Flu season shows signs of leveling off

By Mike Stobbe and Carla K. Johnson
Associated Press

NEW YORK — This nasty flu season, which has been worsening for months, may finally be leveling off.

Health officials on Friday said about 1 of every 13 visits to the doctor last week was for fever, cough and other symptoms of the flu. That's no reason for health officials to celebrate yet: That level is among the highest in a decade. But it's no worse than last week, and flu activity had been increasing each week since November.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention report said the number of states reporting heavy flu patient traffic also held steady at 43.

"I thought I was going to die, I really did," said Ben Bland, a 39-year-old event planner in Kansas City, Missouri, who was hospitalized this week with pneumonia on top of flu. "My lungs felt like they were going to blow out of my esophagus every time I coughed. My body ached head to toe."

This season started early and has been driven by a formidable type of flu that tends to put more people in the hospital and cause more deaths. Making a bad year worse, this year's flu vaccine is estimated to be only 25 percent effective against that type.

Preliminary data released last week indicated patient traffic in doctor's offices and emergency rooms this flu season was as bad as the height of the swine flu pandemic in 2009. However, the CDC readjusted its numbers down slightly in Friday's report, meaning this season did not quite match the intensity of flu activity seen in October 2009.

Still, it counts as one of the most intense flu seasons in more than a decade. Whether it's peaking or not, flu season is still expected to last several more weeks.

"We are not out of the woods yet. We are not seeing any increase, and that is encouraging. But there still is a lot of flu happening out there," said Dr. Daniel Jernigan, the CDC's influenza chief. He said people should stay home from work or school if they get sick to prevent spreading flu, and people should still get vaccinated if they haven't already. Even though the vaccine is not as powerful as officials hoped, it can lessen the illness's severity, keep people out of the hospital, and save lives.

Oil is up 4.2 percent

■ Futures posts first weekly increase since January

Bloomberg

Oil posted its first weekly increase since last month as rebounding equity markets eased concern about economic growth and a weakening dollar boosted the allure of commodities priced in the U.S. currency.

Futures in New York rose 0.6 percent on Friday and gained 4.2 percent this week. The greenback touched a three-year low earlier in the day before edging higher, though the increase wasn't enough to wipe out the previous four days' losses. Equity markets recovering from recent routs boosted confidence in bullish energy demand forecasts.

"Oil prices were strong because the stock market stabilized," said Phil Flynn, senior market analyst at Price Futures Group. "As long as we are going to see stock market stability, oil prices are going to look pretty good."

New York oil futures started 2018 with the best January in more than a decade, but all those gains were wiped out last week as collapsing equity markets

Permian Basin rig count is 433, decrease of 4

■ Midland County is unchanged at 47 rigs; Reeves is down 1 for total of 72

Houston Chronicle

Oil drilling activity picked up in a wide range of areas from Alaska to Oklahoma to the Gulf of Mexico, while the number of rigs in West Texas' booming Permian Basin actually declined by four, according to weekly data collected by Houston's Baker Hughes oilfield services firm.

The Permian has 433 rigs drilling for oil — which is more than half of all the nation's rigs — compared to 437 a week ago. Midland County is unchanged for a total of 47 and Reeves County is down one for a total of 72.

Texas also stayed flat overall with the Permian dip offset by small increases in other parts of the state such as South

Study: Texas quakes remain years after injection wells close

Associated Press

DALLAS — A university study analyzing a sequence of North Texas earthquakes has found that seismic activity can continue for years even after wastewater injection wells are closed in order to prevent them.

Researchers at Southern Methodist University said this week that high-volume injection near a critically stressed fault can "induce long-lasting seismicity."

The findings indicate that shutting down injection wells in reaction to earthquakes may not have the desired effect of immediately stopping them.

The researchers recently reported their findings in the peer-reviewed Journal of Geophysical Research.

They studied a series of quakes near Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport that began in 2008. Nearby wastewater injection was halted in 2009, but earthquakes continued for at least seven more years.

Records: Sheriff didn't pursue sex case against Texas church gunman

By Nomaan Merchant
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Sheriff's deputies didn't pursue a sexual assault investigation against the gunman in a mass shooting at a Texas church, even though the woman reporting it signed a complaint detailing the alleged attack, according to records released Friday.

The records also contradict the reason previously given for why the case stalled against Devin Patrick Kelley, four years before the November 2017 massacre at a tiny church in Sutherland Springs, Texas.

Had Kelley been prosecuted for sexual assault, a conviction could have stopped a trail of violent allegations that culminated in the shooting.

Authorities acknowledged Friday that the alleged victim was not given a forensic exam in June 2013 after reporting the assault, which she said had occurred three days earlier. And the investigation was listed as inactive because a detective at the Comal County sheriff's office couldn't contact Kelley, thinking he had moved. It remained inactive even after deputies were called to Kelley's home in February 2014 to investigate a separate domestic violence complaint against him.

"This was an error on the part of the sheriff's office," Comal County Sheriff Mark Reynolds told The Associated Press on Friday.

Kelley shot and killed 25 people on Nov. 5, 2017, at the First Baptist Church of Sutherland Springs. Authorities have put the official death toll at 26, because one of the victims was pregnant. Kelley died from a self-inflicted gunshot wound after being shot and chased by two residents when he was leaving the church, authorities have said.

By that time, Kelley had been court-martialed and removed from the Air Force on allegations that he abused his then-wife and a child. The following year, deputies were called to his home to investigate a domestic violence complaint, and he was accused of misdemeanor animal cruelty in Colorado.

The records released Friday include a handwritten statement from the woman who accused Kelley of sexual assault. She wrote that Kelley pinned her down in his room at his parents' home on June 15, 2013.

"He told me would hurt me when I didn't do what he said," she wrote.

The statement is dated June 18, 2013. The records also include a signed complaint agreement to press charges that included a warning that making a false statement was a crime.

Texas Department of Public Safety via AP, File

This undated file photo provided by the Texas Department of Public Safety shows Devin Patrick Kelley. Records released Friday detail a June 2013 investigation of allegations against Kelley, four years before the November 2017 mass shooting at a tiny church in Sutherland Springs. Sheriff's deputies didn't pursue a sexual assault investigation against Kelly who shot and killed 26 people at the Texas church, even though the woman reporting it signed a complaint detailing the alleged attack.

Her signature is blacked out on the agreement, as are any references to her name. But the records also include a statement from Kelley's first wife, Tessa Brennaman, who said the alleged victim told her about the incident a day later, on June 16, 2013.

Brennaman also said Kelley abused her repeatedly during their marriage, including slapping and choking her, and even "waterboarded" her. Their divorce was finalized in October 2012, according to court records.

But the released records also include Comal County detective Chris Garza's timeline of the case that says he left three voicemails for the alleged victim between July 2013 and September 2013. The records don't indicate whether he tried to visit her in person.

In an Oct. 7, 2013, letter, Garza told the victim that she had not returned his messages and that he needed her cooperation. "I cannot proceed without your help," Garza wrote.

According to Garza's timeline, the case was "inactivated pending contact from the victim." The Comal County district attorney's office has said no case was filed with prosecutors.

Reynolds said Friday that deputies eventually spoke to the victim in October. Garza then tried to contact Kelley, but was unsuccessful, and that the investigation "stailed," Reynolds said.

Kelley should have been arrested the following year, Reynolds said. But the sheriff's office did not have a case-tracking database that would have warned deputies responding to a domestic disturbance that Kelley was the subject of a sexual assault investigation. Reynolds, who took office as sheriff last year, said he is now creating such a database.

Phone numbers listed for Kelley's parents were out of service.

The Air Force has also said it failed to report Kelley's court-martial — and the resulting sentence of 12 months' confinement — to the FBI, which keeps criminal history records in databases used to conduct background checks of gun buyers.

stoked concern about economic growth. At the same time, U.S. shale production has continued to escalate, imperiling the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' efforts to drain a global glut.

West Texas Intermediate crude for March delivery added 34 cents to settle at $61.68 on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Brent for April settlement climbed 51 cents to close at $64.84 on the London-based ICE Futures Europe exchange. The global benchmark rose 3.3 percent this week.

The Bloomberg Dollar Spot Index, a gauge of the greenback against 10 major peers, was on track for a 1.4 percent decline this week. In equities, the S&P 500 Index and the Dow Jones Industrial Average were both poised to end the week up by more than 4 percent.

"This week, the dollar index starts trading lower and it has put a bid into the crude oil market, which is now trading relatively to a couple of weeks ago at high levels," said Bob Yawger, director of futures division at Mizuho Securities.

Flu

From 1A

Flu remained widespread in every state except Oregon and Hawaii, the same as the week before.

The new report shows that for the week ending Jan. 27, just under 10 percent of U.S. death certificates listed flu or pneumonia. That's down slightly from the week before, but indicates that flu remains at epidemic levels. There are as many as 56,000 deaths connected to the flu during a bad year.

Eighty-four children have died so far. Childhood deaths have reached about 170 in a season.

Figures released Thursday suggest this year's flu vaccine has worked fairly well in children younger than 9. That was no comfort to parents with sick children.

"It's horrible to see your child with a breathing mask on her face," said Stephanie Calvin, 35, of Mandeville, Louisiana, whose 4-year-old daughter has been sick with flu for four weeks.

Calvin has taken four days of unpaid time off work to care for her daughter, alternating with her husband. "I'm a mom before I'm an employee. It was a no-brainer to stay home with her."

Rig

From 1A

Texas' Eagle Ford shale and the Panhandle's Granite Wash region, which are up one for a total of 70 and 12, respectively.

Texas is home to 479 rigs overall, while Oklahoma is second with 123 rigs. New Mexico is next with 85 rigs.

A net total of seven new oil-drilling rigs were added across the country, which was balanced out by the seven-rig decline in gas activity. Gas-seeking rigs were taken offline in Louisiana, West Virginia and Ohio.

The total U.S. rig count is now up to 975 rigs — the highest number in nearly three years. Oil drilling currently accounts for 798 rigs of the total. The oil rig count last exceeded 800 in April 2015. The total U.S. rig count is well up from an all-time low of 404 rigs in May 2016, but still is lower than the peak of 1,609 in October 2014, before oil prices began plummeting.

U.S. oil was selling above $61 a barrel in early afternoon trading in New York.

4 small earthquakes recorded in northwestern Oklahoma

WAYNOKA — The U.S. Geological Survey reports four small earthquakes in northwestern Oklahoma, the strongest with a preliminary magnitude of 3.8.

No injuries or damage have been reported as a result of the Friday morning temblors near Waynoka. Geologists say damage is not likely in quakes below magnitude 4.0.

The 3.8 magnitude quake struck at 7:21 a.m. about 285 miles (459 kilometers) northwest of Oklahoma City.

A magnitude 3.4 quake struck the same area at 1:16 a.m. and magnitude 2.7 and 2.6 quakes struck minutes later.

Thousands of earthquakes have been recorded in Oklahoma in recent years with many linked to the underground injection of wastewater from oil and gas production.

Oklahoma regulators have directed several oil and gas producers in the state to close injection wells and reduce volumes in others.

OHIO

Gas well explodes; residents living nearby ordered to leave

T. CLAIRSVILLE — Residents living within a mile of an Ohio natural gas well that exploded and caught fire can't return home until officials get it to stop spewing gas and brine.

The Ohio Department of Natural Resources says the XTO Energy well in Belmont County's York Township exploded Thursday morning. No injuries have been reported.

XTO spokeswoman Karen Matusic says 24 employees were preparing the newly drilled well for production when the explosion occurred.

Matusic says 36 homes had to be evacuated. XTO is a subsidiary of Irving, Texas-based ExxonMobil Corp.

Three producing wells on the same pad were shut down.

State officials say air and water air samples are being collected and that the Ohio and U.S. environmental protection agencies are taking measures to ensure residents' safety.

New Texas group opposes bipartisan efforts to end cash bail

By Will Weissert
Associated Press

AUSTIN — A new Texas nonprofit promoting crime victims' rights is opposing bipartisan efforts to end cash bail systems that have gained traction around the country — hitting back at one of the few issues that unified powerful advocates on both the right and left.

Formally kicking off Thursday, the Texas Alliance for Safe Communities said it wants to strengthen public safety and curb violent crime by pushing in the Republican-controlled Legislature and beyond for criminal justice system accountability while preserving "judicial discretion."

The group hopes to halt bail system overhauls favoring assessments of defendants' danger to the public.

Supporters of such changes say defendants deemed little risk should be eligible to be released from jail on "unsecured" bonds that don't require cash payments — rather than traditional, cash bond systems where defendants forfeit payments if they fail to show up in court.

"Texas communities are under assault by activist judges and misguided bureaucrats determined to let violent criminals get out of jail free," said Mark Miner, who was spokesman for former Texas Gov. Rick Perry's 2012 presidential campaign and now holds the same role for the alliance.

Similar groups defending cash bonds have popped up in other states and are often sponsored by bail bond companies worried about losing business.

Miner said bail bond interests "are assisting with funding as the group is beginning."

He said two of its five founding board members have links to the industry.

"They are part of the organization, but they're not the only part," Miner said of bail bond interests, adding that the alliance expects to attract members of other victims' groups, police organizations and "many ordinary citizens."

Bail system reform has been approved in New Jersey and New Mexico, and discussed in California, Florida and elsewhere. It's been applauded by conservatives anxious to reduce prison costs, like the powerful Austin think tank the Texas Public Policy Foundation, as well as groups including the American Civil Liberties Union, that argue current bail rules — like the prison system as a whole — disproportionately punish minorities and poor people.

"Money bail doesn't have anything to do with public safety because there's not really a correlation between how much money someone has and whether they're a risk to the public," said Marc Levin, the Texas Public Policy Foundation's vice president for criminal justice policy.

Billionaire industrialists Charles and David Koch haven't been as vocal about bail reform, but have promoted a variety of wider criminal justice reform efforts, including initiatives meant to reduce prisoners' recidivism rates.

A proposal mandating risk assessments for bail-eligible criminal defendants was approved by the Texas Senate last year but stalled in the state House. Still, a lawsuit in Harris County, Texas' largest, prompted a federal judge to rule in October that county bail requirements violated the rights of poor defendants accused of minor crimes — and to order jails to release within 24 hours nearly all offenders facing misdemeanor charges.

Late Wednesday, an appeals court panel mostly upheld the previous decision but found some of its conclusions "overbroad" and ordered the 24-hour deadline pushed back to 48 hours.

That was a small win for the Alliance for Safe Communities, which had said that because misdemeanor defendants released in Harris County didn't have to put up a cash bond or hire a bail bond service, 43 percent failed to appear for subsequent court dates.

County officials, though, have questioned the accuracy of that figure, pointing to confusion in jail reports — including inmates possibly being double-counted.

The alliance has produced two online ads it contends highlight the dangers of ending cash bail.

They include the case of a Harris County man suspected of killing his girlfriend in October, days after he was previously jailed on assault charges but released after saying he couldn't afford $5,000 bail.

"The other side has been very well-financed, but on one side of the issue," Miner said.

Houston Police Officers Union President Joe Gamaldi said cash-free bonds should be extended to people jailed for minor offenses like shoplifting, but not violent criminals or repeat offenders.

"Not every case is the same," Gamaldi said, citing the same 43 percent failure-to-appear-in-court figure from Harris County. "When you paint everything with a broad brush, this is what happens."

Vice president's office confirms Pence's border tour in Rio Grande Valley

Vice President Mike Pence's office confirmed he will tour the U.S.-Mexico border in the Rio Grande Valley on Friday, as The Monitor reported on Tuesday.

Pence will be joined by Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen and Texas Republican Sen. Ted Cruz for "an operational tour of the U.S.-Mexico border," according to a White House official.

Pence and Nielsen will then meet with U.S. Customs and Border Protection to discuss "the need to secure America's borders and updates on the infrastructure and technology used to build the wall," the official said.

Border Patrol RGV Sector Chief Manuel Padilla is expected to be involved in the visit.

Prior to arriving in the Valley Friday afternoon, Pence will be in San Antonio providing keynote remarks at a fundraiser for Trump Victory, an organization that benefits President Donald Trump's re-election and the Republican National Committee.

Following his Valley visit, Pence will spend Saturday in Dallas at a tax reform event, followed by a keynote address at the Dallas County GOP's Reagan Day Dinner.

Officials: Man obsessed with YouTube stars likely shot self

Authorities say a New Mexico man who traveled to Austin to kill and rob two YouTube celebrities likely died of a self-inflicted gunshot after being confronted by police.

The Travis County medical examiner's office says that Christopher Giles was struck by police fire on Jan. 26 but the preliminary determination is he died by suicide.

Police say Giles shot out a glass door and entered the home of YouTube stars Gavin Free and Megan Turney after becoming infatuated with Turney and jealous of their relationship.

The couple called Austin police while hiding in a closet. Officers arrived and exchanged gunfire with Giles in the driveway.

A search of Giles' cellphone and electronics by investigators in Albuquerque, New Mexico, returned notes revealing his plans and his obsession with the couple.

Priest wanted for sexual assault turns himself in HOBBS — A southeastern New Mexico priest facing sexual assault charges has surrendered to authorities.

The Las Cruces Sun-News reports Rev. Ricardo Bauza voluntarily surrendered to Hobbs police this week more than three months after a warrant was issued for his arrest.

Bauza had been wanted by authorities since last October following allegations that he got into a shower with an adult male, and washed the victim's body with a loofah in the church rectory at St. Helena in Hobbs.

His arrest came less than a week after the alleged victim in the criminal case filed a civil lawsuit against Bauza and the Catholic Diocese of Las Cruces.

According to a 15-page criminal complaint filed, two male church members also told police Bauza showed them cell phone photos of his genitals.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The stars show the kind of day you'll have: 5-dynamic; 4-positive; 3-average; 2-so-so; 1-difficult

Note: Bigar's Stars is based on the degree of your sun at birth. The sign name is simply a label astrologers put on a set of degrees for convenience. For best results, readers should refer to the dates following each sign.

A baby born today has a Sun in Aquarius and a Moon in Pisces.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, Feb. 17, 2018:

This year you have a way of overwhelming others when you are pulling a problem apart in search of a solution. Be a better listener, and curb a tendency to be emotional. Trust your instincts about communication. If you are single, the second half of your birthday year will prove to be excellent for dating and meeting new people. You will enjoy this period. If you are attached, as a couple you will bring something new into your life after the summer. As a result, the two of you are likely to head in a new direction. PISCES expresses his or her compassion at odd times and places.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★★ Your temper could be close to the surface, which might create a problem when you least expect it. Try to discuss your strong feelings before they evolve and become even more explosive. Make time for a loved one you don't see often. Tonight: Play it low-key.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★★★ Zero in on your priorities while you still can, before the pace quickens. You will want to be as clear as possible, especially when dealing with a friend. Fatigue marks your decisions. You know when you have done enough; honor that guideline today. Tonight: Follow the gang.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★ You will be more in touch with your feelings soon, which might feel out of place, considering what you currently are dealing with. Honor what is going on by pitching in. You can and will make a big difference. Ask a friend for help, if necessary. Tonight: A must appearance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★★ You could be tired of being patient, especially as everyone seems to test that characteristic in you. Avoid getting angry, and simply handle the issue at hand. Share an idea with someone who has the ability to visualize it. Listen to feedback. Tonight: Take a trip!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★ You could be in a situation where you feel you must work with a partner on a key issue. You are best in one-on-one discussions. You have a resilient personality that seems to come through for you more often than not. Tonight: Squeeze in some exercise to relieve tension.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★ Be aware of what is happening, and see how your significant other or a loved one reacts. This person might not be on the same page as you. Communication will be instrumental in sharing your perspective and making sure the other party "gets" it. Tonight: Accept an offer.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★★ Defer to a key person in your life. Pressure builds, and you could find that you lose your temper a little too easily. You might be prone to acting out by going on a spending spree. Listen well to any feedback you get from a close loved one. Tonight: Think carefully about a project.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★★ You will be unusually expressive. In fact, you might even shock a loved one with what you share. You could be somewhat vague when discussing problems about your finances. You and a partner do not see a certain issue the same way. Tonight: Indulge without spending money.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★ You might decide to help out a friend and pitch in right away. You are quite capable of lending a hand. You also might see a more efficient way of dealing with this particular matter. Do what you feel is best. Don't be surprised by how a friend reacts. Tonight: All smiles.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★★ You could be on top of your game, but explaining what you are seeing might be more difficult than you had imagined. Honor a fast change. You likely will discover that you are more irritable than usual. Take a walk, and you'll feel better. Tonight: At a favorite place with friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★ Continue to use caution with your finances. You have a lot of get-up-and-go, but what you don't want to do is misplace your energy. Think before you leap, especially in serious situations. As a result, you will be a lot happier. Tonight: Buy a favorite treat on the way home.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★ Take advantage of the moment, and let people observe you while you're on top of your game. You are likely to come up with wonderful solutions. Use caution if you opt to bring up a topic that might make others uncomfortable. Choose your words carefully. Tonight: Say "yes."

Florida gunman had extra ammo at school, fired for 3 minutes

Suspected school shooter Nikolas Cruz makes a video appearance in Broward County court Thursday before Judge Kim Theresa Mollica. Cruz is facing 17 charges of premeditated murder in the mass shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Fla.

PARKLAND, Fla. — The teenager accused of using a semi-automatic rifle to kill 17 people at a Florida high school confessed to carrying out one of the nation's deadliest school shootings and carried extra ammunition in his backpack, according to a sheriff's department report released Thursday.

Nikolas Cruz told investigators that he shot students in the hallways and on the grounds of Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, north of Miami, the report from the Broward County Sheriff's Office said.

Cruz said he brought more loaded magazines to the school and kept them in the backpack until he got to campus.

As the gunman moved through the school, he fired into five classrooms — four on the first floor and one on the second floor, Sheriff Scott Israel said.

The shooting lasted for three minutes. The assailant then went to the third floor and dropped his AR-15 rifle and the backpack and ran out of the building, attempting to blend in with fleeing students, Israel said.

After the rampage, the suspect headed to a Wal-Mart and bought a drink at a Subway restaurant before walking to a McDonald's. He was taken into custody about 40 minutes after leaving the McDonald's, the sheriff said.

A day after the attack, a fuller portrait emerged of the shooter, a loner who had worked at a dollar store, joined the school's ROTC program and posted photos of weapons on Instagram. At least one student said classmates joked that Cruz would "be the one to shoot up the school."

The 19-year-old orphan whose mother died last year was charged with murder Thursday in the assault that devastated this sleepy community on the edge of the Everglades. It was the nation's deadliest school attack since a gunman targeted an elementary school in Newtown, Connecticut, more than five years ago.

Meanwhile, students struggled to describe the violence that ripped through their classrooms just before the school day ended.

Catarina Linden, a 16-year-old sophomore, said she was in an advanced math class Wednesday when the gunfire began.

"He shot the girl next to me," she said, adding that when she finally was able to leave the classroom, the air was foggy with gun smoke. "I stepped on so many shell casings. There were bodies on the ground, and there was blood everywhere."

State Sen. Bill Galvano visited the high school Thursday and was allowed to go up to the third floor, where he was shown bullet holes that marked where Cruz had tried to shoot out the windows at point-blank range. But the high-impact glass did not shatter.

Authorities told Galvano that Cruz apparently wanted to shoot out the windows so he could fire on the students running away from the school. Police told Galvano that it was not that difficult to open the windows.

"Thank God he didn't," Galvano said.

Among the dead were a football coach who also worked as a security guard, a senior who planned to attend Lynn University and an athletic director who was active in his Roman Catholic church.

The last of the bodies were removed from the high school Thursday after authorities analyzed the crime scene. Thirteen wounded survivors were still hospitalized, including two in critical condition.

Authorities have not offered any specific motive, except to say that Cruz had been kicked out of the high school, which has about 3,000 students and serves an affluent suburb where the median home price is nearly $600,000. Students who knew him described a volatile teenager whose strange behavior had caused others to end friendships with him.

Cruz was ordered held without bond at a brief court hearing. He wore an orange jumpsuit with his hands cuffed at his waist. His attorney had her arm around Cruz during the short appearance. Afterward, she called him a "broken human being."

He was being held under a suicide watch, Executive Chief Public Defender Gordon Weekes told reporters.

Wednesday's shooting was the 17th incident of gunfire at an American school this year. Of the 17 incidents, one involved a suicide, two involved active shooters who killed students, two involved people killed in arguments and three involved people who were shot but survived. Nine involved no injuries at all.

As the criminal case began to take shape, President Donald Trump, in an address to the nation, promised to "tackle the difficult issue of mental health," but avoided any mention of guns. Trump, who owns a private club in Palm Beach, about 40 miles from Parkland, said he planned to visit the grieving community.

He did not answer shouted questions about guns as he left the room.

Trump, who did not speak publicly immediately after the shooting, weighed in on Twitter early Thursday, calling the suspect "mentally disturbed" and stressing that it was important to "report such instances to authorities, again and again!"

In the case of Cruz, at least one person did report him.

FBI agent Rob Lasky said the FBI investigated a 2017 YouTube comment that said "I'm going to be a professional school shooter." But the agency could not identify the person who made the comment, which was from an account using the name Nikolas Cruz. It was left on a YouTube video of a blogger and bail bondsman from Mississippi named Ben Bennight.

In a Buzzfeed article , Bennight said he called the FBI, and agents came out to talk with him. They called him again Wednesday.

Officials were also investigating whether authorities missed other warning signs about Cruz's potentially violent nature.

He had been expelled from the school for "disciplinary reasons," according to the sheriff, who said he did not know the specifics.

One student said Cruz had been abusive to his ex-girlfriend and that his expulsion was over a fight with her new boyfriend.

Math teacher Jim Gard told the Miami Herald that Cruz may have been identified as a potential threat before Wednesday's attack. Gard believes the school had sent out an email warning teachers that Cruz should not be allowed on campus with a backpack.

The leader of a white nationalist militia called the Republic of Florida said Cruz was a member of his group and had participated in exercises in Tallahassee. Jordan Jereb said he had only a brief interaction with Cruz a few years ago. The group wants Florida to become its own white ethno-state.

Neither the Leon County Sheriff's Office in Tallahassee nor the Southern Poverty Law Center could confirm any link between Cruz and the militia.

Jereb appeared to back away from his claim later Thursday. Someone posting under his name on Gab, a social media site popular with far-right extremists, complained about getting criticized over a "prank," claimed there was a "misunderstanding" and said he received "a bunch of conflicting information."

Cruz's mother, Lynda Cruz, died of pneumonia Nov. 1, and his father died previously, according to the arrest affidavit.

Two federal law enforcement officials said the Smith & Wesson M&P 15 .223 was purchased legally last year at Sunrise Tactical Gear in Florida.

Young shooting survivors stepped from school into gun debate

By Kelli Kennedy and Jason Dearen
Associated Press

PARKLAND, Fla. — Dead bodies were still inside Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School when survivors of this week's shooting began speaking out about gun violence. It seemed as if the teens had stepped straight from the bullet-scarred school into the nation's gun debate.

Rather than retreating back into their private lives, the young people who saw classmates slain at the desks next to them are fast becoming advocates for stronger weapons laws and a safer world.

David Hogg, a senior and news director at the high school, recorded video of Wednesday's massacre as he huddled in a room with fellow students.

"Imagine hearing bullets ... it's absolutely awful," Hogg said. "This is why people need to be politically active. This needs to be a turning point."

In the aftermath of other shootings, many survivors try to heal in private and return as best they can to daily life. If there is an outcry for new gun legislation or better background checks, it often fades in days or weeks.

Will this time be any different than the short-lived movements that followed shootings at the Pulse nightclub in Orlando or a country music concert in Las Vegas? The students say yes. They say they are tired of seeing blood and corpses on classroom floors, and they want their generation to be the catalyst for change.

So far, the teens have sparred with gun-rights activists on social media, given many television interviews and spoken at vigils that doubled as rallies for safer gun laws. A social media campaign under the hashtag #neveragain also took off on Twitter, and another student did an "ask me anything" chat on Reddit.

"I was hiding in a closet for two hours. It was about guns. You weren't there, you don't know how it felt," student Carly Novell tweeted in response to a gun-rights backer who criticized the response to the shooting. "Guns give these disgusting people the ability to kill other human being. THIS IS about guns and this is about all the people who had their life abruptly ended because of guns."

At a vigil for the victims, a crowd of more than 1,000 people, consisting largely of students, chanted "No more guns, no more guns."

Some teens have been critical of President Donald Trump for failing to mention guns in his comments about the attack at their school, and many more have pointed out the thousands in campaign contributions Trump and Florida Republican Sen. Marco Rubio have taken from the National Rifle Association.

A weeping 19-year-old Tyra Hemans held posters Thursday of her dead friends, along with one that said "ENOUGH NO GUNS #GunReformNow."

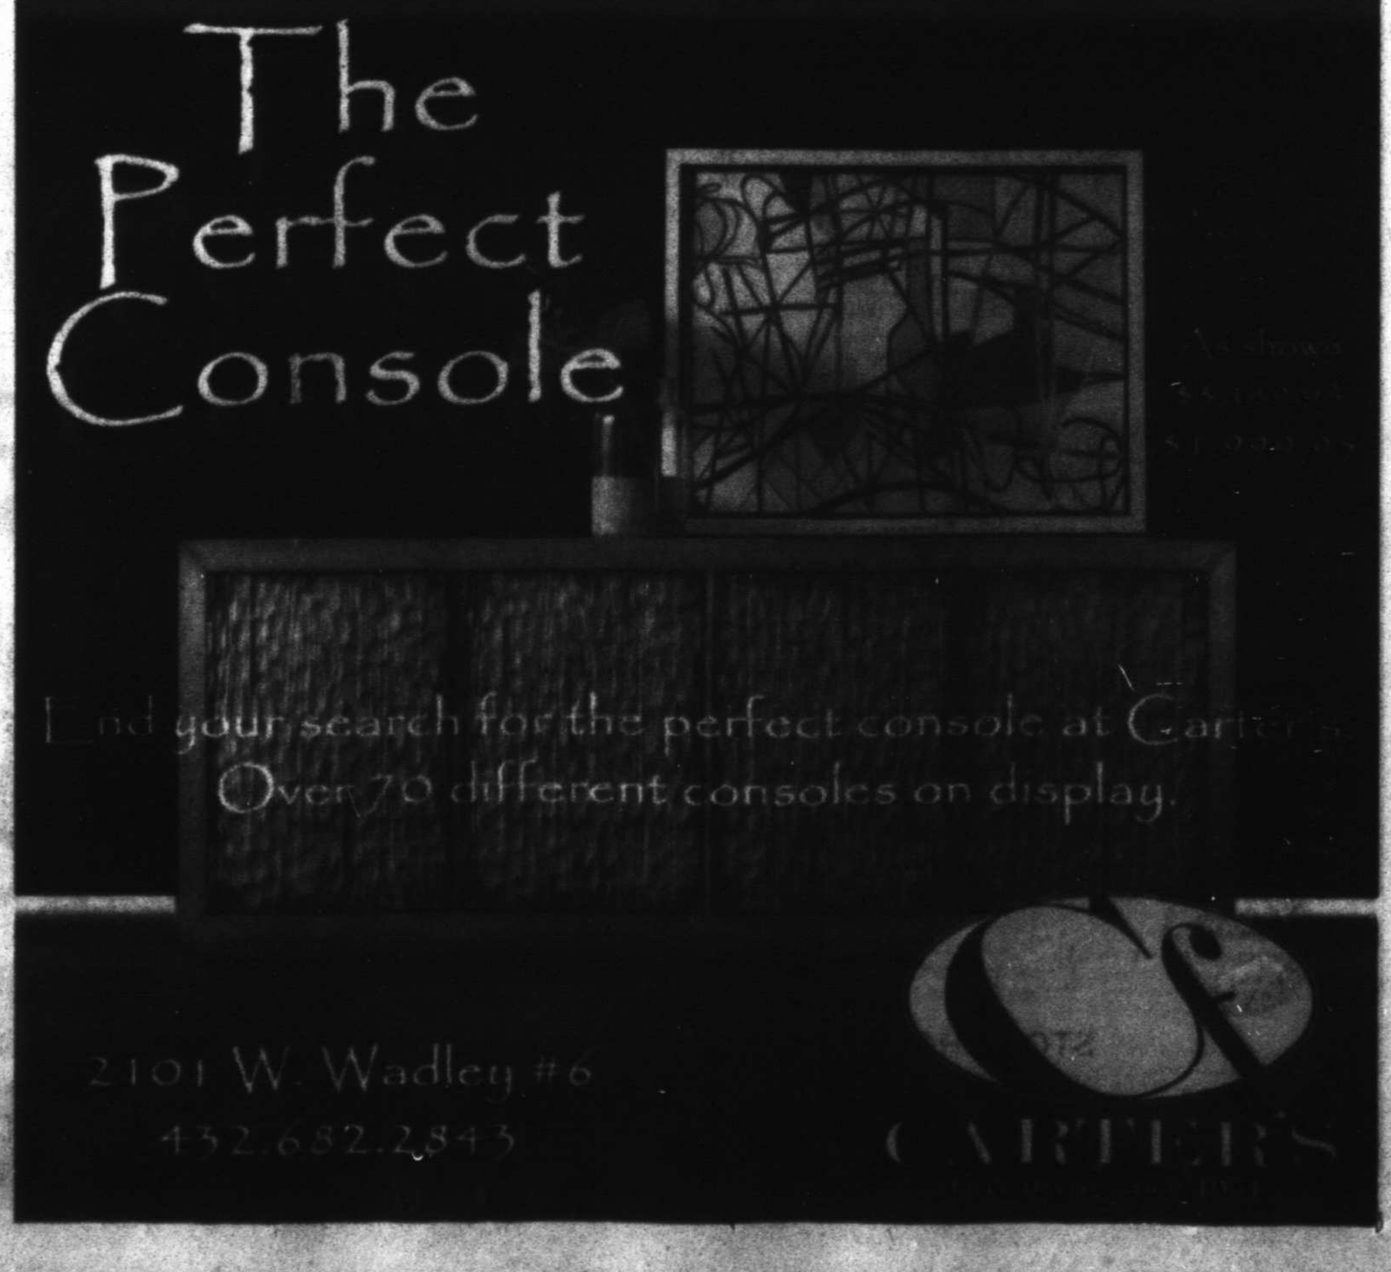
"I decided to make these signs so that when Donald Trump visits Parkland he knows that this is what I want. I want Congress to understand he took 17 lives from me yesterday. My friend will literally never get to say 'I graduated high school,'" she said through tears.

Parkland Vice Mayor Stacy Kagan said she was organizing a trip next week to Tallahassee to urge lawmakers to act on gun reforms. The city said Friday that details were not complete.

"We need every mom and every dad and every kid" in all the cities to come with us. "It's time to say, 'Enough. This is enough.'"

Since the massacre, money been flowing in to gun-safety groups, including Everytown for Gun Safety, a group backed by former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg that seeks stricter gun laws. The group said it has received $800,000 in unsolicited donations since Wednesday.

Students elsewhere have started joining the chorus from Parkland. On Friday, about 100 students from South Broward High School walked out of school to protest gun violence, carrying signs that said "Do Something" and "Protect our Kids, Not Your Guns."



Russians charged with meddling in 2016 presidential race

By Eric Tucker
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In an extraordinary indictment, the U.S. special counsel accused 13 Russians Friday of an elaborate plot to disrupt the 2016 presidential election, charging them with running a huge but hidden social media trolling campaign aimed in part at helping Republican Donald Trump defeat Democrat Hillary Clinton.

The federal indictment, brought by special counsel Robert Mueller, represents the most detailed allegations to date of illegal Russian meddling during the campaign that sent Trump to the White House. It also marks the first criminal charges against Russians believed to have secretly worked to influence the outcome.

The Russian organization was funded by Yevgeny Prigozhin, the indictment says. He is a wealthy St. Petersburg businessman with ties to the Russian government and President Vladimir Putin.

Trump quickly claimed vindication Friday, noting in a tweet that the alleged interference efforts began in 2014 — "long before I announced that I would run for President."

"The results of the election were not impacted. The Trump campaign did nothing wrong — no collusion!" he tweeted.

But the indictment does not resolve the collusion question at the heart of the continuing Mueller probe, which before Friday had produced charges against four Trump associates. U.S. intelligence agencies have previously said the Russian government interfered to benefit Trump, including by orchestrating the hacking of Democratic emails, and Mueller has been assessing whether the campaign coordinated with the Kremlin.

The latest indictment does not focus on the hacking but instead centers on a social media propaganda effort that began in 2014 and continued past the election, with the goal of producing distrust in the American political process. Trump himself has been reluctant to acknowledge the interference and any role that it might have played in propelling him to the White House.

The indictment does not allege that any American knowingly participated in Russian meddling, or suggest that Trump campaign associates had more than "unwitting" contact with some of the defendants who posed as Americans during election season. It does lay out a vast and wide-ranging effort to sway political opinion in the United States.

The 13 Russians are not in custody and not likely to ever face trial. The Justice Department has increasingly favored indicting foreign defendants in absentia as a way of publicly shaming them and effectively barring them from foreign travel.

The Russian group's strategy included purchasing internet advertisements in the names of Americans whose identities it had stolen, staging political rallies while posing as American political activists and paying people in the U.S. to promote or disparage candidates.

"This indictment serves as a reminder that people are not always who they appear to be on the internet," Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein said Friday. "The indictment alleges that the Russian conspirators want to promote discord in the United States and undermine public confidence in democracy. We must not allow them to succeed."

The surreptitious campaign was organized by the Internet Research Agency, a notorious Russian troll farm that the indictment says sought to conduct "information warfare against the United States of America."

The company, among three Russian entities named in the indictment, had a multimillion-dollar budget and hundreds of workers divided by specialties and assigned to day and night shifts. According to the indictment, the company was funded by companies controlled by Prigozhin, the wealthy Russian who has been dubbed "Putin's chef" because his restaurants and catering businesses have hosted the Kremlin leader's dinners with foreign dignitaries.

Prigozhin said Friday he was not upset by the indictment.

"Americans are very impressionable people," he was quoted as saying by Russia's state news agency. They "see what they want to see."

The election-meddling organization, looking to conceal its Russian roots, purchased space on computer servers within the U.S., used email accounts from U.S. internet service providers and took control of social media pages on divisive issues such as immigration, religion and the Black Lives Matter movement.

Starting in April 2016, the indictment says, the Russian agency bought political ads on social media supporting Trump and opposing Clinton without reporting expenditures to the Federal Election Commission or registering as foreign agents. Among the ads: "JOIN our #HillaryClintonForPrison2016" and "Donald wants to defeat terrorism ... Hillary wants to sponsor it."

The indictment details contacts targeting three unnamed officials in the Trump campaign's Florida operation. In each instance, the Russians used false U.S. personas to contact the officials. The indictment doesn't say if any of them responded.

Two of the defendants traveled to the U.S. in June 2014 to gather intelligence on social media sites and identify targets for their operations, the indictment alleges. Following the trip, the group collected further intelligence by contacting U.S. political and social media activists while posing as U.S. citizens. They were guided by one contact to target "purple states like Colorado, Virginia and Florida," prosecutors say.

FBI says it failed to investigate tip on Florida suspect

By Kelli Kennedy, Curt Anderson and Tamara Lush
Associated Press

PARKLAND, Fla. — The FBI received a tip last month that the suspect in the Florida school shooting had a "desire to kill" and access to guns and could be plotting an attack, but agents failed to investigate, the agency said Friday. Florida Gov. Rick Scott called for the FBI's director to resign because of the missteps.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions said the shooting that killed 17 people Wednesday was a "tragic consequence" of the FBI's failure and ordered a review of the Justice Department's processes. He said it's now clear that the nation's premier law enforcement agency missed warning signs.

In more evidence that there had been signs of trouble with the suspect, Broward County Sheriff Scott Israel said at a Friday news conference that his office had received more than 20 calls about Nikolas Cruz in the past few years.

A person close to Cruz called the FBI's tip line on Jan. 5 and provided information about Cruz's weapons and his erratic behavior, including his disturbing social media posts. The caller was concerned that Cruz could attack a school.

In a statement, the agency acknowledged that the tip should have been shared with the FBI's Miami office and investigated, but it was not. The startling admission came as the agency was already facing criticism for its treatment of a tip about a YouTube comment posted last year. The comment posted by a "Nikolas Cruz" said, "Im going to be a professional school shooter."

The FBI investigated the remark but did not determine who made it.

The 19-year-old Cruz has been charged with killing 17 people at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, north of Miami.

FBI Director Christopher Wray said the agency, which received an average of 2,101 calls to the tip line each day in 2017, was still reviewing its missteps on the January tip. He said he was "committed to getting to the bottom of what happened," as well as assessing the way the FBI responds to information from the public.

"We have spoken with victims and families and deeply regret the additional pain this causes all those affected by this horrific tragedy," Wray said in the statement.

Under fire, Kelly overhauls White House clearance procedure

Under pressure over his handling of abuse allegations against a top aide, White House chief of staff John Kelly on Friday ordered sweeping changes in how the White House clears staff members to gain access to classified information, acknowledging that the administration "must do better" in how it handles security clearances.

Kelly issued a five-page memo that acknowledged White House mistakes but also put the onus on the FBI and the Justice Department to provide more timely updates on background investigations, asking that any significant derogatory information about staff members be quickly flagged to the White House counsel's office.

The issue has been in the spotlight for more than a week after it was revealed that former staff secretary Rob Porter had an interim security clearance that allowed him access to classified material despite allegations of domestic violence by his two ex-wives.

"Now is the time to take a hard look at the way the White House processes clearance requests," Kelly wrote in the memo. "We should — and in the future, must — do better."

The memo said the FBI and Justice Department had offered increased cooperation and, going forward, all background investigations of top officers "should be flagged for the FBI at the outset and then hand-delivered to the White House Counsel personally upon completion. The FBI official who delivers these files should verbally brief the White House Counsel on any information in those files they deem to be significantly derogatory."

Dozens of White House aides have been working under interim clearances for months, according to administration officials, raising questions about the administration's handling of the issue and whether classified information has been jeopardized.

Food box idea draws criticism from Democrats, advocates

The Trump administration is pushing what it calls a "bold new approach to nutrition assistance": replacing the traditional cash-on-a-card that food stamp recipients currently get with a pre-assembled box of canned foods and other shelf-stable goods dubbed "America's Harvest Box."

Office of Management and Budget Director Mick Mulvaney likened the box to meal kit delivery service Blue Apron, and said the plan could save nearly $130 billion over 10 years. But the idea, tucked into President Donald Trump's 2019 budget, has caused a firestorm, prompting scathing criticism from Democrats and nutrition experts who say its primary purpose is to punish the poor.

"The main goal is to alleviate food insecurity, and the reason SNAP is so successful is because it gives low-income families the autonomy and dignity to make their own food choices," said Craig Gundersen, a professor in agricultural strategy at the Department of Agricultural and Consumer Economics at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Gundersen said people will leave the program as a result of the shift.

SNAP — the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program — is the official name for the food stamp programs.

"All of a sudden you're saying, 'we don't trust you to make the right decisions for your family.' It's demeaning and it's patronizing. This is pro-hunger, because people will leave the program," Gunderson said.

Under the proposed plan, households that receive more than $90 in SNAP benefits each month — roughly 81 percent of households in the program, or about 16.4 million — would be affected.

Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue called the box "a bold, innovative approach to providing nutritious food to people who need assistance feeding themselves and their families."

House GOP leaders struggle to push immigration bill

As badly as things have gone for immigration legislation in the Senate, it's not looking any easier in the more conservative House.

Republican leaders there are scrambling to find enough GOP votes to pass a measure that's even more restrictive than a proposal by President Donald Trump that flopped spectacularly in the Senate on Thursday. Compounding those divisions are pressures from some of the House's most conservative members, who are casting the effort as a pivotal test for Speaker Paul Ryan, R-Wis.

"It is a, the, defining moment for this speaker," said Rep. Mark Meadows, R-N.C. who leads the hard-right House Freedom Caucus, which helped force former Speaker John Boehner from his job in 2015. "If he gets it wrong, it will have consequences for him but it will also have consequences for the rest of the Republican Party."

Ryan aides did not respond to a request for comment on Meadows' remark. But underscoring party rifts, some Republicans defended the speaker and his work on the issue.

"Any time you allow one member or a small group of members to dictate overall policy for the country, it is an unfair scenario," Rep. Jeff Denham, R-Calif., who's opposing the conservative legislation, said Friday. "I just don't think our speaker's going to give into any type of threats."

Even if House leaders manage to push the measure through their chamber, it would be dead on arrival in the closely divided Senate. Democrats there could ensure its demise because any immigration measure would need 60 votes to survive, meaning bipartisan agreement is mandatory.

All of that underscores how unlikely it is that Congress will approve sweeping election-year legislation on the subject, including something to help young "Dreamer" immigrants stay in the U.S.

The divisions bode poorly for a bill by House Judiciary Committee Chairman Bob Goodlatte, R-Va., and Homeland Security Committee Chairman Michael McCaul, R-Texas, that conservatives back and leaders have said they'd try bringing to a House vote.

The measure would provide only temporary protections for Dreamers, young immigrants brought to the U.S. illegally as children who still lack permanent authority to live in this country. Trump offered a chance for citizenship for 1.8 million of them.

The bill would provide money for the border wall with Mexico that Trump wants. And like Trump's plan, it would limit the relatives that legal immigrants could sponsor for citizenship and end a lottery that distributes visas to people from diverse countries.

But it goes further.

It reduces legal immigration by about 25 percent annually and requires employers to use the online E-Verify program to validate that their workers are legal. It withholds federal grants from "sanctuary cities" that don't help federal agents catch immigrants in the U.S. illegally and would make it easier to deport immigrants in the country illegally who are gang members or have been arrested repeatedly for drunk driving.

House Democrats uniformly oppose the proposal. So to succeed Republicans must supply 216 votes — a simple majority in a chamber with four vacant seats.

Magnitude-7.2 earthquake slams south, central Mexico

By Peter Orsi and Christopher Sherman
Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — A powerful magnitude-7.2 earthquake shook south and central Mexico Friday, causing people to flee swaying buildings and office towers in the country's capital, where residents were still jittery after a deadly quake five months ago.

Crowds gathered on Mexico City's central Reforma Avenue as well as on streets in Oaxaca state's capital, nearer the quake's epicenter, which was in a rural area close to Mexico's Pacific coast and the border with Guerrero state. There were no immediate reports of deaths.

"It was awful," said Mercedes Rojas Huerta, 57, who was sitting on a bench outside her home in Mexico City's trendy Condesa district, too frightened to go back inside. "It started to shake; the cars were going here and there. What do I do?"

She said she was still scared thinking of the Sept. 19 earthquake that caused 228 deaths in the capital and 141 more in nearby states. Many buildings in Mexico City are still damaged from that quake.

The U.S. Geological Survey originally put the magnitude of Friday's quake at 7.5 but later lowered it to 7.2. It said the epicenter was 33 miles (53 kilometers) northeast of Pinotepa in southern Oaxaca state. It had a depth of 15 miles (24 kilometers).

Mexican Civil Protection chief Luis Felipe Puente tweeted that there were no immediate reports of damages from the quake. The Oaxaca state government said via Twitter that only material damages were reported near Pinotepa and Santiago Jamiltepec, but that shelters were opened for those fleeing damaged homes.

The Mexico City Red Cross said via Twitter that the facade of a building collapsed in Mexico City's Condesa neighborhood, which was hit hard on Sept. 19. A video showed people walking through a dust cloud. But reporters at the scene later found no evidence of a collapse at the location given.

About an hour after the quake, a magnitude 5.8 aftershock also centered in Oaxaca caused tall buildings in Mexico City to briefly sway again.

USGS seismologist Paul Earle said Friday's earthquake appeared to be a separate temblor, rather than an aftershock of a Sept. 8 earthquake also centered in Oaxaca, which registered a magnitude of 8.2. The Sept. 19 earthquake struck closer to Mexico City.

The Sept. 8 quake killed nearly 100 people in Oaxaca and neighboring Chiapas, but was centered about 273 miles (440 kilometers) southwest of Friday's earthquake, Earle said.

In Mexico's capital, frightened residents flooded into the streets in Condesa, including one unidentified woman wrapped in just a towel, but there were no immediate signs of damage.

"I'm scared," said Rojas Huerta, recalling five months ago when buildings fell as she ran barefoot into the street. "The house is old."

Woman is alarmed to discover man lied about his last name

DEAR ABBY

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Her column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY: I've recently started seeing someone, and we have shared a wealth of information about ourselves with each other. When I asked him his last name, he said it was "Erickson." When I asked him if he had a middle name, he responded that he didn't.

Soon after, I saw his driver's license. It had a completely different last name from the one he gave me, and it turns out he does have a middle name after all. Now I'm starting to question everything he told me, and I'm afraid he may have lied about even bigger things.

What reason would he possibly have to lie about such a simple thing? And how should I confront him about it? — JUST PLAIN CONFUSED IN GEORGIA

DEAR CONFUSED: The reason someone would give false information is usually because the person has something to hide. Unless "Mr. Erickson" is in witness protection, my guess is he is married or has a criminal record he doesn't want you to discover. Rather than confront him and be lied to again, run in the opposite direction and cease any further contact with him!

DEAR ABBY: I am an avid fisherman with limited boating knowledge. Recently, a friend bought an older used boat that has questionable integrity. He keeps inviting me to go out on it with him, and I'm running out of excuses not to.

The real reason is my friend is inexperienced and the boat is unreliable. I don't want to be stuck out in the bay in a boat we can't fix. What's the best way to handle this? — LEERY FISHERMAN IN TEXAS

DEAR LEERY: The way to approach it would be to tell your friend the truth. Ask if he has taken a boating safety course, and if the answer is no, suggest he do it — or that you do it together.

As to the integrity of the vessel, ask your friend if the boat was inspected at the time of purchase, and if it wasn't, urge him — for everyone's safety — to have it done.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter has two children, a 7-year-old boy and a girl who is 4. They were at an event with some of her co- workers the other day. Everyone was talking to the younger child, telling her how cute she was and ignoring the older one. It was like he was invisible. He was so deflated.

I remember this happening with my girls when they were little. People always seem to gravitate to the little ones and pay no attention to the older ones. It has always bothered me. So, people, please be mindful of all the children. They are all precious. — BOTHERED GRANDMA

DEAR BOTHERED: You're right, this happens all too often. In a case like this, all it would have taken would have been for someone to have complimented your daughter on her son's behavior and said within earshot of the boy how lucky the little one was to have such a "good boy" for an older brother. I hope you spoke up. It takes only a moment to say something nice to someone of any age who needs the attention.

Magazine obtains ex-playmate's notes on alleged Trump affair

By Jake Pearson and Jeff Horwitz
Associated Press

Manuel Balce Ceneta/Associated Press

President Donald Trump speaks about domestic violence during a working session regarding the opportunity zones provided by tax reform in the Oval Office of the White House on Feb. 14 in Washington. The New Yorker has obtained an eight-page, hand-written account written by a former Playboy Playmate who said she had a nine-month extramarital affair with Donald Trump beginning in 2006.

NEW YORK — President Donald Trump had a nine-month extramarital affair with the 1998 Playboy Playmate of the year beginning in 2006, showing the woman his wife's bedroom in Trump Tower and bringing her to his private bungalow at the Beverly Hills Hotel, according to the woman's eight-page, handwritten account of the relationship obtained by The New Yorker magazine.

The woman, Karen McDougal, confirmed in the story published online Friday that she wrote the account but said she was constrained in what else she could say publicly about Trump because she'd signed a confidentiality agreement.

The affair ended in part after McDougal started feeling guilty about it and after Trump made an offensive comment about her mother's age as well as a vulgar remark about the anatomy of black men, the magazine reported.

The story said McDougal was paid $150,000 during the 2016 presidential campaign for the rights to her story of an affair with any "then-married man" by the supermarket tabloid National Enquirer, which never ran it.

Just before Election Day, The Wall Street Journal reported that the tabloid, whose publisher, David Pecker, is a longtime friend of Trump's, had paid for McDougal's story but wasn't printing it, a tabloid industry practice known as "catch and kill."

Former staffers at American Media Inc., the company that publishes the Enquirer and other gossip sites, have told The Associated Press the company often bought the rights to unflattering stories about certain celebrities. The practice, described by six former employees who had participated in such deals, could give Pecker leverage over celebrities so that he could elicit future favors, such as appearing on his magazines' covers.

The former staffers spoke on condition of anonymity because they had signed nondisclosure agreements barring them from disclosing company practices.

The company has approached McDougal about extending her contract barring her from talking about Trump in recent months as the behind-the-scenes negotiations to keep porn star Stormy Daniels' allegation of a Trump affair have been made public, the magazine reported.

American Media has said it didn't find McDougal's account of an affair with Trump credible and paid her to write fitness columns. In a statement to The New Yorker, the company denied that having exclusive rights to McDougal's story left it with any influence over the president, saying that contention "while flattering, is laughable."

The White House said Trump denies having an affair with McDougal. The alleged affair occurred not long after Trump married his third wife, Melania, who had recently given birth to a son, the magazine reported.

Daniels, whose real name is Stefanie Clifford, has also said she had an extramarital affair with Trump beginning in 2006. This week, Trump's personal lawyer, Michael Cohen, said he paid Clifford $130,000 with his own money in October 2016 as part of a deal that would keep her from publicly discussing her account.

Lady Rebels hold off Keller in area round, next play Frenship

By Brandon McAuliffe
MRT Correspondent

ABILENE – Playing with what coach Alfred Acosta calls "house money," the Lee girls basketball team led wire-to-wire in a 48-45 win over Keller in a Region I-6A area round matchup at Cooper's Cougar Gymnasium on Friday night.

The Lady Rebels now face District 2-6A foe Wolfforth Frenship, a 58-52 winner over North Crowley on Friday night, in the regional quarterfinal round at 6 p.m. Tuesday at Lamesa Middle School.

Acosta, Lee's second-year coach, was proud of what he saw out of his squad as it withstood several rallies by the Lady Indians.

Low

"The girls played hard and battled and we told them that the toughest team was going to win," he said. "Based on the score, we were the toughest. At the end of the day, Lady Rebel Nation was the only one that believed."

Sophomore Paige Low had a team-high 19 points for Lee (19-15) in the win.

"I'm so proud of her and she has got so much room to grow," Acosta said. "She's huge and does a lot of things for us and is just a young kid playing hard and enjoying herself."

Acosta

The Lady Rebels got off to a fast start as they forced nine turnovers and all five starters scored in the opening quarter, with the lead being as many as seven points at 11-4 midway through the quarter. Lee scored just once in the final 3:55 of the first and held a 13-9 lead.

"We had a lot of energy coming out and we were ready to play," said Low. "We have been working hard in practice and this was huge."

Keller (18-15) cut the Lee lead to 13-12 early in the second quarter, but the Lady Rebels bounced back with a 7-0 run to extend the lead to eight points. The run took less than two minutes.

Low was quick to credit the team's senior leaders for helping steady the team.

"They did a good job of calming everyone down," she said. "The seniors are huge and lead us really well."

After trailing 23-17 at halftime, Keller cut Lee's lead to 31-28 after the third quarter.

The low-scoring game then turned into a shootout in the fourth quarter between Low for Lee and Keller's Mallory Lockhart.

Lockhart scored 13 of her game-high 28 points in the fourth quarter, while Low

Trinity's Austin Escamilla follows his tee shot Friday during the Tall City Invitational at Green Tree Country Club.

Escamilla helps Trinity to second place after opening round

■ Monahans leads the field after shooting a 305

By Will Korn
wkorn@mrt.com

When windy conditions take hold of the golf course, Trinity star senior Austin Escamilla doesn't so much reach for a club in his bag as much as a trusted strategy.

Instead, with whatever club he selects, he looks to craft a "West Texas Special" – his name for a type of low, rising shot he knows he must master playing in the gusts of West Texas.

Escamilla resorted to that shot early and often during a chilly and windy first round of the 32nd annual Bobby Dunn Tall City Invitational, Friday at Green Tree Country Club. He hit his mark enough throughout the morning to card a 74, good for third place overall and just two strokes out of the lead.

The tournament's second round commences with a shotgun start at 8:30 a.m. today at Hogan Park Golf Course.

Escamilla, the reigning Midland Men's City champion and a Rice University commit who helped Trinity win the TAPPS 4A state title last spring, said he was fully prepared for Friday's elemental challenges.

"I really don't mind playing in the wind that much and the cold doesn't bother me that much," Escamilla said. "I like playing in the wind, I was born and raised here, so I'm kind of used to it. The 'West Texas Special' is what I call it – you hit it low, let it rise, make sure the wind doesn't knock it down. It was a little rough off the tee because my driver, I hit it pretty high. But other than that, keeping (the ball) low was no problem."

Bieber, LeBron, other stars descend on LA for NBA showcase

By Brian Mahoney
Associated Press

The stars will be out in Los Angeles, on the basketball court and all around it.

The NBA's All-Star festivities are back at Staples Center, with the usual events on All-Star Saturday night and a new format for the game Sunday.

Captains LeBron James and Stephen Curry drafted players from the pool of All-Stars and the winning team gets a $350,000 donation from the NBA to the charity it chose. The league is hoping the new format that replaced the traditional East-West matchup will make it more competitive after a couple of lackluster games the previous two years.

Perhaps the players can heed the words of Kobe Bryant, who won the MVP award on his home floor when the All-Star Game was last in Los Angeles in 2011.

"I feel like we have a sense of responsibility and we are voted in for what we do during the season, which is play hard," Bryant said following that game. "And we come here, that's what the fans want to see. They want to see us go at it and see us compete and that's what I try to do and that's what I try to tell my teammates to do."

Bryant is gone now but Beyonce and Jay-Z, Jack Nicholson and Justin Bieber are among the celebrities who

First at last: Earnhardt's lone 500 victory still resonates

By Dan Gelston and Mark Long
Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Dale Earnhardt was NASCAR's "Intimidator," winning his first Cup championship in only his second full season. Earnhardt had achieved about all there was to do in NASCAR by 1998, including a record-tying seven Cup Series championships.

Winning the Daytona 500 was the only milestone that eluded Earnhardt over the first two decades of his career. Bad luck, missed opportunities and close calls stamped him 0 for 19 in NASCAR's biggest race even though he was typically one of the favorites.

It all changed on Feb. 15, 1998. At 46, Earnhardt was the sentimental choice and, at last, won "The Great American Race." It's a NASCAR moment that has stood the test of time. It included a lucky penny and a pit-road processional never before seen in auto racing.

This is the story of that memorable day, told by men who lived it: his owner (Childress), his crew chief (Larry McReynolds), two fellow championship drivers (Jeff Gordon and Darrell Waltrip), and the race announcer (Mike Joy).

Daytona 500

See more coverage on Sunday's race.

Earnhardt had won 30 races at Daytona entering that day, so despite a 59-race winless streak in the Cup Series, he was the popular pick to end both streaks in the season opener.

Childress: He was always confident racing here. But we all just felt like that was our day. ... We knew we always had a shot. He was a man that could make up everything for us and he did that day.

McReynolds: It just seemed like the deeper we got into Speedweeks, the better the car got. I think we finally reached the point that we really felt like the only team that could beat us is if we ended up doing something to beat ourselves.

Earnhardt had a number of fluky failures in the Daytona 500. In 1997, with 10 laps to go and running near the front, he was involved in a late crash on the backstretch. In 1993, Dale Jarrett passed him for the lead on the last lap. In 1991, he obliterated a seagull on the backstretch, damaging his radiator. In 1990, he cut a tire less than mile from the finish line.

McReynolds: You knew until you absolutely saw that checkered flag wave that race was not over, that it was not in the books, that it was not a done deal.

Waltrip: It got down to the end of the

Vines breaks record in state meet prelims, Wright also in title contention

From staff reports

AUSTIN – Midland High senior Braden Vines put on a record-setting performance during Friday's prelims at the UIL State Swimming and Diving Championships at Lee and Joe Jamail Texas Swimming Center.

Vines

In the Class 6A boys 100-yard breaststroke, Vines recorded a prelims time of 54.37 seconds, breaking the 12-year old state meet mark of 54.51 set by Austin Westlake's Scott Spann in 2006.

Vines also recorded the fastest prelims time with a 1:47.77 in the 200 IM.

Vines will shoot for state titles in both eight-swimmer championship heats of the 200 IM and 100 breaststroke today, as the Class 6A session starts at 3:30 p.m.

Midland High senior Mollie Wright is still in contention for a state title after she posted the second-fastest prelims time of 4:53.54 in the girls 500 freestyle.

Wright also advanced to today's championship heat in the 100 backstroke following a sixth-place showing (56.28) Friday.

Midland High junior Nathan Keller, in his state meet debut, finished in 21st place in the boys 500 free prelims with a time of 4:44.43.

MHS junior Grayson Jones finished 19th in the boys 1-meter diving, with a score of 208.20 points.

In Class 5A, Andrews sophomore Avery Joiner advanced to today's girls 50 free consolation final after finishing 14th with a time of 24.93.

Greenwood prevails in final at-bat over Snyder

From staff reports

With one out and the bases loaded, Kyndall Dove laid down a bunt to score Mollie Snowden in walk-off fashion as the Greenwood softball team squeaked past Snyder, 4-3, in a non-district game at Greenwood High.

For the Rangerettes (1-1), Snowden went 2-for-4 with two runs; Ashton Rowoldt was 2-for-4 with two RBI and two runs and Jaylene Valenzuela went 3-for-4 with a RBI.

In the circle, Dove was victorious after allowing five hits, no walks and three runs (two earned) over seven innings, while striking out six.

No. 3 Texas Tech wins opener over Maine

From staff reports

LUBBOCK – Josh Jung had three hits and starting pitcher Davis Martin threw five solid innings as the No. 3-ranked Texas Tech baseball team defeated Maine, 4-2, in the teams' season opener at Dan Law Field at Rip Griffin Park on Friday afternoon.

The Red Raiders scored three runs in the third inning as Cody Farhat had a two-run single and Midland Christian grad Grant Little (1 for 3) had an RBI double.

Jung, who went 3-for-3 in the game, hit a solo home run in the fifth for a 4-0 lead.

Martin, a junior from San Angelo Central, allowed one run on three hits, two walks and struck out four over five innings.

The teams continue their series with a doubleheader beginning at noon today at Dan Law Field.

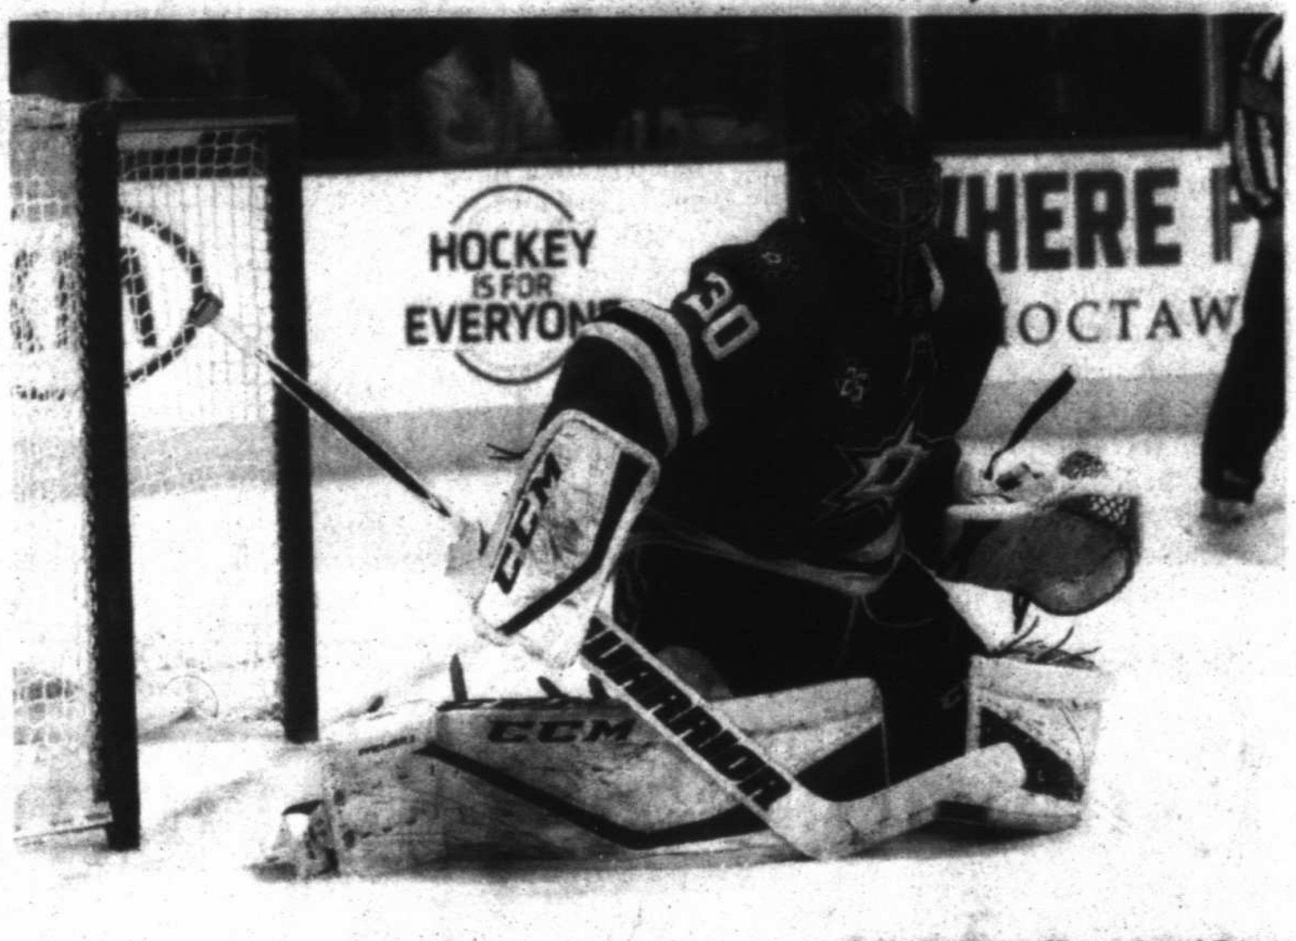
Bishop stops 27 shots as Blues holds off Stars, 2-1

Associated Press



Tony Gutierrez/Associated Press

Dallas Stars goalie Ben Bishop (30) deflects a shot from the St. Louis Blues in the second period of an NHL hockey game on Friday in Dallas.

DALLAS — Ben Bishop stopped 27 shots and the Dallas Stars held on to beat St. Louis 2-1 on Friday night, moving past the Blues into third place in the Central Division.

Mattias Janmark and Stephen Johns scored for Dallas, which had a season-low 16 shots on goal while winning for the sixth time in seven games. The Stars, who had not been this high in the standings since Nov. 5, are tied with the Blues with 72 points, but have two games in hand.

Brayden Schenn spoiled Bishop's shutout bid with a power-play goal with 1:14 remaining, and Jake Allen finished with 14 saves for St. Louis. The Blues have lost three straight (0-2-1).

Neither team scored in the first period, when the Blues outshot Dallas 8-3. St. Louis failed to score on two power plays, and the Stars were unsuccessful on their only man-advantage of the period.

Janmark scored on the power play at 2:42 of the second, getting his 16th of the season to top his total from his rookie season two years ago. It was also his fourth on power-play goal of the season.

Bishop preserved the Stars' lead early in the third as he turned away Schenn's backhand attempt in front of the net.

Johns doubled the lead with 9 1/2 minutes to go with his career-high eighth. Jamie Benn sent the puck across the ice to the right-wing boards. It bounced to Johns in the right circle, and he sent a slap shot into the upper right corner of the net.

Schenn pulled the Blues within one as he took a pass across the slot from from Jaden Schwartz and beat Bishop before the goalie could move back in position to stop the shot.

NOTES: Dallas D Marc Méthot (knee injury) returned to the ice for only the second time since Nov. 6. ... St. Louis D Jay Bouwmeester played in his 1,100th game. ... The Blues are the first of six straight playoff contenders on the Stars' schedule. St. Louis is in the midst of 10 games in a row against contenders. ... John Klingberg also had an assist on Janmark's goal for his 46th helper of the season and his 200th career point. ... The Stars' three shots on goal in the first period tied their season low for a period. On the four previous times this season, Dallas was protecting a lead in the third.

Blues: Host San Jose on Tuesday night.

Stars: At San Jose on Sunday.

Huskers' NCAA hopes uncertain despite 20 wins

By Aaron Beard
Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. — By any measure, Nebraska is having its best season since moving to the Big Ten, from its win total to its RPI and KenPom rankings. It's unclear whether that will be good enough to secure an NCAA Tournament bid.

Nebraska (20-8, 11-4) has won six straight to reach 20 wins for just the first time in a decade. The Cornhuskers are also a win away from setting a program record for Big Ten wins since joining the league in 2011-12. But they lack any notable wins, played a weak nonconference schedule (ranked 286th) and don't have much left on the schedule to help their resume.

"All the teams from here on out are playing for something," sophomore forward Isaiah Roby said. "Every game, it's like a tournament game. You lose, it can hurt your chances a lot."

Nebraska sits at No. 52 in Friday's RPI rankings and No. 54 in KenPom's rankings, putting the Huskers within reach of their first NCAA Tournament since 2014 and only their second trip in 20 seasons. Nebraska remains the only power-five conference team to never have won an NCAA Tournament game.

But the Cornhuskers are 0-7 against Quadrant 1 opponents in the new tiered system used by the NCAA selection committee to evaluate win quality. Their best win came at home against Michigan (39 RPI) in January, while a December win against a Minnesota team ranked No. 14 in the Top 25 has lost luster as the Gophers (14-14, 3-12) have flopped since.

Nebraska also missed out on a marquee win by losing 73-72 to Kansas at home in December.

As for the remaining schedule, Nebraska has two potential Quadrant 3 games left before the Big Ten Tournament — at Illinois (188 RPI) on Sunday and at home against Indiana (107) — and one that currently sits just inside the Quadrant 2 line by hosting Penn State (73).

"If Quad 1 is the holy grail and the only place that matters, then we have a real problem," Nebraska coach Tim Miles said. "You can still go to Quad 3 and find a top-100 win. We've got some very good wins and we've won on the road, which is important.

"We're close. We don't know where we're at. Some have us in, most don't."

HS GIRLS BASKETBALL PLAYOFF ROUNDUP

GREENWOOD 50
LUB. ESTACADO 45

SNYDER – Natalee Karcher and Kaitlan Keel both scored a game-high 16 points to lead Greenwood past Lubbock Estacado in Friday's Class 4A area playoff game at The Coliseum.

The Rangerettes (21-14) advanced to the regional quarterfinal round for the fourth straight year and will face Denver City at 6 p.m. Tuesday in Andrews in a rematch of last year's regional quarterfinal playoff.

Greenwood overcame a slow start against the Lady Matadors (16-19), who took a 24-13 lead after one quarter and led 34-30 at halftime.

In the third quarter, the Rangerettes turned the tide with a 16-5 run to take a 46-39 advantage.

"We buckled down on defense and made some huge stops and started putting the ball in the hoop," Greenwood head coach Ginger Hartman said. "Our offense started working and moving the ball around and attacking the basket."

Tyquaesha Perryman led Estacado with 14 points.

Greenwood went 2-1 against the Lady Matadors during the 2017-18 campaign and are currently on a 10-game winning streak.

DALLAS CHRISTIAN 60
MIDLAND CHRISTIAN 32

MESQUITE – Defending state champion Dallas Christian eliminated Midland Christian in Friday's TAPPS 5A bi-district playoff.

It was the third consecutive season the Lady Mustangs were ousted by the Lady Chargers in the playoffs.

Midland Christian's season ends at 21-11, while Dallas Christian advanced to face Tyler Grace Community in the area round.

No other information about the game was available at press time.

FORSAN 51
SEAGRAVES 46

LENORAH — Forsan advanced to the regional quarterfinal round for the first time since 2013 following Friday's win over Seagraves in the Class 2A area playoff at Grady High School.

The Lady Buffaloes (24-5), who have won 24 of their last 26 games, advanced to face Haskell in the regional quarterfinal round.

No other information was available at press time.

GARDEN CITY 51
EULA 46

WINTERS – No. 2-ranked Garden City won its 28th straight game with a victory over Eula in Friday's Class 1A area playoff.

The Lady Kats (32-1) advanced to the regional quarterfinal and will face Blackwell at 8 p.m. Monday at Angelo State's Junell Center in San Angelo.

Garden City and Eula were playing in the area round for the fourth straight year. The Lady Kats have a 3-1 edge in those meetings.

No other information was reported.

LEE SOCCER ROUNDUP

GIRLS
FRENSHIP BLANKS LEE BEHIND HOT 1ST HALF

WOLFFORTH – Wolfforth Frenship scored four first half goals to cruise past Lee, 4-0, in a District 2-6A match Friday.

Sophomore Jenna McEnaney had a whopping 18 saves for the Lady Rebels (8-5-1, 0-1-2-0, 2 points), who sits in fourth place.

"They came out and they were on top of us pretty quickly," Lee head coach Mark Hinshaw said of the Lady Tigers. "They scored four first-half goals. They are the defending district champs for a reason, but we were a bit sluggish. We regrouped at halftime and came out and played better in the second half. But by then, the damage had been done."

With one extra match played, the Lady Tigers (14-2-1, 3-0-0-0, 9 points) moved ahead of Midland High (9-1-3, 2-0-0-0, 6 points) for first place. Frenship has out-scored opponents, 73-7, this season.

"They are a potent team," Hinshaw said of the Lady Tigers. "They were getting looks at the goal. They are very hard to contain."

Lee hits the pitch again Tuesday when it visits Odessa High at 5:30 p.m.

BOYS
REBELS FALL TO FRENSHIP

WOLFFORTH – Wolfforth Frenship scored two late goals to defeat Lee, 4-2, at Frenship High School on Friday night.

"We played well at times but gave up some through balls and some easy goals," Lee coach Scott Hicks said. "We have to clean that up in the back. We had some opportunities and it was an intense game. We'll just look to get better for our next game on Tuesday."

After Frenship (16-1-0, 2-0-1-0, 6 points in District 2-6A) took a 2-0 lead, the Rebels (9-6-1, 1-0-1-1, 4 points) cut it to 2-1 when Daniel Santos scored off an assist by Esteban Ballinas.

The Rebels tied it up at 2 in the 60th minute on a goal by Luis Aranda off an assist by Jeremias Carrasco.

Frenship answered with two quick goals to get the win.

Lee next travels to Odessa at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday to play Odessa High.

back scoring eight points in a 10-5 run that cut the Lee lead to 40-38 with 2:23 to play.

While Keller was on that run, the Lady Rebels had the key series when Low went 1 of 2 from the free-throw line and the Lady Rebels forced a turnover on the inbounds pass and Quinci Strambler hit a layup for a three-point swing in Lee's favor.

Keller cut the score to 42-41 with 1:22 left on a 3-point shot from the corner by Lockhart, but Low hit four free throws and a layup down the stretch to seal the win – which was completed when Laykyn Hughes missed a 3-pointer at the buzzer.

"It doesn't matter who we play, we are going to give them our best shot," Acosta said. "Credit to (Keller) too because they kept coming and knocking down shots and (Lockhart) is a special player."

Humble, kind and fair: Can curling cure our troubled world?

By Kristen Gelineau

Aaron Favila/Associated Press

Norway's Christoffer Svae, right, shakes hands with Canada's Ben Herbert after their match at the 2018 Winter Olympics in Gangneung, South Korea, on Thursday. At the Pyeongchang Olympics, curlers and their fans agree: In an era of vitriol and venom, curling may be the perfect antidote to our troubled times.

GANGNEUNG, South Korea — The world, some fret, is falling apart. Politicians spar viciously on social media. Leaders lie. Former heroes fall like dominoes amid endless scandals. Cruelty has come to feel commonplace.

But never fear: We have curling.

The sport with the frenzied sweeping and clacking rocks has rules that literally require players to treat opponents with kindness. Referees aren't needed, because curlers police themselves. And the winners generally buy the losers a beer.

At the Pyeongchang Olympics, curlers and their fans agree: In an era of vitriol and venom, curling may be the perfect antidote to our troubled times.

"Nobody gets hit — other than the rock," laughed Evelyne Martens of Calgary, Canada, as she watched a recent Canada vs. Norway curling match. "And there's nothing about Trump here!"

In the 500 years since curling was conceived on the frozen ponds of Scotland, it has remained largely immune to the cheating controversies and bloated egos common in other sports. This is thanks to what is known as "The Spirit of Curling," a deeply ingrained ethos that dictates that curlers conduct themselves with honor and adhere to good sportsmanship.

The World Curling Federation's rules state: "Curlers play to win, but never to humble their opponents. A true curler never attempts to distract opponents, nor to prevent them from playing their best, and would prefer to lose rather than to win unfairly."

Kindness is the baseline for what curling is all about, says Canadian Kaitlyn Lawes, who won the gold medal this week in curling mixed doubles.

"We shake hands before the game, we shake hands after. And if someone makes a great shot against you, we congratulate them because it's fun to play against teams that are playing well," Lawes says. "I think that spirit of curling can be used in the real world — and hopefully it can be a better place."

Case in point: After losing the curling mixed doubles gold medal to Canada, Switzerland's Martin Rios swallowed his disappointment during a press conference to say that the Canadians had deserved to win, declaring: "They were the better team."

The Canadians returned the favor by heartily applauding their Swiss opponents not once but twice. And before the women's round-robin match Thursday, the Korean team presented their Canadian competitors with a gift bag of Korean curling banners and pins.

Children new to the sport are coached about the spirit of curling from the very start, says Willie Nicoll, chairman of British Curling. That's because fair play is not an afterthought, he says. It is the heart of the game.

"It's always been looked at as being a very gentlemanly sport," says Kate Caithness, President of the World Curling Federation. "Where does that happen in sport, when you say to your opposition, 'Good shot?'"

It's not that curling isn't competitive. Like every other Olympian in Pyeongchang, curlers all want the gold — just not at the expense of their integrity.

Perhaps the best example of this is the lack of referees. Officials rarely get involved in matches because players call themselves out for fouls. If a curler accidentally hits a stone that's in motion with their foot or broom — a situation known as a "burned stone" — he or she is expected to immediately announce the mistake. Aileen Geving, a member of the U.S. Olympic curling team, says it would be unthinkable for her not to own up to such a goof.

"We all have to be true to ourselves and I know I would feel way too guilty not to say anything if I hit it!" she says, laughing. "I think there's a certain morality behind that."

On Friday, an exceedingly unusual controversy over a burned stone erupted that — unsurprisingly — meandered its way to a mild end. In a tense match against Canada, a Danish player accidentally hit a moving rock. Canada, which had the right to decide what happened, chose to remove the rock from play rather than allow it to remain.

The "aggression" stunned some observers. Canadian media covering the game launched into frenzied discussions, and some curling fans tweeted shock over what they considered unsportsmanlike behavior.

This, though, was the measured reaction from the Danish team's skip a bit later: She wouldn't have made the same choice, but she also wasn't mad.

For the fans, seeing such displays of warmth — or, in the above case, lack of heat — can be a welcome respite from the harshness of the outside world.

Sinking into her seat at the Gangneung Curling Centre, Crystle Kozoroski was still stressed from attending the previous night's rough and rowdy hockey game. Watching curling, she said, was just the therapy she needed.

"I'm still tense from last night's game — my body is literally sore," said Kozoroski, of Manitoba, Canada. "It's nice just to sit and relax." Curling is, she says, a "very calming and soothing sport." (So calming and soothing, it should be noted, that a group of Korean fans with a front-row seat to the action during a recent match managed to squeeze in a nap.)

Here is how a typical game starts at Gangneung: Opponents turn to each other, share a handshake and wish each other "Good curling!" A bouncy organ tune blasts across the arena and the stadium announcer cheerfully bellows, "Good luck and GOOD CURLING!" The crowd whoops with glee. Even if you have no idea what is happening, it is almost impossible not to smile.

There's a sense that everyone is welcome. And with curling, that's kind of true. Both women and men compete in all three versions of the sport — traditional curling, mixed doubles and wheelchair — and members of curling clubs range in age from 7 to 90.

That feeling of inclusiveness is intertwined with a deep camaraderie that goes back to curling's inception. Take "broomstacking," named for the original practice of opponents stacking their brooms in front of a roaring fire after a game and enjoying a drink together.

These days, rivals still socialize after matches, with the winner generally buying the loser a round. The other day, Canadian gold medal curler John Morris posted a photo on Instagram of himself sharing a locker room brew with U.S. rival Matt Hamilton, their arms slung around each other and grins stretching across their faces.

Given how small the curling community is, such friendships between opponents are as common as they are treasured.

Big Spring boys capture Greenwood meet

From staff reports

The Big Spring boys edged Greenwood, 49-47, to win the Greenwood Ranger Invitational Powerlifting Meet Thursday at Greenwood High.

The Steers were spearheaded by the efforts of Justin Ormsby, who was named the meet's best lifter award for the light platforms on the boys' side after winning the 132-pound weight class with a total weight lifted of 1,085 pounds. The Steers boys won their second meet of the season.

The Greenwood boys fared well in the heavier platforms, as Braden Lathan won at 181 pounds, Dalton Richardson was the 198-pound champiom. Connor McDonald took the 220-pound title, and Jared Rose won the 275-pound title.

The Greenwood girls placed second with 33 points behind team champion Reagan County, which tallied 38 points.

Big Spring senior Carlie Roberts won the best lifter award for heavier platforms after she won the 181-weight class with a total weight lifted of 935 pounds.

Shiffrin 4th behind Hansdotter in Olympic slalom

By Howard Fendrich
Associated Press

PYEONGCHANG, South Korea — Mikaela Shiffrin is, without a doubt, the best women's slalom skier there is. Has been for years. All of the victories confirm it. Her competitors are aware of it. And, yes, so is she.

"This is going to sound so arrogant," Shiffrin said Friday, her eyes closed. "I know that I'm the best slalom skier in the world."

She spoke those words after failing to live up to that billing. After, as she put it, "puking before the first run" because of what she initially thought might be food poisoning or a virus but eventually decided was simply anxiousness. After, she acknowledged, skiing too conservatively to put up a proper defense of her Olympic title and finishing fourth behind gold medalist Frida Hansdotter of Sweden.

"Sometimes," the 22-year-old American said, "I feel like the only one who can beat myself in slalom is me. And I beat myself ... today."

Hansdotter took advantage, putting together two legs with a combined time of 1 minute, 38.63 seconds for her first Olympic medal. Switzerland's Wendy Holdener was 0.05 seconds back for the silver, followed by Austria's Katharina Gallhuber.

"A lot of surprises today," Holdener said.

Not really in the men's race across the way at the Jeongseon Alpine Center, where Austria's Matthias Mayer added a super-G gold to the downhill title he won four years ago. This time, Mayer edged Switzerland's Beat Feuz and Norway's Kjetil Jansrud.

The biggest news 30 miles (50 kilometers) away at the Yongpyong Alpine Center, really, was Shiffrin's showing. She finished in 1:39.03 — 0.08 away from the bronze and less than a half-second from the gold.

That Shiffrin's poor-for-her performance in slalom came one day after she won the gold medal in the giant slalom, an event at which she is not as good, was not only stunning but also perhaps related.

After attending the medal ceremony Thursday night, Shiffrin said, she didn't get to bed until around 10 p.m., roughly 1½ hours later than normal during the Pyeongchang Games. More influential than that, she thought, was the inability to properly modulate her emotions after that victory in the opening women's Alpine event.

"I had too much of a peak yesterday and too much of a valley today. And when you have two races in a row, it's really important to keep that mental energy stable. And I didn't really do that," Shiffrin said. "So today, it was like all of the tools that I have that make me feel equipped to handle whatever pressure I feel, I didn't have anymore."

Her whole Olympics are shifting now.

Shiffrin's mother, Eileen, who also coaches Mikaela, already had said Saturday's super-G was no longer part of the plan. Now Shiffrin says she might not ski the downhill, either, for what would shape up as a showdown against U.S. teammate Lindsey Vonn, the 2010 gold medalist in that event. Shiffrin did say she definitely will remain part of the field for the combined.

There is pressure galore, from others and from Shiffrin herself.

That is based in large part on her resume: She won the slalom gold at the age of 18 at the 2014 Sochi Olympics; she won three consecutive world championships in that event; she had a five-race winning streak in January; she is on pace for a second overall World Cup title.

"I think it's more my own expectations and knowing the magnitude of what I'm trying to do," Shiffrin said. "Less about what everybody else wants to see."

That might be.

It's why she says she would vomit before races last season. And it's what she thinks caused her to get sick Friday.

Now Shiffrin gets a few days to recalibrate. Won't be easy to forget what happened Friday, though.

"Moving forward? I am terrible at that. Every single, like, loss that I've ever had, I remember that feeling so thoroughly, it's like a piece of my heart breaks off and I can never get it back. And today is no different than that," she said. "Some day I'll be able to understand that it's part of life and I'm just learning."

Rodchenkov to AP: 'Sorry to all clean athletes we cheated'

By Rob Harris
Associated Press

An apology for Russia's doping scheme is now ready to be issued. Not by the state which ordered the systematic cover-up but by the chemist who helped Russian athletes trick the system."I am very sorry to all the clean athletes we cheated," former Russian anti-doping laboratory director Grigory Rodchenkov said in response to questions from The Associated Press sent through his lawyer. Similar remorse has not been forthcoming from the Russian authorities, who challenge the legitimacy of Rodchenkov's confessions and deny any doping was state-sponsored.

Rodchenkov, who fled to the United States to expose the elaborate ruse to evade doping tests, claimed the Russians are still "lying and denying."

Rodchenkov also berated the Court of Arbitration for Sport for overturning lifetime Olympic bans on Russians, saying the ruling gave the impression to clean competitors that "we don't care about you." Standing by the veracity of testimony called into question during court hearings, Rodchenkov maintained that athletes were complicit in the doping program after following "strict orders" from the state.

Rodchenkov, who lives in hiding, denied claims by Russian President Vladimir Putin that his unmasking of the scandal was being controlled by U.S. agencies.

"As usual, Putin is misinformed," Rodchenkov said in emailed responses to the AP. "I am speaking the truth. No one is influencing me."

Asked if he was aware of other countries running Russian-style state-sponsored schemes, Rodchenkov replied: "I certainly have suspicions, but it is hard to image any country had our level of deception and high-level support."

Rodchenkov said he will not be deterred from unmasking further duplicity, despite claiming to fear for his life in the U.S. where he is separated from his family.

"I feel threat, but I feel great support from my lawyers and friends in the United States," he said. "That is why we are changing everything — my appearance, my coordinates, my communications — as often as possible."

Cantlay extends Riviera lead; Woods begins near cut line

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

Ryan Kang/Associated Press

Patrick Cantlay waves to spectators on the 15th tee during the second round of the Genesis Open golf tournament at Riviera Country Club Friday in the Pacific Palisades area of Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES — Patrick Cantlay came within an inch of a hole-in-one , the start of three straight birdies that led to a 2-under 69 and a two-shot lead in the Genesis Open.

Cantlay, the No. 1 amateur in the world when he played at UCLA, had to wait until the end of Friday to see if the lead held up. Tiger Woods was among those playing in the afternoon, when the greens typically are at their worst.

Woods was on the cut line when he began the second round.

Cantlay was coming off a three-putt bogey when his tee shot at the par-3 sixth — the hole with a bunker in the middle of the green — landed above the flag and to the right, and then rolled back down the slope just over the right edge of the cup.

"I actually missed a little to the right, but it's a bowl back there so as long as you get the number right, it should be pretty close," Cantlay said.

He followed with a short iron into 5 feet for birdie, a 15-foot birdie on the next hole and then a wild drive that led to a bogey on his final hole. Cantlay, who won in Las Vegas last fall, was at 7-under 135.

Tony Finau, who shared the 18-hole lead with Cantlay, recovered from a sluggish front nine with a 3-3 start to the back nine that helped him salvage a 71. He was two shots behind among the early finishers.

Bubba Watson, a two-time winner at Riviera, ran off five birdies in a six-hole stretch around his turn before he was undone by a double bogey on No. 5. His approach went into shin-high grass short of the green and he three-putted. Even so, he had a 70 and was in the mix heading toward the weekend. That would be considered progress.

Watson hasn't won since his most recent Riviera victory in 2016. He was at No. 4 in the world after that title. He arrived this week at No. 117. The two-time Masters champion says he is getting back some weight he lost when he was ill. More putts are going in. One aspect of his personality hasn't changed. When Watson is in L.A., he takes in a lot more than golf.

Watson was scheduled to play for Team Clippers in the celebrity game during NBA All-Star weekend. He suggested that he might have taped a show with Jay Leno and perhaps spent time with a friend named Ellen (DeGeneres). He was in full celebrity mode when he won at Riviera in 2016, so maybe that's the recipe.

Dustin Johnson was just happy to still be in the game. He managed a 69 on Friday, which should enable the defending champion at No. 1 player in the world to make the cut.

ALL-STAR

attended that game and are scheduled to be back for at least some of this weekend.

Some things to watch as Los Angeles hosts the All-Star Game for a record sixth time:

LEBRON IN L.A.: James refuses to discuss his free agency during the season, but figure on it coming up in Los Angeles since there's been such speculation about him signing with the Lakers. The Lakers, after a trade with James' Cavaliers last week, would have enough salary cap space to offer a maximum contract to James and another star if he opts to become a free agent and leave Cleveland this summer.

HOMECOMING KINGS: The Los Angeles area is home to a number of All-Stars, including 2017 MVP Russell Westbrook of Oklahoma City and runner-up James Harden, along with Oklahoma City's Paul George and Toronto's DeMar DeRozan.

SIDELINED STARS: James' team will look much different than the one he drafted after a number of injuries. DeMarcus Cousins, Kevin Love, John Wall and Kristaps Porzingis all were forced to pull out. George, Andre Drummond, Goran Dragic and Kemba Walker were added as injury replacements by Commissioner Adam Silver.

DUNK LIKE DAD: Larry Nance Jr., one of the players who went from Los Angeles to Cleveland in the four-player trade at the deadline, will be back in his former home arena to compete in the Slam Dunk Contest. He'll try to follow in the footsteps — or flight path — of his father, who won the NBA's first slam dunk title in 1984. Rookies Donovan Mitchell of Utah and Dennis Smith Jr., and Indiana All-Star Victor Oladipo round out the field.

BIEBS IS BACK: Bieber will return to play in the celebrity game on Friday night after winning MVP honors in the 2011 game. He will play on Team Lakers, co-coached by actor Michael B. Jordan. They will play against Team Clippers, who feature Academy Award winner Jaime Foxx.

EARNHARDT

race, I said, 'Who's leading?' (Crew chief Jeff Hammond) said, 'Dale.' I said, 'Well, he won't win.' He never had. Always something would happen, but this day he pulled it off.

As Earnhardt crossed the finish line, the grandstands erupted in celebration. No one expected that emotion to carry onto pit road. As Earnhardt drove toward victory lane, crew members from nearly every team lined up to congratulate him.

Childress: A lot of people had a love/hate relationship with Dale. But there were so many fans, people that worked on other race teams that were really Dale Earnhardt fans. And to see them all out there, everyone know how important that win was to Dale. I just hugged him and said, 'Man, we got it. We got it. We finally got it.'

McReynolds: Even the 18 team of Bobby Labonte and Joe Gibbs Racing that had run second to us, they were even out there congratulating Dale.

Waltrip: I remember coming around off Turn 4 and all the cars are backed up on the track. I said to Hammond, 'What's going on anyway? How come we can't get on pit road?' He said, 'Pit road is full of people and they're all standing out there. Everybody is wanting to congratulate Dale.'

Earnhardt credited 6-year-old Wessa Miller for helping him get that elusive win. He met Miller through the Make-A-Wish Foundation following the final practice for the race. Miller gave Earnhardt the penny and told him she had rubbed it and that it would bring him good luck.

McReynolds: The car gets back to the garage area and no Dale. ... Finally, here he comes and he's like a man on a mission. He walks by me like I wasn't even standing there. I see him over in the tool box, digging through drawers. I said, Dale, 'What are doing?' He says, 'I got something I've got to do.' I knew he had something in his hand. He kept pulling drawers open. He finally found a tube of weather-strip adhesive like we glue the lug nuts on the wheels. I finally looked at him and he had glue running down his uniform. He had enough glue on this one penny to glue a dollar's worth of pennies on the dash. I finally said, 'Dale, I don't know what you're trying to do. Let me help you. I think you're trying to glue this somewhere and then we can go to the hauler and talk about this engine.' ... We got the penny glued on the dash.

Childress: The lucky penny the little girl gave him is still on the dash today.

The race still resonates throughout racing — partly because Earnhardt died three years later at the famed track but mostly because he came up short so many times before. There have been better races and finishes, but arguably never a better Daytona 500 moment.

Gordon: There was not a lot of phenomenal racing, yet people go back and say this is one of the all-time greatest races. It's more because of the story.

Waltrip: When an Earnhardt does something, it's a big deal — whether it's Junior or Senior. There have been a lot of incredible Daytona 500s, before that win and after that win. It's certainly one that because of what Dale meant to the sport and what that race meant to Dale that gives that race a little bit more significance than maybe some of the others.

GOLF

From 1B

Escamilla's score spearheaded a strong first round team performance from Trinity, which shot a 315 and is in second place, nine strokes behind leader, Monahans I.

Teammate Chesley McDonald stayed in range of Escamilla with a 78, situating him in a three-way tie for seventh. Davis Seybert carded a 79 for the Chargers and is in a four-way tie for 10th place.

Escamilla said he was impressed with his team's collective effort in the face of difficult conditions. Two of the Chargers' players – Ciro Baeza and Seybert – don't play golf year round at the school as they participate in other sports.

"It was a great effort and I'm really proud of the guys," Escamilla said. "A lot of them are coming off other sports – Ciro has been playing basketball, Davis is still playing hockey. It has been a lot of fun. We know we have probably the most solid team we've had in a while. We're looking to compete as a team for sure and at these tournaments, have a presence at the top couple of teams."

Temperatures are expected to be warmer for today's round and Escamilla said in contention, he's excited to take his game into a new day with fairer conditions.

"I think I played really well today, so in perfect conditions I think I would just keep swinging my swing and ask what the course record is," Escamilla said.

Cruz leads Bulldogs' improvement

Behind a respectable round of 82, Midland High senior Sebastian Cruz has the Bulldogs on an upward trajectory. MHS' top team turned in a 358, tied with Odessa Permian's second team. But MHS could be on track to an improved finish after placing 14th at last year's tournament.

Cruz said he and his team did what they could to contend with the wind.

"Once the wind hits you and you're playing, you're just fighting through it really, trying not to get stiff, trying not to get too upset about too many shots. There's not much you can do about. Today was more of the grind and sometimes you beat the golf course, sometimes the golf course beats you."

Rebels, MCS in middle of the pack

Lee's No. 1 team shot a 336 and is currently in fifth place – two strokes behind Monahans II – heading into today's round.

Rebels sophomores Cameron Lopez (78) and Paul Gomez (78) led the way and are both in the top 10 of the individual standings.

Lee head coach Wes Overton said his young team performed well.

"I think they battled the conditions fairly well. The scores really could have ballooned up but they didn't. For the most part, I thought we did a good job playing with the wind today. We feel good about (today)."

Midland Christian shot a 337 and is one shot behind Lee in sixth place. Robby Massey (79) carded the Mustangs' best score, followed by Joe Smith with an 81.

Black athletes in 1980s, 90s not outspoken, but not silent

In this March 2,1999, file photo, Michael Jordan stands with a group of models at the Bellagio Hotel in Las Vegas where he previewed the Fall/Holiday 1999 Jordan collection, a sub-brand of Nike. By the 1980s, America finally publicly embraced the black athlete, looking past skin color to see athleticism and skill, rewarding stars with multimillion-dollar athletic contracts, movie deals, lucrative shoe endorsements and mansions in all-white enclaves. Who didn't want to be like Mike?

By the 1980s, America finally publicly embraced the black athlete, looking past skin color to see athleticism and skill, rewarding stars with multimillion-dollar athletic contracts, movie deals, lucrative shoe endorsements and mansions in all-white enclaves.

Who didn't want to be like Mike?

But those fortunate black athletes like Michael Jordan and Tiger Woods did not, for the most part, use their celebrity to speak out. Most were silent on issues like the crack epidemic, apartheid in South Africa, the racial tensions exposed by the O.J. Simpson trial and the police brutality that set off the Rodney King riots.

Of course, there were exceptions — more, perhaps, than are generally remembered. And the times and the media of those times did not necessarily lend themselves to protest. But while Jack Johnson and Muhammad Alionce stood up — and more recently, Colin Kaepernick , Lebron James, Serena Williams and others would not back down — black athletes of the '80s and '90s were known mostly for playing games.

"It seems to me that we need to rethink how we define 'activism' since black athletes certainly were involved in various social causes during that era. Anecdotally, I think about them donating to various scholarship funds and participating in 'say no to drugs'" campaigns,'" said Johnny Smith, who is the Julius C. "Bud" Shaw Professor of Sports, Society, and Technology at Georgia Tech. "That's certainly a form of activism. However, on the whole, the most prominent black male athletes were not confrontational or outspoken."

When Harvey Gantt took on conservative Republican Sen. Jesse Helms in 1990, Jordan — the undisputed superstar athlete of his time — refused to support the black Democrat in his native North Carolina, reportedly saying Republicans buy shoes, too.

It took until 2016 for Jordan to finally speak out strongly on a social issue by condemning the killing of black men at the hands of police, writing in a column published by The Undefeated website.

Woods said this week that throughout America's history, blacks have struggled.

"A lot of different races have had struggles, and obviously the African Americans here in this country have had their share of struggles," Woods said. "Obviously has it gotten better, yes, but I still think there's room for more improvement."

The mold of the public activist — the person who is willing to lead but also willing to lose everything for a cause — doesn't fit everyone, said Harry Edwards, a scholar of race and sports who has worked as a consultant for several U.S. pro teams.

Some guys are fine "picking up a paycheck" because they don't want to be bothered, Edwards said.

"But that's fine, because that has always been there," he said. "That was there during slavery. Nat Turner comes and says, 'Hey, let's run away. Let's get some guns. Let's get some machetes, and let's fight for our freedom.' And you always have someone say, 'You kidding me?'" Dominique Wilkins, an NBA Hall of Famer known as the "Human Highlight Film" for his thunderous, acrobatic dunks during the 1980s and '90s, believes social media have amplified athletes' voices — and the Twitter-less past did not offer sports stars the soap boxes they have now.

"We didn't have a platform because it wasn't that type of media around," Wilkins said. "You had the normal, everyday media, but you didn't have Twitter, Facebook, Instagram, you didn't have any of that."

Wilkins, 58, said people are completely off base when they say his generation didn't do anything or care about what was happening in their communities and in the world.

"We grew up in a different era. We were born in the civil rights era. I remember when Martin Luther King Jr. was assassinated," said Wilkins, an NBA analyst for Atlanta Hawks games for Fox SportsSouth. "People who say we didn't care don't know what they're talking about. ... We cared. We were a part of it, so we cared.

"Our parents lived it. Our grandparents lived it. How can we not care?"

The activism of the time was different, said sports historian Victoria Jackson, who works in the School of Historical, Philosophical, and Religious Studies at Arizona State University.

Behind the scenes, superstar athletes worked in their communities and with schools — without making their activities known or asking for publicity for their time. Millions of dollars went to schools like historically black colleges and universities — as well as other deserving charities including social justice charities — without public acknowledgment, Jackson said.

"While we might have seen a decline in athletes voicing strong opinions publicly about systemic racism, police brutality, criminal justice and education and residential and workplace reform, and perhaps the growth of endorsements contributed to this, I would suspect — if we did a little digging — we'd find countless stories of athletes doing work in the space of social justice and that this is the constant theme in the long historical arc," she said.

There were some who spoke loudly. A dashiki-wearing point guard Craig Hodges, Jordan's teammate on the Chicago Bulls, presented then-President George H. W. Bush with a letter in 1991, urging more concern for African-Americans during one of the Bulls' championship trips to the White House.

During the 1995-96 season, Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf began stretching or staying in the locker room during the national anthem. Abdul-Rauf was suspended for one game. But at season's end, despite averaging 19.2 points and 6.8 assists, he was traded from the Denver Nuggets to the Sacramento Kings. And when his contract expired two years later, he couldn't get a tryout and was out of the league at age 29.

Those protests, some say, may not represent the most radical actions of black athletes of the time, which were in the boardrooms, not on the streets.

Jordan built a brand that turned him into a Nike powerhouse, where he brought African-American businessmen and women up the ladder with him, before becoming the first black sports billionaire with his NBA team ownership of the Charlotte Hornets.

Magic Johnson, in addition to building a business empire, spoke out passionately about the HIV/AIDS crisis after contracting the disease. The NFL's Man of the Year award was long named for Walter Payton, who pushed organ donation into the public limelight in his native Chicago and around the country through his foundation while advocating for minority ownership in professional football.

Mike Glenn, a 10-year NBA veteran who played from 1977-87 and member of the National Basketball Retired Players Association board of directors, believes how those first black millionaires went about their business helped build the foundation that allows athletes to speak out today.

"I think all of them were aware of backlash," said Glenn, a collector of documents on African American history and culture.

DAYTONA 500: NASCAR Cup Series' iconic season-opener kicks off its historic 60th running as ...

NASCAR loses some star power

Forty drivers will hit the track at Daytona International Speedway in hopes of winning the 500-mile race. Alex Bowman will start from the pole for "The Great American Race" in his debut as the official driver of the No. 88 Chevrolet, piloted until last season by Dale Earnhardt Jr. This season, the driver landscape will see some changes. Danica Patrick announced her retirement from full-time driving after five full seasons in the Monster Energy NASCAR Cup Series. With her Daytona 500 start, Patrick's two-race farewell to motorsports will include one last shot at winning the Indy 500 in May. Former NASCAR champion Matt Kenseth is stepping away from full-time racing and Earnhardt, after retiring from full-time racing following the 2017 season, will serve a prominent role as grand marshal for NASCAR's signature event.

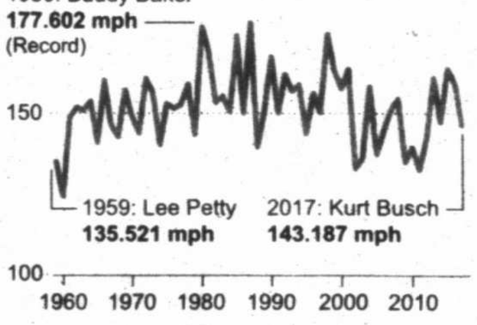
Need for speed

Average winning speed at the Daytona 500:



In the driver's seat

After a dominant 2017 season, can Martin Truex Jr. win the NASCAR Cup Series championship for the second year in a row? A look at the top title contenders:

Kyle Busch
Busch is the 2015 Cup champion. He is 0-for-12 in the Daytona 500 with a career-best finish of third. Runner-up had career-best in poles, over 2,000 laps led.

Chase Elliott
Entering his third season, Elliott is still seeking his first career Cup victory. He switched car numbers this year from No. 24 to the No. 9.

Denny Hamlin
Hamlin won the 2016 Daytona 500. The 2006 Rookie of the Year is an annual title contender, but has yet to win his first Cup crown.

Kevin Harvick
Harvick won the 2007 Daytona 500 and is always a contender at the track. The 2014 champion and 2001 Rookie of the Year has 37 career wins.

Jimmie Johnson
Seven-time champion opens the season seeking a third victory in the Daytona 500. Has 83 career wins, one behind Darrell Waltrip and Bobby Allison.

Erik Jones
Considered one of NASCAR's future stars, Jones is making his debut with Joe Gibbs Racing at Daytona. Steps into Matt Kenseth's seat.

Brad Keselowski
Although he's a five-time winner at Talladega, Keselowski has just one career win at Daytona and has never won the Daytona 500.

Kyle Larson
Larson won a career-high four races last year but an engine failure prevented him for racing for the championship.

Joey Logano
He won the 2015 Daytona 500 and has a strong Team Penske lineup with Keselowski and Ryan Blaney. Did not earn a playoff spot for the first time since 2012.

Martin Truex Jr.
The reigning Cup champion, Truex led nearly every statistical category in 2017, including notching a series-leading eight victories.

Four bold predictions for the 60th Daytona 500

By Brendan Marks
The Charlotte Observer

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — The Daytona 500 — what other accolades are there to heap upon it? It's the most highly regarded race in NASCAR, and even people who aren't racing fans tune in to one of the world's most captivating sports events.

And it's finally here.

So, what can fans expect from the 60th Daytona 500? Here are four bold predictions for what's to come on Sunday (and one freebie, in case the others fall short):

1. Bad day for championship contenders

Only five drivers (Lee Petty, Richard Petty, Cale Yarborough, Jeff Gordon, and Jimmie Johnson) have won the Daytona 500 and a NASCAR championship in the same season. That won't change in 2018.

On top of that, I'm not sure last season's four championship contenders — Martin Truex Jr., Kyle Busch, Kevin Harvick and Brad Keselowski — will have terrific showings, either. While those four could really assert themselves on safer, more conventional tracks, anything can happen at Daytona.

Considering the poor qualifying efforts from Truex and Keselowski, plus Harvick mentioning he needs to improve significantly before the 500, I wouldn't pick any of last season's contenders to finish in the top three.

2. A new driver shocks everyone ... and almost wins

This one sort of bends the rules, but we're really talking about a handful of guys: Alex Bowman, William Byron and Darrell Wallace Jr. Both Byron and Bowman finished in the top five in qualifying (with Bowman winning the pole), and their cars don't figure to magically get slower in the days leading up to the 500. Byron especially is interesting, given his meteoric rise through the ranks of NASCAR (he spent one season each in the two lower divisions, winning the Xfinity Series championship in 2017). One of those two will still be hanging around the front of the pack late in the race, and while they likely won't win, a top-five finish is absolutely a possibility.

3. New technicality proves costly

This season, NASCAR is allowing fewer crew members over the wall during pit stops.

That may seem insignificant, but here's what it means: Every team will be trying something different to go as fast as possible. And in that haste, there comes waste. Without a proven blueprint for pit stops now, one crew will slip or otherwise make an error during a stop — and it will prove costly to a contender.

4. My dark-horse favorite to win is ...

'Grandpa' Johnson determined to win 8th NASCAR championship

By Dan Gelston
Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Jimmie Johnson has never hitched a ride for an afternoon on a champion's float that snakes down closed city streets.

The professional sports teams bask in the celebration of hundreds of thousands of fans screaming in adulation and spraying beer from sidewalks in a frenzy as confetti flies from the sky.

Johnson's top reward for winning it all, a rally once at one of his sponsor's stores a few miles away from his California hometown.

The NASCAR champion traditionally gets a party in victory lane at the season finale and throws a bash at the postseason banquet.

It's all good fun, but even a seven-time champion wouldn't mind a parade.

"I have to admit, that would be a nice add to the NASCAR champions schedule," Johnson said. "It would be really cool."

Johnson, a regular visitor to the White House when he reigned as NASCAR's champ, had already initiated his own champion's tradition a few years back.

Inspired by a chat with NASCAR official Mike Helton and the presidential tradition of leaving a handwritten letter to the successor, Johnson started a champion's journal.

His first entry was a December 2011 letter to series champion Tony Stewart. Johnson followed championship seasons with notes for Kevin Harvick and 2017 champ Martin Truex Jr., and the keepsake is handed off at the banquet.

"There seems to be a thread when it comes back to me about me having more entries than anyone else," Johnson said with a laugh outside his motorhome. "That kind of finds its way in each time I get it back."

Johnson

The journal is thick enough for quite a few more lines of teasing, well wishes and advice left to be composed. But the question looms for the 42-year-old Johnson, can he still fill the blank pages left as he comes off the worst season of his career?

Or, is the handwriting on the wall that a new crop of stars is ready to deny Johnson another title for as many years as he has left?

Believe that at your own risk.

"I signed up for three more years and I feel like I have the team and the ability to win all three of them," Johnson said. "We won five in a row and I want to believe in three in a row."

Johnson was never really a serious contender in 2017 to push past Dale Earnhardt and Richard Petty and win his record eighth NASCAR crown. He won three races (but none after June), had a career-worst four top-fives and finished 10th in the standings.

There are about 30 other drivers in the Daytona 500 field who would love to craft that kind of season. At Hendrick Motorsports, long the class organization of NASCAR, Johnson and crew chief Chad Knaus were

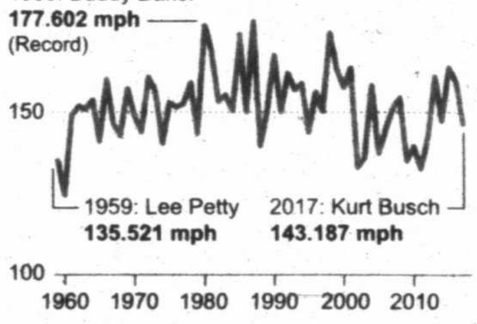
Average winning speed at the Daytona 500:



In the driver's seat

After a dominant 2017 season, can Martin Truex Jr. win the NASCAR Cup Series championship for the second year in a row? A look at the top title contenders:

Kyle Busch
Busch is the 2015 Cup champion. He is 0-for-12 in the Daytona 500 with a career-best finish of third. Runner-up had career-best in poles, over 2,000 laps led.

Chase Elliott
Entering his third season, Elliott is still seeking his first career Cup victory. He switched car numbers this year from No. 24 to the No. 9.

Denny Hamlin
Hamlin won the 2016 Daytona 500. The 2006 Rookie of the Year is an annual title contender, but has yet to win his first Cup crown.

Kevin Harvick
Harvick won the 2007 Daytona 500 and is always a contender at the track. The 2014 champion and 2001 Rookie of the Year has 37 career wins.

Jimmie Johnson
Seven-time champion opens the season seeking a third victory in the Daytona 500. Has 83 career wins, one behind Darrell Waltrip and Bobby Allison.

Erik Jones
Considered one of NASCAR's future stars, Jones is making his debut with Joe Gibbs Racing at Daytona. Steps into Matt Kenseth's seat.

Brad Keselowski
Although he's a five-time winner at Talladega, Keselowski has just one career win at Daytona and has never won the Daytona 500.

Kyle Larson
Larson won a career-high four races last year but an engine failure prevented him for racing for the championship.

Joey Logano
He won the 2015 Daytona 500 and has a strong Team Penske lineup with Keselowski and Ryan Blaney. Did not earn a playoff spot for the first time since 2012.

Martin Truex Jr.
The reigning Cup champion, Truex led nearly every statistical category in 2017, including notching a series-leading eight victories.

Four bold predictions for the 60th Daytona 500

By Brendan Marks
The Charlotte Observer

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — The Daytona 500 — what other accolades are there to heap upon it? It's the most highly regarded race in NASCAR, and even people who aren't racing fans tune in to one of the world's most captivating sports events.

And it's finally here.

So, what can fans expect from the 60th Daytona 500? Here are four bold predictions for what's to come on Sunday (and one freebie, in case the others fall short):

1. Bad day for championship contenders

Only five drivers (Lee Petty, Richard Petty, Cale Yarborough, Jeff Gordon, and Jimmie Johnson) have won the Daytona 500 and a NASCAR championship in the same season. That won't change in 2018.

On top of that, I'm not sure last season's four championship contenders — Martin Truex Jr., Kyle Busch, Kevin Harvick and Brad Keselowski — will have terrific showings, either. While those four could really assert themselves on safer, more conventional tracks, anything can happen at Daytona.

Considering the poor qualifying efforts from Truex and Keselowski, plus Harvick mentioning he needs to improve significantly before the 500, I wouldn't pick any of last season's contenders to finish in the top three.

2. A new driver shocks everyone ... and almost wins

This one sort of bends the rules, but we're really talking about a handful of guys: Alex Bowman, William Byron and Darrell Wallace Jr. Both Byron and Bowman finished in the top five in qualifying (with Bowman winning the pole), and their cars don't figure to magically get slower in the days leading up to the 500. Byron especially is interesting, given his meteoric rise through the ranks of NASCAR (he spent one season each in the two lower divisions, winning the Xfinity Series championship in 2017). One of those two will still be hanging around the front of the pack late in the race, and while they likely won't win, a top-five finish is absolutely a possibility.

3. New technicality proves costly

This season, NASCAR is allowing fewer crew members over the wall during pit stops.

That may seem insignificant, but here's what it means: Every team will be trying something different to go as fast as possible. And in that haste, there comes waste. Without a proven blueprint for pit stops now, one crew will slip or otherwise make an error during a stop — and it will prove costly to a contender.

4. My dark-horse favorite to win is ...

'Grandpa' Johnson determined to win 8th NASCAR championship

By Dan Gelston
Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Jimmie Johnson has never hitched a ride for an afternoon on a champion's float that snakes down closed city streets.

The professional sports teams bask in the celebration of hundreds of thousands of fans screaming in adulation and spraying beer from sidewalks in a frenzy as confetti flies from the sky.

Johnson's top reward for winning it all, a rally once at one of his sponsor's stores a few miles away from his California hometown.

The NASCAR champion traditionally gets a party in victory lane at the season finale and throws a bash at the postseason banquet.

It's all good fun, but even a seven-time champion wouldn't mind a parade.

"I have to admit, that would be a nice add to the NASCAR champions schedule," Johnson said. "It would be really cool."

Johnson, a regular visitor to the White House when he reigned as NASCAR's champ, had already initiated his own champion's tradition a few years back.

Inspired by a chat with NASCAR official Mike Helton and the presidential tradition of leaving a handwritten letter to the successor, Johnson started a champion's journal.

His first entry was a December 2011 letter to series champion Tony Stewart. Johnson followed championship seasons with notes for Kevin Harvick and 2017 champ Martin Truex Jr., and the keepsake is handed off at the banquet.

"There seems to be a thread when it comes back to me about me having more entries than anyone else," Johnson said with a laugh outside his motorhome. "That kind of finds its way in each time I get it back."

Johnson

The journal is thick enough for quite a few more lines of teasing, well wishes and advice left to be composed. But the question looms for the 42-year-old Johnson, can he still fill the blank pages left as he comes off the worst season of his career?

Or, is the handwriting on the wall that a new crop of stars is ready to deny Johnson another title for as many years as he has left?

Believe that at your own risk.

"I signed up for three more years and I feel like I have the team and the ability to win all three of them," Johnson said. "We won five in a row and I want to believe in three in a row."

Johnson was never really a serious contender in 2017 to push past Dale Earnhardt and Richard Petty and win his record eighth NASCAR crown. He won three races (but none after June), had a career-worst four top-fives and finished 10th in the standings.

There are about 30 other drivers in the Daytona 500 field who would love to craft that kind of season. At Hendrick Motorsports, long the class organization of NASCAR, Johnson and crew chief Chad Knaus were

Daytona 500: How vital is NASCAR at 70?

By Steve Hummer
The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

Born in 1948 as a confederation of moonshiners and roughnecks, NASCAR turns 70 at the drop of a white flag at Daytona on Sunday.

The drivers who turned laps on the hard sand of Daytona Beach in February of '48 — back when winners (in this case Red Byron) were literally more colorful — would scarcely recognize the grand sweep of the modern Daytona 500.

But the drivers today — a more buttoned-down, geographically diverse class, to be sure — also have reason to wonder about the relative health of their septuagenarian sport. From a peak at the beginning of this century, when Forbes hailed NASCAR as "America's fastest growing professional sport," big-time stock car racing more recently has endured eroding television ratings, declining attendance and a drain of marketable stars.

NASCAR's biggest series opens its season with uncertainty in its title — the Monster Energy company has remained mum on any plans to underwrite the series beyond this year.

And, despite the denials of the founding France family, rumors of a potential NASCAR sale will not go away. "Many believe a sale or major consolidation is the best hope for a sport in dire need of reimagining and innovation," declared a Sports Business Daily story this week.

When asked about the current state of their sport, drivers have offered the kind of stubborn commentary common to any 70-year-old: We may not be what we used to be, but we're still here, still kicking, and that's a major accomplishment.

"The sport's not going away tomorrow," 2012 series champion winner Brad Keselowski said. "We're still on the airplane, we just might not be sitting in first class seats. I'm thankful for that."

Said Kasey Kahne, who was shuffled to a lesser team this season amid shrinking sponsorships, "When I first came into it, you'd go to any race track and the grandstands would be packed. I thought it was unbelievable. We don't have as many of those anymore. There are certain tracks we have full houses. I wish there were more people at the race who are involved and intrigued by it and want to be a part of it. I wish we could get back to that (peak time) for that excitement level. But I still think the racing is very good."

When asked about his sport's future at the 2017 championship race in Homestead, the ruling France, Brian, stated, not surprisingly, "Well, I'm really more optimistic right now."

France touted fairly recent format changes — the evolution of the chase to the championship playoffs, stage racing built into every event in order to goose competition.

He pointed to the potential of a new wave of young drivers, including a dash of diversity, as a remedy for the retirement of stars like Dale Earnhardt Jr. and Jeff Gordon.

"We like where we're at and we like where we're going," France insisted.

In the alternate universe of racing, the biggest of events happens at the front end of the season rather than at the finish. And Sunday's Daytona 500 highlights the changes NASCAR is undergoing, even at the ripe old age of 70.

The most popular No. 88 car is on the pole Sunday, but instead of Earnhardt at the wheel as he had been for the previous 10 years, it will be his 24-year-old replacement Alex Bowman. Dale Jr.'s presence will be merely ceremonial, as the race's grand marshal.

The No. 43 car made famous by Richard Petty will be piloted by Bubba Wallace, the first African-American driver to win a national series NASCAR race since 1963.

Danica Patrick reportedly is making her final NASCAR run Sunday. Mexico's Daniel Suarez, after compiling more top-10 finishes in his single season last year (12) than Patrick did in six years (7), will be starting his second Daytona 500.

The turnover of drivers has been running at a high RPM, leaving the sport hungry for a new star upon which to anchor. Chase Elliott, the son of Dawsonville legend Bill Elliott, is the one being most groomed for that position. His ascension awaits one little detail — winning his first race.

Even as the sport sought its bright new face, it was a 37-year-old journeyman, Martin Truex Jr., who won the series championship in 2017.

"We all have different pressure that's put on us. This new generation, there is different pressure," said the elder statesman of drivers and Elliott's teammate, seven-time series champion Jimmie Johnson. "There are a lot of big names that have stepped down, some shoes to fill, a fan base to kind of feed into.

"There's a lot of good there. These guys are ready for the challenge."

In the meantime, ideas for other changes that might jumpstart NASCAR are in no short supply.

Shorter races: "I think that's common among fans and among drivers and anyone — some of these races that are four-and-a-half hours long are just too long," said 2010 Daytona 500 winner Jamie McMurray.

A more sensible season (which currently will run from February 18 to November 18): "I think we should race more under a shorter time span. If we raced twice in a week in the summer months especially — when the weather's great and kids are out of school — I think that's a great opportunity," Keselowski said.

"There's no reason in my mind for us to compete so frequently with NFL in the fall months. I'd like to see our schedule condensed time-wise, even if it meant more races. I think it would be very healthy for our sport."

A willingness to shake up things: "We need to create events. We need to create moments," Kevin Harvick, 2014 series champion, said. "For example, I think there needs to be a rotation of the championship race. I don't think that we should go to Homestead/Miami every year. I think it gets stale. It's a great race track, but it's not all about the race track. It's about the event. How many times have you had a crappy Super Bowl but everybody goes to the Super Bowl because it's an event? Those are the types of things we need to create."

Better leadership: "What would I change? I would change it to where the leader of the sport was at the racetrack every weekend," Keselowski said. (He is not the first to criticize France's frequent absence from the track).

What sprung from a three-day meeting at Daytona Beach's Streamline Hotel between Bill France Sr. and various other racing figures more than 70 years ago is in a continuing state of flux.

By the way, the Streamline, the place where NASCAR was born, is newly renovated and billed as a boutique hotel, featuring deco style with a modern flair.

Things change.

You adapt. And adjust to the new realities.

"(Racing's) not as big as it was in 2006, but it's always really big," Harvick said. "You're going to go to the Daytona 500 and you're still going to have 100,000 people (if not more) in the grandstands. It's all relative."

Elliott picked to follow dad's path as NASCAR's most popular

By Dan Gelston and Mark Long
Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla.— Chase Elliott won a popularity contest before he even won a Cup Series race.

Elliott was the overwhelming favorite to be crowned the sport's next most popular driver. Although the actual award will be handed out in nine months, fellow NASCAR drivers polled at Daytona 500 media day expect Elliott to be a slam-dunk winner.

"I think he's already won the 2018 most popular driver award," Hendrick Motorsports teammate and seven-time Cup champion Jimmie Johnson said.

Dale Earnhardt Jr. won the award 15 consecutive years, including in 2017. But Earnhardt's retirement left the title up for grabs.

Well, sort of.

All indications are Elliott will take over the top spot, maybe even for the foreseeable future.

"I feel like he's one of the most important ingredients in what NASCAR racing does going forward because of his family name," 2014 Cup champion Kevin Harvick said. "He has the legacy that's already been built in this sport by his dad. He's come into this sport with a great name and already proven that he's going to be competitive. He has those southeast, NASCAR ties to those core fans that none of the rest of us will ever have. He's the guy."

Elliott is the 22-year-old son of Hall of Fame driver Bill Elliott. Both hail from Dawsonville, Georgia.

Harvick called the younger Elliott the "biggest tie to our grassroots NASCAR fan."

Elliott is entering his third full season at Hendrick Motorsports. He's winless in 77 career Cup starts, but had 12 top-five finishes last year and five runner-ups.

"When he wins the first time, you're going to see things that you haven't seen in a long time from fan reaction and just enthusiasm about this sport," Harvick said. "And when that happens, it's going to be good for all of us."

Johnson said Elliott is "going to be a superstar."

Elliott took all the praise in stride, saying he appreciated "the kind words for sure."

But he added that "Nothing is ever for sure till it's for sure, right?"

Bill Elliott, nicknamed "Awesome Bill from Dawsonville," won the most popular award 16 times in 19 years. The late Dale Earnhardt won in 2001.

Elliott and the Earnhardts had a lock on the award since 1991.

"Why that's the case, you know, I can't answer just because I don't really know, right?" Chase Elliott said. "But I'm going to continue to be me. Hopefully we have some great support. If I'm not your guy, I'm not your guy. But I think I'm very appreciative of the support I've had to this point.

"Dad has had a great following over the years. I think the people that were big Bill Elliott fans, they followed me for a long time, not just since I've been in the NASCAR world. Just try to keep doing my thing. We'll see as the season unfolds down the road."

Elliott may be the favorite to take top honors as NASCAR's new most popular driver, but he'll have some competition when it comes to who develops into the best driver among a promising crop of 20-something talent poised to become the next NASCAR stars.

Here are just a few drivers 25 and under looking to become Cup champions:

KYLE LARSON: The 25-year-old Larson was tagged for greatness by champions Tony Stewart and Jeff Gordon before he landed a spot in NASCAR. Stewart once guaranteed Larson would become NASCAR's next big thing. Larson has blossomed into a championship contender driving for Chip Ganassi. After two winless seasons, Larson won his first Cup race in 2016 and took off last season. He won four races and finished a career-best eighth in the points standings. "This is the first year I've been considered a championship favorite from day one," Larson said. "Last year we showed people that we could be a contender, where now this year people are pointing and looking at us that we could potentially be a championship favorite. That's cool."

ERIK JONES: The 21-year-old Jones spent one season learning from NASCAR champion Martin Truex Jr. while on loan at Furniture Row Racing. But he's back with Joe Gibbs Racing and racing with one of the top organizations in NASCAR. Overshadowed by Truex, Jones recorded a solid five top-five finishes and 14 top 10s in 36 starts. He finished as high as second at Bristol and is the first driver to win rookie of the year in all three NASCAR series. Jones' move comes with some big shoes to fill — he replaced 2003 series champion Matt Kenseth in the No. 20 Toyota. "I have a neat opportunity to really build kind of my own legacy in that car," Jones said.

WILLIAM BYRON: The 20-year-old Byron, who takes online classes at Liberty University, proved a quick study in his Daytona Cup debut. He posted the fifth-fastest lap for Daytona 500 pole qualifying. Byron is one of four Cup drivers at Hendrick Motorsports and three of them are under 23, joining Elliott and pole sitter Alex Bowman as part of the organization's sweeping youth movement. Byron won the 2017 Xfinity Series championship last season. "We're already way ahead of what most rookies have to go through, and I feel like that's an advantage for me," Byron said.

OTHER NOTABLES: Bowman, 24, will start the Daytona 500 from the pole. ... Darrell "Bubba" Wallace, 24, is the first black driver to start the Daytona 500 since 1969. ... Ryan Blaney, 24, won his first career Cup race in 2017 at Pocono.

that Bowman, Dale Earnhardt Jr.'s successor in the No. 88 car, won the pole for the 500.

Denny Hamlin, who won the 2016 race, will start second.

Then there's a whole list of other quality candidates who pose a threat to win: Keselowski, Harvick, Chase Elliott and many others.

And instead of any of them, I'm going with ... Kyle Larson, who finished 22nd in initial qualifying and limped to the finish line last season.

Yep. Speaking to other drivers at the track, there's a sense that Larson will always be in contention at the two superspeedway tracks (Daytona and Talladega).

Last year, he had a chance to win before running out of gas – and went on to have a breakthrough season anyway.

This year, I say he learns from that mistake and starts 2018 with a victory.

As for that gimme prediction ...

5. Expect a 'Big One' (or two ... or more)

Like you didn't expect this? The Daytona 500 has more than earned its reputation as the most prestigious race in NASCAR — and part of that allure, even if it's a bit darker to consider, is because of all the wrecks.

Hardly a year goes by in the Daytona 500 where you don't see a "Big One." The official definition there means any crash that involves five or more cars, and at Daytona, you can easily surpass that.

Last season there were eight cautions during the race, and only 15 of 40 entrants actually finished all 200 laps.

So no, this isn't a bold prediction — if anything, it's closer to a guarantee.

From 1C

considered underachievers with the No. 48 Chevrolet.

The Chevy ran slower in the second half of the season, and the team could never click and go on their traditional late-season surge; consider he won three of the final seven races in '16 to clinch his seventh championship.

"That was the first time at Hendrick that I've had that happen," Johnson said. "I couldn't have asked anything more from anybody on the team. Everybody was all in. That's where the frustration comes from."

The struggles did nothing to deter the Hendrick lifer from signing a three-year contract extension that should keep him with the team through 2020. Johnson, whose 83 wins are tied for sixth on the NASCAR career Cup series list, was already the top dog at Hendrick.

Now, he's the oldest dog on the Hendrick block, trying to teach his three 20-something teammates new tricks.

Daytona 500 pole-sitter Alex Bowman is 24. Cup rookie William Byron is 20. Chase Elliott is 22.

The trio's combined Cup wins: 0.

But the nicknames for the two-time Daytona 500 winner are adding up.

"We call him Grandpa every now and then," Bowman said.

"I would say Uncle Jimmie," Elliott said.

For a stately veteran, Johnson can still show the young'uns a good time. Johnson, a ski junkie in Aspen, Colorado, hit the slopes with Elliott before they hit the town for a couple of nights.

"I even heard him say, 'Wow this is what 40 looks like. Not bad,'" Johnson said. "I guess we can still have enough fun for a 22-year-old and make it cool."

Johnson tweeted a photo of himself from behind the wheel of his family car with Bowman and Byron tagging along in car seats.

Johnson, though, is steadfast that he will do his part to shape the next generation of Hendrick stars into regular challengers for checkered flags. He invites teammates into the hauler for chats, talks game plans with the other crew chiefs, and the fitness freak has even suggested healthy diet tips.

"Jimmie loves that role, and I think these guys will tell you he's there," team owner Rick Hendrick said.

Bowman must be listening: He won the Daytona 500 pole.

Retired four-time champion Jeff Gordon is still a trusted adviser at HMS and Hendrick said he was having as much fun as he had in years with an injection of youth into the organization.

If 2017's transition season led to stagnation across the lineup, Hendrick's focus this season on returning the team to championship form has Johnson fired up. "I've never seen him more committed than he is right now," Hendrick said.

Johnson's outside interests — including an ownership stake in a taco shop and a speakeasy; bike rides and marathons; and a blossoming interest in the NFL's Carolina Panthers ("I'd love to have a shot at it. But I don't think I can stretch the capital they need.") — have never affected his race preparation each weekend.

Johnson's championship crew chief Chad Knaus' deal is up at the end of the season, though Hendrick said he would work on an extension. Knaus is connected with Johnson in much the same way as Pat Riley and Magic Johnson or Joe Torre and Derek Jeter. One calls the shots and the other leads them to glory — and Johnson wants to keep the tag team intact.

"I know the dog years he lives in and I've anticipated at some point there might be a separation," he said. "I can't see it in the near future, so I hope to stay together. I've told him that we started this thing together, let's end this thing together."

Johnson, who wrecked in Speedweeks exhibition Clash at Daytona, is determined to end it alone atop the championship count.

"He wants No. 8," Hendrick said. The one that would wipe away the doubt and stamp him as NASCAR's greatest champion.

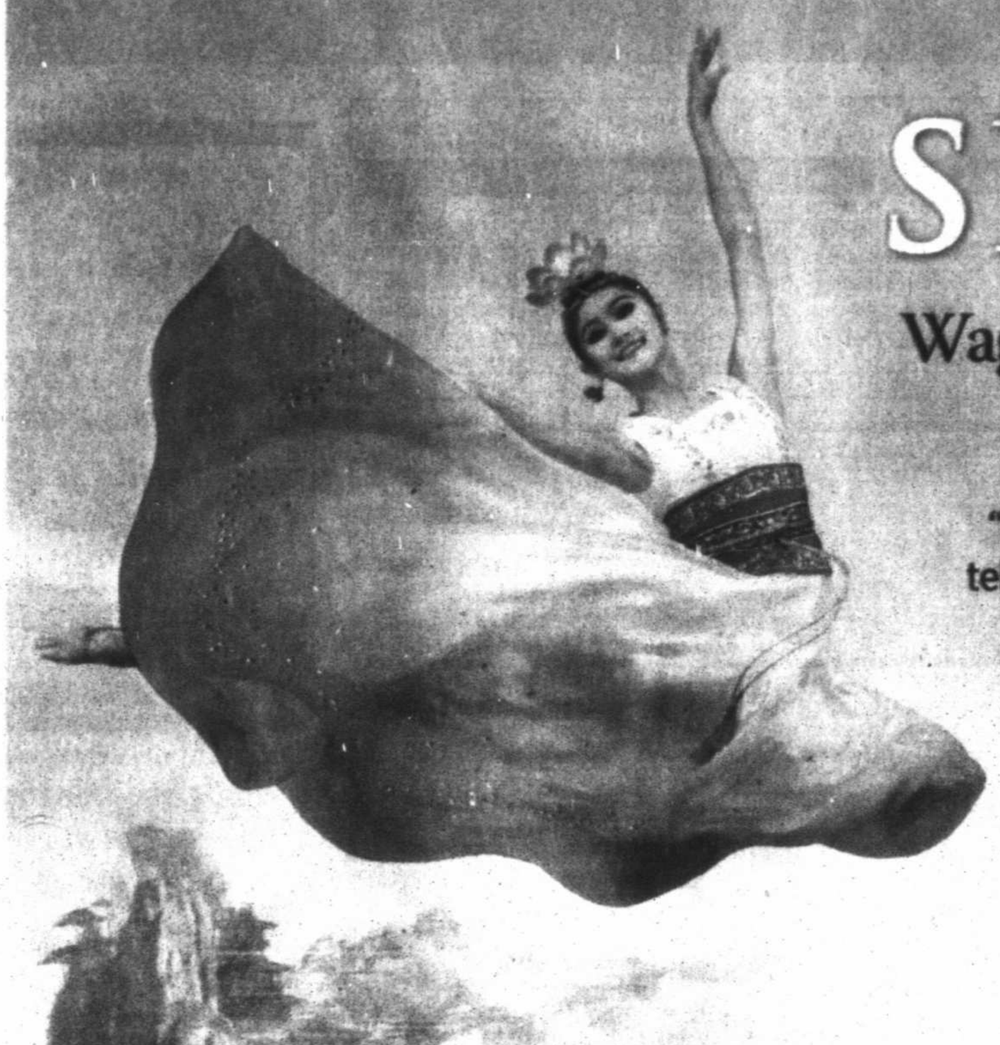
神韻 5,000 Years of Civilization Reborn



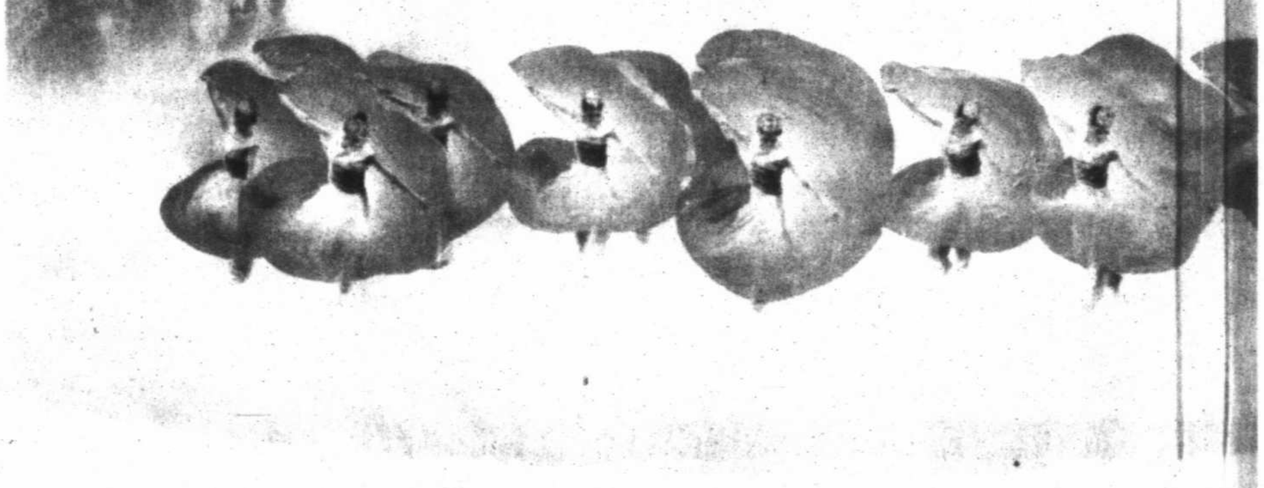
神韻晚會 2018

SHEN YUN

Wagner Noël Performing Arts Center
FEB 28, 2018

"ABSOLUTELY MUST BE SEEN! I love this show and tell everyone I know to see it! It is truly awe-inspiring."

—Jacqueline Porter, founding artistic and executive director of five performing companies in Dallas-Fort Worth metroplex



Pushing the Boundaries of Art

Shen Yun's unique a theatrical experienc
deeply moving jour
humanity's greatest millennia of traditio

This epic production immerses you in stories reaching back to the most distant past. You'll explore realms even beyond our visible world. Featuring one of the world's oldest art forms—classical Chinese dance—along with patented scenographical effects and all-original orchestral works, Shen Yun opens a portal to a glorious civilization of unrivaled beauty, artistry, and inspiration.

We invite you to a realm where philosophers and poets alike sought harmony with the Dao, or "Way," of the universe. Where maidens danced with ethereal grace and generals fought with explosive athleticism. Where timeless tales of valor and virtue were born. Where heaven and earth intersected, and even magic was possible.

Traditional Chinese culture—with its profoundly optimistic worldview and deep spiritual roots—was displaced by communism in China. Today, only the New York-based Shen Yun is keeping this precious heritage alive on stage. And it's an experience that will take your breath away.

Shen Yun Performing Arts is a nonprofit organization based in New York. Its mission is to revive 5,000 years of traditional Chinese culture, which under decades of communist suppression was left deeply scarred and impoverished. Shen Yun cannot perform in China today.

"The spirit of hope, beauty an blessing is a fabulous gift to us.
I want to go again! I have to bring as many people as I can."

—Sine McKenna, award-winning singer

"I have traveled all over the world to 50 countries now...I have never seen a production any better than this, anywhere! It's worth multiple times of the cost of the ticket. It is priceless!"

—Dr. Scott Stansfield, retired naturopathic physician goodness and meaning in life."

—Anna Liceica, former soloist with American Ballet Theatre

"The 8th wonder of the world! This is the greatest thing I have ever seen on the stage! Go see it to believe it, because otherwise, you're going to miss the most important thing in your life."

—Joe Heard, former White House photographer

Pushing the Boundaries of Art

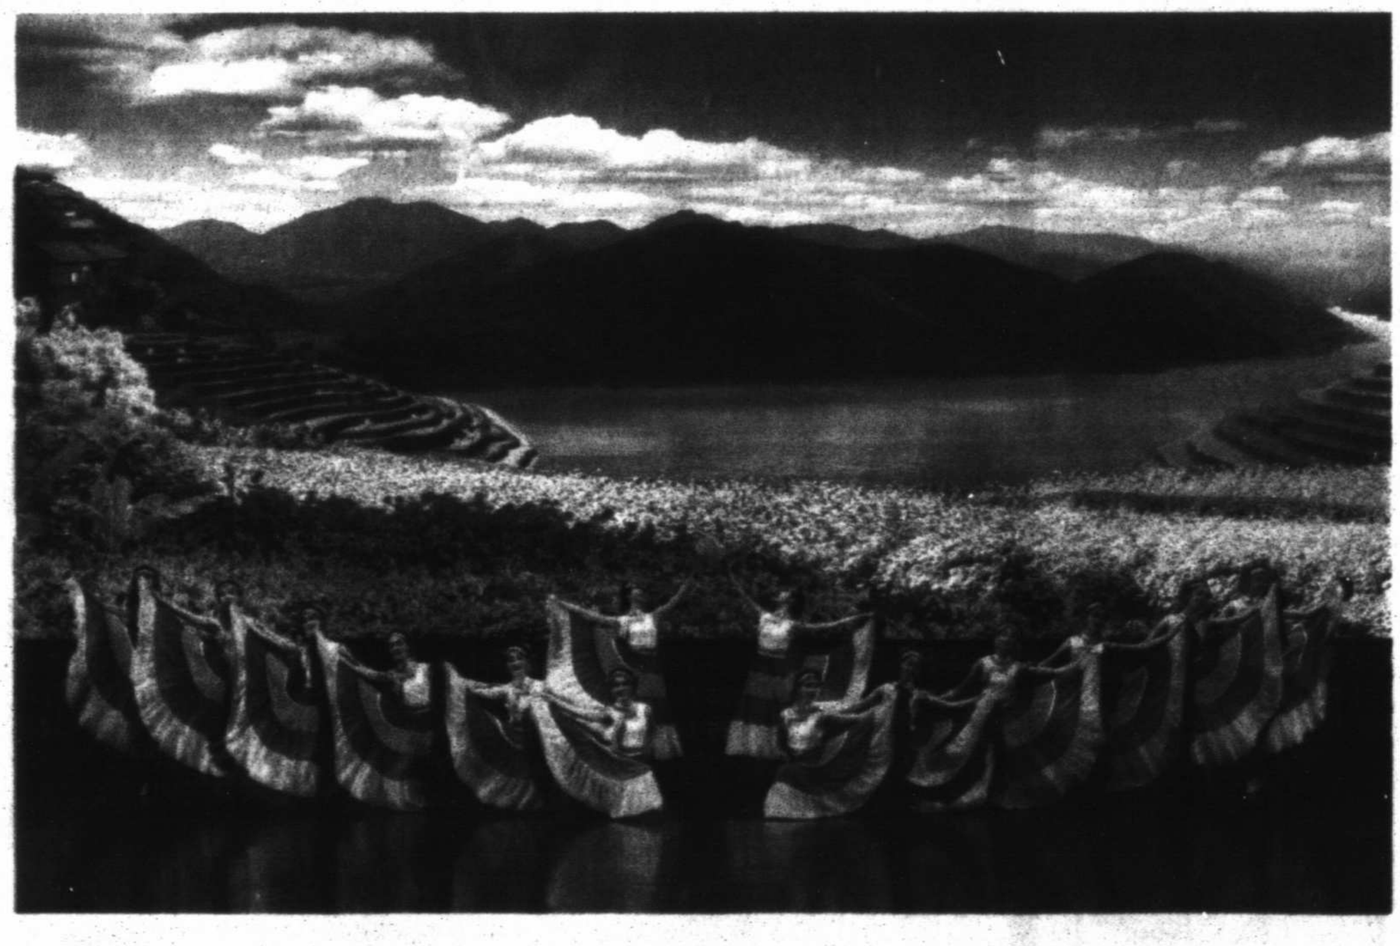
Shen Yun's unique artistic vision expands theatrical experience into a multi-dimensional, deeply moving journey through one of humanity's greatest treasures—the five millennia of traditional Chinese culture.

This epic production immerses you in stories reaching back to the most distant past. You'll explore realms even beyond our visible world. Featuring one of the world's oldest art forms—classical Chinese dance—along with patented scenographical effects and all-original orchestral works, Shen Yun opens a portal to a glorious civilization of unrivaled beauty, artistry, and inspiration.

We invite you to a realm where philosophers and poets alike sought harmony with the Dao, or "Way," of the universe. Where maidens danced with ethereal grace and generals fought with explosive athleticism. Where timeless tales of valor and virtue were born. Where heaven and earth intersected, and even magic was possible.

Traditional Chinese culture—with its profoundly optimistic worldview and deep spiritual roots—was displaced by communism in China. Today, only the New York-based Shen Yun is keeping this precious heritage alive on stage. And it's an experience that will take your breath away.

Shen Yun Performing Arts is a nonprofit organization based in New York. Its mission is to revive 5,000 years of traditional Chinese culture, which under decades of communist suppression was left deeply scarred and impoverished. Shen Yun cannot perform in China today.



"The spirit of hope, beauty and the blessing is a fabulous gift to us. I want to go again! I have to bring as many people as I can."

—Sine McKenna, award-winning singer

"I have traveled all over the world to 50 countries now...I have never seen a production any better than this, anywhere! It's worth multiple times of the cost of the ticket. It is priceless!"

—Dr. Scott Stansfield, retired naturopathic physician

"This show gave me a real sense of goodness and meaning in life."

—Anna Liceica, former soloist with American Ballet Theatre

"The 8th wonder of the world! This is the greatest thing I have ever seen on the stage! Go see it to believe it, because otherwise, you're going to miss the most important thing in your life."

—Joe Heard, former White House photographer

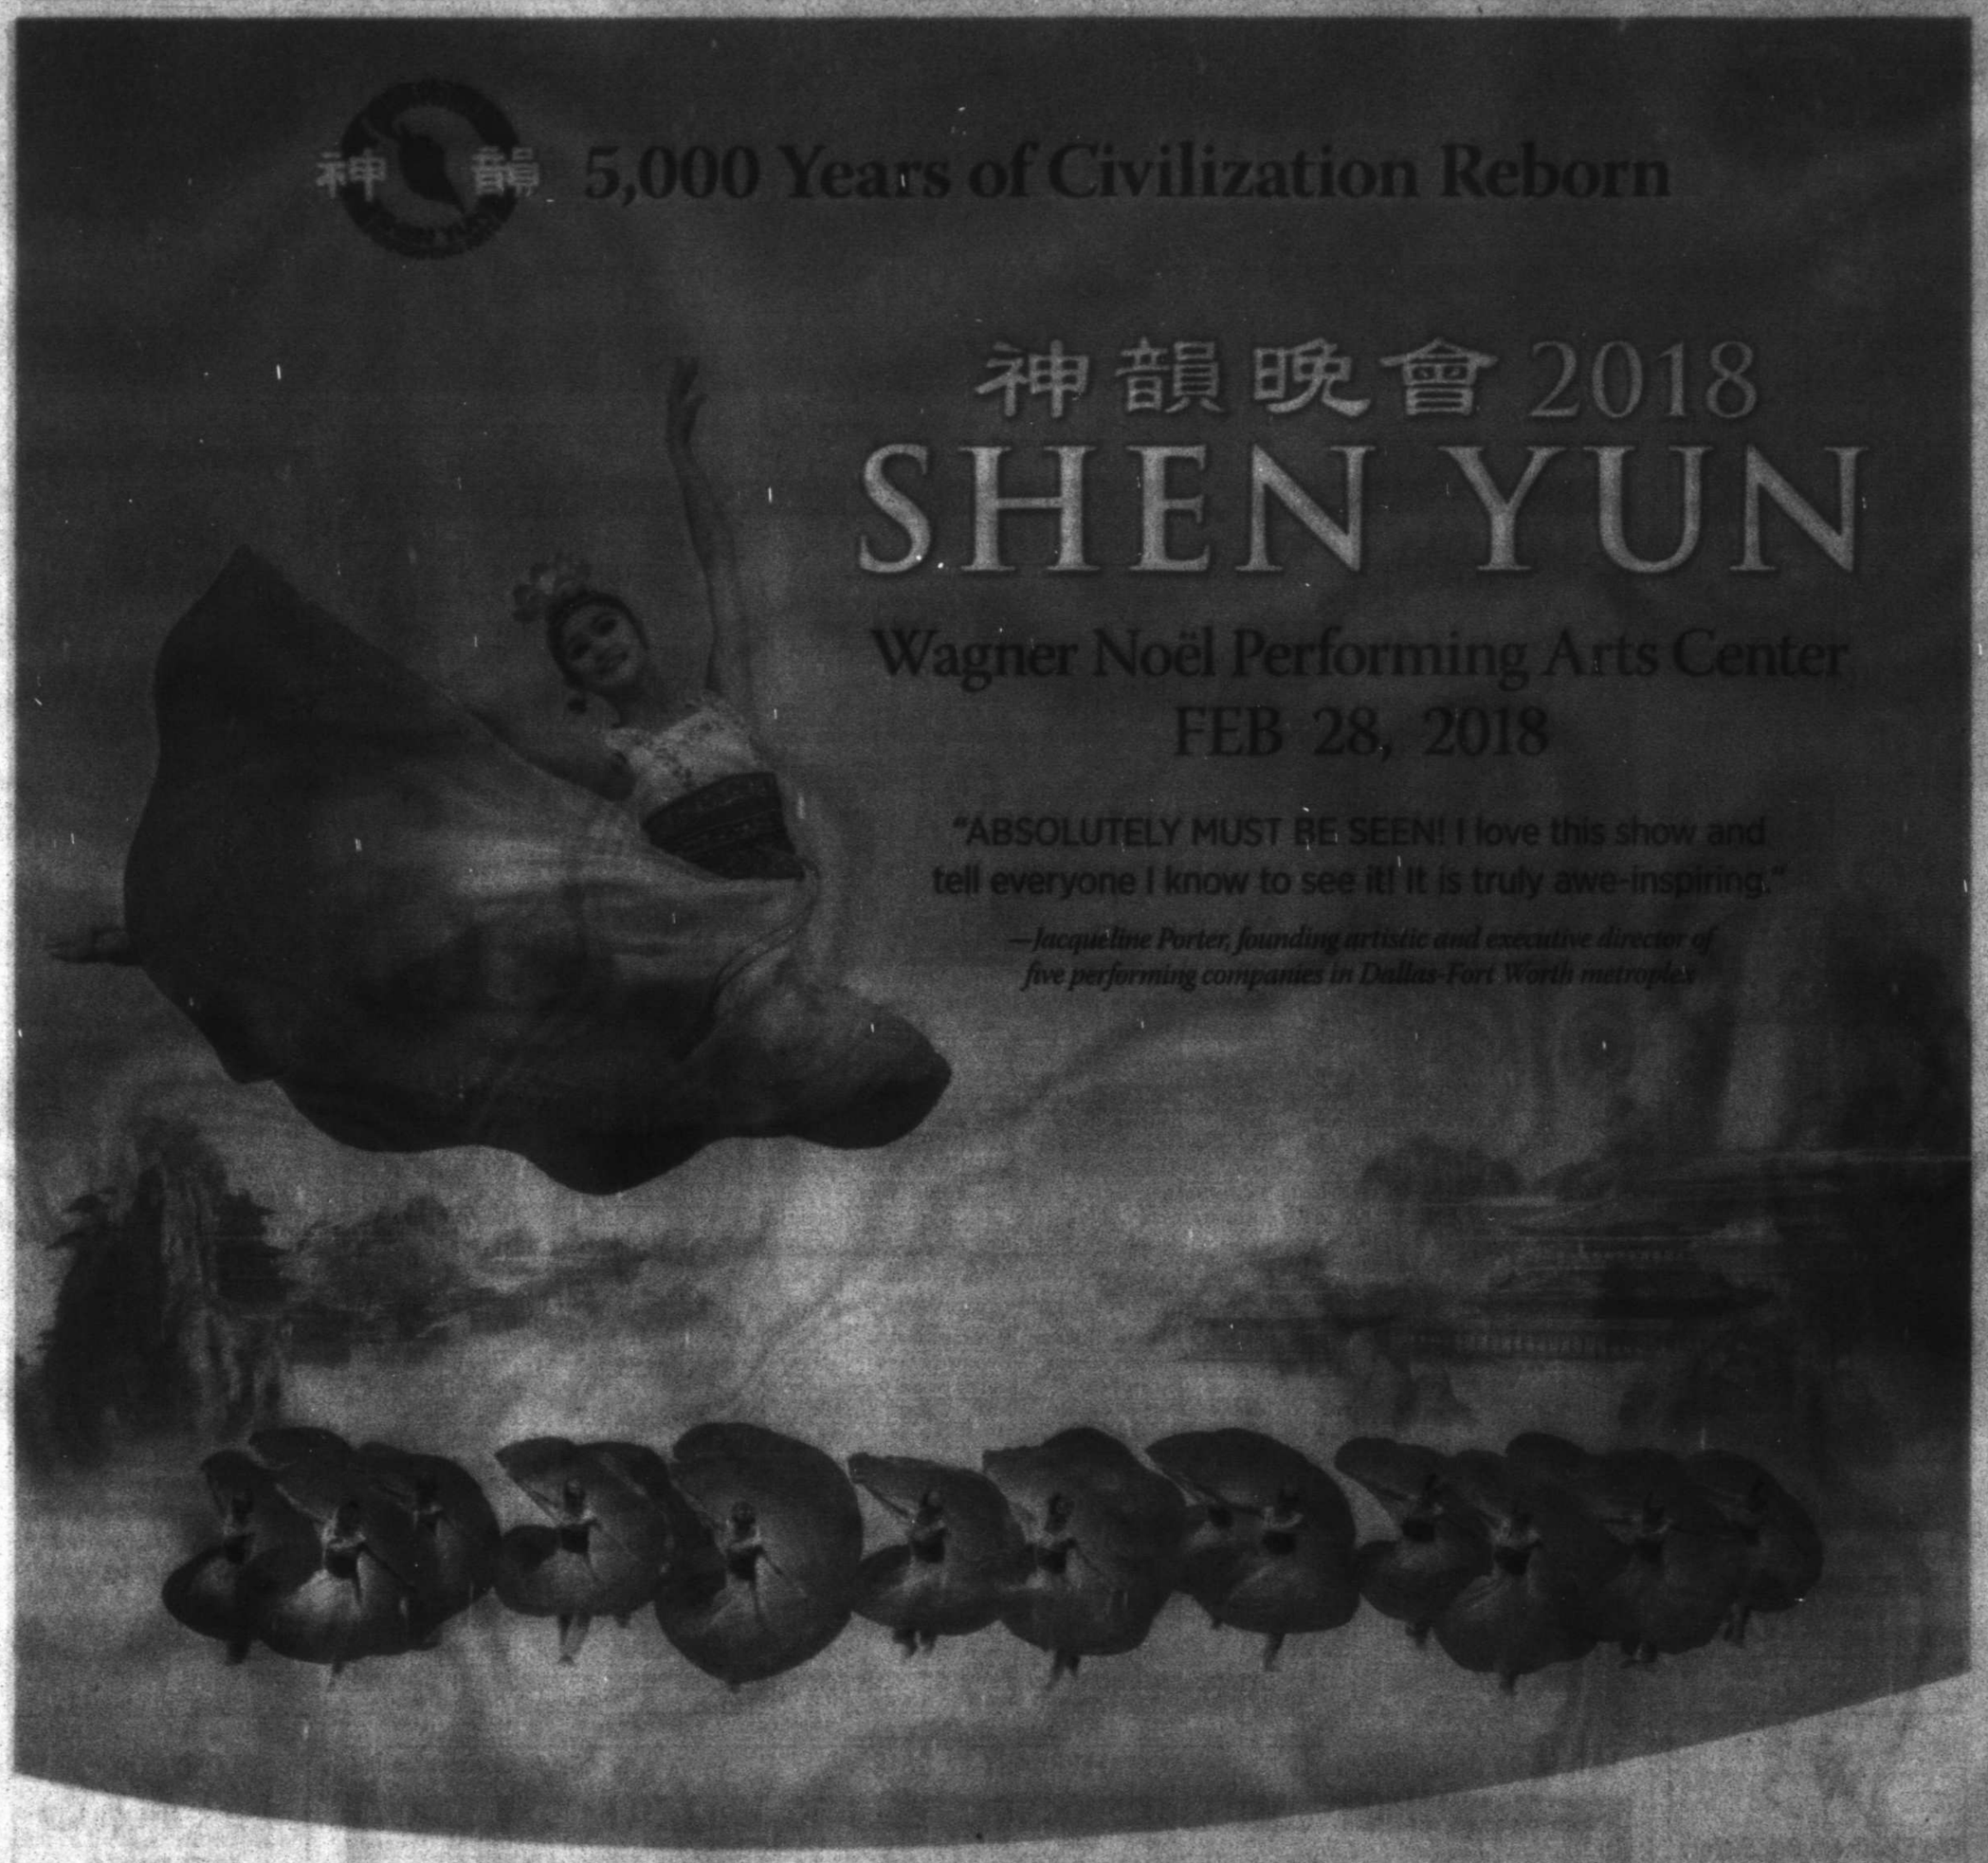
神韻 5,000 Years of Civilization Reborn



Pushing the Boundaries of Art

Shen Yun's unique artistic vision expands theatrical experience into a multi-dimensional, deeply moving journey through one of humanity's greatest treasures—the five millennia of traditional Chinese culture.

This epic production immerses you in stories reaching back to the most distant past. You'll explore realms even beyond our visible world. Featuring one of the world's oldest art forms—classical Chinese dance—along with patented scenographical effects and all-original orchestral works, Shen Yun opens a portal to a glorious civilization of unrivaled beauty, artistry, and inspiration.

We invite you to a realm where philosophers and poets alike sought harmony with the Dao, or "Way," of the universe. Where maidens danced with ethereal grace and generals fought with explosive athleticism. Where timeless tales of valor and virtue were born. Where heaven and earth intersected, and even magic was possible.

Traditional Chinese culture—with its profoundly optimistic worldview and deep spiritual roots—was displaced by communism in China. Today, only the New York-based Shen Yun is keeping this precious heritage alive on stage. And it's an experience that will take your breath away.

Shen Yun Performing Arts is a nonprofit organization based in New York. Its mission is to revive 5,000 years of traditional Chinese culture, which under decades of communist suppression was left deeply scarred and impoverished. Shen Yun cannot perform in China today.

"The spirit of hope, beauty and the blessing is a fabulous gift to us. I want to go again! I have to bring as many people as I can."

—Sine McKenna, award-winning singer

"I have traveled all over the world to 50 countries now...I have never seen a production any better than this, anywhere! It's worth multiple times of the cost of the ticket. It is priceless!"

—Dr. Scott Stansfield, retired naturopathic physician

"This show gave me a real sense of goodness and meaning in life."

—Anna Liceica, former soloist with American Ballet Theatre

"The 8th wonder of the world! This is the greatest thing I have ever seen on the stage! Go see it to believe it, because otherwise, you're going to miss the most important thing in your life."

—Joe Heard, former White House photographer

FEATURED RANCHES FOR SALE

36,460 deeded acres in Sandoval County, New Mexico – The terrain varies from high elevated ponderosa pine mesas to lower wide valley bottoms. This scenic ranch has the perfect "land of enchantment" charm. The property is well watered with extra nice improvements and the ranch receives over 100 elk permits. One-half minerals. $550 per acre.

10,666 acres located in Terrell County, Texas – This outstanding hunting ranch is located north of Sanderson. Big Canyon runs through the ranch creating a combination of limestone hills, ridges, valley bottoms and upland plateaus. The ranch features both mule deer and whitetail, and in recent years, elk have migrated to the property. Classified Minerals. $525 per acre.

25,785 acres located in Ector County, Texas – This ranch is located near Penwell in the heart of the Permian Basin. It has proven frac sand reserves on the east side of the Monahans Sandhills. The property has access off I-20 with extensive railroad frontage. There are three new Carrizo Aquifer water wells. Sand test results, survey and other pertinent information is available. Because of the proven frac sand availability, this ranch has great upside potential. $1,047 per acre.

14,393 acres located in Pecos and Brewster Counties – The terrain varies from wide, productive valley bottoms to rocky limestone hills and mountains. Extensive brush work has been done on portions of the ranch and approximately 4,000 acres are established to Klein grass pasture. Excellent hunting, including elk. Classified Minerals. $650 per acre.

7,705 acres located in Pecos County, Texas – The terrain is gently sloping on portions of the ranch, transitioning to rugged limestone hills, divides and deep canyons. The property is well known for producing large whitetail and mule deer, with elk now common. Classified Minerals. $550 per acre.

Brochures available on all ranches.
