Reinforcements dispatched to stop 'Freedom Flotilla'

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — Coast Guard reinforcements have been dispatched to help shut off the "Freedom Flotilla" of Cuban refugees amid reports that some unwilling U.S. skippers were being forced at gunpoint to carry refugees from a Cuban port.

The Coast Guard late Thursday dispatched 400 active and reserve Guardsmen, six cutters, nine aircraft, six utility boats and 14 boating safety detachments to South Florida.

"We're going to have half the Coast Guard down here," said quartermaster Lou Merck, duty officer at the Coast Guard Station in Key West.

Merck said a handful of boats were known to have left Key West Thursday for the Cuban port of Mariel, despite warnings of seizures and stiff fines if they returned with refugees.

Refugee-laden boats were "coming in hot and heavy" here early today, said Federal Emergency Management Agency spokesman Clay Edwards.

Merck said, "We've had reports over the radio from Mariel all night that the Cuban government is holding them forcibly and at gunpoint and not letting them come back without refugees."

Immigration officials said that as of 6 a.m. today, 48,651 refugees had arrived since the boatlift began, including 1,260 on 14 boats between midnight and 6 a.m. Ten boats docked without passengers in the first six hours today.

Officials said 105 boats arrived Thursday, 73 carrying 4,276 passengers and 32 with only crew. The 73 boats with refugees and about two dozen boats that arrived late Wednesday were seized by Customs agents. The captains were told they could face fines of $1,000 for each refugee.

In Washington, the Treasury Department announced that U.S. skippers who defied President Carter's order to end the boatlift could be fined $50,000 and jailed for 10 years.

In his statement Wednesday, the president said the ragtag boatlift was too dangerous, and ordered that no more boats leave Florida and that those in the Cuban port of Mariel return empty.

Carter offered to send planes and ships to ferry refugees back to the United States if Cuba would agree to let U.S. authorities screen refugees before departure.

Meanwhile, Key West Coast Guard Cmdr. Samuel Dennis said four U.S. government chartered boats were en route to Key West to begin a sealift of refugees if Cuban President Fidel Castro agrees to Carter's plan.

Carter's order was mocked by the official Cuban newspaper Granma. "Carter governs in Florida but in Mariel, Cuba governs," the newspaper said in an editorial broadcast by Havana radio and monitored in Miami.

Officials said 26 boats returned without refugees Thursday, as ordered by the president. But 35 had returned empty on Sunday, they noted, so there was no way to tell if Carter's order had any effect.

Arriving captains said Cuban authorities weren't giving them a choice.

"Nobody can leave there empty," said Pedro Morales, whose 24-foot pleasure boat landed with 10 Cubans. "They wanted to put 20 people on this boat and we had to fight to bring them down to 10."

Another boat captain, who declined to give his name, said, "The boats over there, they're going to come back with people. The Cubans have the guns. If somebody has a machine gun in his hands and says the refugees are going to get on that boat, what are you going to do?"

Arriving captains estimated that 1,100 boats remained in Mariel.

Reports indicate Iran is suffering

By The Associated Press

Reports from Tehran tell of lines outside food stores and skyrocketing unemployment — indications that Iran is suffering from months of political and economic conflict with the United States and its allies.

Yet these reports say that few observers in Tehran believe that any economic sanctions by the European Common Market — a question scheduled to be decided this weekend by the nine member nations meeting in Naples, Italy — would have an immediate impact.

Iran's revolutionary government draws most of its support from the working classes and peasants — people less affected by the economic downturn than the middle class.

The Iranian revolution is still a political and religious phenomenon despite an unemployment rate of about 30 percent and an inflation rate officially reported at 20 percent and unofficially estimated at 50 percent.

Iranian leaders are described in the Tehran accounts as looking for new oil customers and trading partners. Emissaries from Soviet-bloc countries are flying into Tehran with trade offers; the government has reached oil agreements with Poland and Czechoslovakia, and is talking about oil and natural gas sales to the Soviet Union. China also is increasing oil imports from Iran.

But Iranian leaders have been quoted as saying their country is already feeling the economic pinch, and that things could get worse if the Common Market countries go along with President Carter's call for the imposition of sanctions. The nine nations pledged last month to impose sanctions if no significant progress had been made toward the release of the U.S. hostages had been made by May 17.

Japan has indicated it will follow Western Europe's lead, but another U.S. ally, Canada, has taken a wait and see attitude until the Common Market countries announce details of any boycott after their Naples conference.

"Yes, there will be some difficulties caused by these sanctions," Ayatollah Mohammad Beheshti told reporters in Tehran last Wednesday, but he added that the sanctions would help Iran stand on its own feet economically.

Oil Minister Ali Akbar Moinfar said recently that Iran's daily oil production is about two million barrels, well below the government's target of three million, and far below the six million barrels turned out during the time of the shah. He blamed this partly on Iran's economic disputes with other countries.

The horned toad reigns in this community

COALINGA, Calif. (AP) — The horse may be nobler, the elephant stronger, the rabbit swifter and the fox smarter. But this weekend — in Coalinga, anyway — the horned toad reigns supreme.

Looking like a refugee from an old Japanese monster movie, the tiny spine-back lizard — most natives call it a "horny" toad — is host, mascot and chief entertainer at the annual Horned Toad Festival and Horned Toad Derby.

"We usually have 70 to 75 toads," said town councilman Keith Scrivner, "but cold weather in the high desert sent 'em all into hiding this year and we could only gather 30."

However, Coalinga, about 200 miles north of Los Angeles, is not a town to takes its horny toads lightly.

"They're just going to have to run twice as hard," said Scrivner.

Indeed, when pesticides and agriculture sent local lizards packing to the hills, Scrivner said Coalinga had to appeal to the state Department of Fish and Game to help save its festival, now in its 41st year.

And that's where Coalinga met up with "The Horny Toad Lady of Antelope Valley."

Environmental legislation prohibiting the commercial trapping of desert wildlife had also taken its toll on Pat Hargrave, an Antelope Valley pet store supplier 150 miles to the south.

Hearing of Ms. Hargrave's prowess as a horny toad hunter, Coalingans found a way to save their tradition and her business.

A deal was cut with the state and Ms. Hargrave was granted a special permit to catch horny toads exclusively for the festival, but only if they were treated humanely and returned to their homeland after the event.

As sole supplier, "The Horny Toad Lady" earns not only her nickname, but $1.50 a head as well.

"It's not a money-making proposition for me and my kids," she says. "I just love to run the desert looking for the critters."

As part of the bargain, Scrivner agreed to use his plane to transport the toads to and from Antelope Valley.

"You have to remember that this is a big event in Coalinga," he explained. "I mean, there's not even a bowling alley here. The horned toad is our high school mascot. And the festival is the biggest business week of the whole year."

The toads are kept in a cage during the plane ride, and Scrivner said he's never had a mishap. "They don't even get nauseous."

Carter continues fight for gas fee

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter is complaining that Congress appears to be buckling under pressure, endangering his proposed gasoline import fee and the goal of a balanced federal budget.

"It does require political courage in the Congress and executive branch," Carter said Thursday to a group of businessmen at the White House.

He said oil imports are down 12 percent so far this year, and he said the fee — which would raise gasoline prices 10 cents a gallon — is needed to continue that trend.

In fact, he said, congressional leaders urged him in March to take the action. The idea is not so popular now, he acknowledged, but he said failure to impose the fee would lead to even higher prices for imported oil.

In addition, he said, "It will tend to make our allies and other major consuming nations reverse, perhaps, or stop their additional commitment to intense conservation measures. It's a small price to pay."

As Carter was speaking to the businessmen, the House Ways and Means Committee was postponing until next week its efforts to stop the president from imposing the fee.

A U.S. District Court judge in Washington ruled earlier this week that Carter overstepped his authority in trying to make the fee apply only to gasoline, and a hearing on the White House appeal of that ruling has been set for the first week in June.

Carter also told the businessmen that political pressures of the election year are "working counter" to steps he and Congress agreed upon to reduce inflation.

"We jointly committed ourself to a balanced budget," he said. "That was a clear public commitment by the Congress, both Democrats and Republicans, and myself to the American people. In recent days we have seen disturbing signs in the Congress that this commitment to a balanced budget might be in danger."

Houston may integrate city and suburb schools

HOUSTON (AP) — In a sweeping move to integrate the nation's sixth largest school system, the Justice Department is seeking a desegregation plan for all 23 school systems in Houston and its suburbs. It is the first time the federal government has asked a court for cross-district desegregation in a large urban area.

A suit filed Thursday in U.S. Distict Court here adds 22 suburban school districts as defendants to a 23-year-old desegregation suit against the Houston schools, said Attorney General Benjamin R. Civiletti.

The revised suit blames the city of Houston, the state and the schools for concentrating minorities in Houston schools, pointing specifically to the schools' student transfer system, the city's refusal to allow low-income housing outside minority neighborhoods, the state's refusal to allow the school system to expand and state encouragement of racial discrimination in the housing market.

Houston's school system has 177,218 students in 225 schools. About 46 percent are black, nearly 28 percent are Hispanic and the remaining 26 percent are white or in other groups.

Of the 310,000 students in the 22 districts around the city, 10.9 percent are Hispanic and 10.7 percent are black.

While Houston's students represent only 36.6 percent of the area-wide student population, 71.3 percent of the blacks and 59.6 percent of the Hispanics are in city schools, the suit said.

Japan's ruling party gets no-confidence vote

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's ruling Liberal Democratic Party suffered a surprise defeat in a no-confidence vote today that will force Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira to resign or call for new parliamentary elections. It was the first time since 1953 that a ruling party in Japan had lost a no-confidence vote.

Ohira, who expected to weather the balloting by a simple majority, looked stunned by the 243-187 vote against him and his 17-month-old cabinet.

In the vote climaxing a day-long debate in the lower house of the Diet, or parliament, a coalition of the Japan Socialist Party and other opposition parties won a stunning victory based on claims that Ohira's party had failed to combat inflation, neglected welfare needs and had defied the national will by agreeing to U.S. pressure to boost its defense budget.

Kyodo news service said the Liberal democrats, who have ruled Japan through most of the post-World War II period, agreed following the vote to dissolve the Diet on May 22 and hold elections a month later.

The decision reported by Kyodo means the 70-year-old Ohira, who just returned from a series of meetings abroad with President Carter and other top international leaders, will remain in office pending the outcome.

Rains move out of area

Dark clouds belched out one more heavy rain late Thursday afternoon before rumbling out of the Permian Basin area, leaving clear skies in their wake.

That final rainfall brought the day's precipitation total to .49 of an inch. This brings the total for the month to 1.68 inch and for the year to 3.32 inches.

Thursday's rain should be the last of the wet stuff for several days, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Skies should be partly cloudy through Saturday. Winds are expected to come out of the north and northwest at 10 to 15 mph tonight.

The mercury should drop into the middle 50s tonight and climb back up into the middle 80s on Saturday, giving promise to a typical West Texas spring weekend.

High on Thursday was 69 degrees, far off the record high of a sizzling 101 degrees set in 1937. The overnight low today of 46 degrees, however, almost matched the record low of 42 set in 1945.

Skies were clear and the temperatures cool early today in area towns.

Andrews reported it got "two bucketfuls" of rain Thursday while Lamesa reported scattered showers. Big Lake and Rankin saw only a small amount of rain, and weather watchers reported the storms passed by them.

Big Spring reported rain Thursday morning and afternoon. But Lake Thomas on the east side of Big Spring received about 4½ inches, said a spokesman in Big Spring.

Soviets call for peace summit

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie meets with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko today to probe the Kremlin's position on Afghanistan and other critical issues after the Soviet bloc issued a call for an international summit to defuse world tensions.

Muskie, on his first diplomatic foray since succeeding Cyrus Vance as secretary of state last week, predicted Thursday that his talks with the Kremlin's foreign affairs chief will be a "diplomatic minuet" that is not likely to yield any significant changes in Soviet policy.

The Muskie-Gromyko session will be the first Cabinet-level meeting of U.S. and Soviet officials since the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan last December chilled relations between the superpowers.

The two men will meet after attending ceremonies here marking the 25th anniversary of the end of the post-World War II Allied occupation of Austria. Their talks are expected to focus on a new Afghan peace plan proposed Wednesday by the pro-Soviet government in Kabul, and the world peace initiative raised Thursday by the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact.

There was no immediate U.S. comment on the Warsaw Pact proposals. But Muskie and other U.S. officials discounted the Afghan peace plan, which for the first time spelled out conditions for the withdrawal of the nearly 100,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan.

Muskie got a boost on the eve of the meeting when West Germany agreed to join President Carter's boycott of the Moscow Summer Olympics, organized to protest the Kremlin's Afghan intervention. The West German decision raised to 77 the number of countries expected to boycott the games.

Shortly after his arrival in Vienna from a NATO conference in Brussels, Muskie said the Afghan peace plan was designed to gain recognition for the government of Afghan President Babrak Karmal and "legitimization of the (Soviet) invasion."

"I regard it as a cosmetic and not a meaningful proposal at this point," he said.

One U.S. official traveling with the secretary said the plan was a "nonstarter," and another said it was "nice, but no sale."

The plan, as reported by the official Soviet news agency Tass, called for Afghanistan and neighboring Pakistan and Iran to sign bilateral agreements barring hostile action against each other and a U.S. pledge not to conduct "subversive activity" against Afghanistan.

"The question of the withdrawal of Soviet forces from Afghanistan will depend on the resolution of the issue of effective guarantees of the bilateral agreements of Afghanistan with Pakistan and Iran," Tass said.

Moscow has repeatedly said the Afghan government invited it to sent in troops to help it quell anti-government Moslem rebels, whom the Soviets say are backed by the United States, China and Pakistan.

All three countries have denied the Soviet charges, and America has demanded a total Soviet withdrawal as a precondition for negotiations on the neutralization of Afghanistan.

The Warsaw Pact pact "peace offensive," unveiled on the eve of the Muskie-Gromyko talks, goes beyond the Afghan crisis in calling for a world conference to defuse "hotbeds of international tension" including Iran and the Middle East, and a freeze in the size of military forces in Europe.

However, the statement released after a two-day Warsaw conference of Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev and leaders of the six other Warsaw Pact nations, stressed "the necessity for a political solution" of the Afghanistan crisis that would guarantee an end to "any forms of outside interference ... against the government and people of Afghanistan."

Western observers have long been awaiting the Kremlin-led peace offensive, apparently designed to counter public opinion losses due to the Afghan intervention.

The Warsaw Pact communique said an international conference should bring together "the leaders of states of all the regions of the world." It did not say when or where the meeting should be held.

"The participants should focus their attention on a task which is the concern of both European nations and all mankind — the task of removing the hotbeds of international tension and preventing war," the statement said.

It also urged ratification of the SALT II agreement, stalled in the U.S. Senate because of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

GOP forecasts upset for Jim Wright

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Republican congressional candidate Jim Bradshaw of Fort Worth will pull off a stunning election upset of House Majority Leader Jim Wright in November, predicts the GOP state chairman.

"I think Jim Wright is looking forward to a very, very hard election and defeat in November," Chester Upham Jr. said here Thursday during the GOP state executive committee's meeting to canvass primary election returns.

Upham also forecasted Republican upsets of Democratic U.S. Reps. Bob Eckhardt of Houston and Jim Mattox of Dallas. He added that "there's no question" Ronald Reagan will be elected president in November.

In explaining his Wright prediction, Upham said the longtime Democratic congressional leader's voting record in Congress is far too liberal for his Fort Worth constituency.

Bradshaw resigned from the Fort Worth city council to run for Congress and easily won the Republican nomination over Jim Ryan, 13,914 to 3,103.

Wright, who has served two decades in Congress, received more than 21,000 votes in the May 3 primary to trounce conservative Democrat Chuck Silcox by a four-to-one margin.

But Upham noted that Silcox received more than 5,000 votes, which he considers "anti-Wright" votes that will go to Bradshaw in November.

"Of course, there will be a bigger turnout in November. But I think the trend is definitely there," he said.

During Thursday's meeting here, the Republican state executive committee certified Ronald Reagan's victory over George Bush in the presidential primary.

The final overall returns show that Reagan edged Bush, 268,798 to 249,819. But Reagan won 61 of the state's 80 national convention delegates.

There were 8,152 uncommitted votes and a total of 526,769 ballots cast in the Republican primary.

Upham said Texas Republicans assume Reagan will be the Republican nominee and hope he chooses one of four Texans as his running mate.

Upham said Bush, U.S. Sen. John Tower, Gov. Bill Clements and former Gov. John Connally have all been mentioned as possible Reagan running mates, adding that Bush is his personal choice.

Sales tax rebate doubled

Midland will be getting more than double what it received last year in a sales tax rebate for the month of May from the State Comptroller's Office in Austin.

The rebate for May should amount to $452,811.74 compared to $163,146.82 last year. Midland's total for the year so far is 56 percent above the amount received at this time last year. Payments to date are $2,035,110.69 compared to $1,304,513.28 in 1979.

Odessa's rebate for May also was double that of a year ago. According to the state comptroller's figures, Odessa should receive $430,093.69 compared to the $209,542.98 a year ago. This brings the year's payments to date to $2,256,630.33, about 21 percent above last year's figure of $1,854,612.43.

Big Spring is scheduled to receive $73,476.13 for May, almost three times that of $24,949 in 1979. Payments for 1980 amounting to $371,590.74 are 31 percent above those of last year, which were $282,689.24.

The 1 percent city sales tax is collected by the State Comptroller's Office and rebated monthly to the participating cities.

Kemp pushed as GOP vice president nominee

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group calling itself "Republicans for Victory in '80" announced a drive on Thursday to promote Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., as a vice presidential running mate for Ronald Reagan.

Kemp, a top adviser to the GOP presidential frontrunner, immediately disassociated himself from the effort and urged it be halted.

But at the same time, the former Buffalo Bills quarterback said that, if asked by Reagan "or any Republican nominee" to serve on the ticket, "I would be honored and would consider the offer."

Calling Kemp "the strongest running mate for Gov. Reagan," the organization promised a full-scale lobbying effort among delegates to the 1980 GOP convention to see that Kemp gets on the ticket.

It said in a statement that Kemp would be an ideal running mate for Reagan because "at 44, he satisfies the need for a younger man...(and) he is from New York which provides geographical balance."

The statement also said Kemp appealed to "Republicans all across the philosophical spectrum" and could easily win the support of ethnic goups and blue-collar workers.

But Kemp told the organization in a letter that its drive "interferes with my efforts to help nominate and elect Ronald Reagan to the presidency."

"I have said repeatedly, both publicly and privately, that I am not seeking the vice presidency," Kemp said.

He called on the group to disband, claiming it was "diverting money, talent and other resources away from or main goal — the nomination and election of Ronald Reagan."

Jim Roberts, a Washington public affairs consultant who is director of the draft-Kemp effort, acknowledged that Kemp did not approve of the effort nor support it.

But, he said, "We think Kemp would make the strongest running mate for Gov. Reagan and we're going to do our best to make the case for a Reagan-Kemp ticket."

Finance chairman of the group was identified as Bruce W. Eberle, who is president of the direct mail fund-raising firm that handled Reagan's campaign fundraising in 1976.

Roberts said the move has already raised some funds to help promote Kemp.

Pre-registration continuing at Midland College

More than 450 students already have pre-registered for the first summer session at Midland College with seven days left.

Registrar Dee Windsor pointed out that pre-registration continues all of next week and May 27-29 of the following week, since Midland College will be closed May 26 in observance of Memorial Day.

Students who pre-register receive time permits and have a specific time to report for registration. This shortens the time required to complete registration and also provides students a better opportunity to take classes at the most convenient times for them.

During the first summer session, Midland College offers a wide variety of academic and vocational programs, both in daytime and evening classes.

Students may pre-register from 7 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday in the Office of Student Services. They may also talk with counselors regarding their degree plans and transfer of course credits to other educational institutions.

First summer session registration will be Monday, June 2, in the Physical Education Building from 2 to 4 p.m. and 6 to 9 p.m. Classes start June 3 and conclude July 8. The second summer term will begin with registration July 9 and classes opening on July 10.

Additional information regarding course offerings or registration may be obtained by calling 684-7851, extensions 166 or 251.

Agnew might try political comeback

WASHINGTON (AP) — Spiro Agnew says he just might try a little more politics.

Agnew made his comments in a television interview Thursday night, nearly seven years after resigning as Richard Nixon's vice president to avoid trial on income tax evasion charges.

"Can you think of a better way to rehabilitate your image than to be elected again to something?" Agnew said in the ABC interview.

He also suggested he might accept an appointment from Ronald Reagan if the former California governor is elected president.

"I'd like that," he said, adding that he has talked with Reagan but giving no details.

But he also said, "If I were to go back into politics, it will be to run for something, not to be appointed to something."

Agnew did not say what office he might seek, but an ABC spokesman quoted him as saying off-camera that he was thinking of Congress.

When Agnew resigned on Oct. 10, 1973, he pleaded no contest to a single charge of failing to report income of $29,500 received in 1967 when he was governor of Maryland. He accepted a felony conviction, a maximum allowable fine of $10,000 and three years unsupervised probation. He said he understood that his plea was tantamount to a plea of guilty.

The conviction does not preclude him from running again for office.

Elliot Richardson, attorney general at that time, put in the record a 40-page summary of evidence which he said established that Agnew accepted bribes while governor and that the payments continued even while he was vice president.

Agnew said he didn't hear from Nixon for more than a year after they had both resigned, and then he refused to take his former boss' phone call.

"I didn't take the call because I thought it was a little late. I was never on the inside of what you might call the inner circle of the Nixon administration," he said.

"We never had a close relationship," said Agnew, who now contends he was forced out of office by what he interpreted as White House-inspired death threats.

CINCINNATI (AP) — A rare 1847 Matthew Brady photograph of famed nature painter John James Audubon has been found in a Cincinnati attic trunk.

Cincinnati photography dealer Walt Burton, acting for the family which owns the picture, withdrew the photo from sale at a New York art auction house Thursday night when bidding failed to reach his anticipated $25,000 price.

"This is the picture that everybody knows Audubon by, from a copy from this plate," said Burton, who refused to identify the photo's owners. "I believe there is a buyer out there somewhere, but he wasn't here tonight."

The Audubon portrait was made in New York City only eight years after Brady, who is famous for his Civil War photographs and for his portraits of Abraham Lincoln, began his pioneering work.

Brady made the Audubon portrait for his book, "Gallery of Illustrious Americans," which featured 12 engravings of prominent Americans which were done from daguerreotypes, an early method of printing photographs on chemically treated metal or glass.

A later Audubon portrait was made in 1850 but has not been found.

Audubon was 62 when the picture was taken and had completed his famous study of "Birds Of America" 10 years earlier.

Audubon lived in Cincinnati in 1820. He worked for the Western Museum and had his first exhibiton of bird paintings there.

"Cincinnati is a treasure trove of old photographs," Burton said. "I'd love to know what else is hiding away in the attics of Cincinnati homes."

The steak, the pie, and the waitress attract truckers

By MICHAEL HOLMES

WILLIAMS, Iowa (AP) — With hundreds of miles of road behind them and hundreds more ahead, drivers of the big rigs roll into the I-35 Truck Stop mainly looking for four things:

A hamburger steak, apple pie, coffee and a smile from Cheryl Obrecht.

With their sunburned left arms, brass belt buckles and heavy boots, they climb down from the cabs of Kenworths, Whites and Macks. They gather at the "drivers' table" and wait for the 30-year-old waitress to look their way.

"That Cheryl, she's something else," laughed her boss, Dave Collins, as the petit, dark-haired woman slapped a flannel-shirted trucker on the back.

"She's one of the biggest things we've got going here," Collins said. "She knows all the drivers. She likes to wait on them. They know they'll get a big welcome when they come in the door."

Apparently so. In a recent contest run by Chicago radio station WMAQ, truckers mailed in postcards naming the I-35 as their favorite truck stop and Ms. Obrecht as one of their favorite waitresses among 400 establishments in 17 states.

"I'm not sure how many votes I got," she said. "They told me they stopped counting. They said it was something like 7,000."

When Ms. Obrecht is on duty, she hardly stands still, hurrying from table to counter to kitchen.

"Hiya," she shouted to a burly newcomer one day this week. "Howya been? I haven't seen you for awhile."

Across the room, Collins sat at a table and watched his award-winning waitress in action. It was just after noon, and business was booming as truck after truck pulled in off Interstate 35 just yards away.

"Quarter to 12 and 5:30 in the evening, those are the busiest times. And early in the morning, when they're getting ready to hit the road," he said.

"A trucker's favorite? Hamburger steak," he said. "That's something I can't really ruin — except to burn it. We sure sell a bunch. They like country-fried steak, too. For dessert, it's apple pie, usually with a little cinnamon ice cream."

Collins cooks 5,000 pounds of meat a month, serves 32,000 cups of coffee. Upstairs, drivers find showers, a lounge, TV and sleeping quarters.

And when a truck rolls into the lot, or a driver walks through the door, a good waitress will know him, Collins said.

Ms. Obrecht does. "Truckers are some of my best friends," she said. "I know their trucks, their companies, their faces. I get to know them all."

"I have a good time," she added. "And I try to be a little different." She pointed to the dozen buttons and badges pinned to her cap. In the middle was a gold rabbit.

"I put it on for Easter and was going to take it off after that," she said. "But one of the drivers came in and said, 'So you're the one with the Playboy bunny on your hat.' I couldn't take it off then."

With a population of 456, it isn't the town of Williams that attracts truckers, although it is conveniently located between Minneapolis and Des Moines.

"Look around," Collins said, gesturing outside to the expanse of cornfields. "You think you're out in the middle of nowhere, but we've got a lot full of trucks. They go up and down the road all the time, but they need a kind of home out here."

Added Ms. Obrecht: "We keep a relaxed atmosphere around here. That's why I like it. I care about my customers. I care if their cup's filled up. I listen to what they've got to say."

And her reward for all that work?

"Well, I have to be honest," she said, smiling her award-winning smile. "I make some pretty good tips."

Rain was welcome

Midland isn't noted for its rainfall, receiving on the average only about 13.51 inches of the wet stuff a year.

When rain does fall in the city and the county, it seems to come in downpours that run off rapidly. The sandy and loamy soils so predominant in the county quickly soak up what moisture is left standing.

Thursday's rain, like all rains in this area, was a welcome one. Midlanders undoubtedly will enjoy the break it will afford them from watering lawns, shrubs and vegetable gardens.

Everyone enjoys rain. The moisture boosts the humidity in this dry region, cleans the dust off automobiles and sidewalks, and greens up trees, lawns and flowers.

But there's another group of individuals in Midland County to whom rain is more important than for merely its aesthetic qualities. They're the farmers and ranchers of this county who make their living tilling the soil and raising crops and cattle.

The rain on Thursday, according to some farmers, was not all the rain that's needed locally to prepare the soil for the planting season — but it helped. More rain certainly would be appreciated, but that's a department not within the realm of human control, at least at this point.

The importance of rain to farmers and ranchers cannot be discounted. Adequate rain can mean the difference between staying in business or going broke. It can help undercut the rising costs of irrigation and feeding livestock commercial feeds.

Agriculture contributes an estimated $12.5 million annually to the Midland economy and helps to provide a stronger economic base for us all.

We cannot discount the importance of agriculture here. Hoping for more rain to help the farmers and ranchers have a successful year translates into hoping for a better quality of life for all Midlanders.

Legacy of a princess

All but a handful of this country's public broadcasting stations aired the controversial "Death of a Princess" recently. In so doing, they resisted pressure from the government of Saudi Arabia, the Carter administration, and at least one giant oil company to suppress this British-produced "docu-drama" depicting the chain of events that led to the public execution of a Saudi princess and her lover in 1977.

Against such pressures, the broadcast represented a forthright, and heartening, assertion of First Amendment rights. This was all the more significant in that it was mounted by a public broadcasting service and affiliated stations that are partly dependent on subsidies proposed by the administration and approved by Congress.

What the largest viewing audience in PBS history saw was a demonstration of public television's independence, proclaimed in statute but ever vulnerable to erosion.

But there was far more to "Death of a Princess" and the controversy that surrounded it than a simple tug-of-war between a free press and its would-be censors.

The very fact that the United States government would permit itself to be enlisted by a foreign power in an effort to control the content of American television programming is a chilling reminder of the dangers inherent in our dependence on imported oil.

And then there is the matter of the film itself, and the Saudi objections to it. The Saudis recognize, as we should also, that the way in which their society is perceived here can have profound political, economic and even military consequences for both countries.

"Death of a Princess" offered a less than flattering look at important aspects of Saudi life, including the behavior of members of the ruling royal family. Whatever the accuracy of the film's depiction of a society undergoing unprecedented change, Americans would be foolish indeed to ignore or deprecate the cultural, religious and political sensitivities of a nation as vital to the United States as Saudi Arabia.

CHARLEY REESE

Books warn of coming takeover by the Soviets

Charley Reese

The Congress needs to appropriate about $35 billion more for defense than President Carter has proposed.

The United States is on the razor's edge of destruction. The Soviet Union is winning World War III and we have, I figure, about 24 to 36 months of freedom left if we play it business as usual.

Every day that passes in which we don't take action increases the chances that when we do wake up to our peril, it will be too late.

In a book you will have a hard time finding in the bookstores, Gen. Lewis W. Walt, a retired four-star Marine, wrote in 1978:

"The United States has been brought, by its own civilian leaders, to a position of military inferiority to the Soviet Union. At this moment, you and your loved ones stand exposed to physical destruction. The option of whether you shall live or die rests primarily with the hardened men who occupy the Kremlin. If they should choose tomorrow or next year or the year after to annihilate you and your family, there is little the U.S. government could do to stop them except to surrender. There are no incoming missiles in our skies because the Soviet leaders believe that with patience they can in a short time force us to surrender. I am not talking about some date in the far distant future, but some day within the next four or five years."

General Walt's book, "The Eleventh Hour," can be ordered from Caroline House Publishers, Ottawa, Ill. Genral Walt's book is short and to the point, but former President Nixon makes almost the same points in his new book, "The Real War."

"In the 1980s," Nixon writes, "America for the first time in modern history will confront two cold realities. The first of these is that if war were to come, we might lose. The second is that we might be defeated without war. The second prospect is more likely than the first and almost as grim. The danger facing the West...is less that of a nuclear holocaust than it is of drifting into a situation in which we find ourselves confronted with a choice between surrender and suicide."

I recomment that you read both books. Here are two men who have separately and without one having any knowledge of what the other was doing issued basically the same warning to the American people. You may not like former President Nixon and you may be prejudiced against military men, but you owe it to your family to listen to what they have to say.

Red or dead is not a choice any sane American would want to make. I have heard simpletons on college faculties say they would easily choose red. They say that because they are as ignorant of reality as they are informed about theories. The red state which will be imposed on us is not the one which exists in textbooks but the one which exists in the gulag of the Soviet Union, the charnal house of Vietnam and Cambodia, and the gray drabness of East Berlin.

The only difference will be, as one Cuban exile put it, Americans will have no place to flee.

You can quibble if you like. You can listen to the soothing words of the liberal anti-anti-communists, but just remember that they, not conservatives or anti-communists, have been in power for two decades. They, not the cold warriors, brought you to the present.

And what is the present? The U.S. military forces are in shambles. U.S. diplomacy, operating from weakness, is paralyzed. The Soviets are completing their pincer movement in the Persian Gulf. They have already cut across southern Africa. The Persian Gulf has the oil the West needs to survive and southern Africa has the minerals and metals the West must have. With those two areas in its grip, the Soviet Union will take Western Europe and Japan by telephone.

The United States will be left alone and isolated, militarily too weak to confront the Soviet Union and hemorrhaging economically. A little nuclear sabre rattling coupled with terrorist attacks in the U.S., food riots, massive unemployment, power disruptions and the United States, like the ripe plum, will fall.

That is the gameplan of the Soviet Union, but it's not quite too late if the American people wake up and grab their leaders by the necks and shake them into action.

What are you going to do? Put your shoulder to the wheel or your hands behind your head?

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

'Silverfinger's' quest was legal, but...

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Like Ian Fleming's fictional Goldfinger, Nelson Bunker Hunt is a portly man with a love of fine racehorses and an unabashed craving for precious metal. Given his preferences in metal, he might be called Silverfinger.

Unlike the spy thriller's homicidal villain, Hunt stayed within the law in his quest for bullion. There was also no James Bond to keep an eye on him. Instead, there was the Federal Reserve Board, which had ordered the nation's banks to discourage loans to speculators as a means to curb inflation.

Yet the "Fed" was strangely blind to the free-wheeling speculative binge by Hunt and his brother Herbert in the silver market, which was financed largely by banks and brokerage houses.

Paul Volcker, the 6-foot-7, cigar-chomping chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, told Congress that the board knew only what it read in the papers about the Hunt brothers' silver market shenanigans.

But confidential memos from Commissioner Read Dunn of the Commodities Futures Trading Commission tell a different story. They make clear that, though the Fed was repeatedly warned about silver speculation, it did nothing to learn about the Hunts' activities until the collapse of their pyramided silver empire forced an expensive bailout. This was hastily arranged to keep the Hunts' backers from financial ruin.

Last September, as the price of silver was beginning to climb toward its dizzy, artifical peak of $47 an ounce, Dunn called a Federal Reserve Board official "to inquire if the Fed had any concern about the futures market in gold and silver," one memo states. The answer he got: "The Fed was inclined to look on silver as just another commodity, and did not pay special attention to it. They followed gold more closely."

Dunn's memo continues: "During the course of the next three months, I initiated frequent telephone conversations with various officials of the Treasury and Fed to keep them advised on developments in silver."

Dunn noted that "whenever the question came up, I told them my personal view was that the basic cause of the run-up in silver and gold prices was the heavy buying by speculators as a hedge against inflation."

As late as December, Dunn told Volcker's assistants that the commodities commission "was not particularly concerned about gold" because there was "no large concentration" of speculative holdings in gold, as there was in silver.

Dunn said that in all that time, the only person within either the Treasury or the Federal Reserve Board who ever expressed concern about the silver market was Robert Carswell, the deputy secretary of the Treasury.

This neglect of duty almost caused the collapse of the silver market, with severe economic repercussions around the world.

CRISIS OF CONFIDENCE: By pouch and cable, the discouraging word is filtering back to Washington that world leaders have lost faith in Jimmy Carter's leadership. This crisis of confidence is seriously hampering the conduct of U.S. foreign policy.

A Saudi Arabian prince probably expressed the prevailing mood best. "We used to look to the United States for leadership," he said. "We no longer can do that."

Intelligence reports quote disparaging remarks about President Carter from such allied leaders as West Germany's Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and France's President Valery Giscard d'Estaing. Even British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, who has tried to defend Carter in the policy councils of Europe, is backing off. According to one report, he acknowledged privately that Carter's preoccupation with getting re-elected has affected his judgment.

Alarmingly, the secret dispatches indicate that in many world capitals the attitude toward Carter has gone beyond simple distrust; it has degenerated into personal disdain. His foreign policy is widely regarded as an on-again, off-again, wonder-what-he'll-do-next series of ad hoc decisions.

America's allies, therefore, are increasingly seeking their own solutions, without consulting Washington.

STILL STEALING: Three years ago the House manpower subcommittee uncovered widespread waste, fraud and mismanagement in the Community Services Administration and ordered the agency to clean up its act.

But an unpublished report by the General Accounting Office shows there has been little improvement since then. The auditors pinpointed the loss of millions of dollars through embezzlement, fraud and similar illegal activities. Among other things, public funds were put into private bank accounts and used to entertain relatives of those who received grants.

The agency's efforts to police itself by tightening up management operations have failed to plug the illicit leaks of taxpayers' money. Even such a simple step as issuing a training manual to the agency's field offices has not been done — though CSA officials promised Congress three years ago they'd do so.

●

WATCH ON WASTE: Uncle Sam is deeply into the railroad business, but it's the taxpayers who are being taken for a ride. As of last year, Amtrak, the government-subsidized rail system, was more than $850 million in hock to the feds. Far from spurring railroad officials to austerity, or even economy, Amtrak continues to provide special passes to employees which let them ride free or at substantially reduced rates. Congress is now being asked for a special reimbursement to make up the fare loss from the employee passes.

INSIDE REPORT:

Carter poised to endorse Republican-sinking tax cut

By ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

Evans Novak

WASHINGTON — After saying no, no, a thousand times no to tax reduction for 18 months, President Carter is poised to endorse a cut that — however puny compared with what is proposed by Republicans — threatens to outflank them in the fall campaign.

"It is no longer a question of if, but of when," one senior presidential aide told us. Carter is likely to announce his changed mind during the summer, with Congress taking up the tax cut in September — just in time for the Nov. 4 election.

Carter's tax cut would take effect next Jan. 1 for the last nine months of the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, with a Treasury price tag of $11 billion in lost revenue. Of that, $2 billion results from beginning accelerated tax depreciation on new equipment. The remaining $9 billion is in temporary income tax credits to cushion next year's new round of Social Security payroll tax increases.

Such hesitant half-stepping is jeered by Republican congressmen who want $30 billion-a-year permanent cuts in income tax rates on the Kemp-Roth model. The White House would neither significantly ease the American taxpayer's massive burden nor introduce new incentives into the economy. But in strictly political terms, a tax cut is a tax cut no matter how shabby; and a tax cut might well save Jimmy Carter.

Actually, no formal proposal has yet reached the president's desk. Officially, the White House line still ties tax reduction to a balanced budget for fiscal year 1980 (beginning Oct. 1.) But everybody knows the recession has assured yet another budget deficit, thanks to increasing spending and decreasing revenue.

Carter will be faced with unemployment, under-employment and continued double-digit inflation as the election nears, posing this question: what can be done to keep the economically beleaguered lower-middle income bracket voter from abandoning Democratic loyalties for Ronald Reagan?

A wage-price freeze seems out. In that department, at least, Carter really means what he says. That leaves a tax cut. His advisers claim to have learned their lessons from the 1978 tax bill when Congress seized the initiative and the president got no credit. This time, they say, Carter will collaborate with the House Ways and Means Committee.

However, a problem is posed by the committee chairman, Rep. Al Ullman of Oregon. Regarding existing tax rates as a holy of holies not to be defiled, Ullman fears Congress will run wild with tax fever if his committee reports a bill. He would rather sit tight this year.

But Rep. James Jones of Oklahoma, a moderate Democrat and the rising power on Ways and Means, long has been pushing a tax package that suspiciously resembles the White House's. While Jones took the House away from Carter in passing the 1978 bill, he and the president are working together in 1980.

Those Republicans who view Kemp-Roth as too radical will eagerly embrace Jimmy Carter's tax cut. So will corporate executives who flinch at across-the-board tax reduction. The White House-Jones package is nearly identical to the tax proposal ($20 billion revenue loss over 12 months) of George Bush, who has focused his presidential campaign against Reagan's avowal of Kemp-Roth.

But it is viewed as a sham by supply-side economists who want investment and incentive fostered through tax reduction. It scarcely dents the budget's $100 billion increase in revenue, including $60 billion in new taxes. While applauding the modest start toward encouraging new equipment purchases, these critics consider the temporary tax credit election-year eyewash.

While Jones eventually wants deep tax rate cuts, he is content with a modest Carter-blessed package as a starter. Not so the Kemp-Roth Republicans. They see the president co-opting their issue on a bill that, far from restoring economic incentives, barely makes up for next year's Social Security tax increase.

Warnings are being issued on Capitol Hill by Jones and others that if either House or Senate starts cutting tax rates, there will be no bill at all. Don't count on it. We asked one White House aide, what will the president do if just a little tax reduction were passed on by Congress? The surprising answer: "That might be all the better." The Republicans then would be outflanked for sure.

Street contract awarded to Corpus Christi firm

The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation has awarded a contract to South Texas Construction Co. of Corpus Christi to reconstruct a portion of Big Spring Street in Midland.

The project begins at Florida Avenue and extends southerly to Stokes Avenue, a distance of 0.79 mile.

The contract price is $695,000 and 100 working days will be allowed to complete the work.

Reconstruction of Big Spring Street will include removal of existing pavement and base material to a depth of 7½ inches. Asphaltic stabilized base 6 inches in depth and 1½ inches of asphaltic concrete pavement will then be placed. This will allow the grade line of Big Spring Street to remain, generally, as it presently exists.

Existing curbs, gutters and driveway entrances will not be disturbed. The work will be accomplished by removing and replacing the roadway in approximately one-half width at a time. The time between excavation and placing of the asphaltic concrete base will be limited in order that inconvenience to the adjacent proerties will be lessened as much as possible. All of the base will be placed before the placing of the asphaltic concrete pavement overlay will be started.

Access to driveways and street intersections will be maintained as long as possible; however, there will be periods of time when those driveways and streeets within the section the contractor is working on will be closed. It is suggested that all alternate routes be utilized by traffic during the construction period to the greatest extent possible.

Asphaltic stabilized base was chosen for this project since it can be placed rapidly and, consequently, cause the least amount of inconvenience to the traveling public and adjacent properties.

John Aldridge, resident engineer in Midland, is in charge of the project, with District Engineer A. Henry Pearson of Odessa providing overall supervision.

Marines may convert to Rapid Deployment Force

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional report says it would cost about $4.6 billion to turn the Marine Corps into a rapid-strike force that could move 65,000 Marines into combat in the Persian Gulf or other trouble spots within two weeks.

The Congressional Budget Office, in a 63-page report released today, lists the option as one of four alternatives for the future role of the Marine Corps in the U.S. defense structure. The report contained no recommendation of which role Congress should chose.

One option, the report says, is for Congress to approve, without change, creation of the "Rapid Deployment Force" requested by President Carter as one of the U.S. responses to the Soviet military move into Afghanistan. Carter wants to develop new planes and ships, and preposition combat equipment in the Persian Gulf so Army or Marine combat troops could be quickly moved into battle there.

The report says the total cost for the Marine Corps, including its role in Carter's Rapid Deployment Force, would be about $44.8 billion over the next five years.

The report's second option, with a $49.4 billion price tag, is to turn the Marine Corps into the Rapid Deployment Force, equipped with air-cushioned amphibious vehicles and vertical-short-takeoff-and-landing planes to carry combat troops hundreds of miles from landing beaches into battle in isolated areas.

The additional cost, the report says, would be primarily for some 338 of the new planes, 90 air-cushion vehicles, a carrier for the planes and 265 light armored vehicles.

The Marine force, as well as Carter's Rapid Deployment Force, also would need some $150 million for construction at the small Diego Garcia atoll in the Indian Ocean to base ships that will carry combat equipment and some troops. The report says the $49.4 billion program could keep 8,000 Marines on ships in the Indian Ocean and an additional 57,000 ready to move in quickly in a sudden battle.

"Thus the United States would have available a true 'quick-strike' force, as well as prompt reinforcements," the report says. "This combination of forceable-entry and follow-on capability would also reinforce the deterrent effect that an ability to move 65,000 Marines within two weeks would have on potential aggressors in or outside the region."

Under that plan, the Army would provide combat-ready forces for Europe and the Pacific while the Marine Corps would take over the role of moving into any sudden trouble spot in the rest of the world.

A third, very different, role for Marines in the future, the report says, would be to have them provide the defense of Denmark and Norway against a Soviet attack in Europe. European allies could handle most of the defense against a Soviet attack in Europe, the report says, but without U.S. Marine or Army reinforcements, Norway and Denmark might "not be able to resist successfully."

The plan would bring Marine Corps costs to about $45 billion over the next five years and would have Marine and Army units share the Rapid Deployment Force role, the report says.

The fourth option would cost about $48.8 billion, the report says, and would combine parts of the other three so the Marine Corps would be able to respond rapidly in trouble spots around the world and provide defenses to Norway and Denmark, but not as thoroughly as in the separate options.

Anderson has Carter aides worried

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ask the people close to President Carter's campaign whether they think Rep. John B. Anderson is a threat to the president's re-election and you get a variety of answers:

—"No one can ignore the potential problems."

—"It remains to be seen what kind of effort John Anderson will mount."

—"We're not very concerned about him."

BUT WHAT SAYS even more about how the Carter camp views Anderson's independent campaign is an analysis of the situation completed for John White, chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

"In a close campaign, a well organized independent could greatly influence the outcome," the analysis says. "Free of spending limits, an appeal to independents (nearly 40 percent of the electorate considers themselves 'independent') could draw sufficient votes to dramatically influence totals in the volatile political climate we foresee this year.

"It is safe to say that an Anderson campaign would be harmful to the Democrats in a Carter-Reagan race," the memorandum states, echoing the findings of most surveys and conventional political wisdom.

An ABC-Louis Harris poll made public Wednesday showed Reagan with 39 percent of the vote, Carter 33 percent and Anderson 23 percent if the election were held immediately.

BUT WHEN THE 1,190 respondents were asked how they would vote if they thought Anderson really had a chance, the results narrowed to 35 percent for Reagan, 31 percent for Carter and 29 percent for Anderson — with Anderson the leader in eight states having 216 of the 269 electoral votes needed for victory.

The response of a White House aide who was asked about Anderson was as telling as the Democrats' analysis. He had ready a litany about the Illinois Republican's record in Congress and offered it on the condition his name not be used.

The aide's comments each called attention to Anderson's conservative side. They reflected a White House concern that Anderson's appeal to liberals could attract support that might otherwise be Carter's.

THE OFFICIAL, who is knowledgeable about the Carter political operations, said Anderson has "an erratic track record."

"People will see he is not the sort of progressive and thoughtful leader he is portraying himself as being," he said.

Then, he turned to what has become a standard line: Anderson, in 1961, 1963 and 1965, proposed a constitutional amendment declaring the United States to be a Christian nation. The congressman has since said "I was totally wrong" to propose the amendment.

There is also the matter of Anderson's rating by the Americans for Democratic Action, the White House aide said. The prominent liberal organization found that only 11 percent of Anderson's votes in 1979 were what they consider correct.

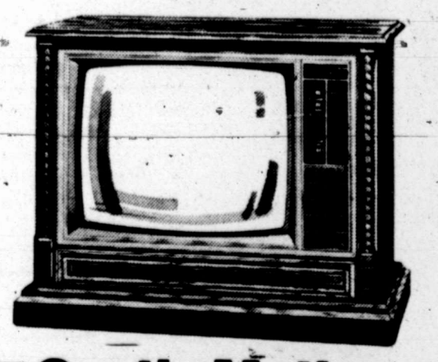

THE WHITE HOUSE official pointed out that this was the same rating as that assigned to House Republican Leader John Rhodes and Rep. Jack Kemp, a conservative New York Republican.

He did not mention — as an ADA staff member later did — that the rating was not necessarily an accurate reflection of Anderson's philosophy because he was already out campaigning for president part of the time and missed many of the votes on which the survey was based.

China now in World Bank

WASHINGTON (AP) — Taiwan has been forced to relinquish its seat in the World Bank to mainland China, effectively ending Taiwan's long participation in major international institutions as the representative of China's 1 billion people.

But Taiwan's loss is very much mainland China's gain, as membership in the 134-nation World Bank could provide China with many millions of dollars — if not billions — in annual aid.

Membership in the bank means the government in Peking is finally recognized as the legitimate government of China in all major international institutions and by all major nations — 31 years after the communists took power.

Taiwan, the seat of the old nationalist government, previously had been forced to give up seats in the United Nations and the International Monetary Fund.

Mainland China's membership in the IMF and the World Bank was a foregone conclusion after the United States, which provides a major share of the financing for the two institutions, formally recognized the Peking government last year.

The People's Republic of China is one of only a handful of Communist members of the bank, known officially as the Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The Soviet Union is not a member.

Robert S. McNamara, the former defense secretary who is president of the World Bank, recently returned from a week-long visit to China. The switch in China's membership from Taiwan to Peking was announced Thursday.

Of all the institutions of which China is a member, the World Bank promises the greatest potential benefits since it lends billions of dollars annually to underdeveloped and poor countries. China is expected to qualify for a major share of the lending, although this may not happen immediately.

Total bank lending for all purposes last year was about $10 billion, mostly for development projects, such as electrical power, roads, agriculture, water supply and irrigation.

Established in 1944 to help with the reconstruction of nations ravaged by World War II, the World Bank has become the main channel for aid from wealthy industrial nations to the poor countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

Hospital to have exhibit of various departments

Ever wonder what happens in a hospital?

The first time most persons discover the hospital is when they need it.

Saturday in Dellwood Mall from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., Midland Memorial Hospital will have an exhibit showing various departments within the health institution.

The event is part of the week-long celebration denoting National Hospital Week, May 11-17, according to Pat Dishman, MMH public relations director.

The theme for the annual event is "We're America's Health Team," she said. Since Midland Memorial Hospital employs about 500 people, this would make the hospital the largest health team in town, Miss Dishman said.

Numerous departments and special areas will have displays depicting the various functions within a hospital, Miss Dishman said. "This is our way of showing the public what goes on in Midland Memorial Hospital," she said.

Besides displays, blood pressure checks and blood typing will be performed with no charge, she added.

"This will give Midlanders the opportunity to see exactly what a physical and occupational therapist does, to talk with business office personnel about hospital bills and insurance procedures and to witness cardiopulmonary resuscitation demonstrations and discover why CPR training is important for every Midlander," the public relations director continued.

About 14 different departments will be represented in the exhibit located in the southwest section of the Dellwood Mall near Thornton's Department Store, Miss Dishman explained.

A recruitment table showing 250 various job offerings within the hospital will also be equiped with application blanks, she said, adding that the exhibit's primary purpose is to inform the public.

There will even be a hospital food sampling display which will allow people to taste hospital food, she said.

The exhibit is free and is open to the general public.

Peru to elect first civilian rule in 12 years

LIMA, Peru (AP) — This is the year of brown sugar in place of white, of waiting in line at the supermarket to buy rice, of high inflation and no work.

It is a time when armored personnel carriers are street-corner fixtures and strikes and street demonstrations are commonplace.

IN A FEW days, the people of Peru will seek better times by electing a civilian government to replace 12 years of rule by the Revolutionary Government of the Armed Forces.

For most Peruvians who go to the first general elections in 17 years on Sunday, it will be their first opportunity to vote or choose their own government.

THEY WILL ELECT a president, two vice presidents, 60 senators and 180 representatives — all to serve five-year terms.

Inauguration day has been set for July 28.

When Peru completes the return to democracy, it will make the five-nation Andean Group common market a new bastion of civilian government in South America, which has long been dominated by generals.

ECUADOR AND Bolivia elected civilian governments last year and the common market's other members, Venezuela and Colombia, have been governed by civilians for years.

Peru's military leaders appear as anxious to return to the barracks as the people are to see them go.

THERE HAS BEEN no serious objection from within military ranks to the desire of Gen. Francisco Morales Bermudez, a moderate president who seized power from leftist dictator Gen. Juan Velasco Alvarado in 1975, to bring the military revolution to a close.

The generals credit themselves with achieving the reforms necessary to end nearly 400 years of near-feudalism and to bring Peru into the 20th century.

They nationalized the country's natural resources, seized foreign companies, established worker participation in companies and cooperatives, curtailed freedom of the press by expropriating the major newspapers and TV stations and distributed the haciendas of the rich among the landless poor.

Uganda's key men in Tanzania today

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP) — Key members of Uganda's new ruling military commission flew to Tanzania today, sources close to the commission said, in an apparent attempt to obtain President Julius Nyerere's endorsement of their takeover.

The sources said commission members flew to Arusha in northern Tanzania, and a spokesman for Nyerere said the president was waiting for them there.

The agenda for the discussions was not disclosed, but analysts said it would probably include the military commission's appointment of a new cabinet and presidential commission, and preparations for elections to be held in December.

The six-day-old coup returned Uganda to army control after little more than one year under civilian presidents. Nyerere, whose troops invaded Tanzania to overthrow military dictator Idi Amin, has expressed regret over the coup and has said he had no prior knowledge of it.

Partly because of a continued Tanzanian military presence in Uganda, Nyerere still plays an important role in Ugandan affairs, and diplomatic sources said he is now willing to accept the military takeover and is urging Uganda's new rulers to move quickly to elected civilian rule supervised by British Commonwealth observers.

However, the chairman of Uganda's civilian parliament said today that the military commission which seized control of Uganda has stripped the legislature of its power and turned it into a "rubber stamp."

"I can't be a party to that," the chairman, Edward Rugamayo, said in a telephone interview from Arusha, where he was conferring with Nyerere.

Nuclear weapon spread considered

WASHINGTON (AP) — Carter administration officials are considering several major changes in American policy designed to counter the spread of nuclear weapons.

Officials said the changes would preserve the administration's determination to prevent more countries or terrorist groups from obtaining nuclear weapons while recognizing that some of the policies adopted in 1977 have gone nowhere.

The most significant proposal under discussion would end American opposition to the commercial use of plutonium and make this country a guarantor of commercial plutonium supplies to selected countries.

In return, the United States would demand that countries such as Japan, Switzerland, Germany and France tighten their export controls on sensitive nuclear technology to countries that refuse to accept safeguards against nuclear weapons development.

Another proposal would involve the United States in an international plan to store spent nuclear fuel.

The proposals are expected to be submitted to President Carter shortly, say the officials, who asked not to be identified.

One administration initiative which has not worked was an effort to delay the advent of commerce in plutonium. Plutonium, unlike the uranium that powers the current generation of commercial reactors, is readily usable in weapons.

But it also holds out the promise of an endless supply of fuel when used in "breeder reactors," which produce more plutonium than they consume. France, among other countries with limited supplies of oil and coal, is intent on developing a commercial breeder reactor.

Plutonium does not occur in nature but is a byproduct of nuclear fission. It can be separated from spent uranium fuel through a complicated "reprocessing."

The administration fears that once large amounts of plutonium are moving in international commerce, some might be stolen or diverted for weapons. For that reason, it has tried for three years to convince the rest of the world that reactors using plutonium were both dangerous and uneconomical.

The administration has also insisted on reviewing on a case-by-case basis requests from countries such as Japan for a license to extract plutonium from spent fuel originally supplied by the United States. Licenses have been granted only rarely, and then generally for research purposes.

Earlier this year, however, the rest of the world insisted on preserving the plutonium option in the report that concluded the U.S.-sponsored International Nuclear Fuel Cycle Evaluation.

"Countries without the uranium and coal reserves we have are not going to rule out any option that might make them less dependent on foreign energy," one administration official said last week.

With that in mind, the proposals under consideration suggest using the leverage the United States retains as the largest source of uranium in the Western world. As the original supplier, the United States can control the right to reprocess fuel.

MX plan supported in House

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's MX missile system has won a vote of support in House, with defeat of an effort to delay the project for further study.

The House rejected 250-152 Thursday an amendment that would have knocked $500 million for the MX from a $53.1 billion weapons bill, leaving only $66 million for more study of the system.

The amendment was proposed by Rep. Paul Simon, D-Ill., who said military experts disagree whether the MX, estimated to cost $56 billion before it is completed, is the best replacement for present Minuteman missiles.

"Let's make sure we know what we're doing," Simon said.

He said the Soviets are already far ahead in land-based missiles and retired Gen. Maxwell Taylor, a former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, believes most U.S. nuclear missiles should be put on submarines.

But MX supporters, saying the study would delay the system for two years, argued that time is short because Pentagon planners believe the Soviets will be capable of overwhelming the Minuteman by the mid-1980s.

Colorado woman receives call, 'finds' twin sons

SALIDA, Colo. (AP) — At 19, she lost her twin infant sons in an Ohio courtroom. At 61, a telephone call brought them back.

"It was May 13, 1938, and he came home and told me to get the children dressed, that we had someone to see," Rosemary Redfield recalled of her soldier husband — the babies' father.

They had married six months before the boys were born. "Times were hard and feeding the twins and ourselves was really a chore.... My husband told the judge he no longer wanted any of the responsibilities of our marriage and that I was not in any position to take care of the children," Mrs. Redfield said.

The judge went along, a divorce was granted, she said, and the 3-month-old boys — Jerry Stanley Smith and Thomas Howard Smith — were placed in St. Ann's Infant Asylum in Columbus, Ohio.

On Tuesday, the 42nd anniversary of that day, a telephone call ended Mrs. Redfield's years of wondering about her boys.

"I answered the phone and a man said, 'Are you Rosemary Redfield?,' " she said Wednesday at her home in this central Colorado town in the midst of the Rocky Mountains.

"I said I was," Mrs. Redfield recalled. "He said, 'I'm David Supensky and I think we've found each other.' I think I went into shock. I couldn't believe it."

The night brought nearly four hours of telephone calls with David Supensky of Albuquerque, N.M., and his brother, Thomas Supensky of Baltimore.

Each man has three sons of his own. And Thomas, like Mrs. Redfield, works professionally in ceramics. David is a retired Army major.

"They're (David Supensky's family) going to try to come up here to see us this weekend," said Mrs. Redfield, who married John Redfield, a widowed Army officer, in 1952, and helped raised his three children. She never had other children of her own.

The twins only learned they were adopted eight years ago, told by their adoptive father, John Supensky, after the death of his wife.

In the late 1970s, Mrs. Redfield and her sons began searching for each other. But a judge in Columbus stalled the efforts, refusing to open records of the adoption and ruling the case was closed.

A year ago, Mrs. Redfield said: "I have no idea what started it (the search.) It was a hurt, a yearning in my heart...I don't think I'll ever rest until I find out something."

They finally connected because of a United Feature Syndicate story about Mrs. Redfield's search by Arlene Shovald, a Salida area free-lance writer.

The article, which appeared in newspapers early this month, was read by Hazel Vorheese of Dayton, Ohio, who told a relative, who in turn called her brother-in-law — John Supensky of Arizona.

On Tuesday, the elder Supensky called David, and he called Mrs. Redfield.

Mrs. Redfield was also given up for adoption as a child — and didn't find her birth parents until age 23. She spent some of her early years in the Good Shepherd Convent in Columbus after her foster parents gave her up and she was made a ward of the court.

After high school, she went to work in a drug store and met the young soldier she lived with briefly, married, then never saw or heard from again.

"I was not even allowed to make a phone call...I just had to do what I was told. I feel as though I was treated as a criminal," she remembers of the day the boys were taken from her.

She added: "It was just one of those things that gives a person nightmares."

MC adds courses to evening schedule

Two new short courses have been added to the schedule of evening classes offered to area residents through the Midland College Department of Community Services.

A 12-hour course in aerobic dancing and a six-hour course in lingerie making will begin during the week of June 9.

Aerobic dancing, taught by Carole McCarter, is geared toward increasing cardiovascular endurance. The one and one-half hour sessions also help decrease body fat, increase stamina and tone muscles.

Classes include both exercise and dance movements accompanied by disco, ballroom and ballet music.

Students meet 8-9:30 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays for four weeks, beginning June 10. The course fee is $12.

How to make your own lingerie will be taught in two three-hour sessions 7-10 p.m., scheduled Thursday, June 12, and Thursday, June 19.

Jennifer Cochran, course instructor, demonstrates ways to obtain the proper fit and construction when making slips, camisoles and other undergarments. Students learn the commercial methods for applying lace and elastic and will gain ideas for gowns, negligees and robes. Techniques taught in class are applicable to all types of lingerie.

Classes are limited to 13 students and students should bring their own sewing machine to both sessions. Course fee is $8.

Those interested in entering either course should pre-register now in room 156 of the MC Administration Building. The office will remain open between 7 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday, including the lunch hour.

California river stocked with test-tube sturgeon

RIO VISTA, Calif. (AP) — For the first time, sturgeon hatched and raised in a laboratory have been released in United States waters.

About 12,000 fingerling sturgeon, who got their start in test tubes at the University of California at Davis, were sent swimming Wednesday into the Sacramento River off Rio Vista, about 50 miles northeast of San Francisco.

The fingerlings are white sturgeon, one of two species found on the Pacific Coast. The white sturgeon can live 100 years and weigh as much as 1,200 pounds.

The experiment is the first of its kind in this country.

In Russia, where roe from sturgeon is made into caviar and the fish's flesh is a prized dish, sturgeon have been raised in laboratories since the 1960s.

The California program is headed by Serge Doroshov, a leading aquaculture authority in the Soviet Union before coming to Davis in 1977.

He said the species is threatened, adding that test tube breeding "will be the only way to preserve them for the future."

In California, the sturgeon is a sportfish, Doroshov said. He said that about two-thirds of the population has been depleted, with the fish now numbering between 150,000 and 300,000.

The Davis scientists hope to eventually produce 1 million fingerling sturgeon a year.

Iranian oil pipeline blown up

By The Associated Press

A pipeline in Iran's major oil-producing region was blown up and set afire overnight and despite an immediate shutdown of the oil flow the flames burned through the night and today, Tehran Radio said.

The radio, quoting an official Pars news agency report, did not say who blew up the pipe between Naft-e-Shah and Kermanshah, but Iranian Arabs who want autonomy for the region, have been fighting the central government and are believed to have sabotaged pipelines in the past. The Arabs are an ethnic minority in Iran — which is mainly Persian — and they make up a large part of Iran's oil field work force. It was Iranian Arabs who seized the Iranian Embassy in London earlier this month and held it for six days until crushed by British commandos.

In Tehran, a leading Iranian revolutionary said "genuine spy suspects" among the American hostages should be tried, but he hoped none had committed "grave sins" and that all would be returned safely to their families.

Ayatollah Sadegh Khalkhali, who displayed the remains of the eight American servicemen killed in the aborted hostage rescue mission three weeks ago, spoke Thursday to Iran's official Pars news agency.

The call for spy trials has been made before by hardliners like Khalkhali and some of the members of the Islamic Republican Party that dominates the new Iranian Parliament that is to decide the hostages' fate late next month.

In the meanwhile, the 53 hostages — seized Nov. 4 when militants took over the U.S. Embassy in Tehran — have been reported dispersed among 15 cities, including Tehran, in an attempt to foil another rescue attempt.

The Iranians claim 96 U.S. agents and 19 Iranian exiles recently were landed by helicopter in Iran for a two-week mission of assassination and sabotage, but a White House aide denied the claim Thursday as "ridiculous."

However, President Carter has not ruled out another rescue attempt, and in a new step aimed at readying U.S. troops for possible intervention in the Indian Ocean-Persian Gulf area, a California headquarters for a 12,000-man quick-reaction Marine brigade goes into operation today.

At present, the only U.S. ground combat troops in the Indian Ocean-Persian Gulf area are 1,800 Marines aboard a Navy amphibious task force in the Arabian Sea. One of the carriers in the task force, the Nimitz, was the launchpad for the helicopters used in the aborted hostage rescue mission April 25.

While keeping its military options open, the Carter administration is trying to get its European allies and Japan to join it in imposing economic sanctions against Iran.

The Common Market foreign ministers have vowed to cut off exports to Iran Saturday if there is no "decisive progress" toward freeing the hostages, and are expected to keep their word at a meeting in Naples, Italy, this weekend.

Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, who will chair the session, said Thursday in Rome: "The European Economic Community hoped that there would be a word on the part of Iran, an orientation toward some small opening. That has not happened and the EEC is therefore leaning toward greater severity."

French exports to Iran in the first two months of 1980 nearly doubled from the average monthly level of last year, the Iranian Embassy said in Paris today, adding that the trend is likely to continue. The bulk of exports from France, which is an EEC member, consisted of agricultural and food products.

The Japanese government decided today it needed more time to work out new sanctions against Iran. Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira told reporters in Tokyo his cabinet will meet again after the Common Market announces its decision.

While reports from Tehran tell of lines outside food stores and skyrocketing unemployment, few observers in the Iranian capital believe that any economic sanctions by the Common Market would have an immediate impact.

However, President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr talks often about Iran's huge budgetary deficit this year and moribund industry. If Iran's economic problems aren't solved, the inflation rate might hit 100 percent, he said recently.

Company agrees to stop claims

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Mark White said Tuesday a company that sells water softeners in Tarrant and Dallas counties has agreed to stop claiming the cost of a water softener unit can be written off as a tax deduction.

White said Ionicron, Inc., assured the state in court Monday it would comply voluntarily with an order signed by District Judge Ardell Young of Tarrant County.

The company, according to White, agreed to stop "disparaging the city of Arlington or any other governmental entity by representing" their water only meets the minimum state and federal requirements."

White said Ionicron also had agreed not to imply that it was taking water samples for Arlington or any other governmental entity when such representation is "totally false."

Kennedy, Bush push for debates

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — To Vice President Walter Mondale, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's latest challenge for a campaign debate — that classic American political confrontation - amounts to "desperation" politics from a loser.

TO A TOP KENNEDY aide, it was a "bold" move in which the Massachusetts senator offered to withdraw from the race for the Democratic presidential nomination if President Carter agrees to a campaign debate and then whips him in the last big round of primaries June 3.

By whatever description, though, it doesn't appear that the senator will get his debate, a prospect which he hints could lead to a floor fight this summer at the Democratic national convention.

Kennedy was not alone in calling Thurday for a debate. Republican George Bush also wants to face his party's frontrunner, Ronald Reagan, in public debate before the voters. It remains to be seen whether he'll get the chance.

KENNEDY AND Mondale both campaigned Thursday in California. The Massachusetts senator then flew to Oregon where he arranged to stump today for votes in the state's primary next week.

"Why should the sitting president debate a losing candidate in his own party," Mondale said in response to Kennedy's new challenge.

"We will debate the Republican nominee, but not once in 200 years has a president debated a member of his own party and I think that it would be preposterous," he said.

Mondale also put in a plea for party unity, saying it is time that Democrats "stop fighting ourselves and start fighting" against the probable Republican nominee, Ronald Reagan.

But Kennedy, too, discussed unity, saying that if President Carter "is as concerned as he claims for party unity, let him debate the issues before the primaries end."

Kennedy is far behind in national convention delegates, 1,365 to 770, and most observers believe the president will go over the 1,666 delegates he needs for the nomination on June 3. Eight states, including California, Ohio and New Jersey, hold primaries that day, electing 696 delegates.

IN HIS SPEECH to the Los Angeles Press Club, Kennedy laid out his differences with Carter's economic, energy and foreign policies, and declared, "It is the quality of...lives, not the quantity of delegates, that we should be counting in this campaign."

A debate, Kennedy said, would make the final day of the primary season "the truest test" of the campaign.

If there is a debate and Carter then gets the most votes in the eight primary states on June 3, "then I will withdraw," he said. "If I prevail, I will continue in this race, and I expect to win the nomination."

Kennedy coupled his offer with a veiled threat to lead a floor fight at the party convention is turned down.

"I know that if a debate is not held in the primaries, it will be held at the convention," he said.

"I could not prevent this if I wished to," he said to the laughter and applause of his audience."

Bush, in Los Angeles, called for "a public forum to discuss the issues that interest California Republicans" before the state's GOP primary June 3. He said he could win in California "by continuing to spell out the issues for Republican voters in the days ahead."

A SPOKESMAN for Reagan, a former California governor, said the frontrunner hadn't learned of Bush's challenge and therefore there would be no immediate response from the Reagan campt.

Bush and Reagan have debated several times before in the campaign, and the League of Women Voters had scheduled a debate before the California primary but canceled it as unnecessary. Kennedy has challenged Carter to debate throughout the campaign, but the two have never faced each other.

Debates have more than once changed the course of American politics. Abraham Lincoln first gained national attention in the Lincoln-Douglas Debates of 1858. Lincoln was running for the Senate, and though he lost to Stephen A. Douglas, his performance laid the groundwork for his running for president.

IN RECENT TIMES, the most famous debates were the televised confrontations in 1960 between Edward Kennedy's older brother, John F. Kennedy, and Richard M. Nixon, watched by an estimated 80 million Americans.

Kennedy had prepared carefully for the debates and had rested, while Nixon came directly from the campaign trail and came off looking tired. The debates gave Nixon his "five-o'clock-shadow" image and, many feel, helped give Kennedy the presidency.

California court clears way for communal living

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The California commune, a species that proliferated in the 1960s and became endangered in the '70s, has won some protection from the state Supreme Court.

The court ruled Thursday that a "family" of 12 unrelated adults, including a lawyer, a real estate broker and a graduate student, can continue to live together in a 24-room house in Santa Barbara, where they share expenses and chores and eat together.

City officials had attempted to break up the group, citing a city ordinance that says no more than five unrelated persons can live in single-family houses in certain neighborhoods.

The ruling could invalidate similar ordinances in at least 36 other California cities, including Los Angeles, San Francisco and San Diego. The court, which split 4-3, said the ordinance violated the California Constitution, which guarantees the rights of "enjoying life and liberty," possessing property, and "pursuing and obtaining ... happiness, and privacy."

The right to privacy, the court said, includes "the right to live with whomever one wishes, or at least, to live in an alternate family with persons not related by blood, marriage or adoption."

The city said the ordinance was aimed at limiting population density and maintaining an environment suitable to family life.

The Supreme Court said density could be regulated by ordinances governing the number of persons allowed in a given floor space and that police already had the power to regulate noise and morality.

They take extra forms back to the supermarket

BY MARTIN SLOANE
United Feature Syndicate

DEAR SUPERMARKET SHOPPER — My friends and I have found a way to make up for the bad impression left by those few greedy refunders who take whole pads of refund forms. Instead of taking excess forms from the supermarket, we bring them back!

Several friends and I get together every week to swap coupons and refund forms. At our last meeting, we were wondering what we could do with the refund forms that we could not use and that would expire within 30 days.

I suggested that we bring all of them back to the supermarket so that other shoppers might have an opportunity to use them. Everyone thought that was a good idea, and we all agreed to meet at one of our local supermarkets the next day.

You can imagine the look on the store manager's face when we walked up to his desk and offered him a box full of refund forms!

After the shock wore off, he seemed genuinely pleased. He told us he would put them in an exchange box for his many customers who had been asking for refund forms. — Beverly H. from Sacramento, Calif.

DEAR BEVERLY — I think your idea is excellent. I hope other thoughtful refunders will give it a try.

For those readers who are not aware of it, most experienced refunders trade their unwanted refund forms by mail. It's a rule that the forms you mail to a trading pal must have at least 30 days before expiration.

This leaves refunders with the poblem of what to do with unwanted forms that will expire within 30 days. Your letter provides an excellent solution.

I would also like to suggest that these forms be given to senior-citizen groups. Many seniors don't have as great an opportunity to find forms as most of us do.

Whether you take your excess forms to the supermarket or the senior citizens' center, be sure they will be good for at least another 10 days so that others will have a reasonable opportunity to use them.

You can find out more about mail trades from my Coupon Clipper's Newsletter No. 3, "Trading Refund Forms by Mail." Send 75 cents plus a stamped, self-addressed envelope to THE SUPERMARKET SHOPPER, P.O. Box 461, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to request the newsletter by name.

"If your readers have information concerning the illegal redemption of either cents-off coupons or refund offers, they may write, giving full particulars, to the "Postal Inspector in Charge" in care of their local post office. Or they may send their information directly to me, S.N. McKusick, Postal Inspector, P.O. Box 43558, St. Paul, Minn. 55164."

Please note that all of the refund offers in this column are one per family unless specified otherwise.

DEAR ABBY

Advantages of 80

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago you published a priceless article describing the advantages of being 80 years old. I foolishly neglected to cut it out, and now that I am approaching 80 I would very much like to have it. Can you please locate it and run it again? — MARY P. IN LA MESA, CALIF.

DEAR MARY: With pleasure. Here it is:

DEAR ABBY: We oldsters sure do get away with a lot just because we've managed to keep breathing longer than most folks. I have just celebrated my 80th birthday and I've got it made.

If you forget someone's name or an appointment or what you said yesterday, just explain that you are 80, and you will be forgiven. If you spill soup on your tie, or forget to shave half your face, or take another man's hat by mistake, or promise to mail a letter and carry it around in your pocket for two weeks, just say, "I'm 80, you know," and nobody will say a thing.

You have a perfect alibi for everything when you're 80. If you act silly, you're in your "second childhood."

Being 80 is much better than being 70. At 70 people are mad at you for everything, but if you make it to 80, you can talk back, argue, disagree and insist on having your own way because everybody thinks you are getting a little soft in the head.

They say that life begins at 40. Not true. If you ask me, life begins at 80!

Sign me ... GOT IT MADE AT 80

DEAR ABBY: I am a girl, 12, very inexperienced, and I need to know the correct way to kiss a boy. My mother says it will just come naturally, but in case it doesn't, can you give me a few pointers?

Should the girl quit breathing? I heard she isn't supposed to make a "smack" sound when kissing a boy, but it's OK for kissing relatives, right?

Another question: Am I supposed to move my head? Or do I just move my lips? One last thing: What am I supposed to do with my nose? — NEVER BEEN KISSED

DEAR NEVER: You should not quit breathing. No "smack" sounds — not even with relatives. It's not necessary to move anything. And all you do with your nose is breathe through it.

DEAR ABBY: Would it be unethical for my husband and me to stipulate in our wills that the gold in our teeth be removed upon our demise and returned to our estate?

People aren't buried with jewelry, so now that gold is so valuable, why not?

After the mortician is through, who's to know anyway? — PRACTICAL PERSON

DEAR PRACTICAL: It would be ethical, but whether it would be practical is another matter. My dentist informs me that the gold in one's teeth usually isn't worth extracting. P.S. Since most wills are read after the deceased has been buried, if you have any instructions for the mortician, better leave them with your family, lawyer, physician, clergyman or the mortician himself while you're still able.

Female pilots have tripled in number

DENVER (AP) — The odds are about 286 to 1 of having a woman in the cockpit of a huge multi-engine airplane, but the number of female pilots on free world airlines has nearly tripled in two years, and they say they're here to stay.

"In 1978, there were only 58 of us," said Claudia Jones, a Continental Airlines first officer. "Now there are 140 and we're still growing. We're far from militant, but there's no need for that. We've made it."

But they still have a long way to go to catch up with their male counterparts — 40,000 of them — flying for scheduled passenger and cargo airlines outside the Soviet Union.

There are several female jet captains on airlines elsewhere in the world outside the Soviet Union. But no American woman has achieved that status, serving instead as captains on propeller and turboprop passenger planes.

About 50 women pilots gathered here Wednesday for the annual meeting of the International Social Affiliation of Women Airline Pilots. Some 70 women flyers are in the group, representing more than a dozen carriers.

A pilot for an airline refers to a flight engineer or second officer, a co-pilot or first officer, and a captain.

The group holds its yearly meeting to compare notes and "preen in our uniforms," said Ms. Jones, outgoing president of the association.

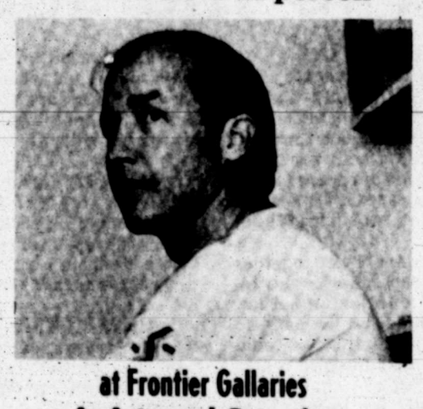

The first woman pilot, Turi Wideroe, was hired by Scandinavian Airlines in 1961. But it was not until 12 years later that an American carrier, Frontier Airlines, took a woman, Emily Warner, as co-pilot on a DeHavilland Otter, a twin turboprop plane.

Early this year, 46 airlines in 13 countries had a total of 140 female pilots on staff, 90 of them in the United States. American aviation officials believe the Soviet Union has used women as airline pilots since the early 1950s, but the Soviets refuse to disclose how many.

Pilots at the convention here said they earn the same pay as men of equivalent experience and seniority, adding that they feel treated fairly as they work their way up through the ranks.

Hot tub interest steadily increasing

By MIKE SNAPP
Copley News Service

With the summer season fast approaching, and the prospects of $2-per-gallon gasoline a near reality, nationwide interest in spas and hot tubs — and the beautiful lifestyle these vessels of warm, bubbly water have generated — has reached epidemic proportions.

According to the Spa and Tub Association, more than 200,000 Americans now own spas and hot tubs. In 1978, the busiest year for the industry, an estimated 50,000 spas and 35,000 hot tubs were sold in the United States. In 1979, says the association, these figures almost doubled.

But the tight economic conditions the country is now experiencing has certainly had its effect on the market. Home improvement loans — once a major selling point for spas and tubs — are not as easy to come by as they once were. And current interest rates make any addition to the home a very expensive proposition.

With the high price of gas keeping more and more people home these days, a spa or hot tub is becoming a relatively inexpensive investment. The key is how you buy to ensure that you are getting the best possible spa or hot tub for your dollar. Here are some questions SATA recommends consumers ask before purchasing a new spa or hot tub:

1. HAVE I CHOSEN THE RIGHT DEALER? Find out how long your particular retailer has been in business. The longer the better. Ask for references, and check them out.

2. WAS IWB BROUGHT TO THIS DEALER BY THIS "LOW, LOW PRICE?" This type of advertising has been around for centuries. But before you take advantage of this special deal, ask yourself when you last got something for nothing. The items offered may be totally inadequate, and serve only as come-ons to get you into the store.

3. IS THE PRICE QUOTED YOU COMPLETE? If not, you may be in for some real trouble. When getting a quote from a dealer, make sure everything is spelled out in writing. And make sure it includes everything you need to operate the spa. If a certain item is not listed on the quote, you probably will not get it.

Appreciations, fifth grade program highlight final meeting of Bowie PTA

Awarding of certificates of appreciation, honoring of the principal and a program by fifth graders highlighted the final meeting of the James Bowie PTA unit. The meeting was opened with a prayer by Lynne Keys, spiritual and character chairman.

A standing ovation and a plaque in the shape of the state of Texas reading "Nowhere else but Bowie Elementary and No One But Mr. Marlow" was the appreciation shown by the parents, teachers and students to Frank Marlow, principal for the past 13 years at Bowie and a classroom teacher there two years before becoming principal. Marlow responded to the honor through the reading of a poem entitled "If I Pass This Way But Once."

Mrs. James "Doc" Dodson, outgoing president, was installing officer for the installation of new officers for 1980-81. PTA-ITIS was the name of the program and "heart" pillows were presented each of the incoming officers, reading "My Heart Belongs to Bowie." The theme of the program was that PTA-ITIS is "caused by an enlarged heart, a deficiency of selfishness and an over-sufficiency of love for children and youth." Mrs. Dodson ended with the hope of "each officer becoming infected carriers of the disease, PTA-ITIS, and spreading the disease far and wide."

Officers for the coming year are: Mrs. Lee Foster, president; Mrs. Chuck Thomas, first vice president; Mrs. Bill Jackson, second vice president; Mrs. Ken Billings, treasurer, and Mrs. Dodson, parliamentarian.

Certificates of appreciation from the PTA went to Patsy Gordon from The Reporter-Telegram, Officer Steve Otto and Sgt. Lalo Camarillo from the Midland Police Department's Crime Prevention Unit, the school secretary, Jeri Evans, and to the following mothers who served the Bowie PTA board during the past eight years and will be graduating from Bowie this year:

Rosemary Cox was cited for 12 years service, Nell Furgeson for eight years and Dona Triplitt for six years. Other mothers cited were Anne McFadden, Pam Diepraam, Heidi South, Marlyn Butler, Annie Brackens, Lupe Reyes, Susie Hitchcock and Velma Smith. Mrs. Smith, a grandmother, is Bowie's crossing guard on B Street.

A past-president's pin was presented to Mrs. Dodson in appreciation of her two years as president.

Awards won by the Bowie PTA at state and district level were presented to Marlow for display in the school office.

Two of the most outstanding awards received were the Roadrunner painting, which signifies the outstanding PTA in the district and a certificate in honor of being first runnerup to the Outstanding PTA in Texas.

Guadalupe Sosa

It was announced by Mrs. Dodson that the PTA was notified this past week of winning the outstanding membership campaign in Texas for the month of April. The theme for the Bowie membership drive was "Bones for Bowie" with the character of 'Ole Mother Hubbard, portrayed by Mrs. Furgeson, and "Bowie" the Bulldog, school mascot, portrayed by Ann Braun. In May, the Texas PTA will select one winner out of the nine months of winners for the state.

"Mr. Sosa Day" was held recently at Bowie Elementary in honor of Guadalupe Sosa, head custodian for the school the past nine years. A plaque was presented Sosa by the students, faculty and PTAin appreciation of his fine service.

A banner stretched across the school cafetorium in honor of Mr. Sosa, and all persons on Bowie campus that day wore a "Mr. Sosa Day" bangle, which featured his picture.

Mr. Sosa, born and reared in Carlsbad, N.M., has been in Midland 17 years. Before coming to Bowie he worked for the City of Midland, an Odessa company and "around."

He and his wife, Laberda, have 11 children ranging in age from 11 to 31 years. Four children are at home and the rest are married. All live in Midland except one son who lives in Carlsbad.

Sosa believes Bowie is "a good place for me." He was the first person this school year to join the school's PTA.

Described as "everybody's friend" and a "favorite at Bowie," Sosa said he "likes my job, like the people."

The custodian explained that he "didn't go to school," but he ended up working in one.

He worked on a farm 30 years near Carlsbad before coming to the Tall City.

He doesn't anticipate leaving Bowie, but "if I ever leave, I'll keep you all (Bowie people) in my heart."

A coordinated music, strings and physical education program at the PTA meeting was presented by the fifth grades at Bowie, under the direction of Marion Stone, strings teacher; Madeline Van Ness, music teacher, and Richard Harris, PE teacher. It was held on the school's patio after the business meeting. Patriotism was the theme of the program, with the strings students playing a patriotic medley arranged by Mrs. Stone. "God Bless America" was sung by another group of students. Dressed in red, white and blue, students performed musical and tumbling activities.

The grand finale, "The Time Has Come to Say Goodbye," was sung by all fifth graders.

A luncheon honoring outgoing and incoming officers was held in the home of Mrs. Foster.

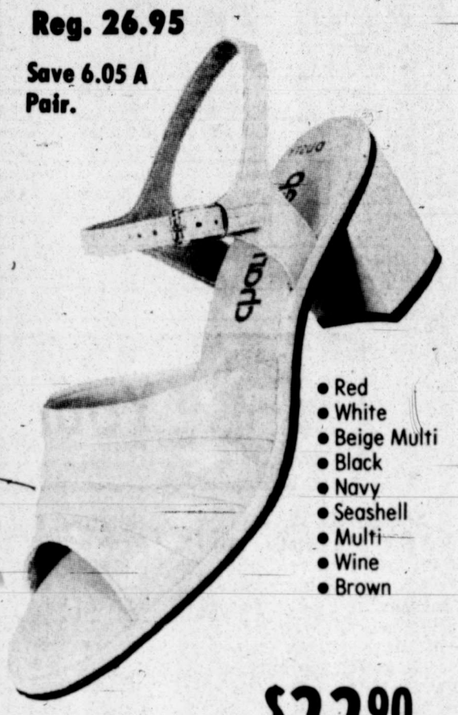

Mrs. Triplitt, hospitality chairman, and Mrs. Dodson were co-hostesses.

A luncheon will be held May 31 in honor of the teachers, given by the PTA board, in the school library.

On the house

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

About $50 billion is expected to be spent on home improvements this year. Unless house prices stop rising and mortgage interest rates settle down, it is likely that the annual figure will be as high as $85 billion by 1985.

More meaningful to home owners than those estimates is what they can afford to spend if and when they decide to make improvements to their own homes. With materials and labor costs so high, few home owners can swing major improvements without obtaining loans to finance the projects.

How much of a loan can be carried without it becoming a burden?

Many people feel they know the answer to that question without thinking too much about it. Some do. Some don't.

Various authorities have offered formulas to determine the amount of the loan you can handle. A man who has spent 24 years of his life dealing almost exclusively with home-improvement lending, Citibank executive George Lowe, comes up with this answer:

"The first thing to do is to assess your financial situation. To compute your cash flow, first add your gross salary and other regular income, including dividends, interest and even any alimony you receive on a continuing basis. This figure is your gross income for the year.

"On the other side of the ledger, calculate your living expenses, such as mortgage payments, taxes, transportation, food and clothing. Now subtract these expenses from your gross figure. If you still have 25 to 30 percent of your income available at this point, you are in a position to take on a loan."

Lowe said that, before becoming seriously involved in negotiating with contractors for home improvements, a family should ask itself several questions.

Among them are: Is the size of your house adequate for present and future needs? What is the outlook for your neighborhood? Is it stable, improving, declining? How close are you to schools, stores, transportation? What work is needed to modernize your house? Does it need a new kitchen? New bedrooms and bath? Better insulation?

Lowe went on:

"Finally, ask yourself if the project you are considering would price your home out of the market for your neighborhood. If you turn a home in a $60,000 neighborhood into one worth $85,000, you won't recover the costs when you sell it."

Should you refinance your present mortgage to pay for the work?

"This can be a costly and usually unnecessary step," he said. "When your home improvements cost $10,000 or $15,000, it just doesn't make sense. If you bought your home a few years ago, the interest you pay on your mortgage is between 6 and 8 percent. To refinance your mortgage now would result in a much higher interest rate, not to mention the cost of renegotiating a mortgage.

"If you have a substantial savings account, consider pledging that as collateral for a loan instead of paying cash for the work. With the interest rate that you earn on your savings account, your net cost for the loan would be between 7 and 8 percent. And you would still have your savings account as backup for any future or immediate financial needs."

Australia challenged strongly for the 1979 world team championship, failing to qualify only in the last round of the preliminaries. Here's an example of the skill of one of the team's stars, Dick Cummings.

West's no trump is known in the trade as the "Comic No Trump." It is either a weak hand with a long suit, or a normal one no trump overcall — 16-18 points. East's two clubs asked his partner to describe his no trump, and two spades showed a weak hand with spades. The rest of the auction was natural.

West led the queen of spades — a natural choice, though as the cards lie, the other queen would have defeated the contract. Declarer won the ace and led a trump to the nine, jack and queen. East returned a spade and declarer ruffed. After cashing the king of hearts, declarer ran the jack of clubs to East's king.

East, Francis Vernon of Venezuela, now made a fine defensive play — he led another spade, giving declarer a ruff and sluff. (Any other return would allow declarer to win, pick up the trumps with the help of a finesse for the ten, then run clubs for his contract.) But Cummings adroitly countered this defensive effort.

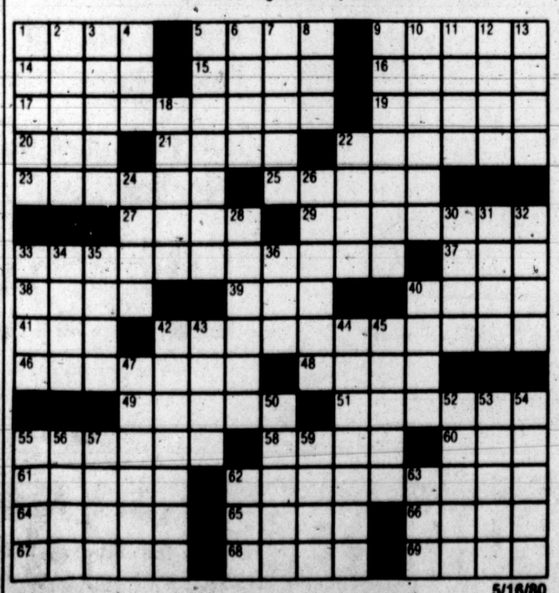

He discarded a club from his hand and ruffed in dummy with the eight. When the king of diamonds revealed the break, declarer started to run dummy's clubs. If East ruffed at any time, declarer would simply overruff, draw the last trump and claim the balance.

If East refused to ruff, both he and declarer would complete trick eleven with two trumps each, with the lead in dummy. Now a heart off the table would allow declarer to pick up the trumps via a coup. A well-played hand by all concerned.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. Singapore's 'Tiger Balm Gardens' gets new life

By KENNETH L. WHITING

SINGAPORE (AP) — One Singapore landmark literally has a new lease on life to continue to fascinate tourists with a taste for the eccentric.

Once reported in danger of closing, Tiger Balm Gardens will be renovated and maintained for 10 years under terms of a lease arranged recently. The tourist promotion board will assume full control in 1990, a spokesman said.

The gardens cover eight hillside acres overlooking the harbor's western anchorage. It is a garish outdoor display of Chinese mythology, advertising for patent medicines and sermons on morality, all in brightly painted plaster and concrete.

There is no fee for entering the complex, also known as Haw Par Villa, which was completed in 1937 by the legendary Aw family.

Aw Boon Haw and Aw Boon Par built a business empire, now known as Har Par Brothers International, on the popular Tiger brand of analgesic salve, medicinal oil, headache powder and other remedies. Both brothers are dead.

Tiger Balm Gardens reflected their commitment to philanthropy, Chinese culture and pushing the product.

Gates, benches and trash baskets are emblazoned with the leaping Tiger trademark. Big signs tout a cure "for headaches, colds, mental strain." Packages of Tiger Balm perch incongruously between statues of sumo wrestlers in the "Japanese corner."

Fenced-off national corners honoring several countries have been added since World War II with tourists in mind.

The American corner boasts a 5-foot version of the Statue of Liberty on a base inscribed: "Fairleigh Dickinson University, New Jersey, 1964."

Australia's corner has statues of kangaroos and koala bears of the same scale and color. The Thai corner features concrete Siamese dancers. Flamenco dancers adorn the Spanish corner, although Spain is not considered a prime source of tourists for Singapore.

There are statues of Chinese dignitaries, animals, birds, buddhas, figures from folklore and an 8-foot discus thrower in white plaster.

Smaller statues in sequence portray tales from such Chinese classics as Madam White Snake. Others offer moral lessons. Obey your parents, study hard, keep fit and spurn evil companions is the message in a two-level plaster pageant depicting the contrasting high and low roads of life.

"The shortest cut to poverty and degradation is wine and women," says the sign on one scene showing carousing in a dance hall.

"The Bridge of Sighs" leads to 10 courts in the Taoist version of purgatory. Models of sinners are shown in boiling cauldrons, being cut in half and having their tongues pulled out for various offenses. The tableau is detailed and the gore looks real, much to the delight of visiting schoolboys.

A large parking lot accommodates tourist buses and thousands stroll around Tiger Balm Gardens on weekends and public holidays. Local visitors seem to be mostly youngsters, many accompanied by parents or relatives who explain the pointers on morality.

Escalating maintenance costs caused the Aw family to offer the gardens to the tourist promotion board.

Tiger Balm Gardens was created by Kwok Wan Shan starting in 1931. Craftsmen Kwok got the job after sculpting an impressive Tiger for one of the Aw brothers' factories. It was destroyed during World War II and Kwok supervised rebuilding in the 1950s.

"It's a grotesque place. I haven't been there since I was in school," said a middle-aged businessman. He said the bizarre park was untypical of this modern country and perhaps not worth saving.

The prevailing view is that Singapore does not have an overabundance of tourist attractions.

THE NEWSPAPER BIBLE

What would you have done?

Then Simon Peter drew a sword and slashed off the right ear of Malchus, the High Priest's servant.

But Jesus said to Peter, "Put your sword away. Shall I not drink from the cup the Father has given Me?"

So the Jewish police, with the soldiers and their lieutenant, arrested Jesus and tied Him.

First they took Him to Annas, the father-in-law of Caiaphas, the High Priest that year.

Caiaphas was the one who told the other Jewish leaders, "Better that one should die for all."

Simon Peter followed along behind, as did another of the disciples who was acquainted with the High Priest. So that other disciple was permitted into the courtyard along with Jesus,

While Peter stood outside the gate. Then the other disciple spoke to the girl watching at the gate, and she let Peter in.

The girl asked Peter, "Aren't you one of Jesus' disciples?"

"No," he said, "I am not!"

The police and the household servants were standing around a fire they had made, for it was cold. And Peter stood there with them, warming himself.

Inside, the High Priest began asking Jesus about His followers and what He had been teaching them.

Jesus replied, "What I teach is widely known, for I have preached regularly in the synagogue and Temple; I have been heard by all the Jewish leaders and teach nothing in private that I have not said in public.

Why are you asking Me this question? Ask those who heard Me. You have some of them here. They know what I said."

'Body packing' a dangerous method

By ANNE S. CROWLEY

MIAMI (AP) — Just back from a South American vacation, 17-year-old Scott Wirkus breezed through Customs. Then he died an agonizing death — from 200 grams of cocaine he had swallowed in tiny bags.

Wirkus was a victim of "body packing," authorities said. When he died, five years ago, the smuggling method was something of a novelty in medical circles. Now the problem seems to be growing.

Until the end of 1979, only four such deaths had ever been recorded in Miami. This year alone, known deaths number four.

Two of the latest victims had swallowed cocaine-filled bags, and two had tried inserting containers in body cavities. The containers leaked. Similar deaths have been reported in New York and Atlanta.

The increase has prompted the Dade County Medical Examiner's office to warn travelers of dangers in the unorthodox smuggling technique.

"Naively, this method looks really good," said Dr. Ronald Wright, chief deputy medical examiner. "It works for diamonds. But diamonds are not poisonous. That's a big difference."

The smugglers think that condoms, balloons or other rubber sheaths will protect them from a deadly overdose until the drug passes through their digestive systems. They think wrong.

The plastic doesn't even have to break for the carrier to get a fatal overdose, explained Dr. Charles Wetli, an assistant medical examiner.

"The membrane is semi-permeable," he said. "Water is going to diffuse in. It's going to dissolve some of the cocaine and the cocaine is going to start diffusing out.... This diffusion will continue until the concentration on both sides of the membrane is equal."

A large enough dose of cocaine can kill by causing seizures, respiratory arrest and heart failure.

An airport hotel maid found Wirkus on his bed in January 1975, bleeding from the nose and hemorrhaging internally, according to the autopsy report. Death was attributed to a cocaine overdose.

The sports-loving teen-ager from Racine, Wis., had gone to South America with a buddy from home and apparently met another boy from Wisconsin somewhere along the line, szid his mother, Del Wirkus. The three checked into the hotel together, but the other boys were gone when the maid found the body.

"He had experimented with marijuana cigarettes like every kid in high school," said Mrs. Wirkus. "It was a hit-and-miss kind of thing — he tried it and that was the end of it."

Details were scarce in the boy's death, which was ruled accidental, but one case provided a rare glimpse of exactly what can happen.

On Jan. 29, 1979, Carlos Eduardo Rodriguez went into seizures on a flight from Colombia to New York. Another passenger, Alice Melo of Connecticut, tried to help the well-dressed, 32-year-old Colombian.

Thrashing about in a death frenzy, Rodriguez bit her.

Mrs. Melo, a registered nurse, made detailed observations and later reported them to the medical examiner.

"He was perspiring, incoherent, pupils dilated," Mrs. Melo recalled in a telephone interview. "He had a grand mal seizure 15 minutes after we took off...he continued to have seizures and finally had a cardiac arrest...he was moribund, gravely ill. For an hour, we tried to sustain this man, doing cardio-pulmonary resuscitation."

Rodriguez was dead when he arrived at a hospital in Hialeah. The autopsy showed 460 grams of cocaine in 147 intact packets inside him.

A body packer could pass all the cocaine-filled balloons and live, Wetli conceded. But doctors have no idea what the odds are.

"I'm sure it does succeed to some extent," he said. "We don't know how many people are smuggling it in this way and how many people are dying. We're starting to see more and more deaths, that's for sure."

Observed Miami Customs spokesman Jim Dingfelder succinctly: "We only hear about it if it doesn't work."

After Victor Benjamin of San Francisco went into seizures and died in Miami Jan. 4, doctors removed 110 cocaine-filled balloons from his body. A friend, Herbert Clifford Meadows, arrived on a later flight, heard of the death and turned himself in.

Doctors took 88 intact balloons and two leaking ones out of Meadows, and he was treated with a cocaine antidote. Then police charged him with smuggling and possession.

The men had practiced swallowing balloons filled with starch and talc without problems, Wetli said. "Their mistake was that starch and talc molecules are too big to diffuse," he said.

MC seeks large turnout for conference on aging

Norma Helm, director of the Midland College Senior Services Department, has issued a call requesting mass attendance at a May 21 forum related to the problems of aging.

The gathering, officially designated as the White House Conference Community Forum, is a preliminary to the 1981 White House Conference on Aging scheduling to be held in Washington D.C.

"Anyone in the Midland area who has an interest in this subject, anyone who would like to put forth a suggestion or bring a fresh idea to the meeting is more than welcome to join us," Mrs. Helm emphasized.

"We have one opportunity every ten years to gather ideas and pass them along for consideration by the White House Conference. This is the time."

The Midland forum, which will be held from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Midland College Roadrunner Room, is one of many to be held across the nation in 1980. It will be used to compile a list of suggestions which will be forwarded to both state and national conference units.

Mrs. Helm specifically invites older citizens to attend the forum. "After all," she noted, "what we are trying to accomplish is solely related to older individuals. And who is better qualified to express an opinion than those for whom the program is designed?"

"We hope that no one will be timid about attending this forum. Everyone is welcome and there is no charge for attendance."

The forum begins at 10 a.m. with registration and coffee. A panel discussion on various problems will be held from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m. Panel members include Mel Goffigon, an active member of many committees and boards involving aging; Charlotte Windecker, Texas Department of Health; Ralph Parks, Minister of Education and Outreach, Fannin Terrace Baptist Church; Bill Smith, director of Area Agency of Aging, Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission; and Ann Plumtree, staff psychologist, Mental Health - Mental Retardation Center.

"As you can tell by the listing of panel members," Mrs. Helm pointed out, "we are not playing around with this forum. We are very serious about our objectives and extremely hopeful of achieving grand results."

There will be a lunch break at noon where those in attendance may leave campus, bring their own lunches, or purchase a sack lunch at the snack bar in the MC Student Center. The group will re-assemble at 1 p.m. to form discussion groups, formulate suggestions and cast ballots to select a delegate for the National Conference in Washington D.C. The forum should conclude at about 2 p.m.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Alcohol does endanger young

Dear Dr. Solomon: While at a party at the home of a friend, I was surprised to see him permit his preschool age child to sip from a highball he was holding. You wrote recently about the possibility of danger to the fetus if a pregnant woman drinks. Isn't it just as dangerous to permit a small child to drink? — Harold

Dear Harold: Without knowing the details of the situation you describe (for example, how much is a sip?), I can only respond in general terms: Alcohol can be dangerous to small children.

A report by Dr. Francis A. Ragan Jr. in the Journal of The American Medical Association describes nine small children who became seriously ill after drinking alcohol. Although all nine children survived, Dr. Ragan notes that four of them were found to have potentially life-threatening levels of alcohol in the blood.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Within the past few weeks, a friend of mine and one of my co-workers were told they have hypoglycemia. I also seem to be reading more about this disease lately. Is it becoming more prevalent or is it simply easier to diagnose today? — Fred

Dear Fred: A third possibility is that the condition is being misdiagnosed. At least that is the opinion of two professors of internal medicine, Drs. Dan Foster and Leonard Madison, at the Southwestern Medical School.

They note that true reactive hypoglycemia is an uncommon condition with common symptoms. In its milder stages, these symptoms include sweating, tremor, rapid heart beat, anxiety and hunger. As the condition becomes more severe, the central nervous system is involved, and dizziness, headache, clouding of vision, confusion, abnormal behaviour, convulsion and loss of consciousness may occur. However, these symptoms may also be experienced by individuals who do not have hypoglycemia.

Part of the difficulty in diagnosing the condition stems from the use of the five-hour oral glucose tolerance test, which Drs. Foster and Madison say should never be used to establish the diagnosis of reactive hypoglycemia. A patient taking the test drinks a glucose solution after fasting, and the concentration of glucose in the blood is then checked every hour over a five-hour period. However, even perfectly healthy people may have low blood sugar concentrations and may even develop symptoms characteristic of hypoglycemia without having the disease.

Instead of the five-hour oral glucose tolerance test, patients should be diagnosed only after eating normal balanced meals. Blood should be drawn at the height of the patient's symptoms and tested for low blood sugar levels. Persons tested under these conditions rarely have hypoglycemia, even though they may have some of the symptoms.

Go-ahead given for diesel car

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Mike Shetley says the federal government is allowing him to market a diesel-powered car that averages 33 miles a gallon in the city and 53 on the highway.

Last year, Shetley made similar mileage claims but couldn't get his car certified by the Environmental Protection Agency, which confirmed that the vehicle now meets air-pollution standards and can be sold legally.

With a either a Mercury Capri or Zephyr or Ford Mustang or Fairmont body, the four-speed, four-cylinder car is powered by a turbocharged AVCO engine. Shetley says he will produce 1,000 cars this year and 2,000 next year, selling them for $9,400.

Slumping automakers trying to find jobs for idled workers

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — The slump in automaking may be a boon to other industries as Detroit's technical community is raided by companies hoping to snap up laid-off engineers.

And Ford Motor Co. is doing a kind of reverse recruiting called "outplacing" to place their engineers in other industries, other cities.

"Houston is booming," said Ford carburetor engineer Jerry Casada, one of 300 laid-off technical workers looking for a new job. "I just got a job offer at $5,000 more."

After announcing layoffs for 6,100 white-collar employees last month, Ford sent their resumes to other companies. Recruiters from 20 companies were talking with Ford's engineers and technicians Thursday and today.

"It appears there are a lot of transferable skills engineers have," said Ford's Gene Lawler. Manager of recruiting, he now spends his time helping engineers "outplace."

Most of the engineers "probably will get at least their present salary, based on demand," he said.

Among blue-collar workers, however, indefinite layoffs at four of the five major auto companies will reach 217,350 next week. For the first time, that figure tops the number of open-ended layoffs during the 1975 recession. Volkswagen of America is the only producer with no lavoffs.

Aerospace companies, in the market for Detroit's mechanical engineers, design engineers, chemical engineers, metallurgists, computer programmers and others, flooded the airwaves and help-wanted sections with recruiting ads during the Society of Automotive Engineers' convention in February.

Most of Ford's laid-off technicians are young, with recent degrees, which makes them good prospects for other companies. "We can de-train him and re-train him the way we want," said Linda Boatwright, who is recruiting for General Electric Co.'s aircraft engine division in Cincinnati.

Her trips here have been successful, with some 45 interviews and 10 to 15 placements.

Casada, 40, came to Ford 21 months ago as a mechanical engineer but he sensed layoffs were ahead. "You could see it coming for months. I spent a month and a half warning my wife," he said.

With Ford's help and his own legwork, Casada has interviewed for five new jobs and has had two offers.

But among others who haven't been so lucky, morale is low. "There's a lot of milling around" among engineers, he said.

Engineers still employed often are as worried as the newly unemployed, says Jack Givas, who worked on Ford's power steering systems for a year before he was let go. "Engineers still hired are looking for other jobs — and leaving."

Givas wants to stay at his Bay City, Mich., home, "but Lockheed called me and asked for the interview, so I'm keeping an open mind," he said. "I have no idea what they're looking for."

Congress still split on budget

But chairman says progress has been made

WASHINGTON (AP) — House and Senate negotiators remain far apart on a compromise 1981 balanced budget, but the new Senate Budget Committee chairman says progress made so far has taken the Senate's plan out of the red.

Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., said Thursday he was not happy when the news media reported earlier in the week that the Senate "dipped" $100 million into President Carter's gasoline fee revenues to balance its $613.1 billion budget.

The use of that $100 million put the Senate package in deficit Tuesday when a federal judge struck down the 10-cent-a-gallon fee as unconstitutional.

However, on Thursday, citing spending cuts already approved by the House-Senate conference, Hollings proudly declared that "we undipped and got a balanced budget on the Senate side."

The conference, which next meets Monday, has so far achieved a net decrease of $200 million from the Senate proposal, although most categories of government spending are still to be considered and serious questions remain as to whether the budget can be balanced.

The negotiations reached a near standstill Thursday as a congressionally imposed deadline for approving the budget resolution passed with wide differences remaining in the House and Senate spending plans for fiscal 1981, which starts Oct. 1.

The main sticking point has become the order in which the spending categories are considered.

The Senate negotiators want to deal with defense at an early stage, while Rep. Thomas L. Ashley, D-Ohio, acting chairman of the conference, has insisted on delaying action on the Senate's proposed steep increase in defense spending.

Ashley claimed an agreement on defense "would predetermine what follows" and that Rep. Robert N. Giaimo, D-Conn., the Budget Committee chairman, should be present when defense is considered.

Giaimo has been undergoing medical tests for a stomach ailment but was expected to return Monday.

Ashley's refusal to take up defense prompted a threat from Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., that the Senate side might refuse to consider domestic spending categories until a defense figure was set.

By dealing with defense last, Ashley's strategy would add pressure on the Senate to accept a smaller military spending hike by effectively creating a choice between a steep increase for the Pentagon or a balanced budget.

The Senate has proposed $155.7 billion in 1981 defense spending, compared to $147.9 billion approved by the House and $150.5 billion requested by President Carter.

Under the 1974 Congressional Budget Act, the House and Senate had until Thursday to agree on a target 1981 budget. However, missing the deadline has no practical effect.

General Telephone employees strike in four southwest states

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Employees of General Telephone Co. of the Southwest "shut it down" today after union and company negotiators failed to reach agreement before the midnight strike deadline.

"We're officially on strike as of 12:01 a.m. We've shut 'em down," said Judith Lanig, a Communications Workers of America spokesman.

A company spokesman said early today they did not expect any disruption of service.

Clovis McCallister of General Telephone said management personnel were filling in for operations and technicians. He said they had been trained in handling the jobs normally handled by union members.

McCallister also claimed that not all union members walked off their jobs when the strike started.

Union officials had said earlier they were not optimistic about avoiding a strike.

"We've taken a look at the new offer and it stinks," said CWA spokesman Dave Kent Thursday afternoon.

The company made a final offer of a wage and benefit package totaling $38,386,000 after the union annnounced at a press conference the old agreement would not be extended.

"Besides wages, a whole raft of other issues would need to be resolved before the midnight deadline," Kent said.

The union represents 8,000 General Telephone employees in Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma and southeastern New Mexico. More than half work in Texas.

T.O. Moses, chairman of the union's bargaining committee, said the proposal "merely shifted the amount of money around into a different configuration" and the 6 percent ceiling on the cost of living clause was no gain.

Rob Rutherford, a company spokesman, said the new proposal included an approximate 36½ percent increase in wages and benefits for the three-year term of the contract.

Rival unions vie for state workers

AUSTIN (AP) — The Communications Workers of America, a telephone company employees' union, says it wants to start signing up state government workers in direct competition with another AFL-CIO union.

John McCray, chairman of the Texas State Employees UnionCWA, planned to discuss the new organization at a Capitol news conference today.

The CWA claims to be the largest union in Texas with 50,000 members.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees already is signing up state employees.

"I don't consider the CWA that much of a threat. ... They are completely lost when it comes to state employees," said Jesse Sapp, area director of the AFSCME.

He said the CWA is trying to broaden its base because automation has reduced the number of jobs at telephone companies.

The CWA said the Texas State Employees UnionCWA was established "to exclusively and effectively represent Texas state employees both on the job and in the Legislature."

Representation elections, which determine the exclusive bargaining agent for a group of employees, are unlikely since state employees have no legal right to bargain collectively.

A union could, however, lobby for state employee pay raises and fringe benefits and represent employees who believe they were treated unfairly by supervisors.

McCray said in a statement Thursday the CWA already was experienced at lobbying through its Texas Political and Legislative Committee.

"This organization is well established and respected in the Legislature and will work to strongly represent state workers' interests and to present their problems to the legislators for resolution," McCray said.

He said state workers had been "contacting CWA about representation for several months now."

McCray said state employees "expressed frustration" that their annual pay raises for the past three years were 3.4 percent, 3.4 percent and 5.1 percent. He said they also were worried about Gov. Bill Clements' attempt to reduce the number of state employees by 5 percent annually.

The CWA said it was placing advertisements in major Texas newspapers and would distribute leaflets outside state office buildings in more than 30 cities and towns.

Striking teachers jailed

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Toughening his stance against striking Springfield school teachers, Superior Court Judge John Murphy has fined as well as jailed a second wave of teachers for ignoring his back-to-work orders.

The judge's punishment of 14 teachers Thursday brought to 27 the number incarcerated for failing to end a strike that has shut down this city's 25,000-student system for 18 days.

Pointing out that "conditions of employment are no longer a part of the dispute" between the city and the union, Murphy also fined the 14 teachers $500 each and increased their union's daily fine from $20,000 to $30,000.

Both sides agree that the issues that led to the walkout have been resolved.

Shawn Weatherly, Miss South Carolina, screams as she ws named thenew Miss USA at Biloxi,Miss., Thursdaynight. She is from Sumter, S.C. (AP Laserphoto)

South Carolina beauty new Miss USA

20-year-old blue-eyed blond succeeds Mary Friel

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — Shawn Nichols Weatherly, a blonde, blue-eyed Clemson University student representing South Carolina, was named Miss USA in an internationally televised beauty pageant Thursday night.

Miss Weatherly, 20, one of six children of a Sumter, S.C., real estate agent, succeeds Mary Therese Friel of Rochester, N.Y.

She stands 5-foot-8, measures 35-25-35 and will be the United States' representative in the Miss Universe contest.

Her boyfriend is Dwight Clark, a wide receiver with the San Francisco 49ers of the National Football League.

First runnerup was Jineane Ford, Miss Arizona, and the second runnerup was Barbara Bowser, Miss Florida. Third and fourth runnersup, in order, were Pamela Rigas, Miss Alabama, and Lisa Devillez, Miss Kentucky.

In addition to the five top finishers, the seven other semifinalists were Tonja Walker, Miss Maryland; Carla Peterson, Miss Minnesota; Becky Staab, Miss Nebraska; Eva Dyer, Miss New Hampshire; Kathy Dawn Patrick, Miss New Mexico; Debra Maurice, Miss New York, and Barbara Anne Buckley, Miss Texas.

Miss Patrick, a 19-year-old resident of the City of Anthony on the New Mexico-Texas border, had to get a court order to compete. She had been stripped of the Miss New Mexico title by contest officials on grounds she lived in Texas, but got a federal court in El Paso to restore her title.

The pageant finale, broadcast to television audiences in 30 countries, marked the end of two weeks of competition and rehearsals.

Host for the two-hour show was Bob Barker, star of "The Price is Right" television game show.

"I had a fantastic time," 1979's Miss USA said as the time for selecting her successor neared. "I'll be sad when it's over. I've been around the world and to half the states in the country," said Miss Friel.

Harold A. Glasser, president of Miss Universe Inc., said the 29th annual pageant cost about $2 million.

Judging contestants from 50 states and the District of Columbia were 12 celebrity judges, including Bob Kane, creator of the "Batman" comic strip and Adam West, who played the character on television; actress Anita Gillette; Lloyd Haines, best known for his role in television's "Room 222;" and Gerald Fitzgerald, editor of Opera News Magazine.

Other judges were author Rosemary Rogers, Miss USA 1978 Judi Anderson, Richard Kline of television's "Eight is Enough," "mentalist" Uri Geller, illustrator Peter Max and model Rosanne Vella.

Police out in force to guard against student riots in Seoul

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — President Choi Kyu-hah cut short his trip to the Middle East and was returning home today to deal with demands by students who led three days of riots that left one dead, more than 400 injured and 800 arrested.

Most students stayed off the streets today, but 3,000 marched in Seoul to and 6,000 in Kwangju and several other provincial cities. No clashes were reported. But riot police were out in force to guard against the possibility of more violence.

Choi, who has been in Kuwait and Saudi Arabia trying to work out oil and other deals for South Korea's sagging economy, originally was to return Saturday but decided to come home a day of ahead of schedule, a spokesman said.

The spokesman did not say whether Choi would issue a statement, but Education Minister Kim Ok-gill said earlier the government was expected to announce a concrete timetable for democratic reforms when Choi returned.

In a nationally televised speech Thursday, Prime Minister Shin Hyun-hwack promised to try to advance the government's timetable for political reforms, which call for constitutional revisions this year and elections in 1981.

But Shin offered no concessions on the student-protesters' demands for an end to martial law and the resignation of the Korean CIA chief, and warned that further riots would harm both the national economy and national security.

Assistant highway director speaks to local Rotarians

Mark Yancey

Texans should cherish their freedom of mobility but realize that Texas highways may not be well maintained, Mark Yancey told Midland Rotarians Thursday.

Yancey, the assistant engineer-director for the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation, blamed inadequate funding as the culprit.

"Highways have about a 20-year life and we are far from being able to renew anything like five percent of our highway mileage each year," he said.

Noting a 34 percent increase in truck traffic within the last six years, Yancey said Texas population and economy is growing and transportation is playing an important role.

Yet, "Texas needs to continue to make the truck and automobile more energy efficent," he added.

Increasing the passenger ratio per vehicle by 10 percent, he suggested, could do more for the nation's energy situation than any other action.

Pipelines may very well become the transportation system of the future, he claimed, adding that more volume goods could be moved through a pipeline system.

The Texas legislature has provided a state funding bill in 1977 which would help the situation, Yancey noted. However, the Highway Department might have to borrow $300 million from the state's general treasury fund, which could represent an increase in gasoline taxes, he told the noon audience.

The transportation official's speech was in conjunction with the state's observance of National Transportation Week.

Following the luncheon at the Midland Hilton, Yancey attended a National Transportation Week reception in Odessa.

Record supplies won't halt gas increases, say analysts

By ROBERT BURNS

NEW YORK (AP) — Crude oil supplies are at an all-time high and refineries are cutting back production because they can't find enough customers. Yet gasoline prices are expected to go up this summer.

Some industry observers think the bulging supply tanks will lead to isolated price wars for part of the summer, but they see the overall trend as upward.

The retail price will rise about a cent per gallon a month, predicts Dave Knapp, an analyst with the Economics Group of Chase Manhattan Bank. He cautions that his forecast assumes there will be no unexpected changes in the production or pricing of foreign oil.

In San Francisco today, Standard Oil Co. of California announced an increase in the wholesale price of its gasoline of 4 cents per gallon, effective immediately.

Company spokesman Dale Basye also announced an increase of 6 cents per gallon on No. 1 and No. 2 diesel fuel and heating oil. The increases, the first by company since Feb. 8, were prompted by higher costs of both domestic and foreign crude oil, Basye said.

The $2-a-barrel price increase Wednesday by Saudi Arabia was a contributing factor, he added.

Standard Oil sells its gasoline under the Chevron brand name.

There are several reasons why the impending glut is not expected to send prices plummetting. For one, gasoline prices traditionally rise in the summer, when driving increases.

Another is that, even with slackening demand, the price of crude oil is not going down. Saudi Arabia has just raised the price of its oil to $28 a 42-gallon barrel, bringing it closer to the prices of $30 and up charged by other members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

And the government is gradually removing price controls on domestic oil, allowing those prices to rise to world levels.

"No one can say for sure what's going to happen, but the underlying cost of making gasoline will continue to go up because, in part, of the government's decontrol program," said Gary Ross of the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation.

President Carter's effort to impose a fee of 10 cents per gallon on gasoline has been stymied for the moment, but gasoline prices would of course go up again if he succeeded in imposing that fee. It has been blocked by a judge and faces stiff congressional opposition as well.

For the time being, however, the surge in gasoline prices has ended. The average price of leaded regular gasoline actually fell during the first week of May, from $1.209 to $1.206, according to Dan Lundberg, whose newsletter monitors gasoline supplies and prices.

Lundberg thinks the Saudi action is a preiude "that tells us to expect in the near future some notification from OPEC of reduced exports."

American oil companies are doing a little cutting back of their own. The American Petroleum Institute said Thursday that refineries operated at only 73.9 percent of capacity in the week that ended May 9, down from 75.5 percent the previous week and 83.9 percent in the same week of 1979.

The API also reported that crude oil inventories reached record levels during the week and said supplies of gasoline and home heating oil were far above normal.

Lundberg said he thinks the Saudi increase will boost U.S. retail gasoline prices by at least 0.6 of a cent immediately and "as that increase churns through the entire economy it will come out within 90 days as a 3-cent-a-gallon increase."

It may be gasoline retailers who will suffer if motorists don't increase their purchases this summer as they usually do. Knapp said he expects increased competition to result in short-lived price cuts in some regions, particularly New York, Washington, D.C., and some Midwestern areas.

"There won't, however, be any general downward movement," he predicted.

More time allowed for port

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The U.S. Department of Transportation has given Texas more time to round up financial support for a proposed deepwater port to accommodate jumbo tankers carrying imported oil to Texas refineries.

Transportation Secretary Neil Goldschmidt gave the state an extension to June 30 and said he probably would allow the state another six months, to Nov. 15.

Goldschmidt warned, however, there would be no further extensions unless the Texas Deepwater Port Authority can show signed commitments from potential port users by November.

Until the extention, Texas had a May 15 deadline to accept a federal license for the port, to be built near Freeport. DOT offered the license Aug. 15, 1979, but state acceptance has been delayed by difficulty in securing oil company commitments to use the port.

"The continued viability of our petrochemical and refining industry rests in part upon our ability to import oil in the larger, more efficient ships. ... I will continue to lend my support to this project, as well as to the other deepwater port projects in Texas, so that this important economic resource can be preserved," the governor said.

In a letter to Clements, Goldschmidt said, "We recognize that the state of Texas has the largest crude oil refining capacity of all the states, and a deepwater port to serve these refineries and others in the region is clearly in the national interest."

The port would be state-sponsored but construction bonds would be paid off by fees from users, primarily oil companies.

Concoco finals Garza oiler

Conoco Inc., operating from Midland, reported potential test on its No. 5-A Storie in the Threeway (San Andres) field of Garza County.

On 24-hour potential test it pumped 4 barrels of oil and 232 barrels of water, through perforations from 3,109 to 3,299 feet after a 4,000-gallon acid treatment.

Gravity of the oil is 38 degrees and the gas-oil ratio is too small to measure.

Total depth is 3,600 feet, plugged back depth is 3,568 feet and 5.5-inch casingis cemented one foot off bottom.

Lovation is five miles northwest of post and 2,387 feet from south and 930 feet from west lines of SF 1439, astract 1063.

Forbidden fee was package of ideas

By STAN BENJAMIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — The gasoline fee President Carter was forbidden by a federal judge from imposing this week was a package of three old ideas that came apart at the seams:

—Raise new revenues to help balance the federal budget.

—Impose a fee to cut crude oil imports.

—Institute a surcharge to reduce gasoline demand.

The first idea is as old as governments.

The second dates from 1959, when the U.S. government began using quotas to limit oil imports.

Those quotas ended four years later, when President Richard M. Nixon imposed import fees in the face of production's inability to meet rising demand. That move let more foreign oil in, although discouraging such imports a bit.

Within a year, though, Nixon's modest fees were left far behind by the OPEC cartel's quadrupling of foreign oil prices.

President Gerald R. Ford temporarily imposed new import fees as a tactic to push energy legislation through Congress.

The third idea, that of a gasoline surcharge, goes back at least to 1974, when it was proposed as a way of cutting oil consumption after the Arab oil embargo.

John C. Sawhill, then head of the Federal Energy Administration, backed this unpopular idea and, partly as a result, was dismissed by Ford. Now Sawhill is back, as deputy energy secretary, and so are gasoline surcharges.

While the federal government has for years collected a four-cent-per-gallon tax to pay for federal highw programs, Congress has repeatedly rejected a tax aimed at conserving gasoline.

Highway construction brings jobs, business, easy travel and grassroots political support. Gasoline conservation doesn't.

In fact, although authorizing the president to adopt fuel-saving measures, Congress specifically said he could not do it through a gasoline tax.

The president could impose oil import fees to protect national security, but not to balance the budget.

The three ideas came together last March, when the Carter administration linked them ingeniously.

Carter would put a large fee on all imported oil, to be paid by American refiners. But those refiners would be allowed to recover the fee only on gasoline sales.

The resulting pump price hikes would cut demand and thus, in the name of national security, imports. And in the process, the federal Treasury would collect more than $10 billion a year from the fee.

Carter maintained he was not imposing a congressionally-forbidden gasoline tax but merely administering a congressionally-allowed import fee.

Carter proposed that his plan be eventually replaced by an equivalent gasoline tax, but Congress could have delayed that until after this fall's elections.

By then the public might be used to the 10-cent fee and scarcely notice its legal conversion into the first gasoline-conservation tax.

In politics, as in stage magic, it's no trick to pull a rabbit out of a hat — the trick is to hide the rabbit until it's time to pull him out.

Independent gasoline marketers thought they saw a rabbit's ear dangling out of Carter's sleeve, and pointed it out to District Judge Aubrey Robinson.

In his decision Tuesday, Robinson in effect yelled "fake".

"Congress has thus far denied the president authority to reduce gasoline consumption through a gasoline conservation levy," Robinson said. Carter's plan, he added, 'is an attempt to circumvent that stumbling block in the guise of an import control measure."

The administration said it would appeal.

While Carter's legal tactic was coming apart in court, his political tactic was unraveling in Congress, where House and Senate committees worked on legislation to block the fee.

On Thursday, he pointedly accused Congress of withdrawing support for something it had originally requested.

Last March, Carter said, congressional leaders "asked me to impose an oil conservation fee amounting to 10 cents a gallon on gasoline ... I took the action unilaterally. No congressional action was necessary.

"Now there are pressures in Congress to take legal action to stop the imposition of this conservation fee," he complained.

Should Congress or the courts show a change of heart, Carter may get the rabbit out of the hat yet, but somehow the magic's gone out of it.

DOE points to New England program

The Los Angeles Times

One of the most successful programs ever run by the U.S. Department of Energy involved giving thousands of people in New England a small device that reduces the flow of water in their showers. Along with the flow controller, the people received a booklet explaining 11 inexpensive ways to cut the use of oil in their homes.

The program cost $2.6 million or by the department's estimate, $1 for each of the 2.6 million barrels of oil that it saved last year at a time when oil costs $30 a barrel.

But instead of being expanded nationwide, as had been proposed, the program was dropped from the department's budget this year, demonstrating the Carter administration's inconsistency about conservation as a source of energy.

After urging conservation as the centerpiece of his 1977 energy proposals, President Carter failed to get Congress to institute much to bring it about.

Last year he switched to synthetic fuels as the top priority of his new energy policy, but Congress approved less than a quarter of the $83 billion that Carter sought for that project. Now conservation is again a goal, based on Carter's proposed 10-cent-a-gallon gasoline fee, which has been blocked in federal court and which Congress is trying to kill altogether.

The history of U.S. energy policy since the Arab oil embargo of 1973-74 has been one of fits and starts that can be attributed to incomplete information, disagreement among the experts and the political difficulty of adopting measures the public views as unpleasant.

Technical, economic and political uncertainties stand in the way of deciding on an energy policy and making it a national goal.

Nonetheless, each of the presidential contenders expounds a philosophy and proposals for dealing with the shortage of energy, which is certain to get worse and which could threaten virtually every aspect of contemporary society.

"There is a cacophony of 'expert' opinion offering all different nostrums and alternatives, and you can select the one that fits your political philosophy," said Daniel Yergin, coauthor of "Energy Future," in a telephone interview.

Ronald Reagan and George Bush take the traditional Republican view: Get government out of it and let the system work.

Reagan favors removing all controls. He says if that were done, the United States would be self-sufficient in oil in five years, a promise that surprises even oil industry diehards.

Reagan's theory is that the rising price of gasoline would spur conservation, and America would produce its way out of trouble.

Bush would offer tax incentives for conservation in homes and industry. How would he encourage conservation of gasoline: "Bush favors the 55 mile-an-hour speed limit," his aide, Rob Quartel, said.

"Reagan's approach is free market laissez faire," said Quartel. "Ours is free market with incentives."

At the opposite end of the spectrum is Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., who believes that gasoline rationing, coupled with stricter controls, would hold the price to about $1 a gallon.

"The whole purpose of government is to protect people against cartels," said Jim Cubie, an energy aide to Kennedy.

Rep. John B. Anderson, R-Ill., who is running as an independent, calls for a 50-cent-a-gallon tax on gasoline, to be partially offset by a reduction in Social Security payroll taxes.

"Either we tax ourselves in the form of higher prices for our petroleum," Anderson says, "or we allow OPEC to tax us in the form of every higher and higher prices for crude oil."

Israelis hint they're miffed by Sadat

By The Associated Press

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's switch against immediate resumption of talks on Palestinian autonomy was called "incomprehensible" today by Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Begin and other officials in Jerusalem hinted that they were piqued by Cairo's decision and that Israel now wanted to set its own conditions for starting the talks again.

Sadat announced Wednesday that Egypt was willing to rejoin the negotiations that were broken off May 8, even though he said the gap on basic issues was "formidable." After a top level strategy meeting Thursday, however, Sadat changed his mind.

He told reporters today that the reason for the reversal was a proposal by the Israeli parliament that the Arab sector of Jerusalem become part of the capital of the Jewish state.

"The atmosphere for reaching a just settlement is undermined," Sadat said.

"It's incomprehensible," Begin said of Cairo's moves. "Everybody was taken by surprise, both the Americans and the Israelis, by the latest announcement" from Egypt.

Begin spoke to reporters after seeing U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis, who said he hoped the negotiations would resume in a "reasonable time" but offered no clarification of Cairo's move.

School kids salute mountain man

He says he'd run from flowing lava

BROOKS, Ore. (AP) — Harry Truman, the mountain man of Mount St. Helens, dropped in by helicopter Wednesday to visit elementary students at Clear Lake School.

"Do you know when the lava will come?" asked one of the 110 pupils at the elementary school in the community some five miles north of Salem.

"I wish I did, because I would run," said the feisty Truman, who admits to being older than 80.

"I'm going to tear down the hill as fast as I can."

Truman visited the school to thank students for the letters they sent him after he became a media star when the volcano came to life.

He has operated a resort at Spirit Lake at the northern base of St. Helens for 50 years and has refused to leave his home despite daily rumblings and occaasional eruptions from the volcano.

"There are dozens of quakes every damn minute. There is never a dull moment," he told the students.

"About the time things settle down, here comes one of those babies," he said.

"There are dozens of quakes every damn minute. There is never a dull moment. About the time things settle down, here comes one of those babies."

Truman made the trip in a helicopter provided by National Geographic magazine, which has been photographing the mountain.

Truman said he would have visited sooner but that he doesn't like to drive through Portland.

Dwight Reber of Aurora, pilot for the trip, said Truman arrived with only 10 minutes' notice to the school so the visit wouldn't attract an army of reporters and photgraphers.

Clear Lake Principal Kate Mathews said she saw excerpts from some of the letters in an Associated Press story in a Salem newspaper.

"That's when we knew you wanted to come and visit," she said.

"You'd be surprised what a hit those letters made in my kitchen," Truamn told the children.

"Every mother and father cried."

Home building lowest since World War II

WASHINGTON (AP) — New-home construction has plummeted to the lowest rate since World War II, and even the recent, sharp drop in mortgage rates will not revive the beleaguered housing industry anytime soon, builders said today.

Government figures for housing starts in April, being released later today, should show the annual construction rate falling to as low as 800,000 units, said Merrill Butler, a California contractor and president of the National Association of Home Builders.

In March, housing starts fell 22 percent to an annual rate of 1.04 million units. That was 42 percent below March 1979 levels, the Commerce Department said.

About 2.3 million housing units must be built to keep up with demand, the home builders' association says. "To say the present situation is catastrophic would not be an understatement," Butler said.

Butler said unemployment in the housing industry has approached 25 percent, compared with a national rate of 7 percent. Payrolls are down 50 percent, he added.

"Many builders are on the verge of bankruptcy," he told reporters.

The dramatic plunge in housing starts is the result of tight monetary policies adopted by the Carter administration and Federal Reserve Board to fight inflation.

The board last October raised a key lending rate — making funds more expensive to banks — and changed it procedure for monitoring the money supply.

The central bank moved again in mid-February and mid-March to make money more expensive to borrow. In addition, new controls were imposed on consumer and bank credit.

Consequently, mortgage rates rose swiftly to 17 percent and 18 percent, virtually shutting down the housing market.

In recent weeks, however, rates have fallen to as low as 12.5 percent at some financial institutions, as the nation's economy has been enveloped in recession.

Butler said this is encouraging news for the housing industry but that it will not spur either many sales or new construction.

"This rate plunge is occurring only in some parts of the country," he said. "And frankly, the rate is not low enough to ignite a lot of sales. It must get into the 11 percent (range) before the housing market gets back on its feet."

"Don't look for any (spurt in) starts until late 1980 or early 1981," Butler said. Builders will wait until they are certain sales contracts are being closed and inventories of unsold houses are depleted.

Currently, the housing inventory stands at about 372,000 units. At the present sales rate, it would take builders about 10 months to work down that supply, Butler said. In good times, it would only about 4 months.

He said many people remain reluctant to buy a home because they hope rates will fall even more.

And offsetting the rate drop is the developing recession. "Builders report that homebuyers' confidence in the economy is down. They're worried about layoffs," Butler said.

The unemployment rate in April rose from 6.2 percent to 7 while industrial production and retail sales plunged. All this indicates a continued slowdown, with many analysts now saying the recession could be worse than the last one in 1973-75.

U.S. says Sears' claim misrepresented washer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sears, Roebuck and Co. falsely claimed its dishwashers make unnecessary prior rinsing or scraping of dishes, the Federal Trade Commission ruled today.

Sears, the nation's largest retailer and biggest marketer of household dishwashers, sells the Kenmore and Lady Kenmore brands.

The $8 million broadcast and print ad campaign made such claims as "now's the time to really clean up during Sears' gigantic dishwasher sale. With a Kenmore you'll never have to scrape or rinse again" and "Sears Lady Kenmore. The do it yourself dishwasher. No scraping. No pre-rinsing."

The opinion by Commissioner Paul Rand Dixon said the campaign lasted three to four years and that "even at the time that the no-scrape, pre-rinse claim was first disseminated, Sears lacked substantiation or a reasonable basis for making it.

"Indeed, if anything, the tests purportedly relied upon by Sears at the time that it made its claim demonstrated precisely the reverse — that the Lady Kenmore could not ensure the consumer 'would never have to scrape or rinse again,'" the commission said.

In Chicago, Sears said it will appeal the decision to a federal appeals court.

Answers to yesterday's puzzles

Here are the answers to puzzles that appeared on Page 3D of yesterday's Reporter-Telegram.

The wrong letter, obviously, is the first X in the answer. It should, of course, be a W. The sum, clearly, is 155,622,272. That's enough. Figure out for yourself the three numbers that add up to that.

Oh, yes, about those horses. Borrow a horse from a neighbor and make the division among 18 horses: nine, six and two. That adds up to 17. Just right. Return the borrowed horse. Simple.

Without Kareem, even Magic may not be enough

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Can the Los Angeles Lakers win without Kareem Abdul-Jabbar? "He's our offense, he's our defense," said Lakers guard Earvin "Magic" Johnson. "He's the man we go to when we're in trouble."

But the Lakers won't have the 7-foot-2 Abdul-Jabbar to go to tonight when they take on the Philadelphia 76ers in the sixth game of the National Basketball Association championship series.

Abdul-Jabbar is back in Los Angeles nursing the sprained left ankle he suffered in Wednesday night's 108-103 victory that gave Los Angeles a 3-2 lead in the best-of-seven playoff finals. Postgame X-rays were negative and Abdul-Jabbar was supposed to accompany the team here, but when the Lakers' flight took off Thursday afternoon, it took off without Abdul-Jabbar.

"It is extremely doubtful that Kareem would be able to play," said Dr. Robert Kerlan, the Lakers' team physician, who reported the ankle had swolen and become stiff overnight. "By keeping him in Los Angeles and treating him here, he will be much better prepared to play on Sunday if that game is necessary."

But Kerlan said the odds of Abdul-Jabbar playing on Sunday are only 50-50 at this point.

A win tonight and the Lakers don't have to worry about Sunday — they'd be wearing the NBA crown for the first time since 1972. But winning without Abdul-Jabbar, a five-time most valuable player and the most dominating force in the game, won't be easy.

Especially since it's a must-win situation for the Sixers, who will have a noisy crowd of 18,276 at the Spectrum rooting them on.

"There's no tomorrow for us," said Philadelphia guard Henry Bibby. "Either we win or else. And we're not ready for anything else yet."

Los Angeles survived without Abdul-Jabbar for the final 3:58 of the third period Wednesday night, even extending its lead from two points to eight.

"But it's a completely different thing to be without him for 48 minutes instead of just four," observed Doug Collins, the Sixers' injured guard.

If it's war Flyers want...

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — For more than one and a half games, the National Hockey League championship series sat smoldering like a forgotten stew on a kitchen stove. The New York Islanders and Philadelphia Flyers — two notably physical teams — had been very nice to each other in New York's series-opening overtime victory. Then it boiled over.

It may have been because, by the time the ugliness started at 12:54 of the second period, the Flyers already led 5-2 on the way to a series-tying 8-3 triumph Thursday night. It may have been because, "Possibly we took everything too light. We weren't hungry enough," as Islanders Coach Al Arbour put it.

Whatever the real cause and effect, be it the loss they suffered or the punishment they took, the New York dressing room had all the frustrated fury of a rush-hour traffic jam.

"Maybe the referees were intimidated in this building, but running after a guy after he passes the puck, like the Flyers do, is ridiculous," said goalie Bill Smith, ineffective the two periods he played before being replaced by Glenn Resch. "If they keep doing it, our guys are going to have to retaliate. They are going to have to put their sticks up — hold their sticks up to protect themselves in the next game. Otherwise, I'm afraid someone will get hurt."

Arbour, who put an abrupt end to his post-game remarks by walking away from his interviewers, later charged into the dressing room and bellowed an unprintable characterization of the winners. He added, "All they (the Flyers) do is wield their sticks."

But that, as mentioned earlier, came after Philadelphia had taken command on the first of three Paul Holmgren goals and the first of three Bobby Clarke assists that made the veteran center only the 15th player in Stanley Cup history to reach the 100-point playoff plateau.

What happened was Philadelphia began to force the play, put pressure on the New York defense and rushed the Islanders into plays they did not want to make — aspects missing from the Flyers' execution in the opener. They got three goals from their power play (two by Holmgren) and killed all but two of their eight manpower disadvantages.

Highlights of the victory were Bill Barber's game-winning goal at 1:06 of the second period — the 40th tally of his playoff career and one of eight scoring points recorded by his line with Clarke, who also scored a goal, and Reggie Leach.

All that, however, shared the attention with the rough stuff that started in earnest when Philadelphia's Brian Propp nearly beheaded defenseman Bob Lorimer with his stick at 12:54 of the second period. Just 1:18 later, Barber — chasing the puck behind the net — was struck in the chest by Smith's ubiquitous stick. Barber slashed back in retaliation, then New York defenseman Gord Lane slashed Barber.

In the third, Smith — by now relegated to the bench to watch Resch give up a goal to Tom Gorence on the first shot he faced — got into a row with Holmgren. With Resch in goal, Smith was given the walkie-tal-

Dickey leaves Baltimore camp for SWC meet

WACO, Texas (AP) — Curtis Dickey scrimmmaged during spring training one day several years ago then showed up to capture a 100-meter race the next.

Worried Texas A&M Coach Charlie Thomas hopes his big hoss can pull off the equivalent of the aforementioned feat beginning today in the 65th annual Southwest Conference Track and Field Championships.

Dickey, the No. 1 draft choice of the Baltimore Colts, has been going through rookie camp all week for the National Football League team. There has been a lot of non-track type running. No scrimmaging but a different strain on Dickey's already overtaxed right knee.

Both sprint aces Dickey and Leslie Kerr have been bothered with problems in the muscles behind their right knees.

Preliminaries in the 100-meter dash were set for this afternoon to answer the big question on Dickey.

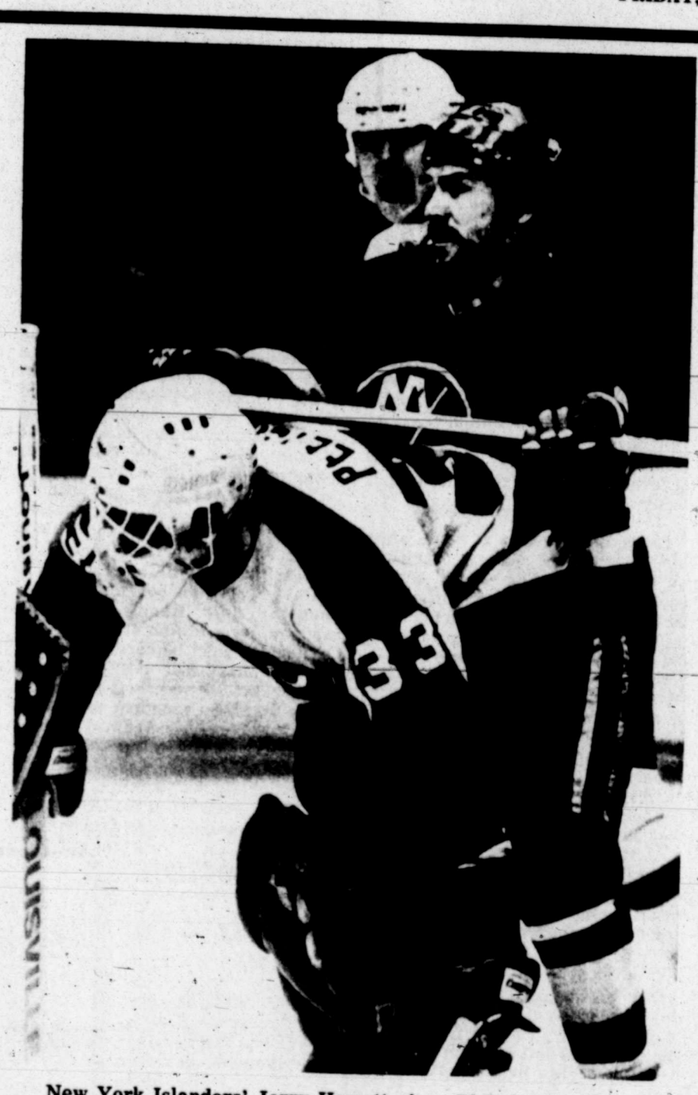

Houston's Carl Lewis was to provide the biggest challenge followed by the return of injured Texas sprinters Herkie Walls, Fred Acorn and Wayne Johnson.

The 400-meter dash was supposed to belong to Kerr but he hurt himself in California last week and now it's wide open in that event this afternoon.

Kerr, who won this event as a freshman and a sophomore, was to be tested by teammate Steve Willis, Arkansas' Stanley Redwine, the three Texas runners, Texas Tech's Edwin Newsom, and Texas Christian's Festus Oginfeyimi and Andre Newbold.

The Texas Aggies were favored to upset defending champion Texas with Houston the darkhorse.

"Dickey is the key," said Baylor Coach Clyde Hart. "If he's healthy, the Aggies ought to win it.

New York Islanders' Jerry Howatt gives Philadelphia Flyers goalie Pete Peeters the back of his stick as emotions climbed toward boiling point when Flyers tied Stanley Cup playoffs at 1-1 Thursday with 8-3 win. (AP Laserphoto)

Palm Beach clinches team title

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

Heavy rains and continual postponements did little to keep high drama from creeping on the scene Thursday at Midland College as the Women's Junior College National Tennis Championships managed to get through the semifinals.

Singles play was held up until 2 p.m. after heavy rains and the doubles competition was interupted during play with a brief afternoon shower. It took until 7:45 p.m. to get through it all, but when it did finally close, Palm Beach was resting a little easier.

Palm Beach ensured themselves of the team championship with 19 points, but they didn't exactly do it on their own Thursday. Palm Beach had a singles and doubles entry left Thursday, but neither came away with a victory. That opened the door for a valiant effort by Tyler Junior College to make a run of their own at the title.

Palm Beach could have sewed up the title with a victory in the singles semifinals, but Alexi Beggs, seeded sixth, dropped a hard fought 6-3, 7-6 decision to No. 1 seed Mary Renaud of Navarro.

Then in the doubles competition where Tyler had two teams left, Palm Beach again faced the opportunity of winning the title by defeating the Tyler team of Janet Kniffen and Robin Fall. But Beggs and partner Christy Turdo fell, 2-6, 6-0, 6-3. Beggs and Turdo won the first set before the rains, but Kniffen and Fall roared back after the hour delay to take straight sets.

That left the possibility for Tyler to tie for the team championship by winning the other doubles match behind Lori Zacharias and Joni Sterling, the former state champion from Andrews. But Navarro's team of Renaud and Nora Moreno handed Palm Beach the outright title by defeating Zacharias and Sterling, 7-6, 6-4. The Tyler team led the first set 5-2 before the rain, but ended up losing on the tie breaker. They were then up 4-2 in the second set before losing 6-4.

Tyler came away with 17 points and a chance to earn another one from Kniffen and Fall, but that will still be one point shy. Broward has 16 points with a chance to win one more while Midland College and NMMI are through with 15. Navarro has 15 points, but still can win two more today in the finals.

In the singles play Thursday, Midland College upstart Debbie Smith lost a 6-1, 6-0 quickie to Broward's Wendy Fine. Smith, however, was probably the surprise of the tournament since she did reach the semifinals after being seeded 11th in the tournament.

So Fine met Renaud for the singles title today at 9 a.m. while Navarro and Tyler were to meet for the doubles crown at 1 p.m.

Renaud, who will be in both finals, is only a freshman and has lost only two sets the entire year. She has not lost a set in the tournament, but she still thinks the tournament has been tough.

"I think it was very hard to get to the finals. I was down 4-2 in the tiebreaker against Beggs, but managed to come back and win. I was fortunate," Renaud said.

Fine, who is a sophomore, also has not lost a set in the tournament and is unbeaten the year also. This finals matchup is no great surprise because Fine is the No. 2 seed and Renaud the top seed.

"I was very surprised that I got through the field as easily as I did," Fine noted. "I think I had the best part of the draw. For instance, Beggs met some very stiff competition along the way."

Cubs, Drillers try again tonight

Rained out Thursday night, the Midland Cubs and Tulsa Drillers try again tonight at 7:30 with a series-opening Two-Bit Beer Night game in the first clash of Texas League East vs. West.

Thursday's game will be made up as part of a doubleheader starting at 6:30 p.m. Saturday. Since this is the only trip to Midland by the Texas Rangers' farm club, the games will have to be made up in this series or be played in Tulsa.

Saturday's promotion will be Commercial Bank Night and a post-game Dash for Cash. Sunday's game will feature a marathon runs of 5,000 meters and a mile for the benefit of the American Heart Association. The runs begin at 5:30 p.m. with registration at 4:30. Sunday's game will start at 6:30 p.m.

Tulsa is led into Midland by Jerry Don Gleaton, former University of Texas All-America, which might set up a Southwest Conference duel with Midland's Jon Perlman, 3-3, Chicago's first round draft choice last June out of Baylor.

Hurls Bosox to 6-2 win; Chisox trip Mariners

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Jack Billingham has a new lease on his baseball life but in a way it seemed like old times. "I'm 37 years old and I felt like I was 21," Billingham said after making his debut with Boston Thursday night — he previously pitched for Los Angeles, Houston, Cincinnati and Detroit — and hurling five effective if inelegant innings as the Red Sox whipped the Cleveland Indians 6-2.

"Any time you join a new team it's like that. You want to impress them," he added.

And there was Billingham's old colleague Tony Perez, one day past his 38th birthday, driving in the runs just like he did when they were teammates in Cincinnati for six years. Perez walked and scored on Carlton Fisk's two-run triple during a three-run rally in the second inning, doubled a run across in the third and socked a two-run homer in the eighth.

Billingham, who was acquired from Detroit earlier in the week, allowed two runs on five hits while walking four but picked up the victory with help from Dick Drago. The veteran right-hander gave up two runs in the first inning, then stranded runners in scoring postiion in three of the next four innings.

"We wanted Billingham to pitch five innings and Drago four and it worked out perfectly," said Manager Don Zimmer.

Blue Jays 1, Mariners 0—Jim Clancy pitched a three-hitter, and Barry Bonnell broke an 0-for-19 slump with a run-scoring single in the second inning. Clancy outdueled Floyd Bannister, who allowed only four hits. Toronto scored when Damaso Garcia singled, stole second and came home on Bonnell's single. Seattle's only hits were third-inning singles by Bob Stinson and Dan Meyer and a ninth-inning single by Meyer.

White Sox 6, Brewers 4—Pinch hitter Wayne Nordhagen capped a four-run seventh inning with a three-run double, Claudell Washington drilled a pair of run-scoring singles and Chet Lemon homered to lead Chicago. With the White Sox leading 2-1 in the seventh, Bob Molinaro tripled and scored Washington's single and two walks loaded the bases. Bob McClure relieved Lary Sorensen and Nordhagen looped his bases-clearing double down the right field line.

"The only thing I could do with that pitch was hit it like I did — bad," Nordhagen said. "I didn't even see the pitch because it came out of the shirts in the bleachers and seemed to kind of tail in on me. I was swinging blind. It jammed me and I didn't even see it."

Pirates 3, Giants 2—Ed Ott led off the 12th with a single off Tom Griffin, advanced to second on Dale Berra's sacrifice and scored on Bill Madlock's ground single up the middle as the Pirates posted their sixth victory of the season in their final turn at bat. Winner Enrique Romo worked out of a one-out, bases-loaded jam in the bottom of the 11th. The Giants went ahead 2-1 in the seventh on Jack Clark's two-run homer but the Pirates tied it in the eighth on a walk, Dave Parker's single and Bill Robinson's sacrifice fly.

Padres 2, Cardinals 1—Dave Winfield's double and a single by Willie Montanez produced the winning run in the seventh inning against Pete Vuckovich. Winner John Curtis went the first seven innings, allowing seven hits before giving way to Rollie Fingers.

Flyers even NHL series

kie that funnels information from assistant coach Bill MacMillan to Arbour on the bench. Holmgren later charged Smith was punching at him with the walkie-talkie firmly in his grasp.

"I know I'm not the cleanest player in the NHL," admitted Smith, displaying a firm grasp of the obvious.

Later, New York's Duane Sutter and the Flyers' Mel Bridgman fought and later still, Philadelphia's Behn Wilson pummeled the Islanders' Garry Howatt — ostensibly for a cross-check Howatt dealt Peeters.

In all, not a pretty game. But more of the same seems in store, if weight can be put on one of Arbour's parting shots: "If they want to make it a back-stabbing series, OK. We proved against Boston we could win that kind of series (in a brawl-marred semifinal). We'll prove we can back-stab with the best of them.

"They have a lot of spear carriers out there. Next game, we'll have some, too."

Nancy has winning urge

CLIFTON, N.J. (AP) — Nancy Lopez-Melton is itching to win another golf tournament. The LPGA's superstar is off to a slow start in 1980 — by her standards — with just one victory in nine outings.

"I'd like to win this tournament again," she said, referring to today's $125,000 LPGA Classic at the Upper Montclair Country Club. She is the two-time defending champion.

Lopez-Melton is fourth on the money list with $67,083, hardly a slump. But she claims not to be hitting the ball well the last month, and it's been seven weeks since her one and only victory. She admits, at the age of 23, that the youthful enthusiasm that marked her play the past two years has been absent.

"Before I met Tim (husband Tim Melton) I was saying that I want to play golf forever.

Cubs' La Vigne drew tough cage assignment

By TED BATTLES

While at the University of Connecticut, 6-3 Randy La Vigne drew the unenviable assignment of guarding Rhode Island's 6-7 Sly Williams in the finals of the 1979 New England basketball championships.

It wasn't easy, trying to hold the Rams' All-America in check, but Randy outslicked Sly, holding him to four points as Connecticut went on to a 58-50 victory.

"Williams is lefthanded...does everything with his left hand, so I just overplayed him to his left. Of course, he can still shoot over you, but I had some help and it worked out." the Midland Cubs' outfielder said.

In the next round, the UConns and La Vigne weren't as lucky against Syracuse as Randy was handcuffed by three personal fouls called by some myopic official named Bob Hartsfield.

When the Cubs made the 23-year-old from Weathersfield, Conn., their seventh draft pick last June, La Vigne was sent to Geneva of the New York-Pennsylvania League where his manager was Bob Hartsfield.

Randy La Vigne...swat that Fly.

If there were any hard feelings they didn't show. La Vigne led the league with 10 homers, assists by an outfielder with 13 and wound up fourth in total bases with 122.

As for a choice between baseball and basketball, Randy picked baseball. "I wasn't drafted by any NBA teams, although I could have reported to a tryout camp and maybe made it, but I figured my future was in baseball."

Although he went to Connecticut on a basketball scholarship, Randy compiled impressive baseball statistics which did not go unnoticed by the scouts. As a sophomore he helped lead UConn to the Yankee Conference championship with a .303 average in 31 games. As a junior, he upped the average to .351 with nine doubles, three triples, five homers and 27 rbi to make All-Yankee Conference and NCAA Division I All-New England.

But he saved the best for last. As a senior in 1979, Randy batted .366 and set UC records for 41 runs, 56 hits, 14 doubles eight homers and 36 rbi. His 104 total bases was a New England record. It was the kind of stick work that led Conneticut to the College World Series and gained Randy a third team berth on the College All-America.

Graduating with a B.S. in Accounting, La Vigne earned the UC Athletic Medallion and Eastern College Athletic Conference Medal of Honor as the university's outstanding student-athlete.

La Vigne's baseball development was helped by a couple of summers in the Cape Cod League with the Cotuit Kettleers. In 1978, he lead the league with a .370 average, which landed him on the league all-star team. He also won the league sportsmanship award.

Randy's athletic talents drew early attention when he won the national Hit-Run-Throw contest in Yankee Stadium as an 11-year-old.

While Randy has struggled at times in his first year in the Texas League, that's not unusual for a rookie. Carlos Lezcano batted .231 for Midland fresh off the Florida State campus, but look where he is now.

If Midland played El Paso every day, La Vigne might be on his way to Wichita by now. He has hit all five of his homers against Diablo pitching.

Manager Randy Hundley feels La Vigne is the one the Cubs must depend on for power. "But I don't know how many homers he will hit since he is more of a line drive hitter," says the Midland manager.

Henderson now a 49er

DALLAS (AP) — Thomas "Hollywood" Henderson, the flamboyant linebacker fired by the Dallas Cowboys and now headed for San Francisco, says he is "still a great football player," and he looks forward to playing for the 49ers.

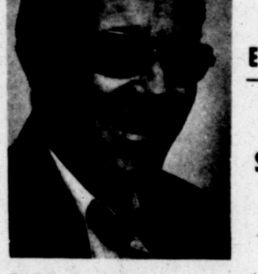

"I'm very flattered about it and very excited that someone like (San Francisco) Coach Bill Walsh would make me feel like a man and feel good," Henderson said.

Cowboys spokesman Greg Aiello announced Thursday that Dallas traded Henderson to San Francisco for an undisclosed 1981 draft choice.

"I think they (the Cowboys) probably got a box of tape," Henderson said after the announcement.

Aiello said the deal was unconditional, that Dallas got a draft choice even if San Francisco "cut Henderson tomorrow."

However, Cowboys player personnel director Gil Brandt said certain conditions will determine how high the draft choice will be. He said is Henderson does certain things the draft choice will be higher, if not, it likely will be a middle-round selection.

It takes Olympic conditioning to interview Bill Buckner

Los Angeles Times

To interview the Cubs' Billy Buckner, you have to get ready for it like running the Olympic mile. What is needed is a new pair of Adidas, enlarged lungs, a lower pulse rate and a finishing kick. It helps if you sleep with your clothes on and slide down a pole to get to your interview quicker.

Bill Buckner is never still. He makes even Pete Rose look like a cigar store Indian. Buckner swoops into a dressing room like a flight of doves. He immediately looks for things to do. If the phone is not engaged, he charges to it, picks it up and calls somebody, Lord knows who. Maybe the White House. He snatches open mail and reads it on a dead run.

He checks the comp tickets he has left, then rushes to the trainer's room where he goes through more rituals than a doctor scrubbing up for major surgery. He doesn't walk, he darts. It is like interviewing the drum major of a fast-stepping parade. He talks like something coming from a jammed shortwave radio from a spy in the Balkans whose transmission keeps being interrupted.

"WHY, uh, did Herman Franks say he, uh, disliked me? Well (excuse me, I got to see this thing, there! That's OK!) Now, what was your question again? Oh, yes, Herman Franks ... Well, Herman said he thought I was jealous of Dave Kingman ... Excuse me, could we finish this later? You see I gotta ... What? Telephone for me? Wait a minute ... Oh, I think Herman was disappointed about a lot of things ... We got along OK ... Was I jealous of Kingman? Naw, I didn't know whether to laugh or be sorry for Herman ... Look, can I come right back? You see, I have to ... I don't hold anything against Herman ... Look, would you mind? I gotta take batting practice ..."

AT THE batting cage Buckner hastily wipes a bat handle with a resined rag, flops to the ground, begins knee-bending exercises, jumps up, runs into the cage. "Oh, yes, I'm having a good year (smack!), I'm seeing the ball good (smack!), sure this could be the best Chicago team ever (smack!), I like Chicago (smack), I have a condominium downtown (Smack!), and a ranch in Idaho, (Smack!), my brothers run it in season (Smack!)"

The conversation is like a man-in-the-street interview in the middle of Times Square during rush hour, or the pilot-to-tower transmission of a plane in trouble.

Buckner dashes around the bases, then hurries down the ramp to get a glove. He walks like a man leaving the scene of a crime and trying not to run, looking like one of those speeded-up reels of Chaplin movies.

This young man in a hurry even gulps his food. He doesn't play first base, he paces it. He reminds you of a caged animal tied to the bag on a short chain.

A DOZEN years ago Billy Buck was a star member of that famous group of L.A. Dodger youngsters the press called "Kiddie Korps." Baseball's Class of '68 was like a Harvard group of baccalaureates that would produce a secretary of state, two congressmen, a senator or a President, and a justice of the Supreme Court. It was the group of Garvey, Cey, Russell, Lopes, Ted Sizemore, Billy Grabarkewitz, Billy Buckner -- with one or two exceptions, a National League All-Str team. Certainly an all-rookie team. And many people considered Buckner the best of the lot. Among these was Ted Williams. "Bill Buckner," the great man intoned, "has a chance to become the next .400 hitter. He's got the best swing of any young hitter I've ever seen."

Sixty colleges wanted Buckner when he was in high school for football. A dozen major legaue teams wanted him for baseball. The Dodgers got him. Buckner batted .344 for Ogden, .307 for Albuquerque, and .335 for Spokane. Then he batted .319 and .314 for the Dodgers and led them to the '74 pennant and World Series where, characteristically in a hurry, he got thrown out at third on the pivotal play of that tournament.

Then, Buckner got a severely sprained ankle. Typically impatient, he ran it into a serious injury that all but immobilized the foot and ultimately required surgery. Then he was traded to the Cubs for Rick Monday. Once one of the best runners in the game (he stole 31 bases in 1974) Billy Buckner stopped getting leg hits. So he never did get to hit .400, but he was batting .394 as the season moved through the second week of May this year when Dodger pitching threw a couple of 0-for-4's at him. This is not usual. Buckner batted .340 against L.A. last year and usually rips them up.

If Billy Buck does win the batting championship or hits .400 this year, to interview him the networks may have to bring in barricades, bullhorns, remote crew and bloodhounds, rope off the area where he is holed up and communicate with him like on ship-to-shore radio. They'll need at least 10 camera locations. Otherwise, Billy is not going to be on screen long enough for people to know what color his hair is.

Freeze on free agents could delay player strike

By HAL BOCK

NEW YORK (AP) — If management is willing to accept a two-year freeze on its demands for free agent compensation, the lingering baseball contract dispute may be headed for settlement.

That is the essence of a bold offer made by Marvin Miller, executive director of the Major League Players Association, Thursday in an effort to reach an agreement with Ray Grebey and the negotiators for the club owners.

Miller said the two sides are close on a number of issues — close enough for him to make this proposal. If agreement can be reached on those peripheral issues — health and safety, pensions, minimum salaries, etc. — in the next few days, the players will withdraw all of their demands in the areas of free agency and the reserve clause and participate in a two-year joint study of the question.

If, in 1981, management still feels a problem with the current free agent system, the owners could then unilaterally demand that contract negotiations be reopened at that time.

What Miller is suggesting is to put the most troublesome issue in these negotiations — management's demands for player compensation for free agent signings — on hold for two years. In exchange for that, the players would accept status quo in the free agent-reserve areas.

That means maintaining the six-year waiting period before a player could be eligible for free agency instead of switching to the four or five years which the players have proposed. It would also postpone any changes on matters such as player eligibility for total free agency, limiting the number of rounds in the re-entry draft, the time when a player may demand a trade and other related issues.

By definition, however, it also means that management must accept a two-year hold before it can get compensation and that demand has been a cornerstone of the owners' position since these difficult negotiations began last winter.

"It is our judgment that a perfectly respectable agreement can be made on that basis," Miller said. "It's a compromise proposal. Baseball operated for 80 years under the old reserve system and it has had the revised system for only four years. That's miniscule by comparison. The parties would be well advised to get four more years of experience and look at the results."

Santa Fe, Southern Pacific to merge

CHICAGO (AP) — Two major competing Western railways — Santa Fe Industries Inc. and the Southern Pacific Co. — have proposed a $1.1 billion merger that would create a new 25,000-mile railroad, extending from the West Coast to Chicago and south to the Gulf of Mexico.

The proposed merger was worked out over four months of negotiations and now is subject to approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

But John S. Reed, chairman and chief executive officer of Santa Fe, said Thursday the company is "armed with legal opinions" indicating the proposed merger will not violate antitrust laws.

Reed etimated the total value of the merger at about $1.2 billion, which works out to about $44.50 a share. But analysts said the value was closer to $41.50 a share, or about $1.1 billion.

Under the proposal, Southern Pacific shareholders will receive stock in Santa Fe, the surviving company, which will be renamed Santa Fe Pacific Industries Inc.

In a joint statement, Reed and B.F. Biaggini, chairman of Southern Pacific, said the move was necessary to retain the firms' competitive positions "in an environment wherein major railroad combinations are in various stages of formation."

They said strengthening of their services will assure a healthy and balanced competition in the transcontinental freight market and in the Gulf Coast and Southwest areas.

It could be two years or more before final approval is obtained.

Southern Pacific stock plummeted $4 a share to close at $35 a share in New York Stock Exchange trading Thursday. The stock had moved up sharply earlier in the week after finishing last week at $32.875. Santa Fe stock lost 62.5 cents a share to close at $55.125 a share.

The ICC has shown increasing tolerance of rail mergers, but a Southern Pacific-Santa Fe combination may raise different antitrust questions because the roads are competitive in so many markets.

In Washington, ICC Chairman Darius Gaskins said he was "quite surprised" by the merger proposal and said it raises "questions about possible anticompetitive consequences." Mark T. Sheehan, a spokesman for the Justice Department's antitrust division, said government lawyers would study the proposal.

The ICC has approved the merger of the Burlington Northern and the St. Louis-San Francisco railways, although a federal appeals court has blocked the move pending a hearing from an appeal from the Missouri-Kansas-Taxas Railroad Co, which said it would be harmed by the merger.

The ICC also is considering a proposed merger of the Union Pacific, Missouri Pacific and Western Pacific lines.

In the proposed Santa Fe merger, the ICC could require some lines of the combined routes to be sold to competitors to preserve some competition but still allow the basic merger to proceed.

Southern Pacific and Santa Fe railroads have been competitors since the late 19th century, but both companies have since ventured far from their railroad origins into such areas as oil, coal, trucking, and forest products. Southern Pacific also operates a communications subsidiary that provides long-distance telephone service between many major cities.

For 1979, Southern Pacific reported net income of $179.9 million, or $6.67 a share, up from $116.2 million, or $4.31 per share. Revenues rose to $2.63 billion in 1979 from $2.28 billion in 1978.

IT'S IN THE BAG

NEW YORK (AP) — The world's largest Easter Egg hunt and the only event of its kind to be held in Central Park took place this year for some 5,000 children between 4 and 8 years old.

The children received free toys, balloons and prizes, which they found in plastic hosiery "eggs" donated by L'eggs Products, co-sponsor with the Epilepsy Institute here.

Food stamps will flow again in June as usual

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 21 million Americans who rely on food stamps to help feed themselves can take comfort today, assured that their subsidies will not be halted next month.

Congress gave speedy final approval Thursday to a $2.56 billion appropriation to keep the program going for at least a few more months.

The emergency appropriations was sent to President Carter to be signed into law, along with companion legislation authorizing continuation of the program for the remainder of this fiscal year and for all of fiscal 1981.

The emergency money bill passed the House, 316-56, and the Senate, 57-17.

But Congress left the future of the food stamp program in doubt by rejecting additional funds supporters insist will be needed to keep the program in business through Sept. 30, the end of the current fiscal year.

Sponsors of the move to expand and continue the program said the extra $2.56 billion probably will run out by Sept. 1. They suggested Congress will be obliged to return during the summer for another hurry-up rescue effort.

Both houses raced to meet a deadline set by Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland. The $6.2 billion previously appropriated for food stamps this fiscal year is expected to run out this month and Bergland had said he would be forced to tell the states the program would be suspended June 1 if new food stamp money was not appropriated by Thursday,

A Senate-House confererence committee acknowledged that the $2.56 billion in emergency relief it eventually agreed on almost certainly will not be enough to pay for food subsidies through the summer.

But House conferees, led by Rep. Jamie L. Whitten, D-Miss., rejected a Senate proposal to increase the supplemental appropriation by $440 million, to $3 billion.

In a compromise, the conference committee approved a non-binding pledge that said Congress is likely to provide the extra money before the end of the fiscal year.

But proponents of stricter spending controls on fobd stamps got the conference to also agree that Congress does not intend to go beyond the $3 billion mark under any circumstances.

If necessary, the committee said, Bergland should be prepared to cut back benefits to stay within that figure through September.

Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, D-Mo., predicted the nation's deepening recession and rising unemployment would force a cutback in benefits even if $3 billion was provided.

"My guess is there will be benefit reductions," he said. He added that by providing only $2.56 billion, both houses of Congress were "indulging in a mutually agreed-to deception."

Whitten refused to budge on the $2.56 billion sum, however. He said if the figure were raised, it would take money away from other extra spending Congress is considering in this fiscal year. "I promised I wouldn't go above $2.56 billion," said Whitten. "I mean to keep my word."

Sen. Henry Bellmon, R-Okla., was the chief sponsor of a proposal warning Bergland not to expect more than $3 billion in additional food stamp money this fiscal year regardless of economic conditions. He urged the Agriculture Department to look for ways of cutting fraud and overspending.

Without a ceiling, Bellmon said, "We might just as well give the key to the Treasury to the secretary of agriculture."

The companion legislation approved by Congress raises the ceiling on food stamp spending for the remainder of this year and for all of fiscal 1981 and makes various changes in food stamp regulation.

Continental to expand service

Continental Airlines has announced increased service for the Permian Basin area.

According to Charles R. Logue, Continental's regional manager, the airline will begin offering new daily round-trip service to Austin, Lubbock and Newark, N.J., from Midland Regional Airport on June 1. Departure time for Austin and Newark is at 9:10 a.m. The Lubbock flight will leave at 6:45 a.m.

The airline will add additional round-trip flights to Denver, El Paso, Tucson, Phoenix, Las Vegas and Los Angeles. Daily round-trip service to Washington, D.C., will be available with direct connections via Houston from Midland.

Logue said Continental will operate all flights with their Boeing 727s which provide each passenger with inflight stereo.

Couple wants 'Dallas' location moved

PARKER, Texas (AP) — A couple who live next to the ranch used as a setting for the television series "Dallas" are suing to force the producers to find a new location, saying their lives have been thrown into turmoil.

John and Susan Barber filed the suit in state court Wednesday asking that Lorimar Productions, CBS and Joe and Natalie Duncan, owners of the 164-acre South Fork Ranch "stop filming and find another Dallas house" for the series.

A hearing has been scheduled for Friday.

Officials of the production company and CBS could not immediately be reached for comment.

Duncan said he "would like to talk" about the suit but that his lawyer had told him not to.

The Barbers said that being the neighbor of a celebrity like J.R. Ewing, the conniving heel of the series, is no picnic, even though he is fictitious.

"If I could describe it succinctly, it's like living in a shopping center parking lot," Barber said.

"Cars coming and going, people slamming car doors and standing in the middle of the street to take pictures, airplanes buzzing the place. Even in the dead of the winter, with snow on the ground they still come. We just want it knocked off."

Recently, a newspaper published directions to the ranch, 39 miles northeast of the Dallas city limits, Barber said, and over Easter weekend, "literally thousands" drove out to gawk at the location.

Barber said "every form of transportation — except trains — come out here to look. Even military helicopters have flown over. It's like they were flying in my back door and going out the front."

Lately, he said, it has become dangerous to stand in his yard.

"We have two little girls, ages 3 and 6, and our driveway is so close to the road that it's real hazardous for them to play in the front yard," Barber said.

He started looking for a lawyer, he said, after tour buses began stopping regularly at the ranch and when he heard reports that a travel agency in Britain — where the series is extraordinarily popular — was going to arrange flying tours of "J.R. Country."

"That kind of motivated me to take some action," Barber said. "My wife was thinking about opening a Kool-aid stand."

ABC's new freak show extends to deep blue sea

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Alas, ABC's new passion for the television freak show (which wrought "That's Incredible" and the upcoming series, "Those Amazing Animals") extends even to the deep blue sea.

Sunday night, ABC offers a two-hour special called "Mysteries of the Sea," about the "breathtaking adventures and death-defying challenges" of the deep. Sort of "That's Incredible Goes to the Beach."

Actualiy, the subjects are rather interesting, if somewhat standard (great white sharks, treasure hunts and such), but the producers were afraid to leave well enough alone. Perhaps fearing their program would come off as educational (heaven forbid!), pains were taken to accentuate the weird and dangerous.

The same philosophy is what lowers "That's Incredible" from the level of human interest to the realm of the carny sideshow.

One of the "Mysteries" segments, for example, deals with a diving expedition to the North Pole. National Geographic Editor Gilbert Grosvenor and Dr. Joe MacInnis, an arctic diving expert, cut through seven feet of polar ice to dive into the frigid waters below.

They may have some reasonably sane purpose for doing this, but you'd never know it. William Holden's narration is focused on the dangers involved.

"Trapped, the divers would be entombed beneath the frozen surface of the Arctic Ocean," Holden says, and, indeed, you are positive that you'd never want to be trapped "in this tomb of intense freezing darkness."

There is a piece on an expedition whose mission was to "tag" a great white shark with a radio transmitter and learn his living habits. I think that was the mission, anyway, but it was difficult to ferret out among all the scary talk.

Mr. Holden reminded us that great whites are ugly and mean, that their nasty-looking teeth are always growing "to replace those wrenched out by the great white's ferocious feeding habits," which are thoroughly demonstrated.

Eventually, after much teasing of the sharks for good camera shots, the expedition gets around to the matter of trying to spear the transmitter into his side.

"The attempt fails," Holden tells us. Naturally. The fellow now "has" to get into one of those shark cages, for a better vantage point. Meanwhile, "a huge shark, driven to frenzy by the scent, ravenously devours the bait."

I don't remember if they ever actually speared one of the sharks, but I do remember seeing a long, ugly scar along the captain's belly, a souvenir of a past encounter with a monster from the deep. Boy, it seems dangerous, all right.

It's all kind of fun, really, if you don't mind the hype. If you do mind, watch the next Jacques Cousteau special on PBS. Same oceans, less monsters. Somehow, Jacques never learned to appreciate the circus value of his undersea world.

Barrie Youngfellow stars in O'Hara movie

She says Joan Crawford cannot be imitated

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Barrie Youngfellow knows exactly what's meant when they talk about a movie star being "inimitable."

She plays Joan Crawford in "The Scarlett O'Hara War," the second part of the "Moviola" trilogy on NBC Sunday, Monday and Tuesday nights.

"WHEN YOU PLAY SOMEBODY you look for certain things," she said. "You look for a speech pattern, you look for a walk. But you simply cannot imitate Joan Crawford."

In the movie, Miss Crawford is one of a number of top Hollywood stars vying for the role of Scarlett O'Hara in David O. Selznick's production of "Gone With the Wind" in the 1930s.

The film tells how Selznick kept the stars dangling and the public in suspense while he maneuvered to get out of a distribution deal with one studio and into another with MGM. He wanted to get MGM's biggest star, Clark Gable, to play Rhett Butler. The public demanded Gable.

THE O'HARA ROLE, OF COURSE, eventually went to Vivien Leigh, who was never mentioned during handicapping of the various candidates.

Miss Youngfellow said she read everything she could find on Joan Crawford — with the exception of "Mommie Dearest" — and watched one of her most popular movies, "The Women."

"She played Crystal in that," Miss Youngfellow said, "and they were very close to each other in desire. She was not a princess. She was a driven woman. I think she would do anything she had to do to get what she wanted. Her career was foremost in her mind."

Her principal source of information was a biography, "Joan Crawford."

"I PURPOSELY AVOIDED 'Mommie Dearest' because I wanted to go in liking this woman," she said. In that book, Miss Crawford's daughter, Christine Crawford, claimed the actress severely mistreated her children.

"Besides," said Miss Youngfellow, "that came after this period."

She said she was aided by the presence on the set of fashion designer Travilla and others who had known and worked with Miss Crawford. She also spent 2½ hours every morning in makeup and having her bright copper-red hair darkened.

"THE SCARLETT O'HARA WAR" stars Tony Curtis as Selznick; Bill Macy as his brother, agent Myron Selznick; Harold Gould as MGM head Louis B. Mayer; Sharon Gless as Carole Lombard; Edward Winter as Gable; Carrie Nye as Tallulah Bankhead; Clive Revill as Charlie Chaplin, and Gwen Humble as Paulette Goddard.

The three movies are taken from the novel "Moviola" by Garson Kanin. David L. Wolfer and Stan Margulies, who previously collaborated for the two "Roots" series, produced the films, and John Erman directed them.

The book follows Ben Farber, a fictional counterpart of Samuel Goldwyn, as he recalls famous Hollywood stories. The film series drops this device and uses only three chapters.

THE FIRST SEGMENT SUNDAY night is "This Year's Blonde," which tells of the discovery of 22-year-old Marilyn Monroe by 53-year-old agent Johnny Hyde, and their tragic love story. Constance Forslund plays Miss Monroe and Lloyd Bridges is Hyde.

The last segment Tuesday night is "Silent Lovers," about the ill-fated romance of Greta Garbo and matinee idol John Gilbert. Barry Bostwick is Gilbert and Swedish newcomer Kristina Wayborn is Miss Garbo.

Miss Youngfellow said she looked for similarities with Joan Crawford. She found they were both the same height, 5-foot-2, and they both started as dancers. They both attended Stephens College in Missouri.

A NATIVE OF CLEVELAND, Miss Youngfellow studied ballet until she chipped a bone in her foot. She was still able to dance and worked in various musicals.

She spent some time in regional theater, then quit acting to become a secretary while her husband was in law school in San Francisco. Three years later, she was divorced and playing guest roles in such TV series as "Barney Miller," "WKRP in Cincinnati," "Paris," "Trapper John" and "Three's Company."

"My years away from acting taught me that I didn't need the theater to live and be happy," she said. "I could do other things. Now I don't sit by the phone waiting for jobs. There's too much else to do. I have a boyfriend in New York and I spent a lot of my time there.

Studio considering sequel to 'Coal Miner's Daughter'

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — There was light drama at the world premiere of the movie "Coal Miner's Daughter," and it wasn't all on the screen.

Country music singer Loretta Lynn, whose rags-to-riches autobiography inspired the movie, was miffed at her resolute, good-ol'-boy husband Doolittle. Doolittle, also known as Mooney, showed up at the black-tie event after acquainting himself with a bottle. He chattered, and at times yelled, during the movie.

"I'd have hit him tonight if I'd have had my pocketbook," a peeved Miss Lynn said later. "He opened his mouth and cackled through the whole thing. I'm backward and bashful and he embarrassed me. Everyone was turnin' around and lookin' at us."

It was another minor spat in the life of the Lynns, and friends who heard her complaining just chuckled. They'd seen the film portray the obstacles the couple had overcome, so they knew this dispute was inconsequential.

The Lynns' bittersweet story has attracted lines of movie-goers across the country. Universal Pictures said it grossed $7 million during the first seven weeks of its release.

"It's the only picture released in 1980 that's still running," a Universal spokesman said in Hollywood. "It's still getting strong grosses."

A sequel is possible.

"The studio is seriously talking about Part II," David Skepner, Miss Lynn's manager, said. "Some people said they wanted to see more, but you can only put so much in two hours."

The movie has triggered increased demand for Miss Lynn's candid autobiography. The book has sold 600,000 copies since the movie's premiere, and went into its 16th printing in late April. Total paperback sales are 1.8 million.

The soundtrack from the movie is one of the top-selling country music albums in the United States, and demand for personal appearances by Miss Lynn has increased dramatically.

"My biggest problem is finding enough days in the year," Skepner said.

For those who have seen the movie, the answer to the most asked question is, Yes, it's true. She was born to a coal miner in the eastern Kentucky mountains, married at 13, had four children by the age of 18, and was encouraged to sing by her husband.

In fact, she ordered script changes to make the movie more factual.

But country music fans may be puzzled that Conway Twitty, Miss Lynn's long-time singing partner, and Crystal Gayle, her younger sister, were not mentioned.

"It's hard to boil it down to two hours," Miss Lynn said after the premiere as she posed for pictures, signed autographs and hugged friends.

Miss Lynn, in fact, drew most of the attention at the premiere. Sissy Spacek, who portrays her in the movie, sat a few seats away and courteously thanked the perfunctory well-wishers while Miss Lynn was surrounded by friends and reporters.

One of those speaking to Miss Lynn was Grand Ole Opry star Teddy Wilburn. Wilburn and his brother helped her get her career started, but their relationship ended in a contract dispute. Wilburn told her he enjoyed the movie, and she thanked him and smiled warmly.

Miss Lynn was as concerned about her mother as she was about the response to the film. Her mother, who lost a lung two years ago, attended the premiere despite steady rain.

"I was so scared she'd get cold," Miss Lynn said.

Her mother said she enjoyed the film. "Some of it was a little touching," she said.

One year ago, one of the most talked-about movies of our time opened. If you missed it then, see it now.
"A fantasy spectacle that has found its style in the taste of the dispossessed — in neon signs, graffiti, and the thrill of gaudiness. 'THE WARRIORS' is a real movie-maker's movie — like visual rock. It is mesmerizing in its intensity and bursting with energy. Hill achieves poetic power for the whole length of the movie."—Pauline Kael, The New Yorker

Ex-exchange student visits Midland family

Staff Writer

Wednesday's visit in Midland for former Midland High School foreign exchange student Ursula Sittig Krimmel was a walk down memory lane.

The former American Foreign Exchange student and her husband, Klaus, returned to Midland this week, as part of a transcontinental vacation, to visit with her host family, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Williams of 2300 North A St.

They spoke about a variety of subjects starting with their host family and ending with politics.

Ursula noted that her host brother, who was 15 in 1974, had grown up and her host sister, Pam Williams Green now living in Edmond, Okla., has a family of her own.

While she was a student at MHS in 1974, Ursula noted she was a member of the MHS golf team.

She recently passed her first law examination in Germany and she must finish an apprenticeship before she can practice law as a judge or a district attorney.

Her husband, Klaus, is a freelance journalist working for a Frankfort, Germany, radio station and is a contributor to a weekly magazine, Stern.

While travelling in the United States, he said he hopes to conduct interviews with various people in California.

In 1964, Klaus was also a foreign exchange student in Vermilion, Ohio. However, he discovered that what people say about Texans is true.

"The friendly way people have welcomed us proves that Texans are a very friendly people," Klaus said.

The Krimmels tried and liked Mexican food, but Klaus disapproves of the way beer is served in cold glasses. In Germany, he said, beer is usually served at room temperature.

Regarding world events involving the United States — particularly Afghanistan and Iran — Klaus said German reaction was generally supportive.

Germany could not be overly critical of the United States, he noted, since his country needs the support of Americans.

The boycott of the Olympic games was not well received by Germany's athletes, Klaus said. There is a fear that the games will die as a result of the boycott, he noted.

Klaus said the U.S. could have handled the Afghanistan situation better, adding that this was his way of "kindly criticizing" the president.

He endorsed economic sanctions against Iran, adding that the West needs to stand united.

Following their Midland stay, the Krimmels plan to visit Nevada, California and Florida before returning to Germany.

Judge nominee denies allegations

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Los Angeles lawyer nominated by President Carter to be a federal appeals court judge denied today that he arranged financial kickbacks in connection with union loan transactions.

"Absolutely not, never," Stephen R. Reinhardt said when asked at a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing whether he had received any such kickbacks or assisted anyone else to receive them.

Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., asked the question while presiding over a hearing on the nominations of Reinhardt and four other men from California and Texas to be federal judges.

Heflin told Reinhardt the loan transactions had been investigated by the FBI and the Justice Department at the committee's request and "they found no evidence whatsoever that you were involved in any illegal matter."

No action was taken on any of the nominations.

Reinhardt and William A. Norris, both former presidents of the Los Angeles Police Commission, are nominees to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Jerre Stockton Williams, a law professor at the University of Texas, is a nominee for the 5th U.S. Circuit of Appeals.

Windfall tax could pay national debt: Wilson

WASHINGTON (AP) - Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, wants to use all the revenue from the "windfall" tax on domestic oil production to reduce the national debt.

The congressman from Lufkin said the bill he introduced this week is "too simple and too sensible to probably receive serious attention from Congress."

The bill would put the revenue from the "windfall" tax and President Carter's proposed oil import fee into a trust fund to retire the public debt.

Wilson said Thursday that he plans to make the bill a top personal priority in the next few months, ranking it in priority with his new position on the House defense appropriations subcommittee.

The bill, he said half-jokingly, "would probably reduce inflation to zero and solve all the problems of the western world."

Wilson estimated that if his proposal were adopted the national debt would be reduced by more than 40 percent in the next 10 years.

The annual debt service or interest that the government pays therefore could be cut in 10 years from $72 billion to $30 billion, he claimed.

The East Texas congressman said he had not sought any co-sponsors yet for the bill, but he expected there will be "a great many."

Wilson predicted that his proposal would not get a favorable reception from the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee.

He suggested, however, that the House Rules Committee should be more receptive to allowing the proposal to reach the House floor as an amendment when the national debt ceiling comes up for discussion later this year.

The ways and committee estimated that $227 billion would be raised over the next 10 years from the "windfall" tax designed to reclaim revenue headed for oil companies as a result of Carter's decision to remove price controls.

Wilson said the oil industry calculates the figure as being closer to $600 billion, so he selected a $400 billion middle-of-the-road estimate for his calculations.

Other proposals have called for parts of the revenue to be used for fuel assistance for the poor, tax cuts and the development of alternative energy sources.

Marines set up quick strike force

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a new step aimed at readying U.S. troops for possible intervention in the Indian Ocean-Persian Gulf area, a California headquarters for a 12,000-man quick-reaction Marine brigade goes into operation today.

The air and ground forces assigned to the 7th Marine Amphibious Brigade Headquarters are to be ready to take off — and move into action — at short notice in case of a crisis.

As the new headquarters is being established at Twentynine Palms, Calif., supplies and equipment for are being loaded aboard supply ships and tankers which are to sail soon from Port Hueneme, Calif., and Wilmington, N.C., for the Indian Ocean, probably to the British-owned island of Diego Garcia, site of the only present U.S. military base in that area.

In a serious emergency, according to the plans, the Marine brigade would meet the supply ships at a friendly port as near as possible to the crisis scene, and several Air Force fighter squadrons from the United States would land at fields as nearby as possible.

Specific units under the new brigade headquarters will be drawn from the existing Marine force.

At present, the only U.S. ground combat troops in the Indian Ocean-Persian Gulf area are 1,800 Marines aboard a Navy amphibious task force in the Arabian Sea.
