EASTLAND COUNTY, Gorman
Following is a report of activities in the Kirk Field at Gorman for Saturday, July 10:

Touring the fields Friday afternoon this reporter stopped by the Wrather Penn and Walters set up on their No. 1 Well where they are drilling at 2718 feet. All the crews in this field have been unusually courteous and helpful while we are making the rounds, but this outfit seemed just a little extra. They went all out to explain everything that might help us in making our report. We go on record here and now that all such treatment does not go unnoticed nor unrewarded insofar as we may be able to reciprocate to any of these boys. Thank you "Rough necks."

France and Gillespie No. 1 McMullen drilling at 2750 in hard lime. No showing has been reported as yet.

Mellard and Clemens No. 1 Pete Mauney still WOC.

Eastland Loses To Dublin; Will Protest Ruling

The Eastland baseball club returned home defeated from Dublin yesterday after one of the season's best and most protested games, with a score of 4 to 2.

The trouble started in the 4th inning when Eastland was ahead 2 to 0. Dublin's bases were loaded when Paul Campbell, made a wild pitch, making the ball bounce into the catchers mitt. The Dublin batter stepped in front of the ball, causing it to hit him. The umpire sent the Dublin man out of the game but did not send the runner back to third.

Eastland's hitting was some of the season's best with averages much higher than usual. J. D. White got 3 out of 4 times at Bat; C. Beck 2 for 4; Button for 4; R. Beck 1 for 4; Campbell, 3 for 4; Blair 2 for 4; and Brashier 1 for 4.

The Eastland's club next scheduled game will be De Leon at De Leon next Sunday.

Farm land values in the U. S. went up seven percent in the year ending March 1, 1948, to equal the record high point of 1920.

TRUMAN NOT EAGER TO RUN WITH BARKLEY; DOUGLAS OUT

Laney Selected By Southerners As Their Choice

PHILADELPHIA, July 12 (UP)—Leaders of the Southern revolt against President Truman and his civil rights program today boomed Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas as the Democratic Presidential nomination.

A committee chosen to select an "anti-civil rights" candidate settled on the 51-year-old Laney after a heated three-hour session which broke up after midnight.

Their choice still must be okayed by a caucus, perhaps later today, of various Southern delegations to the Democratic National Convention.

Roosevelt And Californians To Support Truman

PHILADELPHIA, July 12 (UP)—James Roosevelt and 48 other California delegates to the Democratic National Convention said today they would vote for the nomination of President Truman at this time.

The action apparently marked the end of any organized resistance to Mr. Truman's nomination.

Thirteen delegates passed, indicating they had not yet made up their minds.

California has 54 convention votes divided between 62 delegates.

All four entered not guilty pleas at their arraignment in federal court here. Federal Judge B. J. J. Laws set Nov. 15 as the date for the opening of their trials. They were released on $2,500 bond each.

TENTATIVE PLATFORM DRAFT IS COMPLETED; DELEGATIONS WAIT

RUMOR SAYS SOKOLOVSKY IS RECALLED

BERLIN, July 12 (UP)—High level talks on Germany, plus a stubborn rumor that Marshal Vasily D. Sokolovsky had been relieved of his Russian command here, indicated today that the Berlin crisis might be coming to a head.

The wait for the Russian answer to the three-power demand for removal of the Berlin blockade was producing signs of impatience if not anxiety in some quarters. This was the last day of a full week since the protest was made. Lewis Douglas, U. S. Ambassador to Great Britain, expected to fly back to London today after a quick trip here for talks with Gen. Lucius D. Clay, Robert Murphy and other American officials. He said on his arrival yesterday he would discuss the Berlin blockade over the dinner table at Clay's residence last night.

Douglas, U. S. representative at the London conference which drafted plans for a separate government in Western Germany, said he had no idea when a Russian reply to the three power protest might be expected.

Simultaneously Gen. Sir Brian Robertson, the British military governor, flew to London for urgent conferences on the Berlin crisis. He had no comment when he landed at Londo last night.

Romance Revived After Lapse Of Fifty Years

AUBURN, N. Y. (UP)—A romance, interrupted by a lovers' quarrel 50 years ago, has been climaxed in marriage.

The bride, Mrs. Bertha Swain, formerly of Auburn, flew the Atlantic to England to marry E. R. Swain, her sweetheart of a half-century ago.

It was her third marriage.

The couple had been engaged when they were in service together as housemaid and butler but there was a misunderstanding. They parted and the girl came to the United States, relatives here said.

Some time ago Swain, twice a widower, met a brother of his early love and a letter of reunion followed.

BULLETIN — PHILADELPHIA, July 12, (UP)
The preliminary draft of the Democratic platform was reported today to call for outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley Labor Law, which was enacted originally over President Truman's veto.

PHILADELPHIA — Democratic platform writers today completed the tentative draft of a "Roosevelt-Truman" party platform which "glories in our accomplishments of the past 16 years."

The drafters, headed by Sen. Francis J. Myers, D., Pa., whipped the document into shape in a gruelling night session. They broke up at 3:30 in tight-lipped silence on specific plans.

"It is a platform that sets forth the things we have fought for during the past 16 years," Myers said. "But I couldn't give out the things that were done because they are only recommendations that could be torn apart."

He brushed aside all questions as to how his subcommittee had handled question on racial rights, Palestine and the Taft-Hartley Act — the issues that threaten to provoke convention battles.

Myers "Roosevelt-Truman" description of the proposed platform brought no comfort to southerners who are in open revolt against Mr. Truman's civil rights program. Some Southern delegations were waiting for a look at the civil rights plank before deciding whether to back Mr. Truman's nomination or bolt the convention.

Texans May Bolt
PHILADELPHIA — The Texas delegation to the Democratic convention was scheduled to vote today on a resolution to bolt the Democratic Party if President Truman is named the party's 1948 standard bearer.

First, however, the delegation will wait for a look at a report from a resolutions subcommittee drafting the party platform to see what it says about civil rights and tides.

If the platform is not to their liking the Texans would, if they approve a resolution by Texas delegate Joe L. Hill, take a walk. Hill's resolution would pledge that the Texas delegation "will never under any circumstances vote for Harry S. Truman" or any other candidate who supports his "anti-states rights program."

Pointing out that children in the two-to-six-year-old group outgrow clothes almost as fast as the parents buy them, Miss Rea suggested that a few garments can be made to serve for all occasions.

Here are some tips Miss Rea suggests in buying children's clothing:

- 1—Buy a snowsuit one year and a coat the next year.
- 2—Be sure there is plenty of room in the garment for a lively youngster.
- 3—See that the shoulder line is loose enough for freedom of movement but fits well enough to stay in place.
- 4—Plan clothing with similar types of fastening, because a small child must learn one type thoroughly before trying another.
- 5—Elastic in garments should not go more than half way around and it should not be so tight that it leaves red marks on the skin.

Taxpayers Get Break On New College Buildings

AMHERST, Mass. (UP)—The University of Massachusetts, state owned and operated, will have almost $3,000,000 worth of new building by 1969, and all for nothing.

The gift will come from the Alumni Building Corporation, a private concern organized by university graduates, which has built or is planning to build $2,859,600 worth of buildings on the school's 700-acre main campus.

By 1969 the buildings, providing living quarters for students and faculty, will have paid off their original cost and current upkeep by a self-liquidating process and will become the sole property of the state without cost to the taxpayer.

Each night the beaver deposited a pile of sticks on a lake dock near a boys' camp, he relates. Each morning the boys used the sticks for their camp fires.

That went on for some time, until one morning the boys looked for the expected pile of sticks, only to find their dock floating out in the lake.

The beaver took his revenge by gnawing away the pilings under the dock.

Draft Law's 'Small Business' Note Makes Officials Squirm

BY PETER EDSON NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON (NEA)—White House and National Defense officials are now in a big huddle trying to decide what to do with one of the unwanted babies dumped on their doorstep by the departing Congress. It's a "small business" amendment to the new draft law. It would require the President, on advice of National Security Resources Board, to give small business a fair share of the orders for defense materials. It defines a small business as one employing less than 500 workers and being independently owned. Then as a clincher it would require the government to give small business an allocation of steel for any defense orders it may get. These provisions weren't in the original draft law versions approved by Senate and House Armed Services Committees. White House and Defense Secretary James V. Forrestal didn't ask for and didn't want these controls in the bill. Now that they're in the law, the lawyers are scratching their heads to decide what they mean and what can or will be done about them. And the steel industry is waiting nervously on the side to find out.

THIS steel and small business sleeper was slipped into the draft act by Congressman Walter C. Ploeser of Missouri, Chairman of the House Small Business Committee. It was passed without protest in the House three days before Congress adjourned. Defense officials watching the bill thought it would be knocked out by the Senate. But Senate and House conferees accepted it on the last day of the session and it was approved late Saturday night. When defense officials woke up Sunday morning to read what kind of a draft bill Congress had passed, there was the Ploeser amendment, and were they surprised. The provision had carried as an amendment to the utilization of industry section of the draft law. This is a pick-up from the draft law of 1917 and the Second War Powers act. It gives the President power to place mandatory orders for defense production with any mine or plant and to seize and operate any manufacturing facility not complying.

This power was not used during the last war, and it could remain unused in the future. The same thing could apply to the Ploeser small business amendment. But if some small businesses complained that it couldn't get defense orders and pointed to this new law as proof of congressional intent to give small business a better break, Defense officials would be hard put to get around it.

A FURTHER complication is that the steel allocation program may interfere with the voluntary steel allocation system now in operation under the so-called Taft anti-inflation law. An Office of Commerce is now administering this law.

The committee now has before the Attorney General a request for approval on allocating steel for the Economic Co-operation Administration, handling Marshall plan supplies, and for the armed services. President Truman has of course repeatedly asked Congress for stand-by powers to allocate all scarce materials in the interests of the national economy. And just as often, Congress has turned down these requests.

The whole mix-up reflects a curious Congressional state of mind. Congress has been unwilling to grant any government controls for the protection of civilians. But for the military, Congress is apparently willing to submit to the toughest kind of controls.

The White House will probably be forced to issue some kind of executive order to carry out the intent of the Ploeser amendment. It is entirely possible, however, that it will be allowed to remain a dead letter until there is a specific need to revive it.

THE STORY: Jessica Gordon, aristocratic southern belle, has eloped with Yankee soldier Tom Blake in defiance of her father and in spite of her own qualms. At Tom's insistence, she is living with his mother and sister, Lucy, while he is overseas. They are working people and Jessica, accustomed to luxury, tries in vain to accommodate herself to their kind of life. Tom's sister is cool to her and his mother openly antagonistic. She makes friends with Doris, a girl next door, who suggests she'd be happier if she had a job. On the morning she is to apply for one, an attack of dismension overcomes her. Tom's mother says harshly: "Unless I miss my guess, my girl, you're pregnant."

BETSY GORDON BLAKE was born one stormy spring morning in a two-bed ward at the Akron hospital.

As she sat alone the evening after the trip to the airport, Jessica reviewed those dreary months of her pregnancy. Remembered how weak and miserable she had been and how Lucy's kindness was the one bright spot in those long weary weeks. Now there was no hope of independence. Now she could take no job. This was the end of any chance to escape from her obligation to Lucy and her mother-in-law.

A rigid sense of obligation to Tom made her mother-in-law exert every effort to give Jessica the best of care until the baby came, but there was no change in her feeling toward the girl. Sometimes Jessica surprised a softening in Lucy's lovely gray-blue eyes. She felt the timid touch of Lucy's hand upon her own, but when she tried to thank her, Lucy said hastily, "I'm doing my duty. Betsy's my brother's child."

A letter came with a Kentucky postmark. Mary Belle Evans, Jessica recognized the handwriting on the envelope. Mary Belle offered congratulations.

"Imagine you with a baby! I told your father but he made no comment."

"I met the wonderful Tay Haydn at a Bond Drive in Lexington last week, and how could you miss a chance like that, honey? He's gorgeous."

Tay Haydn and Mary Belle. An odd little stab of envy stirred Jessica. Suppose—just suppose that Tay and Mary Belle—silly, of course, to imagine anything so ridiculous as their marriage.

But a year later, when Betsy was staggering about learning to walk, a letter came from Tay's sister Evelyn announcing Tay's engagement to a girl he had met in Kentucky—Mary Belle Evans.

The invitation to the wedding arrived right on the heels of that letter. Never a word from her father. Letters from Tom in Germany. Now the war in Germany was over and Tom was held with the army of occupation but soon he might be home. What then?

JESSICA forced her mind to consider just what Tom's return would mean to her. What did Tom feel toward her?

His letters told nothing. They carried no hint of the infatuation which had made him follow her blindly about a little Kentucky town three years before. That brief interval when they were together—the wedding—the trip to Akron—Tom's departure. How long ago those events seemed now. Tom was a stranger who had entered that silly care-free life she had led in Kentucky and had taken her away to live with a woman she hated. A woman who still refused to accept her as her daughter, who criticized everything she did, what she wore and how she cared for her child, who established an arbitrary set of morals which Jessica must follow because she was Tom Blake's wife. This or that was right, and this or that was wrong. Lucy abided by her mother's judgment always.

Lucy had her work to occupy her mind and she concentrated upon that work and labored slavishly for her employer. Her life was molded into a pattern of stern adherence to duty. Her mother and the man for whom she worked limited her horizon.

Useless to try to wake Lucy up, thought Jessica. A born old maid and quite satisfied to be one.

This afternoon had been an example of how impossible it was to alter Lucy. Always she reverted to type, as when she showed such open disapproval at the airport, attaching significance to a casual conversation, magnifying a chance acquaintance.

What had the man felt?

LDLY Jessica let her thoughts travel back to the short time when she stood absorbed in the scene at the airport and forgot that she was Jessica Blake with a 2-year-old daughter and a husband who would shortly return from overseas. It had been fun, a reprieve, something apart from the drab existence she led with Lucy and her mother.

Encouraged by the man's bright glance of admiration, stung by Lucy's silly disapproval, she thought seriously of how she could find independence for herself and Betsy.

She must. Otherwise she would have no choice when Tom returned but meekly to accept his decision for their future.

Jessica rose and turned on the light and rummaged in her dresser drawer for the ring she had kept hidden ever since her marriage. It was a ring which had belonged to her mother, a cluster of diamonds in an old-fashioned setting.

The day following the airport adventure, Jessica gave the exact of shopping to her mother-in-law and persuaded her to watch Betsy for a few hours in the afternoon.

She dressed with unusual care. She dropped the ring in her purse and set off. She had no idea of values and planned to visit a downtown jeweler and have the ring appraised. There should be enough money from its sale to repay the old debt to Mary Belle and leave her enough money to take some kind of training.

She must and would be free before Tom came home.

Editor Devises Plan To Aid Handicapped

EL RENO, Okla. (UP)—R. Jack Christy, news editor of the El Reno American, has announced an unusual plan to bolster the spirit and morale of handicapped veterans.

Christy is trying to find 5,000 stories which describe the achievements of handicapped persons living and working under great odds. He invites contributions from everywhere.

"I want to print them and get them into the hands of hospitalized veterans and other shut-ins," he said. "I am particularly interested in stories of personal sacrifice, in which men and women have given their lives for others, or have surrendered themselves to a great cause and have arisen at last from defeat to high achievement."

Judy, 5, Unimpressed By Solo Air Trip

TURLOCK, Cal. (UP)—Judy Ann Mitchell, five, arrived here after traveling unescorted on an airliner from Honolulu to visit her grand parents.

Judy was not impressed by her 2,000-mile trip alone, dismissed it with, "Well, I'm a big girl now." She is the daughter of Robert Mitchell, Altadena, Cal., a football player with the Los Angeles Dons professional team.

CHICAGO (UP)—Marvin MacNaught was enraged when $7.50 worth of butter was stolen from his milk wagon.

He dashed down an alley, came upon a suspicious-looking man and asked him if he knew anything about the missing butter.

"No," replied the man, But I want your wallet." And he pushed a revolver against MacNaught's chest.

Nobody Loves Forever

By Margaretta Brucker

Copyright by Ananda House, Inc. Distributed by NEA Service, Inc.

THE STORY: Jessica Gordon, aristocratic southern belle, has eloped with Yankee soldier Tom Blake in defiance of her father and in spite of her own quins. At Tom's insistence, she is living with his mother and sister, Lucy, while he is overseas. They are working people and Jessica, accustomed to luxury, tries in vain to accommodate herself to their kind of life. Tom's sister is cool to her and his mother openly antagonistic. Jessica goes to the airport for an outing one Sunday afternoon and an attractive man picks a conversation with her. While she discourages him, the incident gives her pride the lift it needs. Determined to seek independence for herself and her two-year-old daughter, Betsy, before Tom's return, she takes a valuable ring that had belonged to her mother downtown for appraisal and sale.

THE sky was brilliant, the air crisp and exhilarating. Jessica was excited and a little breathless as she pushed open the heavy plate-glass door of the jewelry shop.

A little later the lovely cluster of diamonds lay twinkling up at her on a pad of black velvet and an elderly man with keen gray eyes regarded first the ring and then Jessica.

"Young?" he asked sharply.

"Mine?" She stiffened. "I beg your pardon?"

He apologized. "There are all sorts of people in a town like this and we have to be careful. This is a particularly beautiful and valuable ring. I should like to have time to examine it carefully if you care to leave it."

Something in Jessica's face must have shown her disappointment as she picked up the ring again, studied it for a minute, and said, "I'll advance a twenty-five dollar deposit on it. You may return it if you decide not to sell."

Jessica bit her lip. She hadn't planned to return. Twenty-five dollars—that would repay Mary Belle and leave her five over.

She smiled. "Very well."

The ring lay on the black velvet, the gold soft and yellow, the diamonds brilliant. Suddenly someone just behind Jessica said, "Let me see that ring, Joe."

In the mirror before her Jessica saw a tall thin man with unruly black hair and very light eyes. He was thin-lipped and arrogant. He reached around her and picked up the ring in spite of the jeweler's movement to cover it with his fingers. He said, "This is a honey. How much is it?"

THE jeweler's glance wavered. In that moment Jessica knew that the man was a good customer and one the owner disliked to offend, and that he was uncertain and embarrassed.

She, herself, despised the thin man. His cool impudent stare which swept up and down her. Those hard, insulting eyes and his arrogant manner.

The jeweler found his tongue. "The ring is not for sale. The young lady brought it in for appraisal," he explained.

The man dropped the ring. His cool glance hinted that he regarded Jessica as a pauper.

"I'll take the ring with me," said Jessica icily. "I've changed my mind about selling it."

She snatched up the ring and dropped it in her purse and left the store, walked a block and realized she had acted like a fool for no reason. No harm to have an appraisal on the ring. Also, there was the twenty-five dollar deposit. She passed a store window and saw a coat which would look wonderful on Betsy.

She retraced her steps, entered the store and said to the jeweler, "I was foolish to leave but I didn't want that man to have my ring."

He smiled and said, "He has plenty of money to pay a good price for what he wants and he always knows what he wants and gets it."

Jessica handed him the ring. "Probably I was too hasty in deciding not to sell," she said.

She walked away with twenty-five dollars in her purse and the jeweler's assurance that he could promise a large sum for her later.

OBEYING a sudden impulse, she entered the store she had passed earlier and purchased the coat for Betsy. Fifteen dollars. She felt reckless and extravagant but pleased with herself. Later she would repay Mary Belle Evans, who was now married to Tay Haydn and didn't need the money.

She was hot and a little tired. She was just a block from the Mayflower Hotel. She paused, walked forward slowly and hesitated before the entrance. What fun to go inside and visit the Terrace Room. Music, a cool drink. She'd had no lunch and was hungry.

Her feet carried her into the lobby and up the little flight of steps in the direction of the music.

A moment later she was at a table by herself watching the smartly dressed people seated about her. There was an afternoon tea dance in progress. Jessica relaxed and greedily ate her sandwich, sipped her drink, and listened to the music.

A voice said, "Hello. What luck to find you here!"

Jessica gave a little gasp of astonishment.

The man smiling down at her was the man of the airport. "You're alone?" he asked. And at her nod pulled out a chair and sat down.

"I was just about to leave—" He shook his smooth brown head. "This is too good," he said firmly. "I've been thinking about you all day and wondering just how I could find you. I came downtown on a business trip and thought I'd drop in for a quick drink. Now you and I must have one together."

She objected weakly. She had a guilty feeling that she should not have come, that she should leave at once. She should not feel this flood of happiness because a man admired her and talked sheer nonsense—but such wonderful nonsense when you have been bound and restricted and denied any fun for ages!

Aphids Are Pests To Humans But Not So To Ants

LINCOLN, Neb. (UP) — The life of an aphid is a happy one. The little insects, better known as plant lice, are having fun with gardens and trees in southeast Nebraska. In addition, although they have few friends among humans, the attention they get from the ants more than makes up for that shortcoming.

The ants simply love them. So do the ladybugs, for that matter, but in a different way. The ladybugs eat them. The ants keep them around, treat them well, wait on them, protect them and cajole them into providing aphid milk.

There is reason to believe the aphids and the ants get along well together. The average aphid is a parasite, anyway. If some big fat ant wants to do his fighting for him when the ladybugs come around, in exchange for some milk, it's all right with the aphid.

The ant is a smooth operator when it comes to getting the milk. He sidles up to an aphid, kicks up a leg and strokes the aphid's back.

The aphid likes that and soon makes with the milk. The above information was obtained through the assistance of Harold Manter, professor of zoology, and Harvey Werner, professor of horticulture, at the University of Nebraska.

Manter and Werner have other fascinating facts about the aphid.

They'll tell you, for instance, that all of them are females until autumn, when males start showing up. They add that the ants, come winter, take the aphid eggs into the ground to protect them from the cold. With the advent of spring the ants take the eggs out into the sun and wait for them to hatch.

Farmers and gardeners will tell you a few things about the aphid, too. The soft, greenish things, which are a tenth-of-an-inch long and not very tall, have invaded Nebraska in great force. They have caused great destruction.

Although he leads a lazy life the aphid is a tough customer, Manter and Werner say. They are hard to kill and DDT won't do the job. It takes a solution of nicotine sulphate, and even then you've got to make a direct hit to do any good.

CINCINNATI, O. (UP)—Young men interested in becoming "contented millionaires" are advised by Donald McDonald to share their profits with their employees, don't cheat business partners or competitors, and behave "like a Christian instead of a pagan."

MacDonald who is executive secretary of the Christian Business Men's Committee, likes to point to half a dozen or more widely-known millionaires in the CBMC as proof of the success of the formula.

The CBMC was organized 11 years ago in Chicago by a group of industrialists who were worried about the methods of modern business men.

Many of the members have daily prayer services in their offices and factories at which employers and employees gather to "ask God to show us the right way to do business." Such practices, MacDonald said, have made it possible for CBMC members to avoid strikes and labor troubles that in the past seemed "unavoidable."

"You can't go wrong when you make God your business partner," he added.

The CBMC has 10,000 members in such widely scattered areas as the Philippines, England, Canada, China, New Zealand, and the United States. They recruit new members by inviting fellow-business men to lunch because "a lot of men will refuse to go to church with you, but not many turn down a free lunch."

Robert G. Le Fournie, president of an internationally known firm which builds land-leveling and scraping machines, is international president of the group. Officers
