End of year business items face commissioners Monday

Year-end housekeeping items will occupy the Scurry County Commissioners Court when it convenes at 10 a.m. Monday at the courthouse.

Five line-item transfers and a budget amendment for the juvenile probation department will be considered along with matters related to employee health insurance.

Under old business, commissioners will consider a request to close a quarter-mile county road in Precinct 4. A petition to close the road was presented two weeks ago by Brent McQuirk. The road runs from U.S. 180 to the McQuirk residence.

The court will also consider a rate change for health insurance, an item discussed two weeks ago. A plan that provides discounts for the use of the local hospital and doctors was approved in an effort to hold down rising premium costs.

New rates for health insurance will be revealed at Monday's meeting. County Treasurer Charlie Bell will present information concerning the cafeteria plan by which employees may chose certain benefits.

At last Monday's meeting, juvenile probation officer Larry Thompson said an increase in juvenile crime has resulted in the need for more incarceration. As a result, the department will need some $35,000 more for contract beds to finish the 1993 fiscal year.

Commissioners are expected to make the budget amendment. Cost of juvenile detention runs as high as $84 per day. Scurry County contracts with approved facilities in Nolan and Lubbock counties.

Line-item transfer requests are on the agenda for Precincts 1, 3 and 4, the extension office and for the district attorney.

March primary...

Filing period begins Friday

Holidays, food and shopping have captured the attention of everyone the past few days and the gaiety will continue as Christmas draws closer.

Also prevelant this time of year is another ritual. Politicians are beginning to appear everywhere, attending benefits, passing out cards, shaking hands. There's good reason. The filing period for the March 1994 is less than a week away.

Governor Ann Richards is already campaigning heavily for a second term, sure to be tested by the GOP's apparent top challenger, George W. Bush.

Other offices up for election on a national level include that of U.S. State Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison and all U.S. Representatives, including Charles Stenholm of the 17th District.

Statewide officeholders whose terms are up include Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, Attorney General Dan Morales, State Comptroller John Sharp, State Treasurer Martha Whitehead, Land Commissioner Garry Mauro and Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry.

All 150 state representatives' terms, including David Counts' District 70 seat, and all 31 state senators' terms, including Steve Carriker's District 30 seat, will be on the primary ballot.

There are also a number of local seats up for election in March, and three incumbents have already made their intentions clear. County Clerk Frances Billingsley, District Clerk Elois Pruitt and Peace Justice Wanda Rushing, all Democrats, have announced they will be seeking another term.

Other Scurry County offices up for election in the March primaries include that of county judge, currently held by Bob Doolittle; Precinct 2 commissioner, held by Roy Idom; Precinct 4 commissioner, held by Jerry Gannaway; and county treasurer, held by Charlie Bell.

The Precinct 2 JP's post is vacant and will also be up for election.

The filing period opens Friday and runs through Jan. 3 at the county courthouse. Early voting won't begin until Feb. 16. The actual election date is March 8.

5 percent loans available for holiday buying

Snyder banks are again being Santa's helpers by offering low-interest Christmas loans.

Holiday loans are available from American State Bank, Snyder National Bank and from West Texas State Bank. Loans of from $250 to $1,000 are available.

The interest rate on these holiday loans is 5 percent. Those obtaining the loans will receive Scrip that can be used just like money at participating merchants in Snyder. All Scrip must be spent by Dec. 31.

Helping needy families...

Goodfellows drive begins

The local Goodfellows project, sponsored by the Snyder Noon Kiwanis Club, is soliciting canned goods and monetary donations for this Christmas season.

The project has been a joint effort of the Kiwanis and local citizens for the past 44 years.

Through Goodfellows, needy families who apply and qualify are provided a box of food which may be prepared for a holiday meal.

Needy families are encouraged to complete the Goodfellows application in this issue of the Snyder Daily News. Completed applications should be mailed to P.O. Box 644 in Snyder by Dec. 10.

Families who qualify will be sent notice by mail of the time and place where they may pick up their food.

In the past, Goodfellows have been able to supply chickens, eggs, flour, sugar, corn meal, bread, beans, potatoes, apples, oranges, cabbage, margarine and canned goods to more than 300 qualifying families. Goodfellows are dependent upon donations of food and money from the community.

Typically, nonperishable food items have been donated by area schools, churches and individuals. The perishable foods must be purchased immediately prior to distribution with funds donated by businesses and individuals.

Any surplus funds are used throughout the year to buy shoes, coats, glasses and other necessities for needy school children.

Donations of nonperishable food items and money for Goodfellows can be made at all three banks, Snyder Savings and Loan, Snyder Cablevision, the chamber of commerce and Mail Center Plus.

Money donations can also be mailed to Snyder National Bank, P.O. Box 209, in care of Joe Jackson.

Report says...

Tariffs cost American consumers $19 million

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans spend $19 billion more a year on everything from ball bearings and machine tools to dresses and costume jewelry because of protective trade tariffs, according to a government study.

The U.S. International Trade Commission estimated that high tariffs and quotas pushed up average prices in 44 sectors by 3 percent.

Officials at the agency, which rules on unfair trading complaints lodged by U.S. industry against foreign competitors, said Friday they were releasing the report to underscore the benefits to the American economy from a successful conclusion of the Uruguay Round of global free trade talks.

Those talks, which have dragged on for seven years, are facing a Dec. 15 deadline with negotiators still far apart on several issues. The discussions, involving 115 nations, are being conducted by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the world body that governs trade.

While economists say that global output could receive a boost of $270 billion by lowering tariffs and expanding trade, protected industries in the U.S. and around the world are fighting fiercely to hold onto their trade barriers as a way of keeping jobs.

On Thursday, most folks figured they'd never be hungry again. Then by weekend, junk food was once again looking pretty tempting.

Thanksgiving is a holiday that sounds the warning bell that good eats will be readily available for the next month.

Mexican food can sound pretty good after that rich dressing that accompanies many holiday meals. But we bet the guys who went to lunch with State Comptroller John Sharp had a few turkey comments.

One of the most popular lunch spots in Austin is an East Side restaurant called Carmen's La Tapatia. It's [illegible] in pin-stripped suits.

Sharp had picked the place to have lunch with a few local business folks. Upon arrival, Sharp and his delegation found the doors locked and a warning posted on the door:

"This property has been seized for nonpayment of taxes owed to the State of Texas." The notice was signed by John Sharp, Comptroller of Public Accounts.

Just the previous day, enforcement agents from Sharp's office had closed the establishment for nonpayment of more than $68,000 in back sales tax receipts.

Agents had entered at the end of the lunch hour, finding a few of their co-workers still dining there. Sharp, who takes a lot of ribbing for being an Aggie, pleaded ignorance of his agency's action.

It reminds us of a group of college professors who were having lunch in Austin. Dinner conversation landed on the desire to turn [illegible]

Sky diver remembers jump

WESTFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A sky diver who crashed into an airplane said he tried at the last second to steer clear of the collision that killed four people.

"My first impression was, 'Oh, my God, what's he doing there?'" Alfred Peters said Friday. "I dipped one shoulder; I thought I was going to sail right over the top. The next thing I heard was a thud."

Peters, a former Army paratrooper, suffered a broken ankle while all four on the plane were killed Sunday. Peters said he saw "nothing at all" in the sunny sky before leaping from a Cessna 206 about 8,000 feet over Northampton Airport.

Within a few seconds, he spotted another single-engine plane, a Piper Warrior II, heading straight for him. Peters, 51, said his foot smashed into the tail, apparently knocking off the vertical fin and sending the craft into a nose dive for woods below.

"It was just one of those two-second things, and it was over," Peters said. He left a Northampton hospital Thursday.

Killed were pilot Elliot Klein, 40, of Rhinebeck, N.Y.; his 18-year-old son, Jonas, of Boston; Christina Park, 18, of Auburn, Wash.; and Jean Kimball, 45, of Pine Plains, N.Y. They were en route from Poughkeepsie, N.Y., to Boston.

Peters managed to open his chute and land safely at the small airport.

"It was just being in the wrong place at the wrong time for everyone," he said. "I just feel bad about the other people. It's just unbelievable. The odds have to be astronomical."

About 140,000 U.S. sky divers made an estimated 2.5 million jumps over the past year alone.

Cameras at border praised by officials

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Border Patrol officials say 20 surveillance cameras installed at selected spots in Arizona along the border help combat drug smuggling and illegal immigration. Some border-area residents have doubts.

"It's out of control," Ernesto Chavez said of illegal crossings near his Nogales business.

Four remote-control cameras were installed atop 50-foot towers in Nogales in 1986, and four cameras have been in operation for the past eight years near the port of entry in San Luis near Yuma. In the latest such installation, 12 cameras have been placed along the border at Douglas at a cost of $1.75 million.

"The cameras add security to the border area that wouldn't normally be there," said Steve McDonald, a Border Patrol spokesman.

Since the Nogales cameras were installed, apprehensions of illegal immigrants and drug smugglers have increased every year, McDonald said. He was unable to give exact figures.

In the downtown Nogales area, 85 percent to 95 percent of the apprehensions result from the cameras, he said.

Chavez, president of Wilde Stationers, a Nogales business about 50 feet from the border, said he watches more than 500 illegal immigrants cross the border daily behind his business.

Fred Johnson, executive director of the Nogales Santa Cruz Chamber of Commerce, questions how the cameras can help agents pick out an illegal immigrant from legal immigrants.

To stem the flow of illegal immigrants, what is needed is a secure border fence, coordinated law enforcement effort by the United States and Mexican authorities and a way of issuing border cards to eligible Mexican citizens who cross the border regularly, Johnson said.

WRONG IS ALWAYS WRONG

In our age of sagging morals, Satan provides many rationalizations for improper behavior. We must not be "ignorant of his devices" (2 Corinthians 2:11), if we desire to be faithful to Christ. Wrong actions are always wrong in spite of our efforts to excuse them by saying, "it's for a good cause." The end does not justify the means. "All unrighteousness is sin..." (1 John 5:17).

Wrong is still wrong even if it is commonly considered acceptable or allowed by the law of the land..." (Exodus 23:2). Paul commanded by inspiration of the Spirit, "Abstain from all appearance of evil" (1 Thessalonians 5:22).

Since our laws were liberalized to allow (legalize) gambling by the state and by non-profit organizations, allow liquor by the drink in private clubs, or if they allowed possession of small amounts of marijuana for personal use, does that make these things morally and ethically right? Consider the history and effects of these things. THINK!

Dr. Gott By Peter Gott, M.D.

See a specialist about peptic disease

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I've been diagnosed with a hiatal hernia and an inflammation of the esophagus. I'm on Zantac three times a day, yet the burning sensation is still there every day, all day. Should I still have this much burning while the medication is coupled with a diet to avoid heartburn?

DEAR READER: You are suffering from a common malady called gastroesophageal reflux disease, the backwash of irritating stomach contents into the delicate esophagus. This causes chest pain, heartburn, gas, and other digestive abnormalities. GERD usually responds to H2 blockers: drugs, such as Zantac or Prilosec, that reduce the formation of stomach acid.

If medicine has not relieved your symptoms, you should be examined by a gastroenterologist, who will examine your esophagus with a lighted tube to detect the presence of Barrett's esophagus, a pre-malignant lesion that may accompany GERD, for which surgery may be necessary.

In my opinion, anyone with symptoms caused by peptic disease (ulcers or hiatal hernia) that do not respond to customary therapy should be under the care of such a specialist.

To give you more information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Hiatal Hernia." Other readers who would like a copy should send $1.25 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2433, New York, NY 10163. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Six years ago I took chemotherapy for lymphoma cancer. Luckily it worked well, although the medication has caused nerve damage in my feet and ankles. I suffer with horrible pains, burning and soreness almost constantly. The problem seems worse at bedtime. My doctor feels pain blocks will not help, and I'm hoping you can give me some advice on what, if anything, might provide relief.

DEAR READER: This is a difficult problem because although the chemotherapy may have affected the nerves in your feet and ankles, you needed the treatment. Therefore, you're stuck with a trade-off.

Neuropathy (nerve damage) can obviously be helped by pain medication, such as codeine and Vicodin. On occasion, anti-depressant drugs (such as Elavil) may, for unknown reasons, relieve symptoms such as yours.

Ask your doctor to prescribe low doses of an analgesic in combination with an anti-depressant. Let me know if this scheme works. Also, you might consider making an appointment in a pain clinic; such specialty resources are available in most teaching hospitals.

To give you more information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Managing Chronic Pain." Other readers who would like a copy should send $1.25 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2433, New York, NY 10163. Be sure to mention the title.

Although President Clinton's health care plan is bound to be modified by Congress, doctors are really sweating. And I mean all doctors. The mere mention of cuts in Medicare reimbursement and increased bureaucratic control has caused alarm that borders on panic in the healing profession. Some economists claim that reform in doctors' fees is long overdue; practitioners simply make too much money and the moment of truth is fast approaching.

This is bad news, folks, especially for family physicians and general internists, of which I am one, who provide so-called primary care: the bread-and-butter office visits, house calls, nursing home responsibilities, and routine hospitalizations. We're going to take a hit in our earnings, probably a big hit — but nobody yet knows how much. I haven't felt this much anxiety since I was waiting to be drafted into the Army.

Therefore, practitioners are understandably exercising damage control. One such method is to consider joining pre-paid health care groups, which then supply a stream of patients.

For example, the other day, my secretary and I met with a representative from U.S. Health Care, a large Health Maintenance Organization that is soliciting patient-subscribers from companies and federal agencies in my geographic area. The lady was very nice, very knowledgeable and very forceful. As I understand it, the system works like this.

Subscriber-patients can only be seen by doctors who are members of the plan. I am to be paid a certain dollar amount per head per month, whether I see the patients or not. That is, if my group of patients never gets sick, I am paid for doing nothing. So far so good.

However, when patients become ill or injured and require hospitalization or a 3 a.m. house call, I cannot charge for such acute-care services; I'm basically salaried, so I have to swallow the fees and be content with my per capita allowances. The philosophy is that the acute care will be a washout, inasmuch as most patients will rarely require special services.

I don't know whether this will work to my advantage or not. If I sign on as a participating physician, only time will tell. This makes me nervous because I am used to a fee-for-service arrangement. My Protestant work ethics tell me that I am entitled to be paid for what I do, not what I DON'T do. Will I be tempted to downplay illness and to provide less optimal care because of this arrangement? I hope not, because my medical training — and, again, those darned ethics — get in the way: I am supposed to take care of people who need help. Nonetheless, the situation is fraught with interesting tensions and ambivalences.

In the end, because of the risk of losing potential patients, I hitched up my breeches and signed on. I wonder

26 flu cases noted in state

DALLAS (AP) — Eight cases of Influenza A were spotted in Texas this week, giving the state 26 cases in five cities, the Flu Alert Center reported Friday.

Twenty-two of the cases have been found in San Antonio and were cultured from patients in the Austin area.

San Antonio is under alert status, the center said.

Three cases of the virus were reported in Houston and another was in Dallas. Bryan-College Station also has been affected.

Boat captain killed

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A shrimp boat crew member was apparently did not want to go on a fishing trip was in custody Saturday in connection with the slaying of an Aransas Pass boat captain, officials said.

Killed was Sandie Hall, 44, captain of the Gulf King 11, one of four dozen shrimp boats the Gulf King Seafood Co. operates from Aransas Pass.

Matthew Lee Clayborn, 53, of Aransas Pass remained in Aransas County Jail on $150,000 bond.

Police and company officials said the shooting occurred Thursday afternoon as the ship was about to depart on a three- to four-week fishing trip into the Gulf of México.

"The rig man did not want to go fishing; we understand he pulled a gun and the shooting took place," said Bob Hutchins of Gulf King.

Hutchins said he did not know why Clayborn did not want to make the trip. "The weather wasn't real favorable, but boats go out in that type of weather all the time," he said.

Sgt. Darrell Jones of the Aransas Pass Police Department said another crew member, Louis Brown, witnessed the dispute that led to the shooting.

"It appeared the victim told the suspect to get his stuff and get off the boat, and that's when Clayborn pulled the gun out of the back of his pants and shot him," Jones said.

Jones said Clayborn was arrested at the scene.

"After the shooting, the suspect ran down into the engine room, and that's where the officers found him," he said.

Jones said Clayborn told police he shot Hall in self-defense.

Hall, of Houston, was taken to Coastal Bend Hospital in Aransas Pass, where he was declared dead. He had been shot three times.

Hutchins said the two men had taken fishing trips together with-

"I talked to Brown, and he said they had all been out together on two trips previously, and Brown said there were no problems," Hutchins said. "It's real tragic. He had a young daughter and an ex-wife in Houston."

BROTHERS BROTHERS BROTHERS BROTHERS BROTHERS

Hello, we are Jay and Robert, Brothers in Christ. We have chosen to serve our Lord and Savior by presenting His word via Light Shows. Our purpose is to tune into our young people on their frequency with messages from our Lord, Jesus Christ. We use visual techniques to imprint a memorable image upon the minds of the youth.

People are influenced more by what they see and less by what they hear. We give them something they can see as well as hear. We use light projections, fades, and splash paints of Christ. It leaves a memorable impression that the youth of today can see and understand.

Our shows teach the message of Christ, visually. The visual effect stays longer than any concert or vocal group using audio as their only means of teaching.

Top drug trafficker targeted in shooting in Mexico City

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The gunmen who killed five people and wounded two others in a blazing shootout at a southside restaurant earlier this week were gunning for a leading drug trafficker, authorities said Friday.

Federal Attorney General Jorge Carpizo told reporters that the target of the attack was suspected trafficker Amado Carrillo Fuentes, who escaped harm when he and other members of his family hid under tables in the restaurant.

The restaurant gun battle was for "control of the drug market in this country," Carpizo said during a news conference Friday.

Authorities have identified Carrillo Fuentes as head of the powerful Guadalajara drug cartel, one of a number of Mexican gangs dedicated to smuggling marijuana, cocaine and other narcotics into the United States.

The various groups have grown more competitive and violent over the past year, with dozens of innocent victims — including a Roman Catholic cardinal — killed in crossfire between rival gangs.

In the most recent clash, at least 11 men armed with submachine guns barged into the Restaurant Ochoa Bali-Hai late Wednesday and opened fire indiscriminately, city judicial police said. Officers estimated that more than 100 shots were fired in a matter of minutes.

The gunmen killed three men identified as bodyguards of Carrillo Fuentes: Rosano Lopez, Alejandro Murillo Ramirez and Jose Romero Mora.

Manuel Miranda Urrutia, apparently an innocent bystander waiting for his car outside the restaurant, was killed when he was caught in the crossfire. Uniformed Police Officer Martin Martinez Pantaleon, 30, was killed trying to stop Carrillo Fuentes and some of his bodyguards when they ran over him in their car before spraying him with gunfire, authorities said.

Among the two wounded people was Miranda Urrutia's wife, Maria del Refugio Martinez. The other person was not immediately identified.

Police find rapper's video tape

NEW YORK (AP) — Rapper Tupac Shakur, in New York to film a PG-rated movie about basketball, also stars in an X-rated production apparently meant for private viewing, a law enforcement source said Friday.

Police searching Shakur's suite at the Parker Meridien Hotel last week found a 20-minute videotape which shows Shakur and a young woman engaged in a sex act, said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Police do not know who the woman is or how old she is and are trying to find her, the source said. A police spokesman declined to comment.

Police got a search warrant for Shakur's hotel room after a 20-year-old woman complained that she was sexually attacked there by the rapper and then offered to three of his friends as a "reward" for their service to him.

Shakur, 22, of Marin City, Calif., Charles Fuller, 23, of Richmond, Calif., and Ricardo Brown, 30, of Miami, were indicted on sodomy and sex abuse charges in the alleged attack. They are free on bail and police are looking for the fourth man.

Shakur's lawyer, Michael Warren, said earlier this week that police had confiscated a cassette but he did not say anything about its contents.

"They seized a lot of things that had to do with his fans, his female fans," Fuller's lawyer, Robert Ellis, said Friday.

Financial Focus

The U.S. economy can be unpredictable, and economists often disagree on what makes it move. However, certain events almost always trigger predictable economic reactions.

The Federal Reserve Board, or "Fed," is the most important controlling factor in our economy. When the Fed tightens credit, it raises the discount rate, the interest it charges on loans to member banks. Banks then raise their prime rates, the interest they charge on loans to their largest borrowers. In turn, yields also increase on short-term investments such as Treasury bills, certificates of deposit and money-market funds.

When the Fed makes such a move, it is good news for investors who rely on higher interest rates from their savings. It is bad for businesses that have to borrow at higher rates to expand or continue their operations. The result is that, as interest rates rise, the economy slows down, inventories increase, hiring decreases and workers may be laid off.

When the economy posts two consecutive quarters of decline, it is officially in a recession, which means personal income declines, consumer spending slows and income tax typically increases, and the federal deficit rises.

Initially, recessions generally result in a declining stock market. Because of higher interest rates, money that would have been invested in the stock market is directed instead into bonds or other fixed-income investments.

As a recession continues, however, inflation eases. The Fed usually loosens the availability of money by lowering interest rates, and investments such as real estate, collectibles and other equities that typically benefit from inflation begin to lose market value. The cycle begins to reverse.

As the Fed orchestrates the availability of money - and interest rates rise and fall - investments react differently. Higher interest offers savers more income but makes borrowing more expensive, and can be bad for real estate. Low interest rates can make stocks more attractive.

How can individuals invest successfully in a continuously changing economic environment? Seldom is the same investment a winner in all economic conditions. A balanced investment program of fixed-income and growth securities may be a healthy solution during all different economic climates.

U.N. official resigns

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The top U.N. official for humanitarian affairs has submitted his resignation, U.N. officials said Friday.

The humanitarian affairs office has been criticized for lack of coordination in delivering emergency aid in trouble spots around the world.

Jan Eliasson, the first [illegible] nitarian affairs, is a former Swedish ambassador who helped negotiate the cease-fire that ended the Iran-Iraq war. Eliasson plans to take a senior post in the Swedish Foreign Ministry after his resignation takes effect at the end of January.

Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali appointed Eliasson in February 1992 with a mandate to coordinate relief operations and U.N. agencies, especially to Somalia and Bosnia.

But Eliasson and Boutros-Ghali at times did not get along, Western diplomats said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

On Nov. 2, U.S. Ambassador Madeleine K. Albright criticized U.N. humanitarian relief.

South Texas rabies outbreak spreading

DALLAS (AP) — South Texas public health officials expect that a state program of mass inoculation and public education will bolster their battle against the spread of rabies by infected coyotes.

Coyotes have spread the disease quickly to domesticated animals in 13 South Texas counties.

"The first cases we saw in the southeast part of Webb County about a year ago spread quickly, then jumped to the brush country north of us," said Victor M. Oliveros, director of environmental health services for the Laredo-Webb County Health Department. "We see it affecting the San Antonio-Austin area within the next two years."

The Texas Department of Health opened a rabies prevention office in Laredo this fall. The facility will focus on rabies vaccination, disease control among wild animals and public education in the 13 affected border counties.

"What we're seeing is a shift in focus," said Rosser, director of the state Health Department's Bureau of Veterinary Public Health. "Prior to 1988, there was almost no rabies among coyotes. But since then, we've seen a new strain of the rabies virus that was first established in domestic animals along the border that was transferred to wild coyotes."

Efforts to control the outbreak are hampered by the high percentage of unvaccinated animals in the area, Rosser said.

"With the new field office in Laredo, we hope to better educate the public about immunization and improve the vaccination rate through mass immunization programs," he said.

The office will also work on development of an oral rabies vaccine for coyotes.

The border rabies epidemic among coyotes and dogs began in Starr and Hidalgo counties, then spread to 11 other border counties, Rosser said. Since 1988, 182 rabid coyotes and 180 rabid dogs have been reported in those counties.

Since 1992, 25 cases of rabies have been reported in Webb County, all but two of them coyotes, Oliveros said.

Webb County officials launched an aggressive anti-rabies campaign in spring 1992. More than 17,000 animals were vaccinated out of the approximately 25,000 domestic pets in the county.

The city Health Department also investigates each of the 500 to 600 reported animal bites reported each year. Each case is followed to ensure that anyone coming into contact with an animal possibly infected with rabies receives appropriate medical treatment, Oliveros said.

Dallas coach forgives Thanksgiving blunder

IRVING (AP) — Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson on Friday forgave Leon Lett for his incredible turkey day blunder, saying there would be no punitive action against the star-crossed defensive lineman.

Lett's mental mistake on a blocked field goal allowed Pete Stoyanovich a second-chance field goal that gave Miami a 16-14 victory over the Cowboys.

"I feel bad for him, but he will overcome it," said Johnson. "He's a big, big part of this football team and will be as long as I'm coach of the Cowboys."

Johnson added, "I'm concerned for Leon. He's a good person and a hard worker, a talented player. He's a part of this team and will be as long as he's healthy and under contract."

With three Dallas players waving their arms for nobody to touch the ball after a blocked 41-yard field goal attempt, Lett burst through two Dolphin players and hit the ball with his foot as he tried to recover it.

The Dolphins got the live ball on the 1 with three seconds left, and Stoyanovich kicked the game winner from 19 yards away.

"It was as bizarre a day as I have been in," Johnson said. "It was the worst weather I have been in. I hate snow and ice. It was very disappointing.

"But Leon's mistake was no different than an interception or a fumble or a turnover. It was only one play and shouldn't have been pointed out as the one that cost us the game."

Lett has a history of mental blunders. In Dallas' Super Bowl win over Buffalo, he was hot-dogging on a fumble return and let Don Beebe knock the ball away and out of the end zone for a touchback.

Lett was avoiding reporters and most of his teammates.

Johnson said teammates were trying to console Lett but that "he was so devastated he didn't hear anybody say anything."

Special teams captain Bill Bates said the mistake was understandable.

"I think he probably knew what happens after a blocked field goal but in the heat of the moment he forgot what to do," Bates said. "When a field goal is blocked it's like a punt if it goes beyond the line of scrimmage. If you touch the ball it's a hot potato."

The Cowboys (7-4) don't play again for 11 days and they'll need every minute of the recuperative time to get ready for Philadelphia on Dec. 6 in a Monday night special.

"We lost our first two games, won seven in a row, and now we've lost two in a row," Johnson said. "I feel we can get another winning streak going again. It will be a difficult chore. We have three of our last four games on the road."

Johnson gave the players off until next Monday.

Iowa Hawkeyes picked to play in Alamo Bowl

DALLAS (AP) — Alamo Bowl officials Friday selected Iowa to play in its inaugural game after a Southwest Conference team failed to qualify.

The SWC was forced to give up the spot reserved for its third-place finisher when No. 8 Texas A&M beat Texas 18-9 Thursday, leaving the conference only two teams with the six victories over Division I-A teams, a requirement for postseason play.

SWC Commissioner Steven Hatchell announced Thursday night his league was relinquishing its contractual berth. Friday the Alamo Bowl extended an invitation to the Hawkeyes.

"The coaches, players, staff and fans of our university are excited to take part in the football game but are particularly enthused about the opportunity to visit San Antonio," Iowa athletic director Bob Bowlsby said.

NFL roundup...

Chiefs set to battle Buffalo

by The Associated Press

Kansas City's Marty Schottenheimer, who used to play for Buffalo, is 5-1 against the Bills as a coach. The Bills' Marv Levy, who once coached the Chiefs, is 2-1 against his former team.

None of which will mean much, [illegible] play the Bills (8-2) on Sunday.

What might mean a whole lot would be Joe Montana starting at quarterback for the Chiefs, who are a game ahead of Denver and the Los Angeles Raiders in the AFC Central.

What also should mean something is Miami's victory over Dallas in Buffalo-style weather at Texas Stadium on Thanksgiving Day. The Bills (8-2) not only need to win to tie Miami for the NFL's best record, but to tie the Dolphins for first place in the AFC East.

Other NFL matchups Sunday will be Pittsburgh at Houston, New Orleans at Minnesota, San Francisco at the Los Angeles Rams, Denver at Seattle, Phoenix at the New York Giants, Tampa Bay at Green Bay, Cleveland at Atlanta, Philadelphia at Washington, the New York Jets at New England and the Los Angeles Raiders at Cincinnati.

San Diego will play at Indianapolis on Monday night.

On Thanksgiving Day, Miami beat Dallas 16-14 and Chicago beat Detroit 10-6.

Steelers at Oilers

The Oilers, riding a five-game winning streak, will be trying for only their third win in the last eight games against the Steelers, who his year either look very good or ery bad. The winner of this meetg of 6-4 teams in the Astrodome ill claim sole possession of first ace in the AFC Central.

he Saints (6-4) will be looking to ounce back from a 42-7 loss to San Francisco last Monday night agai t a team that has beaten them hree straight times at home. The Vikings (5-5) are coming off a 23-10 oss to Tampa Bay.

49ers at Rams

The 49ers (7-3), behind Steve Young, John Taylor and Jerry Rice, have scored more than 40 points in each of the last three games. Forty points would be a good month for the Rams (3-7).

Broncos at Seahawks

The last thing the Broncos (6-4) need when they're involved in a tough fight for the AFC West title is a visit to Seattle. The Seahawks (5-5) have won six of the last seven games against Denver in the Kingdome.

Cardinals at Giants

[illegible] first place by themselves in the NFC East. The Giants have won nine straight at home against the Cardinals (3-7), who come off a bye.

Buccaneers at Packers

The Packers (6-4) can move into a first-place tie with Detroit with a third straight victory in Green Bay over the Buccaneers (3-7).

Browns at Falcons

Cleveland quarterback Todd Philcox will have to be aware of Atlanta cornerback Deion Sanders. Will defenders for the Browns (5-5) also have to worry about Sanders, who last week had a 70-yard touchdown reception for the Falcons (4-6)?

Eagles at Redskins

Something should turn up positive for one of these clubs, both of [illegible] streaks. The Eagles are 4-6 and the Redskins are 2-8.

Jets at Patriots

The Jets (6-4) will be looking for a fifth straight victory for the first time since they won nine in a row in 1986. The Patriots (1-9) not only are tired of losing, but of losing close.

Raiders at Bengals

The Raiders (6-4) go into Cincinnati (0-10) with a 58-29 record against AFC Central teams. No. 59 looks good.

Jayhawks claim NIT crown

NEW YORK (AP) — On the way to last year's Final Four, Kansas coach Roy Williams spit in the Mississippi River for good luck. You can only imagine what he does for the luck he has in New York.

The sixth-ranked Jayhawks beat No. 18 Massachusetts 86-75 Friday night to win the Preseason NIT. They now have an 11-1 record in three appearances and have won eight straight games in the tournament as champions in 1989 and this year.

"I didn't do any spitting anywhere," said Williams, who has also jogged through local cemeteries and touched the tombstones of famous coaches for good luck. "I ran through Central Park twice and I saw some sights with the team, but I stayed away from spitting and looking for headstones to rub."

Kansas (4-0) avoided the upset magic Massachusetts used on top-ranked North Carolina in the semifinals.

Tournament MVP Richard Scott led six Jayhawks in double figures with 16 points. Center Greg Ostertag had 13 points and 12 rebounds, and there were contributions from the freshmen as Jacque Vaughn had 11 points and 10 assists and Scot Pollard had 10 points and 11 rebounds.

"You only get depth by playing people," Williams said. "We lost four starters from last year's team, but all the players coming back had played their share of minutes. Now Scot and Jacque are getting their time, and it can only help."

Massachusetts (3-1) could have used some help at the free throw line as the Minutemen went 18-for-37 with Lou Roe's 7-for-20 effort the worst of the lot. He went 6-for-15 from the foul line in scoring 28 points and grabbing 14 rebounds against North Carolina. Against Kansas, he had 25 points and six rebounds.

"We missed some free throws, I think 100," Massachusetts coach John Calipari said. "We just didn't have that extra half-step tonight that we did against North Carolina."

Roe, a slender 6-foot-9 forward, gave up plenty of height and weight in both games and his job was made tougher against Kansas with the absence of 6-11 freshman center Marcus Camby, who injured a knee against North Carolina and is expected to miss at least two weeks.

"I don't think I missed them because I was tired or worn down, it's a mental thing," Roe said. "I have no excuses."

Massachusetts trailed by 16 midway through the second half and got within five points three times, the last time at 76-71 with 2:48 left. But the 7-1 Ostertag had three dunks the rest of the way.

North Carolina (3-1) beat No. 9 Minnesota 90-76 in the third-place game. [illegible] points of Donald Williams.

"It wasn't a meaningless consolation game," North Carolina coach Dean Smith said. "I am excited about a win over an excellent team."

The Tar Heels opened a 74-58 lead with 7:10 to play, only to have the Golden Gophers (2-2) get within 81-76 with 2:11 left. North Carolina went 9-for-14 from the free throw line the rest of the way. [illegible] missed its last eight shots of the game.

Voshon Lenard led Minnesota with 21 points.

Triple-double pushes Denver to 112-101 win over Portland

by The Associated Press

Triple-doubles don't look like they used to. At least not yet in the 1993-94 NBA season.

Dikembe Mutombo of the Nuggets had 17 points, 13 rebounds and 11 blocked shots Friday night in Denver's 112-101 victory over Portland.

"Dikembe ... played as hard as he ever has since he has been here," Denver coach Dan Issel said.

It was the fourth triple-double in the league this season, and the third comprised of points, rebounds and blocks. There were 43 triple-doubles in the NBA last season, but only two were with points, rebounds and blocks rather than points, rebounds and assists.

Shaquille O'Neal (24 points, 28 rebounds, 15 blocks), David Robinson (43 points, 11 rebounds, 10 blocks) and Kenny Anderson (24 points, 13 rebounds, 12 assists) had the others.

The Nuggets twice built 19-point leads, the last at 49-30, but had to withstand a furious Portland rally in the second half. Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf, who finished with 28 points, put Denver ahead for good 91-89 with a pair of free throws with 7:07 left.

Bryant Stith also had 28 for Denver. The visiting Trail Blazers were led by Cliff Robinson's 28 points and 20 each by Clyde Drexler and Terry Porter.

In other games, Houston stayed undefeated with a 92-89 victory over Sacramento, Seattle did the same by beating Minnesota 110-92, Charlotte beat Milwaukee 110-99, Atlanta beat Washington 124-108, the Los Angeles Lakers beat Indiana 102-100, Chicago beat Dallas 108-85, Golden State beat Philadelphia 100-88, Utah beat New Jersey 100-97 and Miami beat Boston 101-91.

Rockets 92, Kings 89

At Sacramento, Calif., Hakeen Olajuwon scored 36 points despite a 5-of-19 first half and the Rockets went to 12-0.

Olajuwon scored 10 of Houston's final 12 points, blocked Walt Williams' shot with 12 seconds left and made the game's final points on two free throws.

Bulls 108, Mavericks 85

At Dallas, the Mavs' first sellout crowd of the season booed the home team in the third quarter as the injury-riddled Bulls opened a 35-point lead.

B.J. Armstrong scored 26 points and Toni Kukoc had a career-high 24 for Chicago.

Hornets 110, Bucks 99

At Charlotte, N.C., Milwaukee inched closer to a dubious team record — 11 straight losses.

The Bucks trailed by 18 at halftime, but cut the Hornets' lead to 102-99 with 1:09 to go. Larry Johnson then made two free throws, Alonzo Mourning blocked a dunk and Hersey Hawkins made two free throws to wrap it up.

Johnson finished with 28 points, Hawkins had 23 and Mourning 18.

SuperSonics 110
Timberwolves 92

At Minneapolis, Ricky Pierce made 10 of 14 shots and scored a season-high 28. The Sonics are two victories shy of the best start in franchise history — 12-0 at the outset of the 1982-83 season.

The Wolves cut their deficit to 16 at the end of the third quarter, but Pierce scored eight points early in the fourth and the Sonics cruised the rest of the way.

Lady Tigers handed losses at Frenship cage tournament

WOLFFORTH — Snyder's Lady Tigers were handed a pair of cage losses Friday in the second day of competition in the Frenship Turkey Classic basketball tournament.

Snyder, which received a bye for Thursday's opening round, lost to Lubbock Monterey, 60-31, in the championship quarterfinals, then fell to Odessa High, 55-36, in the consolation semifinal round.

Monterey jumped out to a 17-8 first-period advantage, then added an 18-4 second-quarter run to ice the game.

Olivia Madrid scored eight to pace SHS.

Annie Ragland scored half of Snyder's 36 in the Lady Tigers' loss to Odessa.

The OHS girls erupted for 25 second quarter points to claim a 31-12 halftime margin, then added 10 to the pad with a 14-4 third-quarter surge.

Snyder carried a 2-3 record into Saturday's 10:45 a.m. seventh-place contest against the loser of the third-round battle between Littlefield and Lorenzo.

More charges filed against Barkley

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — A California man said Charles Barkley punched him at the same pool hall-nightclub where another man said the Phoenix Suns forward punched him eight days ago.

Keith Stimson, 25, told police he knew about the first incident, which later was ruled by police to be unfounded, Lt. Mike Keeley said.

Stimson, of Hermosa Beach, Calif., told police the NBA's Most Valuable Player hit him in the mouth for no reason, Keeley said.

Hugh McElhenny, a member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame, ran 40 yards for a touchdown on his first professional carry.

Israeli troops kill second guerrilla leader

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli soldiers shot to death a young guerrilla leader in an olive grove, as merchants closed shops in the Gaza Strip, masked activists burned tires on main roads and Palestinians marched demanding revenge.

The persistent unrest threatens to hold up Israel's withdrawal from the occupied territories, and underscored the mounting signs of disillusionment among Palestinians and Israelis about the peace process.

Khaled Mustafa Zer, 25, was the second rebel leader killed this week. Riots swept the Gaza Strip on Thursday after soldiers killed Imad Aqal, a 23-year-old rebel commander and legendary figure among Palestinians.

Paramilitary police and security agents opened fire on Zer in an olive grove Friday after chasing him out of his hideout in the Arab Jerusalem suburb of Sur Bahir, witnesses and police said.

Zer was wanted for killing a Jewish settler and two soldiers, police said. The military censor suppressed the news of his death for nine hours.

Both men were leaders of Izzedine el-Qassem, the military wing of the Islamic fundamentalist Hamas, which opposes the Sept. 13 Israel-PLO accord.

In Jerusalem, residents threw stones at police who removed Zer's body. His relatives buried the bloodstained stones where his body had fallen.

A commercial strike in Aqal's memory was underway for a second straight day Friday in Gaza. Masked activists burned tires on main roads throughout the strip, Arab reports said.

About 2,000 marchers in Gaza City held a banner saying "we will take revenge," and mosque preachers in Gaza and Jerusalem called for reprisals and denounced the peace pact with Israel.

Hospital officials said 34 Palestinians were wounded by soldiers quelling stone-throwing protests on Thursday. Two were in serious condition. A third, a Palestinian visiting from Saudi Arabia, died of his wounds early Friday.

The clashes have eroded public support in Israel for the peace pact, and Rabin has suggested several times in recent weeks Israel may not stick to the Dec. 13 deadline. The redeployment is supposed to be completed by April 13.

Rabin has suggested the rioting could lead to a delay in the start of the Israeli withdrawal from the Gaza Strip.

The withdrawal is a key element of the peace accord. Many Palestinians see compliance with the deadline as an important test of its credibility.

In Norway, PLO chairman Yasser Arafat said he will do a better job keeping peace in the Gaza Strip than the Israeli army, and urged Israel to go ahead with its withdrawal next month.

State faces new questions as starved child discovered

CHICAGO (AP) — Five-year-old Clifford Triplett's favorite thing to do when he visited his grandmother was eat — chicken, spaghetti, just about anything.

On Friday the little boy was in a hospital suffering from malnutrition and dehydration that left him weighing just 18 pounds.

He also was burned and bruised. His mother and her boyfriend were in jail, charged with aggravated battery to a child.

And the state's child welfare agency — which at least twice this year has faced allegations that it badly failed an abused child — was again under scrutiny because relatives said they had reported the situation and child welfare officials did nothing.

On Thanksgiving, Clifford's mother, Aretha McKinney, took him to a hospital, saying he was passing in and out of consciousness.

Clifford weighed what a 1-year-old might weigh and had burns and bruises on his feet, head and bottom, a nursing supervisor said. He was in serious condition Friday at Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center, where doctors said he was severely malnourished and dehydrated and alerted police.

Police officer Antonio Artis saw Clifford in the hospital. "You know when they show the picture of those children starving in Somalia on TV? That's what he looked like," Artis said.

Police arrested McKinney, 25, and her live-in boyfriend, Eddie Lee Robinson, 34. Both were charged Friday with aggravated battery to a child.

Births

how many other physicians in my predicament experienced the same feelings of discomfort and uncertainty. Most, probably.

Later, for reasons that I have yet to understand, I received two boxes from U.S. Health Care via Federal Express. Each contained an apple. What is the metaphor? Does an apple a day keep the doctor away? Or the patients? Should I eat mine? Has it been injected with a sort of gene-spliced drug that will result in some mind control? Or a tranquilizer that makes me more malleable? Are the apples, in fact, merely symbols? If so, why aren't they ceramic?

I think I'll go nuts if I become obsessed with the direction medical care is taking. Better just to roll with the punches; I'm outclassed by a superior opponent.

Still, when thinking of the new health care reform, I'm reminded of the words of the humorist P.J. O'Rourke: "If you think health care is expensive now, wait until you see what it costs when it's free."

THE THREE STRONGEST HUMAN DRIVES

Four arrested by PD officers

Snyder police made four arrests Friday and early Saturday.

Police were called to a disturbance at 1:48 p.m. Friday where they arrested a 45-year-old man for assault/family violence.

At 5:48 p.m. Friday, police arrested a 50-year-old man in the 2900 block of Avenue L for public intoxication and possession of a controlled substance, Class B.

At 12:55 a.m. Saturday, officers arrested a 20-year-old man in the 2300 block of Sunset for public intoxication.

Police received a call of a man attempting to gain entry into a residence in the 900 block of 26th Street at 5:06 a.m. Saturday. Officers arrested the 35-year-old man for public intoxication and resisting arrest.

Police worked a traffic accident at 6:12 p.m. Friday at Wal-Mart. Involved were a 1993 Chevrolet driven by Reggie Price of 4604 Ave. R, a 1991 utility trailer owned by Patterson Drilling and towed by the Chevrolet, and a 1993 Dodge pickup driven by James Herrington of HC 72 Ira.

Ice melting following holiday storm

by The Associated Press

Sunny skies and warming temperatures helped melt some of the ice covering roadways across northern Texas Friday, but meteorologists warned that an overnight freeze could make travel hazardous again early Saturday.

Highways and streets became skating rinks Friday morning after sleet and freezing rain pelted the state on Thanksgiving Day.

Travel was chaotic for early morning commuters, shoppers fighting to make their way to after-Thanksgiving sales, and at airports, where passengers sought to catch flights that were earlier delayed or cancelled.

The snails-pace driving sped up throughout the day, as temperatures crept above the freezing mark into the 40s and the icy roads began to thaw.

"Everything out there is melting, but we're anticipating that all the melting sleet and water runoff will more than likely freeze over again," said James Black, of the Dallas office of the Texas Department of Transportation.

"I would advise people to get all of their traveling done before dark. By 9 p.m. it'll be back below freezing," said Skip Ely, meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Fort Worth. "Some areas protected by shade and secondary roads will still have some ice, so people should still use common sense and drive with caution."

Some 75 crews worked Thursday and Friday to sand roadways, Black said. The crews were on standby for Friday night and the rest of the holiday weekend.

Temperatures were expected to dip back down into the 20s overnight. But a warming trend should begin early next week, Ely said.

Saturday, temperatures will be in the 50s with overnight lows in the 20s and 30s. On Sunday, temperatures should warm up to the 60s. Lows will be in the 30s.

The cold temperatures threatened to cause damage to more than just ears and roads. In South Texas, harvesters worried that the freezing temperatures would [illegible]

Fred Huebinger, sales manager for Elmore and Stahl Inc. in Pharr, said a freeze predicted for Starr County could end the bell pepper season.

"It will if it gets down to 28 for two or three hours," Huebinger said.

Anti-pelt walk held

NEW YORK (AP) — Furriers watched from behind locked storefronts Friday as more than 1,000 animal-rights activists marched through New York's fur district in an annual protest against pelts.

Marchers yelled "Shame on you!" at a few passers-by they spotted wearing fur coats on Seventh Avenue, also called Fashion Avenue — though stickers on street signs changed that to "Compassion Avenue."

Vamp horror queen Elvira rode atop a hearse surrounded by black-suited men carrying signs that said "Fur is Dead."

Demos: testimony won't change vote

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The brother of Gov.-elect Christie Whitman told Democratic attorneys looking into charges of vote suppression nothing that could be used to reverse the Republican's narrow victory, the attorneys said Friday.

Webster B. "Dan" Todd Jr. testified before attorneys for the Democratic State Committee as part of a lawsuit to overturn Whitman's 26,620-vote victory over Gov. Jim Florio. Todd was questioned for four hours over two days about whether Whitman's campaign suppressed the black vote in the Nov. 2 election.

Whitman's campaign manager, Ed Rollins, had said Republicans paid black ministers and Democratic operatives $500,000 to keep them from urging blacks to vote for Florio. He later retracted the statement, and Whitman maintains that he was lying.

Todd was his sister's campaign manager before Rollins took over in late September. He repeatedly denied knowledge of any payments, according to a 137-page transcript of the deposition.

"I cannot say to you we have sufficient evidence to overturn this election," attorney Gerald Krovatin said after the deposition was over.

Todd also was questioned about a statement he made at a symposium at Princeton University two days after the election. Todd attributed Whitman's narrow victory to "getting out the vote on one side and voter sup—." He stopped himself, then continued, "and keeping the vote light in other areas."

When asked what he had planned to say, Todd replied, "I'll be damned if I know. I looked at this tape four or five times, and I don't know what I didn't say."

"Is it your testimony, then, that when you used the term 'voter sup—' you were not using the term 'voter suppression?' " Krovatin asked.

"I don't know if I was using (that word)," Todd said. "If it said, 'Voter suppression,' I would still add, keeping the vote — I'm not ashamed of 'voter suppression' as a term."

Scurry County Folks

By Shirley A. Gorman

A family reunion in Germany last summer reunited a Hermleigh resident and two of her daughters with relatives they hadn't seen in years.

Rosy Hunter, a native of Kirchheimbolanden, Germany, has lived in Scurry County for 32 years. She met her husband, Keith, while he was serving in the military.

Accompanying her for the family reunion were daughters, Kathy Swan and Linda Ingram. The trio was in Germany from July 30—Aug. 19

Getting through the airport at Frankfurt, Germany upon arrival was a nightmare, the trio said. They were essentially on their own until they collected their luggage and were processed through customs. Everyone was abrupt as they hurried through the process. They didn't have anyone to help them with their luggage because family members were not allowed into the area where they first disembarked.

To get a basket to help carry their luggage, Linda said she stood in line for a long time. When the luggage finally arrived, people converged on the scene, seemingly from out of nowhere, grabbing, pushing and shoving.

Though Linda had been first in line, she did not get a basket at first.

All the trials and tribulations paid off though, because when Rosy and her daughters arrived in Kirchheimbolanden their spirits were lifted by a big "Welcome To Germany" sign which relatives had made.

Linda and Kathy were both surprised that their cousins' children had grown so much. "We knew they were older, of course, but we had not expected so many changes," they said.

Twelve years had passed since their last visit. This time, Rosy was also reunited with a sister she had not seen for about 30 years. Rosy is one of 10 children, six still living.

Rosy still speaks German, of course, but her daughters don't. To compensate, "We often used our hands to communicate," they said.

For this visit, they observed that Kirchheimbolanden "had grown" and that everything "was closer together." They did more visiting with kinfolks than sightseeing this trip, something that has helped to cement closer relationships with family members separated by the Atlantic Ocean.

"We now keep in touch more than we did," Linda said.

They enjoyed a reunion meal at a restaurant with some 56 German relatives able to attend. For the bulk of their visit, they took turns doing things with as many relatives as they could.

"Family members made appointments with us and we had to follow a pretty strict timetable so as not to miss anyone," Linda said. They also were included in regular daily activities, such as visiting the cemetery, which they found difficult to get used to.

Germans have well-kept cemeteries because families visit the graves every day, scrubbing tombstones and placing out fresh flowers, they explained.

Kathy and Linda both had a hard time getting used to the way people drive in Germany. Speeds of 140 mph on the autobahn are not uncommon.

Also, they learned that pedestrians have no right-of-way in Germany. Cars do not yield to them.

They ate many different foods, with the emphasis on bread, soft cheeses and butter, and had to adjust to a different meal schedule. Breakfast consisted of bread and coffee, followed by lunch and a 3 p.m. cake and coffee break. At 5 p.m., they ate a snack before supper, which was usually served around 7. Snacks were eaten until bedtime.

"Everywhere we visited we were given something to eat and drink," Kathy said. Dishes served were either sweet or sour.

Cloth table cloths were changed several times each day for each meal and snack.

All drinks were served at room temperature. Ice was something Rosy said they had to ask for, and even then it consisted of a few small cubes.

Kathy and her sister often went out with their cousins while Rosy visited with her siblings. On at least one occasion they ventured out on their own because they "were hungry for a pizza."

While it wasn't pizza like they were used to, it was a change they enjoyed. However, they said some of their relatives were hurt because they thought they were not taking good enough care of them. Nothing could have been farther from the truth, because they said their German relatives were constantly fussing over them and making sure that they were comfortable, well-fed and had everything they needed.

It was quite different for the American women because they said they are not used to getting that much attention.

They remarked how clean Germany is. They did not see any litter, pehaps due in part to restaurants serving take-out food in regular dishes and silverware. Patrons pay a deposit which is returned when they return the dishes.

Housing in Germany is quite different, they said. People live in whatlook like apartment complexes, but are actually separate units. Germans have to rent garden space, but only in designated areas.

No German can build a home until they first own the land; therefore not many homes are built. When couples break up, sometimes home building projects are left unfinished, they added.

Kirchheimbolanden is an old town whose looks have been preserved by its residents. But, everything is colorful and everyone keeps a flower box filled with colorful flowers in hues of red, pink

VISIT IN GERMANY — Rosy Hunter, center, and her two daughters, Linda Ingram, left, and Kathy Swan, right, spent nearly three weeks in Germany last summer visiting family and friends and taking in a few of the sights. They enjoyed themselves so much that they hope to return someday. Since relatives are planning to visit them next, the trio is already busy planning an itinerary. Also pictured are several items they collected during their trip. (SDN Staff Photo)

A bridge player who acts

By Phillip Alder

If you dismantled the Great Pyramid of Cheops (Khufu) at Giza and used the stones to build a wall one foot thick and six feet high, how far would the wall stretch?

There are many excellent Egyptian bridge players, the best-known being Omar Sharif. Bridge is lucky to have such a visible and charming PR agent.

Today's deal, which Sharif declared, is in principle simple, but it would trip up many players. How would you play in three no-trump against West's lead of the club jack?

Omar and his partner were using the Blue Club bidding system. One club was strong and artificial, promising at least 17 points. North's response showed either an ace and a king or three kings. The rebid of one no-trump promised 18-20 points. Stayman and a bid of game concluded the auction.

Knowing dummy held four spades, West wasn't willing to break open that suit. Instead, he tried to find his partner's long suit, leading the club jack.

Sharif's immediate reaction was to finesse dummy's queen, but then he noticed that East might win with the king and return a heart. This would remove dummy's entry before declarer could unblock his club 10. Spotting the solution, Sharif won trick one with dummy's ace. Then he led a club toward his 10. He had guaranteed these nine tricks: one spade, two hearts, four diamonds and two clubs.

How long did you think the wall would be? It would extend from Los Angeles to New York. That is almost twice the length of the Great Wall of China.

Absolutely no space is wasted in Germany, Linda said. When people move into a home all they get is the basic structure. They have to have their own kitchen, cabinets and closets installed. Special shops cater to this demand.

Farm land usually extends to the very outskirts of a town. The highways are populated with countless small towns. So much so, in fact, that the three said they never got bored while traveling in Germany.

Homes in Germany are not made of wood, but rather cinderblocks. All have basements and most usually at least two levels.

Wines and some foods are kept in the basement because it is cooler, they said. Since they buy food every day, Kathy said they just have small refrigerators. Neither homes nor cars have air conditioners. Homes have huge windows and outside shutters which can be opened and closed from the inside.

While in Germany, Linda and Kathy met people who knew their dad and they visited the church where their parents were married. The church is very old and one of its claims to fame is that Mozart once played the organ there.

They also visited where their mother grew up and their grandfather worked as a tailor.

They attended a three-day wine festival, a common event. The Yellow Rose of Texas was played in their honor, they said.

They had had so much fun with bumper cars when they visited 12 years ago, that Linda said they returned last summer. Though fun, it wasn't quite the same because they did not meet the same people there.

They also ate at a McDonald's which listed beer and wine on the menu.

They were so taken by German chocolate candy that they bought 60 pounds to bring home to their children. Coming home they had acquired so many things that Rosey said she had to borrow another suitcase.

They said that German television is dominated by American programs such as Dallas, which is still very popular. Everyone still wants to see the famous Southfork Ranch, they said.

On a humorous note, Rosy and her daughters told of their misadventures with the washing machine. Rosy thought she could understand the directions, so she and her daughters decided to do the laundry by themselves. But they kept washing the same load over and over because she couldn't get it to drain and then complete the cycle.

When her sister returned home, Rosy and her daughters were still on the first of several loads of clothes waiting to be washed.

Germany does not have clothes dryers, so clothes have to be hung outside to dry. According to Rosy's sister, each piece has to be hung in a certain way on the clothesline.

Linda said that at swimming pools, they had to wear caps all the time and change their swimsuits as soon as they got out of the water.

The American visitors did lots of walking, which is quite common in Germany, they said.

They also learned that dogs are allowed inside stores as long as they are kept on a leash.

Germans have to go to school to learn how to fish before they can obtain a license, they noted.

The women said their husbands missed them so much while they were gone, that they called them every day. Still, saying good-bye after three weeks was very emotional. Linda and Kathy want to return in a few years with their husbands and children.

Kathy's family lives in Hermleigh, Linda's family resides in Hobbs, N.M.

Since some German family members will be visiting them soon, the daughters and their mother are now busy deciding what would be interesting for the relatives to see and do.

"Family members made appointments with us and we had to follow a pretty strict timetable so as not to miss anyone."

Governor Casey to return to work

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Gov. Robert P. Casey plans to be back on the job in early December, nearly six months after a heart-liver transplant, The Philadelphia Inquirer said.

The Pennsylvania Democrat plans to return before Dec. 15, the last scheduled day of the year for the state Legislature, the newspaper said Thursday, quoting unidentified administration sources.

Casey spokesman Vince Carocci said Thursday he could not confirm when Casey would be back. "But I think once we get past this weekend, anytime could be the time," he said.

Casey, 61, handed over his duties to Lt. Gov. Mark Singel before the transplant operation June 14. He underwent the transplant to treat familial amyloidosis, a rare disease that caused his liver to manufacture an abnormal protein which weakened his organs.

Weight loss center eyes 40 plus women

AUSTIN (AP) — Sandy Pitt had seen and heard all about the so-called "meat market" workout centers.

Women in tight spandex leotards. Men bulging from beneath their tank tops. And both sexes sweating furiously as they aerobicize and bench-press themselves into shape.

At 51, Ms. Pitt was looking for something a little more subdued.

"At my age, I am not out looking for a good-looking guy in a workout place, which I think is what you see in those other health centers," Ms. Pitt said. "I am just interested in keeping the body going as long as it will go."

Ms. Pitt has since found Inches-A-Weigh, an Alabama-based workout and diet center chain targeted exclusively to women. The centers gear advertising to women 40 and older, although younger women also are welcomed.

The chain has set up a center in Austin because the state capital is a modest but growing retirement community, company executives said.

"Our figures show that Austin has an increasing population of women 60 years and older," said Inches-A-Weigh Chief Executive Officer Chris Yates. "And when you look at health clubs, they are real intimidating. These ladies don't want the intimidation. So, I think that's where our program sort of meets them in the middle of weight loss and health clubs."

You won't find slogans such as, "No pain, no gain," at Inches-A-Weigh. Exercise programs are tailored to the individual and stress a gradual building up of physical exertion.

There are no aerobics classes and no weights at Inches-A-Weigh. Instead, there is an assortment of machines that clients lie down on and perform low flexibility exercises.

The machines, which look like movable doctor's tables, help loosen up muscles in preparation for a workout of simulated bicycle riding or stair climbing.

Joyce Hrapsky, who operates the Inches-A-Weigh in Austin with her husband, Ron, says the workout is ideal for older women because it helps tone muscles and shed pounds while assisting with ailments such as arthritis.

"We are trying to reach out to the women who haven't exercised in maybe 10 or 20 years," Ms. Hrapsky said. "We work with them on their diet and then offer a place to exercise. Our workouts help most anyone, but concentrate on the people with poor circulation or bad knees."

"It's an exclusive feel-good female environment," Ms. Hrapsky added.

Gwyn Johnson, assistant athletic trainer for women's athletics at the University of Texas, said many workout centers are "geared to the masses."

"For someone who is 40, 50 or 60, you can't expect them to do the same thing as a 25-year-old," Ms. Johnson said. "For the elderly, it's better if exercise is geared to them personally and is gradual."

Clients pay $29 a month for advice on their diet and unlimited workouts, made by appointment, at Inches-A-Weigh. And if you listen closely over the hum of the machines, you will even hear music from the 1950s and 1960s to satisfy the tastes of its older clientele.

"They are trying to turn my metabolism around," said 58-year-old Billie Kelley. "I am one of those people who do without lunch and my metabolism had simply slowed down to the point where I couldn't lose weight."

Betty Lane, 52, said she tried several workout centers before coming to Inches-A-Weigh with a goal of losing 40 pounds.

"Don't laugh now, but I have been at unisex places and the men have a tendency to laugh at the girls. We feel comfortale here," Ms. Lane said.

"Those other places are geared to aerobics and things like that and us older girls are just not into that. It's nice to get out there and bounce around and up and down if your body can handle it. But us older persons have to get back into shape slowly."

Man hit by bale of boxes at work to get $1.4 award

FORT WORTH (AP) — A worker who claims that he was paralyzed when he was hit by a 500-pound bale of falling boxes will receive a $1.4 million settlement, officials said.

The settlement for Mathew Mathew and his wife, Ammukutty, was reached as final arguments in the two-week were scheduled to begin before a jury.

State District Judge Ken Curry said Eastern Container Corp. and a subsidiary company, Atlantic Container Corp., agreed to the settlement Tuesday, he said.

A directed verdict was ordered in favor of Pioneer-Roberts Paper Co. and Pioneer Stimpson Inc. because no evidence was presented against those defendants, Curry said.

The 42-year-old plaintiff was hurt in May 1990, while working at Wagner Brakes in Fort Worth, said his attorney, James Stanley.

Mathew, who performed quality control, was looking into a barrel inspecting rivets when a bale of boxes struck him, Stanley said. Stanley contended that a stacking warning should have been placed on the boxes.

Curry said attorneys told him that jurors took a straw poll afterward and decided they would have voted against awarding damages to the injured worker if they had been allowed to decide the case.

Museum's cookbook ready for purchase

Three months in the making, Scurry County Museum's first cookbook is now available for purchase — just in time for the Christmas holiday.

The spiral-bound cookbook, bearing the name Now And Then There's A Recipe Worth Keeping, features around 500 recipes, including 200 desserts, compiled from county residents, including relatives of deceased residents, and from the museum's historical recipe books. Some of the recipes were also printed in the Snyder Sentinel, once the local newspaper.

Many of the recipes also include a brief history as well as a list of ingredients and cooking or baking instructions. Some recipes have been in families for generations. Many date to the early 1900s.

One of the recipes also belonged to a high school student who won the Adams Best Bakeoff contest.

Besides recipes, the cookbook also contains several helpful hints including microwave hints, meat cooking guides, measurements, equivalency charts and food amounts for large groups.

It also features kitchen hints and cleanup hints as well as an alphabatized calorie counter. All recipes are indexed and the cookbook is divided into six sections: appetizers, soups, salads and vegetables, main dishes, bread rolls, desserts and a miscellenaous section.

Ben Sum, Western Texas College art instructor, designed the cover which features a collage of Scurry County. Bonnie Ward, former WTC student and museum employee, drew an interior picture of the museum which is also included in the cookbook.

The cookbooks are priced at $8.75 each, including tax. They are available at the museum, but those interested are reminded that the museum will close Dec. 10 for the holiday and semester break. However, the cookbooks are also being sold at Mail Center Plus, Amco Medical Supply, Elizabeth Potts Realtors and Eddie's Pharmacy.

Mail orders will also be accepted for $10 each. All mail orders should be sent to Scurry County Museum, P.O. Box 696, Snyder, Tx. 79550.

All proceeds will benefit the museum.

San Antonio wants to host NAFTA office

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — San Antonio's civic and business leaders are working to ensure that the city gets a chance to host one of three offices that will oversee trade, labor and environmental agreements under NAFTA.

City leaders also believe San Antonio has a chance to be selected as site for the planned North American Development Bank, which would finance infrastructure projects primarily along the U.S.-Mexico border.

"San Antonio's image as NAFTA City USA is already well-known in the halls of Congress," said Tom Frost, chairman of CullenFrost Bankers Inc., who is heading lobbying efforts to land one of the secretariat offices and the bank.

Frost met with Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen on Nov. 18, as well as staff members in the office of U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor.

"When we walked into those offices and said San Antonio would like to be the host of the bank and secretariat, everybody already knew we were big supporters of NAFTA from way back," Frost said.

The North American Free Trade Agreement will phase out tariffs between Mexico, Canada and the United States over 15 years.

The city's support of the free trade pact before the Nov. 17 vote in the U.S. House of Representatives led many U.S. newspapers to write about San Antonio.

Mayor Nelson Wolff convened a meeting of business leaders and city officials at City Hall a week ago to target ways to capitalize on the Jan. 1 start of NAFTA.

"We don't want to lose the momentum that we gained during the debate and vote on the pact," Mayor Nelson Wolff said.

Frost said he did not know how quickly the government will act.

"We know we are going back to have one other round of presentations. I'm hopeful that will be before Christmas," he said. "Our foot is in the door and when we make the sale is up to them to decide."

Humberto Hernandez, the Mexican consul general in San Antonio, is organizing a trip to Mexico City, where city leaders hope to meet with President Carlos Salinas de Gortari.

Plans are under way to open a city of San Antonio trade office in Mexico City similar to those already in Monterrey and Guadalajara.

"We have to set our sights high, because you can bet your bottom dollar that Atlanta, Dallas and Los Angeles have their sights set as high as we do," said Henry Sauvignet.

Future of Christmas trees may lie in cloning process

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — The latest in holiday gift items, brought to you by the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station: a cloned Christmas tree.

The agency says the fake fir allows growers to save time by breeding a couple of good trees, then multiplying them.

"The cloned tree is the future for Christmas trees in the South," said grower Don Kachtik. "We only have one type of tree that grows well in Southeast Texas, the Virginia pine, so we need a good one."

Kachtik, who's among the first to begin growing the Virginia pines in Texas soil, says he has several hundred of the perfect pines ready to be cut for the holidays.

According to Kachtik, a "good" Christmas tree to the consumer is two things. Its straight trunk easily slips into a stand, and it can hold lots of ornaments on the sets of limbs that fan out from the trunk.

Growers also say their trees must grow rapidly and be immune to disease and insects.

"When we find a tree with good genetic material, we can capture improvements faster than going through the usual propagation," said Dr. Craig McKinley, who along with Dr. Ron Newton selected good "parent" trees for the experiment and developed the cloning technique.

The cloning process took about 15 months. This year's crop was potted in April 1990, then placed in a greenhouse for 6-9 months. In all, about 450 cloned trees are growing commercially in Texas, but not all are ready for trimming this year.

Union head toughs it out with airline

EULESS (AP) — Her gaze is wide and steady, her speech thoughtful and deliberate, her broad smile in ready reserve. She keeps one cool mien.

The only sign of strain in leading 21,000 scared and scattered flight attendants in a strike against American Airlines is seen in the hands of Denise Hedges, when she twists and wrings her papers or a napkin.

"I don't operate in a panic mode," said the 46-year-old Hedges, president of the Association of Professional Flight Attendants, in the midst of the recent five-day walkout.

"The way that they teach the kids to stop, look and listen before going to railroad tracks — it's a good policy to have unless you're in a burning building," she said.

The flight attendants' union went on strike against American Nov. 18 in a contract dispute involving pay, health insurance, staffing and scheduling.

The strike ended Nov. 22 after both sides agreed to binding arbitration at President Clinton's request, though not before shredding American Airlines' flight schedule and stranding tens of thousands of passengers leading into the Thanksgiving travel crunch.

Born in Waterbury, Conn., Hedges was exposed to labor unions as a child growing up in Stamford with her three younger brothers. Her father was co-founder of a local teachers' union. As a teen, she was voted the most involved female student at Stamford High School.

"I was never really considered a rabble-rouser, but at the same time I would pursue problems and try to get people on board to, in fact, understand the nature of the problem and support and help in getting it fixed," Hedges said.

Hedges said the key to her success in bringing the flight attendants' union together to the point that it could carry off the strike has been patient consensus-building, trying to separate personalities and emotion from the issues and "listen to every point of view."

"Her style is one of simple, quiet strength. She's not a yeller and a screamer, but when she says it you'd better believe, because it's absolutely true," said Patrick Hancock, a 10-year veteran flight attendant and member of the union negotiating team.

Hancock unsuccessfully ran for treasurer on the slate of officers defeated by Hedges, who took office for four years on April 1, 1992, and was appointed a negotiator by her predecessor.

"We were sort of the poster child for unions that are dysfunctional before she came along, and she was elected by a group of people that just decided our disunity was killing us. Since she came on board we have had every political group within the union say, 'You know, we've got to work together.' She's done a good job," he said.

That unity stunned most observers, who questioned whether the flight attendants, historically not a powerful group, could put together an effective job action.

American's pilots, represented by the Allied Pilots Association, were among those taken by surprise. Their union did not join the strike.

"She must have done something right, because [illegible] people are very thoroughly impressed over the level of organization and the cohesiveness that she's brought to that group," said Mike Miro, chairman of the communications committee for the pilots union.

The main complaint of critics in the flight attendants' union has been that Hedges' leadership style appears too soft or weak, especially contrasted with some past fiery leaders.

Hedges thinks that has changed because of the strike.

"When I say that I operate in a method of calm and patience, it doesn't necessarily mean that it's from weakness. I don't tend to display a temper, not normally anyway, so that has been probably viewed in a sense of a possible weakness. But on the other hand, it can be viewed in the opposite way as well," she said.

Spokesmen for American declined to comment on Hedges. During the bargaining process they accused the union of misleading and harassing its members to pressure them into the walkout, charges the union denied. The airline filed a $10 million defamation lawsuit against the union and its public relations firm. Before the strike began, the union had filed a lawsuit against American charging unfair labor practices and bad-faith bargaining.

Hedges, a 23-year veteran flight attendant and union worker since the mid-1970s, is based in Chicago but maintains an apartment in Arlington, near American's home base of Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport. Her husband and two younger children live in Colorado Springs, Colo., while her oldest child attends Southern Methodist University in Dallas. Hedges graduated from the same school in 1969 with a degree in anthropology.

The union pays her salary and expenses [illegible] during the strike — which amount to about $48,000 a year.

When Hedges signed up with American, flight attendants had to retire at age 32, remain unmarried and quit working as soon as they became pregnant, without unemployment or disability pay.

"I was one of the earlier flight attendants to be able to get pregnant and still not lose my job, but I couldn't work," she said.

Sexist attitudes toward a predominantly female workforce have left a legacy of battles to fight, Hedges said.

"I think that the pattern of bargaining along the way has basically been that flight attendants are the nice guys, they're caretakers, which they are, and they would certainly settle for less," she said.

A day after the strike's end, Hedges said she felt the group had won "a major victory" that not only will bring the union closer to its contract goals but also will build the self-esteem of the flight attendants who waged the walkout.

"It certainly boosts my morale, because I had some pretty gut-wrenching decisions to make," she said. "And of course I believed that the membership had the faith in me, but now it's been proven to me over the last couple of days."

Reactor operators receive $2 million in bonus checks

AUSTIN (AP) — Reactor operators at the South Texas Project got $2 million in bonus payments this fall although the nuclear power plant near Bay City hasn't produced electricity since February.

They're scheduled to get another $1.38 million next year under an incentive pay program that's decried as "shocking and unacceptable" by Austin City Council member Brigid Shea. Austin owns a share of the project.

Supporters of the bonuses — first promised three years ago to more than 100 operators if they stayed with the plant — say the program's effort to retain experienced workers is a boost to safety and economical, given the cost of training operators.

But Ms. Shea said she can't see a good reason for the program, whose costs are among those utilities typically charge to ratepayers.

"How on earth can they justify a bonus to their operators when the NRC (Nuclear Regulatory Commission) lists it as one of the worst plants ... in the country?" Ms. Shea said. "I can't imagine a justification for this that would hold up."

Houston Lighting & Power Co. officials defended the pay program, which HL&P initiated as the project's managing partner.

HL&P wants to get both units of the plant back up early next year, and officials say operators in the meantime are busy with systems maintenance and inspections.

"We have a considerable amount of money and effort invested in each of these individuals," said HL&P spokesman Glen Walker. "We want to do everything possible to retain their talent and expertise ... We feel that it (the program) worked very well."

Training costs for a reactor operator are more than $220,000. Additional training for a senior operator adds another $110,000, according to an Austin electric official's memorandum.

Walker also disputed Ms. Shea's description of the project as being on the NRC's "worst list." The South Texas Project is one of five nuclear power plants nationwide on the agency's watch list, a designation that means closer scrutiny by regulators.

NRC spokesman Joe Gilliland said that the agency, in its evaluation of the South Texas Project, cited management and equipment problems but found that the operators were doing a good job overall.

Walker also said the NRC has expressed concern about the amount of overtime for operators and making it desirable to attract and retain workers.

Representatives for other South Texas Project partners didn't share Ms. Shea's concern about the bonuses.

"We support anything that assures safe, reliable operation of the plant," said Corpus Christi-based Central Power and Light Co. spokesman Larry Jones.

Spokeswoman Barbara Stover of City Public Service of San Antonio said incentive programs are common in the industry and she has no objection to this one.

Milton Lee, chief operating officer of the Austin Electric Utility Department, said while he wasn't defending the program, operator turnover rates would affect HL&P's ability to operate the plant.

But John Rex, who has been in the nuclear power industry for 11 years and once worked for the South Texas Project, called the bonuses "kind of eyebrow-raising ... especially in light of the problems that they've had."

There could be an "appearance of possible impropriety" Rex said, noting that the operators "are in the absolute best position to know all of the problems at the plant."

HL&P spokesman Graham Painter said the program "is not to keep anybody quiet...Nobody wants the problems to be brought to attention so they can be fixed more than we do."

Opposites attract in marriage choice

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — He's a Democrat. She's a Republican.

His candidate won. Hers lost.

Publicly they hardly agree. Privately, friends say, they rarely disagree.

On Thanksgiving night, political strategists James Carville and Mary Matalin tied the knot, turning their three-year bipartisan courtship into a lifetime commitment.

The private, civil wedding ceremony was performed by Louisiana Supreme Court Justice Kitty Kimball. She went to law school with Carville and is the first woman to hold a seat on the state's high court.

The couple chose a string quartet to provide classical music for the event. A spokeswoman described the bride's dress as an "ivory satin narrow column gown with (an) off-shoulder draped portrait collar and detachable bustle train trimmed with satin bows."

Carville, 49, directed President Clinton's election victory. Matalin, 40, was a chief strategist in the Bush re-election campaign.

"It's unusual, it's hard to believe, it's hard to understand, but it works," said Clinton aide George Stephanopoulos, who was among the 150 guests.

The wedding came exactly one year after Carville first brought Matalin to his family home in the Louisiana town of Carville for a Cajun Thanksgiving.

It is Matalin's third marriage and Carville's first.

The setting was a French Quarter hotel. After the ceremony, the wedding party and guests were escorted by police as they walked about four blocks to a nearby restaurant. The Olympia Brass Band led the couple in a jazz parade — [illegible] — down New Orleans — down French Quarter streets that were closed to traffic.

Free speech compromised by greed

By Joseph Spear

After 202 years of fitful existence, the First Amendment to the United States Constitution could soon fall victim to a bunch of rapacious moguls who specialize in mayhem and murder.

Attorney General Janet Reno didn't put it quite like that during a Senate hearing on three bills that would regulate television violence, but to free speech freaks like myself, it amounts to the same thing. "The regulation of violence is constitutionally permissible," she said.

She also said:

"My instincts militate against governmental involvement in this area. The best solutions lie with industry officials, parents and educators. ...But if...voluntary steps are not taken and deadlines established, government should respond."

The hallowed principles of free speech and press that survived espionage acts, obscenity laws, sedition statutes, A. Mitchell Palmer, Joe McCarthy and Richard Nixon may now be felled by a handful of greedy television tycoons.

What a revolting prospect.

For four decades, the networks have been beating and bombing and shooting and stabbing their characters with increasing abandon, even as critics were warning them to cool their lust for blood money.

Three thousand studies have documented some sort of link between reel violence and real violence. The American Psychological Association estimates that children in this country witness 8,000 murders and 100,000 acts of violence before they finish elementary school.

It's just too much, said the National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence in 1969, the Surgeon General in 1972, the National Institute of Menal Health in 1982, the U.S. Attorney General's Task Force on Family Violence in 1984, the National Parent/Teacher Association in 1987 and the APA in 1992.

And how did the media barons respond? During last May's "sweeps," they collectively broadcast what is commonly regarded as the most violent month in television history.

Hence the continued interest in regulation. Can anti-violence laws be written that would transcend the constitutional guarantees of free speech and press? If you don't mind destroying these precious precepts in the process, probably.

The Communications Act of 1934, the basis of all broadcast regulation, is rooted in the notion that the public "owns" the airwaves and that the government may regulate their use in the "public interest." The Supreme Court has upheld this principle on several occasions and in 1978 it ruled that the Federal Communications Commission could regulate "indecent" broadcasts in the interest of, among other things, protecting children.

Justice John Paul Stevens held that "patently offensive, indecent material presented over the airwaves confronts the citizen, not only in public, but also in the privacy of the home, where the individual's right to be let alone plainly outweighs the First Amendment rights of an intruder."

Stevens further ruled that broadcast material is "uniquely accessible to children, even those too young to read," and that it can be regulated to protect them.

Can it not be argued that televised carnage is "patently offensive?" I think so. I also don't see why cable television cannot be regulated, since operators receive the programming they distribute to their customers via the public's airwaves.

But where would it stop? Having regulated indecency and violence, would we sooner or later be regulating political speech? Don't laugh: The Sedition Act of 1798 was passed by John Adams' Federalists specifically to silence Thomas Jefferson's Democrat-Republicans, many of whom spent some time in jail before Jefferson was elected and pardoned them.

There has to be a better solution. Why not launch a national campaign to humiliate television executives and hoot them down? Turn them into pariahs and objects of scorn.

It worked with smokers. Why not the boob tube boys?

SA Express-News on Cisneros and Senate race

Despite all the good things he has going for him, Henry Cisneros can be awfully shy about getting into the game he has chosen to play: politics.

Many people want the Clinton Cabinet member and ex-San Antonio mayor to challenge Kay Bailey Hutchison next year for the U.S. Senate. ...

There's no time like the present. At 46, Cisneros has the right mix of youth and experience. ...

The Republican Party is warning loyalists not to challenge Hutchison next year, arguing her legal problems are purely political and that she will come out of them smelling like a rose.

We believe that is foolhardy, but Cisneros could beat her even if she succeeds in court. And if Cisneros loses, Clinton would take him back, at HUD or elsewhere.

But we don't think that will happen and advise Cisneros to jump up on the stump and go for it. He is ready for the big time.

American Statesman on anti-incumbency

Publicly, at least, Republicans are making much of how the GOP's successes in the November elections mean their party is making a comeback.

But most analysts of the situation see the election results as a continuation of the anti-incumbent phenomenon that cost George Bush his job and put Bill Clinton in the White House. ...

No, the millennium has not arrived. Some of the spending cuts, campaign finance and internal reform proposals are minimal, even window dressing. But they show the word is getting out, and that none of the incumbents or potential challengers can be unmindful of the pressure being put on by the voters, who want government to be lean and honest.

In 1994, there will be 36 governorships up for grabs, as well as 34 Senate seats. The House could see a lot more turnover as well. Nobody wants to go to the voters without showing he or she is mindful that business as usual isn't being tolerated any more. And that is a bipartisan sentiment. A politician's political affiliation is becoming less important than his performance.

Lufkin Daily News on merging offices

She is right. The state treasurer's office has survived without merit for too long and has lately served as a springboard for aspiring politicians. ...

All of the reasons behind Ms. Whitehead's announcement are not yet clear, but she says the bottom line is that an undetermined amount of savings will be realized. That's reason enough.

The is not the first time such a merger has been discussed, and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and (Controller John) Sharp agree that it would save the state big money. ...

Republicans say the treasurer's office provides a much needed checks-and-balances function and that Ms. Whitehead is too dumb to realize that.

Pooey! What that office provides is paychecks for some 250 government paper shufflers who don't have enough to do. ...

Ms. Whitehead showed courage in asking that an office she could probably hold for years be eliminated.

Unfair competition

Editor:

Having been in business in Snyder for more than 40 years, I can appreciate the effort and dedication required to survive in the competitive retail business.

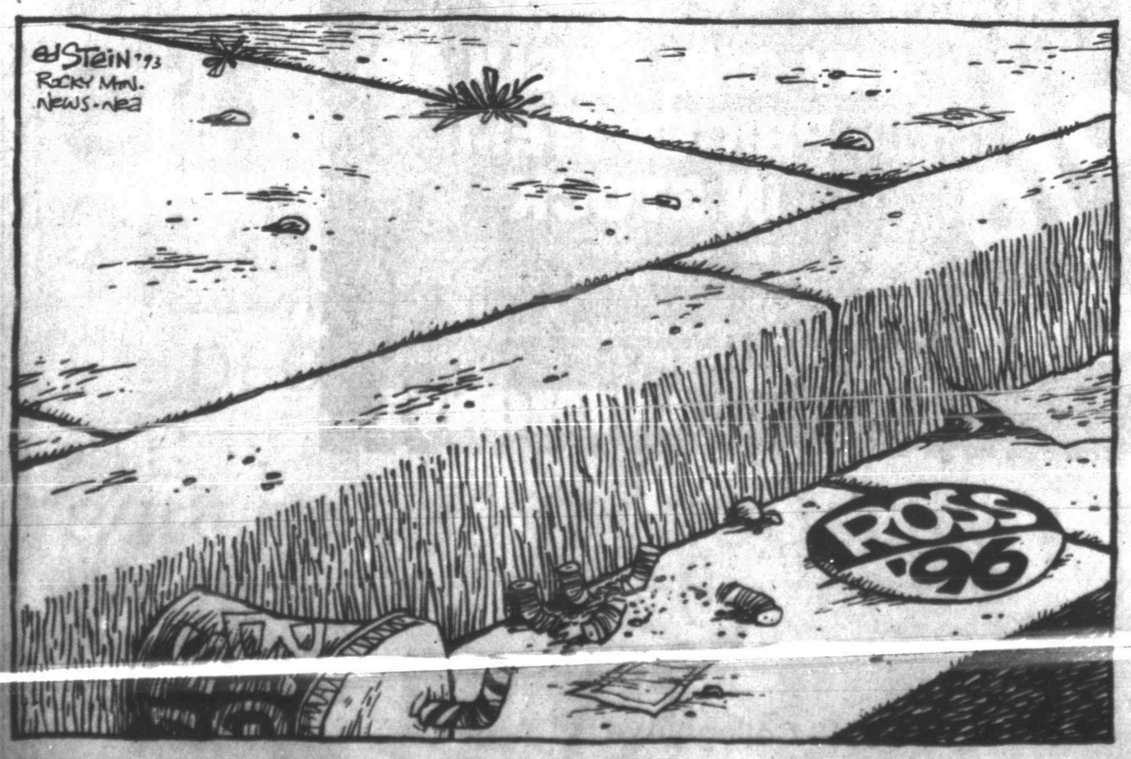
Retailers not only pay local taxes, but they are the sales tax collectors for the state and local governments. From time to time, Snyder is hit by itinerant merchants and door-to-door salesmen.

Some of these are even possibily reputable. However, many do not even have sales tax permits, much less city permits allowing them to operate inside the city.

A sales person who does not collect sales tax not only is breaking the law, but is competing unfairly in the marketplace.

A group of Snyder merchants is on the agenda to meet with the Snyder city council on Monday, Dec. 6 in an effort to discuss the itinerate merchant ordinance. As a long-time merchant in Snyder, I would urge other retailers to join us at this meeting which begins at 6 p.m. at City Hall.

Sincerely,
Norma Thompson



Country Life

By Deanie Francis Mills

Did you ever take one of those business trips that seemed snakebit from the beginning?

From the road, the place I was staying looked great — horseshoe-shaped around a pool and spa. But that's not where I was to be. My room was "around back," in a section apparently added on as an afterthought, separate from the main building. I was located upstairs in a corner room next to the stairwell.

It was pitch dark and deserted. The stairsteps were shadowy and echoed when I climbed them, lugging bags and glancing all around with the paranoid eyes of somebody who's spent too many years hanging out with cops.

The deadbolt wouldn't work. While I was struggling with it, I noticed my message button flashing and called the main desk. "Oh, it was just me," said the perky little blonde who'd checked me in. "I just wanted to make sure you got to your room safely."

Right. Plus — nobody mentioned the train. Long night, that.

By morning, feeling somewhat like a combat survivor, I was still excited because I'd managed to track down a former FBI agent (retired), who'd written a terrific book back in 1975 called "No Left Turns," filled with hilarious absurdities about working for a mammoth bureaucracy run by the egomaniacal J. Edgar Hoover. I'd traced the guy to Fort Worth and learned that he was still alive and fiesty as ever, so it was a big thrill to be able to call him up.

"I don't give interviews anymore," he snarled, "That was a whole other life for me and I'm sick of talking about it."

Though I groveled and begged a little, turning on every feminine charm I could muster, he continued to growl and, well, that was that.

On to my next interview. The current Dallas FBI field office is located at Ross and Lamar in Dallas, smack in the middle of the trendy "West End," which used to be a rundown warehouse district but has been renovated and now houses all sorts of novelty shops and stylish restaurants. It wasn't hard to find, but there was one teeny-weeny complication: it was located about two blocks from the infamous Dealey Plaza — the site of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

And this was Monday, Nov. 22.

By the time I got there, three streets were blocked off and there were thousands of people clogging the area who had come from all over the country and even from around the world to commemorate the 30th anniversary of the shooting. Nothing like a little city traffic to jump-start your day.

The agent who granted me an interview was most cordial and cooperative. She carved out two and a half hours for me, gave me a tour, and answered all of my questions.

And did not tell me a ding-dong dang thing.

[illegible] to get the woman to reveal to me any state secrets or anything. I just wanted general information about the organization and procedure for conducting investigations.

Runaround. Any journalist can spot it in a second. They think they're fooling you, but they're not. Which means my major purpose for taking the trip was a virtual waste. Especially since the oldtimer ran me off.

So, what the heck, since I was already there, I decided to leave my tormentor at the FBI Field Office and walk on down to the old School Book Depository Building and check out the grassy knoll, whatever. Because of all the anniversary folderol, I was getting sick and tired of hearing about it, but I'd never been there before even though I grew up in the city.

I got there between ceremonies, when the worst of the crowds had dispersed. The scene was eerily familiar from the countless televised images we've seen repeated through the years, and yet all too real. As I stood there and looked down over that famous street, an emotion hit me, both unexpected and powerful. I thought, "A man lost his life down there," technically, if not literally), " a family was destroyed, and our nation was shattered."

I started to tremble.

Eventually I made my way up to "The Sixth Floor," the museum which has been established at the famous site where Lee Harvey Oswald nibbled on chicken and waited for the motorcade. The actual window itself is encased in glass and preserved as it might have been on that day, but you can gaze out adjacent windows to the scene below.

A strange feeling, I can tell you.

After a moment's pause, I started watching the people who were scattered over the grass and walkways down below. Each individual seemed enclosed in his own personal, private space. They all

Free-trade transition should be shock-free

DALLAS — The North American Free Trade Agreement will go into effect New Year's Day. After the hotly contested ratification debate of recent weeks, it's important the North American economy's new era gets off to a good start.

For the most part, that means avoiding the pitfalls conjured up by free trade's foes — plant closings that shove workers into unemployment lines, environmental calamities, sudden surges of imports. The opposition won't simply melt away, and it will stand ready to blame the new agreement for anything amiss in U.S.-Mexican economic relations.

Fortunately for the United States, Mexico and Canada, it's not difficult to justify hopes that the free-trade deal will arrive without glaring problems, real or imagined.

The text of the free-trade agreement provides one reason to anticipate a relatively easy transition.

A question often posed: Why did it take 2,000 pages of lawyerly language and tables to knock down nearly all of North America's trade barriers?

The pact's heft owes to the interest in managing the shift to more open trade as painlessly as possible. All three countries wanted to avoid sudden shocks, so they agreed to remove some trade restraints gradually.

Industries ready to compete will see the free market arrive Jan. 1.

Industries most at risk of dislocation and job losses will receive up to 15 years to prepare themselves.

"Anybody who had any sensitivity qualified for a slow phase-out," said Dallas lawyer Joe "Chip" Pitts, who works on free-trade matters for Baker & McKenzie.

To ease any burden on U.S. producers, for example, tariffs on textiles and apparel will take a decade to unravel. Sugar, orange juice and other sensitive U.S. agricultural products will lose their protection over 15 years. What's more, tariffs can "snap back" to their former levels if imports surge and cause layoffs.

American industries won't have a free ride under free trade. They will have to adjust. The reality of it, however, won't hit on the first day. Just the opposite: the benefits of free trade will tend to come early, with any pain coming later and more slowly. Surely, that will help in the first few years of the new North American market.

The economic outlook for 1994 and 1995 offers a second, perhaps more important reason for optimism for a good start for free trade. Hard times are bad for business, and the trade deal will look much better if it's implemented during good times.

Recall the Canadian experience under the bilateral free-trade agreement with the United States, which entered into force Jan. 1, 1989. It caught Canada at the peak of its longest post-World War II expansion. A downturn was in the offing, no matter what.

Murray Smith, director of the Center for Trade Policy and Law at Carleton University in Ottawa, Canada's capital, acknowledges that his country endured hard times in the past four years. The reasons, he said, were high interest rates, recession in Europe and Japan and sagging prices for such staples as aluminum.

Nevertheless, free trade often took the rap. "The opposition said every job that has been lost in the Canadian economy has been because of the free-trade agreement," he said. "That just wasn't true. The incremental impact of the free-trade agreement was positive, but it was more than offset by other economic developments."

Statistics tell a story: Since 1989, Canada's exports to the United States increased 12.7 percent, and America's sales to Canada rose 13.4 percent, the U.S. Commerce Department reports. Canada ran a $10.3 billion surplus with the United States in the world's largest two-way trading relationship.

The new trade agreement figures to start in more propitious economic times. DRI-McGraw Hill Inc., a foreeasting firm in Lexington, Mass., expects next year to be the best so far in the 1990s for the U.S. economy, with growth of 3.3 percent. The same goes for Canada, with growth of 4.4 percent.

Mexico in recent months shifted toward growth policies, and the trade agreement itself will give its economy a boost. The rest of the world, moreover, will shake off its doldrums as Japan and, to a lesser extent, Europe bounce back. East Asia and Latin America have been chugging along nicely in recent years.

"We're in for a period of low inflation and economic growth," Mr. Smith said. "NAFTA could prove luckier than the (U.S.-Canada) free-trade agreement."

For the United States, the healthy economic outlook rules out a trade shock. Both exports and imports will rise by 9.1 percent in 1994, DRI-McGraw-Hill says, implying that trade will be providing jobs for American people, not putting them out of work.

In this crazy, mixed-up world, it's never wise to discount the gremlins that can pop up unexpectedly and ruin the best-laid plans. The arrival of free trade on this continent may yet be marred by a wild event. That's not the way to bet. Kid gloves for sensitive industries provide some insurance against things going awry. Perhaps more important, the economic outlook provides bright prospects for the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Suspects nabbed in turkey sting

FAIRMONT, W.Va. (AP) — Three people who showed up at a grocery store to collect free turkeys went to jail instead.

The Marion County Sheriff's Department set up a holiday sting to lure people with outstanding misdemeanor warrants.

Seven people were notified by telephone Wednesday that they had won turkeys, hams and gift certificates. They were told they had to claim the prizes at Middletown Mall Foodland that day. Only three showed up.

Sheriff's deputy Wayne Barrows was the "greeter." Dressed in plain clothes, he was at the front entrance of the store with a clipboard. After congratulating the unsuspecting suspects, he directed them to the back of the store to collect turkeys and they were arrested.

The sting team lost a fourth man, who sent his mother into the store with his driver's license. Barrows told the woman her son had to be present to win.

Chicken pox vaccine nears; physicians predicting rush

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dr. Jo White sent her son to play with a friend who had chicken pox, testing whether an experimental vaccine would protect him from the itchy rite of childhood. It did.

By next spring, all U.S. children may be so lucky, as the government gets set to approve the nation's first vaccine against a disease considered more a nuisance than a killer even though it claims more than 90 lives a year.

"Some people have wondered if the gain is worth the cost of a vaccine for chicken pox," said Dr. Samuel Katz, a pediatrician at Duke University Medical Center. "But parents are knocking on the door saying they want this vaccine."

About 3.9 million Americans, mostly children, get chicken pox every year. Caused by the highly contagious varicella virus, it typically just causes severe itching and rash.

But about 9,000 people develop complications ranging from blood infections to brain damage. An average of 92 died each year from 1987 to 1991. Children with weak immune systems and adults are most at risk.

Doctors predict Varivax will cut chicken pox to 240,000 cases a year with only four deaths. And a study sponsored by the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found Varivax would cost $157 million a year but would save almost $700 million a year in medical bills and work lost by parents of sick children.

Japan and Europe have used a version of the vaccine successfully since the mid-1980s.

City council may consider revising ambulance policy

DALLAS (AP) — Some city council members are wondering whether the city's ambulance policy needs to be reviewed since two men died after Dallas paramedics refused to transport them to the hospital.

Paul Watkins, 36, who had AIDS, died of heart failure at Baylor University Medical Center on Oct. 23, a few hours after his mother summoned an ambulance to his home. Troy Wells, 23, died of leukemia Nov. 2, a day after paramedics twice refused to transport him in an ambulance.

"Whenever something as tragic as a death happens when the city did not transport a patient, it warrants us to look at the process," said council member Chris Luna, who has asked for a Fire Department investigation in the matter.

"Clearly when you have two deaths in a two-week period it heightens our interest," Luna said.

Dr. Brady Allen, Watkin's doctor, said his patient might have been saved if he had received immediate attention.

"I don't like them questioning whether or not it was an emergency," Allen said of the paramedics.

A fire department inquiry has cleared the paramedics of wrongdoing in Wells' case. Officials are still looking into the circumstances of Watkins' death.

Fire and city officials have said a soaring demand for ambulances means paramedics must sometimes refuse service to people whose illnesses are not considered life-threatening.

"We cannot be a taxi service," council member Glenn Box, who heads the public safety committee, said of the department's policy of transporting only people with life-threatening symptoms.

Fundamentalists protest marriage

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — All that divorce trial shouting was not from the couple involved. They don't even want a divorce. The row was between Muslim ideologues and feminists, arguing loudly about points of theology and rights.

Neither Nasr Abu Zeid nor his wife was even in court Thursday.

Muslim activists brought suit in civil court to force an end to the marriage, claiming Abu Zeid is a heretic and so cannot be married to a Muslim woman.

The case has become a symbol of the battle in Egypt between secularists and militant fundamentalists. Abu Zeid, who teaches Arabic literature at Cairo University, has already lost one battle over his beliefs.

Fundamentalists successfully put pressure on the university to turn down his application for promotion to full professor.

Abu Zeid considers himself a Muslim, though a secularist. He and his wife, a teacher of French, say they love each other and want to remain married.

Thursday's session was mainly procedural, but that did not stop animated arguments outside the courtroom by dozens of supporters and opponents who gathered in a small room at the courthouse in Cairo's Giza neighborhood.

Sheik Yousef el-Badri, a Muslim preacher who supports the fundamentalist plaintiffs, spoke in the hallway, blasting Abu Zeid and his ideas.

"This professor has attacked Islam, insulted God, the Koran and the Sunna," el-Badri said, referring to Islam's holy books.

Islam allows Muslims to move against anyone who attacks Islam, he said, asserting the fundamentalists could have physically attacked Abu Zeid.

"We have not killed him. ... We chose to go to the law," el-Badri said.

The case opened in June after a group of seven Muslim fundamentalist lawyers sued Abu Zeid to end his marriage to Ibtihal Younes.

The reason cited was that Abu Zeid is an apostate, one who has denounced his religion, and cannot be married to a Muslim woman under Sharia, or Muslim law.

"He is an apostate and his marriage should be canceled because of this. They should be separated as soon as possible to avoid any sin from being committed," read papers presented in court.

The fundamentalists were angered by Abu Zeid's view that one needs to differentiate between the theory and practice of religion. This is necessary to allow for scientific progress, he holds.

The fundamentalists took this to mean total rejection of Islam's holy books. When they filed the divorce suit, Abu Zeid's wife found out about it from newspapers.

The case has come under fire from Egyptian human rights activists and intellectuals, who are under increasing pressure from the fundamentalists and feel the government is not giving enough support to secularists.

In June 1992, Muslim extremists shot and killed Farag Foda, a secularist Muslim writer who opposed the militants. Later, a cleric at state-supported Al-Azhar University gave a religious opinion that Muslim individuals can kill apostates if the government does not punish them, virtually sanctifying the shooting.

Abu Zeid himself reportedly has received death threats.

Although neither he nor his wife attended Thursday's session, some of their friends and supporters did.

"This is a ... farce. If they really succeed in ending the marriage this means that nobody has the right to think anymore and give their views," said Aida Seif el-Dawla.

stood alone, usually with arms crossed over their chests, and gazed at the sun-spangled boulevard. Though many had come with companions, no one seemed to feel like talking.

You just can't stand there without being moved.

As people emerged from the extraordinary exhibit (which was extremely well done, by the way), they were somber and quiet. Some wiped tears from their eyes.

In a sense, it is like a religious pilgrimage, in that you are excorcising a demon that evokes such a powerful sense of loss...Those of us who were old enough to remember know that these shots that were fired that day ruined more than just a golden sunny afternoon. They destroyed an innocence that had protected us through two world wars. While European nations were plundered and pommeled, we Americans were wrapped in the cocoon of two oceans — We didn't have to face a society in decline as they did.

But that one horrific afternoon punctured our gleaming bubble of invincibility. We couldn't recover from it — not after they shot Bobby and Martin, not after we were dredged through a useless war, not after we learned that Presidents could lie.

But because it happened in such a sudden and brutal manner, it made each and every one of us a victim of violent crime. We all lived through the aftermath...the tragic funeral, the assassination of the assassin, the grieving of the widow and children, the riderless horse.

These images shaped an entire generation.

To return to that place on a warm sunshiny November afternoon becomes an almost sacred journey. We grow nostalgic for the glory and the beauty of those final days. We confront our grief. All of us there are united in a common purpose. Our heritage is reinforced. We realize that, after all, we do survive the horrible. We can rebuild. And though things can never be as they were before, they can in some ways be better, And, in any respect, we are not alone.

As I left the place and pulled out in the middle of rush-hour traffic, my mind roamed over my day, and I knew then that the trip had not been a waste, after all.

Only then did I finally stop shaking.

All-woman service station to close

HAWLEY (AP) — The only all-woman, full-service filling station in Texas called it quits last Friday.

Carter's Chevron, opened in the 1940s, closed due to the prevalence of low-cost convenience stores and Environmental Protection Agency regulations regarding the station's underground fuel tanks.

The widow of the original entrepreneur, S.J. "Hooter" Carter, said a lot of people wanted to buy the station and keep it running. "But when they checked with the EPA, they backed out every time," added Katherine Carter, 76.

The station become an all-woman employer about 20 years ago when Mrs. Carter came to the firm conclusion women were a lot neater than men — and she wanted a neat and clean filling station.

Now that the station is shutting off its pumps, Mrs. Carter says she'll probably do more cooking.

"I imagine my husband and I will kill each other," quipped Linda Pack, 54, who's pumped petrol at the modest, concrete-block filling station for 14 years.

Hawley is located 12 miles north of Abilene.

Dear Abby

by Abigail Van Buren

© 1993 Universal Press Syndicate

Story of Her Lost Family Has Woman Searching for Words

DEAR ABBY: I was married at the age of 15 and had three babies before I was 20. It was a miserable marriage, so I got a divorce when I was 21. My aunt offered to adopt all three of my babies. Knowing I couldn't support them, I agreed.

During the years that followed, she refused to allow any family members to visit, except for my grandparents. In the meantime, I moved out of state. I met a wonderful man. We were married, and I told everyone I met that I never had any children.

Now — after 40 years — my children and grandchildren want to be part of my life. I am happy about this, but how do I explain or introduce them to my friends of long standing without going into detail? I am embarrassed that I gave them up so long ago, but they deserved more advantages than I could have given them at the time.

PUZZLED

DEAR PUZZLED: You have no reason to feel embarrassed; you did what you thought was best for them at the time. Since you want to make your children and grandchildren a part of your life now, there is no way you can escape questions from good friends. Call them your "family" — or your "prior family."

DEAR ABBY: My next-door neighbor and I are close friends. We've exchanged house keys for years so that when either of us is away on vacation, we have access to each other's house to water the plants, pick up the newspapers and mail, and turn lights on and off — thus diverting attention from the occupant's absence.

During a recent three-day absence, I returned home to discover that several pieces of my jewelry (mostly of sentimental value) worth about $2,000 were missing from the jewelry box on my dresser.

What are some logical scenarios to explain such a mysterious disappearance? And how should it be handled?

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR

DEAR LOVE: Perhaps the neighbor had some visitors (possibly light-fingered children who were tempted by the easy accessibility of the jewelry) who accompanied him or her when the chores were being done at your house. Or, the key was placed on a key ring and some dishonest person had the keys duplicated. Or, someone else knew that you would be out of town and somehow entered your dwelling in a manner that has yet to be discovered.

Next time, place your valuables in a bank vault or a closet with a deadbolt lock. And take the key with you. The person you should be asking for possible scenarios should be your neighbor.

(In Canada, $9.50 plus $2.50.)

DEAR ABBY: I am a boy who has been reading your column since I was 11 years old, and I have learned a lot from it.

I am now a senior in high school and I am looking forward to my graduation next spring. However, it will bring up a few family problems.

I would like to invite my grandparents (my mother's parents), who have been divorced 15 years and still cannot stand each other. Whenever they meet, they get into a fight. My own parents are also divorced. My mother and her mother are very close, but I can't invite just my grandmother without upsetting my grandfather.

Abby, I cannot imagine graduating without having both grandparents there. As much as I have looked forward to my graduation, I have also dreaded it because I knew that eventually this problem would arise.

I am signing my name, but please don't use it, as I don't want to embarrass anybody. Just sign me ...

A KID FROM ARKANSAS

DEAR KID: You are a very considerate, warmhearted young man. If your relatives can't get along with each other, it's their problem. Invite whomever you want to your graduation, and if they choose to decline, for whatever reason, it's their loss and their problem — not yours.

Congratulations. I predict that you will go far. Another "kid" from Arkansas recently made it. Good luck, and God bless you.

DEAR ABBY: About the waitress who wrote concerning children who misbehaved in restaurants, I have a solution that I personally used.

When I was a waitress in college, a mother brought in her herd. While she read a book, two of her children chased each other around the table and a toddler threw Cheerios all over the floor. This was very annoying to the other customers, not to mention the wait staff. So I turned to another waitress nearby and said (loudly enough to be heard by the mother): "I hope someone doesn't run into one of those kids and spill hot coffee on them ... remember last week when that little girl was burned all over her face?"

The mother promptly ordered her children to go sit in their chairs, and stay there.

Of course, there never was any "little girl who had her face burned," although this could very well have been a true story. Servers often carry heavy trays that are balanced on their shoulders, and they are not looking at knee-level for children running around. If parents are too worn out to discipline their children, they should stay home.

I constantly get compliments on my 3-year-old daughter's behavior and I even brag on her publicly so she'll know how proud I am of her.

C. WINGO, COPPELL, TEXAS

DEAR C. WINGO: I am sure you are speaking for many waitresses and waiters. Thanks for writing.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: Over the years, while traveling, I have had several occasions to stay as a guest in the house of someone I did not know well — the parents of my traveling companion, friends of a friend, a household of roommates, etc. Sometimes these stays have lasted two or three days.

My question: What constitutes an appropriate thank-you to one's host in this situation?

Is a thank-you card sufficient, or is one expected to leave or send a gift? I have very little money and try not to spend it on non-essential things, but I would like to acknowledge the host's generosity in a correct way. Please advise.

GUESSING GUEST

DEAR GUEST: If you are staying longer than one night, a small gift is appropriate, and it need not be expensive. To save money on shipping costs, you can either take a gift with you or buy something during your stay — flowers, a box of candy or a small plant.

To receive a collection of Abby's most memorable — and most frequently requested — poems and essays, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's "Keepers," P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Keeping an eye on Texas

High schools show hustle

More Texas students participated in football in 1992-93 than in other high school sports, but soccer shows the largest gain: 226.3 percent more boys and 167.5 percent more girls in the past 10 years.
