Experts say economy improving

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy has shrugged off the worst effects of the October stock market collapse and should be able to escape a recession this election year, economists for top U.S. corporations predicted today.

The National Association of Business Economists said optimism among its members has risen appreciably since the last survey conducted in the month following the Oct. 19 plunge in stock prices.

In November, more than half of the business economists were predicting a recession would begin before the end of 1988, an outlook that could have spelled bad news for Republican hopes of holding onto the White House.

Now, the number of economists expecting a recession this year has dropped to about one-fourth.

"As we move farther away from October, we are a little less nervous. We are seeing continued improvement in manufacturing and other good signs that the expansion will keep going," said Kathleen Cooper, chief economist for Security Pacific National Bank of Los Angeles.

The next president is likely to face a recession soon after taking office, the analysts believe, with about 60 percent of them picking 1989 as the most likely year the downturn will begin.

But for 1988, the economists are projecting further growth at a modest pace, stable interest rates and a slight drop in inflation.

The analysts predicted that the economy, as measured by the gross national product, will expand just 2 percent this year, down from a 3.9 percent GNP increase in 1987, when measured from the fourth quarter of 1986.

This is more pessimistic than the Reagan administration, which is calling for GNP growth this year of 2.4 percent.

Ms. Cooper, who compiled the association's survey, said the decline in the stock market caused the majority of economists to reduce their growth forecasts for this year, but she said most of them had cut back their projections by less than 1 percent.

"Economists see the largest effect of the market's plunge on consumer spending for durable goods," she said, noting that they are now expecting car sales to total only 9.8 million units this year, down from an expectation of 10.5 million sales made before the market decline. The forecast of housing starts also was trimmed to 1.52 million units this year, compared to 1.62 million new houses built in 1987.

Ms. Cooper said the analysts expect growth to be most sluggish in the first half of the year, as businesses cut back on production to reduce high inventories. GNP growth will average 1.5 percent in the first six months and then improve to 2.5 percent growth for the rest of the year, the economists forecast.

This sluggish growth rate will not be enough to keep the unemployment rate from rising. The economists forecast that unemployment, which now stands at 5.8 percent, will rise to 6.1 percent by the end of the year.

But the slow growth will help to keep inflation from getting out of control. The analysts predicted that consumer prices will rise 4.2 percent this year, slightly slower than the 4.4 percent increase in 1987.

In other predictions, the economists said:

— Interest rates, as measured by the prime lending rate, will stay steady. Banks cut their prime rate, used to set interest rates on a variety of corporate and consumer loans, to 8.5 percent in early February, and analysts forecast it will remain at this level through the end of the year.

Mecham impeachment trial to begin

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Even before the start of his historic impeachment trial today, embattled Republican Gov. Evan Mecham predicted the state Senate will deny him a fair hearing.

Mecham

Senate leaders say they'll take up to two months to hear testimony and arguments before deciding whether the first-term governor should be removed and possibly barred from holding elective office.

"What we're doing today is history," said Senate Minority Leader Alan Stephens, a Democrat. "In 20 years people will be looking back and this will be the definitive way to impeach a governor, I hope."

Mecham, 63, also faces a March 22 criminal trial on six felony charges of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan, and a May 17 recall election.

He maintains he'll be acquitted in both trials, win the recall election and return to the office he gave up to Democratic Secretary of State Rose Mofford after he was impeached Feb. 5 on a 46-14 House vote.

At a news conference Saturday, Mecham said winning acquittal in criminal court is more important than persuading the Senate to keep him in office.

"I could have my freedom taken away and be sent to jail if I were guilty (in criminal court). Doesn't that somehow seem to you...a little more important than the job as governor? It does to me," Mecham said.

The state Supreme Court on Friday refused an emergency request by Mecham to intervene and delay the Senate trial until after the criminal trial. The court planned to discuss Tuesday whether to grant an injunction, although several justices already have said they believe the court lacks jurisdiction.

Mecham said he planned to take the issue to federal court. A new attorney hired by Mecham last week, Thomas Crowe, said he would decide by Wednesday where the appeal would be filed.

The governor claims the impeachment trial threatens his right to a fair criminal trial because the Senate proceedings will not be bound by the same rules of evidence as a criminal court but will be widely publicized to prospective jurors.

"As governor of this state, I ask nothing more than is accorded to every garden-variety criminal," he said. "Is this a star chamber or will we proceed under the time-tested constitutional mandate that I be afforded all of my basic constitutional rights?"

CIA finds cabbage is king in U.S.S.R.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA and the Agriculture Department have teamed up to report that the cabbage is king in the Soviet Union, while Americans bow to the tomato.

The study of food supplies in the United States and the Soviet Union says that radish and carrot tops are common fare among Soviet consumers but are rarely found on American grocery lists. But then, the United States has the sweet potato while the Soviet Union doesn't.

On the other hand, the overall nutrient levels in the two nations are not too far apart. On the average, the Soviet Union supplies about 3,200 calories per day to each citizen, compared with 3,500 for the average American.

Protein availability, at an average of 100 grams per day, is a tossup. But Americans have more fat and cholesterol in their food supply, while Soviet people get more carbohydrates.

The study was conducted jointly by the CIA and the Agriculture Department's Human Nutrition Information Service. The report by CIA and HNIS analysts was published in the latest National Food Review, a quarterly magazine of the department's Economic Research Service.

A 16-year period, 1965 to 1981, was used in the study. Information about Soviet per capita food use was supplied by the CIA's Office of Soviet Analysis from "various published and unpublished sources," the report said. The USDA agency drew on extensive food statistics kept on Americans.

The report cautioned that the food use statistics for both countries were derived mathematically from production, exports, imports, year-end inventories and other annual figures.

But within those limitations, analysts said the study "reveals some interesting differences and similarities" between the United States and the Soviet Union.

"For instance, sources of food energy differed," the report said. "Carbohydrate provided most of the energy in the Soviet food supply, while carbohydrate and fat provided almost equal proportions in the U.S. supply. Protein provided the same proportion in both countries."

"Among the Soviet vegetables, cabbage ranked number one," the report said. "Soviet use reached 66 pounds per capita in 1981, compared with 55 pounds 16 years earlier. U.S. use stayed at about 10 or 12 pounds."

Cabbages accounted for 34 percent of all vegetables used in the Soviet Union in 1981, while providing only 6 percent of the U.S. vegetable menu.

Tomatoes led the U.S. list, accounting for 24 percent of all vegetables, while ranking second in the Soviet Union at 28 percent. Carrots and beets were next among Soviet vegetables, while lettuce was second in the United States, followed by cucumbers.

The per capita use of foods in nine major categories increased between 1965 and 1981 in the Soviet Union. Those included poultry, eggs, fruit, fish, vegetable fats, dairy products, vegetables, sugars and sweeteners, and meat.

Will many women leap at chance to propose?

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

A 1,460-day wait is in store for women who don't consummate their marital aspirations today with a proposal to that favorite paramour, Leap Year legend states.

More than 500 years ago in Great Britain, France and Italy, a woman had the right to ask for a man's hand in marriage on Leap Year Day and could expect financial reimbursement — a silk dress or money — from her flame should he nix her offer.

But locally, no civil marriages were on the dockets today for Midland Justices of the Peace Keith Jobe and Robert Pine, they said.

"Since I've only been in office a year, I've never performed a wedding on Leap Year day," Jobe explained.

Commissioner candidates tout money management skills

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a six-part series on local Republican and Democratic races in the March 8 Super Tuesday primary election.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Campaigns for commissioner of Midland County Precinct 1 seem to be cruising along and drawing virtually no flak.

In the race, 20-year veteran Commissioner Durward Wright is waging a campaign to hold on to the post sought by his Republican Party rival, Michael Roadcup, and by Democrat Mark Spears.

Election for political-party nominees will be held March 8, dubbed Super Tuesday, and the general election will be eight months later on Nov. 8.

Wright is a 56-year-old financial consultant who has turned the commissioner's post virtually into a full-time job. "All I do now is tend to the job of county commissioner, which has grown so complex and demanding of time," he said.

Roadcup

Spears

Wright

"My basic philosophy of county government is to represent the people within the confines and limitations set by the budget, statute, and the State Constitution," said Wright, "and to do this as fiscally responsible as possible."

Seeking to knock Wright out of the running in the primary election is Roadcup, a 37-year-old minister, who said he has "fallen in love" with the Midland area. Roadcup said he senses a "time for a change" on the Commissioners Court and wants to give the voting populous a choice at the election polls next Tuesday.

"I am running to give people a chance to have new leadership in county government," said Roadcup, who alluded to his frugal ways in budgeting. "The people deserve a choice. I definitely am not looking for a job."

Midland school teacher and former geologist Spears, 36, is unopposed for the Democratic Party nomination and is to run against the winner of the Wright-Roadcup Republican Party race in the November general election.

"I'm getting well-organized more than anything else," said Spears, who wants to bring new management to the Commissioners' Court.

"I see a lot of waste and mismanagement more than anything else," said Spears. County government is not being "run properly," he charged.

"I hate to see things wasted, whether it be a life, human or any kind of life, or money. All of it is important. I hate waste."

WRIGHT, WHO emphasized his penchant for fiscal responsibility, cited his "integrity, industry and willingness to tackle the really tough questions that county government is forced to face.

"If you don't know anything of what you are talking about," Wright said, "you can say anything. Once you have the facts, you must represent those facts and act on them if you have any integrity about you."

Among those challenges are today's post-boom times — recovery after the oil bust of the early 1980s.

"In these difficult economic times," Wright said, the challenge is "providing adequate public service within the confines of our available revenues and keeping taxes at the lowest possible level."

The 1988 county budget is set at $13.2 million, and the tax rate is .21072 — slightly more than 21 cents per $100 of property valuation.

"It's tough," he said, "particularly if the (Midland Central) Appraisal District comes up with another decrease in the tax base."

Currently, the county-wide tax base is at $4.2 billion. Two years ago, it was slightly more than $5 billion.

Wright noted that county government has been rated high in effective and efficient money management by monitors of the community's taxing entities.

In his role as commissioner, Wright serves on several boards, including those of the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission, Texas Agricultural Extension Service, and the Midland County Housing Finance Corp.

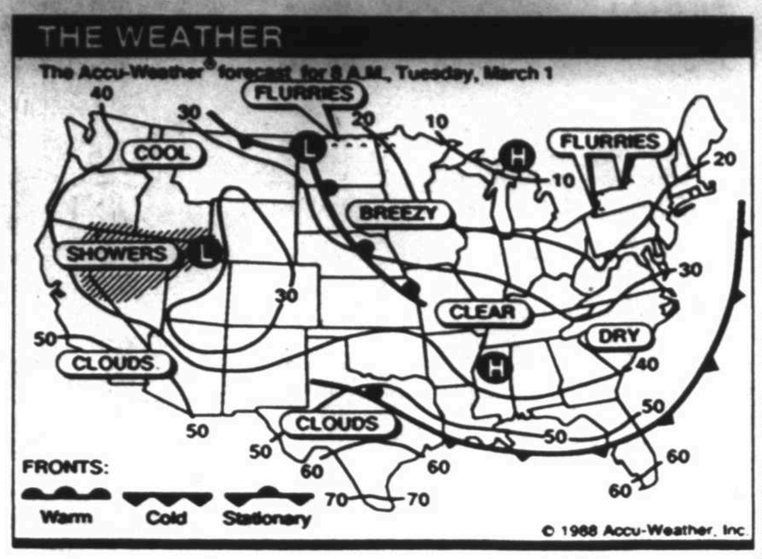
WEATHER SUMMARY



Mild weather to continue

From Staff and Wire Reports

Temperate weather will continue in the Permian Basin according to forecasters with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight should see mostly fair skies, a low in the mid-40s and southeast winds at 5 to 10 mph.

Tuesday, skies should be sunny during morning hours but partly cloudy in the afternoon. Forecasters predict a less than 20 percent chance of isolated thunderstorms and a high in mid-70s. South to southwest winds will blow at 10 to 20 mph.

Sunday's high of 83 was four degrees below the record of 87 for that date set in 1947. This morning's low of 31 was 11 degrees higher than the record of 20 for this date set in 1960.

STATE

A weather system moving across Centeral Texas triggered scattered showers and thunderstorms over parts of North and South Texas early today.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered in an area stretching from the Dallas-Fort Worth area to College Station to Victoria. Dense fog formed over parts of southeast Texas and the upper Gulf Coast where the visibility dropped to less than a mile in some spots.

The National Weather Service posted a dense fog advisory this morning for southeast Texas and the upper coast.

A weak cold front extended from the Red River near Paris to San Angelo to Sanderson in the lower Pecos valley.

Some isolated thunderstorms were possible over sections of West Texas late today. Continued fair to partly cloudy tonight and Tuesday. Highs this afternoon will range from the mid 60s Panhandle to the low 90s in the Rio Grande Plains.

NATION

The Northwest basked in record-high temperatures while the East shivered and showers and thunderstorms doused parts of California and Texas today.

Cloudiness enshrouded the lower Great Lakes region, resulting in widely scattered snow showers. Isolated rain showers were common in the Rocky Mountain region.

Showers and thunderstorms moved through southern and central California and central Texas Sunday evening and early today. The rain developed ahead of a cold front pushing across Oklahoma and Texas.

Cloudiness extended from the northern Ohio Valley to the West Coast. Advisories for dense fog were in effect this morning for southern and central Louisiana and parts of southeast Texas.

Temperatures were generally below freezing this morning in the nation's midsection, dropping to the teens in eastern New York state and northern New England and to single digits in northern Maine.

Today's forecast called for scattered showers and thunderstorms from California and Oregon across Nevada and Arizona to Utah and southern Idaho and as far south as the central Gulf Coast; and snow or snow showers from northern New England across New York state to the central Appalachians.

SPELLING BEE 1988

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1988 Regional Spelling Bee March 26 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through March 25. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

eb'ə-ne

ebony — (noun, adjective) African tribal masks and fine furniture are two things that are sometimes carved from "ebony." It is a heavy, hard, black wood from trees of the Diospyros family. The word "ebony" comes from the Latin word "ebeninus" and from the earlier Greek word "ebeninos." Anything very dark or black may be referred to as being "ebony" in color.

COMMISSIONER

He also serves as a governor's appointee to the Texas County and District Retirement System, which has a $2-billion portfolio. He is a former Midland Chamber of Commerce director.

Wright noted that the Midland County Jail problem is being resolved by way of the recent passage of a $3.8-million bond issue.

"It (the new jail) is going to happen," Wright said. "The voters mandated it" after rejecting costlier jail-bond programs in 1983 and 1985.

"I am going to be extremely busy in working in the planning and construction of it (the jail)," he said.

In contending that he is the "best qualified" candidate for the $25,000-a-year commissioner's post, Wright cited his business background, his experience, and his family, religious and educational backgrounds. He attended Texas Tech University in Lubbock.

Wright said that his expertise and experience in the political arena give him the name-recognition advantage, influence, and ability to deal with people at various levels of government and business for the benefit of the people of Midland County.

MICHAEL ROADCUP, Wright's Republican opponent, is associate pastor of Midland Temple Baptist Church. He is director of the church's school band and drill team and formerly taught school there.

Roadcup, who has lived in Midland since 1978, holds a bachelor's degree in Christian education from Tri-State Baptist College in Memphis, Tenn.

Roadcup, who said he views himself as a common man, advocates responsible money management.

"When it comes to money matters," he said, "$100 is big money to me. If we take care of the 100s, the millions will fall in line. Someone once said, 'The harder I work, the luckier I get.' It shows industry."

Roadcup said he would bring a "personal a touch" to county government.

"Here I am a common person, and I feel my view is not being represented. If they (the people) want the common-view represented, I'll take it with me when I go to court."

Roadcup said that he "definitely will be a thinking man" on the Commissioners Court.

"There are some things people are not going to talk me into, such as changing from the traditional ways on moral issues."

Roadcup noted that the commissioner's post has "been talked up as a full-time job, but the other commissioners have it as part-time."

The candidate indicated that he is running a polite campaign.

"If I can't run and be a Christian, I'll not run," he said.

Roadcup said he is fond of the community.

"I've lived in many places, and as far as I'm concerned, this is the best. This is the place to raise children. Midland is different. It's an easy place to call home."

Roadcup, who noted that the "People need a choice" at the election polls, said he has "no secret plan" to bring to county government.

"My plan is to bring the people to the Commissioners' Court."

UNOPPOSED DEMOCRATIC Party candidate Mark Spears said that he has the needed money-management expertise to bring to county government. Spears, who is in the U.S. Army Reserves, said he started out as a "buck private 11 years ago, and now I'm a captain in the Corps of Engineers.

"I've handled multi-million dollar construction projects," such as air fields, roads, and buildings, Spears said.

Spears, a 1976 graduate of Bradley University in Peoria, Ill., teaches life science at Alamo Junior High School. In 1981, he moved to Midland, where he worked in geology for a major oil company and later worked as an independent geologist before he entered teaching.

"I stayed out about a year, trying to make a living, and took up my second love, which is teaching," Spears said. "I love working with kids. I went from being a theorist to being an academician."

In making his bid for the commissioners' post, Spears said that the Midland Independent School District Board has "encouraged teachers to be examples and set good examples for students. And what better way to set an example (than running for public office)?"

Were he to be elected commissioner, Spears said he would develop "an accounting of all the tax dollars that are being spent by the different (county) departments.

"They (commissioners) need to know where every dollar goes and how it is being spent."

In addition, the county needs to "develop a more viable personnel department," he said.

Of bolstering the economy, Spears said that the tax base needs to be diversified.

"Our tax base is dwindling. We are not losing the property, but we are losing our tax base slowly," he said.

"The county commissioners can't diversify (the economy), but they can support ideas," Spears said. "That's leadership."

To diversify the economy, Midland promoters "need to stop going after the mega-projects that just can't make it, such as the Superconducting Super Collider (physics laboratory)," he said. "We've got to go after things we can get. Don't go after the stars."

Spears said that in the November general election, "I'll be the big underdog" in a community that is predominantly Republican.

"And being an old military man, you don't tell them (the opposition) what your strategy is."

Jordan declines to join PLO in negotiations

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — American efforts to secure peace in the Middle East appeared today to run into another roadblock when Jordan declined to form a joint delegation with the PLO in negotiations with Israel.

As U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz shuttled to Amman from Jerusalem for further talks, sources said Jordan wants the Palestine Liberation Organization to represent Palestinian interests.

Reporters were told Jordan's position and that of the rest of the Arab world had hardened in reaction to Israel's repression of Palestinian demonstrations in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, captured from Egypt and Jordan in the 1967 Middle East War.

More than 70 Palestinians have been killed in clashes with Israeli troops, police and settlers over the last three months.

American officials had assumed that Jordan was still ready to form a joint delegation with Palestinians selected by the PLO under a 1985 formula designed to sidestep a confrontation with Israel and the United States. Both the United States and Israel refuse to deal directly with Yasser Arafat's guerrilla organization.

But now, reporters were told, under rules that prevented identification of their sources, the Palestinians in Israeli-held territories and beyond all look to the PLO as their sole representative.

Jordan would not refuse to include PLO-selected Palestinians in its delegation to any peace conference, according to this account.

But Jordan takes the position that the Palestinians are entitled to their own representative — the PLO — in negotiations, it was learned.

In Syria, the official Tishrin daily called Sshultz's proposals for achieving peace in the Middle East irrelevant.

"The Shultz ideas do not deal with the basic elements of the Palestinian problem," the newspaper said. "They do not indicate the possibility of a serious attempt by Washington to put pressure on Israel."

Shultz flew to Amman from Jerusalem for a second round of talks with Crown Prince Hassan, Prime Minister Zaid Rifai and Foreign Minister Taher Masri. He will see King Hussein in London on Tuesday.

The U.S. proposal calls for negotiations to provide 1.5 million Palestinians on the West Bank and Gaza with some self-rule "as soon as possible," a U.S. oficial said.

The second stage would be talks in December on an overall settlement of the 40-year-old Arab-Isareli conflict.

The Jordanian and Syrian position is that the negotiations should be held at an international peace conference. Both nations want the Soviet Union, an ally of Syria, and the PLO to play an active role in devising an agreement.

The United States and Israel want to exclude the PLO and limit Soviet influence.

Although the United States shuns the PLO, Shultz earlier this month met in Washington with two Palestinian representatives.

He tried to arrange a meeting in Jerusalem on Friday with 15 Palestinians, but they stood him up on orders from the PLO.

The U.S. consulate in Jerusalem is now trying to arrange another session, this time with Palestinians from the Israeli-held territories and as far away as the United States.

Before leaving Jerusalem, Shultz met with Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres.

"We went over the last of the outstanding issues," Peres said. "I think there is still an input of important ideas."

Asked if there was any progress, Peres said: "I think there's a chance, although I'm aware of the very complex situation that exists."

Peres said he hoped negotiations would continue even if Shultz left the region as scheduled on Tuesday.

Shultz is scheduled to fly to Brussels for a NATO meeting on Tuesday and then head for London.

The one bright spot in Shultz's trip to the Middle East has been the reaction from Egypt to the American peace plan, according to a senior U.S. official.

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, who met with Shultz on Sunday, became the first leader in the Middle East to support the plan.

Egypt's attraction to the plan could be linked to Mubarak's talks last month with President Reagan in Washington, in which the Egyptian president pushed very hard for an overall settlement instead of an interim arrangement on the Palestinian issue. Shultz's reference to a comprehensive agreement echoed the advice from the Egyptian leader.

Egypt also has had a peace treaty with Israel for nine years and is in the midst of improving relations with its Jewish neighbor.

Spare sparts sought for Navy ships

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Thrifty government officials took a few museum trips for stockpiled spare parts to put vintage Navy vessels back into commission.

The reactivation of the USS Wisconsin and three sister ships required spare parts, and three battleships used as floating museums had thousands of the parts in their holds.

"If these parts were not available, the Navy would have had to find a company to do it, put it up for competitive bid, award a contract and then wait for the parts to be made," said Lt. Paul Weishaupt, a spokesman from the Navy Office of Information in Washington, D.C.

The parts were stored during World War II, when ships were expected to be at sea for long periods, Weishaupt said.

The ships were decommissioned in the 1950s and early 1960s and Navy officials made computer listings of the parts and the ships where they were stored, said Strafford Morss, project manager for the Battleship Restoration Project near Houston.

For the reactivation project, rounded up the lists and started collecting parts from the museum ships, including the USS Alabama, USS North Carolina and USS Massachusetts.

"The Navy would have cut these ships up, if they hadn't been saved by the public," Morss said. "Now the amount of money they have saved (in reactivation costs) is equal to the cost of about one new ship."

DIET

At the same time, the United States gained in the use of meat, poultry, vegetable fats, and sugars and sweeteners, the report said. Potato and grain use declined in the Soviet Union, while the use of animal fats, eggs, dairy products and potatoes dropped in the United States.

One of the reasons behind huge Soviet grain imports of recent years is a drive by Moscow to increase the production of livestock and poultry to help upgrade the diets of Soviet consumers. The report shows how the situation has changed.

In 1965, the Soviet Union's per capita use of dairy products was 244 pounds, compared with 453 pounds in the United States. By 1981, Soviet use rose to 347 pounds, while the U.S. average dropped to 405 pounds.

Meat use by the Soviets in 1965 was 78 pounds per capita against the U.S. average of 146 pounds. In 1981, the averages, respectively, were 98 and 154 pounds.

The Soviet per capita use of potatoes in 1965 was reported at 313 pounds, compared with 86 pounds in the United States. In 1981, potato use had dropped to 232 and 78 pounds, respectively.

"Although Soviet use of grain products declined from 343 pounds per capita in 1965 to 304 pounds in 1981, it was still approximately twice as much as in the United States (145 pounds in 1965 and 151 pounds in 1981)," the report said.

"Wheat accounted for the largest share in both countries, but rye, rice, barley, corn, buckwheat and oats were also used."

Grain products in the Soviet Union were primarily in the form of whole grains and groats, or coarsely ground, hulled grain, the report said. White flour was the major grain product used in the United States.

MECHAM

The House has leveled 23 charges against Mecham accusing him of concealing the $350,000 loan, misusing $80,000 from the governor's protocol fund by lending it to his auto dealership and trying to thwart an investigation of an alleged death threat by a state official against a witness before the grand jury that investigated Mecham.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Usdane said the Senate has decided to hear testimony on all charges even if it appears there could be a vote to convict him on the first charges heard.

Prosecutor Paul Eckstein said he and co-counsel William French planned to begin with testimony on the allegation that Mecham ordered Department of Public Safety Director Ralph Milstead not to cooperate with a probe of the alleged death threat against former Mecham aide Donna Carlson, who testified before the state grand jury investigating Mecham.

State official Lee Watkins, who has since resigned, has denied making the threat.

Two-thirds of the 30 Senate votes are required to convict Mecham, who is the first U.S. governor in 50 years to be impeached. Of the 16 governors in the nation's history to be impeached, seven have been convicted.

Mecham, who never was considered part of the state's Republican establishment, won the governorship in a three-way race 1986 on his fifth try.

He immediately became embroiled in controversy when he canceled a Martin Luther King holiday for state workers, saying it was illegally declared by his predecessor, Democratic Gov. Bruce Babbitt.

Mecham has been criticized for defending the use of the word "pickaninny" in a book and for making remarks that angered women, Jews, homosexuals and the Japanese.

ECONOMY

— The federal budget deficit, which fell to $150.4 billion in 1987, will rise to $157 billion in the current fiscal year, but then resume falling, dropping to $140 billion by 1990. This is more pessimistic than the Reagan administration, which sees this year's deficit falling to $146.7 billion and a further decline to $104.2 billion by 1990.

— The country's foreign trade deficit, which hit a record $171 billion last year, will finally start to come down, dipping to $150 billion this year and $130 billion in 1989.

The optimism on the trade deficit is based on a belief that the dollar has finally fallen far enough to stem Americans' appetite for imports while making U.S. products competitive once again on overseas markets.

Ms. Cooper said the economists are now less pessimistic about the fate of the dollar with less than one-fifth of them thinking the dollar will drop by 10 percent in value this year against other major currencies. In November, more than 40 percent were looking for a decline in the dollar that was at least that large.

LEAP

The justices said they don't discourage people from getting married on Feb. 29, an anniversary that a husband would get in trouble for missing just once every four years.

But women are increasingly asking men to marry them, said Midland marriage and family counselor Harvey Durbin.

"As a rite of the civil and equal rights movement, it's becoming more acceptable," Durbin said.

Tradition is what keeps most women from asking men to marry, Durbin said, although in some societies it is just the opposite. Men stay at home and "women go out and hunt."

Depending on one's outlook, a female could be construed as being too aggressive should she take the Feb. 29 initiative, he added.

Those with a more liberal attitude would think nothing of it, however.

"Guys are under a lot of pressure. He has to take this risk, and there's the possibility he'll get told no" the psychologist said.

"I think it would be rather flattering for the man" if the woman suggested the nuptials, he added.

According to Associated Press reports, a Gallup Poll found that women who propose to the man of their dreams today have a 92 percent chance of success.

Just 12 percent of the woman questioned, however, said they would seriously consider the option.

As a Great Britain columnist for the London newspaper, The Independent, said in the AP report, "How many men are worth waiting for four years to propose to these days?"

Citing the fact "one out of every two marriages ends up in the courtroom," Durbin added many women and men are opting for situations other than marriage.

90-second 'bites' take teeth out of views, say Democratic candidates

HOUSTON (AP) — After outlining their views on Central America, poverty and the economy, four Democratic presidential candidates offered their views on television debates.

"We really are kind of trapped in these 90-second sound bites, trying to say a thing that makes a difference," said Jesse Jackson, in a sentiment quickly echoed by the other candidates Sunday.

The 90-minute, four-way debate between Jackson, Illinois Sen. Paul Simon, former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart, and Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr., was held on the final day of a convention of the National Association of Television Program Executives.

"The debates we have had too often have lent themselves to sloganeering rather than substance," said Simon. "I'm not sure you determine who is thoughtful and who is not thoughtful (in that format)."

Hart agreed.

"All of us on this platform are compassionate, we all care, we all want to put the White House on the side of working men and women," he said, chiding a familiar slogan used by Tennessee Sen. Gore.

Gore, for his part, said television and radio had changed politics.

"People used to run for president by sitting on their front porch, and talking only to those people who made the pilgrimage," Gore said. "The next president must frequently address millions of Americans by radio and TV."

Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis were invited but did not attend, citing scheduling conflicts. The debate was moderated by television journalist Linda Ellerbee.

Former CBS anchorman Walter Cronkite hosted the debate, but did not question the candidates. The debate was offered to an ad hoc network of local television stations.

As the candidates outlined now-familiar views on poverty, Central America, the economy and other issues, they strove to distinguish themselves from the pack.

"You now hear Gephardt saying we must challenge the multinational corporations, that's Jesse Jackson. When you now hear Congress saying stop the drug flow, that's Jesse Jackson," Jackson said. "When you hear other candidates talking about South Africa for the first time, that's Jesse Jackson."

Hart set himself apart from the other candidates on the issue of putting out a budget.

"Paul talks about his programs, Jesse talks about his program, and Al talks about his programs," Hart said. "I'm the only one who has put out a budget although I see each of these people gradually creeping towards that inevitability."

"I'm the only one who has put out a budget to tell Americans the truth," Hart said. "I think every candidate of either party, the Republican have not done it either, should put a budget forward."

Gore, in his first response of the debate, criticized Dukakis and Gephardt for not appearing.

"Maybe they didn't enjoy the debate last week in Dallas," Gore said. "We miss them and I want them to know they're missed."

During the debate, Simon and Hart also criticized Dukakis and Gephardt for not showing.

Following the debate, Gore said he advocated the appearances as a means of getting the issues across to the greatest number of voters possible.

"I want more of them (debates). I enjoy them, I think they are good for the people."

Simon said his presence showed he was not writing off the South, even though he has not purchased expensive television commercials in Super Tuesday states.

Three men arrested in death of Dallas officer

DALLAS (AP) — Three men were arrested on capital murder warrants in the shooting death of an off-duty police officer, but authorities declined to discuss specifics, saying it could harm the investigation.

Vincent Edward Cooks, 23, was arrested at a Houston apartment building at noon Sunday, while 23-year-old Tony Ray Harvey and Tracy Dewayne Stallworth, 27, were arrested Saturday, Capt. John Holt said at a news conference Sunday.

Holt and Lt. Ron Waldrop told reporters in the news conference that other details of the arrests were not yet available because the investigation into the shooting death of officer Gary D. McCarthy was ongoing.

"We'd rather not get into specifics about what we're going to allege that any of the participants did because, obviously, this case is coming back to Dallas for trial and we want to protect as much of the investigation as we can," Waldrop said.

Harvey was being held on $500,000 bond at Lew Sterrett Justice Center Sunday while bond was set at $300,000 for Stallworth. Cooks was to be returned to Dallas from Houston sometime today, said an officer who refused to give his name.

McCarthy, 33, a former church missionary who joined the Dallas police force 14 months ago, was gunned down Friday during an attempted robbery at a grocery where he was working off-duty.

Cooks was on parole from the Texas Department of Corrections for attempted capital murder of a police officer and Harvey had been paroled Jan. 18 after serving 18 months of a six-year sentence for aggravated robbery and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, Holt said.

Houston Police Sgt. V.W. West said Cooks pleaded no contest in September 1985 to the aggravated robbery charge. Records indicate he began serving his five-year sentence in December 1986 and was paroled to Harris County on Aug. 4, 1987.

"This is rather indicative of how the criminal justice system is working," Holt said.

Holt and Waldrop asked reporters at the conference not to publish or broadcast any photographs of the three men arrested.

Holt said police have almost 20 witnesses in the case and want to ensure that they are not influenced by photographs.

A 31-year-old man who was charged with capital murder Saturday was released later that day and Holt said the man was no longer believed to be involved in the officer's death.

McCarthy died at Parkland Memorial Hospital around 9 p.m. Friday, four hours after the shootout at Brancato's Warehouse market in West Dallas.

After being shot three times, once in the heart, McCarthy returned fire at the attacker and two others in a car before they sped away.

The suspects' car was found by police Friday night, Holt said.

The death of McCarthy was the seventh in six shootings involving police this year. In addition to the three dead police officers, four civilians have been killed by police this year.

Dukakis, Gephardt lead Democrats

Associated Press

Presidential hopefuls Michael Dukakis and Richard Gephardt are in front in the race for the Democratic nomination in Texas, but the rest of the pack is close behind, a poll shows.

But while the Democratic race in the state is tight, Vice President George Bush has a clear lead in the Republican primary for Texas, the state he calls home. Sen. Bob Dole is a distant second.

The poll, conducted for the Houston Chronicle and the Dallas Morning News, is part of continued tracking of Texas voter preferences in the March 8 Super Tuesday primary.

Among 301 likely Democratic primary voters surveyed, Massachusetts Gov. Dukakis had 22 percent of the support and Missouri Rep. Gephardt had 21 percent. Both posted increases of 4 percent and 6 percent, respectively, from the first three days of surveying, Feb. 21-23.

Jesse Jackson's support dropped from 19 percent in the previous survey to 12 percent in the recent sample. Illinois Sen. Paul Simon garnered 1 percent compared with a previous total of 5 percent and Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore got 10 percent, compared with 12 percent.

Bishop College gets another try at $300,000 gift

DALLAS (AP) — Bishop College has a second chance at $300,000 pledged to the debt-ridden school, but must meet certain financial disclosure demands to get it.

Clifford Sugerman, who anonymously donated the money to the school has again offered the contribution, but has set a 5 p.m. deadline for the school to meet certain conditions.

Sugerman said in the letter he would deposit the funds if Bishop College can provide a satisfactory accounting of the source, form (check or cash) and proof of deposit of donations matching his pledge, and if the college can produce a court order showing that $133,000 withdrawn from Bishop's share of the donations was not used to pay debts before Jan. 12, when he made the initial pledge.

Sugerman, chairman of the Sugerman Foundation, sent a letter to the school's lawyer, T. Glover Roberts, saying he would deposit $300,000 if the demands are met.

Bishop College is trying to reorganize under Chapter 11 bankruptcy rules and is struggling to remain open and to regain its accreditation with the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

Dallas officer critical after skiing accident

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas police officer injured in a skiing accident at Purgatory Resort in Colorado was in critical condition this morning at Parkland Memorial Hospital, officials said.

Cpl. Jimmy Terrell, a 13-year veteran of the force assigned to the tactical section, was brought to Dallas from Colorado aboard a Careflite jet ambulance Sunday.

He was followed from Colorado by family members and four officers in a plane provided by Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot.

Officials at Mercy Medical Hospital in Durango, Colo., said Terrell was suffering from a head injury.

Authorities said Terrell, 37, apparently was skiing alone Friday and hit a tree on the back side of the ski area. He was in Durango with the National Brotherhood of Skiers, which was holding a conference at Tamarron Resort.

Silencing debate lets terrorists win

America appears to be suffering akin to terrorism deja vu.

First, a high-ranking former aide to the defense secretary is kidnapped while on U.N. duty in Lebanon. President Reagan says the United States will do everything possible to "rescue" him, then the State Department explains it was a slip of his tongue.

Second, a federal judge throws out a confession of a Shiite terrorist captured by the FBI. Why? His wrist was broken during his capture, and he got seasick while being interrogated aboard ship for four days.

Finally, the White House lectures presidential candidates not to speak out on terrorism.

Does this give you the Iran-around-in-circles blues? It takes nerve for Reagan, who spoke out forcefully in 1980 against Jimmy Carter's mishandling of the U.S. hostage crisis in Tehran — and got elected partly because of his tough stance — to try to stifle current candidates from speaking out on terrorism.

The problem is, if most of the candidates were to speak out, they probably would come out with the same tub-thumping, bomb-the-hell-out-of-'em rhetoric that plays well on the campaign trail. And plays right into the hands of terrorists.

First of all, why was a colonel who was privy to Pentagon secrets assigned to U.N. peacekeeping forces in Southern Lebanon? Apparently, he requested the post. But the Pentagon should have foreseen the danger to U.S. secrets and prevented him from going.

Second. Why does the president casually talk about rescuing a hostage? This word has a specific meaning to terrorists holding hostages. It means, we're coming to get him. Watch out!

Third, the FBI is proud to have nabbed the first foreign terrorist abroad, in Cyprus, under a new U.S. law that makes it a crime to commit terrorist acts against Americans abroad. But the manner of his arrest was rough. And, in the judge's view, the FBI violated the rights of the accused.

Why do a terrorist's rights matter?

Because freedom is what we are defending in the fight against terrorism. To discard freedoms is to throw out the baby with the bath water.

This administration has combatted terrorism with tough rhetoric and a bombing raid in Libya. But terrorism continues. Hostages remain captive.

The candidates who are vying for president may one day be forced to make life-and-death decisions regarding hostages. We want to hear what they would do to defend this country — and the cherished rights of freedom — from terrorist intimidation. If fear of terrorism silences candidates on this crucial question, terrorists will have won.

Swaggart's failure

A minister, like a police officer, judge or other official dependent on the trust and support of the public, must be a person whose morals and ethics are a notch above those of the general citizen.

To some it may seem unfair, but as Democratic presidential hopeful Gary Hart is finding out and Jimmy Swaggart is beginning to learn, there is a double standard. People who may be less than morally pure themselves still hold their political and religious leaders to a higher order.

Such a double standard is not necessarily a bad thing. For whatever our individual failures, most of us do not put ourselves up on pedestals to be emulated. But that is exactly what Rev. Jimmy Swaggart has done for years, preaching the gospel and propelling himself into such prominence that his televised words reach 100 nations and bring in $142 million annually from followers who believe they must lead the good and pure life as outlined by Rev. Swaggart.

So Jimmy Swaggart ends up in what one observer described as a "crummy" New Orleans motel with a prostitute, and he stepped down from the pulpit after confessing to a "moral failure." It is hard to know whether to laugh or cry.

There are many who will get a good laugh as they look at the predicament of Rev. Swaggart, who not too many months ago denounced fellow evangelist Jim Bakker as "a cancer on the body of Christ" for Bakker's involvement with Jessica Hahn.

But there is nothing to laugh about for the millions of people who have given their spiritual hearts and their money — collars that in many cases they could ill afford — to Rev. Swaggart. There is nothing to laugh about for the thousands of children who have been fed by the income from the Swaggart ministry or for the missionaries whose work has been financed by that ministry.

But those programs that fed the children and other religious activities are now threatened because Rev. Swaggart forgot about those who had placed their trust in him.

Former California State Attorney General Evelle Younger many years ago was involved as district attorney in Los Angeles in a case involving bribery allegations against a public official. Mr. Younger told reporters he would always come down harder on a public official who accepted a bribe than he would on the citizen who gave the bribe. Why? Because, Mr. Younger said, the public official had broken his public trust by taking the bribe.

We should keep in mind the importance of hewing to the public trust when we hear talk of the humility displayed by Rev. Swaggart during his tearful confession. We should also remember that his "moral failure" forced Rev. Swaggart to leave the pulpit only after he was caught coming out of that motel room. He was not morally strong enough to just say no and walk away from the motel. He was not as strong as are many of his followers whose morals and religious beliefs would not have let them go to the motel in the first place.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Feb. 29, the 60th day of 1988. There are 306 days left in the year. Today is Leap Day.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Feb. 29, 1940, the motion picture "Gone with the Wind" won eight Oscars at the Academy Awards ceremony in Los Angeles. The honors included best picture of 1939, best director (Victor Fleming), best actress (Vivien Leigh) and best supporting actress (Hattie McDaniel, the first black performer so honored).

On this date:

In 1736, Ann Lee, founder of the Shaker movement in America, was born in Manchester, England.

In 1792, composer Gioacchino Antonio Rossini was born in Pesaro, Italy.

In 1796, President George Washington proclaimed Jay's Treaty, which settled some outstanding differences with Great Britain, to be in effect.

In 1896, movie director William W. Wellman was born in Brookline, Mass.

In 1904, bandleader Jimmy Dorsey was born in Shenandoah, Penn.

In 1904, President Theodore Roosevelt appointed a seven-member commission to facilitate completion of the Panama Canal.

SDI, related projects facing 'leprosy'

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is on its way out, and with it goes the protection for the president's pet project, the Strategic Defense Initiative, or Star Wars. Pentagon bureaucrats are biting their nails, and SDI is not their only concern.

Jack Anderson

Our sources say that any program that might look like a cousin to SDI could also be in danger if Congress decides to wipe out any vestiges of Star Wars. Military strategists are calling it "the leprosy effect;" anything that has touched SDI is in danger of being tainted.

The Air Force is so worried that it has moved about $1 billion worth of strategic programs out from under the SDI umbrella. It's a paper shuffle that may not work, even though most of the programs were begun before Reagan launched the SDI research in 1983.

Congress has already ordered an investigation of one program that for a time was bundled up with SDI research. It is the Boost Surveillance and Tracking System — an early-warning space sensor originally designed to detect the launch of Soviet missiles. It can also be used to guide our own missiles to bring down Soviet weapons, and that gives it an SDI connection. Congress is worried that BSTS might violate the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

As we have reported in the past, Reagan has danced around the ABM Treaty when it comes to Star Wars. The treaty implies that if research on space-based weapons goes ahead, the Soviets and Americans must sit down for renegotiations.

In 1985, Reagan signed a secret national security directive that said the administration had found new ways to interpret the ABM treaty, but that as long as Congress went along with funding for SDI, there would be no need for any creative interpretation.

With Reagan on the way out, Congress may feel free to use the ABM treaty to whittle away at bits and pieces of SDI, on the grounds that they violate the agreement.

The investigation of BSTS ordered by Congress is seen by some in the Air Force as the first step toward canceling the program because of its possible conflicts with the ABM treaty. Many lawmakers see BSTS as a wolf in sheep's clothing — an SDI program disguised as an early-warning system.

The report for Congress on BSTS is due within in a couple of weeks.

In the meantime, the Air Force is moving ahead with BSTS in spite of what the future may bring. Grumman Space Systems and Lockheed Missile and Space Co. are 11 months into a competitive ground-demonstration program. Their research is supposed to take 34 months and cost $304 million.

The Air Force has a second program that could also feel the hot breath of Congress because of the taint of SDI. That is the Space Surveillance and Tracking System.

While BSTS keeps track of Soviet missiles in the booster phase, SSTS is designed to track the missiles after they are lifted into space. That smacks loudly of Star Wars, but even SSTS has a non-SDI function — general surveillance of space.

BORK ALUMNI — Some of the diverse groups that banded together to fight the Supreme Court nomination of Robert Bork are informally discussing a second coalition. Members of the citizens' group Common Cause are talking to their allies in the Bork fight about how they can force the government to be more fiscally responsible.

President Reagan is wedded to high deficits because he won't sacrifice the defense budget and he won't raise taxes. The alumni of the Bork fight — including consumer groups, women's groups and civil rights organizations — found out how much muscle they have, and now they may try to force Congress to take drastic action. Their program would be based on raising taxes and cutting defense spending and entitlements — federal pensions, Social Security and the like.

Common Cause and its allies want to enlist the help of tax-reform groups and of the retired persons' lobbies, which have a stake in low inflation. Among the problems the reformers would face: The powerful lobbies of the older Americans may be all for cutting defense spending, but would almost certainly be against increased taxes and Medicare payments, or decreased pensions and Social Security.

A broad economic crusade would be a departure for Common Cause and would force some compromise by the other groups. But some of the activists feel that there is simply no other way to reform the economy. They believe that only a dedicated and broad group of outsiders can do what Congress and the president have been unable to do.

WHEN IN ROME — Japan may be the king of the foreign car manufacturers, but Japanese diplomats in this country appear to have at least a slight preference for American autos. A spokeswoman at the Japanese embassy in Washington, D.C., conducted a count for us and reported that Japanese diplomats in the capital and at other consulates in the United States own 266 cars, and that 53 percent of them are American made. Forty-five percent are Japanese and 2 percent are German. The reason, according to the embassy, is that American cars are cheaper. Last year, 64 percent of the new cars sold in this country were American made and 26 percent were Japanese.

Telephone call preceded Brock firing aides

WASHINGTON — Before suddenly arriving in the South to kick two of Sen. Robert J. Dole's conservative advisers off his campaign plane, national campaign manager William Brock had telephoned an order for them to leave but was ignored.

Brock had called Donald Devine telling him to get off the plane. Devine and David Keene, both nationally renowned conservatives, had been invited on board by Dole following his New Hampshire defeat. Brock suddenly appeared in Charlotte, N.C., announced to Keene and Devine "you're finished" and threw their luggage off the plane.

Still uncertain is the fate of Tom Synhorst, a Keene-Devine ally who managed Dole's Iowa triumph. On the plane last week, Synhorst urged Dole to "clean out L Street" — the Brock-run campaign headquarters in Washington. The senator then sent Synhorst to Washington state to monitor the Super Tuesday caucus operation there.

NO-GO GORE

Sen. Terry Sanford of North Carolina, one of Sen. Al Gore's key Southern supporters in an important Super Tuesday state, told him last week he must improve his act.

Sanford, who made a run for president in 1976, urged Gore to put forth a more positive message. More than two weeks before Super Tuesday, Sanford told a friend that Gore had no more than 10 days to get his act together.

Gore's hard-nosed style has yielded diminishing returns. When he attacked Rep. Richard Gephardt at the Dallas debate, there was a demonstrably unfavorable audience reaction. Polls show negative attitudes toward the Tennessee senator after each debate.

SIMON'S MISERY

Despite Gov. Michael Dukakis's private pledge to help pay off Sen. Paul Simon's spiraling campaign debt if he ended his lost presidential candidacy, Simon's worry about offending delegate-candidates pledged to him in the March 15 Illinois primary exceeded his worry about his debt.

Simon-pledged delegates want him in the race so they can attend the Democratic convention. But he may lose the home-state "beauty contest" even if he wins a handful of delegates elected by congressional district. Ignoring the March 8 Super Tuesday contests, Simon's ersatz candidacy is turning off many Democrats who want to vote only for a real-life candidate.

The bow-tie candidate is caught in a dilemma because the embarrassing statewide loss he risks could undermine his 1990 Senate reelection effort. Moreover, with Simon's presidential race effectively over, Jesse Jackson may emerge the surprise winner of the Illinois primary.

BUSH'S TEXTILE BIND

A secret textile industry meeting chaired by South Carolina textile magnate Roger Milliken two weeks ago endorsed a "saturation" television-radio campaign against imports, a campaign that could hurt favored George Bush in three key presidential primaries: South Carolina March 5 and North Carolina and Georgia March 8.

The protectionist campaign neither endorses nor attacks any candidate. But its appeal for an import ban similar to one President Reagan vetoed last year squeezes the vice president. If he goes along he will be directly at odds with Ronald Reagan.

Pat Robertson is a strong backer of the proposed new law and Sen. Robert Dole endorsed it this week. With the media buy aimed at primary voters, Bush is on the defensive on an issue of pocket-book concern to a half-million workers tied to the textile industry in the three states.

PAT'S PONY

A possible reason why Pat Robertson garbled his message on Cuban missiles in the last New Hampshire debate was his inability to consult the notes he had with him.

The former religious broadcaster brought a thick cardboard file to the debate but was told he could not use it. Robertson was seen tucking the file into the seat of his pants. One opponent who slapped Robertson on the back was surprised at his encounter with the cardboard folder.

Told of this, moderator Edwin Newman issued an unscheduled warning that no candidate could use more than one card of notes. If indeed he had sequestered the file, Robertson made no attempt to use it and, inadequately briefed, committed his gaffe about missiles in Cuba.

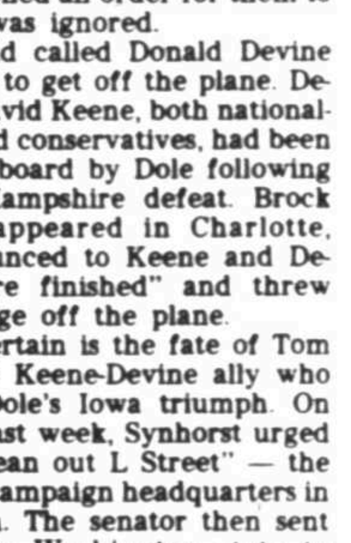
LEWIS GRIZZARD

For Dukakis being Southern's simply training!

Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis was still enjoying his victory in the New Hampshire Democratic presidential primary when an aide called him into a Super Tuesday strategy session.



Grizzard

Super Tuesday, March 8, will see 20 states hold presidential contests. Fourteen of these states are in the Deep South.

"Mike," began one of his aides, "do you know much about the Deep South?"

"No," the New Englander replied, "but I did see 'To Kill a Mockingbird' twice. I was very impressed with Robert Duvall's Boo Radley."

"Excellent," the aide said. "Do you also know campaigning in the South will be much different than in New England?"

"In what way?" Governor Dukakis asked.

"Well, I don't know much about the Deep South, either," the aide answered, "but I've heard a lot of these people don't wear shoes and walk around babbling such things as 'sho-nuff' and 'bless yo' heart.'"

"How quaint," said the governor.

"That's not all," the aide went on, "they have some very strange customs with which you are not going to be familiar."

"Could you be more specific, old boy."

"They eat strange foods. While you are hunting for voters in the South, you are likely to be offered some native dishes such as grits."

"Grits have always puzzled me," said the candidate. "Is it 'Grits are?' or 'Grits is?'"

"'Am' sir," answered the aide. "It's 'Grits am.'"

"I'll be able to handle that," said Dukakis. "I'll simply say, 'These grits sho-nuff am good.'"

"Perfect," said the aide. "We've also got to do something about your appearance. Southerners don't dress like we do."

"They don't?"

"No, we'll have to get you a cap with the name of a chewing tobacco company or a heavy machinery manufacturer on the front.

"If we could also find you a shirt with your name sewn over the left pocket, that would be good too. And there's one other thing."

"What's that?" asked Dukakis.

"It's your name. We think we can really make some headway against Gore if we can introduce you as 'Mike (Bubba) Dukakis.'"

"That's fine."

"We also expect you to be able to converse with Southerners on topics that are most important to them."

"The trade imbalance?"

"No. College football and country music. You must learn to say, 'How 'bout them Dawgs.'"

"'Dahgs?'"

"No. Watch my mouth. It's 'daawgs' as in 'haawgs' and 'fraawgs.'"

"'Haahgs,'" said the New England politician.

"Don't worry about it, we'll try again later," said the aide.

"Just remember when you're talking to a Southerner occasionally to throw in names like Merle Haggard, George Jones and Bear Bryant and you'll be OK."

"Well, bless yo' daahg, Bubba," said the governor. "I think I've got it."

"Should we celebrate, sir?" asked the aide.

"Of course. A Courvoisier with a little branch water for me," laughed the governor, feeling more Southern by the minute.

Tutu, other church leaders arrested

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Police today arrested Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu and other church leaders as they marched toward Parliament with a petition protesting the government's crackdown on anti-apartheid organizations.

After Tutu and the other clergymen were placed in police vehicles and arrested on charges of staging an illegal gathering, police fired water cannons at about 70 other protesters who were sitting on the sidewalk.

The protesters and members of the press were taken to a police station, then released with a warning that charges would be brought against them if they staged a similar demonstration.

The clergymen carried a petition, addressed to President P.W. Botha and Parliament, saying: "We leaders of a number of South African churches have come to Parliament today to witness and pray in a time of crisis outside the buildings in which you make important decisions affecting the lives of millions of South Africans who belong to our churches."

The protesters walked a few yards toward Parliament from St. George's Cathedral, the main Anglican church in downtown Cape Town.

In a meeting at St. George's before the march, Tutu and other ministers had declared the churches would lead protests against the government's anti-apartheid policies because 18 major black opposition groups had been banned last week from all political activity.

Tutu, winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, marched in front of the procession, along with the Rev. Allan Boesak, president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches; the Rev. Frank Chikane, general-secretary of the South African Council of Churches; the Rev. Khoza Mgojo, past president of the Methodist Church, and Stephen Naidoo, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Cape Town.

Tutu warned those at the service that they might be tear-gassed, sprayed with water cannons or arrested, although the church leaders said they had informed the government about the march.

The march proceeded with clergymen at the end of each row and lay people in the middle. As they approached the Parliament buildings, they were met by about 50 policemen who linked arms to form a human barrier across the road.

The police told the crowd they were gathering illegally, then began leading away the church leaders.

The Rev. Sid Luckett, head of the Anglican Board of Social Responsibility, led the rest of the crowd to the police vehicles and they sat down on the sidewalk.

Police sprayed the seated protesters with water cannons, but they stayed in place, and were then put into police vehicles as they recited The Lord's Prayer. Police also took members of the press into custody.

Before starting the march, Tutu told the service, "We have gathered here as an active witness and out of protest against what the South African government did last week."

Last Wednesday the government banned the United Democratic Front, the nation's largest anti-apartheid organization, and 17 other major black opposition groups from conducting any political activity.

Church groups weren't included in the crackdown and theoretically still were free to engage in resistance campaigns, but most forms of peaceful protest are still banned.

Tutu had called the new regulations "a declaration of war against the people." He and other church leaders had pledged the churches would begin to conduct some of the protest campaigns that had been organized by the banned groups.

Jewish settler held in Arabs' shooting deaths

JERUSALEM (AP) — Police arrested a Jewish settler in connection with the shooting deaths of two Arabs in the West Bank, and Israeli Cabinet ministers suggested closing the occupied lands to the media.

The settler, from Neve Tzuf, was arrested Sunday, according to Adi Gonen, national police spokesman. The man is suspected of killing two Palestinians from the neighboring village of Abud after villagers blocked the main road on Saturday, Gonen said today.

The army today charged three soldiers, including a sergeant-major, with aggravated assault and brutality for allegedly burying alive four Palestinians in the West Bank village of Kfar Salem, an army spokesman said.

The incident occurred Feb. 5 after troops broke up a stone-throwing demonstration in the village. The Arabs escaped.

The soldiers' names were not released. It was the first known case of a soldier facing serious criminal charges related to the unrest in the occupied lands, although other soldiers have been disciplined for using excessive force.

The army also confirmed it was investigating charges that a soldier shot and killed a Palestinian demonstrator in cold blood after seizing him. The spokesman said the incident occurred in the Gaza Strip last month.

In another development, an Israeli senior commander on Sunday made his officers watch CBS television footage showing four soldiers beating two Palestinians for nearly 40 minutes last week.

Excerpts of the footage showed the soldiers bent over the Arabs, who were lying on the ground with their hands tied behind their backs. The soldiers kicked the Arabs in the head and chest, then picked up fist-sized rocks and smashed them on the arms and legs, trying to break bones.

"We have to make sure that we don't become an army of rabble," Maj. Gen. Amram Mitzna, commander of Israeli troops in the West Bank, told army radio.

The four soldiers accused in the beatings near Nablus were released from custody today, army radio said. Their case went to the military prosecutors' office, where it will be decided what steps to take against them, it said.

In Jerusalem, police today safely detonated a bomb planted at the entrance to a large supermarket in Ramat Eshkol, one of the city's northern Jewish neighborhoods, police spokesman Rafi Levi said. Levy said a passerby discovered the bomb.

During a debate of Israel's 24-member Cabinet on Sunday, Transportation Minister Chaim Corfu and Labor and Social Affairs Minister Moshe Katzav proposed barring reporters from the West Bank and Gaza. No decision was made.

"I've reached a conclusion that media presence creates riots...so in order to subdue the riots or stop them completely it's better that the media would not be present," Katzav told the army radio.

There was scattered violence in the occupied lands on Sunday.

In Jerusalem's Old City, a firebomb was hurled at night close to the house of Trade and Industry Minister Ariel Sharon, but there were no injuries or damage, Israel radio reported.

The former defense minister and hard-line member of the right-wing Likud bloc moved into the Arab quarter of the Old City in December despite criticism that it could provoke more Palestinian unrest.

Israel also faced attacks Sunday on its northern border. The navy sank a kayak carrying Palestinian guerrillas on their way to carry out an attack in Israel, killing two people aboard.

Three other guerrillas were killed in south Lèbanon in an attack on an outpost manned by pro-Israeli militiamen at Beit Yahoun near the Israeli border. Four Israeli-backed militiamen were wounded.

The latest fatalities came as U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz pursued his Middle East shuttle.

Shultz visited Cairo on Sunday, where his peace plan received support from President Hosni Mubarak. Shultz then returned to Israel for more meetings with Israeli officials Sunday night and this morning before flying to Jordan.

Iran says two missiles crash into Iraqi capital

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran said it fired three missiles into the Iraqi capital of Baghdad before dawn today. Iraq said only two hit, crashing into separate residential districts and killing many civilians.

Baghdad's official Iraqi News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, quoted a military spokesman as saying Iranian artillery also shelled residential areas of the embattled southern port of Basra and the border town of Khanaqin, 80 miles northeast of Baghdad during the night. He made no mention of casualties.

It was the third straight day of attacks on cities and industrial centers by the two Persian Gulf war foes, beginning when Iraqi warplanes bombed Tehran on Saturday for the first time in months.

The attacks heightened fears that the two belligerents have begun another round of the so-called "war of the cities" that started in March 1985.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, said Revolutionary Guards gunners fired the three surface-to-surface missiles at the headquarters of Iraq's state-run television and radio network and "two military targets" in Baghdad.

IRNA said the Iranians fired the missiles in retaliation for Iraqi air raids "on non-military areas" in Tehran, the Kurdish city of Saqqez in northwest Iran, Dezful in southwest Khuzestan province, and the western city of Hamadan in recent days.

It said 28 civilians were killed in those raids, with scores more wounded.

The communique warned "the Iraqi government that its renewed attacks on civilian areas will not go unanswered," IRNA reported.

Baghdad Radio did not identify the Baghdad residential districts it said were hit by the missiles, believed to be Soviet-made, Scud-B weapons supplied to Iran by Libya and Syria.

The explosions were heard across the city of 5 million.

"Many Iraqis were killed, among them women, children and old people. Many more were wounded and many houses were destroyed," the communique said. No exact casualty figures were given.

The radio quoted an unidentified military spokesman as warning: "All Iranian cities are now targets for our air and missile forces until further notice. The losers in the end will be the rulers in Tehran."

The missiles were the first to hit the Iraqi capital since Nov. 8. The Iranians have fired eight missiles into the city since the U.N. Security Council called for a cease-fire in the 7-year-old war on July 20 last year.

Altogether, Iran has fired 37 missiles into Baghdad since March 1985, when the two sides began the "war of the cities."

Thousands of civilians on both sides have been killed or wounded in the intermittent campaigns involving air raids, missiles and long-range artillery bombardments. In one of the worst missile attacks, more than 30 children were killed and more than 100 wounded when their school was hit Oct. 13.

Tehran's War Information Headquarters said Iranian warplanes on Sunday bombed a petrochemical plant in the southern Iraqi port of Basra, oil installations in Abul Khasib in the southeast and a bridge linking Iraq with Umm Rassas island in the Shatt al-Arab waterway.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Mexicans demonstrate against museum exhibit

MEXICO CITY (AP) — An estimated 100,000 people demonstrated peacefully Sunday to protest an art exhibition in which a print of Marilyn Monroe's face was imposed on a picture of the Virgin of Guadalupe, Mexico's patron saint.

The demonstration was organized by four Roman Catholic religious organizations and the people gathered in the capital's main Zocalo Square. They then marched five miles to the Basilica at La Villa, where an image of the Virgin of Guadalupe is enshrined.

Many marchers carried signs denouncing the Museum of Modern Art exhibition.

On Jan. 23, about 1,000 people chanting "Long live Christ the king!" stormed the museum in the city's central Chapultepec Park and authorities closed the exhibit by painter Rolando de la Rosa.

In one work, de la Rosa, 36, superimposed the face of the late actress Marilyn Monroe on an image of the Virgin of Guadalupe. In another, styled after Leonardo da Vinci's "Last Supper," Jesus Christ had the face of the late Mexican actor and singer Pedro Infante. In "The Sacred Family," the baby Jesus was replaced by a soccer ball.

Museum director Jorge Alberto Manrique, who had criticized the closing of the exhibition, resigned last Thursday.

More than 100 Mexican artists and intellectuals called for his reinstatement.

Italian workers strike

ROME (AP) — Travelers were frustrated Sunday by a new wave of airport and railway personnel strikes, while Italians had few newspapers to read about their Olympic skiing hero Alberto Tomba.

Alitalia, Italy's state-run airline, canceled hundreds of flights to and from Rome's airports because of a 24-hour strike by ground personnel. It was the latest in a series of walkouts to protest lack of progress in contract renewal negotiations. Talks are to resume today.

Alitalia's intercontinental flights and its connections to Italy's islands operated normally, as did flights by other airlines. Passengers, however, had a long wait for their baggage.

Long-distance train service from Rome's main station suffered disruptions from a 24-hour strike by railway employees that started at 9 p.m.

Italy's major daily newspapers did not publish Sunday as a result of a 48-hour nationwide walkout by journalists protesting stalemated contract talks.

Television and radio ran limited news broadcasts Sunday without film reports and canceled today's newscasts.

The journalists' strike prevented most Italians from reading about the exploits of Tomba, who won his second Olympic gold medal Saturday in alpine skiing.

Jet returns to London

LONDON (AP) — A British Airways jumbo jet carrying 281 passengers to the United States Sunday returned to Britain and made an emergency landing because its wing slats malfunctioned, an airline spokesman said.

A piece of a wing flap fell from the jet as it landed at Heathrow airport and two runways were closed temporarily for inspection but no debris was found, according to Press Association, the British domestic news agency.

Shortly into the flight the pilot of the Boeing 747 found he could not retract the slats on one wing, said the spokesman.

The airline spokesman said the pilot dumped the aircraft's fuel and returned to London about an hour later.

"The wing slats would not go back in but the problem would not have caused any serious control difficulties," he said. "...There was no danger and the aircraft made a perfectly normal landing."

Tass reports rioting

MOSCOW (AP) — Rioting broke out in Sumgait, a city on the Caspian Sea in the Soviet Republic of Azerbaidzhan, Tass reported today.

The official Soviet news agency said disturbances were provoked by "a group of hooligans," and "rampage and violence followed."

There was no immediate indication whether the incident was linked to ethnic tensions between Azeris and Armenians that sparked mass demonstrations in Armenia and a neighboring region that is part of Azerbaidzhan.

Tass said: "Measures have been adopted to normalize the situation in the city and safeguard discipline and public order."

Some farmers 'double their pleasure' with irrigation subsidies

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government is paying about $203 million a year in irrigation subsidies in the West for crops that also receive price supports or other farm subsidies, according to the first estimate of the double subsidy ever made by the Bureau of Reclamation.

The bureau also calculated its total 1986 subsidy to farmers as $534 million, about $54 an acre.

The calculations have been given to Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., chairman of the water and power subcommittee of the House Interior Committee, who conducted hearings on the double-subsidy issue last May and October.

Miller has been a skeptic of reclamation projects and has sponsored legislation, opposed by the bureau, to make farmers eventually pay the full cost of water used to irrigate crops that get other subsidies.

In a letter to Miller, Wayne Marchant, deputy assistant secretary of interior for water and science, defended the irrigation subsidies.

"The irrigation subsidy reported here is responsible for much of the current character of the western United States," Marchant said. "Without the support for development of irrigation established by Congress, much of the agricultural development in the West, especially in California, would not have occurred."

He said the projects also have provided important electricity and recreational benefits.

But the bureau's own calculations also show that those benefits have come at a substantial price.

The bureau provides all or part of the irrigation of 9.9 million acres on 150,300 farms in 17 states. Crops subsidized in the farm program were grown on 5.7 million acres.

Overall water revenues averaged only $19 million a year for 1983, 1984 and 1985, while irrigation subsidies just on the subsidized crops were estimated at $203 million a year.

Since the bureau was created in 1902 through 1986, the total irrigation subsidy was estimated at $9.8 billion, calculated in 1986 dollars.

Farmers are supposed to pay for construction, operation and maintenance of the irrigation systems. But Congress often has specified that construction repayments be made at zero interest or a rate well below the Treasury rate — what it costs the government to borrow.

Critics say the bureau has devised other subsidies as well, persuading Congress to allocate a too-small share of a project's cost to irrigation, and allowing farmers to postpone capital repayments until a project is complete even though their part may be delivering water.

Dukakis, Gephardt to skip Tennessee debate

Associated Press

Michael Dukakis and Richard Gephardt will skip next Sunday's pre-Super Tuesday Democratic debate in rival Albert Gore Jr.'s home state, aides said today as both Democrats and Republicans began final efforts before the biggest delegate day of the primary season.

Meanwhile, Massachusetts Gov. Dukakis was celebrating another New England victory, in Maine, saying he will "surprise some people in the South" next week on Super Tuesday. Vice President George Bush claimed victory in Maine on the GOP side.

The GOP presidential hopefuls split up today after criticizing each other on taxes and trade in a debate Sunday in Atlanta.

Pat Robertson, in Jacksonville, Fla., told about 500 people today, "I've got a feeling we're going to win in Florida and we're going to win in the South...We've got one week to the most crucial election, I believe, in the history of America, certainly this century and maybe since its beginning."

Dukakis and Gephardt, the winners of the major Democratic contests so far, skipped a Democratic debate in Houston Sunday. And aides said today they wouldn't show up for the one next weekend in Nashville either.

Gephardt, who had said last October he would participate in the debate, sent word last week that he would not, noting that it was to be in Gore's home state, said Janice Kaplan, a spokeswoman for the League of Women Voters' presidential debates.

It was a son of the South, Jesse Jackson, who pulled the weekend's surprise, finishing a strong second to Dukakis in the Maine Democratic caucuses on Sunday.

With Super Tuesday looming barely a week away, Republican Jack Kemp sought to pump up his fading campaign with direct attacks on Bush and Senate GOP leader Bob Dole, saying they will not be true to Ronald Reagan's legacy.

"They sound alike. They talk alike. They've supported every single tax increase over the last eight years," Kemp said in a testy GOP debate Sunday in Atlanta. "If they're nominated, the Reagan revolution is over, gone, dead."

Harsh rhetoric did not dim the good news from Maine for Bush and Dukakis.

Bush's campaign claimed victory in the GOP caucuses on Sunday. With no official count available, his campaign gave out figures saying he more than doubled his rivals' totals in the city and town meetings.

On the Democratic side, Dukakis won the Maine caucuses easily, relying on a strong organization and his neighborly ties. He took better than 40 percent of the delegates to the state convention and at least 10 national convention delegates.

"Today's victory gives our national campaign another push towards success on Super Tuesday," Dukakis said.

Earlier, he told a crowd in Maryland — where he hopes to do well on March 8: "You're an important Super Tuesday state...I think we're going to surprise some people in the South."

Dukakis' win was expected. Jackson's strong second-place showing was not.

The black civil rights leader campaigned relatively little in the state, but showed strength in many parts of the New England countryside to win nearly a third of the vote. A block of uncommitted delegates was in third place with the rest of the Democratic field trailing.

Both Dukakis and Bush hoped to put another victory in their column on Tuesday, when the non-binding Vermont primaries are scheduled.

The Democratic candidates gather for another pre-March 8 debate tonight in Williamsburg, Va., before the members of the Democratic Leadership Council. It was DLC members who put together the idea of a southern regional primary and then pushed state legislatures across the region to move their primaries to the early March date.

The Republicans' debate Sunday in Atlanta may be their last full-scale confrontation before Super Tuesday.

Bush, who is skipping the League of Women Voters' debate next Sunday in Nashville, told his three rivals that intra-party sniping is not useful.

Jimmy Swaggart says love, prayers have sustained him

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart says he would not have survived a week of church investigations and allegations of immoral conduct had it not been for the support of members of all religious groups.

During a brief appearance Sunday before his congregation at the Jimmy Swaggart World Ministries center, Swaggart thanked about 4,000 worshipers for their backing.

"I'll never have the words to express to you how much that I care, my concern, for you and my thanksgiving. If it hadn't been for you, we would not have made it. It's just that plain and simple," said Swaggart.

Swaggart, who last week confessed to unspecified sins, reportedly paid a prostitute to pose naked and tried to make a deal with a minister who confronted him about it.

Although Swaggart again did not specify his sin, he said he had received the love and prayers of members of various denominations and religious groups.

"That is what is so beautiful about it...not only Pentecostal, but Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Lutherans and Catholic...Even my Moslem friends, I'm serious, have called and said 'We love you. We pray for you,'" Swaggart said.

Swaggart, who on Saturday received support and sympathy from presidential candidate Pat Robertson, a former television evangelist, said his worldwide ministry would continue.

"First of all, this ministry belongs to God. Secondly, this ministry will continue. And last, but certainly not least, this ministry will be what he wants it to be," Swaggart said.

Making only brief reference to action the Assemblies of God denomination has taken against him, Swaggart said he would spend the next three months away from the pulpit receiving "some meat of the word."

"To be frank with you, I haven't been fed," Swaggart said in a voice toned down sharply from his usual fire-and-brimstone style. "I don't know when it's been. To just be fed. I would get a little here and a little there. Over the next three months, I'm going to be fed."

Louisiana church officials have recommended barring Swaggart from preaching for three months, but national denomination officials asked for reconsideration after receiving hundreds of calls protesting the penalty as too lenient.

A Grave Matter

A Historical Look At Fairview Cemetery

The caretaker and two gravediggers can't hazard a guess at the number of people buried at Fairview Cemtery, Midland's first final resting place.

Midland County Treasurer Dee Thompson said the records show about 11,000 — one-tenth of the city's current population — call Fairview "home."

But in the cemetery's initial years, before the turn of the century, records weren't kept and plots were given to families.

"There's probably a lot more out there...it's sad," said Ms. Thompson. The county treasurer added she's never been able find the grave of a close friend's grandfather either, because it wasn't recorded.

Venturing across the Fairview's 40 acres of cedar trees, elm trees and tombstones one may stumble across many facets of state history.

Near the entrance is a memorial to W.B. Anglin, a fallen Texas Ranger who was the last Central West Texan to be killed in 1879 by a Commanche Indian several feet from his memorial marker.

Traveling northwesterly, one passes the grave of Minerva Hanks Gates, one of the first citizens of the Republic of Texas and a pioneer of Austin's first colony who died in 1891.

Services for Richard Knox of Midland are scheduled for 3 p.m. Tuesday at the Ellis Funeral Home chapel. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park. He died Sunday afternoon at a Midland hospital.

Edna E. Day

Services for Edna E. Day were scheduled for 3 p.m. today at the Glass Chapel of the First United Methodist Church. Burial was to follow at Resthaven Memorial Park.

Pallbearers were to be members of the church's McRaynolds Bible Class and include A.J. Vogel, T.J. Brown, Rufus Emmons, Marvin McCree, R.O. Smith and D.L. Coleman.

Death row inmates hope high court's ruling on case will affect them

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A rape-murder case nearly 13 years old will be the focus Tuesday of a U.S. Supreme Court review that many inmates see as a ticket off death row.

"In my opinion, it will affect everybody," said Jim Vanderbilt, who has spent more than 11 years on Texas' death row for the 1975 slaying of an Amarillo teen-ager. "We will have commutation of everybody."

Lawyers for the state and for Donald Gene Franklin will present arguments to the high court on the constitutionality of a Texas statute that limits consideration by a jury of mitigating circumstances that could benefit a defendant.

Since October, when the court agreed to hear the case, dozens of death-row inmates in Texas, whose 27 executions in the last six years are the most in any state since executions resumed in 1977, have attached Franklin's arguments to their own in efforts to win stays.

"It's an issue that could potentially affect everybody on death (row) in Texas," said Richard H. Burr III, coordinator of the death penalty project of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund Inc. in New York. "I think probably everybody now is raising the issue and if they're not, they should be."

Franklin, 36, who has had three trials and four execution dates, blamed the abduction, rape and stabbing death of 27-year-old Mary Margaret Moran on a friend who used his car.

Franklin was arrested hours after the July 1975 abduction but refused to say where the missing San Antonio nurse was. Search parties combed San Antonio, but it took four days to find her bleeding in a bed of insects, suffering from loss of blood and irreversible shock. She died the next day.

Mark Stevens, who is representing Franklin before the high court, said jurors should have had doubt about Franklin's guilt because of circumstantial evidence in the case.

Stevens also said Franklin, at the time of the last trial, had caused no disciplinary problems while in prison, "which goes to show among other things, he shouldn't be executed."

Stevens contends although such mitigating circumstances are presented at the punishment phase of a trial, the jury is given no guidance as to how heavily to weigh them.

Franklin's trial attorneys suggested a jury charge that spelled out ways to handle mitigating circumstances. The judge refused to include it in his instructions to the jury, which determined Franklin should die. He has been on death row since 1982.

A Texas jury now has these questions to consider before deciding a person convicted of capital murder should be executed: whether the defendant's act was deliberate and with the expectation death would result; whether the defendant is likely to commit a future violent act; whether the victim may have provoked the attack and whether the response by the defendant was reasonable.

Abducted girl's mother ecstatic at girl's return

FORT WORTH (AP) — The mother of a teen-age girl who was abducted and severely beaten with stones and tree limbs says she thought she would never see her daughter again.

"I'm ecstatic," said the mother. "I really do think it's a miracle...I thought she was dead."

The 13-year-old girl was discovered about 7 p.m. Saturday in a culvert in Fort Worth. She had been kidnapped from a pizza parlor parking lot Friday night and was missing for nearly 24 hours.

The teen-ager was in stable condition at Fort Worth Children's Hospital Sunday. The girl suffered multiple cuts, including scalp wounds and exposure. A 16-year-old boy was being held Sunday at a juvenile detention center in connection with the abduction.

Fort Worth police Sgt. Mark Krey said tests to determine whether the girl had been sexually assaulted were not complete Sunday.

The girl and two boys, ages 12 and 13, were with several other students in the parking lot of a Fort Worth pizza parlor about 10 p.m. Friday.

The two boys told police a man pulled up and accused the three of damaging his car. He then pushed them into his car and told them he was a plainclothes police officer and was taking them to the juvenile detention center, the boys told police.

AIDS victim may have been killer, paper says

DALLAS (AP) — A 51-year-old AIDS victim may have been responsible for an East Texas murder for which Kerry Max Cook has been sent to death row, The Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story.

Cook, 31, whose conviction is believed to have taken longer to appeal than any other death penalty case in the nation, is scheduled to have an execution date set Wednesday.

However, The News reported Sunday that an investigation of Cook's 1977 capital murder conviction revealed information indicating that Cook may not have committed the crime, or was not solely responsible for it.

Cook was convicted in the mutilation-slaying of Linda Jo Edwards of Tyler.

But the newspaper reported new information "strongly" suggests that another man — who police say they had considered a suspect in the crime — may have been involved in the murder.

A lawyer involved in the case indicated that the man who died of AIDS in Dallas last September matched the eyewitness description of the assailant that Ms. Edward's roomate gave police the day after the murder.

At Cook's trial, the man testified he and Cook had sex the evening of the murder in the same apartment complex where the victim was staying.

The 21-year-old Ms. Edwards was beaten in the face with a plaster statue and then stabbed 20 to 30 times with a 10-inch vegetable knife and scissors.

Prosecutors claimed Cook killed Ms. Edwards in a fit of sexual rage and then mutilated her, imitating a scene in a movie he saw that night.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals in December upheld Cook's conviction and death sentence in an 8-1 ruling. The appeal had been pending for eight years.

Judge Sam Houston Clinton, who cast the lone dissenting vote, wrote the evidence in Cook's trial "may be sufficient when one picks and chooses certain items, but a rational reviewer of all facts is left with serious questions whether a rational trier of fact could find guilt beyond a reasonable doubt."

Cook, on death row at the Texas Department of Corrections Ellis I Unit, maintains his innocence and says he doesn't know who killed Ms. Edwards.

Cook was arrested 56 days after Ms. Edwards' body was discovered. Police arrested him on the basis of a psychological profile. His roommate also told police Cook had shown his nephews a window at the complex through which Cook said he watched a woman disrobe. The window was Ms. Edwards' and had on it a fingerprint that matched Cook's.

But none of the fingerprints inside belonged to Cook; at least five prints could not be identified. Paula Wiladene Rudolph, Ms. Edward's roommate, saw a man at the doorway of the victim's bedroom but the man she described to police was silver-haired. At the time, Cook's hair was jet black.

Prosecutors and Texas Rangers told the newspaper they suspected the older man's involvement in the murder but never had anything solid to connect him.

The newspaper said Cook's defense team called just four witnesses in Cook's defense and were limited by a lack of money and resources.

The News reported that a review of trial evidence shows the state's case against Cook consisted largely of circumstantial, prejudicial, and questionable evidence.

GRAVES

Near Mrs. Gates there rests 2nd Lt. John S. Hyatt, a former Georgian Confederate soldier who died in 1923 after coming to rest in Midland during the post-Civil War days.

Union soldiers are buried there as well, but not anywhere near Hyatt.

As well, fallen warriors from the Mexican War, World War I, World War II and Korean War rest at Fairview.

Fairview, then a 10-acre piece of land, was donated at the first meeting of the Midland County Commissioners Aug. 10, 1885, by William and Ada Pyle.

Not far from the mausoleum where the Pyles are buried, is a 30-foot tall tower of peach-colored marble standing in their honor and erected by their children in the 1950s.

Virtually every strata of Midland's community is represented at Fairview.

A still-unidentified infant found dead in 1987 lodged between two adjoining hotel room doors is buried in the baby section.

The only marker to identify the child's grave is a plastic nameplate the funeral home left.

In contrast, ornate huge markers stake out the territories where settlers from Midland's most philanthropic families, such as the Scharbauers, Cowdens, Holts and Wadleys, rest.

Some areas at Fairview bear plots covered with brightly colored silk flowers.

Others have enclosed cases of plaster busts of Jesus Christ or the Virgin Mary at the head of the grave.

Perhaps lacking the funds to buy a tombstone, some made wooden crosses and spelled the family name out with thumb tacks or placed a cinder block with a plastic flower stuck in the holes as a reminder of where their loved one is buried.

In the olden days, persons were buried at Fairview who'd lived in faraway West Texas cities because perhaps because the cemetery was the closest to their towns, said caretaker Copper Daugherty, 61.

Daugherty, who worked in the oil patch before coming to Fairview two years ago, said he doesn't want the impression to be made that the cemetery is a "pauper's" cemetery just because the county runs it.

There is only one other cemetery in Midland, Resthaven, which opened in January 1949.

Until that time, if one wanted to be buried in Midland, it had to be at Fairview. The upper echelon of Midland's community who had done so in the past still lay their loved ones to rest at the cemetery.

Daugherty said his job is interesting and one of helping people.

"A couple came out the other day to ask if Bob King was buried out here," the caretaker remembered.

"I said no, but asked if they meant Billy Bob King. The lady said, 'Did you know my daddy?' and I told her that I'd gone to school with him," Daugherty said.

David Zarte, 25, helps dig graves. It takes about 45 minutes to dig the six-foot by four-foot plot with a mechanical backhoe.

Zarte said he also looked at the job as one of "really getting to help the people."

"They come out and want to find someone. People can get lost out here."

Helping people is a positive experience for him, not depressing when one thinks of staying in a cemetery all day, the caretaker said.

"What's depressing is when you have a person die and there's no family. The funeral home just brings them out and that's it. Or a baby dying...or young people who commit suicide. That's sad."

Daugherty said he and his wife, Faye, have plots picked out for when they pass away.

"This will be my last job," Daugherty said.

"But, I'm just tickled to death with it."

Ector County officers probe death of unidentified man

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Ector County Sheriff's investigators today continued to investigate the death of an unidentified man who was shot and apparently dumped on a pile of trash that was set on fire.

Sheriff's Office spokesman Lt. Jerry Gray said the Odessa Fire Department responded to the blaze in the 7500 block of Andrews Highway about 9 p.m. Sunday.

After arriving on the scene, fireman extinguished the blaze at the back of a vacant lot and found the unidentified man's body.

Ector County Deputies Mike Mitchell and Lt. Jeff Schwende are investigating the death as a homocide, Gray said. The man apparently had been shot once with a shotgun in the right back shoulder blade, then dumped on the pile of trash and set on fire.

While the body was badly burned, the man appeared to be a white male, Gray said.

No identification was found on the body.

Justice of the Peace Julian Pressly pronounced the man dead at the scene and ordered an autopsy.

The vacant lot at 7517 Andrews Highway is located between Tootsie's Lounge and BJ's Honkytonk.

Jury may probe petition forgeries

HOUSTON (AP) — An official in the Harris County district attorney's office says a grand jury will be asked to investigate forgeries found on petitions of Republican presidential candidates.

However, Bill Taylor, head of the district attorney's special-crimes division, would not confirm the targets of the investigation or elaborate.

But the Houston Chronicle quoted a source Saturday who said Harris County prosecutors will seek misdemeanor indictments against Rocky Mountain, a partner in Southern Political Consulting.

Two Houston teen-agers have said Mountain directed them to forge signatures on petitions for the March 8 Texas primary for former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont, who has since dropped out of the race.

Mountain, who has denied wrongdoing, could not be reached for comment but the firm's president, Kevin Burnette, said Mountain and the firm would plead innocent to any charges.

Telephone numbers for Mountain and Burnette have been disconnected and they could not be reached for comment by The Associated Press Sunday.

Charges also are being considered against the firm as a corporation, the sources said.

SPC was hired by the campaigns of Robert Dole, du Pont and Alexander Haig to gather the 5,000 signatures needed to get their names on the Texas ballot.

Numerous forgeries were discovered on their petitions as well as those of Rep. Jack Kemp, whose campaign did not use SPC.

Burnette says political foes of his firm have fanned the controversy and that "the presidential campaigns were fully aware of everything done in relation to the presidential petitions." He declined to elaborate.

Annual Charity Ball presented

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

One of the world's most ancient cultures met its match in Texas chic Saturday night at the Junior League of Midland Inc.'s 37th Annual Charity Ball, themed "Mysteries of the Nile." Pyramids and sphinxes adorned the Petroleum Club as approximately 800 party goers — who themselves were adorned in glittering black-tie style — gathered to have a good time for a good cause.

The League hopes to raise about $70,000 from the fund-raiser, according to Jan O'Neill, chairman of the ball. Money raised by the event will benefit the League's community service projects, including audio-visual screening, Bedside Buddies, Children's Dental Clinic, Directory of Community Services, Exploratory Experiences, Haley Library docents, Hearthstone, Junior League Singers, Kids On The Block, pernital clinic, STAND TALL and Teen Court.

Ruth Bell, president of Junior League, said the organization also has new projects planned, including, "Agency Placement, where we loan our volunteers out to existing community agencies," and "Arkansaw Bear, a play that deals with helping children understand about death and dying. That's done in coalition with Hospice and Midland Community Theatre."

The buffet dinner included egg rolls, chicken kabobs, corned beef, smoked salmon, fruit, beef tips with rice, vegetables and dip, cheeses carved in the shapes of pyramids and various desserts. Serving tables were decorated with Egyptian statues carved from ice. Table centerpieces were pyramids — there were even cakes in the shapes of pyramids.

Eclipse, from Houston, and Master Peace, from Lubbock, provided music for dancing both upstairs and downstairs. (The music, however, was more 20th century than the decor.)

Along with Chairman Mrs. O'Neill, Mrs. Trey Grafa, Mrs. Russell L. Freeman and Mrs. Charles N. Wallace Jr. were members of the Charity Ball committee.

Special sponsors of the event were Mr. and Mrs. Jack E. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Roy E. Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr., Lynn D. Durham, First RepublicBank Midland, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Pevehouse and Mr. and Mrs. W.E. Tally.

Sponsors were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Allen Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Evans Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert H. Blankinship, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Boles, Mr. and Mrs. G.W. Brock, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Franklin, Mr. and Mrs. Carl F. Lawrence, M. Elizabeth Locker, Frances Hill Metcalfe, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Donald E. JUDGE FOR YOURSELF

Who is the ONLY QUALIFIED CANDIDATE for District Judge?

District Judges have to be courtroom experts. And the only way to become an expert is to personally try cases - either as a Presiding Judge or as Trial Lawyer. THERE IS SIMPLY NO SUBSTITUTE FOR CONTINOUS CURRENT COURTROOM EXPERIENCE. Please take a look at the courtroom experience of the two District Judge candidates in Midland County

JUDICIAL EXPERIENCE

JUDGE PAT BASKIN
- 7 years. District Judge
- 4 years. Municipal Court Judge

MR. NICK TAYLOR
- None

TRIAL EXPERIENCE AS A MIDLAND LAWYER

JUDGE PAT BASKIN
- 27 years continuous practice as a Midland lawyer 1953-1980; tried many cases, jury and non-jury, civil and criminal, for plaintiffs and defendants.

MR. NICK TAYLOR
- Two cases

* Since moving to Midland 14 years ago, Mr. Taylor has participated as co-counsel (by personally questioning and cross-examining witness, objecting to evidence, etc.,) in only two contested matters. (1) one preliminary hearing in Houston, (2) one case in Waco, none in Midland. (The law firm where Mr. Taylor works has a section of excellent trial lawyer specialists who usually handle all the lawsuits for the firm. Mr. Taylor is not a member of that section.)

JUDGE BASKIN FULLY PREPARED HIMSELF TO DO THE WORK OF A TRIAL JUDGE. MR. TAYLOR HAS NOT. (There are no District Judges in West Texas who entered office with as little current courtroom experience as Mr. Taylor has.)

DEAR ABBY

Honeybees suffer mistaken identity

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: When "Wendy" told of having been stung by a bee that had gotten into her soft drink can while she was golfing, you thanked her for the warning about this hazard.

Abby, are you sure the insect was a bee? I am very doubtful. At innumerable picnics, I have been harassed by yellow jackets. They were in my soft drink bottle, on my hamburger, buzzing around my head and stinging my ankles. Occasionally other wasps have entered the game, but never have I seen a honeybee behave this way. Honeybees will sting in defense of their hives, or to protect themselves if you grab them. But they do not invade soft drink cans or attack picnickers.

The nasty-tempered yellow jacket, which is about the same size as a honeybee, is very often mistaken for the bee! It attacks without provocation and nests around golf courses, and gravitates toward food and beverages. It's given the useful honeybee a bad reputation. Many a hive of honeybees has been destroyed; many a beekeeper has been forced to quit because neighbors feared "bees," when the real culprits were wasps! We need the honeybee for pollination of many of our most valuable crops.

"Wendy" is correct — insect stings can be quite serious to those who are highly allergic to them — but there is a vast difference in the potency of insect stings. A white-faced hornet sting will make my whole hand swell, a yellow jacket sting will cause my finger to swell for a day, and a honeybee sting will make part of my finger swell for perhaps half an hour. If you print this, sign me ... DELAWARE BEEKEEPER

DEAR BEEKEEPER: Thanks for a honey of a letter. I got stung on this one. No entomologist am I, but I wonder how many others can't tell a yellow jacket wasp from a honeybee? Now for a short course in nature. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I'll bet "Wendy" was not stung by a bee — it was a hornet, or a yellow jacket. The bee flies only among flowers, gathering honey for the hive and pollinating flowers.

Hornets, on the other hand, frequent trash cans, dumpsters and other areas where they can find open soft drink cans and other sweets. Unfortunately, these nasty little insects closely resemble the harmless and industrious honeybee!

The flight of the bee is direct — flower to flower. The flight of the yellow jacket is aimless, jerky and erratic. I hope this helps. I'll bet you get a lot of mail on this. — LARRY OF LAKEWOOD, OHIO

DEAR LARRY: I did. The longer I write this column, the more I realize how little I know.

DEAR ABBY: You casually mention that one can get rid of bad breath by brushing one's tongue as well as one's teeth. You didn't stress the point enough! Abby, I suffered with bad breath for 40 years — and went to 21 doctors for the problem, thinking my foul breath was caused by either my teeth or my stomach. It was neither. It was an accumulation of particles on my tongue!

It is unbelievable that so few doctors are aware that this nasty little problem can be solved by a simple solution. All of the well-advertised mouthwashes and breath mints to mask bad breath are temporary and therefore practically useless.

Please print this to let your millions of readers know how important it is to routinely brush the top of one's tongue as far back as can be reached with a medium-soft toothbrush. Sign me ... ABE IN CHICAGO

Tongue twisters tame timidity

Copley News Service

If you're shy, practice this tongue twister: "Cheap sheep soup."

Or this one: "She shall sew a slit sheet shut."

That's because tongue twisters can be good therapy for shy folks or others with communication problems.

Maryland psychologist Jim Gormally calls such exercises "shame busters."

He says tongue twisters help such people because they help the socially inept try something that's almost impossible to do.

What it really does is help them learn not to be so ashamed of flubbing up or embarrassing themselves.

Here are a few you can try:

"Fifty-five flags freely flutter from the floating frigate."

"Lester lists the lesser lesson last."

"Surely the sun shall shine soon."

"A cheeky chimp chucked cheap chocolate chips in the cheap chocolate chip shop."

Sport Brief

Chip Beck no longer bridesmaid

From Wire Reports

LOS ANGELES — Chip Beck mastered the rain-soaked Riviera Country Club course with a 3-under-par 68—267 to capture the Los Angeles Open. Beck, seven times a runnerup but never a winner in his previous nine years on the PGA Tour, opened a comfortable lead when he birdied the last three holes on the front nine, finishing four shots ahead of Mac O'Grady and Bill Sander.

Rain halted play twice Sunday for nearly two hours, once in the early morning and again just before noon. Although the course was very wet, it remained playable, and the showers ended in the early afternoon.

Beck began the round at 14-under-par, good for a three-shot lead on Jay Haas, Ed Fiori and Steve Elkington of Australia.

Beck, who had slipped to 13-under with a bogey on No. 3, reeled off birdies on the seventh, eighth and ninth holes to close out the front nine with a 2-under-par 33 that moved him to 16-under for the tournament.

Norman Coasts

CANBERRA, Australia — Greg Norman coasted to a seven-stroke victory in the ESN Open Sunday for his third triumph in his last five tournaments, posting a 68-269.

Bernhard Langer, who fired a final-round 69, finished second at 276, two shots ahead ahead of Noel Ratcliffe.

Bonnett wins 500

MELBOURNE, Australia — Neil Bonnett scored his second straight victory Sunday, outdueling his rival and Bobby Allison in the NASCAR 500 holding off Allison by 0.86 of a second in a thrilling finish to the first NASCAR event held outside the United States.

Bonnett won the Richmond 400 last weekend and finished fourth in the Daytona 500 the previous week.

Player hangs on

NAPLES, Fla — Gary Player shot 67—207 and held off Dave Hill to win the PGA Seniors Challenge. Hill made a hole-in-one on the 16th hole, but Player replied with a tee shot that landed six inches from the cup on the par-3, 157-yard hole.

Porsche prevails

MIAMI — Price Cobb, who co-drove the Porsche with Englishman James Weaver, held on to win the three-hour IMSA Camel GT event in the second closest finish in the 18 years the sports car series has been in existence.

The Jaguar shared by Daytona 24-Hours winners Martin Brundle and John Nielsen finished second, while the English sports car shared by Jan Lammers and Davy Jones spun twice and wound up a lap behind in sixth.

Kuenn dies

CHANDLER, Ariz — Harvey Kuenn, a former American League batting champion who managed the Milwaukee Brewers to their only World Series appearance, died Sunday at his home in Peoria, Ariz. Kuenn, 57, the 1953 AL Rookie of the Year and the 1959 AL batting champion, had been the Brewers' major league scouting consultant since being replaced as manager at the end of the 1983 season.

Al McGuire booked for Juco banquet

Al McGuire
....at Juco banquet

From Staff Reports

The Midland Jaycees are making the National Junior College Athletic Association Basketball All-Star classic on the weekend of April 8-9 a basketball fans dream.

Al McGuire, NBC's color man for college basketball, will be the featured speaker at this year's banquet preceding the third annual game here, the Jaycees revealed.

The banquet will be April 8 at Midland Center and the game will be played April 9 at the Chaparral Center when the best junior college players from Texas takes on the best of the rest of the nation.

Home Sports Entertainment Network, HSE, will televise the game.

Jaycees project chairman David Keys said, "Al McGuire's combination of Irish wit and wisdom make him a speaker in great demand across the country. We feel that his appearance will only enhance what is going to be an outstanding weekend of activities."

McGuire has made basketball his life. He played at St. John's University, went on to play as a pro for the New York Knicks and then coached at Dartmouth, Belmont Abbey and Marquette.

The McGuire years at Marquette were characterized by firebrand players and SRO crowds. 11 consecutive post season tournaments and 20-win seasons.

The Warriors won the NCAA in 1977, adding the finishing touch to the McGuire legend.

After 13 years at Marquette, the two-time Coach-of-the-Year left a record of 295 wins and 80 losses.

After leaving coaching, he was signed by NBC as a color man and became an instant success, receiving two Emmy nominations.

McGuireisms like "tap city", Aircraft carrier", "French pastry" and "Here comes the PT boat" (Spud Webb) have peppered wire sports copy as well as his TV commentary.

McGuire is in his ninth season with NBC. He produces his halftime shows for the College-Game-of-the-Week. he also produces a weekly series, "Al McGuire on Sports."

Players and coaches will be introduced at the banquet. NJCAA dignitaries and recruiters from major colleges and universities will attend.

Limited tickets for the banquet are $10 each at 683 7330.

"We feel we have taken giant strides since the first game only two years ago," said Keys. "The live telecast and the banquet with Al McGuire will expose the game as well as Midland to a much greater number of people than the two previous all-star games."

For Debi, 15 years lost in 15 seconds

By GEORGE VECSEY
N.Y. Times News Service

CALGARY, Alberta — It took Debi Thomas 15 years to get there and 15 seconds to lose it. The moment she felt her body and her skates slip out of synchronization her active mind went a third direction — south.

"I just didn't want to stay out there," she said later. And it showed.

Fifteen seconds into a competition is not much margin for error, not much room for gallant comebacks, but that is the challenge of figure skating.

A good basketball team can fall 15 points behind at halftime and assure the coach, "no problem." A tennis player can break a few serves in the final set and pull out the match.

But in figure skating, one loss of concentration after 15 seconds, one wayward toe, one errant skate blade, one lurching shoulder, and a lifetime of training can be undone as knowledgeable fans groan.

IS IT a sport? Does an activity that uses words like "lavender" and "sequins" and "artistic impression" have anything to do with traditional male, mass-audience, beer-drinking sports? Maybe not, but thank goodness it is part of the four-days-too-long Endless Winter Games.

Four years ago, Torvill and Dean turned ice dancing into an art form. This year the women soloists stole the entire Games with a finale on Saturday night that was part Bobby Thomson and Ralph Branca, part psycho-Olympics, part opera when opera is good.

Thomas was in first place going into Saturday's competition, or at least that's what the standings said. But when she drew the last spot at the end of the final six skaters, it was like Robert Jordan seeing snow when he was about to blow up the Spanish bridge in "For Whom the Bell Tolls" and knowing he was going to die.

THOMAS DOES not like going last. Never has. Too much waiting. Too much time to let the body grow cold, the mind grow active. By all accounts, she had a marvelous practice Saturday morning, nailing down her version of "Carmen," in which Carmen lives. By most versions, Katarina Witt of East Germany had an ordinary practice of her version in which Carmen dies.

Saturday was big-time night for these Winter Games. Even the bloke driving the ice machine was wearing a tux. In the third grouping of six, bouncy Midori Ito of Japan knocked 'em dead with her seven triple jumps, good enough to roar from eighth place to fifth.

Then came the final round of six, reduced to five because the flu ended Caryn Kadavy's dream. Jill Trenary, coming down with the flu, merely survived. The elegant Witt did what she had to do as the defending Olympic champion, beguile the judges with grace and long arms and no mistakes.

Most Canadian fans, with their "oh-not-so-bad" view of life, were not sure about spunky Liz Manley, who had come out of mental depression with a reputation for inconsistency.

Reinforced with psychological imaging, Manley gave the best performance of her career and left the ice wearing somebody's white 10-gallon cowboy hat, not quite as big as her heart. Kira Ivanova sulked through her routine, knowing that not even glasnost could save her.

THEN IT was Thomas' turn — her lead, her gold medal, her payoff for 15 years of sacrifices by her, by her coach and by her family. Maybe she had been undone by the focus on Witt's icy beauty. By hearing that she would have to win it on athletic perfection rather than other people's vision of beauty.

Pairings ready for JC tourneys

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Final pairings for this week's Region V Junior College playoff tournament, which is set for Chaparral Center Tuesday through Saturday, were finally put into place Sunday afternoon.

Midland College was named as the No. 3 seed from the Western Junior College Athletic Conference and will meet the Northern Conference's No. 2 seed Texas State Technical Institute-Waco at 9 p.m. Thursday in the opening round of the tournament.

That is an interesting opening round match since these same two teams met in the Region V finals in Waco last year, with Midland College winning a national tournament berth with a victory over TSTI.

TSTI was the giant killer of the Region V tournament last year, beating New Mexico Junior College in the first round and South Plains in the second round before falling to MC.

The men's tournament starts Thursday at noon with NMJC taking on Northern's No. 4 seed Cisco, a late addition to the tournament when Ranger Junior College was forced to forfeit six victories for playing an ineligible player.

At 2 p.m. Thursday, McLennan Community College of Waco will play South Plains and at 4 p.m. Weatherford College will meet Odessa College. At 7 p.m. Thursday, the women's championship finals will be held.

MC defeated Weatherford, McLennan and TSTI in the Region V tournament last year to earn the defending champion's role this year.

THE REGION V women begin competition Tuesday with four games. McLennan will face NMJC at 1 p.m. to open the 17-game slate for the week at Chaparral Center. Clarendon will meet Grayson Community College at 3 p.m., South Plains will take on Cisco at 6 p.m. and the Odessa College women will meet Ranger at 8 p.m. OC is the tournament favorite. Western Texas is the defending women's champion, but did not gain a berth this season.

Action continues Wednesday with the OC-Ranger winner taking on the McLennan-NMJC winner at 8 p.m. while the SPC-Cisco winner will square off against the Clarendon-Grayson winner at 6 p.m.

Games Highlights

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Highlights of Sunday's final day of the Winter Olympics:

MEDALS

The Soviet Union set a Winter Games record with 29 medals, including 11 golds, nine silvers and nine bronzes. The Soviets had the old record, 27 in 1976, when there were 27 fewer medals at stake. East Germany was second this year with 25, including nine golds and 10 silvers, followed by Switzerland with 15 overall, five of them gold. The United States tied for eighth with six medals — two golds, one silver and three bronzes.

SPEED SKATING

Yvonne van Gennip of the Netherlands became the second triple gold medalist of the Games, along with ski jumper Matti Nykanen of Finland, when she won the women's 5,000-meter. She cut more than six seconds off her own world record and almost three seconds off the time established a few moments earlier by East Germany's Andrea Ehrig.

BOBSLEDS

The United States missed its first Olympic bobsled medal in 32 years by a scant two-hundredths of a second. Brent Rushlaw, a four-time Olympian from Saranac Lake, N.Y., drove USA1 to the fastest run of the final heat at 57.20 seconds, only to be bumped from the bronze on the last run by Ianis Kipours of the Soviet Union.

The bronze was the second medal for Kipours and Vladimir Kozlov, who won the two-man event. The silver for East Germany's Wolfgang Hoppe and Bogdan Musiol matched their silver in the two-man.

HOCKEY

Finland upset the gold-medal Soviet team, 2-1, and won the silver medal, its first ever in Olympic hockey. Sweden, the reigning world champion and top seed entering the Games, won the bronze.

MULTIPLE MEDALISTS

Seven athletes, four women and three men, won three medals each. Thirteen women and 22 men won two apiece, including double gold skiers Alberto Tomba of Italy and Vreni Schneider of Switzerland, speed skater Tomas Gustafson of Sweden, cross country skier Gunde Svan of Sweden and biathlete Frank-Peter Roetsch of East Germany.

ASU—how low can you get?

Associated Press

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Arizona State officials said it was unfortunate that some Sun Devils fans tastelessly taunted Arizona's Steve Kerr during Saturday night's Pacific-10 Conference basketball game.

Some fans yelled "PLO, PLO," "go back to Beirut," and "Where's your Dad?" at Kerr during pregame warmups and throughout much of the first half.

The words raised an ugly memory in Kerr. His father, Malcolm, president of American University in Beirut, was killed by an assassin's bullet in January 1984 during Kerr's freshman year.

Kerr responded by scoring 20 of his 22 points in the first half, hitting all six of his 3-point field goal attempts as the third-ranked Wildcats beat Arizona State 101-73.

After the game, Kerr lashed out at the fans.

"There's no place for that in college basketball. Those kind of people are the scum of the earth," Kerr said. "There are some sick people in this world."

"People have to be mentally ill to say things like that," Arizona Coach Lute Olson said. "That's when the security people should step in and stop that kind of thing — step in and usher those people out of the arena. I'm sure those fans fired up Steve."

"Sure did," Kerr said. "I was looking for my shot a little more. At halftime, I got control of my temper. Maybe I should get mad more often."

Kerr said he heard similar remarks at Arizona State in the past.

"Two years ago. It was ASU. It's only ASU," he said. "But I want to make it clear it was a select few (fans). People were coming up to me and apologizing."

"I don't think I've even seen Steve get 20 in a half before," Olson said. "You can credit it to those jerks."

TED BATTLES

Predictions, yes, but no concrete

Battles

Perhaps it's a bit premature. The Tall City's Tournament of Champions dominates high school baseball this week. The District 4-5A play still is a couple of weeks down the road and the big question, of course, is who will win.

This year, it seems, the urgency isn't so much over who will win, but who will finish second and earn the other playoff berth.

Abilene Cooper looms as the team to beat until someone does it and while dreams are nice, reality is Olympic hockey.

MIDLAND LEE Coach Ernie Johnson admits beating Cooper will be a monumental task. "Cooper has the good pitcher back and four other starters with him, including the shortstop and catcher," key positions for any contender, or champion.

"Jason Satre is the pitcher back," continues Ernie, "And he won all the big games for them last year."

"Midland High will be a contender because of its pitching," predicts Johnson.

IN ERNIE'S eyes, Abilene High looms as the dark horse, "Abilene has a strong junior class back and they won state in summer ball at the end of their ninth grade year. This bunch last year was 17-1 as JVs and some even started on the varsity."

Johnson sees the Odessa schools as questionmarks, in the same category as his club, and "San Angelo has had a hard time of late."

Check back in a couple of months. Sometimes when they go ahead and play out these cut-and-dried races, some strange results emerge.

Then, again, sometimes there's no point in even bothering. It was pretty obvious to everyone that it would be the 49ers and Browns in the Super Bowl. And judging by the Super Bowl game, they were right. It would have been better that way....

THAT BRINGS us to this week's Region V tournament at the Chaparral Center Thursday through Friday in which the four top teams from the Western Junior College Athletic Conference are paired off, in the first round, against the four representatives of the Northern Conference.

It was suggested to Terry Williamson, the other MRT sportswriter, that "the four WJCAC teams are so strong, you've got to wonder why the Northern Conference is even going to bother. I wonder if any will make it past the first round?"

"You've apparently forgotten last year already," Williamson prodded the memory.

Terry had a point. Texas State Technical Institute, the fourth place finisher in the Northern last year, knocked off WJCAC champion New Mexico Junior College in the first round.

The Thunderbirds had won the title by beating Midland College twice during the regular season.

Thunderbird Coach Ron Black was so distressed after the loss he piled the team on the bus and drove back home that night, so the story goes.

McLennan then bumped Odessa College and then TSTI proved it was no fluke by beating South Plains College.

THE CHAPARRALS eventually rescued sanity and preserved the honor of the WJCAC by beating TSTI in the finals and earning the trip to nationals in Hutchinson, Kan.

There, MC beat No. 1 ranked San Jacinto and took second in the nation.

But that was last year when the Northerns caused the WJCAC so much misery. It could happen again.

LSU's Archer rates SEC as toughest grid conference

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Notes from the NCAA's annual College Football Preview last Monday and Tuesday:

LSU Coach Mike Archer thinks the Southeastern Conference is the best in the country from top to bottom. And for that very reason, he also thinks it will be difficult for an SEC team to win the national championship.

"We beat each other up," he said.

Archer is emphatic in his assessment of the SEC's strength — "I'll match the No. 10 team in our league with any No. 10 team in any conference."

But he also knows that four of the last six national champions have been independent teams — Penn State in 1982 and 1986, Miami in 1983 and 1987 — and that may be the trend of the future.

"It's not only going to be the SEC, but every conference," he said.

Archer is in favor of a national playoff. It goes back to his days as an assistant coach at Miami in 1983 when the Hurricanes beat No. 1 Nebraska in the Orange Bowl and vaulted from No. 5 to the national championship.

"You've got to keep the bowls involved because the bowls have been so important monetarily and tradition-wise. But you can't keep them all happy.

"I don't have the answer as to how, but without the opportunity to play Nebraska in 1983, we would not have won the national championship. We only won it because we beat them and they were so good.

"In 1983, we decided it on the field against Nebraska. This year, Oklahoma and Miami did. The year before, Miami and Penn State did. To me, that's the only true way to do it."

College Focus

HALFBACK ERIC Metcalf, Texas' offensive leader, finished third nationally in all-purpose yardage and Coach David McWilliams called him "one of the hardest workers I've ever seen in practice."

After an 0-2 start, Texas turned things around and finished 7-5. The Longhorns stopped throwing so much — 34 times against Auburn, 35 against BYU, but with almost 50 pass plays called in each game — and established more of a running game.

"We ended up being a fairly balanced team," McWilliams said. "The biggest thing that helped us was getting the ball to Eric a lot more, mainly off a sprint-draw fake. But I'd still like to be a throwing team."

McWilliams called middle linebacker Britt Hager "as good a linebacker as Texas has had in many years."

"THE EXPECTATION level is changing" at Texas-El Paso, according to Bob Stull, who inherited a program that had gone 15-111 since 1974 but went 4-8 in 1986 and 7-4 last year, the Miners' first winning season since 1970. "I think we're to the point where teams have to respect us," Stull said. "They have to get ready to play us. We have a chance to win. In the past, that wasn't true.

"When I first arrived, someone told me that if I beat New Mexico State and won two other games they'd put a monument up downtown."

Stull knows UTEP cannot recruit head-to-head with Texas and Texas A&M. But he said the Miners were in the hunt for players with Southwest Conference schools like Baylor, Rice and Texas Tech.

OKLAHOMA STATE'S Pat Jones said the Cowboys "somehow managed to win 10 games last year without really stopping anybody."

The 35-33 Sun Bowl victory over West Virginia was typical, but Oklahoma State was the only Big Eight team to wins its bowl game.

Asked about the Oklahoma-Nebraska domination of the conference, Jones conceded that "I don't think it's ever going to change drastically as far as those two fellows at the top."

But he joked that "Nebraska's got a two-game losing streak and Oklahoma's rapidly becoming a basketball school. Maybe they've got to catch up with us."

Actually, Nebraska beat Colorado between loses to Oklahoma and Florida State.

Exhibitions around corner, but who's counting

N.Y. Times News Service

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Teams begin playing exhibition games later this week, but anyone looking for clues to the coming season's division champions should not waste too much time on the spring training standings. No correlation exists between a team's success in spring training and its performance during the season.

Well, no correlation generally exists. Last year produced a most unusual exception. Three of the four eventual division winners had the best exhibition records among teams in their divisions. The fourth had the worst record among all 26 teams.

More than six months before they won the World Series, the Minnesota Twins finished spring training with a 14-10 record, best in the American League. The St. Louis Cardinals, who won the National League pennant, had a 17-6 record, best among the 26 teams. San Francisco, another division winner, completed the exhibition schedule second to St. Louis at 20-10.

Then there were the Detroit Tigers, whose 9-20 record placed them 26th in the spring but represented no deterrent to their American League East championship. The Tigers are one of the teams whose spring performances glaringly show the lack of connection between spring and fall success. In the past 10 years, they have had the best exhibition record among American League East teams four times and they have won two division titles. However, they did not win either of those championships in the years in which they had the best springs.

In the past 10 years, a period in which the major leagues have had 10 different World Series winners, 19 division winners had exhibition records better than .500, four finished at .500 and 17 ended their spring efforts under .500.

Of the 20 teams that won pennants in that span, seven finished the spring over .500, two were at .500 and 11 were under .500. Finally, of the 10 World Series winners, five were over .500, one was at .500 and four were under .500.

Houston's Joe Sambito
...veteran reliefer can't wait

EXHIBITION records are basically meaningless because teams take different approaches to the games. Some managers enter games with plans to use certain players and use them no matter what the score or the situation. Others believe, for various reasons, that winning is important so they might use a pinch-hitter here or a relief pitcher there.

Sometimes owners dictate the approach. George Steinbrenner, for example, has always placed much more significance on exhibition games than most people, especially on games with the Mets, when the Yankees played the Mets. A loss to the Mets invariably meant trouble for someone: Gabe Paul, then the club president, was drenched with ice water one spring during a post-game shouting clash between the owner and Billy Martin, and Mike Griffin, a young pitcher was banished to the minors because, the owner said, "he's fooled us long enough."

Sometimes a club's performance during the season bears no resemblance to its spring record because its poor spring record showed that drastic measures had to be taken. In 1984, for example, the Chicago Cubs staggered through the spring with a 7-20 record. When Jim Frey, the Cubs' manager, was asked what he planned to do about his dreadful team, he would say, "I have a plan."

FREY LATER admitted he had no plan whatsoever in mind, but the Cubs were so mortified by the team's spring performance that they made a series of trades that helped produce a division championship.

Three other springs in the past 10 the Cubs had the best record among National League East teams, but they didn't win any other championships. In the National League West, the Giants have had the best record five times and the Atlanta Braves four times, but they finished first in October only once each. The Mets, in that span, have not had their division's best exhibition record, and they had only a 13-13 record in 1986, their championship season.

"There are plenty of managers who try to win starting in spring training, right from the get-go," Dave Johnson of the Mets said. "I have a different philosophy. I try to get my guys adjusted to the roles they'll be doing during the year. I try to get my bench people extra work. In the early part of the spring, I'll try to let a pitcher stay in even if he's not doing well so he can get his work in. I try and fine-tune everything the final week. I want to reach a physical and mental peak with a week to go. Fortunately, we've had a lot of success the last couple of years and we don't have to prove ourselves in the spring."

BILLY MARTIN, beginning his fifth tenure as the Yankees' manager, agreed with Johnson about the purpose of spring training.

"Sometimes management cares about the record because they want to sell tickets," Martin said. "I don't worry about it. I don't want to come down here and lose every game, but .500 is a good record. You're running guys in and out of the lineup. Pitchers are going three innings. You're trying young kids."

LOYOLA SCORES, 'N SCORES, 'N....— Dont' you hate those ball-control teams like Oklahoma, held to 134 points by Colorado? Well, there's an alternative for the run-and-shooters. Bo Kimble scored 36 points and Hank Gathers 34 as No. 19 Loyola of California beat San Diego 141-126 Saturday night to go undefeated in the WCAA, extending the nation's longest winning streak to 21 and moved to WCAC.

UTAH UPSETS BYU— Keith Chapman made consecutive 3-pointers in the final 1:08 for Utah, 17-9 and 6-5, a 62-60 winner over BYU, 23-2, 12-2. His 3-pointer with 1:08 left put Utah ahead 57-56, but Mike Smith's three-point play with 50 seconds remaining regained the lead for the Cougars. Chapman's second straight 3-pointer gave Utah a 60-59 lead.

WHITE PONDERS— Dallas Cowboys quarterback Danny White, more bothered by off-the-field criticism than his lingering wrist injury, says he is thinking of retiring after 12 NFL seasons.

The 36-year-old White, who has played for Dallas since 1976, has been blamed by some fans for not leading the Cowboys to the Super Bowl like his predecessor Roger Staubach.

"I felt nervous. I knew there was a lot of room," she said later, about Witt's relatively ordinary scores.

By now it had been nearly an hour since Thomas had warmed up. She had taken off her skates in the locker room.weakness that mute inflation risks," the Salomon analysts said. "In addition to an inventory overhang, foundering commercial construction, stagnant housing activity, mildly restricted Federal purchases and st move — a triple toe, triple toe, a blend of power and grace. The combination is put in at the top to get the judges' attention, and also "because that's when I have the most energy," she said.

In practice, when Thomas does not hit her first element, she sometimes starts all over again. Her coach, Alex McGowan, has been reminding her for years that there are no do-overs in the Olympics.

"After I messed up that first jump, I didn't want to be there," she admitted Saturday. "I asked, 'Do I have to do this?'"

Her 15 years of skating told her that skaters do not pack it in, even when they fall flat, which she never did Saturday night. Instead, her routine wound down into a series of hesitations, seemingly in slow motion. When it was over, she accepted no flowers, but skated directly to her coach and said, "I'm sorry."

Thomas is a pre-med major at Stanford University, a Renaissance woman in her own mind. Casey Stengel used to say that Jay Hook from Northwestern thought too much on the mound. Dave Johnson says the same thing about Ron Darling from Yale. Introspection is the stereotype, and also the curse, of the intelligent athlete.

"It's not quite like giving up," said her mother, Janice Thomas. "Maybe she'll have to think about this. If it's not her best jump, so let it be her second best jump."

By then, Thomas was saying she was "actually not that devastated" by the loss.

"I thought I'd cry and throw things," she said. "I went for it. It just didn't work out. Going last, I just didn't feel physical. I just didn't want to skate out there."

Claude Bass caught six fish weighing 13.31 pounds to win the February High Sky Bass Club tournament at Colorado City. Twenty-two men, eight women and four youth participated.

Terry Denton was second with five fish at 12.26 and Melvin Dunn took third with three fish at 11.30.

Virginia Wade won the women's division with a 4.23 pounder while Tammy Kennedy, a new member, was second with two fish at 3.33. Lou Kirby was third with 1.71.

Jeff Denton was the Youth winner, landing a 2.08 pounder.

Melvin Dunn caught the biggest fish of the tournament at 6.59.

The next tournament is March 5-6 at Lake Brownwood with fishing hours 6:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and 6:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Sunday. Weigh-in will begin 30 minutes before deadline each day at the State Park boat ramp.

Spence will host the April 16-17 competition....

THE MIDLAND BASSMASTERS January tournament at Lake Colorado City was won by Bud Baker with six fish weighing 13.54 pounds. Not far behind was Bob Apple with 12.48 pounds. Apple also landed the tournament's Big Bass, a 3.95 pounder.

Baker again won the February tournament at Twin Buttes, hauling in three fish at 6.25 pounds. Apple was second with one fish, but a good one, 2.75 pounds...

WOLF CREEK will install a triple chairlift for 1988-89, increasing lift capacity 72 per cent.

The new lift will be located between the two existing lifts and will service intermediate with two major trails from the 11,260 summit and also will open up high quality expert terrain.

Present Wolf Creek lifts can handle 2,500 skiers uphill per hour. The new Bonanza lift will accommodate 1,800 skiers on a vertical lift of 941 feet and 3,710 feet in length.

Other Wolf Creek improvements next year will be expansion of the parking area, increased seating capacity at the Wolf Creek Lodge by extending the main floor.

A new addition to the Prospector Lodge will increase space for the Wolf Pup program by 250-330 square feet.

WHEN IT'S nice the anglers respond to the invitation at Lake E. V. Spence and they have been rewarded with some nice striped bass catches in the intermediate range and an increasing run on black bass.

BOWLING BEAT

Mike Levassar's 238—707 tops week's bowling

By RANDY ISENBERG

Isenberg

Mike Levassar's 238-707 in the Midland Mixed Teachers League set the pace last week at Dellwood Lanes.

Levassar has been rolling well the past few weeks, recording a 661 in the Civic Commercial and winning the Valentine's No-Tap tournament, teaming up with wife Lynne in the doubles event. His 298 in the No-Tap was the clincher. Mike also rolled a 606 in the His and Hers Mixed and a 226-598 in mixed play.

Tommy Gutierrez reached the 700 plateau for the second time this year while bowling in the Dellwood Mixed, recording a 269 on the way to a 704, raising his average to 198.

Dawna Payne led the ladies with a 236-615 in the Midweek Break Mixed and also rolled a 571 in the City Classic Ladies at Dellwood and an 803 four-game in the Mixed Scratch Trio.

Faye Malone scaled the 600 level in the City Classic Ladies with a 223-605.

AT FAIRMONT, Roy Nini set the pace with 233-680 in the Parkers Mixed and also posted a 222-604 in the Chevron Mixed.

Betty Blair topped the Fairmont women with a 220-602 in the W.O.W. Ladies.

Other top performances included Darrell Hopkins, a 600 series for the fourth straight week to raise his average to 205 in Civic Commercial. Hopkins is bowling only once a week and using his experience from youth bowling to make dramatic progress.

Teammate John Denton, an ex-touring pro, who holds the record for most 200 games, 56, while bowling on a PBA stop, is the Dellwood average leader with a 209. John maintains his average not only ability, but he still has the desire to practice. This past Saturday, I saw him come into Dellwood to fine tune an already very sound game.

Jack McCranie is in his first full season of series league bowling and rolled a 257-686 in the Las Vegas Mixed League.

ARTHUR BROWN and Roman Harper are enjoying excellent years. Arthur followed up last week's 264-659 with a 215-617. Roman rolled a 246-659 last week and this week recorded a 243-609.

Scott Mitchell is improving every year, and this week's 246-671 in the Busy Men's League. Vern Williams continues to be the average leader at Fairmont Park and his 245-647 in the Bowl Hospital League kept his average at 206. Dave Griffin, same league, rolled 202-607, while Brian Gillette is averaging 204 in the Exxon.

Joe and Jean McEwen rolled the high series for men and women in the Fairmont Mixed with a 232-587 and 230-530, respectively.

This past week was one of the best for Larry White with a 261 in the Exxon Mixed, a 224-603 in the City Men's and 236-603 in the Bowl-a-Gans Mixed.

IN THE Valentine's Adult Youth No-Tap tournament, Derek Tubbs and JoAnne Tubbs tookk first in the Bantam-Prep (6-11) age division. Zach Mitchell and Amos McGuairt took the 12-18 division. Amos rolled a 298 and Zach was over 200 for all three games. Other finishers were: 2. Rachel Babcock-Stacy Fielding, 3. Dee Dee Sprague-Dot Fielding in Bantam-Pre. In 12-18:2. Shawn-Richelle Gengler. 3. Jody Dunn-George Overton.

TUESDAY, MARCH 1, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your interest in the arts will grow much stronger. Things that seem confusing now can be easily handled once a love relationship is strengthened. Real estate dealings should be handled by an objective third party. Investments could have a bumpy time until fall. Do not panic. A turnaround is likely. Romance reaches a new plateau. You can expect pleasant developments on the home front.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Robert Conrad, actor-director Ron Howard, poet Robert Lowell, musicman Glenn Miller, debonair actor David Niven, NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle, singer-TV host Dinah Shore.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Speak out. Others will be moved by what you have to say. Travel provides good results, but may not be worth the cost. Weigh the pros and cons of using an intermediary.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You will get more done by working behind the scenes. Let others bask in the spotlight while you dart past them for real success. You benefit when an old friend changes his mind.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) A relationship sometimes seems like too much responsibility. Grow up or you could miss one of life's greatest treasures. A loved one's encouragement helps you open up. You feel much more confident.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your quick wits serve you well today. Sounding too ambitious could hurt you in a job interview. Be patient and you will get everything you want. You are blessed with a strong support system.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You pick up a book or magazine that could change your life. Just because you have been hurt in the past does not mean you cannot have a satisfying relationship now. Open your heart.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) It's time for quick, constructive action. Bring yourself and your projects to the attention of those who are higher-ups. Social events are appealing. Meet new people. A friendship turns romantic.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Keep close tabs on what is happening behind the scenes. You continue to have good luck with personal relationships. Romance looks promising. Take a more realistic view toward spending.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 22) Continue to be vigilant where your money and personal belongings are concerned. Having too many irons in the fire could lead to strained relationships. Let mate set the social pace. Limit entertaining.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Move to capitalize on the events of yesterday. Be extra spur of the moment decisions. You need to get all promises in writing, even when dealing with friends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Your enthusiasm for certain activities may be fueled by the profit motive. Get extra mileage out of old projects by recycling them. Be open with trusted friends and family members. Share your dreams.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) The time is right for you to speak confidently about a bureau or other deferred payment. An afternoon business meeting could turn romantically.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Get an early start today. Interruptions will abound in the afternoon. Postpone negotiating a private agreement. An evening conference could find you and loved one in complete accord.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

ANSWER TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠Q54 ♡83 ◇AK1072 ♣762

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
1 NT	Pass	?

What action do yo take?

A.—Partner cannot have more than 15 points. Even if you count your hand as worth 10 points and he has a maximum, game would be much too iffy. Don't jeopardize a partscore by getting your side too high. Pass.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠Q54 ♡83 ◇AK1072 ♣762

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ◇	1 ♡
1 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—This time the auction carries different implications. With a minimum opening bid, North would have passed. Therefore, you can expect him to have 15 points, and they are likely to be worth more because of the position of his heart honors behind the overcaller. Invite by raising to two no trump.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠6 ♡QJ73 ◇J832 ♣A954

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—Don't heave a sigh of relief and pass just because you have found a trump fit. In support of hearts your hand is worth about 11 points, so it clearly rates a raise to three hearts.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠7 ♡J87 ◇AQ10932 ♣A93

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	2 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—With your minimum opening bid, we don't think you should be looking for an 11-trick contract in diamonds. We would simply bid three no trump—your hand rates to produce a lot of tricks for partner.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠762 ♡K10852 ◇Q7 ♣KQ9

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—You are worth a move toward game, especially in light of your fit for partner's suit. We suggest a raise to three hearts. That tells partner you need controls outside the trump suit if he is to consider proceeding to game.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠KJ7 ♡QJ9 ◇76 ♣AQ952

Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?

A.—With your soft values and scant likelihood of a major-suit fit, you should be looking for the safest game. A minor suit contract, even if partner has a club fit, does not look attractive. A jump to two no trump describes both the strength and shape of your hand perfectly, and protects your tenaces.

Penn: Reports he and Maddona were divorcing created by press

Penn

CHICAGO (AP) — Actor Sean Penn says being married to a star like Madonna is a strain, but that recent reports the couple was close to divorce were created by the press.

Penn discussed his marriage in a story published in Sunday's Chicago Tribune, which said it was the first interview with filmdom's bad boy since he was jailed for 32 days after striking a movie extra.

Penn, 27, vowed to "refocus" himself to avoid outbursts. He said reports of his marital problems with Madonna, 29, stem from her fans' possessiveness of her and their view of him as less-than-ideal marriage material.

"She belonged to them, to the public," Penn said. "And if anybody took her, I think they thought it should have been someone more acceptable, like Donald Trump."

Madonna filed divorce papers in Santa Monica, Calif., on Dec. 4, citing irreconcilable differences. Two weeks later, she asked to withdraw the petition and the court granted the request the same day, court records show. No reason was given in the court papers for her change of heart.

But Penn said the divorce story "was more People magazine than reality. My attitude with the press right now is that I hope they've had their share of me. They've been very busy trying to find or make dirt. I'd like to get back to acting."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Prince Andrew and his wife, Sarah, prayed with ordinary people in church then played with Hollywood celebrities at a black-tie dinner, where the duchess joked with a male admirer in the audience.

The Duke and Duchess of York ended a diverse day of activities Sunday with the star-studded dinner organized by industrialist Armand Hammer and Arco Petroleum chief Lowdrick Cook.

Among the 700 guests paying $1,000 apiece to dine with British royalty at the Biltmore Hotel were Zsa Zsa Gabor, her husband Prince Frederick von Anhalt, "Dynasty" star Joan Collins, her date George Hamilton, Burt Bacharach and his wife, Carole Bayer Sager, actor Michael York and astronaut Buzz Aldrin.

British actor Roger Moore, the master of ceremonies, joked about the nature of the royals' trip, quipping that the highlight was today's visit to a supermarket.

"I couldn't help but notice the royal couple will be there on double coupon day. And just in case you want to do a little shopping, this one's for disposal diapers," Moore said, holding up a coupon for the couple, whose first child is due this year.

Their fourth day in Southern California was to start today with a visit to two British exhibits at the California Museum of Science and Industry. In the afternoon, attention focuses on promoting British trade.

They were to tour the Bullocks Wilshire clothing department store and visits a Vons supermarket in Arcadia.

Money raised by the dinner benefits the three-month UK-LA '88 art festival and a fund to salvage books damaged in disastrous 1986 fires at the Los Angeles Central Library. The guests dined on crepinette of salmon and white fish, with champagne chervil.

On behalf of the British library board, Andrew brought a gift, the book Wonders of Creation. Sarah presented the couple's personal gift, two volumes of the book, "Royal Heritage," bound at Windsor Castle.

On Sunday, the day began on a more common note. The couple attended services at St. Luke's Episcopal Church in Long Beach.

About 300 people lined the sidewalk across from the church to see the couple.

NEW YORK (AP) — Freddy Gorman, co-writer of the song "Please Mr. Postman," says he's content to be a full-time mail carrier again, like he was in 1960 when he wrote the Motown classic that led him into a musical career.

"It honestly didn't bother me to have to return to the post office," he said in an interview in this week's People magazine. "I started looking around but realized I wasn't qualified for too many other jobs. It was sort of ironic that I ended up back where I started."

The song Gorman co-wrote for the Marvelettes put him on the route to fame with his own group, the Originals. But Gorman says he went back to his appointed rounds after 15 years in the music industry because his career never brought him "the big money," and he had family responsibilities.

Gorman, 48, lives in the Los Angeles suburb Duarte with his wife of 27 years, Dodie, and their 18-year-old son, Dillon.

NORTH PLATTE, Neb. (AP) — Planners of Nebraska's annual celebration of its heritage said they had a shrinking range of cowboy actors to consider for their Buffalo Bill Award, but are happy with their choice: Bruce Boxleitner.

Boxleitner, who co-starred in the television series "Scarecrow and Mrs. King," was named last weekend to receive award at the 1988 Nebraskaland Days, a June celebration that includes rodeo performances and a parade.

Nebraskaland Days President Kim Baxter said Boxleitner has an interest in quarter horses and has played Western roles.

He appeared as James Arness' nephew in "The Macahans," which inspired the "How the West Was Won" series. He was Kenny Rogers' co-star in three "Gambler" television movies.

"To be honest, they're not making as many Westerns as they used to," Baxter said. "We've gone to choosing a person who represents good family entertainment. But it's good when you can get someone who has been in Westerns."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Betty Friedan, author of the women's liberation classic "The Feminine Mystique," says women working in the media face "the threat of a new feminine mystique to send them home again."

"There are patterns here. A pattern where disproportionately in the restructuring of networks and movie studios, women are being dislocated," Friedan said Sunday at Women, Men and Media, a conference she chaired at the University of Southern California.

Marlene Sanders, a former correspondent and news executive at ABC, said the setbacks resulted from cutbacks caused by takeovers and mergers of media corporations and reduced federal regulation of broadcasting.

Los Angeles Times television critic Howard Rosenberg told the conference male media executives were less likely to take women seriously in entertainment shows. He said a study found that men were the central characters in 42 TV series and women in only 17, and in dramas the ratio was 23 men to 3 women.

Economy off to good start in '88

From Staff Reports

Early economic indications show that Midland is off to a better start in 1988 than a year earlier, according to figures compiled by the Economic Development Department of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

The total value of construction permits issued during the month was up more than 13 percent even though the number of permits was one less. As has been the case, residential construction continues to command the lion's share of construction activity, accounting for 11 of 12 permits and $1.1 million in value.

Other positive indications are airline boardings, which are up 5 percent over last year at 39,274 and postal receipts, up 4.4 percent at more than $880,000.

Of residential utility services, gas connections were up slightly, while the number of water and telephone customers were off about 0.5 percent each.

Home sales posted a healthy gain during the month, with both existing and new home sales increasing in January. The number of new homes sold during the month was double 1987 at eight, with an average price of $153,680. Ten more existing home were sold last month January 1987's 87, and the average price gained almost $7,000 to $70,040.

Due to computer problems at the Texas Employment Commission in Austin, local unemployment figures are not yet available for January, but rates are expected to show a traditional post-holiday rise, as seasonal workers are laid off.

Tax bills lower cost of living

From Staff Reports

The year began with a 1.3 percent fall in the cost of living in Midland, according to a survey by ClayDesta National Bank.

The survey credited a decline in tax liability for the decrease, and noted that without the decrease, the monthly deflation rate would have been 0.2 percent, reflecting a 2.7 percent annual rate of deflation. Odessa's cost of living for January fell 0.8 percent.

After two months of decline, local restaurant prices rose 1.1 percent, due to higher prices for main dishes prepared with fish and for sweet desserts.

Residential utility bills continued an upward trend, rising 0.8 percent, despite a 0.1 percent dip in electric fuel adjustment charges. That decline was offset by a 2.8 percent rise in gas bills, the fifth consecutive increase. Water rates remained stable.

Midland health care expenses rose 0.4 percent in January, fueled by increased dental costs and higher costs for a doctor's care. These offset lower prices on non-prescription medicine.

Lower prices for children's clothing offset higher price tags for women and men's apparel, thus reducing clothing expenses 0.1 percent in January.

A decline in rental charges for the first time since September helped reduce housing costs 0.2 percent.

Tall City motorists continue to pay less for transportation, with transportation expenses falling for the sixth consecutive month. In January, costs fell 1.4 percent, due to lower gasoline prices and automobile insurance premiums. Costs for automobile maintenance were higher.

The cost of buying food to eat at home remained stable, despite lower meat prices. This offset higher prices for shelf items and alcohol.

Tax liability fell 3.8 percent in January, due to a 9.7 percent fall in federal withholding taxes. Local sales taxes rose 0.5 percent, and Social Security taxes rose 0.4 percent.

Luxury car market cools off in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — The luxury car industry, once a booming business, is running out of gas forcing dealers to put on the brakes on excess.

"Dallas has always been a very image-concious city and owning a certain type of car was part of that image," said Drew Campbell, president of the New Car Dealers Association. "At one point in time Dallas led the country (in luxury sales) and just overnight everything has gone south. What's so frightening is that it happened so quickly."

Demand for exotic, foreign-made prestige cars peaked during the economic good times, putting several local dealerships in the top ranks.

"Back then anyone could be a successful dealer," said Doug Gibb, the general manager of Classic BMW. "We didn't worry much about the hard sells because we knew there would be two more people standing in line behind him. Things were hot, real hot."

But the downturn in the economy that followed plunging oil prices has cooled things.

Gibb said his salesmen now spend more time making follow-up calls or running down sales prospects and special attention is paid to advertising, inventory and other overhead costs to eliminate any excess.

Sales projections for 1988 remain conservative and it may be several years before they return to previous levels, he said.

According to the Freeman Auto report, which tracks new vehicle registrations in the county, the total number of cars sold in Dallas County has declined by 22.1 percent between 1985 and last year.

Hard time for raiders

By STEPHEN LABATON
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — For corporate raiders, these are not happy times. State and federal regulators have made it harder for hostile bidders to conceal their intentions. They have given the prey of raiders more time to defend themselves. And they have made several forms of takeovers more costly.

Those moves have been accomplished through a series of recent changes in the tax law, antitrust law and state rules governing mergers. When combined, the three have the effect of making hostile bids substantially more expensive, according to lawyers, investment bankers and other experts.

"There's no question it's gotten much more difficult," said Carl C. Icahn, one of Wall Street's best-known takeover specialists, in a recent interview. "The regulations restrict the field to players who have the staying power. And even if they have the staying power, it's much more difficult to do a merger."

Icahn, the chairman of Trans World Airlines Inc., is in the midst of a battle for control of Texaco Inc. He bought his first big stake in Texaco last November.

Moratorium on investment banking expected to end

NEW YORK (NYT) — Unless a Federal Appeals Court decides otherwise, subsidiaries of 13 commercial banks will be able on Tuesday to enter, once again, the hurly-burly world of investment banking.

A seven-month moratorium Congress imposed on the Federal Reserve Board last August ends Tuesday and almost certainly will not be reimposed.

Congress imposed the temporary ban less than four months after the Fed said that commercial banks could engage in certain activities previously the sole province of Wall Street, including underwriting mortgage-backed securities, municipal revenue bonds, commercial paper and consumer-related receivables like securitized car loans.

Is time right for oil, gas income funds?

By DONALD JAY KORN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — World oil prices are dropping again. Not to worry, say the sponsors of the new wave of oil and gas income funds. That just means that those who buy into the funds now will make that much more money later on, when oil is sure to rebound.

That's the theory anyway, and it is one that many people have been adopting of late. Last year, the oil and gas income funds — limited partnerships generally purchased by individuals, many of them small investors — raised nearly $1 billion, according to Robert A. Stanger & Co., a research and publishing company based in Shrewsbury, N.J. That was an increase of nearly 60 percent over 1986.

The attraction to purchasers goes something like this: With the dollar sinking and trade and budget deficits at record levels, double-digit inflation will reappear before long, they say, and oil and gas — notoriously volatile in recent years — are sure to lead the price rise or trail not far behind.

Of course, there are other ways to get in on the action. Buying stock in an oil company is a possibility, but stock price movements often are unrelated to oil price movements. And stockholders are vulnerable to unexpected shocks, such as last October's market collapse or the Texaco-Pennzoil litigation. Another alternative is to invest in a drilling fund, which offers tax advantages. Drilling funds are risky, though, because a partnership may strike dry holes.

By contrast, the income funds offer investors direct ownership of proven reserves. If prices of oil and gas go up, so do the fund's distributions. But if prices go down ...

The income funds were born in the early 1970s, and many of them thrived as prices rose during the decade. By the early 1980s, Petro-Lewis and Damson Oil, two sponsors of such funds, were the leading fundraisers in the entire limited partnership industry. Overall, the funds raised more than $2 billion in 1983.

In retrospect, this proved to be a classic case of investors "buying high." Oil prices, in the early 1980s, topped $30 a barrel. Fund sponsors thus paid high prices for the reserves they acquired. Moreover, sponsors such as Damson and Petro-Lewis borrowed money at the prevailing high rates to buy additional reserves.

Then prices started to fall, en route to a low of under $10 a barrel in 1986. Fund sponsors were stuck with expensive debt while oil revenues shrunk. Many partnerships, including those sponsored by Damson and Petro-Lewis in the late 1970s and early 80s, generated huge losses for their investors.

Damson and Petro-Lewis no longer are raising money for oil and gas income funds. All of today's leading sponsors are relative newcomers, entering the business within the past six years. They claim they will avoid mistakes made in the past: they won't borrow to buy reserves or to keep cash distributions at artificial levels. And they don't base projections on the expectation of sharply rising oil prices.

But they do contend that this is the right time in the cycle to buy. At the current level of about $16 to $17 a barrel, oil prices are up from their 1986 lows, but still far below levels of a few years ago. Widespread distress in the oil patch has been well reported, and there are many sellers who need ready cash. Therefore, income funds with millions of dollars in hand can drive good bargains today when they purchase oil reserves.

Downward pressure still on oil

From Staff Reports

Oil prices opened at $15.95 for West Texas Intermediate today, providing only a little encouragement that prices will hold above the $16 range.

Crude oil prices on the New York Mercantile Exchange slipped almost a dollar last week and closed Friday at $15.78 amid speculation that the $15 price might be tested this week.

If oil prices fall below $15.50, analysts say there could be renewed interest in buying and oil prices could firm. They add that there is little likelihood that prices will drop back to the $12 level again, because OPEC has no desire in seeing prices that low.

Prices have tumbled in past weeks on reports of growing crude oil inventories and rumors that OPEC production is about two million barrels more per day than its self-imposed ceiling of 15.06 million barrels per day.

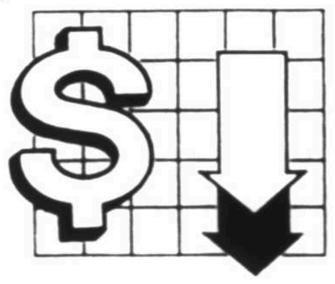
Dollar drifts lower in light trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar drifted lower in light European trading early today. Gold prices also fell.

Market sentiment for the dollar turned bearish last week when it became clear that the currency could not hold the 1.70-level against the West German mark, said a trader in Frankfurt.

But overall the market lacked direction, and the dollar was fluctuating within a narrow range, traders said.



Midmorning dollar rates in Europe compared with rates late Friday:

— 1.3888 Swiss francs, down from 1.3897.

— 5.7095 French francs, down from 5.7175.

— 1.8941 Dutch guilders, down from 1.8965.

— 1,243.20 Italian lire, down from 1,245.45.

— 1.2639 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2838.

The British pound edged up to $1.7740 from $1.7715.

The dollar closed in Tokyo at 128.12 Japanese yen, down from 128.35 yen on Friday. In later London trading today, the dollar was quoted at 128.28 yen.

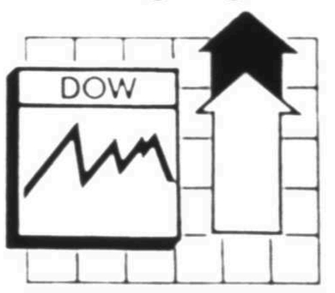
London's major bullion houses fixed a recommended gold price at midmorning of $423.75 a troy ounce, down from an opening bid of $428 and Friday's closing rate of $431.50. A trader said gold came under heavy selling pressure, but he was unsure why.

In Zurich, gold was bid at $424.20, down from $431.50.

Earlier, the metal closed in Hong Kong at a bid of $430.19, down from $430.34 on Saturday.

Silver bullion was quoted in London at a bid of $6.10 a troy ounce, down from $6.20 late Friday.

Dow closes week with slight gain



NEW YORK — The stock market closed out an on again, off again week with a small gain in quiet trading Friday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 5.64 to 2,023.21, finishing the week with a net gain of 8.62 points.

Advancing issues outpaced declines by about 5 to 4 in the daily tally on the New York Stock Exchange, with 798 up, 669 down and 492 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 158.06 million shares, down from 213.89 million in the previous session. The NYSE's composite index added .40 to 147.70.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $6.88 billion or 0.27 percent, in value.

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 181.90 million shares.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials rose 1.02 to 302.68 and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up .88 at 262.46.

The NASDAQ composite index fore the over-the-counter market dropped .22 to 363.40. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 284.32, up 1.03.

Continental seeks hub in West Berlin

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines is seeking to open a hub in West Berlin to serve destinations in West Germany and others parts of Europe.

An application has been filed with air attaches in West Berlin for permission to serve several West German cities, including Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Cologne and Dusseldorf, and flights to London and Paris, said C.W. "Pete" Runnette, vice president of Continental's international division.

The proposal was filed 10 days ago and is expected to be acted on in several months.

January tool orders rise 23.7 percent

NEW YORK (NYT) — Bolstered by increased exports and federal policies requiring some government agencies to buy more domestic products, orders in January for American-made machine tools rose 23.7 percent from December's level, the industry's trade association said.

A monthly report, to be released Monday by the National Machine Tool Builders Association, said machine-tool orders in January rose to $298.5 million, more than double the amount in January of last year.

The increase follows a 76.7 percent surge in December. Some analysts said the recent results indicated in part an increase in capital spending.

Attendants strike at Northwest still pending

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Northwest Airlines' 6,700 flight attendants continued to keep the carrier guessing today on whether they will strike, three days after a union deadline for reaching a new contract.

Both sides in the labor talks said just one issue divided them. But William Genoese, international director of the Teamsters union's airline division, said late Sunday that no further negotiations were scheduled.

Federated continues talks with Campeau

NEW YORK (NTY) — Negotiators for Federated Department Stores Inc. and the Campeau Corp. mainly discussed contract terms, including financing, as they worked through the weekend on proposals for a $6.3 billion merger of the two companies, according to people close to the talks.

As of Sunday evening, there was little indication that a competing bid might emerge. Tom Hill, managing director and co-head of the merger and acquisitions department of Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc., which represents Federated, said he knew of no other formal bid for the company. But he said there was always a possibility that one might be presented at the Federated board meeting Monday.

Campeau is scheduled to present a $68-a-share offer, with any changes worked out by the negotiators, at a Federated board meeting Monday.

Review of major U.S. economic indicators

Inflation has been generally low under the Reagan administration, but the trade deficit increased sharply. The rate of unemployment during Reagan's terms was initially high, but then dropped. The federal budget deficit was largest in 1986, but declined in 1987.

Fed changes its method for monitoring economic change

By PETER T. KILBORN
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In a significant change in policy, the Federal Reserve Board has altered the way it monitors the economy, its vice chairman, Manuel H. Johnson, said Thursday. The new approach will give the financial markets a better sense of where interest rates are heading.

Evidence that the Fed has been moving in a new direction under the chairman, Alan Greenspan, has been developing for months. Johnson, in a speech and in reply to questions afterward, disclosed the main features of the change and implied that the change is now fully in place.

The change involves paying close attention to fluctuations in financial instruments, specifically the dollar, bonds and commodities. In recent years Fed policy has involved watching a far greater variety of measures of the economy's performance, including money supply growth.

"They're watching what we watch," said Scott E. Pardee, a former top fed official and now vice chairman of the Wall Street branch of a Japanese securities firm, Yamaichi International. "It's a very pragmatic approach, and I'm pleased to see it."

The change, economists said, will let the Fed tell whether inflation is heating up and whether it should try to check inflation by pushing up interest rates and slowing the economy.

They said it also means that often investors and others who keep an eye on the markets should be able to anticipate Fed-orchestrated changes in interest rates and to act accordingly. Right now, they said, the Fed's new approach to policy implies that interest rates are likely to decline a little more so the economy can grow a bit faster. That is because the signs the Fed watches in the market are showing little incipient inflation.

Johnson, in the speech to a conference of the Cato Institute, a public policy research organization, said that to determine a rise of inflation, the economic phenomenon that the Fed usually worries about most, he and his fellow governors are now watching the harbingers of inflation that the financial markets watch — commodity prices, the exchange rate of the dollar and the difference between short-term interest rates and long-term rates.

The statement, prepared with Fed speech writers and cleared by Greenspan, marked the latest in a series of retreats from watching another guide to inflation and economic growth, the money supply.

The former chairman, Paul A. Volcker, used the growth of the money supply almost exclusively from late 1979 until mid-1982 to stop inflation but also to start a recession. Near the end of the recession, the Fed de-emphasized the policy because it seemed to mandate continuing the recession. The Fed then shifted to a more eclectic policy of monitoring many other signs of the economy's condition.

Last year some of the Reagan administration's top economists noticed that growth of the money supply had turned uncommonly sluggish, portending a recession eventually, in their view. Recently they have been hounding the Fed to take note of the slow money growth to speed up the economy by cutting interest rates. A few weeks ago the Fed did spur the economy, but it took the signals to do so, Mr. Johnson said today, not from the money supply but from the kinds of information that the Fed is now watching in the markets.

"Different governors look at different things," Johnson said of his five fellow governors. "But I see a familiar pattern to our thinking, and it roughly follows the pattern I've described here."

Johnson's speech in effect answered the questions that Greenspan left hanging during two days of testimony before Congress this week on Fed policies and the political pressure from the administration on the Fed board. He said the gauges of the money supply had turned volatile and unreliable, but he left open the question of what the Fed was monitoring.

Johnson answered that question today in listing the market indicators the Fed now watches more closely. The difference in long-term and short-term interest rates (known as the "yield curve"), indexes of commodity prices and exchange rates can behave erratically, but when all three are pointing to rising inflation simultaneously, they are usually reliable, Johnson said. The implication, economists said, is that the Fed can keep lowering interest rates to speed the economy along until the indicators start showing signs of inflation, when the Fed would stabilize rates or push them up.

When the markets push up rates on long-term bonds, for example, they often do so because investors fear that inflation will rise, so they attempt to protect themselves by demanding higher interest.

Rising commodity prices often means that industry's demand for raw materials is rising in anticipation of faster economic growth and that the prices it charges for its goods will rise.

And a decline in the value of the dollar often implies faster inflation because it leads to a rise in the prices Americans pay for imported goods and gives American industry more room to raise its prices.

Monitoring the economy this way, Johnson said, "is certainly not foolproof, and when such indicators are followed in isolation, they can sometimes prove misleading." But despite some caveats, he added, "Preliminary evidence is promising enough to suggest that these indicators may prove useful in the formulation of policy."

NEW YORK — The conflict between the Federal Reserve and the Reagan administration over what monetary policy should be and whose monetary policy is it, anyway, can easily be turned into a morality play.

Cast in the role of hero would be Alan Greenspan, named by President Reagan in August to succeed Paul A. Volcker as Fed chairman. In this role, Greenspan is upholding the independence of the central bank against the administration's efforts to push the Fed into what might be too stimulative a monetary policy. The administration wants a vigorous economy, which would help the Republican presidential nominee in November.

And cast in the role of villains would be Beryl W. Sprinkel, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers; Michael R. Darby, chief economist of the Treasury, and various unnamed administration heavy hitters. All worry that the Greenspan policy may do to their candidate's chances in 1988 what the restrictive Volcker policy did to Jimmy Carter's re-election effort in 1980.

Where is President Reagan in all this? On his own testimony, he is just an uninformed and innocent bystander. Asked at his news conference Wednesday whether the criticism of Greenspan by administration officials meant that the president was dissatisfied with his own appointee, Reagan said, "I'm going to have to find out what this is all about because nothing of that kind has been directed to me."

Apparently no one had told Reagan that his Council of Economic Advisers, in its annual Economic Report, criticized the Fed for monetary policies that sent interest rates up and the stock market into the October crash. The report did praise the Fed for supplying "ample liquidity" to the financial system right after the Dow's 508-point drop, but it also said that, once the immediate danger was past, the Fed "underestimated the risks to adequate economic growth." More recently, however, the Fed, according to the president's economic advisers, "has been more supportive of economic growth."

Greenspan is not grateful for all this coaching from the White House and the Treasury. He telephoned Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d to complain about a letter that Darby, an assistant secretary, sent to Fed officials on Jan. 21, shortly before the last meeting of the Fed's policy-making Federal Open Market Committee. Greenspan told Congress this week that he "objected quite strongly" to administration interference and would resist any election-year pressure on the Fed's monetary policy.

Only the most politically naive could be shocked by news of pressure for economic expansion in an election year. Scholarly studies have found that, since World War II, the growth of real income after taxes accelerated in 83 percent of the election years (both four-year presidential and two-year congressional elections), compared with 40 percent in the off years. Prof. Edward R. Tufte of Yale found a "four-year cycle in unemployment, with downturns in the jobless rate during the months before a presidential election and rises in unemployment starting a year to a year and a half after the election."

But there are two major issues in administration-Fed relations that go beyond election-year politics. The first issue is the need for closer integration of fiscal and monetary policy. Those who favor coordination of economic policy of the United States and its major allies cannot treat the need for domestic coordination of fiscal and monetary policy as a simple morality play.

At a time when the administration's decisions to support the dollar or let it decline are crucial to interest rates, monetary growth, financial markets and economic expansion, monetary policy cannot be ceded as a monopoly of the Fed.

Nor does the Fed regard fiscal policy as off limits. Fed chairmen, including Volcker and Greenspan, have felt free to lecture the White House and Congress about budget deficits and the severe problems that too loose a fiscal policy causes for monetary policy.

What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. The Fed and the administration need to talk and work together, without either one being a slave to the other.

The second major issue, not contained in the simple morality-play format, is whether the Fed's monetary policy is too loose or too tight, not just this year but over the long run. Not every critic who says the Fed is too restrictive can be dismissed as a political hack. Some of the harshest critics of Volcker's tight-money regime during the Reagan years were Democratic liberals, who would be just as critical of Greenspan if the Fed should thrust the economy into a recession and send unemployment soaring.

Some critics of the Fed even argue that electoral politics may be a fortunate thing, required to jar the central bank away from too heavy a "sound money" slant that worries unduly about inflation at the cost of excess unemployment and sluggish growth. That may be as true of the Bundesbank in West Germany as the Fed in the United States.

Nevertheless, undue monetary stimulus, stemming from electoral politics, could generate inflationary pressures and send interest rates soaring and the markets and the economy plunging, as Greenspan argued. In the making of economic policy, a system of checks and balances can be as important as in foreign policy and other realms of government — both to avoid the dangers of monopoly power and to improve the intellectual quality of decision-making.

Consumer protection bills may allow 'price-fixing'

BUSINESS MIRROR

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — Most people are against price-fixing, associating it with exploitation of the buyer. But Congress is now dealing with two anti-price-fixing bills which, if passed, conceivably could hurt the buyer.

Those opposing the bills support the practice of manufacturers who compel dealers to maintain certain price levels, even if the dealers want to lower them. Their contention is that lower prices would mean less service.

Such a defense might not have been as likely just a couple of decades ago, especially coming from the likes of the Heritage Foundation, often described as a right-wing think tank that generally supports free markets.

But in recent years the marketplace, always a challenge to consumers, has become more complex. A proliferation of high-tech products, the purchase of which assumes the accompaniment of service, has changed the scene.

Dealers in computer hardware and software, for example, may have to assume an educational function. The product's transfer to the buyer might be only one phase of the sale; the customer must also be taught to use it.

Service thus becomes as important a sales factor as the product itself. But the temptation to do away with service in order to cut price is an inevitable presence, and it poses serious questions for manufacturers.

Should they, for example, leave dealers free to sell products with or without service? If so, wouldn't a full-service dealer be at a disadvantage, having to assume repair and educational functions for items he didn't sell?

Those opposing the bills, S. 430 and H.R. 585, contend that service in its various forms is built into the price of many high-tech products, and that pricing thus should remain a prerogative of the manufacturer.

The bills would limit the ability of manufacturers to end agreement with dealers because of pricing policies and also ban resale price maintenance agreements, by which manufacturers force dealers to maintain set prices.

A regulatory authority at the Heritage Foundation, which has supported almost every free market idea proposed in recent years, opposes this particular free-market notion. And his defense is, ironically, to maintain sound markets.

James L. Gattuso, senior policy analyst at the Washington-based foundation, contends dealers with good service departments benefit not only themselves but everyone selling the product. He offers this example:

A customer may go to a "full-service" computer store after seeing ads paid for by the store, obtain valuable advice from the dealer, and then go to a discount dealer and purchase the equipment for a much lower price.

This, he says, puts full-service dealers at a severe cost disadvantage, "ultimately forcing them to eliminate many services, to the detriment of the consumer."

Ending such agreements between manufacturer and dealer, says Gattuso, would hurt not just the consumer and full-service dealers, but the entire American economy, since it would, he contends, weaken U.S. competitiveness.

He sees another dangerous consequence. He believes that for competitive reasons and because of litigation threats from unhappy dealers, manufacturers might eliminate independent distributors and market their products directly.

The big loser, he maintains, would be the consumer. Yes, the very consumer the bills seek to protect. And that, it would appear, proves more than anything that the marketplace is indeed becoming a more complex place.

I-35 corridor residents not part of growth

AUSTIN (AP) — The financial status of residents of the Austin-San Antonio corridor generally has not improved despite rapid economic growth in the six-county area, according to University of Texas researchers.

"In all counties except Travis, per capita income and wages have remained below those of the state and the nation. The poverty rate in the corridor relative to the nation remains quite high, though it is slightly lower than that of Texas as a whole," said an article in Discovery magazine.

"This combination of relatively low wages for relatively highly educated workers, high housing costs, and general overcrowding implies that the benefits of industrial growth are not reaching all groups," the article said.

The article by Drs. Norman Glickman and Robert Wilson of the LBJ School of Public Affairs was based on a report to the Greater Austin-San Antonio Corridor Council.

The report was written by LBJ graduate students under the professors' direction at the request of the corridor council.

CARS

But sales of 11 top luxury car lines fell twice as fast — by 44.6 percent — over the same period.

Sales of prestigious cars such as BMW, Mercedes Benz, Porsche and Jaguar once made up 7 percent of all cars sold in Dallas County. Today, he said the number has declined to around 4 percent or 5 percent of the total market.

"Today we've got to be pretty lean and mean to stay profitable," Gibb said.

Stock Market Rallies

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed higher today in a session enlivened by brisk takeover activity.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 15.75 to 2,038.96 by noontime on Wall Street.

Gainers outnumbered losers by about 5 to 3 in the overall tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 858 up, 475 down and 492 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 133.99 million shares at noontime, up from 85.53 million at the same point Friday. A big chunk of that activity came in a few high-yielding stocks, representing plays on their impending dividends.

Analysts said optimistic traders still had their sights set on the 2,051.89 level in the Dow Jones industrial average, where it closed Jan. 7 for its highest closing reading since the crash last October.

The average failed in a bid to surpass that point last week, but brokers argued that it might be ready to make another try.

One concern facing the market is the report due Tuesday from the Commerce Department on the index of leading economic indicators for January.

Analysts generally expect the figure to show a decline. But the firm of Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. said the 0.2 percent drop originally reported for December might be revised to show a gain.

That would mean that the index would no longer have a string of three consecutive monthly declines, a phenomenon which is traditionally regarded as a potential recession warning.

On the takeover scene, Rorer Corp jumped 10⅝ to 36¾. The company agreed to be acquired by Whirlpool Corp. for $37.50 a share.

But Icahn has been stymied in his efforts to dismantle the company's takeover defenses and now seeks to put himself and four others on the company's board. According to Gov. Michael Castle of Delaware, the company managed to convince his state's legislature to adopt an anti-takeover law retroactively so it could be used to protect the business from Icahn.

Arthur Fleischer Jr., a corporate lawyer in New York, said the regulatory changes all have one major effect: They make it more onerous for hostile takeovers involving a bidder who tries to finance the deal by selling pieces of the target.

The tax change, which went into effect last year, repeals the General Utilities rule, a tax principle more than 50 years old that had made it less expensive for shareholders in control of a company to liquidate its assets. Under the new rule, which provides less favorable tax treatment, it can now cost more than double in some instances for a bidder to take over a company and then sell its assets.

"This change makes hostile bids more difficult by correcting an unjustified tax break," said Richard L. Schmalbeck, a tax professor at Duke Law School. "It was motiviated primarily by a desire to improve the tax system. But people knew it would make it more expensive to complete a takeover involving a liquidation."

In the antitrust area, a change last summer in the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act of 1976 requires a bidder who acts with partners to disclose much earlier how much of a stake the partnerhship holds. It also requires that the partnership receive government permission to buy more stock. Such prominent takeover specialists as Sir James Goldsmith, T. Boone Pickens and Icahn routinely rely on partnerships in hostile takeovers.

And more than two dozen states have moved to regulate takeovers in a myriad of ways that all have one common thread: They wind up giving the management of a target company much more breathing room, often by doubling the time in which they can restructure the business, mount a legal defense or look for a white knight to buy the concern.

The state laws also promote proxy contests, because many of them leave to the company's shareholders the decision of whether the concern should be sold. Within recent weeks, Coniston Partners have announced that it would wage a proxy fight for control of the Gillette Co. The Black & Decker Corp. said it would seek a shareholder vote to remove 10 directors of American Standard Inc. And the Henley Group increased its stake in the Santa Fe Southern Pacific Corp., vowing to continue a proxy fight.

BUSINESS & THE LAW

BANKS

Only a few banks began to underwrite such instruments, and they were temporarily blocked three weeks later by a court action brought by the Securities Industry Association, Wall Street's lobbying arm. Since the Fed's ruling, 13 banks have applied and become eligible for such underwritings once the moratorium ends.

The Securities Industry Association, meanwhile, has been turned down by the courts. The association lost in Federal District Court, and earlier this month, a three-judge panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the 2nd Circuit in Manhattan decided unanimously to uphold the lower court's ruling.

But Wall Street is still trying. Saying it intends to take its case to the Supreme Court, the association last week asked the Court of Appeals to delay its decision for a month.

Mindful of the uncertainties that still confront them in the courts and in Congress, the banks, mostly big money-center institutions, are not jumping for joy over the end of the moratorium. But they say they are more than ready to get back into business.

Two of the areas the banks may be about to enter — underwriting commercial paper and municipal revenue bonds — are among Wall Street's least profitable activities. A third, mortgage securities, can be highly profitable, but is also fraught with huge risk.

Salomon Brothers Inc. thought so little of the commercial paper and municipal bond business that it got out of both last year.

More recently, the First Boston Corp. acknowledged last week that it could lose as much as $30 million this quarter because of problems in its mortgage securities trading division. Last April, Merrill Lynch & Co. had a pre-tax loss of $377 million on a risky type of mortgage product it was trading.

"Business is not risk-free. We never said it was," said Howard M. Schneider, managing director of BT Securities, the Bankers Trust Co.'s securities subsidiary.

David W. Fisher at J. P. Morgan Securities Inc., a subsidiary of J.P. Morgan & Co., said that while the profits from the individual businesses themselves might not be great, they offered the prospect of greater rewards in other areas.

"This is a linkage business," he said. "In and of itself, commercial paper is not a money spinner. But it provides leverage into other parts of a customer's financial plan. And most investors prefer to do one-stop shopping."

FUNDS

"We've been buying proven reserves for $4 to $5 per barrel," said Ward Merrick, president of Merrico Resources, a fund sponsor based in Ardmore, Okla. "Lifting costs might be another $5 per barrel." So there appears to be room for profit even at $16 to $17 a barrel.

The price of admission is relatively low. The funds permit investments of as little as $5,000 ($2,000 for IRAs or Keoghs). Large financial services companies such as Prudential-Bache, Paine Webber and New York Life have their own income funds, while other funds are sold through smaller brokers and financial planners.

Generally 12 to 18 percent of the purchase price goes to the sponsors as front-end fees and commission, typical amounts for limited partnerships. Revenues are generated from selling the reserves until they are gone, which may take 15 years or more. This money is distributed among the limited partners (investors) and the general partner (the sponsor), with the investors usually receiving 85 percent to 90 percent.

Sponsors expect initial distributions of around 16 percent to 18 percent per year. If that sounds high, it's because each distribution also includes a return of the original investment as the oil and gas is used up. There is no final payout, as with a bond or a certificate of deposit. Perhaps half of the distributions will be sheltered by an allowance for depletion. The portion that's taxable will be "passive income," so investors can use losses from old tax shelters as an offset.

"We expect returns to investors will be the equivalent of 12 percent to 14 percent from a bond," said Herb Williamson, vice president of Midland's Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. "If oil prices rise, those returns likely would be higher."

Can income funds truly buy reserves today at prices that will yield attractive returns? "There's no typical deal," said Ron Emmons, tax partner in the Tulsa office of the accounting firm of Seidman & Seidman-BDO. "Around here, prices seem to be a bit higher than what the sponsors say. And lifting costs can't be known, because so much can happen along the way."

Emmons said that wealthy, sophisticated individuals in his area of the country were not buying oil and gas reserves today. "However," he said, "small investors who want to diversify by adding oil and gas to their portfolios may do well in an income fund. Choosing a sponsor with a good reputation is vital."

An income fund may be less risky than a drilling fund, but risks remain, and a further drop in oil prices is just one of them.

Buying oil and gas reserves is not like buying an office building, with tenants on long-term leases. It's impossible to know for certain how much really is in the ground, or how long it will last.

Moreover, the funds are not liquid. Many general partners make buy-back offers, perhaps once a year, but those offers typically are at a steep discount from the sponsor's estimate of current value. These "redemption" plans may be further curtailed by a recent change in tax law, which threatens to impose extra taxes on partnerships that change hands too freely. Investors should plan on holding for the long term. "In practice," said Williamson of Parker & Parsley, "resales of limited partnership interests in oil and gas partnerships are virtually nonexistent."

And investors must realize that their assets are literally depleting as the oil and gas are sold. To maintain your principal, distributions should be automatically deposited into a money market fund, a bank account or a mutual fund. Most general partners will cooperate.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Stop, limit orders differ in use

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Because I was going to be on an extended business trip, I delivered certificates for eight stocks to my broker in September and placed "stop orders" to sell — all at prices below their then prevailing market prices.

When the market crashed on Oct. 19, all my stocks were sold — only one at my stop order price, the other seven at much lower prices. I lost almost $10,000.

My broker blames this on the "specialists," who handled the stop orders. But my broker's firm had possession of the stock certificates. Shouldn't that firm have been more responsible in the handling of the stop orders?

Doyle

A. Nope. Your brokerage firm had no control over the execution of your stop orders. A stop order becomes a "market order" when the stock involved trades at or through the price named in the stop order and is immediately executed at the best available price. We'll go through this step by step.

Let's say you place a stop order to sell 100 shares of XYZ stock at "27" — $27 a share. Your brokerage firm sends your order to the floor of the stock exchange where XYZ is traded. There, it is entered in the "book" of the specialist who handles that stock.

As long as XYZ trades higher than 27, your order is not filled. But as soon as XYZ trades at 27 or lower, your 100 shares are sold. You might get $27 a share. In theory, you might get more. In practice, you most likely get less. The price at which a market order is executed depends on buying and selling demand for the stock at that particular time.

When stock prices are falling, the automatic executions of stop orders — which become market orders — accelerate the plunge. That unhappy financial fact of life was brought home to you and many other investors during the October crash. But it can happen at any time.

Q. If a stock I own is trading at, say, "32" — $32 a share — can I place a stop order to sell at, say, 31, with an arrangement that I will not take a lower price?

A. Not with a straight stop order. However, you can place a "stop limit order," which becomes a "limit order" to sell at no lower than the specified price when the stock trades at or through the price named.

In your example, your stock would not be sold as long as the stock trades above 31. If that stock does trade at 31, your order — which became a limit order — would be activated. Your order then will be executed, if it is possible to sell your shares at 31.

The problem with a stop limit order is that it might not be executed, because there no longer are buyers for that stock at 31. Even if there are some buyers, there might be "stock ahead" — other limit orders to sell at 31 placed before yours. Unless all those orders are executed, yours won't be.

Q. Exactly who are the specialists on the New York Stock Exchange?

A. They are NYSE members who "make markets" in stocks assigned to them by the exchange. There are approximately 450 specialists on the exchange.

A specialist has two major functions.

First, he is supposed to maintain "a fair and orderly market, insofar as reasonably practical," in the stocks in which he is registered as the specialist. That involves risking his capital by buying or selling for his own account when there is a disparity between supply and demand. Some specialist fell down on that job during the October crash.

Second, he acts as a broker's broker by executing stop orders, limit orders and stop limit orders left with him by other members of the exchange. When you place such an order with a brokerage firm, that firm's representative on the exchange can't wait around the "trading post" where that stock is traded until the stock reaches the price named in your order. So your order is turned over to the specialist.

Robert M. White III, editor of the Mexico (Missouri) Ledger, displays copies of phone charges billed to his newspaper at a recent press conference in Washington, D.C.

Phone credit cards prove to add up to wrong number for firms

WASHINGTON (AP) — Telephone credit cards make it easier to charge calls but they're also making it easier for thieves to steal the numbers and run up huge long-distance bills.

The thieves are not necessarily the users. They often sell the stolen numbers to others who use them to dial around the world.

Toll fraud costs the long-distance companies about half a billion dollars a year, about 1 percent of the industry's revenues, according to the industry-sponsored Communications Fraud Control Association.

Despite phone companies' security efforts, thieves are coming up with bold new deceptions aimed at the unsuspecting.

Officials at the Mexico (Mo.) Ledger fell into such a trap with a Southwestern Bell calling card, which the newspaper used to make long-distance calls on American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s network, according to Editor Robert M. White II.

Southwestern Bell, using a computer to monitor calling-card use by its customers, detected unusually high use by the newspaper one weekend in January. After consulting the newspaper, it canceled the card and issued a new one.

Publisher Max Thomson says that on the same day the new code was issued, he got a call from a man who said he was from AT&T and needed to verify the new credit card number assigned to the newspaper because someone was trying to use it. Unsuspecting, Thomson gave the caller the new number.

Within days, the card again was being used to charge calls around the world, and by the time Southwestern Bell's computer sent up another red flag, the newspaper's card had run up charges of more than $4,500.

The calls included one for $155.46 from a New York pay phone to Mali and another costing $105.27 from the same phone to the same number in Mali 12 hours later; a $144.15 call that lasted two and a half hours between a Jersey City, N.J., phone booth and China. Others calls went to Kuwait, Bangladesh, Gambia, Senegal, Spain, Taiwan and the Dominican Republic, among other places.

As is the practice of most phone companies, Southwestern Bell didn't charge the newspaper for the unauthorized calls.

But the Ledger has ensured that it won't happen again. "We no longer have credit cards," Thomson said.

Southwestern Bell officials aren't sure how the newspaper's card number was stolen initially. Some codes are obtained by computer hackers who dial into a long-distance company's electronic files and find secret billing codes.

Long-distance companies are improving their network software to help detect unauthorized access quickly, and they are phasing out their shorter codes and adopting 14-digit replacements, which are harder for hackers to crack.

But thieves don't need a computer to get a code. Some hang around phone booths where callers are dialing from cards and "they'll use binoculars, mirrors, anything they possibly can" to read the numbers off the cards or even memorize the numbers as the caller is punching them into the phone, said Everick Bowens, president of the fraud control association.

With codes in hand, hustlers and hackers then look for customers.

Pipeline memo barely made it onto paper

By PETE YOST

WASHINGTON (AP) — If lawyer E. Robert Wallach had stayed with his original plan, Attorney General Edwin Meese III's files would never have contained a 1985 memo outlining a plan to pay the Israeli Labor Party to ensure the safety of a proposed $1 billion Iraqi oil pipeline.

The memo to Meese is part of a three-document package that Wallach gave to the attorney general on the same day in September 1985 in an attempt to revive the project, which was foundering over Iraq's demand for an insurance package against Israeli bombing.

The documents, now part of special prosecutor James McKay's criminal investigation into Meese's activities, were released last week by the attorney general's lawyers. In addition, three telex messages from Wallach to a Swiss oilman who was a partner in the pipeline project surfaced last week and showed that Wallach and other project backers attempted to have Pentagon budget money paid to the Israelis not to bomb the pipeline.

The pipeline memos also have drawn the attention of Iran-Contra independent counsel Lawrence Walsh because they draw the first link between the pipeline project and the trade of arms for hostages.

The burgeoning paper trail in the Meese-pipeline episode includes a Sept. 19, 1985 handwritten letter from then-Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres expressing support for the proposed pipeline.

But McKay, who is investigating Meese's role in the pipeline project, is focusing on two memos, both dated Sept. 25, 1985, from Wallach to Meese. The Peres letter was attached to the first memo, a four-page explanation of the problems surrounding the project. In it, Wallach urged Meese to help round up support from top U.S. officials.

One problem, Wallach wrote, was that seeking the insurance package required disclosing to a number of bankers and others the nature of the "security package" guaranteeing that Israel wouldn't destroy the line.

Wallach said this package involved the "never-to-be-stated but fully understood quid pro quo."

Meese's lawyers say the quid pro quo was a reference to plans by Wallach's client, Swiss oilman Bruce Rappaport, to make available to Israel substantial amounts of oil from the pipeline. Discounts on the oil were to amount to $650 million to $700 million over 10 years.

However, government sources familiar with the investigation of Meese say McKay is trying to determine whether the "quid pro quo" memo is related to the second memo that Wallach handed over to Meese at the same time.

NATION IN BRIEF

Salvage crew raises sunken oil barge after one month

ANACORTES, Wash. (AP) — A salvage crew raised a sunken oil barge Sunday from the murky depths of Guemes Channel, one month after it sank and spilled some 70,000 gallons of heavy bunker oil into Washington's inland waters.

With the inverted barge held at the surface by thick cables strung from two giant cranes, crews began pumping the more than 300,000 gallons of oil that remained in the vessel into a second barge. Officials said they wanted to get the stricken barge floating on its own before they attempted to slowly roll it right side up.

A helicopter hovered overhead to track the movement of an oil sheen that appeared as the barge was raised. The sheen was caused by 500 to 1,000 gallons of lighter oil that was detected after the barge broke the surface about 7 a.m., said Mark Stewart of the state Division of Emergency Management.

The barge initially held about 22,000 gallons of light oil in addition to the heavy oil.

Drunken driver arrests up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Arrests for driving under the influence of alcohol rose more than 220 percent from 1970 to 1986, while the number of licensed drivers increased by just 42 percent in that period, a government report says.

In 1986, some 1.8 million people were arrested for driving under the influence, compared to 556,000 in 1970, said a report issued Sunday by the Bureau of Justice Statistics. In 1983, the peak year, there were 1.9 million such arrests, one for every 80 drivers.

The study also found that rates for driving under the influence were highest among 21-year-olds, reaching a peak in 1983 with a rate of one arrest for every 39 licensed drivers of that age.

Since 1983, most states have phased in new laws raising the minimum age for buying or selling alcohol to 21.

Roberts defends colleagues

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Oral Roberts told a church service that some people are trying to embarrass evangelists and ruin their ministries.

"Right now, this old world and the media and certain church people are dragging the name of evangelists in the mud," said the 70-year Roberts.

Roberts, of Tulsa, Okla., mentioned no one by name when he spoke to more than 1,200 people Sunday at the Christian Center in suburban Gahanna.

Panama won't get maximum penalties, newspaper claims

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States will not impose maximum penalties against Panama for failing to take steps to control drug trafficking, a newspaper reported today.

Under a 1986 anti-drug law, the president has until Tuesday to certify whether countries in which major drug trafficking occurs are fully cooperating in efforts to fight the trafficking.

The New York Times, quoting senior Reagan administration officials, said President Reagan last weekend signed an order to decertify Panama, but that he declined to use his discretionary powers to impose the maximum penalties.

However, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the president has not made a decision. "It hasn't gone to him yet. It's going today."

The law requires the United States to vote against new loans by international development banks such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to decertified countries. In the case of Panama, the United States also would be obliged to keep in place the military and economic sanctions imposed last year.

Other sanctions Reagan has the power to impose include the barring of airline flights between Panama and the United States; imposition of a 50 percent tax on all Panamanian imports; and the loss of preferential tariff treatment.

Some administration officials have said the president should impose full sanctions as a means of conveying disapproval to Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, Panama's de facto leader. Noriega was indicted in Florida this month on drug-trafficking charges.
