society) has the macho image that a youngster is not a man until he has learned to get drunk out of his mind," he said. "It's an image we've got to correct with education."

The liquor store chain owner said that recent federal legislation to force states to raise the legal drinking age from 18 to 21 is not the solution to the national drunk driving problem.

"It won't have much effect (on those underaged). They'll find a way to get it," said Jackson. Making it illegal, he added, "just makes it more enticing."

"We can't legislate away drunk driving," he said. "It's got to be through education. We have to find a way to teach people that it's not macho or smart to get drunk and drive."

Jackson, a native of Grapevine, Texas, started in the liquor business 33 years ago as a display boy at a wholesale store.

FmHA avoids foreclosure on loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — A little over half of the 30,000 or so Texas farmers who have taken out $1.5 billion in federal loans are behind on their payments, but the federal government doesn't expect to be owning a lot of farms.

The policy of the U.S. Department of Agriculture is "if anybody has a chance of making it, we stay with them," said Merlin Aycock of the Farmers Home Administration, the farmer's lender of last resort.

Most of Texas' total $13.7 billion farm debt is in commercial loans, but in 1983, Texas took out more federal farm loans than any other state — $287 million. Arkansas was second with $151 million. FmHA has a total of about $25 billion loaned nationally.

Texas' 51 percent delinquency rate is fourth highest in the nation, Aycock said. Florida has 61 percent, Georgia 60 percent and Arizona 57 percent.

Aycock said the figures are misleading anyway because any borrower more than 15 days late on payments is categorized as "delinquent." He said the department has no figures on how many are further behind than that.

"We're not unduly concerned" about the delinquency rate, he said.

The Texas Department of Agriculture is concerned about the delinquency rate and has charged that Reagan administration economic policies are responsible.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture blames circumstances beyond its control — especially weather — for farmers' economic hardships.

Half of the farmers listed as delinquent are behind in their payments by three years or more, said Heather Ball, a TDA economist, "and that we have from FmHA's own figures."

There are no delinquency or foreclosure figures on commercial loans, she said.

Farmers can only borrow from FmHA if they cannot get a commercial loan.

Although foreclosure is an option, the agency avoids it, Aycock said. Of FmHA's 270,000 loans, 253 have been foreclosed.

"We realize these are unusual times for everybody," Aycock said.

Foreclosure, he said, is "the absolute last resort. There's no merit in that for us, taking the farm. We don't want somebody's farm."

Ms. Ball said 42 Texas farmers were foreclosed on by FmHA during fiscal year 1983. Another 642 were sent "acceleration letters," which meant the farmer must pay the full amount of the loan or face possible foreclosure.

Ex-judge indicted on 34 counts

CAMERON, Texas (AP) — Former Milam County Judge Phil Smith has been indicted on charges alleging that he spearheaded a bribery scheme over a 2½-year period, authorities said.

Smith, 37, who resigned his post earlier this year, was indicted Friday by a county grand jury on charges of soliciting and accepting bribes, felony theft, perjury, tampering with government records, tampering with witnesses and fabricating evidence.

Two other Milam County men also were indicted in connection with alleged schemes involving Smith.

Marvin Farek Jr., a Rockdale attorney, was indicted on two counts of aggravated perjury, one of conspiring to commit bribery and one of conspiring to commit aggravated perjury.

Emil Horelica of Cameron was indicted on two counts of aggravated perjury.

Assistant Milam County Attorney Charles Lance said the indictments stem from at least nine cases in which Smith received fees for handling probate matters as an attorney and then ruled on the cases as a judge in probate court, granting the action requested.

"It was like the fox guarding the chickens," Lance said.

An arrest warrant was issued for Smith on Friday, but the county attorney's office instructed the sheriff to hold the warrant for 36 hours to allow Smith to turn himself in, Lance said.

State District Judge Don Humble set a $15,000 bond for Smith on Friday, Lance said.

Farek turned himself in Friday afternoon and was released after posting a $5,000 bond. Sheriff Leroy Broadus said. A $5,000 bond also has been set for Horelica, who had not been arrested Saturday, a sheriff's office spokesman said.

The indictments allege that Farek accepted money for probate work that Smith did and funneled the money to Smith.

Clerk charged with promoting obscenity

AUSTIN (AP) — A records clerk with the Austin Independent School District accused of using a school computer to write pamphlets for adults who want to have sex with children was fired and charged with promoting obscene material.

School Superintendent John Ellis said David Sonenschein, 43, an assistant to the supervisor of student records, was discharged Friday after school officials verified his involvement in the production of pamphlets offering advice on how to seduce children.

Sonenschein was charged by the Travis County attorney's office with promoting obscene material — a Class A misdemeanor that carries a maximum penalty of a year in jail and a $2,000 fine.

He was released on his own recognizance early Saturday by Justice of the Peace Guy Herman. A hearing was scheduled for July 25.

Attempts by The Associated Press to reach Sonenschein by telephone at his home Saturday were unsuccessful.

Ellis said Sonenschein had access to the names, home addresses, and telephone numbers of the 56,000 students in the school district, but police said they have no reports that Sonenschein contacted students through the records.

Sonenschein wrote pamphlets under the title "Austin Pedophile Study Group 2," a group which exists to promote sex with children, investigators said.

Pedophilia is defined as a sexual desire in an adult for children.

The publications include "How to Have Sex With Kids," "What is Pedophilia Anyway?" "Women Pedophiles" and "Children and Sadoomasochism," investigators said.

"We found that he had used an AISD word processor to print his garbage," Ellis said. "Apparently he forgot to erase it. People said he came in during weekends to do work."

Claire Dawson-Brown, a Travis County prosecutor, said the complaint against Sonenschein was based on an affidavit signed by Bruce Gordon, a reporter for KTBC-TV in Austin.

KTBC was told about Sonenschein's operation in late May by a television reporter in Philadelphia, where one of Sonenschein's pamphlets was found in a pornography shop.

Austin police said they first learned of Sonenschein on June 25 when Houston police asked them to check his background.

Sgt. Bill Brown of the Houston Police Department said investigators there found Sonenschein's name written on a piece of paper in the wallet of a 44-year-old man charged there with six counts of promotion of child sex.

Sonenschein had worked at his $19,013-a-year job at the school district since Feb. 20, 1981. He holds a master's degree in anthropology from Indiana University in Bloomington.

Forum leader urges support for Doggett

AMARILLO (AP) — The founder of the American GI Forum asked the group's members Saturday to support state Sen. Lloyd Doggett in the race for the U.S. Senate because "we Hispanics are in trouble."

Dr. Hector P. Garcia, who founded the Hispanic civil rights organization in 1947, spoke along with Doggett at the group's 36th annual state convention being held this weekend in Amarillo.

Garcia told the group that "we need him" because "I have seen our people suffer and they will continue to suffer."

Garcia said that one of the hottest topics facing Hispanics is the Simpson-Mazzoli bill now before the U.S. Congress.

And while the group had taken no official stand on the bill, Garcia said the part that would grant amnesty to illegal aliens already in the United States is "a good idea."

He said, however, that the fight over the bill has "gotten out of hand" and that the issue has developed into "a political football."

Ed Bernaldes, the group's state chairman, said the congressional battle has been tough to follow, but said the group has lobbyists on Capitol Hill working to make Hispanic GIs' views known.

Bernaldes said that pressure is building between Hispanic groups favoring amnesty and those who say the bill will only create more problems.

Doggett — who will square off against U.S. Rep. Phil Gramm, R-College Station, in November — stumped for support by saying he would work for a strong national defense, better education and protection for social security, veteran and health care benefits.

Doggett compared his narrow victory in the June Democratic primary runoff to the late John F. Kennedy's 1960 presidential election in which he carried Texas by about 40,000 votes.

"We can't afford a landslide this fall, but we can't afford to lose," Doggett said. "There is so much at stake in the daily lives of people, in their health care, in their education, in the future of our very security."

The National Weather Service forecasts showers for today for parts of Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Idaho, Montana, the Dakotas and Wyoming.

Midland area weather will continue to be fair, hot

Midland area weather will continue to be fair and hot, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The forecast for today and Monday calls for fair skies and highs in the upper 90s. Winds today are expected to be from the south at 10 to 20 mph.

Tonight should also be fair, with lows near 70.

Saturday's extremes were identical to Friday's — a 97-degree high and 70-degree low. The record temperatures for July 7 are a 103-degree high set 20 years ago, and a 56-degree low recorded in 1952.

Most of Texas baked under fair to partly cloudy skies Saturday afternoon, although some widely scattered showers and thunderstorms briefly cooled parts of the South Texas coastline, the National Weather Service reported.

Temperatures rose to the upper 90s and edged past 100 in some areas of the state. Along the coast, where rain splashed from Brownsville to Port Arthur and into the upper and lower Coastal Plains, temperatures were a bit more comfortable in the 80s.

The weather service reported a few funnel clouds near the Beaumont-Port Arthur Airport earlier in the afternoon, but none apparently touched ground or caused any damage.

Winds were blowing southerly over most of the state from 10 to 20 mph.

The weather service's forecast was calling for widely scattered showers and thunderstorms Saturday night along the South Texas coast and in the Trans Pecos.

Temperatures aren't expected to change much through today, however, and skies were to continue fair at night.

Today is expected to be once more hot and humid during the afternoon, with a slight chance for widely scattered afternoon showers and thunderstorms.

Record rainfall saturated the East Coast and New England on Saturday as showers and thunderstorms developed ahead of a slow-moving cold front.

Newark, N.J., received 3.66 inches, more rain than on any other July day of record. The previous record for a day in July of 3.25 was set on July 13, 1972. New York City had a record 3.13 inches of rain.

Flash flooding after an average of 3 inches of rain during the night hit Pennsylvania's Montgomery and Chester counties, sweeping cars down roads and leaving people stranded in trees or atop stalled cars.

For fiscal year 1984-85, the city is looking at a proposed budget that would include a $2.5 million deficit to be taken out of the surplus. City officials are expecting to get about $7.5 million in sales tax revenues for the current fiscal year. An increase of $1.3 million — without the added revenues from the tax package — is penciled in for next year.

But the cities and state could get more with the added items in the sales tax base. Gifford said only about 30 to 35 percent of total sales are subject to the sales tax.

A Special Financial Report issued in June by State Comptroller Bob Bullock's office stated that "Texas sales tax is one of the most restricted sales tax in the nation...Service industries account for almost 19 percent of Texas nonfarm employment. Despite its size, the Texas service industry contributes a relatively small percentage to the sales tax base because it is excluded."

THE REPORT pointed out that if all exemptions and exclusions are totaled, the value of sales tax exemptions are estimated to be $7.6 billion in 1985. Currently, the state sales tax is collecting slightly more than $4 billion.

As an example, the state report estimated barber and beauty services in 1985 could bring in $26 million, laundry, cleaning and garment services, $20.4 million.

The biggest single chunk to come out of the taxpayers' pockets at once will be in the auto licensing fees, which amount to a $25 increase over a three-year period. Midland County gets 5 percent of the total amount collected on those fees, according to Frances Shuffield, county tax assessor-collector.

Rates for vehicle licenses now are $15.80, $25.80 and $33.80. Under the bill, "it will flip around and cost you the same for a Volkswagen as for a Cadillac," she said. Next year, any 1981 model or later car will have a fee of $46.30. Vehicles from 1978-80 will cost $38.30. 1977 models or older will have a fee of $28.30.

In addition to this higher state fee, Midland County Commissioners recently approved imposing a $5 fee on top of that. Of this $5, all but 15 cents will go to the county road and bridge department, Ms. Shuffield said. However, by the end of the three year period the $46.30 figure will be up to $63.80.

In 1983, Midland County took in $3,268,739.11 in licensing fees, she said. The county kept $195,633.65 while $3,073,105.46 was sent to the state.

"We're going to hear from the taxpayers when they come in here," she said.

THE CLEANING business is one service industry brought under the arm of the sales tax division. Dave Tonscha, manager at Fashion Cleaners said, "I think it's terrible. I've seen it happen before in other states. It puts added bookwork and added expense on us."

Tonscha said the tax was "inevitable," but he hated to see the tax move into the service industry.

Gregg Holmes, manager of the local cable television service, said on glancing at the bill it looks like all cable services will have to pay 5 1/2 percent tax. "It's difficult for me at this point to say how we're going to react to that," he said. He had contacted Texas Cable Association in Austin and "I couldn't find out who had initiated the bill. It's an unfair burden on cable operators and the consumers."

The movie houses here haven't decided how that tax will be handled, according to Darryl Hunn, assistant manager at Midland Park Mall Cinema. Part of a corporation, his office is waiting to hear from the headquarters on how to charge the tax.

ALTHOUGH TICKETS have never been included under the sales tax, Hunn said the drink and concession stand items have fallen under the code. Prices listed include the tax, such as a $1 item will mean 96 cents for the item and 5 cents tax.

But he noted ironically that the people who make the movie and those who distribute it won't have to pay a penny extra.

And while the state adds 1 cent to its hotel tax, Midland hotels-motels may see the increase go higher. The City Council is considering another 1 cent to its local tax.

But one service group won't consider it a burden. Before this bill, computers could be taxed, but not the programming — or software. Mike Landrum, manager of CTA, said the change will make it easier on his bookkeeping.

"I just changed my program to tax it," he said with a laugh. Landrum said no one had told computer salesmen that software was exempt from the tax and many of them were adding on sales tax. About two years ago he checked on it and discovered it was exempt.

"I don't think there will be a big impact from the sales tax. Most people don't perceive software as a service item. Bookkeeping will be easier for me. It makes everything in my store taxable," Landrum said.

Riverboat capsizes when freak wind hits it

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — An old-time riverboat on a leisure cruise capsized Saturday on the Tennessee River after being hit by a freak wind gust, killing 11 of the 18 people aboard, officials said.

The victims apparently drowned after being trapped in the triple-deck stern-wheeler, 90 feet long, when it turned belly up, said Assistant Madison County Coroner Bob Berryhill.

"We have 11 fatalities. We feel like that will be the total," Berryhill said. The seven other people aboard survived, officials said.

Divers and rescue crews spent about three hours at the scene.

Roy Lee Cunningham, a Huntsville resident who was boating on the river, said the storm came up suddenly, capsizing the paddle-wheeler about 1 mile north of Ditto Landing and sending his own 22-foot craft smashing into the shore.

He said there were two or three people on the top level of the boat, but didn't see anyone jump off.

The boat, owned by the electronics firm SCI Systems Inc. and named The SCITanic, was used by employees and guests of the company for two-hour trips on weekends, said Betty Barley, an SCI operator.

Ms. Barley said the boat could hold as many as 100 passengers, but authorities said only 18 were on board Saturday, including the crew.

The National Weather Service reported wind gusts of more than 70 mph in the storm that moved through the area about 11:30 a.m. J.C. Davenport of the state Emergency Management Agency said the boat had three decks.

The storm hit suddenly and the captain apparently steered the boat into the wind for safety, said John Clifton, an Alabama marine policeman, who added that the accident is under investigation. He said, however, that the wind is believed to be the cause.

A crosswind hit the vessel broadside and "when it did, the boat started lifting," Clifton said.

Cunningham, who was about 100 yards from the stern-wheeler when the storm hit, said the weather was fine just moments before the accident.

He said he received a friend's radio report of the storm's approach, and immediately began heading toward shore.

Moments later, he said, "a big gust of wind hit."

"They've accounted for most of the people," said state police Lt. Truman Way.

Helicopters and buses were used to ferry out the dead and most seriously injured from the remote, hilly, muddy site. An estimated 300 rescue workers, including 150 National Guardsmen, removed the passengers, many on stretchers, after passing them through train windows.

"I have never seen anything like this," said Gov. Richard Snelling, coordinating the rescue effort at the scene.

About 82 people were taken to the Medical Center Hospital in Burlington; 57 others were taken to the Fanny Allen Hospital in Colchester. Most people were treated and released.

More than 130 people with slight injuries or no injuries were taken by bus to the Williston Armory.

"We have never had anything of this magnitude," said Beverly Ruthford, a spokeswoman at the Medical Center. Some of those injured suffered broken backs, head injuries, crushed limbs or sprained muscles, she said.

Nine of the 13 cars on the north-bound Montreal derailed when the train apparently hit a section of track over a culvert that had been washed out by overnight flooding, according to state police and civil defense officials.

The train had been en route from Washington to Montreal.

It was the first fatal Amtrak accident this year.

Among those killed Saturday were Charles Crawford, 35, of Takoma Park, Md., an Amtrak worker based in Washington, D.C.; Central Vermont Railway conductor Vernon H. Church, of St. Albans, and E. Evans Carr, a passenger from New York, according to hospital and railroad spokesmen.

The speed limit was between 55 and 59 mph on the section of tracks where the accident occurred, Black added.

The rescue workers used torches to peel back the sides of some cars in an effort to free passengers. Two cars were dangling in mid-air.

Most of the passengers were asleep when the train buckled.

"First there was a jerk; then a bang, then a big bang," said Coles.

"We were out in nowhere," said Charles O'Connor, a passenger from Arlington, Va. "Most of us were sleeping; I was half asleep, and all of the cars started to shift. The sleeping cars were hit the worst; they were up front."

The accident occurred along the Winoski River, a few miles east of Burlington, in muddy, hilly terrain. Ambulances and emergency vehicles were unable to get to the derailment, but rescue workers carved roads through the mud to carry vehicles as close as possible.

"It happened at a difficult terrain," said O'Connor. "We had to walk 100 yards in the mud. There was water there, a bridge. We tried to crawl out the best we could."

Amtrak reported there were 262 passengers aboard the train. 11 Amtrak crew members and an estimated five crew members from Central Vermont Railway, which operates Amtrak trains in the state.

Flooding last month prompted Amtrak to suspend its Montreal service through Vermont for several days because of weakened track beds.

"There was a lot of flooding in that area overnight, a number of roads are closed and there was water over Interstate 89 at Williston," said George Lowe, head of Civil Defense.

Amtrak opened a toll-free telephone line for relatives or friends seeking information on the accident. The number is 1-800-424-7960.

SUMMER

But compared with the higher temperatures and much higher humidity levels that people at lower altitudes suffer through, Midlanders may not have it so bad.

And this summer doesn't seem destined to rank with such scorches as the long, hot summer of '64, when the temperature was over 100 for 12 consecutive days from June 30 to July 11, and hit a record-tying 107 on August 6. The mercury passed the century mark 52 days that year, according to Ron Brown of the National Weather Service station at Midland Regional Airport.

By way of contrast, the average year has about 15 days with temperatures over 100 degrees, and so far this year

Farrakhan vows to sue newspapers reporting statement

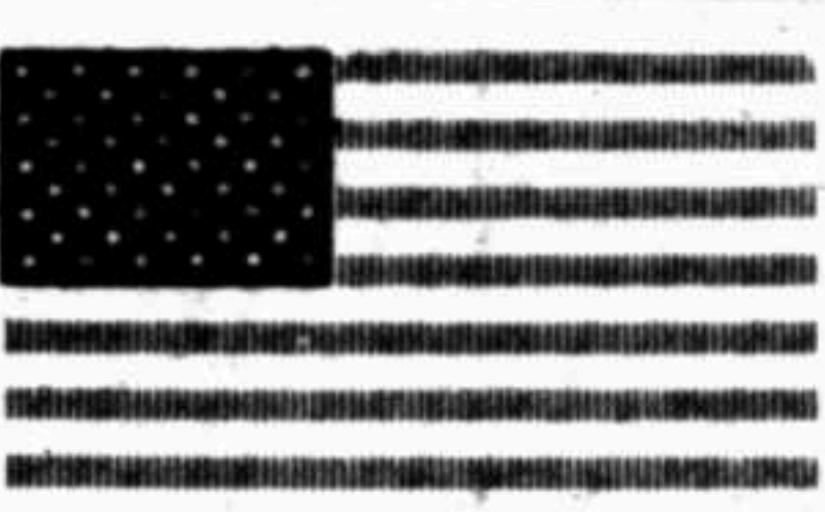

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Black Muslim leader Louis Farrakhan, denouncing the news media as "wicked liars," vowed Saturday to sue any newspaper which reported that he described Judaism as "a gutter religion."

"If I have said something wrong, naturally it's right that I apologize. But I cannot apologize for the press lies," he told a cheering crowd.

"I announce here today that I am suing the Chicago Sun-Times, the Chicago Tribune, the New York Post, the New York Daily News, The New York Times and all the other papers in America that have said that I said Judaism is a gutter religion," Farrakhan said. "You'll be forced to show cause why I shouldn't sue you and all of the media combined. We must put a stop to this."

Farrakhan said he would seek $110 million in damages "because I am suffering much from your lies."

NATION

Speaking to a standing-room-only audience at Indiana Black Expo, the 51-year-old spiritual leader of the works and major newspapers for intentionally distorting his message.

The disputed comment came in a radio broadcast Farrakhan made last month. The Chicago Sun-Times obtained a tape recording of his speech and reported that Farrakhan used the word "gutter," but he says he used the term "dirty religion."

Others who have heard the tape say the word used cannot be determined with certainty.

Farrakhan's appearance as keynote speaker at Black Expo, an annual event that focuses on the achievements, goals and problems of the black community, sparked protests from white political leaders and local Muslims.

Mayor William H. Hudnut III did not attend the event, citing a long-planned family outing, and told his staff to avoid any official contact with Farrakhan.

Balcony built illegally

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A wooden balcony that collapsed beneath 50 people watching fireworks at a Fourth of July party, seriously injuring several, was built illegally, a city spokesman said.

The balcony of the Woodland Hills house was built without a building permit and without being subjected to inspection by city officials, a city Building and Safety Department spokesman said Friday. "You'd have to call it illegal construction," said the spokesman, who commented only on condition that he not be identified.

The home's owner, Ronald F. Dusing, said Friday that when he bought the house in May 1980, the balcony was already in place.

Four of the injured remained hospitalized, one with a broken neck.

Fishing ban upheld

MIAMI (AP) — A government-imposed ban on commercial fishing at Everglades National Park has been upheld by a federal judge who said the regulations were not unconstitutional as fishermen claimed.

U.S. District Judge Sidney Aronovitz had ruled in 1980 in favor of the U.S. Department of the Interior, the National Park Service and Everglades National Park. But Aronovitz's ruling had been suspended until the National Park Service finished a series of meetings with the Organized Fishermen of Florida and others who sued.

On Friday, Aronovitz upheld the commercial fishing ban, which takes effect at the end of 1985. It was intended to protect threatened species. Opponents called it "government overreaching."

Pilots blamed for crash

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A National Transportation Safety Board investigator blamed an air collision that killed two policemen on the pilots' failure to spot each other in "a see-and-be-seen situation."

But the more detailed cause of Thursday afternoon's clear-air collision that killed pilot William C. Whitty and Ronald H. Fuller may not be known for weeks, said investigator Wally Funk. Their Cessna 172, a police aircraft used for surveillance, crashed into a warehouse after colliding with another plane. The second plane, badly damaged and nearly out of control, managed to limp to a landing.

"They simply failed to see each other," said Funk. "It's a see-and-be-seen situation."

Contract approved

INTERNATIONAL FALLS, Minn. (AP) — A one-year contract won overwhelming approval from members of nine unions at Boise Cascade Corp.'s complex here, after union leaders recommended ratification.

The vote, tabulated Friday night, was 589-80 for the proposal which the company called its final offer. About half of the unions' members didn't vote, said Bob Walls, president of the Joint Union Council.

As recently as Wednesday, Walls had said, "We definitely will not recommend ratification." Before the vote was taken, Ralph Ruelle, of the Papermakers Union and a Joint Council member, said union leaders reversed their recommendation in view of "what would happen if we went on strike two years in a row."

Man 'guilty' in bust

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Three men who pleaded guilty in what police called this the city's biggest cocaine bust ever face fines and prison terms.

George Kelly Jr., 34, and Phillip Rima, 50, both of Miami, Fla., each admitted a charge of conspiracy to sell cocaine and could be sentenced to 15 years in prison and fined $25,000.

Vinson Rood, 48, of Oak Park, Ill., also appeared Friday in federal court, pleading guilty to a drug transportation charge. He faces five years and a $10,000 fine. No sentencing date was set.

Brush fire forces

flight at park

FRAZIER PARK, Calif. (AP) — A 1,200-acre brush fire in the Los Padres National Forest burned along the eastern edge of Frazier Park on Saturday, and authorities urged hundreds of people to evacuate.

The fast-burning Mesa Fire started around noon, U.S. Forest Service fire information officer Susan Mockenhaupt said.

Rain could help firefighters, but lightning would not.

California Highway Patrol spokesman Monty Keifer said CHP officers have been urging "less than a thousand" residents to evacuate Frazier Park, 40 miles north of Los Angeles.

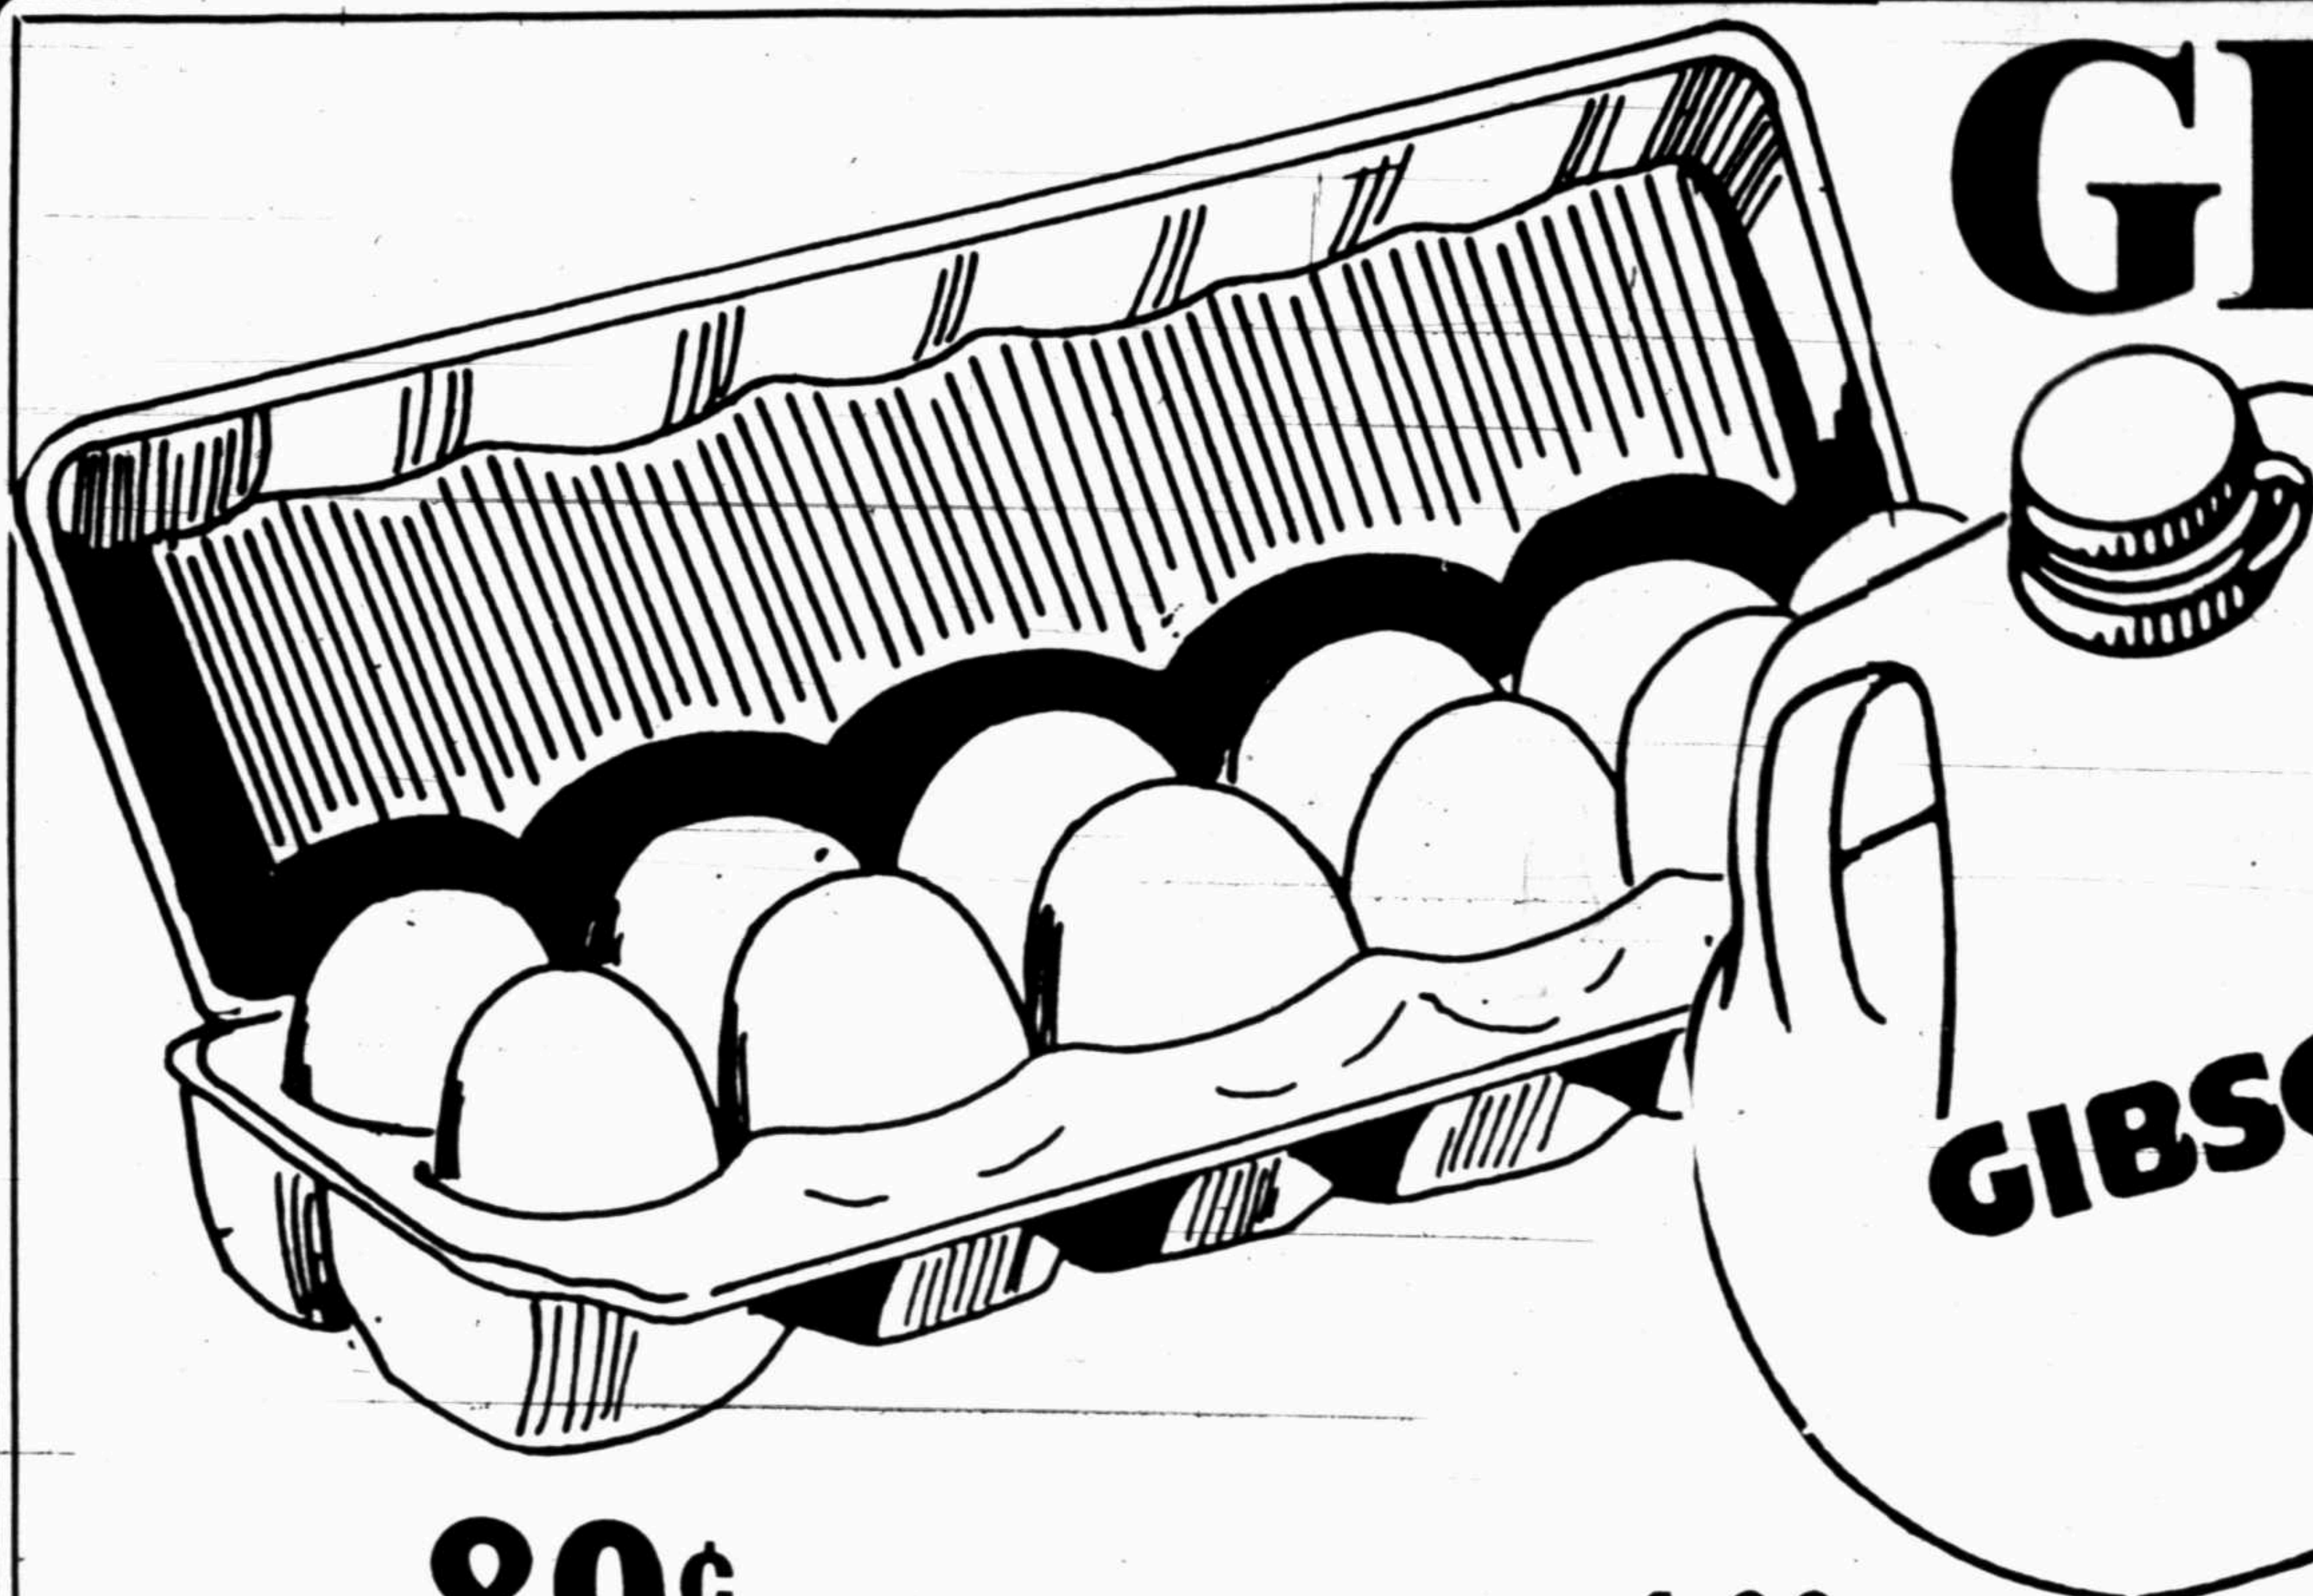

Ms. Mockenhaupt said the fire started near the Mesa Valley Farm and moved across the farm near the eastern edge of the town.

"The fire has not reached any residences," said Chris Kelperis, a Forest Service emergency dispatcher in the Mt. Pinos office.

The National Weather Service said prevailing winds were from the west-southwest at 20 mph, blowing away from Frazier Park.

The cause of the fire was under investigation, Ms. Mockenhaupt said. Keifer said Frazier Park Road was closed by the flames Saturday, "except for outbound traffic."

More than 100 firefighters from the U.S. Forest Service, Ventura County and Kern County fire departments battled the blaze, along with air tankers from Fox Field at Lancaster and four helicopters.

Storms terrorize U.S. cities

By ROGER PETTERSON
Associated Press Writer

Stormy weather thundered over much of the eastern half of the nation Saturday, blowing up wind that capsize a riverboat and killed 11 people. Storms also brought flash floods that caused a fatal train wreck, washed away cars and chased people into trees.

During the night thunderstorms dumped 3 inches of rain in just an hour on a North Carolina community, and peppered an outdoor play in Arkansas with hail that slightly injured 18 people.

Flood warnings were posted for parts of New York and New Jersey, and a flood watch was in effect for all of Vermont.

An 90-foot "old-time" riverboat overturned when it was slammed by a thunderstorm's 70 mph wind on the Tennessee River near Huntsville, Ala., and 11 people were killed. The victims apparently drowned when they were trapped in the belly-up boat, said Assistant Madison County Coroner Bob Berryhill.

The National Weather Service measured the wind at 70 mph and said it also blew apart fruit stands on the other side of the river and overturned a trailer.

A 13-CAR Amtrak passenger train with 278 people aboard derailed early Saturday near Williston, Vt., when it hit track over a culvert washed out in overnight flooding, and at least one person was killed. "There was a lot of flooding in that area overnight, a number of roads are closed and there was water over Interstate 89 at Williston," said Civil Defense official George Lowe. State officials and federal safety officials said they believed the weather caused the derailment.

Storms brought heavy rain to much of New England and along the middle Atlantic Coast, and storms were scattered over Georgia and the southern Appalachians and from Arkansas across Kansas and Missouri into Nebraska.

Flash floods hit Pennsylvania's Montgomery and Chester counties, north and west of Philadelphia. Perkiomen Creek rose so quickly that cars were swept down roads and fire companies had to rescue stranded people.

The National Weather Service said an average of 3 inches of rain fell over the area during the night, with one gauge registering about 4 inches from 1 a.m. to 3 a.m.

PARTS OF southwestern Missouri got more than 3 inches of rain early Saturday, triggering flash floods in the town of Aurora that forced some families from their homes.

Aurora police dispatcher Kay Evans said city crews evacuated several residential areas of the city of about 8,000 people, where water was reported as deep as 8 to 10 feet.

She said the flood carried away some cars and accompanying hail and wind damaged several homes and businesses. No injuries were reported, she said.

Elsewhere, Livingston, N.Y., got 4.5 inches of rain overnight and Carthage, N.C., got around 5 inches, including 3 inches in one hour, the weather service said. The agency said it got an unofficial report of 6 inches of rain near Underhill, Vt. Napanoch, N.Y., got 2.67 inches of rain in less than an hour late Friday and El Dorado, Kan., got 1.6 inches in about 35 minutes.

The 3.66 inches that fell Saturday at Newark, N.J., broke all July records, and flooding rivers and creeks blocked highways and forced at least 60 people from their homes in Somerset and Hunterdon counties.

"THEY LEFT their homes early this morning, but most were back in their homes a few hours later after fire departments worked with pumps to remove the water," said state police Capt. Joseph Craparotta.

New York City had a record 3.13 inches of rain early Saturday, and up to 6 inches of rain in suburban Westchester County north of the city closed major highways. Flooding halted subway service on one line in Harlem, and Long Island Lighting Co. said about 3,000 customers lost power.

Thunderstorms caused minor local flooding Saturday in Connecticut and about 14,000 Northeast Utilities customers were blacked out during the morning, said company spokesman Emmanuel Forde.

Friday night's outdoor performance of the Great Passion Play at Eureka Springs, Ark., was disrupted by a sudden hail storm that sent 18 members of the audience to a hospital with minor injuries. The religious production depicts part of the life of Jesus Christ.

"The hail was golf ball-sized," said Don Davis, dispatcher for the Eureka Springs Police Department. Hail that size also was reported Friday at Graber, Okla., Dorado, Kan., and Racine, Mo.

Cool air settled over the upper Midwest and record low temperatures mostly in the 40s were recorded Saturday morning at about a dozen cities in Iowa, Michigan, Indiana, Wisconsin, Illinois and Ohio. Duluth, Minn., had a brisk record-matching 38 degrees.

But out west, California's San Joaquin Valley has had 100-plus temperatures for most of the past two weeks. Fresno, which tied a 79-year-old record Friday at 111 degrees, has had highs below 100 for only two days in the past two weeks.

Sanitation workers vote to go to work while talks continue

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Striking sanitation workers voted overwhelmingly Saturday to return to work for 30 days while contract negotiations continue, ending a week-long walkout that left trash bins overflowing in 200 northern and central New Jersey communities.

Members of Teamsters Local 945 voted 435-84 to approve the back-to-work proposal advanced by Gov. Thomas H. Kean and backed by union leadership, said state mediator John Tesaro.

"It was a very statesmanlike response on the part of the union," Tesaro said. He said workers for 50 private trash-hauling firms would return to work immediately.

On Thursday, union members voting at headquarters in West Paterson had rejected the same proposal 208-158, but another vote was called because only a small percentage of the 1,400 Teamsters participated, Tesaro said.

Under the proposal approved Saturday, the contract that expired at midnight June 30 will be extended until Aug. 6 and striking workers will be paid their old wages. Salary increases negotiated in a new pact will be applied retroactively.

Tesaro said if no agreement is reached by August, "the union is free to resume its strike."

The workers struck June 30 after rejecting a management offer of a six-day work week and a $60-a-week raise over three years, or slightly more than 12 percent, that would bring salaries to $525 in the last year.

Local 945 business manager Anthony Rizzo has said the union wants a 7 percent wage increase each year, or a $105-a-week increase, over three years.

Tesaro said negotiations would resume in several days.

The walkout stymied trash collection in Bergen, Essex, Hudson, Middlesex, Monmouth, Morris, Ocean, Passaic and Union counties as Local 945 pickets at landfills prevented or dissuaded non-striking sanitation workers from dumping trash.

NEA to have 270 delegates in Frisco

Convention to have more minorities than ever

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Benjamin A. Osborne was 67 when David Agnew was born. That was 18 years ago. Next week, both will be in San Francisco as delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

Agnew, who just graduated from high school, is a Gary Hart delegate from Anderson, S.C. The 85-year-old Osborne, a chiropractor in his fifth term ("one more than Roosevelt") as the elected trustee of Center Township, Ind., will be casting his ballot for Walter F. Mondale.

They appear to be the oldest and the youngest people who will vote at the convention, where the average delegate will be 46 1/4 years old, according to an AP survey of 3,322, or 85 percent, of the delegates.

AP correspondents in all 50 states asked delegates about their choices for president and vice president, as well as providing biographical information. Some 202 delegates refused to divulge their age.

SOME 711 reported belonging to a union, with the largest single group in the National Education Association, which has fielded the biggest contingents at the last two Democratic conventions as well.

The NEA says it expects 270 of its members to be delegates in San Francisco. The AFL-CIO says its member unions will send approximately 573 delegates to the convention.

Democratic National Chairman

Charles Manatt has boasted that this year's convention will have "by far the most minority delegates we've ever had ... We reflect our party and our party reflects America."

Party figures show that 1,062 delegates, or 28.7 percent, will be minorities. And with all but two delegates officially certified, there is an almost equal split between the sexes: 1,992 men, or 50.5 percent, and 1,950 women, or 49.5 percent.

The party's rules call for an "equal division" between men and women. They also set affirmative action goals for each state based on its minority population. The AP survey found no black delegates in such states as Rhode Island and South Dakota.

OVERALL, THE PARTY says there will be 690 blacks, or 17.5 percent; 254 Hispanic, or 6.4 percent; 73 Asians and Pacific islanders, or 1.9 percent; and 35 Native American, or 0.9 percent.

The delegate roll includes 2,752 whites, or 69.8 percent. The party had no ethnic information on 138 delegates, or 3.5 percent.

There are 3,944 delegates, but only 3,933 votes at the convention, due to partial votes divided among several delegations from abroad. American Samoa, Democrats Abroad, Guam, Latin American Democrats and the Virgin Islands will each send eight delegates to the convention, but they will cast 6, 5, 7, 5 and 6 votes, respectively.

Osborne, who was born Nov. 15,

1898, in what was then British Guyana, emigrated to this country in 1919 and became a citizen in the mid-1920s. He was first a delegate at the 1980 Democratic convention and says "I was the oldest one then, too."

There is another 85-year-old Mondale delegate, Francis M. Burke, a lawyer from Pikeville, Ky., who was born March 12, 1899. Burke, a former state senator, is going to his fifth convention.

MONDALE ALSO has the allegiance of one of the nation's most famous senior citizens, Rep. Claude Pepper, 83, of Miami, Fla., who is one of 175 House Democrats serving as delegates. Most of them are backing Mondale, who has 2,080 delegates, or 113 more than he needs to win the nomination.

Hart, who campaigned as the candidate of a new generation, counts several teen-agers among his 1,245 delegates, including Agnew and two other 18-year-olds, Karin Schutjer, a Yale student from Mansfield, Ohio, and John T. Littig of Rock Island, Ill., a student at August Stanley College.

Both Ms. Schutjer and Littig will be 19 this fall.

Agnew is the youngest of six children in a politically active family. His late father, E. Harry Agnew II, was a state representative and circuit judge in South Carolina and one of his four brothers, E. Harry III, is currently a state representative. But he is the first Agnew ever elected a delegate.

"Once Sen. (Ernest) Hollings dropped out, Hart really was the only choice for me," said Agnew, who was president of his sophomore and junior classes and vice president of his senior class at T.L. Hanna High School, from which he graduated on May 24.

HE SAID he spent "a good bit of money on phone calls campaigning for delegate, maybe 70-some dollars in calls."

Of the 711 delegates who listed union membership in the AP survey, the biggest contingent, 174, belong to the National Education Association.

OTHERS ARE the American Federation of Teachers, 76; United Auto Workers, 60; American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, 56; Communications Workers of America, 42; United Steelworkers, 32; general AFL-CIO, including several state presidents, 25; Machinists, 20; International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 18;

Office and Professional Employees, 14; United Food and Commercial Workers, 13; International Ladies Garment Workers, 12; Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers, 9; American Federation of Television and Radio Artists, 8; Laborers International, 7; Service Employees International, 7; Railway and Airline Clerks, 7; Teamsters, 5; Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers, 4; United Mine Workers, 4; and others, 118.

Walter Mondale and his wife Joan talk to the press Saturday morning after they had met with Jimmy Carter for breakfast. Carter was in Minneapolis for an achievement awards dinner. Carter did not appear with the Mondales.

Mondale attacks Reagan's remarks on Social Security

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Walter F. Mondale said Saturday that President Reagan has "struck again on Social Security" by raising doubts about the future financing of the giant benefit system.

Mondale, the apparent Democratic presidential nominee, made the remarks following a breakfast meeting with former President Carter, whom Mondale served as vice president.

After his private talk with Carter, Mondale met with his senior aides at a motel near his home in suburban North Oaks to discuss the Democratic National Convention which begins in eight days.

Mondale responded to remarks Reagan made in a television interview recorded Monday in which the president expressed doubts about the future financing of Social Security.

"There is a possibility — well, probability — that many people, young people now paying in, will never be able to receive as much as they're paying," Reagan said.

Mondale pounced on the remark saying, "Reagan struck again on Social Security."

He said that "for over 20 years, he (Reagan) has been congenitally unable to leave that program alone."

"Even though the fund is sound and solid, even though the experts in his own government say it's probably going to run a surplus and even though millions of Americans have that Social Security program alone to depend upon, once again he raises the question that they're going to alter it and undermine senior security," Mondale added.

Also on Saturday, Mondale and Carter did not appear together after the approximately one-hour meeting and only Mondale spoke. "We talked politics," he reported.

He said the former president made no recommendations on a running mate, although the matter was discussed. He declined to give details.

Mondale reiterated it is "a possibility" that he will announce the choice of a running mate before the convention. "But what really counts is picking the best person," he added.

Mondale's announced series of interviews with seven potential running mates ended Friday as he met with Kentucky Gov. Martha Layne Collins.

"I'm not going to speculate about what might follow" in the selection process, he said.

Meanwhile, the Los Angeles Times reported in Sunday editions that during the depths of the primary campaign season, Mondale's aides drew up plans for his withdrawal from the Democratic presidential race.

His losses to Hart in New Hampshire, Maine and Vermont were "absolutely the low point in the campaign," James A. Johnson, Mondale's campaign chairman, told the Times.

Reagan asks support on crime package

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan took his election-year campaign for new federal anti-crime legislation to his national radio audience Saturday, asking his listeners to lobby their congressional representatives for a vote on the administration's crime package.

But in his response for the Democratic Party, presidential hopeful Gary Hart accused Reagan of using "political rhetoric" instead of seeking real reform of the criminal justice system.

Complaining, as he has in two recent speeches, that the Democratic House leadership has bottled up Senate-passed anti-crime legislation, Reagan urged voters to tell the leaders in the House to "stop kowtowing to the special interests and start listening to you, the American people."

House Democratic Leader Jim Wright of Texas and Rep. William Hughes, D-N.J., chairman of the crime subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee, have denied Reagan's stalling charges.

They noted that the House passed 11 anti-crime bills in the last Congress and six in the current session.

After Reagan first raised the issue June 20 in a speech to the National Sheriffs Association, Wright said: "President Reagan seems to think he can fight street crime by mugging the Congress, whipping up a frenzy of fear and repeatedly mistating the facts."

But Reagan kept up the attack, leveling his charge again before the Texas Bar Association on Friday.

And in his weekly radio speech broadcast Saturday, paid for by his re-election campaign committee, the president said: "We're going out to the heartland, and we're taking our case to you, the people."

"Please, send a message to the House leadership. Tell them to stop kowtowing to the special interests and start listening to you, the American people. Americans want this anti-crime legislation, and they want it now."

"Please tell your elected representatives you expect full and fair representation," Reagan said. "And that means getting this bill out of committee and onto the floor of the House for a vote."

The measure now before the House would establish the death penalty for certain federal crimes, make it more difficult for defendants to win acquittal on grounds of insanity and would tighten bail and parole procedures. It also would permit prosecutors to use illegally obtained evidence to win convictions in some cases and would provide tougher sentences for those convicted of some federal crimes.

Hart, in his own broadcast to Reagan, invoked his own "new ideas" theme in criticizing the president's approach.

"We must approach criminal justice reform the same way we approach economic reform, energy reform and military reform: By breaking away from the outmoded beliefs and partisan debates of the past and focusing on practical, workable steps to achieve our goals," the Colorado senator said.

He suggested that crime could be prevented by increasing federal jobs programs for the disadvantaged and ex-offenders.

In a swipe at Reagan's attorney general, William French Smith, Hart suggested that the head of the Justice Department should be someone "with a background in the courtrooms, not the boardrooms and the country clubs."

And, he said, while the fight against trafficking in and use of illegal drugs was the most pressing need in federal law enforcement, Reagan has cut funds for those purposes and vetoed legislation that would have created a drug "czar" to oversee enforcement efforts.

Hart also suggested that Reagan was suffering from an "integrity gap," picturing himself as a law-and-order advocate while "more than 50 top Reagan appointees have been accused of illegal and unethical conduct."

Youth charged in 'Satanic' slaying found dead in cell

RIVERHEAD, N.Y. (AP) — A 17-year-old youth caught in a swirl of drugs and devil worship was found hanged with a bedsheet in his jail cell Saturday, a day after he was arraigned for the ritual murder of another youth, authorities said.

Richard Kasso, of Northport, left "no graffiti on the walls, no suicide note," but apparently took his own life, said Sgt. Ronald Brooks, a Suffolk County sheriff's spokesman. An autopsy was planned.

Police and neighbors said Kasso's life had been marred by a descent into drugs, erratic behavior and satanic worship which culminated with the ritual slaying of Gary Lauwers, 17, of East Northport, who was forced to say, "I love Satan" before he died.

Police said they were investigating the involvement of at least a dozen other Long Island teen-agers in the "Knights of the Black Circle" satanic cult.

Kasso had been arrested with James Troiano, 18, of East Northport, who was put under 24-hour observation following Kasso's death, Brooks said. The two were charged with second-degree murder.

A guard who made a routine cell check at 1 a.m. found Kasso hanging by bedsheets attached to the top-most cross bars of his cell at the Suffolk County Jail, said Brooks. The guard had passed the cell a half-hour before and the inmate "appeared to be sleeping normally."

Attempts were made to revive Kasso, but he was declared dead on arrival at Central Suffolk Hospital at 2:17 a.m., officials said.

Kasso had given jail officials no clue that he was suicidal, Brooks said.

A man who answered the telephone at the Kasso home in Northport said the family would have no comment on the case or the youth's death.

But a neighbor, who said she had known "Rickie" since he was a little boy, said she had witnessed his decline as a teen-ager and his parents' agony as they sought to help.

She said Kasso's father is a high school football coach, and the youth's three younger sisters are outstanding athletes and "beautiful girls."

Kasso seemed to be a well-adjusted child, she said, but became involved with drugs and "the wrong people" several years ago. He ran away from home frequently and eventually dropped out of school, the neighbor said.

Kasso underwent treatment at a drug rehabilitation center at South Oaks Hospital in Amityville, said a source close to the case who requested anonymity. Officials there said their policy prohibited them from identifying patients.

Kasso was arrested in April and charged with violating public health laws for stealing a skull and hand from a Northport cemetery crypt.

Police said they believed the motive for Lauwers' slaying may have been the theft of 10 bags of "angel dust," a hallucinogenic drug, from Kasso.

The killing took place in a field near a woods where police said they believe Kasso and members of the cult had been living out of cars. The date of the killing has not been established.

Police said cult members burned Lauwers' socks and shirt sleeves while chanting around a fire. Then Kasso allegedly stabbed the victim several times and dragged him about 15 yards, believing he was dead.

Lauwers then reportedly sat up and said, "I love you, Mom," prompting Kasso to return and gouge out his eyes with a knife.

Families renew fight for hostages

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Relatives of civil war hostages blocked the only open crossing between Beirut's Moslem and Christian sectors with burning car tires Saturday in a renewed campaign to force militia groups to release all their prisoners.

The morning-to-evening shutdown of the mid-city museum crossing coincided with efforts by President Amin Gemayel's administration to clear and repair three other crossing points and reopen them to reunite the Lebanese capital.

Public works teams began repairing the major crossings between Christian east and mostly Moslem west Beirut Saturday, following two days of work by army engineers to clear away mines and unexploded shells.

THE ARMY command announced that Beirut's airport and port would reopen Monday at 6 a.m. the army communique also said three of the remaining five closed crossings between east and west Beirut would reopen Sunday at 6 a.m.

The crossings are at Tayyouneh, Galerie Semaan and the port. The communique said the reopenings "follow the stabilization in the security situation in the capital."

The move would cap the first stage of a Syrian-mediated security operation to stop the nine-year civil war.

The Gemayel government has begun making plans for the second stage of the operation, under which the international highways linking Beirut with Syria and the Israeli-occupied southern third of Lebanon would be reopened, said officials who spoke on condition that they not be identified.

The highway between Beirut and Sidon, provincial capital in Israeli-occupied southern Lebanon, has been closed since February. The Beirut-Damascus road has been closed since September 1983.

GEMAYEL conferred for an hour and 20 minutes Saturday with his Syrian-backed prime minister, Rashid Karami, to review the progress of the Beirut security operation that was launched on Wednesday.

"We are satisfied with the progress," Karami, who heads a coalition Cabinet of Moslems and Christians, later told reporters. When asked for the date on which the airport, closed five months ago, would reopen, he said: "Soon, God willing."

Christian and Moslem regular army brigades have taken over control of Beirut from rival militias without resistance in the early stage of the security plan, including the mid-city "green line." It will be abolished with the formal reopening of the crossings.

Disorders by hostage relatives at the west end of the museum crossing forced army and police to close the gateway to traffic at 9 a.m. Authorities said efforts were under way to persuade the demonstrators to disperse.

But at mid-afternoon, the protesters still blocked the intersection, demanding that a four-party security committee representing the principal warring militias release the civilian hostages at once.

THE COMMITTEE said Friday a specific time for the unconditional release of the hostages had been reached. But it did not reveal the deadline for fear an advance announcement might sabotage the swap.

International Red Cross sources said their representatives have visited a little over 100 hostages held by Christian, Druse and Shiite Moslem militias.

Pope calls for Namibia's independence

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Saturday called for independence for South-West Africa, or Namibia, and condemned South Africa's racial policies, terming them "a grave violation of the rights of the human person."

The pope, who met South African Prime Minister Pieter W. Botha in Vatican City last month, said he "earnestly hopes" South Africa will change the system of apartheid.

Speaking in English, John Paul expressed the hope "that a population so sorely tried and whose right to be treated without discrimination is systematically flouted may be spared further painful and tragic experiences."

He made the statement in a Vatican audience for Joseph N. Garba, president of the Special U.N. Committee against Apartheid.

The pope expressed the hope that negotiations on South-West Africa's future can be translated "without too much delay, into clear decisions which will recognize without ambiguity the right of this nation to be sovereign and independent."

In 1980, the United Nations proposed a peace plan for the disputed territory, calling for a cease-fire and a demilitarized zone patrolled by U.N. peacekeepers, followed by an election two years later.

South Africa, however, insisted on the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola as a precondition.

Security at Srinagar Aripport probed

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Authorities began interrogating security workers at the Srinagar airport Saturday to determine if any had cooperated with Sikh separatists who hijacked an Indian Airlines plane to Pakistan.

Meanwhile, President Zail Singh, a Sikh, extended by three months an order declaring Punjab state and the city of Chandigarh "disturbed areas."

The order empowers security forces to shoot suspected terrorists on sight, destroy hideouts and arms dumps and search vehicles and houses without warrants.

Security measures were tightened at all of India's major airports following Thursday's hijacking of an A-300 airbus shortly after takeoff from Srinagar, the capital of Kashmir state.

Nine young Sikhs armed with knives, guns, axes and a fake bomb commandeered the New Delhi-bound flight, forcing it to go to Lahore, Pakistan. On Friday, 20 hours later, they released more than 250 passengers and crew and surrendered to Pakistani authorities.

All security personnel on duty in Srinagar at the time of the hijacking were being questioned, and the United News of India said an unidentified number had been suspended from their jobs.

One of the hijackers was overheard telling two women passengers that they were able to get their weapons on board because a security guard was working with them, according to an Indian journalist on the hijacked flight.

"It does not appear to be a case of generally lax security arrangements," the influential Times of India newspaper said in an editorial. "It looks that some security man or men deliberately let them slip through with their weapons."

The director of civil aviation, Air Marshal C.F.K. Rajay, and the chief of airport security, Shanker Saran, planned to begin an inquiry Sunday into the security lapse.

A bomb scare forced the cancellation Saturday of a flight by the same Indian Airlines plane that had been hijacked, airline officials said.

An anonymous telephone caller told authorities there was a bomb on the plane, but no explosives were found.

The hijackers, mostly in their 20s, broke into the cockpit of the Airbus about 20 minutes after it left Srinagar.

A flight engineer was shot in the lower back and stabbed when he tried to block them, but his wounds were not serious.

A senior Indian army officer was beaten with a walking cane and several passengers were slapped during the first minutes of the hijacking.

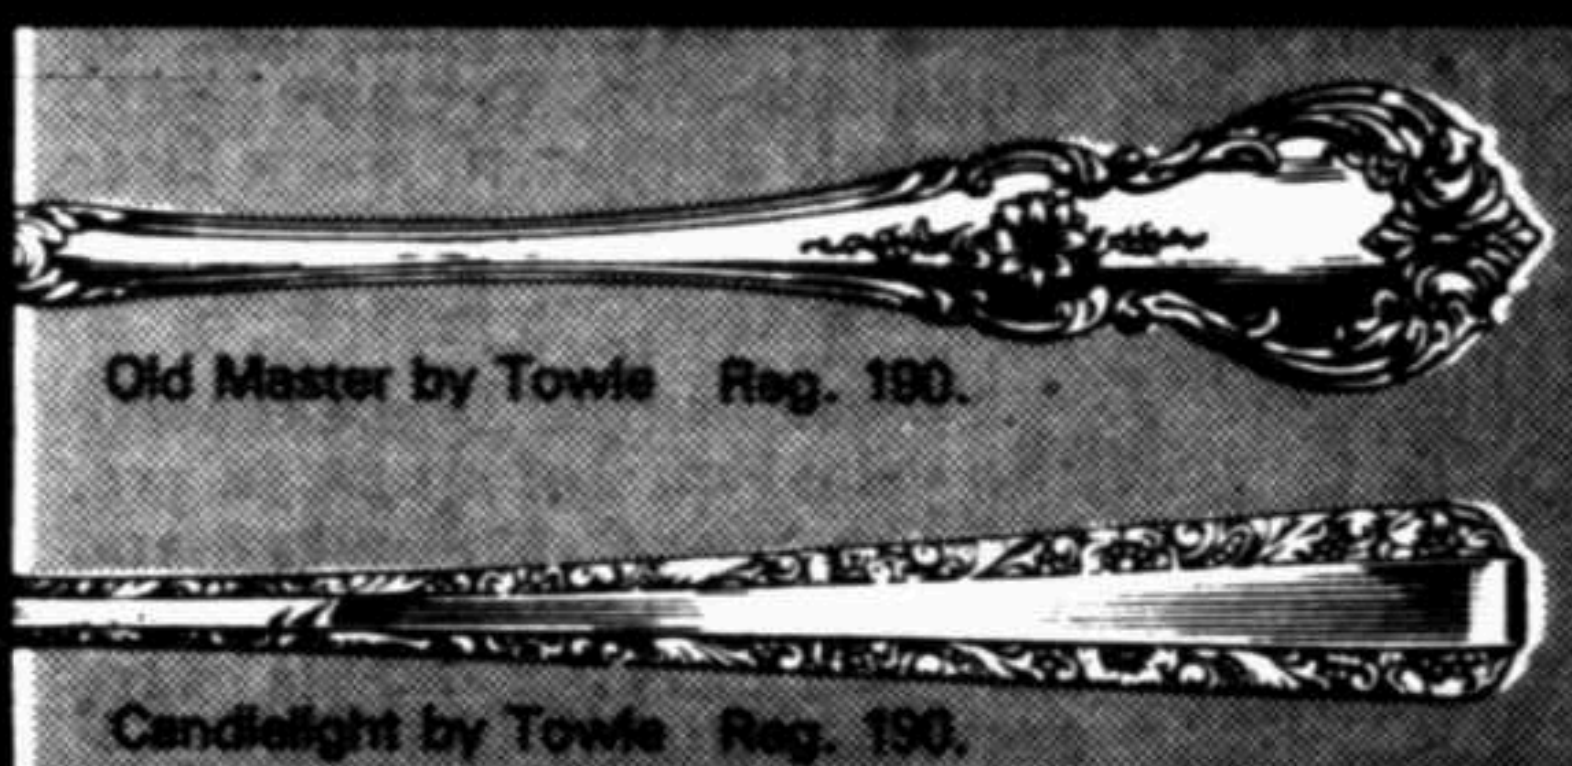

The hijackers had said they would blow up the plane, but then surrendered around mid-day Friday without any of their demands being met.

Their demands stemmed from the army's assault on the Sikhs' Golden Temple in the holy city of Amritsar last month. Police and military sources said as many as 1,000 Sikhs and 220 soldiers were slain in the temple battle.

Once a 'white elephant,' Gatwick Airport now growing

By EDITH M. LEDERER

LONDON (AP) — Gatwick Airport, now the fourth busiest international airport in the world, has confounded critics who had predicted it would be a "white elephant" in the sticks.

The transformed farmland in lush Sussex countryside 27 miles southwest of London, which began as a private aerodrome in the 1930s mainly servicing wealthy patrons at nearby Gatwick racecourse, is now handling 13.1 million passengers a year.

In the 1960s and 70s, Gatwick was the haven for hippies and students looking for cheap charter flights on so-called "bucket-shop airlines" using London's No. 2 airport.

TODAY, ABOUT 55 percent of its business comes from 30 charter airlines and 45 percent from 40 regularly scheduled airlines flying to virtually every part of the globe — including more cities in the United States than carriers using rival Heathrow Airport, only 14 miles from central London.

Over the past three years, airline executives and airport officials say Gatwick has "arrived" in international acceptance as a world airport, despite its lingering bargain basement reputation and the disadvantage of being twice as far from London as Heathrow.

"We no longer have the battles we used to have with airlines as to whether they should be required to use the airport or not," said Gatwick's director, Pat Bailey. "Many of them now come seeking us out."

The airport's growth in size and stature is attributed to sustained multimillion-dollar investments by the British Airports Authority, which operates the country's airports, and the 1977 Bermuda 2 agreement under which Britain required all new foreign airlines flying to London to use Gatwick.

"It's THE best airport in Britain today," said Sir Peter Masefield, deputy chairman of British Caledonian Airways, Gatwick's biggest carrier.

"Its terminals are better than any other else's. It has rail links inside the terminal and travelers can now get to London in just 30 minutes on British Rail's new Gatwick Express, which makes Gatwick closer in time than Heathrow," he said.

Drive time from Gatwick to London, however, is 60 to 70 minutes; from Heathrow it is about a half hour.

Rowland Cobbold, Cathay Pacific's general manager for Europe, said the Hong Kong-based airline wanted to use Heathrow when it started flying here in July 1980 but couldn't.

"Today, if we were offered the opportunity to go to Heathrow, we'd say no, we'll stay at Gatwick," he said. "There are still better advantages to Heathrow — better road access, better interline connections because there are more flights."

"But we feel the operating advantages at Gatwick outweigh the disadvantages."

With a 14.8 percent increase in passengers in the year ending May 31, Gatwick is Britain's fastest growing airport, far outpacing growth at Heathrow which is already the world's busiest international airport with nearly 27 million passengers a year.

NOT FAR BEHIND are New York's John F. Kennedy Airport and Frankfurt Airport in West Germany. Gatwick, at No. 4, has just passed Charles De Gaulle airport in Paris in terms of international passengers.

Several American airports, like O'Hare at Chicago or Hartsfield Atlanta International, have more flights and passengers than Heathrow or JFK, but are mainly domestic airports.

Construction began more than a year ago on a $270 million second terminal, which is expected to open in the summer of 1987 and double Gatwick's passenger capacity to 25 million in the 1990s.

"For years, people said Gatwick

London's Gatwick airport, in this view looking west, Gatwick, now the fourth busiest airport in the world has confounded critics who predicted it would be a 'white elephant' in the sticks. The would undoubtedly be a white elephant," said Vernon Murphy, Gatwick's deputy director.

"Now, we're shunting some planes to Stansted Airport (northeast of London) because we've got more American travelers than we can handle. It's nice to have the problem of too much, not too little."

Gatwick's sprawling 265-acre site is a far cry from the two gasoline pumps which appeared after it was granted a license by the Air Ministry on Aug. 1, 1930, for a fee of just over one pound, then worth $4.80.

In 1936, a daring beehive-shaped terminal was built. During World War II Gatwick was turned into a Royal Air Force base, ferrying military personnel to the warfront, and guiding in many lost or damaged Allied planes returning from bombing raids.

After the war, as civil aviation began to flourish, the government decided to develop Gatwick as an alternative to Heathrow. The airport was closed in 1956 for a two-year massive rebuilding program which included a single 10,350-foot runway.

West German capital to get facelift

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Plans are being made to give Bonn a facelift 35 years after it became the make-do capital of West Germany.

Although charming in a Rhine River setting, Bonn has never seemed grand enough for its duties as the political center of Western Europe's most powerful country.

From cramped Parliament offices to the quaint train station and the 16th-century castle where 20th-century visiting heads of state are housed, nothing is quite big enough.

But the West German government finally is going to do something about it, starting with a few well-placed construction projects, including renovation of the Parliament.

"We want to help Bonn fulfill its capital function," Building Minister Oscar Schneider told a news conference in the latter part of June.

SCHNEIDER'S MINISTRY, which is mapping the facelift, has a lot to do to bring government facilities up to par.

There is still not enough space in federal buildings for each deputy in Parliament to have his own office.

There is no official guest house, and no appropriate memorial for a visiting head-of-state to lay a wreath or speak a few solemn words.

The Parliament building is a former teachers' college that now is cramped, and government ministries are scattered all over town, with some of them in former army barracks.

Among the few attractions in Bonn, a city of 295,000 people, is the house where Beethoven was born and a provincial museum holding the skull of Neanderthal man. But there is no art or history museum for the thousands of tourists, including many students, who visit each year.

Bonn's deficiencies are the result of its peculiar history. The small university city was made the "provisional capital" after the West German state was founded in 1949 from the three postwar zones formerly occupied by the French, Americans and British.

AP Laserphoto

In the first years, when reunification with East Germany seemed a distinct possibility and not the distant dream it is now, little was built in Bonn.

Now, with the "provisional" status more permanent, the government of Chancellor Helmut Kohl is moving to add more office space and some of the other things Bonn has done without.

THE GOVERNMENT plans to build a "House of History," meaning post World War II history; an art museum, and a monument for wreath-laying along the Rhine, Schneider said.

Plans are also being made to expand office space for parliamentarians and to renovate the chamber itself, while keeping it in the same modernistic white building.

While the renovation is going on, Schneider said, Parliament will meet in an old brick water works adjacent to the current building, a few yards from the Rhine. The move probably will occur late in 1985 for what could be a two-year stay.

Although there was talk of building an imposing new Parliament building, that plan was scrapped recently for financial reasons, said Harald O. Hermann, Parliament spokesman.

Even with the less ambitious renovation, it will cost up to 10 million marks ($4 million) to fix up the waterworks for its temporary function, and some 20 million marks ($8 million) to renovate the old Parliament chamber, Hermann said.

But there are no plans to construct a sizeable guesthouse for foreign visitors, who must now stay at their embassies or the small, moated Gymnich Castle rented by the government. Built in 1547, the castle is 18 miles out of town.

A FEW YEARS ago, the Bonn government paid 20 million marks ($7.4 million) for the nearby Petersberg Hotel, an elegant building that has been a stopping off place for many foreign dignitaries, with the idea of making it a guesthouse.

But when it was determined that renovation would cost an additional 100 million marks ($37 million), the plan was shelved, according to the Foreign Office.

Bonn also has capital-sized traffic problems with little hope of a quick solution. Some 150,000 automobiles clog its streets daily, and 600 trains pass through the center of town every day on one of the busiest stretches of track in the country.

With the railway gates at grade crossings down a total of 13 to 14 hours a day, according to city officials, government workers lose a lot of time waiting for the trains to go by.

"Either it's raining, or I'm tired, or the railway gates are down," goes a local saying.

There was talk at the turn of the century of lowering the train tracks to allow traffic to pass over them. But the plan was deemed too expensive then, and that assessment has not changed.

Many projects for expansions and improvements in Bonn probably will continue to founder so long as the dream of returning the all-German capital to Berlin is alive.

"We want Bonn to live up to its special spiritual, historical and cultural responsibility," Schneider said. But, he added, "the capital of the German nation is Berlin, and remains Berlin. This is the historical truth."

Crackdown of dissidents strains U.S.-Haiti relations

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Haiti's recent arrests of dissidents, despite promises to improve its human rights record to qualify for $54 million in U.S. aid, appears to be straining relations between the two countries.

In an apparent intentional snub, top Haitian government officials stayed away from the U.S. Embassy's annual Fourth of July celebration. A week earlier, U.S. Ambassador Clayton E. McManaway Jr. and Interior Minister Roger Lafontant reportedly clashed over the arrest of two independent newspaper publishers.

A few minor Haitian officials attended the embassy reception, but unlike previous years no top-ranking officials were present. U.S. Ambassador McManaway did President-for-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier send a representative.

And Haitian dissident Sylvio Claude said secret police came to his home July 4 to arrest him, and beat his daughter to try to find out where he was hiding. The U.S. Embassy showed its support for Claude — and its unhappiness with the government — by inviting him to its Independence Day celebration when he called the embassy a few hours later to report the arrest attempt.

On Thursday, another prominent Haitian was placed under house arrest, apparently because of an interview he gave an anti-government newspaper in New York. Hubert Deronceray, Haiti's delegate to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Paris, was picked up shortly after arriving here to teach a summer course at the State University of Haiti.

With Congressional approval pending for $54 million in aid to Haiti for fiscal 1985, Duvalier made speeches earlier this year in which he personally guaranteed strict human rights observance and press freedom.

The U.S. aid, still to be approved, would be an increase from $44.7 million given to Haiti in fiscal 1984.

In an apparent test of Duvalier's guarantees, Claude, another dissident political leader, Gregoire Eugene, and career journalist Pierre Robert Auguste began publishing anti-government weeklies in late April and early May.

Shortly after the first two weeklies appeared, Lafontant ordered all political activity halted, including party newspapers, pending adoption of regulating legislation.

Claude's newspaper, La Conviction, was closed down the next day. Auguste launched his weekly, L'Information, that same day and Eugene continued publishing Fraternite until June 18, when he and Eugene were arrested. Both men were later released, but their newspapers and presses were confiscated.

A week earlier, McManaway had called on Lafontant to protest the arrests of Eugene and Auguste. An unconfirmed report here said heated words were exchanged during the visit.

Neither government made the protest public, nor did they comment on the absence of Haitian government representation at the Fourth of July reception. But one embassy official told The Associated Press, "You'll have some big news in the next few days."

Army launches largest offensive since 1976

BONTOC, Philippines (AP) — The army has launched the largest military offensive against leftist guerrillas since rebel activity began in the mountains of the northern Philippines, a provincial military commander said Saturday.

Among the military's targets is a fugitive Roman Catholic priest, wanted dead or alive, with a price on his head.

"We can't hide it," Mountain Province commander Lt. Col. Leon Badival told The Associated Press. "It's true that military operations are going on right now."

The operation, which reportedly began two weeks ago, is aimed at more than 600 New People's Army guerrillas on the border between Kalinga and Mountain Province, in the Cordillera Mountains about 185 miles north of Manila.

With 3,000 troops mobilized, it is the largest military operation in the Cordillera since the rebels first appeared in the area in 1976. Marines pursuing rebels in the Kalinga area Friday captured a guerrilla camp and found documents and ammunition hastily abandoned by retreating rebels, Marine Lt. Abraham Respicio said.

Military sources say among the fleeing rebels was the Rev. Conrado Balweg, a priest from the nearby province of Abra, who joined the rebels in 1979. Balweg is the former parish priest of Luba, a mountain town about 60 miles from Baguio City and 180 miles northwest of Manila. A man in his mid-30s, he belongs to the Igorot tribe, whose 700,000 members live on the slopes and valleys of the Cordilleras.

The military has offered a reward of 200,000 pesos ($11,111) for Balweg, dead or alive.

The military has set up checkpoints on roads leading to the Cordilleras area and travelers are being searched.

But local officials have strongly protested the troops' deployment in the area.

"The people simply don't like them," said Bontoc Mayor Luis Claver. "We are a peaceful people and we don't like to see soldiers carrying guns in the streets."

"We don't need soldiers even if there are NPA's (in the villages). As far as I know, no NPA's are causing any trouble," Claver added.

The leftist New People's Army gradually gained support from the local people, who resented government plans to dam the nearby Chico River, and some troops sent to guard the project site have been accused of abuses.

President Ferdinand E. Marcos has estimated the guerrillas' strength at more than 6,000 men.

Honduras to expel rebels unless they receive U.S. aid

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Honduras, a haven for CIA-backed guerrillas fighting the leftist Sandinista government of Nicaragua, says it may expel the rebels unless the United States comes up with more aid.

"We are discussing bilateral relations with the United States, both in the economic and the military fields, on the basis of what is now convenient for Honduras," Foreign Minister Edgardo Paz Bernalca said in a telephone interview Friday.

The government "is ready to expel all those foreigners who take part in activities that perturb tranquility with neighboring countries, simply because they have to respect our laws and our neutrality," he said.

Officials at the U.S. Embassy had no immediate response to the statements by the Honduran government.

Cross-border raids by the rebels, which have provoked dozens of minor clashes between Nicaraguan and Honduran troops, have prompted fears of a full-scale war between the two countries.

"Honduras will demand from the United States better economic, agricultural, educational and especially military conditions for the purpose of achieving the triumph of our true democratic system," Gen. Walter Lopez Reyes, the new armed forces chief, told a news conference Friday.

"Our geopolitical location in Central America is a critical one, and that is why it is indispensable to revise the attitude of the United States toward Honduras, from the end of World War II to the present."

He did not say how much additional aid Honduras was seeking.

Since Lopez Reyes replaced Gen. Gustavo Alvarez Martinez as head of the armed forces on March 31, Honduras has been giving signs that it was unhappy with what it was receiving in return for cooperating with the United States.

Alvarez Martinez, a fervent anti-communist who was considered one of the most powerful figures in the country, eagerly accepted the role the Reagan administration requested of Honduras. He was forced out by fellow officers unhappy with his failure to consult them on important decisions.

U.S. military aid to Honduras has increased from $9.1 million in 1981 to $41 million in 1984. Economic assistance has risen from $47.3 million to $109 million.

Under the main military agreement signed in May 1984, the United States has held 29 military exercises in Honduras. The United States also has set up a military center that has trained hundreds of soldiers from neighboring El Salvador since mid-1983 in anti-guerrilla tactics.

Many Hondurans oppose the training of Salvadoran soldiers because of a 1969 border war between the two countries.

Rainfall kills at least 14 people

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Torrential rainfalls which lashed southern Korea in the previous four days killed at least 14 people, left 23 missing, and made 1,886 people homeless, the National Disaster Relief Headquarters said Saturday. The government office estimated property damage caused by floods at $13.4 million.

Floods washed away many bridges and roads, isolating villages and forcing schools to close.

Rape suspects sentenced to jail

PEKING (AP) — A Shanghai court has sentenced three men convicted of 32 rapes to jail terms ranging from three to 13 years, the local Liberation Daily reported.

The Shanghai newspaper's Friday edition, seen Saturday in Peking, did not explain why they were spared execution, the usual penalty for rape. It also did not explain the differing jail terms.

Aside from giving their names and jobs, the newspaper disclosed no details about the convicted men, a possible indication that they were related to influential Communist officials, and had therefore received lenient punishment.

Restored ties not likely to weaken Western links

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press Writer

An Analysis

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The decision by Egypt and the Soviet Union to restore full diplomatic relations after a series of overtures by Moscow does not signal any major shift by President Hosni Mubarak away from the West, Western and Egyptian sources said Saturday.

The two countries announced Saturday they had agreed to exchange ambassadors. The announcements gave no indication when the envoys would take up their posts. Egypt withdrew its ambassador in 1978 after the Soviets criticized peace overtures to Israel by the late President Anwar Sadat.

Sadat expelled Soviet Ambassador Vladimir Polyakov in 1981 for alleged involvement in Moslem-Christian strife. The two countries have maintained embassies in one another's capitals under charges d'affaires.

The Egyptian Foreign Ministry announcement said in full: "It was officially announced Saturday that the governments of Egypt and the Soviet Union have agreed on the return of their mutual ambassadors to resume their work in the capitals of the two countries."

The official Soviet news agency Tass said that Alexander Belonogov, 53, who was first secretary at the Soviet Embassy in London from 1965 to 1967, would take up the post in Cairo in August. Egypt has not announced its choice for envoy to Moscow.

WESTERN diplomats and well-informed Egyptians said the decision to exchange ambassadors had been delayed for nearly two years to give Mubarak time to reassure the Reagan administration and to play down speculation that Egypt was moving back to the Soviet camp.

"I don't expect any major changes," said one Western diplomat, who refused to be identified under rules of his embassy. "It appears the announcement was timed to make the least possible impact in the United States and Israel, since both are preoccupied with their own elections."

In advance of the formal announcement, Mubarak's adviser, Osama el-Baz, told reporters the exchange of envoys was "a step toward formalizing relations between Egypt and the Soviet Union. It should not be given any further significance."

"Needless to say, this step, when finalized, will have no bearing whatsoever on our relationship with any other country," el-Baz added.

Under the late President Gamal Abdel Nasser, Egypt was the Soviet Union's staunchest friend in the Arab world. Moscow provided large-scale economic aid as well as the weapons used to fight Israel in 1967 and 1973.

RELATIONS began turning sour in 1972 when the Soviets withheld arms shipments. Nasser's successor, Sadat, expelled 17,000 Soviet advisers in retaliation and began steering Egypt toward the United States.

Sources said the Soviet Union had been seeking a reconciliation since early 1982, shortly after Sadat was assassinated by Moslem extremists.

The pro-government magazine Al-Mussawar said the Soviet ambassadors in Canada and France conveyed to Egyptian embassies that Moscow was willing to restore full relations on a basis of "mutual self-respect."

As a gesture of goodwill, the Soviets agreed in early 1982 to send 66 technicians to work in steel mills, an aluminum factory and the Aswan Dam, all built with Moscow's assistance in the 1960s.

When Mubarak visited the United States for the first time as president in 1982, he sought to assure congressmen and administration officials that the return of the Soviet technicians did not mean Egypt was breaking away from the United States, Al-Mussawar said.

TO AVOID problems with the Americans, sources added, Mubarak decided to delay an exchange of ambassadors until Washington had more confidence in him.

Farm manager Zhu Minglong raped 13 women, worker Wang Zhaoguo raped 11 women, and pharmacy manager Sun Naida raped eight women, the newspaper said.

Vatican watching relief situation

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II, receiving credentials from Indonesia's new envoy to the Holy See on Saturday, said the Vatican is watching the relief situation in East Timor "with preoccupation."

Indonesia has been accused by some Portuguese priests who fled the island of waging "genocidal war" to pacify the former Portuguese colony, which it formally annexed in 1976 in an action strongly denounced by the United Nations.

In late 1979, the priests said that as many as one third of the territory's 660,000 inhabitants may have died after, they said, Indonesian authorities destroyed croplands in an attempt to starve the islanders into submission.

The pontiff told Ambassador Hardiman Sastrapoespita, "The Holy See continues to follow the situation with preoccupation and with the hope that particular consideration will be given in every circumstance to the ethnic, religious and cultural identity of the people."

Value of gold has dropped

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Citizens of Johannesburg, "The City of Gold," awoke Saturday to hear that the value of the nation's biggest money-making export had plunged.

Gold hit a 23-month low in London on Friday, closing at about $342 an ounce, and at one point was down to $336. It started the day at $365.

"Don't panic," was the headline in the Rand Daily Mail newspaper. "Gold Crashes," said the tabloid Citizen. The Star told its readers the "Golden Years Are Over."

"I don't want to minimize the situation...What is happening now is very bad for South Africa," said Gerhard de Kock, governor of the reserve bank. He predicted that a prolonged low price of gold would bring South Africans higher inflation rates, increased taxes and rising prices.

Major gold strikes over a century ago changed Johannesburg, a tent encampment populated by donkey-riding prospectors, into a city of skyscrapers and superhighways.

Opening of festival lacks injuries

PAMPLONA, Spain (AP) — The annual week-long Running of the Bulls festival opened Saturday with an uncharacteristic lack of injuries.

Hundreds of young men wearing red berets and red sashes ran ahead of the bulls, let out of their pens to thunder half a mile down the narrow streets of this northern Spanish town to the bullring. No one was injured.

Since the beginning of the century, 12 men have been gored to death during the festival, and several people have been injured each year.

The running of the bulls will go on every morning until July 15, when the festival of dancing and drinking comes to an end.

Martina wins Wimbledon singles, doubles

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Rising to the challenge, Martina Navratilova roared back from a 3-0 first-set deficit to defeat Chris Evert Lloyd 7-6, 6-2 Saturday for her third consecutive Wimbledon women's singles title and her fifth overall.

She later teamed with Pam Shriver for a fourth straight women's doubles crown, defeating Kathy Jordan and Anne Smith 6-3, 6-4.

In the men's doubles final, Americans John McEnroe and Peter Fleming successfully defended their title, defeating Australians Paul McNamee and Pat Cash 6-2, 5-7, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3. McEnroe will go after his third Wimbledon singles championship and his second straight when he takes on fellow American Jimmy Connors in the men's final on Sunday. Connors also is a two-time Wimbledon champion.

NAVATILOVA'S VICTORIES came on the 100th anniversary of the first women's contest played on these hallowed grass courts and marked her fifth consecutive Grand Slam tournament triumphs in singles and doubles.

"You see all those past champions and they've done it three or four times, maybe, and here I've done it five times," she said. "It's hard to believe really."

The left-hander had nothing but praise for her opponent, who has won the singles title here three times.

"I told her at the (post-match) ceremony that she still has one more Wimbledon (championship) in her," she said of Lloyd, seeded second here and ranked No. 2 in the world behind Navratilova.

Indeed, Lloyd played one of the best games of her 14-year career and ripped through the opening three games, breaking Navratilova in the first and third games in the blistering heat on Centre Court.

"I finally reached the form I have been looking for all year. It's finally here and now I can say I want it again," Lloyd said. "After playing this final, it makes me want to play more this year."

"But I did not play a good game at all at 3-0. I got a little tentative, and with Martina you do not get many chances. Then when I did get a chance, she served great."

IT WAS Navratilova's return of service that helped her win the coveted crown.

She won three of the first four points in the fourth game to take a 15-40 lead. But an unforced backhand error saved one break point for Lloyd, and she pulled to deuce when Navratilova rifled a backhand passing shot down the line.

Navratilova's opening-match jitters had disappeared by then, and she hit a backhand passing shot that bounced just inside the corner. Then she closed out the break with a forehand volley.

She closed out the next game at love, serving her second ace on the final point. That brought Navratilova to 2-3, and when she broke Lloyd in the eighth game at 30 the set was level at 4-4.

Davis' return to Derby racing

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

If anything symbolizes America in a nutshell, the car represents the best choice.

With that in mind, the Soap Box Derby became part of the country's fascination with automobiles 50 years ago. And for Jared Davis and his father Harold, an entry into this year's 47th annual Soap Box Derby brings one family's love for cars full scale.

The Soap Box Derby is an event held nationwide in which children ages 9-15 build their own scaled-down cars. When Harold Davis was 11, his first-ever entry into the Derby resulted in a fourth-place finish nationally out of more than 50,000 competitors.

Today, nine-year-old Jared gets his first test of Soap Box Derby racing in San Antonio, and a victory there would propel him to the national finals in Akron, Ohio August 11.

THE DAVIS family gained a reputation when Harold began racing in the late '60s. In his first year, the fourth-place finish drew attention. For five years, the Davis team competed, twice finishing in the money at Akron.

But after 1973, the Davis children branched out and began families of their own. Since then, the participation in the Derby has disappeared. Until now.

"We used to race here in Midland," said Harold. "I was 11 when I first started out." After his first year of success, the Davis' were hooked, and from 1968-73, they sent a team to Akron every year, first under Harold's driving and then with his brother competing.

"1973 was our last year to race," said Davis. "I had a brother that raced at Akron and ran into the wall. We've always won locally. We never lost a local race in five years of competition."

Although it's been only 11 years since the Davis' were racing in Akron, the Derby has undergone a number of changes.

"It's changed so much, and I haven't kept up with it. This is our first year to get involved again," said Davis. For example, when Davis raced, the Derby was sponsored nationally by Chevrolet, and Hucksby Chevrolet in Midland sponsored the Davis vehicle. But Chevy eventually dropped its sponsorship, and now Novar Electronics is the chief proponent of the Derby.

Girls now also compete in the Derby.

One significant change has come in the area of car design. Cars are either one of two types - a sitdown type, such as Jared is racing this year, and the laydown type. Laydowns are much more streamlined and built for speed. The current style favors the laydowns. "It's kind of a funny thing," said Davis. "When we started racing, all the situp cars were the winners. When I raced there were 240 cars at Akron. Only five of those were the laydown type, and I was one of them. Never in 31 years had a laydown ever placed in the top 90. The other four (laydowns) I raced against lost their heat races. We were the first ones to ever place in the money with a laydown. That year I raced (1968) was the last year a situp car won. From then on, it's been the laydowns."

HOWEVER, JUNIOR Division rules specify that the younger drivers must use the situp type, and also have stringent rules concerning the actual building of the cars.

At 12, racers can go into the Senior Division. There, car types are left up to the racers. Nowadays, almost everyone builds the laydown type. "I'd rather have the laydown," said Harold. "It's much more streamlined."

Jared Davis streaks down the road in a test run of his Soap Box Derby racer. Davis' father was a national finisher in 1968.

Harold's car was much tougher to assemble. In the Junior Division, racers aren't even left to decide major issues since all racers are built from a Derby-sanctioned car kit, complete with explicit instructions. "The kit specifies all the measurements. This thing is huge compared to what we ran," Davis said. "My car was a lot more complex.

Our car, we worked and worked to make it littler. We'd do anything to get it smaller. But on this it has got to be a certain size."

The older Derby cars had only a few rules to circumvent, and thus were "a whole lot less work," according to Davis. "In a way I don't like it now, because there's not many things you can use your imagination on."

But on the other hand, the rule changes have made some things much more fair and sporting.

For example, weight of the car has always been a critical factor. A heavier car could provide more pull, thus a bigger kid could use his weight to advantage.

"Weight makes a difference," Davis said. "These cars can weigh 220 pounds total, and you want to be just as close to that as you can. Their scales are the final words. We'll take weights to get just as close to 220 as we can be."

In the past, everything in a car had to be structurally built into the car. A car weighing 210 on race day was at a disadvantage to a fully weighted racer. Now, weight can be bolted on, and very few cars will stray far from the 220 limit.

"Some of the rules are better," concedes Davis. "I like the idea of even weight. Before, you could only spend a certain amount of money on the car. That's been dropped, and you don't have to buy the shell, you can build the car out of wood. We didn't have time and bought the kit."

Potestio goes distance, pitches Cubs to 6-3 victory

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Doug Potestio made it four wins in his last five decisions with a neat route-going eight-hitter that gave the Midland Cubs a 6-3 decision over the San Antonio Dodgers before 1,561 fans at Cubs Stadium Saturday night.

Paul Noce, who tripped to set up the winning run in the ninth inning Friday, drove home the winning run with a single in the sixth Saturday, breaking up a 3-3 tie. As a result, Midland takes a 3-2 lead into the final game of the series at 7:30 p.m. today with Joe Housey, 4-4, and Carlos Granillo, 2-8, the opposing pitchers in the first game, scheduled to start.

IN WINNING, the Cubs beat rangy Dennis Powell, who had dealt the Bruins nothing but misery this year. Powell, Moultrie, Ga., was last year's Player of the Year in the Gulf Coast League with an 8-2 record and 102 strikeouts in 74 innings.

In the jump from rookie ball to AA, Powell's whiff totals have suffered, but his five wins include 2-0 and 3-2 decisions over Midland in the first half.

This night the Cubs gained a measure of revenge with the help of some loose play by the Dodger defense. Midland scored three runs in the second when Dan Norman walked, moved to second when Joe Henderson was safe on shortstop Carmelo Alvarez' first error of the inning. Gary Varsho then followed with a run scoring single. Tony Woods singled and two runs raced home when Alvarez bobbled Potestio's grounder.

Potestio, who was 6-1 with Salinas in A ball last year, led the Dodgers get a foot in the door in the fourth after a two-out single by Joe Vavra. His pickoff throw put Vavra on third and Dan Cataline singled to center to leave the Dodgers behind 3-1.

San Antonio tied it in the sixth with two runs. Stu Pederson beat out an infield hit. Larry See walked. Vavra singled to load the bases. Second baseman Varsho turned Cataline's liner into two outs by doubling Vavra at first, but Gilberto Reyes singled for two runs to tie it at three.

MIDLAND gave Potestio the margin he needed in the sixth when Varsho beat out a hit, his third of the night, to short and later scored on Noce's hit. Darrin Jackson then singled home Potestio, who had walked and reached second on Noce's hit.

It was quite a night for Potestio. The 6-2 righthander from San Leandro, Calif., scattered nine hits, walked two and struck out four in becoming only the seventh Cub to go the route this season. Potestio has done it twice. At the plate, Doug singled and walked twice.

This was the Cubs first game after losing shortstop Shawon Dunston to Iowa and Noce took over at short and turned in a smooth job. Varsho, who has been riding the bench, started at second and responded with three hits.

CUB PAWS—For third baseman Tony Woods it was strange with Dunston gone. "We've been playing together for two years and we both knew how much ground the other could cover," Dunston was the No. 1 player picked in the 1982 draft and Woods was the Cubs' second choice that year, No. 14 overall. Oddly, Woods was a shortstop and Dunston was a third baseman.

Baseball Today...

July 8
1941 — Ted Williams hit a homer with two on and two out in the ninth inning to give the American League a dramatic 7-5 win in the All-Star game at Detroit. Claude Passeau was the victim. Up to that point Arky Vaughan was the National League hero with two home runs. Joe and Dom DiMaggio both played for the American League, marking the first time that brothers appeared in the same All-Star game.

Last time, Candlestick wasn't fun

In 1961, high winds knock pitcher off mound

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The last time baseball's All-Star Game was played at Candlestick Park there were seven errors, a sudden gale blew a pitcher off the rubber, 95 fans suffered heatstroke and cries were heard to ship the national pastime to Russia.

It was 1961. Roger Maris had 33 of his record 61 homers when baseball paused for the first of two "midseason classics" that summer.

He was joined on the American League squad by six other New York Yankees — Mickey Mantle, Yogi Berra, Moose Skowron, Tony Kubek, Elston Howard and Whitey Ford.

The National League boasted a lineup that included Hank Aaron, Willie Mays, Roberto Clemente, Warren Spahn and Sandy Koufax, all eventual Hall of Famers.

THE NATIONALS scored twice in the 10th inning to beat the Americans 5-4 as six NL pitchers held the AL hitters to four hits and struck out 12. Three weeks later, in Boston, the second All-Star Game ended in a 1-1 tie when rain halted play after nine innings of a forgettable affair.

But the first game that year will be remembered forever as the one in which Stu Miller, San Francisco's lanky junkball pitcher, balked when he was jolted by a gust of wind in the ninth inning.

Miller's balk — he claimed he was nudged by a 60 mph blast — was the first of his career. It set up the tying run and capped a day that one scribe called "an exercise in inefficiency."

The game started in humid 81 degree weather, and 22 of the 44,115 fans succumbed to the heat by the second inning, five with apparent heart attacks after climbing "cardiac hill" to the ballpark.

"It was a perfect day, the best day I'd ever seen at Candlestick," said Miller, who gained the victory when Aaron, Mays doubled and Clemente singled in the 10th.

"We were sitting in the bullpen, nice and warm, then about the seventh inning the wind started kicking up and it got cold. It was like two different days," recalled Miller, who will throw out the first pitch along with Hall of Famer Carl Hubbell at Tuesday's All-Star Game at Candlestick.

FIFTY YEARS ago, Hubbell gave one of the game's finest performances when he struck out, in order, Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Jimmy Foss, Al Simmons and Joe Cronin.

As the wind and chill settled into Candlestick in the seventh inning in 1961, the pitchers in the bullpen tossed blankets over their feet to keep warm. Dust storms swirled around the infield. Napkins, hot dog wrappers and cups whipped across the stadium.

Al Kaline, who took over for Mantle, complained that "even running for a ball in center field fine particles of sand get in your eyes."

The Nationals led 3-1 after eight innings, but the Americans were threatening in the ninth with one run in, Maris on first and Kaline on second when NL Manager Danny Murtaugh brought in Miller to relieve Koufax.

"Rocky Colavito was the batter," the gray-haired but still lean Miller said as he spoke in the liquor store he owns 15 miles south of Candlestick. "I took my position and checked the runners. All of a sudden the wind pushed my shoulder forward."

"The umpire behind the plate, Stan Landes, couldn't see that it was a balk but I could hear the players and coaches yelling from first base and third."

Landes consulted with the other umpires and called the balk, telling the 167-pound Miller it didn't matter that the wind had caused his move.

Miller stood behind his store counter and demonstrated how he was blown forward.

"I was not blown off the mound, like most people think," Miller said. "It was just a slight motion forward. My feet didn't even move. I get blown farther off the mound every time someone tells the story."

THAT'S THE way he remembers it now. Back then, observers saw his feet leave the pitching rubber, and Miller was quoted after the game as saying the wind "lifted me right off the rubber."

The runners advanced into scoring position. Ken Boyer, one of the game's all-time fielding third basemen, then committed the first of two embarrassing errors when he booted Colavito's grounder, sending Kaline home with the tying run.

After the Nationals failed to score in the bottom of the ninth, Boyer made a wild throw in the 10th that allowed Nellie Fox to score all the way from first base. The wind also was blamed for that error.

Miller went back to the dugout thinking he'd be the losing pitcher, but he wound up the winner with the hits by Aaron, Mays and Clemente.

The clutch hitting was virtually forgotten afterward and all the talk was about the wind and Stu Miller.

"For my sake, it was the best thing that ever happened to me," Miller said. "People would always say 'Stu, who?' before that game. Now they remember me as an All-Star, the one who got blown off the mound."

It was to be his only All-Star appearance, despite a 9-1 start several years later and a generally good career.

MONTREAL — Harry Spilman singled past a drawn-in infield with none out in the ninth inning to score Terry Puhl with the go-ahead run as the Houston Astros defeated the Montreal Expos 3-2 Saturday night.

Puhl opened the ninth with a walk off reliever Bob James, 3-3. Mark Bailey followed with a sacrifice bunt, but James, attempting to retire Puhl at second, struck Puhl's leg with the throw, and Puhl raced to third.

Spilman then bounced a single beyond the reach of second baseman Bryan Little to make a winner of reliever Frank DiPino, 2-5. DiPino worked the final 1 1/2 innings, including pitching out of an eighth-inning jam.

Montreal moved to a 2-0 lead in the second. Gary Carter and Tim Wallach led off with a single and walk respectively. Mike Stenhouse's single to right scored Carter and sent Wallach to third, and he scored when Darrel Thomas bounced into a double play.

The Astros got a third-inning run on Puhl's double and a one-out single by Mike Scott.

A two-out, run-scoring single by Craig Reynolds pulled Houston into a 2-2 tie in the fifth. Mark Bailey opened the inning with a walk and was sacrificed to second by Astros starter Mike Scott. One out later, Reynolds singled through the right side, with Bailey scoring on a close play at the plate.

The Expos' Tim Lincecum had his consecutive stolen base streak stopped at 36, dating back to last September, when he was caught stealing by Bailey, the Houston catcher, in the third. Raines fell two short of tying the major league record, held by Davey Lopes.

Braves 5, Phillies 2
PHILADELPHIA — Claudell Washington hit his 11th home run and scored twice as the Atlanta Braves beat the slumping Philadelphia Phillies 5-2.

Atlanta starter Rick Camp, 4-1, pitched 5 1/2 innings and earned the victory with relief help from Gene

National League

Garber and Donnie Moore. Shane Rawley, acquired recently from the New York Yankees, suffered his first defeat as a Phillie after winning his first start.

Moore, who pitched the ninth for Atlanta, allowed a one-out double to Von Hayes but struck out the side and recorded his ninth save.

It was the sixth loss in eight games for the Phillies, who began play in third place in the National League West, three games behind Chicago.

Giants 7, Cubs 2
SAN FRANCISCO — Mike Krukow scattered six hits in 8 2/3 innings and drove in the lead run with a sacrifice fly in the third as the San Francisco Giants ended a four-game losing streak by beating the Chicago Cubs 7-2.

The Cubs had a four-game winning streak broken and fell out of first place in the National League East, four percentage points behind the New York Mets, who played Cincinnati on Saturday night.

The Giants took a 3-1 lead with two unearned runs in the fourth inning off Cubs starter Rick Reuschel, 4-5. Krukow's bases-loaded sacrifice fly field broke a 1-1 tie and Dan Gladden followed with an RBI single.

Krukow, 5-7, retired 13 straight batters after the Cubs scored in the second on a triple by Thad Bosley and a single by Ron Cey. Dan Rohn hit his first major-league home run, a pinch-hit shot, in the eighth inning for Chicago. It was his first at-bat of the season. Gary Lavelle got the last out for San Francisco.

Mets 14, Reds 4
NEW YORK — Mookie Wilson and Darrel Strawberry each homered and drove in four runs apiece and rookie pitcher Dwight Gooden struck out eight in six innings as the New York Mets took over first place in the National League East as they routed Cincinnati 14-4.

It was the Mets' fourth straight victory over the Reds and gave them a half-game lead in the East over the Cubs, who lost to San Francisco.

Wilson hit his sixth homer of the season and singled three times in his four at bats. Strawberry, who clubbed his 11th homer of the year, went 2-for-4.

Gooden, 8-5, helped his own cause with two RBI. He walked one and struck out eight to raise his league-leading total to 133, five more than the Dodgers' Fernando Valenzuela.

Ed Lynch pitched the final three innings for his first save of the season.

Reds starter Mario Soto, 9-2, had won his last eight decisions but he lasted just 3 1/3 innings. Soto came into the game with a 7-0 lifetime record against the Mets. He allowed eight runs on seven hits.

Padres 1, Pirates 0
SAN DIEGO — Center fielder Marvell Wynne misplayed a Tony Gwynn single, allowing Alan Wiggins to score from first as the San Diego Padres took a 1-0 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

San Diego's Dave Dravecky, 6-4, scattered five hits in six innings and combined with Luis DeLeon and Rich Gossage to give the Pirates their 11th loss in 12 games. Gossage earned his 15th save.

In the third, Wiggins walked with one out and Gwynn followed with a single to center. As Wiggins rounded third, the ball rolled under Wynne's glove, allowing Wiggins to score the game's only run.

Dodgers 3, Cardinals 0
LOS ANGELES — Pedro Guerrero homered and doubled to back the four-hit pitching of Alejandro Pena as the Los Angeles Dodgers blanked the St. Louis Cardinals 3-0.

Pena, 10-4, recorded his third shutout to lead the Dodger staff, and reduced his earned run average to 2.40, third best in the National League. The shutout was the sixth of his career.

Pena, the Dodgers' winningest pitcher, struck out four and walked only one. Rick Ownbey, 0-1, took the loss in his debut with the Cardinals.

Guerrero, who doubled in the first inning, followed a two-out walk to Franklin Stubbs with his seventh home run into the left-field pavilion.

Los Angeles added a run in the fourth when Bill Russell singled after two were out, stole second and came home on German Rivera's single to right.

Guerrero, who got off slowly and was hitting only .250 at the end of May, has hit safely in 16 of his last 19 games and has raised his batting average to .280, the highest it's been this season.

Pena survived a first inning St. Louis threat when Lonnie Smith led off with a single and stole second. After Tommy Herr grounded out, Willie McGee doubled to center, but Smith was stopped at third. Pena then struck out George Hendrick and Andy VanSlyke to leave the runners at second and third.

CUBS

"I put on a little weight and I think they thought of me at third in terms of the long ball," Woods said. First Baseman Jeff Jones said he didn't say anything to plate umpire Mike Pilat on Friday night until after he had been thrown out of the game. Just dropped his bat after the second strike. While Jones was tossed out of two games in three nights two years ago, similar to this year, it wasn't by Pilato. The Dodgers are 15-6 over the Cubs for the season. Dan Norman was held hitless in four trips. Coming into the game, he had hit safely in 18 of 20 games for a .371 average. The current series has been one of the best at Citi Field this year and 8,949 fans have showed up for five dates. The win also gave the Cubs a .412 percentage, the highest they've been all season.

Fletcher charged with shooting a Philadelphia man

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Frank "The Animal" Fletcher, a junior middleweight boxer once ranked No. 2 by the World Boxing Association, was charged Saturday with shooting a southwest Philadelphia man, police said.

The victim, Jeffrey Taylor, 28, was treated at the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania for a graze wound to the chest and was released, authorities said.

Taylor told police he was sitting on the front steps of his home at about 10:10 p.m. Friday when Fletcher drove up in a blue Cadillac and fired two shots at him with a handgun, detectives said.

The two men had fought earlier in a neighborhood bar, according to police.

Fletcher, 29, also of southwest Philadelphia, was charged with aggravated and simple assault, weapons offenses and recklessly endangering another person, police said. He was released on $15,000 bail after his arraignment Saturday. A hearing on the charges was scheduled for July 16.

Police declined to say what they believe was the motive for the shooting.

Fletcher dropped to No. 13 in the WBA rankings when he lost to Juan Dominguez Roldan in November. In April, he defeated Jimmy Sykes in a unanimous decision.

Wyland, Mitchell lead finalists to qualify for U.S. platform team

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — World champion Wendy Wyland and 1983 national outdoor champion Michele Mitchell led 12 finalists Saturday in the U.S. Olympic diving trials to qualify for the United States team in platform diving.

Mitchell, 22, finished first in the competition at the Indiana University Natatorium with a consistent program that brought her 477.09 points. She received only one award below eight for her eight dives.

Wyland, 19, finished at 456.51 to give the team from Mission Viejo, Calif. both spots. Wendy Williams, the youngest finalist at 17 and also a member of the Mission Viejo team, was next at 418.02.

Debbie Rush, a member of the United States national team since 1981, placed fourth at 388.70. She was followed by University of Florida diver Mary Hummer at 387.18. A reverse armstand dive from the tuck position, which has a 2.1 degree of difficulty, boosted Hummer, 21, of Trenton, Ohio. The panel of seven judges awarded her three perfect scores of 10, a pair of 9.5s and two 9s for the dive.

Megan Meyer, the world springboard champion who failed to make the Olympic team in her specialty, had trouble on nearly all of her dives after finishing second in the preliminaries.

Neyer, who won both the platform and springboard trials in 1980 but did not get to go to Moscow due to the United States boycott, was last heading into the final round. She finished with her best dive of the night, scoring 74.75 and finished the night with 383.95.

Earlier, world champion Greg Louganis and Bruce Kimball, who defeated him in this year's national indoor finals, finished 1-2 in the men's platform preliminaries.

The trials conclude with the men's platform finals today.

Louganis, 24, finished his program with the most difficult dive of his program and hit it to score 89.76 points and a 600.27 total.

Kimball, 20, edged Dan Watson, 21, for second by just over two points. Kimball, a six-time national champion on the platform, used a 2 1/2 somersault tuck dive for his most productive dive of the day.

Kimball, who finished with 594.09 as compared to Watson's 592.07, received four perfect scores of 10 and three 9.5s from the seven judges on the dive.

RON MEYER placed fourth at 567.57 among the 12 advancing to the finals from the 16 participants.

Among those failing to advance was Lenny Layland, a member of the national team since 1981, and Mark Virts, who qualified for the national team in platform every year since 1977.

Louganis is seeking to take the second step toward his goal of becoming the first male diver to capture two gold medals in the same Olympics. He took the first step Friday, finishing first in the men's springboard competition with 720.18 points for his 11 dives.

Veteran Ron Merriott, 24, also qualified for the trip to Los Angeles by playing second on the 3-meter board.

Kelly McCormick and Chris Seufert qualified earlier as the women's springboard representatives.

"I was a little shaky. Last night was one heck of a performance, so I was pretty tired," Louganis said.

On the Road Again

One of the last questions asked about wind deflectors is: Do They Really Work? The answer is Yes, depending on the location of the deflector, the tow vehicle and the trailer. The tow vehicle should have a suitable location to set the deflector with something like rain gutters to attach the straps. Proper location would allow the deflector to extend about 2' at the top ahead of a line extending from the top of the deflector to the front of the trailer. Thus located, the wind deflector would be deflecting the wind in a carry on or sweep pattern, thus reducing the wind drag on the front of the trailer. Some reports indicate up to 3 MPG gasoline savings plus the benefits of handling and stability. A good sign the deflector is properly positioned is the absence of bugs from the front of the trailer.

BILLY SINS TRAILER TOWN, 520 E. 2ND, COESDA, carries the A.E. aluminum, folding wind deflector in both 15 x 51 inch and 18 x 60 inch models. Fifth wheel trailers should use the larger 18 x 60 inch model.

Tigers walk past Rangers; Chisox take sixth straight

By The Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Ruppert Jones singled in a run, then Texas pitchers walked in three more runs in a four-run fourth inning Saturday night to help the Detroit Tigers to a 5-2 victory over the Rangers.

Dave Rozema, 5-1, went six innings for the win, allowing nine hits and only one earned run, walking one and striking out three. Willie Hernandez pitched the final three innings for his 16th save.

Danny Darwin, 5-5, took the loss. In the Tigers fourth, Lance Parrish opened with a single and Darrell Evans walked. Jones singled to score Parrish. Darwin then walked. Dave Bergman, Howard Johnson and Lou Whitaker to force in two runs and reliever Joey McLaughlin walked Alan Trammell for the fourth Tigers run of the inning.

Texas took the lead in the first when Pete O'Brien singled and reached second on right fielder Kirk Gibson's fielding error, before scoring on Larry Parrish's RBI single.

Tommy Dunbar circled the bases for the Rangers in the fifth on a single, an infield grounder and Parrish's RBI double to make it 4-2.

The Tigers added a run in the seventh as Lance Parrish hit his 16th homer of the year, a drive over the left-field wall.

White Sox 4, Indians 2
CHICAGO — Greg Luzinski's home run and a two-run triple by Rudy Law powered the first-place Chicago White Sox to their sixth straight victory, a 4-2 decision over the Cleveland Indians.

It was also the eighth victory in the last nine games for the White Sox, with Floyd Bannister evening his record at 6-6, while Roy Smith, 2-2, took the loss.

Luzinski triggered a four-run fifth when he led off with his seventh homer of the season and fourth in the last five games.

Vance Law reached on an error by third baseman Brook Jacoby and, one out later, Julio Cruz beat out a bunt. Rudy Law then tripled to right to score two runs and scored himself when shortstop Mike Fischlin dropped Carlton Fisk's pop up for an error.

Bannister had a two-hit shutout working when Andre Thornton opened the Cleveland sixth with a double, advanced to third on a fly to center and scored on Mel Hall's sacrifice fly.

Fischlin socked his first homer of the season in the Cleveland seventh.

Bannister worked seven innings and allowed four hits, walked five and struck out three. Gene Nelson finished and earned his first save for the White Sox.

Mariners 8, Blue Jays 4

TORONTO — Al Cowens slammed a three-run homer and Jim Presley hit a two-run double as the Seattle Mariners snapped a six-game losing streak with an 8-4 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

The loss ended Toronto's win streak at four and saddled starter Jim Clancy with the dubious distinction of being the American League's first 10-game loser.

Clancy, 6-10, who has lost his last four starts, ran into trouble in the first inning when Jack Perconte and Spike Owen singled, putting runners on first and third. Clancy retired the next two batters, but Cowens drove a 1-0 pitch over the right-center-field fence for his ninth home run of the season.

The Mariners chased Clancy in the third when they scored three runs on four hits.

Orioles 6-8, Royals 2-0

BALTIMORE — John Shelby drove in two runs with a double and a single while ending a 1-for-38 slump, and Mike Flanagan hurled a three-hitter as the Baltimore Orioles defeated Kansas City 8-0 and completed a sweep of a two-night doubleheader with the Royals.

Eddie Murray hit a grand slam, giving him 72 RBI, and Benny Ayala drove in two runs to back Scott McGregor's eight-hitter in Baltimore's 6-2 opening-game victory.

Murray connected for his 17th homer, his ninth career slam, after the Orioles loaded the bases with two outs in the seventh off Larry Gura, 9-6.

McGregor, 10-7, allowed a run in the fifth when U.L. Washington hit into a bases-loaded double play — one of three turned by the Orioles — and George Brett hit his eighth homer in the ninth.

A's 8, Brewers 2

MILWAUKEE — Steve McCatty, pitching a perfect game for 6½ innings, stopped the Milwaukee Brewers on six hits in leading the Oakland A's to an 8-2 victory.

Jim Gantner broke up the no-hit bid with a one-out single to right in the seventh. One out later, Cecil Cooper lined a single to center. Ted Simmons singled in the eighth, then Milwaukee got its runs in the ninth as Gantner singled, Robin Yount tripled and Cooper singled again.

McCatty, 6-6, didn't allow a walk and struck out two.

Oakland took a 1-0 lead in the first inning on Dwayne Murphy's 17th homer of the season, a drive into the center-field bleachers.

Yankees 11, Twins 4

MINNEAPOLIS — Oscar Gamble slammed a two-run homer, Butch Wynegar drove in three runs with a pair of doubles and Bobby Meacham added four hits to New York's 16-hit attack as the Yankees ripped the Minnesota Twins 11-4 Saturday night.

Dennis Rasmussen, 2-3, gave up five hits through eight innings, with Jay Howell pitching the ninth. Twins starter John Butcher, 6-6, was knocked out in the Yankees' six-run third inning.

Ron Washington's second homer of the season cut the Yankee lead to 3-1 in the bottom of the second.

Iowa-bound Shawon Dunston
...is future at shortstop?

Dallas Green leaves Cub cupboard bare

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Brandy Davis, Chicago Cubs' national scouting supervisor, in Midland for the series with San Antonio, admits Chicago GM Dallas Green has left the farm system in bad shape, "but he's going for it all and to get the help he needs, he is paying the price in young talent."

He points out that it has paid off. "Rick Sutcliffe has done the job we had hoped he would do. Dennis Eckersley deserved a better fate his first three or four starts, but he hasn't pitched well the last few."

Sutcliffe was obtained at the expense of Mel Hall, Joe Carter, Don Schulze, and Midland Cub Darrell Banks. Eckersley came in exchange for Bill Buckner, "who was expendable. We had to get Leon Durham on first base."

Other trades have brought Chicago Ryne Sandberg, Keith Moreland, Bob Dernier, Jody Davis, Gary Matthews, Leon Durham, Dick Ruthven, Scott Sanderson, Dizzy Trout's son...the list goes on forever.

But, of course, in the last couple of years, Chicago has dealt away an awful lot of its future...Carmelo Martinez, Mike Diaz, Fritz Connally, Craig Lefferts, Scott Fletcher...to name a few.

"I notice Dan Catinale and Vance Loveless are with San Antonio," observed Davis, "They went in the Ron Cey trade."

Consequently, there haven't been enough bodies to adequately stock the farm clubs. And talent was thinned further a couple of years ago by adding an A club in the California League. "We just don't have the backlog of talent right now and have tried to fill the gap by signing players that have been cut by other organizations. Some have worked out. Some haven't."

The result has been rumors about the future of Chicago in Midland, will someone else come in when the working agreement ends in September?

"I haven't heard any talk," said Davis, "But Winston-Salem of the Carolina League wants us there. It's a Red Sox farm, but the new owner is a Chicago fan and even has the uniforms styled after Chicago. Then, there is some pressure for us to move to Peoria, but those are both A leagues."

Davis says the Quad Cities, Midwest, club is really unhappy over its team, which is playing worse ball than Midland...

Dugout Chatter

Noting that Schulze was brought up from Iowa to Cleveland after the Mel Hall trade, Davis remarked, "There is still a big gap in the talent in the National League and American League. It shows up when they begin substituting for the starters in the All-Star game..."

Davis, who came out of Duke University to steal 56 bases in about a half a season at Bartlesville in the old KOM League in 1951, is disturbed by the Pete Rose influence on base runners. "If there's one bad influence Rose has had on the game, it's the head-first slide. You can't kick the ball out of the glove or fadeaway from the tag, but worst of all, it's how players get hurt. Durham is out of the Chicago lineup when we need him most and it's because of a head first slide. You've got to keep an eye these young players who try to emulate Rose and nip it in the bud in the minors."

Friday night must have been a nightmare for Brandy. Every Cub slide was a belly-whopper...

Shawon Dunston, picked No. 1 in all of baseball in 1982, is climbing at a faster rate than Darryl Strawberry, who had been the No. 1 pick a couple of years earlier. Dunston left for Iowa after winning Friday night's game with a base hit, but there seems to be some controversy about where his future lies.

A few weeks back on the NBC Game of the Week, it was opined that "with all the errors Shawon is making at short, they should put him in the outfield or at first."

Shawon was asked about the comment and if any position change had been discussed with him. "I want to play shortstop. I'm learning. This is only my second year at shortstop. I was drafted as a third baseman. Sure, I'm making a lot of errors, but I feel they are aggressive errors. I think I can handle it, if they give me a chance."

The subject obviously upset Strawberry. That night he went out and made four errors. Still, he's not alone. Midland had a third baseman a few years ago who made five errors in one game, now Carmelo Martinez, a first baseman by nature, is playing outfield for San Diego. Says Carmelo, "The only trouble I have in the outfield is with fly balls..."

Kouros breaks six-day run mark

NEW YORK (AP) — Yiannis Kouros of Greece broke a modern world record, running his total distance covered to 576 miles, 675 yards Saturday in the New York Six-Day Run at Downing Stadium on Randall's Island.

Kouros reached the record mark at about 9 p.m. EDT, 128 hours, 43 minutes and 18 seconds into the race to surpass the 1982 total of Tom O'Reilly of England.

Norman picks up pace

'White Shark' leads Western by one

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Greg Norman, the long-hitting Australian who has dominated the PGA Tour in recent weeks, overcame a slow start and shot a one-under-par 71 to take a one-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the $400,000 Western Open Golf Tournament.

Norman, the man known as the "Great White Shark," finished three trips over the Butler National Golf Club course in 209, seven shots under par.

"I'm a confidence player," said Norman. "When I win a golf tournament I get more relaxed, maybe 10 percent more relaxed. Once I get that confidence, I feel I can do anything with a golf ball."

"And that's the way things are going right now."

Norman, who has collected more than 30 titles around the world, has won twice in his last four starts, including last week in the Canadian Open, and, in the same period, lost a playoff for the U.S. Open title and finished 10th in Atlanta. In those four starts, he's won more than $200,000.

"He's riding the crest of a wave, just coasting right now," said Tom Watson, who has had those kind of streaks himself.

Watson, twice the winner of this old title and currently the game's leading money-winner, shared second with former U.S. Open and PGA champion Larry Nelson at 210, a single stroke back. Those three players, Norman, Watson and Nelson, will form the last group off the tee in Sunday's final round.

"That's good. I can see what he's doing," Watson said after his hard-fought 70 that he described as "a struggling round, an interesting round. I putted great — and that's the only reason I shot 70."

Nelson had the best round of the tournament and was within a single stroke of the course record with a 7-under-par 65 that included 10 one-putts and a chip-in for a birdie.

Two strokes back at 211 were George Burns, who matched par 72 in the mild, sunny weather, and T.C. Chen of Taiwan, who had a 74. They were followed by Curtis Strange, Dave Ogren and Scott Hoch at 212. Strange closed up with a 68. Ogren birdied the last two holes for 72 and Hoch had 73.

D.A. Weibring, who shared the second round lead with Chen, slipped to a 76 and was in a group at 213 that included PGA champion Hal Sutton and defending titleholder Mark McCumber. Sutton had a 69 and McCumber 71.

Norman, whose vast length off the tee and sun-bleached white hair has made him a popular, recognizable figure with the galleries, said the big crowd helped get him started.

"I couldn't get going," he said. "I was just walking in the park for the first six holes. The gallery picked me up. I started talking to myself, saying they'd come to see me play and I owed it to them to do better than this."

Danny Edwards (right) and T.C. Chen check a possible site for a drop after Chen's ball went out of bounds in the Western Open.

Barber seeking second straight Seniors victory

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Miller Barber, looking for his second consecutive senior tour victory, remained tied for the lead with Rod Funseth Saturday after the second round of the Greater Syracuse Seniors Pro Golf Classic.

Both fired 1-under-par 70s to finish the second round at 3-under par 139, two shots ahead of John Kalinka and Gardner Dickinson, going into Sunday's final round.

The winner of the 54-hole tournament, being played on the 6,672-yard par 71 Bellevue Country Club course, will claim $30,000 for first place.

The seniors golf tour is open to professional and amateur golfers 50 years of age and older.

In Saturday's round, Barber, who edged Arnold Palmer by two strokes last week to win the Senior Open in nearby Rochester, opened with a birdie on the 425-yard par 4 first hole. He birdied three holes on the front nine, but bogeyed two consecutive holes on the backside to finish tied with Funseth.

Funseth, whose last tour victory was in May 1983, duplicated his front nine total of 35 on the backside with a birdie on the 190-yard par-3 13th hole. He finished with two birdies and one bogey.

Peterson misses ace, hits record

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Lauri Peterson came within inches of a $5,000 ace, fired a women's course record 7-under-par 65 and assumed a three-stroke lead over Nancy Lopez Saturday in the LPGA Jamie Farr Toledo Classic.

The 24-year-old Arizona State University product, seeking her second pro golf victory in 10 months, made up eight shots in the first nine holes and 10 strokes in all on faltering 36-hole leader Dianne Dailey.

Peterson, playing the front side of Glengarry Country Club in 5-under-par 31, posted a 54-hole total of 205, 11 strokes below par.

However, she had to survive a back-nine charge by Lopez, bidding for her 29th career victory. Lopez, who started the round seven shots behind Dailey, dipped 8-under par in a six-hole stretch to pull even with Peterson.

Peterson regained the sole lead with a birdie on the 14th and 15th holes and stayed on top the rest of the way.

Lopez shot a 66. She stood at 8-under-par 208 heading into Sunday's final round in the battle for the first prize of $26,250.

The previous course record were the 68s by Peterson and Dailey in the first round Thursday.

Peterson, playing head-to-head with Dailey in the last threesome of the cool, cloudy day, birdied five of her first nine holes, but the most spectacular came at No. 8.

Her tee shot hit in front of the hole, bounced once in the cup and bounded 15 inches past the hole. She tapped in the putt to take the lead for the first time.

That put Peterson 8 under for the tournament and gave her a two-shot swing on Dailey. Her playing partner hit into a bunker and took a bogey 4 to drop back to 6 under for the event.

If Peterson had aced the 182-yard hole, she would have earned a $5,000 bonus in the $175,000 tournament.

Dailey, winless in her five pro seasons, started the round with a two-shot lead. She struggled to a 76 and fell into fourth place with a total of 213.

Dailey, never higher than third in her pro career, built a three-shot lead with a birdie on the second hole. However, she drove into the woods on the fifth hole for a bogey and then bogeyed the eighth and double bogeyed the ninth hole to fall off the pace.

Then it was Lopez's turn to mount a charge. The wife of Houston Astros infielder Ray Knight birdied holes 7, 8, 10 and 11 and then posted an eagle 3 on the 432-yard 12th hole.

When Peterson bogeyed the 13th, Lopez shared the lead momentarily

Midland, Odessa teams to meet in Hi-Junior tourney

From Staff Reports

The first annual Hi-Junior Invitational baseball tournament will be held Thursday, Friday and Saturday at Midland Lee Field, at Hogan Park's Simon Field and Cub Stadium.

The tournament will pit teams from Midland and Odessa in a single elimination winner's bracket and consolation bracket for losers of first round games.

Four teams from each city round out the eight-team field. The teams from Midland are: Cowboys, Lions, Mustangs and Shamrocks while Odessa is sending American Legion, Pierce Construction, Two Rivers and Vehicles Unique.

The tournament will begin on Thursday at 6 p.m. Mustangs taking on Two Rivers at Lee Field and resume on Friday at 6 p.m. with Vehicles Unique playing Shamrocks at Simon Field and Pierce Construction against Cowboys at Lee Field. The final first round game will be played Friday at 8:15 p.m. between Lions and American Legion at Simon Field.

Saturday, winner's bracket and loser's bracket games will be played simultaneously at Simon Field and Cub Stadium at 9 a.m. and 11:15 a.m. Play will then move to Cub Stadium where consolation and championship games will be played with the championship game scheduled for 7:30 p.m.

No free rides

Late this week the Supreme Court went a step further on the draft registration question, ruling, in effect, that if a young man doesn't register for the draft, Uncle Sam isn't going to help pay his college bill.

Ever since the Vietnam War, opposition to registration for the draft has been present and was particularly in evidence following President Jimmy Carter's reinstitution of the draft four years ago. That event, followed by non-registration by an estimated 20 percent of those eligible, brought about the case that resulted in the ruling.

In his majority opinion, Chief Justice Warren Burger noted that via the draft registration law "Congress sought, not to punish anyone, but to promote compliance with the draft registration requirement and fairness in the allocation of scarce federal resources." That's logical.

Burger further noted that "a person who has not registered clearly is under no compulsion to seek financial aid; if he is not registered, he is simply ineligible for aid." That answers the self-incrimination complaint made by the three anonymous Minnesota men whose case was the basis for the ruling.

There's another reason behind the ruling, too. It's the old "if you don't pay, you don't play" scenario. Living in the United States carries with it responsibilities — such as agreeing to defend the country if called upon to do so (freedom demands sacrifice) — and provides certain privileges — such as obtaining federal assistance for a college education. Understandably one can be tied to the other and that's what the Supreme Court has reiterated.

What the ruling has done is to reaffirm that those who will not stand up in the defense of this country will not find the country in the showering upon them all its blessings — like helping pay for college.

There are no free rides from Uncle Sam.

Tick, tick, tick...

The recent vote in Congress to increase the federal debt ceiling brings us face to face with another of those incomprehensible figures. The debt now will be permitted to rise by another $53 billion to a total of $1.573 trillion, and that will serve only until the end of August or early September, when the ceiling will have to be raised again.

We were contemplating what one-and-a-half trillion dollar bills would look like, stacked neatly or laid end to end, when another item from Washington caught our eye. The U.S. Office of Personnel Management has announced that the Civil Service Retirement System — the pension plan for federal employees — now has an unfunded liability of $528.1 billion, an increase of $13 billion over the last year.

This obligation to present and future retirees was increasing at the rate of $25,000 a minute during 1983, or more than a billion dollars a month. Says OPM Director Donald J. Devine, "This represents a staggering debt that will have to be paid by the taxpayers sooner or later."

Let's not bother to figure how far $1.573 trillion would reach in a trail of bills. The unfunded liability of the pension system is NOT included in calculations of the national debt, so the REAL debt is well over 2 trillion dollars, and it is rising dramatically with each tick of the clock.

It is hopeless to measure the size of the national debt because it grows faster than you can punch the figures into a calculator. Think about this: Given the rate of increase in the debt created by federal budget deficits and the unfunded pension liability, the government's debt has gone up by more than $1 million just since you started reading this editorial.

Another View:

Karl Marx, too

In their eagerness to overturn a wise 1962 Supreme Court decision invalidating organized vocal prayer in the public schools as a violation of the constitutional guarantee of religious freedom, the promoters of school prayer have got the Senate to pass a jerry-built religious access measure that doubtless raises more questions than they anticipated. The amendment giving student religious groups the same right as other organizations to meet on public school property was attached in the Senate to a popular House-passed bill providing federal aid for teaching mathematics and science. The idea was that the House would be forced to accept a religious provision incorporated by a conference committee in the final bill.

In May the House rejected a so-called religious access bill because of many legitimate objections. It would have elevated religious speech, for example, above all other forms of speech by cutting off federal aid to schools only for their denial of access to that kind of expression; it would have left schools free to set a minimum student participation requirement, thus effectively barring religious groups with fewer members; it would have allowed adult leaders, including clergy, to lead doctrinal discussion or worship services. To meet these objections, the Senate bill would prohibit schools from barring a student meeting on the basis of "religious, political, philosophical or other content of speech," would prohibit meetings from being barred by a limit on the number of participants, would prevent persons not connected with the school from conducting, controlling or regularly attending such meetings.

While forcing a backdoor opening for prayer, the Senate bill, we assume, would also force admission for the Karl Marx Club or the Student Klan. That may be more free speech than its sponsors bargained for.

Inaction stalls toxic-waste bill

WASHINGTON — The exposure of backroom deals between polluters and their regulators made front-page headlines two years ago. Reporters kept hot on the trail of the Environmental Protection Agency conspirators; investigators pulled together the pieces of the scandal.

Now a greater environmental scandal lies unreported and uninvestigated in the Senate. It's a scandal of legislative lethargy, of opportunities lost.

The populace is supposed to be protected from hazardous waste and pollutants by the Resources Conservation and Recovery Act. Passed in 1976 with great fanfare, this had the stature of a national undertaking. Protection was promised "from cradle to grave."

Unfortunately, the law is Swiss-cheesed with so many loopholes that environmental atrocities can still be committed with perfect legality. As the law is now written, for example, the spreading of dioxin-contaminated oil on dirt roads in Times Beach, Mo., would be an acceptable "recycling method." So would the use of fuel oil to burn hazardous chemicals.

Day after day, meanwhile, U.S. industry spews out toxic wastes far beyond previous calculations. Instead of the 40 million tons of hazardous waste that was believed to be produced each year, the actual amount is now estimated at more than 250 million tons. These staggering amounts are Love Canals waiting to happen, with the resulting astronomical cleanup costs.

Under the existing act, there are more waste producers, disposal facilities and certifiable toxins that are exempt from the law than are regulated by it. For example, nine out of 10 companies that produce hazardous waste are classified as "small generators," meaning they dump a ton or less per month into landfills. They are now virtually free of regulation.

Despite the laxity of the law and the potential devastation it would allow, Congress has yet to pass a single legislative reform since the Environmental Protection Agency scandal was splashed in printers' ink across the front pages.

Mind you, legislation has been introduced that would revise the ecological rulebook and possibly prevent future catastrophes like those at Love Canal and Times Beach. This reform measure is acceptable to both industrial and environmental groups. It has the backing of President Reagan; it also passed the House overwhelmingly last November. Yet the Senate's version lies moldering on the shelf.

Any bill that doesn't make it to final passage in both Houses, no matter how urgent its substance or numerous its sponsors, will revert at the moment of adjournment, like Cinderella's coach, into a pumpkin — less than a pumpkin for it would become a nullity. Then next year, the bill will have to be born again and undergo the growing pains all over.

Thus a law that is desperately needed might never be passed. This raises a question of basic congressional competence and responsibility. Can the members act on a certified and acknowledged menace, or are they mesmerized by political obstacles and diverted by routine ambitions?

Who is holding up the environmental reforms? My associate John Dillon has been able to identify three members of the Senate: Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., and Steven Symms, R-Idaho. Why are they blocking the reform bill? Is anyone manipulating them?

In the background, I can report, are shadowy special interests. It is assumed by special-interest lobbyists — in fact it is their reason for being — that in general Congress does not know its crafts; that its operating milieu is ignorance of the details and consequences of its enactments; that the lobbyists' task is either to dispel the ignorance or to enlarge it, depending on the circumstances, but never to ignore it. But lobbyists are an elusive breed, difficult to locate, identify and track.

I can tell you only this much about the three obstructers: — Howard Baker: Last May, more than 50 senators asked Baker for speedy action on the bill, but he only recently scheduled it for floor action. He agreed to bring it up after the holiday recess ends July 23. There have been promises before, but the bill never seems to make it to the floor.

One of Baker's former aides, Jim Range, is now a lobbyist for Waste Management Inc., the giant of hazardous waste disposal companies. But Range insists that he has never talked to Baker about the bill and that his company supports it.

— Alan Simpson: He has put a hold on the bill because of provisions allowing the EPA to set water quality standards affecting uranium mine wastes. He wants these standards set by the more lenient Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

This is no small problem. Some 160 million tons of radioactive uranium tailings have been produced, contaminating large tracts of the West. Wyoming, of course, has powerful mining interests.

— Steven Symms: He objects to a provision that would place greater controls on underground storage tanks, such as those used by oil companies and gas stations. His past election campaigns have been supported by oil people.

Their inaction says a lot about the motives and priorities of senators as against the urgent needs of the nation.

GEORGE F. WILL

Jaycee case: Hold roses, please

WASHINGTON — Minnesotans are — do not be misled by Walter Mondale's placid surface — a turbulent race. As a result, the Supreme Court has handed down a ruling that condemns the young gentlemen of the Jaycees to consort with ladies.

Although this ruling has been awarded the overused label "landmark," it is especially interesting as an illustration of how the Court severely circumscribes a principle in the process of enunciating it. A constitutional claim, grounded in the "preferred freedoms" of the First Amendment, has been found inadequate in a challenge to a Minnesota statute. But the constitutional argument has life in it yet.

The Jaycees is a non-profit national organization devoted to educational and charitable activities that develop leadership among young men. Women may be associate members, but full membership is restricted to men 18 to 35.

Two Minnesota chapters began admitting women as full members and, although the veil of the temple was not rent in twain, the national Jaycees imposed sanctions and threatened expulsion of the tumultuous chapters. The Minnesotans filed charges under a state law forbidding denial, on the basis of sex, of "full and equal enjoyment" of "a place of public accommodation."

The Jaycees may be daft in wanting to exclude women, but they are real Americans and responded as Americans: They went to court waving the Constitution. They argued that forcing male Jaycees into the society of women would violate the men's rights of free speech and association.

You might think that argument would get at least one vote in the Supreme Court. It lost 7-0. (Justices Burger and Blackmun, both Minnesotans previously involved with the Jaycees, did not participate.)

The opinion was written by Justice Brennan, one of the Court's two liberals. But he may have purchased unanimity with the coin of limiting language.

The Court did not say that the right of association can never be successfully asserted as a shield against an individual's claim of a right to access to a private organization. The Court hedged its ruling with criteria that in subsequent cases (there will be many) will limit the reach of anti-discrimination laws into private organizations. The Court insisted that there are important differences in the way organizations make themselves "available to the public."

An appeals court had held that the Jaycees advocate "political and public causes," that compulsory admission of women would be a government-dictated change in its "philosophic cast," and therefore would be unconstitutional. But the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the Jaycees is primarily a commercial organization offering privileges in exchange for dues. The Court said the Jaycees organization is public in that it admits members according to "unselective criteria," aside from the sex and age distinctions. And that distinction was not connected in an important way with the organization's "expressive" activities are insufficient to make its free-association claim triumph over the state's important interest in combating sex discrimination.

The Court indicated that a freedom-of-association claim is apt to succeed when "highly personal" or "intimate" relationships exist in small and selective organizations, especially those with moral, political or religious principles and purposes. So the ruling in the Jaycees case may leave many organizations secure from government intrusion.

Between, say, the family and General Motors — between intimate and attenuated relationships of association — there is a vast middle ground of institutions of varying sizes and purposes. The Jaycees, being large and unselective and not primarily devoted to expression, had a weak claim to a right to exercise gender-based control of membership.

But it remains unclear whether, say, the Boy Scouts can remain sexually exclusive. The Scouts, like the Jaycees, open themselves to the young male portion of the community at large. On the other hand, the Scouts are less a commercial organization than the Jaycees.

We shall see: In a case that has climbed the ladder of litigation to the Supreme Court, a homosexual who has been denied the right to be a Boy Scout leader is claiming that the Scouts are a "public accommodation" covered by a California law banning sex discrimination.

The Court suggested that not even the Kiwanis Club is as vulnerable as the Jaycees to state anti-discrimination laws. So the class of organizations affected by the ruling in the Jaycees case may be small. Persons who believe that the garden of life will only bloom sweetly when there is no sex discrimination, anywhere, may want to send the Court a small nosegay. But hold the roses.

ART BUCHWALD Remember, bottom line comes first

Iwent to my favorite haberdashery in Boston, Efrim Weinreb & Son, and was surprised to see a new sign over the store — Roger Weinreb & Father.

When I walked in I found Efrim back in the stockroom rearranging boxes.

"I see you changed the name of the store."

"I didn't change it. My son Roger did," he replied. "He's now president of the company."

"Roger?" I said. "But I just went to his graduation at the Harvard Business School in 1980. I remember how proud you were when he got his MBA. You told him you were going to make him a full partner, but I had no idea you were going to appoint him president."

"Frankly, neither did I. Roger started out in the mailroom, and then worked himself up to underwear and socks. After two weeks he became restless so I made him vice president of merchandising. Before I knew it, he put in a whole new computer system, renovated all three floors, added a ladies' line, and found a way of earning 13 percent interest over the weekend on our cash flow by paying our suppliers through a bank in Hong Kong. Roger said the one thing he learned at Harvard was you either expand or die."

"How old is Roger?" I asked. "He's 28. He came to me about eight months ago and said he felt he wasn't moving fast enough up the ladder. He told me most of the kids who graduated in his class were already chief executives of their companies and he didn't want to wait until he was 32 years old before he reached the top."

"Did you point out you were only 49 years old?" I asked. "I did mention it, and he said, 'No wonder you're burned out. Maybe it would be a good time to slow down, and hand the torch to the yuppies who have the management skills that are required to deal with the future.'"

"Young Harvard MBA's don't mince words," I said. "Did you tell him this business was your whole life, and your dream had always been for you and Roger to work as a team?"

"Yes, and he said from a family standpoint he understood it, but as an executive of a corporation he had to think of the stockholders first."

"What stockholders? I thought you owned the store."

"I forgot to tell you. Roger took us public last year. He told me it was the only way he could raise enough capital to buy out Brooks Brothers."

"He's trying to buy Brooks Brothers?"

"Either that or Bloomingdale's. I didn't understand the details, except that he plans to use Roger Weinreb as a holding company to threaten takeovers of other companies. His roommate, who is 27, is now an investment banker who specializes in leveraged buyouts, whatever the hell that means."

"Okay, I can understand Roger wanting to get ahead, but why would he change Efrim Weinreb & Son to Roger Weinreb & Father?"

"Roger said if we wanted to be in the big time we had to change our image, and the name Efrim Weinreb was too associated in our customers' minds with the late Seventies. I don't want to be too hard on him though. He worked out a 'Golden Parachute' deal with me before we went public. He said I could stay on at my present salary as a consultant and have an office until I reached 55, providing I didn't work for a competing store."

"Did he say you had to work in the stockroom?"

"No, that was my own choice. It's easier to work back here than to explain to everyone why we changed the name of the store."

"I think Roger's an ingrate."

"I don't blame him and I don't blame Harvard. I understand the first thing they teach you at any top business school is that if you have to choose between net profits and your own flesh and blood, you go for the bottom line."

BILL MODISETT

It's mistake for writers to mix fact, fiction

Fact.

Fiction. Those are two different worlds and their boundaries should never be erased. But they have been in recent years — and that's disastrous, for me, as a journalist, and you, as a reader.

The most recent revelation came in the revelation that Alastair Reid, a writer for The New Yorker magazine, created composite characters in previous writings, had rearranged scenes and fabricated dialogue.

Mr. Reid's editor, William Shawn, defended the writer, saying Reid's use of composite characters and fabrications was an "honest mistake." Shawn's correct about one thing: Reid's transgressions were a mistake.

I don't know how you feel about writers taking liberties with facts. We in the newspaper business like to think we know how our readers feel, but we don't.

Letters we receive from readers give us a good indication; that's why we encourage letters to the editor on various topics. But we receive only a sprinkling of opinion when one considers the volume of letters we receive, compared to Midland's population.

Mr. Reid's actions, thus, may not be a major offense to you. Or they may have been even more damaging than I believe they were. I'll probably never know.

They weren't the first occasion a writer has gone out with the intention of "creating" a story that will reveal reality. In 1981 Janet Cooke, then a writer for The Washington Post, wrote a story detailing the existence of an 8-year-old heroin addict. She actually won a Pulitzer Prize before the truth emerged.

So, as you can see, the public — and even other journalists — can be fooled by writing passed off as truthful. Those aren't the only rascals, either; there have been others who've taken liberties with the truth.

There are, of course, all sorts of reasons given for such conduct: The changes make the stories much more "realistic" and "believable." Or they provide that extra bit of "oomph" that the reality didn't have. Or changes were made to protect a source.

Some of those explanations are understandable, even acceptable — but only when you, the reader, is made fully aware of what was omitted or altered and why that step was taken. Otherwise we journalists are not being truthful and what you, as a reader, are receiving is not what you assume.

Today there's plenty of opportunity for people to obtain any information they want, colored any way. There are movies, novels, television. We can obtain all the fiction, all the hypothesizing we want and can afford.

Truth is at a premium. But it's still essential and it should not be compromised by journalists for we hold in our hands the very capability for the free world to gain the information it needs to make intelligent judgments.

In that respect, the actions of writers such as Reid and Cooke are reprehensible. There is no excuse acceptable for altering facts to give the public.

Truth may not be as pretty or as exciting as the fictionalized fodder peddled by these unscrupulous journalists, but it is the best commodity we can supply.

SPEAKING OUT

By RAY L. UNTERBRINK

Ray L. Unterbrink has been executive director of the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens since June 1983. He came to Midland from Springfield, Ill. Unterbrink holds a master's degree in social work from Washington University in St. Louis, Mo.

As an advocate for citizens with retardation, I am acutely aware of how many in our society perceive retarded people as perpetual children — helpless, non-functioning, and non-contributing members. These myths about retardation tend to create stereotype images which often become self-fulfilling prophecies.

Too frequently, even those of us who work in the field, emphasize "cute" children with retardation who are appealing, huggable, and innocent in our efforts to create public awareness and solicit funds for services. By celebrating retarded children and ignoring retarded adults, we are, however, creating the idea that the only socially acceptable status for retarded citizens is to remain childlike throughout their lives.

Treating all retarded people as children is tragic to the disabled person and to society. First, retarded children are not encouraged to believe that handicapped people can and do function in society as useful adults. Secondly, the children receive little push to move toward adult independence which includes pulling their own weight on a job, living in a house or apartment under their own supervision, and being responsible for their own behavior. They grow up expecting to continue as "objects of charity" and depending upon others to compensate for their weaknesses and supervise their behavior.

Even the way in which intelligence has traditionally been measured gives rise to the concept of "adult children." Scores on I.Q. tests are compared with developmental phases achieved during the process of maturation. A 31-year-old man, for example, may have similar test results as a 4-year-old normal child and, therefore, be described as functioning as a 4-year-old. There are basic erroneous assumptions in this method of measuring intelligence. For example, implicit in this method of measuring intelligence are certain assumptions:

- 1) Intelligence, as defined by tests, is permanent.
- 2) Tested intelligence is sufficiently general to describe all functioning and potential. And,
- 3) It is meaningful to catalogue individuals according to tested intelligence and tested adaptive level.

A more modern and progressive perception of mental retardation is to view the condition as requiring from society above-average training procedures for the individual. The mentally retarded person is characterized by the level of resource needed in this training process and not by perceived limitations of his learning ability. There are also assumptions in the new way of viewing persons with retardation, too:

- 1) Retardation is not a general phenomenon.
- 2) Intelligence, as defined by tests, is of little use.
- 3) No behavior clearly defines potential.

4) Development is lifelong.

5) We should train, not test. Handicapped citizens are as fully citizens as those of us who are temporarily able-bodied. Mentally retarded citizens are capable of and quite often do function in society as useful adults. Disabled people should be perceived in the light of what they are able to achieve given the resources they need rather than by what they appear unable to do.

The Midland Association for Retarded Citizens has opened an Apartment Living Program which, while still in its infancy, encourages us to believe that with proper training, orientation and support, this concept of residential care can be expanded to provide opportunities for adults with mental retardation to live quite normally in homes not much different from what we would find in any Midland neighborhood. For example, our first five apartment residents have been able to pay costs of maintaining themselves, pay for food, rent, transportation, etc., from income they generate on their own behalf and still manage to save a little. That's laudable! Particularly laudable when we consider that a few short years ago these same people might have been housed in an institutional setting and provided a lifetime of care in a facility that costs taxpayers upward of $25,000 per year per person.

Not every retarded person will be able to do as well as our first residents. Some will continue to require very structured care in quite expensive resources — and at taxpayer expense. It isn't yet possible to provide a completely normalized environment for all mentally retarded citizens. Some are just too profoundly retarded, medically fragile or multiply handicapped to take advantage of open community life. We need to protect these individuals and safeguard their welfare while at the same time opening new opportunities for the vast majority of people with mental retardation who are able to assume adult roles and responsibilities and who are quite capable of becoming integral parts in the mainstream of community life.

With a little support and understanding, the myths about mental retardation will crumble and fall apart.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

Lancaster House should be saved for history

Some argue that the Lancaster House is not a historical structure, so why save it. Maybe not yet, but if we don't start somewhere there will never be a history to show in our community. Just as the Hill House remains as part of our past, so should the Lancaster House. Let this show of the past be presented as a gift to the children of Midland so that Naomi Lancaster will continue to live in their hearts as she does in those who knew and loved "the Lady of the Arts."

We plead to you, the community, to rally together and show your support. We are in a critical time limit and need your help. Please contribute your time or donations to help save the Lancaster House. There will be a rally at Haley Park on July 10th at 7:30 p.m. and a barbecue on July 24th at 7:30 p.m. at Haley Park. We urge everyone to attend and support these events.

What is next step in Smith's master plan?

I read with great amusement the highlighted "Readers' views on: Dallas Smith" of July 1. I wondered aloud what the next step would be in Mr. Smith's obviously well thought out plan for a write-in campaign for sheriff. I didn't have to wait long. Lo and behold, a slander suit of all things! How innovative! What a trend-setter Mr. Smith is. How interesting it will be when slander suits start being filed at the state and national political level! We could pay off the national debt!

I, myself, am getting a gut-full of these childish antics schemed up from the basement of the courthouse. How the Republican party can put up with such behavior from an office holder who professes to be a Republican is beyond me. If I didn't know better, I'd think I was living in Odessa, where controversial politics seems to be the way of life. I honestly believe Mr. Smith has missed his calling — a door-to-door sales oriented career might be more in order, as he apparently does not understand the meaning of the word "No," as several thousand voters told him last May.

This asinine suit against our chief of police can only confirm what the Republican nominee and Democratic nominee for sheriff stated as one of the many issues unanswered by Mr. Smith — cooperation is nonexistent between the two agencies. And it is obvious where (or who) the problem is, and indicates a change was needed.

I also found it interesting that we have been introduced to the "legalese" term "amended pleading." Do I detect a subtle warning from Mr. Smith? Am I to withhold my right to submit this letter because of any fears that I have of also being unnecessarily sued? One would think that such a seasoned politician would have answered both stated and rumored allegations before election day than after.

One cannot help but wonder what is the next step in the master plan to "right the great wrong" of Mr. Smith's political downfall. First, it's a telephone survey asking voters why Mr. Smith lost the election. A survey company that obviously blew it before the election, and now having lost their credibility, trying to "save face," then its letters to the editor from an employee and former co-worker shaming the voting majority for permitting such an injustice. And now, but certainly not finally, the old "Sue the —" trick.

One cannot help but wonder just what the next five months holds in store for us. More letters to the editor from deputies that have been coerced to write letters for job security? Letters from grateful deputies recently promoted to positions of authority vacated by the recent demotions of G.W. Thompson and W.P. Fuller? Letters from other members of the elite political machine? A radical uniform change for uniformed deputies? An undercover operation resulting in multiple arrests and massive newspaper coverage? More unfounded "man bites dog" investigations into the Midland Police Department? Spare us the suspense.

The whole scenario smells of a cheap soap opera. Stay tuned for the exciting conclusion — if you can stand it that long.

Story 'obscure' about Soviet soldier defecting

On Page 11D of the June 28 edition of the paper, you carried a very obscure four-paragraph article on the bottom of the page, a report given first-hand from a Soviet defector who had defected from the Soviet Army, stating that he participated in, and saw first-hand, a massacre of 100 to 200 people in a village in Afghanistan.

I can recall when it was front-page, 2-inch headlines daily and the first item on national television news when a U.S. soldier may have accidentally killed one or two Vietnamese who may or may not have been in the North Vietnamese Army.

Doctor says comments falsely interpreted

I wish to clarify a portion of an article in the June 17 edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram entitled "Frozen Doctors' Fees' Don't Cool 'Hot to Sue' Issue."

The two paragraphs referring to the ECFMG certification of foreign trained physicians were placed entirely out of context in the interview. As such, the comments with the two paragraphs may have been falsely interpreted or may have been inaccurately presumed to refer to such physicians in the Midland area.

To my knowledge all physicians, both domestic and foreign trained, who are practicing in Midland County are fully and accurately credentialed for the practice of Medicine.

An unrelated statement placed in the paragraph immediately following these two paragraphs was issued as a concluding remark to the entire interview and did not refer in any way to physicians' certification.

Viewers not alerted to removal of WGN

There they go again.

The Chicago Cubs, parent team of the Midland Cubs, can no longer be seen on cable television in Midland, Texas. Times Mirror Cable TV chose to drop WGN in favor of WTBS. No effort was made before hand to alert the citizens of Midland that such a decision was to be made. Instead a "telephone survey" was conducted. It is not known how many people were called or how they were selected. It is an unfortunate fact that WTBS, due to the high profile of its owner, immediately comes to mind when talking about superstitions.

So now the Cubs and Roger Ebert and Gene Siskel and others that add up to quality programming are out. All that can be asked is that Times Mirror reconsider its mistake and put WGN back on the air. The Chicago Cubs, Midland Cubs and residents of Midland deserve better consideration than this incident has shown.

It's amazing WGN dropped for WTBS

Some friends and I were wondering just whose brilliance shone on the decision to drop Chicago's station WGN in favor of Ted Turner's WTBS. In being further amazed, we were wondering why the consumer, the viewer, the subscriber, the payer of the bills weren't petitioned as to their preferences.

We send our payments off to another state out west somewhere, Arizona I think, so why should some person remote and indifferent to our wants determine what the majority in one of its outlets watch? In modern times a vote would have been put to the people.

We have a Chicago Cub baseball franchise here. Our Midland Cubs are in trouble and, in dire need of our moral support and really this bad decision doesn't help their cause at all.

Isn't it about time the subscriber had a little say in what's best for them and not some person indifferent to our likes and dislikes?

accident in recent months at the intersection of Mariefeld and Michigan Streets. In my opinion, measures must be taken to make this interchange safe before someone is seriously injured or killed.

Although a traffic light may not be a feasible alternative, the installation of signs prohibiting parking on both streets for a distance of one block on either side of this intersection would improve visibility and possibly decrease the number of vehicular alterations.

A copy of this letter is also being sent to Mr. Fred McGary of the City Traffic Department. I am hopeful that action will be taken to make this dangerous intersection more safe for everyone.

House 'rocked' when cable lost Cubs game

"Holy cow," we lost the Chicago Cubs and what a way to lose them. Saturday evening about the seventh inning, the Cubs and Dodgers got a hot going game and suddenly it's gone. Well I want to tell you, the foundations rocked in this house.

What's going to happen next in this world of television and cables?

Reagan cautions Jackson, keeps heat on U.S.S.R.

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH

HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Our mid-week Independence Day holiday saw all Americans celebrating, most with their families and I was no exception. The 208th commemoration of our Declaration of Independence pushed most news to the back burner, so to speak. Like many fellow Americans, we were blessed with the arrival of our grandchildren, five-year-old Willie and his little sister, Adelaide Apperson Hearst, who became a year old on the Fourth of July. So I'd like to be excused if this week's report is not its usual length.

Yet I'd be remiss if I didn't note some newsworthy events that require attention. President Reagan, for instance, questioned the legality of the Rev. Jesse Jackson's personal diplomacy in Central America and his proposed venture to the Soviet Union to try to obtain the release of Nobel laureate physicist Andrei K. Sakharov and the dissident's ailing wife, Yelena Bonner. The couple has been exiled to the city of Gorky, far from Moscow where the KGB maintains round-the-clock vigil on them.

This Dr. Sakharov enforced exile would be the equivalent of someone being kept under police guard in New York or San Francisco without being able to travel outside the city.

President Reagan cautioned Jackson, who insists that he is still in the running for the Democratic nomination for president, that highly sensitive diplomatic talks about the Sakharovs are current "in quiet diplomatic channels." Therefore, anything Jackson might try could "ignore" those negotiations and jeopardize them, the president asserted.

The president's remarks to three regional Florida broadcasting stations for the Fourth of July also observed that Jackson may have violated the 185-year-old Logan Act, forbidding unauthorized negotiations by private citizens with foreign governments. This could be especially applicable to Jackson's meetings with Fidel Castro in Cuba where he obtained the release of 22 American citizens held on drug charges and 26 Cuban political prisoners.

The Logan Act has rarely been invoked but Jackson's pursuit of personal diplomacy aroused anger of both parties in the Congress which, with the president, conducts foreign policy. Jackson's actions in Marxist-run Nicaragua, as well as Cuba, totally ignored the dictatorships the regimes conduct on Moscow time.

Asked if any legal action was intended against Jackson, the president replied: "No, we're not going to take any legal action. But I do feel that while in this instance he was successful, there were things that make you pause and think."

In his comments President Reagan cited, for instance, that Castro released only one political prisoner on Jackson's own list. The Castro response, observed the president, hardly involved "humanitarianism" which Jackson attributed to the Cuban dictator.

Although the president refused to be drawn into the issue, his immediate aide led by Secretary of State Shultz berated Jackson for criticizing U.S. policies on foreign soil in Cuba and Nicaragua. Neither the president nor Secretary Shultz received him when Jackson returned to Washington.

In other episodes of note, the Reagan administration kept the heat on the U.S.S.R., agreeing quickly to no pre-conditions for talks on space.

The swift response to the answers to the Soviet notes came personally from President Reagan which non-plussed Moscow by the speed and dexterity of reply.

The Soviets keep on trying to stiff-arm the talks which they originally asked to be held in Vienna this autumn. Each time they set up a roadblock, the president without rancor, demolishes it. Then, they're trying to be nasty. On the streets of Moscow, their police arrested two fully-accredited American diplomats who were talking to a local lady. Our diplomats weren't permitted to contact the U.S. Embassy for several hours before being released. They have been active in monitoring the Soviet record on human rights and were among the last foreigners to see Dr. Sakharov's wife before she forcibly joined in the exile.

Of the diplomats' arrests, President Reagan declared: "It was rude and unnecessary." The Soviets are trying to keep pressure on at this point, to see if we'll reject the Vienna talks which they airily believed we would refuse out-of-hand.

And in this pre-convention season, President Reagan has been traveling around the country, drawing huge crowds as he makes personal appeals to rank-and-file trade union members. The Democrats obtained an early AFL-CIO endorsement from the leadership but members four years ago gave President Reagan a sizable share of national support. He aims to outflank the Democrats again by personal appeal and the response shows he is making headway as the Democrats continue intramural warfare. Three distinguished national polls at this point show President Reagan leading his Democratic competitor by 15 to 19 percent.

Classroom big as all outdoors

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

There's an outdoor classroom especially designed by nature to teach observers the intricacies and interworkings of wildlife and conservation.

It's full of life. Bi-wing dragonflies skim the surface of the playa, lay eggs and dart off. Others link up in pairs and fly in perfect harmony. They mate in midair.

Leopard frogs leap into the safety of the pond, as bipeds — curious humans — encroach on their habitat.

A predator water beetle swims amid minnows and toads in searching for food and "eats any meat he can get his hands on," noted Burr Williams, research horticulturist and biped.

Great-tailed grackles light near the pond. Red-wing blackbirds fly into the forest of cattails which rise from the marshes about the pond.

Turtles and water snakes make themselves at home on a hot summer day in the coolness of the waters and the familiarity of the mud and decaying matter at the bottom of the playa.

Apart from the pond and cattails, there's another forest — a growth of mesquite and so much life that most anyone outside of a biologist would be amazed.

THE SETTING is a 48-acre patch of wilderness in Hogan Park called the Midland Outdoor Learning Center.

It's a development of the Midland County Soil and Water Conservation District and is an environmental "classroom" set aside expressly as a laboratory to complement the academic work of students and to tempt the curiosity of the general citizenry.

"Our basic concern is that kids are growing up without any kind of resource conservation or very little knowledge of resource conservation," said Dick Hagelstein, district conservationist for the U.S. Soil Conservation Service (SCS) in Midland County.

Hagelstein is concerned that, as the population expands, the interest in preserving resources, such as the soil and wildlife, will diminish further unless young people are made aware of the balance of nature, how it works, and the impact on them and the environment when that balance is thrown out of kilter.

"We've got to teach them conservation of our environmental resources or," cautioned Hagelstein, "we're going to be in big trouble...from the environmental standpoint."

The center was initiated in 1979, when the district leased the 48 acres from the city of Midland and set it aside as a laboratory.

Since then, thousands of youths and adults have ventured into the in-town "wilderness" in search of "what's going on" in the patch. Oftentimes, youngsters' incentive to study the fauna and flora is goaded by teachers and gradebooks.

"WE'VE PUT A good deal of time into getting it going," J.D. Crawford, a farmer and rancher who's involved in conservation, said of the Outdoor Learning Center. He is on the board of the Soil and Water Conservation District. "We're thrilled."

Last school year, approximately 5,000 students toured the center.

"We're trying to raise young people's consciousness of the necessity for conservation and to perpetuate what we've been trying to do for 25 years."

The two-fold objectives of the center are:

Ron Japp/Reporter-Telegram

To expose people to nature in a balanced state and to the many life forms in this semi-arid region of West Texas, and

To teach those same people the importance of conservation, the preservation of soil and to keep it from blowing by using good cover crops and grasses and to perpetuate this fertile resource for generations to come.

"We're hoping to get the whole community to use it because of conservation consciousness," Crawford said. "We've got to be good stewards of what God has given us."

City may be liable for paralyzed man's medical bills

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

The city could find itself liable for the medical bills of a man who remains paralyzed from the neck down as a result of what police say were self-inflicted injuries suffered in the city jail two months ago.

The city already has paid a $375 bill submitted by Midland neurosurgeon William L. McGavran III for his treatment of 33-year-old Juan Rodriguez, who was transferred to John Sealy Hospital in Galveston on May 11.

Rodriguez, a Big Spring father of three whose 28-year-old wife Priscilla is expecting their fourth child next month, suffered a broken neck in the jail May 9.

He had been arrested for public intoxication at an eastside grocery store about 2 p.m. that day and was found lying face down in his jail cell shortly before 6 p.m., according to police.

Rodriguez underwent surgery at Midland Memorial Hospital, then was flown to Galveston.

Hospital records show he suffered a fractured neck and extensive head lacerations. Doctors, according to family members, have said he may regain the use of his arms but will never walk again.

Rodriguez' mother-in-law, Yolanda Juarez of Big Spring, says she visited him at MMH on the afternoon of May 10.

"He was real bad. He had two large cuts running back across the top of his head, a cut to his right eye, a cut on his chin, bruises all over his face and a large bruise to his throat."

Mrs. Juarez said she was unable to talk to Rodriguez at MMH but later talked to him by telephone in Galveston: "A doctor held the phone for him and Juan said, 'Mother-in-law, the officers beat me.'"

"That's all he said. He couldn't say any more because I think he was crying. The doctor said it would take years to even move his hands."

Mrs. Juarez said when she asked the police what happened, they told her he "beat himself up. I said no, because there was too much for him to have done it to himself."

"I am angry because they won't tell me the truth. If those officers didn't beat Juan, why did the city pay the bill?"

Mrs. Juarez said the family has contacted a San Angelo lawyer about the case but doesn't have the money to pay his fee. She also said the family has no insurance and can't afford to pay what could amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars in medical expenses — especially if Rodriguez has to spend the rest of his life in a nursing home.

Police say they initially placed Rodriguez in a cell with other inmates, but later transferred him to a cell by himself after he created a disturbance.

Police records indicate a jailer discovered Rodriguez lying unconscious near the front of his cell at 5:37 p.m.

"There was blood on the bars and spattered out into the walkway outside the cell," said Sgt. Tom Hyde, who is conducting an internal affairs investigation of the matter.

Police were unable to question Rodriguez because of his condition, according to Hyde, but later learned from Drs. McGavran and J.J. Waller — who treated Rodriguez at MMH — that he told them he had caused his own injuries by beating his head against the bars "because he was angry."

McGavran declined comment and Waller could not be located for verification. Hyde said other inmates weren't in a position to see what happened to Rodriguez.

Not all the injuries Rodriguez' mother-in-law saw came from the jail incident, according to one of his friends and the clerk at the store where he was arrested — Al's Drive-In Grocery at 411 N. Mineola.

A store clerk who asked not to be named said Rodriguez came in about 1:30 p.m. and asked her to call the police.

"He appeared to be drunk and wouldn't say why he wanted the police. He wasn't wearing a shirt or shoes and had dried blood on his face and one hand. He also had bruises on his throat, like someone had grabbed him."

Andres Caraveo, a friend of Rodriguez', lived about six blocks from the store at the time and said Rodriguez had stayed with him for a day or two prior to his arrest.

"The night before," said Caraveo, "he started acting crazy. He was seeing ghosts and said he saw his mother standing at the window. She's dead. He thought some guys were coming to get him with a gun."

"He had been in a fight with two or three men in Big Spring about two days earlier. My son took him to the doctor and he had stitches on his nose and scratches on his face. I didn't notice any bruises on his throat, though."

Crimes against persons up, other crimes down, figures show

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

Crime statistics compiled by the Midland Police Department show 14 more sexual assaults reported during the first six months of 1984 than the same period last year.

Odessa Police Department stats show an equal number of sexual assaults (including sexual assault and aggravated sexual assault) reported there — 15 over the first six months of each of the last two years.

The Midland increase was 29 at the halfway point of 1984 compared to 15 last year.

Non-sexual aggravated assault was up in both cities, according to police department figures.

"I don't know why assaults are up," said Midland Police Capt. Billy Ray.

"I think any year you're going to have that kind of an increase or decrease, said Ray. "It doesn't mean any kind of trend."

Nan Gordon, Director of the Midland Rape Crisis Center, said she felt increased awareness by the public probably played a big part in the larger numbers of sexual assault reports.

Ms. Gordon suggested that, while there were more reported, the number committed was probably similar to past years.

While these crimes against persons were up in 1984, other major categories showed decreases.

A reduction in homicide, robbery and burglary was reported in both cities.

One fewer than the six homicides reported in Midland through June 1983 were reported by the midway point of this year, while Odessa showed a larger decrease — from 13 to 5.

Robbery reports dropped in Midland from 40 last year to 26 in 1984, while Odessa went from 124 last year to 47 over the first six months of this year.

Reports of burglaries were also down in both cities. Midland dropped from 1,150 through June 1983 to 1,109 at the halfway point of this year. Again, Odessa experienced a larger decrease — from 1,213 during the first six months of 1983 to 851 at the same point this year.

Ray attributed the decreases in burglaries to the popularity of groups, such as Neighborhood Watch and Neighbors against Burglaries and Drugs, which promote awareness and involvement of residents.

By responding to a call from a homeowner, Ray said "We can send an officer out there and nip it in the bud."

"The neighborhoods are getting involved," said Ray. "The attitude years ago was I don't want to get involved." Local police also recorded 56 fewer cases of criminal mischief in 1984's first six months as more neighborhood groups were developed.

Odessa Police Lt. Rusty Baker agreed with Ray, while adding "With less crime, officers have more time to investigate and detect crimes."

"Whether you catch anyone or not, just being there prevents a lot of crime," said Baker.

Increased awareness of businesses has also helped law enforcement, said Baker, noting security systems and guards deter people who might otherwise have committed crimes in stores.

Theft was down in both cities. "If a person thinks someone's watching, they're less likely to commit a crime," said Baker.

Complete figures from Odessa were not available in all categories.

Other reported totals for the six-month period from Midland were as follows:

— Seven more cases of forgery than in 1983, hiking the six-month total from last year's 45 to 52 during the same period in 1984.

— 18 fewer cases of auto theft, from 179 in 1983 to 161 in 1984.

— 13 fewer drug law violations, from 96 in 1983 to 83 in 1984.

— 301 more traffic offenses, from 272 in 1983 to 573 in 1984. Much of this increase came in misdemeanor DWI's, of which 238 more were reported in 1984.

Paper reaches out to black communities

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The idea was formed on the patio during a family get together at her grandmother's in April.

Joyce Nelson Nolly, a geological assistant at Superior Oil, was looking for a business to start at home in her spare time. When a cousin suggested a newspaper that would serve the black community, she immediately thought, "That's it."

Since then, the success of the first two issues of Progressive Times has residents of the Permian Basin's black communities eagerly waiting for the next one to roll off the presses.

"What most people find so fascinating about this paper is we don't have any experience at all," Ms. Nolly said, laughing. Although her six cousins who help put out the paper have careers that range from teaching school to psychology to engineering technology, none have been formally trained in journalism.

"Where there's a will, there's a way," Ms. Nolly said. "And I always say nothing worthwhile comes easy."

But the late nights have paid off, she added.

"We try to have things in our paper that you may not see in any other." Inside the pages of the latest 25-cent paper are articles on the top black high school graduates, Spud Webb's recent visit to Midland, a black drama and dance troupe's performance in Odessa and a petition to name Indiana Avenue Martin Luther King Jr. Drive. Also featured was a photo spread of area Emancipation Day activities and a survey through which readers could voice their opinion on a proposed southside Midland housing project.

The banner story of the last issue focused on a reception held June 22 to formally introduce Progressive Times. Guest of honor George McElroy, publisher of the Houston Informer, Houston's black newspaper, spoke on the role and need for the black press.

Regular sections of the paper, which hits the streets every other Friday, include a spotlight on an area church, editorials, sports, entertainment, obituaries, YMCA news, recipes, beauty tips, book reviews, engagements and weddings.

Unique features include a special section for area youth to fill with letters, poems or jokes that was named "Let's Hear it for the Kids" through a contest. Also, a trivia photo or article will be featured in each issue and full-length wedding photos of both the bride and groom will be printed.

"We want to reach everybody," Ms. Nolly, a 1973 graduate of Midland High School, said. "We want to have something for everyone."

The black community too often is ignored by the more established press and media, according to the editor-in-chief. The closest black newspaper of which she is aware is in Lubbock.

Only 300 of some 4,000 black newspapers since 1827 still exist today, according to an article in the June issue of Washington Journalism Review. Most of those are weeklies and biweeklies which serve local communities but some have circulations that range from 20,000 to 72,000, the WJR reports. There are only three black daily papers in operation.

By reading black papers published in Houston, Lubbock, Austin, Dallas and Philadelphia, Ms. Nolly and her assistants garner a broad idea of what topics would be of interest to the local black community. Through an arrangement with the Houston

Residents trying to save mound from developers

DENTON (AP) — In the midst of the fastest growing town in one of the fastest growing counties in the United States, a rounded mound of earth rises 50 feet above the surrounding prairie.

Covered with native prairie grasses and studded with wildflowers, the knoll that lends the town of Flower Mound its name defies the rapid development that once threatened it.

As geological formations go, the mound is not particularly outstanding, but the legends and history associated with the mound have led a group of Flower Mound residents to fight to preserve it. After 10 years work, long-time Flower Mound resident Otto Consovo and others interested in the mound have brought it from private hands into the public domain. They have gathered enough mound history to have a historical marker approved for the site, northeast of the intersection of Farm Roads 2409 and 3040.

Those seeking markers from the Texas Historical Commission bear the burden of proof that a site is indeed historical. The mound group's proposal was accepted and the marker approved for the site in early February, and the marker was set to be delivered within three months. That date has passed, but Consovo is expecting the marker any time.

Consovo, who has lived in Flower Mound 32 years and once owned much of the land in the mound area, said his interest in the formation began years ago, when he and his family used to ride the horses past the hill.

"My wife was a Cherokee Indian, and naturally, it being an Indian mound, she kind-of-like it," he recalled.

Contrary to early legend, the mound is not an Indian burial site, according to a letter to Consovo written by Helen Moore Hasten of Lewisville. Instead, Consovo said, the Wichita Indians used it for worship services.

Never has there been a house or building on the mound, he said, though some people, including some church members, have tried to build

there. "The story is the Indians said nothing should be built on it," he said. "The Presbyterians hauled their logs up there and, lo and behold, that night, the wind blew them away.

Then Uncle Ben Lester (a Flower Mound pioneer) took his ox team and hauled the first load of lumber up to the top for a house and, the story goes, the wind came along and blew it over to the north side. Uncle Ben said "I guess that's where the Lord wants me to build, so that's where I'll build it."

The Lester house burned in the 1920s, but the Presbyterian Church of Flower Mound is several miles down the road on a flat stretch of land.

Local playwright Mary Webb's play "Sweet Flower Land" traces the history of the Flower Mound area and is produced each year using local actors and actresses. Mrs. Webb has immortalized the Indians and settlers who gathered around the mound, as well as the modern Flower Mound settlers.

There are aspects of the mound's history that can never be traced. Consovo said he walked the 12½-acre mound site recently with a geologist, who told him the mound was three million to five million years old. The area was once entirely under water, and creeks formed in the areas the water receded.

"There's a creek over here and one over there," Consovo said, pointing as he walked up the side of the hill. "The mound was so strong it stayed there. The water couldn't go through it. They tell us it will be here from now on."

Consovo and other mound enthusiasts weren't always so sure of that. The mound was purchased as part of the Flower Mound New Town project launched in the early '70s. Edward Marcus and Raymond Nasher of Dallas envisioned a planned community, backed by an $18 million guarantee by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Consovo said he tried to buy the mound at that time, but Marcus wouldn't sell. New Town went under in 1975 and HUD foreclosed on its loans in 1976. HUD sold the mound site and other land to Bellamah Community Development, which in turn sold the mound to Consovo and eight other members of the non-profit Mound Corp. for $10.

"This is the first time this property hasn't been in private hands," Consovo said. "The mound now belongs to the people."

And the people have been treating it well. Since the Mound Corp. bought the land in July 1983, the trustees have fenced the plot and begun a wildflower planting program to restore the mound to its original flowered state.

Edith Bettinger, a trustee of the Mound Corp. who is in charge of the wildflower program, said her goal is to help propagate the flowers and grasses native to the mound, without covering the area with flowers.

The wildflower hobbyist and charter member of the Native Plant Society of Texas and ideas of what the mound should look like vary.

"People have the idea that the mound used to be a veritable garden of flowers, but it's not anymore," Mrs. Bettinger said. "The flowers are beautiful if you get out on it (the mound). If you just drive by in a car, of course they're not."

DEATHS

Hattie Finley

Hattie Finley, 84, of Fort Worth, formerly of Midland, died Friday morning in a Fort Worth hospital after a lengthy illness.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Tuesday at Lee Street Church of Christ. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery directed by Thomas Funeral Home.

Mrs. Finley was born Sept. 27, 1899, in Florence. She lived in Midland for 24 years and was a member of Lee Street Church of Christ. She had lived in Fort Worth for 13 years.

Survivors include two daughters, Elzora Fisher of Florence and Lucille Fisher of Midland; two sons, Odie Maxwell of Waco and Vernon Maxwell of Fort Worth; 14 grandchildren; 21 great-grandchildren; four sisters; and one brother.

Otice Helmer

Services for Otice "Doc" Helmer, 66, of Midland, will be at 11 a.m. Tuesday in Grace Lutheran Church with the Rev. Donald Haffmann, pastor, officiating.

Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park under direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Pallbearers will be John Busley, Jim Pullig, Wilbur Galloway, Hugh Teague, Max Edgar and Bob Hand. Honorary pallbearers will be Joe Luther, Glen Hoelscher, Billy Harris, Bill Chandler, Cliff Caffey and Charlie Cunard. Helmer died June 27 in Rennes, France.

Otice Helmer

He was born Dec. 15, 1917, in Lueders, was graduated from the University of Texas and was retired from Chevron USA Inc.

Helmer was an independent geologist who did consulting work for Bass Enterprises Production Co.

Survivors include his wife, Nita; a son, Dr. Otice Helmer of Fort Worth; two daughters, Deborah Mattingley of Fort Worth and Sibyl Helmer of Midland; three brothers; a sister; and two granddaughters, Charlotte Knorr and Christanne Knorr, both of Fort Worth.

The family has requested that memorials be given to the American Heart Fund.

Stan Meyers

Services for Stan Meyers, 71, of Midland, will be at 11 a.m. Monday at Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Jack Riley, pastor of St. Mark's United Methodist Church, officiating. Graveside services will follow at 5 p.m. at Resthaven Memorial Park in Lubbock, directed by Ellis Funeral Home.

Meyers died Saturday morning after a long illness.

He was born Dec. 1, 1912, in Plainview, where he was reared. He served in the Army Air Force during World War II. He married Ruth Daniel April 12, 1934, in Plainview.

They moved to Midland in 1939, later moving to Austin where they lived for three years before returning to Midland. Meyers was a nurseryman and was associated with Walker's Nursery for 18 years. He retired in 1975. He was a member of St. Mark's United Methodist Church and a past member of the Elks Club. He is survived by his wife.

The family requests memorials be directed to one's favorite charity.

TO ENHANCE the center, the Soil and Water Conservation District is raising funds to build a 10,731-square-foot Learning Center building complete with classroom and laboratory, library, auditorium, courtyard, exhibit area, meeting room for the Council of Garden Clubs, lounge, kitchen, offices and storage space.

So far, the district has raised approximately $150,000 — about half of the money needed — toward funding the building's construction.

"We're counting our money," said Crawford. "We're not going to sacrifice quality."

Students from the private and public schools use the center as a learning resource.

"I feel the center has been a real asset to our program...in getting the kids out and showing them how the environment really is," said Billy Gilbreath, chairman of the Science Department at Midland's Robert E. Lee High School.

Others, such as Scouts, explore the center.

At the outset of any study, the first impression of many visitors to the center is that "there's not anything there," said Gilbreath. But as they set out scientifically to explore the land, they find an abundance of life.

BURR WILLIAMS, who plotted the Outdoor Learning Center's Nature Trail in 1981, cleared the trail by hand that year. Later, the trail was chadged and shored up.

"It's mesquite brush land," the heavily bearded Williams, 29, said of

Williams, a research horticulturist, and Hagelstein, district conservationist for U.S. Soil Conservation Service in Midland County, promote the 49-acre center.

"We planted about 100 or 150 trees out there and got 10 to live," Williams said. "Outside of the hardy mesquite, there's a smattering of cottonwood, elm and salt cedar trees."

What's in the center is not always obvious.

"They (students) look at it and think it's ugly, but if they sit down and look at it closely, it's beautiful," said Williams. "We should treat it with respect just like we do a (more obviously) pretty place."

It's likely that many of the documented 343 species of birds in Midland County have flown into the center. "There's more species of birds in Midland than there are in at least half the states," said Williams, who noted that Midland is on the migratory route of many birds.

There's fodder for all. "There's a zillion different grasshoppers," speculated Williams, and thousands of spiders. "There's plenty of insects, don't worry."

On the edge of the pond, too, are those clusters of towering reeds with furry fruiting spikes.

"Cattails," said Williams, "are good to eat. They taste like potatoes."

Many dormant grasses are waiting for better times — end of the drought — to sprout. But other vegetation, such as the saw-tooth daisy, the night shade, Johnson grass, broom snakeweed, yucca, the blueweed, desert holly, lotebush, Mexican alfalfa and sunflower plants, grace the center.

Skunks savour the taste of the wide- and stout-bodied cicadas, commonly but incorrectly called locusts.

Williams recalled a family of skunks once "digging up cicadas, chewing them up and going to bed" after the meal.

Lizards, skunks, rats and mice, perhaps some roaming coyotes and rabbits, and other four-legged creatures wander into and within the Outdoor Learning Center. It's home, too, for untold numbers of birds and four-, six-, eight- and many-legged crawling, burrowing, flying and slithering critters.

After the center's playa was formed and water from the Wadley Water Field began being pumped into the pond, more and more life forms were attracted to the center because of the availability of water.

"When the population gets overcrowded, the young and the weaker inhabitants start wandering. Most die," noted Williams, "but some find an ideal habitat in which to live."

The Outdoor Learning Center has become such of a haven for many of nature's lesser creatures.

BILLS

The city routinely pays for emergency treatment of prisoners, according to City Manager James Brown, but that doesn't necessarily mean the police are guilty of misconduct.

Brown said the city is considered responsible for the bills because prisoners are in the care, custody and control of the police.

Brown also said he's not certain how far that liability extends — when it comes to expensive, ongoing treatment — and that he's not sure if the city has insurance.

City Attorney Joe Nuessle said the city is insured, but that to his knowledge there's never been a case where continuing hospital treatment or lifelong nursing home care was an issue.

"I think the city has an obligation to take a sick or injured prisoner to the doctor or emergency room," he added. "But I'm not sure if we're legally responsible for even those bills. We just pay them as a matter of course."

Nuessle said a lawyer could make the argument that police were negligent for not putting Rodriguez in a padded cell or in not making more frequent checks on him.

"If a jury agrees, then there probably would be a case of city liability. It's a question of ultimate liability. I see no difference between this and any other damage suit. Anything can happen in a case like this. A jury would have to rule that we were negligent in not seeing to it that he didn't hurt himself."

In addition to the internal affairs probe, Texas Rangers are looking into the incident. "We'll be contacting Mr. Rodriguez to see if he wants to pursue a complaint," Ranger Capt. Maurice Cook said Thursday.

It is not known when the investigations will be completed or if Rodriguez plans on filing a lawsuit.

PAPER

Informer, Progressive Times has access to national news for publication.

With its inception coming during an election year, the paper is devoting much of the news space to political stories, such as features on two black delegates to party conventions from Midland and a column on the importance of voting. Future editorials will deal with the need for Scout troops in black neighborhoods.

Others responsible for the articles and photography are Editor Dorothy Nelson, General Manager R. Curtis Smith, Advertising Manager Roy E. Nelson, Business Manager E. Jean Smith, Circulation Manager M.E. Wright and Production Manager Michael Reed.

The community is encouraged to contact Progressive Times about any event that should be covered. "Whatever's happening in the community," Ms. Nolly said, "we're asking for their help."

The paper is also serving the community by "opening up their understanding and broadening their knowledge," through articles that, for example, deal with the history of Emancipation Day and by printing Abraham Lincoln's proclamation.

Progressive Times, which hits the streets every other Friday, is bringing articles of interest and means of advertising to area black communities.

The paper also helps local small businessmen, many of whom have businesses in their homes, who can't afford other advertising rates or cannot reach potential customers through established methods.

Because it identifies itself as "A Voice in West Texas," the paper is bussed in stacks to area towns such as Big Spring, Kermit and Monahans where it is picked up and distributed by contacts. Many long-distance as well as local phone calls have been received in support of the paper, Ms. Nolly said.

"We even had a lady in Hobbs (N.M.) call wanting the paper," she said. "One guy called and said, 'Whatever y'all do, don't let it go down. I'm looking forward to it because it's needed.'"

"The biggest challenge will probably be financial support from the community because we know they are (spiritually) behind us," Ms. Nolly said. So far, the paper has been published "out of our own pockets," but advertising is picking up.

As the one responsible for naming the paper, Ms. Nolly said, "The name means to me that we're progressing, we're moving ahead. And we wanted to get that out to the community — that we are moving ahead."

Norma Helm Webb

For a city of its size, Midland is extremely cultured. Art is an important part of many Midlander's lives, especially Norma Helm Webb.

As a result of a fifteen year interest, Mrs. Webb is now Director of the Midland Arts Assembly. This developed out of a desire to see an arts council in Midland.

This avid art enthusiast is trying to achieve, through the Arts Assembly, more recognition to the arts in Midland and provide art experiences to all Midlanders.

A program is being established to bring plays, dance, music and other forms of art to various parks in town. This is to make all of the community more aware and comfortable with both visual and performing arts. The Arts Assembly's goal is to make art available to everyone.

A mother of two, Mrs. Webb moved to Midland 15 years ago and has, since then, decided Midland is a great place to raise children. She has also found the education level of the majority of Midlanders to be stimulating.

As a scholar who is working on her second Master's degree, she enjoys the progressive, innovative and giving attitudes of many Midlanders.

While extremely busy with the Midland Arts Assembly, it has not been the only activity of this art lover. She has been involved with Casa de Amigos, Senior Citizens at Midland College, arts and crafts for Mental Health and Retardation, as well as being past president and extremely active in the Midland Arts Association.

Civic responsibilities do not end with art interests. This Dallas native has served as City Chairman of the Arthritis Victory Walk and is active at Fannin Terrace Baptist Church.

Strong beliefs, dedication and action are why Norma Helm Webb makes a difference in Midland.

Concerned citizens can rally for Lancaster House

Committees working to find way to save house

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

A "Save the Lancaster House Rally" is planned for 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at Haley Park.

Hosted by the Neighborhood Committee, a group of concerned citizens who want to preserve the Lancaster House, the rally is to pull together those in the community who share that desire.

"I am a lover of old things," says committee member Peggy Fiesler, who has lived catty-corner to the Lancaster House for the past 12 years.

"I come from an old town, St. Paul, Minn., and I believe in utilizing the past for the future. I feel that the Lancaster House can be utilized in some way, not only to preserve the history of Naomi Lancaster, but also to carry out the arts related activities she loved so much."

A 90-day stay of execution was granted for the Lancaster House by the Museum of the Southwest's 22-member board of trustees days before the scheduled June 15 demolition. Since that time, Mrs. Fiesler says, "Committees have been established to work on the different areas that need to be studied."

Those areas include how the Lancaster House can best be used by the museum and the community, what funds it would take to put it in useful condition and how to stir up public interest in preserving the home. The committee hopes to encourage community involvement in the project through planned activities, such as the Tuesday rally and the July 24 barbecue, also set for Haley Park at 7:30 p.m.

"We want people to see the importance of what Naomi Lancaster stood for and the lady herself, how she was such a big influence in the arts in this community."

Built in 1938, the Lancaster House was for many years the seat of cultural activities in Midland.

Mrs. Lancaster, who died in 1974, was instrumental in the formation of the museum, the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Choral, Midland Community Theatre and Midland Arts Association. The house and property were given as a gift to the museum in 1970.

Members of the museum were notified of the board's decision to remove the Lancaster House in a letter mailed to the membership May 25 which announced plans for beginning Phase II of the museum's expansion program. The public announcement of Phase II and the demolition of Lancaster House was made May 30.

Phase II includes plans to provide 10,000 square feet of support space to be used for collection management, exhibition preparation and facilities for educational programs and public meetings in a building addition which will extend out from the Turner House and tearing up and landscaping the block of Indiana Street which divides the museum property.

Reasons given by the board for tearing down the buildings on the Lancaster property, which encompass the house, guest house and water tower, include the inability of the museum to handle the financial obligation on the museum's limited budget and the difficulty of utilizing the rooms as museum space. No new construction is planned on the site of the Lancaster House for a number of years. However, the board said the home needs expensive repairs before it is insurable.

The figure released by the museum on the cost of restoring the house to its original condition is $350,000 minimum, and a matching endowment fund to maintain the property each year. To restore and redesign the house so that it could be utilized as a museum facility the board said would run in the neighborhood of $700,000 and would once again require a matching endowment fund to maintain it properly.

During the June 13 meeting, when the board of trustees voted for the 90-day extension, the board was told by committee spokesman Jody Gilles, "We realize that the board has spent a considerable amount of time and effort in this matter. This group, being a larger body, might be able to bring forth ideas which maybe the board has not considered."

The committee will be looking for volunteers as well as ideas at Tuesday's rally. The informal meeting is designed, Mrs. Fiesler says, "to let people know what we've come up with and the help we need. We want to pull people in who are willing to devote time and energy, whether it be manual labor or donations."

Texas not only state to increase taxes for upgrading education

DALLAS (AP) — Texas is not alone in turning to tax increases to pay for improvements in public education.

Other states passing education reform legislation include California, Florida, Tennessee, Utah, Arkansas, Pennsylvania, and Idaho. Among those, only California and Pennsylvania did not raise taxes to pay for the changes.

The Texas education legislation approved last week includes a $4.6 billion tax package that will increase the state's sales tax by an eighth of a cent.

The legislation includes an increase in auto, auto license, gasoline, cigarette, liquor, corporate franchise, and hotel taxes. It also calls for sales taxes to be expanded for cable television, newspapers, parking, home fertilizer, some computer programs, movies, concerts, dry cleaning, some insurance premiums and a wide range of repair services.

The increased sales tax is the first of its kind in 13 years and the largest in Texas history.

TAX HIKES IN other states include 1-cent per dollar sales tax increases in Tennessee, Idaho and Arkansas, sales tax and corporate franchise tax increases in Utah, and property taxes in Florida.

The Texas legislation sets aside $2.8 billion for a three-year funding plan for poor school districts.

It requires competency tests for all teachers and administrators and establishes a minimum salary of $15,200 a year for beginning teachers and a four-step career ladder for teachers.

The package also bars students from participating in any extra-curricular activities during final exams or at times they are failing course work. Students will be required to take basic skills tests and those who don't pass will not receive diplomas. Students missing more than five classes during a semester will not pass.

Pre-kindergarten programs will have to be provided by school districts for educationally deprived 4-year-olds if more than 15 participants are involved. Class sizes will also be limited for the lower grades.

California approved a first part of a two-step $2.3 billion educational reform package in 1983, the second part of which is pending this summer.

UNLIKE TEXAS, California passed no new taxes to pay for the changes. Instead, the money comes from the state's General Fund.

The California package calls for an increase in entry-level teacher's salaries over a three-year period to $18,000 annually. Incentive pay will be given to those teachers who train new instructors.

School boards will have more power to bring charges against teachers and to dismiss beginning teachers, hire substitutes and ignore seniority in making some transfers.

Tougher graduation requirements for high school seniors will be enforced as will student testing to monitor academic performance.

California has 4.6 million K-12 students, about 250,000 teachers and 1,000 school districts.

PENNSYLVANIA THIS year approved a $30 million education measure, but that money is coming from general revenues rather than a tax increase.

Of the $30 million, $2 million goes to schools for competency tests in math and reading for third, fifth and eighth graders. School districts will be given $24 million for reimbursement for remedial classes for those who fail the tests. Another $4 million will be allotted for teacher training improvements.

Florida last year approved $233 million in higher taxes which included new taxes on property, alcoholic beverages and corporations' out-of-state profits.

Graduation requirements will be standardized for all high schools and grade-point average of 1.5 out of 4 points must be maintained to participate in extra-curricular activities.

A statewide merit pay plan for teachers was also approved. The legislature provided enough money in their $13 billion budget for teacher pay raises but did not specify the amount of the raise.

ANOTHER $67 MILLION in general appropriations was earmarked for school districts to extend the high school day by an extra period.

The Tennessee Legislature approved a 1-cent sales tax increase to finance the school reform legislation earlier this year.

About 38,000 of Tennessee's 46,000 teachers were made eligible for $1,000 career bonuses for tenured teachers. The most experienced teachers now earn about $24,000 a year.

The reform bill requires students to take two years of high school math and science and $9 million has been allotted for computer literacy in junior high schools.

The Utah Legislature this year appropriated $40 million for public education with $25 million going for a 4 percent across-the-board pay raise for teachers and another $15 million earmarked for a career-ladder incentive pay program.

THE NEW education budget totals $811 million, $73 million more than in 1983.

The Legislature recommended no specific reform measures, and left it up to the State Office of Education to decide how the career ladder would be implemented.

The education package, which also included $20 million for higher education, was funded by a variety of tax increases, including an increase in the corporate franchise tax from 4 percent to 5 percent, a half-cent increase in the state sales tax, and an oil and natural gas severance tax increase from 2 percent to 4 percent.

Arkansas lawmakers increased their state's sales tax from 3 cents per dollar to 4 cents to help pay for improvements in education.

The changes, adopted by the State Board of Education this year, include teacher testing, specific teacher-student classroom ratios, more graduation requirements, higher level courses offered, expansion of the school year by three days to 178 days, and a competency test which eighth graders must pass before entering high school.

THE IDAHO Legislature passed a school improvement bill that includes $20.3 million to raise teacher salaries, directs school districts to set up career ladder systems and calls for peer review systems.

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN RATES DROP?

The housing market has taken a radical change. Forty years ago, the mortgage interest rate was basically level. Buyers went from bank to bank trying to obtain a 1/4% interest advantage. Today, we have to live with huge spikes in interest rates which can fluctuate radically each year.

We all know what happens when interest rates skyrocket. Homes are harder to sell, a larger percentage of homebuyers no longer qualify for mortgages. This in turn creates a backlog of buyers waiting for rates to drop. Economists call it "pent-up" demand.

What happens when banks have a surplus of money to lend and interest rates drop? Millions of prospective buyers suddenly surge into the home-buying market. This creates a growing demand for housing. And with growing demand follows a growing price increase.

Some experts predict that the median price for a new house in 1990 will be over $150,000. If you agree, the time to buy is NOW!

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Registration for second summer session Monday

By H.A. TUCK

Registration for Midland College's second summer session is slated for Monday in the physical education building. Hours are from 2-4 p.m. and from 6-8 p.m.

Those who received time permits should come at their assigned times, while those who didn't pre-register should come to the P.E. building at 6 p.m. or soon thereafter to register for credit courses.

Both daytime and evening courses begin on Tuesday. The second term ends Aug. 14.

Quite a number of people build their own houses, but Dr. Weldon Horton is reverting to pioneer ways as he slowly works on a cabin in the Davis Mountains. Horton, director of the Murray Fasken Learning Resource Center, hauled, heaved and tugged rocks into position for the cabin's foundation. The walls will be adobe bricks. He even dug his own water well in the rocky hillside.

Horton, who suffers from allergies, is hoping that no one within miles will plant grass or plants to disturb his retreat from modern landscaping. He admits that it's slow going at times, but enjoys the change from looking after books and audio-visual equipment.

The past two years I've poked a bit of fun at the college's faculty-staff slowpitch softball team. If they continue the way they've been improving, I may have to start bragging on them. After winning a single game in their first season last year, they now have won five games this year and have gotten enough respect they're no longer considered the Rodney Dangerfield team in the league. However, with just three games left on the schedule, they can't reach the break-even plateau — so they have something to strive for next year!

Dr. Eileen Piwetz officially assumed her duties July 1 as interim chairman of the Health Sciences Division, which was created earlier this year. Her appointment is for one year. As chairman of the new division, she will be supervising Associate Degree Nursing, Voca-

MISD employees attend workshop on management

Five Midland Independent School District employees were among 53 public school teachers and administrators from 12 Texas school districts who attended a week-long Classroom Management and Strategy Program workshop.

The program, conducted on the Southwest Texas State University campus in San Marcos, is a cooperative effort of SWT's Institute of Criminal Justice Studies and School of Education. Attending were Sue Peregrine, teacher; Jennifer Cooper, teacher; George Cooper, assistant principal; Leta Cate, teacher; and Phil Peregrine, principal.

Two inmates escape from outside jobs

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Two inmates from the Texas Department of Corrections' Wynne Unit walked away from their jobs Saturday and were still at large Saturday night, a prison spokesman said.

TDC spokesman Charles Brown said the two trustees were working outside the prison when the 3 p.m. escape occurred.

John Marco Civella, 32, serving seven years for stealing more than $200 from Dallas County, had been at Wynne since March 1983, Brown said. The tall, lanky inmate is covered with tattoos including the words "Lobo" and "Ghost Rider," he said.

tional Nursing, Respiratory Therapy, Fire Technology, Child Care and Development, and a new program in Radiologic Technology that is to start in August, 1985.

Prior to the appointment she had been teaching in the Associate Degree Nursing program and will continue to teach a few courses in that area.

Next spring she will be involved with equipment and physical transfer of the various programs into the under-construction Health Sciences Building.

By the way, Fire Technology is included in the division because that program includes the Emergency Medical Technician and Paramedic training programs for local firemen.

Computer courses that MC has been offering the past few weeks for elementary and junior high youngsters have been going extremely well. Young people are growing up with an easy acceptance of computers and an eagerness to learn how to operate them. They are not hampered by fear and resistance to change that many adults show.

In fact, the biggest problem has been too many potential students for the available time and equipment. That is true not just for the youngsters but for all the computer courses offered by the college.

On a personal note — I've just concluded teaching my Community Service Department camera course for the summer. I think I speak for all the people who teach these non-credit "short courses" when I say that this is an enjoyable way to share knowledge and meet new people.

I always look forward to the next class of students, who range from teenagers to senior citizens. The students also seem to make new friends during the class — a fringe benefit that's not listed among the course descriptions.

If you would like to enjoy some of these benefits, just check out the list of hundreds of adult education courses offered each year by MC. You can gain lots of new skills, meet new people and the cost is most reasonable.

When you're looking for effective protection against hot summer suns, or relief remedies for the after-effects of too much exposure to strong rays, come to SERVICE DRUG OF MIDLAND, A & SCHARBAUER (682-2519). Hours are Mon-Sat. 8-7. Visa and MasterCard accepted.

If anyone should be familiar with the strength of the sun at the beach and its effects on the skin, it is a lifeguard. When you see one at the beach with a white cream on his nose and lips, you may not know what it is but you suspect it must be good. Your suspicions are correct. Generally, that white cream is titanium dioxide. This ointment, when combined with an opaque substance such as red veterinary petroleum, blocks the sun's rays. What is more, unlike most other sun-blocking preparations, it will stay on the skin even after swimming. Another related compound, with much the same effect, available at most pharmacies, is zinc oxide.

HINT:

In the event that the sun does burn your skin, apply benzocaine or a commercial product that contains it to relieve the pain.

Texas not only state to increase taxes for upgrading education

DALLAS (AP) — Texas is not alone in turning to tax increases to pay for improvements in public education.

Other states passing education reform legislation include California, Florida, Tennessee, Utah, Arkansas, Pennsylvania, and Idaho. Among those, only California and Pennsylvania did not raise taxes to pay for the changes.

The Texas education legislation approved last week includes a $4.6 billion tax package that will increase the state's sales tax by an eighth of a cent.

The legislation includes an increase in auto, auto license, gasoline, cigarette, liquor, corporate franchise, and hotel taxes. It also calls for sales taxes to be expanded for cable television, newspapers, parking, home fertilizer, some computer programs, movies, concerts, dry cleaning, some insurance premiums and a wide range of repair services.

The increased sales tax is the first of its kind in 13 years and the largest in Texas history.

TAX HIKES IN other states include 1-cent per dollar sales tax increases in Tennessee, Idaho and Arkansas, sales tax and corporate franchise tax increases in Utah, and property taxes in Florida.

The Texas legislation sets aside $2.8 billion for a three-year funding plan for poor school districts.

It requires competency tests for all teachers and administrators and establishes a minimum salary of $15,200 a year for beginning teachers and a four-step career ladder for teachers.

The package also bars students from participating in any extra-curricular activities during final exams or at times they are failing course work. Students will be required to take basic skills tests and those who don't pass will not receive diplomas. Students missing more than five classes during a semester will not pass.

Pre-kindergarten programs will have to be provided by school districts for educationally deprived 4-year-olds if more than 15 participants are involved. Class sizes will also be limited for the lower grades.

California approved a first part of a two-step $2.3 billion educational reform package in 1983, the second part of which is pending this summer.

UNLIKE TEXAS, California passed no new taxes to pay for the changes. Instead, the money comes from the state's General Fund.

The California package calls for an increase in entry-level teacher's salaries over a three-year period to $18,000 annually. Incentive pay will be given to those teachers who train new instructors.

School boards will have more power to bring charges against teachers and to dismiss beginning teachers, hire substitutes and ignore seniority in making some transfers.

Tougher graduation requirements for high school seniors will be enforced as will student testing to monitor academic performance.

California has 4.6 million K-12 students, about 250,000 teachers and 1,000 school districts.

PENNSYLVANIA THIS year approved a $30 million education measure, but that money is coming from general revenues rather than a tax increase.

Of the $30 million, $2 million goes to schools for competency tests in math and reading for third, fifth and eighth graders. School districts will be given $24 million for reimbursement for remedial classes for those who fail the tests. Another $4 million will be allotted for teacher training improvements.

Florida last year approved $233 million in higher taxes which included new taxes on property, alcoholic beverages and corporations' out-of-state profits.

Graduation requirements will be standardized for all high schools and grade-point average of 1.5 out of 4 points must be maintained to participate in extra-curricular activities.

A statewide merit pay plan for teachers was also approved. The legislature provided enough money in their $13 billion budget for teacher pay raises but did not specify the amount of the raise.

ANOTHER $67 MILLION in general appropriations was earmarked for school districts to extend the high school day by an extra period.

The Tennessee Legislature approved a 1-cent sales tax increase to finance the school reform legislation earlier this year.

About 38,000 of Tennessee's 46,000 teachers were made eligible for $1,000 career bonuses for tenured teachers. The most experienced teachers now earn about $24,000 a year.

The reform bill requires students to take two years of high school math and science and $9 million has been allotted for computer literacy in junior high schools.

The Utah Legislature this year appropriated $40 million for public education with $25 million going for a 4 percent across-the-board pay raise for teachers and another $15 million earmarked for a career-ladder incentive pay program.

THE NEW education budget totals $811 million, $73 million more than in 1983.

The Legislature recommended no specific reform measures, and left it up to the State Office of Education to decide how the career ladder would be implemented.

The education package, which also included $20 million for higher education, was funded by a variety of tax increases, including an increase in the corporate franchise tax from 4 percent to 5 percent, a half-cent increase in the state sales tax, and an oil and natural gas severance tax increase from 2 percent to 4 percent.

Arkansas lawmakers increased their state's sales tax from 3 cents per dollar to 4 cents to help pay for improvements in education.

The changes, adopted by the State Board of Education this year, include teacher testing, specific teacher-student classroom ratios, more graduation requirements, higher level courses offered, expansion of the school year by three days to 178 days, and a competency test which eighth graders must pass before entering high school.

THE IDAHO Legislature passed a school improvement bill that includes $20.3 million to raise teacher salaries, directs school districts to set up career ladder systems and calls for peer review systems.

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN RATES DROP?

The housing market has taken a radical change. Forty years ago, the mortgage interest rate was basically level. Buyers went from bank to bank trying to obtain a 1/4% interest advantage. Today, we have to live with huge spikes in interest rates which can fluctuate radically each year.

We all know what happens when interest rates skyrocket. Homes are harder to sell, a larger percentage of homebuyers no longer qualify for mortgages. This in turn creates a backlog of buyers waiting for rates to drop. Economists call it "pent-up" demand.

What happens when banks have a surplus of money to lend and interest rates drop? Millions of prospective buyers suddenly surge into the home-buying market. This creates a growing demand for housing. And with growing demand follows a growing price increase.

Some experts predict that the median price for a new house in 1990 will be over $150,000. If you agree, the time to buy is NOW!

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Registration for second summer session Monday

By H.A. TUCK

Registration for Midland College's second summer session is slated for Monday in the physical education building. Hours are from 2-4 p.m. and from 6-8 p.m.

Those who received time permits should come at their assigned times, while those who didn't pre-register should come to the P.E. building at 6 p.m. or soon thereafter to register for credit courses.

Both daytime and evening courses begin on Tuesday. The second term ends Aug. 14.

Quite a number of people build their own houses, but Dr. Weldon Horton is reverting to pioneer ways as he slowly works on a cabin in the Davis Mountains. Horton, director of the Murray Fasken Learning Resource Center, hauled, heaved and tugged rocks into position for the cabin's foundation. The walls will be adobe bricks. He even dug his own water well in the rocky hill-side.

Horton, who suffers from allergies, is hoping that no one within miles will plant grass or plants to disturb his retreat from modern landscaping. He admits that it's slow going at times, but enjoys the change from looking after books and audio-visual equipment.

The past two years I've poked a bit of fun at the college's faculty-staff slowpitch softball team. If they continue the way they've been improving, I may have to start bragging on them. After winning a single game in their first season last year, they now have won five games this year and have gotten enough respect they're no longer considered the Rodney Dangerfield team in the league. However, with just three games left on the schedule, they can't reach the break-even plateau — so they have something to strive for next year!

Dr. Eileen Piwetz officially assumed her duties July 1 as interim chairman of the Health Sciences Division, which was created earlier this year. Her appointment is for one year. As chairman of the new division, she will be supervising Associate Degree Nursing, Vocational Nursing, Respiratory Therapy, Fire Technology, Child Care and Development, and a new program in Radiologic Technology that is to start in August, 1985.

Prior to the appointment she had been teaching in the Associate Degree Nursing program and will continue to teach a few courses in that area.

Next spring she will be involved with equipment and physical transfer of the various programs into the under-construction Health Sciences Building.

By the way, Fire Technology is included in the division because that program includes the Emergency Medical Technician and Paramedic training programs for local firemen.

Computer courses that MC has been offering the past few weeks for elementary and junior high youngsters have been going extremely well. Young people are growing up with an easy acceptance of computers and an eagerness to learn how to operate them. They are not hampered by fear and resistance to change that many adults show.

In fact, the biggest problem has been too many potential students for the available time and equipment. That is true not just for the youngsters but for all the computer courses offered by the college.

On a personal note — I've just concluded teaching my Community Service Department camera course for the summer. I think I speak for all the people who teach these non-credit "short courses" when I say that this is an enjoyable way to share knowledge and meet new people. I always look forward to the next class of students, who range from teenagers to senior citizens. MISD employees attend workshop on management

Five Midland Independent School District employees were among 53 public school teachers and administrators from 12 Texas school districts who attended a week-long Classroom Disciplinary Management and Strategy Program workshop.

The program, conducted on the Southwest Texas State University campus in San Marcos, is a cooperative effort of SWT's Institute of Criminal Justice Studies and School of Education. Attending were Sue Peregrine, teacher; Jennifer Cooper, teacher; George Cooper, assistant principal; Leta Cate, teacher; and Phil Peregrine, principal.

Two inmates escape from outside jobs

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Two inmates from the Texas Department of Corrections' Wynne Unit walked away from their jobs Saturday and were still at large Saturday night, a prison spokesman said.

TDC spokesman Charles Brown said the two trustees were working outside the prison when the 3 p.m. escape occurred.

John Marco Civella, 32, serving seven years for stealing more than $200 from Dallas County, had been at Wynne since March 1983, Brown said. The tall, lanky inmate is covered with tattoos including the words "Lobo" and "Ghost Rider," he said.

Cancer panel will hold hearing

From Staff Reports

The West Texas Subcommittee of the Legislative Task Force on Cancer in Texas will have a public hearing in Odessa's Medical Center Hospital auditorium July 19.

The 51-member task force, appointed by Texas House Speaker Gib Lewis in February, has divided into regional groups to consider aspects of the cancer problem that may vary around the state.

In announcing creation of the Legislative Task Force, Lewis called for the citizens' group to identify ways "to dramatically reduce the burden of cancer for Texans." The group is made up of elected officials, representatives of voluntary organizations, state agency officials and citizens from throughout Texas.

An interim report of recommendations from the task force will be submitted to Lewis in September in time for consideration by the next session of the legislature, with a final report of long-range recommendations to follow within a year.

The subcommittees are interested in receiving public input on cancer registry, health education, cancer screening, smoking, insurance coverage, community cancer care, nutrition and cancer, unique regional issues, transportation for care and regional underserved areas.

Jerry R. Walsh of Borger is the chairman of the West Texas subcommittee. Members include Mac O. Boring Jr. and W.D. Noel of Odessa, Margaret Purvis of Midland, Larry K. Fuller of Amarillo, and Travis Johnson, Charles H. Leavell and Dr. William G. McGee of El Paso.

Oral testimony will be limited to a maximum of 10 minutes. If oral testimony is given, providing a typed copy of comments would be helpful. Persons who can only be present to testify at a certain time may call Dr. C.R. Allen at (806) 797-4331 to arrange a time.

The public hearing will be from 10 a.m. to noon and from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. at the hospital, located at 500 W. 4th St. For further information, contact Allen or J.R. Walsh at (806) 274-2161.

Council will hear petition to rename Indiana Avenue

Southside residents who have been trying to get a street in their area renamed will be heard during Tuesday's City Council meeting.

The council begins its meeting at 10 a.m. in City Hall Council Chambers.

A petition signed by southside residents will request the name of Indiana Avenue be changed to Martin Luther King Jr. Drive.

The council also will listen to a request from Energas representatives for a 7.7 percent rate increase. That will average out to a $3.57 per month increase in residential users' bills.

Raising the local hotel-motel tax by one cent, up to 6 cents on the dollar, will be considered. This has been proposed by the city staff in its budget sessions.

Harris Kerr will seek a temporary beer permit for a barbecue-rally at Haley Park on July 24.

The council also will look at amending the city code regarding beer consumption at Hogan Park Softball Complex.

The first public hearing will be at 1:35 p.m. to consider a city-initiated proposal to change the zoning from Agriculture Estate District to IP-1, Industrial Park District, on 16 acres half a mile east of Fairgrounds Road on the north side of U.S. Highway 80.

At 1:40 p.m., Home Savings and Loan Association will ask that the zoning be changed to Amended Planned District for a housing development on lots in Meadowpark Addition located east of North A Street on the north side of Meadowpark Drive.

A permit for an oil and gas well to be located east of Lamesa Road and north of Loop 250 will be discussed.

In other items, the council will consider approving stop signs at Castleford and Polo Parkway, allowing pedestrian crossings at Green Tree Boulevard and Island Avenue and awarding the bid on a scraper and compactor.

Drainage problems in Silkwood Addition will be reviewed.

Breast-fed babies get less protein

Breast-fed infants attain growth rates comparable to formula-fed babies, although they consume less protein and fewer calories, according to research at the Children's Nutrition Research Center in Houston, Texas. By 4 months of age the breast-fed infants consumed about 25 percent fewer calories than formula-fed babies.

AGRICULTURE

Doctor: Farmers' health neglected

MARSHFIELD, Wis. (AP) — What occupation can make you deaf and give you heart disease, lung disease, cancer and bad knees?

The same occupation famous for its fresh air and strenuous outdoor exercise: farming.

There are other hazards too. Don't forget animal diseases, rabies, deadly silo gases and accidents that can lead to lost limbs.

The data dispel the myth that farmers are a happy, healthy group who never get sick and don't have a (health) worry in the world," said Dr. Edward Horvath, who maintains that of all the vocations in America, farming is the most neglected by those whose job it is to improve occupational health and safety.

Horvath is trying to remedy that situation as medical director of the National Farm Medicine Center, which was created in 1981 as part of the Marshfield Clinic and treats nearly 2,000 patients a day. The clinic and the center make up one of the largest medical and research complexes in the nation serving a primarily rural population.

In addition to conducting research, the clinic seeks to bring more attention to the occupational diseases and dangers of farming.

Farmers don't enjoy the protection of state and federal occupational health rules that protect their urban counterparts from hazardous chemicals and cancer-causing agents.

Horvath said a study of 62,000 deaths of Iowa men ages 20 to 64 found 9 percent fewer deaths among farmers than among non-farmers between 1964 to 1970 and 7 percent fewer deaths among farmers than among non-farmers from 1971 to 1978.

But the same study also said farmers are twice as likely to die from work-related incidents as their urban counterparts.

Horvath said the findings showed there were about 32 work-related deaths per 100,000 among farmers in each year of the study, compared to about 15 work-related deaths per 100,000 among city folks.

Treating farmers is more difficult than treating other professionals, Horvath said, because farmers often put their work ahead of their health. They have no large company to depend on for benefits and no insurance that would pay them for missing a work day.

That and farmers' traditional independence mean many don't seek attention until they are very ill, he said. Horvath speculates that more farmers are suffering from illnesses than statistics show.

"The key question is: Are farmers as healthy as they can be?" he said. "It isn't a question of whether they are as healthy as their urban counterparts."

A 1977 National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health study said dairy farmers had a higher risk of bladder cancer than workers in other professions, Horvath said.

A University of Iowa study in 1980 said farmers as a group also had higher instances of prostate, stomach, skin, leukemia and bone cancers than non-farmers.

The study said myeloma, cancer of the bone marrow, is 47 percent more common in farmers than the rest of the population. It also said prostate cancer is 41 percent more prevalent among farmers than city dwellers.

Stomach cancer is 35 percent more common among farmers than the rest of the population, while lymphoma, which is cancer of the lymph glands, is 29 percent more prevalent among farmers, the study said.

The report speculated that farmers' frequent use of pesticides and other chemicals may be the reason they are at high risk for certain forms of cancer.

Farmer's lung, a respiratory ailment caused by inhaling microscopic spores produced by grain and moldy hay, is usually contracted while feeding animals, Horvath said. It can lead to lung disease or death.

Also known as allergic pneumonia, farmer's lung has many of the same symptoms as the common flu or pneumonia. Fever, shortness of breath and coughing plague victims for a few days and then disappear, only to return more severely in subsequent bouts.

Preventive measures include automated feeding of animals, wetting down visible mold so it less likely to become airborne and using a respirator when working around feed and hay.

Still, farmers young and old catch it. And though it can be controlled with drugs, most doctors say retiring from farming is the only sure way of ending bouts of the illness.

Horvath said farmers also have a higher tendency of getting lip and skin cancers because of the amount of time they spend outside. The center suggests specific types of sun-screening lotions for farmers.

The environmental and health benefits from farming, however, serve to cut farmers' chances of getting the most common, deadly form of cancer.

Horvath said the incidence of lung cancer among farmers is markedly lower than that of the rest of society. A 1981 survey of 1,444 farmers found that only about 15 percent smoked cigarettes. That compares to about 33 percent for the rest of the adult white male population.

Not smoking "is more than just a health thing with them. They don't smoke because they don't want to burn down the barn," Horvath said.

EARNEST KIKER

Small tracts shouldn't be overstocked

To own five to ten acres and have a horse for the kids is a dream of many people living in urban environments. Just by observing the number of families living on the outskirts of towns and cities in West Texas, it is apparent to many this dream is a reality.

Why do so many families desire this way of life? Maybe it is the desire for privacy. Maybe it is just the need to return to simpler surroundings and values. Whatever the reason, it is a life style that is desired by many people.

Driving through the outskirts of Midland it becomes apparent that most owners of small five to ten acre tracts have some type of livestock on their land. In most instances it is a horse, while other times it may be calves, sheep or goats being fed by the children or the family for 4-H or vocational agriculture.

Individuals living in this semi-rural environment may have little background in agriculture. The information they obtain in terms of how to care for their stock and land often comes from neighbors who have little more experience than they have. As such, this article will try to address some of the basic problems encountered by these small acreage landowners.

One lesson that is often learned too late is that West Texas land is extremely fragile. This is due primarily to the low amount of rainfall received throughout this area of the state. When managed correctly, West Texas rangeland is capable of supporting grazable stands of grass. The problem occurs when that grass is grazed too heavily.

For example, ranchers in the Trans-Pecos area of Texas run on the average six to 12 head of cattle per section of land. A section is one square mile, or 640 acres. The fact that stocking rates are reported on a section basis instead of a per acre basis tells something about the production potential. Six to 12 head of cattle per section is the same as one cow for every 53 to 106 acres. What this means to a small tract landowner is that his ten acres could support 1/5 to 1/10 of a cow. Since a horse utilizes 1.25 times as much foliage as a cow, ten acres of average West Texas land is capable of supporting approximately one sheep or goat. By looking at those figures, it is now possible to understand how extremely overstocked these five to ten acre tracts are since it is not uncommon to see two to three horses on as little as five acres.

The question now is what does overgrazing do to this land that was purchased at a cost of $1,000 to $2,000 per acre. The short term effects are obvious. All vegetation is destroyed. But, of even more importance are the long range effects. As stated earlier, West Texas rangeland is very fragile. Once the vegetation on a site is destroyed, it may take one to two generations for complete recovery to occur, if at all. Also, by removal of most of the vegetation, the soil surface is now subject to wind erosion. It only takes one spring in West Texas for people to realize that the wind has a strong tendency to blow during that season of the year. Land devoid of protective vegetation can lose tons of soil per acre each year due to wind erosion. Soil in this area of the state is very precious. Every inch lost means a loss in production potential. It also takes hundreds of years for that inch to be replaced. It should also be remembered that the sandier the soil, the more potential there is for wind erosion.

One other major problem is also associated with overgrazing of these small five to ten acre tracts. That problem is poisonous plants. Approximately 100 species of poisonous plants are known to exist in the state of Texas. Of that number, approximately 75 percent occur in the western portion of the state.

Although poisonous plants are generally present to some degree on about all rangeland in West Texas, they reach their greatest densities on land that has been mismanaged. Nature detests emptiness. When mismanagement results in the removal of desirable vegetation such as grass from an area, nature fills that vacuum with other plants. Unfortunately, most of these plants are toxic.

Although most poisonous plants are unpalatable to livestock, they will be consumed if no other vegetation is present, or if the livestock are not receiving a properly balanced diet. Each year many horses on small five to ten acre tracts in West Texas are lost due to ingestion of these toxic plants.

Now we come to the final question. You know you are overstocked with the one horse you have on ten acres. You want to keep that horse, but you do not want to continue to destroy that expensive acreage you paid for. What do you do? The answer is that you need to convert to what might be called a semi-dry lot type of management. Roomy pens need to be constructed for that horse or calf where that animal is kept for most of the time. The remaining acreage is then used for occasional grazing, but primarily for exercise and recreation. In other words, it is important to deny access to the total acreage to the livestock most of the time.

By converting to this semi-dry lot type of management, you will be able to maintain a stand of grass across your acreage that will reduce or eliminate any long term damage to your property. Your feed bill for that horse will not increase, since you really were not obtaining any grazing value for that ten acres anyway. You will also greatly reduce the chances of losing livestock to toxic plants.

This first article is designed as an introduction to a series of articles addressing the subject of land and animal management for small tract landowners. Future articles will address the subjects of weed and brush control, reseeding of abused acreages and animal nutrition and health care. If you have any questions please contact the County Extension Office.

Pollution kills trees in several ways, report says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Air pollution seems to kill trees in several different ways and all pollutants should be reduced to avoid the widespread forest damage now afflicting central Europe, says a new study.

"No single hypothesis can account for the varying patterns of forest destruction observed," said a paper published by the Worldwatch Institute, a Washington-based environmental monitoring and advocacy group.

Pollution "weakens a biological system and makes it more susceptible to harm from natural stresses such as droughts, insect attacks, frost and wind," wrote the author, Sandra Postel.

Tree deaths in different areas may have different immediate causes — high levels of ozone in one place, metals leached from the soil by acid rain and taken into root systems in another, she said.

Thirty-four percent of West Germany's forests are damaged, and the German lumber industry's tree harvest could triple in a few years because of all the dead trees that must be removed, the paper noted.

Air pollution in central Europe, particularly by ozone, is far more severe than it is in North America.

Trees of many species, at high and low altitudes, in all kinds of soils, are affected in Europe, while the damage in the United States so far is visible mostly at high altitudes in the Appalachian Mountains.

Some lawmakers unhappy over way Mattox runs office

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Attorney General Jim Mattox would, as the expression goes, "fight a buzz saw."

The question, of course, is what the fiery attorney general may look like after he finishes the bout.

And it appears that Mattox is tangling with a whole sawmill operation these days.

Some lawmakers, despite the preoccupation with taxes and education in the special session, indicated some unhappiness with Mattox over the operations of his office, and his behavior towards the Legislature.

Mattox announced that he wouldn't be interested in defending the state in a lawsuit against the existing school financing plan, arguing that he didn't think the state could win.

And he announced that he would drop his opposition to the lawsuit overturning the exemption of farm and ranch workers from the worker's compensation law if the Legislature didn't pass legislation to bring most of those workers under the law.

As a former legislator, Mattox must have known that some legislators weren't going to like that and there was some muttering about Mattox's tactics in the legislative chambers.

Mattox has already drawn some attention from legislators, after Speaker Gib Lewis announced he would remove Rep. Betty Denton, D-Waco, from chairing a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee which oversees Mattox's budget.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Bob Bush, D-Sherman, said he felt uncomfortable about Denton heading the Budget and Oversight Subcommittee because Mattox had hired her husband, former Rep. Lane Denton, as a planner for the attorney general's office.

Bush said he was concerned that the situation would create an impression of "impropriety" and that he wanted the situation resolved before Mattox's budget comes up for review for the next budget period.

The budget of the attorney general's office has been a matter of discussion around the Capitol this summer, with Mattox denying reports that he's near the limit on his spending — at least in some areas.

Mattox chastized reporters recently for what he said were inaccurate reports on the budget picture of his agency, saying his budget is in "far better shape" than some other agencies.

He predicted that on Sept. 1, he'll return funds to the State Treasury.

The argument over the budget also produced a scathing letter from Mattox to a local editor, with Mattox charging reporting on his office had been filled with "personal biases, nitwitted conclusions and blatant untruths."

That sort of rhetoric is reminiscent of Comptroller Bob Bullock, who also has become involved in a feud with Mattox.

Bullock, in a letter responding to a request from the attorney general's tax division for assistance in getting additional attorneys, blasted what he charged was poor handling of Mattox of tax cases.

Bullock reported his unhappiness over the situation has led his office to consider taking over the handling of such cases.

Since Mattox took office, he said in the letter, only 12 tax protest cases have been tried in district court, with only two finally resolved. (The 12 cases involve some $18 million in taxes, Bullock reported.)

Nolan Ward, head of the tax division, says that when Mattox took office in January 1983, he took over 106 of the pending 136 cases from the Mark White administration so the problem of a backlog isn't a new one.

Mattox also has managed to get himself crossways with some other state officials, including members of the Railroad Commission, who have been irritated by Mattox ignoring a request that he stay out of proceedings in the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission involving so-called "white gas."

Railroad Commission members say they wanted Mattox to stay out because they have to rule in a similar dispute; an aide to Mattox says Bullock wanted Mattox to intervene.

Mattox is winning some cases, and hasn't been shy about letting folks know about them (among those recent victories being a $1.3 million settlement with Zenith Radio Corp. in the Capitol fire lawsuit).

But all in all, this summer has had a number of political minuses for Mattox, who remains under indictment on a commercial bribery charge (a charge Mattox recently attacked again as "bad and phony").

How Mattox will resolve his difficulties won't be known for a while, but it's certain that even if he could whip a buzz saw, he's not going to be able to do it without being cut up a bit.

Museum home of hungry catfish

By MIKE COCHRAN
The Associated Press

FRITCH — Beneath the water tower and across from the Dairy Queen is a tiny museum with a dead rattler, a live catfish and a director named Midge Savage who says:

"Each day I come in and do a head count to see who's eaten who during the night!"

What Ms. Savage needs is a muzzle for her 30-pound catfish or at least a sign at the Lake Meredith Aquatic & Wildlife Museum that warns: "Beware of Catfish."

"One night that rascal ate my turtle, two walleyes, a yellow perch and a sand bass...I did say a few unkind words to him."

With unfailing good humor, Ms. Savage oversees this splendid little museum jammed with visual delights rarely found in larger and more sophisticated facilities.

It showcases the wildlife and archeological wonders of the Texas High Plains and the fish and fowl found in and around nearby Lake Meredith, a sparkling oasis in this dry and windswept geographic region known as the Llano Estacado, or staked plains.

Fritch itself, "the heart of Lake Meredith," is a spunky little Panhandle town of 2,500 north of Amarillo and just south of Borger. It lies midway between Dallas and Denver and is closer to the state capitals of New Mexico and Oklahoma than Austin.

Fritch considers itself the gateway to the Alibates Flint Quarries National Monument, an archeological goldmine still under development by the National Park Service.

Archeological traces of prehistoric Indians abound throughout the entire Canadian River system, and tools and weapons fashioned from Alibates flint are on display in the museum.

The museum, which resembles a desert outpost in a very old John Wayne movie, was dedicated in 1976 as a bicentennial project of the City of Fritch, the National Park Service and the local bicentennial committee.

It stands today as a self-styled "monument to community pride and dedication" and the home of the hungriest catfish in captivity.

Ms. Savage said the museum attracts an average of 20,000 visitors a year.

It features five aquariums containing 11,000 gallons of water and everything from walleye, bass, crappie and carp to the aforementioned flathead catfish.

Counting turtles, there may be 16 species to look at.

"You'll notice, the fish kind of like to look at us, too," observed Ms. Savage as she and a visitor peered at a large mouth bass, which peered right back.

The most visually stunning of the exhibits are six lifelike dioramas of preserved wildlife in their natural habitat. They include bobcats, turkeys, raccoons, coyotes, eagles and pronghorns, the latter an antelope-like deer.

"You can hunt the pronghorn legally, but the ranchers won't let you," said Ms. Savage. "And the pronghorns are all on the ranches. So it's Catch-22. You can but you can't."

Paintings by local artist LaNelle Poling provide the backdrop of each display and range from a starkly beautiful wintertime scene with bobcats to a springtime romp with a family of coyotes.

"Coyotes will eat anything and one of their favorite foods is watermelon," Ms. Savage said. "They also kill lots of rabbits and rodents, and if it were not for coyotes, we'd be overrun by both."

Ms. Poling photographed a variety of places around Lake Meredith and throughout the Canadian River Valley and recreated them in her oil paintings, giving viewers a sense of realism and a powerful feel for this unyielding land.

Actual dirt, rock and vegetation from the area are used in the foreground along with small animals and reptiles indigenous to the High Plains — including a diamondback rattlesnake.

"Our specimen is in a sunning position," said Ms. Savage, "and he's about four feet long."

The diamondback is said to be among the largest and most dangerous serpents in North America, and Ms. Savage's "specimen" looks it.

"He was caught on an oil lease in this area," she said.

Perhaps the most imposing diorama is one depicting a golden eagle, its mate and a nesting eaglet — a common scene along the rocky ledges of the canyons and the breaks of the Canadian River.

"The eagle is protected by law, and no one is allowed to own one," said Ms. Savage. "Ours are on loan from the government."

Ms. Savage recalled an incident in which a hunter had the misfortune of being caught with a very dead eagle, and was hauled before a federal judge.

"The judge fined the guy $50 a feather," she said approvingly.

Schools lack research incentive, chancellor says

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Public universities in Texas lack strong incentives for developing their research potential that is needed to keep the state moving ahead economically, Texas A&M University System Chancellor Arthur G. Hansen said Saturday.

Hansen was one of several speakers discussing economically related problems and opportunities at a meeting of newspaper editors hosted by Texas A&M's Center for Education and Research in Free Enterprise, in cooperation with the Greater San Antonio Chamber of Commerce.

The chancellor said research and development expenditures at the 37 public universities in Texas will total approximately $270 million this year, with Texas A&M and its related research agencies accounting for about 41 percent of the total and the University of Texas at Austin about 34 percent.

"At first blush, this seems to be a commendable figure," Hansen said, but he pointed out that in fiscal year 1982, Texas, with the third-largest population, ranked fifth in federal obligations to universities and colleges.

"In spite of the rhetoric and seemingly enthusiastic support for research and development, we do not have strong incentives for developing our research potential in higher education," he told some 40 editors and writers from throughout the state.

He noted that the state-supported "Organized Research" program, designed to stimulate research and development at public institutions of higher education, has been funded in recent years at about one-quarter of the amount recommended by the Coordinating Board of the Texas College and University System.

Even in the case of universities that are bringing in financial support from other than state sources, there is no uniform policy for providing seed money for new ventures based on proven research competence, Hansen said.

"The one notable exception at Texas A&M has been in the engineering and agricultural agencies where the fruits of research from state support have paid back the investment made for research many times over," he said.

Servicemen complete courses

Marine Pfc. Kenneth E. Doss, son of C.E. Doss of Odessa, and Betty Doss of Crane, has completed the Aviation Support Equipment Technician's Hydraulic Course.

During the nine-week course at the Naval Air Technical Training Center, Millington, Tenn., students received instruction on the inspection, maintenance and repair of basic hydraulic systems. They studied metal working, corrosion control and oxyacetylene welding.

Marine Lance Cpl. Albert Jimenez Jr., son of Michael S. an Elva Lovelace of Odessa, has received a Letter of Appreciation.

He received the letter for superior performance of duty while serving with 1st Marine Division Camp Pendleton, Calif.

A Letter of Appreciation is official recognition of an individual's outstanding accomplishments, and is presented during formal ceremonies.

Navy Petty Officer 3rd Class Randy S. Tanner, son of Billy E. and Joyce Tanner of Andrews, has completed the Advanced First Term Avionics (aviation electronics) course.

During the 26-week course at the Naval Air Technical Training Center, Millington, Tenn., trainees studied airborne communications, fire control systems and antisubmarine warfare systems. In addition to the technology of these systems, they studied mathematics, physics, electronic theory and the operating principles of digital and analog computers.

Marine Sgt. Delton R. Pinter, son of Chester Pinter and Eunice Taleferro, both of Odessa, has reported for duty with Fleet Marine Force Atlantic, Norfolk, Va.

Navy Petty Officer 3rd Class Trinidad B. Lambard, whose wife, Armida, is the daughter of Trinidad M. and Mary B. Lambard of Odessa, has been promoted to his present rank while serving aboard the frigate USS Fanning, homeported in San Diego.

House, property seized in drug case

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal drug task force that seized $6.8 million recently from two bank accounts has confiscated a house and lakeside property authorities claim are assets of an international drug cartel.

Prosecutors filed a lawsuit Friday asking a judge to grant forfeiture to the government of the Lake Houston property, valued at $400,000, officials said.

"We believe this is out of the same group or cartel," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Charles Lewis, coordinator of the Houston-based Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Force. "We do expect there to be more seizures of assets in this case."

We're not anywhere near finished."

Earlier last week, authorities seized $6.8 million from two RepublicBank of Houston accounts, alleging the money came from the sale of marijuana, heroin and cocaine. It was described as the largest single cash seizure from a bank in any federal drug case.

No arrests have been made in the case and authorities have refused to discuss the investigation in detail except to say that the money was part of the bankroll of an international drug organization operating in Texas, Colorado, Arizona, New York and three other countries.

Lewis and Assistant U.S. Attorney

Kent Cassibry said they do not know who was living in the lakefront house when federal marshals on Thursday posted a seizure notice on the door.

The lawsuit seeking forfeiture of the property listed two people as having some interest in the action. However, prosecutors refused to elaborate.

One man listed was Frank Garcia, an Edinburg, Texas, gold and silver dealer. Garcia was out of town and could not be reached for comment.

Also listed in the lawsuit was Emilio Quintero Pyan of Guadalajara, Mexico, whose brother was named in connection with the money seizure case.

our bureaucracy remains," he said. "He (Reagan) cares very deeply about world affairs," Allen said. "U.S. influence has increased while he has been president."

The speech was made before the Second Annual Conference for Editors of Texas Newspapers, sponsored by the Center for Education and Research in Free Enterprise at Texas A&M University.

'South Texas to become spy target'

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Soviet spies, hungry for U.S. technology, will be focusing their attention on South Texas with the growth of the high technology industry, former national security adviser Richard Allen says.

The FBI "does not have enough people in the field to protect technology from theft," Allen told a meeting of Texas newspaper editors on Friday.

Allen, the national security adviser for President Reagan until 1981, referred to a case four years ago in central California in which two men sold satellite technology to the Soviets.

The technology is now being used by the Soviets to jam U.S. satellites monitoring Soviet activities, he said.

Allen said similar situations could occur here and in other areas where high technology is being developed. "There are enormous problems with physical security in plants and labs. There is a Soviet vacuum that tries to get American technology," he said.

The theme of the speech was American influence abroad at the end of Reagan's first term.

"President Reagan gets a solid 'A' for his efforts to reinstate U.S. influence abroad, but we will never have a coherent foreign policy as long as

ENGINEERS

Reservoir Engineers

At ARCO Alaska, Inc., you will develop your fullest career potentials as you help maximize yields from North America's largest oil reserves.

A major subsidiary of Atlantic Richfield, one of the nation's top ten energy companies, we're seeking seasoned engineers with strong analytical skills to optimize the recovery and the economic development of our giant Prudhoe Bay, Kuparuk and other Alaska oil fields.

For these fields, your responsibilities will involve evaluation and optimum economic use of a variety of recovery mechanisms, such as solution gas and gas cap drive, gravity drainage, waterflood and enhanced oil recovery. Your highly noticeable contributions will influence technical/economic analyses regarding near- and long-term field development and reservoir management.

Requirements include:

- A degree in Petroleum, Mechanical or Chemical Engineering
- Three to eight years of petroleum engineering experience (at least four years for senior-level positions).
- Strong reservoir engineering background including a knowledge of improved recovery techniques and reservoir models.
- A working knowledge of economic evaluation/planning.
- Excellent communication skills for presentations to technical and upper management personnel.
- Ability to work independently and to lead work of others.

A word about compensation:

Your fully competitive and commensurate salary will be supplemented by a special Alaska allowance of 45% of your first $2,000 per month, plus 25% of any monthly amount over $2,000. We also provide comprehensive benefits including annual family vacation travel allowance.

SURVIVING POUSE

Text by Julie Hillrichs

Virginia Swicegood is a survivor. She has encountered several hardships but has managed to overcome them with optimism.

Even when her husband James died in September 1981, following a five-year battle with cancer, she said she was able to consider his death a blessing and found peace in knowing he no longer was in pain.

Mrs. Swicegood served as her husband's means of strength during his struggle with the disease — supporting him financially and emotionally through surgery and chemotherapy treatments.

And despite her own agony, she prepared herself for the inevitable: A life without him.

"Believe me, it's hard. I was really lost and hungry for companionship," she said recounting her experience. "To be honest, I barely remember the first year following his death."

Eventually she grew tired of the loneliness, she said, and made the transition from a grieving widow to an independent, self-sufficient individual.

"There were times when I thought I'd go crazy staring at the four walls in my home. If nothing else, I'd get in the car and go for a drive just to beat the boredom. Finally I learned we are individuals and we must live for ourselves."

Lifestyle policies

The following are policies for publication of stories and announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the story is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Portraits of the future bride and bridegroom in one photograph may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Diet Pill Sweeping U.S.

New Grapefruit 'Super Pill' Gives Fast Weight Loss

No Dieting - Eat All You Want Pill Does All the Work

BEVERLY HILLS, CA. (Special) An amazing new "super" grapefruit pill has recently been developed and perfected that reportedly "guarantees" that you will easily lose at least 10 pounds in 10 days. Best of all, it allows you to "eat as much as you want of your favorite foods and still lose a pound a day or more starting from the very first day until you achieve the ideal weight and figure you desire."

This "super" grapefruit pill is a dramatically improved version of the world famous grapefruit diet. It is far more effective than the original and eliminates "the mess, fuss, and high cost of eating half a fresh grapefruit at every meal."

"Pill Does All the Work"

According to the manufacturer, "the pill itself does all the work while you quickly lose weight with NO starvation "diet menus" to follow, NO calorie counting, NO exercise, and NO hunger pangs." It is 100% safe. You simply take the pill with a glass of water before each meal and the amazing combination of powerful ingredients are so effective they take over and you start losing weight immediately.

Pill Has ALL Daily Vitamins

The powerful and unique combination of ingredients are what make this a "super-pill". It contains highly potent grapefruit concentrate and a diuretic to help eliminate bloat and puffiness. No need to take any vitamins to maintain your good health and energy. The pill is fortified with ALL (100%) of the U.S. Government daily vitamin requirements.

Contains Japanese 'Glucomannan'

Each pill also contains an amazingly effective amount of "glucomannan", the remarkable natural dietary fiber discovery from Japan (used successfully for over 1500 years) that expands in your stomach and gives you a full and satisfied feeling all day long.

The super-pill is already sweeping the country with glowing reports of easy and fast weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slim, trim, and attractive again.

Now Available to Public

You can order your supply of these highly successful "super" grapefruit pills (now available directly from the manufacturer by mail order only) by sending $12 for a 14-day supply (or $20 for a 30-day supply, or $35 for a 60-day supply) cash, check, or money order to: Citrus Industries, 9903 Santa Monica Bl., Dept. 841, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard, and Amer. Express OK. (Send card number, expiration date, and signature.) For fastest service for credit card orders ONLY call toll free 1-(800)-862-6262, ext. 841. Copyright 1984.

MCKNIGHT HARRISON

Have you heard...?

At the turn of the century when the Hill House was built, it rested on the outer fringes of Midland. Now approximately 85 years later, it is back in a setting befitting its dignity, again on the outskirts of the community. Located six miles south of the city, it offers a superb view of the Midland skyline and of a pleasing pastoral scene, including a wheat field across the road and horses grazing in the pasture.

On the Fourth of July Eve, the present residents, Lee and Bill Heard, entertained with a lovely cocktail buffet to give many of the longtime Midlanders an opportunity to see the progress they have made in the home's restoration.

Reminiscent of a scene out of the movie "Giant," was the silhouette of the house as we approached. American flags portraying the holiday spirit lined the winding driveway. Parking attendants dressed in the Western tradition met the guests upon arrival. Venerable Midland bartender Max Thomas, who is famous for his ability to remember each guest's pleasure in liquid refreshment, served drinks on the veranda.

The historic house was moved to its present location in 1979 from the 1200 block of West Illinois St. to save it from the wrecker's ball. Although the home has been known as the Hill House for many years (for its previous longtime owners, the late J.E. "Bob" Hill and the late Irene Hill), it was actually built by the late Doc Cowden circa 1900. Many of the Cowden clan were at the party.

Guests, who were encouraged to look throughout the stately, two-story house, oohed and aahed over the high, tin ceilings and the beautiful hardwood, parquet floors. Materials salvaged from the old Petroleum Club and Scharbauer Hotel have been included in the restoration. The antique furnishings come from Lee's and Bill's families.

The party, attended by more than 150 guests, included two and three generations of Midland families. Among the guests were Patsy and Arthur Yeager, Calvin Glass, Marion (Mrs. E.A.) Culbertson, Charlotte and Joe Ward, Vina and John Rahlf, Annie Laurie (Mrs. C.W.) Chancellor, Gladys (Mrs. George T.) Abell, Cordie and David Ritchie, Charlotte and Ralph Williamson, Gwen and David Leeper and Cindy and Joe Abel.

Preservation oriented, the Heards declare it's a joy to live in the old home. They especially enjoy eating by candlelight in the spacious dining room, which is yet to have electricity installed. They make very little use of air conditioning, preferring to open up the house and let the summer breezes waft through.

SUZANNE ORMAND and Scott Tatum chose the romantic setting of the Hawaiian Islands for their wedding Saturday evening. The couple exchanged wedding leis during the ceremony, which took place in a small mission church that was established more than 100 years ago in the Hanalei Valley on Kauai. Wedding music was provided by a Hawaiian choir, and the church was decorated with flowers woven by the bride.

The steeple bells rang as the newlyweds left the church for the champagne reception at the Hanalei Bay Club. Following a honeymoon in the Islands, the Tatums will return to Midland to make their home. Scott is owner of Tosco Petroleum Co.

The bride's parents Ann and Don Ormand of Midland honored the couple Friday evening with a Hawaiian luau at the Hanalei Bay Club. Held around the swimming pool, the party featured Hawaiian song and dance, the traditional roast pig, a flower drop over the pool and Tiki torches. A bride's breakfast was given Saturday on the club's lanai. Hostesses were former Midlander Kathy Largent of Fort Worth and the bride's sisters Melissa and Robin Ormand of Midland.

Prior to the wedding a round of parties was given in both Midland and Fort Worth, where the groom's parents Barbara and Dr. Doug Tatum reside.

Festivities included dinners, luncheons, cocktail buffets, showers, and hot tub and swim parties.

Midlanders attending the wedding were Marilyn and Jim Shepherd and daughter Kelly Shaw; Carlene (Mrs. Herb) Ware and children Nancy and Carl Ware and Alison (Mrs. Brett) Smith; Candy Stoltz, Missy Seright and Anita and Brad Jones.

TEN MIDLAND GIRLS have returned from the first session of Camp Mystic at Hunt in the Hill Country.

They are Holly Beshears, daughter of Paula and Jack Beshears; Emily Brenner, daughter of Karen Brenner; Anne Embrey, daughter of Raye Ann and Boley Embrey; Stacey Forshagan, daughter of Mary Kay and Doug Forshagan; Stacy Gould, daughter of Barbara and Charles Gibson; Tracey Hardy, daughter of Becky and Bob Hardy; Stephanie Jackson, daughter of Judy and Bill Jackson; Cathy McGavran, daughter of Gloria and Dr. Bill McGavran; Erin Marko, daughter of Margie and Paul Marko, and Kim Way, daughter of Barbara and Ralph Way.

Midlander Susan Lamphere is one of the camp counselors this summer. She is a student at UT-Austin and the daughter of Jane and Dick Lamphere.

GWENDOLYN AND RICHARD CARTER recently entertained approximately 30 guests with a dinner party in their home to announce the engagement of their daughter Gayla Dawn to Danny Clark of Houston.

The bride-elect has attended Texas Tech and Midland College. She is presently employed with Union Texas Petroleum in Houston. Her fiancé is employed by Tricoast Container Corp. The wedding is planned for 7 p.m. Aug. 25 at Greater Ideal Baptist Church in Midland.

Marilyn McKnight Harrison is social columnist for the Reporter-Telegram.

Today, Mrs. Swicegood preaches her philosophy to other widowed survivors at regular meetings of "Surviving Spouse," a support group she founded in Midland last January.

Although she's not a professional counselor, Mrs. Swicegood said she understands that "widowed persons deal with different kinds of loneliness and they undergo a certain period of transition regardless of whether the death was unexpected or followed a lengthy illness.

"You're so lonesome, lost and feel no one loves you or cares," she said. "As a result, you reach out to the first person who comes along."

Mrs. Swicegood claims this transitional period is "extremely dangerous" for both men and women. She warns widowed spouses not to try to cope with their grief on their own.

She recommends entrusting in family and friends to get through the various stages of vulnerability and if possible, engage in group sessions with others who have experienced similar emotions.

"Surviving Spouse" is one organization which offers fellowship, companionship and serves as an avenue for persons who have lost their spouses to share their grief.

During the sessions, which usually include potluck suppers, discussions are about topics prevalent to both widows and widowers of all age groups in addition to specific concerns of each individual.

Women tend to discuss their fears of financial responsibilities and men generally are concerned about household chores, according to Mrs. Swicegood.

Roy Bassham, a charter member of the organization, said the death of a spouse "hits different people different ways. Housework didn't really bother me. I did most of it anyway because my wife was sick so long."

Instead, he said he joined the group for the "companionship, the association with people in the same situation and for friendship and relaxation."

Bill Delong, another charter member, said after his wife died, "I had a problem sitting down and eating a meal by myself. If I could go to a cafe to get out of eating alone, I'd do it."

Today, he not only dines alone but also prepares his meals and maintains a well-balanced diet.

Delong said he has benefited from organization because "it helps to talk with others and to share views on how they cope with their situation."

Members of the group also encourage one another to take advantage of services provided by their bankers, insurance agents, attorneys and others to help make their period of adjustment less stressful.

VI Claiborne, ClayDesta National Bank special services officer, said financial advisors realize "it's important for surviving spouses to know what to do with their inheritance and how to protect it."

Most financial institutions offer advice on all normal banking functions including investments, deposits, discount brokerage savings, CDs, precious metals, and executive and professional lending.

Counseling services for inheritance tax and financial management also is available, she added.

Bob Midkiff of Bob Midkiff Insurance, said insurance agents, too, are sympathetic to widowed clients' interests. He said his main objective is to "settle their claim as soon as possible."

Because of lower rates and increased sales of life insurance policies, Midkiff said it normally takes one month to settle a claim for a client.

But he said most insurance agents are willing to work with customers on an individual basis to ensure "they get the most from their options."

"We realize most of our clients in this situation have houses to pay for and other expenses. We offer several options in handling their claims but our primary concern is getting it handled."

Currently, 53 members of "Surviving Spouse" meet and casually participate in social events and group discussions, according to Mrs. Swicegood.

"Some members have been alone for years and others for only a few months or weeks but we encourage and frequently talk about the trying times during our mate's illness, death, funeral, burial and our own life afterwards."

"It's not a matchmaking group," she said. "We're here to learn how to carry on. We unload on each other and if we can't help, we suggest someone who can."

The Associated Press

Being transferred to a foreign city without adequate salary compensation is likely to be expensive, according to an annual cost-of-living survey of 20 major cities worldwide.

In Hong Kong, the most expensive city surveyed, an executive at the $40,000 income level would have to spend $89,061 to maintain a comparable U.S. lifestyle.

In Tokyo, it's $60,000; Geneva $65,000, and Paris $52,000.

By ADELE SCHEELE, PH.D.

Q. I am a sales manager and have a few people on my staff who won't take risks because they are afraid of making a mistake. Any ideas?

A. First, explain that you want them to try more, even if the attempts fail. Then plan small tasks, first outside and then inside your company.

Outside tasks might include a participation group like Toastmasters or sales training for more direct learning. For an internal task, give assignments with built-in risks that are graduated, starting with small steps. Also look at sales performance on a month-to-month basis, comparing risk takers, low to high.

If after some prompting, pep talks, even verbal contacts, the low riskers haven't improved over the next few months, then you have a more important decision — either firing them or moving them to another department, not sales oriented, for their sake as well as yours.

Q. I am a sophomore in college majoring in environmental studies. I need to work this summer, yet want the job to be interesting. I'd appreciate your suggestions.

A. It's not going to be easy at this late date to set up an interesting, paid job in environmental studies, but maybe you can work magic.

Consider the following: Try any local research group; a political party or a councilman; a law firm with cases on such issues; a summer camp; the Sierra Club or equivalent; a sporting goods or wilderness store. Ask for any job, no matter how insignificant, — gofer, stockboy, receptionist, anything will do. Or, wait on tables at night for pay while you intern, for free in a place that otherwise could not afford you.

Prepare for next summer now with the places you'd like to associate with; get names and cases and do next fall's papers on their practices.

Q. I gave my employer two months' notice after I realized I wanted to do the same work but move out of state. But for the past few days, I've been treated like a non-person in my small company, owned and run tightly by a father and son. How can I resolve this since I have another six weeks to go?

A. You learn a lot from working and making mistakes. One lesson is that when you work for a small, family-run company, leaving is perceived more like a divorce. Feelings are hurt and there is little of the protection that you might feel in a larger company.

The second lesson is not to be quite so open so far in advance. You only set yourself up for a too-long period of intended separation. Your job now is to smooth ruffled feathers and tell how much you appreciate them and what you will miss about them, and to find out what you can do in these next six months to facilitate your replacement. Shall you be the one to find and train the replacement? If so, how shall you proceed? If not, what else can you do — i.e., explaining your system of doing things.

Portrayals 'inaccurate'

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Psychiatrists attending an American Psychiatric Association symposium on "Psychiatrists in the Movies" have concluded that screen portrayals of psychiatrists are inaccurate.

"If people want to distance themselves from the threat that madness poses, there are a number of ways to do it," explained Dr. Louis Jolyon West, chairman of the department of neuropsychiatry at the University of California-Los Angeles. "Humor is one. The maniac, like the headshrinker, is portrayed as either dippy, horrible, or better than real."

To illustrate the point, the program included screenings of film clips from "Spellbound," "Snakepit," "The Three Faces of Eve," "Sybil," "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," "Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice," "Ordinary People," and "Lovesick," and a panel discussion moderated by Charlton Heston.

The event was co-sponsored by the American Film Institute, over which Heston presides. The panel consisted of West, Dr. Irving Schneider — a Washington psychiatrist and film buff — actors Richard Dreyfuss and Bob Balaban, screenwriter Stewart Stern, who wrote the screenplay for "Sybil," and Sheila Benson, film critic for the Los Angeles Times.

One myth that was dispelled was that psychiatrists have no sense of humor, because many of the film clips got a lot of laughs. Alfred Hitchcock's "Spellbound," for instance, drew laughs when Gregory Peck says, "Aw, that Freud stuff is a lot of hokey." Then there was the wonderful scene in "Starting Over" where Burt Reynolds is having an anxiety attack in Bloomingdale's. A crowd has surrounded him as his psychiatrist brother rushes in to calm him down. "Does anyone have a Valium?" the brother shouts into the mob, and the whole lot of them go for their pockets and handbags.

And there was always a laugh when, in at least two of the clips, the doctor announces abruptly that the hour is up.

Beyond the laughter, serious concerns were raised by members of the panel. "We believe that unrealistic portrayals of psychiatrists in film, whether good or bad, can impede our work," said Schneider. "People may be afraid to come to us, or when they do come, they may come with unrealistic expectations of what we can do. As we look at psychiatrists in the movies, especially during the last decade, it appears that we have an image problem, which has a negative effect on our profession, our patients and on those who would be our patients."

While it is probably true that psychiatrists have an image problem, what the members of the panel from the arts industry, specifically Dreyfuss and Benson, wanted to know was, exactly how would you like yourselves to be portrayed? Isn't Judd Hirsch rushing out in the cold night to hug an ailing Timothy Hutton in "Ordinary People" enough?

Said Benson: "I have one short question: Ingrid Bergman, Lee J. Cobb, Liv Ullmann, Judd Hirsch. What does psychiatry want?" To which West responded, "Dudley Moore?"

"One of the problems," Stern offered, "is that most moviemakers are not psychiatrists, but their patients." To which the ever stalwart Heston shot back, "Speak for yourself."

While the panel discussion took off in fits and starts, Heston was still hesitant to take questions from the audience. A few were fielded from a man who began, "I saw 'Frances' and 'Lovesick' as a double feature for senior citizens and I think electro-shock therapy is barbaric and, as a pediatrician and a dermatologist, I feel qualified."

Heston announced abruptly that the time was up, and the psychiatrists in the audience approached the panel to ask for Dreyfuss' autograph.

Mixed marriages more than double in 12 years

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interracial marriages in the United States more than doubled in the dozen years after the Supreme Court invalidated laws against such unions, government statistics show.

Still very small in number, interracial nuptials amounted to 1.9 percent of all marriages in 1980, according to figures collected by the National Center for Health Statistics.

That's up from 0.7 percent of marriages reported in 1968, a year after the Supreme Court invalidated laws in 20 states that banned such marriages.

The increase was reported in the July edition of American Demographics magazine, in an article by Barbara Foley Wilson of the health statistics center.

"In conjunction with the Supreme Court's ruling that struck down laws on miscegenation, racially mixed marriages, though still rare, have become more frequent in America's melting pot," Ms. Wilson reported.

She used figures from 35 states where racial characteristics are recorded in marriage records.

In 1968, interracial marriages accounted for about 6,000 out of 849,000 marriages reported in those states, Ms. Wilson said in a telephone interview. By 1980 that had risen to 18,853 marriages out of 979,000 in those states, she said.

The most common interracial marriages involved white brides and black grooms. They accounted for about 0.5 percent of all marriages in 1980, up from 0.2 percent in 1968.

White brides with Asian or other non-white grooms, excluding blacks, accounted for 0.4 percent of marriages in 1980, about the same as white grooms with Asian or other non-white brides, excluding blacks. Both those shares were doubled from 1968.

Black brides with white grooms totaled 0.2 percent of marriages in 1980, also twice the share of 1968.

The number of blacks marrying non-whites outside their race was too small to evaluate statistically in either year.

Hawaii, with its large Asian population, had the largest number and share of interracial marriages in 1980, the most recent years for which detailed statistics are available.

There were 2,798 interracial marriages in Hawaii, 23.4 percent of all those recorded in the state for that year. Running a distant second was Florida with 1,484 interracial marriages in that year, only 1.4 percent of the state's total.

While state-by-state figures for 1980 were published, comparable statistics for 1968 were available only on a national basis because some of the state samples were too small to be statistically valid, Ms. Wilson explained.

The vast majority of marriages in both years was between white couples — 88 percent of all marriages in 1968 and 87.4 percent in 1980.

"The proportion of marriages uniting whites varied from a low of 40 percent in Hawaii to 99 percent in Vermont," Ms. Wilson noted.

Black couples made up 10.3 percent of marriages in 1980 and 10.8 percent in 1968.

Marriages of couples of Asian and other races accounted for 0.5 percent of 1968 weddings, and 0.7 percent in 1980.

"Compared with marriages between people of the same race, interracial marriages are more likely to take place in a state other than the one in which the bride or groom was born," Ms. Wilson reported in her article.

For example, for white couples in 1980, 60 percent of brides and 57 percent of grooms were married in the state where they were born. But in interracial couples 45 percent of white brides and 42 percent of black brides were married in their birth state. For grooms, 37 percent of whites and 36 percent of blacks were wed in their state of birth.

And nationally brides and grooms who married interracially were older, on average, than their counterparts who married within their race.

Ms. Wilson reported that white brides who married white grooms in 1980 averaged 21.5 years old, but those marrying blacks were 23.4.

Black brides were 23.1 years old when marrying black grooms, but 23.8 when marrying a white.

Burglaries increase

From Staff Reports

Burglars don't take summer vacations.

July and August are two of the months with the highest percentages of break-ins each year, according to FBI Uniform Crime Reports. Experts say the surge in warm weather burglaries is the result of people spending more time away from home and the tendency to leave windows and doors open.

"If there's one thing common to all burglars, it's their opportunism," said Michael Jordan, Honeywell manager of home alarm markets. "Crime experts report that more than 40 percent of household burglaries occur without forced entry. Therefore, the trick is to keep your home from being an easy target."

Although many home security experts agree an electronic alarm system is the most reliable way to stop burglars, there are other precautions which can be taken to prevent vacations or long weekends from turning into nightmares.

— Stop deliveries, mow the lawn, alert the neighbors. When planning to be away from home for any length of time, stop all deliveries and arrange for the lawn to be mowed. Notify the post office to hold mail until returning. Have a friend check for promotional circulars, meter reader notices and parcels at the door that might suggest no one is home. Encourage neighbors to keep an eye on the house and report any irregularities to the police. Offer to do the same for them.

— Secure windows and sliding doors. Before leaving for vacation be sure all windows, not just those at street level, are firmly secured. Window locks which require a key to open help stop burglars. Or insert pins or nails in holes drilled through the window's double frames where they overlap. To open the window merely pull out the pins. A dowel rod or piece of broomstick in the track of a sliding door makes it difficult for anyone to lift the door out of its tracks.

— Strong doors with strong locks. Doors are the first place a burglar will try. Outside doors should be solid wood or metal that can't be kicked in. Don't be careless with keys. Burglars know all the hiding places. Avoid locks with the keyhole in the doorknob. These can be opened with a knife or credit card. Double locks that require a key on the outside and inside provide greater protection.

— Trim shrubs and bushes. Be sure that bushes, shrubs and trees are trimmed around doorways, windows and basement entries so burglars have no place to hide.

— Automatic timers on lights and radios. When away don't rely on one or two lights left on in the house. Automatic timers can be programmed to turn lights and radios on and off at regular intervals to simulate a normal routine. Outside lights should be used to illuminate darkened areas. No burglar likes to work in a spotlight.

Garage sales' looks matter

NEW YORK (AP) — A garage sale is a good way to get rid of unwanted household items and make money at the same time.

To make the most of the sale, it is best to make all the items look good. In some cases, just a thorough cleaning will do the job. But a quick spray of paint on other objects, such as outdoor furniture, can triple their value, while aerosol paint removers and lacquer can help restore old furniture to a much more profitable condition.

Room settings in stores, model apartments, houses, permanent exhibitions, restaurants, museums, hotels and public foyers can help provide design ideas or their beginnings. Never underestimate the private ideas that can be culled from public places: a ceiling treatment here, a floor there, a special table arrangement, a particular wall cover or a juxtaposition of coloring can start a train of thought that can be stored in the present and click into place at some later date. If a good idea cannot be used right away, it may be useful later or it may help to put other ideas in perspective. In any event, it will help to build a sense of style.

At some point, most of us have seen a room that makes us say, "that's what I want." When you're ready to actually turn that dream into a reality, you can count on WINDOW DECOR to help you. Window treatment is our specialty and if you let us know what you want to budget, we'll design beautiful windows on your world. Don't hesitate to ask us about carpeting or wallpaper or custom bedspreads, either. We're ready for your ideas. Located at 30M West Industrial, we're open Mon-Fri., 8AM-4:30PM, and by special appointment. Call us at 685-0875.

"SHARING THE FAITH" NOW AVAILABLE

Pope John Paul II and artist Larry Dyke

Midland Gallery is pleased to announce that we now have a limited number of "Sharing the Faith" prints by Texas artist Larry Dyke.

Destined to become a classic, this framed print is a reproduction of the painting Dyke presented to Pope John Paul II during a special audience in Rome February 29. The original now hangs in the Vatican.

To celebrate the edition, a special medallion has been struck bearing the name of the artist and an imprint of St. Peter's Basilica in Rome. A copy of this unique medallion will be yours with the purchase of this limited edition.

Don't miss this opportunity to own a very special limited edition and the accompanying medallion. These prints are signed and numbered and in very limited supply. It is thought by many art investors to be the finest investment print to be released in the last decade.

Little church on the prairie

The Cowboy Chapel, left, originally was built for cowboys in the Garza County area, but travelers from across the state are finding their way to it. The Chapel's heavy oak door is never locked and it is open to all demoninations. The Buffalo herd shown in the photo below is typical of the view from the Cowboy Chapel. Residents of the area say the herd once stole the attention of guests at a wedding ceremony performed at the church.

By DONNA WORTHINGTON
Special to the Reporter-Telegram

High on a windswept hill in Garza County, overlooking a vast expanse of mesquite and cactus, stands the Church of the Cowboy — a simple, unique place of worship.

The little church was built in 1981 on the Riley Miller Slash-H-Bar Ranch in West Texas, about 15 miles east of Post. It serves as a memorial to his parents, Clyde and Bessie Philena Miller, and to Bruce Reed, who died tragically at age 21 in a car accident after having lived with the family since early childhood.

Juan Carillo, a native of Monterrey, Mexico, was in the employ of the Clyde Miller family for 22 years but after Riley's parents' deaths, he took periodic wanderings. "He comes and goes and we never know when he's coming or where he's been. He just shows up," explains Mary, Riley's wife.

ON ONE OCCASION, after having been missing for several days, Juan was found in a neighbor's pasture, dazed and apparently lost. He told them that "Christ has taken my heart out and cleansed it." From that time on he seemed a changed man. Riley's daughter, Ginny, said, "He is so different...it's kind of scary. He really seems like a holy person." Soon afterwards he announced, "I want to build a house for Jesus on this place that everyone can enjoy."

RILEY HAD BEEN thinking along the same lines in his desire to build a memorial to his parents. He also knew the cowboys needed a place where they could come to church and be comfortable and he knew they would not go where they had to dress like "city dudes."

Together Riley and Juan decided to build a chapel for the cowboys. It would be a fitting memorial to Riley's parents who had been pioneer ranchers in that area.

When the county REA gave him a quantity of utility poles left over from a discontinued power line across his ranch, he told his wife, "My prayers have been answered. Now I have the materials to build our church." Juan already had the plans for the building in his head. Riley's son Ben helped them to materialize by cutting the logs while friends and neighbors helped to notch, chink and lay them.

THE COWBOY CHAPEL, as it is popularly called, is but one room, approximately 25x40-feet in size. The rustic simplicity of the fireplace, mantel and pulpit, handmade by Juan of native rock and mortar, are in keeping with the rough, sometimes harsh environment of the West Texas rangeland. Candles and kerosene lanterns hanging overhead cast a warm glow over the rough log walls. Two beautiful stained glass windows crafted by Ben Miller and his cousin, Frank Miller Jr. of Uvalde, create areas of unexpected beauty.

An unusual, crudely carved Mexican crucifix is in the place of honor on the fireplace mantel, flanked by candlesticks fashioned from the antlers of a whitetail deer. A vessel for holy water brought from Spain by Riley's brother, Dick, hangs at the entrance of the chapel.

THE SIMPLE FURNISHINGS have been donated by neighboring friends and ranchers and include an antique foot-pedal organ, high-backed chair for the minister and theater-type seats from the Borden County courthouse. New Testaments with the logo "Cowboys for Christ" were given by a chapter of the organization of Christian Athletes. The steeple was a gift from the Methodist Church at nearby Fluvanna.

The heavy oak door of the Cowboy Chapel is never locked and it is open to all denominations. Services are held upon request but never at a time which conflicts with other regular church services in the area. In between times visitors come and go quietly. The Chapel originally was built for cowboys in the area, but travelers from across the state are finding their way to the top of the hill to pause for a few moments of quiet meditation.

MARY AND GINNY will never forget their first service. Riley's brother Dick, a well-known artist in Spain, was visiting them. A Catholic priest came by to see him, prepared to celebrate Mass. When he saw the simple setting he threw away his prepared sermon and said "I am just going to speak to you from my heart." At the end of his message he said, "I have taken the privilege of placing a very special crucifix on this mantel" and went on to say how, when he was traveling in Mexico, he met a man who was severely handicapped. The father of 12 children, he was blind, had only one arm and no legs. He made wood carvings to support his family. The priest offered to buy something but the man would take no money, insisting instead on giving him this crucifix. The priest had placed it in various churches but it just did not seem to fit. "Tonight," he said, "I have finally found where it belongs. Its home is here."

IN AN AFTERNOON SERVICE, two little boys accepted Christ and were going to be baptized. Mary Miller recalls, "Bruce was just a little feller then and he wanted to know what it was all about and Riley said, 'Well, Bruce, you just have to believe in God. You believe in Him, don't you?' Quite vehemently Bruce answered, 'Well, hell yes! You know I do!'"

When Mary told the preacher's wife, who was familiar with range vernacular, she said, "Well, you couldn't be more honest than that!" The Miller ranch covers a considerable number of sections of land and it so happens that the little chapel is located in the pasture where a herd of 96 buffalo roam. A young Jewish doctor and a Protestant nurse wanted to be married there. They thought the little non-denominational church was the perfect place to say their vows. All their friends came from Dallas to witness the ceremony but the shaggy buffalo calmly grazing outside the stained glass windows stole the show. The ceremony was delayed until the guests had satisfied their curiosity about the uncommon animals.

RILEY WAS ONCE aroused in the middle of the night by a cowboy who asked to meet him at the chapel. When he got there the man thrust a pair of dice into his hands. "I'm through gambling," he declared. "What must I do with them...bury them or what?" Riley pointed to the mantel. "The Lord knows what you are doing. Put 'em there." That is how a pair of dice happen to be lying beside a crucifix, a silent testimony to the change in one man's life.

A man they knew only as "Bill" was a hard-working "cat" driver, not given to church-going. Nevertheless he attended one of the services. As he left that night tears were streaming down his face and he told the Millers, "I'll be back." Two weeks later, before another service was held, he died. The brass bell that stands just outside the rail fence surrounding the chapel was given in his memory by his wife.

COWBOYS FROM AS far away as Oregon and Idaho attend the chapel when they are in the area participating in rodeos. Many of them are members of the Cowboys for Christ organization. Bob Tallman, veteran rodeo announcer, stops in when he is in the vicinity.

One of the most popular speakers is Ray "Kid" Marley, a rough-and-ready cowboy who grew up on a nearby ranch. He has been described as a character who had done "every ornery thing a man could do." Mary said, "They didn't even want him in the county, let alone the town. Three years ago he became a Christian convert. Now he's a policeman in Franklin, Tenn., and a dedicated worker in Cowboys for Christ." He is presently executive director of the Tennessee chapter of Christian Athletes and its Cowboy Chapter Fellowship.

WHENEVER MARLEY comes to Justiceburg (the nearest town to Miller's ranch), word travels like a prairie fire and a crowd gathers to hear him speak. He has had no formal religious training but only witnesses to his changed life. Although at 53 he maybe considered an old-timer, he still competes in rodeos.

There is undoubtedly something special about the Church of the Cowboys. There is an aura there that cannot be denied, reminding the visitor that "where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in their midst." Riley himself admits, "I get a great feeling when I go there. I feel very close to my Maker."

The chapel is not visible from the heavily-traveled highway, but to find it the traveler must take Highway 84 west from Sweetwater to Justiceburg, approximately 60 miles. When he has crossed the Double Mountain Fork of the Brazos River going toward Post, the sign "Justiceburg" is the signal to turn off to the left and go over the railroad track. Follow a dirt road straight ahead for about two miles, holding to the line fence. Here, the chapel is visible, standing alone atop the hill. The road bends to the right through the buffalo pasture and winds easily up the hill. Outside the car a vast panorama of mountain range and rolling plain spreads before the traveler. He will enter the small sanctuary for a few quiet moments for an experience he will remember.

In Willemstad, on the island of Curacao, pastel-colored Dutch-style buildings face the busy harbor in the shopping district.

Dutch traditions influence Caribbean island

From Staff Reports

Grandmothers in Curacao have a legend they tell the children about how the island got its capital city. They say centuries ago Dutch diamond cutters deftly split off a section of Amsterdam and floated it across the sea to the southern part of Curacao, christened it Willemstad and made it the island's capital city.

The first glimpse of the story-book collection of Dutch rococo and Victorian buildings makes the story seem possible. The city looks more Dutch than Caribbean and definitely more antique than modern — a pastel-colored colonial gem adrift on the blue Caribbean.

Curacao, a 35-mile-long island in the extreme southern Caribbean, was discovered in 1499 by a Spanish expedition led by Alonso de Ojeda, a lieutenant of Columbus. His navigator, Amerigo Vespucci, who gave his name to America, is said to have been the first European to set foot on the island.

For its first 135 years Curacao was ruled by Spain. Many of the island's place names, like the main harbor, Santa Ana, reflect the Spanish period.

In 1634 the Dutch captured the island, and although it changed hands from time to time, Curacao remained essentially Dutch until 1954 when it and the other six islands of the Netherlands Antilles achieved self-government.

The first Dutch governor was the same Peter Stuyvesant who became famous later as governor of New York when it was called New Amsterdam. Dutch-ruled Curacao earned a reputation for religious and racial tolerance. The Western Hemisphere's oldest synagogue, Mikve Israel-Emmanuel which dates from 1634, was built in Willemstad by Sephardic Jews who arrived in Curacao from Brazil after fleeing the Inquisition in Portugal and Spain.

Although Dutch is Curacao's official language, many of the islanders are also fluent in Spanish and English. The native tongue, however, is Papiamentu, a blend of Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch and a smattering of African, English and French. Visitors are usually welcomed with "bon bini," which means "welcome" in Papiamentu.

The island with its rich history is also modern and sophisticated with up-to-date luxury hotels, international restaurants and the best shopping in the Caribbean.

Accommodations include beach-front hotels, city hotels or country hotels with prices in every range.

Dining is a pleasure in Curacao, whether on Spanish cuisine, a Dutch dish called "keshi yena" (stuffed Gouda cheese), "rijsttafel," an Indonesian specialty or "comida criolla" (native food). Eating establishments include a restored mountain top fortress, restaurant atop a modern skyscraper, outdoor cafes, restored plantation house dining rooms and even branches of fast food hamburger and fried chicken restaurants.

After dinner entertainments can be found at one of the gambling casinos in the leading hotels, a floor show at a night club or a visit to a disco.

Because there is very little rain in Curacao, daylight brings sun and fun in the warm (70 to 80 degrees) Caribbean. Completely unspoiled beaches can be found along the coast, in addition to the hotel beaches and pools. Golf, horseback riding and tennis are best enjoyed in the cooler parts of the day.

Today Curacao is a popular stop for Caribbean cruise ships which anchor in the deep waters of Santa Ana Bay in the heart of Willemstad. According to Eitel Hernandez, U.S. director of the Curacao Tourist Board, over 170 cruise ships stopped in Curacao last year.

The U.S. dollar goes far in Curacao and credit cards are widely accepted. If U.S. currency is spent, change received will also be in U.S. currency. And of course travelers' checks are easily cashed.

For more information about vacations in Curacao, write to P.O. Box 1446, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y. 10101-1446.

Old city streets restored

BREWTON, Ala. (AP) — Brick by brick, Brewton's pride has been restored, and leaders in the timber and manufacturing town hope the investment in saving the historic buildings downtown pays off soon.

It's happening in other small Alabama towns as main streets recover from decades of neglect and loss of trade. Selma, Lafayette, Prattville and Tuscumbia have taken on tasks similar to Brewton's renovation of downtown.

Brewton, the county seat of Escambia County, population about 7,000, has fought life-threatening floods from Murder Creek and Burnt Corn Creek in the Conecuh River basin. Major floods occurred in 1913, 1928, 1929 and less seriously in the late 1970s.

"Once that creek gets up, there's nothing you can do," said Mayor Ray Scherer, a downtown merchant who recalled having three feet of water in his store during the last flood. "Engineers have been up and down the creeks clearing all the snags."

Cathy Marchinko, manager of the Main Street Project, said, "It took about a year to get the project off the ground. One of the first things we had to do was get the city on the federal flood insurance program."

The flood battles brought the town together and so has the effort to save the 1900s buildings on the main street, which is bisected by railroad tracks that no one knows exactly how to handle.

"We decided if we didn't do anything to the railroad, it may go away," joked Robert McMillan, a member of one of the prominent timber and landholding families here.

Alabama's earliest timber mill was located at Brewton, causing the Alabama-Florida Railroad to establish a depot in the town in 1860. The railroad is as much a part of the town's history as the old buildings facing the tracks.

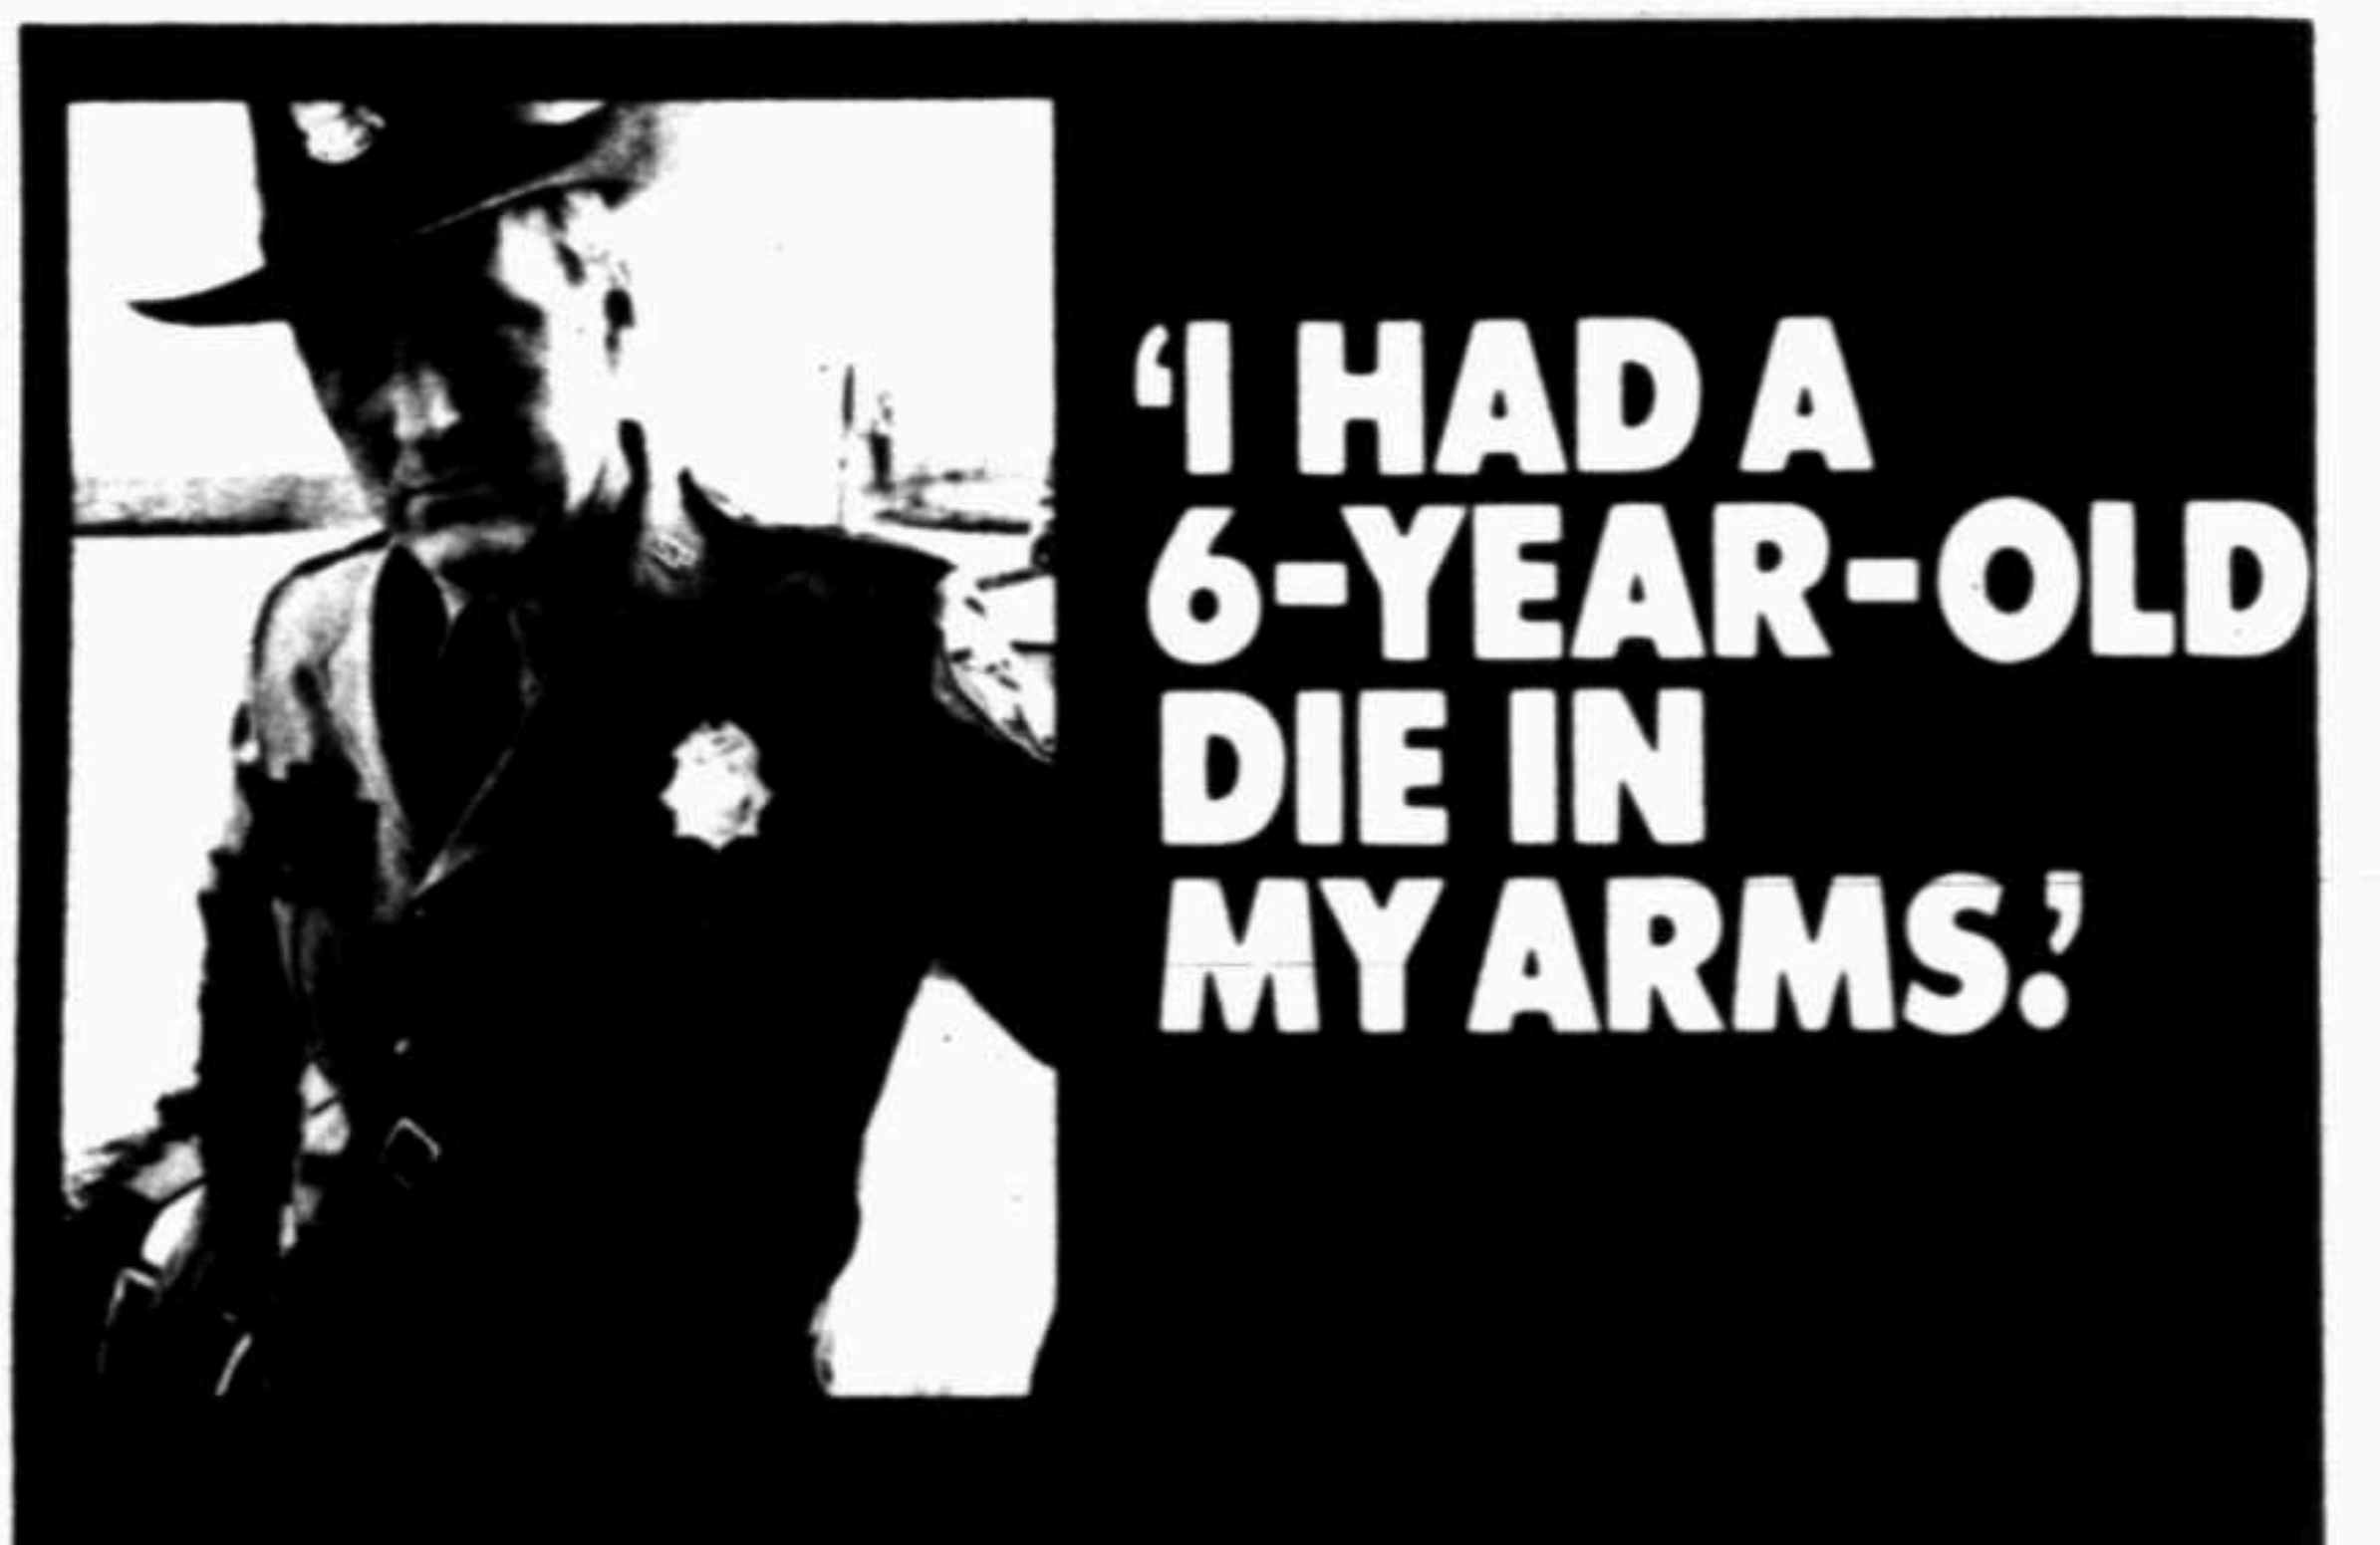

McMillan said he got involved in saving the old buildings when Mason Drugstore left town in 1977. He recalled the "bucking and arguing" among property owners when the Main Street organization first began work in 1981.

"Everybody said it was impossible. 'I'm not going to do it. He's not going to do it,' they'd say, pointing fingers. Now they're saying, 'We've done it,'" McMillan said.

The 60 merchants involved were finally organized and 11 of the 15 stores in one block have been rehabilitated.

McMillan said $250,000 in private capital had been invested in the Main Street Project so far. Add to that $500,000 in grants, and the investment approaches $1 million.

"I don't think we'll ever see Brewton like it was 25 years ago," said City Councilman Carlton Blackburn. Those were boom years for the town.

"No matter how tough a policeman thinks he is, he's never ready for the first highway fatality he sees. Mine was here 11 years ago. I had a 6-year-old die in my arms. It still wakes me up some nights. She'd be about 17 today if her mother had made her wear her safety belt. Safety belts can save more than 16,000 lives each year. In those 11 years I've never unbuckled a dead man."

Two-week Island Princess cruise luxurious

By ZAN THOMPSON

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The butter comes from Ireland and the piquant Seville marmalade comes from Spain. The waiters and table captains are from Italy and the blue sky and the color coordinated ocean come from a travel poster. I am on the ship Island Princess on a two-week cruise in the Caribbean, through the Panama Canal and northward up the coast to Mexico.

The ship is big and white and layered with decks called Aloha, Fiesta, Promenade, Sun, Jean and I are on the Promenade deck, with a stateroom divided into a living room and a bedroom. We have been friends for a long time, since we and our husbands were neighbors on a hill in California's Orange County, raising new lawns and little boys. It seems as if those were two other girls in another world who made fourth-grade cupcakes and rang doorbells for Heart Sunday.

Now, we move through this beautiful ship, like ladies in a travel article, nodding to new friends and elegantly sipping aperitifs. Only occasionally are we seized with an attack of the giggles, or we crow with delight and the girls we were are still there.

The Island Princess is part of the P and O line, the oldest and largest cruise line in the world. The initials stand for Peninsular and Orient. The English line was founded in the middle of the 19th century and their first ships sailed from England down the coast of Europe and around the Iberian peninsula into the Mediterranean. After a few years, they began trips to the orient. Thus the name, P and O.

Public rooms are large and luxuriously appointed like a fine club or an elegant hotel. Every night in one of the big lounges, the entertainment staff presents a highly polished, lushly costumed show, slick and melodic, funny and classy. The wardrobe mistress must be a wonder. The costumes are fresh and bright. You can't imagine how she even stores them in what must be limited space. The entire troupe of entertainers is led and the shows produced by an Englishman named John Lawrence who has a big, musical theater baritone and a nice melodic slide into a love song.

We were in Caracas, Venezuela, today. To write that has a dream quality. Caracas, for heaven's sake. The port pilot came out and boarded the ship as we entered the harbor. The captain and the crew and officers handle this immense boat as though she were a tiny mosquito boat in Newport Harbor. It must be like docking the Coliseum. In a matter of minutes, the Island Princess was snuggled up to the dock, warped in tight as Dick's hat band, without even a slight nudge as we tied up.

Across the narrow channel was a Venezuelan submarine. The vessel was dull black, lying half submerged, ugly as a hammerhead shark. As we watched, the submarine's ship's company trooped out onto the dock and went through a series of marching drills, smartly trotting back and forth.

There was a cloud of birds around the ship today, slender and graceful and having points on all their corners. They looked as if they were made from two pairs of slender scissors, cutting through the air as we came into Caracas.

While we were in port, a bunch of school children approximately fifth and sixth graders, came aboard. They trotted along in double file, behind their teachers, each one span fresh in blue and white uniforms with red sailor ties. As they went by, each boy and girl said, "Good morning," every single child, with a smile that looked like pure friendship. That may have been the extent of their English vocabularies and even if it were, that puts them two words up on me and my Venezuelan vocabulary.

The officers of this glistening ship look as if they were part of an updated company of "pinafors." They wear snowy white walking shorts and knee length socks and white shoes and gold braid. The doctor is a handsome young man, as they all are. He has more letters after his name than a building full of federal agencies. I asked one of the nurses what they all meant and they immediately slid out of my langorous, cruising mind. Why did I see the ship's doctor, blue-eyed and tow-headed? Why, just a touch of my old dengue fever which I contracted when I was training a Swahili regiment in upcountry Zanzibar.

See what happens to me when you let me out of my home town?

I have to go now and slip into one of my langorous dinner Dresses. Jean and I are invited to the captain's cocktail party, along with Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Newman and a handsome brigadier general and his pretty wife. My goodness, it's a long way from the fourth grade trip to the zoo.

Art classes offered

DALLAS — Artists and photographers can have their dream vacations Aug. 12-18 in northern New Mexico at Southern Methodist University's summer campus at Fort Burgwin, seven miles from Taos.

Because classes will be limited to 10, individual instruction will make learning ideal for serious students. Andy Wages, free lance illustrator, and Barbara Fontaine-White, SMU MFA will supervise artists in acrylics, oils and watercolor. Michael Kaufman, multi-media specialist and G.E. Peterson III, assistant professor of broadcast film at SMU, will teach 35mm photography.

Lodging will be in small casitas on fort property with meals served in the dining hall. Cost of $425 will include instruction, lodging and most meals. For more information call the SUM School of Continuing Education at (214) 692-2339 or write to SMU, Box 275, Dallas 75275.

OPENING JULY 1

FLY FREE TO NEW ORLEANS. CRUISE TO MEXICO.

This October, the splendid SS BERMUDA STAR (formerly SS Veen-dam) begins her inaugural season of 7-day cruises from New Orleans, under the banner of Bahama Cruise Line.

Cruise down the Mississippi and across the Gulf of Mexico to the Yucatan, fabled land of the Maya. Relax on the glorious beaches of Playa del Carmen, close to the glittering resort of Cancun and the ancient Mayan fortress of Tulum. Snorkel at the sun-drenched island of Cozumel. On the way enjoy a true original, the Key West of Hemingway and Audubon. Then cruise back to an up-beat weekend in the one and only New Orleans.

Aboard the 23,395-ton SS BERMUDA STAR you will experience a very special kind of luxury: spacious staterooms and elegant public rooms; outstanding cuisine; high-quality entertainment, from floor show to dance bands, Dixieland and disco; and the casino, with blackjack and slots.

SS BERMUDA STAR sails from New Orleans every Saturday, October 27, 1984 through April 6, 1985. Cruise prices from only $895.*

ITINERARY: NEW ORLEANS, MISSISSIPPI RIVER (cruising), KEY WEST, PLAYA DEL CARMEN (FOR CANCUN), COZUMEL, NEW ORLEANS.

FREE ROUND TRIP AIRFARE. Fly free from most US cities, including free transfers from airport to pier.

A WEEKEND IN WONDERFUL NEW ORLEANS. Keep the fun going after your cruise. Spend an optional Saturday night at the deluxe New Orleans Hilton (or equal) in the heart of the city, for only $37.50 per person double occupancy including tax.

Last minute trip to Olympic Games still possible

By JAMES T. YENCKEL
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The Olympics get under way in Los Angeles in less than one month, and now you decide you want to be there for the big event. Are any sports tickets left? Can you find a place to stay?

The answer to both questions, say Olympics organizers, is definitely "yes." Last-minute travelers, at least those who get on the phone now, should not encounter too much difficulty arranging a trip to the Games, July 28 to Aug. 12.

It shouldn't come as a surprise, however, that early planners quickly snapped up the best of everything, including all tickets to the dramatic opening and closing ceremonies (although even these might be found if you are willing to pay an inflated price to a ticket broker).

On the other hand, housing and airfare prices now being quoted are lower than those of several months ago. And one L.A. rental firm, Housing '84, is offering bed and breakfast for budget-minded individuals and families in the dormitory of a religious retreat near the UCLA campus for $15 a night. At the other end of the price scale, the firm is listing $3,500-a-night estates with on-duty staff in the swank hills around Hollywood.

SOME TIPS if you decide to go:

— Sports tickets: Of the 5 million tickets to athletic events made available to the public last year, approximately 1.2 million remained unsold at the beginning of June. They represent 145 contests in 16 sports. Unhappily for the out-of-towner, they can no longer be purchased by mail (or phone) but are being sold over the counter at nine information and ticket centers, seven in Los Angeles and one each in Orange and Ventura counties in Southern California.

The best way to get tickets, suggests Steve Montiel of the Los Angeles Olympics Organizing Committee, is to ask someone you know in the city to buy them at an outlet for you. Otherwise, you may have to wait until your arrival and take what you can get.

Of the 23 sports represented at the Summer Olympics, the following are sold out: gymnastics, swimming, diving, tennis, cycling, fencing, judo and volleyball. Also sold out are the finals (but not preliminary rounds) of basketball, boxing and soccer.

The sports with plenty of tickets still available include field hockey, boxing (up to the quarter-finals) and "team handball," a fast and furious game unfamiliar to most Americans. Teams of seven compete on a large court using elements of basketball and soccer to move a cantaloupe-sized ball between net goals. The handball finals will be played in the 17,000-seat Forum in Los Angeles, and plenty of tickets are still left.

THE AVERAGE price of available tickets is about $8, says Montiel, though they range from $3 for preliminary events to $40 or $50 each for some finals.

Travelers should know, however, that Los Angeles ticket brokers expect to have tickets to many officially sold-out events — but at premium prices. They have arranged to buy up seats from ticket holders who don't intend to go to the Games for resale at premium prices.

Felix Froilan, a spokesman for Murray's Tickets in Los Angeles, anticipates that brokers' tickets to popular events may sell for 50 to 100 percent or more over their face value. The Greater Los Angeles Visitors and Convention Bureau will provide a list of ticket brokers, (213) 239-0215.

For other ticket information: Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, (213) 741-6789. Open Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Pacific Daylight Time.

Accommodations: There is no official clearinghouse for reservations at the Los Angeles Olympics, so travelers probably will have to make several phone calls to find a room.

At this late date, the advice from the visitors bureau is to contact one of 60 rental firms on a list the bureau maintains. Olympics coordinators manager Tammy Lazer says her office keeps up-to-date on which firms have vacancies. Accommodations offered include dorm rooms, hotels and motels, condominium apartments, private homes and estates.

Among the 60 is Housing '84 (213-477-8007). Its president, Gloria Grant, says that her company — in addition to $15 dorm rooms and $3,500-a-night estates — has hotel rooms at $65 to $100 a night, condominium apartments from $125 to $400 a night (depending on size) and private residences (with swimming pool) beginning at $200 a night.

MANY OF these prices, she says, have dropped 25 to 50 percent from what was being asked earlier. Every indication now is that Los Angeles will be able to house anyone who wants to catch the Olympics.

Many Europeans who had planned a year ago to see the Games have since canceled, Grant says, because the strong dollar abroad makes the United States too expensive for them.

Another firm, Housing Unlimited (213-548-1403), is specializing in beachfront home and apartment rentals at $2,000 a week for two bedrooms, $3,000 for three, $4,000 for four. They also will put you up in the bedroom of a private home at rates of from $50 to $150 a night per person (five-night minimum). Depending on the host family, the rate may include breakfast, transportation to events and an invitation to join the family on its yacht to watching the sailing competition.

Manager Maureen Retsek says the firm has an "unlimited" availability of accommodations.

Since events will be held at more than two dozen sites throughout the Los Angeles area, the convention bureau is advising visitors to pick a favorite sport and then find lodging somewhere in the vicinity where it will be played.

For help in finding accommodations, including campsites: Greater Los Angeles Visitors and Convention Bureau, (213) 239-0215. Open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Pacific Daylight Time.

Airlines: Major airlines that initially planned to offer no discounted fares to Los Angeles during the Olympics subsequently reversed themselves when the planes did not fill up.

'FantaSea Cruise' delightful

By MORRIS D. ROSENBERG
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

It's a bit gimmicky, perhaps, but children are sure to be delighted by the FantaSea Cruise dreamed up by Walt Disney Productions and Norwegian Caribbean Lines for Nov. 3 through 10. A bit of Walt Disney World and Epcot Center at Lake Buena Vista, Fla., will be packed up that week for the West Indies.

When the SS Norway sails from Miami for St. Thomas, the Virgin Islands, and Nassau and Great Stirrup Cay in the Bahamas, Mickey Mouse, Minnie Mouse, Donald Duck and Goofy will be on board to greet passengers. All of the Norway's regular entertainment and shows will be replaced by Disney's entertainers in their own productions.

Included will be a live presentation of "Pirates of the Caribbean," Epcot International Night and a "Fantasy in the Sky" evening fireworks display. Disney film classics will be screened, the Disney channel will be available in every cabin via the on-board TV station, and Disney characters will circulate throughout the dining rooms at breakfast. For parents, the Norway also has three swimming pools, a dozen bars, one of the largest casinos afloat, a modern gymnasium and sauna and 65,000 feet of open deck.

Rates for the cruise range from $1,095 to $2,710 per person, double occupancy, and include free round-trip airfare from more than 80 U.S. cities. Cost for one or two children under 17 in the same cabin with two adults is $335 per child (air fare excluded).

More information: Norwegian Caribbean Lines, 1 Biscayne Tower, Miami, Fla. 33131, (800) 327-7030, or see a travel agent.

In another cruise tie-in with Disney, Premier Cruise Lines and Eastern Airlines have created a "Cruise and Walt Disney World Vacation Week." It features a three or four-night Bahamas cruise aboard the SS Royale and a three or four-night visit to Walt Disney World and Epcot Center.

The ship embarks from Port Canaveral, 40 miles east of Orlando, Fla., and stops at Nassau and San Andros. Rates vary according to the hotel; the three-night cruise, four-night Disney package prices start at $706 per person, double occupancy, excluding air fare.

More information from Eastern Airlines or a travel agent.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I eat out a great deal in many different places, and tipping has always been a problem for us. (Is it necessary to tip someone who is already drawing a salary to wait on you? And if so, how much is sufficient?) Anyway, you might be interested in our solution to this problem.

Several years ago, while the wife and I were waiting for a table in a busy restaurant, we overheard one waitress ask another waitress how she could afford a vacation in Hawaii. "I saved my tips," was the answer.

I told my wife, "We should do that, too." So since then, instead of leaving a tip, we leave a beautiful religious tract. These inspiring spiritual messages are a great force for good, and I'm sure they've had a wondrous effect on the many waitresses we left them for.

We put our "tip" money into a cigar box, and last year we took a trip to Jamaica!

Through this simple solution, we feel that we have made everybody happy. Pass it on. — LOVES TO TRAVEL IN OAK PARK, ILL.

DEAR LOVES: While inspirational messages may have a "wondrous" effect on some, legal tender may be preferred by those who rely on tips to pay their bills. So before you make any more waitresses "happy" by leaving a religious tract instead of money, consider this:

As of Jan. 1, 1983, federal law requires tipped employees to pay taxes on a minimum of 8 percent of the restaurant's gross sales whether they actually received that much in tips or not.

DEAR ABBY: If a woman marries a widower with children, she then becomes the stepmother to his children, right?

What happens if they get divorced and he marries again? Is wife No. 2 still considered the stepmother? Or does wife No. 3 become the stepmother? So what happens to wife No. 2? — CONFUSED IN VERMONT

DEAR CONFUSED: The woman to whom the man is married is the stepmother of his children. If that marriage is dissolved, the stepmother becomes a former stepmother, and the next wife (if there is one) becomes the stepmother.

Collectors consider studio glass art

The Associated Press

Quietly, but with growing certainty that they are on to something important, a small group of collectors and aficionados of handmade contemporary art glass have been helping to make studio glass an important art collectible.

Recently, the group showed its strength at the annual meeting of the Glass Art Society in Corning, N.Y. The society was founded in 1971 as a forum for communication among glass artists, collectors, scholars and others. More than 500 members came to the Corning Glass Center for the four-day meeting. The turnout was the largest ever for a G.A.S. meeting, according to William Warmus, conference coordinator and associate curator of 20th-century glass at the Corning Museum of Glass.

The group heard more than 70 speakers and also viewed some of the art nouveau glass masterpieces of Emile Galle, assembled as its major 1984 exhibition by the museum.

One speaker noted that although handmade art glass represents only about $117 million in wholesale sales — a tiny percentage of the total $2.6 billion glass market — it is recording increased sales each year.

Efrem Zimbalist III, chairman of Corning Art Glass in Los Angeles, said art glass sales had been growing at a rate of 12 percent a year recently.

That's quite an achievement for a movement that virtually did not exist in 1960 and was largely developed only after a demonstration in 1962 that molten glass could be worked in an artist's studio, he noted.

Another speaker pointed out that at an exhibition assembled at the Corning Museum in 1969, 95 percent of the pieces shown were factory-made and only 5 percent were handmade. By 1979, the percentages were exactly reversed in another museum exhibition — 95 percent of the pieces had been made by hand by artist-craftsmen.

Harvey Littleton and Dominick Labino demonstrated in 1962 that glassmaking could be taken out of the factory and into the artist's studio.

Furthermore, according to Paul Hollister, a writer on glass and other craft media arts, Americans have been leaders in sharing information on glass techniques.

Once an arcane craft in which secrets were hidden or "kept in the family," glassmaking has emerged as a medium in which artists exchange information on how to achieve new effects. Popular speakers at the meeting were artists who talked about their work and explained in detail how they created their unique pieces.

"There are more collectors, more publicity and more artists today," said Zimbalist, who added that sales of art glass should continue to increase at a rate of about 12 percent a year.

Besides traditional crafts outlets such as fairs and shops, several speakers noted that newer avenues of distribution for art glass include art galleries, department stores with crafts and fine arts departments, gift shops and decorator showrooms in wholesale furniture buildings.

The public for the work has also increased. Where once gift buyers and individuals decorating their homes might have been the typical purchasers, today serious collectors tend to make the important purchases. Prices for art glass have also substantially increased.

Recently the medium has received a boost with the acquisition of the work of a number of glass artists by American museums. Besides the Corning Museum, which owns 21,000 historic and contemporary pieces, the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York is known to have acquired work by glass makers such as Harvey Littleton, Dale Chihuly and Michael Glancy, among others.

Other museums interested in glass include the Chrysler in Norfolk, Va., and the San Jose (Calif.) Museum, according to Ruth Summers, a gallery owner in Los Angeles.

Another force in the development of the studio glass movement, according to some authorities, has been the Corning Glass Museum which is part of the Corning Glass Center. Approximately 500,000 people visit the center each year, according to Dwight P. Lanmon, museum director.

Tips offered for flower arrangements

For beautiful, lasting flower arrangements, try these tips from FTD florists as given in Family Circle magazine:

— Pick flowers from the garden when the sun isn't too hot, in early morning or late afternoon. Carry a pail of tepid water along to immerse cut flowers at once. Keep pail in a cool place until ready to arrange flowers.

— If flowers are bought, put them in tepid water upon returning home, even if not ready to arrange them.

— Remove all leaves from flower and foliage stems which will be under water in the container. Leaves promote bacterial growth, which shortens the life of plants.

— Before arranging flowers, cut stems on an angle to provide a larger surface for them to draw water. If the stems are not cut, the ends may be jammed against sides or bottom of container, preventing them from absorbing water.

— Prolong flowers' lives with preservatives. For arrangements in foam blocks: Put one packet of premeasured preservative in water, soak foam block until bubbles stop forming.

Museum houses 20,000 costumes

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Few places in the world could throw a costume party like this city's famed Valentine Museum.

But it would be a static gathering of lifeless mannequins, since the more than 20,000 costumes in the museum's priceless textile collection no longer grace the human form.

"While they're not as fragile as one might think considering their age, we wouldn't dream of letting anyone wear them," said Grace Wells, curator of textiles.

The textile collection, which also includes exquisite laces, embroideries, quilts, upholstery, rugs, drapery and the tools to make them, is certainly not all there is to the unique Valentine Museum. But it is a focal point that has attracted international acclaim.

"Ours is one of the largest and most important textile collections in the nation," said John Zehmer, the museum's director.

Mrs. Wells said the costume collection was the second largest in the United States and ranked No. 1 in American clothing.

"People come from all over the world to see it. It's worth untold millions," she said.

Zehmer noted that when the Metropolitan Museum in New York wanted to establish an "American Room," it came to the Valentine Museum to do the research and borrow costumes for display.

Mrs. Wells reigns over a large temperature-controlled room in which the costumes are individually encased in plastic bags hanging from two-tiered oval racks that rotate electrically like those in a dry cleaning shop.

The costumes, dating from the late 1600s to the present, offer a dazzling array of fabrics and unbelievably detailed needlework.

"Before the mid-1800s, everything was handmade. It sometimes took a year to make one dress for a wealthy patron," Mrs. Wells said.

The collection includes many historically notable costumes such as the crimson velvet and ermine coronation robes of Lady Nancy Astor, the "great coat" of King Stanislaus II of Poland, a brocade dress worn by Mary Ball Washington, the president's mother, suits worn by Patrick Henry and Robert E. Lee, Revolutionary and Civil War uniforms and the inaugural gowns of Virginia governors' wives.

There are wedding gowns and mourning dresses, "Little Lord Fauntleroy" suits, buckskin frontiersmen's outfits and lace-trimmed morning coats worn by the foppish dandies of the 18th century.

In endless rows of drawers and boxes are accessories such as wigs, tiaras, hats, fans, shawls, shoes, underclothes and headgear.

Only a few of the costumes are ever seen by the public when the museum elects to use mannequins in its displays.

A broader sampling is reserved for those who take advantage of the museum's Textile Resource and Research Center, established in 1970 for students of textiles, needle arts, costume design and related fields.

A one-week annual seminar on fine needlework attracts some 250 people from throughout the nation.

Valentine Museum, opened to the public in 1898, was established by the terms of the will of Mann S. Valentine II, a Richmond merchant and noted collector of the arts.

At first it embraced only the Wickham-Valentine House, a handsome neoclassical structure built in 1812. The museum has since expanded to take in most of the mid-19th-century houses along one side of a tree-shaded street over which towers the sprawling Medical College of Virginia complex.

While it gets some city and state funds, the museum retains its independence and operates largely through private donations.

Its key permanent exhibit chronicles through artifacts, drawings, photographs and text the life of Richmond and its people.

Spectator statistics truly Olympian

By ERMA BOMBECK

Sports has always been a game of statistics.

Every second . . . every yard . . . every movement is measured and finds its place in the record books. The summer Olympic games, which open July 28 in Los Angeles, are no exception.

These are some statistics worth noting.

Los Angeles will be the host city to 4.5 million visitors to the games. A total of 2.6 million will have their luggage with them. Those coming in from the west may claim their luggage in Dallas. Those coming from the east will eventually find theirs in Tokyo.

Those attending the Olympics will be housed in 2,500 hotels, averaging 700 occupants. There will be one elevator running in each of these hotels between the hours of 1 a.m. and 3 a.m. every other Friday.

The time it takes to get to your room each evening will equal the gestation period of your first child.

Room rates will run from $140 nightly to $245. This will not include hot water, a TV that works, or assurances that you will receive any messages for you marked URGENT.

A total of 90 languages will be spoken in Los Angeles during the weeks of the games. Interpreters will be provided on a hot line. Cabs can be summoned in any language, except English. Checks will not be cashed in any language.

Anyone finding food products, wearing apparel, appliances, services, transportation, medication, reading material, entertainment or spiritual items not officially endorsed and used by Olympians is asked to report them immediately to the Olympics Committee.

On the streets each day will be a total of 127,000 cars and 1.9 million pedestrians. By Aug. 12, the number of pedestrians will be cut in half.

Of the 127,000 cars, only 15,000 will find a parking place.

Visitors to the 1984 Olympics have trained for this moment for years. They welcome the challenge.

They will feel excitement, exhaustion and pride. They have done something quite extraordinary. Win or lose, they would do it all over again.

That's what the Olympics are all about.

Geraldine Ferraro, three-term Congresswoman from New York, is a contender for Walter Mondale's running mate.

Comet of the Capital

By KATHY LARKIN
King Features Syndicate

"Why not a woman?"

That query has become an echo shaking city rooms, small towns and the political caucuses of all America as a world of media and delegates converge on San Francisco for the hype, the hoopla and the serious business of the Democratic National Convention — choosing a winning team to confront White House incumbents Ronald Reagan and George Bush in November.

Dispossessing them may take extra clout. And, whether Walter Mondale, Gary Hart, Jesse Jackson or even some surprise name heads the ticket, since Reagan's "gender gap" may loom as a chasm, why not a woman vice-presidential candidate?

Some experts put that question differently. Why not this woman, three-term Congresswoman Geraldine Ferraro? She's 48, an articulate, chic, aggressive, attractive lawyer; daughter of a close Italian-American family; wife of 24 years; mother of three grown children and now highly visible as the first woman ever to chair the pivotal Democratic Party Platform Committee.

She has the blessing and support of her husband, successful realtor John Zaccaro. He's an easygoing man who shrugs off references to "Mr. Ferraro" that anger his wife. With this support, Ms. Ferraro fought a hard, sometimes bitter campaign ("No one knew me in 1978. I was coming from nowhere," she says) to become one of just 22 women among 435 Americans in the U.S. House of Representatives.

AND IN LESS than six years, with the backing of House majority leader and mentor Thomas "Tip" O'Neill, with long hours to work (Tuesday through Thursdays in Washington, D.C., 7 a.m. to 11 p.m.,

"But I do think Democrats now are seriously considering a woman vice president. For just one reason. They want to win. They'll look closely at the polls and see if a woman could add more strength to the ticket than a man... I think a woman on the ticket is possible. And I don't think anyone will put a woman on as a symbolic gesture. The job is just too important."

— Geraldine Ferraro

before she taxis to an empty, one-bedroom apartment on the Hill), Ms. Ferraro has shot like a well-aimed comet into the Capital stratosphere.

She has landed on the important Democratic Steering and Policy Committee; on the Budget Committee which determines spending priorities from military defense to care for the elderly. "That," Ms. Ferraro says frankly, "is not a lightweight job."

True. But it is nothing compared to her slot as the first woman chair of the Democratic Platform Committee, a slot that guarantees her high TV coverage during the convention and has already brought her grief.

Ms. Ferraro's job: to see that the Democratic Party's war banner of principles and goals is a plank wide enough to support what she labels "all those disenfranchised by the Reagan administration. That means everyone but the wealthy — women, the elderly, gays, blacks, working-class people." At the same time, it must be narrow enough to focus on the issues. It is a job that can lead to missteps.

In some cases, Ms. Ferraro is almost tiptoeing across a tightrope. And in one case, she stumbled, badly. But in pursuit of that goal, Ms. Ferraro has flown cross-country, listening to 120 "special interest" speakers daily in Houston, Cleveland, Birmingham, Alabama, Los Angeles and Springfield, Ill.

IN SPRINGFIELD she found herself at 7 a.m. chatting with a farmer in a field where the cows took one look at small-boned, chic Ms. Ferraro with her cap of blond hair and fled.

"The farmer said I was 'strange.' I said I knew that," she quipped. "And he said, 'No. A stranger to the cows.'"

This sunny late afternoon, Congresswoman Ferraro — in a softly draped plaid silk dress with a light, neatly tailored black jacket — is a continent's width, but a mere breathing space from the convention itself.

This is the convention where Geraldine Ferraro already plans to go AWOL that first night, just for a few hours, just for a quiet dinner with her husband in a French restaurant. "It will be our 24th wedding anniversary," she says.

This, too, is a French restaurant, a small bistro within a two-block walking distance from her high-rise office building (a 21-minute ride from New York's skyscrapers). It's a white-walled, timbered building that fits neatly into the mixed blend of workingmen's Queens Boulevard and the Forest Hills tennis courts, showcase of the rich.

At this late hour, Ms. Ferraro — who hasn't eaten since the half-bagel she devoured earlier that morning — is lunching on a mushroom salad and the inevitable questions.

HOW SERIOUS, really, are the Democrats (and Republicans) proposing any woman as a possible Vice President?

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. Treat Williams has been a favorite of mine since I saw him in the film "Hair." Can you tell me a little about him and what his current plans are?

Susan Boettger
Colorado Springs, Colo.
A. He's 32, was born in Rowayton, Conn., and his real name is Richard Treat Williams, although he's always, he says, just been called Treat. (The name originated with ancestor Robert Treat Payne, a signer of the Declaration of Independence.)

His show-business break can be traced back to the age of 4 when he performed in a neighborhood production of "Peter Pan" directed by famed director George Abbott's daughter, Judy.

Years later, she saw him in a production of Shakespeare while he was in college at Franklin and Marshall, and recommended him to the influential William Morris Agency, beginning his career. In the course of that career, he sang and danced on Broadway in "Grease" and "The Pirates of Penzance."

Williams acted in films such as "Prince of the City" and "The Pursuit of D.B. Cooper." On TV he's starred in the recent "A Streetcar Named Desire" and "Dempsey."

His current film is the controversial "Once Upon a Time in America" in which he plays a

Treat Williams and Beverly D'Angelo

Jimmy Hoffa-esque union leader. His newest project is "Scandal," Michael ("A Chorus Line," "Dreamgirls") Bennett's new musical comedy about a husband and wife.

Q. I think Blythe Danner is a superb actress but I don't know very much about her. Could you please fill me in on her personal and theatrical life?

L.H.
Plainsboro, N.J.

A. She's 40, the daughter of a Philadelphia Main Line banker father (who predicted his daughter's vocation by naming her Blythe because he thought it would look good on a marquee) and an opera-singer mother.

She studied theater at Bard College in upstate New York and

Donna Mills

Q. I have a ongoing argument with my sister that I'd like you to settle. I say that Donna Mills of "Knots Landing" is one of John Mills' daughters; she says she isn't. Who's right?

D. Schlusser
Granville, Mass.

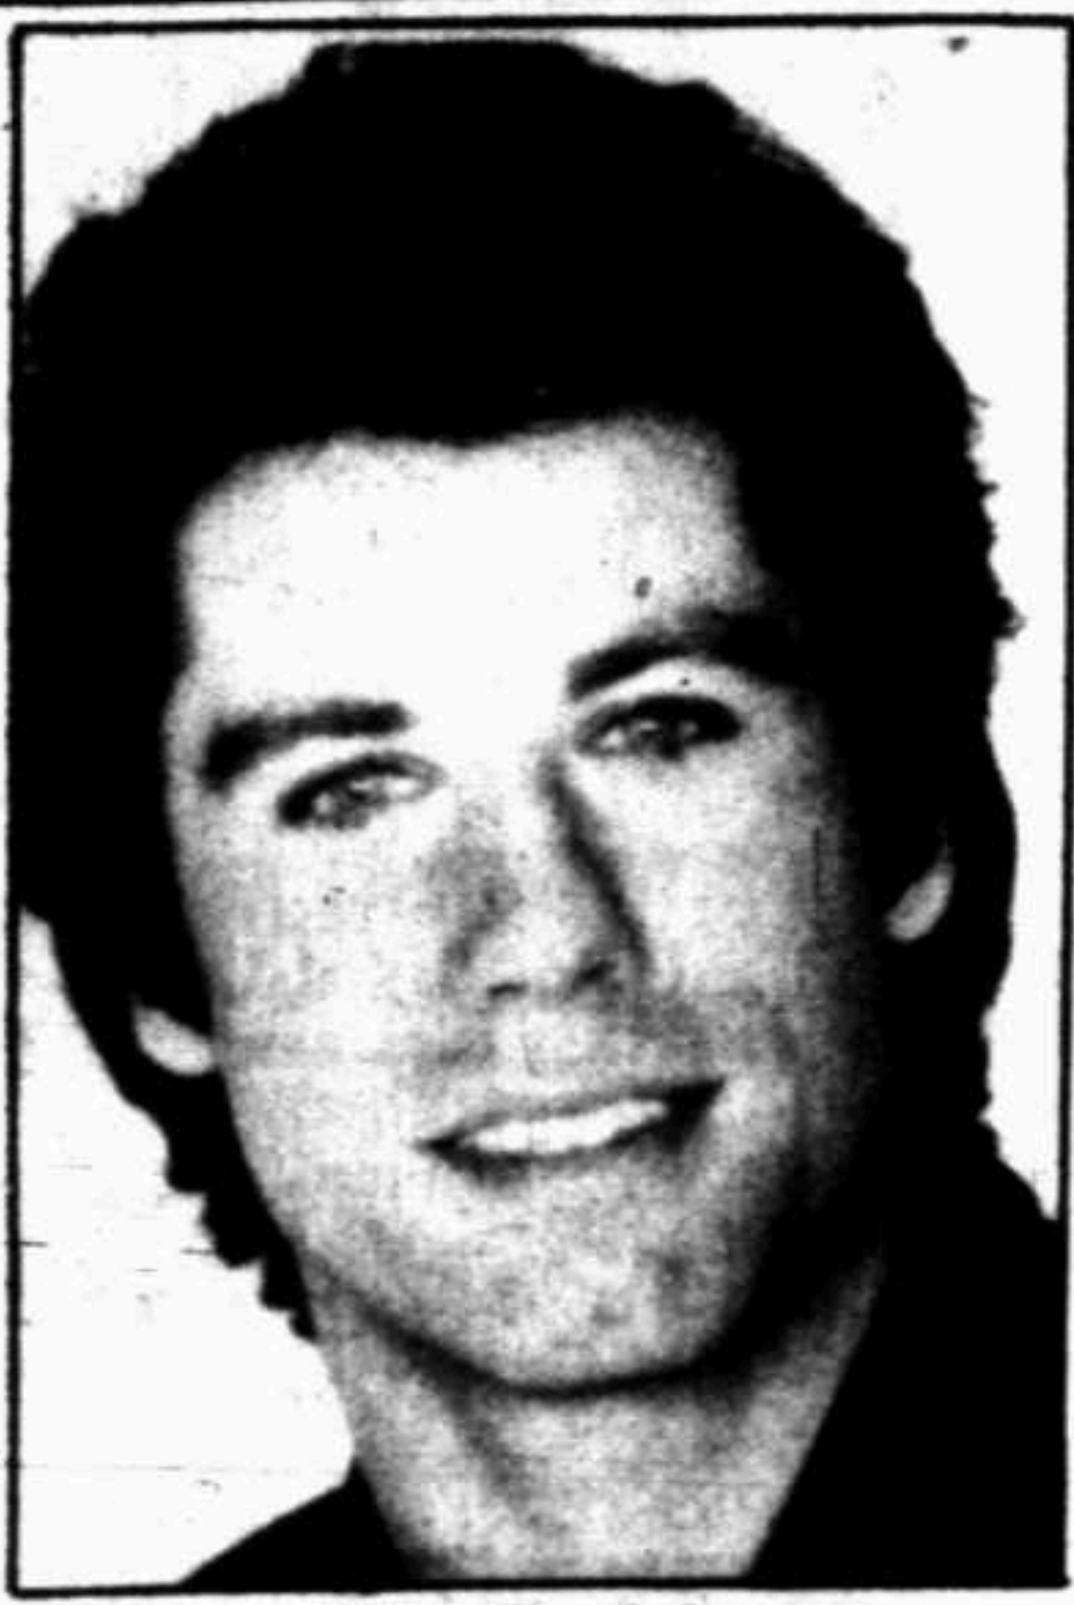

A. She is. Her real name is Donna Miller, but she couldn't use it professionally because Actor's Equity already had an actress listed with that name. Two are not allowed, so she changed it to Mills.

But, as she explains, now thousands of people ask her how her father, John, and sisters, Juliet and Hayley, are. "If I have time, I explain," she says. "Otherwise I just say they're fine."

Q. John Travolta is my all-time favorite actor. I just want to know if he'll be doing any more movies.

Barbara M. Davis
Laredo, Texas

A. After his recent critical pastings in "Second Chance" and "Staying Alive," that's a good question, but the answer is yes. His next, "Perfect," deals with the social scene around a health club — appropriate for his Staloned body from "Staying Alive." It co-stars Jamie Lee Curtis, and starts shooting as soon as they finalize the script. After that, the offers are there, but the plans are tentative.

John Travolta

Q. What has that super actor Frank Langella been up to lately? Has he been making movies, doing plays, TV shows or what?

Janice Pugliano
Westfield, Mass.

A. With the exception of the TV special "I, Leonardo" on the life of Da Vinci, which aired last year, he's been doing mostly plays. He was on Broadway in "Amadeus" in 1982, directed a play, "Passione," that same year, and last year starred in a play called "Passion."

As we go to press, he's about to open on Broadway in a Noel Coward play, "Design for Living," directed by George C. Scott and co-starring Jill Clayburgh and Raul Julia.

Frank Langella

In recent years, she has acted at Lincoln Center in "The Philadelphia Story," on Broadway in "Betrayal" and every summer at the Williamstown Festival Theater in Massachusetts, where she is again this summer.

Movies include "The Great Santini" opposite Duvall and "Heart of the West." On TV, she appeared in "Too Far to Go," "The Lou Gehrig Story" and a short-lived series, "Adam's Rib." On the personal side, she's married to writer/director/producer Bruce Paltrow and has two children, Gwyneth and Jake.

FERRARO

Yes, Tip O'Neill says she's qualified. Yes, Mondale, Hart and Jackson will consider or are committed to a woman as running mate. And Charles Manatt, chairman of the Democratic Party, insists that evaluating a woman vice-presidential candidate "has gone beyond the hypothetical stage."

Certainly Congresswoman Ferraro, a pro-choice, feminist legislator with moderate-to-liberal views, is nothing if not an astute politician. She was returned to Congress in 1982 with a whopping 73 percent of the vote from "Archie Bunker" land, a conservative, Catholic working-class area of Queens. What does she really think?

Using a natural body language, the occasional Morse Code stab of short, expressive fingers to emphasize points, Ms. Ferraro says slowly: "Let me put it this way. If the Democratic delegates thought they could put a male on the ticket and draw the same number of voters as they might with a woman candidate, well..." she shrugs.

"But I do think Democrats now are seriously considering a woman vice president. For just one reason. They want to win. They'll look closely at the polls and see if a woman could add more strength to the ticket than a man."

It's a viewpoint that former Congressman and New York Mayor Ed Koch endorses. But he raises another point. Says Koch, asked to comment on the ticket, "I believe Mondale will be our candidate. And I believe the vice president will be Gerri Ferraro or Senator Lloyd Bentson (D-Texas)."

"I hope it's Gerri Ferraro. She is capable of being president and is therefore obviously capable of being vice president. She would add enormous strength to the ticket. I know her. Her values are the values of mainstream America. There is a gender gap that would be enhanced in favor of the Democrats by having a woman on the ticket. I am for having Gerri Ferraro on that ticket."

Despite that endorsement, Koch has raised the question of succession. Will the U.S. voters in 1986 accept a woman not just as vice president, but as possible president?

Says Ms. Ferraro honestly, "I don't know. But I have to tell you there is a lot of movement throughout the country for a woman on the ticket. I think what is happening is... Democrats just want to win so badly."

"And being president has been a white-male-only job for so many years! Now we have a situation that might call for a woman. So yes, I think a woman on the ticket is possible. And I don't think anyone will put a woman on as a symbolic gesture. The job is just too important."

It is very hard to doubt her commitment to women's rights. She was 8 when her doting father, Dominic, 46, owner of a Newburgh, N.Y., restaurant and dime store, died of a sudden heart attack.

He was an immigrant and an American citizen who so loved his adopted country that he bought war bonds although he knew the investment might send bombs dropping like deadly rain across his parents' homeland.

He was a father who indulged his last child, the only girl born after two of his three sons had died — one in infancy, the other in an automobile accident when he was 3.

Antonetta Ferraro, her diminutive mother — who never learned to drive a car, who never could, even on high heels, keep up with her six-foot husband — was, of necessity, decisive.

After his death, she moved to the Bronx, returned to her old garment-center job of stitching beads to evening gowns and sent her daughter to a boarding school with whatever money was left. She also steered her daughter away from her own dead-end job. When Gerri Ferraro tried to join her mother, Antonetta sabotaged her. "I gave her the toughest job, spangle stitching. She gave up."

Or as Ms. Ferraro remembers it: "She said: 'Gerri. You're no good.

You'll starve if you don't get an education.'"

So she did, winning a full scholarship to Marymount, Tarrytown, spending a five-year grind teaching at PS 85 by day and studying through Fordham Law School at night.

Moving up and into Congress as a woman has not been easy. "I remember when I was interviewing, just out of law school, for a job at the law firm Dewey Ballantine, they said, 'We're not hiring any women this year.'"

And if the easiest personal decision of her life was to marry the man she met on a double date — "I loved him. We were friends then and we've been friends forever since" — and her best career choice was Congress.

Ms. Ferraro insists, and seems to mean, she is not actively seeking a slot on the ticket. "This is not my goal. It really isn't."

Gremlins have mean streak, warped sense of humor

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Although "Gremlins" are thoroughly vicious little monsters, they are also oddly likeable.

Director Joe Dante's gremlins have a mean streak a mile wide, but they also have a funny — albeit very warped — sense of humor.

The film starts out innocently enough as amateur inventor Hoyt Axton buys a strange but cute little animal — a Mogwai — in San Francisco's Chinatown as a Christmas present for son Zach Galligan.

Axton is also given three important rules for the care and feeding of a Mogwai:

—Never get it wet,
—Never expose it to bright light,
—And most importantly, never, ever feed it after midnight.

Of course, these three rules are almost immediately broken after Axton returns to his quiet hometown with the creature, which he nicknames Gizmo.

Once the rules are broken, the little gremlins multiply until they number in the hundreds and all of them, except for the loyal Gizmo, begin wreaking havoc on the small town on Christmas eve.

However, the rampaging gremlins act more like the most obnoxious practical jokers on earth than typical horror movie monsters.

Instead of straightforward attacks, gremlins prefer dirty tricks, such as causing accidents by making all the traffic lights turn green simultaneously or taking a snowplow on a joyride through the middle of a living room.

The gremlins also make fun of humans by doing bizarrely humorous parodies of flashers, break-dancers and Christmas carolers.

The film itself makes fun of conventional horror movies by slipping in references to other thrillers.

For example, one scene in which Axton makes a telephone call from an inventor's convention is packed with tidbits of film trivia.

During the short time he's in the phone booth, Steven Spielberg cruises by in a go-cart, Robby the Robot from the classic 1956 science fiction film "Forbidden Planet" strolls past and the time machine from George Pal's 1960 version of H.G. Wells' "The Time Machine" whirrs away in the background.

Gizmo the good gremlin is obviously inspired by E.T. and is every bit as lovable as that famous alien. With an incredible range of facial expressions, the furry little special effect manages to steal almost every scene he's in from the film's human actors.

The theater has posted a warning sign by the ticket counter warning that "Gremlins" may be too intense for younger children.

Some of the gremlins' few frontal attacks are vicious and there is one truly gross scene in which a gremlin is pured in a food processor and another is baked in a microwave oven.

Otherwise, the film is only a little more violent than Bugs Bunny-Roadrunner cartoons (Dante emphasizes this by using cartoon-type sound effects).

Nevertheless, the movie is suspenseful. Even though the film is filled with the laughter of little gremlins, their bizarre behavior never lets the audience forget that the glint in their eyes is purely malevolent.

"Gremlins," rated PG, is now showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Ghostbusters' very silly film

"Ghostbusters" begins like a standard horror film. A tight, almost claustrophobic tracking shot follows a lone librarian as she walks between dark stacks of books. Ominous music swells in the soundtrack.

She suddenly encounters a frightening and evidently not-very-nice spirit in the library's basement.

A college's parapsychology department, consisting of Bill Murray, Dan Aykroyd and Harold Ramis, are called in to investigate the ghostly doings and things immediately become very silly.

During their ensuing pursuit of ghosts — and an honest profit — the trio get kicked out of the university, go into private business as "ghostbusters" (sort of supernatural Roto-Rooter men who clear out pesky spirits), anger the EPA, get entangled with a powerful Sumerian demon and make the covers of USA Today, Omni and Time.

Eventually, they battle Armageddon itself as it marches down the streets of New York City in the form of a gigantic killer marshmallow.

Murray, using a slightly subdued version of his "Saturday Night Live" character, is given most of the laughs in the film, while Aykroyd and Ramis play it fairly straight.

"You're not much like a scientist. You're more like a game show host," Murray is told by Sigourney Weaver, who does a fine job in her first comic role after appearing in such serious films as "Alien," "Eyewitness" and "The Year of Living Dangerously."

Rick Moranis, of the SCTV series, also does an outstanding job in a minor role as a tax accountant who is such a quintessential nerd that when he throws a party he invites clients instead of friends so he can write it off as a business expense.

Special effects in "Ghostbusters" are better than in most horror movies although they are almost always used for laughs instead of screams.

Youngsters may find a couple of gargoyles that appear in the movie a bit spooky and the reviewer was even startled by one scene involving an armchair, but even small children probably won't have nightmares after seeing this supernaturally funny comedy.

"Ghostbusters," rated PG, is now showing at the UA Cine 4.

First 'Conan' better than sequel

"Conan the Destroyer," starring Arnold Schwarzenegger, is the sequel to 1982's "Conan the Barbarian." Both films are based on the violent pulp epics written in the 1930s by Texan Robert E. Howard, who lived in Cross Plains.

In the first Conan movie, it was obvious that champion bodybuilder Schwarzenegger had found his niche. His massive body, heavy foreign accent and limited acting range were actually assets in the role of barbaric warrior Conan.

His Conan was a brooding and heroically picaresque character roaming the world during the ancient "Hyborian Age" invented by Howard.

"Barbarian," while hardly a cinema classic, stood well above the average sword-and-sorcery movie because director John Milius projected his own political and philosophical views into the film.

He prefaced "Barbarian" with a quote from the 19th century German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche ("That which does not kill us, makes us stronger.")

Milius also made the villain Thulsa Doom, played by James Earl Jones, into a cross between Jim Jones of Guyana massacre infamy and Charles Manson, and he depicted Doom's deluded followers as being much like 1960s hippies.

Regardless of how one felt about Milius' views, at least his Conan film was trying to make a point.

Sadly, the sole point of "Conan the Destroyer," directed by Richard Fleischer, is to try to make a profitable sequel.

In this film, Schwarzenegger is sent off with a group of companions by an evil queen, played by Sarah Douglas, in search of a treasure which is supposed to revive an ancient god.

Of course, the journey is fraught with perils, betrayals and several decapitations.

Conan's companions are a mixed bag — a virgin princess, played with adequate naivete by the photogenic Olivia D'Abo; a wizard, Mako, who is the only actor other than Schwarzenegger to be carried over from the first movie; a warrior, Wilt Chamberlain; a thief, played by rock star Grace Jones; and the inevitable comic sidekick, Tracey Walter.

Only Grace Jones comes across with much vigor. Her exotic looks and energetic acting style make her the sole character to be Conan's match.

Wilt Chamberlain is wasted in his supporting role. His character is never made much of a menace and, due to poor costuming, he doesn't even look very tall or muscular.

Conan is given a lighter, more likeable touch, but in the process loses much of his barbaric dignity. Indeed, he is depicted as extraordinarily dull-witted.

At one point, the princess tells Conan to save Grace Jones who is under attack, saying, "There are six of them against her!"

Conan slowly counts, "One, two, three...I think you're right," before he goes to the rescue.

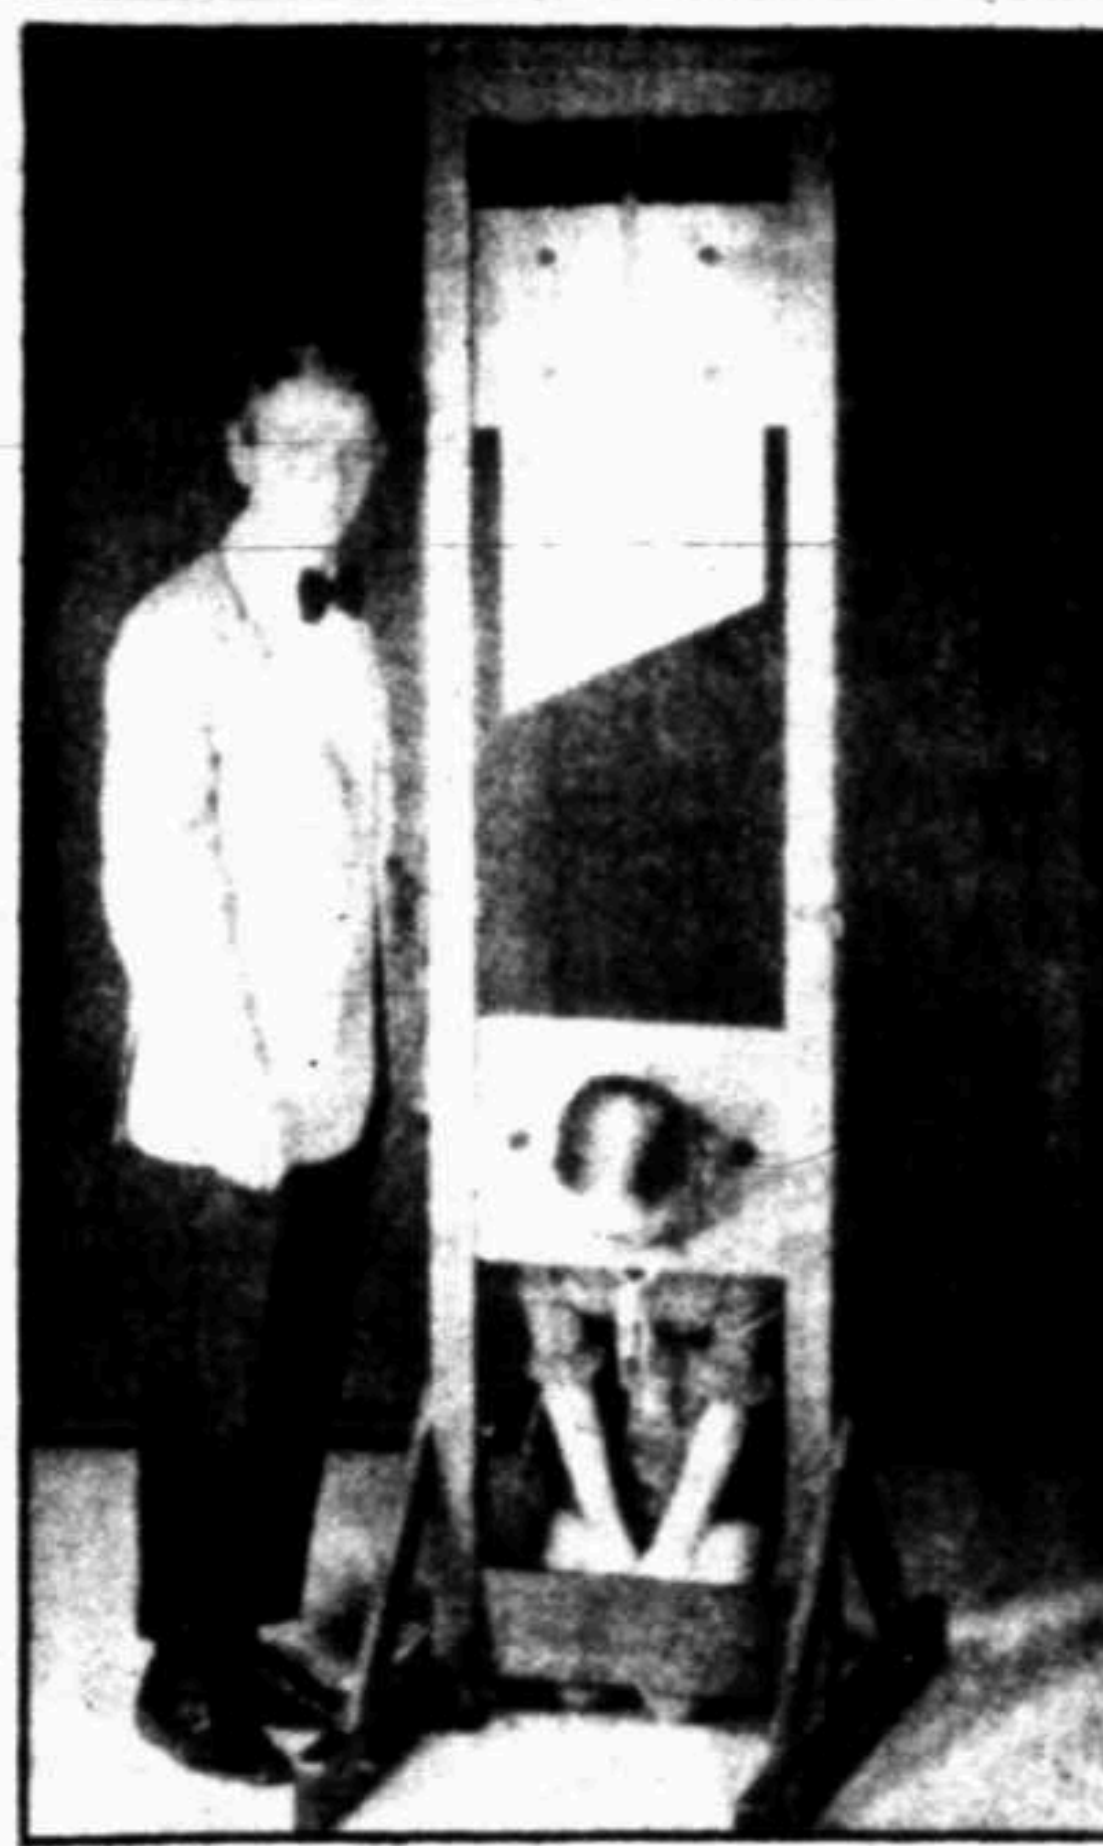

Fleischer was apparently at a loss for new ways to show how strong Conan is, so he resorts to repeating himself. Twice Conan punches out a horse and a camel (a stunt that was much funnier in "Blazing Saddles") and three times he forces open huge stone doors.

Despite its faults, "Destroyer" does have better than average production values for this type of film, and the soundtrack by Basil Poledouris is thunderingly powerful.

At the first major decapitation scene, some teenaged sounding male voices in the audience shouted, "Awright!" and most of the audience applauded and cheered when Conan wallops a camel, so it's safe to say that fans of the sword-and-sorcery genre will enjoy "Conan the Destroyer."

"Conan the Destroyer," rated PG, is now showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

Fred Story demonstrates the "gullotine trick" during his magic show, The Fred Story Revue, coming to Odessa High School Friday and Midland High School Saturday. Both shows are for the benefit of Sunshine Kids.

Magic show will benefit Sunshine Kids

The Fred Story Revue will bring its brand of magic to Odessa High School Friday and Midland High School Saturday in two benefit performances for the Sunshine Kids, a national organization for children with life threatening diseases.

Proceeds from these performances will go to benefit the local chapter of Sunshine Kids. Funds made available through donations and benefits allow these children, most of whom suffer from cancer, to participate in activities such as the National Sunshine Kids Winter Games, first held in Winter Park, Colo., in March 1983. The national organization originated in Houston two years ago.

Highlights of the Fred Story Revue include "Where Does the Duck Go?" "Fantasy in Flowers," the famous "Houdini Trunk" and the mystery of the "Oaken Bucket." Disbelieving skeptics will be invited on stage to assist in the performance of the Houdini Trunk. In addition, a boy from the audience will be "beheaded" on stage during the gullotine trick.

Tickets, priced at $3.50, may be purchased at the door. Local businesses have donated enough money to secure seats for those who are "handicapped or less fortunate" that want to attend. For more information call 687-4485.

John Henry Faulk

Humorist will speak at museum

John Henry Faulk, a regular on the long running "Hee Haw" television show, will speak at the Petroleum Museum at 7:30 p.m. July 18 as part of the museum's Fuqua Distinguished Lecture Series.

The Texas born and raised Faulk is nationally known as a humorist, folklorist and constitutional expert. He has had his own radio and television programs as well as guesting on such interview shows as "The Tonight Show" and "The Today Show." The Austin resident also has a number of acting roles to his credit, having appeared in the films "The Best Man," "Loving Molly" and "Leadbelly."

Faulk will speak on "To Secure the Blessings of Liberty." His remarks will be a folksy, humorous and yet serious account of the ideas and principles that are the essence of the people of the United States.

The lecture series is funded by The Sid W. Richardson Foundation in honor of the Fort Worth industrialist and philanthropist, H.B. Fuqua. The first speaker in the series was John E. Swearingin, retired board chairman of Standard Oil of Indiana.

The lecture will be followed by a reception honoring the speaker. Both the lecture and the reception are open to the public.

Museum's classics film series begins

The Museum of the Southwest's second summer film festival, "Adaptations from the Classics," begins Thursday with "The Good Earth."

The series includes "Anna Karenina," July 19; "Camille," July 26; and "Madame Bovary," Aug. 2. All showing are at 7:30 p.m. at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium. Seating is on a first-come, first-serve basis. Suggested donation is $2.

Mummers' hero, villain all they should be

The 1984 Summer Mummers — "Rascality on the Rig" or "Oil's Well That Ends Well" — is on-stage three nights a week through Labor Day at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

Performances are scheduled every Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Now in its 36th season, the Midland Summer Mummers returns to a play that has been successfully staged during three past seasons.

The plot focuses on the efforts of one Terrence Trueblue, a young petroleum engineer who is everything a hero should be, to clear his father's name which was blackened by the evil doings of Lester Leasehold, who is naturally everything a villain should be.

The two come face to face when both attempt to win the heart of beautiful Patience Plugback, the heroine who is, of course, everything a heroine should be.

This year's production is under the direction of Midland Community Theatre's executive director, D. Matthew Bachmann, who leads the valiant group of thespians to success or disaster. Performing in this year's summer madness are J. Malin Craig and R.S. Tilley as truthful Terrence; D. Wayne Ward and M.B. Trost as leering Lester; and Mils. P. Parker and J. McElligott as pretty Patience.

Ms. S.S. Mogford and Mlle. M.G. Gibson return in the role of guardian of the heroine, Peaches. Slide-erule Simpson, trusted friend of the hero, is played by J. Marc Coffey and C. Galloway. The role of Odessa Delilah, the temptress of the play, will be filled by Mme. S. Grayson Hitchcock and Mlle. M.S. Schaller.

Others in the company are J. Newkumet, Curt Hadaway, W. Wilson, D. Hiding, D. Garmeson, F. Wagoner, S. Lamm, P. Shaw, J. Judah, S. Voltz, T. Rosborough and C. Beare.

The melodrama is followed by an entertainment of olio performers.

This year, in order to alleviate confusion at the box office and in the minds of the patrons, the charge for a table reservation has been eliminated. This cost has now been included in the ticket price. Tickets at the large tables in front of the stage are $8, while the orchestra and lower balcony are $6.50. Tickets in the rear balcony are $5.

All tickets must be paid for within 48 hours of making reservations. Mail orders need to be accompanied by payment.

For more information call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

Vocal contest deadline extended

NASHVILLE — The fifth annual Music City Song Festival has announced July 15 as the new "Courtesy Extended Deadline" for the Song-Vocal Competition and the Lyric-Lyric Poem Competition.

For more information about the MCSF, which is open to amateur and professional songwriters, vocalists and lyricists, call toll free, 1-800-251-1791 or write P.O. Box 17999, Nashville, Tenn., 37217.

This year, the Music City Song Festival will award more than $25,000 in cash and prizes, as well as national recording contracts to over 2,000 winners. Video performances to be aired on national television are being arranged for certain grand prize winners.

The breakdown of categories is Pop/Top 40, MOR/Easy Listening, Country, Gospel and Rock/RB. Entry fees range from $15.75, depending on category selection. All entries must be accompanied by the official entry form.

MCSF also offers a judges evaluation done by a qualified industry professional.

Life not easy with visiting stepchild

By KAY MARIE PORTERFIELD
King Features Syndicate

9:00 a.m.: "I don't like your furniture. Are you guys poor?"
11:15 a.m.: "My mother doesn't have to buy books like you do. She knows everything already!"
12:00 noon: "I won't eat cucumbers sliced across. My mother makes sticks and they taste better."
1:45 p.m.: "I want to go home; my friends are nicer than the kids here."
3:05 p.m.: "Mom doesn't yell like you do when I run the shopping cart into people. She thinks it's funny."

Two days into the annual summer visit and I'm ready to tear my hair out. As soon as I get home from the grocery store, I send my stepson to his room. Soon I've calmed down enough to tell Casey, a kindergarten, he can rejoin society.

Within an hour I'm attempting dinner, fighting the gobs of peanut butter he has smeared on the counter, tripping over his track shoes in the middle of the kitchen floor and searching my brain for something he might eat. (He's gagged at everything I've cooked this visit, even the hot dogs.)

I can't help it, but there are tears in my eyes. I try so hard, but to no avail. Heaven help me, there's the camping trip to plan for, the Natural Museum and the zoo. How will I ever get my article done for deadline? My tears are premature.

If he were my son, I'd...but he isn't my son; he's my stepson and Walter's son. My son cleans up his messes. Within seconds of Walter's arrival home from work, Casey is on his lap crying and telling how I sent him to his room for nothing.

FROM THE kitchen, I steam. My husband has yet to say hello to me and already he and Casey are snuggled together on the sofa watching cartoons. Dylan, my 7-year-old, joins me in the kitchen, and together we burn dinner.

Later, when the boys are in bed, Walter and I have an argument that is becoming all too familiar. I feel used. Walter feels jealous of me because I have a full-time job at home and get to spend more time with Casey than he does!

I want Walter to at least acknowledge my existence when he comes home and to back me up when I've tried to make his son mind, not act as if he believed the child.

He knows that, but when you see your son for a few weeks out of the year, you don't want to waste time on unpleasant matters. Isn't it best to ignore them? I don't think I can take it. Walter thinks I have it easy. He puts up with my son on a full-time basis. We decide maybe I'm not trying hard enough. For some reason, I lose all interest in sex.

ALTHOUGH MANY people think it's easier to have a stepchild visit than to live year 'round with the species, those of us who have summer visitors know better. Any change is stressful, and having one more person in the family, a person who is a temporary resident, makes for many changes.

In effect, we've had to adjust to two different stepfamilies instead of one. There's you, me and my kid; and the summertime version of you, me, your kid and my kid. Add to those tensions a child who has left Mom, his friends and the familiar environs of home to journey 1,000 miles for the summer, and you have a potentially explosive situation.

We talked honestly about our feelings, about how there was an almost compulsive push to cram a year's worth of living into a few weeks. Granted, the good times were intense, but we were so busy showing our summer stepchild a good time that the entire family ended up feeling miserable.

Dylan was certain we loved Casey more than him. Why else would we change so dramatically when he got off the plane? Walter was with his son at movies and on all sorts of planned activities, but didn't have a chance to simply be with him. I was tired and resentful and it was impossible not to think of all the money we were spending, all the income I was giving up to be a tour director to an ungrateful child.

Poor Casey hadn't asked to visit a 24-hour entertainment center; he was visiting his dad and stepfamily. We were giving him and ourselves a bad case of sensory overload.

OUR FIRST step was to get rid of our fantasy expectations for the perfect visit. No, we didn't have to do something every single day. And, no, I didn't have to change our meals, our television viewing selections and my work completely around.

I needed to face facts that whenever Casey compared me to Mom, I would come up short. Once I gave up my martyrdom trip and began taking time for myself, the insults were easier to shrug off.

Even though we could change a good deal of Casey's behavior, we had to accept the fact that some of the upsetting things we couldn't change. Values between the two households were very different. Because Casey spends most of the year away from us, he isn't going to place a high priority on the same things we do.

Once we could understand that he was experiencing culture shock and accept him as he was, not as our fantasy dictated, we were able to relax and enjoy many of our differences. Falling into the trap of believing that we could instill our values in him during a few short weeks had turned our normally placid home into a reform school. That wasn't good for any of us.

Not surprisingly, once the pressure was off, the behavior improved. Together Walter and I sat down and planned times that he could spend alone with Casey in the house. Once Casey knew he had Walter's full attention at times, it was easier for him to accept the fact that Dylan and I weren't going to vanish from the planet forever.

THE MORE quiet times Walter spent with his son, the less need he felt for making every second count and not wanting to spoil those seconds correcting Casey. It became easier for him to discipline when it was needed. And Walter discovered that he could spend time with me without feeling I was robbing him of precious time with his son.

Ironically, the pressure we'd put on ourselves to build the summers around Casey to the exclusion of everything else had reinforced Casey's fantasies of having Dad to himself and getting my son and me kicked out of the house. As long as there was a chance of making his dream come true, you'd better believe the child would be manipulative.

Knowing what we could and should change and being able to sort those things out from the parts of Casey we needed to accept was a difficult job.

Still, it taught us one of the most important lessons anyone can ever learn — tolerance. "I like your house because you have lots of books," Casey told me last summer when I showed him how to use an almanac. Truly, there's more than one way to slice a cucumber!

Summertime Tips

— Abandonment fears can unsettle a visiting child worse than anything else. Make certain there is opportunity to contact the custodial parent.

— Strive for some continuity between the homes. Casey sends us an occasional drawing and he finds it on the refrigerator when he arrives. By the same token, we send some of his summer projects home with him at the end of a visit.

— Back off! It's tempting to catch up on a year's worth of news and hugs right away, but often a child needs some psychic and physical space to unwind after a journey.

— Cut back on entertainment. Too many "good times" actually keep you from knowing the child. Helping to cook and clean makes a child feel more a part of the household rather than an outsider who needs constant amusing.

— Children need their own personal space. A drawer of one's own works fine. It's even better if there are a few friendly and familiar toys in it.

— Don't take homesickness as a personal insult. It happens to the best of us. A visiting stepchild can be having a great time and still be overwhelmed on occasion by sadness.

— Be fair, but treat a visiting stepchild and the stepsiblings who live in the home as individuals. Spend time alone with each child.

— Make certain the visiting child spends plenty of time alone with the biological parent. If that relationship is a good one and a child's needs to be close are filled, then there's enough left over to form a stepfamily relationship.

Responsibilities go with hiring home help

King Features Syndicate

Hiring someone to clean your home or care for your children isn't just a matter of finding a hardworking, trustworthy employee. When you become an employer, you have certain responsibilities — and some paperwork.

Salary: You must pay housekeepers and babysitters who regularly work in your home at least the hourly minimum wage of $3.35. (This doesn't apply to babysitters who only watch the children occasionally.)

Taxes: Although your employee may want to work on a "cash only" basis, you'll have to pay back taxes as well as penalty and interest charges if you don't report the worker's income and pay the required taxes. It's best to pay your employee by check so you will have a record for the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). You can get the forms you'll need at an IRS office.

Social Security tax: You must pay Social Security tax (known as FICA — Federal Insurance Contribution Act) for any household employee to whom you've paid $50 or more in a calendar quarter. The 1984 tax is 13.7 percent of the employee's earnings; you pay seven percent and deduct 6.7 percent from the employee's salary. FICA taxes should be paid to the IRS each quarter on IRS form 942.

At the end of the year you must report your employee's annual wages and FICA taxes to the Social Security Administration on a W2 form and provide a copy to your employee.

Federal income tax: Employees can either pay their own federal income tax when they file their tax return or ask their employers to withhold the tax from their pay. The amount you withhold is based on information provided by your employee on a W4 form and the tax tables in the IRS Employers Tax Guide. The tax is paid quarterly on the same form (IRS form 942) as the FICA tax.

State and local income-tax laws vary, so check with the employment tax office in your state.

Federal unemployment tax: If you pay your employee $1,000 or more in any calendar quarter this year (or more than $75 per week), you must pay federal unemployment tax. Some states also require this tax, so check with your IRS and state tax offices.

Insurance: Ask your insurance agent if your policy covers you if your employee is injured on the job. If not, you may need workmen's compensation insurance.

VCRs let you view popular movies in comfort of own home

King Features Syndicate

Going to the movies will probably never go out of style. But thanks to video-cassette recorders — not only sales (there are now an estimated 10 million VCRs in American homes) but increasing rentals — watching the same movies in the convenience and comfort of your own home could prove just as popular.

About the size of a stereo receiver, VCRs come in two formats: VHS or Beta. Cassettes made for the VHS system are larger than those made for the Beta. For that reason the cassettes are not interchangeable.

Many of the more than 10,000

CHICAGO (AP) — Some people can't walk and chew gum at the same time, but Jim Plaskow can juggle and jog at the same time.

Plaskow, 30, a high school math teacher from Crete, Ill., plans to challenge the International Juggling Association's one-mile juggling record of 5:13 at the association games July 14 in Las Vegas.

Plaskow's personal record is of 5:12 for the juggling mile. He has gotten so adept that he ran a 6.2-mile race last month without dropping a ball, and finished 40th out of 300 runners even though he was the only jogger.

video stores across the country rent VCR machines for an average price of $10 per night. (Installing one is simply a matter of hooking the VCR cable to the VHF terminal at the back of your TV set.) And with many of these stores also renting 500 to 1,000 or more cassettes for an average $2 to $5 per night, you can now see almost anything you want, when you want to without leaving your living room — or having to pay a baby-sitter.

What's available?

There are now about 6,000 titles available on video cassettes with 100 or so new ones being added each month. Most are Hollywood films ranging from classics such as "Birth of a Nation," "Citizen Kane" and "Casablanca" to more recent releases such as "Raiders of the Lost Ark," "Gandhi" and "On Golden Pond."

But you need not limit yourself to movies. Exercise tapes featuring Jane Fonda and Richard Simmons and concert tapes of rock musicians are also available. Classical-music performances, sports, children's programming and educational and "how to" tapes help round out the market.

Should you become a regular rental customer, find out if the store you patronize has a club. For a yearly or lifetime fee, membership often confers special privileges such as lower rental rates and an occasional free viewing, which can save you money in the long run.

And should you decide to buy a VCR, keep in mind that the introduction of economy models has dropped the average price to around $500. Some cassette prices have also come down. Most now range from $30 to $80.

Main-dish eggs easy in microwave

King Features Syndicate

Follow these egg-cooking tips and you will make delicious main-dish eggs in your microwave oven in just minutes.

QUICK MUSHROOM QUICHE

4 ounces Swiss cheese, shredded
1/2 pound mushrooms, sliced
1/2 cup all-purpose flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon pepper
4 eggs
1 1/2 cups milk
2 teaspoons Worcestershire
1 3-ounce can French-fried onions
1/2 cup sliced green onions

Lightly grease 9-inch pie plate; set aside. In large bowl, toss together first five ingredients. In small bowl, beat eggs, milk and Worcestershire; stir into dry ingredients, mixing well. Pour into pie plate; cover with vented plastic wrap.

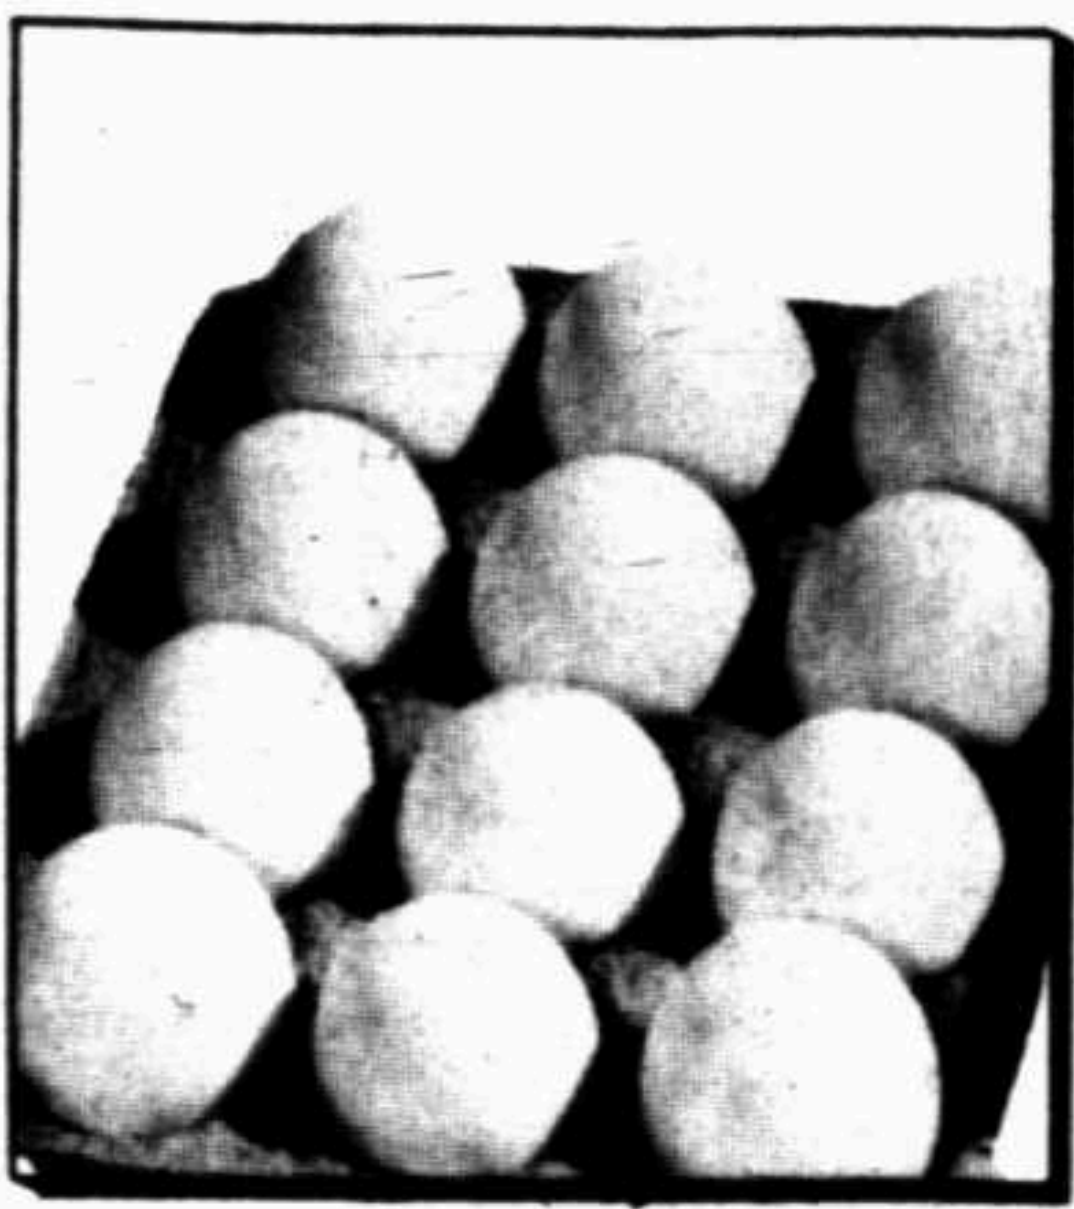

Cook on Medium 14 to 15 minutes, turning dish 1/2 turn after 7 minutes. Remove plastic wrap; sprinkle French-fried and green onions evenly over quiche. Cook on High 5 to 6 minutes, until center appears set, turning dish 1/2 turn after 2 1/2 minutes. Let stand 5 minutes. Makes 6 servings, 275 calories per serving.

EGG BURRITOS

10 eggs
1/2 cup diced onion
1/2 cup diced green pepper
2 8-ounce jars or bottles taco sauce
8 ounces Monterey Jack cheese, shredded
10 flour tortillas
1 medium avocado, peeled and cubed

In 2-quart bowl, beat first 3 ingredients with 1 jar taco sauce. Cook on High 6 minutes, stirring after 3 minutes. Add 1/2 cup cheese. Cook on High 4 to 6 minutes, until eggs are only slightly wet, stirring after 2 minutes.

On each tortilla, spread 1/2 cup egg mixture down center roll tortilla around filling. Place rolls, seam-side down, in 12-inch by 8-inch baking dish. Cover with remaining taco sauce and cheese. Cook on High 4 to 5 minutes, until cheese melts, turning dish 1/2 turn after 2 minutes. Top with avocado; serve immediately. Makes 10 servings, 335 calories per serving.

EGG AND HAM SCRAMBLE

8 eggs
1 cup diced cooked ham
1 1/2-ounce can evaporated milk
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon Dijon-style mustard
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon pepper
2 cups croutons seasoned with herbs and cheese
1/4 cup chopped parsley

In bowl with fork or wire whisk, mix first 7 ingredients. Pour into greased 2 1/2-quart casserole. Cook on High 5 minutes, stirring after 2 1/2 minutes. Stir in croutons. Cook on High 3 1/2 to 4 1/2 minutes until eggs appear only slightly wet, stirring after 2 minutes. Stir eggs to "fluff." Top with parsley. Serve immediately. Makes 6 servings, 300 calories per serving.

Basic Ways to Cook Eggs

— Use microwave oven for scrambling, poaching or baking eggs. Don't try to cook eggs in the shell — the eggs may explode.

— Fluffy scrambled eggs: Melt 1 teaspoon butter in bowl. Scramble eggs into butter with 1 tablespoon milk per egg. Cook on High 1/2 minute per egg, stirring several times, until only slightly wet.

— Before baking or poaching, pierce yolk with toothpick to prevent it from bursting. Since yolks cook faster than whites, cook eggs covered on Medium, remove before fully set; let stand, covered, 2 to 3 minutes, so steam can finish cooking whites.

— For perfect baked eggs: Break egg into a small greased bowl; cook about 1 minute. Add 1/4 minute for each additional egg.

— Perfect poached eggs: Place 1/2 inch water in small bowl and boil. Break egg onto small dish; slip egg into water. Cook till egg begins to set, about 1/2 minute. Add 1/4 minute for each additional egg. After standing time, remove with slotted spoon.

Cookbooks' strength simple recipes

By SANDRA SCOTT KLINK
King Features Syndicate

With a predictability rivaling that of the changing seasons, this time of year brings a new flurry of vegetarian-oriented and natural-foods cookbooks. They appear in bookstores at about the time the seeds go into the summer gardens. That leaves plenty of reading time to get some new ideas for using up all those eggplants, zucchinis, tomatoes and herbs when they converge on you.

Also predictable: an enormous variation in the quality of these books. This year, though, provides a clear standout: "Rodale's Basic Natural Foods Cookbook," edited by Charles Geras (Rodale Press, $25.95) is huge (800 pages), complete, imaginative and would be a bargain at any price. Cooking tips and techniques, charts, reference tables and guidelines for nearly every cooking need are interspersed among the 1,500 or so recipes.

Fine, you say. Another big cookbook with lots of recipes. There are plenty of them around. What makes this one special?

Consider the following: The recipes are, in general, quite simple but have great style; the emphasis is on natural, salt-free cooking; the amount of auxiliary information is truly encyclopedic; every recipe has been tested by Rodale's test kitchen. And that's just a few of its many pluses. If there is one cookbook to be purchased this season, this is it.

"Cooking with Herbs" by Susan Belinger and Carolyn Dille (Van Nostrand Reinhold, $15.50 in paperback) is a fine companion for herb gardeners. It is organized by herb (20, from familiar basil to underutilized lemon balm), and you'll find a range of recipes for each one.

No more excuses for not using your entire herb crop. Even the seasoned cook will find new ideas here — finds like Orange, Olive, and Avocado Salad with Cilantro, Oatmeal Bread with Thyme and Walnuts, Warm Potato and Turnip Salad with Sorrel.

Included, too, is information on growing, combining, harvesting, drying, freezing, concentrating (making herbal oils, vinegars) along with a nation-wide appendix of sources for herbs. Attractively illustrated with drawings and a center section of gorgeous color photographs, "Cooking with Herbs" would make a fine gift for any gardener.

Taking a detour from the path of the normal cookbook, you'll encounter "Mother Earth's Vegetarian Feasts" by Joel Rapp (Morrow, $8.95 in paperback). This chatty little book begins with menu suggestions which are organized by season. Then, further along you'll find the recipes for the components of these menus.

Rapp is a radio personality, and the book reflects his profession. He digresses, goes into exhaustive detail about the origins of some of his recipes, tells you more than you ever wanted to know about his personal life. Yak, yak, yak. Some might find it diverting.

If you're not diverted, just skip the verbiage and go to the recipes. Their strength: their simplicity. Their weakness: their ordinariness.

New vegetarian and natural-food cookbooks contain plenty of recipes to use the vegetables and herbs from your garden.

Most can be found readily elsewhere, but Rapp has made preparation so easy that nearly anyone could try any of them.

Nonvegetarians might benefit from this lighthearted foray into the vegetarian world...and the cartoon illustrations by Marvin Rubin are an appealing dash of whimsy.

For the more serious vegetarian-oriented cook, Rodale Press offers two more books worth mentioning: "The New American Vegetarian Menu Cookbook" by Paulette Mitchell ($9.95 in paperback) and "Tofu, Tempeh, & Other Soy Delights" by Camille Cusumano ($12.95 in paperback).

Focusing on occasions (picnics, family dinners, elegant evenings), "The New American Vegetarian Menu Cookbook" presents over 40 menus. They're all salt-free, made with easy-to-find ingredients, and are far from boring. An occasional lentil loaf or nutburger might scare off some nonvegetarians, but in general the suggestions are appetizing and appealing.

Camille Cusumano in "Tofu, Tempeh, & Other Soy Delights" presents plenty of information that helps the reader become comfortable with soyfoods, which are still slightly alien to many Americans.

Clearly presented and illustrated, the book contains tips on making some of the products at home as well as buying tips. The recipes are varied and reflect a clear Mexican influence in many cases, an interesting and lively touch. The fast-food crowd might even find a few temptations here.

Finally, a book to guide any cook along: "Betty Crocker's Kitchen

RADISHES BAKED IN MUSTARD SAUCE

1 pound radishes, thinly sliced
1/2 cup vegetable oil
1/2 cup lemon juice
1 teaspoon prepared mustard
1/2 teaspoon dry mustard
1/2 teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon dried parsley
Preheat oven to 350F.
Place radishes in a 1 1/2-quart baking dish.

Beat together oil, lemon juice, prepared mustard, dry mustard, pepper and parsley until well blended. Pour this mixture over radishes and bake, covered, for 30 minutes, or until radishes are pink and soft. Serves 4.

Eggplant and tomatoes never tasted better than in this appetizer from "The New American Vegetarian Menu Cookbook."

CAPONATA

1/2 cup olive or safflower oil
1 medium-size onion, chopped
3 stalks celery, chopped
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 medium-size eggplant, peeled and cut into 1/2-inch cubes
6 medium-size tomatoes, cut into 1/2-inch cubes
2 tablespoons cider vinegar
2 tablespoons tomato paste
1 tablespoon chopped fresh parsley
1 teaspoon dried basil
1/2 teaspoon pepper

In a large skillet, heat the oil and saute the onion, celery and garlic until tender. Add the remaining ingredients; stir well to combine. Continue to cook, uncovered, until the vegetables are tender, about 15 minutes.

Chill and serve cold as an appetizer with crusty bread or thin toast triangles.

Caponata will keep about 1 week in the refrigerator. Serves 6 to 8.

"Cooking With Herbs" offers a savory variation of potato salad.

POTATO AND TURNIP SALAD

8 to 10 new potatoes
3 turnips
3 ounces pancetta or salt pork
1 garlic clove, finely minced
3 tablespoons light olive oil
About 1 teaspoon white wine vinegar
Salt and pepper to taste
1 cup shredded sorrel leaves

Scrub the potatoes and turnips and cook them in water to cover by 1 inch until they are just tender. Drain and let stand until they are just cool enough to peel.

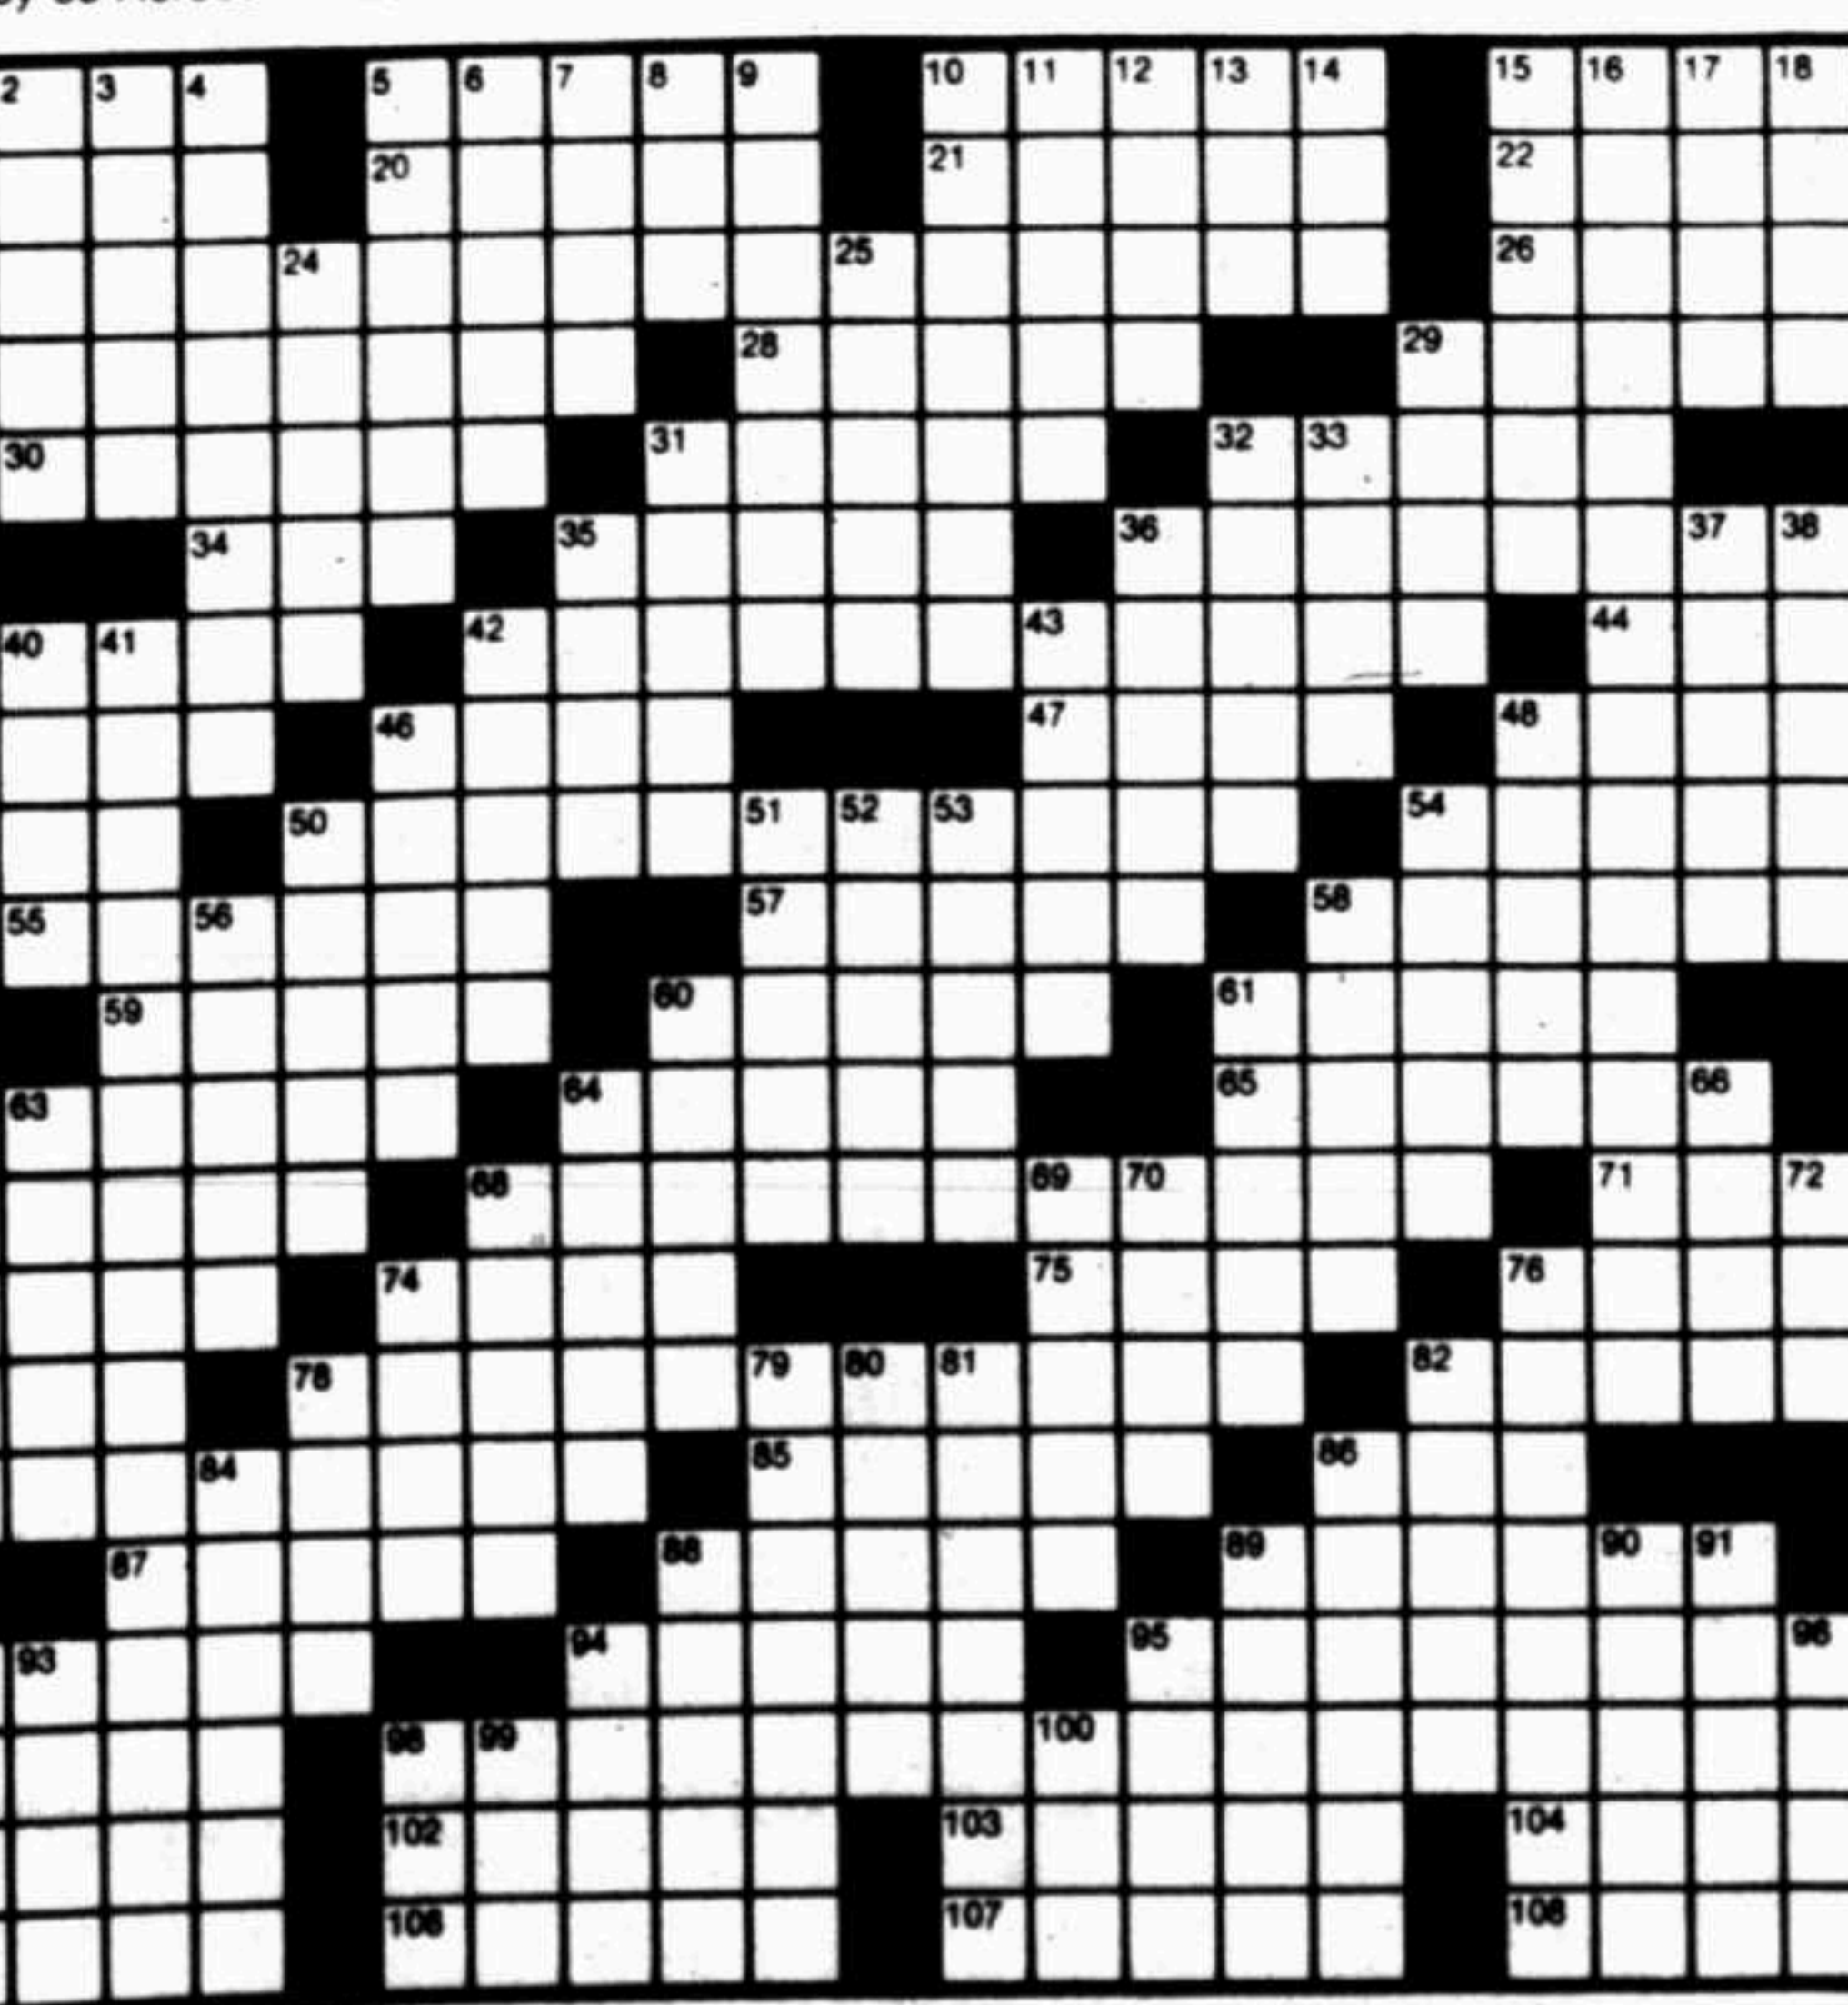

Cut the pancetta into 1/2-inch dice and saute over medium heat until golden brown. Skim the pancetta from the pan. Add the garlic and olive oil to the rendered fat.

Peel and cut the vegetables into 1-inch dice. Add them to the pan and sprinkle the vinegar, salt and pepper over them. Heat over medium heat, shaking the pan frequently. When the vegetables are heated through, remove to a bowl and toss with the sorrel leaves and pancetta. Serve immediately. Serves 6.

CO2 project on track

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

One of the largest enhanced oil recovery projects in the Permian Basin is moving rapidly and orderly toward a January 1985 startup, according to Amoco Production Co. The $300 million project, involves four units in three counties operated by Amoco, all under varying stages of completion.

The Central Mallet Unit, four miles west of Sundown in Hockley County, is 90 percent complete, while the Frazier Unit, five miles southeast of Sundown is 65 percent complete and the Slaughter Estate Unit, three miles east of the town, is approaching 80 percent completion. Another unit, under the umbrella of Amoco's Slaughter District is the Wasson (ODC) Unit, four miles northeast of Denver City in Yoakum County. It is only 20 percent complete, while the carbon dioxide recovery plant, located in the Mallet

Unit is just beginning.

When secondary recovery halts in January of 1985 (when tertiary begins) about 40 percent of the original oil in place in the San Andres units will have been recovered by primary and secondary methods. The carbon dioxide flood, which will utilize alternating slugs of water and carbon dioxide, is expected to recover 55 percent of the oil in place or an additional 15 percent to

Occidental to sell North Sea interests

LONDON (SWN) — Occidental Petroleum (Caledonia) Ltd., as operator, announced that subject to the approval of the secretary of state for energy, approximately 15 percent of interests held in the Claymore field, located in the U.K. sector of the North Sea, will be sold to a number of separate purchasers.

Occidental will sell 13.1 percent of the Claymore field, reducing its current 36.5 percent interest to 23.4 percent, and will receive approximately $163 million (U.S.). Getty Oil (Britain) Ltd., a subsidiary of Texaco, will sell 2.3 percent of the field, reducing its current 23.5 percent to 21.2 percent and will receive approximately $28 million (U.S.).

Thomson North Sea Ltd. and Union Texas Petroleum Ltd. retain their current interests of 20 percent each.

Revised interests are as follows:

Occidental 23.4 percent
Getty Oil (Britain) Ltd. 21.2 percent
Thomson North Sea Ltd. 20 percent
Union Texas Petroleum Ltd. 20 percent
Dow Chemical Co. Ltd. 5 percent
Agip (UK) Ltd. 2.5 percent
Sovereign Oil & Gas plc 2 percent
Coalite Oil Ltd. 1 percent

Natural gas autos being tested

DALLAS — Lone Star Gas Co. is one of 25 American and Canadian companies taking part in a two-year field test of America's first factory-built vehicles designed to run exclusively on natural gas.

Ford Motor Co. designed and built the test fleet of 1984 Ranger pickup trucks. Lone star received its Natural Gas Vehicle (NGV) in late May.

Each NGV Ranger is powered by a 2.3 liter four-cylinder engine with increased compression to take advantage of the high (130) octane rating of natural gas.

Fuel economy with an automatic transmission is estimated by Ford to be equivalent to 21 miles per gallon for city driving, compared to 22 mpg for a gasoline-powered Ranger. Based on current cost of natural gas and gasoline, the price of fuel is equivalent to 60-cent-per-gallon gasoline.

Range is expected to be about 225 miles per fill-up for the Ranger being tested by Lone Star.

Natural gas as a vehicle fuel has been used in this area since early 1981 by the Carrollton-Farmers Branch school district.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Do you have what it takes for business?

Tired of punching the clock, being tied to a one-hour lunch, and having all your business proposals subjected to the whims of four superiors?

It may be time for you to consider going into business for yourself, according to two Southern Methodist University professors, who have been showing people how to cut loose from the 8-5 monotony for the past 10 years.

John Welsh and Jerry White are director and associate director of the Caruth Institute for Entrepreneurship which is a part of SMU's Edwin L. Cox School of Business. They believe more people should experience the joys, hard work, and successes of entrepreneurship, but they don't want to see individuals fail on their face, doing it, knowing that 80 percent of the 500,000 new businesses each year fail before they are five years old.

THAT'S WHY they designed a course in business start-ups and wrote an award winning book, The Entrepreneur's Master Planning Guide.

"In this country, you don't have to ask somebody's permission to go into business," says Welsh. "You don't have to take a test. You just do it; then try to figure out how to make it work." One of the factors that makes it work is having the traits of an entrepreneur.

What does the duo consider the marks of a good entrepreneur? "First and foremost," said White, "is the ability to stay healthy." According to White, business owners can't afford many employees and usually have to fill many shoes, working long, hard hours. He can't afford to get sick.

THE MOST BASIC mark of a successful entrepreneur is the compelling need to control and direct. "A true entrepreneur," says White, "is not necessarily out to become rich and powerful, but just enjoys creating and executing strategies.

Another characteristic is self-confidence, especially in the face of adversity. Business self-starters also have a comprehensive awareness of the effect of a single event upon the whole project.

Says Welsh: "They see the distant mountain, but also the creek in front of them."

An entrepreneur is also realistic, accepting the things the way they are. He does not ask the world to change to provide him an opportunity, but seeks to achieve in whatever world he finds.

NEXT, THE SUCCESSFUL entrepreneur will usually have superior conceptual ability, being able to identify a problem and work on the solution faster than others around him.

And, there is some truth to the notion that empire builders are "cold and calculating." This is because they care more for an individual's accomplishment and ability to perform than his feelings. For that reason they seldom hesitate to sever relationships to achieve goals.

Last but not least, the entrepreneur has a low need for status. While he wants his business to be praised, he is often embarrassed by praise directed toward him.

And does the would-be businessman consider any of these characteristics when he decides to strike out on his own?

Hardly! Informs the business teachers. Most of the time the decision to go into business is dictated on an external influence, like being transferred to an undesirable location by the company.

THAT'S PROBABLY a fairly accurate assessment, notes a geologist friend who pointed out that probably half the independent oilmen in Midland are the result of some oil company wanting to transfer them to Houston.

Weigh the traits carefully. If you don't have all or at least most, you might want to think twice before going into business for your self.

Then again, you might ask: "Do the traits seek the task, or does the task produce the traits?"

Of course if you really want to go into business. You will most certainly see all of these traits in yourself anyway.

And if you are already a success in business, and don't have any of the characteristics, you're welcome to dismiss the whole notion.

Anyway, it's an interesting concept.

John Paul Pitts is Business-Oil editor for the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Petroleum seminar set for July 18 at MC

"Computers in the Oil Industry" is just one of the petroleum topics to be presented at a continuing education seminar, to be held July 18 at Midland College.

The seminar is sponsored by Midland College and E. J. Stevenson & Associates Inc., a Midland consulting engineering firm. There is no charge to participants.

Other areas to be covered in the seminar include: "Techniques for the Design and Installation of Oil and Gas Facilities in the Permian Basin"; "How to Evaluate Water Treating Equipment" and "Produced Water Filtration Equals Increased Profits."

E. J. Stevenson, president of E. J. Stevenson and Associates Inc., will open and close the seminar with Dr. Jess Parrish, president of Midland College welcoming the participants. Dr. Richard Holmes, the Dean of Occupational Technical Education at Midland College, will present a short speech on "The Importance of Continuing Education."

Key speakers for the seminar include: Ted Windecker, president of T.R. Windecker Inc. presenting "Computers in the Oil Industry"; Tom Collins and David Stein, of E.J. Stevenson and Assoc. Inc. discussing "Techniques for the Design and Installation of Oil and Gas Facilities in the Permian Basin"; Bob Sevin, executive account manager for Nalco Chemical Company presenting "How to Evaluate Water Treating Equipment" and Paul Lemons service manager for L'eau Claire Systems Inc. showing how "Produced Water Filtration Equals Increased Profits."

The seminar will run from 8 a.m. to noon and will be held at the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium on the Midland College campus. Registration will be from 8 a.m. to 8:30 a.m. with the program beginning at 8:35 a.m.

Interested persons should contact Dr. Wayne Holcomb at Midland College (915) 684-7851 or Tom Collins at E.J. Stevenson and Associates Inc. (915) 687-5394.

Illinois sues U.S. Steel

CHICAGO (AP) — The state of Illinois has sued U.S. Steel Corp., claiming the company backed out of an agreement that would have expanded its operations at South Works and created more jobs.

U.S. Steel said last December that it had reversed a 1981 decision to build a $225 million rail mill at the Chicago facility that would have provided employment for 1,000 additional steel workers.

In the state's suit, Attorney General Neil F. Hartigan charged that the company breached a contract with the state when it failed to build the mill after requesting tax-break legislation and a delay in enforcement of a court-ordered pollution control consent decree at its Gary, Ind., works that resulted from a previous Illinois suit.

In addition to seeking damages on behalf of the people of Illinois, the suit seeks a judgement allowing the state to condemn the South Works operation if the mill is not built.

Suit says fumes that killed workers 3-year old problem

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two Adolph Coors Co. employees who died rescuing a fellow worker were killed by fumes from a cleaning solvent that troubled their workplace for nearly three years, according to federal documents and a lawsuit filed by the widows.

Mark L. Olson and Brian V. Pakka died Sept. 2, 1982 at Coors' beer can manufacturing plant at Golden, Colo., in a heroic rescue that won them posthumous honors from the prestigious Carnegie Hero Fund Commission.

Their widows, in a lawsuit filed last February in Denver district court, said that the men were "fatally poisoned by the fumes given off" by Chlorothene NU — which the rescued worker was using to clean the inside of a 12-foot tall cooling tank.

According to the lawsuit and records of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration the chemical was a problem in:

— January 1980, when the can plant was cited for violating the nation's health and safety law in the handling of the substance on production lines.

— March 1981 when, according to a source with access to OSHA records, inspectors found the chemical was improperly carried to upper levels.

— Sept. 2, 1982, when employee Pamela J. Geist was using the substance to clean the tank and, according to the lawsuit, suffered brain damage and other "great and lasting" physical and mental injuries.

OSHA documents also show that on June 21, 1982, Coors exercised its legal right to turn away OSHA inspectors who sought to conduct a general inspection of the plant without court warrants.

The inspectors would have known from their records about the plant's problems with the chemical and may have questioned company officials about its use and the care of respirators, said Davis Layne, OSHA's deputy field operations director in Washington.

According to the 80-year-old Pittsburgh-based Carnegie commission, which interviewed eyewitnesses and company officials before presenting its heroism awards, first Olson and then Pakka rushed into the tank after Mrs. Geist collapsed inside.

Olsen immediately was overcome in the tank, while Pakka died after carrying Mrs. Geist up a chain ladder to the small opening at the top, and then descending again in an unsuccessful attempt to save Pakka.

Government may regulate photos, art of currency

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court says the government may strictly regulate photographs and art work depicting U.S. currency.

By a 5-4 vote, the court upheld key provisions of an anti-counterfeiting law that bans all color reproductions of currency and specifies permissible sizes for the reproductions.

The court rejected arguments by Time Inc. that the law should be invalidated as an unconstitutional limitation of free expression.

The publishing company on various occasions has used replicas of currency in its magazines to illustrate articles.

Justice Byron R. White, writing for the court, said, "compliance with the color and size requirements does not prevent Time from expressing any view on any subject or from using illustrations of currency in expressing those views."

U.S. Rig Count

Basin rig count drops again this week

Both the Permian Basin rig count and the national rig count slipped again this week as the number of working rigs in the Basin dropped by six and the national count plunged downward to the tune of 66 rigs.

The Permian Basin loss almost corresponded with the loss of seven rigs from Andrews County, which pulled that county out of the elevated ranks of 30-or-more, leaving only Lea County at 31 rigs, the long-standing champion in that category. Andrews for the first time in many weeks, even lost its number two standing as its 24 rigs were edged out by Pecos County's 25.

Ector County was the big gainer this week, picking up five working rigs.

Ward, Ector, Midland, Gaines and Glasscock remain highly active counties, showing 15 and over rigs working for those areas.

Culberson County rejoined the ranks for the first time in many weeks, showing one rig working.

On the national scene Texas showed a big drop, as did Louisiana. California posted a significant increase.

SCOTT FETZER CO.

WESTLAKE, Ohio — Directors of The Scott Fetzer Company have declared a quarterly dividend on common shares of 45 cents per share payable August 31, 1984, to shareholders of record August 17, 1984.

Scott Fetzer, headquartered in Westlake, Ohio, is a diversified manufacturer and marketer of high quality products for the home, family and industry. Marketing is accomplished through direct, in-the-home, mass merchandising, distributor and mail order sales.

LUBY'S CAFETERIAS

SAN ANTONIO — Luby's Cafeterias reports record revenues and earnings were again attained for the quarter ended May 31, 1984. Revenues were $47,285,000 compared to $37,412,000 for the third quarter last year. Net income rose to $5,145,000, an increase of 36 percent over $3,792,000 for the corresponding quarter last year. Earnings per share were $.56 compared to $.42. Earnings for this quarter include $.06 per share from the sale of land. This site had been acquired for a cafeteria location, but we felt that it was no longer suitable as such and we were able to convert its increased value to working capital.

TANDY CORP.

FORT WORTH — Tandy Corp. has announced that, based on disappointing sales during the current quarter, earnings are expected to be in the range of $.60 to $.65 for the June 30, 1984 quarter. This compares to $.71 in the same quarter in 1983. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1984, earnings are expected to be in the range of $.275 to $.280 compared to fiscal 1983 when Tandy earned $.267. The approximate number of average shares outstanding for the quarter is 96,830,000 and the approximate number of shares for the year is 102,329,000. The average shares outstanding for fiscal 1983 was 104,335,000.

WESTERN BANK

Western Bank reported net income of $510,994 or $.79 per share for the second quarter ended June 30th. The earnings represented return on assets and return on equity of 2.32 percent and 34.99 percent respectively, and brought the bank's cumulative earnings for the year to $881,265.

Western's deposits grew nine percent to $84.6 million from $77.9 million at the previous quarter, an annualized 36 percent growth. Total loans were reported up six percent to $68.5 million from $64.0 million at March 31, 1983, a 24 percent annualized increase. Total capital at June 30, 1984 was $5.8 million or 6.4 percent of assets.

Many new regional airlines are succeeding under deregulation

By the Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

Northeastern International Airways wasn't much when veteran pilot Stephen Quinto started it almost 2 1/2 years ago with $255,000 of his own money.

Its leased DC-8 flew six roundtrips a week between Ft. Lauderdale and little-used MacArthur Airport on New York's Long Island.

But Northeastern International is today among the fastest growing of a new breed of successful low-cost carriers.

WHILE SOME airlines that were launched with much fanfare after the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 have failed miserably — leaving behind frustrated customers and creditors — most, like Northeastern, are beginning to make some money.

Beyond aggressively undercutting the prices of their older rivals, many new carriers have sought special niches in the marketplace — like Muse Air with its "no smoking" ban, Regent Air with special frills like limousines and on-board manicures, and "no frills" People Express where passengers must buy their coffee and pay for checking baggage. Other new entrants simply moved into routes abandoned by established carriers.

In the process, the new entrants in the airline business have shaken up an industry that once drew comfort from, and grew complacent under, the Civil Aeronautics Board's strict regulation of routes and fares. With their low costs, the new carriers have wreaked havoc with the business volume and bottom-line profits of more established and larger airlines.

THERE ARE now 44 carriers that did not exist before deregulation — 15 of them all-jet lines that tend to fly longer distances. Nine others have been authorized to fly by the CAB, but are awaiting other regulatory approvals.

Nine of the 15 surviving all-jet airlines have reported results for last year to the CAB, and they posted a combined operating profit of $4.2 million in 1983, the first period in which the group turned a profit for a straight 12-month period. This compared with an operating loss of $31 million in the previous year, according to the CAB.

Operating profits don't include the high interest payments that accompanied carriers' aircraft purchases and prevented new entrants from reporting bottom-line profits. Even so, net losses were halved in 1983 to about $20 million as business on the new jet airlines more than doubled last year to 8.3 billion revenue passenger miles (one passenger carried one mile).

Northeastern International is only one of those doing well. It has 16 big jets, flying three-quarters full, and more are on order. This month, it expects to carry more than 200,000 passengers. The carrier operates 60 daily flights between 17 cities in 10 states, and its work force totals 1,411.

QUINTO, THE president, figures the company will be profitable this year and soon might sell stock to the public.

The carriers of all types that have emerged since deregulation currently carry 5 percent of the nation's air traffic.

"The new entrants, which continue to grow, are already beginning to add up to competitive capacity of some substance," says C.E. Meyer, president and chief operating officer of Trans World Airlines.

PBGC to offer four courses

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will hold four courses in the PBGC Building, 105 W. Illinois, Midland.

"Field Trip to a Well Site" is scheduled on Monday, July 16 and again on Tuesday, July 17, from 9 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. The field trips will take the participants to the drill site, show them the working rig components, and go through the complete drilling operations. Mario Rodriguez, regional technical services engineer, Reed Rock Bit Co.; David Rosen, consulting geologist; Francis McDonald, drilling manager, Maralo Inc.; and Bruce Schiff, area senior sales representative, NL Baroid, will instruct. Registration fee is $75. This includes a book, a box lunch, and transportation to and from the well site.

"Assertiveness Training," Tuesday, July 17, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The course is oriented toward a practical approach. Participants will learn: benefits of assertiveness, how to distinguish assertive and aggressive or passive behavior, how to reduce anxiety and guilt about acting assertively, and skills and techniques in acting assertively. Marion Kimberly, counselor, will instruct the course. Fee is $85.

"Dolomites and Dolomitization," Wednesday, July 18, from 1:30-4:30 p.m. The concepts and models presented in this course should familiarize the explorationist with the various aspects and occurrences of dolomites in marine rocks. Dr. S.J. Mazzullo, consulting geologist, will instruct the course. Fee is $60.

"How to Process Leases and Contracts," Thursday-Friday, July 19-20, from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. G. Ernest Glickerson, landman/attorney, Glickerson Oil & Gas Properties, Midland and Linda H. Williamson, vice president — land and assistant secretary, Falcon Oil & Gas Co. Inc., Odessa, will instruct. Fee is $260.

For registration or further information, call 683-2832.

Harvey Advertising handles pens, rulers, calendars, mugs, glasses, bumper stickers, caps, jackets, binders, plaques, buckles, clocks, lighters, utility items, auto products, desk accessories, flashlights, trays, bandanas, knives, awards, jewelry and much more. Give Bill Atwood a call at 697-0749 for details.

Harvey Advertising has specialty items on sale

The Cross they're sure to bear proudly and treasure for a lifetime comes from A.T. Cross Company -- in gold, sterling silver, gleaming chrome or classic black. So, why not let Harvey Advertising show how to say "Well done" or "Thank you" with a recognition award from Cross? It's the writing instrument that makes its own distinctive statement year after year.

Put your custom emblem on a personally engraved single or double desk set chosen from seven base materials including wood, stone or metal. Or honor their loyalty or achievement with a fashionable pocket or purse set. Long after retirement, those appreciated employees will still be delighted with such a distinctive award. Something exquisite from Cross.

Enough said for the moment on the subject of awards.

We'd like to take this opportunity to say thank you to each and every one of you, newcomers and old friends alike, for letting Harvey be your guide to better specialty advertising! It's folks like you who make our business the pleasure it is.

The mail-out we promised all you Permian Basin Oil Show participants has already given us an opportunity to get acquainted with some newcomers to the world of specialty ideas. Welcome aboard! Let's keep the ball rolling and make sure this year's display is something special! Remember, it takes four to six weeks from order date to delivery on almost all imprinted items. So, keep an eye on that deadline and be ready!

Another enthusiastic thanks to those who took early advantage of the ongoing sale on summer caps. No cut off date has come in yet, so be sure to stock up if you haven't already done so.

We've had some recent inquiries about unlined windbreakers. Cancel the information we gave you and get a load of this. RCC has just informed us about their inventory reduction sale. They're available in Scarlet, Royal, Black, Light Blue, Brown and Navy -- with one color imprint at $15.49 each for as few as twelve. Order 100 at $11.99 each! Sale ends August 31st. Color supplies on specials this good are usually limited, so give us a call if yours is on the list.

In a past article we gave casual mention of the fact that specialty manufacturers handle sale items a bit differently. The best bargains are always offered within a limited time period. One current example applies to GALAXY'S Scarborough collection of ceramic coffee mugs. They are available in a delightful assortment of colors with a one color imprint -- at "in-quantity" prices. Meaning?? Order as few as 72 at the same price you'd ordinarily pay if you ordered 1200. Sale ends July 31st.

Keep an eye on the Reporter-Telegram Business Page for up-to-date information about the world of Harvey, a synonym for specialty advertising. Watch for specials like those mentioned here -- and always remember to call Bill Atwood at 697-0749 -- for all your specialty needs.

Lease to Own... car leasing comes to Midland

Cheapy Car Lease has opened in Midland at the corner of Highway 80 and Midland Drive. They offer a new concept to buying an inexpensive second car or one for the working person. Their LEASE-PURCHASE is the economic way to own a car.

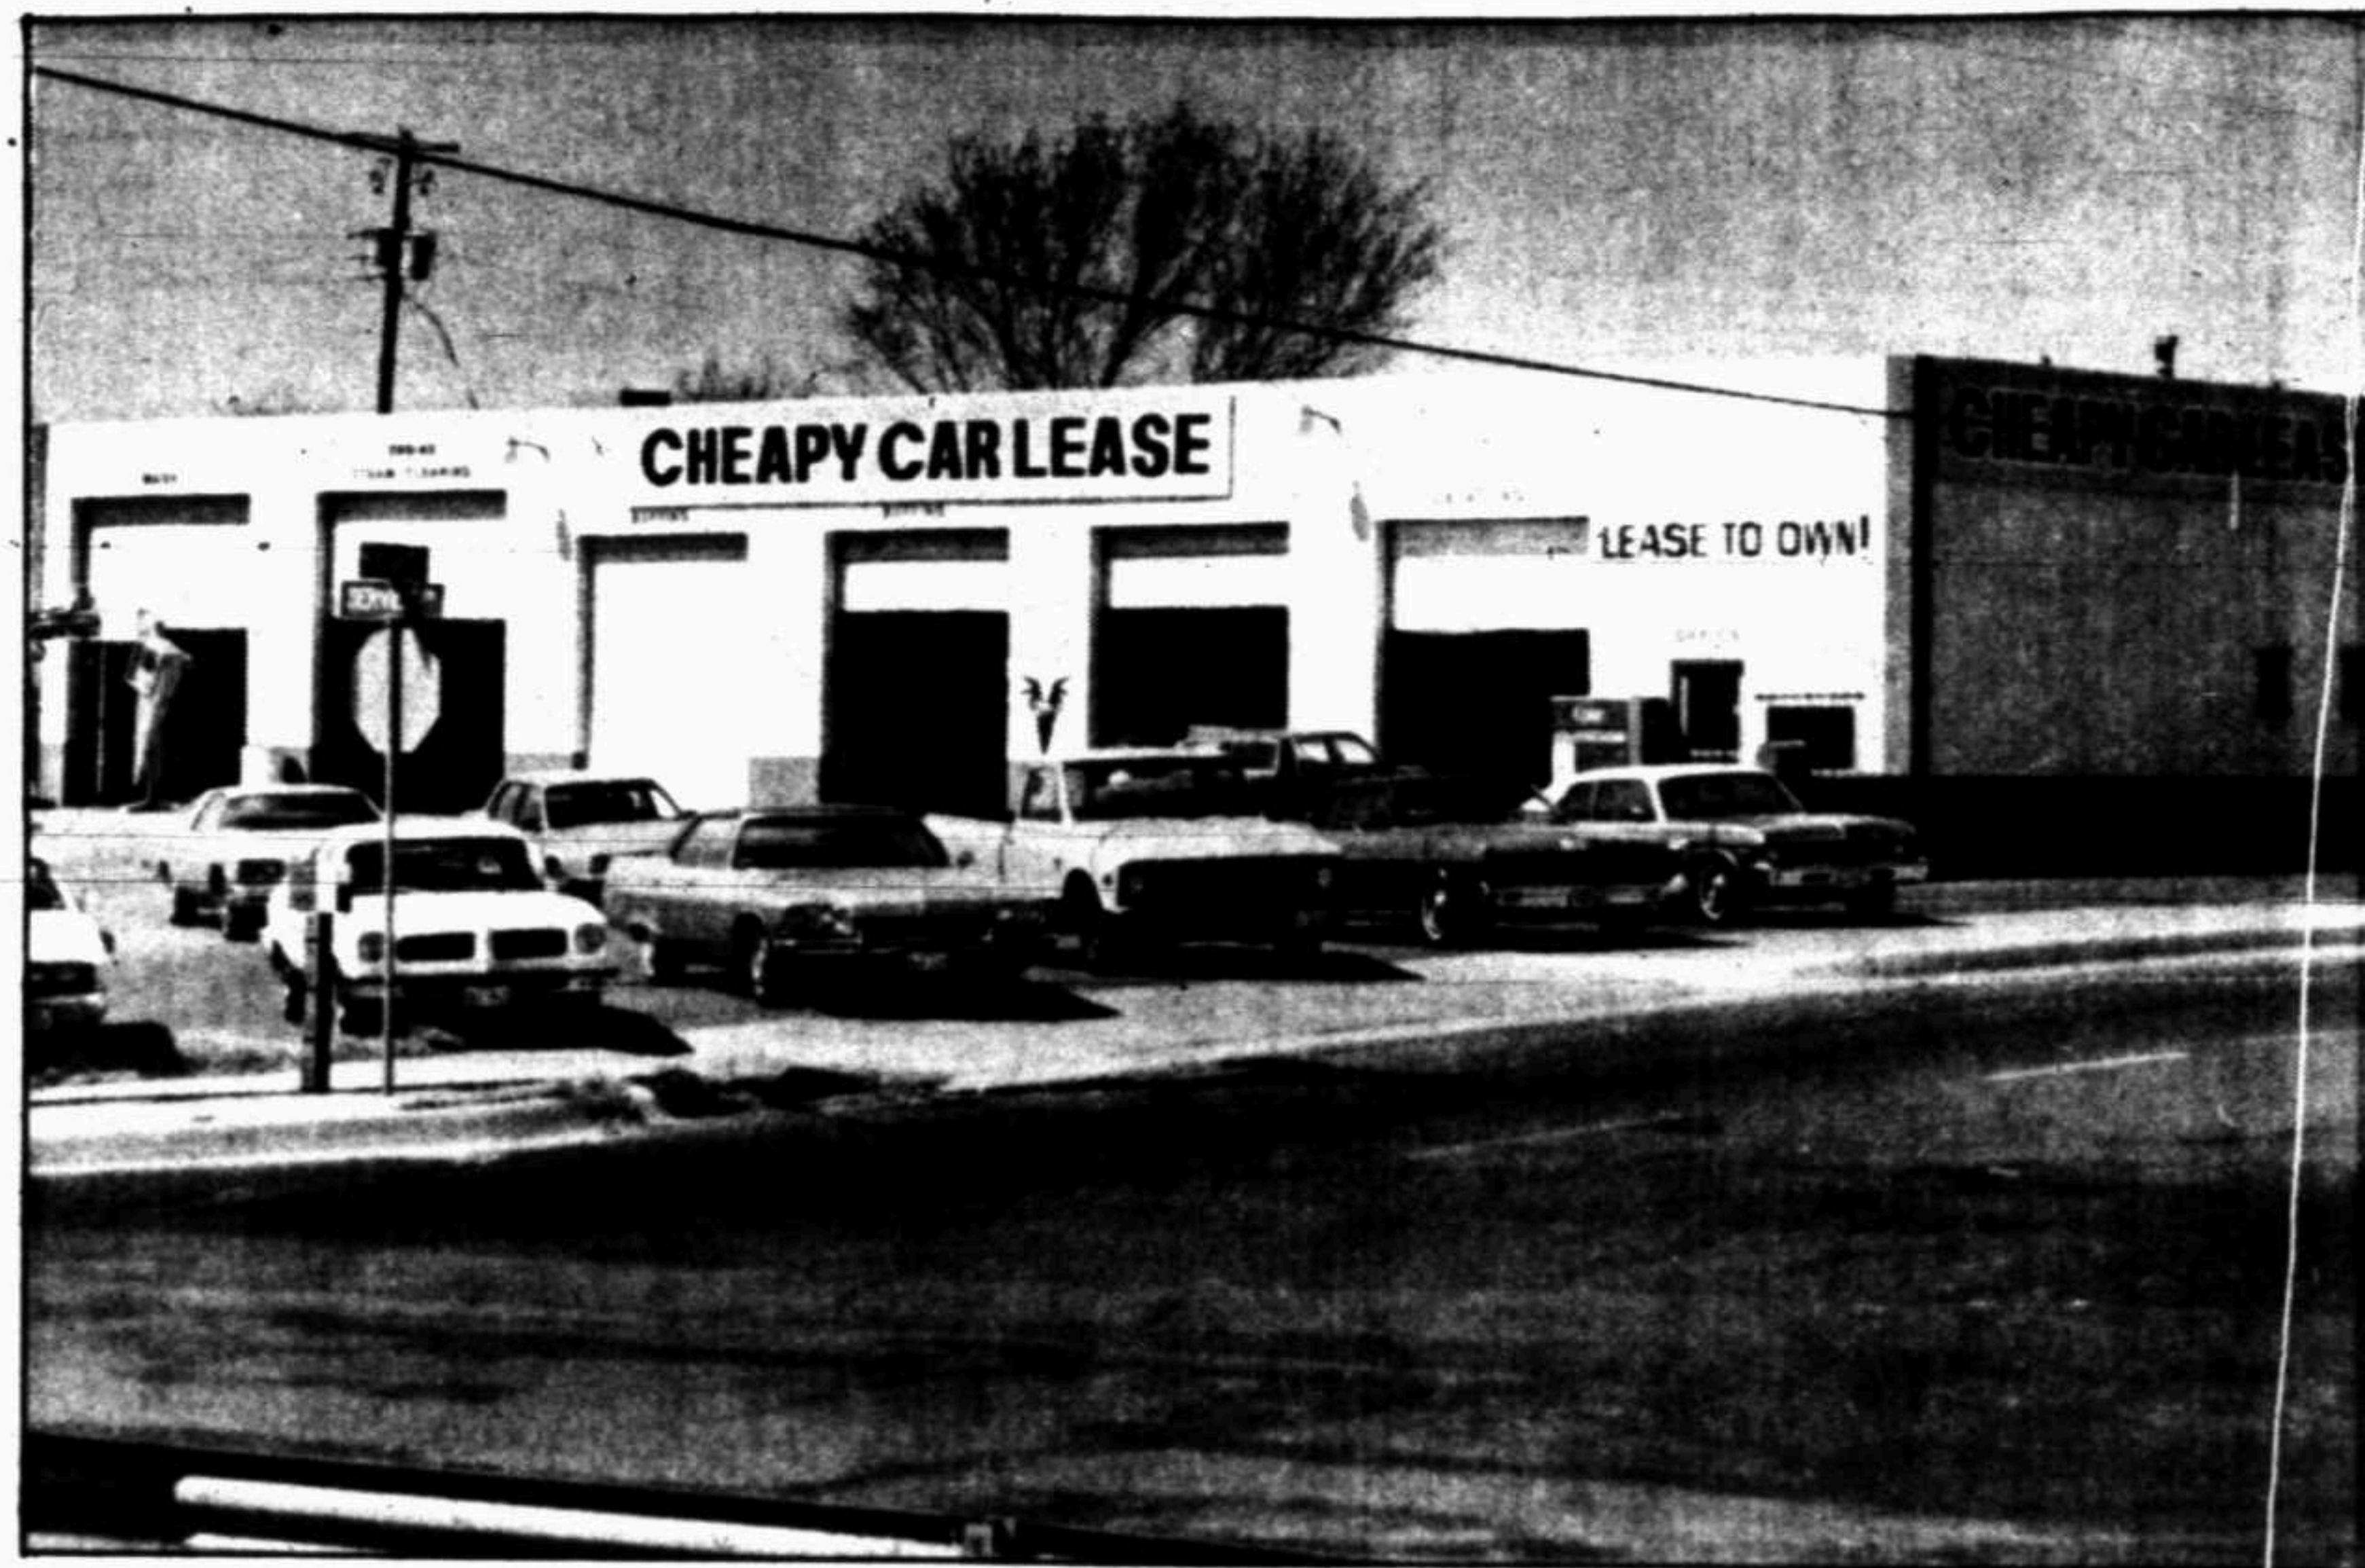

Bill Buttry, owner-operator, has many years of experience in the field of leasing cars and trucks. However, Mr. Buttry feels that now is the time to lease good quality used cars.

Leasing is an exceptional good way to own a car. Cheapy Car Lease does their own financing with NO CREDIT CHECK.

Bill is happy to announce the appointment of David Lewis as General Manager. David has many years of experience in all phases of the automotive business.

Explaining how the lease-purchase works Bill Buttry stated that at the end of the leasing term the lessee will receive clear title to the leased car for only $1.00. For a small down payment and (interest free) weekly, biweekly or monthly payments, it is a good way to own a car.

Cheapy Car Lease is located at 4400 West Highway 80 in Midland so why not drive out and take a look at the LEASE-PURCHASE program being offered by Bill Buttry. If you have any questions give Billor David a call at 699-1772.

Cheapy Car Lease has brought the concept of quality used car leasing to Midland. For more information call Bill Buttry or David Lewis at 699-1772 or stop by the North Service Road of Highway 80.

Jim's Barrel House, located at 2511 W. Wall, is the home of the "Barrel Man". The "Barrel Man" is also known as Jim Galyean, owner of Jim's Barrel House.

Jim's Barrel House is the home of 'Barrel Man'

Jim's Barrel House has kegs, packaged beer and all types of soft drinks. So in one stop you can take care of all of your liquid refreshment needs.

To reserve your keg, just give Jim a call. He usually has extra kegs on hand but once a keg is reserved no one else can buy it.

If you plan to pick up your keg, Jim's Barrel House will have it iced down in one of their special containers. It will be ready for you when you pick it up at your pre-set time.

Or if you prefer, Jim's Barrel House will deliver the keg to your door and pick it up when it is empty for a minimal charge. You can even surprise your guests by having Jim Galyean, the "Barrel Man", deliver the keg in his barrel outfit.

If you buy a case or more of beer they will ice it down for free. All of the ice that is used and sold by Jim's is cubed, purified ice instead of crushed ice made from Midland water.

Next time you are planning a trip to the lake or a family outing, stop by Jim's and load up. You can have your coolers filled with beer or soda and iced down without even leaving your car.

Jim's Barrel House offers curb service for your convenience. This service is offered during their summer business hours which are 9:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday and 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. on Sunday.

Jim also tries to have a converted beer refrigerator on hand. This is for what is known as a home account. Home accounts are greatly appreciated and they have kegs waiting for their call.

Soft drinks are also available at Jim's Barrel House. You can purchase a six-pack or a case. There is always a soft drink special in progress.

Hungry for some munchies? Jim carries snacks such as flavored popcorn, sardines, fish steaks, potted meats, pickled okra, peanuts, crackers, candy and cigarettes.

For those of you who are unfamiliar with Jim Galyean, he loves plants and flowers. He carries a select variety of potted and hanging plants. All are exceptionally nice and reasonably priced.

Jim's Barrel House, 2511 W. Wall, is a fun place, a place to go for party needs and good old fashioned service. Let the "Barrel Man" help you with your next party or picnic.

Gifts Unique open to serve downtown workers

Imagine- as you walk into the office you suddenly realize that it is Susie's last day and it was your turn to buy the gift for the group, or maybe you are getting together an impromptu birthday party at the office but you don't have cards and gifts to complete the occasion. What is the first thing you do? Okay, what do you do after you panic? Do you ask your boss for a few hours off so that you can run out to the mall or do you cry and hope that everyone will understand?

No longer will this be a problem because now the downtown area has Gifts Unique. They are located at 515 W. Texas so that it is convenient to downtown.

Bettie Hooper, Peggy Thompson and JoAnn Parker, the owners, have all worked downtown and realize how much of a problem these spur of the moment problems can be.

Gifts Unique carries a wide variety of moderately priced gift items. You can find anything from greeting cards to wall hangings. A nice selection of baby items such as banks and planters that will any expecting or new mother happy.

Are you looking for a wedding gift for someone in the office? How about ceramic serving pieces that go from oven to table. If you are looking to keep the cost at a reasonable level you can buy a single piece or if you have several going in together they carry several items from a specific line that can be combined to make a lovely set. They also carry 3 and 4 piece serving tray that once again have matching items that can be added to enhance the gift.

Were you thinking more of a flower arrangement? No problem. Gifts Unique sells individual silk flowers or they will custom design an arrangement to suit your needs.

Is there a man in the office who desires a token of gratitude? How about giving him a travel case that hold both a coffee pot and bottle of liquor? Or maybe a realistic porcelain figure of wildlife native to West Texas.

For those who are young at heart, Gifts Unique carries Both the Limited Edition and collectable Hollie Hobbie figurines.

Personal items are also carried to help you through a rough day.

Gifts Unique is open office hours and they accept MasterCard and Visa. Delivery is available.

If you're intrigued by Gifts Unique why not stop by their Grand Opening, July 9-July 13. Be sure to register for the door prizes to be given away on Friday.

Bettie Hooper (L), Peggy Thompson and JoAnn Parker are ready to accommodate the needs of downtown Midlanders. Gifts Unique is located at 515 W. Texas. Stop in and see what they have to offer.

BUSINESS NOTEBOOK

Insurance premium earnings surpass incurred losses

By Bill Kidd
Austin Bureau

Total earned premium for property and casualty companies Texas business exceeded $8.2 billion in 1983, while incurred losses came to over $7 billion, the State Board of Insurance reports.

Total earned premium for the year was $8,210,002,745, while incurred losses were $7,077,108,332. In 1982, the comparable figures were $7,273,610,928 and $5,071,373,487, respectively.

Those figures compiled by the board also show that losses for homeowners' multiperil insurance exceeded earned premium by almost $319 million during the year, with $888,366,699 in premiums, and $1,207,221,851 in losses.

Worker's compensation totals showed $1,624,025,750 in premiums and $1,301,028,738 in losses.

For private passenger automobile insurance, personal injury protection, liability, collision and physical damage (excluding collision) produced $2,371,610,626 in premium and $1,545,627,683 in losses.

For the comparable commercial classes, the total premium was $693,606,834 with $493,846,243 in losses.

Banking Section, State Finance Commission, approved plans by the Department of Banking for an "off-site/on-site" bank examination program.

Banking commissioner James L. Sexton says some 300 banks would qualify for the program, which involves evaluation of information concerning banks by the department "off-site" and a more limited "on-site examination."

The effort is an attempt to meet increased demands on the state agency due to cutbacks at the federal level on routine bank examinations — in order to commit more resources to troubled national banks.

Department officials report that the divided examination program, carried out by the department and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., has been working well, but that the department has had to assume responsibility for examining more banks because of FDIC's concentration on problem banks.

Sexton reports the off-site/on-site examination has been presented to the FDIC and Federal Reserve Board, without objections being raised.

Banks qualifying for the program are described as being those which have shown an "overall condition that poses no supervisory concern" and "generally superior performance" and managerial competence.

Factors to be considered in qualifying banks (for removing them from the program) include capital, changes in assets and earnings, funds management, changes in ownership, trends and policies involving the bank, loan practices, liquidity, litigation, previous examinations and call reports.

The interim committee on statewide fire protection standards, chaired by Rep. Gene Green, D-Houston, is preparing recommendations for the 1985 Legislature that counties be allowed to adopt fire and building codes.

Green says the panel is preparing that recommendation, "with the stipulation that they also create a fire marshal."

The committee has decided against recommending any minimum standards to be adopted, Green reports, so that counties could adopt "any of the recognized codes," while the proposal isn't part of the recommendations at present, he says. "I think that before it's all through...we may require those counties to create an advisory committee...to be sure that it's something they can live with."

That advisory panel would include representatives of fire departments, insurance interests and builders, Green says.

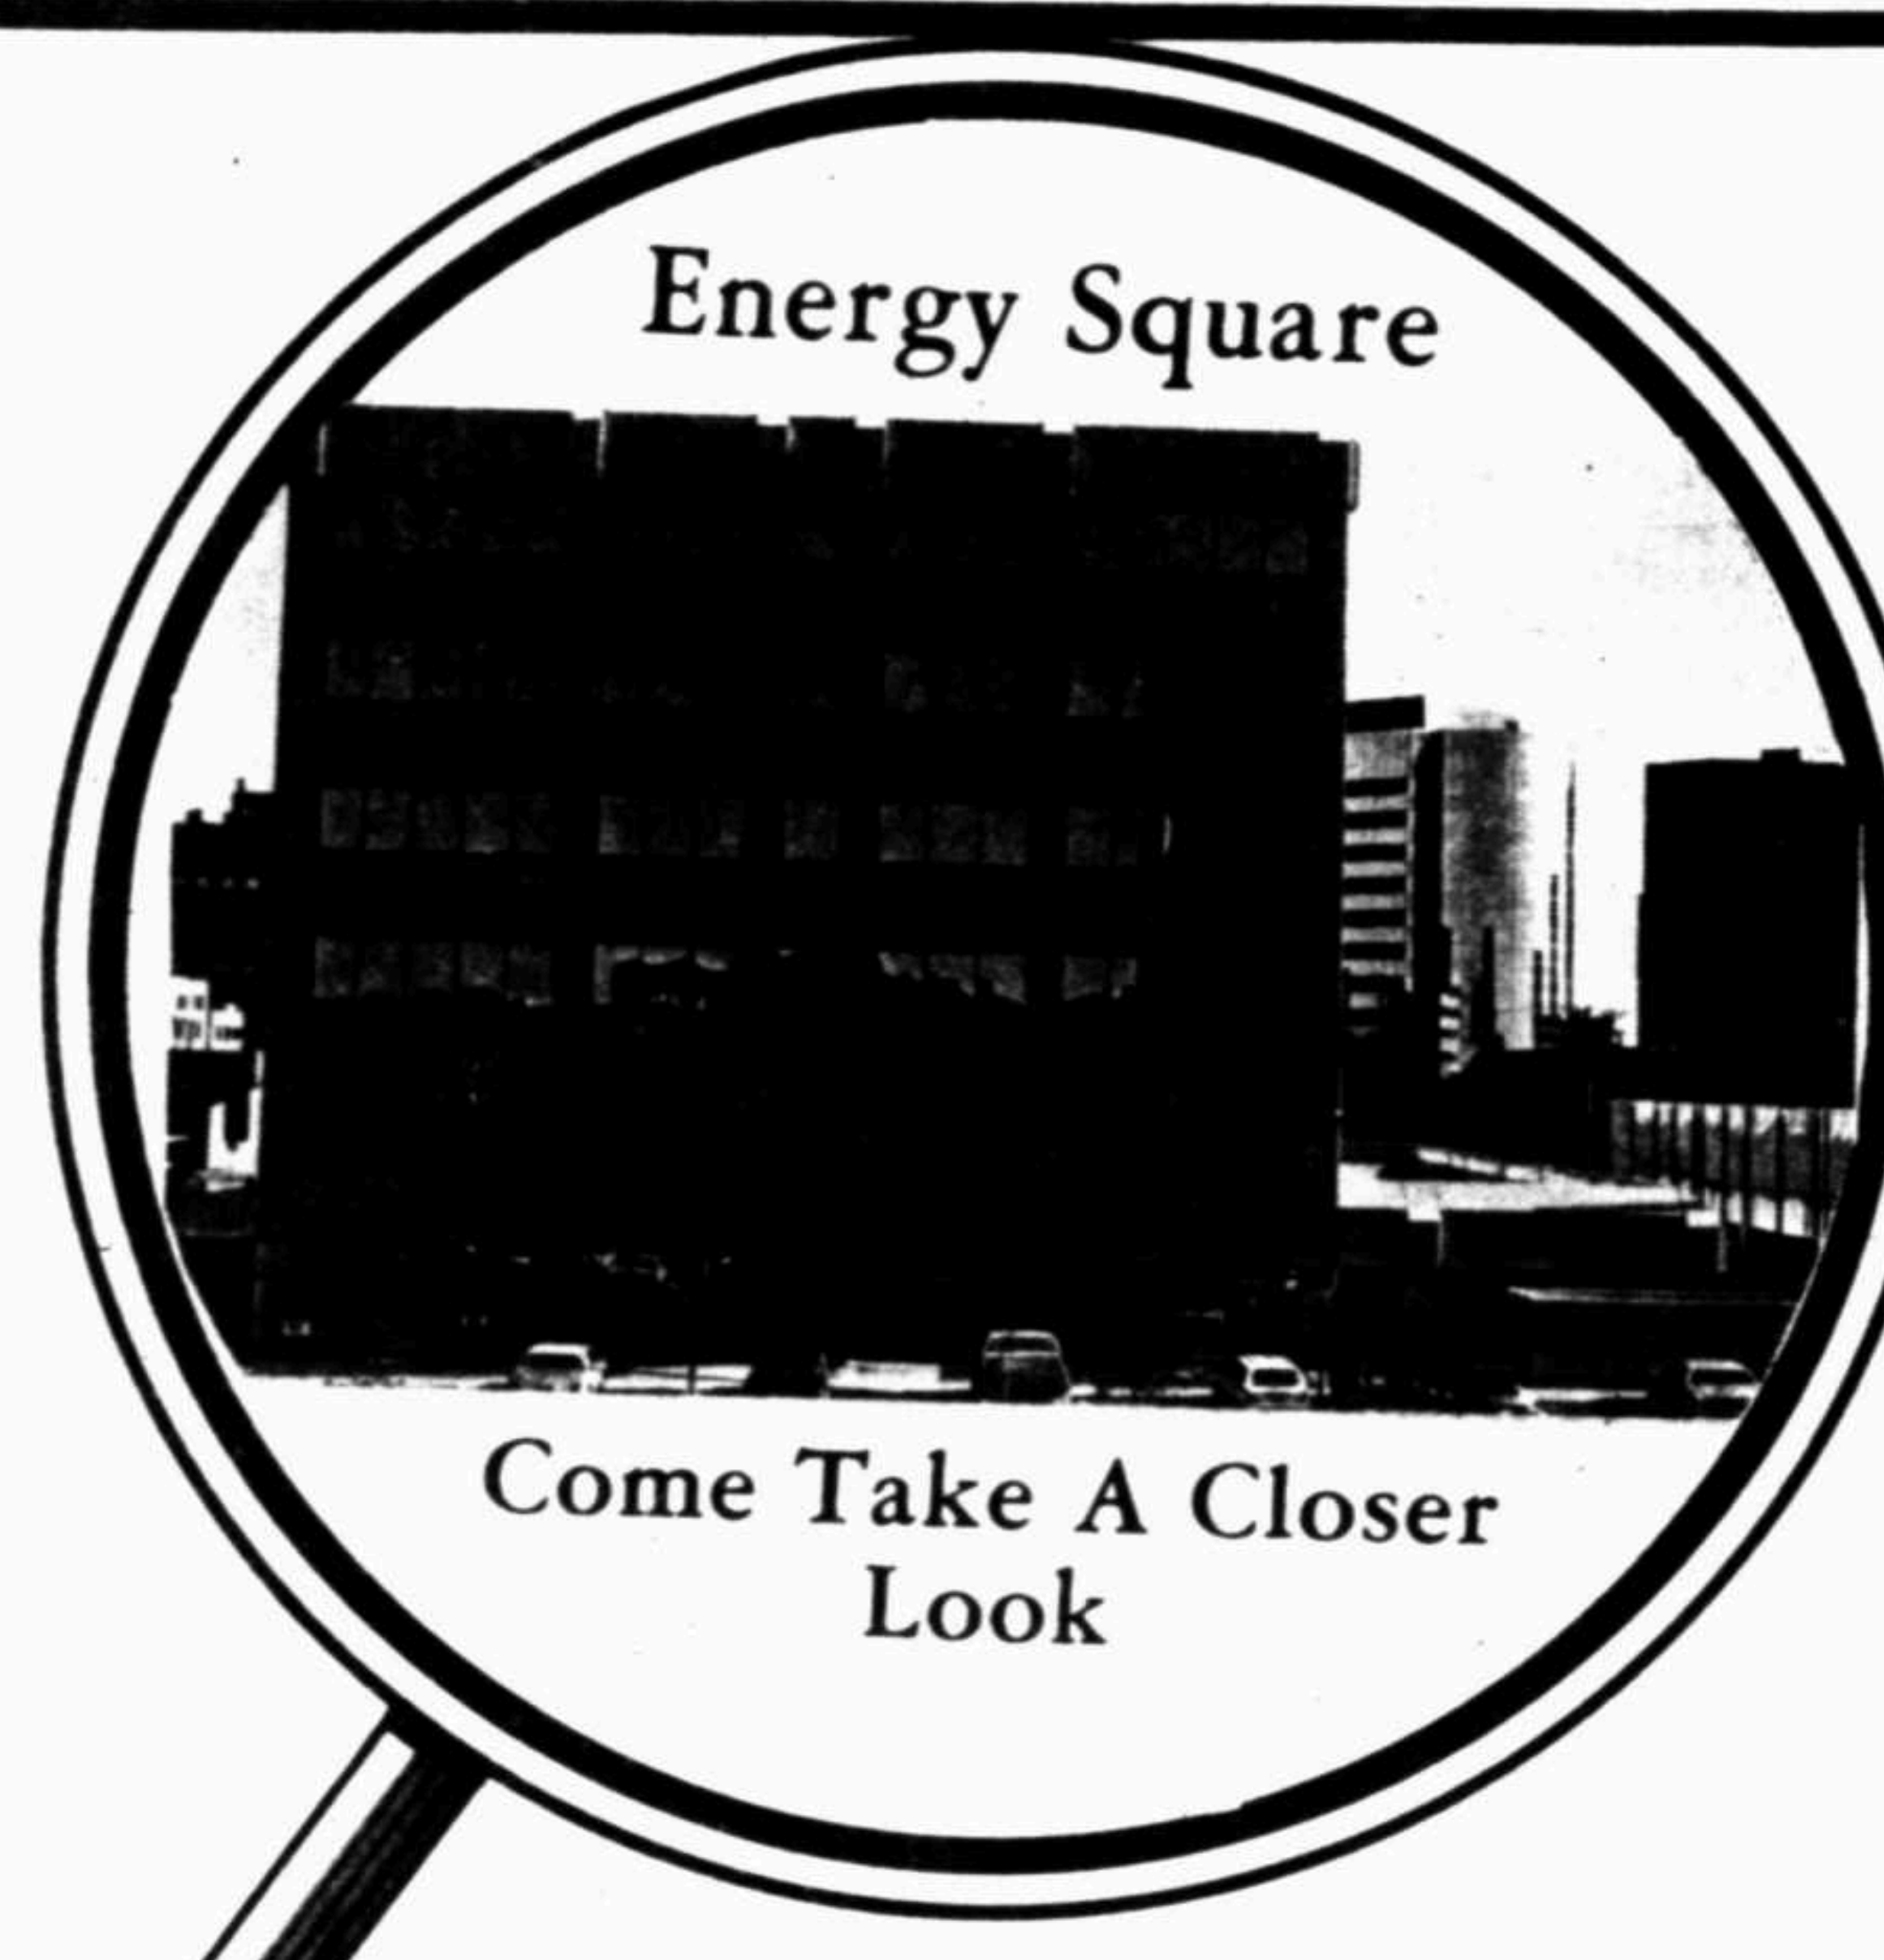

While an official vote won't be taken on the proposals until August, Green reports there is a consensus on the committee regarding the recommendations.

There have been a number of similar studies in the past, he notes, but "this is the first time we've had a predominantly citizen committee."

Staff proposals are to be prepared in July, and the committee's final report should be ready by Oct. 1, Green says.

State Board of Insurance has delayed the July 18 hearing on worker's compensation rates, with July 25 or 26 reported as possible dates for its resetting.

SBI earlier delayed action on property insurance rates, while considering rules changes on property insurance matters, and a spokesman indicates the board may attempt to resolve the property rates questions before acting on the worker's compensation rate changes.

Double Your Money in 6 Years* Guaranteed! Triple Your Money in 9½ Years* Guaranteed!

HOW? With CATS from Rauscher Pierce Refsnes. CATS represent ownership of interest and principal payments of U.S. Treasury Notes or Bonds. You buy them at a fraction of face value. Then interest is automatically reinvested and compounded during the life of the security. At maturity, you receive the full face value of $1,000 per unit.

Then there's the safety factor. Interest and principal payments are guaranteed by the United States.

You can choose from a wide range of maturities (from one to 22 years) to meet future expenses such as college for the children or fund your own retirement plan. And, there's an active secondary market for CATS, if you must sell before maturity (there is no penalty if you do).

EOR

extend the life of the units another 18-20 years.

"Before that day comes, we are hopeful some other form of recovery technology will be on the drawing board to help us coax a portion of the remaining 40 percent out of the ground," said Jim Merit, an Amoco engineer.

The giant Slaughter field was discovered in 1937, and in the 1980's secondary recovery began as units were formed for the purpose of waterflooding.

Ogallala fresh water was used initially in the original waterflood, but now primarily produced water is being reinjected to repressure the prolific formation.

The total enhanced oil recovery projects in Hockley and Yoakum counties calls for the construction of 37 miles of gas gathering system, 100 miles of gas injection lines, 32 miles of fluid gathering lines and 97 miles of production flowlines, in the pipeline department.

It also calls for 297 miles of injection tubing. Construction of 72 satellite battery and CBT vessels, and 358 injection well heads.

A carbon dioxide recovery plant, which will be the heart of the system, is rated at 100 Mmscfd at 90 percent carbon dioxide feed, and will be located adjacent to the Amoco gas plant in the Mallet field.

The Central Mallet field when completed will have 233 producing wells and 71 injection wells; the Frazier Unit 73 producers and 35 injectors; the Slaughter Estate 193 producers and 125 injectors, while the Wasson (Phase D) Unit will have 179 producers and 147 injection wells.

Infill drilling in the units has not been extensive for the EOR project, as Amoco has sought to optimize its injection wells.

The Amoco projects are significant in that they lead the way for tertiary recovery in the giant Slaughter field, in which approximately 15 operators are involved in over 40 units.

Amoco's tertiary efforts have been predicated on successful pilot projects initiated about six years ago in the Central Mallet and Slaughter Estate units.

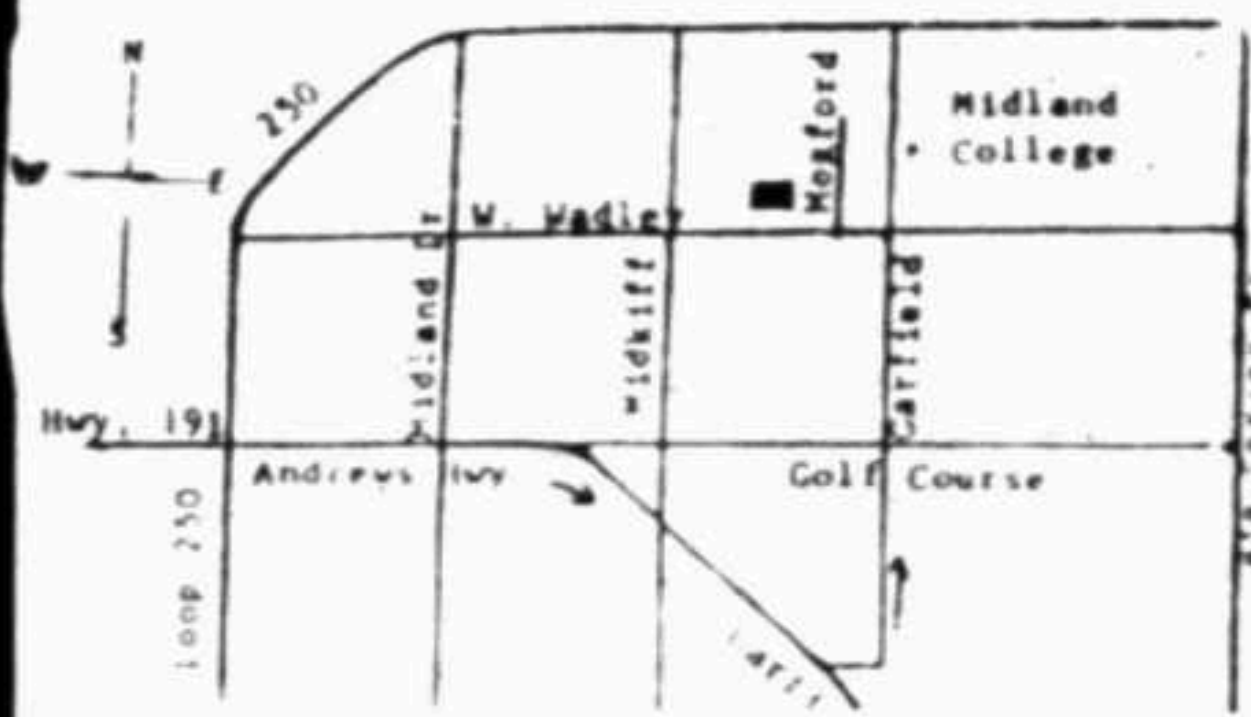

Other units are planned in the Slaughter field, but none have been approved to date.

TRW secret computer access codes appearing on subscribers' reports

By the Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

Supposedly secret computer access codes and passwords needed to withdraw confidential credit reports on 90 million Americans are routinely printed on many of the 50 million reports a year purchased by subscribers to the TRW Information Services, Newsday has learned.

A Long Island businessman who subscribes to the TRW service, the nation's largest commercial credit bureau, said he had not noticed until he was contacted by Newsday that his teletypewriter printed out his password and access code on each report he buys for $1.80.

"What you're telling me is that anyone who goes through my garbage can use my password," he said.

Newsday, which reported June 21 that unauthorized persons had gained access to TRW's computerized credit reports, has learned that at least three TRW access codes and passwords have been circulating in the computer underground for the past several weeks.

"It's an outrage to the company to think that people would access our system for wrong purposes," said Julie Wright, a spokeswoman for TRW. "We helped to support legislation to put some protection into the law. It's really an affront to us to see the password fall into unauthorized hands.

She said that not all printed reports contain access codes and passwords, but an official of one of the world's largest banks, and one of TRW's largest volume customers, said the bank's access codes and passwords appear on most of the TRW reports it requests.

Wright could not explain why TRW prints out the passwords and access codes on some of its credit reports, but it appears to be a hold-over from a time when such practices presented no problem because home microcomputers were not in widespread use.

Using an access code and an accompanying short password, anyone familiar with the instructions for the TRW system can use a home computer and an inexpensive device called a modem, which hooks the computer to the telephone lines, to look up any individual's credit report. Instructions for the system's use are available on some "bulletin boards" of the so-called computer underground. The only remaining hurdles are a working phone number for the password and certain simple commands that do not appear on the reports.

A legitimate subscriber to the service said it is not even necessary to use a computer. Credit reports can be obtained over the phone, by anyone with a legitimate user identification and password.

Geoffrey S. Goodfellow, an internationally recognized expert on computer security, characterized TRW's computer security as "woefully inadequate," "lackadaisical" and "lethargic."

But TRW's Wright said the company has an "outstanding security department" that educates customers and investigates complaints. The entire area of computer security is a "very broad societal issue that needs to be looked at," she continued. "If the situation has evolved to where hackers have become a threat," she added, the problem must be dealt with.

Sources in the computer underground provided Newsday with two account numbers and passwords for the TRW computer system as well as detailed credit reports to prove that break-ins to the system had occurred within the past week.

Peter Janotti, president of Commercial Bank and Trust in Wilmington, Mass., confirmed that the passwords given to Newsday by its sources were his bank's and that they had continued to work.

And you're part of it, Midland! LTV's Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation and the Republic Steel Corporation have joined to create LTV Steel: a new company stronger than either, better than both.

You, the people of Midland, live and work with the men and women of LTV Steel.

Here, and across the country, these employees are producing world-class quality steel products as members of four new operating divisions: Flat Rolled, Bar, Tubular, and Specialty Steels Divisions.

In modern steelmaking and finishing facilities, LTV Steel producers are continuously casting smoothly surfaced slabs; processing flat rolled and tin mill products to critical tolerances. Integrating our quality control program company-wide, and voluntarily participating on labor/management teams, our people are using resources creatively and refining problem-solving abilities on the move.

Other veteran crews are improving the strength and quality of seamless pipe for oil country customers; cold finishing bar shapes in the heart of our major markets. Similar performances are making LTV Steel a leader in stainless steels.

Take a close look, Midland! LTV Steel people will show you excellence in the making!
