Coast readies for storm

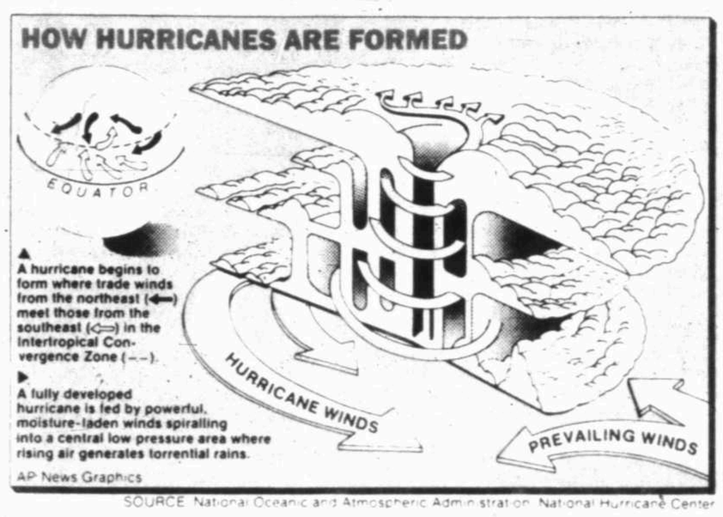

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — Coastal residents from South Carolina to Maryland boarded up homes and businesses and moved inland today ahead of Hurricane Gloria, packing near-130 mph winds and billed as one of the most powerful hurricanes to threaten the East Coast this century.

The National Weather Service issued a hurricane warning for the coastal area from Cape Romaine, S.C., to Cape Henry, Va. The bulletin said hurricane-force winds were imminent and coastal flooding of up to 12 feet over normal tides could be expected when the storm hits land as early as tonight.

Gale-force winds ahead of the hurricane's eye were expected to hit the North Carolina coast by early afternoon.

Schools were closed today in two North Carolina counties, boats were moved to safety along the entire Eastern Seaboard as far north as New Hampshire, and businesses reported heavy demand for canned food, batteries and plywood.

At 9 a.m. EDT, Gloria's eye was near latitude 30.1 north, longitude 75.7 west, or about 350 miles south of Cape Hatteras, N.C. Latest reports suggest that a gradual turn toward the north with an increase in forward speed may have begun, the National Weather Service said. It was moving north-northwest at 15 mph, with gale-force winds extending 200 miles to the north and 150 miles to the south of the eye.

SOURCE: National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, National Hurricane Center

There was a 45 percent chance that the center of the storm would pass within 65 miles of Wilmington, N.C., by 2 a.m. Friday, with Morehead City at 42 percent, Myrtle Beach, S.C., at 38 percent and Cape Hatteras at 31 percent, the weather service said.

"It is a strong storm," said Neil Frank, director of the National Hurricane Center in Miami "Everyone along the East Coast needs to pay attention to it."

"If it continues on the track it's on right now, we expect it will hit the North Carolina coast Thursday night," Gil Clark at the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla., said Wednesday.

"What effect it will have up the coast depends on how far inland it goes. If it stays right along the coastline of North Carolina, it could still be a pretty severe storm as it moves up to the Northeastern states," he said.

"If this storm continues on this track, we're looking at another Hazel," Robert E. Muller, chief meteorogist at the weather service forecasting center at Raleigh-Durham Airport, said, referring to the October 1954 storm that killed 347 people with its 150 mph winds and 17-foot tidal surge.

Gloria, once packing 150 mph winds and among only five known Category 5 storms, weakened to 130 mph as the sun set and water temperature dropped, Clark said. It still was "on the borderline between Class 3 and 4" early today.

A Class 5 hurricane on a 1-5 scale is capable of catastrophic damage.

In northern North Carolina, which juts into the Atlantic, officials ordered Carteret County schools and government offices closed today, closed schools for Dare County's 2,500 children and ordered three isolated islands evacuated.

"The Outer Banks is the most fragile piece of real estate there is," said Atlantic Beach Police Chief C.W. Pelletier. "I'd much rather evacuate and make a mistake than not evacuate and have 3,000 or 4,000 people drown."

Could oil crisis be repeated?

By MATT YANCEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — While the world has plenty of oil for the next several decades, so much is in the Middle East that the energy shocks of the 1970s are likely to be repeated, government geologists say.

In a 25-page report this week, the U.S. Geological Survey estimated there are 550 billion barrels of oil in the world still to be discovered, but that 120 billion of those barrels are in the Middle East.

Coupled with the 360 billion barrels — about half the proven global reserves — already known to be in the region, it is only a matter of time before Arab states regain control over both the supply and pricing of oil, the agency said.

"The most important conclusion of our study is that the Middle East increasingly will monopolize world petroleum supplies," said Charles Masters, the chief author of the report.

"Even with continued frontier exploration effort and success, that distribution reality is not like to change," he said. "We have but a few decades to enjoy the convenience of crude oil as our major energy fuel."

While worldwide annual production and consumption of oil has been fairly constant at 20 billion barrels a year, new discoveries have declined from a high of 35 billion barrels annually in the 1950s to between 10 billion and 15 billion barrels in recent years.

"Were it not for a world recession, we most surely would have even a greater disparity between discovery and production," the Geological Survey report said. "While it (oil) is in great supply today, there is every indication that it will become ever more difficult to obtain in years to come."

The researchers said the known reserves and new discoveries can be expected to meet the world's needs until about the middle of the next century. But, they warned, "we can anticipate many irregularities in its availability during those last decades of oil prominence."

The Geological Survey did not speculate on when the current production surplus will end and the next oil shock will occur.

However, the oil industry's American Petroleum Institute estimates that world consumption and production capacity will reach a crossing point between 1990 and 1995.

Members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) are now producing at only 50 percent of their capacity. But based on reserves, discoveries and production by non-OPEC nations, the petroleum institute expects production by OPEC members to climb back to 80 percent of their capacity sometime in the next five to 10 years.

"That's where we got into trouble the last time," said Charles DiBona, the institute's president and formerly a key White House energy adviser during the 1973-74 oil shock. "We don't know whether that will occur in 1990 or 1995, but it will be in that range."

Masters said an awareness of the disruptions looming over the horizon may be a benefit.

"Early warnings may coax us into preparing for the longer term future instead of just waiting for a surprise in blissful ignorance," he said. "The real alternatives to petroleum are coal and uranium."

Decision due Nov. 1 on Texas oil suit

BEAUMONT (AP) — A federal magistrate says he will decide by Nov. 1 whether to dismiss two lawsuits in which thousands of people claim they are entitled to royalties from the legendary Spindletop oil field.

At stake are billions — possibly trillions — of proceeds stemming from the gusher credited with launching the Texas oil boom in 1901.

Five oil companies named as defendants in the suits are asking U.S. District Judge Joe Fisher to drop the litigation and contend the royalty claims were filed too late.

U.S. Magristrate Earl Hines said he will make a recommendation by Nov. 1 to Fisher, who then will make the official ruling on the dismissal requests.

The lawsuits, like one dismissed by Fisher in March, contend the descendants of a man named James Meadors — sometimes spelled Meadows, Meddors, Medders or any one of several other ways — should have been getting proceeds from Spindletop royalties since 1911, when Meadors allegedly bought an interest in the field.

Mexico City fears time running out

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Three babies found alive in the rubble of a hospital rekindled hopes more survivors of Mexico's killer earthquakes could be found, but officials said time was quickly running out.

Late Wednesday, Mayor Ramon Aguirre's office said officials had confirmed more than 4,000 people died in a great earthquake last Thursday that measured 8.1 on the Richter scale, and a second quake the following day that registered 7.5.

Police said 4,596 people had been killed. There was no immediate explanation for the different figures.

Officials originally said the quakes measured 7.8 and 7.3, but changed the figures based on readings from several different sources.

Aquirre's office has said 417 buildings damaged in the back-to-back quakes will have to be razed. On Wednesday, President Miguel de la Madrid met with city officials to begin a review of construction codes, land use and building density.

Aguirre estimated 1,500 people were still entombed under toppled hotels, office buildings and residences, and hopes some may still be living brightened when three infant girls were found alive in the ruins of the 12-story Juarez Hospital.

The three babies, whom doctors said had been born on the eve of the Thursday quake, were found by rescue teams within a space of about 2½ hours late Wednesday and were reported in good condition early today.

Once removed from the debris, the newborns were wrapped in blankets, placed in incubators and taken by ambulance to another hospital.

Shortly after midnight, rescuers at the Juarez site also recovered a woman patient, identified by doctors as Rubalcad Pena. She was found apart from the infants.

"I still have some friends up there. I am just hoping, hoping," said hospital orderly Jose Luis Negrete, tears rolling down his face. The Juarez Hospital collapsed last Thursday with hundreds of patients and staff members inside.

Rescue work continued across the ravaged city, but officials expressed concern that many people entombed under crumbled buildings had been buried too long to have survived.

"People can live five to six days, but there are extreme cases of people in good physical condition or who had taken large amounts of liquids who live longer. I think we are reaching the limit," said Dr. Jesus Aguilar Rodriguez, director of Juarez Hospital.

Eagle may contest decision for FDIC

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Eagle Properties Ltd. may fire up its judicial rights to contest a $32 million federal judgment against Eagle and in favor of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

The seven partners in the enterprise to buy the 24-story First National Bank Building for $75 million in late 1982 may be taking its federal case to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

In the case of the FDIC versus Eagle, U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton ruled in favor of the FDIC and ordered that the partnership pay FDIC $25 million or else be entitled to foreclosure on its second deed of trust on the building. The first deed of trust is held by RepublicBank First National Midland — holder of $50 million in Eagle notes on the building owned by the Eagle partnership of oil men and former FNB shareholders: Thomas C. "Tom" Brown, M.W. "Buddy" Branuum, J.L. Davis, Charles R. Perry, Gene Sledge, Clint Hurt and Charles Lawrence. Brown and Branum are Eagle general partners; the others are limited partners.

Eagle defense attorney Seagal V. Wheatley of San Antonio said the length — 57 pages — of Bunton's opinion "is indicative that there was a number of very complex issues in the case.

"And some of those are very fundamental banking-law questions that are going to impact on the industry," Seagal said Wednesday.

"I think the seriousness of the issues really need appellate clarifications so that there will be uniform stability in the banking system."

Seagal said the Eagle partners were "disappointed" in the judge's ruling, "but that's natural." He said a appeal "looks virtually certain."

THE JUDGE ordered that Eagle pay FDIC, as receiver of the 1983-defunct FNB, almost $32 million — $25 million on the Eagle note and $6.84 million in interest, which is pegged at 7.91 percent. If that is paid by all or any of the partners, then FDIC may lay claim on the building by holding the second deed of trust. RepublicBank holds the first deed of trust.

In December 1982, FNB, Texas' largest independent bank with assets of $1.8 billion, was struggling to raise funds to reflect a quarterly profit.

South still maintains distinctive voice

By THOMAS WAGNER

ATLANTA (AP) — The first complete study of Southern speech patterns shows that while urbanization and social mobility have erased some of Dixie's rich dialects, the South retains a more distinctive vocabulary, grammar and pronunciation than any other region except New England.

"The South remains a great repository of old-fashioned speech because Southerners have relied on the spoken word and the oral tradition and because they haven't absorbed hundreds of thousands of immigrants," said Lee Pederson, a professor of linguistics at Emory University.

Pederson, who directed a 19-year study sponsored by Emory University in Atlanta and the National Endowment for the Humanities, will publish an atlas this January which contains words and phrases culled from 5,200 hours of interviews he and 350 other researchers conducted throughout the South.

While the study focused mainly on the Gulf states of Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mississppi and Texas, the researchers also measured the degree to which people from Arkansas, Georgia and Tennessee influenced Gulf dialects.

Although such massive linguistic studies were long ago completed in such areas as New England and the middle Atlantic states, Pederson said that until recently the South lacked the funding and a major university willing to undertake such a project.

Pederson said it is still possible to divide the South into at least 11 major regional dialects and as many as 14 urban dialects, each with its "own configuration of vocabulary, pronunciation and grammar."

For example, the linguist said that the insect most Americans know as a "dragonfly," is a "mosquito hawk" to most people in the Atlanta Coastal dialect, which stretches from eastern Florida to Virginia, and in the Gulf Coast dialect, which runs from western Florida to Texas.

Alaskan developer seeks modern mail-order brides

By PAUL JENKINS

PAYSTREKE, Alaska (AP) — Out here in the boondocks where the dirt road shrinks to a rock-strewn path, Tom Williams and some of his crew are willing to put up with no telephones, electricity or running water. But they're tired of doing without women.

"We were all sitting around the cookhouse talking. They were kidding me, 'Where are the girls?' And I told them I'm not about to be a pimp, but I'd see what I could do," said Williams, a bear of a man with a hand-made Bowie knife strapped to his hip.

About half the men on his 10-man crew, who are trying to turn this old gold claim into a tourist attraction, are unmarried. The nearest civilization is Hope, a tiny community of 150 people some 80 road miles south of Anchorage. It is not Las Vegas North. There are no bars, no dance-halls and few single women.

"Most of the people in the area are older and retired," said John Lueders, an unmarried carpenter working for Williams. "It's kind of an out-of-the-way place."

Williams, himself unmarried, seized upon the idea of advertising last week for "mail-order" brides in an Anchorage newspaper. Within a day of publication, there were four responses, and two of the women said they wanted to visit the 1800s replica gold mining camp that Williams and his men started building last year on 15 acres.

"One said she'd like to come out. But the second backed out when she heard television crews might be here to televise her arrival."

The woman showed up later, when the cameras were gone and spent the weekend in a cabin at the site, where tree stumps serve as stools at the cookhouse table.

"It was mutually agreed between her and the guys that there was no spark there. We still have outhouses, no running water. She said she thought it would be a little more complete. None of the men were interested in her and she wasn't interested in them."

Williams says he found his way to Alaska in 1969 after tossing a dime onto a map in an Illinois bar. He once mined the area where Paystreke now stands, five miles from the nearest hard road and surrounded by federal land.

Williams lives in a one-room cabin. Outside are two giant dogs, mixes of Great Pyrenees, Great Dane and Saint Bernard. He carries the Bowie knife because a scrape with the law as a teen-ager left him legally unable to own firearms, and in this neck of the woods there sometimes are bad-tempered critters in the bushes.

Paystreke's name comes from the original patent granted by President Calvin Coolidge. The land patent was supposed to be for the Paystreak Placer Mine, but somehow on the documents it came out Paystreke.

Nowadays, Williams, 40, is financing its development by selling gold jewelry and cans of dirt and rocks containing ore in Alaska stores. When finished in a few years, the facility will have cabins, a non-alcoholic 1800s saloon, can-can girls, gifts shops and other facilities.

"This is going to make me a millionaire and I know it," Williams says.

His labor costs are nil. His laborers, some of them recruited from the ranks of the homeless in Anchorage, put in 10- to 14-hour days for no pay.

"I told them, 'You help me and make me a rich man, and I'll make you the most comfortable people in the state, money-wise,'" Williams says. He takes care of their food, housing and other expenses.

And now he is trying to tend to other needs.

"These guys want someone who will make their life fulfilled, but who will blend in and make this a success," Williams says. "I just want to get them together the women. What they decide is their business."

East Coast may face dangers of Hurricane Gloria

Associated Press

Although most of the hurricanes slamming into the United States over the past two decades have come through Florida, the Caribbean and Gulf of Mexico, there have been some deadly exceptions — which is why forecasters are tracking Gloria's path toward the East Coast with special concern.

Storms like Gloria can be particularly dangerous, meteorologists say. When hurricanes travel into northern latitudes they are often pushed along by the jetstream, boosting their normally lazy 15 mph forward speed to over 30 mph.

And coastal areas from Virginia to Maine, built up during the lull in hurricane activity, are vulnerable to the power of a major storm.

"This hurricane is an anomaly for the past decade," said Jim Lynch, a meteorologist with the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla. "But it's not unheard of for the Atlantic Seaboard to get blasted."

The last serious East Coast storm came in 1979, when Hurricane David traveled slowly from Florida to eastern Canada, killing 19 people and causing $500 million in damage.

"The activity seems to occur in intervals. In one decade, there will be more activity in the Caribbean. Another decade it will be the Atlantic," Lynch said Wednesday. "We haven't seen that many of these New England hurricanes in the last 10 years."

The worst of these hurricanes came on Sept. 21, 1938. The storm — hurricanes weren't given name designations until after World War II — struck the New England coast with winds gusting to 183 mph. An estimated 600 people died and more than 18,000 buildings were damaged or destroyed.

The fast-moving storm created a tidal surge so great that ships were beached several miles inland. Damage was estimated at $2.6 billion.

A September hurricane in 1944 killed 390 people. All but 40 of the victims died aboard ships off the Atlantic Coast.

Hurricane Carol left a trail of 68 dead from Cape Hatteras to Quebec in August 1954. Wind gusts of 135 mph ripped off the steeple of the Old North Church in Boston, where lanterns were hung to signal Paul Revere's historic ride. Damage, in 1980 dollars, was put at $1.7 billion.

Two months later, Hurricane Hazel struck the Carolinas after killing hundreds in Haiti. Hazel was traveling at 55 mph when it hit. At least 347 people died, 95 in this country. Damage in today's terms: $1.1 billion.

In August 1955, Hurricane Connie hit North Carolina, careened into Virginia, and finally moved out to sea after brushing Long Island and leaving 23 dead.

Hurricane Diane struck a week later. Although weaker than Connie, Diane dumped heavy rains from North Carolina, causing extensive flooding northward into New England. The death toll reached 184 in this country. Damage was $3.1 billion in 1980 dollars.

In 1960, Hurricane Donna crossed the Florida Keys, savaged North Carolina and then bounced back to sea, twisting again to hit New York City, which was inundated with 10-foot tides. An estimated 148 people died.

The East Coast was spared until June 1972, when Hurricane Agnes traveled from Florida to New York, killing 122 people. Damage was put at $4.7 billion in 1980 dollars.

Hurricane experts have no explanation why storms take the paths they do. Theories range from upper atmosphere winds to ocean temperatures controlling direction.

But Lynch said hurricanes seem to have divided their activities nearly equally between the Atlantic, Caribbean and the Gulf of Mexico in the past eight decades.

"If you look at the averages, this isn't unusual," he said. "September has been a very active time for hurricanes, so I guess this hurricane is where it is supposed to be."

STORM

Ocracoke, Hatteras and Portsmouth island residents were asked to leave.

"You've got people who would spit into a 105 mile-an-hour wind but this one's got them concerned," said Mike Nesbit, Dare County director of emergency medical services.

John Smith of the Red Cross at the Emergency Management office in Beaufort, N.C, said the county was opening shelters this morning.

"A lot of people have already moved inland. Traffic along (U.S.) 70 West was almost bumper to bumper last night," he said.

Larry Clark, assistant manager at S&R Supermarket in Manteo, said the store had been unusually busy with sales of batteries, canned meat and fresh fruit.

"I've heard more than one say that if they're ordered to leave they'll leave," Clark said. "You almost never hear that. I think everybody's kind of on edge. It's not knowing what's going to happen that's so bad."

At Awful Arthur's, a seafood restaurant in Kitty Hawk, Jimmie Midgett said he had no intention of abandoning his home. "Natives don't leave," he said, sipping a beer during a hurricae party.

In Virginia, ships at the Norfolk Naval Base and the Little Creek Amphibious Base in Virginia Beach were ordered to safe anchorages and ships at the Charleston (S.C.) Navy Base were sent to sea to avoid damage at pierside.

Evacuations of Tangier and Chincoteague islands were to begin this morning, said Mike Cline, deputy operations coordinator with the state Department of Emergency Services. He said roughly 800 people would be removed from Tangier, a tiny island in the Chesapeake Bay, and several hundred more from Chincoteague and several small islands off the Eastern Shore.

"The islands are the only ones that have decided for sure to evacuate their people," Cline said. Mainland localities in the Eastern Shore and the Tidewater were expected to make a decision regarding evacuations later in the day, he said.

Joe DeMarino, emergency services coordinator in Accomac on the Eastern Shore, said residents would be evacuated from endangered areas if the weather service's hurricane warning was extended north to include the shore.

In Maryland, residents of Smith Island, the southernmost part of the Chesapeake Bay, were urged by Someret County civil defense director John Somers to evacuate "if you cannot guarantee your and your family's safety."

New Jersey Gov. Thomas Kean ordered state police and emergency officials on alert, and Long Island Lighting Co. in New York said it had called in workers from vacation so it would be ready to meet any problems that might occur. In Atlantic City, N.J., Trump Casino Hotel officials moved all the cars from the gaming hall's underground parking garage and ordered the water pumping equipment at the casino inspected, said casino spokeswoman Pam Sinderbrand.

In Massachusetts, Brown's Marina in Newburyport was swamped with calls Wednesday from residents who wanted their boats taken out of the water, said manager John White. "We're hauling boats like crazy."

Spindletop — the first salt dome oil discovery — erupted near Beaumont in 1901, spewing thousands of barrels of oil before it could be capped. The gusher produced more than 17 million barrels of oil in 1902 alone for a state whose 1900 oil production totalled less than 1 million barrels.

Brady Sparks, a Dallas attorney who represents about 2,800 people who believe they are descendants of Meadors, said Meadors never had to place a claim because he didn't own a majority of the mineral rights involved.

That lawsuit contends that Meadors purchased a one-eighth interest in a large portion of the Spindletop field in 1911 after the first boom had played out.

Attorney Tim Hatton represents Jewell Robbins of Lexington, Ky., and more than 430 other people who claim to be the heirs of Meadors.

FDIC

The 1890-established bank was beleaguered by soured energy loans, a downturn in the economy and dropping oil prices.

So, FNB President Charles D. Fraser negotiated an agreement to sell the 24-story office building, parking garage and drive-in bank facility to Eagle for $75 million to raise funds. It was a sale-leaseback plan.

The $25 million in Eagle notes were assigned to FNB as part of the $75 million deal.

The remaining $50 million of the purchase price came via letters of credit from Texas Commerce Bank of Houston and InterFirst Bank of Dallas. RepublicBank eventually purchased the Texas Commerce's and InterFirst Bank's two $25-million loans to Eagle.

FDIC acquired the Eagle notes upon the closing of the bank on Oct. 14, 1983.

ON DEC. 31, 1982, Eagle partners executed $25 million in promissory notes in favor of Eagle Properties Ltd. Brown and Branum each executed $6.25 million in notes and Davis, Perry, Sledge, Hurt and Lawrence each signed notes of $2.5 million. The $25 million in principal was due two years later, on Dec. 31, 1985. Interest was due at the end of 1983 and 1984.

Among other defenses in their arguments not to pay FDIC the $25 million, the Eagle partners contend they were "fraudulently induced" by Fraser into the sale-leaseback transactions. Fraser, they allege, misrepresented the value of the building. Further, they contend that the Eagle notes "are not negotiable instruments" under the Uniform Commercial Code and that the notes "are neither due nor payable under the terms of a subordination agreement."

In the FDIC takeover of the bank, FDIC assumed the bank's $664 million indebtedness to the Federal Reserve. RepublicBank purchased certain FNB assets and loans and opened its newly-chartered bank, RepublicBank First National Midland, for business on Oct. 17, 1983, in the old FNB building.

In his 57-page opinion, Bunton said that evidence reflects that the FNB management in the second half of 1982 "began exploring the possibility of selling the bank's building complex."

"Management viewed the idea of selling the bank as a way to enable the bank to offset any losses the bank would have in 1982," Bunton wrote. Those losses would be from "a substantial charge that the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) may require on certain loans and to cover an increase in the bank's loan reserve account that would be required by the OCC," Bunton wrote.

BANK MANAGEMENT decided to sell the bank as a means to "offset the possible losses" from classified loans. Public disclosure of the "relatively large charge-off" would be "very detrimental" to the bank, management surmised, Bunton noted.

By December 1982, the bank had been placed on OCC's "problem-bank list," and examiners had found in the loan area "many exceptions to sound credit and collateral procedures.

The federal bank examiners found that the bank's decline in asset quality was due to:

— A sharp decline in the petroleum industry in 1982.

— Imprudent loan portfolio management and lending practices conducted during a recent period of rapid growth and led to over-lending to certain customers.

— Lack of an active internal loan-review function.

— The bank's internal watch list greatly understated problems in the portfolio.

"...The bank's future prospects were unfavorable," the examiners said, noted Bunton. "Disclosure of the losses mandated by the examiners could result in a loss of confidence by the bank's depositors, further weakening the bank's position."

In lining up the sale of the bank, Fraser elicited the participating Brown, Branum and the five others who became Eagle partners. The seven men "are knowledgable, capable and sophisticated businessmen," Bunton observed.

"Fraser's position was that the transaction would help the bank's financial plight." The Eagle partners or their companies in 1982 had "substantial sums of money on deposit" in the bank and maintained a business relationship with the bank.

"It was clear that these partners generally had a loyalty to the bank," Bunton wrote. The bank had loaned money to the men when they started out in business.

"No doubt, a professional relationship and a friendship existed between Charles Fraser and the Eagle partners."

SPEECH

On the other hand, what people in the Atlanta Coast region call a "closet," people along the Gulf Coast call a "locker."

By the same token, Pederson said, a skin-borrowing insect known as a "chigger" in the the upper South, is called a "red bug," in the lower South.

Comparing the North and the South, the linguist said that whereas a baker in the New York might tell a customer, "Here's something extra," and throw in a 13th cookie to make "a baker's dozen," a Cajun baker in south Louisiana would do the same thing and say, "Here's a cookie for 'lagniappe' (lan-yap)."

Pederson said that Dixie's dialects, like those in all other areas of the United States, are becoming less pronounced because so many Southerners have lost touch with their rural roots by moving to urban centers.

"A lot of Southerners under 40 don't know any of these dialect words because they have no association with rural culture," Pederson said. "With rural electrification, the building of the interstate highway system and the advent of mass media, a lot of these older linguistic traditions have broken down, especially since World War II."

Nevertheless, he said, several factors have conspired to slow this process in the South, so that today Dixie retains more of its old-fashioned speech patterns than any area outside New England.

"Southerners still have a sense of being Southerners," Pederson said. "They have their own writers like Faulkner and their own country music. They have the shared experience of the Civil War, the oppression of Reconstruction and the neglect of 100 years after.

"Among most Southerns the language has been passed down orally because ther was less literacy in general.

Severity of quake damage surprises experts

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Architects and engineers in Mexico City said they were surprised at the damage caused by last week's killer earthquakes and puzzled about why some buildings crumbled while others were spared.

The city's building code was based on the strongest earthquakes the city had previously had, with an additional margin of security, and no one expected an earthquake to be so devastating, said Fernando Favela. He is president of the College of Civil Engineers and executive vice president of Associated Civil Engineers, a large construction and industrial group.

"It surprised us that an earthquake of this magnitude caused so much damage in Mexico City," he said in an interview Wednesday. In previous earthquakes, the streets did not buckle, and the curbing did not break as they did last week, he said.

The first earthquake Sept. 19 measured 8.1 on the Richter scale of earthquake intensity and a second on Friday registered 7.5. The two tremors heavily damaged more than 400 buildings, Mayor Ramon Aguirre said. At least 150 buildings collapsed, and killed thousands of people.

The city's center, built on what once was a large lake, sits on watery clay soil that is light and has little resistance.

"In this case it was fatal because it amplified the waves," Favela said.

When an earthquake rocks a building, the structure sets up its own cycle of vibration, like a tuning fork, architects said. If the tremor lasts longer, the building sways farther and faster.

"They vibrate like snakes," Favela said, "and fail in different places."

While it was too early for a survey of damage to have been conducted, it appeared that buildings from 10 to 20 stories high were harder hit than lower or taller buildings, Favela said.

Favela said it will be at least a month or two before engineers, architects and other specialists have an indication of whether buildings that fell had common characteristics.

To withstand earthquakes, buildings have to able to resist or absorb horizontal force, such as that from wind.

"In Mexico, buildings have to be made more rigid, " said Jose Creixell, an architect whose office is filled with devices to measure earthquakes.

One way to give tall buildings more resistance is to add more or larger columns and beams. Diagonal beams forming x's can be used for reinforcement.

Favela said the building code is sure to be changed.

Rescuers find little miracle — three times over

MEXICO CITY (AP) — It seemed like a little miracle, three times over.

In the smashed concrete and warped steel beams that were once the Juarez Hospital, earthquake rescuers found three baby girls, alive and seemingly well.

There were cheers, joy and astonishment.

"It's difficult to imagine," said a pediatrician, Dr. Mario Arredondo, shaking his head in wonder. "I just don't know how they lived without water and food. Probably the babies adapted by not receiving anything for days."

It was 7:19 a.m. last Thursday when the walls and ceiling came tumbling in on the tiny daughters of Sarah Perez Corona, Lucia Ruiz Mendez and Adriana Sandoval Hernandez, born just a day earlier.

Making their way to a voice heard earlier, workers spent all day Wednesday digging a tunnel. They hacked through the rubble also making tunnels from one floor to the next, and from left to right.

"Silence!" a worker at the entrance of one tunnel shouted, raising his hands. "Nobody talk, nobody move."

At about 5:30 p.m., they found the first infant, and brought her down from the ruins. Wrapped in a blanket, she was placed in a basket and rushed to a makeshift emergency room 200 yards away.

Under green canvas, nurses and doctors huddled over the child, vaccinating her, tenderly cleaning her and placing her in an incubator. She cried as she was being handled, and doctors said that was a good sign.

Armed guards surround stations as ballots are counted in Punjab

CHANDIGARH, India (AP) — A detail of about 100 armed guards surrounded each of 98 counting stations today as officials began tabulating ballots from the Punjab election, described by the government as a triumph for democracy over Sikh terrorism.

"This shows the overwhelming majority of people have faith in the democratic process and are not scared away by extremists," state election officer S.L. Kapur said.

He raised the estimated statewide turnout in Wednesday's election by 5 percent, to 60 percent of the state's 10.7 million voters. Fears of terrorist attacks by Sikh extremists had led to the deployment of more than 160,000 army, paramilitary and police across the state, the biggest security operation since India gained its independence 38 years ago.

Voters chose among more than 900 candidates for 115 state assembly seats and 13 Parliament slots. Turnout in 1980 was about 64 percent, and officials said they had expected only about 50 percent Wednesday.

The peaceful balloting and high turnout were considered victories for Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, whose Congress Party faced the moderate Sikh Akali Dal party.

Kapur said an average of 100 guards protected each of the 98 tabulation centers today. Three guards had protected each polling place on Wednesday.

Gandhi had called the election "the people's answer to brute force" and a referendum on his Punjab peace accord with moderate Sikhs. It will return popularly elected government to Punjab after three years of direct federal rule in an effort to stop terrorism.

All counting centers were searched Wednesday night for terrorist bombs, and armed guards watched the centers all night after police transported ballot boxes.

"Since the fact of this election is as important as the result, this is a commendable achievement, and the people of Punjab as well as the administration deserve credit for courage, vigilance and determination," the Indian Express said in an editorial Thursday.

One person was killed and several injured in the state Wednesday in clashes between rival political groups, but officials said the fighting had nothing to do with the Sikh boycott.

Sikh terrorists planted six small bombs in two districts, police said, adding that all the explosives were defused before they blew up.

"Considering the law and order situation without violence and the good turnout, it augurs well for restoration of peace," N.N. Vohra, the Punjab home secretary, told The Associated Press. "It is a good beginning."

Two blacks killed; Police barred from attacking inmates

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Two blacks, one a teen-age boy, were shot dead by police in anti-apartheid violence, police said today. Affidavits submitted by detainees in a Cape Town jail alleged more police torture.

On Wednesday, a government doctor presented evidence that many of her prison patients had been abused by police. A judge then issued the first restraining order under South Africa's 9-week-old state of emergency barring police attacks on imprisoned anti-apartheid activists.

In the latest incidents of unrest over South Africa's race separation laws, now in its 13th month, police today said they shot and killed a 15-year-old black after someone in a crowd heaved a gasoline bomb into a Cape Town-area police station, causing minor damage.

A black man was also shot dead in the tribal homeland of Ciskei when a policeman opened fire on a threatening mob, homeland police said. Many of South Africa's blacks were assigned by white authorities to the homelands.

More than 700 blacks have been killed in the anti-apartheid rioting that began in early September 1984. Most were killed by police, and the rest perished at the hands of other blacks.

The new allegations of torture came in affidavits submitted by three detainees in Goodwood Magistrate's Court near Cape Town.

The three, all of mixed race, were granted bail Wednesday, and told the court they were beaten on an unspecified date by black and white policemen in the Brackenfell Police Station.

They were arrested on suspicion of arson, which they denied. There was no immediate police comment on their allegations.

One man, Jerome Booysen, 21, a clerk, said a inner tube was wrapped around his face and head, and, "While I was being pinned down, another person pulled the inner tube tightly around my head and I could not breathe."

He said while four men held him on the floor on his back, another policemen stood on and kicked his stomach.

Shultz, Shevardnadze all smiles, but fail to agree on anything

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — If smiles and handshakes took the place of agreements, Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze might have no differences between them.

But Shultz said the two did not agree on a thing, even though they appeared to get along wonderfully well in a four-hour meeting Wednesday that was intended to help set the stage for the summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Geneva, Switzerland, Nov. 19-20.

They smiled frequently, shook hands often and spoke deferentially of one another in appearances before reporters, both before and after their meeting at the Soviet U.N. mission here.

Shevardnadze will confer with Reagan at the White House Friday in another important pre-summit meeting.

While there was widespread speculation that Shevardnadze might be prepared to unveil a new arms control initiative, that didn't happen in Wednesday's meeting, Shultz said.

"We did not reach agreement on any of these items," Shultz said of their agenda of differences, particularly on arms control.

Nevertheless, Shultz said their talks were "most worthwhile" and were conducted in an "easy and frank atmosphere." He even received an apology from Shevardnadze for not having attended a United Nations meeting where Shultz spoke on Monday.

"Our capability for conversation was very easy," Shultz said.

Shultz said the talks focused on arms control issues.

French prime minister: Ex-officials ordered ship's bombing

PARIS (AP) — Prime Minister Laurent Fabius told the nation that a meeting with former Defense Minister Charles Hernu and the ousted secret service chief convinced him the two were responsible for the bombing of a Greenpeace protest ship.

A formal judicial investigation opened today against five French soldiers suspected of leaking information on the Greenpeace scandal to the French press.

Fabius met Wednesday with Hernu and the ex-chief of the General Directorate for External Security, Adm. Pierre Lacoste. Afterward, he made his weekly nationwide television appearance.

"My conviction is that both of them acted under the impulse of their own idea of what was in the interest of our country," Fabius said. "My conviction is that it is at their level where the responsibility lies."

Fabius said last Sunday that French agents bombed the Rainbow Warrior.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Rajneesh aide surfaces

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — The former top aide to Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh has surfaced in West Germany and was quoted Wednesday as saying the guru's demand for luxuries, such as Rolls Royce cars and jewelry, had driven the Oregon commune $55 million in debt.

The mass-circulation magazine Stern said it had an exclusive interview with Ma Anand Sheela, 35, after locating her and 20 other former Rajneesh followers in their West German "hideout." It did not specify where that was.

The Rajneesh sect moved from Poona, India, to the United States in 1981 after buying a 64,000-acre ranch in Oregon. They later incorporated the commune town of Rajneeshpuram, where several thousand followers of the guru live.

After Sheela left the commune, Rajneesh held a news conference and accused her of defrauding the organization of $55 million, plotting murder and other crimes.

Stern quoted her as denying Rajneesh's charge that she had created a $55 million debt for the commune by diverting funds to a Swiss bank account.

Moslems mark saint's death

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Shiite Moslems marked the death in battle 13 centuries ago of their saint, Iman al-Hussein, by cutting themselves with swords and vowing to kill Israelis occupying a buffer zone in southern Lebanon.

About 5,000 men and youngsters marched Wednesday through the Shiite town of Nabatiyeh, 30 miles south of Beirut, wearing white kafans, or death shrouds, and slashing their heads with curved swords and razor blades.

An estimated 10,000 people marched through the ancient Roman town of Baalbek.

Aid faces 'political' battle

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — International Catholic Relief Services will face "a race against time and a political struggle as well" in efforts to pour millions of dollars into rebuilding residential areas in Mexico City, a Roman Catholic bishop says.

After returning from a tour of earthquake-stricken Mexico City, Corpus Christi Bishop Rene H. Gracida, chairman of the relief agency's committee for Latin America, said Wednesday that barrio residents fear urban planners will seize the opportunity provided by the earthquake to redevelop residential areas with high-rise buildings.

Import-rollback debate rages

By MIKE ROBINSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Defying veto warnings, the House Ways and Means Committee appears set to approve a massive rollback in textile imports, the storm center of the congressional debate over trade.

As the panel cleared for action, House caucus chairmen clashed in debate Wednesday over proposed tariffs to drive down overseas barriers to U.S. exports. House GOP leaders produced sweeping trade legislation.

"We need a stick in the closet" to punish countries that erect trade barriers abroad, Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., chairman of the House Democratic Caucus, told the debate sponsored by the National Association of Manufacturers.

"We should bash down their doors — diplomatically, not on the floor of the House," retorted Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., chairman of the House Republican Conference and a critic of a Gephardt-sponsored tariff bill.

An early floor vote on the textile measure, strongly opposed by the Reagan administration, appeared likely following today's Ways and Means hearing, at which extraordinary steps were planned to shrink the number of spectators.

Abandoning its spacious chambers in the Longworth House Office Building, the committee planned to meet in a cramped room in the Capitol with little seating available, officials said.

THE TIGHT seating reflected intense pressure over the bill, which is favored by U.S. textile and apparel makers as well as two major labor unions. Lobbyists lined the halls last week as the measure won approval from the committee's trade panel in a closed-door session.

The Reagan administration, as well as anti-protectionist business forces, have been campaigning against the measure, which would roll back imports 25 percent to more than 40 percent in areas ranging from raw silk to stuffed animals. The White House has threatened a veto.

The measure has 292 House cosponsors, and there were early predictions that such heavy support was a guarantee of passage once it reached the floor.

In recent days, however, signs of waning enthusiasm have surfaced. Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., has spoken of bringing it to the floor under special handling that would assure an early vote — with amendments ruled out. However, such a move also would require two-thirds of the House, or 290 votes, for passage.

Maine Sens. William Cohen and George Mitchell, major supporters of the import-battered shoe industry, reached agreement last week with South Carolina Sens. Strom Thurmond and Ernest Hollings, co-sponsors of the Senate textile measure, to combine forces.

THURMOND PLANS an effort to harness the combined textile-shoe bill to an obscure pact revising U.S. ties to the Pacific atolls of Micronesia when that measure reaches the floor, possibly today, press secretary Terry Hill said Wednesday. He confirmed that Thurmond has altered textile provisions to drop China from a list of 12 nations that would take the brunt of tightened quotas.

Luggage quotas also were added to the textile-shoe bill, Hill said.

Lawmakers visiting Peking recently were told retaliation against U.S. products would follow if Congress froze out China's growing textile industry.

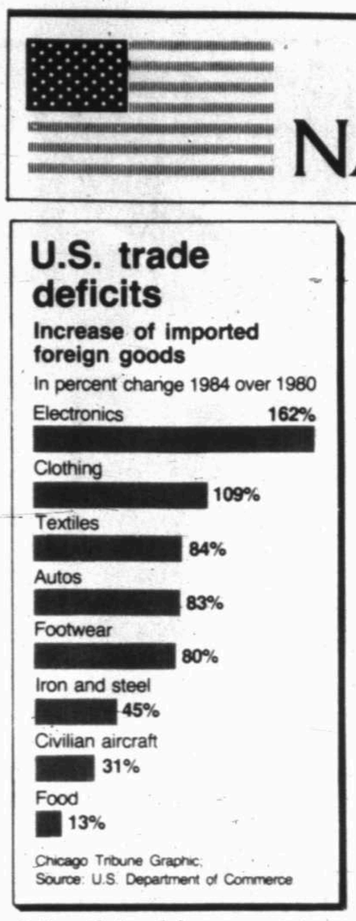

The Micronesian maneuver, which if successful in both houses would force President Reagan to accept the quotas or veto a pact urgently sought by the State Department, has brought a filibuster threat from Sen. Dan Evans, R-Wash.

Meanwhile, House Republican leaders prepared to launch sweeping legislation that would run the gamut from a possible summit meeting on trade to revamped machinery for retaliation against overseas barriers.

The measure was set for an airing today at a meeting with U.S. Trade Representative Clayton K. Yeutter in the office of House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel, R-Ill.

It calls for a "Reagan Round" of talks under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade — the major pact governing global commerce — as well as early action to set up a U.S.-Canadian free-trade zone, a beefing up of the Customs Service, new measures to spur research and development, a presidential study commission and greater protection of patents.

NATION

Farm bill wrestles price supports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawmakers considering a $141 billion, five-year rewrite of the nation's farm and food policy must decide how much of the burden taxpayers and consumers should be asked to bear to support farm subsidies ranging from milk to peanuts.

The question of who should pay for what always is present when Congress debates farm policy, but this year is different. The debate this time takes place against a backdrop of financial depression in some rural areas unlike anything since the 1930s.

While they do not dispute the hardships on today's farm, the Reagan administration and some consumer groups contend Congress is poised to help farmers who don't need aid along with those who do.

With the House scheduled to take up the 1985 farm bill today, more than 200 possible amendments to the massive legislation already had been introduced. Some of the most controversial, dealing with dairy and sugar subsidies, were to open the debate.

The first test, on whether to keep sugar price supports at their current 18-cent-per-pound level or to reduce them, was regarded as a bellwether of how well the traditional farm coalition will hold together to protect other crop programs.

Among other amendments was a move to do away with a proposed farmer referendum on wheat and corn that would institute substantial marketing restrictions along with higher price supports. Another amendment would scrap the peanut program, which grants franchises to farmers to grow a limited quantity of peanuts at a high support price, while another would rescind the Agriculture Committee's proposed freeze on "target price" income supports.

Robert Thompson, the assistant secretary of agriculture for economics, says the bill's provision freezing income protection payments is "an extremely blunt instrument" for helping farmers.

New department figures show that in the past year, only 17 cents of every dollar in income subsidies went to farmers defined as in financial stress because of heavy debt.

"All these people who talk about helping low-income farmers are simply missing the mark," Thompson told reporters Wednesday.

House Democrats, who controlled writing of that body's farm bill draft, have insisted farm income should at least be held constant in any new legislation. As written, the bill contains a virtual four-year freeze on income support payments, and even liberalizes the subsidies by creating new exemptions from the current $50,000-per-farmer annual payment limit.

First FarmAid money goes to hungry

"I'm just trying to take care of what I think is the most important and serious need, which is, naturally, hunger, and this is the reason the first check was written for that purpose."

— Willie Nelson

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first check from the proceeds of the nationally televised FarmAid concert will buy food for hungry farm families rather than support legislative lobbying, country singer Willie Nelson says.

Nelson, a principal organizer of last Sunday's musical extravaganza in Champaign, Ill., said Wednesday he is standing by his pledge that no money raised through the event will be used for lobbying.

Instead, the first check is to be a $100,000 donation to the National Council of Churches. The council will channel the money to hunger projects serving poor farmers, Nelson said.

"I'm just trying to take care of what I think is the most important and serious need, which is, naturally, hunger, and this is the reason the first check was written for that purpose," Nelson added.

In a telephone interview from his Texas home, Nelson said he had intended to make a $25,000 contribution to the League of Rural Voters so that about 15 of its members could travel to Washington for debates starting this week on a new national farm policy.

But Nelson said he changed his mind when he learned Tuesday that the league, based in Minnesota, was a lobbying organization and had been involved in the drafting of legislation sponsored by Sen. Thomas Harkin, D-Iowa.

That legislation, which calls for production controls, has generated controversy in the farm community and is opposed by some agricultural groups.

Although Nelson and other performers involved in the FarmAid endorsed Harkin's bill, Nelson had said before the FarmAid concert that none of the proceeds would be spent on lobbying.

"I wasn't aware that it (the league) was a lobbying group," Nelson said. "And had I known that, then I would have known that I'd be taking a chance at criticism to spend money for that."

Nelson said that while he will not devote any FarmAid money to league lobbying, he will send $11,700 to the group out of his own pocket so its members can travel to the capital.

Nelson said plans call for the $100,000 donation to be spread among hunger projects in seven farm belt states, including Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, Wyoming, Oklahoma, Kansas and Ohio.

ASCS officials blasted for travel pushing farm bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department agency that handles farm programs is under fire for using its network of state and county offices to promote the Reagan administration's "market-oriented" farm policies.

But the agency, the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, says its actions are legal and not out of the ordinary. Farmers union officials also chided the agency for easing travel restrictions so state and local officials could spread the word.

"The loosening up of federal funds to peddle the Reagan administration's farm policy positions through the ASCS offices is unacceptable, especially at a time when this administration claims to be so budget conscious," said Cy Carpenter, president of the National Farmers Union.

Carpenter, reached Wednesday in St. Paul, Minn., through a spokesman, acknowledged that there had been similar charges in the past when Democrats were in office. In any case, it's "a bad practice," he said.

The complaint began in Kansas where state Farmers Union President Ivan Wyatt said the use of ASCS personnel was "a desperate move" to build support for the administration's farm policy, which seeks lower price supports on major crops and a gradual easing of government in agriculture.

Wyatt said Reagan and Agriculture Secretary John R. Block "have stooped to an all-time low" by using the agency's network in such a way.

Six-year 'itch'

Believe it or not, political leaders of the two major parties have already started to plan for the 1986 Senate races, in which control of the upper chamber will be at stake.

With that much at stake, you can bet politics will be heating up — steadily and strongly.

Republicans control it now, 53 to 47, and will have been in charge for six years by the time the next election rolls around. But history tells us that is no guarantee of continued dominance.

Democrats know they can take over by winning just four more seats. They like to point out that on a number of occasions in the past a sitting president's party that has controlled the Senate for six years has suffered setbacks. That's whimsically referred to as the "six-year itch." And the Democrats want to see the GOP itching furiously in next year's election.

The itch broke out and plagued the president's party in 1918, 1938, 1958, 1966 and 1974. Losses ranged from four seats to 13, with the average being seven.

This is why the Democrats were gleeful when Nevada's Republican Paul Laxalt, considered a shoo-in for 1986, decided not to run again. But the Republicans are far from gloomy about next year's prospects. The Democrats will lose some of their key players next year, including Senators Long of Louisiana and Eagleton of Missouri. Colorado's Hart may depart, and California'a Cranston is considered beatable.

The GOP sees two other rays of hope. One is President Reagan's continuing popularity. His coattails will be flying all over the place in next year's campaigns.

That doesn't mean the "itch" has been conquered, of course. But if there isn't a desire to "scratch" maybe the "itch" won't be as severe as in the past.

Buckle up — and live

Now that the new seat belt law has gone into effect, I would like to express my appreciation to those who have taken up the new habit. I would also like to address those who haven't.

I have heard a lot of lame excuses for not wearing seat belts; I would like to give some reasons for wearing them.

1. For those who fear being trapped by a jammed buckle, the odds of this happening are so remote it's not worth worrying about. If you are in an accident severe enough to cause a fire or drowning, etc., you are very likely to be knocked unconscious without a seat belt. It is very doubtful that you could evacuate the vehicle while you are unconscious.

2. The Federal Aviation Administration has made seat belt usage mandatory in aircraft for decades. No one complains about wearing a seat belt in an airliner — our safest form of transportation. Perhaps there is a correlation. The tragic airline crashes of recent weeks did have some positive aspects. Everyone who survived was wearing a seat belt, even four people in the Japanese plane that flew into a mountain. The fact that anyone survived that crash is incredible. It may surprise some to learn that 80% of all general aviation accidents result in no injuries whatsoever. And, if you think that airplanes are built stronger than cars, think again — automotive seat and restraint systems are required by law to be one-third stronger than aircraft restraint systems.

3. Take a defensive driving course that includes a road phase of instruction. If the course is any good, you will graduate with bruised knees and elbows from being flailed about the inside of the car. This will occur even with seat belts fastened and no collisions, just evasive maneuvers. You'll be convinced that you can't properly control a car to avoid an accident unless you're belted in place.

4. You cannot imagine the forces acting on your body during an accident. Even snugly-tied tennis shoes can be pulled from your feet. You can't possibly brace yourself against such impacts. Vehicles sold in the U.S. must provide crash protection to the extent that belted-in passengers could be expected to survive a frontal impact at a speed of 30 mph. Almost all vehicles tested by the government failed this test at only 35 mph.

5. You are 22 times more likely to die if you are thrown from the vehicle. One of the Midland Reporter-Telegram's own staff writers died this way a few years ago.

Why am I such a strong believer in seat belts? I've seen both sides of a windshield without benefit of a door. I know what it's like. My father took me to see the wreckage of our car afterwards. I saw my own hair and blood imbedded in the glass. Seat belts could have prevented it. Seat belts work.

Law or no law, the fact is this: If you don't wear seat belts, you're stupid!

Spitting fire over KMID

I read the complaints in letters to the editor about KMID-TV and disagreed completely. But I stand corrected.

After paying closer attention to the news and sports I have come to the conclusion that KMID should be renamed "OPPN" — meaning Odessa and Permian Panther News. No longer will I watch a news team that makes me spit fire with anger.

To J. Gordon: "I'll miss you."

To Midland Reporter-Telegram: "Thanks you for giving us the Lee High and Midland High news."

French seek credit for AIDS work

WASHINGTON — Scientists at the prestigious Pasteur Institute in Paris claim that U.S. researchers have stolen credit for the French discovery of the AIDS virus and illegally patented a blood-testing kit that identifies the presence of the deadly virus.

Jack Anderson

At stake may be a Nobel Prize, not to mention millions of dollars in royalties from the sale of the patented test kits. The French want their share of both glory and money.

The French, threatening court action, have sent documents buttressing their claims to the Health and Human Services Department, demanding recognition of U.S. researchers' reliance on the Pasteur Institute. The documents, seen by our associate Corky Johnson, present a powerful case. Here are the highlights:

— In the spring of 1983, Dr. Luc Montagnier of the Pasteur Institute reported his suspicion that a virus was the cause of the dread disease. American scientists were eager to learn more. An article Montagnier wrote for Science magazine was edited and endorsed by Dr. Robert Gallo, chief AIDS researcher at the National Cancer Institute.

Montagnier met with Gallo and his team to discuss the virus, and subsequent correspondence was on a first-name basis.

— Letters from Gallo to Montagnier asked for virus samples and permission to clone them. A receipt for two samples of the French AIDS virus was signed by a Gallo researcher on Sept. 23, 1983.

— The French stipulated that the samples not be used for commercial purposes. Other samples and information were given to U.S. scientists. All this was long before Gallo filed for a patent. The French claim Gallo used their information to find the AIDS virus and develop a test kit, which was then patented.

In an interview, Gallo disputed the French claim, asserting that the two viruses were not the same. He said the French have not adequately isolated the AIDS virus.

— The French filed patent applications in Europe and the United States several months before Gallo's group. The U.S. Patent Office granted Gallo's patent, but has yet to act on the French application.

— In a letter to a colleague after Montagnier had identified the AIDS virus, Gallo acknowledged that he had not yet succeeded in isolating an AIDS virus himself.

— The French charged that U.S. doctors allegedly broke American and international patent laws by failing to disclose the French contribution to their AIDS research.

The French say their documents present a "prima facie case that the Montagnier team was first" to discover the AIDS virus, that the Gallo patent is based on information "derived from the Montagnier team" and therefore is not valid.

The French charge further that Gallo breached a contract with the Pasteur Institute by using the virus samples the French sent him in developing a commercial product.

The French made three demands that must be met if the United States is to avoid court action:

1. Public recognition of the Montagnier team's "invaluable contribution in first finding and identifying" the AIDS virus.

2. Freedom for the French to market their own blood-test kit "without any legal problems."

3. A share of the royalties from sale of the U.S. kit, in return for which the French would allow it to remain on the market without legal action.

Footnote: In a series of memos to each other, Health and Human Services officials stated they can successfully defend the U.S. patent in court and raise the question of why the French, if their claims are accurate, haven't marketed their own test kit in Europe.

SPOOKING THE SPOOKS: Concern about terrorism has reached almost panic proportions at CIA headquarters in suburban Langley, Va. Our sources there tell us that even the day's-end pickup of office workers by their spouses has become an occasion for tension. The employees wait outside various buildings for the family car to show up, and every now and then someone will forget a briefcase, leaving it on the sidewalk. This sets off an all-out security response, with officers sealing off the area and handling the briefcase like a terrorist-planted bomb.

MINI-EDITORIAL: For the first time in years an effort is being made in Congress to strengthen the Freedom of Information Act, not riddle it with loopholes and exemptions as the bureaucrats would like. We support wholeheartedly the effort by Reps. Glenn English, D-Okla., and Gerald Kleczka, D-Wis. The original law has been effectively eviscerated over the past five years as Reagan administration officials refuse to release information that would expose waste, mismanagement and conflicts of interest in their agencies. The public has learned a lot about their government's operations through the act — but there's still a lot to be learned.

GEORGE F. WILL

Littlest defector snubs ACLU

CHICAGO — In this city, wonderfully lumpy with unmelted ethnic neighborhoods, in Ukrainian restaurants, on Oct. 3, glasses will be raised to celebrate Walter Polovchak's birthday. The littlest defector is not so little now. He will be 18 and secure from the Soviet regime and the American Civil Liberties Union.

George F. Will

Walter was born in the Ukraine. When he was 12, his parents were allowed, inexplicably, to emigrate to the United States. Walter's father indicated his intention to return: Instead of selling his home, he "lent" it to a neighbor and gave other possessions to a KGB official. The Soviet Embassy in Washington pressured the father to require Walter and his sister to return with him. The sister soon turned 18 and was safe. Walter, having seen what makes America great — freedom and the Chicago Cubs — sought asylum. The ACLU sided tenaciously with the father. It is deplorable that only the calendar — Walter's birthday — not America's courts gave Walter a decisive victory.

The closing of Walter's case coincides with the publication of a book ("The Politics of the ACLU" by William Donahue) that shows how the ACLU has become a lobby for the left's agenda. The ACLU's support for the right to distribute child pornography or use heroin is less illuminating than this: Racial quota systems, once vigorously opposed, now are as vigorously supported. This illustrates the ACLU's result-oriented approach to constitutional rights.

Aaron Wildavsky, political scientist at Berkeley and a former ACLU member, says the ACLU has reversed traditional American thinking about equality. The traditional sequence has been: Equality of rights guarantees equality of opportunity, which will produce satisfactory equality of conditions. The ACLU reverses the sequence: Equality of condition is a prerequisite for equality of opportunity in the exercise of equal rights.

The contradiction in the ACLU program is that a government promoting equality must be powerful, but the critique of society implicit in the ACLU's ideology undermines governmental authority. It does so by defining government as the keystone of the "system" that sustains unequal conditions and therefore makes a mockery of rights and opportunity. Another glaring ACLU contradiction concerns children.

Children once were chattel of their parents, but intelligent laws have limited parental discretion — regarding the employment, schooling and medical care of children. No one, least of all the ACLU, says the law should not abridge parental sovereignty or take cognizance of children's rights.

The ACLU believes the civil rights of a child under 18 include the right to have an abortion even when both parents are opposed. Indeed, the ACLU believes a minor's civil rights are violated if her parents are even notified when she acquires contraceptives from a federally funded clinic. The ACLU has detected civil-rights ravishments in school dress codes.

Fifty states would remove Walter from the custody of parents who abused him. But the ACLU, which would fly to court to fight any employer who tried to pay Walter less than the minimum wage, supports the right of Walter's father to commit the ultimate and unappealable abuse of consigning him forever to a prison society.

Alan Dershowitz is a professor at Harvard Law School and a hyperkinetic litigant on behalf of civil liberties. He says the ACLU's behavior regarding Walter, seen in the light of policies regarding children's rights to abortions and other matters, can be understood only in terms of "an unwillingness to criticize communism."

ACLU advocates say that those judicial and other government actions that helped Walter were "political" in that they took cognizance of the nature of the Soviet regime. But of course. The problem would have been different had Walter been resisting return to, say, Denmark, where he would have been free to decide his future. Suppose Walter were black and resisting return to South Africa. Who believes the ACLU would have opposed him? While the ACLU was opposing him, the New Jersey ACLU was defending a child in a case similar except for the fact he was resisting return to Chile.

Walter's case involved ludicrous governmental brooding about whether, were he returned, he would face persecution. The Soviet regime, which tortures its most distinguished citizen, Andrei Sakharov, would take up where it left off with Walter who, as punishment for his Catholicism, was kept at school on Christmas Eve to chant Leninist slogans. Ten years of comprehensive noncompliance with the Helsinki Accords demonstrates that the Soviet regime persecutes everyone guilty of an appetite for freedom.

Walter's case is a splendid and timely embarrassment for the various Washington bureaucracies that are toiling to produce an atmosphere of false cordiality for the summit. The cordiality is supposed to facilitate the achievement at the summit of ... more accords.

Gutter bums generating civic pride

NEW YORK — After I reported sighting a lot of derelicts passed out in Manhattan gutters, five New Yorkers wrote angry letters. Five doesn't seem like many letters for a city of 7,071,639 people, unless you are in the writing business, but in the writing business, five letters is heavy mail and very encouraging. It means only 7,071,634 people would rather watch television than read.

Russell Baker

It is painful to discover that every reader in New York is angry at you unless you have a thick skin like the famous old-time thick-skinned columnists, most of whom have died, or worse, moved on to Washington.

I come from journalism's thin-skinned ranks. This prevented my becoming a success in Washington. The skin covering my nose was so thin that the underlying nose material was never able to toughen up.

As a result, I could not develop the hard nose so admired in Washington. When important people got together down there to praise themselves, they complimented each other on being hard-nosed. When my name came up, they said, "He is soft-nosed."

In Washington this was the kiss of death. To avoid an obituary that said my nose had given me the kiss of death, I went to New York.

Now the entire reading population of the city is angry. They dislike writings about derelicts unconscious in gutters. One correspondent accuses me of living in a suburb.

Yes, living in a suburb is apparently regarded by literate New York as an odious activity. Maybe it is. All I know of suburbs is what anybody might glean from implausible novels, about overheated suburban housewives.

Except for the years 1931-1937, I have never lived in a suburb. This is not because of fear of suburban housewives. It is because of a loathing for automobiles. I always live either in the city, where there is mass transit, or in the country, where, when your horse breaks down on the highway, you can shoot it and walk away.

If Detroit made a car that could be shot and abandoned when it broke down, I might have a fling at the suburbs in spite of the housewives. Then I might engage in the interesting activity which three of these letters suggests I am already up to my neck in.

This is: shipping derelicts from the suburbs to New York City.

Why would I do this? Because living in the suburbs would make me callous, inhumane and mean-spirited about paying taxes needed to treat derelicts right.

Does living in suburbs really turn Americans into rotten human beings? Or does living in New York turn them into raving paranoids?

Happily, I now live in the country where you can shoot your horse when it breaks down and get on with life instead of spending the rest of it waiting for a tow truck and visiting garages. Living under those conditions would probably make anyone but a saint take up shabby schemes to ship the derelicts to New York.

It's also nice not having to ride the subway and fight back the impulse to shed blood when the E Train disgorges all those suburbanites at Penn Station, taking Manhattan's money out while scheming to smuggle their derelicts in at the next dark of the moon.

What New York's literate population really wants, of course, is praise for their home town. Country people who come and talk about derelicts in the gutter instead of the beautiful shop windows they pressed their noses against are suspected of being captious nitpickers.

My thin skin is punctured by this suspicion. I want to whine, protest, explain, apologize, say, "You misunderstood ... "

But I won't. If word of it got through somehow — Lord only knows how — to the 7,071,634 New Yorkers glued to their TV sets, they would surely be humiliated to hear it.

There is something embarrassingly small town about insisting about being praised. San Francisco, lovely as it is, would be even lovelier if visitors weren't incessantly pressed to praise its glories. Chicago, a wonderful city, would seem a truly great city if the visitor did not feel obliged to tell Chicagoans how great their city was.

New York didn't used to demand this small-town clap on the back. Since the success of the "I Love New York" advertising campaign, though, small-town boosterism has been on the march. In the old days when you were reprimanded by a San Franciscan for calling his town "Frisco," you could wither him by pointing out that New Yorkers didn't care what you called their town.

In that self-confident spirit, let us go forward with gutters, full of bums.

All-white jury hears black activists' trial

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Federal prosecutors, unable to obtain convictions in five previous election fraud cases, used all their challenges to remove all black prospective jurors in the trial of two black activists, the defense said.

"Our position is not that those white jurors will be unfair," attorney Lewis Pitts, a North Carolina specialist in civil rights cases, said Wednesday. "But the Constitution guarantees a cross-section of the community (on juries) and therefore black representation."

"It's the government that has discriminated against black people," he said after challenges by the prosecution eliminated the six blacks in the pool of 47 prospective jurors. The government had six strikes. They exercised all six strikes against six black jurors."

U.S. Attorney Frank Donaldson of Birmingham, contacted at home Wednesday night, said he was aware an all-white jury had been selected, adding, "I have no comment to any question in view of the fact that we are in the trial of the case and have other trials coming."

Spiver Gordon, 46, and Fredrick Daniels, 37, are accused of improper use of absentee ballots in the September 1984 Democratic primary and runoff elections in Greene County.

A total of five Greene County residents were indicted. The trials of two, Union Mayor James Colvin and deputy registrar Bobbie Nell Simpson, ended in mistrials after black jurors refused to vote for convictions. Bessie J. Underwood, 31, of Eutaw, faces trial Oct. 15 in Birmingham.

"I think the government's action was shameful," Gordon said after 12 white jurors and two white alternates were chosen. He said the prosecution's action was a sign of desperation in trying to convict him and Daniels.

"They want to win and they feel the only way they can win is to get all of the black jurors off," he said. "They are prejudging not only the blacks but also the white jurors — that they will automatically vote to convict."

Gordon and Daniels were charged following a federal Justice Department probe of voting practices in five mostly black west Alabama counties.

Black leaders nationwide have criticized the Justice Department's action in the cases, accusing the Reagan administration of trying to undermine minority voting strength.

Federal agents have argued that blacks filed complaints with the Justice Department and helped the FBI in the probe.

Pitts twice sought a mistrial Wednesday and asked U.S. District Judge E.B. Haltom Jr. to declare the government guilty of misconduct.

"Our allegation was that they were discriminatorily exercising their strikes to ensure that no blacks would be seated," he explained. "The judge overruled our motions."

Gordon originally was indicted on 37 counts of vote and mail fraud, but the government dropped 14 of those counts Monday. Daniels, a nursing home worker from Eutaw, faces 10 counts of fraud.

In a similar trial, three Perry County black leaders were acquitted of vote fraud charges in July.

A congressional hearing on the Justice Department probe was set for today in Washington, D.C.

Former Order member says all broke oath, surrendered

SEATTLE (AP) — A former member of the white supremacist group The Order says he believes the group's late founder was the only member to stick by the organization's oath.

William Soderquist, who underwent a second day of detailed grilling Wednesday by defense attorneys for 10 alleged Order members on trial in federal court for racketeering, agreed that he broke The Order's vow never to bargain with authorities.

But he said he believed that the group's founder, Robert Mathews, who was killed in a shootout in December with FBI agents, was the only Order member who lived by the oath.

"Everyone here, by surrendering, has broken the oath," he said, referring to the defendants.

Soderquist, 22, called Mathews a good friend and said that after Mathews died he had a falling out with more religious members.

Soderquist testified earlier that he had been fined heavily for infractions of Order rules and that leaders of the group had discussed keeping him and other younger members "legal," or away from the group's criminal activities.

He conceded that he may not have been kept well informed of the group's activities and development toward the end but insisted he was very close to Mathews at the beginning and was aware of all group activities around the group's fall 1983 founding and early days.

Soderquist testified under a deal with the government that exempts him from prosecution in the case, in which the government claims the defendants and 13 others committed a string of crimes with the goal of overthrowing the government and eliminating Jews and racial minorities.

He is the second former Order member to testify. The first was Denver Daw Parmenter II, who agreed to testify in exchange for a 20-year prison sentence on one count of racketeering.

The government alleges in a 21-count indictment that Order members committed 67 individual crimes, including the machine-gun death of Denver radio host Alan Berg, another homicide, counterfeiting and armored-car and bank robberies.

Heterosexual transfer of AIDS virus spreading

WASHINGTON (AP) — German prostitutes have infected some U.S. soldiers with AIDS, and those soldiers appear to be spreading the disease to wives and girlfriends, as heterosexual transmission of AIDS moves from theory to reality, a Harvard researcher testified today.

Dr. William A. Haseltine of the Harvard Medical School told a Senate hearing that an Army study found that 5 percent of the U.S. soldiers in Berlin seeking treatment for veneral disease are infected with the AIDS virus.

He said they apparently were infected by local prostitutes. Among prostitutes surveyed, he said, 20 percent to 50 percent were infected with AIDS.

Blood samples by the Army have shown that an infected male soldier can transmit the AIDS virus to a female sexual partner, and that she in turn can transmit the virus to other males, Haseltine said.

And, he added, there are some reports indicating lesbian women can spread the disease to other women.

"A lethal veneral disease is now spreading through our population, all the more dangerous because infections may remain inapparent for a long time," Haseltine said in testimony prepared for the Senate appropriations subcommittee on health.

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, kills its victim by destroying the immune system, leaving the body fatally vulnerable to diseases that ordinarily could be overcome easily. Statistics from the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta show that as of this month, 13,228 people in the United States have contracted AIDS and 6,758 have died. No one has been cured.

Homosexual men have been its principal victims, and many have thought of it as a disease of homosexuality. But, said Haseltine, "in retrospect it appears that the original focus on the sexual practices of homosexuals...was misplaced."

He said the expected route for the spread through the heterosexual population is becoming chillingly clear:

Transmission of the AIDS virus among drug addicts through shared needles is occurring with "extraordinary rapidity," he said, with recent surveys showing 60 percent to 80 percent of Manhattan drug addicts infected with AIDS.

Drug abuse by prostitutes is common, providing a link between addicts and non-drug-abusing heterosexuals.

Once among heterosexuals, AIDS can spread like any venereal disease — but in addition, according to scientists, people with AIDS can spread it for several years before exhibiting symptoms themselves.

To estimate the possible spread, Haseltine said, one could look at the sexually transmitted disease, chlamydia, which also is spread by people who generally do not know they are infected.

An easy test for chlamydia was only recently developed. When applied widely on college campuses, Haseltine said, the test found the disease among 20 percent to 30 percent of college women.

"Unless sexual practices change dramatically in this country, it seems likely that infection of our young population with the AIDS virus may reach similar high levels," he said.

The Senate hearing was called by Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., to determine whether the government is doing enough to combat AIDS. In the fiscal year just ending, Weicker said last week, the administration has spent $104.3 million on AIDS research, and the Senate is considering an appropriation of $136.6 million for AIDS research in the fiscal year beginning next Tuesday.

Critics have charged that the administration is short-changing AIDS research.

AIDS threatens general public, most believe

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Eight out of 10 Americans now consider AIDS a threat to the general public, and it equals cancer in being named as the greatest perceived health problem facing the nation, according to a new Washington Post-ABC News Poll.

But at the same time, despite such strong concern, the national survey suggests there is not a public panic about the disease. It suggests that may be so in part because a significant percentage of the population is knowledgeable about who gets the disease and how it is spread.

Three out of four people said they were not afraid personally of picking up the virus that causes the disease. A similiar proportion said they were not taking special precautions to avoid exposure to it.

And again, despite widespread public debate in recent weeks as to whether children with AIDS should be allowed to attend school, more than six in 10 adults favored doing so if health officials say there is no danger. Fewer than one in five said that they would be very upset at a proposal to locate an AIDS patient treatment and housing center in their neighborhood.

Federal health authorities have repeatedly stressed, and the media has repeatedly reported that the disease appears to be spread only through intimate exposure to bodily fluids, largely through sexual contact, and not through casual contact. A large number of those sampled accurately reflected some of the main points made by officials and the media.

In the poll, 48 percent felt that they knew "a great deal" or a "good amount" about AIDS; 63 percent had a good idea of the number of reported AIDS cases to date; about 75 percent knew that it affected particular groups of the population, particularly homosexual men, as well as drug addicts and hemophiliacs.

Though a majority did not favor more restrictive actions against AIDS victims, a significant minority did. Also, although a large majority said AIDS children should remain in school, about one-third opposed it.

And just over one-fourth said they favored putting people with AIDS "into quarantine in special places to keep them away from the general public."

Six-year 'itch'

Believe it or not, political leaders of the two major parties have already started to plan for the 1986 Senate races, in which control of the upper chamber will be at stake.

With that much at stake, you can bet politics will be heating up — steadily and strongly.

Republicans control it now, 53 to 47, and will have been in charge for six years by the time the next election rolls around. But history tells us that is no guarantee of continued dominance.

Democrats know they can take over by winning just four more seats. They like to point out that on a number of occasions in the past a sitting president's party that has controlled the Senate for six years has suffered setbacks. That's whimsically referred to as the "six-year itch." And the Democrats want to see the GOP itching furiously in next year's election.

The itch broke out and plagued the president's party in 1918, 1938, 1958, 1966 and 1974. Losses ranged from four seats to 13, with the average being seven.

This is why the Democrats were gleeful when Nevada's Republican Paul Laxalt, considered a shoo-in for 1986, decided not to run again. But the Republicans are far from gloomy about next year's prospects. The Democrats will lose some of their key players next year, including Senators Long of Louisiana and Eagleton of Missouri. Colorado's Hart may depart, and California'a Cranston is considered beatable.

The GOP sees two other rays of hope. One is President Reagan's continuing popularity. His coattails will be flying all over the place in next year's campaigns.

That doesn't mean the "itch" has been conquered, of course. But if there isn't a desire to "scratch" maybe the "itch" won't be as severe as in the past.

Perhaps there is a correlation. The tragic airline crashes of recent weeks did have some positive aspects. Everyone who survived was wearing a seat belt, even four people in the Japanese plane that flew into a mountain. The fact that anyone survived that crash is incredible. It may surprise some to learn that 80% of all general aviation accidents result in no injuries whatsoever. And, if you think that airplanes are built stronger than cars, think again — automotive seat and restraint systems are required by law to be one-third stronger than aircraft restraint systems.

3. Take a defensive driving course that includes a road phase of instruction. If the course is any good, you will graduate with bruised knees and elbows from being flailed about the inside of the car. This will occur even with seat belts fastened and no collisions, just evasive maneuvers. You'll be convinced that you can't properly control a car to avoid an accident unless you're belted in place.

4. You cannot imagine the forces acting on your body during an accident. Even snugly-tied tennis shoes can be pulled from your feet. You can't possibly brace yourself against such impacts. Vehicles sold in the U.S. must provide crash protection to the extent that belted-in passengers could be expected to survive a frontal impact at a speed of 30 mph. Almost all vehicles tested by the government failed this test at only 35 mph.

5. You are 22 times more likely to die if you are thrown from the vehicle. One of the Midland Reporter-Telegram's own staff writers died this way a few years ago.

Why am I such a strong believer in seat belts? I've seen both sides of a windshield without benefit of a door. I know what it's like. My father took me to see the wreckage of our car afterwards. I saw my own hair and blood imbedded in the glass. Seat belts could have prevented it. Seat belts work.

Law or no law, the fact is this: If you don't wear seat belts, you're stupid!

Spitting fire over KMID

I read the complaints in letters to the editor about KMID-TV and disagreed completely. But I stand corrected.

After paying closer attention to the news and sports I have come to the conclusion that KMID should be renamed "OPPN" — meaning Odessa and Permian Panther News. No longer will I watch a news team that makes me spit fire with anger.

To Skip: "Have you hugged a Mojo today?"

To J. Gordon: "I'll miss you."

To Midland Reporter-Telegram: "Thanks you for giving us the Lee High and Midland High news."

French seek credit for AIDS work

WASHINGTON — Scientists at the prestigious Pasteur Institute in Paris claim that U.S. researchers have stolen credit for the French discovery of the AIDS virus and illegally patented a blood-testing kit that identifies the presence of the deadly virus.

Jack Anderson

At stake may be a Nobel Prize, not to mention millions of dollars in royalties from the sale of the patented test kits. The French want their share of both glory and money.

The French, threatening court action, have sent documents buttressing their claims to the Health and Human Services Department, demanding recognition of U.S. researchers' reliance on the Pasteur Institute. The documents, seen by our associate Corky Johnson, present a powerful case. Here are the highlights:

— In the spring of 1983, Dr. Luc Montagnier of the Pasteur Institute reported his suspicion that a virus was the cause of the dread disease. American scientists were eager to learn more. An article Montagnier wrote for Science magazine was edited and endorsed by Dr. Robert Gallo, chief AIDS researcher at the National Cancer Institute.

Montagnier met with Gallo and his team to discuss the virus, and subsequent correspondence was on a first-name basis.

— Letters from Gallo to Montagnier asked for virus samples and permission to clone them. A receipt for two samples of the French AIDS virus was signed by a Gallo researcher on Sept. 23, 1983.

— The French stipulated that the samples not be used for commercial purposes. Other samples and information were given to U.S. scientists. All this was long before Gallo filed for a patent. The French claim Gallo used their information to find the AIDS virus and develop a test kit, which was then patented.

In an interview, Gallo disputed the French claim, asserting that the two viruses were not the same. He said the French have not adequately isolated the AIDS virus.

— The French filed patent applications in Europe and the United States several months before Gallo's group. The U.S. Patent Office granted Gallo's patent, but has yet to act on the French application.

— In a letter to a colleague after Montagnier had identified the AIDS virus, Gallo acknowledged that he had not yet succeeded in isolating an AIDS virus himself.

— The French charged that U.S. doctors allegedly broke American and international patent laws by failing to disclose the French contribution to their AIDS research.

The French say their documents present a "prima facie case that the Montagnier team was first" to discover the AIDS virus, that the Gallo patent is based on information "derived from the Montagnier team" and therefore is not valid.

The French charge further that Gallo breached a contract with the Pasteur Institute by using the virus samples the French sent him in developing a commercial product.

The French made three demands that must be met if the United States is to avoid court action:

1. Public recognition of the Montagnier team's "invaluable contribution in first finding and identifying" the AIDS virus.

2. Freedom for the French to market their own blood-test kit "without any legal problems."

3. A share of the royalties from sale of the U.S. kit, in return for which the French would allow it to remain on the market without legal action.

Footnote: In a series of memos to each other, Health and Human Services officials stated they can successfully defend the U.S. patent in court and raise the question of why the French, if their claims are accurate, haven't marketed their own test kit in Europe.

SPOOKING THE SPOOKS: Concern about terrorism has reached almost panic proportions at CIA headquarters in suburban Langley, Va. Our sources there tell us that even the day's-end pickup of office workers by their spouses has become an occasion for tension. The employees wait outside various buildings for the family car to show up, and every now and then someone will forget a briefcase, leaving it on the sidewalk. This sets off an all-out security response, with officers sealing off the area and handling the briefcase like a terrorist-planted bomb.

MINI-EDITORIAL: For the first time in years an effort is being made in Congress to strengthen the Freedom of Information Act, not riddle it with loopholes and exemptions as the bureaucrats would like. We support wholeheartedly the effort by Reps. Glenn English, D-Okla., and Gerald Kleczka, D-Wis. The original law has been effectively eviscerated over the past five years as Reagan administration officials refuse to release information that would expose waste, mismanagement and conflicts of interest in their agencies. The public has learned a lot about their government's operations through the act — but there's still a lot to be learned.

GEORGE F. WILL

Littlest defector snubs ACLU

CHICAGO — In this city, wonderfully lumpy with unmelted ethnic neighborhoods, in Ukrainian restaurants, on Oct. 3, glasses will be raised to celebrate Walter Polovchak's birthday. The littlest defector is not so little now. He will be 18 and secure from the Soviet regime and the American Civil Liberties Union.

George F. Will

Walter was born in the Ukraine. When he was 12, his parents were allowed, inexplicably, to emigrate to the United States. Walter's father indicated his intention to return: Instead of selling his home, he "lent" it to a neighbor and gave other possessions to a KGB official. The Soviet Embassy in Washington pressured the father to require Walter and his sister to return with him. The sister soon turned 18 and was safe. Walter, having seen what makes America great — freedom and the Chicago Cubs — sought asylum. The ACLU sided tenaciously with the father. It is deplorable that only the calendar — Walter's birthday — not America's courts gave Walter a decisive victory.

The closing of Walter's case coincides with the publication of a book ("The Politics of the ACLU" by William Donahue) that shows how the ACLU has become a lobby for the left's agenda. The ACLU's support for the right to distribute child pornography or use heroin is less illuminating than this: Racial quota systems, once vigorously opposed, now are as vigorously supported. This illustrates the ACLU's result-oriented approach to constitutional rights.

Aaron Wildavsky, political scientist at Berkeley and a former ACLU member, says the ACLU has reversed traditional American thinking about equality. The traditional sequence has been: Equality of rights guarantees equality of opportunity, which will produce satisfactory equality of conditions. The ACLU reverses the sequence: Equality of condition is a prerequisite for equality of opportunity in the exercise of equal rights.

The contradiction in the ACLU program is that a government promoting equality must be powerful, but the critique of society implicit in the ACLU's ideology undermines governmental authority. It does so by defining government as the keystone of the "system" that sustains unequal conditions and therefore makes a mockery of rights and opportunity. Another glaring ACLU contradiction concerns children.

Children once were chattel of their parents, but intelligent laws have limited parental discretion — regarding the employment, schooling and medical care of children. No one, least of all the ACLU, says the law should not abridge parental sovereignty or take cognizance of children's rights.

The ACLU believes the civil rights of a child under 18 include the right to have an abortion even when both parents are opposed. Indeed, the ACLU believes a minor's civil rights are violated if her parents are even notified when she acquires contraceptives from a federally funded clinic. The ACLU has detected civil-rights ravishments in school dress codes.

Fifty states would remove Walter from the custody of parents who abused him. But the ACLU, which would fly to court to fight any employer who tried to pay Walter less than the minimum wage, supports the right of Walter's father to commit the ultimate and unappealable abuse of consigning him forever to a prison society.

Alan Dershowitz is a professor at Harvard Law School and a hyperkinetic litigant on behalf of civil liberties. He says the ACLU's behavior regarding Walter, seen in the light of policies regarding children's rights to abortions and other matters, can be understood only in terms of "an unwillingness to criticize communism."

ACLU advocates say that those judicial and other government actions that helped Walter were "political" in that they took cognizance of the nature of the Soviet regime. But of course. The problem would have been different had Walter been resisting return to, say, Denmark, where he would have been free to decide his future. Suppose Walter were black and resisting return to South Africa. Who believes the ACLU would have opposed him? While the ACLU was opposing him, the New Jersey ACLU was defending a child in a case similar except for the fact he was resisting return to Chile.

Walter's case involved ludicrous governmental brooding about whether, were he returned, he would face persecution. The Soviet regime, which tortures its most distinguished citizen, Andrei Sakharov, would take up where it left off with Walter who, as punishment for his Catholicism, was kept at school on Christmas Eve to chant Leninist slogans. Ten years of comprehensive noncompliance with the Helsinki Accords demonstrates that the Soviet regime persecutes everyone guilty of an appetite for freedom.

Walter's case is a splendid and timely embarrassment for the various Washington bureaucracies that are toiling to produce an atmosphere of false cordiality for the summit. The cordiality is supposed to facilitate the achievement at the summit of ... more accords.

Gutter bums generating civic pride

NEW YORK — After I reported sighting a lot of derelicts passed out in Manhattan gutters, five New Yorkers wrote angry letters. Five doesn't seem like many letters for a city of 7,071,639 people, unless you are in the writing business, but in the writing business, five letters is heavy mail and very encouraging. It means only 7,071,634 people would rather watch television than read.

Russell Baker

It is painful to discover that every reader in New York is angry at you unless you have a thick skin like the famous old-time thick-skinned columnists, most of whom have died, or worse, moved on to Washington.

I come from journalism's thin-skinned ranks. This prevented my becoming a success in Washington. The skin covering my nose was so thin that the underlying nose material was never able to toughen up.

As a result, I could not develop the hard nose so admired in Washington. When important people got together down there to praise themselves, they complimented each other on being hard-nosed. When my name came up, they said, "He is soft-nosed."

In Washington this was the kiss of death. To avoid an obituary that said my nose had given me the kiss of death, I went to New York.

Now the entire reading population of the city is angry. They dislike writings about derelicts unconscious in gutters. One correspondent accuses me of living in a suburb.

Yes, living in a suburb is apparently regarded by literate New York as an odious activity. Maybe it is. All I know of suburbs is what anybody might glean from implausible novels, about overheated suburban housewives.

Except for the years 1931-1937, I have never lived in a suburb. This is not because of fear of suburban housewives. It is because of a loathing for automobiles. I always live either in the city, where there is mass transit, or in the country, where, when your horse breaks down on the highway, you can shoot it and walk away.

If Detroit made a car that could be shot and abandoned when it broke down, I might have a fling at the suburbs in spite of the housewives. Then I might engage in the interesting activity which three of these letters suggests I am already up to my neck in.

This is: shipping derelicts from the suburbs to New York City.

Why would I do this? Because living in the suburbs would make me callous, inhumane and mean-spirited about paying taxes needed to treat derelicts right.

Does living in suburbs really turn Americans into rotten human beings? Or does living in New York turn them into raving paranoids?

Happily, I now live in the country where you can shoot your horse when it breaks down and get on with life instead of spending the rest of it waiting for a tow truck and visiting garages. Living under those conditions would probably make anyone but a saint take up shabby schemes to ship the derelicts to New York.

It's also nice not having to ride the subway and fight back the impulse to shed blood when the E Train disgorges all those suburbanites at Penn Station, taking Manhattan's money out while scheming to smuggle their derelicts in at the next dark of the moon.

What New York's literate population really wants, of course, is praise for their home town. Country people who come and talk about derelicts in the gutter instead of the beautiful shop windows they pressed their noses against are suspected of being captious nitpickers.

My thin skin is punctured by this suspicion. I want to whine, protest, explain, apologize, say, "You misunderstood ... "

But I won't. If word of it got through somehow — Lord only knows how — to the 7,071,634 New Yorkers glued to their TV sets, they would surely be humiliated to hear it.

There is something embarrassingly small town about insisting about being praised. San Francisco, lovely as it is, would be even lovelier if visitors weren't incessantly pressed to praise its glories. Chicago, a wonderful city, would seem a truly great city if the visitor did not feel obliged to tell Chicagoans how great their city was.

New York didn't used to demand this small-town clap on the back. Since the success of the "I Love New York" advertising campaign, though, small-town boosterism has been on the march. In the old days when you were reprimanded by a San Franciscan for calling his town "Frisco," you could wither him by pointing out that New Yorkers didn't care what you called their town.

In that self-confident spirit, let us go forward with gutters, full of bums.

All-white jury hears black activists' trial

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Federal prosecutors, unable to obtain convictions in five previous election fraud cases, used all their challenges to remove all black prospective jurors in the trial of two black activists, the defense said.

"Our position is not that those white jurors will be unfair," attorney Lewis Pitts, a North Carolina specialist in civil rights cases, said Wednesday. "But the Constitution guarantees a cross-section of the community (on juries) and therefore black representation."

"It's the government that has discriminated against black people," he said after challenges by the prosecution eliminated the six blacks in the pool of 47 prospective jurors. The government had six strikes. They exercised all six strikes against six black jurors."

U.S. Attorney Frank Donaldson of Birmingham, contacted at home Wednesday night, said he was aware an all-white jury had been selected, adding, "I have no comment to any question in view of the fact that we are in the trial of the case and have other trials coming."

Spiver Gordon, 46, and Fredrick Daniels, 37, are accused of improper use of absentee ballots in the September 1984 Democratic primary and runoff elections in Greene County.

A total of five Greene County residents were indicted. The trials of two, Union Mayor James Colvin and deputy registrar Bobbie Nell Simpson, ended in mistrials after black jurors refused to vote for convictions. Bessie J. Underwood, 31, of Eutaw, faces trial Oct. 15 in Birmingham.

"I think the government's action was shameful," Gordon said after 12 white jurors and two white alternates were chosen. He said the prosecution's action was a sign of desperation in trying to convict him and Daniels.

"They want to win and they feel the only way they can win is to get all of the black jurors off," he said. "They are prejudging not only the blacks but also the white jurors — that they will automatically vote to convict."

Gordon and Daniels were charged following a federal Justice Department probe of voting practices in five mostly black west Alabama counties.

Black leaders nationwide have criticized the Justice Department's action in the cases, accusing the Reagan administration of trying to undermine minority voting strength.

Federal agents have argued that blacks filed complaints with the Justice Department and helped the FBI in the probe.

Pitts twice sought a mistrial Wednesday and asked U.S. District Judge E.B. Haltom Jr. to declare the government guilty of misconduct.

"Our allegation was that they were discriminatorily exercising their strikes to ensure that no blacks would be seated," he explained. "The judge overruled our motions."

Gordon originally was indicted on 37 counts of vote and mail fraud, but the government dropped 14 of those counts Monday. Daniels, a nursing home worker from Eutaw, faces 10 counts of fraud.

In a similar trial, three Perry County black leaders were acquitted of vote fraud charges in July.

A congressional hearing on the Justice Department probe was set for today in Washington, D.C.

Former Order member says all broke oath, surrendered

SEATTLE (AP) — A former member of the white supremacist group The Order says he believes the group's late founder was the only member to stick by the organization's oath.

William Soderquist, who underwent a second day of detailed grilling Wednesday by defense attorneys for 10 alleged Order members on trial in federal court for racketeering, agreed that he broke The Order's vow never to bargain with authorities.

But he said he believed that the group's founder, Robert Mathews, who was killed in a shootout in December with FBI agents, was the only Order member who lived by the oath.

"Everyone here, by surrendering, has broken the oath," he said, referring to the defendants.

Soderquist, 22, called Mathews a good friend and said that after Mathews died he had a falling out with more religious members.

Soderquist testified earlier that he had been fined heavily for infractions of Order rules and that leaders of the group had discussed keeping him and other younger members "legal," or away from the group's criminal activities.

He conceded that he may not have been kept well informed of the group's activities and development toward the end but insisted he was very close to Mathews at the beginning and was aware of all group activities around the group's fall 1983 founding and early days.

Soderquist testified under a deal with the government that exempts him from prosecution in the case, in which the government claims the defendants and 13 others committed a string of crimes with the goal of overthrowing the government and eliminating Jews and racial minorities.

He is the second former Order member to testify. The first was Denver Daw Parmenter II, who agreed to testify in exchange for a 20-year prison sentence on one count of racketeering.

The government alleges in a 21-count indictment that Order members committed 67 individual crimes, including the machine-gun death of Denver radio host Alan Berg, another homicide, counterfeiting and armored-car and bank robberies.

Heterosexual transfer of AIDS virus spreading

WASHINGTON (AP) — German prostitutes have infected some U.S. soldiers with AIDS, and those soldiers appear to be spreading the disease to wives and girlfriends, as heterosexual transmission of AIDS moves from theory to reality, a Harvard researcher testified today.

Dr. William A. Haseltine of the Harvard Medical School told a Senate hearing that an Army study found that 5 percent of the U.S. soldiers in Berlin seeking treatment for veneral disease are infected with the AIDS virus.

He said they apparently were infected by local prostitutes. Among prostitutes surveyed, he said, 20 percent to 50 percent were infected with AIDS.

Blood samples by the Army have shown that an infected male soldier can transmit the AIDS virus to a female sexual partner, and that she in turn can transmit the virus to other males, Haseltine said.

And, he added, there are some reports indicating lesbian women can spread the disease to other women.

"A lethal veneral disease is now spreading through our population, all the more dangerous because infections may remain inapparent for a long time," Haseltine said in testimony prepared for the Senate appropriations subcommittee on health.

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, kills its victim by destroying the immune system, leaving the body fatally vulnerable to diseases that ordinarily could be overcome easily. Statistics from the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta show that as of this month, 13,228 people in the United States have contracted AIDS and 6,758 have died. No one has been cured.

Homosexual men have been its principal victims, and many have thought of it as a disease of homosexuality. But, said Haseltine, "in retrospect it appears that the original focus on the sexual practices of homosexuals...was misplaced."

He said the expected route for the spread through the heterosexual population is becoming chillingly clear:

Transmission of the AIDS virus among drug addicts through shared needles is occurring with "extraordinary rapidity," he said, with recent surveys showing 60 percent to 80 percent of Manhattan drug addicts infected with AIDS.

Drug abuse by prostitutes is common, providing a link between addicts and non-drug-abusing heterosexuals.

Once among heterosexuals, AIDS can spread like any venereal disease — but in addition, according to scientists, people with AIDS can spread it for several years before exhibiting symptoms themselves.

To estimate the possible spread, Haseltine said, one could look at the sexually transmitted disease, chlamydia, which also is spread by people who generally do not know they are infected.

An easy test for chlamydia was only recently developed. When applied widely on college campuses, Haseltine said, the test found the disease among 20 percent to 30 percent of college women.

"Unless sexual practices change dramatically in this country, it seems likely that infection of our young population with the AIDS virus may reach similar high levels," he said.

The Senate hearing was called by Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., to determine whether the government is doing enough to combat AIDS. In the fiscal year just ending, Weicker said last week, the administration has spent $104.3 million on AIDS research, and the Senate is considering an appropriation of $136.6 million for AIDS research in the fiscal year beginning next Tuesday.

Critics have charged that the administration is short-changing AIDS research.

AIDS threatens general public, most believe

Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Eight out of 10 Americans now consider AIDS a threat to the general public, and it equals cancer in being named as the greatest perceived health problem facing the nation, according to a new Washington Post-ABC News Poll.

But at the same time, despite such strong concern, the national survey suggests there is not a public panic about the disease. It suggests that may be so in part because a significant percentage of the population is knowledgeable about who gets the disease and how it is spread.

Three out of four people said they were not afraid personally of picking up the virus that causes the disease. A similiar proportion said they were not taking special precautions to avoid exposure to it.

And again, despite widespread public debate in recent weeks as to whether children with AIDS should be allowed to attend school, more than six in 10 adults favored doing so if health officials say there is no danger. Fewer than one in five said that they would be very upset at a proposal to locate an AIDS patient treatment and housing center in their neighborhood.

Federal health authorities have repeatedly stressed, and the media has repeatedly reported that the disease appears to be spread only through intimate exposure to bodily fluids, largely through sexual contact, and not through casual contact. A large number of those sampled accurately reflected some of the main points made by officials and the media.

In the poll, 48 percent felt that they knew "a great deal" or a "good amount" about AIDS; 63 percent had a good idea of the number of reported AIDS cases to date; about 75 percent knew that it affected particular groups of the population, particularly homosexual men, as well as drug addicts and hemophiliacs.

Though a majority did not favor more restrictive actions against AIDS victims, a significant minority did. Also, although a large majority said AIDS children should remain in school, about one-third opposed it.

And just over one-fourth said they favored putting people with AIDS "into quarantine in special places to keep them away from the general public."

Temperature should stay in cool range

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders can continue to save on their cooling bills, with fair weather expected to continue tonight and into Friday.

Tonight lows are expected to dip into the mid-50s. Winds will be southeasterly from 5-10 mph, according to forecasters.

Friday's weather is predicted to be fair with a high in the upper 80s. Gusty winds are expected at 10 to 20 mph, the National Weather Service reports.

Today's low of 50 degrees was 4 degrees above the record low of 46 degrees in 1984. Wednesday's high was 26 degrees below the record high of 102 degrees in 1977.

STATE

A high pressure dome settled across the northern half of Texas today, bringing clearing skies and slightly cooler temperatures to North Texas.

Showers and thunderstorms triggered by a fast-moving cold front were reported over South Texas today. Some of the thunderstorms, located along the cold front from the uppper Texas coast to the Lower Rio Grande Valley north of Brownsville, were described as heavy.

Forecasts called for light rain in the Texas Panhandle with clear skies expected across North Texas and mostly cloudy skies with thundershowers across the southern half of the state.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 50s and 60s except for readings in the mid 40s in the mountains of West Texas and Southwest Texas. Highs Friday will be mostly in the 70s and 80s with a few readings expected to reach the lower 90s in South Texas and Southwest Texas in the Big Bend area.

Early morning temperatures were in the upper 40s and lower 50s across North Central Texas, the High Plains and the Panhandle and in the 60s and 70s elsewhere. Extremes ranged from 48 at Amarillo to 75 at Brownsville.

NATION

Rain was scattered from the nation's midsection into Texas today and much of the West was clear as Hurricane Gloria pushed through the Atlantic toward land.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered from the lower Ohio Valley across the lower Mississippi Valley to southern Texas. Rain spread across the Great Lakes region and the Texas Panhandle.

Steers pose 'attitude check' for Bulldogs

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

BIG SPRING — When the final seconds ticked off the clock for Midland High Friday night at Lowrey Field in Lubbock, it was time to develop a slightly different attitude. Not only did the Bulldogs have to learn to cope with a loss, 19-13 to Lubbock Estacado, but also to the fact that every game from then on would really count.

Not that the game against the No. 7 ranked 4A Matadors had no meaning — every team goes into every game with the thought of winning — it's just that now Midland High and the seven other District 4-5A schools are heading into league play and every game counts toward a possible playoff berth. Previous results no longer have any baring on the outcome of the race.

"This is what it's all about, when you get into the district race," said MHS head coach Doug McCutchen. "The players get more enthusiasim, more excited than in non-district games."

Friday night, the Bulldogs will open the 1985 district race on the road, taking on the Big Spring Steers at 8 p.m.

Both the Bulldogs and Steers run out of the veer attack but use a slightly different style. Where MHS is willing to air out the ball, Big Spring prefers to run it.

"The alignments' are the same," said Big Spring head coach Quinn Eudy. "We both run out of a split back formation, run a veer set. We're probably a truer veer team in that we like to run the ball more. They've probably thrown the ball more than we have."

Under the guidance of second-year quarterback Matt Marcum, the Bulldogs have balanced their attack between rushing and passing. In three games, Marcum has hit 35-of-70 passes for 573 yards and two touchdowns. The negative part of his statistics are the interceptions, seven, two of which were returned for TDs against Estacado.

"I think, yardage wise, we've got a good balance," said McCutchen. "But, we're still not quite as efficient at running the ball as we'd like to be. And, the last two ball games, we've had six interceptions and that bothers us a little."

Flanker Kenny De La Garza has been Marcum's favorite receiver to date, catching 15 passes for 205 yards and two TDs. Also, Bobby Williams has nine receptions for 186 yards and Jake Madrid six for 108 yards.

On the ground, Madrid is averaging 7.3 yards per carry. In 24 attempts, the senior halfback has covered 175 yards and scored two TDs.

Mark Johnson has been the player to get the call in close when MHS needs a score, leading the team with five TDs. Johnson has 132 yards on 38 carries for a 3.5 average.

"The first thing we have to do is stop the run," said Eudy. "They're real, real good at throwing the football. I think we have to get some rush on the quarterback, mix it up. I don't think you can sit back there and give him (Marcum) a lot of time to throw the football.

"They've got a well balanced attack, one of the better offenses I've seen. They run the ball well and have a good group of receivers to throw the ball to. De La Garza is a threat, Williams, I like him quite a bit and Madrid coming out of the backfield. They aren't tied down to one receiver."

What has made Midland High's passing game as successful as it has been is the offensive line. Marcum and McCutchen both quickly point to the hogs up front for the protection they are giving the quarterback.

"Marcum still hasn't been sacked yet through three ball games," said McCutchen. "Estacado got through one time to deflect a pass, but the still haven't sacked him."

NCAA begins inquiry of TCU

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — As an NCAA investigator began an on-campus inquiry into the school's recruiting scandal, a newspaper reported that it had learned that three of seven suspended Texas Christian University players bought new cars in 1982 before playing for the Horned Frogs.

Records at the Texas Department of Motor Vehicles show that all-America running back Kenneth Davis, Egypt Allen and Gearld Taylor purchased new cars and that Davis' car was purchased with cash, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported today.

Davis was being billed as a Heisman Trophy candidate before he was booted off the team last week.

Davis, Allen and Taylor were dismissed from the team last week by head coach Jim Wacker when they admitted receiving payments from boosters, an NCAA violation. But the three players denied that money from alumni was used to purchase the cars, the Star-Telegram said.

DAVIS SAID a girlfriend bought his Camaro. Allen said he paid for his car by selling some livestock. Taylor said his mother helped him with a loan he obtained to buy his car.

"Let's call her Lady X," Davis told the Star-Telegram about the girlfriend who purchased the car. "She paid cash. (The car) was an Indy 500 pace car. It was $14,900 in cold cash."

Meanwhile, athletic directors from the nine SWC schools were convening in Dallas for a two-day meeting, and conference commissioner Fred Jacoby said ways to curb overzealous boosters would likely be discussed.

TCU's recruiting scandal broke after one player, thought to be Davis, admitted to an assistant coach after a team meeting last week that he and others had been accepting money from alumni, an NCAA violation.

Wacker, who has preached against illegal recruiting since his arrival and vowed he would run a clean ship, responded by suspending all of them from the team and informing school, Southwest Conference and NCAA officials of the problem.

The next day, TCU alumnus Dick Lowe, a prominent Fort Worth businessman and a member of the TCU board of regents, admitted publicly his role in providing money to Davis and other players.

He resigned his seat on the regents and spelled out his involvement in a lengthy letter to TCU's president that he also made available to the news media. Lowe said he would cooperate fully with NCAA investigators in their probe.

TCU requested an immediate NCAA investigation, and an investigator arrived on campus Wednesday.

The emotional strain was beginning to show on Wacker, who broke down and cried at a staff meeting because of all the turmoil the school was going through, a source said.

Concerning the latest revelations, the Star-Telegram said Lowe denied Wednesday that he participated in efforts to buy or finance cars for TCU players.

BUT IT was possible for a booster to pay for the car indirectly, Lowe told the newspaper.

"You'd give his folks the money for the down payment," Lowe said, "and then give the kid money for the monthly payments as it went along. I was never involved and don't know any of alumni involved."

Athletic Director Frank Windegger also denied any knowledge of cars being purchased by alumni for the players.

"We know there have been illegal payments," Windegger said, "but we do not know anything about cars." He did admit having suspicions in the past.

Over the past five years, Windegger said, he ran spot checks of registrations of cars belonging to TCU athletes after noticing that some players were driving expensive automobiles.

"I would get whatever I could gather, but it was something I couldn't go any further on," Windegger said.

Achieving Perfection

In recent months, four Midlanders have rolled perfect games at Tall City Lanes. This spring, in the Women's City Bowling Tournament, Sandy Crenshaw became the first woman in Midland to roll a 300. Lonnie Truelove followed with his 300 a little more than a month ago and, last week, Bill Theobald and Brent Gallagher both accomplished the feat in the same Monday night scratch league. From left to right, the bowlers are: Truelove, Theobald, Crenshaw and Gallagher.

From Staff Reports

The sale of tickets for Friday night's Midland Lee-San Angelo football game started Wednesday at the Memorial Stadium ticket office with a steady stream of District 4-5A fans, but tickets still remain.

The game is a possible sellout, but Edwin Nixon, Midland's assistant athletic director, expects there will be plenty of tickets available up to the 8 p.m. game time Friday.

"We had a steady stream of people buying tickets Wednesday," said Nixon. "We sold around 400 adult tickets, but we had around 2,200 to sell. We also expect San Angelo to return some tickets for sale prior to game time."

The game has been tabbed as Texas' Game of the Week.

Memorial Stadium ticket offices are open until 5 p.m. today and through the noon hour Friday. Tickets will be sold at the gate. Tickets are $5 per person.

Former Reb plays through injury

By OWEN CANFIELD
Associated Press Writer

STILLWATER, Okla. — Kenneth Brown came out of high school in Midland, Texas, four years ago with the intention of catching touchdown passes, headlines and recognition as an Oklahoma State split end.

Four years later, Brown has three receptions for 36 yards, no touchdowns and no headlines. He's not even a split end anymore; he's a tight end, more a blocker than a receiver.

And, the one-time starter is now a backup, to J.R. Dillard.

IT HAS been a rough time for the 6-foot-5, 220-pound redshirt junior, who was a high school star at Midland Lee. Even Coach Pat Jones says Brown could easily have packed his bags and returned home.

"Something kept me here," Brown said recently. "I talked to a lot of people who said I had a lot going for me, and that if I stuck it out, it would pay off for me."

The cause of Brown's problems is a bum knee. As a second-year freshman, Brown was named the Cowboys' starting split end for the 1982 season. During pre-game warmups, however, he twisted his right knee while running a pass pattern and the troubles began.

"I just twisted it out of shape," Brown said. "There was something wrong with it and I didn't know it."

He continued to practice on and off, but did not play and was granted a hardship ruling that gave him another year of eligibility. Along came people such as Jamie Harris and Malcolm Lewis who took Brown's place in the starting lineup.

AFTER THAT season, Brown had arthroscopic surgery on the knee.

"Then I tried to come back during two-a-days and I hurt the same knee again," he said. "I basically missed a whole year. I went out and practiced but I wasn't doing much, and I wasn't happy about it, either."

What made matters worse, he said, was that he felt like an outcast.

"Some of the coaches thought I was just trying to stay out of practice. Some thought I wasn't hurt at all," Brown said. "I really felt that they didn't want me around."

Jones, who says the Oklahoma State trainers told him some players are able to play with the same type of knee problems, is the main reason Brown is still playing.

"I talked with Coach Jones at least three times about leaving, and told him I just didn't have it in me," Brown said. "He told me I still had a lot at stake. He's about the only one who didn't lose faith in me."

Jones refuses to take much credit, but says he is proud of the way Brown has seen his way through the bad times.

"I've always liked Kenneth," Jones said. "Now we're asking him to do something he didn't want to do. He still wants to play split end, I know that and he knows that.

"But he'll win a ball game for us before it's all said and done."

THAT WOULD be sweet for Brown, who since high school has changed his outlook.

"Like the majority of people, I thought I was going to come to college and be a stud," he said. "But that doesn't matter now, since I'm getting to play. Now that I'm getting a chance to play and helping the team, I'm getting to like tight end."

Mojo after sixth straight title

District 4-5A is about to launch the 1985 season into orbit and, once again, we find a lot of familiar sights floating around. Some recently unseen sights as well.

Of course, there's that black cat in Odessa sitting atop the pile of Texas teams in the high school poll. Right now, Permian is ranked No. 1 in every Lone Star State poll you can think of and is somewhere in the Top 6 or 7 in the national ratings.

As expected, the Panthers swept through pre-district without so much as a kind thought to their opponents, racking up a one-sided 131-7 showing over a couple of El Paso schools and Fort Worth Eastern Hills. FWEH, it should be noted, was the elite of the three. It managed to score a touchdown.

This year, Mojo coach John Wilkins is guiding his troops to what he hopes will be a record sixth consecutive 4-5A title and a second straight appearance in the 5A championship game. Last year, it should be noted for those who have forgotten, Permian tied Beaumont French, 21-21, and had to share the state title honor.

Should Permian, or another team in 4-5A make it back to Austin this year, it will be the third consecutive season the district has gone into the final game. In 1983, Midland Lee — the only 4-5A team of the 80s to beat Permian and the Rebels did it twice only to suffer the same fate in '84 — lost out to Converse Judson to finish second.

WHILE THE Panthers are nearly unscathed, not counting the loss of starting quarterback Rich Fletcher, their main rival the past two years didn't fare quite as well in pre-district. The Lee Rebels are going into Friday's district opener against San Angelo with a 2-1 record.

Lee's lone loss came at the hands of the Temple Wildcats, who were anything like the kitty the Rebels tamed 35-7 in '84 on their way to a second straight playoff and eventual quarterfinal berth. The Wildcats resharpened their claws and cut deep gashes in Lee's pride.

Still, like Permian, the Rebels destroyed the teams they were supposed to beat, winning in 102-26 style.

There is a sight this year at Lee even stranger than seeing a loss in the standings. For the first time in three years, the Rebels are going into district without the services of the one-two running back punch of Tyrone Thurman and Walter Jones.

Both are now freshmen at Texas Tech this year and Thurman is starting to make a name for himself as a wide receiver and kick returner. "Little," as Thurman was called when he played at Lee, is proving that a dimunitive stature is of no consequence in what was once called a "big man's game." Sort of sounds like another Midland athlete of recent times, a 5-foot-6 basketball player named Spud Webb.

ONCE AGAIN, Midland High is making a strong early season showing, posting a 2-1 record against one of the strongest pre-district schedules this side of Big Spring. After beating Lubbock Monterey and "always-tough" Andrews, the Bulldogs suffered their lone setback against 4A's No. 7 rated Lubbock Estacado Matadors, 19-13.

Moving around the league, the sights are up-and-down in comparison to the '84 season.

Odessa High has rebounded from a 3-7 '84 record with a vengence. The Bronchos have destroyed all-comers in pre-district and own a 3-0 record. OHS graduated very few players last year and the experience is showing.

San Angelo and Abilene High, the teams that finshed third and fourth respectively last year, have also demanded a spot in the playoff picture by virtue of their 3-0 starts. Both are in for rough district openers as the Bobcats come to the Tall City Friday to take on Lee and the Eagles host Permian. Both also want to shrug the contender roll they've held and become bona-fide.

Except for OHS, which looks to be vastly improved this year and should stay away from the bottom of the standings, the cellar has the same faces as last year, only the teams look a little worse.

Abilene Cooper, with maybe the toughest schedule of the entire district, came out of pre-district with a 0-3 record. The Cougars look to go 0-4 since they travel to Odessa Friday to take on OHS. Last year, Cooper won 2-of-3 pre-district games but a schedule with the likes of Temple and Brownwood makes for a long road.

Big Spring wasn't able to match last year's 2-of-3 start, losing the first two games before "putting it all together," as they say, and whalloping Lubbock Monterey, 35-0.

The Steers open at home Friday against Midland High, a team that has also played and beaten Monterey as well as losing to Estacado.

MHS

In the Steers' victory over Monterey Friday, a heavy rain poured down on an already soaked field, making the playing surface a pool of mud.

"I'd swear you could see the players' feet sinking into the ground," said Eudy. "We played the first half on a wet field and the second half, in a real gully-washer. It was raining hard."

Eudy expects the field to be in good shape for Friday's game with Midland High.

With a 1-2 record, the Steers are behind last year's 2-1 start, but McCutchen believes they are still a better team, despite an immense amount of youth.

"We'll have to play well to beat them," said McCutchen. "We can't afford the turnovers we've had lately. They're a young team in the secondary and young at running back."

Actually, Big Spring is young all around.

"We started seven of our players last year as juniors, said Eudy.

Tailback Phillip Matthews, fullback James Harlin, defensive tackle Jay Burcham, nose guard Todd Coker, linebackerss Robert Sumner and Mike Cahill and safety Matt Garrett are all juniors while flanker Brian Mayfield, offensive tackle Matt Burrow, cornerback Danny Williams and safety Matt Garrett are all sophomores.

BULLDOG NOTES: Tight end Bobby Williams will see double duty against the Steers Friday night, filling in for injured Steve Pruitt at linebacker...Richard Triplett has been promoted to the starting defensive lineup, replacing Phillip Speight at tackle. Speight is still a starter at offensive tackle...The MHS JV snapped a 12-game losing streak last week with a 22-12 victory over Big Spring for a 1-2 record this year... Like last year, the MHS sophomores are having a good year. So far the newcomers are 2-0 and have yet to give up a point. The sophs beat the Pecos sophomores, 28-0, and Andrews JV, 21-0.

NEW YORK — Jim Garrett has coached the Columbia University football team for only one game but his back is already against the goal line and the wind is already in his face.

He put himself in that position last Saturday with a postgame tirade against his punter, Peter Murphy, and by comparing his players' tendency to lose with the psychological weakness of drug-addicts following a 49-17 loss to Harvard after Columbia had taken a 17-0 lead.

These two outbursts earned Garrett reprimands from Dr. Norman N. Mintz, the executive vice president for academic affairs, and Al Paul, the athletic director, Monday.

"We don't condone what he said or the way he said it," Paul said. "We know we do not expect anything like that in the future."

How long Garrett's future will be at Columbia will depend less on his won-lost record than on his ability to control himself. At the age of 55, he brought a reputation for volatility from earlier coaching jobs at Susquehanna, where he belted the helmet of a player during a game two decades ago, and at Millburn High in New Jersey, where he coached briefly in 1975.

When Garrett was hired by Columbia last winter, he told his new employers that he would try to change the atmosphere in a program that had produced only four victories and two ties in the previous 49 games.

"I'm insulting and demanding and I'll put a spotlight on a player who's erred and make it clear that he's let us down," he said.

At Columbia University, where people feel more strongly about apartheid than touchdowns, where there are collection boxes for earthquake-stricken Mexico but no visible football posters or letter sweaters, people were not prepared for what Garrett did and said last Saturday.

"I'm from Sooner Country — Norman, Okla., and I came here to get away from that rah-rah spirit," said Susan Hancock, a senior.

At the major football foundaries, where the entire campus vibrates with football all fall and even during the spring football drills, almost any kind of behavior from a coach is acceptable as long as he manages to win almost all his games. But even at the biggest of the big-time schools, an outburst like Garrett's last Saturday might seem over the line.

He had seen his team take a 17-0 lead against a better-regarded Harvard team, but then fade in the middle of the third period. After the game, he berated several key players but particularly Murphy, a senior punter who had been an honorable mention Ivy League last fall with a 35.5 punting average. On Saturday, Murphy averaged 38.5 yards, but Garrett was not impressed with the low trajectory and limited "hang time" of the punts.

"The punting killed us," Garrett said. "Absolutely killed us." And he added: "I just told the squad he'll never kick for me again." I want to see him when he graduates and goes to work downtown on Wall Street and does three things that he did today."

Garrett also compared his players with "drug-addicted losers," saying: "One adversity comes and bang! They're right back in the sewer again." He coach did not suggest that any of his players had an actual drug problem, according to Chris Riga, a junior guard.

"We're interpreting the way he meant it was, 'You're LIKE drug addicts.' He's talking about an addiction to losing," Riga said. "You're a little surprised to see it in the papers, but it's because he cares."

It would be hard to suggest to the family of Murphy that Garrett cares. Murphy dashed from the locker room Saturday and it was still unclear Monday evening whether he would return to the team. His parents had two conversations with Paul and they have every right to go to the top of the ladder at Columbia University, to the president, Michael I. Sovern, to ask if this public scapegoating of a player is what Columbia wants. Sovern declined to be interviewed Monday.

Garrett's voice was hoarse as he said, "I understand I made a gross error" in using the drug-addiction simile.

Garrett, who has one son on the squad, one on the freshman team and one sitting out a year as a transfer, added: "My wife is on my back. She says: 'You're labelling my three children. Keep your mouth shut.' You know how emotional mothers can be. I'm fully willing to say I made a mistake, but our good Lord said he forgives everyone. I have a strong character. I can admit I'm wrong."

High noon for 7-7 cager

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — It is high noon and Manute Bol struggles through another painstaking hour of weighlifting.

Not far away are the photos of 21 Maryland football players who have bench-pressed 400 pounds or more. Bol strains to lift 95.

But weight coach Frank Costello isn't disappointed because Bol, a surprise second-round choice of the Washington Bullets in the National Basketball Association draft, continues to show progress.

"Manute has gained about 14 pounds since he started the program in mid-August," Costello said, "and he's more than doubled his strength in certain areas."

BOL NOW weighs 204 pounds, but on a 7-foot-7 frame, the native of the Sudan has given the word slender a new meaning. He is a long, long-range project for the Bullets.

"We were thinking more for the future, but Manute was a great, great draft pick," contends Washington Coach Gene Shue. "He has unlmited potential."

Bol and Costello continue to work on adding weight to that thin 91-inch frame because Shue thinks Bol might yet play a vital role for the Bullets this season.

"Initially," Shue said, "we'll just try to take advantage of his defensive skills, which are intuitive. He's really not ready to be an offensive player, but that's something we're working on all the time."

In the month he has had Bol under his tutelage, Shue has noticed an improvement in both the strength and basketball ability of the rookie, who was introduced to the game only about six years ago.

After playing with the Sudanese national team, Bol enrolled at the University of Bridgeport in Connecticut, where he averaged 22 points, 13 rebounds and even blocked shots a game.

Then, after he averaged 14 points, 14 rebounds and 11 blocked shots for the Rhode Island Gulls of the United States Basketball League, the Bullets couldn't resist taking a chance.

"The interesting thing about the weights," Shue said, "is that it's a competence thing. He's looking stronger and thinking stronger."

Shue figures if Bol reach 235 pounds, "he could really be a factor."

While he thinks 235 is a realistic goal, Costello adds, "I can't say when, or if, he'll make it. It depends on his eating habits, his nutrition, and his willingness to work hard."

"Manute will never be as big as Wilt Chamberlain," Costello said, "because he doesn't have the frame to carry the weight. With a narrow torso and long limbs, it's harder to put on muscle weight."

Bol, indeed, has long limbs. His trousers have a 51-inch inseam and his vertical reach from a standing position is 10-foot-4, or four inches above the basketball rim. For his height, however, Bol's 15½ shoe size is not out of proportion.

"The Dinka Tribe is very tall," was the understatement of Bol, who said his mother stands 6-10, his father and a sister at 6-8 each, an aunt at 7 feet even, and a grandfather at 7-10.

Costello, the strength and conditioning coach at Maryland, was hired by the Bullets as a special consultant under a private arrangement approved by the university.

"I've taken a strong personal interest in him," said Costello, who works with Bol three times a week. "He's very good to work with, and very cooperative."

"My legs feel strong, and I have more endurance," said Bol, who has agreed to terms although his contract signing has not been announced.

Texas Tech finally has running back armada

Over the last four or five years, you'd come away from Texas Tech games wondering why they couldn't recruit a good running back anymore.

Go back over the years...Donny Anderson, Mike Leinert, Doug McCutchen, Larry Isaac... there always seemed to be a productive workhorse back as the foundation for an running offense.

But after Billy Taylor and James Hadnot left Tech for the pros, the spigot was turned off. Hadnot left in 1979, that's how long the Red Raiders have been struggling for infantry yards. It has also been about that long since Tech has enjoyed a winning season.

But this year, Tech is off to a 3-0 start. Of course, things get tougher from here on out, but Tech is only one game away from eqauling its entire 1984 victory output.

Saturday, coming away from Jones Stadium, the question was not "Why can't Tech recruit a good running back?" but rather "Where did they get all these backs and what are they going to do with 'em?"

In the unexpectedly easy win over a North Texas State team that had held Oklahoma State to a narrow 10-9 victory, Tech employed 12 different ball carriers.

ONE QUESTIONED Coach Jerry Moore's the wisdom in moving an alternate set of backs in for a group that was producing steady hunks of yardage, until it dawned that there was no fall off in production.

Former Midland Lee star Isaac Garnett, the leading rusher for Tech the last two games, was asked if it bothered him to be replaced when things were going good. "It takes a lot of backs to run the Wishbone and this is the first time we've had the depth to keep fresh people in the game. And you have to be fresh. It's a very physical formation."

Wishbone...that may be the key word in Tech's success this year. It replaces the I and pro set. The I became a craze during the years when USC was mass-producing Heisman trophies.

Everybody wanted to run the I, but to successfully run the I, it also takes an offensive line that can outphysical the opposition and the Trojans can outphysical most pro lines, as O.J. Simpson discovered in his frustrating first year at Buffalo.

Not only does Tech have an abundance of running backs, but Moore used four different quarterbacks against the Eagles.

And while Travis Price admitted he was nervous and tentative in his first half appearance, when he was called upon to replace injured starter Aaron Keesee in the second half, it was like bringing Bruce Sutter out of the bullpen. The signt revives memories of the Rodney Allison-Tommy Dunniven years at Tech.

TECH'S FAST start may also be traced to the source of the talent. Not only are Raider recruiters, thanks to former Lee coach Spike Dykes, grabbing off top Midland players, but have done an admirable job of keeping West Texans in West Texas.

Keesee, Price, Monahans' Ricky Boysaw, Odessa's Boyd Cowan, Permian's Dal Watson, Cooper's Bryan Lee just scratch the surface.

In addition to fullback Garnett, Midland's Tyrone Thurman starts at wide reciever and returns punts as offensive starters. Other Tall City contributions...defensively, Calvin Riggs starts at defensive end and his back up is another Lee ex, Eddie Kittle. Michael Johnson is a weakside linebacker and Jerry Zachery, out in the first two games with an injury, got a taste of action late in the game Saturday at halfback.

The good news, of course, is the the 3-0 record to date. The bad news is that the only "cinch" win Tech has left is Rice... but in the SWC you can't even count on the Owls as a sure thing. And while Tech this week plays a team fresh off a victory over No. 3 ranked Southern California, the Raiders couldn't ask for a better spot to catch the Bears, right after games with Georgia and USC.

IRS to review Memphis St. cage coach's taxes

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Memphis State basketball coach Dana Kirk, who appeared before a federal grand jury investigating sports gambling, says he isn't worried about a review of his income taxes.

"My earnings and income are from proper sources. Nothing will be discovered that I am ashamed of," Kirk said in a written statement Wednesday after he testified before the grand jury.

He declined to discuss his testimony or why the panel is interested in his finances.

"I will confirm that my financial affairs and tax liabilities are being reviewed," Kirk said in his statement.

Later in the day, the grand jury recessed and scheduled its next session for Oct. 8.

The grand jury began its investigation in March after agents from the FBI and Internal Revenue Service raided about a dozen suspected bookies in the Memphis area.

Memphis State University President Thomas Carpenter said the statement issued by Kirk "is in keeping with what he has told us."

"If it is a matter between Coach Kirk and the Internal Revenue Service and there is no involvement with the university, we assume the matter will follow its normal course," Carpenter said in a statement issued by the university's community relations office.

"To confirm this," he said, "we have requested the advice of our legal counsel, the state attorney general's office."

The Commercial Appeal, the major newspaper in Memphis, has quoted three other grand jury witnesses as saying they were questioned, among other things, about Memphis State's basketball losses last season to the University of Detroit and Villanova.

Kirk did not refer to those late-season games in his statement, but said his team "did the best it could to win every game it played."

Kirk led Memphis State to the Final Four of the National Collegiate Athletic Association Tournament in March.

Frank Glankler, one of Kirk's two lawyers, also declined to answer questions about his client's appearance before the grand jury.

"We've made the statement that we're going to make," Glankler said.

Leaving the federal courthouse, Kirk used Glankler as a shield when news reporters and photographers closed in on him.

Jury goes into second day

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Jury deliberations moved into a second day in the federal court trial of a Pennsylvania accountant charged with selling cocaine to two major league baseball players.

The U.S. District Court panel of 10 women and two men failed to decide the fate of Robert "Rav" McCue after 7½ hours of deliberation Wednesday and reconvened today.

McCue, 38, of suburban Upper St. Clair, a former controller for the Easter Seal Society of Allegheny County and a part-time tavern disc jockey, is charged with 13 counts of selling cocaine to former Pittsburgh Pirates infielder Dale Berra and outfielder John Milner.

U.S. District Judge Maurice Cohill ordered the jury to begin its caucus Wednesday morning. The jury returned to Cohill's courtroom once to question the judge and twice sent him written questions.

At one point, the panel asked Cohill to repeat his instructions regarding the credibility of witnesses granted federal immunity from prosecution. The key witnesses against McCue during the seven-day trial were Berra, now of the New York Yankees and the son of Hall of Famer Yogi Berra, and Milner, who retired after 12 major-league seasons.

Both players testified under federal grants of immunity that they used cocaine while with the Pirates.

Berra said he purchased cocaine from McCue on four occasions in 1984 and Milner said he bought the drug from McCue nine times from June 1983 to January 1985.

Cohill told the jury that such witnesses could be considered "competent," but their "testimony must be examined with greater care." He said the jury must decide if the witnesses' testimony is "colored to further the witnesses' own interests."

Last Friday, another federal jury convicted Curtis Strong, 39, of Philadelphia, former clubhouse caterer for the Philadelphia Phillies, on 11 of 14 counts of distributing cocaine to baseball players. Strong faces 15 years in prison and a $25,000 fine on each count when he is sentenced Oct. 21.

Cardinals win sixth straight while Mets lose again

Associated Press

With their sixth straight triumph, the St. Louis Cardinals continued to open their lead in the National League East Wednesday night.

Tommy Herr hit a three-run homer and Vince Coleman stole three bases and scored three runs, leading the Cardinals to a 6-3 decision over the Philadelphia Phillies.

St. Louis' 13th victory in 14 games reduced the Cards' magic number to seven in the National League East. Any combination of seven Cardinals victories or New York Mets defeats would give the title to St. Louis.

New York, which lost 5-4 earlier Wednesday to the Chicago Cubs, trails St. Louis by four games.

NL West leader Los Angeles lost to Houston 6-4 in 10 innings, remaining six games in front of the Reds, who lost to Atlanta 4-2 in 11 innings.

In the American League East, Toronto's magic number stayed at six with a 13-inning, 4-2 loss to the Boston Red Sox. That dropped the Blue Jays' lead to six games over the New York Yankees, who beat Detroit 10-2.

The AL West race continued on the West Coast late Wednesday, California beating Chicago 7-4 and Kansas City beating Seattle 5-4. The Angels' lead stayed at a half-game.

St. Louis 6, Philadelphia 3

Philadelphia lost a 2-0 lead and then its sixth straight game.

St. Louis rebounded with infield singles by Coleman and Willie McGee, with Coleman reaching third on McGee's hit following his first stolen base. Charles Hudson, 7-13, then gave up Herr's seventh homer.

With the homer, Herr jeopardized his current standing as the first major league player in 35 years to total 100 or more RBI with fewer than 10 such blasts.

Coleman, who now has 105 stolen bases, singled in a run in the fourth and scored on McGee's 17th triple.

Cubs 5, Mets 4

Pinch-hitter Chris Speier's two-out single in the bottom of the ninth inning scored Dave Lopes from third base with the game-winning run.

Gary Carter's sixth-inning grand slam gave the Mets a 4-1 lead.

Astros 6, Dodgers 4

Kevin Bass hit his 14th homer of the season in the 10th inning after Jim Pankovits singled.

Dodgers starter Fernando Valenzuela was leading 4-0 and held the Astros to two hits until the seventh, but Glenn Davis hit his 19th homer of the season and Houston rallied to tie the game.

Pirates 8, Expos 2

Rick Reuschel, 14-7, won his fourth straight decision with a five-hitter and Tony Pena drove in three runs. Reuschel, 14-7, has eight complete games in his last nine starts.

Braves 4, Reds 2

Third baseman Wade Rowdon's two throwing errors in the 11th inning allowed the winning run to score. Rowdon fielded Claudell Washington's leadoff grounder and threw it into the Reds' dugout. Glenn Hubbard then bunted and Rowdon threw into right field, allowing Washington to score. Two outs later, Ken Oberkfell's RBI single made it 4-2.

Padres 7, Giants 4

Steve Garvey singled twice to drive in a pair of runs and Graig Nettles drove in two runs with a double and a single to help LaMarr Hoyt to his 16th victory. Hoyt, 16-8, went seven innings, scattering seven hits, walking one and striking out three.

Angels 7, White Sox 4

Juan Beniquez hit a three-run homer, Gary Pettis added a two-run double and California hung on. The Angels will wind up regular season play with 10 games on the road, including four against the Royals.

Ron Romanick, 14-8, went 6⅔ innings to snap a four-game personal losing streak with his first win since July 31. He was supported by Donnie Moore, who finished up for his 29th save.

Royals 5, Mariners 4

Bret Saberhagen won his 19th game and Lonnie Smith singled home two runs in the Royals' three-run seventh inning as Kansas City broke a 10-game losing streak against Seattle.

Red Sox 4, Blue Jays 2

Rookie Mike Greenwell's first major-league homer, a two-run blast in the 13th inning, beat Toronto.

Pinch-hitter Jeff Burroughs homered in the bottom of the ninth, tying the game. Dwight Evans' two-run homer, his 26th of the year, in the eighth inning had given Boston a 2-1 lead.

Indians 7, A's 2

Benny Ayala and Chris Bando hit two-run doubles and the Indians broke their six-game losing streak. Right-hander Keith Creel posted his first victory of the season. Creel, 1-5, scattered seven hits over 6⅔ innings.

Yankees 10, Tigers 2

Joe Niekro won his first game as a Yankee as Don Mattingly drove in four runs, two on a home run. Niekro, 1-1 since coming to the Yankees, allowed four hits in five innings before being forced to leave with a bruised right shin.

Brewers 3, Orioles 0

Randy Ready singled and doubled, scored twice and made a key diving outfield grab. Jaime Cocanower, 5-7, scattered eight hits and five walks.

Twins 5, Rangers 1

Bert Blyleven, 5-0 against Texas this year, pitched a five-hitter. He went the distance for the league-leading 22nd time this year. His four strikeouts moved Blyleven past Jim Bunning and into the No. 10 spot on the all-time strikeout list with 2,860.

Baseball Roundup

Jackson, LeBlanc honored by AP

Associated Press

With his team leading by only 14-0 at halftime, Denison tailback Aaron Jackson took matters into his own hands.

Jackson scored touchdowns on his first three carries of the third quarter on runs of 30, 87, and 72 yards to lead Denison to a 48-6 victory over perviously unbeaten Wichita Falls Hirschi.

Jackson, along with Bridge City running back Mark LeBlanc, earned mention in this week's Associated Press Schoolboy Honor Roll for their key performances.

Hirschi had yielded only 203 rushing yards to two previous opponents prior to Jackson's attack.

"In my years as a coach, I've never had a running back carry the ball three times in one quarter and score three touchdowns," Denison Coach Marty Criswell said. "Jackson is one of the premier backs in the state of Texas."

LeBLANC RUSHED 223 yards on 19 carries and had four touchdowns in a 43-14 victory over Liberty. He was even effective when he didn't carry the football.

"Our other running back (Brian Bishop) scored on a 20-yard run because we faked to Mark and he sucked the entire defnese with him," Bridge City Coach Fred Bolton said. "Teams are keying on him now but he's still getting his yards."

LeBlanc, 5-11, 200, has scored nine touchdowns this season and rushed 552 yards on 55 carries in three games. His touchdowns against Liberty went for 25, three, one and 52 yards.

"He's kind of a big kid but he surprises you with the moves he can make after he gets past the line of scrimmage," Bolton said.

San Antonio Cole's Deon Cockrell played only two quarters but he accounted for 230 yards of offense in a 42-0 vicotry over San Antonio Holy Cross.

Cockrell scored on runs of five, 11, and 11 yards, returned an interception 90 yards for a touchdown and took the second half kickoff 81 yards for a touchdown.

In other outstanding performances:

–Celina's Anthony Lynn rushed 299 yards on 33 carries and scored all three of his team's touchdowns in an 18-7 victory over Howe.

–McKinney quarterback Greg Ziegler hit 17 of 28 passes for 279 yards and three touchdowns in a 35-27 victory over Greenville. Ziegler also scored a touchdown and ran in a two-point conversion.

–Paul Pewitt quarterback Artis Whetstone had an outstanding, pass-run show in a 47-13 victory over Spring Hill. Whetstone completed eight of 11 passes for 215 yards and three touchdowns and rushed eight times for 102 yards.

–Liberty-Eylau defeated Atlanta for the first time in three years, aided by John Jarvis, who recovered three fumbles and returned an interception 75 yards for a touchdown in the 21-6 victory.

–Quarterback Eric Joseph had another outstanding game in East Chambers' 39-0 victory over Houston Mount Carmel. Joseph rushed nine times for 90 yards and touchdowns of 54 and 17 yards, completed two of six passes including a 65-yard touchdown and returned the opening kickoff of the game 88 yards for a touchdown.

–San Antonio Marshall's George Harris ignored bruised ribs suffered earlier in the game, and leaped one yard for a touchdown and then added the game-winning two-point conversion in an 8-7 victory over San Antonio Madison.

–San Antonio Southwest quarterback Ty Detmer completed 15 of 24 passes for 283 ards and touchdown passes of 46, 45, 46, and three yards in a 61-36 victory over Laredo Cigarroa.

–Southwest's vietory was not the fault of Cigarroa's Leo Benavides, who rushed 292 yards on 42 carries and had touchdown runs of four, 11, four, 63 and three yards.

--TEMPLE SAFETY Willie McVade helped his team to a 45-14 victory over Abilene Cooper by picking off three of Temple's five interceptions, returning one 47 yards for a touchdown.

--Stamford linebacker Anthony Gomez stonewalled Olney with 24 tackles and two fumble recoveries in a 21-6 victory. As an offensive guard, Gomez threw the key block on two Stamford touchdown runs.

–Gregory Portland's David Sablatura had 16 solo tackles, returned an interception 37 yards to set up one touchdown and caused a fumble to set up another score in a 37-14 victory over Corpus Christi Carroll.

--Stinnett tight end-linebacker Chad Wilmon contributed 18 tackles and two sacks and caught five passes for 188 yards and touchdowns of 20 and 74 yards in a 26-12 victory over Shamrock.

–Burton's Henry Gilmon rushed 208 yards on 24 carries and scored on runs of 65, 35 and a six yards in a 36-29 victory over Shiner St. Paul's. Gilmon's six-yard score was the game-winner with six seconds to play. Gilmon also completed a 36-yard halfback pass for a touchdown on the first play of the game.

–Lynn Hancock helped West Hardin drill Sabine Pass 63-21 with 262 yards rushing on 19 carries and touchdown runs of seven, 20, 33, 58, and 58 yards.

--Vidor's Bo Brown intercepted two passes, knocked down two others and blocked a punt to set up the game-winning touchdown. He also kicked two extra points that were the difference in a 14-12 victory over Smiley.

Cougs dream of Louisville

HOUSTON (AP) — When the Houston Cougars dream about the downside of last season, they have nightmares about the University of Louisville.

The Cardinals upset the Cougars 30-28 in the fourth game of the season and went on to post a 2-9 record.

The memory returns Saturday when the Cougars travel to Louisville, once again trying to overcome a slow start to an 0-2 record that included a season opening upset by Tulsa.

Cougar linebacker Robert Harper thinks he and his teammates have had enough of the sluggish starts.

"It just seems like we can't get our minds right at the start of the season," said Harper, a sophomore from Kansas City. "I don't know why, but it seems like we have to get beat by somebody before we realize that we can get beat."

The Cougars took a week off after the loss to Tulsa and lost its second game Saturday to Washington.

"You might look real good going against your own second team offense but when you get in that first game it's different," Harper said. "I think we start the season expecting to shut everybody down and when we don't, we don't know how to react."

Cardinal Coach Howard Schnellenberger doesn't expect his team to surprise the Cougars again.

"They are the defending champions down there and although they lost their first two games, that's historic with Houston," Schnellenberger said. "By this game, Houston will have its fumbles and bad things out of its system and be at mid-season form."

Harper, a sophomore, starting his second season on the Houston defense, thinks it's time for both offense and defense to play a complete game.

"The offense showed up for one game and the defense for the other," Harper said. "We need to both play at our best in the same game."

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Make sure that good intentions do not go awry. Once you have told your side of the story, you will no longer be the target of an opponent's ill will. Romance returns to its former glory. Be proud of a child's high standards. Those closest to your heart need to hear how much you love them. Be careful not to put all of your eggs in one basket if in business for yourself. Have more than one customer or client. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Phillies superstar third baseman Mike Schmidt, actor William Conrad, author Louis Auchincloss, actress Jayne Meadows, Cleveland Indians pitcher Don Schultze.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A major breakthrough is likely if you continue to apply yourself. Give an employee all the tools and materials he or she needs. Half-measures will not work. Choose your friends with care.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not let a disappointment drag you down. Stand tall and you will turn a defeat into a victory. Answer a question before it is asked. Romance has its own timetable.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Postpone signing off on a project until next week. New information could come to light. Take advantage of an offer that will only be in effect for a short time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Set aside time to relax and unwind this weekend. You may be able to leave work early. A financial matter proves easy to resolve. Cash in on some knowledge you alone possess.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A credit problem cannot be ignored. Uncover something that has been going on behind the scenes and you could win a prize. Avoid starting a battle you know you cannot finish.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Intervention by a family member could be the best solution to a problem. A new investment means greater security. Reduce spending on entertainment and luxuries. Romance beckons from afar.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Implement changes that you know will lead to a financial recovery. The road to success is surprisingly smooth once you get better organized. Train subordinates to use a special system.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You have every reason to be optimistic about the future. Unanimous agreement is needed to make a family plan work. Invest in a child. There is more to a business proposal than meets the eye.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Help someone who is willing to work in order to get a better education. Rising costs require careful planning. Taking shortcuts will not get you where you want to go. Nurture romance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): There is a basic difference between you and a competitor. Stick to what you do best and you'll eventually emerge on top. You win many accolades for service to the community.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be very careful who you choose to represent you. You will be held responsible for what is done in your name. A troubled romance can be saved. Make that phone call or apology.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Remain true to your high ideals in the face of temptation. Start saving for a child's education while he or she is still very young. You find a useful new tool later today.

Opening lead: Queen of ♠.

The secret of success on many hands is keeping an accurate count. That is true both for declarer and the defenders. All East needed to find the winning defense here was to work out South's distribution.

After South made a forcing jump in hearts, North cue-bid spades to show a maximum no trump with good heart support. A cue-bidding sequence then accounted for all the controls that South needed to give him a shot at the slam.

As the cards lie, a club lead would have left declarer with no chance for his contract. However, we would not have found that lead; our choice, too, would have been the queen of spades. Declarer won the king, drew trumps in two rounds, cashed the ace of spades and ruffed a spade. After cashing the ace-king of diamonds, declarer led a club from dummy.

East played second-hand low, and declarer followed with a low club. A surprised West found he had won a trick with the jack of clubs, but he did not relish having the lead. He chose a diamond. Declarer ruffed on the table while discarding a club from hand, and the club finesse landed the slam.

Declarer's line of play made his hand an open book. Since he could have ruffed a diamond on the board had he had another diamond, he had to have started with five hearts and four clubs.

If declarer's clubs were as good as the A-Q-J, he could make his slam by taking two finesses in the suit. Therefore, East should have based his defense on the premise that his partner held a singleton club honor. East could have taken his partner off the end play by inserting the king of clubs when that suit was led from dummy. No matter what declarer did now, there was no way he could avoid losing two club tricks for down one.

Carl Perkins recovering from surgery

JACKSON, Tenn. (AP) — Rock 'n' roll pioneer Carl Perkins was resting comfortably after surgery for kidney stones, but it might take a little while before the singer of "Blue Suede Shoes" is up and dancing in them.

Perkins, 53, of Jackson, was admitted Tuesday to Jackson-Madison County Hospital, spokeswoman Doris Freeman said Wednesday. He was in fair condition after his surgery.

Perkins had recorded an album last week in Memphis with Jerry Lee Lewis, Johnny Cash and Roy Orbison. All four became famous while recording in the 1950s at Sun Records there.

Pran

SANFORD, Maine (AP) — Dith Pran, the Cambodian-born photographer portrayed in the award-winning movie "The Killing Fields," says his escape from the hands of the Khmer Rouge was more a matter of perseverence than heroics.

"I am not a hero," the New York Times photographer said at Maine's fifth annual Conference on Refugees. "I'm just one who could survive."

Pran began working with Times reporter Sydney Schanberg in the Cambodian city of Phnom Penh in 1972. Their friendship, their separation in 1975, and Pran's four years of captivity are the subjects of the film.

"You had to pretend you were stupid to survive and you had to know how to lie," Pran said of his time as a prisoner.

He eventually escaped and was reunited with Schanberg in 1979. He now lives in New York and devotes much of his spare time to Asian refugee work.

Hope

CINCINNATI (AP) — Comedian Bob Hope is finding a tax dispute over a benefit to aid a youth shelter a little taxing.

Hope, contacted Tuesday at a hotel in Valley Forge, Pa. said the city's demand for $8,200 in rent and taxes from a Sept. 1 show he sponsored to raise money for the Bob Hope House is "a little ridiculous."

The show, held after a Cincinnati Reds baseball game at Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium, featured Hope, Andy Williams, Marie Osmond and Phyllis Diller. It grossed an estimated $78,000 for the shelter. Hope House director John Scherm said the Reds have not turned over any of the proceeds.

"This is the first time I've heard of this," Hope told The Cincinnati Enquirer. "I don't think we ought to pay the city any rent. We're doing this for Cincinnati youngsters."

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Maurice Sendak, the award-winning author of the children's book "Where the Wild Things Are," says temper tantrums are a normal part of childhood.

"Kids are kids. Their fears and frustrations don't change. Life gets harder and it gets worse," Sendak said last week while in St. Paul preparing for the U.S. premiere of an operatic adaptation of his book.

"That's what my work is all about, learning what is tolerable and intolerable. We have to teach children, just like puppies, what is acceptable and what is not," said Sendak, 57, who lives in Ridgefield, Conn., with his "family," a 13-year-old golden retriever and a 2-year-old German shepherd.

Sendak wrote the libretto for the opera, which has previously played in London and Brussels, Belgium. Friday night's performance was by The Minnesota Opera and The St. Paul Chamber Orchestra.

Falwell

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell has criticized a judge's ruling that he must pay $5,000 to a gay leader who produced a tape recording of the Moral Majority leader attacking a gay community church.

Falwell had denied on a Sacramento television talk show last year that he had attacked the Metropolitan Community Church and offered Jerry Sloan $5,000 if he could produce the tape.

Sloan, a former pastor of the church, gave Municipal Judge Michael Ullman a tape in which Falwell referred to the church as "brute beasts...part of a vile and satanic system (that) will one day be utterly annihilated."

Ullman ordered Falwell to pay up.

"This situation is only one more example of harassment by a militant homosexual group," Falwell said Wednesday, promising to fight the ruling.

MOSCOW (NYT) — Gary Kasparov displayed lucid defensive technique to draw the eighth game of his world championship chess match with Anatoly Karpov Wednesday in Moscow's Tchaikovsky Concert Hall.

When the game was adjourned on Tuesday, Kasparov, at 22 the youngest challenger, was a pawn down, but in the adjournment session he never gave the 34-year-old champion a chance to win.

Karpov retained his one-point lead at 4½-3½. Six victories or 12½ points are required to win the match, with a victory worth a point and the players each getting a half-point for a draw. A tie match would allow Karpov to keep his championship.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Barry Lowen, a television executive and one of the Los Angeles area's most influential contemporary art collectors, has died from complications caused by AIDS, his physician said. He was 50.

Lowen had suffered from acquired immune deficiency syndrome for nine months before dying Tuesday in his hillside home of complications caused by the incurable disease, said Dr. Michael Roth.

Lowen was vice president for creative affairs for Aaron Spelling Productions, which produces "Dynasty" and "The Love Boat." He also was a founder of the Museum of Contemporary Art and the Entertainment Alliance of the Modern and Contemporary Art Council, which raises money for the Los Angeles County Museum of Art.

Douglas Cramer, a friend and colleague, called him the "guru of contemporary collectors."

Lowen, survived by his parents and a brother, had asked that donations be sent to AIDS Project Los Angeles.

Dollar drops

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar dropped sharply in early European trading today amid Far Eastern reports that Japan's central bank had sold dollars following agreement among five major economic powers to force the U.S. currency lower. Gold prices rose.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar fell to its lowest closing rate since March 7, 1984, as Japanese press reports said the Bank of Japan was trying to force the dollar down to the 200-210 yen level.

The dollar closed Thursday at 222.80 yen, down from 229.45 yen on Wednesday. Later in Europe the dollar fell further against the yen, to 220.15.

Against European currencies, the dollar also was hitting lows not seen since the spring of 1984.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Wednesday:

—2.6700 West German marks, down from 2.7145

—2.1805 Swiss francs, down from 2.2220

—8.115 French francs, down from 8.280

—3.0115 Dutch guilders, down from 3.0540

—1,806.50 Italian lire, down from 1,834.00

—1.3560 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3615

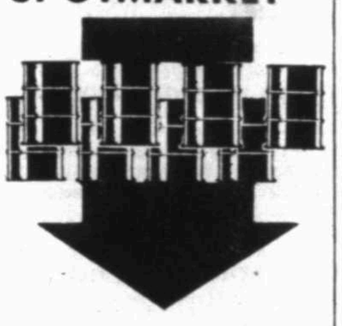

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $331.40 a troy ounce and then was fixed at the recommended price of $330.40 at midmorning by the city's five major bullion dealers. Late Wednesday the London bid price was $328.50.

In Zurich, the noon bid price was $330.50, up from $329 late Wednesday.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.16 a troy ounce, unchanged from Wednesday.

271 white oil wells ordered to shut down

AUSTIN (AP) — The Railroad Commission has ordered operators of 271 "white oil" wells in the Panhandle Field to halt production by Tuesday.

Of those, however, operators of 183 wells may be allowed to resume production if a second test of their wells shows that they can qualify as oil instead of gas wells, officials said.

That designation is crucial because an oil well can be drilled on 10 acres, but a gas well requires 640 acres. Oil wells are also allowed to produce more gas than gas wells.

If a white oil operator owns only oil rights, which is the case in most situations, the operator could not produce from a gas well.

An oil well produces one or more barrels of oil per 100,000 cubic feet of gas. Several companies have alleged that white oil operators use refrigeration, or LTX, units to chill vapors to liquid and count the water-white liquid as crude oil to meet that ratio.

The commission began testing LTX wells on the basis of a May 13 order that required hydrocarbon liquids to be liquid in the reservoir, liquid in the well bore and liquid at the surface.

Fourteen white oil operators or interest owners sued to overturn the commission order, and State District Judge Harley Clark of Austin ruled Sept. 13 that the order was null and void.

The commission is awaiting Clark's formal order to decide whether to appeal the ruling, but general counsel Susan Cory said it would not stop the commission from acting because the judge's decision was based on a procedural technicality.

Ivan Hafley, an Austin lawyer for white oil operators, responded to Ms. Cory's comment earlier this month by saying the ruling prohibited the commission from reclassifying or shutting down wells on the basis of the recent tests.

Hafley was not available for comment Wednesday, but he has said he would seek an injunction if the commission tried to act on the basis of its May 13 order.

Letters were sent to operators of 540 wells tested in the 1.5-million acre Panhandle Field, which includes $27 billion in oil and gas reserves in Hartley, Moore, Hutchinson, Potter, Carson, Gray, Wheeler and Collingsworth counties.

Operators of 269 of those wells got the news that their wells qualified as oil wells. Operators of 88 wells were informed that theirs did not meet the gas-oil ratio and that their production allowable would be set at zero as of Tuesday.

Operators of an additional 183 wells were notified that tests were not conclusive but that those wells also would be shut down Tuesday.

Those operators can request a second test, and if the well qualifies within 60 days as an oil well, the allowable will be backdated to next Tuesday to allow the well to produce as an oil well.

The Tuesday letter to white oil operators was signed by Jim Morrow, director of the commission's Oil and Gas Division.

Analyst predicts oil industry to stay flat, 11 percent inflation

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — About 70 Midland-Odessa business and civic leaders attending the second monthly meeting of the Permian Basin Economics Club heard a Dallas Federal Reserve analyst predict oil industry activity will remain "relatively flat" and the inflation rate will be at 11 percent by the end of 1986.

Dr. Steven Brown, a senior Federal Reserve Bank economist specializing in energy industry and policy research, told the audience at the noon luncheon at Mission Dorado Country Club his forecasts are slightly more optimistic than those of other economists.

Brown noted the price of oil has been declining since it reached a peak in about 1980, as measured in current dollars, which followed a sharp increase in 1979 because of the Iranian revolution that brought a decrease in production in that country. Since that time, he said, "The world has been adjusting to that oil price shock."

Noting that Saudi Arabia "is running a a current account deficit in international trade of $20 billion a year," Brown said, "Saudi Arabia has cut its production from almost 10 million barrels a day to down around 2.5 million barrels a day."

He said Saudi production dropped to about 2.2 million barrels daily during the summer but he expects the average for the year will be about 3.5 million barrels daily.

Pointing out the seriousness of the Saudi Arabian problem, Brown said the Saudis consume almost a million barrels a day.

Saying the Saudis have "borne the brunt of the production cuts in OPEC" and because the country is in dire financial straits he expects Saudi Arabia will move to correct the situation.

He expects Saudi Arabia will attempt to resolve its problems by taking the lead "in engineering a gradual decline (in prices), one where they trade off the short term loss, where they wouldn't be able to sell very much additional oil, with a long term gain of being able to sell a lot more oil at a lower price."

The results of his research indicate "if the rest of OPEC didn't go along with Saudi Arabia it would be worthwhile for Saudi Arabia to break away from OPEC and go it alone," Brown said.

Referring to the scheduled OPEC meeting Oct. 3, Brown said if the talks break down, and the Saudi Arabians increase production this could result in "an oil price war" that could drive prices down to $17 or $18 a barrel. However, after that, Brown thinks "prices would then rise fairly rapidly from that low price and reach, by 1990, $20 to $21 a barrel," which he believes would mean about $30 a barrel in dollars measured in 1990.

Noting that OPEC has "tremendous excess capacity" to produce oil, Brown said world oil consumption would have to increase by 24 percent and that would bring about "considerably lower prices."

Concerning inflation, Brown said the Federal Reserve "is currently pursuing a policy that is relatively inflationary. We haven't seen the effects of that inflationary policy yet," he said, "But I think we will soon, next years perhaps."

"I don't think it would be unreasonable," he said, "to expect inflation of 11 percent by yearend (1986)."

He attributed this prediction to the speed with which the money supply increased this year.

"If you assume the velocity of money (the number of times it changes hands) remains relatively constant instead of growing, which is normal, and you assume GNP growth of 3-to-5 percent, which right now would be a bit on the optimistic side in a national forecast, you're looking at an inflation rate of 11 to 13 percent," stated Brown.

Should this inflation occur, he said, he believes OPEC will be able to manage a price decline by allowing the price of oil to decline moderately for the next few months and "then let inflation take care of the problem for it (OPEC)."

Decreasing oil prices, he indicated, will not bode well for oil field activity. He expects drilling and servicing activity will remain relatively flat.

Brown suggested that should prices fall too low, producers may opt to leave oil in the ground until prices rise again.

Frontier workers protest Texas Air buyout

DENVER (AP) — Frontier Airlines' labor coalition filed a lawsuit against Texas Air Corp. on Wednesday to block Texas Air President Frank Lorenzo from buying controlling interest in Frontier Holdings Inc., the airline's parent company.

A Denver U.S. District Court ruling on the request for a permanent injunction was expected within the next few days.

Representatives of the Frontier coalition, which will place its own employee buyout plan before Frontier shareholders Oct. 30, also announced it will petition the Department of Transportation to block the Texas Air tender offer and will ask shareholders to ignore the offer.

At a Denver news conference, coalition representatives branded the tender offer "a blatant attempt by Frank Lorenzo to reduce substantially competition in the important Denver air transportation market by destroying Frontier as a viable competitor of Texas Air."

"The coalition worked two years for the purchase of this airline. Employees have paid in wage concessions for a chance to buy Frontier. Mr. Lorenzo is only seeking to derail our bid and destroy Frontier's presence," Lorraine Loflin, president of the Frontier flight attendants union, charged Wednesday.

Last Friday, Lorenzo, whose Texas Air Corp. owns Continental Airlines and New York Air, announced he was making a tender offer of $20 per share for up to seven million shares, or 60 percent of Frontier Holdings' stock. A condition of the offer is that the employee buyout proposal be terminated.

Frontier Holdings officials have declined to comment on the offer. Under federal law, Frontier Holdings has 10 days to reply to the tender offer, or until Sept. 30.

Texas Air held merger discussions with Frontier earlier this year, but the talks broke off in April. In June, Texas Air made an unsuccessful offer to buy Trans World Airways.

Frontier Airlines' labor coalition representative Philip Clapp, left, and Lorraine Loflin, president of Frontier's flight attendant's union announced that the coalition has filed suit against Texas Air Corp.

The lawsuit filed by the coalition Wednesday requests a permanent injunction and unspecified damages against Lorenzo and Texas Air. The action alleges that the Texas Air tender offer documents contain false statements designed to confuse Frontier shareholders, a violation of federal securities laws.

The labor coalition also plans to ask the Department of Transportation within the next few days to deny Texas Air's request to establish a voting trust in order to buy the Frontier stock.

The coalition consists of the Air Line Pilots Association, the Air Line Employees Association, the Transport Workers Union and the Association of Flight Attendants. Together, the unions represent about 75 percent of Frontier's employees.

The four unions are involved in a complicated merger plan to make Frontier employee-owned through the purchase of all of Frontier's stock at $17 per share.

Philip E. Clapp, a coalition representative who appeared at the news conference with Ms. Loflin, charged that Texas Air really is not interested in owning Frontier, but only wants to block the employee stock purchase plan and weaken the airline.

Import cars capturing larger share of market

By SUSAN LINDSAY
Business/Oil Writer

Imports continue to take an increasing share of the Texas new vehicle market as July year-to-date registrations showed a 15 percent increase in imported cars and trucks, according to figures released by the Texas Automobile Dealers Association.

But, dealers of domestic cars expect the growing import market to stand still because of 7.7 percent financing and rebates up to $1,500 on new domestic economical lines.

During the 31-day period of July, registration of imported vehicles, including cars and trucks, totaled 22,693, compared to 19,331 in 1984.

Of this amount, 16,817 new imported cars were registered, up 11.5 percent from July 1984's 14,972. New imported truck registrations in July were 5,876, up 32.4 percent from July 1984, when 4,359 imported trucks were registered.

Registration of imported cars during the first seven months of the year were 94,435. Year-to-date registrations of imported trucks were 36,769, compared to 27,760 for 1984.

Larry Fox, sales manager for Subaru-Saab of Midland, said quality and price are the reasons for the increase in sales of imports. "You're getting more quality than a domestic car at a better price," he said.

Sales at his dealership have increased over the past year, he said, and as a result, he has been receiving more imports.

Britt Imports has also seen an increase in sales, said Mike Britt, general manager. "The imports are more reliable. They have a longer lifespan and some have a longer warranty," he explained.

But, local dealers predict that when the August totals come in, the import and domestic sales will be closer.

"Since the 7.7 percent financing went into effect the first of August, our Ford business has been up," said Neil Florer, general manager of Rogers Ford. Before that time, Fords had been selling slower, he said.

"Many people percieve that a foreign car is superior in quality and get better gas milage than domestic cars," he said, adding that he hoped the lower finance rates would cause people to investigate the domestic cars' new economical lines.

The new domestic lines are becoming more like Japanese cars, said Andy Houghton, sales manager for Friendly Pontiac. He said the new lines should sell well.

"I feel very positive for the domestic cars. We're looking forward to the new year," said Dave Roberson, sales manager for Jack Sherman Chevrolet.

He said Chevrolet has come out with three lines of smaller cars — Nova, Spectrum and Sprint — with high fuel economy. "I think these cars will sell well. We'll go up against anybody," he said.

Domestic car sales increase over last year

DETROIT (AP) — U.S. automakers say their combined domestic sales for mid-September rose 32.3 percent from a year earlier and set a record for the third consecutive 10-day selling period.

Cut-rate financing and rebates of up to $1,500 on leftover 1985 models from the Big Three automakers caused the upward jolt in sales, as was the case in the Aug. 21-31 and Sept. 1-10 periods.

The year-to-year increases in those periods were 71 percent and 56.9 percent respectively.

The seven major U.S. automakers said Tuesday that in the Sept. 11-20 period, they sold 289,582 cars compared with 218,847 a year earlier. Sales per per day were 176. That broke a record for the Sep11-20 eriod of 25,120 per day set in 1979.

Among the Big Three, Ford Motor Co.'s sales rose 37.6 percent from a year ago, General Motors Corp. posted a 32.1 percent gain and Chrysler Corp.'s sales climbed 30.5 percent.

Propane gas retailers charged with racketeering

By DAVID ELLIOTT
Hearst Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Four propane gas retailers have fixed prices, tampered with delivery truck meters and mailed fraudulent bills to as many as 7,000 East Texas consumers, Attorney General Jim Mattox charged this week.

Mattox filed an anti-racketeering and anti-trust civil suit — the first of its type in Texas — charging violations of the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. The suit seeks $4.4 million in fines plus millions more in damages from one Houston-based company and three of its subsidiaries.

Named as defendents were Enterprise Companies, Inc., and its subsidiaries, Wanda Petroleum Co., Enterprise Products Co. and Holicer Gas Co. Mattox filed the suit in the U.S. Southern District Court in Houston.

John Tomerlain, vice president of Enterprise Companies, said the defendents "believe we are innocent of any wrongdoing."

Mattox said the price-rigging scheme may affect consumers outside of East Texas. "Following the clues we have in this case, we believe this may be more widespread than just the East Texas area," he said. "We know of other areas in the state where we suspect major price-fixings are going on. The difference is, we don't have proof on it."

The attorney general declined to specify what evidence prosecutors have of any criminal activity on the part of the four defendents.

"What this lawsuit alleges is that these consumers have been ripped off because of price-fixing and other illegal activities, including racketeering and repeated acts of mail fraud and the recalibrating of meters so that consumers were charged for more gas than they actually used," Mattox said.

He accused the companies of mailing fraudulent bills to consumers beginning in September 1983. Also, he alleged, the firms charged consumers for more gas than they actually received by adjusting meters on delivery trucks.

"For every 95 gallons pumped out of a truck, consumers were being billed for 100 gallons," Mattox said.

Tomerlain denied the charges and said consumers have actually paid less because of the company's entry into the East Texas market. Since Enterprise began propane deliveries in East Texas 18 months ago, "the overall selling price to Texas consumers has been reduced by several cents a gallon," he said.

Mattox said consumers may have lost as much as $1.5 million because of the price-fixing and meter adjustments. The suit is seeking damages of three times that loss plus up to $1 million from each company.

While Tomerlain declined to comment on the specific violations the suit alleges, he said competitors afraid of losing customers have spurred Mattox's action. "It is our understanding that some of our competitors initiated complaints against us as a result of our actions by claiming we are selling products below cost," he said. "Our records will substantiate that these claims are incorrect."

Chamber endorses amendments to water package

The Midland Chamber of Commerce unanimously endorsed Amendments One and Two of State House Bill Two at their meeting Wednesday.

Amendment No. 1 provides a $250 million state insurance fund to guarantee local water bonds. Amendment No. 2 provides $200 million in loans to farmers for water-saving equipment, thus sparking a new interest in water conservation methods.

In other action, Charles Grimes was appointed as director of the Industrial Foundation Board.

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Kent discovery pumps 53 barrels

From Staff Reports

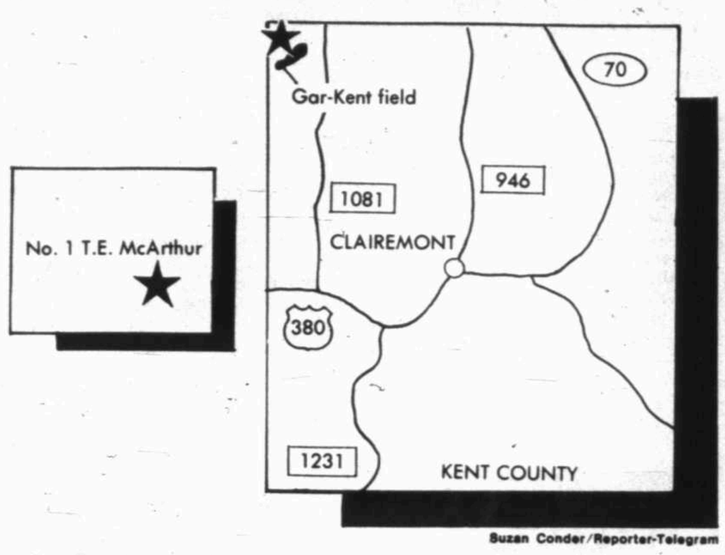

STATES PRODUCTION CO., INC., Houston, has completed a Cisco Sand discovery in Kent County, approximately a mile north and slightly west of the Gar-Kent field.

The No. 1 T.E. McArthur potentialed to pump 53 barrels of 40 gravity crude and 77 barrels of water from perforations 5,903 to 5,918 ft. The interval was acidized with 750 gallons of acid and fractured with 7,500 gallons and 8,500 lbs. sand. Gas-oil ratio is 480:1.

Scheduled as a 6,400 ft. test, the well reached total depth of 6,480 ft., and was plugged back to 6,045 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set.

The well topped the Pennsylvanian Shale at 5,354 ft., CVisco Sand at 5,903, and the Canyon Shale at 6,216 ft. Pay was topped at 5,903 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from south and 660 ft. from east lines of the E. Turner survey, Abstract 1181, 18 miles west of Girard.

Lea County re-entry yields 72 barrel find

A recompletion effort has yielded a Wolfcamp discovery in Lea County, New Mexico.

HARVEY E. YATES CO. re-entered and recompleted the No. 1 Howry "25", a Bone Springs discovery, drilling out cement and the cast-iron bridge plug to 10,220 ft. After treating the perforations 10,054 to 10,094 ft. with 1,500 gallons of 20 percent acid, the operator potentialed the well to flow 72 barrels of crude, 340 Mcfd and no water from the Wolfcamp formation on a 32/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 145 psi. Gas-oil ratio is 472:1.

The well was drilled to an original depth of 11,565 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing is set.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 3,705.8 ft., include the Yates at 3,503 ft., Seven Rivers at 3,884, Queen at 4,588, Grayburg at 4,842, San Andres at 5,622, Glorieta at 6,800, Bone Springs at 7,027, Wolfcamp at 9,778, Pennsylvanian at 10,610, Strawn at 11,361, and the Atoka at 11,515.

Location is 1,650 ft. from north and 330 ft. from west lines of Section 25, T17s, R37e.

Undesignated strike tested for 2.8 Mmcfd

HERITAGE RESOUCES, INC., Midland, has completed an undesignated discovery in Winkler County, just north of the Crittendon field and approximately a mile and a half to two miles west and slightly south of Heritage's No. 1022 Tubb Estate, a Fusselman discovery.

The No. 1-2 Tubb Estate was potentialed for a calculated absolute open flow of 2.8 Mmcfd from perforations 15,370 to 15,604 ft. The interval was acidized with 20,000 gallons of 7.5 percent acid.

Scheduled as a 21,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to a total depth of 19,238 ft. and was plugged back to 16,075 ft., with five inch casing set at 16,148 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,924 ft., include the Delaware Sand at 4,944 ft., Cherry Canyon at 5,924, Bone Spring at 8,652, Wolfcamp at 11,753, Atoka Lime at 14,289, Barnett at 16,289, Mississippian at 17,916, Woodford at 18,389, Silurian at 18,800, and the Fusselman at 19,200 ft. Pay was topped at 15,370 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from south and east lines of Section 2, Block C-24, PSl survey, 15 miles northwest of Kermit.

OIL & GAS DIGEST

Rowan announces strike offshore Louisiana

HOUSTON — Rowan Companies, Inc. have announced a new oil and gas discovery in West Cameron Block 265 offshore Louisiana. The No. 2 well flowed at a combined rate of 1,631 barrels per day on a 16/64 inch choke through perforations from 7,962 to 7,980 feet, and 7,996 to 8,000 feet in Miocene sands. A dual gas completion through perforations from 8,330 to 8,352 feet flowed 5.6 Mmcfd and 167 barrels of condensate per day on a 24/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 2,256 psi.

Phillips finals oil strike offshore California

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. — Phillips Petroleum Co. and co-venturer Chevron USA have announced a significant oil discovery in the Santa Maria Basin offshore California. The discovery well, located 11 miles northwest of Port Sal, Calif., was drilled to a total depth of 6,900 feet. It tested oil and natural gas from four intervals between 5,470 feet and 6,550 feet. Using downhole pumps, the well tested oil from three zones at combined rates of 4,100 barrels a day. Gravities ranged from 8-10 degrees API. A fourth zone flowed dry gas at rates of 1 Mmcfd on a two-inch choke.

The well is located approximately two miles northeast of another oil discovery announced earlier this year by the two companies. That discovery, located on OCS lease P-0408, tested at rates up to 3,780 barrels of oil a day.

Conoco plans exploration in western Egypt

HOUSTON — Affiliates of Conoco and Texas International Co. have announced a $150 million plan, subject to the appropriate Egyptian approvals, to develop two oil discoveries and explore a 500,000 acre concession in Egypt's western desert.

Diamond Shamrock reports special dividend

DALLAS — Diamond Shamrock Corp.'s Board of Directors has declared a special third quarter dividend to holders of the company's common stock of .011 of a depositary unit of Diamond Shamrock Offshore Partners Limited Partnership (DSP), a master limited partnership. The dividend is payble October 30, 1985, to stockholders of record on October 1, 1985.

This unit distribution represents 22.55 cents per common share, based on DSP's recent public offering of five million depositary units priced at $20.50 each.

Separately, the Board of Directors of the Managing Partner of DSP declared a third quarter distribution by DSP of 70 cents per unit. This cash distribution is payable Oct. 30, 1985 to unitholders of record on October 15, 1985.

Henderson Petroleum to merge with Burkhart

DENVER — E.J. Henderson, chairman of Henderson Petroleum Corp., has announced that the boards of directors of Henderson and Burkhart Petroleum Corp. have approved a "plan and agreement for merger."

The agreement provides for the merger of Burkhart into Henderson and, if consummated, a name change to "Burkhart Petroleum Corp."

Pursuant to the terms of the agreement, Henderson's shareholders will hold approximately 35 percent. The surviving corporation and the board of directors of the surviving corporation will consist of six of the seven members of the pre-merger board of directors of Burkhart and three of the four members of the pre-merger board of directors of Henderson.

Noble approves spinoff of Noble Drilling

ARDMORE — Noble Affiliates, Inc. has given final approval to a proposal for the tax-free spinoff of Noble Drilling Corp. common stock to the shareholders of Noble Affiliates' shareholders at the company's annual meeting held on April 23, 1985.

Williams reports two completions

Clayton W. Williams, Jr. has announced the recent completion of the Hotsetter No. 1 well, in which he owns 25 percent working interest.

The well, located in Section 68 of the Justo Corona AB-1122 in McCullen County, Texas is operated by Tana Oil & Gas Corp. of Corpus Christi. Completed as a wildcat in the Wilcox formation, with perforations from 12,676 feet to 12,714 feet, the well was tested as a dry gas well with an AOF of 107 MMcfd.

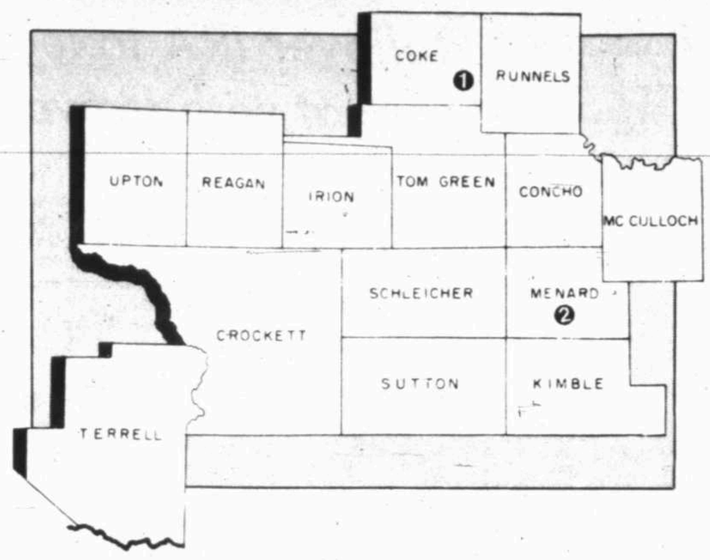

Calculated flow rates during the 4-point test were: 6,011 MCF at 9,455 lbs. FTP on a 12/64 inch choke; 4,571 MCF at 9,499 lbs. FTP on a 10/64 inch choke; 3,709 MCF at 9,580 lbs. FTP on a 9/64 inch choke; and 3,248 MCF at 9,592 lbs. FTP on a 8/64 inch choke.

Williams also announced the completion of his May Libersat No. 2 well located in the DeWitt Lyons Survey, Ab-297 in McCullen County, Texas. The well, completed as a development well in the A.W.P. (Olmos) Field was tested at 242 barrels of oil, 145 Mcf of gas, and one barrel of water.

ClayDesta announces opening of facility

ClayDesta National Bank has announced that it will open its fourth full-service banking facility, ClayDesta Center Downtown, on Monday, Oct. 21. The new facility is in the former Gulf Building, 306 W. Wall.

"This new facility underlines ClayDesta's commitment to continued growht and progress," said David N. Jones,president of ClayDesta National Bank. "The downtown office,which will be located on the ground floor of the building, will offer a full range of banking services," he added.

"Relative to the needs and requests expressed by our customers and the downtown community, this expansion will allow us to provide services at a convenient location for, specifically, the downtown market," he commented.

ClayDesta National Bank is just completing its third year of operations. Since opening Oct. 29, 1982, it has grown to $133.5 million in asset size. In addition tothe new office downtown, ClayDesta offers full-ervice facilities at ClayDesta Plaza, No. 6 Desta Drive; ClayDesta Midtown, 2408 N. Big Spring St., and ClayDesta National Bank's Personal Banking Center, located at the corner of Big Spring and Wadley.

The new facility will employ seven, Jones said, and will most likely provide day-to-day services. "Our prospective borrowers will probably continue to do business at the Plaza. Our oil and gas lenders will be available downtown if the customers want."

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Rio Airways plans Abilene-Dallas service

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Rio Airways expects to begin service between Abilene and Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport during the first week of October, Rio President F.E. "Pete" Howe said Tuesday.

The Texas Aeronautics Commission has received Rio's request to serve Abilene, according to C. Harry Rodgers, TAC's air carrier administrator.

Any objections to Rio's request to serve Abilene must be received within 15 days of the Sept. 19 effective date of the order, Rodgers said. If no objections are received, the airline's request will be granted, he said.

The San Angelo Standard-Times reported that Howe said Rio will operate five daily flights between Abilene and Dallas-Fort Worth, with all flights utilizing the de Havilland Dash-7, a 48-passenger, four-engine turboprop aircraft.

Agreement completed with Japanese bank

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Economic Development Commission said Monday it has completed an agreement with a fourth Japanese bank to cooperate on investment and trade opportunities.

Commission Chairman Dan Petty said the agency and Daiwa Bank Ltd. will exchange information on economic conditions within Japan and Texas and hold meetings.

"Texas offers the single best climate for Japanese investment and manufacturing in the United States," Petty said in a statement. "We look to Japan as an ideal market for the many fine Texas products and services."

Earlier agreements were made with the Long-Term Credit Bank of Japan, Mitsubishi Bank and Sanwa Bank.

Officials say lightening caused refinery fire

TULSA (AP) — Lightening is blamed for the ignition of fumes in an underground storage tank at a Sun Co. Inc. refinery today, causing an explosion that tossed pieces of concrete up to 300 yards, officials said.

No one was injured in the 4:40 a.m. blast, which disintegrated the tank's concrete lid. The debris or the force of the blast downed four power poles and two high-voltage power lines, said Jim Goss, spokesman for Public Service Co. of Oklahoma. About 675 customers were without power until 8 a.m., he said.

Sun Co. spokesman Forrest Brokaw said the tank contained small amounts of sludge and was not being used at the time of the blast, which residents reported rattled windows up to 10 miles away.

Acting District Fire Chief Lonnie Lamb said the lightning might have struck a pump station across the street from the tank and traveled underground through metal pipes to ignite the fumes.

Texas firm awarded damages in rig dispute

CASPER, Wyo. (AP) — A state jury has awarded a Texas oil company $4 million in damages in a lawsuit over a never-finished drilling rig that a Casper firm contracted to build in 1981.

The jury found D.N. Fitzgerald, former director of Oil Patch Sales and Rentals of Wyoming, tried to force Texas West Oil and Gas Corp. to pay about $500,000 more than the contract price for a drilling rig that Oil Patch had agreed to deliver to Texas West for $5.1 million.

Texas West already had paid Oil Patch $3.5 million for the unbuilt rig before Fitzgerald guaranteed a loan for $580,000 to Oil Patch from a Casper bank, the lawsuit said.

Texas West attorneys contended First Interstate Bank of Casper filed a lien against the rig when Oil Patch defaulted on the loan bearing Fitzgerald's personal guarantee. The lien blocked delivery of the unfinished rig unless Texas West paid an additional $500,000 to have the lien removed, attorneys said.

Texas West claimed the original $3.5 million investment in the rig was never recovered. The lawsuit alleged Fitzgerald used his influence as a member of the Oil Patch board of directors to require payment above the contract purchase price for the rig.

Austin city council boosts its power rates

AUSTIN (AP) — Substantial increases have been voted by the Austin City Council for large residential and commercial power users, but many small consumers will see their power bills decrease.

The rate changes are effective Nov. 1, the council said Wednesday.

Under the rate changes, residential customers using 900 kilowatt-hours a month or less will see a reduction in monthly bills, while those using more will see an increase that rises with consumption.

For a small customer, using 500 kilowatt-hours a month, monthly bills will drop more than 26 percent in both summer and winter. But residents of a large all-electric home using 5,000 kilowatt-hours a month will see an increase of nearly 21 percent in summer and 28 percent in winter bills.

Commercial customers will also pay substantial increases, some exceeding 15 percent, according to Electric Department figures.

Exploration well begun in Sudan

DALLAS (SWN) — A group headed by Sun Sudan Oil Co. began its first exploratory well in the Democratic Republic of Sudan on Sept. 25. The Hurriya No. 1 was spudded in the Kosti Basin, about 160 miles south of Khartoum, and will be drilled to a total depth of 9,000 feet.

Sun Sudan is operator for a group composed of Ocelot Sudan Exploration Corp., Marathon Petroleum Sudan Ltd., and General Petroleum Corp., the Sudanese national oil company. The group entered a production-sharing contract with the Sudanese government in 1982 for what is now a nearly 60-million-acre block in Central Sudan.

Union Texas active in Indonesia

HOUSTON (SWN) — Union Texas Petroleum reported an oil discovery in the Tomori block offshore East Sulawesi in Indonesia.

The Tiaka No. 1 wildcat, which is the second well to be drilled on the Tomori block, encountered significant oil shows in the Miocene carbonates below 5,740 feet. The well flowed 3,864 barrels daily of 29 degree API gravity crude oil on a one-inch choke from perforations between 7,270 feet and 7,349 feet. The Tiaka find was drilled in 174 feet of water 10 miles offshore the east coast of Sulawesi.

A delineation well, the Tiaka No. 2, currently is being drilled. Another exploratory well, the Dongkala No. 1, will be drilled, approximately 25 miles southwest of the Tiaka No. 1 discovery.

Union Texas (South East Asia), Inc., a subsidiary of Union Texas, is the operator and has a 20 percent interest in the Tomori block. Union Texas (S.E.A.), Inc. is one of Pertamina's production-sharing contractors. Other participants in the Tomori block are Texaco Tomori, Inc. (20 percent); Marathon Petroleum Tomori, Inc. (26.67 percent); I.C.I. Petroleum (Tomori), Ltd. (20 percent); and Britoil (Development) Ltd. (13.33 percent).

Mid-Continent sets meeting

AUSTIN — Informed speculation on the future of the oil and gas industry by three of America's leading business executives will highlight the 66th Annual Meeting of Texas Mid-Continent Oil & Gas Association, to be held early next month in Dallas.

Between 500 and 600 petroleum industry leaders and their guests, representing all segments of the energy business, are expected to gather for the convention on Thursday and Friday, October 3 and 4, at the Westin Hotel in Dallas' Galleria.

Dr. Kenneth Lay of Houston, president of HNG/InterNorth, Inc., Richard Fisher, president of Morgan Stanley Group, Inc. of New York, and Lawrence Rawl, president of Exxon Corp., New York, will be the featured guest speakers for the meeting's general session on Friday morning, according to the Association's president, Bill Abington.

Dr. Lay will discuss the challenges facing the nautral gas industry in the near future, and how the gas industry can turn around the widely forecast stagnant gas market for years into the future by becoming more flexible, more competitive with other fuels, and aggressively developing large incremental gas markets such as the ones that exist in California and Florida.

Fisher's address is entitled "The Changing Face of the Oil and Gas Industry: Trends in Domestic and World Makets and Institutions."

Rawl will review the energy supply/demand picture and discuss key issues where opportunities exist for the petroleum industry to improve its business environment, including tax reform, natural gas decontrol and public lands access.

The convention, which will run a day and a half , is the only Texas gathering which hosts representatives of all aspects of the work of the industry in this country's No. 1 energy-producing and processing state.

Assembly's artists

Dramatic soprano Jane Debenport captivates those attending Midland Arts Assembly's final noon concert Wednesday at Republic-Bank First National with her wit and vocal expertise. Ms. Debenport, a longtime Midland resident who now lives in Odessa, is an adjunct faculty member at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin and a private voice teacher. Also, on Wednesday's program were excerpts from "The Nutcracker," performed by dancers from Ballet Midland. The closing concert coincided with National Arts Week, which continues through Sunday.

Williams, Holt, Stoltz heading Loeffler committee

From Staff Reports

The Midland County Steering Committee for U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler's gubernatorial campaign has been announced. Heading the committee as co-chairmen are Robert Holt, Clayton Williams and Deane Stoltz.

"I'm proud that Robert, Clayton and Deane are providing the leadership for my Midland County Steering Committee," said Loeffler. "They, as well as the other committee members, represent the kind of grassroots support that we have throughout the state. These community leaders share a common goal — to preserve a strong, proud Texas, and to return leadership to the Governor's office."

Loeffler, 39, who grew up on a ranch near Mason, announced he was a candidate for governor on Aug. 22. He received his undergraduate degree from the University of Texas, where he played football under Coach Darrell Royal, and received his law degree from the University of Texas School of Law in 1971. He served as chief legislative counsel for U.S. Sen. John Tower before being appointed special assistant for legislative affairs to President Gerald Ford in 1975.

He was elected to Congress in 1978, making him the first Republican ever to represent the 21st District in Washington. The 21st District encompasses Midland.

Loeffler now is serving as chief deputy whip, which makes him the third-ranking Republican in the House of Representatives. In addition he has kept his seats on the powerful Appropriations and Budget Committees. He was re-elected in 1984 with 81 percent of the vote.

Also listed on his steering committee from Midland are: City Councilman Gordon Marcum II, Guy McCrary, Dick McMillan, Nadine Craddick, Don Jones, Bettye Calvert, Margaret Purvis, Betty Sumner, City Councilman Steve Davidson, Jess Ann Thomason, Paul Laverty, Gary Timmermann, Charles Callaway, Donnie C. Hall, State Rep. Tom Craddick.

Also, County Commissioner Win Brown, Mayor G. Thane Akins, Jeff Robnett, Kingdon Hughes, Lou Brown, Patricia Wettstein, Pat Blackwell, Earle Craig, Bill Blakemore, Fran Hillin, Edwin D. Carnes, Harrison L. McCarroll, Dura Clarke, John H. Meinke, Pat E. Fletcher, Lee B. Park, Patricia L. Dishman, Stephen M. Gibson. Gary L. Ries.

Also, C.L. Holman, Edgar G. Harris, Terry Lee Leflar, Keith Edwin Berry, Paul D. Linnevold, James C. Ameel, Donald A. Schneider, Horace L. Berry, Donnie Joel Pruitt, Robert M. Stine, George B. Resley, Ada Spivey, Scott Shelton, James Schultze and Jack Hightower.

Harriet Herd says her mother got her interested in the arts

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

Harriet Herd traces her interest in the arts back to her mother.

"She was a very fine pianist, composer and started playing the piano when she was 3 years old," Mrs. Herd says. "She was very interested in having all her children be educated musically. If we didn't accept the education, we were at least exposed to it. Being the youngest, she concentrated on me a little bit more than she did the rest of them." She laughs, then adds, "She gave up on the older ones, though my brother really had a lot more talent than I."

Mrs. Herd, longtime patron of the arts and former member of the Texas Fine Arts Commission, will receive the Midland Arts Assembly's Recognition Award during the organization's annual meeting today. The ceremony coincides with National Arts Week, which continues through Sunday.

This week's celebration of American arts is held in commemoration of the 20th anniversary of the National Endowment for the Arts. In honor of the occasion, Midland Arts Assembly has scheduled arts activities in various businesses and on local television to emphasize the slogan "Arts Are Everywhere in Midland."

Mrs. Herd's early background includes piano studies, which began when she was 6 and lasted until she graduated from high school. She then spent the next two years studying voice at Sweet Brdesire to teach voice in the public schools met with a snag when she entered the University of Texas.

"They had no music department. Can you believe that? I lost all of my applied music, the vocal part, not the theory. I had to take other courses."

Determination sent her across the street to "a little school called the Texas School of Fine Arts. There, she took courses on "how to teach public school music."

Her first and only public school teaching assignment was in LaGrange. She laughs and comments that she was in LaGrange "before anything else was very famous about LaGrange."

"I taught only one year, but it was a great experience, and I learned a lot from the children." Her assignment included teaching public school music from the first grade to high school and handling the high school chorus. During that year, she took the chorus to competitions and established an entire music department.

"That's the reason why I didn't last but one year," she says. Then she laughs again, and adds, "I'd spent a busy year, and I decided I'd rather get married."

The tone in her voice grows serious again, and she says, "Besides that, I met Harvey in the meantime." That decision brought her to Midland 45 years ago. She found "Midland a most exciting place" then. During the 1940s, the Herds started a family. Harvey Herd did what many American males were doing at that time, he entered the service and Mrs. Herd left town for a couple of years.

"We came back and picked up immediately from where we had left off." At that time, Midland had "a wonderful alive feeling" and people were flooding into the town.

"I think the Sprayberry brought a lot of that in, the Sprayberry oil development. Midland was really more of a cattle country until that happened. The oil business was certainly here but that Sprayberry development was the one that really made the increase in our population.

"And it brought a cosmopolitan population in to Midland that had never been here before, and these people had wonderful things where they came from, and they wanted their children to have wonderful things where they were going to live. So they brought us many ideas and really gave us the impetus to do something about it."

United Way reaches 41.7 percent of goal

From Staff Reports

Just two weeks into the United Way fall campaign, it was announced today that a total of $883,247 has been pledged. The figure represents 41.7 percent of the goal of $2.12 million. It was released at the first report luncheon today at Midland Centennial Plaza.

Division totals include: Special Gifts, $207,575; Residential, $2,865; Independent Oil, $62,545; Professional, $12,558; Major Firms, $228,592; Intermediate Oil, $44,754; Pacesetters, $20,921; Small Business, $1,669; Major Oil, $208,065; Trailblazers, $44,347; Government Services, $35,602; Education, $0; Wildcat, $13,754.

Today's report meeting, the first of four to be held during the campaign, was attended by over 200 volunteers in this year's campaign. Ed Clements of KCRS Radio was the emcee and entertainment was provided by a "Madonna" impersonator.

The second report luncheon is scheduled for next Thursday, beginning at 11:45 a.m.

St. Ann's expects 25,000 to attend Family Fair

Fair to benefit St. Ann's Catholic School

From Staff Reports

More than 25,000 people are expected to attend the 37th Annual St. Ann Family Fair this year, according to spokesman, Neal Florer.

"Last year it was cold and so only about 20,000 people showed up," said Florer of the annual benefit event held by St. Ann's Catholic Church. "In the past, though, there's been an average of about 20,000 to 25,000 people. It gets busy."

The purpose of the fair, said Florer, was to benefit the private school which has an average attendance of "three to four hundred children."

Featured will be dozens of food and game booths, special events such as a sit-down Mexican dinner, bingo, the "Country Store" — a collection of homemade canned and baked goods, and many others.

One of the more popular events, said Florer, is the annual garage sale.

"We call it the 'Ins and Odds' booth," he said. "People are usually lined up for that one before it even opens." He added that collection efforts have been under way all year, "with everyone cleaning out their garages."

The most popular activity, however, is the carnival, he noted.

"It's a huge carnival...and a good, clean one, run by 'Pride of Texas Shows' out of South Texas," said Florer.

The rides will be the only event open today and Friday, according to Florer, with a $5 ticket good for unlimited rides from 6 to 10 p.m. All attractions will be open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Saturday.

"There is no admission for the fair," said Florer. "But if the kids want to ride the rides, they can purchase a bracelet for $12 that enables them to ride all day."

Florer estimated that there will be between 30 to 40 game booths including cake wheels and dart games.

He added that the fair is "for big kids too," with 20 to 30 food booths, including barbeque, corn on the cob, hamburgers and others and several adult-oriented booths such as sewing and arts and crafts.

The Mexican dinner will start "between 4 p.m. and 6 p.m." on Saturday, said Florer, "for those folks who want to go inside and sit down to eat."

The dinner will be in the school cafeteria.

St. Ann's Catholic Church is located at 207 North "M" Street near Midland Memorial Hospital.

"We should have a good turnout," said Florer. "You can see the ferris wheel from Andrews Highway."

ED TODD

'Natural foods,' cycling, jogging good for body

For almost 20 years, I've been somewhat finicky, like a discerning cat, about what I ate and drank. Admittedly, I occasionally went off on binges, sneaked a French fry or two and once savored mustard-splattered hamburgers, greasy hash browns, and crunchy fried chicken — plucked skin and all.

And I wasn't adverse to imbibing ale and strong drink and puffing on cigarettes, cigars and pipes — all tobacco filled — even when I was on my lop-sided health kick. With enough imbibing, pig's feet and snails were delicacies.

I'm still somewhat of a showman at the supper table but try not to make too much of a production about what I toss down my food canal.

Like it or not, I prefer "natural foods" which escape too much processing and go without the addition of addictive sugars and fattening and clogging fats and without the so-called enhancements of coloring and preservatives.

My diet is a mishmash of religion (avoid "unclean" meats) and a desire to lead a healthy life and a long one as long as I'm reasonably fit. So, to me, it seems sensible that we ought to be discerning about our diet just as we should be particular about with whom we congregate, associate with, about what we read, view, hear and otherwise take into our minds and souls.

Beholding myself as neither saint nor fool, though my foolish deeds have marked and marred my life, I keep plugging along in life's journey for the sake of the adventure and to see what I can become in God's world. Indeed, I have suffered some disillusionments and some rewards.

Now, here's another developed compulsion I'm nurturing to enhance my selfish life: exercising by running, jogging, jumping around in aerobic arm- and leg-flinging, and cycling.

It's work. It's sometimes fun. It's alway rewarding. I like the robust feeling.

More than the others, I can understand cycling. It's fashionable. You can ride the counterparts of the roadster, touring car, limousine, expensive sports car, an ordinary machine or a clunker. You can dress to the hilt and be in vogue in your cycling gear. It's your choice: first class, tourist or cattle car.

You can dress up in dressing down in your scanty aerobic attire. Some folks, especially the gals, go on a fashion parade in aerobic exercising.

Now, running is puzzling.

In the beginning, it's work. It may be the "smart thing" to do by some standards, but it begins as a drudgery. Work. I prod on despite my instinct to malfunction, slow down, walk or flop. I continue despite myself. Strangely, now, the more I run under the influence of a wholesome attitude, the less drudgery it becomes. A sense of enjoyment sets in. I experience a degree of elation and satisfaction. I smile within.

HERD

During the 1950s, when Mrs. Herd's active involvement on Midland boards began, she says, "There were not very many people to serve on boards, and those who didn't know how to say no — like I didn't know how to say no — became involved in many, many things besides the cultural things. It was a great benefit to me because I learned a lot from serving on those boards, from knowing people who had come in from different parts of the country and brought new ideas to Midland."

Later, she served five years on the Advisory Board for Leadership Midland, beginning when the board was first created. During that time, Gov. Bill Clements appointed her to fill out a term on the Texas Commission on the Arts. Although her service was short lived, she says, "I enjoyed my relationship there very much." She hopes the Commission will get another person from here to serve because this area needs representation on a state board of this nature.

Mrs. Herd has been a member of numerous organizations, among them, Kappa Kappa Gamma Alumnae, Act IX (Midland Community Theatre auxiliary), National Association of Parliamentarians, Daughters of the American Revolution, Colonial Dames of America and Magna Charter Dames. She has served on the boards of Junior League of Midland, Inc.; Midland Symphony Association; Midland Symphony Guild; Midland County Library and the Friends of the Library; Midland Community Theatre, Permian Civic Ballet, organizing board, 1967; Midland Odessa Symphony Young Artists Competition, organizing chairman in 1964 and chairman in 1966; Arts and Recreation Committee for Objectives for Midland, ;chairman, 1967. and Religious Committee for Objectives, 1980; and the Women's Fitness Center, YMCA, organizing chairman, served on board of directors of Central YMCA and the Metropolitan Board, 1970s and was former chairman of the professional division of United Way.

"I think probably the most exciting thing that happened to me when I was working so much with all of this was the beginning of the National Young Artists Competition, when Lara Hoggard came to town. He was a great dreamer, that was exactly what Midland needed at that time. He had these dreams and we just did them."

She sees a bright future for Midland in the area of the arts.

"Under the leadership of the Midland Arts Assembly, I believe that the groups are working together much better than they ever have in the past. Before the assembly, we had arts councils a couple of times but they never did really develop into anything. I served on two different ones that we tried to do what the arts assembly is doing now, except that the arts assembly is going even beyond that. They have really had some very innovative ideas and things that other parts of the state could copy.

"I don't see any big gaps in any of the particular fields of art. Now I think that if we had a performing arts auditorium, we'd be able to better present what we have. That is something that Midland needs.

"I think there's definitely a thread of growth in Midland. I think all of the cultural groups who are active in Midland right now are striving to improve themselves. I think excellence is the name of the game now."

Earl and Marie Leyendecker relax in the shade of their roadside flea market, accompanied by a fashionble female mannequin.

Flea market has 'little bit of everything'

LUMBERTON (AP) — Beneath the tin roof of a weathered wooden overhang, Earl Leyendecker adjusts a large flowered hat atop a mannequin who fans herself with a bright pink featherduster.

"Sometimes you just need something to attract people's attention," he chuckles, throwing a glance at the U.S. 96 traffic rushing past the building.

Strolling through a maze of treasures from brass bird cages and antique bathtubs to black velvet paintings, it's easy to believe the businessman when he says, "I've got a little bit of everything out here. Sooner or later, people find just about anything they're looking for."

From within a homemade building resting at the outskirts of Lumberton, the Corsicana native has operated "Leyendecker's Flea Market" for the past two years.

"Buy, sell and trade anything that's new, used and abused that's my business," he says, displaying a laugh that would soften even the toughest customer. "Swappin' and tradin' — it just gets in your blood."

While a daily flow of people curiously poke through merchandise ranging from boxes of romance novels to piles of wooden bed frames, Leyendecker says most customers are surprised at the store's vast contents.

"People drive by here every day and don't stop," the former steel welder says, scanning a showroom of wooden sofas that line one section of the two-room building. "But when they do, they act like they're surprised at what they see."

Beneath a huge oak tree growing in front of the store, two white metal bird cages swing slowly in a soft breeze that jingles the metal chimes of a large steel wind chime. Surveying a variety of merchandise organized in an order only a caretaker could conceive, Leyendecker says his wife, Marie, manages the sales.

As a pair of curious shoppers survey a collection of clay pots arranged near a rusted wheelbarrow, Leyendecker explains how he obtains merchandise from sales and auctions "everywhere from Houston to Alabama," and from an occasional sale or trade from an area resident.

"If they got something they want to sell or trade, they need money for something, I'm happy to oblige," he says, raising the back of his red T-shirt to grab a packet of chewing tobacco from a back pocket of his blue jeans. "I'll sell anything I can get my hands on."

Near the back of a room containing a collection of mahogany dining room tables, dressers and china cabinets that occasionally draw the attention of antique dealers, several mattresses lie toppled against one another like so many dominoes.

Checking to make sure a mannequin clinging to one of the store's wooden doors is secure, Leyendecker displays his sense of pride for the store by describing the "mouth-to-mouth" warranty he issues on each sale.

While operating a store of such size would seem like hard work, the couple's easy-going attitude and love of the business generates energy each day to cart the merchandise in and out of the store. Living in a small dwelling near the back of the store, Leyendecker says he has never had people steal any of the merchandise at night. Recalling only one incident where he "lost" a bicycle, the jovial businessman says, "It probably rode off by itself. I don't accuse anybody of anything."

Authorities arrest seven in alleged forgery ring

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A total of seven arrests have been made by law enforcement officers in Midland, Odessa and Monahans in the past months in connection with a forgery ring police say has been operating in a multi-county Permian Basin area for as long as 10 years.

The two latest arrests occurred in Odessa, with Municipal Judge J.E. Weatherly setting bond for Ronnie Green, 31, 1301 W. 13th St., at $15,000 on a felony forgery charge. Weatherly set bond at $5,000 for 24-year-old Freda Mae Firks, also of 1301 W. 13th St., on a charge of possessing altered driver's licenses.

Monahans police arrested one suspected forger early this month. A joint investigation by Monahans and Odessa police produced information that resulted in search warrants being issued for two Midland residences.

Cooperating with the Midland sheriff's office and the Midland District Attorney's office, Monahans and Odessa police seized stwo typewriters, one business check protector, Texas drivers' licenses in various stages of operation and numerous checks in various stages of forgery.

According to Odessa Police forgery unit Det. Shara L. Woods, area law enforcement officers know that, during the past four months, checks have been stolen from at least 16 businesses. These checks, with a total value of between $50,000 to $75,000, have been passed in at least six cities in the Permian Basin area. In this four month period, officers estimate between 150 to 175 forged checks have been passed by this group of people.

Monday, representatives of the Odessa Police Department, Ector County Sheriff's office, Midland Police Department, Midland County Sheriff's and district attorney's office, DPS iontelligence, Martin County Sheriff's office, Andrews County Sheriff's office, Crane County Sheriff's office and the Stanton Police Department, met in Midland to discuss cases and exchange information. Additional meetings are scheduled to be held in the future.

Convenience store robber sought

From Staff Reports

Midland police are searching for a man suspected in an early morning robbery of Buck's Convenience Store, Midkiff Road and Loop 250.

Police said a store clerk reported the man, driving a blue Nissan pickup with Arkansas license plates, walked into the store about 12:45 a.m. today and stole six assorted magazines, together valued at $24.

The clerk, whose name was not released, told police when she tried to detain the man, he pulled her hair and fled the scene on foot leaving his vehicle in the store parking lot.

Police refused to identify the suspect pending further investigation. However, police took custody of the suspect's vehicle.

In other complaints, Jeannie Marolyn Couch, 3307 Bauman, reported property, together valued at $850, was stolen during a burglary of her residence between Friday and Sunday.

The list of stolen property includes two bottles of wine, a diamond ring, emerald ring and Polaroid camera, according to reports.

Also, Marty E. Mondragon, 1613 Cimmaron, told police someone broke into his vehicle while it was parked Wednesday in the 1100 block of W. Ohio Ave. and stole four books and a car stereo system, together valued at $695. The burglary occurred between 10 and 11:30 a.m.

Miscellaneous tools, together valued at $500, were stolen between Friday and Tuesday during a burglary at Carlton Title Company, 3218 Commercial, police reported.

Pilot scoring high in competition

From Staff Reports

Aerobatic pilot Gene Beggs of Midland-Odessa is scoring in the top five mid-way in the unlimited category in International Aerobatic Club (IAC) competition in Sherman this week.

Beggs, who was on the 1984 United States World Aerobatic Men's Team which won the world championship in Hungary last year, currently is in fourth place in the nationwide competition. The top five pilots will be selected to the world team, which in 1986 will be competing in England.

Scoring the high marks are Kermit Weeks of Miami, Fla.; Clint McHenry of Pompano, Fla.; Henry Haigh of Howell, Mich.; Beggs; and Harold Chappell of Madison Heights, Mich.

Weeks, the reigning IAC national champion, flies the biwing Weeks Solution and was on the 1984 world team. Also on the 1984 team were Beggs, who flies the biwing Pitts Special; Haigh, who flies the midwing Laser airplane; and Chappell, who flies the Pitts.

McHenry flies a monoplane, the Extra 230.

Woman claims to be possessed, kills man

PORT ALLEN, La. (AP) — A woman who claimed she was possessd by the devil beat a fisherman to death with a piece of driftwood then swam nude into the Mississippi River and drowned, witnesses told police.

The woman was identified only as being from Tyler, Texas. The fisherman's indentity was unknown.

The woman's 15-year-old son told police some of the details, officers said.

"I've been a policeman for 25 years, and this has been the toughest, most bizarre case I've ever seen. This is just plain crazy," said Gordon Hebert, chief of detectives for the West Baton Rouge Parish Sheriff's Office.

The woman had come to Baton Rouge from Tyler because "she was convinced that she was besieged by the devil and an angel told her she had to see Jimmy Swaggart in Baton Rouge," Hebert said.

Swaggart is a popular television evangelist. "She did not make contact with Swaggart," Hebert said.

"I've been a policeman for 25 years, and this has been the toughest, most bizarre case I've ever seen. This is just plain crazy."

Detective Gordon Hebert
West Baton Rouge Parish Sheriff's Office

The deputy said that the woman, a widow, brought her two sons, one 13 years old and one 15 years old, here on Wednesday morning and had checked into a Port Allen motel.

"Her sons said she seemed all right," Hebert said.

"They decided to come and look at the river (Wednesday) afternoon," he said.

The woman told her sons to buy some bait so they could fish, and the boys left their mother at the river, Hebert said. The older son, after climbing the levee, decided to come back to the river bank.

"He found his mother beating a white male over the head," Hebert said. "She told her son that he (the man) was also besieged by the devil. She said she was going to kill him. He was just some guy who was fishing in the river."

The man was apparently killed with the first blow struck with a 6-foot-long piece of driftwood, Hebert said.

Hebert said that the woman made her son help her drag the man's body into the river, but he added that the 15-year-old boy probably would not have any charges brought against him.

"I doubt it seriously if we charge him," Hebert said. "She was absolutely berserk and he was terrified. He thought he might be next."

Then, Hebert said, the woman began swimming to the middle of the river where she drowned. A passing tug boat recovered her body about an hour later.

"I was told that the woman was nude," Hebert said. "None of the witnesses said she had taken her clothes off before she went into the river, but apparently she had."

"Two men called the office and told us what happened," Hebert said. "They weren't here when we arrived on the scene, but we have some other witnesses."

Hebert said they have not identified the missing man, and the search for his body continued today. Hebert said the man had been driving a car with a Mississippi license plate, but it had not been traced to the owner.

Respiratory therapy, horse psychology among short courses

From Staff Reports

The Midland College Department of Community Services will offer seven short courses beginning Monday.

"Respiratory Therapy: Entry Level Review" will meet from 6 to 8 p.m. on Wednesdays through Nov. 6. The course is designed to provide a comprehensive review for individuals preparing to take the National Respiratory Therapy Entry Level Examination. Units of instruction such as anatomy and physiology, airway management, pharmacology, pathology, mechanical ventilation and blood gases will be included. A review manual will be provided to all students. The fee for the course is $40.

"Travel in England, Scotland and Wales" will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. on Mondays through Nov. 25. Country houses, castles, monuments, cathedrals, gardens, English cottages and British history will be the highlight of this course. Convenient, economic shoppes in and around London will be discussed and hotels and restaurants are recommended. Slides will be used extensively. The course fee is $28.

"Alcoholism: A Family Illness" will meet 9 to 11 a.m. on Tuesdays through Nov. 5. The course is designed for persons who want to know the facts about alcoholism whether they have a family member with a drinking problem, work in the related service fields or are interested in acquiring knowledge about the illness. Reduced fees are available to families taking the course. The course fee is $16.

"Introduction to Horse Psychology" will meet from 7 to 8 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursdays through Oct. 17. The course is designed for riders, owners, breeders and trainers who wish to deal more successfully with horses. The intent of the course is to lessen the difficulties of understanding between man and horse and to create more rewarding relationships with the animals. The course fee is $12.

"Introduction to Stock Market" will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. on Tuesdays through Nov. 5. Students will study various investments including common stocks, bonds, puts and calls. Tax advantage investments, how to read financial news, controlling risks, how to deal with a stock broker and speculating versus investing also are studied. The course fee is $24.

"Learning to Live Again" will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. on Wednesdays through Nov. 6. The course is a series of workshops to help persons adjust to life after divorce. Sessions cover legal advice as well as suggestions to get back into the mainstream of life. Positive steps in handling stress and evaluating strengths and values are included as well as financial planning advice. The class is limited to 15 students and the fee is $19.

"Change Your Habit By Changing Your Thinking" will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. on Wednesdays through Nov. 6. This course is designed to help people deal with habits or emotional responses brought on by anger over trivials or feelings of depression. The techniques taught in this course are based on Rational Behavior Therapy and associated fields. The primary method to be utilized will be Rational Behavior Thinking. The course fee is $18.

Information on these and other short courses is available by calling the Department of Community Services at 684-7851, extensions 147 or 216.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

Twenty-one Midland students honored by scholarship program

From Staff Reports

Twenty-one Midland Independent School District students have been designated Commended Scholars in the 1986 National Merit Scholarship Program.

The students include Midland High School seniors Karen Bates, James Cavenaugh, Cynthia Collins, Joseph Gourlay, Sharon Graham, Mack Harrison, Carole Howard, Janna Pilgreen, Jonathan Robinson, Stephanie Scott, Nancy Summer and Alicia Thompson.

Also earning recognition were Lee High School seniors Trisha Brown, Brennan Carmody, Belle Chen, Denise Grogan, Rob Hintermier, Barbara Kelly, James Sikes, Donald Slattke and Jeffrey Stewart.

Commended students are those who placed in the top 5 percent of over one million participants in the 30th annual National Merit Scholarship Program competition.

Participants entered the competition by taking the PSAT/NMSQT examination during their junior year. Although the qualifying test scores of the 35,000 commended scholars nationwide were high, they were slightly below the level required to obtain semifinalist standing.

The 15,000 semifinalists in this year's competition were announced publicly on Sept. 13. MISD had 12 semifinalists.

Alamo PTA to hold open house

The Alamo Junior High School Parent-Teacher Association will host an open house at 7 p.m. tonight.

Persons attending are asked to enter through the east parking lot to avoid construction.

Drug abuse magazine distributed

From Staff Reports

Four tons of magazines designed to equip parents to fight drug abuse were mailed this week to parents of Midland school students in grades 6 through 10.

The magazine, entitled "Lets' All Work to Fight Drug Abuse," includes information on how to identify drugs and drug paraphernalia, symptoms of drug abuse, biological effects of drug use, and what parents can do to prevent drug abuse.

A joint project of Neighbors Against Burglaries and Drugs, the Midland Crime Prevention Commission, Midland Parent-Teacher Association, and the Midland Independent School District, the magazine was financed by local businesses through the sale of advertisements.

Bennett says bilingual program failure

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Secretary of Education William J. Bennett, labeling the government's bilingual education program a failure, said today he will press for changes to allow more schools to offer intensive English classes instead of instructing in students' native languages.

Bennett said it will be up to school districts to decide what method works best. But he made it clear that he feels the schools have been devoting too much time and too many resources to teaching in Spanish and other foreign languages.

Bennett announced the policy shift in a speech prepared for delivery today in New York City before the Association for a Better New York.

Bennett charged that "after sound beginnings" in the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, the federal policies governing bilingual education "went astray...Too many children have failed to become fluent in English."

The government has funnelled $1.7 billion in bilingual education aid to school districts since 1968.

Federal civil rights officials in the 1970s began pressuring school districts to teach limited-English speaking students in their native tongues, and until 1984 forbade schools from using the funds for classes that only relied on intensive English instruction.

"After 17 years of federal involvement, and after $1.7 billion of federal funding, we have no evidence that the children whom we sought to help — that the children who deserve our help — have benefitted," Bennett said.

He said the administration would not "give up on the promise of equal educational opportunity" for these children, but it also will not "continue down the same failed path ... (and) throw good money after bad."

He said he would make regulatory and administrative changes "to allow greater flexibility for local school districts," and make sure that his civil rights agency does "not impose a particular method of instruction." And he said he will "explore with Congress the possibility of removing the 4 percent cap on alternative instructional methods."

Boat in traffic

This boat is like a fish out of water, except a fish wouldn't attract as much attention or require a police escort. The $21,000 Scorpion 211 was westbound on Interstate Highway 37 when the trailer cable broke, leaving the craft grounded near downtown Corpus Christi.

Teen baits car stereo thief

STATE

FORT WORTH (AP) — The $160 car stereo cost Jonathan Engelke a week's pay from his job as a surveyor's helper. When it was stolen Engelke embarked on a plan to get even with the burglar.

The car stereo was stolen from his car Sept. 14 while his car was parked outside a theater in a Fort Worth shopping mall.

Engelke, 16, set out last Friday to either get back his stereo or at least catch the person who stole it.

"(It) cost me a week's pay, and a week's pay is pretty important. I couldn't afford another $160 stereo so I bought one for $80" to use as bait, Engelke said.

Wearing a flak jacket for protection in case the thief was armed, Engelke carried a camera with a flash unit to catch the thief in action and handcuffs to hold him.

He parked the car in the theater parking lot in almost the same spot where it was parked the week before. He walked to the front of the theater, but instead of buying a ticket and going inside he went outside and hid behind some trash cans where he could see the parked car.

It didn't take long.

As Engelke crouched behind the trash cans, he saw a youth walking through the parking lot looking inside cars. He stopped at Engelke's car.

The gleaming new stereo was apparently tempting and so was the unlocked door.

"When I saw him getting into the Jeep, I ran up and told him to freeze and put his hands over his head," Engelke said.

Engelke whipped out his camera and began using the flash as both a diversion to blind the would-be thief and to record the act on film. He put the handcuffs on the youth.

"He said he was just looking at the stereo, but all the knobs were off, so he wasn't just there looking," Engelke said.

It turned out the youth was a theater ticket taker, 15, who had apparently been taking more than tickets.

Engelke marched the handcuffed youth to the front of the theater where he met J.M. Griffin, an off-duty Fort Worth officer who was working as a security guard.

The youth was an employee of the theater who was fired after the incident, Griffin said.

"We appreciate all the help we can get," Griffin said, but he didn't recommend everyone trying a citizen's arrest.

Burglary Detective K.F. Francis, who investigated the case before turning over the 15-year-old to juvenile authorities, said what Engelke did was "legal, but we don't advise it."

"Anthing you can do to try to catch a criminal yourself puts you in an hazardous situation," Francis said.

One of the detectives urged Engelke to join the police force when he gets old enough in about four years.

Engelke's mother, Jean, said she might have tried to stop him if she had known about the plan. "Jonathan showed responsibility and restraint," she said.

Engelke shrugs off suggestions that he is a hero for his actions.

"I was just somebody who had a beef with somebody whole stole my stereo," he said.

Man charged with murder in shaking death of baby

HOUSTON (AP) — A Channelview man charged with murder in the shaking death of a 1-year-old was arrested in downtown Houston after a two-day search.

Mark Russell Capps, 27, is accused of shaking Joshua Lee Vanier so hard that it caused hemorrhaging behind the eyes. The baby died Monday afternoon at Hermann Hospital.

Capps, a boyfriend of the child's mother, was arrested Tuesday, said Det. M.J. O'Brien of the Harris County Sheriff's Department juvenile division.

He was charged with murder and injury to a child and remained in Harris County Jail Wednesday in lieu of $70,000 bond, a jail spokeswoman said.

Boy buried in Marine blues

HARLINGEN (AP) — A 12-year-old who showed courage during three years of suffering with a brain tumor was buried Wednesday in a Marine Corps uniform — the boy's last request.

Benito Gonzales Jr. was buried in his hometown of Harlingen, but he had been in and out of the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute in Houston since 1982 for nine operations and treatment for the malignant tumor.

The honor of wearing Marine dress blues normally is reserved for active duty and retired Marines, but when marines at the Houston recruiting office heard of his dying wish, they took up the fight with Corps headquarters.

"It was tedious," said Staff Sgt. Mike Eck. "I made a lot of phone calls to Washington and a few other places and he was given the authority to wear the blues, the same blues we wear."

Benito died Sunday at the hospital after being in a coma two months, said his aunt, Nora Torres of Harlingen.

Pipe-bomb maker charged

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A 26-year-old San Antonio man was denied bond Wednesday on charges of illegally manufacturing and possessing pipe bombs, a federal agent said.

Stewart Allen, agent-in-charge of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco & Firearms said James Ervin Holmes was arrested late Tuesday at his apartment.

He was picked up after a pipe bomb was tossed into a yard about 12 feet from a house and exploded. A second pipe bomb was tossed into the yard, but it failed to detonate, Allen said.

The agent said after Holmes' arrest, officers found four additional pipe bombs in his apartment.

UT alumnus to be honored

AUSTIN (AP) — Metropolitan Opera singer Barbara Conrad heads a list of six former students of the University of Texas to be honored Oct. 4 at the Ex-Student's Association Distinguished Alumnus Awards ceremony.

U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, a past recipient of the award, will be master of ceremonies at the Lyndon B. Johnson Library Auditorium.

Others to be honored include:

Dr. Ruth Hartgraves, Houston physician; former Navy Admiral Bob R. Inman, Austin, president of Microelectronics and Computer Technology Corp. (MCC); William D. Noel, Odessa, chairman of the board of Rexene Corp. and El Paso Products Co.; William B. Seay, Dallas, former chairman of the board of Southwestern Life Insuracne Co. and J.C. Walter Jr., Houston, president of Walter Oil & Gas Corp.

Mayor candidate charged

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston financial consultant who is a minor candidate in the city's Nov. 5 mayoral election pleaded innocent Wednesday to charges he disrupted a debate between the race's two major contenders.

John Lee Hudson, 33, was charged with disrupting a meeting or procession after allegedly protesting he was not invited to join a Sept. 18 debate between incumbent Mayor Kathy Whitmire and former mayor Louie Welch.

Louisianian convicted of murder

McKINNEY (AP) — A state court jury has convicted Toby Williams of murdering Deborah Moore of Greenwood, La., after Mrs. Moore and her husband were kidnapped from their home last year.

The same District Court jury which convicted Williams, 20, of Shreveport, La., returns today to decide whether to recommend a punishment of death of life in prison.

The jury took less than an hour Wednesday to return the verdict of guilty of capital murder. In Texas, a capital murder conviction is automatically appealed to a higher court.

Williams showed no emotion when Judge Bennie Boles read the verdict.

Authorities said Williams, Victoria Hinton, 25, and a 16-year-old girl kidnapped the Mrs. Moore, 22, and her husband Johnny Moore Jr., 26, during a robbery, drove them into Panola County, Texas, and shot them on Dec. 20, 1984. Mrs. Moore was killed. Moore was wounded.

"I suppose this case will be referred to as the $11 capital murder," District Attorney John Walker told the jury in his closing arguments Wednesday. "The evidence shows that was all the defendant received."

Defense attorney Bill Warren, in his closing arguments, referred to Ms. Hinton — an admitted accomplice to the murder — as "a liar." He called Mrs. Moore's husband "an angry man."

"In my view, Johnny Moore is a confused and angry young man. He's confused because he cannot keep his story straight. From February to this week, he cannot and does not tell it the same way twice," Warren said.

"I think he's really mad at himself because from start to finish on that evening he did not do one thing to protect his home, to protect his family or to stop what was going on," Warren said.

On Tuesday, Moore testified and identified Williams as the man who did the shooting on the rural Texas road.

Williams was a fired employee of Moore's construction company.

On Monday, Ms. Hinton testified that she, Williams and Wilma Jean Franklin, 16, went to the Moore home to rob the couple.

Williams shot the Moores to keep them from identifying their attackers, she said.

Mr. Hinton pleaded guilty to the murder and is serving a life sentence under a plea bargain deal.

Ms. Franklin is appealing the decision to try her as an adult.

The Williams trial was moved to McKinney from Carthage following a change-of-venue motion.

Bond denied men charged in murder

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Bond has been denied for two San Antonio men charged with capital murder in the alleged extortion slaying of a banker's wife.

John Lawrenee Rogers, 31, and Lesley Lee Gosch, 30, were arrested at a northwest side apartment complex early Wednesday in connection with the shooting death of Rebecca Jo Patton.

Mrs. Patton, 42, was found shot in the head several times at her home in fashionable Alamo Heights, a suburb of San Antonio.

Minutes before her body was found, her husband, Castle Hills National Bank President Frank Patton Jr., received a telephone call from an alleged extortionist demanding a large amount of money in return for Mrs. Patton's safety. No money was exchanged in the extortion plot.

The arrests came less than two days after University National Bancshares Inc. of San Antonio, the holding company for Castle Hills National Bank, offered a $100,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons responsible for the crime.

Alamo Heights Police Chief Roger Terry said the suspects were arrested after he met with an informant early Wednesday.

"We received very good information — good enough to obtain a search warrant," he said.

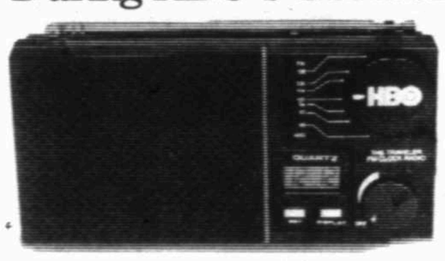

Officers surrounded the apartment complex and arrested Rogers on foot nearby. Gosch was arrested after talking for several minutes to officers from behind his locked apartment door.

Officials said the two were picked up without incident and taken to the Alamo Heights police department for questioning.

Entrepreneurs join fight against AIDS

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The search for a cure or treatment for AIDS has been a big gamble for several small biotechnology companies, who are committed to heavy spending for research and development and absorbing big losses in pursuit of a breakthrough.

A few companies are testing drugs that may prove effective in treating acquired immune deficiency syndrome. One firm is working on a vaccine to protect against the disease, and another is working on a process similar to kidney dialysis to cleanse victims' blood.

Researchers estimate that about 1 million people are infected with HTLV-III, the virus believed to cause AIDS. No one knows how many will come down with the disease, which appears to be spreading beyond certain high-risk groups such as homosexuals and drug abusers.

"It's a very, very large market," says Steven Gerber, a physician and analyst working for Rooney Pace Inc. in Los Angeles.

THE DRUGS BEING tested to help treat AIDS fall into two categories: immune stimulators and antiviral agents.

The first category works to boost the immune system that is ravaged in AIDS patients and allows other illnesses to invade the body.

Three immune boosters that have shown some success in limited testing are Isoprinosine, made by Newport Pharmaceuticals Intl. of Newport Beach, Calif.; Imreg-1, made by Imreg Inc. of New Orleans; and interleukin-2, made by Cetus Corp. of Emeryville, Calif.

Newport has been selling Isoprinosine outside the United States for 15 years, but only recently has begun testing it on AIDS patients.

The Food and Drug Administration has not approved the drug for use in the United States, but Newport was granted approval for "compassionate" use this year, meaning it can be given free to physicians.

THE COMPANY TURNED its first annual profit in fiscal 1985, ended April 30, with net income of $647,000 on sales of $10.47 million.

Imreg made a splash when it announced earlier this year it had boosted the immune systems of AIDS patients in early tests with a chemical that occurs naturally in the body's white blood cells.

"This does AIDS patients some good," said David Whitney, Imre's director of business development. "What we don't know is how much or for how long."

Waiting for test results and FDA approval could hamper Imreg, which lost $541,867 on revenues of $611,782 for the six months ended June 30, 1985.

"It's hard to figure out when they're going to get to market," said James McCamant, editor of the Medical Technology Stock Letter in San Francisco.

In May, a patent was granted to Cetus for interleukin-2, which the company says could have applications for both AIDS and cancer patients.

Tests have been under way for more than a year, but Cetus President Robert A. Fildes says it's "too early to draw any firm conclusions."

AIDS RESEARCH is a small part of Cetus' work. The company reported a profit of $1.22 million on revenues of $57.3 million for the year ending June 30.

Anti-viral drugs, such as HPA-23 which is being used in France, have received more attention than immune boosters.

Bayer AG of West Germany is working with an anti-viral agent called suramin that has shown some effectiveness against AIDS. Burroughs-Wellcome, the British-owned company that developed a treatment for genital herpes, has begun tests on AIDS patients with a drug called "Compound S."

Viratek Inc. of Costa Mesa, Calif. has done small-scale tests that show its drug ribavirin can stop the growth of the AIDS virus, although it does not appear to destroy it.

Praxis Pharmaceuticals Inc. of Beverly Hills, Calif. has done preliminary tests showing that its drug, which has not been named publicly, breaks down the AIDS virus in a test tube.

"The problem with all the anti-viral drugs is that they all have negative side effects," says McCamant.

DOMINIC LUIZZI, vice president of ICN Corp., which owns half of Viratek, points out that side effects result more from the weakened condition of the AIDS patient than from the drug.

For the six months ended May 31, Viratek reported revenues of $801,000 and a loss of $1.5 million.

Praxis, which does AIDS research through a subsidiary in New York City called Matrix Research Laboratories, reported a loss of $235,141 for the first quarter ended March 31, on revenues of $61,488.

Aside from drug therapy, two more companies are actively involved in trying to combat AIDS.

"Our long-term goal is to produce a vaccine," said Edward E. Penhoet, president and chief executive of Chiron Corp., based in Emeryville, Calif.

The company is in the final stage of testing a vaccine it developed in conjunction with Merck & Co. Inc. of Rahway, N.J. for use against hepatitis.

Home buyers advised to check with VA

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans shopping for a home may want to ask local real estate agents about houses being sold by the Veterans Administration.

The VA has about 20,000 single-family homes for sale across the nation and anyone can buy them, not just veterans.

The homes range from basic starter houses to colonial and ranch style homes.

The houses formerly were used as security for VA-guaranteed loans. They are located in every state, although the largest number are concentrated around the Great Lakes and in the Southwest.

VA regional offices with Loan Guaranty Divisions publish sales listings that state the terms and conditions for the sale of these homes. The VA offers competitive financing on most of them, with low downpayments, and closings can usually be scheduled within 45 days.

Auto manufacturer thoroughly tests product

Associated Press

How far will a manufacturer go to test its product? For Jaguar, the British automaker, the answer is "around the world." To test cars under various weather conditions, Jaguars are subjected to the heat and dust of the Arizona desert and the extreme cold of Canada. Road testing includes 25,000 miles of high speed driving in Italy and through rough terrains in Australia.

CURIOUS SHOPPER

'Key words' attract customers

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. The label of Faberge Organics Shampoo says in large letters that it contains pure wheat germ oil and honey. Are they the main ingredients? Why would two food products be good for the hair?

A. There are key words which one sees written everywhere in the marketplace today. These words — such as organic, natural, pure, lite, wheat germ, honey, yogurt — attract consumers and sell products. Since there is no government standard for the definition of organic or natural, manufacturers can use these words as they wish.

According to an ingredients list supplied by Ann Polo of Faberge, Inc., this shampoo contains about 30 ingredients, two of which are wheat germ oil and honey. Polo states that "because of the competitive nature of our business, percentages of ingredients are not made available to the public."

Contrary to popular belief, hair cannot be "fed." Hair is essentially dead tissue and does not absorb the ingredients in shampoo or conditioners. The most that wheat germ oil or honey can do is coat the hair, but it stands to reason that since shampoos have detergents in them, any amount of "food" remaining on the hair after a good cleaning would be negligible.

Q. I rented an apartment and discovered soon after that the place, which otherwise seemed to be clean, was infested with fleas. So far I've spent about $30 on various cans of poisons such as D-Con Flea Killer and Strike Flea Ender. One is a bomb mist and the other is a spray. But after a day or so I see evidence of fleas again. The landlord won't do anything about it and says I must have brought the fleas in, which is ridiculous. I'm at a loss to know how to cope with this problem at this point.

A. The previous tenant must have had a pet which contaminated the apartment.

According to the University of California's Cooperative Extension material on flea control, sprays and bombs will kill a lot of the fleas but probably never eliminate them because the poisons don't penetrate the eggs, which eventually hatch and start the problem all over again.

The only remedy I would suggest at this point is to call in a professional pest control company. The stuff they use is stronger than anything you can buy at a hardware store, and they guarantee their work.

There must be other ways that readers are coping with flea problems in their homes. If you have managed to get a flea problem under control, please share your secrets with us.

Q. I understand that it is very difficult to grow rice "organically." By organically, does this mean these rice producers use no chemicals whatsoever? Do they use fertilizers?

A. Barry Stice, general manager of Lundberg Farm in California, says that his company produces two kinds of brown rice — organic and commercial. Their certified organic rice is fertilized with composted chicken manure in conjunction with various cover crops and is never touched by any type of toxic chemical material.

As for their commercial brown rice, the farm uses only minimum emergency applications of chemicals when needed, rather than the usual massive prophylactic "treatment."

"In order to produce quality brown rice," Stice says, "we rely on common sense and skill rather than toxic technology."

"It is very difficult to grow organic rice," says Stice. "You are totally at the mercy of Mother Nature. Our normal organic rice yield per acre is between 10 to 20 hundred weight per acre; the normal commercial acreage yield is between 65 and 90 hundred weight per acre. It takes a dedicated individual to farm organic rice."

Readers' Feedback: Mrs. E. Nastri, Wolcott, Conn.: "I'm writing in response to your column on Armstrong floors and the complaints about it. I have another brand of floor, but it is a very close approximation of Armstrong, and the pattern is emphasized with grooves. It loves dirt.

"I have found that nothing can beat Lestoil for cleaning floors. But you have to do it right. First remove any other product on the floor, such as Mop & Glo or waxes, using an appropriate product. And by the way, there is no such thing as 'no rinse.' Never leave detergent on the floor!

"Next, get a squeeze mop with a bristly scruff thing on the edge. Mix ½ cup Lestoil with ½ dishpan of warm water and slosh it all around in puddles. Let stand for a few minutes. Now sponge it up using a little enthusiasm and the scrubbing edge for stubborn spots. Throw out the filthy black washwater and fill the dishpan with plain clean water. Slosh it around, in puddles, and sponge it up. Now dry the floor with a towel.

"As for shine, people have no idea what they do to their floors every day. If you track sand or dirt onto the floor and then walk on it, you are literally sandpapering your floor. No shine can survive such punishment. You must have some mercy on the floor if you want shine. Try to intercept the sand and dirt with doormats and throw rugs, and sweep every day with a soft-bristled broom. The very fine sand that clings to shoes will scratch the floor surface, and that is where the dirt hides.

"When your floor is clean to your satisfaction, apply vinyl dressing on no-wax floors, sold in the Sears catalog. Never, repeat never, use wax. Use only vinyl dressing, which does not wash off. So make sure the floor is immaculate first. Good luck, Armstrong floor owners, and don't give up. Lestoil works great. And no, I do not work for the Lestoil company."

DEAR ABBY

'To thine ownself be true'

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Many years ago, when I was a young boy, I memorized a poem titled "The Man in the Glass." Since then, I have included it with my gift to many boys on their 13th birthday. (According to the Jewish religion, a boy officially becomes a man at 13.)

I have been told by many who have received it that the poem itself was a priceless gift. I am enclosing the poem and hope you feel it is worthy of printing. — MILTON R., TRENTON, N.J.

DEAR MILTON: It is, and I thank you for it.

THE MAN IN THE GLASS
When you get what you want in your struggle for self
And the world makes you king for a day,
Just go to a mirror and look at yourself
And see what THAT man has to say.
For it isn't your father or mother or wife
Whose judgment upon you must pass,
The fellow whose verdict counts most in your life
Is the one staring back from the glass.

Some people might think you're a straight-shootin' chum
And call you a wonderful guy.
But the man in the glass says you're only a bum
If you can't look him straight in the eye.

He's the fellow to please, never mind all the rest
For he's with you clear to the end
And you've passed your most dangerous test
If the guy in the glass is your friend.

You may fool the whole world down the pathway of years
And get pats on the back as you pass
But your final reward will be heartache and tears
If you've cheated the man in the glass.
— AUTHOR UNKNOWN

DEAR ABBY: How do you tell a middle-aged man who is going bald that letting the few remaining strands of hair grow long, then wrapping them around his head, does not give the illusion of having hair? It just makes him look ridiculous!

I know that everyone has the right to wear his hair the way he wants to, but I'm sure if men knew how bad they look when they try to cover their baldness in this way, they wouldn't do it.

I love this man dearly, but there is no way I can tell him what I've told you. So please print this, Abby. Not only for the man I love, but for other men who make this ridiculous effort at covering the obvious. — SPLITTING HAIRS IN FLORIDA

DEAR SPLITTING: Here's your letter. Don't keep it under your hat.

DEAR ABBY: A rather new friend of mine has asked me to be the godmother of her son. My question: Exactly what are my obligations as a godmother? I have heard that I have to pay for the child's christening outfit, as well as the church fees for the christening.

Also, what obligations will I have to this child throughout his lifetime?

Hurry your answer. I may not be able to afford this honor. — NEEDS INFO

DEAR NEEDS: The broad definition of a "godmother" is one who sponsors a child at its baptism. You would be wise to ask your friend what she perceives your responsibilities to be. If she is vague, ask her to please consult her clergyperson and then let you know.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Some restaurants include service charge on bill

SKOKIE, Ill. (AP) — The number of restaurants adding a service charge to the bill in lieu of a tip is on the rise in the United States, according to the "Mobil Travel Guide for 1985."

A careful check of the bill, says the guide, will reveal if an establishment has added a service charge, and, if so, an additional tip is not necessary. For food service, the usual tip is still 15 percent to 20 percent of the total bill.

The travel guide, which annually rates some 20,000 restaurants and lodgings around the county, recommends that patrons not tip if service is poor.

Scanners catch counterfeiters

MORRIS TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — There's bad news today for counterfeiters of well-known products such as computers, clothing, auto parts and pharmaceuticals.

To help end this sort of fraud, which is estimated to cost consumers as much as $60 billion a year worldwide, Allied Corp. has introduced a battery-powered, hand-held scanner that detects phonies.

The scanner issued in conjunction with numerically coded product labels and tags. These are imprinted with a four-digit identification number and are attached onto or inside merchandise or packaging before shipping.

The scanner is passed over the label. If the product is genuine, the ID number appears on the scanner's display. If no coder, or a different code appears, the product is counterfeit.

BETTER BUSINESS

'Going-out-of-business' sales defined

By LINDA TRUITT

Truitt

You've probably seen advertisements that claimed "Liquidation," "Bankruptcy," "Closing Out" and wondered exactly what was going on. Was the company going-out-of-business or just having a sale?

With the passage of a new law that went into effect Sept. 1, perhaps the confusion will end. Phrases like those mentioned above, which indicate a company is ceasing business, are not to be used in advertising unless the company is actually closing its doors.

Merchants who are genuinely closing and wish to advertise a going-out-of-business sale must:

- Apply for a permit and file an inventory with the county clerk. The inventory must include 1) the name and address of the owner of the merchandise to be sold; 2) the name and address of the owner of the defunct business; 3) a description of the place for the sale; 4) the beginning and ending dates of the sale; 5) a detailed list of merchandise on hand at the beginning of the sale and its cost; 6) a detailed list of merchandise on order at the beginning of the sale which will be added to the inventory after the sale begins, and its cost. Permits are good for 120 days and are not renewable;
- Post the permit in a conspicuous place at the sale;
- Give a copy of the permit to the publisher or broadcaster before advertising the sale;
- Every 30 days, file a new inventory, listing merchandise remaining from original stock and from goods that were on order and received after the sale began;
- File a final inventory with the county clerk, including a statement of the disposition of remaining merchandise. After the permit expires, the permit holder may not sell to the public merchandise covered by the permit.

A person may not conduct a going-out-of-business sale within two years after the end of a permit. An offense is a Class A misdemeanor, subject to fines and imprisonment.

Linda Truitt is president of Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin Inc.

Yogurt not always real low-calorie treat

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

Yogurt can be a dieter's delight — or downfall. It all depends on the type of yogurt you eat. Yogurt's calorie count depends on the butterfat content of the milk from which it is made. The more butterfat, the higher the calories.

One cup of nonfat plain yogurt contains about 90 calories, while the low-fat type has about 150 calories and the whole milk product can have 180-210 calories.

Many of the new custard-style or creamy-style yogurts use whole milk. The fat from the whole milk adds flavor and creaminess, but also makes some of these products almost equal to ice cream in calories.

Dieters should also consider the serving size when comparing calories among yogurt products. A six-ounce container of a higher-fat yogurt may have the same number of calories as an eight-ounce cup of low-fat yogurt because the serving size is reduced.

Flavoring in yogurt is another source of calories a dieter may want to avoid. Flavored yogurt contains two to three times more calories than plain yogurt, with the extra calories coming from fruit and sugars such as sucrose, fructose, corn sweetener or honey.

Whether you eat high-calorie or low-calorie yogurt, both have one big plus. Most yogurts contain about 350 milligrams of calcium per serving, which is about 35 percent of the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowance.

Marian Farr is Midland County Extension Agent, Home Economics.

Animal toys made for education, fun

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The World Wildlife Fund-U.S., together with a San Francisco-based manufacturer, has created a line of plush toy animals that represent some of the most threatened species in the wild.

These include the mountain gorilla, the giant panda, snow leopard, gibbon, elephant, tiger, seal, grizzly bear, orangutan, blue whale and polar bear.

Connie Boucher, a long-time friend of conservation and president of Determined Productions, the manufacturer, says the dolls are designed to educate as well as delight children. "We hope it will be the beginning of a lifetime interest in conservation."

Some dietary news good

By LINDA ANDERSON

Tired of all the horrifying news about the foods we eat? Worried about cholesterol, fats, sugars, alcohol, artificial sweeteners, preservatives and artificial colors and everything else that may possibly cause cancer in rats, mice or guinea pigs?

How about some good dietary news for a change:

- The National Onion Association (yes, there really such a thing) claims that Dr. Michael Wargovich, Ph.D., of the M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute in Houston has discovered that onions may help stop cancer. (Quit laughing)

It seems the magical vegetable can also lower blood pressure, reduce blood cholesterol levels and lower unnecessary blood clotting. Honest, that's what the association has announced.

For more information contact the National Onion Association, One Greeley National Plaza, Suite 510, Greeley, Colo. 80631. They can send some recipes, too.

- West Texas is not known for its abundance of water, but many of us who live here love to eat fish.

A bi-monthly newsletter, "Just Fish," published by Argon Enterprises Inc., is available by subscription for those who want the answers to everything they ever wanted to know about preparing fish but were afraid to ask.

Subscriptions are $12 per year and are available from Argon Enterprises Inc., P.O. Box 1181, Northbrook, Ill. 60065. • The Turkey Information Service of the National Turkey Federation (no, it is not an organization to promote nerds) has published a brochure, "Eat To Your Heart's Content," which is full of nutritional information and recipes based on — you guessed it — turkey.

This free brochure is available from the National Turkey Federation, 11319 Sunset Hills Road, Reston, Va. 22090. Include a stamped, self-addressed business-sized envelope.

- Along those same lines, the Processed Meats Committee of the National Live Stock and Meat Board has published a brochure, "Facts About Ham." It's all about selecting, cooking and storing hams, but contains very little information about the meat's nutrition content.

Oh, well, sometimes ham lovers choose their favorite meat in spite of its bad publicity.

- Those who want to know all about food additives, including additives' sources, other names, why they are used in foods, whether they are toxic and any known interactions with other chemicals or foods, can order "A Consumers Guide to Food Additives."

Published by the Consumer Education Research Center, the guide is available by sending $5 (including postage) to CERC, Additive Project, P.O. Box 336, South Orange, N.J. 07079.

- Questions concerning food storage are answered in Food Marketing Institute's brochure, "The Food Keeper."

Prepared by FMI in cooperation with The Institute of Food Science, Cornell University, the booklet lists common foods and the proper way to store them.

LA ranks third in AIDS

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fifth in a special six-part series concluding tomorrow focusing on how various cities are dealing with the AIDS epidemic.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Nine out of 10 AIDS patients in Los Angeles County are gay or bisexual men, far higher than the national average because few of the county's AIDS victims are drug addicts, a top health official says.

Only 2 percent of the county's AIDS patients are intravenous drug abusers, but "if you look at the national figures, it's up around 15 percent or 16 percent," said Dr. Martin Finn, medical director of public health for the county Department of Health Services.

"We don't seem to have the problem here with the intravenous drug abuser you find on the East Coast, where they have shooting galleries — storefronts where you go in and get shot up — and needle sterility is questionable," Finn said. "We just have a better educated addict population here."

Of the 1,060 reported cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome in Los Angeles County since the disease was identified, 983 were gay or bisexual males and only 23 were intravenous drug abusers, the second largest group, Finn said. Nearly half the county's AIDS patients were in their 30s when diagnosed.

Los Angeles County, with 1,060 AIDS cases and 547 deaths at the end of July, ranks third nationally behind New York and San Francisco.

But, Finn warned, "We shouldn't take much consolation that Los Angeles has lower numbers than New York (which has recorded almost 4,400 AIDS cases). The potential for Los Angeles to equal those numbers is pretty great."

The county has 450,000 residents considered at risk for AIDS, and an estimated 30 percent have already been exposed to the virus, Finn said. Because about 10 percent of those are expected to develop AIDS, Finn recently predicted that in four years, there will be more than 10,000 cases of AIDS in the county.

This summer's revelation that actor Rock Hudson has AIDS prompted an outpouring of public financial support for agencies serving AIDS patients, said Robert McLane, a counselor at AIDS Project Los Angeles. But he said the AIDS epidemic also had spurred increasing bias against homosexuals, especially in Hollywood's large gay community.

"A lot of gay actors right now are concerned about their careers because the heat is on now," he said.

However, the cities of Los Angeles and West Hollywood recently passed ordinances to protect AIDS patients from discrimination by employers, landlords, schools, businesses and medical facilities.

Services for AIDS patients in the county generally are adequate, said Finn, McLane and Martin James, whose Shanti Foundation provides counseling for people with the disease.

But all three men also cited a severe lack of hospices and home nursing care for AIDS patients who don't wish to die in hospitals.

Los Angeles dentists warned about disease

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Dentists should wear protective clothing and take other precautions when treating even routine patients to avoid contracting or spreading AIDS, which can be carried by people who show no symptoms, Los Angeles health officials warned recently.

"Dental personnel are on the front line in terms of possible and often unknowing exposure to the agents responsible for AIDS," said Ronald Le Baron, a Hollywood dentist who is a member of the Los Angeles City-County AIDS Task Force.

AIDS in Hollywood spotlight

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rock Hudson's battle against AIDS has pushed the disease from Hollywood's back lots to center stage, illuminating fears of infection on film sets and of discrimination against homosexuals in the industry.

"We could be heading into another McCarthy era with blacklisting of actors. ... It would be a witchhunt, primarily against anyone suspected of being gay," said veteran Hollywood correspondent Rona Barrett.

"How do you possibly protect yourself?" asked Barrett, who reports for television's "Entertainment Tonight" and has a radio show. "People are being more reserved in how they greet you. People are hugging and shaking hands rather than planting a kiss on the cheek."

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome attacks the body's immune system, and is believed to be caused by a virus spread through blood or semen.

Hudson, 59, whose illness was revealed last month, was released from UCLA Medical Center on Aug. 24. He has been resting in his Beverly Hills mansion since then and is "not able to go out," said his spokesman, Dale Olson.

The hysteria is "a great deal worse now that people know Rock Hudson has AIDS," said Colleen Johnson, an assistant director of AIDS Project Los Angeles, a non-profit group providing counseling and other services to AIDS patients. "Finally straight people are afraid they might come down with AIDS, and they should be."

But Hudson, probably the most famous person to suffer the deadly disease, has received an outpouring of sympathy from fans. He is pleased his plight has focused new attention on AIDS, Olson said.

A Rock Hudson AIDS Research Foundation also has been formed to raise money for efforts to find a cure for the disease, Olson said.

Other celebrities took on AIDS with a "Commitment to Life" benefit in Los Angeles last week to raise money for AIDS Project Los Angeles.

A similar benefit is planned Nov. 3 in New York.

There is, however, another side to the spotlight.

Some performers have called the Screen Actors Guild expressing fears that producers might require them to take blood tests to detect AIDS antibodies and that "gays in general may be isolated or denied hiring opportunities," said Kim Fellner, SAG information director.

"Anyone who is gay or has AIDS has to be very careful not to admit that to a producer or director because of the extreme likelihood that will never work again in the field," said Ms. Johnson.

Olson disagreed.

"There's not going to be a witchhunt for homosexuals in the industry," he said. "Any person who is diagnosed as having AIDS and that becomes public — sure that will hurt a career. I'm saying I don't think there will be a blanket purge against homosexuality without proof of AIDS."

Tabloid newspaper headlines have capitalized on the fears, like the Star's "AIDS Panic on Dynasty Over Rock's Last Love Scenes." The National Enquirer trumpeted: "Linda Evans & Dynasty Cast Terrified — He (Hudson) Kissed Her on Show."

Producer Aaron Spelling has said Miss Evans was not worried about her kissing scenes with Hudson on the ABC series. Experts say there is no evidence AIDS can be transmitted through kissing.

"There haven't been calls to the union reflecting panic on the part of anybody," said actor Ed Asner, SAG president.

"I have heard some productions are not including kissing scenes," Asner said. "If the confusion about kissing is maintained, I can't speak for the guild, but I certainly would think that just plain omitting kissing scenes until we know more about the potential is the safest thing to do."

"I have seen no celebrities who want to go on the record about this, but the off-the-record remarks are that there are very serious concerns (about exposure to AIDS), particularly from the spouses, the family members" of stars, said Michael Levine, publicist for about 50 stars.

"I think people are led astray when they worry about kissing," said Ms. Johnson of AIDS Project. "They need to worry who their sexual partners are in their personal life. That's how they're going to get AIDS, not through kissing Rock Hudson on the set."

Women victims increase

Associated Press

A 23-year-old woman dying in a New York hospital is afraid to kiss her four small children. She wonders who will take care of them when she's gone.

A 26-year-old junkie who has lived on the streets since she was a teenager suddenly finds herself unable to walk properly or see clearly.

A widow in her 70s develops the same gruesome symptoms she watched her hemophiliac husband die of.

They are the forgotten victims of AIDS. Although 841 women have the mysterious virus — about 6 percent of the national total of 12,932 AIDS cases — scant attention has been paid to this small group of AIDS victims and their special needs.

But AIDS is a growing health concern for women. An estimated 90,000 women are believed to have been exposed to the deadly virus, meaning they could possibly develop symptoms or infect someone else without becoming ill themselves.

At the Gay Men's Health Crisis in New York, more than half the 5,200 calls to the AIDS hotline each month are from heterosexuals, and most of them are women.

"A lot are women having relations with bisexuals or intravenous drug users," said Barry Davidson, director of community information at the center.

Micki Santorelli, a doctoral candidate in psychology who works with AIDS patients at Bellevue Hospital in New York, noted the women "are usually much more surprised at the diagnosis, and in that sense, it's much more traumatic and hard for them to comprehend what's going on."

Because the majority of AIDS victims have been homosexual men, most of the programs offering legal, financial and psychological help are spearheaded by the gay community.

While these organizations often open their doors to heterosexual AIDS patients, they aren't really equipped to deal with the unique issues confronting a woman with AIDS, according to counselors.

The San Francisco AIDS Foundation distributes brochures and runs educational programs aimed at heightening women's awareness of the disease and how they can reduce their risks of contracting it.

"I think the services for AIDS patients are inadequate in general, but they're especially inadequate for women," said Nancy Shaw, a medical sociologist who directs the San Francisco program for women.

"Many agencies and the general public are unaware of how many women have actually been exposed to AIDS," she said in a telephone interview. "The women have special needs. They face issues such as pregnancy, childbirth and maternal transmission of the virus to their children."

More than half of the women with AIDS contracted it through intravenous drug use. The origin of the disease is unknown in 196 women — 23 percent. The national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta said many of these cases involved Haitians, who were recently dropped as a separate risk category.

The CDC said 14 percent of the women — 114 patients — contracted AIDS through heterosexual contact with a bisexual or IV drug user. Ten percent of the cases were transfusion-related.

Shaw said the San Francisco AIDS hotline had been logging numerous calls from men who have had clandestine bisexual contact and are afraid they might be carrying AIDS and infect their wives.

Bonnie Kaye, a Philadelphia counselor who runs a support group for women married to gay men, fears these numbers represent only "the tip of the iceberg."

An estimated 1 million women have homosexual husbands, Kaye said, and an indeterminate number of single women have sexual contact with bisexual men.

"We have many women who don't even know they're married to a gay, and the tragedy is when these unsuspecting wives will wake up one morning with this disease," said Kaye, who strongly believes all homosexual husbands have a moral responsibility to "come out" to their wives.

Connie, a 39-year-old teacher who asked that her real name not be used, has been married to Dean 12 years. They have a 7-year-old daughter who knows her father is homosexual and has been told what AIDS is.

At the monthly meetings Connie runs for women with gay spouses, AIDS has become a major topic. "Maybe we'll find out in two months that we should have been sterilizing those dishes," one frantic woman worried aloud at a recent session.

"Some people want to get blood tests to see if they have been exposed to AIDS," Connie said of the group. "I just don't have any reason. Neither Dean nor I have any symptoms."

It can take as long as five years for symptoms of AIDS to develop.

School board OKs family planning clinic

CHICAGO (AP) — A family planning clinic at a high school that has "a problem with babies having babies" and where officials say every third girl gets pregnant drew a vote of confidence from the school board despite arguments that it encourages promiscuity.

The clinic, at DuSable High School, which has the highest teen pregnancy rate in the city, has drawn fire for its family-planning activities since it opened in June.

In a stormy meeting Wednesday night marked by challenges from right-to-life groups and individuals opposed to family planning, the school board gave the clinic conditional approval and asked Superintendent Manford Byrd Jr. to establish guidelines for it.

Continued operation of the clinic was opposed by Gregory Morrow, who said he was a member of a group called Help For Women.

"The people who distribute contraceptives ought to be charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor and sent to jail," he said to a chorus of catcalls and jeers."You're spreading 30 kinds of venereal disease throughout the school."

"We have a problem with babies having babies and as long as we have that problem, we ought to be flexible enough to deal with it."

—William Farrow, school board member

So far, 169 students have been given birth-control devices at the clinic, whose $225,000 annual operating cost is split evenly between the Illinois Department of Public Aid and a coalition of private foundations. The clinic is also a full-scale health center for students.

Nurse-practitioner Louise McCurry, manager of the clinic, said students must have signed consent forms from parents before they can receive contraceptives. They also must admit being sexually active.

"We don't just pass out birth control pills and condoms," she said. "Family planning is just one of 10 health functions we perform. There really shouldn't be such a big hubbub."

Records show about 300 DuSable girls — one-third of the female students — gave birth in 1984, the highest rate among the city's schools.

"We need to establish sufficient parental involvement and consent," board president George Munoz said during the debate. "We need to know when teen pregnancy is a problem. I personally would not support Chicago school board funds being spent on contraceptives being distributed to students."

"I have no problem with guidelines as long as they're flexible enough," said William Farrow, board vice president. "We have a problem with babies having babies and as long as we have that problem, we ought to be flexible enough to deal with it."

Several other cities, including St. Paul, Minn.; Dallas; New York City; Kansas City; Cleveland; and San Francisco, have such clinics. Another is to open soon at Chicago's Orr High School and more are likely, board members said.

Ms. McCurry said six previously undetected cases of diabetes and 23 cases of venereal disease have been diagnosed by doctors at the clinic. Clinic figures indicate 75 percent of visits are unrelated to birth control.

"We have a situation here where the dropout rate is a crime," Ms. McCurry said. "We have a situation where somebody had to do something. The right-to-lifers have never done anything. Most of them have never been there."

U.S. won't fund China's population plan

Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration withdrew a $10 million grant to the U.N. Fund for Population Activities Wednesday and cast all future funding in doubt because of UNFPA's involvement in China's family planning program, which the administration concluded involves coercive abortion.

The Agency for International Development said it concluded that the U.N. agency — which funds family planning efforts in 140 countries — was involved in China's one-child-per-family program.

AID set tough conditions on future funding of UNFPA, suggesting that China should "punish" program abuses or the UNFPA should "radically" change its assistance to the Chinese program.

In a telephone interview Wednesday, AID Administrator M. Peter McPherson conceded that U.S. support for UNFPA next year was in doubt. "It will take a dramatic change in the way UNFPA does its business in China" to restore U.S. support, he said.

The United States is the single largest contributor to UNFPA, providing about 25 percent of its budget. In this fiscal year, its contribution — before the $10 million withdrawal — was $46 million.

THE DECISION to withdraw the $10 million and donate the money to other family planning programs in other developing countries was immediately attacked by UNFPA executive director Rafael M. Salas, who described it as a violation of the $46 million pledge.

"UNFPA does not support abortion or coercion. Its program in China is in substantial compliance with U.S. law," said Salas, referring to an AID report in April that appeared to clear the U.N. agency.

Chinese officials in New York declined to comment Wednesday, saying they needed time to digest the AID ruling.

But in July, on the eve of his visit to the United States, Chinese President Li Xiannian said reports of infanticide and forced abortion were a "total distortion and fabrication," while other senior Chinese officials wrote asking Secretary of State George P. Shultz to use his influence "to prevent this state of affairs from getting worse so as to avoid any damage to Sino-U.S. relations."

SHULTZ, HOWEVER, delegated the decision to McPherson following an intense debate within the State Department. Sources there said the debate reflected a sensitive balancing act, weighing Chinese sensitivities against the threat of an assault from anti-abortion activists.

Anti-abortion groups Wednesday welcomed the AID decision. "The administration has sent a strong message to the Chinese government, which forces millions of women to submit to abortion that is repugnant to American people. In our view the UNFPA should never receive another dollar from the United States so long as UNFPA in any way supports the brutal Chinese population program," said Douglas Johnson, a spokesman for Natural Right to Life.

The Washington Post, in a series of articles this year, reported that the Chinese program resulted in forced abortion, involuntary sterilization and widespread killing of female infants.

The Chinese communist government, in an effort to limit a population of more than one billion — 22 percent of mankind — began in 1979 to limit each couple to a single child. While the policy has lowered the birth rate, it relies heavily on coercion to control family size.

ACCORDING TO Chinese officials, 53 million fetuses were aborted between 1979 and 1984, many in the last three months of pregnancy. Many abortions and sterilizations were carried out against the mother's wishes, according to numerous interviews in China.

The conflict between the one-child policy and China's traditional preference for male children posed a dilemma for many couples who bore female first children.

McPherson said that the administration was anxious to retain strong relations with China. The UNFPA decision reflected tough wording drawn up by Congress in its supplemental appropriations bill for 1985 barring the government from funding organizations that "support coercive abortion programs or participate in their management."

In a statement, AID said that it could provide assistance to UNFPA on two conditions:

"If China does, in fact, punish abuse and thereby prevent coercive abortion and involuntary sterlization or if, consistent with U.S. legislation...UNFPA were to radically change its assistance to the China program such as by supplying only contraceptives."

Administration denies asking judges of stand on abortion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration wants federal judges who will avoid pushing social policies — be they liberal or conservative — according to a Justice Department official who interviews candidates for the bench.

Grover Rees, a special assistant to Attorney General Edwin Meese III, says allegations by administration critics that President Reagan wants to "pack" the federal bench with conservative ideologues is untrue, and that candidates aren't being asked their personal views on such controversial issues as abortion and school prayer.

"...They are accusing us of doing litmus tests and having ideological blinders," Rees, a University of Texas law professor, said Wednesday. "Well, the irony is maybe that the tests that will be applied to our candidates (by the Senate) will be precisely litmus tests.

"In other words, it won't be enough that somebody be very distinguished, be rated qualified by the American Bar Association," he said. "It is precisely the possibility that these judges are going to have 'wrong' philosophy, from the point of view of some of our critics, that's triggering the opposition."

Rees declined, however, to discuss why Meese has taken personal responsibility for the screening process, moving it from the Office of Legal Policy, where it has resided in the past.

On Aug. 21, National Public Radio said some rejected women candidates for the judgeships complained about having been asked their views on abortion. The broadcast did not identify the candidates.

"I've never asked for anybody's position on abortion," Rees said, "and I've had people tell me that they believe that abortion ought to be legal, and those people still got selected by our process."

NATION IN BRIEF

Czech scientist defects

SAN FRANCISCO (Hearst) — Hammer thrower Ed Burke, who carried the U.S. flag in the opening ceremonies of the 1984 Olympic Games, has helped a leading Czechoslovakian sports scientist defect to this country.

Ladislav Pataki, 38, his wife, Gisela, 36, and their daughter, Noemi, 16, were scheduled to arrive Wednesday at San Jose International Airport on a flight from Chicago, ending 13 months of red tape and political intrigue.

"He was overwhelmed with gratitude. He was so happy to be in America," said Burke, who spoke with Pataki Tuesday after he arrived in New York from Rome. "We told him America has a place for anyone who wants to work. We thought he'd do fine."

'Atheist attack' fake

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A Presbyterian church camp director who staged a mock "atheist militia" attack that terrorized young campers says he was trying to teach a lesson about life in countries where Christianity is forbidden.

"Our intent is to make kids grapple with their own faith, so they wouldn't just be saying what they've heard from their parents," said Warren Camp, director of Camp Ojibway, near Siren, Wis.

Survival kits offered

MIAMI (AP) — Motorists afraid of crime on the streets now can order options for their car that include bullet-proof windows and a survival kit in case someone gets stashed in the trunk. The price is $12,000.

"The newspapers are filled with stories about acts of random violence, and there's an ever increasing need to thwart this type of violence," said James Salscheider, director of marketing and strategic planning for Hess and Eisenhardt Armoring Co., a Madison Heights, Mich., company that has made armored cars for presidents for 40 years.

Liquor-drinkers stock up

NEW YORK (NYT) — Faced with a hefty increase in the federal excise tax on liquor next week, some consumers may be tempted to reach for the W.C. Fields lament, "The cost of living has gone up another dollar a quart."

To beat the 19 percent excise tax that goes into effect on Tuesday, liquor buyers are rushing to stock up on their favorite brands. As a result, retailers are enjoying a bonanza, with some saying their sales for the first three weeks of September climbed 25 percent to 50 percent higher than the same period last year. However, most in the industry expect the buying spree to end as soon as the increased tax kicks in and prices rise.

Lava flows near homes

VOLCANO, Hawaii (AP) — A fast-moving stream of lava came within one mile of a residential area Wednesday morning before an eight-hour outburst by Kilauea Volcano ended.

"It (the flow) will pose no threat to any developed property," said Reggie Okamura, assistant scientist in charge of the U.S. Geological Survey's Hawaiian Volcano Observatory. "It's pretty much stagnated."

WASHINGTON — U.S.-backed forces fighting in Nicaragua and El Salvador are unlikely to win military victories and the Reagan administration plans to ask more money from Congress for Central America, according to a secret State Department draft paper.

The four-page document also states that collapse of the so-called Contadora peace talks "wouldn't be a total disaster for U.S. policy" and that the chief U.S. effort to help the region's economies "has been disappointing."

The paper, classified "secret" and entitled "The View from Washington," was prepared for a meeting of 22 senior administration officials in Panama recently. It was written as a suggested presentation by Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams to the Panama meeting.

State Department officials said it was revised before going to Abrams and its content does not necessarily reflect U.S. policy. But administration and congressional officials familiar with that policy said the document is a frank, internal assessment of where U.S. efforts in the region stand. Those officials insisted on anonymity.

The paper, obtained by The Associated Press, cites "headway in the U.S." in persuading Congress and the American public on the correctness of the administration's Central American policy, but it said substantially more money is needed.

Although the document does not say precisely how much will be requested, a congressional staff aide said that to reach levels previously cited by the administration would require about $500 million and that concern over the federal deficit made approval unlikely. Currently, the United States provides about $1.2 billion a year in military and economic aid to allied countries of Central America.

The paper adds that performance of the administration's highly touted Caribbean Basin Initiative to spur economic development in the region "has been disappointing and we face a major problem if disillusion sets in." Domestic politics, such as concern over loss of U.S. textile jobs and the sugar industry, have undercut the program, it said.

Overall, the paper claimed a "positive trend" in Central America, but cautioned against "over-optimism or over-pessimism."

"We have finally gotten people to believe that El Salvador is a reforming society and that the guerrillas do not represent the Salvadoran people," it said. "The process of dialogue in El Salvador has been useful...It does not appear that the war can be won by either side on the ground."

As for U.S.-backed rebels fighting to overthrow Nicaragua's leftist government, the document said, "the armed Nicaraguan resistance is a potent force but still a long way from success. Public support is growing but is still tenuous. (The rebels) must understand the absolute necessity of fighting a 'clean' war."

Possibly the most controversial section of the paper deals with the Contadora peace process, spearheaded by Panama, Venezuela, Colombia and Mexico.

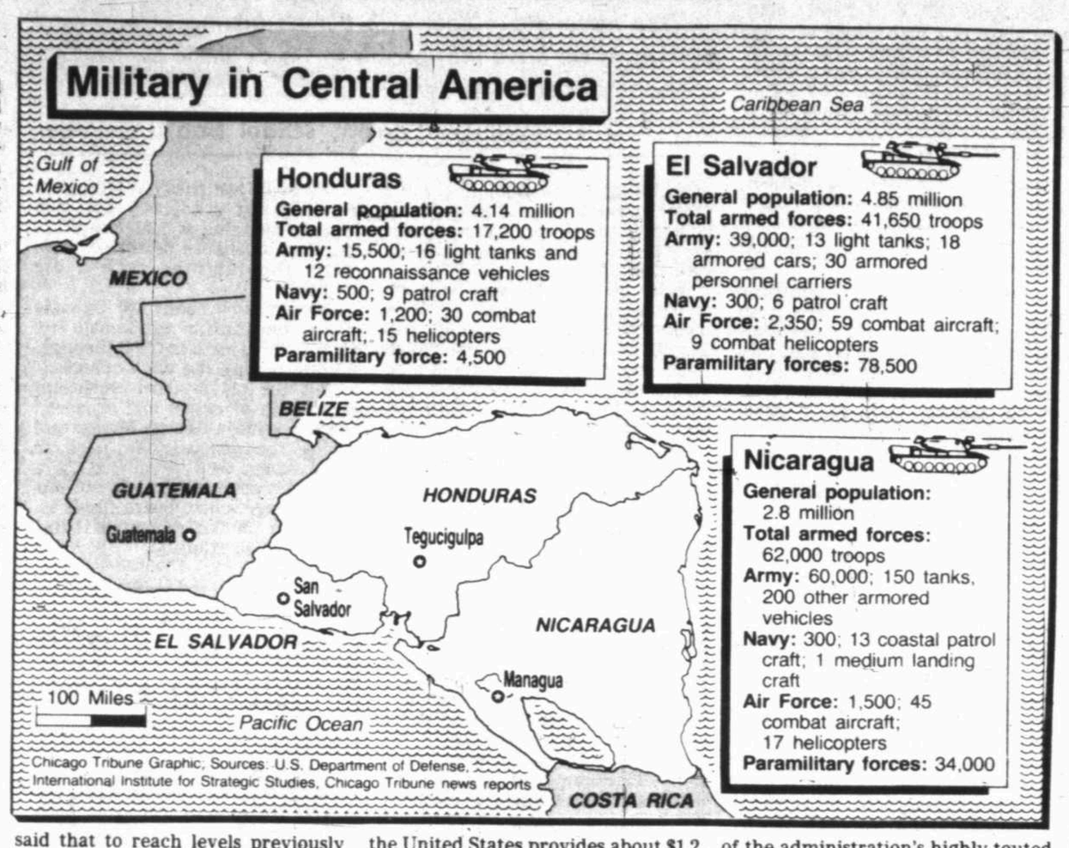

While noting that "Contadora remains central to our policy and our interests continue to be served by (it), its collapse wouldn't be a total disaster for U.S. policy," the paper said.

"We are afraid that it will seek to pressure the U.S. and friends to accept an agreement rather than a good agreement. Collapse would be better than a bad agreement. A good agreement remains the goal."

An aide to Abrams, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said the Contadora section was changed substantially before the paper was even shown to Abrams. Later, the aide said, Abrams dismissed the earlier draft language as not representing his views.

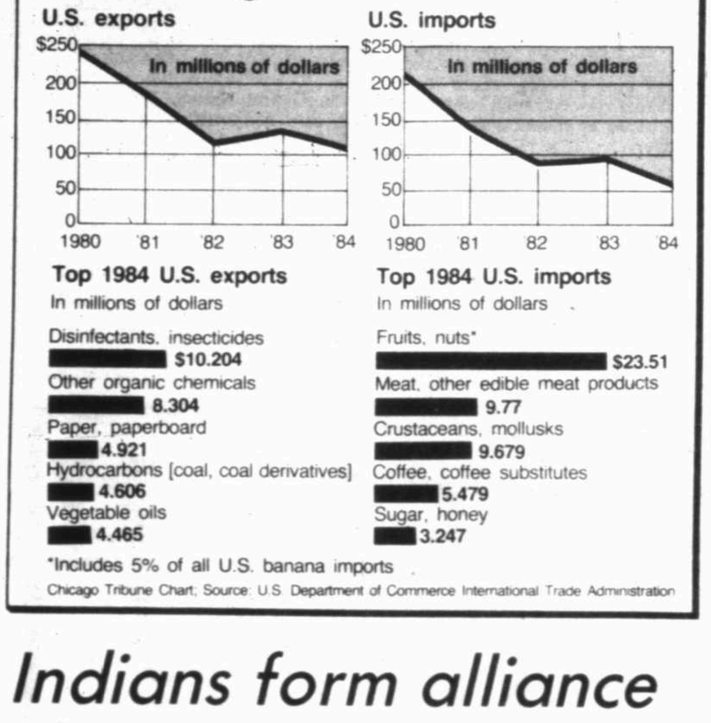

State Department spokesman Greg Lagana also discounted the significance of the paper, calling it "literally just a draft."

The Panama meeting included senior State and Defense department officials, U.S. ambassadors in the region, and ranking officials of the National Security Council and the Central Intelligence Agency. One official attending the meeting said its purpose was "to make sure we're operating from the same script" on what U.S. policy is.

..."The armed Nicaraguan resistance is a potent force but still a long way from success. Public support is growing but is still tenuous. (The rebels) must understand the absolute necessity of fighting a 'clean' war."

Published poets well-versed in propaganda

By WILLIAM R. LONG
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — It has been said that Nicaragua is a nation of poets and it is a fact that thousands of Nicaraguans — from President Daniel Ortega to humble farmers — put their verses on paper.

So, naturally, when the passions of Nicaraguans soar, so does the level of their poetic production. And passions excited by the Sandinista revolution have given rise to an outpouring of revolutionary verse.

Still, six years after the Sandinistas fought their way to power, the poetry of the revolution has failed to reach the creative heights that might have been expected.

Critics of revolutionary poetry say that much of it is no more than propaganda. They accuse the Sandinistas of undermining Nicaragua's poetic tradition by emphasizing political content over literary quality.

Sandinistas deny the charge. But they concede that revolutionary duties leave their finest poets little time for writing or helping other poets.

Among the frustrated Sandinista poets is Luis Rocha, 42, editor of the Sunday cultural supplement to the pro-revolution newspaper El Nuevo Diario. One of Rocha's most time-consuming tasks is going through a flood of poems sent to the paper.

Much of it is so bad that reading it often puts him in a foul mood, he said. Most of it is pro-revolution, and most of it goes directly into the wastebasket.

"We don't publish something just because it speaks favorably of the revolution," he said, "but because it has quality, and also speaks favorably of the revolution."

A plump man with a tired, ruddy face, Rocha sat behind a desk covered with papers and unopened envelopes. He said that the most popular themes of revolutionary poetry these days are President Reagan, the Washington-backed guerrillas who are fighting the Sandinistas and fears of an American invasion.

HE SELECTED an envelope from the desk-top clutter, and, sure enough, it contained a sheaf of poems. Among them was one that began:

Reagan, the atomic cowboy,
Shouts and threatens
But the simple people
Will pull him off his cow.

"The sentiment is good," Rocha said, "because it is patriotic. But literature is not made of sentiment alone. You also need skill."

No poet in Nicaragua today has the luxury of honing his skills full time, he said, and added that the country "can't afford to support professional poets because of the war."

There is a long string of professional poets in Nicaragua's past, among them some of the best in Latin America. The great Ruben Dario, who died in 1916 after an illustrious writing career, was a product of this tradition and an inspiration to his followers.

Culture Minister Ernesto Cardenal said that poetry played an important inspirational role in the Sandinista struggle that triumphed in July 1979. Like Cardenal, many of the revolutionaries were poets and are now government officials.

Cardenal, in black beret, white beard, jeans and open-collared tunic, looks like a poet. But he spends his days dealing with administrative matters. Only occasionally does he produce a poem.

"Literary production in Nicaragua after the triumph has been hurt by the fact that almost all of our writers and poets are in public posts," Cardenal said. "The poetry of the professionals, who are in these posts, is in a slump."

ONE OF SEVERAL examples cited by Cardenal is President Ortega, of whom he said: "He writes very good poetry, although he publishes little."

Cardenal, who at 60 is regarded as one of Nicaragua's foremost poets, is also a priest and a self-proclaimed Marxist.

A cousin of Cardenal, Pablo Antonio Cuadra, is another of Nicaragua's leading poets. But Cuadra, 72, is anti-Marxist. He is the editor of the opposition newspaper La Prensa, and he personally edits its weekly literary supplement.

Cuadra said that the supplement publishes some revolutionary poetry but that he finds little value in most of it.

"We are against the idea that the Sandinistas want to impose, that culture and literature are to serve the revolution," Cuadra said. "Propaganda is not literature. What they make to serve them is nothing but propaganda."

According to Cuadra, aspiring young poets are under pressure to toe the ideological line. He said that his literary supplement has published verse by at least three young poets using pseudonyms because they were afraid of reprisals for collaborating with the opposition newspaper.

"Many good poets have left the country," he said. "I think that at least five of the best have left."

Although La Prensa's literary supplement is not as heavily censored as its news columns, the government has barred publication of some poems. Cuadra recalled that about a month ago censors cut out two poems that were critical of military conscription.

AS A RESULT of the Sandinistas' ideology and policies, he said, the quality of poetry has dropped visibly. He is collecting examples of what he considers the worst revolutionary poetry published in Sandinista newspapers and magazines and, when he has enough, he said, he may publish an "Anthology of Shame."

"Some of the poems are servile, some are naked propaganda, some try to be didactic," he said.

In the folder where he keeps the collection, Cuadra found a revolutionary poem by Culture Minister Cardenal, titled "The Price of Brassieres." It tells of a young woman who criticizes the revolution because the price of brassieres has risen.

But it goes on to say that in a town called Esquipulas the children no longer die of hunger and disease, and that as a result a gravedigger has lost his job.

The poem concludes:

Before, brassieres were not so expensive.

Now, in Esquipulas there are almost no burials.

You tell me: Which is better?

"Cardenal's latest poetry puts him far beneath the poet that he was," Cuadra said.

Cuadra criticized the poetry workshops that Cardenal's ministry created in 1979. He said that young people who have taken part in the workshops complain that poems are criticized on the basis of political content, not poetic quality.

JUAN RAMON FALCON, one of four "poet-orienters" who supervise the workshop program, said participants' poems are submitted to collective criticism in the workshops and "there is political discussion when the poems are political in nature."

He said that 90 to 95 percent of the workshop participants are committed to the revolution. Yet, he said, there is no pressure in the workshops to write revolutionary poetry.

"Revolutionary poetry comes out spontaneously from the poet, the same way love poetry comes out," he said. "The majority of the poems written in our workshops are on amorous subjects."

Falcon said that students, farmers, laborers, professionals and members of the Sandinista security forces have taken part in the workshops. In 1982 and 1983, there were about 70 workshops around the country, but there are only about 25 today.

One reason for the decline, he said, is that the number of "poet-orienters" has decreased from nine to four. Four of those who left were transferred by the Sandinista party to political jobs, he said.

Luis Rivas Leiva, secretary general of the opposition Social Democratic Party, said that Nicaraguans are tired of revolutionary poetry. He said that it smacks of Sandinista publicity, which is so widespread that the saturation point has been reached.

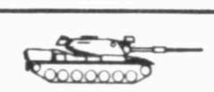

Asked if he was, by any chance, a poet, Rivas Leiva smiled and produced a sheet of freshly penned verse, which he read aloud. It dealt with longing and undying love.

"My field is romantic poetry," he said. "Our people are a romantic people, and that is the kind of poetry they want most."

Indians form alliance against Sandinistas

EDITOR'S NOTE — Nicaraguan Indians held their congress this year in Rus Rus, a village on Honduras' isolated Caribbean coast where hundreds of them have sought refuge. A major topic was the fight of Indian guerrilla organizations against Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government. Associated Press reporter Andrew Selsky was one of five U.S. journalists who observed the congress.

RUS RUS, Honduras (AP) — Hundreds of Nicaraguan Indians, some escorted by guerrilla patrols, slogged for weeks along jungle trails to attend an assembly in this remote refugee village and form an alliance against the leftist Sandinista government.

The delegates represented all the Indian communities along the Caribbean coast of Nicaragua.

In forming the new group called Kisan, which means Nicaraguan Coast Indian Unity in the Miskito Indian language, the assembly dissolved the Misura and Misurasata rebel groups, two of four guerrilla armies fighting the Sandinista government.

The Indians, who claim about 4,000 soldiers, hope to qualify for some of the $27 million in non-lethal aid the U.S. Congress authorized for the rebels, also known as Contras.

"We have lived in our country before the time of Columbus, but now we must plead with the Sandinistas for the control of our lands," said Wycliffe Diego, who was elected leader of Kisan by the assembly.

"We will die before we become slaves to any government, much less the Sandinistas," declared Diego, 39, who formed the first Nicaraguan Indian rights group, Alpromiso, in 1973 when Anastasio Somoza was in power. The Sandinistas overthrew Somoza in July 1979.

Diego, like others, addressed the 491-delegate assembly in the Miskito Indian language, which another Indian translated into Spanish for the 10 U.S., European and Honduran journalists who attended the three-day assembly.

Some of the delegates were guerrilla officers, dressed in heavy boots, jeans and T-shirts. Others were clergymen representing the Roman Catholic and Moravian churches in Nicaragua. Still others were from nearby refugee villages.

The delegates from Nicaragua were accompanied by guerrillas from the Misura group because of fears of attacks by Sandinista troops.

Violence between the Sandinistas and the Indians erupted in 1981 when government troops tried to arrest a dissident leader in a Moravian church in Prinzapolka, Nicaragua. A shootout left four Indian rebels and eight soldiers dead, Indian leaders say.

In the following weeks, Indian guerrillas in the Misura and Misurasata bands attacked soldiers with bows and arrows and machetes, then later with automatic rifles taken from dead soldiers.

In 1982, the government began forcibly relocating thousands of Miskito Indians living in the coastal jungle area. The Indians say soldiers set fire to Miskitos' homes, churches and crops, and killed their livestock.

The Sandinistas now say the forced relocation was a mistake and are trying to move the Miskitos back to their ancestral homelands along the Coco River, which divides Honduras and Nicaragua.

But delegates representing the refugees vowed not to return as long as the Sandinistas remained in power.

"You young ones must struggle so you don't die here and so you can take the bones of the old ones who do die here back to Nicaragua," said Mollins Tillet, the president of the Indian's council of elders.

"Our most fervent wish is that our next assembly be held in Nicaragua, which for us is a piece of heaven," he said.

The approximately 400 refugees who fled across the Coco River to live in Rus Rus, just two miles from the border, had to begin all over. About 19,000 other Indian refugees live in similar settlements on the Honduran side of the river, relief officials say.

The Indians erected bamboo huts atop stilts for protection against the monsoon-like rains that lash the region eight months of the year. With the help of international relief agencies and tribesman already in Honduras they grow rice and beans, and some have a cow or two.

Some Indian leaders say they are seeking an autonomous state in Nicaragua, and representatives of the Misaurasata faction believe an autonomy plan can be negotiated with the Sandinistas.

"Our fight is for our rights," Kenneth Bushey, a Misurasata guerrilla commander elected to the Kisan governing body, told reporters. "If the Sandinistas respect those rights, we won't have any reason to fight," he said.

However, otehr leaders like Diego want more.

"We want to have a dialogue with other (rebel) groups and to fight together for the freedom of our country and to get rid of Sandinismo forever, which is communism," Diego told the assembly.

Press freedom slowly gaining in Latin America

By ROBERT PARRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Press freedom is gaining in Latin America, but many countries still reward critical reporting with "firing, beatings and jail, and too often death," according to a private report.

The 1984-85 survey, compiled jointly by the Newspaper Guild and the Council on Hemispheric Affairs, accused the military dictatorships of Chile and Paraguay of the worst violations of press freedoms, followed by Guatemala, El Salvador, Haiti, Honduras and Guyana.

The report said Cuba's communist leader Fidel Castro maintains an "iron-fisted censorship that remains the most thorough in the hemisphere" and criticized the imprisonment of Ariel Hidalgo, a leftist writer who had opposed special privileges of Communist Party officials.

The 72-page report, released Wednesday, also claimed Costa Rica and Venezuela had tarnished their past reputations for tolerance through attempts this year to restrict negative reporting about government activities.

It also accused Nicaragua's leftist government of "inexcusable" harassment of the chief opposition newspaper, La Prensa, although adding that the paper has shown "a lack of balance" in attacking the government and that "its editors seem to have consistently courted censorship...to score political points."

The report gave the highest grades for press freedom to Argentina, which recently ended seven years of military rule, Barbados, Belize, Brazil, and Trinidad and Tobago.

Summing up the report's findings, Charles A. Perlik Jr., president of the Newspaper Guild and chairman of the liberal Washington-based Council on Hemispheric Affairs, said:

"The practice of journalism remains an extremely hazardous activity for local press people despite decided overall improvement in the hemisphere throughout 1984 and the early months of 1985."

Perlik said "democratization" in Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay had "put an end to the iron hand of brutal military regimes that stifled the most elementary of freedoms, that of life, let alone free expression. Yet in many countries in Latin America, thorough and faithful reporting is rewarded by firings, beatings and jail, and too often death."

Among U.S.-backed governments in war-torn Central America, the report attacked the records of El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras. "Reporters are constantly in peril of death" in El Salvador, where more than 19 journalists have died in the civil war and others have "disappeared," according to the report.

In Guatemala, the report cited the disappearances and detentions of several reporters critical of the rightist military government. It also attacked arrests and expulsions of reporters in Honduras.

Chile's military government has broadened its already extensive powers to control and censor the press, the report said. As public resistance to the government of Gen. Augusto Pinochet mounted last year, laws were enacted to bar the press from reporting on alleged personal corruption by government officials, it said.

In Paraguay, the longtime military dictatorship of Gen. Alfredo Stroessner has moved aggressively to stamp out calls for reform, closing the chief opposition paper, ABC Color, and dismantling its owner's publishing company, the report said.

An experiment with press freedom ended quickly in Haiti last year when the government of Haitian leader Jean Claude Duvalier arrested, threatened and beat editors of opposition newspapers, according to the report.

In Guyana, the Marxist government of Prime Minister Forbes Burnham has used "libel suits in prejudiced courts and extreme restrictions on newsprint allocations...to bankrupt, if not break, any existing opposing voice," the report said.

IMPORTANT: Spoken promises are difficult to enforce. Ask the dealer to put all promises in writing. Keep this form.

VEHICLE NAME ____ MODEL ____ YEAR ____ VIN NUMBER ____
DEALER STOCK NUMBER (Optional) ____

WARRANTIES FOR THIS VEHICLE:

☐ AS IS—NO WARRANTY

YOU WILL PAY ALL COSTS FOR ANY REPAIRS. The dealer assumes no responsibility for any repairs regardless of any oral statements about the vehicle.

☒ WARRANTY

☐ FULL ☒ LIMITED WARRANTY. The dealer will pay 100 % of the labor and 100 % of the parts for the covered systems that fail during the warranty period. Ask the dealer for a copy of the warranty document for a full explanation of warranty coverage, exclusions, and the dealer's repair obligations. Under state law, "implied warranties" may give you even more rights.

SYSTEMS COVERED:	DURATION:
Engine: Cylinder Block and All Internal Parts, Cylinder Head Assemblies, Timing Case, Chain, Gears, Belt and Sprockets, Harmonic Balancer, Oil Pump, Water Pump, Transmission Case and all Internal Parts, Torque Converter, Drive Plate, Flex Plate, Fly Wheel, Bell Housing, Transaxle Case or Rear Axle Housing and all Internal Parts, Drive Shaft and Axle Shaft Assemblies and their Housings, Axle Shaft Bearings, Drive Shaft Center Bearings, Constant Velocity Joints, Universal Joints and Yokes	All listed components are covered for 5 Months from the vehicle sale date or 5,000 miles from the vehicle's odometer reading at the time of vehicle sale (whichever comes first) after payment by the customer of the first $50 of covered repair costs for each repair visit

☒ SERVICE CONTRACT. A service contract is available at an extra charge on this vehicle. Ask for details as to coverage, deductible, price, and exclusions. If you buy a service contract within 90 days of the time of sale, state law "implied warranties" may give you additional rights.

PRE PURCHASE INSPECTION: ASK THE DEALER IF YOU MAY HAVE THIS VEHICLE INSPECTED BY YOUR MECHANIC EITHER ON OR OFF THE LOT.

SEE THE BACK OF THIS FORM for important additional information, including a list of some major defects that may occur in used motor vehicles.
