Oil majors cut prices; Jobless claims ups

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Eight major oil companies have cut the price they'll pay for high-quality, light-grade U.S. crude oil, but analysts say that while the cuts will spread, the impact on retail prices won't be immediate.

Meanwhile, despite an increase in new construction spending last month, initial and regular jobless claims in mid-October skyrocketed and major U.S. retailers posted sluggish sales gains, the government said Thursday.

Shell Oil Co., citing an oversupply of high quality oils and growing use of lower quality, less expensive grades of crude, announced Thursday it was joining other companies in cutting its offering price for domestic oil.

Conoco Inc., Phillips Petroleum Co., Marathon Oil Co., Diamond Shamrock Corp., Mobil Corp., Crown Central Petroleum Corp. and Ashland Oil Inc. had cut their offering prices earlier.

William Randol, an oil industry analyst at the investment firm of First Boston Corp., said he expected the U.S. price cuts would spread.

"It tells us there's not a great deal of confidence that what OPEC decided to do in its Geneva meeting will do a whole lot to restore stability to world oil markets," Randol said.

OPEC members agreed Wednesday to lower overall production limits 8.6 percent in an effort to halt a collapse of oil prices. Mexico, which is not an OPEC member, said Thursday it was reducing exports 6.7 percent.

Dan Lundberg, publisher of gasoline price information, said that until domestic cuts become widespread, the impact on retail prices "will be almost insignificant."

About 426,000 people applied for first-time unemployment benefits in the week ended Oct. 20, up 34,000 from the previous week and the most since 435,000 applied for initial benefits in the week ending Nov. 19, 1983, the Labor Department said.

In the week ended Oct. 13, an estimated 2,469,000 people were getting regular state-paid benefits, usually lasting 26 weeks, an increase of 165,000 from the week before and the most in a single week since April 2.

State offices were open only four days in the week ended Oct. 13 because of the Columbus Day holiday, accounting for the rise in first-time claims the following week, said Labor Department spokesman Steven McManus.

Barfield first woman executed in 22 years

By DENNIS PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. — Expressing sorrow "for all the hurt that I have caused," a pink pajama-clad Velma Barfield became the first woman executed in the United States in 22 years when she was put to death today for killing her boyfriend with ant poison.

Mrs. Barfield, 52, who passed up a special last meal and snacked on Coca-Cola and Cheez Doodles, was declared dead of a lethal injection at 2:15 a.m. She had offered her organs for transplant, and a team of doctors rushed her body to an unidentified local hospital.

Mrs. Barfield was the third person executed in the United States this week and the 29th since the Supreme Court restored the death penalty in 1976. The last woman executed was Elizabeth Duncan, 54, who died in California's gas chamber in 1962 for arranging the death of her daughter-in-law.

Clad in her own pink cotton pajamas with embroidered collar, Mrs. Barfield was wheeled on a gurney into the death chamber.

"I want to say that I am sorry for all the hurt that I have caused," she said in a final statement. Convicted of one murder, she confessed to killing three other people — her mother and two elderly people who employed her as a live-in housekeeper.

"I know that everybody has gone through a lot of pain, all the families connected and I am sorry, and I want to thank everybody who has been supporting me all these six years," she said.

As the deadly drug began to drip through tubes in her arms, Mrs. Barfield's mouth moved as thought she were speaking. She lay still for several minutes, then her color changed from reddish to gray.

Mrs. Barfield "wanted to live very badly...she never gave up hope until today," her tearful son, Ronnie Burke, said Thursday night.

Families of Mrs. Barfield's victims decided not to come to Raleigh because that was "like licking your chops after you eat."

"I want to say that I am sorry for all the hurt that I have caused."

Historic house to be demolished

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

After a four month struggle, the fate of the Lancaster House remains unchanged: It will be torn down starting Monday.

"We'll raze the house as soon as possible," said Terry Wilkinson, president of the Museum of the Southwest's board of trustees. The board had announced it would take that action if no one had presented the board with a viable plan for moving the house off the property by 5 p.m. Thursday.

The Save the Lancaster House Committee, headed by Harris Kerr, said moving the house was not economically feasible.

A spokesman for the museum said no written proposals were submitted by the deadline and the board is negotiating with a contractor in Lubbock. "There are no plans for salvage," the spokesman added.

"THE ONLY PEOPLE who have expressed an interest and talked with us about anything are the Freemans," said Mrs. Wilkinson. Mr. and Mrs. B. Ryan Freeman will move the guest house into their backyard. Freeman, whose home is located behind the Lancaster home and guest house, is meeting with the museum's lawyer Saturday to finalize the agreement.

Apparently, the only "preservation" of the house will be pictorially in the Texas Historic Sites Inventory. Peter Flagg Maxson with the Texas Historical Commission wrote the Lancaster House Committee that the structure could be included in the inventory. He suggested a scrapbook be compiled with black and white photographs, basic floor plans and an historical narrative.

Mondale fears intolerance; Reagan fears overconfidence

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

Walter F. Mondale says a Republican victory on Tuesday could bring on an "orgy of intolerance" by the religious right, while President Reagan is warning his supporters against overconfidence even as his staff keeps talking about a 50-state sweep.

From the president's entourage to Republican campaign officials on Capitol Hill, the talk was of how big a victory Reagan would score on Tuesday and whether it would bolster GOP ranks in Congress.

"Things are breaking wide open for us," said Ed Goeas, campaign director for the House Republican campaign committee. He said the undecided vote is coming in solidly Republican.

Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana, chairman of the GOP Senate campaign committee, said he would ask the president to add a Nebaraska stop to his closing campaign swing to help Republican Nancy Hoch in her effort to upset Democratic Sen. James Exon.

Mondale drew the largest crowd of his campaign on Thursday, a throng estimated at 100,000 in the Garment District of New York City. He denounced the president for criticizing the Democrats for failing to condemn anti-Semitism in their party platform.

The Democratic challenger called the president's criticism made in a speech in New York last week "false and contemptible" and added: "The president has accused me of being soft on anti-Semitism. I resent it. It is despicable. I think it is inexcusable."

From the Garment District, Mondale went to a synagogue in Brooklyn where he warned of the influence of the Rev. Jerry Falwell and other conservative fundamentalist ministers.

"Some of his (Reagan's) friends threaten an orgy of intolerance in our land and I don't want them to have any influence," Mondale said.

Mondale was campaigning today in Ohio, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and Michigan. Reagan's schedule included stops in Michigan, Ohio, Illinois and Arkansas.

In Michigan and Arkansas, Republican challengers are trying to upset Democratic senators, while in Illinois, GOP Sen. Charles Percy is challenged by Democratic Rep. Paul Simon in a race rated very close.

At every stop on Thursday, the president sounded the same theme: beware of confidence.

In Rochester, N.Y., Reagan said polls showing him way ahead of Mondale "are scaring me to death because I have a feeling that maybe some people are looking at them and saying, maybe we don't have to vote."

In Washington, a nonpartisan group predicted Thursday a record turnout on Tuesday in excess of 95 million people or about 55 percent of adult Americans.

Four years ago, the total vote was 87 million for a turnout rate of 52.6 percent.

Curtis Gans, director of the Committee for the Study of the American Electorate, said, "A large number of people have strong feelings, either pro or con about the Reagan administration, but a perceived (Reagan) landslide could depress turnout."

STATE IN BRIEF

Funds committed for study

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White on Thursday committed $400,000 for a study that could be used to suggest possible places in Texas for locating the world's largest and most advanced atom-smasher.

The emergency grant was made available to a consortium of four Texas universities. The data they collect will be used to analyze options for locating the Super Conducting Super Collider (SSC) in the "probable event," according to White, that Texas bids to place the SSC in the state.

The siting study is expected to be completed by mid-January.

"If Texas is later selected as the site for the Super Conducting Super Collider, it will further help establish Texas as one of the nation's leading centers for high-energy physics research," White said in a statement.

Mattox sues 'toner pirates'

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox said Thursday he obtained a temporary restraining order against seven California-based firms and their owners for allegedly defrauding Texas consumers as "toner pirates."

Mattox's suit named as defendants Sheldon Block and Steve Yatomi, individually and doing business as The Old Venice Paper Co., Inc.; Data Supply; Turquoise Operations, Inc.; National Supply Center; Pacific Beach Distributing, Inc.; General Data; and Park Distributing, Inc., all located in southern California.

The suit alleges that the defendants would represent themselves on the telephone as a business' usual supplier, and would say that office supplies were going up but they could send some materials at the old price.

The term "toner pirates" refers to the alleged offer to send "toner," a photo copier product, at the old price.

Mattox's suit also alleges that the supplies would be of low quality, not the brand name the businesses thought they were ordering, and prices would be two or three times what normally would be charged.

The suit seeks up to $10,000 in civil penalties as well as full restitution to consumers.

'Quality of life' lower

AUSTIN (AP) — On a scale of one to 10, Austin residents questioned in a recent study of 1,433 registered voters said the city's "quality of life" rates a 7.2.

This is lower than the 7.9 rating for the quality of life five years ago, and those surveyed predicted a further decline, assigning a 6.0 to 1989.

The study is a project led by Dr. Dowell Myers of the University of Texas School of Architecture.

"The results send an important message that citizens feel quality of life is in general declining, possibly at an accelerating rate," Myers said.

Despite the bleak projections, however, 71 percent of those surveyed said they are satisfied with Austin as a place to live.

Extradition hearing set

PORT WASHINGTON, Wis. (AP) — An extradition hearing has been scheduled Nov. 27 for Joseph H. Hardy, 40, who was arrested Oct. 26 and is wanted by Texas authorities on charges of attempted murder and soliciting to become a hired killer.

Ozaukee County sheriff's deputies said Hardy was arrested in Waubeka after authorities received an anonymous tip.

Chief Deputy Gary Langlais said the friend with whom Hardy had been staying was unaware that he was a fugitive.

He was named in a fugitive warrant by authorities in Bryan, Texas.

Plan impregnates woman

CARROLLTON, Texas (AP) — A 30-year-old woman, who became pregnant through in vitro fertilization in what officials call the first such procedure in North Texas, said Thursday she has experienced no complications.

Darlene Barham appeared with her 39-year-old husband, Ray, at the Texas Endocrine and Fertility Institute, where she went to begin the program.

"There haven't been any problems," Mrs. Barham, now more than two months pregnant, said Thursday. "I'm ecstatic. I would recommend it to anyone."

Mrs. Barham said she and her husband had tried to have a baby for eight years but could not because her Fallopian tubes were blocked.

She said she heard through a friend about the institute, which opened at the old Carrollton Community Hospital in August 1983.

Desegregation suit nears final settlement

HOUSTON (AP) — A 28-year-old desegregation suit against Houston's schools neared a final settlement as a federal judge tentatively approved an agreement in the case.

U.S. District Judge John Singleton, who met briefly with attorneys behind closed doors Thursday, rejected black leaders' last-minute requests that he add two more people to the committee that will monitor student achievement in the Houston Independent School District for the next five years.

The committee will include the governor, Houston's mayor, and the presidents of Rice University, Texas Southern University, the University of Houston, Houston Baptist University and the University of St. Thomas.

But attorneys must now draft motions to dismiss the suit and to include technical provisions under which the panel will begin action, said Kelly Frels, attorney for the school district.

Those provisions call for the panel to be appointed by Feb. 1 and to hold an organizational meeting by March 1. Those appointees who choose not to serve themselves must appoint representatives to serve, Frels said.

"Legally, it is over," said Patrice Johnson, an attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. "The struggle is not over. The effort for quality education and to enforce the agreement with HISD is going to go on for five years."

Frank Burns, the local president of the NAACP, and the Rev. J. Don Boney asked earlier this week that Singleton add representatives from the NAACP and the Mexican-American Legal Defense Fund.

"I'm not happy with it at all," Boney said of the rejection. "It is obvious the committee is not balanced. The burden for quality in education rests solely with the community."

Burns said he was also disappointed.

"Nevertheless, I understand that it was a negotiated settlement and the committee was negotiated," he said.

Burns said the NAACP would form its own committee and monitor compliance with the desegregation agreement.

The suit was filed in 1956 on behalf of Delores Ross and Beneva Williams, who were black students denied entrance to all-white schools nearest their homes.

Other provisions of the settlement were a change in racial quotas to allow more black and Mexican-American students to attend magnet schools; retaining a provision requiring teaching staffs in each school reflect the racial makeup of the faculty district wide; and continuing efforts to ensure predominantly minority schools are staffed by their share of experienced teachers.

School records show that whites represent 19.9 percent of the district's students; blacks, 42 percent; Hispanics, 34.6 percent; and Asians, 3.5 percent.

Leland to lead congressional delegation to Ethiopia

HOUSTON (AP) — U.S. Rep. Mickey Leland, chairman of the U.S. House Select Committee on Hunger, says he will lead a congressional delegation to Ethiopia late this month to learn what can be done to ease effects of famine.

Leland, D-Houston, said the $45 million in aid pledged by the U.S. government a week ago will not be sufficient. He said a consortium of private voluntary organizations needed at least $200 million.

"People are dying every day and about 6 million people are at risk," Leland said at a news conference Thursday.

Leland said he would try to meet with Ethiopian leaders. He said he is inviting other members of Congress to accompany him, but the list for the delegation has not been drawn up.

The delegation, scheduled to leave Nov. 27 and return Dec. 2, will report its findings to the president, Leland said.

"I'm going to Ethiopia to deal with the problems that are complicating the delivery of food," he said. "Political differences must be put aside to get aid to starving people."

He said among the problems in dealing with the crisis has been the reluctance of Ethiopia's government to have military planes from Great Britain flying over the country.

"I know that sounds a little bit ridiculous," he said. "It's ridiculous to me when people are starving."

He said the situation is urgent.

"If we have to circumvent the government in order to make sure the food is going to the people, then so be it," Leland said, adding that the Ethiopian government has been "rather lax in its efforts" to alleviate the crisis.

A British Airways jumbo jet landed in Addis Ababa Thursday with 30 tons of food and relief supplies. Relief officials said they hope it represents the start of a large-scale airlift.

TURNOVER?

When Dallas Smith took office as sheriff, annual officer turnover rate was 69%. Today officer turnover rate is 24%. Turnover rate for all employees of the agency is 20%.

Dallas Smith improved working conditions. Inefficient and incompetent employees were weeded out. Salaries were increased to attract and keep better qualified officers. Morale climbed.

Turnover was declining even though a number of good officers and secretaries were lost to higher paying companies during the recent boom years.

Turnover was greatly reduced due to good management of a proven professional.

Leigh adds little sizzle in autobiography

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Unlike the "kiss and tell all" autobiographies of many screen stars of the past few years, about the only sizzle in actress Janet Leigh's new autobiography are her two teen-age marriages.

In "There Really Was a Hollywood" (Doubleday and Co., $15.95), Miss Leigh takes a benign look at her 36-year career in films and at the various men in her life.

There was her highly publicized marriage to actor Tony Curtis, who left her for German actress Christine Kaufman.

"Tony and I had wonderful time together; it was an exciting, glamorous period in Hollywood," Miss Leigh said during an interview at the mountaintop home she shares with broker Robert Brandt, her husband of 22 years.

"We had 10 good years together, and a lot of great things happened, most of all, two beautiful children (Tracy and Jamie Lee Curtis). Why should I write anything that would detract from that marriage?"

She details their split in the book and and discusses their beginnings.

"Early poverty affected Tony and me differently," Miss Leigh said. "I believe he didn't want to be Bernie Schwartz any longer. I remained too much the plebian Jeanette Helen Morrison, and I was a constant reminder of the beginnings he would have liked to forget."

Curtis changed his name from Bernie Schwartz and Miss Leigh changed hers from Jeanette Helen Morrison once they entered the movie world.

"Perhaps Christine Kaufman provided the timely bridge to that other world — she was European, spoke various languages, and she knew only the new Tony Curtis," Miss Leigh said.

Miss Leigh was working for MGM when the late billionaire industrialist Howard Hughes borrowed her to star in "Two Tickets to Broadway" and "Jet Pilot." The film trade thought she was another addition to his harem. But Miss Leigh said that was far from the truth.

"I hated his manipulation," she said. "I hated the arrangements he tried to make as if I were some kind of pawn in his power play. That's why my dad always drove me to RKO.

"Once he asked me, 'Why won't you have dinner with me?' I said, 'Because I hate your manipulation, all the underhanded things you do.' I finally said I would dine with him — if my mother and father went along. He agreed, and he spent most of the evening talking to my parents. They had a great time."

The 57-year-old Miss Leigh's life has known tragedy: three broken marriages; her father's suicide. But her positive attitude is in evidence throughout "There Really Was a Hollywood."

The Leigh films have included "Little Women," "Scaramouche," "The Naked Spur," "Prince Valiant," "My Sister Eileen," "Touch of Evil" and "The Manchurian Candidate." But her most famous role will always be the shower victim in "Psycho."

She found working with Alfred Hitchcock "surprisingly calm, pleasant, swift," because the director had planned every camera angle and action before the start of filming. She also writes about the late director's devilish side. "He relished scaring me," she said. "He experimented with the mother's corpse, using me as his gauge. I would return from lunch, open the door to the dressing room, and propped in my chair would be this hideous monstrosity. The horror in my scream, registered on the Richter scale, decided his choice of the madam."

New jobs hold unemployment level

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON — Civilian unemployment stood still at 7.4 percent in October as economic growth created nearly 350,000 new jobs — just enough to keep pace with a strong demand, the government said today.

In the last major economic indicator before Tuesday's presidential election, the Labor Department said the stagnant civilian jobless rate left more than 8.4 million people unemployed, as the ranks of those officially categorized as jobless shrank by 29,000.

The total number of employed rose by 347,000, from 105,239,000 to 105,586,000.

The new rate was 0.1 percentage point below that when President Reagan took office in January 1981. The October rate was 0.3 percentage point higher the June rate, the best of Reagan's tenure.

An alternate unemployment rate, which includes the 1.7 million members of the armed forces stationed in the United States, was also unchanged.

Even though the number of Americans with jobs since Reagan was inaugurated has risen by more than 6 million, the president has said repeatedly that, while he was pleased at that, he won't be satisfied until "everyone who wants a job can find one."

In advance of today's report, the Democratic Policy Committee, headed by Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, issued a statement saying that "today there are nearly 8.5 million people out of work. The administration cannot hide that."

The new rate, following more than 18 months of often dramatic declines after the 1981-82 recession, furnished the week's latest evidence of a general economic slowdown.

But private analysts have said that while joblessness has seemed in recent months to be stuck on a plateau, they do not expect unemployment surges of the sort that characterized the long business slump, in which joblessness hit a post-Depression peak of 10.7 percent in November 1982.

On Wednesday, the Commerce Department reported that the government's main economic forecasting gauge — the Index of Leading Economic Indicators — rose 0.4 percent in September.

But it revised the August index to a slight dip of 0.1 percent after sharp drops of 1.7 percent in July and 0.9 percent in June.

Three straight monthly declines in that index are often regarded by economists as an imperfect indicator that a recession may be near.

Some analysts say the country might be on the verge of a "growth recession," in which the pace of business expansion slows to the point where unemployment goes up because the economy is not growing fast enough to keep up with the expanding demand for jobs.

In testimony prepared for the congressional Joint Economic Committee, Janet L. Norwood, the commissioner of labor statistics, said, "Although there has been little change in the overall level and rate of unemployment in recent months, measures of average duration of unemployment...have fallen fairly steadily since mid-1983."

Ms. Norwood noted that in October, only 1.4 million or so of the more than 8.4 million people officially listed as unemployed reported that they had been out of work for six months or more.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics, which based today's report on a random, one-day survey of 60,000 households, said that the average duration of unemployment was 7.2 weeks.

The overall civilian jobless rate held steady despite the fact that nearly 320,000 people entered the labor force in search of work, swelling the force to more than 114 million. The labor force is the total of all those employed and those categorized by the government as genuinely looking for work but unable to find it.

A separate survey of business payrolls, not used in the rate compilation, showed the addition of 440,000 jobs last month, bringing the total number of people on those payrolls to 95.2 million.

That survey showed that 65 percent of industires hired new workers last month, up sharply form the 40 percent of September. But it also showed that employment in manufacturing was at just 70 percent of the level that prevailed before the recession.

The unemployment rates among the various population groups generally held steady last month, although joblessness among blacks rose 0.3 percentage point to 15.4 percent.

Among the other groups of workers, these were the rates:

—Adult men, 6.3 percent, down from 6.5 percent.

—Adult women, 6.9, up from 6.7.

HOUSE

Given in 1970 as a gift to the museum by Naomi Lancaster and her daughter, Billie Penn, the home was for many years the seat of cultural activities in Midland. Mrs. Lancaster was one of the founding members of, among others, the museum, the Midland-Odessa Symphony, Midland Community Theatre and Midland Arts Association.

She died Jan. 27, 1974.

When contacted about the board's decision, Mrs. Penn said, "Thank goodness she doesn't know. She would be heartbroken."

Mrs. Penn said her mother didn't want her name placed on other buildings. She cared only about the house. In 1970, Mrs. Lancaster told her daughter about a plan to leave the house to the Museum of the Southwest.

"SHE WAS SO excited that they'd asked for it and wanted to know what I thought since we would have inherited it. We told her to do what she wished. It was her home, and we wanted her to be happy with whatever was done with it. And she said, 'This will make me happy.'"

If the decision could be made again, Mrs. Penn said some aspects would be handled differently. "We would have an agreement with them that should they decide not to use it for the museum it would revert back to the heirs, property and all." Those heirs then would relocate the house to another site where it could be preserved and used by the community.

"We so trusted them. They were so anxious to get it. Sometimes you can trust people too far."

The museum has said that the valuable part of the gift was the real estate; however, Mrs. Penn said that was not the way the family was approached in 1970.

"At the time it was given there were many exciting plans being made for it as a unit of the museum," Mrs. Penn said.

Since the controversy between the museum board and the community arose over razing the house early last summer, it has been suggested the house was given to the museum as a tax write-off. Mrs. Penn denied the charge.

"She had an opportunity to sell it three or four times, which would have been far more than an income tax deduction.

"They (museum board) also said that the community was not interested in saving it and my phone rings constantly, people I don't even know, wanting the house saved," Mrs. Penn said.

OTHER LONGTIME Midland residents share Mrs. Penn's sentiments about razing the Lancaster House.

Ruth Burton, another founding member of the Midland-Odessa Symphony, said, "It is well worth saving. They don't need the land now, and it (demolition) certainly can wait a while. Give us a chance. When they need the land, if we haven't done anything, then they can tear it down."

Bruce Pearson, a former president of the board of trustees, said, "I always thought of the Lancaster House as part of the museum complex along with the Turner House, the Blakemore Planetarium and the Stables. It was always listed that way on the museum stationary, and the plans for the museum expansion included renovation and integration of the Lancaster House."

He acknowledged the house was limited for gallery space but he pointed out it could be used for other low traffic museum function. "Besides that, it has a lot of warmth, charm and historical interest that new construction could never duplicate," Pearson said.

Margaret Bissell and her husband, Col. C.E. "Bud" Bissell, gave a 45,000-piece archaeological collection to the museum prior to his death in 1977. Asked about the board's decision, Mrs. Bissell, who has lived in Midland since 1942 and was a friend of Mrs. Lancaster, said, "I think that's terrible.

"She was most generous with that house. I don't believe she ever said she knew the museum would tear the house down. I know she was happy that her home was being used for the garden club. I like progress to go on, but I don't see any progress going on by tearing it down."

ANOTHER MIDLAND resident had a different attitude. Mrs. George Abell, a longtime member and supporter of the museum, said, "I think from what all I hear about it, how rundown it is, and what a burden it is to the town and to the Museum of the Southwest, I can't see any point in trying to preserve it when it costs so much. The owners tried to give it away, tried to sell it for a long time, and they couldn't. Then they tried to give it to other organizations like the Museum of the Southwest and no one would accept it. And I can't understand why they keep pushing this when it isn't wanted.

"I'm just going by what the people who are informed tell me, and I know that I don't hear anything good about the old house."

The museum has not come through the battle unscathed. Membership is down 200 members this year over last. On Oct. 31, 1983, general membership was 743 and the president's club numbered 109. This Oct. 31, general membership was 528 and the president's club 115.

Mrs. Wilkinson said there were several factors for the drop in membership, such as the economy and people moving out of town. She also said they have received five to 10 letters from members "saying they will not rejoin the museum until the Lancaster situation is resolved."

The museum has applied for grants to help in building the educational wing, which will be on the site of the Lancaster House.

Mrs. Wilkinson said this wing would be an education building with classroom and labs and a lecture hall, all on one level, and have handicapped access and handle children's programs through adult. "It would take up most of the lot so it can't be built with the house there."

JOAN HELLEN, former director of the museum, said, "It seems curious to me now that in an architectural site rendering of 1982 they were able to incorporate an education wing into their expansion plans and still use the Lancaster House."

"When she was still director of the museum, we wanted to use it," Mrs. Wilkinson said. "The architects kept telling us it could not be used. It could not meet professional museum standards. We brought in a museum professional to evaluate our plans. He also said that building could not be used. That is why when the building reached a point where it could not be insured anymore, we decided to raze it."

Ms. Hellen said the architect search committee interviewed on site five nationally recognized architectural firms. "During the interviews, the search committee made a specific point of asking each architect how they could handle the Lancaster House within the museum complex and whether or not it was useful for us to keep it. All of them felt that the Lancaster House could be useful for museum support space for at least 20 years. It would involve rewiring, replumbing and adaptive use of its interior."

These interviews were taped, she said.

"THE MUSEUM consultant, John Hilberry, who was also an architect, felt strongly that the Lancaster House was an important element to the master plan," Ms. Hellen said, adding that these consultants' drawings should also be on file at the museum.

Plans do not exist in the immediate future to build on the site of the Lancaster House.

"We're really hoping the funds will come available in the next year or two for the building so that we can pick up some of the slack left by the public school system now that it is dropping some of the arts programs," Mrs. Wilkinson said.

"The popular decision would be to save the house," said Mrs. Wilkinson. "But we feel as trustees that our obligation is to the museum and making sure our limited funds are used properly."

Ms. Hellen disagrees that razing the Lancaster House is proper use of limited funds.

"The costs of renovation were projected at a lower rate per square footage than new construction," said Ms. Hellen, who was director June 1979 through Oct. 1, 1982. "One wonders why you need to tear a building down to build a new building when the original building could have been renovated safely and efficiently for the same purpose."

She added, "The board should remember that it is holding in trust for the community the museum and the museum's collection, which includes the Lancaster House. Therefore, board members are ultimately responsible to the public and the public desire."

AMEND

PROPONENTS FOR Amendment Three say this would only expand the law that now includes surviving spouse and minor children of public servants who suffer violent death while performing official duties. The amount of payment is left to the Legislature, according to an analysis of the amendments prepared by the Texas Legislative Council.

Opponents say there are other ways of compensating survivors of public servants and that at a time when the state budget is tight this could cost the state a great deal of money, the council's report noted.

The fourth amendment would allow voters of Bexar and Collin counties to decide if they want to continue the office of county treasurer, proponents note in the council's report. Duties of that office would be transferred to the county clerk.

But that transfer would concentrate too much authority in a single office, argue opponents to the measure. Tarrant County already has abolished that office, the study notes.

THE TEXAS Constitution currently has no provision for filling the vacancy of lieutenant governor. The fifth amendment would require the president pro tempore of the Senate to convene that body and elect one of its members to fill the vacancy until the next general election. Supporters of this measure say it will provide for continuity in the office while opponents argue that the current procedure of allowing the president pro tempore to perform the lieutenant governor's job is satisfactory.

Under present law, the Legislature is prohibited from authorizing a political subdivision to lend credit or loan money or valuables to individuals, associations or corporations, or to become stockholders in a corporation or association, according to the council's report. Amendment Six would change that by authorizing political subdivisions to purchase life, health and accident insurance from mutual insurance companies if under the contract the subdivision is not liable for assessments.

This prohibition was written into the State Constitution in 1876 at a time when the state routinely loaned money and credit to private enterprises, particularly to the developing railroads. After the Civil War, the railroads were unable to pay a considerable debt to the state, the report notes.

Supporters of this amendment say that the original prohibition is continued on a purchase of mutual insurance with a liability for assessments. "The amendment simply widens the market in which political subdivisions can shop for insurance," the report states.

Opponents, however, contend there is no compelling reason to amend the constitution.

THE SEVENTH amendment would add to the list of judicial officials subject to the State Commission on Judicial Conduct's disciplinary authority, change the membership of that commission and expand the types of conduct that may be the basis of a complaint to the commission.

The commission was created in 1965 and considers complaints against certain judicial officials and takes action or recommends action to the Supreme Court. This amendment, according to the legislative council's report, would eliminate one of two positions on the commision for district judges and assign those positions to one municipal court judge and one county court at law judge. It also provides for immediate suspension without pay for a judge charged with a misdemeanor involving official misconduct.

Proponents charge that changing the membership would make the commission more representative of the judicial officials it disciplines, according to the report. Opponents contend the disciplinary system would be easier to abuse with frivolous complaints and these additional complaints would require more staff which means more costs to the state.

THE FINAL constitutional amendment — number eight — would increase the per diem paid state legislators that would be "equal to the maximum daily amount allowed by federal law as a deduction for ordinary and necessary business expenses incurred."

Currently, legislators are allowed $30 a day on top of the $600 a month they receive during the term to which they are elected. Under the amendment, the per diem would be increased to $75 a day.

Supporters of this amendment say that the per diem allowance of $30 adopted in 1975 is out of date and that the cost of living in Austin has increased since then. But opponents argue that under the $30 a day rule this gives a legislator about $900 a month in addition to his regular legislative salary. The proposed amendment would increase that $900 to $2,250 a month, according to the council's report.

Man hangs himself in Denton jail

DENTON, Texas (AP) — A 23-year-old jail inmate being held in the slaying of a North Richland Hills teen-ager killed himself in his cell by fashioning a noose out of his socks, a preliminary investigation by the Denton County district attorney's office shows.

The death Thursday of Mark Robert Matthys, who faced capital murder charges, came only one day after he was shot in the neck by authorities in an escape attempt, a sheriff's official said.

"After interviewing all witnesses, indications are that he died as a result of suicide," said Marty Travelstead, sheriff's communication officer.

A final ruling will be made based on findings of the Dallas County medical examiner's office, he said.

Travelstead said Matthys, who had no cellmates, was discovered dead by jailers at 5 p.m., only an hour and a half after his parents had visited him.

"He was hung with his socks. They were tied together," Denton County Sheriff Kenneth George said. "He was checked at 4:15 p.m., and we believe he took himself between 4:15 and 5 p.m."

The sheriff added, "We put him in a single cell by himself where other prisoners couldn't bother him."

Matthys had been charged with capital murder in the death of Michelle Trimmier, 13, after his arrest late Tuesday, three days after her decomposed body was found, partially buried, on a farm he worked in south Denton County, near Roanoke.

The protest staged in California by those opposed to the killing of a healthy baboon to obtain its heart for implantation in a dying human infant is understandable in one context: New and radical breakthroughs in modern medical science traditionally have encountered public opposition.

That was the case in 1967 when Dr. Christiaan Barnard of South Africa performed the first transplant of a whole heart from one person to another and, more recently, when the first mechanical heart was implanted in a human being. Even though no animal donor was involved in the earlier operations, there was an outcry from particular quarters that said medical science was delving into an area into which it should not venture.

In the most recent operation, though, the protesters claim with some justification that a perfectly healthy baboon was killed by medical researchers when a human donor might have been available. Now we have learned that a human donor was available on the day the operation took place.

Doctors at the Loma Linda (Calif.) University Medical Center where the operation took place earlier this week counter that complaint by saying the infant was too near death to seek a human donor, so they used the heart of a 7-month-old baboon.

And the result? The infant, known only to the public as Baby Fae, was at last report showing signs of improvement and had been removed from a respirator.

While that fact in itself should be ample justification to anyone who cherishes human life, the use of animal organs for human recipients should not be encouraged when it is not necessary.

But animal and vegetable parts have been used for ages to nourish mankind and, in that respect, this baboon's heart was merely the most convenient possibility for life available at the time.

If you don't think the results of modern medical technology count, just ask Baby Fae's parents.

China takes a step

If you read the news from China, you can almost feel the earth shifting. The most populous communist nation in the world is turning to the free market to feed its people and revive its economy.

This shift comes from the top. The Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party has issued a 39-page directive ordering basic economic reforms. The privatization of agriculture, which has been responsible for record harvests, will be expanded to the industrial economy. Central planning and price controls will be replaced by a degree of free market trading, with some industries being leased by private groups, for profit.

This does not mean that China will become a free economy overnight. But it shows a striking departure from Soviet-style economic dogmatism, which has kept a stranglehold on that nation's economy, and a movement toward pragmatism, which has made Asian capitalist countries boom.

As laudable as the economic changes are, the party's totalitarian political control will remain unchanged. But the move is, at least, a step in the right direction.

Warsaw's dirty work

The motives for the kidnapping and apparent murder of a popular Polish priest remain obscure. But one thing seems clear: There is a rogue group within the Polish security forces not unlike the right-wing "death squads" in El Salvador.

Father Jerzy Popieluszko, who was noted throughout Poland for his patriotic, pro-Solidarity Masses at a Warsaw church, was kidnapped on Oct. 19. His disappearance set off a shock wave of anger among the Polish people — anger that could easily boil over into anti-government violence.

The regime has been at pains to demonstrate its own innocence. At the behest of Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski, the Communist Party's Central Committee condemned the kidnapping and promised severe punishment of the guilty.

The government has accused three members of the security forces of the kidnapping and reported that Capt. Grzegorz Piotrowski, the highest ranking of the three, has confessed to killing the priest. However, the accused men were said to have given conflicting accounts, and Popieluszko's actual fate was in doubt late Monday.

One explanation of the episode is that there is a group of hard-liners who believe that Jaruzelski is too soft on pro-Solidarity forces in the country and want to discredit him and his efforts to improve relations with the Roman Catholic Church.

That is the view of church officials, who perceive a power struggle within the Communist leadership. Lech Walesa, founder of the now-outlawed Solidarity movement, believes that the kidnappers were trying to goad Solidarity into "revolutionary" violence that could be used as a pretext for a harsh crackdown.

The regime itself has suggested that the conspiracy may have been more than the work of three overzealous policemen. The Central Committee resolution ordered a review of the nation's internal-security apparatus. And the interior minister himself referred, without explanation, to "those who shielded" the kidnappers.

Did the Soviet Union, which has close contacts with the secret police of all East European countries, in some way encourage the kidnapping? Is the kidnapping just the beginning of death-squad tactics? If so, will the Solidarity underground be tempted to meet terror with terror?

At this point it is impossible to say. Fortunately, the regime, the church and Solidarity leaders all have behaved responsibly so far, calling on the people to remain calm and eschew disruptive actions. But public outrage will be hard to contain if further incidents occur.

CIA's 'involvement' low-level?

WASHINGTON — We've caught the CIA in another big lie.

The spy agency, after some prodding, has admitted that it was involved in an investment firm in Honolulu that collapsed and cost hundreds of innocent investors millions of dollars.

Jack Anderson

But the CIA insisted that it was strictly a "low-level" involvement by a few employees, not something the big shots at the Langley headquarters knew about.

Does Stansfield Turner, then-director of the CIA, sound like a "low-level" connection? How about the sultan of Brunei, a Malaysian prince and assorted Filipino, Indonesian and Arab multimillionaires?

All of these dignitaries had one thing in common: They were all chauffeured around Hawaii in the investment company's big silver-and-black Cadillac limousine at the behest of the CIA.

My associates Indy Badhwar and Dale Van Atta interviewed the chauffeur, Franklin Kipilii — a descendant of Hawaiian royalty and a former highway patrolman, hotel detective and court bailiff — who now drives for the Tiffany Limousine Service.

Kipilii landed his job with the investment firm — Bishop, Baldwin, Rewald, Dillingham & Wong — by answering a newspaper ad. He said he was told straight off that BBRD&W had CIA connections. The firm's president, Ronald Rewald, now facing 100 criminal counts in connection with the company's collapse, warned him not to tell anyone about conversations he might overhear while driving VIPs around, Kipilii said.

It was at Christmas time 1980, that Kipilii was pressed into service for Mr. and Mrs. Turner, driving them from one airline terminal to another at the Honolulu airport. Kipilii said his boss, Rewald, gave him the chauffeuring assignment, telling him to get details from Jack Rardin, then the CIA station chief in Honolulu.

"I went to the airport with Mr. and Mrs. Rardin, who went in and came out with the dignitaries," Kipilii recalled. "The director was accompanied by an aide and two CIA bodyguards. I drove them around. They hooked up with Aloha Airlines and went to Maui to check on some property."

Turner has said he never met Rewald and knew nothing about his investment firm. But he confirmed details of the 1980 trip and remembered being met by the Rardins and riding in what he assumed was their limousine.

During his years as the BBRD&W chauffeur, Kipilii said, he drove dozens of CIA agents who either worked for the firm or were visiting Honolulu. He was the one who drove Rewald to Hickam Air Force Base for a party at which Rewald was introduced to Vice President George Bush as an "invaluable friend" of the CIA. Bush is a former CIA director.

Kipilii remembered attending a lavish Christmas party at the luxurious house Rewald bought from former Cambodian Prime Minister Lon Nol. Half a dozen CIA agents were there, he said. "The conversation was about CIA ties," Kipilii recalled. "I found it very intriguing."

Among the heavyweight passengers in the back of Kipilii's company limousine, he said, were Prince Saud Mohammed of the United Arab Emirates; the sultan of Brunei; a relative of the king of Malaysia; Enrique Zobel, a Philippine banker and multimillionaire with close ties to President Ferdinand Marcos, and Indri Gautama, an Indonesian multimillionare.

Rewald has claimed in an affidavit that he had intimate dealings with these dignitaries on behalf of the CIA.

"They would all be talking in the back seat of the limo," Kipilii said, "and I would hear quotes of up to $500 million in foreign investments. I was interviewed by the FBI. I told them about things I heard from the back of the limo."

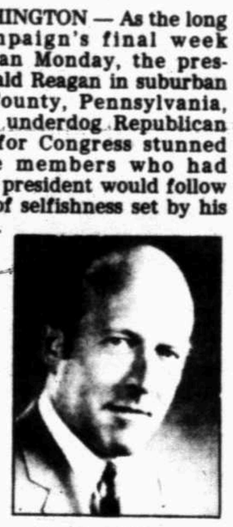
Reagan's 'help' adding suspense

WASHINGTON — As the long campaign's final week began Monday, the presence of Ronald Reagan in suburban Delaware County, Pennsylvania, boosting an underdog Republican challenger for Congress stunned GOP House members who had assumed the president would follow the pattern of selfishness set by his predecessors.



Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

It came late in the game, with considerable limitations, after much reluctance and partly by accident. Still, Reagan was making some effort for House seats. In romping to landslide victories, Dwight D. Eisenhower and Richard M. Nixon helped nobody. Indeed, not until tracking polls showed Reagan soaring, following the second debate with Walter F. Mondale, did the president's handlers agree to any congressional intervention.

That might "nationalize" individual House contests into votes of confidence on Reagan. Polls pitting well-known Democratic incumbents against anonymous Republican challengers yield a GOP pickup of no more than a dozen seats. But turning these races into a referendum on whether the president should have a Republican House could so transform the voter's choice so as to bring the Republican gain into the 20-to-30-seat range.

The smart money had been against any such effort. James A. Baker III, the president's chief of staff and political strategist, has told colleagues for months that Reagan's lead would drop to 4 or 5 percentage points by November. That precluded any presidential effort for House seats.

Baker's pessimism seemed realized after the polls narrowed following the Louisville debate. The obliviousness of the president's managers to candidates for Congress was obvious during his whistlestop tour in Ohio when he skirted but did not step foot in Toledo, despite a serious challenge there against a first-term Democrat.

But Reagan's anti-tax commercials and the Kansas City debate standoff again widened his lead to landslide proportions. After the second debate, the president's men agreed Reagan would take part in the battle for Congress — though with strict limitations.

The president's pollsters still insisted a call for a Republican Congress would cost Reagan votes without helping congressional candidates. It was decided Vice President George Bush would assume the traditionally grubby duties of his office by going into House districts while Reagan stuck to Senate races.

Besides, the Catch-22 governing presidential help remained in force: Reagan would not campaign for anybody who really needed it. Desperate pleas for help by businessman Ray Shamie, the Reaganite Senate nominee in overwhelmingly Democratic Massachusetts, were about to be spurned on grounds he was too far behind (and might hurt the president's chances of carrying the state). On Oct. 24, we were told flatly by a high-level Reagan-Bush operative the President would not be campaigning for Shamie.

He did not figure on the pressure mounted in Shamie's behalf by conservative activists. The decision to send Reagan into Massachusetts was made Oct. 25. On the next day, Reagan-Bush Deputy Campaign Manager Lee Atwater telephoned Paul Weyrich, New Right political operative, with this message: Call off the dogs; we give up.

Determination that Reagan would stick to Senate races crumbled mostly by accident. Campaign planners called Pennsylvania operative Rick Robb to ask his recommendation about where in the state the president should go. Robb's theory is that incumbent Republican congressmen ought to take care of themselves; it's the challengers who need help. He therefore suggested the 7th Congressional District in Philadelphia's suburbs.

The Seventh scarcely fit the Reagan-Bush ground rules governing where the president should campaign. Republican Delaware County Councilman Curt Weldon was running well behind four-term Democratic Rep. Bob Edgar, with little chance in an individual popularity contest. But because that race has been nationalized into a referendum on Reagan, Weldon has new life.

Reagan's help for another Republican underdog challenger, former state representative Matthew Hatchadorian, running against first-term Democratic Rep. Edward Feighan in the Cleveland suburbs was similarly haphazard. Bob Hughes, veteran Cuyahoga County (Cleveland) GOP chairman, simply made sure that Hatchadorian was invited to be with the president on his visit to Cleveland four days before the election.

Even with the president scheduled in Massachusetts, there was no invitation from Reagan-Bush headquarters to Greg Hyatt, a young anti-tax activist running for the state's only open congressional seat. Insiders give Hyatt no real chance against one of the state's most powerful figures: State Democratic Chairman Chet Atkins. After some nervous movements, Hyatt's managers learned he would indeed be on the platform with Reagan and Shamie in Boston.

All year long, the test of how serious Ronald Reagan was about electing Republican congressmen was whether he ever would stand by Greg Hyatt's side in Massachusetts. Even more than Hatchadorian and Weldon, Hyatt's only hope is for his race to be nationalized by the president. Tardy and reluctant though the effort seems, it adds the only element of suspense to the 1984 election.

Chief's action cited

I would like to commend our chief of police, Wayne Gideon, for his strong character and for exercising "great" restraint in handling the vicious and aggressive attacks on his character by Dallas Smith.

Although Smith has tried almost every trick in the book to provoke him; the chief has not gotten down in the mud with him. I believe residents of Midland can see who the fanatic is and are embarrassed by his actions.

Chief Gideon is responsible to the city manager and the city councilmen on a daily basis, and could be fired on any day. He has been chief for many years. If Gideon was of such character as Smith alleges, or had done such a poor job, don't you think our mayor, our city councilmen would have removed him from his job.

Why hasn't Gideon been fired? Because Chief Gideon and the officers of the police department have not allowed adult bookstores and movie theatres, open illegal gambling or strip joints or prostitutes walking the streets like in Odessa. In fact, it was Chief Gideon and the police department who prevented male strippers from opening at a local club.

Our family is supporting Gary Painter in the November election. We feel that Gary is a very dedicated and professional law enforcement officer who can and will cooperate with Chief Gideon and the officers of the police department increasing the effectiveness of the sheriff's department in the county.

Abortion 'blot' on civilization

Tuesday, Oct. 23, marked the first anniversary of the bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut and much has been said about the loss of American lives. This is a tragedy indeed and all caring people are touched by the grief of the families of these men. Their loss will be felt for many years.

However, there is an even greater tragedy occurring in America every day: The cruel and deliberate murder of helpless unborn babies who have no forts nor guns for protection. These babies are being torn to pieces by the suction method of abortion, or burned to death by injection of saline solution.

The young women who abort these babies claim they have the right to do as they please with their own bodies, and they do; but they do not have the right to destroy the little bodies they have conceived, they have the right to prevent conception.

We see on newsreels families of the young men who died in Beirut weeping at the tombs of their young men, but who weeps for these babies who have been thrown in garbage cans or sold to cosmetics companies to be used in cosmetics?

The hypocrisy of this situation is a blot on the intelligence of a so-called civilized nation, a blot on the conscience of the officials who allow such behavior to go unpunished and especially on a nation built on God's principles!

Answers due from museum

For some time I have watched with disgust the attitude of the Museum of the Southwest towards the Lancaster House. As far as the trustees or the museum are concerned, there apparently are no ifs, ands or buts about it. The house must be moved.

The site it occupies is apparently the most valuable piece of property in Midland and no other location will do despite the fact that there is quite a bit of empty space all around the museum grounds. Will the Turner house be next?

Many of us would like to know what the plans of the trustees are for the Lancaster House location and why are they so reluctant to let the supporting public in on these plans. It would seem that the only time the general public is needed by these folks is each September when they have their Septemerfest.

Until such time as some of these questions are answered by the trustees I intend to join many of my friends and not renew my membership in the Museum of the Southwest. Next September I'll try to find something else to do at the time of Septemberfest.

Amendment 2 'a great help'

I want to thank you for the timely article on the editorial page in the Sunday, Oct. 28, edition in which you recommended that we vote for Amendment 2 in the Nov. 6 election.

For those that didn't see the article, it provides financial assistance for smaller colleges and universities without creating a tax. The money comes from an existing fund. It is certainly not a cure all, but it will be a great help.

White girl taken from black family

By RAY FORMANEK Jr.
Associated Press Writer

BATON ROUGE, La. — State officials have denied charges of racism and say they had "valid reasons" for taking an 11-year-old white girl away from the black family she began living with three years ago when her mother was jailed on drug violations.

Christina Mashburn was seized by police Tuesday as she got off a school bus. State officials say she was living with a couple, Louis and Barbara James.

"They won't let me visit her now because of all the publicity," said Pamela Mashburn, the girl's mother, breaking into tears. "I was supposed to have two visiting days a month. The last time I saw her she was looking back, crying, in the back seat of a police car."

"To be honest with you, I think race is definitely a factor here," said state Rep. Alphonse Jackson Jr., who is investigating the incident. "I really can't prove it. But I really believe it."

Jackson is black and heads the state House Health and Welfare Committee, which oversees the state agency responsible for removing the girl.

Bossier City Judge Bill Ross Robinson signed the court order telling police to pick up the girl Tuesday. He refused to comment on the case.

"They chased her down like a dog," Ms. Mashburn said Thursday in a telephone interview. "She was trying to make it to the house when they caught her and put her in the police car."

Department of Human Health and Resources officials defended the move, saying they had monitored the situation before removing the child.

NATION IN BRIEF

Couple gets son back

JORDAN, Minn. (AP) — Don and Cindy Buchan, reunited with their young son following a court-ordered separation imposed after they were charged with sexually abusing children, now say they'll seek the return of their two daughters.

The situation faced by the Buchans, against whom charges were dropped in October, is replicated many times in Scott County, where similar charges were dropped at the same time against 20 other people.

Many children of former defendants had been ordered to foster homes, leaving about a dozen custody cases pending.

William Buchan, who will be 2 next month, apparently is the first child returned to parents who had been charged. He was returned Thursday after a hearing in Scott County Family Court. His sisters, Melissa, 5, and Courtney, 3, remained in foster homes.

Cuban inmates subdued

ATLANTA (AP) — Guards fired volleys of tear gas early today to subdue about 500 Cuban prisoners who rioted for eight hours at the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary to protest their confinement.

Two guards suffered minor injuries and no prisoners were hurt in the disturbance, which followed the Cuban prisoners' first trip to the dining hall since about 80 Cubans staged four days of demonstrations at the prison last month.

The prison holds about 1,500 Cubans who came to the United States in the 1980 "Freedom Flotilla," but were detained because they told immigration officials they had criminal histories or mental problems.

Woman tired of running

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — A Christian fundamentalist woman accused of hiding her son from his homosexual father, who had legal custody, says she surrendered to authorities because she tired of life on the run.

"The life we were living wasn't a normal life," said Betty Lou Batey, who has admitted taking her son, Brian, and going underground for 19 months after a court awarded custody of the boy to Frank Batey two years ago.

Mrs. Batey, testifying Thursday at a hearing to modify custody for Brian, said she fled with the boy after a scheduled weekend visit Sept. 17, 1982. They stayed about a week in Oklahoma and moved on to Texas, staying in Houston and Port Arthur, and eventually settling in Huntington.

She said they stayed in a mobile home while caring for an invalid woman for 17 months. During that time, she said, Brian, now 13, did not attend school but was given a box of self-paced educational materials by a friend.

Mrs. Batey, a member of the United Pentecostal Church, was divorced from Frank Batey in 1975 after four years of marriage. Her church views homosexuality as a sin.

Cable becomes issue

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A cable television decency measure on the Nov. 6 ballot has put Utah's powerful forces of Mormon morality and distaste for government interference on a collision course.

Few issues in recent years have caused such an internal conflict. Initiative A would make cable broadcasting of "obscene or indecent material" a crime.

A poll released today says voters, after being divided almost equally on the issue a month ago, are starting to lean against it. At the same time, the debate has intensified in a state where 70 percent of the 1.5 million residents are Mormon and more than 100,000 households subscribe to cable television.

Similarly, voters in Vista, Calif., a community north of San Diego, will consider a measure on Election Day aimed at making it illegal to transmit indecent cable TV. The ballot measure is aimed primarily at The Playboy Channel. Accompanying the measure is an advisory vote on whether the city should earmark up to $300,000 in expected legal costs if the anti-porn measure passes.

Child seat law goes into effect

AUSTIN (AP) — On-the-road freedom for the littlest Texans ends Wednesday when the use of child safety seats becomes mandatory.

A West Texas legislator opposes the law as an unnecessary violation of civil liberties, akin to barring football because players get injured.

"Are we going to tell people they can't ride Brahman bulls because they get beat up every time?" asked Rep. Foster Whaley, D-Pampa.

But the director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union says the law is not an unreasonable government intrusion into the privacy of the car.

"That's what we are all about, resisting government intrusions on civil liberties," Gara LaMarche said Tuesday. "But here we are talking about young people and their safety. It's an extremely minimal intrusion."

Texas became one of the last states to adopt the safety seat law when it was approved in the summer special session. Beginning Wednesday, children under 2 must be secured in safety seats when riding in vehicles. Children 2-4 must be in either a safety seat or seat belt.

Bill supporters expect the law to produce a significant decrease in child injuries and deaths in wrecks. In 1982, 78 children under 4 died in Texas wrecks, and another 6,603 were hurt. Those numbers could be cut by 80 percent under the new law, according to the Texas Department of Health.

A violation is punishable by a fine of up to $50. However, no penalties will be assessed until January. Fines can be avoided by buying a seat within 10 days of the offense.

State Health Commissioner Robert Bernstein says approval of the law provided him with "great pleasure and relief."

The law left Whaley annoyed. He says it's not that he's against protecting children.

"We've got conservative people up here who think people are smart enough to make up their own minds about it," he said in Pampa. "That law was passed by lobbyists down there who want to sell restraining seats."

Sales of the restraining devices are up, according to Jim Leatherman, assistant manager at an Edison's store in Austin.

"It's been steadily going up ever since it was first announced," Leatherman said.

The seats, which cost from about $30-$80, also are available from rental and loaner programs.

Whaley and others fought a losing battle on the House floor during June debate on the bill. Several members came up with situations in which compliance with the law could be tough or unreasonable.

This graphic points out improper use of children's car safety seats. A state law requires that all children under age 4 must be "properly protected" while riding in a motor vehicle.

Judge faces 'bare' facts in courtroom

COVINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Judge Wilfred Schroder knew he had the wrong man in court for "mooning" a Taylor Mill couple when he had the defendant stand and bare the facts of the case.

Samuel and Linda Myers had filed a criminal harassment complaint, alleging that George Bushong had pulled down his pants and exposed his buttocks in their neighborhood last month.

The Myerses said the culprit had a half dollar-sized mole on one cheek, and defense attorney Mark Bubenzer offered Wednesday to prove he was representing an innocent man.

"So we cleared the courtroom, except for the atttorneys," said Schroder. "We had him bare his buttocks and there was nothing there. I decided right then and there whose testimony to believe."

WHO WANTS TO FIGHT THE TOUGH KID?

Did you notice as you were growing up that no one "picked" on the tough kid in the neighborhood? Why➡His superior physical strength combined with his willingness to use this advantage if necessary was a deterrent to anyone who might otherwise abuse him. He commanded a respect among his peers that created a peaceful coexistence.

The Republican Party of Texas, as resolved at the 1984 state convention, supports a national strategy of PEACE THROUGH STRENGTH and encourages the Reagan Administration to continue to rebuild our deterrent capability.

Candidate ready for wildest job

LADYSMITH, Wis. (AP) — Rose Wawrzyniak raised four children while farming, driving stock cars and riding bulls, but the 57-year-old bar owner says she's ready for "the wildest job I've ever taken on" if voters make her sheriff.

Jump River Rose, nicknamed for the tavern she owned in Jump River before buying Rose's Deer Farm and Supper Club, hadn't even considered becoming Rusk County's sheriff until county officials and a former sheriff suggested it.

Now, her customers at the Deer Farm are already toasting a Nov. 6 victory and Mrs. Wawrzyniak is mapping plans to become northwestern Wisconsin's version of Annie Oakley.

"I've worked like a man all my life," she said. "I've done bull-riding and car-racing, but I think this is the wildest job I've ever taken on. I haven't got nervous yet, but I imagine by next Tuesday I will."

Rose, as she's known to everyone, is a candidate who doesn't mind giving campaign buttons to grade-school kids who won't be eligible to vote for a decade, or having her picture taken when she's puffing on a cigar.

"It's really something when her chewing tobacco catches fire like that," joked state Assembly candidate Allen Beadles of Jump River, a longtime friend. "She's a real promoter. Every community should have a Rose."

Mrs. Wawrzyniak fought an uphill campaign, but she defeated Sheriff William Volkman in the September primary by a 3-2 margin and folks with their ears close to the political ground in this county of 15,000 souls say she just might win.

"Anything could happen in a week, but if it was today, I think she'd win it," said Beadles.

Rose is facing Republican Gary Fetting, a deputy sheriff, and Volkman, a write-in candidate. With a last name like Wawrzyniak, Rose figures she's lucky she doesn't have to count on a write-in campaign.

While her opponents emphasize their law enforcement experience, Rose says determination and ability to communicate are the prerequisites for the job, and that she has both, in ample measure.

"I'll sit in that office 24 hours a day if I have to to make those men understand I'm boss," she said, sipping a low-alcohol beer behind the bar at the Deer Farm, which she's owned for eight years.

The supper club's menagerie includes 23 deer, as well as ducks, geese, turkeys, peacocks and a goat.

Dolphins fish for perfection

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

NFL Roundup

When he's asked about the possibility of this year's Miami Dolphins emulating his 1972 squad, the last National Football League team to go unbeaten, Don Shula gives the standard answer about playing them one at a time.

If the Dolphins are still unbeaten after Sunday, the questions will get more frequent.

Miami visits Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J., in the first of two meetings with the New York Jets, who are 6-3 and tied with New England three games back in the AFC East. If the Dolphins can get by New York on the road, the only serious obstacles left seem to be the Los Angeles Raiders and Dallas Cowboys and both those teams will have to visit Miami.

But, Shula worries this week only about the Jets and their pass rush, which will have to deal with a Miami front line that has allowed Dan Marino to be sacked only four times.

"Any quarterback can be sacked," says the Jets' Mark Gastineau, who leads the NFL with 16½ sacks. "Its' just a matter of applying the right pressure. But Marino is as elusive as anyone."

IN OTHER games Sunday, Cleveland is at Buffalo, Green Bay at New Orleans, Houston at Pittsburgh, the Los Angeles Raiders at Chicago, the New York Giants at Dallas, Philadelphia at Detroit, San Diego at Indianapolis, Tampa Bay at Minnesota, Cincinnati at San Francisco, Kansas City at Seattle, the Los Angeles Rams at St. Louis and New England at Denver.

Atlanta is at Washington Monday night.

The Jets' record has been built mostly against the NFL's lower echelons — they've lost twice to New England, which is also 6-3. That makes a win against the Dolphins even more important if the Jets are to have a good shot at the playoffs.

So while Shula worries about Gastineau, Jets Coach Joe Walton is concerned with Marino, who has already passed Bob Griese's Miami season record with 27 touchdown passes in nine games and seems almost certain to break the NFL mark of 36, held by George Blanda and Y.A. Tittle.

"He has uncanny ability," Walton says of Marino. "You can't outrun his arm. They are the classic example of a team using a pass to set up the run. You have to be so conscious of that, so it makes their running game better.

"It puts tremendous pressure on the linebackers. It keeps your secondary back so you don't get beat on bombs."

THE CARDINALS, who have won four straight, are 6-3 and tied with Dallas at the top of the NFC East. They've beaten three straight division rivals — Dallas, Washington and Philadelphia — but Coach Jim Hanifan says he has no fear of a letdown against the Rams, who were shutout 33-0 by San Francisco last weekend and at 5-4 are three games behind the 49ers in the NFC West.

"If we were playing St. Mary's of the Wasatch this would be a big game," Hanifan says.

The game in Chicago is a big one for the Super Bowl champion Raiders, who dropped a 22-19 overtime decision and fell out of a first place tie with the Raiders in the tough AFC West. Los Angeles is 7-2, with both losses to 8-1 Denver, meaning help is needed from outside if the Raiders are to win the division.

The Bears, 6-3, need no help — they lead the NFC Central by three games. But they're looking forward to the Raiders as a way to prove they belong with the NFL's big boys.

"If we can beat a team like the Raiders, it'll prove we can beat a team like that in the playoffs," says linebacker Al Harris, a member of the defense that dominates NFL defensive statistics.

Rebs can clinch against Bronchos

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee will test Isaac Newton's Law of Gravity in Memorial Stadium's 8 p.m. District 4-5A football shootout with Odessa High's Bronchos today as the Rebels gun for their second consecutive state playoff berth.

That playoff apple is dangling ripe from the 4-5A tree and the Rebs hope to shake that tree tonight. Will the apple fall to earth? That is the question. In theory, Newton should be right, but in the world of District 4-5A, the law needs to be tested yearly.

IF LEE can hand the 3-5 Bronchos another loss, the Rebels will waltz into the state playoffs, regardless of what they do next weekend against cross-town rival Midland High. That's what Lee coach Jack Tayrien is hoping will happen.

"It would sure be nice to have that playoff berth in the hip pocket before we play Midland High. Then we could go out and play that last game for fun without worrying about the playoffs," said Tayrien.

"Odessa High scares you though," he added. "They have been in every district game except the loss to San Angelo. And they always play Lee tough. We will have to take care of business and see what happens. If we do lose our last two games, I don't think we deserve to be in the playoffs anyway. I told our kids that they have to earn anything they get. Nobody is going to give you anything in this district."

The Lee-OHS game was for years the district opener for both teams. The new 4-5A schedule now pits the two against each other prior to the two intra-city clashes in Odessa and Midland. How much difference does that make to the coaches?

"I really don't know how to evaluate it," noted Tayrien. "We always opened with Odessa and they are really tough on you early in the year. They have Permian next week and always look forward to playing that game. I don't know how this game will be. I know it is an important one for us."

ODESSA HIGH coach Jerry Millsapps would prefer to play Lee earlier in the year, saying, "I would rather meet Lee earlier. For one thing, you have them out of the way and don't have to look forward to playing them again. And then to end against Permian, well, that's a tough way to end the season.

"Really, I'd rather be in another district and open with El Paso High and end with El Paso Cathedral."

Denver's old golden Nugget rips Bulls, 129-113

Red-hot Rockets win again

NBA Roundup

When Dan Issel was younger, he was renowned for going full tilt for 48 minutes. At age 36, his playing time has been reduced but not his competitive spirit.

Issel came off the bench to score 25 points in 27 minutes Thursday night, boosting the Denver Nuggets to a 129-113 thumping of the Chicago Bulls.

"Dan Issel really got it going," said Denver Coach Doug Moe. "It's a good thing we didn't start him, or he might be dead now.

"Old Dan — and I mean old — really gave us a lift."

"I thought we had a terrific effort from a lot of players tonight," added Moe, and Chicago Coach Kevin Loughery could only agree.

"Denver is much more aggressive defensively than they've ever been in the past," he said. "We didn't deserve to win this game. Denver outplayed us and just beat us in every aspect of the game."

Calvin Natt scored 11 of his 31 points in the first five minutes of the fourth quarter to fuel Denver's romp.

The Nuggets led 96-91 early in the final quarter when Natt connected on a three-point play to ignite a 15-6 spurt by Denver. Natt went on to score eight in a row for the Nuggets, who established a 109-97 bulge with 7:27 to go. Denver led by as many as 19 down the stretch.

Quintin Dailey led the Bulls with 26 and Orlando Woolridge added 24.

Pistons 118, Hawks 114

Kelly Tripucka, who scored 25 points, hit a layup with 24 seconds to play to snap a 114-114 tie. After Atlanta's Dominique Wilkins was called for walking, Isiah Thomas iced the Detroit victory with a pair of free throws.

Detroit's Dan Roundfield, a former Hawk, led all scorers with 26, including 12 in the final period. Eddie Johnson paced the Hawks with 24 and Wilkins added 22.

Rockets 109, Kings 106

Rodney McCray canned a 20-foot jumper with 28 seconds left and Lewis Lloyd added a pair of free throws as Houston ran its season-opening unbeaten streak to three games. Kansas City, meanwhile, slipped to 0-3.

Reggie Theus scored seven straight points and Larry Drew sank two free throws to give the Kings a 102-100 lead. Houston center Ralph Sampson fouled out on the play.

Eddie Johnson, who led Kansas City with 26 points, gave the Kings a 106-105 lead with two free throws and a basket, the latter with 41 seconds left.

Akeem Olajuwon led the Rockets with 25 points.

Clippers 107, Knicks 105

Norm Nixon scored nine of his 21 points in final period as the Clippers made a successful debut in Los Angeles. The Clippers, who played in San Diego last season, led 106-103 after Nixon's 20-footer with 1:20 to play. Bernard King, who led the Knicks with 25 points, hit his final basket to cut the Los Angeles lead to one point. Rory White's free throw with two seconds to go completed the scoring.

Spurs 123, Warriors 108

Forward Mike Mitchell notched 33 points as San Antonio, winner of three straight, bombed mistake-prone Golden State. The Warriors, winless in four games, were guilty of 24 turnovers.

George Gervin added 16 points and Artis Gilmore 15 for the Spurs.

San Antonio led most of the way and took a 91-80 lead into the fourth period.

Sleepy Floyd had 23 points for Golden State.

Sonics 105, Lakers 103

Ricky Sobers' 18-foot jumper with seven seconds to play to give Seattle a two-point lead. Los Angeles missed a final chance to tie the game when Magic Johnson threw a bad inbounds pass as time expired.

Tom Chambers led Sonics scorers with 20 points and 15 rebounds and Al Wood added 19.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 24 points for the Lakers, who blew a 10-point first-half lead and a 103-101 advantage in the final minute.

Suns 139, Blazers 130, 3OT

Larry Nance scored a career-high 44 points and Kyle Macy scored the go-ahead basket as Phoenix pulled away from Portland in the third extra period to remain unbeaten. The Suns' fourth consecutive victory was a franchise record for the start of a season.

Macy, who scored 13 points, put the Suns ahead to stay at 129-127 on a layin with 3:01 left in the third overtime. He added two free throws with 10 seconds remaining for a 137-130 bulge and rookie Jay Humphries sank two free throws with two seconds to go to seal it.

Nance also had a career-high 17 rebounds and six blocked shots.

Portland, now 2-1, got 28 points from Jim Paxson and 24 from Kiki Vandeweghe.

Michael Jordan of the Chicago Bulls (23) had his first taste of rookie bad fortune as Denver's Wayne Cooper (42) rejects his driving layup. The Bulls lost 129-113.

Lee, OP try to end race

Odessa Permian and Midland Lee are seeking to turn out the lights in District 4-5A tonight with a week still left in the regular season.

Thoughts can then be turned to playoff hopes, but fans already have minds in that direction.

Permian is good at turning out lights. The Panthers are unbeaten, No. 1-ranked in the state and have already had practice in that area. Old Mojo turned out the lights on Lee in Ratliff Stadium and that isn't a figure of speech.

Permian has already clinched a playoff berth and can lose their last two games without skipping a heart beat. However, that could cost the Panthers a district championship if Lee were to win its last two games.

Permian coach John Wilkins still wants a win tonight over the Midland High Bulldogs. It seems that Permian has a 10-game winning streak going against MHS and Permian doesn't like to spoil tradition. Wilkins, for some reason, also wants to nail down the fifth consecutive 4-5A title. He said something about that it had never been done and he would just as soon his Panthers had the honor.

Well, John, you have to look deep and wide to get your kids up for the Bulldogs. You have enough titles already at old Mojo High and 10 games in a row is enough to win over any team. Quite frankly, we're getting a little tired of this Mojo jinx against the Bulldogs. But we can always fall back on last year when Lee defeated the jinx twice.

Midland High faces the prospect of ending the year with a 5-5 record by ending with Permian and Lee. If we could take two plays back, the Bulldogs would be 7-1 on the season and shooting for playoff glory themselves tonight. They have been in every game they have played and it seems a shame that the 'Dogs might not have an outright winning season.

But the books aren't closed on that matter yet. If Wilkins and Mojo would have a little charity, the Bulldogs might surprise. Anyway, it's about time for a big surprise in 4-5A. Things have been getting too predictable lately.

It that a laugh we're hearing from Wilkins? The man is just too serious — and greedy. He wants his cake and the calories too. Will Mojo never change?

And the work never ends. Here's this week's pick in District 4-5A:

Midland Lee 28, Odessa High 7: The Rebels can smell the roses from where they are. They need only to reach out and touch them. Besides, Jack Tayrien needs a good night sleep and he'll have one tonight.

Odessa Permian 24, Midland High 10: Wilkins won't cooperate, but the Bulldogs could prove to be tougher than many expect. MHS is closing the gap, but this isn't the year.

Abilene Cooper 34, San Angelo 28: This may be the toughest game to pick this year. San Angelo should be favored, but many are expecting San Angelo to fold its tent after a tough loss to Permian last week. Cooper is on the rise after a close call against Midland High.

Abilene High 20, Big Spring 7: The Eagles made their last fatal pass at playoff hopes last week, but will recover enough to hold off the Steers. Abilene High is still a good football team.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, who issued the order to Wilson via letter, took similar action earlier this year against San Diego fullback Chuck Muncie.

Wilson left without comment after picking up a copy of Rozelle's letter at the Bengals' office Thursday. It had been waiting for him since Tuesday.

"Wilson will be ineligible to play with any team in the NFL, pending further review of his situation after successful completion of any prescribed treatment. TV revenues major issue in baseball negotiations

NEW YORK (AP) — Division of $1 billion in television revenue is expected to be among the issues when major league baseball and the player's union sit down Nov. 14 to begin negotiations on a new contract.

The old contract, which ended a two-month strike by players in 1981, expires Dec. 31.

In making the announcement Thursday, the Players Union and baseball's Player Relations Committee said that a second negotiating session would be held Nov. 20.

An impasse over free-agent compensation prompted the 1981 strike, but the issue this time figures to be the split of TV money which, incidentally, precipitated the 1982 National Football League strike.

Baseball's 1983 pact with ABC and NBC is worth an additional $6 million over five years for each team in baseball, but the union thinks the players should share in those proceeds.

Habs overcome Bossy Isles, 6-5

Associated Press

NHL

Mike Bossy can score goals as well as anyone who's ever played in the National Hockey League. But not even Bossy is enough to offset a team's defensive collapse.

The Islanders fell apart defensively in a 2:57 span of the second period, allowing the Canadiens to score four times and grab a 5-4 lead Thursday night Bossy tied the game with his fourth goal of the contest early in the third period but his outburst wasn't enough as Pierre Mondou scored the first overtime goal of his career in lifting Montreal to a 6-5 victory.

Bossy is off to the best start of his illustrious NHL career, which has seen him score at least 50 goals in all seven of his seasons as an Islander. He leads the league with 32 points and his second four-goal game of the year gave him a phenomenal 17 in 10 games.

Yet the super right wing was lamenting the one he didn't get.

"I score a goal on my rear end and then I miss an open net," said Bossy, who misfired with two seconds left in the middle period and goalie Steve Penney out of position. "Hockey is a funny game that sometimes doesn't make any sense."

Bossy's second goal of the night came while he was flat on his fanny and gave New York a 3-0 edge. He sent a wrist shot through the legs of Penney.

But then the Islanders came apart at the seams.

"We had a terrible sequence of about eight minutes where we started running around and leaving the front of the net open," Islander Coach Al Arbour said.

They also left goalie Billy Smith, who was making his first start this season, without any help.

Montreal's John Chabot had cut the Islander lead to 3-1 when he scored his first goal of the season at 5:24. Then Mark Hunter got two goals, while Mike McPhee and Mats Naslund each scored one to boost Montreal in front.

Arbour said Smith wasn't too blame for the six goals, though the veteran netminder said "I should have had a couple of them."

He had no chance on the game-winner, provided 2:21 into OT by Mondou's deft deflection.

Jets 7, Flyers 4

Brian Mullen scored twice on power plays and Dale Hawerchuk set up four goals for Winnipeg, which snapped Philadelphia's five-game winning streak. Winnipeg broke the game open with three unanswered second-period goals.

"Our power play worked well, we made crisp passes and moved the puck well," Winnipeg Coach Barry Long said. "I think the key to beating the Flyers is a good power play, and we were able to execute."

"We skated really well, made a good effort in all phases," Hawerchuk said. "We really took it to them. This building (the Spectrum) is a tough place to come in and win."

Bruins 7, Nordiques 1

Tom Fergus had a goal and two assists as seven different Bruins scored. Boston has won four in a row since Charlie Simmer was acquired from Los Angeles.

Simmer continued his cutch scoring since being acquired last week, breaking a 1-1 tie in the second period.

"That was a goal-scorer's goal," Boston Coach Gerry Cheevers said. "He held it, held it, waited and then bang, he put it in. Not many players would have scored on that play."

"With Simmer, now I'm afraid to play them," said Quebec Coach Michel Bergeron. "Simmer probably is a 50-goal scorer and he makes them a much better team."

Flames 9, Red Wings 5

Carey Wilson — the NHL's top rookie scorer — Richard Kromm and Paul Reinhart each struck for a pair of goals as the Flames romped. Reinhart added two assists, while Kent Nilsson set up three goals, Hakan Loob and Al MacInnis contributed a goal and two assists apiece.

Reed Larson connected twice for Detroit.

'85 Dallas race canceled

DALLAS (AP) — The new Dallas Grand Prix auto race won't be run in 1985 because of scheduling problems, its promoter has announced.

Promoter Don Walker canceled the Formula One racing event after he was unable to get a June 2, 1985 date, Dallas Grand Prix spokesman Rob Allyn said Thursday. Racing officials had scheduled the race for next March 24, a date Walker called unacceptable.

Allyn said Walker, founder of this year's inaugural running of the event, was "very disappointed" the event would not be held.

Walker plans to promote several other auto races in the Dallas area and will try to host a grand prix in 1986, Allyn said.

The announcement came after Walker had sent a message by wire Wednesday night to European grand prix officials saying he had complied with a requirement that he post a $200,000 bond to ensure a 1985 race in Dallas.

Although staged in brutal heat, the Dallas Grand Prix on July 8 drew almost 200,000 spectators over its three days — the biggest crowd ever for a Formula One racing event in North America.

Poll: Nixon best, worst president

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Richard M. Nixon was the best president this century — and one of the worst, according to a straw poll taken at the South Carolina State Fair.

Nixon, who captured 1,994 votes for best president during the fair last week, also was chosen by 1,106 fairgoers as worst — putting him second behind Jimmy Carter, who got 2,602 votes, said John Heiting of the University of South Carolina's McKissick Museum, which conducted the poll.

Franklin D. Roosevelt took 1,435 votes as runner-up in the best president category, followed by Harry S. Truman and John F. Kennedy with 1,000 apiece.

Kennedy took 1,798 votes as the favorite chief executive, followed by 1,022 for Nixon.

LONDON (AP) — Sir John Gielgud praised the late actor James Mason for his "brilliant combination of romantic panache and down-to-earth realism" at a memorial service at St. Paul's Church in Covent Garden.

Gielgud

Actor David Warner, comedian Spike Milligan, and actress Ann Todd were among the entertainers who attended the memorial service Thursday for Mason, who died in Switzerland on July 27 at the age of 75.

Gielgud directed Mason on stage in 1934 and they appeared together in Joseph L. Mankiewicz's 1953 film, "Julius Caesar," in which Gielgud played Cassius to Mason's Brutus. They worked together in Mason's last film, "The Shooting Party," which hasn't been released yet.

Gielgud called the Cambridge-educated actor "always so punctilious, beautifully mannered, quiet."

Gielgud finished by quoting the remark from "Julius Caesar" that Mark Antony made of Brutus: "This was a man."

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Television journalists John Chancellor of NBC and Sam Donaldson of ABC will be among the speakers at the 75th annual convention of the Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi.

NEW YORK (AP) — Entertainer Barry Manilow will have a busy night Saturday as he sandwiches an appearance on NBC's Saturday Night Live between sold-out performances at Radio City Music Hall.

Manilow

Manilow will finish his 8 p.m. show about 11:15 p.m., dash to the NBC studios where he will play himself in a sketch with comedian Billy Crystal, then race back for his midnight show, said spokesman Michael Ameen.

Fortunately, he'll only have to cross the street to get there.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — President Reagan hasn't made it to the New Orleans World's Fair, but with only a week left in its troubled six-month run, first lady Nancy Reagan will visit Saturday.

Mrs. Reagan will attend a crafts demonstration at the fair's U.S. Pavilion, said White House spokesman Frank Thorvald. No other details of the trip were announced, Thorvald said.

Reagan sent Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige to stand in for him at the May 12 opening of the exposition and Vice President George Bush visited on Labor Day, Sept. 4.

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Astronaut Jon McBride says his Oct. 5 launch in the space shuttle Challenger was a "near religious experience."

Facility increases its attention with baboon transplant

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — From the days when its scientists conducted their work in an old farmhouse and barn, the Southwest Foundation for Biomedical Research has come a long way.

Today, the 850-acre facility houses the largest baboon colony in captivity and last week provided the animal whose heart was used for a transplant into the chest of Baby Fae in Loma Linda, Calif.

The baby baboon came from the foundation's breeding project, just one of the efforts under way at the privately funded facility.

For more than 30 years, scientists here have used baboons, chimpanzees, rats, mice and other animals for research on lung disease, cardiovascular disorders, nutrition and other health matters.

Dr. William J. Goodwin, director of laboratory animal medicine, said descriptions he received about the Loma Linda research involved effects of transplantation on the body's natural defense system rather than human transplantation.

But he said the breakthrough development will not alter the foundation's provision of baby baboons.

"We would have no objection," Goodwin said. "It is a legitimate research project."

The parents of the baboon used in the operation were imported from Kenya, Goodwin said, adding that "we have been providing baboons to them since early 1983 for their transplant study."

Recently, researchers here were successful in inducing symptoms of acquired immune deficiency syndrome into chimpanzees.

Using blood plasma from humans thought to have the beginning stages of the deadly syndrome, scientists were able to note specific changes in the blood of the chimps that parallel with blood in AIDs victims.

"We clearly established that AIDS can be transmitted by blood transfusion and we established a non-human model on which research can be conducted," said Dr. Henry McGill Jr., scientific director at the foundation.

Until the breakthrough last week, AIDS research was impaired for lack of a "guinea pig" for testing vaccines.

Chimps used in the AIDS project are isolated in concrete houses at the foundation headquarters in west San Antonio.

The AIDS project is one of the most recent at the facility, funded by donations, grants and an endowment set up by founder Tom Slick.

The oilman, who dreamed of a scientific research and educational complex in San Antonio, started the Southwest Foundation in a farmhouse and barn a few miles to the north of the present facility in 1941.

Research was hindered by World War II, but got into full swing by 1952, when a full scientific staff was recruited. In 1956, a Southwest Foundation Researcher, Nicholas Werthessen, performed an autopsy on a baboon at the Louisiana State University medical school in New Orleans.

The autopsy showed baboons have cardiovascular similarities with humans.

After the autopsy, in which McGill participated, Werthessen started a baboon colony at the San Antonio facility. Today, the colony includes 2800 baboons, the largest in captivity.

Since those early days, scientists have discovered the baboon has many biological similarities with humans, leading to research in other areas.

Among them, the foundation runs an extensive cigarette project in which baboons are induced to smoke. Lighted cigarettes are poked into cages and the baboons smoke them with some encouragement.

Buttons haven't changed much

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — There's little new in politics, as Joe H. Baker's 300 campaign buttons from presidential campaigns as long ago as 1896 show.

Pious candidates aren't new. The socialist Bishop Tomlinson ran for office with a "mighty man under God" button in 1932.

Crossing party lines isn't new. Baker has buttons from Democrats for Nixon-Lodge in 1960 and "Dem-Ike-Crats" for Eisenhower in 1952.

And Harold Stassen isn't new. Stassen was a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination this year, but campaign buttons on his behalf were issued in 1948.

Like politics itself, the buttons can be witty or seamy, verbose or pointed, colorful or bland. But Baker, who began collecting buttons in the early 1960s, notes a disturbing trend.

"They've gotten much larger, which I regret," he said. "I think they should be subtle and small. They're now several inches in diameter, and it's really kind of gross."

Opening lead: Five of ♡.

On occasion you have a choice of ways to achieve your end—power or guile. Some of us have a natural tendency toward deceit. However, given the option, it is usually wise to choose the power line. Consider this hand.

South needed no more than a sign of life from his partner to jump to game. As the cards lie, three no trump would have been a laydown, but we cannot attach blame to South for preferring the major-suit game.

Against four spades West led the top of his heart doubleton. Declarer won and drew trumps in two rounds, then cashed the remaining high hearts in hand. When West showed out on the third round, declarer could not afford to overtake with the table's ace.

Now declarer had to reach dummy to take a discard on the ace of hearts. He was unfortunate in that his spade spots were such that the trump suit did not provide a line of communication. (Incidentally, note that if the minor suits in either declarer's hand or dummy were reversed, the hand would have presented no problem.)

Declarer tried to be clever. He led a low diamond. Unfortunately, West worked out that, if his partner held the king, it made no difference which card he played; but if declarer held the king, the diamond honors on the board would provide an entry unless declarer held specifically a doubleton king. So West rose with the ace of diamonds and returned a diamond, and declarer eventually had to lose three club tricks for down one.

This was a hand for power. Since West was marked with the ace of diamonds for his vulnerable overcall, declarer should simply have led the king of diamonds. West is forced to hold up the ace. Now declarer continues with a diamond. West wins and, while he has succeeded in keeping dummy from obtaining an entry, he has end played himself. A diamond continuation presents declarer with a ruff-sluff, and a club gives declarer a trick in the suit. Either way, the contract is home.

THE BETTER HALF

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, November 3, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: International acting star Charles Bronson, Ken Berry, "Gimme A Break's" Kari Michaelson, journalist James "Scotty" Reston, Dodgers' fireballer Bob Welch, Sen. Russell Long (D-La.), Rep. Phil Crane (R-Ill.) and Larry Herndon of the Detroit Tigers celebrate birthdays today. Also born on this date: the late French writer-art historian Andre Malraux. Your loyalty to your family and friends makes you very popular. Look for new outlets for your administrative talents. Fair and impartial, you have great skill at mediating office disputes and management-labor confrontations. If looking for romance, you must socialize more. Curb a tendency to bury yourself in work.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A legal or financial settlement brings many rewards. Make this a day the whole family will remember. A small gift or unexpected phone call boosts your spirits. Romance flourishes.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your sentimental nature helps you make the right decision. Know what you can offer loved one before asking for a commitment. Someone secretly covets a precious possession. Guard your valuables when traveling.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be willing to start at the bottom when working on a community project. You benefit in numerous ways. Limit travel to nearby places. Money worries subside when you tighten the family purse-strings.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your romantic nature makes you vulnerable to the charms of someone who really isn't good for you. Do not be so quick to dismiss the advice of your friends.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keep your temper in check if hoping to improve a family relationship. Home repairs could take more time than anyone anticipated. Seize an opportunity to travel. You will learn a lot about yourself.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A companion makes your weekend twice as productive. Marital problems prove easy to resolve. You may have to join a support group to lick a weight problem. Call an old friend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Refuse to be intimidated by all the work you must do. Your family responsibilities are reduced thanks to someone's intervention. Show your appreciation for a loved one's sacrifice. Romance shifts into high gear.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Patching up an argument early in the day sets the stage for a happy weekend. Your luck is about to take a turn for the better where money is concerned. Repay past favors.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Play a waiting game. Family authority will pass to those who are patient. Romance makes couples more optimistic about the future. Regular exercise and good eating habits keep you feeling fit.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do not let anything stand between you and domestic happiness this weekend. A child makes you realize what is really important. Go ahead and give a relationship another try.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Put your heart into whatever you do now. Many people are counting on you. Assess your resources before making extravagant promises. Otherwise, you could get trapped by your own generosity.

REBELS

The Bronchos have suffered a rash of injuries this season and that has been a big reason that the Big Red has managed only one district victory. Millsapps noted that six starters have been lost since the beginning of the year.

"They say you need a little luck along the way to play in this league, but we haven't had our share this year," said Millsapps. "Injuries have really hurt us, but you don't have enough time for me to tell you about that. I know one thing — we will have only 28 players suited up for the Lee game. We've nearly lost an entire team to injuries."

But Tayrien is expecting a tough battle with the Bronchos, who could easily have won two more district games.

"They are a power team and come right at you. Odessa plays a 60 defense and no other team in the district uses that. They play defense a lot like Midland High did last year. They shoot the gaps on you and stunt. You really have to do a good teaching job with your kids because they don't see what Odessa does every week."

IT'S LEE'S speed that worries Millsapps. "Boy, they can run — fast. When the Lee offense is on the field, they put tremendous pressure on the defense because if you make one mistake, they will pop one on you. You have to nullify that speed and the only way to do that is to keep that offense off the field."

Lee appears to own a big edge on both offense and defense. The Rebels rank second in the district in team defense, allowing only 201.6 yards per game to the opponents and have given up a league low of 62 points this season. OHS ranks fifth in defense, giving up 262 yards a game.

On offense, Lee ranks third behind Permian and Cooper, averaging 320.1 yards a game while OHS ranks seventh among the eight league teams with a 228.9 per game average.

Tyrone Thurman, Lee's mighty mite running back, moved into fourth place in the district rushing race with a 135-yard effort against Abilene High last week, passing teammate Walter Jones, who was held to a meager 45 yards. Thurman has 714 yards rushing while Jones has 696. Jones was a 1,000-yard rusher in 16 games last year and both would appear to have a shot at that mark with a playoff berth this year.

OHS has been paced by fullback Leonard Manning this year. Manning has 465 yards rushing and two TDs while halfback Ty Beck owns 288 yards and three TDs. Halfback Edward Lewis gives the Bronchos a balanced offensive attack with 229 additional yards.

LEE WILL be missing the services of 250-pound defensive tackle John Wurster, who injured a knee last week against Abilene High. Guard Craig Kamradt, who is suffering from a pinched nerve, will still be available only for kicking duties as Ricky Lee gets the starting call. Terry Powell is being inserted to a linebacking spot for the Rebs.

But it will be the scoreboard that Rebel fans will be watching tonight. If Lee has more points, they can start packing travel bags for another tour of the state.

The state's No. 1 ranked Odessa Permian Panthers have already clinched a playoff berth with a 33-24 victory over San Angelo last week. However, the Panthers can set league history with a victory over Midland High tonight in Odessa. A victory there and Permian becomes the first team in 4-5A history to win five straight 4-5A championships.

Bowman, Watson lead 4-5A race

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

San Angelo's C.L. Bowman and Odessa Permian's Dal Watson are staging an individual rushing war in an effort to win the District 4-5A rushing title.

Bowman took over as the 4-5A season leader in that department when the Bobcats met Permian last weekend in San Angelo. Bowman now has 855 yards rushing on the year while Watson has 845. Bowman needs only 145 yards in his last two games against Abilene Cooper tonight and Big Spring next week to crash the 1,000-yard barrier. Watson needs a combined 155 yards against Midland High tonight and Odessa High next week to become a 1,000-yard rusher.

Abilene Cooper's Jay Tollison is the only other 4-5A runner who has a good shot at the 1,000-yard mark. Tollison has 795 yards on the season and will need 205 yards over the next two games against San Angelo and Abilene High. That schedule alone makes Tollison only an outside threat for 1,000 yards.

Midland Lee's Tyrone Thurman had 135 yards against Abilene High last weekend to move into fourth place, but his 714 yards is still 286 yards shy of the 1,000-yard barrier. Lee's Walter Jones stands at 696 and will need 153 yards per outing to reach the 1,000-yard mark.

Cooper quarterback Doug Hadley still is the league's top passer with 1,481 yards in the air, completing 86 of 186 passes. However, Permian's Alton Holloway has thrown for 993 yards, but is the most accurate, completing 62 of 90 passes and has thrown for 18 TDs, another league high.

Rangers, Owls in 8-AA showdown

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

With playoff berths on the line, the action should be hot and heavy even as fall arrives with cold weather.

It's a coaching given that teams that win in November can count on playing more games than were scheduled. That's especially true in the best little football district in Texas, 8-AA.

Only Stanton has been eliminated thus far, and the Buffs aren't a bad team. But with tonight's action plus one more round next week, they should get some company real soon.

Two games tonight have special meaning because of their playoff implications.

Greenwood is at Big Lake for a crucial tilt with Reagan County. A year ago neither team could have anticipated their futures. Greenwood was having success with an 8-3 record, but the Rangers won their district crown on the class A level.

This is their first year as a double A ball club, and thus far they have made the adjustment admirably in a 7-1 season. But all could be for naught if they do not survive the district's killing ground — the road.

Reagan County's Owls were 2-8 a year ago and seemed to be on a slide. But with new coach Ronnie Reeger imported from Fort Stockton, the Owls have a new, winning attitude that has paid off in the form of a 5-3 record and a 2-1 district mark.

Greenwood's Roger Smith topped the 1,000 yard mark in style and gained 191 in the Ranger's 29-9 home win over McCamey last week. Smith was supported by tailback Terry O'Steen's century mark rushing (including a scintillating 76-yard rumble that netted Greenwood six points) and quarterback Chad Longley's efficient handling of the district's premier offense.

Reagan County counters with a power attack that hasn't produced a lot of points but hasn't had to. Running backs Terry Thompson and Howard Williams pace the ground-oriented Owls, who have two capable quarterbacks.

But it is Reeger who has made the difference. More and more, it is the coaches that have told the story in this district, and tonight two of the best in Reeger and Greenwood's Joe Longley match wits in a key conflict. Even though the road has been most inhospitable - no 8-AA district game has been won there - the Rangers should erase that string tonight, 20-8.

Eldorado is the lone unbeaten in district play in the six-member 8-AA. They host McCamey tonight and the Badgers have a true challenge facing them.

After a loss last week, the Badgers have to win tonight and in their final game to have a chance to duplicate last year's 11-4 showing. Eldorado has been the district's biggest surprise after Greenwood's remarkable effort.

No noe expected Eldorado to be at this stage, on the verge of a district crown.

Still, McCamey coach Buster Leaf is a tough cookie. After the Badgers' loss at Greenwood, Leaf conceded that the odds for a return to the playoffs were slim. But the Badgers know a little about pride, and Eldorado's luck hasn't been bad all year. In this district, the only certainty is a messy cloudy playoff race with no favorites and no underdogs. Call your doctor, because the Badgers will wreck the tidy picture tonight with an upset, 14-13.

Stanton hosts Wall in what amounts to a fairly meaningless game, since both teams have no shot at the playoffs. Therefore, the game should at least be entertaining since only pride is at stake. At least the District 8-AA home field advantage won't take a complete beating, as the Buffs should stuff the Hawks 18-11.

Crane hosts Ballinger, and the odds are great that this will be a game best forgotten tomorrow. The Cranes are having a tough year at 3-6-1, and scraped out with only a 6-6 deadlock last week against Ozona.

Ballinger, meanwhile, was ripping one of the best teams around. The Bearkats shelled previously undefeated Colorado City 28-6. That win virtually assures Ballinger of a District 7-AAA crown.

One thing is for sure: the Cranes are powerless to stop the unbeaten 'Kats. Close your eyes...Ballinger 42, Crane 6.

Rankin is predicted to win agaist Buena Vista since BV already forfeited, their third no-show loss of the year. The Red Devils would have a great year if they could add three more Buena Vistas and a few Open dates to the ledger.

In District 2-4A, Andrews hosts an angry Monahans Lobo squad that saw their number eight state ranking and their unbeaten season go down the tubes last Friday in an embarrassing 31-10 loss to Sweetwater. Andrews, meanwhile, suffered a dissappinting loss to Fort Stockton. Stockton prevailed 3-0 to raise their record to 6-1.

Andrews can forget this year, but a win would put a feather in their cap and really louse up the Lobo efforts.

OP's Holloway ties pass mark

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

Odessa Permian quarterback Alton Holloway started the season as a question mark in the Panther backfield and emerged as an exclamation point last week in a 33-24 victory over District 4-5A rival San Angelo.

Holloway completed a near-perfect 10 of 11 passes for 161 yards and tied a school record with four touchdown passes to earn mention in The Associated Press Schoolboy Honor Roll.

Holloway played sparingly last season and started this season with unknown passing skills.

But after eight games, he has completed 69 percent of his passes, thrown for 18 touchdowns and only two interceptions and the Panthers are the No. 1 ranked Class 5A team in the state.

"He just has a knack for getting things done," Permian Coach John Wilkens said.

STATS

Midland High's Matt Marcum, a junior, moved into third place with a 249-yard passing night against Cooper and now has thrown for 788 yards, despite missing two games with an injury.

Permian's Greg Anderson moved up to the No. 1 receiving position with 503 yards on 30 catches for six TDs. He replaced Cooper's Scott Anderson at No. 1. Scott now has 491 yards on 28 catches. Midland High's Darrell Davis moved into third after a 100-yard pass catching night and has 426 yards in on 24 receptions.

Bowman and Watson are in another league fight in the scoring parade. Both have scored 14 touchdowns for 84 points this year. Thurman is a distant third with 66 points.

San Angelo's Ottoway Perryman leads in interceptions with five.

Permian remains as the offensive and defensive leader in the team statistics, averaging 403.5 yards per game on offense and giving up only 172.9 on defense. That's a good indication of why the Panthers are the No. 1 ranked team in the state.

Lee moved in as the No. 2 defensive team, allowing opponents 201.6 yards per contest. Cooper is No. 2 on offense with a 348.1 average and is followed by Lee with 320.1 per game.

Hadley is the total offensive leader, averaging 194.3 yards game with 73 rushing and 1,481 passing. Watson is the tandem leader, catching passes for 112 yards in addidtion to his 845 yards rushing for a per game average of 119.6 per game.

San Angelo's Brian Ross tops all punters with a 41.1 punting average. Watson is a distant second with a 37.3 average per punt.

So Watson is proving to be a big man in the Permian attack, being among the league leaders in rushing, punting, tandem offense and scoring.

But don't count on it. Monahans gets the nod, 28-14.

Lamesa faces Sweetwater, and the Tors will be tested by a team that is flying high at 6-1 and unbeaten in the district.

Lamesa felt its' playoff hopes take a shot last week with a stunning 3-0 loss to previously winless San Angelo Lakeview.

That loss puts the Tors in a situation that dictates they win all three games left on the schedule. With Sweetwater, they will have a challenge, but they have played over their head all year.

The Killer Fleas will bite, claw and nibble their way into contention, but Sweetwater has too much at stake and realistically is slightly better. Chalk it up to inexperience, Sweetwater 24, Lamesa 12.

Madrid leads Bullpups

From Staff Reports

Jaime Madrid is growing up fast for the Midland High Bulldogs.

Madrid, the quarterback for MHS' 6-1 sophomore football team, scored two touchdowns rushing and added eight more points on scoring and extra point throws to pace the MHS sophs to a 28-14 win Thursday over Odessa Permian's sophomore squad.

The Bullpups got started early when Tyrone Oliver smashed over from the four in the first quarter. Madrid hit Tommy Yorkman for the two-point pass that gave the sophs their first lead.

OP answered later in the first and added a two-pointer to knot the game at 8-8 after one.

Late in the first half, though, Madrid took the Pups on a scoring drive that resulted in an eight-yard TD toss to Lee Atwater. Richard Triplett added the point after to make it 15-8 MHS at the half.

Madrid made the game's critical play in the third quarter, bursting free for a 55-yard scoring run that gave his team all the points they needed. He later scored on a one-yard dive in the fourth quarter to make it 28-8 before Permian scored a meaningless TD on a 50-yard screen pass with 30 seconds to play.

Elsewhere for the young football teams, Thursday was a bad afternoon. Lee's sophomores dropped a 21-7 decision to the Odessa High Baby Bronchos, as only Lee fullback Terry Stewart could score late in the game for the Rebs on a three-yard run. The 1-7 Rebs fell behind 21-0 and never recovered.

In the junior varsity games, Lee made the score a little closer but still lost to OHS 23-20. Gary Powell scored on a 60-yard run, Chris Alexander ran in from three yards out and Tommy Woods added a 30-yard score but after falling behind 23-7 Lee couldn't come back.

Lee's JVs are now 4-3.

MHS had no better luck as their record dropped to 0-8 with a 19-8 loss to the Permian junior varsity. Permian led 19-0 at halftime, and Johnny taylor got the minidogs' only score on a third period, six yard run. Charles Comer ran across for the two-point conversion.

Who won what and why...does TSWA know?

I opened the envelope from the Texas Sports Writers Association and it said, "You Won."

I've been trying to figure out what it was that I won ever since.

Actually, there was a check that said "Column Contest Winner". But the entries were submitted last spring and I haven't the foggiest idea of what was submitted as an entry.

Winning something in the TSWA competition is pretty special. All circulations are lumped in the same division, which means there are the Dallas', Houstons, San Antonios, Austins, Wacos, El Pasos, Beaumonts and other major cities as the competition.

And that's where most important news, the stories that win contests, break.

BUT EVEN more than the big city markets, what always made it difficult to win a TSWA contest was been the menacing, all-pervading presence of Blackie Sherrod, Texas' answer to Los Angeles' Jim Murray, looming in the background.

In fact, until they passed the Blackie Sherrod-rule a few years back, it was discouraging for everybody. So discouraging, that the TSWA decided to do something about it.

What would happen is that Blackie would write a column about an upcoming event and enter it in the Advance division. Then, he'd write a column about the event itself and enter it in the Game Story division. Then, he'd write a column featuring something or somebody and enter it in the Feature division. Then, he'd write a column about the shady side of sports and enter it in the Shady Side of Sports (investigative) category.

Then, he had the gall to write a column and enter it in the Column category.

So, the TSWA passed a rule that Blackie's columns had to be limited to Columns entries. Of course, they didn't identify Sherrod by name, but everybody knew who was causing all the problems, which were responsible for the dwindling contest entries.

THE OTHER day, my first inclination was to admit the mistake and send the check back before the TSWA discovered the error and cancelled payment. But a streak of defiance emerged, "Let 'em find their own mistake. I'm keeping it."

And I'm really keeping it. It's the only proof I've got that I won anything, so I can't cash it and blow it on a ski trip, my first impulse. I think they'll eventually send a certificate explaining what it's all about.

I SUPPOSE we (TSWA) run our contests about the way we used to run the Texas Sports Writers Hall of Fame.

For years, Fair Park in Dallas let us use a small space in a building, that otherwise stood empty most of the year, for the Hall.

Each year the day before the Cotton Bowl game, there would be a Hall of Fame luncheon at one of Dallas' posh hotels at which the inductions would take place amidst lavish surroundings, complete with MGM pomp and ceremony.

Then, our state athletic heroes like Davey O'Brien, Sammy Baugh, Doak Walker, John Kimbrough, Ben Hogan, Byron Nelson, Jimmy Demaret, Paul Richards, Tris Speaker, Jack Johnson, Tex Rickard, Rogers Hornsby....the list is almost as endless as it is impressive...were stuffed away in a rarely-visited cubbyhole.

This condition existed for years. At every annual TSWA meeting the subject of a permanent home would come up and the financial report would indicate we were still short of funds. Because of inflation, the difference between what we had and what we needed grew worse each year and prospects of a "real" home became more remote.

Finally, the project of raising funds for the building was turned over to a professional outfit and there is now a permanent Texas Hall of Fame located between Dallas and Fort Worth. And the caliber of athletes honored there is the equal of any national hall of fame in any sport, and we haven't gotten nearly all the people in that belong there.

'Entrepreneurial spirit will help Basin compete'

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The Permian Basin's entrepreneurial spirit will help it compete with other regions for high-tech industries, a University of Texas at Austin professor said Thursday at the 1985 Permian Basin Economic Outlook Conference.

But private industry must collaborate with local governments and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin if the region is to succeed in today's hyper-competitive economic environment, according to Dr. Raymond W. Smilor, associate director of UT's Institute for Constructive Capitalism.

"We live in this technological society in a period of hyper-competition — competition between groups and competition between regions," Smilor told those attending the conference, which was sponsored by the Greater Odessa Area Chamber of Commerce.

To compete, according to Smilor, a region needs innovative, creative people, an entrepreneurial climate and management know-how, and he noted that the Permian Basin has all three in ample supply.

Smilor said Texas is leading the country in developing new approaches to economic development, and he cited a number of trends in support of this contention:

— Greater collaboration between universities and corporations. "There's a whole plethora of collaborative projects pushing technological progress" in such areas as biomedicine and robotics.

—A less adversarial relationship between government, business and institutions of higher education.

—Increasing cooperation among competitors in private industry on research and development.

—A blossoming venture capital industry in the state. "Texas has a long and storied history of wonderful risk capital," Smilor said, but venture capital is more focused on new technologies, and until recently Texas had been lagging behind in this regard.

—Foundations getting more involved in pushing technological development.

—Imaginative programs by local communities to encourage the development of what Smilor called "indigenous" industries.

—Programs by the state government promoting technological growth, and by the federal government encouraging entrepreneurs.

"Competition is extremely intense" for the emerging high-tech industries, Smilor said. "Not everybody's going to win this kind of competition."

The winners will be the communities and regions who recognize that technology "is a resource and a source of wealth," just like oil; who emphasize an entrepreneurial environment; and who develop collaborative relationships between business, government and academia.

Smilor had praise for UTPB's new Center for Energy Technology and Diversification, which he called "a kind of incubator which pulls together the talents, the capabilities and the resources of two great centers — Midland and Odessa."

The Permian Basin's risk-taking spirit gives it an advantage in attracting economic growth, according to Smilor.

"You've got to give those dreams space, and the Permian Basin has space — and it has space for the people who dream those kinds of dreams."

$5 million explosion

An explosion late Thursday night at the Pegasus Gas Plant, located on Farm-to-Market 1788 about three miles south of Farm-to-Market 1787, resulted in about $5 million worth of damage but no injuries. Malfunctioning equipment is thought to have ignited natural gas, causing the fire which destroyed a building and compressor, fire reports said. Eight firemen used 6,000 gallons of water to extinguish the fire and the Department of Public Safety Hazardous Materials Officer was called to the scene. Mobile Production Co. & Texas-New Mexico Pipeline were listed as owners of the property.

Officers cautioning area residents about nearby jewelry swindlers

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

After receiving reports of "confidence games" in the Panhandle in which elderly persons are swindled out of jewelry, officers with the Midland police and sheriff's departments are cautioning Midlanders to be wary.

Cases were reported last week in Amarillo, Plainview and Lubbock in which men posing as police officers swindled elderly persons out of their valuables, according to Sgt. David Cobos of the Sheriff's Office Crime Prevention Unit.

"We want people to be very suspicious," Cobos said. "A lot of times, people feel so embarrassed about a scam like this that they won't report it. We want to know about it no matter how insignificant."

The con artists most likely are headed back toward Midland, Cobos said. They usually travel a circuit, hitting a few victims in a town before moving on.

"They'll take their life savings," Capt. Billy Ray with the Midland Police Department said. "Because they travel through the country, they are hard to apprehend."

The last time such an incident was reported in Midland was about six months ago, Ray said. Police reports indicate a 78-year-old woman reported March 20 that she had been the victim of two men who were dressed in some type of uniform.

The woman said a man came to her door, identified himself as an officer with the Midland Police Department and said he and his partner had apprehended a man in her neighborhood.

A piece of paper with her name and address was found in the suspect's pocket, he said, and he wanted to discuss how she might know him.

Ray said the man then asked if she had any valuables in her house and she gave him a diamond ring and cameo brooch. He then asked to use her phone and she said she heard him tell a man he identified as another officer to come to her address.

When the other uniformed man arrived, the two took her jewelry into the kitchen where she heard running water. When they returned, they were holding a cannister in which they said her jewelry was soaking in solution that would allow them to identify fingerprints.

The woman was instructed to not open the cannister for two days and they would return and check her jewelry, Ray said.

She became suspicious, however, and broke open the cannister to find four pennies.

Candidates 'betting their boots' on their proposals in sheriff's race

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The two challengers stood in their boots against incumbent Sheriff Dallas Smith, who wore dress shoes and a business suit, as the three answered questions posed Thursday night by members of the Mexican-American Small Businessmen Association.

Smith emphasized the department's accomplishments during the last seven years he has been in office while Republican candidate Gary Painter and Democratic foe Joe Carr focused on the future, which included ridding the department of physical and written exams.

Smith said there is no program in effect to help officers deal with stress because of priorities in establishing programs, but his opponents said they feel there is a method available.

The two contend requiring the officers to take physical and written tests add pressure to an already stressful job and low morale within the department.

"If they fail, they can be fined," Painter said. "They shouldn't have to put up with that. They have enough in dealing with their daily work."

"I agree with you 100 percent," Carr said, standing up and shaking Painter's hand.

Asked by one of the 30 business people in attendance about personal images, such as clothing, Smith said he dresses in gray business suits and black shoes as sheriff because the job entails running a business. He does have a couple of pairs of boots, which he wears when out in the fields or in the rain, he said.

Painter and Carr said they don't own a pair of shoes and feel comfortable in their boots.

Turning to low morale in the department, the two said it can be improved and the turnover rate reduced through different methods.

"Once they have a supervisor and administrator there that they can look up to and respect, the turnover will stop," Painter said. "I want to help the individual on a one-to-one basis with their personal problems, family problems or employment problems."

"I want to reduce the politics," Carr said, adding because Midland is such a Republican stronghold, he often is asked why he ran as a Democrat?

"Well, the Republican ticket was full," he said he replies jokingly. "I don't care if you're a multi-million-dollar millionaire or a cotton chopper, you've got one vote," Carr said. "The race is political but when you get out there to do the job, you serve this lady like this gentlemen and it makes no difference (what party or race a person is.)

"I want to take a lot of the politics out of law enforcement and get down to the basics such as working these thefts and burglaries," he said.

Claiming to have increased personnel during his time in office, Smith said two more people recently were added to the civil warrants division with the addition of the juvenile department.

He said the new jail will add needed available space to the courthouse and bring the county into compliance with jail standards. "It makes no difference about all the work we do" if the courthouse staffs, such as the prosecutors, don't have the room or manpower to finish the process.

He added he would like to increase the salaries "a bit more," bringing them to the top 5 or 10 percent in the state. When first elected, he said, officer salaries were $725 per month. The department now has a base salary of $1,600 per month with the possibility of earning up to $2,200 per month.

"I've come a long ways and I'm quite proud of what we've done," Smith said.

Party supporters working for record turnout of voters

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

The past months of campaigning are rolling to a close and the candidates are winding down their rhetoric. But the local party workers are stepping up their pace to a frenetic level in an effort to see a record turnout of voters in Midland County on Tuesday.

Democrats will be putting their efforts into high gear starting Sunday while Republicans have a game plan that gets into action on election eve, according to spokesmen with both parties.

Republicans and Democrats are using the same components: telephones, cars and a watchful eye. Basically, volunteers of both parties will be glued to the phones until the polls close at 7 p.m. While reminding the people to get out and vote, they also will be offering rides to the polls and free babysitting services.

"We'll be making door-to-door canvasses in Democratic precincts," said Janet Massey, Democratic county chairman. One of those targeted precincts is 208, which in 1982 voted more than 97 percent for Mark White for governor, she said. The door-to-door canvasses will involve 50 to 60 volunteers giving up part of their Saturday to hand out brochures and encourage the residents to vote on Tuesday.

A phone bank at the Democratic headquarters has been ringing people in those selected precincts, said Michael Higgins, Midland County coordinator for Mondale/Ferraro, and "we're getting a good response."

Ms. Massey noted that more people are volunteering for the Democratic party candidates this year, and Higgins said the headquarters was running out of bumper stickers and yard signs.

"We're seeing a lot of people in the headquarters that we've not seen before. They say they usually don't put out yard signs, but they're tired of seeing Reagan/Bush signs," Higgins said.

People needing rides or assistance getting to the polls can call the Democratic headquarters at 685-3611 or 682-6130. "We'll watch the kids if need be; we'll be happy to do that," said Higgins.

Betty Calvert with the Reagan/Bush headquarters said they have 150 volunteers to start dialing about 80 phones throughout the city starting Monday night. The calling hours will be 5:30 to 9 p.m. Monday and 8:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Citizens leaning toward the Republican ticket have been identified through the phone bank in recent weeks and these people will be called and reminded to vote. In addition, rides and babysitting are being offered.

"We've already been seeing that people go vote absentee," Ms. Calvert said. Using a computer printout, "we are trying desperately to make one phone call per household. If people are called more than once, then it's an error and not by plan. We don't want to bug people, but there can be slipups."

Citizens wanting to call Republican headquarters for a ride or babysitter may dial 686-0016 or 686-0018.

Both parties are expecting a record voter turnout this year with spokesmen pointing to the record number of registered voters and high absentee count. Ms. Calvert recalled that the 1980 presidential election saw about 75 percent of the registered voters show up at the polls. Of 44,000 registered voters then, almost 39,000 voted.

But the parties' volunteer work won't be over until the polls close. "This is the time you get into some hard-core grassroots politics," Higgins said.

Theft suspect escapes from jail

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

A 29-year-old Midland man escaped Thursday night from the city jail where he was being held on charges of theft. He had not been apprehended by police this morning.

Henry Benivedez Sanchez of 1114 E. Spruce escaped sometime before 8 p.m. although his absence was not confirmed until 11 p.m., police reports indicate.

"There will be an internal investigation," Lt. Jim Colburn said this morning.

Officer Jeff Darr reported he arrived at work at 10:30 p.m. and began the usual procedure of counting the number of booking sheets at the booking desk and matching the counts with jail books.

According to Darr's reports, he was told by Officers Tony W. Roye and Marvin Rasco, evening jailers, that the prisoner count would not match the books because one prisoner was in interrogation with Det. Alan Inman. The two jailers then left early, Darr's report indicates.

On further inspection, Darr found the prisoner count was two short but located a booking sheet that had not been placed in the book when he first counted.

He was escorting another prisoner to the jail when Inman asked him if he was short. Darr replied "I might be," and explained the counts did not match.

Inman "told me that he'd been tipped off earlier of an escape," Darr said in his report and Darr rechecked and found Sanchez was not in a cell.

Darr and Sgt. James Nettles then checked the jail and kitchen areas and reviewed video films. Rasco was contacted and said he and Roye had locked the doors going from the kitchen to the stairs leading to the inspector's office at 4:30 p.m. Roye said the only way Sanchez could have gotten out was if he stayed in the day room when everyone was put to bed, Darr's report said.

Roye said he left the day room open so trusties could clean it, according to the report.

A prisoner who was questioned said Sanchez and the prisoner under interrogation with Inman did not return with the other inmates to their cells. The prisoner said he thought Sanchez had been made a trusty, which would give him special priveleges.

Sanchez was being held on charges of theft over $20 and under $200, theft over $200 and under $750, and two warrants.

He is described as a Hispanic male, 5-feet, 6-inches tall and weighing 170 pounds. He has brown shoulder length hair, a mustache, goatee and glasses.

Midlander sentenced to life in prison for murder

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — An indecisive jury prompted District Judge R.L. McKim to end the three-week trial of Midlander Pablo Madrid Galindo Thursday night and sentence him to life in prison for capital murder.

After about four hours of deliberations, the jury was hung up on both questions posed to them in the charge used in determining whether the 20-year-old Midland man would be executed.

So McKim carried out the Texas law, which instructed the judge to give Galindo the lesser penalty when the jury could not settle unanimously on the proper answers to:

—If there is a probability the defendant would pose a continuing threat to society by committing acts of violence.

—If Galindo's conduct causing the death of 28-year-old Mark Defee on March 24 was deliberate and with reasonable expectation that death would result.

The law includes a third question concerning whether the murder followed some provocation from the person killed. No evidence indicated Defee unreasonably provoked Galindo before he was shot to death in his bedroom, so this question was not posed to the six-man, six-woman jury which Tuesday had found Galindo guilty of capital murder.

Under state law, Galindo will be eligible for parole after 20 years in the Texas Department of Corrections. All the principles in the trial, including the dead man's wife, were satisfied with the decision sparing Galindo's life.

Kelly Defee, who testified that Galindo sexually assaulted her as her husband lay moaning on the floor and her son screamed in another bedroom, said she "did not necessarily want" Galindo dead. She expressed satisfaction with the sentence which should keep the 20-year-old from committing the same crimes again for at least 20 years.

"None of this is going to bring Mark back," said the dead man's 25-year-old wife. "I think our system works."

District Attorney Mike Holmes said he agreed with McKim's actions. The jury's note to the judge said they were hopelessly deadlocked on both questions.

Defense attorney Michael McLeaish repeated lines from his two-hour final argument, which criticized the death penalty.

"In America, we don't execute sick people," said McLeaish, "We don't kill the mentally ill no matter what they've done."

During his final argument, McLeaish suggested Galindo was temporarily insane and that jurors should favor the life sentence "because the whiskey drove him crazy."

Both sides called psychiatrists to the stand Wednesday, with the state's insisting Galindo was not mentally ill and, as a sociopath, did pose a continuing threat to society. But the defense called two psychiatrists and a psychologist who said Galindo was not a sociopath.

Dr. Frank Schuster suggested Galindo might be brain damaged and called for a brain scan before he was sentenced to death for entering the Defee's mobile home March 24 about 3:30 a.m., shooting the husband to death and sexually assaulting the wife.

According to psychological tests done on Galindo, he was borderline retarded. Some testimony during the trial suggested the Midlander was extremely intoxicated, although some of the deputies involved in his arrest, Ms. Defee, and the residents at whose home Galindo was arrested soon after the murder said the defendant was not drunk that night.

In his final argument, Holmes asked jurors to answer the questions so that Galindo would be sentenced to death by lethal injection. He suggested the death penalty being leveled against Galindo would deter others from committing such crimes.

But McLeaish said, "There's no stopping it with people like Pablo Galindo."

"This is where emotion and reason are going to conflict," said McLeaish, court appointed to defend Galindo with Tony Chavez.

Holmes recalled for jurors testimony that Galindo had participated in a violent incident in November 1983 in Midland and had been sentenced to four year's probation for shooting at the front of a Spruce St. residence.

He questioned why the jury should show mercy for Galindo when Galindo refused to call an ambulance for Defee as the husband lay bleeding to death on the floor. But after McKim's sentencing, Holmes said he agreed and suggested Galindo's youth was a key factor in the jury's inability to reach a decision.

Jury selection began Oct. 10 and ended Oct. 23 after about two weeks of individual questioning of more than 70 prospective jurors. Testimony followed the selection of 14 jurors (12 plus two alternates) in the 161st District Court.

Woman robbed at eastside nightclub

From Staff Reports

A 24-year-old Midland woman reported she was robbed early this morning while coming out of the ladies restroom at an eastside nightclub.

Lillie Jones of 208 S. Madison, told police she was coming out of the restroom at the Playmate club at about 3 a.m. when a man hit her on the right cheek and took her purse off of her shoulder.

Police reports indicate she did not know the man.

About $50 in cash was in the purse, she said.

A $1,600 flute was the third instrument to be reported stolen Wednesday from the band hall at San Jacinto Junior High School. According to police reports, the flute belonged to 13-year-old Joann Sosa, 1608 N. Weatherford.

Cindy Adams of 1115-A Carrizo reported a $900 Kirby vacuum cleaner was stolen Wednesday night from an apartment she was cleaning at 1711-B. Marienfeld.

According to reports, she was cleaning the apartment before she moved out and left the vacuum cleaner overnight in the unlocked apartment.

Pat Martin of 3315 N. Godfrey No. 150 said a $450 20-gauge shotgun was taken from the trunk of her 1982 Pontiac Grandprix at about 9 p.m. Thursday. The vehicle was parked in a lot at 3704 W. Wall. There were no signs of forced entry.

DEBATE

Painter said the patrol division can be increased with reorganization rather than additions, which would cost the taxpayers. He said responsibilities and duties of officers could increase with in-house training programs, rather than the "ineffective" tests.

Painter said he supports the decision to build a new jail. "The jail can never meet certification of the state the way it is now," he said. "Something has got to be done. We have no choice but to go ahead and do something."

Carr said he still is not convinced the county needs a new jail, citing the expenses of additional personnel and time to transfer prisoners from the prospective jail on Highway 80 to the downtown courthouse.

"When the courthouse was built, they said we could put a sixth floor on it," Carr said. "Now they say we can't.

"We're going to get it and I am still against it. But, ladies and gentlemen, your going to pay for it and you better choose a man that's going to handle your money well."

Texas artist exchanged letters with Gandhi

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — The assassination of India's Prime Minister Indira Gandhi this week ended a correspondence for Port Arthur artist and author Georg Hampton.

Between May 1977 and January 1981, Hampton received eight letters from Mrs. Gandhi, including one handwritten note in November 1981.

"She obviously was a person who liked receiving letters from foreign countries and so forth," Hampton said, agreeing to share those letters with the Port Arthur News.

"The fact that I was an artist interested her."

Over the years, Hampton sent letters, newspaper and magazine clippings and even some original Hampton watercolors to Mrs. Gandhi. When she lost the election for prime minister in 1977, he urged her to leave the country.

"I wrote to her and said, 'You ought to get out of India. You could go to Paris or Buenos Aires, or somewhere, because those people are going to put you in jail.' She had 1,800 of her opposition in jail at one time," Hampton said.

His advice, however, could not be accepted.

On Oct. 27, 1977, Mrs. Gandhi wrote the following hand-signed letter:

"Thank you for your letter of the 28th May, 1977. The water color cards are attractive.

"I am touched by your concern. It is not always possible to go away nor it is good to do so. At present I am not allowed to leave the country. This government is more interested in hounding people who it imagines to be against it, than in governing the country.

"Yours sincerely, Indira Gandhi"

Hampton says he started writing Mrs. Gandhi because of his fascination with female political leaders. At one time he tried to call Golda Meir, prime minister of Israel from 1969 to 1974. But that call never went through.

"They told me, 'You give us Richard Nixon's phone number, and we'll give you Golda Meir's,'" he says, laughing.

Hampton says he regarded Mrs. Gandhi as one of India's greatest leaders. "She was a wonderful ruler. What she was up against — all of those people would like to chisel out a little niche of their own," he said.

"If she had let everyone do what they wanted, there'd be no more India."

In a letter to Hampton of Aug. 28, 1979, Mrs. Gandhi went into detail explaining why an article in an American newspaper was wrong:

"Thank you for your letter of the 22nd August and for all the cuttings. The ones about you and your work are interesting but the one on Indian affairs is, as usual, incorrect.

"My party and I wanted the Janata Party Government to go, for it was ruining our country and everything, except the prices and unemployment, was going downhill at a tremendous rate. To remove the Government, we had to offer support to a breakaway group of the same name — Janata Party (S) — but we emphasised that it was only for the formation of the Government. This support was unconditional and acknowledged as such by Mr. Charan Singh, the Prime Minister, himself as late as the 19th August. However, he and his colleagues missed no opportunity to try and humiliate us and to shout from the housetops that our support was not needed and that it would affect his prestige if he came to see me. This irritated our MPs. Also, it was clear that his posture would be even more vindictive towards us than was the previous Governmment's. These were the reasons why my MPs refused to support him further.

"With good wishes,

"Yours sincerely,

"Indira Gandhi."

Craddick reports campaign contributions, expenditures

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, has reported $31,315 in campaign contributions and $23,235 in expenditures from the end of September through the end of October in his latest financial statement filed with the Texas Secretary of State's office. Craddick faces David Smith of Odessa for state representative of District 76 in Tuesday's general election.

The statement, due Tuesday, covers the period from Sept. 28 to Oct. 27. The state had not received October statements as of Thursday from many other statewide candidates, including Craddick's Democratic opponent G. David Smith.

Contributions to Craddick included $4,000 from Carlton Beal, of Midland; $3,000 from the Midland County Republican Women's Club; $1,000 each from Southwest Bancshares PAC, the Crude Oil Marketers and Producers PAC, Texas Energy PAC, Billy Bob Barnett of Fort Worth, and Johnson and Johnson of Austin.

He also received $750 from the Aluminum Co. of America PAC; $500 each from George Staley, Midland; Texas Building Branch PAC; Frank Cowden Jr., of Midland; Good Government Fund of Fort Worth; Sully Sullender Fund of Pasadena; B.J. Pevehouse, Midland; Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants PAC; Ralph Way of Midland; Texaneco Employees Good Government Fund; Exxon Corp. PAC; Valero Energy Corp. PAC; Sport PAC; Texas Aggregates and Concrete Association PAC; Monsanto Texas Citizenship Fund and the Texas Metro Transportation Association PAC.

Craddick also received $400 from the Texas Podiatry PAC, $350 from Texas Right to Life PAC; and $300 each from the Insurance Men's and Women's PAC of Texas, the Texas Restaurant Association PAC, Texas Architects Committee, Independent Bankers Association of Texas PAC and Sun PAC of Texas.

Craddick's largest expenditure during October was $5,175 for brochures. He also paid the Reporter-Telegram $3,257 and the Odessa American $2,630 for "campaign ads," according to his statement.

Smith's last financial statement filed with the secretary of state, which covered the period from July 15 to Oct. 6, showed $800 in contributions and $877 in expenditures.

The contributions included a $700 loan taken out by Smith, an Odessa attorney, on Aug. 21. His campaign also received a $100 contribution from Jerry Don Boydstun of Midland.

Smith's only expenditure during the period was $877 for "bumper stickers and yardsigns," according to the statement.

The jewelry was placed in a similar cannister but the victims were told it contained a solution that would clean the jewelry before they marked it.

Although law enforcement agencies support operations that provide residents with engraving equipment to mark their larger valuables, such as stereos and television sets, Cobos said the officers do not do the marking.

"We'll go and explain it to them but the responsibility is left with the homeowner," he said.

"The newest scams are being played on the elderly because they don't pay as much attention or can't see that much," he said. "We're concerned with the prevention of crime. The more aware citizens are about certain thingss, the better chance we have of catching them. We need the citizen's help."

"If you're solicited by someone who says they're with the police department and they want to check your valuables or jewelry, you should immediately call the police department," Ray said. "Police rarely ask to take someone's property downtown. And we carry both identification with photo and a badge."

He emphasized he was not encouraging citizens to avoid cooperating with the police. "But if there is any doubt in your mind, call the department."

Cobos agreed, explaining the incidents in the Panhandle were similar although the con men were reported to have been dressed in business suits.

The victims in cases last week said the men identified themselves as police officers, said they had caught a prowler in the neighborhood and wanted to mark the victims' jewelry.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE RUMORS

Did Dallas Smith beat his former wife? NO

Did Dallas Smith cause his former wife to be hospitalized? NO

Did Dallas Smith cause his former wife to have a miscarriage? NO

Pursuant to the order of the Court the deposition of the former Gail Mabee Smith was taken on October 25, 1984. Under oath and sworn to tell the truth, she answered these questions for attorneys which were recorded by a court reporter.

She was not sympathetic to my cause. She attempted to avoid being served by subpoena. But she told the truth about the rumors.

I am grateful to Gail for telling the truth about the rumors.

I am grateful to the legal process and to my friends who stood by me.

The ugly rumors of the past year have been proven false.

Fondness of guns alive

HOUSTON (AP) — Guns are enshrined in Texas' frontier history, revered in memories of the Confederacy, cowboys and cattle drives, and preserved by some of the most liberal gun laws in the nation.

Firearms are as fundamental to the Texas way of life as chili, boots and longnecked beer bottles in about 70 percent of the state's households, by some estimates.

But some social scientists predict trouble down the road, as the state's explosive population growth rubs up against the gun ownership tradition and creates ideal conditions for a dramatic increase in violent crime.

No official statistics exist on general gun ownership in Texas because no one is required to register an ordinary gun.

But the state has 1.2 million licensed hunters, one of the highest per capital in the nation. And according to the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, Texas has 10,310 registered machine guns, the most in the nation.

THE STATE has more than 190,000 members of the National Rifle Association, second only to California, and Houston is the regular host of what is regarded as the nation's largest gun show.

Guns are easy to get and keep in the Lone Star State. Most felons are forbidden to have the weapons, but for other Texans, firearms are as easily purchased as beer and cigarettes.

Texas' only major firearms possession restrictions are on handguns, machine guns and sawed-off shotguns and rifles. Any adult Texan who is not a felon may own a handgun, but the law forbids him to carry it except when traveling or while hunting or fishing. Sawed-off shotguns, shortened rifles and automatic weapons may be owned if they are registered by the ATF and are part of a collection.

By law, any adult Texan, except felons, can walk along Main Street at high noon carrying a loaded rifle or shotgun.

A BROCHURE distributed by the Texas Department of Public Safety makes the point: "If a person is permitted to carry or possess a weapon, he can do it openly, loaded, unloaded or in any manner. Texas law is not a concealed weapon statute."

At a recent gun show, Houston Post reporter Glenn Lewis was able to routinely buy the parts and instructions to assemble a machine gun. Lewis said he had to stand in a line behind others buying the same parts. No identification was requested.

Some social scientists are becoming concerned about what they see as a growing tendency in Texas to use guns to settle arguments or to express frustration. It is an element, they say, of the rural Southern and Western culture, and Texas, which has been predominantly rural until recent decades, bridges both regions.

Even as Texas becomes the second most urbanized state in the nation, gun ownership is a cultural tradition that flourishes. Social scientists say it still marks a coming of age for city dwellers, just as it once did for farm and ranch families.

"It doesn't make any sense for a 14-year-old to have a gun in Houston and yet they do," said Joe Feagin, a professor of sociology at the University of Texas. "We have a lot of values in this country that don't really fit any more. Those values last a long time and become part of our culture."

THE UNDERSIDE of this Texas tradition is the increasing use of guns in crimes.

Last year, firearms were used in 67.2 percent of all Houston homicides, according to police spokesman J.C. Mosier. In Dallas, homicide Lt. Ron Waldrop said 80 percent of all murders involved firearms.

Firearms are also the most popular means to suicide. Mosier said officers investigating suicides often report finding on the body a receipt for the recent purchase of the death weapon and its ammunition.

And police officers confiscate guns by the thousands.

Some are taken in criminal investigations, but most turn up in cars stopped for traffic violations or seized from people carrying them illegally.

"ANY OFFICER knows that Texans have the reputation as being more likely to have guns on them or in their cars than in most other states," Mosier said.

Last year, Houston officers confiscated about 8,000 pistols. Many were returned by court order, but Mosier said the police annually melted down about 3,000 pistols and sold the metal for manhole covers.

Although the precise relationship between common gun ownership and the use of guns in crimes is not well documented, social scientists say they believe the increasingly frequent use of guns for crimes and murders in Texas will get worse.

John C. Pollock, a New York sociologist who is an expert on violence in the United States and its causes, believes the rapid population increases in Texas create "the classic condition for high crime rates" and the use of guns.

"Texas is not substantially different from some other states in the South in gun ownership," Pollock said. "What makes Texas different is dislocation of people. You have many, many new neighborhoods. I think Texas is headed toward serious crossroads."

"Dislocation" is the phenomenon of hundreds of thousands of people moving into an area within a short period of time. People suddenly are thrust among strangers, far from the familiar. The result is crime and violence, Pollock said.

Official wants to improve lawyers' image

TYLER, Texas (AP) — Tom Ramey Jr. entered public office two years ago after he resigned his position in a prestigious Tyler law firm founded by his father and accepted a temporary appointment to the 12th Court of Appeals.

Now, having recently won election to the Texas state bar presidency, 90 percent of Ramey's time is devoted to the lawyers' association he said.

Ramey Jr. has followed in the footsteps of his father, Thomas Boyd Ramey Sr., who founded Tyler's annual Rose Festival as well as the law firm Ramey, Flock, Hutchins, Jeffus, McClendon and Crawford. Ramey Jr. joined the firm in 1959. Like his father, Ramey Jr. has served as Rose Festival president.

As bar president, Ramey will appoint almost 1,000 attorneys to 49 bar committees and attend national and regional bar conventions. Topping his list of goals for the yearlong job is a statewide campaign to improve the public image of lawyers.

"The front pages of newspapers, our TV fare and the best seller's list confirm the public's continuing fascination with the law," Ramey said during his acceptance speech before the 102nd bar convention, which convened in San Antonio last July. He warned that the flipside of the fascination is a "malaise of disrespect for the law and lawyers."

In a question-and-answer interview with the Tyler Morning Telegraph, Ramey outlined the bar's chief concerns and its positions on major issues.

Q. What is the bar's position on judicial selection — should judges be elected or appointed?

A. There is a concern among lawyers that too many judges are defeated for reasons totally unrelated to competence or the kind of job they're doing. They're just poured out when there might be a party sweep. This happened in 1980 and 1982 when many highly rated judges were defeated for reasons other than their ability.

There was a referendum of the bar membership two years ago in which the membership expressed their view that we should consider non-partisan election of judges. The state bar will have a bill (next year) which will call either for a non-partisan election or a merit selection of judges.

There are any number of means of selecting judges on the merit system, beginning with the Missouri plan, in which a committee selects a list of prospective judges for a position, then the governor appoints one. At some interval, the judge has to stand for election — but only as to whether he should continue. I'd say right now, there's no consensus on what kind of merit plan might be selected.

Q. What is the bar's position on attempts of the Federal Trade Commission to regulate the legal profession?

A. The Texas bar's position is that we do not disagree with the concept of regulation, but we say we are already regulated. We are an agency of the state of Texas, and as such, we are under the careful scrutiny and regulation of the Texas Supreme Court. The FTC takes the position that the Supreme Court (of Texas) is just a bunch of lawyers, so we're really not regulated by anyone. We've never sought an exemption from regulation. We think it's just another attempt by our friends in Washington to move into an area of local and state control, and we think that the practice of law by its very nature should be independent of government.

Only if the legal profession is free from government control, is it able to perform its basic functions. If we're not effectively regulated, if our state Supreme Court doesn't do the job, sure, then the FTC can step in and do it. But that determination has to be made first.

Q. Does the bar have internal mechanisms to discipline lawyers guilty of criminal misconduct?

A. The lawyers of our state have voluntarily contributed $250,000 each year from their annual dues to a Client Security Fund. The purpose of the fund is to provide monies for client victims of lawyers' criminal misconduct.

We're looking at such an infinitesimal percentage of lawyers (guilty of criminal misconduct). But the point is to demonstrate to the public that the lawyers are concerned. A lawyer convicted of a felony automatically loses his license to practice. A misdemeanor conviction is a matter for the grievance committee to consider, but it's not an automatic suspension.

Q. Texas Southern University has a disproportionately large number of graduates who fail the state bar exam. Does the exam have a discriminatory impact on black bar candidates? If not, does the bar propose any solutions to the problem?

A. The bar is extremely concerned about this situation. We have a president's task force of blue-ribbon members of the bar who are working on this and have made gigantic strides in the past year. They're spending an inordinate amount of time at the school, and we really are encouraged by what's being done there.

The governor is behind us, and one of the objectives will be to assist them in securing additional funding at this new session of the Legislature. We have about 10-12 approaches to this problem, and we're making a lot of progress. I feel very good about it.

Q. When do you expect the bar presidency will be held by a woman or a minority member?

A. When, I cannot say. I would say that women lawyers are increasing in our membership by leaps and bounds. I think most of the law schools are now about half female, so I can envision a woman lawyer having a position of leadership in the immediate future.

The blacks are hampered by the fact that there aren't that many black lawyers in Texas, and the same thing with the Hispanics. One of my concerns is to improve our communication with these groups. I'm trying to get more and more of them involved in bar committee work and I encourage them to become active in the state bar. We've got 49 state bar committees. Each has a maximum of 30 members. You're talking about 1,500 positions.

Q. What is the bar's position on mandatory legal continuing education?

A. Mandatory continuing legal education is a concept that's been adopted in principle by the board of directors of the state bar.

In July, we had some guidelines that called for 15 hours a year for lawyers, with five of those hours being self-study. The issue now is how to implement that. Texas is by far the largest state that has ever adopted mandatory continuing legal education, so it will be a sizeable undertaking. The bookkeeping alone, we could drown in it.

Q. What about mandatory public interest work by private attorneys for the indigent?

A. There has been a reduction in appropriations for the Legal Services Corp. In effect, a fourth of the appropriations have been affected.

It's estimated that nearly 400,000 Texans who qualify as indigents are in need of some civil, legal servies every year. At the present time, the Legal Services Corp. is able to accommodate 32,000 or 33,000 persons, maybe 11 percent. IOLTA, which stands for Interest On Lawyers' Trusts Accounts, is a new concept since 1981. The trust accounts are monies which belong to clients, but which are so small in amount or are held for such a short period of time that no interest would accrue to the client. Those monies are placed in a special fund, which would indeed draw interest. Then that money is available for funding legal services for indigents in civil matters. Right now, there are 27 or 28 states which have an IOLTA program in place. Every one of the 50 states is in some stage of adopting an IOLTA plan. It's an idea whose time has come. Ours is a voluntary plan. In some states it's mandatory. So, that means we have to face-to-face get every participant in the program to sign up for it. We are at the point where I'll be meeting to discuss the bylaws and rules of the new, nonprofit corporation, or foundation, that will administer the program already drafted.

Q. Does the state bar endorse the idea of public defender offices?

A. I know that the response to this problem is uneven across the state. In Dallas, there are a sufficient number of lawyers who are interested in criminal work that the ordinary civil lawyer never has an appointment. An attorney down in Palestine, however, feels very strongly about the issue because in his county, because of the Coffield Unit, they receive an inordinately large number of court appointments because of inmates.

Mexico reduces oil shipments

Associated Press

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico, the largest oil exporter to the United States, said Thursday that it has reduced its shipments to customers by 100,000 barrels a day, or 6.7 percent, and that it is leaving its oil prices unchanged through November.

"The measure to reduce exportations is not an end in itself, it's an instrument to defend the price of the principal resource of our country," a government statement said.

Mexico said it would try to be fair with its customers, spreading the cuts proportionately among its customers. It indicated it would lower production rather than store oil not being shipped.

Mexico had been producing 2.75 million barrels of oil daily and exported an average of 1.5 million barrels, with shipments to the United States averaging 722,000 barrels a day this year.

Those shipments account for 13.4 percent of all U.S. imports, and 4.6 percent of the daily U.S. oil needs.

Pemex, the state-run oil monopoly, said the production cut would lower Mexico's income from oil exports by $81 million in November, or by an annual rate of 6 percent — what it said was equivalent to a $2-a-barrel cut in the price of oil.

"This is a significant figure," the government said. "However, from the point of view of the 1984 budget, its impact will be fully compensated for by the increase in the price of Maya crude implemented beginning in May."

The price of Maya crude, a lower-grade heavy oil, was increased 50 cents a barrel last spring, to $25.50. Mexican light-type Isthmus crude has been selling for $29 a barrel for the past 21 months.

The government said the cut in exports "does not represent a critical impact on national finances" because Mexico has reserves of $7 billion.

The government said it opted for a reduction in exports instead of a price cut because "the reduction in the volume will be a temporary problem of a controlled magnitude whereas a reduction in prices would lead to the absurdity of having to export more to obtain the same income."

Barring non-bank banks may protect Texas money

AUSTIN (AP) — In an effort to protect Texas banks and money, Attorney General Jim Mattox says he'd go to court to bar out-of-state interests from opening "non-bank banks" in the state.

"I don't have any doubt that Texas money would be drained into other areas of this country" if the limited-service banks are allowed to open here, Mattox said.

His comments came Thursday shortly after C.T. Conover, the U.S. comptroller of the currency, gave preliminary approval to 13 bank-holding companies to cross state lines and set up 29 of the institutions.

Non-bank banks skirt federal laws against interstate banking by avoiding the law's definition of a bank. The new institutions do that either by not offering commercial loans or by not offering demand deposits, according to State Banking Commissioner James Sexton.

None of the preliminary approvals announced by Conover involve Texas locations, but Mattox said he would sue as soon as one is approved.

"These banks making applications for Texas are from everywhere from New York to California. I think there's even one from Hong Kong," he said at a news conference. "You are going to find deposits in Texas are going to be moving out of Texas" if a non-bank bank is opened.

Mattox and other critics say the non-bank banks could offer overwhelming, perhaps unfair, competition for smaller banks.

"It's nothing more than granting interstate branch banking throughout this country," the attorney general said. "What happens is the authority to make loans, the authority to make decisions goes out of state."

Dollar falls sharply as interest rates drop

LONDON (AP) — The dollar plummeted in early trading today as the conviction grew among investors that American interest rates are headed lower. Gold prices gained.

The dollar, which has been slipping since the beginning of the week, sank below the psychologically important level of three West German marks on Thursday.

Today, the dollar lost nearly 2½ cents against the British pound and tumbled below 1,850 Italian lire for the first time in more than six weeks.

Dealers attributed the fall to investor expectations that the American interest charges, which have edged lower over the past two months, would soon move down further.

Oilmen charged with illegal gas purchase

HOUSTON (AP) — A grand jury has indicted three former employees of LoVaca Gathering Co. on charges of engaging in organized criminal activity in connection with the purchase of gas for the fuel supply company.

Named on separate indictments Wednesday were Ewald J. Fisher, Travis H. Lynch and Floyd M. Whitley, all former LoVaca employees.

The three also have been named defendants in a 1978 civil suit filed by Valero Energy Corp., which now owns LoVaca. The civil suit seeks $4 million that was allegedly paid as kickbacks in the purchase of natural gas during the mid-1970s.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 256 taxable money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT (R) of Holliston, Mass. 01746 increased $2.9 billion to $186.7 billion during the week ended Oct. 30, 1984. The taxable funds' 7-day average yield decreased to 9.82 percent from 10.16 percent. The taxable funds' 30-day average yield decreased to 10.16 percent from 10.32 percent. The taxable funds' average maturity remained the same at 41 days for the second week.

William E. Donoghue says, "Assets of taxable money funds grew by $2.9 billion this week, bringing the 7-week total growth to $15.3 billion, a 20-month high. More than half of this week's asset growth was in stockbroker-affiliated money funds, while the remainder was in institutional funds. If money fund assets continue to grow at the rate of $2.2 billion per week, as they have in the past seven weeks, taxable money fund assets could return to their pre-MMDA level within the next four months."

Geophysical Systems to sell system to India

PASADENA—Geophysical Systems Corp. has announced negotiations for the sale of one of its GEOGOR IV systems to the United Nations for shipment to India. This equipment will be used by the Indian Government agency ONGC in its search for oil and gas. The configuration purchased provides for 256 seismic channels, witha corresponding sales price of approximately $1.2 million.

McCormick to receive less for Oak Hill gas

HOUSTON—McCormick Oil & Gas Partnership announced that Texas Eastern Transmission Corp. notified the partnership that effective Nov. 1, 1984, it will reduce the price it will pay for gas produced from the partnership's Oak Hill field.

This change would result in a reduction of $.43 per MMBtu, or about 12 percent, in the net price, after severance taxes and transportation costs, realized for the gas.

Diamond Shamrock announces oil discovery

DALLAS—Diamond Shamrock Exploration Co., a subsidiary of Diamond Shamrock Corp., has completed a crude oil discovery in Ouachita Parish, La.

The S.O. Henry No. 1 flowed 192 barrels of 45.8 gravity crude and 352 Mcfpd during completion testing, through a 12/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 5,120 psi.

Study shows domestic drillers profited more

HOUSTON—Drilling contractors who stuck to shallow, onshore domestic wells made higher profits during 1973-1982 than the more glamorous companies drilling deep wells offshore in foreign waters, a Rice University professor has said.

"That's a rather surprising conclusion," explained Dr. Briance Mascarenhas of Rice University's Jesse H. Jones Graduate School of Administration. "Along with many others, I originally had the impression that the large international drilling concerns with their highly sophisticated equipment would be more profitable than the rather pedestrian smaller onshore operators."

Dr. Mascarenhas, an assistant professor at the Jones Graduate School, reached his conclusion through a study of the structure, firm strategies and profitability of the oil drilling industry covering the period before the present downturn in activity.

Pennzoil spuds first wildcat offshore Tunisia

HOUSTON—Drilling has started on Pennzoil Co.'s first well offshore Tunisia on the 250-square mile Didon-Elyssa permit, awarded last December.

The Selim No. 1 well was spudded in the Mediterranean Sea some 45 miles off Tunisia's coast in 220 feet (68 meters) of water by the Galveston Key jackup drilling rig.

The well is being drilled to a total depth of 11,650 feet (3,550 meters) to test the Eocene El Gueria and Cretaceous Douleb formations.

Oil Fact

1932

Texas Railroad Commission issues third proration order for the East Texas field fixing allowable at 75 barrels per day, giving East Texas field about 325,000 barrels per day, and retaining the flat per-well method of distribution. Note: Order remains in effect, but operators continue to produce as they please, counting on federal judges to strike it down.

Overeating can be result of poor self-image

King Features Syndicate

It is Friday evening. Thelma, 28, divorced just 11 months and the overweight mother of two small boys, tucks the children in bed, then is overcome with a massive case of loneliness. She is painfully aware that it is "date" night, and she envisions all her thin friends snuggled closely to the one they love.

She stares at the telephone, hoping she might magically be endowed with ESP and make a male friend call. As the telephone remains silent, her anger grows. Before the evening is out, she stomps to the kitchen and binges.

Thelma is not alone. Research indicates that one American in five is overweight, that women are two-thirds more likely to be overweight than men and that obese individuals often experience bitter disappointments with love partners.

"All people need affection," says Edwin Bayrd, author of "The Thin Game," "but oral people need more of it and are greatly affected by its depletion."

According to Dr. Marcia Millman, associate professor of sociology at the University of California in Santa Cruz and author of "Such a Pretty Face: Being Fat in America," our culture's preoccupation with slimness may actually trigger overeating habits.

"A WOMAN SHOULDN'T have to be concerned about being 10 or 20 pounds overweight, if she's comfortable with it," Ms. Millman reported at a recent overweight seminar in Washington. "But our society's stress on physical appearance and our standards of what's acceptable make it a problem for her. Then, maybe she turns to food out of frustration and anger, and the 10 pounds turn into 100."

Abraham Friedman, author of "Fat Can Be Beautiful," agrees that once a person becomes obese, secondary problems arise, such as feelings of rejection and exclusion from the general public.

"They feel like outsiders who don't belong and have not been accepted into the stream of society," he says. A single lifestyle already makes us feel like foreigners in a couple-oriented culture. Overweight increases the exile.

Research indicates that one of the prime reasons we distort our bodies with excess food is to alleviate the feeling of being unloved.

"Overeating, especially sweets, becomes the emotional gratification to take the place of love," Friedman explains. "But this results in a further gain in weight, more frustration, followed by more overeating and more fat formation. And thus the vicious cycle continues."

"I experience feeling the most unloved during weekends," says Linda, 36, an overweight, unmarried mother of an 8-year-old daughter. "All week seems to be devoted to somebody else — the job, my child, whatever. Then Friday and Saturday nights are mine, and I don't want them.

"Weekends are like Christmas," Linda continues. "They are singled out for something special. When Sunday arrives and nothing important has happened all weekend, it is like I missed Christmas. Fifty-two weeks out of the year, I miss Christmas. Then I think, what is the justification of depriving myself of one more thing? And I overeat."

"I GET THE lonelies every night," shares Wanda, a widow of two years. "After working all day to support my son and me, I feel I deserve something special, and I have nothing but myself and the responsibility of my child. When I'm alone I feel a void, and I fill it with food so I don't have to feel that void."

Brian, a divorced father with three children, expresses a different problem. "I feel the most unloved when I'm dating someone and it is not working out. The other night was a classic example. I made a date with a woman who is not right for me. We agree on nothing. I thought that date would never end. I came home and stuffed myself. If I had stayed home, I would have nodded out about 10 o'clock and not overeaten. Settling is sometimes worse than nothing. Settling makes me want to overeat."

The responsibilities of single parenting minus the comfort and communication with a cross-sexual friend can make the difference between feeling self-love and self-loathing.

Periods of tension can also drive single parents to overeat. In fact, many experts agree that fat people often eat in response to chronic tension. It cannot be denied that death, divorce or separation from a once-loved partner can change our lifestyle and add stress.

"Overeating is definitely stress-related," explains Wanda. "I have to work. Maybe I don't want to work, but I have to work outside the home now. I come home from one job to another job. I meet a hungry child who wants a meal and who also wants to tell me about his day. I want to go to the bathroom, change my clothes and read the paper.

"When I'm under those circumstances, I'm shoving something in my mouth every minute — a bit of Jell-O, a spoonful of apple sauce, a cookie. A lot of nonstressful things add up to full-blown stress, and that is when I eat the most." During times of tension, many overweight people turn to the only solace available — their friend, the refrigerator.

Studies show there is a link between obesity and depresssion, but it is difficult to know if the overeaters become depressed because of their fat status, or if fat is acquired because of depression. Other studies show that people, in general, are less cheerful and alert when they're alone.

FOR THE SINGLE parent, being alone can be depressing. "The obese have a suicide rate that is well below the national average," says Anne Scott Beller in her book "Fat and Thin," "so if as a group, fat people are more depressed than others in the general population, they would at least seem to have learned the right medicine to take for what ails them."

AT WORK

Free lance work rewarding but not for everyone

By ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

Free lancing isn't for everyone. It takes a strong stomach to weather the vicissitudes of business cycles and the fickleness of organizations' contacts. It doesn't hurt to have a strong pocketbook, too. It is easier for you to be a free lancer if you're married to a corporate type who has more security, even though no one has any guarantees.

Free lancers need to be courtly, genial and specifically talented, even more so than regular employees. Not having the luxury (or burden) of being a generalist, or at least having several specialties that keep regulars employed over time, the free lancer purposely specializes.

Getting known for your specialty becomes an all-consuming task. If you're smart, before you begin free lancing, you stay in your organization and develop your special skills on the side. To get some practice, you might write a booklet telling do's and don'ts, for instance, or an unusual visual graph on, say, the history of an industry. Or you might, for example, do some research on your topic and reveal the results at meetings of any professional group you might belong to.

Such research can be anything from a simple phone survey of business preference to a complex study for credit, such as a master's thesis or doctoral dissertation. Some free lancers have pulled together other experts in their field to contribute chapters while they, as instigators, do the editing and organizing. Most free lancers are active in a trade group or professional association for invaluable contacts and new knowledge.

In addition to building a reputation for yourself, you have to find and develop clients. One key is to look for organizations with specific structural problems. It must make sense for them to hire you on a project basis than to keep a regular employee on the ready. Another is to anticipate times of the year that jam the wires for many businesses and plan your campaign just before that crisis time.

And a word to those who don't fit any one pattern. You might consider mixing and matching different kinds of work that make you happy. Yes, happy — or why else work as a free lancer? If you are one who loves resorts and clothes, why not work as a waiter at resorts in the summer and winter and do catalogue sales in the spring and fall? Sound crazy? Don't be too quick to judge. I've met a healthy number of people who need a variety of jobs to do and places to go to ward off boredom. And their children, far from being hurt from lack of security, learn the very processes of socialization: making friends as well as making markets.

Whatever you choose, push it to the extreme to determine what can be next for you. If you are a free-lance writer, you can be a free-lance writer all your life, but you might see an opportunity to become a free-lance writer's agent. And, voila, you've broken rank and started your own business as an entrepreneur. The same holds if you had been a special typist or computer operator and now can offer a line of secretarial services to a specialized industry.

You think this is all pie in the sky? That it can't happen? It does, every day. Seven years ago an IBM typewriter repairman decided to try to service clients on his own. He quit his steady job, bought his own set of tools, and went free lance for two years. With unusual spirit, he decided to branch into entrepreneurship and opened an office, hired a secretary and a band of repairmen, and bought supplies to sell. He is now a going concern. I know. I sign his service contracts every year.

He calls what he's done a natural progression. I'd say that it's not "natural" and there's no obvious progression for everyone. But it's there for the seeing and the seizing.

Raising children tricky situation

By ERMA BOMBECK

There are a couple of things new parents need to know about raising kids.

"Bigger" guarantees you nothing but the opportunity to pay more money to get into a movie.

Babies who can't even talk have the last word.

The art of "setting up" a parent develops early in life.

Example: The phone rings at 1:30 a.m. It's your daughter who was supposed to be home at midnight. You have it within your power to ground her until she is too old to fly. BUT WAIT. She says her boyfriend is too tired to drive home and is going to take a nap. He doesn't want to take a chance on falling asleep at the wheel and jeopardizing their safety.

Example: Your son approaches you and says he needs the car. You give him your best shot about how the only thing that is important is his grades and he can't study tooling around on weekday nights in your car. BUT WAIT. His English teacher has assigned him to see and critique a movie and if he doesn't, he'll probably flunk English which is a college prerequisite and no college will accept him and he'll become a bum.

I never won.

If I told my son to make his bed and clean his room before he went to school, he'd smile like Damien, put down his books and say, "I'll be glad to. But when I am late and spoil an 11-year attendance record, let it be on your conscience."

If he walked across a newly-waxed floor, prompting a 50-minute lecture on insensitivity to his mother, he'd retaliate by saying, "Your timer was going off and I knew you didn't want your brownies to burn."

It just isn't easy trying to be wiser than your children. My favorite story is one I heard many years ago about a father who was accused by his son of never paying any attention to him or what he did. The father felt rotten, so one day he retrieved a picture from the back seat of the car that his son had scrawled in crayon. The little stick figures were simply inscribed, "The family."

The father was touched and had it mounted and framed. Finally, he took his son into his office and there among the degrees, honors and plaques for membership and achievement was the simple picture of "The family." The child was stunned into silence.

Finally, he turned to his father and said, "It's nice, but why would you want Freddie Cohen's picture of his family hanging in your office?"

Don't mess around with little people.

From Staff Reports

Volunteers of the Multiple Sclerosis National Permian Basin Chapter will deliver 500 baskets of wine to selected Midland residents today and tomorrow for its Stay-At-Home fund-raising campaign.

Residents in the community who receive the baskets are asked to stay at home for the evening and donate the cost of "a night out" to the chapter.

The campaign was organized nine years ago by Midlander Lynn Hunt, who later recruited Ted Krueger and Richard Williams.

"It was an ideal fundraiser for Midland. Everything was a black-tie event then so we just asked residents to stay at home for the evening and send what they would have spent to MS. Here's the wine, invite a friend and have a great time," Hunt said.

Proceeds help pay for physical therapy, medical equipment, patient programs and MS research.

DEAR ABBY

Titles not always courteous

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Margaret, an older widow who hates to be called "Mrs.," wants to know how "missus" could be abbreviated to "Mrs." since there is no "r" in "missus." For goodness sakes, there is no such word as "missus" — it's simply the sloppy pronunciation of "mistress," which is what they called the married lady of the house in the early days. "Mrs." is the abbreviation of "mistress" — which does contain an "r."

Since Margaret doesn't approve of titles, she would surely approve of the custom of the Society of Friends (Quakers) who address no one — not man, woman, doctor, king, general or mistress — by any title whatsoever.

When I was the director of a Quaker school, I was respectfully addressed by everyone — including the youngest child — as DOROTHY RUSSELL (who at 86 will answer to anything that feels comfortable to the addresser).

DEAR DOROTHY RUSSELL: Read on for more about how — and how not — to address a person:

DEAR ABBY: A male child is addressed as "master" until he reaches his teens, then he automatically becomes "mister." A female child is a "miss" until she marries; but if she remains unwed, she carries the juvenile form of address to her grave. That wrinkles my wrankle! If a man can assume an adult title based solely on age, why shouldn't a woman do the same?

Since I am a woman with a name that can be either a man's or a woman's — and since it's been a while since I was either juvenile or married — there are times when that absurd "Ms." doesn't seem so absurd after all. — LYNN IN EL CAJON, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: Hooray for Margaret, who wrote: When will we delete the absurd labels, which mean nothing?

I am even occasionally addressed as "Miss" — with three children, 13 grandchildren and a great-grandchild! Considering that record, "Miss" is absurd. With no husband, "Mrs." is absurd. And "Ms." is the most absurd of all!

I also hate labels. When I die I want inscribed on my tombstone:

Please don't call me "Miss"
It has a phony ring.
Although I never married
I didn't miss a thing.

— EMMA G. IN PALM SPRINGS, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: Good grief, have you seen the new fashions for women? I like tailored clothes for women, but these clothes look like they are for men! Worse yet, the models look like punk rockers. This is chic? I always suspected that male fashion designers hated women. Now I'm sure. — JUST LOOKING, THANK YOU

DEAR JUST: Keep looking; you don't have to buy. Men's fashions are equally far out. They're now showing caftans, brocaded fabrics and harem pants for men! Fashion writers have dubbed the look "Florence of Arabia."

New diet helps cats live all nine lives healthier

Hearst News Service

Humans are eating better to live longer, and they're searching for diets to help their pets lead healthier lives as well.

With the fitness craze permeating this country, it makes sense that fitness for animals soon would follow. And it came none too soon for Dr. John L. Mara, a veterinarian from Huntington, N.Y., who gave an animal nutrition lecture at the Texas A&M University College of Veterinary Medicine.

One of Mara's concerns is the high incidence of feline urological syndrome, which he estimates affects 13 percent of the feline population.

"The leading reason for cats visiting vets is the presence of crystals (formed by magnesium, ammonium and phosphorus) in the urine that collect in the bladder," said Mara, who said that excess magnesium in many cat foods contributes to this problem.

Mara said that a magnesium level of .1 percent or less is relatively safe, but the higher the level the higher the possibility of bladder problems. The magnesium comes from ash — or bone meal — that contains the minerals. While more ash reduces the cost, it also increases the magnesium in a cat's diet.

How can one make sure Tabby doesn't end up on a veterinarian's surgical table having bladder stones removed?

"If you feed him this food all his life, he'll probably never develop this problem," said Mara of the Science Diet foods produced by Hill's Pet Products Inc. of Topeka, Kan. The products are available through veterinarians and better pet stores.

"Most vets are familiar with it," said Mara. "It costs a little more, but the main reason it's not sold in grocery stores is because there's no one there who would answer questions you may have."

Mara said that if your cat already has developed bladder stones, he may not necessarily require surgery.

The Prescription Diet Feline works by limiting magnesium, adding salt to increase water intake and urine volume and balancing the diet to promote a naturally acid urine. Some symptoms indicating your cat could have a bladder problem include passing blood through the urine, voiding in places other than the litter box and voiding more frequently. If the urinary tract is blocked, the cat will strain and act uncomfortable or ill.

Mums planted for fall garden

By ED HUTCHISON
Hearst News Service

Patio planters are probably looking a bit sad now, especially if they are filled with marigolds or geraniums. The short days and cool nights take their toll. They can be livened up easily enough, though, and it's a task well worth doing considering the balmy, sunny days that are typical in early November.

One sure cure for tired, non-blooming planters is an infusion of new plants. Probably the most colorful and plentiful choice is to replant them with hardy mums. Hardy mums are available now in bud and full bloom, growing in big plastic or fiber tubs and seldom priced at more than $4. Look for them at garden centers, roadside stands, farmers' markets and discount stores.

Choose mums with plenty of buds left to open since you will want color to go on just as long as possible. Colors should be compatible with your home's exterior and show well from the road. Often, yellow or white is best in this regard. But even an obvious mismatch of bronze mums against gray siding looks fine.

Setting the mums carefully in the container will keep the plant blooming through its cycle and still keep it fresh to plant permanently in the garden. Most hardy mums are potted in heavy soil, usually the same field soil they were grown in. Because of this, they will dry out quickly once planted in a container that is exposed to air circulation around it.

Remove any existing plants from the planter and work up the soil inside. Then simply set the fresh pot of mums inside and pull the soil up around the root ball. The mum container should be removed, however. Do this by watering a few hours before transplanting. The root ball will slip out of the container cleanly by tapping it upside down against a sharp surface, such as a porch or workbench edge.

The mum will continue to thrive inside its new container if it is watered enough to keep the soil evenly moist. When it is through blooming, transplant it to any sunny garden spot where the soil is well-drained and of average fertility. This should be done before the plant is exposed to frequent, heavy frosts. While these mums are hardy in the garden, expecting them to withstand continual sub-freezing temperatures in an unprotected location such as a patio planter is asking too much.

There are other excellent ways to use colorful fall material. Five or seven ears of Indian corn tied together where the husk meets the ear make an inexpensive, colorful door swag. A basket of pumpkin and squash is a nice porch accent or appropriate inside the home or apartment. Several decorative squash and preserved tree leaves available at florists and garden centers make a long-lasting, colorful centerpiece.

Even the geraniums stripped from planters in favor of fresh, fall material can be saved for next year. Save them by gathering before the first hard frost, bundling the plants and hanging upside down in a cellar or other area where the temperature stays at about 45 degrees and the humidity is high. The plants will go dormant and will be easily revived when planted next spring.

Acupuncture can help treat tennis elbow

Solomon

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a case of tennis elbow and I have been told to rest it. I don't like to be inactive, and sitting around for a few months or even weeks will drive me up the wall. One of my tennis partners has suggested I go for acupuncture. I don't want to turn a minor problem into a major problem, and I would appreciate your advice. Does acupuncture work in such cases? — Bert, Arlington, Va.

Dear Bert: The results of a Swedish study indicate that acupuncture can be helpful in the treatment of tennis elbow, but it, too, is time-consuming. Acupuncture treatment was administered to the subjects who participated in the study on six occasions over a period of four weeks.

The result, however, was improvement in 21 of the 34 patients treated. Moreover, none of the patients reported that acupuncture had made his condition worse.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have read about the dangers of lead in children, which I suppose is why we now have unleaded gasoline. But except for living on a mountaintop where there is no traffic, what can a family do to protect their children from being exposed to lead? — Mrs. E.P., Norfolk, Va.

Dear Mrs. P.: The results of a study conduced at Sinai Hospital in Baltimore indicated that control of house dust may be an effective method of decreasing blood lead levels in children. Apparently, children get lead-containing dust on their hands and then put their hands in their mouths.

Wet-mopping to control house dust can therefore decrease a child's exposure to dust.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've actually been thinking of getting contact lenses for years, but I keep putting it off because I don't like the idea of putting something in the eye. Is there only a certain type of individual who is able to wear contact lenses? — Fred, Altoona, Pa.

Dear Fred: According to Dr. Frank Fontana, of the American Optometric Assn., almost anyone hwo needs a prescription lens can wear contact lenses. Dr. Fontana also maintains that contact lenses provide more natural and realistic vision than do the traditional eyeglasss.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I heard a doctor at a meeting speak about the fetal alcohol syndrome, and how it was important for a pregnant woman not to drink. But he didn't say what the fetal alcohol syndrome was except that it was bad. What are the symptoms? — Russ, Miami Beach

Dear Russ: The main features of the fetal alcohol syndrome are decreased weight, height and head circumference; impaired intelligence and motor functioning; and various abnormalities of the face and head.

For Barbara, Baltimore, Md.: Night blindness is one of the first signs of vitamin A deficiency. Headache, irritability, nausea, and vomiting are some of the symptoms associated with an excessive intake of vitamin A.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've joined the club. I've got a case of genital herpes. I knew it was going to be bad if I ever got it, but it's worse than I ever imagined. Am I going to have to go through the same thing every times it happens? — Michelle, Detroit, Mich.

Dear Michelle: If it is any solace to you, I can tell you that the first episode of genital herpes is generally the worst and causes unusual distress. As you probably know all too well, the first bout of herpes is characterized by pain as well as painful urination.

However, the first episode of herpes is usually longer and more severe than subsequent episodes. At first, many patients experience fever, muscle pain and flu-like symptoms. Recurrent genital herpes is generally of shorter duration, milder, and marked by smaller lesions that cover a smaller area than during the initial bout.

I should add that there are support groups for patients with herpes in some cities and you might find them helpful.

For Jennie, San Diego, Calif.: Most cases of tetanus in the United States occur in individuals at least 60 years of age. There are a number of tetanus toxoid preparations available, depending on whether they are to be used for children or adults, and with or without diptheria toxoid.

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The Fort Worth Art Museum has acquired a major painting by American artist Adolph Gottlieb, museum officials say.

The painting, "Apaquogue," was purchased Thursday night in auction for $242,000 at Christie's in New York. The painting is a large oil in the artist's mature landscape/burst series, officials added.

The sale price is the most ever paid for any of Gottlieb's works, officials said. Apaquogue was the cover illustration for the catalog of Thursday's auction.

"The acquisition of this major Gottlieb adds another key work of the abstract expressionist movement to our collection," said E.A. Carmean Jr., the museum's director, who bid for the picture at the auction.

"We already hold paintings by Gottlieb's colleagues, Clyfford Still and Mark Rothko, and have a monumental sculpture by David Smith on loan from the Sid W. Richardson Foundation. This purchase brings another critical work to Fort Worth," Carmean said.

The oil-on-canvas painting, which suggests a sunset over water, measures 72 by 90 inches and the title refers to a town on Long Island, N.Y., Carmean added.

Gottlieb, who died in 1974 at the age of 71, was one of the founders of the abstract expressionist movement in New York in the 1940s and as such was among the first American painters to gain international stature.

"The appearance on the market of a picture of this quality is rare," Carmean said. "And we are delighted we were able to move decisively toward its purchase. The painting will go on view at the Fort Worth Art Museum in the near future."

Baby would get human heart if necessary

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — Baby Fae's vital signs remained strong as she neared the end of her first week with a transplanted baboon's heart, entering a period that doctors said may pose an increased risk of ter body rejecting the organ.

Should rejection occur, a human heart would be sought for the infant, doctors said Thursday. No human heart was sought for her transplant surgery Oct. 26, doctors said earlier.

Three-week old Baby Fae, the longest-lived recipient of an animal heart, was in serious but stable condition Thursday, said spokesman Dick Weismeyer.

Her body had shown no sign of rejecting the baboon heart, but she was entering a period when chances for rejection may increase, said Dr. David Hinshaw, a surgeon at Loma Linda University Medical Center, where the experimental operation was performed.

In human-to-human heart transplants in adults, a peak period for rejection occurs seven to 10 days after surgery.

Loma Linda doctors said it was unclear if that period is equally critical for an infant who has received a baboon heart, but they were watching Baby Fae carefully.

"We're hoping things will move very smoothly though this period," Hinshaw said.

If signs of rejection develop, doctors will increase Fae's dosage of cyclosporine, an anti-rejection drug. Another transplant would be considered only if rejection cannot be controlled, said Hinshaw.

Obtaining a human infant heart donor "would be very difficult ... (but) we would make every effort to seek such a heart," Hinshaw said, adding that another baboon heart would be used only if a human heart was unavailable.

Asked if Baby Fae's parents have consented to a second transplant of any kind, he replied: "I don't know whether they've been asked that."

Baby Fae was receiving painkillers, doctors revealed for the first time Thursday, but they said her vital signs remained strong.

Pediatrics chairman Dr. David Mace said the painkilling medication was routine after surgery and that he believed the baby, who was born with a severely underdeveloped heart, had received such medication previously.

She was "sucking on a pacifier, moving around, very active," said Mace. "She slept good (and) had pain medication only once during the night."

Spokeswoman Terri Pfeiffer said Baby Fae's parents were with her most of Thursday and added, "She has a healthy appetite."

Connell: An opera star on the rise

ENTERTAINMENT

LONDON (AP) — Elizabeth Connell, an opera star on the rise who makes her debut at the Metropolitan Opera in January, started in South Africa as a pianist, polished her singing craft in Australia and took Irish citizenship to obtain a passport without a problem.

"I seem to have done things the wrong way round," Miss Connell said in an interview at her London apartment before flying to Geneva to sing the title role in "Norma."

"After I got my passport, somebody wrote to me to say: 'If to solve your problems you became Irish, what strange problems you must have.' But I don't think about problems any more, I'm always learning," she said.

"When I changed from mezzo-soprano to soprano because my voice was better in the higher range, people said it would mean so much work to learn all the new roles. But I said how wonderful it was."

As a mezzo, she sang Azucena, the dominant woman in Verdi's "Il Trovatore." Her change of pitch means a switch to Leonora when she next sings in the opera, at Covent Garden a year from now.

"I'll try to make that the worthwhile part," the singer said.

South African-born, of an Irish mother and English father, Miss Connell majored in music as a pianist at the University of Witwatersrand, where she joined the choral society and sang the mother in "The Bartered Bride."

"I fell in love with opera at that point and from then on, piano came second," she said.

Miss Connell, who is in her 30s, journeyed to London, taught music for a year, studied singing and then joined the Sydney Opera House for two years.

But her South African passport was a liability.

"Every time I was offered a job, Equity turned me down. So I decided to become Irish," she said.

Miss Connell spent five years with English National Opera in London and then three seasons at the Bayreuth Festival in Germany.

"There is nowhere like Bayreuth because it is the festival of one man's work, so everyone who goes there, goes to honor the master and they are all totally dedicated," the singer said.

"Singing at Bayreuth isn't well paid — we go for the prestige and love of Wagner. It's like a big happy family, with Wolfgang Wagner as the patriarch," she said.

Her vocal range was her strength and weakness. She was wanted in so many roles that she had too much to do, so she turned freelance.

"Two years ago, I made the conscious decision to sing soprano," she said. "I was half-and-half, but as I sang more, my voice took on more of a soprano color and I stopped using the lower tones. So I canceled all the roles that wouldn't fit in and restudied my new repertoire for five months.

"At the same time, I decided to lose weight. I was a big girl, a Wagnerian lady."

Losing weight had no effect on her voice, she said. "The muscles go slack — and you need strong muscles to support the diaphragm — so I do exercises."

At the Met, Miss Connell is to sing Vitellia in a new production of Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito."

"Languages are the tools of our trade and we all have a working knowledge of three," she said.

"I know German, Italian and French," she continued. "Russian and Czech roles require a great deal of extra work. To sing, you need stamina and strength. Your feet get tired. Brunnhilde in 'The Ring' is really punishing.

"You have to take care of your voice. It's not just two little cords here," she said, touching the base of her throat, "but the whole body. You avoid colds, get enough sleep and don't get cold or overheated at rehearsal. But don't make a fetish of it.

"On the day of a performance, you don't talk too much. Most singers have a strict routine for such days. Have a steak if you like — some have a raw egg in port — how ghastly."

An opera singer needs a five-year diary: Miss Connell knows she will be singing in Australia and Amsterdam in 1987.

"Opera houses have to plan a long way ahead," she said, "because of which operas they will do and what singers they'll get.

"Building sets and budgeting is complicated and expensive. Every house wants the best singers, and if it's (tenor Luciano) Pavarotti, he has to be booked years ahead."

She said the only problem she has is singing from a height.

"In 'Aida' I sang Amneris, and she has to stand above a tomb," she said. "Now I'm hoping for Aida's role because she's on the ground all through."

Former inmate now 'making time' on Broadway

NEW YORK (AP) — Charles S. Dutton's story is the stuff that builds Broadway legends.

At 13, he dropped out of the eighth grade. At 15, he was in reform school. Two years later he was in the Maryland Penitentiary for what was to be the first of a series of prison terms that eventually would total more than seven years.

Today, the 33-year-old Dutton, a recent graduate of the Yale School of Drama, is a star on Broadway. He is the lightning that sparks August Wilson's blistering drama "Ma Rainey's Black Bottom," the tale of four black musicians who bicker during a recording session for the legendary blues singer, Gertrude "Ma" Rainey.

The play was praised by the critics when it opened in October, but it was Dutton's performance, as the bitter, explosive trumpet player named Levee, that was especially lauded. Now there is talk of a Tony nomination and a major theatrical career. Movies and television are sure to follow.

The adulation is especially heady for Dutton, who grew up in an East Baltimore housing project. His parents were separated. His father, a truck driver, died when he was 15.

"I was the middle child, the only troublesome kid," he recalled recently, sitting backstage in his tiny dressing room at the Cort Theater and willingly talking abut his turbulent childhood.

"My mom would still like to think that I was being influenced by the older guys, but I blame nobody but me. No society stuff," Dutton says. "I wasn't a poor, hungry kid. I always had food on the table. I could get anything."

And what he wanted to get more than anything else was his freedom.

"I thought there was more happening on the street corner than the classroom. I really believed that as a kid," he says.

On the street they called him Roc — without the k — and because he was athletic, he took up boxing to earn the respect of the older guys. And his schooling suffered.

"I was a smart kid. I could do the work. Until I quit school in the eighth grade, I went through without failing," he says.

"There are so many people now I wish I could find and talk to and apologize to. They were hammering me over the head saying, 'Look. You're an intelligent kid. Don't get yourself in trouble.' But I didn't listen. I was on a journey of destruction at the time."

That journey began in earnest in 1968 when he got into a fight with a man who Dutton said attacked him with a knife.

"I wrestled the knife from him and didn't really know that I stabbed him until four or five days later, when I heard he was in the hospital," he says. The man eventually died, and Dutton, pleading guilty to charges of manslaughter, ended up with an 18-month prison sentence.

Seven months later, he was back on the street and with a change of attitude.

"I was different. I was never a bully. I never started fights, but I was trying to live up to my nickname," he said. Within six months, he was back in prison, this time for possession of a deadly weapon.

While in jail the second time, he was involved in a disturbance. The price was a sentence of eight more years, and he ended up at the Maryland Correctional Institution in Hagerstown, Md.

It was by chance that a friend gave him a book of black plays. They fired his imagination. Soon he and some other inmates, with the help of a social studies teacher, were putting on plays for the rest of the prison population.

But Dutton still attracted trouble, and he was severely stabbed during a fight with another inmate. This time, it forced him to think about the future.

He received his high school equivalency diploma and a junior college degree while still in prison. He was released early and ended up at Towson State University near Baltimore to study drama.

"My talent was shaped at Towson. I've always had the ability," he said. "But that 2½-year experience gave me a desire for acting and a depth that I really cherish."

At Towson, he studied under Paul Berman, who encouraged him to apply for a scholarship at the Yale School of Drama.

Woman conductor makes music history

VENICE, Italy (AP) — American conductor Judith Somogi has pierced one of the last male-dominated barriers by becoming the first woman ever to conduct in a major Italian opera house.

She made music history last week when she conducted Christoph Willibald von Gluck's "Orfeo ed Euridice" at the Teatro La Fenice.

"For a musician, that is one of the great theaters of the world," she said.

"To stand on that stage and bow to that audience was a very private and beautiful experience for me."

The Gluck opera, based on ancient Greek legend, tells the story of Orpheus, a musician, who tries but fails to rescue his bride, Eurydice, from the mythical underworld Hades.

During an interview at a quiet Venice cafe, the 42-year-old Ms. Somogi talked about the dearth of women in the ranks of internationally renowned conductors. She thought a woman could become the principal conductor of a major American orchestra within a decade.

Principal conductors of major orchestras have hit the unrivaled peak of a profession where perservance and determination count almost as much as sheer talent. With the position also come money and fame.

Superstar conductors, such as Herbert von Karajan and Leonard Bernstein, establish worldwide fame and huge followings.

There are few internationally known women conductors. Besides Ms. Somogi, there also are Boston Opera founder Sarah Caldwell and Opera Orchestra of New York music director Eve Yueler.

"I am sure there are a lot of women in college who are taking on the challenge," Ms. Somogi said. "I think there are some young women coming up."

The rigors of conducting are enormous. There are harsh music critics, the pressures of controlling an orchestra and the physical punishment of frequent travel.

"Everyone who has conducted knows how much it takes out of you, how much you pay for it," Ms. Somogi said. "I wouldn't encourage anyone to conduct."

Ms. Somogi, who was born in Brooklyn and raised in Lynbrook, N.Y., considers her 1974 debut with the New York City Opera as a turning point in her conducting career. For one thing, it was the first time a woman had led that opera.

She also has conducted in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Milwaukee and the Berlin Radio Symphony Orchestra, and is the principal conductor of the Frankfurt Opera in West Germany. Her contract recently was extended through 1987, she said.

Honduran President Roberto Suazo, in white shirt, walks through La Paz under heavy security guard.

Suazo under guard as plot uncovered

By JANET BRAUNSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI — President Roberto Suazo of Honduras was reported to be under guard by 800 soldiers today after the FBI cracked a U.S.-based exile group and foiled what authorities said was a cocaine-financed plot to kill Suazo and overthrow his government.

Eight men were arrested here on Thursday and a warrant was issued for a ninth, Gen. Jose Bueso-Rosa, the Honduran military attache in Chile.

An FBI agent who infiltrated the plot was to be paid $300,000 to put together a team that would go to Honduras and kill Suazo, said Joseph V. Corless, head of the Miami FBI office.

The exiles, who called themselves "staunch anti-communists," were going to finance the operation through the sale of more than $10 million in cocaine seized by authorities on Sunday, the FBI said. The group included a businessman who lost more than $7 million when his business was nationalized by the Honduran government, authorities said.

In addition to the nine men charged by the FBI, Honduran authorities claimed that Gen. Gustavo Alvarez Martinez, once considered the most powerful man in the country, was involved. Martinez now lives in Miami and was not indicted in the plot.

A Honduran presidential spokesman, who spoke on condition that he not be identified by name, said Suazo was in his hometown of La Paz, 51 miles north of Tegucigalpa, on Thursday night, guarded by about 800 armed soldiers.

Bueso-Rosa and Faiz J. Sikaffy, 49; Gerard Latchinian, 46; and Manuel Binker, 48, all of Miami, were accused of plotting to acquire arms and hire assassins to kill Suazo, then use newspapers and other institutions to create unrest and to install their own leaders between Oct. 14 and Nov. 15, 1984.

Sikaffy lost his cement business when it was nationalized and now operates a seafood business here, authorities said. Latchinian, a Honduran, was described by the FBI as an international arms dealer with business interests in that country. Binker is a U.S. citizen and former Cuban refugee, the FBI said.

Martinez, 48, moved here after Suazo dismissed him as commander-in-chief of the armed forces last spring — in part because of meddling in politics, according to the U.S. Embassy in Tegucigalpa.

Honduran Attorney General Elizabeth Chiuz Sierra said in Tegucigalpa she would seek the extradition of Martinez, the eight exiles and Bueso-Rosa. She said the suspects would face charges of high treason and related crimes in Honduras.

FBI agents on Sunday seized 760 pounds of cocaine worth $10.3 million after it was flown in from Colombia to a remote airstrip in southern Florida. Five men were arrested Thursday in connection with the seizure.

Duarte says he wants more talks

By RITA BEAMISH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — El Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte says he wants to continue peace talks with rebel leaders in his war-torn Central American nation, but promises no "miracle overnight."

Duarte, speaking at a news conference Thursday before addressing the Inter-American Press Association, mentioned the talks begun last month in La Palma, and assailed the rebels for attacking El Salvador's economy.

"They're damaging the people, not the government," he said. "This is perhaps the biggest historical mistake they are making, because they are not attacking" the oligarchy, imperialism and government they oppose.

"They're attacking the very root of the wills of the people. They're leaving the people without jobs. They're taking their children away. They're destroying the economy of the country," he charged. "There's no question that if they continue to destroy the economy of the country and destroy the country, there will be no country."

In his speech to the Press Association, Duarte said the La Palma meeting "has raised world expectations and has pointed out the clear hope that understanding and reason among men will prevail over violence.

"My government is convinced that to the enslaving concept of Marxism and the totalitarianism of extreme right, the alternative is the way of democratic revolution and the freedom of man," he said.

A group of human rights activists also held a news conference Thursday in Los Angeles, where the Rev. Farley Wheelwright charged that "the so-called Duarte peace initiative is a fraud."

But Duarte said at the news conference he is committed to peace and to banishing the human rights abuses by rightist death squads that have brought worldwide criticism of human rights violations in El Salvador.

"Little by little I am changing the realities of my country. Of course, I still have problems, but I am confronting them face to face," Duarte said.

Indian workers erect a brick platform for the funeral pyre of slain Prime Minister Indira Gandhi. The ceremony is scheduled Saturday.

Mob violence continues across northern India

By TERRY A. ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India — Mob violence triggered by Indira Gandhi's assassination continued across northern India today despite curfews and orders for security forces to shoot rioters on sight. More than 230 people reportedly have been killed.

Much of the violence — including lynchings, beatings and arson — has been directed at Sikhs by Hindus seeking to avenge the prime minister, whose assassins have been identified as two Sikh members of her security guard.

One of the guards was killed immediately after Wednesday's attack on Mrs. Gandhi. The wounded survivor was under heavy guard at a New Delhi hospital today and reported in "nearly critical" condition.

Dr. J.P. Singh, the hospital's surgical superintendent, said constable Satwant Singh had undergone surgery to remove bullets and was not yet in condition to be interrogated by police. The doctor ridiculed reports claiming the constable already had confessed to a role in an elaborate conspiracy.

"We are fully conscious of the importance of this man for the nation. Doctors are straining every nerve to keep him alive," the surgeon said.

"We remember what Jack Ruby did," he added, in a reference to the Dallas nightclub owner who killed Lee Harvey Oswald, named by the Warren Commission report as the assassin of President John F. Kennedy.

The Indian Express newspaper reported today that Satwant Singh had been formally charged with murder, conspiracy and two other charges, but there was no official confirmation.

Rumors of conspiracies and cover-ups swept across New Delhi, many of them inspired by newspaper accounts of plots attributed to unidentified sources, or not attributed at all. The rumors ranged from reports blaming the CIA or the Indian army generals for the killing, to reports of a plot to poison the city's drinking water.

A high level inquiry into the assassination was being conducted in close secrecy, and New Delhi police fended off all requests for information, thereby failing to forestall the rumors.

Even the authoritative Times of India joined in, reporting without attribution that the security men who fired on the assassins were themselves arrested on suspicion of being involved in a conspiracy.

Mobs set fires in several New Delhi suburbs today after crowds of Hindus had roamed the streets in some areas through the night, ignoring a 24-hour curfew.

Curfews were imposed today in Kashmir and Bihar states, in addition to the more than 30 cities already under curfew. The United News of India said a hand grenade thrown into a building in Kashmir killed 16 people.

In New Delhi — where some Sikhs were reported burned to death — and five other cities, police were told to shoot rioters on sight. Hindu mobs also were reported to have lynched and beaten Sikhs, and burned their shops, cars and homes.

The assassination was claimed by anonymous Sikh extremists as revenge for the Indian army attack on the Sikhs' Golden Temple in Amritsar last June to flush out Sikh separatists.

The Sikhs number 13 million, a small minority in a country of 730 million, but they hold many prominent posts in the army and government. President Zail Singh is a Sikh.

Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, the 40-year-old former airline pilot who succeeded his mother, met with opposition leaders and they issued a joint statement that said: "This madness must stop."

Gandhi's cremation to be true to customs

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The body of slain Prime Minister Indira Gandhi will be cremated according to Hindu custom on logs and sandalwood sticks soaked in butter.

Hundreds of thousands of people are expected attend the funeral Saturday and walk in a procession from Mrs. Gandhi's childhood home, where her body lies in state, to the cremation site near Shantivana. That is the memorial to Jawaharlal Nehru, her father and India's first prime minister.

The bier will be carried atop a gun carriage to the cremation site and Mrs. Gandhi's body will be placed on logs by the pall bearers, who include the three chiefs of the armed forces, the spokesman said.

The body reportedly was bathed in the traditional milk and water and put on a bier at a hospital Wednesday before it was taken to her childhood home.

Camphor and other scented powders, together known as "samagri," are sprinkled over the logs to help them catch fire. Hindus believe in destroying all remains of the body. They are never buried.

According to Hindu religious philosophy, the body is only the material aspect of eternal life. The ashes usually are immersed in India's holy rivers.

"To subject Sikhs as a whole olence and indignity for what a few misguided persons have done, however heinous their crime, is most irrational and unbecoming of our heritage of tolerance," the statement said.

After sunrise, most streets in the sprawling capital of 6 million appeared calm, and people emerged from their homes to shop at the few food and drug stores that opened, mainly in back alleys.

Many people were stranded around the city by violence and the absence of public transportation. Few taxi drivers would venture out, and no buses were seen. Soldiers and policemen in riot helmets and carrying long clubs gathered in large groups.

Shoot-to-kill orders were issued in five other cities: Indore in Madhya Pradesh state, Patna in Bihar state and Rae Bareilli, Kanpur and Dehra Dun in Uttar Pradesh state.

The only official government figure on casualties came from M.M.K. Wali, the No. 2 man in the Home Ministry, who told reporters Thursday there were nine confirmed deaths, two in New Delhi and seven in Madhya Pradesh.

According to the Indian Express, Satwant Singh was charged late Thursday with murder, conspiracy, attempted murder and several arms violations.The attempted murder charge reportedly concerned the wounding of another of Mrs. Gandhi's guards who received three bullets in the leg during the firing.

The paper quoted a police charge sheet filed by head constable Narain Singh, who was among Mrs. Gandhi's guards at the time of the assassination, as accusing Satwant Singh of shooting the prime minister with a Sten submachine gun, while Beant Singh fired his .38-caliber service revolver at her.

Police spokesman Nander Singh refused to confirm the Express' report that formal charges had been filed against Satwant Singh.

None of the Singhs are related. Singh, which means lion, is the last name of virtually all Sikhs in India.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Walesa disputes strike call

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa says he disagrees with a call by other Solidarity activists from his hometown for a one-hour strike Saturday to protest the murder of pro-Solidarity priest Jerzy Popieluszko.

The strike call, which urged workers to end their "passivity," was the first such appeal by prominent union activists since Nov. 10, 1982, when Solidarity's underground leadership unsuccessfully sought a nationwide strike to protest the banning of the independent trade union.

"I think the climate is unfavorable for such actions," said Walesa, contacted by telephone in the Baltic port of Gdansk. "It is not my point of view."

Walesa, who helped found Solidarity in 1980, said he was not consulted about Thursday's call for a one-hour strike and added that he "stands by" his earlier appeal for calm and restraint in the wake of Popieluszko's kidnap and murder.

Papers describe papal plot

ROME (AP) — Court documents filed here describe how Mehmet Ali Agca purportedly met with two Bulgarian government officials in 1980 and 1981 to plot the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II.

The documents describe how Agca went to the Hotel Vitosha in Sofia, the Bulgarian capital, and met with Todor Aivazov. Aivozov was the cashier at the Bulgarian Embassy in Rome, but Italian news media have speculated he was a member of the Bulgarian secret service.

The documents, filed in court Wednesday, say it was certain that Aivazov was present in Sofia in the periods in which Agca maintains that there were meetings "having as their object the project of an attack on the pope."

The papers add that evidence shows Aivazov's "active participation" in such meetings with Agca and a fellow Turk, Bekir Celenk, acting as Agca's accomplice.

Agca met with Maj. Zhelyo Kolev Vassilev, an assistant to the military attache at the Bulgarian Embassy in Rome, on May 10, 1981, three days before the assassination attempt, the documents said.
