Senate passes law aimed at banning flag desecration

Texas House supports exempting flag burning from 1st Amendment

AUSTIN (AP) — Members of the Texas House on Friday advocated a U.S. constitutional amendment that would exempt flag desecration from the right to free speech, then rose and recited the Pledge of Allegiance. The House resolution, which goes to the Senate, was sponsored by Rep. Sam Johnson, a former prisoner of war in Vietnam. It asks Congress to put an amendment before the states to protect the U.S. and state flags from desecration and exempt such desecration from protection under the First Amendment.

The action follows Wednesday's ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court that the burning of an American flag in Dallas during the 1984 Republican National Convention was protected by the constitutional right to freedom of speech.

"I was in the service for 29 years and fought under that flag in two wars — Korea and Vietnam," Johnson, R-Plano, said after the House adopted the resolution without objection.

"It seems to me that from a veteran's viewpoint — and there are a lot of them out there — that stomping on a flag is not the way to show respect to our country and our way of life," he said.

Johnson, who was an Air Force fighter pilot, said he spent nearly seven years as a prisoner of war after being shot down over north Vietnam in 1966.

During debate on the measure, Rep. Orlando Garcia asked Johnson of the court decision, "This is the Reagan Supreme Court that issued this opinion, is that correct?"

When Johnson suggested that the Supreme Court is of the people, Garcia, D-San Antonio, said, "It can't be the people. The people of this country would not agree with that Supreme Court decision. I agree with you. I think that Supreme Court needs to be told a message."

The measure directs that a copy of the resolution be forwarded to President Bush, "asking that he lend his support to the proposal and adoption of a flag-protection constitutional amendment."

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Friday passed legislation aimed at making desecration of the flag unlawful.

The aim of the amendment, approved by voice vote without dissent, is to circumvent the effect of a Supreme Court decision earlier in the week which held that destruction of the flag is protected by the First Amendment guarantee of free speech.

"I'm confident it's constitutional," Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., chairman of the judiciary panel and a leading congressional liberal, told his colleagues. Biden's measure was tacked onto an unrelated child care bill.

Biden's measure, which adds a new section to federal law dealing with defacing U.S. property, makes it a misdemeanor to burn, trample on, throw down or otherwise deface the flag.

Biden did not explain how the provision could be constitutional while similar provisions of existing federal law, under the Court's decision Wednesday, would not be. There was no one in his office after the Senate session, and no answer at Biden's home.

Earlier, House Speaker Thomas S. Foley said that while lawmakers are outraged by the high court decision of Wednesday, changing the Constitution should be viewed with caution.

Foley, D-Wash., said that "nobody in the House supports flag burning. Everyone condemns it and believes that there is no justification for the burning and disrespect to the American flag."

But he said he would "be extraordinarily slow to amend the First Amendment to the Constitution" which is "at the heart of our constitutional liberties and freedom."

About 10 lawmakers have already introduced constitutional amendments in the wake of the decision, Foley said. But any such amendment should be the subject of lengthy hearings and discussion in Congress, he said.

It was possible the House would consider next week a resolution similar to the one passed by the Senate this week expressing opposition to the view of the court.

Rep. Henry Hyde of Illinois, a senior Republican on the House Judiciary Committee, said he was exploring ways of getting around the decision without a constitutional amendment, possibly by taking away from the Supreme Court jurisdiction over lawsuits on flag desecration.

"I think the mood of the House is to do something effective and not just pass resolutions condemning the burning of the flag," he said. A new law would be simpler than a constitutional amendment, he said.

Williams takes case to GOP critics

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midlander and gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams in his own style Friday met charges that he failed to vote in the 1988 Republican primary and has donated to several Democratic campaigns. "Some little gnat has been rolling hand grenades up the hill at me this last week," he told Republicans at a reception, brandishing one of the weapons.

He warned that hand grenades that don't go off going up a hill are liable to roll back down, and "you may be in trouble yourself."

The reception kicked off a week-end of activities for state GOP leaders which will include an executive committee meeting this morning. Also planned is a reception honoring Texas Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance, who has yet to announce his intentions in the governor's race.

Williams produced copies of Midland County voting affidavits proving that he and his wife Modesta both had cast ballots in the primary election.

"I couldn't believe I hadn't voted," he said, recalling urging fellow Republican Tom Loeffler to run for the top spot and giving him "a pretty good hunk of money."

He attributed recent news reports to the contrary to anonymous telephone calls and unsigned letters to statewide news media. The candidate this week also has had to parry accusations that he contributed to Democratic candidates' campaigns in the past.

A Williams advisor, former Democrat and House Speaker Billy Clayton, felt the tactics indicated fear of Williams' candidacy among other GOP hopefuls.

"I've never seen it happen so early in a campaign," observed Clayton, who joined Republican ranks in 1963. "But I think it's good."

The additional press coverage for political neophyte Williams "is not going to hurt him one little bit," Clayton said.

Bush's son undecided about whether to build new stadium

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — George W. Bush, owner of the Texas Rangers, is as undecided about his political future as he is what to do with Arlington Stadium.

The president's eldest son told members of the Texas Press Association on Friday he has not decided whether he will make a gubernatorial bid for the 1990 election nor whether he will build a new stadium for the American League franchise he bought into earlier this year.

Bush said his mother, first lady Barbara Bush, already has been quoted as saying her son should not run for governor.

But Bush said, "I have been disregarding her advice since I was a teen-ager."

Bush said he would prefer that a Republican follow Gov. Bill Clements into the governor's mansion when his term expires in 1990. But having spent the past two years campaigning full-time for his father, George H.W. Bush, the younger Bush said he has not decided if he wants to compete with the likes of his former Midland oil colleague, Clayton Williams.

Williams, owner of Claydesta Communications and a longtime West Texas oil man, announced his candidacy Wednesday. Clements has said he will not seek another term.

"We have to revamp our stadium or we have to build a new stadium...But if we do decide to have a new stadium, that stadium will be built and located with our fans in mind because when our fans win, we all win."

— George W. Bush, owner Texas Rangers

As for Bush, "The ultimate answer will be what's best for my wife and my kids — period. I don't care what my Momma says."

Meanwhile, he said, he has yet to decide what to do about Arlington

Stadium, where more than 16,300 of its 43,508 seats sell for general admission prices.

"We are not able to effectively compete in baseball with a third of our stadium at $4 a seat," Bush said.

"We have to revamp our stadium or we have to build a new stadium. That's kind of exciting. We have a chance to put one of the most modern facilities...ever put into an edifice somewhere in the Metroplex."

"But if we do decide to have a new stadium, that stadium will be built and located with our fans in mind because when our fans win, we all win," Bush said.

Bush, who moved to the Dallas-Fort Worth area after his father's campaign, said he is encouraged in both his political and team pursuits by an economic turnaround in Texas.

"There is no place better for economics investment than in the state of Texas," Bush told TPA members attending the 110th Summer Convention. "And the Texas Rangers is an investment."

"This is not a toy — not a rich man's game," Bush said. "It's kind of like the old cowboy that's all hat and no cattle; I'm all name and no money."

Bush said he plans to make the Rangers economically viable and a good entertainment choice for fans by having "cost control flexibility," such as utilizing more minor league players and making judicious trades.

15,000 cans of food collected at concert to benefit food bank

By ED TODD

West Texas concert-goers accumulated 15,000 cans of food, two at a time, for the Permian Basin Food Bank Wednesday night.

In doing so, they gained admittance to a performance by country and western musician Earl Thomas Conley at Chaparral Center on the Midland College campus.

"It's a lot of food," said Dolly Neff, executive director of the Odessa-based Food Bank, which supplies canned and fresh foods to West Texas agencies that feed the poor and hungry. "It will last us at least a month."

Mrs. Neff said the Food Bank has not had any canned-food drives for several months.

"The agencies are begging for cans," she said, "so it really helped out."

The cost of admission to the otherwise free concert was two cans of food.

"We got some (pork-and-beans) gallon cans as well as the little (tuna) cans," Mrs. Neff said. "It was fantastic."

The cans were loaded in three trucks, two bobtail trailers and a van, and transported to Odessa for storage and distribution.

"In fact, next year I am going to bring that 18-wheeler" to Midland, Mrs. Neff said.

Chaparral Center was "wall-to-wall people," with the crowd estimated at more than 7,000, she said.

"It just proves to me one more time how supportive Midland is for agencies that are supplying food to the needy."

The concert was sponsored by Rogers Ford and KNFM-FM radio.

"People were really glad to do it," Doss Rogers, president of the auto dealership, said Friday. "Many brought more than two cans."

The donations, aside from being bargains for the concert-goers, demonstrated the "West Texas spirit" by getting people together to serve a worthwhile cause, Rogers said.

The concert also celebrated the 25th anniversaries of the Ford Mustang and Rogers Ford Sales.

"It was a concert to thank West Texans for our being in business," Rogers said.

Jim Mantel, KNFM-FM program director, said in 1968 the radio station sponsored a similar concert, which yielded 2½ tons of canned food.

The 1989 concert brought in more than seven tons of food.

"They told us (last year) that 2½ tons of food would last them 10 days if they were judicious with it," Mantel said. "They could give it away in one day to people who needed it."

WEATHER SUMMARY

The Accu-Weather forecast for 6 P.M., Saturday, June 24

From Staff and Wire Reports

Smooth weather will be sailing over Midland this weekend. For today, National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport call for partly cloudy skies and a peak temperature into the mid-90s. Winds today are to be southerly to southeasterly at 10 to 20 mph. The low temperature tonight is to be in the upper 60s, and the high temperature on Sunday is to be in the mid-80s. Friday's high temperature was 93 degrees, and the overnight low was 60. The record high temperature for June 23 is 102 degrees set in 1972, and the record low for a June 24 is 60 degrees set in 1946.

STATE

Most of Texas was blanketed in clouds on Friday, and heavy rains hit Southeast Texas.

A flood and flash flood watch was in effect through Friday night in Southeast Texas. Heavy rain was expected to continue in the area through Sunday.

A large system in the central gulf also was creating storms along most of the Coastal Plains.

There also were isolated showers and thunderstorms in the Permian Basin area.

Fog and drizzle was present in much of the northern Panhandle. Highs on Saturday will be mostly in the 80s and 90s, but could reach 106 in the Rio Grande valleys of the Big Bend.

NATION

Thunderstorms swept through southeast Texas on Friday, swelling rivers and creeks, and other storms drenched the Atlantic Coast, dumping 3 inches of rain on New Jersey and leaving parts of Maryland and Delaware without electricity.

Flash flood watches were posted overnight for southeast Texas, which already has received heavy rains.

Showers and thunderstorms also developed along the Atlantic Coast through Friday afternoon and were widely scattered from eastern Tennessee to New England.

In northwest Delaware, thunderstorms soaked west central New Castle County with 2½ inches of rain in one hour; Glasgow was hit with 1½ inches; and Newark received almost 1½ inches.

More than 30,000 customers lost power in the Dover-Wilmington, Del., area during the midday storm, utility officials said. More than 5,000 were left without electricity on Maryland's Eastern Shore.

Power was restored to about 95 percent of the customers in both cities and in outlying areas.

Also in Delaware, lightning struck 15 homes or buildings in Wilmington, New Castle County, fire officials said. County officials said they answered more than two dozen fire reports.

Showers and a few thunderstorms also rumbled through Kansas and northwestern Oklahoma. Conditions were cloudy from the Rockies to the Atlantic Coast, and sunny skies prevailed west of the Rockies.

Saturday's forecast called for scattered showers and thunderstorms from the middle Atlantic Coast through the upper Mississippi Valley to the northern Plateau region; showers and thunderstorms in the northern Rockies and the northern high Plains and in Florida to eastern Texas; scattered showers and thunderstorms from the southern Atlantic Coast to eastern Oklahoma and central Texas; and fair to partly sunny across the rest of the nation.

DEATHS

Dessie Williamson

MAGNOLIA, Ark. — Services for Dessie Saphronia Williamson, 85, mother of Robert "Bob" Williamson of Midland, will be at 1:30 p.m. today at the Antioch East Baptist Church with the Revs. Chester Jones and William Smith and Brother George Aston officiating. Burial will be in the Antioch East Cemetery under the direction of Lewis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Williamson, widow of Robert E. Williamson, died Thursday in a Magnolia hospital.

She was a homemaker and a Methodist.

Survivors include two other sons, Eldees Williamson and James Williamson, both of Stamps, Ark.; three daughters, Clara Brooks of Las Vegas, Nev., Dorothy Jones of Magnolia and Barbara Ann Keith of Houghton, La.; 20 grandchildren and 32 great-grandchildren.

Grandsons will be pallbearers.

Narvell Duvall

LAMESA — Services for Narvell Duvall, 74, of Midland will be held at 3 p.m. Monday at the Branon Funeral Home chapel with J.D. Polk minister, officiating. Burial will be in Lamesa Cemetery under the direction of Branon Funeral Home.

She married Willie Duvall on Aug. 14, 1940 in Bastrop. The couple moved to Lamesa in the fall of 1959. She was a housewife.

She moved to Midland after her husband's death on Feb. 16, 1989.

WILLIAMS

Williams told supporters the reception capped a "very exciting week" in which he announced his candidacy. "We were pleased with how fairly we were treated by the media," he said later, calling a homecoming rally in Midland one "highlight."

Asked about campaign strategy in light of his political inexperience, Williams said, "My message is my chance."

"Let me tell you what the voters in Texas are interested in," he told the Republicans, taking another opportunity to deliver an anti-drug message that has become the hallmark of his early campaign.

"Drug dealers are tearing apart the fabric of our society," he said, "and you and I know that that fabric is the family."

Texas also are interested "in the fact that a prisoner serves one day out of six," he said.

He claimed that for convicts to serve "one day out of three" in the Texas Department of Corrections the state will have to build 60,000 more prison beds, not the 10,800 approved by the Legislature during the regular session.

In addition to an already announced plan to combat drug abuse, Williams said he has "a bunch more exciting solutions coming down the road."

Boy goes home after his spine, skull reattached

PHOENIX (AP) — A "miracle child" who survived an accident in which his skull was pulled from his spine left the hospital Friday, two months after an operation to reattach the two saved his life.

Timothy Mathias, 10, was struck by a pickup truck and dragged 15 feet on April 26. Doctors had feared the boy would be paralyzed.

But Timothy can walk with the help of a walker and is expected to walk unimpaired in a few months. He left St. Joseph's Hospital and Medical Center in a wheelchair.

The five-hour operation in April was complicated by a huge blood clot at the base of the brain. Surgeons drained the clot and implanted a metal clamp reconnecting Timothy's spine and skull.

One of the doctors who treated the boy, Robert Spetzler of the Barrow Neurological Institute, said in April that Timothy was "an absolute miracle child" and that "by all rights he should be dead."

George W. Bush, son of President Bush, and owner of the Texas Rangers, talks about his baseball team at the 110th annual summer convention of the Texas Press Association in Arlington Friday.

BUSH

"If we have a good team, the fans will come," Bush said.

He also said he wants the team to be a role model for the community — not only as a team, but also individually.

"We have a responsibility in our sport to keep our game as clean and wholesome as it can be," Bush said.

When Mrs. Bush was invited to throw out the ceremonial first pitch at a recent game, for instance, the team provided seats for children involved in the Reading Is Fundamental program — his mother's pet literacy program.

Bush calls slain civil rights workers heroes

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush declared Friday that three young civil rights workers killed 25 years ago by Ku Klux Klansmen were "heroes," but he declined to promise their survivors he would work to reverse the effects of recent Supreme Court rulings on civil rights.

Bush met at the White House with the family members of Michael Schwerner and Andrew Goodman, both white New Yorkers, and James Chaney, a black Mississippian, whose lives were the subject of a fictionalized account in last year's Academy Award-winning movie "Mississippi Burning."

The families were on a commemorative visit to the capital, including an afternoon rally at the Capitol, to mark the 25th anniversary of the disappearance of the three young men.

In a statement released by spokesman Martin Fitzwater, Bush lauded the accomplishments of Chaney, Goodman and Schwerner, saying they "gave their lives in the struggle to guarantee one of democracy's most basic civil rights — the right to vote for all Americans."

"We can erect no greater monument to their memory than to ensure that the arrogance and bigotry that took their lives never again exists in America," Bush added.

But Rita Schwerner-Bender, who was married to Schwerner, told reporters she was disappointed Bush did not commit himself when they asked him to back bipartisan legislation "to deal with the Supreme Court cases that have so badly eroded civil rights in this country."

The court has drawn criticism from civil rights advocates for recent rulings that have chipped away at affirmative action and make it harder to win racial discrimination cases against employers.

That criticism was renewed Friday at the rally.

"We will continue to use the forum of baseball and our stadium for worthy causes in our community," Bush said. "And we constantly remind our players as role models to remain clean and drug-free. We in the Texas Rangers will not tolerate drug abuse amongst our players."

Likewise in the stadium, Bush pointed out the team officials have instituted "alcohol-free zones" for families and other fans who do not want to sit with drinkers.

"This is a family sport and we in the Texas Rangers will do everything we can to make this an acceptable place to bring families," Bush said.

"This present majority on the Supreme Court is far more dangerous than Bull Connor with a fire hose," Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the NAACP said. He was referring to the Birmingham, Ala., sheriff's action against civil rights demonstrators.

But Bush was non-committal Friday on the legislation the family members sought, telling them he is waiting for a Justice Department to complete a review of the new Supreme Court rulings, said Fitzwater.

The visitors also brought up the problems such as housing, education and medical needs as an extension of the civil rights struggle. In the meeting characterized by Fitzwater as a classic liberal vs. conservative discussion, Bush told them the federal government could not solve everything without participation from other sectors of society as well.

"I think he believes that a group of volunteers will solve the problem. I don't," Mrs. Schwerner-Bender said, referring to Bush's call for volunteerism.

She added that she asked the president if he envisioned inviting a homeless family to live in his Kennelbunkport, Maine, home to help solve the housing problem and he replied negatively.

Bush also did not express a position on their request for support of (universal and same-day) voter registration and elimination of such practices as frequent purging of voter rolls.

Bush has not taken a position on the various voter registration reform measures pending in Congress, said White House spokesman B. Jay Cooper.

Another participant, Julian Chaney, sister of the slain activist, said she was not disappointed to get no commitment because "I did not expect any commitment."

Tanker, tug boat collide

GALVESTON (AP) — An oil tanker and a barge-pushing tug boat collided at the mouth of the Houston Ship Channel on Friday, spilling up to 4,000 barrels of oil near Galveston Bay, authorities said.

The vessels collided about 6:20 p.m. as a tugboat owned by Coastal Towing was heading into the mouth of the ship channel while the Panamanian-registered tanker Rachel-B was heading out into Galveston Bay, said Petty Officer Charles Jones of the U.S. Coast Guard.

Jones said the Coast Guard is supervising cleanup operations as a private contractor tries to contain the oil with booms.

"We have no idea who was at fault now," Jones said. "We'll have to wait until the reports are finished."

But Jones said the tugboat captain's quick action kept the spill from becoming much larger. He drove the leaking barge he was pushing aground after the collision, stemming the flow of oil and preventing more destruction.

"He may have saved the tugboat and other barges," Jones explained. "It was going to flip on him unless he let it out."

The tugboat captain's name was not immediately available, officials said.

Jones hesitated to call the captain a hero for his action, saying he preferred to wait to see who was at fault for the collision.

The cleanup is being conducted by Garner Environmental Services.

Jones said the Coast Guard was monitoring the operation "and making sure they protect the environment."

The spill was minuscule in comparison with the Alaskan disaster that occurred March 24 when the Exxon Valdez rammed Bligh Reef, dumping almost 11 million gallons of heavy North Slope crude oil into Prince William Sound.

The Alaskan spill killed thousands of birds and sea mammals and caused extensive environmental damage to hundreds of miles of coastline.

Exxon and the Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. have been criticized for their slow handling of the spill.

Nun who was shot arrives in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — An American nun was returned to Houston Friday for treatment of wounds suffered earlier this week when she was shot in El Salvador by a gunman in a pickup truck.

Sister Mary Stanislaus MacKey, 73, suffered a shattered cheek bone when she was shot Wednesday evening, said the Rev. Ken Myers, a fellow Roman Catholic Church worker. He said she may lose sight in her left eye.

Sister MacKey, who was listed in critical condition, arrived at Houston's Hobby Airport at about 5:30 p.m. and then was taken by ambulance to St. Joseph's Hospital, hospital spokeswoman Ellen Durkel said. The nun worked at St. Joseph's as a surgical nurse from 1939-41, Ms. Durkel said.

Sister MacKey, a native of Ireland, is a naturalized U.S. citizen. She had worked in Central America since 1963 and in El Salvador since 1983.

Witnesses and authorities say one of several men in a pickup truck opened fire on another pickup truck that carried Sister MacKey and two other nuns outside Zaragoza, a town 10 miles south of the capital.

Sister MacKey, a registered nurse, worked at a Zaragoza home for orphans founded by Myers. It shelters about 200 orphans of the nine-year civil war between leftist guerrillas and the government.

Sister Ana Maria Brangan, who was driving, said she and the two other nuns were approaching Zaragoza from the capital when a yellow pickup carrying at least six men — four of them in the back — pulled alongside.

"They stayed alongside and pulled closer, and I didn't understand what was going on. Then I heard a noise and thought they had bumped us. I didn't realize it was a bullet," she said.

She said Sister Juana Flores saw a man standing in the back fire a single pistol shot.

She said she stopped the truck, and the attackers stopped just ahead. However, when she started, they fled, she said.

"There were at least six men in the truck and only one weapon. They may have been thieves. Maybe they were drunk," Myers said. In 1980, four American churchwomen were murdered by five National Guard troops, and the United States temporarily suspended aid to the Salvadoran government in protest.

The five were convicted of murder and sentenced in 1984 to 30 years imprisonment.

Extreme rightists and some armed forces officers have described nuns, priests and other churchpeople who work in poor communities as guerrilla sympathizers.

Cpl. Asencio Mejia of the Zaragoza Civil Defense, which is handling the preliminary investigation, said they have no suspects.

AUSTIN — The Texas Senate Friday approved a workers' compensation bill with tough safety regulations, an insurance rate rollback and mandatory coverage for all but the smallest businesses, but the House of Representatives is expected to offer a more business-oriented substitute next week.

Four days into the special session, House and Senate leaders predicted they could work out a compromise next week, although major differences remain over the role of juries in compensation appeals and how benefits for injured workers are figured.

The Senate bill, approved on a voice vote Friday afternoon after two hours of debate and several amendments, would rely on mediators to settle disputed claims from injured workers. Their decisions could be appealed through a modified form of jury trial.

The House plan relies on an administrative hearing process whose decisions would be appealed to district court judges, excluding juries from the process.

The Senate bill also would provide a larger increase in benefits than the House version, which proposes a $3 increase in the maximum weekly benefits, to $241.

The Senate bill would require all businesses with four or more workers to provide the coverage, which is now optional, but it would phase in the coverage over four years. It also gives employers the right to be notified of the progress of claims as part of a "bill of rights."

House Speaker Gib Lewis, a Fort Worth Democratic businessman, said he expects the House Business and Commerce Committee Monday to amend the Senate bill with sections from the House version, before sending the revised bill to the House floor for action Tuesday or Wednesday.

"From what I've heard, I would think the House would substitute some version which might be close to the Senate version," Lewis said, but he said there is still concern over jury trials on appeals.

While Senate sponsors insisted they removed "trial de novo" or new trials on appeals, Lewis said, "They've taken it out as a word but as a system it's still there."

Rep. Richard Smith, a Bryan Republican businessman and the House sponsor, said he considered the Senate's jury provision the main feature of trial de novo. "Our position is...we need to eliminate retrying the case at the jury level."

But Sen. Cyndi Krier, a San Antonio Republican lawyer involved in the negotiations, said appeals under the Senate bill would use evidence from the arbitration and mediation hearings and the trial would decide only on issues that were not settled in the earlier stages.

The bill's co-sponsors, Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, and Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, both lawyers, said they expected the bill will require a House-Senate conference committee to work out the differences.

A bill this long is probably going to be resolved in conference, but I don't want to foreclose the House working its will," Caperton said.

Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, a lawyer who led the Senate workers compensation subcommittee in the regular session, applauded the sections on medical cost containment and worker safety, but he objected to the reliance on mediation rather than strong administrative regulation of the system. He also said the bill needs more objective standards to determine benefits.

Glasgow, who with five other senators were recorded against the Senate bill after the voice votes, said the House version would do more to regain control over the 75-year-old system.

Montford, whose district includes Odessa, said the bill has "the strongest objective criteria for determination of benefits you've had in the history of jurisprudence in the state." He added that workers would need medical substantiation for their claims. "No longer will you decide benefits on the basis of grunting and groaning," he said.

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, a businessman whose district includes Midland, voted against the bill.

Father says son called after release

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Secretary surrounded the release of a U.S. citizen kidnapped in the occupied Gaza Strip, but the man's father in Texas said his son called home to say he was fine.

Nicholas George of San Antonio said he could not divulge details about Friday's release of Christopher George, 35, of N.J., who was freed after being held about 30 hours. He was kidnapped Thursday in Gaza City.

"The circumstances under which he was released I cannot tell you," the elder George said. "I can't even tell you where he was released."

George said his son had called his home "and spoken to both my daughter and his wife." He told them he was well and would see them soon, George said.

The younger George earlier had shown reporters a six-page letter he said the kidnappers asked him to deliver to President Bush. The letter, which requested a meeting between Bush and PLO leader Yasser Arafat, said the kidnapping was a plea for people worldwide to understand the need for Palestinian independence.

George was released at the U.N. hostel on the beach in Gaza City, then taken to the Marne House hotel by about 10 Americans from the U.S. Embassy.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Len Lefko said he was "not aware of any conditions" for the release.

The Israeli army on Friday blamed the kidnapping on terrorists with ties to the Palestinian Liberation Organization. Palestinian accounts said Chris George was the first foreigner to be kidnapped in the occupied lands, said Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesman Alon Liel.

George said he doubts the kidnapping will prompt his son to leave the Mideast. Chris George, who works for the Save The Children Foundation, has been in the Mideast more than 12 years, he said.

Mortuary denies wrong body put in casket

DALLAS (AP) — A funeral home director has disputed a claim that his employees placed the wrong body in a casket in preparation for a funeral in December.

Betty Gunter King filed a suit in state district court last week against Cedar Crest Funeral Home and funeral director Walter Wilson claiming the wrong body was put in her mother's casket.

The suit alleges that the bodies later were switched after mourners had paid their last respects to a stranger. Ms. King is seeking an unspecified amount in damages.

Wilson denies that a body mix-up occurred, saying King is "kind of weird."

"As far as I know, she's making it up," he told the Dallas Times Herald. "There was never a mix-up of bodies." Wilson did not immediately return calls Friday from The Associated Press.

Relatives say they did not recognize the body of Nina Lorraine Gunter when they saw the body in a casket during her funeral in December. Ms. Gunter, 67, died at Methodist Medical Center on Dec. 1, 1988.

Mrs. King claims in her suit that she called Cedar Crest to arrange a funeral and that the body was taken to the funeral home and prepared for a funeral scheduled Dec. 7.

David Wilk, a Dallas lawyer representing the family, says the funeral arrangements cost $1,680.

The suit alleges that after the burial, relatives began to discuss how Ms. Gunter didn't look like herself.

"After the burial, everybody was saying, 'That didn't look like Lorraine,'" said Ruth Edwards, Ms. Gunter's sister said. "So they went back to the funeral parlor and found Lorraine's body lying in a back room."

"It was very upsetting," she said. Family members said Ms. Gunter was a "delicate lady" who weighed about 100 pounds and had a dark complexion.

The woman in the casket appeared to be "older than my sister, had very light skin and was very heavy," Ms. Edwards said.

"She must have weighed 200 pounds," she said.

But no one at the funeral, she said, mentioned anything about it until the burial was complete at Lincoln Memorial Cemetery.

"Someone said, 'That really didn't look like Aunt Nina,'" Wilk said. "And another one said, 'You know, I didn't think so, either.'"

It was then that the family members returned to the funeral home where they found Ms. Gunter's body in a room at the rear of the funeral home.

Mrs. King identified the corpse as her mother's, Ms. Edwards said.

"It knocked her off her feet," she said.

Ms. Edwards said funeral home employees admitted the mistake, but family members were too grief-stricken to do anything and went home, returning the next day.

By this time, however, the funeral home had exhumed the woman's body, put Ms. Gunter in the coffin and reburied it, without telling Ms. King or getting her consent, family members claim.

"There's no truth to that," Wilson told the Times Herald. He said Ms. Gunter "was buried the same day of her service."

Wilk said he has six witnesses who agree that the woman buried Dec. 7 wasn't Ms. Gunter. Wilk said his office is trying to determine the identity of the woman and what the funeral home did with the body.

'Batman' ticket holders angry when doors locked

HOUSTON (AP) — A special showing of "Batman" grew violent when angry ticket holders who had been left standing outside the movie theater surrounded a radio station's promotional van, rocking the vehicle and shouting obscenities, authorities said.

A spokeswoman for KLOL-FM said the Thursday night skirmish began after the station inadvertently passed out too many free tickets to the screening, forcing the theater to close its doors to an overflow crowd.

"It was a pretty ticklish situation for a while," police Sgt. J.C. Mosier said Friday. The crowd dispersed when two patrol cars arrived at Houston's Woodlake Cinema, Mosier said.

"I understand it was a semi-riot, and apparently a bunch of people surrounded the KLOL van and started to rock it as if they were trying to turn it over," Mosier said.

Station spokeswoman Sig Izbrand confirmed police accounts, but described the conflict as "relatively benign."

"The rumors were spreading like wildfire. By the time I heard about it, it was a riot and there were 400 people out there," said Ms. Izbrand, who estimated about 150 ticket holders were denied entry to the theater.

"But after looking into it further, I believe it was a small number of people who were shouting obscenities."

There was no damage, and no injuries were reported, officials said.

"We've never had this problem before, but 'Batman' apparently carried a tremendous amount of appeal and it attracted a lot more people than we've ever had before," she said.

The station plans to offer another free showing for the leftover ticket holders, she said.

Pueblo crew to receive medals

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 20 years after North Korea's capture of the spy ship USS Pueblo, the U.S. government on Friday reversed itself and agreed to give medals to all 82 aboard who were held captive and tortured for 11 months.

Vice Admiral J.M. Boorda, chief of naval personnel, told a House Armed Services subcommittee of the decision at a hearing that featured emotional testimony from Lloyd Bucher, the Pueblo's retired commander.

"The Navy feels that the circumstances of Pueblo meet the spirit and intent" of a medal for prisoners of war established by Congress in 1965. Boorda said in testimony he was specifically authorized by the Pentagon and the Bush administration.

"I personally feel that we as a nation should recognize the sacrifices made by these crew members," he said. "They have earned it."

Bucher said his men had been "dumbfounded, justifiably angry and deeply hurt" when they at first were denied POW medals. That was due to a finding by Pentagon lawyers that they were technically detainees rather than prisoners of war because there was no open conflict between the United States and North Korea at the time of the Jan. 23, 1968 capture.

STATE

"Those guys (crew) went from teen-age to adulthood in one hell of a hurry, and they did it with a degree of dignity and courage that has never been exceeded in the history of this county's military."

— Lloyd Bucher, retired commander of Pueblo

His voice halted as he concluded his testimony: "Mr. Chairman, those men were America's sons. They did as bid by this country, and more."

In an interview later, he called the legal reasoning behind the denial of medals "contrived" and said it hid the real reason the medals were denied.

"They were looking at us like something you'd want to put under the rug. It was a calamity for our country, to be captured at noon on the high seas. It's an embarrassment to a lot of people. It's gone down as something that most elements of our government would rather forget about."

Bucher's surrender of his small ship, loaded with intelligence information, was harshly criticized later and he even was recommended for a court martial, although that request was denied.

"I don't appreciate being second-guessed, but I know it's inevitable in this world," Bucher said. "It's been kind of an uphill battle" to win the recognition he said his crew deserves.

Most of the crew members were teen-agers at the time of the capture, he said. During their captivity, they were beaten with pieces of lumber, burned on radiators and had their teeth kicked out by North Korean soldiers.

"Those guys went from teen-age to adulthood in one hell of a hurry, and they did it with a degree of dignity and courage that has never been exceeded in the history of this county's military," Bucher said.

Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., has introduced legislation specifically recognizing the Pueblo crew — 77 of whom are still alive — as eligible for the POW medal. Slattery said he was alerted to the problem by a crew member, Steven Woelk of McLouth, Kan., who was permanently disabled in the attack.

Boorda said the Pentagon would support legislation to amend the law so the Pueblo crew could receive the POW medal.

Flag added to 'space spinoff' exhibit

CHICAGO (AP) — A flag from outer space joined super-absorbent diapers, a Teflon frying pan and heated ski boots on Friday at an exhibit of "space spinoffs" — everyday products developed through space research.

Astronaut Jerry Ross took an official Museum of Science and Industry flag into space on the 1988 Atlantis space shuttle mission, and returned the flag to the museum as a memento for the exhibit.

"Even though we put a little over 1.8 million miles on that flag in four days," it's still in good shape, Ross said as he presented the royal blue and white nylon flag bearing the museum's name and initials.

Ross, 41, a native of nearby Crown Point, Ind., used to visit the museum as a boy, and wanted to take on the Atlantis mission a reminder of a place that helped spark his interest in space.

"It captured my imagination and helped foster the goals I had" of becoming an astronaut, he told a small crowd gathered at the South Side museum.

The flag was stored in a vacuum-sealed container in a sub-floor portion of the spacecraft during the December flight, Ross said. It will be displayed permanently at the museum.

While the flag doesn't exactly qualify as a "space spinoff," it easily upstaged the 100 such items on display for several little boys whose eyes sparkled with delight as they watched Ross, wearing his dark blue spacesuit, present the flag to James Kahn, the museum's director.

The real space spinoffs are consumer products and industrial processes that were developed through three decades of space research.

More than 30,000 items, including Velcro and the Jarvik artificial heart, have been developed from technology associated with the nation's space program.

One display case features a shiny potato chip bag made from a material similar to that which formed the skin of a radio satellite used in the 1960s.

Another contains a pair of ski boots equipped with a battery-operated heating element that can be turned on or off. The boots were patterned after boot liners for lunar spacesuits.

And there's a ceramic tennis racket and fishing reel developed from early use of graphite composite materials during the 1973 Skylab missions.

Ross also donated to the exhibit a photograph he took of Chicago while traveling 5 miles a second about 270 miles above Earth.

The museum shows up on the picture as a miniscule dot adjacent to the Lake Michigan shoreline.

Woman to be paid for run-in with bull

MINOT, N.D. (AP) — A rodeo group must pay more than $18,000 to a woman injured when an enraged bull jumped three fences and charged into the bathroom, a judge ruled.

The indoor rodeo arena's 5½-foot restraining fences should have been higher to contain the bull, even though he "performed a routine that even an Olympic steeplechase horse" would have trouble duplicating, said District Judge Jon Kerian.

The bull, after throwing its rider and chasing a rodeo clown out of the ring, went over the fences and down a hall before bursting into the bathroom, according to testimony.

The animal pinned Barbara Deck against a wall, injuring her left shoulder and arm, and kicked out a bathroom sink before the woman was rescued by cowboys, said her attorney, David Hogue.

The North Dakota Rodeo Association must pay Mrs. Deck $15,000 plus more than $3,000 in medical expenses for the July 1985 incident, Kerian ruled Wednesday after a one-day trial. Kerian also awarded Daniel Deck $3,000 for the loss of his wife's services in farm chores.

Greek ship spills 1 million gallons of heating oil

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — A Greek oil tanker hit an offshore rock Friday afternoon and leaked about 1 million gallons of heating oil into the Atlantic Ocean, the Coast Guard said.

The 560-foot tanker World Prodigy, carrying 7.6 million gallons of No. 2 heating oil, struck a rock at Brenton Reef, immediately south of Newport, at 4:40 p.m., said Petty Officer Ellen Harrington of the Coast Guard office in Eoston.

The ship, bound for Providence, was pulled off the rock almost immediately and anchored nearby. The leak was stopped at about 9:10 p.m., after about 1 million gallons of oil had leaked, Harrington said.

The Navy began replacing booms around the ship with a containment curtain shortly after 10 p.m. "They'll determine overnight what the immediate environmental concerns are and place booms around those areas," she said.

The White House is sending Environmental Protection Agency Administrator William Reilly, Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan and other White House advisors to the scene, said Andrew McLeod, spokesman for Sen. John H. Chafee, R-R.I.

The delegation will fly over the spill Saturday morning. Gov. Edward D. DiPrete and top state environmental officials flew to the scene by helicopter.

The Coast Guard initially reported that the ship was carrying a local pilot, but Arthur Markos, DiPrete's chief of staff, said the ship's captain told the governor there was no pilot. "There is a pilot required in that area," Harrington said, who added that the Coast Guard was attempting to confirm a report that there was no pilot on board.

Markos said state officials are considering legal action, but plan no criminal charges. "Our bay is very important to us. We're a very small state," Markos said.

Michael A. Annarummo, deputy director of the state Department of Environmental Management, said Coast Guard divers had reported finding two huge holes in the ship.

"There's a long 150-foot knifefike gash and divers are now talking about a wider gash lower on the ship," Annarummo said.

Annarummo said state officials were confident they had enough booms to contain the spill, and said it was a lucky that the spill was heating oil.

"It's a light fuel oil," Annarummo said. "The plus of that is you don't get the heavy staining or coating or adhesion. It breaks up easier and evaporates."

Harrington said the slick was moving east, parallel to the shore and away from the mouth of Narragansett Bay, but Annarummo said sensitive wildlife areas in the bay could be in danger by morning. "That tide's going to change on us," he said.

There were no immediate reports of injuries or harm to wildlife.

The Coast Guard said the ship is owned by Ballard Shipping, but did not know who owns the cargo.

Brenton Reef, a nautical landmark where America's Cup yacht races were held for many years, is within sight of the shore and of the main shipping route into Narragansett Bay. The cause of the accident was not known, she said.

Coast Guard Lt. Alan Brown said the spill should be a lot easier to contain than the crude oil spill that devastated Alaska's Prince William Sound last winter when the tanker Exxon Valdez struck a rock near the port of Valdez.

"With any luck at all, the seas are calm enough that we'll be able to boom all around it," Brown said. "Nothing like Alaska where it got out of hand before anyone was there."

Dial-a-porn entrepreneur feels triumphant by high court ruling

NEW YORK (AP) — Busty Bernice was on duty as usual Friday, giving callers a telephonic tour of the Lingerie Corner. The U.S. Supreme Court said it was OK.

The young woman's discussion of explicit sex acts on a recorded line was part of a multimillion-dollar industry — one that the nation's highest court ruled has the constitutional right to do business, under some restrictions.

"It's fantastic," Gloria Leonard, publisher of High Society magazine and one of the leading dial-a-porn entrepreneurs, said of the ruling. "We feel very triumphant. It really is a victory for the First Amendment."

Ms. Leonard opened her "adult telephone service" in 1983, when the newly broken-up telephone companies first offered dial-up information services to independent operators. Callers pay the fee, usually a few dollars, on their phone bill. In exchange, they can hear Bernice and her counterparts pant.

"I know it started in 1983 because that's when the complaints started coming in," said Diane Killory, general counsel of the Federal Communications Commission. The problem: Curious children were calling the numbers umpteen times, racking up thousands of dollars in phone bills.

Parents were not amused. Neither were organizations such as the Children's Legal Campaign in Phoenix, which has been mounting lobbying and legal campaigns to have dial-a-porn banned as a corrupting influence on minors.

"There's no way to discriminate between adults and children in the listening audience," said Len Munsil, the campaign's chief lawyer. "And it's quite clear that these messages are harmful to children."

In arguing her case, Ms. Leonard cites First Amendment protections of free speech. And she points to dial-a-porn's enormous financial success as evidence that it meets community standards of acceptability.

"At its peak, a number of years ago, we were getting half a million calls a day," she said. "The number of willing customers for these services is testimonial that it's a national standard."

While her business is off dramatically — down to perhaps 5,000 calls a day, Ms. Leonard said — she maintained that is because of a proliferation of competitors across the country, not any diminution of interest in sex talk.

"There are dozens if not hundreds of these numbers in every city," she said. "This stuff has really taken off, on a mom-and-pop basis." However, a source in the Justice Department, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said many of the dial-a-porn services appear to have corporate links.

Whoever runs them, the opportunity for profit is enormous. Overhead is low: All that's required is a contract with the phone company for an information service number, a switchboard capable of handling many calls at once, and women and men willing to be recorded making suggestive words and noises.

While precise figures haven't been compiled, court records say 180 million dial-a-porn calls were placed in New York in 1984.

American captive freed with letter addressed to Bush

JERUSALEM (AP) — An American relief worker kidnapped in the Gaza Strip was released Friday along with a letter from his captors urging President Bush to meet with Yasser Arafat and appealing for greater understanding of the Palestinian problem.

Chris George, co-director of the U.S.-based Save the Children Federation, said he was treated well during his 30 hours in captivity. George, 35, of Montclair, N.J., was freed at a U.N. hostel on Gaza City beach, then taken to the Marne House by U.S. Embassy officials.

"They were nice to me," he said. "I practiced my Arabic during this period."

Later, speaking to journalists outside his home in the West Bank town of Ramallah, he said: "When I asked my kidnappers, 'Why me?' they said, 'Because you are a well-known and important American.'"

He said he knew one of his kidnappers and identified him as Mohammed Abu Nasr, who signed the letter George was asked to relay to Bush.

Nasr is believed to be a Palestinian released from an Israeli jail in a 1985 prisoner swap. Palestinians in Gaza say he is not known to be affiliated with any political faction.

The affiliation of the abductors remained unknown. The Israeli army blamed "terrorists linked to the PLO." The Palestine Liberation Organization denied involvement.

State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said a note in Arabic attributed the incident to the Palestinian Popular Army, about which the United States has no information.

In the 13-page letter to Bush, the captors said they kidnapped George to draw world attention, particularly American, to Palestinians' plight.

WORLD

"I appeal to you in my name and the name of my comrades and all my comrades in jail and all Palestinians to do your best to deal seriously and effectively with the Palestinian cause."

"Why don't you do your duty and receive the head of our state, Mr. Yasser Arafat, in your office?" the letter said.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Len Lefko said he was not aware of any conditions for George's release.

Ann Nixon, co-director of Save the Children in the occupied territories, said George immediately called his wife, Elizabeth Webb. The couple have two daughters.

"He said he was very well treated and thought his family probably suffered more than he did," Ms. Nixon said.

George was the first foreigner kidnapped since Israel captured the Gaza Strip and West Bank in the 1967 Middle East war.

The territories have been torn by a Palestinian revolt against Israeli rule for the past 18 months, and more than 520 Palestinians have been killed.

During the uprising, the PLO-backed underground has maintained a policy exempting foreigners from attacks.

In Tunis, PLO spokesman Ahmed Abdul-Rahman denounced the abduction. He said earlier that the PLO was "making the greatest effort" to secure George's release.

Arab reports said at least two handwritten communiques from George were passed to the Red Cross during his captivity, outlining demands for the release of Palestinian prisoners.

The reports said George wrote that he was taken by five men armed with a machine gun and grenades.

Israeli officials said he may have known the man who lured him from his office.

A Palestinian journalist shown one of George's letters said it was written in English and addressed to U.S. Ambassador William Brown and Bush.

In the letter, George said his captors were demanding Israel release seven senior Palestinian activists, including Sheikh Ahmed Yassin, spiritual leader of the Hamas fundamentalist movement, and three members of PLO factions.

George is fluent in Arabic and has worked in the Middle East many years. He was with the Peace Corps in Oman more than a decade ago and worked in the Palestinian refugee camp of Ein Hilweh in Lebanon with Save the Children before moving to Israel in January 1986.

U.S. soldier cries during court-martial on espionage charges

FULDA, West Germany (AP) — An American soldier broke down in tears during his court-martial on espionage charges Friday and pleaded for forgiveness for handing U.S. Army defense secrets to communist East Germany.

"I'm sorry for what I've done," Spec. 4 Michael A. Peri sobbed during his testimony. "I just want forgiveness from the unit and the Corps," he said.

The defendant also said he received no money from the East Germans.

In testimony earlier Friday, Peri's commander said the information he gave East Germany was crucial and concerned the Army's electronic defense capabilities.

Peri, 22, of Laguna Niguel, Calif.,

pleaded guilty Wednesday to charges he gave defense secrets to East Germany during his disappearance in February from his unit in Fulda.

He worked as an electronic signal interceptor in the S-2 intelligence section of the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment.

Peri disappeared from his unit Feb. 20, crossing the border into East Germany with a small computer and computer discs containing classified information. He returned March 4 and was arrested.

Peri said he returned "because I couldn't handle leaving my parents behind, my friends behind. Taking what I had coming was better."

Peri's parents, Fred and Winnie Peri, sat in the back of the courtroom, holding hands and sobbing.

Under questioning from his attorney, Maj. William G. Stokes, Peri cited job pressures and a lack of privacy in Army life as the reasons for his actions.

Peri said that during his stay in East Germany, communist security officials in civilian clothes interrogated him at a house north of East Berlin.

Just before leaving East Germany, Peri said, he asked communist officials to hand back the computer and discs, and they complied.

U.S. military prosecutors say it appears the East Germans copied the discs before giving them back.

Asked by Stokes if he was given money by the East Germans for the information, Peri replied: "No, I was not, sir."

Peri's parents also testified. "He was a perfect child, he never gave us any problems," his mother said.

The defendant's father, a civil engineer, said, "I'm proud to call him my son."

Col. John N. Abrams, Peri's commander, testified the defendant was a valuable part of the unit's intelligence section.

Asked by chief prosecutor Maj. Michael D. Graham how he assessed the damage done by Peri's actions, Abrams said: "Those plans (taken by Peri) show the wisdom and judgment of the field commander who is directing the battle."

Abrams said one part of the classified plan "shows how I will specifically distribute and organize electronic warfare."

Also Friday, an Army psychiatrist described an examination conducted on Peri after his arrest.

"He was so wrapped up with himself that he could not make connection with others, either male or female," said Col. Robert G. Scheerer, chief of the psychiatry section of the 97th General Hospital in Frankfurt.

"It is our belief that he is not getting messages from the real world," Scheerer testified. But he said he believes Peri knows right from wrong.

Californians crack down on attorneys

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In California, which has more lawyers than any other state, more than 10,000 citizens telephoned the state bar association last year to complain about their attorneys.

Most said their lawyers had disappeared or taken their money or failed to pursue a case. Many said they couldn't get a phone call returned. Occasionally they claimed a lawyer was addicted to drugs.

Of those complaints, about one-tenth led to formal investigation by the bar, and a record 134 cases ended with the most extreme censure available — disbarment, which requires approval by the California Supreme Court. That was an increase of 40 percent over the previous year.

The figures, supplied by the bar, are fairly staggering. Is California filled with bad lawyers or what?

"You have to realize that one-sixth of all the lawyers in the United States are licensed in California," said the California Bar Association's new chief trial counsel, James Bascue. With increased numbers come increased problems, he said.

With 115,000 lawyers licensed to practice in the state and citizen complaints increasing, the bar responded to critics of its moribund discipline system with a wave of sweeping reforms, which could become a model for the nation.

"I can't think of a state that has undergone such a comprehensive overhaul of its discipline system," said Mark Lyon, disciplinary counsel with the American Bar Association's Center for Professional Responsibility in Chicago.

Washington, D.C., comes in second to California for having the most lawyers within its boundaries, although many of them work in government. New York is third, but the New York discipline system is broken down into districts with each one supervised by a state appellate court.

With more than a half-million lawyers in the United States, the ABA does not supervise discipline, leaving that to state bars. They have set down guidelines on ethics and model rules for discipline.

Lyon says state bars occasionally review their systems as a matter of good practice. But the features of the new California system — principally the hiring of paid judges — are unique, he says.

"Some of the reforms are fairly innovative," he says.

In a major test of California's new discipline system, celebrity attorney Marvin Mitchelson faces a state bar trial on Aug. 14. Mitchelson is accused of charging "unconscionable fees," failing to return unearned portions of financial retainers and the filing of frivolous appeals.

His trial could be among the first heard by a paid full-time bar judge.

California is adding a staff of nine full-time, paid administrative law judges to preside at trials replacing the 400 part-time volunteer lawyers used in the past. A chief trial counsel was appointed to run the system and an outside monitor was named to keep an eye on things.

Under the new system, most proceedings before the court became public and procedures were shortened and simplified wherever possible. Settlement of claims by the Client Security Fund, which pays clients up to $50,000 of funds misappropriated by lawyers, was accelerated.

California's lawyers are footing the bill for the discipline reforms with the costs nearly doubling their yearly state bar dues to $417.

"I never expected the bar to move as well as it did," says Robert C. Fellmeth, executive director of San Diego's Center for Public Interest Law who was a severe critic of the bar and was chosen as the first outside monitor for the discipline system.

"We now have a system that, to the credit of the bar, is a model for the country."

Not everyone is elated with the new discipline program.

Philip Martin, a former bar prosecutor now in private practice in San Francisco, says, "It's too early to be patting yourself on the back. The reforms have been written down. The backlog still exists and the slowness of the process still exists."

Martin, who was involved in drafting new regulations for discipline, favored an outside regulatory agency rather than having lawyers do the work.

"The bar is the only profession in California that still regulates itself," he says. "It's the only one where the fox is guarding the henhouse. There is an inherent conflict of interest and that has created a problem."

But Bascue, the bar's first chief trial counsel, says the bar is capable of cleaning up its own act.

"No one is more upset about misconduct than lawyers themselves," Bascue says. "They know that the discipline system has been part of the negative image lawyers have with the public."

"A serious question had been raised about whether it was a good old boys' network," Bascue says. The hiring of paid judges, he says, will eradicate the inference that lawyers do not want to discipline their colleagues.

Complaints against attorneys are varied, Bascue says. The most common are failing to keep in touch, letting cases lapse, mishandling client funds and substance abuse.

On a recent day, the bar court, where attorneys are the only defendants, heard the case of a lawyer who was accused of abandoning his clients and losing a personal injury lawsuit because the statute of limitations ran out.

When the bar court convened, the missing lawyer was still missing. He failed to make his own hearing. But there were no delays. Testimony was taken in his absence.

"At first he was very vigorous," a client testified. "He was out doing everything on our case. I thought he was really fantastic. Then he just disappeared. I called his office many times. I sent registered letters to his home and I couldn't get in touch with him."

Angola leader leaves for home

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — Angolan rebel leader Jonas Savimbi left for home on Friday to implement a cease-fire that will end 14 years of civil war with Angola's Marxist government.

The leader of the U.S.-backed rebels and Angolan President Eduardo dos Santos signed the truce accord and sealed it with a handshake late Thursday at a special African summit to promote peace in Angola.

"I was not born to make war at all cost," Savimbi said before leaving to carry word of the cease-fire to his forces. "Even if I have made war until now for precise reasons, and even if these reasons cease to exist, I will always remain, in my skin, a citizen of Angola."

Shooting was to stop at midnight Friday (7 p.m. EDT). Savimbi told the Zairean news agency he is prepared to work "without preconditions" with dos Santos' government.

But difficult negotiations still face the rival Angolan parties in drafting a permanent peace agreement.

President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire, a Savimbi ally credited with a prominent role in the reconciliation, also will mediate future negotiations.

The conservative Mobutu is to meet President Bush in Washington on Thursday to discuss Zaire's role in helping bring peace to Southern Africa, said Bush's press secretary, Martin Fitzwater.

State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler told reporters in Washington that the summit "represents a significant breakthrough in efforts to peacefully resolve Angola's long-running civil war."

President Moussa Traore of Mali, chairman of the Organization of African Unity, announced the cease-fire at a news conference in Gbadolite, Mobutu's hometown, and the palatial site of the summit, 400 miles northeast of Zaire's capital, Kinshasa.

The summit of 20 African heads of state was the first meeting between dos Santos and Savimbi since the former allies in a struggle for black rule went to war in 1975 as Portuguese colonizers left Angola. The conflict has claimed tens of thousands of casualties.

Savimbi leads the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, known as UNITA, which has been backed by China, South Africa and Washington in its fight to share power with dos Santos' Marxist Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola.

The peace accord follows a U.S.-brokered regional peace accord was signed in New York in December. South Africa, which backed Savimbi, agreed to grant independence to Namibia, Angola's southern neighbor, and halt aid to Savimbi's guerrillas in exchange for the withdrawal of 50,000 Cuban troops backing dos Santos' government. Savimbi was not party to the agreement.

Zambian President Kenneth Kuanda described Thursday's signing of what is called the Declaration of Gbadolite "a great moment for Africa."

Kuanda said Savimbi will go into self-exile but did not provide details. He said a commission elected at the summit would oversee the integration of rebel fighters into national life.

At a separate news conference, Mobutu said Savimbi "reaffirmed that he had no intention of participating in the next government. It is not up to us to tell the Angolans or Savimbi what title he will bear."

Reports in Zaire said Savimbi's self-exile would be temporary.

But rebel sources in Washington said the reports are "all wrong."

"Savimbi will remain in Angola," a rebel official said on condition of anonymity.

The accord calls for the creation of a national reconciliation commission under Mobutu's chairmanship. It set no time or place for the commission to begin its work and did not specify who would represent the rival Angolan parties.

The Portuguese news agency LUSA reported Friday that the two sides would meet "in the next few days in Zimbabwe to give form to the Gbadolite accord." It did not provide details.

LUSA also reported that dos Santos briefed the 12 members of his party Politburo in Luanda on details of the accord.

Diplomatic sources in Kinshasa, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the United States and South Africa deserved credit for exerting influence on Savimbi, whom they supplied with arms.

Meanwhile, Angola's government has been under growing pressure to reach a peaceful settlement from its main arms supplier, the Soviet Union.

Savimbi left Friday morning from Gbadolite to carry word of the accord to his forces and oversee the cease-fire.

Moslem leader accuses militia of abducting official

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Moslem leader Salim Hoss on Friday attacked militia leaders suspected of illegal taxation and shady deals, and accused them of kidnapping a government official.

Also Friday, police said Israeli troops and allied militiamen advanced into southeast Lebanon and attacked pro-Iranian guerrillas. Hezbollah said two of its guerrillas were killed in the attack. But Israel denied its troops left their security zone.

Hoss' attack Friday, his strongest yet on the unruly militias, came as Syrian and Christian gunners traded howitzer shells in Beirut and Christian commander Gen. Michel Aoun urged Lebanese around the world to stage protests to focus attention on the country's problems.

Hoss, Lebanon's acting prime minister and leader of the Moslem Cabinet in the divided government, did not identify the militias he believes responsible for Wednesday's abduction of Raja Bsat, in charge of importing grain and sugar.

A previously unknown group, calling itself Father of the Poor, said it kidnapped Bsat in Syrian-policed west Beirut to protest a bread shortage.

Hoss blamed shortages on "leaders who have become merchants" — apparently referring to leaders of various Moslem and leftist militias accused of making big profits from shady deals.

Private citizens, politicians who do not belong to militias, factions and moderate government leaders privately have complained. They claim militia leaders bomb power lines and block fuel supplies to power stations to force people to buy auxiliary generators imported by them.

Hoss, in a statement on local radio stations, accused such militias of kidnapping Bsat to "cover up for their crimes."

The prime minister, who does not have a political party or militia, said he is "aware of the population's plight," including illegal taxation.

Militias collect customs dues in illegal ports they run and levy taxes in their areas of influence.

A police spokesman said Syrian gunners fired about 20 shells Friday to maintain their blockade of Christian ports north of Beirut.

Christian gunners responded with 155mm howitzers, the spokesman said. Witnesses said Christian shells damaged some cars. No one was reported injured.

By police count, 373 people have been killed and 1,457 wounded in the confrontation that broke out March 8 and continues despite repeated Arab calls for a cease-fire.

Fighting started after Aoun blockaded illegal ports run by Syrian-backed militias. Syrian and allied forces retaliated by besieging Beirut's Christian enclave.

Aoun on Friday protested "the silence practiced by the world regarding the killing of Lebanon (by Syria)."

He called on "the Lebanese and their friends in the world to stage sit-ins near the U.S. and Soviet embassies all over the world as of Monday."

He said he hopes to pressure Syria into accepting a cease-fire.

Israeli army officials, meanwhile, denied their troops left their self-designated security zone to attack guerrillas of Hezbollah, or Party of God. They said their militia allies, the South Lebanon Army, carried out the "initiative actions."

JUDGE
NORBERT A. NADEL

Hamilton County Common Pleas Court Judge Norbert A. Nadel tells counsel that he will announce his decision on temporary restraining order for Pete Rose Sunday.

Judge delays Rose request ruling

CINCINNATI (AP) — Pete Rose will have to wait until Sunday to learn whether he can avoid a hearing before Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti on allegations that he bet on his own team.

A state judge Friday delayed his decision on whether to temporarily block Rose's appearance Monday in New York — a meeting which could lead a lifetime ban from baseball for the Cincinnati Reds manager.

Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert A. Nadel said he will rule at noon Sunday on Rose's request for a temporary restraining order.

Baseball investigator John M. Dowd testified Friday that evidence indicates Rose bet on baseball, including Reds' games, during a three-year period. One of the years was 1985, when Rose became baseball's all-time hits leader.

Dowd later told reporters that he found no evidence to suggest that Rose ever tried to throw a game. Rose has sued Giamatti in state court, contending the commissioner is biased and has already decided the manager is guilty of betting on his own team — an offense that could bring a lifetime ban from the sport.

Nadel heard arguments Friday from Rose's lawyers and those for the commissioner, then said he needed more time before deciding

Rose Investigation Highlights

Associated Press

Testimony by baseball investigator John M. Dowd and witnesses for manager Pete Rose supplied a solid outline Thursday of the case against the Cincinnati Reds' manager.

These are the highlights of the revelations:

— Baseball lawyer Louis L. Hoynes Jr. said there is "substantial and heavily corroborated evidence" that Rose bet large sums of money on major-league baseball games, including Reds' games.

— Baseball special investigator John M. Dowd got information from nine witnesses that Rose bet on baseball games and on Reds' games.

— Dowd's 225-page report also contains statements from nine other people who said they didn't know anything about Rose betting on baseball.

— A handwriting expert employed by baseball concluded that Rose's handwriting is on "betting sheets" that contain bets on professional sports, including baseball.

— The FBI has the original copies of those "betting sheets" and has tested them for fingerprints. Baseball wants to get the results of the fingerprint analysis, but Rose's lawyers are reluctant to join in a request.

— Baseball investigators obtained telephone records from Riverfront Stadium, Rose's home and hotels on road trips that show betting-related calls with Janzen made "just before gametime."

— Baseball also has copies of three checks for $8,000 or $9,000 to cash, signed by Rose.

— Two witnesses for Rose said they found that Dowd concludes in his 225-page report that Rose bet on his team.

— The hearing on Rose's request for a temporary restraining order was adjourned without a decision. Dowd will be cross-examined Friday by Rose's lawyers, and Judge Norbert Nadel then will rule on the manager's request for a temporary restraining order.

Rose lawyer Robert Stachler declined to comment on the delay.

The hearing concluded after Dowd was cross-examined by Stachler about his 225-page report on baseball's investigation of the gambling allegations. Dowd insisted he had not decided Rose's guilt or innocence — a determination he said can only be made by Giamatti.

However, Dowd read his assessment of the evidence against Rose from his report.

"I stated that the accumulated testimony of witnesses, together with documentary evidence and telephone records, reveal extensive betting activity by Pete Rose with professional baseball and, in particular, Cincinnati Reds games, during the 1985, 1986 and 1987 seasons," Dowd said, reading from his report.

Rose was a player-manager in 1985 and 1986 and broke Ty Cobb's record for career hits on Sept. 11, 1985 with No. 4,192 against San Diego. He has repeatedly denied betting on baseball games.

Following his cross-examination, which lasted 2 1/2 hours, Dowd told reporters he had uncovered no evidence that Rose's gambling had influenced his performance on the field.

Cheating worries Wacker

Wants conviction powers for NCAA

ARLINGTON (AP) — Texas Christian football coach Jim Wacker said college sports will continue to have problems with cheating until the NCAA is given powers to convict the coaches and students for lying.

"If you think we've eradicated sin in the Southwest Conference — or any other conference — you're crazy," Wacker told members of the Texas Press Association on Friday. "We haven't and we never will. It's here to stay."

Wacker, who in 1984 coached the Horned Frogs to their first winning season in 13 years, turned over evidence against the team in September 1985 after learning several players had accepted money and gifts from alumni.

The NCAA, in turn, dished out the stiffest penalties to that time to the Fort Worth school: no bowl games for a year, the loss of 35 football scholarships for two years, the forfeit of television revenues from the 1983 and 1984 seasons, and three years' probation.

Since then, six other SWC schools have suffered NCAA sanctions for cheating, including Texas A&M, Southern Methodist, Houston, Texas Tech, Texas and Baylor.

"There's a lot of pressure to win at any cost," Wacker said, noting increased revenues and prestige for the school when the football team is winning.

Wacker said while he believes SWC schools have worked harder to abide by NCAA rules regarding amateur athletics, there will continue to be infractions and coverups so long as NCAA officials have no power to prosecute lying and cheating.

"If people can go on lying and cheating and getting away with it, they will," Wacker said.

"You have no subpoena power and no perjury (enforcement)," he told Kevin Lennon, NCAA assistant commissioner for compliance and education for the SWC. "So if a coach or a student gets caught — you lie, you lie, you lie."

"The only way to get around it is the new (proposed) law," Wacker said. "You have to send it to the district attorney's office. The DA's office has subpoena power and perjury."

But Lennon said he believed the best way to solve cheating problems is through education.

"Here in the SWC we've got some people who are willing to assess what some of the problems are and who want to know how to work within the system," Lennon said. "Face it gang, the game has changed — not only within the business, but also with those reporting it."

Lennon said university officials don't want bad publicity and will work hard to keep the game fair to prevent attacks in the media.

But Wacker disagreed. "The major problems don't come down to education, though," Wacker said. "Everybody knows what's right and what's wrong. Some of these Mickey Mouse rules we might have violated that don't have anything to do with anything come down to education."

"But basically, what we're talking about is buying athletes cars, recruiting kids, keeping them eligible at any expense, not worrying about them getting degrees, letting them use steroids and turning our heads — those are the major issues we're talking about. Now we better start coming up with some answers for it."

Carter player surrenders to police

DUNCANVILLE, Texas (AP) — A former Dallas Carter High School football standout surrendered to Duncanville police Friday after being named in an arrest warrant for armed robbery, authorities said.

Derric Evans, an 18-year-old All-America defensive back, was identified as a suspect in the holdup of a dry cleaners through fingerprints taken when he was arrested by Dallas police, said Duncanville police investigator Alvin Sims.

Evans and Carter teammate, Gary Bernard Edwards, 17, had each been freed on $10,000 bond after being arrested in connection with two armed robberies of South Oak Cliff video stores.

ACCORDING TO Duncanville police, Evans is suspected of cleaning out a cash till at Bell Cleaners on June 7, while a second man held a pistol to a clerk's head.

"We have a pretty good idea who the second suspect is," said Sims. The Duncanville investigator said Edwards had not been eliminated as a suspect in the Duncanville robbery.

Sims said mug shots of both Evans and Edwards were shown to the store clerk, but he recognized neither man.

"The clerk is an older gentleman and he wasn't wearing his glasses during the robbery," Sims said.

But Sims said fingerprints taken from a counter top in the dry cleaning establishment seem to match those taken of Evans when he was booked into the Lew Sterrett Justice Center following his arrest Tuesday by Dallas police.

"They were his," Sims said. "That's what a Dallas police technician determined."

Evans was accompanied by his attorney, Royce West, when he surrendered quietly at 1:10 p.m. Friday.

"It was pretty much an understanding between us and his attorney that there would be no interviews," Sims said.

A receptionist at West's office said the Dallas lawyer was out of town and could not be reached until Monday.

Bond was set at $25,000 on the Duncanville charge. Sims said he had worked as uniformed security when the Class 5A state championship Carter team had played at Duncanville High School, but he said he did not remember Evans from that game.

Even before Evans surrendered Friday, University of Tennessee coach Johnny Majors said Evans, considered the best of the 1989 recruiting class at the school, will not be allowed to play for the Volunteers.

"Because of the serious charges involving Derric Evans, I have decided that he will not be allowed to participate in football at the University of Tennessee," Majors said. "In no way am I making judgment of the facts concerning Derric's case."

MAJORS SAID he would release Evans from his national letter of intent if the teen-ager asks. That would allow him to accept a scholarship at another school, but he would have to sit out a year and would lose a year of eligibility.

Evans can keep his scholarship and attend Tennessee as a regular student if he wants to.

Before the Duncanville warrant was issued, police said they were looking into whether the two could be linked to other robberies.

U.S. Open champion Curtis Strange reacts to a birdie putt, but he is three strokes off the pace in the Canadian Open after two rounds.

Jones leads Strange by 3

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP) — Steve Jones rode a birdie-birdie-birdie finish into a one-shot lead Friday in the second round of the Canadian Open golf championship.

Jim Gallagher, the first-round leader, had a 68 that left him a single shot off the pace at 132 at the tournament's halfway point.

Curtis Strange, seeking a second national championship in as many weeks, put himself in position by playing 26 holes eight under par. He was only three back at 134.

Jones, who won the first two events of the season, had an 8-under-par 64 and completed two trips over the Glen Abbey Golf Club course in 131, a distant 13 under par.

"I've been playing pretty good the last three or four months, but I just couldn't get anything going," Jones said.

"But the last two days it all turned around. I've got it going now," said Jones, who has made 16 birdies in two days.

The last, the one that gave him the lead, was set up by a bold, 3-iron shot over water on the final hole.

"That's how I play when I'm playing good. I feel like I have it back now," he said.

Strange, who successfully defended his U.S. Open title last weekend in Rochester, N.Y., was among the 78 players stopped by darkness Thursday night and returned at daylight to resume first-round play.

But dense fog forced still another holdup, this one for two hours.

When Strange finally got away, he immediately dropped a 30-foot birdie putt "over the elephant, under the ferris wheel and a got a free game," he said.

He went on to finish off a first-round 68 and had only 12 minutes before his second-round tee time.

Angels explode in ninth

From Staff Reports

SAN ANTONIO — The Midland Angels sent eight men to the plate in a four-run ninth inning to take charge in an 8-4 win over the San Antonio Missions before an overflow crowd of 4,107 here Friday.

The Angels went into the ninth tied 4-4 despite a strong performance by starting pitcher Scott Lewis, 7-7, who allowed only two earned runs in 8 1/2 innings. But Chris Graves led off the ninth with a single off loser Dave Walsh, 2-4.

Walsh's pickoff throw sailed into fans clustered on the field along the right field line, and Graves was awarded second base. Reed Peters sacrificed the Halo newcomer to third and Steve DeAngelis continued his hot hitting with a single scoring Graves that drove out Walsh in favor of Gordie Hershiser.

DeAngelis is batting .488 since his promotion from Class A Quad City.

Hershiser wild-pitched DeAngelis to second and walked Chris Cron. The brother of Cy Young Award winner Orel Hershiser then allowed consecutive RBI singles by Everett Graham, Mark Howie and Bob Rose that provided a cushion.

Midland increased its Texas League West lead to a game and a half over rain-out Wichita.

Mike Butcher, 0-2, takes the mound for Midland tonight. Darren Holmes, 4-6, counters for San Antonio.

HALO HOOPS — Not only does DeAngelis continue his red-hot hitting, but Rose maintains a strong second-place showing in the TL batting race — .352 to .358 for El Paso's Ramon Sambo. Rose extended his hitting streak to nine games Friday.

Soviets learn negotiating quickly

NEW YORK (AP) — Soviet basketball star Alexander Volkov said Friday he was given permission to join the NBA next season, and immediately touched off a controversy about which team he would play for.

Volkov said he would be "free to join any team" in the NBA, but the league contended he is obligated to play for the Atlanta Hawks, who drafted him in 1986.

Meanwhile, center Arvidas Sabonis, considered the best player in the Soviet Union, said he had abandoned the idea of joining the NBA "for now" and will play in Spain.

The two made their comments to the Associated Press at Zagreb, Yugoslavia, site of the European Championships.

"The Soviet Sports Committee has given me permission to play in America and I'm free to join any NBA team," Volkov said.

Volkov, 25, said his chances of joining the Hawks were now "50-50."

"I was advised by my agent in the United States to wait until the draft before definitely making up my mind," he said. "He said that some other NBA teams would be better for me since maybe I could not prosper with the Hawks."

The draft will be held Tuesday night.

In New York, his agent, Mark Fleisher, said he had discussed the situation with Volkov in Zagreb a couple of days ago.

"We said that we'll wait until after the draft and see what team it makes sense for him to play for, what team fills his needs," Fleisher said. "Under no circumstances will Alexander play for the Atlanta Hawks. He has told me he will not play for the Atlanta Hawks."

"The most important reason is that Alexander feels they have too many players in his position. And his chances to be successful in the NBA would be with another team."

However, NBA vice president Gary Bettman said that under the league's collective bargaining agreement Volkov still belongs to the Hawks.

Fleisher disagreed, saying he still would be Hawks' property only if he had played for a professional team since being drafted by Atlanta.

In the past three years, the 6-foot-9 Volkov has played for the Soviet Union's Central Red Army team.

"It is Atlanta's contention that he played for a professional team," Fleisher said. "My contention is that he did not. Atlanta claims that all Soviet teams are professional. I claim otherwise."

"The players on the Central Army team do not get paid."

Bettman disagreed. "They're free to claim whatever they want," he said. "If a player plays for more than a living stipend, he is playing for a professional team. He (Volkov) is being paid a salary."

"We contend Volkov belongs to Atlanta and we intend to enforce Atlanta's right in that regard." If the NBA tries to enforce Atlanta's right, Fleisher said, "The case may land up in arbitration."

And if Volkov loses the arbitration and he is declared property of the Hawks, he still might wind up with another team.

Stan Kasten, Atlanta's president and general manager, indicated that the Hawks might trade Volkov.

He said Atlanta was trying to deal for a guard since it has a surplus of forwards and Volkov could be included in a trade.

If Volkov remains with the Hawks, however, Kasten said he probably would be used as a small forward.

He said Volkov was "very strong. He runs the floor super and is a great passer and ballhandler."

Astros sting Braves, 5-2

Associated Press

Ken Caminiti singled home the tie-breaking run in the ninth inning and Louie Meadows added a two-run single Friday night as the Houston Astros ended a three-game losing streak with a 5-2 victory over the Atlanta Braves.

Terry Puhl led off with a double and beat pitcher Paul Assenmacher's throw to third on a sacrifice by Craig Reynolds. Caminiti's single made it 3-2 and after a double steal, Meadows met reliever Mark Eichhorn with a single to left field.

Danny Darwin, 6-2, was the winner and Dave Smith got his 14th save in 15 opportunities. Assenmacher, 0-2, took the loss.

The Braves gained made it 2-1 in the seventh on Lonnie Smith's RBI single off Darwin. Bruce Benedict started the rally with a single and Tommy Gregg walked, chasing starter Jim Deshaies and bringing on Darwin.

Glenn Davis had given the Astros the lead by driving in two runs with a sacrifice fly and single.

The Astros went ahead 2-1 in the sixth inning when Gerald Young walked, stole second, went to third on Bill Doran's infield groundout and scored on Davis' single to left. It was Young's 26th steal of the season.

Davis hit a sacrifice fly in the fourth, scoring Young, who had singled, advanced to second on Pete Smith's balk and to third on a single by Doran.

Jeff Blauser gave Atlanta a 1-0 lead in the first inning when he hit his third homer of the year over the center-field fence.

Expos 5, Cubs 1

Dave Martinez had the second-homer game of his career and Hubie Brooks added a two-run homer as Montreal beat Chicago, snapping the Cubs' five-game winning streak.

Martinez, traded to Montreal by the Cubs last July, led off the game against Mike Bielecki, 6-3, with his second home run of the season, then started the fifth by hitting a 3-1 pitch over the right-field fence.

Martinez also hit two homers in a game on Sept. 17, 1988 against the New York Mets. His game-opening homer was the first by a Montreal batter this season.

The Expos put the game away in the eighth when Tim Lincecum led off with a single and Brooks followed with his fifth homer, a drive over the left-field fence. Martinez scored the final run in the ninth when he reached on an error by reliever Steve Wilson, was sacrificed to second and came home on Raines' single.

Mark Langston, 3-2 since coming from Seattle on May 25, allowed four hits and one run in seven innings. He walked three and struck out four as the Expos moved within 2½ games of the first-place Cubs.

Tim Burke pitched two hitless innings for his 15th save, striking out two. In 17 appearances since May 9, Burke is 2-0 with nine saves and an 0.73 earned-run average.

Bielecki, who beat Langston on June 18, allowed nine hits, walked four and struck out seven strikeouts in 7½ innings. The loss snapped his personal three-game winning streak.

The Cubs' only run came in the fifth when Andre Dawson led off with a double, Chicago's first hit, and scored on Lloyd McClendon's single to right.

Reds 3, Dodgers 1

Rookie Lenny Harris scored one run and drove in another as Cincinnati handed Mike Morgan some more hard luck.

Morgan, 5-6, fell below .500 despite leading the major leagues with a 1.64 earned run average. He gave up two runs on eight hits in six innings.

Jose Rijo, 7-4, allowed one run on seven hits before leaving with back spasms. Norm Charlton relieved in the sixth and pitched three hitless innings.

John Franco worked the ninth for his major league-leading 19th save. The Dodgers loaded the bases with three hits, but Franco got pinch hitter Rick Dempsey to ground into a game-ending double play.

The Reds scored twice in the third. Harris' one-hopper skidded past first baseman Eddie Murray for a double and Barry Larkin hit an RBI single with two outs. Paul O'Neill followed with a run-scoring double off the center-field fence.

Cardinals 3, Pirates 2

Vince Coleman stole three bases and tied a major league record with his 38th consecutive steal as St. Louis dealt Pittsburgh its fourth straight loss.

Coleman stole three times in the first two innings, increasing his major league-leading total to 32. Coleman, who has not been caught stealing since last Sept. 18, tied Davey Lopes' 1975 record for successful stolen bases.

Joe Magrane, 6-6, gave up one run on four hits in seven innings. Todd Worrell worked the final inning for his ninth save.

Mets 9, Phillies 3

Bob Ojeda beat Philadelphia for the second time this week and red-hot Howard Johnson drove in two runs.

Len Dykstra, who was traded by the Mets to Philadelphia last Sunday along with reliever Roger McDowell for Juan Samuel, hit Ojeda's second pitch of the game for a triple and Dickie Thon hit the next pitch for a home run, his sixth.

Vincent Serbantez got the win for Greenwood, while Geoff Goode took the loss for the hosts.

Mid City 4, Eastern 2
Chad Villarreal allowed a homer to opposing pitcher Vito Ochoa, but still pulled out the win.

B League

North Central 7, Mid-City 4
Keegan Duncan doubled for the big North Central hit, while Mike Carrasco held Mid-City without an extra-base rap.

Bryce Mears took the loss for Mid-City.

Eastern 18, Dodgers 8
Winning pitcher Camar Jackson helped himself out with two doubles, while J.J. Valdez added another two-bagger.

Allen Baugh and Carl Hollums doubled for Western.

Jeffcoat blanks Indians

Milwaukee's Deer raises homer total to 19

Associated Press

Mike Jeffcoat pitched a four-hitter for his second consecutive Arlington Stadium shutout and Cecil Espy homered on the first pitch by Cleveland's Scott Bailes as the Texas Rangers beat the Cleveland Indians 4-0 Friday night.

Jeffcoat, 3-1, walked two and struck out three in his second complete game. It was his fifth start of the season and 13th of his major-league career. The 29-year old left-hander, who was promoted from Class AAA Oklahoma City on May 31, blanked California on five hits June 12.

The Rangers scored twice in the first inning off Scott Bailes, 2-3. After Espy led off with his third home run of the season, Sammy Sosa singled and scored on Ruben Sierra's double.

Texas made it 4-0 in the sixth. Sierra led off with a double, took third on Julio Franco's single and scored when Mike Stanley grounded into a double play. After Steve Buechele's double and a walk to Jim Sundberg, Jeff Kunkel greeted Tim Lincecum with a double for the final run of the game.

Jeffcoat retired 12 straight batters at one stretch before Pete O'Brien singled with one out in the seventh.

Texas won its third straight while Cleveland dropped its fourth in a row.

Brewers 17, White Sox 5

Rob Deer took over sole possession of the American League lead with his 18th and 19th home runs and Milwaukee scored eight runs in the third inning to beat the Chicago White Sox in the opener of Friday's twin-night double-header.

The victory was Milwaukee's first in five meetings with the White Sox this season and the Brewers had to rally from an early 5-0 deficit, starting their comeback with four runs in the bottom of the second. Robin Yount hit a three-run homer in the eighth to give him four RBIs complete the scoring.

Seldom-used utility infielder Gus Polidor drove in three runs for the Brewers in their highest scoring game of the season. Gary Sheffield had two of the seven hits in the third inning, also the Brewers' biggest of 1989.

Milwaukee did most of its third-inning damage against Tom McCarthy, who relieved starter Steve Rosenberg, 2-4, after Sheffield singled and Deer walked to start the inning.

Dave Engle's bases loaded-single drove in the tying and lead runs and put the Brewers ahead 6-5. Charlie O'Brien followed with an RBI single and Polidor squeezed a run home. Paul Molitor, Yount and Sheffield followed with RBI singles and the final run scored on an error.

The White Sox took a 5-0 lead in the top of the second off Chris Bosio, 7-4, who settled down after that and scattered 11 hits for his first victory since May 23.

Angels 5, Orioles 1

Mike Witt cooled off Baltimore with a six-hitter and Claudell Washington and Jack Howell homered as California snapped the Orioles' seven-game winning streak. Witt, 5-7, walked one and struck out four in stopping California's four-game losing streak. He lost his shutout bid in the eighth when Baltimore scored on a double by Rene Gonzales and a pair of groundouts.

Before resorting to the long ball, the Angels took a 1-0 lead in the fourth inning thanks to Baltimore catcher Mickey Tettleton's first error in 97 games. Devon White bunted for a hit, stole second and third and continued home when Tettleton's throw to third was wild.

Washington's ninth homer made it 2-0 in the sixth and the Angels added three runs off Dave Schmidt, 7-6, in the seventh. Brian Downing led off with a walk and was sacrificed to second. Bill Schroeder singled to score Downing and Howell hit his seventh homer.

Twins 10, Red Sox 0

Gary Gaetti drove in five runs with a pair of homers and Frank Viola scattered six singles over eight innings.

Viola, 5-8, struck out eight and walked two in his first victory since June 3. Randy St. Claire pitched the ninth. It was Minnesota's fourth straight triumph and Boston's third consecutive setback.

Staked to a 5-0 lead in the first two innings, Viola, the 1988 Cy Young Award winner, beat Boston for the second time this year and the fifth consecutive time in the past two seasons. Boston starter Joe Price, 1-3, lasted just 2½ innings in his fifth start of the season.

The Twins took a 2-0 lead in the first inning when Dan Glavin singled with one out and Gaetti hit his 14th homer high into the screen in left with two out.

Royals 3, Yankees 0

Mark Gubicza scattered eight singles and Matt Winters, who spent nine years in New York's farm system without getting a shot at the majors, singled home the first of two second-inning runs.

Gubicza, 7-5, walked two and struck out five in pitching his second shutout of season and lowering his ERA to 2.40. He outdueled rookie Dave Eiland, 1-1, who allowed eight hits in seven innings-plus. Kansas City's last run was unearned.

Gubicza allowed only one runner to second base and he was erased in a double play as the Royals padded their home record to 26-8, best in the majors.

Carl Lewis has plan for track woes

HOUSTON (AP) — Olympic gold medalist Carl Lewis said his sport needs help, and he has a comprehensive plan he believes can put the U.S. track program on its feet.

But Lewis said he has had problems getting track officials to listen to his proposal. The target of much of his criticism has been The Athletics Congress, the ruling body of U.S. track and field.

"We've been trying to talk with TAC for over a year," Lewis said before leaving for Paris, where he was scheduled to compete Friday in the St. Denis International Track Meet. Lewis, the Olympic champion in the 100-meter dash and long jump, said his plan includes an increase in the athletes' share of profits and the establishment of a national, independent agency to test for steroids.

"In Spain, track has a lot of government support, and they're working at $300,000, $400,000 budgets, and every meet is selling out," Lewis told the Houston Chronicle.

"Over here, the budgets are $75,000, attendance is down, the ratings are down, and they're not getting the best athletes. People are going to Europe because that's where the money is."

Lewis pointed out that a number of America's best athletes passed up their national championships to rest or train for events in Europe.

Because he feels TAC has been unresponsive to his pleas for change, Lewis boycotted last week's U.S. Outdoor Track and Field Championships in Houston, his adopted hometown.

But Frank Greenburg, TAC president, denied Thursday he wouldn't talk with Lewis.

"If Carl has a plan, why didn't he send it to me? Carl is always going to the newspapers, trying to affect TAC through the newspapers. He wants to show the world that TAC isn't trying to cooperate with him. But he doesn't want to cooperate with us," Greenburg said.

"He has my number, and I have his number. Any time he wants to talk, we'll talk."

Greenburg said the main obstacle to a productive meeting is Lewis' refusal to speak with an unidentified TAC official. But Lewis has said he has "no feud" with any TAC leaders. Lewis said he wants more money going to all the athletes, not just those in certain sports.

"We've come up with a plan that pays the top 10 in every event," Lewis said. "Then, we'll have a program across the board instead of just a program for a few events."

The plan also calls for a national, independent agency to check for drug use among athletes from all sports, not just track.

"I think it should be funded by TAC, the Olympic Committee, the NCAA, corporate sector, age-group programs, everything — one independent agency that does nothing but focus on fighting drug use in America," Lewis said.

"All these different agencies spend maybe $500,000 or $600,000 a year and say, 'We don't have enough money.' If we can get the money the NCAA spends, a million (dollars), the USOC, 5 million, and private support, maybe we can get age-group programs in every city to contribute $50," he added.

Mid-City advances in LL tourney

From Staff Reports

The Mid-City Little League team advanced in the winner's bracket Joe Mowles Memorial Tournament with Friday's win over Tower at Garrett Brown Park.

In losers bracket action Friday, Eastern eliminated Western, and will face North Central in an elimination game at 10 a.m. today.

No details were available on Friday's games. Mid-City faces Greenwood at 6 p.m. Monday.

The Tower, Greenwood and Mid-City Little League teams scored first-round wins in A League action Thursday.

Tower defeated North Central 8-4, while the Greenwood Rangers nipped the hosting Western Athletics 5-4 and Mid-City beat Eastern 4-2.

In the B League final, the North Central Cubs defeated the Mid-City Tigers 7-4. In B League consolation play, the Eastern Bandits beat the Western Dodgers 18-8.

The tournament continues through 6 p.m. Wednesday.

It is named for the late Joe Mowles, a former Midland High athlete and Little League coach who was killed in an auto accident several years ago.

Tower 8, North Central 4

Benny Acosta homered and doubled to lead Tower batters. Mike Phillips and Toby Stewart added doubles for Tower, while Allen Autry also homered for the westside nine.

Jeff Aman homered and Kevin McIlvain doubled twice for North Central, while Cade Nobles and Kyle Carrasco added two-baggers for the losers.

Lance Watters picked up the win for Tower, while Kevin Jordan absorbed the loss.

Greenwood 5, Western 4

Andy Watzel and T Steward homered from Greenwood, while Rusty Purser doubled.

NASCAR's Earnhardt leads points

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt believes in taking care of business. That way, winning takes care of itself.

This season, for example, the three-time NASCAR champion has won only two races, but he leads the Winston Cup series by almost 200 points over his nearest rival, Rusty Wallace.

"I look at the overall picture," Earnhardt said Friday before practice for Sunday's Miller 400 race at Michigan International Speedway. "If I can't win, I do the best I can to finish up."

Indeed, Earnhardt, driving a Chevrolet Lumina owned by Richard Childress, has nine Top Five finishes this season and ten Top 10 finishes in his 13 starts. His theory is that no lead is safe — especially with just over half the season still ahead.

"We're still racing the top five or six guys," Earnhardt said. "You can stumble. You can never get too far ahead."

Wallace is the defending champion of the Miller 400 at the Michigan speedway.

"No, and I don't know. But I don't have any evidence — no evidence — Pete ever threw a game," Dowd said.

In their closing arguments, Rose's lawyers attempted to demonstrate that the manager has been denied a fair hearing, and that Giamatti made up his mind long before Rose had a chance to plead his case with the commissioner.

"The commissioner has already made a decision based on a report that is one-sided and based on hearsay," Stachler said. "Giamatti has abandoned the rules of procedure he is required to follow."

Both Dowd and Haynes firmly rejected that contention, and told Nadel there is no legal standing to interfere in the case at this point.

During tough cross-examination by Stachler, Dowd repeatedly said Giamatti hasn't yet decided Rose's fate.

"The man's mind is open and it's always been open."

Biography says Tyson beat wife

NEW YORK (AP) — Heavyweight champion Mike Tyson is quoted as saying the best punch he ever threw sent Robin Givens, his wife at the time, bouncing off the walls.

Tyson's description of the incident is contained in a new biography which portrays the fighter as a sadistic thug.

Tyson, who has battered Michael Spinks, Larry Holmes and Bonecrusher Smith in posting a career 36-0 mark with 32 KOs, told biographer and one-time friend Jose Torres that he never hit an opponent as hard as he did Givens.

"She really offended me and I went BAM. She flew backwards, hitting every wall in the apartment," Tyson said. "That was the best punch I've ever thrown in my entire life."

The biography, titled "Fire and Fear: The Inside Story of Mike Tyson," provides an insider's view of the volatile champion. Torres, a former light heavyweight champion, was a member of the Tyson camp until they had a falling out last year.

"Tyson encouraged me to write the book," Torres told The Associated Press, adding he has 12 hours of taped conversations with the champion. "He knew I would not do a story to hurt him ... From two or three excerpts, it appears like a hatchet job. It is not."

TYSON AND Givens had a stormy one-year marriage, highlighted by her nationally televised claim that Tyson often terrorized her. Tyson, in turn, said the couple married on Feb. 12, 1988, only because Givens lied and said she was pregnant.

Tyson has denied abusing Givens, and once, in Givens' presence, told a group of writers: "Look at her — if I ever hit her, she would disintegrate."

Heavyweight boxing champion Mike Tyson is quoted in a new biography as saying his best punch sent his ex-wife, Robin Givens, bouncing off the walls.

said the "Head of the Class" star would not comment at all on the unauthorized biography.

"They had an amicable divorce. Part of the agreement was that neither would make statements about the other. She will honor that," said

Felder. "Robin is looking forward, not backward."

Excerpts of the book provided by its publisher, Warner Books, Inc., indicated Givens was not the only woman abused by Tyson.

Morrow, Essex riding high again

From Staff Reports

The state champion doubles team of Luke Morrow and Harper Essex advanced in the Midland Highway 80 tennis tournament — as singles players.

Morrow advanced in both the men's and boys 18 divisions, while Essex advanced in the men's division but lost his first round match in boys 18s.

Midland High senior-to-be Leo Oei won his first two matches in boys 18 singles to advance into the quarterfinals.

Essex will face former Odessa Permian standout Aaron Layman in men's quarterfinal action today, while Morrow will face Madhu Chalipalli of Odessa.

In boys 10s, Antwine Smith and Ray Streeter advanced into third round action.

Among the girls, Midland High sophomore-to-be Shawn Whelan advanced to the semis in girls 18 and the girls 16 quarters. Whelan faces Carol Rogers of Andrews in the 16 quarters, before meeting Nicole Smith of Lubbock in the 18 semis.

Midland High's Susan Johnson faces Sandra Griffin of Lubbock in the other girls 18 semi. Johnson also teamed with MHS teammate Elizabeth Amel to win a quarterfinal doubles match Friday.

Play continues through Sunday at both the Lee High and Midland College courts

King stages bird binge

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — Betsy King, seeking her fourth victory of 1989, bogeyed the first two holes, but went on to score eight birdies to take a one-stroke lead Friday after 36 holes of the LPGA McDonald's Championship.

The 5-foot-6 King, one of five career LPGA $2 million winners and winner of this tournament in 1987, led Shirley Furlong and Pat Bradley by a stroke in the 72-hole tournament.

King, the second leading money winner this year with $283,486, started the second round three strokes behind Furlong, and appeared in for a long day when she missed the greens on the first two holes and blew identical eight-foot putts.

"I missed the fairways and the rough was pretty tough," she said. "I just wasn't able to hit the iron the way I wanted to get it on the green."

"But then I kind of got it going with good iron shots. It was just a question of keeping calm. I remembered that I was two over after three holes Thursday and shot a 69."

"I didn't think I'd shoot 65, but I just concentrated on hitting greens and giving myself birdie chances."

Furlong and Bradley are at 135. Furlong shot 66-69 and Bradley 69-66. King, Bradley and Furlong, the first-round leader, waited out a three-hour, 21-minute rain delay.

Another stroke back at 136 was Beth Daniels, the third leading money winner, who added 66 to her first round 70.

Tied at five under 137 were Missie Bertotti and Deborah McHaffey. Bertotti, who started the second round in second position, had 67-70, and McHaffey 68-69.

WFLA fuel for Schramm

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Tex Schramm is 66, but his dream of a worldwide spring football league has made him feel like a teen-ager again. His energy level is that of a young colt, not an old warhorse.

On his barnstorming tour of the southeast United States to find franchises for the Worldwide League of American Football, the inside joke was that Schramm was the only member of his "flying circus" who didn't need the plane.

Fueled by three or four hours sleep, Commissioner Schramm flew from city to city like a politician on a whistle-stop tour of the nation. He smiled, pumped hands, slapped backs and talked WLAFF business.

Schramm is selling an idea that four European teams, six U.S. teams, and one each in Montreal and Mexico City can win over the television viewing public with a spring professional football league.

The idea is backed by the NFL, which knows that Schramm was perhaps its strongest innovator until an ownership change forced him to leave the love of his life, the Dallas Cowboys.

STRANGE

He did not make a bogey over the second round and shot a 66 that included late birdies off very long clubs. He hit a 2-iron to six feet on his 15th hole and then birdied his final hole with an 18-foot putt after a 4-wood second shot from 215 yards.

At times during the course of the long day's play, Strange said he found his thoughts straying back to last week's victory.

"It's there. There's no getting around it," he said. "But I'm getting Initially, all the voting stock in the league will be owned by the 28 NFL clubs. The 12 World League teams will be operated by independent owners. All profits will be divided among the clubs.

Ridiculous, you say. Never been tried before.

Don't tell that to Schramm, who lists instant replay of officials' calls among his innovations.

Recall, it was Schramm who put together the first network telecast of the Winter Olympics, the 1980 Games at Squaw Valley, Calif.

Schramm knows television and how to make it work to his advantage. He has plugged into all the shakers and bakers in the medium. The odds are long, but Schramm wouldn't have it any other way.

To shorten the odds, he recently hired Jim Spence, the former No. 2 man under Boone Arledge at ABC-TV. Spence will be Schramm's point man in negotiations with NBC and ABC and the cable networks for rights to beam the games starting in mid-March.

The kickoff game is expected to be in London, although the participants have not been determined. Schramm also has hired Russ Potts, former athletic director at Maryland and Southern Methodist, as a consultant on how to get fans in the stands.

In Birmingham, Ala., Schramm worked the crowd like he was running for office.

Inspired by a band, balloons, banners, a telephone call from the governor, and an enthusiastic gathering that chanted, "We want a team! We want a team!" Schramm shot his fist in the air like he did the day the Cowboys won the Super Bowl.

"It's been a long time since I've seen a group like you," he told a cheering crowd of some 200 outside a Birmingham bank building.

Hendrickson seeks first win

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Dick Hendrickson, winless in his first four years on the PGA Seniors golf tour, shot a 6-under-par 66 to take the lead Friday after the first round of the MONY Syracuse Senior Classic.

Hendrickson, 54, of West Chester, Pa., held a two-stroke lead over Harold Henning, Mike Hill and Roland Stafford after 18 holes at the LaFayette Country Club.

DeRay Simon, Jim Dent and Lou Graham, Ray Beallo and Roger Ginsberg were three strokes back. Thirty-one others shot par or better on the 6,530-yard course.

"I've been waiting for a round like this for 13 tournaments, so I'm very pleased," said Hendrickson, who had three second-place finishes in 1988 but has not won an event since joining the tour in 1985.

"It's been a while since I've had a bogeyless round and a round where I've putted good," said Hendrickson, whose best finish this year was 12th place at the Aetna Challenge in Florida in February.

Hendrickson, who matched his best round of 1989 with Friday's score, started on the back nine and opened his day with back-to-back birdies.

He stayed at two-under until the par-5 16th hole, where he recovered from a drive past the right bunker for a birdie. Hendrickson birdied No. 17, also a par-5.

On the front nine, Hendrickson sank birdies par-4 second and fifth holes to extend his lead. He closed with four straight pars, but had to salvage holes No. 7 and 8 with long putts to avoid bogeys.

Virginia loses Holland to Davidson College

DAVIDSON, N.C. (AP) — Virginia basketball coach Terry Holland was named Friday athletic director at Davidson College, his alma mater, effective May 1, 1990.

"This is a decision that's been both a blessing and a curse," Holland said at a news conference here.

"I'm fortunate to be back at the school from which I graduated. That doesn't happen very often. At the same time, I have nothing but the highest regard for the University of Virginia."

Holland said he would coach at Virginia, where he is the school's winningest basketball coach, during the 1989-90 season.

Davidson president John Kuykendall said Holland's "sensitivity to the academic mission of Davidson and the way into which athletics fits into that mission."

Terms of the contract were not revealed. It is a one-year contract and is option renewable.

Kuykendall called the contract comparable with contracts offered to other people at Davidson College with similar positions.

Holland did not rule out a return to college coaching in the future. But he indicated he had no interest in the dual role of coach and athletic director at Davidson.

"Only Jim (North Carolina State's Valvano) could do both at the level he's doing it," Holland said.

Holland was known to be interested in a career in athletic administration and has never concealed his fondness for his alma mater, which is located near Charlotte. Holland played at Davidson from 1962 through 1964 and succeeded Lefty Driesell as coach in 1969. He was the Wildcats' coach through 1974, when he left for Virginia.

Holland, 47, is the winningest coach in U.Va. history. He has been at the school for 15 seasons, compiling a 306-161 record.

His teams have won 20 or more games in eight seasons and he is responsible for the only eight NCAA appearances in Cavalier basketball history, including two trips to the Final Four. Holland also has coached the Cavaliers to an NIT championship, three regular-season titles in the Atlantic Coast Conference and one ACC tournament crown.

Davidson is seeking a replacement for Kit Morris, who announced his resignation on June 10, to take effect on June 30. He had been athletic director since 1985.

Dallas Cowboy owner Jerry Jones denies that there will be policy changes for Cowboy Cheerleaders.

Dallas cheerleaders in mass exodus

Cowboy owner denies any major policy changes

DALLAS (AP) — More than a third of the Dallas Cowboy Cheerleaders have walked off the squad, saying new owner Jerry Jones was threatening their wholesome image with skimpier costumes and looser rules that would let them fraternize with players and drink in uniform.

But Jones, calling the 37 cheerleaders "the pick of the litter," said Friday he won't change their rules.

"Those girls in the past and these girls now are wonderful women," Jones said at a news conference after cheerleader Debbie Bond resigned, taking 14 veteran cheerleaders with her.

The 23 rookie members have until Monday to decide whether to stay.

THOSE WHO left said they were upset by a proposal to have them dress in halter tops and bikini shorts made of body-hugging stretch fabric.

"If it were my daughter I would not want her to wear that uniform," said Ms. Bond, who said she would rather retire than give up the cheerleaders' high standards.

But Jones said he has nothing against the current Cowboys uniform of shorts, long-sleeved blue shirts tied in the front to leave the midriff partially bare, a fringed bolero-type vest, and white boots.

"I'm a father; I have a daughter; I know how proud fathers and mothers are in the past of their daughters being a Dallas Cowboys cheerleader. And I know how proud I want them to be in the future," Jones said.

"Those policies are intact. They are a very valuable and time-tested procedure," he said.

AT ISSUE, he said, is determining how cheerleaders will be punished when they break the rules. If cheerleaders fraternize with players or drink in uniform, he'd like to review their behavior rather than summarily firing them as they would be now, he said.

"I have a great confidence in the ability of adults to make the right decisions when they know what the policy is," he said.

He also defended the importance of women in the Cowboys organization and business world in general. "I appreciate so much what our women mean in our society," he said.

The squad set the standards for NFL cheerleaders beginning with Super Bowl X in 1976 when a cheerleader winked into a camera and captured the attention of the nation, Ms. Bond said.

They had their first open auditions in the spring of 1976, and cheerleaders now work for $15 a game — $13.94 after taxes, said squad founder Suzanne Mitchell.

Ms. Mitchell resigned after 15 years with the Cowboys when Jones bought the team in February. She has joined former president and general manager Tex Schramm at the World-Wide League of American Football.

"I'm the one who established all those rules in the first place," Ms. Mitchell said Friday. "It separated the Cowboys Cheerleaders from everybody else." Ms. Mitchell said the line between the players and the cheerleaders was important to maintain respect for the performers.

Ms. Bond, who has been with the organization for 10 years, said she talked with Jones on Thursday after hearing that the Arkansas oilman had told the players they would be fraternizing with the cheerleaders.

"He said, 'You can either accept it or move on,'" Ms. Bond said. "Mr. Jones does not believe in rules."

JONES FIRED Tom Landry, the only head coach in the team's history, on the same day he purchased the Cowboys. The Landry firing angered Dallas fans, who turned out by the thousands later when the city held a parade and ceremony in Landry's honor.

Under former owner H.R. "Bum" Bright, the cheerleaders were not allowed to drink or even be photographed with someone holding a drink while they were wearing their uniforms.

Ms. Mitchell said the squad did more than dance and shake pompons. The cheerleaders have made 18 Department of Defense tours, visit nursing homes and children's hospitals and perform on charity fund-raising telethons.

Ikey Woods denies being with Wilson in drug scene

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — Cincinnati Bengals running back Ikey Woods denied reports that he was involved in teammate Stanley Wilson's cocaine relapse while delivering a streetwise talk on drugs at a juvenile home in his hometown.

"I was not with him. I was with three other guys watching the Super Bowl special," Woods said on Thursday. "He's trying to insinuate that we were selling. It's put a lot of endorsements on hold. People don't know if I was with him."

Woods said he spent the night before the Super Bowl with Eric Thomas, Solomon Wilcotts and Ricky Dixon.

Woods, who became an instant star last season with his "Ikey Shuffle" after he scored touchdowns, took Wilson's place as a starter last season for the American Conference champion Bengals who lost to the San Francisco 49ers in Super Bowl XXII.

Woods said Wilson named him and other players in a yet-unpublished Penthouse magazine interview as a way of making money since he was kicked out of the NFL.

"He's got the top players on the team listed," Woods said. "Nothing I can do — just keep coming out and clearing my name."

Woods sidestepped a question from one of the youths whether he had ever sold drugs as a youth.

"I'm not going to incriminate myself and say I did or not," Woods said. "I was once in you guys' shoes."

Drugs are "not the way for any of you guys," Woods said. "I know where you come from. I grew up in a neighborhood where you had to be tough."

Jackson shakes Kingdom

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP) — Britain's Colin Jackson handed two-time Olympic champion Roger Kingdom of the United States a rare defeat in the 110-meter high hurdles Friday night in a four-nation track and field meet.

The United States and Britain each won three of the opening six track events in the two-day meet that also includes West Germany and the Soviet Union.

Among the other early winners were David Patrick of the United States in the men's 400-meter intermediate hurdles, American Esther Jones in the women's 100 meters, Tim Simon of the United States in the men's 400 and Linford Christie of Britain in the men's 100.

Jackson, who had not beaten Kingdom in five previous outdoor races, burst out of the starting blocks and built a sizeable lead over Kingdom midway through the race.

Kingdom stumbled and fell at the last hurdle, leaving American Jack Pierce in second place. Kingdom was unbeaten in 22 races last year, including 17 finals, and had lost only once this season.

Jackson was timed in a sparkling 12.99 seconds, but it was wind-aided. Patrick, who won his fourth U.S. national championship a week ago in Houston, won the 400 hurdles in 49.28 in the opening track event of the quadrangular meet.

He was in fifth place halfway through the race, but sped past the rest of the field to win by more than a second. Edgar Ilt of West Germany was second in 50.43, with Briton Max Robertson third in 50.61.

"There was a headwind down the backstraight and I didn't want to take it out too hard and then be fatigued on the way in," Patrick said.

The U.S. team was missing many of its top athletes, such as Olympic champions Carl Lewis, Joe DeLoach, Steve Lewis, Andre Phillips and Jackie Joyner-Kersey.

Coach convicted of sexual assault

HOUSTON (AP) — A former high school baseball coach was sentenced to four years probation Friday after being convicted of sexually assaulting a 16-year-old student.

Jurors in State District Judge Doug Shaver's court deliberated 11 hours over two days before convicting Raymond Mark Knoblauch Jr., 29, former baseball coach at Bellaire High School, on Friday morning.

It took the same jury less than an hour to assess Knoblauch's punishment.

Knoblauch was charged with three counts of sexual assault, but was only convicted on one count.

A Bellaire student testified that Knoblauch raped her three times. She said the first incident occurred in April 1988 and the other two times in September 1988.

Engineering students to race for $5,000 in concrete canoes

By WENDY E. LANE

LUBBOCK (AP) — They came from far away pulled on special trailers and tied atop vans, bearing names like "Black Death" and "Bobbin' Gobbler."

These concrete — yes, concrete — canoes looked as sleek as their traditional fiberglass counterparts, while others resembled a basic concrete slab.

The canoes' creators are students from 20 colleges and universities who hope their boats will not only float but race fast enough to win a national contest Saturday.

The American Society of Civil Engineers National Concrete Canoe Race Finals is all about testing students' imaginations and promoting the versatility of concrete, say organizers of the second annual event, to be held at Texas Tech University and Buffalo Springs Lake.

The college and university civil engineering teams, which qualified at regional races around the country, will compete for a $5,000 scholarship from contest sponsor Master Builders Inc. of Cleveland. Second- and third-place teams will earn $2,500 and $1,500 for their respective civil engineering programs.

"It's an outrageous concept — but the objective is to expand a student's horizons by getting them to use their ingenuity and creative processes," said W. Kent Wray, Texas Tech professor of civil engineering and an event organizer. "We don't want engineering students to be confined by conventional thinking."

While some of the boats appear unconventional and not very buoyant, the races' defending champions from the University of California-Berkeley carefully researched Olympic flat-bottom racing canoes to perfect their design.

And at Berkeley, concrete canoes are serious stuff. Students at the school have been building them for about 15 years and have assembled a fleet for team members to practice their paddling speed and maneuvering skills.

After working all last summer to develop a super-light concrete mixture, the team decided to throw it out, fearing it might violate the contest rules. Team members won't say what was in the formula in case the rules are amended next year.

This year's canoe, called the "Calypso," is a aerodynamic design weighing 186 pounds, heavier than most other canoes entered in the race.

NORTHWESTERN BAPTIST CHURCH

In the Sleep Hollow Cemetery at Concord, Massachusetts, one will find the grave of Ezra Ripley. Who Ripley was or what he did is unknown.

On Ripley's tombstone the following epitaph is cut: "He came of a long line of Pilgrim ancestors and Concord ministers, and he was worthy of his lineage."

Although the epitaph is brief, it says a lot about Ripley's character. Learn with us how God can improve our characters.

RELIGION IN BRIEF

'Tough questions' lectures to begin

"Tough Questions for Thinking Christians," a new series of lectures, is scheduled at 7 p.m. Wednesdays through August 23 at Golf Course Road Church of Christ.

Speakers for the class are Douglas Parsons, pulpit minister for the church, and Gary Grady, the church's family minister.

The series is designed to explore issues that face contemporary Christians in their daily lives, such as careers for mothers of small children, divorce and remarriage, funeral planning, homosexuality, the right to die movement, and the care of the aged and infirm. A more specific calendar is available from the church office.

No offerings will be taken and children's classes will be provided during the lecture time.

Summer films continue

Crestview Baptist Church Family Ministry Summer Film and Video Series continues Sunday at 5:45 p.m. in Adult 4 Department in the church's Education/Activity Center.

A heartwarming new family film, "A Man Called Norman," scheduled for Sunday, tells a true story of love, acceptance and following God's will.

Crestview Baptist Church is located at Illinois and Midkiff, adjacent to Dellwood Mall. The church's regular meeting times are Sunday morning worship at 8:30 and 10:50 a.m., evening worship at 7 p.m. and Sunday school at 9:30 a.m. Wednesday night prayer service is held in the church's Education/Activity Center at 6 p.m. each week.

Beeson set to speak

Clyde Beeson, author of "Picking Up the Pieces" and "Successful Single Living," will be the speaker at the 10 a.m. rally Sunday for the combined singles classes at Kelview Heights Baptist Church.

Beeson, while working in every area of marriage and family counseling, has developed a "unique ministry" to the formerly married, says a release from the church.

"He has an ability to relate God's answers to man's needs with practical understanding," the release says.

The church's pastor, the Rev. Frank Johnson, invites all interested singles to attend this rally. Children's classes and nurseries are provided for all ages.

Meeting site announced

The Midland Monthly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends has announced a new meeting site.

On the first and third Sundays of each month, the Friends will be meeting at the Unitarian-Universalist Church of Midland at 5:30 p.m. for unprogrammed worship. On other Sundays, the members will continue to meet in members' homes.

For more information, call 699-5512 or 697-1828.

Healing meetings begin

A healing prayer meeting has been started at the Permian Church of Religious Science at 7:30 p.m. Wednesdays.

The church has moved to 2311 Elizabeth, two blocks west of Dennis the Menace Park. Sunday services are at 11 a.m. Sunday School classes will begin July 2.

'Joy Trek' starts Monday

"Joy Trek: Journey With Jesus Through Time and Space" is the theme of a five-night Vacation Bible School program from 6:30 to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday at the Church of God, 5300 Thomason.

Children ages 3 through 12 are invited to attend Bible discovery sessions and participate in supervised craft projects, puppet shows and singing.

For more information or to request transportation call 694-7586.

Views strain conference

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Eastern Orthodox objections to ordaining women and a British clergywoman's reactions produced a strained moment here at the recent interdenominational World Conference on Mission and Evangelism.

On behalf of Eastern and Oriental Orthodox participants, Bishop Antonios Markos of Egypt said they supported a study by the World Council of Churches of full participation of women in church life, but not in the priesthood.

To admit women to the priesthood is "not, for us, subject to debate, since it is contrary to Christology, ecclesiology, tradition and practices" of the church through the ages.

Leaders denounce Israelis

JERUSALEM (AP) — Heads of churches in Jerusalem, Orthodox, Lutheran and Episcopalian, charge "constant deprivation" of fundamental rights by Israeli authorities in Jerusalem, the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"Often our people are subjected to unprovoked harassment and hardship," the church officials said. "We are particularly concerned by the tragic and unnecessary loss of Palestinian lives, especially among minors."

"Unarmed and innocent people are being killed by the unwarranted use of firearms and hundreds are wounded by the excessive use of force."

By BETH PRATT

LUBBOCK (AP) — Although Gilbert Herrera vowed to put his criminal past behind him, the former burglar again passes his time at the Lubbock County Jail. But this time, he can leave every day.

Herrera is one of two official jail chaplains appointed by Sheriff Sonny Keesee to work with inmates, their families, crime victims and potential offenders. And for the former Brown Beret activist, the ministry offers an opportunity to help a class of people often without hope.

"It's taken 40 years for Gilbert to come to the place where he could pin on that badge," Keesee said.

"I couldn't have done it four years ago," Herrera admitted. "I was still too confused."

Herrera's training actually began long before his seminarian days. It began with a burglary conviction in 1969, alcohol and drug problems, a five-year sentence and revocation of parole that sent the 22-year-old to the Texas Department of Corrections. Oddly, it is the jail sentence and other conflicts with the law that qualify Herrera to serve as chaplain.

While jail ministries sponsored by churches have existed here for many years and continue to make worship services available to inmates, Keesee is instituting a different facet of ministry: volunteer chaplains who wear badges and have a history relative to inmates.

"A prerequisite is that the chaplain must have been to the penitentiary," Keesee said. The volunteer also must have been out of prison and demonstrated for at least a year that there has been a genuine change in his behavior.

"A lot of people are not aware that even back in the so-called old days, Gilbert was a great help with many of our jail problems with inmates. He was kind of a mediator," Keesee recalled.

The sheriff credits Herrera with quelling more than one jail disturbance brewing among inmates. In cases of need when families did not have time to go through the bureaucracy of various social agencies to get help, "I could call Gilbert and he would take care of it. Some of the things he did he never got credit for."

"I am convinced that he has made a complete turnaround in his life," Keesee added. "In the past few months, he's worked not only with inmates in jail, but also with the young people on the streets who are trying hard to get into jail. He's very effective, one of the most effective I've ever met."

"What's the old saying? 'When you walk the walk, you can talk the talk.'"

Walking the walk is not easy, Herrera is the first to admit. But today, Herrera is more at ease than when he initially made his religious conversion in the summer of 1986. The new easiness shows in his voice as well as in his body language.

"I feel I'm still in training camp," Herrera said. "I don't hurt as much as I did. The hardest thing for a man (to do) is to humble himself and admit he is wrong."

Although he has not used alcohol or drugs in four years, Herrera admits that the desires that drove him to illicit behavior are still there. "Every day I run into friends that still test me," he said.

Herrera's strong desire to be "somebody" initially led to his involvement in the Brown Berets, a Hispanic civil rights organization. He started a Lubbock chapter and often took his crusade for equality to city hall.

"I was showing the public a leader, but in my heart I was scared," Herrera said. "Now it is different — people respect me for what I'm doing. Most don't want to know about the Bible, but (to know) how much I care."

Herrera said now "I found I don't need an army to help people. I need to put God first."

Herrera was ordained to the ministry May 8, 1988, at First Baptist Church. The Rev. D.L. Lowrie, who was instrumental in advising the new convert, returned to Lubbock to preach at Herrera's ordination with a sermon titled "Being somebody for God."

The Rev. John Ballard, associate pastor at First Baptist Church, said Herrera has provided such a good example for his followers that the congregation has renamed a 2½-year-old charity organization funded through individual donations the Gilbert Herrera Evangelistic Association.

"I see the miracle of hatred being turned to love, bitterness being turned to joy and animosity turned to peace," Ballard said of Herrera. "There is a brand new Gilbert Herrera — I just wish everybody could know him like I know him."

Keesee said he, too, thought Herrera would provide a good role model.

"I watched Gilbert working through First Baptist Church for a long time before I made up my mind to offer him this position," Keesee said. "I need to emphasize that Gilbert is not deputized, but wears a clergy badge."

Notifying families when a family member is jailed, bringing news of crime-related or traffic injuries and fatalities and other traumatic events often fall within the duties of sheriff's deputies.

Keesee said he believes having a volunteer chaplain available to go out with the deputy and minister to a family in crisis can make an important contribution. A chaplain who understands the language and culture of the families involved helps avoid misunderstanding, Keesee said.

Since the sheriff's department brings bad news, it is often viewed as the enemy, Herrera said. He sees his job as that of offering comfort, much in the way that military sends a chaplain to assist a family in times of trouble and sorrow.

Because he is not a law enforcement officer, Herrera said people will talk to him. "I feel that my badge holds more power than the law of the land," Herrera said, referring to spiritual power. "People will call and want to turn themselves in. Even when we deal with hard criminals, we know a mother somewhere still loves him. I want to be there for her."

But not all the emotional and spiritual needs are with those behind bars, Herrera observed. "Deputies, lawyers and doctors go to hell, too," he said. "I take the opportunity to share the gospel with them, too."

In addition to his volunteer duties, Herrera preaches about 30 series of services each year. He was a featured speaker at several state evangelism conferences sponsored annually by Southern Baptist churches.

"My personal relationship with God has nothing to do with religion," Herrera said, stressing that he does not proselytize for prisoners to attend a particular church. "The Baptist Church is not the thing that changes the man. I am not here to sell religion to inmates, but to hear their problems and to present Christ to them. I give my testimony, listen and help families," he said.

"I had been praying for a ministry locally," he said. "I felt for me to preach, I had to live it first."

The Permian Church of Religious Science Announces it's new location at 2311 Elizabeth

(2 blocks West of Dennis The Menace Park)

WHAT DO WE TEACH?

As Christians we are dedicated to a message of hope, help, healing and inspiration with a fresh concept of religion.

We believe:

1. You can be master of your own destiny. Nothing is hopeless.
2. It is done unto you as you believe -- health, abundance, happy relationships, success and all good things in life can become yours by practicing what Religious Science teaches.
3. In simple language, Religious Science brings together that which the greatest minds of all ages have taught us and which constitutes the only Divine knowledge we have on earth. We believe that God lives in and through all people and is immediately available and responsive to their needs.
4. We are each heirs to a magnificent inheritance. When we establish our own center, by contracting the Divine, and live from it we won't be separated but for the first time will really be unified with all life.
5. We teach that which has been the fundamental basis of every great religion the world has ever had, including Christianity. Christianity is a recapitulation of the antiquity of the Jewish, Egyptian, and Hindu peoples and Grecian thinkers, influenced by the concepts of Jesus.
6. The will of Spirit, universal Will, God's will, must be goodness, truth, and beauty. As we imbibe its nature, we come into its harmony. The will of God IS peace. As we enter the atmosphere of peace our confusion vanishes.
7. We believe in spiritual mind healing. At the same time we do not disbelieve in any form of healing, whether it be medicine, surgery, psychiatry, or exercise.
8. Religious Science is a correlation of laws of science, opinions of philosophy, and revelations of religion, applied to human needs and the aspiration of man.

All friends are invited to join us for Sunday services at 11 a.m. Beginning in July there will be Sunday School for all ages at 9:45 a.m.

The Public is invited to a special workshop

DESIGNED TO PROSPER

A Life Design Workshop

William E. Gladstone said of Life; "...Life is a great and noble calling, not a mean and groveling thing that we are to shuffle through as we can, but an elevated and lofty destiny."

Jesus Said..."I am come that they may have life and have it more abundantly"

Do these two descriptions of life describe your life?

Are you living an elevated and lofty experience?

Is your life dominated by an abundance of good, including health, peace of mind, personal relationships and financial security?

Are you doing the work that you love doing?

The truth is that you were not set adrift in the sea of life without a means to influence your destiny, not at all. In fact you were DESIGNED TO PROSPER.

Make your plans now to attend this dynamic WORKSHOP Sunday and Monday evening July 23 and 24. Join in association with other people who share your desire to experience life to its fullest.

Catholic group launches 'televangelism' around world

VATICAN CITY (AP) — When you are selling eternal salvation, the Rev. Tom Forrest says, there is no room for small thinking.

So the Brooklyn-born Roman Catholic preacher thinks big. He is the driving force behind Lumen 2000, a controversial group that wants to give the Roman Catholic Church its own form of "televangelism" — on a world scale.

Since its founding in 1986, Lumen has set up media schools, produced a popular soap opera and distributed scores of TV and video programs to Africa, Latin America and Asia.

But critics, particularly in Latin America, charge Lumen 2000 is a conservative arm of the Vatican, threatening to supplant local initiatives.

"They think we're going to go in like the big ugly American and take over," said an official at Lumen's office in Rome, the Rev. Jim Birmingham.

With the tacit approval of the pope, Lumen is aiming to be a private-sector answer to one of the Vatican's dearest wishes: to harness television to spread the faith.

"The Catholic Church is backward in television communications," said Forrest, a wiry, 61-year-old former missionary who heads Evangelization 2000, the umbrella organization that includes Lumen.

"TV is not only the best means of communication today, it's the most expensive...and the most requiring of utter professionalism."

In 1987, Lumen co-sponsored a satellite hook-up through which Pope John Paul II led Catholics on five continents in prayer.

Lumen — the name comes word meaning a measure of the flow of light — differs from Protestant "televangelists" such as Pat Robertson or Jimmy Swaggart in providing a variety of programs with few dominant personalities.

Its Dallas-based film library offers Catholic groups around the world a choice of footage and more than 1,000 inspirational programs, many donated by such Catholic media groups as the New York-based Christophers or Mother Angelica, a nun who runs a cable network in Birmingham, Ala.

Lumen also donates equipment and trains Third World TV journalists at its centers in Dallas and Bogota, Colombia.

But Lumen's ultimate aim is to establish Christian entertainment good enough to compete with top-run programs on regular television.

"I think we could do programming — all visuals, not just talking heads," Forrest said in an interview. "I believe we have very exciting answers."

Lumen produced its first entertainment program last year, a mini-series about a Latin American priest. "Semilla de Mostaza" (Mustard Seed) was popular enough to get commercial sponsorship on Colombian television. Lumen has another series in the works.

Lumen's other major program, a

TV "newsmagazine" about the church intended for use worldwide, will be ready early next year.

Lumen has been influenced by its founders' membership in the Catholic "charismatic" movement, which emphasizes personal spirituality and spreading the faith.

Those goals have brought the group into conflict with another movement in the church — liberation theology.

Liberation theology, which has flourished in Latin America, although the Vatican rejects parts of it, stresses activism on behalf of the oppressed and encourages a local focus.

Some of its proponents accuse Lumen leaders of being "spiritual colonialists" for their worldwide ambitions and emphasis on the church hierarchy.

"Lumen 2000 is evidence of the success of the theology of liberation and of the fear and anger it arouses in conservative groups," said Jose Queiroz, a theologian who coordinates the religious studies post-graduate program at Catholic University in Sao Paulo, Brazil.

Bishop Tomas Balduino, a leading progressive based in the Brazilian state of Goias, recently was quoted by the Jornal do Brasil newspaper in Rio de Janeiro as saying Evangelization 2000 "is an illegitimate and nefarious project trying to enter through the back door without asking the Brazilian bishops' permission."

Lumen leaders say they follow the guidelines of the Vatican, which opposes the forms of liberation theology that stress Marxist principles.

They brush the criticism aside. "It has been quite extraordinary to see, because of the incredible fantasies," Forrest said. "Like I'm supposed to have $400 million. They have us getting money from the CIA."

Lumen gets most of its money from a foundation created by Piet Dirksen, a Dutch millionaire and charismatic who is Lumen's president.

Lumen has had its greatest growth in Latin America, despite the criticism that emanates from there. It focuses on the Third World, where the church is expanding and television time is often available to religious groups for little cost.

Church officials stress, however, that Lumen is not a Vatican project.

"It's a private initiative with a very commendable purpose, which is to spread the word of God through the communications media," said the president of the Vatican's Commission on Social Communications, Archbishop John Foley, an American with a degree from Columbia Journalism School.

In a recent speech, Pope Paul said: "The question confronting the church today is not any longer whether the man in the street can grasp a religious message, but how to employ the communications media so as to let him have the full impact of the Gospel message."

Americans turning toward work, angels

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans are turning against marijuana and greater sexual freedom. Large majorities of them also favor stronger family ties, more emphasis on hard work and less on money.

They especially trust organized religion, and two-thirds are members of a church or synagogue. But half think religion is losing influence on American life, while a third think it's increasing.

Most think a person can be a good Christian or Jew without attending religious services, but 42 percent do so each week. A third say they have experienced a powerful religious insight or awakening.

And most teen-agers affirm belief in angels.

These are among the varied facets of faith turned up in recent Gallup organization polls, and summarized by its Princeton Religious Research Center in its monthly Emerging Trends.

Most of the surveys were among a representative 1,200 or more, with a margin for error of less than 4 percent either way.

One of the most unusual and consistent findings in this age of technocracy is that one of every three Americans say they have had a "mystical experience, that is a moment of sudden religious insight or awakening."

The center says this "is one of the least explored, yet one of the most fascinating aspects of the spiritual life of Americans, sometimes described as an other-worldly feeling or union with God or a universal spirit."

The Gallup poll first began exploring the topic in 1962, finding that 20 percent then reported such experiences. By 1976, the proportion had risen to 31 percent, and has ranged above that since, 33 percent in 1988.

"Such an experience often appears to have a profound effect on the outlook and direction of a person's life," the report says, adding that the experiences are "more often gradual than sudden."

"One of the most interesting aspects of these phenomena is that they happen to the non-church and the non-religious as well as to persons...who say religion plays an important role in their lives."

On the drugs and sex issues, the trend is definitely down. During the past 10 years, public acceptance of marijuana has plunged — from 20 percent in 1978 to 13 percent in 1981 to only 8 percent today.

In the same period, overall public demand for greater sexual freedom fell from 29 percent in 1978 to 25 percent in 1981 to 22 percent today, with the sharpest downturn among young adults, although they still are more likely to espouse it.

Support for stronger family ties, now 94 percent, has remained close to that throughout the decade. So has the support for less emphasis on money, now 67 percent, and for working hard, now 70 percent.

Organized religion has for years been rated the most trusted institution, although the military momentarily surpassed it in 1986, and still ranks close to it.

The Supreme Court is close behind, with television, organized labor and big business at the bottom of the list.

The 65 percent reporting church or synagogue membership is the lowest ever recorded, down from 69 percent the year before. The record high was 76 percent in 1947. Attendance, now 42 percent, hit its high in 1955 at 49 percent.

Seventy-six percent of Americans say one can be a good Christian or Jew and not attend religious services, a proportion that has changed little for the last three decades.

Among U.S. college students, about half of those who have heard of the "New Age movement" have an unfavorable view of it, and only 14 percent favorable. It is a modern, optimistic mix of Eastern and Western spiritual ideas.

More teens than ever believe in angels, 74 percent of them, up from 64 percent in 1978. At the same time, 29 percent of them say they believe in witchcraft, up slightly from 25 percent in 1978.

While a majority of teen-agers, more than 70 percent, approve of interfaith marriages, the proportion has dropped slightly since 1977. But approval of interracial marriages has jumped from 52 percent in 1977 to 65 percent now.

New Methodist hymnal shorn of stereotypes

New York Times News Service

PORT WASHINGTON, N.Y. — After almost 40 years of singing in a church choir here, Billie Rowley says some things come automatically, like singing about God as a man.

And so, at choir rehearsal the other day, Mrs. Rowley got some surprises when she opened the new United Methodist Hymnal. The new volume replaces the 1966 hymnal, which was criticized by many in the denomination as "elitist" and out of step with the times.

Instead of "His power and His love," Mrs. Rowley had to sing "God's power and God's love." "Sons of men and angels say Alleluia" had become "Earth and heaven in chorus say Alleluia."

And in the hymn "Nothing But the Blood of Jesus," the word "bright" was substituted for "white" in the verse "makes me white as snow." "We're getting used to it," Mrs. Rowley said after the Sunday morning service at United Methodist Church of Port Washington, a congregation organized in 1882. "I want to say that we have to watch our P's and Q's, but really we have to watch our H's and H's."

The first copies of the new Methodist hymnal have arrived in the New York area.

Before summer's end, some 3 million copies are expected to be in Methodist churches around the country.

And although the hymnal engendered a storm of controversy while it was being prepared, even well-established Methodist churches, like the one in Port Washington, appear to be embracing it with open arms. "I don't feel at home with it yet," said Margaret Victor, a member of the Port Washington church for 33 years, "but I like it."

A few still have reservations, however. "I hate it," said Valerie Lau, who joined the congregation 10 years ago. "They took all the poetry out of it. That is how it was written, that is how it was supposed to be. I, for one, have no trouble with God being a man or, for that matter, Christ being a man either."

The hymnal goes to great lengths to purge language that is regarded as excluding women or that is pejorative to racial minorities and people with handicaps.

Although it is called a hymnal, the volume includes prayers, special liturgies and psalms as well as hymns.

The revision of the hymnal attracted national attention in 1986 when the editors declared war on militaristic references.

They announced that they were dropping the song "Onward, Christian Soldiers" and some verses of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," but changed their minds when they received 11,000 letters of protest. The songs were restored.

Minority concerns are expressed not only in language, but in the selection of hymns. Among the new Spanish selections are "Camina, Pueblo de Dios" ("Walk On, O People of God") and "Una Espiga" ("Sheaves of Summer").

"Halleluyah," is a hymn of Native Americans, and "Send Your Word" has Asian roots.

Out of the black church tradition come "Alas! And Did My Savior Bleed" and "Come We That Love the Lord." Also out of the black culture are "We Shall Overcome," "Kum Ba Yah" and "Come Sunday," the last with words and music by Duke Ellington.

"We are seeing an inclusiveness that we have not seen before," the Rev. Ivan J. Roberts, pastor of Grace United Methodist Church in Brooklyn, said in an interview. His church, made up almost entirely of West Indian blacks, received its order of 400 copies just last week and has not yet had a chance to put them into the pew racks. The members, however, have had exposure to some of the hymns in a 73-page sampler put out by the United Methodist Publishing House to help ease the transition to the new volume. "Our members are very excited about it," Roberts said.

Roberts said that blacks were not being "oversensitive" by asking for changes in verses like "white as snow."

The Rev. William R. Schumacher, 80, the oldest man in the nation to be ordained as a Roman Catholic priest, poses at his parish, St. Patrick Church in Dallas.

Priesthood suits 80-year-old Texan

DALLAS (AP) — Over and over bishops told William Schumacher he was too old to handle the workload of a Catholic priest, but a year after being ordained, his parish would have trouble doing without him.

On Sunday, the anniversary of his ordination, the Rev. Schumacher planned to say two Masses, assist at two others and conduct a baptism. The active schedule is typical of the past year for the 80-year-old priest.

"I'm enjoying it. I think it's good for me to be busy. It keeps my mind active," Schumacher said.

Schumacher, who has six children, 12 grandchildren and one great-grandchild was ordained June 4, 1988, just 24 days short of his 80th birthday.

The bespectacled, white-haired Schumacher was ordained into the priesthood by Bishop Thomas Tschoepe of Dallas, who gave Schumacher a chance after he was rejected by 50 other church leaders because of his age. He now serves as a pastor with St. Patrick's Catholic Church in Dallas.

"I'm doing all the pastoral chores that are assigned to me," Schumacher said. "I say one of the weekday Masses and the Saturday morning Mass and confession in the afternoon."

He said recently he received a call from the bishop's office with the caller expressing concern that he might be considering moving to another parish.

"I said no. I would like to be here as long as they want me," he said. Forty percent of St. Patrick's congregation is age 50 or older, Schumacher said.

"I feel I'm able to mingle with them quite easily," he said. At the same time, he is a favorite among young people considering marriage.

"Some have asked for me. Young people have asked for me to do the (pre-marital) counseling and then after we have had several counseling sessions, have asked me if I would marry them."

Despite his popularity with couples getting married, he said he does not believe Roman Catholic priests should be allowed to marry.

"Marriage has its proper place," he said. "When time came that I could make a change the door was open and I could pursue it."

Schumacher was married 52 years, but when his wife, Genevieve, died in 1984 he telephoned the Chicago archdiocese and said he wanted to fulfill his childhood dream of becoming a priest.

He took steps to attend the seminary when he was 17, but deferred his plans to care for his widowed mother.

Schumacher said his childhood dream has been more than fulfilled. "It's beyond what I imagined or expected, really and I'm happy about that," he said. "This year has gone by really quickly and I can say I feel like I have always been doing this."

Schumacher also makes frequent visits to hospital patients and to Catholics in a nursing home center.

Homosexual congregation joins mainline denomination

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Though churches have condemned homosexual activity for centuries, gay men and women are beginning to find a home within a mainline Christian denomination.

The Spirit of the Lakes Ecumenical Community Church became the nation's first openly homosexual congregation to join a mainline church when it was accepted into membership of the United Church of Christ in April, according to its leader.

"As far as we know, we're making history," said the Rev. Dan Geslin, pastor of Spirit of the Lakes. "We see ourselves as a prophetic voice."

"We hope that we're breaking ground and leading the way for other churches and other denominations to open up and recognize gay and lesbian people's rightful place in the church."

Spirit of the Lakes has grown from 18 people meeting in a living room in May 1987 to 150 members. It was voted into membership by more than 80 percent of the delegates attending the annual meeting of the Eastern Association, the largest of the United Church of Christ's three associations in Minnesota with 71 churches and 24,000 members.

Spirit of the Lakes is considered a "developing" church while the association reviews the group's constitution and development plan. Those are likely to be approved at the association's 1990 annual meeting, formalizing the congregation's admission, association officials say.

Samuel Loliger, co-coordinator of the United Church Coalition for Lesbian-Gay Concerns, an Athens, Ohio-based special-interest group within the church, said the acceptance of Spirit of the Lakes is a first for mainline denominations.

"This one is certainly very different than anything we have encountered before," he said. "It is an openly gay and lesbian congregation, and they have sought to become a church with that right up front."

Most Christian churches accept homosexuals as members, equally beloved by God as others, but condemn the practice of homosexuality.

But the United Church of Christ, a 1.8-million-member Protestant church formed in 1957 when the Evangelical and Reformed Church merged with the Congregational Christian Churches, often has been at the forefront of progressive social movements.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Reconciliations and better understanding are possible if you communicate with estranged loved ones in July. Sports enthusiasts find this a year in which there is lots to do. Business opportunities increase. Focus on projects that will bring long-term financial security. Mentally, you feel more alert than ever. A newcomer gives you a different slant on love and marriage.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer-composer Carly Simon, comedian Jimmie Walker, director Sidney Lumet, playwright George Abbott, TV host Phyllis George Brown, author George Orwell.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Know your priorities. Your children's security demands your full attention this weekend. Steer clear of complicated arrangements and messy entanglements. A family member understands more than you think. Welcome well-intentioned suggestions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Being outspoken could work to your advantage today. Stand up for those unable to help themselves. While daydreaming, you may get a glimpse into the future. Work harder to make your visions come true!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Enlist the cooperation of family members and friends to make this a special time. You have the extra confidence you need to meet any challenge. Walking invigorates you. Invite a loved one along.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A great day for doing things on the spur of the moment. Travel fits your restless mood. Your freewheeling ways are likely to meet with positive responses today. Call a good friend.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A good day for romance, recreation and spectator sports. Go with the first idea that excites you. Good news arrives late in the day. Someone will give you a second chance!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Any social splash that will land you in serious debt should be avoided. Do your entertaining at home and keep things simple. You gain new insights from spending time with someone who is your opposite.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Devote the early hours of your day to the practical aspects of a close relationship. Educational opportunities that arise now may never come again. Think about it! Now is the time to invest in your future.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be prepared to compromise in order to keep peace in the family. Welcome any time you have to yourself today. Self-improvement activities enjoy highly favorable influences, and so does quiet meditation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Keep an open mind about people who seem very different from you. Voicing your opinions calmly will enhance your ability to influence others. Be patient with those who ask questions. Offer examples.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Practicality is the secret of success today. Do not overlook the advantages of having a bird in the hand just because you see something more colorful at a distance. Weigh your options carefully.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Strangers could be lucky for you and your finances. You are thrown into a situation that could allow you to realize your social or romantic ambitions. Put your best foot forward; avoid appearing pushy.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Social events may take up more of your time than you planned. Postpone a shopping trip. Your interest in music or art could eventually open the door to a new job opportunity.

Mondale's daughter to be TV reporter

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Eleanor Mondale, the daughter of former Vice President Walter Mondale and his wife, Joan, has agreed to become a full-time entertainment reporter for WCCO-TV, a station official said.

The station's vice president and station manager, Bob McGinn, said Thursday the station has reached an oral agreement with Ms. Mondale, 29, and hopes to "have her on board some time this summer."

She has had TV experience with KABC in Los Angeles and has been involved with several pilot productions for Chicago's WGN, in addition to working at Chicago rock station WCKG.

She is married to Chicago Bears offensive tackle Keith Van Horne and will commute to their home in Chicago on weekends.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Folk singer Janis Ian said people must face up to the financial needs of AIDS organizations.

"I still meet a lot of people who think AIDS isn't affecting their lives," said the singer who is giving an AIDS benefit here Sunday. "They think they're not at risk. They are and they need to know that."

Ms. Ian will sing at a restaurant benefit for minimum $25 donations, following a $150-per-person reception at a cafe. Proceeds will go to four Nashville organizations working on behalf of victims of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Ms. Ian had a No. 1 hit in 1975 with "At Seventeen." She last recorded an album in 1981, but has recently emerged on the Nashville music scene.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Her latest release may be her first country album in a dozen years, but Dolly Parton said "I never sold out," when asked about the middle-of-the-road direction her career has taken.

"I think God gave me a talent (and) the kind of personality that can fit in all kinds of places, and I think it's up to me to develop that and make the most of it," the singer said in a recent interview.

"I'm the kind of person who would rather rock in my rocking chair when I'm old and regret a few things that I did than sit there and regret that I never tried."

The new album features a twangy single called "Why'd you come in Here, Lookin' Like That."

Parton won the Country Music Association award as entertainer of the year, and twice won female vocalist of the year prior to 1976 before starring in such movie as "9 to 5" and "Rhinestone" and doing television variety shows.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., plans to get married in August to Norma Gilbert, a staff member on a subcommittee of his Interior Committee, his office said Friday.

Udall, 67, and Ms. Gilbert, whose age was not disclosed, will be wed Aug. 6 at the Capitol by the Rev. James Ford, chaplain of the House. This will be her second marriage and Udall's third. Both have grown children.

Udall, a 15-term lawmaker who recently spent 2½ weeks in the hospital for treatment of his Parkinson's disease and pneumonia, began telling friends of the impending nuptials earlier this week at a fundraiser for his 1990 congressional campaign, his office said.

Ms. Gilbert, formerly of Encino, Calif., was a jobbyst in Washington many years before joining the staff of the subcommittee on insular and international affairs.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist may get his days in court but apparently needs greater exposure, having taken a back seat to TV Judge Joseph Wapner in a Washington Post survey released Friday.

Wapner, a jurist-turned-actor who presides over "The People's Court" television program, was known by 54 percent of the 1,005 randomly selected adults interviewed in the Post survey.

Only 9 percent named Rehnquist when asked to identify the chief justice.

Besides taking a back seat to Wapner, the poll showed Rehnquist also is not as well known as Associate Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. O'Connor was named by 23 percent of those interviewed.

Every other justice finished in single digits, the poll showed. Less than 1 percent named John Paul Stevens as a sitting justice. Three percent named William J. Brennan Jr. and Byron R. White. Four percent knew Harry A. Blackmun is on the court, while 5 percent mentioned Thurgood Marshall.

However, 6 percent named Antonin Scalia and 7 percent named the court's newest member, Anthony Kennedy.

The poll asked adults June 14-18 to name the chief justice, the other members of the court and to name the judge on "The People's Court" TV show.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Cardinal Timothy Manning, who strived to unify a divided archdiocese by reaching out to other faiths and minorities during his 15 years as Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles, died of cancer Friday. He was 79.

Manning died at the Norris Cancer Hospital of the University of Southern California, said A.J. Antczak, managing editor of The Tidings, the archdiocese newspaper.

Ordained a priest in 1934, he retired in 1985 as archbishop. Manning observed the 55th anniversary of his ordination as priest last week.

Former President Ronald Reagan said in a statement the archbishop "was a man of great strength, courage and compassion."

"He enriched the life of thousands who are better because of his good work," Reagan said.

Mayor Tom Bradley ordered flags at city buildings flown at half-staff in honor of Manning.

"Cardinal Manning eased the turmoil and transition from pre- to post-Vatican Council times for Catholics in the Los Angeles area," Bradley said. "He helped them through a most difficult period, and for that he will be remembered."

Manning took over the archbishop's chair in 1970 from Cardinal James Francis McIntyre, whose final years were filled with rancor as minority Catholics protested weekly in front of St. Basil's Catholic Church, saying they were being alienated from their own church. Manning worked quickly to soothe angered feelings and reconcile the church with disenfranchised groups.

"The most pressing problem, the first responsibility I could see, was toward the priest of the diocese," he said in an interview 18 months after he succeeded McIntyre. "The whole well-being of the community depends on the priests, on their unity, and on their holiness. My first reaction was to make it known that I was here to listen."

The new archbishop established ministries for blacks and Hispanics and began a Priests' Senate to give the clergy greater say in the business of the archdiocese. An Inter-Parochial Council extended the participation to the parish level.

In 1975, he established vicars for the Spanish speaking and black communities and for the Orange and Santa Barbara-Ventura counties.

Manning also visited local Protestant and Jewish congregations.

Pro-democracy demonstrators continue to be arrested

BEIJING (AP) — China arrested at least 20 more pro-democracy students and their supporters Friday, and it appeared authorities planned a major sweep over the weekend.

Night-shift workers were ordered to make sure they carried their work identification papers on Saturday because police planned to step up their search for protesters, a Chinese source said.

Early Friday, there was heavy activity by security forces in northern Beijing, where several shots were fired and the smell of tear gas filled the air, residents said.

There were unconfirmed reports that the Communist Party's Central Committee had opened a meeting in Beijing to deal with party chief Zhao Ziyang and propaganda head Hu Qili, who apparently have been stripped of power.

The party was expected to act to oust them officially from their posts and the party for expressing sympathy for demands for a freer society.

Top leaders were absent from TV news reports, and a large number of soldiers checked all vehicles on Beijing's main avenue Friday night, fueling speculation about a committee meeting.

Soldiers crushed seven weeks of student-led demonstrations when they marched into Beijing on the night of June 3-4 and cleared Tiananmen Square of thousands of protesters.

The Xinhua News Agency has said nearly 100 soldiers and police died and that thousands were injured in the subsequent crackdown, while about 100 civilians died and nearly 1,000 were injured. Chinese witnesses and Western intelligence sources said the death toll may have been as high as 3,000.

Since then, more than 1,600 people have been arrested. Despite international pleas for clemency, authorities executed 27 people Wednesday and Thursday, including seven in Beijing for attacking soldiers and destroying military vehicles when the army entered the city.

Beijing radio Friday reported the arrest of Li Bin, a worker accused of killing Liu Guogeng, a soldier who was beaten and burned to death and now regarded as a martyr.

Evening TV and radio reports said police arrested Liu Xiaobo, an instructor at Beijing Teacher's University who recently returned from six months in the United States.

Liu joined the China Democratic League, an organization of Chinese dissidents in the United States, and published anti-communist essays overseas, the reports said. He also called for an end to one-party rule and was in close contact with leaders of the democracy movement in Beijing, they said.

The government has said foreign involvement helped the students press their movement. On Thursday, authorities arrested 13 people accused of spying for Taiwan and fomenting unrest.

CBS News reported 17 students and teachers were arrested at four universities in Beijing Thursday night and Friday.

Four student leaders and one worker were arrested in Zhangjiakou, about 110 miles northwest of Beijing, official Chinese news reports said.

One of them, Liu Fuan of Beijing Medical University, was accused of organizing health care for students who went on a hunger strike in Tiananmen Square during the protests. Zhao Yiqiang, a teacher at the medical school, and his wife also were arrested. Qin Weidong, a student at Beijing Iron and Steel Institute, was accused of organizing crowds to set up barricades to block the military advance on the city.

The worker was accused of beating soldiers and throwing stones.

The party newspaper, the People's Daily, said in an editorial that pro-democracy protesters "attempted to use the model of Western capitalist countries to transform China's hard-won socialist system."

"Class struggle is still going on and we should not lower our vigilance," the editorial said, invoking a rallying cry not heard since the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution. During that decade, authorities punished thousands of Chinese deemed class enemies.

China's current senior leader, Deng Xiaoping, was among those victims.

The People's Daily has acknowledged the Communist Party is guilty of corruption, a major issue during the student protests, but said only the party can correct its mistakes.

Radio reports and the official Xinhua news agency said 27 people were given jail terms for rioting in the southern city of Changsha in April when the democracy movement was just starting. One of them was given a death sentence with a two-year reprieve, the penalty being reduced to life imprisonment contingent upon good behavior for two years.

Nixon praises Bush's response to China

WASHINGTON (AP) — Richard M. Nixon has praised President Bush's "measured response" to the deadly crackdown on democracy demonstrators in Beijing, urging the White House to stand firm against "a strange coalition of China-bashers" who want harsh U.S. action.

Nixon, who as president reopened the door to China in 1972, said punitive policies would be popular politically and satisfying emotionally, but would have no impact on China's hard-line communist leaders and would dash prospects for economic progress and eventual political reform.

"If in our anger we drive China back into the shadows of the Soviet Union and the oppressive economic system Deng Xiaoping has tried to reform, those who have died for freedom in China will truly have died in vain," Nixon said in an article written for the Los Angeles Times Syndicate and distributed by his office.

Nixon said his journey to China in 1972 was denounced by both the right and the left, and Bush now faces criticism on both sides, too. "Those on the far right who oppose any relations with China will demand economic and diplomatic sanctions," he said. "So will the human rights lobby, which calls for punishing every regime that does not live up to our standards regardless of our interests or those of the millions living under those regimes, whom sanctions would hurt the most."

"The Bush administration should continue to ignore these extremist voices and stay the prudent course it has already set," he said.

Bush has suspended military aid and limited contacts with the Chinese government, but has resisted demands in Congress for more stringent sanctions. Secretary of State James A. Baker III told a House committee that Bush is taking targeted steps, avoiding inflammatory rhetoric and preserving options for future action.

Nixon said that is the correct course. "The Chinese got along without the West for a quarter-century and they could do so again," he said. "If we force them back into their angry isolation from the West, we risk prompting a potentially disastrous entente between the two great communist powers."

The ex-president said that would serve Moscow's interests, but no others. He said Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev knows well that a freeze between Washington and Beijing would hasten the thaw he seeks with China.

"Whatever happens in the future, it is imperative that Sino-American relations remain strong so the United States can help maintain the balance among China, Japan and the Soviet Union," Nixon said.

He said some Americans have gone overboard on China, seeing rapprochement as a romance.

"China has a limitless capacity to fascinate," he said. "But it is not Disneyland. It is, as it has been since 1949, a communist dictatorship held together by brute force."

German parliament demands China stop executing protesters

By CHRISTOPHER BURNS
Associated Press Writer

West Germany's parliament on Friday demanded that China stop executing protesters and urged that development funds be cut off to Beijing, but Japan's government says it is avoiding sanctions that would isolate its neighbor.

Italy put off a decision on development assistance to China to show its protest of China's crackdown this month against a pro-democracy movement.

In Oslo, a firebomb destroyed a car at the Chinese Embassy on Thursday but caused no injuries, Norwegian police said Friday.

West Germany's top lawmaking body, the Bundestag, said it "emphatically demands, along with the federal government, that the Chinese government neither impose nor carry out any further death sentences."

Chinese authorities this week executed 27 people charged with taking part in the demonstrations.

The Bundestag, in the statement forged by all major parties, urged the West German government to suspend further capital development assistance to China and urged the World Bank to cease giving credits.

The Chinese crackdown began on June 3-4 as government troops stormed student protesters at Beijing's Tiananmen Square. Official Chinese media said 200 police and protesters were killed, but Chinese witnesses and foreign intelligence sources say as many as 3,000 died.

In East Berlin, church sources said East German security police on Thursday night temporarily detained 30 people who had tried to deliver a protest message to the Chinese Embassy.

East Germany's ruling Communist Party has defended China's official version of the crackdown on activists.

Japan is taking cautious steps despite charges at home that it has not responded strongly enough, the Foreign Ministry in Tokyo said Friday. Prime Minister Souda Uno, in a speech to business leaders, said he worried about isolating China from the international community.

Japan has halted high-level diplomatic contacts, put off talks on a new five-year $5.6 billion loan package and publicly expressed "sorrow and disappointment" over the executions.

Japanese opposition politicians, some business leaders and the media have criticized the cautious stance of the government, which provides 80 percent of China's foreign aid.

Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti said Italy will not make any decision regarding development aid to China before next week's Common Market summit in Madrid "as a sign of serious disagreement with what is happening with executions and unacceptable repression."

Italian development aid to China is estimated to have been about $1.5 billion over the past eight years. It wasn't immediately known how much new aid was put on hold by Friday's action.

In London, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on Friday conferred with a senior Hong Kong official and renewed promises to be flexible about allowing the colony's residents to emigrate to Britain.

But in her meeting with Dame Lydia Dunn, a member of Hong Kong's Executive Council, Mrs. Thatcher resisted demands to give the 3.25 million Hong Kong Chinese who have a form of British passport the right to settle in Britain.

The colony is due to be handed over to China in 1997 under an agreement which calls for the communist giant to preserve Hong Kong's capitalist system for 50 years. The crackdown in China has made many residents uneasy about the change.

In Hong Kong, a public opinion poll published Friday indicated only about 6 percent of the residents would move to Britain if granted the right of residency, while two-thirds would remain in Hong Kong.

Playwright keeps 'life's appointments' despite repression

By CHRISTOPHER WREN
New York Times News Service

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The South African playwright Athol Fugard says his latest appointment with himself was made when he came across a brief newspaper article about a black schoolteacher killed during racial unrest near the Indian Ocean city of Port Elizabeth.

"Life serves me up appointments that I've got to keep, and if I don't, my soul is in trouble," Fugard explained. "That item just tapped me on the shoulder."

What resulted was Fugard's latest play, "My Children, My Africa," scheduled to open Tuesday at the Market Theater here.

It examines the developing friendship in a segregated small town between a white schoolgirl and a black schoolboy under the encouragement of his black teacher, and its interruption during the racial violence that flared across South Africa in 1984.

The play, which Fugard is also directing, is his first world premiere at the Market since "A Lesson From Alopes" in 1978. His last two works, "A Place With the Pigs" and "The Road to Mecca," were performed first at the Yale Repertory Theater in New Haven, Conn.

"The Road to Mecca" enjoyed a long run last year at the Promenade Theater in New York and is scheduled for revival at the Kennedy Center in Washington.

Fugard, who makes his home near Port Elizabeth, says his new play seemed too important to open anywhere but in South Africa, though he hopes to see it come in time to the United States.

"I COULDN'T TAKE this play to America and do it there first," he said. "I couldn't live with my conscience."

At 57, Fugard has the ravaged face of a recovering alcoholic and the lithe frame of a passionate jogger, both of which he freely admits to being.

His eyes blaze with a prophet's intensity, and his thoughts tumble out as deftly charged as the dialogue of one of his plays. He absorbs the small talk of an interviewer as if squirreling it away for some future purpose.

But the most appealing quality of South Africa's foremost playwright is his utter lack of self-importance. John Kani, a prominent South African actor and a friend for 24 years, cited Fugard's talent for making the commonplace special.

"He opens up situations that I take for granted. He writes about the people on the street corners, the simple ones, the no-name ones," Kani said. "Your actor's technique is not necessary here. Your honesty is necessary here."

Kathy-Jo Ross, the young actress who plays the schoolgirl, says she was afraid to audition for Fugard, having written so many papers about him as a literature student at the University of the Witwatersrand in Johannesburg — until she met him.

"He's so unpretentious and so inspirational," Miss Ross said. "He's got a great sense of humor. He's the sort of man who misses nothing."

In recent plays, Fugard had drifted away from the gritty realities of South Africa, with, for example, his interracial lovers trapped by the authorities in "Statements Made After an Arrest Under the Immorality Act," and into a relatively gentler realm of allegory.

"A PLACE WITH THE PIGS," based on another news clipping he found, about a Russian army deserter who hid for 42 years in a pigsty, considered the futility of trying to escape the world.

"The Road to Mecca," about an eccentric sculptor defying the parochial intolerance of her small community, was set in the Karoo, a semi-arid prairie of the Eastern Cape, but it could have taken place in New England or Mississippi.

Now Fugard has turned back to a subject at hand in "My Children, My Africa," about the potential and pain of young South Africans, black and white, bumping against the walls of apartheid.

"It occurred to me that no young person is born with prejudices intact," he said. "It is what we do to them." This realization obsessed him after he visited with a graduating class at a white high school in the Karoo.

"With this new play, my focus has moved outside of myself," he said, though he could not quite explain why.

"What I find has happened is that my freedom on the stage, my liberation from the confines of a literal setting will continue," he said. "But I find that I've come back to being a very specific observer of my country at this moment in time."

He typically keeps his casts small: only three characters inhabit this play.

"I'm a minimalist. It's the dimensions of my canvas," explained Fugard, whose taste in music and art runs to chamber groups and small paintings.

The characters come forward in turn to share what the playwright calls their "confidences" with the audience (he insists they are not soliloquies), because they cannot communicate honestly with one another.

"MY DIRECTION to the actors was, 'You're in the company of people you can trust. You can talk and unburden and confide in them in the most intimate way,'" Fugard said.

"My Children, My Africa" is set in a shabby classroom of a black township in the Eastern Cape.

The opening interscholastic debate between the black boy, Thami Mbikwana, and the white girl, Isabelle Dyson, becomes a metaphor for the play.

"The power of this piece takes place in the written word," Fugard said. "It's a more argumentative play than anything else I have written."

Fugard's schoolteacher, Anel Myalaty, believes he has produced in Thami a student who justifies his years spent toiling in the inferior system of black education (even today, the South African government spends five-and-a-half times on a white schoolchild what it does on a black one).

Mr. M., as the teacher is popularly called, proposes that Thami and Isabelle, who has paid a rare visit to the black school with her debating team, join together to compete in a national literary quiz.

But Thami, outwardly obedient, is soon pulled into the vortex of protest politics by his young comrades, and Mr. M.'s effort to reclaim his prize pupil ends in self-destruction.

The playwright admitted that he identified with Mr. M.

"A lot of what Mr. M. says is Fugard's finding common ground with a black schoolteacher," he said.

"I again find myself witnessing rather than confessing. Here I am once again witnessing the dilemma of my own country."

JOHN KANI, who plays Mr. M., admitted that the role left him uncomfortable because of the schoolmaster's collaboration with the authorities.

"Every time I go over it, I have a sense of exhaustion at the end," Kani said during rehearsal. "My soul is not resting easy, because no matter how you look at it, it's me who has to stand on that stage, it's me who has to go back to Soweto, it's me who has to explain to my brothers."

Kani, one of whose brothers served five years as a political prisoner on Robben Island, South Africa's equivalent of Alcatraz, might have balked at playing such a part but for his long friendship with Fugard.

"I trust him completely with my life," Kani said. "I can go on stage and make a complete fool of myself, and if he says it's OK, I trust him."

His admiration is rooted in part in Fugard's own experience as an actor.

"He's an actor's playwright," Kani said. "When other writers who have never been actors themselves write, they write unspoken words. He is almost speaking each word as an actor. And an actor finds it easy to come into these words. When he gives you his words, it's like putting on an old jacket. They fit you."

Kathy-Jo Ross, 24, agreed.

"He's written a part for an 18-year-old girl," she said, "and not one single thing she says doesn't ring true."

"I'd say in South African theater, he was sort of our absolute," Miss Ross said. "He's sort of unanimously liked because he is so bloody good."

FUGARD'S PLAYS have received more mixed reviews from the South African censors.

"Master Harold" ... and the Boys" was closed down during the rehearsal, he said, but the ban was overturned after a court appeal.

Rehearsal echoes play's dialogue

New York Times
News Service

During the rehearsal of "My Children, My Africa" in a church hall in downtown Johannesburg, a discussion developed among the actors — John Kani, Raphaela Seipheno and Kathy-Jo Ross — and the playwright that could have been lifted from a Fugard script.

Seipheno, who plays the schoolboy Thami, admitted that when he was younger he had never had white friends.

Raphaela Seipheno: "I was only exposed to whites a few years ago."

Kathy-Jo Ross: "You've never met white kids your own age?"

Seipheno: "I never wanted to. It was those silly white things. I used to get mad."

Athol Fugard: "Why?"

Seipheno: "I don't know why. It's like when they talk to you, they are trying to make favors."

Fugard: "How come you've changed? What happened? When you told Kathy you'd never had a one-on-one relationship with a white, Kathy nearly fainted. What happened?"

Seipheno says he was influenced by some white teachers at the University of the Witwatersrand while a student there: "I think some are committed to the struggle in their own individual way."

Fugard (to Ross): "You must also understand that as a white you've got nothing to resent. You've got no problem."

Kani: "My son is 14, and I have to explain to him that a white man in plainclothes is not a policeman off duty."

Record producer Bowen can carry the hits even if he can't carry a tune

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Jimmy Bowen doesn't sing well and can barely read music.

But in a career spanning four decades, the 51-year-old Bowen has been a record producer for pop stars such as Frank Sinatra and Dean Martin, and such country stars as Hank Williams Jr. and Reba McEntire.

In the past 12 years, the Dumas, Texas, native has headed four Nashville record divisions at one time or another. Right now he heads MCA's Nashville office and is president of the new Universal Records under the MCA corporate umbrella.

In the spacious den of his plantation-style home sits a brightly colored juke box containing 100 carefully selected songs. They're hits Bowen has been associated with in some fashion.

"I don't have time to play it a lot," says Bowen, who works an average of 90 hours a week.

Even when not at work, he is consumed by music. The huge television screen in his den is often playing MTV. He listens to a radio or cassette player when he takes a bath. He listens to music on the radio next to his bed and in his car on the way to his Music Row office and recording studio.

Much of his career has been in producing records: directing the recording sessions, helping choose the songs and mixing the vocals and instrumentation into the final product.

In 1987 alone, Bowen was the record producer on 11 No. 1 hit singles and three No. 1 albums. He has been the producer for Williams for nine years covering 11 albums.

"I think I was born with a real good ear for music in general," he said in an interview. "I like all kinds of music if it's done well. I've worked in many different kinds of music and enjoyed it."

Thirty years ago, he used to play bass guitar, but today he says, "I all can do is stay in (key of) A." As for his singing, Bowen says, "I'm about a quarter tone flat."

Record producer Jimmy Bowen keeps the juke box in his den filled with 100 songs — songs that he has been associated with in some fashion.

While working in Los Angeles in the mid-1960s, Bowen was the record producer for Sinatra on hits such as "Strangers in the Night" and "That's Life."

"I never worked with anyone who phrased better than Frank Sinatra," he recalled. "His breathing and phrasing were incredible. He was an incredible professional. He was always straight to the point, and he was a good human being. I really liked him and liked working with him."

With Martin, Bowen was involved in two dozen hit singles and five albums that sold at least 1 million copies each. One of the tunes was "Everybody Loves Somebody Sometime," Martin's signature song.

"He was the most unique, laid-back artist I ever worked with," he said.

Bowen broke into the music business by playing bass guitar in a band with rock 'n' roll pioneer Buddy Knox. He co-wrote Knox's hit record in 1957, "Party Doll."

He got into production work in Los Angeles in the '60s, then moved to Nashville in the mid-70s and concentrated his vast musical talents on country artists.

Singer-songwriter Paul Overstreet says the 1988 Grammy-winner "Forever and Ever, Amen" was inspired by his daughter.

Four-year-old inspires country Grammy hit

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Little Casey Schlitz, whose dad is a songwriter, had just learned the Lord's Prayer and got into the habit of saying "forever and ever, amen" at the end of everything he said.

Schlitz and a hot singer-songwriter named Paul Overstreet started tinkering with what the 4-year-old said and turned it into the 1988 Grammy-winner "Forever and Ever, Amen," which was recorded by country star Randy Travis and became one of the biggest hits in recent years.

"We started monkeying around with it, and before you knew it, it started being fun," Overstreet recalled. "It was done in an hour and a half or so, and we had an idea who should sing it."

"It was a unique way to say something at that time, but it didn't give me chills the first time I heard it. A lot of the success was due to Randy Travis' popularity at the time."

Overstreet was surprised to win a Grammy for the song. "I don't think it's sunk in yet to be recognized with the 'big boys.' That's the big leagues there. Being a country boy from down in Mississippi and going to New York (for the Grammy show), it was pretty neat. It was an opportunity you don't get every day."

Sixteen years ago, Overstreet, who was born in Newton, Miss., and raised in Vancleave, arrived in Nashville without a job and homeless. He slept in an empty church until he could find work as a welder. Then he finally broke into the music business, writing and singing. In the past three years, he's probably been the top songwriter in country music.

He wrote "On the Other Hand," also recorded by Travis, which was voted song of the year in 1987 by both the Country Music Association and the Academy of Country Music. And he wrote or co-wrote a string of other country hits: "Diggin' Up Bones" and "Deeper Than the Holler," both recorded by Travis; "When You Say Nothing at All," recorded by the late Keith Whitley; "Same Ole Me," by George Jones; "You're Still New to Me," by Marie Osmond and Paul Davis; "One Love at a Time," by Tanya Tucker; and "I Fell in Love Last Night," by the Forester Sisters.

As a recording artist, his debut RCA album "Sowin' Love" has produced two hit singles this year: the title cut plus "Love Helps Those."

The 34-year-old Overstreet has also tackled an alcohol and drug problem, and says he's found an inner peace after quitting substances four years ago. That's when his songwriting career also blossomed.

"I'm in a real peaceful place with myself right now," he said. "I still expect quite a bit from myself, but I feel I'm in the right place on the right road and I'll progress as time goes on. This is the first time in my life I can actually say I'm on the right road. I feel I'm building in the right direction."

He used cocaine and developed a reputation as one of the biggest boozers in music industry hangouts. "I drank 'til it was over," he recalled. "It was a miserable time."

"I definitely was wasting my talent. I didn't finish songs. I didn't have the energy to work. I was operating at 25 to 50 percent of my capabilities on an average."

In his songwriting, he tries to convey positive messages and talk about life's potentials.

"I've tried to say things in songs to encourage people rather than take advantage of weaknesses," Overstreet said. "I try to see things that would help people see how things could be."

"I try to sew a lot of that into the songs. It's a real complicated process. I'll think of something in a way I've never looked at it before. Then I can formulate the two ends together with the chorus in the middle."

"I try to paint the picture, set the story I'm developing around the idea. At that point, the lyrics and music kind of come together."

And that's how "Forever and Ever, Amen" happened.

A memorable line from the song is "as long as old men sit and talk about the weather, as long as old women sit and talk about old men."

"That's pretty plain," Overstreet said. "It's real. It hit the heart of a lot of people."

Florida teen consumed by rock 'n' roll

NEW YORK (AP) — Rock 'n' roll has always meant the unexpected for Tom Petty, even when he was growing up in Gainesville, Fla.

"Rock 'n' roll came over me like a fever that I never got rid of," he recalled in a recent interview. "consumed me like a poison — completely consumed me to where I can honestly say I didn't think of anything else. It was all I could do, think or anything."

"It made for a terrible home life. My family didn't understand; my father thought I was mental. I understand why because I was very obsessed with it. It was an alternative to working. I had no opportunity for anything in my life, with where I lived and what I was up against."

He was a non-musical child who discovered a knack for guitar. A quiet, skinny kid who never dreamed of being famous, Petty was soon playing in local bands.

"You'd go and see some other kid whose hair was long, this was around '65, and go, 'Wow, there's one like me!' You'd go over and talk and he'd say, 'I've got a drum set.' 'You do! Great!' That was my whole life. Still is, I'm afraid."

The Traveling Wilburys was a surprise, the result of a jam session with George Harrison, Jeff Lynne, the late Roy Orbison and Bob Dylan that grew into a best-selling album. Petty's new record, "Full Moon Fever," was an accident as well.

Late in 1987, he pulled up to a traffic light in Los Angeles and in the next car spotted Lynne, who had just produced Harrison's "Cloud Nine" LP.

"Jeff and George both started to come to my house a lot and we'd just sit around and play," Petty said. "One day, I was showing Jeff this song I'd written and he suggested some changes. It was really good input. We wrote another one and thought we'd put it on tape while he was in town."

They headed over to the house of Mike Campbell, a guitarist in Petty's band, The Heartbreakers, and went to work.

"We did the first couple and thought it was pretty good, that maybe we should keep on working. 'C'mon Jeff, do one more, now just one more...'"

"Full Moon Fever" is Petty's ninth album, and first without The Heartbreakers, although Campbell and keyboardist Belmont Trench contributed. Lynne helped produce the record and co-wrote eight of the 12 songs.

"Jeff's brilliant," said Petty, who will tour with The Heartbreakers this summer. "He's certainly one of the top two or three people I've ever seen in the studio. He's growing as an artist by leaps and bounds — much better than a lot of the people that we hold up as great rock heroes."

Petty makes no secret of his love for The Byrds; his vocals and 12-string Rickenbacker guitar have made some of his songs, notably "American Girl," sound almost uncannily like the 1960s folk-rock group.

On "Full Moon Fever," he does a note-for-note cover of The Byrds' "Feel a Whole Lot Better." The song was recorded, naturally, on a spur-of-the-moment decision.

"We were in the studio and had seen (former Byrd Roger) McGuinn play the song. We started playing it, and said, 'Let's cut it.' I thought, 'Well, it's my solo album, I'll put it on. I don't care.'"

"I couldn't think of how else to do it," he laughed. "I've stolen so much from them already."

Petty has had his share of unpleasant surprises. When MCA bought out his first label, Shelter, in 1978, he angrily filed suit for artistic control and eventually settled out of court after a lengthy battle. In 1981, he fought to lower the list price on his "Hard Promises" album, forcing MCA to release the record at $8.98 instead of $9.98. While recording "Southern Accents," which came out in 1985, he punched a wall and broke his hand, an injury that took a year and a half to heal.

OVER 50

Aged can be aided by self-help books

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL

When we were of child-bearing age, many of us exhibited inordinate interest in child-rearing. At social gatherings, school and work the subject always was Number One. Books became best sellers, passed to the newest parent-to-be like bassinets. Spock was a household word.

We have now entered another age where there is no lack of self-help available. The libraries are full of books that tell us that we are getting older — as if we didn't know — and then proceed to say how to do it best.

As a columnist on aging issues, a lot of those books come to me, and having an advanced love of the written word, I find it hard to give them away and never, never — no matter how bad they are — throw them away.

Rosenthal

So, glancing about my writing room — a sanctuary that cries for a shovel or a librarian — I find books with titles like "How to Survive Your Aging Parents"; "Caring for the Disabled Elderly"; "The Myth of Senility" and "Symptoms after 40." Someday, the day will come, when I'll look at these worthies.

In this week's mail arrived two more, very different books, that jump to the head of the line. Both are slim volumes, one has 126 pages and lists for $7.95. The other is 76 pages is free from the government. Both are standouts in their class.

The first is titled "To Love Again: Intimate Relationships After 60." In it, Florence Mason simply talks to people over 60. "What's it like, being in love?" is her question. "I asked myself, then others; why is 'elderlove' so special...do I want to be involved again; do I want to love again?" she says.

In this book you hear voices; it is like moving from group to group at a garden party and catching snatches of conversation. "I only date women of my generation, but I am with younger people as often as possible," says a man. "I can't imagine sharing a bed with a man again," says a woman. "My husband and I were married 30 years before he died; I'd feel that I was being unfaithful to him."

The other book is called "Health Resources for Older Women" and is free from the National Institute on Aging, P.O. Box 8057, Gaithersburg, Md. 20898. Where the first book was for the spirit, this one is practical.

By age 65, there are 123 women for every 100 men. The average age of widowhood is 56 and half of all women over 65 live as widows. Despite their individual differences, the book points out, older women have more chronic or long-term illnesses such as diabetes, arthritis, hypertension, and osteoporosis than other groups, make more visits to doctors and use more prescription medicines. And, they are among the poorest members of society.

Having said that, this slim volume provides up to date information and resources on major health issues affecting women. Under each heading, it succinctly states the problem, lists the organizations that deal with the problems, complete with addresses and telephone numbers, and has a suggested list of reading material with citations of how to ask the library or bookstore for it.

This is a wonderful example of your tax money at work. The subject headings are menopause, nutrition and physical fitness, skin, use of medicines, accident prevention, osteoporosis, osteoarthritis, urinary incontinence, cognitive changes.

One chapter has information on housing options, financial planning, caregiving and widowhood. And finally, a wonderfully useful list of sources complete with addresses and phone numbers — even the headquarters of the Social Security Administration for those who like to go right to the top.

Just as baby books once helped you navigate shoals in unfamiliar waters, so can books like these help now. When you're done, pass them on.

FINANCIAL FOCUS

Check options on early retirement distributions

By VAN PEARCY

Many corporations have used Employee Stock Ownership Plans (ESOPs), to help their employees plan for tomorrow by saving today. With ESOPs also known as PAYSOPs and TRAPs, everyone was a winner. Corporations received a favorable tax credit for sponsoring the retirement plans.

Unfortunately, the 1986 Tax Reform Act eliminated some of the tax credit available to corporations offering ESOPs. As a result, many companies, such as Ford Motor Co., General Motors and Texas Utilities have terminated their ESOP programs. Millions of employees are now receiving early retirement plan distributions.

If you're one of the people who will be receiving a retirement distribution, don't panic. These distributions usually represent only a small portion of your total retirement income and can easily be rolled over into another retirement planning program, such as 401(k) or an IRA. Of course, this is just one of several options that are available. Although we can't discuss them all, we can touch on some of the more common ones.

The first option that may be available is to transfer your assets into another company savings plan, such as a 401(k) or profit-sharing plan. If you choose this option, you never take actual receipt of your assets and thus avoid any taxes you may incur by doing so.

A second common option is to simply take a cash distribution.

Of course, you may keep this cash, invest it, or roll a portion or all of it into an IRA. Electing the rollover option allows your retirement dollars to accumulate tax deferred. If you choose not to roll over your distribution, one note of caution should be made. Any taxable portion of the lump-sum distribution that isn't rolled into an IRA within 60 days is taxed as ordinary income. Also, if you are under age 59 1/2, you may be penalized 10 percent on this amount for early withdrawal of retirement funds. In many cases, the penalty is waived; check with your plan administrator.

A final common option to employees facing ESOP terminations is to take ownership of company stock equal in value to your distribution. These shares, like cash, may be rolled in an IRA to avoid taxation and early-withdrawal penalties. The other option is to simply hold the stock. Again, like cash, the value of the stock will be taxed as ordinary income in the year the distribution is taken.

Before making any decisions on how to take your early retirement distributions, make sure you understand all your options. You can accomplish this by visiting a financial adviser or your corporation's benefits manager.

PRIME TIME CALENDAR

June 24-30

MIDLAND COLLEGE

Time permits are being issued now for Summer II registration. All persons who plan on taking classes during the second summer term should visit the Student Services Office in the Administration Building Monday through Thursday from 7 a.m.-5 p.m. or Monday, July 3.

Time permits assign specific times for students to report for registration on July 6.

Summer II classes begin Monday, July 10, and end on Aug. 16. If you have never taken college classes, the second summer term is the last opportunity to take classes without having to face the TASP (Texas Academic Skills Program) exam. All first-time college students enrolling for the 1989 fall semester or thereafter, will have to take the TASP exam.

There's a very nice art show on display at McCormick Gallery in the Allison Fine Arts Building. It's an open show sponsored by the Midland Arts Association. Only three more days remain for you to see this show, which features oils, watercolors, ceramics, and photography. The exhibit may be seen Monday through Wednesday from 7 a.m.-10 p.m. The show closes Wednesday, June 28.

ARE YOU AFRAID OF STORMS?

This large 3 bedroom, 2 1/2 bath, all electric home on 1/4 acre at the corner of Kniffin and Marie in Skyview Addition just about has it all. It features a large deep underground area with a wood burning fireplace which stores heat in a stone filled chamber. This heated air or cool air can be circulated through your home, lowering your heating and cooling costs. This three plus year project alone cost more than our place will bring. There is also a block building in back which has upstairs storage and will accommodate a 40' foot R.V. There is abundant water in this area and new homes are still being built. Get a good view of the Tall City. Being sold by owners, for $165,000, or best cash offer.
