Santa stamp

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — It was the month before Christmas and rumors spread that the post office would replace the North Pole's trademark smiling Santa Claus with an automated cancellation mark. Residents of the community 20 miles southeast of Fairbanks were miffed. But Mike Barfield, Alaska's director of marketing and communications for the post office, said Friday the government has no plan to dump Santa. "We're not changing anything we do in North Pole except to have more people available to get the mail out faster," Barfield said. "Santa Claus will be there, smiling." He said the misunderstanding began when officials looked into replacing their old rubber cancellation stamps with an automated canceling machine that still would have produced a picture of Santa. Ultimately the officials decided to stay with the rubber stamps and have ordered new ones, Barfield said. Cards and letters mailed from North Pole are postmarked two ways at Christmas — once with the rubber-stamped Santa's face and again by a machine that imprints the words "North Pole, Alaska."

School finance

AUSTIN — The Texas House is poised to debate school finance reform this week. But Speaker Gib Lewis knows the agreement will be hard to reach. "The problem we have here . . . dealing with a 150 (House) members with their own ideas is a lot different than dealing with 31 (Senate) members and their ideas," Lewis said last week, after the Senate easily approved a proposed constitutional amendment on school funding. State leaders have said schools could be closed if lawmakers fail to meet a June 1, 1993, court deadline for a new funding plan./2B

Perfect SAT

HOUSTON — Some things are better the second time around, and sometimes they're perfect. Such is the case for St. John's School senior Emily Kuo, who nailed a perfect score the second time she took the Scholastic Aptitude Test. Miss Kuo joined an elite group — only 13 of the more than 1 million students who took the college entrance exam last year scored a perfect 1,600. Miss Kuo, 16 said learning has come "fairly easy." She said she rarely made anything but A's. She took the SAT twice. She scored 1,490 in January and scored 1,600 in October.

Gays, lesbians anxious, fearful about Clinton's plan to lift ban

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. — For years, they have carried the burden of double lives, existing behind the cover of fictitious girlfriends and boyfriends and marriages of convenience. LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — In their first meeting Sunday night, President-elect Clinton and Democratic congressional leaders talked over their "new beginning" as they tried to forge agreement on a quick-action agenda and breaking Washington gridlock.

"We talked about a lot of subjects . . . in terms of a good, new beginning next year," Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said after the three-and-a-half hour session over dinner at the Arkansas governor's mansion broke up.

Mitchell, who flew in with House Speaker Tom Foley and House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, steered clear of divulging specifics of the Sunday night meeting, promising instead a full report today at a news conference with Clinton.

"It was a very, very positive meeting," said Clinton's communications director, George Stephanopoulos. "We now have a president and a Congress who are ready to work together on the same priorities for the American people. ... I think tonight the president and the leadership cemented their relationship."

Earlier, before the leaders arrived, Clinton said, "We've got a big job to do and we've got to do it together." He, too,

Loyd and Julia met in a time when couples courted and the mode of transportation was the Model T Ford.

They left letters in each other's mailboxes and went to dances and box suppers together.

"Once, I didn't have enough money to buy her box of supper," recalled Loyd. "Another boy bought it. But, she wouldn't let him open it unless he let me sit with them."

No one wins $2.5 million lotto jackpot

AUSTIN (AP) — No one has won the first drawing for Lotto Texas' $2.5 million jackpot, which now rises to an estimated $3 million and could go higher if brisk ticket sales continue, state officials said.

No complete match Saturday night of the six winning numbers — 13, 16, 22, 29, 32 and 36 — means a potential benefit to future lottery players, Texas Comptroller John Sharp said.

"It's good if you weren't destined to be the winner," Sharp said Sunday. "Certainly, it will help ticket sales for the next drawing."

It is scheduled Wednesday, followed by another on Saturday.

The lotto began Nov. 7 at thousands of stores that had already been selling scratch-card, instant-winner tickets.

Ninety-six players who matched five of the six winning numbers will receive $1,324 each, while another 5,312 people won $86 by picking four of six correctly.

Successful players, including 83,916 winners of $3 each who picked three of the winning numbers, can also receive their prizes beginning today at one of the 24 claims centers around the state.

Lottery officials were relieved that the first drawing went smoothly.

"It didn't screw up — great," said Sharp, whose office oversees the lottery operations.

Edwards Aquifer case begins today in Midland court

Associated Press

Farmers and ranchers who rely on the Edwards Aquifer consider possible federal control a catastrophic threat.

But environmentalists counter that such dire warnings are alarmist.

The two groups are to face off today in Midland federal court.

The case, brought in May 1991, pits the needs of the tiny fountain darter against those of cities and farms where the Edwards Aquifer is the sole source of drinking water.

"It's not the end of the world if he (U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton) rules with the Sierra Club," state Agricultural Commissioner Rick Perry said. "However, I think we can see the end of the world from there."

The Sierra Club is asking that spring flow be assured to species living in the aquifer-fed Comal and San Marcos springs.

But some officials have warned federal regulation would strangle the water supply and potential growth.

The 180-mile-long Edwards Aquifer is the sole source of drinking water for more than 1.3 million people in six counties. Most is used by Bexar County and irrigation farmers in Uvalde, Medina and Bexar counties.

San Antonio pumps about 300,000 acre-feet of water each year from the aquifer. Under a worst-case scenario, total pumpage by all sources could be limited to 165,000 acre-feet annually, attorney Russell S. Johnson said.

"We might wake up and read we've got to reduce our consumption by 60 percent," warned Johnson, who represents the San Antonio Water System.

But Ken Kramer, the Sierra Club's state director, said efforts to ensure spring flow and protect endangered species will force better management of the aquifer for all users.

WEATHER SUMMARY
High expected to hit 70

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high in the lower 70s and south winds at 10-15 mph. Tonight should be clear with a low in the mid-40s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be sunny with a high in the lower 70s.

After an overnight low of 32, Sunday's high reached 70, compared to the record high for that date of 84 set in 1963. The record low was 15 set in 1932.

STATE

A high-pressure system kept skies mostly sunny across Texas on Sunday, except for showers in the southern tip of the state and in the Rio Grande Valley.

A wide area of precipitation stretched from Eagle Pass and Del Rio to Corpus Christi and south into Mexico, the National Weather Service said. But high pressure located just north of the rainfall prevented moisture from venturing northward.

Afternoon temperatures ranged from the 60s to 70s statewide.

Forecasters expected partly to mostly cloudy skies through Monday night with a slight chance of rainfall in North Texas and rain in the lower Rio Grande valley, spreading northward.

Increasing cloudiness was expected Tuesday in North Texas with a slight chance of showers in southeastern sections.

NATION

Snow fell Sunday over much of the Great Lakes region and parts of the Ohio Valley and the Appalachians. Rain reached across southern Florida, and fog was widespread over the northern and central Pacific Coast.

In Cleveland, 1 inch of snow fell in the six hours ending at 1 p.m. EST. Charleston, W.Va., also had 1 inch during the same period.

Snow squall warnings were posted through the evening across parts of Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York state. Overnight snowfall from squalls in Ohio included 18 inches at Jefferson.

With another month left in autumn, many areas seem deep in winter. Up to 2 feet of snow fell over the weekend in Boston, N.Y., about 25 miles southeast of Buffalo.

It was cold across New England and down into the mid-Atlantic states. Freeze warnings and frost warnings were posted as far south as the Carolinas.

Showers dampened southern Florida, but no heavy rains were reported.

Overcast skies and fog blanketed a wide area along the Pacific Coast.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

BAN: Gays expect few changes

(From 1A)

Congressional leaders urge Clinton 'to go slow' on reversal of gay ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional leaders urged President-elect Clinton Sunday to go slow on overturning the military's ban on homosexuals, arguing that sudden action would create a furor in Congress and could endanger lives in the armed forces.

"He ought to put it on the back burner," Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

"I can't give him any advice except to go slow," Dole said. "There are other things you can do by executive order that wouldn't blow the lid off the Capitol. I think this one might come close."

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, appearing on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," said, "I think we ought to proceed very cautiously."

"If you did it overnight, I'd fear for the lives of people in the military themselves," Nunn said. "I think there could be some very emotional feelings. So I would prefer that it be stretched out over a period of time."

Nunn, Dole and Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell of Maine, who appeared with Dole on the NBC panel show, said congressional action would be required to amend the Uniform Code of Military Justice even if Clinton did issue an executive order changing the policy.

"I'd be surprised if he won that vote," said Dole. Mitchell said, however, "I think the governor will be supported in that because I think he will do it in a sensible and prudent way."

The Arkansas governor said Wednesday in Little Rock that he intends to consult with military leaders about "the mechanics" of a change in policy. He did not say when this would occur.

"I don't think (homosexual) status alone, in the absence of some destructive behavior, should disqualify people" from serving in the military, the president-elect said.

A federal judge in Los Angeles reaffirmed on Tuesday his order that the Navy reinstate a homosexual sailor, but did not rule on whether the military ban is constitutional.

The sailor, Petty Officer 1st Class Keith Meinhold, who has returned to duty, said the effect of a change in policy on the behavior of gays in the military would be "a big fat nothing."

"The only difference would be that we would no longer have to look over our shoulder," Meinhold said on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley."

Former Army National Guard Col. Margarethe Cammermeyer, who acknowledged being a lesbian when questioned during a security check to attend the War College, said, "I don't think it's like suddenly the military is going to disintegrate."

Adm. Thomas Moorer, former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, dissented, saying, "Sooner or later you're going to have men kissing each other and hugging and whatever ... and the other sailors or soldiers or Marines or airmen would see it, and they would begin to give them names. Then, the first thing you know, there would be a fight."

"I defy you to find a military man who has had the responsibility of training a unit and participating in combat that does not agree with me," Moorer said.

Former Secretary of the Navy John Lehman said that "homosexual activity is absolutely incompatible with life aboard ship and life in the military" but "a person's orientation and ... and what he does on his own private time shouldn't be the purview of Big Brother and of the government."

"I think Bill Clinton has put it about right," Lehman said.

Nunn discounted reports that overturning the ban would lead to wholesale resignations in the military.

Moorer, however, said he believed senior officers would "be sorely tempted" to resign and "had I been in their position, I would certainly give it very serious thought."

Pearson, 26, a mechanic. "It would make me feel unsure, unsafe. I would definitely get out in a heartbeat."

Capt. Jeffrey Johnson, 35, a company commander at Fort Jackson, S.C., a large Army training center just outside Columbia, said openly gay soldiers would provoke verbal confrontations and fights. "Heterosexual men will feel threatened and they'll retaliate. The chain of command will spend 90 percent of the time on discipline matters."

Other soldiers acknowledged that thousands of gays serve ably in the military now, often with the knowledge of sympathetic coworkers and superiors. These soldiers said they would judge homosexuals on their job performance — not their sexual orientation.

"As long as they don't bother me, I don't have no problem," said Spc. 4 Chienera Early, 23, who is assigned to Fort Jackson.

Most homosexuals interviewed said that lifting the ban would probably mean few outward changes in their lives. "I don't think there will be a mad rush of raging queens down to the nearest recruiting office," said Hendricks, the former Marine who is now a forklift operator in Jacksonville. "The two life styles just don't mesh."

Given the current ban and the overt hostility toward homosexuals in the armed services, one wonders why gay people join such an institution and make it a career.

Gay military men and women said that they were often unsure of their sexual orientation when they joined the military in their late teens or early 20s. By the time they acknowledged their identity, these soldiers said, they were reluctant to give up the parts of military life they liked: camaraderie, excellent education benefits, overseas travel and leadership challenges.

Relying on underground social networks for support, gay Marines say they stay in the service because of patriotism, but also to make a point to senior military leaders.

"I want to prove that you can be gay in the Marine Corps and be successful," said one 30-year-old gay sergeant in Jacksonville, who has earned elite assignments like guard duty at the U.S. embassies in Egypt and Finland. "If I got out because the military didn't like my life style, I'd be giving up. I'm not a quitter."

The sacrifices are substantial. Gay soldiers say they must watch what they say, switching pronouns from "he" to "she" instinctively when colleagues ask about their weekend plans. Marines in Jacksonville agreed to speak to a reporter only after being referred by trusted friends in Washington.

Keri Ackerman, 24, a lesbian who was a Marine corporal for four years, including eight months as an ammunition technician during the gulf war, said that when she joined the service, she married her best friend, a Marine corporal, to give her an alibi and to double her $350 biweekly housing allowance. She lived with her girlfriend; her husband lived separately.

Facing re-enlistment last May, Ms. Ackerman decided to leave the Marines. "It was just too much stress for me, having to live a double life," she said. No longer needing the excuse of marriage, she and her husband were divorced.

Other lesbians in the military say they face the added pressures of sexual harassment from male soldiers.

Bonnie Clark, 38, a Navy lieutenant for nearly 10 years, said she invented a phony fiance and even bought a mock diamond engagement ring, to try to ward off the advances of her commander during an assignment in the 1980s.

"It'll take a long time for gay men and lesbians to relax and not worry about what they say or do," said Ms. Clark, who is now a substance abuse counselor for adolescents at Duke University Medical Center in Durham, N.C.

Other homosexuals in the military say they often strive for jobs in areas with critical shortages, like doctors and nurses, and seek to outperform their heterosexual colleagues to make it that much harder for commanders to dismiss them if they are found out.

A 29-year-old physician at Fort Bragg, N.C., a large Army installation, said he and his wife separated last year when he realized he was gay. In a fit of pique, he said, his wife told his commander last June.

"My company commander dropped the questioning after thinking about it over the weekend," the doctor said. "I think it was because he just didn't want to open up that hornet's nest."

Gay and heterosexual soldiers agreed that many details needed to be worked out after Clinton lifts the ban.

a pretty pink robe. Tired out by the day's events, she sat quietly with her oldest daughter beside her while her husband talked.

"I would go see her, but I would say I was seeing her brothers," he said, smiling. "You know, back then, nobody knew anything about dating."

He proposed to his wife when he was 16. A year later, he and 19-year-old Julia tied the knot.

In the span of their marriage, the couple raised four children, survived the depression and moved through five different towns, following Hicks' profession as a painter.

The couple moved to Midland in 1949 when he took over a painting job at the Scharbauer Hotel.

"I never worried, even during the depression," Hicks said. "We always had something to eat and a place to live. I mean, my wife could go into the kitchen with just a dishrag and make a good meal."

Hicks said the secret to being together for 70 years was simple.

"I never missed a day telling her I loved her," he said, glancing lovingly at his wife. "And, I never left home without kissing her. Now, that's a must."

The couple's love has even survived Mrs. Hicks' diminishing health and battle with Alheimer's.

"He never leaves her side," said Dorothy Beckham, the Hickses' oldest daughter. "I think he should get out, you know. But, he said that if she can't go he won't. He is very devoted to her."

"They were the best parents," she continued. "I was raised during the depression. But, we were happy. It didn't take a lot of money. My parents were the youngest, most active people until Mother's health failed. But, they have truly had the most wonderful life together."

LOTTO: Wednesday's drawing could be more than $3 million

(From 1A)

Weekly sales of the $1 Lotto Texas tickets totaled $5,981,748, with sales on Saturday alone at $2,102,176, according to a prepared lottery statement. By Sunday morning, retailers had already paid winning tickets for $91,239.

The heaviest sales hour was between 6-7 p.m. Saturday, when 261,533, or 4,350 per minute, were sold.

"If sales continue at this pace, the estimated size of the jackpot may go even higher" than the $3 million figure, according to the lottery release.

Sales so far amounted to 35.19 cents per Texas resident. That compared with 22.85 cents per California resident in that state's first week of lotto sales in 1986.

The estimated jackpot for the first Texas drawing was bumped to $2.5 million Friday, after gross sales of lotto tickets topped $3.3 million.

The winning numbers were drawn at 9:45 p.m. Saturday from a machine that tumbles 50 numbered white rubber balls.

Venessa Grandjean of Luling gestured toward the six balls as they fell from the bottom of the tumbler and rolled into a tray.

Ms. Grandjean, who has appeared in several television commercials, is a freshmen English teacher at Luling High School.

Lottery personnel practiced the drawing Friday. Lottery Director Nora Linares said there had also been numerous tests of equipment and procedures.

Odds of picking the six winning numbers, out of 50, on lotto playslips were one in 15,890,700. Odds of matching five numbers were one in 60,192; four numbers, one in 1,120; and three, one in 60.

CLINTON: President-elect hosts lawmakers declined to outline specific priorities, saying he'd save them for today.

(From 1A)

It was their first meeting since Clinton's victory; the opportunities were big, since this marks the first time Democrats will have control over both the White House and Congress in 12 years.

Clinton and his aides have talked of a 100-day agenda for economic and social matters they felt were neglected over the past decade, but even before Sunday night's dinner, Mitchell downplayed expectations for how quickly Congress might move.

"I am not one to subscribe to this 100-day deadline business," Mitchell said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

"I think it's an artificial deadline established for no purpose other than giving definition ... to a sense of urgency about action," Mitchell said. "And so I don't use any particular time frame for when we should or should not act."

Stephanopoulos said the 100-day timetable "is a little artificial but it helps to organize your thinking."

"We know we have to come out quickly and get to work on the problems facing the American people," Stephanopoulos said as he entered the governor's mansion for an afternoon session with Clinton. "Whether it's in the first 100 days is not important. We're going to start on day one."

Mitchell said he would tell Clinton he's "right on track" by making economic revival his top priority.

Clinton plans to make a short-term economic stimulus package his No. 1 objective, including expanded investment tax credits hoped to spark job creation. Other parts of it Clinton can do alone by executive order, such as speeding up federal dollars for highway projects that would create jobs.

Clinton met at the governor's mansion Sunday with economic adviser Robert Reich. Clinton also met with longtime friend and journalist Bill Moyers — who served as press secretary for President Johnson.

The bulk of Clinton's long-term economic plan — a $20 billion annual investment in infrastructure, technology and communications — relies on defense cuts and tax hikes on the wealthy that would require congressional action.

During his campaign, Clinton also pledged to seek quick action on family leave legislation that President Bush twice vetoed. Some legislation — such as complicated and controversial health care reform — Clinton has merely talked of getting to Congress within 100 days.

Clinton also is expected to hurry legislation on lobbyist disclosure and campaign finance reform; education bills to finance Head Start and create a college aid program so anyone could go; and job training plans that include a national apprenticeship program.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, who also appeared on "Meet the Press," cautioned the next president "not to try to overload the circuit" with too much legislation in the first few months in office.

"I don't think there's any magic in how much you do in the first 100 days, and when you push too hard to do too much in too short a time span, you may end up on the reef somewhere," Dole said.

Dole said Republicans would try to cooperate on an economic stimulus package but also would keep a watchful eye to make sure Clinton's plan dealt with deficit reduction. Clinton heads to Washington later this week for a meeting with bipartisan leaders of Congress.

Dole said he owed it to Republicans who don't agree with Clinton "to at least indicate we're not going to be patsies and floor mats and rubber stamps."

"We're going to try to be helpful, but at the same time, we are a national party," Dole said, noting the GOP has a chance to make inroads in the Senate in 1994 with 22 Democratic seats up for reelection.

"We have some great opportunities in '94, so we're not going to blow those trying to fall over backwards to help President-elect Clinton," Dole said.

Mitchell predicted partisan squabbling would stay at a minimum as Clinton tries to push through an economic plan. Lawmakers are aware of voters' overwhelming call for change, he said.

"The same people who elected Bill Clinton president elected all of the members of the House of Representatives and one-third of the Senate. And it seems to me those people want change in economic policy," Mitchell said.

Mitchell said he would talk with Foley about the speaker's proposed compromise on giving Clinton line-item veto authority so he could single out items in spending bills for elimination — a power Clinton said he needs to rein in spending.

Doctors note increases in sports injuries to young children

By Elisabeth Rosenthal
N.Y. Times News Service

Adults recall childhood as an endless blur of running and jumping, full of little cuts and bruises, but blissfully free of those nagging injuries that follow exercise later in life — tendinitis, bursitis and stress fractures.

Now, however, orthopedists and pediatricians say these injuries are cropping up with alarming frequency in children: from stress fractures of the lower spine in young gymnasts to shoulder tendinitis in swimmers to shin splints in aspiring marathoners.

"People are suddenly recognizing that it's a problem," said Dr. Carl L. Stanitski, chief of orthopedic surgery at the Children's Hospital of Michigan in Detroit. "We are seeing more and more stress fractures in children and more and more injuries cause by repetitive use."

They attribute the rise in such so-called overuse injuries to intensive sports training programs for young children, longer playing seasons and specialty sports camps in which children may spend hours lobbing balls on a tennis court or throwing hundreds of pitches each day.

In addition, doctors say they are now identifying injuries that in the past might have been ignored.

"In my practice overuse injuries are much more common than acute injuries, like lacerations and broken bones," said Dr. Gregory L. Landry, a staff pediatrician at the University of Wisconsin Sports Medicine Clinic. "Part of that may be we're getting better at diagnosing these things in kids. In the past, pediatricians did not expect these syndromes in children, so they overlooked the diagnosis or called them growing pains."

Although overuse injuries generally respond well to rest, if ignored they can cause major problems. "If you stop early in the evolution of these injuries, they just heal," said Dr. Barry Goldberg, director of Sports Medicine at Yale University Health Services. "On the other hand, if kids are caught in an environment where there is pressure to throw through the pain or tough it out, these injuries tend to progress to chronic injury, sometimes lifelong disability, which is really a crime."

Experts say children are particularly prone to injury from intensive sports. The quality of their equipment and coaching is often not on par with the athletic demands. And children's immature bones have soft areas that are common sites of injury.

"The most ill-equipped athlete in America is a third-string middle-school football player, who's running his heart out on an adult-size field, wearing a hand-me-down helmet and shoulder pads," Stanitski said. To prevent overuse injuries, he and others have advocated that young children should play on smaller fields, using smaller, lighter balls that are proportioned to their size.

Landry said that at the start of the school soccer season each fall he sees an epidemic of heel pain caused by tendinitis. He said poorly designed shoes were partly to blame.

"Soccer shoes for children have not caught up with the rest of the sports shoe industry," said Dr. David Bernhardt, a sports medicine fellow at the University of Wisconsin. "They don't provide enough support."

All too often children's coaches, who are often volunteers and rarely have formal training, drill children the way "some troglodyte coached them in high school or college," Stanitski said. They also do not teach proper techniques, which puts excess stresses on young bodies.

"In Little League the coach takes the biggest, strongest kid and says, 'You're the pitcher,' " Stanitski said. "And he throws with his arm, not using his leg or his body as real pitchers do. Until someone shows that kid how to pitch, he's a setup for overuse problems."

Young baseball players may suffer from tendinitis of the shoulder and elbow, he said, as well as bursitis, an inflammation of a fluid-filled cushion in the shoulder. In severe cases, these injuries can lead to severe arthritis by the late teen-age years and the end of a career before it has truly started.

Some overuse injuries in pre-adolescents are peculiar to children, occurring at the attachment of tendon to bone, a particularly weak junction in the young. Before puberty, the bone beneath these sites is soft, more like a gristle, and vulnerable to microscopic fractures and inflammation.

The heel pain that afflicts children in running sports like soccer, called Sever's disease, is caused by irritation where the Achilles' tendon from the calf attaches to a bone in the foot.

Osgood Schlatter disease, a type of knee pain that plagues children in sports like basketball, is from inflammation at a similar junction in the knee. But many injuries are identical to those seen in adults. Nicole Clausen, a 15-year-old cross-country runner from Detroit, has a stress fracture of her shinbone, or tibia, a common running injury sometimes called shin splints.

In children, overuse injuries occur most often at the start of the season, when bodies are out of shape, or at its peak, when they are bearing the maximum forces they can tolerate.

Regular exercise causes microscopic trauma to tissue, which generally heals during the hours or days of rest in between. As long as the body is given adequate time to repair itself, the person builds up muscle and becomes better conditioned.

But when a child exceeds the body's ability to heal the damage, doing too much, too fast, the tissue starts to break down and overuse injury occurs.

Experts say that sports camps can breed such problems. "Children go from a relatively low activity state to very intense athletic experience," Landry said.

Today there are more children who focus on one sport all year round, stressing the same bones, tendons and joints over and over again, Bernhardt said.

Voters like term limits and their congressmen

WASHINGTON (AP) — Voters approved term limits for members of Congress from California to Florida, but they also re-elected a batch of lawmakers who already have exceeded those same limits.

In the 14 states that approved ceilings on the terms of members of Congress Nov. 3, citizens in the same stroke sent back to Washington 71 members of the House and three senators whose time already would be up under each state's limits.

"What it says is we may dislike the institution as a whole, but we love our individual member of Congress," said Vic Kamber, a Democratic political consultant who advised term-limit opponents in several states.

The seemingly inconsistent results, Kamber says, reflect public unhappiness with Washington and are a function of the millions of dollars spent on media advertising that focuses on Congress' foibles.

Congress has been a butt of jokes throughout the nation's history, and term-limit questions on the ballot gave voters a chance to register their feelings at a time when polls showed singular disdain.

"With deficits, scandals, sex, bounced checks, people are generally frustrated with this institution," said Kamber.

But Shari Williams, director of the term-limits group Americans Back in Charge, said that characterization misses the movement's point. It is designed not to "kick the rascals out" but to make government more responsive, she said.

"We are for sound, reasonable, responsive government," Williams said. "It's not that we're trying to move incumbents out. We are trying to get rid of a system that favors them. The problem isn't the faces. ... But the system encourages them to listen to special interests and start thinking about re-election the very next day."

Kamber attributed the heavy majorities for term limits to the inability of opponents to mobilize in time to fight them. There was little money available and incumbents who might have led the charge were preoccupied with their own re-election bids, he said.

The initiatives adopted set limits of 12 years, or two terms, for senators and ceilings ranging from six to 12 years for the House.

Those same 14 states are represented by 16 senators who already have served at least two terms.

Researchers claim to have remedy for jet lag

By Darryl Ewing
Associated Press writer

DALLAS (AP) — Let there be darkness. At least, says Dr. Al Lewy, let the brain think it's dark. That way problems like jet lag, insomnia and maybe even graveyard shifts can become bearable.

Lewy and researchers at the Oregon Health Science University in Portland are using low doses of melatonin, a natural hormone, to trick the body's internal clock, helping those with sleep disorders.

Melatonin, produced by the pineal gland, causes drowsiness and also regulates seasonal time clocks in animals.

"It's the chemical signal for darkness," said Lewy, a professor of ophthalmology and psychiatry. "So you give it in the morning and it makes dawn appear to be later although it's getting light out.

"You give it late afternoon and it makes it seem as if dusk has fallen sooner, even though it's still light out."

Lewy, in his presentation to the American Academy of Ophthalmology meeting in Dallas, said he uses a pill of 0.5 milligrams of melatonin, the amount the body naturally produces at night.

The dose is given during the day, he said.

"You wouldn't take it at bedtime, you'd take it at three in the afternoon, that would make dusk fall earlier, and if dusk is earlier, then your clock is shifting earlier.

"If your clock is shifting earlier, then the time you're feeling naturally sleepy is shifting earlier."

"Instead of falling to sleep at 1 a.m., you're sleepy at 10 p.m."

Tamposi: Clinton files wanted before media request

WASHINGTON (AP) — A fired State Department official alleges she was told the White House was actively pressing for information from Bill Clinton's passport files, Newsweek magazine reported Sunday.

The fired official, Elizabeth Tamposi, told the magazine that a State Department colleague pressured her to get the information about Clinton on Sept. 28 — after conservative congressmen suggested that Clinton had considered switching his citizenship to avoid the draft during the Vietnam War.

Tamposi told the magazine that she rejected the request from Steven Berry and that when she asked who wanted the information, Berry told her it was White House staffer Janet Mullins.

Mullins is a former State Department staffer who went with James A. Baker III to help run the Bush-Quayle campaign.

Tamposi then called Margaret Tutwiler, chief aide to Baker, to inquire whether Berry really had been speaking for the White House. Tutwiler refused to take her call, Newsweek reported.

Two days later, Tamposi's office acted on news media requests and retrieved Clinton's files.

After the search was completed, Berry told Tamposi, "Margaret appreciates everything you're trying to do, but she says you simply cannot call them at the White House," according to Newsweek.

Tamposi — who was fired last week by President Bush as assistant secretary of state for consular affairs — said Berry's comment "really sent a chill up my spine. How did (Berry) know that I had called Margaret?"

Meanwhile, a State Department official rejected other allegations by Tamposi that John F.W. Rogers, under secretary of state for management, authorized the search of Clinton's passport files.

The official told The Associated Press on Sunday that "by no means" did Rogers give Tamposi the green light to violate established rules pertaining to requests made under the Freedom of Information Act.

The idea that Rogers was to blame is "just plain wrong," said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity. There is no evidence of wrongdoing by Rogers, the official added.

President Clinton may need line-item veto

President-elect Bill Clinton may favor the line-item veto, which some politicians say is a cure for "pork-barrel" politics, but even with a Democratic Congress in place when he takes office in January, the chance that he'll get his wish is virtually non-existent.

The power that Congress wields over the nation's spending is one that it will guard selfishly.

It's worth noting that Clinton, as governor of Arkansas, was one of only 43 state leaders to possess the line-item veto and he still supports that check on the legislative branch's spending impulse. His support will be critical to efforts to get Congress to go along but even with that support, who really believes Congress will relinquish any of its power of the purse?

There are a number of good arguments to be made for giving presidents some degree of control over congressional spending — and the line-item veto would be particularly good since it would allow the president to veto a specific proposal without dooming the entire bill. Some of those arguments are:

■ A Government Accounting Office study which shows that between 1984 and 1989 the line-item veto could have saved the nation $70 billion had Presidents Reagan and Bush had the veto. Now it's true that for that period, spending mushroomed by $1 trillion and that $70 billion in savings wouldn't have had much impact. But $70 billion is still a lot of money to most people and if that much could have been saved, it should have been.

■ A Cato Institute study which revealed that of 120 present and former governors, 90 of them believe presidents should have the line-item veto.

■ The simple fact that it's easier for 535 members of Congress to flood a single president with virtually countless spending proposals than it is for that same president to, successfully, make his line-item vetoes.

The line-item veto, however, would provide a good check against foolish and excessive spending. In that regard, it could hardly be termed shortsighted.

Clinton should push for the line-item veto. It's an important aspect of fiscal control that the nation needs.

If economy is getting better, what was campaign about?

In the final days of the campaign President Bush tried to reassure voters the economy wasn't as bad as his critics claimed. He cited the latest 2.07 percent growth rate, plus other recent positive signs, to make the point that low inflation and low interest rates were putting the nation on a slow but steady road to recovery.

The Clinton camp dismissed the good news as, at best, an aberration; at worst, the government "cooking the books" to save the Bush presidency.

But now that the votes are counted and Bill Clinton has been elected president, his economic advisers are singing a different song. They're forecasting that the economy will rebound to a 3 percent annual growth rate next year. They cite low inflation, low interest rates and the government's latest economic data as reasons for their optimism.

That raises an interesting question: If Bush and Clinton are in essential agreement on the economy, what in blazes was the campaign all about?

— The Augusta Chronicle Augusta, Ga.

America needs injection of Clinton's confidence

For President-elect Clinton's sake, and even more so for our own, we must all pray that his confidence in himself is well-founded. We must hope that his ideas to improve the economy are well-based. We must hope that he can, indeed, provide an injection of renewed belief in America as an engine of prosperity and a bastion of justice. In short, we must pray that trust in the presidency and in our government will be restored. Part of the price we should ask for the loan of our highest office is an honest accounting of the recipient's efforts.

Programs are fine. Leadership is better. An ability to inspire others to make difficult choices in the public interest is best of all.

Mubarak must stand strong for peace

CAIRO, Egypt — One of the first foreign policy priorities for Bill Clinton will be to jump-start stalled Middle East peace negotiations, and bond as quickly as possible with the leader who will be a linchpin for any lasting peace between Arabs and Jews: Egypt's president, Hosni Mubarak.

Anderson

The fast unfolding events in the Middle East may not patiently wait for the new Clinton administration to get America's economic house in order before reviving negotiations. Moderates like Mubarak are on a slippery slope, being pushed by Muslim extremists.

Mubarak needs little lecture on the risks, because one dark day is seared into his memory. It's the day he assumed power in a uniform splattered with the blood of his mentor, Anwar Sadat, when Muslim extremists assassinated him during an October 1981 military parade.

Many political observers here believe that Mubarak himself may be a marked man. Radical Islamic fundamentalists are actively fomenting Mubarak's overthrow. Though a minority, they're demanding that the alliance with the United States be abrogated and the Egyptian peace treaty with Israel abandoned.

Unlike his predecessor, Mubarak seems mindful of the political/religious minefield he's negotiating. He is warning that the escalating violence by Islamic extremists deals with nothing short of "the present and future of the Egyptian people and will be treated with severity."

The warnings emanate from all corners of Egyptian society. Nobel Prize-winning novelist Nagib Mahfouz is a devout Muslim who understands that fundamentalism could sound the death knell for Egypt.

In the foyer of his Cairo apartment, Mahfouz warns that the Nile soil is fertile for the spread of extremism. It is being fertilized by disaffected Egyptian youth who are not satisfied with a former subsistence agricultural life but are not educated enough to compete in Cairo. In a country where the per capita yearly income is $700, those who call for a return to Islam find many converts.

Already fundamentalists have claimed responsibility for the assassinations of secularist writer Farag Fouda and Egypt's parliamentary speaker Rifaat al-Maghoub. They are also calling for the demolition of the country's Pharaonic monuments on the grounds they are "pagan."

Ever since the extremists murdered al-Maghoub in 1990, the formerly conciliatory Mubarak has arrested hundreds of fundamentalists and detained them without trial.

Mubarak's mass crackdown on fundamentalists may actually be accelerating the danger, rather than containing it. He risks making martyrs of a minority, especially given the penchant of Egyptian jailers to torture — and risks repeating the very move that finally precipitated the assassination of his predecessor, President Sadat. Only a month before his murder, Sadat became so frustrated with opponents that he arrested 1,500 religious activists, journalists, lawyers and professors.

Western and Egyptian government officials told our associate Dale Van Atta that there are three strong foreign patrons feeding the extremist insurgency — Iran, Libya and Sudan. But they've also come to believe that Saudi Arabia, despite close ties to the West, has become a significant, indirect supporter of these groups.

Fundamentalists may have found the Mubarak government's Achilles' heel by targeting Egypt's economic lifeblood, the $3 billion a year tourism industry, and the largest source of foreign exchange. At least nine incidents have been recorded this year, including the bombing of a French tour bus and the shooting up two of the Nile's "floating hotels" that cruise from Cairo to Aswan.

A terrorism scare might be enough to paralyze the Egyptian economy, soften up Mubarak and hasten the day of imposing an Iranian-style Islamic republic.

CHARLEY REESE

We must remain nation of political activists

Jerry Brown, former governor of California, cannot be said to have come back, because he never left. The media spotlight left. Brown didn't.

"We aren't going away, not this month, not a month from now, not six months from now, not next year or the year after, not until we have taken America back," said Brown at the Democratic convention.

Reese

He wasn't kidding. His "We the People" tabloid just arrived, chock full of news, suggestions, and a copy of Brown's platform in progress.

Brown, who set out to campaign by accepting only $100 contributions, outlasted Sens. Paul Harkin and Bob Kerrey and former Sen. Paul Tsongas. When Bill Clinton received the nomination, there were 600 Brown delegates in the convention hall.

Nor did Brown cave into pressure and jump on the Clinton bandwagon. The big problem most of the media had in reporting Brown was that they kept acting as if he were a conventional politician. The man isn't. He's played that game in the past, but he's moved beyond it.

What Brown is about is a peaceful revolution.

"Put simply," Brown wrote in his just-released tabloid, "the governing elites have neither the moral authority nor the mandate to govern. They can raise their pay. They can win their campaigns. They can amuse or occupy the media, but they cannot summon the national will to confront the growing crisis that is steadily dismantling the American dream.

"Going through this last year has been a revelation. I knew that politics had elements of a game but never before did I experience so directly the contradiction between the despair and anxiety in American neighborhoods and the sheer emptiness of contemporary campaigns. It is so plain that we need to shake up our smug political and media establishment."

Brown can probably do just that. Certainly if Clinton's populism turns out to be empty rhetoric, and he caves into the big bucks backers, Brown will be a thorn in his side.

Already the Californian is leading a fight to kill the free trade agreement as written. He will continue to push for campaign spending reforms, for tax reform, for greater empowerment of people, and do it all from the grass roots up.

The significance of this approach is this: the Establishment has two major weapons in dealing with boat-rockers. One, it can cut off the money; two, it can turn off the media spotlight. Movements based on money and media exposure then die quickly.

But a grass roots movement, not dependent on big contributions or the attention of the media — a movement communicating by computer bulletin boards, faxes, telephones and personal contacts — can grow like kudzu vines. By the time the Establishment notices it, it's already firmly established.

I'm happy to see this, not only because I admire Jerry Brown greatly, but also because it contributes — as Ross Perot's followers can contribute if they keep active — to the war against political apathy.

It is political apathy — the belief by people that they cannot change their lives through the democratic political process — that is the lethal threat to this great experiment in self-government we call the United States of America. Once a majority loses their belief in self-government, then it's all over.

The really positive thing about the 1992 campaign was how it demonstrated people still believe in the process. We can all wish the new president every success and give him our support, but we should always keep our options open — keep our interest in public affairs up, keep our ties to political organizations. If you're interested in We the People, the address is P.O. Box 5369, Santa Monica, CA 90409-5369.

We must remain a nation of political activists — that's what America is all about.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

It's tough being lame duck president

Somebody was saying, "It's got to be tough being a lame duck president."

That, of course, is what President Bush is, our lame duck president. I'm not certain if that makes Vice President Dan Quayle our quack or not, but the idea came to my mind.

Grizzard

President Bush has from now until January to remain in office before Bill Clinton moves in.

It's one thing to serve out two terms having been re-elected once. You couldn't stay four more years even if you wanted to.

But George Bush, as was Jimmy Carter, was blown out of office after one term. Several million people said, "Pack your bags."

So you know there are all these people out there who got together and ran him out of office. He knows nobody is going to take him seriously during the period he still has in the Oval Office, and he knows everybody will be talking about him behind his back. He has to be hurt. He has to be broken-hearted. And mad as hell.

But Jimmy Carter went quietly in 1980 and I presume George Bush will do the same thing.

Not me. If I'd been fired from my job, but they told me I could hang around for two more months, I'd leave them a few things to remember me by.

The first thing I would do as a lame duck president is make a speech on national television and tell everybody who voted against me to kiss my butt.

"My fellow Americans," I would say, "if you voted for those two idiots who ran against me, you can just kiss my butt."

What more could anybody do to George Bush?

He's too old to run for office again and he's got plenty of money so he could say just about anything he wanted to and would have absolutely nothing to lose.

After that I'd call U-Haul and rent a truck and start hauling some stuff out of the White House. You know Hillary Clinton is going to redecorate anyway. She's not going to want the same drapes Barbara Bush picked out.

So I'd take the drapes, a few rugs, maybe a painting or two and all the dishes and silverware. And the bedspreads, pillow cases and towels.

I'd clean out the joint, and if anybody said anything to me about it, I'd tell them to kiss my butt, too.

Then, I would take a lot of trips on Air Force One. The president, even a lame duck one, still has his own private jumbo jet, and I wouldn't let that big sucker just sit there over at Andrews Air Force base while I still had the keys to crank it, in a manner of speaking.

I'd go to New Zealand. I've always wanted to go there. I'd check out Australia, too, and if I were in Sydney and decided to go to Vegas in the middle of the night, I'd wake up the pilots and say, "Let's highball this thing to Nevada, boys, I feel lucky."

I wouldn't be nice to my successor's transition team either. "Did you hear some of the things that creep said about me? I'm not lifting a finger," is what I'd say.

After that I'd start some trouble for the president-elect. I'd do something like start a war with Canada. It's your problem now, big boy, is what I'd say just after the swearing in on Inauguration Day. I would sulk and pout and feel sorry for myself and just before I walked out of the White House for the last time, I'd stop up all the toilets.

As every sore loser knows, revenge is the very best way to get even.

Rebels bombs shake capital, doubts grow about coup attempt

LIMA, Peru (AP) — The Shining Path detonated two bombs in the capital Sunday, wounding 10 people in the rebels' largest attack since their leader was arrested two months ago.

More leaders of opposition parties, meanwhile, expressed skepticism about President Alberto Fujimori's claim there was a coup attempt last week by at least three retired generals and a few active-duty officers.

Some opposition groups said Fujimori may have pulled a hoax to help his candidates in constituent assembly elections on Nov. 22.

Fujimori said in a television interview he has ordered three active-duty generals, including the army's second-in-command, Gen. Jose Valdivia, freed from house arrest after an investigation cleared them of involvement in the coup.

About 25 active and retired army officers have been arrested. Fujimori said the plotters intended to assassinate him Friday and postpone the constituent assembly elections for a year.

The 80-seat assembly will replace the Congress Fujimori dissolved in April and sit until general elections in 1995, as well as write a new constitution.

Polls show candidates from Fujimori's Change 90-New Majority coalition receiving about half the seats, and several opposition leaders have accused the president of inventing the coup plot to win voters' sympathy so his candidates win a majority.

"It's a farce, a mockery to boost Fujimori's standings on the eve of the elections," Jorge Del Castillo, a member of the dissolved Congress, said Saturday. His Aprista party, Peru's main opposition party, is boycotting the elections, claiming they will only legitimize a dictatorship.

Fujimori dissolved Congress and the judiciary and set up one-man rule because he said government corruption was blocking his efforts to fight the Shining Path and drug traffickers.

Joining the Aprista party Sunday in expressing doubt about the coup plot story were leaders of the centrist Solidarity and Democracy party, the conservative Popular Christian Party and the centrist Democratic Coordinator Movement.

"I don't believe there was a coup d'etat going on, nor does it justify the enormous propaganda apparatus being mounted to confuse public opinion eight days before elections," said Manuel Moreyra, head of the Solidarity and Democracy party.

The Maoist rebels left leaflets at Sunday's bombing sites urging people to boycott the elections, a police spokesman said. The Shining Path has tried to sabotage elections since it took up arms in 1980 to seize power.

Guerrilla violence has continued unabated in the countryside since Shining Path leader Abimael Guzman was arrested in mid-September and sentenced to life in prison. Sunday's bombings were the first major attacks in the capital since then.

The two bombs exploded almost simultaneously Sunday morning. A 660-pound car bomb parked outside a police academy in Lima's Chorrillos district could be heard 10 miles away. It wounded 10 people, including four children, and shattered windows.

Sarajevo residents evacuate during lull

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — About 1,500 people jammed into buses Sunday for a hasty escape from their shattered city while a cease-fire continued to hold.

Elsewhere, there were scattered reports of fighting but no serious violations of the 4-day-old truce.

But the war, which broke out in March after Muslims and Croats voted to break away from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia, continued to take its toll. U.N. officials said thousands of refugees streaming south from the western Bosnian town of Jajce toward a refugee center in Travnik were stranded halfway near Karaula.

A British armored team sent to rescue them had not been successful, the U.N. officials said.

The officials did not have further details. But refugees in the area said between 500 and 2,000 people were trapped by fighting as Serbs, who captured Jajce several weeks ago, advanced southeast toward Travnik, 45 miles northwest of Sarajevo.

In the capital, about 600 Serbs, mostly women and children, bade tearful farewell to husbands and fathers and were safely evacuated on Red Cross buses to the Serb-held suburb of Lukavica.

About 900 Croats, former residents of the battered western suburb Stup, later climbed into the same buses and headed west toward Croat-controlled Kiseljak, about 15 miles away.

"I'm sad because we're splitting up," said Branimir Pavlovic, a young Serb father, as he waved to his departing wife and 3-year-old son. He said they hoped eventually to go to London.

"I'll try to go, too, but I don't know when or how," he said. Once he leaves, he said, he does not intend to return. "I'd live anywhere, but never again in the Balkans."

His family, like the other evacuated Serbs, was to be transferred in Lukavica to buses bound for Belgrade, the Serbian and federal Yugoslav capital.

Among the Croats, Zdenka Lukic said she was leaving her mother and grandmother behind and heading to the Croatian port of Split for the sake of her 9-year-old son, Vidor. Like most Sarajevo children, he's had no school, little recreation and poor nutrition since the siege began.

Red Cross workers and military police struggled to keep order and turn away people who tried to board the buses even though they were not on lists approved by Bosnian authorities.

Lithuania readies return to Communism

VILNIUS, Lithuania (AP) — The first republic to break away from the Soviet Union appeared Sunday to be on the verge of returning former Communists to power in a bitterly contested parliamentary election.

Lithuanian voters angered by factory shutdowns, soaring prices and lack of hot water said as they left the polls that they were ready to give the former Communists a chance to restore economic order.

Leaders of the former Lithuanian Communist Party, now called the Democratic Labor Party, promised that if they won, they would safeguard Lithuania's independence and continue to build a Western-style market economy.

But they also said they would improve trade relations with Russia and demand better terms from the International Monetary Fund, which has forced Lithuania to freeze government wages and hold down public spending in return for Western loans.

Under gray skies and a chilly drizzle, turnout appeared to be light in the 61 districts where runoffs were necessary because no candidate won a majority in the first round of voting three weeks ago. About 70 percent of Lithuania's 2.5 million eligible voters turned out in the first round.

Sajudis, the anti-Communist party that led Lithuania to independence in 1990, has "done very little in the past two years," Andrei Kobzar, 30, said as he cast his ballot at a high school in downtown Vilnius.

"Actually, they've done a lot — to make our life impossible," said his wife, Valentina, an unemployed waitress. "Everything is bad now. We live in a such a hole, with two kids. I have no job, no welfare payments."

More economic bad news appeared on the eve of the election when the daily newspaper Tiesa reported that industrial production has tumbled 48.5 percent this year.

According to other recent reports, one-third of all factories have closed or sharply cut back employment.

LANEY: Speaker seeks change

(From 1A)

and I'm pretty tired of them," said Rep. Libby Linebarger, D-Manchaca, one of 30 allies who helped Laney work the phones in his campaign for the speaker's office, which Gib Lewis will vacate in January.

Friends describe Laney, 49, as a man of simple tastes, strong family ties and workaholic habits. He is notorious for running marathon committee meetings and shrewdly manipulating the legislative process. "Laney could kill your bill and you'd think he was helping you pass it," an admiring legislator once said.

Unlike Lewis, he has little time or interest for favorite lobby-paid activities such as golf and hunting. But Laney, a Democrat, was never known as a reformer until his race for speaker, and he has been slow to commit to specific changes in the way the House operates. Critics question his pledge to restrict the speaker's power, but even they can't help but like the genial Laney and his commitment to his home and family.

A pilot, Laney spends a lot of time flying from Austin to his home near Hale Center, a hamlet of 2,000 people north of Lubbock. There, he immerses himself in cotton farming, collecting classic cars and following the exploits of his three children. One son is a senior and a member of the local basketball team that plays twice a week.

"Last session, Pete only missed one ball game," said Nelda Laney, his wife of 29 years. "He would come home and go right back. He didn't sleep much, but it was important to be there for the family."

Mrs. Laney said her husband has changed little since she met him at Texas Tech University: "You are not going to see any exciting scandals at the Laneys' house. We're not party animals."

'He (Pete Laney) realizes he's not the slickest dresser, and he's certainly not the world's best speaker. But he is the most honest, hard worker.'

— Nelda Laney, wife of new speaker

Outside of Hale Center, Ms. Linebarger said, House members will find Laney at the speaker's podium.

"I think you will find that Laney's administration is not going to be dominated by hunting trips," she said. "It's not going to be dominated by action on the golf course. He's going to expect members to stay here and work."

Yet critics question whether Laney, a fixture in the House for 20 years, will loosen the grip of the speaker and lobbyists on the legislative process.

"He was the author of the ethics bill," said Rep. Billy Clemons, D-Lufkin, who supported Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, for speaker. "And everyone knows what a sham it is."

After two years of publicity about vacations, housing subsidies and other lobby-paid perks for lawmakers, Laney bottled the bill in committee until the end of the 1991 regular session.

The result: The Legislature voted on what its leaders claimed was their top priority that year in the final minutes of the 140-day session. Most members never got a chance to read the bill before they voted.

That kind of treatment prompted many House members, particularly newer members, to complain about being shut out of the process.

Laney, however, has convinced even some reform-minded members that he now is serious about changing the way the House is run.

"I want a fair and open calendar process and an adequate opportunity for members to review measures before we cast a vote," Laney said. But he remained evasive about details, saying it is a matter for the House to decide in January.

"Mr. Laney's one paragraph conceptual commitment to rules reform needs to be fleshed out more," said Rep. Elliott Naishtat, D-Austin.

Laney dodged a question about rewriting the ethics bill and declined to say what he might do with any surplus campaign funds in his speaker's account. The law does not require retiring speakers to tell the public how they spend the money. Lewis, for example, had an estimated $400,000-plus in his speaker's account when he announced his retirement.

Laney has pledged to limit his tenure to two terms, but he sees no need to put that in law or in the House rules. Lewis made similar promises before serving a record five terms.

Laney has no obvious agenda except to run the House. In his speaker's campaign, he counted support from a diverse group of lobbyists — from lawyer-bashing business interests to trial lawyers.

His supporters, however, insist that the House will look much different under his leadership.

Ms. Linebarger predicted fewer decisions will be made behind the scenes and that there will be more floor debates on the issues. "He believes debate is healthy and members should have their say on the House floor."

While Laney may favor open debate, he is not always comfortable speaking to crowds. Mrs. Laney said her husband has always been that way.

"He realizes he's not the slickest dresser, and he's certainly not the world's best speaker. But he is the most honest, hard worker."

Though he shies from public speaking, Laney is quick to quip from his committee chair.

Former Rep. Sam Russell, now Gov. Ann Richards' legislative liaison, remembers one Laney zinger about his bill to legalize raffles.

As Russell remembers it, Laney zeroed in on an anti-gambling lobbyist who was testifying for a Baptist organization. "It's interesting to see you testifying against this bill," Laney told the lobbyist, "when just not two weeks ago the First Baptist Church raffled off a turkey in my hometown."

California town gets ready for Clintons

SUMMERLAND, Calif. (AP) — Doug Taylor bought a saxophone and dusted off a photo of Air Force One in the 12-year-old "presidential booth" at his Nugget Restaurant. Bill and Hillary Clinton are coming to town.

"If there's a chance Clinton might come in here, I want to be ready," said Taylor, 51, whose cafe serves as an unofficial meeting spot for this seaside community of 2,000 just south of Santa Barbara.

Dozens of journalists invaded Summerland on Friday when word came that Hollywood friends of President-elect Clinton had acquired a beachfront estate.

"I hope we won't have to dress up," said 35-year resident Doris McCloskey, 63, as she drove along the town's main thoroughfare that was jammed with news vans and reporters.

A quarter-mile away, media helicopters hovered over the $4 million-plus estate and Santa Barbara County sheriff's deputies chased photographers away from bushes and the compound's imposing wooden gate.

Harry Thomason and Linda Bloodworth-Thomason, producers of TV's "Designing Women" and "Evening Shade," acquired the two-story home for use by the Clintons.

"This is not going to be a Western White House. ... The Clintons may use it from time to time, but it is not exclusively for their use, by any means," said Steve Roth, assistant to Ms. Bloodworth-Thomason.

"We have tons of celebrities here. It's just another famous person to take care of," said Deputy Darrin Stern.

Jane Russell, Robert Mitchum, Michael Douglas, Kevin Costner and Clinton White House transition director Warren Christopher live nearby. Former President Reagan's 680-acre ranch sits on a mountain 20 miles up the coast.

Not everyone was thrilled. Nils Hardin, 58, furiously pulled his 1967 Volkswagen bus into the driveway of the presidential beach house to-be and voiced his opinion.

"This is an old hippie village and now we have a yuppie president coming in here," Hardin said. "Real estate people began coming in here a couple of years ago and now there's BMW's and Range Rovers and now Clinton."

But most residents of Summerland, about 80 miles northwest of Los Angeles, were enthusiastic.

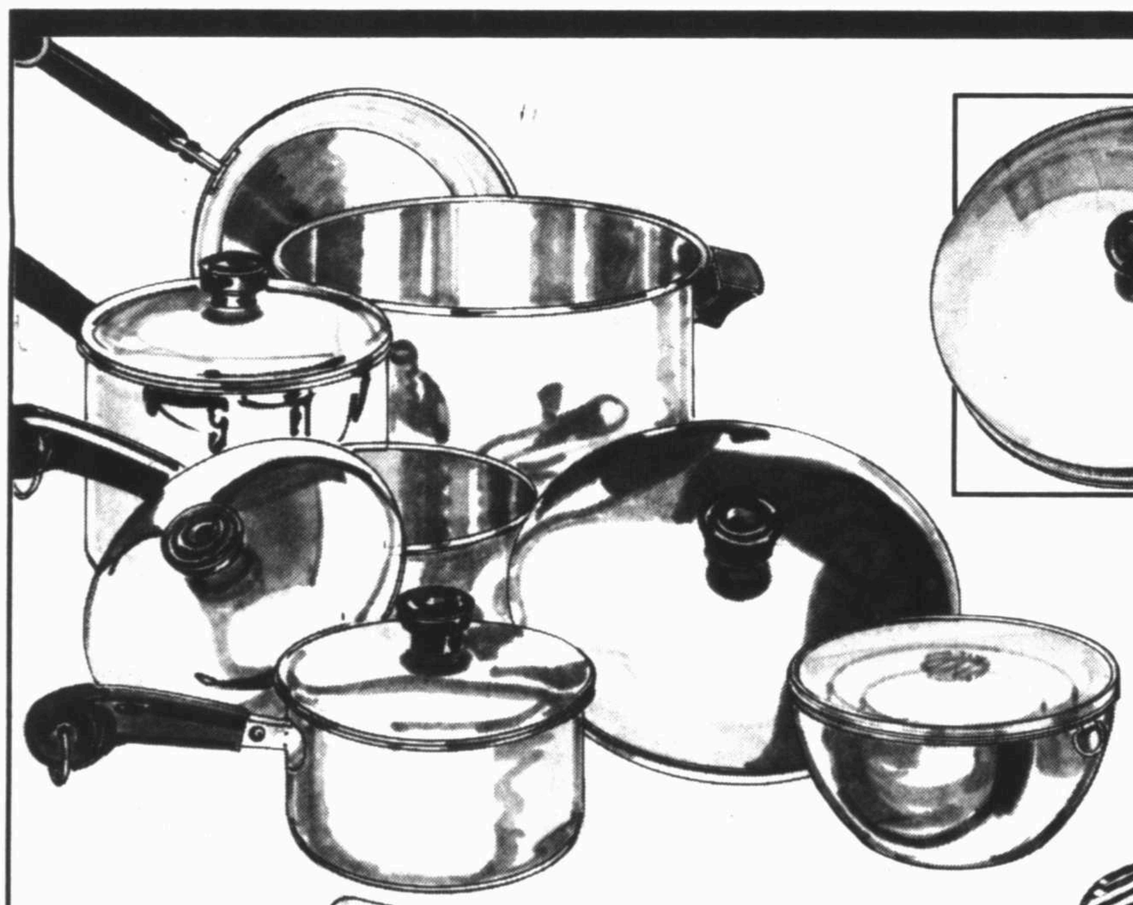

"Hopefully it will help property values," said resident Kathleen Carrigan, a real estate saleswoman.

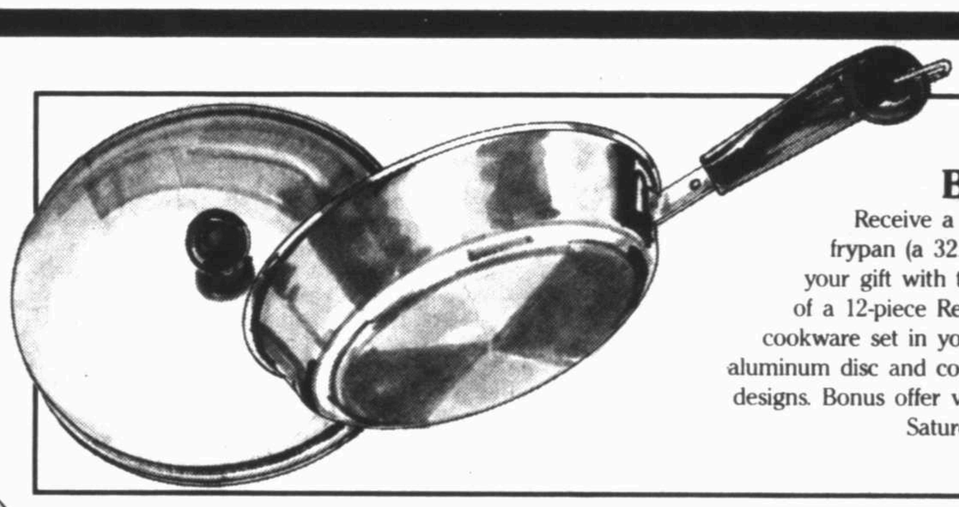

At the restaurant, Taylor was ecstatic. As soon as the word hit town, he ran out and paid $195 for a sax like the one Clinton plays.

"I think it's great for us. I can't see how it will hurt the town," said Taylor.

JUST MAKING A LIVING

Someone once said, "One man's garbage is another man's treasure."

Albert Cutting agrees with this statement, and has taken it to heart.

Cutting has taken what many today consider garbage and glibly toss out the window of their car daily without so much as a passing thought and has turned it into his treasure.

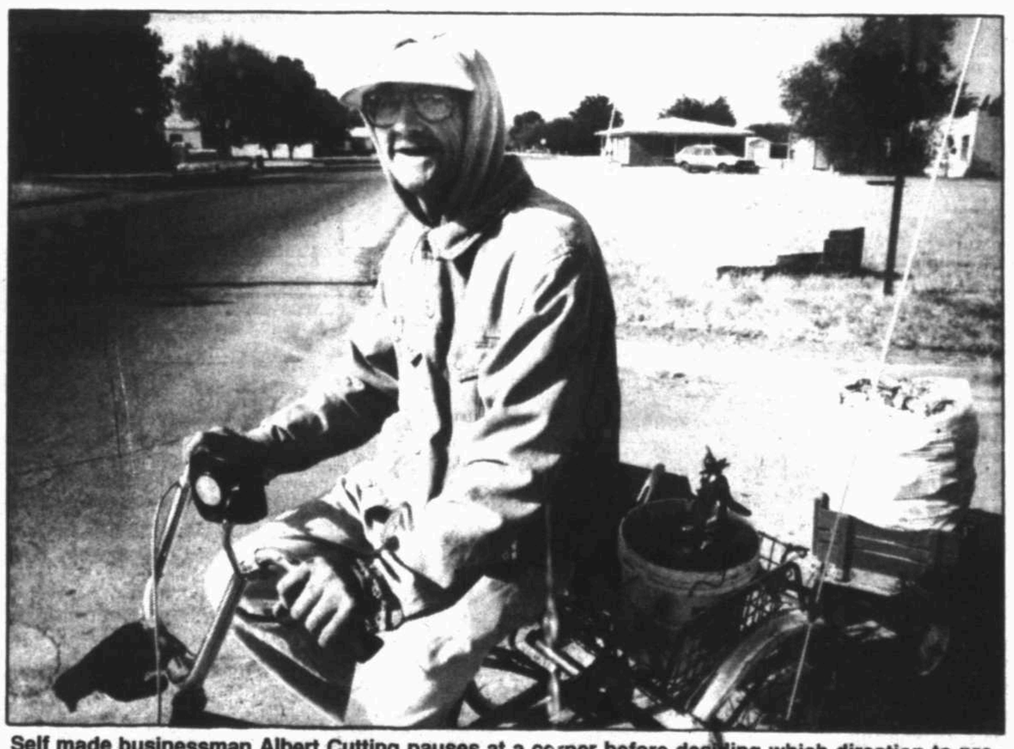

Cutting collects aluminum cans and sells them for cold hard cash.

Mounted atop a man-sized tricycle, with a child-size red wooden wagon attached to its rear, Cutting pedals his way through the neighborhoods of Midland scouring the streets and alleys searching for the glimmering round objects of his desire.

Some kind Midlanders make Cutting's task easier.

"Some people keep all their old cans for me, and I come by and pick them up," said Cutting.

"But I don't mind looking for them myself," says Cutting, "at least I'm working."

Self made businessman Albert Cutting pauses at a corner before deciding which direction to proceed next. Cutting says he likes his job because it keeps him out of the house.

Texas wineries watching closely European trade war threat

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press writer

FREDERICKSBURG — As proposed tariffs threaten to hike the price of European white wines, Texas wine producers say they are poised to carve their own bigger niche in the marketplace.

But some Texas producers doubt the U.S. government will ever impose the punitive sanctions on $300 million worth of European goods. The 200 percent tariffs could triple the cost of a bottle of French white wine.

"I think it's a lot of Washington silliness," said Karl Koch, owner of Pedernales Vineyards near Fredericksburg.

Koch believes the United States and the European Community will resolve the trade dispute before the Dec. 5 deadline.

So does Walter Haimann, chief operating officer and president of Llano Estacado winery in Lubbock.

"I think somebody's going to blink," Haimann said. "It's like two kids playing chicken with a car. Somebody's going to veer to the right or the left."

The United States has demanded that the European Community make cuts in its farm subsidies, which Washington contends keep prices unfairly low for European farm goods while robbing American soybean farmers and other oilseed farmers of international sales.

EC leaders have warned they will respond with retaliatory tariffs on American goods if the U.S. sanctions are imposed. Top EC negotiators said Wednesday they would meet their U.S. counterparts within a week to try an avert a trade war.

Haimann said the mere threat of sanctions could hurt Texas wine sales before the holidays if retailers, distributors and importers are "begging, borrowing and doing anything they can to get cash" to buy European wines before the tariff deadline.

"I do believe if the French could have cooked this one up, they would have cooked it up," he said.

But what about long-term effects of a stiff wine tariff?

For Llano Estacado, a major Texas producer and exporter to Europe, business could get rough if Europe imposes retaliatory sanctions on American wines, Haimann said.

Still, Haimann and other wine makers agree Texas wineries could boost their sales in the long run if Americans purchase more domestic wines.

"I feel certain that our white wine sales will increase," said Ned Simes, owner of Grape Creek Vineyard between Fredericksburg and Stonewall.

Simes already had planned to be in Houston this weekend, and now he intends to deliver more Grape Creek wines to customers requesting it because of the tariff threat.

But Simes, who also believes the European dispute will be resolved, said he doesn't depend on a trade war to boost his wine's sales.

"If we can't stand the heat of the European pressure, we should not be in the business," said Simes. "I love the French wines, frankly."

Kim McPherson, wine maker at Cap Rock Winery in Lubbock, said Texas wine producers might not see immediate effects from a European tariff because distributors would have European wine stockpiles that could last six to eight months.

"Over a long period of time, it would probably help us. It would help California, Washington, Oregon. It would help all the United States," McPherson said. "A $6 bottle of French wine would go up to $18. That would definitely help us."

The price of Texas wines range from about $5 to about $15 per bottle, depending on the type of wine and the producer.

McPherson expressed the attitude of many Texas wine producers about the proposed tariffs: wait and see.

"We're not going out and buying extra chardonnay or anything," he said. "We've got enough to do now, bottling this year's crush."

Once commonplace in Texas, almost all the state's wineries shut down with the onset of Prohibition in the 1920s. In the mid-1970s and 1980s, Texas vineyards and wineries began a comeback. Now there are more than two dozen in the state.

Wine makers say it has taken years to overcome the public's lack of knowledge about Texas wines. At last, they say, Texas wines are starting to be taken seriously as Texas products win wine competitions and receive good reviews in wine publications.

Koch of Pedernales Vineyards said the uproar over European wine tariffs could attract more attention to wines in general, and that could help Texas wines, which he describes as "a drop in the wine bucket" in the marketplace.

House to consider school finance amendment

By Peggy Fikac
Associated Press writer

AUSTIN — The Texas House is poised to debate school finance reform this week.

But Speaker Gib Lewis knows the agreement will be hard to reach.

"The problem we have here ... dealing with a 150 (House) members with their own ideas is a lot different than dealing with 31 (Senate) members and their ideas," Lewis said last week, after the Senate easily approved a proposed constitutional amendment on school funding.

State leaders have said schools could be closed if lawmakers fail to meet a June 1, 1993, court deadline for a new funding plan.

The Supreme Court has thrown out three school funding laws beginning in 1989, when it said school districts should get the same amount of education money from similar local property tax rates. Public education is funded mostly from local taxes and state aid.

Lewis, D-Fort Worth, called the school finance issue "very emotional," and emotions have run high in the special session on school finance that began last week.

Rep. John Culberson, R-Houston, introduced a proposed constitutional amendment that was denounced by several colleagues as racist.

Culberson, who is white, said it was "outrageous" to call his proposal racially motivated. His plan would limit court intevention because it deems a funding plan constitutional if it furthers a legitimate state purpose.

Gov. Ann Richards, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and Lewis have backed another proposed amendment.

Their proposal, which has been approved 29-2 by the Senate, would require that 95 percent of state and local education money be fairly distributed based on school districts' local property tax rates.

The proposal also would:

■ Allow local property tax money to be redistributed statewide from wealthier to poorer school districts.

■ Authorize using $750 million in state bonds to help build school facilities.

■ Create a $1 billion Good Schools Fund from the Available School Fund, which currently gives every school district about $300 per student. The richest districts no longer would get state money from the fund.

Soon after the Senate approved that proposal last week, the House Public Education Committee approved an amended version.

The committee substitute would take out the 95 percent equity standard. It also would limit the redistribution of local property tax money.

The current system, which transfers funds among school districts within could be redistributed to counties, was ruled unconstitutional by the Texas Supreme Court in January. That's when the court set the June 1, 1993, deadline to fix the system.

A two-thirds vote of the Legislature is required to put a proposed constitutional amendment before Texas voters.

A vanishing breed: Rural service stations

PAPALOTE (AP) — Leet Gilliam is a vanishing breed of small-town folks who make a living pumping gas and providing roadside comfort at rural service stations.

"A little man can't compete with the big boys anymore," said Gilliam, 80, who owns a service station built by his father in 1927 about 11 miles north of Sinton on U.S. Highway 181. "People will drive to town to save a penny."

Gilliam has lived in Papalote off and on for 65 years. About the only time he left Papalote was for three years of Air Force duty in World War II.

"When I first came here there were more places along the highway. We had two grocery stores, a hotel, a school and a railroad depot. The post office was at our gas station for about 25 years," said Gilliam. "I'm about the only thing left that has been here very long."

Gilliam passes time sitting on a wooden bench near the station's front door. He is kept company by his tiny Chihuahua, Pee Wee.

Many motorists honk and wave at Gilliam as they drive past the little, white building.

"He is the best watch dog I've ever had," Gilliam said. "I know when someone is waiting outside because Pee Wee just keeps barking until I get to the front door."

There aren't too many customers, however, except for people living in the Papalote area.

"I have only one pump for unleaded gas. I don't sell much gas, except to folks around here for their cars or lawn mowers," Gilliam said. "I sold Texaco gas for 60 years. A few years ago they wanted me to paint my station their colors. I wouldn't do it so they took down the Texaco sign. I now buy gas from Exxon."

Gilliam does stock some items such as potato chips, canned goods, candy and cold drinks. A homemade sign also boosts that beer to go is sold "6.5 days" a week.

"I've been told I sell the coldest beer in South Texas," Gilliam said. "But the sign is a little wrong. I can't sell beer Sunday mornings and I usually close on Wednesdays."

Pecans to be expensive for holiday season

COLLEGE STATION (AP) Pecans will be costly for consumers for the third straight holiday season.

Georgia's curtailed crop, average crops elsewhere, few pecans carried over from storage, and a strong demand are contributing to the higher prices.

Latest U.S. Department of Agriculture projections estimate the Texas crop will be about 60 million pounds. But, like last year, that number keeps slipping due to weather, fungus and insects. The total crop could measure only 50 million pounds.

Additionally, the total U.S. pecan production forecast at 207 million pounds is nearly 100 million pounds lower than last year.

"The price to the grower is going to be high, and consumers are going to have to pay as much as they did last year," said Dr. George Ray McEachern, horticulturist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

The poor crop means that consumers can expect to pay as much as $4 to $7 per pound at supermarkets for shelled pecans and $2 to $3 per pound for in-shell pecans at roadside stands and farmer's markets.

"Other states are expecting average crops at best," McEachern said, "but Georgia will have the lowest crop on record." Georgia normally produces 30 percent to 40 percent of the nation's pecans, but may make only 60 million pounds this year, half of its normal crop.

"The trees look great, the crop's just low," he said. "Three years of drought and disease have weakened the trees."

Georgia also had its earliest freeze on record last year, sapping the trees even further.

Texas producers are facing problems of their own. Guadalupe County, which has been one of the top 10 producers in the state, is harvesting only 5 percent of its normal crop. County Extension agent Gus Persyn said growers are expecting to produce only 100,000 pounds; their normal yield is about 2 million pounds.

"There are few orchards with a good crop," he said. "The drought of three years ago, all of that rainfall last year, and lots of disease problems took their toll."

Scab, a fungal disease that affects the growth and development of the nut, gave producers many problems this year. It was promoted by lower-than-normal summer temperatures and higher-than-normal humidity.

In orchards near Fort Stockton in Pecos County, however, producers are expecting a banner year in yields and quality. County Extension agent Zan Matthies expects yields of 1,500 pounds per acre from 2,500 acres, or more than 3 million pounds.

"Our quality is going to be excellent," he said. The pecans were affected little by disease and insects, and because they are irrigated, did not suffer from lack of water.

Some growers in the Quemado Valley in Maverick County and along the Nueces River Canyon area in Southwest Texas are expecting yields of 1,200 pounds per acre. Because most of these are young orchards producing only 75 to 80 percent of their capacity, no averages are available yet.

Caravans for Cuba heads toward Laredo

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Caravans of food and other supplies for Cuba were headed toward the Texas-Mexico border, but organizers expected trouble in their bid to defy a trade embargo.

More than 100 activists were expected to finish gathering and move Tuesday across one of the international bridges in Laredo, triggering a possible confrontation with federal customs officials.

Organizers of the mission said they expected arrests when they try to take 43 carloads of food and other humanitarian supplies through Mexico for the destination in Cuba, a group spokeswoman said Saturday.

President Bush last month signed new, tougher restrictions on trade with Cuba

But the activists, sponsored by the Minnesota-based Pastors for Peace, want to deliver items such as medicine, powdered milk, bicycles and spare parts, school supplies and Spanish-language Bibles, spokeswoman Laurie Port said.

DEAR ABBY

Young boy's girlish curls are his mom's 'pride and joy'

By Abigail Van Buren

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have a bone to pick with you. You said there was nothing wrong with taking a little boy to the barber shop and having the barber give him a real boy's haircut when his parents were on vacation. (The boy was left in the care of his grandmother.)

I think moms should be the ones to decide how long their little boys' hair should be, and grandparents should refrain from interfering.

I kept my son's hair in long (shoulder-length) curls until he was in first grade because I thought it was so beautiful I couldn't bear to cut it. I always took him to my beauty parlor to have his hair cut and curled even after he was in elementary school.

The only time he ever looked like a little girl was when he was being punished and made to wear a little girl's dress until he agreed to behave better. This kind of punishment worked for me a whole lot better than spankings and scoldings. By the time he was a teen-ager, he was a very polite and well-trained young man.

I am proud to say that he has never been a problem for me. He still wears his hair in waves and listens to his mom. — PROUD OF SONNY

P.S. The first thing I did after I got married was to get my husband to let his hair grow so I could give him a curly perm. He had the prettiest dark brown curls in town for nearly 20 years, and knows better than to even think about going to a barber shop.

DEAR MOM: Your letter was most unusual, and I'm glad your son turned out so well. But your method of disciplining him curled MY hair. To punish a child by humiliating him and forcing him to wear a girl's dress could have had serious emotional repercussions, and I would be curious to know what he thought of it — now that he's an adult. Sonny?

DEAR ABBY: In January of this year, you ran a checklist of symptoms associated with diabetes. As I read that list, it became obvious to me that my boyfriend — who is now my fiance — is a diabetic. I showed him your column and asked him to go see a doctor.

After much procrastination on his part, and a lot of nagging on mine, "Marty" finally made an appointment with a doctor. They ran a lot of tests on him, and when the results were all in, it confirmed my hunch. (Marty's blood sugar was more than 300 — the average person's is about 100.)

His doctor prescribed two Micronase pills a day. Well, I am happy to report that Marty's blood sugar level is now down to 130. He takes only one pill a day now, and we are hoping he will be completely off them soon.

Abby, I want to thank you very much for that column. If I hadn't seen it and insisted that Marty get a complete physical, there's no telling what might have happened. We are now looking forward to a healthy, happy life together. — CARLA IN NEW HAMPSHIRE

DEAR CARLA: I'm pleased to know that column was helpful. I did get a little flak from a reader who writes a local health column. Said columnist wrote: "Please, Dear Abby, don't give advice on matters of health, and I promise to stay away from advice to the lovelorn."

What teens need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, and getting along with peers and parents is in "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Washington fast food is ready for Clinton

By Nita Lelyveld
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Bill Clinton doesn't have to worry about a shortage of his favorite ribs, pizza and enchiladas in the White House. Even restaurants here that don't deliver say they will provide fast service if he asks.

There are golden arches just a block and a half away for his favorite post-jog cup of coffee, and the nearest Domino's on 12th Street says it can get a pizza to the White House in 17 minutes flat.

"We do it all the time already," says Steve Hawkins, a Domino's manager in training. "We don't know if it's for the president, but we make a lot of deliveries to the White House."

Delivery people don't actually walk to the door of the White House. They leave the food at the security gates, where they are paid, even reasonably tipped, Hawkins says.

But is a president really likely to be handed a bill before he walks out the front door of his neighborhood McDonald's?

"Maybe we can give him some discounts," suggests Mario Castillo, manager of the 17th street branch. "Of course, he's going to be one of our favorite customers."

As for the java, it's great, Castillo says, adding, "It's Colombian coffee, you know."

Clinton should be pleased to find that rib prices may even be lower in Washington than Little Rock.

Back home, at Shug's, Clinton usually orders a dinner that includes dry ribs — marinated and slow cooked on charcoal — as well as beans, coleslaw, bread and butter.

At Hogs on the Hill on 14th Street, a large barbecue platter of pork ribs costs $7.50. It's served up with homemade cornbread, plus two side orders from a choice of collard greens, potato salad, cole slaw, red beans and rice.

State board inquires in Metroplex death

ARLINGTON (AP) — Someone may have killed Corliss Diane Ancrum, but a key medical examiner can't prove it with forensic science.

Ms. Ancrum's family says the death of the 25-year-old Arlington woman on March 19, 1991, wasn't properly investigated. Police say they have a suspect but can't charge him without a homicide ruling from the Tarrant County Medical Examiner's office.

Meanwhile, state officials in April began an investigation to find out what happened to parts of Ms. Ancrum's neck needed for further tests.

"My daughter is not going to be a statistic for Texas, and her death swept under the rug like this," Edward Ancrum said. "All we want is justice."

Ancrum and his wife, Jacquelyn, have accused the Tarrant County medical examiner's office and Arlington police of not taking their daughter's death seriously because she was black.

"They blew it from day one. They never treated it as a murder case," Ancrum said.

But Tarrant County Medical Examiner Nizam Peerwani said there was no conspiracy.

"I have no evidence," Peerwani said. "If I had evidence, I'd call it a homicide."

After the Ancrums paid a forensic specialist to exhume and re-examine the body, Peerwani concluded the death was "suspicious of a homicide by asphyxia."

Deputy Medical Examiner Stephen Putthoff found no evidence of strangulation when he did the autopsy.

But Putthoff changed his initial ruling of death by natural causes to "undetermined" after police grew suspicious that the woman met with foul play.

The Ancrum couple last saw their daughter alive when she left their home at about 11:30 p.m. March 18, 1991, promising to call after she made the 15-minute drive to her apartment.

The call never came.

Police and paramedics found Ms. Ancrum unconscious on her closet floor. She was pronounced dead from cardiac arrest about one hour later at Arlington Memorial Hospital.

Her parents found blood on the walls, ceiling and bed of the apartment.

Police said the blood and splintered bathroom door did not necessarily point to a slaying.

A grand jury in February declined to indict the man police suspect — but have never arrested — in the death.

Legislator: bingo needs work

HOUSTON (AP) — A veteran state legislator who helped launch bingo in Texas more than a decade ago says the game hasn't turned out the way he expected.

"The whole industry needs to be overhauled from top to bottom," said state Rep. Doyle Willis, D-Fort Worth, chairman of the House General Investigating Committee.

"It's one of those things I helped start, and it didn't turn out to be what we anticipated," Doyle told the Houston Chronicle. "We anticipated that no one would make any money except charities."

But statistics show that the charities' take from bingo is shrinking. The game was legalized in 1981 to solely benefit charities.

The Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission, which regulates bingo, reported gross bingo receipts statewide increased from about $654 million in fiscal 1991 to nearly $671 million in fiscal 1992.

The state's share of taxes on gross receipts rose from $11.1 million in fiscal 1991 to $20.1 million in fiscal 1992.

Five die of asphyxia in Houston fire

HOUSTON (AP) — Preliminary autopsy results show that five family members whose burned bodies were found inside a home died of asphyxia, but authorities have not yet determined how that happened.

The Harris County Medical Examiner's office was awaiting the results of toxicology tests before determining if the asphyxia was caused by strangulation, smoke inhalation of some other means, Houston Capt. Bill Edison said.

The five bodies, bound and gagged and burned beyond recognition, were found Friday evening in three separate bedrooms of a west Houston house. A neighbor who spotted smoke coming from the house called firefighters, who made the grim discovery.

The medical examiner's office, which completed the autopsies Saturday, identified the five as Otis Coulson, 66; his wife, Mary Coulson, 54; their daughter, Robin Coulson Wentworth, 25; son-in-law Richard Wentworth, 27; and another daughter, Sarah Coulson, 21.

Otis and Mary Coulson lived in the home along with Sarah Coulson, a University of Houston student. Robin and Richard Wentworth lived in a nearby apartment, and a relative said Robin was pregnant with the couple's first child.

A surviving son, Robert Coulson, 24, was interviewed Saturday in an effort to gather family background that could be helpful in the case, Edison said.

Police have not determined a motive for the killings, but they said there may have been more than one person involved.

Ms. Ross said police were not looking at Robert Coulson as a possible suspect.

Educators say texts are wrong concerning 'X'

DALLAS (AP) — As the long-awaited "Malcolm X" hits movie screens this week, educators in Dallas and across the country say some bad information about the civil rights leader can be blamed on textbooks.

Those inaccuracies keep teachers from relying on textbooks to teach about Malcolm X, said Mae Thomas, an American government teacher at Skyline High School.

For instance: Many Dallas history classes use the "History of the U.S., Civil War to the Present." That book describes Malcolm X as a minister of "the Black Muslims."

But his religion was actually called The Nation of Islam — black followers earning their nickname from a reporter, said Oba T'Shaka, chairman of the Black Studies Department at San Francisco State University.

"The people who wrote the material have little grounding in history or what little material there was would have been accurate," T'Shaka said.

The textbook used in Dallas devotes just five paragraphs to the civil rights leader's belief in racial separation, what whites thought about him and his assassination in 1965.

Some students said what they learned about Malcolm X in English or history class wasn't much.

"Some people know part of his life, but not the real meaning, said Jasmond Anderson, a senior at Lincoln High School.

T'Shaka argued Malcolm X receives less favor than other civil rights leaders because he was viewed as a hatemonger who advocated violence.

"He was treated as a bogeyman," he said. "Because of that image, public schools are a lot less willing to deal with him than with Martin Luther King."

Ms. Thomas said she is encouraging her students to see Spike Lee's film, which opens Wednesday.

"I think they will get more of an understanding of what Malcolm X was trying to do," she said.

Gramm, Quayle lead list of GOPs fighting for control

FONTANA, Wis. (AP) — Republican governors gathered Sunday for some soul-searching over the GOP's presidential defeat, their attempts to study what went wrong this year clouded somewhat by an intense fight for control of the national party beginning next year.

As the first post-election Republican gathering, the meeting attracted not only GOP state executives but many of those involved in the ideological tug-of-war for control of the Republican National Committee.

The event at Wisconsin's Lake Geneva also features several 1996 Republican presidential prospects, from Vice President Dan Quayle and Texas Sen. Phil Gramm to a handful of the governors themselves.

In their first formal session Monday, the governors are in for a sobering analysis of the 1992 campaign's impact on the Republican Party's image.

Post-election GOP polling to be discussed at the session found that voters eager to shake up Washington have stamped Republicans as the "status quo party" and Democrats as "for change."

Also, in a troubling sign for already anxious GOP moderates, voters now brand Democrats the "pro-choice" party on abortion rights and Republicans as "right to life."

The meeting also is the first for public jockeying to succeed Bush appointee Rich Bond as RNC chairman, a spirited contest pitting members of the party's moderate, conservative, and archconservative factions against each other.

Whether the GOP governors will — or can — assert themselves in that fight is unclear. The governors' organization sat out the last major leadership battle — the 1980 presidential primaries — and then had little influence on the national party during the Reagan-Bush years.

Now, the group includes many of the GOP's stars, several of whom are mentioned as potential 1996 presidential or vice presidential candidates: Govs. Pete Wilson of California, William Weld of Massachusetts, Jim Edgar of Illinois, John Engler of Michigan, Carroll Campbell of South Carolina and host Tommy Thompson of Wisconsin. But the chairman is elected by RNC members from each state, many of whom have no or only loose ties to the governors.

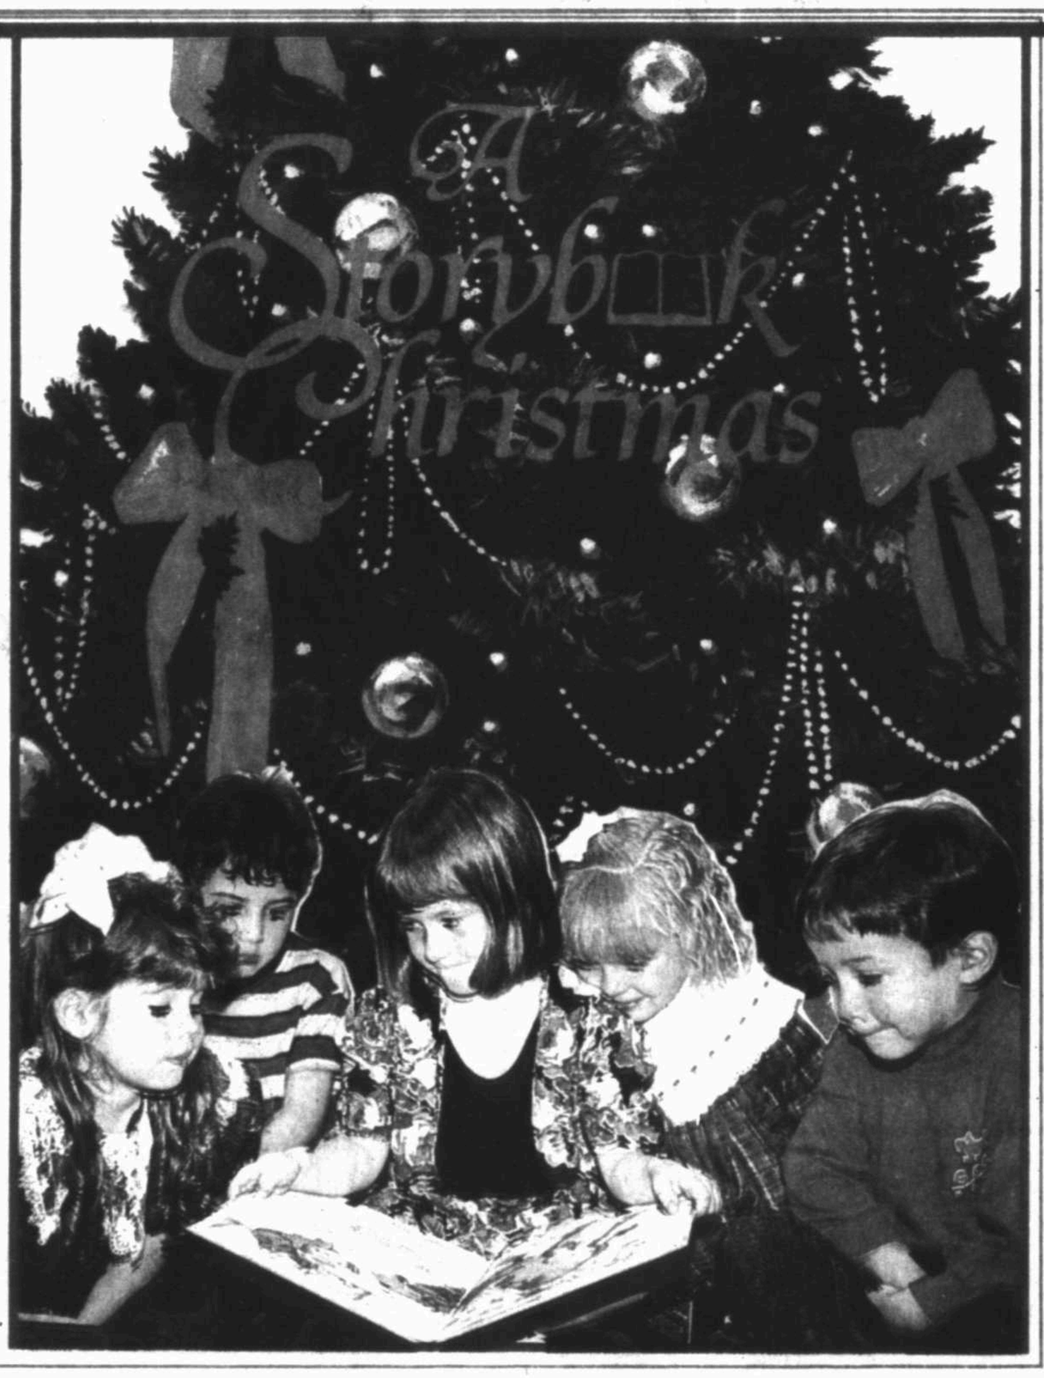

Several of them said Sunday the governors' group was unlikely to rally around a single candidate would argue that Republicans should unite around shared economic philosophies and adopt a "big tent" approach on abortion and other divisive social issues.

"There are going to be differences, but the Republican Party has got to take the position of being the party of the big tent," said Thompson.

"Diversity of approach is probably a healthy thing for the Republican party," said Weld, who has angered many conservatives in the party with his support of abortion and homosexual rights.

Included in the RNC chairman's contest are several candidates and potential candidates at least loosely allied with 1996 presidential prospects.

Eagle does it

KAPALUA, Hawaii (AP) — Davis Love eagled the par-5 18th hole from 40 feet Sunday to break a tie with Mike Hulbert and win the $800,000 Kapalua International golf tournament.

Love's final round of 6-under-par 67 gave him a total of 15-under 275 and the winner's purse of $150,000.

Three times Love has finished second at Kapalua, including last year when Hulbert came from four shots back to catch Love in the last round and then beat him with a birdie on the first hole of a playoff.

This time Love turned the tables, coming from four shots behind Hulbert, who finished alone in second at 276 after a closing round of 72 on a windy day at the Kapalua Resort's par-73 Plantation Course.

In addition to being tied at the end of regulation play last year, Love and Hulbert were deadlocked again atop the leader board after this year's first round.

At the end of two rounds, they were still tied, this time one shot off the pace. And on Sunday, with only one hole to go, they were tied again after Hulbert birdied No. 17.

But Love settled the matter with his dramatic eagle on the 18th.

'It feels a lot better than it did a year ago," Love said. "I knew I'd have to make eagle to avoid the playoff because you knew he (Hulbert) was going to make birdie.

"I made a couple of long putts today, which is unusual for me. The one at 18 was just icing on the cake. It was a lot of fun," he said.

Richard Petty's last race ...a firey NASCAR finish

It's a hoot of a finish

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

HAMPTON, Ga. — Alan Kulwicki won the championship, Bill Elliott the race and retiring stock car king Richard Petty the acclaim of the biggest crowd in NASCAR history Sunday in the drama-packed Hooters 500.

Petty, the 55-year-old seven-time series champion, a man who has made more fans for stock car racing than anyone over the years, ended his 35-year driving career on a bittersweet note, crashing early in the race and coming back in his battered No. 43 to run the final lap and take a curtain call lap in front of a wildly cheering crowd.

Kulwicki finished 7.7 seconds behind Elliott in the battle of Ford Thunderbirds, but won the $1.3 million NASCAR Winston Cup championship by 10 points, the closest margin in history.

It was somehow appropriate that Kulwicki won the championship on

Rams butt Dallas

■ Cowboys see 11-game home winning streak snapped, but Philadelphia and Washington lose, too.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — Jim Everett and Cleveland Gary made the NFL's best defense look like one of the worst.

Everett's precision passing, Gary's determined, fumble-free runs, and two late field goals by Tony Zendejas carried the Los Angeles Rams to a 27-23 victory over the Dallas Cowboys on Sunday.

"We've been playing hard all year and we deserved to win a game like this," Rams coach Chuck Knox said. "We kept coming back. We had some adversity but we made the plays when we had to."

Los Angeles (4-6) snapped the Cowboys' 11-game home winning streak as Dallas dropped to 8-2 in its best start since 1983. The Rams' victory was not certain until Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman threw incompletions into the end zone on the last two plays of the game.

All three top NFC East contenders — Dallas, Philadelphia and Washington — lost. Dallas still has a two-game lead in the division, but coach Jimmy Johnson wasn't happy after the Cowboys blew a chance to take a three-game lead.

"It's not who thinks they have the best team but who plays best on Sunday," Johnson said. "The Rams deserved to win. Everett passed great and Gary ran great. They did a good job on us.'

Everett said the Cowboys should have given the Rams a little more respect.

"If they had watched the films it would have been ridiculous for them to take us lightly," Everett said. "Our record is not indicative of how well we've played."

Aikman said the Cowboys were knocked off-balance by the aggressive Rams.

"It was a crazy Sunday all around the league," Aikman said. "This was not what we hoped for. Now, we'll find out what kind of team we have."

Dallas defensive tackle Jim Jeffcoat said the Rams made plays in crucial situations.

"They deserved the game," Jeffcoat said. "This was a good lesson for us I hope."

Zendejas kicked 33- and 44-yard field goals in the fourth quarter to provide the winning margin, but it was Everett and Gary who did the work.

Gary scored two touchdowns, rushed 29 times for 110 yards and caught seven passes for 44 yards.

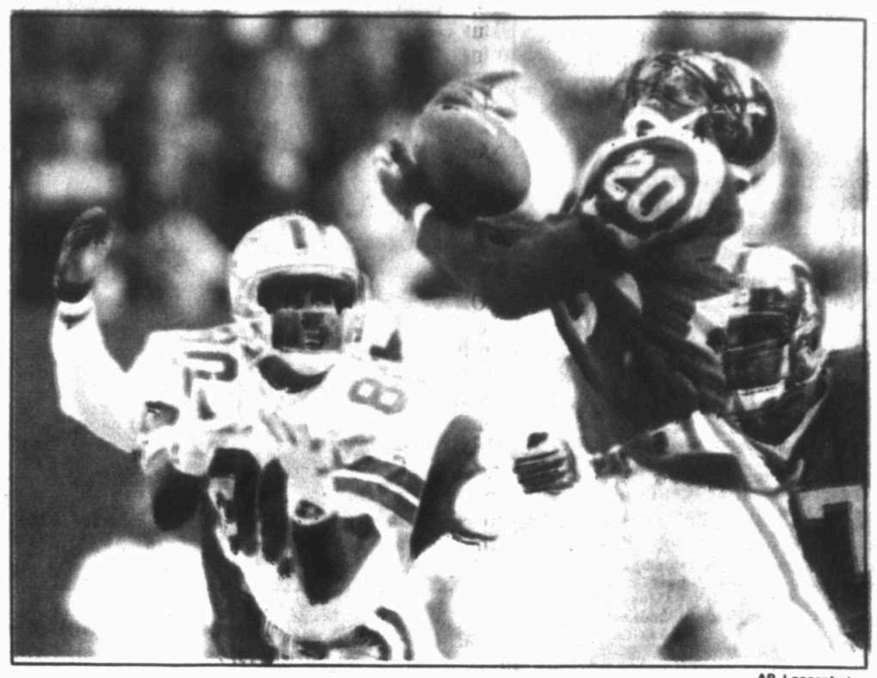

Gary, who had three fumbles and lost two of them last week, said, "I had to redeem myself for the fumble thing. I even predicted this. I told everybody we could win this game. We were very explosive today."

Everett threw two touchdown passes and hit 22 of 37 passes for 251 yards.

Kelvin Martin's 74-yard punt return for a touchdown after Lin Elliott made a 36-yard field goal had put Dallas ahead 23-21 late in the third quarter.

"We hoped that would put the Rams

It was a tough day for Houston quarterback Warren Moon. He is sacked by Minnesota's Carlos Jenkins here and later fractured a shoulder, effectively ending his season.

Oilers win, but lose Warren Moon

By Mike Nadel
AP Sports Writer

MINNEAPOLIS — Warren Moon already had been pummeled and punished, twisted and torn. So when it came time to sacrifice his body one more time, he did it without hesitation.

The quarterback's fearlessness earned Houston a 17-13 victory over the Minnesota Vikings Sunday but cost the Oilers his services for three to six weeks.

"I'm disappointed because I think the team is going to turn the corner and I won't be a part of it," said Moon, who fractured his left shoulder at the end of a 5-yard scramble that set up Lorenzo White's 1-yard touchdown run with 48 seconds to play.

"Obviously, I'm going to try to work as hard as I can to get back as quickly as I can," he added. "The team showed a lot of guts coming back."

No one, however, showed more guts than Moon. He completed 28 of 38 passes for 243 yards and a touchdown and also scrambled seven times for 46 yards despite facing a relentless rush that sacked him five times and hurried him on at least a dozen other occasions.

"He's been taking a great deal of punishment," Oilers receiver Ernest Givins said. "But because he wants to win a championship more than anybody, he's willing to do whatever it takes to get one."

Twice Moon made like Houdini, somehow escaping linemen's clutches, to run for first downs that set up Houston's only scores.

"He's never going to give up on a play," said defensive coordinator Tony Dungy, whose Vikings fell to 7-3. "He's like another running back out there when he has to be. In that offense, he's got to produce. And he has."

Hurricanes, Alabama on course

Associated Press

No. 1 Miami and No. 2 Alabama remained on course for a Sugar Bowl showdown, while Florida State re-entered the national championship picture by jumping to third in Sunday's Associated Press college football poll.

Miami maintained its solid grip on the top spot with a 48-0 victory over Temple. The Hurricanes received 61 first-place votes and 1,549 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

Alabama, which beat Mississippi State 30-21, was the runner-up again with one first-place vote and 1,483 points.

If Miami (9-0) and Alabama (10-0) remain undefeated and 1-2 in the poll, they will meet for the national title Jan. 1 in the Sugar Bowl. Miami has games remaining against Syracuse and San Diego State, while Alabama must play Auburn and either Florida or Georgia in the Southeastern Conference championship game.

Florida State (9-1) climbed two spots after trampling Tulane 70-7. The Seminoles, who lost to Miami 19-16 on Oct. 3, could get a rematch with the Hurricanes in the Fiesta Bowl if Alabama loses.

Florida State is three points ahead of Texas A&M (10-0), which remained No. 4 after downing Houston 38-30 Thursday.

Washington (9-1) rose one notch to No. 5 with a 45-16 victory over Oregon State. But Michigan (8-0-2), the Huskies' opponent in the Rose Bowl, fell three spots to No. 6 after tying Illinois 22-22.

Notre Dame (8-1-1) jumped one place to No. 7 with a 17-16 victory over Penn State. Syracuse (9-1), which meets Miami next Saturday at the Carrier Dome, rose two places to No. 8 after defeating Boston College 27-10.

Florida (7-2) and Georgia (8-2) also moved up two spots.

Unbeaten Chaps test Grayson College

■ After an early wake-up call Friday, Midland College should be in the right frame of mind — angry and ready.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant sports editor

With Grayson College paying a visit to Chaparral Center tonight (7:30 p.m. tip-off), rest assured of one thing: Midland College will be ready.

After a lackluster performance in a 94-77 win over Pima (Ariz.) College last Thursday, the Chaps found themselves rousted out of bed early Friday for a 5:30 a.m. practice.

"They were all cheery and ready to go," MC head coach Steve Green said of his team's pre-dawn workout. "They were bright-eyed and bushy-tailed.

"Really, it wasn't any different than any other practice. The wake-up call just came a little earlier. I believe that as in everything else you do well, you are rewarded, and for everything you do badly there are consequences. If you don't prepare for a test in class, you won't do as well as you can. If you don't prepare yourself for a game, the alarm rings a little earlier."

Green said that by 6 a.m. last Friday, most of his players were no longer aware of the earliness of the hour.

MC, which garnered as many as three Top 10 preseason rankings, is 5-0 this season. The spotless mark is not without its flaws, however. In their first two games against Jacksonville and Alvin last week in the Chap Classic, MC failed to string together two good halves; Ranger forced MC into overtime, and in its 17-point win over Pima, impressive was not exactly the first word that came to mind. Even in its 47-point win over Southwestern Christian, MC hit only 23-of-39 free throws.

The Chaps' starting lineup against Pima — Terrance Rone, Demeitreus Drew, Ari Rodriques, Shawn Morris and Luis Cambraia — was benched after five minutes after failing to adequately take control of the game against a weaker opponent. Green said he hadn't made up his mind as of late Saturday whether there would be any changes in the starting lineup against Grayson due to the performance against Pima.

"I don't know at this point," Green said. "We have (one) more practice before we play Monday.

"We've got to get their attention mentally a little more than physically. We're a little stale. I don't like to talk about that stuff, though, because it's not really anything you can handle."

Grayson, in the North Texas Junior College Athletic Association, is, like MC, a member of Region V. The Vikings mark the first of three upcoming regional opponents that will visit Chap Center in the next two weeks.

"Grayson's a factor," Green said. "They've got a good team. From here on out, all things are equal.

Please see MC/2C

MC: Chaps want image

(From 1C)

"Grayson's kind of like us. They're playing for one of their four playoff spots in conference. Anytime you play anybody in your conference or region, there's pride on the line."

So with the Southwestern Christians and Pimas having been dispatched and the regional candidates lining up on the Chap Center stoop (Cisco Wednesday, Hill, Nov. 30), it can be suggested that the warm-up games are out of the way and the intense part of the preconference is approaching.

"Out here, we like to think we're the best conference in junior college basketball," Green said. "You can't afford to get beat by somebody from a conference that you proclaim is not as strong as yours top to bottom."

for awhile, though.

Cody Carlson, who directed the rest of the Oilers' winning drive, is now the triggerman for Houston's run-and-shoot offense.

"I believe everyone's here for a reason," White said. "We need him right now. Everyone's got confidence in Cody. We don't miss a beat."

It was the third consecutive week Moon was injured and replaced by Carlson. Houston (6-4) lost the first two.

The Oilers' winning drive began on their own 20 with 7:33 to play. Moon started things by completing three passes for 24 yards.

White, who rushed 18 times for 81 yards and caught nine passes for 58 yards, then ran for 7 yards and Houston got 15 more when linebacker Carlos Jenkins was penalized for a flagrant facemask. After White gained 9 yards and lost 3 on two runs, Houston faced a third-and-4 at Minnesota's 26.

Nets bash Bullets as Petrovic hits 32

Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Drazen Petrovic scored 32 points and Derrick Coleman had 20 points and 14 rebounds Sunday night in the New Jersey Nets' 111-104 victory over the Washington Bullets.

The victory was the second straight for the Nets, while the Bullets absorbed their 15th consecutive road loss, including four this season.

Pervis Ellison led the Bullets with 22 points and 11 rebounds, Rex Chapman scored 21 points, while Tom Gugliotta had 19 points and 15 rebounds.

The Nets started slowly, hitting just two of their first 12 shots and falling behind 15-4. But by the end of the first period, New Jersey trailed only 34-30.

Brent Price's jumper early in the second period gave the Bullets a 36-32 lead. The Nets then reeled off a 27-8 streak for a 59-44 margin that Washington never overcame.

Rumeal Robinson started the spurt with a drive, Chris Dudley added a tip-in and then Dudley, one of the NBA's worst foul shooters, hit 3 of 4 free throws, giving the Nets a 39-36 edge.

The Bullets pulled to 41-40, but the Nets scored 18 of the next 22 points, including six by Coleman and four by Petrovic, to open the 59-44 lesd just before halftime.

Trailing 103-90 with 3:44 to play, Washington made a late run, scoring seven straight points on a layup by Gugliotta, a basket by Chapman and a 3-pointer by Chapman. After a basket by Kenny Anderson, Chapman converted a three-point play to close Washington to 105-99.

But Petrovic, who had 14 points in the last quarter, hit four free throws and a basket in the final minute to preserve the victory.

NBA Roundup

Bucks 115, Nuggets 98

MILWAUKEE — Blue Edwards scored a career-high 32 points and rookie Anthony Avent a season-high 28, leading Milwaukee past Denver.

Edwards, whose career high in three years at Utah was 30, reached 30-plus points for the third time in six games this season.

Chris Jackson led the Nuggets with 20 points while LaPhonso Ellis, Bryant Stith and Reggie Williams each had 19 for Denver, which lost its fourth straight game after a season-opening victory.

Edwards, who also grabbed nine rebounds, scored nine points in the decisive third quarter, including five in a 7-0 spurt midway through the period, which started with the score tied 55-55. The Bucks took an 88-78 lead into the final quarter.

Kings 109, Cavaliers 107

SACRAMENTO — Mitch Richmond scored 31 points and Wayman Tisdale led a 10-0 fourth-quarter run that lifted Sacramento over Cleveland.

Rookie forward Walt Williams came off the bench to score 21 points, including 10 in the third quarter, for the Kings. Lionel Simmons and Tisdale finished with 17 points each.

The Cavaliers were led by John Williams with 27 points and 11 rebounds.

Cleveland had a 91-90 lead with 9:44 left in the game after a basket by Williams. Tisdale then scored six points during the 10-0 run that gave the Kings a 99-90 lead with 6:22 to play.

Cleveland closed to 108-105 on Mark Price's five-foot jumper with 27 seconds left. Simmons made one of two free throws with 6.1 seconds left for a 109-105 lead.

Patriots find a victory

Associated Press

On a day when almost every game ended with a frenzy, the New England Patriots ended their frustration.

The Patriots became the final NFL team to win this season, beating the Indianapolis Colts 37-34 Sunday on Charlie Baumann's 18-yard field goal 3:15 into overtime.

There were seven games in which the winning points were scored in the final three minutes, including San Francisco's 21-20 victory over New Orleans when Steve Young led a Joe Montana-like comeback.

In Indianapolis, Baumann kicked a 44-yard field goal on the final play of regulation to make it 34-all, the fifth tie of the game. The Patriots' win made them 1-9 and dropped the Colts to 4-6.

"You have to embrace opportunities like this," Baumann said. "If these situations scare you, you really don't belong in this profession."

Scott Zolak, making his first pro start because of injuries to the Patriots' other quarterbacks, passed for 261 yards and two touchdowns. New England picked off three passes by Jeff George, returning two for touchdowns and the last one setting up the overtime field goal. After Jerome Henderson's interception gave the Patriots the ball, Zolak threw a 24-yard pass to Jon Vaughn, setting up Baumann's winning kick.

49ers 21, Saints 20

Steve Young threw two touchdown passes to Brent Jones in the fourth quarter, including an 8-yarder with 46 seconds left, and San Francisco beat New Orleans for the NFC West lead.

The 49ers (8-2) trailed 21-7 entering the final period before Young hit Jones on a 14-yard TD pass with 10 minutes left. Young completed five of six passes on that drive, then passed and ran San Francisco to the winning score.

Bobby Hebert completed 22 of 35 for 301 yards and touchdown passes of 22 yards to rookie Torrance Small and 11 yards to Dalton Hilliard as the Saints (7-3) moved almost totally in the air.

Packers 27, Eagles 24

Chris Jacke kicked a 41-yard field goal on the last play of the game and Green Bay see-sawed past visiting Philadelphia.

Randall Cunningham, returning from a one-game benching, led the Eagles to two touchdowns in the fourth quarter and a 24-21 lead.

The Packers tied it on Jacke's 31-yard field goal with 1:31 left, a score set up by Heath Sherman's fumble. The Eagles (6-4) got the ball back, but Herschel Walker fumbled it away at the 23. Green Bay (4-6) ran one play into the middle of the field and brought in Jacke to win it.

Cunningham, back after being replaced by Jim McMahon last week, completed 14 of 23 passes for 169 yards and one touchdown. Brett Favre hit 23 of 33 passes for 275 yards and two scores.

Buccaneers 20, Bears 17

Tampa Bay held on at home and stopped its five-game losing streak when Chicago's Kevin Butler missed a 34-yard field goal with one second left.

The Buccaneers (4-6) led 20-0 at halftime. Vinny Testaverde directed scoring drives on Tampa Bay's first three possessions and later threw a 12-yard TD pass to Ron Hall.

The Bears (4-6) have lost three in a row for the first time since 1989.

Chargers 14, Browns 13

Stan Humphries sent San Diego ahead with a 45-yard touchdown pass to Anthony Miller with 2:05 left, and the Chargers held on when they forced Eric Metcalf to fumble at midfield.

The Chargers (5-5) entered the game with the AFC's top defense, but were stung when Cleveland (5-5) marched 99 yards for a touchdown in the third quarter.

NFL Roundup

Falcons 20, Cardinals 17

Norm Johnson kicked a 35-yard field with 50 seconds left and Billy Joe Tolliver threw two TD passes to Andre Rison as Atlanta won at home.

Tolliver threw an interception and lost a fumble in the second half, and was pulled with 4:22 left and the score tied. Tolliver and coach Jerry Glanville exchanged words on the sidelines after the move was made.

Wade Wilson took over for Tolliver and the Falcons (4-6) moved 48 yards, completing three passes for 31 yards.

Steelers 17, Lions 14

Bubby Brister got into a game for the first time this season and threw a 1-yard TD pass to Tim Jorden with 2:50 left as Pittsburgh rallied at Three Rivers Stadium.

Brister started for most of the last five years before losing his job in training camp. When Neil O'Donnell pulled a hamstring in the fourth quarter, Brister took over.

Barry Foster became the first NFL player to run for 1,000 yards this season, gaining 106 on 25 carries. He tied a Steelers record with his seventh 100-yard game of the season.

Chiefs 35, Redskins 16

Dave Krieg passed for 304 yards and Kansas City (6-4) streaked to a 28-0 halftime lead against the Super Bowl champions at Arrowhead Stadium.

Krieg threw for 232 yards in the first half. He finished with six completions to Tim Barnett for 148 yards and two touchdowns.

Christian Okoye scored on 3- and 2-yard runs in the first half. Washington scored on its first possession of the second half on Ricky Ervins' 5-yard run and Chip Lohmiller added three field goals.

The Redskins (6-4), who have had to revamp their offensive line because of injuries, lost guard Joe Jacoby in the first half and Earnest Byner, their leading rusher, a short time later.

Jets 17, Bengals 14

Even without offensive stars Blair Thomas and Al Toon, the Jets had enough defense to win at home.

The Jets, bidding for their first shutout in 10 seasons, blanked Cincinnati until the fourth quarter. Boomer Esiason tried to rally the Bengals (4-6), but their last drive stalled at midfield in the final seconds.

Minus Toon (concussion) and Thomas (groin), the Jets (3-7) didn't move much. Quarterback Browning Nagle completed eight of 24 passes for 98 yards, but Esiason hit only 11 of 33 for 109 yards.

Raiders 20, Seahawks 3

Jay Schroeder, back in the lineup after backing up Todd Marinovich for seven games, helped Los Angeles send Seattle to its seventh straight loss.

Schroeder completed 10 of 23 passes for 108 yards and one touchdown. Eric Dickerson scored on a 1-yard run and Jeff Jaeger kicked two field goals.

Broncos 27, Giants 13

John Elway drove Denver to two quick touchdowns before leaving the game in the second quarter with a bruised right shoulder, and rookie Tommy Maddox coolly maintained the lead as the Broncos beat the New York Giants.

Denver (7-3), protecting a one-game lead over Kansas City in the AFC West, won at home for the ninth straight game and snapped the three-game winning streak of New York (5-5).

away, but it didn't," Martin said.

But Everett and Gary took turns making big plays as the Rams put together two long drives for the field goals with 10:29 and 1:54 to play in the game.

Aikman took Dallas from the 23 to the Rams 14 but couldn't pull off the victory as two passes missed their mark.

The 14-point underdog Rams charged to a 21-13 halftime lead as Everett and Gary plundered the Cowboys.

Everett threw touchdown passes of eight yards to Jeff Chadwick and three yards to Gary, who also scored on a one-yard run.

Dallas led midway in the second quarter 13-7 on a 37-yard field goal by Elliott, Emmitt Smith's 3-yard touchdown run, his 13th of the year to set a club record for one season, and a 42-yard field goal by Elliott.

The Rams held the NFL's leading rusher to 80 yards on 19 carries.

The Rams took the fight to Dallas early, driving 81 yards in 13 plays following the opening kickoff. Gary, who picked up 40 yards on the drive both running and receiving, got the final yard for the touchdown.

Gary set up the second Rams' touchdown with a 28-yard run. Chadwick beat cornerback Larry Brown on the touchdown pass.

Everett played beat the clock just before halftime, hitting Willie Anderson with a 45-yard pass. The touchdown pass to Gary came with 18 seconds until halftime.

"I'm emotionally drained," said Knox. "This will give us something to tie into, to win against a good opponent on the road."

PETTY: Kulwicki captures NASCAR title

(From 1C)

the day that Petty called it quits. The 35-year-old is the first driver-owner to win the title since Petty beat Darrell Waltrip by 11 points in 1979, the closest finish until Sunday.

Kulwicki, who came into the race trailing Davey Allison by 30 points and leading Elliott by 10, won the title by leading one more lap than Elliott and getting the five-point bonus for leading the most laps in the race. Had Elliott gotten that bonus, the two would have tied in the points and 1988 champion Elliott would have won the championship on the basis of most race victories.

Allison said repeatedly the championship was his to lose. But he probably did not envision losing it the way he did.

Allison was running a comfortable sixth and was in position to wrap up his first title when Ernie Irvan, running fourth on lap 253, lost control, veered to the right into the wall, slid down the banking into the rear of Terry Labonte's car, then up again directly in front of the unfortunate Allison.

The ensuing collision left both Allison and Irvan stopped just in front of the finish line too damaged to continue. That was the last dip in a rollercoaster-ride season for Allison, who won five races, including the Daytona 500, survived a very bad crash and had to cope with the death of his brother Clifford in a race car crash.

"Ernie cut down a tire or something like that," Allison said. "It's too bad, but that's the way it goes. It just wasn't meant to be this year. Our team deserved to be champions, but it just didn't happen."

He did get back onto the track on lap 293 after extensive repairs, but was running strictly for position in the final standings.

Allison's accident also left the title battle to Kulwicki and Elliott, who had battled nose-to-tail, taking turns in the lead much of the way. In one stretch, from lap 208 to 214, they exchanged the lead on every lap.

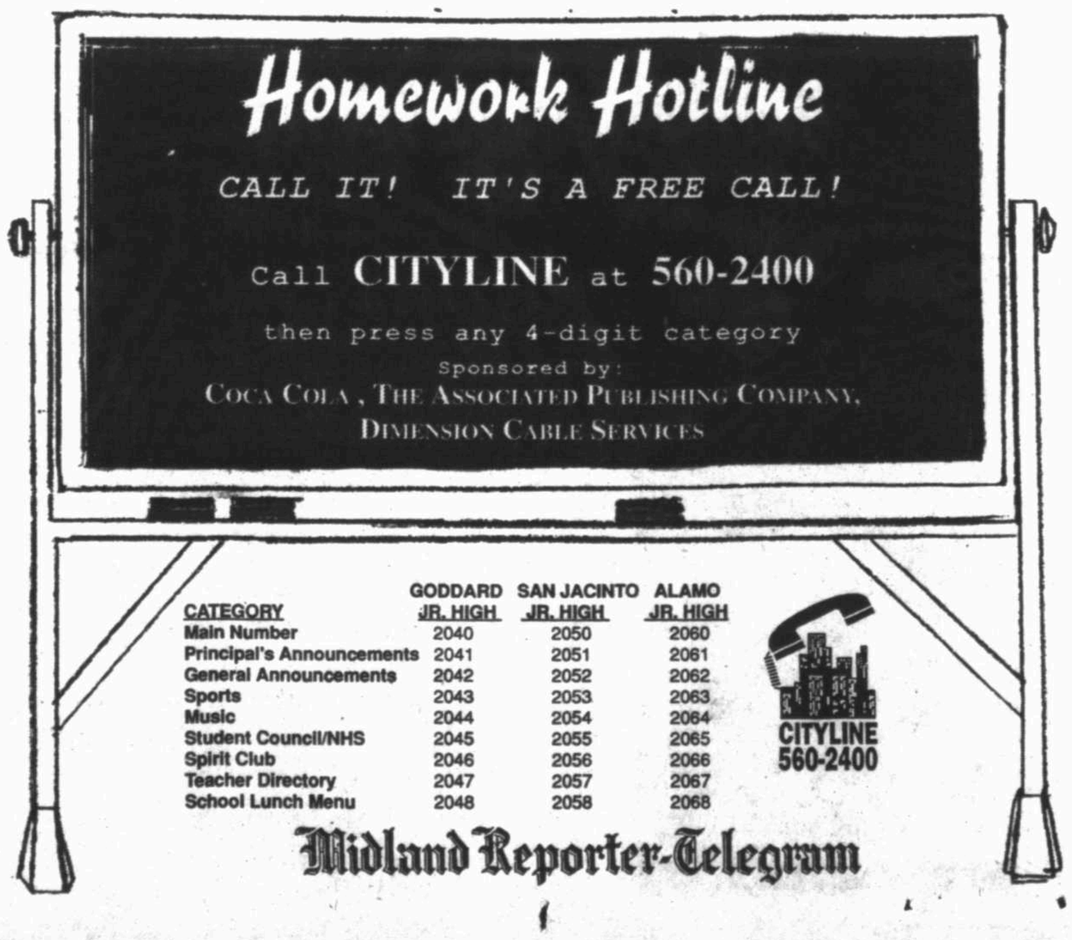

In the end it came down to a final green-flag pit stop by each of the leaders. Kulwicki, who had lost first gear on his first pit stop, came in 17 laps from the end of the 328-lap race on the 1.522-mile oval, taking on gas only but losing a little time getting back onto the track.

Elliott was able to hold the lead when he pitted three laps later for a splash of gas and led to the end.

"I knew how far I had to go to lead the most laps and then I pretty much knew we had the championship," Kulwicki said. "It's always nice to win races, but we'll win races again. This championship is something special."

Petty, who was the focus of attention the whole weekend despite the close championship race, became embroiled in a multi-car crash on lap 95 and drove onto the infield grass at the head of the main straightaway with his engine in flames.

Ken Schrader and Dick Trickle started the incident, coming together on the straightaway in front of a big pack of cars. Petty, at the rear of the pack a lap behind the leaders, had no place to go. His Pontiac slammed into the slowed car of Rich Bickle, then hit a sliding Waltrip before the flames sprouted from his engine compartment.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You have a chance to revitalize a longtime business or personal relationship. Start afresh. Success comes when you launch independent ventures. A return to school is possible in early 1993. Next spring, your earnings will be based on how well you showcase your talents. A stalled romance could heat up in May. Your relationship with an older person could force a commitment. A pay raise is likely in late summer. A windfall comes in September.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: pitcher Dwight Gooden, actors Burgess Meredith and Guy Stockwell, actress Lisa Bonet.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Show self-discipline and you will weather a crisis quite successfully. Stay with a project until it proves productive. A close friend could be your strongest ally.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keeping a watchful eye can help you prevent expensive mistakes. Other people may try to provoke you; avoid a direct confrontation. An old flame wants to hear from you. Proceed with caution.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Last-minute financial arrangements will require careful attention. Talking to experts will help you save time and money. Make better use of your creative talents.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone acts in an erratic fashion. Rely on your own efforts. Jot down original ideas for further investigation. You can make valuable business contacts in a social setting.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Group activities are more rewarding than anticipated, especially in business. Invitations could get lost in the mail. Follow up travel plans by telephone or fax.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Defend yourself and your rights. A lovers' quarrel could help clear the air and eventually improve your relationship. Well-chosen words will make you a hit tonight.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A so-called "ridiculous" request merits more than token thought. A new love triangle could be emerging; try to keep calm. A choice may be necessary.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It pays to play the waiting game in business or romance. A quiet talk makes a couple feel more optimistic about the future. Regular exercise and good eating habits keep you fit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A good deed will not go unrewarded! Old debts will be repaid with interest. Seek favors or loans; they will be granted. Romance is puzzling but exciting.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Lessons learned in the past can be put to good use at this time. Cash in on your expertise. Ask key questions of higher-ups. Friends and family members have much to offer.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take the advice of family and friends with a grain of salt. Let other people know the real you. Children can contribute greatly to your happiness now.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your personal finances can be stabilized now. You should have little trouble securing the cooperation of others. A gift, favor and constructive advice are yours for the asking.

TODAY'S CHILDREN have phenomenal timing. They always seem to be in the right place at the right time! In business, these shrewd Scorpios know when to buy, sell or leave the stock market alone.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠1084 ♡AJ4 ◇K1072 ♣AQ7
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Yes, we wholeheartedly endorse raising partner's major-suit response with three-card support, but not on this hand! With flat distribution and stoppers in the other suits, we feel a one-no-trump rebid is a more descriptive rebid.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠976 ♡KJ5 ◇AQ6 ♣A1065
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	3 ♣	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You have a perfectly balanced hand, but partner does not, and your prime values suggest that your hand will play better at a suit contract than at no trump. Tell partner you have three-card spade support by bidding three spades. To rebid three no trump is simply repeating a message partner has already received.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠QJ96 ♡963 ◇KJ75 ♣J8
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What do you respond?
A.—Possibilities for game exist if partner has a maximum, especially if there is a 4-4 spade fit. Initiate the exploration with a Stayman response of two clubs—a request for partner to bid a major suit, if possible.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK76 ♡AQ985 ◇73 ♣K9
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You are in slam territory, but whether you can make 12 tricks depends on the location of partner's values. Blackwood won't help. To start an orderly investigation, complete the description of your hand by bidding two spades, and see how partner reacts.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A76 ♡AQ8 ◇QJ9 ♣AQ107
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	2 ♣	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Had partner responded at the one-level, you would have jumped to two no trump to show your balanced powerhouse. Since partner responded at the two-level, albeit only with a raise, you can convey the same message by leaping to three no trump.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQJ54 ♡AQ107 ◇K106 ♣5
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 NT	Pass	3 ♣

What action do you take?
A.—Even though West's unusual no-trump overcall shows the minors, your hand is suitable for play in any suit other than clubs, and has excellent defensive potential. Double. Princess Diana ends France visit by meeting with McCartney

LILLE, France — The Princess of Wales ended her three-day visit to France on a musical note Sunday with a meeting with countryman Paul McCartney at the French premiere of his classical "Liverpool Oratorio."

Princess Diana

In Britain, meanwhile, the London Sunday Express reported that Diana's husband, Prince Charles, responded indifferently to her offer to have a third child and save their crumbling marriage, according to the Daily News of New York.

When her offer in the summer of 1989 was spurned, Diana reconciled herself to a marriage that would be a charade, the article said. It was written by Andrew Morton, whose earlier biography of the princess portrayed a lonely, suicidal woman who had suffered from bulimia.

In Lille, a packed house rose to its feet as the princess, wrapped in a fur coat, entered for the performance of McCartney's classical work.

An ovation had greeted the former Beatle, his wife, Linda, and their four children when they entered minutes earlier.

The 90-minute performance by the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra of Liverpool was part of Lille's annual arts festival.

Diana's visit to France began Friday, the day a London tabloid said it obtained details of a 1989 telephone conversation of her husband telling a married friend he loved and adored her.

Charles and Diana have been separated unofficially for several months, although they recently traveled together to South Korea.

LOS ANGELES — Phil Hartman doesn't want President-elect Clinton to be bothered by his "Saturday Night Live" impersonation.

Hartman

"I don't want him to be offended," Hartman said, noting that he voted for Clinton.

"Whatever I say or do, I want him to know that I'm on his side, and I'm a fan. I'm a satirist, and satire on the surface can seem cutting and mean, but it's my job to impersonate him on network TV."

With Clinton moving into the White House in January, Hartman expects to be doing a lot of impersonating.

"I can't emphasize how much I like this gig," Hartman said in an interview published Saturday in the Los Angeles Times.

LOS ANGELES — Sony Corp. Chairman Akio Morita wants Japanese-Americans to help ease economic tension between the United States and Japan by promoting cultural understanding.

"Japanese-Americans are important citizens for America and a great friend of Japan," Morita said Friday during a speech at the Japanese-American National Museum.

He called the relationship between the two countries "the most important in the world."

Morita said the experience of Japanese-Americans is a lesson both countries should remember. If Americans can appreciate the contributions of Japanese-Americans, feelings of resentment will abate, he said.

Japanese businessmen have no ill will toward the United States, Morita said, adding "sometimes the bad feeling is taken up by politicians or journalists."

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. — Dionne Warwick said songwriters Burt Bacharach and Hal David fit her like a tailor-made dress.

It took a few phone calls, but the singer got the two together to write a song for her new album, to be released soon.

"There is something special about their songs because they would write them especially for me," Warwick said in a recent interview.

Her first Top 10 single was a Bacharach-David song, "Don't Make Me Over," in 1962. Warwick won a Grammy for "Do You Know The Way To San Jose," also written by the two. The new song is called "Sunny Weather Lover."

Warwick, a New Jersey native, will celebrate 30 years in show business with a New Brunswick concert Nov. 22 to benefit a theater company.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Tennis player Bjorn Borg said he tried cocaine, "but I'm not a cocaine user."

"I'm not doing drugs and I'm not a drug dealer," he said in an hour-long interview for Swedish television broadcast Saturday night.

In 1990, Borg won a lawsuit against the Swedish magazine "Z," which published allegations by Jannike Bjorling, his former girlfriend, that Borg used cocaine numerous times after they met in 1984.

"Her allegations are false and shameless," Borg said when the lawsuit was filed in 1989. Earlier that year, Borg said: "I hate drugs. I hate what drugs do to young people and I would never touch it."

In the television interview, Borg said he used cocaine during his time with Bjorling, with whom he has a son.

The interview made the front pages of Swedish newspapers on Saturday.

Clinton hopes plan creates jobs

■ Economists further warn that the incentives Clinton propose may not be enough to perk up a sagging $6 trillion economy.

By Joel Kurtzman
N.Y. Times News Service

It sounded like a promise from the campaign stump. President-elect Bill Clinton told a news conference last week that "I will ask the Congress to adopt an investment tax credit that I have been advocating for well over a year now to give the private sector incentives to go out and invest in new plant and equipment and to increase their capacity to hire."

That one proposal, Clinton said, could create half a million new jobs in the first year alone. Even more jobs could be created, he said, by accelerating investment in the infrastructure.

The logic seems straightforward enough: tax credits from Washington create incentives for entrepreneurs to start companies and hire workers and for existing companies to buy equipment. Spending on the infrastructure leads to more hiring. The unemployment rate — now 7.4 percent — falls as more people find work.

But economists caution that creating a new-jobs bonanza in a sluggish economy — even with the use of incentives — may not be as easy as Clinton suggests.

Economists further warn that the incentives Clinton has proposed — an investment tax credit for businesses, increased government spending and tax credits for education and training, and $20 billion a year over four years in spending on the infrastructure — may simply not be enough to perk up a sagging $6 trillion economy.

And with the economy awash in debt and consumers watching their wallets, the incentives may not be sufficient to jog budding entrepreneurs into action. "The animal spirits of the entrepreneurs are very damp right now," said Allen Sinai, chief economist at the Boston Co.

Further, because much of the money Clinton has proposed to stimulate the economy and provide jobs will be taken from other programs — the military, principally — rather than from new sources of revenue, the impact on growth from the spending may be minimal.

"Clinton's program was the most growth oriented of the candidates', but it's not a big macro event," Sinai said.

That may pose problems for Clinton on the employment front. Economic growth, economists say, is the main engine behind job creation. "If the economy is growing rapidly it is going to create a certain amount of new employment anyway," said Bennett Harrison, professor of political economy at Carnegie Mellon University. "That's what Reagan had. You can build on that base. But the problem Clinton faces is that with the continuing long-term sluggishness of the economy, there's no base on which to build."

Clinton also faces an economy in which one major employment sector — the military and its suppliers — is cutting back drastically. According to estimates by Lawrence Chimerine, senior economic adviser to DRI/McGraw Hill, more than a million jobs could be eliminated from the military and its suppliers alone by mid-decade. If those jobs are not replaced by new jobs in other sectors, they could add as much as a percentage point to the unemployment rate.

But the military is not Clinton's only problem area. He must also contend with the continued shrinking of many of America's largest corporations. "Layoffs at the Fortune 500 companies have slowed, but they haven't bottomed out and in some sectors they will go on for years," Chimerine said.

Inflation rate expected to be at lowest level since early '70s

By Jonathan Fuerbringer
N.Y. Times News Service

When inflation in the United States is out of control, it is the talk of the land; when it is under control people just don't seem to notice it.

Inflation in the United States should dip this year to its lowest sustained level since the beginning of the 1970s.

The data would cover the 10-year period through the end of 1992. If the Consumer Price Index for the United States rises only 3 percent this year — and it is moving at that pace right now — prices will have risen just 3.8 percent a year on average in the last decade. That would be the slowest 10 years' worth of inflation since the same 3.8 percent in the period that ended in 1973.

There has not been a 10-year period in which consumer prices rose at an average annual rate of less than three percent since 1961 to 1970, when the average was 2.77 percent.

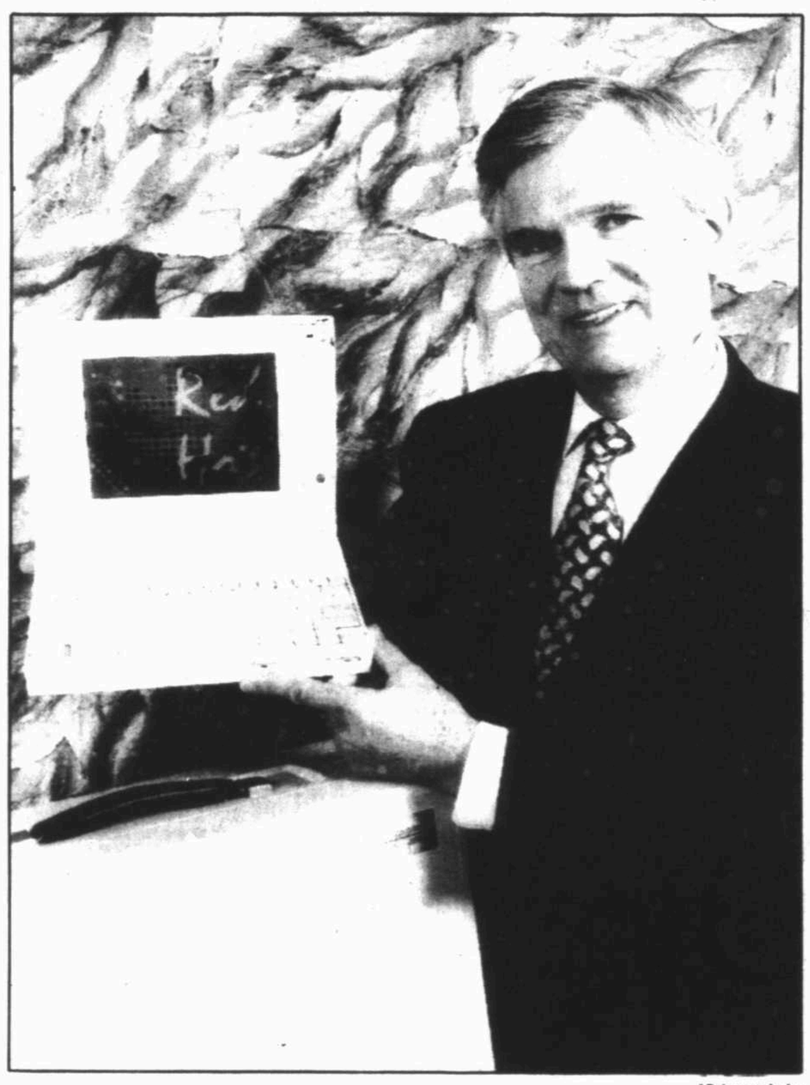

America's industrial allies have seen similarly tame inflation — inflation in the 23 most industrialized countries could average 3.9 percent a year for the last decade, according to International Monetary Fund data. That would be the lowest level for the group since the 3.82 percent figure for the 10 years ending in 1972.

This should be good news for the consumer and the bond market although there has been quite a cost for this success. In the United States it was the steep recessions of 1980 and 1981 and, later, the four years of either minimal growth or recession since 1988 that undermined President Bush's chances for re-election.

But low inflation has its benefits, one of the most important being the opportunity for a longer period of sustained growth in the economy.

There are numerous signs of continued moderate inflation in the United States. Despite the somewhat surprising 0.4 of 1 percent increase in the Consumer Price Index for October, reported Friday, several analysts said they were not worried, in part because of one-time factors, such as increases in airline fares, contributed to the overall jump.

Closely watched inflation monitors, such as the Commodity Research Bureau's index, are declining.

Crandall blasts pending deal between USAir, British Airways

HOUSTON (AP) — American Airlines chief executive Robert Crandall last week blasted a proposed deal between British Airways and USAir and warned of disaster if the U.S. government fails to "grow a little spine" in negotiating with foreign carriers.

But Crandall said the proposed purchase announced week of Houston-based Continental Airlines by Air Canada "is a good, fair, free trade-based, cross-border investment deal."

By contrast, the pending $750 million British Airways transaction "is about the creation of a global network structured

'We want the right to compete ourselves if the other guy's going to have the right . . .'
— Robert Crandall

to prevent effective competition by any U.S. carrier" and "will tilt the playing field forever in favor of foreign carriers," Crandall said in a speech to Houston's Forum Club.

The agreement effectively would give British Airways its own airline in the United States, Crandall said, while U.S. carriers are denied similar opportunities abroad.

"We're not opposed to investment at all, or competition, but we want the right to compete ourselves if the other guy's going to have the right to compete,"

Crandall accused many foreign countries of limiting competition and ignoring their agreements with the United States, and urged U.S. government officials to work for a worldwide, multilateral open skies agreement.

If the federal government does not shift its negotiating focus away from short-term consumer interests and develop a greater concern for domestic airlines in determining policy, Crandall said, "there simply won't be a U.S. international aviation industry 20 years hence."

"Continuing that focus will inevitably produce a nation whose aviation industry employs many fewer people than today's, whose consumers are poorer and which is served primarily by foreign-owned carriers," he said.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Lump sums can be put in several baskets

By Bill Doyle

Q: I will soon receive lump-sum distributions from my 401(k) retirement plan and my regular pension plan. I would like to keep the distributions tax-deferred by putting them in rollover individual retirement accounts.

Doyle

My plan is to spread out the money in four different mutual fund families to avoid having all my eggs in one basket. I am over 60 in age. Is such splitting of lump-sum distributions allowed by the Internal Revenue Service?

A: Certainly. As long as you place that money in IRAs, there are no restrictions on what legitimate investments you pick or on who manages those investments.

Putting lump-sum distributions from retirement plans into rollover IRAs is a wise move. By doing that, you will keep all the money, as well as the dividends and interest that money earns, free from income tax until you make withdrawals, which you will be required to do after passing age 70½.

And investing your money in a number of mutual funds, each managed by a different fund organization, will provide wide diversification and reduce risk.

Q: When I receive lump-sum distributions from retirement plans from the company from which I will soon retire, can I park that money in my bank account for 60 days, during which I write checks to IRA trustees for opening rollover IRAs?

A: You can, only if you complete those moves before the new year dawns. After that, your lump-sum distributions will be hit with a 20 percent withholding tax, because of an obscure, ridiculous and complicated provision in legislation enacted last July by our dim-bulb Congress.

The rule that lump-sum retirement distributions can be kept tax-deferred by rolling them over into IRAs has not been changed. However, effective Jan. 1, anyone who retires, changes jobs or is laid off and takes possession of a lump-sum retirement plan distribution will get only 80 percent of that distribution. The rest will be withheld as federal income tax.

Even after that new regulation goes into effect, you'll be able to beat that withholding by doing a trustee-to-trustee transfer. If you instruct the trustee of your present retirement plans to send the money directly the new IRA trustees you choose, no tax will be withheld. You won't be able to get your hands on that money, though.

Under the old rule, which remains in effect through Dec. 31, you could take a lump-sum retirement plan distribution and do anything you please with the money for 60 days. As long as you put it into a rollover IRA within that time span, you had no tax problem. Of course, if you missed the 60-day deadline, the entire distribution became taxable.

Q: Suppose I take a lump-sum retirement distribution by check next year or some future year, receiving only 80 percent because 20 percent is withheld for tax. Does that mean I won't be allowed to put the entire amount — the 80 percent and 20 percent — into a rollover IRA?

A: No. You'll still be permitted to roll over the total amount of the distribution into an IRA. But you will have to come up with the 20 percent from your own funds. That's going to be awfully difficult for many folks.

Furthermore, you won't get the 20 percent withheld back until after you file your federal income tax return for the year in which that withholding took place.
