Senate opens fund-raising hearings

China had plan 'to subvert our election process,' chairman says

■ Democrats demand that abuses by both major political parties be laid before the American people.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Senators opened politically charged hearings into fund-raising abuses Tuesday with two surprises: U.S. intelligence has unmasked continuing efforts by China to influence elections, and a reluctant witness, John Huang, is making an offer that could lead to his testimony.

Outlining what he called "the story about the existence of a Chinese plan to subvert our election process," the chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee said China "is believed to have allocated substantial sums of money" to influence the 1996 presidential election, congressional races and state elections.

Chairman Fred Thompson, R-Tenn., said the plan violates American law.

Top Democrats on the panel said they weren't ready to go as far as Thompson in his talk of efforts to subvert U.S. elections.

After months of attention on Democratic excesses in raising millions to finance President Clinton's re-election, Democrats suggested that Thompson overstated the evidence, and they demanded that abuses by both major political parties be laid before the American people.

"We know in our hearts the money chase is a bipartisan problem," said Carl Levin, D-Mich.

Top Democrats also said they weren't ready to go as far as Thompson in alleging Chinese efforts to subvert American elections.

In another development, Huang, the Democrats' chief fund-raiser among Asian-Americans, made an unexpected offer to testify after months of insisting he would do so only with a grant of immunity from prosecution.

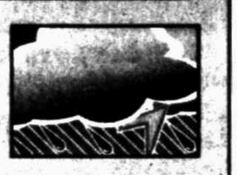

"Having become a defenseless target for Asian bashers ... Mr. Huang feels compelled to forgo the security of his constitutional protections and to attempt honorably to acknowledge whatever mistakes he may have made over time," Ty Cobb, Huang's attorney, wrote to the committee.

Huang offered to take the stand to deny allegations that he leaked classified government information

Odessa standoff

ODESSA — S.W.A.T. team officers evacuated residents of a local neighborhood Tuesday after the area became the site of a standoff between authorities and man who police said possibly was armed. The incident occurred at 411 E. 44th Street at about 11 a.m. Police said they receive a call from a mental health agency that needed assistance with a man in his late 30s who refused to leave his house. Witnesses were quoted as saying the man was armed with a shotgun. Police could not confirm this detail, and the standoff continued at press time late Tuesday. After a 12-hour standoff, a total of 18 officers were called to the scene. Justice of the Peace Charles Gee issued an order for the man to be taken to the Big Spring State Hospital.

JonBenet probe

BOULDER, Colo. — From the beginning, the peculiarly exact demand of $118,000 in the JonBenet Ramsey ransom note has baffled investigators. Now, police are said to be considering the possibility that the figure was inspired by a Bible passage familiar to the little girl's mother.

Miss Texas

THE GIRL NEXT DOOR

Midlander Reagan Hughes, a 22-year-old Baylor University student, was crowned the new Miss Texas Saturday in Fort Worth.

Family, friends describe Miss Texas as 'not your typical pageant girl'

She has a sparkling tiara, a brand new Chevy Blazer, a full length mink, thousands of dollars in scholarship money and still acts the girl next door.

Midlander Reagan Hughes, a 22-year-old Baylor University student, was crowned the new Miss Texas Saturday in Fort Worth.

"It's still kind of sinking in," the blonde-haired, blue-eyed beauty told the Reporter-Telegram Tuesday.

But fame appears to be catching up with Miss Hughes. "I lost my driver's license a couple of weeks ago," she said. "When I went to get a new one they recognized me as Miss Texas."

Miss Hughes competed as Miss Lake O' the Pines, representing an East Texas weekend resort area.

She finally won the coveted crown on her fifth attempt in the Miss Texas Pageant.

She was first runner-up in last year's pageant and almost didn't compete in this year's contest. "After four years I had to evaluate everything," she said.

A trip to the 1996 Miss America Pageant clarified her thinking. "I felt it was worthwhile to try one more time," she said. "Competing has been so beneficial to me."

Miss Hughes said her five years in the pageant limelight have helped her hone her talents for public speaking and her "God given" singing voice.

She won the talent portion of Saturday's competition by singing the contemporary Christian tune "Via Dolorosa." It means "the way of much pain," she said.

"Before I got involved I was very skeptical of pageants," Miss Hughes said. "I am a completely different person now — and all for the better."

Miss Hughes is the first woman to represent Midland in the Miss America Pageant. Miss Texas has not won the title of Miss America since 1975.

Debi Hughes did not actually see her daughter crowned Miss Texas. "Her director Mike Graham passed out when they announced her name, so I didn't get to see it."

Ban on dogs at city park sporting events passes first reading

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Those who take the family dog to softball games be aware — a new city ordinance passed on first reading Tuesday bans dogs from sporting events at city parks.

The city's Parks and Recreations Department receives 45 to 50 complaints each year about dogs in the city parks, according to city staff.

■ Related story/4A

Because of a recent incident where two dogs got into a fight, the Midland City Council voted 6-1 to approve an ordinance banning dogs from city park athletic areas during league play — including all organized sporting events such as baseball, softball and soccer.

The new law does not become official until it passes on second reading at the July 22 council meeting.

Although there has been no report of any child ever being hurt by a dog at these events, some league organizers expressed concerns that this could happen at some time in the future.

Most complaints were not focused on the danger of properly leashed animals. "A lot of pet owners are not responsible for cleaning up after their pets," said Chuck Swallow, community services

Military copter crashes during training killing 8

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — An Army Black Hawk helicopter on a routine training mission crashed and burned in a remote wooded area of this base Tuesday, killing all eight soldiers aboard, military officials said.

The chopper went down about 2:15 p.m. at the western end of the sprawling base near Fayetteville. All the dead were members of the 82nd Airborne Division, said Sgt. Ron Gardiner, a division spokesman.

It was not immediately clear what caused the crash. The weather was clear and calm when the helicopter went down, it was not conducting live-fire exercises and no other choppers were in the area.

Capt. Cindi King, a spokeswoman with the 82nd Airborne, said not all of the bodies would be removed in order to preserve the crash site for the investigators from Fort Rucker, Ala., who were

Midlanders' mixed reaction to Mars mission: fascinating, waste of money

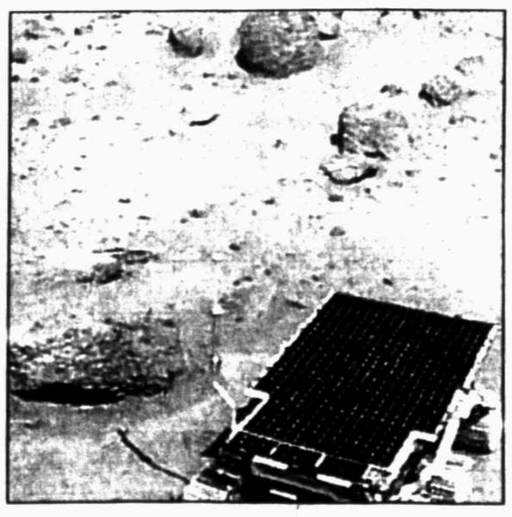

Scientists: Rock shows Mars to be more like Earth than believed

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The first chemical analysis of a rock on Mars suggests the dusty world may have had abundant water at the time it formed — a vital requirement if the red planet was to develop life as Earth did.

Geologists already know that water once existed on Mars. On Monday, Pathfinder scientists presented evidence of massive floods 1 billion to 3 billion years ago. But the latest evidence hints that water may have existed there more than 4 billion years ago, the same era when life began on Earth.

The findings radioed to scientists from the Mars Pathfinder spacecraft and released Tuesday suggested the rock — a football-sized specimen nicknamed "Barnacle Bill" — may be andesite. That's a type of volcanic rock named for Earth's Andes Mountains, where it is common.

As Sojourner blazes a path across Mars, Midlanders gaze skyward with one eye wide with wonder, the other clouded by doubt.

Astronomers gape at the photographic landscape. Others deride the pictures as fake, the mission as a boondoggle.

But what really grips Midlanders is the question of whether Martians ever swam in an apparent flood that deluged the blood-red planet a billion years ago.

"It excites me to death," said Trinity student Eve Little, 16, who this week dressed as an alien to watch the new movie, "Men in Black."

Eve, fascinated by the Mars mission, has developed a theory of her own: that as the solar system cools, life that evolved in the outer planets moves steadily toward the sun.

"I believe that in a billion years we'll all die out and there will be life on Venus," she said.

Local astronomers, however, are more circumspect about the possibility life exists on a planet once named by Romans

WORLD IN BRIEF

■ Hired killer stabs wrong man

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — A man hired to kill a wounded gangster mistakenly stabbed a cancer patient to death because he was in the wrong bed, police said Tuesday.

Vijaya Rajah, 30, died Monday at the National Hospital in Colombo, police inspector Lakshman Molagoda said. He had been awaiting surgery for a brain tumor.

According to police, 22-year-old Sidath Thushara stabbed Rajah after mistaking him for Saman Nilantha, a gangster who was being treated for wounds suffered in a knife fight.

At the time of the killing, Nilantha was in an operating room, and nurses at the overcrowded hospital temporarily moved Rajah to Nilantha's bed.

Police said the killer was arrested as he fled with blood dripping from a dagger in his hand. He told police he was hired by a gangster whose legs had been broken by Nilantha six months ago.

■ Divers taste salvaged champagne

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Five a.m. might be too early for champagne, but 81 years isn't too late.

Members of the C Star diving consortium said bottoms up Monday morning to a cache of 81-year-old champagne they had just salvaged from a World War I shipwreck at the bottom of the Baltic Sea.

"The champagne tasted superb," Claes Bergvall told the Swedish news agency TT. He is part of the consortium that found the wreck last month under 210 feet of water in the Gulf of Finland.

The schooner Joenkoeping was laden with tens of thousands of bottles of cognac, champagne and red wine when it was sunk by a German U-boat in 1916.

The diving consortium doesn't know how much of the cargo is intact, but hopes it will fetch huge sums at auction.

■ Toads rain down on Mexican town

CULIACAN, Mexico — Call it a challenge to windshield wipers: It rained toads in the town of Villa Angel Flores.

Motorists reported the shower of toads at around 11 p.m. Saturday in Mexico's Pacific Coast state of Sinaloa.

A mini tornado had whirled up a cluster of toads from a nearby pond and dumped them on the town, the newspaper El Debate reported Tuesday.

Coup opponent shot dead while in custody

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Coup leader Hun Sen began eliminating his opponents Tuesday, sending soldiers into hotels and homes to round up rivals. One of his most vocal critics was shot dead while in custody.

The brutality of Hun Sen's consolidation of power raised fears about a wave of summary executions that would target supporters of the deposed first prime minister, Prince Norodom Ranariddh.

Ho Sok, a former interior minister and Hun Sen's opponent, was arrested Monday and accused of plotting against Cambodia's new leadership. On Tuesday, a Hun Sen advisor announced Ho Sok had died.

"He was arrested by the government troops and he has died," said Gen. Khieu Sopheak, calling Ho Sok a "terrorist."

He denied Hun Sen's forces were responsible for the death, claiming Ho Sok was killed by "the people." However, Ho Sok was shot in the head after being arrested by Hun Sen's men.

A Western human rights worker based in Cambodia said the killing raised fears of reprisal slayings. "We fear that this is the first on the list," said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Ranariddh, who slipped away to France before Saturday's coup, accused Hun Sen of ordering a "manhunt" for his followers.

Hun Sen's military police went door-to-door Tuesday through Phnom Penh's largest hotel, hunting down opposition legislators and arresting them, said American democracy activist Ron Abney, who witnessed the roundup. It is not known how many were caught.

The London-based human-rights group Amnesty International urged foreign embassies to offer asylum to Ranariddh's supporters and said at least 50 were in hiding or needed protection.

The fate of 13 people detained in Battambang province and 22 in Prey Veng was unknown, Amnesty said. It said several journalists who supported the prince also were believed to be in custody.

> 'He was arrested by the government troops and he has died.'
> — Cambodian Gen. Khieu Sopheak

Hun Sen went on national television Tuesday to warn foreign countries not to get involved. "Let the Cambodian people solve the situation without interference from outside," he said.

Ranariddh, however, was to arrive Wednesday in the United States to appeal for support in Washington and at the U.N. Security Council, said Socheat Ok, an official at the Cambodian U.N. mission in New York.

While Hun Sen consolidated power in the capital, fighting raged between rival factions in the northwest.

The sound of small arms fire echoed through Angkor Thom, the 700-year-old walled city that houses the famed Angkor Wat temple, ringed by glistening moats and Buddhist statues.

It was unclear whether foreign archaeologists who had been working to restore damage from previous fighting were still at the Angkor complex when the latest battles broke out.

Meanwhile, Ranariddh's forces broke through Hun Sen's lines Tuesday around the city of Siem Reap, 140 miles northwest of Phnom Penh. In northwestern Banteay Meancheay province, Ranariddh's troops reportedly were disarming Hun Sen's soldiers. Hun Sen's forces, however, were in control of Battambang, the country's second-largest city, 155 miles northwest of the capital.

Small shops in the capital reopened, but signs of the weekend's bloodshed and Monday's looting rampage by Hun Sen's soldiers were evident on nearly every street.

Traffic was forced to swerve past the charred hulk of a wrecked tank at an intersection on the road to the airport and gasoline stations were devoid of fuel pumps, snatched up in the looting.

Hun Sen apologized for the rampage in his television broadcast, but added: "The good deeds the armed forces have done must be written in our history."

Thailand took advantage of the relative quiet in the capital to ferry about 1,000 people to Bangkok in military C-130 transport planes after receiving a pledge of security from Hun Sen.

American Gary Jahn made the journey with his Thai wife.

"Everybody in Cambodia is worried," said the 37-year-old Tempe, Ariz., native. "There was shelling and I was so worried. I'm just relieved to get my two kids out."

The Pentagon ordered U.S. warships to head from Japan toward Cambodia in case an evacuation is ordered for the 1,500 Americans in the country.

DOING DOUBLE AND TRIPLE TAKES

In ancient times, the birth of twins was a rare event. These days, however, one out of every 43 births in this country results in twins, while the number of triplets has doubled since 1987. One of the reasons that the incidence of multiple births is rising has to do with the fact that women are choosing to have babies later in their lives. Because older women are more likely to ovulate more than one egg in a monthly cycle, their chances of having fraternal twins rise. (Most twins are fraternal, born of two eggs separately fertilized.) And, older women are more likely to undergo fertility treatments which, when successful, result in multiple births more than 25% of the time. Fertility treatments create this outcome by virtue of the fact that they cause the mother to ovulate two extra eggs. They also make it two and a half times more likely that a woman will have identical twins, siblings that share a single fertilized egg and the same genes.

If you have learned that you are carrying "multiples," you should consider being under the care of a doctor who specializes in obstetrics. As a Diplomate of the American Board of Obstetrics and Gynecology, I have the extra training and experience to give your pregnancy and delivery the special care you deserve. NATO leaders select three new members

MADRID, Spain (AP) — NATO, the Western bulwark of democracy for a half-century, extended membership invitations Tuesday to three of its former Eastern European enemies — Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic. The United States prevailed against a larger expansion favored by most allies.

President Clinton called it "a very great day" for European security.

"We bridged the chasm in history and began the journey to a new Europe and a new century," said Clinton, who had refused to consider more than three new members, fearing the measure would be defeated in the U.S. Senate. European nations wanted to issue five invitations.

France, backed by eight other NATO allies, fought hard for the admission of Romania and Slovenia, but bowed to the American pressure. NATO Secretary-General Javier Solana, in announcing the decision, singled out Romania and Slovenia as likely to be admitted later. Seven other countries also had sought admission.

"The alliance expects to extend further invitations in the coming years," Solana said. "No European democratic country whose admission would fulfill the objectives of the (NATO) treaty will be excluded from consideration."

Added Clinton: "These are the countries who have proved their readiness to join us at this table."

President Aleksander Kwasniewski of Poland was understandably pleased.

"Poland waited so long and now the doors to full NATO membership are open. We are very satisfied and we are ready to go forward," he said.

Slovenia's prime minister, Janez Drnousek, said he expected his country to be included in the next year or two, but his foreign minister was less diplomatic.

"Slovenia has not been given any good explanation why it is out," said Zoran Thaler, the minister.

The United States was worried that an enlargement of more than three countries would threaten the chances of getting approval by two-thirds of the U.S. Senate, a vote needed to ratify any change to the NATO treaty. Parliaments of all 16 current members of NATO must approve new members.

Those who backed the French proposal believe that Europe's southern flank is its most volatile region and say early admission of Romania and Slovenia would have added stability.

French President Jacques Chirac was stoic in defeat.

"We should look at this meeting as an evolution," he said. "It's an important step we couldn't have imagined two or three years ago."

Dutch Foreign Minister Hans van Mierlo said Germany gave up first in the battle, then they all fell to the American steamroller.

"The countries favoring five new members had to quickly face up to the reality that that was not possible, especially after Germany gave up the fight," said Van Mierlo.

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, who was born in the Czech Republic, said NATO had reversed what the Soviet Union had done "salami slice by salami slice" by taking in the three former Warsaw Pact nations.

The Russians, who also waged a losing battle against NATO enlargement, accepted it grudgingly in the end, signing a document setting out closer relations with NATO and forming a new NATO-Russia Joint Permanent Council based at NATO headquarters in Brussels.

President Vaclav Havel of the Czech Republic, speaking at a joint news conference of the three nominees, said the NATO invitations were the crowning achievement of enormous efforts by those countries to shed their communist pasts.

"We are indeed very proud that the transformations of our political systems and economies have made us eligible to be considered an integral part of the alliance," Havel said. "We also think very much about other countries aspiring to membership in NATO."

Parents of slain American hear confessions

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — The four black youths convicted of killing American Amy Biehl in a 1993 riot in a black township asked for her parents' forgiveness Tuesday — and for amnesty from the South African government.

For the first time, they admitted being involved in the mob attack on the 26-year-old Fulbright scholar, but insisted it was politically motivated, the criteria for amnesty from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

Vusumzi Ntamo, Ntobeko Peni, Mzikhona Nofemela and Mongezi Manqina are all serving 18-year sentences for beating and stabbing Biehl to death in the black township of Guguletu.

Nofemela told a packed hearing by the commission's amnesty committee that by killing whites, black militants hoped to get South Africa's then white-minority government to respond to their grievances.

"What I believed is, if you kill a white person, it is how we are going to get the land returned from the white people," he said.

Before the hearing, Amy's parents, Peter and Linda Biehl, shook hands with the parents of their daughter's assailants. The Biehls then sat silently in the front row at the Truth Commission's Cape Town headquarters.

Biehl, of Newport Beach, Calif., was in South Africa to help with voter registration in advance of the nation's first all-race elections in April 1994.

On Aug. 23, 1993 — the day before she was to leave — she was driving friends home to Guguletu when a stone-throwing mob attacked her. She tried to flee but was beaten with bricks and stabbed.

The four assailants said they belonged to the student wing of the Pan Africanist Congress, and were returning from a meeting in a nearby township where participants chanted "One settler, one bullet!" an anti-white slogan.

They said they interpreted this as a call to kill any white.

"It did not just happen," Peni said of the attack. "At the time, we were told to act and to ... fight and burn government vehicles so that South Africa would be ungovernable. ... The speaker said that every white man was an enemy."

The crowd spotted Biehl's vehicle and began stoning it. Biehl attempted to flee after a rock struck her head.

"When I saw that the driver ... was a white person, I immediately asked one of the comrades in the crowd for a knife," Manqina said in his written submission. "For me this was an opportunity to put into practice the slogan of 'one settler, one bullet.'"

Manqina said he assumed, based on trial evidence, that Biehl was killed by his stab wound to the left side.

At Tuesday's hearing, Peni said he now realizes Biehl could have helped publicize blacks' plight under apartheid, but that news about her death also achieved that purpose.

"I am not happy about that, but it is such things that have helped South Africa be where it is today," he said.

Biehl's parents, who support South Africa's efforts to exorcise the ghosts of apartheid, have said they will not oppose amnesty. They planned to make a "forward-looking" submission to the Truth Commission on Wednesday that will include writings by Amy and letters they have received from South Africans.

City Council members establish new fee list

By Gary Shapiro
Staff Writer

Midland City Council members voted Tuesday to establish a new fee list for city services, increasing some fees and adding fees for new services.

The new fee list will include those services and activities offered at the Community Services Department, Hogan Park Golf Course, Animal Control, Parks and Recreation and Health and Senior Services.

"Most of the fees are staying the same," council member Dale Brown said at Tuesday's meeting.

Some fees are being increased after city staff compared the current rate with those of similar services in other cities, according to city officials.

At the Animal Control shelter, cremation services are offered with the new fee schedule charging from $30 to $180 depending on the size of the pet and whether the cremation is private or communal.

Adoption fees have been raised from $25 to $35 and the surgery deposit for adopted animals has been dropped from $20 to $10.

Other new fees include, among others, $90 for the removal of a large, dead animal and $50 to license a dangerous dog.

Securing the Dennis the Menace Pavilion has gone from $10 to $15.

At Hogan Park, 18 holes of golf will be raised from $13.92 to $15.78. Nine holes will go from $7.89 to $8.35.

At Health and Senior Services, a pregnancy test will jump from $5 to $10. Other fees are being established for new services, including pap smears ($10), hepatitis testing ($50) and cosmetology screening ($10).

Day care inspections are going from $10 to $40 and inspections for the waste water treatment facility will be jumping from $25 to $100.

During the council meeting, the city's budget team was honored for its efforts on developing and presenting the city's budget. The budget team received an honorary plaque from the Government Finance Officers Association.

The national award is given to those budget officers and staff who distinguish themselves by the quality of their work and for conforming to GFOA guidelines for budget presentations, explained Glen Hackler, assistant city manager.

On behalf of the entire council, Mayor Bobby Burns congratulated budget team members for their work, citing them as a benefit to the community.

Also at the meeting, council members voted to:

- approve the purchase of lighting systems for soccer and ball fields at C.J. Kelly Park and for little league fields at Reyes/Mashburn/Nelms Park;
- empower City Manager Mike McGregor to execute all documents necessary to settle claims against the city of Midland as long as these amounts do not exceed $50,000;
- authorize the raising of the city's deductible to $50,000 for insurance through the Texas Municipal League Intergovernmental Risk Pool;
- approve changing Louisiana and Michigan avenues to two-way streets between Garfield Street and Andrews Highway; and
- establish a new school zone on Fairgrounds Road at Pecan Street.

City staff said that almost all pet owners have been following city regulations and keep their pets leashed at the games, although some have been using leashes up to 25 feet long that do not conform to city code.

One sports organizer spoke of incidents where untrained dogs jumped up and put their feet on people, sometimes causing scratches.

City staff suggested that people who drive in from out of town for sporting events leave their pets in their vehicles or motel rooms.

The dog fight that sparked additional calls to the city resulted when two small boys were unable to hold their dogs apart. No one was injured and the dog fight was "an isolated incident," Swallow said.

Mayor Bobby Burns, the only council member to vote against the ban, expressed concerns about adding to the regulatory load on Midland citizens.

"I sometimes think we overregulate," Burns said.

"We have people who get into fights out there, too. Are we going to ban people?" Burns asked rhetorically, eliciting laughter from those in attendance.

Both council members Lee Wood and Jose Cuevas expressed similar concerns over passing reactionary laws. "If people can't take their dogs to the park — where can you take them?" Cuevas said.

In the end, however, Wood and Cuevas decided to join Pat Schneider, Juluis Brooks and Berry Simpson in voting for the ban.

"The council took a good look at this and I support the council's decision," Burns said following the meeting.

Ms. Schneider suggested that dog owners could still "watch the game" as long as they stayed 200 to 300 feet away from the sports facility.

WIN: Miss Texas hopes she can visit Midland schools

(From 1A)

Graham apparently had been holding his breath awaiting the announcement of the winner.

"I was ready to start CPR," said Reagan's father, Paul Hughes, who thought Graham had suffered a heart attack. "All of a sudden he rolled over and smiled."

Mrs. Hughes said Graham and his partner Jack Newson were so certain of their protege's chances that "they would have moved heaven and earth for her."

Being a beauty queen does not come naturally to Reagan, says her mother, who describes her daughter as "the original tomboy."

"She really has to work at it, she never wore high heels or learned how to do her hair."

Her hair stylist, Richard Leach, confirms that fact. "She is not real good with her own hair," he said with a laugh. "She is not your typical pageant girl."

Her father notes that of all her winnings at the Miss Texas Pageant, Reagan seemed happiest about the six passes she won to Six Flags over Texas.

Leach describes Miss Hughes as very genuine. "She inspires everyone she is around," he said, "I think she exemplifies what is Miss America."

Miss Hughes describes her platform as "empowering youth through mentoring."

She said the platform is an integral part of the Miss America pageant. They want the pageant to be relevant to the '90s and to life in general.

"Mentoring is very important to me," she said, "I had wonderful parents, family, friends and teachers who encouraged me, supported me and loved me — unfortunately, a lot of kids do not have that."

Her belief in mentoring led her to volunteer as a big sister with Big Brothers—Big Sisters of Waco.

"I got involved," she said, noting she is now the big sister of 7-year-old Jazzmin.

"Reagan is the kind of person you hope would win it (Miss Texas)," said Michelle Cameron, Program Director for Big Brothers—Big Sisters in Waco. "She's not at all fake or pretentious.

"She's an excellent role model, and not just because she's Miss Texas."

Ms. Cameron added. "She is extremely responsible and dedicated." Miss Hughes also has worked as an intern with the organization.

"She and Jazzmin are a perfect match," Cameron said, "They are both very outgoing and when they are together they just glow."

She added there was also an uncanny resemblance between the young, blonde-haired young child and her older mentor.

Jazzmin was in the audience to see her adopted big sister crowned.

"She is hoping Reagan will come to her school," Ms. Cameron said.

Miss Texas visits about 200,000 school children a year though the "Texas Cares for Children" program, Miss Hughes said.

Miss Hughes is unsure whether she will visit Midland Schools. "For some reason the MISD has not had Miss Texas in their schools. Hopefully, I might have a little pull with them," quipped the 1992 Lee High School graduate.

Miss Hughes competes in the Miss America Pageant in Atlantic City, N.J., in early September. "It is hard to know how she will do, everybody has really high hopes," she said.

Hughes said he believes her prospects are excellent for a Miss America title, and that is without what he calls the "father factor" in his opinions.

"I am thankful for her maintaining a humble attitude," he said. "she does not have any pride or haughtiness." He attributes this attitude "to God, plain and simple."

Mrs. Hughes also see God's handiwork in her daughter's life. "I honestly believe you cannot discount the power of prayer in her victory," she said.

Miss Hughes has amassed nearly $40,000 in scholarship monies through pageant competitions.

"She certainly has paid her share of her college education," her mother said.

The speech communications major is working toward a career as a contemporary Christian recording artist.

She also is thrilled by the new black Chevy Blazer she took delivery of Tuesday. "I am very excited about that — it is my dream car."

Although she was born in Odessa, Miss Hughes has lived in Midland since she was about four years old.

"I truly am a product of the wonderful West Texas people," Miss Hughes said, "They are the reason I am the way that I am."

"This is the only time I will ever have this opportunity and I want to make the most of it," Miss Hughes said. "In other words, I'm milking it for all it's worth."

Mrs. Hughes is busily planning an official homecoming for Reagan.

"The Miss Texas Organization always has a homecoming for the contestant," she said. "We want to have it here."

The celebration is scheduled for August 17, Mrs. Hughes said.

She is also organizing a Midland contingent to accompany Reagan to Atlantic City in September.

MARS: Money would be better spent on debt, Midlander says

after the blood-red god of war.

With its radioactive surface and an atmosphere 0.7 percent as dense as Earth's, life would have little chance of surviving, they say.

"Speaking from the point of view as a biologist, it's very possible life evolved on Mars," said Doug Spence, a biology professor at UTPB and a lifelong stargazer, "but it's very unlikely to have survived."

But who knows, said Steve Schmidt, planetarium director at the Museum of the Southwest. "There is life in the hottest and coldest places on earth, so why not Mars?" he said.

Schmidt, who spent his Fourth of July glued to CNN coverage of the Pathfinder mission, said that its $160 million price tag is well worth the pictures of Mars and what the mission will teach us about our own planet.

Other astronomers are equally enthralled.

"I'm watching NASA TV on my computer as we speak," said Michael Pierce, president of the West Texas Astronomers club. "It's wonderful. That we have this kind of technology, it's amazing ... the beauty of it, there's so much available to study — you never tire of it."

Said Al Garcia, 62, of Al's Grocery, who's interested in the landing: "Years ago, we didn't worry about this, 'cause we didn't know nothing. We didn't have television, we barely had radio.

"(But) I don't think we'll learn about (Mars) either. Nobody knows nothing: God is the only one — He's so strong."

"In the beginning there was darkness, and we were formed out of the void," said Beverly Pardue, 44, who laughed at the mission. "And the only life I believe is here on Earth.

"But if there were (other) places, Jesus would have went there with his ministry, too."

Others, however, were just as doubtful about exploring the celestial spheres — unless there's some West Texas connection.

"Probably be a little more fun if they had a little beer up there," said Eddie Mee, 67, adding the estimated $1 trillion to land man on Mars would be better spent toward whittling down the $6 trillion national debt.

"Is there oil up there on Mars?" asked Glenn Little of Little & Co. stockbrokers. "That's the only way Midlanders will be interested — otherwise they won't look up."

One elderly man who declined to give his name scoffed at the truthfulness of the mission.

"I don't think it's doing anything," he said. "I don't even think (there are) pictures of Mars."

Kay, a blind woman who declined to give her last name, said she didn't believe in life on Mars and hoped there would never be a manned attempt to find out.

"I hate to think of humans going up there and messing everything up," she said. "I think some things should be left natural."

Some simply didn't give a Martian's antenna whether an Earth vehicle landed on Mars.

"All I know is I couldn't live there, man," said Gina Franks, 22, a waitress at Sam's Bar-B-Que. "You really would have to change your lifestyle."

"I mean they've spent all that money to study Mars," said Monique Jones, 26, a single mother doling ribs at Sam's. "I mean, life is too hard here on Earth.

"People like me, we've not got time to be worried about Mars, we've got to worry about what we're going to eat tomorrow."

Those interested in Mars and the Pathfinder mission — or in viewing one of 12 known martian meteorites — are invited to attend the "Mars Show" at 8 p.m. Fridays from July through December at the Blakemore Planetarium at the Museum of the Southwest. A telescope viewing will follow each second Friday of the month.

Those with Internet access who wish to see pictures of the mission can visit http://mars.compuserve.com or http://antwrp.gsfc.nasa.gov/apod/astropix.html.

ROCK: Scientists reluctant to make assumptions

(From 1A)

Such a rock could have been brought to the surface by volcanic activity or a meteorite impact.

It is too early to tell for certain that Barnacle Bill is andesite. But because some types of the rock only form in the presence of water, the new results may eventually lead to the demonstration that early Mars had water in its interior, said Allan Treiman, a planetary scientist at the Lunar and Planetary Institute in Houston.

"It completely changes most people's views of Mars. Mars becomes a place that had water from the beginning and the water was very active in the planet," Treiman said in a telephone interview just as scientists were finishing a news conference at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

After the Sojourner rover spent 10 hours with a small instrument pressed up against Barnacle Bill, scientists said it appears to contain the mineral quartz.

Barnacle Bill is more Earthlike than scientists had expected, suggesting that Mars' rocks were heated and reheated many times in the planet's early history. But Pathfinder scientists were reluctant to make assumptions about water or life on Mars.

The chemical analysis of Barnacle Bill also strengthens scientists' belief that 12 meteorites found on Earth and thought to come from Mars, including the famous Antarctic meteorite where some scientists think they see signs of life, are indeed martian.

Because scientists haven't yet had a chance to closely examine the rock's texture, McSween said it was too early to be sure whether it is andesite or a mix of other types of rocks, like granite and basalt, the most commonly found lava on Earth.

In any case, Mars seems to have undergone a process of successive melting and cooling, which is needed to form these types of rocks.

ABUSES: Senate opens fund-raising hearings

when he worked at the Commerce Department — but said he would not testify about his fund-raising activities without immunity. He raised $3.4 million for Democrats, but the party has returned nearly half of it because of suspicions about its origins.

Thompson and the committee's senior Democrat, John Glenn of Ohio, said they are uncertain whether Huang ought to be granted immunity. Thompson questioned whether Huang can be granted immunity for some crimes but not for others such as espionage. Nonetheless, Thompson directed lawyers for the committee to negotiate with Huang's lawyer.

"In one sense this is the star witness we have been looking for," said Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn. But "to protect Mr. Huang from criminal prosecution for violating election laws is a very serious step."

An individual familiar with the matter, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Thompson's statement was based on information gathered by U.S. intelligence agencies during a 14-month-old counterintelligence investigation of China.

Midland beauty worthy of title

It used to be said that the third time was a charm. Not for Reagan Hughes, a 22-year-old Midland beauty.

For Reagan, five was the magic number as she was named Miss Texas on Saturday in Fort Worth. It was her fifth time to seek the title. Last year she was first runner-up.

Although born in Odessa, Miss Hughes has lived in Midland since childhood where her father and mother, Paul and Debi Hughes reside. Paul Hughes is a Midland insurance agent.

Her victory underscores the importance of perseverance. After four attempts at the Miss Texas title, Miss Hughes had decided against competing for it again. She had already been named Miss West Texas, Miss Permian Basin Fair, Miss Lee High School and even served as Lee High School's homecoming queen.

However, a trip to last year's Miss America Pageant in Atlantic City, N.J. changed her mind and she decided on one more try at the title.

After Saturday's win, the blond beauty will be the first woman from Midland to compete in the Miss America contest. There's no question that she has a great shot at the Miss America crown.

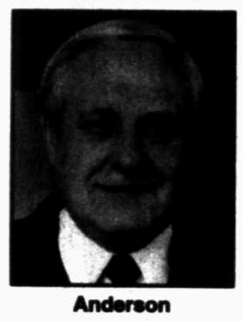

She's talented, beautiful and has a dynamic message — the power of mentoring. She emphasized her participation as a mentor for organizations such as Big Sisters. That's a message we all need to hear and heed.

We wish her well in her quest for the Miss America Crown. It's obvious that she would be a fine representative for Midland, all of Texas and even America.

Nauruans squander precious funds

NAURU — Ruby Dediyo doesn't laugh when she tells the story of this island's big venture into the theater business: "Leonardo," a musical about an imaginary affair between Mona Lisa and Leonardo da Vinci, which, following a brief run in London, where it was greeted by some rather unkind reviews, proved to be a $3 million flop.

Anderson

Phosphate-rich guano once made the people of this small Pacific island republic the richest, per capita, in the world. But now the phosphate supply is nearly gone. And the island's leaders haven't helped matters by squandering tens of millions of dollars on ill-fated business ventures.

"Leonardo" is one of the most tragically humorous examples of the profligate way the island's elected leaders have operated. A couple years back, the chairman of the Republic of Nauru's Finance Corp., Kelly Emiu, became enthralled with the musical score to "Leonardo" when he first heard it played on tape in London by Duke Minks. Minks was a financial adviser to the Nauru government, and he had once been manager of a 1960s one-hit pop group, Unit 4 + 2.

After hearing the score, Emiu came back to Nauru, hummed some bars for friends, played the tape to the Cabinet, and convinced government officials to back the show with Nauru's funds. With visions of $600 million profits made by "The Phantom of the Opera" and "Cats" dancing in their heads, two dozen officials and their spouses flew to London for the opening of "Leonardo." They even rented dinner jackets for the black-tie occasion.

The Nauru officials were more enthusiastic than the critics proved to be, however. The show's premise, a supposed love affair between Leonardo da Vinci and his famous married subject, Mona Lisa, was fatally flawed. For da Vinci was a homosexual, and was twice hauled to court on charges of having committed homosexual acts with a 17-year-old artist's model.

The illogical tampering with history, a score that had high points but was mostly mediocre, and the show's guano-backing proved irresistible to London's critics — who gave it the bird. "Bird droppings are bird droppings wherever they land," harumphed the Daily Mail's reviewer. "Marginally more entertaining than a pile of guano," penned another critic.

Headline writers must have salivated before tossing up: "An Offal Show," "Gulls drop Leonardo in the preposterous," "Critics scent failure in guano gamble" and "Night of the guano." The show closed after less than a month. A revival of "South Pacific" would have been a safer bet for the Pacific island.

Sources here, as well as in Australia, Fiji and the United States, have told our associate Dale Van Atta of some other Nauru investments that have gone bad:

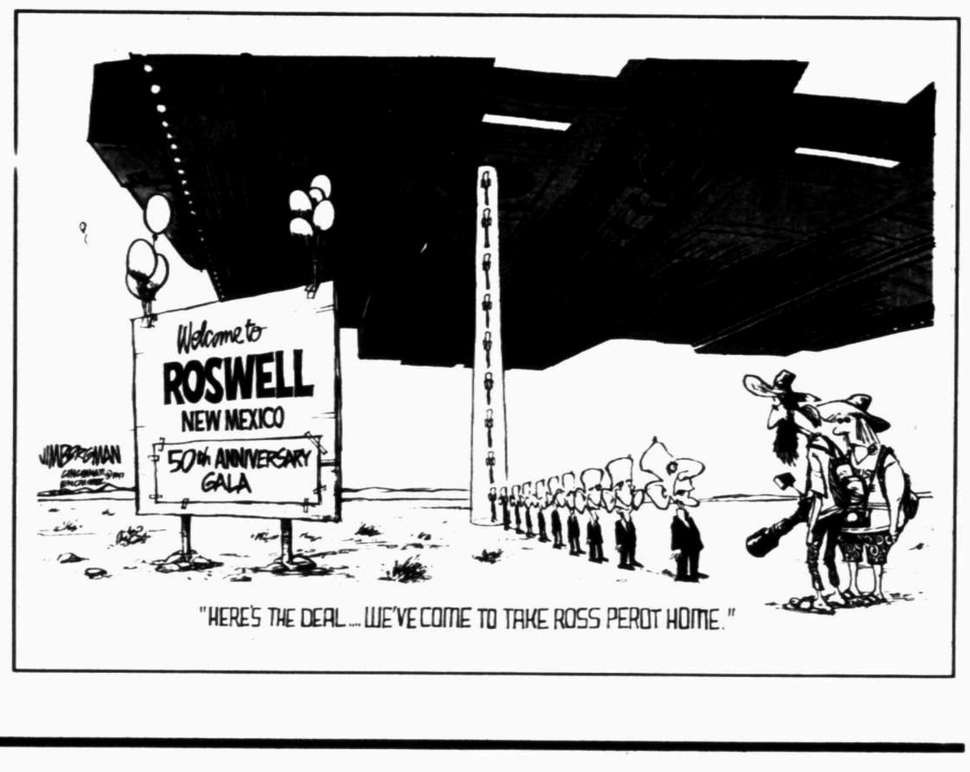

■ The six-story CAE Link Building in Houston — near NASA's Johnson Space Center — suffered from spalling, a condition where the concrete fell off in pieces from the building exterior. It required $3.5 million for a new black-glass exterior.

■ The 15-year-old Eastern Gateway hotel project in the Marshall Islands is still not finished. It has been such an eyesore that the president of the Marshall Islands has begged Nauru to finish it. They have not, and will not. Why? When the Filipino workers were angry about not being paid for their work, they poured concrete into the hotel's plumbing.

■ Even with a business they should know, fertilizers, Nauruans have not done well. In a joint venture with India, they backed construction of the largest phosphate fertilizer plant in Asia. But Paradip Phosphates Ltd. in southeast India lost so much money that it would have gone bankrupt without huge subsidies from the Indian government. Nauru eventually sold its 49 percent interest to an Indian firm at a multi-million dollar loss.

The editor of a respected regional publication (who asked not to be named) summarized the plight of Nauru: "Here was Nauru with a history of such affluence," he told us in an interview. "But having dug out all their island for the phosphate so stupidly, they stupidly spent their money as well. They need to take the blame themselves. They are in lot of trouble because they have not saved for a rainy day."

Risky behavior study offers suicide worry

Adolescents' risky behavior may be linked to something far worse than bad decision-making: suicide attempts.

In 1950, among 15- to 24-year-olds, suicide attempts were rare, 4.5 per 100,000. In 1990, suicide attempts among that age group had climbed to 13.2 per 100,000. A study this year of acting out, using data from a Youth Risk Behavior Study of 3,000 students, found that teens who engage in risky behavior are more likely to have tried suicide.

Risky behavior included not wearing a seat belt, smoking cigarettes or using smokeless tobacco, abusing drugs or alcohol, fighting, carrying a gun or having unprotected sex after substance use. Kids who take those risks are likely to have tried suicide, the authors say. Using risky behavior as a guide, the study authors correctly identified whether or not 92 percent of the teens had attempted suicide.

Parents might want to consider, then, not just getting angry about bad decisions. They might also want to be concerned, very concerned, and act on that concern.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, July 9, the 190th day of 1997. There are 175 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On July 9, 1896, William Jennings Bryan caused a sensation at the Democratic National Convention in Chicago with his "cross of gold" speech denouncing supporters of the gold standard. Bryan went on to win the party's nomination.

On this date:

In 1540, England's King Henry VIII had his 6-month-old marriage to his fourth wife, Anne of Cleves, annulled.

In 1776, the Declaration of Independence was read aloud to Gen. George Washington's troops in New York.

In 1816, Argentina declared independence from Spain.

In 1850, the 12th president of the United States, Zachary Taylor, died after serving only 16 months.

In 1947, the engagement of Britain's Princess Elizabeth to Lt. Philip Mountbatten was announced.

In 1951, President Truman asked Congress to formally end the state of war between the United States and Germany.

In 1982, a Pan Am Boeing 727 crashed in Kenner, La., killing all 146 people aboard and eight people on the ground.

In 1986, the Attorney General's Commission on Pornography released the final draft of its 2,000-page report, which linked hardcore porn to sex crimes.

In 1991, the International Olympic Committee readmitted South Africa.

Ten years ago: In his third day of testimony on Capitol Hill, Lt. Col. Oliver North said he had shredded evidence as part of a planned cover-up of his role in the Iran-Contra affair.

Five years ago: Democrat Bill Clinton tapped Tennessee Sen. Al Gore to be his running mate. The space shuttle Columbia landed at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida, ending a two-week mission. CBS news commentator Eric Sevareid died in Washington at age 79.

One year ago: Former Colorado Gov. Richard Lamm began a drive for the presidential nomination of Ross Perot's fledgling Reform Party. Attorney Melvin Belli died in San Francisco at age 88. The National League won the All-Star game, defeating the American League 6-0 in Philadelphia.

Fund-raising hearings will test whether system works

WASHINGTON — "No fund-raising calls or mail," warned White House Counsel Abner Mikva in 1995, "may emanate from the White House or any other federal building."

Safire

That's the law. But money-hungry Bill Clinton soon replaced Mikva, a former federal judge, with Jack "Tell 'em Nuthin' " Quinn, less concerned with legal niceties.

"The POTUS (President of the United States) and VP," e-mailed aide Karen Hancox in that law-breaking year, "offered ON THEIR OWN to make f r (fund-raising) calls for the DNC."

A few months ago, after Al Gore dismayed his own supporters by claiming "no controlling authority" stopped him from soliciting money from his federal desk, the president pretended he could not recall doing anything similar.

Now, on the eve of the Senate's Thompson committee hearings, the truth is seeping out: Clinton personally leaned on 15 to 20 fat cats, often from his Oval Office phone, for at least $500,000 — including one call urged by Vernon Jordan to shake $100,000 out of a Maryland businessman.

Both Clinton and Jordan are lawyers. They know the law against soliciting on federal property. They were reminded of that law by the unwelcome Mikva. Perhaps they were confident that Janet Reno, acting as a one-woman Supreme Court, would choose not to enforce that law.

But they surely knew how repugnant the American people would find the spectacle of their president, in the Oval Office, personally wheedling money out of wealthy citizens, with all the intimidation that such a "request" carries. That's why the Clinton memory turned so fuzzy for months.

Why are White House memories of the law-breaking suddenly coming clear? Because the Thompson committee has listed Ms. Hancox on its list of witnesses this week. White House Spin Control leaked the story on the eve of a holiday weekend, amid Mars landings and Paula Jones denunciations, hoping to detract from the newsworthiness of the televised hearings.

Another unfamiliar name on the witness list for the following week is Paul Buskirk, a trade official who deals with a classified computer network. That suggests to me that senators will be looking into John Huang's access to secret government cables. Huang was Lippo's man at Commerce, later reassigned by Clinton himself to raise money from those he serviced.

Only Asia-connection buffs know of Huang's 37 sessions with his personal CIA briefer, accompanied by calls from his Commerce phone to his former Indonesian bosses and an unexplained visit to the Chinese embassy. Fewer still know of Huang's use of the Washington office of Stevens Inc., the investment bank so close to the Clintons in the past, for calls and faxes to Canada and overseas.

But now a wider audience assembles. Will the hearings reveal Huang to be an agent of influence, with the Clinton White House penetrated by a Chinese-Indonesian economic espionage operation? No; but perhaps its findings will force the appointment of an independent counsel still being resisted by Clinton Justice. The Senate's primary job is not to show "everybody did it," but to expose to public view the unprecedented pattern of corrupt fund-raising that sullied the highest office in the land.

I hope Huang is required to take the Fifth in person, along with all the others delaying or obstructing this investigation. I hope senators discover why our State Department is not trying to bring Yah Lin "Charlie" Trie — so available to Tom Brokaw and to other interviewers in Shanghai — home for questioning under oath.

Wang Jun, the Chinese arms dealer helping Iran obtain missiles to menace our ships in the Persian Gulf, recently told an American friend that he gave $50,000 to Charlie and thereby met Clinton in the White House. No wonder State and Justice don't want Trie questioned under oath.

One witness that Democrats will try desperately to protect is Bruce Lindsey, the newly unprivileged White House lawyer who bridges the fund-raising and Whitewater scandals.

He was present at Clinton's infamous Sept. 13, 1995, "reassignment" of Huang. And when asked by the Senate last year if he was aware of Clinton administration efforts to steer work to Webster Hubbell, Lindsey swore "No." Let's see him slip out of those. (Hubbell, steered $100,000 from Lippo alone, now faces a threat of re-indictment for "hush money.")

The Fourth of July is behind us; let the quiet fireworks begin.

Venice a city of charm — and they take American Express

VENICE, Italy — You can't go home again — you can't even go to Venice, a city of fond memories for me. I come here almost every year to swim in its sparkling waters and snorkel in the souvenir shops.

Buchwald

I met Katharine Hepburn in Venice when she was making the film "Summertime." She was preparing for a scene on the canal, and I was smoking a cigar as I chatted with her. She said, "That is the filthiest cigar I have ever seen. How dare you smoke while talking to me."

I immediately extinguished it as she continued to upbraid me for my behavior.

The assistant director came up to her and said, "Miss Hepburn, we're ready to shoot."

The set was hushed, and then we heard: "Roll 'em." Suddenly Miss Hepburn dived into the water, which was filled with every imaginable flotsam. When she climbed out someone threw a towel around her. I said, "How come you get so upset with me for smoking a cigar when you just dove into that gummy water?" She replied in that wonderful Hepburn voice, "Oh, shut up!"

One of my fondest memories of Venice concerns the Bestegui Gala, the costume ball of the century. I went as Louis XIV in a costume I had rented in Paris; it had a few tears and included a somewhat frazzled powdered wig. I wasn't invited to the party, so I crashed it. I arrived three hours early carrying a basket of flowers, and nobody stopped me at the door to the palace, although I did hear the security men whispering about checking my credentials. I bolted upstairs to the second floor where there appeared to be hundreds of bedroom doors. I opened one and slid under the bed. To my surprise I found two photographers already there. They told me to beat it, but I refused to go.

It turned out that the room was occupied by a beautiful guest of Bestegui. She was preparing for the ball, and since she had the loveliest ankles (which was all we could see), we decided to stay put. Finally, after the guest left the room we crawled out from under the bed and went to join the ball.

Even if you can't go home again, the nostalgia lingers. Bestegui, who treated all his guests like royalty, is now in heaven, his palace closed and empty. Katharine Hepburn is not here this year for her dip.

Despite this, it's still good to come back. The lire is now 165,000 to the dollar, and who can figure out what you can get for that in Italy these days?

The highlight of my visit was the moment I was presented with a Lifetime Achievement Award from American Express when my card rang up for dinner at the Cipriani Hotel.

Hebron raid spotlights Israel's undercover units in West Bank

JERUSALEM (AP) — The soldiers in Israel's most secret battalion learn Arabic, know how to apply stage makeup, and drill in a movie set-style West Bank village made of plywood.

Their mission: stalking and snatching Palestinians wanted for violence against Israel.

Undercover soldiers whose lives depend on secrecy came under intense public scrutiny last week when agents mingled with Palestinian stone-throwers in Hebron, even hurled a few rocks, then jumped four of the startled rioters and dragged them away at gunpoint.

The arrests, during which undercover soldiers kicked captured Palestinians lying on the ground, triggered new debate in Israel about the units, created in 1988 during the Palestinian revolt against Israeli occupation.

Human rights groups say undercover units are illegal and operate without the restraints placed on uniformed soldiers. One Israeli group, Betselem, said 161 Palestinians, including 19 under age 16, have died in undercover ambushes.

The West Bank army commander, Maj. Gen. Gabi Ofir, defended the units as crucial to Israel's security, saying they were the "spearhead in the war against terror."

But the soldiers themselves do not appear immune from doubt.

A former member of the army undercover unit Duvdevan — the Hebrew word for "cherry" — said he served in an atmosphere in which the lives of targeted Palestinians counted for little, and the most ruthless soldiers were most admired.

"We were all too eager. We didn't take too many chances to keep them alive," said Mark, 27, who spoke on condition his real name not be used.

He said his team, consisting of eight soldiers, once spent a week with an army psychologist to discuss excessive use of force. "They thought we were cracking up," Mark said.

However, Roni Daniel, a military correspondent for Israel TV's Channel Two who recently spent several days with a Duvdevan unit, said he encountered only serious, level-headed people who had survived an exacting selection process that weeds out 99 of 100 applicants.

"They don't hate the Arabs. They try hard to understand them. But they are dealing with terrorists, and are determined to catch them," Daniel said.

Last week, Daniel showed rare footage from a Duvdevan training exercise in a fake Palestinian village made of plywood facades, with a donkey in a pen and a mosque muezzin wailing over a loudspeaker.

Behind the facade, soldiers changed from their olive uniforms into jeans, shirts and sneakers, and had fake beard stubble applied by a makeup artist.

In the role playing, Palestinians stoned an Israeli army jeep and burned a tire in the village street. Suddenly, two make-believe protesters jumped the ringleader, locked him in a choke hold, hauled him into a white Mercedes and sped away, waving guns from the car window to keep the crowd at bay.

The Duvdevan soldiers are trained for quick surprise raids, not long-term undercover assignments, the reasoning apparently being that Palestinians would quickly spot a non-native speaker.

In basic training, undercover soldiers learn useful phrases in Arabic that will help them conceal their true identity during the few minutes they need to get close to their targets. They also learn how to apply makeup, wigs and beards.

Mark, who is stocky with a light complexion, said he usually was disguised as a Palestinian woman. He would shave, apply foundation and eyeliner and partially veil his face.

Banks find more of victims' money

ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) — Swiss banks have dug deeper and found $7.1 million that belonged to nine Jewish victims of the Holocaust, the man leading the search said Tuesday.

A "significant percentage" of the money was in the account of one person, said Hanspeter Haeni, an ombudsman appointed by the Swiss Bankers Association to help heirs look for assets.

The new discoveries considerably increase the total amount of money in unclaimed accounts that has been matched with heirs of Nazi victims since the search began in early 1996.

Haeni announced in November that in the first nine months of searching he had found only $8,000 that could be connected to Jews and others killed in the Holocaust.

Some Jewish organizations say Swiss banks owe the heirs of Holocaust victims up to $7 billion in unclaimed assets and interest, but the banks maintain the real amount is only a tiny fraction of that.

Haeni has been looking through nearly $30 million of assets that the banks regard as possibly belonging to Holocaust victims. The total represents only accounts whose owners have failed to contact the banks since 1985.

He gave no names or other details Tuesday of the nine victims or their heirs. Some already have received their money.

The assets were among $12.1 million found in 28 unclaimed accounts, Haeni said. The other accounts were unrelated to the Holocaust.

Haeni said one safe deposit box he opened was empty, and the contents of another vault were of great emotional value for the heirs but "worthless in a monetary sense."

His office has so far looked for accounts belonging to 3,330 people and succeeded in finding only the 28, he said.

The largest number of claimants came from the United States — 741 — and Israel — 454.

Haeni said his search would continue and expressed hope that it would get a boost from the worldwide publication later this month of the names on unclaimed accounts.

He took on a frequent critic of the Swiss banks, Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y. Haeni said D'Amato had relayed 65 queries from heirs of Holocaust victims last month and demanded they be processed immediately.

Some of the queries appeared to be months old, including one dated July 24, 1996, Haeni said.

"In view of the fact that the queries apparently lay around at Mr. D'Amato's office for a long time, there's no point in commenting," Haeni said.

Haeni also defended the banks from criticism that they have been charging high search fees. The amount has been reduced to about $70 from more than $200 and is waived for needy claimants, he said.

Fees from descendants of Holocaust victims, now totaling $107,000, are being turned over to a fund to aid victims of Nazi Germany.

On Monday, Swiss institutions announced they will donate $12.1 million in coming weeks to needy Holocaust victims in Eastern Europe.

Cosmonauts may open Pandora's box when they open ruptured module

Associated Press

No one knows what dangers await Mir's cosmonauts when they open the hatch to the space station's depressurized lab.

Floating glass shards from broken bottles? Globules of blood and urine from popped vials? Toxic spills from ruined experiments and burst pipes?

The spacemen could be opening an orbital Pandora's box.

As a result, NASA is scrambling to put together a what-if, worst-case list in preparation for the repair job later this month, when the two Russians will put on their spacesuits, unseal the ruptured, airless lab and try to restore close to full electrical power to the crippled space station.

"I suspect the first thing the crew will do when they open that hatch," said NASA shuttle-Mir program manager Frank Culbertson, "is shine a light in and see if there are any green monsters in there and shut it if there are."

Among other things, the cosmonauts could rip their pressurized spacesuits on something jagged — which could be deadly — or track toxic materials back into the station.

Science experiments inside the lab have been exposed to the frigid vacuum of space ever since an out-of-control cargo ship slammed into Mir on June 25 and punched a hole in the aluminum hull. The crewmen had to scramble to shut the laboratory hatch before the entire space station lost cabin pressure.

"It could well be that it looks like a tomb, a dark and/or orderly tomb," said James Oberg, an expert in Russian space affairs. "'Or it could look like an after-dinner scene from 'Jurassic Park.'"

A mysterious leak has heightened concern. Last week, American astronaut Michael Foale and his crewmates heard a series of thumps and saw white flakes drifting away into space from somewhere near the lab's dented radiator.

The snowflakes could have been ammonia or silicone seeping from the radiator, or something leaking from the interior of the lab, which is called Spektr, Culbertson said Monday.

It worries not only the space station's overseers but NASA, which wants to make sure there is no danger to space shuttle Atlantis when it arrives in September to pick up Foale.

Unfortunately, the crewmen cannot peek into Spektr — the hatch is windowless. And they cannot drill a hole and drop in a scope — precious air would leak out.

All they can do is rely on engineers' analyses and hope for the best when they uncork the 43-foot-long lab.

The repair visit is scheduled for no earlier than July 17. A dress rehearsal is planned early next week using another portion of Mir and repair equipment that arrived Monday on a cargo ship.

The plan is for cosmonauts Vasily Tsibliyev and Alexander Lazutkin to seal themselves in a small vestibule, don their spacesuits and then remove the hatch to Spektr. One of them will then crawl 6 feet or so into the darkness to hook up cables to critically needed solar batteries that had to be disconnected immediately after the collision.

Then the cosmonauts will install a new hatch designed to allow power to flow from Spektr into the rest of the station. The last step is to repressurize the vestibule.

Foale will wait in the attached Soyuz escape capsule, ready to flee with his crewmates if something goes wrong. The capsule can bring the men back to Earth.

Culbertson said he is most concerned about the possibility of broken glass and hazardous materials such as formaldehyde, used to preserve science specimens. Among the biomedical samples stored in Spektr: blood, urine and spit.

"Everything we have is doubly or triply contained depending on what its hazard level is," Culbertson said. "But we're still trying to figure out whether that containment will really work during a vacuum."

The next Russian crew, due in August, will tackle the even tougher job of finding and plugging the gash in the hull.

Base closing plan draws opposition from key lawmakers

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's push for more military base closings hit a roadblock Tuesday in the form of the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, said there will be no further closures until Clinton backs off his plan to protect bases in California and Texas.

Stevens was referring to Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio and McClellan Air Force Base in Sacramento, Calif., two Air Force maintenance centers that generated thousands of jobs repairing and maintaining warplanes. The bases were ordered closed by a base closure commission in 1995 but Clinton, concerned about protecting jobs in two politically important states, pursued a plan to allow private contractors working at the closing bases to continue the aircraft maintenance work.

That decision enraged lawmakers, particularly those from states that stood to gain jobs as workers were shifted from the California and Texas bases to facilities that remain open.

Stevens' remarks lengthen the odds against Clinton's winning approval of one of his top defense priorities this year: ordering two more base closure rounds in 1999 and 2001. The president and Defense Secretary William Cohen argue that without more closures, the Pentagon will be starved of the savings it needs to finance long-delayed weapons modernization.

The Senate continued debate Tuesday on a $268 billion defense authorization bill for the fiscal year beginning next Oct. 1. The proposal to close more bases was expected to come up later this week. The Senate Armed Services Committee deadlocked 9-9 on the question of approving more base closing rounds, with the tie resulting in the proposal being left out of the bill that went to the Senate floor.

Stevens' Appropriations defense subcommittee, meanwhile, voted out a $246.9 billion defense appropriations measure. The total is somewhat less than the authorization bill because authorizations include some money to be spent in future years on such things as long-term weapons contracts.

The appropriations measure sticks closely to the policy recommendations contained in the bill now on the Senate floor. It adds $3.2 billion to Clinton's defense budget request and exceeds this year's defense spending level by $3 billion.

Among key provisions of the bill:

■ $1.9 billion to pay for overseas contingency operations in Bosnia and the Persian Gulf region.

■ 2.8 percent military pay raise.

■ $300 million increase each to the Navy and Air Force to shore up depleted aircraft maintenance accounts.

■ Support for Clinton's request for $322 million in aid to states of the former Soviet Union for reducing nuclear weapons stockpiles.

■ Increase of $720 million to buy an additional Aegis destroyer, a high priority for Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss. Ingalls Shipbuilding of Pascagoula, Miss., Lott's hometown, would build the ship.

■ Support for the FA-18 E and F, F-22 and Joint Strike Fighter programs, but a $213 million cut from the president's request for the F-22.

Smith landlord for own campaign

Congressman asks FEC to rule whether use of campaign money for rent OK

By Michelle Mittelstadt
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When Texas Congressman Lamar Smith's campaign pays its rent each month, landlord Lamar Smith pockets the money.

The San Antonio Republican collects $925.56 monthly from Texans for Lamar Smith for office space in the two-story Alamo Heights condominium where he lives when he's in town.

This has been Smith's practice since joining Congress in 1987. Now, he's asking the Federal Election Commission to rule whether his use of campaign contributions is appropriate in light of 1995 changes to federal election law.

The campaign "has not and is not paying any part of the living expenses of Mr. Smith," his campaign director, Grace Anderson, wrote in requesting approval for the unusual arrangement.

But an Associated Press examination found that the campaign is paying for more than rent and utilities.

Contributors picked up the tab for plumbing repairs, pest control, air conditioning and furnace maintenance, burglar alarm service and cable television for the condo at 315 Cleveland Court, according to a review of Smith's 1995 and 1996 campaign filings. The campaign also has paid $5,465 over two years in insurance for the condo.

"An expense that's incurred by the campaign is paid by the campaign, period," Smith spokesman Allen Kay said Tuesday.

There is no mortgage on the property. Asked whether the rental fees cover Smith's total condo expenses, Kay said: "He pays the taxes, of course."

Election law gives candidates wide discretion in making campaign expenditures to assist their election. But the law bars candidates from converting campaign money to their personal use.

Determining what constitutes personal use is a somewhat murky area of the election code. Legal or not, some question the propriety of a lawmaker generating income from his campaign.

"It sounds like he's feathering his own nest," said Charles Lewis, head of the Center for Public Integrity, a government watchdog group. "The average American does not expect candidates to make money from being candidates. It's that simple."

A Smith contributor, L. Gray Beck of San Angelo, said he finds no fault with Smith's campaign accommodations — provided that rent is "a reasonable market value."

But Beck, an 86-year-old retiree, questioned Smith's

Latinos polled pleased with Mexican vote

By Rick Lopez
Staff Writer

Though they might not garner the votes needed to end the seven-decade reign of the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI), two opposing election parties have offered more to Mexico residents than presidential platform promises — a choice.

The PRI has been the main command source in Mexican politics since 1929. Until now, most candidates campaigned under the PRI flag.

However, in Mexico's most recent election, the PRI has seen considerable competition from the Party of the Democratic Revolution (PRD) and the National Action Party (PAN).

With 84 percent of the votes counted, the PRI was first in the race with 38 percent. It needed 42.2 percent of all votes to sustain its power. The PAN had 27 percent, leaving the PRD with 26 percent.

This is a long-awaited change in Mexican politics not only for those running in the elections, but for those making their decisions at the voting polls, local members of the Hispanic community said Tuesday.

"Mexico is making new progress. It now has a true democratic voting process," said David Diaz, executive director of the local Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. "They're becoming an open society. Their voice is now heard now that the PRI has opposing parties."

Having a choice of political parties is essential for having an accurate depiction of what Mexican voters are seeking, Diaz added.

"It's always good to have different opinions," he said. "I think the federal government will now be receptive to everyone's needs."

Meanwhile, the latest election made history Saturday as Mexico City elected its first mayor. In years past, the president had appointed someone to the mayoral seat.

Two-time presidential hopeful Cuauhtemoc Cardenas Solorzano, who ran under the PRD, won Mexico City's mayoral post with 47 percent of the vote.

"That was a marred election," Midland Councilman Jose Cuevas said of the 1988 election in which Cardenas lost against PRI's Raul Salinas De Gorati. "It was fraud, fraud, fraud."

Several weeks ago, Cuevas attended a seminar in Mexico on the country's politics, business and economy. Mexican Midlander Gypsy Riddel feeds bananas to K.C., a bovine on the Johnny Johnson Ranch near Goldthwaite in Central Texas. K.C. also likes watermelon, chili and fried pies.

Kitchen Cow finds 'people food' good as grass

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

It all started with a pot of beans, which K.C. scarfed up like a hungry pup.

And from thenceforth, the gourmet bovine known as K.C. — the Kitchen Cow — has pretty much sampled the dinner-table and picnic offering of her human friends. From watermelons and bananas to fried pies and shrimp gumbo, she has found most people foods just as agreeable as clover, alfalfa, and that run-of-the-mill range grass that is the fare of most cows.

"K.C., she's really quite a glutton," said Midlander Gypsy Riddel, who twice this year has visited the cow that lives on Midlander Johnny Johnson's ranch near Goldthwaite in Central Texas.

Ms. Riddel offered the red-and-white mixed-breed cow whole, ripe bananas, which K.C. forthwith made into fodder for her four stomachs.

"She has personality," Ms. Riddel said. "She has more personality than some people I know."

"She's very friendly," said Johnson. "She's a pretty cow."

Johnson, like Ms. Riddel, is widowed, an octogenarian and a Methodist. They are Sunday School classmates.

It was several years ago when Johnson's son, Sikes Johnson, tossed a pot of beans over a fence at the ranch to get rid of the beans and K.C. ambled up and finished off the course.

Menudo cook-off steeped in tradition for West Texas Hispanics

By Dana Bartholomew
Staff Writer

In West Texas, it's known as the "breakfast of champions."

And what better to clear one's head after a night on the town than to sit down to a hearty bowl of menudo — packed with pig's feet, beef tripe, hominy and the perfect blend of chili, oregano, lemon and onion garnishes.

Saltines, tortillas or French rolls, anyone?

This month, menudo lovers will celebrate this aromatic soup during the 10th Annual Mex-Tex Menudo Cookoff & Family Festival — believed to be the world's largest menudo cook-off.

The event, held July 19 and 20 at Twin Cities Speedway, is expected to draw the area's best menudo, chili and fajitas cooks and thousands of fans for an entire weekend of Tejano entertainment.

"As far as a gathering of Hispanics in the area, this is it, our biggest draw," said David Diaz, executive director of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the event's chief sponsor.

"As far as entertainment and a cultural celebration, it's great."

What began 10 years ago as a Hispanic celebration of 500 people during Midland's Celebration of the Arts has blossomed into a festival which each year draws 20,000 fans from throughout Texas, Diaz said.

To commemorate the anniversary, ticket prices will be rolled back from $12 to the original $5. The cook-off is the Hispanic chamber's biggest fund raiser.

While patrons sample the wares of 80 vendors, they can enjoy live Tejano performances by such stars as Jay Perez, Ramiro "Ram" Herrera, Shelly Lares, Bobby and Roberto Pulido and more.

But though chili and fajitas — both native to Texas — will be judged on their individual merits, menudo is the centerpiece.

Early Sunday morning, or after celebrating Mass, you have it ready, said Elvia Hernandez, one of the event's founders who now runs Fiesta Tours in El Paso.

"It's kind of like a tradition," she said. "you go partying, you go dancing, or whatever, and then we go eat menudo at 2 or 3 in the morning. It's lots of fun.

"Us Mexicans, we work hard, we party hard, and we love to eat."

Menudo, which in West Texas is generally eaten with lemon wedges and Saltines, is sometimes garnished with limes and accompanied by tortillas or rolls fresh from the panaderia.

"I never even knew you ate it with crackers till I got to Midland," Hernan-

Malm: No early probation for county drunken drivers

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Midland County court-at-law judges have not been granting early release from probation to residents convicted of drunken driving, according to the county attorney.

"As a general rule, the county court-at-law judges do not grant early releases from probation," said Russell Malm, who explained that his office handles misdemeanor cases, which comprise the majority of drunken driving arrests.

Drivers can be charged with felony DWI for a third intoxication-related offense.

"Basically, regardless of what the offense is — driving while intoxicated (DWI), assault, possession of marijuana, their general philosophy is to not grant early release," Malm said.

A spokeswoman for the Midland County Community Supervision and Corrections Department said the department usually does not recommend early release from probation.

A revision of state law in 1993 prohibits judges from terminating probation on DWI cases.

Malm said the reason local judges do not grant early release from probation is not because of the legislative prohibition.

"It also stems from their feelings on what's appropriate," he said.

He explained that "with misdemeanors, the longest one can be on probation is two years and the majority of defendants are on probation for a shorter period. If someone's on probation for one year, after three or four months theoretically they could seek early release. In such a short period, the chances that probation has achieved its purpose are pretty small.

"As a practical matter, early release just doesn't work out too well and all that probably goes into the judges' thinking as well."

If early releases have been granted in Midland County, Malm said it would have been before the current charging condo maintenance and other incidentals to the campaign. "I don't understand why he would do that out of campaign contributions," he said. "The cost of those things ought to be included in the lease."

RENT: Professional staff recommends disapproval

The FEC will weigh the matter at an upcoming hearing. The agency's professional staff, in a draft advisory opinion to be considered by the commissioners, is recommending that the FEC disapprove Smith's arrangement.

That recommendation is based on the fact that Smith has shared access to some of the first floor — including the kitchen. The office space "is an integral, inseparable part of the dwelling," the draft opinion states.

Following his election to Congress, Smith sold his San Antonio home and moved his family to the Washington area. He then purchased the condo, where he spends fewer than 10 nights annually, his campaign director said.

Smith uses the upper floor as his residence. The campaign pays $925 a month for use of 985 square feet downstairs. And, a ranch in which Smith is a partner pays $257 monthly to rent another downstairs room — bringing Smith's monthly rental income to $1,182.

Neither tenant is charged for use of the kitchen or restroom.

In a May letter to the FEC, Ms. Anderson said the campaign rental is appropriate because Smith is charging a fair-market rate and has never personally used the area he is renting out.

"The space leased was obtained for income-producing purposes," she wrote. "Since the leased space never was nor is a part of Mr. Smith's residence, the lease is consistent with FEC guidelines."

Campaign personnel work year-round coordinating the six or seven major fund-raising events Smith holds annually, Ms. Anderson said. They also coordinate his political activities and direct-mail fund raising.

Smith requires a year-round campaign presence to maintain contact with the voters, Kay said, noting that 80 percent of the lawmaker's contributions are from individuals.

Six of the 10 Texans in the House who have at least as much seniority as Smith maintain campaign offices in a non-election year, the AP found. But none leased office space from themselves — and none paid as much rent as Smith, including those with offices in Dallas and Houston.

Congressional watchdogs question the wisdom of Smith's deal.

"If he wanted to avoid any type of question of impropriety ... why quibble over a room or two and who's paying for it?" said Kent Cooper, a former FEC official who heads the nonpartisan Center for Responsive Politics.

"This may be an example of a member who is well-off economically who tries to operate in the gray area of the law without considering the confusion and the questions that might be drawn by his constituents," Cooper added.

Smith's personal financial disclosure form — which members of Congress are required to file annually — pegs the assets he is required to divulge at a minimum $717,000 and as much as $1.58 million. He isn't required to, and didn't, list the value of his Virginia home, automobiles, furnishings and other personal belongings.

He valued the San Antonio condo between $100,000 and $250,000.

COW: Bovine gourmet fond of plums, peaches, potatoes

(From 1B)

Back then, Sikes Johnson, 53, cooked lots of "chili and beans" for his two ravenous teen-age sons, Stephen, now 22, and John, now 25. Johnson said his 18-year-old daughter, Allison, "feeds the cow, too."

Other than providing pasture for K.C.'s Black Angus cohorts and a Charolais bull, the ranch's 235 acres are a hunting and fishing site for the Johnson family and friends.

"Whatever we had from the night before is what she (K.C.) got," Sikes Johnson recalled.

And by that account, the 15-year-old mother cow has fared well.

Once, Sikes Johnson said, "she ate the chili and eggs and then ate the (paper) plate. We call her the 'breakfast cow.' She never fails to show up for breakfast" when the family spends time at the ranch.

Like free-roaming cows who are wont to partake of cabbage and black-eyed peas with hearty bites in the garden, K.C. has her preferences: watermelons, apples, plums, peaches, apricots, carrots, onions, potatoes, and, of course, bananas.

"She just eats them ... out of your hand," Sikes Johnson said. "The kids won't eat bananas. We buy bananas to take to her. She'll eat anything but citrus — oranges and lemons — and grapes. She's just awesome."

Occasionally, and that's about as often as they come, K.C. will put away a hamburger or so.

"She's an institution," Sikes Johnson beamed. "She eats chili beans and shrimp gumbo."

"She's got a life out there (on the ranch)," said Johnny Johnson, who is retired from the insurance business and is an admitted novice at ranching. "I'm a gentleman farmer, if you know what I mean," he said. "I don't know beans from Shinola about cattle."

But he does know that he is fond of K.C.

"I think she's living off of Social Security," quipped Ms. Riddel.

Though novel she is, K.C. apparently is not without her peers in the cafeteria line.

"One rancher was telling me that's not that uncommon" for cows to dine on grub other than hay and grass, Sikes Johnson said. "Most ranchers will tell you (that) you don't make pets out of livestock. You don't get attached to them."

Fortunately, K.C. is not in that lot to her apparent delight and for the entertainment of her friends and caretakers.

"She's a doll; I'll tell you," Ms. Riddel said. "She's a sweetheart."

OBITUARIES

Alpha Smith

Alpha Cleora Armstrong Smith was born in Kay County, Okla., on Feb. 23, 1907, the eldest daughter of Robert Ernest and Estella Jane Armstrong. She was educated in Newkirk, Okla., and attended Oklahoma State University where she received her teaching certificate in 1926. Deer Creek School in Oklahoma was her first teaching post.

On Feb. 26, 1927, she married Robert William Smith and moved to Arkansas City, Kan., where two of their three children, Robert William Jr. and Mary LeVeta were born. In 1929 the family was transferred by Shell Oil Co. to the new refinery being built in Deer Park, near Houston. Their third child, Sarah Jane, was born in Houston. Alpha was a civic leader in the Pineview area of Houston. She was a dedicated member of Magnolia Christian Church where she taught Sunday school.

When the family moved to Pasadena, Texas, in 1955, they joined the First Christian Church. Alpha served as a deacon, Sunday school teacher, officer of the Christian Women's Fellowship and chairwoman of the Community Food Pantry.

After Robert's retirement from Shell in 1965, they traveled and performed volunteer services for First Christian Church of Pasadena until Robert's death in 1973. Her daughter, Mary LaVeta, died in 1985.

Alpha moved to Midland in 1986, residing at Trinity Towers. She was an active member of First Presbyterian Church where she participated in the Circle L Sunday school class, Rachel Circle, and Holy Rollers. She served as a representative on the Trinity Towers Apartments Resident's Council. She was an excellent and avid cook who provided many treats to other residents and staff members of Trinity Towers. Alpha's son, Robert W. Smith Jr., died earlier this year. Alpha died at her Midland residence on Monday, July, 7.

Alpha's cheerful personality, caring spirit and willingness to help others throughout her life made her a joy to all who knew her.

She is survived by her daughter, Sarah Jane and son-in-law, Russell Neisig of Midland; her daughter-in-law, Mary Elda Smith of Houston and her son-in-law, Casey DeVries of Torrance, Calif. She is also survived by her sister, Naomi Bacher and her brother-in-law, Glen Bacher of Ponca City, Okla. She had six grandchildren, Claudia DeVries Green and her husband, Wesley of Santee, Calif., Donald Smith and his wife, Carol of Pearland, Janette Smith Brooks and her husband, Robby of Houston, Linda Smith Graham and her husband, Randy of Houston, Jennifer Neisig Alvarado and her husband, Michael of London, England, and Andrea Neisig Bates and her husband, Larry of Dallas. She was the proud great-grandmother of 16 great-grandchildren.

The family requests that in lieu of flowers, memorial contributions be made to the Vision 2000 building fund of the First Presbyterian Church of Midland, 800 W. Texas Ave., Midland 79701; or Trinity Towers of Midland, 2800 W. Illinois Ave., Midland 79701.

A memorial service is set for 11 a.m. Thursday, July 10, at First Presbyterian Church of Midland with Pastor Steve Wilkins officiating.

Obituary & Death Notice policy

There is no charge for death notices of residents or former residents of Midland or for those who have Midland relatives. We also publish death notices for residents of the surrounding West Texas area.

Free death notices include date and place of death, service and burial information, funeral home handling arrangements, date and place of birth, brief biography, survivors and memorials. A longer, more detailed obituary is available for a charge. It may include tributes, expanded biography, organizational associations, notes of appreciation, pallbearers, honorary pallbearers and a photo.

Deadline for both free death notices and paid obituaries is 4:30 p.m. and information must be either received from or verified by a funeral home.

Imo Breeze

Memorial services for Imo L. Breeze will be held at 2 p.m. Thursday, July 10, in the Chapel of First Presbyterian Church with Pastor Dick Braun officiating. Cremains were buried at Resthaven Memorial Park beside her husband. Arrangements are under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Breeze passed away on Sunday evening, July 6, at Love's Personal Care Home.

She was born Imo Rene Love on Nov. 2, 1904, in Berthoud, Colo. She married Glenn P. Breeze in Boulder, Colo., in 1928. They lived for many years in the Denver area, where she was employed by various companies in a secretarial position. The family moved to Midland in 1950, where she was employed as a legal secretary for Clovis Chappell for many years before retiring. After her husband retired as vice president & cashier from the First National Bank of Midland, the Breezes resided in Wichita Falls, Seal Beach, Calif., Loveland, Colo., and Odessa. She was preceded in death by her husband, Glen P. Breeze, in 1978. She spent her remaining years living in Midland.

Survivors include a son, Larry Breeze of Midland; a daughter, Sally Green, of Midland; three grandchildren; six great-grandchildren; and several nieces and nephews.

In lieu of flowers, the family requests memorials to the American Heart Association, 3525 Andrews Highway, Suite 111, Midland 79703, or Cal Farley's Boys' Ranch, 600 W. 11th, Amarillo, 79101, or the charity of choice.

Study finds college prepayment plans help upper classes more than poor

AUSTIN (AP) — Funds that allow parents to pay for a child's future college education at today's prices tend to help families that could afford college anyway, while doing little to help the poor, a new analysis says.

A study by the American Association of State Colleges and Universities examined prepaid tuition plans in several of the 13 states that have such programs.

Texas is among the states offering contracts to families to save for college. But data from the Texas Tomorrow Fund was not cited in the study.

"Prepaid tuition plans ease college affordability concerns for participants — primarily middle- and upper-income families," the analysis said. "They are not a means for increasing access to higher education — especially for the neediest students — and do nothing to address the causes of rising college costs."

The results are not surprising, according to Texas officials.

The Texas Tomorrow Fund was set up to help middle-class families save for college, said Sheila Clancy, a spokeswoman for Texas Comptroller John Sharp, whose agency administers the program.

"Rich people don't have to worry about college, and lower-income people have numerous sources of income aid," Ms. Clancy said. "It's the middle-income people who have been falling through the cracks."

Larry Burt, director of financial aid at the University of Texas, said, however, that the amount of aid available to the needy is not sufficient to cover college expenses.

"The problem is, if you go away to college ... you've got to pay room and board, books, transportation and other costs," Burt said. "Those expenses can add up to much more than the grant funds I have available. Our needy students are still going to have to borrow a substantial amount of money."

The Texas Tomorrow Fund pays for tuition and fees.

The upside is, such programs spur middle-class people to save actively for college, possibly sooner than they would have, Burt said. There is a risk, however.

Taxpayers can get stuck covering a part of the cost if tuition and fees escalate higher than expected.

The Texas Tomorrow Fund, which was created by the Legislature in 1995, has about 65,000 contracts worth $625 million.

Most of the participating families have annual incomes greater than $50,000, according to figures provided by Ms. Clancy.

Ms. Clancy noted that families voluntarily provide income information, and 41 percent declined to do so; 18.9 percent had incomes of $50,000 to $74,999; 11.8 percent were in the $75,000 to $100,000 range; and 10.7 percent had incomes greater than $100,000.

At the other end of the scale, 7.3 percent had incomes of $40,000 to $49,999; 5.7 percent were in the $30,000 to $39,999 range; 3.3 percent had incomes of $20,000 to $29,999; and 1.5 percent earned less than $20,000.

When asked their ethnicity, 49.4 percent said they were Anglo; 34.7 percent declined to say; 8.7 percent, Hispanic; 2.4 percent, African-American; 2.5 percent, Asian; .9 percent, Native American, and 1.3 percent, other.

Paternity sleuths track down dads with a toll-free number

CHICAGO (AP) — She may have her father's nose, but does she have his genes as well?

Proving the paternity of a child was once an inexact science. Now, anyone who can provide a swab swipe from the mouths of both father and child can find out with near certainty by picking up the phone and dialing 1-800-DNA-TYPE.

"A lot of people wanted to get this testing, but they never knew who to ask or were too embarrassed," said Caroline Caskey, founder and president of Identigene, a company that conducts the paternity tests.

Based in Houston, the company has begun advertising the 800 number nationwide, mainly in the South, and said it has received 150 calls each day. The ads have appeared on billboards in Chicago and taxicabs in New York City.

Caskey said the service offers many advantages.

For one thing, it's discreet — just mail in the swab swipe.

It's fast — test results are usually back in a week.

And it's accurate — a match means a 99.9 percent certainty the man is the father.

In Chicago, a 23-year-old North Side woman said she called because her boyfriend wanted to make sure he was the father of her 10-month-old girl. The child's grandmother saw the billboard and told her daughter about it.

"I didn't mind doing it, and I think there is a need for this service," said the woman, a single mother on welfare who spoke to The Associated Press only on condition of anonymity. "I thought you could only get the test done at a hospital."

With out-of-wedlock births exceeding 60 percent in some urban areas, figuring out a father's identity is often not a matter of simply looking at the marriage license.

While there may have been a time when mothers were content not to know, the costs of raising a child and changes in welfare laws are making paternity a much bigger issue.

Court systems are increasingly demanding fathers pay for their children's upbringing, using wage attachments, jail time and liquidation of assets to make their point.

Welfare departments are also forcing the issue, trying to take the load of child-rearing off taxpayers and give it back to fathers.

The federal government is requiring states to establish paternity in 90 percent of welfare cases within six months, instead of the previous 75 percent of cases within 18 months.

So both fathers and mothers have a big stake in knowing who daddy is.

"Location, finding the father, and the legal burden of proof is the most difficult part," said Dianna Durham-McLoud, head of the Child Support Enforcement Division of the Illinois Department of Public Aid. "But it's so important because the first step in collecting child support is establishing paternity."

Illinois previously established paternity in 4,000 cases each year, but from the first three months of 1997 alone, 12,500 cases were resolved. About 330,000 cases were pending, two-thirds of which involved people on welfare.

Identigene charges $600 for a DNA test.

"We hope (the number of phone calls) will grow as more and more people recognize the value," Caskey said.

Privacy is often paramount.

"People don't want to ask their neighbors or their doctors how to go about this, but they read an advertisement and it tells them who to call," she said.

Callers are not only those interested in child support benefits. People who were adopted as children and want to confirm the identity of a biological parent also use the service. There are also cases involving multiple partners and victims of rape.

"It's also important for adopting couples — you want to know that the right man is giving up his adoption claims," Caskey said.

COOK: Texas 'menudo capital of the world' says Diaz

(From 1B)

dez said. "We eat it with Francesitos, or small French rolls. That way you can soak 'em."

Some menudo fans are so picky they won't eat it unless they cook it themselves or know the chef — lest the tripe not be properly cleaned and emit a musky odor.

"Somebody will have to try it first before I do," said Rachel Stone of the Midland Hispanic chamber. "Guys just eat it."

In many homes it is the man who prepares the succulent dish, she said.

"It's a guy thing," Stone said of cutting the tripe, or cow's stomach. "It smells, it's hard to cut. I'll tell you a secret: if you put a whole onion in it, the ponza, or tripe, won't smell."

Helen Reyes loves everything about menudo but the tripe.

Reyes, who will oversee the judging at the cook-off, said each sample will be judged according to aroma, redness of the chili, consistency, taste and aftertaste.

"It's sort of like an assault against your taste buds," said John Paul Pitts, a Midland Reporter-Telegram editor who has judged the cook-off many years. "I'd rather have a bowl of menudo than a big steak."

But Pitts, like many Anglos, was squeamish about menudo until he tried it at a Tijuana wedding.

"I took one bite and sort of gagged," he said, "then I took another bite, trying to be polite, then I thought, 'This isn't as bad as I thought.'"

Bite by bite he was hooked. Before long he was making it himself. "It's not a Mexican thing out here, but our thing," he said. "It's just part of our culture down here."

"We wanted to create something unique for West Texas," Diaz said of the cook-off. "Texas is the menudo capital of the world."

VOTE: Local Hispanics say Mexico has more options now

(From 1B)

President Ernesto Zedillo was a keynote speaker. At the seminar, Zedillo vowed to make changes in Mexico's corrupt election proceedings.

"We spoke about the elections process, and how they were going to assure fair elections," Cuevas said. "I think Zedillo made a bold move to hold a fair and free democratic election. It shows a lot of courage for Zedillo to have taken this move and guarantee that PAN and other opposing parties would have a voice and shape in the new Mexico."

He also favored Mexico's choice in electing Cardenas as the capital's head.

"I think Cardenas is well respected. I think just by the virtue that he won with 46 percent ... it is a vote of confidence," Cardenas said.

Local Mexican consulate Juana Maria Ruiz also shows satisfaction for Cardenas' victory.

"The people have a lot of confidence in him. We are expecting a lot from him, especially because he was governor of Michoacan," Ruiz said in Spanish. "The PRI let down a lot of people, so we hope Cardenas' word is good."

Ruiz also commented on the Mexican elections.

"This is a reform of their government. They can expect a lot of positive outcomes from the change. All parties have promised to work together to better the country," Ruiz said. "This creates a true democracy in Mexico."

She added, "This is historic. The PRI used to dominate with a majority in Congress, but now Mexico has options."

DWI: County judges don't give breaks

judges came on the bench and would have been for extraordinary circumstances.

A study of probation records by the Houston Chronicle found that Texas judges have given hundreds of drunken drivers early breaks from probation despite the law.

The Chronicle quoted John Bradley, Williamson County First Assistant District Attorney — who lectures probation officers about changes in state law — as saying that sometimes early terminations are given because judges are unaware of changes in the law and sometimes they are given despite the law.

Co-defendant to testify against former mayor

ROCKPORT (AP) — A jury was seated Tuesday in the capital murder trial of a former Texas mayor, while a second man has admitted to allegedly helping him kidnap and kill a business partner.

Former Ingleside Mayor Mark Crawford is accused in the May 6, 1996, slaying of Nick Brueggen, 49, of Houston. Opening statements were scheduled for Wednesday.

As Crawford's trial got under way Monday, prosecutors announced that co-defendant Michael Beckcom had agreed to plead guilty to second-degree murder and will testify against Crawford.

A third defendant, Kirk Johnson, already had pleaded no contest to murder in exchange for his testimony.

Prosecutors allege the three men kidnapped Brueggen and took him to a warehouse Crawford owned near Ingleside. There, they say, Crawford, Beckcom and Johnson forced Brueggen into a metal toolbox and gassed him with carbon monoxide. His body was later found in a shallow grave behind the warehouse.

Crawford has pleaded innocent. His attorney, Bill May, declined comment on Beckcom's decision.

Prosecutors contend Crawford killed Brueggen to stop him from cooperating with federal authorities in the investigation of an alleged insurance scam involving both men.

Introduction to the Internet
Monday and Tuesday Evening, July 14th and 15th
6:30 pm - 10:00 pm
This class will introduce you to the ins and outs of the Internet, and will focus specifically on the often vague answer to a very straight-forward question:
"How do I get on the Internet, and what do I do once I am there?"
This class will show you how to get on the Internet.
And, it covers the topics: What you need to connect; hardware and software considerations; SLIP and PPP connections; what is TCP/IP; finding a service provider; using software tools to locate information on the 'Net; using FTP, Archie, Gopher, Telnet; accessing Newsgroups; e-mail and mailing lists; how to access the World Wide Web; using Netscape, the most popular WWW browser; understanding URL's and Hypertext; and anti-virus protection.

Diet-drug cocktail dangerous, scientists say

ROCHESTER, Minn. (AP) — A diet-drug combination that is known as "fen-phen" and is taken by millions of Americans can cause serious heart and lung damage, the Mayo Clinic and the government warned Tuesday.

Mayo Clinic researchers identified 24 women who took both fenfluramine and phentermine to lose weight and later developed deformed heart valves. Eight of those women also developed a potentially fatal lung disease called pulmonary hypertension.

The drug combination has been available since 1995, and deaths in Florida, Kentucky and Massachusetts have been attributed to heart failure linked to the diet prescription. None of the women in the Mayo Clinic study died, though five underwent heart surgery.

The researchers had planned to publish their findings next month in the New England Journal of Medicine but released them early at the urging of the journal's editors.

At the same time, the Food and Drug Administration began sending letters to thousands of doctors asking them to immediately check fen-phen patients for valve problems and report them to the agency.

Doctors wrote more than 18 million prescriptions for fen-phen last year.

Both drugs are available only by prescription and have been approved separately by the FDA, but the agency has not approved the drug combination. Under law, doctors are free to prescribe the two drugs as they see fit.

Dr. Michael Friedman, the FDA's acting commissioner, said examinations of the valve tissue of five patients strongly suggested that the disorder was drug-related.

At the same time, he said: "The agency is not saying it is inappropriate to use fen-phen. What we're saying is patients and physicians must be very careful."

It is unclear whether stopping fen-phen would halt or reverse the valve thickening, Friedman said. As for pulmonary hypertension — in which blood vessels in the lungs become blocked — the damage is considered irreversible.

Wyeth-Ayerst Laboratories Inc. of Philadelphia, the sole maker of fenfluramine, said the Mayo Clinic report is "limited and therefore inconclusive."

"Other potential regional factors, such as environmental, lifestyle or occupational links may have also affected the results," the company said in a statement.

The drug maker noted that it recently warned doctors that it doesn't recommend mixing the drug with other weight-loss medicines, such as phentermine.

Phentermine makers SmithKline Beecham and Medeva PLC did not immediately return calls seeking comment.

The president of the American Obesity Association complained that the study may panic thousands of fen-phen users. He said it is possible that simply being obese predisposes people to heart valve problems.

"We will be doing a major disservice to the obese people of this country if this is a false alarm," said Dr. Richard Atkinson of the University of Wisconsin, who has prescribed fen-phen to over 300 patients. "If it is not a false alarm, it should serve to alert physicians that they shouldn't be slapping people who have five to 10 pounds to lose ... on drugs."

The risk of lung disease from fenfluramine has been suspected for several years, according to fenphen researcher Dr. Larry Davidow, a professor at the University of Kansas. But the potential for heart-valve trouble is new, he said.

He said the dangers pointed up by the Mayo report would have to be weighed against the benefits fen-phen has shown in many patients.

Ocean enthusiasts taking part in Great American Fish Count

ANACAPA ISLAND, Calif. (AP) — Carrying waterproof slates and pencils like underwater stock clerks, ocean enthusiasts are taking an inventory of the deep.

Their job is to spot as many fish as possible and record their type and number.

The event is the Great American Fish Count, a two-week, coast-to-coast event in which volunteer divers and snorkelers document fish diversity and population trends.

"You have to assess the fish populations and know how they are moving to understand them. The end result is better management. Right now, we're doing a poor job worldwide," said Jean-Michel Cousteau, a son of the underwater explorer Jacques Cousteau.

For the past four years, the count has been conducted off California only. This year, it is being expanded nationwide for the first time. Other study sites include protected waters in the Gulf of Mexico and the Florida Keys.

On Monday, volunteers led by Jean-Michel Cousteau maneuvered through giant stalks of gold kelp to observe fish swimming federally protected waters off Southern California.

Before plunging into the water, Cousteau stood on the deck of the boat and asked the 50 participants to join him in a moment of silence in memory of his father, who died June 25. He bowed his head and closed his eyes.

"I dedicate this dive to my dear, dear wonderful father," Cousteau said. "I think we owe him for having opened this ocean world to us."

Cousteau, who lives in Santa Barbara, flew back from Paris, where his father died, to take part in the fish count.

How were divers to know they weren't counting the same fish twice?

"As you move around, the likelihood of seeing the same fish will decrease. If everyone saw 10 black sea bass, we can say that's a fact with a high degree of certainty," said Ed Cassano, manager of the Channel Island National Marine Sanctuary, which covers 1,252 square nautical miles

The July 1-14 count is a joint effort of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and three nonprofit environmental organizations.

By using volunteers, organizers hope to spread the word about declining fish populations so the public will get fired up about protecting them, "much the same way we do our forests and deserts," said event founder Gary Davis, a scientist with the Channel Islands National Park Services.

The ocean environment, Davis said, suffers from being "out of sight and out of mind."

Rural electric cooperatives hold $9 billion in troubled loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rural electric cooperatives, encouraged by Congress in the 1970s to invest in nuclear power, now hold more than $9 billion in troubled government loans. And it's beginning to hit taxpayers.

The Rural Utilities Service, an arm of the Agriculture Department that helps ensure electric service to 26 million Americans, has already written off $1.75 billion of the bad loans, with possibly more to come.

To some, it's all reminiscent of the savings and loan bailout, though the possible costs are much smaller. And members of Congress are worried about anything that might jeopardize efforts to balance the federal budget and cut taxes.

"I'm still concerned about how much of a hit we have yet to take," Sen. Dick Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Agriculture Committee, said Tuesday.

The bad loans stem from poor past investments by rural cooperatives in nuclear power, an industry that now faces widespread troubles.

The government is negotiating with five cooperatives to avoid more write-offs, and four are resolving their debts and getting out of the program, said Wally Beyer, administrator of the rural agency.

Four other cooperatives are in bankruptcy proceedings, meaning the government is in line for at least some of its money. And two have restructured debts and remain in the program, he said.

Still, in the 60-year history of the Rural Utilities Service, there had only been two defaults until the 1980s, and those two defaults combined were only about $44,000.

The loans are primarily to nonprofit electric cooperatives to generate, transmit and distribute electricity in the nation's vast rural areas, which on average have just 5.8 consumers a mile compared with 35 a mile in more populated areas.

Because of that sparsity, rural electric systems make just over $7,000 a mile in average annual revenues, compared with more than $59,000 a mile for other utilities.

In 1978, Congress passed a law encouraging cooperatives to invest in nuclear power plants by limiting the burning of oil and natural gas. Some cooperatives borrowed huge sums from the government to become minority investors in these plants.

Then came the accident at Pennsylvania's Three Mile Island, in 1979, and the nuclear industry began a downward spiral that saw many projects canceled because of safety concerns or high costs.

Demand for energy also was lower than expected, and, the cooperatives say, the Treasury Department refused to refinance loans at lower interest rates.

The poor investments in nuclear power cost the investor-owned utilities $259 billion through 1995, most of it passed on to consumers in higher electric bills, English noted. The cooperatives were unable to recover their losses.

The troubled loans are gaining even more intense scrutiny because of efforts in the states and in Congress to deregulate the electric industry, which could allow investor-owned utilities to compete with rural cooperatives.

Army sex case hearing draws tearful testimony

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fighting back tears, a career Army sergeant said Tuesday his daughter-in-law felt betrayed by the sexual advances of the service's senior enlisted man. "We're in the Army to take care of our soldiers," he said. "They're a gift to our country."

"They don't want to be abused; they just want to be led," said Command Sgt. Maj. Harold Lewis, removing his glasses and wiping his eyes.

Lewis' daughter-in-law, Sgt. Christine Roy, has alleged that Sergeant Major of the Army Gene McKinney pursued her with frequent telephone calls and that last Oct. 30, against her will, they had sexual relations at his home.

This is the third week of testimony at a hearing at Fort McNair to determine if McKinney should be court-martialed on sexual misconduct charges.

Roy is one of four women who have alleged McKinney made improper sexual advances. Only Roy has said they led to sexual relations.

Roy's mother, Donna Williams, testified by telephone and told the hearing that she was living with Roy on Oct. 30 and had no indication when Roy got home that night that anything had happened.

It was not until much later, said Mrs. Williams, that her daughter told her "she had been raped by him."

"I asked why she hadn't told me, and she said it was something she wanted to put behind her and get on with her life," Mrs. Williams said in the call from Phoenix, where she now lives.

In the Army more than 25 years, Lewis is commandant of the Non-Commissioned Officers Training Academy at Fort Hood, Texas. During the first half of his testimony, his manner was confident, his responses assured.

Roy is married to Lewis' son Richard, and the sergeant major described his relationship with the couple as close. He said his son's marriage has been shaky but is "a lot better now."

He said that last spring Roy met McKinney and was "mesmerized" by the sergeant major. She said she had an offer of a job in McKinney's office and asked Lewis' advice.

She soon discovered she was pregnant and had to give up the chance to work for McKinney. Lewis said he thought it was her decision. She testified nearly two weeks ago that it was McKinney who said that her being pregnant made her unsuited to a job that required a lot of travel.

Lewis said the first inkling he had that something was very wrong was when his son called earlier this year and said, "Something horrible happened to Chris and she is ashamed."

The son told his father that "they're going to drag our family's name in the mud."

When Lewis later talked to his daughter-in-law, she told him McKinney had been calling her. "I asked if he had called her a lot," Lewis testified. "She said, 'Yes.' I asked if he had said anything on the phone that made her uncomfortable. She said 'Yes.' I told her to report it immediately."

Lewis said he told her "she had to do the right thing, no matter how painful, how ugly, no matter what it took. She had to do the right thing."

Lewis said his daughter-in-law did not mention having sex with McKinney during that conversation.

When Lt. Col. Michael Child, the chief prosecuting attorney, questioned Lewis about the relationship between Roy and McKinney, the Army veteran had difficulty controlling his emotions.

Lewis said Roy told him about a conversation with McKinney during which she complained about being sunburned.

He asked her what she had been wearing and when she replied a bathing suit, he said, "I bet you looked good," according to Lewis.

Lewis said McKinney was "out of line to talk to another man's wife like that."

Describing the remark as "totally irresponsible," Lewis said, "I was livid."

He became visibly angry when asked about defense speculation that Roy made the allegations against McKinney because she was angry at not getting the job in his Pentagon office. The defense also has suggested that Roy, who got a transfer to Fort Hood thanks in part to her father-in-law's intervention, made the charges to get out of a scheduled transfer to Hawaii and be sent to Fort Hood instead.

"She's not lying," said Lewis. "She told me she would do and say the truth."

Environmental win held up by funding flap

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two of President Clinton's biggest environmental coups — saving a California redwood forest and stopping a gold mine near Yellowstone National Park — are in danger of failing because of a budget fight in Congress.

In separate and lengthy negotiations last year, the White House persuaded developers to abandon the proposed projects in return for other government land or cash.

But with Congress intent on squeezing the budget, and with conservative Republicans viewing federal land purchases as attacks on property rights, the administration has not been able to get the money needed to close the deals.

The White House needs about $65 million to pay a Canadian mining company to abandon the New World Mine, outside Yellowstone in Montana. It needs $250 million to get financier Charles Hurwitz to stop plans to cut ancient redwood trees on 7,500 acres of private land in the Headwaters Forest near Arcata, Calif.

Democrats will try to get the money approved when an Interior Department spending bill comes up for a vote in the House this week, possibly as early as Wednesday. But congressional and administration officials say the prospects appear better when the legislation goes to the Senate.

While the White House expects the money eventually to be approved, one senior Interior Department official complained that Congress seems bent on "pulling the rug out from under the deals."

"We'll be back to square one," said the official, who spoke on the condition of not being identified.

The White House thought it had a deal a few weeks ago when a budget agreement with Republican leaders included $700 million for special land purchases. But the House Appropriations Committee refused to approve the money.

"We are going to insist that Congress live up to the letter of that deal," said Lawrence Haas, spokesman for the White House Office of Management and Budget.

While the two land deals are not specifically mentioned in the agreement, Haas said "we made it clear that we considered the New World Mine and Headwaters to be the priorities that we had in mind."

Two other attempts to free up at least $315 million for the two projects also failed.

Rep. Ralph Regula, R-Ohio, chairman of the subcommittee with jurisdiction over the Interior Department's funds, said spending that much money to obtain more public land was irresponsible. He argued the money could be better used for improvements at existing national parks.

Improper labeling prompts recall of carrot cakes

WASHINGTON (AP) — People allergic to nuts risk a life-threatening reaction if they eat icing-covered carrot cakes made by Knaub's Cakes Inc. because they contain walnuts, the company said Tuesday.

Knaub's recalled from stores nationwide cakes that did not list the nuts as an ingredient. The York, Pa.-based company said that by Monday carrot cakes placed on store shelves had been properly labeled as containing walnuts, but that people who already had purchased mislabeled cakes may return them for a refund.

However, the cakes are not sold under Knaub's brand name but under several other brand names that the company would not provide Tuesday. Instead, consumers should check for the wording "seven-inch carrot cakes" on products sold in a clear plastic dome that contain a UPC code ending in the numbers 00722.

How to "Legally Steal" A New Air Conditioner
For $570 Less (Because of Record Cold Temperatures...)
(Read On... only the first 72 to order can take advantage.)
By: Robert Reece
This is for you if your central air conditioner is over nine years old...or if it need repairs...or if you want to quit overpaying your electric bill by $30 to $100 a month.
Claire's is over-stocked with inventory of premium central air conditioners in the four most popular sizes used here in the Permian Basin. The reason for this situation is the coldest spring temperatures in thirty years!
Tim Claire, the general manager says, " We are almost eighty units behind where we planned if this was a normal spring. We must sell at least 72 air conditioners to free up business capital for the summer season. During this special event each air conditioner will be sold for hundreds below their normal price." Tim said, "If you think you will need to replace your old air conditioner this summer or next, then you should be able to do very well for yourself at these prices."
With credit approval, financing is available from major lending institutions for this event as low as 5.9% for 24 months (with approved credit) with no down payment required.
Calls will be taken in the order they are received to schedule free surveys to measure the most efficient size unit for your home. These are provided as a Free Courtesy and there is no obligation to buy.
Due to the anticipated response to this event, Mr. Claire requests that you understand all sales are on a first-come first-serve basis...if the correct size air conditioners available for your home are all gone, he will not be able to sell you a unit at the event price.
For your convenience the phones are answered 24-Hours a day and you can schedule your free survey during the evening or throughout the weekend.
It is recommended that you call as soon as possible to schedule your free survey.

Inquiry into liquor industry advertising stymied by FCC deadlock

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government inquiry into television advertising of tequila, whiskey and other liquor products is not going to happen — at least not any time soon.

Federal Communications Commission Chairman Reed Hundt said Tuesday he intends to bring the issue up for a vote Wednesday before the four-member commission. But FCC commissioners James Quello and Rachelle Chong plan to shoot it down.

Only one other commissioner, Susan Ness, supports moving forward on the inquiry. A 2-2 deadlock would not let that happen.

As head of the FCC, Hundt controls what items will or won't come up for a vote. But it's rare for a chairman to bring a proposal to a vote when he doesn't have a majority of the commissioners — in this case three — required to adopt it.

What does Hundt, who plans to leave the agency upon confirmation of a successor, hope to accomplish?

"I think it is an important decision and ought to be made in public and not in a fishbowl so that the public can see which way everybody is swimming," Hundt said in an interview. "Commissioners need to be accountable in the public eye."

For months, Hundt has been trying to break a logjam at the FCC so he can take up President Clinton's recommendation for the inquiry.

Groups that try to combat alcohol abuse and stop drunk driving, as well as officials from some states, have asked the FCC to open an inquiry. The National Association of Broadcasters and the liquor industry opposes efforts to do so.

Quello and Chong, echoing the broadcasting industry's position, argue that the FCC lacks the legal authority to intervene.

'I think it is an important decision and ought to be made in public and not in a fishbowl so that the public can see which way everybody is swimming.'
— FCC Chairman Reed Hundt

They believe such authority resides with the Federal Trade Commission which, among other things, investigates false, deceptive and misleading advertising or ads aimed at illegal audiences.

"Why do we need an inquiry with the FTC having two investigations?" said Quello, in a interview. He said he intends to vote against the inquiry. "I don't think we need something more to do here. We have plenty to do here."

Chong also intends to vote against the inquiry, said her senior legal adviser, Jane Mago.

"She feels very strongly that to the extent that we would be duplicating the FTC's work is not something we ought to be doing," Mago said. "And, to the extent that they (supporters of an inquiry) are trying to say that our public interest mandates should be read expansively to cover any issues folks come up with is not a proper use of our resources."

Regulators and lawmakers have been grappling with the matter since the liquor industry decided last year to abandon a decades-old voluntary ban on TV and radio advertising.

Some broadcast and cable outlets already have begun airing liquor ads, but ABC, CBS, NBC and Fox have said they won't accept them.

The proposed inquiry would be a simple fact-finding, focused on how many stations are running the ads and when, FCC attorneys have said.

Attorneys also said the inquiry would seek industry and public comment on whether the FCC should:

- Require a computer "v-chip" that will be installed in TV sets next year to let parents block out liquor ads as well as programs they find objectionable.
- Require TV stations that air liquor ads to also run counter ads or public-service announcements warning of the health and safety risks of excessive drinking.
- Restrict stations from airing ads to certain times when children are not likely to be watching.

In the past, Hundt has successfully broken deadlocks on other issues, most notably when he persuaded other commissioners to support rules requiring TV stations to air three hours of educational shows for children each week.

Bible passage considered in JonBenet case

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — From the beginning, the peculiarly exact demand of $118,000 in the JonBenet Ramsey ransom note has baffled investigators.

Now, police are said to be considering the possibility that the figure was inspired by a Bible passage familiar to the little girl's mother.

The ransom note that Patsy Ramsey reported finding on Dec. 26 demanded $118,000 for the return of her 6-year-old beauty queen daughter, who was found strangled with a cord in the family's basement about eight hours later.

Investigators initially suspected the $118,000 demand was chosen because it was close to the amount of John Ramsey's 1995 bonus.

'God is the Lord, which hath shewed us light: bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar.'
— Psalm 118:27

But according to published reports, police now believe it could be linked to Psalm 118:27: "God is the Lord, which hath shewed us light: bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar."

"We have no response," police spokeswoman Leslie Aaholm said Tuesday of the reports in the supermarket tabloid the Globe and the Rocky Mountain News. Police Chief Tom Koby did not return calls from The Associated Press.

Prosecutors know nothing of a suspected link, said spokeswoman Suzanne Laurion.

Mrs. Ramsey underwent surgery and chemotherapy after being diagnosed with ovarian cancer in 1993. Friends of Mrs. Ramsey have said she believed she healed herself through prayer.

In a December 1994 interview with Colorado Woman News magazine, Mrs. Ramsey touted the book "Healed of Cancer" by cancer survivor Dodie Osteen, who offers "40 Healing Scriptures Used to Win the Battle Over Cancer."

Included on that list is Psalm 118:17: "I shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the Lord."

"I know absolutely, positively that she is well-read in the Bible and very spiritual and always has been. Even before the cancer," said Diane Barnett Lough, a longtime friend of Mrs. Ramsey's who grew up with her in Parkersburg, W.Va. "She depended on her Bible to pull her through the cancer."

John and Patsy Ramsey have been identified as "a focus" of the investigation, and Mrs. Ramsey has not been ruled out as an author of the ransom note. The Ramseys have publicly denied killing JonBenet.

District attorney drops Kennedy investigation

DEDHAM, Mass. (AP) — A prosecutor said Tuesday he is dropping his investigation into whether Michael Kennedy had an affair with his family's teen-age baby sitter because the young woman won't cooperate.

Norfolk District Attorney Jeffrey Locke had been investigating allegations that Kennedy, the 39-year-old son of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, began having sex with the woman when she was 14. The allegations surfaced shortly after Kennedy announced in April that he was separating from his wife of 16 years.

Sex with someone under 16 constitutes statutory rape under Massachusetts law and is punishable by up to life in prison.

Locke said that without the young woman's cooperation, there is no "independent, compelling and direct evidence" she had had sex with Kennedy before she turned 16 in 1994.

He said it is policy not to force victims in sexual assault cases to take part in a criminal case if they don't want to.

Ostrich chicks, left, walk together on the Dale and Scottie Mansfield Ranch in Midland County. An ostrich eggshell, hand painted by Ms. Mansfield, above, is displayed on a stand. Ms. Mansfield saves eggshells to decorate. She cooks ostrich meat in many recipes that typically call for beef or cuts of red meat, including fajitas, beef jerky and dishes with steak.

OSTRICH: Substituted for beef

per pound.

Ms. McKay said Texas is leading the nation in the number of ostrich ranches.

Aside from the meat there are markets for ostrich feathers and skin. Mansfield's wife, Scottie, paints and decorates ostrich eggs, after the yolk has been removed. She recently prepared a stir-fry recipe with ostrich meat. "You really don't need separate recipes for ostrich," she said. "Anything I make with beef or red meat — fajitas, steaks, beef jerky — I can substitute with ostrich. The ostrich is leaner and more tender."

The Mansfields have 14 adult ostriches; seven of them are laying hens. The eggs — which weigh up to four pounds and are the equivalent of two dozen chicken eggs — are seldom eaten since it is more lucrative for ranchers to allow them to develop into chicks. "But every now and then, a hen will lay infertile eggs (when males and females are separated) or an egg will crack."

The yolks are blown out of those eggs and the shells can be decorated or displayed.

The Mansfields said they get about 30 to 66 eggs per year from February to September. The large ostrich yields about 90 pounds of meat. Two ostriches will be donated to the tasting event of the Roller Relay Race & Taste.

"Ostrich is good for you and it tastes good. People need to try it," Ms. McKay said.

OSTRICH SALISBURY STEAK

1 pound ground ostrich
1/2 cup chopped onion
2 tablespoons milk
2 (3/4-ounce) packages brown gravy mix (2 cups)
1-1/2 cups sliced fresh mushrooms
4 cups cooked noodles
1/4 cup egg substitute (may use 1 egg, instead)
5 saltine crackers, crushed
1 tablespoon prepared horseradish

In a bowl, combine meat, egg substitute, onion crumbs, milk, horseradish and pepper. Shape into 4 oval patties. Cook, in nonstick skillet (sprayed with cooking spray) over medium heat until brown and done, about 10 minutes. Make gravy according to package directions. Add gravy and mushrooms to skillet. Cook and simmer 25-30 minutes. Serve over hot noodles.

ORIENTAL OSTRICH STIR-FRY

1-1/2 pounds of ostrich meat (can be purchased packaged for stir-fry cooking)
3 slices of ginger root, shredded
1 carrot, shredded
4 tablespoons vegetable oil
MARINADE:
2 tablespoons dark soy sauce
1 tablespoon dry sherry
Pinch of pepper
2 tablespoons oyster sauce (found in oriental food section of supermarket)
3/4 teaspoon sugar

Slice ostrich meat into 1/4-inch strips across the grain and marinade with half the total marinade for 15 minutes. Heat oil in frying pan or wok. When oil is hot, cook ginger and carrots for 1 minute. Add onions and meat, and stir fry for 1 minute over high heat. Stir in remaining marinade. Serve over freshly steamed rice. Serves 4-5.

BROILED BURGER BITES

1/2 pound medium mushrooms (30)
1/4 pound ostrich meat
Salt and pepper
1 (6-ounce) package of sliced mozzarella cheese
1/8 teaspoon dried oregano, crushed
2 tablespoons ketchup
30 Melba toast rounds

Wipe mushrooms with a damp cloth. Finely chop mushroom stems. In a small skillet, cook and stir ground ostrich until browned. Add chopped mushroom stems, salt, pepper and oregano. Saute 3 minutes until mushroom stems are tender. Stir in ketchup. Spoon about 1 tablespoon meat mixture on top of each toast round. Arrange toast rounds on an ungreased baking sheet. Place 1 mushroom cap, rounded side up, on top of each toast round. Cut cheese into wedges large enough to cover mushrooms, but no larger than toast. Place 1 cheese wedge on top of each mushroom cap. Refrigerate. To serve, preheat oven to 350. Bake appetizers 10-15 minutes until cheese melts and meat mixture is hot. Makes about 30 appetizers.

OSTRICH SCALOPPINI

4 (4 ounces each) steaks
3 tablespoons flour
Dash pepper
1/8 teaspoon paprika
2 tablespoons low-fat margarine
1/2 cup fresh mushrooms, sliced
9 tablespoons dry white wine, divided (7 and 2)
1 teaspoon parsley
Pinch tarragon

Combine flour, pepper and paprika. Coat meat with flour mixture. Melt margarine in nonstick skillet and saute meat until golden brown and done. Remove to platter. To the fat left in the skillet add mushrooms and onions and cook for 2 minutes. Add 7 tablespoons wine and cook for 2 more minutes. While stirring, add parsley, tarragon, and rest of wine. Bring to a boil. Pour over steaks and serve.

Ice cream gets cold shoulder

By Linda Anderson

Talk about irresistible! The Dreyer's people really knew what they were doing when they sent me a press release about their new flavor of Grand Ice Cream, "Cookie Jar."

Anderson

Not only do I love chocolate chip ice cream, but I think chocolate chip cookies are a necessity of life. And that's what Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream Cookie Jar flavor is — a combination of chocolate chip ice cream and "Nestle Toll House cookies," according to information on the press release.

As soon as I saw the press release, I knew I would have to try the ice cream. And by an amazing coincidence, I found a carton the very next time I visited my favorite supermarket.

A round half-gallon of the ice cream has a suggested retail price of $4.99; at the store, I discovered that regular price for Dreyer's ice creams in various flavors is $3.99, but much of the time they are priced at two cartons for $5, or $2.50 each. (Have you noticed how expensive ice cream has become lately? It's enough — almost — to make a person stop eating ice cream all together.)

According to information on the company's press release, Cookie Jar, "the first ice cream ever made with Nestle Toll House cookies and mini morsel chips," is described as "easy to spot with the famous yellow Toll House package design wrapped around Dreyer's half-gallon carton. Inside the carton is Dreyer's creamy vanilla ice cream mixed with both Toll House Mini Morsels and Toll House cookies dipped in chocolate."

Nutrition information shows that one serving (1/2-cup of ice cream is supposed to be a single serving) contains 180 calories with 80 of them from fat.

The young ice cream lover at my house and I both took part in this taste test. And, in spite of the fact that we both love chocolate chips and chocolate chip cookies, and both looked forward to this one, we agreed that we both were disappointed in the ice cream. (See? Every once in a while mother and adolescent child can agree on something!)

She said it tasted like white ice cream — not even enough flavor to call it vanilla — with chocolate chips and cookies in it. No big deal.

I had to agree. The ice cream itself was basically white and sweet, almost like a frozen whipped topping that hadn't been thawed. The chocolate chips were just that, but the cookies were small (about an inch or so in diameter) and bite-sized, and reminded me of a brand of store-bought "chocolate chip" cookies that don't seem to really contain any chips. You know the kind I'm talking about? Anyway, these itty-bitty cookies are covered with a chocolate coating that doesn't really taste very chocolate either.

In other words, if you took some kind of bottom-of-the-line ice cream or frozen dessert, and mixed chocolate mini-chips and some little bite-sized chocolate-covered cookies in it, you'd probably have the same thing. And for a lot less cost.

To Dreyer's, I say: You've got a wonderful idea. Maybe you should give it another shot. I don't think this is exactly what you were looking for.

Some prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

Julia Roberts no food critic

By Beverly Bundy
Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Julia Roberts plays a food critic in "My Best Friend's Wedding." But any food writer worth her salt knows it's a complete fabrication. Here, then are the 10 ways you can tell Julia Roberts is not a food critic:

10. A food critic would never suggest ordering from room service. Always lukewarm, always overpriced.

9. A food critic would have blown off the dorky sportswriter and concentrated on getting that dishy George to play on the other team.

8. Most food critics look like they've got a few good meals under their belts. Julia Roberts looks like she hasn't had a good meal in weeks.

7. A real food critic could never afford a Jose Eber haircut.

6. If Julia Roberts is Jell-O, most food critics are chopped liver.

5. Food critics do not announce their appearance at restaurants, contrary to the movie's first scene.

4. What kind of expense account does this woman have? The Star-Telegram food critic has never been put up in a hotel with a minibar, much less been able to raid it for a nighttime pity party.

3. The Barry the Cuda's theme restaurant for the rebearsal dinner? No food critic would have been caught dead there.

2. Midriff revealing sweaters? Darlin' — not in at least 15 years.

1. A real food critic would never let Lyle Lovett slip through her fingers.

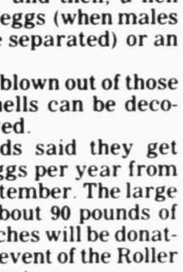

Beverly Bundy is food critic of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

DEAR ABBY

Girls in sports reap benefits

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My daughter "Beth" is in a variety of sports — basketball, soccer, etc. Even though she's not a great athlete, she sometimes scores and always enjoys herself.

Van Buren

My parents went to one of Beth's games and seemed disappointed that she wasn't one of the best scorers on the team. This bothered me, but I never said anything. They never went to another game.

Today I received a call from my mother, who hinted that I should take Beth out of any sports that she is not so good in. Abby, Beth is only 9 years old, and my feeling has always been that as long as she wanted to play the sport and tried her best, then we'd stick with it.

I never had half the courage my daughter has as far as starting new sports and events with new people. Now I think I know why. — ANONYMOUS IN BOSTON

DEAR ANONYMOUS: Your mother's thinking is outdated. Involvement in team sports is not only a means of staying in shape, it also helps girls gain self-confidence and self-esteem.

Physically active adolescent girls have a good time, improve their body image and feel better about themselves. Starting early is important.

I consulted Linda Feltes, public relations director for the Melpomene Institute for Women's Health Research, a non-profit membership-based organization that helps girls and women of all ages link physical activity and health through research and education.

She told me that a University of Virginia study has shown that if a girl doesn't participate in sports by the age of 10, there is only a 10 percent chance she will be physically active by the time she is 25.

Continue to encourage your daughter's participation in sports. She is forming a healthy habit that will probably last a lifetime.

WHAT'S COOKING?

Ranchers already beat us to the punch

Before you read another word: No, it does not "taste like chicken." And yes, ostrich really is a red meat that tastes like a lean cut of beef, according to many consumers. As far as area ranchers are concerned, ostrich is the other red meat, since it delivers two-thirds less fat than beef. A 4-ounce serving of ostrich meat contains 100 calories, no saturated fat, no calories from fat and about 55 milligrams (18 percent) cholesterol.

"It's a real alternative to eating red meat. Ostrich is like a real lean cut of beef. The healthy benefits of eating it is what got me interested in ranching," said Dale Mansfield, Midland chiropractor, as well as ostrich and cattle rancher. "The meat cooks quickly since there is almost no fat in it."

Mansfield and other members of the Big Tex Ostrich Association will be serving ostrich meat at the upcoming Race & Taste Restaurant Roller Relay Saturday. The ostrich association will join 19 area restaurant representatives offering food tasting.

"We are slowly but surely getting the word out about the benefits of eating ostrich. We served it like steak-on-a-stick at the Permian Basin Fair last year," Mansfield said.

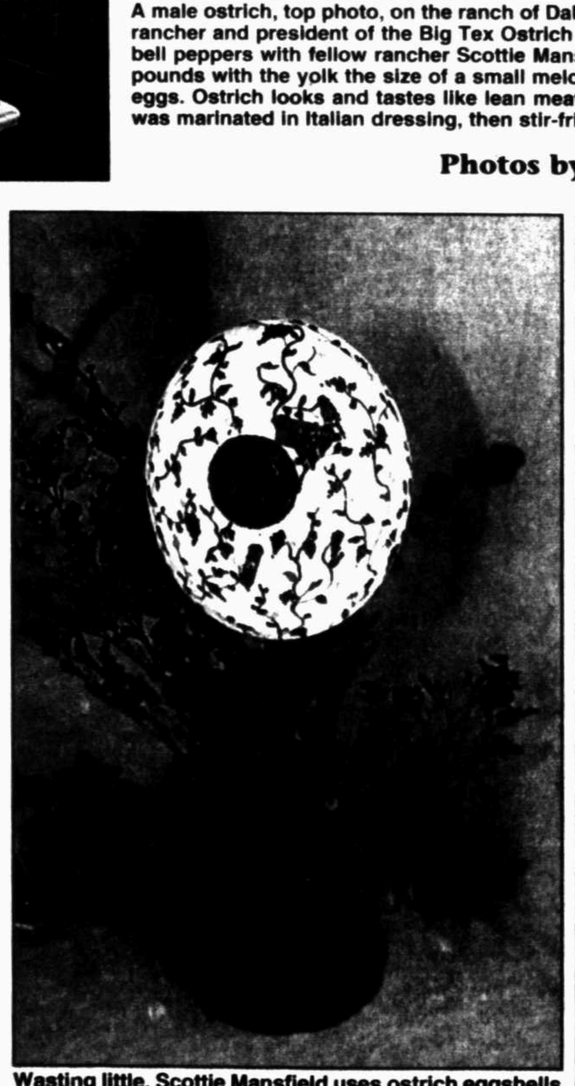

"If I fixed a dish with ostrich in it, about nine out of 10 people would not know what it was. They would think it was a lean cut of beef," said Gwen McKay, co-owner of Circle M Ostrich Ranch in Gardendale with her husband, Lynn, and president of the local ostrich association. "My kids are extremely picky. But when we had an end-of-year party, they wanted tacos made with ostrich," she said.

While some people have thought that an ostrich is a big chicken, Mansfield said it doesn't have similar breast meat since the ostrich is a flightless bird.

The lean red meat is gaining popularity by Americans on low-fat diets who are hesitant to give up meat. According to the American Ostrich Association, ostrich has less than half the fat of chicken and two-thirds less fat than beef and pork. Ostrich entrees have begun to appear on menus of upscale restaurants in big cities.

"It is more expensive, like a prime cut of meat," Ms. McKay said, noting shrinkage is much less, however, due to its low-fat content. "It's a new industry. It's a breeders' market in transition. As demand grows, the price will come down." In local food stores the price of stir-fry ostrich meat varied from $4.98 to $5.39

Please see OSTRICH/7B

Wasting little, Scottie Mansfield uses ostrich eggshells in home decorations and centerpieces. She hand paints many of the eggs and displays them on stands or in floral arrangements. She uses eggs that have cracked or are known to be infertile (those that are produced when male and female ostriches are separated).

Race, taste to benefit Meals on Wheels

Staff Reports

Ostrich meat will be one of many foods offered during the taste session (6:30-9:30 p.m.) Saturday of the Race & Taste Restaurant Roller Relay. The tasting session will be offered in the Midland Hilton Ballroom. It will feature live music and a cash bar. Admission is $15 and proceeds benefit Meals on Wheels. The event will showcase food from 20 area restaurants and organizations including The Bagel Wheel, The Bar, Baskin-Robbins, Black-Eyed Pea, Casita Gerardo, Chili's, Southwest Coca-Cola, Cookie Bouquet, Foods Fantastic, HEB Food Stores, Jazz, Luigi's Italian Restaurant, Mrs. Olsen's Coffee & Bookstore, On the Border, Outback Steakhouse, Santa Fe Grill, Schlotsky's, Susie's South Forty Confections, Wall Street Bar & Grill, and Zucchi's & Zucchi's Sports Grill.

The 1997 Meals-on-Wheel's Restaurant Roller Relay Race and the newly added Taste Session is a combined event sponsored by Community and Senior Services and area restaurants. The fundraiser benefits Meals-On-Wheels, a nutritional program that delivers meals to homebound elderly and disabled members of the community.

The event will kick off with roller race relays 9 a.m. Saturday in the ClayDesta parking lot with rollerblading for children 10 and younger. At 9:30 a.m. the recreational race for teen-agers and adults will take off.

At 10 a.m. the main race, a relay betwen restaurant teams will begin. The tasting session, from 6:30-9:30 p.m. in the Midland Hilton Ballroom will conclude Saturday's fundraiser.

SEATTLE, Wash. — Midland's John Denton stands in second place after the first round of the Professional Bowlers Association's Showboat PBA Seattle Senior Open Tuesday.

Denton trails Gary Dickinson after Tuesday's first round. Dickinson, seeking his second straight title, took the lead by 96 pins, averaging 244. Dickinson, who won his first title of the year last week at Beaverton, Ore., knocked down 2,203 pins in the first nine games, averaging 244.

Denton, winner of the 1996 Showboat Senior Invitational, was second with a total pinfall of 2,107.

Rounding out the top five were Larry Laub (2,062) and Skip Hintz (2,046).

Spring football

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. — Hoping to reduce injuries, the NCAA plans to revise its rules for spring football practice.

The proposed changes, which apply to Division I and II schools, are expected to be approved and take effect next spring.

The NCAA said Tuesday a study showed the risk of injury is two to three times higher during spring practice than during fall practice.

The new spring rules would allow:

—Three days of noncontact practices, with helmets only, including the first two days of practice.

—Four days of contact practices, full pads optional, with no tackling.

—Eight days of contact practices, with full pads, with tackling. No more than three of the eight tackling practices can be devoted mainly to 11-on-11 scrimmages, including a spring game.

Current rules allow 15 days of spring practice, of which 10 are designated for contact in full pads and five as noncontact in pads. Schools are allowed to determine how noncontact sessions are handled.

The proposed changes were developed by an NCAA committee, the American Football Coaches Association and the Collegiate Commissioners Association.

Houston's deadline

HOUSTON — Houston Astros owner Drayton McLane says the city and Harris County are running out of time in their efforts to come up with a way to finance one-third of a new downtown ballpark that will keep the team in Houston.

If Houston and Harris County aren't close to meeting the July 15 deadline, "definitely we'll ask for the opportunity to look at other cities," McLane told Houston television KRIV on Tuesday.

McLane has said the planned ballpark, which would feature a retractable roof, is a prerequisite for the Astros saying in Houston.

A referendum last November provided $180 million in public financing, more than two-thirds of what is needed for the $265 million ballpark project.

As part of negotiations for a 30-year lease on the new ballpark, the Astros, the county and the city have been trying to find ways to finance the remaining $85 million.

A letter of intent signed by all three sides had set the July 15 deadline, after which McLane could resume efforts to move the franchise.

Last year, McLane threatened to sell his team to a Virginia businessman unless Houston built a new stadium for the Astros. He agreed to stay after Major League Baseball officials made it apparent he would have to give Houston another chance.

Mike Tyson's boxing license could be revoked, "never to return," at a penalty hearing today that could keep him out of the sport indefinitely for biting Evander Holyfield's ears.

Banned or not: Tyson waits to see what future will bring

By Tim Dahlberg
AP Sports Writer

LAS VEGAS — Mike Tyson's boxing license could be revoked, "never to return," at a penalty hearing Wednesday that could keep him out of the sport indefinitely for biting Evander Holyfield's ears.

Tyson might walk away from the hearing with no boxing license and no idea when he will be allowed to fight again if Nevada boxing officials follow a recommendation from prosecutors.

A quirk in Nevada law and the desire by boxing regulators to fine Tyson the maximum allowed means his license could be revoked for good instead of simply being suspended by the Nevada State Athletic Commission.

Tyson would be able to reapply after a year, and once a year after that, but there is no guarantee he would ever get the license back.

"The license will be gone forever, never to return," said Joe Rolston, the deputy attorney general prosecuting Tyson. "The only way Mr. Tyson can get it back is to reapply every year and the commission will have to decide at that point."

Other states would be required by a new federal law to honor Nevada's revocation, meaning the profession that has made Tyson $140 million during the last two years could be in jeopardy.

"It's a very important decision and one each commissioner has to look to themselves to make," commission member Dr. James Nave said. "Suspension is suspension. Revocation is permanent."

Tyson is expected to personally plead for his boxing career when the

Hometown hero delivers

Alomar hits key homer, collects game's top prize

By Ronald Blum
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND — Ten months after his brother sent baseball to a lowpoint, Sandy Alomar reached one of the sport's highs.

It's time to finally forget about Roberto Alomar's spitting. Tuesday night's All-Star game will be remembered for Sandy Alomar's hitting.

"To do it front of the home crowd — it's a dream come true. It's everybody's dream," Sandy Alomar said after his two-run homer off Shawn Estes gave the American League a 3-1 victory and won him the game's MVP award.

"I'm in one of those zones. Everything you see looks like a beach ball," said Alomar, the first player to become an All-Star MVP in his own ballpark.

It's been an emotional week for the brothers, playing together in an All-Star game for the fourth time. Their grandmother, Tonee Valazquez, died last week at age 96 and was buried Monday at Salinas, Puerto Rico. They were black armbands in her memory.

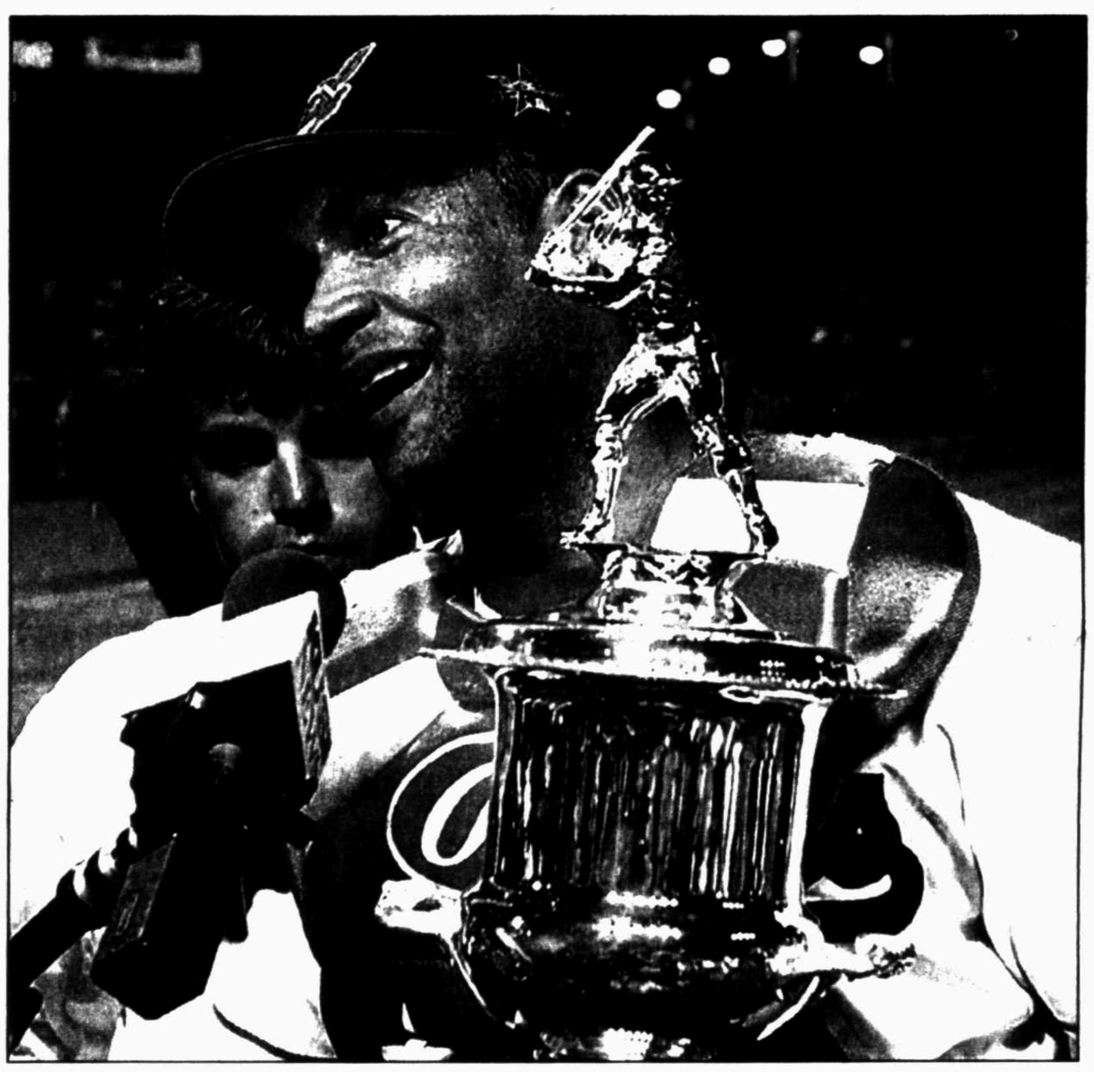

"This game was dedicated to her, the rest of the reason will be dedicated to her," Sandy said.

Sandy Alomar Sr. appeared in just one All-Star game, going 0-for-1 in 1970, a couple hundred miles across Ohio in Cincinnati. The brothers were in big leagues almost from birth, making them familiar to many of the old-time managers and coaches.

"It was pretty special because it was a kid you saw running around the clubhouse," AL manager Joe Torre said.

Alomar's parents were back in Puerto Rico for the

By Ken Berger

CLEVELAND — He didn't take a single swing in batting practice or play catch with his teammates. When it came time to join his fellow All-Stars in the team photo, Albert Belle blew that off, too.

Belle didn't play as the AL beat the NL 3-1 in the slugger's old ballpark Tuesday night. He didn't go onto the field for the postgame handshakes, either.

"He didn't say he wouldn't play," AL manager Joe Torre said. "He said he wouldn't feel comfortable playing."

Television cameras couldn't spot the Chicago White Sox slugger in the AL dugout late in the game. Milwaukee's Jeff Cirillo said Belle was in the there. "But I don't know about the whole game."

In the clubhouse, Belle sat at the same locker he used when he played for the Cleveland Indians and talked with his two favorite reporters — and no one else. When others approached, Belle glared at them and said, "Do you mind?"

An ESPN reporter and cameraman walked up to him, and Belle ignored them and walked away.

Later, he sat down at the table where he always used to eat after games. Cal Ripken appeared to be joking with him briefly. Belle, the only player eating, had a plate of food and the gallon of milk he always chugs after a game.

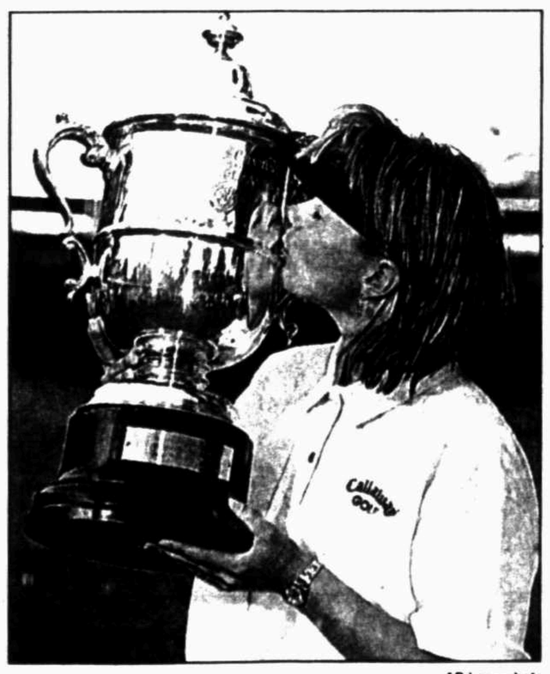

Belle, the former Cleveland player returning home as an All-Star, ventured onto the field for the first time a few hours before the game. Wearing a black T-shirt, he stood in short center field and chatted with a couple of teammates.

But when asked to stand against the left-field wall and say "cheese" for the team picture, Belle balked.

"Not me," he said, and walked off the field.

Belle, Cleveland's career home run leader, left the Indians and signed a $55 million, five-year contract with Chicago last fall. He was treated rudely when he returned to Jacobs Field with the White Sox last month, hearing boos and dodging heaps of debris and fake money. He homered in the first game, then flipped an obscene gesture to the crowd after the final Annika Sorenstam goes after an unprecedented third consecutive U.S. Women's Open with the confidence of a champion at the peak of her game.

Sorenstam's 'won't lose' psyche drives her to top of women's golf

By Ira Berkow
N.Y. Times News Service

The cool, composed, tanned young Swedish woman had just finished a recreational round of match-play golf with her husband at a country club in suburban Stockholm.

Her husband, who is good enough to be a scratch golfer, had won the match, 3 and 2. Near the green of the 18th hole, he penciled into the scorecard their strokes on the last hole and added the final result. The husband handed his spouse the card to sign.

"For what?" she asked, taking the card.

"For proof," he said, with a devilish glint.

The cool, composed, tanned young Swedish woman smiled, then took the scorecard and, with a look of burning satisfaction in her blue eyes, ripped it into little pieces.

David Esch, the husband of Annika Sorenstam, who will be trying this weekend for an unprecedented third straight victory in the U.S. Open, recalled: "Maybe it was better than when we play chess, and Annika loses. She gets so mad she knocks all the pieces off the board."

It is not every day that someone gets the better of Sorenstam, a 26-year-old who has risen swiftly to the top of women's professional golf. Although she is reserved and unruffled on the course, she has another side, one that is veiled by the image of Swedish stoicism.

"I can't stand to lose at anything," she said in a recent interview. "And I guess that's why I practice so much. If I'm having a problem with any part of my game, I'm at the course early and I stay late. I don't experiment with new stances and new grips, like some others do. I stay with what has worked for me, and I grind and grind and grind. What I've found is, life goes up and down. You have to keep sticking with it."

She has stuck with it so well that, with her smooth, sweet, precise swing — some critics, as well as, oddly, admirers, add "mechanical" — she has compiled the best record in golf, Tiger Woods notwithstanding.

Sorenstam has won four of the 13 LPGA tournaments she has entered this year, and finished second three times and third two other times. She is the leading money winner at $779,862, and since she joined the tour in 1994, she has won $2,382,157 — 18th on the LPGA career money list — and 15 tournaments, including those two U.S. Opens. She won the Vare Trophy for lowest scoring average on the tour two years in a row, and is leading this year with a 70.00 average.

In her last tournament, the Shop

Baseball legend Larry Doby watches kids play for the first time in the "Larry Doby All-Star Playground" at the King Kennedy Boys and Girls Club Tuesday in Cleveland. The playground is named after Doby, who became the American League's first African-American player fifty years ago.

Doby gives a forgotten neighborhood a chance

By Ken Berger
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND — Here was Larry Doby miles from the field, an overlooked ballplayer in a forgotten part of town.

He arrived at the Larry Doby All-Star Playground under the midday sun, the neighborhood kids converging to see what this old ballplayer was up to. A few hours before throwing out the first pitch in Tuesday night's All-Star game, which is dedicated to him, Doby gave some city kids all they could ask for — a few minutes of his time and a place to play.

"This playground is wonderful," said Doby, the AL's first black player, standing next to a monument bearing his name. "I hope you kids enjoy it."

Doby, the AL's honorary captain, fired a strike to Cleveland All-Star catcher Sandy Alomar for the ceremonial first pitch. Alomar jogged to the mound and handed Doby the ball, the former Cleveland outfielder smiling and waving.

Earlier, Doby helped open the first of five All-Star playgrounds in the Cleveland area. Shaped like a baseball diamond with a slide that dumps youngsters right on second base, the park is designed to bring the feel of baseball back to the inner city.

From East 59th Street and Woodland, not far from old League Park and the site of the Hough riots in the 1960s, Cleveland's baseball excitement and downtown revival seem far, far away.

"Besides him, I've never seen no others come through and do something for the kids," said Matthew Wright, 58, as he watched dozens of youngsters frolic in the new playground.

Doby became the AL's first black player when he pinch-hit for Cleveland on July 5, 1947. His debut came 11 weeks after Jackie Robinson played his first game for the Brooklyn Dodgers, casting Doby in Robinson's shadow.

While Robinson got an entire season dedicated to him, Doby was happy with one game. Fittingly, it is the All-Star game, in which Doby was the first black player to hit a home run.

"I'm deeply moved by all the attention being paid to me this week for something I did on a baseball field a long, long time ago," Doby said.

Acting commissioner Bud Selig, AL president Gene Budig and Cleveland Mayor Michael White praised Doby's accomplishments — in baseball and off the field.

"I said at the Robinson ceremony on April 15 in New York that the breaking of the color barrier was the proudest moment in baseball's long history. It was," Selig said. "Larry, today, I want to thank you on behalf of all of us. Baseball will forever be grateful and proud."

Doby strode along the perimeter of the playground, shaking hands and signing autographs. To open the ceremony, a youngster named Darnell Crutchfield sang the national anthem, his lilting voice a beacon of hope that spread through the streets like a breeze.

Doby went out of his way to shake the boy's hand and nod in appreciation.

Young and old clapped excitedly as they clutched the items Doby signed. A photograph, a T-shirt, a crumpled piece of paper.

"Laaaaa-ry Doby!" one woman exclaimed. "Ah, ha-ha-ha-ha!"

The multicolored slides and Indians flags stood out in the King-Kennedy neighborhood, where new apartment buildings are gradually replacing decrepit projects, and banners proclaim, "Rebirth of a Community."

Right across the street, there is a striking mural of Carl Stokes, the first black mayor of a major American city. Around the corner, the Cleveland Postal Station, Jesse Owens Branch, invites visitors with its smooth brick facade.

But there is still work to be done, as the rundown storefronts seem to plead.

With the help of major league baseball and the Indians, Doby turned a useless parking lot into a playground. Some $450,000 in proceeds from All-Star workout day will go to Doby's playground project.

"I hope that this city and cities across the country will continue to work together to make this a better place for all of us," Doby said.

Indians' fans say there's no comparison between '97 and '81 All-Star showcases

By John Affleck
Associated Press Writer

CLEVELAND — The last time the All-Star game was in Cleveland, baseball and the host city were both in the dumps and Jim Stamper wore an old, ratty Indians jersey to the game.

That was 1981.

In 1997, the Cleveland Indians are in first place in the AL Central, the city is vibrant and baseball is riding high on the success of interleague play. So Stamper thought he would celebrate by dressing up for the All-Star game.

Decked out in a red formal shirt and white tuxedo with a Chief Wahoo insignia sewn on the back, Stamper was one of thousands of Clevelanders happy to use the resurgence of their town and favorite sport as an excuse to party.

"I thought I'd get a little formal," said Stamper, who crowned his outfit with an Indians helmet that had a Chief Wahoo statuette fastened to the top. "We're in a new park, with the greatest fans and the first-place team. That's about it."

The 1981 game was played in Municipal Stadium on Aug. 9 at the end of a bitter players strike. As a city, Cleveland had a terrible reputation, having defaulted on its municipal debt less than three years before.

The 1981 game kicked off the second half of the strike-shortened season. Despite being played in front of the biggest crowd in All-Star history — 72,086 — fans who attended said there was no comparison between the atmosphere during the National League's 5-4 win and Tuesday's All-Star game.

"That was just a game. This is an event," said Scott Weltman, 33, who went to both All-Star games with his father. "After the strike, the '81 game was a big letdown. This year, they had a whole week of activities. All the people, the media and the hype in the city is much greater."

Cleveland fans got an extra treat Tuesday night when Indians catcher Sandy Alomar Jr., who's in the midst of a 30-game hitting streak, hit a two-run homer in the seventh inning that lifted the American League to a 3-1 victory. Alomar was selected the game's MVP.

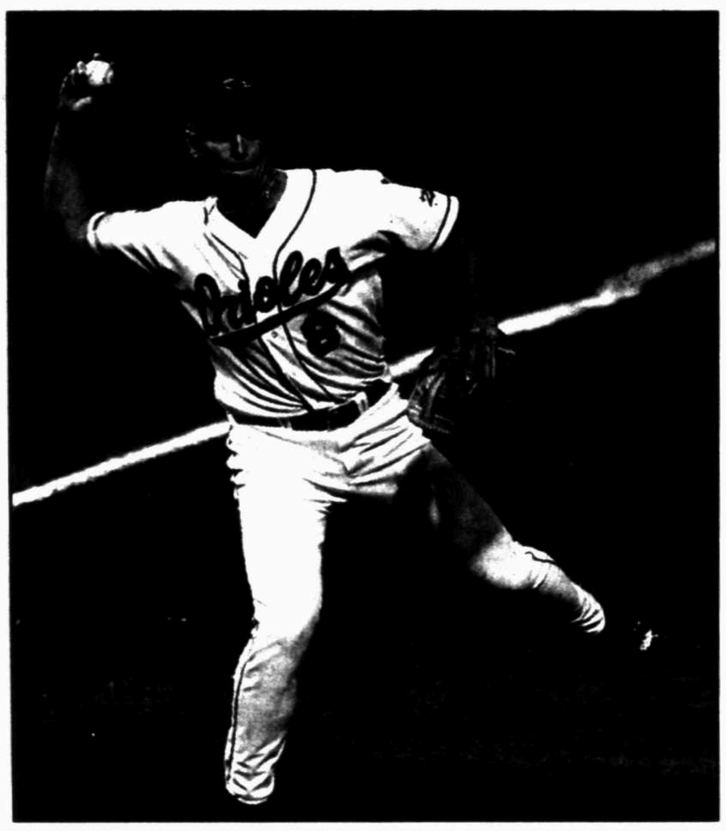

"It was like dessert, like eating a hot fudge sundae," said Billy Eger of Wickliffe.

Bob Moore, a retired businessman, said that 16 years ago it was tough to recruit professionals to come to Cleveland because the reputation was so bad. Now people want to work here because of a revitalized downtown, he said.

Stellar defense decides taut Mid-Summer game

By Joe Kay
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND — Cal Ripken showed he can still pick it at a different position. The other guys around him did a pretty nice job, too.

The American League demonstrated Tuesday night that the bottom line in baseball doesn't change in the All-Star game. Pitching and defense win regular-season games and All-Star versions, too.

The National League managed only three hits — one a homer by Javy Lopez — as the American League churned out a 3-1 All-Star victory the old-fashioned way.

While Sandy Alomar provided the most crowd-pleasing moment with his game-winning homer and Randy Johnson provided the signature moment by throwing a pitch over Larry Walker's head, the AL's pitching and defense decided the 68th All-Star game at Jacobs Field.

The AL took hits away with swift glove work, throttled the NL's best hitters with its pitching and took advantage of a huge NL miscue.

The glove work wasn't as spectacular as Alomar's shot, but it proved the difference right from the start.

There was second baseman Roberto Alomar — Sandy's brother — diving to steal a hit from Craig Biggio with a runner on first in the third inning. Bottom line: NL doesn't score.

Ripken, who made a reluctant move to third base from shortstop this season, took two more hits away in the fifth as the NL's futility grew. He made a backhanded stop on Ken Caminiti's grounder and threw him out, then charged Jeff Blauser's weak grounder and made a barehanded catch and throw to nail him.

Finally, Joey Cora ranged deep into right field to grab Tony Gwynn's grounder and throw him out in the sixth.

Bottom line: another zero on the board.

The NL's best rally of the game also got snuffed out by defense. With Barry Bonds on third and Mike Piazza on first base and one out in the fourth, Piazza tried to advance on a ball that bounced in front of catcher Ivan Rodriguez.

Bad move. Rodriguez recovered quickly and threw him out.

And, once again, the NL was dead.

Johnson throws Walker his 'Krukball'

By Tom Withers
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND — Randy Johnson didn't start Larry Walker off with a fastball, curve or even a slider. He threw his Krukball.

Johnson, who fired a fastball over John Kruk's head in 1993 at Baltimore, gave Walker the same treatment Tuesday night in the second inning of the All-Star game at Jacobs Field.

Walker, Colorado's sweet-swinging right fielder, had been criticized for ducking Johnson when the Rockies played the Mariners earlier this season. Both players were repeatedly asked about their non-matchup in the days leading up to the All-Star game, and Johnson had said he might "take a bag of tricks" with him to the mound to face Walker.

When the two were separated by 60 feet, six inches in the second inning, Johnson sailed his first pitch high over Walker's head, hitting the screen behind home plate on the fly.

Fans who recognized Johnson's intent laughed as did the other All-Stars in both dugouts.

"It was one of those things," Walker joked. "It must have slipped out of his hand."

Four years ago, a shaken Kruk had playfully reacted to Johnson's wildness by lightly patting his chest over his heart before stepping back into the batter's box. He eventually struck out, but became part of All-Star lore.

Walker, too, had fun with Johnson. He turned his batting helmet around and stepped across the plate to bat right-handed for one pitch against the imposing 6-foot-10 Johnson.

"It was a spur of the moment thing," Walker said. "I thought it'd be fun."

It was indeed.

"It was kind of humid out there," Johnson said sarcastically. "The ball just slipped out of my hand. I guess it was kind of apropos that it slipped while Larry Walker was up. I wish I didn't walk him. Hopefully, things will be different the next time I face him."

After going back to the left side, Walker walked but was stranded when Ken Caminiti hit into a fielder's choice.

Kicking tobacco habit not easy for All-Stars

By Ken Berger
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND — The All-Stars appeared to be doing their best to avoid using tobacco during Tuesday night's game, though it wasn't easy.

The players' union asked their members to refrain from chewing, dipping and spitting during the game. Union head Donald Fehr agreed to go along with the request suggested by Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J.

"There is no rule," Fehr said. "It's up to each player. They're adults."

Though it wasn't mandatory, most dippers said they would comply.

"I think they went about it the right way," Atlanta's Chipper Jones said. "You really shouldn't be doing it in front of the fans."

Ah, there's the catch.

"I'm not going to dip on the field," said Milwaukee's Jeff Cirillo as he sat in the AL clubhouse. "I'm going to dip now."

Others loaded their lips with non-tobacco substitutes. And while players like Jones and Craig Biggio of Houston weren't seen using tobacco on the field, they still couldn't do without the secure feeling of a dip can nestled in their back pockets.

Jones acknowledged that he had a can in his pocket during batting practice — but stressed that he's moved down to a milder brand.

"It's really no different than chewing a Life Saver," Jones said.

Such thinking sends former major leaguer and broadcaster Joe Garagiola into a frenzy.

"I know it!!! It's addictive!!!" said the enthusiastic Garagiola, who leads a campaign to get spit tobacco out of baseball. "I'm going to go talk to him right now."

Garagiola visits major league clubhouses and tells players that spit tobacco is addictive and responsible for mouth cancer. He says big leaguers who use it are just inviting kids to join them.

Garagiola favors banning tobacco in the sport and grand-fathering in the rule, the way batting helmets were made mandatory in 1952. He said asking players not to chew for one game isn't enough.

"It's progress, but it's like a band-aid on brain surgery," Garagiola said. "If the senator really wants to help us, then Senator, join in. Join us in the trenches."

All-Star players and coaches agreed with Garagiola that it's difficult to kick the habit for good.

Cleveland Indians manager Mike Hargrove had been dipping since his playing days. He said he quit in February and now uses a tobacco substitute called Mint Snuff to help him stay off the real stuff.

funeral. They didn't give their sons too many details about the funeral, not wanting to take away their concentration from the game.

"I'll call home tonight. I probably won't have to say anything," Sandy said. "My mom will do all the talking. My dad won't say much."

Maybe this finally vaulted him past his brother into baseball's spotlight. While Sandy has the famous first name, until now Roberto has had the flashy talent.

Roberto is the eight-time All-Star, the high-priced free agent, the best second baseman in the game.

Sandy, while a steady catcher, was overshadowed until this year on the Indians by Albert Belle and Kenny Lofton, bypassed as an AL starter since 1992 because of the overwhelming ability of Texas' Ivan Rodriguez. Since becoming a unanimous AL Rookie of the Year in 1990, Sandy hadn't made it through a season without a trip to the disabled until last year.

"I play hard every day," Sandy said. "I give everything I got. If I get hurt, I get hurt."

He has a 30-game hitting streak, the longest in the major leagues in eight seasons, just three short of the record for catchers. He became the first Indian to homer in an All-Star game since Rocky Colavito in 1959.

And he did it before the fans who adore him night after night. Not since Hank Aaron in Atlanta in 1972 had a player homered in an All-Star game in his home ballpark.

The homer came in his one and only at-bat.

"Paul O'Neill turned to me and said, 'If all things were fair, Sandy would hit a homer here to win the ballgame,'" Indians manager Mike Hargrove said. "Two pitches later, he did it."

Alomar, who has 11 homers this season, was surprised he became the AL's big power supply. Originally picked for Monday's Home Run Derby, he backed out in favor of teammate Jim Thome, a late addition to the team.

"I believe I'm not a home run-hitting hitter," Alomar said. "The only reason they invited me to be in the home run-hitting contest was that David Justice was injured and Jim Thome wasn't named to the American League All-Stars at that time."

Last year's All-Star game belonged to Mike Piazza, who hit a 445-foot homer. This year it's Sandy Alomar taking the star turn.

Pitchers may be struggling in the 1990s. Catchers are shining brighter than ever.

out.

During All-Star introductions, Belle was roundly booed again. He raised two hands to the crowd — a contrast to the gesture he made last time.

Cleveland All-Stars Sandy Alomar and Jim Thome were next, and were showered with loud cheers. So was NL All-Star Kenny Lofton, traded from Cleveland to Atlanta in March. Lofton smiled and waved his cap to the fans. One waved a sign that said, "We miss you, Kenny!"

"I think if you treat people the way you expect to be treated, they'll treat you that way back," Lofton said. "I didn't show them disrespect."

Apparently still miffed at Cleveland, Belle went out of his way to avoid everyone in this All-Star return. He declined an invitation to the Home Run Derby and was the only player to miss the All-Star workout on Monday.

"I'd rather just sit and shoot the breeze with the guys," Belle told the Chicago Tribune, seeming to indicate he never intended to play. "I'll save myself the hassle. Then I don't have to deal with the village idiots for a few innings."

After the June 3 incident, the Indians closed the left-field patio for the final two games of the series. It was open for the All-Star game.

But baseball's security staff was ready to converge on the patio and bleachers in case Belle, a left fielder, got into the game.

"We redeploy people," said Kevin Hallinan, baseball's executive director of security. "We have a plan. When certain things happen, we move."

After walking out on the team picture, Belle returned to his locker and found a few reporters talking with his twin brother, Terry.

"It seems like the fans' love for my brother has turned to hate very quickly," Terry Belle was saying.

Then Albert arrived, grabbed his brother and said, "Let's go. You don't need to worry about that."

Albert Belle had it all under control by himself.

Baseball's realignment committee discusses return to four divisions

■ Texas and Houston could find themselves in same division if radical changes go through.

By Ronald Blum
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND — Kansas City could switch to the National League, and baseball's eight Pacific and Mountain time zone teams could be grouped together if the sport switches back from six divisions to four next year.

As many as 14 teams could change divisions and leagues next year under the most radical of the plans discussed Tuesday by baseball's realignment committee.

"The major objective is to put teams together geographically so that it would enhance the rivalries," said committee chairman John Harrington, the chief executive officer of the Boston Red Sox.

With the addition next season of Arizona to the NL and Tampa Bay to the AL, baseball's current plan calls for two 15-team leagues in 1998 with three divisions in each.

But Harrington said owners might change to a 16-team league and a 14-team league, with two divisions in each. In that scenario, Anaheim, Arizona, Colorado, Oakland, Seattle, Los Angeles, San Diego and San Francisco may be grouped in a "Pacific" Division.

"It's a longshot. It's a stretch. But it's possible," Harrington said on the field prior to the All-Star game.

Among other possibilities:

— Montreal, Toronto and Detroit could be grouped together in a "Northern" Division.

— Houston and Texas could be grouped together in one division.

— Florida and Tampa Bay could be placed into the same division.

"We have two or three alternatives that we're push-pulling on," said Harrington, who intends to telephone clubs later this week to discuss the viability of his committee's latest ideas. He hopes to hold another committee meeting in about 10 days and a special meeting of all owners late this month or in August.

Baseball had two divisions in each league from 1969-93, then switched to three divisions in 1994 with a wild-card team advancing to the playoffs in each league along with the division winners.

Harrington said that if teams go back to two divisions in each league, the most probable scenario would be to have the division winners advance to the postseason along with two wild cards in each league.

Harrington, faced with an Aug. 1 deadline for presenting next year's schedule to the players' association, said he still hopes to convince the Arizona Diamondbacks to switch from the NL to the AL next season.

Owners voted in January to put Arizona in the NL and Tampa Bay in the AL. While the Diamondbacks are a natural fit in the NL West, the executive council's initial plan to put the Devil Rays in the AL East was blocked by the AL. That plan called from Detroit to move from the AL East to the AL Central and the Royals to move from the AL Central to the AL West.

Next year's tentative schedules have Tampa Bay assigned to the AL West, a situation owners want to avoid. Under some plans under discussion, the Diamondbacks would be in the AL West and Tampa Bay would be in the AL East.

If Kansas City shifted to the NL Central, the Royals would have a natural rivalry with St. Louis. Houston then could move to the NL West and have an interleague rivalry with Texas, and Detroit could fill the Royals' spot in the AL Central.

Houston said in recent weeks it was not interested in moving to the AL West, but the Astros might change their minds as part of a complete realignment.

Arizona owner Jerry Colangelo has said he would veto an attempt to put his team in the AL, but his veto power runs out after the 1999 season. He said Tuesday he might approve a switch if owners attempt major moves.

"I'm totally open to and supportive of a major realignment," Colangelo said. "That would definitely be in the best interests of baseball. That helps with rivalries and television and time zones and travel."

Harrington, who said realignment might be a two-stage process in 1998 and 2000, said owners may ask the players' association for another delay in completing the 1998 schedule. The union already has granted a postponement from June 30 to July 31.

"We would like to present the 1998 schedule to teams by late August, early September, so teams can begin their marketing for 1998," he said.

Owners spoke Tuesday with the New York-based polling firm Penn, Schoen & Berlaind about the possibility of conducting fan surveys and focus groups on realignment.

Angels doomed after Tulsa's six-run inning

Staff Report

TULSA, Okla. — A six-run fourth inning by the Tulsa Drillers doomed the Midland Angels to a 7-3 loss Tuesday at Driller Stadium.

Midland starter Rob Bonanno shut the Drillers out for three innings and held a 2-0 lead before everything went downhill in the fourth. Fernando Tatis led off the inning with a double and capped off the scoring with another double for an RBI, chasing Bonanno (3-5) from the game. Between Tatis' doubles, there were three other hits, three walks — including one with the bases loaded — and two errors which didn't figure into the scoring, making all the runs earned.

In all, Bonanno allowed seven hits in his three and two-thirds innings. He struck out and walked four each.

Jonathan Johnson (2-2) picked up the win for Tulsa, lasting seven innings and allowing seven hits and three walks while striking out three. He gave up three runs, all earned.

Midland fell to 13-10 in the second half and trails El Paso, a 5-3 loser to Shreveport, by one game in the Texas League Western Division. Tulsa improved to 9-11.

The Angels took a very quick lead when leadoff man Jed Dalton hit Jonathan Johnson's first pitch of the game for a home run. The Angels made it 2-0 in the top of the fourth when Aaron Guiel and Jamie Burke singled and Guiel scored on a groundout by Bret Hemphill.

The Drillers padded their lead to 7-2 in the bottom of the sixth. Cesar Morillo reached on a well-placed bunt single and eventually scored on Dan Collier's single.

The Angels scored a run in the top of the seventh, but the Drillers escaped further damage with double play. Kevin Young and Tim Harkrider had back-to-back singles, but Jason Herrick grounded into the double play before Keith Luuloa's single scored Young.

The Angels will send Fernando De La Cruz (1-1, 2.08 ERA) to the mound at 7:35 tonight against Tulsa's Jim Brower, who is 2-11 with a 5.61 ERA, although he earned one of his victories against the Angels.

ANGEL NOTES: Former Midland Angels pitcher Matt Perisho has been sent down to AAA Vancouver from Anaheim. Perisho was 0-2 with Anaheim. The lefthander started the season in Midland, and his 2.96 ERA is still third in the Texas League.

Four Midland teams in hunt

Midland has four teams still fighting for the championship of the Major League (11-12-year-old) District 3 All-Star Baseball Tournament after Tuesday's games.

Midland Northern and Midland Eastern will face each other in the winners' bracket finals at 7 p.m. today at Bluebird Park. In two losers' bracket games, Midland Tower will play Odessa North Ector and Midland North Central will face Odessa Floyd Gwin. Those games also will be played at 7 p.m. at Bluebird Park.

Midland Northern got to the winners' bracket finals by outlasting Odessa North Ector, 1-0, in 10 innings. The game was scheduled to go six innings.

Midland Eastern made the winners' final with a 6-5 victory over Odessa Floyd Gwin.

Midland North Central advanced in the losers' bracket with a 7-6 win over Midland Mid-City, and Midland Tower moved past Odessa Jim Parker, 6-5.

Further details from Tuesday's games were not available.

Monday's games featured all losers' bracket action from the tournament and some big performances kept Midland teams alive. In Mid-City's 7-6 win over South Odessa, Josh Wilson had a home run and combined with Shane Wright and Ryan Rowland for a two-hitter. Wright also added two doubles for Mid-City.

Midland Tower rode a four-hit, nine strikeout performance from Josh Garcia to a 11-1 win over Big Spring National. Ryan Huddleston went 3-for-4 with two doubles, and Joe Aylor also went 3-for-4 with a double.

Midland North Central stayed alive with a 7-4 win over Greenwood. Josh Bronstad fanned eight batters to pick up the win while Greenwood's Dawson Wilbur and Tyler Odgen had doubles.

In the other game, Tate Casey of Odessa Jim Parker had a grand slam home run and all five Odessa RBIs in the 5-2 win over El Paso Frank Manning.

Midland teams to Winners' final

ODESSA — Two Midland teams, Midland Eastern and Midland Tower, advanced to the winners' bracket final of the Minor League (9-10 year-old) District 3 All-Star Tournament held at Sherwood Park.

Midland Tower defeated Midland Mid-City Red 10-5 to earn its spot in today final. Midland Eastern won its game in shutout fashion, 6-0 over Big Spring American.

Jacks set to sign tenth player

The Odessa Jackalopes have agreed to terms with Matt Johnson, who will be the tenth player signed by the Western Professional Hockey League expansion team.

Johnson played last season for the Tallahassee Tiger Sharks in the East Coast Hockey League, and he was one of the top scorers for that team. He is a native of Millis, Mass.

Johnson is expected to sign at a press conference Friday. The Jackalopes also will introduce the team's president and announce plans for the formation of a booster club.

Yates will drop Irvan from team after '97 season

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Ernie Irvan, who made one of auto racing's great comebacks after he was nearly killed in a crash three years ago, won't be driving for Robert Yates after this season.

Yates, owner of Robert Yates Racing, said Tuesday he is not renewing Irvan's contract, and the decision is his alone.

"I've worried and wrestled with it for more than a year and it's not a simple, one-answer deal," said Yates, who also fields Fords for Dale Jarrett in NASCAR's Winston Cup stock car series.

Irvan is 16th in the Winston Cup standings. Jarrett, who has two victories this season, is fourth.

"There comes a time in many relationships when the best course for the continued success of all parties is to follow separate paths," Irvan said.

The 38-year-old driver said he will announce his plans for 1998 "in the near future."

Irvan bought out the end of his contract with Morgan-McClure Racing late in the 1993 season to join Yates as a replacement for Davey Allison, who was killed in a helicopter crash earlier that year.

He got off to a strong start, winning twice in 1993 and taking three more wins and contending for the title in 1994.

In August of that year, Irvan crashed during practice at Michigan International Speedway and sustained critical brain and chest injuries. He was given only a 10 percent chance of surviving, but he recovered and rode for Yates in October 1995.

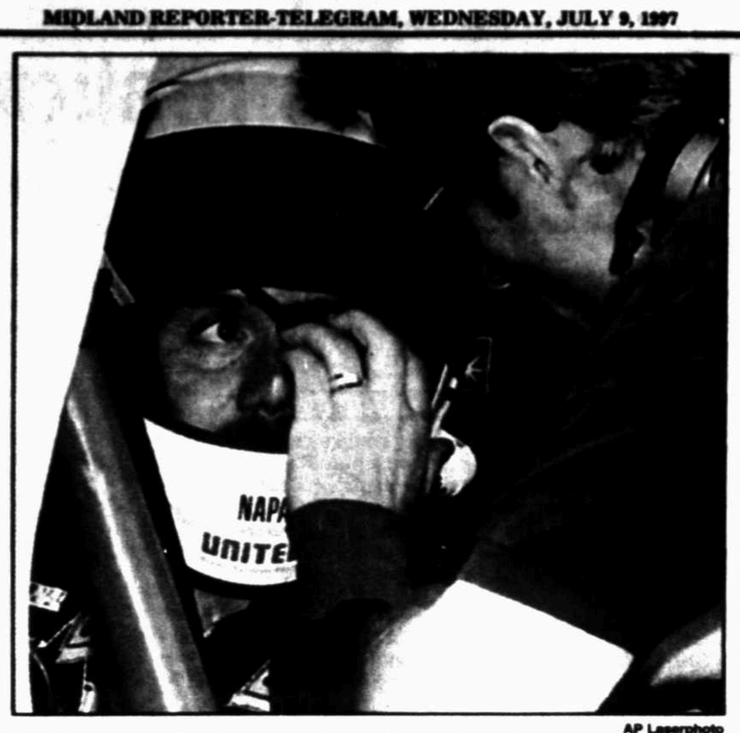

Meanwhile, Yates had hired Jarrett as an interim driver. When Irvan came back full time for the start of the 1996 season, he had Jarrett as his teammate.

Irvan made his comeback complete with a victory one year ago this weekend at Loudon, N.H. He also won later in the season at Richmond, Va., and again last month at the same Michigan track where he was badly injured.

"I think Ernie and this team have done some great things together," Yates said. "With his courage and determination, he achieved some things that not many thought possible."

Yates said he is not ready to discuss Jarrett's teammate in 1998.

"Right now, I want to concentrate on winning as many races as we can while Ernie's still driving," he said.

Lobo's winning streak ends after 102 games

By Mel Reisner
AP Sports Writer

PHOENIX — Even in individual sports, few athletes have had longer winning streaks than Rebecca Lobo's.

She went 102 games without a loss. Then came Monday night when her New York Liberty were beaten 69-50 by the Phoenix Mercury of the WNBA.

"She's a winner," said Nancy Lieberman-Cline of the Mercury. "I mean, Magic Johnson won a championship in high school, won one at Michigan State and won championships in the NBA.

"But to do what she's done over the last three to four years at that level and not lose ... show me somebody else who's done that."

In a losing locker room for the first time in three years, Lobo, a consummate team player, wanted no part of talk about her.

"It just feels awful to lose, streak or no streak," she said. "We wanted to be 8-0. My streak never crossed my mind until you guys started mentioning it. I wasn't worried about it. Right now, all I want to do is start another streak."

Lobo's junior season at Connecticut ended with a loss to North Carolina in an NCAA regional final on March 26, 1994. The streak started with Connecticut's first game the next fall.

By the time the season ended, Lobo and the Huskies were 35-0 and national champions. She then played on the the U.S. national team that won 52 straight. She won eight more in the Olympics and took the Liberty to a 7-0 start.

On Monday night, Lobo, a 6-foot-4 forward-center, missed seven of 11 shots, including her three attempts from 3-point range, and finished with eight points. She had five rebounds after pulling down 35 in the four previous games.

Lobo did not go to the free throw line in a game in which 54 foul shots were attempted. She was so frustrated by the tripping and fouling she picked up a technical foul early in the second half.

She declined to comment on the officiating, saying any criticism would just increase the fine for her technical.

"I said a curse word, and I deserved to get it," she said. "I lost my composure, and that was wrong."

Tent Sales at '99 Ryder Cup show golf's boom

Wire Reports

WESTON — The business of golf is booming like a Tiger Woods tee shot, and The Country Club in Brookline will reap some of the riches. The 57 corporate tents for the 1999 Ryder Cup Matches at TCC have been sold out for more than $15 million.

These staggering figures were released yesterday at Weston GC as representatives of the PGA of America met with general chairman John M. Cornish and his committee plus two members of the media over lunch.

The Ryder Cup jackpot is in contrast to the 1988 US Open at The Country Club, when 33 corporate tents were sold at a top figure of $12,500. For 1999, two tents are going for $500,000, six for $325,000, and the remaining 49 for $250,000 (100 tickets per day). This adds up to $15.2 million. The cost includes the tent, tournament access — 250 tickets per day for each top-priced tent, 150 per day for the next level, and 100 per day for the rest — and an audio-visual setup. Food and beverages are extra.

The tents were scooped up within a six-month span a full 26 months in advance of the event. "We tried to get the word out," said Cornish. "I'm sure there are some disappointed companies because they didn't purchase a tent."

The 57 tents will be clustered in three locations. The main one will be between the first and 18th fairways. There will be tents to the left of the 17th fairway where the ABC-TV compound was set up in 1988. The third village will be next to the 12th hole of the US Open course.

There is little doubt that the advent of Woods has generated an outpouring of interest in the game. The PGA of America also recognized the marketability of the Ryder Cup in the Greater Boston area, and the PGA Championship will be at The Country Club in 2005 as part of a package arrangement.

The PGA of America works out its own arrangement with the host clubs regarding where the $15.2 million will go. There will be a limit of 25,000 daily tickets for the three-day competition between teams from the US and Europe, and NBC has a contract to televise the Ryder Cup through 2005.

Citicorp says it will offer Jack Nicklaus Credit Card

NEW YORK — Citicorp said it will offer a platinum Jack Nicklaus Visa credit card in an alliance with Golden Bear Golf Inc.

Citibank, a unit of Citicorp, is selling the card with Nicklaus' signature across the front in the hopes of attracting golfers. It's the latest "affinity" card to try and connect consumers' leisure interests with their credit card.

The card will feature a sketch of a golf hole designed by Nicklaus and give users a chance to buy products from Golden Bear. Monthly statements for the card, which will be issued by Visa International, will include golf tips from Nicklaus, Golden Bear's chairman.

Zabel wins Tour's third stage

PLUMELEC, France (AP) — Erick Zabel won the third stage of the Tour de France, and Tony Rominger is through racing in cycling's showcase event.

Rominger, the Swiss veteran competing in his last Tour de France, broke his collarbone and severely cut his right leg Tuesday when a group of riders fell and will miss the rest of the race.

Zabel of Germany won the stage and Mario Cipollini of Italy held the lead and the yellow jersey by finishing 25th for the day.

The spill came with almost six miles left in the 139-mile run from Vire to Plumelec.

"The road sometimes was too narrow," Cipollini said. "It's difficult not to fall."

Rominger, looking stunned, sat on the ground for minutes getting medical treatment before being put on a stretcher and taken to a hospital in Vannes.

The 36-year-old cyclist was one of the top riders in the early 1990s but faded the last two years. He was second in the 1993 Tour of France behind Miguel Indurain. He won the Tour of Spain three times and the Tour of Italy once. He finished 10th in last year's Tour de France.

This year he replaced Lance Armstrong on the French Cofidis team when the Texan was diagnosed with testicular cancer last September.

ANNIKA: Sorenstam moves sisterly feelings aside when reaching first tee

(From 1C)

Rite in Somers Point, N.J., in June, she led for much of the way, only to lose, 201-204, to Michelle McGann.

Regardless, Sorenstam is favored to repeat at the Open, which begins Thursday at the Pumpkin Ridge Golf Club in Cornelius, Ore. If she does, she will become the first person, male or female, to win three consecutive Opens since Willie Anderson in 1905. "Everyone has been eclipsed by Annika at the moment," said Laura Davies, a veteran star of the tour.

Sorenstam's style is perfectly suited for an Open course with its deep rough. She may not be the longest driver on the women's tour, but she is one of the straightest. And her irons and putter are equally dependable weapons.

And if Sorenstam wins, one of those other 143 competitors she will have beaten — again — will be one particular rookie on the tour, her younger sister by 2 1/2 years, Charlotta, or Lotta, as she is generally called.

The driving competitiveness of both, and the nature of the golf tour, has affected their relationship. There is no open hostility, but there is, to be sure, a divide. They rarely speak to each other. Annika believes it stems from Charlotta although, she says, she may be guilty of some indiscretions. "If you ask me, it's Charlotta's problem," she said, "but I'm sure if you ask her, she'll say it's Annika's problem. But I love her dearly, and I wish her the best. But we are both so competitive. And we don't hang out with the same people. In fact, I don't hang out much at all. I'm more to myself. She's more open."

When Annika Sorenstam talks about her sister, she does so with undisguised pride. "Everybody says she's more talented than I am," Annika said. "But this is her first year on the tour and she's just learning how to play the courses, and she's learning how to make adjustments in travel and the other things that make up a professional golfer."

They were paired together in a round at the Evian tournament in France last month, a tournament neither won, and Charlotta finished five strokes better than Annika, 3 under par to her sister's 2 over par.

"We talked a little on the course," Annika recalled. "It was cordial, but not too deep. You know, where are you staying? How do you like it? But remember, that wasn't our focus. Our focus was to win the tournament. And one way to do it was to beat each other."

At the Shop Rite tournament, the two, along with Annika's husband and Charlotta's fiance, Robert Claesson, went to dinner. "It was pleasant," said Esch, Annika's husband. "What I see is two different people who care deeply about one another, but who have grown apart over the years. It's not uncommon. I've got brothers, and for the most part we've gone our separate ways, too."

The separation began some nine years ago, when Annika, at age 17, left Sweden to attend the University of Arizona, where she became an all-America golfer and the college player of the year. A few years later, Charlotta left Sweden for the University of Texas, where she also became a National Collegiate Athletic Association golf champion. Later, they both played on the European golf tour. So their careers followed similar, but wholly individualistic, paths.

They both began as tennis players but both later gravitated to golf. Annika said she was "burned out" of tennis at age 16, and Esch said that she never quite conquered the backhand stroke. Both sisters had the same coaches while on the Swedish national golf team, Pia Nilsson and Henri Ries. "They're both on the road trying to win tournaments, and so it's understandable how Annika's success has created a greater distance between the two," Esch said. "Now Charlotta has been thrown into the limelight where Annika has made her mark so decisively. And Charlotta's trying to make her own mark. And it's been difficult.

"For one thing, at first glance they bear a strong physical and facial resemblance. They're both blonde, both about the same height — Charlotta's an inch taller — both dress conservatively, and they even have some similar mannerisms, like the way they toss their hair back.

"And people are always going over to Charlotta and either asking about Annika, or even calling her Annika. You can imagine how tiresome that gets. Justin Leonard shoots a 64 in a tournament the other day and everyone was asking him about Tiger Woods. Justin said, 'Hey, I just shot a 64, ask about that!' And Charlotta gets that to the fifth degree regarding Annika."

One of Charlotta's goals this season is to win the award as top rookie, which Annika won three years ago. So far, Charlotta's best LPGA finish is a tie for 10th. She is 69th on the earnings list, at $60,069, and second to Lisa Hackney in the running for rookie of the year.

The Sorenstams' parents were to travel from Sweden to watch their daughters play this week. Earlier this year, Tom Sorenstam, their father, told Sports Illustrated: "I really hope we don't have to talk about the strain their relationship is under at the moment. I'm not sure why this is so, but maybe it's because Charlotta is feeling pressure for all the attention Annika has gotten. They haven't been good friends lately."

Annika, who was married to Esch last January, said her husband has helped bring harmony to her life. A staff member of the Callaway Golf equipment company, Esch has lessened his duties there but remains a consultant. He helps her with travel and endorsements and other administrative essentials that would have taken energy and concentration from her golf game. And it is relaxing, she said, to retire for a week or two (as she did in the week preceding this year's Open) to their new home in Lake Tahoe, Nev.

Marriage, she said, has given her a perspective on golf she never quite had before. "Golf is now second in my life," she said. "It used to be first, and almost nothing else was second. I used to eat and sleep golf 24 hours a day. Before, if I bogeyed a hole, I felt my whole life was a bogey. And if I had an eagle, I'd be in the clouds. And there is still hardly anything like the thrill of walking to the 18th green with victory in your grasp and the crowd cheering.

"But with David, my life is now more balanced. I'm still low if I have a bad round, but at least I know that he still loves me." She smiled. "Or I think so. I hope so. I don't want to try it, though."

MLS, Women's World Cup have their day

■ American soccer made the most of the spotlight with big announcements on the day before the MLS All-Star Game.

By Barry Wilner
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — American soccer spent Tuesday promoting its future as the MLS and the 1999 Women's World Cup got down to some specifics.

Major League Soccer, which previously announced it would expand to Miami and Chicago next year, introduced the Miami team's name: the Fusion. The team plans to play in the Orange Bowl.

"Miami is known for its multinational makeup," said Kenneth Horowitz, who will operate the Fusion for MLS. "Soccer is a world sport. We look for a unification of Miami and the various makeups of people with the people who play and watch soccer."

The Fusion unveiled a logo of a sun with 12 rays radiating from the center, one ray for each club that will play next season.

Horowitz's group paid $20 million for the franchise; the league's original 10 teams paid $5 million each.

That, said MLS commissioner Doug Logan, is another indication that the league is prospering.

"Play on the field has improved dramatically, TV ratings are solid, support from sponsors is unparalleled" and a new television contract with ABC and ESPN is not far away, Logan said.

"It's the process of staying the course. The horizon is so far away, we have to be patient. We want to have a league that our children and grandchildren can enjoy."

Logan, speaking a day before the league's All-Star game, said next year's game will be played Aug. 2 in Orlando, Fla. It will be part of a four-day "extravaganza" at Disney's Wide World of Sports. The game will be played at the Citrus Bowl.

Wednesday's game in East Rutherford, N.J., will feature U.S. national team regulars Alexi Lalas, John Harkes, Cobi Jones, Eddie Pope and Marcelo Balboa, plus international stars Roberto Donadoni, Carlos Valderrama, Marco Etcheverry, Digital Takiwara, Alain Sutter and Jorge Campos.

FIFA WOMEN'S WORLD CUP 1999

World Cup Women's Logo

Seven members of the D.C. United, the defending league champion, will lead the East against a West squad featuring six players from the Dallas Burn.

Two hours before the MLS made its announcements, organizers of the '99 Women's World Cup unveiled the event logo. Created by Duffy Design of Minneapolis, it features a blue, ponytailed female player in five poses: about to kick the ball with her right foot; heading the ball; trapping; trying a bicycle kick; and a goalie making a two-handed save above her head.

"With this logo, we have captured the history and pageantry of World Cup soccer and the grace and beauty of the women's game," said Marla Messing, president of the 1999 tournament.

The women's event will be staged in June and July, featuring 16 nations. Most of the first-round games will be a part of doubleheaders. No sites have been named.

According to U.S. Soccer Federation and World Cup sources, the tournament budget will be about $15 million.

"We've got two years," USSF secretary-general Hank Steinbrecher said. "The crowds (for the current women's European Championship) certainly haven't been encouraging. But today's announcement for this logo was better attended than the announcement for the 1994 World Cup in Los Angeles.

"The marketing, the sponsorships, that's the easy part. The hardest job is going to be getting fans in the seats. That's where we've told the organizing committee to concentrate."

The World Cup committee also appointed Logan to its advisory board.

Coyotes sign All-Star to free-agent contract

Associated Press

PHOENIX — The Phoenix Coyotes signed free agent forward Rick Tocchet to a three-year contract Tuesday, adding the kind of physical, high-scoring forward sought by general manager Bobby Smith.

Free Agent Notes

"This guy has been a captain, this guy has won the Stanley Cup," Smith said. "He's a big-time player, no question about it. I've never been his teammate, but from what I hear he's the type of guy who admonishes players for not putting out in practice and admonishes coaches for not being prepared."

Tocchet has a history of back problems, but Smith said new Coyotes coach Jim Schoenfeld, who coached Tocchet the final 13 games of last season, told him Tocchet always answered the bell in Washington.

"The risk of Rick Tocchet is his injury background and the fact that he just turned 33, but he's a superbly conditioned athlete. Our doctors were amazed at the condition he was in," Smith said.

No salary details were released, but the four-time All-Star played for $2.18 million last season and decided against an option year with the Washington Capitals for about the same money.

Smith said the Coyotes basically paid what Tocchet was asking and were glad to beat out other clubs.

Tocchet has scored 20 or more goals nine times in 13 seasons and is one of only four players in league history to score over 300 goals and incur 2,000 penalty minutes.

He, Tiger Williams and Al Secord are the only players to score 30 goals and have 300 penalty minutes in the same NHL season. Tocchet, a 6-foot, 205-pound right wing, had 31 goals and 301 penalty minutes in 1987-88.

The signing reunites Tocchet and Schoenfeld, who lobbied for his acquisition.

Schoenfeld will have to decide whether to use Tocchet with left wing Keith Tkachuk and center Jeremy Roenick on a formidable No. 1 line, or to strengthen the line of Cliff Ronning and Craig Janney.

"He's clearly a guy who'll be among our top six forwards," Smith said. "We feel that it was a rare opportunity for a team at our level to add a guy who can step into your first or second line."

Philadelphia drafted Tocchet in the fifth round in 1983, and he played 7 1/2 seasons with the Flyers before they traded him to Pittsburgh. He also played for Los Angeles and Boston, which traded him to the Capitals last March 1 as part of a seven-player deal.

Tocchet had five goals and five assists with Washington to cap a strong finish which saw him score 18 points in his last 20 games.

He has reached the Stanley Cup finals twice, scoring the winning goal against Montreal in 1987 to help the Flyers win the Wales Conference, and leading the Penguins in finals scoring when they won the championship in 1992.

The next season, he set career highs in goals (48), assists (61), points (109) and games played (80).

Leafs signs another free agent

TORONTO — Interim general manager Bill Watters, temporarily in charge of the Toronto Maple Leafs while the club seeks a permanent replacement for the fired Cliff Fletcher, signed his fourth free agent in five days Tuesday.

Goaltender Glenn Healy, an unrestricted free agent from the New York Rangers who was being wooed by the Montreal Canadiens, agreed to a contract reportedly worth $3.9 million over three years.

Healy joins the Maple Leafs on the heels of forwards Kris King (from Phoenix), Derek King (Carolina) and Mike Kennedy (Dallas).

But while Watters has strengthened a team that finished 23rd overall in the NHL last season, he's not sure if he'll be around to enjoy the fruits of his labor.

Watters is currently working without a contract and doesn't know if he'll be retained when a full-time general manager is hired. He's interested in the job, but new team president Ken Dryden has given no indication that Watters is a serious candidate — although the two talk daily about Toronto's offseason restructuring and free agent moves.

Brunell sets deadline for contract extension; Steelers get new kicker

Associated Press

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — The time frame for the Jacksonville Jaguars to work out a new contract with quarterback Mark Brunell has been cut by six weeks.

League Notes

Brunell, who became the first player since Johnny Unitas to lead the NFL in passing yards and rushing yards by a quarterback, has told his agent to close contract talks when training camp opens July 20.

His agent, Frank Bauer, previously indicated talks would cease when the season opened Aug. 31.

"That's his call," Bauer told the Florida Times-Union. "As soon as camp starts, if nothing is done, he is focusing on the season. It will be out of his mind."

Brunell, whom the Jaguars acquired two years ago in a trade with Green Bay, emerged as their starter during the 1995 expansion season, then led the Jaguars to the AFC Championship game against New England.

He is in the final year of a three-year contract, which pays him a base salary of $1.2 million this year.

Without a contract extension, the Jaguars likely would place the franchise label on Brunell, which would keep him from becoming a free agent.

Jacksonville would have to pay him the average salary of the top five quarterbacks in the league, but Brunell would lose out on a big signing bonus.

"We and the Jaguars have every reason to get a deal done before training camp, but it won't happen if we don't bridge our differences," Bauer said. "We've talked about parameters, but there are still some philosophical differences."

Bauer said extensions from four to six years have been discussed, and he said some progress has been made.

In the meantime, Baeur has arranged to increase the value of a Lloyd's of London policy on Brunell if a contract extension is not signed.

Steelers sign kicker Chris Jacke

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Steelers on Tuesday signed free agent kicker Chris Jacke to replace Norm Johnson, who refused to take a pay cut from his $650,000 salary. Terms of Jacke's deal were not released.

Johnson was waived.

Jacke, 31, was an unrestricted free agent who has played the past eight years with the defending Super Bowl champion Green Bay Packers. But in April, the Packers drafted Penn State kicker Brett Conway and told Jacke they were no longer interested in him.

Jacke scored 820 points for the Packers, three shy of the team's record. He made 21-of-27 field goals last season and finished with 114 points, sixth in the NFC.

Jacke has made 55 percent of field goal attempts of 50 yards or longer in his career, the highest percentage of any kicker in the NFL.

Johnson, 37, signed with the Steelers as a free agent in 1995. He replaced longtime kicker Gary Anderson and set the team's record in 1995 with 34 field goals and 141 points.

RULING: Tyson finds out what's coming today

(From 1C)

commission meets in a packed City Hall council chambers.

"I only ask that this not be a lifetime ban," he said last week.

The proceeding could take less time than the fight itself, which lasted three rounds, or could drag on for a few hours, depending on how Tyson's attorneys handle his defense. Commission members limited television coverage to a single pool feed and issued media credentials in an effort to control the meeting.

"I guarantee you it will not be a circus," commission chairman Dr. Elias Ghanem said. "I will not allow it."

Holyfield, now touring South Africa, said earlier that a year's ban from boxing wouldn't be enough for the bites Tyson inflicted on him in the richest fight in history.

"Most boxers only fight one time a year," Holyfield said. "He (Tyson) probably needs a year off to get himself better anyway. He probably needs the rest. The penalty is probably going to have to be a little more extensive than that."

Tyson is not legally required to appear, but Rolston said he expected Tyson would show up to try to convince commissioners not to revoke his license.

"I have every reason to believe he probably will be attending," Rolston said. "Even if he pleads guilty we'll still have a few questions to ask him. And if he decides to defend himself on the charges, we'll put him on the stand and he will be subjected to numerous questions."

Tyson has already admitted biting Holyfield's ears before being disqualified June 28 during their WBA heavyweight title fight.

The commission basically has two options: Suspend Tyson for up to five years and fine him a legal maximum of $250,000, or revoke his boxing license — a move that allows a maximum fine of $3 million.

"I don't think a suspension is a viable option because of the difference in the amount of money the commission can fine Mr. Tyson," said Donald Haight, the commission's legal adviser. "I think most commissioners feel a $250,000 fine is really a mere pittance when you're looking at a $30 million purse."

The five commissioners have been tight-lipped about their intentions, saying they will wait to hear from Tyson and his attorneys before deciding what to do.

Nave, one of the most influential commissioners along with Ghanem, said there has been no pressure from Tyson's camp or promoter Don King. But the veterinarian said everyone who brings an animal into his office wants to know what he will do.

"Every client that walks in wants to talk about it," Nave said. "I tell them we've got a job ahead, and what's wrong with your dog?"

It will be the second time in five years that the 31-year-old Tyson finds his future in the hands of a group of people who will decide his fate.

Unlike February 1992, when he was convicted of raping Desiree Washington, however, Tyson will not do time this time. He served three years in an Indiana prison and is still on probation.

That prison sentence, though, seems to have affected his boxing abilities, and an indefinite license revocation could erode those skills further at an age when heavyweight boxers generally begin to decline.

"I don't think you will see the same Tyson again," veteran trainer Angelo Dundee said. "His skills will definitely erode. They already eroded during his time in prison."

It is possible Tyson could still fight overseas while trying to get his license back, but because he's on probation he may not get permission to leave the country.

Fighting overseas might also be seen by the boxing commissioners as thumbing his nose at the penalty.

Public opinion, meanwhile, is still running against Tyson.

The athletic commission said that by a 3-1 margin a heavy flow of letters and faxes were calling for stiff penalties for the former champion.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ You need to push hard at work. You have a lot to do, and are challenged to the utmost. A different point of view comes your way; stop and listen. Not only do you benefit from the interchange, you feel more in control. Family supports you. Tonight: Go shopping.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ Creativity is high. Financial discussions open up doors for you. Listen to an authority figure. Come from a solid space. Reach out for another, and discuss what is going on. A flirtation could develop into a lot more; relationships warm up. Tonight: Be naughty and nice!
GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Home life becomes a priority. Building greater financial security could cause a domestic change. A partner, when approached, agrees with you, and doesn't put up a fight. At last, you see eye-to-eye! You finally are able to get your way. Tonight: You are happy at home.
CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★★ Don't worry so much or stand on ceremony. Initiate a discussion that is long overdue. Brainstorm about work or a new moneymaking option. Stay positive, even if a major overhaul is needed. Use some of your ideas to further your plans. Tonight: Visit friends.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Your more possessive side emerges with a family member or domestic matter. Your ideas charge a relationship. Flirtation kindles strong feelings, whether you are single or attached. Share views, and let a door open. Instincts are on about money. Tonight: Indulge away!
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ When you put your best foot forward, you tend to get what you want. Consider changes, accent what is positive and be more anchored. You are intuitive about what a family member wants. Mull over a domestic decision. Tonight: You are happy as a clam.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Take a back seat when it comes to a boss. He wants to be in the limelight, with your undivided attention. Instincts are right about what is going on behind the scenes. A conversation hits you like a bolt of lightning. Know that there is a rainbow. Tonight: Make it an early night.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ You have reason to glow. Much that you have been working for comes together. Emphasize success. Financial bonuses come from accepting even more work responsibility. Yes, you are a star! Read between the lines, and go for what you want. Tonight: Be with the gang.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Take a stand; you are in the spotlight. Observe nuances, be more direct and avoid unnecessary conflict. A partner's assets prove to be helpful professionally. Listen more often to the drumbeats. Question, and reach out for answers. Tonight: Count on a late night.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ Your determination is more than clear with a partner. Be willing to adapt to necessary financial changes. You feel somewhat pressured by a partner. Stop a moment, and take a personal inventory before reacting too strongly. Tonight: Go to the movies.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♡	Pass	3♡	Pass
4♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠

Most endplays involve two or more suits. But it is possible to endplay an opponent in one suit only, as this hand from the British Team Trials illustrate.

North's jump raise to three hearts was on the borderline between a forcing and invitational raise. No matter which treatment North-South were employing, the South hand was worth bidding game and no more.

West led the king of spades, then shifted to a club, taken in dummy. The problem was easy to spot — to make the contract declarer had to hold the diamond losers to two. That presented no problem if the suit broke 3-2. But it was also possible to land the contract if the suit was 4-1 as long as one of the defenders held a singleton honor — an 80 percent probability.

Declarer drew trumps in two rounds, ending in dummy. A spade was ruffed in hand, the table was entered with the remaining high club and the queen of spades was ruffed to complete the elimination of the black suits from the North and South hands. Now a low diamond was led.

If East was allowed to win the trick, the forced black-suit return would allow declarer to discard a diamond from one hand while ruffing in the other. To avoid that, West rose with the king of diamonds to swallow partner's queen. But this technique, known in the trade as a Crocodile Coup, was to no avail.

West could not return a black-suit either. And whether West elected to lead a low or a high diamond, declarer would lose only one more trick in the suit. Try it.

Ivana, Trump are back in same boat, separated from their new spouses

NEW YORK — Ivana Trump and The Donald are back in the same boat — separated from their new spouses.

The 48-year-old businesswoman said it was her decision to seek the separation from Riccardo Mazzucchelli, 54, despite his telling the National Enquirer that he dumped her.

"In fact, the exact opposite happened, but I will not be drawn into a public debate about my private life. ... I have always maintained my dignity and silence," she said in a statement Monday.

Ivana, as she prefers to be known, said she is trying to work out her differences with Mazzucchelli but was saddened by his tabloid interview.

Mazzucchelli claimed he lavished more than $5 million on Ivana during their 20-month marriage.

Ivana was married to Trump, the casino and real estate developer, for 14 years before his affair with Marla Maples led to their divorce. Trump subsequently married Maples, but they split up two months ago.

Ivana Trump says it was her decision to seek a separation from Ricardo Mazzucchelli.

LAS VEGAS — Debbie Reynolds, who played the unsinkable Molly Brown on screen, sank too much money into a hotel venture and had to file for bankruptcy protection.

The Chapter 11 filings Monday by both the actress and the Debbie Reynolds Hotel & Casino came two months after a $16.8 million deal to sell the company fell through. Reynolds, 65, is stepping down as chairman, but Todd Fisher, her son from her first marriage to Eddie Fisher, remains chief executive.

Debbie Reynolds files for bankruptcy protection.

Fisher said the hotel will stay open and Reynolds, who returned to the screen last year in the Albert Brooks film "Mother," plans to continue her nightclub act there.

The 193-room hotel has been losing millions of dollars a year. It features a museum filled with movie memorabilia, but lacks a prime location on the Strip and its casino was forced to close in March 1996.

LAS VEGAS — Having a museum in the shape of a 100-foot-tall glass Coca-Cola bottle wasn't attention-getting enough for the soft drink company. It added a blast from the past, The McGuire Sisters.

Before opening two floors of the attraction on the Strip to the public for the first time Tuesday, Coke had Phyllis, Dorothy and Christine McGuire appear at a fireworks extravaganza Monday night.

The museum features black-and-white television clips of the trio hawking Coke in a 1959 commercial.

"This brings back a billion memories," Phyllis McGuire said.

The museum, accessible through an elevator in the glass bottle, also has exhibits on the company's history and 1,000 Coca-Cola bottles in a fountain that pulses to music.

LOS ANGELES — A former lead singer of Motley Crue claims in a lawsuit that the heavy metal band dumped him and badmouthed him rather than paying him for his work.

John Corabi worked on an album released in 1994 and was replaced when the band's original lead singer, Vince Neil, returned.

Corabi is seeking at least $4 million from drummer Tommy Lee, guitarist Mick Mars, bassist Nikki Sixx and Elektra Entertainment. He contends he was a victim of fraud, slander and breach of contract.

Corabi claims Lee, Mars and Sixx promised he could stay even after Neil came back in September. Instead, he said, he was fired in March and band members told the media he couldn't handle pressure.

Months before that, the band had stopped paying him, leaving him "nearly destitute" and living off loans, Corabi said in the lawsuit filed Monday.

An Elektra Records spokesman declined to comment, and publicists for the band did not return calls.

Prices recover

NEW YORK — Oil and other energy prices rose Tuesday on speculation that a report due after the close of the New York Mercantile Exchange would show limited supplies.

Crude for August delivery settled at $19.73 per barrel, up 21 cents. Unleaded gasoline for delivery in August rose 0.98 cent a gallon to settle at 58.92 cents.

Investors drove up prices after Iraq said it would not propose an oil-for-food plan Tuesday that could put its crude supplies back on the market.

August heating oil was up 0.22 cent at 53.00 cents a gallon.

Natural gas fell, with contracts for delivery in August down 4.8 cents to $2.116 for each 1,000 cubic feet.

After the Nymex closed Tuesday, the American Petroleum Institute reported its weekly inventory figures. Crude oil stocks rose 4.7 million barrels to 322.7 million last week. Gasoline supplies fell 137,000 barrels to 204.1 million, while stocks of distillates, including heating oil, rose 11,000 barrels to 115.9 million.

Refineries were operating at 95.6 percent of capacity, down from 96.9 percent the previous week.

Dollar stronger

NEW YORK — The dollar hit a new 3 1/2-year high against the mark and rose in most other currency dealings Tuesday, helped by a surge in the pound and verbal boosts from Japan's top two finance officials.

The dollar touched an intraday high of 1.7617 marks, the strongest since February 1994, before settling in New York at 1.7613 marks, up from 1.7521 Monday. The dollar settled at 112.87 yen, up from 112.77 yen Monday and its first gain in a week.

The pound's broad rally came from data showing an unexpected acceleration in Britain's inflation rate, boosting prospects that the Bank of England will raise interest rates at its policymaking meeting on Thursday.

Sterling's strength boosted it to a 6-year high of 2.9770 marks and left it higher against most other currencies, indirectly helping the dollar. Against the dollar itself, sterling reached an intraday high of $1.6970, the strongest since January, before settling at $1.6886 in New York, unchanged from Monday.

Other dollar rates in New York, compared with Monday: 1.4660 Swiss francs, up from 1.4610; 5.9350 French francs, up from 5.9056; 1,713.00 Italian lire, up from 1,706.00; 1.3743 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3767.

Koch cutbacks

WICHITA, Kan. — Koch Refining Co. announced Tuesday that it will cut about 450 jobs, or 25 percent of the work force, at its oil refineries in Corpus Christi, Texas, and Rosemount, Minn., over two years.

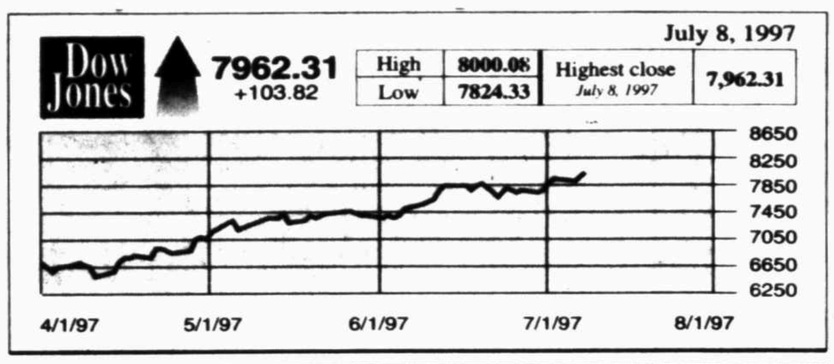

The restructuring initiative, designed to make the refineries more competitive, also includes an investment of $100 million in processing and information management equipment at each refinery, the company said.

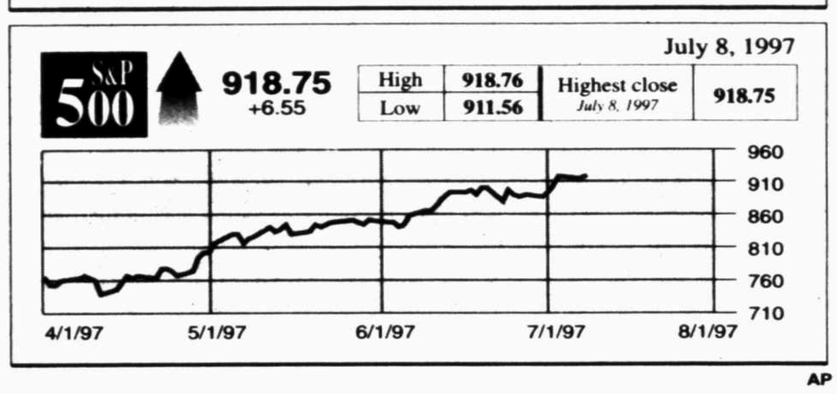

At the Corpus Christi refinery, the number of employees will go from 1,100 to 800, while the Rosemount refinery will drop from 750 to 600 employees.

The reduction will affect all levels, including management. Employees will be offered a voluntary severance package that includes outplacement counseling, severance pay, job search assistance and financial counseling.

Dow Jones index rolls toward 8,000

AP

■ Industrial Average climbs 103 points to 7,962.31.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Dow Jones industrial average jumped within 40 points of 8,000 Tuesday as investors ushered in the quarterly profit-reporting season with an enthusiastic vote of confidence.

The Dow rose 103.82 to 7,962.31, the first close above 7,900 for the famed barometer of 30 big companies. The Dow, which topped 6,000 in October and 7,000 in February, has already risen 23.5 percent in 1997, more than double the return many experts predicted for the entire year.

Broad-market indicators also set new highs, rallying into the close after posting more modest gains for much of the session.

With no major economic data scheduled for this week until Friday's reading on wholesale prices, the market's focus shifted to the early trickle of company profit reports for the just-ended second quarter.

"We've had quarter after quarter of earnings that have exceeded expectations, and that has driven the market," said Robert Freedman, chief investment officer for the John Hancock Funds in Boston. He added that last week's economic news has eased market jitters about inflation and interest rates considerably.

"The market psychology has obviously gone from being vulnerable and worried about every (economic) number to confidence that the earnings coming out will be positive, and that that can be translated into higher stock prices," said Freedman.

International Paper, one of the first bellwether companies to weigh in with its results for the April-June period, surged 4 15/16 to 56 1/8 as one of the Dow's biggest gainers. In addition to beating analyst forecasts, the world's largest paper producer announced plans to cut costs by eliminating 9,000 jobs, or 10 percent of its work force.

Technology shares, meanwhile, posted sizable gains for the second straight day as investors bet on a strong profit showing from that pivotal sector.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by a 3-to-2 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume was heavy at 525.65 million shares.

The Standard & Poor's 500-stock list rose 6.55 to 918.75, and the NYSE composite index rose 2.94 to 478.49, enough for both to beat Thursday's record highs.

The Nasdaq composite index rose 14.36 to 1,485.10, its fourth straight record close. The American Stock Exchange composite index rose 2.14 to 634.11, just 0.23 shy of Thursday's record finish.

Car insurance down payments may be cut

■ Goal is to make insurance more accessible to lower-income Texans.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Texans who pay their auto insurance in monthly installments could have get down payments and more time to pay the balances under a rule Insurance Commissioner Elton Bomer is considering.

About 14 million Texans are licensed drivers. Roughly 25 percent in Mexico-border areas, and 20 percent in other regions, are uninsured despite a state law requiring at least liability insurance.

Bomer and Texas Department of Insurance officials say hefty down payments and sizeable monthly payments contribute to the problem. The department couldn't say how many Texans choose monthly payments over single payment options.

"A lot of people have to make decisions about purchasing everything — insurance, refrigerators, televisions — based on down payment, how much the monthly payment is going to be and how many monthly payments there are," Bomer said Tuesday.

Under the proposed rule, insurers could require down payments for up to two months' coverage. They currently can charge down payments up to 40 percent on a six-month policy and 25 percent on 12-month policies.

The proposed rule also would require insurers to spread premium balances over five equal monthly payments for six-month plans and 11 equal monthly payments for 12-month policies.

Balances currently can be collected in three months for six-month policies and eight months for 12-month policies.

Bomer said reducing down payments and extending payment periods would help some Texans.

But D.J. Powers, head of The Center for Economic Justice, said the proposal would do nothing for people who have no access to insurance. The center has accused major insurance companies of refusing to offer insurance in certain parts of the state, a practice called "redlining."

"If an insurer is not willing to offer that coverage, it doesn't matter if the down payment is 25 percent or 50 percent," he said.

Rob Schneider, another consumer advocate, called the proposal a "little bitty first step."

Texas Insurance Commissioner Elton Bomer pauses at the conclusion of a hearing Tuesday in Austin. After hearing testimony, he is considering lower down payments for Texans who pay for automobile insurance in monthly installments.

GE bets $1 billion on Montgomery Ward

■ GE Capital feels cash infusion will safeguard its credit card business, loans to retailer.

N.Y. Times News Service

CHICAGO — GE Capital said it expects its $1 billion infusion will resuscitate Montgomery Ward Holding Corp., safeguarding the finance company's lucrative credit-card business and $900 million in loans to the bankrupt retailer.

General Electric Co.'s financing arm, which gets $200 million in annual pretax profit from Montgomery Ward's credit cards, is helping craft a plan for the retailer to emerge from the Chapter 11 protection it sought Monday. Montgomery Ward Chairman Roger Goddu, hand-picked by GE, is expected to close or sell stores and stem losses by focusing on its top-selling appliances and mattresses.

GE Capital in the second quarter wrote off $100 million of its 50 percent equity investment in Montgomery Ward, which it helped take private in 1988 through a $3.8 billion leveraged buyout. The finance unit is trying to salvage a rare misstep in its investment portfolio, which accounted for 43 percent of its parent's first-quarter profit.

"We're voting with our wallets," said GE Capital spokesman John Oliver. "We feel strongly this is a turnaround situation."

GE Capital may be tossing good money after bad, analysts said. Chicago-based Montgomery Ward, one of the nation's oldest and biggest retailers, has failing stores in bad locations and has fallen far behind competitors such as Sears, Roebuck & Co.

Its sales fell $627 million the past two years and it expects to lose as much as $450 million in 1997 — almost double the $249 million loss last year. Even reorganizing doesn't ensure its long-term viability because there are too many stores competing for fewer customers, analysts said.

"Wards has lost its reason for being," said Kurt Barnard, president of Barnard's Retail Marketing Report. He said he expects the retailer to close and liquidate after Christmas.

GE Capital will absorb about $50 million of the retailer's operating losses each quarter, analysts said.

No matter what happens to Montgomery Ward, though, the effect on General Electric will be minimal, analysts said, given its vast capital and variety of businesses.

GE has made a business of making money by taking risks. While plenty of other companies have financing arms, few have extended beyond financing their own products as has GE Capital.

The unit, with $33 billion in annual sales, has become one of the fastest-growing parts of General Electric by financing things from truck manufacturers to bank receivables to airplanes.

"GE shareholders will never see a hit to the bottom line," said Nick Heymann, an analyst with Prudential Securities. "They have the deep pockets to ride this out."

He said he expects Montgomery Ward to emerge from bankruptcy in 12 to 14 months and could even return to profitability by 1999.

GE Capital has reasons for keeping the retailer afloat. One is Montgomery Ward's $5 billion credit-card business, which GE bought after the buyout. About half the retailer's customers use the credit cards.

GE Capital told the federal bankruptcy court in Wilmington, Delaware, that it may not provide all of a proposed $1 billion in bankruptcy financing if its rights to the credit-card business are affected by the bankruptcy.

Closing too many Montgomery Ward stores could hurt the credit-card business because those sales would decline, said Barry Bryant, an analyst with Rodman & Renshaw.

A smaller credit-card business also would hurt the value of Montgomery Ward's Signature division, which gets half its revenue from the credit card and half from insurance and auto clubs and other businesses.

The retailer said it is close to a definitive agreement to sell Signature to HFS Inc. for an undisclosed price. Signature, which wasn't included in the bankruptcy filing, could fetch $1 billion, people close to the talks have said.

Consumer borrowing slows in May

■ Debt burden no longer growing faster than income.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In another sign of moderating economic growth, the expansion of Americans' debt burden slowed in May, held back by the sharpest contraction of auto borrowing in nearly five years.

Consumer debt outstanding rose at a 2.9 percent seasonally adjusted annual rate to $1.21 trillion, following increases at a 9.7 percent rate in April and a 2.7 percent rate in March, the Federal Reserve said Tuesday.

Economists said the report provided more evidence that consumers took a breather after a spending spree early in the year that powered first-quarter economic growth to a decade-high 5.9 percent annual rate. And it shows lenders are becoming more conservative in the face of the continuing rapid growth in personal bankruptcies, they said.

"Consumer spending has certainly flattened. ... We've also seen indications credit-card lenders are becoming more stringent in view of the increase in personal bankruptcies," said economist Sandra Shaber of the WEFA Group in Eddystone, Pa. "If you put consumer caution and lender caution together, it (the slowdown in debt growth) is not surprising."

Separately Tuesday, Visa U.S.A. said personal bankruptcy filings in federal courts in June were up 16.6 percent from a year ago. Though a large increase, it represents a significant slowing from the first five months of the year, when year-to-year gains averaged about 25 percent.

The credit-card company had been predicting a 29 percent increase in bankruptcies this year, but with the June figures, it cut the projected increase to 19 percent. Nevertheless, that would push bankruptcies to a record 1.33 million.

The slowdown in borrowing means consumers' debt burden is no longer growing faster than their income, said economist Lynn Reaser of Barnett Banks Inc. in Jacksonville, Fla.

"That's a healthy development for the sustainability of this recovery. ... A continued increase in the debt burden would increase the fragility of the recovery and make it more susceptible to a downturn," she said.

Mr. Gatti's Pizza opens new restaurant, game room

By Mella McEwen

Opening its doors today at 614 Wadley Ave. is MR. GATTI'S PIZZA.

The Mr. Gatti's at 3205 W. Cuthbert has been closed.

McEwen

The new restaurant is divided into two sections — Mr. Gatti's and the Gattiland playroom.

The restaurant seats 540 and has three big-screen television rooms, one showing sports, the fun flicks room that shows cartoons, and the third showing regular television programs. There is also a 70-item salad bar and all-you-can-eat pizza, pasta and soup buffet daily. Children aged 11 and under eat free on Mondays and Tuesdays.

Take-out and free delivery are available.

There are party rooms that can be booked for private parties or business meetings. Special birthday party packages area available.

The Gattiland gameroom holds 90 games and an adult-ride bumper car rink.

Hours are 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily.

The COMET CLEANERS at 2606 N. Midland Drive and at 3108 W. Cuthbert Ave. have reopened under new management.

Comet Cleaners Corp. of Arlington bought back the building, materials and equipment from the previous owner, and two Midlanders, Burt Fisher and Jim Dillow have arranged to lease the stores and manage them.

Fisher promised that the two would be hands-on management partners and be on-site at all times.

He said both stores have been completely renovated and are staffed by new employees.

Comet Cleaners offers dry cleaning, laundry and alteration service. Same-day service for laundry is available if brought in before 9 a.m., same-day dry cleaning is available if brought in before 11 a.m. Both locations have drive-through windows.

Hours are 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday.

MIDLAND PARK MALL has unveiled its MALLPeRKS program, which allows frequent shoppers to earn discounts at participating mall stores and on national merchandise and vacation packages. The new program will also feature special offers and discounts from retail and entertainment outlets in the Midland Park Mall/Permian Basin area.

Shoppers can buy MALLPeRKS memberships for $5 from the Black Gold Harmony Chorus this weekend at the top of the Food Court and in Center Court. Members then earn points for every dollar spent at the mall, which can be redeemed for discounts of up to 30 percent on in-mall merchandise, travel and entertainment. Shoppers can earn and redeem points at any Simon DeBartolo Group mall in 33 states.

Also at the mall, CREATIVE EXPRESSIONS, photographer, will be in front of Musicland until Saturday.

AT&T LONG DISTANCE SERVICE will be located in front of Bath & Body-works beginning Friday through Aug. 10.

There will be a mall-wide sidewalk sale Friday through Sunday.

The Westside Lions Club will operate the train this weekend.

On the move is BABY BIZ, which is now located at the former New Castle Gap Jewelry location at 4703 N. Midkiff Road. The business was formerly located at 3303 N. Midkiff Road.

Owned by Laurie Sargent, the new location — almost double the size of the former store — will allow for an expanded line of maternity clothes and baby items. Ms. Sargent hopes to carry toddler clothes next spring.

The approximately 30-month-old store carries maternity clothing, baby furniture and bedding accessories and baby needs from towels to clothes to safety items.

Hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

HOW TO READ THE MARKET IN REVIEW

Here are the 1,675 most active stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, 925 most active on the Nasdaq National Market and 405 most active on the American Stock Exchange. Stocks in bold are worth at least $5 and changed 5 percent or more in price. Underlining for 50 most active on NYSE and Nasdaq and 25 most active on Amex. Tables show name, price and net change, and one to two additional fields rotated through the week, as follows:

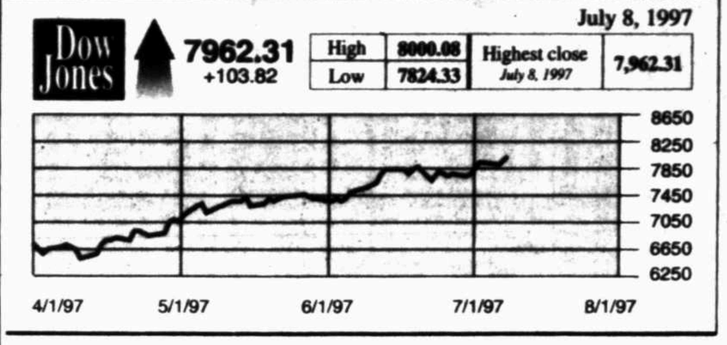

Name: Stocks appear alphabetically by the company's full name (not its abbreviation). Names consisting of initials appear at the beginning of each letter's list.
Last: Price stock was trading at when exchange closed for the day.
Chg: Loss or gain for the day. No change indicated by ...
PE: Price-earnings ratio. Derived by dividing closing price by company's earnings per share for the most recent four quarters.
PPE: Projected price-earnings ratio. Derived by dividing closing price by company's projected earnings per share for upcoming 12 months. PPE supplied by I/B/E/S, Institutional Brokers' Estimate System. Is a consensus forecast of all analysts following the company. Only companies with three or more analysts following them have a PPE.
How to use: In general, if PPE is lower than PE, analysts believe earnings will be going up. If PPE is higher, they expect earnings to fall. The numbers can be helpful in following stocks but as with all financial data are only one of many factors to judge a company by. Consult your financial advisor before making any investment decision.

Stock Footnotes: cc – PE exceeds 99. dd – Loss in last 12 months. d – New 52-wk low during trading day. g – Dividend in Canadian $. Stock price in U.S. $. n – New issue in past 52 weeks. q – Closed end mutual fund; no PE calculated. s – Split or stock dividend of 25 percent or more in last 52 weeks.
