

Frank Church to enter crowded race

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Election Commission voted today to declare Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, eligible for federal campaign funds and immediately certified $100,000 for his unofficial presidential campaign committee.

Church has not yet formally announced but is expected to do so in mid-March. His eligibility was approved without dissent after brief discussion.

The committee organized on behalf of Church, who heads the Senate intelligence committee, announced Wednesday it had gathered the required $5,000 in contributions of $250 or less from each of 20 states.

The 51-year-old liberal is ahead of the Senate committee investigating the CIA and chairs a subcommittee that has been looking into the affairs of multinational corporations.

Three announced candidates were also allocated more matching campaign funds today as the FEC raced against a Monday deadline under which it will lose power, by a Supreme Court order, to disburse funds unless its makeup is changed.

Others receiving money today were Democrats Jimmy Carter ($104,480) and Fred Harris ($47,528) and Republican Ronald Reagan ($295,916).

Seven of the eight major Democrats already in the race campaigned in Massachusetts today for the March 2 primary, and Ronald Reagan took his challenge of President Ford to battle in that state's March 9 contest.

Democrat Jimmy Carter was spending a rare day at home in Plains, Ga., where local supporters gave him a rousing surprise welcome home Wednesday night.

Fred Harris, who finished fourth and well below his expectations in New Hampshire Tuesday, said at a news conference in Boston today he will not drop out of the race. "We are going to the convention no matter what," he said.

The commission currently is reviewing request by 10 candidates for another $1.5 million in matching funds.

Since the New Hampshire voting, Carter and Ford have found a handy word in their campaign vocabulary—momentum.

On the strength of first place showings each claims to have it. They say it will last through this summer's nominating conventions.

Ford said he was "very happy" with his 51 per cent to 49 per cent win over Ronald Reagan. "With the momentum we have, I'm confident we'll end up in Kansas City with a good victory and Nov. 2 with a bigger one," he said.

Neither Republican plans to campaign for next Tuesday's primary in Massachusetts, the only state to vote Democratic in the 1972 presidential election. But Massachusetts is a major battleground for the Democrats.

The FEC said today the Supreme Court mandate would take effect Monday, rather than Sunday as earlier indicated.

After that date the commission staff plans to continue working while Congress considers new legislation to revive the FEC under the court guidelines.

On Wednesday, the FEC qualified anti-abortion candidate Ellen McCormack for a first $100,000 campaign installment.

The Supreme Court ruled the FEC unconstitutional Jan. 30 because of the method by which its members are appointed. But the court allowed it to continue to dispense funds through Feb. 29 so Congress would have time to correct the problem.

It now appears unlikely Congress will pass such a measure this week.

Commissioner Neil Staebler dissented from the decision to qualify Mrs. McCormack, saying some checks listed by her organization were payable to the Pro-Life Action Committee and it was unclear whether contributors knew they were going to a presidential campaign.

The FEC approved a total $629,150 in additional matching funds Wednesday. President Ford will receive $79,660 of that amount, bringing his total public funds to $1,027 million. Ronald Reagan receives an additional $153,358, raising his total to $956,258.

Also certified Wednesday was $51,614 to Democrat Birch Bayh, $7,366 to Milton J. Shapp and $37,153 to Morris Udall.

Firemen at work

Responding to a call at 2:40 p.m. Wednesday, firemen found smoke coming from a vacant, second-story apartment behind 801 N. Somerville. It was necessary to use a ladder to reach the apartment because the stairs to the door were in a state of disrepair. Firemen found a smoldering mattress in the apartment and after extinguishing it, the three units returned to the fire department at 3:15 p.m. A spokesman said that the fire may have been started by children who managed to climb into the apartment.

Prosecution wins fight over Hearst drug use

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The first big battle of the day at the Patricia Hearst trial was over her use of marijuana, LSD and mescaline. The second was over a psychiatrist's contention she "didn't lie" on the witness stand.

The prosecution won both. Defense attorney F. Lee Bailey leaped to his feet with a shout Wednesday when Prosecutor David Bancroft began questioning psychiatrist Louis West about the newspaper heiress' narcotics use prior to her kidnapping.

"Is the government saying that anyone who smokes grass is a bank robber?" stormed Bailey.

Bancroft said his purpose was to show Miss Hearst was not the "naive school girl" portrayed by the psychiatrist. U.S. District Court Judge Oliver Carter permitted the cross-examination of the drug questions.

It was Bancroft and Prosecutor James Browning Jr. who objected when another defense psychiatrist, Martin Orne, testified Miss Hearst was not "simulating" her story of taking part in the Hibernia Bank holdup out of fear.

"She didn't lie," said Orne, a research psychiatrist and expert in hypnosis at the University of Pennsylvania.

After the prosecution objections, Carter told the jurors only they could decide if the 22-year-old defendant told the truth on the stand.

"No psychiatrist, no judge, no lawyer or anyone else can invade your province of deciding that," the judge said.

Orne, who was still testifying when the trial recessed until today, then modified his stand, saying he didn't mean to state flatly Miss Hearst did not lie.

Instead, he said, he meant that when he asked questions intended to sway her into answers that would have been favorable to her defense, she passed up the chances. "Much to my surprise, she wouldn't pick up the clues."

Bancroft's cross-examination of West, a UCLA psychiatrist and expert on brainwashing, who said Miss Hearst's 57 days in a closet turned her into a "child" eager to please her kidnappers, took up most of the day.

West said both Miss Hearst and Steven Weed, her former fiance, told him they used marijuana and the illegal hallucinogenic drugs LSD and mescaline while they lived together in Berkeley prior to her kidnapping two years ago.

West told him he was "growing grass on the back porch" of their apartment and that he introduced Miss Hearst to marijuana "and she smoked it on several occasions."

The psychiatrist said Miss Hearst told him she took LSD and mescaline two or three times.

"Wasn't it she who was consistently after LSD instead of the other way around?" Bancroft asked.

West said Weed told him that Miss Hearst wanted to try out the hallucinogenic drug and he finally gave her some.

The psychiatrist responded sharply when the prosecutor indicated Miss Hearst's use of the drugs showed she was not the "naive school girl" that West had portrayed under questioning by Bailey.

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — Gov. Dolph Briscoe says a Democratic presidential ticket of former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., would be ideal for Texas and the nation.

Briscoe said Wednesday he was committed to vote for Bentsen in the state's presidential primary, but added he hoped Carter would do well. Bentsen will be on the primary ballot as a favorite son candidate.

"I think most highly of Jimmy Carter," Briscoe said at a news conference. "I could most enthusiastically support a ticket with Jimmy Carter."

"I would like very much to see Senator Bentsen on the ticket. I think it would be very helpful not only to Texas but as far as the national ticket is concerned. I think it would strengthen the Democratic chances for winning in November."

Briscoe said Carter's victory in the New Hampshire primary was a major step to the Democratic nomination, but said it did not necessarily make him the party's top contender.

"He has certainly moved well and has moved into being one of the leading Democratic candidates," Briscoe said. "I don't know what's going to happen in the Florida primary or the Massachusetts primary. I think these will certainly be key primaries as far as the Democratic candidate is concerned."

Briscoe said Alabama Gov. George Wallace would pick up some Texas delegates in the state's primary. He said the Wallace organization was stronger in the state than Carter's organization.

Wallace, Bentsen and Carter are the only Democratic candidates who will appear on the primary ballots in all 31 districts. Each district will elect its own delegates to the convention, committed on the basis of how votes are cast for each candidate.

At the news conference Briscoe also stated state government could do without federal revenue sharing, but he says the program should be continued for local governments.

"I cannot go to Congress and say 'give us some money' at the same time I say 'you ought to operate a balanced budget' the way we do here in Texas," Briscoe said Wednesday. "There's no revenue sharing when the federal government is operating at a deficit that's $74 to $76 billion this year."

Briscoe said he would rather the state cut its spending than continue to drain money from the federal treasury, but he said local governments should continue to receive federal checks.

He said local governments did not have the tax resources necessary to keep up their current levels of spending.

"I think it has to be continued for at least awhile," he said.

Briscoe also challenged the basic philosophy of revenue sharing during the news conference. He said revenue sharing was supposed to decentralize federal power by moving money back to communities, but what actually happened was communities had become more dependent on the government funds.

Briscoe said he hoped Texas could economize on its programs and hold increases in spending during the 1977 legislature to the $400 million surplus he expects at the end of the current biennium.

"We're going to have to hold the line in all areas of spending," he said. "All people are just saying we can't afford any more taxes."

Briscoe also said the legislature should demand more accountability for the money spent on education in public schools, colleges and universities.

"I hope we can do a better job of utilizing the resources that we put into higher education," he said. "We still have a very high drop out rate. We still have a high percentage of high school graduates who have no saleable skills. That's also true of higher education."

The governors also said he believes Texas should not shift its emphasis too rapidly from state institutions to community-based programs to work with delinquents and potential delinquents.

"I think we've got to prove that these local programs will work," he said Wednesday. "I personally think it's better to start with a few of the programs that are well planned and properly monitored by the state and not plunge headlong into these local programs and have it fail. I want to see it work."

Briscoe has released only half of the $4 million legislators allocated for community-based programs to work with delinquents and potential delinquents.

He said he may agree to release some of the rest of the $2 million if the Texas Youth Council can convince him the money will help reduce the number of delinquents in state institutions.

The governor said an increase from 900 to 1,200 in the number of individuals in state facilities operated by the youth council was one reason he released only half of the funds.

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — Hundreds of shouting Africans marched into the city's central square today waving antigovernment placards and protesting British "interference" in current negotiations for a settlement of Rhodesia's racial dispute.

The demonstrators, including many women with children strapped to their backs, paraded in Cecil Square opposite the hotel of special British envoy Lord Greenhill.

Food stamp reform set

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Agriculture Department officials today formally proposed a sweeping set of food stamp reform regulations which would force about 5 million people off stamp rolls and save taxpayers an estimated $1.2 billion.

At the same time, however, Assistant Agriculture Secretary Richard Feltner told a news conference the plan also would provide increased benefits to nearly 5 million of the 18.8 million current stamp recipients, "virtually all of whom are either elderly or the poorest of the poor."

People dropped from the program under the proposal, the official said, would be mostly in groups earning $8,000 to $10,000 a year.

Feltner said officials hope to get the new regulations—which go far beyond a $12 million reform bill approved by the Senate Agriculture Committee—into effect by June 1.

An antipoverty spokesman, however, immediately announced that about 100 church, labor, civil rights and other groups plan to file suit quickly in an effort to block the proposed regulations.

Ronald Pollack, director of the Food Research and Action Center of New York which will coordinate the suit, said the administration proposals will be challenged on grounds that they discriminate against the working poor and run counter to provisions of the food stamp law requiring provision of an adequate diet for the needy.

Ford announced last week that he intended to make administrative reforms to save about $1.2 billion because he was tired of waiting for Congress to act on the issue.

Under the Senate bill, which officials said would cut costs about $315 million a year, experts said about $100 million of the savings would be attributed to a new provision basing eligibility for stamps on income in the 30 days before an applicant files his request, rather than on current and prospective income as at present.

The administration plan reportedly would seek much greater savings by basing eligibility on an applicant's income over the past 90 days, thus further delaying benefits for the newly-unemployed.

It also reportedly would propose to charge needy people 30 per cent of their net income for food stamps instead of the 27.5 per cent included in the Senate bill and the current average of about 24 per cent.

Flag on stamp flies upside down

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Bicentennial commemorative postage stamps that the U.S. Postal Service has issued for all 50 states, are flying the Tennessee state flag upside down.

The state flag, officially adopted by the legislature in 1905, is red with a blue and white stripe at the right edge. In the center is a blue circle containing three white stars in a tilted pyramid—with two stars slightly above a third.

The stamp issued by the post office has one star high above two others.

State employee Bill Seifert apparently was the first to catch the error on the postage stamp. "It's a common mistake for people to fly it upside down," he added. "I see people flying it upside down all the time, but I think it's a little ridiculous for the federal government to make a mistake like that."

Embarrassed postal officials said the error will probably increase the value of the Tennessee stamp to collectors, but expressed doubt that printing of the 13-cent stamp would stop.

James Daniel, director of customer services for the U.S. Postal Service in Nashville, said about 500,000 sheets of the commemorative stamps were issued in the city on Monday and that another 500,000 will arrive in about two weeks.

Following a telephone call to the state Adjutant General—just to make sure—Embarrassed Nashville Postmaster David Huggins changed the flag in his own office.

It was upside down.

"Upon our children — how they are taught — rests the fate or fortune of tomorrow's world." — B. C. Forbes, American Business editor.

'Soviet Union mightier than ever'

MOSCOW (UPI) — Top-ranking party officials declared today the Soviet Union is mightier than it ever has been and is no longer threatened by force—making the triumph of communism inevitable.

But they said peace remains Moscow's prime concern. Janos Kadar, Hungary's Communist leader, told 5,000 delegates to the 25th Soviet party congress. "There is no force on earth that can stop the Soviet Union's advance and the triumph of communism."

This, he said, was an inspiration to people building socialism and peace all over the world.

Todor Zhivkov, first secretary of the Bulgarian Communist party, said "many and different forces, including realistically minded political leaders of capitalist countries, had brought about positive changes in the prospects of peace. The greatest contribution, he said, was that of Leonid I. Brezhnev, general secretary of the Soviet party.

Anatoly P. Alexandrov, 72, who as president of the USSR Academy of Sciences is regarded here as the nation's top scientist, said the Soviet Union was never so strong as today.

The speakers made their remarks on the third day of the congress.

Brezhnev set the tone of congress rhetoric on the first day with a pledge to continue détente with the West while pursuing the ideological struggle. Most speakers echoed his words and Cuban Premier Fidel Castro said he had no plans to export revolution.

Alexandrov said the Soviet Union "survived years as the severest warrior as well as the years of the cold war and has achieved great successes.

"The growth of our economic and military might has changed the situation and attempts to address our country from a position of threat by force have gone. The might of the socialist community and of the peace forces has increased tremendously."

Said Alexandrov: "Today we are stronger than we ever have been and our policy of peace and détente has never been so active. The peaceful initiative of our party and Comrade Brezhnev forms the backbone of world policy."

The congress is closed to all but the 5,000 delegates. Recorded parts of the proceedings are broadcast on television and Moscow Radio and the Tass news agency carries condensed versions of some of the speeches.

Speakers so far have ranged through ranks of Soviet officials to Castro in a smart dress uniform and a textile worker from northern Russia with a sash full of medals glinting on her chest.

Their theme was always the same: Unstinting praise for the Soviet Union and the man who rules it, General Secretary Leonid Brezhnev.

Officially, day two of the Soviet Communist party congress Wednesday was a "debate" on Brezhnev's keynote speech the previous day.

But the debate consisted of a series of monologues, with more of the same scheduled when the congress resumed work this morning.

Brezhnev, 69, sat expressionless on the podium as waves of applause echoed around him at frequent intervals. Not a hint of dissent intruded on the occasion. The speakers included several members of the top leadership, foreign guests, the textile worker and a miner.

"The delegates unanimously supported the home and foreign policy of the Communist party of the Soviet Union, the consistent struggle for peace, the grandiose tasks for the future set out in Leonid Brezhnev's report," the official news agency Tass reported.

Castro did not directly mention Angola, where an estimated 12,000 Soviet equipped Cuban troops are in action. But he said, "No one can export revolutions nor impose them by war."

Referring to the official line that the Cubans are in Angola to protect a Marxist state from outside interference, he added, "No one can prevent a people from making revolutions." Castro's remarks were an apparent reply to a warning from Secretary of State Henry Kissinger that the United States "will not tolerate" any armed intervention in the Western Hemisphere.

Earlier, Ukrainian party chief Vladimir I. Shcherbitsky stressed Brezhnev's warning there must be no deviation from orthodox Kremlin-line communism. He said it was the "sacred duty" of Communists to combat what he called dangerous trends such as nationalism.

This is a live issue in the Ukraine, but Shcherbitsky also was obviously referring to foreign Communist parties such as the French and British, which have dared to criticize Moscow for alleged human rights violations and have gone their own way on matters of policy.

Letter to the Editor

The Editors
Pampa Daily News
Sirs:

It was disappointing to most of the School Board members to read the (name withheld) letter which appeared in the Pampa News on February 18, however I am writing this letter as an individual and not necessarily as a Board spokesman. The anonymous writer apparently knows just enough of the business of running his (or hers) and all of Pampa's School System to make several unfair and incorrect criticisms of our schools. A few questions asked in the right places could have given the correct information. For example, Teachers' Aides are only assigned where class size is too big for a single teacher. Furthermore, they are mainly used in the lower grades where the children have only a very short interest span. Some of these grades were not even in existence in our schools four or five years ago. The instruction of our children would be seriously curtailed if Teachers' Aides were no longer used. My guess is that (name withheld) does not have any children in classes where Teachers Aides assist.

Perhaps a single teacher could lead a class of 30 or 40 students fifty years ago, but it is just as unfair to compare the operation of yesterday's schools with today's schools as it is to compare beef prices then and now.

The one Kindergarten child that (name withheld) complains about seeing as the only passenger on a school bus is probably a farm or ranch child, who lives at the end of a bus run. If we accept any State money for the operation of school buses, we are required by law to provide transportation for any child who lives more than two miles from the school.

What disturbs me as Board Member is the suggestion in this letter that the School Board represents only one part of the community, or conversely, does not represent one part of the community.

The present Board represents the entire Pampa Independent School District. We welcome any citizen's attendance at our public meetings, and, I believe, we lean over backwards to allow anyone who wishes, to speak on any subject, even though this makes some of our meetings last many hours.

After hearing all the facts and opinions, each Board Member makes his mind up and a decision is reached. Few of our decisions please everybody; some don't even completely satisfy Board members, but they do represent the best of our thinking after weighing all the facts. We always keep in mind that it is our responsibility to serve our Pampa school children first, and to balance what we do for our children as best we can with the money resources available for this purpose, as fairly and equitably as possible. We try to keep the best administrators we can find to run our schools, and we continuously review their actions to know that they are serving the community to its best, overall interests.

The Texas School Trustee system was set up by the Texas Legislature and most of its actions are specifically set out by the laws of the State of Texas. For better or for worse, and in my opinion it is a good system, it is here to stay and we should learn to live with it.

Too Little to do?

According to a "high-level" defector from the Czechoslovakian intelligence service, none other than Ralph Nader was once a prime target of Communist bloc intelligence operations in this country.

In testimony just released by the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, the defector told the committee that in 1968 the Czechs began to collect an extensive file on Nader, as well as his relatives in Lebanon, because "he is such a powerful figure in public life in the United States" and it was decided it would be useful to recruit him if the chance ever arose.

The recruiting effort was never tried. If it had been, the Czechs would have had as much luck with Nader as General Motors had when it tried to buy off or blackmail the then-unknown consumer crusader.

This story tells us a couple of things. One is that the Communists have as much money to throw around on ridiculous espionage plots as the CIA. (As the amazed Nader commented, "It's like they had to make work.")

The other is that only a free country can a private citizen become "such a powerful figure" that he attracts the attention of the cloak-and-dagger boys of a foreign government.

Tradition has it that the ancient Egyptians would prominently display a skeleton at feasts to point up human mortality!

Exercise In The Absurd

By ANTHONY HARRIGAN

From time to time, a militant organization will seek and obtain publicity by demanding that the "power structure" make huge payments in compensation for alleged sufferings of a social group. Such demands are absurd, especially when they involve events in the past.

A case in point is the claim for compensation by descendants of Ojigla Sioux Indians killed in the Battle of Wounded Knee on December 29, 1890. A bill introduced by Sen. James G. Abourezk (D-S.D.) would provide $600,000 to these descendants.

Wounded Knee has been in the news in recent years because of the activities of the radical American Indian Movement. Indian militants have been involved in widespread lawlessness on reservations. They have endeavored to present the Wounded Knee battle as a "massacre," a characteristic act of brutality by U.S. troops and settlers in the West.

The U.S. Army recently restudied the battle of Wounded Knee and, in a report presented to the Senate Judiciary Committee, concluded that U.S. cavalrymen did not deliberately shoot 146 Sioux men, women and children in an act of vengeance, as alleged. Actually, the Army study reports, the troops were fired on first by the Indians and displayed remarkable restraint in holding their fire.

It is really amazing that the U.S. Senate would even consider payments to the descendants of the Indians killed at Wounded Knee. Once into this sort of thing, there would be no end to claims for compensation.

The author of a letter to the editor of The Tennessean recently pointed out giving "blackmail payments" to the descendants of the Sioux would produce a chain reaction with regard to claims for ancient wrongs. He said:

"Let the Sioux Indian Nation pay reparations to each of the descendants of the 655 men massacred and mutilated at Little Big Horn. Also seek out and find the descendants of all the westward moving settlers who were massacred by such distinguished gentlemen as Red Cloud, Crazy Horse, Coshie, Geronimo, etc., and compensate them, also."

With all the real problems this nation faces, it is shocking that a U.S. Senator would introduce such asinine legislation as the Wounded Knee compensation bill.

Sen. Abourezk would do well to occupy himself with more serious, relevant matters such as the need for curtailing federal handouts and strengthening the national economy. The Dakotas, for example, need new industry that could take advantage of the coal resources available in North Dakota. Economic development should be a priority consideration for members of Congress from this area.

Instead, the political focus is on redistribution of wealth, on taking from productive citizens and transferring income to those who make careers of dependency. Preoccupation with this sort of thing, such as the Wounded Knee payment scheme, indicates the difficulty ahead in getting at the root of real problems.

INSIDE WASHINGTON

Ghost of the Saigon Disaster

By ROBERT S. ALLEN

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26 — A ghost of the Saigon disaster is still haunting State Department corridors — at $42,000 a year.

Ten months after the precipitate U.S. withdrawal from South Vietnam, Ambassador Graham Martin is still wandering aimlessly about the State Department trying to get something to do — and likely to continue doing that unavailingly indefinitely.

At 63 and with 40 years' federal service, the career diplomat could take early retirement with a comfortable pension. But Martin doggedly refuses to do that.

Rating himself highly, and seemingly oblivious of the widespread harsh criticism of his Saigon record, he is obstinately seeking another ambassadorial assignment — and a choice one at that.

What he is particularly angling for is appointment to a U.S. Embassy in one of the Scandinavian countries — a cushy post with no headaches and where the chief of mission has little to do and a sizable staff to do it for him.

That's firmly barred by two hefty obstacles:

(1) There is no vacancy in the Scandinavian capitals; (2) appointment of Martin to an important ambassadorship would run headlong into stormy congressional opposition.

This certainty is of utmost moment because it bars the way of his getting another diplomatic assignment. It's possible he might somehow manage to wangle such an appointment, but he would have to face Senate confirmation — and his prospects of getting that are decidedly unpromising.

Persona Non Grata

Still neither forgotten nor forgiven is Martin's scathingly assailed performance in Saigon.

Jarringly illustrative of that is the harsh grilling he underwent a few weeks ago at the hands of a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee — fretting out just what happened in Saigon.

It's the Foreign Relations Committee that passes on diplomatic appointments, and whose approval Martin would have to win. From the severely critical attitude displayed toward him at the subcommittee's hearing, he would have his work cut out for him being confirmed.

Particularly in this very uncertain election year when politicians are most leery about reviving South Vietnam controversies.

Among long-standing charges about which Martin was sharply questioned was that he broke a categorical promise to provide helicopter evacuation for some 150 South Vietnamese security officials who stuck by the U.S. to the end. Also that he had negligently failed to make comprehensive evacuation plans and arrangements with the result that many Americans, including officials, were left to their own devices.

On the other hand, President Nguyen Van Thieu, with whom Martin was close and was accused of unduly favoring, was flown to safety with his family, relatives and assorted henchmen.

Throughout the subcommittee grilling, Martin defended himself determinedly. But at the conclusion, it was quite apparent he had convinced no one.

It's very evident he is still very much in hot water on Capitol Hill, and would face a rigorous ordeal getting confirmed — especially in this election year. As politicians would say, "Martin has no constituency in the Senate."

So he ambles about the State Department with nothing to do and plenty of time to do it — at $42,000 a year.

He has no office, secretary or anything else: only a desk in an out-of-the-way cubbyhole. To occupy himself, he reads newspapers, reports and other publications. A newsman spotting Martin walking leisurely down a corridor asked a State Department official, "What's he doing now?"

"I would say he is going out to lunch," was the unsmiling reply.

Early Birds

The 95th Congress doesn't convene until next January, but already a hot backstage scramble is underway for chairmanship of the prestigious House International Relations Committee.

The tussle was touched off by the announcement of Rep. Thomas Morgan, D.-Pa., long-time chairman, of intention to retire at the end of this Congress. After 30 years' congressional service (16 as committee chairman), the 69-year-old physician wants to go back to his unusual home in Fredericktown, Pa. The house is 105 feet long, has 67 doors and overlooks the Monongahela River.

Two senior committeemen aspire to the prize chairmanship — Reps. Clement Zablocki, D.-Wis., and Dante Fascell, D.-Fla.

Rep. Wayne Hays, D.-Ohio, another top member, had his eye on it but changed his mind. He already heads the Administration Committee, and has long aspired to a high party post — possibly Democratic floor leader. So Hays has told Zablocki he will back him.

Nominally Zablocki should be in line as Morgan's successor. The Milwaukeean is second ranking committeeman, and under the seniority system would automatically step up. But that was riddled a year ago at the start of this Congress, and it's a toss-up what will happen next January when the 95th Congress convenes.

That's where Fascell comes in. While somewhat junior in service to Zablocki, Fascell is chairman of the International Political and Military Affairs Subcommittee and stands in well with militant liberals and the large freshman contingent — who importantly influence House Democratic affairs in this Congress. If they continue to do that next year, Fascell's prospects could be bright.

So he and Zablocki are maneuvering and electioneering for a prize that is nearly a year off — during which a lot is bound to happen.

Doc Morgan is the 33rd member to call it quits with this Congress. And it's certain there will be others — to say nothing about the many who will be forcibly retired by voters in November.

Capitol Comedy

Since Ford saved only $1200 from his $200,000 salary, he may have to do commercials for Alpo.

Reagan admitted he is worth $2½ million. And that's just in his saddlebags.

Among Lincoln's mementos in a sealed box were press clippings and a $5 Confederate bill with Wallace's picture on it.

Chou vs. Mao: he who laughs last...

By Ray Cromley

WASHINGTON — (NEA) — In the end, it appears, Chairman Mao Tse-tung may have won his 25-year struggle with Premier Chou En-lai for control of China — by outliving his rival.

Over the years, Chou and his associates twice managed to put Mao on the shelf — in an honorary and revered position, of course. But one which Mao himself has described as being on a marble pedestal in a museum.

On one such occasion, in the process of making a comeback, Mao created the Cultural Revolution, turning the ruling Communist party inside out and gripping China in a frenzy of terror and housecleaning for years — only to have Chou weather the storm and out-politic Mao. He gradually rebuilt the party structure in his image — and sandbagged Lin Piao, Mao's chosen successor and loyal lieutenant over more than three decades. While most anything is possible in China's faction-ridden politics, the Chou story — that Lin was conspiring to assassinate Mao — does not hold water. When one knows the principals involved and their past loyalties — not of a few years but of lifetimes.

Mao, on this comeback, as before, appointed a man intensely loyal to his own belief in radical action. From all that is known to date, Hua Kuo-feng, the new acting premier, is a man who zigs when Mao zigs and zags when Mao zags.

Apparently he believes, with Mao, that at this stage and for a long time to come, China's future lies in emphasis on agriculture, with industrial gains coming only through investment of those resources remaining after farmers get what they must have to meet Mao's goals.

Industrial gains, under this planning would be achieved as agriculture provided the capital to make the step-by-step improvements wanted. Or if foreign know-how could be brought in with no strings at no political price — and without hampering agricultural progress.

As in Mao's choice of the ill-fated Lin Piao, Hua has shown a remarkable capacity in administration in a rough and not-so-gentle manner. And he has been a pragmatist, like Mao, looking for results and using ideology as a lever rather than as an objective.

It is too early to tell, of course, whether this initial Mao victory will mean the permanent installation of Hua and other Mao men in the top ranks of China and the demotion or influence stagnation of those who have been close to Chou.

But if Mao is able to hold on to his initial victory certain matters seem clear. First, there will be no quick end to China's deep suspicion of the Soviet Union — and no letdown in China's attempts to keep some sort of a relationship with the United States as a counter-balance to the USSR.

I know first hand of Mao's hatred and distrust of Moscow and all its works, and his conviction, based on his early experiences, that aggression — economic, political and military — are in the forefront of the Kremlin's thinking.

And Mao believes, as he has so forcefully expressed — once notably through an announcement by Lin Piao — that China can afford to have only one principal major enemy at a time if it is to survive in this uncertain world.

Mao also is an admirer of U.S. science and technology and industrial know-how. There is some evidence that he would like to tie in with this technology, but probably not under conditions profitable to American private companies.

Internally, a resurgence of Mao's power would mean the emergence of men dedicated to selfhelp, decentralization and radical innovation, but no loosening of controls over the individual and his liberties.

Put Up with or Put Out Chronic Lovebirds

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My sister and her husband come to our town three times a year on business and always expect to be put up in our home.

Their behavior is unreal, and I'm considering putting them up in a motel on their next visit.

I don't object to couples holding hands and showing signs of affection in public, but you should see these two! They're like a couple of dogs in heat! He has his hands all over her and even under her blouse (at the dinner table, yet!), and my sister just giggles and thinks it's cute.

They've been married for 23 years, so there's no excuse for this. His filthy talk about their intimate relationship is too embarrassing to repeat. He brags in front of our teenaged children that he and his wife bathe together!

I can't ask my children to spend the whole time in their rooms when this moron and my sister visits us.

My husband is a softy. He says we should look the other way when they're here. Have you ever tried to carry on a conversation with someone without looking at them?

Am I being a prude? Please advise me.

EMBARRASSED

DEAR EMBARRASSED: I'm for putting up the lovebirds in a motel, tree, kennel or some other appropriate place. And don't make up any excuse. Tell them why.

DEAR ABBY: As a steady reader of your column, I have noticed that you often say, "Mother Nature decides at what age a woman should stop bearing children."

That undoubtedly gives comfort to women who for one reason or another bear children in their later years. But I think you should point out that the older a woman, the older her eggs are, and as an egg ages, it deteriorates, increasing the chances of having a defective child—as with mongolism.

Perhaps many people are not aware of this rather unhappy fact of life.

HUMANITARIAN

DEAR HUMANITARIAN: You make an important point. I was remiss in failing to mention it, and I thank you for doing so.

DEAR ABBY: Last summer, while running my fingers through the sand at the beach, I found an opal ring. I took it to a jeweler who appraised it at approximately $100. I would like to wear it, but here's the situation:

I have heard that bad luck is associated with the opal, and only people whose birthstone is the opal should wear it. My birthstone is not the opal, and I don't need any bad luck right now.

Have you ever heard of this superstition? What is your advice?

OTTAWA LAKE, MICH.

DEAR OTT: Yes, I have heard of this superstition. I am not superstitious, but if you are, don't wear the opal.

McAnelly to be Hereford speaker

Plans are underway for the annual Top O' Texas Hereford Association's Show and Sale here March 15-17.

An estimated 50 registered Hereford bulls will be consigned by some of the breeders from the Top O' Texas area.

The association's annual banquet is scheduled at 7:30 p.m. on March 16 in the Heritage Room of the M.K. Brown Auditorium, with dinner to be catered by Dyer's.

Rex McAnelly, general manager of Moody Farms, will be the speaker.

"By popular demand, Rex will tell his new story of The Trials and Tribulations of Ferdinand the Bull, E.O. Wedgeworth, secretary said.

The speaker is updating the popular tale of Ferdinand to fit the present trends of the cattle business in this bicentennial year.

Wedgeworth said a record crowd is expected.

Lefors fire chief says fires deliberate

The volunteer firemen of Lefors are getting pretty put out about all the grass fires they've had to put out the past couple of days, according to J.W. Franks, Lefors fire chief.

"We've had six grass fires in the area in the last two days," Franks said. "People just need to be more careful, as dry as it is."

Asked what has started the fires, the chief said, "A couple of them started from cigarettes, I'm pretty sure, but three between 4 a.m. and 6 a.m. today appeared to have been deliberately set."

Franks said that the three fires early today occurred between Lefors and Pampa.

"We got to them real quick," he said, "and there wasn't any wind."

The first two fires this morning each burned between two and five acres and the third about an acre or an acre and a half, he said.

A fire at 5 p.m. Tuesday burned about 10 acres of pasture on the Combs - Worley Sun Oil Co. Lease about six miles northwest of Lefors, the chief reported.

At 8:30 p.m. Tuesday about five acres were burned on the Dick Bull Ranch one and a half miles south of Lefors, Franks said.

The other call was to a small fire at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday on the Warner Oil Co. lease seven miles west of Lefors.

The three fires that appeared to have been set this morning brought a comment from the chief:

"It's a felony offense. I don't know what the penalty is, but I'll guarantee you anyone caught will get the full limit put on them, whatever it is."

The chief said that Lefors citizens should "check around trash barrels and be sure trash is picked up. We've had several little fires in town started from trash."

Tree Topper

Recent springlike temperatures have provided an opportunity for tree trimmers to apply their arboreal arts to various vegetation in the area. Juan Gonzales delivers deft strokes of his saw to unneeded branches in a tree in the 800 block of North Somerville. The unseasonable weather has prompted predictions of an early spring from some prognosticators but folks who have lived through many unpredictable Panhandle seasons are saying "Wanna bet?"

Nixon refuses comment

KWEILIN, China (UPI) — Former President Richard Nixon today refused to comment on criticism by politicians in the United States on his current visit to China.

Nixon stared blankly at reporters who asked him for comment on highly critical statements by Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., and others regarding his eight-day visit to China to commemorate the fourth anniversary of his 1972 trip to Peking as president.

That visit opened the door to Sino-American relations after almost 25 years of hostility.

The former President paused briefly, then rushed brusquely past reporters after they confronted him on his arrival from Peking at this scenic south China city, the second stop of his three-city tour of China.

Later, one of his aides, John Brennan, told reporters who asked him if Nixon would make any comment: "He would be stupid to say anything."

Despite the miserable weather, Nixon visited one of the most spectacular of hundreds of caves near Kweilin, then drove through a steady, drizzling rain to view miniature plants and trees.

Nixon, and his wife, Pat, flew the 1,100 miles from Peking on a British-made Trident belonging to China's civil aviation fleet.

He was accompanied by Yao Lien-wei, vice chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress and Huang Chen, chief of the Chinese liaison office in Washington.

Chiao Hsiao-kuang, vice chairman of the Kwangsi Regional Revolutionary Committee, led a group of local officials who welcomed the former president to this city of 320,000.

"I am so happy to be here," Nixon said. "My daughter, Julie, told me all about Kweilin and how beautiful it was. I look forward to seeing it."

During the 20-minute drive from the airport, small groups of people gathered along the road to watch. Workers in fields also stopped as Nixon drove past but there was little reaction.

In the downtown district, large, curious crowds lined the streets and there was polite applause and some waving.

At a farewell banquet hosted by Nixon Wednesday night in Peking's Great Hall of the People, the former president said the United States and China must work together in "building a new world... building a bridge of understanding that reaches from the Golden Gate of California to the Golden Gate of Heavenly Peace in Peking."

Nixon, the first private individual allowed to visit the Great Hall, said the bridge he started building with his first visit to China four years ago was still not complete but "We are determined to complete it. We must not fail."

24 blacks killed

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — Rhodesian security forces have killed 24 black nationalist guerrillas in the latest clash on the frontier with Mozambique, according to an army communique.

The action area was not pinpointed by the army, but the first military encounters along the Mozambique border began a week ago, opening a second front in the black insurgency campaign to end white minority rule.

The communique issued Wednesday said the Rhodesians lost one soldier in the clash.

The communique said: "Twenty-four guerrillas were known to have been killed... in follow-up, hot pursuit operations in the past 24 hours."

The latest battle represented the greatest loss in lives for the guerrillas in any single action since they began their campaign late in 1972.

Until recently, action was confined to the northeast with insurgents penetrating from neighboring Zambia.

The Mozambique border runs for about 800 miles to the north and east of Rhodesia.

(In Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, the secretary general of the Organization of African Unity Wednesday called on the organization to increase "the combat capacity" of black Rhodesian guerrillas.)

(The statement by William Eteki-M'baumoua of Cameroon coincided with efforts to reach a political agreement between Rhodesia's white minority government and its black nationalist movement.)

Hua toasted the health of President Ford — something he did not do in his toast at a welcome banquet he hosted for Nixon Sunday.

Hua and Nixon held more than 10 hours of talks during the former president's stay in Peking. Many few visitors to China, no matter what their rank, ever spend as much time talking with top Chinese leaders.

Nixon also met for one hour 40 minutes with 82-year-old Communist party Chairman Mao Tse-tung, who asked Nixon to convey his regards to Ford.

Hua described Nixon's talks with Chinese leaders as "candid and unconstrained." He said they "reviewed the great changes which have taken place in the international situation since 1972."

In Washington, Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., said Wednesday Nixon was "violating the law" by discussing foreign policy in China — something he said only a president or a secretary of state can do.

"If he wants to do this country a favor, he might stay over there," Goldwater said.

But Ford declined to join other Republicans in terming Nixon's trip an embarrassment to his presidential campaign.

"I hesitate to evaluate the effect, good or bad," Ford said when asked whether the trip had hurt him in the New Hampshire primary. "My general impression is that there was a minimal effect."

Heroin could be laced with arsenic

LIBERAL, Kan. (UPI) — Authorities, alarmed by one death and several violent illnesses blamed on heroin blended with arsenic, have promised users will not be prosecuted for turning in drugs for analysis.

Seward County Undersheriff Dan Brown and police investigator Sonny Ralston said any person turning in possibly contaminated drugs will not be charged.

"We want to get these drugs analyzed and find out what's in them," Brown said.

"We don't want to work any more death investigations," said Kansas Bureau of Investigation agent Scott Teeslink. "Be careful what you're using and what you're buying."

Sonny Madden, 25, Liberal, died Sunday of an apparent heroin injection. Chemical tests showing the cause of death are expected to be released by the laboratory in about two weeks.

Four persons have been arrested since his death on charges of selling heroin.

The investigators said preliminary tests on confiscated heroin showed it was of the Mexican brown variety cut with contaminants including arsenic and possibly other chemicals. They said other injectable drugs circulating in the area also may be poisoned.

Officers have found in the past two weeks cases of eight to 10 violent illnesses from the drugs in persons ranging in age from 15 to 30.

The day of Madden's death Mike Zieger, 25, was arrested and charged with two counts of sale of heroin and one count of possession. On Monday Lee Miller, 18, and a 17-year-old girl were arrested and charged with one count each of selling heroin.

On Wednesday, Gilberto Rodriguez, 33, was arrested on a charge of selling heroin. Authorities confiscated a small quantity of heroin when he was arrested.

One dies in explosion

WHITHARRAL, Tex. (UPI) — A leaking rural pipeline exploded Wednesday night and seared a flaming half-mile path to a mobile home, causing a second explosion which demolished the trailer, killed one man and injured four others.

"I saw the fire, looked back toward it and saw it ignite back along the gas line," said James Blackwell, one of the first to reach the scene. "It burned low and blue across the open field, and then the trailer caught fire."

"I drove down the dirt road in front of the trailer house. I turned around and saw the women waving and screaming out in an open field. One carried a baby. The clothes had been burned off all of them."

The body of Valdomero Alzonzo, 45, was found near the women. Also burned and in critical condition were his wife, Maria, 45, his daughter, Lupe Sustaita, 23, and Mrs. Sustaita's 19-month-old son, Michael.

All four and Mrs. Sustaita's husband, Chris, who was not in the home at the time, lived in the mobile home.

The fourth person injured, Edwin Havin, 59, lived in a small, frame house 200 feet from the mobile home. Officials believed Havin was running toward the mobile home when it exploded and was caught in the blast. He was listed in critical condition.

All the injured were taken to neighboring hospitals in Leveland and Littlefield but were transferred immediately to Methodist Hospital in Lubbock. A spokesman for the hospital today said Havin and Michael Sustaita were in critical condition and Maria Alzonzo and Lupe Sustaita were in serious condition.

Officials from the Hockley County Sheriff's office said the multi-purposed pipeline, owned by Mid-American Pipeline, Inc., of Tulsa, Okla., began leaking early in the evening but said crews were unable to find the source.

Blackwell said he first alerted sheriff's officers early in the evening when he smelled gas at his home two miles from the trailer. He said he and another farmer were in pickup trucks trying to find the leak when the main exploded.

Sheriff's deputy Jimmy Esquivel said he was in the small town of Whitharral trying to evacuate the city of 600 when the pipeline went up about a mile and a half away.

US embassy officials released

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Two kidnapped U.S. Embassy officials, released by Palestinian guerrillas after four months in captivity, flew to Athens today to rejoin their families.

The two officials, Charles Gallagher and William Dykes, boarded the Athens-bound Middle East Airlines jetliner together with five embassy security officers well before the other passengers, airport sources said.

Reporters and photographers were kept away from the plane as a motorcade of five U.S. Embassy cars pulled up near the aircraft and the two released officials walked up to the first class compartment together with their embassy escorts, witnesses said.

The two men had been dragged from their car and kidnapped four months ago. Their release Wednesday night ended the last and longest of the hundreds of known abductions carried out during Lebanon's civil war.

Lebanese sources said the two men were freed Wednesday in exchange for the release of two Palestinian guerrillas jailed in Israel, but the U.S. Embassy denied any knowledge of such an exchange.

"No ransom demands were ever communicated to the U.S. Embassy or other American officials," an embassy spokesman said. "We neither received a ransom demand nor conceded one."

The release of Charles Gallagher, 44, and William Dykes, 55, came after the embassy was mysteriously instructed to send representatives to the home of Lebanese Socialist leader Kamal Jumblatt Wednesday evening.

The representatives waited 90 minutes.

Suddenly, Gallagher and Dykes walked into the room — the first official news on their whereabouts since they were pulled from their car in a Palestinian-controlled sector of Beirut last Oct. 22.

Sources close to the case said Gallagher and Dykes, officials of the U.S. Information Agency in Beirut, were delivered to Jumblatt's house by the Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. A Popular Front spokesman denied it.

The sources said the Popular Front held the two men, throughout most of their confinement, after accepting custody of them from their abductors, a group of Lebanese Nasserite leftists.

Gallagher, of Roanoke, Va., and Dykes, of San Jose, Calif., immediately went into seclusion.

An embassy spokesman said the men were in good health and would leave for the United States "almost immediately" and would not be available for questioning. (In Virginia, Gallagher's father said he talked with his son by telephone. "He said he lost 40 pounds and the going was tough," said Andrew Gallagher.)

It was not clear why they were released at this time or whether Syria, the mediator of a peace agreement ending Lebanon's 10-month-old civil war, had helped to free them.

Their release marked the end of the longest known abduction in Beirut, where kidnappings have been a common form of terror practiced by the rival militia groups.

Last July, U.S. Army Col. Ernest Morgan was kidnapped by Palestinians and held for 13 days before being released.

Since then, there have been more than 2,000 known abductions, although most of the victims were freed within 48 hours.

President under pressure

Argentina's Isabel Peron, greeting officers of her presidential guard, says she intends to continue in office until her present term ends in 1977 but is "not interested in re-election." Argentina's military high command lined up with the political opposition, which had initiated impeachment moves in parliament, against Peronist efforts to run Mrs. Peron again in elections later this year.

Argentine congress kills impeachment move

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (UPI) — The Argentine congress, bolstered by an unexpectedly unified show of strength from her own Peronist party, today killed a motion to impeach President Isabel Peron.

The Peronists and a few sparse allies squelched an opposition move to place impeachment on the congressional agenda after a stormy three-hour debate.

The vote came at 1:35 a.m. The small, center-right Popular Federalist Force introduced the measure late Wednesday night, receiving support from several opposition parties, among them the Radical Civic Union, Argentina's second largest.

But 30 of 43 rebel Peronists, who had been expected to back the measure, suddenly reversed their position, announcing they would block it unless they had full party backing for impeachment.

Radical Civic Union leaders have warned that a military coup would be inevitable if congress failed to take action to solve Argentina's political crisis.

The military has declared its preference for an "institutional solution" to Argentina's leadership crisis, but it was also reported worried that leftist guerrillas would take advantage of the unrest to launch a new offensive. Police said leftist killed four persons in political violence Wednesday.

Several rebel Peronists, mostly from the party's labor faction, have called for the president's resignation in the past, but they decided Wednesday to reject any move to unseat Mrs. Peron unless it came "from Peronist ranks," according to one rebel source. As the world's first woman president, Mrs. Peron has faced a constant series of political crises, labor disputes and economic worries, and although she appeared to be weathering the drive to remove her, political observers said a final break with labor leaders could give new ammunition to her opponents.

Obituaries

JOSEPH EDGAR SEITZ

Funeral services for Joseph Edgar Seitz, 90, are set for 10:30 a.m. Friday at Carmichael-Whitely Colonial Chapel.

The Rev. Claude Cone, pastor of the First Baptist Church, will officiate. He died Wednesday at Highland General Hospital.

Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery. Mr. Seitz was born in Pilot Point and moved to Roberts County in 1911. He was a retired farmer and was a member of the First Baptist Church. He married Gertrude Evans in 1908. She died in 1925. He was married to Ina Holloway in 1928 and she died in 1968.

Survivors include two sons, Jones of Pampa, and Earl of Fort Collins, Colo.; three stepdaughters, Mrs. Frances G. West of Vallejo, Calif., Mrs. Mary Joe Hawthorne of Amarillo, and Mrs. Maxine Mauldin of Pampa; 13 grandchildren and 11 great-grandchildren.

The casket will not be opened at the service.

Ford scoffs at Reagan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford, scoffing at Ronald Reagan's satisfaction with second place in the New Hampshire primary, says he now has the momentum to win the GOP presidential nomination and the election in November.

Ford met Wednesday night with his top political strategists to do a post-mortem on the nation's first primary and map plans for the next contest with Reagan in Florida on March 9.

The President was preparing for two days of intensive campaigning on both coasts of Florida this weekend, where his wife already is beating the drums in his behalf.

At a news conference in the East Room Wednesday before members of the Inland Press

Association, Ford said:

"Some of those who didn't do so well yesterday seemed to be satisfied with second. I never knew any political campaigns where running second was very beneficial. But we're very happy and expect to keep going and with the momentum we have, I'm confident we'll end up in Kansas City (at the Republican convention) with a good victory and Nov. 2 with a bigger one."

Reagan, in Illinois, had said he "couldn't be more pleased" with the results of the primary where he was edged out by Ford by a vote of 51 per cent to 49 per cent.

As for the Democrats, Ford said "it looks like a horse race to me. I'm not a gambling man but I still think when they get through the gyrations, Hubert (Humphrey) will be the nominee."

Ford also told the editors and publishers in the association that he hesitates to evaluate the effects on his campaign of Richard M. Nixon's trip to China, but felt it had a "minimal effect."

Another dance set

Following a successful dance last week at the Pampa Youth Center, another has been set for 9 p.m. Friday.

The Youth Center dance will last until midnight and will be well-chaperoned, according to Allen Gardner.

Gardner is in charge of providing chaperones and booking entertainment for the Youth Center dances. He said that each Friday night dance will be chaperoned by at least four adults, two floorwalkers, and a man on the parking lot.

The Pampa Area Manpower Association (PAMPA) will provide two chaperones each week, Gardner said.

"This week is going to be a Congratulatory to the Harvesters dance," he said, "with Black Diamond back to play by popular demand."

Black Diamond is a local group made up of Kelly Baker, Dean Elliott, Jessie Musgrave and Gary Thrasher.

Attendance at the first dance was about 125, Gardner said. Admission charges are $3 for couples and $2 tag and any profits will go to a fund for the booking of big name entertainment at future dances.

"The net result is she should be put in a hospital where she can get help. A trial is foolish, a great waste of money and time and humanity."

County court sets agenda for Monday

The Gray County Commissioners Court will meet at 10 a.m. Monday in the county court room with eight items on the agenda.

The court will consider a resolution in regard to the emergency purchase of 120 foot of six foot conduit culvert to replace a damaged bridge in the Lefors precinct.

Commissioners will also discuss a proposed county road dedication in Blackwell Survey near Lefors.

A request from the Gray County Soil and Water Conservation District for $2,000 for watershed use will also be discussed. Along with proposed fire contractors the City of Lefors and the City of McLean.

The final payment on construction at the livestock pavilion will be considered. The payment will be made from revenue sharing funds.

Other items on the agenda include payment of salaries and bills as approved by the county auditor and time deposits and transfer of funds as may be recommended by the auditor.

May study natural gas bills

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — Three legislators say they are considering reorganizing an ad hoc committee to study increasing natural gas bills.

"There is no doubt that utility bills have increased at a rapid rate which has left many Texas families in dire circumstances," Reps. Ed R. Watson, D-Pasadena, Latham Boone III, D-Navasota, and John Wilson, D-Lagrange, said Wednesday.

The legislators are former members of an ad hoc House public utilities committee formed two years ago to support passage of legislation to create a public utilities commission.

They urged the Texas Railroad Commission to immediately seek ways to reduce utility bills.

The three-man railroad commission has the power to regulate gas rates at the wellhead which has caused uncontrolled increases in wholesale natural gas rates.

"The railroad commission should act to assure that every effort is being made to hold the line or roll back the wellhead price of gas so that retail distributors can reduce the bills of Texas natural gas consumers," the House members said.

Failure of state agencies and the legislature to adequately regulate the price of natural gas will encourage federal action which could lower gas bills for consumers, but would harm the gas industry, they said.

Police report vandals

Vandalism and automobile accidents were among the reports recorded this morning on the Pampa Police Department blotter.

Mrs. James Hardy of 1067 Huff Road said someone shot out her camp trailer window with a BB gun sometime during the night.

Mrs. Jimmie Berry of 125 N. Nelson said someone shot out a large plate glass window with a pellet gun.

In another incident, C.H. Spencer of 1029 S. Christy reported two hub caps stolen. Four motor vehicle accidents were investigated.

Vandals hit bull barn

Vandals entered the Gray County Bull Barn Wednesday and removed 10 of the fluorescent lights and a dryer used for grooming cattle for shows.

Gray County Sheriff Rufe Jordan estimated the missing items are valued at about $1,500. "I think we will catch them (whoever did it)," he said.

The lights were about six foot long and were swinging on chains. The sheriff said it probably required no more than 30 minutes to remove them.

The barn is a huge building and is used for livestock shows. Entry was gained through a window on the north side.

Capote opines on Hearst

DALLAS (UPI) — Author Truman Capote says heiress Patty Hearst should be in a hospital and not on trial on bank robbery charges.

"She should not have been brought to trial," Capote said Wednesday night. "And not because I don't think she is guilty. I think she is guilty."

"It is a ridiculous case," Capote said following a reading of one of his short stories. "What you have here is a highly impressionable young girl who is not overly intelligent. You put a strain on this child by putting her in a closet, a strain she is not used to."

"The net result is she should be put in a hospital where she can get help. A trial is foolish, a great waste of money and time and humanity."

Texas oranges perk dishes

Citrus delights, made with in-season Texas oranges and grapefruit, will perk up dreary winter days, according to Mrs. Sally Coble, a foods and nutrition specialist.

"When selecting grapefruit, look for firm, well-shaped fruits heavy for their size. Oranges should also be firm and heavy, with bright-looking skin. Soft, discolored spots on the fruit are signs of decay," she said.

Mrs. Coble is with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

"Both oranges and grapefruit are picked ripe so they're ready to eat without ripening time at home. A greenish cast, sometimes found on oranges, isn't a sign of immaturity or poor quality.

"Citrus fruit will keep about four to six weeks in the refrigerator," she reminded.

Oranges and grapefruit are good sources of Vitamin C, or ascorbic acid, which is needed daily for healthy gums, wound healing, protein metabolism, hormone production and production of collagen — the cementing substance that holds cells together.

The amount of Vitamin C needed daily by normal adults is 45 milligrams. This amount can be met by eating one-half grapefruit or one medium orange each day, she said.

The specialist suggested some recipes for the top quality oranges and grapefruit available now.

Mulled Citrus Punch

1 cup sugar
1/2 cup water
12 whole cloves
22-inch piece stick cinnamon
6 cups fresh grapefruit juice
3 cups fresh orange juice
1 quart sweet cider
1 grapefruit

Combine sugar, water and spices in saucepan; simmer 10 minutes; strain. Combine with citrus juices and cider. Reheat and serve hot from punch bowl. Cut grapefruit into 1/4-inch thick slices; halve or quarter. Stud edges with whole cloves. Float on top of punch or individual servings. Makes about 26 one-half cup servings.

Sweet And Sour Ribs

2 pounds spareribs (cut in 2-inch strips)

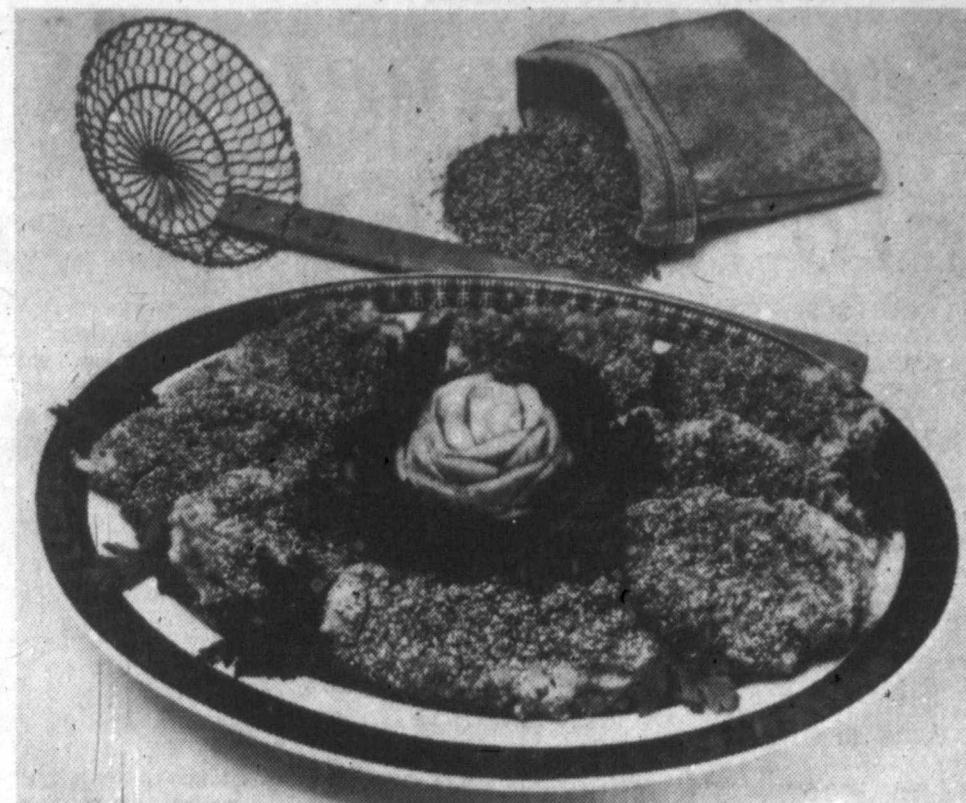

1 large onion, sliced
2 strips bacon, diced
1/2 cup fresh orange juice
2 green peppers, sliced
1/2 cup brown sugar (girmly packed)
1/2 cup fresh lemon juice
2 tablespoons soy sauce
3 tablespoons cornstarch
2 tablespoons water
2 oranges cut in bite-size pieces

Brown spareribs, onion and bacon together. Add orange juice, cover tightly; simmer 40 minutes. Add peppers, orange pieces, brown sugar, lemon juice, soy sauce, cornstarch and water. Cook covered over medium heat until sauce is thick and well-browned, about 20 minutes. May be served with rice. Makes four to five servings.

Orange Honey Bread

2 tablespoons shortening
1 cup honey
1 egg, well-beaten
1 1/2 tablespoons grated orange peel
2 1/2 cups flour
2 1/2 tablespoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon soda
3/4 cup orange juice
3/4 cup chopped pecans

Cream shortening and honey together until well blended. Add well-beaten egg and grated orange peel. Sift flour with baking powder, salt and soda. Add the flour mixture to the creamed mixture alternately with the orange juice. Add the chopped nuts. Bake in a greased loaf pan at 325 degrees F. for one hour and 10 minutes. Makes one loaf.

Fishing may improve

By JEANNE LESEM
UPI Family Editor

Fish prices that have been moving upward in recent years may eventually start down, says Murry P. Berger, president of the National Fisheries Institute in Washington, D.C.

Berger's expectations are based on recent Senate passage of a bill to extend the present 12-mile limit of American fishing waters to 200 miles.

When the law takes effect, probably in two years, American commercial fishermen expect to catch more fish, because they won't have to compete with foreign fleets that current law permits within 12 miles of the U.S. shore. Some break the law by fishing even closer to our shores.

"Foreign vessels take 7.5 billion pounds of fish and seafood from our waters every year," he said. "Our domestic fleets take 3.5 billion pounds."

Berger, who also is president of a frozen food packing and manufacturing company, holds no hope that our own catch ever will be large enough to compete with meat on a regular basis.

"It takes a lot more energy to catch a pound of fish or seafood than it does to raise a pound of beef," he said. He estimated that a fishing boat burns 60 cents worth of diesel fuel to catch one pound of shrimp.

Berger also estimated that one pound of medium shrimp for which a fisherman receives about $2.70 cash costs $3.99 a pound by the time you take it from a supermarket food freezer to the checkout counter. He said more than one-third of the retail price represents several different middlemen performing as many different functions.

The fisherman sells his raw catch to a packing house, who sells to a processor, who freezes the shrimp in their shells or cleans and breads them for sale to chain stores or institutions (a term including restaurants, airlines, passenger rail systems, hospitals, prisons and company lunchrooms and cafeterias.) Processors also sell to distributors who sell to retailers.

Shrimp remains America's most popular seafood. The annual per person consumption is a record 2.6 pounds, raw weight. Edible weight is 1.5 pounds, which may not sound like much, but it is more than double that of 1950.

Other nations also are eating more shrimp. In Berger's view, that is part of the problem. For example, greater affluence abroad has increased Japan's annual consumption to more than 140 million pounds, all of it imported. Eight to 10 million pounds of those imports are American.

Berger also estimated that more than half of last year's estimated U.S. shrimp supply of 435 million pounds had to be imported: 233 million pounds, compared to a domestic catch of 202 million pounds.

He said American shrimpboat owners want quotas established on shrimp imports. "They are fearful of being forced out of business by foreign competition."

Berger's industry association thinks quotas would make the situation worse. He blames the shrinking catch primarily on the tendency of shrimp to migrate from one breeding ground to another.

Robert H. Wilbur, NFI director of communications, agreed: "Domestic shrimp waters are being fished at or above maximum. Quotas would increase the cost to the consumer. Supplies of imports are decreasing, and prices go up on what does come in."

Berger is pessimistic about the outlook for increasing catches of fresh water fish, such as perch and catfish. He said fresh water fish production is small, and he expects it to shrink still more as pollution of lakes and rivers continues.

A cord of oak, maple or birch provides about the same amount of heat as 150 gallons of No. 2 fuel oil or 24,000 cubic feet of natural gas.

Cheesburger Biscuit Squares

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. In large frying pan, brown 1 1/2 pound ground beef; drain. Stir in 1 (1 1/2 oz.) package Sloppy Joe or chili seasoning mix and 1 8-oz. can tomato sauce; simmer while preparing crust. Separate one can biscuit dough into 10 biscuits. Pull biscuits apart to make two layers. Arrange five rows of biscuits on bottom of ungreased 13 x 9-inch pan. Spoon hot meat mixture over biscuits; arrange 6 slices processed American cheese slices on top. Separate second can biscuit dough into 10 biscuits. Pull apart to make two layers; arrange in rows over hot meat mixture. Bake at 400 degrees for 20 to 25 minutes, until golden brown. (Refrigerate any leftovers.) 6 to 8 servings. Nutrition information: Average serving provides 520 calories, one half the protein, nearly all the vitamin A and about one third of the B vitamins and iron recommended for a good daily diet.

Chicken remains favorite

By Aileen Claire
NEA Food Editor

Chicken remains at the head of the list of favorite American foods. Almost every cook has a special recipe. As more men and women experiment in preparing well-known foods differently, someone constantly comes up with a new, tasty treat in chicken. A sesame fried chicken features whole chicken breasts rolled in sesame seeds and was a chicken cooking contest winner.

SESAME FRIED CHICKEN

4 whole chicken breasts, skinned, boned, halved
1 egg, slightly beaten
1 teaspoon sugar
1 teaspoon flavor enhancer
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon pepper
1/2 teaspoon baking powder
1/2 cup flour
1 cup sesame seeds
1 quart (about) corn oil

In a bowl, stir together egg, sugar, flavor enhancer, salt, pepper, baking powder, and 1 tablespoon of the flour until smooth. Dip chicken in mixture. Place on waxed paper. Sprinkle both sides of chicken with sesame seeds. Coat with remaining flour. Four corn oil into heavy, sturdy flat-bottomed 3-quart saucepan or deep fryer, filling utensil no more than one-third full. Heat over medium heat to 375 degrees. Carefully add chicken a few pieces at a time. Fry about 5 minutes or until chicken is golden brown. Drain on paper towels. Makes 8 servings.

Granola makes ski snack

Skiing, biking, hiking and other reasonably strenuous outdoor pursuits take energy, and energy comes from proper eating. For example, members of the U.S. Ski Team while in winter training in Montana stressed large breakfasts and quick pick-me-up snacks. Dr. Arthur L. Dickinson, sports medicine coordinator for the U.S. Nordic Ski Team, pointed out that ski racers "must maintain their energy level and do this by eating well-balanced meals and carbohydrate-rich snacks are the body's primary fuel. He added that recreational skiers need fewer calories but a well-balanced proportion of carbohydrates, fats and protein. Recreational skiers also need to snack and replenish body fluids as ski racers do. This is true of hikers and bikers, too.

Margie Mahoney, 23, of Anchorage, Alaska is a member of the Ladies' Cross-Country Team and makes her own snack food.

MARGIE MAHONEY'S GRANOLA

3 cups rolled oats
2 cups coconut
1/2 cup wheat germ
1/2 cup sunflower seeds
1/2 cup sesame seeds
1 cup bran flakes
1 cup walnuts

2 cups raisins
1 cup honey
1/2 cup safflower oil
2 teaspoons vanilla
In large bowl, combine first 8 ingredients; mix well. In measuring cup blend honey, oil and vanilla. Pour over mixture in bowl; mix to coat evenly. Spread in 15.5 x 10.5 x 1-inch baking pan. Bake in 350-degree oven 20 minutes, stirring occasionally. Store in plastic container.

Pinot Noirs may improve

By TOM GABLE
Copley News Service

Pinot Noir, the great red wine grape of Burgundy, has been one of the great red wine losers in California.

Instead of producing rich, smooth wines in the manner of those from the Cote de Nuits and Cote de Beaune in France, the California winemakers, for the most part, have produced watery, light and inconsistent wines. Just one or two California Pinot Noirs a year would stand above the rest as being somewhat similar to the best Burgundy wines, made from 100 per cent Pinot Noir.

But all that may be changing in the next few years, according to Dr. David Bruce, one of the few California winemakers to produce a Pinot Noir in the French style.

"Pinot Noir is a difficult wine to work with," said Bruce, who makes his wines from tiny patches of low-yielding vines near Los Gatos in Northern California. "In the past, California winemakers have overcropped Pinot Noir and made it in the same way they would make a Beaujolais or other lighter wine. The grapes were often planted in inappropriate areas. The wine, once made, is difficult to stabilize.

"With so many problems involved, some people didn't want to bother with it. So it was beaten into the ground as far as interest was concerned."

By overcropping, Bruce meant some were getting four tons of grapes from one acre, which diluted the quality of the grapes. By proper pruning and other techniques, a winery could get less than two tons an acre, and the grapes would be more concentrated and richer in flavor. Then there was the problem of oak aging.

"Few people wanted to give the wines proper oak aging," Bruce said. "They were concentrating their efforts on Cabernet Sauvignon, a much more popular wine. Now, there seems to be renewed interest in Pinot Noir and we should see some great wines in the new two or three years."

The David Bruce 1971 and 1972 Pinot Noirs wines are very similar to the wines of Burgundy. The 1971 wine, in particular, comes close to matching the aroma and bouquet of a Chambertin. Bruce said his Pinot Noir wines are given two years of aging in Limousin oak. He would prefer just 18 months, but the extra time is needed to stabilize the wines.

Other wineries producing Pinot Noir wines with a Burgundy style are Chalene, Mt. Eden and Sterling. They are in as short supply as a Clos de Beze from France. Robert Mondavi has come close with his Pinot Noirs. The recent Inglenook 1970 special cask selection is another good wine in wider distribution. Pedroncelli offers the best dollar value of them all.

Are termites future food?

BOSTON (UPI) — Locusts, termites and other insects were proposed today as a high-protein food that man may need to exploit in the future as growing populations compete for conventional foods.

Dr. Dean F. Gamble, deputy director of the National Agriculture Library in Washington, said insects virtually have been ignored as potential foods because of a psychological block on the part of the people investigating diets.

"Western culture virtually forbids eating insects though they are a potential source of nutrition of great importance," Gamble said in a paper at the closing day of a week-long meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

"As the population explosion continues, it may be impossible to continue to ignore these unexploited food resources," Gamble said. "Food is what you find, and man is the most adaptable animal of all in this respect."

Prices transform laundry into their home sweet home

By ANNA BURCHELL
Pampa News Staff
Converting a laundry into a home has extended into a three-year project — still uncompleted — for Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Price of 221 E. Atchison.

Sponge diving died with the old-timers

TARPOON SPRINGS, Fla. (UPI) — A diver clad in a bulky diving suit and helmet slips below the surface of the water not far from the sponge docks here and before long sends to the surface one of the sponges for which this area is famed.

But the action is for the tourist dollar and not for the value of the retrieved sponge.

The sponge-harvesting operation on a volume basis is a thing of the past and one which seems unlikely to be revived, a veteran sponge dealer said as he sat in his office here and reminisced about the glory days of the sponge industry.

"There is very small production now, and although the market for sponges is pretty good I don't see any light on the horizon for the industry," said Stephen Katzaras, who now splits his time between his sponge business and real estate.

They found the old Snow White laundry for sale at a bargain price.

"We needed a place to live and we bought," she said as she called attention to her antique pieces of furniture and the improvements they have already accomplished.

"It has been slow," she said. "I don't know if we will complete it this year or not. We are doing it all ourselves and paying as we go."

Mrs. Price works six days a week for M.E. Moses Co. variety store and her husband is employed by Cabot six days a week.

"Both of us are spooked about the financial aspect of the country," she said referring to the fact that they pay as they go.

"I barely remember the other depression and I don't want to go back to that," she emphasized.

The Prices are decorating the outside in a bicentennial theme. He has completed "a replica of the Texas flag made of steel and painted red, white and blue," she said.

That topped with "cowboys" decorates one side of the front yard, which faces Atchison. On the other side is "a whirly majig," also painted red, white and blue, which turns with the wind.

Plans call for a big black replica of a buffalo with Indians on the east side which will be pinned inside a red, white and blue corral.

Mrs. Price already has several antique furnishings, which she plans to refinish, and she wants to add others.

The building is 45 feet wide and 90 feet long. The living quarters will be 24 feet wide and 90 feet long.

Price has been employed with Cabot for the past 25 years.

"This will be our permanent home with a hobby shop on the east side," she said.

"I never thought I'd find myself in the middle of a laundry converting it into a home," she added.

Her hobby is collecting recipes. Both she and her husband like flowers.

She said she canned and froze 200 pints of vegetables from their garden last year.

"You'd be surprised at what I can do," she explained. "I went to bed last night at 1:20 a.m."

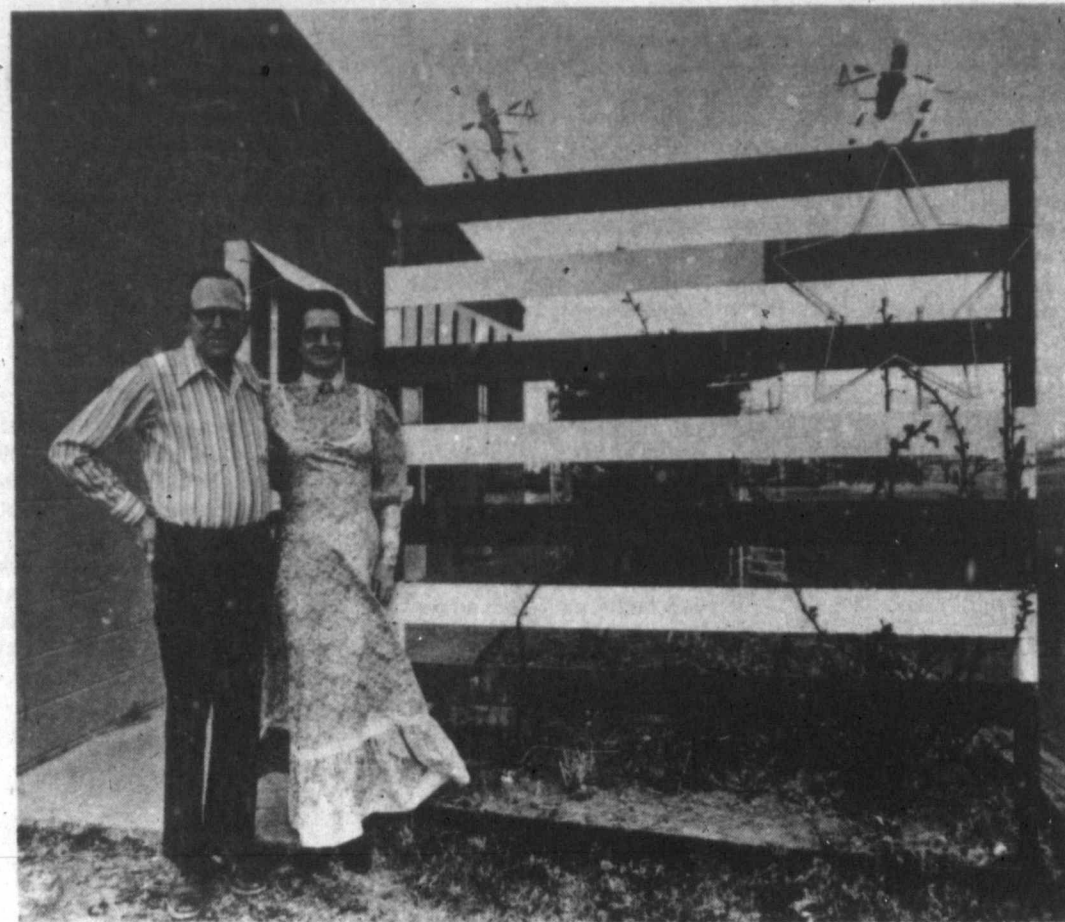

She has a teenage daughter, Carolyn Bland, who is a senior at Pampa High School.

Mrs. Price made her bicentennial dress. And she plans to make another.

"I think there will be enough going on that I need it," she added.

As the days go, she reviews her plans and accomplishments.

While completion is months away, she and her husband seem to enjoy the challenge.

Bicentennial Decoration

Robert L. and Addie Price of 221 E. Atchison bought the old Snow White laundry three years ago and converted it into a home which depicts a bicentennial theme. The metal flag and a "whirly majig," painted in red, white and blue, were constructed by Price. Both he and his wife work six days per week, and have little time to devote to the project — but they operate on a "pay as you go" basis, she said.

Hiking alone — self-discovery

STORRS, Conn. (UPI) — Warren Doyle, who has hiked the 2,040-mile Appalachian Trail twice, says it's a path to self-discovery.

Doyle, 25, says the journey begins with one step, but there's too much talk of "I can't do it."

An advocate of the growing sport of backpacking, Doyle has set two records on the continuous footpath through 14 states. Now he is writing his University of Connecticut doctoral thesis on it.

In 1973 Doyle hiked the trail alone in 66 and a half days, a record.

Last summer he led 18 students from Georgia's Spring Mountain to Maine's Mt. Katahdin. Before that, the largest known group to make the entire trip was two persons.

The student from Shelton calls the hike "a stress experience," but he is not referring to the twisted ankles, sore muscles, exposure to inclement weather, or the diet of freeze-dried food and protein pills.

He is talking about self-confrontation and self-discovery.

"There's a theory that most people have high self-concepts that crumble in situations of crisis or adversity. Many of us never have a chance to find out who we really are," he said.

Doyle thinks being alone with nature forces a person to find out.

"In 1973 I was physical for 66 days. I lost my physical fat and my emotional fat as well. I saw myself as I really was," he said.

"I was lonely, but it's good for people to have a period all to themselves. That's when the insight comes," he said.

Doyle said for every eight people who start the trail only one person finishes it, and he doesn't think it's because of blisters or running out of money.

"A lot of people quit the trail because they can't live with themselves. We're not accustomed to living with ourselves," he said.

"I think in everyday life you perform for other people, you put on different faces for different people, and you behave in certain ways to gain acceptance," he said.

"In nature there are no airs to put on, no one to impress, no one to fight, and no one to support except yourself," he said.

Long-distance hiking, like other sports, requires stamina, self-discipline, quick decision-making and physical endurance. But there are no tangible rewards such as money or trophies.

"It takes a lot of character strength, adaptability, tolerance, patience and unselfishness."

The trail will bring out those qualities in you or you'll find certain weaknesses in yourself," Doyle said.

"A lot of times I come back from nature and see many more things in society that are trivial," he said.

"Before, I had certain convictions, certain standards and moral values, but they were never so strong or confirmed until after my first experience in nature. It's given me a clear perspective."

"My mission is to provide opportunities for people to experience the same thing."

"We're all capable of so many things. Everybody wants to grow, but sometimes they just need a push. I want to inspire people to give them that push," Doyle said.

At Wits End

By ERMA BOMBECK

The U.S. News and World report said recently that by 1990, 63 out of every 100 marriages will dissolve in divorce.

In examining the probability of divorce, someone pointed out that it is harder to get a driver's license than a marriage license and perhaps that's when they should lay a test on you, to see if you're fit to operate a marriage.

As far as I can see, only a little rewording is needed to turn a driver's manual into a marriage manual.

So You Want To Operate A Spouse

The examination is nothing to fear. If you know the rules and can handle a husband-wife, you will pass. Applicants must be over 18 years of age or a parent or guardian must sign the application. A LEARNER'S PERMIT IS MANDATORY. Answer the questions below:

A bride is complaining she is sick and tired of separating her husband's shorts from his trousers every time she does the laundry. She vows the next time she has to peel them apart she is going to starch the shorts causing him great pain. Should the husband (a) ignore the warning light (b) yield (c) make a U-turn and separate the garments (d) plug up her muffler with a distowel?

A misunderstood married woman has collared a husband at a party. This does not thrill his understood married wife who threatens to go home without him if he does not leave immediately. Does he (a) leave his spouse unattended and hope someone steals her (b) follow too closely behind the married woman and take his chance on a sudden stop (c) illegally park and prepare himself for Ped-X-ing?

A wife has packed the same cookies in her husband's lunch every day for the past six months. He has brought them home unopened every day for the past six months. He has told her as tactfully as he knows how to "stuff the lousy cookies." Should he (a) cancel her collision insurance, (b) insist on his legal right-of-way, (c) use the Implied Consent law and check out old vanilla breath for a violation?

How would you (as a spouse) handle the following warning signals: MEN WORKING (overtime), SOFT SHOULDER (someone else's), SCHOOL (and other financial disasters), DOWNGRADE (one another), PAVEMENT ENDS (G.I. Bill runs out), DIP (In the stock market)?

I'm not going to tell you how my husband and I scored on the test, but there is every indication he'd be happier with a Ford pickup, and I could dig a little Italian number.

Fromme, good Share cell

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — Lynette Fromme, assassin of President Kennedy, was sentenced to life in prison for her role in the assassination.

Miss Fromme, 27, serving a life term for attempting to kill President Ford, was transferred secretly to Sacramento last Wednesday from a federal prison in San Diego so she can serve as a defense witness for Miss Good.

Miss Good, 31, is scheduled to go on trial Monday on charges of conspiring to mail death threats letters to corporate executives and government officials and of making threats during telephone interviews with reporters.

The two followers of mass killer Charles Manson shared a $100-a-month attic apartment eight blocks from the state Capitol until Miss Fromme was arrested Sept. 5.

"Due to the limitation in cells and because they are witnesses for each other, we found it expedient to house them together," Lower said.

Parents refuse to allow desegregation program

DENVER (UPI) — Kimberly Rae Pinson, 8, and her sister, Anna Mae, 7, are ignored by their teachers and classmates for half of every school day. But the girls' mother says she will continue her fight against a court ordered desegregation policy despite her daughters' ostracism.

The court policy requires the girls to participate in a part-time desegregation program, spending a half-day at two schools.

Louis Kishlunas, school superintendent, said because the girls' parents refused to allow their daughters to be transported to a second school in the afternoon, he ordered school administrators to prohibit their participation in afternoon class activity.

The children sit at the back of their classrooms and are largely ignored by their teachers. They are not called upon to recite or allowed to turn in any papers they write.

"It hurts me to see this," said Carol Pinson, the girls' mother. "But I will not conform to something I do not believe in."

Mrs. Pinson said she stays with the girls during the afternoon and alternates between their classes.

She said her daughters were permitted to join their classmates in morning "basics" classes — reading, writing and arithmetic. But every afternoon, when half of their classmates travel to Mitchell Elementary School, her daughters remain behind.

She said when the rest of the children in second grade class at Force Elementary School were celebrating Valentine's Day, Kim was given a job in a supply closet.

Hints from Heloise

Dear Heloise:

I have a hint for those who feel they cannot run the electric sweeper because of some physical condition. I run mine seldom because of shortness of breath.

Just by accident recently while trying to push the sweeper, I dropped down in a chair. To my surprise it was the best accident I ever had!

I now sit in a chair to do my whole house. Tired? No!

D. Harton

I know what you mean, even if you are in tip-top condition, vacuuming is no fun.

One little tip that also might make it easier is to pull instead of push. Don't know why this is but it sure makes a difference.

Heloise

Dear Heloise:

Put a layer of marshmallows in the bottom of a pumpkin pie, then add the filling. You will have a nice topping, as the marshmallow will come to the top.

E.B.

Dear Heloise:

For a change of texture, try a tablespoon of natural cereal sprinkled over a serving of instant oatmeal before adding the boiling water.

E.R. Kersey

Dear Folks:

Those of you who are often caught short of ice when company arrives, or who have a small refrigerator and a deep freezer, and like to store extra ice for emergencies:

I have learned that you can take a plastic milk carton (I like the one-quart size best), and fill it nearly full, close the top and put it in your deep freezer, or the freezer part of your refrigerator until it has frozen solid. Leave this for at least two or three days, depending on the size of the carton.

Now, when you are ready for ice, don't THINK that you have to remove the block of ice all by itself. I learned something new last week!

BEFORE I even took the carton of ice, I took my ice pick and jabbed it through the whole kit and kaboodle on all sides of the block of ice many, many times while it was STILL in the carton. Then, and only then, I opened the top of the carton, and literally poured my beautiful ice out into the glasses.

Another thing I like about this is that any ice you have left may immediately be returned to your deep freezer or refrigerator freezing unit in the same carton, and kept until the next time.

And, don't forget, the best way to get finely CRUSHED ice is to slam the closed milk carton (with solid frozen ice) three or four times on EACH side (before opening the top) until the sound changes. Instead of a solid bang, you will hear a dull thump sound.

This ice will look as though it has been through a professional grinder. I slam the carton down on a cement step or the back sidewalk.

The carton may then be returned to your freezer.

Big Bird size of airplane?

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (UPI) — Teacher Patricia Bryant says the two flying creatures that swooped over her car were as big as small airplanes and resembled prehistoric birds.

Mrs. Bryant was one of three teachers who reported the latest sightings of Big Bird, a large feathered creature seen throughout South Texas in recent months.

Scientists identified one of the birds seen recently as a blue heron, but Mrs. Bryant is sure the creature she saw looks like the picture of a prehistoric bird.

"I have found a picture of a prehistoric bird that looks more like this thing than I've ever seen," said Mrs. Bryant. She said the creature was identified in an encyclopedia as a pteranodon.

"It was the biggest thing I've ever seen alive, particularly flying. My Lord, it (pteranodon) lived like 160 million years ago. It's just unreal.

Where did it come from? I just don't know how it could have survived all those millions of years and still be flying around here. It's enough of a shock to see one. Then to discover there were two is really frightening.

"It all happened so fast and it was such a shock you think you are seeing things. It was just enormous and frightening. I told my husband it was as big as a Piper Cub and he just laughed at me. I think the wing span was 15 or 20 feet if not more."

Mrs. Bryant and teachers David Rendon and Marsha Dahlberg, traveling in separate automobiles on an isolated road Tuesday, said one of the birds flew low over their cars. The bird cast a shadow across the entire road and when they stopped the cars they saw another one circling like a buzzard over a herd of cattle.

School officials Wednesday urged the teachers not to discuss on campus what they saw for fear of alarming their pupils. Mrs. Bryant asked that her district be identified only as a "rural school district."

"I could see the skeleton of this bird through the skin or feathers or whatever and it stood out black against the background of the grey feathers," Mrs. Bryant said. Rendon described the bird as "huge."

"It just glided. It didn't fly. It was no higher than the telephone line. It had a huge breast. It had different legs and it had a huge breast. It had different legs and it had huge wings, but the wings were very peculiar like.

"It had a boney structure, you know, like when you hold a bat by the wing tips, like it has bones at the top and in between."

Indian leader fights extradition to Dakota

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI) — Dennis Banks, leader of the American Indian Movement, says he is fighting extradition to South Dakota because he fears he will be killed.

Banks, who is free on $100,000 bail, is awaiting transfer to Oregon to face federal firearms violations charges there. He also is facing extradition to South Dakota for sentencing after his riot and assault conviction stemming from a disturbance at a Custer, S.D., courthouse.

The 45-year-old Chippewa was arrested last month at the suburban San Francisco area home of a junior college American Indian studies official.

A coalition of Bay area groups bailed him out and another group has promised to come up with a million signatures on a petition urging Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. to refuse extradition.

Banks said his appeal to Brown will be based on the petitions and a sworn affidavit he claims he has from a South Dakota attorney, in which a South Dakota official said he believes the only way to handle the American Indian Movement is to shoot AIM leaders.

Even if Brown refuses to sign the South Dakota extradition papers, Banks will be moved to Oregon to face the federal charges, and once in Oregon, the governor can then sign the necessary documents to send him back to South Dakota.

After more than four years of AIM activity, starting with the takeover of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Washington, in October, 1972, and the assault on Wounded Knee, S.D., Banks says there has been some improvement in the Indian's lot.

Extension introduces 'herbigation'

AMARILLO, Tex. (UPI) — The Texas Agriculture Extension Service has introduced a new method of applying crop herbicides through irrigation, which it calls "herbigation."

Areas irrigation specialist Dr. Leon New said Tuesday the process involved putting weed control chemicals into irrigation systems as water was pumped onto crops.

He said the method was as effective as conventional ground application and saved time.

"Many Texas High Plains farmers have switched to center pivot irrigation systems," New said.

Court upholds will

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — The Texas Supreme Court today rejected an appeal from the Salvation Army, attorney general and a San Antonio man contesting a will leaving a wealthy South Texas woman's estate to her nurse.

The court said it found no reversible error in lower court decisions upholding Victoria Clark's Nov. 8, 1971, will leaving her property to Rumlada Mata.

J.O. Burk Jr. of San Antonio, officials of the Salvation Army Home and Hospital in San Antonio, Markel Heath of Falfurrias and Attorney General John L. Hill contested the will, contending Miss Clark was senile at the time she signed over her estate to Mrs. Mata.

Heath presented a will Miss Clark had him prepare for her on Aug. 29, 1962, leaving money to a number of friends, some property for a nephew in St. Louis, Mo., and the rest of her estate to the Salvation Army.

Miss Clark was 96 when she signed the 1971 will and had been confined to a Prement nursing home for six months. She died May 16, 1972.

Evidence in the case indicated Miss Clark owned oil and gas rights on two lots in La Gloria, Tex., a half interest in the 492-acre Rocky Mountain Ranch in Bexar County and other property worth more than $25,000.

The doctor who treated her testified she was senile when he ordered her admitted to the nursing home.

The operator of the nursing home, however, said Miss Clark remained lucid and active mentally until shortly before her death and was extremely fond of Mrs. Mata, a nurse who visited her frequently and had at one time worked at the home.

The San Antonio Court of Civil Appeals ruled Miss Clark's advanced age did not make her incapable of making a valid will. The San Antonio court also agreed with a Jim Wells District Court ruling the fact she had hardening of the arteries did not mean she lacked sufficient mental alertness to order a new will.

Judge denies Good request

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — An angry federal judge has denied a request by Manson cultist Sandra Good that death threat charges against her be dismissed and criticized a Supreme Court decision that allows defendants to act as their own lawyers.

U.S. District Court Judge Thomas J. MacBride Wednesday rejected Miss Good's argument that prosecutors, in an effort to prejudice her case, waited to indict her until after the conviction of her former roommate, would-be presidential assassin Lynette Fromme.

Tokyo Rose Still Won't Talk

CHICAGO (UPI) — "You're about 30 years too late," the burly Japanese-American said as he dropped the reporter's copy to the floor and walked away.

It's the customary reception given reporters seeking Mrs. Iva Toguri D'Aquino, better known during World War II as Tokyo Rose, one of a dozen women who broadcast Japanese propaganda to Allied troops in the South Pacific.

Mrs. D'Aquino has worked at her father's import shop in Chicago since her release from the Women's Reformatory at Anderson, W. Va., in 1956, after serving 6½ years of a 10-year sentence for treason.

She has refused to talk to reporters for 20 years. The 30,000-member Japanese-American Citizens League says she was a victim of "postwar prejudice" and is circulating petitions urging President Ford to grant her a full and unconditional pardon.

"If he is still pardon-shy because of Nixon, we will wait a while before we file a formal request," said Dr. Clifford Uyeda, chairman of the National Committee for Iva Toguri.

Two former presidents have refused to pardon Mrs. D'Aquino. Mrs. D'Aquino, born in Los Angeles July 4, 1916, went to Japan to care for a sick aunt in 1941 and was told her citizenship was in doubt when she tried to return to the United States.

Then the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor and she was stranded in Japan, where she held parttime typing jobs with the Danish Embassy and Tokyo Radio.

Mrs. D'Aquino admitted during her treason trial she was a disc jockey dubbed "Tokyo Rose" by American troops but said she was a loyal American.

Mrs. D'Aquino said the most damaging Tokyo Rose comments were broadcast by other Roses.

Veterans of the South Pacific campaign still have mixed feelings about the effect of the Tokyo Rose broadcasts.

"Hell, we used to enjoy listening to her," one Chicago veteran said. "She never lowered our morale."

"Don't let anybody kid you, it scares you," said Ross Rumore, another Chicago veteran. "We laughed (at the broadcasts) too, but it scared the you-know-what out of us."

Age of Coolidge returns to NY

NEW YORK (UPI) — After generations of sipping beer on the neighborhood stoop, New Yorkers may be banned from drinking alcoholic beverages on public streets.

City Council Tuesday passed a bill that would jail outdoor drinkers for up to 10 days and levy a maximum $10 fine.

"It's ridiculous, it's a return to the age of Calvin Coolidge," said Councilman Carter Burden.

The bill would exempt licensed events such as block parties and would permit persons to drink directly in front of their homes.

A spokesman for Mayor Abraham Beame said the mayor feared the law could not be enforced and might exercise the first veto of his administration when the bill reached him.

Proponents of the measure said it was not aimed at individual drinkers, but was designed to curb disorderly crowds, particularly youths.

Joe Cree named member of council

Joe Cree, a member of Southland Life Insurance Company's Tunnick Agency in Amarillo, has been named a member of the company's Chairman's Council. In qualifying for this award, he placed over $1,500,000 of insurance protection for his clients in Pampa.

He has won the National Sales Achievement Award, the National Quality Award and a life membership of the Texas Leaders Round Table. He is also a member of the Million Dollar Round Table, the insurance industry's highest honor group.

Cree, a Pampa High School graduate, earned a BBA degree from Texas Tech University. He is a past president of the Top O' Texas Association of Life Underwriters and the Pampa Insurance Men's Association. He is a member of Masonic Lodge, Khiva Temple Shrine, and Pampa Community Concert Assoc. He is on the vestry at St. Matthew's Episcopal Church and is president of the Pampa Country Club.

Consumers don't pay for utility ads

By JOSEPH NOCERA
Pampa News
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Public utilities, which for years had passed their advertising costs on to the consumer, are now finding that many state utility commissions are taking a much tougher stand on the once routine practice.

For example:

— The Connecticut Natural Gas Co. was barred from passing along to its customers the cost of an advertising campaign that lobbied for deregulation of natural gas.

— The Consolidated Edison Co. in Northern Illinois could not pass the cost of ads promoting its new nuclear power plants onto consumers.

— Southern Union Gas Co. in New Mexico was allowed to pass along to its customers only $15,000 of the company's $818,000 advertising budget.

— Southern Bell Telephone Co. had to absorb the $14,000 price tag on their float in the Orange Bowl.

Though guidelines for acceptable — and thus reimbursable — advertising expenses vary widely from state to state, commissions have generally been applying tougher standards lately.

"We're going over all expenses with a fine-tooth comb," says a spokesman for Maryland's Public Service Commission. "We're cutting down on allowable advertising yearly. The days of lavish ads for all electric homes and decorative gaslights are gone."

The spokesman added that, as a result, there would be less utility advertising in the future.

Bill Herod, an advertising and promotion manager for Southern Union, said that his company is being unfairly penalized. "We think the monopoly argument — that we don't need to advertise because we have no competitors — is a phony issue. Any free-enterprise business includes advertising and promotion in the cost of its product. As a matter of principle we think we should too."

But a member of New Mexico's Public Service Commission disagreed. "There's a lot of public sentiment expressed on this issue, and the customer — the people who get hit in the pocketbook — want us to cut out some of these expenses."

It's not just the pros who get injured playing football, at least according to some statistics released recently by the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC).

CPSC estimates that in the year ending June 30, 1975, 318,000 football-related injuries were treated in hospital emergency rooms throughout the country. This was enough for the commission to rank "Football Activities" number four on its Consumer Product Hazard Index (behind bicycles, stairs, and lawn mowers).

In its report, CPSC said that injuries related to organized football, such as pee-wee and high school ball, were usually the result of ineffective protective equipment or failure to use the equipment properly.

In unorganized, or pick-up games, the overwhelming cause of injury was players not using equipment. Collar-bone fractures, for example, were usually the result of not wearing shoulder pads.

Unsafe field conditions were also mentioned as contributing to injuries.

CPSC also noted that, in some cases, players' equipment actually contributed to injuries. "An example of this," says the commission report, "is the use of helmets for spearing or butting an opponent."

And, finally, CPSC reported that in 1974, 19 players died of football-related injuries, primarily neck and head injuries. However, this figure indicates that football-related deaths are declining; in 1968, there were 48 deaths resulting from football injuries.

A House Agriculture

Subcommittee on Domestic Marketing and Consumer Relations will hold hearings next month to investigate recent increases in the price of coffee to U.S. consumers.

Although an unusually long cold spell in Brazil damaged Brazilian coffee trees in mid-1975, the damage was expected to be felt in future crops — not the 1975 crop. Nevertheless, according to Rep. Joseph V. Rosten, D-Pa., prices paid for coffee by American consumers moved up steadily during the last half of 1975.

Highrise combines solar heat, design

DALLAS (UPI) — The old come-on of cutting heating bills in half has for years sold everything from aluminum siding to ceiling insulation. Now it is the promise of the first solar heating project in a highrise office building.

The 15-story, 275,000-square-foot Brookhollow I building planned for a business park a few miles north of downtown will employ a new combination of solar collection and building design to save money and fuel.

If calculations are correct, heating bills, which can amount to thousands of dollars each month in the glass-walled buildings popular in the Southwest, should be reduced by 50 per cent.

"This," its architects say, "is the first high-rise solar building that conforms to present day construction methods, does not conflict with the acceptable architectural forms of today and drastically reduces the cost, premium that solar systems have been facing to date."

The solar collectors, usually clumsy, costly devices on the roof, will be imbedded in Brookhollow I's glass south wall. The verticle collector system, effective only in winter, will greatly reduce the usually huge installation costs for solar units.

According to engineer Jack Brady, installation costs will be absorbed within five years. After that the rewards increase directly with the rising costs of conventional fuels the owner does not have to buy. As one designer for architect Harwood K. Smith put it, "after that you've got heat for the next 10,000 years."

Smith is excited about the unit's potential because, he says, it is such a simple, unrefined technique.

"It was simply a coming together of technology that was there, and there you were."

Solar collectors normally are placed on the roof at about a 16-degree angle to catch enough sun to be effective. Brady and his computer tests determined that winter's low sun angle made a verticle collector nearly as effective as the slant.

Using a glass walled building plan, Brady and Smith decided to try placing the collectors in the spandrel area between floors, an area covered by glass but backed with insulation. It was a neat substitution, collector for insulator.

"The thing is purchased in a great part by the money already having to be spent by money used to build the building," Brady said. "No extra structural support is required. The wall usually costs about $10 per square foot. The solar collectors are in the neighborhood of $10 to $15 and that is at present. As competition increases in this the cost could go down. We could see a profit."

The collectors, conventional pressed metal water carriers

Painted a dark color, can heat water to 200 degrees. The water is transferred by pumps to a storage tank the size of those beneath service stations. From here it is moved by more pumps across blowers to heating vents throughout the building. After providing building heat, the temperature of the water remains high enough to fill the hot water needs of the building occupants.

Brady says the system, simply because its costs are non-recurring, will save money even though the building will require a backup heating unit, even though the solar system provides only 50 per cent of the building's needs and even though the startup cost is higher than normal.

"The cost to our client is one thing," Smith says, "but the main thing is we are saving energy here. We don't know for sure how the costs are going to work out, but we damn sure know we're running out of oil."

NEW YORK (UPI) — Traffic policemen in San Jose, Costa Rica, carry screwdrivers instead of guns, according to Pan American World Airways. Instead of issuing summons for violations, they unscrew the license plates from the offender's car. They can be redeemed only by appearing in person to pay the fine in traffic court.

NEW YORK (UPI) — Indoor light gardening is America's fastest growing hobby, says Herbert A. Anderson, vice president of commercial engineering for a light bulb manufacturer. Anderson said its popularity is spurred in part by banks, offices, schools and other public establishments replacing artificial plants with real ones.

Belly dancers organize

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — There they were, 13 belly dancers and not a jeweled navel in sight.

No diaphanous pantaloons. No darkened, inviting eyes peering from behind a filmy veil. No suggestive writhing.

It was for them an historic event, the organizational meeting of the Professional Belly Dancers of the South — a club for the exchange of dancing techniques and improvement of the public image of torso twirlers.

The event attracted 13 dancers from Louisiana and Mississippi to a posh French Quarter restaurant on a recent Sunday afternoon.

Nearly all were conservatively dressed in pin-stripe pants suits, skirts and blazers and plain dresses. They attracted little attention.

Between bites of exotic egg dishes and bananas Foster the women, ranging in age from 17 to past 40, discussed the plight of Southern belly dancers, named their organization and elected a president.

"The locals only understand ballet and go-go," said Bunny Adams, a honey-haired nightclub dancer from Hawaii via Las Vegas. "They think belly dancing is like strip-teasing. That's because of the poor stripping and go-go on Bourbon Street."

Bunny and Zarubi (Donna Byrnes) were the only dancers who exposed navels at the meeting. They were dressed in slinky, two-piece outfits with plenty of bare midriff and decolletage.

When it became time to propose names for the club Shamir (Shirley Goldman) jokingly suggested "Navel Academy" and "Cymbals and Sinners."

Yasmir (Jacqueline Yarrington), the grande dame of the group, reminded the dancers of the need for the word "professional" in their name. They agreed on Professional Belly Dancers of the South.

Yasmir, with floor length white-lace dress and flowing purple scarf, organized and conducted the meeting with awesome efficiency, producing strips of blue paper and pencils to conduct the elections. Most of her recommendations were accepted.

She nominated raven-haired Zarubi for president "because she has more time to attend to the business than the rest of us."

We Hold These Truths... A Chronicle of America

February, 1776:

With Congress consumed in a debate over whether to open the colonies' ports to trade with other countries, the genial and learned George Wythe of Virginia rises to say the following: "Before this measure is adopted, [we should decide] in what character we shall treat: As subjects of Great Britain? As rebels? No: We must declare ourselves a free people." And he moves: "Resolved, That the colonies have a right to contract alliances with foreign powers." Over objections that "this is independence!" the delegates agree to consider his resolution, but the resolution itself never comes to a final vote. The debate over whether to open the ports resumes, and continues for seven weeks.

Luckenbach residents push non-bicentennial

LUCKENBACH, Tex. (UPI) — Mayor Hondo Crouch says the entries have been so numerous in the National Buy-Centennial Bad Taste competition, the National Non-Bicentennial Committee has expanded the awards categories.

Crouch and the other two residents of Luckenbach are celebrating Non-Bicentennial Day Sunday to protest commercial abuse of the American Bicentennial celebration, which they refer to as the ByCentennial.

Crouch said Tuesday the bad taste categories now include: greatest abuse by a politician; greatest abuse by a manufacturer; greatest abuse by a manufactured product; greatest abuse by a newspaper, radio and television; greatest abuse in a speech, writing or drawing and the greatest abuse committed by anything.

Crouch said the opening ceremonies for the celebration will include a performance by the Luckenbach Luftwaffe.

"We got a brand new rubber band engine and we hope he'll drop little American flags made in the United States," said Crouch.

Crouch said the Luftwaffe would be flown by commercial jet pilot Ken Morgan, who along with his wife, Kathy Morgan, are the other two thirds of the population.

The settlement, composed primarily of an ancient general store and dancehall, uses just about any occasion as an excuse for beer-drinking parties which attract thousands of visitors. It already has sponsored two world fairs, a Lydia Pinkham Chili Cookoff for Women and several music festivals.

Crouch said festivities Sunday would start with a parade of participants in the Washer Olympics, the tossing of metal discs which weigh nearly a pound. Luckenbach calls itself, "The Innsbruck of Washer Olympics."

Also scheduled were a cannon shoot, benefit bake sale, beer drinking and a dance.

Jack Harmon, secretary of the sponsoring group, said the somber moment of the celebration would be the reading of the Declaration of Independence.

"We hope that in every American home there would be a discussion of the Declaration on February 29. We hope that our nation will take a day out, on the extra day this year of the Buy-Centennial, to join in the spirit of Luckenbach."

Uranium contract modified

K.B. "Tex" Watson, President of Pioneer Corporation, announced today that a new agreement had been reached modifying the existing sales contract with Philadelphia Electric Company for the sale of uranium concentrate produced by Pioneer Nuclear at its Conquista project in south Texas.

Pioneer Nuclear and Continental Oil Company operate the Conquista Uranium Mill as a joint venture in Karnes County, Texas.

Watson said, "The agreement calls for Pioneer to sell all of its existing inventory and future production at the cost of production plus an increment, so long as that price does not exceed the market." He went on to say, "A current price derived from the payment formula is notably under the market."

The agreement removes fixed total delivery requirements and commits all production of the Conquista project attributable to Pioneer Nuclear's interest. Inventory of uranium concentrate at Conquista owned by Pioneer at year end was 454,058 pounds.

It was pointed out that in connection with the agreement, Pioneer committed potential future production of up to 5,000,000 pounds of "yellowcake" in the Rocky Mountain area and elsewhere to Philadelphia Electric Company, 4,000,000 pounds of which will be at varying prices related to cost and market representing a reduction of market price to Philadelphia Electric, but assuring a profit to Pioneer, and 1,000,000 pounds of which will be at market price. "Pioneer also committed to make certain exploration and development expenditures which were consistent with the planned expenditures in the current Texas Eastern - Pioneer Nuclear joint-venture activities in Utah, Wyoming, California, Colorado and New Mexico," Watson said.

IRS man takes Bloch's 1040 tag

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — The president of the nation's largest income tax preparation firm lost his cherished "1040" auto license tag number this year, and to who else? — an Internal Revenue Service agent.

Henry Bloch, president and co-founder of H & R Bloch, Inc., first obtained the number in 1970 when Kansas changed its license plate designations to show the county and the last initial of the car owner. His plate was JO B 1040.

But then Bob Bates, now collections groups manager for the IRS office in Kansas City, Kan., moved to suburban Johnson County from the IRS office in Washington. He applied for the same number three years ago and instead was given 1120, the number on the corporate income tax form.

Bates kept applying for the 1040 number and finally received it this year because Bloch forgot to send in his renewal request in time. He will keep it until at least 1980 because license tags will not be changed until then.

Make most of deductions

By Ray De Crane
(12th in a Series)

Medical expenses generally have to exceed three per cent of adjusted gross income before you have an income tax deduction. But don't forget the opportunity to claim one-half of your cost of medical, dental and hospital care insurance, to a limit of $150, as a deduction.

You may claim this even though you don't have enough other medical expenses to constitute a deduction. The insurance must have been paid with your own funds to be considered. If paid for by your employer you have no deduction.

Persons on Social Security should include the cost of Medicare B supplementary insurance in determining their total insurance cost.

Drugs are included in the medical computation to the extent that they exceed one per cent of adjusted gross income. They need not have been prescription drugs. Include also the cost of cough syrups, aspirins, liniment, ointments and other medical items obtained without a prescription. Include also the cost of birth control pills and vitamins, if recommended or ordered by your physician.

Don't forget these often-ignored items: Fees paid to psychologists and psychiatrists; the cost of meals furnished to a nurse administering to a dependent family member in your home; transportation expenses (at the rate of seven cents a mile if your own car is used) necessary to obtaining medical care or for the purchase of medicine.

Don't depend on your W-2 statement to give a total figure on the state and local income taxes that may be claimed as deductions under taxes.

Did you make an additional payment when you filed your final return for state or local income tax? If you did, add that to the withholding shown on your W-2. How about estimated tax payments? In addition to the city of employment are you required to pay a local income tax to the city of residence? Be sure to include all those items.

There are many ways to obtain a higher sales tax allowance than is shown on the chart for your state, depending on adjusted gross income and the number in your family. Also take these steps:

1. Add to your adjusted gross income such nontaxable income as Social Security, Veterans Administration and Railroad Retirement Act benefits; workmen's compensation; unemployment benefits; the untaxed 50 per cent of long-term gains; your sick pay exclusion; dividend income and any welfare payments received.

2. Study the footnotes to your state chart. Frequently there are special sales taxes in a given city or county that will increase the general sales tax in effect for the state as a whole.

3. If you purchased a car, boat, airplane or mobile home last year, the actual amount of sales tax on such a purchase is also deductible. (NEXT: Deductible interest and contributions.)

Oilman calls for action to aid public credibility

DALLAS (UPI) — An oil company spokesman has called for action by the oil and gas industry to re-establish credibility with the American public.

C.H. Hardesty Jr., vice chairman of Continental Oil, Tuesday said petroleum companies can not live with the charge they are holding back supplies to increase profits.

"We must openly report our reserves, our profits and all the statistics that are essential to intelligent analysis and planning," Hardesty told a conference on world economy. "In addition we must rid ourselves of and openly condemn bribery and corruption in the business community."

One result of the loss of credibility, he said, has been the introduction of federal legislation to break up major oil companies.

Hardesty said domestic oil refining and marketing could be dominated by foreign companies, including OPEC, which would continue to operate on an integrated, efficient basis worldwide while domestic companies would be split.

"Production of oil worldwide is running at the rate of 54 million barrels per day," he said. "North Sea oil fields are coming onstream and production there should increase by 3 million barrels a day by 1980. Starting in 1977 Alaskan oil will be brought to market eventually adding another 2 million barrels a day. There is also surplus refining capacity. Even the natural gas shortage this winter in the U.S. is less than that originally forecast because of warm weather."

"In this situation it is easy to put off difficult and critical decisions on energy policy."

'Nixon rebuilds ego'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., says former President Nixon is trying to rebuild "his own ego at the expense of American foreign policy" by his visit to the People's Republic of China.

"Mr. Nixon's current trip to China is a disservice to the American people and Chinese-American relations," Hart said Tuesday. "It is an apparent attempt to reconstruct his own ego at the expense of American foreign policy."

Hart said the purpose of Nixon's trip was unclear, but he suggested the Chinese might try to use the visit to drive a wedge between American-Soviet detente.

"In any case, it is clear that the government of the People's Republic will use this visit to further their own political interests," he said.

Hart also said the lavish ceremonies given for Nixon discredited the claim the former President's visit was merely one by a private citizen.

"Now that he is in Peking applying Chinese balm to his wounded ego, he should not forget, nor should China or any other country, that except for the generosity of his successor, Richard Nixon might be in jail today," Hart said.

Epilepsy group organized

Responding to the need to inform Pampa and area residents of the medical and social services now available to persons with epilepsy, a group of Pampans met recently in the home of Mrs. Sue Reddell, 2120 N. Russell, to organize the Gray County Chapter of the High Plains Epilepsy Association.

Fred Tinsley, president-elect, said the main goal of the new organization is to provide emergency medical arrangements, counseling, job assistance and transportation for persons with epilepsy — plus family guidance and public education programs.

Mrs. Reddell, corresponding secretary and social work contact for the chapter, said that the High Plains Epilepsy Association staff will train local volunteers in these major areas of service.

Mrs. Betty Brown of Pampa, HPEA executive director, said that the resources of the Amarillo headquarters will be available to Gray County for information and referral and on request, for special programs in hospitals and schools.

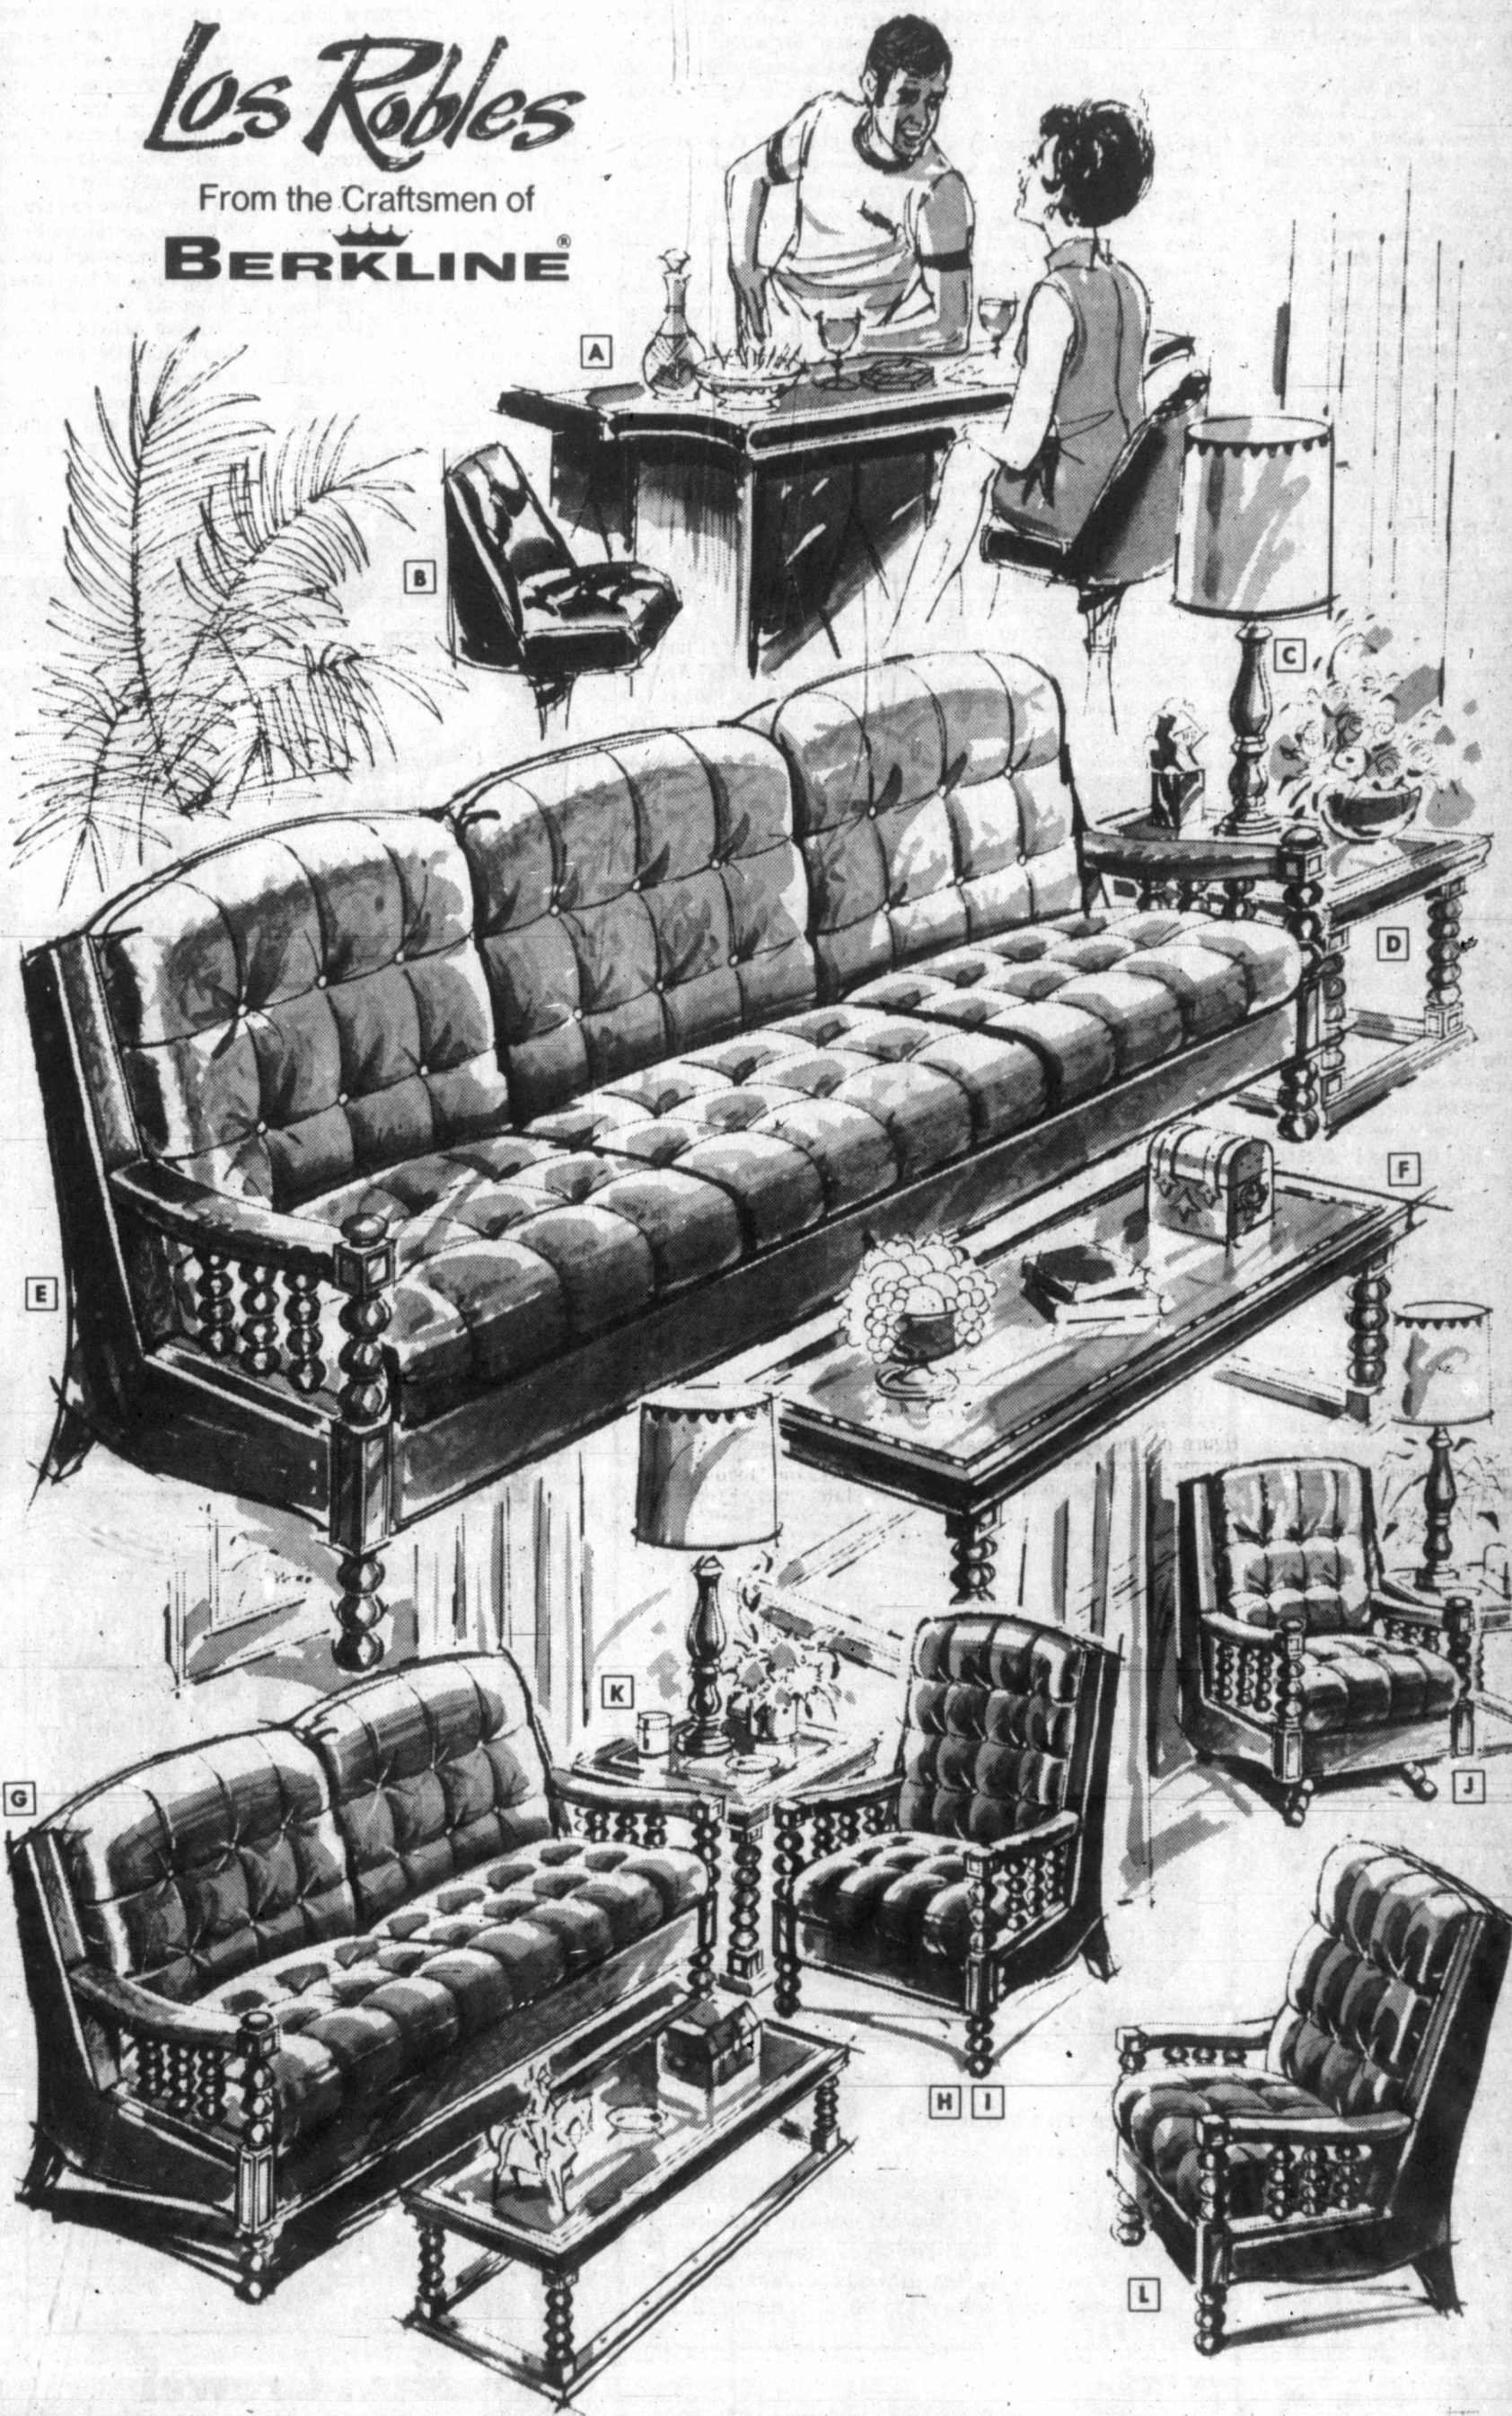

According to Tinsley, the main thrust of the local group's public education program will be aimed at the layman, explaining what epilepsy is — and is not.

The HPEA estimates that around two per cent of the population of Gray County have epilepsy and epilepsy-related problems.

Epilepsy affects more people in the United States than tuberculosis, cancer, cerebral palsy, muscular dystrophy and multiple sclerosis combined, the HPEA said.

Lawyer Belli 'able to sue anybody'

NEW YORK (UPI) — To the American Medical Association, he's a subaltern of the devil.

To the American Bar Association, he's an omnipresent embarrassment.

To scores of grateful clients, whose damage claims he has won in five and six-figure brackets, he's the knight-errant who rescued them from the cold indifference of the wealthy and the powerful.

To himself, he's Melvin Belli — "King of Torts," flouter of conventions, biter of judges and, above all, arch-foe of "bad medicine, bad prescriptions, bad diagnosis."

"If you hang out your shingle you ought to be able to sue anybody — doctors, lawyers, tennis players or anybody else," he said in an interview this week. "The answer (in stemming the burgeoning incidence of malpractice suits) is better medicine. Believe me, there are a hell of a lot of goofs in the medical profession. I had it from the president of the American College of Surgeons some years ago that 50 per cent of all surgery is unnecessary and dangerous. A great number of doctors just aren't fit to practice."

Doctors striking in California to protest rising malpractice insurance rates well might finger Belli as the one man who, beyond anyone else, has singlehandedly sent the rates soaring. Belli gleefully bows to the charge, but he says he has a solution for the malpractice lawsuit problem too, if only the medical profession would listen to him.

"Years ago you could never get one doctor to testify against another one," he said. "We broke that conspiracy of silence, and now the doctors themselves have got to clean up their act if they want to avoid malpractice charges. First, we've got to weed out the bad doctors through doctors' committees. Then we've got to go to the insurance companies and find out just how much money they actually lose on premiums and how much they've lost in the stock market."

Belli admitted that many malpractice suits are the result of "untoward events," rather than incompetency on the part of the doctor, and he proposed establishment of a fund to pay damages without litigation to claimants in obvious cases.

"I'd have every patient with a $15 doctor bill put up $1 extra for the fund," he said. "Then it could be used to settle claims of obvious error. A judge or a doctors' committee could order such payments without the claimant having to go to court. That wouldn't end the malpractice remedy, but it would funnel off an awful lot of cases."

Belli said he has proposed his brainchild to doctors, but with little success.

"Just because Belli suggested it, they want no part of it," he said. "They think I don't like them. I have nothing against doctors. I'll even go to one if I'm sick... reluctantly."

Belli's record speaks eloquently for the mistrust. In more than 30 years in the courtroom, stunning juries with his always flamboyant and frequently spectacular left hook of "demonstrative evidence," Belli has wrested damages averaging in excess of $1 million a year from giant corporations and errant physicians. Malpractice suits are his specialty, and medical terminology rolls off his tongue as readily as does lawbook Latin.

To crack the mystique of the doctor as the always dedicated and compassionate font of all wisdom, Belli has resorted to demonstrative evidence techniques that, to more staid members of his profession, smack more of the circus than of the courtroom. But if they fail to impress judges and his fellow lawyers, they have had noticeable impact on juries — and it is the juries which bring in the awards for his aggrieved clients.

Belli chuckled as he recalled his favorite inning with demonstrative evidence.

His client was suing a plastic surgeon for botchwork which had left her breast a mass of scar tissue. To illustrate his point, Belli took the woman into the judge's chambers, asked her to disrobe, then led the jurors in one by one to view the damage for themselves.

"It was the most dramatic thing I think I've ever seen," he said. "Her face was red and she was standing against a white sheet. She had her head bowed and the tears were falling down across her breast... washing the scars. The jury gave her $115,000."

The tactics win cases, but they frequently have gotten Belli on the carpet with judges too — a carpet the American Bar Association vainly has tried to yank out from under him in the form of censure or disbarment because of his predilection for treating opposing attorneys and judges alike to the finely honed edge of his tongue.

Belli is unimpressed.

"One thing I think young lawyers should learn is 'don't try a case on your knees,'" he said. "I tell them, 'if you can't stand up to the judge... and socially and carefully argue back, you don't belong in the courtroom. If you're scared to talk to him, you'd better let someone in there who isn't.'"

"Young lawyers" are Belli's favorite people — the ones who keep his faith in mankind and the American court system blazing as brightly as the brilliant red lining he favors for his sport coats.

"They don't give a damn about the establishment, the banks, the insurance companies or the American Bar Association," he said. "They're not interested in making a bundle of money. They're concerned for their fellow man. These young ones, and the goodness that's in them, came up out of the hippie movement."

"The idealistic improvement in the law is that all these young fellows are interested in helping the guy who up to now wasn't aware of his rights or economically wasn't situated so he could preserve his rights. When you get that, then you bring equal protection of the law and due process to everybody, and I haven't seen any such trend in France or England."

If Belli is entranced by what the hippie movement produced in young turks at law, however, he is equally disenchanted with his leading activist colleague, William Kunstler and "all his talk of revolution."

"We don't need a revolution," he said. "We need a practical revolution where the young fellows get out and help the people who can't pay them the big fees, and we're getting that, but for Kunstler to come out and say we need a revolution because the law's no good — that's a crock. He doesn't know the law."

Belli admits the American court system has its flaws, and that it is severely overloaded, but he's ready to do battle with doomsayers who call for drastic changes as a corrective measure.

"We're dealing basically with human beings and as long as you have human beings, you're not going to have computerized objective justice," he said. "As long as you have human beings, you're going to have perjury and you're going to have a crooked judge here and there — but a crooked judge is very, very rare."

Perjury is not so rare. There's more perjury than the layman really realizes. A lawyer can set a witness up and tip him off through questioning what he should say — truthfully or otherwise. That kind of kid glove perjury is rampant. You can't take it out, dealing with human beings... but you can't throw the whole system out just because you see this exemplification of human nature."

To Belli, freedom of the press

SAN JUAN, P.R. (UPI) — The local bankruptcy court has authorized the 222-room Dorado del Mar Hotel to reorganize its debts and resume operation after being forced to close for five days when its power was cut off for failure to pay its electricity bills. The luxury hotel, in the north coast city of Dorado, has been struggling for survival since the Hilton chain pulled out of its operation several years ago. Its popular championship 18-hole golf course has continued operating normally, however.

is the "cornerstone," both of the courts and of democracy — even ahead of the rights of the individual — and he opposes any judicial "gag" of reporters covering a trial.

"If you want to destroy democracy," he said, "you put all the lawyers in jail and prevent the newspapers from publishing and you've done it."

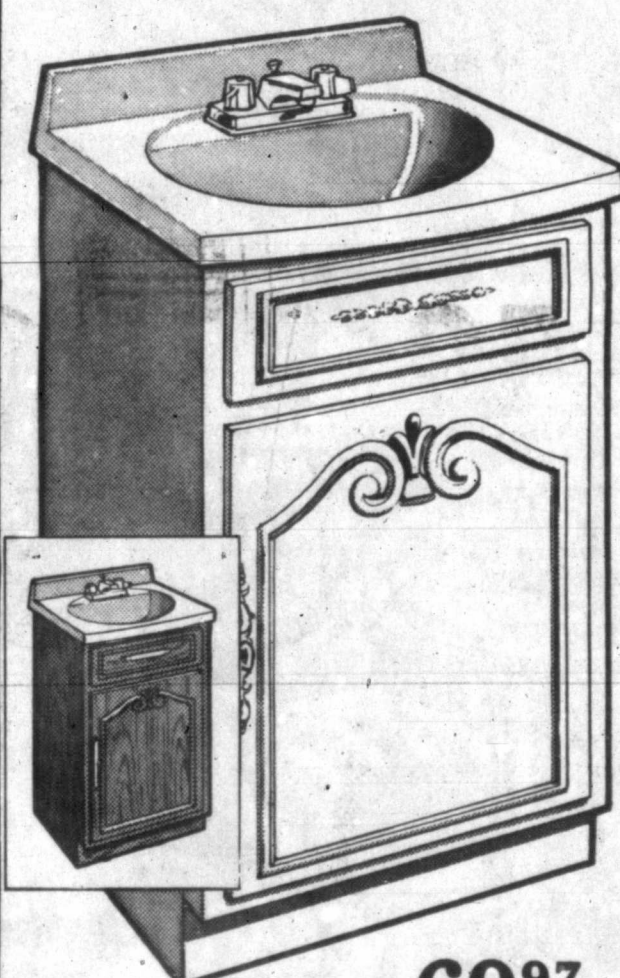

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (UPI) — Despite the fact that the number of U.S. tourists who visited the Yugoslav capital last year dropped by 25 per cent, the Americans kept fourth place among foreign visitors.

Tourists from the Soviet Union — some 66,000 or a 32 per cent increase over the 1974 figure — were the most numerous to visit Belgrade among some 400,000 foreigners, the city tourist association said. West Germans and Italians were the second and third most numerous foreigners to visit Belgrade in 1975.

Pop accuses Rev. Moon

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (UPI) — A businessman who says he had to "deprogram" his daughter to get her away from Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church has told Christian leaders Moon's primary interests are money and power.

"I would guess he wouldn't settle for less than $20 million this year," said Tony Gunderson, whose 19-year-old daughter left the Catholic faith to join Moon. "I would guess he would want it (money) for the political overthrow of some government, or all governments."

Gunderson made the remarks Tuesday at a Texas Conference of Churches meeting. The conference criticized cultism in general and Moon's church in particular as a threat to organized religion.

Gunderson said he had studied the Unification Church since his experience with his daughter. He said Moon used young people to make $8 million in 1974 and $15 million in 1975.

He said the group recently had rented a building near San Antonio College and said, "they're going to be feasting on those people (students) very shortly." He said his daughter joined Moon's organization while a student at the University of Texas at Austin.

Moon "unfortunately has made inroads in gaining political support of his movement as a religion," Gunderson said, although so far 300 parents of moonies have asked for a federal investigation of the group's methods. He said Moon had 72 front organizations that ranged from importing tea and marble products to the ownership of munitions and steel plants.

Gunderson circulated a New York Times news story quoting Moon as saying, "The whole world is in my hand and I will conquer and subjugate the world."

The Rev. C. Don Baugh, executive director of the San Antonio Conference of Churches, said the moonies had a goal of selling $1,000 a day in peanuts and often reached their goal by playing on sympathy.

The Rev. Mr. Ed Waddill of Temple, Tex., said when a girl in his congregation joined the Unification group he was torn between a belief in freedom of religion and a "mounting anxiety" about Moon's methods.

But Waddill said his studies convinced him the process was "dehumanizing."

"I'm reluctant to use the word brainwashing," Waddill said. "He or she may not be held behind physical bars."

Supports Superport

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — Gov. Dolph Briscoe says neither Florida nor Mississippi should have veto power over a proposed superport off the Texas coast.

The states have asked Transportation Secretary William Coleman to give them "adjacent coastal state" status, which would allow them to object to the Texas port because of environmental effects.

In a letter to Coleman, Briscoe said neither Florida nor Mississippi proved their environments could be affected by a Texas superport.

Texas Seadock, the proposed port, is a $650 million buoy and pumping station planned about 25 miles south of Freeport. If approved, the port would be built by a consortium of nine private firms and once built, would be capable of unloading 2.5 million barrels of crude oil a day.

Briscoe said neither state was close enough to the superport to be covered by the law's proximity requirements. He said both states were concerned about the danger of oil spills harming their coastal waters.

The letter said Seadock's construction would lessen the risk of coastal water damage because offshore supertankers would mean fewer ships would pass in the vicinity of the Florida and Mississippi.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration must make a recommendation on the Florida and Mississippi requests to Coleman by March 3.

Coleman has until March 28 to issue a decision on the issue.

HIGH RATES
LONDON (UPI) — It's going to be extremely difficult to get a single hotel bedroom in London for less than $30 a night this year, according to a survey by the Caterer and Hotelkeeper magazine.

And a night in the provinces will cost not less than $24, it said.

For County School Board

Marvin M. Finney is a candidate for election to the post of member at large on the Gray County School board. He has been a resident of Gray County since 1949. He is married and has three sons and two daughters. He said one daughter is a student at West Texas State University, another is a freshman in high school, and the son is a junior high school student. Finney has been employed by Cabot for the past 24 years. He has served 14 years on the Hopkins Independent School Board, and a year on the Grandview-Hopkins ISD school board. Finney said he has appreciated serving and if elected he will keep the education of each and every student "first at heart."

Speculators cash in with letters

WASHINGTON (UPI) — the Bicentennial theme to U.S. Savings Bonds, postal Fast-back speculators are using promote chain-letter sales of authorities and Treasury Department officials report.

H. J. Hintgen, commissioner of the Treasury's Bureau of the Public Debt, said Tuesday evidence has been uncovered by postal authorities that would indicate get-rich-quick promoters are soliciting individuals to buy U.S. Savings Bonds through the mail, a practice that violates antifraud laws.

The promoters are falsely claiming Treasury endorsement of the project, as well as "cloaking their appeals in Bicentennial and other patriotic labels," Hintgen said.

Apparently the scheme — under way in Massachusetts, Florida, Virginia, Maryland and parts of the Midwest — works pretty much the way all chain letters work.

An individual receives a letter in the mail asking him to purchase a savings bond for the person on the top of a list. After purchasing and mailing a bond to that person, he then crosses the individual's name off the list and puts his name on the bottom of it.

Then he mails copies of the revised chain letter to three or four friends who are instructed to follow the same procedure.

The rationale behind all this mailing and revising is that eventually an individual's name will appear on the top of the list and presumably he will receive several hundred dollars in savings bonds from the growing number of participants.

The catch, however, according to Treasury and postal officials is that the initiators of the scheme generally profit the most since their names are the first on the list and they receive their bonds relatively quickly.

As interest wanes, the chain is broken and many of the individuals who get in the project late lose their money.

"Rather than encouraging persons to make genuine investments, they create the illusion that participants are both aiding their government and themselves," Hintgen said.

"Even in the rare case where an individual receives some return, it is likely that he would quickly redeem the bonds, thereby placing further burden on the Treasury."

Few Americans except members of the Continental Congress knew the author of the Declaration of Independence was Thomas Jefferson until the fact appeared in a newspaper in 1784, according to "We Americans," the National Geographic Society's informal history of America.

Dr. Lamb

By Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Would you publish a list of foods which tend to raise cholesterol level? In other words, which foods one should avoid if the cholesterol level is on the high side.

DEAR READER — There is no cholesterol in foods of plant origin. It is only in animal products. The chief sources of large amounts of cholesterol in the diet are egg yolks, butter fat in butter, milk, cheese and some organ meats, especially liver, brains and sweetbreads.

Meat, fish and poultry all have about 70 milligrams of cholesterol in three and one-half ounces (100 grams) raw weight. You should try to limit your cholesterol intake to 300 milligrams a day. By using fortified skim milk, buttermilk, uncreamed cottage cheese for dairy products, avoiding the high cholesterol foods and using vegetable margarines, you can still eat quite a bit of the meat, fish and poultry group without consuming too much cholesterol.

Unfortunately there is much more to keeping the cholesterol down than just eliminating the high cholesterol foods. You need also to eliminate or avoid body obesity by diet and exercise and you need to limit your total fat intake of any type and particularly control saturated fat intake.

For more information on the principles of diet to prevent heart disease send 50 cents for The Health Letter, Number 1-3, Diet, Preventing Atherosclerosis. Send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for mailing. Address your letter to me in care of this newspaper, P. O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

DEAR DR. LAMB — My buddies and I are having a discussion concerning ulcers, nerves and high blood pressure. Which occurs first, ulcers and then a nervous condition and high blood pressure or a nervous condition and then an ulcer and high blood pressure?

DEAR READER — Have fun. Doctors still argue about these points, especially in specific cases and the conclusions are sometimes no more enlightened than the ones you may make.

The problem is that one can't generalize. Certainly one can have high blood pressure and not have any problems at all with nervous tension. High blood pressure may be related to being overweight, to having kidney disease or even to having certain hormonal abnormalities in the body.

Ulcers are often associated with excessive nervous tension but again we do see them in people without any clear evidence of abnormal stress and we see a lot of people with lots of stress who have neither high blood pressure nor ulcers.

We see people with an infinite variety of stress reactions, nervous disorders and even psychosis who have neither medical problem.

We know that when people are sick from any cause they may then become nervous, depressed or emotionally unstable. It is pretty depressing to find out you have a serious cancer or that you have a serious heart disease or have just had a stroke.

So you can't separate the physical, chemical and emotional responses of the body any more than you can decide which comes first, the chicken or the egg.
