Presidential poll

As presidential politics heat up, few things are certain, other than an abundance of surveys and polls measuring the relative appeal of the candidates.

Released Saturday, the latest nationwide poll by Time Magazine and CNN shows Perot ahead of Bush for the first time in a three-way race for president.

Do you think West Texans' opinions are the same?

Assuming George Bush, Bill Clinton and Ross Perot were all on the ballot, and the election were held today, for whom would you vote?

Let us know at the Reporter-Telegram Cityline COMMUNITY PULSE poll. Dial 560-2400, then choose category 7660 to register your vote.

Callers are invited to register their opinion as well as leave a comment on the candidate of their choice. In addition to Bush, Clinton or Perot, respondents also can vote for "other."

The survey lines will remain open until midnight Friday, and the results will appear in Sunday's edition.

Motor voter bill

WASHINGTON — With Democrats seeking higher turnouts at the polls, the Senate voted 61-38 Wednesday to make voter registration easier by allowing people to register by mail and as they renew their driver's licenses. Changes in voter registration and limits on campaign spending have been the subjects of some of the most heated and partisan debate in the Senate this year, as Republicans and Democrats jockey to exploit or duck the electorate's cynicism and anger./ 12A

No horsing around

HOUSTON — A joking patrolman learned not to horse around with jurors after a judge threatened a mistrial and the officer's boss chewed his hide. "I chastised him severely," Lt. Wayne Hankins said of the 20-year police veteran. "He didn't mean anything by it. It was an off-the-cuff remark. It's like telling an off-color joke that doesn't turn out to be funny." The officer, one of 15 patrolling downtown Houston on horseback, leaned down from his steed Tuesday to tell a woman wearing a juror's badge: "The word today is 'guilty.' " The unsmiling woman replied, "You're not supposed to tell me that."

Election confusion looms if 3-way race deadlocks

By Matt Quinn
Reporter-Telegram Washington bureau

WASHINGTON — The most anticipated report on Capitol Hill this week is not about the S&L scandal or urban enterprise zones.

The sought-after document is a still-unpublished Library of Congress study outlining procedures to be used if a deadlocked three-way race among President Bush, Bill Clinton and Ross Perot throws the 1992 election into the House of Representatives.

Under the 12th Amendment, adopted in 1803, the House chooses a new president among the three top finishers if no one candidate wins an Electoral College majority of 270 votes. The Senate elects a vice president

WASHINGTON — In a startling demonstration of electoral strength, Ross Perot captured a significant portion of Republican and Democratic votes in Tuesday's Oregon primary, according to interviews with voters leaving polling places, and he may have done the same thing in Washington.

Perot's exact totals are not known yet, because Oregon law does not require that write-in votes in primaries be counted, except in special circumstances, and in Washington, where the primary was a popularity contest unrelated to convention delegates, write-ins need not be tal-

Quayle shot at 'Murphy' stirs debate

■ Political sensitivity of issues raised by the vice president are immediately demonstrated.

By Jerry Roberts
N.Y. Times News Service

In barking the core ideological message of the Republican party, Dan Quayle in a San Francisco appearance on Tuesday was performing the vice-president's traditional campaign role of political pit bull.

In attacking the popular "Murphy Brown" television show, however, Quayle went well beyond the call of duty — rekindling a national debate over abortion, family planning and women's issues in a year when such subjects are particularly awkward for Republicans.

Although the flap over a TV sit-com heroine's decision to become a single mother at first glance appeared trivial, the political sensitivity of the issues raised by Quayle was immediately demonstrated.

Officers arrest 11 in 'stamp' sting

By Darren J. Waggoner

An undercover Midland Police Department drug investigation led to the arrest of 11 people Wednesday morning, including several area merchants, on charges of illegally possessing and selling food stamps. Another person is expected to be arrested today, authorities said.

Detectives first discovered the practice during a conversation with suspected drug dealers earlier this year.

"It was brought up that there appeared to be a market for the illegal food stamps during the course of the Police Department's drug investigation," said FBI spokesman Tom Kirspel. "They contacted us and we notified the Department of Agriculture ... the agency that administers the food stamp program. It was a joint sting operation between the three agencies."

Virginia executes murderer after failed polygraph test

JARRATT, Va. (AP) — Roger Keith Coleman, who gained international attention for his claims of innocence in the 1981 murder of his sister-in-law, was executed in Virginia's electric chair Wednesday night.

A doctor at Greensville Correctional Center pronounced Coleman dead at 11:38 p.m., prison spokesman Wayne Brown said.

Coleman, 33, had failed a lie-detector test earlier Wednesday, and Gov. L. Douglas Wilder refused to reverse his decision denying clemency.

Also Wednesday, the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals refused to block the execution, and the U.S. Supreme Court, in

Census: Quarter of Texans don't speak English at home

WASHINGTON (AP) — A quarter of the people living in Texas don't speak English at home, and almost half of those say they don't speak English very well, according to a new Census Bureau snapshot of the state.

Almost 4 million of the state's 16.9 million residents in 1990 spoke a language other than English at home, the Census Bureau said in a survey for release Thursday.

The survey, based on questionnaires mailed to 17.7 million U.S. households during the 1990 census, found that 44.5 percent of respondents said they don't speak English "very well."

Of the 3,443,106 residents who speak Spanish at home, 45.7 percent — or 1,575,652 — said they didn't speak English very well.

Council sets hearing on block-grant fund disbursement

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff writer

Social service and public support programs of more than $1.3 million will be vying for part of the city's $900,000 Community Development Block Grant this year.

Among them are senior nutrition, home cleaning, youth activities, street paving and housing support programs. At a public hearing Tuesday, local residents and program advocates will be able to give the Midland City Council their views of how the money should be spent.

"This is a chance for people to let us know what's needed out there," said Sylvester Cantu, city planner. "They can also tell us how we've been doing — in general or with specific comments — in the past."

The hearing begins at 7 p.m. at the Southeast Community and Senior Center, 1803 E. Indiana St. The building is in the heart of the south and east Midland CDBG target area.

CDBG money, from the federal government's office of Housing and Urban Development, must be used in the target area or to benefit low-income or disadvantaged citizens.

By the May 13 deadline for funding applications, 17 programs had submitted requests. The city is expecting a $856,000 grant this year — to be added to $49,000 in extra money to be reallocated — for a total of $905,000.

Last year's allocation of $871,600 received 18 requests for funding. Street paving took the largest single allocation last year with more than $250,000.

This year, no specific amount has been requested for streets although Cantu said the street commission has a running list of at least $300,000 in needed paving.

WEATHER SUMMARY

High chance of rain on tap

Today's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies with a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms, a high in the lower 80s and southeast wind at 10 to 20 mph. Tonight should be mostly cloudy with a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms and a low in the mid-60s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Friday should be mostly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high in the lower 80s.

After an overnight low of 62, Wednesday's high reached 82 compared with the record high for that date of 101 set in 1989. The record low for that date is 49 set in 1967.

STATE

Skies cleared Wednesday over sodden North Texas, allowing sunshine to dry things out a bit. However, rain continued over parts of East, South and West Texas.

A tornado touched down twice south of Olton in Lamb County on the South Plains. No damage or injuries were reported from the twister, which struck shortly after 1 p.m. and remained on the ground more than a mile.

NATION

Record low temperatures chilled a wide section of the Northeast on Wednesday morning, while a heat wave sent afternoon temperatures into the 90s in parts of the northern Plains.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

DEBATE: White House squirms after Quayle shot

nation buzzed with discussions of the subject, the White House issued an embarrassing series of statements seeking to clarify the administration's position on the instant controversy and President Bush tiptoed a fine line between supporting his vice president and praising the show that has 38 million viewers.

"I'm not going to get into the details of a very popular television show," the president said, adding a series of comments about families and children that might be construed either as praise or criticism of the program.

"Quayle to Murphy Brown: YOU TRAMP!" screamed the New York Daily News, while a Philadelphia paper trumpeted: "Murphy has a baby, Quayle has a cow."

Quayle himself seemed delighted with the uproar. In Los Angeles, he stepped up his attack on Murphy Brown's morality, charging that Hollywood was out of touch with American values.

"My point is that this is typical Hollywood, glamorizing something that is wrong with society," he said. "Illegitimacy is not right, it's wrong. Illegitimacy is something we should talk about ... not having. We ought to talk about a mother and a father."

Quayle set off the controversy in a speech to the Commonwealth Club of California, in which he struck a tough law and order stance on the Rodney King riots and traced the violence and institutional urban poverty to the decline of family and "Judeo-Christian values."

After the administration had struggled for weeks to find a consistent and coherent response to the long-simmering urban problems that boiled over the riots following the King police beating verdict, Quayle delivered a well-crafted speech that analyzed the violence from the perspective of core conservative values of "family values" and public safety.

Blaming the problems of cities, not on the failings of government, but on the moral weakness of individuals and the breakdown of family, the vice-president at the end of his speech pointed to Murphy Brown, an unmarried, upscale anchorman played by Candice Bergen who gave birth in a season-ending episode on Monday night, as a symbol of what is wrong with America.

"It doesn't help matters when prime-time TV has Murphy Brown — a character who supposedly epitomizes today's intelligent, highly paid, professional woman — mocking the importance of fathers by bearing a child alone and calling it just another lifestyle choice."

The controversy was instantly joined when the show's executive producer fired off an immediate response to the speech which succinctly defined the straight jacket of choices faced by single women who have unplanned pregnancies.

"If the vice president thinks it's disgraceful for an unmarried woman to bear a child, and if he believes that a woman cannot adequately raise a child without a father, then he'd better make sure abortion remains safe and legal."

At a time when both Bush and Quayle are pushing a strong anti-abortion line, when the Supreme Court may be about to overturn the landmark abortion rights ruling, when women candidates across the nation are winning unexpected victories and sexual harassment has become a driving political issue, the comment resonated greatly.

"What Murphy Brown did first and foremost was to choose life — she adopted the quintessential, Republican conservative position and they trashed her for it," said political scientist Sherry Bebitch Jeffe of Claremont College.

"Quayle's speech was part of an attempt to move the agenda back to family values," she added. "But women are indignant about his remark. A lot of women, not only in the inner city but middle class, working women, are single parents who are divorced, who are widowed, whose husbands have walked off with trophy wives, who do not want to commit to a loveless marriage or live with an abusive husband."

Touring a Los Angeles high school and riot-damaged areas, Quayle repeated his complaint that the program glamorized single motherhood and repeated his contention that he purposely referred to the show on Tuesday as a way to ignite a debate over moral values.

He responded to producer English's comment on abortion by saying, "Hollywood doesn't get it. Abortion is not the reason we have a poverty of values gripping our inner cities."

"My complaint is that Hollywood thinks it's cute to glamorize illegitimacy," he said later.

In Washington, the White House scrambled to deal with the flap.

Spokesman Marlin Fitzwater early Wednesday agreed with Quayle's characterization of the show, saying the administration was concerned that "the glorification of life as an unwed mother ... does not do good service to most unwed mothers who are not ... glamorous anchorwomen."

In a second statement, however, he praised the program for helping Americans "grapple with" the issues involved, and concluded: "The Murphy Brown show is an excellent show. The fact is she is demonstrating pro-life values which we think are good."

Quayle, told of those comments, said, "That is not correct."

COLEMAN: Court denies reprieve by 7-2 vote

a 7-2 ruling, denied a reprieve at 10:59 p.m., a minute before the execution initially was scheduled. Justices Harry Blackmun and David Souter dissented.

In a final statement read by James McCloskey, a private investigator who worked for him, Coleman said: "An innocent man is going to be murdered tonight. When my innocence is proven, I hope America will realize the injustice of the death penalty as all other civilized countries have."

Wilder said he allowed the polygraph in an "extraordinary and unprecedented move at the request of counsel" for Coleman, who previously had refused to take the test.

"The results showed that the defendant was not truthful on the pertinent questions," Wilder said.

He said the test showed that his denial of clemency for Coleman on Monday was "warranted and justified." He said he might have changed his decision had the test showed Coleman was telling the truth.

McCloskey, who has tried to prove Coleman's innocence in the rape and stabbing death of his sister-in-law, Wanda McCoy, said the defense requested the test in a desperate attempt to save his life.

"We really did not expect him to pass it," McCloskey told reporters in Richmond. "The pressure was just overwhelming."

After failing the test Coleman was "completely devastated," and could hardly speak, McCloskey said.

McCloskey said a defense polygraph expert wasn't allowed to administer or witness the test as it was given by state police.

Coleman's lawyers requested the test late Tuesday and it was given at a state police office in Richmond on Wednesday morning, Wilder told reporters.

Coleman was returned to the prison in Jarratt after the test. His girlfriend, Sharon Paul, later visited him. He said goodbye to her girlfriend early in the evening, ate his last meal and sat with his lawyers during his final hours, said Brown, the prison spokesman.

A small crowd gathered outside the prison gate. Jim Fraenkel, a college student from Buffalo, N.Y., held a candle to protest the execution and criticized Wilder for denying clemency.

"He's twisting innocent until proven guilty to guilty until proven innocent," Fraenkel said.

But James Howard of Chesapeake said he didn't doubt Coleman's guilt.

"He's quite articulate, I'll say that," Howard said of the condemned man's public appeals on national television.

Coleman, a former coal miner, was convicted of killing Mrs. McCoy in her home in the southwest Virginia town of Grundy.

He was linked to the crime by semen and pubic hair samples found on the victim and spots of her blood type on his pants. Prosecution witnesses included a jailhouse informant who said Coleman told him he raped the woman.

A DNA test requested by the defense during appeals showed that Coleman was among 0.2 percent of the population that could have committed the crime. His attorneys said their expert misinterpreted the results.

Coleman's supporters also said his alibi showed he didn't have time to commit the crime and that another man bragged about murdering Mrs. McCoy.

Defense lawyers said they were barred from presenting their new evidence to the courts because they missed by one day a deadline for filing an appeal.

CENSUS: Texas income down, poverty rates up lease much data on racial characteristics, but is expected to in reports to be issued later this year.

Comparisons between Texas and other states cannot be made since all the state-by-state demographics have not been completed.

The economic slump took a toll on Texas, with household income dropping and more state residents sliding into poverty.

Median household income fell 3.5 percent in the decade since 1979. The average Texas household earned $27,016 in 1989 — down $987 from 1979 after adjusting for an increase in consumer prices.

However, if the increase in consumer prices isn't considered, per capita income rose 6.9 percent in the 10 years since 1979, from $12,072 to $12,904.

Poverty rates jumped from 14.7 percent in 1979 to 18.1 percent a decade later. The number of Texas residents living in poverty rose from 2 million in 1979 to 3 million in 1989, with the number of poor families up from 412,076 to 617,981.

Most affected were single-parent households headed by women, with 35.4 percent of those falling below poverty levels in 1989.

While median income was down, housing costs were up.

Homeowners with mortgages paid an average of $712 a month in 1990, up 28.8 percent from $553 in 1980, after adjusting for the increase in consumer prices.

Median monthly gross rent was $395 in 1990, up 1.3 percent from $390 a decade earlier.

The survey also found that:

■ Eighty percent of the state's residents lived in urban areas, accounting for 13,637,248 of the state's 16,986,510 residents.

■ About 72 percent of Texas residents 25 and older had their high school diplomas, while 20 percent had at least a four-year college degree. Thirteen percent of those between the ages of 16 and 19 were high school dropouts — and 62 percent of those were unemployed.

■ Sixty-six percent of those 16 and over were in the labor force in 1990, with men having a 76 percent labor rate and women a 56 percent participation figure. Fifty-eight percent of mothers with children under the age of 6 also had jobs.

■ Nine percent of those living in Texas were born in another country. Almost three-quarters, or 71 percent of the state's residents, were born in Texas.

■ Just over 1 percent of the state's homes lacked complete plumbing and kitchen facilities, while a little less than 1 percent were without telephone service.

HEARING: 17 programs vie for block-grant funds

grams totaled nearly $300,000 this year, although the city is limited to spending $128,400 of the grant on those type programs.

Among requests are $31,700 for a batterer education program at the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women, $18,500 for EPIC bilingual work at Family Services, $77,000 for two Northeast YMCA youth programs, $70,000 for a senior citizen nutrition program, $12,000 for Citywide Community Services' homecleaning program, $36,000 for senior wellness at the Northeast YMCA and $20,000 for Good Beginning Child Care.

The Nonprofit Resource Center (formerly the Volunteer Center) wants $10,000, while the city's lot clearing program has asked for $20,000 to rid the community of some weedy eyesores.

Other programs, not listed in the "public" category, where funding is limited, have requested a total of $774,000.

They include $275,000 for Neighborhood Housing Services rehabilitation program, $235,000 in city park improvements, $50,000 for homeownership incentives, $30,000 for emergency home repairs, $25,000 for improvements to the Boys and Girls Club and $20,000 for demolition of dilapidated structures.

Other costs include administration of the funds — at $76,000 — indirect costs of $55,000 and $10,000 expected to be left unprogrammed this year.

Housing support programs got the second-highest allocation last year, taking $178,000. The city developed a Comprehensive Housing Affordability Study (CHAS) this year, an extensive document hoped to garner more federal money.

But Cantu said he expects citizens to discuss housing needs at Tuesday's meeting as well.

"This hearing would be a time to start getting input about what our overall plan will be," he said.

After Tuesday's hearing, the council will make a preliminary selection of funded projects in a July 14 work session. Then another public hearing, set for July 28, will give citizens a chance to voice opinions about those.

The city's application to HUD is due by Aug. 31.

Correction

A misspelling in a letter published in the Wednesday Midland Reporter-Telegram inadvertently changed the meaning of a letter from Christopher B. Corley.

In the third paragraph of Corley's letter, the final sentence should have read, "It would not surprise me to discover that the same congressmen now bellyaching, voted to undermine our drilling deductions."

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

STING: Law officers arrest 11 on federal charges

they alerted Federal investigators that 12 local businessmen were purchasing food coupons for one-half the face value with cash or the equivalent value in illegal drugs.

During the next two days, an undercover investigator, wired with a body recorder and a radio transmitter, sold $115 worth of food stamps to all of the individuals for half-price — or $57.50 — at their businesses, police said. One man, bondsman Odell Matthew Walker, paid $70 for his share, officers said.

"It was kind of like a drug deal, we sold to them what was noted as illegal food stamps and they paid 50 cents on the dollar," said Midland police deputy J.R. Smith.

Authorities marked all coupons in order to use them as evidence in court at a later date.

The 11 people charged with the felony federal offense, their age and where police allege they sold the stamps include: Walker, 60, 807 N. Baird St.; bondsman and Red's Drive-In owner Soloman Bunton, 63, and employee, Maria Reyes Estrada, 30, at Red's Bail Bonds, 1809 E. Front St.; George Alridge, 82, at Blaylock and Son Garage, 1104 E. Illinois St.; Glenn Earl Chambers, 50, at King's Sandwich Shop, 301 N. Lee St.; Sabrina Lurine Christ, 33, at Sue's Mini-Mall, 1804 S. Big Spring St.; Clarence Lee Dunson, 58, at Dunson's Cafe, 211 N. Lamesa Road; Rhonda Nanette Freeman, 28, at Cash-N-Go, 3207 N. Big Spring St.; James Henry Lister, 60, at 1401 E. Pennsylvania St.; Cecilio Chavazoz Maldonado, 57, at Hernandez Food Stop, 612 N. Dallas St.; and John Lewis Montgomery, 59, at Poor John's Liquor, 405 N. Lee St.

Walker and Bunton posted $30,000 bonds Thursday night. The others, except for Maldonado, were free on $20,000 bonds by Thursday night. Maldonado requested his bond be set while his attorney is present. He remained in custody at the Midland County jail Thursday night.

The maximum penalty for illegally possessing food stamps is a $10,000 fine, five years in prison or both.

DEADLOCKS: Parties worry about a House election from among the two top finishers in number of electoral votes for vice president.

With independent Ross Perot leading both Bush and Clinton in one national poll even before the Texas businessman declares his candidacy for the Nov. 3 election, parties are worried about an election in the House. Should Perot win California, with 54 electoral votes, or Texas, with 32 electoral votes, he might be able to prevent Bush or Clinton from racking up the required 270-vote majority.

Former President Gerald Ford said Wednesday that "a real constitutional crisis" would result. He also warned in a CNN television interview of a "scary scenario" if the House deadlocks and a vice president chosen by the Senate is sworn in as president Jan. 20.

To further complicate matters, there's also a law that says the speaker of the House would act as president if the House has not elected a president and the Senate has not chosen a vice president by Jan. 20.

The basic procedures for a House election have been laid out in the Constitution and public records from the 1800 and 1824 elections, the only ones to date decided by the House.

Members of the House chosen in the November elections would meet between Jan. 6-20, 1993, in state caucuses to vote. Whoever among the three candidates wins a 26-vote majority of the 50 states would become president.

That means California, the nation's most populous state, whose 45-member House delegation is now dominated by Democrats, would have the same weight as tiny Vermont, whose single House member is independent Bernie Sanders. California's delegation will expand to 52 seats in time for a House election and party control could change.

But it is not clear, according to a 1980 study conducted for the House Rules Committee by Rep. Martin Frost, D-Texas, whether state caucuses should pick their winners by majority or plurality votes. The House would have to decide that question before a vote.

There is also no guidance on whether lawmakers should vote for the presidential candidate of their own party or follow their conscience or the popular will of their state, congressional district or the nation at large.

The 1800 election was thrown into the House when Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr were tied in the Electoral College. Jefferson won on the 36th ballot.

In 1824, Andrew Jackson, William Crawford, John Quincy Adams and Henry Clay split the electoral and popular vote four ways. Adams prevailed in a three-way election in the House over Jackson and Crawford.

In both House elections, the winners were elected by majority votes within the state delegations.

This time around, Democrats seem to be favored if a House election breaks along party lines. Democrats now control 31 delegations to 10 for the Republicans, eight split and one made up of Vermont's Sanders. That would seem to make Clinton the favorite if the House decides a deadlocked election.

PEROT: Votes tarnish easy Bush, Clinton victories

lied for a week after Election Day.

But exit polls taken in Oregon by Voter Research and Surveys, a consortium of four television networks, indicated that Perot, a Texas billionaire who plans an independent presidential candidacy, had won 13 percent of the vote in the Democratic primary and 15 percent in the Republican primary.

In remote San Juan County, Wash., a group of islands in Puget Sound where the relatively few votes were tabulated quickly, the computer entrepreneur gathered enough write-in votes to lead both parties' primaries.

"I've seen nothing like it since Vietnam," said Sen. Bob Packwood, an Oregon Republican who easily won renomination. "Public alienation from politics as usual is just about complete. After the check-bouncing business, everyone said, 'That's it, no more.' And of course that feeds Perot's fire."

Perot has been shown leading President Bush and Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas, the likely Democratic nominee, in several state polls and, last weekend, in a national poll taken by Time magazine and CNN.

But not until Tuesday had he attracted any number of actual votes from actual voters — and it happened in Oregon and Washington without any campaigning by Perot, without appeals for votes from his backers and without advertising.

Now that it has happened twice, similar or even larger protests may develop in the remaining primary contests, which conclude in two weeks with contests in California and five other states on June 2. And while Bush and Clinton remain all but certain of nomination, every Perot vote erodes the credibility of their candidacies in the general election and increases that of his own.

The apparently spontaneous protest vote considerably tarnished easy victories for Bush and Clinton. Bush took 76 percent of the Oregon vote to 22 percent for Patrick J. Buchanan, his conservative challenger. In Washington, the count was 83 percent for the president and 13 percent for Buchanan.

On the Democratic side, Clinton captured 50 percent of the Oregon vote and former Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California, his only active rival, took 35 percent — a solid showing that could portend a strong run for Brown in his home state.

The Arkansas governor picked up 28 delegates in Oregon, pushing his total to 1,788, or 83 percent of the 2,145 he needs for nomination. Brown gained 19 delegates, giving him 374.

Clinton also won in Washington, with 51 percent to 29 percent for Brown. Delegates there are allocated in caucuses and conventions.

Perhaps the most surprising finding of the exit polls in Oregon, even more than the large number of write-in votes for Perot, was that more Democratic primary voters said they thought well of the Texan (57 percent) than of Clinton, who will probably carry their party's banner in the fall (49 percent). Among Republican primary voters, the same number (59 percent) expressed favorable views of Perot as did so about Bush.

The exit poll also included hypothetical three-way races. Among Democratic primary voters, Perot did at least as well as Clinton, pulling 45 percent to 42 percent for Clinton, with a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 4 percentage points. Among Republicans, Bush pulled 51 percent to 40 percent for Mr. Perot.

Among Oregon voters who turned out for the primary, in other words, Perot has greatly weakened partisan ties without announcing his candidacy. If Perot can fight the two major-party candidates to a draw among their own fellow party members this fall, he will be very difficult to stop.

In comments in Austin, Texas, Clinton seemed to be trying to link himself with the insurgency of Perot and thus to buttress his claim to be an agent of change.

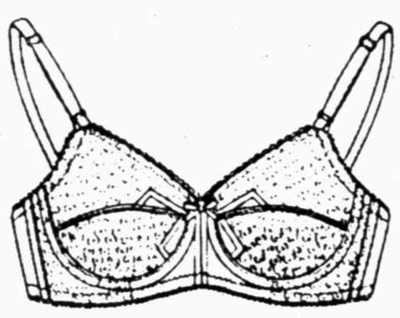

As far as voters' "positive feelings for Ross Perot, I can't blame them," Clinton said. "I agree with a lot of what he says," he added.

Thai soldiers attempt to disperse a crowd demonstrating against the military-dominated government Wednesday in Bangkok.

King pressures Thai leader to back reforms

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Pressured by the nation's revered king, a humbled Prime Minister Suchinda Kraprayoon promised Thursday to back democratic reforms after the army failed to crush demonstrations against military dominance of the government.

Suchinda also announced he was freeing opposition leader Chamlong Srimuang and thousands of other people arrested since mass anti-government rallies turned violent on Sunday night.

National television showed King Bhumibol Adulyadej lecturing Suchinda and Chamlong as they knelt before him at the royal palace. Suchinda and Chamlong then addressed the nation together, pledging to cooperate in finding a peaceful solution to the crisis, which left at least 40 dead and 600 wounded.

Suchinda freed Chamlong for the meeting with the king.

Thousands of soldiers, supported by armored personnel carriers and jeeps mounted with machine guns, shot, beat and chased protesters for three days but could not stamp out demonstrations demanding Suchinda's resignation. Protesters were angry that Suchinda, a former military chief who led a coup last year, was appointed prime minister even though he was not elected to parliament in March elections.

Bands of protesters continually roved through the streets, setting fires, smashing street lamps and taunting the troops in clashes centered on the Democracy Monument. The demonstrations spread to 13 provinces, fed by reports of the crackdown that the protesters sent with fax machines and portable telephones.

"I would like both of you to talk face-to-face, not to confront each other because this is our country," the king told Suchinda and Chamlong.

"We are fighting in our own house. ... It's useless to live on burned ruins," he said.

During the broadcast, Suchinda and Chamlong sat like schoolchildren being lectured by a stern schoolmaster. Suchinda wore a dark suit and tie, and Chamlong his usual simple blue farmer's shirt.

The king has a largely ceremonial post, but he has enormous influence among Thais. His intervention almost certainly would help defuse the huge street protests, which virtually shut down this city of 10 million people.

It was the king's first public comments since the violence erupted, but there had been widespread rumors that he was working behind the scenes to find a solution.

Army-run Channel 9 television said the talks were arranged by former Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanonda, who serves on the Privy Council, which advises the king.

Bangkok swirled with rumors Wednesday that troops loyal to Prem, who was prime minister in 1980-88, had clashed with Suchinda's forces or were marching on the capital from the north. Reporters on the northern approaches to the city saw military roadblocks but no major troop movements or fighting.

After reports of the peace talks, students at Ramkhamhaeng University expressed disappointment that Suchinda had not resigned and said they would return to the streets if he did not step down soon.

'I would like both of you to talk face-to-face, not to confront each other because this is our country. We are fighting in our own house. . . . It's useless to live on burned ruins.'

— King Bhumibol Adulyadej

Thousands of demonstrators watched the king on a television set placed on a stage at the university.

Simmering resentment in the growing middle class over six decades of political dominance by the military boiled over when Suchinda was appointed in April by parliament's majority coalition of five pro-military parties.

The anti-Suchinda forces demanded amendments to the constitution to require the prime minister to be an elected member of parliament.

The opposition parties want Suchinda to resign immediately once parliament passes the amendment, a process that could take only a few weeks.

Chamlong, the prime leader of the popular protests, was arrested Monday in front of police barricades where he defiantly struggled for an end to military rule.

Before the announcement of the talks, sporadic shooting could be heard in Bangkok, and glowing tracer bullets streaked over the city. Earlier in the day, about 10,000 protesters rampaged along Rajdamnern Avenue near the Democracy Monument, setting flower plants and trucks afire.

The rioters fled when soldiers advanced and shots were fired.

Suchinda, during an afternoon television address, said the overall death toll from the protests was 40, but numerous unconfirmed reports put the number much higher.

"The government must take drastic measures with the intention to prevent the situation from damaging our loving country," Suchinda, looking somber and drawn, said in that broadcast.

A few hours later, police ordered a 9 p.m.-4 a.m. curfew and shut down three newspapers that had been strongly critical of the government, the English-language Nation and two Thai-language papers.

Before the talks were announced, two members of the royal family appeared on television for the first time since the violence began.

"We all want the same thing, which is democracy," Crown Princess Sirindhorn said, appealing for an end to the strife but refraining from taking sides.

Some Thais cried as they watched the broadcast.

Later, Crown Prince Vajiralongkorn, heir to the throne, said: "The flow of blood from the killing and violence will result in the loss of everything for Thailand."

Gorbachev plotted Yeltsin rumors, writer says

■ Ex-Soviet leader spread tales of his rival's drinking to discredit him, according to Yeltsin biography.

By Bernard D. Kaplan
Hearst News Service

PARIS — Rumors about Russian President Boris Yeltsin's drinking habits have taken a fresh turn with the publication of a book accusing Mikhail Gorbachev of a personal role in the campaign to brand his rival as an unreliable drunk.

Russian journalist Valentin Yumashev alleges in the biography published this week in Moscow that reports Yeltsin is a heavy tippler, which have circulated persistently but never have been confirmed conclusively, owe their origins to a Kremlin plot to discredit him when he was challenging Gorbachev for power.

Yumashev claims the then-Soviet chief of state was aware of the plot and at least tacitly backed it.

In his most sensational allegation, the author says Gorbachev appears to have had a hand in an incident in September 1989 when Yeltsin was fished out of the Moscow River in the early morning hours, later protesting to the police that someone had tried to drown him.

A different version of the episode shortly afterward pictured him on a nocturnal drinking bout that ended with him slipping from the river bank in an alcoholic stupor.

According to Yumashev, formerly a journalist with the Moscow News, the truth was more sinister.

In his account, the incident followed a noisy row between Gorbachev and Yeltsin (who had split with the Kremlin leadership two years earlier over the lack of genuine economic reforms) at the latter's apartment.

WHEN YELTSIN left Gorbachev's apartment after their argument, Gorbachev's security men trailed him and tossed him into the river, Yumachev says. Their probable intention, he adds, was to intimidate rather than drown him, since he was known to be a strong swimmer.

Yeltsin

Nonetheless, he says it's difficult to imagine them acting as they did unless they thought they had Gorbachev's approval.

Michel Heller, a French specialist on Soviet history and politics, says Yumashev's assessment of the political implications surrounding the stories of Yeltsin's imbibing is "essentially accurate."

According to Heller: "Heavy drinking in the higher echelons of the Soviet and Russian leadership isn't exactly unheard of."

But he adds: "It's suspicious that the tales of Yeltsin's drunkenness began to appear in the press at precisely the time he fell out with Gorbachev and loomed as a potential challenger for power who boasted strong popular support."

Earlier this month, a Yeltsin opponent in the Russian parliament demanded an official investigation into "the question of the president's drinking habits."

The demand followed press reports that Yeltsin had been seen to "sway" as he approached TV cameras at a summit meeting in Tashkent of the Commonwealth of Independent States, the loose-knit successor to the Soviet Union.

THE PARLIAMENTARY motion was loudly supported by former communists and others who are antagonistic to Yeltsin. It was shouted down by his supporters, who called it an "unethical smear."

Heller notes that "the evidence supporting the charges against Yeltsin is circumstantial. There has never been an unequivocal sighting of him when he clearly had too much to drink. At the same time, his enemies have every interest in nourishing doubts about his personal habits."

Yeltsin's critics assert that he regularly goes off on "lost" weekends or even weeks when he's too drunk to exercise authority. The Russian leader has vigorously denied the allegations, and Heller says he also doubts them.

Heller says it's unlikely anyone could be as intemperate as Yeltsin is said to be and have survived the recent rough-and-tumble of Russian politics and risen to the top.

"Russia today is too open a society for such things to be concealed," Heller adds. "If he really was an incorrigible drunkard, it would be an acknowledged fact by now and it isn't. The Russians discount the drinking stories."

But the rumors may never be effectively dispelled, he predicts. "He's probably stuck with them. Politically, they're a handicap he'll have to learn to live with."

Originally, the French historian suggests, the allegations were aimed at undermining Yeltsin's standing at home. Now, he says, they are intended to hurt his international prestige, especially among American and Western European officials.

"The rumors have burdened him with the reputation of an undependable and erratic leader," Heller says. "However unfair, that's a grave handicap for him in dealing with the rest of the world."

Georgia militants kill South Ossetians

MOSCOW (AP) — Georgia militants opened fire on a bus Wednesday, killing about 30 women and children from the separatist enclave of South Ossetia, an official said.

Alexander Kavsadze, chairman of a Georgian government committee on human rights, said the identities of the attackers were not known. He said the attack occurred in the village of Kevkhi, near Tskhinvali, capital of the South Ossetia region.

South Ossetia is an area inside Georgia that wants to join neighboring North Ossetia, which lies in Russia. Hundreds of people have died in fighting over the past four years and more than 100,000 South Ossetians have fled to North Ossetia.

More Russians are packing pistols

■ Increase in crime has led many Russians to arm themselves for protection.

By T. Elaine Carey
N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — More and more Russians are packing "pushki" these days.

"Pushki" in Russian literally means "cannons," but in today's slang it means that many Russians have started carrying pistols for protection.

In the last year, Russians have become terrified by the increase in crime. It's hard to find a Muscovite who is not afraid to be out on the capital's streets after 11 p.m. Many stash a knife or truncheon under the driver's seat of their car to beat off attackers.

It's also common to find women — especially those in their 20s — who keep a palm-sized canister of gas at the ready in a pocket if they must walk the capital's streets alone in the evening.

Crime, a byproduct of the political and economic turmoil here, is spreading so rapidly that many citizens have lost faith in the ability of police to control it.

One gauge of the popular concern about crime is that many people who hated the Communist system now miss the safety they believe the Communist Party was able to provide by virtue of its dictatorial and brutal control.

THE INCREASE in crime is so precipitous that the U.S. State Department recently issued a travel warning advising Americans to take precautions against theft. The warning specifically cautioned that crimes against tourists — mainly robberies and muggings — were most prevalent in Russia and Ukraine.

Despite the increase, few crimes here — only about 0.3 percent — involve weapons.

However, that is no consolation for the average Russian who feels threatened on every street corner.

The consequence is a sharp increase in the illegal sales of guns — everything from pistols to semiautomatics.

The growth comes despite a law forbidding citizens from owning pistols. Violators are subject to five years in prison. Russians can legally own hunting rifles.

Prior to 1988, an average of fewer than 400 illegally owned guns were confiscated in Russia, according to the government. Last year, the government says it confiscated more than 30,000 weapons.

"You feel calmer walking on the street knowing you are armed," said 67-year-old Vladimir Ivanov, a retired government foreign trade official.

Last summer, he began carrying a four-inch-long 1940's vintage Belgian pistol after his daughter was chased by a man when she took the garbage out to a dump in a cluster of trees about three blocks from their country cottage.

THE PISTOL is so small it goes unnoticed in his back pants pocket. He has a second pistol that can fire a greater distance, which he keeps in his car.

"I'm not strong enough to fight anyone anymore. The guns were the only answer," he said.

During the Communist era, he said, "there wasn't crime." Now, he said, it's rampant.

"I was on a commuter train last summer and some drunken men got rowdy and kicked the window out," he recalled. "I pointed them out to the police at the next stop and promised to testify, but the police just mumbled about being busy and walked off."

Leonid Vturin, deputy director of Russia's Criminal Police Department, wouldn't even hazard a guess at the number of unregistered, illegal weapons that citizens have acquired in the last year or so.

"We are very, very worried . . . there are a considerable number of unregistered weapons out there," he said.

Most of these are stolen from factories producing weapons for the army and police, or from storage depots used by both those forces.

'You feel calmer walking on the street knowing you are armed.'

— Vladimir Ivanov, retired government official

ANOTHER SOURCE of guns is from soldiers who sell their weapons to augment their paltry monthly wage of only about 50 rubles (roughly 50 cents, depending on the exchange rate). There have been official estimates that Russian soldiers stationed in the southern Caucasus region sold more than 15,000 guns between 1988 and 1991.

The lucrative gun trade has spawned a growing number of black marketeers.

One of them is 30-year-old Kostya, who would not allow his last name to be used. He is well-dressed, well-groomed and well-spoken.

Kostya buys guns from employees in the weapons factories and resells them. He has been doing this for more than 10 years, and business is good — but not booming.

"To do that, you have to have a steady supply of weapons," he said. "Since most are stolen from factories piecemeal, you can't do volume business."

Another reason for the growing illegal gun trade is that people need the extra money to help them survive as Russia suffers through its painful conversion to a free market economy. Vturin says the increase corresponds with last January, when government-subsidized prices were ended.

Illegally sold pistols can cost from 20,000 to 50,000 rubles (roughly $200 to $500) — or up to 50 months average salary. So great is the fear of crime that many citizens dip into their life savings to pay for the weapons.

Anger erupts as campaigning begins in Israel

Rabin wishes Israelis could choose prime minister in direct elections

By Clyde Haberman
N.Y. Times News Service

TEL AVIV, Israel — "Israel Is Waiting for Rabin," campaign posters plastered across the country say, and for the benefit of the eight or nine Israelis who may not yet get the point, they show a photograph of Yitzhak Rabin at his no-nonsense best.

The slogan alludes to an old tune called "Nasser Is Waiting for Rabin."

Rabin

It was from 1967, just before the lightning conflict popularly known as the Six-Day War, when Rabin was chief of staff of the Israeli armed forces and the songwriters were describing, whimsically but prophetically, how President Gamal Abdel Nasser and his Egyptian army were about to have their lights punched out.

The idea behind the new posters, put up by the Labor Party, is to evoke a golden moment for Rabin and Israel. There is, however, another point as well, aimed squarely at vacillating voters who may be weary of the last 15 years of Likud Party governments but who feel skittish about swinging all the way over to Labor in next month's national elections.

To them, the message is unstated but clear: Forget about Labor. Vote for Rabin.

In his party office here on Wednesday Rabin, Labor's leader for the last three months, spoke almost wistfully about how he wished Israelis could choose their prime minister through direct elections. He seemed to be suggesting there was little chance of his losing in a head-to-head race against Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of Likud.

There will be such direct elections the next go-around. But this time, on June 23, Israelis will vote as they always have, for a party. It could have been different, Rabin said, but Likud "torpedoed" a plan for immediate change.

"Likud was afraid to put Shamir against me — or any other candidates that they could produce," he said slowly in a voice so deep that it seemed to rumble up from somewhere around his socks. So Labor, he explained, has resorted to a campaign strategy that puts unusually strong emphasis on him personally as well as on party policies.

An Analysis

"It is a combination of the who and the what," he said.

Two months past one's 70th birthday is not the time when most men think about a grand comeback, but if Israeli opinion polls are to be believed, Rabin has reason to hope he just might return to the office of prime minister that he held in the mid-1970s.

There are no guarantees, of course. Israeli moods are volatile, the country's coalition politics is complex and the tendency at the moment of truth to vote the way one always has is strong. Nonetheless, Labor seems for now to be attracting once die-hard "Likudniks" wanting change.

Many of these people say that feel confident that in Rabin, who as defense minister cracked down hard on the nascent Palestinian uprising five years ago, they have a man who will not be a pushover for the Arabs.

For his part, Rabin says that he will indeed be strong on issues of peace and security.

But he insists he will be more flexible than Shamir in the continuing peace talks with the Palestinians and neighboring Arab countries. He says without going into too many specifics that he will reduce what he calls unnecessary "political" settlements in Israeli-occupied territories.

He is also ready, he adds, to negotiate a return of some land to Arab control but not areas like the Golan Heights and parts of the West Bank that he considers vital to Israel's security.

Within a year of taking office, he hopes to hammer out an agreement giving Palestinians self-rule in the territories, Rabin says, although when it comes to timetables, "I don't want to pin it down because it might create misunderstanding."

JERUSALEM (AP) — Ran Cohen had come to the Jerusalem supermarket to stir debate about war and peace and to win votes.

Right-wing toughs tore up his leaflets and traded blows with his supporters. "You are not wanted here, you disgusting leftists," yelled one man, shaking with anger.

Cohen, a former combat officer running for the left-wing Meretz bloc, left in anger. He blamed the right; saying it had been "inciting against us for 20 years."

The campaign for the June 23 election was already gathering steam before it opened officially Wednesday with 30 parties in the running. Scenes like the one in the supermarket in the Kiryat Hayovel district of Jerusalem are being replayed daily.

As always, the ballot is a referendum on whether Israel should return occupied land for peace with the Arabs, as proposed by the opposition Labor Party, or hold on to the West Bank and Gaza Strip at all costs, the position of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's Likud.

Past elections have been inconclusive. But this time, land-for-peace is not a hypothetical question because Israel is actually negotiating with the Arabs.

No party has ever won an outright majority, so even if Labor's lead in the polls translates into a win, it will need coalition partners, and Meretz is a likely candidate.

In March, Labor was ahead 34 percent to Likud's 29, and the pattern is holding, said pollster Hanoch Smith. He noted, however, that Labor leads in the 1981 and 1984 campaigns vanished late in the campaign.

For now, Shamir and Labor leader Yitzhak Rabin are urging restraint, but they are not holding their activists on a short leash.

Another reason is Labor's new mood of confidence after 15 years as underdog. It is playing up the slow progress in the peace talks; the 12-percent unemployment rate; the difficulties of coping with 400,000 new immigrants; and a rash of corruption scandals.

Labor activists have stunned Likud with their aggressive heckling of Shamir.

In the 1981 campaign, no Laborite would have dared interrupt when the late Prime Minister Menachem Begin whipped Likud supporters into a nationalist frenzy.

Then, the street belonged to Likud and its core of supporters, Sephardic Jews from Middle Eastern countries.

Labor spokeswoman Michal Cohen said times have changed. "We won't leave the street to the others anymore. We will be as aggressive as the other side, and maybe more," she said.

Around Ran Cohen, voices of discontent were loud.

Traditional Likud voter Yehuda Moshe, 35, a delivery man, said he would switch because the party had lost touch. "Only when it's time for elections, do you see them coming to the people."

These are the voters Labor is after.

Likud spokesman Yossi Ahimeir said his party's campaign got off to a shaky start and blamed ethnically tinged infighting over party positions for alienating Sephardic supporters.

Likud activists are striking back with the emphasis on Rabin.

At a recent Rabin rally, they chanted "We want a clear-headed prime minister," an allusion to a alleged drinking problem that Rabin denies.

His wife, Leah, was asked on Israel radio Wednesday whether Rabin takes a drink when he gets home. "No. When he comes home he doesn't drink. The bottle can stand for days on end without being touched. If he drinks an occasional glass, this is still nowhere near alcoholism."

Journalist recounts escape from Sarajevo

EDITOR'S NOTE: Associated Press writer Tony Smith accompanied a wounded colleague, AP photographer David Brauchli, from the besieged Bosnian city of Sarajevo to safety in Croatia on Tuesday. Here is his account of the journey.

By Tony Smith
Associated Press writer

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Departing Sarajevo, we passed miles of frustrated motorists hoping to escape Bosnia's ravaged capital. Some hung out their windows, begging for their children to be allowed to leave. Others gave up and turned back to the besieged, dangerous city.

Passing that line of forlorn refugees Tuesday was one of the saddest moments of our weeks in Sarajevo.

But with one dead and one seriously wounded colleague in our convoy of journalists, we breathed a deep sigh of relief as we crossed the last Serbian checkpoint outside the Bosnian capital, which is defended by Muslim-led militias.

Escorted by a Serbian police car, our convoy of a bomb-damaged Toyota, a battle-scarred Volkswagen and a blue Yugoslav-made Zastava compact — bought in a three-minute transaction for $1,000 — drew envious glances from the refugees.

In an attempt to starve Sarajevo into submission, the Serbs have poured shells into the city and have blocked food and medicine from entering, even attacking a Red Cross convoy.

Now, it seemed, they were barring everyone from leaving.

Parents hung out of car windows, asking why they could not move. "Let the kids through, at least!" shouted one man.

One family hoisted a mattress off a roof rack and prepared to lie down for a long wait.

Most foreign journalists pulled out of Sarajevo last week after the European Community withdrew its peace-keepers because of the fighting.

Our small group became trapped after missing weekend U.N. convoys to Belgrade and Zagreb because of heavy fighting downtown.

Now we wondered if we were doing the right thing in finally leaving.

AP photographer David Brauchli grimaced in pain as our Toyota hit a bump. "If we hadn't been hit, we'd still be reporting this," he said.

Two days earlier, a mortar shell landed 10 yards from Brauchli and a young Spanish photographer, Jordi Pujol, as they walked through Sarajevo's old town taking pictures during a lull in the fighting.

Pujol, a 26-year-old on his first assignment in Yugoslavia, died.

Brauchli was seriously wounded by shrapnel in the groin, arm and head. Doctors at Sarajevo Kosevo Hospital, working without water and basic medicine, performed surgery.

For two days, our solitary telephone was constantly busy, as plans took shape for an evacuation.

We needed final word from Brauchli's doctors on whether he was well enough to be transported from the hospital. Pujol's body had to be identified in the city hospital's morgue. At one point, authorities mislaid the Spaniard's death certificate.

Pujol's colleague from Barcelona's Catalan daily Avui, Eric Hauck, scoured Sarajevo for a wooden coffin and a car with gasoline to transport it — both scarce commodities.

Deciding the evacuation route was like playing soccer with moving goalposts. The military situation changed from morning to afternoon.

On Monday afternoon, it appeared safest to leave via Yugoslav military helicopter from Pale, a Serb stronghold east of Sarajevo. But by mid-evening, news filtered through that a Red Cross convoy had been attacked on the Pale road. Frederic Maurice, the Red Cross mission chief, was killed.

Finally, we settled on a land route through Croatia. The European Community promised to arrange a Serbian police escort from the Serbian suburb, Ilidza, and to have a Croat ambulance and police vehicles waiting at Kiseljak, the first Croat town to the north.

The United Nations offered an armored car to evacuate Brauchli across Sarajevo's main east-west road, a three-mile stretch known as "the death run," or "sniper alley" among journalists.

After goodbyes to our assistant Hana, who as a Yugoslav had no chance of leaving with us, we made a dash for the U.N. building to pick up Brauchli — crouching in our seats and slaloming the cars to avoid any sniper bullets.

After final negotiations with the Ilidza police, we were granted an escort and left for Kiseljak, bypassing the stranded refugees.

In Kiseljak, a Bosnian spa town 12 miles to the north, authorities knew nothing of the EC ambulance plans.

We decided to take our chances alone.

As darkness fell, we came across a sign saying it was 30 miles to Duvno. It looked the most direct route on the map, but the trip over steep, rocky forest tracks took three hours.

Finally we arrived on the outskirts of Split, on Croatia's coast. But the Croatian policemen in their resplendent new uniforms seemed more interested in protocol than escorting a wounded photographer to safety.

After taking our names, they insisted we follow them to a hotel. One police car chased our Toyota as it wheeled off toward the airport; we were forced to stop temporarily.

The ambulance plane flying in from Vienna was forced to turn back twice before finally getting landing rights Wednesday morning. Nearly 24 hours after Brauchli left the hospital in Sarajevo, he arrived safely in Bern, Switzerland, and was in good condition Wednesday.

Decision to impose martial law 'evil,' Jaruzelski says

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Former Communist leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski on Wednesday called his 1981 decision to impose martial law and suppress Solidarity "evil," but insisted it was better than Soviet armed intervention.

The decision led to the imprisonment of tens of thousands of Solidarity members, including President Lech Walesa, and left dead more than a dozen workers who resisted the Communist authorities.

"The events of that time . . . were and remained an evil and a tragedy experienced by different people," the retired four-star general said. "It is also my personal tragedy."

In his memoirs, Jaruzelski, who led Poland from 1981 to 1989, discusses the circumstances that led to the decision on Dec. 13, 1981, to impose martial law and crack down on the Solidarity labor union.

"The book is an illustration of that time, of the dilemmas and dramatic situations," Jaruzelski, 68, said at a news conference promoting "Martial Law, Why," which appeared in bookstores on Tuesday.

"I wish that it serves for better understanding and reconciliation and help us overcome the difficult problems the country is facing," he said.

Jaruzelski said the 10 years that passed since the martial law declaration formed a "whole historical epoch."

He asked readers not to measure the past in terms of the present, and said Poles should try to understand the motives of all sides of "our national drama."

Although he refused to comment on Poland's current political situation, Jaruzelski said he wished success to the nation's reforms.

"The road we have entered is very difficult, but I am convinced we entered it in the right direction," he said.

A survey conducted in December showed that most Poles believed martial law was justified by threats of a Soviet intervention.

Eight years later, Jaruzelski agreed to hold talks with the Solidarity-led opposition that led to 1989 parliamentary elections and eventually the fall of the Communists.

The general was elected president by the Communist-dominated parliament and served as president until December 1990, when Walesa became the nation's first popularly elected president.

Turks unhappy about sending trained whale back home to Ukraine

LASPI, Ukraine (AP) — Aidin escaped military service in the Crimea and wound up a Turkish television star. But now he's back home facing a common problem in the former Soviet Union: how to make enough money to eat.

Aidin, a 7-year-old Beluga whale, earns his keep by balancing balls on his snout and waving his flippers in time to music every afternoon.

He performs daily alongside two dolphins and a fellow Beluga, Yegor, in the remote Black Sea village of Laspi.

"In the beginning of the year we received money to buy fish, but now we don't even get that," said Alvinius Stanionius, director of Laspi's "dolphinarium."

These days Aidin, one of six Belugas in captivity in the former Soviet Union, must attract enough visitors to ensure his daily diet of 66 pounds of fresh fish.

About 40 little children and their parents barely filled the first few rows of bleachers during a recent performance at the dilapidated facility, on the grounds of a former youth camp.

They applauded and laughed, but revenues from the tickets — which sell for 10 rubles, or about 9 cents — seemed unlikely to feed Aidin and his fellow performers. Fish costs about 35 rubles — 25 cents — a pound.

The money-losing aquarium is so tight on funds that its live-in staff of six was only recently able to afford to build a toilet, and it is no longer getting government help to meet expenses.

"They said they sent us money from Moscow, but it never made it here," Stanionius said.

Aidin, whose name means "Brightness" in Turkish, escaped last fall from his tank near a classified military installation in the closed Black Sea city of Sevastopol, where he was shipped after being captured in the Far East. He swam out through a hole in a broken wall separating the tank from the sea.

Aidin's mission in the Crimea is shrouded in secrecy. But trainer Alla Azovtseva hinted he was being trained either to search out mines and fetch stray torpedoes, or to protect naval bases from attack by divers.

Another Beluga who swam away with him, Gorgeous, is still missing.

After several months at sea, a lean and hungry Aidin approached a docked fishing vessel in Turkey, on the other side of the Black Sea.

He opened his mouth and started begging for fish. Realizing he was trained, fishermen began to play with him and give him food, said Azovtseva, 29.

Before long, Aidin became a regular on the front pages of Turkish newspapers and television, delighting viewers with his antics.

The white whale lived the life of a star throughout March — until his performances appeared on Ukrainian television.

Plans were laid to ship him back to the Crimea. But angry protesters created an international furor.

Angry that an arctic whale should be forced to live in captivity in warm Black Sea waters, a British conservationist group offered to buy Aidin for $115,000.

But the protest failed. The Turks did not dispute his ownership and Aidin was sent home.

"The Turks were very sad to let him go. Even the children in school cried and didn't want to give him back," Azovtseva said.

Orthodox Jews think pizza is slice of Western decadence

BNEI BRAK, ISRAEL (AP) — "We deliver," said David of Speed Pizza. "But I can't reveal our location. Those are the instructions. The location is a secret."

That's understandable. Bnei Brak is a stronghold of the haredim, ultra-orthodox Jews who tend to view modern innovations with suspicion. Most pizza sellers won't even reveal their last names.

Pizza is frowned on because "it is a food you eat for fun," says Micha Odenheimer, an orthodox Jew who writes extensively on the haredim.

"The haredim define pizza as entertainment. It is seen as lightening the heart and leading to the mixing of the sexes," he says.

To the haredi hard-liners of Bnei Brak, pizza represents one more slice of Western decadence wedging its way into their cloistered world. Left unchecked, they believe, it can lead to the sort of thing that goes on in the fleshpots of neighboring Ramat Gan and Tel Aviv — like men and women touching elbows at the pizza counter.

Until eight months ago, a Bnei Brak resident couldn't buy pizza at all — the Hassidic rabbis banned it outright. The rival Lithuanian rabbis were slightly more liberal, allowing one establishment to take orders by telephone and deliver.

Then came Benny Farkash, a 27-year-old diamond dealer who beat the ban by setting up shop on a street in Ramat Gan, bordering on Bnei Brak. His success has forced the rabbis to loosen the rules.

"I sold diamonds, I decided to sell pizza," said Farkash, who is not haredi.

He called his establishment "Pizzaleh," meaning "Little Guy" in Yiddish, the predominant language of the haredim. He plastered Bnei Brak with signs colored green, red and white — the Italian national colors.

Opponents hit back with posters declaring Pizzaleh off-limits. Farkash says he got menacing late-night phone calls. His shop was burglarized, although nothing was taken.

But secular Jews from Ramat Gan packed Pizzaleh, and haredim from Bnei Brak followed. "R," an anonymous seminary student, explained the attraction.

"Do you know what it's like, when you're allowed something forbidden to you all your life? ... You feel like you've let loose!" he told the daily newspaper Yedioth Ahronoth.

With haredim flocking to Pizzaleh, the Lithuanian rabbis allowed a few of their followers, who already were selling falafel, to add pizza to the menu.

And the Hassidim allowed two "underground" pizzerias to operate, provided they advertised only through fliers and took orders over the phone.

The haredi manager of Speed Pizza, who would identify himself only as Avraham, explained the logic: "You open a pizzeria in Bnei Brak and next thing you'll have hamburger joints, steak houses — even pubs. Look at Ramat Gan and Tel Aviv. Centers for fun!"

The sign on the wall at Nahum's Pizza and Falafel reads: "Eating pizza on the premises is absolutely forbidden! No frivolity is permitted on the premises!"

The Lithuanian rabbis ruled that while falafel, the traditional staple of Israeli fast food, can be eaten on the premises, pizza eaters must take the pie and run. There is no clear explanation why the sages are more liberal on falafel than on pizza.

Moshe, the haredi manager of Nahum's, puffed a cigarette and shrugged. "I don't understand this distinction between falafel and pizza — but if I want to stay in business, it's what I have to do," he said.

As for Benny Farkash, he says he's preparing a new breakthrough for Bnei Brak — frozen yogurt.

Archaeologists think tomb houses Maya king

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Archaeologists tunneling in the rubble of a Maya ruin in Honduras have opened a tomb strewn with jade and seashells that may contain 1,400-year-old royal remains.

The discovery gives Maya scholars new archaeological data to check against knowledge of the ancient royalty in Copan, a town in western Honduras that is the site of a ruined Maya city.

"This kind of discovery provides a fairly clear window on the past," Robert Sharer, a University of Pennsylvania archaeologist who led the dig, said last month. "It can allow us to tie together the archaeology and history."

Based on the tomb's location under about 10 feet of rubble and the apparent age of two dozen ceremonial pots surrounding the stone slab on which a skeleton lies, scientists think the remains are those of one of four sixth-century rulers of Copan.

The first ruler was named Waterlily-Jaguar and the last Moon-Jaguar. Scholars haven't identified the other two.

Sharer said it may take several months of shoring up the tomb, whose stone beams are cracked, before it is safe to enter it and allow a glyph-reader to look for inscriptions.

As recently as 15 years ago, scientists relied on inexact methods of finding the age of such tombs, such as carbon dating, and usually could only speculate on the identity of their occupants.

Rapid advances in reading Maya hieroglyphs — 90 percent are at least partly understood — give archaeologists major advantages.

The names Waterlily-Jaguar and Moon-Jaguar were only learned in the last decade. They are written on a 350-year dynastic history carved in a hieroglyphic staircase at Copan.

The staircase was erected by King Smoke-Shell in 756 A.D. There are 2,200 glyphs that rise from the mouth of a serpent at the base of the stairs.

Moon-Jaguar led a city of about 10,000 people, with mastery over a domain encompassing roughly 3,500 square miles, said William Fash, a Northern Illinois University archaeologist in charge of work at Copan.

Sharer said he hopes inscriptions in the tomb will confirm the identity of the remains. Over the breadth of the Maya ruins in Central America and Mexico, he said, "we're batting about 10 percent in finding the tombs of rulers."

Sharer's team is mapping what are believed to be hundreds of buildings constructed in layers over 400 years in Copan's cultural and residential center, known as the Acropolis.

Scores of buildings have been restored on Copan's surface, but scientists began digging deeper only three years ago. Sharer's team has dug more than a mile of tunnels, all by hand, and have catalogued 20 buried buildings.

Temples that hold the tombs of Maya rulers often were buried by later rulers so they could build new temples on top of them. The Maya used "termination" rituals to bury old buildings, treating them as if they were living beings.

At Copan, they sprinkled a thin layer of jade, obsidian flakes and spiny oyster shells over old temples. The seashells symbolized the great watery underworld to which the "dead" building and its occupant were consigned.

Businessman's investments look 'clean'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ross Perot made his first $1 billion when the computer company he founded began selling stock in 1968 but these days the Texas businessman is not putting much of his wealth on Wall Street.

The financial disclosure form Perot was required to file with the government as a potential presidential candidate indicates he has generally shunned blue-chip stock in public companies recently.

Instead, his holdings include millions of dollars in government bonds — usually tax-free investments in states and cities, in turnpikes and hospitals, schools and other public works projects ranging from Connecticut to Alaska.

He also has dabbled in foreign currency trading, bet on the Japanese stock market's Nikkei index and invested in partnerships that are backing startup electronics firms, the disclosure form shows.

"From a political point of view, it looks pretty clean," said Stephen Hess, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, a Washington think tank. "It (municipal bonds) is a pretty safe way to invest and in sort of a positive way, putting money back into the communities."

Perot's 123-page disclosure form, filed with the Federal Election Commission, does not give his net worth, which has been estimated at between $2.5 billion and $3.5 billion.

It describes the value of his assets only in broad ranges such as $50,000 to $100,000 or "over $1 million." He listed 174 investments in the latter category.

The form describes Perot's income as ranging from a low of $26.6 million to more than $131 million. Private estimates are that Perot earns $3 million a week or more.

Several Wall Street professionals interviewed by The Associated Press noted Perot's virtual absence from the Wall Street scene, although most declined to be named, saying they did not want to jeopardize future business for their firms.

It represents a change in strategy for Perot, who once owned a brokerage firm that failed, received a large share of General Motors stock when he sold his Electronic Data System Corp. to the automaker and who boasted of selling his vast stock holdings just before the stock market crash of 1987.

"He's basically nowhere to be found on Wall Street," said one source at a large New York investment firm who asked not to be named. "He's playing around with his own money but not in a stock market sense."

Nearly all the investments in public companies that Perot listed on his disclosure form were in the form of commercial paper — low-yielding short-term loans to companies such as AT&T and Hershey Foods.

Those loans were assigned no value on the report, meaning they had been closed sometime in the last year. Some believe he has shied away from opening new loans so he can free up money for the campaign.

"If this campaign is going to cost him $100 million then he's beginning to get some cash," Herb Alexander, a University of Southern California political science professor.

Perot spokesman Jim Squires said the campaign had decided not to comment on the disclosure form. But a Perot campaign lawyer said Perot's investment portfolio was not changing to accommodate a bid for the White House.

"He's made no effort to change his holdings or look at it with a critical eye in terms of the campaign," said attorney Clay Mulford.

Some observers suggested Perot's lack of Wall Street activity may reflect wariness that the stock market has peaked at record highs.

"You don't accumulate wealth by buying or selling for political reasons," said Jan Baran, a former FEC official and lawyer for President Bush's 1988 campaign. "It could simply be an investment strategy if one believes the market has peaked and stocks are overvalued."

The few stock holdings Perot did report were in several computer and electronic companies, including NeXT Inc. Computer Systems; the Atlantix Corp., a software concern; and Springer Technologies.

Gene therapists scheme to outwit cancer

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Cancer often eludes treatment by growing resistant to chemotherapy, so scientists plan a similar trick against tumors, using gene therapy to protect the body from fatally high doses of cancer drugs.

They will arm healthy cells with the same gene that cancer cells use to ward off chemotherapy. This way, they believe they will be able to vastly increase doses of cancer drugs without destroying the body's most vulnerable tissue — the bone marrow.

Dr. Michael Gottesman of the National Cancer Institute said Wednesday he plans to try this approach within the next year on breast cancer patients.

"It's very important work," commented Dr. Robert Sobol of the San Diego Regional Cancer Center. "It will allow oncologists to treat patients with higher doses of chemotherapy. Many think that the higher the dose, the more effective the chemotherapy will be."

The approach represents one more way in which doctors are escalating the battle against cancer in an effort to eradicate its runaway growth and save lives.

Gottesman, chief of the cancer institute's Laboratory of Cell Biology, outlined his strategy at the annual scientific meeting of the American Association for Cancer Research.

Many cancers are vulnerable to chemotherapy drugs at first. But often some of the tumor escapes the initial treatment and grows impervious to further assault from cancer medicines.

Recently, scientists figured out how cancers do this: They rely on a gene that's been dubbed multi-drug resistance 1, or MDR1. Every cell in the body has this gene, but the gene ordinarily only works in a few organs, such as the liver and kidneys.

The gene makes a protein on the surface of cells that pumps out poisons before they do damage. Cancer cells exploit this gene to get rid of highly toxic cancer-killing drugs.

"It protects them from many drugs simultaneously," Gottesman said.

Doctors believe that if they could blast the body with enough chemotherapy from the start, they could kill all the cancer before it has a chance to develop drug resistance. But doctors are limited in this, because heavy doses will destroy the bone marrow, which makes new blood.

Gottesman's idea is to insert a switched-on version of the MDR1 gene into a mouse virus, then use the virus to infect bone marrow cells. If all works as planned, the virus will carry the gene into the cells, making them resistant to chemotherapy.

"We would hope that the infected bone marrow would overgrow" — supplanting the normal variety — "and the patient would never be without bone marrow," Gottesman said.

The scientists have already tried this strategy in lab animals.

Officer in King case says he is not racist

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The white police officer facing retrial in the beating of black motorist Rodney King broke his silence Wednesday to deny accusations that he is racist.

Vice President Dan Quayle, meanwhile, visited the heart of the riot zone Wednesday and, during a meeting with seventh- and eighth-graders, stressed the importance of education.

Officer Laurence Powell, in a column published in the Los Angeles Times, wrote: "I want you to know that I never harbored any personal malice toward Mr. King, nor do I to this date."

Powell and three other white officers were acquitted of most charges in King's videotaped beating, which followed a March 3, 1991, traffic stop. The verdict last month sparked three days of riots that left 51 people dead and thousands injured.

The jury in affluent and nearly all-white Simi Valley, a Los Angeles suburb, acquitted Powell's three colleagues deadlocked on one excessive force charge against Powell. A hearing was scheduled Friday on whether to hold the retrial somewhere else.

Powell said he was saddened by the violence and accusations of racism against him.

"I want you to know that my girlfriend of four years is Hispanic and proud to be a police officer," he said. "I would also like you to know that my mom and dad and my sisters and I have cared for and nurtured many foster children while I was growing up and the majority of them were African-American or Hispanic.

"Currently we are caring for a 3-year-old black girl and we have two Hispanic children living with us as well," he said.

Meanwhile, Quayle told the about 80 seventh- and eighth-grade pupils at Bret Harte Intermediate School in South Central Los Angeles that their staying in school would raise their self-esteem and offer hope for their neighborhood's recovery.

"If you don't have a good education, chances are you're not going to have hope," he said.

One student asked him how he would feel if he were a young black person in South Central.

"Then I would be an independent person who takes pride in myself," he said.

Quayle sounded the same themes in a meeting with community leaders and Korean merchants whose shops were a prime target of looting and arson.

Storekeeper Kyung Kim said he was pleased with the meeting but added that merchants "now need financial things, not words or promises."

Bloody Thailand suffers betrayal

Thailand's King Bhumibol Adulyadej met Wednesday with both Prime Minister Suchinda Kraprayoon and opposition leader Chamlong Srimuang, urging them to talk face-to-face to resolve the bloody rebellion rocking that nation.

The king's involvement in the crisis, which erupted Sunday, is welcome since it could bring a degree of restraint. Although his position is largely ceremonial, the king enjoys great respect in that country.

Suchinda's role as prime minister actually sparked the rioting. He was the mastermind of last year's military coup and even promised to never take political power into his own hands. Today, however, Suchinda's actions do not uphold that lofty promise. He wields power as Thailand's unelected prime minister, has brought back corruption, and stomps moves toward real democratic reform.

Peaceful protesters have been killed, yet the rioting and Suchinda's repressive nature continue.

The king's involvement is the greatest hope for bringing Suchinda around to the recognition that he must change or else relinquish power. The king's influence should be bolstered by pressure from Washington. President Bush must hold high this nation's support for freedom and human rights; there is no other leader from the free world who enjoys his degree of worldwide respect.

With urging from Washington, Suchinda might begin to recognize his own government's inattention to democratic principles in the interest of developing a government that will better serve the interests of the Thai people.

Suchinda should ask himself whether his own coup was worth the betrayal of democratic principles and the bleeding of Thailand.

Balanced budget plan scares Congress

WASHINGTON — With the tides of anti-incumbent sentiment lapping higher and higher, Washington's hands stop trembling only when Washington is wringing its hands in unfeigned horror about the coming constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget. A sufficient reason for ratifying the amendment is the horror it inspires in the political class that has transformed American democracy into "autonarchy."

Will

That word was coined by James L. Payne, a scholar who has taught at Yale and Johns Hopkins and elsewhere. He asked a simple question and in answering it came up with some stunning statistics that he reported in The Public Interest quarterly two years ago — and nothing much has changed since then. His question was: Why do members of the House and Senate support so many spending programs? One reason, he found, is that almost no one testifies against spending.

He analyzed the testimony of 1,060 witnesses in 14 hearings on proposed spending. Seven witnesses opposed spending, 39 were neutral they testified about something else — and 1,014 favored spending. This 145-to-one ratio reflects Washington's inbred persuasion process.

Payne says that people suppose, because democratic theory teaches, that Congress responds primarily to individuals and groups "out there," beyond the Beltway. Not so, says Payne. "Overwhelmingly, Congress' views on spending programs are shaped by government officials themselves."

Of the 1,060 witnesses Payne studied, 47 percent were federal administrators, 10 percent were state or local government officials and 6 percent were U.S. senators or representatives testifying to colleagues. So 63 percent represented government acting as an interest group.

Another 33 percent were lobbyists for groups purporting to be, and generally perceived to be, private-sector institutions. But, Payne says, many of these groups are "semi-governmental entities." Often their leaders are former government officials socialized in government's benign view of its own motives and competence. Furthermore, many of these groups are extensions of government in that they receive government contracts and grants. He cites the National Council of Churches, the National Education Association, the League of Women Voters, the Sierra Club and other environmental groups.

Government's peculiar persuasion process also includes billions of government dollars spent hiring consultants to evaluate government programs or the need for programs. These consultants are not famous for frowning on the work of the government agencies that hire them, any more than the agencies are famous for hiring politically unsympathetic evaluators. The evaluators are socialized for sympathy. Many are former government officials inclined to favor what government wants: more. An evaluator who wants to be invited back to the federal banquet will, when confronted with a failing program, prescribe "better management" and more money.

Payne says that when he discussed his 145-to-one finding with congressional staffers they were surprised — surprised it was so low. Payne also found — no surprise, this — that among representatives and senators, Republicans as well as Democrats, support for spending increases as tenure does.

There are two reasons for a broad correlation between length of service and enthusiasm for spending. One is the socialization into the government mentality. Another is that spending is the principal way members achieve long tenures.

If rule by a king is monarchy, and rule by a single individual is autocracy, and rule by a few is oligarchy, and rule by the people — the demos — is democracy, what word describes government that controls itself? Payne suggests "autonarchy."

LESLIE GELB

New order opens door to internal violence

If the Persian Gulf war promised a new era of collective responsibility, Yugoslavia heralds its early demise.

A television film clip from the Balkan war zone catches the future. Cradling her murdered child, a mother cries: "They are killing us, but we are innocent."

Gelb

There should be no mistaking the consequences of would-be peacemakers failing to stop this slaughter: The new world order will be like the old one. The most ruthless will feel free and be free to kill as they wish within their own borders — in Cambodia, Afghanistan, Angola, Russia, China, name it.

If Westerners wanted to be coldly realistic about the matter, they could adopt an attitude of limited tears. That is, there is simply too much misery everywhere for even the wealthy and courageous to combat. Western countries have their own problems and cannot cry for everyone.

That probably is the underlying feeling among most Americans, Europeans and Japanese. But conscience forbids such selfish realism. So Western governments are compelled to "do something" — without spending much money or risking any lives.

Thus the present approach of trying to pressure and isolate President Milosevic of Serbia and other Balkan killers. But these bad guys simply do not take outside peacemakers seriously.

The United Nations, the European Community and the United States keep on threatening the killers with ever greater diplomatic and economic sanctions. And the killers just go on about their deadly business.

American and European diplomats have no illusions about this. They are trying to put up as good a front against the killers as they think their domestic politics will bear. And the diplomats want to do everything they can within those limits to bring Balkan leaders to their senses about the long-term consequences of murder and civil war.

That is why U.S. and European officials were dismayed last week when Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali ordered U.N. peacekeepers out of Bosnia and talked of withdrawing all U.N. forces from the region.

It was a weak-kneed green light to the killers. And the Security Council voted quickly on Friday to correct this impression and reaffirm its peacekeeping mission. Yet the atmosphere at the U.N. is one of deep pessimism and resignation.

Everyone concerned with the Yugoslav problem knows there is only one decent chance to stop this horror: Peacemakers have to establish the only kind of credibility killers understand. They have to convince themselves, and then convince the Milosevics, that they are ready and able to use force.

European and U.S. leaders have gone much too far in slamming the door shut on even the possibility of using force. It seemed gratuitous, for example, for the State Department to reiterate last week that the Administration was giving "no consideration" to armed intervention.

Public opinion in the West would not be happy about intervention, but would probably give leaders some leeway. The trick is for the leaders to find a military course of action that would not worry Westerners about an opened-ended ground war, yet still jar Balkan leaders.

It would be best if such military planning were authorized by the U.N. or the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. But given the urgency of the situation, European nations and the U.S. have to be prepared to accept direct responsibility.

Above all Western leaders need to show resolution — even if only to announce planning to keep the Serbian air force grounded or to bomb military airfields and bases.

The U.S. and the Europeans have to show at least this minimum level of seriousness. Anything less would be a moral and practical self-delusion.

However messy this situation, it is too easy to say nothing can be done to cool historical Balkan hatreds. Perhaps the West would not be so cool-headed if Christian Croats were being killed instead of Bosnian Muslims. Hand-wringing realism and resignation will not answer the cries of the innocent.

Post-Cold-War ground rules for decency and humanity are being set in the Balkans today. The issue is whether they will be written by George Bush, Francois Mitterrand, John Major and Boris Yeltsin — or by killers.

Leslie H. Gelb's column is distributed by the New York Times News Service.

ANOTHER VIEW

Bush ducks global warming

President Bush could have used his foreign policy savvy . . . to provide leadership on an urgent environmental problem — global warming. Sadly, the administration seems to have done its best to render meaningless a United Nations treaty on global warming.

If . . . Bush has any hopes of building a strong environmental record — as he vowed in 1988 — he just booted a good opportunity.

The original draft of the treaty would have adopted a European Community standard requiring that emissions be reduced to 1990 levels by the year 2000. U.S. negotiators rejected that provision: The draft the Bush administration lobbied for simply calls for nations signing the treaty to assess their emissions, but contains no reduction requirements or enforcement provisions.

The White House has thus transformed a modest, reasonable proposal with measurable goals into one that is nebulous at best and gutless at worst.

Dealing with global warming will require more than just a commitment to try harder. While scientists cannot be sure of its effects, global warming could alter the world's climate, disrupting long-established growing seasons.

Wealthy industrial nations like the United States — which burn most of the fossil fuels partly responsible for the greenhouse effect — ought to lead the way to forestall this catastrophe.

The European Community proposal would have provided the United States and other industrial nations with a mechanism for doing just that. The U.S. government's own analysis showed that the proposed limit could be met in this country without excessive cost.

But for now, President Bush has rejected even the most modest first step. That's bad environmental policy and bad international policy for the president who claims a New World Order.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, May 21, the 142nd day of 1992. There are 224 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

One hundred years ago, on May 21, 1892, the opera "I Pagliacci," by Ruggiero Leoncavallo, was first performed, in Milan, Italy. (Pagliacci tells the story of a troupe of traveling performers caught up in infidelity and murder, and includes the famous aria, "Vesta la giubba.")

On this date:

In 1542, Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto died while searching for gold along the Mississippi River.

In 1832, the first Democratic National Convention got under way in Baltimore.

In 1840, New Zealand was declared a British colony.

In 1881, Clara Barton founded the American Red Cross.

In 1924, 14-year-old Bobby Franks was murdered in a "thrill killing" committed by Nathan Leopold Junior and Richard Loeb, two students at the University of Chicago.

In 1927, Charles A. Lindbergh landed his Spirit of St. Louis near Paris, completing the first solo airplane flight across the Atlantic Ocean.

In 1941, a German U-boat sank the American freighter S.S. Robin Moore in the South Atlantic.

In 1956, the United States exploded the first airborne hydrogen bomb over Bikini Atoll in the Pacific.

In 1959, the musical "Gypsy," inspired by the life of stripper Gypsy Rose Lee, opened on Broadway.

In 1968, the nuclear-powered U.S. submarine Scorpion, with 99 men aboard, was last heard from. (The remains of the sub were later found on the ocean floor 400 miles southwest of the Azores.)

In 1979, former San Francisco City Supervisor Dan White was convicted of voluntary manslaughter in the deaths of Mayor George Moscone and Supervisor Harvey Milk.

Graduates step forward to accept responsibility

It's graduation time and the following scene is now being played out all over America:

"Mom and Dad, you people have been so good to me during my formative years and I have never done anything for you. I want to make it up to you."

Buchwald

"That's very sweet of you, son. What do you have in mind?"

"Now that I've graduated and must behave like an adult, I'd like to give you my dog Sandy."

"For keeps?"

"Yes, Mom, forever. He's yours unless I change my mind."

"But you've only had him for four months. Don't you want to keep him a little longer?"

"I do, but I have to think of the dog. He'd be much happier with you. Around me he'd be with someone who blows in from Wisconsin one day and out to Katmandu the next. In your house he'd have a safe harbor."

"But, son, we already have a dog. We aren't looking for a new friend."

"Ordinarily you have a right to feel that way, but Sandy is different. He's young and frisky, and in a few months he will be housebroken and you can let him have the run of the place. Sandy can't do much damage as long as you show him who's boss."

"Son, I'm sure that you have thought this through, but has it ever occurred to you that if we were in the market for another dog we know where to get one?"

"That's what the guys at school said you would say. But, Dad, I'm not only giving you my dog, I'm also giving you his dish. You will have no expense whatsoever. Sandy would be really upset if I gave him to strangers. In this house he will sniff my scent and know that he is living where his master once did. Please don't look a gift dog in the mouth."

"Why did you get Sandy if you had no intention of keeping him?"

"Because I love animals and I had every intention of keeping him until he ate the drapes in my girl's apartment."

"She must have been upset."

"She said something very childish such as either Sandy goes, or I go. But that's not why I am giving you the dog. I'm presenting him to you because I believe that Sandy will help you and Mom — he'll give you a reason to talk to each other."

"We get along fine now."

"Dogs can work miracles for people when it comes to communicating. I learned that in Psych 204."

"Would you be offended if we didn't keep the dog?"

"Why should I be offended? Maybe some drug dealer will find him and make him his pet."

"If we don't take him, are you just going to kick him out in the street?"

"It isn't my decision, it's yours. If you don't want him, I'll have to do something so that he doesn't hate you."

"All right, we'll keep the dog, but you take him back as soon as you break up with your girl."

"Glory be. I'm blessed with the best mother and father in the whole wide world. If you hadn't raised me to be a mature, responsible person, I would never have had the guts to adopt the puppy in the first place."

Nation in brief

■ Kentucky lobbyist faces extortion charges

FRANKFORT, Ky. — A lobbyist who once was Kentucky's top harness racing regulator was indicted Wednesday on federal charges of extortion and conspiracy.

A grand jury charged John W. "Jay" Spurrier III with taking bribes in exchange for helping Riverside Downs track obtain favorable rulings from the Kentucky Harness Racing Commission, which he headed.

The indictment also said Spurrier passed $20,000 in cash to a public official who was not identified and not indicted.

Spurrier resigned as chairman of the commission in December after nine years.

He was the second person indicted in a corruption investigation of Kentucky government. Former state Sen. John W. Hall pleaded guilty to taking $4,850 in bribes in 1990 from Riverside Downs in the western Kentucky city of Henderson.

■ Legislator receives fine for shooting turtle

CARROLLTON, Mo. — A state legislator was fined $75 Wednesday for shooting and killing a turtle he thought he had injured with his car.

State Rep. Mark Holloway pleaded guilty to misdemeanor charges for shooting wildlife from a highway. Associate Judge David Thomas fined Holloway $75.

Holloway, a Republican candidate for state treasurer, told the judge he was driving on U.S. Highway 24 when he saw a turtle and heard a "thunk" as he passed.He said he stopped and fired three shots at the turtle with a pistol because he thought the animal was injured.

"I consider what I did the humane thing," he said.

■ Police chief fires officer for striking student

HARTFORD, Conn. — Saying his city is not Los Angeles, the police chief fired an officer who was videotaped striking a handcuffed student during a violent campus keg party.

Chief Ronald J. Loranger said the officer was not in danger when he struck a student at the University of Hartford on March 3, 1991, the day Rodney King weas beaten in Los Angeles.

An attorney for Officer Ezequiel Laureano, 29, who was fired Tuesday, said the chief bowed to political pressure due to riots that erupted April 29 in Los Angeles after a jury acquitted four police officers in the King beating.

"It's easy — if we hadn't had Los Angeles, Zeke Laureano would not have been dismissed," said attorney Albert J. McGrail. "This kid has been sacrificed to expediency."

■ 'Simpsons' gets credit for saving boy's life

AUBURN, Wash. — A woman credits an episode of "The Simpsons" in helping to save her 8-year-old son's life.

Karen Bencze said Tuesday her 10-year-old son used the Heimlich maneuver on his choking brother. He learned the lifesaving maneuver by watching the show.

Chris and Alex Bencze were home alone Friday when Alex began choking on an orange.

Chris stood behind his brother and squeezed his chest until the fruit popped out.

The cartoon episode opens with Homer gagging on a doughnut. Unlike Alex, Homer doesn't get much help. He coughs up the doughnuts as his friends at work look at a Heimlich maneuver poster — until they are distracted by a softball signup sheet.

Soviet economy was misjudged, CIA head says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The director of the CIA conceded Wednesday that U.S. intelligence had portrayed the Soviet economy as stronger than it was. But he insisted that, despite its faulty statistics, the spy agency accurately predicted the Soviet collapse more than two years in advance.

"The public should know that it was well served on such a critical issue by its intelligence services," Robert Gates said in a rare critique of the CIA's performance.

Gates' speech, prepared for the Foreign Policy Association in New York, was a response to critics who argue that, despite its tremendous assets and secret sources, U.S. intelligence failed to foresee the Soviet demise.

The CIA said repeatedly, beginning in 1989, that there was a "growing likelihood of a collapse of the old order," Gates said in his speech, entitled "CIA and the Collapse of the Soviet Union: Hit or Miss."

Citing several classified estimates dating to 1989, Gates said that in May 1991 the agency concluded that "the current political situation is highly volatile and could quickly unravel. . . ."

The day before the Aug. 18 attempt by Communist Party hardliners to overthrow then-President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, an event which set in motion the dissolution of the nation five months later, the CIA told top policy makers that "the danger is growing that hardliners will precipitate large-scale violence."

That document also described in detail the hardliners' efforts to prepare for a coup, although it did not predict the date, he said.

Gates argued that, from the start, the CIA "clearly described the chronic weaknesses as well as the formidable military power of the Soviet Union."

In an admission that confirms academics' suspicions, Gates faulted the CIA statistics on the Soviet Union that had been provided for years to policy makers. These figures, most of which were published regularly, were also heavily used by academics, banks and international financial institutions.

"Our statistical analysis . . . described a stronger, larger economy than our own analysis portrayed and than existed in reality," Gates said.

The economic model and statistical methods developed by the agency with outside help produced figures "which increasingly diverged from the portrayal of a collapsing economy and political system we were presenting to policymakers," he added.

These faulty statistics, say critics, served as the underpinning for the defense buildup that peaked in 1985 under President Reagan.

At a 1991 workshop conducted by the National Research Council, the research arm of the National Academy of Science, economists concluded that the CIA made "a major methodological error" by basing its figures on dollars rather than rubles.

The military burden, estimated by the CIA in 1980 at 12 percent to 14 percent of the Soviet gross national product, should have declined to about 10 percent in 1982 prices but was instead increased to 15 percent to 17 percent, said one participant, Frank Holzman of Tufts University.

A team of experts asked last year by the House intelligence committee to evaluate the CIA's Soviet estimates found that the agency "may have tended to overstate the size of the Soviet economy relative to the U.S. and, particularly, its military threat."

The need for CIA statistics arose from the absence of reliable Soviet figures, but reliable methods to obtain such statistics have bedeviled economists since the 1950s because of the vast differences between the U.S. market-based economy and the centralized, state-run Soviet system.

Gas blast kills one, injures 14

ROCHESTER, Mich. (AP) — A natural-gas explosion leveled a two-story building downtown during rush hour Wednesday, killing one person and injuring 14 others, authorities said.

The blast shattered windows of passing cars and glass storefronts of other businesses on the block, witnesses said.

Firefighters tried to go through the rubble to make sure no one was trapped, but initially were called back because authorities feared another explosion. Hours later, utility crews excavating the street were able to turn off gas to the building, and the search of the rubble resumed.

"There was a big explosion and we ran over there and the building was all down. There were cars near the building, and those people got injured," said Jeffrey Paul, who was eating in a nearby restaurant.

"There were cars that were in the street, and their windows were blown out by this explosion, and people were cut up," Paul said.

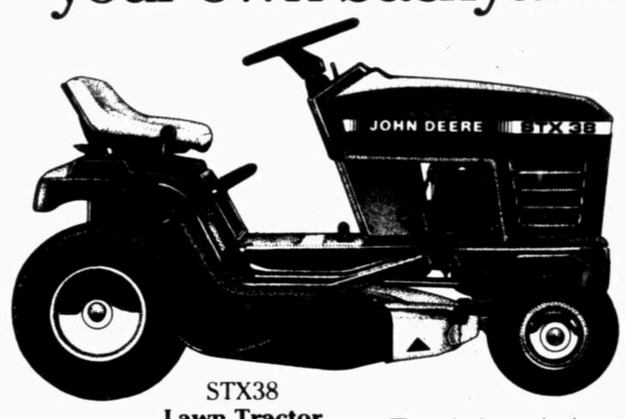

"It's a total disaster," said Charles Grady, who works at a nearby gasoline station.

Motorists driving by at the time reported suffering ruptured eardrums, and passers-by said they were hit by bricks and other debris.

Before the blast, a city contractor planting trees hit a natural gas pipeline outside the building, said Charles MacInnis, spokesman for gas supplier Consumers Power Co. Gas began to seep into the building, which the contractor ordered evacuated, MacInnis said.

Carter says Perot can't hide forever, plugs Gov. Clinton

ATLANTA (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter had sharp words Wednesday for Ross Perot, saying the Texan "can't hide all the way" through the election and suggesting Perot might be dodging stands because he's "ashamed" of his positions.

"I really look on Ross Perot right now as kind of anybody but the above," Carter said. He spoke outside the Carter Center after meeting for about 40 minutes with Democratic front-runner Bill Clinton.

With President Bush and Clinton now assured a fall matchup Carter said, Perot "has blossomed forth . . . as a symbol of disaffection with politics."

"Eventually, he's going to have to let the American people know what he stands for. He can't hide all the way through the season, when people are actually going to be addressing him as a potential leader of our nation," Carter said.

"He's been evasive so far, deliberately so. He brags on the fact that he doesn't get specific about what he's going to do about anything," Carter said. He noted that Perot hasn't provided specifics about education, health care, welfare, trade and other issues of the presidential race.

"He either doesn't have ideas now or he's ashamed or he doesn't want to share his ideas with the public because they might be unpopular. That can only go on so long," Carter said.

Carter said that "other than being a non-politican," what Perot had going for him was his ability to make money, which he did "using a lot of government funds."

Carter, who had earlier endorsed Clinton, said he did not offer campaign advice to the Arkansas governor because "what Gov. Clinton is doing right now is quite sound."

Before the Georgia primary in early March, Carter met with then-candidate Paul Tsongas but stopped short of endorsing any of the Democratic presidential contenders. He waited until April 1 — after Tsongas was out of the race and Clinton was the heavy favorite — to make an endorsement.

On Wednesday, Carter said he'd been with Clinton from the start and just made a practice of not endorsing during the primary season.

"His record in Arkansas, his plans for the future, are the ones that suited me from the very beginning," Carter said. In response to reporters' questions, he again voiced unease over Clinton's proposed middle-income tax cut. Clinton has not been stressing the issue lately on the campaign trail.

"I've never been in favor of advocating tax cuts when we have a deficit that's now approaching a half-trillion dollars a year," Carter said.

Clinton, asked if he was concerned that a link to Carter might associate him with "malaise," said Carter is "on his way to becoming perhaps the most distinguished former president in the United States."

Clinton said he talked with Carter about the former president's Atlanta Project, an anti-poverty project that attacks social problems in inner cities. Clinton said the program is the type of initiative that is lacking from the Bush administration's response to family values and urban problems.

Carter's project is "about taking action, not just talking. . . . It's about everything that this administration is not," Clinton said.

Clinton also took a shot at Vice President Dan Quayle's criticism of television's Murphy Brown in a speech blaming the Los Angeles riots on declining values and the breakdown of the family.

"We're not running for national preacher," Clinton said. "We have to do something. We have to act."

Senate passes bill facilitating registration

WASHINGTON (NYT) — With Democrats seeking higher turnouts at the polls, the Senate voted 61-38 Wednesday to make voter registration easier by allowing people to register by mail and as they renew their driver's licenses.

Changes in voter registration and limits on campaign spending have been the subjects of some of the most heated and partisan debate in the Senate this year, as Republicans and Democrats jockey to exploit or duck the electorate's cynicism and anger.

Several Democrats noted that the rise of Ross Perot as a likely independent presidential candidate is a reflection of voter disgust with both parties, an emotion they hope to redirect squarely at the Republicans as protectors of business-as-usual politics.

Senate Republicans have vowed that President Bush will veto the voter-registration bill, although the White House says he has not made a decision.

"We would likely veto it in its current form," a White House spokeswoman, Judy Smith, said Wednesday. She said that the bill would be costly for the states, that it could lead to fraud and that "the Voting Rights Act of 1965 already provides sufficient tools to challenge registration procedures that are discriminatory."

The House, which overwhelmingly passed a similar voter-registration bill two years ago, is expected to take up the matter again in a few weeks.

Democrats in the Senate lack the votes to override a veto, but they promise to make a political issue out of what they are portraying as a Republican effort to block electoral reform and to keep minorities and the disabled from voting.

Only six Republicans joined 55 Democrats in voting for the measure. Sen. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina was the sole Democrat against it.

Wednesday's vote came a week after the Senate failed to override Bush's veto of another measure that Democrats promoted as electoral reform, a bill that would have limited congressional campaign spending.

Sen. Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, who led the Republican effort to defeat the registration bill, characterized it as "a solution in search of a problem" because, he said, low voter turnouts demonstrated that the electorate was basically happy with its leaders.

And, he added, allowing people to register when they renew their driver's licenses is no guarantee of higher turnouts, since turnout has declined in 7 of the 10 states that have had such a procedure since 1972.

Republicans, who twice in the last year used the threat of a filibuster to block the measure from coming to the floor, say the bill will encourage vote fraud. Democrats, on the other hand, say Republicans fear that increasing the number of registered voters would add millions of Democrats to the rolls.

There is little evidence, however, that an increase in registration will lead to a considerable increase in voter turnout.

The measure, known in Congress as the "motor-voter" bill, would replace the patchwork of registration procedures that exists from state to state. It would require states to allow eligible citizens to register to vote at the same time they obtain or renew their driver's, fishing or hunting licenses.

States would also have to offer voter registration by mail and at the offices of state agencies like welfare and unemployment offices.

Engine fuel problems cause rocket launch delay

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — After last week's nail-biting shuttle mission, the organization that owns the satellite saved by spacewalking astronauts wanted nothing more than a quiet launch Wednesday of an unmanned rocket.

It was quiet all right. The launch was canceled because of a last-minute engine fuel problem, and the Atlas rocket remained on the pad. A new launch date wasn't set.

The Atlas holds the newest Intelsat communications satellite, smaller and simpler than the one caught by three spacewalkers.

"We hope to make the upcoming operation a lot more boring than the Intelsat rescue operation," said Marty Winkler, vice president of launch operations for Atlas maker General Dynamics Corp.

Three spacewalks, and an unprecedented three spacewalkers, were needed to capture the Intelsat-6 satellite and attach a rocket motor that shoved it into high orbit May 14. The craft was expected to reach its final destination 22,300 miles above Earth on Thursday.

No matter what happens to the newest satellite, called Intelsat-K, a rescue effort is out of the question, said Fred Ormsby, spacecraft mission director for the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization, or Intelsat.

The rescued Intelsat-6, bumped from the shuttle to an unmanned rocket following the 1986 Challenger accident, was designed to accommodate a rocket motor, Ormsby said.

The new Intelsat-K is not.

Like the Intelsat-6, however, the Intelsat-K is uninsured by the organization. The 122 countries that make up the consortium could take out their own insurance for the Intelsat-K launch. Some did, including the United States, the largest member with a 22 percent interest.

Intelsat officials were no more nervous than usual. Three Intelsat satellites have been sent up since a miswired Titan rocket built by Martin Marietta Corp. left the Intelsat-6 in a worthless low orbit in March 1990; all three were successful.

"This is another launch in Intelsat's 28-year history," said Tony Trujillo, spokesman for the Washington-based Intelsat. "We'll have sweaty palms, though."

For things that make your house a home.

Airport vendors bypass lottery

Airline tickets could share quarters with those for the new Texas Lottery, citizen airport advisers say.

Interested businesses aren't beating down the doors, but Midland International's airport advisory board has agreed that, in theory, selling lottery tickets at the airport would be fine.

The group has agreed to review on a case-by-case basis whether vendors could sell the tickets in the terminal. Airports Director Ken Day said he has received a few calls from people wondering about the possibility.

"We have had some interest displayed," said Ed Vogler, chairman of the airport advisory board. But, he added, there's not room in the terminal for a new business and as yet, no current occupants have said they will sell the tickets.

Staff report

Midlanders can celebrate the kickoff of the Texas Lottery May 28 at the Confederate Air Force World War II hangar.

The city is one of 14 across the state hosting kickoff parties for the game. Admission will be free and lottery tickets will be given away to celebrate.

Local residents are invited to join the Midland party from 5-7 p.m. Free tickets are on tap for every partygoer at least 18 years of age.

"We aren't holding one exclusive, high-society event because we want to make sure that everyone, everywhere in Texas has a chance to join in the fun," says a statement from State Comptroller John Sharp. "That's what the Texas Lottery is all about."

Comptroller's office staffers said food, music and giveaways will be part of the event, although details are not yet firm.

There will be free caps, t-shirts and ticket scratchers for party guests.

Meteorologist from Port Arthur assumes duties at Midland

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

Bobby McDaniel, 38, blew into town with the weather this week — as the new meteorologist in charge of the National Weather Service in Midland.

A meteorologist since January 1990 and a meteorological technician since 1972, McDaniel came from Port Arthur where he was NWS meteorologist in charge for more than two years.

"Last year in Port Arthur we had over 80 inches in rain . . . It's going to be a different climate" in Midland, he said.

"This is my first experience with a dry line. West Texas is one of the few places in the world that has it," said McDaniel, who has worked for the NWS in Oklahoma, Mississippi, North Carolina, Georgia and Alabama.

A "dry line" is a difference in air masses that acts as a trigger mechanism that many thunderstorms will form around.

McDaniel got his first taste of weather professionally after joining the U.S. Air Force in 1972. In 1974, he entered meteorology while at Shaw Air Force Base in South Carolina.

"It was interesting and a lot more complex than I thought it would be," he said.

"And challenging. It's not an exact science," McDaniel said.

Casino parties are against law, Texas AG rules

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin bureau

Around the state, numerous charities, civic organizations and even school districts have conducted casino parties to raise money for their operations.

AUSTIN — Texans can bet on horse and dog races, and on May 29 the state will enter the gambling business by conducting a lottery. But casino-type parties sponsored by charities to raise money are illegal, according to a recent ruling by the attorney general's office.

Casino parties usually feature Las Vegas-type gambling, using chips or play money. At the end of the evening, participants use their "winnings" to bid on prizes donated by area merchants.

Around the state, numerous charities, civic organizations and even school districts have conducted casino parties to raise money for their operations.

The opinion by Attorney General Dan Morales, however, said "casino games" violate the state Penal Code section on "making bets."

Rep. Ron Lewis, D-Mauriceville, chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee, requested an opinion on the legality of such parties on behalf of a member of his committee. Requests by legislators for opinions must come from a committee chairman.

Rep. Brian McCall, R-Plano, who wanted the ruling based on an event planned in that North Dallas community, said he will introduce legislation in the next session in January to legalize the games.

McCall said the attorney general's ruling puts district attorneys on the spot. He said a district attorney is not likely to act against fund-raising casino games by nonprofit organizaztions unless someone complains about them.

"But if someone complains, they would have to act," he said.

McCall's scenario, described in the opinion, said patrons would pay admission to a party at the Plano Civic Center on a "table by table basis." When those attending verified their table reservation, they would receive a certain amount of chips, and could buy

Bumper sticker reveals true colors of political 'recruit'

By Ron Hutcheson
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Campaign workers for Republican congressional candidate Steve Masterson welcomed the new recruit when he filled out a card volunteering to "help Steve Masterson defeat Martin Frost."

Their attitude changed when the new helper drove off in a truck bearing a Frost bumper sticker.

A little detective work — a call to Frost's campaign office — soon solved the mystery. As it turned out, Masterson's "volunteer," Todd Floyd of Dallas, was actually a campaign worker for the Dallas congressman.

"This is precisely the kind of politics that the voters are sick and tired of," said Masterson, who accused the Dallas Democrat of trying to plant a spy in his headquarters. "The dirty tricks mentality has no place in this election."

Masterson's aides said Floyd appeared stunned when they called him at Frost's Fort Worth headquarters shortly after he left their offices in the Dallas suburb of Duncanville.

"There was this deadly silence, and a gulp," said Masterson press aide Ken Scarborough. "It was kind of funny when it happened, but it really gets to be kind of aggravating."

Contacted at Frost's headquarters Wednesday, Floyd initially denied that he had visited Masterson's campaign staff. When told that Masterson had produced a volunteer card with his name on it, he said, "I don't think I should be talking."

Frost's congressional spokesman, Bob Mansker, said Floyd made an innocent courtesy call to the rival camp.

"The young man went by the headquarters to say hello," Mansker said. He said Floyd apparently mistook the volunteer card for a guest book.

"He just thought it was a sign-

Temptation by whim threatens peace of mind in tough times

These are convoluted times.

Hard times. Worrisome times. Troubled times.

Todd

And get-rich-quick times to a select few in the drug-trafficking business, in entertainment's tinsel world, and in the high-dollar sports business.

To most folks, it's a work-a-day world — hoping there's work to be done and paid for.

Bills.

They seem as constant as taxes, more frequent and just as worrisome, although it's unlikely that a bill collector will confiscate your home and other prized possessions unless the regulator is the mortgage company, the lien-holder on your car, the Internal Revenue Service or agents from some other taxing powers.

It's a world of money and debt.

It's a world of folks aiming to rope prosperity in a number of fashions: putting talents and skills to hard work, kicking in ingenuity, cunning and scheming to ring in somebody's else fortunes or paychecks in the courtroom or in the business world, and getting lucky in playing the lottery.

Good luck.

Counting on luck to win you a pot of gold is a long shot, such as winning the sweepstakes, drilling a gushing wildcat, or digging up a treasure in your own backyard.

That old literate sage, William Shakespeare, in Hamlet put forth advice for both the frugal and the spendthrift: "Neither a borrower nor a lender be."

Few folks follow that admonishment, which, if heeded by droves of people, would put banks, savings and loans, credit-card companies, mortgage companies and a lot of enterprises, except, among others, some New Age five-and-dime stores and cafes, out of business.

America is a land of business. So is the rest of the world.

Back in 1925, before the Great Depression of 1929 turned revelers into mourners, affluent folks into paupers, and gave rise to soup lines and Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal, Calvin Coolidge reminded a group of opinion-makers — newspaper editors — of the obvious: "The chief business of the American people is business."

Nothing has changed.

In one way or another, just about everything is business or depends on cash flow to keeping things going: families, churches, shopping malls, governments, shops and stores.

That's just the way things are and, including bartering of old, have been.

And times are still hard. And that probably is nothing new in the history of civilization. Times are either "good," "bad" or "flat."

And in any of those times, it seems about the best way to manage is to watch the spending of those nickels, dimes and dollars.

Watch out for temptation by whims.

Times are convoluted enough without further complications.

PARTY: Event at CAF hanger kicks off lottery

tery kickoff parties include Amarillo, Austin, Beaumont, Corpus Christi, Dallas/Fort Worth, El Paso, Houston, Laredo, Lubbock, McAllen, San Antonio, Tyler and Waco.

May 29 will be the first day of lottery ticket sales, beginning at 6 a.m.

"Lone Star Millions," a scratch-off instant winner game, will offer prizes ranging from $2 to $10,000.

Thousands of those tickets will offer players a chance to enter the grand-prize drawing, however. The game is touted to "create a new millionaire every week this summer."

One millionaire is scheduled to be picked June 18 in Dallas. That lucky player will be the first of seven chosen through Sept. 3.

With an independent auditor on hand to insure fairness, the winner will be chosen from seven finalists in a ceremony at the Plaza of the Americas.

Any ticket with the world "entry" three times can be entered in the grand prize drawing, but it must be mailed to the address written on the back. Players are urged to keep photocopies of both sides of their tickets.

Validity will be checked by lottery officials. They expect up to 80,000 eligible tickets to be placed each week in a 126-cubic-foot mixing drum at the Austin headquarters for the drawings.

After the first in Dallas, other grand-prize drawings are scheduled throughout the state, including Lubbock and El Paso.

The lottery, the choice of Texas voters in a Nov. 5 referendum, is about seven weeks ahead of the Legislature's July deadline to begin. It will operate with a staff of 186, headed by Nora Linares, lottery director.

If the lottery stays on its original schedule, other games may begin as early as six months from now, according to Sharp's office.

LOTTERY: Tickets not at airport of the restaurant, bar and store in the terminal, can't sell lottery tickets, a staffer said.

"We sell drinks, and you're not allowed to sell the tickets where drinks are sold," said Rita Kaiven, manager of Dobbs at the airport. "They've told us that's not how it's run."

Even at Dobbs' store on the bottom floor of the building — probably the most likely place for lottery tickets — the cashier is shared by the nearby bar. That makes the store ineligible, Ms. Kaiven said.

"We've looked into it, but that's probably going to be the definitive answer," she said.

According to information from the State Comptroller's office, there are other restrictions on ticket sales as well. Those ineligible to sell the tickets include persons with criminal records from less than 10 years ago, professional gamblers and businesses delinquent in any state tax.

New businesses may not be set up solely to sell lottery tickets.

more chips during the evening.

At some similar events, admission is free and open only to members and their guests. But McCall said based on his understanding of the opinion, any casino-type party would be illegal.

The opinion said a person commits an offense if he makes a bet on a game or contest, and "bet" is defined as "an agreement that, dependent on chance, even though accompanied by some skill, one stands to win or lose something of value."

It cited a previous opinion invovling an event sponsored by a school district that stated, "in Texas, three basic elements comprise the offense of gambling: consideration, chance and prize."

If all three are present at a casino party, it would be a violation of the law, said Ron Dusek, a spokesman for Morales.

The opinion said any money paid for admission or for chips would constitute "consideration." The games involve chance, and items donated by merchandise for "purchase" with the chips would represent prizes.

The opinion also noted that betting is excluded from the definition if it is part of a "bona fide carnival contest" and the value of the merchandise is not greater than $25.

The law also exempts private poker games at an individual's home, as long as the "house" doesn't take a cut.

you get. There is a lot of trial and error along with the science," he said.

"It's interesting looking at charts and data and saying you know what the temperature is going to be tomorrow," McDaniel said.

"It's a challenge to put out an accurate forecast," he said.

And what keeps meteorology interesting for McDaniel is the growing technology — especially radar and computers — in the field, he said.

One new tool is Doppler radar, which the NWS in Midland will have in about three years.

"That was the reason I came to Midland. I look forward to working with the technology. Midland's going to be a state of the art station in 1995," McDaniel said.

In addition, the Midland NWS will be upgraded from a weather service office to a weather forecast office.

McDaniel, who comes originally from Nashville, Tenn., said of Midland, "This could be home. I'm tired of moving."

McDaniel and his wife, Linda, have three children, Janis, 16, Cindy, 11, and Glen, 8.

His educational background includes a bachelor of applied science from Lamar University in Beauomont. He met meteorological requirements at the University of Oklahoma.

McDaniel replaces John V. Wright, 45, who left Midland in March for a promotion in Goodland, Kan. Wright held his position in Midland since October 1985.

in," Mansker said.

The top of the card says, "Yes, I will help Steve Masterson defeat Martin Frost," and invites Masterson supporters to designate possible ways that they can contribute to that goal.

Floyd checked the option for campaign volunteers, printed his name and signed the card.

A federal election law aimed at curbing campaign dirty tricks says, "No person who is a candidate for federal office or an employee or agent of such a candidate shall fraudulently misrepresent himself" in claiming to work for a rival candidate with the aim of hurting the rival's campaign. Violation of the statute is punishable by a maximum fine of $2,500.

"We were a little irritated that they'd actually come in and volunteer," Masterson said. "We have specifically instructed our volunteers to stay away from Frost's campaign office. We try to keep up with what he's doing, but I wouldn't try to put a spy on his staff."

Court denies Lucas rehearing

AUSTIN (AP) — Convicted killed Henry Lee Lucas' request for a rehearing of his appeal was denied Wednesday by the Texas Court of Criminals Appeals.

Williamson County District Attorney Ken Anderson said the court's action will prompt him within the next couple of weeks to ask a state judge to set a new execution date.

Anderson said that probably would start another round of appeals.

Lucas once claimed that he had killed hundreds of people in 26 states. But later, Lucas recanted his confessions for all but the 1960 slaying of his mother in Michigan.

He later was convicted in the 1979 slaying of a woman whose body was found near Georgetown, north of Austin. The woman became known as "Orange Socks," for the only item of clothing found on the body. She had been strangled.

The Court of Criminal Appeals in 1990 blocked Lucas' scheduled execution to consider this appeal. Last month, the court denied the appeal. Without comment Wednesday, the court rejected the appeal again on a motion for another hearing.

In his appeal, Lucas said he was deprived of due process of law because the trial judge failed to instruct the jury on considering his background of mental problems when his punishment was deliberated.

Danny Burns of Fort Worth, an attorney for Lucas, has said he will file another appeal with the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, and pursue appeals in federal court.

Burns said there was evidence that Lucas was in Florida when "Orange Socks" was murdered. Anderson said jurors heard evidence concerning the contention that Lucas was not in Texas when the crime occurred, but Burns has said the panel did not hear all the evidence that would support that claim.

Border lawmakers want help for region

By James R. Owen
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Lawmakers from areas bordering Mexico said Wednesday that nearly $500 million in federal funds will be needed next year to begin upgrading their region's overburdened bridges, roads and sewers.

But the politicians, members of the Congressional Border Caucus which submitted a request for $498.5 million to the House Appropriations Committee for fiscal year 1993, said they doubted they could persuade Congress to come up with that amount.

"It'll be tough, but we are going to fight for this money," said Rep. Albert Bustamante, a Texas Democrat whose district includes the border city of Laredo, which would get airport and highway improvements as well as a fourth bridge to Mexico under the blueprint. He said he hoped he and his colleagues could get half the amount they want.

Rep. Ron Coleman, D-Texas, who chairs the Border Caucus, noted that "it's a very difficult time to find the money we've requested." However, he predicted that at least some of the projects will be funded.

The spending proposal was developed by the lawmakers in cooperation with the Border Trade Alliance, a coalition of business, civic and governmental groups from Brownsville, Texas, to San Diego.

The request is a pared-down version of a wish list the lawmakers proposed in February, when they said it would take as much as $5.7 billion over five years to improve airports, housing, sewers, roads and bridges along the 2,000-mile frontier with Mexico.

The issue has become more important to southwestern lawmakers as the Bush administration nears completion of a proposed free trade agreement with Mexico. Some lawmakers said current federal spending on roads, bridges, sewage and water treatment is insufficient even without a treaty, which would boost commerce and traffic in the area.

Gretok: Charges against Meek hurt PUC

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Public Utility Commissioner Marta Gretok said Wednesday the agency faces some hard legal times caused by the "unproven" conflict of interest charges against former Commissioner Paul Meek.

Specifically, the PUC-approved TU Electric $442 million rate increase is being challenged because of the Meek conflict charges, Mrs. Greytok said.

"There have been some parties that have now requested that the commission be required to rehear the decision in the Texas Utilities case. That's the main one. And of course, it's a huge decision," Mrs. Greytok said Wednesday in Austin.

Meek, a Dallas oilman who chairs the board of Fina Inc., resigned from the PUC in mid-April after Attorney General Dan Morales advised him to immediately choose between the Fina board or the PUC.

Morales' office said Meek's positions presented a conflict because of Fina's direct and indirect sales of natural gas to electric utilities regulated by the commission. Morales threatened to legally remove Meek from office.

Mrs. Greytok said the TU Electric rate case is the only case so far that has been affected by Meek's resignation from the PUC. "The cities are using the fact that he stepped down," Mrs. Greytok said.

Mrs. Greytok said she has received questions from attorneys for cities who opposed the rate increases about her views on Meek's participation in the TU case.

She made her remarks as newly appointed Public Utility Commissioner Karl Rabago pledged to avoid any appearance of a conflict of interest in cases at the regulatory commission.

Rabago represented the Environmental Defense Fund in another case involving TU Electric's request to build four new electric generating plants.

McKenzie died Tuesday in Fort Stockton.

He was born Nov. 24, 1917, and was a member of a prominent pioneer Pecos County ranching family.

A lifelong resident of Fort Stockton, he served in the Texas Guard.

He married Billie Boatman on June 10, 1940, in El Paso.

Survivors include his wife, Billie McKenzie of Fort Stockton; three daughters, Cynthia Lynn McKenzie Harter of Midland, Melody Berry of Fort Stockton and Lisa K. Adams of Andrews; five sons, Kirke McKenzie of Big Spring, Dean P. McKenzie of Snyder, Mark S. McKenzie and Lance T. McKenzie, both of Austin, and Stephen C. McKenzie of Irving; five brothers, Bill Ed McKenzie, Lawrence "Buster" McKenzie and Greg McKenzie, all of Fort Stockton, and Roy Neal McKenzie and Bruce T. McKenzie, both of Bakersfield; one sister, Virginia Chapman of Emerald Bay; 17 grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren.

Pallbearers will be Birch Woodward, Louis Woodward, Frank Darling, Frank Daniel, Alpheus Harrall and Fred Deerfield.

Kenneth Acuff

CRANE — Services for Kenneth Eugene Acuff, 56, are set for 2 p.m. Friday at the First Baptist Church of Crane with the Revs. A.D. Kyle and Mike Evans officiating. Burial will follow in Crane County Cemetery under the direction of Richard W. Box Funeral Home.

Acuff died Wednesday at his Crane home.

He married Patsy Rudene Blue on April 12, 1957, in Crane.

He was a production foreman for Getty Oil and Texaco and was a member of First Baptist Church.

Survivors include: his wife; one daughter, Deborah Jean Tirmble of Crane; one son, Kenneth Marc Acuff of Odessa; two sisters, Cathy Roussarie of Crane and Carolyn Lee of Bronte; one granddaughter and several aunts, uncles and cousins.

Austin officer suffers injuries

AUSTIN (AP) — An Austin police officer was injured when dragged by a car while trying to arrest a burglary suspect, authorities said. The suspect said the officer beat him.

Internal affairs investigators said Tuesday they would investigate the allegation of excessive force by Officer Tobias Santiago, who was the center of a controversial shooting death of a youth in late 1990.

Santiago wasn't indicted in the shooting. A civil lawsuit ended with a jury finding that the city wasn't negligent. Santiago also has been cleared in other complaints alleging use of force in the past seven years.

About 11 p.m. Monday, Santiago was dispatched to a reported auto burglary in progress. According to a court affidavit, Santiago found David Hernandez, 18, holding a car stereo next to a Mazda with a broken window.

Hernandez tried to leave in a Buick, but the officer opened the driver's door and told Hernandez he was under arrest, the affidavit says. Santiago reported that Hernandez then hit him and began backing the vehicle, dragging the officer as he clung to the car door.

Woman in critical condition after shooting

Staff report

ODESSA — A 54-year-old woman remains in critical condition at Medical Center Hospital after she was shot once in the right leg Tuesday night, police said.

Bobbie Nell Green was found lying against a car in the parking lot of 323 Fitch Street shortly after the 8:30 p.m. shooting.

Melvin Riggins Sr. remained in the Odessa city jail Wednesday on an aggravated assault charge. Municipal Court judge J.E. Weatherly set bond at $5,000. He was taken into custody without incident.

School superintendents left-brained, study says

AUSTIN (AP) — It's not that school superintendents aren't in their right minds.

But a study at Texas A&M University says most superintendents lack vision to lead the education system toward change because they have left-brain behavioral preferences.

"People with left-brained thinking styles see no need for change. They see only the task at hand and utilize the same administrative behaviors from decades in the past; they have no vision," said Elly Soler, who conducted the brain hemispheric study for her doctorate in educational administration.

However, she said Wednesday, superintendents can change.

They can develop new skills, or build a management team that complements such useful left-brained skills as organization with right-brained attributes of vision and creativity.

Ms. Soler, coordinator for the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Program at the Education Service Center in Corpus Christi, conducted the survey in the 1989-90 school year. She is a former assistant principal at Flour Bluff Independent School District.

She used the Herrmann Brain Dominance Instrument to test a random sample of nearly 200 male superintendents and 22 women, from every size school district statewide. There are more than 1,000 school districts.

Texas had only 29 female superintendents at the time of the study.

Johnny Veselka, executive director of the Texas Association of School Administrators, said he believes superintendents generally have become more change-oriented, particularly in recent years as school reforms have been implemented.

Ennis blasts EPA tactics over lead disposal plans

ENNIS (AP) — Misinformation is fueling the fear of some Texas and Louisiana residents seeking to keep shipments of lead-contaminated soil from being dumped in their cities, an official said Wednesday.

The Environmental Protection Agency has warned officials in Ennis, Italy and Monroe, La., that if injunctions blocking transportation of the soil were not lifted by 4 p.m. Wednesday, the agency would file suit in federal district court.

City officials here scheduled a 2 p.m. meeting to ponder their next move.

EPA spokesman David Bary said the cities could be fined up to $25,000 a day until they comply with the agency's request.

"We're simply at a point where we have to take legal action. Either we get the access or we go to the courthouse," he said.

But Ennis City Manager Steve Howerton said the EPA was strong-arming the cities.

"There is no way to describe the shock and dismay we feel at the EPA's disregard for our civil liberties," Howerton said Wednesday.

City officials in Italy voted Tuesday to hire an environmental attorney before responding to the agency.

The EPA has proposed moving truckloads of the soil from a west Dallas Superfund cleanup site to the Avalon landfill, about 50 miles south of Dallas. Bary said the soil must be moved from Dallas because it has reached its 3,600 cubic feet capacity.

The agency is requesting access to the landfills under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act.

A state district judge's order already has blocked several routes to CSC Disposal and landfill in Avalon in Ellis County.

Howerton said the city opposes the movement of waste because truckloads soil would have to be driven across a mile-long bridge over Lake Bardwell, the city's sole source of drinking water. He also said that testimony provided by a certified toxicologist indicated the soil contains other toxic materials.

Texas executes man in murder of girl

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A visibly nervous and glassy-eyed Jesus Romero was put to death early Wednesday for the rape-slaying of a 15-year-old girl nearly eight years ago.

Romero, 27, was different from the cocky 19-year-old who giggled during his 1985 trial as witnesses testified how he took part in the rape, stabbing and beating death of Olga Perales near her home in San Benito in the Rio Grande Valley.

"Here was a young lady who never had an opportunity," assistant attorney general Drew Durham said after watching Romero die. "She was denied the opportunity of an education, having marriage, having a family. There's no telling what kind of resources the people of the state of Texas lost as a result of his actions. I think the punishment fits the crime."

Romero had no final statement. His attorney, Elizabeth Cohen, entered the death chamber and said she loved him. Romero, appearing near tears, stared intently at her.

He was pronounced dead at 1:40 a.m. CDT, seven minutes after the lethal drugs began flowing into the veins in his arms. He had little reaction to the injection, gasping a few times and uttering a single grunt.

The execution was the seventh this year in Texas and the 49th since the state resumed capital punishment in 1982. Both totals by far are the highest in the nation.

"I think for many people out there that this is a deterrent," Durham said of the death penalty. "I would have to say there are probably some that it's not. But I would have to say overall, for the lawful majority, this is a deterrent."

The state already was preparing for another lethal injection as many cases long in the appeals process neared conclusions.

Robert Black, convicted of hiring a hitman to kill his wife at their home in Bryan, faced execution early Friday. Black has been on death row since 1986.

"I think there is a significant possibility he will be executed on schedule," Durham said.

Black's crime attracted notoriety after it was determined he found the gunman by responding to a classified ad in "Soldier of Fortune" magazine.

Attorneys from the Texas Resource Center filed an appeal for Black late Wednesday afternoon with the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. That same court on Tuesday lifted a federal district court's order which could have blocked Romero's execution.

Dallas schools employ more than 100 felons

DALLAS (AP) — It's not illegal for the Dallas school system to employ convicted felons, but it's a violation for the district not to check criminal records. They showed more than 100 were felons.

District personnel include a number of murderers, robbers and drug pushers, The Dallas Morning News reported Wednesday in a copyright story.

"Many of these lied on their applications, saying that they had no previous convictions," Rodney Davis, a Dallas Independent School District spokesman, said Wednesday.

"There's no legal problem with hiring them; it's just the nature of their crimes," he said. "If someone is convicted of sexual or other heinous crimes, we don't want them in classrooms with the kids."

Hearings starting next month for 49 workers will determine whether they will be fired, said Robby Collins, DISD director of governmental and internal relations.

The district began reviewing its hiring practices after the newspaper's investigation revealed a total of 185 employees had been convicted of one or more felonies in Dallas County or had received probation through deferred judgement on a felony charge.

The DISD is checking records of other workers and will begin semi-annual record checks of all employees, said Superintendent Marvin Edwards. He adds the district may need to improve reviews of new workers' backgrounds.

More than 90 of the felons are food services substitutes, janitors or other lower-paid employees who had falsified food stamp applications, said Collins.

"That's an automatic felony. They were given deferred adjudication," he said. "But that fact was not reported from the county to the Texas Department of Public Safety, which we review for records reports."

Texas law since September 1989 has required the school district to make criminal record checks on all new employees.

District records show 47 employees have worked inside classrooms as teachers, teacher aides or substitutes.

The district in two cases employed people charged with murder. A custodian hired in October 1989 was awaiting trial on a murder charge at the time. He worked only three days and subsequently was convicted and sentenced to 40 years in prison in May 1990.

The newspaper said 33 employees had a drug charge for which they were convicted or received deferred judgment, with another 10 convicted or placed on non-adjudicated probation for robbery. Eight employees had an aggravated assault charge.

Alfred Fiandaca introduces his fall '92 collection to Tall City

By Elizabeth Edwin
Lifestyle editor

A little of New York came to Midland Wednesday as fashion designer Alfred Fiandaca introduced his 60-plus piece ready-to-wear wholesale fall/winter '92 collection at Julian Gold in the Colonade.

He will be at the store 9 a.m.-5:30 p.m. today to meet and talk with Midlanders about his collection and models will be on-hand to show his latest fashion in daywear and evening gowns.

Although he is showing his latest works, Fiandaca said his focus is not to create a whole new look for the season, but rather to help women blend the old with the new for an updated, classic look.

"I'm trying to make clothes that aren't just for one year or for one season. I want a woman to add to her existing wardrobe and build on what she gets from me," Fiandaca said. "No more can we discard last year's clothing. We must eliminate some things and add some things to update, using new fabrics with a new twist. The new fabrics have stretchability; they move better for the active woman."

By stretch fabrics, Fiandaca stresses that he does not mean the types of fabrics that are thin, clinging to the body and revealing every flaw. "These fabrics have more body, more weight, but they add mobility to the clothing," he said.

Fiandaca is particularly excited with these new fabrics.

"An advancement in technology of fabrics allows timeless fabrics that were stiff and heavy the ability to move naturally and flirty, yet feminine," according to Fiandaca. "The secret of these new fabrics is stretchability. Even wool gabardine has stretchability to fit the natural moves and busy schedules of women today. For evening, I even have lace that stretches."

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Fashion designer Alfred Fiandaca introduces his fall/winter '92 ready-to-wear collection exclusively at Julian Gold. In the background, Julian Gold manager Vicki Bailey (right) straightens the collar for model Bonnie Beard, who dons Fiandaca's favorite design of the collection: a black silk organza blouse hand-beaded in yellow worn with a gold satin skirt with layers of tulle underneath.

'Alfred is a sneak, he is always sneaking in something flirty or feminine into his designs.'

— Franklin Clemmons II
of Franklin Clemmons II Associates

A 25 YEAR VETERAN of fashion designing, Fiandaca is a New York/Boston bred haute couture designer who still produces made-to-order clothes.

"I can design for any individual," Fiandaca said. "A woman came in today with a sketch of a wedding dress she wants, and we can do it."

However, his focus for this show is his moderately priced, tailored ready-to-wear. Fiandaca's wholesale line ranges in price from $115 to $1,100, with a median price of around $325, excluding gowns, which are his favorite.

"I love the evening gowns. I love to see women shine," he said.

Many of his evening gowns feature hand-beading and hand-embroidery, and almost every gown features an accent in the hemline such as a dramatic slit or an uneven hem.

His favorite piece in this fall collection is a black silk organza blouse hand-beaded in yellow with a gold satin long skirt with layers of tulle underneath, accessorized with a wide wrap-around belt.

"It is so feminine, so opulent," Fiandaca said. "It is three separate pieces so you can wear the blouse with black pants, the belt with another dress, the skirt with a black blouse and a beaded belt. Each piece can move through the wardrobe and with the woman."

"Alfred is a sneak, he is always sneaking in something flirty or feminine into his designs," said Franklin Clemmons II of Franklin Clemmons II Associates showing a black skirt that sports red tulle underneath. "When a woman walks, you will see just a hint of something flirty with this skirt."

FIANDACA'S FALL collection features designs with softer shoulders, more natural shapes and waistlines. However, he doesn't claim that this is what you will see in other collections.

"I'm beating my own drum," he said.

"Alfred is not a stylist, he is a designer. A stylist takes a design and redoes it, but Alfred goes on his own," Clemmons said.

Fiandaca's love for color also can be see in his collection, with yellow being one of his favorite colors to use in his designs.

"It's (yellow) so bright and happy. It's like the sun," he said.

His collection in Midland will be sold exclusively at Julian Gold, and plans are for new fall pieces to continue arriving. And, if you like what he offers for fall, you can look forward to seeing his spring collection as well.

If you chose to add a Fiandaca design to your wardrobe, you will be in good company. He has designed for such names as Mary Hart, Joan Rivers, Joan Collins, Babe Paley, Mary Lou Retton, Jane Dudley, Shelley Winters, Dionne Warwick, and Mrs. Paul J. Getty, not to mention the empress and princess of Japan.

It also is believed that Fiandaca has dressed more United States first ladies and "would be" first ladies than any other designer. His list of clients includes Nancy Reagan, Lady Bird Johnson, Muriel Humphrey, Joan Kennedy and Kitty Dukakis.

THE SCOPE OF his talent also reaches to the military as he designed the uniforms for the U.S. Navy Women's Corp. for the 1990's. The last time the uniforms were designed was in the 1950s by costumer Edith Head. Fiandaca's design allows for more freedom of movement to match women's more active roll in the armed forces.

Many of Fiandaca's works are collected in the costume departments of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City, where he lives and has his showroom, as well as in the Cleveland Museum and the Kent State Museum, both in Ohio.

While Fiandaca is happy to give give women fashion advice, he hesitates to offer general statements about how women should dress.

"It varies from woman to woman. You must take their personality — who they are — into consideration."

It's no sin to show skin

Summer fashions dare to go bare with risque styles

By Kelly DeGarmo
N.Y. Times News Servcie

It's not a sin to show some skin. But before you dare to go bare this summer, get the latest on decent exposure.

Ten years ago, something as revealing as a lace bra worn under an open jacket would have been considered impossibly risque.

Not any more.

Thanks largely to trendsetter Madonna, many of these lingerie looks now are showing up under suits as acceptable alternatives to silk shells. However, that doesn't mean every bra is appropriate for show.

As with the season's halter tops, short skirts, clingy knits and hot pants, there are basic ground rules for wearing skimpy clothing.

Attitude is one key prerequisite.

"You have to mentally get yourself prepared to wear an outfit that shows some skin," says Susan Huston, fashion consultant and director of Dillard's Charm School. "If you feel self-conscious, you'll be uncomfortable and that's going to come through in the way you carry yourself."

Not only should a woman feel confident to wear revealing clothes successfully, but she must also act like a lady.

A TONED, WELL-EXERCISED body is another necessity. Body-baring fashions can be terribly unflattering if they reveal saggy breasts, saddlebags or flabby middles. But as more women become slaves to stair-climbing machines, this no longer is a big concern.

"I think women's bodies are better than ever before," says New York designer Michael Kors, who showed lots of skin-revealing styles in his spring collection.

Even so, there are very few women who can be bare everywhere, Kors says. Consequently, women should choose a part of their body they like best and focus on that feature.

Obviously it's important to consider the occasion and whether a body-baring top or skirt is appropriate. An evening pool party may allow such exposure while an office cocktail party demands more discretion.

"You shouldn't worry about what everyone else is wearing. If you feel good about the part of the body you're revealing, then you're going to look great," he said, adding that it's perfectly acceptable to go strapless during the day.

What you put with the skimpy piece in question determines to a great degree what kind of message it sends. Take for instance the sheer white bodysuit with built-in bandeau top, that can be found starting at $28. Pair this with ripped jeans, a black leather jacket and boots, and immediately it takes on a hard, nightclub look. But put the same bodysuit with a colorful chiffon skirt, acrylic jewelry and jeweled sandals, and sleaze is the furthest thing from the mind.

WHILE THE BODYSUIT resembles many of today's swimsuits, it doesn't necessarily mean you can substitute any swimsuit and get the same look. Because bathing suits tend to look cheap when paired with street clothes, Fort Worth, Texas, wardrobe consultant Jill Fortney warns against wearing them as tops, except maybe for a handful of styles, such as some cotton tanks and nonshiny kinds with sleevelike straps.

As far as accessories are concerned, "less usually is best," Fortney says. Wearing too much jewelry can easily cheapen an otherwise classy look.

"You don't want to look suggestive," she cautions.

In the same tacky family as accessory overload are panty lines. How many times have you bought something only to later realize that you don't have the right underwear for it?

Lingerie manufacturers finally are catching up with designers in creating bras, girdles, slips and pantyhose that work with today's body-conscious clothing.

Not only do they stay put — many actually have a slimming effect.

Vanity Fair and Olga both make stretchy girdle skirts in cotton/nylon blends that provide tummy, hip and thigh control and eliminate the need for underwear and a slip. These work beautifully under clingy knits and tight-fitting skirts and are available in both black and white with prices ranging from $20 to $35.

For women who want similar control and don't mind wearing pantyhose during summer, Hanes Shapers ($7.50 a pair) have a built-in girdle and come in both regular and queen sizes. Hue also makes opaque and fishnet tights with similar control.

WHILE SLENDERIZING THE hips, lingerie makers also are boosting the bust with several new types of enhancers and padded bras. Many of these bras can be worn as outerwear, as long as they have some structure to them (underwiring or stays, for example) and aren't see-through.

New backless bras, such as a one-piece bra-/panty by Olga, give women other options besides going braless when wearing back-revealing dresses. Not wearing a bra is fine as long as the breasts are firm and the top isn't see-through, Fortney says.

But just because your body isn't firm or model-perfect doesn't mean you have to wear an armor suit all summer.

There are subtle ways to bare the body. Off-the-shoulder tops with sleeves can be very flattering on women whose upper arms may be a little flabby. A chiffon scarf tied around the neck conceals wrinkles and at the same time gives a light, airy effect. Strappy sandals worn under a long gauze or wrap skirt create a bare feeling without exposing a lot of leg.

Because skin-revealing clothes demand more self-confidence, always try them on ahead of time, preferably with accessories, undergarments and shoes — particularly if you're going to a special event. Give yourself plenty of time to exchange the outfit before the big night in case you chicken out.

The bottom line: If you don't feel comfortable in it, by all means, wear something else.

Midland teen to compete in West Texas pageant

Staff report

Angel Strumpfer, 17, has been selected to represent Midland in the 1992 West Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant May 29-31 at Wayland Baptist University in Plainview. The pageant is the official preliminary to the 21st Annual Miss Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant June 11-14 at Texas Christian University in Fort Worth.

Miss Strumpfer, daughter of Jonathan and Pamela Strumpfer of Midland, is a student at Lee High School where she is a member of Dixie Dolls, Lee High Debate and Speech Team, the French Club and National Honor Society, and is in honors classes. She also is a member of the First United Methodist Youth Choir, Spirit Wind, which is a traveling youth ministry choir, and dance.

During the West Texas National Teen-Ager Pagenat, a regional winner and four runners-up in two age catagories — ages 13-15 and 16-18 — will be selected. The winner in each age group will receive a $1,000 Savings Bond, an all expense paid trip to the Fort Worth Pageant and full-tuition modeling scholarships from Barbizon and John Robert Powers, each worth $1,000. She also will be awarded over $29,000 in tuition scholarships from various universities. Each contestant will receive a $200 scholarship to Barbizon and John Robert Powers Schools of Modeling.

Contestants are judged on scholastic achievement-leadership, appearance and poise-personality. Contestants may present a talent or an oral essay on the subject of "What's Right About America." Contestants also have the option to participate in the Volunteer Community Service Program which teaches them to share and to participate in school and civic activities.

Angel Strumpfer

Miss Strumpfer is sponsored by Western Gas Resources and Dr. James Holman.

DEAR ABBY

Sometimes dad is better than none at all

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I must comment on the letter from "Jane's Mother," who resented the presence of Jane's father at their daughter's college graduation because he had contributed nothing to Jane's financial or emotional support since their divorce, and he didn't deserve to be there.

Van Buren

Abby, I am divorced, supporting two children and working two jobs because my "ex" has too many obligations to pay child support. He is in court-ordered treatment for alcoholism.

Every time my "ex" shows up at a ballgame or school function, or comes over to spend a little time with our children, my friends and family ask me why I allow it because he doesn't deserve it.

My answer? "Of course he doesn't deserve it — but that's not the point. Our children deserve to know that they have a father (however imperfect) who loves them as much as he is capable of loving." I don't need to constantly remind my children that I am a "better" parent than their father. Nothing makes me sadder than to see children caught between two battling divorced parents. Nobody wins.

Recently my children spent an afternoon with their father after several months of only telephone contact. That night, when I tucked my son in, he couldn't stop grinning.

I asked, "Are you happy you got to see your dad today?" He giggled and replied, "Yes!"

Abby, my "ex" didn't deserve that day. But my children did. — ANDY'S MOM IN INDIANA

DEAR MOTHER: Your children are lucky to have you for their mom, and your "ex" is lucky that his children are so well cared for.

Don't write your husband off. Your children are obviously young; let's hope their father will stick with the treatment for his alcoholism, and become a mensch.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 17-year-old girl who is sexually active with this 18-year-old guy who goes to my school.

We don't have a real relationship where he claims me and I claim him because he wants to keep down the talk at school, so we have to keep our rendezvous confidential.

Abby, do you think he has feelings for me like he says he does, or do you think he is just using me? — NEEDS ADVICE

DEAR NEEDS: I think he's using you. I know it won't be easy to stop having sex after you have gone all the way, but if you really want to do yourself a favor, give this guy no more than a goodnight kiss. And if that doesn't satisfy him, kiss him goodbye.

DEAR ABBY: Please tell your readers that Catholics CAN get divorced. What they cannot do is marry during the lifetime of a former spouse — unless their marriage is annulled or they get some kind of special dispensation.

My aunt, formerly in a very destructive marriage, was advised by her priest to get a legal divorce because it would be advantageous for financial reasons. She was forbidden, however, to marry again until the death of her first husband.

This is in no way a complaint against the church laws, simply an attempt to remind you that the church never insists that anyone stay trapped in a rotten marriage. It looks as if "Miserable in Moline" ought to get legally free of that irresponsible idiot who is not only unfaithful, but is spending family money where it shouldn't be spent. — PATRICIA MAYNARD, NEW HOPE, MINN.

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, and getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. AT WIT'S END

To make connection, know abbreviations

By Erma Bombeck

I used to kid a lot about the desperation of dating. I think I once said that my mother placed an ad in the local paper to get me a date for the prom. Got a big laugh.

Bombeck

But that was before we gave birth to a generation who played first and panicked later. The high school and college years for us were the turf where the ritual mating dances were conducted. This generation? They didn't mate. They just danced.

I hear the cry from my own grown children. Where do you go to meet men/women seeking a lasting relationship? In a supermarket? Bars? Church socials? Night classes? Traffic school? Recovery meetings? Salad bars? Garages for car repair? A fair amount of them are bored with the game of Cute Pursuit. They've gone public.

Some have put their future in the hands of video humiliation such as "Love Connection" and "Studs," where you not only have a limited choice of dates, you are also rejected in front of the entire world.

Dating services have sprung up like traffic signs, most of them computer-geared. The "in" columnists are the ones writing about how to market oneself, be competitive and make compromises as a single.

A few weeks ago I opened my paper to find out that my prom date threat had materialized. By calling a 900 number a MSF (male seeking female) or FSM (female seeking male) has two lines and four days to sell themselves to a prospective date. If they want more linage, the newspaper will charge them $7 for each additional line.

It has all the romance of selling a used car. After I strained to figure out the abbreviations — NS, no smoking; ND, no drugs; DM, divorced male; DF, divorced female — there were patterns to be noted. Most of the ad takers were men. They far outnumbered the women. The men described themselves as FL (fun loving). They all mentioned they loved to dance.

A retired military officer said he sought attractive, "stable homebody" — an oxymoron if I ever heard one. Another wanted someone to run outdoors with him and enjoy a quiet country life. (Why doesn't he buy a dog?)

The SFW (single female women) described themselves as full-figured. One said she had a sense of humor and was "relatively normal" (whatever that means). Nearly all specified wanting someone who could dance.

I married a MSF 43 years ago. He was FL too. He was also ND and NS. He quit dancing 15 minutes after I married him.

Platform shoes make fashion comeback

By Francine Parnes
Associated Press

Platform shoes, last seen as the perfect foil for 1970s fashions, are taking another turn — this time as a proper fit for the new, longer hemlines.

Appearing in a variety of guises with cork heels and soles, gingham uppers and quirky embellishments, the thoroughly modern platform is sharing the footlight with other golden oldies like mules, clogs and Birkenstocks.

"Platforms would have been too clumsy with short skirts," says Kelly Gray, designer for the St. John knits collection in Irvine, Calif. "But now the time is right, since shoes have to be more substantial and less dainty to offset longer skirts."

And platforms are popular for performing elevation miracles, particularly if they have 5-inch soles like the John Fluevogs worn by Madonna in "Truth or Dare."

Stilt-like styles notwithstanding, most of today's platforms are more akin to the genteel look of the 1940s rather than the corny clodhoppers of the Superfly '70s. They're downright feminine, often resting on soles only a quarter-inch thick, and they just might have staying power.

"With a long, tight black skirt and a great crisp white blouse, it's the look for the next 10 years," says Robert Balavender, professor at New York's Fashion Institute of Technology.

"We're keeping them very refined so that a year from now women will still want to wear them," says Warren Edwards, designer for Susan Bennis Warren Edwards footwear in New York.

"Most of the platforms we're seeing are of modified height," says Vivian Infantino, fashion director of Footwear News, a New York trade publication. "The sky-high towering platforms are not what's really happening in the market."

Offerings for the current season include Chanel's black suede sandal with ankle strap and cork heel, $615 at Chanel boutiques, and Yves Saint Laurent's purple, red and green satin sandal on mini-platform, about $210 at the Yves Saint Laurent boutique in New York. For a bit of whimsy there's John Fluevog's gingham mini-platform sandals with ankle strap, $125, designed to coordinate with Anna Sui's ready-to-wear collection. Sold at John Fluevog stores in Seattle, Boston and New York.

"Platforms are becoming more mainstream, particularly for the upscale fashion customer who wants to be wearing what's in style," says Eugenia Ulasewicz, president of Galleries Lafayette in New York. "They're the new shoe for the season, the new way to replace your basic black pumps."

The best-selling platform at Galleries Lafayette is Karl Lagerfeld's black pump, about $325, with 3½-inch heel and 1-inch platform. "We can't keep it in stock, and it's already on its third re-order," says Ulasewicz.

Some of the platforms are barely more than flats with a super-thick sole. Galleries Lafayette has private label slip-ons in four colors with rubberized sole, about $90.

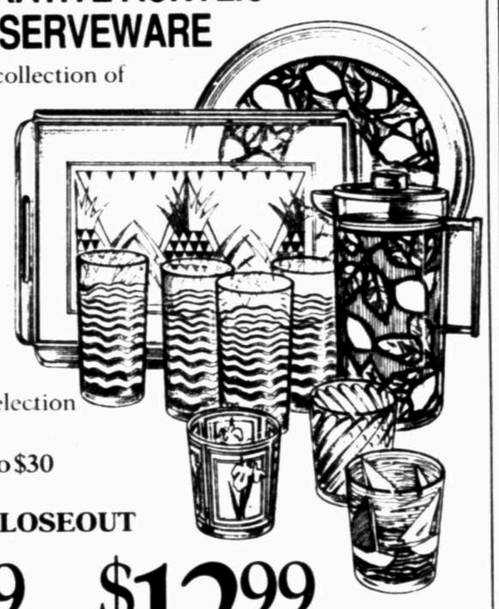

For a heavy dose of funk, Dolce & Gabbana offers platform mules with "Love" on one shoe and "Sexy" on the other. In straw, burlap or satin with a wood platform, they're $375 to $525 at Shauna Stein and Maxfield in Los Angeles and Ultimo in Chicago.

John Fluevog salutes the '70s with platform clogs in green, mahogany or black leather with flared heel and rubber sole. About $120. Fluevog's pastel patent leather platform go-go boots are $169. Hot pants and tube top not included.

THURSDAY, MAY 21, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Someone who always keeps you waiting for a decision may never be able to help you. Move on to more positive situations and people this summer. Seek influential allies in a campaign to improve your work environment or neighborhood next fall. Children will be especially eager to win your approval in December. Set a good example. The romantic outlook is rosy in February of 1993. A key financial goal moves within easy reach by next April.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: financier Armand Hammer, novelist Harold Robbins, actors Raymond Burr and David Groh.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A give-and-take attitude will improve home life. Devote at least part of the day to community affairs. A newspaper article could trigger a terrific moneymaking idea.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Today is a lot busier than yesterday! Complete old business before tackling a bold new plan. A private problem may sadden you. Avoid dwelling on what might have been.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Follow up on yesterday's developments and you could get results sooner than anticipated. A co-worker's new congeniality will help boost profits.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Private worries can play havoc with your love or social life. You feel irritated when people do not offer to pay their share of entertainment expenses. Romance improves when you are candid.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If you feel as if you are in a rut, today's events could prompt you to try a change in lifestyle. Do not be afraid to ask for assistance when tackling something new.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You are in tune with the infinite today and likely to have some worthwhile hunches about getting ahead. Good friends are the backbone of your support system.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The emphasis is on protecting your resources. Take off those rose-colored glasses before you fall for a friend's tempting financial scheme. You will certainly see the light of reason later on!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Someone's advice could put you in a strange mood; you would like to believe a tip or rumor, but skepticism is strong. Postpone making any serious decisions. Relax with a best-seller tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Seize an opportunity to latch onto a better-paying job or brush up on your skills. A computer is a good investment now. Drop a critical attitude along with old worries. Think positive!

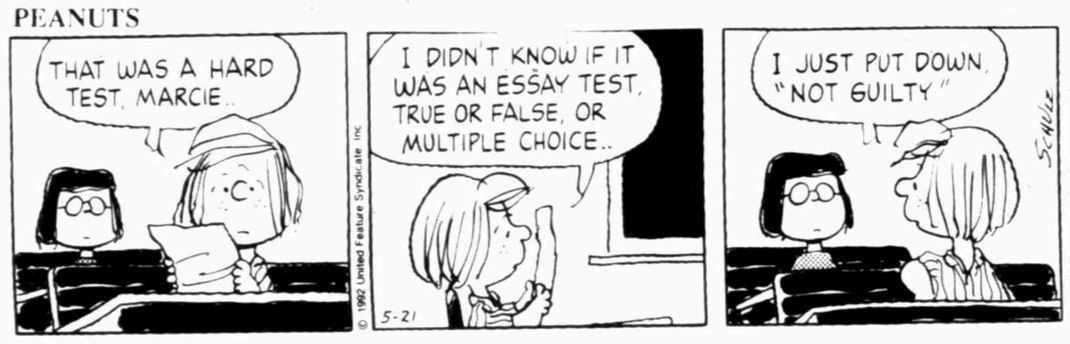

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An important relationship could be a trial now, and that is putting it mildly. It certainly is not the time to pursue a legal matter. Speak your mind during a philosophical debate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Regular correspondence could brighten the outlook for a long-distance romance. Some of you will say "yes" to a proposal, or make one yourself! Discuss any potential problems with a close friend.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): By taking advantage of every twist and turn of opportunity, you can quietly accomplish great things. Pay more attention to your home or finances.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are energetic, witty and versatile. These youngsters do not like to be pinned down, and that includes adhering to a daily schedule. Quick learners, these gregarious Geminis often take to foreign languages like a duck to water. These children's superior manual dexterity is revealed by their interest in construction toys — and the way they like to disassemble household items. A career in architecture or engineering is a strong possibility.

Opening lead: King of ♢ Competent defenders can sometimes instill in declarer a false sense of security. Watch St. Louis expert Ron Smith at work on this hand from the Spring North American Championships in Pasadena, Calif.

South certainly held nothing back in the auction. After opening an aceless hand with only 10 high-card points, he went on to game after receiving an invitational raise from partner. There are those who would claim that South fully deserved the fate that befell him.

West led the king of diamonds and continued the suit, declarer ruffing. Dummy was entered with the ace of spades and a heart was led to the nine. Smith contributed the three!

Impressed by the success of the finesse declarer cashed the king of spades, ruffed a spade with the jack as West discarded a club and repeated the trump finesse—and the roof fell in.

Smith took the queen of hearts, cashed the ace to draw all the trumps, then ran off four diamond tricks to inflict a four-trick set on the hapless declarer.

This hand contains a valuable lesson. If you can afford to hold up winning a key trick, it is usually right to do so. It might cause declarer to misread the hand, or spend a vital entry in a useless cause.

John Jr., Caroline recall family time during White House years

NEW YORK — John F. Kennedy Jr. and his sister, Caroline Kennedy Schlossberg, remember chewing gum and happy times while their father was in the White House.

Kennedy

Kennedy who was a toddler when his father was assassinated said he remembered crawling around in a big desk. "And he used to give us chewing gum because my mother didn't like us to chew gum. So we used to go over to the Oval Office at night and he'd feed us gum."

The two Kennedy children, both now lawyers, were interviewed by Jay Schadler for ABC-TV's PrimeTime Live for a show to be broadcast tonight.

Schlossberg said she recalled "a lot of happy family times."

"You have to remember," her brother said, "it's difficult for us to discern much about him independently of what other people's impressions are."

As for assassination theories, Kennedy said: "I'll just leave it to people to quarrel about or discern or analyze ... and just walk away from it."

On Wednesday, the brother and sister took a ride in New York harbor on the JFK aircraft carrier, which Schlossberg christened 25 years ago.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Country music star Hank Snow will have a special exhibit in his honor at the new Grand Ole Opry Museum opening Friday.

Personal items on display will include guitars and performing suits.

Snow is best known for his record "I'm Moving On."

CORONA, Calif. — Elizabeth Taylor's husband, Larry Fortensky, is appealing a drunken-driving sentence of three years' probation that included a ban on driving except for business.

Fortensky, who entered a no contest plea Tuesday, also was fined $1,178 and ordered to attend an alcohol abuse program. The incident occurred in 1987.

Municipal Judge Michael Flynn postponed the start of the sentence to July 31 after Fortensky appealed.

In November, Fortensky pleaded guilty in another drunken-driving case. He paid a $200 fine and participated in a six-month alcohol abuse program.

The construction worker and Miss Taylor were married in October. They met four years ago while undergoing substance abuse treatment at the Betty Ford Center.

NEW YORK — Alec Baldwin, who has been nominated for a Tony Award for a role Marlon Brando made famous, says he plays the character from "A Street Car Named Desire" differently.

"Brando always said he never saw the humor of the character, but I think he's a real wise guy. I had to make it funny for myself, so I could do it every night of the week for three hours," Baldwin said.

Baldwin says he's the first to not imitate Brando's version of Stanley Kowalski. "Everybody who's done the role since 1947 has ripped him off."

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — The rock band Aerosmith has donated $10,000 to replace a grant denied by the National Endowment for the Arts because the planned exhibit included some nudity and graphic use of body parts.

"We're angered to see artistic and personal freedoms erode," the band, which got its start in Boston 20 years ago, said Tuesday. "We want the exhibit to be there for whomever wants to see it."

The donation will help pay for "Corporal Politics," an exhibition scheduled to open in December at a Massachusetts Institute of Technology museum.

NEW YORK — Oprah Winfrey is the television talk show host with the most fans, according to a Harris Poll released Wednesday.

The poll found that 31 percent of the 1,251 adults surveyed nationwide in late April said Winfrey is the talk show host they most like to watch. The retiring Johnny Carson got 16 percent followed by Phil Donahue with 13 percent.

Lagging were Arsenio Hall and Geraldo Rivera, both with 9 percent; David Letterman, 7 percent; Jay Leno, 5 percent; and Joan Rivers, 3 percent.

The results have a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

INDIANA, Pa. — The hometown of Jimmy Stewart marked the actor's 84th birthday Wednesday by naming the street he grew up on after him.

Part of Seventh Street will be known as "Jimmy Stewart Boulevard," said Mayor John Varner. He said the town, about 40 miles northeast of Pittsburgh, is waiting to put up new signs until Stewart can return for a ceremony.

The town marked Stewart's 75th birthday by putting a bronze statue of him in front of the courthouse. A Christmas festival named for one of the actor's best known movies "It's A Wonderful Life Christmas" is planned this year.

Noirin Kenny of Ireland looks at the site of the first well drilled in the Batson oil field

Contest winner picks Batson for destination

By Sulipsa Luque
Associated Press

BATSON — Noirin Daly Kenny of Ireland wove a romantic tale of cowboys and oil gushers, based on family legend and spaghetti westerns, to win a radio contest offering the trip of her dreams — to Batson.

Kenny arrived in the rural East Texas town of about 1,100 people Monday night after a nine-and-a-half-hour trip from her hometown in Dundrum, Ireland.

"I'm mad about westerns and Texas," said the small woman, who declined to give her age. "The fascination was there with me since I was young, so being here is fantastic."

She proposed a trip to Texas to visit the Ada Belle oil field, a spin-off of a company started in 1903 by her cousin, James Donohoe, and his business partner, John Cashen.

"I told them I wanted to go to (Donohoe's) home and feel his presence, go to his grave to plant shamrocks, and blast down a dusty road in the back of a pickup truck wearing a Stetson and singing 'The Yellow Rose of Texas,'" she said.

Kenny was one of three winners selected from about 500 entries in an Irish National Radio monthly contest called "Last Chance," said program producer Ann Walsh.

The first winner was an avid "Gone With the Wind" enthusiast who participated in a staged Civil War battle in Atlanta.

"When I heard about the guy who went to Atlanta, I felt I had a better story than that," Kenny said. "I felt disappointed I had not taken the bull by the horns and written the letter."

Kenny sent in a letter when she discovered the contest was an ongoing promotion. She forget about the entry until late March, when the station called her.

"At first I thought it was a prank, but when I got the call telling me I won, I cried," she said. "I just couldn't believe it. They asked me where was Batson. They couldn't find it on the map."

The town is about 35 miles northwest of Beaumont in Hardin County.

By late Tuesday, Kenny had planted the shamrocks on her cousin's grave and taken her pickup ride, wearing his old Stetson. At 3 a.m. Wednesday, she reported back to more than a million Irish radio listeners through a broadcast telephone conversation. "I have a fantastic story," Kenny said.

Her story started with Donohoe's visit to Ireland in 1908 in search of relatives, which began a correspondence between continents over the next 84 years. "From the time he visited, my mother corresponded with him," Kenny said. "My mother would say, 'I'm going to write to the Yankee.' I started writing him when I was 6 years old. He used to send me comics — Roy Rogers, Hopalong Cassidy and the Lone Ranger. I would ask him if there were cowboys (in Batson)."

When Kenny's grandmother died in 1919 , her mother, Mary Reilly, and aunt, Susan Reilly, planned to move to Batson to live with Donohoe but changed their minds. "My mother never regretted that, but she was very curious to see what our lives would have been like," she said.

Kenny said she first learned about the old west from a film she saw in Dublin in 1949. "They used to show series like Flash Gordon and Superman and a western for 4 cents," she said. "The western was the one I liked. I was always at the edge of my seat. I used to say 'I should have been over there. I could have had a cowboy dad.' "

Her relationship with Donohoe continued through letters, even after her mother died. She sent him shamrocks every St. Patrick's Day until he died in 1963. "He used to talk about dust storms. and he liked politics because he was a Democrat," she said.

"He talked about the oil wells. They fascinated me, and every time I saw a gusher (in a movie), I would go, 'Yahoo!' "

In 1961, Maxine Johnston and Alice Cashen, two close family friends of Donohoe's, visited Kenny and her family in Ireland. The women began a correspondence that continued after Donohoe's death.

Kenny is staying with Johnston, who lives in Donohoe's old family home.

This Saturday, Batson is throwing a town party, where people who remember Donohoe will swap tales about his life. She has only one other goal she hopes to satisfy before leaving Sunday — to get herself some real Texas cowboy boots.

Federal agents to check juror death threats

DALLAS (AP) — Death threats against Dallas jurors during the same week as California riots could prompt an investigation soon by federal prosecutors.

Three Dallas jurors received anonymous phone calls that they would die if they convicted a county commissioner. The calls came the day after three Los Angeles police officers were acquitted in a videotaped beating.

Dallas County District Attorney John Vance said Tuesday that U.S. Justice Department officials in Washington haven't determined whether their civil rights or criminal division will investigate the threats.

"It's still up in the air who's going to do it," Vance said.

Vance did not immediately return a telephone call Wednesday from The Associated Press. A Justice Department spokeswoman said Wednesday she did not have details on the agency's plans.

Verdicts in black motorist Rodney King's beating sparked rioting that killed 51 people, injured thousands and caused more than $750 million in damage.

Dallas County Commissioner John Wiley Price, who also is black, was acquitted May 11 of felony assault charges. Assistant District Attorney Mike Gillett said he also received a death threat during the trial.

One Dallas juror was excused after the April 30 threats. However, it was not clear whether she had received a threat.

Gillett said the Justice Department would probably decide this week how it plans to proceed.

It was Price's second trial on charges he deliberately broke carpenter Timmy Don Short's leg during a scuffle Aug. 2 outside his county office. Short was working on the set for the movie "Ruby".

State moves quickly to verify Perot petition signatures

AUSTIN (AP) — Verification of petition signatures submitted to win Dallas billionaire Ross Perot a place on the Texas presidential ballot is moving swiftly, election officials said Wednesday.

The count may be finished in as soon as two weeks, said Tom Harrison of the secretary of state's elections division.

"It's going a lot smoother than we anticipated. I would hope that in the next couple of weeks we'll be able to finalize it and give the results to Secretary (of State John) Hannah," Harrison said.

Perot joined supporters last week in presenting about 231,000 petition signatures to Hannah at a rally on the Capitol lawn.

To qualify for a spot in the November election, Perot needs 54,275 signatures of registered voters who didn't cast ballots in the Republican or Democratic presidential primaries.

Perot in February announced that he would run as an independent presidential candidate if supporters placed his name on the ballots in most states. Since then, petition drives have been started across the country.

Texas' May 11 deadline was the nation's earliest, but Perot already has been certified for the ballots in four other states: Tennessee, Utah, Maine and Delaware. Florida supporters this week submitted more than three times the 60,312 signatures needed for that state's ballot.

Harrison said Texas officials are in the process of making certain that those who signed Perot's petitions were registered to vote in the state and that they didn't cast ballots in the March 10 presidential primary.

Katy Davis, spokeswoman for Hannah, said the secretary of state's office would release no numbers until verification was completed.

Harrison said Perot's backers helped speed up that process by submitting a well-organized group of petitions.

EPA selects 11 Texans for environmental panel

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Eleven Texans have been named to a panel that will help federal regulators implement a plan to clean up the U.S.-Mexican border and an El Paso man will lead the committee.

The 24-member board also includes 13 residents of California, New Mexico and Arizona. The board members were announced Tuesday.

The board's chairman is Nestor Valencia, a former city planning director and current president of planning for the El Paso Community Foundation. He is one of three members of the board from El Paso.

An EPA plan for the border announced this year has been roundly criticized by many people who live there. Those critics say it had few new initiatives and was written with little input from border residents. The plan is an integral part of free trade negotiations with Mexico.

"The plan has had problems since it was first presented," said Valencia. "I feel the committee can make an important contribution because it includes many local representatives from along the border who are nongovernmental and nonpolitical."

Valencia said air pollution is one of the main problems for the EPA and its Mexican counterparts to deal with. Other priorities are sewage treatment and the lack of adequate housing and water in El Paso and neighboring Ciudad Juarez, Mexico.

"As we know some of the most serious problems along the border relate to the colonias, and most of those colonias are not in New Mexico, not in California, not in Arizona. They're in Texas," he said.

The other Texas members are:

Edward Archuleta, El Paso Water Utilities Public Service Board general manager; Deyaun Boudreaux, Texas Shrimp Association in Laguna Vista; Mary Lou Campbell, Sierra Club of South Padre Island; Anthony Covacevich, Hidalgo County, Edinburg; Dr. Margaret Wells-Diaz, Brownsville Medical Center, Brownsville; Noe Fernandez, Texas Water Development Board, McAllen; James Matz, Valley Proud Environmental Council, Harlingen; Victor Oliveros, City of Laredo Health Department, Laredo; Lee Weathersbee, rancher and former Del Rio City Council member.

Game moved

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Southwest Conference athletic directors voted Thursday to move the 1993 football game between Southern Methodist and the University of Texas from Dallas to the new Alamodome in San Antonio.

The action still must receive approval from the SWC council and then would be final within 30 days if there is no objection from conference presidents.

The athletic directors approved the measure during the annual SWC spring meeting, which runs until Friday.

The 65,000-seat domed stadium is scheduled for completion in March 1993. Earlier this spring, Southwest Conference officials gave approval for the Houston-Texas Tech game to be played at the Alamodome in 1993-94.

'Murph' out

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Outfielder Dale Murphy of the Philadelphia Phillies will undergo arthroscopic surgery Thursday to determine the cause of continual fluid buildup in his left knee.

Murphy was placed on the 15-day disabled list Tuesday and sent home to Atlanta to visit his personal physician, Joseph Chandler. Knee problems also put him on the disabled list April 14 through May 7.

The Phillies said Chandler will perform the exploratory surgery, which also is designed to cure an infection in Murphy's knee.

The Phillies said Murphy will be out at least a month.

Murphy has experienced trouble with the knee since he reported to spring training in March. The knee has been drained three times and flushed once to remove loose particles in the kneecap.

Since coming back May 8, Murphy has one hit in 25 at-bats with eight strikeouts.

Bulldogs unveil new offense

By Bill Price
Staff writer

Midland High will showcase its new football scheme tonight, as the Bulldogs close spring training with their annual spring game at 7 p.m. at Memorial Stadium.

New head coach Ronnie Reeger and his staff will display their offense and defense in the game, though the 4-3 defensive front is much the same as the one used by former coach Davis Corley.

On the offensive side of the ball, MHS has taken a page from the Odessa Permian book of success and installed the Wing-T. And that, Reeger said, is where much of the emphasis for tonight's game will be put.

"Naturally, the offense is going to be a little more important to us as this stage," said Reeger, who has begun the effort of reviving a program that went winless in 1991.

"We are going to split our kids into two equal groups on offense and defense and try to get some continuity as far as moving the ball. We will take the groups of backs and linemen we want to work on offense and see who works best together. We will be moving some kids back and forth from offense to defense."

'We're going to go about two hours and try to get in 90 to 100 plays.'

— Ronnie Reeger, Midland High head football coach

Another reason Reeger has eschewed the "No. 1 offense vs. No 1 Defense" plan is because of necessity. A lack of depth has spawned no less than five players being penciled in as starters going both ways, making that concept impossible.

Missing tonight will be any semblence of a kicking game since Reeger has opted to devote the time incorporating the offense.

"We're going to go about two hours and try to get in 90 to 100 plays. We are just going to start a drive and see what we can do," Reeger said.

Tonight's game ends three weeks of spring training under Reeger. Odessa Permian and Abilene Cooper were the only other teams in District 4-5A to hold spring drills this year.

Midland Lee opted not to have spring training for the second year in a row and the Rebels, under coach Earl Miller, will get to start an week earlier than Midland High when fall practices resume in August.

Also gone is the former title of the game. Officially dubbed the "Midland High Spring Football Game," the game will no longer bear the name of former Bulldog Bill Mims.

Mims, who died last winter, was permanently disabled while playing football for MHS in the 1950s, when he suffered a neck injury.

Proceeds from the game had previously gone to help pay Mims' expenses.

Jazz, Cavs need NBA playoff lift

■ Utah, down 2-0 to Portland, fear that year's home record won't be enough to slow the Trail Blazers.

By Bob Mims
AP Sports Writer

SALT LAKE CITY — Down 2-0, Utah is counting on Fortress Delta Center to spark a comeback in its Western Conference finals showdown against Portland.

But the Jazz fear their NBA-best 43-4 record at home may not be enough against the Trail Blazers in Game 3 Friday night, not with Terry Porter's hot hand.

Porter had 41 points on 12 of 14 shooting as the Trail Blazers routed Utah 119-102 Tuesday night at Portland to take a commanding lead in the best-of-7 series. In two games against the Jazz, Porter has hit 20 of 26 shots — including 10 of 13 from 3-point range.

"When he's shooting like he is, you can't do a lot about it," said a frustrated John Stockton, who has been guarding Porter. "We hope some of that heat leaves his hand."

While Porter stole the spotlight Tuesday, Clyde Drexler — the Trail Blazers' steady, consistent star — had 36 points and 12 assists. Together, the two make a guard duo that hurts Utah where it least can afford it — on the perimeter.

"They're pulling up and taking shots from long range — the kind of shots you want to give them — and they're hitting them," said Jeff Malone, who has tried to check Drexler. "It's frustrating and demoralizing."

"They're so strong," Utah coach Jerry Sloan said. "They're as tough a pair of guards as you'll find in this league."

The Jazz took Wednesday off, but return to practice Thursday hoping to find a way to salvage their first-ever bid for the West crown. Game 4 is Sunday, and a fifth game, if needed, is scheduled Tuesday at Portland.

"What we need to do is go home and be as competitive as we can be," Sloan said. "This team has always come back. Hopefully, the home crowd and altitude will help us a little."

Salt Lake City is 4,390 feet above sea level, but Drexler said even that might not make any difference.

He even hinted at the possibility of a Portland series sweep.

"Terry not only scored at will, but he made Stockton pay every time he handled the ball," Drexler said. "We play this way and I think we can end it down there."

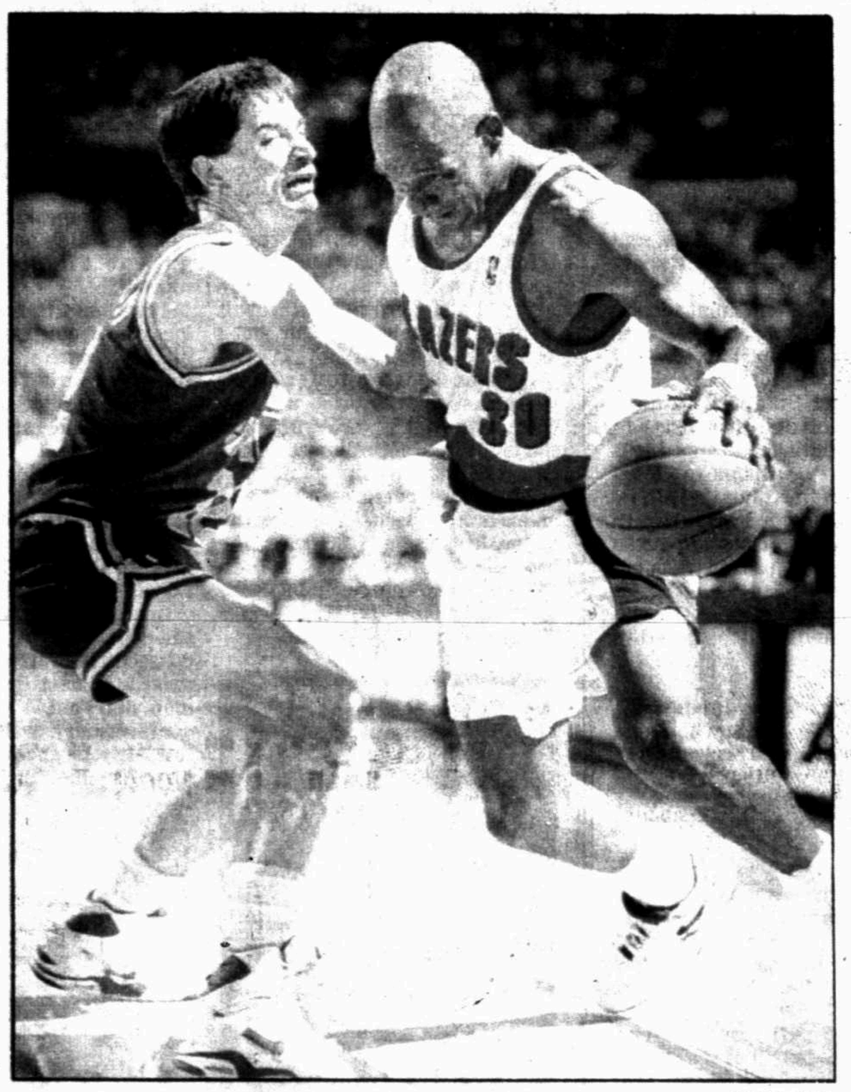

Porter wasn't taking anything for granted.

"Knowing the Utah Jazz and Jerry, they're going to come awful hard at us on Friday and we have to be ready to respond to that," he said.

Trail Blazers coach Rick Adelman also avoided predictions, but said as long as Porter and Drexler remain hot, Utah will be hard-pressed to regroup.

"When these guys get on a roll, we're hard to beat," he said. "We're just going to keep riding them as long as we can."

That ride will end Friday night before 20,000 Delta Center fans, if the Jazz have anything to say about it.

Not even the defensive charms of Utah's John Stockton, left, has been able to slow the hard charging Terry Porter of Portland.

■ Cleveland hopes to lose marshmallow image in a hurry against the Bulls.

By Bill Barnard
AP Basketball Writer

CHICAGO — The Cleveland Cavaliers, characterized by the Chicago media as marshmallows and cream puffs, aren't taking the labels personally.

What they're taking personally is the way they played in a 103-89 loss to the Chicago Bulls in the opener of the NBA's Eastern Conference finals.

"Sticks and stones can break our bones, but words will never hurt us," Cavs guard Craig Ehlo said Wednesday. "They can label us any way they want. We're in the conference finals because we played well all season long. What they say is just words.

"If my wife called me a marshmallow, I'd be upset. I was more upset about the way we played."

Ehlo said the Bulls will learn in Game 2 Thursday "that they still have a struggle on their hands."

The Bulls were only slightly more diplomatic than the media in their description of Game 1 compared to their tough seven-game series against New York.

"We're back to playing real basketball, not hockey," Bulls forward Horace Grant said. "We had fun out there. No punches, no scratching, no clawing, no kicking, no shooting, no murder. You can bring the kids to see a game like this."

"When teams win the first game, they can say whatever they want," Cleveland coach Lenny Wilkens said. "But the fact is, we had an emotional drain after playing a seventh game against Boston. We'll be motivated to come out hard in the second game because we weren't happy with the way we played, not because of what anyone said. We have to continue doing the things that helped us win 57 games in the regular season."

Wilkens said there's "a psychological game being played between these two teams. Since we won 33 games last year and have never been this far in the playoffs before, we have to prove we can compete every time we play. We've recovered every time we've played a bad game and I'm sure we will again."

Nuggets call on Dan Issel

DENVER (AP) — Jumping from the broadcast booth into the coaching box, Dan Issel vowed to make the Denver Nuggets a winner again.

"I remember the years when the seats at McNichols (Arena) were full and it was difficult to come in here and win against the Denver Nuggets," Issel said Wednesday after being introduced as the team's head coach. "And that's where we want to be again."

Issel, whose selection was expected since he surfaced as a candidate two weeks ago, declined to reveal terms of his contract except that it was a "multi-year" deal. "I've got enough years so that I'll have plenty of opportunity to succeed," he said.

Issel, 43, has no previous coaching experience, but his appointment is not unprecedented. Pat Riley, Billy Cunningham, Doug Collins and Wes Unseld also became head coaches in the NBA without serving coaching apprentices.

The 10th head coach in the 25-year history of the Denver franchise, Issel succeeds Paul Westhead, who was fired last month after 20-62 and 24-58 seasons — the two worst seasons in franchise history.

General manager Bernie Bickerstaff said Charlotte vice president Gene Littles, formerly the Hornets' head coach, will be Issel's No. 1 assistant. Mike Evans, who was an assistant to Westhead, will remain on Issel's staff as his No. 2 assistant.

Issel

Issel said that because of his lack of experience as a coach, he and Bickerstaff agreed he would need an assistant with NBA head-coaching experience — "someone who had been through those wars before."

In his brief remarks before introducing Issel, Bickerstaff said Issel has the attributes the Nuggets' organization values — work ethic, professional exposure and ability to overcome obstacles.

"We think our new head coach brings a lot of those qualities to the table," he said.

Tomjanovich permanent

HOUSTON (AP) — The "interim" was taken off Rudy Tomjanovich's title on Wednesday as the Houston Rockets gave him a three-year contract to lead the Rockets back into the NBA playoffs.

Tomjanovich, who played 11 years with the Rockets, replaced Don Chaney on Feb. 18 and led the Rockets to a 16-14 record over the rest of the season. He was an assistant and scout for nine seasons.

"I've been with the Rockets organization 20 years and I've developed a feeling inside, I guess you could say I love the Houston Rockets," Tomjanovich said. "To be named the head coach is something of an honor for me."

The Rockets were 11-4 after 15 games under Tomjanovich before a controversy involving center Hakeem Olajuwon affected the team and it lost 10 of the last 15 games, missing several opportunities to win a playoff berth.

Olajuwon was suspended by the Rockets after refusing to play despite being given medical clearance from a team doctor. Olajuwon said he couldn't perform because of a hamstring injury.

Rockets officials said Olajuwon was faking an injury as a contract negotiating ploy.

Although Olajuwon has said he wants to be traded, Tomjanovich said he hoped to have Olajuwon in the lineup next season.

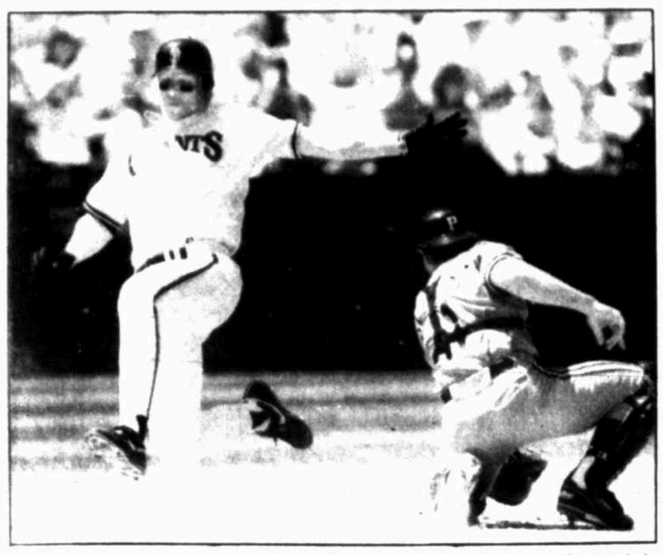

Tomjanovich

"Hakeem is under contract to the Rockets and we are proceeding on that basis," Tomjanovich said. "He's a great player and our relationship has been very good. We've never had any problems. Anything I asked him to do, he did."

Players and club officials cited team discipline as a problem during the season. Only four players showed up for a final team meeting after the last game of the season.

Tomjanovich said discipline was something he started working on as interim coach and he plans to continue that phase as coach.

Punchless Astros fall to Mulholland

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Terry Mulholland smiled when someone asked him if he was unhappy about not getting his fourth straight complete game.

"Complete games are nice, but I'm a lot more happy about getting my fourth straight win," Mulholland said.

Mulholland pitched 8⅓ strong innings for his fourth straight victory and Mitch Williams picked up his sixth save Wednesday night as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Houston Astros 2-1.

Mulholland (4-3), who lost his first three starts, gave up nine hits, struck out six and walked one. Williams came on with runners at first and second and got the final two outs, saving a game for the second straight night.

But first Williams walked Craig Biggio, loading the bases. He got Steve Finley to pop out to shortstop and Jeff Bagwell to fly out to right field to end it.

"That's why we pay Mitch ($3.1 million a year) what we're paying him," said Mulholland. "To tell you the truth, I was reaching back after the seventh inning for everything I had. And in the ninth I was losing it."

Mulholland said the difference between his April losing streak and May success was his outlook.

"I was a little frustrated. I put pressure on myself to go out and lead the way for these guys," he said.

Padres 12, Mets 6

SAN DIEGO — Tony Fernandez matched his career best with four RBIs, including a three-run homer that capped the six-run sixth inning, and Craig Lefferts won his fourth straight.

The 12 runs were San Diego's season high. Gary Sheffield, extending his hitting streak to 13 games, went 4 for 5, including a leadoff homer in the seventh and an RBI single in the eighth, and scored three runs. Fred McGriff went 3 for 5, including a two-run double.

Lefferts (5-2), a converted reliever, got his first victory against the Mets. He retired 15 straight after Mets starter Wally Whitehurst hit a two-run double to give New York a 4-2 lead in the second. Lefferts allowed five hits in six innings and struck out one before giving way to Mike Maddux opening the seventh. Pat Clements finished for San Diego.

Tim Burke (1-1) relieved Whitehurst to open the sixth and blew a 4-3 lead. Burke allowed singles to the only four batters he faced, including RBI hits to Benito Santiago and Craig Shipley, who replaced the ejected Tim Teufel.

NL Roundup

Bobby Bonilla, who had been 1 for 17 lifetime against Lefferts, hit a two-run single in the first.

Giants 3, Pirates 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Bud Black scattered four hits in 7⅔ innings as San Francisco sent Pittsburgh to its fifth straight loss.

Black (1-1) won for the first time in three starts since coming off the disabled list on May 6, striking out four and walking three. Jeff Brantley got three outs for his fourth save.

Zane Smith (5-2) dropped to 0-7 against the Giants in 10 appearances since June 9, 1987, including seven starts. Smith gave up three runs and seven hits in seven innings, struck out four and walked one. The Pirates lost for only the second time in Smith's nine starts this season.

Braves 6, Cardinals 3

ATLANTA — Steve Avery, who hadn't won in nearly a month, allowed four hits in 8⅓ innings and Brian Hunter hit a two-run homer and drove in three runs.

Avery, 18-8 a year ago, had not won since stopping Houston 2-0 on April 25. The left-hander (2-4) walked five and struck out three as the Braves won for only the fourth time in 12 games.

Hunter hit his two-run homer, his fourth of the season, in the second off Rheal Cormier (0-4) after David Justice was hit by a pitch.

The Cardinals, who have lost only three of their last 11 games, could have moved into a first-place tie with the Pittsburgh Pirates if they had won.

Expos 6, Reds 5

MONTREAL — Norm Charlton and Rob Dibble, Cincinnati's ace relievers, came up empty in the ninth inning as Montreal rallied for four runs.

Marquis Grissom's flare single to center knocked in the tying and winning runs off Dibble, who blew the save and saw his record dip to 0-2.

The hit made a winner of Mel Rojas (1-1), who pitched 2⅓ innings of scoreless relief.

Rangers put broom to Indians

Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Jose Guzman shut out Cleveland on five hits before needing relief help from Jeff Russell in the ninth inning and the Texas Rangers completed a three-game sweep by beating the Cleveland Indians 1-0 Wednesday night.

Ruben Sierra's RBI single in the sixth inning sent the Rangers to their fourth straight win. The Indians have lost five in a row and 10 of their last 11, and they have been shut out seven times this season.

Guzman (2-3) gave up five singles, two of them in the ninth. Russell retired Thomas Howard on a grounder for his 12th save.

Guzman has allowed three runs or fewer in eight of his nine starts. He struck out three and walked two while lowering his ERA to 2.73.

Charles Nagy (4-3) lost despite pitching a seven-hitter for his fourth complete game.

Yankees 3, Angels 2

NEW YORK — Charlie Hayes' run-scoring double with one out in the 12th inning gave New York a victory over California for a three-game sweep.

The Yankees have now won seven of their last eight games in a season-long 12-game homestand to pull within two games of first place in the AL East. The Yankees beat California 5-4 in 10 innings Tuesday night in their first extra-inning game of the season.

Jesse Barfield, who tied the game in the ninth inning with a sacrifice fly, singled with one out in the 12th off Chuck Crim (1-2) and Hayes followed with a deep double to left-center field. Hayes was in a 3-for-32 slump when he got the game-winning hit.

American League

John Habyan (2-1) pitched two innings for the victory as the Angels lost for the seventh time in nine games.

Athletics 4, Orioles 2

BALTIMORE — Mike Bordick drove in the go-ahead run with a seventh-inning sacrifice fly and Oakland completed a three-game sweep of Baltimore.

Bob Welch (2-2) allowed seven hits in eight innings, helping the A's to their 24th win in 31 games against the Orioles. Oakland has won 13 of its last 15 games in Baltimore.

Dennis Eckersley pitched the ninth for his 16th save.

Brady Anderson hit his fifth homer for the Orioles, who have lost a season-high four straight.

Tigers 4, Brewers 3

DETROIT — Mickey Tettleton hit a three-run homer with one out in the ninth inning, rallying Detroit past Milwaukee.

The Tigers lead the majors with 52 home runs. They had not connected in the past three games, and had not gone four straight games without a home run since last June 1-4.

Chris Bosio, 3-0 with a 1.89 ERA against Detroit last year, held the Tigers to three hits for eight innings. He gave up a leadoff single to Lou Whitaker in the ninth and struck out Travis Fryman, and Doug Henry relieved.

Royals 7, White Sox 2

CHICAGO — Gregg Jefferies, who struck out and grounded into a double play in his first two at-bats, hit his first major league grand slam to lift Kansas City over Chicago's White Sox.

Hipolito Pichardo (1-1) shut out Chicago for five innings on three hits in his first major league start. He walked none and struck out two in his longest outing since being recalled from Double-A Memphis on April 16.

Red Sox 6, Mariners 4

BOSTON — Ellis Burks hit a tie-breaking grand slam in the eighth inning and Roger Clemens and Boston beat Seattle for a three-game sweep.

Clemens (6-3), coming off consecutive shutouts, allowed two runs on six hits in eight innings. He walked one and struck out five.

Tony Fossas relieved to start the ninth and left with one out and two runners on base. Jeff Reardon allowed a two-run, pinch-single to Kevin Mitchell before finishing for his 10th save in 10 opportunities. It was his third save of the series and the 337th of his career, leaving him four shy of Rollie Fingers all-time record.

Blue Jays 8, Twins 7

TORONTO — Pat Borders singled home the winning run with the bases loaded in the 10th inning and Toronto halted its longest losing streak of the season at five games.

The Twins had won four in a row. They had taken the first two in the three-game series at SkyDome, where Minnesota swept three straight last October to clinch the AL playoffs.

The teams, meeting in their first series of the season, cleared the benches and bullpens in the fourth inning after Minnesota's Scott Erickson threw a pitch behind Derek Bell. There were no punches thrown and no ejections.

Location key for Tewksbury wins

ATLANTA (AP) — Bob Tewksbury isn't armed with the major leagues' best fastball.

With his control, he doesn't have to be.

"I don't know what the criteria is for somebody to say you've got a good fastball," the St. Louis Cardinals right-hander said. "I throw it from 82 to 86 miles an hour, but I can locate it."

Location is the key to Tewksbury's success this season — a 5-1 record with a 1.80 ERA in eight starts. He hasn't allowed more than two runs in any game.

Tewksbury continued to build on his best start since reaching the major leagues in 1986 when he beat the Atlanta Braves 7-2 Tuesday night, allowing seven hits with three strikeouts and three walks in eight innings.

"Tewksbury makes the game look a lot easier than it is," losing pitcher John Smoltz said.

"He was under control every pitch," Braves manager Bobby Cox said. "He's one of the tougher guys to hit. He doesn't beat himself."

Tewksbury learned the value of location from Sammy Ellis, his pitching coach when he was with the New York Yankees.

He said Ellis told him "that pitching is like real estate; it's location that counts."

Tuesday's victory was his first over the Braves in four career decisions, despite having a 1.75 ERA against Atlanta in his previous outings. It also ended a 10-game St. Louis losing streak at Atlanta.

One of the biggest surprises in the game was Tewksbury's two consecutive walks issued after a two-run homer by Atlanta's Damon Berryhill.

"Tewksbury walking two in a row, I was shocked," Cardinals manager Joe Torre said.

Blackhawks near finals

NHL Playoffs

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — The Chicago Blackhawks assured themselves of a line in the NHL record book. They're one victory away from their first trip to the Stanley Cup finals since 1973.

Jeremy Roenick's goal 2:45 into overtime gave the Blackhawks a 4-3 victory over the Edmonton Oilers on Wednesday night and a three-game lead in the Campbell Conference finals.

It was the Blackhawks' 10th straight victory, tying the NHL record for consecutive wins in one playoff season set by Boston in 1970. The multi-season record is 12 by Edmonton in 1984-85.

Roenick tipped a bullet pass by Chris Chelios past a helpless Bill Ranford, who had made four game-saving stops earlier in the extra period. Chicago had all five shots in overtime.

The Blackhawks, who won for only the second time in nine playoff games at the Northlands Coliseum, can advance to the finals for the first time in 19 years with a win Friday night. Only two teams have come back from a 3-0 deficit to win a playoff series.

For the second straight game, Edmonton blew a 2-0 lead. This time, though, the Oilers rallied.

After Chicago scored three times in the second period to take the lead, Edmonton tied it when defenseman Brian Glynn picked off Stephane Matteau's clearing pass and beat Ed Belfour with a screened 40-footer at 7:13 of the third period.

Colonial golf faces another rain attack

FORT WORTH (AP) — Irving, Texas and the Byron Nelson Classic are not far apart in distance or time, 20 miles and three days.

So it is no surprise that the weather forecast is much the same for the Colonial Invitation as it was during the storm-shortened Nelson: Rain and possible thunderstorms.

"More rain?" defending champion Tom Purtzer said.

"If it's just a drizzle, a steady rain and not a downpour, that doesn't bother us that much," Purtzer said Wednesday, on the eve of the $1.3 million event.

The problem is not so much the rain that is expected, but the rain that had passed.

The area is saturated from six days of rain, which disrupted and eventually shortened last week's Nelson Classic to a 54-hole event.

Isolated thunderstorms are forecast for Thursday and Friday with a new line of storms headed toward Fort Worth producing a 50 percent chance of heavy rain and possible flooding on the weekend.

"This time of the year we usually experience flooding, and it looks like we'll be getting those conditions over the weekend," forecaster Skip Ely said.

The possibility of another weather-curtailed tournament prompted Davis Love III to suggest the PGA Tour should make greater efforts to extend weather-troubled tournaments to their full, 72-hole length.

"I think we should play Mondays if we have to," said Love, who has collected three titles and more than $1 million this season.

"I think a lot of players feel the same way. I heard a lot of grumbling last week" when the fourth round was abandoned, Love said.

The tour has a policy of ending a tournament on Sunday, if at all possible to coincide with the close of the national telecast of the event, regardless of the number of holes played.

"I can remember when we used to go through Tuesday if we had to," Love said.

"I know the sponsors don't want to go to Monday, and TV doesn't want to go to Monday, and a lot of players have other commitments on Monday.

The tour, however, said no immediate changes were expected.

Prager's grand slam sends Angels packing

Staff report

JACKSON, Miss. — Howard Prager hit a grand slam home run in the bottom of the eighth inning to break open a 4-4 tie and lift the Jackson Generals to an 8-4 victory over the Midland Angels Wednesday night.

The loss ended a 10-game road trip for Midland, which failed to break even on the road with a 4-6 record after the loss. The Angels lost four of five games to Jackson after winning three of five against Arkansas.

Prager's shot came on the first pitch from Midland reliever Ken Edenfield, who had just come on to replace loser Ken Adams with no one out and the bases loaded.

Despite the loss, Midland's Tony Brown had two hits in the game to extend his hitting streak to seven game. He has hit safely in 13 of his last 14 games. Midland's Bobby Jones hit his first homer of the year, a two-run shot in the third inning.

Midland came from behind three different times to knot the score at 4-4 through 7½ innings, but Prager did the major damage with the slam to prevent the Angels from trying that trick again.

The Angels are open today before beginning 10-game homestand with Arkansas and Jackson. Midland will host Arkansas at 7 p.m. Friday and Saturday, but Sunday's game will be a 2 p.m. contest. Jackson comes to town Wednesday for the final five games of the homestand.

This will be the only time this year that Arkansas and Jackson visit Midland.

The Angels will open the month of June with a 12-game, 12-day trip (June 2-13) through San Antonio and El Paso.

Politics, geography sink Oakland, Sacramento

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — League politics and geography were blamed for the NFL's decision to drop Oakland and Sacramento from consideration for an expansion franchise.

"They didn't want another California team. That's just not right," said George Vukasin, president of the publicly owned Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum. "I'm very disappointed because Oakland has supported the NFL in every endeavor since the Raiders left. I think we deserved better."

California, however, is already home to an NFL-high four franchises: the San Francisco 49ers; Los Angeles Rams, who play in Anaheim; the Los Angeles Raiders, who left Oakland to play in the Los Angeles Coliseum in 1982, and the San Diego Chargers.

"This sends a clear message that the league is not about to accept any additional California franchises," said Stephen Schott, a real estate developer and head of the group seeking an expansion franchise for Oakland.

Sacramento's bid was hurt by the geography factor as well as late indecision over the site for a potential stadium.

"I think it is pretty easy to recognize our shortcomings," said developer George Christopulos, a member of the Sacramento group. "We simply failed to give the league assurances they needed that the facilities would be there."

Alameda County supervisor Don Perata, a supporter of Oakland's expansion bid, said the decision probably ended the city's hopes of landing a pro football team.

Perata said the expansion fee and related costs, estimated at more than $100 million, would be overwhelming in the recessionary economy.

"This probably closes that chapter," Perata said. "Given the economic climate, I don't think anyone would put an NFL expansion team at the top of our agenda."

Oakland has previously lost a legal battle to retain the Raiders and failed in a bid two years ago to lure the team back.

Schott said he planned to meet with his investment partners before deciding whether to disband his Oakland-Eastbay NFL Expansion Group.

"I suppose there is a possibility of bringing an existing NFL team to Oakland but I don't know how realistic (that is)," Schott said. "I don't know what our group wants to do."

The NFL's decision to look elsewhere for expansion was announced Tuesday during league meetings in Pasadena. The league hopes to enter at least two new cities in the next couple of years, although unresolved anti-trust litigation stemming from the lack of a labor agreement between players and management could delay expansion plans.

The five cities remaining under consideration are Baltimore, Memphis, St. Louis, Charlotte, N.C., and Jacksonville, Fla.

Baltimore, Memphis and Charlotte are in states that do not have NFL franchises.

St. Louis and Baltimore lost their teams to Phoenix and Indianapolis.

"The factors that determined the elimination process were one, demographics currently and in the future; two, stadiums, and, three, an analysis of areas in the country that were already served by the NFL," commissioner Paul Tagliabue said.

Penn St. already owns a bowl

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Three and one-half months before its season begins, Penn State's football team announced Wednesday it has agreed to play in the 1993 Blockbuster Bowl.

The Nittany Lions, a football independent until they start play in the Big Ten in September 1993, will take part in the Jan. 1 bowl at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., if they win at least six games this season.

Penn State athletic director Jim Tarman said the signing was "not inappropriate, given circumstances which forced Penn State to assume an aggressive and accelerated posture toward the postseason."

■ More Sports on Page 8C

Bowls earlier this year signed committments with Notre Dame and members of the Atlantic Coast, Big East, Big Eight, Southeastern and Southwest conferences.

The move left Penn State out of the major bowls and in line for a lower tier of bowl games. The Blockbuster Bowl is only in its third year.

Penn State's appearance will be its second in the bowl. It lost to Florida State 21-14 in the first Blockbuster game.

The early signing is unprecedented. Until 1991, the NCAA prohibited teams from making commitments to bowl games until a specific date, usually the third Saturday in November.

"I'm not surprised that it has happened," Dave Cawood of the NCAA's special events office said.

Last year, postseason bowls policed themselves but many deals still were struck early. One result was that Penn State, on the same day it beat Notre Dame on the field, lost to the Irish in a bid for the Sugar Bowl. The Lions went to the lower paying Fiesta Bowl.

The Blockbuster Bowl will not be played at the same time as the Rose Bowl, which features the champions of the Big Ten and Pacific 10 conferences.

NEW YORK — Oil prices finished mixed or barely budged Wednesday, influenced by internal market influences of supply and demand as well as the nebulous consequences of an OPEC ministerial meeting.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the price of West Texas Intermediate for July delivery rose 5 cents a barrel to $20.40, while contracts for later months were unchanged.

While most local crude purchasers did not change posted price, Phillips raised its price 30 cents to $19.65.

Energy futures brokers said trading was based partly on technical strategies that also influenced the market's behavior Tuesday, when light sweek crude oil fell 40 cents. Some traders saw that level as an opportunity to buy.

They said the release of weekly industry statistics late Tuesday, after the market closed, also affected trading.

Macy's to close

NEW YORK — R.H. Macy & Co. Inc. began paring its laggard department stores, announcing seven Macy's stores and one Bullock's branch will close by Aug. 1.

The retailer said Wednesday it would close branches in Brooklyn and New Rochelle, N.Y.; Newark and Plainfield, N.J.; Hunt Valley, Md.; Avondale, Ga.; and Columbia, S.C. The Bullock's in La Habra, Calif., also will close.

Macy had been expected to close as many as 10 department stores as part of its bankruptcy reorganization. The company said in a statement it was also discontinuing the apparel and accessory departments at the Macy's store in San Rafael, Calif., which will focus on home furnishings.

Dollar gains

NEW YORK — The dollar settled marginally higher Wednesday in technically driven trading.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 129.22 yen, up 0.22 yen from Tuesday's close.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.8300 from $1.8400 late Tuesday.

Stocks slip

NEW YORK — The stock market declined slightly Wednesday after the Dow Jones industrial average made two unsuccessful runs at the 3,400 level.

The modest setback from Tuesday's record highs came as interest rates turned upward in the credit markets.

Dow Jones's average of 30 blue chips, up 21.96 points on Tuesday, dropped back 4.15 to 3,393.84.

Salomon Inc. to pay $290 million

■ Wall Street firm reaches settlement with SEC and Justice Department and is spared criminal indictment.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Salomon Inc. will pay $290 million but avoid criminal prosecution for its admitted illegal bidding in the Treasury bond market, the government announced Wednesday.

The settlement is the second-largest ever for wrongdoing on Wall Street, behind the $650 million paid by now-defunct Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. in the 1980s trading scandals.

Salomon in August admitted repeated illegal and unethical behavior in government securities auctions — including unauthorized orders in customers' names and a $1 billion bid in a botched practical joke. Its top executives acknowledged concealing the illegalities for months.

The settlement with the Securities and Exchange Commission and Justice Department includes $190 million in fines and forfeitures related to cheating in Treasury auctions, in which the government sells bills, notes and bonds to the public.

Also, a $100 million fund will be established by Salomon to compensate victims who lost money as a result of the wrongdoing.

The penalties far exceed Salomon's estimate of a maximum $4.6 million in profits from illegal securities bidding. That reflects regulators' strong belief that the violations undermined the credibility of the financial system.

"Salomon's pattern of submitting false bids created a risk to the integrity of the government securities market, which is a market on which the federal government and ultimately all federal taxpayers depend," SEC Chairman Richard C. Breeden said in Washington.

The SEC, which polices the financial markets, said Salomon had submitted or caused the submission of 10 false bids totaling $15.5 billion in nine Treasury auctions between August 1989 and May 1991.

Salomon was accused of violating anti-fraud and record-keeping provisions of federal securities laws. But the Justice Department decided against criminal charges against Salomon or its Salomon Brothers Inc. brokerage unit, where the wrongdoing occurred.

Otto Obermaier, the Manhattan U.S. attorney, said Salomon was spared criminal indictment because it had cooperated extensively in the investigation and restructured management to prevent future misconduct.

As part of the settlement, Salomon Brothers will be suspended from trading with the Federal Reserve Bank of New York for two months starting June 1. Also, the Treasury Department said that on Aug. 3 it will lift sanctions imposed on Salomon last August, allowing the firm to resume submitting bids for customers.

Breeden said the government probe also uncovered a scheme in which Salomon underpaid income taxes in 1986 by engaging in sham transactions in Treasury securities that created the appearance of $160 million in trading losses. The settlement doesn't include the back taxes owed, which Salomon must pay.

Salomon's interim chairman, Warren E. Buffett, said: "We can now move forward to show that high ethical standards and meaningful profits are not only compatible objectives, but ones that can reinforce each other."

Salomon stock rose $2.87½ to $33.50 on news of the settlement. The stock tumbled to as low as $20.75 after the scandal.

American may cut back service

ARLINGTON (AP) — American Airlines told shareholders Wednesday it might have to pull out of money-losing markets as it grapples with financial troubles.

At the annual meeting of AMR Corp., the airline's parent, chairman Robert L. Crandall refused to say specifically where American might scale back its operations. But he pointed to short-haul markets where American has trouble competing with low-cost rival Southwest Airlines.

Crandall said he is considering "many non-traditional options" to restore financial health to his carrier, which lost about $240 million last year.

He called scaling back service "certainly not the most popular choice." In many markets Southwest undercuts American with lower-cost tickets.

Crandall said, however, that Southwest's no-frills service is not something travelers seem to want in long-haul markets and it would not work in markets that require connecting service.

USAir inaugurates in-flight computer

HOUSTON (AP) — USAir on Wednesday inaugurated an in-flight service that features a computer and allows passengers to check stock quotes, send fax messages, make phone calls and play games.

In-Flight Phone Corp. initiated "FlightLink," a digital communications system that combines telephones with interactive computer screens at each seat.

Arlington, Va.-based USAir is the first commercial airline to install the system.

Texas Micro Systems of Hosutin is supplying the small computer that is mounted beneath a seat in the front of an aircraft.

To use the system, a passenger removes the handset from the armrest and uses keys to choose a service from a menu on the screen, which is on the back of the seat in front of him.

Calls cost $2 a minute and are billed to a customer's credit card. Games and other services, some of which won't require telephone air time, will cost less.

Eventually the system could provide gate information, passenger paging services, catalog shopping, news and weather reports and city guides.

Trade deficit hits $5.82 billion, agency says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. trade deficit zoomed to $5.82 billion in March as Americans' appetite for foreign goods hit an 18-month high while weakness overseas reduced demand for U.S. exports, the government said Wednesday.

The Commerce Department said the March deficit represented the biggest gap between exports and imports since October and was a steep 77 percent higher than February's $3.29 billion deficit.

Although the February figure had been the best monthly showing in nearly nine years, economists worried that the prospect for the rest of 1992 is for higher deficits.

The analysts said that significant weakness in America's major export markets in Canada, Europe and Japan would cut into export growth, the economy's star performer over the last three years, while the modest recovery in the United States will push up imports.

"Exports are the one thing that kept the economy from going back into a double-dip recession last fall," said Michael Evans, head of a Washington economic consulting firm.

The Bush administration is counting on continued export growth to bolster the economy in an election year. The Commerce Department's chief economist, J. Antonio Villamil, said, "Export growth is a key factor in sustaining economic recovery."

While the administration is forecasting about a 12 percent improvement over last year's trade deficit of $65.4 billion, many private forecasters believe the trade gap will start deteriorating again for the first time since 1987.

David Wyss, an economist with DRI-McGraw Hill Inc., said the bigger-than-expected jump in imports in March was especially disturbing given a similar pattern last year when increased demand was met by imports rather than domestic production.

More than two-thirds of the March deficit came from a $3.99 billion imbalance in trade with Japan, an increase of $1 billion from the February level.

The Bush administration, trying to keep trade from becoming an issue in the presidential campaign, has stepped up efforts to narrow the deficit with Japan. On Tuesday, the government ruled that Japanese automakers were unfairly "dumping" minivans in the United States at below fair-market prices.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Bank's financial health doesn't affect annuity

By Bill Doyle

Q: I have good reason to believe the bank in which I have an annuity and a certificate of deposit is going under. If it does, what happens to the annuity? I know it is insured. Is it better to leave the annuity and CD in the bank, which is insured by the FDIC?

Doyle

A: For openers, you do not have an annuity "in" the bank. Banks do not issue annuities. Although some charitable, religious and educational organizations issue annuities, most are issued by insurance companies. It's a sure bet your annuity comes from an insurance company.

In recent years, many banks have begun selling annuities. The banks act strictly as sales agents, thereby picking up commissions and other fees.

The bank's financial health or lack thereof has no bearing on the risk factor of your annuity. Nor does the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. come into play as far as your annuity is concerned.

The FDIC insures CDs and other deposits at banks. So, you're safe on that score, as long as your total deposits do not exceed the FDIC coverage limit of $100,000 per depositor per institution.

Basically, an annuity is as safe as the insurance company behind it. There have been occasional insurance company failures in which annuitants lost money. Despite those headline-grabbing unfortunate events, the vast majority of insurance companies are on solid financial ground.

Even when an insurance company does go bust, its annuitants and policyholders usually are bailed out by other insurers or state guarantee funds. Note I wrote "usually," not "always." There is no federal insurance coverage for insurance company policyholders and annuitants.

Now, I can brace for a batch of letters from insurance people who get screaming mad any time their industry isn't compared favorably to the Lord above.

Q: I'm 72 years old and a widow. I have been thinking about putting $50,000 into a single-premium immediate annuity. Based on figures from an insurance company, the annuity would pay me $465.75 a month for life. That would be an income of $5,589 yearly and I would pay income tax on only $2,063.

I would have quite a savings in income tax and, as far as I'm concerned, approximately 10.5 percent interest. Correct?

A: After a number of attempts, I gave up trying to calculate how you came up with the "approximately 10.5 percent" interest figure. Your interest income would be less than half that.

An immediate payment annuity sends you both interest and a return of principal -- the latter being some of your own money coming back to you. Only the interest portion is income and consequently taxable.

You don't pay income tax on the return-of-principal portion of annuity payments. So, forget the notion about income tax savings.

Using the figures you supply — $2,063 taxable interest on $50,000 — that annuity would pay 4.13 percent interest. The total annual return — $5,589 on $50,000 — would be 11.18 percent.

If you are in need of cash, that steady flow of money would come in handy, providing you realize you are gradually using up your capital.

Immediate annuities have fallen out of favor in recent years. "Interest sensitive" annuities, which pay out only interest, have become much more popular.

Q: I had two $10,000 certificates of deposit. My friend the bank manager advised me to put that money in a five-year annuity. I did. The annuity's current annual yield is 7.9 percent, but is guaranteed only for 12 months.

Did I do a good thing? This is my life's savings.

A: In all probability, you made a good move, assuming you waited until the CDs matured and were not hit with an early-withdrawal penalty.

That annuity is paying more than new CDs now pay. Also, tax on the annuity interest is deferred until you take it out. Check your annuity contract for all fees and other charges — especially any "rear-end load" for taking money out. Arrangements vary widely among different annuities.

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

WHAT IS STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE?

Stockquote Hotline gives you the latest stock prices direct from the wires of the Associated Press. Over 9,000 stocks are listed from NYSE, AmEx, and OTC sources; all available 24 hours a day. You can receive up to 10 quotes with one easy phone call.

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE:

1) Call the Stockquote Hotline at 560-2400; enter the category number which is 9988.

2) You will be asked to enter your stock ticker symbol. These are based on industry-standard symbols, which can be found in a Standard & Poor's Ticker guide, or by calling your local stock broker.

3) Once you've entered the numerical code for the ticker symbol, press the Star Key (*) and you will hear the current price and net change from the last Associated Press update; which is a few minutes behind market activity.

4) After the stock is quoted, you will be asked to enter another ticker symbol. You now have 2 options:
- You may request a quote for another stock by repeating steps 2 & 3.
- You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more pressing the Star Key (*).

Now the volume, high and low will be given, and then you will be asked to enter another ticker code.
- You may enter up to 10 ticker symbols per call.

5) To exit Stockquote Hotline, simply hang up the phone.

Unser still likes climbing behind the Indy wheel

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — In auto racing, speeds climb, cars become more sleek and technologically advanced and Al Unser still loves to compete.

Only the personal appearances and media attention occasionally bother him.

"It used to be that you just came to the racetrack, got into your driving suit, put on your helmet and went racing," said the four-time Indianapolis 500 winner, who will make his 26th Indy start Sunday.

"Now, we have to be involved in doing things for the sponsors, meeting people and going on talk shows and things like that. That's OK. I know we have to do it. But I'd rather just drive the car."

That's what he will be doing Thursday, along with the other 32 qualifiers for the 76th Indy 500 when they get their final two hours of practice. The traditional "Carburetion Day" practice is the only time the cars are allowed on the track between the end of qualifications and the start of the race.

Unser, who won Indy in 1970, 1971, 1978 (with Midland's Jim Hall Chaparral team) and 1987, has not had a full-time ride since 1985. Since then, he has driven in only 21 Indy-car races and only one in each of the past two seasons.

He missed his first Indy 500 since 1969 last year because "a competitive ride" never materialized.

But, with Unser's 53rd birthday only eight days away, there are questions about his ability to be competitive, even in a good car.

"I guess there are some people who don't think I can do the job any more," Unser said. "But I still think I can, and that's what counts.

"I think I'm much smarter now and more confident in myself than I was in 1970. I still feel that I'm very competitive and strong enough to do it. But I don't know. You wonder why a lot of drivers haven't done it before."

Unser didn't even get this ride until the day before the opening of qualifications. Menard Racing teammate Gary Bettenhausen shook down the car assigned to Unser the next day. Then Unser practiced and, one day later, put his 1992 Lola-Buick in the race with a four-lap qualifying speed of 223.744 mph.

He will start 27th in the 33-car lineup, next to fellow four-time winner A.J. Foyt and four rows behind his son, Al Unser Jr.

In 1990, the last time the elder Unser raced at Indy, he qualified 30th at 212.087. But the big jump in speeds didn't seem to affect him.

"You always run the race car as hard as you can, regardless of the speeds, no matter when," he said. "Going into Turn 1 and Turn 3 always gets your attention at Indy. But you get the feel of it quick.

"I could've run for some people last year and earlier this year. It isn't that I haven't had the opportunities, but I guess I get too choosy and too picky. After you've won this thing, you get spoiled and you want to do it again. I would run the whole season if I could."

Al Jr., who will be making his 10th start Sunday, sees nothing wrong with his father wanting to race.

"This is what dad wants," he said. "He's a racer. I think he's still a very good racer. We're going to enjoy this and I wouldn't be surprised if he wins, or at least finishes second to me."

The elder Unser said his son "knows that I still want to race. He says I'm much happier and easier to get along with when I'm racing. I'm not on his case so hard."

If he wins Sunday, Unser would be the first five-time winner at Indy.

"I would like to win," he said. "That's the name of the game. The numbers make no difference. It's the one we all want, regardless of the numbers."

Andretti coached Carson at speedway

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Johnny Carson, ending a 30-year run as host of NBC's "Tonight Show" on Friday, was tutored at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway a quarter-century ago by Mario Andretti.

Carson visited the Speedway in 1967 to drive Andy Granatelli's turbine-powered race car, and Andretti, starting from the pole position that year, was asked to give Carson some coaching.

"I had met him before and had been on his show, and I was glad to see his interest in our sport," said Andretti, who will make his 27th Indy start Sunday.

"Johnny asked for some advice, and I remember telling him, 'Don't go any faster than you feel is safe. Don't let the car run away with itself. Otherwise, you could find it surprising.' I think he took those words to heart. I think he did a very respectable job driving the car."

He didn't remember how fast Carson went.

Andretti qualified at a then-record speed of 168.982 mph that year but finished 30th when he lost a wheel after 58 laps. He won the race two years later and is still seeking his second victory.

WHEEEERRRE'S JAY? The Indy 500 Victory Dinner will be at the Convention Center Monday night, the same night last year's emcee, Jay Leno, makes his debut as host of the "Tonight Show."

This year's emcee will be Bob Jenkins, the worldwide radio voice of the 500. The awards will be telecast (WTTV, Indianapolis) to a statewide audience.

Last year, WTTV cut away to other commentators whenever Leno was speaking, because his contract with NBC did not allow him to appear on any other live telecast.

Indy 500 Notes

PITS ARE IMPORTANT: The annual Miller Indy Pit Stop Contest is far from an exercise in frivolity, much more than an entertaining diversion three days before the race.

Quick and efficient pit stops can mean the difference between victory and defeat. A 10-second lead on the track can disappear with a sloppy tire change or a miscalculation on fuel.

That's why race crews practice as much as the drivers.

"We stress consistency and quickness in the pits as the most important factors," said Jim Prescott, chief mechanic for Bobby Rahal, the IndyCar series leader this season. "We rehearse so that everyone knows exactly what they're going to do if a problem occurs."

A look at last year's finish illustrates the importance of pit stops:

Rick Mears had six pit stops totaling 3 minutes, 25 seconds. Michael Andretti made seven stops totaling 3:44, but he finished only 3.149 seconds behind Mears.

"When the driver communicates that he's making a stop, you can't panic. You've just got to be prepared and ready to go," said Paul Harcus, chief mechanic for Danny Sullivan. "At Indy, the adjustments are so minute, you can make a driver go from a good car to a bad car."

Rahal's crew will go against pole-winner Roberto Guerrero's crew in one of the two pit stop semifinals Thursday. The crews of Mario Andretti and Eddie Cheever will meet in the other semifinal, then the two winning crews will meet for the championship.

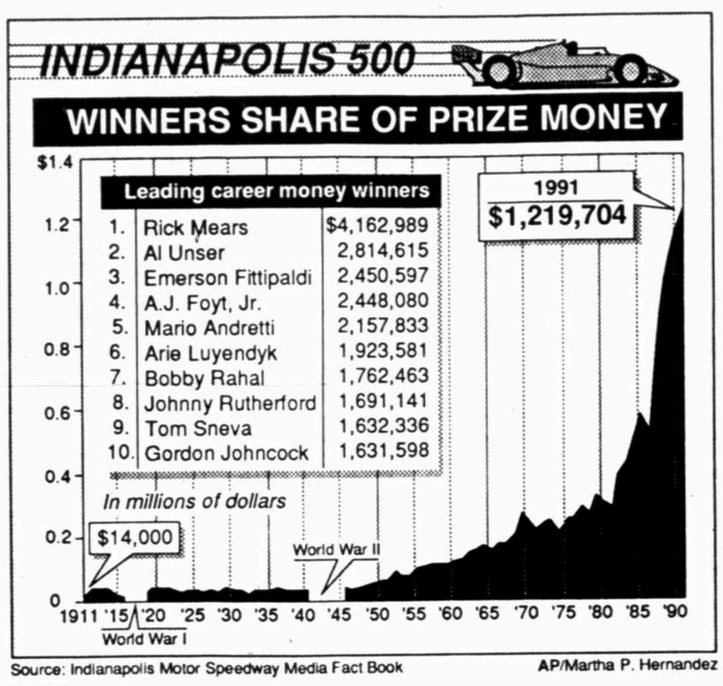

The overall winner gets $25,000, the runner-up crew gets $15,000, and the two semifinalists get $5,000 apiece.

YOUNGEST DRIVER: Paul Tracy, 23, a rookie driver for the Penske Racing team, received $5,000 and an award Wednesday for being the youngest starter in this year's race.

Tracy's name will be engraved on a trophy in the Indianapolis Motor Speedway's Hall of Fame Museum, and he will keep a smaller version of the trophy.

The Canadian qualified a 1991 Penske-Chevrolet at 219.751 mph and will start the race Sunday from the inside of the seventh row. He is one of seven rookie drivers in the race.

The youngest known driver ever to participate in the race was Josele Garza of Mexico, who was 19 years, 2 months, when he made his debut in 1981. The youngest winner was Troy Ruttman, who was 22 years, 2 months, when he won in 1952.

Championship weekend draws survey support

HOUSTON — A University Interscholastic League survey shows 410 of 594 superintendents and principals favor determining the site for football championship games more than a week in advance.

The survey indicates strong support for a central site football championship in Classes 5A through A, The Houston Post reported in Wednesday's editions.

Under the current playoff format, coaches and officials from the schools involved determine the site and date for state title games.

A central site plan could go into effect for the 1993 season if legislative hurdles are cleared.

The survey results are expected to go before the UIL's Athletic Committee in its June 3-4 meeting, and from there to the UIL Legislative Council in October.

The final word on the plan would come from the state's superintendents or principals, who could vote on it as early as December if passed by the Athletic and Legislative committees.

However, Texas High School Coaches Association officials say its members disapprove of a central-site format.

"The polls we took in our February regional meetings were overwhelmingly against it," Eddie Joseph, executive vice president of the THSCA, told The Post. "The question was never asked (in the UIL survey), 'Do you favor a central site?' They assumed, it looked like to me, everyone was in favor of it.

"This has been going on for a while, and they're bound and determined to play at one site."

Former Bulldog killed at home

Staff report

HOUSTON — Dale Windell Williams, a 1941 graduate of Midland High who went on to play football at Rice University, was shot to death here last week in an apparent robbery of his townhouse.

Williams, who was a 69-year-old semiretired oilfield drilling consultant, was shot in the face and shoulder with a .22-caliber weapon and never regained consciousness before dying at Ben Taub Hospital.

He was best known in athletics as the player who ran the "cyclone fence play" to help Rice to a 1946 upset over the University of Texas and land a berth in the Orange Bowl.

Williams caught the touchdown pass that won the game for Rice, but in the process, he crashed into the fence around the field. He hit it so hard it left a man-shaped dent in the fence. Rice officials decided not to repair the fence for the rest of the season to leave a remembrance of the event.

Rice went on to win the Orange Bowl by an 8-0 score over Tennessee.

Williams is survied by his wife, Tennie Taylor Williams; two sons, a daughter, his mother and six grandchildren, all from the Houston area.

Elliott captures Coca-Cola 600 pole

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Bill Elliott guessed the track would still be cool when he took his qualifying lap for the Coca-Cola 600.

He guessed right.

"We just played the game of wait and see," Elliott said after driving his Ford Thunderbird to a lap of 175.479 mph to grab the pole for Sunday's Winston Cup race at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

"We left the car the same way it was overnight," he said. "It stayed cool this morning so we didn't touch a thing."

Elliott, second to Davey Allison in the season points standings, edged Kyle Petty to capture the No. 1 starting position for the 600-mile race.

Elliott's lap also broke the event record of 174.820 mph set last year by Mark Martin.

Petty, second to Allison in The Winston all-star race Saturday night, powered his Pontiac around the 1.5-mile superspeedway at 175.353 mph.

"The weather changed drastically from 1 o'clock when practice was over to the way it was in qualifying," he said. "We thought we had a shot at it, but maybe we outguessed ourselves."

Ricky Rudd was the top Chevrolet driver, qualifying third at 175.245 mph. He was followed by Brett Bodine in a Ford at 175.109 mph.

Martin, another Ford driver, was fifth at 174.718 mph.

Allison, a disappointing 17th with a top lap of 172.662 mph, was injured last Saturday a few seconds after the end of The Winston when his car collided with Petty's and hit the wall. The mishap destroyed the car Allison had driven to victory in four of the last five races at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

Creating instant color: How to choose the right blooming bedding plants

By James E. Walters
AP Special Features

Gardeners looking for quick results often wonder if it's smart to buy plants already in flower.

"Most bedding plant annuals are currently being bred to withstand transplanting in bloom," says George Lucht, president of the Professional Plant Growers Association. "However, most annuals will come into full-bloom faster if existing blooms are pinched off before transplanting."

And if you must have instant color?

Lucht, who operates a garden center in Brooklyn Center, Minn., recommends buying 4-to-6-inch pots rather than the more common six-packs.

He says the larger size provides a better root system to help them adapt when transplanted in bloom.

Such pots are considerably more expensive, of course. And plants from seeds are even more economical than transplants of any size, but take more time and effort.

Many experienced gardeners use this rule of thumb if purchasing six-pack transplants: look for compact, healthy plants that are just starting to show bud color. That way you can be sure the label's color description is reasonably close, and you avoid much of the transplant shock.

If there is a choice, select six-packs with the largest individual compartments since this allows development of larger root systems.

"Look for bedding plants that are well-proportioned with stocky stems. Avoid plants that are leggy or limp," the plant growers association recommends in a fact sheet.

"The leaves should have a rich, green color. If, instead, the foliage appears mottled or if the edges of the leaves are curled, the plants may be suffering from pests.

"If the lower leaves are turning yellow, it could be because the soil the plants are grown in got too dry. When the soil mixture has been allowed to dry out completely, the plant's root system can be permanently damaged and the plants may never flourish."

To minimize stress from sun, the association recommends transplanting on an overcast day or late in the afternoon. If the soil in packs or pots is not moist, drench it thoroughly. Loosen the ground to a depth of 6 to 8 inches and dig a hole about the size of the root ball.

"Hold the bedding plant by its root ball, not by the stems or leaves, and set it in the hole," the recommendations continue. "Securely tamp the soil around the plant, making sure that the ground level and soil level of the plant are at the same height. Then thoroughly drench the bed, watering slowly, evenly and deeply."

For the next few weeks keep the soil evenly moist by watering when the surface begins to feel dry. During one of the waterings, apply fertilizer according to the product's label. To minimize future watering needs, and keep down weeds, the association recommends an organic mulch.

Alvi Voigt, agriculture economist at Pennsylvania State University, conducted a survey for the association of 1991-92 sales projections by members.

Petunia, the one-time leader, now is second, and common impatiens "is by far the leading bedding plant." Geraniums are third, followed by begonias, marigolds, sweet alyssum, dusty miller, pansies, New Guinea impatiens, salvia and vinca (catharanthus).

The growers recommend as low-maintenance, easy-to-grow flowers: African daisy, ageratum, sweet alyssum, begonia, celosia, cleome, coleus, cosmos, dusty miller, flowering kale, impatiens, lobelia, nicotiana, petunia, phlox, portulaca, salvia and vinca.

Not all will do well in every climate, so be sure to check if you haven't grown them before.

Terry Humfeld, the association's executive director, says there are two main reasons why some flowering annuals are easier to care for than others: (1) they don't require regular removal of fading bloom to stimulate new ones (dead-heading) or (2) they don't need pruning to avoid becoming spindly.

"Marigolds, snapdragons and zinnias need to be regularly deadheaded," says Humfeld. "However, ageratum, alyssum, begonias, portulaca and vinca are good examples of flowering annuals that don't require dead-heading and therefore require less time of busy gardeners."

Itsy-bitsy ditzies for dynamite wall decor

By Barabara Mayer
AP Special Features

In the 1980s, big was better in home decor. But this is the '90s, and little things mean a lot. So fabrics and wallcoverings in small prints — called ditzy patterns by the trade — are back in favor.

"People are asking for polka dots, slender stripes and small prints again," says Judy Mashburn, manager of Laura Ashley's interior design service in New York. "I don't think we have enough of those to fill the demand yet because they're calling and asking 'where are the little ditzys?'"

The freshest looks, Mashburn says, often combine a variety of small patterns in a mix-and-match fashion so it doesn't appear too coordinated.

Miniature patterns are both interesting and restful, so they work well in small rooms where you spend a lot of time, Lyn Peterson says. Peterson, president of Motif Designs, a wallcovering company, was referring to a dressing area in the master suite, a bedroom or a small kitchen.

Patterns in "Miniatures by Motif," the company's new sample book, are all suitable. They include delicate plaids, tiny checks and slender stripes, as well as coordinating borders that start at about 2 inches wide and go up to about 5 inches.

If you think ditzys are a bit too cutsie, even for small spaces, try monotones which once again look fresh, says New York designer Stanley Hura. A typical monotone scheme might use as many as four shades of one color. If that color is green, for example, it will be combined with white and one small contrasting color such as yellow, blue or pink.

Changing the look of upholstered furniture is a fine way to refresh a room. If you don't want slipcovers, reupholstery — though more costly — may be the way to go.

Use several fabrics on the same chair, as designer Charlotte Moss did on a French bergere chair for Century Furniture Co. of Morganton, N.C. Moss covered each part of the chair — arms, seat and back — in a different pastel shade of raw silk. She used beige, aqua, pink and cream.

Virtually any upholstered chair can be treated this way.

"You may have to put up with a little skepticism from the upholsterer," Moss says, "but the idea is easily executed in any workroom, provided the upholsterer is willing to figure out the color breaks with care."

You don't have to stick to solid fabrics, either.

"I covered antique French chairs at home with a stripe, a plaid and a print," Moss says.

Patchwork lends itself to upholstery, too. It can be economical if you have fabric scraps. Choose the fabrics based on color, pattern or texture and find an upholsterer with a can-do attitude.

An upholsterer can also duplicate a fabric-covered panel screen with ribbon latticework like the one Moss designed for Century. The ribbons create a grid for tucking invitations, post cards and greeting cards, photographs and reminders. The Century screen, about $1,000, was covered in white with pink grosgrain ribbon.

"I see the screen in a kitchen, a home office, a bedroom or next to a desk," Moss says.

Vary fabrics and ribbons in keeping with decor. You can cover the screen with plaids, stripes or floral prints. Pick out one color in the print for the ribbon grid.

Why have your big water heater huffing uselessly away all day when you're out? And why should you waste large amounts of running water waiting for the hot water to work its way through the pipes?

Alternatives are point-of-use and tankless water heaters, used in Europe for more than 60 years. Tankless models instantaneously heat water as it's used, so you don't waste energy keeping water hot when you don't need it. Small under-the-sink tank heaters keep a quickly renewed supply of hot water where it's needed.

Such water heaters are offered in the United States by Controlled Energy Corporation: the AquaStar, a tankless gas water heater which can replace the usual home tank; Ariston, under-sink mini-storage electric tanks; and Powerstream, tankless electric point-of-use water heaters. The company also says the devices outlast conventional water heaters; the AquaStar should last a lifetime, for example.

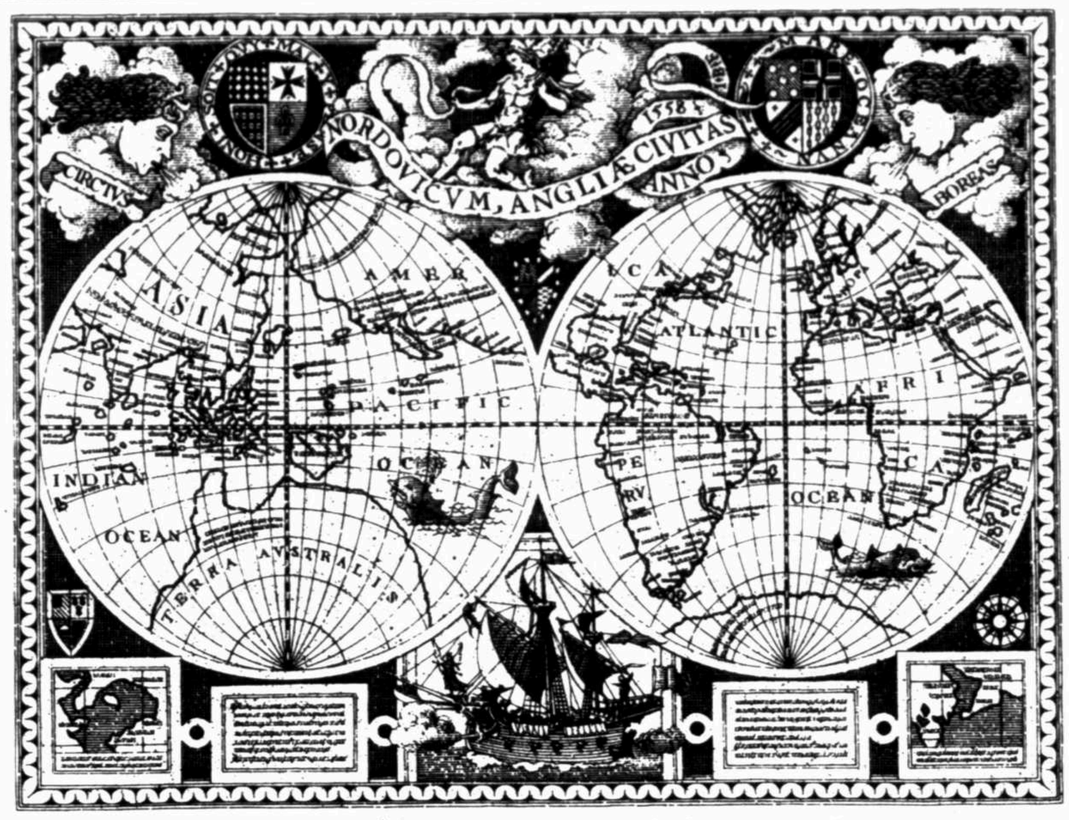

For more information, call the company at 1 (800) 642-3111.

A sensing device that turns a water faucet off and on automatically when it detects an object (say, a toothbrush) in the nozzle path can save water, too. A line of automatic faucets from Water Facets now includes a pull-out sink sprayer, the Mista.

For more information, call 1 (800) 243-4420 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. PST.

The Ondine In-Touch line of hand-held showers and showerheads from Interbath, designed to do their best with less water — 2.5 gallons per minute — are now available with white with pink, plum or lime color combinations. The spray can be adjusted for a pulsating massage spray, a full-cone spray or a combination. If you want to do even better, there's Interbath's Skimpy Watersaver, a showerhead that gives maximum performance at 2 gallons per minute. The Deluxe version of the Skimpy allows you to hold down water flow while lathering or shampooing.

Leaks are another source of frustration for water conservers. They can be hidden in walls or underground, and they can't be repaired unless they're found. A franchise group, American Leak Detection, Inc., uses electronic equipment to track hidden leaks in plumbing, pools, gas lines, etc. Founder Dick Rennick, a former plumber and ex-policeman, sees the service best used as preventive maintenance for houses and pools.

Posters, maps, baskets, paintings and folk art are among the non-traditonal objects people choose to hang on their walls. For the most personal pleasure and strongest effect, adorn walls with items that have special significance to you.

Look beyond the traditional to help decorate blank walls

AP Special Features

What people hang on their walls should have personal significance — anything from paintings, portraits, folk art, maps, and family quilts to finger paintings. It should give pleasure and say something about the tastes and interests of the homeowner.

Posters are a popular and inexpensive way to fill blank walls. Usually costing less than $20, posters often are high-quality lithographs or silk screens. Sources include museum gift shops, local artists, and civic groups.

Posters can also rise in value. Some 19th-century lithograph posters created by French painter Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec, American artist Edward Penfield, and others are worth small fortunes now. Movie posters from the 1930s and 1940s are also highly prized. Even some posters from the 1960s and 1970s are collectible.

Original oils and acrylics cost more because they demand a great deal of the artist's time and often require expensive materials. While most of us will never own an original Rembrandt or Picasso, works by artists who haven't been discovered yet can be surprisingly affordable.

Also consider pen-and-ink drawings, watercolors, limited-edition prints (lithographs or silk screens), and paper works. They require less time and less expensive materials, so consumers can often buy one of these pieces from a better known artist for about the same cost as an acrylic from a less famous artist.

People who are into primitive paintings and folk art should comb flea markets, antique stores, and auctions for these works.

Display a large or fine work of art as the focal point for any room. It's usually best to hang a treasured piece on its own — perhaps under special lighting — giving it the attention it deserves. Don't feel compelled to fill every empty expanse of wall space.

A grouping of smaller items can be just as effective as one large one. In a formal grouping, objects are usually arranged symmetrically with matching frames and mats. Informally, it is fine to mix frames and mats.

All groupings should have balance. Areas look balanced when they carry equal visual impact. Large sizes, bold colors, and heavy textures carry impact.

Balance a large neutral piece with a small one; a large flat piece with a small, heavily textured one.

What my kids did on their summer vacation

By June Sutherland

With schools about to close for the summer and long vacation days stretching ahead, why not let the kids spend some of their time redecorating their rooms? They tend to get bored with nothing to do, so let's give them a project. They could start with cleaning out their closets, drawers and so on. They might like to bag all the clothes they have outgrown or no longer wear, the toys and games they want to dispose of, then take them to the Salvation Army for needy children.

Now that all that "stuff" is gone, let them get started.

Does the room need to be painted?

Perhaps they would like to do the walls in a color, maybe with a touch of wallpaper border. Take them to the paint store and let them select paint samples of the colors they might like. They can also check out the wallpaper books to match the paint and carpet.

Let them spend time deciding what "look" they would like their room to have. If the boys are into sports, there are wallpapers, borders, bedspreads, drapery fabrics and many accessories in the football, basketball, baseball, soccer, tennis, golf and polo themes.

For the girls, polished cotton or chintz fabrics in either bright florals or subtle pastels work well.

Let your teens give their rooms a lift — turn a twin bed flush against the wall and line it with two wedge bolsters or throw pillows. During the day, the bed becomes a sofa. If the room has a high window, possibly with mini blinds, place the bed under it and add a simple window treatment such as painted or covered Lambrequin or a continental kirsch rod pocket, shirred with fabric that is matching or correlated to the bedspread.

If you need to purchase new furniture for the room, be it a boy's or a girl's, you can find a a wide selection of functional pieces — from wood tones to painted. There are also may styles of beds — white iron with porcelain knobs, pink iron with a heart motif and brass daybeds are popular with girls.

Boys seem to like oak with brass, black lacquer or red daybeds. They also have a preference for loft or bunk beds in red, blue or black metal.

SUMMER BULBS

Q. I would like to plant summer bulbs. Where can I buy them, and what do you suggest? — Lucille Ishikawa, New York.

A. You're wise to be thinking beyond the spring bloomers. Now that winter frosts have faded, you should find summer bulbs at most garden centers. Summer bulbs are virtually fail-safe plants since the flower bud is already in place at the time of purchase (just like tulips); they should be planted within the next few weeks.

The gladiola is a good example of a summer bulb, but less-well-known ones include the peacock orchid (Acidanthera bicolor), which has white flowers with a crimson center; the Mexican shell flower or tiger flower (Tigridia pavonia), whose iris-shaped, spotted flowers come in many bright hues; the Peruvian daffodil or Ismene (Hymenocallis narcissiflora), with fragrant white daffodil-like blooms, and the Crinum-lily (Crinum powellii), with pink flowers.

BUTTERFLY FOOD

Q. How do I attract monarch and swallowtail butterflies? What do they feed on? — Ruth H. Smith, New Paltz, N.Y.

A. Monarchs and swallowtails feed on different plants at different stages. There are four distinct stages in a butterfly's life cycle: The egg, the caterpillar or larva, the chrysalis or pupa and, finally, the adult butterfly. "Caterpillars are built primarily for eating," said Mathewcq Tekulsky, author of "The Butterfly Garden" (Harvard Common Press, 1985).

Tekulsky said that as a caterpillar, the monarch is partial to various species of milkweed, whose bitter juice makes it distasteful to predators like birds. In its butterfly stage, the monarch may also drink the nectar from goldenrod, thistle, cosmos, butterfly bush, lantana and lilac.

During its caterpillar stage, the eastern black swallowtail is partial to members of the carrot family, which includes Queen Anne's lace and parsley. During its butterfly stage, Tekulsky said, the swallowtail prefers nectar from flowers like thistle, phlox, clover and purple loosestrife.

A new book on the subject is the beautifully illustrated "A Field Guide to Eastern Butterflies" by Paul A. Opler (Houghton Mifflin; $24.95).

GREENING INDOORS

Q. I'm an apartment dweller and with summer coming I want to have greenery too — indoors. What do you suggest? — Maryjane W. Kirkpatrick, Boston.

A. Imaginative planning can turn any windowsill into a Lilliputian tropical retreat. But be sure to match the plant with the available light.

Species that do well in bright reflected light include cast-iron plant (Aspidistra elatior), prayer plant (Maranta leuconeura), spathiphyllum and many ferns. Plants for sills with three hours' sun include fuchsia, pony-tail plant (Beaucarnea recurvata), kaffir lilly (Clivia miniata) and jewel orchid (Ludisia discolor). On sills with at least five hours' sun, try pincushion cactuses (Mammilaria species), elephant bush (Portulacaria afra Variagata), Madagascar palm (pachypodium lamerei) or scented geraniums (Pelargonium).

FRAGRANT GRASSES

Q. I'm interested in fragrant plants and wondered if there were any grasses with scent. — Jay Johnson, Wilmington, Del.

A. Several ornamental grasses give off appealing fragrances when their leaves are rubbed or broken. They include lemongrass (Cymbopogon citratus), citronella grass (Cymbopogon nardus) and sweetgrass or vanilla grass (Hierochloa odorata). When dried, sweet vernal grass (Anthoxanthum odoratum) is fragrant, too.

Jeep adds finesse to Grand Cherokee

By Ann M. Job
Associated Press

A Jeep that rides like an imported luxury sedan?

Skeptics may scoff, but the 1993 Jeep Grand Cherokee Laredo can cradle five riders with nearly as much finesse as a Lexus ES300 — and that's while the Jeep is slogging up a sandy trail.

Jeep-Eagle, a Chrysler division, has every right to brag that the new four-door, four-wheel-drive Grand Cherokee models just out this year are the best off-road Jeeps ever.

The test Laredo mode, the middle of the line, was impressive for its rugged off-road capability, its superior handling both on and away from the pavement and its interior comfort.

On the outside, passersby might not see much of a difference from the current Cherokee models. (Grand Cherokee is a new, larger vehicle line.)

Jeep's trademark squared-off wheel openings and vertical-slotted front grille remain. The body shape, while rounded a bit with wraparound headlamps and integrated parking lamps and a sloped windshield, doesn't appear radically different.

But the Grand Cherokee suspension surely is. Company engineers fashioned a unique system that incorporates a solid axle for off-road durability and four-link coil spring at each wheel with amazing adaptability to road or off-road conditions.

It differs from the leaf springs that many sport utility vehicles have in their rear suspensions and provides a car-like, rather than truck-like, ride. The jostling and bouncing found in some sport utilities just isn't there. Even washboard-road riding is cushioned quite well at low speeds.

The 4-liter, fuel-injected, six cylinder engine offered since 1986 can be readily heard during acceleration.

Still, its 190 horsepower at 4,750 revolutions per minute is better than the standard horsepower of any other sport utilities in its class, Jeep said. The vehicle has a towing capacity of 5,000 pounds. And a 220-horsepower, 5.2-liter V-8 will be optional starting later this year, pushing towing capacity to 6,500 pounds.

Despite the greater horsepower, the Grand Cherokee gets decent fuel economy, thanks to its lighter weight than many competitors. The 3,600-plus-pound test Laredo, with optional four-speed automatic transmission, is rated at 15 mpg in the city and 20 mpg on the highway.

Also handy is the 23-gallon fuel tank — the largest in this sport utility segment, according to Jeep. The Ford Explorer, for example, has a 19-gallon tank.

Off-road demands are easy to meet and never required anyone to step outside in the mud during the test drive. When the going really gets rough, you move the selector, located to the left of the center console shifter, from part-time four-wheel-drive to full-time.

At 64.7 inches tall, the Grand Cherokee is a bit shorter than many competitors. It offers about an inch less headroom in the front seat than the Ford Explorer, which was the best-selling sport utility in the United States last year.

Ground clearance of 8.2 inches provides room to make it over sizable obstacles and is about 2 inches greater than competitors. But the wheelbase is 6 inches shorter than the Ford Explorer. Four-wheel antilock brakes are standard on the Jeep, while the Explorer has rear antilock brakes.

Inside, the Grand Cherokee is the only sport utility with a standard airbag (driver-side) and an air conditioner that doesn't use ozone-depleting refrigerant chemicals.

It's the only sport utility with two, Big Gulp-size cupholders built into the center console in the front seat, and it's the first Jeep with a rear seat that can be folded down fully or partially for more cargo room.

The spare tire fits in the rear cargo area under a vinyl cover, and the tops of the wheel wells intrude on rear storage space as well. The result is cargo space (with rear seat folded down) that's 2.4 cubic feet less than the 81.6-cubic-foot cargo area of the Ford Explorer. But Jeep adds nice metal strips to help heavy items slide in without getting snagged in the rear carpeting.

Rear legroom was sufficient for my 5-foot-4 frame; even with the front seats back all the ways and reclined a bit, my knees did not touch the seatbacks.

Jeep widened the rear-door opening in response to complaints that current Cherokee rear-doors openings are too small.

Standard carlike features on all Grand Cherokees — the base, Laredo and top-of-the-line Limited — include a steering wheel that's not the truckish, spoke-type found in many sport utilities, and pinstriping.

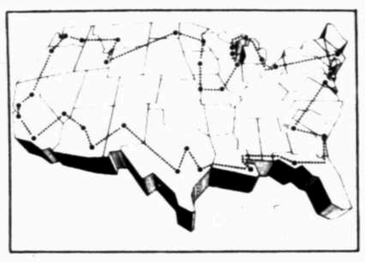

Fit and finish on the test vehicle was admirable. But a loose piece rattled around occasionally inside the steering wheel during turns.

My only other complaints: There's nothing to indicate on the dashboard when the cruise control is engaged, and neither the narrow glovebox nor the deep storage area between the front bucket seats has a lock.

The Grand Cherokee ride is designed to attract car buyers who are known to be particular. They may own a BMW or Mercedes, said Tom Zakarian, manager of Jeep market plans. The Grand Cherokee also is designed to not disappoint traditional Jeep owners.

"Our research showed that our potential customers prefer the ride and handling of the upscale European and Japanese passenger cars," said P. Jeffrey Trimmer, general manager of Jeep's truck operations. "We put those attributes in the Grand Cherokee without compromising the go-anywhere ability of every Jeep vehicle."

Grand Cherokees traverse country

From Manhattan to Yellowstone National Park to the Mojave desert, two 1993 Jeep Grand Cherokees are being launched in a most unusual way.

Reporters from around the country are participating in a six-week "Coast to Coast" relay to test the newest Jeep product's on- and off-road handling, durability, comfort and fuel efficiency.

Grand Cherokee, only the eighth Jeep vehicle to be launched in 51 years, was designed to set a new standard in on- and off-road handling among sport utility vehicles. The challenge to reporters is to find some of the worst (or best, depending on your point of view) road conditions in America.

The relay began in New York City April 15 and will conclude June 1 in Los Angeles. One vehicle will take a southern route and one a northern route. In all, the two vehicles are expected to cover more than 11,000 miles.

Britt Imports dealership announces the purchase of local Volvo franchise

Mike Britt of Britt Imports recently announced the purchase of a Volvo franchise. Britt bought the car line from Rogers Ford. The new line will be offered in addition to Mercedes Benz, which the dealership is known for.

The addition of the Volvo line coincides with the beginning of Britt's 21st year of service to Permian Basin car owners. Existing Volvo owners may be interested to know that Britt Imports is now the authorized Volvo service dealer for this area. With factory-trained Volvo technicians, service for Volvo owners will be of the highest quality. Britt Imports is located at 1004 S. Midkiff. Call 563-3095 for information.

Littlefield Automotive services European cars

For more than 14 years now, Littlefield Automotive has repaired and serviced European Automobiles in the Permian Basin.

Owners Hayden and Ronnie Littlefield specialize in everything except body work for Mercedes-Benz, BMW, Audi, Volvo, Volkswagen, Porsche and Saab. They have undergone extensive training at Mercedes-Benz factory schools.

Also, they are both Bosch auto parts specialists. With that distinction, they receive up-to-date service bulletins and have access to Bosch technical and training schools.

Those who need auto repairs or check-ups for summer driving should compare Littlefield Automotive 's very reasonable prices before taking their European cars elsewhere.

"Under the Magnuson-Moss Act, all you have to do to keep your car's warranty in force is to have your car serviced at the regular intervals specified in your owner's manual or warranty booklet and keep records of the services," Hayden said.

All services at Littlefield Automotive are performed to comply with manufacturer's manuals and specifications.

"We have the best equipped independent shop in the Permian Basin," Ronnie said. "We have the latest equipment, such as a four-wheel alignment machine for independent suspension, a computer tire balancer, sun diagnostic equipment and an exhaust gas analyzer. And, we are a certified Texas state inspection station."

Littlefield Automotive has a large supply of European car parts in stock, and has access to parts for older cars, too.

For example, it was no problem for the Littlefields to locate a clutch for a 1958 Mercedes-Benz and have the part was shipped to them overnight. Littlefield Automotive is located at 1810 West Front St. in Midland. Call 683-8611 for more information or an appointment.

Foods containing folic acid may help alleviate depression

By Jean Carper

Did anybody ever tell you eating your greens might save you from depression? Probably not. Yet, in a new review of the subject, Simon N. Young, a psychiatrist and nutritionist at McGill University in Toronto, suggests that may be true.

Carper

Green leafy vegetables are high in folate or folic acid, a B vitamin. And Young says, "There is accumulating evidence that folate deficiency can contribute to depressed mood." Further, correcting such a deficiency often helps alleviate that depression. Young also says studies of brain chemistry show how folate might logically act as an antidepressant.

One problem: The doses of folic acid used in studies to relieve depression are high — from 5 to 15 milligrams a day, which could be toxic, he says. However, Young recommends that depressed patients take a multivitamin pill that contains low doses of up to 500 micrograms of folic acid. It's safe, cheap and may have significant benefits, he says.

You can also easily get that much folic acid daily by eating foods rich in the vitamin, such as fortified cereals, green vegetables, dried beans, liver and nuts.

Beer bellies

If you are worried about ulcers, heartburn or acid stomach, beware of beer. The brew is a potent stimulator of stomach acid, according to new tests by German scientists at the University of Heidelberg.

No question, they say, beer prods the stomach to release far more acid than any other alcoholic beverage. When subjects drank beer, their average stomach-acid secretion nearly doubled within an hour. Wine also increased acid output by 60 percent. Interestingly, neither whisky nor cognac boosted stomach acid.

That means that alcohol per se cannot be blamed for the huge surge in acid. In fact, in one study, the German scientists detected no increased acid stimulation from alcohol alone, although they have found mild effects in previous studies.

Nor did the culprit turn out to be other suspected agents in beer, like hops. The stomach acid was mainly due, the researchers concluded, to fermentation, caused by adding yeast to the beer.

Doctors have long warned ulcer sufferers away from alcoholic beverages. But this study suggests it may be a good idea to single out beer as the booze to be especially avoided by people with acid-stomach worries.

Fish vs. heart disease

There's new evidence that eating fish oil may help keep arteries open after the heart procedure known as angioplasty. Such surgery opens blocked arteries, but about 40 to 50 percent of the time they close up again.

Some studies have shown that taking fish-oil capsules before and/or after angioplasty helps keep arteries open. Other studies found no benefit. Now a new study from Laval University in Quebec City decidedly supports the power of fish oil in keeping arteries unblocked.

In a double-blind study, 205 patients undergoing angioplasyy took capsules containing either fish oil or olive oil for three weeks before and six months after the procedure. Then their arteries were examined. Reclogging definitely was less in the fish-oil group — only 22 to 37 percent compared with 40 to 53 percent in the olive-oil group.

The daily capsules contained the amount of omega-3-type fish oil in seven ounces of raw mackerel or 9 ounces of canned pink salmon. Hefty doses. However, some experts think people who regularly eat fish are less likely to have reblocked arteries after angioplasty and may not need the extra boost from capsules.

Jean Carper's column is distributed by King Features Syndicate.

Taking too many vitamins may lead to dangerous side effects

By Dr. Steven Lamm

Too much of a good thing can sometimes be bad for you. Take vitamins, for example.

The benefits of vitamins for prevention of certain deficiency diseases such as scurvy or beri beri are well known. But little known by the general public, however, are the dangers associated with vitamin "overdose," medically referred to as hypervitaminosis.

With most water-soluble vitamins, taking high doses does not cause any readily noticeable ill effects because excessive amounts normally are excreted in urine.

But we do know that taking excessive amounts of certain fat-soluble vitamins such as A and D, can be harmful, perhaps even fatal.

Fat-soluble vitamins are stored in body fat and are not excreted in the urine, thus potentially building up over time to dangerous amounts.

Too much vitamin A, for example, may lead to chronic liver disease. Other side effects may include itching, hair loss, dry skin and mouth, irritability, nausea, vomiting, bone and joint pain, fatigue and chronic headaches.

A diet that includes foods such as carrots, sweet potatoes, dark green leafy vegetables, liver, fish, butter and egg yolks would provide the normal daily allowance of vitamin A.

People taking overdoses of vitamin D may develop nausea, headache, weakness, kidney stones, and hypercalcemia (high blood calcium). Although small amounts of vitamin D are necessary for proper bone mineralization, excess doses can be harmful to bone structure.

There also have been reports of excessive B-6 causing possible neurological damage even though this particular vitamin is water soluble.

Large quantities of vitamin C, another water-soluble substance, may lead to kidney stones in susceptible individuals.

There also are certain vitamins that can interfere with the actions of medications. For example, people who take the anti-coagulant coumadin should avoid vitamin K supplements because they may reduce the effect of the drug.

Vitamins are, indeed, powerful chemicals and ingesting much larger quantities than what is included in a standard multivitamin can be risky, and a heavier dose of any vitamin should be taken only with professional advice.

Also, any vitamins, like medications, should be stored in a safe place out of the reach of children.

Marina Oswald Porter, widow of President John F. Kennedy's assassin Lee Harvey Oswald, appears on Capital Hill Wednesday. Mrs. Porter helped distribute copies of the movie "JFK" to members of Congress as part of an effort to promote ticket sales and video rentals of the movie.

Coauthor of JFK documents bill says he'll compromise

WASHINGTON (AP) — The co-author of legislation to release Kennedy assassination documents said Wednesday he's willing to compromise on a plan to keep Congress and the White House out of the decision-making process.

Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, said he's prepared to negotiate on a provision that would allow a judicially appointed citizens panel to process the release of secret government documents. The plan is under attack by the Justice Department and some congressional Republicans as an infringement of presidential power.

"There's considerable question about whether the court can appoint people who can decide whether to release executive branch documents," said Rep. Hamilton Fish, R-N.Y., at a House Judiciary Committee hearing.

Stokes, who chaired the 1978 House Assassinations Committee investigation into the slaying of President Kennedy, said the point of allowing outsiders to choose which documents to release was to place the decisions above suspicion.

"We were attempting to see that the American people had complete faith in this process," Stokes said. But he added, "If Congress decided" that allowing Congress and the president to decide "was the proper process, I would yield to that."

A Justice Department official involved in the negotiations over the legislation said behind-the-scenes talks are moving toward a compromise. Deputy Assistant Attorney General David Leitch said that earlier this week he had a "fruitful and encouraging exchange of ideas" with Stokes and congressional staffers working on the bill.

Leitch said the concern that some smoking-gun piece of evidence implicating someone other than Lee Harvey Oswald in the assassination is unfounded.

"The instances in which the president would claim constitutional or executive privilege would be quite rare, if any at all," Leitch said.

The hearing took place against a backdrop of raging debate and tireless publicity-seeking over the Oliver Stone film "JFK," which advanced a government conspiracy theory of the assassination.

Jack Valenti, now the President of the Motion Picture Association of America and former special assistant to President Johnson, attacked the film for its suggestion that Johnson was somehow involved.

Valenti's criticism is unusual since Warner Brothers, producer of "JFK" is a member of the Motion Picture Association.

Hours later, the studio's public relations firm, Hill & Knowlton, helped engineer the latest in a series of Washington media events designed, at least, in part, to promote movie ticket sales and video rentals.

The firm assembled John Newman, author of "JFK and Vietnam" and a consultant to Stone; Jean Hill, an eyewitness to the assassination, and Marina Oswald Porter, widow of the alleged assassin; to help distribute 535 "JFK" videotapes and annotated books to members of Congress.

Mrs. Porter handed a set to Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., chairman of the House Government Operations committee, outside the west-front of the Capitol Building. The accompanying book includes the full script of the film and Stone's notes describing which characters are real and which composites.
