Wright probe includes odd oil deal

By ROB REHG
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — As House Speaker Jim Wright prepares his defense against ethics charges, the House Ethics Committee was continuing its investigation into a mysterious oil-well investment that netted Wright a profit even though the well was dry.

The oil well deal, made with his longtime business partner, George A. Mallick, apparently contributed significantly to the $350,000 that a blind trust set up for Wright and his wife received on an initial investment of about $58,000 in Mallightco Inc.

The Mallightco firm was a joint investment company owned by the Wrights and Mallick and his wife.

The House ethics committee concluded that "evidence suggests far too much money was paid" by a West German petroleum investment corporation for Mallightco's interest in an oil-drilling investment that apparently was "an unsuccessful venture."

House ethics members agreed with the recommendation of their investigator, Richard J. Phelan, that the oil well investment needs to be probed further to determine whether ethics rules were violated. A central factual question yet unresolved is why the West German-based Union Rheinische Petroleum Inc., was willing to pay so much for an unsuccessful well.

It also is unclear whether Wright knew anything about the oil well investment, which was conducted after Wright placed his Mallightco investment in a blind trust.

The oil well deal began after Wright decided that he wanted to liquidate his investment in Mallightco but "wanted the sale to occur in a prudent manner that would maximize his profit," according to testimony by Mallick.

Mallick testified that he wanted "to bet the farm" on one deal before Mallightco would buy back Wright's stock. That deal was orchestrated by Mallick's son, Michael, and involved Mallightco's purchase of a 4 percent interest in an oil venture known as the North Sabine Lake Prospect, which was run by the San Antonio-based Jaffee Energy Corp.

Mallightco's $90,000 original investment in the well helped launch drilling there on March 4, 1988; early test results indicated the well would be successful. But by May 4, after nearly $1 million had been spent on developing the well, "the well had declined to a point that it was uneconomical" to continue tests for oil or natural gas, the ethics report states.

Paddle in hand, Principal Jack Ratcliff of San Jacinto Junior High School said his pupils often prefer "licks" to detention as punishment for improper school behavior.

State bill could take sting from school spankings

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

The slap of hard, flat wood connecting with his behind became a familiar sound last year for Heath Colburn, then a Midland Freshman High School student.

"I had a record going for awhile," Colburn said of the 10 paddlings, administered as punishment for talking too much in class.

Now a Midland High School sophomore, the 16-year-old Colburn said the "licks" of days past have made him wiser.

"I'm being cool about it now," he said about suppressing his actions in the classroom. "In high school they've got bigger teachers, harder paddles and stronger arms."

But parents will have a chance to quell that paddle firepower if the longer, stronger arm of the State Legislature passes a corporal punishment restriction bill.

Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, received final approval of his bill to prohibit school officials from paddling a student if the parents have filed a written objection with the school district. The bill was sent Monday to the House after a 19-11 vote.

However, the law would have no effect on Midland Independent School District's paddling policy, which already allows parents to request in writing that school officials refrain from spanking their children, said Ricardo Torres, acting executive director for secondary operations.

Children — even girls — at both primary and secondary levels become eligible for paddlings when they commit infractions such as fighting, using profanity, insubordination, gambling, disrupting class and skipping school among other reasons, Torres said.

Paddling, though, is used less frequently as a means to curb delinquent behavior than counseling and detention hall, he said.

Midland, Odessa fly at chance for wayport

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

Undaunted by an unsuccessful bid to attract the superconducting super collider to the Permian Basin, Midland and Odessa city fathers have tossed their hat in the ring for another potential billion-dollar federal bonanza.

The cities' mayors announced this morning they are launching efforts to be selected as a site for a "wayport," a huge remote airport hub serving almost exclusively as a transfer point for travelers.

Plans for a 7,000-acre expansion of Midland International Airport to accommodate the explosive growth in air traffic that would result from becoming a wayport were revealed at press briefing this morning.

The expanded site, which would extend to State Highway 191 on the north, Farm-to-Market Road 1788 on the west and expand the airport east along U.S. Highway 80 far beyond the current boundary. The plan would incorporate eight 15,000-foot runways and 200 to 250 full-size gates capable of accommodating the largest commercial jets currently on the drawing boards.

The centerpiece of the development would be a $500 million "Atlanta-style" terminal compound which would connect five airside terminal gate areas with the main terminal-conncession-parking area via an underground "people mover" system.

Cost estimates of the construction of all facilities are "very preliminary" at this point, according to Midland International's Director of Aviation Victor White.

White estimated that as many as 20,000 jobs could be created at the terminal alone, with additional direct and indirect economic growth anticipated as a result of the project, but which would be "impossible" to predict.

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas said the project has "tremendous potential" as an economic development project that is ideal for this region; but admitted that at this early stage it is "obviously a long shot."

Legislation currently before the U.S. Congress would study the feasibility of a network of four to six of the superhubs across the nation. Federal Aviation Administration officials have advocated the new high-capacity, high-tech switching points as a means of easing congestion at major metropolitan airports.

U.S. Rep. Larry Combest, whose district includes Odessa, said this week he is cosponsoring the legislation which would create the wayport system. In making the announcment, Combest added his support for Lubbock as "a logical site" for a super-hub terminal.

Combest's announcement served as the impetus for the Midland International Airport to "go public" with its wayport plans this morning.

Former Midlander Vestal will seek SBC presidency

DALLAS (AP) — The Rev. Daniel Vestal of Dunwoody, Ga., and formerly of Midland, has announced he will seek the presidency of the Southern Baptist Convention as the denomination meets in Las Vegas in June.

Vestal

Vestal, 44, said his decision was based on the convention having "forsaken its basic principles" in recent years.

Vestal, former pastor of First Baptist Church in Midland, will be supported by Baptists Committed, a new group of centrist, or moderate, Baptists.

"He has profound integrity and will bring the convention together," the Rev. Winfred Moore of Amarillo, president of Baptists Committed, said of Vestal.

Vestal said for 10 years he has worked quietly in key committees of the denomination trying to bridge fundamentalists and moderates. He said he has "tried to stand in the middle."

Vestal announced his candidacy to his church members Sunday, then returned to Corsicana, where he had been preaching at a revival earlier Sunday.

Vestal was pastor of First Baptist Church of Midland for 12 years before becoming pastor of the First Baptist Church in Dunwoody, a suburb of Atlanta.

He will run against the incumbent, the Rev. Jerry Vines of Florida, who has said he will seek re-election as president of the 14.8 million-member denomination.

Vines is endorsed by fundamentalists and Vestal is expected to garner early support from denominational moderates.

Lucille Ball

Lucille Ball recovering from heart surgery

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lucille Ball, the zany redheaded queen of comedy, was in guarded condition today after seven hours of emergency high-risk cardiac surgery during which she received heart tissue donated from a 27-year-old man.

The 77-year-old comedian suffered a heart attack at her fashionable Beverly Hills home Tuesday, and arrived at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center with her husband, Gary Morton.

"She came out of the surgery OK," said Ron Wise, the hospital's spokesman.

Miss Ball suffered a tear in her aorta, the main artery in the body, said her surgeon, Dr. Robert Kass.

During the operation, her heart was stopped for two hours, said Kass. With the heart stopped, blood was pumped through her body by a machine as Kass replaced part of her aorta and aortic valve. The donor was a 27-year-old man, Kass said. No other details were released about the donor.

Miss Ball was listed as guarded after the "high-risk procedure with a fairly substantial mortality rate," the surgeon said.

"The fact that she came through this leaves me optimistic," Kass told reporters late Tuesday. "The major risk is in the operating room, at least initially."

Two killed when 'cherry-picker' collapses

From Staff Reports

State investigators will try to find what caused two workers to fall 40 feet to their deaths Tuesday while they were working on an oil rig Tuesday near Penwell in south Ector County.

Odessans Darron Eugene Sloan, 25, Rt. 7 Box 5529, and 45-year-old William Earl Lancaster, 9403 Palm Drive, were killed in the accident which occurred about 10:30 a.m. near Penwell in south Ector County, Capt. Gene Kloss of the Ector County Sheriff's Department said today.

The two men, employees of Dixie Electric Co. of Odessa, were working in "cherry-picker" type metal buckets Tuesday morning on a Texaco lease, two miles south of the oil company field office in Penwell, Kloss said.

"They were working on the wires, and they were having trouble up there," Kloss said. "The thing just keeled over, and went down 40 feet," he said of the mishap.

Both men were still in the buckets when they were reached by workers and paramedics.

A single beam that supported both buckets "just collapsed," and Kloss said the cause of the accident was not evident at the scene.

They were taken to Odessa Medical Center with multiple injuries. Both were pronounced dead at 11:50 a.m. by Ector County Justice of the Peace Manuel Valles.

Kloss said investigators from the state Industrial Accident Board would be notified of the accident and would handle the probe into the mishap.

"We turn it over to them," Kloss said. "We are through with it."

'Withdrawal' of Texas banks should level off

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

Steady depletion in the ranks of community-based Texas banks may be nearing an end, but the challenges they face persist, according to the president of the state's independent bankers.

"A substantial number of Texas banks will go down the tubes," in coming months but "the worst is over for the state as a whole," said Gene Garrison, president of the First National Bank of Alice.

Garrison, who is in the middle of a one-year term as president of the 1,000-member Independent Bankers Association of Texas, briefed about 15 of the group's members at a Tuesday luncheon in Midland on regulatory and legislative issues at the state and national levels.

Equitable treatment of independent bankers along side their holding company brethren is a central theme of the Austin-based association's lobbying efforts.

In a recent letter to L. William Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., Garrison voiced his group's opposition to applications by NCNB Corp. to bid on failed savings and loans.

"We strongly encourage your office to preclude NCNB from bidding on acquiring any failed savings and loans until ... they have assumed the additional 80 percent interest in NCNB Texas and factored in this cost of doing business in our state," Garrison wrote to Seidman on April 3. The letter was also signed by IBAT president-elect Jimmy Seay and Scott B. Smith, immediate past president of the association.

Last week, the Charlotte-based holding company — the nation's 18th largest bank — announced it intends to raise its ownership stake in NCNB Texas from 20 percent to 49 percent "over the next several weeks."

The FDIC continues to control the remaining interest in the Texas subsidiary as a result of the takeover deal structured last fall when the retail banking operations of First RepublicBank were declared insolvent.

Once NCNB has fully bought the FDIC out of its ownership, "if they want to use their own money (to buy failed thrifts), that's their deal," Garrison said.

But in the meantime, using federal backing while competing with private banks is "inequitable and unfair," he said.

Bush administration criticized for 'indecisiveness' in oil spill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration faced sharp criticism today for not acting decisively enough in taking control of the Alaska oil spill, as senators called for new laws that would require the president to direct such cleanup efforts.

"There has never been a time when this situation was under control," declared Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., chairman of the Senate environmental protection subcommittee, which convened a hearing on the oil spill recovery effort.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said that President Bush was "slow to comprehend the magnitude of this disaster" and valuable hours were lost after the March 24 spill in Alaska's Prince William Sound when the spill might still have been controlled.

Mitchell, of Maine, said federal environmental laws need to be changed to require the president to either take over oil spill cleanup efforts or specifically to declare that the cleanup is being conducted properly through private efforts.

Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner, the president's point man on the oil spill recovery, who was scheduled to testify before the Senate panel later, has said that Bush rejected a federalization of the Alaska cleanup because of concern that such a move might affect Exxon's financial liabilities.

The president has said the U.S. Coast Guard is coordinating cleanup efforts.

But in a round of opening statements, one senator after another criticized everyone involved in the cleanup, especially recovery efforts in the first days after the Exxon Valdez tanker ran aground, spilling 10 million gallons of oil into the pristine waters.

■ Slick reaches Seward; Russian ship due — 8A

"From all accounts the cleanup crews initially ... acted more like the Keystone Cops," declared Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I.

Chafee said the recovery effort demonstrated "fundamental shortcomings" in state and federal government agencies as well as Exxon. But he said he understood Brush's reluctance to take a more aggressive role, saying he had been told it stemmed from disputable legal advice and not from White House disinterest.

But Baucus said the Bush administration as well as the industry "have been unbelievably slow to appreciate the magnitude of the response" needed to deal with the spill, the worst in U.S. history which now affects thousands of square miles.

Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, although not critical of Bush directly, has repeatedly called for greater federal involvement immediately after the accident occurred. "I'm disappointed the president didn't see it that way," said Stevens.

But Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., said that Bush appeared to have made a decision early on to leave the cleanup effort to Exxon. "The magnitude of this disaster didn't strike Washington until it was way too late," he added.

Stevens said the effects of the spill will last many years and that the total price tag coud exceed $1 billion in cleanup and recovery. In an attempt to demonstrate the magnitude of the spill, Stevens said the area threated with oil contamination is the size of three Great Lakes systems and if it had occurred in Portland, Maine the oil today "would be almost down to Washington D.C."

In addition to Skinner, the subcommittee also was scheduled to hear from William K. Reilly, head of the Environmental Protection Agency, Alaska Gov. Steve Cowper, who has been critical of Exxon's handling of the spill, and Lawrence Rawl, chairman of the giant oil company.

Meanwhile, Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan Jr., was scheduled later today to fly to Alaska for a four-day tour, his first visit to the area contaminated by the March 24 spill. Lujan's department is charged with planning long-term recovery efforts for the region's wildlife and public lands.

On Tuesday, Lujan announced a joint $6 million, three-year research program with the petroleum industry to develop better recovery and cleanup equipment and methods for large oil spills.

Novelist Daphne du Maurier dies

LONDON (AP) — Dame Daphne du Maurier, who became one of the century's most popular writers by mixing romance and the supernatural in "Rebecca" and other novels, died today. She was 81.

Monty Baker-Munton, a family friend, trustee and executor, said he did not know the cause of death. "For the last fortnight (two weeks) she'd just been in a gentle decline," he said.

The author, who also wrote such popular classics as "Frenchman's Creek" and "The Birds," died in her sleep at her home in the village of Par, in Cornwall, southwest England, he told The Associated Press.

Baker-Munton said that at the novelist's own request her funeral would be private, with no memorial service or flowers, and only close family and friends attending. He said the venue was not yet being disclosed.

He said she would be cremated.

Widowed in 1965, she had for many years lived a secluded existence on the wild Cornish coast that inspired the settings for many of her works.

She remained fit enough until a few weeks ago to take her dog for daily walks at the beach.

Many of her novels were filmed, including "The Birds," directed by Alfred Hitchcock. But she herself waited until the age of 64 before consenting to face a television interviewer.

Born in London on May 13, 1907, Daphne du Maurier was one of three daughters of the renowned actor Sir Gerald du Maurier.

BANKERS

Another instance of unequal treatment cited by the independent bankers is the greater latitude granted to holding company banks, considered "too big to fail," while individual banks are closed outright pending a sale or assumption transaction.

"We think bank customers in Andrews and in Alice and in Mission deserve the same treatment and the same consideration as those in Houston, Dallas or San Antonio," Garrison said.

The bankers also fear they will be painted by too broad a brush as legislation is enacted in the wake of allegations of thrift fraud. President Bush's thrift plan — formally known as the Financial Institution Reform, Recovery & Enforcement Act — proposes raising the civil penalty for technical infractions from $100 per day to $25,000.

Other provisions in the enforcement section of the bill would hike the daily penalty when "reckless disregard" for the bank's soundness is determined to have occurred to $1 million.

"We are not looking to escape penalties for fraud or misrepresentation," but the technical violation provisions are "massive overkill," according to Chris Williston, IBAT executive director. The penalties are "an overreaction to make us all pay for the sins of a few," Williston said.

Another FIRREA provision the independent bankers are working to defeat is proposed repeal of the 1987 law prohibiting diversified thrift holding companies from "cross-marketing" their wares through other subsidiaries.

In a worst-case scenario outlined by Williston, Ford Motor Co. — which owns First Nationwide Savings — could sell certificates of deposits in its auto showrooms and cars through its S&Ls.

Such an atmosphere "would lead to excessive concentration of financial resources commingled with commercial resources," Williston said.

"It would further extend the government 'safety net' to commercial firms and provide unfair competition to traditional financial institutions," the IBAT contends.

More than 200 bills which would impact the state's independent bankers to some degree, have been introduced in the Texas Legislature so far this session. Williston enumerated several of keen interest to West Texas independent bankers concerning:

■ Central filing. Agricultural banks currently face a problematic situation in perfecting liens against crops and livestock, because of a federal requirement that the U.S. Department of Agriculture approve a central filing system for potential buyers of those farm products under lien. Texas' system is not USDA-approved.

The prospects of H.B. 2927 passing the House are dim — about 2 in 10 Williston said — but its Senate counterpart stands a better chance of success. And despite the grim outlook, the lobbying group vowed to keep fight for the bill throughout the session — the third consecutive time the bill has been introduced.

■ Home equity lending. Although the bankers' "can't get a home equity lending bill passed," a proposed legislative change would allow consumers to take advantage of a tax break from invalidly filed homestead liens without changing the homestead laws.

S.B. 86, which has been reported favorable to the Senate floor would be "significant in helping customers who can get unsecured loans," take advantage of the deductibility of the loans.

■ Usury cure. S.B. 240, which has already been approved in the upper chamber and is awaiting House approval, would allow bankers to rebate excess interest — avoiding attorney fees and punitive damages — in instances of mistakes resulting in usurious rates being charged.

The bill would give lenders 60 days after discovering the error to make the rebates. Current Texas law provides that lenders forfeit some or all of the principal amount if usurious rates — those above a regulated ceiling — are charged, even by accident.

Tuesday's meeting was the second in a series of 15 local briefings the group is presenting across the state during April and May.

WRIGHT

Despite these problems, URP on May 10, 1988, purchased Mallightco's 4 percent share of the Sabine project, which Michael Mallick valued at $650,000, a majority of Mallightco's total assets.

The purchase was structured in such a way that URP made what in effect was a non-repayble loan of $440,000 for most of Mallightco's interest. Of this sum, $90,000 was reserved to pay for Mallightco's share of drilling costs, while still leaving Mallightco with a 1.5 percent interest in the project.

"What this meant was that Mallightco received $350,000 cash, owed Jaffe nothing for drilling and completion expenses, and would receive 1.5 percent of the working interest of the well after URP received $440,000 in oil and gas revenues, but Mallightco would not be personally liable for repayment of the loan," the ethics panel concluded.

Mallightco's commitment to repay the loan was contingent on the well producing. At the time of the transaction, this prospect appeared dim.

A month after the oil transaction, Mallightco purchased the Wrights' 50 percent interest in the company for $350,000, of which $230,000 consisted of cash, with the rest in form of a note payable over 10 years. Because the Wrights had put about $58,000 into Mallightco, this represented a profit of more than 500 percent.

URP, which has its headquarters in Munich, West German, also has offices at Jaffee Aerospace Corporation, in San Antonio, Texas, according to the San Antonio Light.

The buyout of the Wrights' stock occurred on the day the ethics panel began its investigation of Wright.

Julian C. Dixon, D-Calif., chairman of the House ethics panel, said the committee decided to further investigate the Sabine oil venture because "it appears that at the time of the loan transaction, the well was clearly not a successful venture."

Other uncertainties about the Sabine project, such as whether the URP loan was actually a gift to Mallightco and whether Wright knew any details about the deal, convinced the ethics panel to issue subpoenas to investigate the deal further.

Thomas A. Law, the trustee of Wright's blind trust, said on Monday that "as far as I know, Speaker Wright knew absolutely nothing about" the Sabine project.

SPANK

Students even have a say in what punishment they receive, he said, adding that many want licks because they are over quickly.

"They're social animals at the secondary level," Torres said. "They would rather take swats than have you take part of their lunch away."

The paddlings usually are administered by a principal or assistant principal in the presence of a witness. Parents are notified about the punishment.

Teachers rarely give swats, Torres said. "If the teacher is mad, you don't want her hitting a child with a stick," he said.

MISD parents don't seem bothered by their children getting paddled and rarely complain, Torres said.

"Corporal punishment is something that parents use," he said. "I think schools are more humane in administering corporal punishment because we don't do it in anger."

Principal Jack Ratcliff of San Jacinto Junior High School said his plain, wooden paddle usually prevents junvenile recidivism, although detention and counseling are used more commonly.

"Our main objective is to alter the behavior and paddling sometimes doesn't do it," Ratcliff said, adding that the number of paddlings needed daily varies radically. A rash of paddlings usually accompanies a severe weather change, he added.

"Some days we see hardly any students and other days they seem to be in here from the morning into the afternoon," he said.

Donald Mason, assistant principal over Lee High School's sophomore class, said he hasn't given a paddling all year. He said he usually elects to sentence students to detentions.

"We prefer not to have to do either one," Mason said. "The object of paddling is to change behavior. At this age group, it's not going to change behavior."

AIRPORT

"Rep. Combest had no way to know we were working on our plans when he backed Lubbock," said Marcelyn Blauvelt, supervisor of administrative services for the airport.

If the pending legislation becomes law, a 15-member commission would be appointed by the FAA to recommend sites for regional wayports. A preliminary map of proposed wayport sites positions four — one in the Southeast, in Georgia or Alabama; one in the Midwest, in Illinois or Ohio; one in the Northwest, probably in northern Nevada or southern Oregon and one in the Southwest — White said.

Today's press conference made Midland/Odessa the second Texas area to "officially announce" its wayport intentions. Wichita Falls unveiled its plan for a Texas-Oklahoma airport authority earlier this year.

White said that rumors of interest in other areas, including Lubbock, El Paso and Roswell, are circulating but that local officials have no way of knowing how much, if any, progress those groups have made.

Funding provisions in the wayport bills would earmark at least $5 billion from the Federal Airport & Airway Trust Fund for a Wayport Revolving Loan Fund, where local transportation authorities could borrow the massive funds necessary to build a state-of-the-art facility.

White said proposed expansion of the local airport could have several advantages over construction of an entirely new facility, such as the one proposed by Wichita Falls area officials.

Odessa Mayor Don Carter outlined many of the "distinct advantages," Midland/Odessa has over other potential sites.

Among the advantages seen for the local site are:

■ Climate. Winter weather conditions are a primary cause of the 20,000 hours per year of delays at the nation's airports. Midland/Odessa's temperate winter climate, compares favorably even to Lubbock, just 120 miles north.

■ The absence of major active military air traffic. Many of the other proposed areas are home to one or more Air Force facilities, White said.

■ Land acquisition would be simplified because virtually all of the needed land is controlled by a single owner — the Scharbauer Ranch.

■ Site preparation costs of the flat terrain would be minimal.

LUCY

Miss Ball probably will be in intensive care for several days and remain hospitalized for weeks, Wise said.

As word of Miss Ball's heart attack spread, the hospital's switchboards were jammed with calls from well-wishers and news organizations around the world. Wise said that flowers also were arriving.

Miss Ball, who has been in ill health in recent years and suffered a mild heart attack May 11, was conscious when she arrived at the hospital. She complained of moderate chest pains and shortness of breath.

"I told her the nature of the condition she had, that it was life-threatening and that we had to operate immediately," Kass said.

Her last public appearance was introducing a production number with Bob Hope at the March 29 Oscar presentations. Wearing a slit skirt, she appeared to be in good health and giggled throughout a brief routine.

"Lucille Ball is one of the most wonderful women I have ever known," Hope said Tuesday night.

"I'm shocked, especially since we worked together so recently at the Academy Awards and she was so full of energy."

Miss Ball and her late former husband, Desi Arnaz, starred in "I Love Lucy," one of the most popular TV shows of all time, from 1951 to 1957. The show is still seen around the world in syndicated reruns.

In 1950, Miss Ball and Arnaz started their own production company, Desilu, on a shoestring budget of $5,000. The Arnazes were divorced in 1960, and two years later Arnaz sold his share of the studio to Miss Ball for $3 million. In 1967, she sold the company for $18 million.

The Arnazes had two children, Lucie and Desi Jr.

Miss Ball married nightclub comedian Morton in 1961. He became her executive producer.

Salvadoran leader killed

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Attorney General Roberto Garcia Alvarado was assassinated by unidentified gunmen in the capital today, a radio report said.

Officials had no immediate confirmation of the report.

Radio YSU, a private radio station, said several men riding inside a van shot and killed Garcia Alvarado outside a gasoline station in the northwest section of the capital.

A bodyguard for the attorney general was wounded, the report said.

No other details were immediately available.

Indian train jumps rail

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The death toll reached 67 today from the derailment of a high-speed passenger train in which 12 cars jumped the rails and tumbled down a rocky embankment, officials said. Another 137 people were injured.

Twelve cars on the New Delhi-bound express derailed Tuesday 280 miles south of the capital near Lalitpur while the train was traveling at up to 70 mph, said Mathew John, the chief of railway safety.

John said the two diesel-powered engines, first eight cars and the guards' car on the Karnataka Express remained upright on the rails. Authorities said the train began its journey Monday from Bangalore, 820 miles south of the accident site, and was running several hours late.

Press Trust of India, quoting survivors, said the cars overturned when the speeding train braked sharply near a bridge. About 1,000 people were on board the train.

17 Palestinians injured

JERUSALEM (AP) — Soldiers shot and wounded at least 17 Palestinians in clashes today, including 11 children who suffered mostly head injuries from rubber and plastic bullets, Arab hospital officials said.

Today's violence occurred as soldiers and police beefed up security in the occupied lands and inside Israel to prevent riots or attacks on Jews during the seven-day Jewish Passover holiday, which begins tonight.

A public opinion survey published by a newspaper indicated 65 percent of Israelis supported a peace plan by Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir that calls for Arabs in the West Bank and Gaza Strip to elect representatives for peace talks.

However, the Al Hamishmar newspaper said that Jewish settlers in the occupied lands have formed a committee seeking to stop the election plan, which they claim would "bring about a Palestinian state."

In the Gaza Strip, soldiers clashed with stone-throwing youths today in the Khan Yunis and Nusseirat refugee camps, the village of Beit Hanoun and a neighborhood in Gaza City.

Cuba fighter crashes

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A Cuban air force MiG-21 jet fighter on a training mission crashed into three houses in Holguin, eastern Cuba, on Tuesday, killing the pilot and injuring six people on the ground, Cuban news reports said.

The Soviet-made, single-seat jet crashed near a public school at 9 a.m. in the Loma de la Cruz working-class neighborhood, destroying one house and badly damaging at least two, the Cuban news agency Prensa Latina quoted airport officials as saying. Holguin lies 475 miles east of Havana, the capital.

Prensa Latina, monitored in Mexico City, identified the pilot as Lt. Rafael Varona Nieves, 22. It said at least one civilian was in intensive care with burns.

The report gave no indication as to why the jet crashed.

Drinking was factor

LONDON (AP) — Police say drunkenness and hooliganism were major factors in the soccer stadium disaster in which 95 fans died, but a Liverpool councilman today accused police of creating a cover story for their incompetence.

The controversy over Britain's worst sports disaster heated up as police and government inquiries got under way.

The Times of London today quoted police officials as saying they were sickened by reports portraying the disaster at Hillsborough stadium in Sheffield as a consequence of their failure to control an orderly crowd.

Paul Middup, chairman of the South Yorkshire Police Federation, the local police union chapter, claimed drunkenness contributed to the uncontrolled crush of Liverpool fans outside the stadium just as the match between Liverpool and Nottingham Forest was beginning.

To relieve the dangerous crush outside the stadium, police ordered that a locked gate be opened. The fans poured into a standing-room "terrace" area already crowded with other Liverpool fans and victims were trampled or crushed to death against a 10-foot-high steel-mesh fence.

Aid convoy ambushed

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Attackers ambushed the first U.N. convoy bringing relief supplies to rebel-held southern Sudan, destroying the lead vehicle and reportedly killing eight rebel escorts, U.N. officials said today.

Diane Weathers, a U.N. World Food Program spokeswoman, said a driver and two assistants also were wounded in the Tuesday afternoon attack 14 miles west of the Sudan People's Liberation Army base at Kapoeta.

Slayings described in Mexican courtroom

WORLD

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Descriptions of dismemberment and a skull being split open were read in court from statements of accused members of an occult group of drug smugglers that authorities said killed 15 people.

Separately, the "godfather" of the group and his girlfriend were among 11 people indicted Tuesday by a grand jury in McAllen, Texas.

Alfonso de Jesus Constanzo, Sara Aldrete and the others were charged with conspiracy to import marijuana, importing marijuana, conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute and possession with intent to distribute, authorities said.

Constanzo, Aldrete and four others remained at large.

With Judge Francisco Salador Perez of the Fourth Federal Court presiding late Tuesday, court officials here read aloud from the statements given by the five men arrested in connection with the killings. The victims included Mark Kilroy, a Texas student abducted during a spring-break outing to Matamoros in March.

The five stood together, handcuffed and silent during the preliminary hearing.

They smoked occasionally as they listened to the description of the horrors that occurred during ceremonies in a wooden shack on a ranch near where most of the killings took place.

The accused said those ceremonies were part of a ritualistic cult.

Four of the men refused to corroborate or deny the written statements, arguing that their attorney was not present. They declined a court-appointed counsel's help.

Defendant Elio Hernandez told reporters near him that the statement read to him "did not agree entirely with what I declared."

The judge said that the accused can submit additional statements or have their own attorneys later. He now has three days to consider the evidence and decide whether to continue to hold them without bail.

■ Clovis, N.M., woman may have seen drug lord, witch — 2B
■ Witches object to adverse publicity — 4D

The accused have identified Constanzo as the group's leader who offered them "luck and protection" in exchange for the human sacrifices.

Besides Hernandez, those under arrest are his brother, Serafin Hernandez; Sergio Martinez; David Serna; and ranch caretaker Domingo Reyes.

Reyes was the only person who ratified his original statement that led police to the ranch and the discovery of the bodies.

"The godfather asked us for a gringo for a sacrifice," read the statement by Serafin Hernandez.

"He said the brains had to be placed in a pot."

Serafin Hernandez described how they picked up Kilroy by offering him a ride. The student later tried to escape, but was caught and taken to the ranch blindfolded.

Also described was how Kilroy was killed with a machete blow to the back of the head:

"We called the godfather at the hotel and told him what he wanted was ready. He came in the next day ... the godfather and Elio and others were inside (the shack). We heard a noise like a coconut being cut open and ... they took out his brains ... and part of the spine, and they cut his legs."

Serna's statement described how the group once raided another ranch, stealing nearly 660 pounds of marijuana and abducting three people.

Most cult victims drug traffickers

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Only four of the 15 men found buried in a rural area just south of the Rio Grande were randomly chosen human sacrifices of a drug-smuggling ring, an official said.

The rest probably were drug traffickers the violent organization found necessary to eliminate, said Juan Benitez Ayala, commander of the Federal Judicial Police in this border city.

"I have information about only four people who were sacrificed," Benitez said, adding that "the great majority were drug traffickers."

Eleven people were indicted by a federal grand jury Tuesday in McAllen in connection with the case, including the reported cult leaders, Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo, 26, and Sara Aldrete Villarreal, 24, who remained at large Tuesday night.

Four of them also were formally arraigned Tuesday night on federal Mexican charges in Matamoros. City police armed with pump shotguns closed off both ends of the Calle Gladiolas, the street where the district court is located.

Many of the victims unearthed at the ranch were horribly mutilated. Hearts, brains and other organs were removed and boiled in rites designed to bring magical protection to the organization, according to confessions from four men in custody.

Benitez said the investigation has shifted to Mexico City, where officials believe several murders are linked to the Constanzo, known as the drug cult's "godfather."

He said the investigation in Matamoros has shown that most of the 13 bodies unearthed at the Santa Elena Ranch 20 miles of Matamoros last week, and two more found at a nearby cooperative farm Sunday were drug smugglers.

Of the 15 victims, "some were tortured, some were only shot, and there were the young people who were sacrificed," said Benitez.

University of Texas student Mark Kilroy, 21, of Santa Fe, Texas, was one of the four sacrificial victims not involved in the drug trade, Benitez said.

He did not say which others appeared to be sacrificed, but said at least eight and probably more of the victims were either associates or rivals of the Constanzo group. Five of the victims remained unidentified Tuesday.

Officials have searched at least three residences in Mexico City linked to the group, Benitez said.

Photographers were allowed inside Constanzo's house in the northern Mexico City suburb of Atizapan.

There were two altars, one in the entrance hall and the second in the back of the house, behind a bar.

Chinese police repel students from party office

BEIJING (AP) — Guards early today pushed back about 1,500 students who tried to storm Communist Party headquarters to demand democracy from China's leaders, and hundreds later rallied again in central Beijing.

"The old views and system can't satisfy the people anymore," one student yelled from a ledge on a monument to revolutionary heroes in the center of the vast Tiananmen Square.

Another speaker told an estimated 8,000 listeners that China should follow some Eastern European countries' experiments by holding multiparty elections. Many in the crowd clapped enthusiastically.

In Shanghai, more than 1,000 students marched for the third time in four days and campus walls were plastered with posters demanding freedom of speech and of the press, witnesses said.

The demonstrators who tried repeatedly to enter party headquarters — engaging plainclothes police in shoving matches — dispersed before dawn today after about 500 police linked arms and marched toward them.

The show of force by police appeared aimed at ending round-the-clock demonstrations since Monday by thousands of students in front of Zhongnanhai, the party headquarters, and the nearby Great Hall of the People, the seat of government.

The demonstrations are the largest in Beijing since revolutionary leader Mao Tse-tung greeted huge rallies of radical leftist students in the late 1960s in adjacent Tiananmen Square, where about 10,000 people gathered Tuesday.

There have been no reports of arrests.

However, three student representatives who were allowed to enter Zhongnanhai early in the nighttime protest did not come out, students said. The compound houses party offices and official residences for China's leaders.

The official Xinhua News Agency later said some people in the crowd threw bottles and shoes at Zhongnanhai guards and that one was bruised in the cheek by a flying bottle.

NATO defense ministers gather for nuclear talks

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and other NATO defense ministers today began talks likely to center on the politically sensitive issue of upgrading short-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

Cheney, attending his first gathering of the 16-nation North Atlantic Treaty Organization, was expected to press the allies for a fresh — and stronger — commitment to American plans to modernize the weapons.

The two-day meeting on the alliance's nuclear strategy will raise anew the controversy surrounding the proposals to develop a new generation of short-range nuclear missiles that would be deployed in Europe.

The ministers were not scheduled to make any key decisions on modernization, which is strongly opposed in some European countries. But they will be asked to reaffirm their backing to plans to upgrade the current Lance surface-to-surface missile.

The United States contends it needs a strong signal from the allies in public statements to lobby Congress for money to continue a research-and-development program for the weapon.

The diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the United States would like enough support in NATO meetings this spring so that it could urge Congress to commit $150 million to the program for two years.

Bush and other NATO leaders will meet at the end of May and discuss the modernization plans as part of a blueprint designed to guide the alliance in arms control and force planning in the coming years.

The modernization issue has become increasingly sensitive in recent months.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany has said he wants to delay a decision on deployment of the new missile until 1991 or 1992 — after elections next year in his country.

Belgium recently added to the uncertainty by saying it, too, wanted decisions put off until the early 1990s.

The U.S. diplomat said decisions on producing and deploying the missile were not expected for several more years.

The Lance missile, introduced in 1972, will become obsolete in 1995.

The missile has a range of 60 miles and its replacement would be extended to more than 250 miles, just under the limits of the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces treaty. The accord eliminates U.S. and Soviet land-based missiles with ranges of about 300 to 3,400 miles.

There are currently 88 Lance launchers, most of them in West Germany.

U.S. Gen. John Galvin, commander of NATO's European forces, argued for modernizing the short-range missile force in an article Tuesday in the International Herald Tribune.

He said the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact "has undertaken an extensive modernization program for (short-range nuclear) forces during the 1980s."

Galvin has drawn up a report that says replacing the missile will allow the Western alliance to make substantial reductions in nuclear artillery. The study was to be discussed by the defense ministers.

NATO contends it needs a nuclear arsenal as a deterrent to offset the enormous superiority the East has built up in conventional, or non-nuclear, weapons.

The NATO members are Canada, the United States, Belgium, Britain, Denmark, Germany, Greece, France, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain and Turkey.

France, which is not part of NATO's integrated military structure, does not attend the nuclear discussions. Iceland takes part as an observer.

Pan Am records show diplomats changed plans before fatal flight

LONDON (AP) — Large numbers of U.S. diplomats canceled seats on Pan Am flights in the weeks before the bombing of Flight 103, according to a U.S. Congressional panel that saw internal Pan Am documents, a British newspaper reported today.

The Independent, a respected daily, said documents sent to a House of Representatives panel probing the Dec. 21 bombing show that Christmas holiday traffic for U.S. embassies had been heavily re-booked prior to the bombing.

The report noted that relatives of those who died in the bombing have been angry that warnings of a possible bombing of a Pan Am flight from Frankfurt to the United States were not made public.

All 259 people on Pan Am Flight 103 and 11 on the ground were killed when the New York-bound Boeing 747 was blown up over the Scottish town of Lockerbie. The flight had originated in Frankfurt, West Germany.

"A private House of Representatives transportation subcommittee memorandum on the documents, which has been seen by The Independent, said that it had asked Pan Am for all internal documents relating to security procedures and for information about who knew of the threat," the paper wrote.

"Included among the documents it received were internal company telegrams and memoranda. The subcommittee memo said that one Pan Am internal request read that 'specific details on lost revenue for U.S. State Department officials' were required. A second was a request for 'public information guidelines' in view that about 80 percent of holiday traffic of embassy is re-booking.

"The subcommittee memo, dated 13 March, goes on to say that Pan Am needed to be asked what were 'the details of lost revenue since Pan Am was obviously keeping track of threat-related cancellations.'"

The U.S. government has denied that its officials, acting on the warnings, had thus avoided Pan Am flights, the report said.

Defense: North destroyed documents out of 'natural instinct'

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was "natural instinct" for Oliver North to destroy documents because he was engaged in some of the government's most secret operations, the former White House aide's lawyer told a jury today.

"It's a reasonable thing to do," Brendan Sullivan said of North's decision to destroy records as he prepared to leave the National Security Council staff in November 1986.

In final arguments to the jury at North's criminal trial, Sullivan said "the act of destroying documents" would be the "natural instinct of anybody running a covert operation."

"Colonel North had charge of running some of the most secret operations" in the government, said Sullivan.

The former NSC aide is accused of altering, destroying, concealing and removing documents as the Iran-Contra affair emerged publicly in November 1986.

North testified that among the documents he destroyed were memos reflecting the diversion of funds from the sale of weapons to Iran to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua. One memo reflecting a planned diversion that North neglected to shred was found in his files on Nov. 22, 1986 by an aide to then-Attorney General Edwin Meese III.

Beginning his final arguments Tuesday, Sullivan said prosecution comparisons of North to Nazi Germany's Adolf Hitler are "sick and twisted." He contended the government is "turning life upside down" in its zeal to win a conviction.

In his closing arguments, prosecutor John Keker accused North of being a liar who stole money from his office safe.

North is charged with 12 criminal counts of lying to Congress and the attorney general, misappropriating government money and defrauding the Treasury through a tax scam to support the Contras. Conviction on the charges carries maximum prison terms totaling 60 years and $3 million in fines.

Keker, declaring that North consistently misled Congress in an attempt to cover up the Iran-Contra affair, called the former White House aide the "Joe Isuzu of government" — a reference to a television-commercial character who tells outrageous lies.

He also told the jury that "North and (then-national security adviser) Robert McFarlane were following Adolf Hitler's old strategy, which is the victor will never be asked if he told the truth."

Sullivan countered that the reference to Hitler illustrates the "extraordinary drive, push...of the government" to get a conviction.

"You should be offended by it," he told the jurors. "It's sick and twisted in my view."

He said North "consumed his life by trying to protect the freedom fighters" battling the leftist government of Nicaragua.

As Keker and Sullivan clashed, two senators asked President Bush to investigate whether the Reagan administration in 1987 failed to turn over to Congress documents which pertain directly to Bush's role in the Iran-Contra affair.

The documents emerged during North's trial and focus on the administration's secret quid pro quo arrangement with Honduras. President Reagan approved slipping more than $110 million in extra aid to the country if it would support the Contras during a period in which direct U.S. aid to the rebels was banned.

Bush, Hussein to discuss Middle East peace pact

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush hoped his meeting today with King Hussein of Jordan would persuade the Middle East leader to support an Israeli proposal for elections on the violence-wracked West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Jordan's role in the Middle East peace process has diminished considerably since last summer, when Hussein severed administrative and legal ties with Palestinians living in the West Bank.

But a senior U.S. official who briefed reporters on Tuesday said Jordan's proximity to the West Bank makes a Jordanian role in resolving the Palestinian issue inevitable.

"There is no way in the world that one can conceive of a peace process moving forward without the active involvement of King Hussein," said the official, insisting on anonymity.

After a morning meeting with Bush and a luncheon with Vice President Dan Quayle, Hussein was to be guest of honor at a White House dinner tonight. Meetings with congressional leaders also were on his schedule.

Two weeks ago, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir proposed during a visit here that Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip elect representatives to negotiate with Israel on limited self-government.

The Bush administration has endorsed the proposal on the condition that the elections lead to negotiations on the final status of the two territories.

The senior U.S. official said the proposal represents an attempt to end the impasse in the Arab-Israeli conflict.

"We're talking about trying to get things off dead center, which is where we find the situation in the Middle East at the present time," the official said. "And we see, in the elections proposal, depending on how it is developed and fleshed out, the possibility of turning a situation from a conflict situation to one of greater political dialogue."

Girl loses part of hand after store explosion

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Kevin Bower was near his 5-year-old daughter when a pipe bomb hidden in a toothpaste container blew up, and he's thankful her injuries were not more severe.

Erin

"We're very lucky," he said. "We have a daughter. Many people have gone through much worse than this."

Two men seen leaving the K mart store after the explosion were being sought for questioning. Police also interviewed employees and former employees of the store to try to find out why someone planted the bomb in the store.

Authorities also were on the lookout for a second bomb.

"The potential for it happening again is always there, either through a copycat situation or the same individual again," said Detective Sgt. Mike Kouns of the Marion County Sheriff's Department.

Erin Bower lost her left hand and may recover only partial sight in her left eye as a result of the Monday's explosion, doctors at Methodist Hospital said.

"There may be some vision left in the left eye. The right eye appears to be all right, but the left eye has been cut open by the force of the blast and by flying debris," said Dr. William Nunery, a specialist in ophthalmology, plastic and reconstructive surgery. "Those injuries can heal with time and they can sometimes be repaired."

Erin's left hand could not be saved, but the muscles and nerves in the forearm are intact, said Dr. Michael Levine, a plastic surgeon.

"I don't think it's beyond the realm of possibility or probability that she will ultimately have a prosthesis and be fairly successful with it," Levine said.

The girl's mother, Maurine, 31, was slightly wounded by flying bomb fragments, but no others were hurt in Monday night explosion at the store on Indianapolis' northeast side.

Using Army against terrorists justified

The Army wants permission to use military force against terrorists in order "to protect U.S. citizens or the national security of the United States." Permission should be granted.

Terrorists guilty of the mass killing of Americans should not be protected against U.S. military action by U.S. law, yet they are.

This protection does not make sense. Terrorists who kill unarmed U.S. citizens aboard an aircraft or at an airport or anywhere else are as much engaged in a hostile military action against Americans as enemy soldiers who kill U.S. soldiers in battle. What Americans must recognize is that terrorism is a war, but not played by the rules of other military engagements.

They are enemies by their own actions and choices, and should be made to face the consequences of a military response.

At present the Army is not allowed to make a military response. The Army is restrained by a restrictive interpretation of an order signed in 1976 by then President Gerald R. Ford prohibiting "assassination."

Now the Army is seeking clear, formal authority for special operations forces to carry out military strikes against terrorists and targets that pose a "continuing" threat to the United States.

A legal opinion by the Army's top lawyer said using military force against terrorists "is a legitimate exercise of the legal national right of self-defense and does not constitute assassination."

"This right of self-defense," the opinion said, "would be appropriate to the attack of terrorists leaders or terrorist infrastructure that through their actions pose a continuing threat to U.S. citizens or the national security of the United States.

Approval could clear the way for an attack on the terrorists responsible for the Pan Am Flight 103 bombing that killed 270 people, mostly American, over Scotland in December.

Approval should be granted without delay. Americans must defend themselves against terrorists or we've already lost this war.

Another View:

Environmental action

The Minneapolis City Council has taken a giant environmental leap forward by voting unanimously to ban almost all plastic food packaging in the city's stores and fast food outlets. Unless opponents succeed in overturning the law in the state Legislature or the courts, it will take effect in July 1990.

Other cities — Los Angeles and Portland among them — have outlawed the foam type of plastic packaging because chemicals that destroy the Earth's essential layer of ozone are used to produce it. But Minneapolis is the first to reject all sorts of plastic wrappings — with the exception of those that cover packages of meat – because it is virtually impossible to dispose of them safely. (The twin city of St. Paul is expected to adopt a similar ordinance soon.)

Plastic has become ubiquitous in the food industry; the tough, thin film protects products while also allowing customers a full view of what they are buying. But the useful material also is an environmental disaster.

Plastics don't decompose in landfill dumps; they should not be burned in waste incinerators because they emit harmful gases, and only about 20 percent of those used in packaging can be recycled.

With its tough law, Minneapolis mandates a return to packaging that is degradable, like paper; or returnable, like glass or metal.

Almost as significant as the action itself is the positive reaction of Minneapolis residents.

Plastics manufacturers and grocers financed an expensive media blitz, aimed at stopping adoption of the ordinance. But the campaign backfired.

Instead of calling their council members to voice opposition, as the TV, newspaper and radio ads urged, citizens by the hundreds called to urge approval.

That public support made it much easier for Minneapolis' political leaders to declare that short-term convenience is not sufficient reason to risk permanent environmental damage.

Navy's shopping habits scrutinized

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon, where the majority of your tax money is burned, is under investigation for the way it shops — officially called "procurement." With the federal deficit at an obscene level and the government under attack for endemic waste, you would think the Pentagon might be a little bit more careful about procurement these days.

Jack Anderson

Think again. The Navy has quietly signed a contract with the highest bidder for the job of scraping barnacles off the hulls of Navy ships. Even in this, the most menial of jobs, the Pentagon can't get it right.

It took two and a half years for the Pentagon to make the choice. In the meantime, a handful of small companies exhausted their resources bidding, rebidding and then waiting for the decision. Historically the Navy as not made life easy for the hull cleaners. In one round of bidding, the original low bidder pulled out in frustration. Another company spent $500,000 just trying to convince the Navy that it was qualified to enter the competition. A third company was rejected in the current round for lack of experience, even though the Navy contract is the only game in town and a company can't get experience without it.

For reasons the Navy declined to explain to us, the current hull-cleaning contract is going to Seaward Marine Services of Norfolk, Va. — the company charging the highest price, nearly $55 million for the five-year contract.

We first reported this barnacle fiasco last July when the Navy was moving on the contract at a pace rivaling frozen sap. Seaward's competitors told us they thought the Navy favored Seaward and that no one else had a fair shot at the contract. After our report, the Naval Investigative Service assigned an agent to dog the bidding process.

Seaward has had the Navy hull-cleaning contract since 1979. The contract is supposed to go to small businesses. But at one point the Navy changed the rules when Seaward got too big too qualify. Seaward's current contract expired in 1986, but the Navy has extended it during the endless rebidding process.

Seavac International Inc. of San Diego underbid Seaward by nearly $4 million, but apparently the Navy wasn't in the mood for comparison shopping. Seavac General Manager Gregory Dies told our reporter Dawn Larsen that he is not taking no for an answer. He has protested the award to the General Accounting Office and is threatening to file a lawsuit to stop the contract.

Parker Diving of Los Angeles also underbid Seaward, but its president Don Walsh thinks that kicking up a fuss would be a waste of money, and he has wasted enough already. Walsh thinks his company was just window dressing so the Navy could say it shopped around.

For the handful of hull-cleaning companies in the United States, the Navy contract is a make-or-break proposition. There is virtually no demand for American companies to scrape the barnacles off private ships because the private companies have it done in foreign ports for cheaper prices.

Sources within Seaward told us that many employees didn't think, as high bidder, that they had a ghost of a chance. According to one employee, Seaward workers were agonizing over mortgage payments and some had gone looking for other jobs. "Everyone was shocked when we won," he said.

Everyone except Seaward President Duke Armstrong. He told us he was confident he would win because his company was the best qualified.

We wanted to ask the Navy if Seaward was worth $4 million more, but the Naval Seas Systems Command declined to respond to our questions.

CADET'S RECORD CLEARED — A military panel has decided the Mark Powell isn't mentally disturbed after all. Earlier this month we revealed Powell's five-year struggle to clear his record. He was dismissed from the Air Force Academy and branded with a narcissistic personality disorder because he refused to let the Academy stick him with a questionable honor code violation. The Navy wanted to recruit Powell, but couldn't until his Air Force record was clear. The Air Force Board for Correction of Military Records has now overturned the original ruling that Powell was narcissistic and he is free to join the Navy.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Just when you thought it was safe to go back to Arizona, impeached governor Evan Mecham says he is ready to run for office again. "I committed no impeachable offense," Mecham maintains. TOM WICKER

This isn't the same Ollie North we've seen

NEW YORK — Oliver North before the bar of justice seems a different man from the Oliver North who proudly stacked up his telegrams of approval before a wary committee of House and Senate politicians two years ago.

Tom Wicker

As he twists and turns and gropes for some means of saving himself from criminal conviction, North strikes me, at least, as a more sympathetic figure than the arrogant Marine who lectured the nation on patriotism, or the zealous White House aide who could hardly conceal his contempt for Congress and the law, when either stood against his idea of the national interest.

A little humility never hurt a man. North and his attorneys, moreover, have been able strongly to suggest that President Reagan and Vice President Bush were more intricately involved in the Iran-Contra fiasco than either has admitted, or than the Tower commission reported.

If that suggestion holds up, or is strengthened, it suggests in turn that North did have some reason to believe that he was acting under orders, and that he really may be a scapegoat. The structure of "deniability" that Vice Adm. John Poindexter erected around Reagan looks shakier than ever; the picture painted by the Tower commission of an indolent president unaware of what subordinates were doing behind his back further clouds over — and it never was very convincing.

Bush's claim that he was "out of the loop" and uninformed about what was going on (in the Navy, we used to say "I was in the head when it happened") also has been undermined. If he played the direct emissary's role in the illegal effort to resupply the Contras that the North defense has implied, he has been staging a risky cover-up and lying to those who elected him. Even if never proved, as long as that charge remains a possibility, it could be a cancer on his presidency.

That Reagan and Bush may be more culpable than previously known does not necessarily mean, however, that Oliver North is innocent of any crime. It's not clear that a "good German" defense of having merely followed orders should exonerate anyone, particularly in the high position North occupied.

Can a president order a subordinate to break the law and thus cleanse the subordinate's act of criminality? Particularly if the order was not in writing or even spoken but was merely "understood" between them, or along the chain of command?

On the other hand, no one can be comfortable with the thought of such a subordinate going to jail, or suffering some other criminal penalty, while the man who gave or implied the order makes big money on the lecture circuit. North, moreover, is charged with at least one criminal act — making false statements to Congress — that is difficult to delimit or even define.

Is it making a false statement to Congress if an official testifying about an administration program does not tell the "whole truth"? Or if by the adroit use of statistics or language he knowingly makes something look better or worse than an impartial judgment might warrant? Is an exaggerated claim a lie? A diplomatic denial? What if one witness testifies "white" and another swears "black" — is either necessarily lying? Or both?

That kind of thing is as common in Washington as tourists in shorts. The case of Richard Helms was a rare instance of someone being prosecuted for a misstatement to Congress. A former CIA director, he was asked in 1973 if the agency had tried to overthrow the government of Chile, and denied it.

That was untrue, and Helms later pleaded no contest to a charge of perjury; he was not tried but paid a fine — and subsequently received much honor in the capital for having tried to protect his agency.

North's offense was equally specific: he drafted letters to members of Congress flatly denying that the administration was extending aid to the Contras at a time when Congress had prohibited such aid. Those statements were false, as North now admits; but he argues that they did not break the law.

"I didn't think it was right but I didn't think it was against the law" to send the misleading letters, he testified. Besides, he said he was instructed to write them by Robert McFarlane, then the national security adviser, despite protests North claims to have made. The letters were signed by McFarlane.

If a jury nevertheless concludes that drafting the letters was criminal, some future Oliver North who might otherwise believe it his duty to mislead Congress, or who is ordered to do so, may just say no — particularly if he knows that he's likely to be left to face the consequences alone.

ART BUCHWALD

It's sock it to taxpayers — oil spill style!

NEWS ITEM — Government officials predict that the American taxpayer will have to pay for the vast oil clean-up in Alaska.

• • •

As soon as I opened the door I recognized the man from the federal government. He had come to the house last fall to ask me to bail out the S&Ls.

Art Buchwald

I told him, "I already gave at the office."

He said, "I'm not asking you to bail out the S&Ls this time, I want you to contribute to the clean-up in Alaska."

"Why me?"

"You're a taxpayer and we would like every taxpayer to behave responsibly and help Exxon with this problem."

"But I had nothing to do with the tanker going aground," I protested.

"Each one of us is guilty. It's not our role to point the finger at others when it comes to an oil spill. We have to leave that to wiser and more experienced people."

"Such as the captain who was snoozing in his bunk while the third mate steered the ship."

"Some day we'll get to the bottom of all this. For the moment, the only way to make restitution is for John Q. Public to dig deep into his pockets and say, 'There but for the grace of God go I.'"

"I have never been to Alaska in my life. I'm tired of bailing out everything from nuclear power plants to railroads. Someone has to say 'enough is enough.'"

"You don't have the right attitude. The position you should take is, 'OK we blew it. What can I do to save Exxon management and the stockholders whose savings are at stake?'"

"I am not going to say that. Every time you come to the house looking for bailout money you make an appeal to my patriotism."

"There is nothing wrong with a little flag-waving for an American company which makes a teensy, weensy mistake. Just hand over $10,000 as your share for cleaning up Alaska. I promise not to bother you again until I figure out how much you owe me to prevent Third World countries from going bankrupt."

"I don't care about Third World countries going bankrupt."

"It's not them we are worried about. It's the American banks which loaned them the money. If you don't come through on this they could all be broke. Are you willing to take responsibility for the Irving Trust Company running aground?"

"Of course not," I replied. "But if I keep rescuing all these companies, I'm not going to have anything left for myself."

"Surely you jest. You have at least four more bailouts in you. Look, nobody likes oil spills, but they are inevitable when the situation on board a tanker is not as sobering as it should be. Your money will be used to clean up the environment in Alaska once and for all. It will also enable us to study tanker captains, who are under the weather, and how they behave when they are at sea. Once we have the answer to this question, the only one left for you to bail out is the defense company which makes the B-1 bomber."

Oil washes up on beach; Russians to help in rescue effort

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — The tentacles of America's worst oil spill washed up on a beach nearly 200 miles away at Seward, where officals were staking hopes on a huge Soviet oil-skimming ship.

The ship was scheduled to arrive today at the end of 30-mile Resurrection Bay in Seward, the first town outside Prince William Sound to have oil wash up on a beach.

The bay is in the Gulf of Alaska, where seas recently have run as high as 12 feet, far higher than in the scenic, island-protected sound where the Exxon Valdez ran aground March 24.

The relatively small ships used previously to suck away the slimy residue are designed to work in waves of no more than 5 feet. But the 11,400-ton Soviet ship Vaidogubsky can tackle far higher seas and can potentially scoop up more sludge.

"If they can capture oil out there and pick it up before it blows on shore, that's much to our advantage," Seward deputy city manager Darryl Schaefermeyer said Tuesday night.

"Our goal is to get the oil picked up and not wait until it gets on beaches, and then have to clean beaches."

Coast Guard Adm. Paul Yost, who is coordinating the cleanup, left Valdez on Tuesday to brief President Bush.

He said he was instructed to improve oil skimming operations and communications, which he said had been done. He was also ordered to get Exxon to come up with a shoreline cleanup plan, which the company produced Saturday.

A rescued sea otter is restrained and washed by workers at a Valdez, Alaska, animal facility on Monday after five of the oil-covered mammals were captured in the fouled waters of Prince William Sound.

"I think we have that plan...a start on the plan," Yost said. But he said he still had reservations about whether Exxon could work at the necessary pace to clear at least 300 miles of shoreline by winter.

Yost's concerns were shared by Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation Commissioner Dennis Kelso.

But Lawrence Rawl, Exxon's chairman and chief operating officer, angrily challenged such reservations and blamed governmental red tape for the cleanup's sluggish start.

"Now I'm not going to tell you that if you go up there a year from now you won't find some black places on some rocks, but we're going to make every effort to get it off," he said at a news conference in New York.

"I am telling you that a year from now the toxicity will be eliminated."

Yost said he was glad Rawl thought the cleanup could be accomplished by the promised Sept. 15 deadline.

"I'm on his side," Yost said.

Yost turned over the cleanup to Vice Adm. Clyde Robbins, who characterized the plan as a draft and said, "It will be expanded very quickly."

The company has until May 1 to add strategies for getting rid of the oily materials left over from the cleanup, and for cleaning beaches along the gulf.

The oil that washed ashore near Seward was a taffy-like goop mixed with seaweed, and was cleaned up Tuesday. But more oil was in Resurrection Bay, and still more reported on nearby islands and headlands of the Kenai Peninsula, including at Kenai Fjords National Park.

A pair of Coast Guard skimmers in the bay might have intercepted the oil before it reached the beach, but they broke down. Their pumps became gummed up with the oil, which is growing ever thicker after nearly four weeks in the water.

Exxon, in the plan demanded by Yost, said it would have a peak force of 4,000 workers and scores of vessels working by early June.

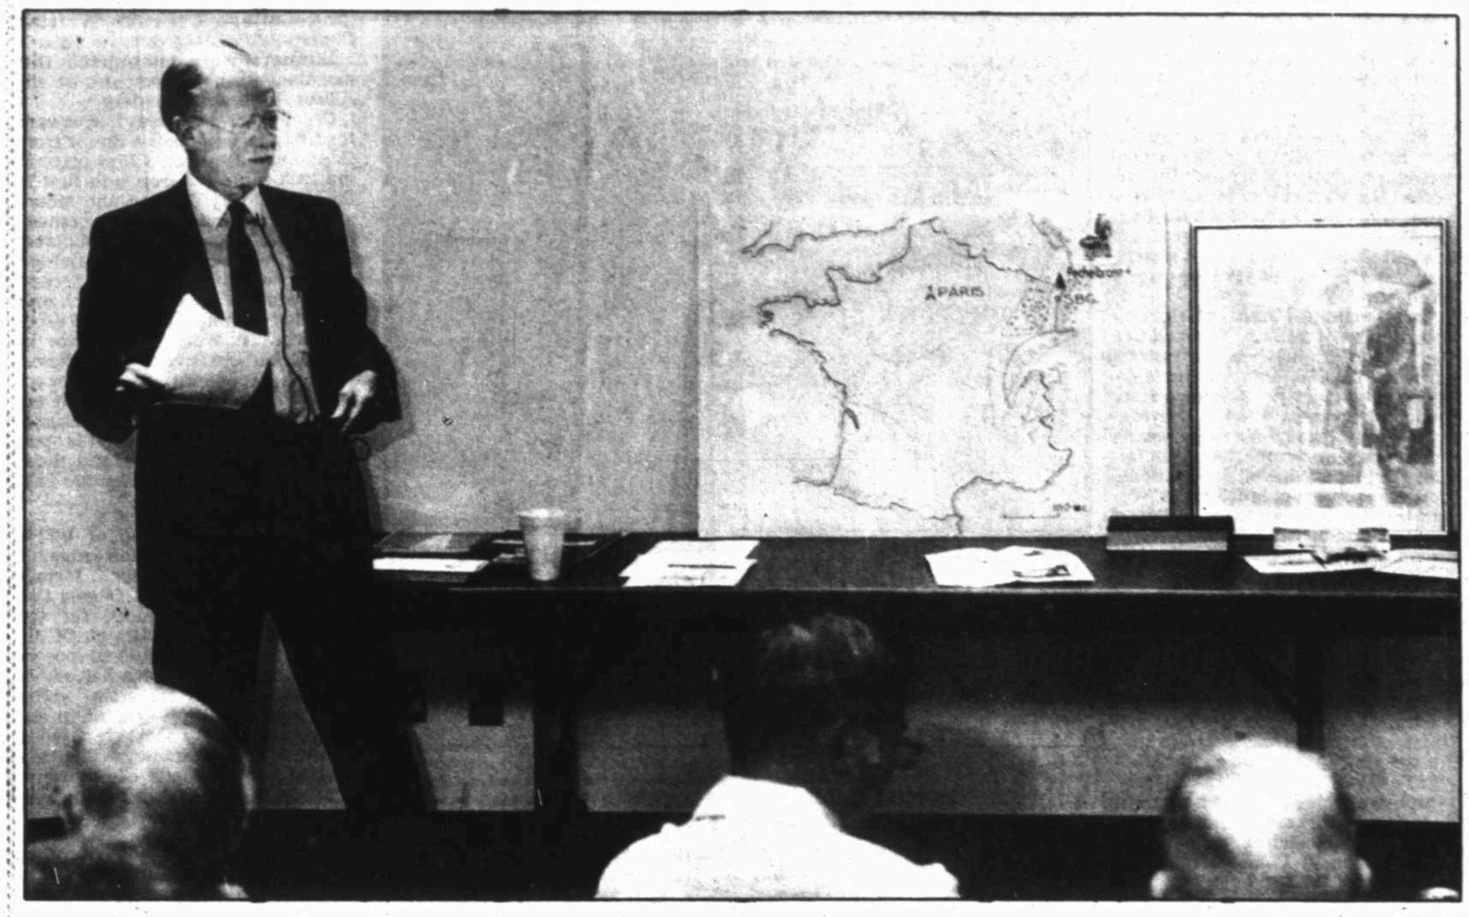
Geologist explores history of France's oil business



Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

Midland geologist-rancher Bruce Pearson relates the history of petroleum in the Pechelbronn area of northeastern France.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The charm of France is not just in the country's legendary appreciation of art, wine, song and romance.

But there is, as Midland geologist-rancher Bruce Pearson happily discovered, another type of romance with a resource that many West Texans hold dear: petroleum.

Pearson and his wife, Mignon, found an adventure in exploring the antiquity of petroleum in Pechelbronn in the historic Alsace-Lorraine of northeastern France.

The 500-year history of Pechelbronn petroleum includes skimming surface oil with a paddle, digging a labyrinth of tunnels for pit mining of bituminous sands, drilling 5,000 wells for oil, and the Allied bombing of the oil-field when it was under control of German forces in World War II, Pearson said in a gathering Tuesday at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum's brown-bag luncheon.

The region, which had been coveted by France and Germany for centuries, was returned to France in 1945.

"It's really part of their (the French) culture — part of their heritage," Pearson said of petroleum in Pechelbronn, which he explored when he was "doing a little prospecting over there."

The Pechelbronn place name, he said, stands for "pitch" as in tar and oil and "fountain."

In bringing some levity to his rendition of Pechelbronn's history, Pearson noted early uses for the viscous substance called petroleum.

"It was good for lice, fleas and bedbugs," said Pearson.

And even wild boars fell into petroleum use in their wallowing.

"The pigs would wallow around in the oil and get it all over them and then go run against trees and get rid of the vermin," said Pearson.

The pitch was used "externally for all kinds of aches, arthritis and even for broken bones," he said. And, as history has long documented, petroleum has been used for preserving Egyptian mummies, preventing rust, and greasing wheels and axles.

And Frenchmen, so the tales go, even dumped a liter or so of oil into a cask of water to preserve it for years.

Pearson detailed the intricate history of the region. For example, he cited the 1700s mining innovations of Antoine LeBel, who is considered by Frenchmen as the father of organic chemistry and whom Pearson likened to America's Du Pont de Nemours family, which is associated with chemistry, including gunpowder.

The German-held oil-field and refinery at Pechelbronn was subjected to bombing raids by 106 B-17 Flying Fortress bombers from three Bomber Groups of the First Air Division of the United States' Eighth Air Force in England: the 92nd, the 305th and the 306th Bombers Groups.

After the war, France regained control of Pechelbronn, where oil production, estimated at 24-million barrels throughout the years, began to decline.

The mines were closed in 1962, and under economic protest by the people of Pechelbronn, the surface installations were shut down in 1970.

"There were parades (of protest) in the streets," Pearson said. The French government, noted Pearson, owns the country's underground minerals.

Police will DARE to teach about substance abuse

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Midland Police will take to the blackboards if funding is secured for a substance abuse prevention program heralded by the U.S. Department of Justice.

It will cost $120,000 to implement the semester-long "DARE" (Drug Abuse Resistance Education) program in Midland schools, Police Chief Richard Czech said.

The chief has commitments from private donors to help fund the program, but added he will continue to solicit money from other public sources.

The DARE program, developed by the Los Angeles Police Department and that city's school district in 1983, puts lawmen in the classroom to teach youngsters how to avoid substance abuse.

Last Tuesday, City Council voted to request $30,000 from the Governor's Criminal Justice Division office to cover some costs of the DARE program.

And next week, Czech will make a second presentation to Midland Independent School District trustees in hopes of raising another $20,000.

Superintendent Joe Baressi has researched and supports the DARE program fully, but is concerned about its cost effectiveness relative to other programs in place, he explained.

"But an added plus besides the (anti-) drug education is the physical presence of policemen on campus," the superintendent added, sfressing a lawman-student camaraderie likely would be developed.

Should the program be funded and implemented, students would have a weekly one-hour DARE lesson at school taught by uniformed policemen.

Czech is targeting the program toward fifth- or sixth-graders because it's necessary to "catch the kids before they get exposed to drugs."

DARE lessons focus on four major areas:

- Providing accurate information about tobacco, alcohol and drugs;
- Teaching students decision-making skills;
- Showing students how to resist peer pressure; and
- Giving students alternatives to drug use.

According to U.S. Justice Department literature, 10 Los Angeles policemen taught the DARE program to more than 8,000 students in 50 elementary schools in 1983.

Officers from 33 states representing 398 police departments have now been instructed in the DARE program methods. Last year, funding was secured to create three DARE regional training centers.

Czech believes the program will work because it stresses to youngsters that peer pressure can be beaten. Only then will the demand for drugs be decreased, he said.

MC board of trustees approve cost estimates for center construction

From Staff Reports

Cost estimates and a timetable for construction of an addition to the Midland College Student Center gained approval Tuesday by the board of trustees.

Meeting in regular session, trustees OK'd an estimated $1,665,000 plan to double the size of the current Student Center and renovate parts of the existing structure after they viewed detailed elevation drawings and schematic plans. The board heard estimates that bids will be called for in early August, with a bid-letting in early September. Completion of the construction and renovation is expected by September 1990.

No bond issue will be needed for the construction, according to earlier statements about the project, which will be located on the north side of the present building. The current building and the addition will be connected.

In addition to expanded space for food service, bookstore, and Student Activities now housed in the facility, the addition includes space for all Student Services. This includes the Dean of Students, Registrar, all counselors, financial aid, student records, and registrations.

Trustees also, accepted a large framed cross-section of the U.S. Capitol building in Washington, D.C. Said to be one of only four of five prints of the original rendering in existence, it was a gift to Midland College from Raymond H. Brogniez of Marble Falls, the retired chairman of the Texas Tech University architecture department and a long-time supporter of the MC architectural program.

The drawing, about three feet by five feet in size, was done by architect Thomas U. Walter, who was commissioned to plan the Capitol in 1851 by then-President Millard Fillmore. The imposing Capitol was completed in 1865. The drawing, with an accompanying printed history of the cross-section, will be displayed in the Allison Fine Arts Building.

...(L)arge framed cross-section of the U.S. Capitol building in Washington, D.C... was a gift to Midland College from Raymond H. Brogniez of Marble Falls...

J. Kwame Bruce, instructor and program director for the college's Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counseling department, reported that program had grown from 30 in one class in the fall of 1987 to more than 130 students enrolled currently. He noted Midland College was one of only two community colleges in the state now offering Associate degrees in ADAC.

Bruce outlined plans for several expanded programs to train counselors now working in public school systems and service organizations so they can meet state requirements for certification as alcohol and drug abuse counselors. A new course at the college is a practicum which provides free counseling to the community and to the college students and staff. After initial consultation with the college's professional counseling staff, referrals are made to students enrolled in the practicum course for additional free counseling.

In other action, board members authorized the college to establish a "457 Plan" for greater flexibility in investments of employees' tax shelter funds. They also approved a Tax Shelter Annuity Loan Plan, which would allow employees to borrow from their TSA funds. Such withdrawals would be for extreme need, limited to 50 percent of the account with a minimum loan of $2,500, and scheduled monthly repayments.

An annual election of board officers created no changes. Board president Ralph Way, vice president John Cooper, and secretary Bill Kleine were re-elected to serve new one-year terms.

Ex-Ector jailer suing sheriff, commissioners

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A former Ector County jailer, who claims he was assured that his job would be "long lasting" but wasn't, has filed a $3 million civil-rights suit in federal court in Midland against his former boss, Ector County Sheriff O.A. "Bob" Brookshire, and members of the county's Commissioners' Court.

The ex-jailer, Ronald Earl Newby, was employed by the Ector County Sheriff's Department in Odessa in October 1986. When he was severed from employment in October 1988, Newby was making $20,600 a year.

Newby claims in his complaint that Brookshire did not give him any "explanation or notice for the reason" for his being fired and that Brookshire and other county officials did not give him an "opportunity to have the reasons for his termination considered at a hearing."

As a result, Newby alleges that his "valuable liberty and/or property" rights were taken away through his job loss and that he was denied "due process" in violation of his constitutional rights.

Further, Newby alleges that "as far as" he knows, his job loss was "without just cause." Newby says he was assured that he would be terminated from the job only for "just cause."

Co-defendants in the lawsuit include the sheriff, Ector County Judge Jan Fisher, and Ector County Commissioners Jack Crider, Bryan Henderson, Ricky Jorgensen and Joe Eddie Hernandez.

In seeking the $3 million, including $30,000 for his retained attorney, Bradley C. Miles of San Angleo, Newby is asking compensation for "extreme emotional stress," "severe mental anguish and humiliation," and "even slander at the hands" of the sheriff.

Newby is seeking $1-million in punitive damages, $1 million for emotional stress and anguish, $500,000 for loss of his career, $474,720 for loss of future earnings, and $1,720 a month from the date of his alleged "wrongful discharge" up to any reinstatement in his old job.

College's homes auctioned by IRS

WACO (AP) — Two homes owned by Paul Quinn College, including that of its president, have been sold at auction by the Internal Revenue Service in an attempt to collect delinquent taxes owed by Texas' largest black private college.

The homes were auctioned Tuesday after the IRS filed $303,129 in liens against the school in January.

McLennan County resident Gene Chapman purchased Paul Quinn President Warren Morgan's residence and 14 acres for $80,000. The minimum bid was $37,910.99. Chapman declined to comment on his purchase.

Consumer group says lawn pesticides may be harmful

AUSTIN (AP) — A consumer group says many pesticides Texans apply to their lawns may cause serious health problems, but a spokesman for the lawn care industry denied the charge.

A study released Tuesday by Public Citizen — a nationwide group founded by consumer advocate Ralph Nader — says many commonly used lawn care pesticides have been linked to birth defects, liver, kidney, or nervous system damage, in addition to other health care problems.

"Why are we letting our lawn care companies poison our lawns, our kids, our pets and ourselves?," said Tom "Smitty" Smith, director of Public Citizen of Texas.

But Don R. McCullough, director of the Texas Pest Control Association, said of the report, "None of that is substantiated."

"Pesticides are like pharmaceuticals. If they are used correctly they can do a great deal of good," McCullough said.

Smith said pesticide manufacturers only test the immediate health effects of their products, rather than the effect of long-term exposure.

"Sending our kids to go out in the yard and play after a lawn care treatment may be literally sending them to play with poisons," he said.

The federal Environmental Protection Agency has failed to protect consumers from pesticide poisoning, Smith said. He and Doug Murray, of the Texas Center for Policy Studies, called for stricter state controls on the pesticide industry.

MC writing contest winners announced

From Staff Reports

Alice King Greenwood, Linda Aaron, and Anntoinette Moore took first place honors in the 15th annual Midland College Creative Writing Contest.

Winners were announced this morning during ceremonies at the Allison Fine Arts Building.

Greenwood received her award for first place in poetry. She is from Odessa and also took a first place in the 1988 contest. Aaron won first in the Short Story division and Moore took top honors in the essay contest. Aaron and Moore are from Midland. First prize winners in each division receive cash awards of $60. Second place winners receive $40 each and third place winners receive $20 each.

Rebecca T. Watson, instructor in English and creative writing, serves as contest coordinator. Contest judges presented critiques with entrants following the awards ceremony. Watson noted the contest is open to both current students and those who have attended during the past two years.

Dr. Robert Rothstein of UTPB served as the essay division judge for the 14th year. Billy Feeler, a former instructor of English at Odessa College, was a poetry judge for the ninth year. Donna Smith, an OC instructor of English, judged poetry for the sixth year. Myra Salcedo, a Midland Reporter-Telegram writer and former multiple winner in the contest, served as a short story judge for the first year. Stanley Williams, a novelist and instructor of English at OC, judged short stories for the 14th year.

Receiving awards in the Essay contest were: Anntoinette Moore, first; Trina G. Yerby, second; Linda Crocker Bruce, third; Marilyn K. McGaff, Angela Rentz, and Trina G. Yerby, honorable mentions.

In the Poetry division, award winners were: Alice King Greenwood, first and honorable mention; Dianna Schoderbek, second and honorable mention; Marilyn K. McGaff, third; J. G. Butts, two honorable mentions; Betty Dobbs, Priscilla Frake, Patricia R. Peek, and Betty Anne Tague, honorable mentions.

FRANCE

Today, in the merger of the villages of Merkwiller and Pechelbronn, the Pechelbronn area is "pleasant, clean, attractive hilly community," Pearson said. The cultures there are a merger of the French and German. And the French sauerkraut there is "marvelous" and most palatable even to those who don't usually relish sauerkraut. "Even if you don't like sauerkraut," Pearson said, "I will guarantee you will like theirs."

A prize treasured by Pearson and is wife is the Pechelbronn gift of the print of an old art work — "La Priere des Mineurs" — of French miners who are "praying to their Maker to get them through their shift."

Instead of relying on petroleum, the French today are strongly committed to nuclear energy for powering the public utilities, Pearson said.

"They (the French) have been close to the Arabs, and they have dealt with Arabs for a jillion years" in importing petroleum for fuel uses," Pearson said. "They have had good relations and bad relations."

But the French "basically do not like the idea of being dependent on the Arabs for their fuel supply, particularly when they have had a little bit of history of it being very erratic." The French have gotten "all of their public utilities out of grasp of the Arabs" by way of nuclear energy.

"They would like to be as independent as they can of outside sources of fuel," Pearson said of the French. "They would like to be completely independent."

Couple seen in Clovis match descriptions of cultists

CLOVIS, N.M. (AP) — A man and woman seen Tuesday in Clovis apparently match the description of fugitive leaders of a drug-smuggling cult blamed in a series of grisly slayings in Mexico, state police said.

A clerk at a convenience store near Cannon Air Force Base reported seeing a couple resembling pictures she saw in news reports, state police communications supervisor Jan Harris said.

Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo, 26, and Sara Maria Aldrete, 21, were being sought after 15 bodies were discovered on ranches near Matamoros, Mexico, where investigators said ritual sacrifice was performed by a drug cult.

Constanzo, whom authorities have called the "Godfather" of the cult, and Aldrete, whom they have called the "Witch," have been the subjects of a massive manhunt since the bodies were first found April 11 just across the Rio Grande from Brownsville, Texas.

The man and woman drove up to the convenience store at about 2 p.m. in a blue van that appeared to have been freshly painted, Harris said. The clerk, whose name was not released, thought they resembled the Matamoros suspects and called police after the couple drove off, Ms. Harris said.

"We don't know if these were the subjects wanted in Matamoros, but we have sent teletypes to New Mexico and Texas, and we're cautioning officers that these people should be considered armed and dangerous" she said.

The teletype indicated that the couple was heading to Austin, but Harris said she was unsure where that information came from.

Elizabeth Price, also a local resident, bought the school's other residence for the minimum bid of $29,332.91. That residence is home to Van Allen, Paul Quinn's assistant to the president and director of federal relations.

Price said she hopes the school would be able to buy it back from her in the next six months.

"I'm an investor, but I do hope they can possibly buy it back," she said.

Paul Quinn College has 180 days to buy back the properties at the prices the new owners paid, plus 20 percent interest.

Morgan and Allen have six months before they must leave the properties unless Paul Quinn buys them back, according to the IRS, which will issue the deed at the end of 180 days.

School business manager Joe Fortson, declined comment on what the home sales mean for the college or what the school is doing to raise money to pay the IRS.

Paul Quinn Trustee Monte Hulse of Waco said he is disappointed the IRS went through with the auction.

"We had hoped something could be worked out with the IRS and that we could avoid this action," he said. "But Paul Quinn is still optimistic that it can get financing and needs worked out. Maybe within the six-month period the college can get its affairs in order."

The college administration, through the board, will have to come up with some additional funds or "take drastic steps to cut back its activities to get the college back to where it can live within its budget," Hulse said.

Trustee Jack Bryant, vice president/affiliate relations for the National Black Network in New York, described the sale of homes as "unfortunate."

"I was hoping it did not get to that point and there were measures taken to try to prevent that."

Lawman's cause of death not yet been determined

From Staff Reports

MONAHANS — Officials aren't much closer to announcing the cause of death of an Ector County lawman found shot to death last month.

Ward County Chief Deputy Lynn Holland said this morning reports indicate the bullet that killed Terry Gene Molder, an eight year veteran of the Ector County Sheriff's Department, was from the .45-caliber pistol found at the scene.

However, a final autopsy report that would put an end to rumors surrounding the cause of Molder's death has not been released, officials say.

Molder, 35, was found shot to death in a ditch one mile east of Monahans on Interstate 20 the evening of March 20.

He died from a single gunshot wound to the chest. Molder had been involved in a one-car rollover shortly before he was found dead, witnesses told lawmen.

Ward County Peace Justice Ron Ray said today Molder's death certificate had been filed, but the cause of death was listed as pending.

Local Aggies to muster

Former Texas A&M University students will assemble in Midland on Friday for the annual Texas Aggie Muster.

The Muster activities will start at 6:30 p.m. at the Midland Center at the corner of West Wall Avenue and Main Street.

The Muster is open to all former students and their families, parents of students and friends of A&M, chairman Daniel R. Anderson Jr. said.

The Aggie Muster dates back to the mid-1880s and has been held annually since. More than 500 Musters will be held around the world this year in places where former A&M students live or work, Anderson said.

During wars, the Aggies mustered in foxholes, battlefields, aboard ships, in airplanes and in medical hospitals, Anderson said. In World War II, a Muster was held on Corregidor shortly before the Japanese captured the island.

The Aggies pay their respects to all those who are absent, because of death, since the last Muster. When the names of the honored dead are called from the Muster Roll, a friend of the deceased answers, "Here."

Postal Service to try self-adhesive stamps

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Self-adhesive stamps are expected to be on the market this summer, but U.S. Postal Service officials say they'll stick to their search for the perfect "lick and stick" seal.

Postal officials said earlier this month they plan to test-market a stamp with a peel-off backing as part of their continuing effort to find out why some stamps stick and others don't.

The Columbus-based Battelle Memorial Institute has been researching various moistenable adhesives since last July under a $700,000, 16-month contract with the post office.

It will be the second time the postal service has sold such stamps, said Roxanne Symko, spokeswoman for the U.S. Postal Service in Washington.

A similar attempt in the late 1970s failed because the adhesive simply didn't last very long, she said.

The adhesive stuck well enough in the short run, but philatelists — stamp collectors — complained that the adhesive ate through and destroyed the face of the stamp after only a few months, she said.

Battelle has been asked to find an adhesive formula that will keep stamps affixed to letters as they travel through the high-speed, highly automated postal system. The postal service now uses three types of adhesives on stamps.

Consumers have complained that stamps, which generate $8 billion a year in revenue, often fall off or are shot off letters as they speed through postal machines. Postal officials say the growing volume of mail also has added to the stress placed on stamp adhesives.

Resignation called

On Feb. 9, 1983, an Israeli commission called for Defense Minister Ariel Sharon's resignation.

Daughters of Confederates may lose home

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Decades ago, daughters of Civil War soldiers were promised they would be looked after for life in the stately Confederate Home for Women, but the eight women still living in the landmark are being moved to make more room for a museum, officials said.

The women, age 84 to 98, surrendered their worldly possessions and future inheritance in exchange for the promise of lifetime care in the two-story building nestled among the magnolias behind the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts.

Once the women are moved, the museum will take the building for its own use, and the antiques filling the home will be sold.

"The museum wants our home," said Faye Oliff, a member of the home's board of governors who opposed the move. "They want it so bad. They've been like damn vultures waiting for the ladies to die so they can get it."

The Confederate Home for Women is located near historic Monument Avenue, lined with statues of rebel generals celebrating the days when Richmond was the capital of the Confederacy. Dozens of daughters of Confederate soldiers have lived in the home since the 1930s.

But after more than a year of negotiations among key legislators, museum officials and the home's board of directors, a decision has been reached to turn the home over to the museum, and send the women to a modern place 20 miles out of town, The Virginian-Pilot and The Ledger Star of Norfolk recently reported.

If the women are forced to move, they will lose dozens of worn but valuable antiques in use in the home, some they or previous residents brought threre, others bequeathed by wealthy Southerners.

The antiques will be sold off, with board members receiving first dibs at prices based on a 9-year-old appraisal, the newspaper reported.

"Something needs to be done to stop (the private sale)," Ms. Oliff said. "I think it all ought to be sold at public auction to ensure the home gets a fair price for it."

Ms. Oliff said she tried unsuccessfully to persuade other board members to open the home to paying descendants of Confederate soldiers. The board also denied her proposal that a smaller home for the women be opened about eight blocks away.

The antiques included a 1770 Chippendale American-made mahogany grandfather clock, valued at $5,000 according to a recent appraisal by R.E. Crawford and Associates of Richmond.

Proposal calls for scrapping Galveston Navy project

GALVESTON (AP) — Construction activity on a 50-acre site along this island city's port is not what local officials had in mind when they thought they won a $41 million piece of a Navy project to base a battleship on the Gulf of Mexico.

Now, instead of getting ready to build, construction crews are restoring the land to its natural condition.

A Pentagon-recommended proposal affecting 145 military installations, including the Galveston homeport project, was approved by the U.S. House 381-43 Tuesday.

The vote officially slammed the door on any hopes the project could be saved.

"There's no warehouse or factories — no buildings out there," said Curtiss Brown, administrative aide to Galveston County Judge Ray Holbrook. "It's not like the stories we've seen about communities which lose a base and later find a pot of gold at the end of a muddy rainbow.

"The fact of the matter is all we're finding is more mud."

The project would have made Galveston home to five Navy ships, and would have brought the economically struggling area a $16.5 million annual shot in the arm when completed in 1991.

Crews now hope to have the site restored by mid-June.

"We had done a lot of digging and moving of earth," said Navy spokeswoman Sue Lawley. "We're grading now and putting the site back to its original shape."

"They had physically changed the shoreline so they could accommodate ships," Brown said. "But, of course, there's not going to be ships now."

The five naval vessels and almost 900 military and civilian jobs are earmarked for Corpus Christi.

Although graders and bulldozers are working feverishly at the site where a sign optimistically proclaims the work as "Ship Support Complex — Galveston," the fate of the land at the east end of the island just inside the Galveston seawall is uncertain.

The Army Corps of Engineers, which donated some of the parcel, would like it back. The Coast Guard, which had an agreement with the Navy that they would be able to use the finished homeport facilities, wants land back too, according to Brown.

City and county officials both have indicated they would like some kind of economic development project on the site.

"It's a great piece of property right in the middle of a military complex," Galveston Mayor Jan Coggeshall said. "It's between the Corps of Engineers disposal area and the Coast Guard. What we don't want is for the government to take it over."

The project would have made Galveston home to five Navy ships, and would have brought the economically struggling area a $16.5 million annual shot in the arm when completed in 1991. Crews now hope to have the site restored by mid-June.

Local officials dedicated $8 million for the project, then froze that account when the federal government tried to make its first withdrawal to pay for work already completed.

"The county has the $8 million," Brown said. "We still have that money tucked away for a naval base in Galveston. Should any efforts be successful to realize the navy base as a reserve center or something along those lines, I think those funds could be looked at as a possible source of support.

"If they want our money, they've got to build a project."

The Navy still needs to buy its way out of a $21 million first-phase construction contract rendered obsolete Dec. 29 when a Pentagon commission recommended the Galveston project be scrapped. That came four years after the city first put in a bid for the project, 10 months after a groundbreaking celebration and three months after construction already had started.

"It's pretty wild," Ms. Coggeshall said. "I felt betrayed on Dec. 30. The city put four years of economic effort and someone just pulled the plug."

Chaplain pleads guilty to sexual misconduct

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The top chaplain at Brooke Army Medical Center has pleaded guilty to eight charges of sexual misconduct and faces up to 18 years in prison, but an agreement with prosecutors may keep the Vietnam veteran out of prison.

A spokeswoman for Health Services Command said Tuesday Col. James Moody will be sentenced May 20 at Fort Hood. Moody pleaded innocent to two additional charges that the government will not pursue, spokeswoman Marla Jones said.

"The government is not going to present evidence on those two charges," Ms. Jones said. "The punishment on the guilty charges is yet to be decided."

At the arraignment, held last week at Fort Hood, Judge Stephen Saynisch accepted the guilty pleas entered by Moody and released him on his own recognizance.

The chaplain, who will be sentenced by a panel of senior officers, faces a maximum sentence of dismissal from the Army, confinement for up to 18 years and forfeiture of all pay and allowances.

Moody, a Vietnam veteran with more than 20 years in the service, was charged last month with sodomy and adultery in connection with incidents involving two women.

Authorities said one case involved a sexual relationship with a young female soldier he was providing with marital counseling. He also pleaded guilty to making long-distance personal phone calls to his adulterous lover.

Moody reached a tentative agreement with Army prosecutors that would allow him to retire from the service with full benefits, according to sources who asked the San Antonio Light not to identify them.

Sources said the agreement calls for Moody to serve no more than three years in prison.

Proposals would strengthen TDC's boot camp program

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas House Tuesday tentatively approved two measures aimed at giving state and local jail directors more options in overseeing inmates.

Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, said legislation he sponsored, HB 1323, would "strengthen" a Texas Department of Corrections boot camp program for inmates sentenced to fewer than 90 days in prison.

Approved during the last session of the Legislature, the program is centered at the Goree Unit near Huntsville, a 200-bed facility now about one-quarter full.

However, with current legislative proposals that would expand the boot camp concept, Stiles felt TDC administrators need greater flexibility in harboring boot camp inmates until enough beds can be constructed.

The legislation would allow the department director to limit the number of inmates sentenced to the program and give him authority to remove inmates who violate rules.

The measure also specifies that inmates need not be segregated from the general prison population while administrators conduct initial testing or when medical or security concerns arise.

"We're going to build more boot camps in the counties and in TDC also," said Stiles.

House approval means members are "just making sure" that the director has control of the program "before it gets out of hand and he gets held in contempt by a district judge," he said.

A second House-approved measure would give county law enforcement officials more leeway in accepting jail detainee volunteers into clean-up or work programs.

House Bill 1312, sponsored by Rep. Frank Collazo, D-Port Arthur, would allow detainees held prior to trial on non-violent, felony-level offenses to participate in county work programs operated by the sheriff.

The bill also would allow persons incarcerated in lieu of misdemeanor fine payments to work on public improvement projects in city jurisdictions in addition to within counties.

During debate, Rep. Gerald Yost, R-Longview, offered an amendment to the measure to ensure that the municipal public improvement projects had not previously been completed with municipal employees.

Yost said his concern was that no city employee lose his job to inmate labor.

However, the Longview representative withdrew the amendment after Rep. Allen Hightower, D-Huntsville, pointed out that the addition would reduce city management flexibility in assigning tasks.

Cities may want to shift some tasks to inmate labor to allow regular employees time to work on other projects, he said.

Bill OK'd for protection of three scenic rivers, study of four others

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A bill to protect three scenic Texas rivers and to study four others got tentative Senate approval Tuesday, despite concern that the bill might prevent development of future reservoirs.

Sen. Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso, was able to muster one more vote than the number needed to take up the bill for tentative approval Tuesday, but he lost another procedural vote, so final approval was delayed at least three days.

The bill would prohibit development on the three designated river segments, including the Neches River segment in the Big Thicket National Preserve in Southeast Texas; Buffalo Bayou in Houston and the San Marcos River from Spring Lake Dam to its entrance into the Guadalupe River.

The bill was drawn to protect seven river segments, but the Senate adopted an amendment by Sen. Bill Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant, that would downgrade the status of the other stretches.

It would order studies of the potential impact of protecting the Neches River from Steinhagen Lake upstream to U.S. 84 between Anderson and Cherokee counties; the Colorado River from U.S. 183 in Austin to Texas 71 in La Grange; the Guadalupe River from Interstate 10 at Comfort to Rebecca Creek; and the Elm Fork of the Trinity River from Texas 121 in Denton County to the West Fork of the Trinity River in Dallas.

The Legislature would decide in 1991 whether to designate those areas as protected river segments.

In the segments that were left in protected status there is virtually no need to work on the river channel or build a reservoir, Ratliff said.

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, whose ranch is on the Concho River, said riverside landowners were suspicious that the bill might lead to further erosion of their property rights. "A lot of us feel like it's the camel getting its nose in under the tent," he said.

"I do feel this is just a start in trying to take the rivers," he said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Ima Hogg's estate will be renovated

HOUSTON (AP) — Officials with Bayou Bend, the former estate home of Ima Hogg, say it will take $5 million and a two-year period to renovate the 28-room mansion.

Through advance gifts, officials have raised $2.3 million towards the $5 million goal, including a $1 million grant from Houston Endowment Inc., said Bayou Bend Director David B. Warren.

The estate, which is open to the public year-round, contains one of the nation's best collections of colonial American furniture, paintings, metals, ceramics, glass and textiles, he said. The 4,600-object collection, spanning two centuries from 1650-1850, and valued in excess of $100 million, is the only in-depth gathering of Americana in the Central and Western United States, he said.

Miss Hogg, the daughter of Texas' first native-born governor, James Stephen Hogg, left an endowment for the maintenance of the estate in the exclusive River Oaks neighborhood, but the costs have exceeded the modest endowment, officials said.

"Bayou Bend represents a rich legacy, left in trust for Texas and the nation by Miss Ima Hogg," Warren said.

The mansion surrounded by 14 acres of formal and woodland gardens will be closed to the public during the two-year period beginning in June 1991.

Panel hires racing director

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Racing Commission has hired a director of racing to relieve some concerns recently expressed about the lack of race track experience on its staff.

Tom Hagadone joined the commission this month from the American Quarter Horse Association, where he had served as assistant director of racing and of the racing council.

Hagadone began work for the Arizona Department of Racing as a patrol judge while attending classes at the University of Arizona Race Track Industries Program.

He worked thoroughbred meets at Great Falls and Billings, Mont., as assistant racing secretary, track handicapper and director of publicity, and he was a state steward at a greyhound track at Apache Junction, Mont.

In 1987, Hagadone went to Ak-Sar-Ben at Omaha, Neb., as a stall superintendent and morning clocker. He filled in as official timer during races and as placing judge and entry clerk. He was a jockeys' agent at Turf Paradise, Ariz.

"It's like a dream come true to be here," he said of the Texas post. "I'm impressed with the dedication of the people at the commission. If other state commissioners would do what the Texas commission did, going to other states and looking at tracks to learn, the whole industry would be better off."

Plastics recycling bill OK'd

AUSTIN (AP) — The House Monday approved a bill designed to increase plastics recycling by requiring plastic containers to be imprinted with a code indicating the materials used in production.

Gov. Bill Clements is reviewing the measure, said Reggie Bashur, the governor's spokesman, Tuesday.

"This legislation opens up a whole new business opportunity — recycling plastics," said Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, who proposed the bill. The codes would make recycling practical and profitable.

Plastic containers can be made from different kinds of materials called resins. If the materials are not separated before recycling, the end product is of limited use and small value, according to Mauro's office.

The Senate passed the bill last month.

East Texas allowable battle brews

AUSTIN (AP) — A battle is brewing in the East Texas field — the largest producing oil reservoir in the state — and the lines are being drawn largely between big and little producers.

Since February, major oil companies and independent producers have taken sides over a request the majors have made to the Texas Railroad Commission.

The 11 major oil producers in the field, led by Occidental Petroleum, want the Railroad Commission to lift current production restrictions — called "allowables," — on the celebrated field from 86 percent to 100 percent. Together the group dominates production in the field.

Smaller producers led by the East Texas Producers and Royalty Owners Association and several taxing authorities — including several independent school districts — say the move will accelerate the depletion of the field, leaving them without the one industry that has been their lifeblood since 1930.

"If they want to make the fields in Texas last longer, they should lower the allowables all over the state," said Wally Scott, an Austin-based oil and gas attorney representing Occidental's domestic exploration and production company, Oxy U.S.A. Inc., in an appeal to the Railroad Commission.

A field's "allowable" determines at what rate wells can produce oil. Thousands of wells in the East Texas field can only produce at 86 percent of their capacity, and the owners of the lucrative leases don't think that's fair. Thousands of other wells in the field aren't bound by the restriction because they are categorized as stripper wells or marginal wells — limited in their production capabilities anyway.

On Thursday, the commission could rule on Oxy's proposal at its regular monthly meeting, but most likely it won't.

The commission staff has recommended that if the commissioners want to take up the matter a hearing should be called.

Under procedural rules, a hearing would have to be requested by the Oxy group, which includes Arco, Amoco, Texaco, Mobil, Shell, Chevron, Sun, Phillips and Amerada Hess. Exxon was among the group but said it "has elected not to participate in the next administrative step," according to an Exxon spokesman.

Oxy's attorney, Scott, said the group doesn't want to go through a lengthy and expensive hearing process. The Railroad Commission "didn't have a hearing on the rest of them," he said. "We're saying treat East Texas like every other field."

"This is the field that won the war," said Dan Jones, executive vice president of the East Texas Producers and Royalty Owners Association in Longview. "This field still has a long life, and its life doesn't need to be shortened."

In a recent Sunday editorial, the Longview News-Journal decried the move by the majors, saying it would be disastrous to the East Texas economy and "seems to be little more than corporate greed."

"A 100 percent allowable could mean the rapid death of the East Texas oil field and severely cripple the long-term economy of the region," the newspaper said. The newspaper urged its readers to write to the three Texas Railroad Commissioners asking them to maintain the East Texas field allowable at 86 percent.

MARKETS

Oil prices leap $1 to pass $22 barrier

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices surged substantially higher today, with May contracts for West Texas Intermediate gaining $1.14 to stand at $22.65 at midmorning. WTI gained 29 cents to close at $21.51 Tuesday.

A variety of factors fueled the increase, including the shutting down of an oil platform in the North Sea due to a leak. In addition, a report from the American Petroleum Institute showed domestic motor gasoline stocks fell 2.1 million barrels and domestic crude stocks had fallen 5.7 million barrels last week.

Among refined petroleum products traded on the exchange, unleaded gasoline for May delivery spurted 1.78 cents to 73.86 cents a gallon, after rising 2.06 cents and 1.21 cents on Monday and Friday, respectively.

The near-month crude and gasoline contracts are now trading at the highest levels since January 1986.

May wholesale home heating oil, which rose 0.85 cent Monday, skidded 1 cent and settled at 52.76 cents a gallon.

Continuing speculation that supplies will be unusually tight this spring and summer has lent a bullish tone to the energy markets lately, particularly in the past three weeks since an Exxon oil tanker accidentally spilled 10 million gallons of oil in Valdez, Alaska.

Dollar mostly higher overseas

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose against nearly all major currencies in light European trading early today. Gold bullion fell.

Barring any unexpected events, dealers said they expected little movement in exchange rates throughout the day.

The dollar fell Tuesday in reaction to a U.S. Labor Department report that consumer prices rose 0.5 percent in March, which was in line with expectations and diminished concern of a rise in U.S. interest rates.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.22 Japanese yen to a closing 131.88 yen. Later, in London, it edged up to 131.90 yen.

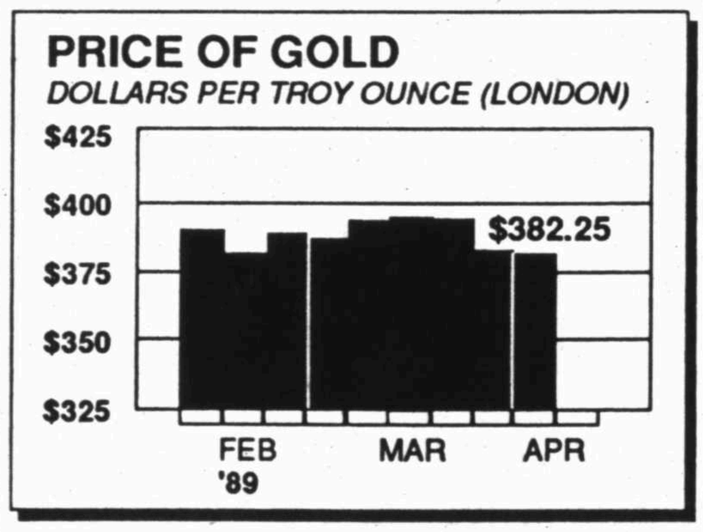
Other dollar rates at mid-morning, compared with late Tuesday:

— 1.8572 West German marks, up from 1.8528
— 1.6320 Swiss francs, up from 1.6283
— 6.2885 French francs, up from 6.2750
— 2.0952 Dutch guilders, up from 2.0935
— 1,362.50 Italian lire, down from 1,366.95
— 1.1860 Canadian dollars, up from 1.1848

In London, the British pound fell to $1.7120 from $1.7185 late Tuesday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $383.15 a troy ounce, down from $383.25 bid late Tuesday. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $382.90.

Silver bullion fell in London to a bid price of $5.77 a troy ounce, down from $5.78 bid late Tuesday.



Drexel institutes sweeping cutbacks

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — In the first sweeping corporate shake-up since it agreed to a landmark settlement of securities fraud charges, Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. announced Tuesday that it would sell its retail brokerage operation and cut back other divisions, reducing the firm's work force by about one-third.

The move by Drexel, which had been under federal investigation for securities law violations for two and a half years and once reigned over the junk bond business, is expected to lower some of the hurdles facing the firm in negotiations with state regulators. It will also remove some of the less profitable parts of its business.

In addition to selling its retail operation, Drexel, which now has more than 9,000 employees, plans to curtail significantly its operations in over-the-counter trading, market making in foreign equities and municipal bond trading.

Moreover, it has informed New York City officials that it will abandon a building project in Manhattan, the second such real estate development it has dropped in two years.

The sale and cutbacks will leave intact Drexel's primary money machine, its high-yield bond unit.

Drexel will also continue to have business in other areas, including institutional equities and investment banking.

Speculation was rampant on Wall Street and at Drexel Tuesday about what firm might buy Drexel's retail brokerage operation.

The most frequently mentioned candidate was Primerica Inc., parent company of Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

Frank Zarb, chairman and chief executive of Smith, Barney has expressed interest in expanding the firm's retail sector. A spokesman for the firm declined to comment.

Under the restructuring, which was approved by the Drexel board Tuesday, the firm will sell its retail business to another brokerage firm, with the final terms of a deal to be announced next week.

Irish company places record $17 billion new jet order

NEW YORK (AP) — Ireland's GPA Group Ltd. joined the aircraft buying spree Tuesday, announcing a record-breaking order for 308 new planes valued at $17 billion.

The purchase of jets made by Boeing Co., McDonnell Douglas Corp. and Europe's Airbus Industrie is the largest civilian aircraft order ever, topping Delta Air Lines' $10.5 billion order for up to 225 Boeing and McDonnell Douglas aircraft last September.

The Delta order was followed by other huge purchases, as several U.S. airlines scrambled to buy new planes.

At news conferences in New York, London and Paris, GPA officials said the leasing company had placed firm orders for 121 new planes and had taken options on another 187, most of which are likely to be exercised.

GPA, based in Shannon, Ireland, is one of the world's biggest aircraft leasing firms. Its leading rivals include International Lease Finance Corp. of Beverly Hills, Calif., and Ansett Transport Industries Ltd., a huge Australian company that is half-owned by media tycoon Rupert Murdoch.

GPA's order reflects the growing importance of aircraft leasing companies, which account for about one-fifth of all aircraft orders. It also underscores the airlines' concern about replacing their aging fleets.

Boeing is the major beneficiary of the orders. GPA said it will buy 182 Boeing airplanes for $9.4 billion, consisting of 92 Boeing 737 narrow-body, twin-jet planes, 50 Boeing 757 narrow-body twin-jet models and 40 Boeing 767 twin-engine wide-body jets.

GPA will pay McDonnell Douglas $3.1 billion for 64 MD-80 narrow-body twin-jets and 8 MD-11 wide-body, three-engine jets.

The leasing company also is ordering $4.3 billion worth of airplanes from Airbus Industrie, a European aircraft manufacturing consortium. GPA will buy 30 Airbus A320s, 10 A330s and two A340s. In addition, the company took options on another 10 A330s and two A340s.

GPA plans to take delivery of 80 to 100 new planes a year over the next six to seven years.

"This significant commitment means that we expect to purchase about 10 percent of all of the commercial jet aircraft delivered through the mid-1990s," GPA Chairman and Chief Executive T.A. Ryan told reporters in New York. "We will thus maintain our leadership and dominant market share of the new aircraft operating lease business which continues to grow rapidly."

Aircraft leasing fills the gap between manufacturers unable to keep up with demand and airlines in a hurry to get planes to stay competitive. Lessors like GPA buy up batches of different kinds of planes and lease them to carriers in a pinch.

Stocks surge to post-crash high

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market surged to a new post-crash high in active trading Tuesday, after new economic data signaled moderation in the economy and helped ease fears about inflation.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials shot up 41.61 points to 2,379.40, the highest level since the Oct. 19, 1987, stock market collapse and well above its previous post-crash high of 2,347.14 on Feb. 7.

Tuesday's move was also the sharpest one-day rise since Oct. 20, 1988, when the blue-chip indicator rose 43.92 points.

In the broader market, advancing issues outnumbered declining ones by about 11 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 1,047 issues up, 471 down and 464 unchanged.

Supreme Court allows price-fixing suits

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court gave consumers a chance to recover, through antitrust lawsuits, the extra money they spend because of illegally inflated prices.

By a 7-0 vote, the justices said Tuesday state laws may allow those indirectly affected by illegal price-fixing to sue for monetary damages.

Lower courts had struck down such state laws, ruling that they are precluded by the federal antitrust law's bar on suits by "indirect purchasers."

The sale was voted on by the newly constitued board, under Drexel's new chairman, John S.R. Shad. The nee board was formed as part of the firm's settlement of charges filed by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

In its settlement with the U.S. attorney in Manhattan, Drexel agreed to pay $650 million and plead guilty to six felony charges.

To settle civil charges brought by the SEC, Drexel agreed to sweeping changes in the way it does business and is now under administrative probation with the agency.

In both cases, Drexel was charged with violating a broad array of securities laws through manipulation of the market, stock "parking" and other illegal schemes.

In comments to Drexel's employees over the firm's internal communications system, Frederick H. Joseph, chief executive of Drexel, said the firm had talked with Smith, Barney about a possible sale.

But, Drexel employees said, Joseph said the firm had also approached a number of other Wall Street investment houses about purchasing the retail unit, including, Merrill Lynch & Co., Paine Webber Inc., and several others.

In his address, Joseph said Drexel was making it known that the unit would be sold to insure that it attracts the highest price.

Although a sale would take place at a low point in the retail market, Drexel could pull in a hefty sum. Estimates of the value of a sale ranged from $50 million to as much as $200 million.

When Shearson Lehman Brothers purchased E.F. Hutton & Co. last year, it paid about $150,000 for each broker, said Long of Lipper.

At that rate, Drexel's unit, with 1,100 brokers, would go for more than $150 million.

Because of the changes, Drexel is expected to receive an immediate benefit from the restructuring by effectively removing itself from a good deal of the jurisdiction of state governments that are now looking to the firm for settlement talks.

BATTLE

Since 1972, the East Texas field and only one other (the Kelly-Snyder field in West Texas' Scurry County) have been restricted to 86 percent production, while the rest of the state's fields have been set at 100 percent.

Local independent producers and taxing authorities oppose the request because they are worried the field's life will be shortened, leaving the area without a natural resource tax base sooner than they believe is necessary.

This isn't the first time such a request has come before the Railroad Commsion. In 1977, the large producers made the same request, but the commission never acted on it, Scott said.

The larger producers are bringing the subject back up again because "we've stood it long enough," he said. "The economics are different today, and there's no reason to keep the East Texas field at 86 percent."

The field's production has been on a decline for several years. Average daily barrels per day totaled 107,985 last year, down from 121,600 in 1986. The 1986 level is where the larger producers would like to see the field return. "That's all we're asking them to do. By putting it back to 100 percent we'd be at 1986 levels adding 15,000 barrels a day," Scott said.

The field's 264 smaller producers are worried that additional production will destroy the reservoir's pressure in the water-driven field. They believe the quicker oil is extracted, the quicker water will encroach. That would leave limited capacity wells dry and much oil left unrecoverable from their smaller marginal wells.

No one knows for sure what will happen to the field's pressure, but pressure in the field has improved over the past several years. The 11 major producers believe these concerns are unwarranted.

The East Texas field has 988.7 million barrels of oil reserves left in the ground. Last year, it produced 39.5 million barrels and its cumulative production since the early 1930s has been more than 5 billion barrels, according to the Texas Railraod Commission.

William Fisher, director of the Bureau of Economic Geology at the University of Texas at Austin, said that even in a much-studied field, such as the East Texas field, "there's always room for disagreement over basic interpretations of engineering data."

The local communities don't want to take a chance.

"It would be an advantage at first, but the field wouldn't last as long. We're not for it," said Robert L. Procter, superintendent of the White Oak Independent School District in Gregg County. Nearly 90 percent of the school district's annual budget comes from taxes levied on East Texas field production. "We want the field to be here as long as possible to protect our students."

Mike Crosslin, superintendent of the Spring Hill Independent School District, which is 70 percent dependent on oil and gas taxes, said the community is trying to diversify its economy.

"But we need time to get this done. If we go to 100 percent allowable, we'll have the best production for four to eight years, and the marginal wells would be gone," Crosslin said. "It's worked this way. Why change it?"

For the residents of Gregg, Rusk and Upshur counties, anything that may threaten the longevity of the East Texas field causes quite a stir because when the reservoir dries up, so will the evidence of an era gone by.

After Midnight

Rodney Doggett (above) shops for motorcycle parts after midnight. Stocker Jay Turner (right) works while Wendy Walker weaves her basket through the boxes.

For most people, midnight is a time for sleep. But for some others, the middle of the night is just another busy day. Truck drivers continue their journeys, nurses and other medical personnel make their rounds, fire fighters and police officers perform their duties and grocery shoppers visit the supermarket.

Yes, folks, Midland has a 24-hour-a-day supermarket again, which means anytime a shopper feels the urge to pig out on Haagen Daz ice cream or chocolate-covered Oreo's, all it takes is a trip to one of the local Albertson's supermarkets; even if the urge strikes at 3 a.m.

SHOPPERS APPRECIATE the availability and convenience of off-hour shopping, too. On a recent midnight-run shopping expedition, Midlander Bob Vick said since his family had had guests, he couldn't get away any earlier to do any shopping. "It's handy to be able to get in here late," he said. He prefers shopping late; however, he added, when employees are stocking groceries, "it's not always easy to get around."

Patricia Phariss, a postal employee who gets off work at midnight, said she likes the convenience of late-night shopping, but "the boxes in the aisle I really don't like. You win some, you lose some."

R.H. Norwood said he shops late by choice. "I just get off work at this hour, and come here." Norwood said his job as a hairdresser keeps him busy until late, and he when he shops after work, he appreciates the quick check-out and "no crowds."

Gloria Payne, who also works as a hairdresser, said she loves to shop at night because "there's nobody here and I don't have to fight the crowd. I shop during the day only if I have to."

A habitual night-shopper, Ms. Payne said she used to enjoy watching the interaction between the night stockers and how they would work together from one end of an aisle to the other end. "I used to literally jump things. It was a lot of fun."

Selections are better during the night, Ms. Payne added. "I've been here during the day when everything has been picked over. At night it's restocked."

She enjoys shopping late at night so much, she said, that she plans to continue "unless everybody starts coming at night, then I'll have to go during the day."

DANNY BRADLEY said he goes to the supermarket every night after he gets off work to wind down. "I work the night shift closing Der Wienerschnitzel. I come to the store and just browse and look. Shopping relaxes me."

Stores are friendlier at night, he added. "I don't have to put up with crowds of people or everybody being in a rush. You get to know people who work in the store on a person-to-person basis."

Rodney Doggett is basically a night person, he said, but he shops at night "most of the time" for a more vital reason. "I'm allergic to the sun, so I stay in during the day."

Night shopping is preferable for other reasons, he added. "There's not as many people, it doesn't take near as long."

Joan Clevenger also shops at night after she gets off work. Although she doesn't especially prefer night shopping over daytime shopping, she said at night there are "not as much of a crowd" and understocked shelves is never a problem. Sometimes she even takes advantage of the hour to do big shopping, she added.

"It's nice to know that one is open now, (and it's) there if you do need to go at night," she said.

Vegetable gardens grown in small amount of space

NEW YORK (AP) — The fun, flavor and satisfaction of home-raised vegetables prompts millions of American homeowners to plant backyard gardens every year.

The recent development of modern, lightweight potting mixes and the availability of large, inexpensive containers has made it possible to grow vegetables on a deck, patio or a sunny windowsill.

Container gardeners are now raising tomatoes, peppers, even sweet corn in pots! Salad greens are among the easiest to grow and will make a beautifully decorative planter as well.

Try Swiss chard, which resembles lettuce but doesn't bolt to seed in hot weather. Try the ruby-red variety, known as Rhubarb, planted together with green salad vegetables.

Scallions are interesting to grow. Grow them from seeds or onion sets available at your garden center in the spring. Scallions are a zesty addition to salads and other recipes.

Radishes are fast growing, and there is a wide variety of delicious kinds from which to choose. Plant radishes every few weeks for a continuous supply.

The following tips for planting your own salad bowl garden are from A.H. Hoffman, makers of Hoffman Container Gardening Soil Mix.

■ Select a wide-mouthed container, at least 5 or 6 inches deep. Glazed or unglazed ceramic bowls are excellent, but you may use any suitably-sized container, provided it has drainage holes in the bottom.

■ Fill the container with a lightweight, soilless potting mixture designed for container gardening. This type of potting mixture offers excellent air and water-holding capacity so that plant roots will not dry out or be suffocated by compacted soil, a common problem with standard potting soils. Lightweight mixes need to be thoroughly dampened before planting.

■ Plant seed or started transplants from your garden center. You can choose Red Sails lettuce, oak leaf lettuce, garden cress, parsley and other salad greens. Looseleaf, non-heading varieties of lettuce work best.

■ Set your salad bowl gardens where they'll receive 5 or 6 hours of sunshine daily. Bowls of lettuce alone will tolerate somewhat less than this. If you place the bowls outdoors on a patio or deck, remember to wait until danger of frost is past. As the weather turns warmer, you will need to provide some shade during the hottest part of the day to slow lettuce down and prolong your harvest.

■ Keep the soil in your containers uniformly moist but not soggy. If you have a number of containers planted, or need to be away from home for a day or two, you may want to consider some kind of automatic watering system such as drip irrigation. There are several good kits available for home container gardeners.

■ Vegetables grown in containers do best when small amounts of fertilizer are applied often.

Tips for using herbs suggested

HOPLAND, Calif. (AP) — The following are some tips on using herbs from Fetzer Vineyards.

DO:

■ Use fresh, seasonal herbs whenever possible; pick daily.

■ Harvest when plant begins to bloom for maximum intensity.

■ Rinse in cool water and pick best leaves; discard stems or use on coals on barbecue.

■ Keep herbs in sealed plastic bags in the refrigerator for up to a week.

■ Hang-dry by tying stems together and dry in a warm spot out of sunlight where air circulates freely; dry for 2 weeks, then store in tight container.

■ Chop and mix two or three complementary herbs for more complex flavors.

■ Convert recipes to dried herbs when fresh aren't available; reduce quantity of dried herbs by 1-3rd as they have more concentrated flavor.

■ Preserve by using in oils and vinegars.

DON'T:

■ Place fresh herbs in a water jar in the sun; they will wilt.

■ Use stems of herbs in cooking, as they are too woody.

■ Mix too many herbs together at once or use uncomplementary combinations, such as a rosemary, thyme, oregano mixture with mint and dill.

■ Use sage with fish, as it will overpower it.

■ Overuse herbs — better too little than too much.

U.S. senators select favorite deli-meat sandwich

CHICAGO (AP) — The votes are in, and the favorite deli-meat sandwich among U.S. senators is the roast beef sandwich!

According to the National Live Stock and Meat Board, 22 percent of the 58 U.S. senators surveyed said they preferred roast beef on wheat bread, topped with Cheddar cheese, lettuce, tomato, mayonnaise, Dijon mustard and onions.

The ham sandwich ranked second, with 17 percent.

Bagels' popularity with consumers rising

"Take a hole and put some dough around it." — old Yiddish recipe for bagels.

By LINDA SUSAN DUDLEY
Copley News Service

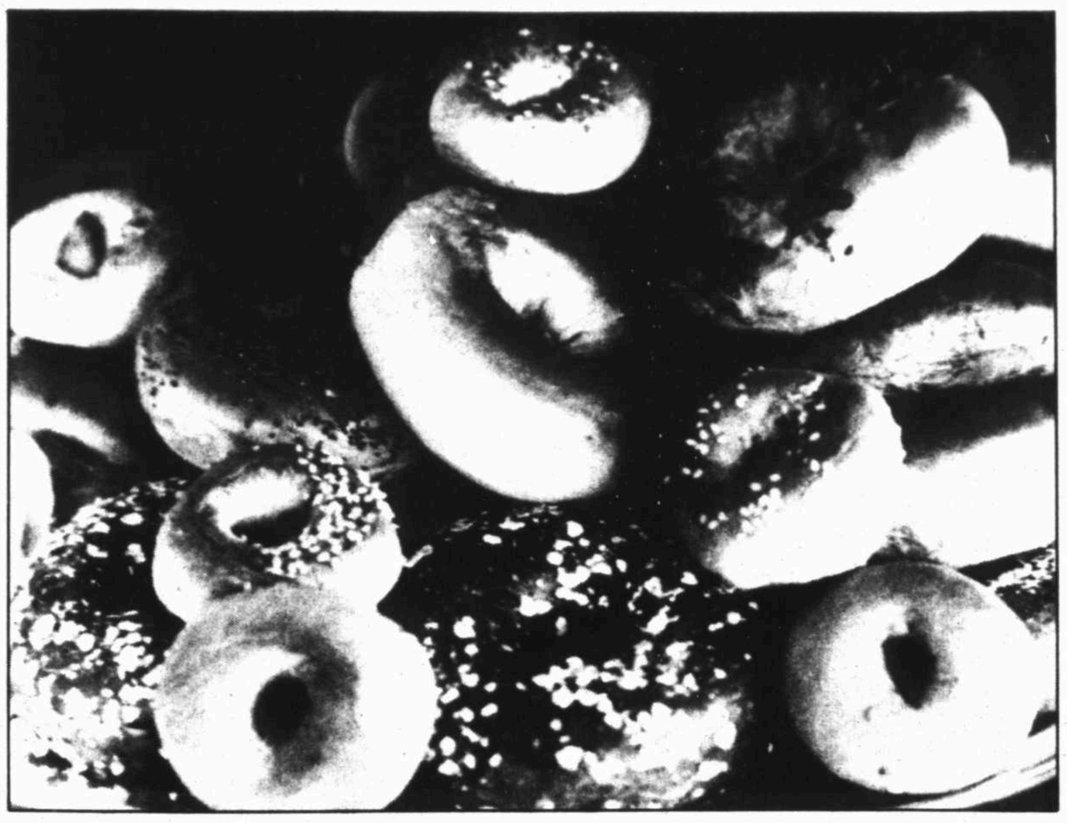
They're round but they're not muffins. They have holes in the middle but they're not doughnuts. They're made of dough but they're not bread.

Move over croissants, make room for the bagel, a funny word for a delicious roll that, when buttered or slathered with cream cheese, can serve as breakfast, is often the base for a sandwich or — if you want to buy chocolate — maybe even dessert these days.

The traditional way to eat a bagel is to split it horizontally, toast it and spread it with cream cheese and slices of lox (smoked salmon). Today, anything goes. There are even Eggs Benedict on bagels and bagel chips, the baked dough version of potato chips (see recipe below).

Bagels once were found mostly in Jewish delis in ethnic neighborhoods, but today the American bagel business is booming and the source has widened to include specialty bagel stores and supermarkets.

More than 8 million bagels a day were eaten in the United States last year. This translates to total sales of more than $500 million. Almost half of these — about 43 percent — are part of the flourishing frozen bagel business started by Kraft's Lender's Bagels, Sara Lee and other brands. The rest are fresh off the shelf at grocery stores and specialty shops.



Bagels now come in a vareity of flavors and with a multitude of toppings. CNS Photo

SINCE BAGELS are coming into their own now, it's easy to forget that this is not just a modern fad. Bagels have an ethnic heritage that dates back to 1610, when the word first showed up in the Community Regulations of Krakow, Poland.

In the United States, bagels were once considered strictly a Jewish ethnic food, with native recipes brought from Poland, Austria and Germany.

Robert Schnitzer, president of Super Bagels, a Southern California bagel manufacturer, has some tips for bagel bakers and bagel buyers:

Don't eat a bagel right out of the oven. Wait at least 10 minutes after baking the bagels to allow for the flavor to develop.

How can you tell when a bagel is done? Lift it up and look at the bottom to see if it is dark enough. "The top will never tell you anything," said Schnitzer.

Rinse bagels just out of boiling water in a splash of cold water; then they won't be too hot to pick up and put on baking trays for the oven. (Schnitzer pulls them out of a boiling kettle and unceremoniously dumps a pitcher of water on them.)

Schnitzer recommends using bread flour instead of all-purpose flour. In his plant, he uses unbleached, high-gluten flour made from spring wheat.

Finished bagels should be still chewy.

Keeping bagels in the freezer keeps them fresh. Schnitzer puts one in the microwave oven (upside down) on HIGH for 30 seconds. Then he slices it in half and toasts it.

A BAGEL is a combination of flour, water, yeast, a touch of sugar, maybe some malt and a dash of salt. It's what is done with those ingredients that turns an ordinary yeast dough into something special.

After the ingredients are mixed, kneaded and given time to rise, the resulting dough is shaped and left to rise again. And here comes the unique part.

Unlike a doughnut that is fried in oil, or rolls that are popped into the oven after rising, bagels are dropped into a large pot of boiling water and cooked for several seconds. The bagels are removed and placed on a baking sheet, brushed with a mixture of egg white and water (that's one way to get a glossy finish) and then baked at a moderately high temperature.

Professional bagel-maker Schnitzer pointed out that home bakers can do as the pros do to get a shiny finish, too.

"Bagels that are taken directly from boiling water and placed in the oven still wet on top will have a shine," he said. "The heat on the wet bagel acts like steam to produce a gloss," Schnitzer added.

Here are some interesting bagel recipes.

INCREDIBLE BAGELS

2 teaspoons active dry yeast (¼ ounce)
¼ cup warm water
2 tablespoons non-diastatic malt syrup
1 cup water
5 cups whole-wheat flour
2¼ teaspoons salt
1¼ cups water
⅓ cup malt syrup
1 gallon boiling water

Soften yeast in ¼ cup warm water. Dissolve 2 tablespoons malt syrup in 1 cup of water. Mix flour and salt. Add yeast mixture and malt mixture, and enough of additional 1¼ cups water to make fairly stiff dough.

Let this dough rise, covered, until doubled. Put 1 gallon of water on to boil and dissolve ⅓ cup malt syrup in it.

Grease 12x18-inch cookie sheet, or 2 smaller ones. Form risen dough into 3 big balls. Round each, and let it rest.

Flatten balls one by one and cut into 4 pieces. Shape each piece into ball (round it by rolling under your cupped hand). Let balls rest briefly and then poke your thumb through their middles, twirling each new bagel on your thumb to enlarge hole until it is about 1½ inches in diameter. Preheat oven to 425 degrees F.

Let the bagels rest for about 5 minutes, then place in boiling malted water. Cook 2 or 3 at a time and adjust heat so that water is simmering all the time.

Bagels will sink, then rise in a few seconds — if they don't sink, they rested too long. No harm done, just turn over so that both sides get wet. After a minute in water, remove them with a slotted spoon, garnish if desired, and place them an inch apart on a greased cookie sheet.

Bake at once, about 35 minutes, turning bagels over at halfway point if they haven't browned evenly.

To garnish: Use sesame seeds, poppy seeds, sauteed minced onion (with or without garlic) or caraway seeds.

Either dip boiled but unbaked bagel in topping and place on cookie sheet with coated side down, or wash tops of bagels before baking with mixture of ½ beaten egg and 2 tablespoons water, then sprinkle with chosen garnish. The wash makes even ungarnished bagels shiny.

(From "Laurel's Kitchen Bread Book.")

BAGEL CHIPS

6 bagels
About 6 tablespoons melted butter or margarine
Seasoned salt or herb mix

With serrated knife, slice each bagel into 4 thin rounds. Lay rounds in single layer on 12x15-inch baking sheet. Bake, uncovered, in 300 degree F oven, turning once until rounds are dry throughout and begin to brown, about 10 to 20 minutes. Check them frequently after 10 minutes because they can rapidly get too brown, Schnitzer advised.

Brush tops of rounds with butter and sprinkle lightly with salt. Bake until butter soaks into rounds, about 3 to 5 minutes.

Turn slices over; brush tops with remaining butter and sprinkle lightly with salt. Continue baking for 3 to 5 minutes.

MIDNIGHT

John Gromek shops at night "when I get off work and I'm hungry. ... I get off work late at lot, and a lot of times we eat late."

Although he does most of his heavy shopping during the day, he said he does a lot of "in and out" shopping late at night.

BEVERLY SMOTHERS had a more immediate reason for a recent late-night shopping trip. "I wouldn't be shopping late if it wasn't for my husband's having the munchies ... burritos, jelly rolls, chip and dip and sodas — the necessities of life."

Robin Smith, a musician who is "used to being up" said he was "out getting some stuff for shrimp creole..."

Convenience and well-stocked shelves are not the only attractions of late-night shopping. Romance has been known to bloom on supermarket aisles. Chad Todd and Joanne Franco met March 22 while doing a little midnight shopping.

"I saw her," Todd said. "She was standing by the cheese, I walked by her and thought how nice she looked."

"It was around 12 or 12:30 p.m.," Ms. Franco said. "We kept staring at each other and smiling and I wondered if we were going to say 'Hi' to one another. He even made sure to get in the same checkout line as I did."

"She was at the counter checking out and I smiled at her big time," said Todd.

"I was in front of him in line, so I went outside and waited to see if he would come out and talk to me," said Ms. Franco. "He did and we exchanged phone numbers and we've been together ever since. I think we've even been down here (Albertson's) shopping two or three times since then."

Todd added, "We're even going to church together now."

WHAT'S COOKING

Woman enjoys cooking for crowds

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article is the second on women employed with Community and Senior Services of Midland.

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Mercedes Juarez, known to her friends as "Marcella," has been cooking up a storm in the kitchen of the Community and Senior Services of Midland for four months. A Midlander since she was five years old, Marcella said cooking and working for the community are two skills which came naturally to her.

"I started working when I was eight years old, and I have been cooking since I can remember," she said. Marcella cooks from 8:30 a.m.-12:30 p.m. weekdays for senior programs. She was hired under the auspices of the Senior Texas Employment Program which provides training and employment for older citizens. It is a federally state-funded program, according to Connie Glover, associate director of Community and Senior Services.

Part of Marcella's duties include cooking the meals for all the elderly nutrition programs. "We provide all the meals for the senior programs, including the Senior Center and Casa de Amigos," Ms. Glover said. "Plus, we provide the meals for the home delivery progams such as Meals on Wheels weekdays and Share-A-Meal on weekends," she said.

Ms. Glover said they provide an average of 100 meals per day for the elderly services plus 160 meals per day for the home delivery programs. "We also provide about 50 meals per day for the weekend programs," she said.

All the hustle and bustle of cooking for so many people doesn't faze Ms. Juarez, who said she likes all aspects of cooking. "I enjoy everything in the kitchen — cooking, cutting onions, even cleaning up," she said.

George Wolf Reporter-Telegram
Mercedes "Marcella" Juarez

Even after spending four hours cooking and cleaning up the kitchen in the morning, Ms. Juarez is likely to return home and cook some more. "I make my own tortillas from scratch and enjoy cooking for my family," she said.

Ms. Juarez also prepares food for large family gatherings and celebrations. Some traditional foods she cooks includes a rice dish for weddings. She also makes bunelos, a fried dough pancake sprinkled with cinnamon and sugar, served at Christmas and New Year's.

"The bunelo dough is from the same dough recipe used for tortillas," she said. She also makes a special dish for Lent, in which the bunelos are broken into pieces and served with syrup and raisins.

Although she has other hobbies, such as embroidery and gardening, Ms. Juarez said the kitchen is her favorite place to be. "I make cakes for my great grandson, who I have raised since he was two months old," she said. "I just stay in the kitchen all the time."

Ms. Juarez included some of her favorite recipes.

Tex-Mex barrier broken by adding fine wines

New York Times News Service

AUSTIN — In the last decade, Texas, the land of chili, beef and Tex-Mex food, has gained renown as a center of sophisticated Southwestern cuisine and for its budding wine industry.

And for many of the 1,200 food lovers who converged on Austin last weekend for the fourth annual Hill Country Wine and Food Festival, it was considered a victory that smoked shrimp quesadillas could co-exist with cheese enchiladas, and chenin blanc with Lone Star beer.

Gaining such acceptance was not easy in this state that guards its traditions as zealously as it did the Alamo.

At festival seminars held Saturday at the Four Seasons Hotel, food and wine writers and professionals chronicled, among other things, the culture shock that Texans experienced as they were confronted with new and different foods and drinks.

Oddly enough, Texans traditionally have drawn their first line of resistance against the cuisine of Mexico's interior, whose traditions have inspired the five Texas chefs — Stephan Pyles, Dean Fearing, Robert Del Grande, Anne Lindsay Greer and Bruce Auden — who are generally credited with shaping the new regional cuisine.

At one seminar, "Olla Podrida: A Highly Seasoned View of the Spanish-Mexican Influence on Texas Cuisine Paired with Hill Country Wines," the moderator, David Rosengarten, a New York food and wine writer, conceded that the average New Yorker probably thought "mole" was a small animal and a "tomatillo" a tiny tomato.

While it was agreed that such confusion over chili-based mole sauce and a green tomato might be an understandable lapse for a Yankee, such culinary ignorance on the part of a Texan, particularly of the food of a gastronomic ancestor, was more difficult to forgive.

And yet that is precisely what restaurateurs said they encountered when they tried to introduce Mexican food into the Texas market 15 years ago.

Texans, it seems, have never taken too kindly to anyone messing with Tex-Mex, a bastardized version of Mexican cuisine characterized chiefly by the taco and the cheese enchilada.

Today black beans and cilantro play active supporting roles on Southwestern plates, but in the 1970s, when Cappy Lawton tried to sell black beans at his San Antonio restaurant, nobody ate them.

"And when one of my customers tasted cilantro for the first time," he said, "she declared it to be the worst parsley she'd ever tasted. Another woman took a bite of it and ran out of the restaurant, screaming that she had been poisoned."

DEAR GRANDMOTHERS: Please don't play favorites. If you buy a gift for the children of your daughter, please buy a gift of equal value for the children of your son. These children are cousins, and cousins play together, and when they see the expensive toys, books and clothing that Grandma has given their cousins, they become jealous because Grandma has never given them such grand gifts. She gives them cheap little trinkets — or nothing at all.

I am the mother of the cousins who get very little from Grandma, and I have looked into the sad eyes of my children when we visit their cousins who have been showered with expensive gifts from Grandma. It is always the daughter's children who are favored. I have friends who are in the same situation, so I am not imagining this.

I realize that there are some grandmothers who are fair to all their grandchildren, but I am sorry to say that they are the exception.

I hope that this letter will cause the grandmothers who are guilty of this kind of favoritism to change their ways. Most children don't "need" anything — but they are hurt when their cousins always get the peaches and they get the pits.

Thanks for listening. — YOUR SON'S WIFE

DEAR ABBY: We have a very kindly neighbor who makes jellies and jams all summer long and gives them out to everyone she knows. We appreciate her generosity; however, we do not eat her gifts because she doesn't can properly. She just cooks the fruit and puts it in any old glass jars she has around. She doesn't sterilize them — no seal, no waterbath, nothing. Of course, most of it is already spoiling by the time her neighbors get it.

Our concern is that she puts so much effort into it, we haven't the heart to tell her she might poison someone — much less tell a 60-year-old woman that she doesn't know how to can properly.

Please help us, as she is such a dear sweet friend. — ELSIE AND LOUISE (NOT OUR REAL NAMES)

DEAR ELSIE AND LOUISE: Can't you offer to "help" her can one day? Then introduce her to some "newfangled ideas" such as special jars, sterilized sealing, waterbath, etc.? You would be doing her an enormous favor and, who knows, you might even save a life!

Oat bran called 'wonder food'

Associated Press

People are eating oat bran as well as talking about the latest "wonder food" that promises to lower cholesterol. And the benefits of oat bran are a fact, not a fad.

Last year the American Medical Association reported that a diet high in oat bran, a rich source of soluble fiber, can significantly reduce blood cholesterol levels. According to a report in Ladies' Home Journal, researchers believe that soluble fiber somehow binds with cholesterol in the digestive tract, preventing it from being absorbed.

Experts also say that adding 50 to 100 grams (13 to 23 cups) of oat bran daily to a low-fat diet can lower cholesterol by 3 to 15 percent.

Here are some easy ways to add oat bran to basic, favorite recipes:

Try stirring ⅔-cup of oat bran into 6 to 8 ounces of stuffing mix. Add ⅓ cup of oat bran to one pound ground beef for meatloaf, or add ⅓-cup to a 14-ounce gingerbread-cake mix. Toss ¼-cup of oat bran into 2 cups prepared mashed potatoes, or 2¼-cups quick biscuit mix, or 8 ounces of corn muffin mix. Try sprinkling a tablespoon of oat bran on a cup of low-fat yogurt. Or, create a topping for cooked vegetables by mixing ¼-cup oat bran, ¼-cup plain bread-crumbs, 1 tablespoon of chopped fresh parsley, salt and pepper.

Oats also make fine breakfast cereals. Look for old-fashioned or quick cooking rolled oats, which are made by steaming and rolling oat grains. Also try steel-cut oats, produced by slicing oat kernels into thin pieces and processing them with a small amount of heat. Oatmeal, the most familiar breakfast cereal, has less soluble fiber than regular oat bran, but it is nevertheless a good source.

Mushrooms versatile, from side dishes to main courses

By JAN STEPHENSON
Copley News Service

Mushrooms always have been somewhat dangerous, but popular, foods.

In ancient times, they were considered "food of the gods." In Rome, it was against the law for common people to eat — or even touch — mushrooms. Ironically, a large number of deaths among the Roman upper class were attributed to eating poisonous mushrooms.

There is not a tried-and-true rule to tell the difference between poisonous and safe mushrooms. People who hunt for mushrooms often only seek out specific types that they know well.

The official policy for many horticulturists is that no one should hunt mushrooms. David Robson, a horticulture extension adviser at the University of Illinois, said even experts have made mistakes and become sick or died from eating poisonous mushrooms.

Nature plays funny tricks on mushroom hunters. The morel, for example, is one of the most distinctive types, with a cream-colored contiguous stem that is hollow. Yet there are several types of dangerous look-alikes called false morels. The only differences between the real morel and the false is in the stem. A false morel does not have a stem that is contiguous with the cap and the stem is not hollow.

If you decide to mushroom hunt, go with someone with experience. Fresh mushrooms, just from the woods, can have a great flavor. But they are not worth getting sick over.

ONCE ON the dinner table, though, mushrooms are taking center stage — no longer content to be just a minor ingredient in American meals. These exotic, elegant vegetables are playing new dramatic roles in our meal planning, whether as an appetizer, side dish, salad or the main course.

Walk into any grocery store and the reason behind this new appreciation of mushrooms becomes apparent: So many kinds of mushrooms are available. Only a few years ago, shoppers were limited to buying dried mushrooms or hoping to find fresh ones during the few months they were in season. Now, thanks to the worldwide cultivation of mushrooms, you can buy many fresh varieties year-round.

Even though many types of mushrooms are available fresh, dried mushrooms still offer a flavor alternative for soups and sauces or for when the fresh just can't be found. Dried mushrooms tend to have a more intense taste which could overpower delicate foods, so be careful when you use them.

If you buy dried mushrooms, store them in a tightly covered container to maintain their flavor and keep in a dry place.

To reconstitute dried mushrooms, soak them in warm (not hot) water to cover for 15 to 30 minutes. The liquid, if strained, makes excellent soup.

Incredibly versatile, mushrooms can be used for almost any part of the meal (except, perhaps, dessert). They can add a new dimension to omelets, provide more flavor to tempting appetizers and soups, and excite both the eyes and taste buds as the main course.

WHEN SHOPPING for fresh mushrooms, check that they are moist, not mushy. If they seem too dry, that means they may have been refrigerated too long and may have lost some of their flavor. To double check, smell them if you can. For most varieties, look for an earthy, woodsy or mushroomy smell.

One exception to that rule is the enokidake (en-oh-kee-DAH-kay) mushroom. Often called enoki, this white, shiny-capped cultivated variety has an uncharacteristic odor and flavor. Enokidakes are not earthy-tasting in the way of most mushrooms, but instead are rather acid and fruity.

When shopping for enokidakes, press on the plastic containers to feel that the mushrooms are firm, not slimy, and buy only those with clean, white caps. Enokidakes can be stored in the refrigerator in their original wrapping up to four or five days. These tiny mushrooms can even be eaten raw, as one would use sprouts.

Enokidakes, once just the garnish of nouvelle cuisine, add a rather grapelike fruitiness to soups and salads.

This salad goes especially well with a light dinner or with other simply seasoned foods.

SALAD OF ENOKIDAKE, CUCUMBER AND ONION

2 (3½-ounce) packages enokidakes
3 unwaxed cucumbers, or 1 English hothouse cucumber
3 tablespoons lemon juice
1½ teaspoons sugar
¼ teaspoon salt, to taste
¼ cup sour cream
White onion, thinly sliced, to taste

Rinse enokidakes; pat dry. Trim off ½-inch of heavy base, then halve stems crosswise.

Scrub cucumbers well. You don't have to peel these, as the dark peel can add a nice accent to the dish. Seed, if necessary. Slice into fine julienne slices about the size of the mushrooms. Toss both mushrooms and cucumbers into a serving dish.

To make dressing, stir together lemon juice, sugar and salt in bowl. Blend in sour cream. Just before serving, add thin slices of white onion.

Drizzle dressing over vegetables, then garnish with clipped scallion or red pepper.

(Adapted from Elizabeth Schneider's "Uncommon Fruits & Vegetables: A Commonsense Guide.")

Just mention the word "morel" (mo-REL) to mushroom lovers, and you'll see their eyes light up and a smile begin to take shape. Even the most unpoetic begin to rhapsodize about the "taste of autumn" in the morel, the "flavor of hazelnuts ... nutmeg. ..." Morels are available fresh from March through May throughout the United States.

Unfortunately, morels have resisted all of man's efforts to cultivate them and remain only a seasonal treat. However, morels are available year-round in dried form.

To make the most out of the morel's legendary flavor, this simple appetizer is offered.

BUTTER-FRIED MORELS

Handful of crackers, crushed 12 to 14 morels
1 egg mixed with water for an egg wash
Butter to cook in

Crush handful of cracker crumbs. Set aside.

Heat butter in pan over medium heat until melted.

While this is heating, make an egg wash out of egg mixed with a touch of water. Dip morels in egg wash, then roll in crackers.

Place cracker-coated morels in butter, cook until cracker mixture begins to brown.

Morels, like many varieties of mushrooms, are perfectly complemented by butter and cream. Another favorite is a morel pasta dish, which uses a basic cream sauce flavored by morels and meat stock. Top off your favorite kinds of pasta and enjoy.

CREAMY MOREL SAUCE

4 shallots, chopped
12 to 14 morels
3 tablespoons butter
2 cups veal (or chicken) stock
Salt and pepper to taste
½ cup heavy cream
½ cup white wine

Melt 1 tablespoon butter in medium-to-large saucepan over medium heat. Add shallots. Cook shallots until they begin to become clear, then add morels.

Add white wine to mixture and saute morels. Allow this to continue to cook for a few minutes, stirring until amount of liquid reduces by about half.

Add veal stock, continue to cook, stirring until amount of liquid again reduces by half.

Add cream. Reduce, stirring, until sauce begins to thicken. Whisk in remaining 2 tablespoons butter. Add salt and pepper to taste and toss over pasta.

Many kinds of large, capped mushrooms can be cut into steaks and grilled just like beef. Big caps tend to hold their shape well and add a new dimension to grilled food.

You don't have to hunt for mushrooms yourself to enjoy them on the grill. Oyster mushrooms, sometimes called the "shellfish of the woods," can be found in some supermarkets and are great on the grill. Oyster mushrooms, both wild and cultivated, are available year-round. When you shop for them, look for silky downed, evenly colored caps. Oyster mushrooms can also be used as replacement for button mushrooms in almost any recipe.

GRILLED MUSHROOMS

1 pound large mushrooms, caps only; use those with firm, unbroken edges
4 to 5 tablespoons walnut oil
¼ cup extra virgin olive oil
Sea salt or lemon juice
Freshly ground black pepper, to taste

When grill is almost ready, wipe mushroom caps clean with damp paper towel.

Place walnut oil in small bowl. Dip each mushroom in oil, shake lightly to remove any extra and place on hot grill. Grill about 3 minutes on each side.

To serve, drizzle the caps with olive oil and sprinkle with sea salt — or if you prefer, lemon juice. Pepper to taste.

Note: If you don't want to invest in walnut oil, a very light olive oil will do. However, the flavor will not be comparable. Sea salt gives a taste of the ocean to the caps, and isn't as "salty" as table salt.

The acid, fruity taste of enokitake mushrooms adds flavor to this salad of cucumbers and onion, garnished with red pepper and mint leaves.

Mushroom soup always has been a part of American cuisine — one that many of us eat only when it's used as a base for a tuna or green bean casserole.

Once you've tasted this one, however, you'll never think of mushroom soup the same way again. The exotic mushrooms bring a woodsy, full flavor to the soup that is perfectly complemented by the nutty wild rice. Add a salad and some fresh bread or rolls and you'll have the perfect light supper. This soup also makes a a great appetizer.

If you can, try to include some shiitake mushrooms in the soup. Shiitakes (shee-TAH-kay) have an especially rich, meaty flavor that will enrich the soup, and they are available year-round in their cultivated form. When shopping for shiitakes, look for a firm, dryish mushroom with a distinct odor. Shiitakes may keep for up to a week in the refrigerator.

EXOTIC MUSHROOM SOUP

1 cup wild rice
6 shallots, sliced thinly
1 carrot, roughly chopped
5 tablespoons unsalted butter
½ pound white mushrooms, sliced
2½ quarts unsalted chicken broth
¾ to 1 pound of mixed exotic mushrooms, such as shiitake, oyster and chanterelle (slice if large, leave whole if small)
½ cup cognac, Calvados or brandy for deglazing
2 to 3 teaspoons fresh thyme
1 teaspoon chopped fresh savory
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
White pepper and salt, to taste
Chives for garnish

If time allows, soak rice in very warm water for several hours, until grains begin to split.

In very large saucepan or skillet that has cover, heat 2 tablespoons butter and saute shallots and carrots for 2 minutes. Add white mushrooms and saute until tender.

Deglaze pan with ¾ cup of chicken broth and reduce heat to low. Cover. Allow to simmer for 5 minutes.

In separate covered stockpot, warm remaining chicken broth.

Once broth has simmered 5 minutes, puree mushroom mixture in food processor or blender while adding 1½ cups warmed broth in ½-cup increments. Return pureed mixture to stockpot and continue heating.

In saute pan or skillet heat remaining 3 tablespoons butter and saute exotic mushrooms until they just begin to brown.

Deglaze pan with cognac. Add to stockpot.

Add rice, chopped herbs, salt and pepper to stockpot. Simmer, covered, until rice is fully cooked.

Serve garnished with sprinkling of chopped chives.

Proper care, use of mushrooms advised

New York Times News Service

There is definitely a right way to use mushrooms, so here's some specific advice:

Mushrooms are at their best for only a day or two following harvest, so plan to use them immediately after purchase for best quality.

Never cook fresh, light-colored mushrooms in an aluminum pan. It will discolor them. Keep sliced fresh mushrooms white by sprinkling with lemon juice.

There's no reason to peel fresh mushrooms. It makes one cringe to think of all that marvelous mushroom flavor being trimmed away. In fact, most of a mushroom's flavor is packed close to the skin of the cap, so don't even think of peeling it. Simply wash by wiping with a damp cloth or rinsing briefly under running water. Dry immediately with a paper towel. Never soak fresh mushrooms, or they will become waterlogged and soggy.

Dried mushrooms are easier to keep on hand, and have a much longer shelf-life than do their fresh counterparts. To reconstitute, soak in lukewarm water to cover for one-half to about four hours. Three ounces dried mushrooms will re-constitute to about one pound.

Fresh mushrooms will absorb water, which dilutes their flavor, so instead of washing them under running water, I wet a soft brush and brush them clean or dampen a paper towel and wipe them off.

When buying mushrooms, look for moist, not mushy, mushrooms. If they look mushy, they have begun to decompose.

Smell them. If they have an earthy, woodsy or mushroomy fragrance, chances are they are fresh. However, if the odor is unpleasant, don't buy it. But keep sniffing. Other mushrooms may be OK.

Plan to use mushrooms as soon as you can — and after they are picked.

Ideally, you should buy only as many mushrooms as you intend to cook that day. Mushrooms may be kept in a paper bag — never in a plastic bag — in the refrigerator. But only for a few days. Put the bag on a plate and do not put anything on the bag. Many mushrooms are fragile.

To store them for a longer period of time, sauteé them and place them in labeled freezer bags. Press as much air as possible out of the containers before sealing them. Frozen mushrooms will last a year in the freezer.

One of the burning issues in mushroomdom is whether to wash them. Anti-washers contend mushrooms soak up water when washed. Pro-washers argue it doesn't impair their flavor.

Probably the best way to clean them is take a soft, moist rag and go over them lightly.

Remove the stem if the mushroom is the kind that sits squarely on its stem — as in meadow mushrooms, shiitake or boletes. Other mushrooms are left whole.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East

Opening lead: Three of ◇

When you have a choice of finesses, how do you know which one to take? In his lesson series, Eddie Kantar presents a simple rule: When you need only one finesse and you are missing the queen in one suit and the king in another, play the ace-king of the suit in which you are missing the queen and, if the queen doesn't drop, take the finesse in the other suit. He gives this example.

The bidding is simple enough. North simply adds his 10 points to partner's announced 16–18 and, with a balanced hand and no four-card major, proceeds directly to his goal.

Note West's lead of his fourth-best diamond, not the queen, which might be right against a suit contract. East wins the ace and returns the four, the correct way to show an original holding of four cards in the suit. Declarer wins and, with only seven fast winners, has to decide which black-suit to tackle to develop the extra tricks he needs.

It might seem natural to go after clubs first, since you have nine cards in that suit as against only seven in spades. Indeed, in duplicate pairs, where overtricks matter, it is probably the line you should adopt. But at rubber bridge you can combine your chances and significantly increase the odds of bringing home the contract. Following Kantar's rule, you should first cash the ace-king of spades. If you are lucky, as is the case here, the queen will fall and you have nine tricks. That's about a 16 percent chance, nothing to be sneezed at. If her majesty doesn't appear, you fall back on the club finesse and are no worse off.

Coroner rules Abbie Hoffman died from combination drugs, alcohol

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — A coroner ruled Abbie Hoffman died from a combination of drugs and alcohol but his brother insisted the 1960s radical's death was an accident rather than a suicidal surrender.

"I just think he took a little too many (pills) and he took a good slug of booze," Jack Hoffman said. "My brother had a very strong love and affection for me and he wouldn't have left me alone like this."

Abbie Hoffman, 52, was found dead at his home near New Hope, Pa., on April 12. A peace march and memorial service were planned for today in Worcester, where he was born Abbot Hoffman, the son of a pharmaceutical supplies salesman.

"I want it to be a celebration," said Jack Hoffman at a news conference Tuesday in this Massachusetts city 40 miles west of Boston. "I want everybody to be singing and swinging and swaying."

The peace march from their childhood home to the service at Temple Emanuel, which Hoffman attended as a child, was to be led by folksinger Pete Seeger.

Thomas Rosko, Bucks County, Pa., coroner, ruled that Hoffman's death was a suicide caused by an overdose of barbiturates mixed with alcohol.

"I can only conclude that he took a huge amount of pills all at once," he said.

Rosko said he detected about four to five grams of phenobarbital in Hoffman's stomach, the equivalent of about 150 pills, several times the lethal dose even without the presence of alcohol. In addition, Rosko said, Hoffman's blood alcohol level was 0.20, twice the legal limit in Pennsylvania.

But Jack Hoffman denied his brother was suicidal, despite having earlier admitted that founder of the Yippie movement had been showing signs of disenchantment in recent months.

Hoffman was a manic-depressive who often washed down medication with whiskey, his brother said.

"Abbie, as many of you know, was somewhat careless with pills and we always warned him about this kind of thing," he said.

Abbie Hoffman rose to prominence with the Chicago Seven, a group of radicals tried on charges of conspiring to disrupt the 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago.

He went underground in 1974 to avoid trial on cocaine possession charges and emerged nearly seven years later, saying he had lived in upstate New York and undergone plastic surgery.

Reynolds

In fact, The Palm Beach Post reports he hasn't voted since 1980 and is a registered Democrat.

"The issue is: What does a person consider himself?" said Reynolds' agent David Gershenson. "If he's technically registered as a Democrat, I know he considers himself a Republican."

Reynolds was invited to the Quayle barbecue in North Palm Beach but sent his regrets because he was taping his "B.L. Stryker" television series.

Despite a Post story saying Reynolds was a Democrat, he told Jupiter Mayor Mary Hinton that he was a Republican.

Publicist Kenny Miller said Reynolds registered in Palm Beach as a Democrat in 1980 to vote for Jimmy Carter because he got to know the former governor while making movies in Georgia.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Impressionist George Kirby says he usually imitates the stars of yesteryear because the voices of today's celebrities lack character and cannot be easily distinguished.

Kirby said method-acting has replaced the melodrama that actors once lent to their speech.

"There are no more Sydney Greenstreets, Peter Lorres, Jimmy Cagneys or Jimmy Stewarts," said Kirby, who is appearing in Atlantic City through May 1.

"If you took three of the old-timers and put them behind a door and let them talk you can tell which is which," Kirby said. "But today you put three actors in that room and you can't tell them apart — except for Arnold Schwarzenegger."

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor James Woods is getting married next month after a long romance with a woman he met at a gas station.

"He said he liked my truck," said Sarah Owen, 26, of their chance meeting at a Chevron station on Sunset Boulevard in Los Angeles several years ago.

Woods, 42, a rising star of movies and television, pulled up in his black Porsche while Miss Owen said she drove her "old pickup truck with a bale of hay in the back."

"He said he was thinking of getting a truck and he liked mine...a really bad line," said Miss Owen, a co-owner of an import business.

"I mean I had about as much need for a truck as a platypus has for jumping shoes," Woods recalled during a stop in New York this week to preview "My Name is Bill W," a made-for-TV movie about the founder of Alcoholics Anonymous that will be broadcast April 30 on ABC-TV.

The couple already has moved the date of the wedding several times and has yet to commit to an exact date or location. It will be the second marriage for Woods but the first for Miss Owens.

"I always let my car go right down to empty now because its good luck to me, obviously," he said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jon Provost, child star of the "Lassie" television show of three decades ago, will soon start filming a new version of the long-popular TV series for broadcast next fall, playing an uncle of the dog's young masters.

Now 39 and a real estate agent in Santa Rosa, Calif., Provost was a surprise visitor at the preview Tuesday of a new exhibition celebrating 50 years of American television. The yearlong show opens today at the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum of American History.

Touring the exhibit of 200 artifacts and more than 100 photographs tracing the history of U.S. television, Provost paused for a nostalgic look at the costume he wore as Timmy in the original "Lassie" series.

Provost had made a gift to the Smithsonian of the red-checkered sports shirt, blue jeans and black-topped tennis shoes he wore on the show from 1957 until 1964. The actor was 7 years old when he began filming the series, and quit the show when he was 14.

"It really was a thrill to be asked to donate them to the Smithsonian," he said.

Provost said he will play an uncle on the new syndicated "Lassie" show, which will star Dee Wallace Stone and her real-life husband, Christopher Stone, as the parents.

Passover anticipated for its special traditional foods

By MARILYN BOESKY
Copley News Service

The most vivid memories of cherished holidays are studded with the aromas and tastes of family celebrations. For many ethnic groups, holidays are one of the strongest ties binding them to their heritage and traditions.

As a child, the memories of potato pancakes sizzling in the frying pan, the lighting of the menorah at Hanukkah, dipping apples into honey for a sweet new year at Rosh Hashana, lighting ceremonial candles before the traditional Sabbath meal, and family and friends gathering to sing festive songs all were images of holidays past and yet to come.

The table-centered rituals and the traditional foods re-create the folk history and culinary knowledge that have been passed from generation to generation.

Passover is one of the most eagerly awaited Jewish holidays because of its special foods. Originally, it was a nature festival celebrated by nomadic desert Jews, then a spring grain observance and, later still, a freedom celebration.

The word Passover refers to the passing over the homes of the Jews by the Angel of Death during the 10th and final plague. These plagues were imposed upon the Egyptians by God to induce the pharaoh to free the Jews from slavery. The final plague was the slaying of the firstborn.

PASSOVER COMMEMORATES the liberation of the Jews from bondage in Egypt and proclaims that every man has a right to freedom. It is the oldest festival of liberty in the annals of civilization.

The Passover ceremony is called the Seder (meaning order) and is performed from details fixed by law and custom. It is a king's banquet spiced with song and ceremony. The first sip of wine, the first bite of matzo, the tartness of the saltwater and the eye-watering, bitter horseradish all renew the ancient spell.

During the Seder, everyone joins in the discussion of the events and miracles connected with the exodus from Egypt. The text of the service, the benedictions to be said, the songs to be sung, the questions to be asked by the children (the Ma Nishtana ... "Why is this night different from all other nights?") and the answers given by adults are found in a special book called "Haggadah." The name Haggadah means "the telling," reflecting the biblical command, "You shall tell" the story of the liberation from bondage (Exodus 13:8).

The traditional "Haggadah" incorporates Jewish history, folklore and song. Some of its texts and rituals are ancient, linked to observance in Jerusalem more 2,000 years ago, and some recently added, such as reading about the Holocaust and adding the Matzo of Hope as a symbol for Soviet Jewry. Passover is the only Jewish holiday celebrated with a home service.

FOR PASSOVER purists some things never change — from start to finish — the same meal that has worked a special holiday magic for generations. The table is always set with the ceremonial Seder plate containing the symbols of the holiday. Also on the table are bowls of saltwater representing the tears shed and a glass of wine for Elijah. This symbol of hope is placed in the center of the table. It is not filled until the conclusion of the meal. When it is filled, the door is opened for the coming of the prophet Elijah, who will bring with him a more perfect world.

The Jewish home is a showcase of Jewish culinary art, although the only truly Jewish foods are those served ritually to commemorate religious feasts. "Jewish food" is a conglomerate of dishes from Germany to Syria and Poland to Tunisia, adopted by Jews while living in other lands. It has developed gradually as a result of the combination of dietary laws, festival customs, historical and socioeconomic influences.

Specific dishes differ widely, not only in preparation, but also in use, so that a food that is popular among Jews whose ancestors came from one part of the world is utterly unknown to other Jews. For example, there are Ashkenazic Jews who were from Eastern Europe and the Sephardic Jews who fled the Spanish Inquistion in the late 15th century.

The new immigrants brought foods from their own countries and changed them to conform to local tradition and products. While adapting the dishes of the new county to the dietary laws, the Jews enriched the local cuisine with their ancestral culinary customs. The Italian Jews never heard of gefilte fish, but used muggine in bianco (jellied striped bass) for Passover.

During the eight days of Passover, all products with any type of leavening are forbidden.

"Seven days you shall eat unleavened bread," Exodus 13:6-7.

This includes every kind of cereal, baking powder and yeast. This is defined as all five varieties of grains, wheat, barley, rye, spelt and oats, or any form of these grains to which a leavening agent has been added or that has come in contact with liquid for 18 minutes (the amount of time it takes for the mixture to start to ferment and rise).

MATZO, UNLEAVENED and quickly baked, represents the Jews fleeing from Egypt in the desert who did not have time for the bread to rise and bake properly.

Each civilization has left its mark on the customs and foods of the Seder. During Passover, the Sephardic eat all vegetables, rice and legumes. Ashkenazim do not earn corn, mustard, peanuts, beans and peas. They also refrain from lentils, chick-peas and other dried beans. The Jews of America may have different Passover tables based on their ancestors' country or origin.

Haroset recipes best demonstrate how Jewish cookery was changed by the emigrations of the Jews. Gastronomically, the most interesting cuisine is Sephardic. It changes according to the country and sometimes even the city of origin.

On the island of Rhodes, dates, walnuts, ginger and sweet wine are used in haroset. In Salonika, raisins are added and Turkish Jews include an orange. Egyptians eat dates, nuts, raisins and sugar without the ginger and wine. The Yemenites use chopped dates and figs, coriander and chili pepper.

An interesting haroset from Venice has chestnut paste and apricots, while one from Surinam, Dutch Guiana, calls for seven fruits, including coconut. Each Israeli used the Diaspora haroset recipe of his ancestors that might include pignolia, peanuts, bananas, apples, dates, sesame seeds, matzo meal and red wine.

Most people like their haroset recipe so well that it is not only spread on matzo and dipped in horseradish at the Seder table, but also eaten as a snack throughout the holiday.

EVERY JEWISH mother has recipes that have been passed from generation to generation. Adhering to the Old World ways in preparing treasured family recipes is a ritual. But today you can achieve a variety of new culinary adventures and still keep that same traditional flavor.

From my grandmother, I have inherited a love and respect for the Jewish tradition; from my mother I have learned a love for traditional cooking with the help of modern conveniences.

A chicken soup recipe always contains a secret ingredient that makes it unique. Add the brown skin of an onion for deeper color, a sweet potato for fuller flavor, season with dill, parsley or another favorite fresh herb, strain the soup clear or put the cooked vegetables through a blender and add to the broth to thicken and add flavor and texture.

The same secrets are true of the matzo ball recipe; whether the eggs should be separated or added whole, add parsley, paprika, ginger, onion or ground almonds. Should the matzo balls be heavy, as in the famous recipe of Israeli Premier Golda Meir, or light and fluffy? It's all a matter of taste and what we have been used to throughout the years.

Passover is one of the most eagerly awaited Jewish holidays because of its special foods like these traditional favorites — Gefilte Fish Loaf and Crown Roast of Lamb.

Food and its preparation for the holidays are one of the ways of retaining a heritage. Every dish evokes nostalgia and praise for the favorite dishes of generations, and that first bite always starts a new culinary adventure. Each year we try new recipes but repeat old favorites that everyone looks foward to eating again and again.

Good cooking is an art form, and as such it requires freedom and imagination in order to be expressed fully. As you try these recipes, realize that there is more to the heritage than a cuisine. It is the life and character of culture and there are as many traditional recipes as there are countries that house Jews.

GEFILTE FISH LOAF

3 pounds firm, white-fleshed fish fillets, such as halibut, cod, swordfish or any mixture of fish
1 large onion, coarsely chopped
2 carrots, finely grated
3 teaspoons coarse (kosher) salt
2 eggs
1 teaspoon white pepper
⅓ cup ice water
1 teaspoon sugar
4 tablespoons matzo meal
1 to 2 tablespoons freshly grated horseradish, or bottled horseradish, well-drained
⅓ cup fresh dill, snipped, or 1½ tablespoons dried dill

Cut fish into small chunks and place in large mixing bowl. Add onion and chill.

Grate carrots. Place in pan of cold water with 1 teaspoon salt. Bring to boil, blanch for 2 minutes and drain, refreshing with cold water to stop cooking. Drain and reserve. Beat eggs and combine with ice water and sugar.

Using food processor, puree fish and onion in batches, adding eggs, ice water and sugar to each batch. Puree until smooth. Do not overprocess or mixture will become very sticky. Mix all ingredients together, adding remaining 2 teaspoons salt, matzo meal, pepper and horseradish. Correct seasonings, if necessary.

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Place about a third of fish mixture in smaller bowl and fold dill into it. Add drained carrots to mixture in larger bowl. Stir gently to blend.

Lightly oil 5x9-inch loaf pan. Oil sheet of waxed paper and place in a loaf pan, oiled side up so that it covers bottom and long sides with generous overhang. Layer fish into pan as follows: First put in half of fish/carrot mixture, lightly smoothing surface. Add all of dill-flecked mixture and remaining carrot mixture. Fold overhanging waxed paper over to cover top of loaf. Set loaf pan into large baking pan in water bath of simmering water coming halfway up sides.

Bake 50 to 60 minutes or until center of loaf is firm to touch. Fish will have given off liquid during baking. Take loaf pan out of water bath and cool loaf for few minutes in pan. Run sharp knife around sides and reverse pan onto cooling rack set over dish. Remove pan and paper.

Collect juices and either baste loaf as it cools or chill juices until jellied, then chop jelly and serve it as a garnish around loaf. Serve either chilled or warm.

If not serving immediately, cool and wrap in foil. May be refrigerated up to 3 days.

MATZO BALLS

4 eggs, slightly beaten
4 tablespoons chicken fat
1 to 1¼ cup matzo meal
2 teaspoons salt
4 tablespoons chicken soup
4 quarts salted water

In medium bowl, beat eggs and fat together. Stir in matzo meal and salt. Add chicken soup. Refrigerate for 1 hour or more until liquid is absorbed. Moisten hands with water and make balls approximately 1½ inches in diameter.

In 6-quart pot with lid, bring salted water to boil. Reduce water to simmer and drop in matzo balls.

Cover pot and cook just at simmer for 20 minutes. Do not take lid off during cooking or you will boil instead of steaming matzo balls.

FRESH BEET AND WALNUT SALAD

DRESSING:
½ cup heavy cream, whipped
3 teaspoons dry mustard
2 teaspoons lemon juice
2 teaspoons sugar
Salt and pepper to taste
2 tablespoons vinegar
¼ cup salad oil
¼ cup olive oil
SALAD:
4 large fresh beets, cooked and julienned
Bunch of chives, minced
½ cup walnuts, chopped
1 head lettuce
1 hard-boiled egg, sieved

Dressing: Reserving oils, mix all other ingredients together. Mix 2 oils together and slowly beat into cream mixture. Do not worry, it looks very odd but it tastes wonderful!

Salad: Mix beets, chives and walnuts together. Add enough dressing just to coat. Place lettuce leaves on plate. Add scoop of beet mixture, sprinkle with egg.

LEMON BISCUITS

8 tablespoons margarine
½ cup sugar
1 egg, beaten
Grated rind and juice of ½ lemon
¾ cup fine matzo meal
½ teaspoon potato starch
1 cup ground almonds

Cream together margarine and sugar; add egg, lemon juice and rind. Fold in matzo meal, potato starch and almonds. Roll into 8 small balls and flatten each with fork. Bake in oven on greased cookie sheet at 350 degrees for 30 minutes. (This mixture can be rolled out between two sheets of waxed paper to be used as pastry dough.)

MATZO SPINACH STUFFING

7 matzos
1 cup orange juice
2 stalks celery, diced
2 onions, chopped
¼ cup parsley, minced
1 tablespoon chicken fat
½ cup nuts, chopped
½ orange, coarsely chopped, or a small can of mandarin oranges
1 pound spinach, cooked, drained and chopped
2 eggs, beaten
Salt and pepper to taste

Crumble matzos. Pour orange juice over matzos and set aside for liquid to be absorbed.

Saute celery, onion and parsley in chicken fat.

Mix all ingredients together in bowl. Place in 9x12-inch baking pan.

Bake in 350 degrees oven for 50 minutes.

PASSOVER BROWNIES

1 cup sugar
¼ cup oil
2 eggs, beaten
6 tablespoons cocoa
¼ cup liquid black coffee
Dash of salt
¼ cup cake meal
¼ cup potato starch
1 cup chopped nuts

Cream sugar and oil. Add eggs. Make paste of cocoa and black coffee. Add remaining ingredients. Pour into a greased 9x12-inch pan. Bake at 325 degrees for 25 to 30 minutes.

PASSOVER TOFFEE SQUARES

1 cup margarine or butter
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
½ teaspoon salt
1 egg, beaten
1 cup matzo cake meal
8 ounces milk chocolate, melted
1 cup walnuts or pecans, chopped

Yields about 3½ dozen squares.

Cream butter, sugar, vanilla and salt until light and fluffy. Mix in egg, beating well. Add cake meal; dough should be stiff. Lightly grease a cookie sheet. Spread dough evenly on cookie sheet. Bake at 350, 20 to 25 minutes. Spread with melted chocolate, sprinkle with nuts and press in. Cut into squares before completely cool.

CHOCOLATE-DIPPED STRAWBERRIES AND DRIED APRICOTS

16 ounces semisweet chocolate, diced
2 baskets strawberries
2 cups dried apricots

Melt chocolate in top of double boiler over warm water. Dip each strawberry and dried apricot into melted chocolate, letting excess chocolate drip back into pan. Keep chocolate at 84 degrees by setting pan periodically over warm water. Place fruit on waxed paper-lined baking sheet and let chocolate set in refrigerator.

ISRAELI WINE FLOAT

2 cups sweet Passover wine
1 stick cinnamon
½ cup sugar
3 tablespoons potato starch
Juice of 1 lemon
3 egg whites

In medium saucepan, bring wine, water and stick cinnamon to boil. Mix together sugar, potato starch and lemon juice until potato starch is dissolved. Stir potato starch mixture into wine; continue to cook over low heat, stirring constantly until thick and clear. Remove from heat and discard cinnamon stick.

Beat egg whites until stiff. Fold stiffly beaten egg whites into a third of the warm, not hot, wine mixture. Divide remaining wine mixture into 4 individual glasses or large bowl. Put large dollops of egg whites on wine mixture. Chill before serving.

Corley already turning wheels at Midland High

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Davis Corley won't officially become Midland High's head football coach until the school board meeting on April 25, but his wheels are already turning.

Since the important three-week spring training period begins May 1 for the Bulldogs, Corley faces a quick transition from the Doug McCutchen regime, but he expects a "smooth" change in the power structure.

McCutchen resigned Monday as the head coach of Midland High after five seasons to become head coach at Duncanville. Corley, who came to Midland with McCutchen as defensive coordinator, will be recommended to the school board on April 25 as McCutchen's replacement. That action is expected to be a mere formality.

"Basically, we are going to continue doing the things that we have been successful doing," said Corley. "We've had success throwing the football and we are going to continue to do that. I know we have a couple of good quarterbacks coming back."

Corley is already at work on filling his staff. He has three positions to fill since McCutchen is taking with him Greg Manship and Randy Quisenberry to Duncanville. Manship's last day is Friday, but Quisenberry will be asked to stay in Midland until May 1 when TEAMS testing is completed. McCutchen's last official day at MHS is also Friday.

"We have a number of coaches staying on the staff, so I expect a smooth transition," said Corley. "I've talked to every one on the staff and have no reason to believe that the transition period will produce any problems. We might have to change around some of the coaching duties, but new offensive coach will have different terminology and that is about all I expect to change.

"I've already talked with several coaches who knew Doug and are doing the same kind of things he was doing here on offense, so I don't expect any problems in finding a coach that will be familiar with the Houston Veer-type offense.

"I'm sure any new coach we bring in, will have different terminology that the kids won't be familiar with, but that's a problem that can be handled quickly."

Corley will continue to work close with the defense, much the same way Midland Lee's Earl Miller did when he took the Rebel post three years ago.

This is, however, Corley's first head coaching position, but that doesn't concern Midland athletic director Gil Bartosh.

"Davis has always had a lot of responsibility in all the places he has coached and he has coached on both sides of the football," said Bartosh. "We feel like he will be an excellent coach and the kids can really relate to him."

Corley currently has five assistant coaches in Johnny Williams, Bernie Hagins, Rick Wood, Jim Raughton and Monty Stumbaugh. Williams is the head track coach at MHS and has had head coaching experience in football. Hagins also has been a head football coach and works with Williams in track. Stumbaugh is head girls track coach and Raughton is junior varsity basketball coach. Wood is the JV baseball coach.

The McCutchen-Corley ties go back a long way. Both began first grade together in Bronte and went on to play football at Texas Tech in 1968. Corley played at defensive end and tackle at Tech while McCutchen became a 1,000-yard rusher for the Red Raiders.

Bulldog playoff hopes now slim

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — The Abilene Cooper Cougars secured their second place standing in the District 4-5A baseball race with a 5-4 win over Midland High Tuesday.

The Bulldogs suffered four errors to help the Cooper cause.

Cooper moved to 8-2 in district, one-half game behind Odessa Permian which was idle Tuesday. Midland High fell to 14-5, 5-4, three games out of first, and 2½ games behind a playoff berth second place.

"We just couldn't put them away," MHS head coach Tim Whalen said. "We scored four runs and (the errors) added to their situation. We had several opportunities. If we make the plays (on the errors), they don't score."

COOPER LED off the scoring in the second when David Cedillo came home on a bases-loaded Scotty Pugh smash to shortstop.

With the score 1-0, Midland High struck back in the top of the third when Dorey Thompson tripled, driving in Scott Melzer, who had reached on a bunt single.

The Cougars struck again in the bottom of the third, scoring two runs when Scott North and Blaine Frazier scored.

Cooper left eight runners in scoring on base in the first three innings.

The 'Dogs tied it in the top of the fourth, scoring two runs on a Kevin Rychel single, a Will Sowders double and Jason Stone triple.

In the fifth, centerfielder Tony Perez scored from second on a single by Sowders.

Cooper scored its final two runs in the bottom of the fourth when Pugh scored on a suicide squeeze after a Kyle Heller bunt. Courtesy runner Lance Galbreath scored on an error by centerfielder Perez for the final 5-4 margin.

"I don't have any idea," Whalen said, concerning the Bulldogs' chances at making the playoffs. "We have to sit back and pray now and hope someone upsets the apple cart," meaning Cooper.

Midland High will host San Angelo Saturday at Angel Stadium while Cooper travels to Odessa Permian in the district's feature game. At this stage, Midland High finds itself in a position to be pulling for the Panthers.

Angels rally for seven in big ninth

From Staff Reports

WICHITA, Kan. — Trailing 3-0 with one out in the top of the ninth inning, the Midland Angels erupted for seven runs to pull out a 7-3 victory over the Wichita Wranglers here Tuesday night to take over first place in the Texas League West.

Midland looked dead in the water heading into the ninth inning against Wichita starter Omar Oliveres. Oliveres was spinning a nifty two-hitter going into the ninth with the Angels showing only a second inning single by Chris Cron and a bad hop single by Mike Knapp in the third.

Oliveres also faced the minimum number of batters through the first seven innings of play with two double plays behind him and Mark Doran caught stealing in the fifth after a walk.

Oliveres also started the ninth easily, getting Knapp on a fly out, but then disaster struck. The Angels then sent eight men to the plate, producing seven run while chasing Oliveres and another Wichita reliever in the process.

Oliveres must feel there is no justice in the season after losing his first three outings of the year.

In the ninth, Everett Graham and Cron each had two-run doubles to give Midland a 4-3 lead and locked up the victory with an RBI single from Doran and a two-run single by Bob Rose.

Frank DiMichele got his first victory of the season with two innings of scoreless relief. Midland starter Kevin Trudeau pitched six innings before being ejected in the seventh after arguing a strike call by plate umpire Mike Mathison.

Midland is now 7-4 on the season, ½-game ahead of the El Paso Diablos. The Angels were set to face Wichita in a 12:15 p.m. Businessman's Special today.

Sandy Guerrero and Mario Monico drove in two runs each to lead the El Paso Diablos to a 9-3 victory over the San Antonio Missions.

The Diablos had 16 hits and pulled off three double-plays and put the game away in the ninth inning with four runs on hits by Tim Torricelli, D.L. Smith, Frank Mattox and Guerrero.

Johnny Monell hit a two-run double in the seventh inning to give the Jackson Mets a 7-5 Texas League baseball victory over the Tulsa Drillers.

Chuck McGrath scattered five hits to lead Arkansas to a 5-2 win over Shreveport.

Jackson took an early lead after two runs in the first on a triple by Angelo Cuevas and a groundout by Manny Salinas. Mike DeButch's RBI single highlighted a three-run second inning.

Injury deals Lee 3-2 loss

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

This one was what they call "Close, but no cigar."

The Midland Lee Rebels came painfully near to victory, only to be done in by the Abilene High War Eagles, 3-2, Tuesday afternoon at Rebel Field.

The loss moves the Rebels to 5-5 in district, 3½ games behind leader Odessa Permian with two games left; Abilene High is 4-5 in league action, four games back.

To set the stage Tuesday afternoon:

With Abilene High up 3-2 in the bottom of the seventh, the Rebs found themselves in a position of playing catchup ball.

Greg Garrett grounded to second and Todd Overend grounded to the pitcher and Lee found itself with two out and one run down. First baseman Dave Schmidt reached on a single and Ty Chambers walked to put runners at first and second with just one out left for Lee.

B.J. Parrish then stepped up and quickly had two strikes against him. After fouling off four pitches, he grounded to AHS shortstop Trey Forkerway. Forkerway, though, slipped just as he made the pickup, and it appeared as though Parrish just may beat out the throw to first. But then, Parrish pulled up lame, three-quarters of the way to first.

Parrish, who had suffered a hyperextended knee in Saturday's 7-0 win in San Angelo, was unable to make it to first because of the injury. As a result, Forkerway successfully made the throw to first to end the game.

"I was trying to beat out that infield hit and I felt a tear. (Outfielder) Vince (Henderson) told me on the way to first I was falling down. They said if I would have been healthy I would have out run it ... I was three steps from the bag."

It was an excruciating way to lose for Lee, and it was the kind of game Abilene High had been losing as of late. The Eagles, who had not capitalized on several close games, finally won.

Lee shortstop B.J. Parrish ...making throw to first

"We were due a lot of breaks," AHS head coach Brian Burton said. "We finally got a couple. It's good when you work hard and things finally go your way."

Lee head coach Ernie Johnson, frustrated after the loss, blurted out "I think they stole that one from us, don't you?"

Johnson was referring to how the Eagles scored two of their three runs after runners stole second to get in scoring position.

In the first, Abilene High lead off hitter Eric Pyland reached on a walk and stole second before scoring on a Michael Romero grounder.

And in the seventh, pinch hitter Marty Esparza walked, stole second, and came home on and RBI single by Todd Self.

The only run the Eagles scored that didn't steal second was in the fifth when Pyland singled and came home on a Forkerway single.

"We did fairly well," Johnson said, "we just couldn't throw the runners out."

The Eagles had five stolen bases, same as the Rebels. It's just that the Eagles were able to convert those steals into runs.

"It's good to win one of those things," Burton said. "We're a good ball club, we just haven't had a break go our way."

The Rebs scored both runs in the fifth, when Garrett walked and Jason Sever entered as a courtesy runner. Sever stole second and went to third on an overthrow to second on the pickoff attempt by AHS catcher Eric Martinez.

Bush group prepared to write Chiles check

ARLINGTON (AP) — George W. Bush, the managing general partner of the Texas Rangers, said his group will write Eddie Chiles a check on Friday to transfer ownership of the American League franchise.

"It's about an $80 million transaction," Bush said Tuesday. "Eddie's check will be for a lot more than I've got."

American League owners on Tuesday approved the sale of the Rangers to a group headed by Bush and Rusty Rose. Bush said there are 12 major partners and about 20 "small players" in the deal.

He said the current Rangers' front office is safe.

"Mike Stone is the president and chief operating office and I don't intend to do that," Bush said. "Tom Grieve (general manager) is the baseball man and nothing will change there."

Bush said "It's apparent that this is a well run organization and this club is well budgeted. There is a thin line between being a meddlesome owner and someone who shows concern. We hoped to be the concerned type. We will not be hip shooters."

The Rangers are off to a 10-2 start, best in the club's 17-year history.

"I'll take credit for that," Bush quipped.

Bush said he will still work in the oil business besides the hours he puts in with the Rangers. He will have three offices, including one in Arlington Stadium.

"I will still be preoccupied by the energy business and I think politics will still be part of my life," said Bush, son of the President.

Bush would not name all the partners in the Rangers' ownership.

"Some expressed a desire not to be named," Bush said.

Bush said he and Rose will call the shots but added "we're not dictators for life. We can be removed."

He said he and Rose were "stewards of trust" in the agreement.

Asked how he and Rose could be removed if there was a disagreement among the minor partners, Bush admitted "it would take a mighty rebellion inside. It would take major discontent."

Bush said the new owners won't be free spenders.

"Unfortunately, the Texas Rangers are one of the poor boys of baseball," Bush said. "We'll treat this as a business. We'll listen to the experts on the ways to spend money on salaries, etc. But this isn't a toy. It has to be run like a business. The club will have to stand on its own."

Asked about the Rangers' moving some day from their present location, Bush said "actually we may never leave. That's a possibility. We'll just have to see."

Bush said the Rangers want to do a market study survey.

"I've not seen a sophisticated market survey on expanding Arlington Stadium," Bush said.

McCamey names Adair as new football coach

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

MCCAMEY — After a lengthy meeting Monday night, the McCamey school board finally decided on veteran East Texas coach Randy Adair as the Badgers' new head football coach.

Adair, 38, will replace Danny Wilhelm, who was reassigned within the school district after a 5-6, district runner-up season in his only year at the McCamey helm.

The former Howard Payne University defensive back was picked from a group of finalists that included Lamesa head coach Clyde Noonkester, Andrews assistant Mike Lebby, and Odessa Permian aide Mike Stephens. MISD superintendent Bill Little said the board's choice of Adair was reached only after careful deliberation.

"Even though it was a unanimous vote, it was a real hard decision," Little said. "The board was very diligent in their effort to pick the right person for the job."

Adair, a 1973 Howard Payne graduate, comes off two years at Class 5A Texas High in Texarkana. His two-year record was 1-19, but Texas High has a far smaller enrollment than District 13-5A rivals Longview, Tyler John Tyler, and Lufkin. The Tigers have been hampered by the recent growth of Liberty-Eylau and Pleasant Grove, both within the Texarkana city limits.

Adair was scheduled to be reassigned at Texas High for the final two years of his contract.

Before surfacing at Texas High, Adair guided Class 3A Lindale to the playoffs and also was a head coach at Wills Point for three years.

After winning three letters at Howard Payne, Adair began his coaching career at Leander in suburban Austin. He later served as an assistant at Bryan and White Oak.

Little said Adair has the qualities to maintain McCamey's winning tradition, which included a 10-1 record in Buster Leaf's last season two years ago and a 14-6 loss to highly-regarded Reagan County last season.

"He's very enthusiastic, experienced and mature," the superintendent said. "He's very knowledgeable of the game, and we feel like he's a good man for the community."

Adair, who is scheduled to start at McCamey this coming Monday, spoke briefly to the McCamey football players Tuesday before returning to Texarkana. He was unavailable for comment Tuesday.

Wimbledon adds to purse

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Two decades after it offered prize money for the first time, Wimbledon has become the first $5 million dollar tennis tournament.

Officials of the All-England Lawn Tennis Club that runs the renowned tournament announced Tuesday a 23-percent increase in prize money to $5.3 million this summer.

The previous record for a tennis tournament was last summer's $4.4 million U.S. Open, and Wimbledon officials say they expect the Americans to top their amount when the prizes for the 1989 U.S. tournament are announced next month.

The $5.3 million to be given to players at the 1989 Wimbledon tournament, set from June 26 to July 9, includes $330,000 for the men's winner and $298,000 for the women's champion.

The tournament offered a total of $4.3 million last year, with prizes of $272,000 for men's winner and $245,000 for woman's winner.

Just 21 years ago, when tennis opened to professional and Wimbledon first offered cash prizes, men's champion Rod Laver collected $4,780 and women's titlist Billy Jean King got less than $1,800. The total for the tournament was $63,000.

Schramm trades Cowboys for IFL

NEW YORK (AP) — The man who built America's Team is now going to build Europe's League.

Tex Schramm, the only president the Dallas Cowboys have ever had, made it official Tuesday — he's leaving the Cowboys to take over as president of experimental International Football League, an offshoot of the NFL that both Schramm and NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle insist will be independent.

The announcement came the same day NFL owners approved without a dissenting vote the sale of the Cowboys for $146 million to Jerry Jones, the Arkansas oil millionaire whose insistence on being a hands-on owner — "from socks to jocks" — made Schramm dispensable.

While Schramm is getting support from the NFL and help from a six-man committee that includes Bill Walsh, who recently stepped down as coach of the San Francisco 49ers, he insists the IFL will be independent from its parent body.

"It will be operated at arm's length," Schramm said. "This league will stand on its own feet. It will not be a developmental league and it will not be a minor league. It will have the best players we can have, within financial limitations. The main thing is it must be sound financially."

Schramm's main job will be to answer what Rozelle described as "hundreds of questions" about the new league of 10-12 teams split between Europe and North America.

They include stadium availability, television, conflict with other European sports, obtaining players and the other problems that go into forming a league, including how the fluctuation of the dollar might affect the salaries of American players.

"This is a new era, an era of international growth," Schramm said. "We want to take American football across the water and make it into an international sport."

The NFL has been across the water quite a bit in the past half-decade — this summer the Cleveland Browns and Philadelphia Eagles will play the fourth American Bowl at London's Wembley Stadium and another exhibition in Tokyo. Last season, there was an exhibition game in Sweden and the 49ers are talking about playing in Italy next year.

Moreover, NFL games will be telecast live next season for the first time in England, which in the past has been content to show edited one-hour versions, usually from two days to a week late. Only the Super Bowl has been televised live overseas, the last one to 58 countries.

Tuesday was an emotional day for the 68-year-old Schramm, whose role with the Cowboys has been sharply reduced since Jones bought the team for $146 million in February. The 45-year-old Jones immediately made it clear that he's a hands-on owner, hiring Jimmy Johnson as coach in place of Tom Landry, who had been the Cowboys' only coach.

CORLEY

"I'm just very pleased that Davis is going to be the coach at Midland High," said McCutchen. "He has done a tremendous job here and deserves the chance. Also, this is best for Midland High. The kids know and respect him.

"Even though we go back to the first grade together, this was the first time we've been able to coach together. We have some ties, but with that aside, I still feel he is the best man for the job."

Corley was a graduate assistant during the glory years at Texas A&I when the team won two national championships in 1975 and 1976, coaching the offensive line. He then moved to Jasper as defensive coordinator for five years under Gene Walkoviak, who still coaches at Jasper.

Corley also spent two years as defensive coordinator at Palacios before moving to Midland with McCutchen.

Corley, 38, and wife Eileen have one son, Kurt, 8.

Sever then scored on Ty Chambers' single. Chambers later scored after stealing second, going to third on a wild pitch, and coming home on an error by AHS third baseman Self.

Garrett, the Lee catcher, made a heads up play at the plate to stop what would have been the third run for Abilene in the sixth. Garrett caught a Kyle Greeley pitch in the web of his glove and booted it halfway to the mound. With the runner on third breaking for home, Garrett went after the ball, then retreated for home in time to make a tag on Romero, trying to advance on the errant pitch.

Lee is idle Saturday and will resume action next Tuesday against Permian at Rebel Field.

Witches group says civil rights violated

BOSTON (AP) — A woman appointed the "official witch" of Massachusetts in 1975 has begun a letter-writing campaign to protest what she and other witches believe are violations of their civil rights.

Letters of complaint, stemming from news reports linking a "witch" to a cult of drug smugglers connected with the ritualistic deaths of 15 people near the Texas-Mexico border, have been sent to major newspapers and television networks by Laurie Cabot's Salem-based group, Witches League for Self-Awareness.

"We are not satanists, we do not do black magic or any evil magic," said Cabot, who formed the 900-member group in 1986, shortly after the filming of "The Witches of Eastwick," a movie witches said made them appear stupid.

"We are trying to raise the consciousness of these people so we are not harmed. We need to separate ourselves from this hateful propaganda."

The witches complained they have been "portrayed in an inaccurate, offensive and libelous manner which is in violation of our constitutionally guaranteed civil right to practice religious freedom, as well as freedom from harassment, discrimination, persecution, or the incitement of the public to form adverse opinions of members of a religious community."

In group literature, the league is described as a "national and international anti-defamation organization which is working to protect the civil rights, dignity and public portrayal of over six million witches, pagans and pantheists."

Cabot, dubbed the "official witch" by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, said she and other witches are part of a legally recognized religion that is peaceful and devoid of the evil doings associated with witchcraft stereotypes.

The recent complaints sent to news organizations such as The New York Times, The Associated Press and NBC News stemmed from stories about the murderous cult of drug smugglers in Texas.

Mexican police have called Sara Aldrete Villarreal, the missing 24-year-old college student believed to be one of the cult leaders, a "witch."

Aldrete has been linked to the 15 victims of the cult, some of which were unearthed at a ranch south of the U.S. border last week.

"It's very loose terminology," Cabot said. "These were drug runners. What they were doing had nothing to do with witchcraft. Witchcraft has no evil gods."

Cabot describes witchcraft as a "nature religion" that uses a mixture of astronomy, astrology and psychic powers to heal and make things better. She said they use potions and cast spells to promote well-being and general good.

Witches should not be painted as people who engage in acts of violence such as animal or human sacrifice.

"We have families, we have children. I belong to Kiwanis and the Chamber of Commerce, you know," said Cabot, who once owned a witchcraft store in Salem and is now writing books.

Satanism expert teaches police to spot cult signs

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A Satanism expert is teaching police at a five-day seminar that has drawn about 80 participants to recognize signs of devil worship.

The State Police-sponsored seminar on cults and the occult was planned before the discovery earlier this month of a ritual mass slaying blamed on drug smugglers in Matamoros, Mexico.

Even before that discovery, "we had inquiries from law enforcement groups from throughout the state wanting to know if we had any seminars on the topic," State Police Lt. Dan Ducote said by telephone from Baton Rouge, where the seminar is being held.

"There's a lot of interest. A lot of officers had read in the news media about areas with animal mutilations and such. They wanted some knowledge on how to recognize the signs," said Ducote.

The five-day seminar, which began Monday and involves law enforcement officers from around the state, is taught by Tom Wedge, author of "The Satan Hunter." He has been a guest on several national television talk shows.

"I wanted to know the difference between fact and fiction, what is rumor and what is fact in what is occurring in Satanism," said Trooper Bob Buckley, a homicide investigator.

"I have felt that on two or three major crimes, there was a possibility the suspects were involved in Satanism. I want to be able to go to a scene and tell," Buckley said.

Ducote said devil worship is not illegal. "But most of the activity is a front for dealing in drugs," he said.

Some ministers and businessmen recently announced plans to ask the legislature to outlaw Satanism.

Military base closing plan clears Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the House Armed Services Committee is warning lawmakers not to try any "end runs" around a plan to mothball 86 domestic military bases now that it has cleared Congress.

"It is incumbent upon all of us to make sure this base closing list is implemented, that we not have any end runs in the appropriations process, that we not have any language stuck in some continuing resolution somewhere," Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., told his colleagues Tuesday.

The House, by an overwhelming margin of 381-43, rejected a resolution to disapprove the recommendations of the Base Closure and Realignment Commission.

That meant the recommendations now go into effect. The law creating the commission required that the entire package take effect unless both houses of Congress voted to disapprove it.

But Tuesday's House vote also could set the stage for an appropriations fight, with lawmakers trying to save individual facilities in their home districts. Congress still must appropriate the money for short-term expenses associated with closing the bases.

How Texas bases affected

Associated Press

Here is a list of military installations in Texas affected by the recommendations of the Commission on Base Realignment and Closure, approved Tuesday by the House. The numbers after each installation indicate a loss or gain of jobs and the amount of annual savings where any is expected.

- Bergstrom Air Force Base, reorganized, plus 963.
- Carswell Air Force Base, reorganized, plus 32.
- Fort Bliss, reorganized, minus 321.
- Galveston Naval Station, closed, minus 537, $2.5 million.
- Goodfellow Air Force Base, reorganized, plus 217.
- Ingleside Naval Station, reorganized, plus 876.
- Red River Army Depot, reorganized, plus 63.
- Sheppard Air Force Base, reorganized, plus 865.

In total, the commission's recommendations affect 145 military installations by closing 86, reducing the operations at five and altering the mission of 54 others.

By virtue of its action, the House gave Defense Secretary Dick Cheney the go-ahead to implement the recommendations beginning in January.

Aspin warned that he will be watching carefully to make sure "there's no fooling around with this list," and said any legislative trickery could cause the plan to collapse.

"You cannot end run this list and make an exception in the appropriations process for one base without unraveling the whole package and making a case for other people adding their bases as exceptions," he said. "Pretty quick we're right back where we started from."

In the final hours of debate on the resolution, representatives from New Jersey, Illinois and California argued that the commission overestimated the savings when it said the plan would save $804 million a year at first, and $5.6 billion over a 20-year period.

"In terms of savings, I don't believe they're there. In terms of expenditures, I believe they're underestimated," said Rep. Jim Saxton, D-N.J., who opposed the closing of Fort Dix in his home state.

Saxton cited a report by the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, that said savings in closing Fort Dix had been overestimated by $329 million.

Rep. Terry Bruce, D-Ill., said the estimated savings rely on major defense policy changes, including reductions in personnel, and not on the closing and realigning of bases.

"The whole tone of the commission was based on manipulating data, changing ratings, fudging dollar figures and misleading both Congress and the public," Bruce said.

Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., a member of the House Armed Services Committee, conceded that the GAO reported errors in the committee's work, but said the bottom line was the savings.

NATION IN BRIEF

Contras: Sandinistas killing rebel backers

MIAMI (AP) — Nicaraguan rebel leaders say the leftist government has broken recent peace accords by killing dozens of Contra supporters. The allegation received backing from the human rights group Americas Watch.

"The Sandinista government is massacring supporters of the resistance," Contra director Aristides Sanchez said at the group's Miami headquarters Tuesday. "They are wiping out our entire social base."

With elections approaching, the Contras charged that the Nicaraguan military has been slaughtering between 40 and 50 civilians during the past two months in northern Nicaragua, where the U.S.-backed rebels once found their strongest support.

Sandinista soldiers, the Contras said, killed 13 rebel supporters in the town of Apantillo alone.

In Washington, Americas Watch, which has frequently criticized the Contras, backed up the Contra version of events.

"We have written the Nicaraguan government and are waiting to see what they are doing about this," said spokesman Juan Mendez. "We cannot dismiss them as isolated incidents any more."

Statue set for facelift

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rain, lightning and 125 years have taken such a toll on the giant bronze Statue of Freedom atop the Capitol dome that it will be removed — probably by helicopter — and restored, the Capitol architect says.

The operation will leave a large hole in the top of the lantern which supports the statue on top of the dome. The hole will be fitted with a temporary cover to keep out rain during the six-month long, $250,000 restoration project, according to Architect George White.

But White said the iron dome itself is in excellent condition and needs no major repairs.

The 14,985-pound figure which rises 19 feet six inches from the top of the soaring dome is a symbolic cast-bronze image of a female warrior draped in flowing robes and clasping a sheathed sword.

It has been a Capitol symbol since its head, the last of five sections, was hoisted aloft and bolted in place on Dec. 2, 1863.

"It hasn't been touched since that time," White said.

'Earth Day 1990' planned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Environmentalists are gearing up for an international "Earth Day 1990" that they hope will dwarf the original of 20 years ago, an event that helped make U.S. laws more sensitive to environmental concerns.

"The purpose of Earth Day in 1970 was to organize a nationwide grassroots demonstration of public concern for the environment," former Sen. Gaylord Nelson, who founded the event, said Tuesday. "Though much has been achieved in many areas in the past 20 years, we continue to lose ground in the fight to improve our environment."

Denis Hayes, coordinator of the first Earth Day, and Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass. and Rep. Bill Green, R-N.Y. who were local Earth Day activists 20 years ago, joined Nelson at a news conference to announce plans for the April 22, 1990, event.

Nelson, who now is counselor to the Wilderness Society, called on President Bush to lead other heads of state into a "battle to save the Earth."

Asthmatic child removed

DENTON, Md. (AP) — A 3-year-old girl with chronic asthma is living in a foster home because a judge ruled her parents weren't doing enough to keep her away from cigarette smoke.

Caroline County social workers removed the girl from her parent's home last month and she remains in a foster home. The girl's name was not released.

"It's a critical situation," Circuit Judge J. Owen Wise said during a juvenile court hearing March 17. Wise placed the child under the authority of the social services department.

"It is not something that the social services or the medical people are doing on a whim or caprice. They're afraid she's going to die prematurely and unnecessarily if something isn't done," Wise said.

Wise said the parents could regain custody of their daughter if they make changes in their lives. He granted them full visitation rights.

The child was admitted to a hospital near her home on Maryland's eastern shore, across the Chesapeake Bay from Baltimore, at least half a dozen times over the past year or so, and on two occasions was transferred to Johns Hopkins University Hospital in Baltimore.

Fire, explosion break out

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Fire broke out aboard the Navy battleship USS Iowa after an explosion this morning, officials said.

The explosion at occurred about 10 a.m. on one of the battleship's 16-inch gun turrets as the ship was taking part in a gunnery exercise about 330 miles northeast of Puerto Rico, Atlantic Fleet spokesman Lt. Commander Steve Burnett said.

The extent of damage and injuries was not known, Burnett said.

Vice president says relationship with Aquino strained

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Philippines Vice President Salvador Laurel said Tuesday his relations with President Corazon Aquino have become so strained that she refused to accept a message he tried three times to deliver to her from dying ex-president Ferdinand Marcos.

Laurel, who visited Marcos in a Honolulu hospital in early February, said in an interview with the Hearst Washington Bureau that the ailing Marcos told him to relay a message to Aquino "that could help bring about national reconciliation."

The vice president, who resigned his cabinet post as foreign secretary in a sharp break with Aquino last September, said that when he returned to Manila from his visit with Marcos, "I called up for a three-minute appointment with Cory. I called three times and she wouldn't accept the call."

Laurel refused to discuss the contents of the message.

He said Marcos is only a shadow of his former self, probably will not survive for more than another 60 days, and should be allowed to die in the Philippines.

"I support the right of Marcos to return not only for burial. As a human being and a Filipino, he has that right under all existing laws. It is the right of every human being to return home not only to die but to face his accusers," Laurel said.

He also declared that even though Marcos' wife Imelda is under a U.S. federal court indictment and not allowed to leave the United States, "as a matter of principle, she should be allowed to return home to witness the burial of her husband."

Laurel said, however, he does not believe Aquino will allow Marcos to return or be buried in his homeland and predicted that such a decision would set off a "very strong clamor" in the Philippines.

He said Marcos has "less than a 10 percent chance to survive," citing the former president's congestive heart failure, collapsed lungs, kidney transplant and an enlargement of his brain due to excess fluids.

In 1985, Laurel was nominated by the UNIDO (United Nationalist Democratic Organization) to run for president against Marcos, but less than a year later withdrew his candidacy in favor of Aquino, who defeated Marcos despite the ex-president's efforts to rig the elections.

In the 1986 elections, Laurel was chosen vice president and appointed prime minister and foreign secretary.

But a month later, Aquino abolished the post of prime minister and in September 1987 citing fundamental differences with her, Laurel resigned from the cabinet. He retains the post of vice president but rarely even speaks to Aquino, he said.

Ross Kapstein, foreground, and students Russell Malone, top guitar, and Alan Feingold on keyboard, use a "rap" video in Kapstein's class at King Middle School in Atlanta to teach economics.

Teacher gets kids rappin' economics with 'Run G.N.P.'

ATLANTA (AP) — Ross Kapstein has been teaching long enough to know that kids aren't exactly wild about learning economics, so he decided to present the dismal science with rap.

Kapstein, a performer and manager in the music business during his 18 years as a public school teacher, wrote and recorded "RUN G.N.P.," a rappin' tribute to the joys of economics.

He also had some of his students at Martin Luther King Jr. Middle School make a video version of the song. Kapstein uses both as motivational tools to make economics less imposing to his students.

Instead of using a textbook's dull words, Kapstein said, teachers could better introduce young students to economic concepts with such lines as:

"Try to maximize profits
"Minimize costs
"That's what I'm tryin' to do
"Increase productivity
"Improve the quality
"So I can bring the best product to you."

Or, this explanation of supply and demand:

"Now, when resources get scarce
"Or demand increases
"The price of goods rise
"It rarely decreases.
"People's tastes change
"And so do I
"If I want to stay in business
"I'd better comply."

And, you can dance to it.

"I thought it was a good idea in this day and age, when kids can rap and memorize pages and pages of (entertainment) information, why not do something educational to go along with it," Kapstein said in a recent interview.

Kapstein, 40, recorded the song — the title of which was inspired by rap stars RUN D.M.C. — with a small group of professional musicians. He hopes to release it for other teachers to use.

> "I've always been into motivating the kids through music."
>
> — Ross Kapstein
> economics teacher

The video, set in a city park, has the ragged feel of a home movie, but Kapstein said he'd like to make a more polished version if he can obtain money to cover production costs.

Kapstein believes that if his musical efforts are successful, students will be more inclined toward economics when they reach high school.

"Kids in high school really put it off. It's something that really has a low priority," Kapstein said. "We try to dispel the myths, so it's not a terrible monster."

Kapstein said the seeds of his idea were planted a couple of years ago when he enrolled in a program at Georgia State University's Center for Business and Economic Education that stressed creative and unusual approaches to teaching.

Mixing music and economics was a natural for him, Kapstein said.

"I've always been into motivating the kids through music," said Kapstein, who in the 1970s managed the career of blues singer Willie Guy Rainey, who has since died.

"I used to bring in Willie Guy during black history month, and he was the most effective," he said.

Kapstein said he has other ideas, but for now he's waiting to see if "RUN G.N.P." catches on.

"If things take off, I'll be turning out songs like crazy," he said.

Auxilian Diana Cobb sings to patient Kelly Philips and his wife June at Brazosport Memorial Hospital in Lake Jackson. Cobb has been singing to patients every Sunday since November.

Singer volunteers to comfort patients

LAKE JACKSON, Texas (AP) — Jean Engibous was in church when she first heard the clear sound of Diana Cobb's voice.

The voice so impressed her that Engibous approached Cobb about singing at the convention of the Brazosport Hospital Auxiliary, of which she is past-president and chairman of patient courtesies.

After the convention, the beauty of Cobb's voice remained with Engibous. It reminded her of when she was a patient in Switzerland, and how voices of nurses-in-training and retired nurses filled the hospital as they roamed the halls singing.

Engibous remembered how touched she felt by the nurses' comforting voices and songs, and she and thought patients at Brazosport Memorial Hospital might appreciate the same experience.

Engibous soon discussed the possibility of Cobb singing to patients in the hospital. In order to be allowed in the rooms, Cobb became a member of the auxiliary.

For Cobb, who had a yearning to spread her ministry, becoming a member of the auxiliary "was wonderful for me, because I love being able to work with people."

Cobb says her visits with patients are a "small way that I can do something for some of the people. If it helps them get through this time in life then maybe it's something the Lord wants me to do."

"It's a very special talent she has," says Engibous.

Cobb began singing 25 years ago with the choir of First Baptist Church in Lake Jackson. The director, recognizing Cobb's talent, encouraged her to develop her gift, and she eventually began singing solo.

Dressed in the pink jumper worn by auxilians, Cobb has been making her hospital rounds since November. She spends two hours every Sunday evening singing to, saying prayers with, or just visiting patients.

"Most of the people are receptive," she says. If patients are too ill to want anyone in their rooms, Cobb respects their privacy. "But some people want at least to hold hands for a while and have someone to smile at them, and to tell them that I care for them."

She says about 95 percent of the people she sings for request the hymn, "Amazing Grace."

Cobb especially remembers her visit with a very old woman who was near death.

"I sang at the Christmas tree dedication...and it wasn't my time to come or anything, but I felt very, very impressed to go sing to this lady. I went up there, and she was still coherent and I sang for her. She was just very receptive to it.

"She passed away that night. I feel like because I was really listening to the Lord's call in my life...that it maybe brought a little bit of comfort to her."

Some days, Cobb says, "I come in here with a real whirly attitude. I'm tired. I really don't need to spend all Sunday evening here. I have a family of my own or I wish I was home watching TV.

"The minute I step into a patient's room, it's gone...I'm so glad I have the opportunity to do this."

Nurses and doctors also are receptive to Cobb's visits.

"Last week I had a doctor come in while I was singing, and he could very easily interrupt me and say his time is valuable, which it is, but he just stayed back until I finished with the patient. I think they realize I'm trying to meet the needs of the patients like they are."

The intensive care ward is the hardest, Cobb says, "it just breaks your heart. Even if a person is comatose I'll go in and touch their hand and say a little prayer over them and just talk to them for a second. We don't know what they can understand or what they can hear or what their spirit can feel."

During the week Cobb keeps herself busy working as a secretary for Dow Chemical Co.

Lamar County community's name restored after years as 'alias'

PINHOOK, Texas (AP) — If you drive out on Farm Road 195 northeast of Paris, you'll see newly erected signs marking the southwest and northeast limits of the Pinhook community.

The signs replace those that identified the community as "Faulkner" for nearly 40 years, and according to some residents, put to rest a disagreement over the name of the community.

The community, 18 miles northeast of Paris, was given the name Pinhook when pioneers settled there. It led a quiet existence for more than 100 years, suffering a few disparaging remarks about its uncommon name.

But around 1950, some residents decided the name Pinhook wasn't very dignified, so they renamed the community Faulkner for a man who once operated a cotton gin there. Residents petitioned the Texas Highway Department to change to highway signs, and the deed was done. But it wasn't over.

"There has been a lot of sabre-rattling between the natives of the community in recent years," says lifelong Pinhook resident Jesse Swindle. "There were some hard feelings at times, and a lot of discussion. But hopefully this (name change) will end all the strife."

Action taken by the Lamar County Commissioners Court in December officially renamed the community Pinhook. County Judge Robert Burns then forwarded a request to the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation for new signs to be erected, completing the action.

The Pinhook community's tranquil existence has seldom been interrupted, except for the fact that it first was a part of Miller County, Ark., and then part of Red River County when Texas claimed the area south of the Red River from Arkansas. Finally, Pinhook became a part of Lamar County when the county boundaries were set for the northeastern region of Texas.

Pinhook was the original name of the settlement of Paris before it became the county seat of Lamar County. Those officials named the town Paris and left the name Pinhook available for the small settlement near the Red River.

The community was settled "sometime between 1800 and 1850," according to historical reports. It was a thriving community during the early history of Texas. The first-known group of French immigrants to Texas settled only three miles from Pinhook along the Red River in the early 1800s, only to be killed by Indians who claimed the territory.

Fish fans work for dream aquarium

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Fish don't swim lazily in aquariums in the Raymond Dow home anymore.

These days there's not even a fish tank in the Brawner Parkway home that the 75-year-old Dow shares with his wife, Betty.

It wasn't always that way.

During the 1950s, the couple, who helped spearhead the formation of the first aquarium organization in the city, boasted an aquarium in almost every room of their house.

"At one time," recalled Dow, one of the first presidents of the Corpus Christi Aquarium Society, "we had an entire room with nothing but fish in it...Later, after we couldn't get anywhere with getting a public aquarium, we kinda burned out on fish. We got rid of 'em in 1962, when our interests changed."

But the Dows' dream for a public aquarium, which the first aquarium society pursued for nearly a decade, lived on.

Other supporters in subsequent aquarium organizations carried the banner over the next three decades before finally hammering out compromises to obtain the aquarium the Dows dreamed of on Corpus Christi Beach.

Today, the organization that is directing and building the aquarium is known as the Texas State Aquarium Association.

In July 1990, the first structure — the Gulf of Mexico exhibit building — will open in the long-awaited $60 million Texas State Aquarium.

The multimillion-dollar aquarium is a far cry from the modest $4 million to $5 million project first conceived in 1978 for the Peoples Street T-Head.

However, the genesis of what could become a world-class tourist attraction began in early 1952, when the Dows visited the now-closed Young-Wise Feed Store to buy tropical fish.

"Betty and I actually started the whole thing, but it was a notice that Lorena Jessup put up at the store that got us going," Dow said. The notice called for a meeting of aquarium lovers.

"Other people soon joined us, and we put a notice in the paper, and some 75 to 80 people attended that first meeting," he said.

"We incorporated and even published a paper called the Fish every month," Dow said. "We went to aquarium shows all over the state and had a state convention here."

Dow recalled efforts by the society to secure municipal funding for the aquarium. "We couldn't even get a penny out of the city," he said, "but nowadays the city gives them (aquarium association) millions of dollars."

The society at one time even asked the Nueces County Park Board to buy a building on Padre Island for $4,300 to house about 20 fish-filled tanks. Other ideas surfaced in succeeding years, but nearly a decade passed before the next serious aquarium attempt was launched and money was raised for a feasibility study.

Jack Solka, an architect and active aquarium volunteer, recalled that he first became involved in 1968 as a member of the Jaycees organization.

"About 10 years ago, the current aquarium association was established, and now the dream is coming true," Solka said.

Today, the aquarium project, which first had a price tag of $5,000 when it was to be located on the Peoples Street T-Head, has blossomed into a four-phase, multi-million-dollar, high-tech project spread over the south end of Corpus Christi Beach.

But the proposed project has been beset by a succession of problems.

Support and criticism began on a small scale with the first proposed site on Padre Island and later Port Aransas. The battle then shifted to a much-criticized proposed setting on the Peoples Street T-Head; then to a proposed location on an ill-fated, landmass scheme in Corpus Christi Marina; and finally to its present site on Corpus Christi Beach.

Even the final choice of a future home on the beach generated controversy before the matter finally was resolved in court in a settlement between the city and Helen Royal, who owned a home and motel near the aquarium site on Corpus Christi Beach.

With an estimated 600,000 visitors expected to flock to the Texas State Aquarium annually, its economic impact to the area is expected to be more than $25 million a year, based on anticipated sales-tax revenue, said Rob Earley, president of the Corpus Christi Area Convention & Visitors Bureau.

Construction on the first of four phases — the Jesse H. and Mary Gibbs Jones Gulf of Mexico Exhibit Building — is under way, with all but $6.2 million of the $31.5 million cost in hand, said Quenton Dokken, president of the Texas State Aquarium Association.

Fund-raising efforts are continuing statewide to raise the $6.2 million, preferably by September or October, Dokken said.

Expansion of the project also was made possible with support from the city of Corpus Christi and private donors around the state. Private sector contributions total more than $10.6 million, and the city has invested $14.5 million in the project.

Dokken said other increases in the projected cost are associated with the higher costs of the infrastructure and property needed for the site.

Mexicans still fighting over land

By ANA PUGA
Hearst News Service

LAS MARGARITAS, Mexico — Much of the land the men of southern Mexico are willing to kill and die for is ocher, dry and almost barren.

The earth of the Pacific coastal town of Las Margaritas, in the southernmost state of Chiapas, is too played out to offer much more than cattle pasture.

But, like many Mexicans, the peasant farmers in this community of 6,000 have been reduced to fighting over scraps of parched earth. Many are so desperate they attack small landowners, hoping to win a tiny plot of their own on which to plant just enough corn and beans to feed their children.

Sixteen people have been killed in land disputes in Chiapas so far this year. Several hundred died in land disputes during the six-year administration of President Miguel de la Madrid, whose term ended last December.

After 72 years, the battle cry of the Mexican Revolution — "Tierra y Libertad" (Land and Liberty) — still pits thousands of landless peasants nationwide against a sprinkling of wealthy landowners.

The new governor of Chiapas, Patrocinio Gonzalez Garrido, has pledged to break up the large estates and distribute small plots to the peasants as promised in the Mexican Constitution of 1917. But there simply is not enough good land to go around.

"A FEW FAMILIES still hold vast amounts of land, under several different names," said Gonzalez Garrido. "But many peasant farmers who are tired of fighting through the courts are now going for the smaller, weaker landowners because they don't dare attack the really powerful, big landowners."

In Las Margaritas, for example, Antonio Medina, a 55-year-old landowner, was killed in a February battle with peasants. But he was not one of the big feudalist land barons, called "caciques."

"My husband died for 23 hectares of land and 45 cows," said Manuela Morales, Medina's widow, as she sat in a rocker on the back porch of her relatively comfortable bungalow. "He died defending what was his."

Medina was a typical small Mexican landowner. He inherited his 23-hectare plot (about 57 acres) from his father and left it to his children.

On his land, Medina planted mangos, which often blew away in the brutal coastal winds, and grazed his cattle.

But to the local peasant farmers, Medina seemed rich. He had orchards, milk and beef in a village where many families only own a few chickens and a rooster. He had a sturdy brick house in a village of mostly wooden shacks. And he had well-dressed, well-fed children in a village where barefoot toddlers, potbellied from malnutrition, play in the dirt roads.

Desperate for a plot of land of their own, the peasant farmers began to subject Medina to an increasingly popular protest tactic. Several dozen men gathered on his ranch, locked his cattle in the corral and blocked Medina and his wife from releasing the cows to graze.

AFTER FOUR DAYS, Medina, worried that his cows would starve, rounded up at least a dozen fellow landowners to face down the hundred or so peasant farmers at the corral gates. In the confrontation that followed, Medina and eight peasant farmers were shot and killed.

While the landowners say they shot "the invaders" in self-defense, the landless peasants call the incident a "massacre."

A widow of one of the slain peasants, Maria Lopez, 28, said she'll continue the struggle to fulfill her dead husband's dream of owning his own 10-hectare plot.

"My husband worked for years planting rice and beans and corn, and he was tired of being like a slave to the rich," Lopez said.

She and her husband belonged to a group of 96 peasants that has been fighting for land in this area of Chiapas since 1981. So far, the peasants have obtained 76 hectares, less than one hectare per person, through the courts.

One peasant leader, Isidro Soliz Cortez, admits that the peasants' methods — threatening landowners and occupying their land — are illegal. But the methods are necessary, he said, because the government cannot be counted on to enforce the law. He said wealthy landowners often thwart the peasants' constitutional right to a plot of land by bribing judges to avoid having their estates expropriated. The powerful land barons often use their clout to have peasants imprisoned and use the police to break up protests, he said.

GOV. GONZALEZ Garrido, 53, a native of Chiapas who speaks English fluently and earned a doctorate in economics from Cambridge University in England, has repeatedly vowed to enforce land reform. President Carlos Salinas de Gortari appointed him in January to succeed a governor whose brothers are among the state's wealthiest and most powerful landowners.

"The revolution has put 60 percent of the land of this state in the hands of the peasant farmer. And we will not rest until every peasant farmer has the land he is entitled to," Gonzalez Garrido recently told a group of several hundred Indian peasant farmers assembled to hear him speak in the highland Chiapas city of San Cristobal.
