2 groups sue MC board

Minorities seek single-member voting districts

■ 'We've learned you don't get things unless you are part of that upper-echelon that's making the decisions,' says FOCUS founder Alma Marshall.

Two Midland minority groups on Monday filed a lawsuit against the Midland College board of trustees for single-member voting districts.

"We feel Midland College should have representation from throughout the county, from throughout the city," said Isabel Jiminez, past president of the Midland County League of United Latin American Citizens. She held up a map showing the trustees' homes, four of which are in one voting precinct.

LULAC and the Federation of Citizens United to Serve (FOCUS) filed the lawsuit, represented by San Antonio attorney Rolando Rios.

"Education is very important to minorities," Ms. Jiminez said. "We want representation on that point."

Two members of minority groups, Charlene Romero Wurtz and William Howard, already serve on the board, but that may not be enough, Ms. Jiminez said. She pointed to south Midland on the map, an area not represented by a board member's home.

"There are some minorities on the board, but we feel we could have that much more if we had single-member districts," Ms. Jiminez said.

FOCUS founder Alma Marshall said the lawsuit may send a message to the city of Midland, where the groups have been threatening a lawsuit on the same issue.

"One way or another, we will have representation," Ms. Marshall said.

"It's clear at-large voting districts in Midland County make it more difficult for African-Americans and (Hispanics) to get elected," Rios said. "The courts have found that (system) discriminates against minorities."

Retiree, 71, hits Midland's first $10,000 winner

A 71-year-old Midland retiree bought five lottery tickets Monday afternoon and promptly became Midland's first $10,000 winner in the game that has swept the state by storm since its inception last Friday.

Lawrence Wilson walked into Albertson's grocery store on Midland Drive around noon feeling lucky.

"I had a hunch that I'd win more than $2 since Saturday, but I hadn't gotten around to buying one yet," Wilson said. "I bought the five and waited until I got home to scratch them so my wife could share it with me."

Wilson, who also had a $2 winner in the batch, contained his enthusiasm until the ticket was verified at the claim center in Odessa.

"I wouldn't dare dream it was true until it went through the computer, but we were still kind of excited when we called Odessa," Wilson said.

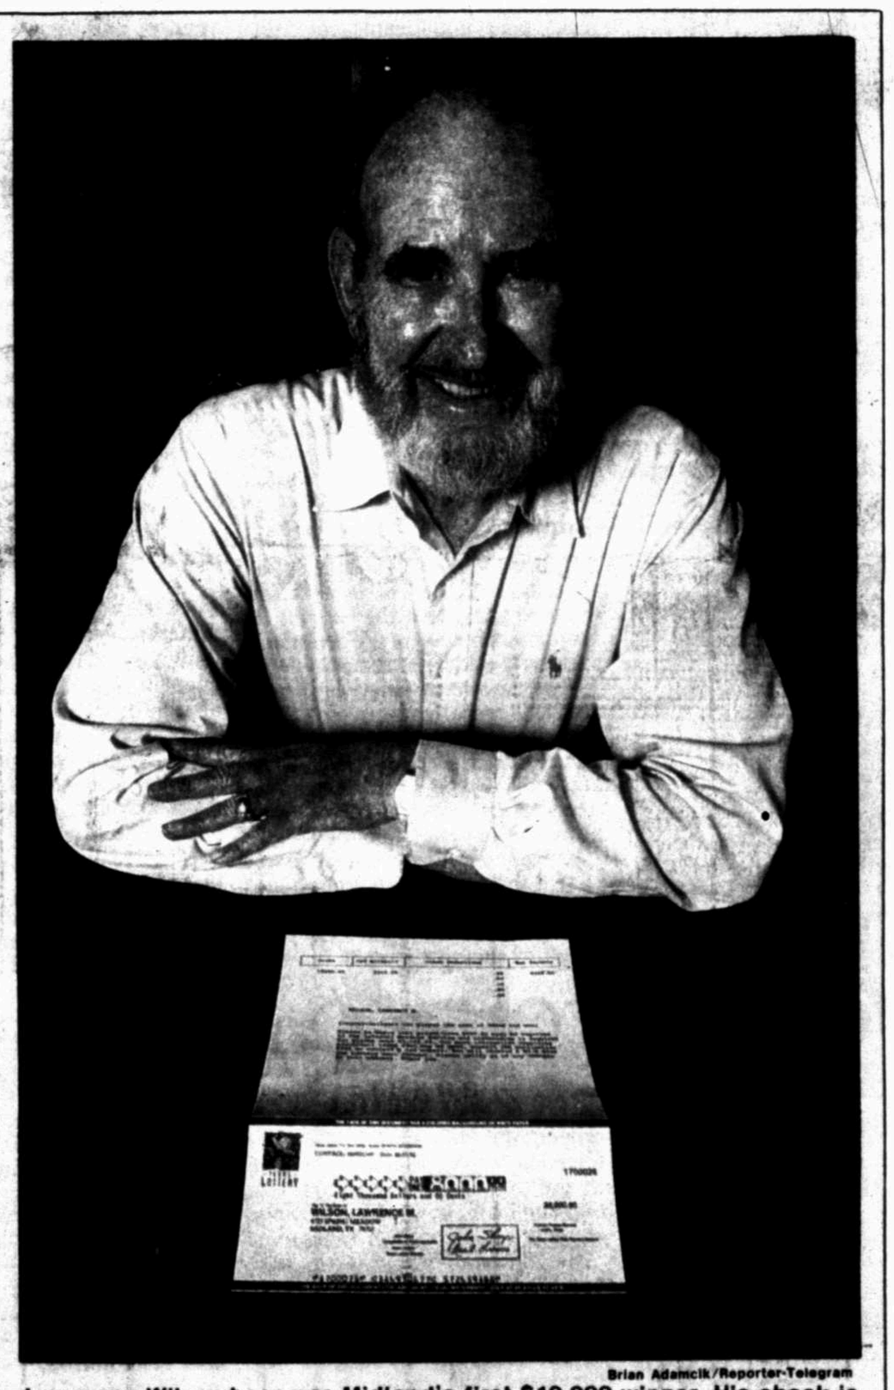

The couple already has decided what to do with the winnings.

"Yard work. We have several projects we want to get started," Wilson said. "We'll give some away to our kids and use the rest to have a little fun."

Wilson retired from the drilling department of Chevron Inc. in 1985. He and his wife reside at Meadow Park Estates.

Clinton looks for big-state primary boost

■ Poll shows Arkansas governor with slight lead over Brown; all eyes are on Perot.

Associated Press

KERMAN, Calif. — Bill Clinton, poised to clinch the Democratic nomination today, wound up the primary season here looking for a big-state boost into an expected three-way fall matchup.

Rival Jerry Brown acknowledged Clinton was on track to claim the nomination but insisted it was not too late for the party to reject the Arkansas governor and "turn this party to a winning direction."

Clinton was expected to easily go over the top in today's final six-state round of Democratic presidential primaries, with or without a win in California.

A poll released Monday showed Clinton with a slight lead over Brown in the state and President Bush the overwhelming favorite over GOP challenger Patrick Buchanan.

Ross Perot's expected independent White House bid was a larger concern for both Clinton and Bush than were Planning, zoning board approves shopping center

After developers agreed to a list of concessions and changes, Midland Planning and Zoning commissioners gave their support to allow a new north Midland shopping center.

Dallas developers plan a 48-acre center on the north side of Loop 250 between Midkiff Road and Garfield Street. Representatives said it may house a new, larger Wal-Mart store or some other large retail outlet and at least one chain restaurant.

Such development there requires that the tract be rezoned from residential to retail. It is zoned for town homes and single-family houses.

U.S. energy officials tour basin facilities

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

A contingent of congressional aides and Federal Energy Regulatory Commission staff led by FERC Commissioner Jerry Langdon toured oil and gas facilities Monday on an indoctrination tour of the oil patch.

The trip was coordinated by the Natural Gas Society of the Permian Basin and was the brainchild of Martha Hesse, former FERC commissioner. It was designed to give those involved in government a firsthand look at the workings of the oil field.

Ms. Hesse, now a gas marketing consultant in Houston, said, "Regulators in Washington live in an isolated world, and this gives them a chance to get out and kick the tires, and see how it's done."

She said it provided a chance to merge two worlds because the oil field was as strange to those in Washington as Washington was to Midlanders.

Langdon, a former Midlander, said he once wondered if such trips made a difference.

"When I made courtesy calls upon congressmen for my confirmation, I kept running into aides who had been to the Permian Basin on one of these tours, and without exception they all told me the

With sense of history, humor, three city officials take oaths

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff writer

With ceremony, a sense of history and a sense of humor, three city officials took their oaths of office on Monday while three others took their bows.

J.D. Faircloth became Midland's mayor, pledging a more open, responsive government.

"We are trying to be a more open council," he said. "People want to be more involved in their government and ... I think you'll see a significant difference in this council."

Faircloth was joined by newly elected members Claudia Egan and L.D. "Buddy" Sipes beginning their service in districts 4 and 3, respectively. Mrs. Egan is the fourth female council member in the city's history.

Only minutes before, the council had accepted the resignations of Faircloth from his at-large seat and Michael DeVaughn from the District 2 spot. Mrs. Egan supplanted former member Tom Johnston, and Carroll Thomas took his leave as mayor.

Outgoing members got engraved plaques, their wives got gifts and the council got some advice.

Bob Crane slaying

LOS ANGELES — A friend of "Hogan's Heroes" star Bob Crane who long was suspected in the actor's slaying has been arrested for investigation of murder based on evidence Arizona prosecutors claim initially was overlooked in the nearly 14-year-old case. The suspect, John Henry Carpenter, 63, denied wrongdoing Monday in the June 29, 1978, bludgeoning death of Crane in the actor's Scottsdale, Ariz. apartment. Crane, 49, had been performing in a dinner theater play in the area.

Apparent suicide

ARLINGTON — A former New Mexico resident has died from a gunshot wound to the head in Arlington, where police are treating the case as a suicide. A passerby found AnnMarie Louise Ferarri, 23, in her car in a church parking lot last Thursday, police said. She was bleeding from the right temple, officers said. She was taken by ambulance to John Peter Smith Hospital in nearby Fort Worth, where she died about six hours later, said a spokesman from the Tarrant County office of the medical examiner.

Vodka price triples

MOSCOW — Moscow's heavy drinkers were staggered even before they cracked their bottles: the cost of vodka and other spirits tripled Monday. With price controls lifted, vodka rose from 47 rubles per 15-ounce bottle to about 150 rubles. That's an increase of 39 cents to $1.25, based on the tourist exchange rate. The new price represents about three days' wages for the average worker. The government also announced it may soon free prices for bread and milk.

The pair paced the stage and rapped over three taped tracks, including their No. 1 hit "Jump."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Clouds, chance of rain on tap

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies with a 50 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high in the upper 70s with northeast wind at 10 to 20 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low in the mid-50s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Wednesday should be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-80s.

After an overnight low of 58, Monday's high reached 82 compared with the record high for that date of 101 set in 1958. The record low for that date is 48 set in 1970.

STATE

Texas was partly cloudy and mild Monday with thunderstorms active in several regions as cold air and upper-level impulses collided with warm, moist air.

Tornadoes were spotted near Port Arthur and Houston in Southeast Texas, Corpus Christi in South Texas and Sanderson in Southwest Texas.

Damage reported included the roof of Ragsdill Day Care Center in west Houston, injuring two of the 25 children inside.

An 18-month-old boy taken to Ben Taub Hospital was in stable concussion and was being examined for a possible concussion, hospital spokesman Roger Widmire said.

A 4-year-old girl taken to Spring Branch Medical Center was in satisfactory condition, said Loretta Forrest, nursing shift director.

Neither child's name was disclosed.

The twister also uprooted a tree in front of the center and downed some nearby power lines.

Slow-moving storms caused flooding in Lamb and Reagan Counties, including the city of Big Lake, and near the cities of San Angelo and Belton. Cars were reported stalled at the Interstate 35 underpass near Troy.

The Texas Rangers home game against the New York Yankees was delayed one hour and 22 minutes because of rain over Arlington Stadium as strong storms moved through the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

High temperatures Monday ranged from 60s in the Panhandle and rain-cooled East Texas to near 90 in the Lower Rio Grande Valley. At 3 p.m., readings included 68 in Amarillo and Dalhart while McAllen had 90 degrees.

Winds were south to southeasterly at 5 to 15 miles an hour ahead of a cold front invading Northwest Texas and northerly at 10 to 20 mph behind the front.

NATION

Heavy rain and thunderstorms spread from the Southwest to New England on Monday, with continued flooding in parts of Texas.

At midday, showers and thunderstorms extended across the southern Rockies, eastern Texas, the central half of the Plains, much of the Mississippi Valley, and the eastern Gulf of Mexico states.

Rain and thunderstorms also extended over eastern Pennsylvania, New York state and New England.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours up to 1 p.m. CDT included 2.14 inches at Alexandria, La.; 1.70 inches at Bryan and College Station, Texas; 1.21 inches at Shreveport, La.; 1.15 inches at Beaumont and Port Arthur, Texas; and 1.11 inches at South Weymouth, Mass.

Heavy rain was expected to cause local flooding in northwestern Louisiana and southwestern Arkansas, the weather service said.

Elsewhere, rain also extended over the northern Pacific Coast.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

PRIMARIES: Two polls show Perot's strength

their primary challengers.

The Bush administration sought to quash speculation that Secretary of State James A. Baker III would step down to help rescue the GOP re-election drive.

Baker's spokeswoman, Margaret Tutwiler, said Monday there was "absolutely nothing" to the reports. "The president and secretary of state have never had a conversation about the possibility of the secretary of state resigning," she said.

Clinton campaigned hard in California, hoping for a triumph to silence naysayers who have seen his candidacy struggle for attention during the frenzy over Perot's likely independent campaign. California will be critical to the expected three-way battle between Bush, Clinton and Perot in the fall.

Two national polls released Monday signaled Perot's upcoming strength.

An ABC-Washington Post poll of registered voters gave Perot 34 percent to 31 percent for President Bush and 29 percent to Clinton.

CBS's poll had Bush leading at 35 percent, Clinton at 27 percent and Perot at 26 percent among registered voters. Both polls had a 3 percentage point margin of error.

At a rally in Oakland, Clinton offered a scathing critique of Bush's dealings on the Earth Summit in Brazil, saying the president went along with a gutted global warming treaty "because the people who control the Bush administration's poljcies did not want to reinvest in our environment."

Earlier, Clinton tried to put a bit of emotion behind his White House bid, telling hundreds of squealing high school students in the San Joaquin Valley that he was moved to run for president because he was worried about his daughter's future.

"I got into this race for president in part because I have a 12-year-old daughter ... who means more to me than anything else in the world," he said.

"I did not want her, nor do I want you, to grow up in an America where you can't do better than your parents because we haven't given you a country worth having," Clinton said. "I want us to invest again in you and your future and your jobs and your ability to do well."

At another point, Clinton gave what he called his other big reason for running.

"I was sick and tired of seeing our young people not having the educational opportunities they deserve," Clinton said.

Greg Patterson, a school bus driver who listened to Clinton's speech, said he wasn't impressed because "it's the same old stuff." He said he was writing in Perot's name today — even though he knows his vote won't be counted — as a matter of principle.

"I want to send a message out there to get back to basics," he said.

For Brown and Buchanan, California and the other final primaries were a last hurrah, of sorts, even though their candidacies were over for all practical purposes weeks ago.

Both made last stands here, and Brown insisted he'll keep going to the convention.

"The Democratic Party is on a suicide mission unless it goes back to New York and really rethinks the track it's on and finds the best possible candidate," Brown said Monday as he wound up a bus tour around California.

Brown also announced plans to attend the Earth Summit to speak "for those whose voice cannot be heard." Bush plans to attend the summit next week, but has been criticized for demanding a watered-down agreement on global warming.

PLAN: Developers plan center north of Loop 250

al of the City Council. About a dozen residents of the neighborhood immediately to the north, Vista West, spoke out against the center as well.

The main complaints were added traffic and resulting safety hazards.

City planners also argued that approval of the plan so near the North Park shopping center immediately to the west would set a precedent for "strip zoning." That practice, locating retail outlets along major roads, is against city policy and undesirable for Midland's future growth, planners said.

Engineering Director Harvey Hansen said added traffic loads would be too much for area streets. He said some costs of development would have to be paid by the city.

"Our analysis is a major attraction like this should be located in a more convenient area," Hansen said.

But after more than three hours of a public hearing and discussion, the commission voted 5-2 in favor of the zone change.

The developers had altered their plans somewhat since first proposing them April 6, and at Monday's meeting agreed to even more concessions.

Originally, the zoning commission had voted 10-1 not to accept the plan.

Tentatively included is one large retail store of more than 100,000 square feet and space for several smaller ones. The area would be accessible only from Loop 250 or from the north on Caldera Drive. Caldera would be extended and curved southward through the center of the shopping area.

"I want to see Midland become the primary regional shopping area," said Ben Fralin of West Texas Consultants. That firm, along with local attorney Jack Ladd, represented the developers, Amresco Management of Dallas.

But some residents thought the dangers would be potentially greater than the benefits. The developers have conducted several meetings with area residents since the last proposal was denied.

"I'm getting a little tired of messing with this," said Powers Duvall, a Vista West resident who brought several petitions opposing the shopping center.

He told members of the commission that Midkiff Road at Loop 250, the major intersection just west of the proposed development, would become a very serious traffic hazard.

Duvall called the new plan, "better than what we started out with, but I still don't like it."

"I'm totally opposed to the shopping-center concept," said neighborhood resident Mike Gray. "I don't want any increased traffic in the neighborhood that I bought (a home) in."

Others echoed that view. Some worried about property values.

But the developers, after a string of traffic complaints, agreed to change their original plan that had provided access to the area from the east on Faulkner Drive. Ladd said Faulkner would not extend through the shopping center, so motorists could not use it or intersecting Whitman Drive as a path to the center.

A park has been proposed north of the shopping center, as a buffer between the stores and the homes. The commission left details of park maintenance to the city staff and council to hammer out.

City staff said the developers should provide some funds for future maintenance of the park.

The park's size was also left uncertain, as developers have yet to determine the exact location of the Caldera Drive extension, which is planned to parallel the park.

But commissioners, some with hesitation, agreed to the plan.

"I'm barely tipping the scale in favor of this," said Commissioner Mark Wellen, a local architect.

Builder Jim Leonard, who voted against the plan, said one more meeting between developers and residents might have changed his vote.

But Evelyn Gould favored the plan and commended the developers for their decision to compromise.

Ladd said the center would be an asset to the community, generating added sales tax revenues.

OATHS: Faircloth pledges a more open council

(From 1A)

Midland College President David Daniel, the keynote speaker in the ceremony, told the council to keep the process of government open and take a long-term view.

"The days have long past when decisions were made in isolation, sometimes behind closed doors," Daniel said. He urged the governing body to "be open, collaborative, and seek out opportunity for people to express themselves."

In economic development, Daniel said the council should become a strong, guiding force in creating a community-wide plan. He said decisions should be made "in the light of our future, that wonderful future that is ahead."

The community, Daniel said, should be grateful to public servants.

"We love to criticize, but we ought to spend the same amount of time in praise," he said.

But Daniel also contributed to the ceremony's humor, saying that "anyone who runs for public office should have his head examined."

Thomas, giving up the gavel and taking it home as a memento, thanked both his family and the citizens of Midland. He also thanked the outgoing members for their service and recognized the members' spouses.

"Anytime one of the council members serves, it's a real sacrifice on the part of the family and the spouse," Thomas said, recognizing Venita Faircloth, Annette Johnston, Deloris Sipes, Raymond Egan and his own wife, Georgia.

Faircloth credited Thomas with teaching him patience.

"I learned that in politics you need to be careful, you have to be patient and allow the process to work," Faircloth said. Then he recognized former mayors Ernest Angelo and Thane Akins, saying Akins influenced him to start in politics.

"So you have some of the blame," Faircloth jokingly said.

About 150 residents filled the council chambers for the ceremony, including former mayors, civic leaders and the family of new and outgoing members.

It was the fourth year the city has used the ceremony created by City Secretary Bill Clanton.

Clanton said the oath of office itself dates back 900 years to King Henry II of England. In the Texas Constitution of 1845, oath-takers had to swear that they had never participated in a duel.

"Take note, J.D.," Clanton said, teasing the new mayor.

TOUR: One purpose is 'to erode stereotypes'

same thing. They said their indoctrination trip to Midland was one of the highlights of their career and one of their most memorable experiences," Langdon said.

He said one purpose of the trip was to erode stereotypes, to demonstrate what oil towns and oil men are really about.

"Too many in Washington are convinced that people in the oil industry are a bunch of J.R. Ewings. We get a chance to show them that people in the oil business are hard-working businessmen doing a good job of preserving the nation's resources."

Langdon pointed to the recent Markey Amendment as an example of how a misunderstanding can go against the oil industry.

He said he was confident the amendment would be stripped from the Energy Bill when it goes to the House-Senate Conference Committee.

Making the trip were Langdon's advisors, Patrick H. Wood and Janice MacPherson; Robert C. Fallon, advisor to Commissioner Betsy Moler ; Gilda E. Rodriguez, advisor to Commissioner Terzic; General Counsel William S. Scherman; and associate general counsels Susan J. Court and William J. Forehlick.

Aides to members of House and Senate energy panels visiting Midland include Ross Frommer, aide to Rep. James Scheuer, D-N.Y.; Alan Steinbach, aide to Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska; and Patricia McDonald, aide to Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo.

On Monday the visitors toured the Parker & Parsley drilling rig and oil lease and the Midkiff Processing Plant, which is operated by Western Gas Resources. As part of a tour of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, they attended a cocktail buffet and had a chance to test drive a compressed natural gas-fueled vehicle provided by Don Evans, president of Tom Brown Inc.

Today the group will tour Lone Star Gas Co.'s Spraberry Station to discuss gathering, compression and electronic measurement.

Compressor Systems Inc. will then provide lunch for the group, conduct a tour of the company's manufacturing facilities, and host a presentation by David Griffin on "Wellhead to Burnertip," followed by an informal discussion.

This is the first field visit sponsored by the NGSPB, a non-profit organization based in Midland and composed of members of the natural-gas business from all over the country.

LAWSUIT: Minorities seek greater representation

(From 1A)

The groups have not recently approached Midland College about changing its system, although Ms. Jiminez said they asked repeatedly several years ago and got no response.

"It's kind of always been pushed aside," she said. "This should be nothing new."

"The bottom line is that minorities now need to be part of the decision-making process," Ms. Marshall said. "We've learned you don't get things unless you are part of that upper-echelon that's making the decisions."

Ms. Jiminez said their goal would be to get more college programs aimed at minorities. Ms. Marshall said minority board members could become role models for young people.

"Every other entity needs to go to single-member districts," Ms. Jiminez said. The college is the only local governmental body with all at-large seats, although the Midland City Council has two members elected at large.

Mayor J.D. Faircloth said he hopes the groups will wait and "let the process work" at the city level. Two appointments to that body must be made in coming weeks, one in an at-large seat.

Among options discussed at the city level is a "friendly lawsuit," in which parties agree to the settlement before the lawsuit is filed. But minorities said they will not be satisfied by any system other than single-member districts.

In 1986, Midland Independent School District lost a lawsuit forcing single-member districts. A 1984 lawsuit at the city level ended in the present system, 4-2-1 — or four members elected from districts, two at-large members and the mayor at large.

Attorney Rios said the single-member districts system is a trend statewide, including large cities like Dallas, San Antonio, Houston, Fort Worth and Lubbock.

"All of those cities were at-large at one time," he said. Rios predicted victory in the lawsuit against Midland College, saying few such lawsuits were lost.

"We hope they go ahead and settle," Ms. Jiminez said. "It's just the fair way."

In August 1990, a Dallas attorney visited Odessa and announced his intention of filing a lawsuit against the Ector County Hospital District. At the time, attorney William L. Garrett said at-large districts "violate the civil rights of minorities by diluting their votes."

Garret said "whites vote sufficiently as a bloc to enable them to usually defeat the minority group's preferred candidates."

Andy Hernandez, Southwest Voter Registration Education Project president, accompanied Garrett in 1990 and said that the Ector County lawsuit "would be one of many filed in Midland, Odessa and Lubbock." He said minorities also had considered a lawsuit against the Midland College District, which has nine members, all elected at large.

MC administrators have noted that the college has a multiracial board and has had one since the institution's inception. Currently, of the board's nine members, one is black and one is Hispanic.

MC trustees had not seen the lawsuit at press time.

World in brief

■ New vodka prices stagger Muscovites

MOSCOW — Moscow's heavy drinkers were staggered even before they cracked their bottles: the cost of vodka and other spirits tripled Monday.

With price controls lifted, vodka rose from 47 rubles per 15-ounce bottle to about 150 rubles. That's an increase of 39 cents to $1.25, based on the tourist exchange rate.

The new price represents about three days' wages for the average worker.

The government also announced it may soon free prices for bread and milk. And in yet another blow to consumers, Moscow telephone rates tripled overnight.

■ Haitian students resume demonstrations

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Police arrested four students and a radio reporter Monday as anti-government demonstrations resumed in public high schools in the capital. The U.S. Coast Guard meanwhile forcibly removed some boat people who were returned to Haiti.

Schools reopened Monday after being closed last week because of protests demanding the return of Jean-Bertrand Aristide, the elected president who was toppled in a bloody military coup in September.

Three girls were arrested at one school where plainclothes police with submachine guns scaled the wall and jumped into the courtyard.

■ U.N.: Millions of children labor worldwide

GENEVA — Hundreds of millions of children worldwide toil in fields, factories and even brothels, sacrificing their youth, health and innocence for pitiful wages, according to a new U.N. report.

The 105-page report published today by the International Labor Organization urged governments to tighten legislation against child labor and improve enforcement and education.

The most pressing concern is to remove children from the most hazardous work sites, such as glass factories, stone quarries and garbage dumps, it said.

The report said children who work are far more prone than their peers to suffer from bone deformity, malnutrition and fatigue. About half the children working in Pakistan's carpet industry die before age 12 because of malnutrition and disease, it said.

Serbian president defiant despite sanctions

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Serbia's president talked tough Monday despite world isolation and punishment of his country for its actions in Bosnia-Herzegovina, where a truce failed to halt fighting in Sarajevo.

People in the Bosnian capital rushed to cellars as Serb-led forces clashed with Muslims in the western districts, near strategic Sarajevo airport, the Tanjug news agency said. Fighting continued despite a cease-fire that was supposed to take effect at 6 p.m. (11 a.m. CDT).

The United Nations and most of the world blamed Serbia and its small ally Montenegro for the devastating war in neighboring Bosnia, and imposed tough sanctions Saturday on the two states forming the new, truncated Yugoslavia.

Snipers killed a woman and wounded two people in the afternoon in Sarajevo, and mortar shells hit the parliament building, wounding three more people, Sarajevo journalist Mladen Bosnjak told The Associated Press by phone.

At U.N. headquarters in New York, Bosnia's U.N. envoy told a news conference the world must not wait for sanctions to squeeze Serbia, but must act swiftly to ensure delivery of humanitarian aid.

"It is unrealistic to expect those huddled in bunkers and running out of food and water in Bosnia to wait until the Serbians and Montenegrans run out of gasoline," ambassador Mohamed Sacirbey said.

President Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia told Belgrade radio that parliamentary elections Sunday, boycotted by the opposition and disregarded by international observers, represented a victory over enemies at home and abroad.

The only candidates were from Milosevic's Socialist Party and allied ultranationalist groups. Results were expected Tuesday.

Milosevic said the voting demonstrated that people in the new Yugoslavia "have shown their determination to decide their fate ... and are an answer to the (anti-Yugoslav) campaign here and abroad."

But his opposition appears to be increasing.

Arafat undergoes brain surgery

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — Yasser Arafat underwent brain surgery Monday to remove blood clots caused by an April plane crash, an operation that underscored the PLO's dependency on him as its sole leader. Doctors said they expected him to recover fully.

"He is doing very well," said Arafat's private physician, Dr. Ashraf Kurdi, who added that the situation had not been "life-threatening."

Arafat, now 62, has headed the Palestine Liberation Organization for 23 years, and has publicly designated no successor. Two of his key lieutenants have been assassinated since 1988, leaving the PLO with no strong candidate to take over.

The PLO hastened Monday to calm Palestinians' fears for their leader.

Dr. Yousef Ksous, director of medical services at King Hussein Medical Center, said Arafat was in "good, stable condition."

Brazil media attacks U.S.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (NYT) — The Earth Summit officially opens here on Wednesday, but already "villain," "party pooper" and "Uncle Grubby" are being used to describe the Bush administration, reviving anti-American sentiment rarely seen in international forums since the Vietnam War.

"The mood in Brazil is that the United States will be the biggest villain of the conference," Fabio Feldman, a Social Democratic congressman in Brazil, said on Monday. "U.S. intransigence is recreating the polarized atmosphere of the 1960s: all civil society and the press against the U.S."

Traditionally centrist Brazilian magazines and newspapers are taking an increasingly harsh tone, accusing the Bush administration of draining content from what Brazilians proudly predict to be the largest gathering of heads of state in history.

Calling President Bush "Uncle Grubby" and "Mr. Smoke," Veja, a Brazilian newsweekly, told its million readers on Sunday, "Bush comes to Rio as Earth Summit enemy."

In contrast, Japan was hailed as the world's "first environmental superpower."

The hostility boiled over on Saturday with the news that Bush would not sign a bio-diversity treaty when he comes here June 11 to 13. Bush only agreed to appear briefly after timetables and targets were withdrawn from the text of a second treaty to be signed here, on climate change.

"Our feeling is that the world is doing what it should to organize these vast areas, and that the U.S. is not prepared to join, that the U.S. is isolated," said Marco Azamabuja, Brazil's chief negotiator.

Delta Electronics now has capacity for computer monitor repair

Delta Electronics is not a retailer, but a service and repair company. They give tender loving care to TVs, camcorders, VCRs, home and auto stereos, microwave ovens and computer monitors in need of repair.

Even the best-oiled machines sometimes break down. And when they do, their owners want them repaired quickly and effectively.

That's when it's good to know that TVs, VCRs, home and car stereos, camcorders and computer monitors in need of service receive tender loving care at Delta Electronics.

In fact, Delta Electronics just recently announced that they now have the electronic capability to repair all makes and models of computer monitors. They have made quite a commitment to the new service — by purchasing several thousand dollars of equipment for trouble shooting and repair of monitors.

Also, they have recently become factory authorized to service Sharp and Quasar VHS camcorders. Soon, Delta Electronics will be camcorder-factory authorized by Sylvania, Magnavox, Panasonic and Hitachi as well.

Because Delta is not a retail organization but a maintenance company, consumers can be assured that every effort will be made to repair their existing equipment. The only thing Delta sells is quality service.

Whatever brand of equipment that's in need of repair, Delta can probably help. They offer out-of-warranty repairs as well as carry-in factory repairs on more than 34 major brands of equipment.

The company's 15 employees include a full-time parts staff and a full-time customer service department. They provide the finest in professional service and support.

Efficiency is the company's byword. They use an on-line computer for quick and accurate accounting and for control of the customer's electronic equipment. Because suppliers and warranty companies are located throughout the country, Delta uses faxsimile equipment as an added tool to expedite part ordering and to process claims.

The owners of Delta Electronics are Ed Huwa and Denny Mills. They have more than 60 years combined experience in the electronics field.

Huwa, a retired Air Force senior noncommissioned officer, has vast knowledge and experience in the electronic repair business. In fact, in every nationwide competition held by Sharp Electronic Corporation from 1989 to 1992, he has been designated one of the top 10 television technicians in the country.

Mills also retired from the Air Force as a senior noncommissioned officer. His forte is management and administration. By concentrating exclusively on this area of the business, he can efficiently oversee overall operations at both Delta locations.

Delta Electronics of Midland, which has been in business for over five years, has a parent organization — 12-year-old Delta Electronics of San Angelo. From these two locations the company services a lot of happy consumers both in West Texas and eastern New Mexico.

Huwa, Mills and all the folks at Delta are proud of their company and take a great deal of pride in their work. They are enthusiastic about providing professional service.

Delta Electronics is located at the Midkiff Business Center, 1308 S. Midkiff Rd, suite 303. Hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday. Call them at 683-3582.

Pat Walker presents total, easy-to-follow weight loss program

Everyone knows that a sensible diet and exercise are the keys to good health. But a lot of times, when people find themselves wanting to lose some pounds, the very thought of "dieting and exercising" seems overwhelming. So they'll ignore the added weight rather than put themselves through the "rigors" of a diet and exercise program.

Too bad they haven't heard of Pat Walker's Figure Perfection Salon.

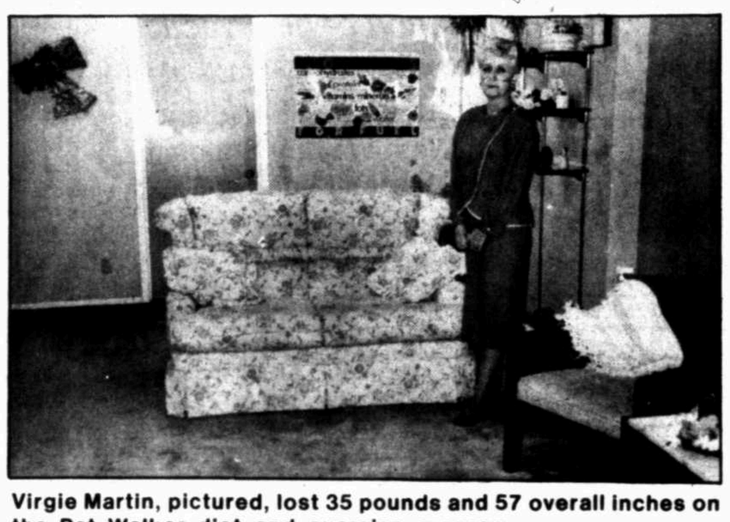

Because Pat Walker offers a nutrition program that involves eating three square meals (of real food) a day and a passive exercise program that takes off inches, tightens muscles and relaxes the participant at the same time.

The first part of the Pat Walker Program deals with diet. They offer a nutrition course that involves learning how to eat the foods you love the correct way.

Most diets fail because they don't let dieters eat enough, or eat the food they love. So dieters find themselves skipping meals, skipping entire food groups essential to good health. Nutritional balances can, in fact, become dangerously upset.

With the Pat Walker Program, dieters can enjoy three good-sized, balanced meals a day (including dessert), lots and lots of food choices, and still lose weight. The secret lies in portions, timing and food group combinations. That way the body can metabolize the food efficiently, leading to the burning of calories — weight loss without pain.

Along with the diet program Pat Walker recommends at least three 30-minute sessions of exercise per week. In this way, while the dieter loses pounds, the body becomes firmer and well-toned. Only the fat, not the muscle, disappears.

Virgie Martin, pictured, lost 35 pounds and 57 overall inches on the Pat Walker diet and exercise program.

The exercises are done with the Symetricon Unit system. All units, incidentally, are in private spaces so participants can relax while enjoying the stimulation of complete body exercise.

The equipment has five settings that lead clients, step-by-step, to exercising their entire bodies — literally from head to foot. Step one exercise the upper part of the body. Step two works toward trimming the waist, hips, thighs and upper abdomen. Step three emphasizes reducing hip size while continuing to work on waist and thighs and beginning to exercise the under-part of arms. Step four concentrates on the entire leg area. Last is the "cool down" phase which produces a feeling of complete relaxation. Another benefit — exercise with the Symetricon also stimulates circulation.

And now, Pat Walker's is offering special prices for a limited time. For $100 per month, clients have access to unlimited exercise with the Symetricon equipment. Limited sessions on a weekly or monthly basis can also be purchased. For one session the price is $6. Clients over 65 can have a single session for $5.

For those who want to lose the pallor of winter, two tanning beds are also available.

"The combination of exercise and our diet really works," said Pat Walker manager Frankie McMorries. "The exercise is relaxing — the eating is good. You're never deprived of anything you really like."

Pat Walker Figure Perfection & Tanning Salon, Int'l is located at 14 Oakridge Square (at the corner of Garfield and Wadley, behind Pizza Hut) in Midland. Hours are 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday and 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturdays. For more information call 570-0136.

Mid-West Door & Window enhances home's beauty, value

If home improvements are on your list of "things to do," look to the experts at Mid-West Door & Window. Whether it's siding, gutters, replacement or storm windows, skylights, patio and entry doors, storm doors, sunscreens or plain screens, Mid-West has a complete line of quality products to choose from. All of which can enhance the beauty of your home as well as increase its value and energy efficiency.

Mid-West offers replacement windows in a variety of styles and sizes from several manufacturers. Whether you want wooden or aluminum framed windows, the options are great. Tinted and insulated glass, thermal break aluminum frames, low maintenance clad exteriors on wooden windows, grilles and many more features are available in double or single hung, sliding, fixed picture windows, casements, awning and the ever-popular bay and bow windows.

Skylights and roof windows are a relatively simple way to light up any room, especially one in the interior part of the home. They are available with clear or tinted glass or acrylic domes. Some roof windows are available with electric operators.

Storm windows are another specialty at Mid-West Door & Window. These aluminum windows mount to the outside of the home's existing windows and are available in different finishes and processes to allow you to pick the one that best suits your home and your pocketbook. Storm windows are a protective investment in regard to heating and cooling, dust, protection from hail, noise and other elements. Mid-West sells only custom-fitted storm windows to assure the best fit and the least amount of air and dust infiltration.

Today's homeowner must always look to the future when remodeling or doing home improvements. In today's resale market, a home's "curb appeal" has become most important. What better way to accomplish this than with steel siding installed by the experts at Mid-West Door & Window. Siding, soffit and fascia can make your home virtually maintenance-free as well. Steel siding is available in a variety of beautiful colors and styles. It gives a home the appearance of real wood plus the strength and durability of steel.

A new entry door is another way to add "curb appeal" to a home. Mid-West offers doors of all styles from the elegance of beautiful wood with leaded glass to the Peachtree steel doors for the harshest exposures. The Peachtree steel doors can be plain and simple, or, by installing Visador Lites with leaded and beveled glass, they can fit into any decor.

One of the most popular home improvement projects today is the replacement of old, worn-out sliding patio doors. Most of these older doors are single-glazed, drafty and extremely inefficient. Mid-West has the aluminum sliding patio doors with insulated glass and frames in either white or bronze, or the popular wood doors that are hinged with either one or both doors opening. These are available with a clad exterior to reduce maintenance and protect the wood. Regardless of the style you choose, you can be assured that your door will operate properly, be air-tight and beautify your home.

Mid-West can also make aluminum screens or rescreen existing frames. Also featured are storm doors from the practical to the elegant. The "Forever Guard" security storm door is quickly becoming a favorite for its beauty and security features. Mid-West also sells and installs gutter.

Nostalgia, superstition may resurrect Mao

By Nicholas D. Kristof
N.Y. Times News Service

The Chinese pantheon is cluttered with thousands of folk gods, rather like saints in the West, to whom people pray fro intervention.

BEIJING — In his lifetime, Mao Tse-tung reshaped a nation and saw his image dance on lapel buttons of hundreds of millions of fervent supporters. But now, 15 years after his death, he has scored an even more remarkable achievement.

"He's become a god," a taxi driver said matter-of-factly, pointing to the Mao portrait dangling like an amulet from his rear-view mirror.

Turning Mao into a god is not so peculiar to Chinese as it might seem to Westerners. The Chinese pantheon is cluttered with thousands of folk gods, rather like saints in the West, to whom people pray for intervention: to relieve illness, to grant a son, to protect from demons.

Many of these gods — like Mazu, who protects fishermen, or Guan Gong, who looks after many restaurants and shops — were apparently historical figures who lived centuries ago. Deification is more unusual for recent figures, and Mao may be the first atheist to become a god.

The most obvious signs of Mao's new status are the photos of him that millions of car and truck drivers display on their vehicles as good-luck charms. In some areas, a third or more of the vehicles bear the Mao portrait, and, throughout China, stories buzz of people surving miraculously from terrible accidents because of their Mao photos.

"I heard there was a convoy of 15 cars, and every one got in a bad accident except the two that had Chairman Mao's picture," said a 29-year-old taxi driver in Beijing. "And in some places, like Shandong Province, I hear that for traffic safety reasons they don't even let you on the road unless you've got your Chairman Mao photo out."

Of course, not everyone believes in the divinity of Mao, and some display his image simply because it is the trendy thing to do. But many drivers all over China say they hang up a Mao portrait mainly for protection against bad luck.

"It started in the south, and people found that cars displaying Chairman Mao's photo hardly ever have accidents," said a 40-year-old driver from Hebei Province. "So it spread throughout the country."

Gods come and go in China, and it is unclear whether Mao will remain in the pantheon for long. In Guangzhou, the southern city where taxi drivers first started displaying the Mao portraits, the trend seems to be passing and fewer Mao images are visible now than a year ago.

In any case, the deification of Mao reverses a trend of gradually demystifying the chairman, who led the communist revolution in 1949 and dominated China until his death in 1976. In the 1980s, official newspapers carried sharp criticisms of Mao, and most institutions and cities removed his sculptures from prominent places.

Some Chinese, particularly intellectuals, revile Mao for his disastrous economic policies and repression.

During the Tiananmen student movement in 1989, three protesters expressed their distaste for him by throwing paint at his enormous portrait overlooking Tiananmen Square.

Just hours after the portrait had been defaced, the heavens opened up with a drenching rain. That storm, believers say, was the first clear indication of Mao's divinity.

Pictures of Mao started appearing in cars and shops in Guangzhou in 1990 and then spread throughout the country. Some drivers say that they don't fully believe in the cult, but that a laminated Mao photo at 40 cents is cheap insurance — just in case.

"Everybody else is doing it, so I thought it'd be a good idea, too," said a Beijing taxi driver. "It's high fashion."

Sandwich Co.: great breakfasts, lunches, catering, delivery

A comfortable atmosphere, good food at a fair price and friendly service encompasses the philosophy of The Sandwich Co. owner, Tom Ochs. "More than anything else, we're concerned with customer satisfaction," he said.

To keep his customers happy, Ochs makes sure that he's a "hands-on" manager. "I'm always available," he said. "In the kitchen, in the front, talking to customers, helping out in the kitchen. I want to personally make sure our customers get the absolute best. By that I mean the freshest ingredients and as much delicious homemade food, like our soups, as possible. Not to speak of good service."

The absolute best includes dynamite breakfasts, served from 7 to 10 a.m. every Monday through Friday. Several delicious combinations (like two eggs, two pieces of bacon, two pancakes and fresh-ground coffee or tea) are only $2.99. Breakfast offerings also include meat and cheese croissants, omelettes, bagels, cereal, hash browns and so on — all very reasonably priced.

Lunches, served from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. every weekday, present customers with a large selection of scrumptious sandwiches, including hoagies, croissants, burgers and clubs on various kinds of breads. Side orders include tasty homemade potato salad and soup.

For those too busy to "go out" for lunch, The Sandwich Co. offers free delivery in the downtown area from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The Sandwich Co. also offers catering for all occasions. This can mean anything from a luncheon for four to a function involving 100 people. Catering can include relish trays, sandwich and meat trays cheese, fruit, vegetable and party trays as well as box lunches or specialized dishes. He'll be happy to work out menus to your specifications.

Ochs brings an impressive background in restaurant management to The Sandwich Co. He began his career as a waiter at Harrigan's in Lubbock. After a couple of years he moved on to The Hilton where, in the course of five years, he functioned as sous chef, executive chef, assistant food and beverage director and bar manager. "I learned a lot about serving large numbers of people with varied menu themes at the Hilton," he said. "That's why I feel so comfortable with catering."

After the Hilton, Ochs functioned as a manager of an Italian Restaurant for three years. He then returned to Midland as manager the Bar-B-Q Baron, Inc. for over two years.

Last December he purchased The Sandwich Co. "We've kept essentially the same menu. We don't want to disappoint our regular customers. We have added a few things and we are serving larger portions and side orders of homemade potato salad or soup with most sandwiches, though," Ochs said. "What I'd really like is to hear from our customers, and our customers-to-be — I'd like to know what's not on the menu that they'd like to see there. What we can add or improve to their satisfaction.

The Sandwich Co. is open from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. The restaurant can be used for private parties after-hours and on weekends. For more information call 685-3488. The restaurant is located at 111 W. Wall St. in Midland. Major credit cards accepted.

The Sandwich Co. owner Tom Ochs helps one of his many happy customers. The restaurant is open for breakfast and lunch weekdays and is available for private functions after-hours and on weekends.

Filipino leader needs solidarity

Elections in the Philippines are frustrating, even chaotic affairs. There were seven presidential contenders among 17,000 local candidates covering 7,100 islands. Former Defense Minister Fidel Ramos appears to be leading, with about a fourth of the vote in an unofficial count. If Congress certifies his victory, Ramos will succeed President Corazon Aquino, who endorsed him.

It's a tenuous yet not unpromising outcome.

Americans know Ramos as the military commander who broke with Ferdinand Marcos and helped assure the success of Mrs. Aquino's uprising in 1986. On seven occasions he came to her support by overcoming attempted coups.

A West Point graduate who preached military professionalism, Ramos was less successful in curbing human rights abuses by a freewheeling army pitted against a leftist insurgency.

Doubts persist about Ramos' complicity with the Marcos tyranny as commander of the notorious Philippine Constabulary. Nor does his own record yet suggest that he can give his country what it sorely missed under Mrs. Aquino: leadership in carrying out fundamental reforms in a quasi-feudal society.

But Ramos has loyally supported constitutional government. His first test will be to reach out to rival democrats, initially by demonstrating that his victory was fairly won.

Hearteningly, Ramos' most vigorous challenger is Miriam Defensor Santiago, the scourge of crooks, who according to the unofficial count has carried Manila. Mrs. Santiago's charges of massive fraud at the polls are so far uncorroborated; yet she speaks for an aroused constituency that Ramos would be wise to enlist in his own cause.

With the end of the Cold War, Washington's strategic interest in the Philippines has sharply diminished. Despite Mrs. Aquino's pleas, the Philippine Senate voted against renewing the U.S. lease on the huge naval base at Subic Bay.

But the American connection rests more fundamentally on a shared history and common democratic values. As he addresses a neglected social and economic agenda, Ramos warrants sympathy. American concern was crucial in enabling Mrs. Aquino to face down military rebels; her elected successor deserves the same solidarity.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Private enterprise rescues education

Christopher Whittle and Benno C. Schmidt are out to reinvent American education — and why not, you ask, eyeing the gear-stripped product we are using.

Murchison

Whittle, chairman of Whittle Communications, and Schmidt, president of Yale until a few days ago, plan to set up by 1996 a nationwide system of private schools, with an initial capacity of 100,000 students. If the idea pans out, there could be 1,000 schools by the year 2010, day-care level through high school.

What are we talking about here — schools for students named Branson and Jessica, with blazer patches and Chamonix spring breaks for all? In today's student parlance: Not! Tuition in the Whittle schools will be around $5,500 a year, which is about the per-pupil cost of a public education. An estimated 20 percent of the students will receive scholarships. Costs will be lower than in the public schools because there will be fewer teachers and bureaucrats and more technology and volunteers.

The new system, called the Edison Project, is serious. Whittle Communications, Time Warner, Philips Electronics N.V. of the Netherlands and Associated Newspapers of Britain are putting up $60 million to make it happen. Now they have recruited Yale's president to lead them.

Eyebrows in the, um, educational community shoot up. Can such a project pay? There seems no reason it can't if, on good marketplace principles, it is well designed, economical and accountable to its custome:

The discipline of the marketplace is what the public schools have lacked conspicuously. We pour our tax dollars into the educational watering can and beseech a merciful God that a few random flowers spring up.

Naturally there is recourse — for the affluent or the determinedly sacrificial. They can go on paying the tax dollars for other people's kids but put their own in private school. Many do this now, including poor people and, interestingly, public school teachers. Another increasingly popular alternative is to teach the kids at home.

No wonder. Public schools have "dumbed down" the texts and the tests. Still, classrooms aren't even safe — a logical consequence of emphasizing things other than the sharpening of the mental faculties and the civilizing of the instincts.

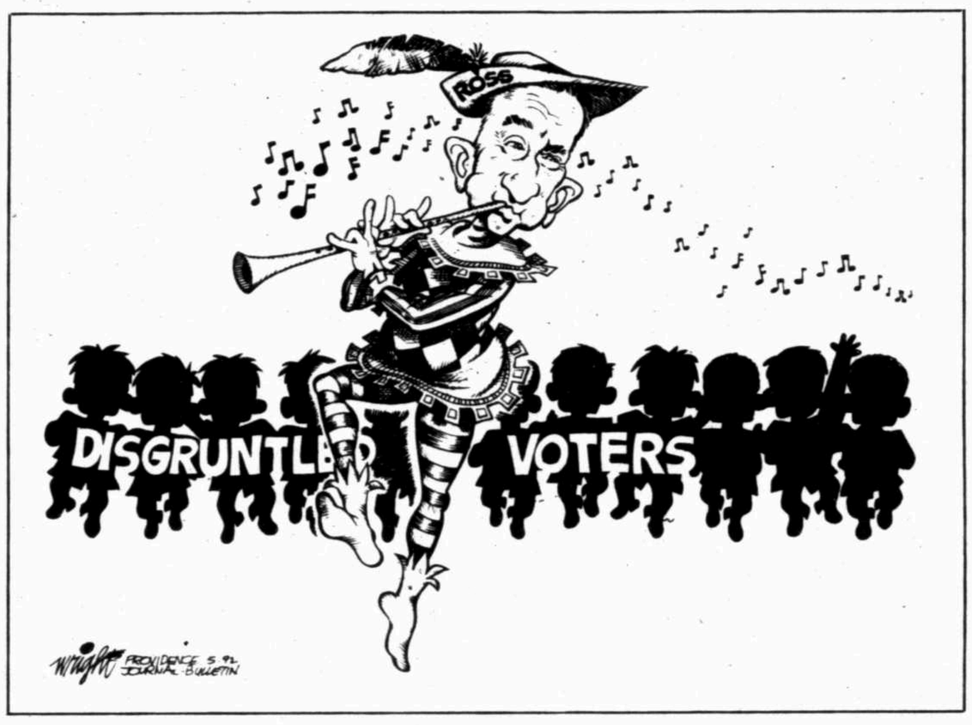

For this country to get anywhere in the 21st century, the public school monopoly has to be smashed. The Edison Project doesn't have in mind putting the public schools out of business (as if it could do so anyway!). What it hopes to offer is appealing, affordable alternatives, such as we consumers enjoy now in VCRs and tomato soups.

The Whittle-Edison people, being responsible only to their investors and customers, can break the educational mold. They can say all this stuff we've been doing for 70 years — the dumbing down, the bureaucratization, the elevation of the teachers' unions to near omnipotency — stinks; therefore, away with it. Benno Schmidt and his fellow planners can devise new approaches and concepts without bureaucrats peering ominously over their shoulders.

This is free enterprise, my fellow Americans, as viable in education as in stocks or socks. Now, to encourage this daring venture, and others it may inspire, each state should adopt a system of school choice. Parents should get vouchers representing the cost of Johnny's or Susie's schooling, authorizing them to spend it at the school of their choice, public or private. School choice won't make every Johnny or Susie an Einstein — or, better yet, an Aristotle — but it will instill accountability into education. Other things being equal, a school doing its job will attract the vouchers; a school not doing its job won't.

For which reason I believe that school choice is coming: borne on the same wave of justified discontent as has carried Ross Perot to stunning heights of popularity. Conservatives, in this uncertain climate, have turned into bomb-throwing Bolsheviks. Liberals seem more and more nervous as they find themselves defending the status quo. The times are out of joint, but not calamitously so, because people of vision and ideas are laboring to put them back together.

Everything is bigger in Texas

Recently the Texas Comptroller of Public Accounts, John Sharp, mailed a brochure to all corporations doing business in Texas entitled "Summary of major changes to the Texas Franchise Tax." To characterize these changes as "major" is far too subtle a term! Discovery Loggin, Inc.'s "major change" translates to an increase of more than 3,400 percent than what it would have had to pay by the old formula. Our state is living up to its reputation of, "Everything in Texas is Bigger," which now includes taxes on business.

The logic of our state government boggles the mind. Here we have a state that desperately needs new revenues and wants to attract new business. Rather than thinking long term, the state has taken a "quick fix" attitude. Instead of encouraging new business they have in effect put an "income tax" on corporations, so large as to prohibit the hiring of new people, doing research, or reinvesting in their own futures. The companies that stay must increase their prices for goods and services and/or cut overhead (jobs) in order to compete. The final result is that the state winds up with fewer businesses, higher unemployment and less revenue. In the end we all lose.

If we as a company were to increase our charges by 3,400 percent, we would be out of business in a heartbeat ... and so will be our state!

There must surely be a better solution.

Thanks go out to merchants

This past April, I was privileged enough to chair the "Just Say No" committee at Travis Elementary. I would like to publicly thank the local merchants for their fine support during the month.

The merchants who donated a variety of prizes for a poster contest were: Midland Angels, Jewel Osco, Albertson's, Radio Shack, Coach House Gifts, Walgreens, Midland Park Mall Cinema and CPI Photo.

The judges were Midland Independent School District (MISD) Superintendent of schools Dr. Joe Baressi, Midland Police Chief Richard Czech, and Midland Angels administrative assistant, Jeff Corbett. Thank you. You did a great job.

My Linh Luu was judged the grand prize winner and her poster was put on display in the MISD Administration Building downtown.

Thank you to all who participated in this event. The children did a great job on their posters.

Gipson family offers thanks

This past Memorial Day our thoughts went out to not only those that have died in service to this country, or loved ones that have gone on before us but also the fine people of West Texas.

At this time last year, people were giving of their time, money, and talents to raise money for our son, Trace, to get a bone marrow transplant. While Trace touched a lot of lives in his fight with leukemia, our lives in turn were touched by the caring and generosity of West Texans.

Even though Trace lost his battle with cancer, he has attained the final victory of eternal life with Jesus Christ. We, his family, can have peace in the knowledge that everything medically possible was done for him. For this, we thank the people of West Texas. In our hearts and minds, we honor you.

Officials must answer for Persian Gulf War

Eleven of President George Bush's Cabinet officers and top officials were given a waiver on conflicts of interest in order to participate in the U.S. policy discussions that led to the Persian Gulf War.

Reese

How in blazes can 11 top government officials have potential conflicts of interest in discussing what to do about a postage-stamp of a country in the Persian Gulf? As an inquiring American, I want to know. So does Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez of Texas, chairman of the House banking committee, who has doggedly pursued the hanky panky leading up to the Gulf War.

It was Gonzalez who turned up the memo revealing that Bush had signed a waiver for 11 officials, including Secretary of State James Baker, so they could participate in Kuwait crisis discussions.

The White House will stonewall just as it has already been doing with Gonzalez's other efforts. The Washington press won't make a big deal of it because they have by and large become a tame lap dog of the power structure. In fact, they've done their best to ignore Gonzalez, who even turned up the fact that Brent Scowcroft, Bush's national security chief, had been a consultant to the Italian bank in Atlanta in hot water over smelly deals involving loans to Iraq.

Perhaps if we knew what those potential conflicts of interest were we might better understand the real reasons why 400 or so Americans and nearly 100,000 Iraqis died. Did the U.S. provoke the invasion? Did the U.S. deliberately sabotage peaceful resolution of the conflict? Did the U.S. go to war for reasons never made public?

Those questions cry for definitive answers, but so far only Rep. Gonzalez is even asking them.

Perot must answer military service questions

WASHINGTON — Ross Perot, who presents himself as a patriot and defender of servicemen missing in action, turns out to be a man who used his father's political influence to try to get out of fulfilling his commitment to the U.S. Navy.

Safire

Perot has changed his story twice about his reason for seeking a "hardship" discharge in 1955. That straining to reshape his past makes his use of political pull to get out of his service obligation into a character issue today.

Here are the facts, as revealed by The Associated Press and Sam Attlesey of The Dallas Morning News:

In 1949, a time of peace, Henry Ross Perot was admitted to the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis (presumably through appointment by Rep. Wright Patman arranged by his father, a cotton broker). He received the best higher education the U.S. taxpayer has to offer.

In return for four years of full tuition, room and board, he pledged to serve as a naval officer for whatever period the Navy deemed convenient. At the time of his graduation as an ensign in 1953, that hitch was four years. (Perot claims now the period changed from two to four years during his Annapolis stay; the inescapable fact is that his contractual obligation was to serve after graduation as long as the Navy required.)

But he was unhappy in the Navy. In 1955, Lt. (j.g.) Perot prevailed upon his father to appeal to Texas Sens. Price Daniel and Lyndon Johnson and Representative Patman for help in getting a hardship discharge.

These were young Perot's reasons then, in a letter his father forwarded to his sources of political pull: "I have found the Navy to be a fairly Godless organization. ... I do not enjoy ... being subjected to drunken tales of moral emptiness, passing out penicillin pills and seeing promiscuity on the part of married men."

Profanity upset him: "I find it unsatisfying to live, work and be directed in an atmosphere where taking God's name in vain is a part of the every day vocabulary."

This borderline conscientious objection after four years of Annapolis did not elicit the desired hardship discharge from the Navy, but LBJ's staff persuaded the chief of naval personnel, J.L. Holloway, to transfer Perot from rigorous duty aboard the destroyer Sigourney to a presumably more godly atmosphere aboard the aircraft carrier Leyte.

Sixteen years later, as a gung-ho supporter of the Vietnam War around the Nixon White House, Perot did not reveal his attempts to slip out of his commitment, but had to find a different reason for not staying in the Navy.

"In the Navy," he told The New York Times Magazine in 1971, "the promotion system and the seniority system and the waiting-in-line concept were just sort of incompatible with my desire to be measured and judged by what I could produce." No moral disgust or profanity shock anymore; that would play as unmanly. The new Perot line: He preferred the merit system in business.

When he became a media campaigner for president, he needed an even more honorable reason for using the political guns of Texas to try to weasel out of half his tour of duty.

Perot's latest excuse, told to Newsweek: The captain of the Sigourney corruptly wanted him to use the crew's recreation fund to decorate the captain's cabin, and Perot bravely refused. Only because he protected the enlisted men's money was he transferred. (Retired Sigourney captains B.A. Lienhard and Gerald J. Scott, where are you?)

The facts already on the record belie that belated claim. Every veteran can sense the truth: The Korean War was over, Ross Perot was bored in the Navy, and he wanted to get out and make money. He used powerful family connections to try to renege on his commitment to serve in payment for his education.

To explain that tawdry attempt away, he first cooked up a moralizing pitch, then a management critique, and now a pretense of fiscal heroism.

We know what Perot thought of the U.S. Navy. What the Navy thought of him is detailed in 10 fitness reports in his file, which he should be asked at every appearance to make public. The names of his shipmates are in deck logs at the Naval Historical Center in Suitland, Md.

Neither Dan Quayle nor Bill Clinton has been spared close scrutiny for service decisions. Ross Perot, prettying up his past, deserves equal treatment.

Two California Senate seats top lineup in nine state primaries

Associated Press

A unique California Senate twin bill, challenges to bad check writers in Ohio, and an underdog bid to unseat Sen. Richard Shelby in Alabama top the lineup for state and local offices as nine states hold primaries today.

Offspring of several well-known politicians are making congressional bids, including Democratic State Treasurer George Wallace Jr., son of the former governor, in Alabama.

In Northern California, J. Bennett Johnston 3rd, son of the Louisiana U.S. senator, is one of nine Democrats running for an open seat. In Los Angeles County, Maureen Reagan, daughter of the former president, is a strong contender for a Republican nomination.

Ms. Reagan, who advocates abortion rights and a moratorium on offshore oil drilling, has been criticized as too moderate to be a true "Reagan Republican." But she has her father's endorsement and answers skeptics by saying: "Who are you going to believe, Ronald Reagan or somebody else?"

Never before in California's 142-year history have both Senate seats appeared on the ballot together. And in a state where senators have always been men, women have a good chance to capture both Democratic nominations.

Rep. Barbara Boxer holds a slim lead in polls over Lt. Gov. Leo McCarthy for the seat of retiring Sen. Alan Cranston, despite McCarthy's ads that show her picture "boinging" around the TV screen to remind voters she wrote 143 bad checks on the House bank.

In the GOP race, moderate Rep. Tom Campbell has a slight edge over former TV commentator Bruce Herschensohn, a conservative who has accused Campbell of "hiding a Democrat's agenda under the cloak of the Republican Party."

Former San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein is the clear leader in the Democratic race for a two-year claim on the other seat. Republican Pete Wilson was re-elected to that seat in 1988, but he ran for governor in 1990 — defeating Feinstein — and appointed John Seymour in his place. Seymour is favored to win the GOP nomination today.

Feinstein has come in for her share of mudslinging, in an ad by state Controller Gray Davis that showed side-by-side pictures of her and imprisoned hotel queen Leona Helmsley. The ad compared Mrs. Helmsley's blaming employees for her tax evasion problems with Feinstein citing an accountant's error as the source of her improperly reporting $8 million in donations from her 1990 campaign.

Voters in Los Angeles face three decisions in which the riots are certain to figure.

A police reform intiative, opposed by outgoing Chief Daryl Gates, would strengthen civilian control over the department and limit the tenure of future chiefs. District Attorney Ira Reiner, whose prosecution of the four officers who beat Rodney King failed to produce a conviction, has three opponents in his quest for re-election. Superior Court Judge Joyce A. Karlin, appointed to the bench last year, also has three opponents as she seeks election to a full term. She aroused anger by granting probation to a Korean grocer in the shooting death of a black teenager in a fight that began over a $1.79 bottle of orange juice.

Court rules for father in frozen embryos case

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A divorced man has a right to block the use of seven embryos stored for him and his ex-wife for 3½ years at an clinic, the Tennessee Supreme Court ruled unanimously Monday.

The five-member court said there was little legal history to base its decision on, but that based on privacy rights, Junior Lewis Davis shouldn't be forced into fatherhood.

After the Davises divorced, his ex-wife said she might have the embryos implanted. Then she offered to donate the embryos to another infertile couple.

Had that been allowed, the court said, Davis "would face a lifetime of either wondering about his parental status or knowing about his parental status but having no control over it."

"I'm ecstatic," Davis told the Nashville Banner. "I think this is a great step for men as far as having a (biological) right."

Mrs. Stowe was disappointed but "not particularly surprised" by the court's ruling, said her attorney, Kurt Erlenbach of Titusville, Fla.

Eggs from Davis' then-wife, now Mary Sue Davis Stowe, were fertilized with his sperm at a Knoxville in-vitro fertilization clinic in December 1988 after they were unable to conceive naturally. The couple later divorced.

The embryos remain at the clinic, frozen in liquid nitrogen.

The high court's ambiguous ruling said the clinic now "is free to follow its normal procedure in dealing with unused pre-embryos, as long as that procedure is not in conflict with this opinion."

Dr. I. Ray King, the clinic's owner, said he wouldn't comment until after he met with his attorney Wednesday.

Davis' attorney, Charles Clifford of Maryville, Tenn., praised the ruling for saying it's "up to the people to decide what happens to their embryos."

Erlenbach complained that it treated the embryos like commodities.

Erlenbach said there was little ground for appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, and that Mrs. Stowe would pursue other options for children, including in vitro fertilization with her current husband.

The justices cited a lack of case law or other legal guidelines despite the experiences of more than 5,000 babies born through in-vitro fertilization techniques in the United States and some 20,000 frozen embryos.

"There can be no easy answer to the question we now face," wrote Justice Martha Craig Daughtrey, the court's only woman. "We conclude that the answer to this dilemma turns on the parties' exercise of their constitutional right to privacy."

Privacy rights include the right to procreate as well as the right to avoid procreation, and they must be given equal significance, the court said.

"Ordinarily, the party wishing to avoid procreation should prevail," the court said, but that could be offset by the other party's inability to have children by any other means.

The court said that wasn't the case for Mrs. Stowe in her legal battle with her ex-husband, who has remarried and lives in Maryville, Tenn.

Mrs. Stowe, also remarried and living in Florida, had offered to let an anonymous childless couple use the embryos.

Federal judge ends Rocky Flats case with $18.5 million fine for Rockwell

DENVER (AP) — A federal judge closed the book Monday on a massive environmental investigation at Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant by accepting an $18.5 million fine against Rockwell International Corp. for 10 crimes.

Environmental groups complained because criminal charges were never brought against U.S. Energy Department managers at the plutonium trigger plant.

U.S. District Judge Sherman Finesilver accepted a plea-bargain agreement reached in March. Rockwell, which operated Rocky Flats for more than a decade until 1989, pleaded guilty to five felony criminal counts of illegal treatment and storage of hazardous waste and five misdemeanor counts of violating the Clean Water Act.

The charges alleged that between 1987 and 1989, the company let toxic waste leak from outdoor containers and that it continued spraying toxic waste on plant grounds even when the soil was frozen or flooded.

FBI and Environmental Protection Agency officials raided the plant in June 1989. Investigators subsequently looked at whether the company knowingly discharged chemicals into creeks flowing into municipal water supplies, incinerated toxic waste and failed to adequately monitor groundwater at the plant.

No criminal charges were filed, though, and an independent analysis suggested that the pollution had not passed beyond Rocky Flats boundaries.

"A settlement could never have been achieved minus those findings," said Rockwell attorney Lee Foreman.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Ken Fimberg said the lack of criminal charges doesn't mean the Department of Justice has "given Rocky Flats the Goodhousekeeping Seal of Approval. That simply is not the case."

Federal officials said the $18.5 million fine is the maximum allowed and is more than what the company was paid during the 17-month period when the violations occurred. The fine is exceeded only by the $100 million fine paid by Exxon Corp. for the Prince William Sound oil spill, officials said.

Rockwell paid $2 million of the fine to the state and will pay the remainder to the federal government.

Pentagon analyst questions plan for early 'Star Wars' deployment

N.Y. Times News Service

The Pentagon's top program analyst says a $35 billion plan to protect the nation from nuclear attack with land-based interceptors calls for a rushed deployment that threatens costly and crippling problems.

The criticism of the "Star Wars" plan, the sharpest to date by a senior Defense Department official, might fray or break a coalition on Capitol Hill that last year endorsed the building of limited missile defenses after the antimissile battles of the Persian Gulf War.

The official, Dr. David S.C. Chu, assistant secretary of defense for program analysis and evaluation, says in an internal Pentagon document that the plan risks failure by rushing the development of rocket-powered interceptors and skipping important performance tests. That, he wrote, could hide defects that would cripple the system or lead to costly repairs.

In his analysis Chu said the plan should be overhauled to delay the system's debut by as much as six years, from 1997 to the year 2003, so that prototype arms and other antimissile apparatus could be thoroughly tested, and modified if necessary, before being put into mass production.

Rejecting such criticism, the plan's architects say they remain confident that an initial system can be fielded by 1997. But they concede that the goal of speedy deployment with abbreviated testing carries many risks.

"The issue is whether you can manage that risk in a responsible way," Dr. Henry F. Cooper, director of the antimissile effort, said in an interview on Friday. "I think that's achievable," with the result that a missile defense system could be put in place without significant cost overruns, schedule slips or technical flaws.

But John E. Pike, director of space policy at the Federation of American Scientists, a private group in Washington, said Chu's analysis suggested that no credible defense against nuclear attack could be built in less than a decade.

"It's saying that any system deployed in this century isn't going to work, that the current plan is a procurement disaster in the making," Pike said. Leaders of the antimissile effort, he added, "basically want to decide what to build before they test it, and hope they guessed right."

Perot could spend over $100 million, aides say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ross Perot's aides are putting out word that the Dallas billionaire is ready to spend far more than $100 million on his independent candidacy, a prominent Republican consultant said Monday.

The consultant, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said he was approached by Perot's political lieutenants late last week about a possible job in the Perot campaign.

The consultant said he turned them down, but not before Perot's aides divulged some campaign strategy, including the Texan's spending intentions.

"The context was: 'You've seen this $100 million figure? Don't take that seriously. ... He'd spend many multiples of this,'" the GOP consultant said in recounting the conversation.

Perot, worth an estimated $3 billion or more, has said he would spend "what it takes" to run a first-class campaign, noting that the $100 million figure often mentioned was an estimate made by journalists.

The major-party candidates, whose general election campaigns are financed by tax dollars, are limited to spending $55 million each on their campaigns.

Meanwhile, Republican sources said that former U.N. ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick has emerged as a top contender among key advisers to be Perot's running mate.

GOP sources not directly connected with the Perot effort said that interest in her seems to be increasing.

"They're having hot and heavy conversations with Kirkpatrick," one source said.

Kirkpatrick did not return a phone call, but was quoted by the New York Daily News in Monday's editions as saying she "might support" Perot.

Bush pledges $150 million to save trees

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, seeking to polish his environmental record in advance of the Earth Summit, offered an extra $150 million Monday to help save the world's forests and challenged other countries to double their conservation budgets.

Bush, in a speech at Goddard Space Flight Center in suburban Maryland, said that when he attends the summit in Rio de Janeiro, "the U.S. will go proudly as the world's leader ... in environmental action."

But his announcement on saving trees was greeted with scorn by environmentalists, who have strongly criticized his stance on global issues that will be addressed at the summit as well as his administration's recent decision to allow clear-cutting in ancient Pacific Northwest forests in this country.

Michael Fischer, executive director of the Sierra Club, called the announced action "the height of hypocrisy" and "a drop in the bucket" in light of those other matters.

Administration officials said they were uncertain where the $150 million would come from.

Bush defended his environmental record, saying the United States spends $100 billion a year, or 2 percent of its gross domestic product, on pollution control. "Our laws have served as a model for environmental laws the world over," he said.

The United Nations-sponsored summit begins Wednesday in Brazil, and Bush will join more than 100 heads of state in Rio June 11-12 for its closing days.

Bush has drawn fire for insisting on a watered-down summit pact on global warming, and the White House has announced that Bush will not sign a summit biodiversity treaty aimed at protecting a wide variety of the world's plants, animals and natural resources.

The president has argued that some versions of such treaties would needlessly impinge on the U.S. economy. He promised farmers in California on a political trip Saturday that he would not allow "the extremes in the environmental movement to shut down the United States."

He said Monday, "Our commitment to action did not begin and will not end with Rio." He outlined several steps to galvanize world conservation efforts beyond the summit, including what he called "a major new initiative to protect and enhance the world's forests."

"As a down payment, the United States will increase its bilateral forest assistance by $150 million next year," Bush said. That is on top of $120 million in existing bilateral aid, and a quarter-billion-dollars funneled through U.N. and multilateral programs.

Bush challenged the leaders of other industrialized countries to double their forest preservation programs, which he said could boost the global conservation budget to $2.7 billion.

"Halting the loss of the Earth's forests is one of the most cost effective steps that we can take to cut carbon dioxide emissions."

Forty-two million acres of tropical forests are lost each year, according to international statistics.

The $150 million is to provide training in forest management for Third World Countries as well as for rural development, tree-planting and other programs.

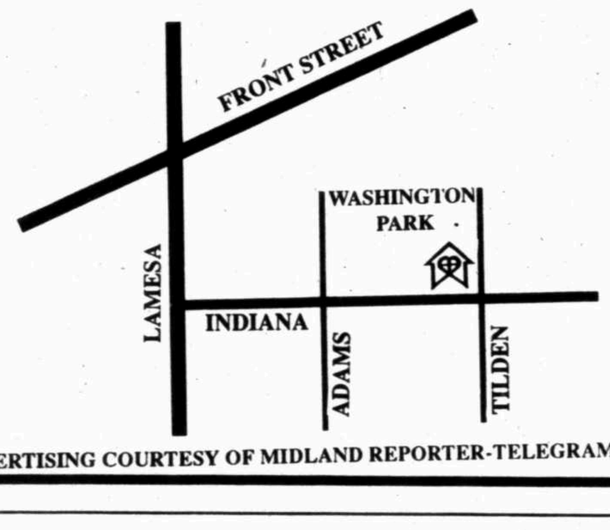

"It's too little, too late. And it's not going to deal with the need to conserve the earth's biodiversity," said Jay Hair, president of the National Wildlife Federation.

Residents offer suggestions for grant money

■ Council calls public meeting to discuss allocation of Community Development Block Grant funds.

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

Dissension sparked by confusion left several people in the dark during a public meeting Monday night called by the City Council to help give southeast residents a voice in the city's distribution of Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) money.

Over 100 people packed Casa De Amigos to discuss how nearly $1.3 million in 18 community improvement program requests can be cut in order to meet the $905,000 allocated by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The on-going construction of Eastside Park in east-central Midland on Fairgrounds Road served as the main topic of debate.

The city Community Services department has requested $200,000 to continue work at the park, but some opponents feel the money would be put to better use elsewhere.

"That $200,000 is a good place to cut. I'm concerned that the park isn't even located in a historic Hispanic or black district. We could put that money to better use elsewhere," said Alma Marshall, founder of Federation of Citizens United to Serve (FOCUS).

Others disagreed.

"Her (Ms. Marshall's) comments are appreciated but her voice is not representative of the majority of the people," Jose Cuevas said.

Parks and Recreation commissioner Clarence Zachery said Midland does not have enough parks to support the community's youth.

"I'm constantly picking up the players on my baseball team and taking them to a park across town, and then we have verbal battles with other teams who want the field," he said. "Parks are an asset to the blacks and Hispanics in Midland, and we need more available that they can ride their bikes to."

Zachery cited the lack of any blacks on the baseball teams at Midland High or Lee High schools.

"It's because they aren't getting the opportunities to play. There could be a professional baseball player in the group," he said.

Others pointed out that baseball leagues will help keep many teen-agers off the streets during the summer.

More than $117,000 in CDBG money has already been spent for the park, includ-

Abundance of rain weaves woes for cotton farmers

LUBBOCK (AP) — Above normal rains in May showed no signs of letting up as residents sought higher ground Monday and cotton farmers wondered if 1992 is going to be another lost cause.

Rains belted parts of Texas stretching from the South Plains to the Gulf of Mexico, leaving four feet of water on some Corpus Christi streets and leaving cotton farmers near Lubbock shaking their heads.

"Most of the fields are suffering from seedling disease right now because of the wet conditions," said James Supak, a cotton specialist at the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Lubbock. "The cotton was doing very well before this spell of rain hit. How the cotton comes out of it will depend on how quickly we get some warm, dry weather."

A flash flood watch was in effect through Monday night for the Panhandle and South Plains, while severe thunderstorm warnings plagued the Permian Basin.

Gonzales and Karnes counties in south central Texas and Liberty and Fort Bend counties near Houston were also under a flash flood watch most of the day Monday.

Residents in the Corpus Christi area were drying out after powerful thunderstorms dumped enough rain to strand motorists and cause power outages.

The moisture on the South Plains was at first welcomed by cotton farmers, but now they have too much.

The 25-county area surrounding Lubbock grows a quarter of the nation's cotton annually, approximately 3 million acres this year.

Last year, it was a lack of rains in May that contributed to a substandard harvest.

"There is no question we have lost some cotton," said Don Johnson, executive vice president of the Plains Cotton Growers. "How much? We will have to wait and see. We certainly don't need any more rain right now."

But rain is in the forecast.

"It doesn't look like there is any real big break in the clouds coming," said Andy Anderson, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Lubbock. "We could see some rain off and on every day this week and temperatures will be fairly cool."

INTRODUCING ...

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Jane Carrens, Midland High School principal, right, and Dennis Stratton, instructional services director, intend to lead the high school into a new era of learning.

MHS enters partnership for new era

'We all enter our new partnership, not with the expectation of overnight success, but with a plan, a solemn commitment, and the strong hope and optimism that as partners we can reach our goal.

— Lionel Meno,
Texas Commissioner of Education

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

While thousands of Midland students enjoyed their first official day of summer vacation on Monday, offices at Midland High School buzzed with plans for the next school year.

"Changes for Midland High School have just snowballed," said MHS principal Jane Carrens.

"We are excited because we are finally going to be able to do some positive things we have only read about," said Dennis Stratton, MHS instructional services director.

The high school will have new faces in key positions — football coach, band director, drill team adviser and a department chairman.

"It's been a fast year for us," Stratton said.

"It's called hitting the ground running," said Ms. Carrens, who just completed her first year as principal.

One development which sped into place is the Partnership Schools Initiative. Another is the impending feeder system, which Ms. Carrens is enthusiastic about.

"We used to be the only 5A school in the district without this system, which made it difficult for us to compete," Ms. Carrens said, noting the feeder system won't come on line until the 1993-'94 school year.

A more immediate change for the school is being one of 83 schools selected for the Partnership Schools Initiative.

According to Lionel "Skip" Meno, Texas education commissioner, partnership schools will be given the latitude to "break down the barriers frustrating attempts to provide educational excellence and equity for all students."

Partners in the program include teachers, students, parents, administrators, school

Environmentalists ask for Bentsen's support of 'green' energy tax deal

AUSTIN (AP) — Environmental groups Monday urged U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen to champion a "green" energy tax package that was included in the House's version of national energy legislation.

"These are the measures we need to actually fulfill the promise of renewable energy in the 21st century," said David Hamilton, energy lobbyist of the U.S. Public Interest Research Group.

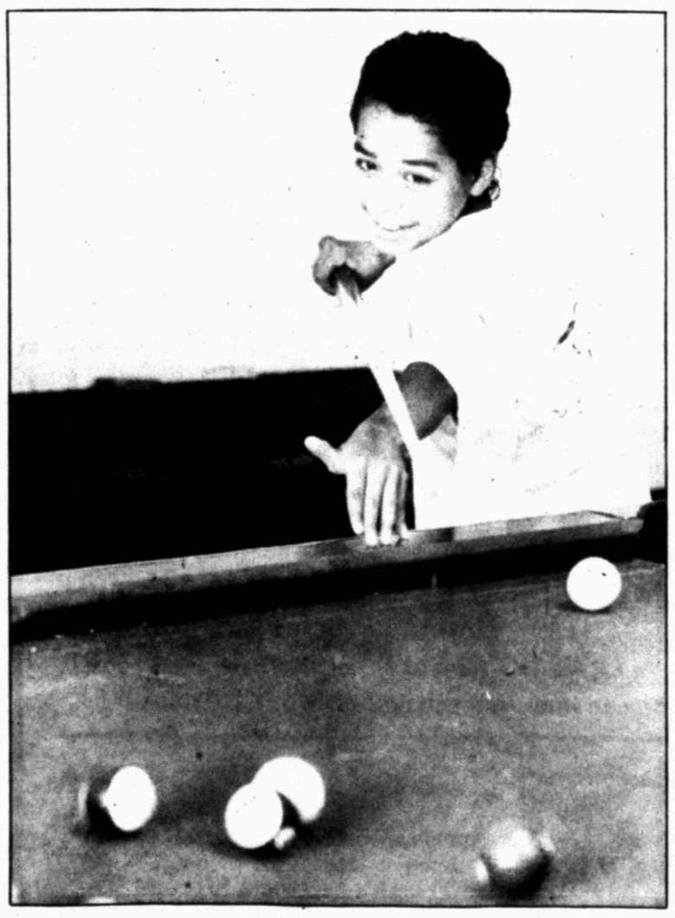

The package includes incentives for the development of renewable energy sources, energy efficiency, alternative motor fuels and the use of mass transit, he said.

Bentsen, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said through a spokesman, "I've been supportive of tax incentives to encourage use of alternative fuels, and I continue to support them."

Particular provisions will be considered on their merits, said Jack DeVore, Bentsen's press secretary.

The U.S. House, where tax legislation must originate, passed its own energy bill instead of amending a version earlier approved by the Senate. That means unanimous Senate consent is required for the bills to go directly to a House-Senate conference committee. If there is not unanimous consent, the Senate may take up the

Lottery tune jingles over airwaves

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin bureau

AUSTIN — Carl Keating has a hit song. You will be hearing it more during the next few weeks and months than anything by Willie Nelson or Garth Brooks. You probably will get as tired of it as "White Christmas" in December. But it isn't on an album, and you can't buy it at the store.

Keating sings the jingle in the official promotional ads for the state-run lottery.

Keating, 30, who lives in Round Rock, just north of Austin, is a native of Winnie and received a bachelor's of science in communications from Lamar University-Beaumont in 1984. Later he returned to Lamar and got a degree in music education in 1990.

"I wanted to be a TV reporter out of high school, but after I got my degree I had a sales job and didn't like it," Keating said.

He had picked up a guitar while he was still in college and "really got involved in it."

"I won't say I was obsessed with it, but I played all the time. I even slept with my guitar. I would fall asleep playing, and it would be there in the morning," Keating said.

He said he also did a lot of TV commercials for his father, Paul, who owns a Chevrolet dealership in Winnie.

But he said he returned to school because "I wanted to be a top-flight musician."

Keating also wanted to move to the Austin area, and he got just what he wanted rather quickly. He was hired after receiving his degree to teach music and physical education for kindergartern through fifth-grade classes at Wells Branch Elementary School in Round Rock.

Keating said the jingle came along after he sent a tape of some of his songs to Lighthouse Music Publishing Co. in Austin.

"Bitsy Rice, who runs the company, liked my voice and sent a tape to friend of hers, Carl Thiel, who was vying for the right to do the jingle. He like it and gave me a call to do a demo to try and get the job. He presented it to the ad agency, they like it and picked his version," Keating said.

Thiel wrote music for the jingle and someone else at the agency wrote the lyrics, he said.

Another singer does a Spanish version, and there are a couple of others with more country-western and upbeat sounds. But Keating's is the flagship version currently heard in all the TV spots and in many of the radio ads.

He said he is supposed to get paid residuals for each time it plays, "but I don't know how much."

As a teacher, Keating said he can use all the outside income he can make.

But regardless of the money, "It's a real kick to think people are hearing my voice all the way from El Paso to the skyscrapers in Dallas and all around the state."

Lyrics vary with commercials

Staff report

The words to the official state lottery jingle vary slighly in different commercials, but the basic lyrics are:

Here it comes,
Don't you love that lucky feeling.
Oh, it's fun,
To anticipate that feeling.
It could happen any minute,
You could be the one to win it,
When you play the game of Texas,
Here's the fun.

Hey, it's grand,
When you get that winning ticket in your hand,
Always knew that you would pick it,
So get out there and get in it,
'cause somebody's gonna win it,
When you play the game of Texas,
Here's the fun.

Texas Air Control Board to hold last public hearing on toxic monitoring sites

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Air Control Board will conduct a final public hearing here Wednesday to take suggestions on where to locate 12 new toxic air monitoring sites in 1992.

The hearing is scheduled for 7 p.m. at the TACB Annex Building, 12124 Park 35 Circle in Austin.

The board conducted hearings in six other cities around the state earlier this year. The Austin hearing will be the last one before the board makes a decison on monitoring sites in August.

TACB officials plan to establish an Air Toxics Monitoring Network with 12 sampling sites this year, increasing to 25 in 1993, and 60 sites by 1995.

Toxic air contaminants are defined as air pollutants that, in high enough concentrations, may cause serious health problems.

The Air Control Board initially will monitor for 28 different pollutants. Some of the toxic pollutants of most concern include benzene, butadiene and vinyl chloride.

Monitoring at each site will continue for a minimum of one year, with samples collected and analyzed weekly.

State officials will use the information to evaluate community exposure and to take appropriate action if health threats are detected.

The board is asking citizens to identify potential monitoring sites and to provide details on why the sites are good candidates for the network.

Questions concerning the public meeting can be directed to the board's technical operations unit at (512) 908-1600.

MHS: School enters partnership for new era

board trustees, residents, the Texas Education Agency, the Texas Association of Secondary School Principals, Region 18 Education Service Center, and the Texas Business and Education Coalition (TBEC).

Members of the TBEC recently toured MHS. Questions posed by the Midland members of the TBEC, according to Stratton, were "What if we had the most outstanding school system in the state? What would that do for Midland?"

Ms. Carrens said she is grateful that the partners realize society "puts so much responsibility on the schools, that they know we can't do it alone."

The principal said schools in the PSI program will be given three to five years to implement successful programs to boost attendance, test scores, numbers of students with advanced transcripts, and to decrease the drop-out rate.

"Schools that succeed will become the models for the state," Ms. Carrens said. "It's a great opportunity for us, but it is also a challenge."

As part of the PSI program, MHS teachers will attend a three-day inservice on teaching styles. Because the session will be held on what would have been the first three days of school, the state has approved a waiver for MHS students to start school three days later than their peers and not have to attend make-up days.

The inservice will be conducted by representatives from the Dallas Center for Success.

"Part of the seminar will include testing teachers to reveal their learning style. It will allow them to see: 'Oh, I do have a learning style,' " Ms. Carrens said. "Then teachers will talk to other teachers and find out that their learning styles are different."

The principal said teachers can transmit this concept to students to give them an "opportunity to take ownership of their style of learning."

She said the seminar may also result in teachers collaborating and creating interdisciplinary curriculum.

"This is a time when we are learning more about the learning-/teaching process," Ms. Carrens said. "We hope to offer teachers a whole array of strategies, a smorgasbord of knowledge. Then they can pick and choose what is right for them."

"Traditional schools tend to put teachers in charge, as the boss of a classroom," Stratton said. "Teachers need to rethink who they are in the classroom."

Ms. Carrens agreed. "We need to get students involved. Just telling is not teaching. Teachers just can't 'stand and deliver' the lesson."

The principal said that she "lucked onto" the PSI program. "I was a new principal when I got the brochure about the partnership schools. I wasn't sure what it was."

Nonetheless, she fulfilled requirements to apply, including obtaining a faculty vote and the superintendent's signature.

"Then Midland High School was added to the list of schools selected as a last minute decision," Ms. Carrens said.

She said one school was on the list twice, which left the opening for MHS to fill. "The good Lord was taking care of us," she said.

Both MHS administrators said they are going to take full advantage of the program.

"The PSI program opens a door for us. It frees up other energy. Jane is an instructional leader, and this will really free us up as a staff," Stratton said.

"We really consider ourselves teachers — and teachers of teachers," Ms. Carrens said. She noted that her style of management is to act as a facilitator. "Teachers come up with ideas and it's my job to see that those ideas can happen."

Stratton said the PSI program has offered the high school "a pathway" for change and success.

"It is the catalyst for change," Ms. Carrens said. "So much has happened that it is allowing us to do an about-face. The bottom line is to increase student achievement."

Although the high school is entering a new era, Stratton said it will be one "built on the high school's traditions and parental support."

The principal said one of the most appreciated changes has come from state officials. After several years of state mandates and rules handed down from Austin, state authorities are saying decisions should be made at the campus level. "Now we are being told, 'you know what fits your school. You find it,' " Ms. Carrens said. "Now — as a partnership school — we are having that chance."

Students to start school 3 days late

Staff report

In an effort to provide a three-day inservice on teaching styles for MHS teachers, students will start school three days later than their peers.

Although school will begin later, MHS students won't be left to wander around with the back-to-school blues. Instead, the high school will offer Dog Days of summer when students can register, check out the school, buy parking permits and participate in other activities.

Also, on August 24, the official first day of public school for the rest of the district, MHS will have an Olympics-type of opening games ceremony for students participanting in sports.

The new event will be one of two "blowouts" conducted each year. The other major MHS event — besides homecoming — is the Purple Pride Spirit Fair, which was held for the first time this year.

Police hold man on drug charges

Staff report

ODESSA — A 46-year-old Odessa man was charged with conspiracy and possession of marijuana with intent to deliver Monday after officials seized his motor home Sunday with over 800 pounds of marijuana hidden inside, according to the U.S. Magistrate's office.

The drugs were hidden in scented baby powder, officials said.

Roberto White, 1450 S. Allegheny St., had driven the vehicle Sunday from Lajitas in the Big Bend area to Odessa, where he was arrested as a result of a joint investigation between the Department of Public Safety and the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Bond will be set Thursday by U.S. Magistrate Judge Robert Sykes. White is being held at the Midland County jail.

COTTON: Rains pose problems

(From 1B)

Playa lakes used for drainage across Lubbock are overflowing into neighborhoods after 5.25 inches of rain fell in May, most of it in the past 10 days, Anderson said. Lubbock's normal rainfall for May is 2.59 inches.

The National Weather Service reported that water was getting into some homes in Lubbock early Monday after 1.25 inches of rain fell in about one hour.

Donna Burch, the manager of Sundial Village apartments in Lubbock, says if any more rain falls she will have to evacuate her employees.

An overflowing playa lake has been creeping closer to the apartment office for about a week. Parking lots at the complex are already filled with waist-deep waters.

"If it looks like it is going to rain tonight then we probably will move out of the office," Mrs. Burch said. "We had a couple people not move their cars and they filled with water. We have never had a situation this bad."

For the year so far, Lubbock has had 11.20 inches of rain, more than double the 5.25 inches that fall normally.

GRANT: Residents voice concerns over allocation

ing the original purchase price of the land.

According to Chuck Swallow, assistant director of Community Services, two baseball fields are under construction at the park. The park layout includes a picnic area, pavilions and basketball courts.

Street paving also emerged as a primary concern for several residents at the meeting, many of whom cited their own streets as examples.

About 15 miles of unpaved streets remain in the targeted CDBG area.

Many residents claim their unpaved and unguttered streets are dangerous when vehicles lose control on the gravel. The City Council estimates street-work costs in the south and east target areas to be as high as $300,000.

"I think everyone in Midland should be able to live on a paved street before they die," said one man.

First-day Mayor J.D. Faircloth suggested the citizens form an advisory committee to determine a priority list for street-paving.

"Obviously we don't have the funds to get to every street. There will always be some people unhappy until all the streets are finally paved," he said.

A volunteer street commission already has prepared a list of streets to be paved first.

Out-going councilman the Rev. Michael DeVaughn said many minorities have been left off the commission due to a lack of technical skills.

"That's true," Faircloth said. "But this is a new council."

The final area of significant concern discussed at the meeting was the lot-clearing program.

Some residents complained that weeds more than 6 feet tall had grown in vacant lots next to their property.

"Everything works on a complaint basis. When enough people complain about a lot there is an investigation, which often keeps the people mowing their lots," Faircloth said.

He urged residents to send in their suggestions about the CDBG funds or to talk directly to council members before the decision on final allocation is made July 28.

Faircloth said the council hopes to have filled the two vacant council positions before the final decision is made. District 2 council member DeVaughn leaves the council on June 7.

Birth defect researchers uncover new evidence

HARLINGEN (AP) — Babies with underdeveloped brains have been born at unusually high rates in a South Texas county for at least five years, not two as originally thought by investigators.

Records discovered last week by medical investigators revealed that 10 previously uncounted anencephalic babies were delivered at two Cameron County hospitals between 1986 and 1988.

"When you put those additional cases in there ... the rate for the period between 1986 and 1988 becomes nearly identical to the increased rates we found during the 1989 to 1991 period," Dr. Dennis Perrotta said Monday.

The Texas Department of Health (TDH) and the Centers for Disease Control have been investigating the high rates of anencephaly — babies born with underdeveloped brains — for more than a year.

But investigators had been working under the impression that the rate jumped abruptly in 1989 from about 3.6 cases of anencephaly per 10,000 live births to an average of 15 per 10,000. The newly discovered documents show the Cameron County rates were hovering around 15 per 10,000 for about five years.

That's still about three times the national average of two to three anencephalic births per 10,000, and Perrotta said medical officials are still concerned.

"There is some positive information," Perrotta said. "Going from low to high means there is some event that caused the dramatic increase. This suggests that this event did not occur."

Some local medical officials and environmental activists have suggested that there is a link between the defects and industrial dumping across the border. The TDH and CDC have not ruled out environmental causes but have been reluctant to single out any suspects while compiling information for their study.

"The negative thing is that if indeed there had been an environmental cause for the increase, it was going to be difficult for us to make that link if it was two or three years in the past," said Perrotta. "It will now be more difficult because we have to go back" even further.

Still, the new data doesn't jibe with information released nearly two weeks ago that Matamoros, Mexico, began experiencing high rates of the same defects at the same time as Brownsville, Texas, and surrounding Cameron County, just across the border.

"That puzzles us as well," said Perrotta, noting that Mexican health records are still under review.

He said a report on the joint state-federal study, which is scheduled for a July release, will include a recommendation that health investigators review anencephaly rates dating back to 1980.

Officials weigh impact of lottery on pari-mutuel betting

AUSTIN (AP) — State horse and dog racing officials said Monday it was too early to tell if the new lottery would cut into pari-mutuel wagering.

But Texas Racing Commission chairwoman Pat Pangburn said she was "concerned" about the lottery's impact.

A record of more than $23 million was spent on the $1 lottery tickets Friday — the opening day of the game. Lottery officials say that sales for the first year of operation are expected to be about $1 billion.

About $270 million was wagered on horse and dog races in Texas last year, according to Dave Freeman, executive secretary of the commission.

Ms. Pangburn staked out the position of racing officials to the inevitable comparison between pari-mutuel wagering and lottery purchases. "It's my contention that we're dealing with entertainment with the pari-mutuel industry," she said.

"You can spend an evening at a greyhound track or an afternoon at a horse track and you had a good time. I don't think there's much fun in taking out a quarter and scratching off a lottery ticket," she said.

Freeman said when he was a racing official in Minnesota, the lottery had less of an impact on pari-mutuel wagering than other legalized gambling games.

But Bill Breese, a racing industry veteran who has recently helped start tracks in Fredericksburg and Manor Downs in Austin, said, "I think you're going to see a negative impact on racing for a while in Texas until the new wears off. There are just so many gambling dollars out there."

Also on Monday, commission hearing examiner Dudley McCalla rejected a bid by a track developer to extend the period to submit applications to build a large, Class 1 track in the Dallas-Fort Worth area. McCalla said hearings on the license will start June 15.

There are four applicants. One of them, Pinnacle Park Inc., had requested an extension of time to update its application with information about changes in ownership and operation.

But the other applicants wanted to proceed, according to Freeman. Last week, Freeman said there were technical problems with all four applications, and that the time extension would be helpful.

But on Monday, he conceded to the three applicants and racing industry officials who wanted to go ahead with the hearing. "I'm not going to be pig-headed," he said.

McCalla's recommendation will be forwarded to the commission.

30,000 older Americans pour into San Antonio for convention

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An estimated 30,000 people are pouring into San Antonio this week for the American Association of Retired Persons biennial convention.

All sorts of prominent speakers will address all sorts of subjects, but one that's sure to dominate is health care.

"In 1996, the first baby boomer will be 50," said AARP Executive Director Horace Deets. "We're keenly aware there will be 77 million baby boomers reaching 65 shortly after the turn of the century.

"So we'd better address the health-care situation. We'd better get rid of stereotypes about aging. We'd better do something about the economy, or we're not going to be prepared as a country," Deets said.

The 33-year-old AARP, with a membership of 33 million and an annual budget of $320 million, is the nation's most powerful voice for people 50 and older. Its convention runs today through Thursday.

In poll after poll this presidential campaign year, older Americans consistently have ranked health care at the top of their agenda, and younger Americans are increasingly worried about the cost and availability of health care.

BENTSEN: Groups ask for senator's support of package legislation again.

Hamilton, saying Bentsen could "make all the difference" on the tax incentives, released a letter from PIRG and 10 other groups seeking his support.

The others include Environmental Action, Friends of the Earth, National Wildlife Federation, Public Citizen, Safe Energy Communication Council, Energy Conservation Coalition, National Audubon Society, Natural Resources Defense Council, Sierra Club and Union of Concerned Scientists.

The groups want the Finance Committee to support sending the bills straight to conference, Hamilton said. Failing that, he said, they hope for a "controversy-free" Senate floor vote on the package.

Hamilton said he fears procedural difficulties, and that the tax package could be lost if too many interests try to get items added and it's seen as causing too much controversy.

"The fear is that this becomes the energy tax gravy train act of 1992. There is no reason for that to happen. ... We are urging restraint and recognition that this is our chance to do something for renewable energy," he said.

Bentsen said he also would prefer for the legislation to go directly to conference committee.

The "green" tax package includes the permanent extension of a 10 percent solar-geothermal investment tax credit; creation of a 1.5 percent per kilowatt hour tax credit for electricity created by wind; and exclusion of rebates given by utilities, for conservation and efficiency measures, from taxation as income.

It also would cap the tax-free value of employer-provided free parking at $160 a month, and increase the exclusion for employer-provided transit subsidies to $60 a month; and provide an investment tax credit for equipment to enhance development of alternative motor fuels.

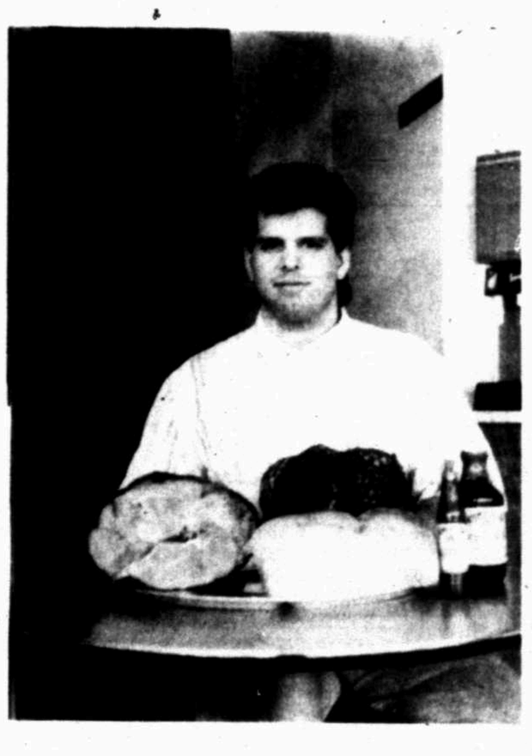

The cost of the breaks would be offset by other items in the bill, such as raising the excise tax on ozone-depleting chemicals, Hamilton said.

Opening lead: Ace of ♡

One of the more spectacular hands of 1991 was played in the NEC Venice Cup, the women's world bridge championship. Sitting South, representing Austria, was Maria Erhart.

South's two-heart opening bid showed a weak two-bid in either major, although by our standards her hand did not measure up to a vulnerable weak two-bid by a sizable margin. West's double announced a heart suit, South removed to her real suit and the rest of the auction was natural. We don't blame North for jumping to four spades or East for doubling.

West led the ace of hearts, and a heart continuation would have resulted in a one or two-trick set, depending on how declarer went about the play. Unfortunately, West elected to cash her other two aces and then continue with a diamond. That almost surely marked East with four trumps, so declarer proceeded as if the cards were made of glass.

After winning the diamond in dummy, declarer confidently finessed the eight of spades. Next came a heart to the king and a winning diamond from dummy. If East ruffs, declarer would overruff, cross to the ace of trumps, return to hand with a diamond ruff to draw the last trump and dummy is high, so East chose to discard a club.

Declarer discarded her remaining heart and ruffed a diamond. The queen of clubs was overtaken with the king and another diamond ruff reduced declarer to the same trump length as East. A spade to the ace and any card from the table trapped East in a trump coup. Making four-odd doubled, losing only to the three aces.

Bob Hope, Bo Jackson pop up on 'Children's Miracle' telethon

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Bob Hope and Bo Jackson, the ailing sports chameleon, made surprise appearances on the 10th Annual Children's Miracle Network Telethon, which raised a record $106 million.

Hope

Jackson, 29, recovering from hip replacement surgery, left his doctors and trainers behind Sunday to attend the event, benefiting 163 hospitals for children throughout North America.

"Recovering from hip surgery has been tough, but these kids are a hell of a lot tougher than me," said Jackson, the telethon's honorary chairman.

Hope is honorary chairman of the CMN board. "With such fine people committed to this cause, and all of the money going to the kids, we'll definitely be around for decades to come," said Hope, who just turned 89.

Jackson played professional football for the Los Angeles Raiders and major league baseball for the Kansas City Royals until he was sidelined last year by a hip injury. He hopes the surgery will lead to a comeback.

MINNEAPOLIS — Anita Hill's public charges that then-Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas sexually harassed her jangled familiar bells for Gloria Segal.

The Minnesota state lawmaker was so struck, she's raising money hoping to endow a professorship for Hill at the University of Oklahoma Law School.

Hill, who teaches at the school in Norman, Okla., is scheduled to visit Minneapolis-St. Paul this month to thank Segal and others who so far have raised $81,000 in pledges. Their goal is $250,000, half the cost of a chair endowment.

The matching money must come from Oklahoma's higher education funds, said Donna Murphy, head of development for the university. She also said the normal procedure once the chair is fully endowed, is to conduct a search to fill it.

Among promised donors are feminist guru Betty Friedan, former San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein, former Ohio Gov. Richard Celeste, and Jean Auel, author of "Clan of the Cave Bear."

"Anita's experience touched a nerve," said fund-raiser Carole Faricy of St. Paul. "No question about it. We're getting calls from women — and a few men, too — who say they are delighted that there is some way they can support her."

Thomas denies Hill's allegations, which proved no impediment to his appointment to the high court.

YUKON, Okla. — Garth Brooks keeps his ego in check, but the country music star's hometown of Yukon, an Oklahoma City suburb, has emblazoned his name on a water tower and just renamed a street Garth Brooks Boulevard.

The 30-year-old performer joked at Sunday's renaming ceremony that he probably paid enough speeding fines on that street to pave it.

The city also gave Brooks three souvenir street signs: Garth Brooks Blvd., Sandy Brooks Ave. and Taylor Mayne Brooks Pky.

Sandy Brooks is his wife. She's due to give birth next month to their daughter, tentatively named Taylor Mayne Pearl Brooks.

"Taylor" is for James Taylor; Mayne is because the baby was conceived in Maine.

"And that was going to be it," said the father-to-be, "but Sandy's in love with Minnie Pearl and she's not doing too good right now. So, Sandy felt really strong about naming this kid Pearl after Minnie."

NEW YORK — ABC News said Monday it signed Sam Donaldson to a one-year contract, ending negotiations that began in January.

"His negotiations were completed over the weekend," said spokeswoman Teri Everett. "It was our intention to keep him all along. We're very happy he will remain with the network."

Donaldson will continue to co-anchor "PrimeTime Live" and appear on "This Week With David Brinkley."

How much Donaldson will earn, Everett wouldn't say. "We never discuss that," Everett said.

New York Newsday reported that Donaldson had steadfastly refused a cut in his $1 million-plus salary, despite ABC News' other staff and salary cuts.

HACKENSACK, N.J. — Wilson Pickett reneged on a vow of lifetime support, says a woman who lived with the blues singer for 10 years and is suing him for compensation and damages.

Jean Marie Cusseaux's lawsuit, filed last week in Superior Court, seeks compensatory and punitive damages for personal and emotional injuries.

She agreed previously to drop a domestic violence complaint against the 51-year-old singer when he said he would get treatment for alcoholism and pay for her move to California.

The lawsuit cites an oral agreement the couple allegedly made when they moved into a home in Englewood, a New York City suburb. It claims she ran Pickett's household, managed his business and otherwise acted as his wife.

It says Pickett agreed to pay Cusseaux $400 a week and provide for her for the rest of her life.

Program awards millions to college-bound teens

CORSICANA (AP) — Bachelor oilman Jim Collins left few specifics when he set aside mineral rights and part of his fortune to help hometown teen-agers pay for college.

His 1954 will designated "three or more" four-year scholarships each year to deserving graduates of Corsicana High School. The mechanics weren't spelled out.

Almost four decades later, the administrator of the James L. Collins Scholarship Program says Collins likely never dreamed his gift would mushroom to have helped 1,600 college-bound students — and counting.

Students like Flossie Scott, 18, one of 280 Corsicana students who received diplomas Friday. Miss Scott's $3,600 yearly Collins Scholarship will pay for tuition, dorm fees and books at the University of Houston.

Or the Edgin siblings — Bob, Nancy and Rick — who all won Collins awards in the 1960s.

Rick Edgin, 41, a gastroenterologist in Columbus, Ohio, said he still had to take out student loans and work fulltime while at the University of Texas. His Collins award was for $1,000.

"I can't say we had it tougher than a lot of people, but we had our share of hard knocks," he said.

"For many students, it means the difference between going and not going to school," said program administrator Mark Culwell. "Everybody likes the Horatio Alger story."

Culwell said he estimates, conservatively, the program has handed out more than $5 million since 1954. The number and amount of scholarships have grown through the years, he said.

This spring, 37 seniors won full scholarships of $3,600, renewable for three years. Seven other classmates won renewable half scholarships of $1,800.

The Collins Board of Trustees — the Corsicana district's seven school board members — distributes about $600,000 each year, Culwell said.

No more is awarded than what is earned from investments, Collins' oil wells in Texas and Louisiana, and from interest on the $6.1 million bequest.

AP Laserphoto

Mark Culwell, administrator for the James L. Collins Scholarship Program, stands in front of Corsicana High School recently. The scholarship program set aside in 1954 by James L. Collins, a Texas oilman, has helped 1,600 college-bound students continue their education. Some of this year's scholarship winners stand in the background.

"I feel like because Mr. Collins helped me, I have been able to give something back to the youth of Corsicana.

— Jon Ingham, scholarship recipient

"I've never had so much fun in all my life, giving away money," said Culwell, the program's paid administrator since retiring as superintendent in 1989.

"I used to spend 90 percent of my time with the guys in trouble, the problems. Now I'm working with class individuals."

Applicants must be in the top quarter of their class and must attend a Texas university. Fifty-eight of this year's 69 eligible seniors applied.

Trustees select an average of 50 recipients a year, Culwell said, based loosely on financial need. Extracurricular activities and citizenship grades also count.

Jason White, 17, said his hope for a Collins award provided an incentive to behave in class.

"It kept me in line with the teachers," said the future Texas Tech University business major. White received a half scholarship.

Bill Sheppard, director of research at the Santa Rosa, Calif.-based National Scholarship Research Service, said the Collins scholarship was "healthy for an undergraduate." Sheppard said typical undergraduate scholarships varied between $1,000 and $2,500.

Jon Ingham, 49, a Corsicana High School chemistry teacher, won an $800 Collins Scholarship in 1961. Ingham's daughter, Aimee, used her Collins award to earn an education degree at Baylor University, and she now teaches art downstairs from her father.

Ingham said a college education had been looking almost impossible for him, the third child of a cotton farmer and a sewing-factory worker.

Now, he considers his 25 years at Corsicana High School a payback to the community.

"I feel like because Mr. Collins helped me, I have been able to give something back to the youth of Corsicana.

"I would give him a simple 'thank you' because I really don't know of any other way to express it," Ingham said. "Sometimes it is the ultimate when you just say thank you, and that is all you can say."

DEAR ABBY

Questions linger in wake of Los Angeles rioting

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Everybody in the country — and even in some foreign countries — is still talking about the Rodney King incident that turned the city of Los Angeles into a war zone. What are your thoughts on this? — ST. LOUIS READER

Van Buren

DEAR READER: I would like the answers to two questions:

(1) What was in the minds of those 12 jurors who delivered a unanimous verdict of "not guilty" after having seen the videotape of Rodney King being beaten mercilessly at the hands of four uniformed Los Angeles police officers?

(2) While the looters were stealing and setting fires, why did it take so long for those in authority to arrive on the scene and stop them?

DEAR ABBY: We invited "Andy," our 12-year-old grandson, to visit us for 10 days during baseball spring training. We sent a round-trip airline ticket and looked forward to having him with us.

During Andy's visit, we observed that he did not take criticism (concerning table manners, etc.) very well, but we just let it pass. Now the problem: After Andy left, we discovered that the portable TV that he had been allowed to use during his visit here was missing.

My husband, "George," called Andy's mother, preferring not to discuss it with Andy's father (our son) because we feared he might be too hard on the boy. Andy's mother was very nice, and asked George to hold the phone while she checked to see if the portable TV was in Andy's room. In a few minutes, she came back to the phone and informed us that she had found the missing TV pushed way back in Andy's closet. She told us that she would deal with Andy, and we could expect the portable TV immediately.

It has been about a month now, and we have not received the portable TV set. George and I are wondering if we should just let it go, or make an issue of it. — CONCERNED GRANDPARENTS

DEAR CONCERNED: Write or telephone Andy's mother and ask her why you haven't received the portable TV set. You would be doing Andy a favor.

Stealing is no small matter; if Andy thinks he can get off scot-free, he will be encouraged to steal more costly items.

Also, I think you are doing Andy's father a grave disservice to withhold this information from him.

DEAR ABBY: I can no longer remain silent. I must at least try to educate those ignorant females who keep wanting to castrate rapists so they can't rape again.

When I was 30 years old, I lost my testicles to cancer. Castration does not always cause impotence — it causes sterility. I am now 63 and still sexually active. So much for castration. Sign me ... SAN ANTONIO

DEAR SAN ANTONIO: Thanks for an illuminating letter. Many people are not aware that castration does to males what tubal ligation does to females.

This one's for everybody, from teens to seniors! To purchase Abby's new booklet, "The Anger in All of Us and How to Deal With It," send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Anger Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

AT WIT'S END

Life in fast lane has passed repairmen by

By Erma Bombeck

Among other things, I try to run a house.

That means there has never been a moment since the house was built that everything is working at the same time. A light is always burned out somewhere, a disposal won't dispose, or something has a pan under it to catch a leak.

Bombeck

I call repairmen and prepare to grow old.

They tell me they'll schedule me two weeks from Tuesday. Hang around the house and they'll call if they can make it.

It's the same thing with doctors and dentists. You tell your physician's receptionist that you're dying, and she'll put you on hold, return and ask, "How about 2 p.m. three weeks from today?"

That's why it gave me pause a few weeks ago to read that within HOURS after the L.A. riots, someone had written a song, "Can We Get Along?" and it was on the air. That same day, five concerts were in the works to raise money. There is no doubt that a writer somewhere is pitching a movie starring Mel Gibson as Peter Ueberroth as we speak.

It's the same with a murder trial that gets a lot of play. One night you're seeing it on the 6 o'clock news, and within the week it's a six-hour miniseries. Yet it takes 45 days to get a sofa slipcovered.

Books that normally take a year to write and another nine months to publish have been known to get into gear overnight. Within two weeks after war was declared on Baghdad, a book, "Desert Voices," was in the book stalls. Same thing with "The Pentagon Papers" and "The Tower Report." How do they do that in two weeks? It takes a cable company longer than that to answer its phone when you've lost your picture.

There's something wrong here, America. We've been programmed to believe that it takes three days for a check written to you to clear, so how come it takes only three hours to process and return one stamped "Insufficient Funds" that you have written?

I know we can do it. We can develop pictures in an hour, get a pizza delivered in 30 minutes and prescription glasses made on our lunch hour. It's not that I'm an impatient person. I don't have to have everything yesterday. I only want to get a refund on an airline ticket while I'm still alive and a dress I ordered from a mail-order catalog before it goes out of style.

Ryan woes

Ryan, who hasn't won a game since last September and is 0-1 in his last 10 starts, walked Andy Stankiewicz and was 2-0 on Don Mattingly when he decided to leave the game.

A new Angel

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The California Angels picked UCLA's Pete Janicki as the eighth choice in the baseball draft Monday.

Janicki, a 6-foot-4, right-hander, went to El Dorado High in Placentia, where he was a teammate of Cal State-Fullerton third baseman Phil Nevin, the first choice of the Houston Astros.

Janicki, 21, said he hopes to sign with the Angels soon, but his current focus is on making the U.S. Olympic team. The Olympic trials begin Sunday in Tennessee.

Janicki, the third pitcher selected, was 9-4 with a 3.53 ERA and 150 strikeouts in 150⅓ innings this season as a junior. His three-year record is 23-12.

Sooners shuck Shockers

Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Home runs by Rich Hills and Jason Evers led Oklahoma to an 8-4 victory and sent second-ranked Wichita State to its earliest exit in College World Series history Monday night.

The Shockers (56-11), who lost to Pepperdine on Saturday, had finished third or higher in four previous CWS appearances.

"By the fifth inning I was convinced it was two teams that both wanted to go home, two teams who were looking to get out of here," Wichita State coach Gene Stephenson said. "They gave us so many opportunities in the first five innings, we should have scored seven or eight times.

"When we decided we wanted to go home first, we opened the flood gates," Stephenson said of a six-run sixth inning.

Oklahoma (43-23), ranked seventh and 10th in two national polls, will play the loser of Monday's late game between Pepperdine and Texas in another elimination contest on Tuesday.

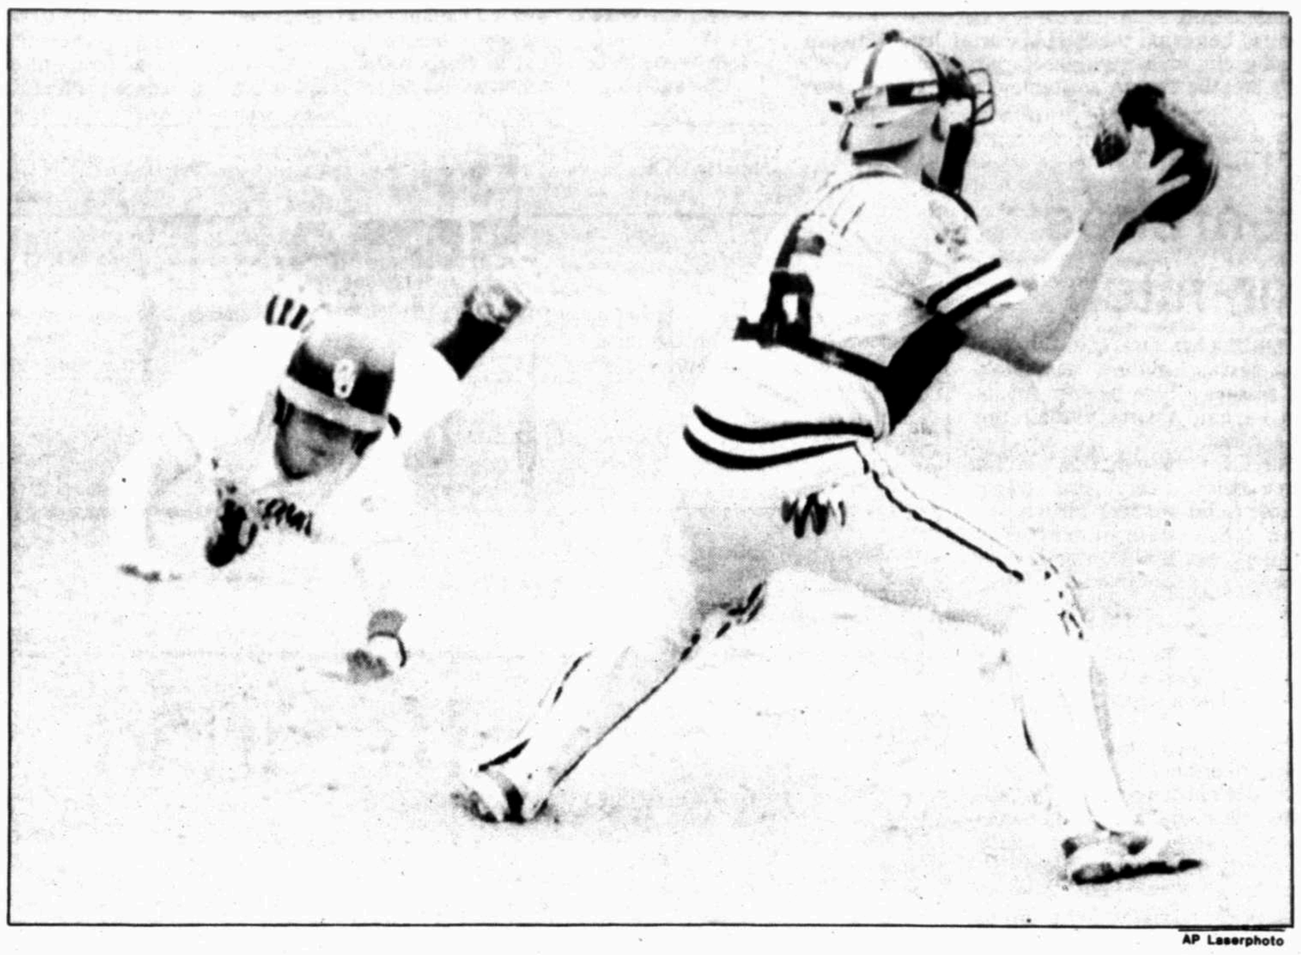

The Sooners, who split two games with Wichita State during the regular season, knocked out two of the Shockers' best pitchers in the fifth and sixth innings.

"Our execution might not have been as good as we wanted in the first couple of innings but I think we wanted it," Oklahoma coach Larry Cochell said. "The attitude was good on the bench."

Cochell said the Sooners' 15-3 loss to Texas in Saturday's opening round left his club something to prove.

"We certainly didn't want to end the series here like we played against Tex-

■ Pete Sampras to test Andre Agassi while Jennifer Capriati meets Monica Seles in key matches today.

By Stephen Wilson
AP Sports Writer

PARIS — At last, it's time for the marquee matchups at the French Open.

Pete Sampras and Andre Agassi won in straight sets Monday to set up an all-American quarterfinal, while Jennifer Capriati advanced to a women's quarterfinal against Monica Seles.

The two matches headline the center court lineup today at Roland Garros.

Playing what he said was the best clay-court match of his career, Sampras beat Germany's Carl Uwe Steeb 6-4, 6-3, 6-2.

Agassi, displaying a new-found confidence that he described as arrogance, defeated Emilio Sanchez of Spain 6-1, 6-3, 7-5 in the completion of a rain-interrupted match.

Capriati, the last American in the women's field, outplayed fellow teenager Mary Pierce 6-4, 6-3 in the first match of what could develop into a long rivalry. Then she turned her attention to Seles, the top seed and two-time defending champion.

"Right now my motivation is very high and I'm very eager to play the next match," said the 16-year-old Capriati. "Yeah, I am really excited to play."

So are Sampras and Agassi, who have each lost only one set so far and seem to get stronger with each round.

Agassi, who has reached the finals here the past two years, was expected to get this far. But Sampras, who beat Agassi in the final of the 1990 U.S. Open, has never been considered a major threat on clay — until now.

"I don't think too many people expected me to be here," he said. "Whatever I do here is more or less a bonus."

Only six weeks ago, Sampras lost 6-3, 6-3 to Steeb on clay in Monte Carlo. "This time I played great tennis," he said. "It really can't come at a better time."

Sampras, who is seeded No. 3, said he believes he can win the tournament because the balls are light and the clay courts are faster than normal.

"It's a surface you can definitely

Now it's Coalition II

■ A second tier of bowl games has been added to the controversial bowl alliance.

DALLAS (AP) — The Gator, Blockbuster and John Hancock bowls have been picked to participate in the second tier of a bowl alliance organized in January.

The commissioners of the Atlantic Coast, Big East, Big Eight, Pac-10 and Southwest Conferences met last week during the College Football Association meetings in Dallas to organize the alliance and announced it Monday.

Teams from the ACC, Big East, Big Eight, Pac-10 and SWC — excluding the champion of each league — will be available for selection by the Fiesta Bowl and the two Florida bowls in the so-called Coalition II.

An alliance involving the Orange, Sugar, Cotton and Fiesta bowls was forged in January. Under that plan, champions of the Big Eight, SWC and Southeastern Conference will still head to Miami, New Orleans and Dallas, but their opponents as well as the Fiesta Bowl teams won't be determined until after the regular season.

The four primary games will pick from among Notre Dame, two at-large teams and the champions of the Big East and Atlantic Coast conferences, based on The Associated Press poll.

Once these selections have been completed, the remaining three at-large teams will be available to Bowl Coalition II, which will select one team each. The Gator Bowl will select first, followed by the Blockbuster and John Hancock bowls.

The Rose Bowl, which matches champions from the Big Ten and Pac-10, is not part of the alliance, which made a nine-year deal.

In January, the Big East and ACC rejected an offer to send their champion to the Blockbuster Bowl each year. Last month, Penn State accepted an invitation from the Blockbuster Bowl to participate in its game next Jan. 1.

Astros take Nevin as top draft pick

By Jim Donaghy
AP Baseball Writer

NEW YORK — Phil Nevin, a third baseman instrumental in getting Cal State-Fullerton to the College World Series, was taken by the Houston Astros Monday as the top pick in baseball's amateur draft.

The 21-year-old Nevin is batting .398 with 21 homers and 81 RBIs for Fullerton, which has one loss in the double-elimination tournament and plays Florida State today.

"We believe he will be on a fast track to playing in Houston," Astros general manager Bill Wood said. "His credentials are excellent, both as a pure hitter and one with power. And in the field, he is very capable of becoming an outstanding major league first baseman."

Nevin, in Omaha, Neb., was optimistic about signing. Money has become a big issue in the draft since last year's top pick, Brien Taylor, signed with the New York Yankees for a $1.55 million bonus.

"I don't think money's going to be that difficult," Nevin said. "It's something I want to do, to play major league baseball, and we're going to get it done.

■ Complete first round draft picks/3C

"I'm very excited to be an Astro and very excited to play in the dome," he said before hugging his parents. "I guess it's a little weight off my shoulders, but I was prepared for this."

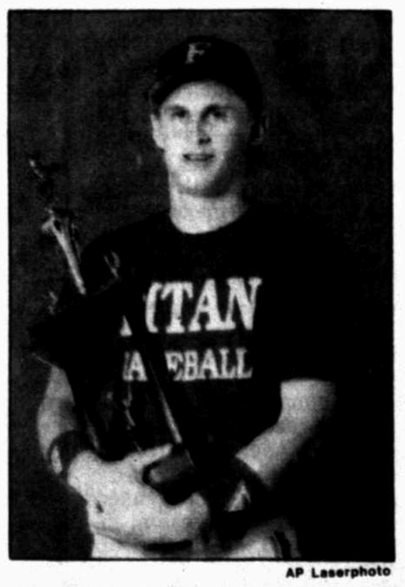

Norm Nevin, his father, said he also wasn't worried about money at this point.

"I don't see a draft bonus as lifetime security," he said. "I say that as a dad and a fan. If he makes it in the major leagues, the money will come down the road."

Cleveland used the second pick for North Carolina right-hander Paul Shuey, who was 5-2 with a 3.13 ERA. He struck out 87, walked 40 and saved six games for the Tar Heels.

"He's a power pitcher," Indians scouting director Mickey White said. "He's got to refine his command of his pitches. But as far as quality of pitches, as we go through our list we say: Who's got the best fastball? — it's Paul Shuey. Who's

Penguins repeat NHL title in sweeping fashion

Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Pittsburgh Penguins didn't need to be perfect to win their second straight Stanley Cup title.

Despite a sub-par goaltending performance by Tom Barrasso and a sub-par job by their defense, the Penguins managed to beat the Chicago Blackhawks 6-5 to complete a four-game sweep Monday night.

In the end, it was the Penguins' superior overall talent that clinched their second league championship.

Mario Lemieux, the NHL's scoring leader despite missing almost a quarter of the season, won the Conn Smythe Trophy as Stanley Cup MVP. Lemieux missed part of the playoffs after his hand was broken on a slash by Adam Graves in Game 2 of the Patrick Division finals with the New York Rangers. But he returned against Boston in the Wales Conference finals and finished the playoffs with 16 goals in 15 games.

"We didn't play well in the first period. We gave up a couple of goals that were a little soft," Lemieux said of Monday night's clincher. "We talked about putting more pressure on them and that's what we did."

The Blackhawks gave it a valiant effort, however, in the furiously-paced game before becoming the 16th team to be swept in finals history.

Chicago played catchup all game, trailing 1-0, 2-1, 3-2 and 4-3 before the Penguins finally broke a 4-all tie on a goal by defenseman Larry Murphy at 4:51 of the third period.

That quieted the noisy crowd of 18,472 at Chicago Stadium, who had thrown hundreds of hats on the rink in the first period when Dirk Graham scored a record-tying three goals for the Blackhawks.

Murphy drilled a shot from the top of the right circle past backup goaltender Dominik Hasek, who came in for beleagured Ed Belfour.

Then Ron Francis made it 6-4 with a shot from the left circle at 7:59 and that was all the cushion the defending champions needed to become the first team to post consecutive championships since the Edmonton Oilers did it in 1987 and 1988.

The crowd came to life momentarily when Jeremy Roenick scored on a rebound at 11:18.

But the Penguins' defense, which had allowed the Blackhawks to attack their goal throughout, suddenly turned Chicago away.

For the Penguins, their 11th straight playoff victory couldn't have been sweeter. It capped a season of distraction and turmoil starting with the tragedy of the loss of coach Bob Johnson, who died of brain cancer last fall.

Scotty Bowman took over as coach during an inconsistent season when the Penguins finished sixth in the league with a modest 39-32-9 record for 87 points.

Drexler searches for nitch

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — After nine soaring, gliding, slam-dunking seasons, Clyde Drexler finally has earned a spot among the NBA's best.

For many, though, that's still a notch below Larry Bird, Magic Johnson and Michael Jordan.

An NBA championship for Drexler and the Portland Trail Blazers probably would change that.

"If you look at his resume, that's pretty much the only thing he's missing," Drexler's close friend Buck Williams said. "Statistically, over the years, his numbers are right there with those players or probably better."

Drexler's coach and fervent promoter, Rick Adelman, says his star performer already belongs with the greats of the game. An NBA title, though, would help others realize what Adelman says he already knows.

"I guess it would legitimize everything," Adelman said. "Jordan was already there but when he won it, it was just that much more attention. And it certainly shot Scottie Pippen up there."

Drexler's low-key personality masks an intense desire to win the crown after two near-misses.

"This is something everybody who ever wanted to play the game of basketball has dreamed about many, many times," he said. "It means you're the best team in the world. It's a tremendous feeling."

After a season full of accolades that include his first start in the All-Star Game, a runnerup finish to Jordan in the most valuable player balloting and a spot on the U.S. Olympic "dream team," an NBA title "is the only way it could get better," Drexler said.

"That's sort of the final chapter of any great player's career, to lead a team to the championship," said Geoff Petrie, the Blazers senior vice president for basketball operations. "I know that Clyde has a tremendous desire to try to accomplish that."

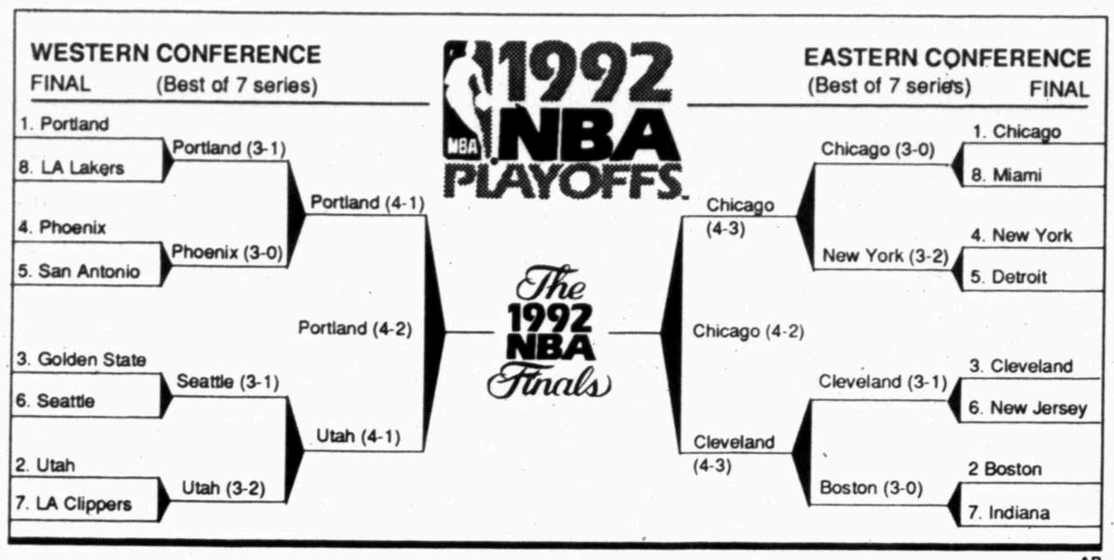

The road to NBA stardom has been a rough one at times for Drexler, who left the University of Houston as a junior and was the 14th selection in the 1983 draft.

There were questions about his desire, about his outside shooting and about his ability to be a team player.

"He got labeled based on some incidents early on and obviously they haven't stood the test of time," Petrie said.

Later, there were criticisms that he couldn't get along with coaches.

"He got involved with some controversy and I think the public has been a little hesitant to give him his due," Williams said.

NBA playoffs grind down predictable path

By C.W. Nevius
N.Y. Times News Service

Well, here it is. After 82 regular-season games, 14 different playoff matchups and seven months, the NBA Finals begin tomorrow night. The whole elaborate process has finally narrowed down to two contestants for the whole enchilada.

And who are these two plucky survivors, who battled adversity for a chance at the title? Chicago and Portland — exactly the teams nearly everyone predicted before the season began.

Or, to put it another way, the two teams with the best records way back at the end of the regular season — the Bulls won 67 games, the Trail Blazers tied Cleveland, with 57 victories.

Would you like a little surefire advice about the NBA? We can give it to you in four letters — H-O-M-E.

Of the 14 playoff series this season, 13 of them were won by the team with the homecourt advantage. The exceptions were the Golden State Warriors, and it was such a shock when they lost to Seattle that there was talk in the Bay Area of trading the Coliseum Arena, Jose Canseco and Joe Montana for a big man.

So have we learned anything from this? Is the whole season nothing more than an 82-stage qualifier for the homecourt advantage? Well, sort of. But there are lessons from this season, and we'd be foolish to ignore them. For example:

SCORING — You want lots of it. That sounds simple-minded, but remember, it was just a couple of years ago that those slow-moving, low-scoring Detroit Pistons were dominating the game.

That's changed. Nine of the 10 top scoring teams in the regular season made the playoffs, and five of the top eight made the semifinals.

SHOT BLOCKING — Not a factor. Cleveland led the league in blocked shots, with 621, but hapless Sacramento was second. Chicago was way down the list, at 480, but that was still more than either Utah (448) or Portland (410).

POINT GUARD — Critical. The four semifinalists may have the best four point guards in the game. It was obvious that when Utah's John Stockton or Cleveland's Mark Price were dinged up with injuries, their teams floundered.

Tough Terry Porter leads the Blazers, and the Bulls' Michael Jordan is simply the best player in the game.

CENTER — Irrelevant. Like house pets, some people have 'em and some don't, and except for the hair on the furniture, it doesn't seem to make much difference. The finals bring us that clash of the titans, Kevin Duckworth vs. Bill Cartwright.

There was only one honest-to-goodness, well-rounded center in the semifinals, Cleveland's Brad Daugherty. Now he's out.

What you really need is a Karl Malone kind of guy to get down low, take the ball and score or get fouled. Every semifinal team had that guy except the Bulls, so they use Jordan, who is only the league MVP.

REBOUNDING — You'll be shocked to hear this is important. Let's just look at the percentage of available rebounds a team grabs. Portland tied with New Jersey for the NBA lead, at 53 percent, Chicago was fourth, and Cleveland and Utah were right there.

We could go on and on. Outside shooting? It must be important, or why are Danny Ainge and Jim Paxson gainfully employed?

So the also-rans in the NBA need one of two guys to get to the top: either 1) a big galoot who can rebound and score a little down low, or 2) Michael Jordan. The choice is theirs.

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Missouri star Anthony Peeler, widely projected as a first-round selection in the NBA draft, may see his status tumble after his arrest for allegedly attacking a woman and pointing a gun at her head.

Peeler, the Big Eight player of the year, was scheduled to be arraigned Tuesday on charges of kidnapping, carrying a concealed weapon, assault and brandishing a weapon.

Most all NBA teams now give psychologic tests to potential draftees, and the incident involving Peeler would "raise a red flag" that might cause a team interested in drafting him to reconsider making him a No. 1 pick, said Lee Rose, general manager of the Milwaukee Bucks.

"I think you've got to go back into his background, has there been a pattern in his behavior that would indicate a future problem," Rose said.

"My immediate response is that you've to look at more than just the basketball skills," he said.

Bulls vs. Blazers: Road ends here

By Joe Mooshil
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO — It's the Chicago Bulls vs. the Portland Trail Blazers in the NBA Finals — finally.

In 1990, the Blazers reached the Finals and lost to the Detroit Pistons, who beat the Bulls in the Eastern Conference finals.

Last season, the Bulls won the NBA title against the Los Angeles Lakers, who upset the Blazers in the Western Conference finals.

On Wednesday, it's Blazers-Bulls, best in the East against best in West, Air Jordan against Clyde the Glide. And don't think the Jordan-Drexler matchup is lost on the NBA's top players.

"I'm pretty sure the hype is going to begin between Clyde and myself," Jordan said. "It was anticipated last year, but then the Lakers surprised Portland.

"My approach is that it's not me against Clyde but my team against his team. I'm not going to go into the Finals looking at it as a one-on-one confrontation between Clyde Drexler and myself."

Drexler doesn't mind the comparisons with Jordan.

"When I hear people compare me to Michael Jordan, it's the highest compliment," Drexler said. "I'm always honored. But I don't compete against Michael. I do what I can do for Portland. That's what matters."

What matters is winning a championship. The Blazers last won the title in 1976-77, while the Bulls are going for two in a row.

Both teams are coming off tough six-game series and both are well-rested for Game 1 in Chicago Stadium. The Blazers won the West last Thursday with a 105-97 win over Utah, while the Bulls beat Cleveland 99-94 on Friday to take the East.

"Last time, we were just happy getting there," Drexler said of the Blazers' five-game loss to the Pistons in 1990. "This time we want good results. A ring is missing from a lot of guys' careers and we want to win it."

Added Blazers coach Rick Adelman: "It's a great accomplishment for us to get here again. But it's one more step. You don't get the opportunity very often, so you've got to take advantage of it. This team has been through a lot and we're about as mentally ready as we can be."

The Bulls, who were taken to seven games by the New York Knicks before knocking off the Cavaliers, are just thankful for a chance to repeat.

"There is a feeling of relief in a lot of ways to get back to the Finals," coach Phil Jackson said.

"I wanted to be back in the Finals, that's the only thing that was on my mind," added Scottie Pippen, who had 29 points and 12 rebounds in the clincher against Cleveland. "There was a great amount of pressure on us to get back here. Now we have to just go out and play."

Last year, the Bulls swept through the playoffs, losing only two of 17 postseason games. This year, they've already lost five times in the playoffs.

"Portland is one of the most athletic teams in the league; it's going to be a big challenge," Jordan said. "We're going to have to play smart with a lot of good defense."

as," Cochell said. "Our kids were thoroughly embarrassed Saturday in front of 19,000 people and a national television audience."

"That loss woke us up and really helped us," Oklahoma outfielder Byron Mathews said.

Pepperdine 7, Texas 0

Pepperdine's Derek Wallace displayed why he was a first-round draft pick as he shut out Texas for six innings to lead the Waves to a 7-0 victory over the Longhorns at the College World Series Monday night.

Wallace (4-2) was taken by the Chicago Cubs as the 11th pick in the first round of the major league draft earlier in the day. He scattered seven hits before surrendering to Pepperdine relief ace Steve Montgomery after a single and walk in the seventh.

Montgomery, who worked 1⅔ innings to assist Patrick Ahearne in a 6-0 shutout of Wichita State Saturday, worked out of that jam, polished off the shutout and earned his eighth save.

That extended the third-ranked Waves' scoreless post-season inning streak to 29, dating back to the Hawaii game in the regional semifinals. Pepperdine (46-11-1) threw the first back-to-back shutouts at a CWS since Arizona State blanked Oklahoma 1-0, Southern California 3-0 and Temple 1-0 in 1972.

The win also advanced Pepperdine to a 6:36 p.m. CDT game Thursday to meet the winner of a 6:36 p.m. elimination game Tuesday between Texas (47-16) and Oklahoma (43-23). The Sooners eliminated second-ranked Wichita State 8-4 earlier Monday. The Sooners were bombed by Texas 15-3 in Saturday's first round.

Dan Melendez gave the Waves all the runs they needed in the first with his 12th homer of the season, a two-run shot off Texas loser Scott Harrison (11-3).

Direction of sports in America worries McMillen

By Hal Bock
AP Sports Writer

Having graduated from the trenches of sports, Rep. Tom McMillen is stepping back to take another look at America's obsession with the world of fun and games.

He's not sure he likes what he sees.

What McMillen has found is an industry that is nearly out of control, driven by dollars, consumed by winning, seeded with de facto monopolies that are happily condoned by government. He sees it headed on a collision course with reality that may eventually require congressional control.

McMillen has written a book on the subject, called "Out of Bounds."

"What is out of bounds," he said, "is the equilibrium of sports to society, its importance compared to other aspects of life like health care and education. Americans believe prosperity depends on the quality of their football or basketball team.

"We are skewered more to sports than other countries like Japan and Germany. On the college level, we have a tail-wagging-the-dog situtation with athletic departments dominating the system instead of education.

"Most countries keep sports separate from education. Here, sports dominates education. Are we nuts?"

All this sticks in the craw of McMillen, who was once a jock hero himself. He's not that far removed from the world of jump shots and jams in college, the Olympics and the NBA. When he played, though, the game was less an obsession than it has become.

"When I retired from the NBA in 1986, the average salary was $250,000," he said. "It has gone up, what, 400 or 500 percent since then. The average is $1 million now.

"What we have is an abusive situation, a labor-driven monopoly in America. It's an artificial economy. The consumer is hit everywhere — ticket prices, parking, concessions. It will continue until it reaches a breaking point."

And then?

"And then," he said, "it will break."

Television bears much of the burden for this monster. "TV money skewered the system," McMillen said. "And when the next contracts come up and the TV money is reduced, there will be big problems, especially for baseball. The NBA has a salary cap. The NFL has revenue sharing. Baseball has neither. Baseball has a Darwinian approach and right now it has $1 coming in and $1.50 going out. It's going to be dicey for baseball."

If commissioner Fay Vincent thinks the solution might be in pay-per-view television, McMillen suggests he think again.

"There is consumer consciousness being raised in the halls of Congress on the subject of cable and pay-per-view," he said. "I believe we are heading to some regulation of it. If baseball thinks that's the answer, I think it is barking up a tree that will come back and bite it."

Instead, McMillen suggests baseball explore other avenues, perhaps international play.

At the college level, McMillen sees a system where athletic departments generate millions of dollars in revenues and the athletes can't even take a T-shirt without the NCAA peeking over his shoulder. "It's an indentured system, a plantation mentality," McMillen said. "Coaches get millions. Players get nothing.

McMillen has introduced legislation titled the Intercollegiate Reform Act aimed at overturning the Supreme Court decision of 1984 that made college football essentially a television free for all, permitting deals such as Notre Dame's $38 million contract with NBC.

"What we have created is an arms race in college sports," McMillen said. "This bill overturns that and returns control of television contracts to the NCAA, providing an equitable share of the revenues within the Association for broad-based sports that right now are caught at the bottom of the pyramid.

"We don't pay attention to the x's and o's, the fundamentals that make the game. We're busy looking at the crowd, not the basics. We've diverted from what made this country great.

"I may be Don Quixote on all of this," McMillen said. "But I think government created it and I think government will straighten it out."

"Greed and hypocrisy are not self-regulated. Those who make money off a system are not going to regulate the system."

Who will, then?

The congressman just smiled.

Ryan comes out in first inning

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Nolan Ryan left the game after 10 pitches with a strained left hamstring, and the New York Yankees went on to beat the Texas Rangers 7-1 Monday night as Matt Nokes hit a three-run homer.

Ryan is expected to make his next scheduled next start on Saturday night. It was only the second time in 775 major league games that Ryan hadn't retired at least one batter. He has never gone this deep into a season without a victory.

Rich Monteleone earned his third victory against one loss in the game, delayed twice by rain for a total of 82 minutes. Monteleone gave up no runs and four hits in four innngs.

Nokes hit his eighth homer off the season off loser Jeff Robinson (4-4) in the fourth inning after Kevin Maas walked and Danny Tartabull singled. Nokes also walked with the bases loaded in the seventh inning for his fourth RBI.

Starter Melido Perez allowed only one run and three hits in four innings. He was hurt by the two rain delays and replaced by Monteleone to start the bottom of the fifth inning.

Perez ran into trouble in the fourth inning. Ruben Sierra doubled and Kevin Reimer scored him on a single.

Blue Jays 5, Twins 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Former Midland Angel Devon White homered twice — the second an inside-the-park shot in the 10th inning — to lead Toronto past Minnesota in a matchup of division leaders.

AL Roundup

White homered batting right-handed to lead off the game. It was the third time in his career he has homered from each side of the plate and he is the 56th player in AL history to accomplish the feat.

The Blue Jays added an insurance run when Joe Carter hit a two-out single and Dave Winfield doubled him home.

The 10th-inning rally made a winner of Duane Ward (3-2), who pitched two innings and allowed one hit. Tom Henke got the last three outs for his ninth save.

Brewers 6, Tigers 2

MILWAUKEE — Scott Fletcher started a four-run rally with a two-out RBI single in the seventh inning as Milwaukee beat Detroit.

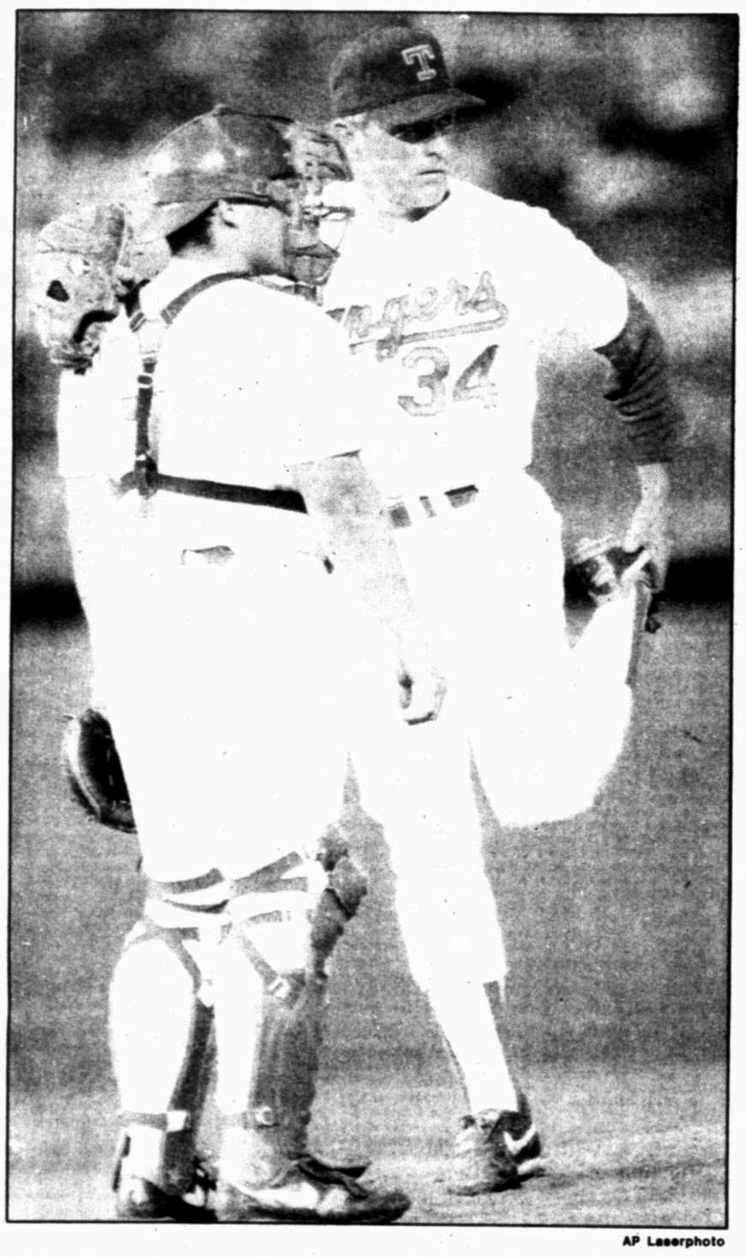

B.J. Surhoff singled with one out in the seventh, moved to second on an infield out and scored when Fletcher dumped a short fly ball in front of Tigers left fielder Phil Clark, who hesitated and then let the ball drop.

Fletcher's hit finished starter Scott Aldred (2-5) and then hits by Kevin Seitzer and Paul Molitor off reliever John Doherty loaded the bases.

Greg Vaughn then drew a bases-loaded walk for the second straight game to force in the Brewers' fourth run and two more scored when Cecil Fielder missed Robin Yount's grounder for an error.

Jaime Navarro (5-4) pitched eight innings and allowed eight hits, including homers to Travis Fryman in the first and Mickey Tettleton in the fourth. The homers were Detroit's major league-leading 67th and 68th of the season.

Tettleton's homer put Detroit ahead 2-1. But the Brewers tied the score in the sixth when Molitor doubled and Vaughn, batting .198, hit an RBI single.

White Sox 5, Royals 3

KANSAS CITY — Matt Merullo singled in the tie-breaking run and Alex Fernandez survived a shaky start to pitch Chicago to a rain-soaked victory against Kansas City, snapping the White Sox' six-game losing streak.

Fernandez (3-5), who had lost three straight decisions, gave up four hits and three runs in the first inning but allowed only three hits the rest of the way en route to his second complete game of the season. He struck out seven and walked two.

Gregg Jefferies singled in the first, stretching his hitting streak to 18 games and tying San Diego's Gary Sheffield for longest streak in the major leagues this year.

But the White Sox came back in the fourth with three off Mike Boddicker (0-4).

Glavine notches eighth victory

Associated Press

ATLANTA — Tom Glavine became the National League's first eight-game winner and also drove in two runs in a six-run third inning Monday night as the Atlanta Braves beat the Philadelphia Phillies 7-6.

Glavine (8-3) allowed five hits and four runs — just one earned — in 5⅓ innings, increasing his record against the Phillies to 10-1. He walked five and struck out two as Atlanta won its fourth straight. Mark Wohlers, recalled May 28, pitched the ninth for his first save.

Trailing 1-0, the Braves sent 11 batters to the plate in the third. David Justice and Sid Bream hit two-run singles off Cliff Brantley (2-4) and Glavine got his hit off Ben Rivera.

Expos 7, Astros 1

HOUSTON — Dennis Martinez pitched a four-hitter to win his fifth consecutive decision and rookie Matt Stairs drove in three runs as Montreal beat Houston.

Martinez (6-4), who hasn't lost since April 27, struck out eight and walked one in his second complete game.

Darryl Kile (2-6) allowed three runs and four hits in five innings, walked four and struck out two.

Montreal took a 2-0 lead in the third after loading the bases on singles by Spike Owen and Martinez and a walk to Marquis Grissom. Kile walked Delino DeShields, forcing in a run, and Stairs hit a sacrifice fly.

Steve Finley doubled in the fourth for the first hit off Martinez and scored on Jeff Bagwell's single. Montreal made it 3-1 in the fifth when Grissom doubled, took third on DeShield's sacrifice and scored on Stairs' double.

Montreal scored three times in the sixth when Darren Reed singled, Owen tripled, Xavier Hernandez's threw a wild pitch, Grissom and DeShields walked and Stairs singled. Bret Barberie added a sacrifice fly in the ninth.

Mets 14, Giants 1

NEW YORK — Bobby Bonilla busted out of his season-long hitting slump at Shea Stadium with a career-high six RBIs, including a grand slam, as New York routed San Francisco.

The Mets entered the game with only two runs in the first four games of their homestand — all losses — and Bonilla came into the night hitting only .137 with no homers and four RBIs at home this season.

Bonilla was booed loudly over the weekend as the Mets lost twice to Atlanta, and even wore earplugs in Saturday's game.

NL Roundup

Bonilla had an RBI single in a two-run first inning, his third career grand slam highlighted a six-run second and he added a run-scoring double in a four-run fifth. He also walked and scored in the fourth.

The Mets had a season-high 16 hits, including three singles apiece from Dave Magadan and Vince Coleman and two doubles by Todd Hundley. The 14 runs were also a season high for New York.

Giants manager Roger Craig chose to intentionally walk Murray in the second inning to load the bases for Bonilla with the Mets leading 4-0. The grand slam came off John Burkett (5-2), who gave up eight runs on five hits in 1⅓ innings.

Dodgers 8, Pirates 6

PITTSBURGH — Mitch Webster hit a three-run pinch homer in the sixth inning as Los Angeles beat Pittsburgh and extended its winning streak to six games.

Los Angeles, which has won 12 of 15, reached .500 at 23-23, the first time the Dodgers haven't had a losing record since they were 9-9 on April 25. Pittsburgh lost for the 13th time in 16 games.

With the Dodgers trailing 6-4, Webster hit his third home run of the season. The drive off Denny Neagle (2-3) was the second pinch homer of Webster's career and made him 3 for 7 as a pinch hitter this season with seven RBIs.

Cubs 6, Padres 1

CHICAGO — Greg Maddux pitched a four-hitter and Derrick May hit a two-run single in a five-run fifth inning as Chicago beat San Diego.

Maddux (5-5), who hadn't won since May 6 and had just one victory in seven previous starts, struck out six and walked none as Chicago stopped a three-game losing streak. He allowed just four singles and only one, Tony Fernandez's second hit, reached the outfield.

Andy Benes (5-4), who had won his three previous decisions, allowed five runs and nine hits in five innings.

Gary Scott, recalled from Class AAA Iowa earlier in the day, opened the fifth with an infield single and, one-out later, took third on Doug Dascenzo's single. Jose Vizcaino and Ryne Sandberg followed with RBI singles for a 2-1 lead, Mark Grace doubled in a run and May hit a two-run single.

Vincent scolds city of Houston for lack of support

HOUSTON (AP) — Baseball commissioner Fay Vincent scolded the city of Houston Monday, suggesting Astros fans and media should focus on helping John McMullen sell the team instead of showing their anger against the owner.

"By demeaning John and failing to support the team, I wonder if the people of Houston have not made the sale more difficult," Vincent said. "I wonder why the people of Houston believe they can punish John and not harm the prospects of the sale to a new owner."

McMullen purchased the Astros in 1979 and helped the team out of financial difficulty but he angered fans by firing popular general manager Tal Smith, losing Nolan Ryan to the Texas Rangers and sending the Astros on the road for the month of August to allow the Republican Convention use of the Astrodome.

"If people in Houston really want a new owner, and obviously they do, then why are they forcing John and all of us toward unattractive solutions?" Vincent asked after a luncheon speech.

"We simply can't sit and watch baseball be devalued, if you will, over a period of time."

Vincent said the best approach would be to help McMullen get the team sold to interests "who can build the team the way the fans want."

The Astros owner agreed with Vincent that criticism was hindering sale talks.

"A new owner coming into this business, is worried about the treatment he'll get," McMullen said. "He's worried about his family, if he has teenagers, that's a concern.

"What the commissioner is saying, you've got to help in that regard. I could cite numerous instances."

Vincent said he wasn't blaming Houston fans.

"I'm not suggesting that the fans have devalued baseball," Vincent said. "I'm saying I don't think we can sit and watch baseball be devalued.

"The reason baseball gets devalued is the corporate community doesn't support, if season ticket sales diminish and if there isn't the kind of support in this community that we see in other communities, then baseball gets devalued," Vincent said.

Court: States can't sue airlines on ads

■ 5-3 decision prevents Texas from filing civil complaint against TWA.

By Dan Freedman
Reporter-Telegram Washington bureau

WASHINGTON — Ruling against the state of Texas, the Supreme Court said Monday that states cannot sue airlines over ads for fares that authorities consider deceptive.

The 5-3 decision, which prevented Texas from filing a civil complaint against Trans World Airlines, was a defeat for states seeking to counteract airline advertisements offering fares that seem too good to be true.

The high court said Texas could not pursue TWA in court because the 1978 federal Airline Deregulation Act made control of airline prices off limits to states.

Reacting sharply, New York Attorney General Robert Abrams said the decision "is a serious blow for consumers and a clear signal to airline carriers that 'all's fair in the fare wars.'"

The ruling, Abrams said, "means that states may protect their citizens from false advertising by all other businesses but must sit by mute, drowned out by the loud roar of phony airfare deals from airlines.

"Already prey to shrinking competition in the airline industry, the consumer is now at the mercy of deceptive advertising and a historically indifferent federal government."

Abrams called on Congress to amend the 1978 law to permit states to file lawsuits aimed at deceptive advertising by airlines within their borders.

In 1987, the National Association of Attorneys General, representing the chief legal officials of all 50 states, issued guidelines requiring airlines to make the fine print on advertisements clear.

Jim Mattox, then Texas' attorney general, had used the guidelines as the basis for a warning to TWA in November 1988 that the state was about to file suit.

Mattox accused TWA of promoting discount airfares in ads he said failed to explain adequately that their availability was limited and that there were restrictions on when and how they could be used.

Texas officials argued they were not trying to regulate air travel, but simply seeking to force TWA to put a greater emphasis on the fine print under bargain-rate airfares.

But TWA, contending that federal law restricted state power in such cases, immediately filed a motion seeking to stop Mattox from suing the airline. In 1989, a U.S. District Court judge agreed and enjoined Texas from filing suit. In 1991, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit upheld the ruling.

Texas appealed, and on Monday the Supreme Court sided with the airline. Justice Antonin Scalia, writing for the majority, said the 1978 law clearly bars states from enforcing any law "relating to (airline) rates."

After listing the attorneys general association guidelines, which require disclosures of limitations and restrictions in large typefaces, Scalia wrote, "One cannot avoid the conclusion that these aspects of the guidelines 'relate to' airline rates."

Policing deceptive airline ads falls to the federal Department of Transportation, Scalia said, but he added: "Our decision does not give the airlines carte blanche to lie to and deceive consumers."

Income, spending rise slightly in April; construction's down

■ Reports illustrate halting nature of economic recovery.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The government on Monday reported puny gains in Americans' income and spending in April and a decline in construction activity, illustrating the halting nature of the economic recovery.

The bad news, however, was somewhat counterbalanced by a positive trade report for the first quarter and a private index showing a fourth consecutive manufacturing gain in May.

The Commerce Department said incomes edged 0.1 percent higher in April to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $4.99 trillion, after a 0.4 percent rise in March.

"It's really not a pretty picture," said economist Sandra Shaber of the Futures Group, a Washington consulting firm.

She noted that, although April marked the third consecutive month of income growth, much of strength has come from government payments to farmers plus welfare and unemployment benefits and temporary measures such as reduced income tax withholding.

"This was in no way a reflection of economic strength," she said.

Consumer spending, which accounts for roughly two-thirds of all economic activity, rose 0.3 percent to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $4.04 trillion after no change the month before.

It was the sixth month without a decline in overall spending. But it was the second straight drop in an important component — spending on big ticket durable goods such as automobiles and furniture. Durable goods spending fell 0.8 percent after a 2 percent drop in March.

"All the evidence seems to point out that the budding expansion is going to be relatively slow by historic standards," said economist Paul Lally of R.H. Wrightson & Associates in New York.

However, he and other analysts took some comfort from a surprisingly big advance in an index measuring the health of the manufacturing sector.

The National Association of Purchasing Management registered gains in production, new orders and exports in May. And it said the portion of its index measuring employment conditions hit a three-year high.

"The rise is a good sign that ... we'll see stronger employment gains ... as we move forward," Lally said.

However, economist Sung Won Sohn of Norwest Corp. in Minneapolis said, "There's a possibility that manufacturers are getting overly ebullient especially since consumers seem to be stepping back a little bit."

Texas Utilities offers incentives for employees to retire early, quit

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Utilities, provider of electric service to one-third of the state, on Monday offered voluntary retirement and severance incentives to its 15,200 employees.

The offer is part of a cost-cutting program the Dallas-based utility started in April. Spokeswoman Kathi Miller said Texas Utilities has no target number for cutting staff but aims to trim 1994 operating expenses by 20 percent compared with taking no steps.

"The electric utility industry as a whole has become extremely competitive," Ms. Miller said. "Like most companies, we're having to find ways to become more efficient."

Texas Utilities has particularly felt competition from independent power companies who have targeted its large, industrial customers.

Employees have until Sept. 1 to decide whether to accept the incentives to leave. About 3,700 qualify for the early retirement package, which requires a person's age and service to add up to at least 65.

The severance incentive includes distribution of an employee's vested retirement benefits plus at least six months' pay.

Employees who accept the offers could choose to leave Texas Utilities' payroll on either Oct. 1 or Nov. 1.

U.S. recycles more plastic products

NEW YORK (NYT) — The nation's plastic producers reported Monday that they were recycling more plastic bottles, yogurt containers and margarine tubs than ever before, but they also said they were having difficulty with sluggish markets and low prices for recycled materials.

According to the Partnership for Plastics Progress, which is affiliated with the industry's main trade association, the Society of the Plastics Industry, about 11 percent of these plastic containers were recycled in 1991, up from 7 percent in 1990.

But only 651 million pounds of the 14.4 billion pounds of plastic packaging produced last year escaped the trash heap, for a recycling rate of 4.5 percent.

J. Roger Hirl, president of the Occidental Chemical Corp. and chairman of the partnership, said markets for recycled materials in general were in their deepest recession in years.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Getting riskless 10 percent return unrealistic

By Bill Doyle

Q: We live in a mortgage-free condominium unit. I am 58. My husband is 60. He took early retirement three years ago. We took such a beating from the stock market in the last three years we are getting "investment shy" and don't know which way to go with our remaining $200,000.

Doyle

To maintain our present lifestyle, we need about 10 percent a year on the $200,000 in a virtually risk-free investment that will sustain us for the rest of our lives, along with Social Security benefits when we reach 62.

My husband is thinking about a money management fund. What would you suggest for us?

A: It's always painful to tell a reader he or she is asking for the impossible. But that is my message to you and anyone else who hopes for a 10 percent annual return from an investment with little or no risk.

There is no such investment. To get 10 percent income in interest or dividends you would have to take on risk. Many investments have produced total returns of 10 percent and a good bit more some years. But you can't count on that.

Total return is a combination of dividends or interest plus gain in market value. Only dividends or interest can be counted as income. After all, you can't pocket a gain in value until you sell the investment.

And no investment increases in value every year. Even the best drops from time to time. That's the risk you take when seeking high return.

I'm not sure what you mean by "money management fund." If your husband is considering turning your $200,000 nest egg over to a brokerage firm that would pick investments for you, be cautious. Many such arrangements have worked out well. But horror stories abound.

Your previous losses in the stock market should have driven home the lesson against taking big risks. So my natural suggestion is to be conservative with your remaining $200,000. You simply can't afford to stray too far off the safety path.

Because rock-solid safe things such as certificates of deposit and U.S. Treasury securities pay low interest these days, you should consider higher-yielding, relative low-risk investments. Take a look at stocks of utility companies and income mutual funds with records of paying good dividends.

You won't get 10 percent in dividends. Unless you pare back on your life style, the unhappy fact is one or both of you might have to seek employment.

Q: You wrote, "As I pound out this column (published April 19) the Treasury note due to mature in April 1997 is yielding 7.01 percent. You can get higher than that on five-year CDs without too much shopping around."

The highest five-year CD interest rate in our area is 6.35 percent. How can I learn the names of banks paying 7.01 percent?

A: The newsletter "100 Highest Yields" now lists 20 banks and savings and loan associations offering five-year CDs with average annual yields ranging from 7.07 to 8.09 percent.

The stated interest rates on those CDs are lower – from 6.1 to 6.85 percent. Average annual yield assumes no withdrawals are made, so that interest is compounded until the CDs mature.

That weekly newsletter is published at 860 Federal Highway One, N. Palm Beach, FL 33408-3825. It costs $98 a year.

Also, high-yielding CDs are available from many securities brokerage firms. Those brokerages keep tabs on what yields are available on CDs issued by banks and savings institutions around the country and sell CDs to investors.

Q: I inherited $40,000. I put half in my checking account and half in a money market account at the same bank. Some people tell me I can lose a lot in the money market account and should put that $20,000 in a CD.

Can you help me?

A: Although rates vary from bank to bank, a CD almost certainly pays higher interest than the money market deposit account. However, both have Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. coverage, so you can't "lose" any of the $20,000 in either account.

Prices slip

Natural gas futures moved higher on the New York Mercantile Exchange Monday, but most other contracts were lower on late profit taking.

West Texas Intermediate for July delivery slid 8 cents to $22.03 per barrel. The contract had moved as much as 20 cents higher before selling hit late in the session.

Local crude purchasers made no changes in their posted price.

Lower-grade sour crude for July delivery was 3 cents lower at $20.28.

Rates unchanged

WASHINGTON — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities were unchanged in Monday's auction.

The Treasury Department sold $11.7 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.75 percent, the same as last week. Another $11.7 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.90 percent, also the same as last week.

Rates were last higher on April 6, when three-month bills sold for 3.95 percent and the six-month rate was 4.02 percent.

The new discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 3.84 percent for three-month bills with a $10,000 bill selling for $9,905.20 and 4.03 percent for a six-month bill selling for $9,802.80.

Over 3400

NEW YORK — Stock prices rallied to new highs Monday, overcoming some early selling as traders studied signs of a stronger economy.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 16.33 points to 3,413.21. That topped the previous closing peak of 3,398.43 reached last Thursday.

The NYSE's composite index gained 1.03 to 229.90.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — The dollar settled mixed on world currency markets Monday, losing ground in domestic trading despite good news about the U.S. economy's health.

In Tokyo the dollar closed at 126.78 yen, down 1.55 yen from last Friday's close.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.8220 from $1.8295 late Friday.

DRAFT: Expansion Rockies, Marlins join in on the first round picks got the best breaking ball? — Paul Shuey. Who's got the most aggressive demeanor on the mound, the opportunity and the ability to dominate in the professional game?' — We feel that he's the guy."

Montreal, in a bit of a surprise, next took left-hander B.J. Wallace of Mississippi State, who had been projected to go later in the opening round. Wallace was 8-3 with a 3.03 ERA with 123 strikeouts in 113 innings.

Jeffrey Hammonds, a Stanford outfielder who many thought was the top available player, was taken by the Baltimore Orioles with the fourth pick. Hammonds hit .377 with six home runs, 33 RBIs and 30 steals for the Cardinal this season but Houston, Cleveland and Montreal — the teams with the three lowest payrolls in the majors — passed over him, fearing a large bonus demand.

Central Florida outfielder Chad Mottola, a player the Astros considered, went fifth to the Cincinnati Reds. He hit .329 this year with 14 homers and 62 RBIs.

Derek Jeter, a 17-year-old shortstop, was the top high school player selected, going to the New York Yankees as the fifth pick. Jeter, from Central High School in Kalamazoo, Mich., hit .460 this season in his first 50 at-bats with four homers and 18 RBIs.

Last year, the Yankees made high school pitcher Brien Taylor the top pick in the draft. There were seven high school players selected on the first round this year and 21 college players.

San Francisco, picking seventh, went for Texas outfielder Calvin Murray, who hit .335 with four homers, 35 RBIs and 39 steals.

California then went for the third pitcher, taking UCLA right-hander Pete Janicki. He was 8-4 with a 3.84 ERA for the Bruins and struck out 133 in 131 innings.

The New York Mets went for a high school player, taking 17-year-old outfielder Preston Wilson from Bamberg Erhardt High in Bamberg, S.C. He is the son of former Met outfielder Mookie Wilson, who played for New York and Toronto before leaving baseball after last season.

Kansas City used the 10th pick for shortstop Michael Tucker from Longwood College in Chase City, Va. Tucker, a left-handed hitter who had been projected as high as third, hit .489 this year with 22 homers and 74 RBIs.

The Chicago Cubs next took right-handed pitcher Derek Wallace of Pepperdine. Wallace was 2-2 with a 4.08 ERA and 47 strikeouts in 51 innings going into the CWS.

Milwaukee, selecting 12th, took Florida State outfielder Kenny Felder, who also is the backup quarterback for the Seminoles. He hit .328 with two homers and 10 RBIs.

Philadelphia took Creighton outfielder Chad McConnell, who hit .397 with 12 homers and 67 RBIs.

Seattle then took Massachusetts left-hander Ron Villone, 7-3 with a 3.34 ERA and 89 strikeouts in 41 innings.

St. Louis used the 15th pick for Arizona State right-hander Sean Lowe, who was 8-4 with a 4.61 ERA for the Sun Devils. Detroit then took Louisiana State right-hander Rick Greene, 5-3 with a 2.49 ERA in 61 innings.

Kansas City, with the pick it got from San Diego as compensation for Kurt Stillwell, took Jim Pittsley, a right-hander from DuBois Area High School in DuBois, Pa. The Mets, with the pick they got from Boston as compensation for Frank Viola, took Florida State left-hander Christopher Roberts, and the Toronto Blue Jays, with the pick they got from Los Angeles as compensation for Tom Candiotti, took outfielder Shannon Stewart of Southridge High School in Southridge, Fla.

The Oakland Athletics, picking 20th, selected right-hander Benji Grigsby of San Diego State, and the Atlanta Braves took right-hander Jamie Arnold of Osceola High School in Osceola, Fla.

Texas used the 22nd pick for right-hander Rick Helling of Stamford University and Pittsburgh took catcher Jason Kendall of Torrance High School in Torrance, Calif.

The Chicago White Sox took first baseman Eddie Pearson of Bishop State Junior College in Alabama and the Blue Jays picked outfielder Todd Steverson of Arizona State, who had been projected to go in the top 10.

Minnesota, with the pick it regained from Seattle on Friday after an arbitrator ruled it did not have to provide compensation for Bill Krueger, took left-hander Daniel Serafini from Serra High School in San Mateo, Calif.

The Colorado Rockies, making their first draft pick ever, took University of Florida right-hander John Burke, who was drafted by Houston last year but chose not to sign. Then the Florida Marlins took Miami catcher Charles Johnson.

The two expansion teams were allowed to draft the season before they start National League play in an effort to make them competitive faster.

Only the first round is immediately made public in order to prevent colleges from using the draft to help recruiting. The remainder of the draft, which continues through Wednesday and goes for as many as 50 rounds, will be released later in the month.

Rangers take hurler Rick Helling

ARLINGTON (AP) — The Texas Rangers, in yet another move to improve its bullpen, selected right-handed pitcher Rick Helling in the first round Monday of baseball's amateur draft.

The Stanford University junior was 9-4 with a 4.43 ERA in 17 games this season. Helling, who started 14 games, led Stanford in wins and strikeouts. He also earned honorable mention All-Pacific 10 Conference honors.

Sandy Johnson, Rangers' assistant general manager, said Helling "has a good arm and throws hard, is very aggressive, and is a real competitor.

"We were very impressed with the way he threw the ball in the NCAA tournament," Johnson said.

Helling is the seventh college pitcher to be drafted by the Rangers in the first round of the draft.

The remainder of the Rangers' selections will be announced June 10.

Top baseball draft choices not always a plum

By Jim Donaghy
AP Baseball Writer

NEW YORK — Nothing is certain in the baseball draft.

In the NFL and NBA drafts, first-round picks almost automatically make the team and it's easy to project at least a dozen future stars. Not so in baseball.

Consider Los Angeles' amateur draft since 1980. Since then the Dodgers have used their first-round picks to take Ross Jones, Dave Anderson, Franklin Stubbs, Erik Sonberg, Dennis Livingston, Chris Gwynn, Mike White, Dan Opperman, Bill Bene, Kiki Jones, Jamie McAndrew and Ronnie Walden.

The first year of the amatuer draft was 1965 when the Kansas City A's picked outfielder Rick Monday No. 1. They could have chosen Johnny Bench or Nolan Ryan, but at least Monday went on to have a productive major league career.

In 1971, the first five picks were Danny Goodwin (White Sox), Jay Franklin (Padres), Tom Bianco (Brewers), Condredge Holloway (Expos) and Ray Branch (Royals). Those teams could have picked Jim Rice, George Brett, Mike Schmidt or Keith Hernandez, who was chosen by St. Louis in the 42nd round.

Four potential Hall of Famers, Rickey Henderson, Wade Boggs, Ozzie Smith and Alan Trammell, were missed by the teams with the first four picks in 1976. Instead they went for Floyd Bannister (Astros), Pat Underwood (Tigers), Ken Smith (Braves) and Bill Bordley (Brewers).

On June 5, 1982, the Twins' future looked bright. They had the fourth pick in the draft that day and when it came their time to select, the player they wanted was still available.

"It was an obvious choice," recalled George Brophy, then the Twins' vice president for scouting. "Bryan Oelkers had been the college pitcher of the year. He was exactly what we needed. So we took him."

The Mets had the next pick. They selected Dwight Gooden.

"Sure, now everybody asks why we didn't get Gooden," said Brophy, currently a scout for the Astros. "But he was still in high school, and I'll bet there haven't been 10 high-school pitchers to make it big. The Mets caught lightning in a bottle that day."

The Mets, of course, missed the lightning in 1966 when they picked catcher Steve Chilcott with the top pick instead of Reggie Jackson. Two years later, New York had the No. 1 pick again and selected shortstop Tim Foli instead of Thurman Munson.

The Mariners thought they had a sure thing when they made Al Chambers the top pick in the 1979 draft. Chambers, a big hitter in high school, eventually made it to the majors for a few games but soon disappeared.

That same year, the Dodgers gambled in the 17th round on the third-best starter on the Bowling Green University staff. That was Orel Hershiser.

"He wasn't overpowering, but he had a good arm. Also, there was his makeup and continual pursuit of improvement," Dodgers general manager Fred Claire said.

"You've got to give credit to our scouting staff. He didn't come by accident," he said. "After all, the 17th round is a long way down, but at the same time, that is the 17th-best player you've put into your system in that given year. And that's not a throwaway draft."

In the 19th round the same year, the Yankees drafted a high school player from Indiana who had a pretty swing. He was Don Mattingly.

"At the time, I thought I should've been taken higher," Mattingly said. "But when I look back on it, I can see why I wasn't. I couldn't run and I couldn't throw. All I could do was hit, and no one knows if a good high school hitter will ever make it to the majors."

In recent years, more teams have selected college players, hoping to get immediate help without so much risk. The Angels made Jim Abbott the eighth choice in 1988 and the Orioles took Gregg Olson with the fourth pick. The No. 1 player picked in '89 was pitcher Andy Benes, selected by San Diego.

Philadelphia also found a gem in the 20th round of the 1978 draft, taking Ryne Sandberg.

Nevin turns thoughts to CWS

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Six of the 28 first-round draft picks Monday were at the College World Series, trying to concentrate on winning an NCAA title before thinking about their professional futures.

Phil Nevin of Cal State Fullerton, taken by the Houston Astros as the first pick, said having the draft behind him will allow him to focus even more on the collegiate championship.

"It maybe takes a little weight off my shoulders but I expected this," the third baseman said after receiving the news in the hotel room of his advisor, Michael Watkins.

Fullerton coach Augie Garrido said Nevin, college baseball's player of the year, wasn't fazed by the spotlight.

"In my opinion, he has taken a major league approach to this situation," Garrido said. "He's been able to shut it all out and play baseball. Phil hasn't shown any of the kinds of disorientation like Ben (McDonald) and some of those guys have."

Nevin and Murray said they will wait until after the College World Series to begin contract negotiations.

Bush administration OKs designer genes for dining

■ Scientists say tomatoes produced through biotechnology are tastier because they've removed the enzyme that makes vine-ripened fruit spoil.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration said last week it would allow the sale — without government testing — of many fruits, vegetables and grains that scientists say they make better than Mother Nature.

The first such product, a genetically altered tomato that resists spoilage and therefore can be picked and shipped at a tasty, red-ripe stage, could be on the supermarket shelves by late next year, according to its developers.

The food industry applauded the administration's go-ahead, saying genetically engineered foods are the key to a more abundant, safe and nutritious food supply.

The policy outlined by Vice President Quayle, Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan and Food and Drug Commissioner David Kessler applies only to food from plants, and does not affect biotechnological research involving meat, poultry, fish or dairy products.

Critics said the policy does not provide adequate safety precautions and threatened legal action to stop the new products from being sold.

But Sullivan said consumers shouldn't worry, and likened the changes developed through biotechnology to those that resulted centuries ago when crops from the New World were introduced in Europe and vice versa. "Today's announcement could be said to be the next step in the development of new food production technologies," he said.

Scientists say the tomatoes produced through biotechnology, for example, are tastier because they've removed the enzyme that makes vine-ripened fruit spoil and shippers can now transport fruit picked juicy and red.

The creator of that tomato, Calgene Inc., of Davis, Calif., said the government's announcement would make it possible to get the fruit to supermarkets by late 1993. It's the first genetically engineered product expected to be available to consumers.

In short, biotechnology allows scientists to cross plants, through gene-splicing, that aren't naturally compatible so that taste and durability can be improved.

Besides the tomato, fruit trees resistant to the cold, and crops that could resist pests without chemical pesticides, are in the works.

"It has been only 10 years since biologists created the first plants using biotechnology," said Sullivan. "Since then, these techniques have been applied to more than 50 plant species and food producers are preparing products for marketing."

He said the only products that will be allowed onto the market without testing by the government are plants whose new properties can be found in other plants people already eat. If a high-quality protein that's already in bananas, for example, were added to tomatoes to improve their protein content, no government review would be required before sale.

But if a sweetening agent that doesn't exist in plants people eat were discovered in a non-edible plant and added to grapefruit, for example, the government would do a full review before allowing it to be sold.

It would be treated with the same scrutiny of any with a new additive. Kessler said that the genetic change would have to be noted among the ingredients on the food label.

The government is requiring that industry satisfy several questions before marketing any genetically engineered food. Among them:

■ Have naturally occurring toxicants been increased?

■ Has an allergen not commonly found in the plant been introduced?

■ Have the levels of important nutrients changed?

■ Have new substances been introduced that raise safety questions?

■ What are the environmental effects?

Quayle's Competitiveness Council, which has been working to ease government regulations on business, approved the guidelines.

The vice president said biotechnology was estimated to be a $4 billion industry last year and if allowed to grow without "unnecessary regulations" it could be a $50 billion industry by 2000.

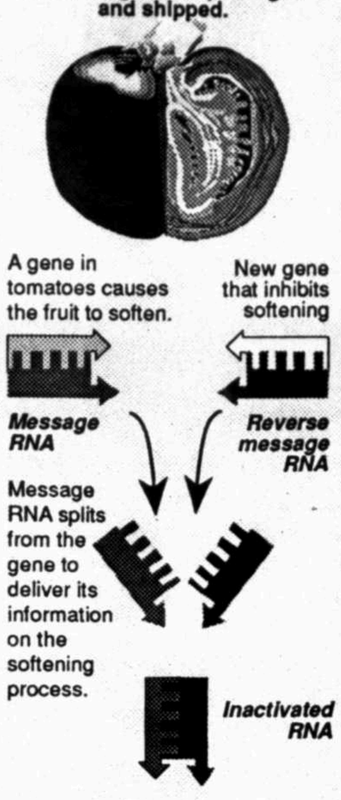

Jeremy Rifkin, president of the Foundation on Economic Trends, however, said he and a group of Florida farmers will file lawsuits to stop any genetically engineered food that tries to hit the market unless the FDA goes through a formal rule-making procedure.

His group also has filed a petition with the FDA seeking mandatory labels on all such foods.

Rifkin noted the problem that developed with L-trytophan, a genetically engineered diet supplement that FDA had not regulated but eventually ordered off the market after hundreds of people who used it became ill, some fatally.

Attack of the "super" tomatoes

Scientists have found a way to genetically alter tomatoes, allowing them to ripen on the vine – picking up the desirable natural flavor – and still remain firm enough to be packaged and shipped.

The message RNA of the inhibitor gene bonds to the RNA of the softening gene and blocks it from delivering its message. Softening is delayed for an extended period.

Tomatoes, grown from the seeds of the gene-altered plants, will ripen on the vine and remain fresh for a much longer time.

Reasons for single motherhood are diverse, statistics suggest

By Roberto Suro
N.Y. Times News Service

Interviews with single mothers suggests the decision to bear a child involves a mixture of practical, emotional and spiritual considerations and is usually not a straightforward moral choice.

HOUSTON — Vice President Dan Quayle recently issued a blunt reminder that after 25 years of cultural warfare over the American family, single mothers are likely to remain a divisive topic because their lives illuminate unresolved differences between the races and the sexes. He said the Los Angeles riots were "directly related to the breakdown of family structure, personal responsibility and social order in too many areas of our society."

But the vice president's remarks may be best remembered for the connection he drew between poor unmarried black mothers and Murphy Brown, an affluent white television character who, Quayle said, mocked "the importance of fathers by bearing a child alone and calling it just another 'life style choice.'"

Census Bureau statistics and studies by social scientists suggest that there are few generalizations to be made about single mothers except that their numbers have been increasing for 20 years, although at a slower rate recently.

Interviews conducted around the country with single mothers of varying races and economic conditions suggested that the decision to bear a child involves a mixture of practical, emotional and spiritual considerations and is usually not a straightforward moral choice.

For Jean Pollard it was not a matter of choice at all.

"He wasn't a planned child," Ms. Pollard, 34, said of her 3-month-old son who lives with her in a shelter for homeless families in Houston. She was laid off from work, she said, and then the child's father reneged on a promise to marry her.

"I wanted kids, but I always figured when I had a child I would be married, the typical American dream," she said. "Sometimes it doesn't work out like that."

Like many single mothers, Ms. Pollard sees the value of marriage. But she went on, "Marriage doesn't guarantee anything anymore because it's not like it used to be with our parents."

For Debbie Spain, staying married was not an option.

A 32-year-old medical secretary in Boston, Ms. Spain was beaten by the father of her first child and ended a brief marriage to her second child's father, who was an alcoholic. "Just because you have someone's last name doesn't mean that's going to solve any problems," she said.

Both of her children remain in close contact with their fathers, but Ms. Spain finds they are happier now that she is raising them alone. "I just decided I'm going to do it right as much as I can," she said.

For Patty Friedmann, having a child was more important than having a husband.

Ms. Friedmann, a 45-year-old writer in New Orleans, deliberately became pregnant when she was single and 28 because she wanted a child.

In an autobiographical novel published last year by Viking, "The Exact Image of Mother," Ms. Friedmann, who is now married, described how women can assert their identities by making such choices.

Of her protagonist, Ms. Friedmann wrote, "She is unfocused in life and in conflict with her mother, and her decision to have a child brings her strength and her resources together and defines her."

The many different reasons that women give for being single mothers suggest that their lives reflect a variety of trends in American life.

"You can't isolate single parenting by women as a discrete phenomenon," said Barrie Thorne, a professor of sociology at the University of Southern California. "You have to see it in the context of an overall change in attitudes towards many sexual and family issues including the status of women, divorce and premarital sex."

Census Bureau statistics show a period of turmoil in the American family beginning in the mid-1960s, although the rate of change in family composition slowed markedly in the 1980s. Married couples with children, for instance, made up 40 percent of all households in 1970 but only 26 percent last year.

Single parenthood by unwed mothers rose quickly, and is still rising. The number of families headed by mothers who have never married increased at annual rate of nearly 15 percent in the 1970s. Although the rate dropped to just under 10 percent from 1980 to 1991, this now constitutes the fastest growing category of family groupings.

Single mothers now head a quarter of all families with children, counting those have never married along with women who are divorced, widowed or are living apart from a spouse for any other reason. (There are single fathers, too, but they head fewer than 4 percent of all families.)

Experts say that although economic circumstances have changed since the '50s, the "Father Knows Best" family — two parents with only the husband working — that typified that decade still exerts a powerful pull on American values and emotions.

Large majorities in opinion polls consistently say they are committed to conservative views of the family like those articulated by Quayle, even though the number of people living in two-parent households is a distinct minority.

"People often care deeply in opposing directions," said Arlene Skolnick, a research psychologist at the University of California at Berkeley, "such as believing in the 1950s family but also accepting the value or the necessity of women working outside the home."

Aside from this complex cultural context, Professor Thorne said, "there are structural and circumstantial problems that go beyond individual choices that help explain why families headed by single parent mothers are not only the most rapidly growing type of household but also the type most associated with poverty."

Felicia Bryant, 19, of Chicago, spoke of the devastating impact an unwanted pregnancy can have on a poor woman.

On learning she was pregnant, Ms. Bryant said: "I was upset and shocked. I wanted to commit suicide. I felt that I was too young to have a child." Then 15 years old, she dropped out of school and went on welfare.

Researchers trace tooth decay to youthful infections

By Cecelia Goodnow
Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — People with lots of cavities often say they have "soft" teeth. More likely, they were infected as toddlers with decay-causing bacteria passed from their mothers. Chances are, they'll pass those same virulent bacteria on to their own young children.

These findings, being studied by researchers around the country, could lead to new preventive strategies — such as targeting high-risk children for early intervention or having mothers rinse with antibacterial solutions.

They also could lead to earlier weaning from the bottle or breast, in an effort to thwart "baby-bottle tooth decay," one of the most devastating dental problems of early childhood. The syndrome causes hidden decay on the undersides of the top front teeth, where milk or juice pools in the mouth.

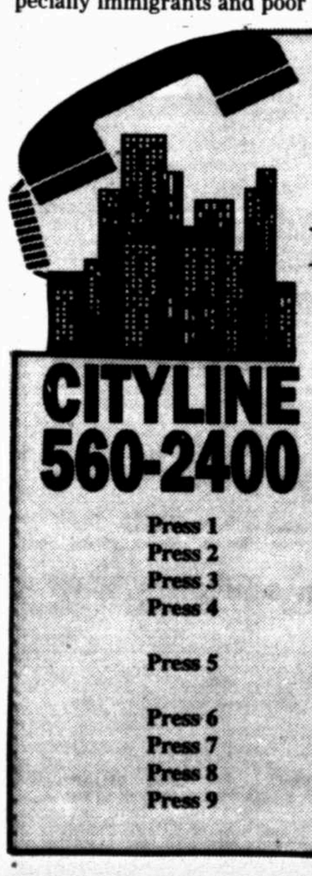

Although many people believe fluoride has made cavities a thing of the past, dental decay continues to plague certain populations, especially immigrants and poor children, said Peter Domoto, chairman of pediatric dentistry at the University of Washington. Bacterial transmission from mothers to toddlers now joins poor diet and hygiene as one of the causes.

Decayed baby teeth are painful and can lead to cavities in the permanent teeth. Untreated tooth decay can spread to surrounding bone, Domoto said, and in rare cases can lead to fatal, systemic infections.

Recent studies indicate decay-causing bacteria usually set in during a fairly brief period of early childhood.

"There is a window of opportunity for the bugs to transfer from the mother to the baby," Domoto said. "Mothers who have had extreme decay in the past still carry the ability to have more decay and infect their babies."

Domoto and others hope to prevent these bacteria from taking hold during the critical age of about 19 to 31 months, when the molars erupt. According to an Alabama study published last year, this is when the seeds of dental infection are usually sown.
