Federal Judge Fred Shannon, bowing to the preferences of Odessans who apparently rather have freedom-of-choice segregation than forced busing and integration, has ordered the Ector County Independent School District's administrators report their progress in effecting equal educational opportunities in the secondary schools and, particularly, in the black-Hispanic Ector High School.

The judge on Wednesday in Midland gave the officials a Nov. 15 deadline to brief him on their progress.

Shannon, after hearing seven days' of testimony in the 1964 discrimination lawsuit against Ector County ISD, on Tuesday determined that Ector was offering its students a sub-standard education and ordered an immediate remedy.

The remedy calls for equality of education but without forced busing to proportionately mix up the racial colors and without court-ordered integration for the system's 25,000 students. About one-third of the students are minority — black and Hispanic.

"We feel like the whole community came out on top," Superintendent of Schools Bill Holm said after the judge set the deadlines. "We are attempting to come up with a viable plan...to offer equal educational opportunities to all the students."

Evidence in the case showed that scholastic test scores by Ector's students, who generally are from the socio-economically disadvantagedsouthside.

The school system's principal attorney, Jack Tidwell, has associated those lower scores with the under-achievers he associated with the poorer class. But the opposition, including the U.S. Justice Department, which had sought integration by forced busing to achieve quality education, and black and Mexican-American counsels, who sought equal educational opportunities for the black-Hispanic students, said otherwise. They contended that Ector's students were slighted in course offerings and on quality of teaching and counseling.

Getting in two-cents worth...

By GAIL BURKE

The U.S. Postal Service will be increasing the postal rate by two cents — just in time for the holiday mailing season — beginning Sunday.

Stan Sartain, director of customer service at Midland's Main Post Office, said the 18-cent stamp will increase to 20 cents for first class mail. Previous increases were from 13 to 15 cents in June 1978 and from 15 to 18 cents in March 1981. The second postal rate hike this year, the 20-cent "C" Series stamp is for domestic mail only, Sartain said.

He added that this increase "is a first" in the way that it came about.

With only seven months since the last increase, Sartain explained that postage increases are usually set by the Postal Rate Commission. This commission approves or disapproves rate hikes, and in this case the PRC recommended that there be no increase.

However, Sartain said the Reorganization Act of the Postal Service has provided a new law where the Postal Board of Governors can overrule the PRC.

"The Board of Governors of the Postal Service have acted to modify the Postal Rate Commission's recommended decision and has directed the Postal Service to implement changes in the postal rate," Sartain said.

When asked about possible future increases, Sartain said "the Postmaster General has advised postal managers there will be no more rate increases for two to three years."

The changes also include increases for the 12-cent postcard to 13 cents. Other classes of mail such as international, second class and express mail, "will have some changes but people will have to check with the local post office for these changes," Sartain added.

And anything mailed after midnight Saturday should bear the new postage.

"If it (mail) doesn't have the new postage, there will be a short transition period before the mail is returned for postage," Sartain said. "However, should the Postal Service ascertain the mail was deposited after the deadline, it could be returned (to the sender) for additional postage."

Postal customers surveyed by The Reporter-Telegram were divided about their feelings on the two cent increase.

"I have no objections about them raising the price — the Postal Service is the scapegoat for those people who feel they have to have something or someone to pick on," said one Midlander who asked not to be identified. "I feel they do a reasonable job, considering the volume of mail they handle — they're certainly no worse than the telephone or electric companies."

Other Midlanders felt the increase affects the businessman and remarked there "should be another way to get around the hike."

"I'm against it from the businessman's view," Ronnie Williams said. "If they would raise the price of all the junk mail they could keep the price for postage down for busin-

Postal Service ending survey of city's retail requirements

Midland's U.S. Postal Service 11-day retail analysis survey will be ending Friday and the results should be completed in six to eight weeks, according to Stan Sartain, director of customer service at Midland's Main Post Office.

A postal clerk at each of Midland's five postal stations has been asking every 10th customer since Oct. 19 where they were coming from and their destination as part of a survey to determine the "demand area," Sartain said.

"This information will be fed into a computer to tell us such things as the demand for another facility, growth projections, the need for vending equipment or maybe even additional zip codes," he said.

Sartain explained that "every couple of years, the regional postal retail analyst will recommend a survey be done" to assess the local needs and problems.

"We try to choose a time that would not have any influence over the num-

Petroleum Pioneers arriving for reunion

The 12th biennial reunion of Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers will unfold here Friday, with a record number of pioneers from across Texas and far beyond expected to attend. Many of the visitors began arriving this morning.

The honored guest this year will be Gov. Bill Clements, who will speak at the men's luncheon, Friday noon, at the Midland-Hilton, reunion headquarters. The governor is expected to arrive here by plane shortly before noon, and will be brought directly to the hotel. A press conference is scheduled immediately following the luncheon, after which he will return to the airport for prompt departure.

The one-day celebration is sponsored by the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers Association, in cooperation with the Petroleum Committee of the Midland Chamber of Commerce. The event is held here on alternate years with the Permian Basin Oil Show at Odessa.

Jno. P. Butler, reunion chairman, said fellowship, visitation and storytelling have highlighted the reunions through the years and that this year will be no exception.

The registration desk will open at 8:30 a.m. Friday in the Hilton, staffed by members of the Desk and Derrick Club.

See our Permian Pioneers section, beginning on Page 1AA

11:30 a.m. at the hotel, to be followed by the men's luncheon at noon.

A reception and lucheon for the ladies is scheduled at noon at the Midland Country Club. Buses will leave the hotel at 11:45 a.m. Mrs. W.A. Yeager and Sally Patteson are in charge of ladies activities.

Chairman Butler will preside at the men's luncheon, with the address of welcome to be delivered by Mayor G. Thane Akins. Ernest Angelo Jr., a former mayor and presently a member of the National Republican Committee, will introduce Gov. Clements.

Tours of Midland and vicinity and of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame will highlight the afternoon schedule of events. Buses to the museum and for the tour of Midland will leave the hotel at 1:30 p.m.

Exxon and perhaps other oil companies will observe "open house" honoring Pioneers Friday afternoon.

An informal reception for both men and women will be held from 6 to 9 p.m. in the hotel's main ballroom as the concluding event of the celebration.

The reunion events are limited to Petroleum Pioneers, their spouses and widows of Pioneers.

Men or women who were engaged in any phase of the petroleum industry in the Permian Basin of West Texas and Southeast New Mexico 30 years ago or more, prior to Oct. 30, 1981, qualify as Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers.

Staff members of the Midland Chamber of Commerce assisting in arranging and staging the celebration include Grant Billingsley, Marti Entrican, Jan Reeder, and Randy Hicks.

Weatherall is serving as hospitality chairman, aided by a number of Midland Pioneers.

PATCO leaders seek to end strike

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

The Professional Air Traffic Controllers called an end to the three-month long strike Wednesday, urging members to go back to work if they are called. PATCO leaders conveyed the message via an executive letter sent to the Federal Labor Relations Authority.

The letter, according to Barry Vaughn, president of Midland's PATCO Local 428, "is an attempt to comply with the FLRA decision to decertify the union, and a response to (FLRA Chairman) Ronald H. Haughton's dissenting opinion."

Vaughn said PATCO's nine-member executive board, consisting of PATCO's president Robert Poli, vice-president Bob Mayer and all the regional vice-presidents, approved the letter Wednesday that was sent to the FLRA urging members to return to work.

"But it (the attempt to return to work) is a lock-out," Vaughn said. "It won't do any good. We're trying to show that PATCO is dealing in good faith — it kind of puts the ball back into the FAA's (Federal Aviation Administration) court," Vaughn said.

Bill Hill, FAA control tower chief at Midland Regional Airport, said this morning "the administration's position not to rehire (PATCO members) remains unchanged."

About 11,500 PATCO members went on strike Aug. 3 in a labor contract dispute with the FAA. President Reagan gave the union an ultimatum to return to work or be fired. Only about 2,000 PATCO members remained on the job and the FAA has been manning the control towers with these personnel and military controllers.

In Midland, 18 PATCO members illegally walked out, but two PATCO members, Mike Fiddes and Mike Janssen, chose to return to the tower before Reagan's deadline. These two controllers had been paying PATCO dues until the decertification was announced Oct. 22. according to Hill.

The FLRA, a three-member board which settles labor disputes involving federal workers, in a 2-1 vote on Oct. 22, stripped the controllers' union of all its bargaining power and ruled the union be decertified. However, the U.S. Court of Appeals issued a temporary stay. But the Court refused to continue the stay for the decertification Tuesday while PATCO lawyers were attempting to start the appeal

Amendment would aid development

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a four-part series on the constitutional amendments to be decided by Texas voters in Tuesday's election. Today's article concentrates on Proposition No. 1.

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Instead of looking to Uncle Sam for handouts to ease blighted areas in cities, President Reagan has urged local governments to encourage more participation by the private sector. According to a local proponent of Proposition No. 1 of the Constitutional Amendments, that piece of legislation will allow just what Reagan has recommended.

Seven amendments will be decided by Texas voters Tuesday when they go to the voting machines.

The first amendment "would allow the legislature to authorize cities and other taxing units to grant tax exemptions on property in a reinvestment zone in order to encourage development or redevelopment of the zone. The legislature also could allow cities to issue bonds to finance development of an unproductive, underdeveloped or blighted area and to repay those bonds by increased tax revenues imposed on that area both by the city and by other political subdivisions."

FOR AGAINST the amendments

first in a series

This amendment consists of two statutes that would allow exceptions to the "equal and uniform" constitutional requirement for property taxation.

THE FIRST is known as tax increment financing, or TIF, and involves the city selling tax increment bonds which aren't a debt obligation for the city. These bonds finance improvements to enhance the area, such as sidewalks or paved streets, to attract industrial and commercial growth.

The second part calls for tax abatement zones in which the city gives landowners a specified exemption from ad valorem taxes, which can run for as long as 15 years. In return, the landowners must make improvements to their property. These improvements would raise the appraised value, resulting in an increase in the property tax when the exemption is over.

To be designated as "reinvestment zones" by the City Council, the property must impair the city's sound growth, retard the provision of housing accommodations or constitute an economic or social liability.

Supporters of the bill point out that tax increment financing can be used only in commercial areas and would allow cities to finance improvements that would lure private capital into formerly unattractive areas. Tax abatement can be used in either commercial or residential areas, and encourages redevelopment by giving property owners tax breaks.

Opponents argue that when a city creates a tax increment zone, it is freezing part of its general revenue

Chamber supports airport expansion

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Three months after the Midland Chamber of Commerce expressed doubts about the city's plans for expanding Midland Regional Airport, the board of directors adopted a resolution supporting the City Council's concept of phased construction.

The action came Wednesday afternoon during the chamber's board of directors monthly meeting in the Chamber Conference Room. This was the first meeting in two months for the chamber, and the first since the death of Executive Vice President Fred Tyler in late September.

At the July 29 meeting, the chamber directors heard a report from Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation for the city, about the city's planned expansion of the airport. At that time, Banks explained the council had decided to "expand the facility and continue to develop an air carrier facility in its present location" rather than moving and constructing a new airport. Cost of a new airport, he said, would be prohibitive.

But afterward, some directors voiced doubts over that decision and that the city might be better off in the long run by going ahead with a new facility.

A CHAMBER TASK force, headed by Bob Kaufman, studied the city's plans and looked at costs of expanding the current airport vs. building a new facility.

In a memo to the chamber board, Kaufman's task force recommended the terminal facility "remain at its present location and the phased expansion approach be adopted."

The primary reason cited for this approach was fiscal responsibility. Kaufman said that obtaining federal funding to assist in building a new facility is questionable.

"If the airport was the only thing the city would have to do, maybe they could build a new facility. But there's a lot of demand for the public dollar," Kaufman said.

In addition, the task force proposed the city acquire more land to protect the airport and accelerate Phase I and II of the Master Plan. The plan calls for three phases of construction to take the airport's capabilities up through 2000.

In other action, the board supported Amendment No. 4, known as the water bill, on the ballot that will be decided Tuesday in the general election. Dave Dorchester explained this water bill, saying that water is Texas' No. 1 problem.

"By the year 2000, the state's population will be up to 21 million. We'll be short 4½ acre feet of water if nothing is done."

Water isn't a problem just to West Texas, Dorchester said, but to all of the state. Houston, he said, has a flooding problem and also is being forced to resort to a surface water plan rather than underground water.

"THIS BILL isn't the final answer," he admitted. "But it is a step in the right direction.

It consists of three parts: Raising the interest ceiling from 6 percent to 12 percent on $200 million in water bonds so these could be sold; using the faith and credit of the state to back up local water bond programs; and transferring half of the state's surplus each biennium into a water fund.

The last part, according to Dorchester, "isn't an irresponsible slush fund."

Although the chamber didn't take any action on the other six amendments that will be on the ballot, Steve Davidson from the City Council recommended the directors take a look at No. 1. That calls for tax increment financing and tax abatement to encourage development in blighted urban areas.

While reviewing the financial statement, President Bill Ortloff noted that the chamber "is in a bit of a deficit. The receipts have not kept up with disbursements." For one reason, he said, the chamber has taken on special projects, such as a parking study and a Texas Research League study of city government.

Expenses of the latter project was to be paid for by the chamber. But Ortloff said the Midland Industrial Foundation has been asked to pick up expenses of both projects.

A MEMBERSHIP DRIVE undertaken by a private company has netted 181 new memberships in three weeks and $24,891. Of that, the chamber gets $9,061.

Housing sells are going strong, accoring to Betty McDearmon with the Midland Board of Realtors. During September, 226 units were sold for $20,746,000. This brings the number for the year to date up to 1,818 housing units and $124 million.

For this time last year, 1,237 units had been sold for $82,420,000.

She noted that several new builders have come to Midland.

A meeting between various Midland leaders and the State Highway Commission last week brought no assurance that the timetable for Loop 250 would be stepped up, reported Grant Billingsley, who is taking the place of Tyler until a new executive vice president can be found.

A board member reported that 15 resumes have been received for that position, and the deadline for a decision has been set for Feb. 1, 1982.

ber of people that will be coming into the post office," Sartain said, adding that this is the reason for the Oct. 19-30 time period where there were no holidays and it is not the first of the month.

Approximately 700 to 800 people were expected to be surveyed daily in Midland's Main Post Office, Sartain said, with about 304 people a day surveyed at the Graves Station, a substation on the northside.

After the information has been gathered it will be reported to the North Texas District in Dallas and then on to Washington.

Sartain said past surveys have resulted in better service and proposed substations.

"We have a proposed substation for the north side to be built in the next three years, but even sooner we should tentatively have lock box facilities on Wadley and Garfield and for the Airline Mobile Home Park by Dec. 1," Sartain said.

Additionally, he noted that there also has been a proposal for 500-600 new lock boxes for the Main Post Office.

And, contrary to popular belief, Sartain commented that results of the last survey showed that out of 1,309 postal customers, 12 percent waited in line for three minutes, with an overall average of 14 customers waiting in line at any one time having to wait less than one minute.

Sartain said Midlanders have been cooperative in the survey with "maybe two out of every 100 persons not wanting to give us the information. We don't force them; we just ask the next person in line."

Consequently, PATCO lawyers, accrording to Vaughn, said the decertified controllers' union would end its strike if the governmemt would allow it to do so.

According the The Associated Press, this was a response to Haughton's dissenting opinion saying "there was insufficient evidence to warrant such action" and unless PATCO "ends the strike forthwith, and immediately represents to the authoriy that it intends to abide by the no-strike provisons of the statue, I would review any additional evidence as having no mitigating effect on the penalty to be imposed. If PATCO does not take these actions within five days of receipt of this decision, I will then concur (with the two other members) that PATCO's exclusive recognized status be revoked."

"In Haughton's language, he left an avenue open," commented Tommy Urps, secretary-treasure of Local 428. "As I understand the one dissenting vote, if PATCO would follow the ruling and order the members back to work our avenue of appeal could stay open. So what PATCO did today (Wednesday) is send the letter saying we'll go back to work and abide by the rulings, but that's as far as we can go because we're locked out."

However, Urps said he was not sure what was going to come of all this, adding "forget all the rhetoric in the past, they (FAA) need controllers. It is up to each individual to decide whether he wants to go back or not, but as far as I'm concerned I'm not leaning toward going back. This action on the part of PATCO is for the FLRA not the FAA. PATCO has made a decent effort."

Cooler temperatures expected

Cooler temperatures are expected in the Permian Basin on Friday, along with a chance of rain, according to the National Weather Service.

The high Friday should reach the mid-70s, compared with an 82 recorded Wednesday and a record high for the date of 91. The overnight low is expected to be in the mid-50s.

The NWS is forecasting a 20 percent chance of rain Friday under partly cloudy conditions. The monthly rainfall total stands at 5.53 inches and the 1981 amount at 17.55 inches.

The cooler temperatures expected for the next couple of days should be mild in comparison with last year's record 27-degree low for the date, which came on the heels of an unusually early snowfall.

Winds are expected to be northerly at 10-15 miles per hour Friday.

The school system had offered its students the "freedom of choice" to attend whatever schools they wished. As it turned out, most preferred the neighborhood-school concept.

Curtis Norris, a black leader who had sought equal educational opportunity for his people and without forced integration, was pleased with the order.

"It makes all the sense," he said. "I think the judge was really fair in making his decision. I think we have moved ahead 25 years in education (in Odessa)."

In theft and burglary complaints to city police during the past 24 hours, Greg Alvarez of 420 E. Elm Ave. said when he returned from an out of town trip Thursday he discovered his home had been burglarized.

Taken wes $1,500 worth of assorted items, including stereo equipment, a toaster oven and 40 record albums and 8-track tapes. There was no sign of forced entry.

Cheryl Kay Tuttle, 117 N. Glenwood Drive, reported the theft of a 24-karat gold necklace valued at $2,500.

Sandra Kay Stevens of Dallas said $235 in cash was stolen from a suitcase in her room at the Holiday Inn motel, 4300 W. Highway 80. The theft occurred early Wednesday night while she was out of the room.

And Alfred Cornish of 1912 N Jackson St. told police two television sets were taken in a burglary of his home. Entry was gained through an unlocked front door.

base and, over a period of time, could harm it's financial stability.

ON THE OTHER HAND, claim supporters, the TIF zone shall consist of no more than 15 percent of a city's property values, thus limiting the portion of the general tax base that may be frozen.

They also point out that the Reagan Administration has adopted the "enterprise zone" concept as its urban policy, which would create tax breaks for investors and residents in these areas. By creating their own "enterprise zones," Texas cities can compete for a number of limited federal zone programs.

It is pointed out by supporters and opponents that the tax increment part of the bill requires all taxing units other than the city to participate in the program, and the tax abatement portion provides penalties for taxing units that fail to participate.

Supporters say that these requirements are necessary to make the programs work. Opponents argue that is the amendment's worst feature and claim that it is unfair to let a city "capture" the tax revenue of another governmental unit, as the legislation is set up, to pay off a city-incurred debt.

THEY ALSO ARGUE that the TIF plan would eliminate the city councils from having to get voter approval for sale of bonds and cut out their accountability to the voters.

State Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson of Midland gave his stamp of approval to the amendment, noting that it "is a way in which cities can assist the private sector in eliminating blighted areas. If there is no incentive to do something about the blighted areas, the situation will get worse. This is a practical way of dealing with blight in urban areas."

Terming it an "indirect government subsidy," Snelson stressed that it would have to be administered properly. "Like anything, it could be abused. But there are enough checks and balances to prevent the abuse."

The push for this amendment in the State Legislature came from cities "that are faced with great sections of blight. They are unattractive for private investment. And when someone does invest, their taxes go up so high. This will encourage redevelopment without the greatly increased tax liability."

Although Midland isn't a large metropolitan area, one Midlander feels the amendment could serve as an answer for improving the stagnant south and east sides.

Michael Williams works with the Objectives for Midland program, which outlined south and east Midland as its primary target for improvements over the next 10 years.

This amendment, he noted, "could definitely apply to the problems in south and east Midland. It could encourage some degree of private investment and provide some relief."

ONE AREA LISTED by the Urban Land Institute, a non-profit group which helped to refine the Objectives, as a priority for redevelopment was the Lee Street commercial area. Williams pointed out that physical improvements, such as sidewalks and trees, could encourage better commerical development in that area under the TIF proposal.

But even if the amendment is passed statewide by the voters, Williams pointed out that "the ball is going to be on the City Council to create the districts. They (council members) should be crazy about this."

And he mentioned the supporters' argument that it is part of the president's enterprise zone program. "This concept is similar to the national plan."

This amendment won't solve all the problems of a blighted area, according to Williams. "It only creates an environment."

If the bond market is wrong, or if property owners don't want to make improvements, tax abatement nor tax incentive financing will be of any help to these areas, he said.

For the people working with the Objectives program, "it gives us one more tool to work with, and it should be a tool folks here like. The local government can play the role of a catalyst."

ALSO SUPPORTING the amendment is the League of Women Voters of Texas, who said this fell into their platform to promote "the economic strength of cities and encourage private reinvestment in central cities to counter eroding tax base and to provide jobs.

"Our housing goals of accessibility and adequate supply of moderate and low income housing can be facilitated also. It was felt," noted the state league board, "that the enabling legislation could be an important financing tool for local control geared to neighborhood and economic recovery through public and private cooperation."

Also supporting the amendment is the Texas Municipal League. President Carole Keeton McClellan said the amendment "presents an unparalleled opportunity to revitalizing the rundown and unproductive areas of our communities — an opportunity we cannot afford to ignore in this time of fiscal crisis for cities and towns of all sizes.

There has been no organized opposition on this amendment.

Postal Service getting in its two-cents worth

"I feel it might be a little high," commented Douglas Rice who also is concerned about business mail. "I think they ought to cut out a lot of the junk mail and it would help."

Sue Patten said she did not like the increase at all and added that an alternative to the increase would be to cut back on postal service. "I'm thinking about going down to the bank and having an automatic draft service which pays your bills right out of your checking account and there will be no need for postage," she said.

And some Midlanders said the hike really would not make any difference to them one way or another.

"I really doesn't bother me," Katy Bowen said. "It's like what they used to say when postage was a nickel — what people had to say really wasn't worth a nickel anyway."

A few people, disliking the hike, said they would accept it as part of inflation.

"I don't feel any different toward the post office — they're like anyone else in this time of inflation," one woman commented.

But Clay Garrison said "It's contrary to what we were told about whipping inflation: two increases in six months?"

Linda Jolly shook her head, saying "Bad timing, especially before Christmas," while another customer added "I wish they had raised the rate when it increased to 18 cents."

"It's just a whole lot of inconvenience to lick a bunch of two cent stamps on envelopes that already have 18 cent postage on them," another woman said.

One Midlander was somewhat confused about the rate increase, saying, "What? Very poor service anyway! Does it really matter what my opinion is? Yeah! Right! It's just fine — what can we do anyway?

The first 20-cent commemorative stamp will honor James Hoban, architect of the White House, and will be available in approximately two weeks, according to Sartain

Fear of Soviet military superiority appears unfounded

By JOHN HARRIS
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — The United States and its allies are spending more money on arms than the Soviet-bloc countries and are clearly superior in major military fields, including nuclear weapons, according to a just-released study.

The survey, based on official and independently-researched statistics, appears to contradict official opinion that the Soviet Union has attained military superiority over the West. The fear of Soviet superiority forms the basis for the Reagan administration's proposed huge military expansion.

A Pentagon spokesman confirmed the west's current nuclear superiority but cautioned that present "trends" indicate that the Russians are "catching up" with the west in the nuclear field. He also said that NATO and Warsaw Pact military expenditures are now "roughly comparable," but added that "currency exchanges" and other factors made accurate financial comparisons difficult.

Nevertheless the survey, undertaken by the Center for Defense Information, a Washington-based research organization headed by retired senior U.S. military officers, said NATO spent $300 billion on arms in 1980 compared to $260 billion by the Warsaw Pact.

"The tendency to exaggerate (Warsaw Pact spending) occurs for a number of reasons," the Center said in its publication "The Defense Monitor," adding: "Military officials, in order to get public and congressional support for large budgets, believe their message must be dramatically conveyed."

The survey claimed that NATO military spending, in fact, has exceeded that of the Warsaw Pact "for many years."

"In 1979 NATO military spending was at least $215 billion compared to $175 billion for the Warsaw Pact," the survey said. "Including Chinese military spending with the western allies gives a combined anti-Soviet military expenditure of $265 billion in 1979.

"NATO's edge is also accentuated by its superior industrial efficiency. (Former) Defense Secretary Harold Brown, in an obvious reference to less efficient Soviet industries, recently said that the Soviets probably have to invest more defense resources than we do to achieve a comparable military result."

A Pentagon spokesman confirmed the West's current nuclear superiority but cautioned that present "trends" indicate that the Russian's are "catching up" with the West in the nuclear field.

The survey also quoted Edward R. Jayne, former assistant director for Security and International Affairs of Office of Management and Budget as saying that "I'm absolutely persuaded that not only do we have the technology edge, but that edge is getting greater."

Dr. William Perry, former head of Pentagon research, the survey said, noted that the U.S. has "important advantages" over the Soviets in precision-guided weapons, which he described as "the most significant application of technology to modern warfare since the development of radar."

In the field of manpower, the survey said that the Soviet Union, despite its traditionally large standing army, is outnumbered by its opponents.

"The Warsaw Pact has a total of about 4.8 million men on active duty," the survey observed. "NATO has about 5.1 million and China has 4.4 million. The U.S. has about 500,000 men at military bases around the world, while the Soviet Union has few bases outside its borders except for Eastern Europe."

The survey also said that U.S. naval spokesmen focus their public comparisons on numbers of Soviet ships versus numbers of U.S. ships to show an apparent gap in favor of the Soviets. But the numbers include 'hundreds of very small Soviet ships," it was added.

"The official approach ignores a more relevant comparison," the survey said. "In numbers NATO has some 400 major surface combatants compared to 235 for the Soviets and its allies; in tonnage, even counting all the small Soviet ships, NATO has a more than 2-to-1 advantage."

The survey said the Soviet Union is inferior to the west in "the crucial measure" of nuclear strength, and that the U.S. will retain this advantage through the 1980s with the planned production of more than 17,000 nuclear warheads.

In 1980, the survey asserted, the U.S. had more than 9,000 strategic nuclear weapons compared to 7,000 possessed by the Soviet Union. America's allies -- the survey included China among these -- have about another 1,000 warheads, it was claimed.

Britain and France, which are members of NATO, and Israel are known to have nuclear warheads.

The survey said that "other measures of strategic forces" also favor the west, and listed among these long-range bombers, submarine-launched weapons, "overall accuracy" and higher alert rates and readiness.

"The U.S. is far ahead of the Soviet Union in submarine warfare and anti-submarine forces," the survey added.

"The quality of NATO weapons, including artillery and anti-tank weapons, surface-to-air missiles, military helicopters and air-launched missiles exceeds that of the Soviets."

Retired doctor treats people to free loans

By Jim Wood
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The old man in the bank parking lot -- we'll call him Dr. R. -- says a few words to the young woman and she steps quickly away. Undaunted, Dr. R. approaches another driver, this one a man. The message is the same: "Here's $5. Take it as a loan but don't pay me back. When you find someone who needs it, give the $5 to them."

Although Dr. R. didn't know it, the man in the parking lot was San Francisco Examiner photographer Fran Ortiz. He took the money, but he hasn't decided whom to give it to.

Told later of the recipient's dilemma, Dr. R. chuckles knowingly. It's difficult to give away money, he says.

University of California records show that Dr. R., as we're calling him, was a research physiologist. That was 30 years ago.

Today, although he's in his 70s, he looks far younger, a large man with a round face and dark brown hair. He dresses simply and talks quietly. He seems much like any other retired academician except for one difference: he has developed a marvelously creative method for giving away money.

ON THE PHONE, Dr. R. was brusque. If his identity were known, he'd be besieged by calls. Charity seekers would camp on his door. He wouldn't be able to walk freely around Berkeley anymore.

Besides, he argued, what he was doing wasn't so exceptional. Lots of people try to help others. It's the right thing to do.

After extracting a promise to protect his identity. Dr. R. agreed to talk with a reporter.

Dr. R. welcomed his visitors into the living room. It has almost no furniture, two chairs and a stool. Dr. R. has several television sets in the house and he likes to keep all of them playing so that if he moves from room to room he won't lose track of the programs.

Ordinarily, though, he stays in the living room. He uses a fancy tuner to switch stations without getting out of his chair.

"It's my life," he says, sitting comfortably in the chair, glancing easily from one set to another as he talks, "I'm surrounded by it."

Dr. R. says he is not a wealthy man, although he has enough money to be comfortable.

He made a little money consulting and when a small company in which he had stock sold out, Dr. R. realized enough profit to finance his unusual pastime. Dr. R. retired, he says.

He quit science.

He developed a habit of taking walks.

"I KNOW WHAT it is to be poor," he says. "I came from a relatively poor family in the South and worked my way through college. I lived for days at a time on a quart of milk and a loaf of bread."

Remembering those days and how much he could have used some help then. Dr. R. began giving away dabs of money, never very much, just enough to help. Usually the sum was around $5, sometimes up to $30 or $40.

Occasionally, if the need were great enough, he'd "lend" more, but not often: $1,600 so that a student could buy a car to go to class in San Francisco, $400 to another needy student. Always the terms were the same -- repay the loan by giving the money to someone else.

Each of his loans, Dr. R. hoped, would begin a chain of help. Once he modified the system, loaning money to a young couple with an infant daughter for a modest down payment on a home. He instructed the couple to repay the loan by putting money into a savings account for their daughter and when she was 18 to spend the money on a trip of her choice.

USUALLY, THOUGH, the loans were tiny, around $5 or $10. No sum is too small, Dr. R. recently advanced a nickel to a youngster he noticed having trouble coming up with enough money in a candy store.

"That's up to the individual," he says.

President Reagan speaks with National Security Adviser Richard Allen, back to camera, and White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker in the Oval Office Wednesday following a vote in which the Senate approved the proposed sale of AWACS radar planes to Saudi Arabia. The picture was taken through the window of the Oval Office.

Reagan rejoices in AWACS victory

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, exulting in a victory that even his opponents called awesome, says the "cause of peace is on the march again in the Middle East" with Senate approval of his AWACS arms sale to Saudi Arabia.

With his first major foreign policy test behind him, Reagan said only a radical takeover in the Mideast now could thwart delivery of the Airborne Warning and Control System planes, the world's most adavnced, in 1985. The $8.5 billion sale is the largest arms deal to a foreign nation in U.S. history.

Reagan also reaffirmed the United States' "unshakable commitment" to Israel, which had argued that the sale would threaten its security, as his administration worked on compensating arms aid to the Jewish state.

The Senate approved the sale 52-48 Wednesday after Reagan converted seven opponents and won over all seven undecided senators in the final two days of an extraordinary lobbying blitz. It was a performance that moved House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. to say, "He is showing awesome power."

The Israeli Cabinet said today that the approval of the sale of AWACS planes to Saudi Arabia posed "a new, serious danger" that Israel would do everything necessary to overcome.

Saudi Arabia's government-controlled newspapers hailed Reagan as one of the greatest American leaders in history.

Egypt's Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly lauded the vote, calling it a "positive turning point in relations between the United States and the Arab nations" that will enable "Arab countries to defend themselves against any foreign intervention."

"Thank God!" Reagan exclaimed when told of the victory by aides who had been monitoring the roll call, via a phone line, in the office of chief of staff James A. Baker III. Keeping tally were Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., national security adviser Richard Allen and deputy chief of staff Michael K. Deaver.

Reagan said the sale will "protect our economic lifeline to the Middle East, win favor among moderate Arab nations" and reassure the world that America "is indeed a reliable security partner."

"Because of actions like today's by the Senate, the cause of peace is on the march again in the Middle East," Reagan said. In a letter delivered to the Senate earlier in the day, he pledged that a condition of the sale will be "substantial assistance of Saudi Arabia" in Mideast peace efforts.

"Our friends should realize that steadfastness to purpose is a hallmark of American foreign policy while those who would create instability in this region should note that the forces of moderation have our unequivocal support in deterring aggression," he said.

The Senate vote, two weeks after the House rejected the sale by almost a 3-1 margin, crowned an uphill fight that less than 24 hours earlier had seemed likely to end up in a 50-50 tie. That, too, would have been enough for Reagan, since opponents needed a majority for the first-ever congressional veto of a U.S. arms sale

Senate Republican leader Howard H. Baker Jr. telephoned the president to report the victory, saying, "There are more brave souls in the Senate today than I ever knew existed."

Reagan shared the credit in the White House mess with the interagency group that spearheaded the administration's campaign.

"It was in the fourth quarter with goal to go," he said. "You pushed it over."

Four of the 24 AWACS planes within the U.S. inventory already are operating with American crews in Saudi Arabia to guard against possible air attack by Iran or other hostile powers. The ones the Saudis will buy will lack advanced features such as jam-resistant communications devices.

Administration officials assured Congress last spring that Israel's qualitative edge over its potential Arab foes would be maintained.

And even while Congress is considering $2.2 billion in economic and military aid for Israel in the current fiscal year, talks are under way on the 1983 package and now will take the Saudi arms into consideration.

Israeli Cabinet decries decision to sell AWACS

By The Associated Press

The Israeli Cabinet said today that the U.S. Senate's approval of the sale of AWACS spy planes to Saudi Arabia posed "a new, serious danger" that Israel would do everything necessary to overcome.

Egypt's Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly lauded the 52-48 vote, calling it a "positive turning point in relations between the United States and the Arab nations" that will enable "Arab countries to defend themselves against any foreign intervention."

"The government of Israel expresses its regret over the decision of the American Senate...on the two-fold arms deal between the United States and Saudi Arabia, which is in a state of war with Israel, rejects the Camp David accords and finances terror in our region," the Israeli Cabinet said in a statement read by Prime Minister Menachem Begin after an emergency meeting.

"The government reiterates that a new and serious danger now faces Israel.... We will do all that we have to in order to overcome (it)."

Begin told reporters Reagan send him a message reaffirming that "America remains committed to help Israel retain its military and techological advantages in the Middle East."

"The security of Israel remains an essential factor in our decisions of strategic issues in the region," he quoted the president as saying.

"We hope that these words of the president will be carried into realization," the prime minister added.

Begin expressed his thanks to those who sided with Israel during the long debate and said many congressmen who voted for the sale "nurture in their hearts warm feelings toward our people and country."

From the other side of the political fence, former Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin of the opposition Labor Party told Israel Army Radio the Senate's decision was "a victory for a state that has consistently opposed the Camp David peace accords. We must ask ourselves does the United States still regard the Camp David peace process as binding?"

Israel Radio quoted Defense Minister Ariel Sharon as saying the deal was "the greatest danger facing" the Jewish state because the planes would be able to detect every movement in Israeli skies and pinpoint the location of planes on the ground. Israel understands "that the United States must supply arms to the Arabs — but why must they be the most sophisticated weapons?" he asked.

"The vote showed that the Reagan administration reached the limit of its ability to influence," Dr. Avraham Ben-Zvi, a Tel Aviv University expert on U.S. affairs, told the Army Radio. "It used muscle and pressure in a possibly unprecedented intensive manner, and all that for an extremely thin victory."

He said Israel could expect some gesture of good will from the administration, that "one can expect the winner to make a gesture to the side that fought well but lost."

He suggested Washington might be willing to share more intelligence and satellite information with Israel.

President's prestige on line for AWACS

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The fight over selling AWACS radar planes to Saudi Arabia was important to President Reagan not so much for what he won but for what he could have lost.

He had put his prestige as chief executive, director of foreign policy, on the line at a time when his congressional coalition on budget and tax cuts was beginning to falter along with the economy.

David R. Gergen, the White House communications director, described Wednesday's 52-48 victory in the Senate as "a tremendous tonic for the administration, both in relations overseas and with Congress."

"It re-establishes the fact the president has a relationship with Congress that is very effective, and that is important to governing," he said.

As senator after senator trooped into the White House for private meetings with the president, there were arguments about security in the Middle East and about protecting the extremely sophisticated AWACS equipment.

In the view of White House chief of staff James A. Baker III, who sat in his office and listened over a telephone line as each vote was called in the Capitol, the clinching argument was national security.

But Reagan — and even former President Carter, who argued for the sale of the Airborne Warning and Control Systems airplanes to Saudi Arabia — returned to a key point: The ability of the president to conduct foreign policy was on the line. This is what he could have lost, both the past and the present president said.

In their view, Senate disapproval of the sale would damage the president's relations with other international leaders. It would lessen his stature in the eyes of foreign governments and devalue his words.

"We've acted in concert to demonstrate that the United States is indeed a reliable security partner," Reagan declared moments after the vote. "We had heard from many leaders who had expressed their concern about what this could mean in the whole world scene, if it had not turned out the way it did."

The fight over AWACS was Reagan's first important battle in the foreign policy area. Until now, his foreign policy ventures have been limited to meetings with foreign leaders, attendance at two summit conferences and strong words about the Soviet Union.

Now he has taken a major step in Middle East diplomacy, one intended to firmly place Saudi Arabia in the camp of the moderates in that troubled region.

But there was a domestic bonus to the AWACS victory as well.

Senate rejection of the $8.5 billion sale of Airborne Warning and Control System planes and F-15 jet weaponry, after the House had voted overwhelmingly to disapprove it, could have burst the president's bubble on Capitol Hill.

Jewish leaders seek renewed U.S. commitment to Israel

By BRIAN FRIEDMAN
Associated Press Writer

American Jewish leaders, angered by Senate approval of the sale of AWACS radar planes to Saudi Arabia, called on the United States to honor its commitment to maintain Israel's military might by selling it more arms.

Others called for a different pledge: one from the Saudis to display their good faith by changing their "belligerent" attitude towards Israel.

George Gruen, director of Middle East Affairs for the American Jewish Committee, said he regretted the Senate's decision and urged the Reagan administration to demonstrate its support for Israel by "making available...the means to counter the added risk to her security created by this sale."

While President Reagan savored his victory Wednesday by saying the "cause of peace is on the march again in the Middle East," Israel's ambassador to the United States predicted the sale of the sophisticated radar planes would "accelerate the arms race in the area."

"There are already signs that the Soviet Union's clients in the Middle East — Libya, Iraq, Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization — are receiving a flow of sophisticated weapons," said Ambassador Ephraim Evron.

"We trust that in the view of the massive flow of sophisticated weaponry to Arab countries, hostile to Israel, this commitment will be acted upon," he said.

Maxwell Greenberg, national chairman of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, also asked Reagan to "tangibly upgrade" Israel's defenses.

Meanwhile, M.T. Mehdi, president of the America-Arab Relations Committee, voiced mixed feelings about the Senate's approval.

"We are very happy that the Israel lobby lost, but not very happy that the sale of AWACS went through," he said. "The road to peace in the Middle East is not through Arab armament, but rather Israeli disarmament. We would rather have American F-15s and F-16s not sent to Israel than AWACS sold to Saudi Arabia."

In San Francisco, presidential counselor Edwin Meese assured the American Jewish Congress in a speech that the sale "in no way decreases" the administration's past pledges to Israel.

"President Reagan is absolutely committed to ensuring that Israel retains its qualitative edge in military superiority over any forseeable combination of adversaries," Meese said Wednesday night.

At the congress' gathering earlier in the day, its president, Howard Squadron, said the United States got nothing in return from the Saudis in the $8.5 billion sale of the planes.

"We are selling arms of the most advanced nature to a regime which has criticized the Camp David process and supported terrorism by giving $400 million a year to the PLO," Squadron said. "And we did not even ask the Saudis to moderate their belligerent attitude toward Israel."

In New York, Ivan Novick, president of the Zionist Organization of America, said the United States "has often been asked by Saudi Arabia to prove our good intentions. Now that the sale of our most sophisticated and secret weapons will go forward, it is the United States that should expect from Saudi Arabia that it prove its good intentions and cease to be intransigent and unyielding."

Squadron blasted the administration for "suggestions that those (senators) who opposed the sale were somehow not taking the best interests of the United States into account."

"That kind of charge is very dangerous to the social fabric of this country," he said, adding that it could injure the relationship between the American Jewish community and the government.

Evron played down any rift between Israel and the United States, saying their "unique and close friendship...transcends any temporary disagreement."

Bentsen glad AWACS debate wasn't partisan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said Wednesday he is pleased the debate on the proposed arms sale to Saudi Arabia did not become partisan.

"You had Republicans and Democrats working together on either side of the issue, and it's good to see that partisan politics still stops at the water's edge," Bentsen said.

The Senate rejected, by a 52-48 vote, a resolution of disapproval that would have killed President Reagan's planned sale of Airborne Warning and Control System planes. Bentsen was in the minority.

"I voted against the sale because I don't believe it's in our national interest to give any other country control over the sensitive equipment involved," Bentsen said.

"But the question has been decided now, and we'll go on to other matters."

Willie Gomez

SWEETWATER — Willie Gomez, 61, of Sweetwater, brother of Valintina Palma of Midland, died on Wednesday in a Sweetwater hospital.

Rosary will be recited at 7:30 p.m. today in McCoy Chapel of Memories. Mass will be at 10 a.m. Friday in Immaculate Heart of Mary Catholic Church with the Rev. Richard Kolega officiating. Burial will be in Slaters Chapel Cemetery in Nolan.

He was born June 25, 1920, in Fisher County and was married to Alberta Rameriz in 1940. She died in 1970. Gomez was married to Alicia Barahoma in 1971 in Abilene.

Other survivors include three other sisters, his wife, a daughter, three sons, four brothers and 13 grandchildren.

Billy B. Hicks

Billy B. Hicks, 47, of 602 W. Storey Ave., died Tuesday morning in a Midland hospital.

Services were to be at 11 a.m. today in the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Bill Skaggs, associate minister of Kelview Baptist Church, officiating. Burial was to be in Resthaven Memorial Park, directed by Ellis Funeral Home.

Survivors include his wife; four sons, Kyle Hicks, Gary Hicks, Tim Hicks and Curtis Hicks, all of Midland; his mother, Mrs. W. A. Hicks of Coleman; a sister, Janet Street of Coleman; three grandchildren, two nieces and four nephews.

Pallbearers were to be Jim Reynolds, Mike Peek of Monahans, Frank Harrison, Rick Wood of Fort Stockton, J.R. Hope and Mort Thompson.

Howard Redding

Services for Howard H. Redding, 73, of 1608 North J St., will be at 10 a.m. Saturday in the sanctuary of the First Baptist Church. Burial will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Redding died of a heart attack Oct. 27 while visiting a sister in California.

He was born March 10, 1908, in Handley and spent his early life there. He graduated from Texas A&M University in 1929 with a degree in electrical engineering.

He began his business career with Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. in Fort Worth, later transferring to Sweetwater and Lubbock. He returned to Fort Worth and then moved to Midland as district plant superintentendent in 1948. He retired in 1970 after 41 years' service.

He was a member of the First Baptist Church, Telephone Pioneers of America, Masonic Lodge 623, Suez Shrine Temple, Dallas Consistory, Midland York Rite, Midland Rotary Club and the National Association of Watch and Clock Collectors. The family requests memorials be directed to Trinity Towers.

House approves extended Daylight-Saving Time plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Daylight-saving time would go into effect the first weekend in March instead of the last weekend in April, under a measure approved by the House.

By a 243-165 margin the House, which rejected a similar plan in 1976, voted Wednesday to extend daylight-saving time from six to eight months a year. The Senate has not yet acted on the proposal.

Critics, especially rural congressmen, argued the extension would increase energy usage and expressed fears that students would be forced to go to school in the dark.

But Rep. Richard Ottinger, D-N.Y., who sponsored the bill, said government studies of the 1974-1975 period when the United States had year-round daylight-saving time showed energy savings of 100,000 barrels of oil a day in March and April and no increase in child fatalities.

"In view of the fact that our dependence on foreign oil is a threat to our national defense and a burden on our economy, being able to save that oil seems well worth our while," Ottinger argued.

Under the plan, on the first weekend in March clocks would be moved ahead one hour, meaning more daylight in the evening and less in the morning. Clocks would be turned back an hour on the last weekend of October, the same as under current law.

Federal personnel office abortion decision expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — A decision by the Reagan administration's Office of Personnel Management is expected to mean continuation of non-emergency abortion coverage in health plans for approximately 10 percent of the federal work force.

"We consider this a real victory," Sharyn Danch, associate general counsel for the National Treasury Employees Union, said Wednesday night.

Ms. Danch said the administration has agreed to drop its effort to sharply restrict the abortion coverage provided under certain health plans of three unions representing federal employees.

OPM Director Donald J. Devine had announced last month that the federal government would no longer pay for abortions under employee health plans except in cases where the woman's life was in danger. He told insurance carriers then that they would be excluded from the federal employee health program unless they tightly restricted abortion benefits.

But Devine's directive prompted legal challenges by the American Federation of Government Employees, the National Federation of Federal Employees and the treasury workers union.

Ms. Danch said that during talks Wednesday, "OPM agreed to our terms, which basically consisted of restoring abortion coverage to our plan for the 1982 plan year."

According to The Washington Post, Devine said, however, that general abortion benefits still would be eliminated from health plans covering about 90 percent of all federal employees in 1982.

In addition to those sponsors listed in Wednesday's edition of The Midland Reporter-Telegram, The First National Bank of Midland also is sponsoring today's energy symposium, "Energy Dimensions — Today and Tomorrow," at Midland Center.

Other sponsors of the one-day energy seminar include the Midland County Extension Service, Permian Basin Petroleum Association and Midland National Bank.

Administration may change spying order

By ROBERT PARRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A key Republican senator says the Reagan administration is open to changing a draft order that would give the CIA its first authority to infiltrate and influence domestic groups.

"We're going to see some significant response to the recommendations that the (Senate Intelligence) committee will forward this week," Sen. Harrison Schmitt, R-N.M., who chaired a subcommittee that reviewed the administration proposals in secret, said Wednesday.

The Intelligence Committee approved much of the proposed order Tuesday but unanimously agreed to recommend retention of former President Carter's near-complete ban on CIA infiltration of U.S. organizations.

Schmitt said the Senate Intelligence Committee made "seven basic recommendations" for changes in the draft order. The committee's role, however, is advisory and does not affect President Reagan's authority to put the order into effect.

An Intelligence Committee source, who declined to be identified, said a list of recommendations, including those of individual committee members, will be sent to the White House on Friday. The source said the committee hopes to see any revised order before it is issued but had no assurance that it will.

In an interview, Schmitt said he met Monday with Deputy CIA Director Bobby Inman and national security adviser Richard V. Allen to "give them some idea what kind of recommendations the committee was going to make."

He said that while Inman and Allen wouldn't commit themselves to accepting suggestions, they said "they would look at our recommendations very closely."

However, a Carter administration intelligence official cautioned that the administration might not make significant changes in the proposed order.

"Time will tell if those promises (of change) will be honored," said Kenneth Bass, who served as intelligence adviser to Jimmy Carter's attorney general. "In March, they (Reagan officials) denied that they wanted CIA domestic spying authority, yet in October, they have come back with an even more expansive proposal than they had then."

Bass, who helped draft and implement Carter's order governing intelligence agencies, had been scheduled to testify before the House Judiciary subcommittee on constitutional and civil rights.

But the panel's chairman, Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., abruptly called off the hearing Wednesday, saying he wanted to give the administration time to consider the Intelligence Committee's recommendation and revise its proposed order.

Bass told reporters he was most concerned about "the blank check the Reagan draft order would have given the CIA to engage in domestic spying and domestic covert actions. That's unprecedented."

Lost confidence

On the heels of their Janet Cooke Pulitzer saga, one would think The Washington Post would exert ultimate caution to prevent face-shattering recurrences. Gossipgate smashed to smithereens that assumption.

Gossipgate, of course, is the nasty little report in the Post's gossip column, The Ear, that the official U.S. guest residence, Blair House, was bugged during the Carter presidency, a report that raised all sorts of questions about potential repercussions, provided the report was true.

It was reported earlier that President Carter was entertaining the thought of a libel suit against the Post. But since that time the newspaper retracted the story and apologized to Carter. Unfortunately for the newspaper industry, Gossipgate will not be buried for some time yet.

Anytime any newspaper commits a judgmental error, public confidence is eroded, at least to some degree. It's harmful enough for a newspaper to err even when the evidence at the time indicated the information was correct. But in the instance of the Post's bungle, even an editorial following the initial report acknowledged that the Post found the "Ear" item "Utterly impossible to believe."

What is so damaging to the news media about that revelation is the realization that it casts a bad light on the practices of an industry with a vast moral responsibility. Newspapers and the electronic media have a constitutional obligation to provide the people of the United States information essential to the continued free operation of our society.

Perhaps the development of investigative reporting has caused some news organizations to become careless about what they report. Perhaps the competition to get "bigger" and more dramatic stories has altered some journalists' adherence to principles.

While it's true that investigative reporting techniques do help news teams get more important stories, all journalists must realize that the power they hold can do as much damage as good.

The news media's job is difficult enough without incidents like this. The American public has a right to pick up a newspaper and read it without questioning whether the articles are based on fact to the extent which the writers were able to obtain.

Mistakes are to be expected in a newspaper because of the volume of matter dealt with on a daily basis. And newspapers are produced by human beings. But newspapers should report the facts, not rumors, unless they can be stronly substantiated.

All newspapers now have to work just a little harder to regain the confidence lost in the regrettable incidents of the past few months.

Flying at ground level

Airlines in the United States which are having trouble staying out of the red should keep an eye on what is happening in West Germany.

Lufthansa, the German national airline, is getting into the railroad business.

Faced with a slump in profits, the airline wants to cut its operating losses on short-haul routes where its big jets consume an inordinate amount of fuel in take-offs and landings for flights that last barely half an hour.

So starting next spring, Lufthansa will operate express passenger trains linking downtown stations in Duesseldorf, Cologne, and Bonn with the Frankfurt International Airport. The airline calculates the train service will be almost as fast as air service, considering the time saved by passengers who do not have to travel to outlying airports.

Our airlines have developed an expertise in moving people swiftly and comfortably from one place to another. If the economics of air travel are changing, perhaps the airlines should lower their sights — to ground level. Why, if the airlines got into the railroad business we wouldn't need Amtrak, and that would save billions in federal subsidies. The trains might run on time, too.

Labor, IRS bungled Teamsters fund probe

WASHINGTON — Three months ago, I assailed the Labor Department for botching an investigation of the Teamsters Union's Central States Pension Fund — a multibillion-dollar bankroll that allegedly had fallen into the clutches of the Mafia.

Jack Anderson

This and similar criticism from Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., pricked ex-Labor Secretary Ray Marshall, who presided over the investigation during the period of worst bumbling. He is an earnest fellow, with an upright look and demeanor.

He took umbrage at my criticism and wrote an angry letter to editors. Now he may have to direct his ire at the General Accounting Office. Its meticulous auditors have confirmed my findings and those of the Senate Permanent Investigations Subcommittee, which Nunn headed.

The GAO report, still classified secret, will be issued in a few weeks. It will lower the boom on both the Labor Department and the Internal Revenue Service for fumbling the ball. The title of the draft report tells it all: "Inadequate, Ineffective and Uncoordinated Investigation to Reform the Multibillion Dollar Teamsters Central States Pension Fund."

The report sternly declares that "the investigation and subsequent dealings by the Department of Labor and Internal Revenue Service had serious shortcomings and left numerous problems unsolved." It also cost $8.5 million and dragged on for six years.

The Labor Department's investigators "narrowly focused on the Fund's real estate mortgage and collateral loans ..." the secret report charges. "(This) approach ignored other areas of abuse and mismanagement of the Fund's operation by the former trustees and left unresolved questions of potential civil and criminal violations ..."

The report also criticizes the Internal Revenue Service's dog-in-the-manger attitude. "The objective of having a government-wide investigation did not succeed because the Internal Revenue Service refused to participate in a joint investigation.

"We believe," the auditors say, "the Internal Revenue Service's refusal to join the Labor-Justice investigation destroyed Labor's attempt to have a government-wide investigation ... The Internal Revenue Service's explanation that it was pursuing a different course than Labor is not borne out by the facts."

WHAT NEXT? — The contracts of the two independent fund managers will expire next year. Labor Department sources who have reviewed the GAO report told my associate Tony Capaccio that the fund thereafter will revert to its former laxity and will be plundered by the Mob unless the contracts are renewed.

UNDER THE DOME: Most of the Reagan administration's emissaries to Congress have won the respect and goodwill of the members. Jack Wooley, the congressional liaison for the Environmental Protection Agency, is an exception.

Congressional committee staffers make no secret of their resentment of his tactics. They accuse Wooley of being abrasive and high-handed in his dealings with them.

He particularly angered Congress by sending a haughty letter advising House members that EPA officials would testify at committee hearings only if the agency was given three weeks advance notice before an EPA representative was to appear.

Veteran Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., fired back an angry letter to Wooley's boss, EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch. The three-week rule, declared Dingell, "is unprecedented, presumptuous and totally unacceptable."

— Rep. Thomas A. Luken, a fan of his hometown Cincinnati Reds baseball team, believes the strike-disrupted 1981 baseball season was a lousy idea. He's irate that the split-season formula denied the Reds a crack at the National League championship playoffs, even though they had the best overall winning record.

The Ohio Democrat has formed a group called the "Composite Caucus" because "it sounds like compost and that's what we think of the entire past season." A priority goal is to have the Reds, rather than the Los Angeles Dodgers, designated as this year's pennant winners.

— Georgia's freshman Republican Sen. Matt Mattingly is a loyal booster of President Reagan's economic program. So much so that he dutifully, if naively, inserted what he considered to be a pro-Reagan newspaper article into the Congressional Record.

"Bob Williams sells whiskey," the article said of a Gainesville, Ga., resident. "And Reagan, he says, has started people drinking the hard stuff like nothing he's ever seen. He adores the president's policies. 'People are buying anything to kill the pain of inflation,' he says.

"'The worse the economy is, the better my business is. People are drinking and getting divorced,' says Williams."

WATCH ON WASTE: The Army has poured more than $30,000 a year down the drain so that recruits in the St. Louis area can relax in bathtubs rather than take showers during an overnight stay at a local hotel. The hotel accommodations were needed for the enlistees while they completed physical exams and other induction tests.

Three St. Louis hotels bid on a contract to provide rooms for 60 persons, five days a week, 52 weeks a year. The 250-room Mark Twain Hotel submitted the best offer — $10 a night per room. Instead, the Army brass awarded the contract to a more expensive hotel which charges $12 a night.

When Mark Twain asked the reason, an Army representative replied that the hotel failed to meet specifications because the bathrooms were equipped only with showers rather than tubs. In addition, she said, the washbasins at the Mark Twain were located in the bedrooms, not the bathrooms.

CIA change should put fears to rest

I have good news today. The CIA is going to come back in all our lives. If President Reagan's executive order goes through, the agency can once again spy on Americans in this country.

Art Buchwald

There are a few people in America who are nervous about giving the Central Intelligence Agency this kind of power, so I will put their fears to rest by answering some of the questions being raised by the new ground rules.

Q — If you allow the CIA to operate in this country don't you violate our civil liberties?

A — No, the CIA protects them. The more it knows what Americans are up to, the safer we will all be from the Commies.

Q — Will the CIA agents be able to read our mail and tap our telephones?

A — Within reason. But they are only going to read the mail and tap the phones of those people who deserve it. The rest of us have nothing to fear.

Q — The CIA was used as a political instrument by the Nixon people. What's to prevent them being used again to "get" the administration's opponents?

A — The difference is that the men under Nixon lost their moral compass. But the people who work for Ronald Reagan are beyond reproach.

Q — How do we know this?

A — Because most of them are lawyers.

Q — Doesn't the CIA have enough to do gathering intelligence abroad without bugging Americans?

A — You would think so, but most intelligence organizations know if they can operate in their own country they can justify a much larger budget.

Q — Will the CIA be able to break into your home under the new guidelines?

A — Not legally. But no one is going to make a big deal of it if an agency does so without getting an official okay.

Q — What's the worst that could happen to a CIA person who oversteps his authority?

A — He would be asked to resign, and then get a job working for Colonel Kadafi.

Q — I thought the FBI was in charge of catching spies in the United States. Why is the CIA getting into the act?

A — Because there are a lot of bag jobs FBI agents are no longer permitted to do. Since the CIA is not interested in prosecuting anyone, they can justify almost anything in the name of national security.

Q — What's to prevent the CIA from working with the Mafia or hiring Cuban gangsters to do their dirty work for them?

A — Nothing really. When you're doing a covert job, you want the best people you can get.

Q — Isn't there a chance that the CIA will start off their domestic spying with the best of intentions, but as they get more and more power they could turn the country into a police state?

A — It couldn't happen. The CIA is monitored by a Senate Watchdog Committee, and nobody in the CIA would ever lie to a United States senator.

Q — Will the press be allowed to report on what the CIA is up to in this country?

A — Not if Congress passes its new American Official Secrets Act. You can't have a first-class domestic intelligence operation if the media are going to write about it.

Q — Then who protects us from our own Secret Service?

A — That's like asking who protects Soviet citizens from the KGB.

Realism coming back to universities on 'little cat feet'

WASHINGTON — Realism may be coming on little cat feet into places from which it recently was expelled — universities, and discussions of what universities are for. This bit of realistic graffiti has been seen at a university: "The meek shall inherit the Earth — but the strong shall retain the mineral rights." And the New York Review of Books, which once was full of tolerance for the follies of the young, recently published some constructive crankiness from two men of many years and much understanding.

George F. Will

It seems like only yesterday that the NYRB printed on its cover a diagram of a Molotov cocktail. That was in 1967, when the NYRB was, to say no more, tolerant about the ferment on campuses. Today the NYRB is less titillatingly but more genuinely provocative when it publishes sensible things, such as Jacques Barzun's essay about "the wasteland of American education."

Barzun is an emeritus professor at Columbia University, and his essay is an introduction to a re-issue of his 1945 book, "Teacher in America." His theme is that secondary schools have abandoned "the old plan and purpose of teaching the young what they truly need to know," and the idea of a university as a seat of learning has been lost. The implication of his argument is, I think, that the condition of American education poses a danger of social disintegration vaster and more lasting than anything Molotov cocktails can produce.

Barzun speaks unsparingly about the deceits by which secondary schools disguise the fact that they are disgorging millions of functional illiterates. The deceits include academic credits for almost anything (the "photography is as good as physics" doctrine), "social promotion" (which includes "high school" graduates with eighth-grade reading abilities), and a multitude of derelictions of duty encompassed by "bilingual education."

The hottest domestic issue of the 1980s may be, and probably should be, the collapse of a kind of confidence that once was a defining characteristic of America — confidence in public secondary education. And the condition of universities may justify equal alarm.

Enticed by government largess, universities in the postwar period embraced the ideal of "relevance," understood as "meeting social needs." There was a hot auction for scholars who could attract to universities the grants offered by government. High salaries were important, but so were promises that the scholars would be virtually exempt from teaching.

Barzun much too charitably attributes the campus disorders of the 1960s to the students' sense that "teaching was regarded as a disagreeable task, and students as obstacles to serious work, meaning research." I spent all of the Sixties on campuses, as a student or professor, in three countries, and I am convinced that radical students and their faculty applauders had two unattractive reasons for desiring the academic degradation that Barzun detests.

Many students' were on campus only because they were carried there by the preposterous notion that every high school graduate is suited to college education. Many faculty members were on campus because the education boom made the academic job market undemanding. Thus, many students and teachers were bored by scholarship, and their self-esteem and comfort were threatened by traditional academic standards. So they had powerful incentives to demote those standards and elevate vague and shifting standards of social utility ("relevance") in the hierarchy of academic values.

Furthermore, student and faculty "reformers" rejected the idea of a core curriculum of necessary knowledge because they embraced an idea that severs moral philosophy from reason. In an essay in the same issue of the NYRB, J.M. Cameron, emeritus professor at the University of Toronto, argues that the disarray of college curricula reflects a mistaken doctrine of modern philosophy. It is the doctrine that all values are equally arbitrary, so the "selection" of values, like the selection of items in a cafeteria, is purely a matter of "taste."

"Such thoughts," writes Cameron, "may have odd consequences for the curriculum. Boys and girls who couldn't write on a sheet of paper, or put into speech, even the rudest outline of what Christians or Jews believe and who couldn't recount accurately a single story from the Old or New Testament, may be given instruction in Hindu and Buddhist metaphysics; this, lest the teachers commit the offense of proselytizing on behalf of the traditional European culture."

The collapse of the idea of a core curriculum for society is, ultimately, a political event. It has been well-argued that Homer was a founder of the Greek people because he gave them what made them distinctive — a particular moral understanding, potently expressed in poetry rich in embodiments of virtues and vices. A corpus of great books — the Bible, Shakespeare, and others — once was regarded as suited to serve a similar unifying and civilizing function.

The abandonment of this corpus, and this function, is a political problem, because citizenship is a shared and nurtured state of mind.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On this date:

In 1618, Sir Walter Raleigh was executed in London on charges of treason against King James I.

In 1923, the Republic of Turkey was proclaimed.

14 wildcats, re-entry planned for area

Area oilmen have staked locations for 14 wildcats, and one re-entry in West Texas and New Mexico counties.

Also, two discoveries, one gas and one oil, have been completed in Lea County, N.M. and a gas discovery finaled in Upton County.

BORDEN WILDCAT

Lario Oil & Gas, Odessa, will drill the wildcat No. 1 Patterson to 8,400 feet, 15 miles northeast of Gail.

The drillsite is 5/8 of a mile east-northeast of the Texland et al No. 1 Cora Patterson, abandoned Oct. 16, 1978 at 8,369 feet.

The project spots 1,780 feet from the south, and 660 feet from the east line of section 412, block 97, H&TC survey.

HOCKLEY OFFSET

Brotherton Production Co., Midland, will drill as a wildcat the 4,800-foot project No. 1 McCasland, 2 1/2 miles east of Pettit.

It appears the well will offset Lario's producer, the No. 1 McCasland, a Spraberry discovery.

Brotherton's McCasland spots 467 feet from the north and east lines of labor 35, league 74, Haskell CSL survey.

GARZA BOBBED CAT

Houston Oil & Mineral Corp., Midland, will plug back as a wildcat the No. 1-B-7 Lott, which is located 12 miles southwest of Post.

The 8,500-foot hole will be shortened to the Spraberry at 5,360 feet.

The wellsite is 2,950 feet from the north, and 1,250 feet from the east line of section 7, Jasper Hays survey.

SCURRY RE—ENTRY

Petroleo Pantera, Lubbock, will re-enter the Cities Service No. 1 Campbell, a 7,518-footer plugged in July, 1965, and attempt recompletion in the Buffalo Creek (Ellenburger), at a depth of 7,610 feet. They will wildcat to 7,000 feet.

Petroleo's project, the No. 1 Mason Campbell, spots 660 feet from the north and east lines of section 144, block 3, H&TC survey. It is 2 1/2 miles east or Hermleigh.

CROCKETT WILDCAT

Amerada Hess Corp., Tulsa, has surveyed a location for an 8,400-foot wildcat, 32 miles northwest of Ozona.

The wildcat is the No. 1 Shannon Estate "34", located 1,320 feet from the north and 810 feet from the east line of section 34, block 1, GC&SF survey. It is 2 1/4 miles southwest of production in the Escondido field, which produces from the Ellenburger at 9,042 feet, Strawn at 8,560 feet and the Pennsylvanian at 8,306 feet.

LEA DISCOVERY

HNG Oil Company, Midland, has completed its No. 1 Vaca Draw "16" State, as an Atoka gas discovery, 32 miles southeast of Halfway.

The well flowed 1,665,000 cubic feet of gas per day through an unreported size choke. The perforations are between 14,248 and 14,757 feet. Flowing tubing pressure is 4,475 pounds per square inch.

Calculated absolute open flow was 2,576,000 cubic feet per day with a gas to oil ratio of 91,500 to 1.

Total depth is 16,075 feet with 4 1/2 inch liner set at 16,072 feet.

The well is 2 3/4 miles southwest of Morrow gas production in the Vaca Draw field and 3 1/4 miles north of 14,864 foot Atoka gas production in the Red Hills field.

****

Hunt Oil Company, Dallas, has completed a Bone Spring oil discovery, also in Lea County, 16 miles southeast of Halfway.

The No. 1 State "4" pumped 96 barrels of 41.4 gravity oil plus 12 barrels of water in 24 hours from perforations between 9,556 and 9,657 feet. Gas to oil ratio was 1,698 to 1.

Total depth is 14,317 feet, with five-inch liner set at 14,315 feet.

The well is one mile east of 14,000-foot Morrow gas production in the Berry, North field, and five miles southeast of 10,234-foot Bone Spring oil production in the Lea field.

LEA WILDCATS

The Superior Oil Co., The Woodlands, will drill three deep Morrow wildcats in Lea County, N.M.

The No. 1 Trist Draw Federal-Gulf, slated for 16,400 feet, is located 660 feet from the south, and 1,980 feet from the west line of section 11, township 23 south, range 32 east.

It is 2 1/2 miles southwest of 14,800-foot Morrow gas production in the Pronghorn field.

The No. 1 Paducah Federal Communitized, scheduled for 16,000 feet, is located 1,980 feet from the north, and 660 feet from the east line of section 22, township 25 south, range 32 east.

It is 31 miles southest of Halfway, and 1/2 mile southeast of Delaware oil production in the Paducah field.

The site is also six miles southwest of 14,997-foot Morrow gas production in the Vaca Draw field.

The No. 1 Ochoa Federal is scheduled for 16,500 feet and located 1,980 feet from the north, and east line of section 15, township 25 south, range 33 east.

It is 31 miles southeast of Halfway and is 1 3/4 miles southwest of 14,997-foot Morrow gas production in the Vaca Draw field.

****

Also in Lea County, O.H. Berry, Midland, will drill a 4,000-foot wildcat, 13 miles northeast of Jal.

The project is the No. 1 Ralph-State, located 330 feet from the north and east lines of section 2, township 24 south, range 35 east, and 3 1/4 miles west of 3,700-foot Queen-Grayburg oil production in the Jalmat field.

CHAVES VENTURES

The Superior Oil Co., The Woodlands, will drill a 6,500-foot new field wildcat, 14 miles southwest of Orchard Park, and about 20 miles west of Pennsylvanian gas production in the Buffalo Valley field.

The remote wildcat is the No. 1 Federal "18", located 1,980 feet from the south and west lines of section 18, township 14 south, range 24 east.

The McClellan Oil Corp., Roswell, will drill a 4,300-foot wildcat, 30 miles southwest of Elkins.

Designated the No. 1 Pecos River Federal, it will be located 1,650 feet from the south, and 1,980 feet from the west line of section 23, township 9 south, range 25 east, and 3/4-mile southwest of Abo gas production in an unnamed field.

EDDY SEARCHERS

The Superior Oil Company has staked a location for a 16,000-foot wildcat, 21 miles east of Loving and 1 1/2 miles south of 14,682-foot Morrow gas production in the Sand Dunes field.

The wildcat is the No. 2 Sotol Federal Communitized, located 1,980 feet from the west and south lines of section 1, township 24 south, range 31 east.

Quanah Petroleum Inc., Dallas, will drill a 9,350-foot Wolfcamp wildcat in Eddy County, 12 miles southeast of Black River.

The new project is the No. 2 Hay Federal "A", located 1,980 feet from the south and east lines of section 12, township 26s, range 27 east, and is 3/4-mile northeast of the same firm's No. 1 Hay Federal "A", an active wildcat.

It is also 12 miles southwest of Wolfcamp gas production in the Corral Canyon field.

****

Uriah Exploration Inc., Midland, will re-enter an old 10,436-foot wildcat failure, 17 miles south of Lakewood, and clean out to 10,170 feet for recompletion in the Pennsylvanian formation.

The re-entry is the No. 1 Stein Federal, located 1,980 feet from the south, and 2,210 feet from the east line of secion 30, township 22 south, range 25 east.

It is two miles northeast of a dual upper and lower Morrow gas production in the Rock Tank field.

The wildcat was originally drilled by Monsanto Company and plugged and abandoned in 1973.

UPTON FIND

Gulf Oil Corp., Midland, has completed the No. 1 Clara Neal et al, five miles north of Rankin, as a Fusselman gas discovery from perforations between 11,742 and 11,788 feet.

The well flowed 2,823,000 cubic feet of gas per day through a .1874-inch orifice, with flowing tubing pressure of 5,021 pounds per square inch.

Calculated absolute open flow was 23,250,000 cubic feet per day with a gas to liquid ratio of 8,094 to 1.

Total depth is 12,659 feet with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 12,657 feet.

The well is surrounded by production in the Spraberry Trend Area field, and 4 1/2 miles southwest of Fusselman gas production in the Benedum field.

COKE WILDCAT

Frost Oil Co. Inc., San Antonio, will drill the No. 1-269 Texfel Petroleum Corp. as a 7,000-foot deeper pool wildcat, five miles west of Blackwell and one-mile southeast of 4,053-foot Cisco oil production in the White Hat, Southeast field.

Drillsite is 2,187 feet from the north, and 467 feet from the east line of section 269, block 1-A, H&TC survey and 2 1/2 miles west of Ellenburger production in the Blackwell, West field.

Synfuel program is back on track

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's effort to aid the fledgling synthetic fuels industry is back on the track but with a new engine that has a lot less power.

The Reagan-appointed board of the Synthetic Fuels Corp. held its first meeting Wednesday and left no doubt that its approach would be far different from that taken during the Carter administration.

The corporation was created by Congress in June 1980 to funnel government subsidies to private corporations interested in building plants to convert coal, oil shale and tar sands into synthetic liquid and gaseous fuels.

President Reagan, who was highly critical of the subsidies during the campaign, fired the entire board in January and replaced it with members more attuned to his scaled-down approach to the program.

In its first meeting, the new board approved a budget pared in half from one left by Carter appointees and implemented a new staffing plan calling for half the number of employees envisioned by the law.

Chairman Edward Noble, a millionaire drilling and real estate executive from Tulsa, Okla., said the corporation would be "lean and tough" with its first priority to keep watch over "taxpayers' dollars."

Where the law allows the corporation to provide up to $88 billion in loan guarantees and other subsidies, Noble has said he does not intend to spend more than the $15 billion provided in the first phase.

The corporation's new 1982 budget of $22.5 million still carries authorization for large salaries approved by the old board for top corporation employees.

But Noble said the actual salaries approved in hiring new employees will be much lower, although to attract qualified people the board may have to go over the government's ceiling of $69,600. Noble is working for $1 a year instead of the $175,000 annual salary paid his predecessor, John Sawhill.

The board on Wednesday also adopted a schedule for reviewing the 63 projects that have applied for government subsidies and ordered a second round of solicitations in which companies can apply for aid until next April 30.

OPEC ministers meet for third time

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The oil ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries met today for the third time in five months and were expected to agree on a base price for crude oil of $34 a barrel.

That increase would raise the price charged by Saudi Arabia, OPEC's biggest producer, $2 a barrel. It could raise the price of gasoline and heating oil for American consumers about 2½ cents a gallon, U.S. petroleum industry analysts said.

Potential snags remained, however, on such related issues as how long to maintain the base price and a price range for top-quality crudes, OPEC sources said.

Prices among OPEC's 13 members vary from Saudi Arabia's low of $32 for a 42-gallon barrel to nearly $40 charged by Algeria. The oil ministers discussed the $34 price proposed by Saudi Arabia during meetings in May and August, but Venezuela and others refused to agree. So Saudi Arabia kept its price at $32.

Although OPEC set a base price of $36 a barrel in December 1980, prices charged by individual members have varied ever since according to the market and other considerations. The average price is now about $35.

Saudi Oil Minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamai has been seeking to unify OPEC prices since February 1979, when some members began raising prices on their own.

"The way is paved to reach the target," said Iraqi Oil Minister Tayeh Abdul Karim. "We are very near to each other, so nothing can prevent us from reaching a unified price."

Pruett wants death penalty

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Confessed "mad-dog killer" Marion Albert Pruett says he led officers to the body of savings and loan employee Peggy Lowe because he wants the death penalty.

"I think the people of Mississippi want to see me dead as much as I want to die," Pruett said in a jail cell interview Wednesday. "I just want the death penalty from Mississippi."

PRUETT, 32, led Mississippi and federal officers to Mrs. Lowe's body during the predawn hours Wednesday. The 43-year-old mother of two had not been seen since she was abducted during the Sept. 17 robbery of the Metrocenter branch of Unifirst Federal Savings and Loan in Jackson.

Despite warnings from his court-appointed attorney against making any statements to reporters, Pruett said he also had killed two people in Colorado and one in Arkansas and linked the slayings to his "$4,000-a-week cocaine habit."

"I became a mad-dog killer," he said. "That's cocaine."

Asked why he had decided to discuss to the killings now, Pruett said he was "tired of living. I killed four innocent people and I've stayed straight (off drugs) long enough to see what I had done."

Pruett, dressed in a jail jumpsuit and white slippers and wearing several days' growth of beard, at one point rolled up his sleeves to show what he said were needle marks from repeated drug injections.

IN ADDITION to robbery, kidnap and murder charges in Mississippi, Pruett is wanted for violent crimes in seven other states, including murders in Colorado and Arkansas and robberies in Washington and in Pennsylvania.

Discussing the deaths of two Colorado convenience store employees on Oct. 16, Pruett said he was "high on cocaine" at the time. He said he was "messed up. I guess you call it mercy killing."

PRUETT, WHO has a glass eye because of a childhood injury, described himself as a troublemaker throughout his life but said that when he began the robberies he had not intended to kill.

District Attorney Nathan Watkins of Livingston, Ala., said Mrs. Lowe's body was found in a wooded area beside a dirt road about 12 miles north of Livingston. He said she had been shot at least once in the back of the head and had been dead since the day of the Jackson robbery.

Watkins said Pruett allegedly told investigators he first made Mrs. Lowe strip to her underclothes and left her on the dirt road near Alabama 17.

He said it was alleged Pruett "got to thinking about it and went back" and shot her because she could identify him and his car. The body was found off the road in a wooded area.

PRUETT would not discuss details of Mrs. Lowe's death but did say that he had rode with a hostage for 30 minutes after the Jackson holdup. He declined to say whether Mrs. Lowe was killed in Alabama or Mississippi.

The slaying of Mrs. Lowe, the mother of two, was "something that ... just happened. I was too high. It was accidental."

Pruett, who was paroled from prison in 1979 under the federal witness program after serving time for bank robbery and attempted escape in North Carolina, said he held up financial institutions to embarrass the federal government because of what he said was wrongdoing within the witness program and his own treatment by federal parole officers.

He said he had started out only to rob financial institutions but after killing a person during a holdup "I got a little more crazier."

WHILE BLAMING his problems on the federal program, Pruett said this "doesn't justify me going out and killing the people I did. Nothing justified me killing Peggy Lee or whatever her name was. I killed an innocent person. It is that simple."

Pruett said during the interview, held at what once served as the drunk tank in the Jackson jail, that he had arrived in Jackson the night before the robbery to check out the savings and loan branch.

He said he picked savings and loans instead of banks because "99 percent are run by females. They have more common sense than men when it comes to bodily harm..."

IN THE Jackson holdup that netted the robber about $7,000, Mrs. Lowe's abductor grabbed her as he was leaving the branch office and forced her into her car. The car was found abandoned about 500 yards away but there was no further trace of Mrs. Lowe.

Pruett appeared tired after his trip to Alabama and smoked cigarettes constantly as he described his reason for talking and his unhappiness with the federal witness program.

"My death is my own judgment against myself," he said, adding that he would not change his mind and seek an appeal.

"If I represent myself, it keeps the American Civil Liberties Union and all them freedom fighters and other stuff off my back," he said. "They can't tell me what can do and what I can't do ... and I don't have to file an appeal."

District Attorney Ed Peters said later that federal and state officials would have to discuss who would try Pruett first. He said Prutt's remarks to the reporters would be used in any prosecution.

PRUETT DECLINED to discuss the death of his wife, Michelle Lynn, and would not say whether he had anything to do with the death. He also said New Mexico authorities believed he was responsible for a slaying in that state but that he had not.

Pruett in 1979 had been relocated to Albuquerque, N.M., where his identity was changed to Charles "Sonny" Pearson and where he was dropped in the program in 1980 because he had become self-sufficient, authorities said.

During the interview, Pruett said he continued the robberies because "I just wanted to party and enjoy it as much as I could. Good living, I guess they call it."

Marion Albert Pruett tells reporters in Jackson, Miss., Wednesday that he killed savings and loan employee Peggy Lowe following a Sept. 7 robbery. Pruett also said he had slain three other people in Colorado and Arkansas and was responsible for a string of robberies.

Woman describes one of family killers

CONROE, Texas (AP) — A Montgomery County woman, critically wounded by attackers who killed her husband and 9-year-old daughter, described one of the gunmen Wednesday, Sheriff Joe Corley said.

As a result, Corley said, authorities are searching for "an acquaintance" of Harry Carter, 48, who was charged with murder Tuesday in the slaying of Craig Joseph Weicht, 30. Bond was set at $100,000.

Weicht's daughter, Karen, was also killed in the Monday night attack and his wife, Carolyn, was wounded.

Mrs. Weicht, 30, gave authorities a description of one gunman from her hospital bed. She was in critical but stable condition late Wednesday, with multiple gunshot wounds, officials said.

In another development, sheriff's deputies recovered a 1979 Lincoln Continental stolen from the victims' home immediately after the slayings.

Corley said there were at least three bloodstains in the automobile.

Clark oredered to court

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Less than a week before his date with the electric chair, condemned killer Colin Clark has been ordered back to court to hear his mother ask a federal judge to halt the execution.

But Clark, who fired his lawyer and abandoned his legal appeals, told The Associated Press in a telephone interview Wednesday that he expects the execution to take place as scheduled, despite today's scheduled court appearance.

"As I talk today I think they will burn Colin Clark on Nov. 5," he said. "I don't think what Mom is doing will hold it up."

His mother, Jean Beavans of Cairo, Ga., aided by the American Civil Liberties Union, asked U.S. District Judge John V. Parker on Monday to stay the execution and order sanity hearigs for her son.

Parker is expected to hear arguments on the case in the afternoon. District Attorney Ossie Brown of East Baton Rouge Parish said he subpoenaed Clark and was assured by prison authorities Clark would be there.

Prosecutors tried to head off the appeal Wednesday, filing a five-page response to Mrs. Beavans' petition.

Clark, the motion said, "has never been considered ... to be incompetent by either his attoneys, the prosecution or any of the judges who have personally observed him."

Plates to go will be served only during the noon meal. Prices for the dinner will be $4 for adults and $2 for children. Sausage sandwiches along with dessert and a beverage will be sold from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. for $2. Uncooked sausage will be sold by the pound.

A dance beginning at 8 p.m. will feature "West Wind..."

Fashion braces

CHICAGO (AP) — Revolutionary fashions can backfire, but Dr. J. Dewitt Fox thinks using good taste in designing braces to treat whiplash will hold off any backlash.

"For the men, there are subtle tones of gray, brown, navy blue and black — and they come to match suits," said Fox, owner of Fox Medical Products in Los Angeles.

"For the ladies there is an array of pastel colors in velvet or the ultimate collar with

Meat for Christmas would be a welcome gift

By MERLE ELLIS

It might be a little hard to wrap, but I'll bet there would be no more welcome gift under any tree this Christmas than a side of beef. Any meat, for that matter, would likely be received with as much honest and enthusiastic appreciation as was the goose Scrooge sent to the Cratchits after his night of nightmares in Dickens' "A Christmas Carol."

Meat used to be a standard holiday gift back in the days when most everyone had a smokehouse out by the barn or a crock of mincemeat or corned beef in the storm cellar. A country-cured ham or slab of bacon was as common an item under the tree in those days as a fruit cake or box of homemade cookies is today. It can be again . . . if you've got the money.

Following is a list of some of the companies around the country that specialize in providing good meat by mail. Their products are not inexpensive. But they do offer top quality products, and if the idea of giving (or getting, for that matter) good meat for the holidays appeals to you, now's the time to send for their catalogs and do some shopping.

If you like good country ham with flavor, texture and aroma far removed from the watered down, flavorless ham you find in most supermarkets, here are a few places to get it. Most offer a variety of other good country smoked meats, as well. Send for their catalogs and treat yourself (as well as those on your Christmas list) to some good eating this holiday season.

Early's Honey Stand, Route 2, Spring Hill, Tennessee, 37174. The Early family has been making hams since 1925. They also make some of the best smoked sausage I have ever tasted.

Their ham comes packed in a three-pound, old-fashioned cloth "poke." It's smoked to a golden brown over hickory wood and tastes every bit as good as any Aunt Gert used to make — maybe even better. The Earlys also offer bacon, sorghum, honey and some fine examples of good old-fashioned homespun cooking from the Tennessee hill country.

Alewel's Old Missouri Country Meats, South St. Louis Street, Concordia, Missouri, 64020. Roger Alewel and his wife, Ronnie, make some of the best hams and bacon in Missouri. At the Missouri Fair a few years back, their hams and bacons won Grand Champion honors. The winning slab of bacon sold for $475 and the ham went for a record $1500. The ones you can buy today are a lot less expensive — but every bit as good.

Harrington's, Richmond, Vermont, 05477. George Ward, the man in charge of the smokehouse at Harrington's, does his smoking just the way Aunt Gert used to do hers, with corncobs.

You can get ham (cooked or uncooked, boned or bone in). You can also get bacon, pork loins, sausage, dried beef, turkey and pheasant, all with the flavor that comes from long, slow, leisurely corncob smoking. They also have a nice line of smoked cheeses, stoneground flours and pure Vermont maple syrup.

Weaver's, P.O. Box 525, Fifteenth Avenue and Weavertown Road, Lebanon, PA 17042. Weaver's, in the heart of Pennsylvania Dutch country, is famous for its Lebanon bologna made from the recipe passed down from Daniel Weaver since 1885.

Aunt Lucy Hams, Inc., 3 Fredrick St., Box 126, Walkersville, Maryland, 21793. At Aunt Lucy, you can get a one-year-old ham with real old-time flavor or, if you like your country ham a bit milder, a six-month-old ham that has more moisture but "real country goodness in every bite."

The Lioness 700 Club, auxiliary of Westside Lions Club, met in the home of Mrs. Lee Roy Shannon.

Mrs. Carmela Rotem, a native of Israel, presented the program, explaining how the present country of Israel was founded. She spoke of city and country life in Israel, and with the use of a diagram described a kibutz. Recorded Israeli native music was played during the social hour.

Members discussed upcoming projects and goals.

MIDLAND SOCIETY OF UNIVERSITY WOMEN

Helen Giffert conducted the meeting when Midland Society of University Women met in Haley Memorial Library.

Mrs. Louis Chase introduced the program. Shannon Dillard gave a slide presentation on the history, artifacts and library collections of Haley Memorial Library.

Guests were Mrs. Mary Belle Speed, Mrs. Camilla McLaughlin, Mrs. Colleen Scury, Mrs. Dorothy Aaron, June Jaarsett and Marjorie Chase.

Stella Mae Lanham, Mrs. Allen Ehlers and Mrs. C. C. Keith were hostesses.

XI ALPHA MU CHAPTER, BSP

Genell Emerson reported on the recent couples' cocktail party held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bob Jehring. Jerry Watson was surprised with a bikini birthday cake from his wife, Pauline, and chapter members presented Jerry with a new "birthday suit."

Darla Pepper announced Sage Nursing Home is seeking donations and assistance in entertaining residents.

Cherry Stover gave the program on "Getting to Know Beverly Acker." Alice Williams won the hostess gift, and several members received Halloween gifts from their secret sisters.

The next meeting will be a citywide council meeting November 2 in St. Mark's United Methodist Church. Cherry Stover will present a fashion show with fashions from the Cherry Orchard and modeled by Midland members of Beta Sigma Phi. The next social will be a cocktail party in the home of Peggy Brown prior to the citywide Harvest Ball November 7.

GWYN GARDENERS

Members of Gwyn Gardeners met in Hogan Park for a tour of the Nature Trail of the Midland Outdoor Learning Center for Environmental Conservation. The center has been a joint effort between the City of Midland, Midland Soil and Water Conservation District and Midland Independent School District.

The purpose of the center is to inform people of the need to conserve soil and water resources and the environment which sustains life. The nature walk was led by Mrs. John Ochsner and Mrs. Mike Smith.

Following the tour, a picnic lunch was served, with Mrs. M. R. Stipp, Mrs. W. C. Kimball and Mrs. R. F. Mathews as hostesses.

During a brief business session, the club voted to make a donation to the Midland Parks and Recreation Department to help support and maintain the nature trail.

BETA DELTA CHAPTER, BSP

A vote was taken to elect the 1981-82 Valentine Sweetheart. Dovie St. Peters was named.

It was announced the Harvest Ball will be November 7 in the VFW Hall. The Texas Express will provide the entertainment. Beta Delta and Xi Alpha Mu Chapters will share the responsibility for table decorations for the dance.

Welcomed back to the chapter after a leave of absence was Cathy Cartmell. Also welcomed was Seleta Wilson, who is on leave, but was a visitor.

Dovie St. Peters gave the program on "Your Temperament."

WOMAN'S WEDNESDAY CLUB

Mrs. Phil Adams introduced Carl Trim, president of the Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, when Woman's Wednesday Club met in the Midland Woman's Club.

Trim related the history of BBB, its objectives and its importance in a rapidly growing area such as Midland and Odessa. He gave members a bulletin on giving wisely to charities.

New members introduced were Mrs. Harry Douthitt and Helen Gifford. Hostesses to the tea hour were Mrs. J. P. Wilkinson and Mrs. Leroy Gaston.

PROFESSIONAL SECRETARIES INTERNATIONAL

Kathy Atkin, officer and assistant cashier of Commercial Bank & Trust, presented a program for the Professional Secretaries International meeting in The Midlnnd National Bank.

Ms. Atkin spoke on "Money Management" with a discussion of the problems and decisions women of today are faced with in money management and investments. She said Commercial Bank & Trust is the only bank in Midland offering women this service with no charge.

During the business session, final plans were made for the Arts & Crafts Sale to be held in Dellwood Mall December 4-5.

Linda Neeley discussed the membership tea to be held November 5. She can be contacted at 683-9729 for invitations.

Mrs. Margite Nutt is a new member. Mrs. Daisey Borlen was a guest.

Hearst Feature Service

BOSTON — First they eat huge amounts of food. Then they vomit. These unhappy people are caught in the "binge-purge syndrome," and doctors say it is an inceasingly common problem among young Americans.

According to some medical investigators, as many as one out of every five women at American colleges engage in this syndrome.

Some gorge on as much as $70 worth of food a day, then empty their systems by inducing vomiting or gulping laxatives.

Massachusetts General Hospital has set up an eating disorders clinic to help victims of this habit, known formally as bulimia.

About 20 percent of the people enrolled in the clinic suffer from a related problem called anorexia nervosa, a psychiatric disorder in which an overwhelming desire for thinness leads to an aversion to food.

Some bulimia patients at the Boston clinic admit to taking up to 300 laxatives weekly for five or six years before seeking treatment for their addiction.

Binge-purge eating may follow a death, divorce, separation from home, a career decision or a breakup with a close friend.

DEAR ABBY

Reader disagrees with Abby's advice on tipping

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Regarding "M's" letter asking how to tell her wealthy date to tip more than $1: If that's all he feels is appropriate, it's his money! Granted, he should be aware that 15 percent is considered "fair," but restaurant prices are inflated enough as it is without handing out 15 percent tips just because it's expected.

My father always tipped like he was supporting the waitress, her five kids and her dog! It's time we start getting what we pay for. — NOT CHEAP BUT FAIR

DEAR NOT: "M" said her escort NEVER tipped more than a dollar. Surely the service couldn't have been substandard everywhere, all the time.

Funny you should mention your father in connection with tipping. I had the same kind of father. I recall his buying coffee for my twin and me at a coffee shop near his theater. In those days, coffee was a nickel a cup and the bill came to 15 cents.

Father gave the waitress a dollar bill and said "Keep the change." In unison we asked, "Daddy, isn't that an awfully big tip?"

"Not for a woman who's working hard to make an honest living," he replied.

DEAR ABBY: We have new neighbors who do not have a telephone, and I doubt very much if they intend to get one. They have given our telephone number to their friends and relatives, who call frequently at all hours of the day and night, and we have to go next door and call them to the phone.

Abby, we would not mind doing this in cases of emergency, but these neighbors get calls that we know are strictly social and they tie up our line for long periods.

How can we handle this without appearing mean and selfish? — AREA CODE 602

DEAR 602: Ask your phoneless neighbors to please instruct their friends and relatives to call only in case of an emergency. And if you get too many "emergencies," your only option is to change your telephone number — and keep it to yourself. This is neither "mean" nor "selfish." It's protection against being taken advantage of.

DEAR ABBY: My sister-in-law and her husband celebrated their 49th wedding anniversary last August. Because of my sister-in-law's poor health, her daughter is planning a party to celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary next month, which is premature by nearly a whole year!

I am reluctant to accept the invitation because I don't think it's proper to celebrate an occasion that has not yet occurred.

I grew up under the old moral code and still believe in it. Right or wrong? — PUZZLED IN ELMHURST, ILL.

DEAR PUZZLED: Wrong! I think it's more "moral" to be kind and prematurely generous than to go by the book and risk being too late.

DEAR ABBY: I hate to be a pest, but I've written to you at least once a week for the last three months, and every time you answer me you give me the same advice.

In case you don't remember me, I'm Lynda, the 19-year-old girl who's in love with the 33-year-old policeman. I know he's married and has four kids, but I love him and I know he loves me.

I can't help it, Abby. I love him just as much today as I did a year ago. In every letter you say, "He's taken. Forget him."

DEAR LYNDA: Sorry. The advice I gave you is, in my judgment, the best. He's taken. Forget him.

(Do you have questions about sex, love, drugs and the pain of growing up? Get Abby's new booklet: "What Every Teen-Ager Ought to Know." Send $2 and a long, stamped (35 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Teen Booklet, 12060 Hawthorne Blvd., Suite 5000, Hawthorne, Calif. 90250.)

To keep gloves, hang them in a special place

By AL CARRELL

After several thousand splinters, both wood and metal, and after hundreds of blisters on hands and fingers, I've learned to wear gloves for many home fix-it projects. That is I wear them if I can find them. I have learned that the best way to insure finding gloves is to hang them from a special place on the shop wall. I have one pair that hangs from a spring-type clothespin that has a hole in one handle so the clothespin hangs from a pegboard hook. I just came up with another trick for another pair. Those pull-top rings that come from beverage cans are the hangers. First, I use pliers to remove the tab, and then I sew a ring to each glove so the pair can hang from a hook. Sometimes the tab pulls the tiny rivet out, and I sew through the hole, but if not, sew around the ring. Those rings can also be used as hangers on the back of lightweight pictures. Maybe you have found some other uses — if so, pass them along.

+ + +

Dear Al: Those pest strips that are for hanging in the house to rid the place of flies can be used for other pests too. I found that I could slice a strip into smaller pieces and place them around where I thought roaches would travel, and I never see anymore roaches. The strips are easily cut. — F.J.

Be sure you read all the cautions. Be sure you don't leave any pest control materials where children or pets can get to them. With any insecticide, be sure you zap the bugs and not yourself.

+ + +

Dear Al: With fall leaves come clogged rain gutters. I have made a tool that allows me to clean these without climbing a ladder. I mounted a hand mirror and an auto fan belt to a strong bamboo pole. I use the mirror, which is securely taped to the pole, so I can spot any accumulation of leaves. The fan belt is attached to the pole at one place so the rest forms a loop. The loop can be moved along and made to whip the leaves up and out. It doesn't pick up every leaf, but gets most out so the rest can be flushed through the downspouts. It's much quicker and safer than using a ladder. — C.K.

+ + +

A SUPER HINT — Most folks demolish the gypsumboard in the process of tearing out a wall. A friend was doing this chore, and I liked the way he was able to save all the wallboard. As you can imagine, trying to pull the nails out would surely result in crushed areas on the wallboard. Instead he used a nailset to drive the nail heads on through the wallboard. This left only small holes which could easily be patched. To locate all the nails, a magnetic stud finder was used. The texturing was then scraped away so the nail heads were visible.

+ + +

Dear Al: In the past you have passed along things that could be added to patching compound to slow down the drying time. Since I'm a slow but sure worker, I appreciated those tips. I have learned of another slower-downer. When mixing spackling compound, add a tablespoon or so of dry laundry starch to the mix. It gives the extra time I need. — Old Timer

Treat or treating brings its own food problems today

By ANNE CRUTCHER
The Washington Post

It used to be that the worst thing a grown-up had to worry about on Halloween was putting together a kid's superhero costume. The standards for jack-o'-lantern carving were lenient, and what else was there? So long as a household was well stocked with M&Ms, candy corn, miniature chocolate bars, Fig Newtons and bubble gum, the trick side of trick-or-treat night remained hypothetical.

Even the kind of person unscrupulous enough to dish out confiscated birthday party loot or stale jellybeans left over from Easter was unlikely to get into any trouble. The assorted ghosts, clowns and Frankenstein monsters at the door would tamely accept a handful of just about anything, even though the faces under the masks could be seen to fall if the offerings ran to ostentatiously healthy stuff, such as apples.

It was, of course, apples that set off the alarms that have so spooked recent Halloweens. Apples with razor blades in them. Authenticated reports of a few sinister treats spawned rumors of many more, to the point where parents began insisting that children refuse anything that was not safely encased in commercial packaging.

It was goodbye to a lot of homemade cookies along with the now-suspect apples. But the homemade cookies were already under a cloud anyway because of their sugar content. Anti-sugar sentiment, backed by research on hyperactivity and dental caries, was rapidly ruling out yesteryear's candy as well.

Even the dates and raisins that seemed so wholesome a while back were running into opposition. Some dentists recommended sugarless gum as an appropriate contribution to the hopeful sacks. Others remembered that where there's no sugar, there's likely to be saccharin, complete with cancer threat. The sugarless gum was also discovered to bring on diarrhea in some children. Besides, think of the parents who can't bear to see anybody, young or old, chewing gum.

The foods children like to eat that are demonstrably free of both sugar and saccharin are heavy on the salt and fat. Popcorn, potato chips and Fritos get no more nods from the nutritionists than saltwater taffy.

In despair, people in neighborhoods with heavy trick-or-treat traffic resorted to carob-flavored granola bars and peanuts in the shell. Or they gave up on food entirely and handed out little toys of the Cracker Jack-prize type.

Here, too, there were problems. Think of the policy detours the Cracker Jack people have had to go through. No more metal crickets because somebody might get cut. Nothing that could be swallowed to anybody's detriment. Cracker Jack isn't what it used to be.

The non-food people also found themselves up against expense. There are no 10-cent, made-in-Japan pencil sharpeners anymore. Plastic rings have a way of looking awfully small next to the yawning mouth of a supermarket bag.

Short of bypassing the local kids entirely with a UNICEF contribution and nothing else, what's to be done? Leaving town on the 31st of October would only activate the nearest contingent of silver thieves.

One way to get around the food problem is to give out balloons. Balloons have the further virtue of emphasizing the idea that Halloween is, or should be, a holiday for small children.

Peanuts in the shell still pass the major tests. They're probably called for. When even the raisin has lost its innocence, why not recognize that you can't win this one? Pass a tray with at least a few chocolate kisses on it. After all, it's only once a year.

Almonds, caramel and apples make a new pie

Apple pie is such a popular American dish that few people realize its origins are actually European. British colonists introduced their love of pies, including apple, to America in the early 1600's. Because apples could be easily dried on the hearth, stored for months, and then rehydrated with a little liquid, they were a favorite colonial pie filling by themselves or in combination with other ingredients such as meat, game and custards.

Today, apple pie is an American cooking classic. Generations of American homemakers have combined some of the cooking traditions of their forefathers with innovations of their own, to create dozens of delicious apple pie recipes.

Here's a new one that's bound to be a classic, Caramel Almond Apple Pie, inspired by another American favorite, caramel apples. California almonds, blended with brown sugar and layered over the bottom crust, add a delightful crunchy-caramel texture and out-of-the-ordinary taste to the traditional apple pie filling. Additional almonds, sprinkled over the top crust, add extra crunch and appetite appeal.

California almonds come in so many easy-to-use forms, including whole, chopped, slivered and diced, you'll find they're a versatile ingredient not only in this recipe, but for all your menu planning. Whether you add almonds to baked goods or sprinkle them into soups, vegetable dishes and salads, you can be sure that family and friends alike will love the great flavor and crunch each tiny morsel delivers. You can count on almonds as a nutritious snack, too. A handful of almonds is a tasty and healthy way to chase away hunger between meals.

CARAMEL ALMOND APPLE PIE

Pastry for 2-crust 9-inch pie
¼ cup melted butter or margarine
1 cup packed brown sugar
1 cup chopped natural almonds, toasted
2 pounds tart green apples, peeled and thinly sliced (about 2 quarts)
¼ cup bourbon or apple juice
¼ cup flour
1 teasp. each cinnamon and nutmeg
1 egg, beaten

Line 9-inch pie plate with half of the pastry, crimping edges. Pour melted butter over pastry, then sprinkle with ½ cup of the brown sugar and ¾ cup of the almonds. Set aside. In large bowl combine apples and bourbon. Combine flour, the remaining ½ cup sugar and the spices; add to apples, tossing to coat. Arrange over almond layer in pie plate. Roll out remaining pastry; cut into strips and arrange over filling to form a lattice crust. Brush with beaten egg. Finely chop or grind remaining ¼ cup almonds; sprinkle over crust. Bake in 425 degree oven for 10 minutes. Reduce heat to 350 degrees and continue baking about 50 minutes, until apples are tender and filling is bubbly. Cool slightly before cutting.

Makes 6 servings.

A tisket, a tasket, goodies in a basket

By MARJORIE RICE
Copley News Service

The next time you're looking for a unique way to decorate a birthday party table, a shower buffet or a tea party setting, why not pack a pretty basket with creamy cocoa bonbons, chocolate mint squares and mini-cocoa cupcakes and tuck in a bouquet of fresh flowers.

Use food colorings to blend delicate pastel frostings of lavender, peach, pink, green, blue and yellow. Sprinkle on tinted sugar pieces, silver and gold shot, finely chopped nuts or coconut.

Arrange the pretty morsels in a basket (or a crystal bowl) and tuck in flowers for a festive touch.

CREAMY COCOA BONBONS

3 ozs. cream cheese
2 cups confectioners' sugar
¼ cup unsweetened cocoa
1 tbsp. plus 1 tsp. melted butter
1 tsp. vanilla
Pastel Coating (see recipe below)

Soften the cream cheese in a small mixing bowl and add theconfectioners'sugar, cocoa, butter and vanilla. Shape the mixture into ½-inch balls and chill. Dip the balls in Pastel Coating. Store them in the refrigerator. Makes two dozen bonbons.

PASTEL COATING

3 tbsps. butter
1½ cups confectioners' sugar
2 tbsps. milk
½ tsp. vanilla
Red or green food coloring

Combine the ingredients in the top of a double boiler and heat,stirring ccasionally until the mixture is melted. Tint the pastel red or green with food color. Dip the cold centers into the very warm mixture (heat the coating over hot water) and quickly remove them with a fork and place them on a wax paper-covered tray swirling the tops. Refrigerate the coated centers until firm.

Note: If white chocolate coating is available you may omit the pastel coating and dip the centers in melted white chocolate following the manufacturer's directions. Or create your own special color blends — e.g., peach, pale blue, lavender — by mixing food coloring tints.

CHOCOLATE MINT SQUARES

6 tbsps. unsalted butter
½ cup unsweetened cocoa
2 cups confectioners' sugar
3 tbsps. milk
1 tsp. vanilla
Mint Filling (recipe below)

Melt the butter in a small saucepan over medium heat and add thecocoa. Hat the mixture just until it begins to boil and stir constantly until smooth. Remove the saucepan from the heat and add the confectioners' sugar, milk and vanilla and then return it to low heat, stirring until the mixture appears melted and glossy.

Pour half of the mixture onto a lightly greased cookie sheet and quickly spread it into a 9-inch square with a spatula. Chill, while preparing the Mint Filling. Spread the Mint Filling over the chocolate layer and chill for 10 minutes. Place the remaining chocolate over low heat until it is melted and quickly spread it over the filling. Chill the layers, cut into small squares and serve cold. Makes about four dozen squares.

MINT FILLING

Combine 3 ozs. cream cheese, 2 cups confectioners' sugar, ½ tsp. vanilla, ¼ tsp. peppermint extract and 2 or 3 drops green food coloring and blend well. If needed, add 1 tbsp. milk fo spreading consistency.

Party Variation: Omit the chocolate square procedure and instead place the chocolate mixture in a pastry tube. On a wax paper-covered tray form 1-inch patties and chill until firm. Prepare the Mint Filling and spread a small amount onto each chocolate patty and then top with another patty.

MINI-COCOA CUPCAKES

3 tbsps. butter
½ cup sugar
½ tsp. vanilla
1 egg yolk
1 cup unsifted all-purpose flour
3 tbsrs. unsweetened cocoa
¼ tsp. baking soda
½ cup milk
1 egg white

Grease and flour small cupcake pans (1¾-inch diameter) or use paperliners. Cream the butter and sugar together and add vanila and egg yolk. Combine the flour, cocoa and baking soda and add them to the creamed mixture alternately with the milk. Beat until just blended.

Beat the egg white until it forms stiff peaks and carefully fold into the batter. Fill the small cupcake pans full and bake at 350 degrees for 15 to 18 minutes, or until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean. Frost cakecakes with Pastel Frosting (see recipe below) and decorate with colored sprinkles, if desired. Makes two dozen bite-size cupcakes.

PASTEL FROSTING

3 tbsps. butter
1½ cups confectioners' sugar
1½ tsps. vanilla
2 tbsps. milk
Red or green food coloring

Combine all the ingredients, except the food color, in a smallbowl.Beat the mixture until it has a spreading consistency. Divide the frosting in half, tinting one portion pink and the other green (or create your own special blends — e.g., peach, pale blue, lavender — by mixing tints).

Helpful plant hint

Unflavored gelatin makes an excellent plant food, according to a how-to tip in a recent Family Circle magazine feature, "Mary Ellen's Best of the Best Helpful Hints."

To prepare the plant food, dissolve one envelope of gelatin in a cup of hot water, then slowly add three cups of cold water. Use once a month and you'll see healthier, greener plants.

Scotch makers bidding for women's business

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

What's the proper way to drink scotch? The answer to that is as misty as the fogs that shroud the British Isles.

There is the traditional answer I got from Richard Grindal, director of external relations for the Scotch Whisky Association.

"Most Scotch whisky aficionados take it with a splash of water or soda or they drink it neat, which is my personal preference," he says.

But back in Scotland where the historic spirits are made, a very different response came from Raymond Miquel, chairman of the distillers, Arthur Bell & Sons Ltd.

Miquel, who is aiming for the women's market hitherto dominated by wines, vodka and gin, has advanced the idea of mixing scotch with an assortment of fruit drinks and colas that would make an old-time scotch drinker wince. But he seems to have a point.

"Nearly 20 percent of Scottish women now drink scotch once a week," Miquel says, "with clearly the majority enjoying scotch's flavor with lemonade and other mixers."

The Scots have been distilling their favorite whisky for at least 500 years. First it was used as a medicine and for a while served as a local currency, after people had begun drinking it for pleasure.

For centuries the Scots distilled the whisky in their cellars, and when the government attempted to tax the liquor, they began making it secretly in the Scottish glens.

In the early 19th century, distillers in the highlands began to go legal, and the foundations of the scotch industry were laid. Today this liquor, often blending up to 50 different whiskies, is sold around the world to the tune of more than $3 billion a year.

Queen Victoria is credited with making scotch respectable south of the border in England. It seems she and her husband, Prince Albert, had been mountain climbing in Scotland and she felt the need for a thirst quencher.

"I had a little whisky and water," the queen said in her diary, "as the people declared pure water would be too chilling."

Scotch has long been a cooking ingredient, from soups to stews and fowl dishes such as this recipe for "Tipsy Chicken."

2 tablespoons vegetable oil
1 roasting chicken, 4 pounds
½ cup Scotch whisky
Salt and pepper to taste
½ cup honey
2 ounces blanched sliced almonds

Pour oil in roasting pan and place chicken in pan. Pour scotch over chicken, season to taste with salt and pepper. Brush on honey and sprinkle with almonds. Cover pan and bake in preheated 350-degree oven for about 90 minutes. Uncover for last 10 minutes to brown the bird. Serves 4-6 persons.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

How to peel a pumpkin

DEAR HELOISE:

Pumpkins are often thrown away after Halloween because they are so hard to peel. Here is a tip I find useful:

Just place the whole pumpkin in a pan with about two cups of water. Bake in a 350F oven until tender, usually 60 to 90 minutes, depending on the size of the pumpkin.

Remove from the oven and peel off the skin or cut the pumpkin in half and scoop out the insides.

+ + +

You are so right! In fact, if you don't have a Halloween pumpkin to use, watch for sales at the market especially after the big night and all the goblins are gone.

You can have a lot of inexpensive pumpkin pies for that Thanksgiving feast. — Heloise

WOODEN SPOONS

Dear Heloise: I'd like to pass on something I discovered quite by accident while using your whitening formula.

I needed something to swish my white clothes around with while soaking, so I took an old wooden spoon which was badly stained. Surprise! The whitening formula took all those ugly stains out and made my spoon look almost as good as the day I bought it.

Your whitening formula really comes in handy living on a farm with a husband and four kids, as I do. — N.V.

+ + +

For the uninitiated, the "whitening formula" is one-fourth cup bleach, one-half cup dishwasher compound and one gallon of very hot water.

Mix then use to soak white (bleach-safe) clothes to remove stains, etc., but, do not use an aluminum container for this purpose as the solution will discolor it. — Heloise

MAYONNAISE MAKING

Dear Heloise: "... and pour in the remaining oil in a steady stream." Thus saith the mayonnaise recipe in my blender manual.

Why didn't it tell me to thoroughly wash an empty dishwashing liquid detergent bottle, then rinse it with vinegar and use it for this purpose!

Luckily, I discovered this little trick by myself. Much easier to control the flow of the oil, and the mayonnaise is light and fluffy. — A.P.S.

BUILDING BLOCKS

Dear Heloise: If you have young children at home, save soap detergent, oatmeal and other sturdy boxes. Tape up the ends and use the boxes as inexpensive toys.

They make great building blocks. They are colorful, too, and can help children learn colors, letters and numbers while playing. — Kay Hinson

PEN PARKER

Dear Heloise: Frequently, when I was at the breakfast table preparing to make a list of groceries or things to do for the day, etc., no pencil was readily available.

So, I purchased a pen with a magnet on it and fastened it to one of the chrome legs of the table

It's always convenient. — Frances Wallace

Cashews and lentils, apples and oats

By CLARE BARRETT
Copley News Service

While that may sound like a line from an old English folk song, it is the title of an imaginative new natural foods cookbook by food writer Diana Dalsass. Published in June by Contemporary Books Inc., Chicago, the book sells for $$7.95 in paperback.

The full range of soup-to-nuts recipes are presented here with Dalsass' helpful comments, which include serving and complete menu suggestions. A helpful feature of the book is the author's breakdown of preparation times for each dish.

Seasoned vegetarians and newcomers alike will find recipes and information of interest in this new book. See for yourself with a few sample recipes presented here, and contact your local bookseller about obtaining a copy of the complete work.

The following recipe takes only a few minutes to fix and the patties make a great lunch or light dinner dish. The flavor is wonderful — just carrots, cashews and sauteed onions. Serve the patties with a scoop of brown rice and a platter of sliced tomatoes and cucumbers.

CARROT-CASHES PATTIES

1 onion, chopped
1 tbsp. vegetable oil
1 cup grated carrots
½ cup finely chopped cashew nuts
1 egg, beaten
½ tsp. salt

In a small skillet, saute the onion in oil until tender. Mix the remaining ingredients in a bowl and add the contents of the skillet. Form the mixture into six small patties. Place on a greased baking sheet and bake in a 350-degree oven 25 minutes.

The following recipe is absolutely the simplest souffle I have ever made. All ingredients except the egg whites go into the blender. The souffle rises high and light, with a wonderfully fresh corn flavor and a distinctly Mexican touch. Serve it with black beans, seasoned with garlic and oil-and-vinegar dressing.

4 eggs, separated
1-(4-oz.) can green chili peppers
Kernels from 4 ears of corn (about 3 cups)
½ tsp. salt
1 tsp. chili powder

Place all ingredients except the egg whites in a blender and blend until nerly smooth. Beat the egg whites until stiff in a large bowl and gently fold in the contents of the blender.

Turn the batter into a well-greased two-quart souffle dish or casserole. Bake in a 375-degree oven 35 to 40 minutes, or until it is puffed, browned and set.

Preparation times: 20 minutes kitchen work, 40 minutes baking. Makes four appetizer or two main course servings.

A cross between a bar cookie and a granola bar, this Pineapple-Almond Snack is highly nutritious, thanks to the nuts, whole-wheat flour, oats, bran and raisins it contains. Note that it has no added sugar, all the sweetness being derived from the pineapple and raisins. A bar of the "cake" makes ideal fare for breakfast for those who dote on rather sweet, hearty goodies to munch with morning coffee or milk. It is also an especially healthful after-school treat for youngsters. The bars are best kept refrigerated; this protects from spoilage and also makes them exceptionally chewy.

PINEAPPLE-ALMOND SNACK

1 cup whole-wheat flour
½ tsp. salt
¾ cup rolled oats
¼ cup All-Bran cereal
1 stick (½ cup) butter or unsaturated margarine, melted
1 tsp. vanilla
1 egg, beaten
1½ cups crushed, juice-packed canned pineapple, drained
½ cup raisins
¼ cup chopped walnuts
¼ cup slivered almonds, toasted in an ungreased skillet until golden

In a bowl, stir together the flour, salt, oats and All-Bran. In another bow, mix well the melted butter or margarine, vanilla, egg and pineapple. Add the dry ingredients and mix until moistened. Stir in the raisins and nuts. Spread the batter evenly in a greased and floured 8x8-inch baking pan. Bake in a 350-degree oven one hour, or until browned on top (it will still be a little moist if tested with a toothpick). Let cool on a rack. Then cut into bars and chill.

Carrots take to Creme Fraiche

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: Can you give a recipe for the French "creme fraiche?" I see it called for in some of today's "gourmet" recipes and would like to try it. Although I resist making puff pastry, layered vegetable mousses, exotic pates and other complicated French dishes, I gather creme fraiche is easy to concoct and has some good uses. — TIMESAVER.

DEAR TIMESAVER: I know how you feel about some of those time-consuming French recipes. I think they're great for people who look on cooking as a craft and enjoy taking the time to make complicated dishes they can share with others. But you're right about Creme Fraiche — it needs only two ingredients and takes only minutes to assemble; after that it does its own work.

One of the best recipes for Creme Fraiche is in Perla Meyers' "From Market to Kitchen Cookbook" (Harper & Row). As a bonus, I'm including her recipe for carrots with a creme fraiche sauce. Any cook who values the goodness of using fresh foods in practical but unhackneyed ways is bound to find many recipes in Mrs. Meyers' book that are worth adding to a culinary repertoire. — C.B.

CARROTS WITH CREME FRAICHE

1 cup Creme Fraiche, Recipe follows
1 teaspoon flour
2 to 3 tablespoons finely minced fresh dill
1½ pounds fresh carrots, peeled and cut into ¼-inch slices
¼ cup water
4 tablespoons butter
1 teaspon granulated sugar
Salt and freshly ground white pepper

In a small bowl mix the Creme Fraiche with the flour and dill and stir until well blended. Set aside.

Combine the carrots with water, butter, and sugar in a heavy-bottomed saucepan. Season with salt and pepper. Bring to a boil, reduce the heat, and simmer the carrots covered for 8 to 10 minutes, or until barely tender.

Uncover the saucepan and spoon off all but 2 tablespoons of the cooking liquid. Increase the heat and add the Creme Fraiche mixture. Bring to a boil, reduce the heat, and simmer the carrots until tender and the sauce is thickened.

Season with salt and pepper and serve hot as an accompaniment to roast chicken or sauteed fish fillets.

Serves 4 to 5.

Creme Fraiche: Combine 2 cups heavy cream (not ultra-pasteurized) and 3 tablespoons buttermilk in a glass jar and whisk until well blended. Cover the jar and set aside in a warm, draft-free place until the cream sours and thickens — 8 to 24 hours. Stir thoroughly, cover and refrigerate. The Creme Fraiche will keep for 10 days to 2 weeks. It cannot be frozen.

California champagne

By NATHAN CHROMAN
Los Angeles Times

In France, the name of the legendary monk Dom Perignon stands as a shining symbol for fine Champagne. No such name exists here but in decades to come, California sparkling wine (California Champagne) appreciators will recall Americans with legendary wine qualifications, not the least of which will be Jack Davies of Schrambsberg Vineyard in Napa Valley.

Davies' 16-year record is most enviable. In 1967 he became the first to use Pinot Blanc as a grape variety for sparkling wine and it is still being used successfully today. This innovation was followed shortly by the introduction of Schrambsberg Blanc de Blanc, a sparkling wine made exclusively of Chardonnay grapes and aged two years before disgorging.

The next year, 1968, found Davies premiering Cuvee de Gamay, made exclusively from Napa Gamay grapes and aged two years before disgorging. The wine was vintage dated and produced in a "brut" style. Another introduction followed in 1971 with the launching of Schrambsberg Blanc de Noirs made of white Pinot Noir blended with some Chardonnay. This was aged more than two years, vintage dated, and apparently was the first of such wine made in the United States. The style is now widely followed but no other winery as yet seems to do it as well as Schramsberg. It, indeed, may be California's finest dry sparkling wine to date.

Not standing on old laurels, Schrambsberg, in 1972, added Cremant (demi sec) which is produced from the Flora grape in a style that Davies described as "creaming, less effervescent."

In 1979 Cuvee de Gamay was replaced with Cuvee de Pinot, a wine that is virtually all Pinot Noir. The exclusive use of Pinot Noir in a sparkling wine, perhaps because of Schramberg's success, has become widely copied.

Davies' fine record is now topped with the release of two major sparkling wines, the kind which should bring plaudits to Schramsberg and glory to American efforts. The better of the two is the Schrambsberg Reserve 1974 which is made from 100 percent Chardonnay grapes, with a fermentation that requires 23 days. Bottled in April, 1975, it was disgorded in June, 1979, and aged an additional year on the cork before final release. Finesse and elegance are the key characters of the wine, which has a long, agreeable finish not unlike a quality French Champagne. At $18 it is a good buy and a step forward in California sparkling wine making.

Close on the 1974's heels is the 1975 Schrambsberg Reserve. It, too, is from 100 percent Pinot Chardonnay grapes from Schrambsberg's own vineyards as well as Phair Vineyards. It was bottled in February of 1976 and required a 31-day fermentation. Disgorged in April, 1980, and held over for one more year before release, the wine is available at around $20. Finesse and elegance are again major characteristics, with a slight edge to the 1974 perhaps due to the additional age.

A 1974 Blanc de Noir is soon to be released in magnums only at around $42. This is a blend of 80 percent Pinot Noir with a balance of mostly Chardonnay and a little Pinot Blanc. Magnum lovers should find this wine most attractive and indeed it should be a sparkling hallmark.

Also available is the Schramsberg Blanc de Blanc 1978, well made from 98 percent Chardonnay grapes and 2 percent Pinot Blanc. The soon to be released '79 version at $14.95 will be 95 percent Chardonnay and 5 percent Pinot Blanc. Good buys, too, are the 1978 Cuvee de Pinot and the current edition of Cremant, both selling at around $11 to $12.

Attorney Jack Zimmerman and defendant Vickie Daniel stop to talk to the news media in the Liberty County Court House Wednesday after the judge in the Price Daniel, Jr. murder trial dismissed the jurors from the case.

Judge, not jury will decide verdict in Daniel trial

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

LIBERTY, Texas (AP) — The murder trial of Vickie Daniel entered its rebuttal phase today with a judge, not a jury, poised to rule on guilt or innocence.

The defendant waived her right to a jury trial Wednesday and will permit the presiding judge to decide if she murdered her husband, former Texas House Speaker Price Daniel Jr.

"I do not feel well. I do not have enough time to spend with my children, now the most important people in my life. I'm ready for it to be over. One way or the other, it must end," Mrs. Daniel said Wednesday in a rare comment to reporters.

"I've lived through nine months of this, one tragedy after another. First Price, then they tried to take my children away, then my mother ... died, the days and days of court sessions, and then this trial. Physically and mentally, I am exhausted," she said.

Jurors were dismissed Wednesday morning after listening to 10 days of sometimes lurid testimony.

Daniel, 39, was shot to death at his Liberty home Jan. 19. Mrs. Daniel said it was an accident.

Visiting State District Judge Leonard Giblin of Beaumont agreed to hear rebuttal testimony today and tentitively set final argumnents for Friday.

He said he probably would render a verdict within an hour of the closing statements.

CONVICTION ON THE murder charge carries a penalty of five years to life in prison and a maximum $10,000 fine. Probation also is a possibility.

Mrs. Daniel, 34, twice married and the mother of four, never denied shooting her husband, the son of Texas political lion Price Daniel Sr., a former Texas governor and U.S. senator.

Their divorce was pending.

Stunned jurors reacted with a mixture of anger, disappointment and relief at their discharge and disclosed that they favored aquittal by an informal vote of 10-2.

One member of the panel, Wayne Ballinger, predicted a hung jury "most likely" would have been the end result.

One of the two jurors who favored conviction was the wife of a Liberty constable and the other was the widow of a murder victim.

"I believe she got the gun, she shot him and he's dead," said Lynn Allen, wife of the constable.

But the majority agreed with lead defeanse lawyer Jack Zimmermann, that the evidence did not support a guilty verdict.

"I don't think the state proved it's case beyond a resonable doubt," said Zimmermann, but admitted he did not want to risk a hung jury.

"Vickie has already been tried for this thing twice and I don't think emotionally she could go through a third trial," he said, referring to an earlier child custody battle.

"If there was a hung jury, you better believe there would be pressure for a new trial."

CHIEF PROSECUTOR Carroll Willborn said he agreed to the waiver because he likewise did not relish a hung jury and suspected that jurors misunderstood the legal principles in the state's case.

The prosecution does not have to prove that Mrs. Daniel intentionally shot Price, he said, only that she "recklessly" grabbed, cocked and fired the rifle twice.

The defendant said Price slapped, kicked and threatened to kill her before she removed the rifle from a closet and ordered him to leave. She testified that she fired a warning shot but could not recall firing the second fatal bullet.

"But as a consequence," said Wilborn, "a man is dead. And that is the issue before this court ... .

"I think the state of Texas will get as good or better a shake with the court than the jury," said Wilborn.

Giblin, 40, a state judge since 1977, said he told the opposing attorneys he would assume the traditional jury role but warned them that "it's a roll of the dice."

He said he gave neither side so much as a hint of how he might rule, but assured them he would do the best that he can.

"I'm going to be fair, look at the evidence and call it like I see it," he told newsmen. "It's awesome, but I'm not going to pass the buck.

Heroin dealer given 99 years

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The attorney for a 41-year-old heroin dealer who received a 99-year-prison term Wednesday said he will appeal, as prosecutors called his conviction the first real test of a new Texas law.

Arie Kennard Jr. was convicted Tuesday by a district court jury of engaging in organized crime, despite his argument that he was immune from prosecution because he was acting as a police informant.

Jurors, however, said that they came perilously close to deciding that Kennard had been entrapped.

Kennard was charged with overseeing a southside drug operation that netted as much as $20,000 a day from heroin and cocaine sales.

Tarrant County Assistant District Attorney Larry Moore has described Kennard as "one of the biggest, if not the biggest, dope dealers that we've ever been able to convict in this county."

Defense attorney Don Carter said he will appeal on the basis of at least six legal errors made in the trial.

District Judge Randell Riley said he has not decided if he will find Kennard guilty of contempt for outbursts during the eight-day trial. Kennard blurted out that he had passed two polygraph tests, although Riley had said lie detector results could not be used as evidence in the trial.

Riley threatened Kennard with two, six-month jail sentences for contempt.

Kennard showed no visible emotion as the verdict was announced. The eight-woman, four-man jury deliberated more than four hours Wednesday in deciding punishment. Riley ordered them sequestered Monday and Tuesday night.

A female juror said, "It was the entrapment thing that took us a long time to break down."

Four other persons were indicted under the statute March 31. They were arrested after undercover officers made drug buys and other officers observed drug sales at Kennard's rented house.

Red ink drowning out balancing act

By OWEN ULLMANN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite perennial presidential pledges to slash federal deficits, the government continues to spew a torrent of red ink that is blotting out President Reagan's promise to balance the budget by 1984.

The Treasury Department reported Wednesday that the budget for fiscal 1981, which ended Sept. 30, ran $57.9 billion in the red, marking the 12th straight year that federal spending has outpaced receipts.

This was the same budget that former President Carter and Congress redrafted 18 months ago to bring it into balance. Instead, the budget produced the third largest deficit in history, surpassed only by a $59.6 billion deficit in 1980 and a $66.4 billion deficit in 1976.

THE NEW FIGURES underscore the widespread skepticism about Reagan's latest pledge to balance the budget by 1984 — a goal that many economists and politicians contend may fall short by a staggering $100 billion or more.

Economists discount presidential budget forecasts as rosy political scenarios that intentionally avoid inevitable economic realities. As time passes, events force presidents to face those realities and adjust their forecasts.

FOR EXAMPLE, if economic growth proves weaker than an administration is willing to predict — which is usually the case — the government winds up collecting less tax money and spending more on social welfare programs than its original estimates. The result is a larger budget deficit.

Reagan's plan for eliminating deficits by 1984 assumes very strong economic growth over the next five years, a forecast other economists label as too optimistic to attain. In recent weeks, administration economists have hinted they may lower their expectations, a change that puts a balanced budget even further out of reach.

Reagan already has back-pedalled from his initial campaign promise to balance the budget by 1983, if not sooner. Now, the administration's official estimate for 1982 is a $43.1 billion deficit that seems certain to top $60 billion without new spending cuts or tax increases.

ADMINISTRATION BUDGET officials also are conceding that they will be unable to balance the budget by 1984 without some form of new tax increases to help offset the loss of $280 billion in revenues from the individual and business tax cut enacted by Congress last summer.

White House budget director David A. Stockman said Wednesday that the federal deficit could swell to $100 billion in 1984 unless Congress makes further spending cuts or raises taxes.

The official Reagan administration estimate is for a 1984 deficit of $58.8 billion without further action by Congress, but Stockman said, "There are enormous upward pressures on the budget."

He said the most recent Congressional Budget Office estimate of the 1984 deficit — $100 billion — "isn't out of the ballpark."

As the deficits accumulate each year, efforts to balance the budget become more elusive because of the huge interest payments the government must make on the ballooning national debt.

With the national debt now above the $1 trillion mark and interest rates at unusually high levels, the government was forced to pay a record $95.6 billion in interest in 1981. That is more than the entire federal budget in 1960.

Interest is the third largest category of federal spending, exceeded only by defense and income security programs, such as Social Security and welfare.

Reagan's optimistic budget goals are the latest in a decade-long quest by presidents to find a formula for moving the government into the black. While the plans look good on paper, they rarely turn out so well.

IN 10 OF THE LAST 12 years, actual federal spending outpaced the original presidential targets by amounts ranging from a low of $300 million in 1973 to a high of $48 billion in 1980.

The two exceptions were 1974 and 1979, when the deficit was $300 million and $6.6 billion less, respectively, than initial forecasts. Both years were marked by unexpectedly high inflation caused by soaring price increases for imported oil.

That is no coincidence, economists say. When inflation exceeds expectations, the Internal Revenue Service takes a larger tax bite out of Americans' paychecks, giving the Treasury more money than it had counted on.

The reverse is also true. If inflation proves to be lower than administration forecasts, the Treasury winds up collecting less money than it had anticipated, producing a larger deficit.

Administration officials are saying privately they believe inflation may come down even faster than their current bullish forecast, which predicts a 5 percent inflation rate by 1984.

Such a development, they concede, will dash any lingering hopes of balancing the budget. But given a choice between a lower inflation rate and a balanced budget, they say there would be no contest. The balanced budget would lose hands down.

Treasury's borrowing viewed with 'interest'

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

Concern that interest rates will remain high grew as the Treasury unveiled plans for continued heavy borrowing to finance government deficits.

The Treasury announced Wednesday that it would raise $8.75 billion through the sale of government bonds and notes next week as it continues to finance the federal debt.

The Treasury said it will borrow $35.75 billion in the final three months of the year and said it expects to borrow between $29 billion and $32 billion during the first three months of next year.

There is concern in the financial community that continued heavy federal borrowing will contribute to keeping interest rates high. The federal government competes with private borrowers for money and heavy demand bids up interest.

At the same time, however, a weakening economy could reduce corporate credit demand, reducing pressure on interest rates.

Meanwhile, the Commerce Department was to release its index of leading indicators today, a barometer of future economic trends.

The Conference Board, a business-sponsored research group, reported today that its measure of the volume of help-wanted advertising in large newspapers fell sharply in September to its lowest level since May 1980, when the nation was in a sharp but brief recession.

The seasonally adjusted Help-Wanted Advertising Index, sensitive to general business conditions and changes in demand for labor, fell to 112 in September from 119 in August and 123 in July. The index, which stood at 100 in 1967, was last as low as 112 in May 1980.

"Up until the last two months, job advertising volume has been recovering sporadically and sluggishly from the 1980 recession," said Kenneth Goldstein, a Conference Board economist. "However, in August and September, want-ad volume dropped precipitously."

PATCO says lockout keeps it from ordering workers back

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The decertified air traffic controllers union, saying it would end its strike, is maintaining that it cannot order its members back to work because they have been "locked out" by the Federal Aviation Administration.

Lawyers for the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, appealing a federal labor relations agency's order stripping the union of all bargaining authority, say PATCO wants to "immediately order" all its members to return to the airport towers.

In a "compliance notice" delivered to the Federal Labor Relations Authority, the agency that ordered revocation of PATCO's exclusive right to represent federal air controllers, union lawyers also said PATCO acknowledges its obligation to abide by federal no-strike laws.

Approximately 11,500 PATCO members went on strike Aug. 3 in a contract dispute with the FAA. President Reagan gave them 48 hours to return to work or be fired. The strikers were fired when they refused to obey the order.

About 2,000 union members remained on the job, and the administration has been running the flight control system with those personnel and military controllers. It also has recruited several thousand controller candidates for training.

The PATCO letter was approved by the union's nine-member executive board at a secrecy-shrouded meeting in Baltimore.

The letter, delivered to the FLRA here by union counsel Richard Leighton, was in response to FLRA Chairman Ronald W. Haughton's dissent from last Thursday's 2-1 agency decision to revoke PATCO's representation rights.

All three members of the authority signed the decertification order, but Haughton wrote a dissenting opinion saying he felt there was insufficient evidence to warrant such an action.

He said that unless PATCO "ends the strike forthwith, and immediately represents to the authority that it intends to abide by the no-strike provisions of the statute, I would view any additional evidence as having no mitigating effect on the penalty to be imposed.

"If PATCO does not take these actions within five days of receipt of this decision, I will then concur ... that PATCO's exclusive recognition status be revoked."

In the "compliance notice" delivered Wednesday, the decertified union said it "agrees that the record in this matter is incomplete and therefore defective."

This argument presumably will be used in PATCO's appeal of the labor relations agency's decision to the U.S. Court of Appeals here. A special appellate tribunal on Monday overturned an emergency stay of the decertification order, putting PATCO out of business as a union pending outcome of its appeal.

"As PATCO understands Chairman Haughton's decision, the only way that we could comply would be to order our members to return to work. However, PATCO's members have been locked out by their former employer and could not return, even if so ordered," lawyers for the decertified union said in the letter.

They said that aside from the legal proceedings, "in an effort to comply with Chairman Haughton's decision, and to the extent of our ability for compliance, when the FAA ends its lockout, PATCO would immediately order all of its members to return to work."

A spokeswoman for the FLRA said the effect of the PATCO compliance notification was to preserve and formalize Haughton's conditional dissent.

Leighton indicated that Haughton's questioning of whether the evidence justified decertification will be a central argument in PATCO's appeal.

Tuition tax credit proposal to be voted on next week

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The District of Columbia, faced with the prospect of children fleeing its public schools, votes next week on a proposal to grant generous tax credits to parents of private school students.

Proponents of Initiative Seven say the $1,200 tax credit will enable the less affluent to send their children to private schools.

Opponents, including every elected city official, claim only the rich would benefit while the city goes bankrupt.

With national tuition tax credit legislation stalled in Congress, the district campaign has been viewed as a test case. So far, only Louisiana and Minnesota have had successful tuition tax credit drives, but neither proposal was as extensive as the district plan.

The National Taxpayers Union has bankrolled a television and radio campaign to support the tax credit.

Countering that effort with dire predictions of the initiative's effects are local officials and national labor unions, including the American Federation of Teachers.

City Council Chairman Arrington Dixon estimates that the city will lose $30 million to $80 million a year if the tax credit is approved.

"Thirty million dollars would do some very serious damage to the district government," he said. "Eighty million dollars would be devastating."

The initiative would allow a maximum $1,200 income tax credit per taxpayer for all educational expenses, including tuition, per pupil. For example, a couple with two children could get a credit of $4,800 and more if the couple decided to sponsor additional children. The credit would be limited only by the amount of local income tax actually owed.

Businesses also would be allowed to take a credit by covering educational expenses of needy children. Initiative Seven would allow the credit to be applied to expenses in public as well as private schools.

"This is not a private school tax credit," said William Keyes, chairman of the Committee for Improved Education. Keyes blasted the city for wasteful spending.

"I think that for the man on the street who looks at the way this government spends its money, he just plain doesn't give a damn" if the city loses tax revenue, he said.

But the focus of the NTU campaign, which thus far has cost $125,000, has been selling the initiative as a way for the less affluent to get their children out of the public schools. Television ads narrated by actor Greg Morris portray the district's public schools as a haven for drug use and delinquency.

Radio ads from the other side, targeted for a poor black audience, call the initiative a give-away for rich, white people who already have their children in private schools. The American Federation of Teachers has its members distributing leaflets opposing the tax credit to school children.

Each side has accused the other of using "scare tactics" and lies. But both sides agree that the public schools need help.

Women's seminar will be held next Saturday

ALPINE — Judge Barbara Culver, 318th Judicial District Court, Midland, will keynote the opening session with a talk on "Women in the 80's" during a seminar on "Decisions for Women in the 80's" at Sul Ross State University in Graves-Pierce Gymnasium Nov. 7 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Women will be able to attend three of six workshops offered in the afternoon.

Dot Saari, personnel manager for Owens-Illinois from Jasper, will conduct "Women in Management"; Narita Holmes, vice president and controller, First National Bank of Odessa, will head "Basic Banking Needs for Women"; Kay Maley, counselor-support services for women at Odessa College, will conduct "Career Changes for Women"; Judge Culver will head "Will and Estate Planning"; Vickie Sullivan, treasurer of Ector County, will conduct "Who, Me, in Politics?"; and Julia O'Keefe of Alpine will conduct "Retirement Planning, The Beginning or the End."

Registration fee for the seminar, which includes the luncheon buffet, is $5. Deadline for registration is Nov. 2, and can be made by calling Mona McLaughlin at (915) 837-2229.

The seminar is being hosted by the Pilot Club of Alpine and the Pilot International Foundation.

PATCO conviction will be appealed

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The lawyer for two striking air controllers says he will appeal his clients' conviction Wednesday on charges of illegally striking against the federal government

Defense attorney Michael Brady said he will appeal the convictions after William T. Taylor and Billy J. Florence are sentenced Nov. 30.

"Yeah, I'm a sore loser," said Brady, who had argued that the government had failed to prove that the men's work absences were related to the strike or that a strike had even existed.

A U.S. District Court jury here deliberated less than 15 minutes before convicting Taylor and Florence, president and vice president, respectively, of Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization Local 572.

Attorneys for both sides said the prosecution was the first such trial of PATCO members in the country. Several charges against other PATCO members have been resolved through plea bargains, they said.

The two men were charged with violating a federal law that forbids strikes by government employees. They face a possible sentence of a year and a day in prison and a fine of $1,000.

Taylor and Florence are free on bond until sentencing.

Taylor said 66 other PATCO members are under similar felony charges around the county. Most are union officials, he said.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Daniel Knauss, who prosecuted the case, said he was not surprised by the verdict.

"I thought it was a good case," Knauss said. "I was only surprised at how quick it was."

The prosecutor used testimony from several local FAA and federal law-enforcement officials to detail the employment records during the first week in August, when the strike began.

Knauss also showed the court a 30-second videotape that showed the pair talking about the strike on local newscasts dating from Aug. 5.

House rejects increase in outside speaking fees

By JAY PERKINS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — House members, rejecting a rules change that would have allowed them to earn up to $24,265 a year in speaking fees, will continue to be limited to just under $9,100 a year in outside income.

The House voted 271-147 Wednesday against a proposal to raise the limit after opponents contended the revision was a "back-door pay raise" — an act of hypocrisy when Congress is asking Americans to tighten their belts, and a step backward in efforts to keep the House above reproach.

In doing so, it went against its leaders. Both Democratic and Republican leaders had endorsed the higher limit.

The proposal would have increased the outside earning limit from 15 percent of the congressional salary to 40 percent. It also would have raised the maximum any member could earn from a single speech from $1,000 to $2,000.

The Senate, which sets its own rules, has no limits on the amount of outside income its members can earn.

Supporters of the House rules change contended that Congress was never intended to be a club of millionaires or a place for full-time, professional politicians. They said the current limits on outside income were turning the House into just that type of place.

But Rep. Toby Moffett said the question was not whether the House was becoming a body of professional politicians but one of "looking like we have professional prostitution."

Increasing the limit, the Connecticut Democrat said, would mean some members might look as if they were "almost on retainer for some of the major corporations of this country."

And Rep. David Obey, D-Wisc., said, "We have at stake the question of whether we are going to be public servants or private servants, whether we are going to have constituencies or clients."

Redistricting board awaits court challenge

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Legislative Redistricting Board, happy over completing House and Senate remapping just hours before a midnight deadline, waited today to see if the results would be challenged in court.

The Texas Republican Party, which offered no suggestions to the five Democrats on the board, said it would comment later today.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, board chairman, said he understood a GOP court test of the Senate redistricting plan would be filed today.

"It would be ridiculous for them (Republicans) to let it go through without comment and then go to court," said Attorney General Mark White. "It would be irresponsible and in bad faith."

WHITE, WHO would have to defend the board if taken to court, said he believed both the House and Senate plans fulfilled federal law.

Hobby called the House redistricting bill, approved 4-1 just eight hours before the deadline, a "fine result. Fine from a legal point of view."

On Tuesday the board approved a Senate redistricting plan that could reduce the number of Senate Republicans from eight to five.

The House redistricting plan drawn up by Speaker Bill Clayton and amended by Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong, would result in an increased number of House Republicans from the current 38.

Armstrong's amendments made changes in urban areas of Dallas, Harris and Bexar counties. Clayton also changed his own plan, saving 28-year veteran Rep. Bill Heatly, D-Paducah, from having to run against another incumbent, Rep. Foster Whaley, D-Pampa.

The board members got the House redistricting job after the courts threw out the plan approved by the 1981 Legislature because it cut across too many county lines. The Senate task went to them after Gov. Bill Clements vetoed the Legislature's map.

Clayton's plan included a complete new map for Tarrant County. The change puts more blacks in Rep. Bobby Webber's Fort Worth district. Webber is a black Democrat. The Clayton plan pairs Webber with Rep. Doyle Willis, a white Democrat.

The first Armstrong amendment paired Dallas Democrats Steve Wolens and Chris Semos, at their request, according to Armstrong. Semos is considering running for Dallas County commissioner. Clayton's plan also paired Semos and Wolens.

David Richards, an Austin attorney well-versed in redistricting litigation, said Clayton's Dallas plan would have had problems in court because it cut the black population in black Democratic Rep. Sam Hudson's district from 53 percent to 30 percent.

THE BOARD voted 3-2 to OK Armstrong's Dallas plan, with Hobby and Clayton voting "no."

After a 4-1 vote to make a small change in Collin and Denton counties, Clayton dropped his opposition to most of Armstrong's amendments.

A 5-0 vote approved Armstrong's Harris County plan, which pairs Houston Democrats Henry Allee and Tony Polumbo. Armstrong said the pair was set up with the "reluctant consent" of Allee and Polumbo. The pairing allowed the board to set up a third Hispanic district in Houston.

Clayton's plan had no Harris County pairs until the Armstrong amendment was approved.

Armstrong also won 5-0 approval for his Bexar County change, which unpaired Democrats Tommy Adkisson and Joe Hernandez of San Antonio and paired Republicans Jim Nowlin and Alan Schoolcraft. Nowlin has been appointed to a federal judgeship.

Bullock lost twice in efforts to increase Hispanic representation in El Paso districts. Bullock also failed in an attempt to pair Don Rains, D-San Marcos, and Terral Smith, R-Austin.

Semos, Clayton (who has not announced his plans) and Adkisson (who might run for the state Senate) will not seek re-election to the House.

Judge dismisses 'demon' defense

DANBURY, Conn. (AP) — A lawyer's plan to use "demonic possession" as a defense for murder has been shot down by a judge as unscientific and irrelevant.

"I'm not going to allow a demonic possession defense, period," Superior Court Judge Robert Callahan said Wednesday shortly after jury selection began in the trial of a 19-year-old man.

THE JUDGE'S decision shocked Martin Minnella, the defense lawyer who made headlines by claiming he would call Roman Catholic priests to the stand to prove his client, Arne Cheyenne Johnson of Brookfield, was possessed.

"It's not a final ruling because we have not presented any evidence," Minnella said outside the courtroom. If necessary, he said, he would pursue the defense on appeal.

"Again and again we will offer the demonic possession as evidence. Everything will be presented," he added.

Jury selection, halted abruptly with the judge's comments Wednesday afternoon, was to resume today.

JOHNSON HAS been held in lieu of $125,000 since his arrest on the day of the stabbing. He sat impassively Wednesday while his lawyer and the judge argued about the case.

Five months before the stabbing, Johnson joined in efforts to rid his girlfriend's 11-year-old brother of demons, according to two self-styled experts in demonology, Ed and Lorraine Warren of Monroe.

Minnella said Johnson became possessed when he challenged the demon to leave the child and take him on.

Bono was stabbed during an argument with Johnson over Johnson's girlfriend, Deborah Glatzel. Johnson and Miss Glatzel, 26, lived in apartment next to Bono's kennel, where Miss Glatzel worked.

In court Wednesday, Minnella asked the first potential juror, Gerard Ryan, 42, of New Fairfield, if he believed in the existence of a "supreme being."

"Are you telling me you are going to attempt to prove demonic possession as an objective fact?" Callahan asked.

"That's correct, your honor," Minnella said.

Minnella claimed there were several cases in England where demonic possession had been allowed as a defense. But when asked to name the case numbers, Minnella said: "We don't have them your honor. The transcripts are in the mail."

Finally the judge said: "It's not going to be allowed. Evidence of demonic possession is not relevant."

Minnella argued that any evidence that indicates the defendant did not intend to commit the crime "is very relevant."

Yarbrough may be expelled from island

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Former Texas Supreme Court Justice Donald B. Yarbrough's passport has been seized by agents of the Grenada government who may expel him from the island, a Texas newspaper has reported.

A medical school official said Yarbrough has been suspended from the institution where he studied for one semester and may be extradited to Texas, where he faces a five-year prison sentence for aggravated perjury and other charges.

Dr. Geoffrey Bourne, vice chancellor of the school of medicine, said university officials are concerned about bad publicity stemming from the enrollment of the 40-year-old former Houston lawyer in 1980, when he still was free on appeal.

"We're not in a position to throw him off the island. We've suspended him and that's it. We've done all we can do," he told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in a story published Wednesday.

HE SAID Yarbrough cannot leave the country without his passport.

He was released on a $5,000 personal recognizance bond after his 1978 conviction but left for Grenada in June 1980. He is now being sought on charges of failing to appear in court Aug. 11 to be sent to prison.

Texas authorities tried to have Yarbrough extradited through the State Department, but U.S. officials expressed concern that Grenada's Marxist government would provide asylum for the fugitive.

Grenada government officials "have not actually told him to go. They have just impounded his passport until they decide," the Star-Telegram quoted a St. George's University official as saying.

"The Grenada government will only allow students to remain on the island if they are members of the school," Bourne added. "Mr. Yarbrough has been suspended for some weeks now. I believe the immigration people in Grenada are considering if it means he is not a member of the school."

He said Yarbrough is being allowed to audit classes but receives no credit.

"HE'S NOW doing second-semester work. He took the first semester and failed and had to repeat it. Even if he was a full student now it would take him three and a half years (to complete the program)," Bourne said.

He said Yarbrough has conferred with him only a few times — one of them two weeks ago when he asked what could be done to get his passport back.

"I told him there was nothing he could do except to sit quiet and see what the Grenada government did," Bourne said.

Yarbrough's attorney, former Texas Attorney General Waggoner Carr, said his client did not respond to letters notifying him of his failed appeal.

Barbara Stanwyck treated for cuts, loses $5,000 in jewelry to burglar

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Actress Barbara Stanwyck was treated for minor cuts after a burglar entered her home, asked her where he could find jewelry and hit her over the head, police said.

The burglar then shoved the 74-year-old, four-time Oscar nominee into a closet and made off with about $5,000 in jewelry, Lt. Russ Olsen said Wednesday.

Miss Stanwyck said that because of the darkness, she did not get a good look at the assailant who came into her home in this posh community early Tuesday morning, but described him to police as 6-foot-2, 200 pounds and possibly wearing a ski mask.

Olsen said the man may have gained entry through a broken window.

Miss Stanwyck starred in such films "The Bitter Tea of General Yen" and "Meet John Doe," and later appeared in television's "The Big Valley."

Reagan

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — After spending much of the year testing the political climate in California, President Reagan's eldest daughter says she soon will decide whether to make a bid for public office.

After a fundraiser for the Ohio Republican Party on Wednesday, Maureen Reagan said she has moved closer to launching a campaign for the U.S. Senate over the past seven months.

"I'd say within the next week or so you'll know," said Miss Reagan, 40.

She said backers have been examining grass-roots support and determining the extent of financial support before she decides to seek the GOP nomination in 1982.

"We've spent about seven months now doing that kind of exploring," she said.

She faces the prospect of raising up to $2 million "because that's what it's going to cost for a primary in California."

Miss Reagan has been active in Republican politics for a long time, holding jobs from precinct captain to national committeewoman to campaigner for her father.

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — George Gallup, whose name is synonymous with the sampling of public opinion, says computerized election projections should be kept under wraps by the television networks until all polls close.

"I think no one should make a report on the results until everyone has had a chance to vote," said Gallup, head of the American Institute of Public Opinion.

But Gallup, who earned three degrees from the University of Iowa and was on the faculty when he began his polling career 45 years ago, also said there is "no objective proof" that releasing finding early changes opinions. "Even the turnout is not statistically affected," he said.

In 1980, network television projections on voting day indicated Ronald Reagan had defeated Jimmy Carter. Those projections were broadcast before the polls closed in the West and Midwest.

Actress Colleen Dewhurst, who is directing "Ned and Jack," a play about the friendship between playwright Edward Sheldon and actor John Barrymore, appeared uneasy Wednesday as she stood with a 20-inch Moluccan cockatoo perched on her head.

"What is it doing now?" she asked, warily.

The bird was one of three cockatoos tested for the part of "Charlie" in the play. Charlie, who belongs to Sheldon and is presented to Barrymore, is a symbol of caged characters straining to break free, according to Peter Goetz, who plays Barrymore.

"Ned and Jack" opens Nov. 8 at the Little Theatre and is Miss Dewhurst's directing debut.

She said the cockatoo from the first production last spring is "a mean old bird" who bit through a velvet cover over his cage. That bird is being replaced and about 50 people were on hand for Wednesday's "audition" at New York's Parrot Jungle.

When Miss Dewhurst walked over to the birds' perch, he first allowed her to stroke it, the second shifted backward and the third raised its crest and screeched.

Self-examination a valid practice

Dear Dr. Solomon: I wouldn't mind doing breast self-examination if I thought there was any point to it, but to go through the motions with nothing to show for it doesn't appeal to me. Is breast self-examination really of any value? — May, Los Angeles

Dear May: I'm not sure what you mean by "nothing to show for it." In a sense, women who perform breast self-examination hope they'll have nothing to show for it. In this case, no news is good news.

The fact that breast self-examination is of value has been demonstrated by Dr. Joseph G. Feldman and his associates at the Downstate Medical Center in Brooklyn, New York. They found that of almost 1,000 women who were treated for breast cancer, almost half of those who practiced breast self-examination regularly were diagnosed when the disease was in its earliest and most curable stage. In contrast, this was true of only 38 percent of the women who practiced breast self-examination only occasionally, and of 33 percent who did not practice it at all.

The investment of a few minutes of time in breast self-examination can bring a significant return.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I started jogging about a year ago, and am training to enter a marathon. For the past few months, my menstrual period has been irregular. I'm not concerned about it because friends of mine have told me the same thing happened to them when they started running long distances. What I am curious about is what causes it. Can you explain? — Arlene, Los Angeles

Dear Arlene: It is not known for certain why exercise causes menstrual irregularity in some women, but various theories have been advanced. These include, among others, weight loss caused by the exercise, especially if the woman does not have an adequate diet, and the stress associated with competitive sports. Some studies have also revealed an alteration in endocrine function during periods of sustained exercise, and this could cause menstrual irregularity.

I would suggest, however, that you not assume that your condition is related to your jogging; a visit to your gynecologist would be very much in order. If the irregularity is exercise-related, you probably would not have to stop your running even if treatment is recommended. But it is important that you kown, rather than assume, why the condition has occurred.

Dear Dr. Solomon: There is something that has always puzzled me. Why are the adenoids always taken out when the tonsils are removed? — Nancy

Dear Nancy: Although the two procedures are often done at the same time, tonsillectomy and adenoidectomy are two separate operations for two separate medical conditions. One study has shown that only one of every eight children who had his or her adenoids removed later required removal of the tonsils.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Five paroles, one revocation from Midland area listed

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Five persons convicted of crimes in the Midland area have been paroled by Gov. Bill Clements on recommendations of the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles.

Freddie D. Appleton, convicted of rape in Mitchell County Nov. 9, 1970, was paroled to California after serving and earning 23 years and five months of a 25-year sentence.

Ruben Lynn Balderaz, convicted of burglary of a building in Ward County March 9, 1981, was paroled to Ward County after serving and earning two years and one month of a seven-year sentence.

Gary Ballard, convicted of delivery of heroin in Mitchell County Oct. 19, 1979, was paroled to Lubbock County after serving and earning four years and five months of a five-year sentence.

Joe Louis Lopez, convicted of burglary of a motor vehicle in Tom Green County Feb. 5, 1981, was released on mandatory supervision to Tom Green County after serving and earning all of a two-year sentence.

Ramon Avinia Quinones, convicted of robbery in Ector County Dec. 30, 1980, was released on mandatory supervision to the custody of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service in Houston after serving and earning all of a two-year sentence.

Jimmy W. Evans, convicted of theft over $200, burglary with intent to commit theft and two counts of marijuana possession in Ector, Midland and Kerr counties in 1976, had his parole revoked because of unsatisfactory adjustment. Evans, who is serving an eight-year sentence, had been on parole since April 2, 1980.

Midlander elected to WTCC board

City choir concert to be presented

The All-City Regional Choir Concert will be held Monday at 7 p.m., according to Carol Hall of the Lee High School Choir Booster Club.

Students selected from junior high and freshman high schools will also be performing in the concert which will take place in the Midland College Auditorium.

Marilyn Jones, Lee High School choir director, said that 23 of the 32 Lee choir members who entered the All-Region initial competition made the All-Region Choir. Nineteen will go to the state tryouts in San Angelo next month.

A report on the sale of candles, which can still be ordered by contacting any choir member, also was given by Miss Jones. Choir members are competing for a prize to be given to the student who sales the most candles. Celena Fawks is leading the Chorale, while Melissa Simmons is leading the Acappella choir in sales.

Members were reminded of the Nov. 3 uniform inspection date and that choir shirts and ribbons are on sale by choir and Booster Club members.

Tommy McLaughlin announced that the Cheese and Sausage Sale will begin Nov. 11, and will run through Nov. 23.

Rangers face big challenge

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

Greenwood's Friday night football with Rankin is, "The biggest challenge in Greenwood's football history," according to Ranger coach Joe Longley.

The Rangers are in only their second year of UIL, but already Greenwood has a football that that has grown into a bonafide District 6-A contender.

Greenwood surprised the "experts" with its 6-4 record (fourth place in district), and now, the Rangers are the talk of West Texas. After an open-season loss to Sterling City, Greenwood has put together a six-game winning streak that includes four straight shutouts over district foes, and are currently tied with Wink for the 6-A lead with a perfect 4-0 mark.

Friday night's clash with the district's defending champion Red Devils (currently in second place with a 3-1 mark in the league) should give a good indication of how far the Rangers have really came.

Longley said, "Rankin is a good offensive team and they have two tremendous running backs in Terry Turner and Dennis Black. We aren't awed by them — we do have a lot of respect for them. Coach (Dwyane) Turner is a fine coach and he has some good athletes. We learned a couple of weeks ago that we could be good too when we beat Iraan 21-0 getting beat badly (43-7) by them last year."

Longley, in his first year at Greenwood after coming from Andrews where he served as offensive coordinator and defensive line coach, added, "We will have to play our best defensive game of the year. I know we have strung some shutouts together but our defense still has to improve. But it (defense) has been improving each week. We have been getting some excellent play and leadership out of seniors Homor Lopez, Kyle Longley, Larry Dickerson and Kit Foshee in the secondary. And John Gilliam (freshman) and Bill Franks (sophomore) have been pleasant surprises at linebacker."

Fullback Todd Brooks leds the Ranger offense by averaging over 100 yards per game rushing. Tailback Lopez, wingback Dickerson, quarterback Longley and end Foshee do their share in contributing to the success of the Rangers.

Rankin won't be an easy foe. The Red Devils (5-1-1) tied highly-regarded McCamey and lost to Wink 7-3 in the distict's second week on the Wildcats' field.

Speedy fullback Black and halfback Turner are the keys to the Red Devil attack. Black averages almost 150 yards per game while Turner is a double threat with his running and receiving ability.

Turner's worry in the early going was an inexperience line, but the results over the last few weeks indicate the the line is beginning to jell. The Red Devils have run off 217 points in seven games and in their last two district encounters have scored 90 and 35 points.

Another City golf title for Susan

Susan Britton annexed her 10th Midland City Women's Golf title at Hogan Park Golf Course Wednesday, widening an eight-stroke lead after two rounds, into 11 in running her string of titles to eighth straight.

Mrs. Britton finished with an 83 to go with earlier rounds of 79-76 for a 54-hole total of 238. That was good enough to beat Jane Thomas, who finished with the day's low round in the title flight with an 81, by 11 strokes.

Nina Colter, who also finished with an 83, was third with 250.

Jo Dickson shot a 262 to beat out Betty Clarke by seven strokes in the first flight while Clara Boyd's final round 95 was good enough to hold off fast finishing Naomi Colson in the second flight, 289 to 290.

Jean Allen defeated Shirley Mays in a another close contest, 311 to 314, in the third flight while Florence Mailey took fourth flight honors and Maureen Phillips was the fifth flight winner.

It's 'Next Year' for Dodgers

By HAL BOCK

NEW YORK (AP) — So much for waiting until next year.

Once, when they lived in Brooklyn, that was a way of life for a team called the Dodgers. Wait till next year. Things will be better then.

It took them seven visits to the World Series before they won one. And they had lost their last three bids for baseball's world championship. Frustration was being a Dodger fan and always waiting for next year.

Well, now 25 other major league clubs will do the waiting. Things have gotten better in a hurry for these Dodgers from Los Angeles who found happiness in a house of horrors called Yankee Stadium on a chilly evening in October.

They are the final survivors of baseball's longest, most frustrating season, a year fragmented by a bitter seven-week player strike that created a new tier of playoffs and kept the games going almost until Halloween.

"This is heaven," said Pedro Guerrero, one of three Dodger heroes who shared the most valuable player honors in the 1981 World Series.

It's a cinch he's the first guy to say that about the South Bronx. But Yankee Stadium looked like Cloud Nine to all the Dodgers Wednesday night as they mugged the Yankees 9-2. The game wasn't as close as the final score indicated.

Guerrero drove in five runs with a single, triple and home run. He shared the MVP award with courageous Ron Cey, who drilled two hits, one of them driving in the go-ahead run, and Steve Yeager, who had another vital RBI-single.

AP Laserphoto

THE DODGERS won this World Series the same way they won everything else in this postseason — by bouncing off the deck, and coming from behind. They lost the first two games of the divisional playoffs to Houston and recovered with three straight victories at home. Then they trailed Montreal 2-1 in the League Championship Series but won the last two games in Canada to clinch the pennant.

If they were emotionally drained when they got to the World Series against the rested Yankees, they had an excuse. New York won the first two games and someone suggested to Tommy Lasorda, the good humor man who manages the Dodgers, that now he had the Yankees just where he wanted them.

The words turned out to be prophetic.

"That was the turning point of the Series," said Yeager. "Losing those first two games...that's the only way we can play. I can't explain it, but that's it."

Lasorda told his team that they could turn the Series around and that's exactly what they did.

"I told them they hadn't been blown out," he said. "All we needed was a couple of breaks and we would have won those first two games."

THAT WOULD have been uncharacteristic for this comeback crew though. Being behind was more comfortable for them.

Rookie Fernando Valenzuela struggled to a 5-4 victory in Game Three and then the Dodgers won an almost comical 8-7 endurance test in Game Four. When Guerrero and Yeager tagged consecutive seventh-inning home runs, Los Angeles took the pivotal fifth game 2-1. It was then that Steve Garvey, who finished the Series with 11 hits, decided something special was going on.

"The home runs on Sunday started to tell us that this was our year," he said.

But the Yankees were still smug about the situation. They had lost three games in California, each of them by a single run and each of which they could very easily have won. Now the Series was switching to New York, where the Dodgers seemed to be suffering from a terminal Yankee Stadium syndrome. Pinstripe panic had beaten Los Angeles six straight times in the Stadium.

What's more, owner George Steinbrenner had defended his team's honor in an elevator fight and emerged with his hand in a cast. Surely that would firelup the troops for the final Series push.

"That's nonsense," snorted Cey. "The field is where it's done, not some elevator."

"We had beaten them three times in California," said Yeager. "We knew we could beat those guys. We had to beat them, not the stadium, not the fans."

SO, THE Dodgers went about doing exactly that.

Willie Randolph got the Yankees in front with a third-inning home run against winning pitcher Burt Hooton. But Los Angeles tied the score in the fourth on singles by Dusty Baker, Rick Monday and Yeager.

Then, in the bottom of the fourth, the game turned. With two out and a runner on second, Lasorda forced Yankee Manager Bob Lemon's hand by walking Larry Milbourne to bring up starting pitcher Tommy John. Lemon went for pinch hitter Bobby Murcer. It was a bold move but it backfired. Murcer flied out, and in the next two innings the Yankee bullpen disposed of the game.

John wasn't thrilled with the decision.

"I wanted to pitch," he said. "I had just completed 13 innings against this club and held them to one run. It wasn't as if I had gotten hit hard. Lem had a decision to make and he made it."

"I just wanted to get some runs," said Lemon. "I didn't figure it was a gamble. He's my best pinch hitter. I wanted a base hit and I didn't get it so I wasn't very smart."

George Frazier relieved and the Dodgers jumped on him in a hurry. Davey Lopes singled and moved up on a sacrifice. With two out, Cey hit a seeing-eye single up the middle, scoring Lopes with the go-ahead run. After Dusty Baker also singled, Guerrero tripled to make it 4-1 and eventually make Frazier the only three-time loser ever in a six-game series.

AN INNING later, Los Angeles was back for more, this time against Ron Davis and Rick Reuschel. Davis walked Hooton and Lopes with one out. Bill Russell singled for one run and after Reuschel relieved, the Dodgers pulled a double steal. Garvey was then walked intentionally, loading the bases.

Derrel Thomas batted for Cey, who was beginning to feel some lightheadedness, an aftermath of the frightening beaning he suffered Sunday against Goose Gossage. Thomas forced Russell on a fielder's choice but an error by Graig Nettles reloaded the bases. Guerrero singled to center for two more runs and an 8-1 LA lead.

New York gets competition as 'real' Fun City

Los Angeles Times

When the World Series moved from New York to Los Angeles after Game 2, a lot of people felt it as definitely going in the right direction. Any direction would do for most. Take Kaye Kessler, the crack Columbus, Ohio, journalist.

Kay was walking home to his hotel one midnight along Seventh Avenue near 54th Street, not normally considered your basic Lion Country, when he was accosted by a young woman he did not know. She had a business proposition to make, but Kaye was not in the market.

Merchants are aggressive in New York, though, and the lady began to grab Kaye by tye lapels and elsewhere, when, suddenly, she whipped a hand into his breast coat pocket and made off with his wallet. Startled, Kay gave chase. That was his second mistake of the night. His first was walking alone on a New York street after sundown. You're better off riding a shark, or submerging in a U-boat under attack.

YOU KNOW, adventure used to be climbing the Matterhorn or riding through Indian country with a Bowie knife, or walking wings on a biplane. Now, it's walking through Central Park with a gold watch.

Kaye didn't chase the girl long. She had reinforcements nearby. A giant accomplice stepped out of the shadows and slammed Kay across the mouth with a leather-covered lead pipe, a device well known to the police as a "slammer." It took several hours at a hospital to restore Kaye's mouth to a semblance of its former contours and reset the smashed teeth -- the ones they could, anyway.

It took some time to even get to the hospital. Several other night strollers simply stepped over Kaye. They wanted to keep their own teeth, I guess. In New York, the sight of a man lying unconscious bleeding from the mouth on a sidewalk is as familiar as the Statue of Liberty, one of the Big Apple's tourist attractions. They may sell tickets to it soon. At scalper's prices.

WELL, NEW York isn't the only place you go abroad at your peril. This traveler was in Montreal a week ago in need of some Canadian currency to take care of the pourboires (tips) and Metro tokens.

I went to a bank with which I was familiar in the complex of malls, hotel and restaurants where the Olympics had its headquarters in 1976.

At the bank, I pushed some bills at the teller, a young lady who seemed to be in the throes of choking to death. "Non, non," she said to me pushing the money back. Her face was deathly white.

It was then I noticed a man at my elbow was also in the process of obtaining some Canadian currency. He was robbing the bank.

He was talking in rapid but forceful French. But the tone of his voice was unmistakable. The threat of sudden death is a universal language like love or music.

I DID WHAT the French do in difficult circumstances: I pretended I couldn't understand a word of what was going on. Your hero sauntered over to a counter and pretended to be filling out a deposit slip -- well out of the line of fire, and it happened. I was ready with my stand by "Je Ne Comprends Pas, Mon Vieux." ("I don't understand a word you're saying, old cock.") In case the bank didn't have enough money for him, I was also ready with "J'ai Seulement Monnaie Americain," ("I have only Yankee dollars") in the hopes he wouldn't know the dollar was currently worth about a $1.12 in Canada.

WELL, HE backed out the door and disappeared in the mall, stuffing his bills with the Queen's picture on them in his red plastic rain jacket. I don't know if he had a gun or not. He pretended he did. And I didn't want to find out the hard way that he really did.

You can see, the road is not all room service and squab under glass. It's a melange of draughty pressrooms, snow flurries, views of an air well strew.. ith garbage outside your hotel room window, and the scratches of what you take to be rats out there in the early morning hours. At least, you hope they are only rats.

New York is always a cultural experience. I mean they have the opera, and the museums, and the Empire State Building. Also, it's a great place for a safari. And, they also have the Yankees. They're not too much fun to run into at night, either. But I don't think the Dodgers are as awed by the Yankee batting order as they are by the fact that the Yankees can survive in this town at all. I mean, these guys must be tough.

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

He said it was his fumble in the second half that triggered the Philadelphia Eagles' 20-7 National Conference title victory over the Dallas Cowboys.

Dorsett returns to the scene of his fatal fumble Sunday when the Cowboys collide with the Eagles again in Veterans Stadium.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry has staunchly defended Dorsett, saying "One person doesn't lose a football game. This is still a team sport. Tony shouldn't blame himself."

The former Heisman Trophy winner needs just 106 yards to become the first NFL player to rush for 1,000 yards in each of his first five seasons.

It also would be Dorsett's 11th consecutive 1,000-yard season, counting four at the University of Pittsburgh and two at Hopewell High School in Aliquippa, Pa.

He has had five 100-yard games this year and is closing on his 1978 team season rushing record of 1,325 yards.

Dorsett, currently leading the NFL in rushing with 859 yards, had his biggest day as a pro against the Eagles in his 1977 rookie season.

He rushed for a club-record 206 yards, including a team-record 84-yard touchdown run.

Since then he has gained just 308 yards, averaging only 3.7 yards per carry in the past seven games against the Eagles.

He had only 17 yards last October in Veterans Stadium and just 41 in the NFC title game.

Dorsett said, "The Eagles are always a special challenge, particularly to me. I have some making up to do."

He is the best shape of his career after a strenous off-season program. Marriage has brought stability to his life.

Landry was so impressed with the "new" Dorsett that he named him offensive captain before the season started.

"Tony has done everything we've asked of him," said Landry. "He is much, much improved."

Triple deadheat runoff scheduled

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — The horses involved in last Friday's triple dead heat at the Lincoln Fairgrounds will compete in a special six-furlong match race Sunday.

One Way, I Will Be and El Lark Rise finished as one in what was only the 16th three-way dead heat in U.S. racing history.

"Because such a finish is so rare," State Fairgrounds Manager Henry Brandt said Tuesday, "I figured racing fans would get a kick out of seeing them run again."

On the hunt, always establish 'safe' zones

Safe zones of fire may sound complicated, but they aren't. Safe zones of fire are simply those areas in which a shot may be fired without endangering others or damaging property. Most often thought of in relation to other hunters, safe zones of fire also must be considered in areas where buildings, roads and livestock may make shooting in certain directions unsafe.

WHEN THIS is the case, "off limits" shooting areas should be pointed out to everyone in the hunting party. When hunting on someone else's land for the first time, it's important to ask where the "off limits" areas are. On any hunting trip, there are a number of points conncerning safe zones of fire to remember.

—You can't know what your safe zone of fire is unless you know where all your hunting partners are at all times.

—Wearing an orange hunting cap and vest helps in keeping everyone in your group in sight.

—You should be careful, when swinging on a bird, not to swing beyond your safe zone of fire.

—You should pay particular attention tw where your hunting partners are when moving through heavy cover. If you lose sight of your partners, signal back and forth every few minutes to maintain contact.

—You should always consider safe zones of fire when positioning hunters in a field or on a drive. Be sure that each huner knows where he is supposed to be and knows the locations of other hunters.

—You should never move without letting your hunting partners know of your plans.

And always know what is behind your target before you shoot.

Shoot or don't shoot, it's an almost split-second decision required in many hunting situations. Knowing your safe zone of fire allows you to hunt with the confidence that any shot you take will be a safe one.

WATERFOWL OUTLOOK: Now that we can legally go out and take ducks and geese this season, since the seasons were not closed down to the toxic pesticide scare, what can we expect for the upcoming 1981-82 Texas waterfowl seasons?

Storm tides, fires and drought have cut waterfowl populations this year, reports the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Duck numbers are predicted to be down to "about what they were last fall or possibly even lower," but goose numbers should be higher.

The services said a devastating storm tide swept through one of the most important goose nesting areas in the Far North, wildfires raged in others and withering drought lingered into its second year in the heart of North America's main duck-producing region encompassing the Great Plains and the Canadian Prairie Provinces.

Following is the USF&WS prediction for the Central Flyway which includes all of Texas:

Canada geese, with one possible exception, found favorable nesting conditions. Those wintering in southeastern Colorado and nearby portions of Oklahoma, Texas and New Mexico are expected to be in stronger numbers.

However, the "Hi-Line Populations" which nests in Alberta, Saskatchewan and the Rocky Mountain states suffered from drought and will be scarcer on the wintering area in north-central Colorado.

Fort Stockton next for unbeaten Ponies

Both coaches are aware of the importance of the game. With a league loss already, another defeat would knock the Red Devils out of contention for the league crown while a Greenwood defeat would put the pressure on the Rangers going into their final two league games (Buena Vista and Wink).

Defensively, Rankin depends on the play of tackle Jesse Hernandez, guards Kevin Fikes and Dane Lee while Todd Ratliff and Quad Midkiff can play the line or work from the linebacker spot.

In the final analysis, the questions is: Can Greenwood's "Lights Out Defense" stop the speed and diversity of the Red Devil offensive attack?

IN ANDREWS, the Mustangs (8-0-0, 7-0) will be out to defend their District 2-AAAA lead when they entertain the Fort Stockton Panthers (4-3, 1-3). Andrews, the league's top offensive unit with 347.8 yards per game, will face a Panther team that is giving up 201.6 yards per contest.

The key to Fort Stockton's chances will the its ability to contain Andrews quarterback Keith Brooks. Brooks leads the league in rushing with 1,011 yards on 184 attempts (5.5 yards per carry) and scoring (21 touchdowns).

STANTON (5-3, 3-1) will be trying to bounce back from their loss to Plains when they face O'Donnell (3-3, 0-2) on the road. The Buffs desperately need the win if they are to have any chance for the District 5-AA title.

Another club trying to keep in touch with the district leaders is Reagan County. The Owls (5-2, 2-1) are just a step behind Mason and Junction in the District 9-AA race and will be be gunning for a victory over Eldorado (0-7, 0-3) Friday night in Eldorado.

THE BADGERS got off to their usually slow start but have now started hitting on all cylinders. McCamey (6-0-1) is averaging 332.3 yards per game offensively while scoring at a 28.2 points per game clip.

District action also opens in 6-AAA and Crane will be looking to snap a seven-game losing streak when the Golden Birds face Coahoma (2-4-1) in Crane.

Midland Christain will be after its fifth win of the year against three losses when the Mustangs face Paint Rock Friday in Paint Rock.

Fever in Greenwood

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

GREENWOOD — Football fever has a mighty grip on this small community as the local high school team continues to amaze folks in only their second year of UIL competition.

Head football coach Joe Longley said, "Our fans give us great support. They want a good program and that's what we want to give them."

When asked to explain the success of a program that is only two years old, Longley said, "We have had a winning basketball program and that pride has carried over into the football program. Our kids don't accept losing easily and that attitude is evident on the football field."

Friday night the Rangers face Rankin in a key District 6-A battle. Greenwood is currently tied with Wink with a 4-0 league record while the Red Devils are just a step back at 3-1.

In order to build support for the Rankin game, Greenwood will hold a pep rally at 3 p.m. Friday and then the Ranger booster club invites all Rangers fans to join a car caravan to Rankin. The caravan is scheduled to leave the Greenwood High School at 5:30 p.m.

BYU's McMahon returns

DENVER (AP) — Brigham Young University quarterback Jim McMahon, sidelined with a hyperextended knee for two games this season, moved back into the NCAA rankings this week, ranked No. 1 in total offense with a 304-yard per game output.

McMahon, who was injured in a game against the University of Colorado, could not be listed in the NCAA rankings for a time because he failed to play in 75 percent of his team's games.

He also holds fourth place in passing efficiency with a rating of 149.

Another Western Athletic Conference player, quarterback Matt Kofler of San Diego State, is ranked second in total offense behind McMahon at 287 yards per game and ranks 12th in passing efficiency at 133.

The WAC is among the nation's best in returns. Wyoming's Darnell Clash, a sophomore, is ranked fourth in punts returned at 15 yards per try and is ranked eighth in kickoffs returned at 24 yards per attempt.

Chaparrals host net tournament

Midland College's Fall Team Tennis Tournament begins with the Chaparrals playing South Plains College at 3 p.m. and competition will conclude Saturday.

Men's and women's teams from Odessa College, SPC, New Mexico Military Institute, and MC will compete along witht the Hardin-Simmons men's team and the New Mexico Junior College women's team.

Play begins at 9 a.m. both Friday and Saturday.

Competing for the men will be sophomore lettermen Luis Zavala and Tony Macken, freshmen Richie Houdek, Tim Stallard, Monte Saul, Norm Weber and Ken Huddleston.

"This is a good tournament for all the teams," Dulin said. "These are the strong teams in our conference plus a very good men's team from Hardin-Simmons."

The schedule: Friday—MC-OC 9 a.m. singles HSU—SPC, NMJC-SPC, MC-OC, doubles at 10:15 a.m. HSU-SPC, NMJC-SPC singles 11:30 a.m. HSU-OC, NMJC-OC singles 12:45 p.m. OC-HSU, OC-NMJC, MC-NMMI doubles 2 p.m. NMMI-MC singles 3:15 p.m. OC-NMMI doubles 4:30 p.m. Saturday—NMMI—HSU, NMMI—NMJC singles 9 a.m. MNNI-HSU, NMMI-NMJC, SPC-OC doubles 10:15 a.m. SPC—OC, SPC-NMMI singles 12:45 p.m. MNNI—SPC, MC-HSU, MC-NMJC doubles 2 p.m. MC-HSU, MC-NMJC singles 3:15 p.m. OC-NMMI singles 4:30 p.m.

Exasperated Bengals take aim on Houston

CINCINNATI (AP) — Exasperated after six straight losses to the Houston Oilers, the Cincinnati Bengals have gone to the Pittsburgh Steelers' game films to try to find out how to stop running back Earl Campbell.

Bengals Coach Forrest Gregg said Wednesday that the 224-pound Campbell has run for an average of 141.1 yards in six games against the Bengals and 186 yards Oct. 3 when the Oilers beat Cincinnati.

At the same time, the Pittsburgh Steelers have held the hard-running Campbell to an average 60.8 yards. Campbell ran for only 56 yards in the Oiler's losing effort Monday at Pittsburgh.

The game films indicate the Steelers won the battle up front in the line by penetrating the Oilers' offensive line and making Campbell run laterally so the pursuit could catch up with him, said Gregg, preparing for Sunday's game here with Houston.

"In essense, it was like an eight-man front," said linebacker Glenn Cameron.

"What they usually do is keep him running sideline to sideline," said defensive end Ross Browner. "As soon as he turns upfield, he's dangerous."

"They keep everybody off (Jack) Lambert and the linebackers. Nobody touches Lambert until he gets to the ball carrier," said nose tackle Wilson-Whitley.

"They really penetrated a lot on him. They stacked things up on him at the line, causing him to have to run laterally before he wanted to," said Gregg.

Brownsville back heads prep Honor Roll

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

After quarterback David Bryan passed for 366 yards and three touchdowns and Ruben Gonzalez caught seven passes for 237 yards in a 31-0 victory over Raymondville, Foerster said, "We are kind of pass-oriented."

Bryan had Raymondville dis-oriented last Friday, completing 13 of 22 passes including touchdown shots of 56, 35 and one yard. Gonzalez caught the 56-yard bomb as the pass-catch duo earned mention in The Associated Press Schoolboy Honor Roll.

Bryan, a senior, would have been Pace's starter last year but a shoulder injury kept him out most of the season. Danny Alvarez took his place and earned all-state honors.

"I think David has the same potential," Foerster said. "He's improved each week. His ability to throw the ball long has been an asset. He's got excellent velocity on the short routes."

Bryan has completed 88 of 168 passes this season for 1,377 yards and 13 touchdowns.

LITTLE CYPRESS-Mauriceville rolled to a 48-0 victory over Bridge City with 350 yards in production out of its fullback-tailback tandem of Bennett Teer and Mark Durand.

Teer rushed 225 yards on 15 carries and scored on runs of seven, 71 and 87, all in the second quarter while Durand covered 125 yards on 18 carries and had touchdown runs of one and four yards from scrimmage and ran 50 yards for a touchdown with a punt in the third quarter.

Runge Coach Frank Carter also got good dual performances from quarterback Randy Aguirre and tailback Jay Hackney in a 24-0 shutout of Falls City.

Aguirre rushed 211 yards on 30 carries and scored on runs of four and one yard and completed three of six passes for 50 yards and another touchdown. Hackney gained 127 yards on 19 carries to go over the 1,000-yard mark this season.

Jeff Robnett

Ex-MHS Bulldog turns into Tiger

PRINCETON, N.J. — Jeff Robnett no longer adjusts the purple-ringed socks, No. 33 jersey and gold-masked helmet before a football game. Now the socks are black and orange, the jersey number is 35 with stripes down both sleeves and the helmet has a tiger on the side...a Princeton Tiger. The former Midland High, class of '80, and District 5-5A star is now a member of the Princeton squad.

The 5-10, 185-pound sophomore was a fullback on the 1980 freshman team, but was switched to tailback in preseason where he has seen action in preseason scrimmages and both JV games to date. He scored a touchdown in the Lafayette scrimmage.

"This is the hardest thing, mentally and physically, I have ever done," he said in training camp, but he feels it is worth it.

IT'S A MATTER of family and Robnett football tradition. "I want to carry on the tradition started by my father and uncle," Robnett said. William E. (Ed) Robnett, his father, played on the 1939 Texas A&M National Championship team, then finished his career after the war at Texas Tech, where he was an All-Border Conference running back in 1946. In 1947 he play with the San Francisco 49ers, but an injury ended his career.

Robnett's uncle, Marshall Robnett, was a two-time All-America for Texas A&M and, like Ed, was on the Aggies '39 national champs. Marshall played for the Chicago Cardinals, now St. Louis, in the NFL and was elected to the A&M Hall of Fame in 1969.

It is important to Jeff, the youngest of three brothers, to carry on this tradition. Older brothers Bill (Texas Tech '71) and Steve (Texas Tech '76) did not play in college, although Steve also played at Midland High.

BUT HOW come Princeton? "The priorities here are right. At Princeton studies come first, then football. The stereotype of the dumb jock doesn't hold here. These players are real people in the real world. It's not unusual to come into the locker room after practice and hear people talking about politics or something in the newspapers."

"Princeton has football the way I want to play it. It's exciting with the crowds, the traditional rivalries and the big old Ivy League stadiums," Jeff responds.

IT'S A long way from Texas and home and Jeff never forgets it. "The biggest problem is not hard football games, workouts or tough academic schedule, it is homesickness. I call home almost every night. I have been spoiled by Midland. I just love it." And he plans to return as soon as he graduates.

Robnett finds life in central New Jersey, between New York City and Philadelphia, is faster paced, "And people can be a little colder, too." But it doesn't stop Jeff from getting along with everybody. "My approach is like this: The colder a person seems to be, the warmer I am to him or her. That's the best way to get through that coldness. I try to carry some of that Texas friendliness everywhere I go."

PRINCETON lost its first two games, but then beat Brown, Columbia and tied Harvard, Ivy rivals, and Jeff is confident the Tigers will do well. "We lost the first to Dartmouth and Delware, because we're young and inexperienced at some key positions. Unfortunately for Robnett, tailback is not one of them. With a returning senior starting, Robnett is seeing less action than he'd like to. But the red head who led 5-5A in rushing is optimistic. "My day will come. Until I get my chance, the hard work and practice can only help me. The team comes first and Mike (starter Mike Neary) is No. 1 now."

Jeff may not be playing big time Southwest Conference ball with the crowds and media coverage, but he doesn't care.

"It used to bother me. There was always that question of whether I could have played SWC football in the back of my mind, but not any more. I enjoy ball now more than ever. Instead of a Texas A&M-Texas rivalry, it's Princeton-Yale. With athletics and academics being what they are here, who could ask for more now, or 60 years from now."

Here Comes Grambling

Robinson seeks Whites

Coaches at predominately white colleges in Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas soon may have another coach to compete with for top white athletes — Grambling Coach Eddie Robinson.

Robinson, whose G-Men will face Texas Southern in the Astrodome Saturday night, says he's going to recruit white athletes with the same fervor that he has sought top black athletes in the past.

"Black athletes have got to become American athletes," the 40-year coaching veteran said. "We've got to drop the black. That's what we're trying to do at Grambling."

"If we can recruit some top white athletes and any one of them can graduate and get into professional football, well, that's it," said Robinson, whose 297 career victories is second only to Alabama's Bear Bryant.

"They are all concerned about the dollar. If we can do this, then I think we can compete against the big schools on any level."

Robinson has guided the G-Men to 14 Southwestern Athletic Conference titles and Grambling is second only to Notre Dame in the number of players advancing to professional football.

Fund-raising programs are needed for Grambling to be able to compete with larger institutions, Robinson said.

Reiser, promise of what might have been

It was always a surprise each year when I'd see Pete Reiser at spring training in Arizona and he remembered who I was. It was our intention to grill him intensively on the hectic Summer of 1941, the year the long awaited "Next Year" came in Brooklyn.

But something always got in the way. Then, last spring he wasn't there and now he's gone for good.

Pete Reiser

Pete died of a respiratory illness, the story said, this week, but he had left a Hall of Fame career on the concrete walls of National League parks many years before. He had a penchant for running into immovable objects in the pursuit of uncatchable flyballs. You couldn't convince the guy.

THEY SAID, if it hadn't been for that, he would have been a cinch for the Hall of Fame. But, of course, if he hadn't played the game with the reckless abandon that shortened his career, he wouldn't have been Pete Resier.

They talk about the era of great centerfielders in New York when Mickey Mantle was with the Yankees, Willie Mays was with the Giants and Duke Snider was with the Dodgers. Debates still rage as to which was the best. Some contend, even today, such discussions would have become academic if Pete hadn't run into so many walls. Those who saw him say he was Pete Rose and Mantle wrapped into one.

Pete, who signed for a $100 bonus after being freed from bondage with the Cardinals by Commissioner Landis, was carried off the field on a stretcher a dozen times, mishaps which broke both ankles, a collarbone and resulted in numerous concussions and a skull fracture.

EVEN WITH all his mishaps, he managed to last 10 seasons in the major leagues. But none of those years compared to the first one, which he somehow managed to survive without running into a wall.

In 1941, Reiser broke in with a .343 batting average and led the Dodgers to their first pennant since 1920. To Brooklyn fans, that seemed like an eternity.

At 22 he became the youngest player to win the the National League batting crown.

It was an exciting, explosive year, 1941, for Reiser played for the George Steinbrenner-Billy Martin tandem of his day, Dodger General Manager Larry MacPhail and Manager Leo Durocher.

DUROCHER was brash and irreverent. MacPhail was tempermental and volatile, and innovative. He brought night ball to the majors, but showed earlier promise for imagination when he attempted to kidnap the Kaiser at the end of WWI. Reiser's style of play seemed to reflect the two. One year he stole home seven times, which I think is a record that still stands.

Typical of the controversy that swirled around the 1941 Dodgers came the pennant clincher in Boston. The team steamed back to New York by train for the victory parade. It was supposed to stop at 125th Street in the Bronx and pick up MacPhail for the fesitivies downtown. Durocher apparently didn't know. At any rate, he ordered "No stops", so a fuming MacPhail was left on the station platform as the victory express roared by. Of course, he fired Leo on the spot. And hired him back the next day.

Pete's association with the Dodgers should have lasted longer, but then there were those walls.

Pete talked like he played. If you didn't know him he was gruff and brusque, but the love and attention he showed for his daughter, who was what they call today a "gifted" child, gave him away.

Trojans' Robinson pleased over Cougars

By KEN PETERS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Washington State has emerged as a legimate contender in the Pacific-10 football race, and Southern Cal Coach John Robinson sounds pleased.

"They've just done a good job this year," Robinson said of the Jim Walden-coached Cougars. "Their coach has done a great job. It's good for college football."

Robinson said that this Saturday's Washington State-Southern Cal game at the Coliseum has taken on a new flavor since the two clubs are in the thick of the Rose Bowl chase.

"As I see it, our game with Washington State is the first round of a four-game playoff," Robinson said Tuesday. "I told the team, lose this one and we'll be playing in a cold-weather bowl.

"They're as much a threat to us as UCLA, Notre Dame or Oklahoma. These types of big games are fun to play, and they're a lot more fun if you win."

Washington State, ranked No. 14 nationally and 6-0-1 on the season, leads the Pac-10 with a 3-0-1 conference mark. Fourth-ranked Southern Cal is 6-1 and 2-1 in the Pac-10.

As Robinson sees it, the Pac-10 battle shapes up as a four-team, single-elimination tournament lasting four games. Included in the race are Washington (3-1) and UCLA (2-1-1). Arizona State (4-1) is on probation.

"I think Washington State is in the best position," said Robinson. "They play two contenders, us and Washington, and Oregon State and Cal. "But it's a playoff; lose one game and you're out."

Southern Cal plays Cal and Washington on the road before returning home to close against UCLA. Washington meets, in addition to the Trojans and WSU's Cougars, Stanford and UCLA. UCLA's schedule includes Oregon and Arizona State.

Series fans leave early

NEW YORK (AP) — Most of the fans went home disappointed and many of them left with the game only two-thirds over as the Los Angeles Dodgers won the World Series at Yankee Stadium Wednesday night. But for Ramon and Marie Martin, it was a dream come true.

The Miami, Fla., pair have been Dodger fans since before the team left Brooklyn for Los Angeles in 1957, and this was the third time the Martins have made cross-country trips to watch it play the New York Yankees in a Series.

"We saw the Dodgers lose in 1977 and '78 but we stayed with them this year and are so proud they won," said Mrs. Martin, who, like her husband, is a native of Cuba.

"We didn't go to Montreal (for the National League Championship Series) because it was too cold. But we were in Houston for the playoffs and since the Series started we have been to New York, to L.A. and back to New York for every game," she added.

Martin, who speaks little English, sat quietly through the last six outs of the game, with the Dodgers ahead 9-2, becoming a little impatient when Dodger second baseman Dave Lopes failed to handle a grounder with two outs in the bottom of the ninth.

After the sixth inning with Los Angeles ahead 8-2 and hordes of fans already leaving the stands, one diehard called out from an aisle seat: "Where's your Yankee spirit? Let's get fired up."

But there was no miracle rally, and one departing fan said when asked why he was leaving: "Right, all we need's a touchdown."

OH WHAT AN '82!
OH WHAT QUALITY!
OH WHAT VALUE!
OH WHAT STYLING!
OH WHAT AN '82!

For pure luxury, step into the Toyota Cressida. With many features not found on the world's most expensive cars.
The best selling line of imported trucks in America now is even better. From wild and wooly 4x4's to sporty SR5's to those great Toyota Diesels.
See the change in the '82 Celica. It's now aerodynamically designed to "cheat the wind" for exceptional efficiency and fantastic handling.
For pure styling it's the Toyota Supra. MOTOR TREND magazine calls it the "Twin Cam Terror." Twin Cams, space age styling, an incredible cockpit that makes it a true sports car in every way.

*Remember: Compare these estimates to the "EPA Estimated MPG" of other vehicles. You may get different mileage depending on how fast you drive, weather conditions and trip length. Actual highway mileage will probably be less than the EPA "Highway Estimate."

Will they break up the Dodgers?

By JOHN NADEL

NEW YORK (AP) — There's been a lot of talk about breaking up that veteran Dodger infield, so the 1981 World Series might have been its last chance. And Davey Lopes knew it.

"They can break us up, they can tear us apart, but they can never take away that ring," said Lopes in the hysterical Los Angeles clubhouse Wednesday night. "All those errors don't mean a thing now, do they?"

Lopes, 35, set a Series record for a second baseman by committing six errors, including one in the sixth and final game, but it didn't prevent the Dodgers from trouncing the New York Yankees, 9-2, to climax another one of their patented comebacks.

The Dodgers had to come from a 2-0 deficit to win the National League West playoffs over Houston, a 2-1 deficit to capture the N.L. Championship over Montreal, and another 2-0 deficit to overcome the Yankees. They did all three.

"I think that was one of the motivating forces," said Lopes, referring to the possibility of change in an infield that's been together a big-league-record nine seasons. "I really don't know (if he'll be around next year). I'll talk about that with Al Campanis (the Dodgers' General Manager) in a month or so."

MEANWHILE, the Dodgers are celebrating their first World Series triumph since they beat the Minnesota Twins in 1965.

One member of the veteran Los Angeles infield who has been more concerned with his life than playing baseball recently was less vocal than most of his teammates. But he seemed just as happy.

"Words can't express my feelings," said third baseman Ron Cey, who shared the Series' Most Valuable Player Award with teammates Steve Yeager and Pedro Guerrero. "It's a great honor for us, something we've had in the back of our minds for a lot of years from the beginning of spring training. Our goals have never been lower than that."

Cey was beaned by hard-throwing Yankee reliever Rich Gossage in Game 5 last Sunday and suffered a concussion. But he played five innings Wednesday night before asking to come out.

"I felt okay. If I hadn't, I wouldn't have gone out there," said Cey, who had two hits, including a run-scoring single in the fifth that put the Dodgers ahead to stay. "I was happy I could go out there and confident I could do it. I didn't know for how long."

CEY WAS removed for a pinch-hitter in the top of the sixth because "I was experiencing light-headedness and dizziness. It started right after I came off the bases (in the fifth)."

Witness backs George's fistic claims

BY MELVIN DURSLAG
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK – While bullfrogs in Central Park croaked a gentle lullaby, the mystery was deepening in the celebrated punch-up of Yankee owner George Steinbrenner, known in the gyms today as the Bronx Bomber.

Standing firmly by his story that he worked over a pair of heckling Dodger fans at the Wilshire Hyatt House, where room service may have been interrupted while the rumble was taking place in the elevator, George got corroboration in the New York Post from an unidentified witness – the most prevalent kind in this case.

Describing himself as an ex-boxer who doesn't want his name revealed because his wife on Long Island didn't know he was in Los Angeles, the witness talked rapturously of puncher-boxer Steinbrenner.

"What a punch George threw," the man told the Post. "A real fighter's punch."

When the second heckler stepped in to throw a headlock around Steinbrenner, the witness revealed:

"George connected with a one-two combination."

At that point, according to the observer on the lam from his wife, George threw both opponents off the elevator without inquiring what floor they requested.

IN AN EARLIER account, Steinbrenner had announced that his adversaries would be calling on their dentist -- and you know how tough it is to get an appointment these days -- because teeth were left behind on the elevator floor.

Not wishing to spoil a good story, but with a commitment to history, another party entered the scene yesterday, testifying he was one of the principals on the elevator and that Steinbrenner, outraged, did nothing more than punch the door, fracturing his hand in the process.

"It was over in seconds," said the man, who first had identified himself as "John" in a telephone call to a Los Angeles radio talk show.

Next heard from, he said his name was "Phillip," and that he was a free-lance writer from Alhambra, Calif.

If, the third time around, he calls himself "Clifford," it may develop he did the biography with Howard Hughes.

Since cab drivers traditionally see no evil, it would follow that testimony would be absent from this source, but a cabbie did report that he picked up a couple of young fellows on Wilshire and drove them to Hollywood.

WHETHER this pain now riding in the taxi earlier rode in the elevator can't be documented. Nor can it be affirmed that the Bronx Bomber, indeed, lost a decision to the elevator door.

But the Yankees are up against it in the World Series, only one loss short of expiration, and the Dodgers are convinced that however George injured his duke, he is using the incident to hype his sagging forces.

To counter this scheme, Peter O'Malley, the owner of the Dodgers, would take a punch at a couple of Yankee fans, except that the elevator service is so bad at the hotel at which the club is staying that O'Malley couldn't find the time to seek out preys.

At a press conference last night, Bowie Kuhn, the commissioner of baseball, was asked his reaction to the Steinbrenner rumble.

"OUR PEOPLE, in the normal routine, will talk to him," said Kuhn, who saw Reggie Smith and Cesar Cedeno fined and suspended this year for going into he seats to battle fans.

"Will Steinbrenner be given a lie detector test?" the commissioner was asked.

Meantime, the madness is compounding in this Eastern paradise, where the lawyer for Dave Winfield, 1-for-18 in the Series, reports that his client has received a death threat.

Catcher Rick Cerone has made a similar report.

"When we came here for the Series in '78," says Dodger manager Tom Lasorda, "we had death threats against Steve Garvey and Joe Ferguson. You can only hope it's telephone kooks."

As for Steinbrenner's injury, the Yankees show no especial alarm. George, you see, doesn't sign the checks with that hand.

George Steinbrenner

Giles must sell his share of Cincinnati

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The principal investor in a group apparently about to buy the Philadelphia Phillies has been told it will have to sell its small share of the Cincinnati Reds before purchasing the Phillies.

Bill Giles, executive vice president of the Phillies and one of investors trying to buy the team, has confirmed that a deal to buy the 98-year-old franchise is close to being completed.

The team would be sold by owner Ruly Carpenter for between $25 million and $30 million, sources have said.

The biggest investor would be the Taft Broadcasting Co., based in Cincinnati. Taft owns seven television stations, six radio stations, amusement parks, several entertainment companies and is involved with the Jack Nicklaus sports complex in Ohio.

For students, food fight a real riot

MURFREESBORO, N.C. (AP) — Six-hundred students flinging turkey, mashed potatoes and chairs in a college cafeteria turned a food fight into a riot until police broke it up with nine arrests and the mayor declared a state of emergency.

"It was funny for a while, but it got too funny," Mayor W.W. Hill said Wednesday night after declaring an emergency in the northeastern North Carolina town of 3,500 people and banning alcohol sales for 12 hours.

"We're a little liberal in this college town — we bend a little," Hill said. "But when the buck has to be stopped, we stop it."

Estimates of damage to the Chowan College cafeteria ranged from $2,000 to $3,000, officials said.

"Food was all over the ceiling," said town police Officer Tommy Gee, who arrived soon after the worst of the rioting. "The floor was such a mess you couldn't walk on it. It was a total wreck."

Police Chief Robert Harris said he and three officers went into the cafeteria and found "students just screaming and hollering, throwing food and trays, breaking up furniture — they broke the door open, too."

Some of the doors were broken down by panic-stricken students after a college official tried to calm the crowd by locking the exits.

Harris said nine students were charged with inciting to riot. They were held on $2,000 bond and scheduled for court appearances Tuesday. More arrests were expected, police said.

No serious injuries were reported.

"I was in the cafeteria when it happened," said infirmary night nurse Marie Elliot. "I haven't seen any injuries. The biggest thing I saw was somebody got hit in the back with an apple and got a pretty good bruise."

"Food was flying everywhere, and dishes and trays," said Darryl Bryant, a student from Woodland. "I got hit in the right eye with an apple and swung around to get out of the way and then got hit in the left eye with a plate."

Students said the melee began Wednesday afternoon at a local tavern where students were taking advantage of reduced beer prices. Witnesses said someone stood up and announced plans for a food fight later at the Halloween banquet, which was held in the cafeteria.

The cafeteria at the school, which has 1,100 students, was decorated with crepe paper for the occasion and a special meal of turkey, yams and mashed potatoes was being served. John Odom of Wilmington, a student, said the fight started when one student stood up and yelled "Food fight!"

Another stood up with a roll in his hand and threw it, he said.

"I never saw anything like this except one time before, and that was in the movie 'Animal House,'" Odom said, referring to a film about a college fraternity filled with pranksters.

After the fight began, Odom said, dozens of students tried to escape but found the double steel doors locked.

Many students panicked and some crouched in corners and under tables, he said, before the some of the doors were broken down.

"I locked the doors because I thought when they realized the doors were closed they would stop," said assistant cafeteria manager Larry Lassiter. "But it got worse, so I opened the doors."

The "Maramuresul" ensemble of dancers entertains Community Concert-goers Monday night during the Romanian Folk Festival, the season opener. This particular number drew applause during its performance, so the Maramuresul orchestra immediately struck up the music again and the dancers performed the difficult on-the-floor routines one more time.

'Maramuresul' is high-energy performance

Community Concerts opened its 1981-82 season Monday night with the Romanian Folk Festival - "Maramuresul" — presenting an evening of folk dancing, singing and instrumentals before an almost-packed house at Midland High School Auditorium. It was a high-energy evening.

All of the nine dance numbers involved 24 dancers executing intricate steps done, for the most part, at an incredible pace. The agility, speed and precision with which the dancers performed caused one observer to say, "This makes aerobics look easy." Agreed.

Some observers thought from a distance it was not possible the same dancers were performing all of the selections. Wrong. They were.

Square-dance lovers certainly saw some similarities onstage Monday night. Many of the dances told a story which the Romanian-speaking performers were able to make graphically clear to the English-speaking audience.

The colorful costumes were quite striking, and were different for each selection.

During intermission one man was overheard saying, "The men's costumes are so much more colorful than the women's. I think the gals are getting gypped." The man to whom he was speaking replied, "Maybe it's just like with birds. Male birds are more colorful than female ones."

One of the dances during the last half included hats with full peacock plumage for the males and small headband plumage for the women. I could mentally see those two men looking at each other knowingly and saying, "Ah ha."

Their comments combined with the peacock hats made me aware of an interesting aspect of the dances. Just as the male of most mammal species shows off his supposed prowess to the female of the species, the dances centered around the men showing off for the females. One almost got the feeling they were saying to the gals, "Look at me. I can do this."

ENTERTAINMENT

Most of the performers come from a valley region surrounded by the Transylvanian Alps, the Bihor Mountains and the Moldavian-Carpathians Mountains, all part of the Carpathian Mountain Region, in Romania — "land of the Romans." The works they presented were representative of the folk cultures of the six land regions of Romania — Transylvania, Walachia, Moldavia, Dobruja, Banat and Bucovina.

This is their debut United States tour, having previously performed in Korea, China, Russia, Algeria, Morraco, the Sudan, Mongolia, Japan and in every country in Europe.

Their musical instruments included the shepherd's pipe; the ocarina, a small terra-cotta or plastic wind instrument with a mouthpiece, finger holes and a bulbous shape; the little whistles; the cembalon, a Hungarian gypsy dulcimer, a wire-stringed instrument of trapezoidal shape encompassing two or three octaves and played with light hammers held in the hands; the pipes-of-pan, a small wind instrument consisting of tubes of different lengths bound together; the taragot; and the trumpet-violins.

Instrumental soloists included Dimitru Dobrican on the shepherd's pipe, the ocarina, the pipes-of-pan, the taragot and the little whistles; Gheorghe Costache on the accordian; Vasile Seras and Gheorghe Soporaru on the trumpet-violins; and Gavril Martocean on the cembalon. All were impressive demonstrating remarkable proficiency on their respective instruments.

The two vocal soloists, Angela Buciu and Nicu Moldovan, were quite good with Moldovan's facial expressions and hand motions aptly explaining his topics. Neither sang in English. The language of Romania is Romanian — the only Eastern European language derived from Latin.

One of the evening's nicest touches was the response of the performers to the immediate applause during two selections — one a dance step and the other part of a song by Moldovan. In both cases, the orchestra and performers took the selection from where the applause started and performed it again.

Another plus for the night's entertainment was the enjoyment all those onstage displayed during the show. They were having a good time, as was the audience. The rapport between the two clearly demonstrated that it isn't necessary to speak the same language to be able to communicate visually.

Reasoner writes fair autobiography

NEW YORK (AP) — Harry Reasoner worked for Fred Friendly at CBS and, later, for Roone Arledge at ABC. That, says the veteran broadcast newsman, "is a bit like having served under both Napoleon and Custer."

"What these two men have in common is the attribute of great natural force; those whose lives they have touched were frequently never quite the same again," Reasoner says in the introduction to his recently published autobiography, "Before the Colors Fade."

Ferrer has fun on late-night soap opera

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — What is Mel Ferrer doing in a late-night soap opera? Having fun, he insists.

If Elizabeth Taylor can make a guest appearance on "General Hospital," why can't Ferrer star in "Behind the Screen"? He's doing just that each Friday on CBS's answer to Johnny Carson.

"Behind the Screen" may be the ultimate in the peculiar art that has spread from the daylight hours into prime time ("Dallas," "Flamingo Road") and now into the insomnia period. The new once-a-week half-hour is a soap opera about a soap opera.

The cast: Ferrer, a powerful Hollywood promoter; Janine Turner, star of the serial "Generations" and victim of Ferrer's manipulation; Joanne Linville, her crippled, ambitious mother; Michael Sabatino, a serious actor slumming in "Generations;" Joshua Bryant, his father and producer of the series; and more.

"When they sent me the script," said Ferrer, "I was immediately interested because David Jacobs' name was on it. David created 'Dallas,' and I am a mad 'Dallas' fan. I think Larry Hagman has made a creative and inventive character out of J.R. and I have an eye for Sue Ellen (Linda Evans)."

Ferrer discovered that taping a half-hour weekly show is no easy chore. The "Behind the Screen" cast rehearses at CBS Television center on Friday, tapes on Saturday and Sunday. Reason for the weekend taping: "Behind the Screen" uses the stage occupied by "Archie Bunker's Place" during the week.

The series came along at just the right time for him, Ferrer said.

"I had been living in Switzerland and making three pictures a year — Italian, Spanish, French, German, English," he explained. "Production in Europe has become very tight, except in Germany. In Italy there is very little money to finance films.

"So it seemed like a good time to resurface here. I have an avocado and lemon ranch in Carpinteria (80 miles northwest) that I wanted to look after. And I'm developing 'Peter Pan' at Paramount."

Ferrer has long held the film rights to the James Barrie classic, once planned it for his then-wife Audrey Hepburn. For a time Mia Farrow was to star. Now producer Ferrer has a revolutionary idea: Peter Pan will be played by a boy.

"But not Ricky Schroeder," he added. "I have already talked to Ricky, but he is already too old to play Peter.

"I have seen all the Peters in recent times — Jean Arthur, Mary Martin, Sandy Duncan. While they are wonderful, they are not what Barrie intended. Our film will be done from the original play, not as a musical comedy."

Couple ties the knot in a jewelry store

ROSWELL, N.M. (AP) — It was a case of the karat and the schtick.

Terry and Charles Roberts couldn't come up with the money to get their wedding rings out of layaway, so they tied the knot at the jewelry store.

The couple had planned to get married Nov. 6, but financial considerations prompted them to consider dropping the wedding.

But as a joke, Roberts suggested they hold the ceremony at the House of Art Jewelers where they could exchange the rings they were buying on layaway — if only temporarily.

Graham addresses rally

WACO, Texas (AP) — Evangelist Billy Graham urged Baptists to avoid the organized political tactics of the Moral Majority, but said he did not oppose individual activism.

Graham, speaking Wednesday to more than 10,000 delegates to a Bold Missions Rally sponsored by the Baptist General Convention of Texas, said churches should stay away from politics.

At an earlier press conference, he criticized the Moral Majority and leader Jerry Falwell for organizing a political machine that sidestepped the constitutional principle of separation of church and state.

"I don't believe that we as Baptists and Christians should get into politics as an organization," he said at the Heart O'Texas Coliseum rally. "I think our people should get headlong into it."

Graham, a Baptist, said mission work should be a church priority. The Baptist Convention's Bold Mission Thrust seeks to spread the gospel worldwide by the year 2000, officials said.

"We are trying to run a Space Age on a horse-and-buggy morality," he said, adding that Americans have become cynical and hardened to evil.

He quoted Albert Einstein, who when asked by a German photographer whether peace would prevail in the world, said, "Not as long as there are people on this planet, because the problem is in the heart."

Graham said the Biblical prophet Jeremiah described the heart as "desperately wicked." The evangelist said wickedness has caused turmoil in the Middle East and trouble in American households.

Another rally speaker, Baylor University president Herbert Reynolds, said he would dedicate himself to maintaining the institution as a bulwark of Christianity as well as a regional education center.

'Hill Street Blues' premiers tonight

NEW YORK (AP) — For all the viewers it got last season, "Hill Street Blues" was probably mistaken for a ragtime tune from New Orleans. Six Emmy awards and a major promotional campaign later, "Hill Street" returns, and NBC hopes audiences know it's a television show — a fine one at that.

Aware that "Hill Street" might attract a large curiosity audience tonight, the producers structured a dynamic opening before the title and credits even roll. It dares you to turn the dial.

Grant Tinker, whose former production company created "Hill Street Blues," is now chairman of NBC. He promises fewer story lines per episode, the completion of at least one of them and an anchored time slot.

Still, "Hill Street" is not easy to watch because it's so provocative. Everything doesn't unfold in neat 15-minute segments. There are shifting sub-plots — some based on the action but more rooted to the characters' undulating emotions and feelings, a remarkable feat for TV.

While it's own quality may be an obstacle to popularity, "Hill Street" is burdened by NBC's mediocre Thursday night comedy schedule. It's immediate lead-in, "Gimme A Break," takes the lowest road and should have viewers elsewhere at 10 p.m. EST.

Sands Art Association has arts and crafts show

MONAHANS — The Sands Art Association will hold its annual arts and craft show and sale Nov. 14-15 at the Ward County Coliseum here.

Categories for judging include oil, watercolor, graphic pictures, photography, miniatures, sculpture, crewel and other embroidery, quilts, knitting and crochet, dolls, leather goods, hardware, ceramics, wood items and tole paintings. Other categories may be added if as many as five items are entered. Ribbons will be awarded for first, second, third and honorable mention.

Those interested in exhibiting their works may write to Gladys Powers, 315 N. Main St., Monahans, Texas, 79756, or call Ms. Powers at 1-943-5113.

Windberg's original paintings to be on sale

Twelve of Dalhart Windberg's original paintings will be on display and for sale Friday and Saturday at Midland Gallery, located in Western Park Plaza on Andrews Highway behind Western State Bank.

The show marks the opening show and sale for Midland Gallery. Show hours are from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. both days.

Windberg won the Texas Artist of the Year Award in 1979 and 1980. His book "Dalhart Windberg — In the Path of the Masters" won him the Mead Award of Excellence, given by the Mead paper national competition for the Graphic Arts.

Midland Fiber Guild has exhibition at Sul Ross

ALPINE — The Midland Fiber Guild is currently exhibiting at Sul Ross State University in Alpine through Saturday. Included in the exhibit are wall hangings, fiber sculpture and basketry.

Diamond M Museum has Indian art exhibition

SNYDER — Indian Images, an exhibition of regional artists portraying the spirit and tradition of the American Indian, is the featured event at the Diamond M Museum of Fine Arts at Snyder through Nov. 15.

ABC-TV on top thanks to baseballs's World Series

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC ended CBS' two-week run at the top in the networks' weekly prime-time competition, thanks in large measure to high ratings for the first three games in baseball's World Series, figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. show.

Despite the relatively high ratings, there was some indication of fallout from the summer-long players' strike, which led to fan disenchantment at the ballpark.

The ratings for each game played in the week ending Oct. 25 were lower than the marks for comparable games last season.

The opening series game Tuesday night between the New York Yankees and the Los Angeles Dodgers, on ABC, was the week's highest-rated show.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, October 30, 1981

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Christopher Columbus was born on this date. Also sharing this birthday with you: Singer Grace Slick. In the month ahead, guard against becoming so involved in a pet project that you neglect your business affairs. You need to step back occasionally to get a clearer view of how things are going. Involvement in an experimental enterprise would not be in your best interest. Although your income increases, you will still want to get good value for every dollar you spend. Money is available from sources other than your job. Romance proves both hectic and heavenly!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Someone automatically assumes that what will be good for them will also be good for you. Set the record straight before you are painted into a corner. Mate will be supportive.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A childish spat early in the morning could set the stage for an aggravating day. Try to find compromises if disagreements arise. Keep a close eye on investments.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take a long-range view of things and rise above petty squabbles. Your financial affairs may be linked with those of a family member with whom you have little influence.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Concentrate on both long-range career goals and social plans for the coming weekend. Take more pride in your ideas and abilities.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Look forward to improved domestic conditions. Real estate transactions bring financial gain. Work pressures are only temporary. Romance puts you in a happy mood by nightfall.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A new start in business or romance will give you cause for celebration. Accept new responsibilities; expect greater rewards in the near future. The strain on a personal relationship eases.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The emphasis today is on practicing moderation in everything you do. Prestige, social success and professional awards are in the spotlight. Deal direct with member of opposite sex.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid becoming involved in heated exchanges. You could receive a special break you have sought. Your new rapport with loved one gives you reason to rejoice!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): There are many things to look forward to now! Keep your spirits up and maintain a strong faith in your own abilities, talents. Your financial affairs are linked to those of others.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Keep your ideas under wraps until your research is completed. A consolidation of resources helps you achieve the results you desire.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Certain restrictive influences are eliminated. A harmonious atmosphere depends on more than just one person. Tackle financial problem in a positive fashion.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An overload of work could be tapping your strength. Arrange a quiet weekend to catch up on your rest. Rise above the petty criticism of someone who has the facts twisted.

Opening lead: Ten of ♡.

It is not often that the defending side is offered a second chance at the brass ring. Usually, if they don't seize their one opportunity to defeat the contract they have to suffer the consequences.

We can't admire South's two no trump bid at his second turn. With a minimum opening bid and a balanced hand, he might have been sufficiently dubious about his heart stopper to pass and let his partner act. Had he done so, his side might have reached a sound five club contract rather than a shaky no trump game.

West led the ten of hearts, and East fell from grace when he captured dummy's king with the ace. Since he had no sure entry to his hand, he should have allowed the king to win. On the auction, South was marked with exactly four hearts. By ducking the first heart, East would have preserved communications between the defenders' hands.

East cashed the queen and jack of hearts, and West came up with a sensational play — he discarded his king of clubs! East continued with a fourth heart, and declarer was without resource. He had no way to come to nine tricks without using the club suit, and there was no way to tackle clubs without allowing East to gain the lead and cash his hearts for a two-trick set.

The defenders got their second shot at the contract because of West's brilliant defense. Had he kept the king of clubs, declarer would have coasted home. After winning the fourth heart he would lead a club and, when West produced the king, declarer would allow him to hold the trick! Now East would have been shut out of the lead and declarer would bag exactly nine tricks.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. # Snelson's district becomes larger with redistricting plan

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

The battle among members of the Legislative Redictricting Board Tuesday night partly revolved around the senatorial district represented by W.E. "Pete" Snelson of Midland.

Snelson, however, wasn't concerned about what was done to his district. Adding or subtracting a small amount still leaves it as the largest senatorial district in Texas. And the land area makes it larger than 30 states, including "any state east of the Mississippi," he said.

The plan approved Tuesday night was drawn by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and adds some counties. The district will have a total population of 459,376, which is 0.9 percent above the ideal figure of 458,980.

Under the current plan, Snelson's district covers Bandera, Brewster, Coke, Comal, Crane, Crockett, Culberson, Edwards, Gillespie, Glasscock, Irion, Jeff Davis, Kendall, Kerr, Kimble, Kinney, Llano, Loving, Mason, Midland, Pecos, Presidio, Reagan, Real, Reeves, Schleicher, Sterling, Sutton, Terrell, Tom Green, Upton, Uvalde, Val Verde, Ward and Winkler counties.

Under Hobby's plan, Snelson would retain all of those and add Hudspeth, Blanco, Menard, Maverick and part of El Paso.

Before the plan was adopted, Snelson said none of the proposals would make substantial changes in his district.

El Paso, he said, has more than the ideal number of people, "and something has to happen."

Representing part of El Paso would present no problem, according to the Democratic senator. In fact, when he was first elected to the State Senate back in 1964, his district included all of that far West Texas city.

Covering a district this large is difficult, he conceded. "It's different than if you were campaigning in downtown Dallas or Houston."

When invited to speak at a function in one of the district's towns, Snelson said he doesn't just hop into that city and then leave. "In something this large, you take advantage of the opportunities to visit in the communities when you're traveling somewhere."

He used the example of Del Rio, saying he would stop for morning coffee in one town along the highway, have lunch in another, and make a few more stops in communities along the way before arriving at his destination that evening.

"I enjoy the rural counties," he said of the sparsely populated areas of West Texas. "I don't envy those who have an urban area."

The 25th Senatorial District includes 35 counties, 74 school districts and more than 100 municipalities.

Snelson is coming up for re-election next year and is mulling over what to do. About a year ago, he was considering making a run for lieutenant governor since fellow Democrat Hobby had inferred he might not run again. But Hobby recently made it clear his hat is in the ring again.

Snelson said that in a few weeks he should have made his decision about running for state senator, a state-wide office or retiring.

He has been involved in statewide politics since 1960 when he was elected to the Texas House of Representatives. Snelson has been in the State Senate since 1964. Last year, Texas Monthly magazine selected him as one of the 10 best state legislators.

House districts changed

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midland County and areas of Ector County surrounding Odessa make up the new House of Representatives District 76 approved by the Legislative Redistricting Board Wednesday.

The LRB adopted the House redistricting plan proposed by Speaker Bill Clayton after adopting amendments changing several metropolitan area districts.

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The college son of the pilot of the space shuttle Columbia says his father probably has "reservations, but he knows the shuttle so well it will be like riding a bike to him."

University of Texas freshman Dan Truly said of his father, Navy Capt. Richard Truly, 43, "What he loves to do more than anything else is fly and he knows how to fly that shuttle as well as anyone knows how to drive a car."

Heroin conviction upheld

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals has upheld the Howard County conviction of James Dexter Bartley Jr., who was sentenced to 15 years in prison for delivery of heroin.

Bartley was convicted of selling heroin to an undercover narcotics officer of Aug. 2, 1977.

He appealed contending that the trial court erred in refusing to allow cross examination of the officer regarding criminal charges against another defendant.

The appeals court rejected that contention, stating the court did not deny Bartley's right to cross examine the witness about the other defendant's role in the crime, but only prevented testimony on a "collateral and wholly irrele-

Wales visit is first official stop for Charles and Diana

By MARK S. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

SWANSEA, Wales (AP) — Prince Charles and Princess Diana were winding up a triumphal three-day tour of Wales today that aroused a lot of the pride and a little of the angry passion of the West Coast principality's 445-year-old union with England.

"It's one of those occasions when I think everyone is prepared to overlook the divisions," said Sian Rhys-Davis, 34, one of more than 10,000 people who turned out in a driving rain storm Wednesday to welcome the royal couple to Carmarthen, a 900-year-old Roman market town in south Wales.

Among the final stops for the prince and princess of Wales today were Pontypridd, where a firebomb set by radical Welsh nationlists was found and defused Monday, and Cardiff, the capital, where another incendiary was defused Wednesday.

Since neither bomb was on the route to be taken by the prince and princess, they apparently were a protest against the visit rather than an attempt to harm them.

The separatists, demanding independence from Britain for Wales' 8,000 square miles and 2.7 million inhabitants, were virtually lost among the enthusiastic thousands who welcomed the heir to the British throne and his young bride at every stop on their first official tour since their wedding June 29.

Typical was the crowd of several thousand outside a dinner reception in Swansea, Wales' second largest city, Wednesday evening.

Well-wishers waved British Union Jacks and Welsh flags and shouted: "Croeso" — "Welcome" in the Celtic language of Wales. The crowd all but drowned out several dozen nationalist demonstrators chanting, "Charles and Diana out, out, out."

The title of Prince of Wales has been held by the heir to the British throne since Edward I seized Wales in the 14th century. "We feel it is a bit of cheek to the Welsh people to have an English person imposed on us as our royalty," said one of the protesters, who refused to give his name.

Another sore point is an unemployment rate in excess of 20 percent in some areas of Wales, compared with 12.4 percent for Britain as a whole. The nationalists blame the Conservative government and accuse it and all other British governments of discriminating against Wales.

But in a 1979 referendum, the Welsh voters decisively rejected a plan for partial home rule.

Corporations seeking older people for high-level management positions

By TOM SEPPY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Corporations are recruiting older candidates for top-level executive and managerial positions than they did in the 1960s, a new study says.

"The study indicates that the corporate world is increasingly willing to recruit executives on the basis of criteria such as skills, judgment and experience," said Jon Pynoos, director of the Institute for Policy and Program Development at the University of Southern California's Andrus Gerontology Center.

"The application of such criteria represents a breakthrough in attitudes and opens the door to more older executives and managers," he said Wednesday.

Pynoos testified before the House Select Committee on Aging, which was examining business attitudes toward older managers and executives.

Although no accurate figures are available, Pynoos said the study indicated that corporations seeking executives are looking for candidates within the 55-57 age group. "That seems to be the trend," he said.

In previous years, he noted, corporations sought candidates in their 40s.

The survey, prepared for the committee hearing, queried 20 search firms that seek talent for the nation's largest corporations.

For the purposes of the survey, "older" executives and managers were defined early in the interview as those over age 55. Executive-level positions focused on the top one, two or three positions in the organization. Management positions referred to the next lower-level positions with corresponding lower salary ranges.

Among the survey's other major findings:

—The importance of age as a factor in the selection process is related to the level of position being filled; the highest levels within the company are more likely to be filled by older individuals.

—Some executive recruiting assignments involve specific client requests for an older executive. An older executive is brought in both to stabilize the company and to aid in the training of up-and-coming executives.

—There are specific problems which still affect a company's willingness to hire old executives or managers. In some cases, the pension plan inhibits hiring an older executive because he or she may not achieve vested rights to the pension before retiring.

—Foreign-owned companies are generally perceived as being more receptive to older executives and managers. It was also noted that multi-national corporations seek older executives because of the international diplomacy skills required.

—The age of executives and managers being recruited is expected to continue to increase in the future.

He learned business from bottom up

Early days of oil industry recalled by Sam Giesey

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Sam Giesey is literally a man who's worked his way up from the bottom.

The retired oil consultant, geologist and poet found his first post-college job "mucking" hundreds of feet below the surface in the old Shafter silver mine — but it didn't take long for his aspirations in the geology field to thrust him skyward on a journey of five decades' duration that saw him assume an important role in the oil industry of Midland.

The 73-year-old Midlander abounds with sometimes amusing stories of his long and varied career since graduation from A&M College in 1930 with a degree in geology and published poetry to his credit. He looks back with sly humor at that first job at Shafter, whose bullet-riddled adobe buildings evidenced early-day attacks by bandits, secluded as it was in the rugged foothills of the awesome Chinati Mountains between Marfa and Presidio.

"Another geology graduate and I drove out to Marfa and then Shafter to see the mine engineer," he recalled. "The other fellow was one of those guys that looked good wearing anything, so the engineer hired him as his assistant, a nice clean surface job. Now, I was one of those that didn't look good even in a tuxedo, so he decided I should learn the business from the bottom up — mucking on the 700-foot level."

PRESIDIO COUNTY was a wild and remote area in 1930, and Giesey's never forgotten the time he was inside a dimly lighted cafe in Marfa, which was devoid of paved streets. The clomp of shod horses and shouted commands preceded the door swinging open, and then, as if making a John Wayne-like entrance, a cavalryman became framed in the threshhold, Stetson in hand and dust covering him top to bottom.

"He began slapping dust off his hat, just like in the movies," Giesey recalled with a grin. "He was a second lieutenant, a West Point graduate, and for the last two months had been assigned to the cavalry at Presidio. He figured he was lost in the southeast corner of hell."

Giesey must have thought even worse of his own situation: he couldn't even claim a corner of hell; he was 700 feet BELOW it.

But he didn't stay at such depths long. The Depression soon led him to southern Oklahoma and a teacher certification program at East Central State Teachers College. Upon completion, he proceeded to teach science, English and math for a couple of years before entering the oil business by assuming a position with Stanolind Oil and Gas Company, which left him with better memories than did his mucking job.

"I ONLY MADE $125 a month, but in many ways that first job I ever had in the oil industry was the best I ever had," he noted, "the only one where I banked half my money and squandered the rest."

Giesey got his first feel of Midland dirt under his feet when Stanolind transferred him in 1935 to the not-so-tall-city, which only had a few thousand persons at the time. But, he says, it already had an inherent quality that made it a safe bet to become a boom town — the presence of the only first rate hotel and office space between Fort Worth and El Paso, in the forms of the Scharbauer Hotel and Petroleum Building, respectively.

"(Those buildings) are primarily the reason for Midland being here today," Giesey opined.

His initial experience as a Midlander was a good one, and it set the stage for future years in the city.

"Back in 1935 it was quite a pleasant place to live," he noted. "I suspect at that time, 1935-1940, that a greater percentage of the people were college-educated than in any other city in the United States, except a college town. We were all professionals, and young."

"Back in 1935 it was quite a pleasant place to live. I suspect at that time, 1935-1940, that a greater percentage of the people were college-educated than in any other city in the United States, except a college town."

GIESEY NOT ONLY had a new home, but a new lifestyle as well. He married and brought his new bride Gene to Midland with him, where she got her first taste of the wide open spaces of West Texas. "Gee," he recalled her saying as she looked out the window as their vehicle sped across the Permian Basin, "it's good to see something that's not all cluttered up by trees."

Giesey wasn't destined to remain in Midland permanently, however, as Stanolind transferred him in the late 1930s to eastern Kentucky and Tennessee for what was supposed to be "30 to 60 days." Those few weeks, however, turned out to be two years, including a "hitch in the mountains of eastern Kentucky." There, two things occurred which he would carry in his memory for years to come: he met Sgt. Alvin York, the World War I hero, and in the course of walking through the mountains, got in the middle of a backwoods family feud where gunfire and shootings were a common occurrence.

"Now, those mountains were WILD," he recalled. "I never met a man when I was wandering around the mountains that wasn't armed. And they knew how to shoot 'em, too. There was quite a bit of shooting going on, and very few just wounded. When they shot at somebody, they usually killed them. Sgt. York wasn't the only one that knew how to use a rifle."

Following a brief period in Shreveport, La., Giesey found himself back in Midland again, this time as Union Oil's first geologist in the Permian Basin. The year: 1941. Union also had one land man, one scout, a secretary and manager. "We had no production, just confidence and hope," recalled Giesey, noting that by the time of his retirement Union had more than 200 employees in Midland.

GIESEY SERVED in a number of positions with Union including chief geologist, and worked with its mining subsidiary four years before finally hanging up his field boots for good in 1973. In his almost four decades in the oil industry, he saw drilling techniques go from "primitive and fascinating" to technologically advanced. But the most rewarding aspect of his involvement in the business was the opportunity "to have associated with what I consider great men," he noted. "Looking back on it, it's been a pretty rich and enjoyable tenure."

Whether the Permian Basin oil industry will continue giving those persons who work in it rich experiences depends, he says, on two factors — how much longer the oil lasts, and whether or not the water supply remains stable.

"All of these many millions of dollars being spent transforming Midland from a town to a city is being spent on the hope of a return from the oil business," he noted. "I think the (oil) is going to last. I don't know how long; at least a decade. That would be long enough for the people who built these buildings to get their money back. It may last several years, I don't know. There's always a chance of finding a lot of new oil, but no one has discovered a giant oil field in a long, long while."

It is the absence of an adequate water supply that most worries Giesey.

"I personally think the oil is going to last a lot longer than the water," he noted. "We're drawing from it far in excess of the charging of it. Five- to seven-year duration droughts could lead to acute water shortages."

It's a safe bet, however, that Sam Giesey would stick it out, no matter how tough times might get. After all, when a man's been at the bottom, he knows just what it takes to pull himself up again.

Although best known as a petroleum geologist who helped put Midland on the map, Sam Giesey's interests range far and wide. Here, he displays an anthology containing some of his poetry which, like his remembrances of early-day oil country, indicates a natural flair for storytelling.

Crutcher reports record revenues

HOUSTON (AP) — Crutcher Resources Corp. Monday reported record revenues and earnings for the quarter and nine months ended Sept. 30.

Net income rose 134 percent to $8.8 million, or 91 cents a share, in the third qurter, while revenues increased 48 percent to $74.9 million.

For the nine months, net income was up 109 percent to $17.8 million, or $1.87 a share, and revenues jumped 47 percent to $187.6 million.

Officials of Crutcher Resources, an oil and gas services and pipeline equipment company, attributed the gains to "continued high utilization rates of the company's rigs and wireline units and more equipment in service."

Oil patch life's been good to Tucker

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The oil patch is still the oil patch, though the ways and means of drilling and extracting that black gold and belching gas have changed.

But a hundred years ago, drilling didn't have the wherewithal to punch and drill deep into the earth.

"My daddy told me if they didn't get production at 250 feet, it was a dry hole, and they moved on," reflected Permian Basion oil pioneer R.C. "Bob" Tucker. That was back in West Virginia in the latter half of the 1800s, when the search and reward for petroleum wasn't nearly as enticing as it is now.

By the 1920s and 1930s, as the rotary drill rigs were moving in on the cable-tool rigs, wells were being drilled down to 2,000 and 3,000 feet. And today, some bite into the earth five miles down.

Tucker's father worked only a spell in the West Virginia fields not long after the Civil War, went into the mercantile business, made a moderate success out of it, and later reflected that the "biggest mistake" he ever made was to leave the oil fields.

His son didn't. Tucker, now nearing 83, got initiated in the oil patch as a roustabout in 1919 in West Virginia, moved west and to the Louisiana oil fields around Minden in 1920, to the Arkansas fields around El Dorado a couple of years later, wound up in Texas in 1927 and in West Texas and Midland in 1934.

And 34 years later, at age 70, he retired as president of Great Western Drilling Co. The year was 1968.

"During World War I," he recalled, "the oil business, as did all businesses, got to booming every place." Back then, more than six decades ago, Pennsylvania-grade crude oil was bringing $7 a barrel. That was top dollar.

After the war, oil dropped to $3.65 a barrel and seemed destined to stay there.

"That was pretty well the average price in the Southwest at that time," Tucker said. "That (the $7 oil) didn't last very long after the war closed."

He landed in Louisiana in 1920.

"I was just like any other oil field bum," Tucker said plainly and with a flair. "Worked where I could."

From Louisiana, where he was married in 1923 to a 19-year-old lass named Sybil, Tucker moved to Arkansas. There, he ran upon the enterprising H.L. Hunt, who was drilling for oil in Eldorado.

"H.L. Hunt was a remarkable man. No question about it," Tucker said.

Hunt's penchant was seeking out and latching onto a good deal as if he were broke, meeting the challenge and making a million dollars time and time again.

"The fact that he had a lot (of money) didn't make any difference," Tucker said of Hunt. "He wanted more. He had an uncanny way of seeing what was going to happen."

By 1927, he was in Houston, where he was vice president in charge of operations for the American Petroleum Co., which purchased and transported oil.

Five years later, Tucker switched companies and lines of work. He went with Mid-Continent Supply Co. and into equipment sales. And then, the economy went almost berserk and about bankrupt.

He stayed on with the business, though he took a pay cut to help the company weather the economic downturn.

The business fared well, the economy recovered and Tucker, by 1938, had already settled in Midland and had become vice president of Great Western Drilling Co., which, like Mid-Continent, was part of Kendavis Industries of Fort Worth. He was promoted to president in 1943 at age 45.

"Life's been awfully good to me," surmised Tucker, who will turn 84 on Nov. 4.

He has witnessed many and various changes in the oil industry and has watched Midland's growth and experienced its booms and slumps, and almost incidentally watches the current building surge, which is but one evidence of the 1980 oil boom and of top-dollar oil.

"Personally, I can't say I'm much charged up about it," he said of the building boom in a place he has seen grow from a cow town of about 3,500 folks to a city possibly nearing 90,000 or 100,000 people.

"I've lived here ever since (1934)," Tucker reflected, "and I've seen it all happen, and I can't help but think, 'Hell, I liked it then.'"

Lingen Companies bought from German parent firm

HOUSTON — Lingen Exploration, Inc., Lingen Oil & Gas, Inc. and Tal Vez Energy Company, all of Houston and better known as "The Lingen Companies", have been purchased outright from their parent company, Deutsche Schachtbau-und Teifbohrgesellschaft mbH of Lingen, Germany, DST, as the former parent company is known in trade circles, is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Salzgitter AG, a corporation owned by the Federal Republic of Germany and one of that country's largest groups of firms engaged in steel production, shipbuilding, construction of industrial plants, energy and trade.

The acquisition was made by Harry LeMaire of Houston and Richard E. Patton of San Antonio for an undisclosed amount of cash and other considerations. The transaction wss consummated in October with financing arranged through Abilene National Bank of Abilene and Continental Illinois National Bank of Chicago.

Dr. Hilmar Richard Zeissig, president and C.E.O. of Lingen Companies, said a new parent company has been formed and will be known as Lingen Energy Corporation of "LINERGY".

Chairman and C.E.O. of LINERGY is Harry LeMaire, vice chairm and and president is Richard Patton. The other directors are Don Earney, chairman and president of Abilene National Bank, Abilene; J.B. Fraley, president of MEG Petroleum Corp. and Arroyo Drilling Co., San Angelo; Ed Munson, president of EURATEX Corporation, Fort Worth; Dieter Scherfenberg, president of Delta Steel Corp., Houston, Dr. Hilmar Zeissig, president and Bert F. Scales, executive vice president, Lingen Companies.

Lingen Exploraion, Inc., the operating arm of the group, plans to expand its efforts in exloraation ventures without changes in management, staff or operating philosophy. The company has a staff of over 35 full-time employees who are highly qualified professionals with experience in both the domestic and foreign spheres, including geologists, engineers, landmen, drilling, acounting, financial, and administrative personnel. The company has been conducting comprehensive exploration and operational programs and pursuing drilling activities throughout Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, New Mexico, Mississippi, Alabama, Kansas and Wyoming. In additionto the company's ventures within the Mesozoic and Tertiary trends of the Gulf Coast, Lingen is participating in the deep Morrow play on the northern shelf of the Anadarko Basin and the Paleozoic Basins of West Texas and New Mexico, shallow oil recovery programss in south central Kansas, deep Smackover prospects in Alabama and Mississippi, the mid-Mesozoic potential along the southern flank of the Powder River Basin in Wyoming, the shallow Abo Trend in New Mexico and various prospects in the Austin Chalk in Texas.

Since starting operations in 1977, the Lingen Companies have participated in some 85 individual prospects of which Lingen has operated approximately 30 percent. Over 120 wells have been drilled on these prospects with several currently drilling or planned in the immediate future. Lingen's combined successful completions for all wells drilled exceed 60 percent or 51 percent for exploratory and 80 percent for development wells.

The lease hold inventory of the Lingen Companies has progressively increased to a total of 91,000 gross acres or 30,000 net acres, of which approximately 10 percent have been proven productive by 1981.

In the future, according to Dr. Zeissig, the Lingen Companies will continue to broaden operations by actively participating in prospects offered by other operators and by offering some outside participation in prospects generated internally. At present, Lingen has entered into cooperation agreements with two West German corporations whose funds are availabel for joint investment through Lingen on a long-term basis.

W.M. Osborn sees boom continuing

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Midland is at the crossroads: take a look at the upgoing skyscrapers and it becomes obvious a lot of people are wagering its future on the oil industry.

Longtime petroleum consultant W. M. Osborn, for one, is convinced the odds are stacked in Midland's favor because of what he believes are the undiscovered oil reserves of the Permian Basin.

"I suspect there are additional stratigraphic traps that can't be found by geophysical methods," he said. "These can be found only by drilling."

It is this anticipated massive search for stratigraphic traps that he believes will continue to spur Midland's growth in the future.

Plus, he observed, financial considerations also give indications of a continued rise of the oil industry in the Permian Basin.

"The price of the oil has made a big change now in what you look for," he said. "They're looking for stuff now that years ago they wouldn't have dreamed of looking for, because you'd never get your money back."

A graduate of the University of Oklahoma with a degree in geology, Osborn started out with Shell in San Angelo in 1935. Within three months he was transferred to Midland, where he took part in the heritage of the oil industry that turned a prairie town of a few thousand persons into a metroplex.

"That first winter I was out here I went up to Seminole to check samples on about the first well drilled up there," he recalled. "That's as far north as production went."

"It came in spurts," he noted. "There'd be a lull and then another discovery and a lot of activity."

Those early days as an petroleum geologist were fun, he remembered, but also demanding.

"The technology has really changed," he explained. "When I first came out here I only had a goose-neck lamp and a microscope. A man was more or less on his own, sitting out there with a microscrope trying to make a decision (whether or not to drill)."

In 1945 Osborn became head of the Western Company, and in 1955 assumed a position as manager of its subsidiary, El Capitan Oil Company. He became a fulltime petroleum consultant in 1955, and despite his 75 years of age, continues in that capacity.

Consideration of Midland's future is of prime concern to him, for he has seen his vocation play a part in its rise over the years. And like a lot of people, he says, he cannot envision a demise of the oil industry here.

"A lot of people think the industry has a future," he said. "If not, we're going to have a dead town with a lot of vacant office space."

The Permian Basin's oil future may lie in the search for stratigraphic traps, says long-time petroleum consultant W.M. Osborn.

U.S. energy dependence declining, API study says

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The American Petroleum Institute reported recently that United States dependence on foreign oil supplies in September continued to decline, with imports dropping 13.1 percent below those for the same month last year.

The API's Monthly Statistical Report showed total imports of 5,324,000 barrels per day (bpd) last month compared to 6,129,000 bpd for the same month last year. The decline over the first nine months of 1981 was 17.3 percent comapred to the same period last year.

The report also said that total oil products supplied for domestic use in September declined by 3.7 percent, or 619,000 bpd.

"For the third quarter as a whole, however," the report said, "the decrease versus the corresponding 1980 period was only 1.1 percent," indicating a leveling-off in the decline rate of product use in 1981.

Although comparable data for most of the major industrial countries are available only for the first four months of the year, the report said, "it appears that the rate of decline in product demand in the other countries may now be in excess of that in the United States, due primarily to substantial erosion during the past year of most currencies against the dollar, the standard currency for most oil trade."

Other highlights reported for the month included:

— Motor gasoline supplied was 6,740,000 bpd, 2.1 percent lower than a year ago. Unleaded gasoline represented 52 percent of that total.

— Distillate fuel oil supplied in September was slightly higher than a year ago — 0.3 percent — while residual fuel oil declined by 15.9 percent, due largely to strong interfuel competition and decreaded bunker oil sales, according to the report.

Geologist Dr. W.A. Waldschmidt still does some consulting work but geology has gotten more complicated over the years and he's glad he retired when he did — 21 years ago. The free time has allowed Waldschmidt and his wife Grace to travel and just take things easy.

Waldschmidt enjoys retirement

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Although being a geologist has provided 83-year-old Dr. W.A. Waldschmidt and his wife Grace with a comfortable living and the opportunity to travel extensively, he's glad he retired when he did — 21 years ago.

"Everything's getting too complicated nowadays," says Waldschmidt, who received his doctorate from the University of Colorado at Boulder in 1938. "I look through these publications now and don't know what in the world they're talking about.

"I think I started out in the right period and at the right time. I used to know everyone at geological functions. We had a lot of fun. Everyone was interested in their work."

Waldschmidt earned his master's degree in geology from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1922, his Engineer of Mines degree from the South Dakota School of Mines at Rapid City in 1921 and a bachelor's degree in metallurgy from the South Dakota School of Mines in 1920.

Tuition at MIT in those days was $300 a year. It's now more than $7,000.

He taught at the Colorado School of Mines at Golden for 19 years and worked on his doctorate. He and his wife met in Denver, got married in 1928 and moved to Midland in March of 1944 "to make some money."

His high school days were spent in Lead, S.D., site of the 100-year-old Homestake Gold Mine — the largest gold mine in the country. It's still operating.

Waldschmidt went to work for the Case-Pomery Co., which was headquartered in New York and had a local office in Midland. He worked a year as a surface geologist for them and then went to work for the Argo Oil Corp. with offices in the old Gas Co. building.

He sold his library and equipment and retired in 1951. He's done independent consulting work ever since. "I kept in touch with everything and with the various organizations, but I (haven't done) any formal work or charged any fees," he said.

His wife retired as a bookkeeper for the law firm of McCrae, Stubbeman, McCrae and Sealy about the time he left Argo, and the couple started traveling to places like Australia, New Zealand, Norway and the South Pacific.

One Carribean cruise left them shipwrecked on a reef for five days before an Italian liner picked them up and took them to Miami. They, along with others on the trip, spent the five days partying "as usual." The Waldschmidts used the refund to finance another cruise.

A major change he's seen in the oil business was the introduction of rotary drilling rigs, which replaced the old cable rigs back in the 1930s. Another change, of course, has been the price of oil.

At $2 to $3 a barrel 40 years ago, it's now up to $35 and $40 a barrel — allowing wells that used to be shut off if they only produced 10 or 15 barrels a day to be economically worthwhile to operate.

"Things were a little rougher (back then)," said Waldschmidt. "In Montana, for instance, it'd be 30 below. There was no antifreeze. We used alcohol, which would evaporate.

"There was practically no pavement around (here) and none between Midland and Odessa. Many people rode bicycles to work and everybody knew everyone else."

Entertainment in Midland centered around the old Yucca Theatre downtown. Both Waldschmidt and his wife have been active in the Midland Community Theatre. They're former board members of the theater and he's even done some acting.

He's a charter member of the Petroleum Club. He's also a member of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, past president and honorary life member of the West Texas Geological Society and a member of the Permian Basin Oil Pioneers.

Crippled children gain from auction

ABILENE — Oil patch shoppers can plan to bid and buy at the Third Annual Joint Venture for Crippled Children oilfield equipment and services sale at 1 p.m. Monday, Nov. 9, at the West Texas Fairgrounds in Abilene.

Equipment, pipe, testing services, consulting time and drilling have already been donated to be auctioned. More donations and pledges are coming in daily to the central office of the West Texas Rehabilitation center. Beneficiary of the sale and of the International Petroleum Exhibition for Public Education to take place Nov. 7-9 is the West Texas Rehabilitation Center, with treatment facilites for handicapped children and adults in Abilene, San Angelo and Snyder.

Among the items to be auctioned are more than 3,000 feet of 5 1/2 inch casing, valued at $25,000, donated by EC Tool of Abilene; $10,000 worth of drilling donated DB Drilling Co. of Abilene; and a pumping unit valued at $5,600 donated by L.M. Young of Abilene. Other items include rock bits, well service unit, oil and gas separator, gate valves, drilling mud, workover rig time, polyethylene pipe, valve repairs, TCI Bits, and other services, etc.

Anyone interested in donating to the sale, or who would like more information about the items to be auctioned, should ocntact the central office, West Texas Rehabilitation Center, 4601 Hartford, Abilene, 915-692-1633.

Henry Meadows, a retired engineering coordinator for Humble Oil Co., sees more similarities than differences in the Permian Basin's current oil boom and others in the past.

Midland's 'boom' resembles others

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

There are more similarities than differences in Midland's current boom and the three others that have taken place since the 1920s, according to Henry Meadows, 69, retired engineering coordinator for Humble Oil Co.

"In many respects, except for the scale or scope, there are many aspects which are similar," Meadows said in his office in Midland Tower. "Those were exciting times, too. There was a lot going on. Many of the fields out here were being discovered."

The difference was that money was "very tight then." At the tail end of the Depression, Meadows said the East Texas oil was selling for a dime a barrel compared to the $35 a barrel it goes for now.

With not much money around, salaries were low, living expenses were cheap, houses were very reasonably priced and interests rates were around 4 or 5 percent, he said.

But, Meadows added, "there are more similarities than differences because it was a time of great excitement, interesting happenings and many, many opportunities for young folks — and that's still the case today."

Meadows was born in Comanche in 1912. His family moved to Waco when he was 4 and to San Angelo in 1930 when he entered Rice University in Houston. He said he should have graduated in 1934 but he was a couple of courses short of receiving his degree. He later returned to Rice and received his bachelor's in Civil Engineering in 1939.

In 1934, Meadows was offered a job with Humble Oil Co. in McCamey, which was "by far the biggest area-wise" of the four divisional headquarters at the time. The following year, the McCamey headquarters were moved to Midland.

"There were a few other companies here, but to the best of my memory, Humble was the first to move the whole operation — exploration, production, pipe line functions, the whole bit — to Midland...into the old Petroleum building across the square," he said, nodding out the window of his Midland Tower office.

In 1936, Meadows was transferred from the area to the New Orleans, Houston and Tyler divisions. "But I let it be known that if an opportunity arose, I'd like to go back to West Texas," he said with a grin. Ten years later he was transferred back home.

"For young people, there isn't any better thing that can happen than to move around and see what's happening in other parts of the world and get acquainted with other people. It's good experience. It moves you along in your career," he said, adding, "but I'm sure the families don't like it."

He said that most of the fields discovered here in the 1920s and the 1930s are still producing. "Some of those fields today will yield more revenue than they did when they first were discovered," he said.

"Midland will be a stable community for a good many years. They're not going to find many (new discoveries), but they're going back into the old fields and applying new techniques," Potter continued.

"The majority of the old, abandoned wells are still open to the surface and they'll need to plug them properly," he said. "It is expensive and difficult — but there's enough oil to justify it."

Oil price decontrol helps 3rd quarter gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The Reagan administration's early decontrol of domestic oil prices helped the nation's major oil companies in the third quarter, but weak demand in Europe cut into the profits of corporations with large foreign operations.

U.S. crude oil prices have fallen slightly in recent months, although they still are higher than a year ago, when they were under federal price controls.

The administration lifted the controls in January, nine months ahead of schedule, and the higher prices have meant bigger profits for the domestic oil production businesses of most U.S. companies, analysts say. The companies noted their profits were hurt, however, by the federal windfall profits tax.

Although Exxon Corp. and Standard Oil Co. of California both had higher U.S. production profits, they said Monday that weak demand overseas contributed to a decline in overall third-quarter profits compared with a year earlier.

Shell Oil Co. and Atlantic Richfield Co., whose operations are more heavily dependent on the U.S. market, reported sizable profit gains for the period.

Exxon, the nation's largest company, reported a 20.7 percent drop in earnings and Standard of California posted a 15.5 percent decline. Shell said profits increased 33.4 percent and Atlantic Richfield had an 11 percent gain.

Standard of California, the fourth-largest U.S. oil company, said its foreign petroleum earnings fell 36 percent.

It said earnings for the quarter fell to $527 million, or $1.54 a share, from $624 million, or $1.82 a share, a year earlier. Revenue rose 9 percent to $11.46 billion from $10.51 billion.

For the first nine months of the year it earned $1.81 billion, or $5.29 a share, up 1 percent from the $1.79 billion, or $5.22 a share, earned in the same period last year. Revenues rose 9 percent to $34.42 billion from $31.60 billion.

Exxon said its earnings for the third quarter dropped to $1.08 billion, or $1.25 a share, from $1.36 billion, or $1.56 a share, in last year's third quarter. Revenues rose 3 percent to $27.61 billion from $26.75 billion. It was Exxon's weakest third quarter since 1978.

Clifton Garvin Jr., Exxon's chairman, said profits from worldwide refining and marketing plunged 38 percent, with overseas earnings falling to $264 million from $404 million.

For the first nine months of the year, Exxon earned $4.5 billion, or $5.21 a share, on revenue of $85.41 billion. That profit is 4.4 percent higher than in the first nine months of last year, when Exxon earned $4.31 billion, or $4.94 a share, on revenue of $80.62 billion, the company said.

Atlantic Richfield, ranked seventh largest among U.S. oil companies, said third-quarter profits rose to $433.5 million, or $1.73 a share, from $389.7 million, or $1.57 a share, last year. Revenues grew 24 percent to $6.97 billion from $5.64 billion.

Fifth edition of "bible" for gas engineers out

TULSA — The fifth revision of the Engineering Data Book (in English units) has just been published by Gas Producers Suppliers Association.

Since 1935 when it first appeared, over 240,000 copies of the book have been sold. The Engineering Data Book is widely regarded as the "bible" of process engineers and plant management in the gas and light hydrocarbon processing industries.

The nineth edition of the English-unit Data Book, originally published in 1972, was the first issue of the book in loose-leaf form. Since that time, the editorial review board has been able to issue biennial revisions to keep users abreast of the latest technical developments.

Principal features of the fifth revision are:

— a reorganized and expanded section on thermodyanamics

— additional and revised pressure-enthalpy diagrams

— updated physical properties

— revised control valve section

L.A. Feagan recalls Humble beginnings

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

In these days of oil shortages throughout the nation, L.A. Feagan recalls a time when the oil companies were turning down the crude.

Feagan, a spry, witty 83-year-old, used to work for the Exxon Company when it was known as Humble Pipeline. He worked at a time when everything was done by hand and wages were 45 cents an hour.

Back then, Feagan recalls starting out in 1921 for the two-year-old Humble company as a pipeline layer and truck driver working 10-hour days.

"In those days pipline was being laid across ranches in Crane County," he remembered. "There were no facilities. We just set up camps with tents for sleeping and a main tent for the kitchen and dining area."

He reminisced about laying pipe from Crane to McCamey down to Corpus Christi.

"I've seen a lot of things happen over the years," he said. I became a commissary clerk in 1926 for the oil camps — bought groceries for 150 to 200 people."

He said there were no towns across the mesquite-covered plains where the oil was discovered so the oil companies "set up shop" with the best they had. The tent housing was portable and moved in the direction of the pipeline.

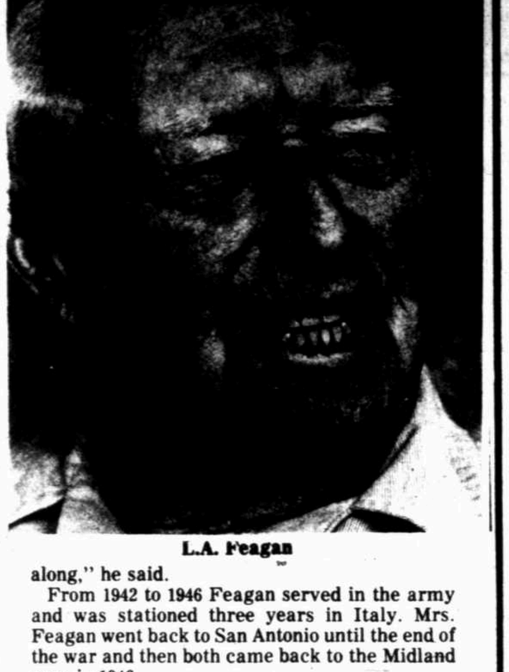
"I was what they called back then a purchasing agent. As the pipeline moved, so did the people. I bought materials and food as part of my job on the main line construction," he said.

And in 1927, after he had become a chief commissary clerk working in the San Antonio area, Feagan said "he fell in love."

"I met Mrs. Feagan when I was 27. She didn't know what a pipeliner was, so she married me," he quipped. "It must have been love at first sight — we were married after knowing each other three weeks."

The company finished the main line in 1928 and Feagan was transferred to Iraan. He was now a gauger, where he prepared the oil for pipeline testing. In the next ten years, Feagan continued as a gauger, moving again to an "itty-bitty town called Odessa."

"We lived on the North Cowden Ranch, 18 miles north of Odessa until World War II came along," he said.



L.A. Feagan

From 1942 to 1946 Feagan served in the army and was stationed three years in Italy. Mrs. Feagan went back to San Antonio until the end of the war and then both came back to the Midland area in 1946.

Feagan returned to Humble as a chief gauger moving on as an oil movement coordinator. He said this job is what he retired as from Humble.

"An oil movement coordinator is responsible for the oil being gathered in the fields and transported to the refinery," he said.

After retiring from Humble in 1963, Feagan continued working in the oil industry. He worked as a crude oil representative for the next 13 years in West Texas, retiring from the oil industry in 1980.

Leukemia halted in study

Copley News Service

Researchers for the first time have been able to stop a deadly form of leukemia in identical twins by transplanting bone marrow from the healthy twin to the sick one.

Dr. Alexander Fefer, a member of the University of Washington bone marrow transplant team, reported the study of 12 patients with chronic myelogenous leukemia at the Scripps Memorial Hospital Cancer Symposium in San Diego, Calif..

In the study, eight of the 12 patients have been totally free of the disease for at least 14 months. Three have remained in remission for more than four years.

Fefer said in an interview that nothing done in the last 50 years has significantly prolonged survival of persons with chronic myelogenous leukemia (CML) because nothing has altered the development of the eventual acute phase of the disease.

The acute phase, called a blast crisis, is among the worst of all leukemias, Fefer said. "It doesn't respond to anything," he said. "It is a miserable disease."

U.S. stripper production likely to climb

HOUSTON — Significant gains in stripper oil well production in the United States are likely to continue, now that Congress has amended the so-called oil windfall profit tax of 1980.

A stipper well is one producing ten barrels or less per day. Vockel, in an address at the Association's annual meeting recently held in Houston, said stripper oil production in 1980 increased by almost seven million barrels over the 1979 output. Total produetion last was 401 million barrels from 395,176 stripper wells.

However, Vockel said, a slowdown had begun to develop as a result of the impact of the 1980 tax, which amounted to about $6 a barrel on crude oil produced by independents and about $12 a barrel on stripper oil produced by integrated companies.

Congressional action in late July of this year exempting independent producers from the tax, effective Jan. 1, 1983, will help restore stripper well activity to peak levels, Vockel said.

He said the exemption will restore almost $1 billion annually in gross revenue to independent producers and this amunt, plowed back into exxploration and production, will likely result in greater production in the years ahead.

RRC approves Southern Union gas rate

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Railroad Commission recently approved a gas rate settlement reached by Southern Union Gas Co., Austin and the nearby communities of Sunset Valley, Westlake Hills and Rollingwood.

Under terms of the settlement, the commission said, an average monthly residential bill for 6,000 cubic feet of gas would increase by approximately 74 cents.

The settlement was reached after Southern Union proposed a rate increase on Sept. 2, 1980, and the cities voted to grant less than the utility wanted.

Dawson fulfills geophysical dreams

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

L. Decker Dawson planned to become a top-notch civil engineer. Instead, he wound up in the field of geophysics with his successful company.

L. Decker Dawson dreamed he was "going to build all the bridges and dams" in this world when he graduated from college with a degree in civil engineering. But by the time he felt the cold, dry parchment in his hand, no one needed a civil engineer.

Dawson, a native of Tulsa, Okla., looked around and saw that oil companies were begging for people to go into the field of geophysics. Anyone with a background in engineering or math and was willing to learn, the companies were willing to train. Dawson decided to give it a try and today he owns the successful Dawson Geophysical Co. at 208 S. Marienfeld St.

His dreams of being a civil engineer have been pushed aside over the years as Dawson has learned the ups and downs, ins and outs of geophysics, utilizing the latest innovations to keep his company a jump ahead of the competition.

Magnolia Petroleum Co., a division of Mobil Oil, was his first employer and also teacher. After a stint with the Seabees in World War II, Dawson returned to Tulsa and the Republic Exploration Co.

HE RECEIVED a couple of raises "and I thought I was a real promising, bright, young geophysicist." But after arriving in Fort Stockton on New Year's Day in 1947, the 26-year-old Oklahoman began to wonder what he had done wrong to be sent to such a desolate place in West Texas.

"After I'd been in West Texas a year, they couldn't get me away," he said with a laugh.

Dawson worked with Republic until May 1952, when he decided to move out and start his own firm. By then he was in Midland and had climbed a few more rungs up the ladder to the status of supervisor.

"It was something I'd wanted to do," Dawson said of the move into his own business. "I thought I was sufficiently experienced. But I found out in a hurry a lot that I didn't know.

"I was young enough that if things didn't go well, I would make another start," he said of his optimism at that time.

The early 1950s were a boom time for Midland, similar to what the Tall City is experiencing today. With the oil and natural gas businesses expanding, "there was a demand at that time for seismic services. There was lots of work to do."

In simple terms, his work involves putting energy into the ground and recording the echoes that bounce back to the surface. It's "subsurface photography," Dawson said.

Unknowingly, he uses a play on words when describing the work. "Geophysics is a quiet thing. We don't drill the wells and produce the oil and gas."

BUT GETTING seismic data hasn't been a quiet procedure as the energy put into the ground produces a noise for the geophysicists to record the echos. In the 1950s, the energy source was dynamite, said Dawson. Today, it's vibrators or gas guns.

While it's the big discoveries which make the news, these companies wouldn't know where to begin drilling without that geophysical data which Dawson's company provides.

Between oil booms, technology has changed "two revolutions," he noted in explaining further the differences between the times.

"We have changed from start to finish," he said, with the energy source being only the beginning of the innovations.

To process that data, his company now utilizes computers. "Years ago, we didn't have computers. They didn't make them then. The data was photographic records and we made our interpretations from those.

"The field data today is on a computer tape that is brought to Midland or our Denver office. There is a great deal of refining the information," he said.

And the biggest difference between the 1950s oil boom and today is the amount of dollars spent in the geophysics business.

"The dollars today are just staggering. There's at least 10 times the number of dollars now," said Dawson.

UNTIL NOW, the last big year for seismic crews was in 1952 when 660 crews were reported searching for oil and gas. But exploration began dropping and dipped to a low of about 190 crews in the United States in 1970. Not until this year has the number surpassed that 1952 record, and Dawson noted that 735 crews are reported this year to date.

The decade of the '60s was a downhill ride for the oil industry and also for geophysicists as cheap imported oil replaced the need to search for more energy in the U.S. In 1960, Dawson built his new office at 208 S. Marienfeld St., not knowing what lay ahead for the industry.

"But we did all right in those terrible years. The main thing is that we kept up with technology," Dawson said. "We survived, but we were one of only about a dozen companies in the country that survived that period." Other small companies had to merge or shut down.

With the increased business today, there are between 50 and 100 companies in the country.

Looking back on those lean years, Dawson remembered that he and some friends used to jokingly toast the day when oil was $5 a barrel and natural gas cost $1 for 1,000 cubic feet. At that time, oil was selling for $2.50 to $3 a barrel and gas for 14 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

"IT SOUNDED funny to us then," he said of the toast.

As the industry began to recover in the early 1970s, so did the prices. Gas now sells for as high as $8 per 1,000 cubic feet and oil for $30 to $35 per barrel, said Dawson.

With Midland's economy dependent upon the oil industry, the Slow Sixties spelled disaster for the city. But Dawson never lost hope that the city would recover. It was toward the end of the period — in 1969 — that Dawson served as president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

"I've always been a Midland booster. I knew this day was coming," he said of the current boom. "I knew of the reserves here in the Permian Basin. I knew it would be just a matter of time before we got after development."

Gas prices began to ease upward in 1970 and 1971 saw a spark of interest in more exploration as the number of seismic crews increased from its record low. "Natural gas couldn't be imported easily," Dawson explained, "and we were running low on gas."

Then came the oil embargo by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries as the Arabs became hungry for more money, according to Dawson.

That was the dawn of a new age in the petroleum industry.

The rush is on to find and pull petroleum out of the earth. According to Dawson, there's enough oil and gas to keep the world running to at least the year 2050.

"THE THING that is so difficult is getting it out of the ground," he said. "We only get 25 to 50 percent of the oil and gas in these fields that are already producing.

"A big part of the activity going on now in Midland is people trying to find ways to get the already-discovered petroleum out of the ground." Midland's future is ensured, he added, with all the oil that still sits underground in this area.

Looking back on those days in the early 1970s when the government called for conservation, Dawson said, "The industry kept telling the government there was oil and gas in the ground, but there just was no incentive to get it out."

Recently, price controls have been coming off. And although the consumers pay more, the companies

Humble move sparked '35 boom

Ralph Geisler, who retired as manager of the Petroleum Building 14 years ago, stands beside a Rolls Royce he's rebuilding in a shop behind his westside home. Geisler was associated with the Petroleum Building for 40 years and saw Midland rise from obscurity to its present status as headquarters city of the Permian Basin Empire.

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

The move by the McCamey-based Humble Oil Co. to Midland in 1935 sparked other oil companies to follow suit, and the city wasn't long in becoming known as "Headquarters City of the Permian Basin Empire."

"Humble needed the brokers that lived here," said 80-year-old Ralph Geisler, who was associated with and managed the Petroleum Building in downtown Midland for 40 years.

Some things never change, and there was a housing shortage even then in Midland. As a result, Humble sold their camp houses in McCamey to individuals who would move them here. The houses would then either be sold or rented to Humble employees. The operation was coordinated by the Chamber of Commerce working with various banks in the city.

"Humble couldn't sell the houses directly to their employees," said Geisler, "because they'd simply stay in McCamey.

"Once Humble (came to Midland), they were in the driver's seat for good oil deals. This attracted other oil companies and the Petroleum Building was filled up within a year of Humble moving here.

"Shell Oil, Standard, Skelly, Atlantic — all the major oil companies were in the building. They soon outgrew it and began (constructing) their own buildings."

Geisler is from Detroit and moved here from Florida in 1927 — two years before the official opening of the Petroleum Bulding on July 4, 1929. The spired structure still stands and was the brainchild of a now dead Montana legislator by the name of Senator T.S. Hogan.

According to Geisler, Hogan had a background in the oil business and felt Midland had a bright future in oil — especially with the advent of Santa Rita No. 1 the morning of May, 28, 1923, at Big Lake.

The major finds which took place in the Permian Basin during that era were overshadowed by even more dramatic discoveries in East Texas, however, and the oil companies were moving there. Hogan lost the Petroleum Building to East Coast bankers who had financed the operation

That was about 1931. But 1935 and Humble Oil came along and Midland began building its empire in earnest.

"There were a lot of headaches," said Geisler. "If it wasn't the Depression, it was new bosses. But I was young and could cover a lot of territory. They let me run (the Petroleum Building) like it was my own. All I did was send in monthly reports."

Geisler married Eulalia Whitefield in her Midland home, which is now the site of The Reporter-Telegram building. The couple was married Dec. 19, 1934, and had two boys — one of whom is Dallas heart and chest surgeon Dr. Gerald Geisler.

Their other son, Gene, was killed in an automobile accident 21 years ago. He was 22 at the time and was on his way to Chicago with the famous Scarab Racing Team when the highway crash occurred. He was a mechanic for the team, whose cars were built and raced by the late Lance Reventlow, son of actress Betty Hutton.

Geisler retired as manager of the Petroleum Building in 1967. Having grown up in Detroit, he had a natural affinity for cars and set up a shop in his backyard, where he designs and builds Excaliburs and replicas of Rolls Royces.

"I buy old cars, throw the bodies away and start from the chassis up," said Geisler.

He's now customizing a 1936 Roll Royce into a roadster and also has a 1921 Rolls Silver Ghost in his garage. That high-roofed classic came from Harrah's Collection in Reno, has a mere 20,000 miles on it and will be restored and shown as an original car.

"It runs beautifully," said Geisler.

Revenues up

American Well Servicing Corporation recently said "substantial" revenue gains should be made in 1982 from planned growth of the compnay's workover rig fleet in West Texas and additions to existing pipeline transmission systems.

George S. Loch, chairman and chief executive officer of the Dallas-based, diversified energy company, made the projection at a meeting of securities dealers and private investors. He idicated average monthly revenues of approximately $600,000.

Forest Service recommends oil, gas leases

By D. TREADWELL
L.A. Times

WASHINGTON — In an action certain to stir a new controversy over the use of some of the nation's most beautiful wilderness areas, the U.S. Forest Service has recommended approval of 257 oil and gas leases in the 2-million-acre Los Padres National Forest in California, including part of the rugged Big Sur coast.

The recommendations, contained in a draft environmental assessment obtained Thursday by the Los Angeles Times, are subject to further revision and public comment before they become final. But Forest Service officials said they expect to complete action on the proposal by next March.

Since the leases involve oil and gas exploration, the recommendations by the Forest Service, which is part of the Agriculture Department, must also be approved by the Interior Department. Interior Secretary James G. Watt has favored similar proposals in the past.

Even before the Forest Service recommendations become final, politicians and environmentalists have begun mounting a campaign that promises to be as intense as the one against offshore drilling in northern California.

The leases, which total 180,000 acres, include seven sites on two of the three designated wilderness areas within the national forest: the 165,000-acre Ventana wilderness area and the 22,000-acre Santa Lucia wilderness area. The Ventana area protects the steep and rugged mountains that provide a backdrop for the Big Sur coast.

"This is a nightmarish proposal,"SSen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said. "It would destroy two California wildernesses and Big Sur, a stretch of some of the most magnificent coastline in the world."

Cranston said that he would urge President Reagan to take the matter out of the hands of the Interior Department and require that any decision on whether to proceed with the proposal be made at the White House level.

Charles M. Clusen, consrevation director of the Wilderness Society, said, "We're not opposed to all leasing in the Los Padres. There are oil fields there that may be tapped in an environmentally sound manner to meet the nation's energy needs. But we're concerned that a reasonable balance be struck."

Harmon Kallman, a spokesman for Watt, pointed to the tentative nature of the recommmendations and said of critics of the lease proposal, "I hope they hold their fire till they see the whites of somebody's eyes. There's been a great rush to judgment about what the secretary's going to do before he does it."

Kallman said that Watt is "a whole lot more careful than some people give him credit for" and would make a case-by-case analysis of the Forest Service recommendations. "He's not going to let anybody's ideology, including his own, get in the way of his legal rights as secretary," Kallman said.

Earlier this year, in his first major policy setback, Watt was forced to back down from recommending oil drilling off the coast of California.

Midland has changed radically since Ed S. Hitchcock was working the oil fields almost 50 years ago. "Everybody was broke (in the 1930s). You couldn't find a job."

It was a different place for Hitchcock

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

For Ed S. Hitchcock, work in the oil patch is relegated to those days of yesteryear.

"I worked in the oil field practically all my life," recalled Hitchcock. "In fact, all my life."

He was drilling, pumping and plugging wells back when Ross Sterling was governor and oil was 10 cents a barrel and gasoline went for two bits.

But those were the days when the Buffalo nickel would buy a real nickel's worth of goods, a Mercury dime was made of silver, the Walking Liberty half-dollar could do some talking, and Midland was a little ol' cowtown which had but a glimmer of getting bigger.

The town has changed, as have the techniques of probing for and pumping oil. And the price of oil, which bottomed-out at a dime a barrel in the early '30s, today peaks out at about $35 a barrel.

"I'm retired," Hitchcock said with nary a regret, although he bowed out of the oil business before oil shot up from $3.50 a barrel to 10 times that. "When I sold out (in 1973), oil was $3.50 a barrel. I quit this working," though he still keeps tabs on his producing interest and does some consulting work.

Hitchcock, who is nearing 73, started out as a derrick hand and worked up the derrick from there.

"I done everything there is to do, I guess, except to be a driller."

Before he got himself firmly embedded in the oil field, Hitchcock gave schooling a whirl. He studied geology and petroleum engineering at the University of Oklahoma, quit that and then enrolled at the old El Paso School of Mines. "I decided I wanted to learn something about mining," he explained."

Hitchcock went farther west in 1932 as a pumper in the Leck Field 18 miles north of Wink. With him was his father, Ed C. Hitchcock, who had been a driller at Ranger, a tool pusher in Breckenridge and Cisco, and then was superintendent of operations in the Waggoner Field south of Vernon.

"The Wink boom was already over," Hitchcock recalled. "Everything at that time was pretty quiet. Most of the wells in Wink were flowing. They were flaring gas. It's a damn shame."

Today, gas from wells is coveted as much as the black gold called oil. It's no longer wasted.

"It turned out to be right in the heart (of the field). We hit gas and blew the tools out of the hole, so we decided there was too much gas to use the cable tool." In turn, they went to East Texas, which was in an oil boom era, and bought a rotary rig to finish the job.

In the past 40 to 50 years, the rotary rig largely has replaced the cable-tool rig.

"Today, there's not men smart enough to operate the cable-tool rig," surmised Hitchcock, who noted that the cable-tool operator has to have that sense and timing to know just how to get the bit to bite deep into the earth.

The city and the West Texas scene have changed radically since Hitchcock was working in the oil fields almost 50 years ago.

"Everybody was broke (at one time in the 1930s). You couldn't find a job." But he was a survivor; Hitchcock latched onto a $100-a-month oil field job. That was good money then.

Hitchcock did well in the oil field, sold out in '73 and maintains an office in the downtown One Marienfeld Place to keep track of his oil interests.

"I've seen this country come from nothing," he said, to a boom-again city which has developed into the Permian Basin petroleum metropolis.

Though he could be far richer had he not sold out in '73 just before oil prices went to the moon and back, Hitchcock is comfortable with life.

DALLAS (AP) — Like some Biblical plague of centuries past, vicious fire ants are building their foot-high nests above ground, trying to escape soil made sodden by Texas' recent torrential rains.

"They have a hell of a temper, and their sting can be life-threatening," Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown said in a recent interview from Austin. "We feel that some cases of heart attack may have come from fire ant stings."

The tenacious red insect invaded the United States from South America in the late 1930s. "They were introduced accidentally at Mobile, Ala. and now cover 230 million acres over nine Southern states," Brown said.

THE FIRE ANTS have been spreading south-southwesterly at a rate of 25 to 30 miles a year, Brown said. They reached Texas in 1956 and now cover about 105 of the 254 counties in the Lone Star State.

"This year's outbreak is the worst ever in Texas, because of the rain," Brown said. "We have a real war here — and the ants are winning."

So far, four chemical-control agents have been developed to fight the fire ant: Heptachlor, Mirex, Ferriamicide and AMDRO. But, Brown said, pressure from environmentalists led to the banning of the first two and federal refusal to certify the third.

"We have to have an understanding by the public that we've got to fight these insects or they'll win," Brown said, "and we need a crash program of continued research to find a better way to control them."

Brad Vinson, an entomology professor at Texas A&M University, said the imported fire ants — "solenopsis invicta" — pack a double-whammy in their tiny stingers.

"THERE IS A potent alkaloid compound in their venom which causes pustules," Vinson said. "But they also have a protein that can cause shock in some people who are extremely sensitive to the protein."

Such people could die from respiratory failure after being bitten by just one fire ant, Vinson said. Scientists believe that 1 percent of the population could have this extreme reaction to the stings.

"The ants are very protective of their mounds and defensive of their food supplies," he said. "They will sting if you disturb them or get between them and their food."

The fire ants latch onto their victims with their jaws and sting repeatedly, said Mark Trostle, a fire ant specialist with the state agriculture department. He recommended baking soda paste to ease the pain of the pustules. But if victims react violently to the protein in the venom, only hospital treatment can save them, Vinson said.

"They build mounds about a foot and a half in diameter and a foot high. When they dry out they get just like concrete and can damage agricultural machinery," Brown said.

EACH YEAR, THE state spends hundreds of thousands of dollars trying to find ways to stop the spread of the pests.

"We're putting about $200,000 a year from my department into research at A&M and the same amount at Texas Tech — and we're finding out more about the imported fire ant all the time," Brown said.

Scientists have learned that the ants spread by riding everything from wind currents to pickups.

"The males and females fly hundreds of feet into the air to mate," Vinson said. The females then drift down, catching a lift on a car or truck, and eventually dig into the dirt to start a new colony.

The federal and state departments of agriculture have quarantined the infested areas. Shipments of flowers, shrubs and heavy earthmoving equipment are supposed to be inspected to make sure the ants aren't aboard, Trostle said. But, he added, the quarantine has been hampered by too few inspectors and a willful or ignorant lack of compliance with the restrictions.

"They're still spreading. We've added five more Texas counties in the last month," Trostle said.

THE ONLY EFFECTIVE bait officials recommend is AMDRO, a compound of corn grit soaked with soybean oil and a slow acting poison. Since the ants are voracious eaters, they grab the bait and take it back to the nest, where they feed it to their queen.

Aerial applications are the most effective, Trostle said: "AMDRO can be dropped from an airplane, bounce three times and the ants grab it right away and haul it home."

The state agriculture department plans to provide financial help and expertise to counties needing AMDRO treatments.

"If the landowners will put up a dollar an acre for an aerial treatment program, the state and federal governments will put up the other three dollars required," Trostle said.

Leif Olson, 2208 Bedford Drive, is a pioneer drilling contractor who moved to Big Spring in 1927 with four rigs and ended up staying in the Basin through all the ups and downs.

Leif Olson's seen ups and downs of oil business

By BILL MODISETT
Staff Writer

On Thanksgiving Day of 1927, Leif Olson brought four drilling rigs to Howard County and launched what eventually became a lifetime affair with the West Texas oil industry.

He didn't know at that time that it would be a lifetime affair, though. In fact, a year later, Olson, now a Midland resident, packed up and left the West Texas area.

Remembering the oil boom of that day, Olson said, "Everything got quiet and it died." The East Texas oil boom was happening then, Olson recalls, and it hurt the West Texas oil industry.

Olson has lived through the ups and downs of the West Texas oil business. He's seen the good times and the bad. "It's a cycle and we've seen the ups and downs," the pioneer drilling contractor remembered.

Born in Minnesota 79 years ago, Olson and his brothers came to Texas to get into the oil business. "We starved to death so we came down here," he said in his good natured way, recalling the past.

In 1922 he joined Lloyd Noble's Noble Drilling Co. in Ardmore, Okla. A year later, Olson said, the partnership that spawned Noble-Olson Drilling Co. came about. That lasted until 1930 when the Noble and Olson concerns split.

Olson was involved with several business interests until 1951 when he and his brother formed L.H. and S.A. Olson Drilling Co. in Midland. They stayed in operation here until 1957 when another "downturn" in the oil business came along.

They chose to get out at that time. But Olson stayed here because after all the years invested in the oil business here, Midland was home.

That last downturn in the oil business wasn't the last to come along and there may be more, Olson noted. He has seen the phenomenal growth of Midland and the low points and he knows the cycle. But he acknowledges that the current growth trend is like nothing seen before here.

And if another downturn comes, it likely won't be like the ones that came before, Olson said. The reason is the booming secondary recovery in this region. "I think it'll keep it going for years and years," Olson said.

It's really a new ballgame in the Permian Basin now, he noted. Even Olson, a man who has lived the ups and downs of the Permian Basin oil industry, can't say when a new downturn will come or how severe it would be.

"This thing has changed completely and there's so much money in here. Who knows?"

Santa Fe funds frozen

By MARTHA M. HAMILTON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — A federal judge Monday froze more than $5 million in profits the Securities and Exchange Commission claims resulted from the illegal use of insider information about the takeover of Santa Fe International Corp. by the state-owned Kuwait Petroleum Corp.

Hours later the SEC named one of the individuals suspected in the profits scheme — Faisal Al Massoud Al Fuhaid, a Kuwait resident and individual investor in Santa Fe. The SEC also indicated that its investigation covers an additional eight investment accounts in Kuwait and six more in London.

An attorney for the Kuwait Petroleum Corp. said that Fuhaid has no connection with the government-controlled firm and a Santa Fe official said he had never heard the name. Fuhaid is known at the Kuwait Embassy, but was described as "a private businessman, not one of the heavies."

U.S. District Court Judge William Conner in New York stepped into the investigation Monday morning at the federal government's request to prevent the possible transfer of illegal funds out of the country and out of the government's legal reach.

Named in the original SEC complaint w3re several Swiss banks and brokerage firms that handled the transactions that are now under federal investigation. The identity of some of those investors is apparently cloaked in the secrecy afforded by Swiss bank accounts.

The SEC action appears to be part of a new government effort to make sure that foreign accounts are not used successfully as a front for illegal investor activity.

The SEC charged in its request for a temporary restraining order that these unknown investors realized a potential profit of approximately $5.2 million on an initial investment of $344,691 used to purchase Santa Fe stock and stock options in advance of the Oct. 5 announcement of the sale.

The SEC is investigating purchases of approximately 35,000 shares of Santa Fe stock and 3,000 option contracts exercisable for an additional 300,000 shares. The options contracts were priced so that they appeared practically worthless at the time of their purchase, but they became extremely valuable after the announcement of the sale, the SEC complaint noted.

"Certain persons, whose identities are being withheld by their agents on a claim of Swiss bank secrecy, purchased Santa Fe securities in significant quantities based on material, non-public information," the SEC said in papers filed in U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York. The SEC said its case rests on, among other things, "the amount, timing and type of transactions effected and upon the attempt of the purchasers to remain secret and unknown."

By the end of the day at least some of the mystery surrounding the identity of those purchasers appeared to be dissovling. The SEC named Fusaid, who apparently purchased 500 options contracts, and the court amended its temporary restraining order to freeze his accounts at Merrill Lynch. The judge also ordered Merrill Lynch to provide 48-hour notice of any attempt to transfer money from the additional Kuwait and London accounts.

The customers for those accounts were unnamed, but the action indicated that the SEC knows the identity of the individual investors.

L. Decker Dawson fulfills geophysical dreams

Dawson feels the low prices in the 1960s for oil and gas were "artificially low."

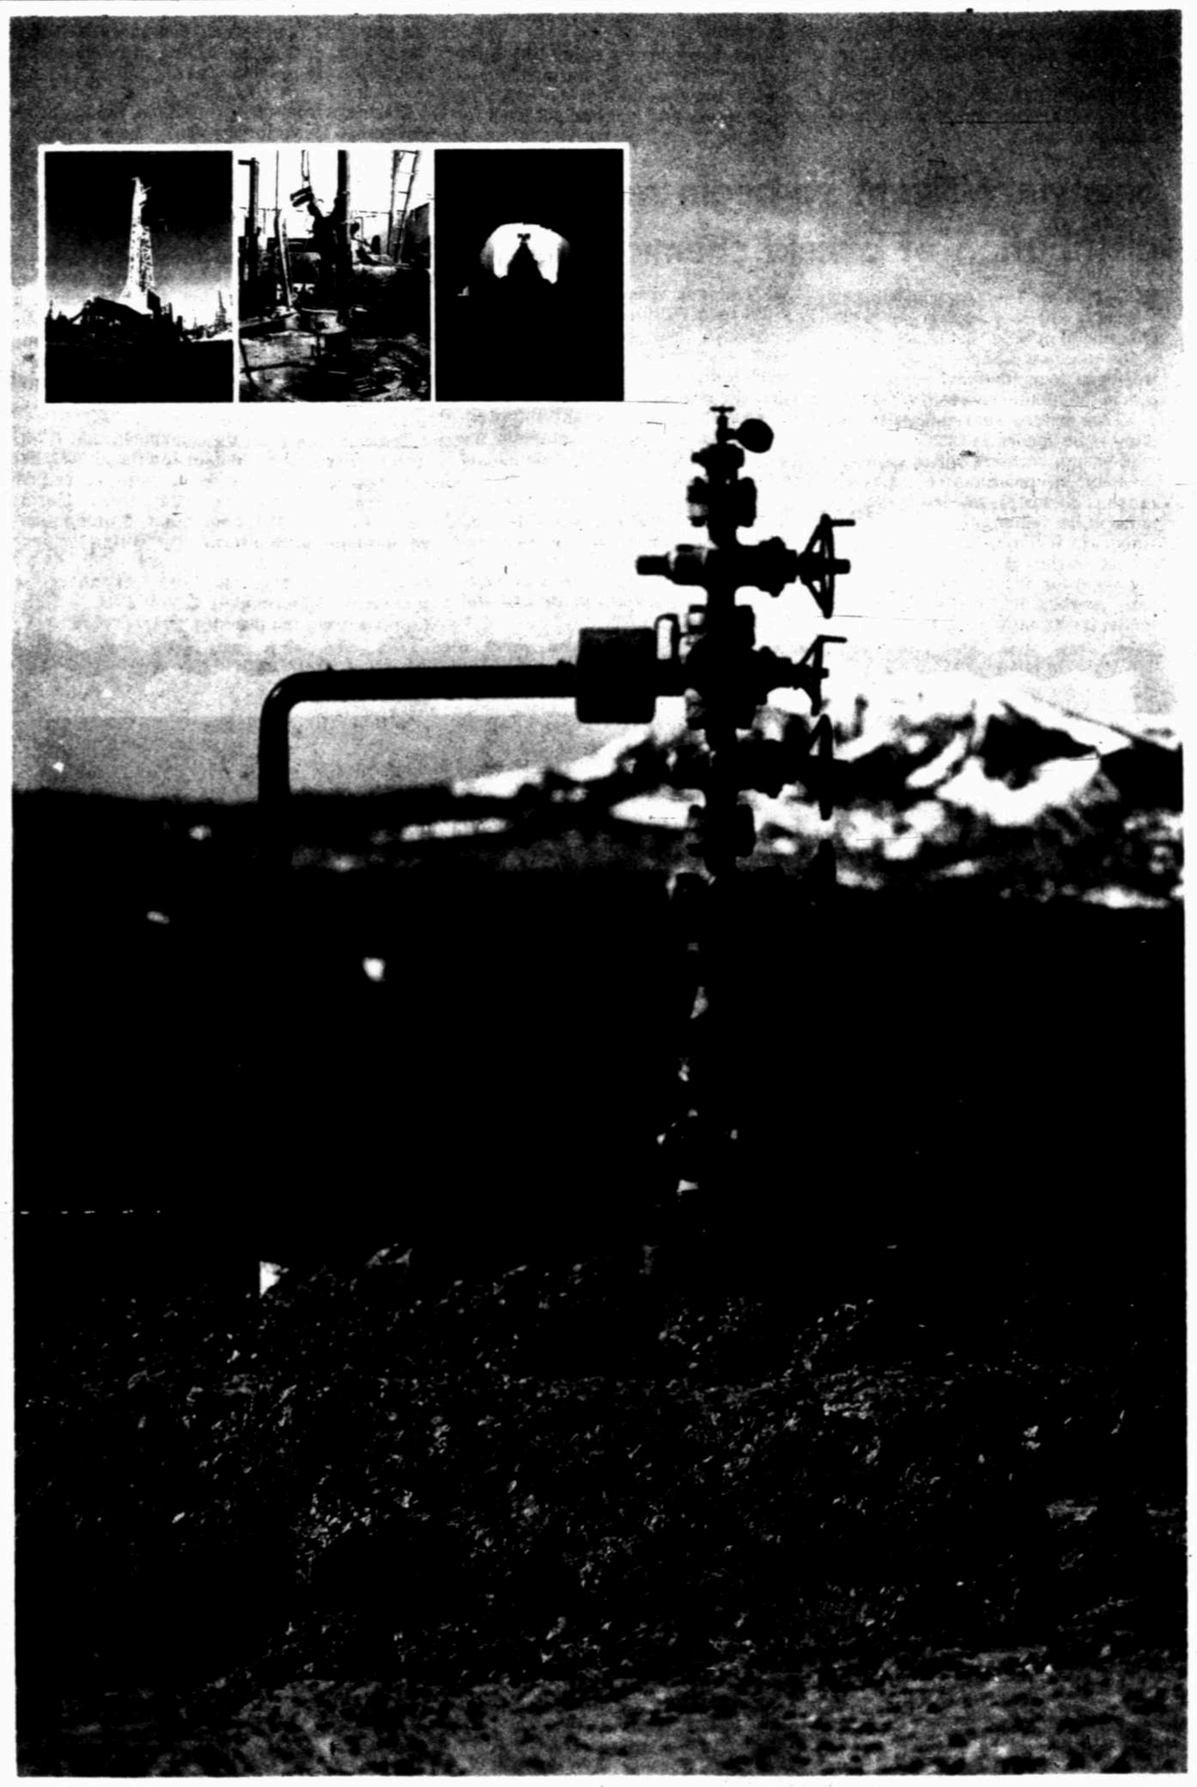
And if someone had told him during the 1960s that gasoline would cost more than $1 a gallon today, "I would have said, 'I hope so.' It was too cheap in those days."

The boom today has produced a different sort of problem for Dawson and his company, and that's trained employees.

The geophysics business consists of the old-timers who started in the late 1940s and are looking to retirement in a few years and the young ones right out of college. The middle-agers went into other fields.

Dawson has gone the full circle — from young learner to business owner to teacher. For now it is Dawson, the oldtimer, who is looking for those youngtimers willing to learn.

MEETING THE CHALLENGES OF TODAY, TO PROVIDE ENERGY FOR TOMORROW.



At Tom Brown, Inc. we're committed to performing a major role in the development of oil and gas in the United States. The vital foundation of the company's continuing growth is the skill and dedication of over 1,300 employees whose activities contribute to the nation's expanding energy needs.

We have a strong, nationwide exploration and development program and, with 30 rigs, supply contract drilling services to major and independent producers of oil and gas. Our wholly-owned subsidiary, Oncor Corporation, manufactures and markets downhole drilling tools and is currently the second largest manufacturer of drill collars in the free world.

McKibbin recalls 'send Donald' days of 1929

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Donald McKibbin said he would have never been exposed to the diversification of the oil industry if he had not been young and single when he began at Humble Oil and Refinery Company in Houston in 1929.

"I was the only young, single man working in the civil engineer department of 18 people and anytime the company wanted a car transported in Texas, Louisiana or New Mexico, or they ran short on something, it was 'send Donald,' " McKibbin said.

McKibbin started out as a draftsman at a time when there were no county or district maps for the Humble company, now known as the Exxon Corporation.

"Oil wasn't discovered where the towns were," he said. "A map took about five years to complete. You had to go out and survey the land, locate the wells, roads and finally build camps.

McKibbin, by this time, had married and he and his new bride moved out to West Texas — Midland — in 1939.

"It was a good break to come out here," he said. "Everything had to be put down on paper so everytime that an oil field was found, I had a finger in it."

"Sometimes the car would sit for weeks," he said. "We'd walk to church, the picture show and the store."

"Thank God for the picture show," McKibbin said. "That's all there was."

However, McKibbin said, later on, the old Scharbauer Hotel would have a dance a month.

"There was a membership, anyone could join," he recalled. "We used to all get together, have big meals, just a good ol' time."

McKibbin recalled that Midland's downtown area only had one building in those early days when he first came to Midland — the Petroleum Building, built by T.S. Hogan in the 1920s. It was the talk of West Texas.

"People called it the Shell building because it brought in the oil companies. It was a godsend. You could see it 20 miles or so out of town. Just this flat land and then there it stood in the middle of nowhere."

And, according to McKibbin, "the buildings were the main reason Midland is like it is today," because of the needed office space.

He added that Hogan was ahead of his time constructing the Petroleum Building. The building had many uses over the years. During the Depression hay was stored in it. And when the companies started to look for office space in Midland, it was one of the first buildings to have air conditioning — but only on two floors occupied by Humble.

McKibbin spent 42 years with Humble and retired as a chief draftsman in 1969. Throughout those years he said that loyalty and gratitude toward the company was on the top of his list. He reflected back to the 1950s when he felt "people were appreciative of their jobs. Not like now, where you decide 'I don't want to work here,' and cross the street or go next door and get another job that day," he said.

Mrs. McKibbin also expressed loyalty. She also worked for Humble — for 25 years.

Both retired, they enjoy life to the fullest. They travel worldwide and agree they would not be enjoying themselves now if it had not been for Humble.

Sherwin-Williams to begin regional distribution of oilfield chemicals

HOUSTON — The Sherwin-Williams Company will soon begin regional distribution of oilfield chemicals.

The company's Sherwell operations will open four chemical supply centers in the Anadarko Basin of Oklahoma-Teas before year-end, with two more to be opened in 1982.

The supply centers will stock some 75 different products, a complete range of chemicals needed in drilling muds in the region.

Sherwin-Williams is a producer of ground barite, the principal weighting agent for drilling mud. The company markets its own brand of bentonite, the mineral used most often in thickening or viscosifying the mud.

Sherwin-Williams also produces several oilfield specialty chemicals such as corrosion inhibitors, drilling mud additives and sour gas scavengers for mud and gas treating.

In addition, the company will produce chemicals used to complete the well after drilling to stimulate oil and gas production.

Oilfield mud companies formulate the mud and monitor and adjust its composition during drilling. Sherwin-Williams has marketed its products to mud companies nationally and internationally for several years and will continue to do so.

Dorchester announces all-time high revenues

Dorchester Gas Corporation has announced that, for the year ended Aug. 31, gross revenues reached an all time high of $712,033,000. Earnings were $31,287,000, or $1.72 per share compared to earnings of $34,919,000, or $1.91 per share on revenues of $608,760,000 for the previous year.

Earnings from oil, gas and gas liquids production set record levels for the year. These profits largely offset sharply reduced earnings from refining operations, which showed only a modest profit for the year after contributing 27 percent of the company's total operating income during the previous year.

The company expects fiscal 1982 to show a substantial improvement with earnings from oil, gas and gas liquids production again reaching record levels as a result of greater emphasis on exploration and production activities. In addition, the company's unprofitable chemical operations were sold during the year and coal losses are expected to be materially reduced as production levels increase.

The company recently announced that it has doubled its exploration budget for fiscal 1982 and will concentrate more heavily on acreage acquisitions and drilling in high potential areas. Earlier the company reported it had replaced production of its oil, gas and gas liquids reserves during the year even though production was at record levels. As a result future net revenues from the company's reserves increased approximately $700 million, a 28 percent increase from the previous year's value.

"A lot of good folks have a lot of good ideas; you just have to get them (people) out of the woodworks and make Midland a nicer community to live in."
— P.F. "Percy" Bridgewater

Beginnings Bridgewater's forte

Oil pioneer also city pioneer

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Preston F. "Percy" Bridgewater has been in on a lot of beginnings.

He's been in on the start of numerous civic endeavors, worked with the school board, city council and hospital officials in Midland's early days and pushed for recognition of oil pioneers and senior citizens. When the portrait of Midland is ever completed, it will include various shades of Bridgewater.

The 76-year-old Midlander grew up in Belfalls and attended one year at Howard Payne College. "I never had the money to go back," he said.

Bridgewater came to Midland in 1927 as an employee of Texas Electric Service Co. When 1934 dawned, he was ready for something new. After working with Fred Wemple, he went to Sinclair Oil. Then came his transfer into the finance world as he worked to get Midland Savings Association going. And he was successful.

By 1959, Bridgewater was looking for something more challenging. He found it in the merger of seven Texas savings and loan associations with Imperial Corp. of California and the position of heading up the Texas operations.

There came a nine-year stint on the school board, starting in 1939. Then came a two-year term on the Midland City Council from 1959 to 1960. Bridgewater had run for mayor earlier, but lost a close race to Perry Pickett.

"THEY USED to have some real knock-down, drag-outs," he said of the council meetings. "I used to say, 'Let's adjourn the meeting and let them go outside and settle it.' After it was all over, everyone was happy with the decision. Frank Thompson was mayor then. These people would deal with personal things. They'd find the darndest excuse for talking about."

The councilmen had no qualms about expressing their opinions, he recalled. Bridgewater and one of his friends on the council "were always whacking at each other." A mutual friend witnessed the verbal slapping "and asked one of us to quit since we didn't seem to get along," he chuckled.

In between those activities, Bridgewater also dabbled in the Midland Community Theatre, soaked himself in work for the Midland Chamber of Commerce and immersed himself in turning the idea for Trinity Towers into reality.

Trinity Towers, a retirement center, ranks as Bridgewater's most difficult project. "It took us from 1958 to 1960-something to build Trinity Towers. The hardest job I had was to get people interested in it."

In addition to the Kiwanis, Lions and Rotary clubs, Bridgewater worked with the Community Chest fund, which was a forerunner for United Way, the board of governors at Midland Memorial Hospital at a time the hospital was trying to raise money, and the first YMCA board when the organization was being planned.

"I've been through three dips in Midland," Bridgewater recalled of the city's history. The first downturn came in the early 1930s when the fingers of the Depression stretched out to Texas.

"THERE WERE A lot of vacant houses then. You could pick up a good house for $750 to $1,000."

At that time, Midland reported a population of 3,500, Odessa was about the same size and Big Spring was booming with 9,000 residents.

By 1936, things began to pick up again and the area started a boom in the late 1940s.

Three things contributed to making Midland the Tall City, said Bridgewater, naming the 12-story Hogan Building, Dr. Thomas's office building combined with a small hospital and the Scharbauer Hotel.

Bridgewater wasn't the type of person to make friends and then forget them after they had left Midland. Nor were some other Midlanders with that frame of mind. Because of that, the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers get-together was born.

The bi-annual pioneer celebration was formed "on the basis that people like to come back to where they started. Some of us got to talking one day about our friends and we decided to have a get-together."

That first year, several people pitched in $250 each to pay for the gathering. "We really had a crowd," Bridgewater recalled. In subsequent years, the idea jelled into a formal organization.

Over the years, the hours Bridgewater donated to organizations pyramided into hundreds of hours. Testifying to his service is one wall of his office which is covered with proclamations, photos and plaques.

"I just wanted to accomplish something that people could enjoy later," explained Bridgewater of his work. "Midland has been nice to me and so I give it some of my time.

"A LOT OF PEOPLE like to reap the good things, but not put any effort out," he philosophized. "A lot of good folks have a lot of good ideas; you just have to get them (people) out of the woodworks and make Midland a nicer community to live in."

In his semi-retirement, Bridgewater enjoys traveling and will go almost anywhere at least once. He went to England in 1952 for Queen Elizabeth's coronation, and returned a few years ago for her Silver Anniversary.

"If I live long enough, I'll buy a ticket and fly to the moon. I'll try anything once," he laughed.

Looking back on more than 50 years in Midland, the white-haired Bridgewater remembered that the men who came out to the oil fields in the early days had to learn the business the hard way.

"Today, you have to know a lot to drill a well," he said, adding that college education is good but nothing can substitute for work experience.

"I think a lot of times there may be too much emphasis on education. You need to get some experience."

Bridgewater plans on making sure the younger generation learns its lessons. "I've got to hang around another 10 to 15 years to see how these young people handle the business," he said with a smile.

Tallest building planned

CHICAGO (AP) — A $1.25 billion skyscraper almost 900 feet higher than the world's tallest building is not a pie-in-the-sky idea — an architectural firm is planning construction of a 169-story colossus, according to published reports.

The Chicago Tribune attributed to sources its story that Skidmore, Owings & Merrill is designing a 2,300-foot skyscraper, standing almost 900 feet above the Sears Tower, the world's tallest building.

The Tribune said Monday that Skidmore — designer of the Sears Tower and the John Hancock Center, at 1,107 feet the world's fifth-highest building — is using construction techniques perfected for the Hancock and Sears projects. Both buildings are in Chicago.

The newspaper reported that money to acquire the land and finance the enormous structure may be the biggest obstacle in construction, saying overseas and U.S. banks would be involved in the project.

But a Skidmore spokeswoman who asked not to be named denied any knowledge of the mammoth project when questioned by The Associated Press. "Nobody here knows anything about it at all," she said.

The giant skyscraper would accommodate as many as 45,000 people at work, play and in apartments, the unidentified sources told the Tribune.

In a space of 4 million to 6 million square feet — up to three times the interior room of New York's Empire State Building — would be offices, luxury condominiums, stores and perhaps a first-class hotel, according to the Tribune.

Such a project is the largest anyone has envisioned since architect Frank Lloyd Wright once imagined erecting a 528-story, mile-high skyscraper on Chicago's lakefront.

A realty firm has bought options for purchase of the land for the skyscraper which would be erected just north of the city's famous Loop, the newspaper said.

Midland independent oil producer Wayne Moore talks on the telephone in his office. Moore, who came to Midland in 1940, decided to stay because "the people are the greatest in the world." He says he has never regretted that decision.

Moore remembers oil field work as 'rougher, 24 hours a day'

By BILL MODISETT
Staff Writer

Wayne Moore came to Midland in May 1940, and his first day in town he saw the wind "blowing gravel down the street." That made an impression on him, but he decided to stay for awhile anyway.

The young man from Owasso, Okla., might have elected to move to a more scenic part of the country, but he stayed. And sometime later his father asked him about the decision, Moore remembers.

His father asked, "Son, why do you stay out there in that God-forsaken country?"

Moore's reply echoed a philosophy he maintains 41 years later. "Dad, I don't know if I can tell you why, specifically. But I think it has something to do with the people. They're the greatest in the world.

Moore, 68, an independent oil producer in Midland, came to what wasn't nearly so much of a Tall City as a geologist. During the 40 years that have followed, he's seen a lot of changes, in the Permian Basin and West Texas oil industry, as well as the city of Midland.

Back then, oil field work was rougher than it is today, Moore remembers, in fact sometimes it was a 24-hour-a-day job. And a geologist's work was more difficult and more demanding in ways. Techniques weren't as advanced as they are today.

He remembers that during the 1960s when the oil industry here was undergoing a "slump" he talked with a tax lawyer in Fort Worth who told him, "Well, looks like it's all over for you all out there now. All you've got out there now is secondary recovery."

Moore admits that even he could not have forecast the current "boom" in oil activity back then. But, he says, "the atmosphere is more favorable to the oil industry" now.

Moore asks the same questions a lot of Midlanders are asking about the current growth trend.

"When is it all going to stop?" and "Where are they going to put all the people that go in these buildings?"

But the Oklahoma University graduate concedes he doesn't have the answer to the question, "When is Midland's growth going to stop?"

"You tell me what the politicians are going to do and I'll answer that," he says thoughtfully.

"I don't think there's ever been a time in the last 10 years that the independent knew what was going to happen."

Tempers hotter than cars in future fuel race

By DOYLE McMANUS
Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — Accompanied by a flurry of bitter arguments as strange as the fuel they used, two dozen experimental automobiles burning everything from moonshine alcohol to wood scraps finished a crossing of the continent Saturday, bringing the Future Fuels challenge rally to an acrimonious end.

As 24 surviving vehicles of 32 entrants paraded onto the Columbia University campus, some trailing the sweet and sour odor of fermenting corn mash, the first exhausted words of rally organizer Joe Shepard were: "We did it!"

The trip had begun in Orange County, Calif., on Oct. 17.

Shepard's rally, planned as an epic journey across North America to demonstrate the potential of alternatives to gasoline, turned out to be epic all right — but mostly for the wrong reasons.

Cars broke down on Southern California freeways, in the Arizona desert and across the vastness of the Great Plains. One alcohol burner ran out of spirits on New York's Broadway, half a mile from the finish line, and came in only after a crew member refueled it while running alongside. Two cars were listed simply as "missing."

The eight-day event's initial rallymaster, David A. Carmichael, was seriously injured last Sunday when his car was hit broadside by a motorist in Phoenix, Ariz. He may spend the next six months in a hospital here.

Without Carmichael, the rally's complex rules — intended to determine whose unconventional car used what fuel most efficiently — fell apart, entrants said. Drivers accused Shepard and each other of cheating, of changing the rules in mid-continent and of scheming after the $25,000 prize money.

One entrant who dropped out early filed a $2-million suit against Shepard in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles.

Bob Harmon of Placerville, Calif., the driver who probably won — because of the collapse of the rally organization — official results will not be known for a week or two — said he might sue Shepard for fraud as well.

Harmon, whose Sunflower oil-fueled, diesel-powdered Jeep was acknowledged by several other entrants as the most efficient of the lot, said: "I don't think Shepard will deliver what he promised."

Drivers said they had split into three warring factions over the prize money: one favored turning it over to Carmichael for medical expenses, another proposed splitting it evenly among all entrants, and a third — including Harmon — held out for winner take all.

Others refused to observe the rally's set speed of 45 miles per hour, arguing that few Americans would be impressed by alternative cars driving at that speed, and raced on ahead of the pack. The first to arrive in New York, almost two hours ahe$d of schedule, was a 1970 Chevrolet pickup truck powered by an ugly steel furnace n the bed that produced natural gas from burning wood scraps. Mechanic B.V. Alvarez of H3ndersonville, N.C., said the' truck, sponsored by the Mother Earth News magazine, would run at no cost whatsoever provided the owner followed one imple rule: "Get to know somebody in the wood business."

Wood witnesses 40 years of growth in Midland, Basin

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

In 1941 Midland had an estimated population of 9,300. Many changes have taken place in the 40 years between then and now, and Robert L. Wood has been here to see them all.

When Wood first came to Midland "it was a young, growing oil community. There were very few paved roads in the entire Permian Basin and none in the oil fields."

He said the standard joke then was "you always had the opportunity to change one or two tires a day driving on the oil field roads." The joke was closer to truth than fiction, he added.

The Scharbauer Hotel, located where the Midland Hilton is today, "was a watering hole for everybody," Wood said. "It was the hub of the oil industry. That was where you saw everybody every day back in the '30s and '40s.

"Everyone seemed to work very hard. Hours were meaningless to those in the business; you stayed till you could leave," he said.

"Steam rigs were going out of existence and rotary rigs were becoming the means of drilling. Steel derricks were replacing wooden derricks," Wood said.

Originally from Dallas, Wood moved here from Seagraves where he and Eddie Chiles had founded The Western Company in 1939. Together, they built Frontier Chemical Company in Denver City. Then, "I bought Eddie out (of Frontier) and I got out of Western at the same time," Wood said.

Through the years Wood has assisted in establishing several companies including First Savings & Loan Association in Midland where he is vice chairman of the board and Commercial Bank and Trust Company in Midland where he is a director and honorary vice president.

He is a past president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce; chairman of the executive committee of the Midland Wildcat Committee for 13 years, now vice chairman; vice chairman of the Board of Governors of Midland Memorial Hospital; 30-year trustee, now senior trustee, of Austin College which he attended in his younger days; past president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America; past president of the National Petroleum Council in Washington, D.C.; and director of several oil industry associations.

Most of the years Wood has lived in Midland have been years of growth.

"Midland grew from 1941 to 1946 because of the influx of the military — the bombardier school at Midland Terminal, many of whom, after being in Midland a few years, decided to live here after the war.

"As supplies became available, there was a terrific boom in the building of homes and apartments as well as the expansion of the oil industry," Wood said, describing Midland following World War II.

"All the major companies were increasing their staffs in Midland as well as a great deal of independents.

"We have gone forward since then except for a period in the '60s and early '70s when the volume of imported crude together with the price of domestic crude practically stopped all growth in the domestic oil and drilling industry," Wood said.

"After the Middle East crisis in 1973, Midland has begun again its terrific growth in all phases of the oil industry."

For him, the oil industry has "always been a fascinating business and always will be."

The most impressive feature of Midland for Wood at this time "is the faith of the old timers who stayed in the Permian Basin and built it into the greatest oil reserve in the United States. They've given of their time and talent to make this possible and have invested their funds in the Permian Basin," Wood said, adding, "I think you will find our bank deposits today reflect the faith of the people in the Permian Basin."

Exxon, Socal report earnings lower; Shell, Atlantic Richfield incomes climb

NEW YORK (AP) — Exxon Corp. and Standard Oil Co. of California recently reported sharply lower earnings for the third quarter compared with a year earlier. But gains for the period were reported by Shell Oil Co. and Atlantic Richfield Co.

Exxon Corp., the nation's largest oil company, said third-quarter earnings fell 20.7 percent, and Standard Oil Co. of California reported a drop of 15.5 percent. Both companies cited declines in profits from foreign operations.

Shell, the eighth-largest U.S. oil concern, said profits rose 33.4 percent, and Atlantic Richfield, ranked seventh largest, said earnings were up 11 percent.

Both Shell and Atlantic Richfield attributed their gains in part to improved profits from refining and marketing operations and to increased earnings from crude oil and natural gas exploration and production.

Shell, based in Houston, said its net income rose to $471 million, or $1.52 a share, from $353 million, or $1.14 a share, in last year's third quarter. Revenues climbed 10 percent to $5.6 billion from $5.1 billion.

For the first nine months of the year, Shell earned $1.24 billion, or $4.02 a share, up 9.7 percent from $1.13 billion, or $3.67 a share, in the same period last year. Revenues grew nearly 12 percent to $16.55 billion from $14.83 billion.

Atlantic Richfield said earnings climbed to $433.5 million, or $1.73 a share, from $389.7 million, or $1.57 a share. Revenues advanced 24 percent to $6.97 billion from $5.64 billion.

For the first nine months of the year, Atlantic Richfield earned $1.20 billion, or $4.80 a share, down 4 percent from earnings of $1.25 billion, or $5.04 a share, in the same period last year. Revenues increased 26 percent to $21.07 billion from $16.77 billion.

Exxon's earnings for the three months ended Sept. 30 dropped to $1.08 billion, or $1.25 a share, from $1.36 billion, or $1.56 a share, in last year's third quarter. Revenues rose 3 percent to $27.61 billion from $26.75 billion.

Clifton C. Garvin Jr., Exxon's chairman and chief executive, said the company's earnings were hurt by reduced demand for petroleum products and a global oversupply of crude oil.

"Foreign refining and marketing earnings were particularly depressed as local currency price increases failed to recover the higher crude costs caused by a stronger U.S. dollar during most of the quarter," Garvin said.

As with most other oil companies that have reported third-quarter earnings, Exxon said its profits from oil and natural gas exploration and production rose during the quarter. But its foreign exploration and production earnings fell because of higher exploration costs, Garvin said.

For the first nine months of the year, Exxon earned $4.50 billion, or $5.21 a share. That is a 4.4 percent increase from $4.31 billion, or $4.94 a share, earned in the same period last year. Revenues were up 6 percent to $85.41 billion from $80.62 billion.

Standard of California, which ranks No. 4 among U.S. oil companies, said third-quarter earnings fell to $527 million, or $1.54 a share, from $624 million, or $1.82 a share. Revenues climbed 9 percent to $11.46 billion from $10.51 billion.

The San Francisco-based company said its earnings from petroleum operations overseas, including refining and marketing, plunged 36 percent to $160 million from $249 million in last year's third quarter. It cited lower demand and higher taxes, especially in Canada and Great Britain.

For the first nine months of the year, Socal earned $1.81 billion, or $5.29 a share. That's an increase of 1 percent from $1.79 billion, or $5.22 a share, earned in the same period last year.

Reagan wants to rid the nation of federal 'energy czars'

By R. A. ROSENBLATT
L.A. Times

WASHINGTON — In moving to abolish the fledgling U.S. Department of Energy, President Reagan wants to turn back the government's clock to the days before the 1973 Arab oil embargo — an era when there were no meddlesome federal "energy czars," and Washington trusted oil companies and the marketplace to provide the fuel for America's future.

Critics of the Reagan policy fear, however, that without strong direction from Washington, Americans may relax their hard-won sense of urgency about the nation's continuing energy problems.

For the president's ambitious program of budget and tax cuts, hauling down the department's flag and dismissing its employees would be chiefly a symbolic act. It would save about $300 million, a tiny fraction of the federal government's annual budget of more than $700 billion.

But the Reagan plan for disamantling the department is a blueprint for revolutionary change in the federal role in setting energy policy all across the board — in regulation, research and production. Under Republican Presidents Nixon and Ford, as well as under Democratic President Carter, there had been a strong and persistent belief that the federal government should be deeply involved in shaping and safeguarding the nation's energy future.

Tactics differed under Reagan's three predecessors. For example, the Ford administration pushed hard for the expanded use of coal to generate electricity. Under Carter, coal was less favored, while much more federal money was spent to promote development of solar power. But the policymakers, whether Republican or Democrat shared, one basic belief: that a national energy policy designed and directed by Washington was vital to the country's welfare.

Dismissing the views of his predecessors, ecretary of Energy James B. Edwards, picked by the president to dismantle the department, says simply, "this country bought too much government."

The Reagan program, if accepted by Congress, would bet the nation's energy future on two convictions: freeing the nation's oil companies to explore, drill and pump without restriction will yield substantial new oil production; and the vigorous promotion of nuclear power will take care of any remaining gaps in energy supplies. Almost all other activities, such as the development of solar and other alternative energy sources and the promotion of conservation in factories and homes, would be stripped of government aid and encouragement.

This hands-off policy, with government leaving the energy issue entirely to the workings of the foreign producers, the major oil companies and the market place, is being presented at a time when the world enjoys a surplus of oil supplies, and prices are stabilizing, even drifting down.

—Despite dramatic gains in energy conservation, the United States remains perilously vulnerable to a curtailment of Middle-Eastern oil. Americans are using less petroleum this year than at any time since 1971. But the amount of oil coming from the volatile Middle East has nearly doubled.

—High interest rates make it costly for oil companies to hold stockpiles of unsold gasoline, heating oil and jet fuel. Inventories have been cut below last year's levels, a harmless fact as long as world supplies are ample, but threatening if the market tightens suddenly, as it did after the 1979 Iranian revolution.

—The current surge in domestic oil exploration is expected to have only a modest impact on supplies. Most U.S. wells are old and declining in output faster than n3w oil reserves can be located.

Even with Alaska, with new methods of recovering oil, and with the additional supplies of petroleum that eventually may be produced from shale rock, domestic-oil output in 1990 will be lower than it is today, according to the Department of Energy's own projections.

—The United States is obligated to share oil with other industrial nations during emergency shortages. The sharing agreement has never been invoked. But in a future crisis it could divert cargoes away from U.S. ports to Japan and Western Europe, contributing to supply scarcities in the United States.

Administration officials contend that higher prices alone have spurred Americans to use less energy.

However, federal programs have contributed to the successes in reducing oil consumption, most analysts believe. Automobile-efficiency standards mandated by Congress forced companies to make more cars capable of travelling more miles on a gallon of gasoline. Energy tax credits were used by homeowners to add insulation to their attics, and install energy-saving heating and cooling equipment.

Nevertheless, the administration regards any federal standards or rules in the energy field as anathema to its free-market beliefs.

Ironically, the success of the Reagan economic program could partially undercut its argument on energy policy. The slow rate of economic growth is contributing to the lower level of oil consumption. If the president's tax and budget cuts stimulate a surge of prosperity, the demand for oil could start rising again, with an accompanying increase in dependence on shipments from volatile foreign countries, and a costly new surge in the flow of dollars out of American pockets and into the coffers of overseas producers.

Despite those concerns, the Reagan administration believes that the Department of Energy does not need policy planning in a Cabinet-level department.

Before creation of the department in 1977, Washington's participation in energy issues had become scattered among various departments and agencies over the years. There was a frantic increase in activity after the Arab nations cut off oil shipments to the United States in 1973 in retaliation for American support of Israel during the Yom Kippur war, however.

The multiplying energy offices led to confusion, lack of coordination and to delays. It was to end that chaos and create a central focus of energy policy to the administration that the department was created four years ago.

It was an unnecessary "proliferation of government," Constance Stuart, press secretary to Edwards. "Why not have a Cabinet department of science or department of medicine?"

Just before leaving office, Carter recommended a Department of Energy budget of $16.5 billion for the fiscal year ending next Sept. 30. Reagan wants to spend only $12.4 billio,.

Certain portions of the budget are being dramatically increased under Reagan. The Department of Energy produces the nation's nuclear weapons, bombs, missile warheads and atomic artillery shells; Reagan wants to boost that output. Spending for civilian nuclear power development is also to rise, with money allocated for development of the Clinch River breeder reactor, a power plant that would produce its own fuel.

If the overall budget is being cut significantly while weapons spending and nuclear outlays rise, simple arithmetic dictates that all other energy department functions must decline.

For example the administration wants to wipe out: the residential conservation service, which was created to help utilities organize home energy audits for their customers; a consumer products program, which provides financial aid to develop new energy efficient equipment; and a program to set energy usage standards for home appliances.

None of those things are necessary "in light of the sound market-oriented policy of this administration," the department said in its budget documents.

Congress has thus far balked at shutting down those and other programs, ordering that money be retained in the budget. (None of the federal government's budget bills have been approved in final form by Congress, which is now considering the president's requests for deeper cuts.)

"We will achieve our savings whether or not the Energy Department is abolished; we are determined to make these cuts," a senior department official said.

Legislation will be sent to Congress next month for dismantling the department, with atomic weapons and civilian nuclear activity spun off into a newly formed agency, the strategic petroleum reserve shifted to the Department of the Interior, and shruken solar and conservation programs sent to the National Science Foundation.

Total elimin$tion of the department could save $1.5 billion a year and wipe out 4,400 federal jobs by 1984, according to officials at the Office of Management and Budget. Most of the savings would come from cutting programs, $1.2 billion worth, with only $300 million saved by eliminating the department structure itself. That means the administration could achieve its basic budget-cutting goal by persuading Congress to cut the programs even if the department is still officially in existence.

But outright abolition of the department would enable the president to fulfill a campaign promise. "I am dismantling it because my president says to dismantle it."

In addition to elimination of federal support for things like conservation, solar power, planning for an energy emergency would be fragmented. Responsibility would be divided among White House staff members and the Federal Emergency Management Agency, a small operation that has dealt with earthquakes and floods.

Meanwhile, many members of Congress, both Republicans and Democrats, fear that Reagan's desire to take the government out of the energy program will intensify the nation's vulnerability to a shutoff of Middle East supplies.

Exxon profits decline

NEW YORK (AP) — Exxon Corp., the nation's largest oil company, said recently its third-quarter earnings fell 20.7 percent from a year earlier. The company cited higher oil exploration costs and sharply lower profits from refining and marketing.

Earnings for the three months ended Sept. 30 dropped to $1.08 billion, or $1.25 a share, from $1.36 billion, or $1.56 a share, in last year's third quarter. Revenues rose 3 percent to $27.61 billion from $26.75 billion.

Clifton C. Garvin, Jr., Exxon's chairman and chief executive, said the company's earnings were hurt by reduced demand for petroleum products and a global oversupply of crude oil.

Exxon's profits from worldwide refining and marketing plunged 38 percent, Garvin said.

"Foreign refining and marketing earnings were particularly depressed as local currency price increases failed to recover the higher crude costs caused by a stronger U.S. dollar during most of the quarter," Garvin said.

As with most other oil companies that have reported third-quarter earnings, Exxon said its profits from oil and natural gas exploration and production rose during the quarter.

Independent oil operator Joseph I. O'Neill Jr. takes time to read the Wall Street Journal in his office at the O'Neill Building. Although he didn't know anything about the oil business at the time, O'Neill came to Midland in 1948 because he was "looking for an opportunity." He arrived in time for the Scurry County boom. Midland has been his home since.

Joseph O'Neill found opportunity in Permian Basin

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

The year was 1948. Joseph O'Neill Jr. was "looking for an opportunity."

But then, he'd been doing that since his 1937 graduation from Notre Dame University.

By 1942, the search had taken him through one year of law school at Notre Dame; one year of law at Temple University in Philadelphia; working as a clerk at E.I. DuPont and Company; and working as a clerk and later special agent at Home Insurance Company in first New York and then Atlanta, before it deposited him in San Francisco as a special agent with the FBI.

Four years later, after becoming head of the bank robbery squad in the Los Angeles FBI office, he was looking again.

This time he went to work as a sales manager for Van Waters and Rogers, Inc., in Los Angeles. His search hadn't ended.

DURING THIS period, O'Neill envisioned the idea of being in business for himself. All he needed was the chance.

"A friend of mine met some people from Dallas who suggested he come down here (Midland) and look around," O'Neill said in a recent interview.

He did. Then he suggested to O'Neill that "we seriously consider it."

Although they had no experience in the oil industry, after two trips to Midland, both O'Neill and his friend, William P. Castleman Jr., were sold on the idea of becoming lease brokers.

"I called home and said, 'Let's put the house on the market and get out of there (Los Angeles).'

"I liked the town (Midland) and I liked the people," O'Neill said.

He borrowed $5,000 to feed his family for a year, and the O'Neills moved to Texas.

At that time, Midland had a population of approximately 16,000, O'Neill said.

"No street north of Louisiana (Avenue) was paved when I got here. And Louisiana was not paved west much past what would today be H (Street)," he said.

AS LUCK WOULD have it, the dust was blowing when the O'Neills came to town.

They had a room at the Bel-Air Motel, across from the Ranch House Restaurant, which used to be at 3000 W. Wall Ave.

"A blue norther was blowing and our room opened to the north. We had a half a ton of dust in the room. It was sort of a dismal start," O'Neill said laughing.

But O'Neill had found his opportunity.

"We got lucky. The Scurry County boom hit and we started making money," he said.

As drilling activity increased in Scurry County, O'Neill and Castleman began purchasing new leases with their profits. They bought an additional 1,000 acres of leases the day the first major extension was completed to the Standard of Texas discovery.

June of 1949 saw O'Neill and Castleman drilling their first well. From there they developed a working interest in 35 wells in the reef trend.

CASTLEMAN MOVED to Dallas, but O'Neill stayed. Although the partnership was dissolved, Castleman has "always maintained an office (in Midland) and spends part of the year here every year," O'Neill said.

"I can't tell you how friendly the people were; how willing to really help you. Why, some of my oldest friends taught me how to read a lease and search records," he said, talking about the receptiveness he found in the people in Midland.

"Nobody has a lock on total knowledge in this business, or why would an independent even exist in a business like this which takes so much money and a great deal of luck?" O'Neill said, adding, "The little guy drills most of the wells and finds most of the oil."

O'Neill considers Midland "a unique community." The people come from "every segment of the country.

"I've always considered Midland my home, even though I've traveled rather extensively," he said.

During the years he has been here, O'Neill has been active in the industry.

HE WAS ELECTED the first president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association in 1962; he was a director of the Texas Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association, the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owner's Association and the Independent Petroleum Association of America; and he served on the advisory committee of the American Petroleum Institute.

In 1979 he was elected an All-American Wildcatter. O'Neill is a member of the board of trustees of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame.

One of the aspects of the present boom O'Neill finds attractive is "the children are coming back, when they never used to.

"I have two sons that came back," O'Neill said. "I don't think the opportunity was here until prices became more realistic in the oil business. Imagine, until not too long ago, we were selling for under $3 a barrel."

For him the oil business has not been "all milk and honey," but it has provided him "a pretty darn good way to live."

As far as the future is concerned, O'Neill said he has always had about the same philosophy.

"I'm eternally an optimist; you must be in this business. Success is a fragile thing; you have to nurture it."

Smiling, he added, "You run into a lot of upsetting developments, which is a nice way of saying dry holes, but I don't think you stop — you keep going. If it worked for you in the past, it will again."

HOUSTON — Formation of Champion Arabia, Ltd., a joint venture company in Saudi Arabia, to manufacture and market Champion oilfield and industrial chemicals in the Middle East was recently announced here.

Champion Arabia is owned by Champion Chemicals, Inc., and Olayan Financing Company of Saudi Arabia.

Pennzoil reports third quarter earnings

HOUSTON (AP) — Pennzoil Co. reported Monday earnings from oil and gas exploration and production increased during the first nine months of 1981 but the gains were offset by depressed metal prices and lower refined petroleum products margins.

J. Hugh Liedtke, chairman and chief executive officer of the Houston-based firm, said he does not expect the situation to improve until interest rates drop.

"While we continue to view the current imbalance between supply and demand for crude oil and its products ... we do not expect a return to normal so long as high interest rates, coupled with the lackluster economy, continue," Liiedtke said.

Pennzoil also reported third quarter net income earnings of $47.5 million or 91 cents a share. This compared with net income of $69.7 million or $1.34 in earhings a share during the same period in 1980.

Sales for the third quarter of 1981 increased to $668.6 million from $579.7 million recorded a year ago.

During the first nine months this year, net income totaled $166.8 million or $3.18 a share, compared with $231.1 million or $4.43 a share in 1980. Sales between January and September were slightly more than $2 billion, up from a $1.8 billion in 1980.

Shell posts $471 million quarter gain

HOUSTON (AP) — Shell Oil Co. recorded gains in earnings for both the third quarter and first nine months this year, officials announced Monday.

President John F. Bookout said the company earned $471 million in the third quarter and $1.24 billion in the first nine months of 1981, compared with $353 million and $1.13 billion, respectively, in the same periods a year ago.

Per-share earnings for the third quarter were $1.52 and $4.02 for the first nine months, Bookout said. The 1980 figures were $1.14 and $3.67, he said.

Shell, which has its headquarters in Houston, reported revenues of $5.6 billion in the third quarter and $16.5 billion between January and September, compared to $5.1 billion and $14.8 billion in 1980.

Bookout said revenue from oil and gas exploration and production increased $122 million to $385 million in the third quarter and $252 million to $1.1 billion since January.

"Earnings in our oil and gas exploration and production segment should continue to support the momentum for growth in total company earnings over last year," he said. "On the other hand, chemical earnings continue to be lower than last year, and are unlikely to show much improvement until there is some basic strengthening in the economy."

WESTERN Pacesetters

Serving the Permian Basin since 1939

Over the years, The Western Company of North America has become the pacesetter of the service companies to the oil industry. To become pacesetters, it takes innovation, ability and determination. Innovation to solve the difficult problems and to forsee new methods to solve the problems as yet unseen. Ability to apply methods born of innovation is yet another face of pacesetting, and The Western Company has proven ability time and again. The Gulf of Mexico, The North Sea and last but not least, The Permian Basin. The Permian Basin, it's people and industries, have demonstrated the qualities of pacesetters also and The Western Company of North America is proud to join in this tribute to their progress.

Staying on top of petroleum financing.

In 1923, Midland National watched West Texas' first oil wells being drilled. And we took strides to provide the banking services that would be needed for this young industry.

We learned that timing is critical: delays in engineering and evaluation could prove very costly.

We also learned that we could analyze our clients' collateral more quickly if we did it ourselves. So we established the first Oil and Gas Department in the Permian Basin. And we were the first to employ a petroleum engineer on a full-time basis as a bank officer.

For more than seven decades now, we've played a primary role in financing the oil industry of West Texas.

We use our in-house computer and latest petroleum evaluation techniques to determine reserves, estimated cash flow and the loan value of properties. Even with only limited data on complex new areas, we can still make a quick, confidential determination of the maximum value of collateral.

Energy production has come of age, and so have we. We have $11 billion in assets behind us. And ahead of us, a future dedicated to keeping pace with the petroleum industry.

Whatever your financial needs—whether it's quick capital to help you develop newly discovered reserves or trust services to help you protect and preserve what's yours—bring them to Midland National.

Midland's long, lasting and final boom

Potter witnesses Midland's many stages

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

In 1881 the Texas and Pacific Railroad, stretching from Fort Worth to El Paso, stopped midway in some flat land occupied by a handful of sheep ranchers.

Two years later a group of settlers from the northeast joined them and the few Chinese railroad workers living in the area. They, too, engaged in ranching. There was an abundance of grassy plains but not enough rain for growing crops. Cattle took over the place of sheep ranching and became the outstanding industry of Midland.

Oil was discovered in 1926.

After witnessing people streaming into Midland — and its oil industry — in the late 1920s and 1930s and again in the late 1940s through the early 1950s, lifetime Midland resident Thomas J. Potter said he thinks the current influx will be the final one.

"This'll probably be the last boom, but it could boom for years," Potter said, relaxing in a chair in his home on Golf Course Road.

While musing over the differences in the first flood of ambitious newcomers to Midland, which he said died out in the Depression, and the current one, he laughed, "I don't see as many drunks as I used to."

He and his wife, Juanita, reminisced about the Prohibition days in Midland. "High school kids could buy rot-gut liquor for 15 cents a half pint," Potter said.

In those days, the names, addresses and businesses of the various bootleggers and moonshiners living in Midland were considered to be common knowledge among many of the citizens of the community. According to Potter, it evidently wasn't difficult for anyone to obtain the illegal whiskey because many of the obvious buyers were seen on the streets.

The times have changed in Midland.

"I remember riding down Main Street on a horse at a dead run at noon," Potter recalled. He said that was in 1923 when it was just a dirt road he used to and from school during the day.

By 1934 he said there were five school buildings utilized by the students of Midland. According to him, up until the early 1940s some ranchers still employed teachers to come live on their ranches outside of town and instruct their children.

A native of Midland "since Christmas Day 1910," when he was born, he said he graduated from Midland High School in 1929, and attended Texas A&M Universtity and Draughn's Business College in Abilene.

He returned to Midland when he joined Skelly Oil Co. on Dec. 10, 1935, where he worked for seven years.

Mrs. Potter was born in Mills County and went to school in Fisher and Terry counties. In 1934 she left Scott and White Hospital and Clinic in Temple and moved to Midland to work as a surgical nurse.

The Potters were married on June 6, 1937.

"We haven't decided yet if it's going to last," Potter said with a twinkle in his eye as his wife laughed.

Potter went to work for Baroid in December of 1942 as a mudlogging engineer. He said he went from one well to another all over central Texas, southeast New Mexico and Louisiana. While he was in the western part of central Texas, he said he received experience in the land department for the first time.

On June 14, 1944, he joined City Service Oil Co. as a geologist scout where he worked the West Texas and southeast New Mexico area.

On Jan. 1, 1951, he was transferred to the land department of the company, which he said later changed its name to City Service Co. There he conducted title searches, contacted mineral owners and bought leases. He said he also made many farm-outs, which are contracts with other oil companies to sublet leases.

He retired from the City Service Co. after 25 years of service on Jan. 1, 1976. Since then he has been an independent landman.

According to his wife, people say that Potter has never closed a business deal with anyone in a manner where he would not feel comfortable walking back into that same office the following morning.

Lifetime Midlander Thomas J. Potter believes the current oil boom in Midland and the Permian Basin will be the last one, "but it could boom for years."

Oil industry biggest taxpayer at state, local levels

DALLAS — "The Texas petroleum industry was the largest single taxpayer to state government in 1981," the Texas Mid-Continent Oil & Gas Association recently reported. "Payments of oil and gas production (severance) taxes mounted to $2.2-billion, approximately 28.3-percent of total state tax collections."

"The petroleum industry was the largest single taxpayer at the local level, as well. In 1980, the last year for which data are available, the Texas petroleum industry paid approximately $938.6-million in ad valorem (property) taxes to all local jurisdictions — counties, school districts and cities — accoutning fro slightly more than 22-percent of that year's total collections throughout the state," the association reports.

"In fiscal year 1981, the Texas petroleum industry paid $77.7-million in corporatte franchise tax, accounting for approximately 18.6 percent of total state collection of this tax.

"In 1981, the Texas petroleum industry paid $11.7-million in a well servicing tax and an additional $2.3-million in an oil and gas regulatory tax."

According to the association report, "These state and local tax payments have provided the foundation for governments in Texas to meet their social and educational commitments. Moreover, the availablity of ample energy resources has allowed Texas to experience its greatest period of economic growth and development. Due in large measure to direct tax payments by the petroleum industry, which last year totaled more than $3.2-billion, Texans enjoy:

— One of the lowest per capita tax burdens in the country.
— The best business climate in this nation."
