Board tables teacher pay schedule

By Daniel Arp
Staff Writer

Responding to a request by the Midland Federation of Teachers, trustees of the Midland Independent School District on Tuesday tabled a vote on next year's teacher pay scale pending a clearer understanding of what funds will be coming from the state this year.

At a board meeting in which dollar amounts and potential budget items were discussed at length, administrators recommended an across-the-board $3,000 pay raise for teachers — plus the usual pay scale step — that was the minimum mandated by the Texas Legislature this session.

But teachers' union members argued that the pay raise would not bring Midland any closer to the state average in teacher salaries because everyone in the state would be giving at least the state minimum.

"What we're asking you to do tonight is not to vote on the salary schedule," said Steve Buck, president of the MFT. "We don't know all the facts yet. There's a possibility we might have a little bit more money."

Perhaps adding some fuel to the debate, neighboring Ector County Independent School District already has set its starting teacher salary at $30,500 — $800 above the figure recommended to the board Tuesday.

Bill Jordan, vice president of the TFT, asked the school board to at least consider trying to eclipse the state average for teacher salaries.

"It looks to me like the direction we ought to go is on the upside from average," Jordan said. "To me, average means mediocrity. Any old fool can be average, if they put a little into it."

Jordan added that MISD has been losing teachers to other districts that paid more, and that he saw two coaches leave Abell for Fort Worth this spring.

"I don't really enjoy providing a training ground for other districts," Jordan said.

There was little discussion on the board after teachers made their presentation.

Board Secretary Patricia Hodges made a motion to postpone the vote, but no one seconded her, and Board President Becky Oekerman declared the motion dead.

Then, board member Martha Manulik asked Superintendent Joseph P. Baressi Jr. if there would be any harm in postponing a pay schedule.

Baressi said he had prepared the document to make it clear to teach-

Construction at the intersection of Loop 250 and Big Spring has caused traffic backups, aggravating motorists as they try to exit off the loop.

Loop construction gives Midlanders taste of big city

By Rick López

Officials estimate that construction work at the intersection of Loop 250 and Texas Highway 349 stole about 15 minutes from 20,000 motorists Tuesday.

To put things in perspective, that's roughly 208 days if you add up all that time.

At 10 a.m., traffic on the Loop 250 eastbound lanes was backed up for two miles. Bumper-to-bumper rows of cars lagged from Garfield Street to Highway 349. Police said it took drivers between 15 to 20 minutes to get through that stretch.

The culprit behind the congestion was a turning lane that connects motorists from the eastbound Loop 250 exit ramp to the southbound lane on Highway 349.

On Tuesday, construction crews began repaving the turning lane: a brief project that is expected to wrap up Thursday, said Glen Larum, spokesman for the Texas Department of Transportation (TxDOT).

Last week, TxDOT officials used the local news media to inform residents that East Loop 250 was about to undergo a series of major renovations.

"It's those drivers who insist on using the loop that are going to see all that congestion," Larum said. "There will continue to be congestion problems until we're done. We're doing everything we can to expedite this construction."

Mercedes Garza, a noon-time motorist, said her lunch hour was cut by 12 minutes after driving through the bottleneck.

"I just wish they (TxDOT) had a sign telling us that taking this route would take us longer," Ms. Garza said, while eating at a sandwich shop just north of the construction site.

Pit bull who attacked girl is put down; brain sent to Austin for rabies testing

By Ed Todd and Richard Acosta
Staff Writers

The pit bull who mutilated 7-year-old Lacey Stanfield while on a Sunday bicycle outing was euthanized on Tuesday "with the written consent of the (dog's) owner," according to Tina Sanders-Jauz, spokeswoman for the city of Midland.

"He was put down ... at the owner's request," Ms. Sanders-Jauz said late Tuesday afternoon two days after the dog attacked the girl in south-central Midland near her Roosevelt Avenue home.

Subsequently, the dog's brain was removed and shipped by bus to Austin where the brain will be analyzed for rabies and other infectious diseases by the Texas Department of Health's Zoonosis Control Division, said Coy Willis, director of Midland Animal Control.

Results of the tests are to be available Thursday, he said.

"Our main concern at this point in time is that ... the dog could pass rabies on" were the dog infected with the virus, Willis said.

The 2-year-old dog, which Willis identified as an American pit bull terrier or American Staffordshire terrier, was named "Pauley" and did not have current rabies vaccination, he said.

The "strong and heavily-built" dog, which stood 18 to 21 inches at the shoulder and weighed 50 to 60 pounds, "was plenty big enough to knock her down," Willis said.

As a breed, pit bulls are "so powerful," Willis said. "And the attacks are so bad just

City chooses to terminate Recycle Midland contract

By Jeff Stevens
Staff Writer

Based on considerable financial losses in its recycling efforts, the city of Midland chose to terminate its relationship with Recycle Midland (RM) Tuesday.

At its regularly scheduled meeting, the City Council voted six to one to approve — less certain provisions — to cancel the current contract with the private recycler and cease delivery of all solid waste to RM as of July 1. The city will continue to deliver the contents of recycling containers to the facility until Sept. 31, after which all business between the two entities will cease.

According to Deputy City Manager Rick Menchaca, the city has lost in excess of $1 million as a result of the now terminated contract. But the city isn't done sending money RM's direction.

Under a contract for termination approved Tuesday, the city would pay a total of $448,312 and relieve RM of

Grand jury takes no action yet on MISD, promises report

By Daniel Arp
Staff Writer

District Attorney Al Schorre said no formal action was taken by the grand jury Tuesday pending issuance of a final report on whether to indict officers of the Midland Independent School District for alleged open meetings violations.

Grand jury members heard from witnesses in a special session Tuesday morning, after which members deliberated for about an hour, Schorre said.

"They're basically not going to take any further action on it today, but they're going to issue a report on it in the next couple of weeks," said Schorre. "I take it there wasn't any dissent (among grand jury members) on the conclusions."

What those conclusions are remains to be seen and will be included in the report, Schorre said.

Allegations of two possible open meetings violations arose out of the regular May 11 meeting of the school board in which a student's discipline appeal was denied.

Casey Gold Riggan, who has since graduated from Midland High School, was challenging a disciplinary decision made by his principal, Neil Richmond. Eyewitnesses claimed the 5-2 vote rejecting Riggan's appeal took place in closed session and that they were denied admittance to the board room by a district official once the properly closed hearing was over.

According to the Texas Open Meetings Act, "A final action, decision, or vote on a matter deliberated in a closed meeting under this chapter may only be made in an open meeting."

The school district claims the vote took place in open session or that, if it did not, one of the district's lawyers believed at the time the vote needed to take place in closed session to gel with federal right to privacy laws.

Meanwhile, a second open meetings allegation arose involving then-Board President Martha Manulik who allegedly contacted board members before the meeting in an effort to defeat Riggan's appeal before it was heard.

Schorre said he could not confirm those called as witnesses Tuesday, though Joe Cummins, MISD executive director of administrative services, and Ted Kerr, an attorney for the school district, were seen emerging from Schorre's office the morning of the session.

Tim Riggan — Casey's father — also testified, as did Tanya Hartman, a former MISD teacher who was sitting outside the board room at the time of the vote.

"We simply stated what happened," Riggan said. "I specifically asked Joe Cummins if it was going to be open. He addressed board members, and they specifically told me it was not to be open."

No members of the Board of Trustees were seen coming out of Schorre's office Tuesday morning, and Schorre said no written depositions were taken beforehand.

Clinton urges refugees to stay in settlement until land mines are cleared

STENKOVEC CAMP, Macedonia (AP) — In a camp of muddy tents within sight of Kosovo, President Clinton listened to refugee accusations of Serb torture and massacres of ethnic Albanians. "Oh yeah, there's some bitterness," Clinton said even as he called on all sides to respect human rights.

After visiting Tuesday with refugees longing to go back to Kosovo, Clinton acknowledged concerns that some might seek revenge against remaining Serbs.

But he told reporters, "So far, so good. We thought there would be some problems, and I thought they would be worse."

This settlement, near the capital city of Skopje, sits on a vast farm plain surrounded by wooded mountains, eight or nine miles from Kosovo. To the refugees, the nearby hills and distant snow-capped peaks point to home.

Many thousands of restless refugees have rushed back to Kosovo in cars and taxis against the advice of relief workers. The president urged the 10,000 refugees still here to stay until land mines are removed from the paths at home.

"You have suffered enough," he said.

Clinton, his wife, Hillary, and their daughter, Chelsea, came on the final day of a weeklong visit to Europe. Childen and their parents rushed from drab tents where they've spent anxious weeks. They kissed and hugged the president. Crowds chanted, "Cleen-ton, Cleen-ton" and "U-S-A."

Talking with reporters, Clinton was uncertain about whether the expelled ethnic Albanians and their former Serb neighbors could get along again in Kosovo. "I just don't know," Clinton said. He said the diversity of NATO peacekeeping troops would be helpful.

"There's the power of their example," Clinton said, adding that bitterness wouldn't be a problem if both sides felt secure.

The president also spoke in Skopje with a couple hundred U.S. troops heading for peacekeeping duties in Kosovo. Then he flew to Aviano, Italy — his last stop — to salute American forces who flew bombing missions to Yugoslavia. He thanked them for their "noble endeavor."

Clinton said he regretted some had been so far from family on Father's Day.

"I want you to know that I am absolutely certain that you are building a better world for your children," he said.

At Stenkovec, Clinton and the first lady sat on a cot next to a tent with the imprint: "Gift of the United States of America."

Idriz Macastena and his wife, Nerimane, told the president that Serb soldiers had taken their 4-year-old son, Besart, and held a knife to one side of his neck and a lighted cigarette to the other, demanding money. The boy listened as his parents spoke with the president about his ordeal.

President Clinton shakes hands with ethnic Albanian refugees in the Stenkovec refugee camp on the Kosovo-Macedonian border Tuesday. Clinton, on a brief visit to Macedonia, urged ethnic Albanian refugees to delay their return to Kosovo until mines are cleared.

Macastena also said he witnessed the Serb army stopping a convoy of fleeing Kosovars April 17. They pulled one man from each car — 60 people in all — and killed them with guns and knives, he said.

In an earlier conversation with reporters, Macastena said the whole ordeal was worth it, though, because "now we go to live in Kosovo without Serbs. You cannot gain freedom without blood."

Clinton, in a brief address, implored refugees to remain here until mines are removed.

"I don't want any child hurt," he said. "I don't want anyone else to lose a leg or an arm or a child because of a land mine. So I ask you, please be patient with us. Give us a couple of more weeks."

Land mines, booby traps and unexploded ordnance from NATO's bombing campaign litter Kosovo in about 800 areas, according to a U.N. survey. Some 25 land mine accidents have occurred, two of them fatal, since refugees began returning last week.

Clinton drew a large lession from the bombing campaign against Yugoslavia:

"No one ever, ever should be punished and discriminated against or killed or uprooted because of their religion or their ethnic heritage."

He said he wanted the countries of southeastern Europe to "build a brighter, more prosperous future based on respect for the human rights of all people."

Before visiting the camp, Clinton talked with the leaders of Macedonia and Albania, who opened their doors to nearly 1 million refugees fleeing Serb forces.

"NATO could not have achieved its mission without you," he told Macedonian President Kiro Gligorov.

U.S. aid to Macedonia has more than tripled over the last year to $72 million, and Clinton announced an additional $12 million in food commodities.

Macedonia and Albania are to be included in a long-term stability package of aid to southeastern Europe financed by the European Union, the United States and other countries.

U.S. jets unleash bombs after being fired on by Iraqi forces

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — U.S. fighter jets bombed a military command center in northern Iraq Tuesday after Iraqi forces fired on the planes in the northern no-fly zone, the U.S. military said.

The Air Force F-15s and F-16s attacked the military command and control center northwest of Mosul, a city 250 miles north of Baghdad, the U.S. European Command said.

The Iraqi army, in a statement carried by the official Iraqi News Agency, claimed the planes attacked "civilian installations." Iraq reported no casualties or damage.

The attack came after the warplanes, which are enforcing the no-fly zone north of the 36th parallel, were fired on by anti-aircraft artillery, the European Command said.

All U.S. planes returned safely to Incirlik air base in southern Turkey. The damage to the Iraqi sites was being assessed.

It was the second attack on an Iraqi command and control site reported by the U.S. military this week. On Monday, U.S. jets attacked another installation north of Mosul after being fired on by anti-aircraft artillery.

U.S. and British warplanes have been enforcing the no-fly zone in northern Iraq since the end of the 1991 Gulf War to protect Iraqi Kurds against Baghdad's forces. Another no-fly zone was set up in southern Iraq to protect Shiite minorities.

Iraq does not recognize the zones and has challenged allied planes there since December.

Counting mass graves seems never-ending

IZBICA, Yugoslavia (AP) — Turn down the wrong road in Kosovo looking for a mass grave of 35 ethnic Albanians, and the men there say, no, that's the next village — but we'll show where we buried seven of our fathers and uncles together.

Ask someone for directions to a field holding the corpses of 142 people who were executed and he says, after that, if you want, I'll show you a grave holding six members of a single family.

Mass graves are everywhere in Kosovo: more than outsiders can track down in their first days back in the province; enough to keep war crimes prosecutors busy for years, if they choose.

Apparently fearing just such prosecution, Serb soldiers, paramilitary, police and civilians cremated many of their ethnic Albanian victims, or returned to exhume corpses for burning or reburial in single graves, survivors say.

But while the 2 1/2-month war was time enough for killing untold thousands, it wasn't enough time for cleaning up afterward. The signs of slaughter abound:

— A Kosovo Liberation Army guerrilla with a bandana tied over his nose pulls on a rope snaking from the ground, lifting out the head of one of 10 people buried there. The cord that strangled the victims is still around the neck.

— Outside Djakovica, an Italian soldier points his foot at a human ribcage in a gravel pit that villagers say holds the bodies of 86 people massacred in the southwestern city. "A boy," the soldier guesses.

— A woman's skull rests among the charred bones of 26 people who were shot and then had their house burned around them in the village of Cara Luka, 22 miles southwest of the capital, Pristina. Hair intact, head tilted back, her mouth is wide open. "As if she's still screaming," people studying the scene tell each other.

In some cases, as at Cara Luka, residents are waiting for investigators from the international war crimes tribunal in The Hague, Netherlands, to come before they properly bury the dead. FBI investigators are to aid U.N. war-crimes prosecutors in examining the sites, NATO says.

At least one investigator with the war crimes tribunal is touring mass graves by helicopter, flying into one site for a quick initial survey and pictures, then flying on to the next one.

On the ground, villagers are scrupulous in telling the stories of the massacres, even — or especially — if traces of the killing are few. They tally the dead, providing estimates on the number of bodies buried hastily under the mounds of earth.

"The world will know about these," said Sadik Xhemajli, a KLA officer in the village of Izbica near the northwest city of Mitrovica.

Xhemajli has painstakingly written, and laboriously reads, an account of Serb killings of 142 people at his village from March 28 to May 10.

The dead include 119 people executed at once, and an 88-year-old woman and a mentally ill, paralyzed man shot because they were unable to walk to the Serb-guarded convoy that was to deport them to Albania, the ledger says.

In all, seven of the victims were women. Two were children. Ninety-eight were men older than 50, up to the age of 102, Xhemajli recites.

Villagers buried the bodies in a field. Serbs came back from June 1 to June 3 with a backhoe, digging up the corpses and carting them off in a truck — villagers suspect for burning at a factory in Mitrovica.

Spy cameras flying overhead caught the sight, and the Pentagon cited it June 9 as a sign of ongoing Serb atrocities in Kosovo.

Serbs took away the bodies "just to lose the evidence," Xhemajli said. "To escape The Hague."

Xhemajli, at a village a long, bumpy ride down a mud road, somehow has gotten word to authorities of the killings. He awaits The Hague.

Coke chairman says 'sorry' to Belgium

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Coke apologized to Belgium on Tuesday but would not admit its soft drinks made people sick.

Two weeks after children first became ill after drinking its products, the Coca-Cola Co. placed full-page ads in major Belgian newspapers to express regrets over the incident and acknowledge that the world's biggest soft-drink business has been slow to respond to consumer concerns about food safety.

Elsewhere, the French government announced its health checks on canned Coca-Cola products turned up negative, while a new investigation was launched in Portugal where granules of carbon were found at the bottom of Coke cans.

"To all the Belgian people, I want to say that I'm personally very sorry for any discomfort or inconvenience," M. Douglas Ivester, the chairman of Atlanta-based Coca-Cola, wrote in the ads.

"To those people who have suffered, especially the children, my colleagues and I want to express a very sincere apology."

The ads came amid criticism of Coca-Cola for being lax in responding to consumer concerns about the illnesses that led to bans in Belgium and beyond of such well-known brands as Coke, Diet Coke, Fanta and Sprite.

"I should have spoken with you earlier," Ivester admitted.

Coca-Cola's stock was rebounding sharply Tuesday on the New York Stock Exchange after sinking 1.6 percent last week and falling an additional 3 percent Monday. In afternoon trading, Coke was up 5.2 percent, or by $3.18 3/4, at $64.75 a share.

Ivester's apology was more contrite than a statement issued last week as some 200 Belgians reported cases of nausea and stomach upsets and authorities pulled Coke's best selling products from stores. But he stopped short of explicitly recognizing tainted Coke was the cause of the illnesses.

"We strive to make sure that Coca-Cola always stands for good feelings and we regret that it instead resulted in feelings of illness," said the statement published in French and Dutch.

CONTRACT: City terminates relationship with RM

$218,890 it owes the city. That brings the total dollar figure to $638,502 to get out of the current contract 19 years and three months early.

The magnitude of the numbers prompted past Keep Midland Beautiful Board President and current Keep Texas Beautiful President Sharla Hotchkiss to address the council. Ms. Hotchkiss has said she had concerns about the Dirty Materials Recycling Facility (MRF) since its inception. She has doggedly sought justification for the program and has been vocal about her concerns to the council at every opportunity.

"I'm delighted that we are going to turn the page on this," Ms. Hotchkiss said. "I appreciate that ya'll have always been open in recognizing that there are those of us who think this thing should have gone another way."

But, "I think you need to check some of the numbers," she said.

Ms. Hotchkiss was particularly concerned about at least three provisions in the contract.

One area of compensation called for in the contract would have provided $70,000 in compensatory fees "in consideration for, but not limited to, tipping fee revenue reductions anticipated by Contractor from City's discontinued delivery of MSW to the MRF."

Another item provided for a $15,000 retainer for assistance in implementing a new recycling program and a third provided $32,000 to pay off the balance of a RM aluminum debt account.

Regarding the last item, Ms. Hotchkiss, who has owned a restaurant and catering business with her husband former council member Bart Hotchkiss, used a catering analogy to question the $32,000 payment.

She said that if they bid a catering job and it ends up costing more than they estimated, "We eat the difference."

Menchaca said the reason for the city's taking responsibility for the payment, however, is because the city's termination of the contract would force RM to violate a contract with a third party.

RM made an agreement, last year, with an aluminum recycler to purchase all RM aluminum. RM received $100,000 up front in exchange for bringing all its aluminum to that company. As they brought the product, the dollar amount was deducted from the money advanced.

"They were on line to meet that but because we are no longer taking them our solid waste, they aren't going to be able to meet that obligation."

Regarding the $70,000 compensatory fee and the $15,000 retainer, Jose Cuevas made a motion to pull those items before approving the contract.

The only real hiccup in the entire proceeding, which came as a result of a comment by Ms. Hotchkiss, required some answers to soothe her concerns.

By way of expressing her understanding that council members might not be completely versed in the contract, she said, "I understand that this was just hammered out last night."

Councilman Don Washburn bristled slightly at that.

"You act like we close deals behind doors and we don't," Washburn said.

Interestingly enough, Washburn, an accountant by trade, was the only councilman who voted against the termination contract.

"I absolutely support termination," Washburn said, adding that he opposed the motion because he didn't necessarily agree with some of the language of the contract.

Though the total amount involved in the contract exceeds $600,000, the actual additional cost to the city is somewhat less.

Of the final amount, $140,000 will be paid to RM for tipping fees the city owes for services already rendered, according to Menchaca.

The city also is agreeing to relieve RM of paying $217,000 in tipping fees. Menchaca said that if the city continued to deliver solid waste to RM, it would cost $238,000. That savings is used as justification for the $217,000 debt relief.

As part of the former contract the city paid a recycling management fee (a recycling subsidy), of $25,000 a month. According to City Attorney Keith Stretcher, the city is contractually obligated to pay that fee through September despite any other contractual agreements. So by the city's logic, that isn't included in any additional considerations.

Finally, the termination contract obligates the city to purchase $170,887 in equipment from RM. Menchaca said that equipment can be sold to future recyclers that might respond to a recycling service request for proposals or might be sold to another recycler outside of Midland.

"The equipment would be available to whoever the successful proposer is. Our hope is that this would open the doors for more proposers. It's a very limited market."

Those issues all add up to what Washburn characterized as language problems in the contract. As he sees it, the contract lends confusion that the city is settling for about $498,000.

"We're actually settling for about $15,000," he said.

Menchaca added that had the city chosen to do nothing and choose not to appropriate funds for next year, which was one of their legal options, it would have cost the city $313,000 just for continuation of services.

This way, Washburn said, "We got out cheap and their guaranteeing not to sue us."

Stretcher added that had the city chosen not to appropriate funds in lieu of agreeing upon a termination contract, it could have faced possible litigation.

"And were we not successful in getting out in a summary judgment, it would have been very costly. And during litigation, we could not have gone forward with any recycling plans," Stretcher said.

Also at Tuesday's City Council meeting:

- The Permian Basin Area Foundation contributed $8,967 for improvements at Kiwanis Park.
- The Council appropriated $775,000 for the purchase of dispatch radio equipment.
- The council appointed Fire Chief Andy Mehl to serve as the city's Emergency Management coordinator.

TRAFFIC: Construction backs up Loop 250 drivers

(From 1A)

Larum said the contractors, Reese Albert Construction, tried their best to make the process as painless as possible. Unfortunately, there was no way to avoid Tuesday's chaos.

"We ask drivers to please be patient. This isn't Austin. It won't be an inconvenience to us for a very long time," Larum said.

Usually, one-lane traffic doesn't cause much of a ruckus, he said. But it's the turning lane's absence that causes most of the problem, he said.

"This is what helps alleviate the flow of traffic coming from northwest Midland to the downtown area," Larum said. "With 20,000 cars using that stretch of road, there's going to be some congestion when you force everyone into a single lane."

Police who were called to the scene at 9:30 a.m. said they encountered some pretty dangerous conditions. Several motorists made U-turns into opposite lanes to avoid the wait. Speeding cars almost rear-ended other vehicles idled behind a tall hump in the road.

"We had a serious, near-collision problem there," said Patrick Mayers, a traffic officer with the Midland Police Department.

Police contacted TxDOT and urged them to close off all eastbound lanes between Garfield Street and Highway 349, Mayers said.

That action encouraged some motorists to choose an alternative route or form a single, slow-moving line along the Loop 250 service road, he said.

Officers directed traffic at the bottleneck for almost four hours. After hearing about Tuesday's mess, city hall allotted police six hours of overtime a day to direct traffic during peak hours, Mayers said. The overtime is approved for the duration of the project and runs about $20 to $25 per hour, he said.

"I've been forewarned that area will be in total, utter chaos for three weeks," Mayers said.

Larum said East Loop 250 will undergo two more construction projects within the next two or three weeks. Once work on the turning lane is finished, workers will repave the eastbound and westbound main lanes.

However, the paving crew will only work one lane at a time, so drivers will still have access to the loop, he said. Each direction of Loop 250 has two main lanes.

"We ask drivers to please be patient. It won't be an inconvenience for a very long time," Larum said.

Though the project's contractor — Reese Albert Construction — is responsible for directing traffic, the situation has exceeded their abilities, Larum said.

"It's beyond their control, so city police are helping us out," he said.

Mayers urges motorists to avoid Loop 250 until construction is complete. He said Wadley Street and Andrews Highway are useful, seven-lane streets designed to get motorists from one side of the city to the other quickly.

"Their only inconvenience are red lights. The loop is faster for most people, but with this construction and 30-minute traffic jam, it's not going to be that way for now," Mayers said. "This construction is a short-term problem, and it's very inconvenient. In the long run, things will be better for all of us."

MISD: Board votes to wait on setting salaries

ers what the state was mandating and what the district intended to do to meet that mandate.

"I don't see the problem in waiting," he added.

At that point, board member Glen Bufler moved to table the vote, and Ms. Hodges seconded what was originally her own motion. The board voted 6-0 to table, with Ms. Manulik abstaining.

Meanwhile, salaries of other employees were the topic of preliminary discussion among board members Tuesday. During a budget workshop session, Art Martin, executive director of business services, said that in a best-case scenario the district would have some funds available for a "modest increase" in other employees' salaries.

"We do expect to receive about $6 million in additional state revenues," Martin said. However, Martin added, 80 percent of that increase is designed to fund the mandated $3,000-plus-the-step increase for teachers. And the district still is waiting on rollback worksheets from the Texas Education Agency — which Martin said should arrive in mid-July — that will clarify taxation issues.

Baressi said administrators believe — but are not certain yet — that the school district will not be able to raise the tax rate more than three pennies this year without a rollback election, and that such a measure would come only after a mandated five-cent tax break.

If true, the tax constraints would put strain on this year's budget, Baressi said, as well as on the school district's goal to increase expenditures per-student.

"I'm tempted to make all kinds of political statements, but I won't," Baressi said.

Mary Smith, principal of Emerson, addressed the board asking trustees to consider raising administrator's salaries in a year when teacher's have been given such a substantial increase.

"Teacher salaries are now encroaching on administrators," she said.

"I feel in a very awkward position," Baressi said. "Mrs. Smith has stated a situation that is not only true of her but the people (in administrative positions) below her."

Baressi added that given the recent events in Littleton, he felt principals and their assistants were feeling more stress in their jobs. "And I think they need to be compensated for it."

Martin said the district hoped to be able to provide other employees a pay increase. "You probably read in the paper where the college had a four percent increase for its employees," he said. "We would like to do something similar to that. We were looking at five percent."

Nothing has been decided, however, Martin said.

In other action, the board approved 5-2 a motion by James Fuller to find the means to hire some full-time choral instructors for the junior highs and freshman schools. Bufler and Ms. Manulik dissented.

"I will find the means," Baressi said, right after the board cast its vote. He added with a laugh, "We have to see what the means are first."

JURY: No action taken against MISD yet

(From 1A)

"We had everyone that was personally involved in the situation," Schorre said. "You see, a lot of this was outside the view of the board."

Schorre added that the grand jury had an opportunity to view the videotape of the hearing, completed in the early morning hours of May 12.

As for the other alleged violation, which would have occurred before the meeting and involved only board members, Schorre said, "Both of these matters were brought to the grand jury's attention," though he said he could not comment on whether both questions would be addressed in the report.

Schorre will draft the original report, which then will be mailed to each jury member for changes or revisions. No specific deadline for release of the report has been set, though Schorre said he anticipated it would be ready in about two weeks.

"It's their report," Schorre said. "I'm basically just the typist ... They may entirely rewrite what I pen for them."

Schorre added that he would expect these specific grand jury members to want numerous changes made before final submission.

The grand jury session is not the last day MISD attorneys will spend in court this week. A public hearing on whether to dismiss a lawsuit against Riggan is set for Friday afternoon in the courtroom of U.S. District Judge Royal Ferguson.

ATTACK: Neighborhood relieved with removal of dog

from the sheer strength of the bite alone."

The Stanfield girl, who suffered bite wounds to her head, face, and arms, reportedly required about 100 stitches at Midland's Memorial Hospital and Medical Center.

Because the girl's injuries include head bites, Willis said that those wounds present "us more room for concern. It's a disease that attacks the central-nervous system. Therefore, the closer to the brain, the less time it takes for it (the infection) to multiply and get to the central nervous system."

The girl's wounds "are among the most severe" dog-attack wounds witnessed in Midland, Willis said.

Chuck Swallow, Midland's community services director, said that the attack is "an ongoing investigation ... under Animal Control at this time."

Meanwhile, relief was expressed in the Stanfield neighborhood that the threat of the dog had been removed, especially by Eliza Rodriguez and Wyndhan White, whose children often play with Lacey.

"When I first heard the news (of the attack), I got so scared," Ms. Rodriguez said. "It could have been one of my girls. It makes me feel better that the dog is gone. I have two little girls who play with her (Lacey) just about everyday. It just happened that they didn't go with her that day. With the dog put to sleep, now there is no danger."

White said she couldn't believe anyone would have a dog that could cause serious injury to a child.

"My little girl would play with her, but we were not here at the time," White said. "I'm not sure what happened. But it could have been a lot worse ... a whole lot worse. That dog probably could have killed her."

Trying to keep peace, NATO lets Serbs carve out enclave

KOSOVSKA MITROVICA, Yugoslavia (AP) — The ethnic Albanians of this northern industrial city, one of Kosovo's largest, had hoped they would be safe once NATO soldiers arrived.

Instead, while French peacekeepers looked on Tuesday, a gang of Serb toughs menaced those who wanted to cross a bridge to the other side of town — an area containing the main hospital, many ethnic Albanian homes and almost the only open food shops.

Kosovska Mitrovica is a city under effective partition — and a case study in the enormous problems NATO faces as it tries to prevent violence from flaring yet again between ethnic Albanians and angry Serb holdouts in the province.

"I just want to go home," wept 69-year-old Hasan Jashari, one of a crowd of distraught ethnic Albanians standing in a drizzling rain on one side of the bombcratered bridge over the Ilbar River.

He had left his home in the morning to pick up his pension payment and was turned away when he tried to re-enter what has become a Serb enclave.

Others in the crowd told similar stories. One man wanted to fetch his wife from the hospital. A woman wanted to buy food for her children. Another wanted to check on his house. All were afraid.

On the other side of the bridge, a group of young Serb men — who ethnic Albanians said were manning their post in shifts — warned non-Serbs to keep out. "This is Serbia!" they shouted.

When a carload of journalists drove past them, they catcalled and waved at other Serb men down the street, pointing to the car in an apparent signal that they had not given permission for it to pass.

French peacekeepers at the bridge said it was not up to them to ensure safe passage to the other side of town, although NATO vehicles patrol the area.

"We are trying not to aggravate matters," said one of the soldiers, who refused to give his name. They said they would intervene only if they saw an ethnic Albanian being attacked.

On the Serb side of town, 26-year-old Dejan Pavicevic said the Serbs have a right to defend themselves.

"We want to save our houses. We don't have anyplace else to go," he said. "Otherwise, I would fly away from this place."

An estimated 50,000 Serb civilians have fled Kosovo, even though NATO has appealed to them to stay and promised to protect them. It is a difficult task; as ethnic Albanians return to the towns and villages from which they were driven in a terror campaign by Serb police, troops and paramilitary men, there have been scattered reprisal attacks against Serb civilians.

The ethnic Albanians of Kosovska Mitrovica complained that the French, who have historical ties of friendship with Serbia, were giving preferential treatment to the Serbs at their expense.

"Serbs threaten us with weapons, and the French just stand there," said Osman Rrecaj, 37, who said he and his family were sleeping in a tent because he could not return to his home on the Serb side of town.

Compared to the other peacekeeping contingents, the French did appear less equipped to deal with complaints from ethnic Albanian civilians. At French hillside headquarters in Kosovska Mitrovica, an Albanian-language army translator said he was the only one for the entire French contingent.

Adnan Hasi, 16, said he had been coming to French headquarters several times a day for three days to plead for help in checking what he feared was a booby trap left in the family's home — a tape recorder with wires protruding from it.

"They don't seem to care," he said. "Do I have to wait until one of my little brothers gets blown up?"

Jashari, the pensioner trapped on the wrong side of town, went to the headquarters together with a group of journalists and asked for help going home. After two hours, during which he sat weeping on a bench, French troops agreed to give him a lift across the bridge and past the self-appointed Serb civilian guards.

NATO spokesman Lt. Col. Robin Clifford, asked about the situation in Kosovska Mitrovica, said local commanders had the authority to deal as they saw fit with any situation on the ground, including friction between Serbs and ethnic Albanians.

"It's going to take time to rebuild relations within Kosovo," he said. "That is what we are here to do, for as long as it takes."

Paper: Zimbabwe's morgues extend hours to handle soaring death rate

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — State morgues are extending their hours to cope with Zimbabwe's soaring death rate, mostly as a result of AIDS, a local newspaper reported Tuesday.

An estimated 3,000 people now die every week in the southern African country, nearly 70 percent of them from AIDS-related illnesses, The Herald said.

Harare's main hospital will now staff its morgue around the clock and other hospital mortuary facilities will extend closing time by four hours to 8 p.m., the state-controlled newspaper quoted health authorities as saying.

Families of the dead also were being asked to remove corpses within 24 hours of death to reduce overcrowding in morgues, the paper said.

The National AIDS Coordination Program estimates that more than 80,000 Zimbabweans will die from AIDS-related illnesses this year.

The World Health Organization says some 25 percent of Zimbabwe's 12.5 million people are infected with the virus that causes AIDS.

There is much soul-searching among Swiss after loss of 2006 Winter Olympics

GENEVA (AP) — In a national bout of soul-searching following the unexpected loss of the 2006 Winter Olympics, Switzerland has concluded that it is isolated and unloved as never before.

The weekend decision by the International Olympic Committee to award the 2006 Games to the Italian city of Turin rather than Swiss front-runner Sion has unleashed anger and accusations of dirty tricks in the scandal-ridden International Olympic Committee.

But it is also seen as a political rebuke for the Swiss, whose international reputation has been tarnished by allegations of wartime collusion with the Nazis. There is a growing realization that the small Alpine nation — which champions its neutrality and is a member of neither the United Nations nor European Union — must change its ways.

"I never even dreamed that we had such a bad reputation," Sports Minister Adolf Ogi told the Le Temps newspaper in an interview published Tuesday. "We have a strong economic presence worldwide, but politically we are alone."

"I heard delegates say they wanted the Swiss to lose. People don't like Switzerland."

The issue of neutral Switzerland's World War II role and its treatment of Holocaust victims' assets has led to frayed relations with the United States and other countries. Jewish groups have accused it of profiting from the Holocaust, by retaining the assets of Jews slain by the Nazis and acting as Adolf Hitler's banker, trafficking in gold stolen by the Nazis.

Last August, after much foot-dragging, Switzerland's two biggest banks agreed to pay $1.25 billion in an out-of-court settlement of Holocaust survivors' claims for wartime losses.

Still, Ogi, like most other commentators, said the overwhelming 53-36 Olympic vote in favor of Turin was principally a backlash against Swiss IOC member Marc Hodler. It was Hodler who blew the whistle on wrong-doing by Salt Lake City and forced the Swiss-headquartered Olympic movement into an anti-corruption drive which forced out nine members and cost the rest their privileges.

Supporters of the candidature Sion 2006 show their disappointment in Sion, Switzerland, Saturday, after the International Olympic Committee (IOC) president Juan-Antonio Samaranch announced at IOC session in Seoul, South Korea, that the city of Torino is going to host the Olympic Winter Games in 2006.

Beyond that, a shaken Ogi conceded that Switzerland's image problem stemmed from "our attitude." Numerous IOC members and other Olympic officials have said the loss was as much because the Swiss were perceived as arrogant and overconfident.

"We claim to be the best. We play at being school masters and teaching others lessons. We overestimate ourselves," said Ogi, who is also Swiss vice president.

Despite initial concern about costs and the environment, Switzerland's Olympic bid was remarkable because of the popular enthusiasm and financial sponsorship it gathered in this traditionally cautious country. The red-and-white Sion logo was emblazoned over trains, buses, bottles of wine, chocolate and even toilet paper.

An IOC evaluation commission earlier this year gave Sion a much better rating than Turin or other rivals. After losing out to Salt Lake City for the 2002 Games, the Swiss brimmed with confidence and planned a huge party in Sion's main square to celebrate.

There were hopes the Games would create up to 15,000 new jobs and revitalize the tourist industry in the southern Valais Alps. The Games were also seen as a vital chance of repairing the public relations damage inflicted by the Holocaust controversy. The mass influx of visitors was also expected to make the notoriously insular Swiss more open to the outside world.

Even though the nation is geographically in the heart of Europe, voters in 1992 rejected government plans to join a lose trade pact, putting a formal membership application for the European Union on indefinite hold.

After tortuous negotiations, Swiss ministers signed an agreement Monday for freer trade in sectors like agriculture, transport, labor and research. But diehard defenders of Swiss neutrality have indicated they will try to drum up enough support to hold a national referendum to throw out the accords.

Supreme Court limits disability coverage for correctable conditions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court excluded more than 100 million Americans with physical impairments from the protection of a key anti-discrimination law Tuesday, ruling the law, generally does not cover people with poor eyesight or other correctable conditions.

But the court said the same law, the Americans with Disabilities Act, may require states to take mentally disabled people out of hospitals and let them live in homelike settings.

Moving toward Wednesday's conclusion of its 1998-99 term, the nation's highest court offered dramatic new meaning — in four separate decisions — to a federal law best known for requiring handicap access ramps at public buildings.

The rulings, however, did not answer all questions about the 1990 law's scope. Future court battles are certain.

Together, the four disputes decided Tuesday were viewed as a legal watershed by advocates for the disabled, who were outraged by three rulings affecting American workers.

"These decisions create the absurd result of a person being disabled enough to be fired from a job but not disabled enough to challenge the firing," said Chai Feldblum, a Georgetown University law professor.

But Stephen Bokat, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce general counsel, said the rulings offered welcome shelter for employers flooded by employee lawsuits.

"It means that those with true disabilities will continue to be covered, but people with easily correctable conditions will not be considered disabled," Bokat said.

In the three rulings, the court said people with correctable physical impairments generally cannot rely on the ADA to sue their employers over alleged discrimination.

On the rights of people in state mental hospitals, the court fashioned a narrow, middle-of-the-road decision that left both sides of the conflict claiming victory.

The court said the 1990 law requires states to place the mentally disabled in the "most integrated setting" appropriate, but only after "taking into account the resources available to the state and the needs of others with mental disabilities."

There was no way to know how many of the 70,000 mentally disabled people living in state hospitals nationwide might be affected by the ruling in a Georgia case.

ADAPT, a national disability rights group based in Denver, praised the ruling for reinforcing "the fundamental intent of the ADA, which is to prevent discrimination and promote the integration of people with disabilities into our communities."

Patricia Downing, a Georgia assistant attorney general, said her state could live with a ruling that "doesn't appear to be too burdensome." She noted that the court, among other things, did not condemn a state's practice of keeping eligible people on a community-placement waiting list.

She also praised the justices for ruling that a state's overall budget and its commitment to all mentally disabled people must be considered.

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg wrote for the court's 6-3 majority in the Georgia case. Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia dissented.

The court's three rulings on the ADA's applicability for people whose conditions are readily corrected with medication or devices such as eyeglasses doomed lawsuits that alleged illegal bias against two nearsighted pilots, a truck driver almost blind in one eye and a mechanic with high blood pressure.

The anti-bias law prohibits employers from discriminating against a "qualified individual with a disability" because of that disability.

A qualified person is defined as one who can perform a job when given reasonable accommodation, and a disability is defined as condition that substantially limits a major life activity. The law also protects people who are discriminated against because they are "regarded as" having a disability.

The court announced its main ruling in the case of two nearsighted Colorado sisters, both regional airline pilots, who sued after their job applications with United Air Lines were rejected.

The determination of whether a person is protected by the law, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote for the 7-2 court, "should be made with reference to measures that mitigate the individual's impairment, including, in this instance, eyeglasses and contact lenses."

The court concluded that the two sisters are not disabled as defined by the law, and therefore could not invoke the law to sue United.

O'Connor noted that Congress, in enacting the law, made reference to 43 million disabled Americans. If it had intended to include everyone with a correctable impairment, Congress would have used a number closer to 160 million, she said.

"The 43 million figure reflects an understanding that those whose impairments are largely corrected by medication or other devices are not 'disabled' within the meaning of the ADA," O'Connor said.

Justices John Paul Stevens and Stephen G. Breyer dissented. Writing for the two, Stevens — the only justice with a pilot's license — accused the court having "crabbed vision" and adopting a "miserly construction" of the law.

An identical 7-2 lineup ruled against a Kansas truck mechanic with high blood pressure. The court, with Justice David H. Souter writing for it, ruled unanimously against an Oregon truck driver who is virtually blind in one eye.

Majority on Internet tax panel says e-commerce levy inevitable

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — The government's eventual collection of its share of Internet commerce-generated revenues is apparently as inevitable as death and, well, taxes, members of a congressional Internet tax study panel said Tuesday.

Opening statements Tuesday from 17 members of the Advisory Commission on Electronic Commerce showed that a majority believe the Internet cannot remain effectively tax-free forever. Two members of the 19-member panel did not attend.

"We must not allow the Internet to become a tax haven that drains the revenue governments need to provide the services that citizens demand," said commission member Joseph Guttentag, a top Treasury Department official.

His view was echoed by the other federal, state and local government officials on the panel and, more importantly, by most of those representing the business sector. The main point of contention between the public and private sides is whether state sales taxes levied on traditional purchases in stores should be imposed on similar Internet sales.

"I don't know if it's possible in the long term to tax one form of commerce differently than another form," said John Sidgmore, a panel member and vice chairman of MCI Worldcom.

But the business representatives said they would adamantly oppose any tax that singled out the Internet, such as a charge on World Wide Web access. And the public officials agreed that e-commerce taxes must not hinder the medium's explosive growth or allow the government to pry into private transactions.

Time and again, the commission members appeared to agree on two principles: that any Internet taxes be no different from those on other forms of commerce; and that any system be as simple as possible to reduce the cost of compliance.

"Our challenge here is not to restrain the growth of the Internet but to allow the Internet to flourish," said commission member David Pottruck, president of Charles Schwab Corp. "We need to find the balance. Governments need money. Tax systems need to be fair."

The commission was appointed by Congress to recommend a future tax policy for the Internet by April 2000. Lawmakers also imposed a three-year moratorium on new federal, state and local e-commerce taxes, which expires in October 2001.

The two members who did not attend Tuesday were Richard Parsons, president of Time Warner Inc., and America Online President Robert Pittman.

The 45 states with sales taxes currently have no way to collect them on Internet commerce if the seller is located in another state. Like catalog sales, e-commerce is governed by Supreme Court rulings saying one state cannot force another state to collect and remit sales taxes unless Congress changes the law.

Yet in 1998, these essentially tax-free Internet sales amounted to only about $170 million in lost sales taxes, according to a study released Tuesday by the Ernst & Young accounting firm. That compares to over $4 billion in sales taxes lost to mail order sales.

The study found that 80 percent of today's e-commerce is business-to-business and not subject to sales taxes, while 63 percent of consumer purchases over the Internet involve tax-exempt transactions such as travel or financial services.

Funding increase puts 'great guns' in college future

A lot of positive developments have occurred at Midland College during recent months — enrollment has been climbing steadily upward, the campus has been experiencing growth in its physical facilities and more is possible with the city of Midland's decision in May to seek release from the FAA of land currently used as part of Air Park to sell to Midland College, and a cooperative agreement entered into with Texas Tech University in Lubbock for a physician's assistant program.

Now, say MC officials, the college will be receiving significantly more state funding because of an increase in contact hours or the amount of student classroom time. That alone has amounted to an increase of nearly $1.4 million in funds from the state, which has given MC an increase of $747,407 in unrestricted revenues.

That is extremely good news for the college, which celebrated its 25th anniversary in 1997. What it means is that the college can direct more funds at the areas it believes are important for its future. Its budget reflects that, earmarking 58 percent for instruction or, as President David Daniel put it, "We put a lot of those funds right where the action is."

College officials also were able to give administrators, faculty, and other personnel a well-deserved pay increase. That is entirely appropriate; after all, they are the dedicated people who day-in and day-out have shown a tireless devotion to higher education in Midland.

Much of the credit for the more aggressive tact that Midland College has taken during recent years must be given to Daniel. He has provided outstanding leadership for the college. It has shown in the great strides that have been made by that institution.

Now with the increase in state funding, it really can mean Midland College will be going "great guns" for the foreseeable future!

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, June 23, the 174th day of 1999. There are 191 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 23, 1868, Christopher Latham Sholes received a patent for an invention he called a "Type-Writer."

On this date:

In 1836, Congress approved the Deposit Act, which contained a provision for turning over surplus federal revenue to the states.

In 1931, aviators Wiley Post and Harold Gatty took off from New York on the first round-the-world flight in a single-engine plane.

In 1938, the Civil Aeronautics Authority was established.

In 1947, the Senate joined the House in overriding President Truman's veto of the Taft-Hartley Act.

In 1955, Walt Disney's "Lady and the Tramp," the first animated feature filmed in CinemaScope, opened in theaters.

In 1967, President Johnson and Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin held the first of two meetings in Glassboro, N.J.

In 1969, Warren E. Burger was sworn in as chief justice of the United States by the man he was succeeding, Earl Warren.

In 1972, President Nixon and White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman discussed a plan to use the CIA to obstruct the FBI's Watergate investigation. (Revelation of the tape recording of this conversation sparked Nixon's resignation in 1974.)

In 1985, all 329 people aboard an Air-India Boeing 747 were killed when the plane crashed into the Atlantic Ocean near Ireland, apparently because of a bomb.

Ten years ago: The Supreme Court refused to shut down the "dial-a-porn" industry, ruling Congress had gone too far in passing a law banning all sexually oriented phone message services.

Five years ago: French marines and Foreign Legionnaires headed into Rwanda to try to stem the country's ethnic slaughter.

One year ago: President Clinton said the reported discovery of traces of deadly nerve gas on an Iraqi missile warhead gave the United States new ammunition to maintain tough U.N. sanctions against the Baghdad government.

Christmas in April trip to be hard to beat

By Mark Bondy

It wasn't until we had returned and started sharing some photographs and stories that we realized what a rewarding and fun trip we had to New Amsterdam, Guyana. Only upon reflecting back on all the things we did and the people we met did the remarkable planning that went into this mission become truly evident.

To a person, we feel this was a once in a lifetime experience that we will never forget. We are very grateful to both Christmas In April President Bobby Trimble and Dr. Tulsi Singh, and the people of ARCO Permian for giving us the opportunity to participate in such a meaningful endeavor.

In the course of our short visit, we passed our message of faith, service and caring on to everyone from a 3-year-old orphan to the president of Guyana. One goal was to leave behind some very visible and tangible evidence of Christmas In April and our sister city relationship with New Amsterdam. Tulsi's vision for a bus terminus to provide a place of comfort for weary travelers is now a reality and has accomplished this goal in grand fashion.

We were all very proud to be Midlanders when we saw Bobby Trimble standing on the bus terminus site in his cowboy hard-hat upon our arrival. Even though we as individuals did not work much on the bus terminus, it provided the perfect opportunity for local vendors and contractors to contribute materials and services, one of the key components of a successful Christmas In April program. Besides, we had other projects to work on and a different group of people to spread our message to.

Mark Bondy was among a group of Midlanders who in June participated in a Christmas In April project in New Amsterdam, Guyana, one of Midland's sister cities.

Volunteers are at the heart of a successful Christmas In April program and our mission was to show the people of New Amsterdam how satisfying and fun it can be to help others who are in need. We spent most of our time working at an orphanage and a home for the elderly. The entire interior of the orphanage was painted in bright and cheerful colors. Many of the children and employees at the orphanage as well as local townspeople were inspired to join in and help us paint.

Word of our efforts at the orphanage had spread around the town. It made our day when we stopped at a local hardware store to obtain a new fluorescent light bulb to replace one we had broken while painting. When the store's owner recognized who we were and what we were doing, the bulb became "his contribution to the project." Our efforts were clearly appreciated by the kids and all of the volunteers were blessed with tremendous joy and satisfaction from our work at the orphanage.

We perhaps made our biggest impact and received the greatest satisfaction from our projects at the home for the elderly. We brightened up their common areas with a new coat of paint and we also engineered and installed a piping system to provide them with running water. When the last member of our team left that day, the residents were lined up to take their first real shower in over a year. We again saw community involvement as more local volunteers turned out to help us paint and several students came from the Technical Institute to make some badly needed repairs on the windows. Our departure that day included Reverend Bob Walter giving a haircut to one of the men and our entire group singing "Lord I Lift Your Name On High" for the residents.

The kindness we were shown by the community of New Amsterdam was beyond description. From the welcoming party at City Hall to lunch and dinners hosted by prominent businesses, community organizations and families, we were treated as special guests. The "handing-over" ceremony where we heard our National Anthem played on the steel drums and a beautiful poem recited that included all of our names showed how highly appreciative the community was for our efforts. As planned, all of these events gave us more opportunities to spread our enthusiasm for Christmas In April.

So, Bobby and Tulsi, thanks to you we left behind our shoes, some shirts, some tools and a little bit of ourselves. We showed our new friends in New Amsterdam how a few volunteers energized by the Christmas In April spirit can help their neighbors improve the condition of their homes and their community. Sign us up for the next trip, although this one will be hard to beat!

With gratitude, Barbara Avakian, Dennis Lawless, Mark and Nancy Bondy, Ray and Cara Shoaff, Bobby Burns, Jeff Stevens, Austin Burns, Bob Walter, Dave and Teresa Hartman, and Keith and Darci Weiser.

Latest scandal: Who talked to Woodward?

If there were any questions left about Bill Clinton's much talked-about legacy, last week provided some answers. The punishment, our president is learning, doesn't stop at acquittal's doorstep.

Last week began with a historic victory in Kosovo, yet all the talk in Washington was about two Bobs — Bennett, the president's rumpled pit-bull of a lawyer, and Woodward, the famous investigative reporter whose recent book about scandals is flying off shelves in the capital.

Anderson

Who talked to Woodward? was the question on everyone's lips. In "Shadow," a book recounting the toll of the Watergate scandal on successive presidents, Woodward gives intimate details of private discussions between the president and Bennett.

"Mr. President," Bennett is quoted as saying, "I find your explanation about one of the women frankly unbelievable. This is what impeachment is made of. Your political enemies will eat you alive if there's anything in that deposition that isn't truthful."

Even O.J. Simpson's lawyers showed more loyalty than this.

Clinton, through his spokesman, has denied speaking to Woodward for the book. And the loquacious Bennett, fearful of being fingered as the source, has denied ever violating attorney-client privilege — a back-handed way of saying it wasn't him. But that hasn't stopped the buzz, the search for a culprit, the deconstruction of a scandal that still has the power to push a war victory onto the capital's back-burner.

The book also continues a long Washington tradition: If victory, as the saying goes, has a hundred fathers, then defeat is surely an orphan. One by one, the bit players in the Clinton-Starr melodrama are scrubbing the tarnish off their own reputations under the cloak of anonymity.

We've seen this play before. As the Bush campaign was petering out in 1992, the anonymous gripes came swiftly. The president who prized loyalty above all suffered the wounds of a thousand cuts delivered by anonymous quotes: If only he had taken my advice, we wouldn't be in this mess. It also happened to Newt Gingrich, whose troops couldn't wait to second-guess his every decision once the popularity ratings plunged.

For Clinton, the worst indignity may have come on Wednesday, when his loyal poodle of a vice president went to Tennessee to announce himself as the "family-values" candidate for president. A clearer distinction could not have been made. Elect Al Gore and you'll never have to worry about your daughters becoming White House interns.

So what's a president to do? Here's the leader of the free world, riding a historic economy and flush with victory in a far-off conflict his critics lampooned as a losing proposition, and he barely has a friend left in Washington. Just deserts, most would say. But what if Mr. Clinton, he of the famously volatile temperament, decided to get even?

Let's assume for a minute that Clinton did not speak to Woodward. It's probably safe, considering Clinton's distrust — make that contempt — for the press. Maybe the leak didn't come from Bennett. We have no reason to doubt his word. But let's pretend that Clinton thinks it came from Bennett. Let's pretend the president decided to sue for breach of lawyer-client confidentiality.

We posed this question to Paul Rice, a law professor at The American University and an expert on attorney-client privilege.

"I don't think he could challenge the legal fees, but he could have a cause of action against him for breach of confidentiality."

It's not an idle notion. When the president leaves office, he and Hillary will owe at least $10 million in legal fees. Figures released in February by his legal defense fund (new numbers are due in August) show that $4.5 million of that has already been defrayed by contributions — but the bills have also grown in that time-frame. It's safe to assume that at least a quarter of that money is going to Bennett.

Don't bet on it happening, however. Because here's the kicker.

"The question is going to be one of proof," says Rice. "And this is like a marital dispute. When you get two people up there, it's a simple question of who seems to be the most believable."

Who do you think wins that battle?

Lotteries bring out the worst in players, pols

WASHINGTON — "Somebody's going to win the lottery," reads an ad from a public-spirited corporation, "Just not you."

Safire

That's right. If any class of gamblers qualifies as super-suckers, it's the pack of dreamers who believe what their state governments tell them about a pot of gold at the end of the numbers rainbow.

Media that benefit from state lottery advertising hype the one winner (not you) in a million. They ignore the bad news of all the others who blow the bread money, or feed their compulsive-gambling habit, on the worst odds of any betting in America.

Ever since the immoralists of New Hampshire introduced a state lottery in 1964, followed quickly by New York in 1966, pusillanimous politicians have been ripping off their constituents with this "painless taxation." Now 37 states are imitating the banana republics.

The profits go to education, the gambling governors claim, as they substitute lottery money for other state education aid in a classic bait-and-switch. It's the only tax increase that conservatives support — from zero to $43 billion in one generation — and is the only regressive tax embraced by liberals.

The bipartisan National Gambling Impact Study Commission has issued its report. At the start, members fought over whether to call gambling "gaming," but in the end, agreement on more important matters was found: 15 million Americans are "problem gamblers." The Internet is hooking teen-agers on games of chance. "Convenience gambling" with video poker terminals everywhere is a training ground for lifelong gambling. (Even the kid in the new "Star Wars" is taught to gamble.)

After a decade of feckless harangues in this column, I have accepted reality: At least half the population enjoys betting. So if you want to feed quarters for hours on end to one-armed bandits in Las Vegas, or go broke on jackpot.com, that's your business.

But when the state becomes croupier, that's everybody's business.

The most telling part of the wake-up call is the criticism of lotteries. They are "the most widespread form of gambling in the United States." State governments have "irresponsibly intruded gambling into society on a massive scale," says the commission report, "through such measures as incessant advertising and the ubiquitous placement of lottery machines in neighborhood stores."

And they're a lousy bet. "Lotteries bring out the worst in politicians," noted Richard Leone, commissioner from New Jersey. "They are heavily and misleadingly advertised; they pay back to bettors the smallest share of the take of any legal game ... yet lotteries have proven to be catnip for elected officials who fear taxation."

Where does any state come off urging its citizens to spend their hard-earned income or welfare checks unwisely? Who is your governor to tell you to ignore your economic self-interest and take a little flyer with him or her? Government is not a game, nor should it be a casino empowered to declare itself a monopoly so it can make a profit by stimulating public avarice.

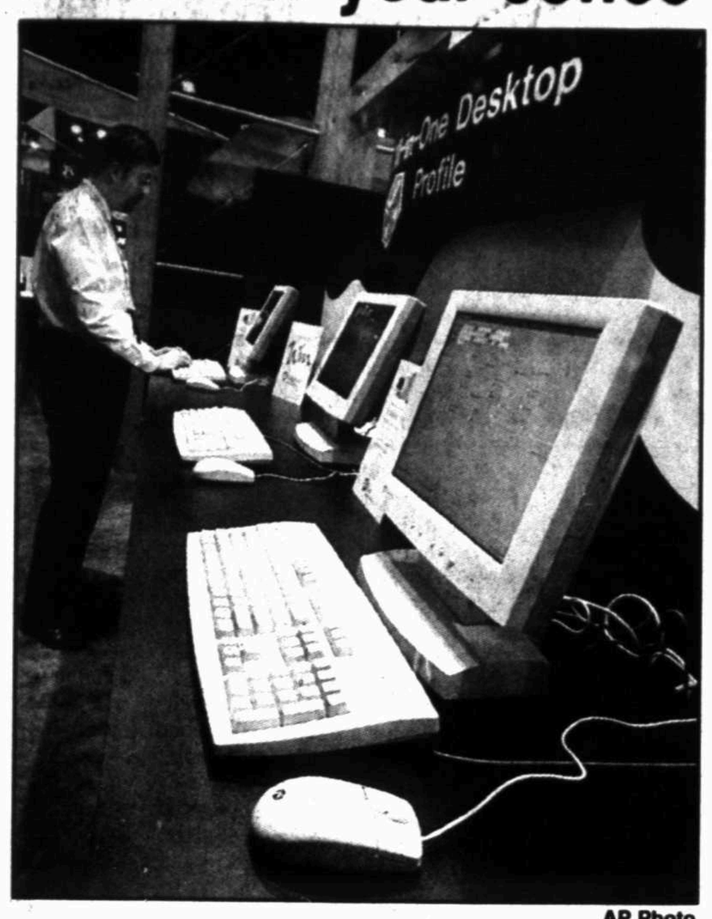
Room for your coffee mug: Personal computers finally get slimmer



AP Photo

A visitor to PC Expo at New York's Javits Convention Center tries one of Gateway's new All-in-One Desktop Profile computers on the opening day of the exhibition Tuesday .

NEW YORK (AP) — The bulky personal computer is going on a diet.

Thanks to ever-shrinking components, manufacturers are introducing thinner machines with flat-panel screens that save desk space for coffee mugs and family photos.

For $2,000, you can now buy a well-equipped PC that takes up one-quarter the usual space.

Your average clunky machine, which costs less than the svelte newcomers, is probably not going away anytime soon.

But the new models, on display Tuesday at the PC Expo trade show here, signal a trend away from the computers that have cramped workspace and depressed office ambiance for nearly two decades.

The unconventional designs, from Sony, Gateway, Packard Bell NEC and others, take their cue from Apple Computer's iMac, which shook up the world of desktops since its launch last summer. Apple's highly popular machine is shaped like a giant jelly bean, equipped with a built-in monitor, and comes in five translucent candy colors through which the inner circuitry is faintly visible.

Unlike the iMac, which starts at $900, the new slim machines cost more than twice as much. The main reason is their space-saving flat-panel screens, which use liquid crystal instead of electron beams to show data and images and cost four times as much as conventional monitors.

Unlike the iMac, which starts at $900, the new slim machines cost more than twice as much.

The main reason is their space-saving flat-panel screens, which use liquid crystal instead of electron beams to show data and images and cost four times as much as conventional monitors.

Gateway's new Profile computer, which starts at $1,999 and is just 3 inches thick, looks like it's missing something from the back. Yet, crammed against the thin monitor is a 400-megahertz AMD microprocessor, 64-megabytes of memory, a 4.3-gigabyte hard drive and sockets for attachments. A comparably equipped Gateway of the bulkier variety costs $1,317.

The Profile is "a nice slim unit. We would recommend it to customers," said salesman Gary Paraschak of the Waytek computer distributor in Voorhees, N.J., who was checking out the PC Expo exhibits. Saving room "is a real big issue because office space is expensive."

A more skeptical Catherine Miller of Cigna Corp., who advises the big insurance company on computer purchases, said employees might have a hard time adjusting to the new screens. "The visibility is just OK," she said.

Sony's new Vaio Slimtop LCD computer also features a sliver of a monitor. But Sony packed its vital circuitry into a separate box the size of a hard-cover dictionary, or about one-third the dimensions of a conventional computer tower.

The Vaio Slimtop, available in lavender-gray, starts at $2,299.

Sony said the Slimtops, announced earlier this year, are aimed at space-conscious buyers such as Wall Street firms, where traders' desks typically are crammed with up to six monitors.

Packard Bell NEC last week rolled out its Z1 desktop, a $2,500 machine that fits its important components into the back of a flat-screen monitor. It also includes a wireless keyboard.

Man sentenced to die in Florida is convicted in California killing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man already sentenced to die in Florida was convicted Tuesday of first-degree murder for strangling a woman in Los Angeles.

The same jury that convicted Glen Rogers was to decide later whether he also should face a death sentence in California or get life in prison without chance of parole.

Rogers, 38, was convicted of killing Sandra Gallagher in September 1995. The 33-year-old mother of three met Rogers in a bar and her body was found later in a burning truck.

Prosecutors claimed that was the first of several killings by Rogers during a month-long, cross-country crime wave in 1995.

In addition to his 1997 Florida conviction in the killing of a woman stabbed in a Tampa motel room, charges against him are pending in Jackson, Miss. Another alleged victim was found in Bossier City, La., but no charges were filed in that case.

An automatic appeal of his Florida death sentence is pending and no execution date has been set.

Scouts overcome vandalism, burglary

By Jennifer Cherry

When misfortune struck the Boy Scout day camp at Reyes-Mashburn-Nelms Park last week, Midlanders fought back with BB guns, bows and arrows and money.

And it was a good thing they did.

Indeed, it had appeared that the next session of day camp would not be able to take place after burglars and vandals struck on June 12, causing thousands of dollars in losses and damage.

But after the situation was reported in the local news media, Midlanders responded.

According to Boy Scout records, $4,922.50 had been donated as of June 22. A local resident donated over $1,000, said Ed Penz, day camp coordinator.

"We had to recreate all craft equipment and paperwork," Penz said.

A team of parent volunteers helped strip everything in the trailer and clean the boxes that had been vandalized. Some Scouts have contributed to the clean-up effort. Several disappointed Boy Scouts helped sort boxes to get ready for this week's day camp, added Pat Young, another coordinator.

One young Scout even donated his personal BB gun to the camp so that others could have the fun that he did at day camp the week before. Over 100 parents volunteered approximately 2,000 hours of service to the two-week camp, Penz said.

The day camp runs on a budget, Penz said, and it did not have money for a contingency plan.

"We didn't plan on the trailer being broken into," Mrs. Young said.

But the camp would have continued no matter, Penz said.

"We would have had day camp, but it wouldn't have been as easy," he said. "We would have gone into the red."

Now with all of the donations, all bows, guns, boxes and other equipment have been replaced, Penz said. There was enough money to have a contingency plan for next year, Penz said.

"It's going to take a little bit of time to get it all," Mrs. Young said.

Most of the other equipment that the Scouts used was donated by local businesses. Fifteen or 20 local

Drought buster

A low pressure system has lingered over the Permian Basin, keeping clouds and wet weather in the forecast.

Rains a blessing for area cotton farmers

If the rains keep on coming, West Texas, particularly the Midland area, may be shooing away the drought of the 1990s.

"The rain, the way it's falling, is going to be a blessing," said Midland farmer-rancher J.D. Crawford.

In particular, the cotton farmland, both irrigated and dryland, is "looking way better" due to the weekend rains, Crawford added.

The rains officially placed the year's rainfall in Midland at 5.66 inches, which is slightly above the 30-year average of 5.51 inches by mid-June, said Ray Fagen, chief meteorologist at the National Weather Service (NWS) at Midland International Airport.

"We're getting a lot more storm systems that come from the eastern Pacific to the southern California coast eastward and track across the Southwest United States to Texas," Fagen said.

Last year's storm systems didn't drift too far south. And that dearth of moisture in 1998 left Midland with 5.14 inches, about a third of the 14.96-inch normal yearly rainfall, and 1998 was the second driest year on record.

Midland's driest year since 1930, when the NWS starting maintaining records here, was 1951 when 4.24 inches fell on the parched land early into the seven-year drought of the 1950s. Rainfall later into that decade totaled 10.15 inches in 1952; 7.45 inches in 1953; 11.98 inches in 1954; 9.77 inches in 1955, and 9.6 inches in 1956. The 1950s "drought buster" came in 1957 and 1958 when 15.58 inches and 20.32 inches, respectively, fell on the prairie.

Midland's annual rainfall, based on a 30-year average, is 14.96 inches. Month-by-month averages in inches of rain are January, 0.4; February, 0.62; March, 0.58; April, 0.83; May, 1.98; June 1.55; July, 1.70; August, 1.69; September, 2.62; October, 1.74; November, 0.69, and December, 0.56.

"It's a blessing," Crawford said of the June rains, which so far in Midland have totaled 2.82 inches. June's normal rainfall is 1.55 inches.

Some of Crawford cotton fields south of town got about two inches of rainfall last weekend.

"The dryland cotton is real late," he said. "It's so late coming up. We'll make a fair crop" if there is a long growing season and if the season's killing

Neighbors band together to give park a facelift

By Matt Josefy

Parents and children may soon be more likely to "park it" at Kiwanis Park.

Currently, Kiwanis Park is plagued by grass burrs, fire ants, old railroad ties, lack of security lighting, and the need for new equipment.

However, thanks to the efforts of the Kiwanis Park Neighborhood Association, the park may soon receive a facelift that will address these problems by eliminating the grass burrs, fire ants, and railroad ties; and adding new retaining walls, security lighting, and modular playground equipment.

The association formed last December and sent out letters to residents who lived within the immediate vicinity of the park.

Kiwanis Club recently contributed $1,000 to top off the fund-raising efforts that totaled more than $8,800. The park is named for the club which contributed to its construction decades ago.

The association presented its funds during Tuesday's City Council meeting. The city is expected to match the funds and carry out the project.

The park at Haynes and Whitney is used frequently for walkers, soccer teams, cheerleaders and other groups, according to Carla Gotcher, head of the association.

Ms. Gotcher said the fund-raising effort went smoothly. "The money came primarily from neighbors, $25 or $50. The nice thing about raising the money is that then we can say this is what we want the park to look like." More than 200 donors contributed in various amounts.

Kiwanis is not the first park to be updated by active citizens. Chuck Swallow, director of Community Services, said about half a dozen neighborhood parks have received similar efforts.

"Anyone could do it if they put together a needs and wants list," Swallow said. "They change the park in a very positive way and bring the neighborhood together where the park can actually be used as a congregating point," he said of past associations.

Bob Hill Park, at Cuthbert and Kansas, was updated and had equipment added, including a walking path and several benches, in the spring of 1995.

Becky Furgeson headed up a $13,000 collection of funds that was matched by the city. "We provided something for everybody — children and young families and the walking paths for older citizens," she observed.

She said that it was "a way for the neighborhood to take the park back from kids who would gather for other purposes" in the area.

After the improvements were made, the park came into frequent use by families and walkers, Ms. Furgeson said.

Her association was formed on the heels of the group that remodeled Faskin Park, off of Humble and Garfield.

Julie Stevens recalls her work as chairman of the Faskin Park Committee in the summer of 1993. They too relied on a

Tejano star Michael Salgado to play Midland club

By Richard Acosta
Staff Writer

A Midland nightclub will be echoing with the sounds of one of the superstars of Tejano music Friday night.

Michael Salgado will be featured at the Class Act Club, 101 N. Mineola St., Friday night following an open-to-the-public autograph party at Planeta Acapulco in Odessa from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

A native of Stanton, Salgado said the Permian Basin remains special.

"It's great to go to that area," Salgado said. "We got our start in some clubs in Rankin about 12 years ago. It's nice to get to come back to our old stomping grounds. The people from the Permian Basin area know the background of Mike Salgado and that's what makes going there so special. A lot of groups go out that way to pay their dues."

Salgado said he had been singing from the time he was seven with his father, who was one of his childhood inspirations.

"My dad had a little group when I was growing up," Salgado said. "He would always have his guitar with him. We would get together with family and he would play and I would sing and it started from there."

Salgado's popularity is riding high in the ranks of Tejano music. Susan Rayos, with the Class Act Club, said this is Salgado's third trip to the club. She said every time Salgado comes to Midland he draws in the crowds to the point were people don't have a place to sit down. However, Salgado said when he was playing the clubs in Rankin he never thought he would be where he is today.

"All this was just a dream," he said. "We used to keep telling ourselves, 'maybe next week.' It has been 12 years of hard work and sacrifice to get where we are today."

Salgado's current CD, Puro Pueble (Sony Discos), has surpassed the 100,000 sales mark, and he has a new CD coming in the near future. The new CD will feature a variety of music.

"We had some singles do really well off the Puro Pueblo CD," Salgado said. "Mi Chatita, Volare Volare and Te Fuiste helped make the CD a success. We have a new one coming out around the end of July or the first of August. We don't have a name for the CD yet and it is still in the mixing stages.

"The new CD will have ballads, corrido and lots of cumbias and two mariachi songs. I've never recorded mariachi songs before. I've sung them in my live shows, but this will be the first time I have cut a mariachi song on a CD. Right now we're trying to do what the people like, but also what we feel is good."

Salgado is set to take the stage at 9:30 p.m. Doors will open at 7 p.m.

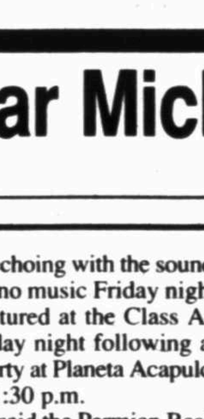
Teen spends the summer as human target for oversexed beer guzzlers

If you thought you had a bad summer job, please read this.

A few days ago, I encountered an inspirational figure who's changed my life. Now, I turn to this person when I need to pull myself out of an emotional rut.



López

She's not a successful software magnate or a spiritual healer. She's one of those misery-plagued teen-agers you see standing in the sun wearing a sandwich board that promotes some cheap pizza deal.

Penny and I met at a gas station as we both filled our 48-ounce foam cups with poorly-carbonated soda.

"Is it me, or does this stuff always taste gnarly?" she asked. The beverage, she said, was bitter, flat and almost impossible to swallow. Nonetheless, it was only 49 cents and seemed to quench the sunburned teen's thirst.

Penny spent her lunch break milling around the air-conditioned store in hopes that her sweaty T-shirt would eventually dry. She refused to go back to work and be forced to spend her precious free time with the boss she refers to as "Little Nero."

I struck up a conversation with her, because I know how hideous it feels to be 16 and hungry for spending money.

It seems that Penny started the sandwich board gig a week ago. A friend of a friend of her mom's co-worker told her about the opening, which of course, pays minimum wage. She said it seemed like a good idea at first; especially because she doesn't have the patience to deal with customers.

Little did she know that she'd be spending most of the day being pelted with litter, heckled by oversexed beer guzzlers and tortured by Mother Nature's painful elements.

Tell me if that doesn't make your worst teen-age job look glamorous. It almost makes me regret whining about my stint at The Go Round: a glossier version of The Gap that went bankrupt in the early-90s.

The job was also a minimum-wager — only the evil store policy required all workers to wear clothes exclusively available there. Even with the hefty discount, I was working for $15 a week; that is, after I made the required purchases that would keep me employed.

Mall jobs came with their own, unofficial protocol. Go Round workers were not to associate with the classier, debonair Banana Republic crew. But we could snub our rivals at the subordinate store, Chess King. All clothiers — regardless of their rank — were to avoid the food court mob unless they gave you free french fries. And everyone wanted to be friends with the movie theater employees, who would let their pals sneak in for free.

But Penny's job will never give her the luxury of having frothy conversations with retail folks. She won't make petty complaints about stocking shelves in a climate-controlled room. And her job causes more stress than taking someone's measurements.

Her job requires a high tolerance for weirdos who pull up to the curb and bombard her with catcalls. She'll have to spend hours washing out the litter that dusty winds weave into her hair. Each night, one of her siblings will have to smear Noxzema over her crackling shoulders.

And she'll have to tolerate that awful soda from the store across the street.

Rick López is a staff writer for the Reporter-Telegram and thinks he has a much better job now. E-mail him at lopez@mrt.com.

neighborhood mail-out in addition to city funds. The Midland Rotary Club also contributed $5,000 over a two-year period. The overall project cost was $20,000.

Ms. Stevens said the city was cooperative, with Stewart Gerhart constantly being available to assist their efforts.

Their work was preceded by a petition. In a time period of only six weeks, they raised the money that was utilized to add sidewalks, plant trees, and eliminate dugouts that remained from an old baseball park.

Ms. Stevens added "it was kind of inspiring to do it. The neighborhood commitment to this area created a sense of cohesiveness. Now I still have people tell me how wonderful the park is, and before it was an eyesore."

"It was worth it to me, because with three children, we spent a lot of time at the park," she continues.

People from all over town came when the work was first completed, but as other neighborhoods follow suit, the predominant users come from the surrounding neighborhood, with the exceptions of birthdays and church picnics.

SCOUTS: New site allows boys to earn community service hours businesses donate to the camp on an on-going basis, Penz said. Fishing rods that were stolen or destroyed were on a loan program from a local company, Penz said. He is not sure if the Boy Scouts will be responsible for the damage or not.

Currently, a small U-haul truck is being used to store the day camp materials. Mrs. Young said she now drives the U-haul to her home each evening, to ensure the equipment's safety.

This was the first year for Reyes-Mashburn-Nelms Park to be used as a campsite, Penz said. In the past, it was at Hogan Park, but because Reyes-Mashburn-Nelms Park had better access for the handicapped, Mrs. Young said, the camp was moved. Usually someone donated a horse trailer for the campers to use and it was never broken into, Mrs. Young said.

When boys would leave their boxes out in the open, things would get taken from the boxes or the boxes would get stolen, Mrs. Young said, but those were the only instances similar to the recent vandalism.

The new campsite allows older Boy Scouts to earn community service hours and badges by helping younger Scouts. Scouts learn to handle a BB gun, shoot a bow and arrow and the nearby Midland draw provides the perfect setting for a nature trail, where with all of the rain, Scouts have been able to collect frogs, Penz said.

Despite the fact the vandals have not been identified, Penz looked around the green park full of Cub Scouts, Bear Scouts, and Boy Scouts, and said, "I never saw anything that would make me not want to have a day camp here."

Police find woman's body in deodorizer-filled room

EASTLAND (AP) — Police investigating reports that a man had fired shots near children entered his home to find the decomposing body of an elderly woman in a room filled with deodorizers.

The body was believed to be that of the man's mother, 84-year-old Lorene Davidson Vaughn, who lived with her son. She apparently had been dead for about two months.

Police chief Cecil Funderburgh said James William Vaughn, 52, told officers his mother died of natural causes on May 1. He was arrested on unrelated charges and remained in the county jail Monday under $100,000 bond.

Ms. Vaughn's body was sent to the Tarrant County medical examiner's office for positive identification and to determine cause and approximate time of death, the Abilene Reporter-News reported Tuesday.

Funderburgh said officer Gene Russell went to the Vaughn home about 10:15 p.m. Sunday to investigate a complaint of a gun being fired near some children playing. After questioning James Vaughn, Russell arrested him on suspicion of deadly conduct.

OBITUARIES

Monta Johnson

Monta Jo Glass Johnson, 69, passed away on Monday, June 21, 1999. Monta Jo is survived by her husband, Ted C. Johnson; her son, Bert Glass Johnson and his wife, Anne; her daughter, Karen Scharbauer, and her husband, Douglas. Also surviving are her grandchildren, Holt Johnson, Katherine Johnson, Douglas Scharbauer, Jr., Sarah Scharbauer, Daniel Scharbauer, and numerous nieces and nephews. Mrs. Johnson was preceded in death by her pioneer ranching parents, George W. and Mabel Holt Glass and her brother, George Holt Glass. Her maternal grandparents were pioneer Midlanders, Mr. and Mrs. O.B. Holt, Sr.

Mrs. Johnson was born on June 26, 1929 at their home at 911 West Texas, the current home of Hospice of Midland. Monta Jo was educated in the Midland Public Schools, having graduated from Midland High School with the Class of 1946. She graduated from Sullins College in Bristol, Virginia and attended the University of Texas. She attended Camp Waldemar at Hunt, Texas and was voted the Best All Around Camper of the Comanche Tribe. Monta Jo's life was centered around her family and her five adored grandchildren and was known by each to be a friend and confidant as well as a loving teacher. She looked forward to and attended all of their activities. They will sorely miss her. Monta Jo was deeply loved by all who knew her. She was actively involved in management of the family ranches in Martin and Crockett Counties. She and Ted enjoyed traveling in their RV over the past several years with Midland friends. She was a lifelong active member and dearly loved the First United Methodist Church. Monta Jo enjoyed and sang in the Chancel Choir for over 60 years. She was a charter member of the church's handbell choir. Along with two cherished friends, they formed the "Texas Ding-a-Lings", a handbell and piano trio that traveled together and played for numerous groups throughout the United States. Monta Jo, her brother and her father donated the Mabel Holt Glass Memorial Chapel at the First United Methodist Church in 1974.

Monta Jo served on the Board of Hospice of Midland. She had supported Hospice since its beginnings and upon the death of her father offered the home for office space that was quickly outgrown. In 1997 she donated her birthplace home to the organization so they might embark on an expansion project. She served as Treasurer of the Junior League of Midland, was a member of The Midland Woman's Club, the Lt. William Brewer Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and the "Friendly Wednesday Poker Club". She was an avid follower of the Midland College Men's and Women's Basketball Program.

RAIN: Land is 'looking good' in Midkiff, Saint Lawrence

frost falls well into November and not earlier. "Most of it is just coming up," he said of the late-planted dryland cotton.

The rains "really have been a boost to irrigated cotton."

And the rangeland is "looking up" thanks to the rains.

Noting that it has "been so dry so long," Crawford suggested that there are signs that the drought may be "over with now with this kind of rainfall" as long as the rains keep coming in a timely manner.

Cotton farmer Bobby Smith said that his 150-acre place about 10 miles south of Midland took in four inches of rain over the weekend and about 5.5 inches for the year.

"It's looking pretty good right now," he said, although the downpour "washed out" part of his farmland. "You know, you get some good with the bad, or bad with the good. That's part of the breaks. There's not a whole lot we can do about that."

Meanwhile, "We'll have to have some more (rain)" on dryland to make a good harvest this fall.

The spring and summer rains are probably the best Midland-area rainfall in about five years, Smith said.

His widowed mother, Sally Smith, who moved to Midland in 1927, said that last year's severe drought "was the first year she had not seen feed (grain, hay) made in this country" on dryland, Smith said.

Across the Midland area, Smith said, the weekend rainfall totaled "anywhere from an inch to five inches, depending on what part of the county you are in."

In the Midkiff-Saint Lawrence area, the farmland is "looking good," said Linda Reeh, who farms in the Saint Lawrence area.

Weekend rains left Midkiff with about an inch of rain, but the parts of Saint Lawrence got up to 5.5 inches.

"At least we are optimistic about it now, more optimistic than we have been in a long time," Ms. Reeh said. However, some of the early-planted cotton sprouted following a shower but wilted when subsequent rains came too late.

Cotton in the Saint Lawrence area is "looking good," she said. "We don't have the (ground) water we used to have. I had dryland this year, too, with some irrigated. It's looking good. I had three inches at my place" at Saint Lawrence over the weekend.

Midkiff rancher T.O. Midkiff said that the rangeland is "perking up," particularly the weeds. "The old grass is dead. Some of it is going to have to come back from seed, I'm afraid."

Selena documentary pulled from festival

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A controversial documentary on slain Tejano singer Selena wasn't seen at an independent film festival after the movie was pulled just before its featured showing.

Filmmaker Lourdes Portillo told the San Antonio Express-News in a telephone interview from San Francisco that the documentary is "not ready. I'm not thinking of cutting big chunks of things. I'm thinking of doing very marginal things."

One scene in "Corpus: A Home Movie for Selena" features a drag queen imitator padding his bottom before a performance.

The grand finale film of CineFestival, a 22-year-old Chicano fest at the Guadalupe Cultural Arts Center, did not screen the documentary on closing night Sunday at the Guadalupe Theater. Portillo pulled it Friday.

However, Portillo denied receiving pressure from the slain singer's father, Abraham Quintanilla, or anyone else to change the film.

One scene in "Corpus: A Home Movie for Selena" features a drag queen imitator padding his bottom before a performance.

In April, "Corpus" was well-received at the Other America Film Festival at the Esperanza Center.

"This is crazy. This is like the worst thing that could happen. I think it says Lourdes made this film and someone is upset about it," said Ray Santisteban, who organized the film festival for the Guadalupe Cultural Arts Center. "It's unfortunate. This is a great film and I really wanted to show it."

He said he would screen short films instead.

On July 13, PBS is scheduled to air "Corpus: A Home Movie for Selena," as part of the network's Point of View series. Portillo says changes to the documentary will be ready by that date.

In 1995, Selena Quintanilla-Perez was shot and killed by the former president of her fan club.

Jones: Only '5 or 6' of 88 Cisneros tapes were altered

By Michelle Middlestadt
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Only "five or six" of the 88 audiotapes that are at the heart of the government's conspiracy case against former Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros were altered, the woman who surreptitiously recorded her phone conversations with Cisneros testified Tuesday.

The government's special prosecutors, who want to use some of the tapes at Cisneros' September conspiracy trial, summoned his ex-lover to the stand to explain why she edited out certain passages and later lied to FBI and IRS investigators about the tapes' authenticity.

The explanation of Linda Jones' actions came as the Cisneros legal team prepared to launch an assault on the tapes' admissibility, which are central to the government's contention that Cisneros conspired with Ms. Jones to conceal from the FBI the scope of his "hush money" payments to her.

Taking the stand for a second day, Ms. Jones said she edited the tapes to delete passages in which she threatened Cisneros with retribution if he stopped the payments he had begun after publicity over their extramarital affair cost her marriage and livelihood as a political fund raiser.

She repeatedly threatened to reveal the payments to the media, the Clinton transition team that was vetting the former San Antonio mayor for a Cabinet post, or others.

The editing, performed on a boom box, was done on the advice of lawyers who warned her the threats could prove legally troublesome, she testified.

"The truth was, it was threats that could be termed as extortion," Ms. Jones, who formerly went by her married name Medlar, said Tuesday. "I knew that I could get into a lot of trouble."

After editing out the unwanted content on a handful of tapes and copying all of the originals to ensure similar sound quality, Ms. Jones said she destroyed the originals.

Cisneros' legal team contends the copied tapes are inadmissible on two grounds: Because they are "tampered, inauthentic" evidence and because Ms. Jones had an illegal intent in making them.

A ruling by U.S. District Judge Stanley Sporkin could come later this week as he deals with the tapes and what he has termed a "blizzard" of remaining motions filed by both sides.

The defense began chipping away at Ms. Jones' credibility Tuesday, with lawyer Brendan Sullivan eliciting her acknowledgment that she had lied on several key occasions related to the affair and had a faulty memory of whether she was paid in cash or by check in one instance.

Sullivan peppered Ms. Jones with questions, asking whether she and her lawyers stoked media attention over the tapes in 1994, after an appearance on a syndicated TV tabloid show, as a way of stimulating lucrative book or movie deals. "You knew, of course, that Henry would be deeply hurt by release of surreptitiously recorded tapes," he said.

Cisneros, who served as HUD secretary from 1993 to 1996, was indicted in December 1997 on 18 felony counts of conspiracy, obstructing justice and making false statements to the FBI. He has pleaded innocent.

Although Cisneros acknowledged providing financial support, prosecutors contend he falsely told the FBI during his Cabinet background check that he never paid her more than $2,500 at one time or more than $10,000 annually.

The indictment alleges that he paid her more than $264,000 between 1990 and 1993, in installments as high as $15,000.

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll have: 5-Dymanic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Wednesday, June 23, 1999:
You'll have to work past some interference from partners, especially where money is concerned. You might wonder why financial agreements have become so difficult. Perhaps you aren't seeing the other party clearly or are having trouble receiving his message. Take charge; you can do it best on your own. Your creativity is very high, although sometimes your wit could become sarcastic. If you are single, romance makes your life go around. Cupid's arrow can strike any time after June 28. If attached, your relationship may need work from time to time; be willing to do it. You will bond on a deeper level. SCORPIO makes your life sizzle!

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★ The best-laid plans go awry when you least expect it. Events give you a strong insight into your personality. Do you laugh? Go with the flow? Tantrum? No one, not even you, sees the whole picture right now! Others feel as you do, and quite strongly. Find your best friend. Tonight: Passions run high!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ You can meet today's challenges. Still, a work-related matter knocks your socks off. Expectations fail to materialize. Lose any hopes for stability, professionally. Everyone wants his say; why bother to make sense of it all? Tonight: Dance away frustration!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ The work ethic can get boring, but keeping your nose to the grindstone is the only safe way to go. Be careful as pressure builds. You might say something you'll regret. Loosen up, worry less about details. Go for a walk, if need be. Tonight: Find a stress-buster.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Allow your imagination to take over, but be careful about financial commitment or risk. A major money backfire could result. Better safe than sorry! Confusion affects your perception of another and his skills. Observe more and say less right now. Tonight: Transform anxiety into wildness!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ Rigidity won't work. Be easy-going. Whenever you insist that something should happen a certain way, you are setting yourself up for uproar. Partners have continually been unpredictable and testy. You might think news will be different; perhaps you see another through rose-colored glasses. Tonight: Home, quickly!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Communication counts, as others get distracted. Maintain a perspective. You could be making more out of a passing phase than necessary. Laughter and lightness can mark present confusion, unless you opt for sarcasm and frustration. It's your call. Tonight: Swap war stories over dinner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★ Play Scrooge for a day. Hide your checkbook (even from yourself) before disaster hits. You could easily be tempted to overspend. Waiting several days won't hurt you. Understand what is motivating others and why they want you to take risks. Tonight: Inexpensive fun.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ Profound confusion alternates with flashes of awareness in your daily life. Despite this, you hold up. Home life takes another turn; recognize how little is under your control. Your strength and personality break through barriers. Count on yourself. Tonight: Beam in what you want.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★ Sometimes you need to take a back seat; right now, be smart and do just that. When the unexpected occurs, buck it by simply not playing into events. You could be stunned, but responding won't benefit you. More is yet to be revealed. Buckle your seat belt! You won't be bored. Tonight: Why not indulge?

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Aim for goals, but stay in touch with financial limitations. Sometimes knowing when to say no is very important. Establish boundaries — not only for others, but for yourself, too. Tempers flare; you could have a problem with associates. Tonight: Where your friends are.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★ Though you might be reactive, consider that others are responding to your sometimes volatile energy. You are an enigma to many. Pressure builds with co-workers; a change in thinking or in plans could be most appropriate. Others look to you for answers. Assume responsibilities. Tonight: Working late.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Establishing limits proves to be instrumental in making the right decision. Sometimes, others simply don't understand where you are coming from. No surprise! You often aren't sure yourself. A grumpy associate is difficult; opt to distance yourself. Tonight: Go to the movies.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1NT	2♣	3♣	Pass
3♠	Pass	4♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣

Looking only at the North-South cards, it might seem that four spades would be a simple contract to fulfill. But it was defeated one trick, and South could do nothing to counter West's excellent defense.

West might have been better off to pre-empt with a jump to three clubs, but it is unlikely that would have affected the result. North's three-club cue-bid asked for a major suit and, by agreement, South bid the higher-ranking first. North had an easy raise to game.

West led the king of clubs, and when dummy came down the defender could account for 39 points around the table since North-South's no-trump range was 15-17. That meant that, at best, East could hold a jack. The only hope, therefore, was to promote the 10 of trumps to the setting trick.

Everyone followed to the first two rounds of clubs and, since a ruff-and-sluff could not possibly benefit declarer, West continued with a low club at trick three. East ruffed with the six and declarer overruffed with the jack and led the king of spades. West shot up with the ace and continued with a fourth club! This time East ruffed with the nine, forcing declarer to overruff with the queen, and the 10 of trumps became the setting trick.

Mission accomplished.

Jagger, Hall kiss after movie premiere

Arriving separately at a party after the showing of "Rogue Trader," Jerry Hall gave Mick Jagger a kiss on the cheek.

LONDON — Mick Jagger and Jerry Hall, whose pending divorce could prove ugly, kissed Monday night after a celebrity-studded movie premiere.

Arriving separately at a party after the showing of "Rogue Trader," Ms. Hall gave Jagger a kiss on the cheek and the couple exchanged a few words while smiling.

They separated earlier this year after newspapers reported claims by Brazilian model Luciana Giminez Morad that she was carrying Jagger's child. Jagger maintains he and Ms. Hall were never legally married.

The movie tells the story of jailed financial trader Nick Leeson, whose dealings brought down the oldest bank in Britain.

OMAHA, Neb. — Rodney Grant, who appeared in "Dances With Wolves," was put on probation for five years and ordered to perform 300 hours of community service for failing to pay child support.

Grant, 40, was the first person indicted in Nebraska under a new federal child support law. In a plea bargain, Grant repaid about $17,000 in back support for his three children in Lincoln.

In addition, he was ordered to pay $225 a month in support. He was sentenced on Monday.

The Nebraska native played the warrior Wind in His Hair in the 1990 film.

VENICE, Italy — "Eyes Wide Shut" will open the Venice Film Festival on Sept. 1 in its first European screening.

The stars, Tom Cruise and Nicole Kidman, and director Stanley Kubrik's widow will attend the event, the festival said Tuesday.

Kubrick died in March after finishing the movie. The tale of jealousy and sexual obsession is set to open July 16 in the United States.

The European premiere will serve as "a graceful tribute to one of the great masters in the history of cinema," festival director Alberto Barbera said.

OMAHA, Neb. — Ted Turner, bison guy, has bought another large ranch.

The media mogul paid $6.8 million earlier this month for 34,186 acres of bison grazing land straddling the Nebraska-South Dakota line, said Russ Miller, who manages Turner's ranches.

Miller said Turner admires the "good grass, good water and good people" of the Sandhills.

"All we're doing is confirming what we said when we first bought land there: This is good country," Miller said.

Overall, the CNN founder owns about 1.6 million acres of ranchland, mostly in New Mexico and Montana. He also owns one of the largest commercials bison herds in the nation — about 17,000 head.

LOS ANGELES — Jim Carrey, Don Knotts, Roberta Flack and Sting will get spots on the Hollywood Walk of Fame next year.

They and 15 other stars were picked from hundreds of nominations, said Johnny Grant, Hollywood's honorary mayor.

The others include the rock groups Kiss and Aerosmith, Siegfried & Roy, Jodie Foster, Peter O'Toole, Rob Reiner, director Irwin Winkler, Ted Danson and Kevin Spacey.

Jim Carrey is one of 19 stars who will get his spot on the Hollywood Walk of Fame next year.

The board of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce approved the list June 10. Sponsors pay $15,000 and, with the exception of posthumous stars, promise that the celebrity will appear for the curbside ceremony.

Bush attacks Gore as a 'Washington, D.C. person'

By Dan Freedman
Hearst News Service

RICHMOND, Va.— Texas Gov. George W. Bush, the leading Republican presidential candidate, took aim at Vice President Al Gore Tuesday, saying the leading Democratic contender "thinks Washington has all the answers. I don't."

Campaigning here in this reliably Republican state, Bush also sought to strike a contrast between himself and President Clinton.

Without mentioning the Monica Lewinsky sex scandal that nearly cost Clinton his presidency, Bush told some 300 wealthy GOP contributors at a lunch that if he becomes president, he will "swear to uphold the dignity of the office to which I have been elected."

He collected $300,000 at the luncheon and planned to be the featured guest at a blue-chip Republican gathering in Washington Tuesday night. Karen Hughes, Bush's press secretary, said the Washington gathering would yield $1.5 million in contributions.

Leading the Republican field in fundraising and in the polls, Bush started the day by attending a story-telling session at a library in the predominantly black East End section of this city.

Virginia has supported Republican presidential candidates in every election since 1964 when voters here sided with Democrat Lyndon Johnson in his landslide victory over Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz. Virginia also has moved up its primary date to Feb. 29, 2000, making it an important state in the Bush campaign strategy to sew up the nomination early.

Bush's wife Laura, who has worked as a librarian, read to a day-care group of 23 children ages three to five, as did Roxanne Gilmore, wife of Virginia's Republican governor, James Gilmore. Bush did not read but he presented a children's book, "Hank, the Cowdog," to the library as a gift.

After the library appearance Bush was asked about Gore. "He's a Washington, D.C., person," Bush told reporters. "He thinks Washington has got all the answers. I don't."

'My job as president, should I be fortunate enough to win, is to elevate our spirit, so that America continues to perform the common-day miracles of life.'

— Gov. Bush

As the presidential race unfolds, he added, voters will notice "a huge difference between (Gore) and me."

In his own campaign tour last week, Gore fired a potshot at Bush by saying he would continue economic prosperity "the right way, not by letting people fend for themselves or hoping for crumbs of compassion."

Asked about the implied criticism, Bush, who calls himself a "compassionate conservative," responded that "there are no such things as crumbs of compassion as far as I'm concerned. There are people who show compassion for a neighbor. That act ought to be lauded. That act ought to be praised."

He insisted that laws and government are not the key to improving peoples' lives. "Societies change when neighbor helps neighbor, when a person in need gets a helping hand. I don't view that as crumbs. I view that as the greatness of America, the soul of America. ... My job as president, should I be fortunate enough to win, is to elevate our spirit, so that America continues to perform the common-day miracles of life."

He cited the East End library employees as an example of "the armies of compassion staffed by people who care as to whether or not children in this neighborhood learn how to read."

Bush also argued that injecting a higher level of morality into the American culture has been a theme of his since his first race for governor in 1994. "This isn't something I just discovered."

Outside the library, several young Democrats held aloft protest signs saying "Robertson + Falwell Bush" (a reference to christian conservatives Pat Robertson and Jerry Falwell) and "Bush — conservative, not compassionate."

Craig Bieber, executive director of the Virginia Democratic Party, who was standing nearby, said of Bush, "I'm not sure really what he is or what he stands for. All we have to go on are these feel-good slogans and these photo opportunities."

But Rosa Whiting, an East End resident who attended the reading with her 10-year-old daughter Tara, said Bush had impressed her. "I enjoyed everything he had to say," she said, adding that she planned to him if he wins the Republican nomination.

Presbyterians seek to diversify membership

FORT WORTH (AP) — Plenty of hot topics are on the agenda at this week's Presbyterian national assembly, including whether to ordain gays and lesbians as ministers.

But church leaders are pausing from the debate to take a long look in the mirror.

It seems the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) doesn't like the way it looks. Ninety-three percent of its 2.6 million members are white, and the push to diversify is gaining momentum.

"It's imperative for the church to reach out to all people because that is our biblical mandate," said Rev. Curtis Kearns, director of national ministries for the church. "We should not be doing that simply to bring more people of color into the church, but because that is what we are supposed to be doing."

Efforts are underway to do just that.

The church has spent much of the past two years finding ways to draw members of varied backgrounds. The Church Growth Strategy Team has completed a two-year study and compiled a report on where the church should concentrate its efforts.

Additionally, the Committee on Evangelism and Church Development has made several recommendations based on that report. Among them is a proposal to reach out to immigrant communities where many residents were practicing Presbyterians in their homelands.

Church leaders have set high goals. They hope to increase ethnic membership to 10 percent by 2005 and to 20 percent by 2010.

A $200 million blueprint also is in the works to create 1,000 new churches over the next decade, a most of which would have multiracial congregations.

Energy secretary admits security not perfect, fights restructuring department

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary Bill Richardson conceded on Tuesday that "more needs to be done" to protect U.S. nuclear secrets, and Republican senators pushed anew to overhaul security at the nation's weapons labs.

Appearing with Richardson on Capitol Hill, the head of an intelligence advisory group that issued a critical report on nuclear security said that unclassified computer systems at weapons labs continue to be accessible from the outside.

Asked whether nuclear secrecy was assured, Warren Rudman, chairman of the president's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, said, "I don't think it's safe now. I don't think the secretary does."

Rudman and Richardson spoke at a House Commerce Committee hearing. At a joint hearing of four Senate committees earlier in the day, they sparred over restructuring the Energy Department.

Richardson said that a "firewall" had been established to prevent people from accessing computer systems at the weapons labs except for the labs' widely accessible web sites.

"I don't take any confidence in that statement," said Rudman. "These firewalls are penetrated all the time."

Richardson conceded: "The firewalls have been set up. Are they perfect? No."

But he emphasized that this applies to unclassified computer systems used by scientists at the labs. A separate classified computer network contains the top-secret weapons data and additional measures have been taken in recent months to safeguard against transfers between the two systems, he said.

Last March, investigators at the Los Alamos weapons lab near Santa Fe, N.M. discovered that a scientist, who had been under suspicion of possible espionage, had transfers thousands of files of top-secret material from the classified system to his personal office computer in the mid 1990s. It has never been determined whether any of that information left the lab.

Meanwhile, momentum was growing in the Senate for a radical restructuring of the Energy Department that would insulate its nuclear weapons programs under a largely autonomous agency.

Sen. Richard Shelby, R-Ala., said the nuclear weapons program "needs to be rescued" from the vast bureaucracy of the Energy Department to ensure nuclear secrets are safe.

Richardson disagreed and said it would be a mistake to create "a bureaucratic Berlin wall" that would weaken future energy secretaries and — in his view — reduce security instead of strengthening it.

Nevertheless, Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, said a proposal to create a nuclear security agency within the department likely would be offered on the Senate floor this week. Some Democrats predicted privately that it had a good chance of passing.

Prospects in the House are less certain.

Rep. Richard Bliley, R-Va., chairman of the Commerce Committee, and Rep. John Dingell of Michigan, the panel's ranking Democrat, expressed concern that such an agency would weaken attempts to ensure health and safety and other oversight of the weapons labs and the department's other weapons programs.

It's a concern Richardson also raised repeatedly in testimony before both the Senate and House panels. "Fencing off the weapons complex I don't believe is the answer," Richardson argued.

He said he accepted 90 percent of the Rudman panel's recommendations and would support some reshuffling of nuclear programs under a new undersecretary of energy, giving the program increased importance. "More needs to be done," he said. But Richardson said that creating a new, powerful nuclear agency within the department was abhorrent to him.

But supporters of an Energy Department overhaul pointed to the Rudman panel's key recommendation after its 90-day review of nuclear weapons security — a review ordered by President Clinton. It called for creation of a semiautonomous agency to control weapons programs.

Rudman said the Energy Department "is badly broken" and warned against taking "half measures" that the bureaucracy could ignore under a less-aggressive energy secretary. An insulated agency for weapons programs is essential, Rudman insisted. "We don't think anything else will work," he said.

Some restructuring appeared to be increasingly inevitable as both Republicans and Democrats in Congress searched for answers to concern about the loss of nuclear secrets because of 20 years of inadequate attention to security and counterespionage at the weapons labs.

Scientific panel recommends new non-animal chemical test with synthetic skin

WASHINGTON (AP) — Good news for bunnies.

A federal advisory panel has recommended the use of a new, non-animal test to determine whether chemicals will burn the skin. The test could save lots of laboratory animals from potentially painful exposure to chemicals.

"The panel recommended starting with this test and, if it's positive, you could classify a chemical as a corrosive without having to use an animal," Dr. William Stokes of the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences said Tuesday.

If the test, known as Corrositex, shows that the chemical is not corrosive, it would then be tested on animals to see if it is irritating, he said. "But at least you would not have the severe corrosive lesion with the animal," Stokes noted.

"We are, of course, pleased with any advances in this regard," said Dr. Andrew Rowan of the Humane Society of the United States.

Rowan said he is not sure anybody knows how many animals, often rabbits, are used in these tests.

Corrositex is designed to identify chemicals such as acids that can badly burn the skin. Corrosive chemicals may be restricted from certain uses and have to carry warning labels when they are shipped.

The recommendation by the experts convened by the National Institutes of Heath branch now goes to regulatory agencies that determine how chemicals must be tested before use, including the Environmental Protection Agency, Occupational Safety and Health Administration, Consumer Product Safety Commission and transportation agencies.

The test could be used on many of the 2,000 or so new chemicals introduced each year for industrial processes and such consumer products as toilet bowl cleaners and drain openers.

While there has been widespread debate over animal testing of chemicals used in cosmetics, Rowan said the type of corrosive materials that Corrositex would test would not be used in cosmetics.

These are "generally chemicals that are fairly nasty and fairly obviously nasty. You want to determine levels of nastiness," Rowan said.

Some testing for irritants is done on human volunteers, but the animal testing is done first to see if the chemical burns the skin, Stokes explained.

"Corrosive lesions destroy the skin ... so it's not ethical to go to human volunteers until you're sure it's not corrosive," he said.

In Corrositex, a chemical being tested is placed on a type of artificial skin made of collagen, a strong protein found in the skin, tendons and bone. Beneath that layer is a liquid that changes color if it comes into contact with the chemical being tested. The corrosiveness of the chemical is determined by how quickly it penetrates the artificial skin.

A second type of test, now undergoing testing, uses skin grown from human skin cells in culture, Stokes added.

Study: Exposure to lead may hasten tooth decay

CHICAGO (AP) — Exposure to lead, which is known to cause mental problems and paralysis, may also contribute to cavities.

"It kind of changes the way we think about tooth decay," said Dr. Mark Moss, a dentistry professor at the University of Rochester School of Medicine and Dentistry and author of a study in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association.

The finding may explain why poor children are more likely to have tooth decay — older, run-down homes often have peeling lead paint.

"Right now we're in the 'blame the victim' mode, as if people are bad parents if they don't take care of their children's teeth," Moss said. "But this shows there may be other factors."

Moss and his colleagues studied data from health exams and blood tests on 24,901 patients who participated in a government health survey. The information was from 1988 to 1994 and focused on children 5 to 17.

The researchers adjusted statistically for such things as income, diet and frequency of dental visits.

When the children were divided into three groups according to their lead exposure — high, medium and low — the researchers found that nearly 14 percent of tooth decay in children in the highest-level group and 10 percent in the medium-level group could be attributed to lead.

Dr. Jim Crall, who heads the University of Connecticut's pediatric dentistry department, called the findings interesting but far from definitive.

"What I draw from the article is that this is, in fact, one more reason to try to minimize lead exposure in children," Crall said.

Officials at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimate that 57 million private homes in the United States have at least some lead paint, and paint chips are a common source of lead exposure.

Moss said the next step is to understand just how lead might promote tooth decay, something his research did not examine. It is possible, he said, that lead affects salivary gland development.

In a 1997 study that found that baby rats exposed to lead had more tooth decay, the rats had lower production of saliva, which helps clean the teeth.

Study: Minorities, drug users less likely to get crucial AIDS treatments

WASHINGTON (AP) — Revolutionary AIDS drugs that have prolonged life for thousands of people are less likely to reach an entire class of victims — those who contracted the virus through drug use, the first national study of AIDS treatment found.

Blacks, Latinos, people with Medicaid and those without health insurance were all less likely to get the new drugs and other important health care — particularly in early 1996, when the study began.

Two years later, the gap had narrowed for some groups — notably Latinos and blacks. But it persisted for many others, including women, who are most likely to get HIV through sex with a drug user and were also less likely to be in treatment.

"It's very clear there is a great divide in HIV care between the haves and the have-nots," said Dr. Martin F. Shapiro of the University of California Los Angeles, lead author of the study being published Wednesday in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Disparities in access to health care exist throughout the health system, not just in AIDS treatment. But unlike other diseases, most people with the AIDS virus can trace their infection to one of two sources: homosexual men or intravenous drug users.

Part of the explanation is simple economics. People infected through intravenous drug use, or sex with a drug user, generally have less money, less education and more life problems — all of which keep them from getting effective care. Someone who can't pay the rent or buy groceries or who is addicted to drugs may find getting medical care a low priority.

"That tends to be much more of a down-and-out population in every way," said Dr. Alvin F. Poussaint, who studies racial disparities in health at Harvard Medical School.

At the same time, the gay community has mobilized around the disease, educating its members about treatment options and the importance of getting care.

But while the AIDS epidemic hit homosexual men first, blacks are the fasting growing group of victims, now accounting for nearly half of all new infections, making the disparities in care even more alarming to public health officials.

There are many AIDS clinics in the gay community but few that are targeted to drug users, said Peter Lurie of Public Citizen's Health Research Group.

"The injection drug users are a relatively forgotten part of this epidemic," he said.

The new research comes from the HIV Cost and Utilization Study, the first national data on care for people with HIV and AIDS. Researchers identified about 231,400 American adults with HIV who were receiving at least some medical care outside the military or prison, in all states except Alaska and Hawaii.

From this group, a random sample of more than 2,000 patients was chosen for interviews beginning in early 1996 and again in early 1998. Researchers measured six components of care — three relating to use of medication and three related to use of doctors and hospitals.

Overall, care improved from 1996 to 1998. At first, just 29 percent of all patients were receiving care that met all six standards. That jumped to 47 percent two years later.

But the care differed widely among groups.

For instance, in 1998, 88 percent of whites were receiving powerful protease inhibitors, but just 80 percent of blacks were.

Similarly, 87 percent of men infected through sex with other men were taking these drugs in 1998, compared with 81 percent of those infected through drug use.

Some of the gap had narrowed, but researchers found that trend had slowed, meaning further improvements were not likely.

Future research will focus on the cause of the disparities: Are certain patients failing to seek care? Or are the attitudes and practices of doctors and hospitals making it harder for these patients to get it?

"At least on an unconscious level, some providers may have more aggressively tried to provide these treatments to certain patients," Shapiro said.

He also noted that the differences in care based on insurance type and race persisted, even when researchers took into account other factors, including how the person contracted the virus.

This, he and others explain, reflects larger disparities in the health system that go well beyond AIDS.

"The voices of the poor are not heard well in this country," Shapiro said. "In the case of HIV, the consequences of that can be quite profound."

Woman wins $200,000 for false memory of satanic abuse

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — A woman who said her therapist convinced her she had been raped by a satanic cult and had killed an infant was awarded $200,000 by a jury.

The jury Monday held Leah Strout Simpson to be 35 percent at fault for what happened to her.

Ms. Simpson began seeing therapist Roger Litwin in 1986, when she was in her early 20s. The therapist began treating her for multiple personality disorder, she said.

She said she spent years believing she had been involved in ritual abuse and murder, and became suicidally depressed, before realizing that what she thought were long-repressed memories were untrue.

The therapist's lawyer, Sharon Hightower, said Litwin's diagnosis and treatment were within the professional mainstream.

"There is no suggestion that her memories were implanted or suggested by Litwin," Ms. Hightower told the jury.

Unknown Dokic stuns Hingis

■ Top seed loses in first round at Wimbledon, falling to 16-year-old player who is ranked 129th.

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Martina Hingis couldn't cry on her mother's shoulder this time.

She told her mother to stay away from Wimbledon, give her more space, let her practice, play and grow up more on her own.

Now, after suffering the greatest upset in women's tennis history, two weeks after her tearful exit in her mother's arms at the French Open final, Hingis felt terribly alone as she moped away in stunned silence.

"I think I need to take some time off," the 18-year-old Hingis said, her career suddenly in disarray after a 6-2, 6-0 thrashing Tuesday by 16-year-old Australian Jelena Dokic.

No top-seeded woman had ever lost in the first round of a Grand Slam tournament to a player ranked as low as the No. 129 Dokic, who had to win three qualifying matches to reach the main draw of her third major.

Only two other top-seeded women in the open era — Steffi Graf at Wimbledon in 1994 and Virginia Ruzici at the Australian in 1979 — lost in the first round and neither of their opponents was ranked as low as Dokic.

Dokic turned to her father, Damir, after the match and found him "out of words," which is just the way tennis officials would like him.

Two weeks ago, he was ejected from a tuneup tournament for shouting abuse at officials during his daughter's match. He was later arrested for lying down in traffic and jumping on the hood of a car. Police said he had been drinking and was arrested "for his own safety." He was not charged, and was released after three hours "when he sobered up."

Yet as he watched his daughter beat Hingis, the 1997 Wimbledon champ and winner of five Grand Slam titles, Dokic was a model of decorum.

"It's still hard to believe that I've beaten Martina," Jelena said. "But I have to keep my

El Paso's Junior Spivey beats the tag by Midland shortstop Josue Espada for one of Spivey's two stolen bases in the game Tuesday at Christensen Stadium. The RockHounds won, 8-4, in the 10th inning on a homer by Espada and a grand slam by Justin Bowles.

Bowles' slam lifts 'Hounds in 10th

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

Through eight innings on Tuesday another pitching duel was taking place between the El Paso Diablos and the Midland RockHounds. But let's not forget that Christensen Stadium is a hitter's park... at least Justin Bowles made sure of that.

With the bases loaded in the bottom of the 10th inning, the RockHounds outfielder hit a dramatic grand slam over the right field wall to give the 'Hounds their second straight come-from-behind win over the Diablos with an 8-4 victory.

"It didn't look good the first eight innings," said Bowles referring to the fantastic pitching performance of El Paso starter Brad Penny, who kept the 'Hounds on a leash for the better part of 7 2/3 innings. "But you've got to tip your hat to our guys because they battled back. For the second straight night, we battled back, twice, to win."

Bowles got things going for the 'Hounds with a solo homer off Penny in the eighth. He then tied it in the ninth with an RBI single off Diablo reliever Jeff Andrews. But no hit was bigger on this night for Bowles than the one he hit off Scott Schroeffel (1-2) on an 2-0 pitch in the bottom of the 10th to give Midland its third straight win over El Paso and its eighth win in nine games over the Diablos.

"I was looking fast ball, put a head down on it and got a hold of it," said Bowles about the game-winning home run pitch. "I just said a prayer to God."

Penny was simply marvelous as he retired 13 in a row before giving up a single to Cody McKay in the sixth inning. Penny finished with a season-high 11 strikeouts in the game and was able to fan each RockHound in the starting lineup. The only run off Penny came from Bowles' round-tripper in the eighth.

"He was on tonight," said Bowles, who finished 3-for-5 on the night with six RBIs, about Penny. "(On the homer in the eighth) It was 0-2 and I just looked for a fast ball. I just dropped a head on it and got a little help from the wind."

El Paso built a 3-0 lead early in the game as Garry Maddox hit a three-run home run off Midland starter Jake O'Dell in the top of the first inning.

The Diablos took a 3-1 lead into the bottom of the ninth. Jeff DaVanon doubled, Adam Piatt walked and then T.R. Marcinczyk singled to load the bases. Mario Encarnacion singled just over the glove of Diablo third baseman Ron Hartman to get one run in and cut El Paso's lead to 3-2. Bowles then singled to right to scored Piatt and tie the game at 3-3.

Midland had a chance to win but Tim Garland hit into a double play and then Webster Garrison hit a deep fly ball to center field to end the inning.

The Diablos regained the lead in the top of the 10th when Junior Spivey reached on with a walk, went to second on a wild pitch by Midland reliever Mike Bertotti, advanced to third on a groundout and scored on a bunt single by Maddox to make the score 4-3 in favor of El Paso.

Midland still had one more chance in the bottom of the 10th when in stepped Josue Espada, who only had two homers coming into the game. Espada hit

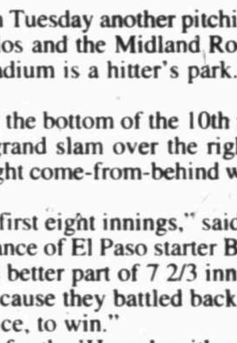
Hurricanes' CWS title thrills Marcinczyk

This past weekend, the University of Miami Hurricanes won the College World Series by beating rival Florida State, 6-5 in Saturday's championship game. No one in Midland could've been happier than Midland RockHounds first baseman T.R. Marcinczyk.



LeRoy

"It was fabulous," said Marcinczyk, a Hurricane alumnus. "I called all the coaches up and I told them 'congratulations.'"

Marcinczyk probably also rubbed it in to 'Hounds pitcher Randy Nile, a Florida State alumnus. It wasn't confirmed, however, if any friendly wagers were placed.

Marcinczyk was a member of the 1996 Hurricanes team which went to the championship game of the College World Series. Things didn't turn out as good for the Hurricanes as it did this past Saturday. You see, Marcinczyk's Miami team lost to 'Hounds outfielder Justin Bowles' LSU team in what is regarded as one of the most exciting finishes in College World Series history.

Tied at 7-7 going into the top of the ninth, Marcinczyk doubled with two outs to put a runner on base. Then former San Antonio Missions' shortstop Alex Cora doubled to bring Marcinczyk in as Miami's go-ahead run to make it 8-7.

LSU came back in the bottom of the ninth. In that inning, Bowles had a chance to at least tie the game with a runner at second base but he grounded out to none other than Marcinczyk, who made a diving stop at first. With two outs, however, Warren Morris hit the first pitch he saw for the dramatic game-winning two-run homer and a 9-8 Tigers win.

"I'm still a little sore about it," Marcinczyk said about the loss.

Marcinczyk, who said it was time to move on, doesn't have any regrets about participating in a great College World Series game. Marcinczyk has some very special memories.

"As a kid you always wish you could go there," he said. "Justin and I went there and played in the final game. It's a great feeling. If I don't make it to the Major Leagues or whatever, I'll always still have that memory. A lot of guys go to pro ball but not the World Series or the final game."

Marcinczyk and Bowles aren't the only current or former RockHounds who made a trip to the College World Series. In 1997 alone, Eric DuBose and Adam Piatt were there with Mississippi State; former RockHound outfielder

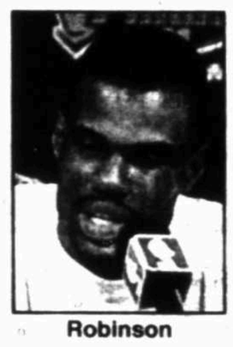
Spurs must get tough for Game 4

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

NEW YORK — The old San Antonio Spurs were said to be softer than an overripe banana on a bed of Charmin. The new Spurs are supposed to be different.

Game 4 will tell.



Robinson

A little adversity and a smidgen of self-doubt were the factors San Antonio had to contend with Tuesday following its loss to the New York Knicks in Game 3 of the NBA Finals.

The Spurs still lead the series 2-1, with Game 4 on Wednesday night.

"We want to instill as much doubt as we can," New York's Kurt Thomas said. "When you talk about demeanor, you can tell when a person is upset about something or down on themselves. But they looked the same as they did in Game 1. They kept fighting until the last second."

What Thomas didn't see was the anger in coach Gregg Popovich's eyes as he yelled at his team during a first-quarter timeout Monday night.

"All of a sudden we're playing the exact opposite from what we talked about for a week!" he screamed.

The Spurs trailed almost the entire game, tying it only once, and played their sloppiest ball in a long time. It was the first loss for San Antonio since May 11.

The Knicks, who have been thriving on adversity throughout the season, will now try to send the Spurs to their first two-game losing streak since the end of February.

As the pressure increases each day the series moves on, the next test for the Spurs will be how they react to a diminished comfort zone and the possibility of a tied series. The last time the Spurs were in a similar situation, they went to Minnesota for Game 3 of the first round and beat the Timberwolves by 14 points to take a 2-1 lead in that series.

The first round, however, is not as pressure-packed as the finals.

In the past five years, the pressure of playing for a championship turned Nick Anderson into a quivering mess at the foul line, made Shandon Anderson turn a game-changing dunk into a blown reverse layup and made Karl Malone miss two game-clinching free throws in Chicago.

"They've been tested, they've been through adversity, and their guys are going to fight just like we fight," New York's Charlie Ward said. "Pressure can be a factor if you are mentally weak, but I don't think those guys are."

Latrell Sprewell saw a lot of San Antonio when he was in the Western Conference playing for Golden State.

The conventional wisdom then on how to rat-

Dallas Stars aim to keep Cup in Texas

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — Dallas Stars coach Ken Hitchcock is so giddy over winning the Stanley Cup that he's already talking about another championship — and another after that.

"As long as we've got one of these, why not make it two? Aw, let's go for three," Hitchcock told 20,000 fans at a pep rally Monday.

Winning two more titles is an ambitious goal for a franchise that waited an NHL-record 32 years for its first crown. The wait ended early Sunday with a six-game victory over the Buffalo Sabres.

The Stars can hope for more titles because all of their key players — Mike Modano, Brett Hull, Joe Nieuwendyk and Ed Belfour — will be back next season, and some for even longer.

"I think everybody realizes how difficult it is to do this, but we're going to have a lot of the nucleus back next year so there's no reason why we can't make a run at it again," said

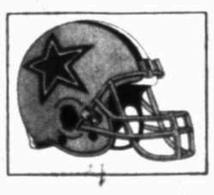
Final autopsy shows Tuinei's death was accident

Associated Press



McKINNEY — Former Dallas Cowboys offensive tackle Mark Tuinei died of a lethal combination of heroin and a form of the drug ecstasy, according to autopsy results released Tuesday.

In its final autopsy report, the Collin County Medical Examiner's office ruled Tuinei's death was an accident.

Medical examiner Dr. William Rohr said the autopsy showed the 39-year-old former All-Pro offensive lineman administered the drugs to himself intravenously.

But Rohr said there's no way to tell whether Tuinei had used the drugs before. He says no needle marks were found on the body, but added Tuinei could have used a small needle without leaving a trace.

Friend and former teammate Nicky Sualua told police he found Tuinei unconscious in his car outside Tuinei's home in Plano the morning of May 6. Sualua revived him briefly through CPR, but Tuinei was dead when he arrived at a hospital.

Tejada leads Athletics' rally vs. Wetteland for 5-3 victory

Associated Press

AL Roundup

ARLINGTON — Miguel Tejada's two-run triple keyed a three-run ninth inning as the Oakland Athletics rallied against John Wetteland for a 5-3 victory over the Texas Rangers on Tuesday night.

Wetteland, who started the ninth with a major league-leading 23 saves, allowed consecutive pinch-hit singles to Tim Raines and Mike Macfarlane. Tony Phillips drove in the tying run with a single to right, scoring Raines. Then Tejada tripled to left center, driving in Macfarlane and Phillips to make it 5-3.

Wetteland (1-2) had his third blown save in 26 opportunities for the Rangers, who have lost four straight.

T.J. Mathews (6-2) got three outs in the eighth, allowing one hit, for the win.

Billy Taylor pitched the ninth for his 18th save.

The Rangers have scored four runs or less in all 10 games since an 8-7 loss to Colorado on June 12. It was the first loss by the Rangers' bullpen since April 27, they had gone 14-0.

Trailing 5-3 in the bottom of the ninth, the Rangers got a leadoff single by Ivan Rodriguez off Taylor and Rusty Greer followed with a walk.

Then Phillips made a diving back-hand catch to rob Juan Gonzalez of extra bases on his liner to left-center. Greer was called out for passing Rodriguez between second and third. Rafael Palmeiro flied out to left to end the game.

Rodriguez put the Rangers in front, 3-2, in the fourth with a two-run single.

The A's had a two-run first with the help of an RBI double by Jason Giambi that was misjudged by left fielder Rusty Greer. John Jaha drove in the inning's second run with a groundout.

The Rangers made it 2-1 in the third on Palmeiro's sacrifice fly.

Texas took a 3-2 lead in the fourth off former Ranger Kenny Rogers (4-3) when Roberto Kelly singled, Ruben Mateo sent him to third with a double, and both runs scored on Rodriguez's two-out single.

Rogers, who won his previous four decisions, allowed three runs and nine hits over seven innings. He walked three and struck out one.

Notes: Rangers right-hander Mark Clark will be out another month with a small ligament tear in his right elbow. Clark, placed on the 15-day disabled list last Sunday, had X-rays and an MRI before Tuesday night's game against Oakland, revealing a small thickness tear of the ulnar collateral ligament. ... Rogers is 1-3 on the road this season, but 3-0 at home. Over the past two seasons, he is 6-11 on the road, but 14-0 at the Ballpark in Arlington ... The A's purchased the contract of rookie right-hander Chad Harville from Triple-A Vancouver and optioned righty Brett Laxton to Vancouver. ... The Rangers will honor the Stanley Cup champion Dallas Stars before Wednesday night's game against Oakland. Stars players Derian Hatcher, Mike Modano, Craig Ludwig and Joe Nieuwendyk will be introduced on the field before the game and will participate in the first-pitch ceremony. The Stanley Cup also will be displayed on the field.

Yankees 7, Devil Rays 0

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Bernie Williams went 4-for-5 and Orlando Hernandez pitched a three-hitter for the New York Yankees' first complete game of the season, 7-0 over the Tampa Bay Devil Rays.

Shane Spencer hit a solo homer off Alan Newman, and Hernandez (8-6) helped the Yankees improve to 12-1 against Tampa Bay in the last two seasons.

Bobby Witt (3-4), who hasn't won in nine starts since May 1, allowed four runs, five hits and walked three in 1 1-3 innings.

Blue Jays 4, Indians 3

TORONTO — Shawn Green hit a two-run homer and Kelvim Escobar (7-4) allowed two runs in seven innings, sending Cleveland to its third loss in 13 games.

Tony Fernandez went 0-for-2 with two walks for the Blue Jays, dropping his major league-leading average to .411. Fernandez's 11-game hitting streak was stopped by Dwight Gooden (2-3) and two relievers.

Orioles 5, Red Sox 3

BALTIMORE — Albert Belle hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning as Baltimore won for the 11th time in 12 games.

The Orioles trailed 3-1 before rallying against three Boston pitchers in a four-run eighth. Three straight singles, two against Mark Guthrie (0-1) loaded the bases for B.J. Surhoff, who hit a sacrifice fly. Belle then hit his 14th homer off Jason Wasdin.

Arthur Rhodes (3-2) got two outs and Mike Timlin worked the ninth for his ninth save.

White Sox 6, Twins 1

CHICAGO — Jim Parque (8-5) allowed six hits in eight scoreless innings, and Frank Thomas homered. Paul Konerko added a two-run homer in the eighth inning as Chicago stopped a three-game losing streak.

LaTroy Hawkins (3-8) allowed five runs and 11 hits over seven-plus innings as the Twins lost their fourth straight. Terry Steinbach hit an RBI double off Keith Foulke in the ninth.

Royals 4, Tigers 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jeremy Giambi had three RBIs, including a an eighth-inning single that broke a 2-all tie as Kansas City stopped a three-game losing streak.

Braves defense lets Maddux down in 2-0 loss to Montreal

Associated Press

ATLANTA (AP) — As the season grinds on for Greg Maddux, the four-time Cy Young Award winner insists everything is fine even though his record is just about .500.

Maddux pitched well but was hurt by his defense as the Montreal Expos stopped a five-game losing streak with a 2-1 win over the Atlanta Braves Tuesday night.

"I think I've pitched good all year," said Maddux (6-5), whose 4.18 ERA is startling when compared to the 2.75 ERA he compiled over the 13 previous seasons.

Allowing eight hits and one earned run in seven innings, Maddux lost for the second time in three starts. He seemed to be on verge of escaping the fifth inning with no damage when Vladimir Guerrero's check-swing single rolled past first baseman Randall Simon for a 2-0 Montreal lead.

Pitcher Mike Thurman and Manny Martinez led off the inning with consecutive singles, and moved up a base when Fernando Seguignol singled with one out but was thrown out after making a wide turn.

Guerrero's hit easily scored Thurman from third, but Simon's wild throw to the mound allowed Martinez to score from second.

"I can't dwell on it," Maddux said. "I have to move on because there's a lot of baseball left this season."

He hasn't won consecutive games since April and is only 2-5 in his last 10 outings — a stretch that has seen his run support total two runs or fewer five times. Though he had a 2.80 ERA in his last six starts, Maddux insists he is not pitching any differently than he did during a three-game losing streak in May.

"You just have to keep going out there and concentrating and believing in yourself," he said. "That's all I can ask of myself, to do the best I can do."

Atlanta got its run in the seventh after Ryan Klesko singled leading off and Thurman walked Andruw Jones. Simon then singled in a run off Guillermo Mota.

With the bases loaded and no outs, Bret Boone popped up off Mota. Montreal escaped when Steve Kline struck out Gullen and Anthony Telford retired pinch-hitter Brian Hunter on a fielder's choice grounder.

NL Roundup

Ugueth Urbina got five outs for his 15th save in 19 chances. Boone doubled with one out in the ninth and advanced on Ozzie Guillen's grounder before pinch-hitter Mike DeRosa struck out.

Phillies 3, Pirates 2

PHILADELPHIA — Rookie Randy Wolf won his third straight start and Marlon Anderson hit a go-ahead, two-run double to lead the Philadelphia Phillies over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Wolf, the first Philadelphia pitcher to start his career 3-0 since Pat Combs in 1989, allowed two runs and four hits in seven innings, striking out eight and walking three. Wayne Gomes got three outs for his ninth save.

Francisco Cordova (2-3) allowed all three runs and six hits in six innings as Pittsburgh lost its fourth straight.

Mets 8, Marlins 2

NEW YORK — Mike Piazza tied the Mets' hitting streak record on his final swing and Rey Ordonez kept up his All-Star campaign with three RBIs.

Piazza, hitless in his first three at-bats, sent a 2-2 pitch from Vic Darensbourg over the left-field bullpen to extend his hitting streak to 24 games. He tied Hubie Brooks' team record set in 1984.

Ordonez had three hits and made a brilliant defensive play as New York overcame a seventh-inning deficit to win for the 12th time in 15 games and send Florida to its seventh straight loss.

Greg McMichael (1-1) won and Armando Benitez struck out four in two perfect innings for his third save.

Brewers 5, Giants 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Scott Karl (6-6) allowed one run and eight in eight innings and Mark Loretta had four hits and three RBIs as Milwaukee won its fourth straight.

Loretta had an RBI single in the fifth and added a two-run double off closer Robb Nen as the Brewers added three runs in the ninth.

a solo homer to left which was reminiscent of Carlton Fisk's dramatic game-winning blast to win Game 6 of the 1975 World Series for the Boston Red Sox over the Cincinnati Reds. Espada's blast was just fair but it was good enough to tie the game at 4-4.

DaVanon then singled, Piatt flied out, Morales doubled and then Encarnacion was intentionally walked to load the bases and set up Bowles' heroics.

Bowles said he's kind of getting tired of having to comeback the way his team had to the past two nights, but it's sure not the disgusted feeling the Diablos must have after watching yet another game slip away.

"We need to start this early in the game. Enough of this seventh, eighth inning comebacks," Bowles said. "It's fun but it wears on you after a while."

LeROY: 'Hounds have CWS connections

(From 1C)

Roberto Vaz was there with the University of Alabama, although Vaz missed playing in the CWS with a broken foot; and former RockHound Tim Hudson was an All-American at Auburn in 1997.

In fact Hudson's Auburn team eliminated Rice in 1997 with a 10-1 victory and the ace had a lot to do with it. Hudson drove in six runs and pitched 6 1/3 innings of four-hit ball to pick up the win. Hudson did the most damage with his bat as he hit a two-run double, a three run homer and added a sacrifice fly. Even though Hudson is 2-0 right now with the Oakland Athletics, if things eventually don't work out very well in the American League, he could be valuable in the National League with his hitting ability. The A's might also want to consider using him as a pinch hitter.

Former Midland Angels also making an appearance in the 1997 CWS were pitcher Brian Cooper with USC and Troy Glaus with UCLA.

We've talked about how Piatt's stats compared very favorably or even better to Glaus' numbers after 50 game. Just to add to that, Piatt's Mississippi State team eliminated Glaus' UCLA team, 7-5. Hummmm!

So maybe next time you're watching the College World Series it would be wise to keep an eye out for future Major League stars or maybe even a future RockHound.

Knicks' Johnson still feels talkative

By Ken Berger
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Larry Johnson was exhausted Tuesday from guarding Tim Duncan the night before in Game 3 of the NBA Finals.

■ Finals Notebook

He wasn't too tired to talk, though.

In perhaps his longest and most revealing interview since joining the New York Knicks three years ago, Johnson used all of the required 30 minutes to discuss a wide range of topics on the day off before Game 4.

LJ's oratory included only a hint of the pestilence and profanity that got him fined $25,000 by the NBA on Sunday, when he refused to make himself available for the full media session and then cursed reporters and an NBA official. Still, Johnson attracted quite a crowd once he got on a roll.

"We've got a lot of rebellious slaves on this team," Johnson said. "I got to explain that? We don't have a lot of mainstream. We don't go with the mainstream. We're a different stream on this team."

Johnson went on to explain that the makeup of the Knicks — with the us-against-the-world mentality he champions — is starting to remind him of the UNLV team he led to an NCAA title in 1991.

"Coach Tark said ... we don't got time to be trying to be liked by the world, we're trying to win basketball games," said Johnson, who obviously was biting his tongue in an effort not to curse. "What do you want to do? You want to win basketball games or be liked by the world? We wanted to win basketball games."

Treading the delicate line that got him fined for the second time in the playoffs, Johnson explained his attitude toward the media.

"You guys, maybe you don't like me or not," he said. "Fine. I don't care. Ask my teammates. Ask my coach."

Asked if those are the only people he cares about, Johnson said, "Thank you. ... Them guys out there are the main focus in my mind."

Johnson scored 16 points in the Knicks' 89-81 victory over San Antonio in Game 3 Monday night. His most impressive work, however, was the defensive job he did on Duncan. Perhaps feeling a little stronger each day as he recovers from a sprained knee, Johnson used his muscle and guile to force Duncan away from the basket, where 7-footers tend to get a little queasy. Duncan scored a series-low 20 points and was shut out in the fourth quarter.

It took a toll on Johnson.

New York's Larry Johnson speaks with reporters before practice Tuesday at Madison Square Garden in New York. The Knicks and San Antonio Spurs play Game 4 of the NBA Finals tonight.

"There's not a lot in the tank right now," Johnson said. "Thank God there's not a game."

A sampling of Johnson's comments:

—On his critics: "I used to be almost literally crying at times because somebody said something bad about me. And my mom said, 'Boy, what the hell's wrong with you? Everybody's not going to like you, and you don't care whether anybody likes you or not. You be yourself.'

"And that's what I am. I don't care if anybody likes me or not. I play basketball. I play for the New York Knicks. My main focus is to win, win, win."

—On his parents: "My mom's just like me. I wasn't hatched, somebody had me. My mom and my pops, who I've never seen, never knew in my life, but I get my characteristics from somebody."

—On his relationships: "That's been my whole motto my whole life. I don't like this person, this person don't like me. Fine. That's mutual respect. Then stay away from each other. But don't come to me and smile and then stab me behind my back. I wear my heart on my sleeve. I make it known I don't like you. That way we don't got to communicate. We're on the same page."

—On Knicks guards Charlie Ward and Chris Childs: "They don't get as much credit as they deserve. They took a lot of criticism. ... We've heard time and time again we won't be in the finals, we can't win a championship with Charlie and Chris at the point, and here we are. Beaucoup respects for those guys."

CHILDS PLAY?: Knicks backup point guard Chris Childs sprained his knee during Game 3, a similar injury — although not quite as serious — as the one Larry Johnson sustained in Game 6 against Indiana.

Childs was injured in the first half but returned in the second half. He said he'll try to play Wednesday.

"It was painful, but adrenalin was flowing," Childs said. "Once you come down off that, that's when it really hits you. You lay down and you're not mobile and it tightens up."

Childs said he was in so much pain that he did not get any sleep after the game.

Coach Jeff Van Gundy said that if Childs is unable to play, he'll go with a backcourt of Latrell Sprewell and Allan Houston. The Knicks are carrying a third point guard, Rick Brunson, who seldom plays.

POP THE PEDESTRIAN: San Antonio coach Gregg Popovich spent 3 1/2 hours Monday afternoon walking the streets of midtown Manhattan.

Wearing a Spurs golf shirt, dozens of people recognized him.

"I went into this little dive to get a sandwich and the waiters were all over me, wanted to talk about it, wanted tickets, the whole deal. It was fun. Great town," Popovich said.

"San Antonio is different, it's spread out. There's only one area to walk around, that's the Riverwalk. But in New York you just start out in any direction and come back 3-4 hours later. Wherever you go, there's something to look at or do."

Popovich also learned one unwritten rule about making your way around Manhattan on foot: Don't step into the street without looking around first. That's taxi territory.

"I did it twice, and I learned my lesson quickly," he said. "They don't care."

WHAT RULES?: Asked what rules he'd like the NBA to change, Spurs guard Steve Kerr said: "Maybe I'm wrong, but I'd like to see them get rid of the illegal defense rule and just see what would happen. Experiment with it. I just don't understand why you have to guard somebody who can't shoot when he's standing 40 feet from the basket."

San Antonio must rediscover Duncan's supporting players

By Ken Berger
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Lost in New York.

Maybe that explains the recent disappearance of Tim Duncan's supporting cast in the NBA Finals.

Though Duncan had his worst game of the finals in Game 3, he got little help from teammates other than David Robinson. The Spurs, an efficient, multidimensional machine during a 12-game playoff winning streak, suddenly became predictable and ineffective.

Simply put, Duncan needs more help in Game 4 Wednesday night, or the resilient New York Knicks might really make this series interesting.

"They beat up our guys last night," said Spurs guard Mario Elie, who got into foul trouble and scored only six points.

"They outhustled us," said Sean Elliott, whose seven points on 3-for-9 shooting won't do as a perimeter threat to complement Duncan.

Point guard Avery Johnson, who scored 10 points but struggled to get the Spurs' offense in sync, was so bewildered by the loss that he wouldn't even talk with his wife about it during their cab ride to the hotel.

"It's not going to be a good day," Johnson said Tuesday. "We hate to lose. It's not just me. It's not a good feeling. This is a strange day for us, the day after a loss. But we're excited about getting back on the court as soon as possible."

When they do, the Spurs will be trying to avoid what seemed unthinkable when they left San Antonio four days ago — facing a series tied 2-2 with still another game to play at Madison Square Garden.

If precedent means anything, the Spurs haven't lost consecutive games since February, when they began the season 6-8.

"We know what it's like to come off a loss," said Antonio Daniels, whose early 3-point shooting was not matched by Elliott, Elie, or anybody down the stretch. "I think we'll respond."

Duncan was dominant in the first two games in San Antonio, averaging 29 points and 15.5 rebounds. But in each game, he and Robinson got a significant boost from outside shooters of varying identities and backgrounds.

Jaren Jackson, a rare shooter produced by John Thompson at Georgetown, dropped 17 points on the Knicks in a crucial reserve role in Game 1. In Game 2, all of Elie's 15 points seemed to come at clutch moments.

On Monday night, Elliott was 1-for-5 on 3-pointers, Jackson didn't score and Elie was ineffective because of foul trouble. He had six points and five fouls.

And Elie was the last Spurs player anyone expected to get lost during a big game in the Big Apple. He grew up in the city.

"We became a little too predictable, just coming down and tossing it inside," Elliott said. "We can't throw it in to the horses every time and expect something to happen."

Robinson had 25 points, but the Spurs needed more than an inside game. The only signs of life on the perimeter came from Daniels, who hit two early 3-pointers to prevent the Knicks from leading by more than 14 points in the first quarter.

"I think Mario's a little upset, and J.J.'s a little upset because they didn't get the minutes they usually get to perform," Daniels said. "Tim didn't have his usual Tim Duncan-type game."

As a result, Spurs coach Gregg Popovich finds himself in the unfamiliar position of having to come up with answers after a loss. The Spurs must cast aside what has become their mantra in this series: They don't have to adjust; the Knicks do.

Not true anymore.

"We feel the same," Duncan said. "It's not out of control and it's not in control. It's right there where it can swing either way."

A new twist, indeed.

NBC plans wall-to-wall coverage for 2000 Olympics in Sydney

By Larry Siddons
AP Sports Writer

WASHINGTON — Ready for some handball? How about fencing, table tennis and badminton?

When NBC turns on its cameras Down Under for the 2000 Olympics, the focus will be on the "traditional theme" of big sports, big time.

But because of the network's cable branches, in-depth coverage will extend to virtually all sports, even the ones that have been snubbed before.

"The cable really opens up what has not been shown in the past," NBC Sports president Dick Ebersol told the U.S. Olympic Committee's executive committee on Tuesday.

That includes women's soccer and softball, both all but bypassed at the 1996 Atlanta Games despite gold medals for the United States.

Also available for anyone with basic cable — boxing. A staple of television's pioneer days, the sweet science has been an Olympic no-show lately because of slumping audiences.

"It has been very, very difficult to put on," Ebersol said. "We found that a quarter of our audience was driven away as soon as we went to boxing. But it will be seen every day on CNBC."

NBC plans 330 hours — double previous levels — of Olympic programming on its three outlets — 160 hours on the main network, 170 on the two cable channels. Ebersol said more than half the network programming would be in prime time.

MSNBC, a news and information channel, will carry the Olympics from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. EDT, with CNBC, a financial news programmer, taking over after the markets close.

The main network will again focus on track, gymnastics, basketball, swimming and other major sports, with the cable outlets carrying the more unfamiliar events.

Ebersol said NBC will again try to tell a story rather than just turn cameras on the action. That practice, while drawing big ratings and big profits, has been criticized as narrow, but Ebersol said it is necessary when most of the sports are not mainstream.

"You have to do it strategically and set up the story," he said.

The plans for Sydney are not a repeat of TripleCast, NBC's innovative but money-losing attempt to give pay-per-view access to all sports at the 1992 Barcelona Games.

But even with the added outlets, Ebersol said four or five of the 28 sports will be seen only in wrapup highlights. He did not identify those sports.

NBC has paid $3.6 billion for U.S. Olympic TV rights through 2008 and is the biggest commercial partner of the International Olympic Committee.

Ebersol, an unabashed fan and scholar of the games, has defended the committee during the 7-month-old corruption scandal.

In a briefing for the USOC, he called the members of the main IOC reform commissions — appointed in the wake of the Salt Lake bribery allegations — "unbelievably impressive" and "a wonderful group."

After the USOC briefing, Ebersol addressed the IOC's surprise choice last week of Turin, Italy, as host city for the 2006 Winter Games.

"It follows the IOC's recent preference for venues with more size, accommodations and transportation links," he said in an interview. "It also is consistent with its desire to acknowledge countries that have bid unsuccessfully in the past."

Rome lost to Athens, Greece, in a battle for the 2004 Summer Games, and other Italian cities have come up short in recent Olympic selections.

As far as NBC was concerned, Ebersol said, just about any city with a cold climate can be a Winter Games wonderland.

"So long as they put it someplace with snow and tall mountains, we'll make it look like 'The Sound of Music,'" he said.

The USOC executive committee also agreed to a $75,000-a-year independent office to make sure staff members, volunteers and Olympic bid cities abide by ethics rules.

NBA: Spurs changing image

tle the Spurs was simple: Bang them around, get into their heads and they'd crumble. The wore the label of "soft" for several seasons.

"I didn't think it fit. I thought it was an unfair label. It was just that way because they hadn't won," Sprewell said. "Now that they're having success and winning, it's changed their mentality."

But that mentality showed signs of stress in Game 3 Monday night as the Spurs lost their cool early, regained their composure midway, but didn't show a killer instinct when they needed it most.

Tim Duncan sudden'y lost his touch in the fourth quarter. Sean Elliott needed to be checked for a pulse. Mario Elie and Jaren Jackson were helpless when they tried to shut down Allan Houston. No one could hit a jumper.

"We came out expecting people to give us something because we were the big bad Spurs, And we're not good when we're that way," Avery Johnson said. "You stay around San Antonio too much and read the papers and believe everything that's being said. But this is no sweep. We're in a dogfight."

San Antonio also committed 20 turnovers and failed to outrebound the Knicks for the third straight game.

Still, it was only one game and one loss.

"I don't think it's a new series at all, to be honest with you," David Robinson said. "We expected them to fight back. If you go through a series thinking you're going to sweep everybody, you're fools. And we didn't think that.

"Obviously it was a great opportunity for us to get a hold of the series and kind of get a break," Robinson said. "But we didn't do it."

Said Elliott: "They went out and they wanted it more."

Knicks coach Jeff Van Gundy said he would stick with Marcus Camby as his starting center in Game 4. He also said it was uncertain whether Chris Childs will be able to play with a sprained knee.

"In the regular season it would be the type of injury that would keep him out 7-10 days," the coach said.

Van Gundy also praised Houston and Sprewell for finding so many quality shots among their 46 combined attempts. The Knicks also got a boost from Larry Johnson, with 16 points and tough defense on Duncan that helped keep him scoreless in the fourth quarter.

The Knicks' success in relying so much on Houston and Sprewell for offense has exposed the mismatch they can exploit against the Spurs' guards, especially reserves Jackson, Antonio Daniels and Steve Kerr.

It's not as strong of an advantage as San Antonio has in the low post, but at least the Knicks have something they can rely on as they try to move the momentum of the series their way in Game 4.

"It's not out of control and it's not in control," Duncan said. "It's right there where it can swing either way. We've lost a game, but we're not in a hole.

"We don't feel bad about the loss. We're not crying about the loss. We're going to go out there the next game and get back to what we've been doing."

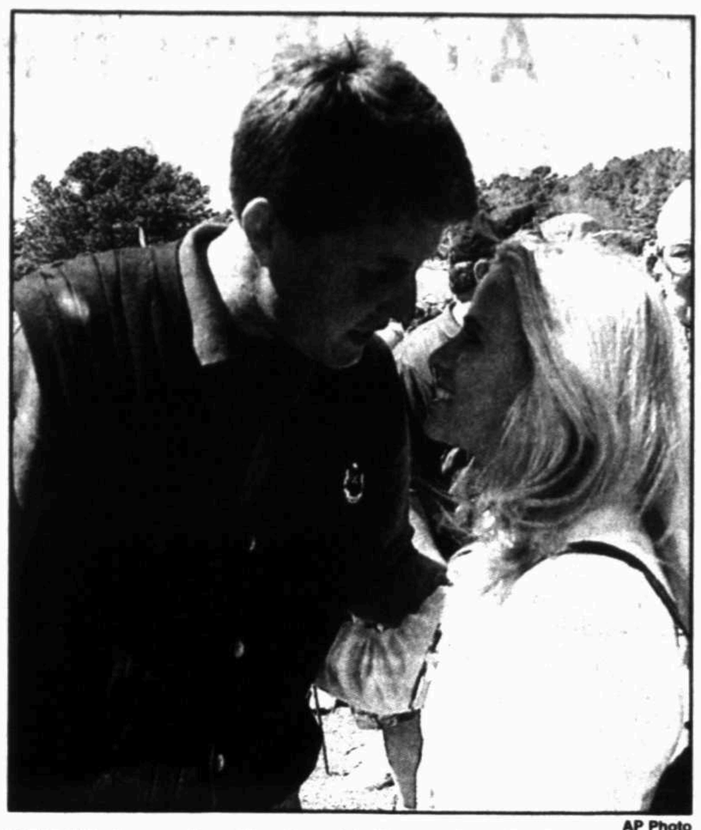
Stewart's putt let Mickelson see birth

By Doug Ferguson
AP Golf Writer



AP Photo

Just think if Payne Stewart had missed.

His 15-foot par putt on the 72nd hole provided the most thrilling finish in the history of the U.S. Open. Since it was first played in 1895, no one had ever won with a putt that long on the last hole of regulation.

But think of the drama that awaited had Stewart missed that putt and gone to an 18-hole playoff the next day with Phil Mickelson.

There's a good chance Stewart might have been playing alone.

No one will ever know if Amy Mickelson really would have dialed her husband's pager number and punched in the secret code that signaled she was going into labor.

Not everyone was convinced Mickelson would have hurried off Pinehurst No. 2, even though he had a private plane and a co-pilot on standby all week. But even Mickelson doubted the baby would arrive nine days early.

Amanda Brynn Mickelson was born at 6:11 p.m. PDT Monday in Arizona, 20 1/2 inches long and weighing 7 pounds, 4 ounces. Mother and daughter are both healthy.

The father was there for the whole thing, and says he would have been regardless.

"I would not have been playing," Mickelson said Tuesday. "I would definitely have come home, no question."

But would he have known to come home?

Amy has been with him for most of his 13 victories on the PGA Tour, the most of any active player who has yet to win a major championship. She knows what a major would mean to Mickelson. She shared the disappointment of Shinnecock Hills in the '95 Open and Valhalla in the '96 PGA Championship.

Would she really have paged him?

"I will answer that for her in simple terms," Mickelson said. "She had better have told me, no matter when or what time. This is where we are, and that's what would have happened. We had a deal before the U.S. Open as to what would happen, and I was going to be there with her no matter what."

None of that came to pass.

Stewart won the U.S. Open with indubitable determination, making clutch putts on the last three holes to bury the memory of his failure the previous year at Olympic Club.

Mickelson was the runner-up by one stroke after missing two 8-foot putts on the 16th and 17th holes and a 25-foot putt on the last.

Tiger Woods tied for third. He missed a 5-foot par putt on the 17th and a 25-foot birdie putt on the last hole, believing that any one of those putts might have gotten him into a playoff. That's one reason he was glad to see Stewart make his par putt on No. 18.

"It would have been tough sleeping for the next few nights," he said.

How tough would that have been for Mickelson?

As the week went on, Amy kept getting good reports from the doctor, and the prospect of Mickelson leaving early became less of a distraction.

But just suppose there had been an 18-hole playoff.

Amy's water broke shortly before noon EDT, about the time Mickelson would have been shaking Stewart's hand on the first tee and wishing him luck. She went into labor a little after 3 p.m. They would have been somewhere around the par-3 15th. Maybe Mickelson would have had a two-stroke lead.

BEEP!

Stay or go?

Mickelson had been presented with every hypothetical situation during the week. What if he were leading on Sunday? What if he were on the back nine?

"I'm out of here," he always said.

The record books would have shown Mickelson with a WD. Stewart would have had to play the round by himself so he could post a score. The bigger story would have been Mickelson's devotion to his wife and daughter over a moment that could have defined his career.

Even after Stewart had won, Mickelson heard one last scenario.

It's one thing to walk off Pinehurst in the middle of the final round, when the Open was still up for grabs among Stewart, Mickelson, Woods and Vijay Singh. It's quite another to leave during a playoff and let the other player win by default.

"Yeah," Mickelson replied, "but come middle of June next year, we're going to have another Open."

Mickelson didn't get to hold the U.S. Open championship cup Sunday. One day later, he was holding something far more precious.

Somehow, that made one of the greatest U.S. Opens even better.

Exciting finish boosts ratings for U.S. Open

NEW YORK (AP) — Payne Stewart's dramatic victory and a host of big names in contention helped boost U.S. Open television ratings.

NBC's final-round coverage Sunday posted a 6.8 national rating and a 19 share, a 13 percent increase from 1998.

With Tiger Woods, Phil Mickelson and David Duval in the hunt entering the final day, NBC tied the rating for the 1997 finale as the highest final round since the network reacquired the event in 1995.

NBC also fared well for the third round on Saturday, getting a 4.8 and a 15 share and easily beating the Women's World Cup on ABC and Fox's baseball game of the week.

The World Cup match between the United States and Denmark had a 2.2 overnight rating and a 6 share, while Fox posted a 2.8 overnight mark.

STARS: Dallas wants to repeat like Detroit

(From 1C)

Nieuwendyk, the postseason MVP. "It will be a challenge, but Detroit did it."

The Red Wings were NHL champs in 1997 and 1998, and the Pittsburgh Penguins repeated in 1991-92. The last team to win three in a row was the New York Islanders, who actually won four straight from 1980-83.

Dallas' toughest challenge might be finding the proper motivation. The team was driven this year to win another Cup for former champions whose careers were winding down and to get a first championship for title-less stars Modano, Hull and Belfour.

"I think you want to silence everybody who may have thought it was a fluke, that you had a lucky year," Modano said. "I think if you do it again it really puts and end to those rumors."

Hitchcock said he plans to start from scratch.

"I think you have to start from Day 1 with the total assumption you have nothing going, then start building again," he said. "You can't go out there and say 'Modano, (Jere) Lehtinen and Hull — we'll put that together and it'll be automatic.'

"Maybe Brett Hull had a tough summer. Maybe he wants to be more of an impact player. Maybe Jere Lehtinen wants to be more of a scorer. You don't know those things. You have to let it evolve, read off it and then rebuild it again."

Dallas' changes already have begun. Backup goalie Roman Turek was traded Sunday to avoid losing him in the expansion draft Thursday. The entry draft is Saturday and the free-agent signing period opens next Thursday.

The Stars have five veterans signed to long-term contracts and eight more signed through next season. The team holds the option on the contracts of five players, the biggest contributors being 39-year-old Guy Carbonneau and 38-year-old Craig Ludwig.

Their top unrestricted free agents are Pat Verbeek and Dave Reid. Richard Matvichuk is a restricted free agent, but owner Tom Hicks will surely match any offer and keep him.

"You have turnover every year and guys move on," Modano said. "Winning kind of puts that ante a little higher for teams to make a run at players who have that experience."

Verbeek isn't likely to get another $3.2 million salary from Dallas, but at a cheaper price, he could be welcomed back. Fans already have begun a "Sign Verbeek" bumper-sticker campaign.

Mike Keane screamed that rallying cry through the locker room Tuesday as Verbeek discussed his status.

"I may want to be here and they might not want me to be here," he said. "We'll see where it goes."

Hingis pulls out of doubles; Capriati wins on second day

Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — After being stunned by a first-round defeat, top-ranked Martina Hingis decided not to wait around for doubles.

Hingis, who was defeated by Australian Jelena Dokic 6-2, 6-0 in her opening match at Wimbledon on Tuesday, withdrew from doubles with partner Anna Kournikova.

A brief statement from Wimbledon referee Alan Mills said only that Hingis had "a recurring medical problem."

After the shock loss Tuesday, Hingis said she needed to take a four or five-week break to gather herself following an emotional loss in the French Open final against Steffi Graf.

DEFENSE: Jana Novotna hasn't been given much of a chance to repeat at Wimbledon, but her first step was relatively easy.

The fifth-seed beat Shi-Ting Wang of Taiwan 6-2, 6-1 in just 46 minutes.

After taking a 3-2 lead in the first set, Novotna won the next seven games as she swept through the first set and jumped to a 4-0 lead in the second.

An ankle injury suffered playing doubles in the French Open was no problem, either.

"My ankle felt absolutely perfect," Novotna said. "The minute I stepped on the court today I felt very good. It was very special again, when you walk on the Centre Court and the Duchess of Kent is there."

■ Wimbledon Notebook

CAPRIATI IN OVERTIME: It took her two days, but 1991 Wimbledon semifinalist Jennifer Capriati finally advanced.

Capriati reached Wimbledon's second round on Tuesday, defeating Anke Huber 7-5, 6-3, 9-7. The match was stopped Monday at 5-5 in the third set when darkness set in as Capriati slipped twice on the moist grass.

Not many athletes start at the top and work their way to the bottom, but that's what Capriati's done.

Once an Olympic champion and ranked No. 6 in the world, she burned out and gave up. In May 1994, she was arrested and charged with possession of marijuana.

EQUAL PAY: Tim Henman caused a stir when he suggested women players seeking equal pay with men at Wimbledon were greedy.

"I think they (women) should worry about getting their own tournaments at a bigger and better level and then worry about the Grand Slams," Henman said. "So I think then if they are still saying they want more in the Grand Slams I think that's probably a bit greedy."

Six-time Wimbledon singles champion Billie Jean King begged to differ. She countered the argument that men play five sets at Wimbledon — to three for women — and, thus, deserve more money.

"Women are willing to play three sets out of five," said King, an HBO analyst "Remember, entertainers don't get paid on how long they entertain."

The U.S. Open is the only Grand Slam that pays men and women equally.

Barn fire kills two horses at Belmont

By Richard Rosenblatt
AP Sports Writer

ELMONT, N.Y. — Two horses were killed and a third was badly burned Tuesday night in a fire in a barn at Belmont Park Race Track, an NYRA official said.

Three civilians sustained minor injuries, according to a county fire official.

The fire was reported at Barn No. 8 at 6:27 p.m., according to a Nassau County fire dispatcher. It was ruled under control about 8:30 p.m.

The horses involved were trained by James Toner. The horses killed were an unraced 2-year-old daughter of Dixieland Band, owned by John and Joan Phillips, and Clear to Launch, a 3-year-old gelding owned by Caesar Kimmel.

Both horses were euthanized by Dr. Stephen Selway, the NYRA's attending veterinarian.

The injured horse, Surely Handsome, a 3-year-old owned by Kimmel and Ron Nicholson, was being treated at Selway's clinic at the track.

Clear to Launch last raced June 16 at Belmont and finished fifth in a claiming race. Surely Handsome last raced June 10 at Belmont, finishing sixth in a maiden claiming race.

The barn, which is a receiving barn for horses not usually stabled at the track, had a lot fewer horses in it than normal because there is no racing at the track on Monday and Tuesday.

"We lost two and one was seriously hurt and a few others were probably affected as well by smoke inhalation," NYRA fire marshal Kenny Kopp said. "To speculate how it happened would be an injustice."

Fire companies from four nearby towns and the track's own emergency service responded to the alarm.

"The response was very quick and the sprinklers in the barn worked," Kopp said. "People from track and those responding from outside very slowly took the horses out."

Ronnie Hardin, a groom for trainer Pat Kelly whose horses are in the barn next to the one that caught fire, was among the first people on the scene.

"All of a sudden there was this blaze in J.J.'s barn," he said, referring to Toner. "It was in the ceiling of the stalls. It shot from one end to the other and the barn was all blackened. When I went through I saw a horse lying burnt and didn't go for that one but we got one out and the one we got out his face was all burnt. We walked him until someone took him from us.

"I just had to go in and get those horses. They're in captivity behind that webbing and can't do anything."

On Jan. 15, 1996, What an Evening, a 3-year-old colt, was killed in a Belmont stable fire that he started when he reared and toppled a heat lamp which set some hay on fire.

On Jan. 19, 1986, 45 horses were killed when a fire swept through a barn at Belmont. A month-long investigation never determined a cause for the fire although a heat lamp in a stall where hay was piled too high was considered a possibility.

More than 2,000 horses are kept in 64 barns at the sprawling 430-acre complex, the largest race track in the nation.

TENNIS: Dokic should move up rankings fast

(From 1C)

feet on the ground because anything can happen in the next match. Just because I've beaten Martina doesn't mean I'll win the tournament."

That match was the biggest surprise in a day of surprises.

There was Boris Becker, raising his arms in weary triumph after four hours, the victor in one of the great comebacks in men's tennis history.

Becker didn't just fight back from two sets down — he'd done that nine times before — and three match points in the fourth set. He came back from two years away from Grand Slam tennis, beginning perhaps his last Wimbledon with a 5-7, 6-7 (7-9), 6-4, 7-5, 6-2 victory over British wild card Miles Maclagan.

Becker's biggest worry in the match wasn't actually losing. It was the chance that his pregnant wife, Barbara, might go into labor watching him.

"She was getting very excited toward the end of the fourth set, and I turned to her and told her to be quiet, to calm down a little because otherwise we have a baby on the court," Becker said.

Their second child is due in mid-August, Becker said, "but another five-setter and I don't know."

The only surprise Andre Agassi came up with was a new clean-shaven look as he came back two weeks after winning the French Open to beat Andrei Pavel 6-1, 6-2, 6-3.

There was a mild surprise in seeing Jennifer Capriati continue her own comeback by completing a 5-7, 6-3, 9-7 victory over Anke Huber in a match that had been suspended at 5-5 in the third set the night before.

And there was a surprise in seeing Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario, twice a Wimbledon finalist, struggle so much before beating qualifier Anna-Maria Foldenyi 4-6, 6-3, 6-4.

But nothing quite dazzled the crowd like Dokic's rout of Hingis.

Dokic, 5-foot-6 and quick as a sprinter, kept Hingis deep and drove her wide with angled, two-fisted backhands and huge forehands. Deft drop shots made Hingis pay for staying back. During a stretch of 11 straight games that she won, Dokic bobbed up and down at the baseline like a boxer warming up.

Five months ago in the Australian Open, it was Hingis who did the bobbing, beating the then-15-year-old Dokic 6-1, 6-2 in the third round. But that was hardly representative of the kind of tennis Dokic can play.

Though unknown to casual fans, Dokic was the 1998 world junior champion. She immigrated to Australia in 1994 from her native Serbia and turned pro late last year. She is coached by her father and, recently, former pro Wally Masur.

She made a big splash in early January when she beat Sanchez-Vicario, ranked No. 4 at the time, and Sandrine Testud, No. 15, as she combined with Mark Philippoussis to lead Australia to its first Hopman Cup title.

In Fed Cup play a few months later, she beat another tough player, No. 19 Barbara Schett.

Dokic's low ranking coming into Wimbledon didn't reflect the quality of her game as much as the limited opportunity she had to play tournaments. Age restrictions on the WTA Tour allow her to play only 10 tournaments and four Grand Slam events this year.

The victory over Hingis should put Dokic in the top 50, and she seems headed for the top 10 within the next year.

"She played a great match today," said Hingis, who recently invited Dokic to practice with her in Switzerland. "She didn't really let me get back into it. I had a few chances, of course, but I didn't take them."

Hingis later pulled out of the doubles competition, citing an unspecified medical problem.

"What went wrong?" Hingis was asked.

"I am not sure what went right, actually," she said.

She needs time off "from everything," she said, and won't play tennis for at least another month. Whether her mother, Melanie Molitor, is at courtside when she returns is uncertain.

"We just decided to have a little bit of distance and work more on our private lives," Hingis said.

This tournament was the first time mother and daughter have been apart at a Grand Slam event. Asked if that made a difference, Hingis responded:

"I guess so. A pretty big one."

Agent files suit against NFLPA

Associated Press

Sports agent William "Tank" Black sued the NFL Players Association on Tuesday, contending his business has been hurt by a complaint from the union.

The lawsuit was filed in federal court in Washington. Mike Butler, spokesman for Black's company, Professional Management Inc., said only that the suit addresses the disciplinary complaint the union filed against Black last month.

The NFLPA accused Black of making improper contact with former Florida players. The union could revoke Black's license if it finds him guilty of paying players before their eligibility had expired.

NEW YORK — The dollar edged down against the Japanese yen but finished higher against most other major currencies Tuesday in relatively quiet foreign exchange trading.

In late New York trading, the dollar fell to 121.68 Japanese yen from 122.42 yen Monday. The euro was quoted at $1.0320, down from $1.0345.

The dollar lost ground against the yen a day after surging while the Bank of Japan spent an estimated $5 billion buying dollars and selling yen in an effort to curb its own currency's rapid appreciation.

Japanese authorities are worried that a strong yen will hurt exports and hamper the economy's ability to recover from recession.

The dollar advanced against the euro and other European currencies, however. "The euro remains under a cloud," Estebanez said.

Against other currencies, the dollar was quoted at 1.5456 Swiss francs, up from 1.5428, and 1.4706 Canadian dollars, down from 1.4714. The British pound fell to $1.5898 from $1.5913.

Stocks fall

NEW YORK — Stocks fell sharply Tuesday, halting a run at new highs in the Nasdaq market, as investors remained antsy about interest rates and company profits for the nearly finished quarter.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 94.35 to 10,721.63 after a rebound attempt failed during afternoon trading.

Broader stock indicators also posted steep losses.

The technology-laden Nasdaq composite index came within 10 points of its April 26 closing record of 2,652.05, but finished the day 50.02 lower at 2,580.26. The loss ended a five-session winning streak that boosted the index by 232 points, or nearly 10 percent.

Analysts said investors are growing hesitant before the impending rush of company reports on the second quarter, which concludes at the end of this month.

"We're very choppy ahead of the earnings season," said Tony Dwyer, chief equity strategist at Ladenburg Thalmann & Co. But, he added, since there haven't been that many major warnings from companies, "earnings should be good."

Crude falls

Crude tumbled in the last minutes of trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange as speculators bet new inventory data would show stockpiles remain adequate for summer refining needs.

The American Petroleum Institute's weekly report has repeatedly defied industry expectations, as erratic American driving patterns during the peak consumption period clash with a year-over-year surplus.

Market participants expected the API to report increased crude and heating oil stockpiles in the past week as cargoes arrived from Europe. American refiners also have been reluctant to process crude because of relatively poor profit margins.

August crude fell 16 cents to $17.75 a barrel; July unleaded gasoline fell .03 cent to 51.15 cents a gallon; July heating fell .27 cent to 43.62 cents a gallon; July rose .01 cent to $2.238 for each 1,000 cubic feet.

Financier vanishes with up to $3 billion in clients' money

GREENWICH, Conn. (AP) — A money manager has vanished with as much as $3 billion in clients' money, leaving behind a things-to-do list (item No. 1: "Launder money") and astrological charts designed to answer such pressing questions as "Will I go to prison?"

Martin Frankel, 44, has not been seen since May 5, when an automatic alarm called firefighters to his high-security mansion in this rich New York City suburb. They found a blazing file cabinet and two fireplaces stuffed with burning documents.

Last month, insurance company regulators said Frankel's unlicensed brokerage — apparently run out of the Greenwich mansion — had siphoned off money from a dozen small insurance companies in five states.

The companies, based in Mississippi, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Missouri and Arkansas, were placed in receivership when they could not account for assets invested with Frankel's Liberty National Securities Inc.

Regulators said the insurers are missing at least $218 million, but a lawsuit filed by some of the companies put the loss at $915 million.

Also missing is as much as $1.98 billion from the St. Francis of Assisi Foundation, which was established by Frankel in the British Virgin Islands last August. It was supposedly a charity to help sick kids, but investigators suspect it was only a front for fraud.

A federal grand jury in Bridgeport has been investigating Frankel since mid-May, the Greenwich Time reported last month. A sealed warrant has been issued for his arrest, the New York Daily News reported Tuesday, citing unidentified law enforcement sources.

Among the papers seized after the fire was a handwritten list of tasks, the first of which was "Launder money." The second item on the list: "Get $ to Israel get it back in," according to a May 25 FBI affidavit filed in federal court in Bridgeport.

Also seized, according to the affidavit, were personalized astrological charts answering such questions as: "Will I go to prison?" "Should I leave?" and "Will I be safe?" The affidavit does not indicate what the stars held for him.

No attorney has identified himself as representing Frankel, and family members in Ohio, including Frankel's mother, told The Blade of Toledo that they had not heard from him in several weeks. He apparently was not married.

Law enforcement officials said Frankel used several aliases, including the name of his bodyguard, after being barred from trading by the Securities and Exchange Commission in 1992.

All of the insurance companies are owned by Thunor Trust, which lists Tennessee-based businessman John Hackney as trustee. Hackney did not return a call Tuesday.

In the months before the fire, Frankel spent more than $1 million on shopping sprees at Baccarat, Tiffany and Gianni Versace and trips to Rome, Geneva and London, according to financial records obtained by the Time.

Frankel's stone mansion is in Greenwich's "backcountry," a secluded area of multimillion-dollar estates, woods and horse trails. Since the fire, the long, hilly driveway that leads to his home and several other houses has been guarded by police.

Frankel, a native of Toledo, Ohio, had converted his $3 million home into a maze of offices with more than 80 computers and wide-screen televisions tuned to financial news channels. Frankel also owned a home next door.

Neighbors complained repeatedly about cars coming and going day and night. But the activity only increased, said Phil Russell, a lawyer who represents three neighbors on the cul-de-sac. Russell said Frankel did not socialize with his neighbors and never told them what kind of business he was in.

The FBI and federal prosecutors in Connecticut refused to comment on the case Tuesday.

Energy Resources

Energy library to relocate

From Staff Reports

The Midland Energy Library will relocate to its newly renovated facilities in the Midland Tower Building (MEL), according to MEL officials.

In an arrangement with Maralo LLC, owners of the building, the Library will occupy all of the second and third floors of the building plus certain storage space. Joe Pulido, Permian Basin Manager for Maralo, noted that the Library, occupying approximately 18,750 square feet of space, would become the largest tenant in the Midland Tower.

Maralo is the oil company formed by legendary Permian Basin wildcatter and oil producer Ralph Lowe. The company is now managed by his daughter Mary Ralph Lowe of Houston, who helped negotiate the relocation of MEL. Working on the move to the landmark Midland Tower were: Garner Wilde, MEL President; Gay Rulla, MEL Manager and James Henry of the Building Committee. The Building Committee consisted of: Wilde, Damien Barrett, Ronald M. Frederick, John D. Kullman and Gay Rulla, ex officio.

Renovation and modernization of the new facilities by Dean Heisel, contractor, is currently underway and is the space is expected to be ready for occupancy by year end.

The Midland Energy Library is a non-profit organization which collects and preserves geological, geophysical and petroleum engineering data for research. Officials of the 200 member Library say extra space was needed to cope with the abundance of new data that has been made available through numerous oil company mergers.

Mayor Bobby Burns also a tenant of the Midland Tower Building sent a letter to the Library congratulating them on their move to the building. "I am sure you will find the Tower a suitable location for your organization as well as a convenient location for your customers," said Burns.

Merger of two national supermarkets is approved

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government gave its blessing Tuesday to a merger of Albertson's Inc. and American Stores Co. that will create the second-largest supermarket chain in the nation.

To settle antitrust concerns about overlapping markets resulting from the $12 billion deal, the two companies agreed to sell stores in the largest retail divestiture in the Federal Trade Commission's history. Under the proposed order, the two companies will be forced to sell 144 supermarkets and five planned sites.

Antitrust regulators had contended the deal would substantially reduce competition in California, Nevada and New Mexico. Attorneys general from the three states helped reach the agreement and filed consent decrees in their own federal courts.

Albertson's, of Boise, Idaho, operates in the Midwest, West and Southern states. The Salt Lake City-based American Stores is spread across the country from Boston to California, but most of its stores are in California and Texas. The deal gives the companies a presence in 38 states and expected revenues of more than $36 billion.

Shareholders of both grocery stores approved the merger in November. It would create the nation's second largest supermarket chain after Cincinnati-based Kroger.

William J. Baer, director of the FTC's Bureau of Competition, said the agreement will ensure that consumers in those states "will continue to receive the benefits of competition — lower prices and good quality and selection — from supermarkets in their communities."

Albertson's said it plans to complete its acquisition of American Wednesday, but acknowledged that the divestitures were greater than they had anticipated. Analysts had predicted the companies would have to sell off between 50 and 100 stores.

"We clearly didn't think it was going to be quite this many," said Albertson's Vice President Mike Read. "But the board of directors and the company have elected to move forward. We still think it's a tremendous deal."

Summers nomination for Treasury secretary to proceed to Senate floor

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawrence Summers won a unanimous recommendation from members of the Senate Finance Committee on Tuesday to succeed Robert Rubin as Treasury secretary.

At the same time, Summers got a warning that although approval of his confirmation by the full Senate is expected to come easily — probably before the end of next week — his subsequent dealings with Congress could be more contentious.

"It doesn't guarantee that there won't be storm clouds down the road," said Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., at a hearing of the Senate Banking Committee that Summers attended even as the Finance Committee was voting its approval of his confirmation.

Senators on the banking panel, including Sarbanes, offered their overall support for Summers, noting his reputation as an academic economist and experience as Rubin's deputy since 1995.

"He is very well-suited to hand the baton to," said Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa.

Many senators, however, raised concerns about Clinton administration policies that Summers has helped institute. Contentious issues include U.S. participation in bailouts of economically troubled countries, including Russia, and opposition to quotas on steel imports and to a Republican proposal to repeal estate taxes.

Summers received similar cautions, along with the expressions of support, offered by senators when he testified before the Finance Committee Thursday. He has given no sign that he intends to deviate from the policies laid down by his predecessor, however.

"The right course has been set and our challenge will be to carry on," Summers said.

Rubin, a former Wall Street financier, announced plans last month to leave the Treasury Department and return to private life.

The Senate is expected to vote on Summers' nomination before adjourning next week for an Independence Day recess.

The Banking Committee has no special authority over Summers' confirmation, but shares oversight of many issues with the Treasury Department, including bank regulation and the design and production of U.S. currency.

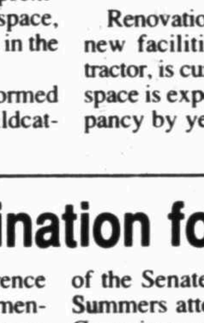
Dollar General expands presence in Midland with third store

By Mella McEwen

DOLLAR GENERAL will be opening its third Midland store at 1020 Andrews Highway, next to Bealls Department Store, in August.

Glenn Holchak, real estate representative for western Texas, said the new store will be in an 8,300 square foot location, part of the corporation's policy of putting stores in locations between 8,000 and 10,000 square feet.



McEwen

"We like the Midland-Odessa area," he said, noting that Odessa had significantly more stores — six — than Midland. "We needed to fill in the gaps."

The company has 3,800 stores in 24 states and last year had $3 billion in sales. The stores carry clothing, housewares, health and beauty aids, toys, greeting cards, seasonal merchandise and some food items.

Dollar General stores are found in metropolitan areas, mid-size markets like Midland-Odessa, and in smaller towns. At present, Texas is as far west as the company has expanded, but Holchak said long-range plans are to build a distribution center in Texas or in a nearby state to allow the company to expand further West.

Midlander Marc Powell has opened DISABILITY CLAIM SERVICES at 8 Meta Drive.

He explains that he acts as a representative, helping clients obtain disability payments from the Social Security Administration.

There are two types of disability benefits within Social Security, he said. The first is Disability Insurance Benefits, available to those who pay into the Social Security system, have worked a specified number of quarters and become disabled.

The second is Supplemental Social Security, which is for those with few assets, who have not paid into the system or haven't paid into the system for the required number of quarters, or are children.

He estimates that it takes six to 18 months for a client to receive disability payments, and his payment is on a contingency basis. "If the client wins, I get a portion of the back due benefits the government makes to make up the difference in the benefits the client should have been receiving," he said.

Those interested in applying for benefits or have a family member who may qualify are urged to call his office at 620-9393 so he can determine if they qualify or how strong a case they have to receive disability benefits.

Dear Abby/1D

terrific catch? Try trout

Angling for a

Illustration by DAN MARSULA / Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

By John Hayes
The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

Experienced trout anglers work to find them, love to catch them, but hate to see one die. Most environmentally conscious anglers consider trout to be far too valuable to catch only once. They safely release them after the battle.

Still, the best way to hook a kid on fishing is to allow him or her to proudly bring home the evening meal, and in frequently stocked, heavily fished waters, the sacrifice of a few trout is entirely appropriate. If you're going to harvest a crop as valuable as trout, however, it's wise to do it humanely and efficiently, and to derive as much dining pleasure as humanly possible from the experience.

Browns are colorfully spotted with orange and white circles and prefer stiff currents. Rainbow trout glimmer with a multicolored sheen and often seek the sanctuary of deep, slow pools. Brook trout are smaller but fiercely aggressive and hearty enough to maintain natural populations in some streams.

In general, browns are more flavorful than rainbows, and spunky little brookies taste more robust and wild.

If you decide to keep your catch, kill it quickly and humanely with a deep poke of a knife behind the head. Trout are generally too small and bony to fillet. As quickly as is practical, slit the catch from the anus to the gills, remove the organs and gill assembly, and scrape away the murky material lining the spine. Pat dry, carry in a zip-lock-style bag, and store the bagged fish on ice as soon as possible.

TROUT SCALES are so soft and tiny they look more like skin. The taste is fishier than the flesh, but allow your dinner guests to decide whether they want to eat it. Some anglers decapitate their quarry at the stream, and some cooks do it in the kitchen. Deboning the entire fish is easier, however, if it's done at the table with the head and tail intact.

As with most fish, trout is extremely easy to overcook. It takes only a few minutes on medium low heat for the slick, spongy flesh to whiten. When the meat flakes off easily with a fork, it's done.

Inexperienced dinner guests who dive in with forks and knives blazing will soon be spitting out globs of meat laced with dozens of tiny bones. There's a civilized method, however, to almost ensure that every bite will be virtually bone-free. At the table with the cooked trout lying on its side, pierce the skin behind the head and glide the blade gently across the dorsal, or spine, bones, past the dorsal fin to the tail.

IF YOU'RE CAREFUL, you'll feel the separation between the left and right back muscles as the knife skims across the vertical spine bones. With the flat of the blade pressing downon the dorsal bones, insert a fork into the cut just over the knife and simply flake off a slab of meat. If you're doing it right, you'll see the thin white bones sliding easily out of the meat as it passes. When the meat has been removed from one side, insert the flat of the blade behind the head and just under the visible dorsal bones to hold the meat down.

Lift the head straight up with the fork and the entire denuded skeleton and tail should pull away easily, leaving an attractive and great-tasting entree. Each recipe makes a single serving.

Store-bought trout are generally 11 to 12 inches in length, weigh a little over a half-pound including heads and tails, and have been de-boned, but usually not very well.

Anglers can't guarantee the size of their catches, but a good rule of thumb is one trout per serving.

For brown or rainbow trout over 15 inches, carefully separate the meat from the bones at the stove and serve as a fillet with the skin-side up.

Fresh trout goes exceptionally well with a cold, crisp, white wine.

All said, wild game cooking works best when animal instincts take over in the kitchen. Experiment a little and feel your way through the culinary waters without paying strict attention to the printed word.

Think of the accompanying recipes as overgrown trails that merely suggest the right direction – as imprecise as tree moss vaguely pointing the way north.

Trout Mahoning

Trout Mahoning was originally improvised over an open campfire using the next morning's omelet ingredients. If you choose to go rustic with it, don't grill – pan cook to retain the bacon grease.

2 strips thick-sliced, hickory-smoked bacon
1 slice sweet onion
1/4 green bell pepper
1 trout
1 portobello mushroom
Coarsely ground pepper

Note: For more servings add one slice of bacon for each additional trout.

Begin by frying the bacon on medium low heat until the fat is opaque but the meat is not crispy. Cut the onion rings into crescents, the pepper into long 1/4-inch slices and the mushroom into meaty slabs.

Sizzle it all for about 5 minutes in the bacon grease, then push the crisp, cooked vegetables to one side of the pan. Splay open the cleaned trout, lightly pepper and cook the inside of the fish for about 2 minutes until the meat is white. Flip it on its side, scoop the bacon and vegetables into the cavity and sizzle for about 3 minutes, peppering the outside to taste.

With the vegetables still inside, gently flip the trout – careful that the skin doesn't stick to the pan and cooked pieces don't fall away from the fish. Pepper again and cook for another 3 minutes.

To serve, scoop out the bacon and vegetables to present as a side dish. Tiny red- and white-skinned potatoes, boiled, buttered and topped with dill weed, make an easy and fitting accompaniment.

Loyalhanna Gold

1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil
1 slice sweet onion
1/2 teaspoon rosemary leaves
1/4 orange or yellow bell pepper
6 lemon wedges
1/4 tablespoon lemon and pepper seasoning
1/4 teaspoon ground turmeric
1 trout

Heat the olive oil on medium low until splashed water droplets dance across the surface. Add the rosemary, onion crescents, four lemon wedges and pepper sliced into long, curved strings less than 1/8-inch wide.

When the onions begin to turn translucent, dust the inside of the trout with lemon-pepper seasoning and a dash of turmeric, splay the cavity and place directly on top of the sizzling mixture.

Cook for about 3 minutes. Flip the trout and the lemon-vegetable mix as one, and sizzle each side for about three minutes, sprinkling with turmeric.

Serve with the onion and brightly colored pepper slices angled across the fish, and the remaining cold lemon wedges on the side.

Loyalhanna Gold looks and tastes particularly appetizing when served with a French-cut green bean and mushroom mix.

Pot pies don't live up to memories

By Linda Anderson

A long time ago in a galaxy . . . oops, sorry, let me back up and start again.

A long time ago when I was growing up in a small town not so very far from here, Friday nights were kick-back time for our family. My dad would come from work, put on some music (Glen Miller, the Dorsey brothers, etc.) and he and my mom would just relax and wind down.

That left me and my siblings to fend for ourselves, as far as dinner was concerned — which suited us just fine. We cleaned out leftovers or went out for hamburgers — or indulged in the slightly-forbidden frozen dinner. (My mother kept a few on hand for emergencies — she believed in serving us homecooked meals three times a day, but was smart enough to know that a TV dinner or two once in a while wasn't going to hurt anything.)

Anyway, my personal Friday-night favorite was Banquet pot pies. They came in chicken, turkey and beef (and back in those days, they came in tuna too, but I haven't seen a Banquet tuna pot pie for years), and I liked all of them.

So now, many years later, I have discovered Banquet pot pies again, and they come in some interesting flavors (besides the classics). I bought Chunky Chicken and Broccoli Pot Pie and Cheesy Potato and Broccoli Pot Pie (With Chunks of Ham), and took them home for me to try, since I knew my kids wouldn't want them.

Each of the 7-ounce pot pies cost 79 cents. That's something else that's changed since I was a kid — pot pies used to be priced at something like four for a dollar. But then $350 a month was a good wage too. Nostalgia can only take you so far before reality sets in.

Nutrition labels on the backs of the boxes shows that the broccoli and chicken pot pie contains 350 calories with 180 of them from fat; the cheese-potato-broccoli-ham pot pie contains 400 calories with 210 of them from fat (must be all that cheese).

Label advertising on both boxes goes like this: "Today's Banquet helps you bring your family to the table with more inviting meals than ever. Good, honest, wholesome meals. The kind that you'll feel good about serving. Satisfying meals that'll bring them to the table and keep them coming back for more."

There's also a little bit about the chicken-broccoli pot pie, but for some reason the cheese-potato-etc. pot pie doesn't get any advertising specific to it.

The taste test may have popped an old favorite childhood bubble. Or time may just be taking its toll on my memories. The new versions of Banquet pot pies seemed to (1) be smaller than I remember; (2) have thinner crusts (even though they are still double crusts); and (3) have less filling with fewer chunks of meat in them.

Even though it's advertised as having chunks of chicken, the chicken-and-broccoli pot pie I bought seemed to have only a few small pieces of chicken in it. And the amount of broccoli wasn't exactly huge either. The cheese-potato-ham pot pie was a little more satisfying, but seemed kind of salty, and was still limited as to the chunks of potato and broccoli it contained.

Can you tell I was disappointed? I guess memories can fool you. Or the pot pies really have not aged well. Happens to a lot of us.

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

DEAR ABBY

Swift response to emergency no cure all

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The letter from "Eileen in Port Angeles" about CPR and the people who judge the caregivers hit home. As a volunteer firefighter and emergency medical technician for 18 years, I have answered many calls where a person has died from cardiac arrest. It's hard when a stranger dies in your hands, and even harder when it's someone you know.

Van Buren

The evolution of CPR and defibrillation has made it possible to "save" a percentage of these people, but it's a very small percentage. Most cardiac arrests result in the patient remaining dead. Therefore it's important that anyone rendering care remember that once the heart stops, the person is clinically dead. Nothing they do is going to make that worse. If all of the resuscitation efforts fail, the care provider has not "killed" the person, nor contributed to his death, and it is NEVER the provider's fault that the person died.

If more people got involved and learned CPR and other basic first-aid skills, they would have a better understanding of life and death, and they wouldn't be so quick to criticize and look for blame that isn't there. — BOB GAJEWSKI, WALES CENTER, N.Y.

DEAR BOB: I have a stack of mail from readers echoing your sentiments. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: As a 30-year veteran emergency medical services technician and current CPR instructor, I can empathize with the overwhelming feeling of guilt experienced by "Mary Helen," who performed CPR on her brother. In our society, we are conditioned to believe that anything less than "winning" is failure. But to encourage that guilt by saying someone failed or "lost" a cardiac-arrest victim is reprehensible.

Potential rescuers must have the motivation to learn CPR. Second, they must be willing to get involved and take control in an emergency. Third, they must be able to exert the physical strength and emotional stamina. These challenges must be met before the actual CPR process begins. Most individuals are not prepared to go this far. Thankfully, "Mary Helen" was. Heroes never plan to be heroic; they just unselfishly give of themselves.

"Mary Helen," please recognize that you exhibited the courage, executed the skills and performed heroically. Remember, the ultimate decision was never yours to make. That load is not yours to bear.

We are excited by the entry of new technology and improved CPR skills that will allow us to substantially increase resuscitation rates. I am referring to the introduction of the Automated External Defibrillator (AED) and newly enhanced courses offered by national training entities for the general public. In the near future this device will be readily available in stadiums, airports, shopping centers, businesses, churches and homes. The challenge is to train as many people as possible in the operation of this user-friendly medical marvel.

I encourage your readers to contact their nearest CPR training facility and inquire about the AED and the latest courses available in its application. — BILL CARTER, CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

DEAR BILL: That's exciting news. About five years ago, I had my staff certified in a "heartsaver" course offered by the American Heart Association. Thank heavens we have never encountered an emergency, but it's better to be safe than sorry. Thank you for the reminder to call the association and ask, "What's new?"

DEAR ABBY: I have been married to my second husband, "Jack," for six years. We have two children. One is my son "Tommy" by a previous relationship. The other is our 3-year-old daughter, "Elizabeth." (Tommy's birth father has never been a part of his life.)

The problem is, Jack treats Tommy differently from the way he treats Elizabeth. He chastises Tommy when the TV is too loud, when he slams the door (I don't often consider it a slam), and rarely wants to spend any money on Tommy for haircuts, shoes, clothes, etc. If Elizabeth does any of the above, he doesn't "hear" it. If I buy something for our daughter, he seems content with it. He rarely has conversations with Tommy unless he's correcting him. A neighbor even noticed this and mentioned it to me.

If I try to discuss the situation, Jack becomes defensive and denies it, and the conversation ends. One day we did clear the air, and he said that Tommy is a constant reminder of my past relationship. Abby, Jack is the only father my son has ever known, and Tommy loves him. I don't want Tommy treated differently because of my life history — he has done nothing wrong.

What's ironic is that Jack used to criticize one of his relatives because she treated her stepson differently from her own. I see the early stages of this in my husband. — HEARTBROKEN IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR HEARTBROKEN: Since your husband has finally admitted that there's a problem, now is the time to take the initiative. Tell him that his behavior is extremely unfair and that you can no longer tolerate it because it's psychologically damaging to your son. Ask your physician for a referral to a family counselor who can straighten out your husband's thinking and help Tommy rebuild his self-esteem. If your husband refuses to cooperate, go to the counselor yourself, and take your son.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "LOCKED UP IN SAN DIEGO": You must find the courage to perform another "brave" deed. Write a short note to the San Diego chief of police. Explain that you have been locked in a house with no access to a telephone, by a husband who has raped and beaten you. Ask him to help you get out. The police can help you locate a shelter for abused women. After that, regardless of what your husband promises, stay away and do not look back!

Abigail Van Buren's column is distributed through Universal Press Syndicate.

Latest New York City trend: Lounge dining

By Amanda Hesser
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — I was sitting on a plush velvet sofa, a low oval coffee table before me, in a room with a low ceiling and dim random lighting. It was no different from a living room, a very nice living room, where I would have been happy just to sit and relax.

But this was a restaurant, Soma Park on the Upper East Side.

The server handed me a linen napkin and flatware, and I was about to experience a whole new way of dining. Sitting on that sofa, plate on my knees, just as I might eat at home, I lingered over seared hamachi with braised artichokes and a melon vinaigrette, and then roasted loin of veal with fava beans, cosseted all the while by an attentive staff.

It was a strange experience — and a strangely addictive one. Living room and kitchen had fused. I had a sophisticated meal and impeccable service without any formality.

It was the kind of casual dining that you might expect to find in the East Village, not in the East 50s. But Soma Park is just one of many restaurants, from downtown lounges to restaurants with caviar service, packing in the sofas and cushy chairs for dining in living room style. In a city where few apartments even have dining rooms, finding ways to recreate the warmth of home has led even luxurious dining spots like Daniel to start serving food in the lounge area in the last month or so.

Eating in these appealing spaces can sometimes be awkward and tricky, but the food is often good, sometimes surprisingly so, with smaller portions and lower prices than in the dining room.

"I think it's terrific," said Susy Davidson, co-publisher of the Briefing, a restaurant industry newsletter. "I see it as being American and wanting it all in blue jeans but I think it's also, 'I want it great and I want it on my terms.'"

In recent years, restaurant dining has lost much of its rigid structure, becoming a malleable concept that can be sculptured into any form the restaurateur wants. As diners yearned for better food with less formality, restaurant designers began creating more casual, often whimsical, dining spaces. Soon afterward, they began serving small appetizers and eventually full meals at the bar. Recreating home-like environments, then, is just a natural evolution from eating at the bar.

"With the fast-paced times and people not sitting down for long dinners, it allows for flexibility," said John Elliott Sime, the owner of Sime & Mandel, a design firm in East Atlantic Beach that designed Alaia, a new restaurant in Greenwich Village. Small groups can have a more intimate setting, he said; people can come and go.

"The real operative here is living room," Ms. Davidson said. "A great number of younger Americans have grown up with restaurants as their living room."

People use restaurants in many different ways. Some like to sit alone and read while having a few small dishes. Others like to bring in friends and entertain instead of doing it at home. Cushy lounges simply welcome these alternatives.

In the lounge at Daniel, for instance, people often reserve small enclaves of gray sofas and rust-colored chairs at lunch for birthday and anniversary parties. Why have a party at home when you can indulge in a place that feels as relaxed as home but looks part palazzo, part Park Avenue apartment?

Many of these lounges make you feel like you're in a fantasy living room that has the energy and fizz of a cocktail party. And because you needn't — and most times can't — reserve in advance or dress up, there is something deliciously indulgent about dining in them.

Although styles vary, the lounge concept is spreading like a rumor. Several restaurants with comfortable lounge areas are scheduled to open in the next few months.

With lounge dining you can just drop in and have a sommelier on your left offering suggestions, a waiter on your right setting down a plate of fabulous little flavors, and under you a beautifully designed sofa.

And you don't even have to sit up straight.

Forget Vidalia, Arizona onions sweeter

By Judy Walker
N.Y. Times News Service

PHOENIX — Have you ever wondered why you never heard of Arizona sweet onions before there was a festival to promote them? Well, here's the deal: Arizona sweet onions are not new. Onions grown in Arizona always have been sweet.

Agricultural sources say the alkaline soil abundant in Arizona minimizes production of sulfur, the component that gives rise to the sting of onions, the reason eyes tear as you chop into onion cells.

So, how come Arizona onions aren't as famous as their counterparts from Vidalia, Walla Walla and Maui, to name three locations whose names are associated with sweet onions?

If Ken Gablin and a large host of volunteer onion enthusiasts have their way, Grand Canyon Sweet Onions someday may be known as well as the Texas 1015s and other premium sweet-onion brand names.

Gablin's homemade onion ice cream, made from slowly caramelized sweet onions and lots of real cream, is a revelation he serves to curious visitors at his home in Sun City, Ariz. So, how did a retired entrepreneur get to call himself the King of Sweet Onions?

"I held my hand up and volunteered one day," Gablin said.

An herb enthusiast whose dad's Victory Garden in World War II was as big as a city block, Gablin had been through the Master Gardener training at the University of Arizona's Cooperative Extension Service in Maricopa County. He had worked in the booth at a sweet-onion festival one year with other master gardeners, who answered plant and bug questions from the public.

A year and many hours of marketing expertise later, Gablin became the annual onion festival's coordinator and probably the state's premier expert on the dry-onion crop.

"Anybody who wants free onion seeds, we'll give them to them. I don't think most people know what a sweet onion is," Gablin said.

Basically, it's an onion sweet enough to bite into like an apple.

Driving through fields in western Maricopa County planted in onions, grapes, wheat, corn, roses, artichokes and subdivisions, Gablin said he envisions a time when onions are grown at all elevations in the state, so they mature at different times and extend the spring harvest season of six to eight weeks.

"Arizona is one of the only places you could have sweet onions from April to October," Gablin said.

Dry-onion seeds are planted at desert elevations in October (the 1015 name of Texas sweets refers to their planting date) and harvested from late April to early June. At higher elevations, onions are planted as sets and harvested around Halloween.

One of the most common festival questions Gablin hears is "What am I going to do with 10 pounds of onions?" His wife, Trula, points out that if you make only an onion pie and French onion soup, that'll use up the entire bag. Or you can try these Arizona Grown recipes:

ONION AND SQUASH CASSEROLE

4 medium yellow squash, cut in 1-inch cubes 1 medium sweet onion, chopped
1 tablespoon butter, divided use
3/4 cup dry bread crumbs, divided use
1/8 teaspoon nutmeg
1/8 teaspoon black pepper
1/4 teaspoon salt
Vegetable cooking spray

In a large saucepan, combine squash with 1 inch of water. Bring squash to a boil. Add onion and cook, covered, for 10 minutes or just until tender. Drain; lightly mash vegetables. Add 1/2 tablespoon butter, 1/2 cup crumbs and remaining ingredients except cooking spray; mix well.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees.

Coat an 8-inch square pan with cooking spray and spoon in squash mixture. Melt remaining butter and combine with remaining crumbs. Sprinkle over squash. Bake for 30 minutes.

Makes 6 servings.

BLACK BEAN SALSA

1 tablespoon vegetable oil 2 large sweet onions, chopped
3 bell peppers, chopped
1 tablespoon chopped garlic
1 tablespoon chopped fresh cilantro
1 teaspoon salt
2 cans (15 ounces each) black beans, rinsed and drained

Heat oil in large skillet and saute onion, bell pepper, garlic, cilantro and salt until vegetables are tender. Add black beans. Simmer for 20 minutes before serving.

Makes 12 servings.

HONEY ONIONS

4 medium sweet onions 2 tablespoons tomato juice
1-1/2 tablespoons honey
2 teaspoons butter
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/8 teaspoon paprika

Peel onions and cut in half crosswise. Place onion halves, cut side up, in a 12- by 8- by 2-inch baking dish. Combine remaining ingredients; stir well. Pour over onions and bake at 350 degrees for one hour.

Makes 4 servings.
