Voters put Akins back in mayor's office

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Sweeping past the finish line with a clear 1,000 vote margin, G. Thane Akins retained his mayor's seat in Saturday's municipal elections. But Frank Lasater Jr. gave Akins a run for the money as the early returns put the challenger out front.

It wasn't until the fourth precinct was called in that Akins turned the corner and headed into the homestretch a full length ahead of Lasater. Final tally was 5,167 for Akins; 4,101 for Lasater.

Saturday's elections saw one of Midland's higher voter turnouts in recent years as 9,573 persons went to the polls or voted absentee. Four years ago when Akins sought the mayor's chair for the first time, 10,081 persons voted in the combined city, school, college and hospital district election. The county elections administrator's office estimated there are 42,000 registered voters in the county.

The 33-year-old challenger said Saturday night he was disappointed in the results but feels his campaign was a success in that "it brought out a lot of issues that people are concerned about." Lasater said he hopes the 4,101 who voted for him are not forgotten by the mayor. "They feel ignored and left out of city government and they were looking for a change."

In his campaign, Lasater had focused on hiring more police officers, improving communication between the city and its people and repairing streets.

Akins said his priorities are still the same as before the election: repairing streets, finding water resources and seeing Air Park moved to a new location.

Concerning the police department, Akins said, "We'll see what we can do to take care of them. As we come out of our economic slump, we're trying to do more for our employees."

With the win came mixed emotions, he said. "There's lots of work to do and we've still got some tough decisions to make from the economic standpoint."

For both men, it was a long and expensive campaign, highlighted with numerous forums and debates and some questions about the Lasater's ability and residency eligibility raised. Each estimated he had spent $30,000 in the race. Lasater got behind the starting line first and began campaigning two months ago.

"I've knocked on about 2,000 doors," he said, pointing out he had concentrated on areas he knew the mayor had a strong base of support — the Lee High and Fannin Elementary polling places. "I was concentrating on the biggest precinct turnout areas."

But when the vote tally was counted, it was the Lee High and Fannin boxes which pushed Akins into the winner's circle. Lasater's base of support came from south, east and far west Midland.

The absentee vote, which was released first, indicated it would be a close race: 549 for Akins and 443 for Lasater.

Hotchkiss wins seat on council

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

A man who quit his company several years ago because he wanted to stay in Midland won election to Place 5 on the Midland City Council in a three-way race.

Bart Hotchkiss, now involved in investments and a delicatessen, garnered 4,968 votes to the 3,398 of his closest competitor, Col. Wilson Banks. The third contestant, Raul Jimenez Salazar, received 345 votes.

Bart Hotchkiss

Hotchkiss will replace Tom Sloan, who served three terms and decided against re-election. The new councilman will take his place at the first meeting in May.

And Steve Davidson, running unopposed for a third term to his Place 4 seat, took 6,236 votes out of 9,573 cast in Saturday's municipal election.

Both City Council places saw a write-in vote submitted. For Place 4, Suzanne Palmer's name was listed. And James L. May received someone's support for Place 5.

Hotchkiss said he appreciated "very much the way Wilson handled the campaign. It was a very clean campaign. I thank him for all his service in the years past."

Banks had been the city's aviation director for 13 years until he retired in January 1983 at the age of 66. When he entered the council race, Banks said he had found that he wanted to do something for the city.

When Hotchkiss tossed his name into the race, he said he felt the time was right. He had considered the job before but it had not been the right time for him.

Hotchkiss had listed crime as one of his goals for the two-year council term, and he said Saturday night that will be his first priority after he takes the oath in May. During the campaign he also focused on getting a master plan on the city completed and resolving differences between the Sheriff's Office and Police Department.

Newman, Reed gain MISD posts

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN

Fred Newman and A. Joseph "Joe" Reed scored comfortable victories in Saturday's Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees election.

Newman, who is self-employed in the oil and gas business, was running for Place 3 vacated by trustee Ann Page. He beat former board member James Ramsoure 5,377 to 3,229.

"I'm just thrilled to death," Newman said. "I have a debt of thanks...to the people who supported me both financially and in the voting booth."

Of his opponent he commented, "He's a true, true gentleman. It's just unfortunate the two of us can't serve in the same place."

Three challengers filed for Place 4, formerly filled by Gary Hopper. While Reed drew 4,572 votes, Don McCarty received 2,426 and Bobby Williams Sr. got 1,286.

Reed, president of Ed L. Reed and Associates, has seven children in MISD schools. "We appreciate the support that everybody's given us," he said. "I'm really excited about the prospect and I'm really anxious to get to work.

Waste project creates fears, myths

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Myths and fears of nuclear wastes are embroiling West Texas.

Misconceptions on the disposal of low-level radioactive wastes have cropped up after 1981, when the Texas Legislature overwhelmingly passed the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority Act.

The Senate passed the measure 31 to 0, and the House, 106 to 34. One representative abstained; nine were absent.

That law was mandated by the federal government's Low-Level Radioactive waste policy Act of 1980. The statute requires each state to plan for the disposal of its own low-level nuclear wastes. Otherwise, the federal government would do it for the states, said Texas Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland, who voted for the bill.

"It was my feeling," he said, "it would have been better to have state control than for the federal government to take over. If we get the federal government doing it, we don't have any say in it....

"It's our own waste," Craddick reasoned, "and we've got to do something with it. At least, we're solving it ourselves."

LOW-LEVEL RADIOACTIVE WASTE:
IN SEARCH OF A HOME

A Reporter-Telegram Special Report begins on Page 6G

Texas is at the forefront in that regard, said Dr. Lawrence R. "Rick" Jacobi Jr., a nuclear engineer who is general manager of the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority in Austin.

"TEXAS IS leading the nation in resolving this problem," he said. "I have a lot of confidence in nuclear technology. I think it's been beneficial to the nation."

What Jacobi is doing now is "working on the backend" side of technology.

It's called waste.

Former Sen. Frank Church, 59, dies of cancer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Frank Church, a onetime boy wonder of the Senate who rose to prominence as a stern opponent of the Vietnam war but failed in a bid for the presidency in 1976, died of cancer Saturday at 59.

Family spokesman Cleve Corlett said the former Democratic senator from Idaho succumbed at home in suburban Bethesda, Md. He had undergone chemotherapy at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York for pancreatic cancer.

"Sen. Church served his nation with distinction and dedication," President Reagan said in a written statement. "His abiding interest in foreign policy made an important intellectual contribution to our country. We send our sympathy to his family and friends."

Church was the fifth youngest senator in U.S. history when elected in 1956 at age 32, and he became nationally known as an outspoken opponent of the Vietnam war and for investigations into the activities of the CIA.

He lost to Jimmy Carter for the 1976 Democratic presidential nomination and was defeated for a fifth Senate term by Republican Steven D. Symms in the 1980 GOP landslide that swept Reagan into the White House. Since then, he had practiced law in Washington.

Church survived a bout with cancer of the abdomen and lymph nodes while a student at Harvard Law School.

Church's outspoken criticism of U.S. policy in Vietnam led former President Lyndon B. Johnson to refer to him as Frank "Sunday School" Church.

He was a champion of civil rights, aid to the aging and environmental legislation in the Senate. In 1967, he wrote the legislation that created the National Wild Rivers System.

Besides his wife, Church leaves two sons, Forrest, of New York City; and Chase, of Bethesda; and two grandchildren.

A memorial service for Church will be held at 11 a.m. Tuesday at the National Cathedral here. His body will be returned to Idaho on Wednesday and will lie in state in the Capitol rotunda at Boise until a funeral at 2 p.m. Thursday at the Cathedral of the Rockies.

Feud leads to Baptist split

state

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — A disagreement among fundamentalist Baptists over who owns and controls a small college and its $8-million campus is leading some ultraconservative pastors to found a new school and national organization.

The rift centers on Arlington Baptist College, a 350-student school opponents claim has become more interested in academics than evangelism, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Saturday in a copyright story.

The Rev. Raymond Barber of Fort Worth, president of the World Baptist Fellowship, said he decided to form a new organization and start another minister-training school after a judge ruled last month that World Baptist did not have control of the college.

The group had been electing the school's trustees. And Barber offered a plan at the organization's convention last May for investigating the direction college officials were taking.

"I felt the college was drifting away from the original purpose of the school by giving more emphasis to academics and scholarship and accreditation than they were giving to soul-winning, evangelism and church-building," Barber said.

College officials, including President Wayne Martin, objected to Barber's plan, which included possible revocation of the accreditaton the school receives from the American Association of Bible Colleges.

Barber and others believed that the school might be sacrificing some of its emphasis on evangelism and church-building to meet the academic standards of the accrediting agency.

Another of Barber's recommendations was that all professors use the King James version of the Bible in their classes.

The convention adopted Barber's proposal and re-elected him president.

Barber says he was subsequently fired as a professor of the college, a move he says angered fellow pastors.

The new Independent Baptist Fellowship International will hold an organizing convention in May at the same time World Baptist will hold its national meeting at the Arlington campus.

Bell says helicopters not flawed

FORT WORTH (AP) — Bell Helicopter's top official in Washington has sent letters to congressmen rebutting a series of newspaper articles detailing a design problem on the company's military helicopters.

The articles, which ran for five days in the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, beginning March 25, reported Pentagon officials have cited the problem as a cause in 67 accidents that have killed 231 servicemen since 1967.

In a letter to congressmen, Bell Vice President George G. Troutman said the accidents only occurred when the Huey and Cobra helicopters involved were operated beyond the proper limits.

"Any device, operated beyond its design limit, will fail — an automobile, a fixed wing aircraft, or a helicopter," Troutman said in a cover letter of a 13-page packet. "Statistics show that Bell helicopters, either civilian or military, are the safest helicopters in the world."

The Star-Telegram series was based on a decade of Pentagon reports and interviews with former and active military pilots and safety officials.

Documents and officials said the Bell teeter rotor, under certain conditions, tends to teeter too far and force the underside of the rotor into the mast. This "mast bumping" can cause the rotor to separate from the rest of the helicopter in a split-second.

Despite repeated military recommendations that the problem be fixed — and in spite of a 1979 memo from Bell's top lawyer urging the company pay to fix the problem itself if the Pentagon refused to do so — the design remains uncorrected except for a thicker mast more able to withstand mast bumping forces.

In a series of attachments to his letter, Troutman detailed the Bell teeter rotor's safety record, acknowledged as the best among military helicopters.

"This record, establishing the two-blader as the safest rotor system operated by the U.S. military, was attained by more than 15,000 helicopters operating during war and peace for over 11 million flight hours (85 percent of the Army's helicopter flight time), more than five times as many as all other rotor systems combined," the memo said.

A hub spring device, estimated by the Army to cut the number of fatal mast bumping accidents by 60 percent, "was not considered by the Army to be of sufficient benefit to warrant its incorporation," it said.

The memo also outlined the Army's "misleading" practice of claiming that mast bumping caused the fatal accidents.

"Upon investigation by the Army, the initiating causes of these accidents were attributed to weather, component failure, or to exceeding of the helicopter's flight envelope that has clearly proven itself more than satisfactory for all required military maneuvers," the memo said.

"In the course of the accidents, as a result of one or the other of the above initiating causes, the rotor bumped against the mast and caused it to fail," the memo said.

"These accidents were given the misleading label of 'mast bumping' accidents which has caused a few to assert that the two-bladed rotor system, by all objective standards the world's safest rotor system, had a flaw and was defective," it said.

"Before the separation of the rotor, or the loss of the rotor blade, or the severance of the tail boom, the tragedy of the crash has already occurred," the memo said. "The mast bumping and subsequent separation of the rotor is the result not the cause of the accident.

"It is inaccurate to characterize such an accident as a mast bumping accident, yet that type of accident is repeatedly included within the Army's mast bumping list," the memo said.

But military reports over several years have disputed Bell's contention, saying that while a material failure may have started an accident, it would not have been fatal had it not been for mast bumping.

"A material failure of critical components may have initiated the sequence; the cause of each catastrophic mishap was truly separation of the main rotor mast due to severe mast bumping," an Army report said.

Hitchhikers claim abduction by family members

KERRVILLE (AP) — Three members of a ranching family were arrested after six people said they were abducted while hitchhiking and held in chains as slave laborers, authorities said Saturday.

Kerr County Sheriff Cliff Greeson said Walter Wesley Ellebracht, 53, his son; Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., 31; and daughter-in-law, Joyce Ellebracht, 29, were arrested Friday night on kidnapping charges at their ranch near Mountain Home, 20 miles northeast of Kerrville in central Texas. They were being held Saturday on $100,000 bonds.

Investigators were checking a claim by one alleged victim that he was forced to burn the body of a man who died at the ranch, Greeson said.

Authorities learned of the slavery allegations last week when a man who said he had been kidnapped and held on the ranch escaped and contacted Texas Rangers in Comanche.

The Ellebrachts were arrested when sheriff's deputies, FBI agents and Department of Public Safety officers raided the ranch Friday night, Greeson said.

Five men and a woman found at the ranch told investigators they were picked up while hitchhiking on nearby Interstate 10 and taken to the ranch for forced labor.

They told officers they were kept in chains and threatened with guns and cattle prods, Greeson said.

WEATHER SUMMARY

The Forecast For 7 p.m. EST Sunday, April 8

Rain Snow Showers Flurries

●High Temperatures

AP Laserphoto Map

Midland experiences trace of precipitation Saturday

After the skies spit some dismal drops, mainly on windshields and those in line for Willie & Waylon tickets in Odessa, the clouds hold no more moisture, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

After releasing only a trace of precipitation Saturday, skies will remain partly cloudy and dry through Monday.

Temperatures today are expected to reach into the upper 70s, dropping into the upper 50s tonight. Monday's high is expected to climb into the lower 80s.

Winds will be from the west at 15-20 mph and gusty today.

Saturday's high of 74 was 18 degrees cooler than the record high of 92, set in 1946. The overnight low of 61 was 33 degrees warmer than 1938's record low of 28 degrees.

STATE

A 10-year-old boy playing soccer in Arlington was struck by lightning Saturday afternoon as severe thunderstorms moved through North Central Texas.

Arlington fire alarm office supervisor Perry Flories said the boy was struck by lightning at about 4 p.m. He said several other children were taken to a local hospital, but that the boy was the only one struck directly.

"The rest of them just felt the shock or were too close to the boy," Flories said.

The child, whose identity was not released, "was in full arrest when the ambulance and firemen got on the scene. When they got to the hospital, he had a slight pulse and was breathing on his own," Flories said.

He said the child was taken to Arlington Community Hospital and then transferred to Parkland Hospital in Dallas. Parkland administrator Kathy Davis said the boy was in critical condition.

Much of the state was under a tornado watch Saturday evening as the severe thunderstorms marched across the state, producing half an inch of hail in Parker and Hood counties.

NATION

Intense thunderstorms and heavy rains spawned by colliding weather systems dampened the nation's heartland Saturday, with golfball-sized hail reported in Oklahoma and a tornado sighted in west Texas.

A cold front extending from the Dakotas to central Texas which collided with a warm front in the southeast part of the Lone Star state was blamed for the storms.

Severe weather was expected into the night in much of Texas, Oklahoma and in parts of Louisiana and Arkansas.

The showers and thundershowers also extended into the central Plains and throughout the Mississippi Valley.

In the rain-drenched Northeast, meanwhile, cloudy morning skies produced light rain or snow in several locations. Light rain and snow also prevailed over much of the Pacific Northwest.

Temperatures around the nation at 2 p.m. EST Saturday ranged from 32 degrees at Elmira, N.Y., to 86 degrees at McAllen, Texas.

For today, the National Weather Service forecast called for rain and thundershowers from the central Gulf Coast to the lower Mississippi and Tennessee valleys. More rain was predicted from the mid-Mississippi Valley to the northern Plains.

Rain and snow showers were forecast for the Pacific Northwest, the northern Plains and the Great Basin.

Mild temperatures were predicted, with highs in the 40s and 50s expected New England and the Great Basin. Highs in the 70s and 80s were likely in a broad band of the nation from South Carolina to central California. The rest of the nation can expect highs in the 50s and 60s.

Today, he said, 78 percent of the low-level waste comes from civilian medical fields, such as hospitals and universities; 12½ percent originates from industry, including the petroleum industry; and 9½ percent comes from the federal government, including the military. The federal government is carrying out the disposal of high-level nuclear waste.

By 1990, Jacobi said, 75 percent of the low-level waste will be from Texas' four nuclear plants at two sites, near Glen Rose in North Central Texas and in South Texas; 16½ percent will originate from the medical field, including hospitals; 2½ percent will be coming from the federal government; and 6 percent from industry.

The radioactivity in the waste is "very minimal" and is far less toxic than many chemicals which get into the environment, he said. Those chemicals "are far more toxic and far more hazardous" than low-level radioactive material.

The agency has set aside $375,000 to purchase a section — 640 acres — of land by Aug. 30 and an additional $100,000 for legal fees.

THE ACTUAL burial site would be on a 50-acre tract within that section, would be 20 to 45 feet deep, would be used for at least 30 years and would be monitored for 100 years and possibly would be unlined.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission recommends a "freely-draining trench," according to a "Keystone" report by the Texas Department of Water Resources. Existing clays and clay materials would be used to ensure "that movement of water does not occur."

The site is to be in operation by 1988. Meanwhile, at least until 1986, the waste is being stored in trenches in Washington state. After that, Texas must deal with temporarily storing the material until it can be buried.

Two locations in Texas — Tulia and Hereford — are among nine areas around the nation also currently being considered as possible sites for high-level nuclear waste repositories. Those wastes are buried much deeper than low-level wastes and must be protected from excavation for up to 10,000 years. The search for the high-level repository should be completed so that the first of the storage sites can be operational by 1998, federal authorities say. No final decision has yet been made on a site for a high-level waste repository.

The wastes placed in the low-level site in Texas will be much less toxic than the wastes to be placed in the high-level repository. Ziler said the lower grade waste is "probably less toxic than monoxcides" now put into the air by internal combustion engines burning fossil fuels.

Ziler alluded to fears expressed by environmentalists and others that radioactive particles might get into the water supply by leaching through the soil or moving with the water in watersheds.

If that were to happen, he said, the radioactive material would be "so diluted that there would be no effect at all." But he said the law, which the Texas Legislature was three years in forming, "has fail-safe provisions...Everyone (each legislator) had done a great deal of homework...It requires a great deal of public participation."

OBVIOUSLY, not everyone agrees entirely with the agency.

June Naylor of Odessa has been an advocate of safe disposal of nuclear wastes.

"We feel that water is very precious," she said, "and (waste site) should be a planned site where ground water is not endangered."

Ms. Naylor also expressed apprehension that "some entrepreneur" after the site is closed "might try to go in and get it (petroleum)" and first strike radioactive material.

Midland environmentalist Midge Erskine said she is "really for it" — burial of low- and high-level radioactive waste — but in salt beds. "That's the safest temporary repository for low-level and even high-level (radioactive waste). It's going to be safe. Salt is a safe repository."

However, she said burying the waste, which the agency says would be contained in steel drums and "high-integrity containers," in clays and without benefit of salt beds or concrete-lead lining is "absolutely asinine, idiotic. You'd have to be crazy."

"Clay is not a proper liner," she maintained.

"If you just bury that stuff, it's just like a cesspool; that's no way to handle waste. If low-level is safe, why are they taking precautions?...That doesn't make sense if we are just going to bury it....

"If you're just going to put it in the ground, there's no safety; it's a time bomb."

She said an underground nuclear waste site in Russia exploded some years ago. "It wiped out an entire area."

Jacobi said that explosion, "if it did occur," probably was caused by "chemical byproducts" and not by nuclear waste.

At the Texas site, chemicals would be solidified in concrete, he said. Other materials, such as papers, garments, gloves and tools, would be in 55-gallons drums.

Most of the wastes would have extremely short half-lives; other wastes, such as isotopes, would have half-lives of 35 years, which, based on a factor of 10, means in 350 years the radioactivity would be into the "background" — as it naturally occurs and virtually dead.

Waste-site workers, who would be wearing ordinary industrial gear, would be exposed to less radiation than an X-ray technician or a radiologist, Jacobi claims.

Jacobi said the dangers of above-ground storage are more hazardous than burying the waste. Natural disasters, such as floods, tornadoes, other high winds, and lightning could plague the containers. In addition, there's the threat of vandalism and sabotage.

Jacobi said the Authority needs to mount an "intensive public-education program" accurately to inform the people about low-level radiation, its safe handling and to expose misconceptions. "People don't know what's going on," he said, "and because they don't know what's going on, they fear it."

"No one is going to be exposed," Jacobi said. "We are going to confine these materials in the repository site. No one will be injured. There will be no exposure, no radiation sickness. It's my 100 percent, absolute, personal guarantee....

"We've got to put it somewhere."

'Comfortable' wins achieved

Newman and Reed, whose children participate in extracurricular activities, both indicated that implementation of new state regulations will be the biggest challenge in the year ahead. Changes in curriculum, graduation requirements and participation in extracurricular activities will have a big impact on Midland schools, the men indicated.

"Everything they (the Select Committee on Public Education and the State Board of Education) are doing is not all bad," Newman said. "But it's going to have a great impact, and implementation is going to be the key.... That's going to be a big challenge."

But although Newman strongly believes in extracurricular programs, he said they are still a secondary consideration. "We have got to upgrade standards. We tend to lose sight of our objectives. Academics must come first."

Reed said an important goal for him is maintaining consistency and equality in Midland schools. "I guess I have in the back of my mind an idea of assuring that all of the schools are basically all operating on the same level," he said. "I really am firmly committed to equal opportunities for all our children."

Newman and Reed will serve three-year terms and receive no pay for the job. They join board members Bill Jackson, Parker Humes, Joe Golding, Ron Britton and Joyce Sherrod.

The board will have a special meeting at 4 p.m. Monday to canvass the results of the election and the new members will be sworn in at Tuesday's 1:30 p.m. board meeting.

MC's board will remain stable

From Staff Reports

Three unopposed incumbents were re-elected Saturday to serve another six-year term on the Midland Junior College District Board of Trustees.

Board President Kenneth Peeler, in Place 9, received 6,634 votes in the municipal election. Jack Huff, in Place 7, got 6,738 and Ralph Way, Place 8, received 6,545.

Board members receive no stipend for their service.

Peeler, president of Midland 66 Oil Co., was named to the board in 1972 when MC was created as a separate junior college district.

Huff has served on the board for 14 years and is a past president and vice president. He is an independent oil operator.

Independent oil and gas producer Way was re-elected to his second six-year term on the board. The three men join trustees Reagan Legg, Hoyle McCright, Gloria Hinojosa, Bill Kleine, John Cooper and Fred Wright.

The board will canvass the votes at their regular meeting at 4 p.m. April 17.

Hotchkiss wins City Council seat

He hasn't decided how long he wants to stay on the council. "If I don't like it, I will move along at the end of two years. And, no, it's not a stepping stone to something else."

For the campaign, Hotchkiss estimated he had spent about $10,000. Banks put his figure at $3,400 to $3,500.

Banks said he was disappointed in the outcome "for all the good friends and people who supported me and voted for me. I have a lot of friends across the political spectrum. It was an experience for me. It was my first time in the political arena. I'm still interested in the city and the people."

Banks outpolled Hotchkiss in only one of the six precincts and absentee. That was in the combined city precinct 6, located at South Elementary School. It included precincts 201, 203, 301, 303, 304 and 305. The vote there had been 99 for Banks, 83 for Hotchkiss and 49 for Salazar.

Akins retains mayoral position

The first precinct reporting to the Elections Administration office at 707 W. Washington was No. 6, which was South Elementary School. It combined precincts 201, 203, 301, 302, 303, 304 and 305 and Lasater was its candidate with 182 votes compared to Akins' 115.

Lasater then took Precinct 1, which combined the south and east sides. The tally was 512 to Akins' 417. And in Precinct 4, the far west side, Lasater squeaked ahead with 761 to Akins' 752.

When Precinct 2 was called in, the mayor pushed out ahead with a count of 762 to Lasater's 463. Lee High precinct, number 5, continued the trend with 1,302 for Akins and 986 for Lasater. The final precinct to report was number 3, Fannin Elementary, which went for Akins 1,270 to 754 for Lasater.

The results, said Akins, "were pretty much as we expected in those precincts. Polls showed that Lasater never once was ahead in the two-month campaign," he said.

"Hopefully," said Lasaster, "we've changed the face of Midland. I wouldn't live any other place."

Midland man, his uncle killed in collision; Another man injured

From Staff Reports

A local man remained in stable condition at Midland Memorial Hospital Saturday night following a two-vehicle accident which killed a Midland city employee and his uncle Friday night.

Cipriano Albarado, 32, of 808 N. Main St., was listed in stable condition with a pelvic fracture, according to the MMH house supervisor.

Albarado was a passenger in a 1975 Ford pickup driven by Salvador Vargas Riojas, 51, of 200 E. Hamby. Riojas, an employee of the Midland Water and Sewer Department for the past 16 years, was pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry about an hour after the 8:45 p.m. accident. Geronimo Nino, 61, of 306 S. Mississippi, also a passenger in the vehicle, died at 10:40 p.m. at MMH.

According to a Department of Public Safety spokesperson, Riojas' pickup collided with a 1977 Mack truck, driven by Big Spring resident Antonio T. "Jose" Moran, 20, about 1.1 miles east of Midland at the intersection of State Highway 158 and East County Road 120.

Moran was pulling onto State Highway 158 from the county road when his vehicle "stalled across the traffic lane due to failure of the brake system," and collided with Riojas' eastbound pickup, according to DPS reports.

Moran was treated for shoulder injuries at MMH and released Friday night.

Services for Riojas and his uncle, a foreman with Midland Plastic Pipe, are pending at Thomas Funeral Home.

Odessans vote for change, make Minor mayor

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — His name may be Minor but he scored a major victory Saturday night, defeating Odessa's two-term mayor.

John Minor, 32, was the talk of the town following his upset of Mayor Bob Bryant, 52, as both candidates agreed the result showed voters wanted a change in the city's leadership.

Minor's 110-vote decision over the longtime southsider ends eight years with Bryant in city government, either as a councilman or mayor.

"People are just disenchanted," said a visibly upset Bryant minutes after the final totals were announced. Pointing to the rollback election results as an indicator of public opinion, he suggested voters decided "Let's just throw all of these people out and start over."

"The people of Odessa are ready for a change," said a jubilant Minor. "They want to see the government back in the hands of the people."

"We intend to do something about city government," said the victorious challenger who must now adjust to presiding over a city council which voted to terminate him in November as municipal court administrator.

Minor was dropped by the city following a struggle over control of the warrants division, which was transferred from the municipal courts to the police department. An investigation followed involving the district attorney's office and FBI which indentified no illegal activities. One warrant officer remains under investigation by the FBI.

Before his firing, Minor had issued complaints that led to the arrest of City Manager John Harrison and Fiscal Services Manager John Muser, who he may be looking to for help in cutting the "bureaucratic fat" he has criticized in the government's structure.

Another investigation, this recently the concern of a Midland federal grand jury, involves the alleged arson of the O'Michael Building, then partially owned by the incumbent. Bryant — along with a string of other public officials — was called to testify before the grand jury.

No indictments have been handed down on the burning of the building, now known as the Jackson Center, but the investigation dealt with the fire's possible connection to a recently failed bond election that would have financed a new civic center site.

Bryant called the grand jury meeting again so close to the election "dirty politics". While discounting its role in his loss, the incumbent said "Things like this will hurt your credibility."

In other races, District 1 Councilman Thomas Perkins squeezed by in his re-election bid, beating challenger David Narbaez by 8 votes. David Godoy — who has changed his name since facing Perkins in the 1982 race for the spot — still came out a loser despite his new name, managing only 149 votes Saturday.

Attorney Jim Nelson soundly defeated his three opponents running for the Place 6 spot left open by Shirley Huffaker — receiving 2,934 more votes than the nearest challenger.

— Mayor:
— Bob E. Bryant 4,021.
— John B. Minor 4,131.
—City Council District 1:
— Thomas G. Perkins 715.
— David R. Narbaez 707.
— David L. Godoy 149.

Recount planned for one Lamesa race

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Three candidates for two at-large seats were separated by only one vote in the Lamesa Independent School District election Saturday.

Cora Brown had 523 votes and incumbents Ronnie Culp and Jerry Harris finished with 522 each, but a re-count is scheduled for Tuesday. If the results hold up, Culp and Harris will meet in a run-off for the second seat. Other candidates in the race were Nan Chaplin (390), James E. Shook (240) and Thurman Raines (42).

The race for District B for the Lamesa City Council was also tight, with Ray Brewer (151 votes) and Henry C. Johnson (132) forced into a run-off. Willie Hill with 75 votes and Huey J. Harris with 34 finished farther back. The District A contest was no contest at all, though - Terry Adcock overwhelmed Aaron Beck, 429 to 94., while Bobby G. Gonzales (248) defeated Reinhard J. McKinney (179) and Dorothy Miller (38) for District C.

In other area races, Enrique Sanchez won the Big Spring District One city council seat with 425 votes to 94 for Ricardo Beltran and 30 for John M. Laro Jr. In District Two, Harold Hall finished first with 345 votes, but faces a run-off with Danny Heckler, who received 184 votes. The 151 votes won by Michael Russell and the 106 won by Bob C. Smith kept Hall from winning a majority of the total.

In the Big Spring Independent School District races, Billy Pineda (299 votes) defeated Linda Arsiaga (255) for the District One seat. Incumbent Dwayne Fraser was unopposed for the District Three seat.

Duane Ratliff scored a 2-to-1 victory over Kennedy Young Jr. in the race for the Andrews Position Two city council seat, winning 408 votes to Young's 200. Incumbent John C. Parish was unopposed for Position Four.

Incumbent Lloyd Willis was not as fortunate in the Andrews Independent School District election, losing his Position Six seat to Susan Langley, 541 votes to 370. His fellow incumbent Marlow Summitt faired better, defeating Mary Aikey 598 to 317.

In Stanton, Mayor Danny Fryer was re-elected without opposition with 100 votes. Incumbent city councilmen Howard Jenkins (109 votes) and Ronnie Christian (88) were also re-elected, but incumbent Bill Rees was edged out for the third at-large seat by challenger Steve Garlington, who had 66 votes to Rees' 64.

In the Stanton Independent School District, Jeanene Wheeler and Chuck Elmore were unopposed.

Rankin Mayor Allen Moore defeated challenger Phillip West 234-129, and Alderman Olivia E. Clanton kept her seat by beating Kathryn Reynon 195 to 52, but the other incumbent, M.O. Price, lost his council seat to Joy Kitchens, 219 to 163.

Ray Barrett Jr. (228 votes), Mike Ratliff (220) and John F. Watson (215) won the three at-large seats for the Rankin Independent School District. The other candidates were Tim Campbell (210), Al Leck (190), George W. Poage Jr. (180) and Terri Day (95).

McCamey Independent School District incumbent Charles Anglin won 190 votes to capture one of the two at-large seats, but incumbent Melvin Gryder finished fourth in the balloting with 144. Gary Edmiston took the second seat with 163 votes, and Tommy Stephens was third with 160.

Incumbent Terry Schul (203 votes) took one of three at-large seats on the Crane City Council, and newcomers Dock Rogers Jr. (174) and Manuel Cadina Jr. (147) won the other two. Bill Kass (126) and Jesse Silvas (64) were the other candidates in that race.

Crane Independent School Board members Bill Harkins and Bennie Harrison were unopposed for re-election.

Two at-large seats were up for grabs in the Garden City Independent School District race. Incumbent Eugene Hirt reclaimed one seat with 126 votes, and the other went to Stewart Dalton with 114. Diane Melton (95), Wayne Montgomery (87), Kathy Kohles (51) and Eugene Jost (49) were also running.

In the Klondike Independent School District, the three at-large seats were claimed by James M. "Buddy" Davis with 147 votes, Barrell Jensen with 126 and Sharon Brooks with 119. Alton Barkowsky (116), Larry Joe Cozark (110), Teresa Estes (92), Jay DeFee (89) and Margie Archer (31) were other candidates for the seats.

In the Grady Independent School District, Buddy Stewart (127 votes), Ricky Mims (117) and James Billingsley (90) defeated seven other candidates for the three available board seats.

Hospital district board candidates unchallenged

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writers

Pat Estes and Tevis Herd, unopposed candidates seeking re-election to the Midland County Hospital District Board of Directors, were placed back on the board by Midland voters in Saturday's municipal election.

Mrs. Estes, who has served as secretary since she was appointed to the board in 1979, received 5,782 votes, while Herd, president for the past year, received 6,001 votes Saturday.

A member of the Midland Memorial Foundation Board of Trustees for eight years before being elected as a director in 1982, Herd pointed to the completion of a $15 million 77-bed expansion at Midland Memorial Hospital as a top goal of directors. Ground-breaking ceremonies for the project, financed with $19.8 million in revenue bonds, are scheduled for 10:30 a.m. April 17 at MMH.

Cost efficiency in running the hospital district, under pressure with federally-imposed Medicare guidelines that went into effect in October, was another area the two directors emphasized in importance.

Some of the new regulations have caused a decline in the number of patients and treatments at the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Center. Directors and trustees have pointed to a more aggressive marketing campaign as one way of leading the center out of its slump.

Mrs. Estes, who was elected as a director in 1980 and 1982, and Herd re-join three others on the board. Directors are responsible for funneling taxpayer dollars into financing indigent health costs and retiring the debt on major construction and equipment projects. Others on the board, all of whom serve two-year terms, include Frank K. Cahoon, Wanda Mohr and Dr. Walter S. Parks Jr.

Directors will meet in a special session at 1 p.m. Monday to canvass election votes. Also, the bid for the construction of the 77-bed expansion will be awarded and directors will consider engaging a civil engineer for the chemical dependency facility site.

GISD incumbent wins by a nose

From Staff Reports

Incumbent Charles Gardner narrowly squeaked by challenger Archie Blackwell for Place 5 on the Greenwood Independent School District Board of Trustees. Saturday was the second time Gardner won by a two-vote margin.

"I didn't have any idea it would be that close," he said.

Blackwell plans to call for a recount. "I feel sure it'll come out just like it's shown, but with just a two-vote margin I really think we need a recount."

Unopposed incumbents James Brooks and Ted Benton were also re-elected to their unpaid positions.

The final count was 137 votes cast for Gardner and 135 for Blackwell. Gardner held a 135-134 lead before absentee ballots were counted.

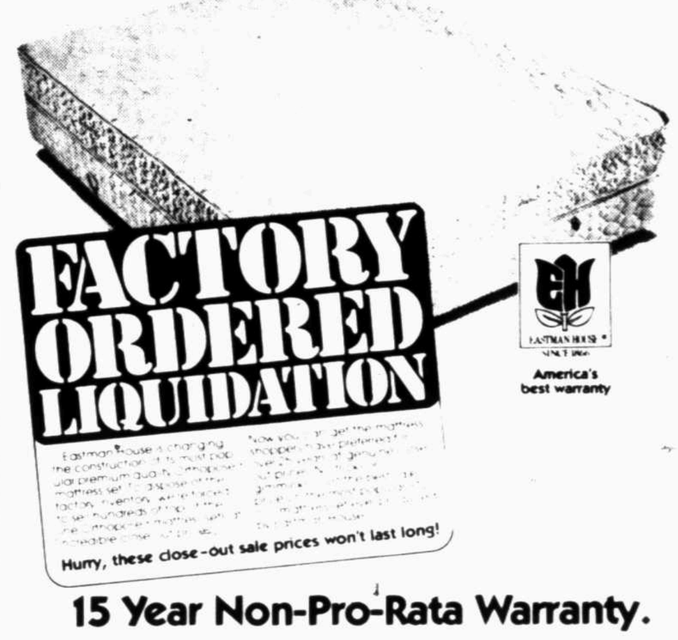

Brooks received 222 votes and Benton 216.

When Gardner was elected to his first term three years ago he beat Owen Mobley by two votes.

Although another trustee, Ted Pearce, has not turned in a resignation, he said he will be moving from Greenwood this summer. Another election is expected to be called after he resigns in May or June. Blackwell said he was undecided about running for that position.

The board — also consisting of Patsy Herrington, J.D. Hanson and John Underwood — plans to canvass the votes at 8 p.m. Monday.

Geter may have been in Dallas on day of crime

DALLAS (AP) — Prosecutors say a recently discovered store receipt casts doubt on Lenell Geter's alibi the day of a robbery that resulted in a life prison sentence, the Dallas Times Herald reported Saturday.

But Geter says the receipt is in error and other evidence discovered during an investigation of the black engineer's case has convinced several prosecutors that Geter was innocent, the Times Herald quoted informed sources as saying.

Dallas County prosecutors, who found the receipt at a north Dallas stereo store, said the evidence contradicts Geter's testimony that he never left his job at E-Systems in Greenville on the day of the robbery in suburban Dallas.

Geter, who is free after following the dismissal of all charges against him last month, said he believes the date on the receipt is wrong.

The receipt is dated Aug. 23, 1982, the same day a fried chicken restaurant was robbed in Balch Springs, southeast of Dallas and 50 miles west of Greenville.

Geter was convicted in October 1982 and served 477 days of his life sentence until news reports raised doubts about his case and prosecutors agreed last December to a new trial.

The case was dismissed last month when District Attorney Henry Wade said prosecutors had learned of an ex-convict from Houston they now think committed the $615 robbery.

In a telephone interview with the Times Herald, Geter said he had been in the store to make layaway payments on a stereo, but added, "I would not think it was on a Monday. If I was to go to Dallas, it would be on a weekend."

If Geter had driven to Dallas that day, it could help explain several inconsistencies in the case, the newspaper quoted its sources as saying. For example, the reason Geter failed a May 1983 polygraph exam may be that he was being deceptive about his whereabouts, not about the robbery, the sources said.

A trip to Dallas also could explain why several of Geter's co-workers at E-Systems were unsure about his whereabouts during the early afternoon hours of Aug. 23, the sources said.

The receipt indicated that $5 was "paid on layaway" in Geter's name and is dated Aug. 23.

Ben Holloway, a store employee who initialed the receipt, said the chances of his writing the wrong date on the receipt were "slim to none" since he made a habit of checking the date before writing a ticket.

Prosecutors learned of the stereo receipt early this year by visiting the store after seeing Geter had written a check as a down payment for the stereo in July 1982, the newspaper reported.

An examination of Geter's bank records also showed he wrote three checks for less than $20 each in Greenville only a few hours after the robbery, the sources said. Some prosecutors contended that Geter would not have bothered writing small checks if he had $615 in cash, the Times Herald reported.

The sources said prosecutors kept the receipt secret in case they needed it to contradict Geter's anticipated alibi that he was at work the day of the robbery.

A source in the district attorney's office told the Times Herald that some prosecutors have speculated that Geter, even though innocent, denied being at the stereo store for two reasons — it would place him too close to Balch Springs and it would contradict testimony from his co-workers, who said he was absent from his desk only a short period on the day of the robbery.

Geter called the prosecutors' theory "ludicrous ... ridiculous."

Murdered student had been asked to model

BEAUMONT (AP) — Two days before she was murdered, a Lamar University nursing student told her husband that a well-dressed bearded man asked her to model for some magazine photographs.

John David Walden said his 24-year-old wife, Terry, said a man told her he was a professional photographer who needed models for a magazine assignment and tried to get her to look at a briefcase full of photographs.

Mrs. Walden told him she wasn't interested but "he just kept following her," Walden said.

"She said that when she got to her car, she told him, 'You must be some kind of pervert or something,'" said Walden, 28, and a chemical plant worker. "Just then she saw some of her friends and waved to them, and when she turned around the man was already walking away."

Walden said he is convinced the man who approached his wife was Christopher Bernard Wilder, an Austrailian race car driver charged in the March 20 kidnapping of a Florida State University student and suspected in the abduction and murders of seven other women in Florida, Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado and Nevada.

Wilder, 39, has been placed on the FBI's 10 Most Wanted list.

Mrs. Walden was reported missing March 24 after she failed to pick up her 4-year-old daughter from a day care center. Her body was found two days later in a canal west of Beaumont. She had been stabbed several times, and her hands and feet were bound.

Her rust-colored 1981 Mercury Cougar still is missing, and authorities believe Wilder might be driving it.

Walden said he doesn't believe his wife would have voluntarily gone anywhere with Wilder because "she was a very careful person ... suspicious of anything that had to do with easy money, like modeling."

But he admitted his wife might not been as wary of strangers as she should have been.

Politicians work to cut away $200 billion deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — After months of loud complaints about federal budget deficits, politicians are rolling up their sleeves and seeing what they can do to wash away some of the $200 billion worth of red ink.

With an eye on the jittery financial markets and an ear tuned to worried constituents, Congress and the Reagan administration are working with unanticipated speed to fashion a range of deficit-cutting proposals.

Even so, some analysts are pessimistic any concrete action will be taken this year because of differences over where to make the trims. President Reagan does not want a smaller defense budget or tax hikes unaccompanied by an equal amount of spending cuts. Democrats believe domestic spending already has been sliced enough and are looking at military accounts for savings.

The House on Thursday approved a Democratic "pay-as-you-go" package that would trim the deficits by $182 billion over three years. This week, the Republican-led Senate will try to take initial steps toward molding its own plan before taking a 10-day Easter recess.

A final compromise on a deficit-slimming program — if it comes — could still be a month or more off. Without any action, analysts say, the red ink could range anywhere from $500 billion to more than $700 billion over the three years.

Officials inside and outside government offer a variety of reasons for the quicker pace of work this year than last, ranging from rising interest rates and complaining constituents to a more conciliatory Reagan.

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, the president's point man on economic issues, said that last year, the administration was worried steps to raise taxes to pare the deficit would hurt the fledgling economic recovery.

With the expansion continuing at a solid pace this year, Regan said in a recent interview; "We are saying, 'Time for a down payment (to reduce the deficit), we can't go on this way ... Let's start paying for some of this stuff.'"

Los Angeles replaces Chicago

WASHINGTON (AP) — New York is still No. 1, but Los Angeles — the western anchor of the fast-growing Sun Belt — has replaced Chicago as the nation's second largest city, the Census Bureau reported Saturday.

Chicago, which has been the country's "second city" since 1890, lost population from 1980 to 1982 and slipped to No. 3.

Los Angeles grew by 1.8 percent during the same period to overtake Chicago. Houston, with the fastest growing population of any major city, displaced Philadelphia for fourth place.

The bureau put the population of New York City at 7.086 million, up a slight 0.2 percent from the 1980 census. Los Angeles' was estimated at 3.022 million, compared with Chicago's 2.997 million.

The new figures are the bureau's first update of city population rankings since the 1980 census and reflect population estimates as of July 1, 1982. While the bureau issues state and county population estimates each year, it revises city population estimates only every two years.

IN FEBRUARY, the bureau put the total U.S. population at 234 million. This was a 3.3 percent increase from 1980 to 1983, with half of the growth coming in California, Texas and Florida.

The new city rankings also reflect the population boom in the Sun Belt, with Texas for the first time placing three cities in the top 10 and several large Northern cities showing population declines.

Detroit suffered the biggest population loss, a 5.3 percent decline, but its ranking remained unchanged at sixth place. Following Detroit were Dallas, San Diego and Phoenix, Ariz.

San Antonio was the only new city in the top 10, replacing Baltimore, which fell from No. 10 to No. 12 following a 1.6 percent population decline.

The population estimates are based on information the bureau gathers concerning births and deaths and such things as federal tax data to estimate net internal migration.

WHILE THE BUREAU released information only on the top 25 cities, it makes population estimates for 39,000 cities and towns. That information was mailed to local officials on a confidential basis last month.

The agency will listen to challenges to the estimates and if it finds merit will make revisions. But Fred Cavanaugh, a Census Bureau official, said thjat in the past, changes have been made in less than 0.5 percent of the original estimates.

Following in order are the top 25 cities, their 1982 population, percent change from 1980, the 1980 population and their 1980 rankings:

1. New York City, 7,086,096, up 0.2 percent from 7,071,639, No. 1.
2. Los Angeles, 3,022,247, up 1.8 percent from 2,968,579, No. 3.
3. Chicago, 2,997,155, down 0.2 percent from 3,005,072. No. 2.
4. Houston, 1,725,617, up 8.2 percent from 1,595,138, No. 5.

Condor egg begins to hatch

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A "pip" on its shell signaled the start of hatching for a California condor embryo at the San Diego Zoo, and birdkeepers said Saturday they were encouraged by movement from another embryo once feared dead in its egg.

"A pip is the first intrusion that an embryo makes on its shell," zoo spokesman Jeff Jouett said Saturday morning. "It hasn't quite chipped away (a hole) yet — in this case it looks like there's a tent on the surface" of the egg.

Egg No. 1 pipped its pale blue shell about 6:30 p.m. Friday.

Hotel-casinos full, despite Vegas strike

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Teamsters refused to cross striking hotel workers' picket lines Saturday to deliver food or pick up trash, but hotel-casinos reported they were serving thousands of tourists despite the six-day-old walkout by 17,000 workers.

"We're not having any problems. Contingency plans were made long ago to take care of these things," said Vince Helm, executive director of the Nevada Resort Association.

"They're getting rid of it (trash) one way or another," said Von Eisinger, head of Teamsters Local 631, whose members normally pick up refuse at resorts on the Las Vegas gambling strip. "I'm not going behind the lines to find out how."

The contingency plans included stockpiling food and using management personnel for such tasks as hauling trash to keep the gaming mecca running during the strike by culinary workers, bartenders, musicians and stagehands, Helm said.

ALTHOUGH DRIVERS for a second Teamsters local refused to deliver food, most hotels stocked enough non-perishables for two months, and management personnel drove trucks of fresh food to the hotels.

Meanwhile, police on Saturday enforced a court order limiting pickets. The restraining order helped ease what had been a volatile situation that led to clashes between strikers and security guards at some major hotels earlier this week, said Metropolitan Police Lt. Jim Chaney.

The order, issued Thursday, also prohibits the security guards from harassing pickets.

"I think the order was as much a relief to the strikers as everyone else," Chaney said.

About 250 strikers marching outside the MGM Grand Hotel drew police Saturday, but Chaney said picket line captains heeded requests to send some strikers home.

"We were ready to move in and do what was necessary," he said. "But they were very cooperative as most of the strikers have been the past few days."

SCATTERED arrrests for violating the court order pushed to 156 the arrest count by Saturday.

Tourists, who have found most showrooms dark since the strike began, got a show of another kind Friday evening when a female striker removed her clothes while standing on a traffic island in the center of the Las Vegas Strip.

"She was mad at police and just took her clothes off, threw them down and paraded around," said Chaney. The woman was arrested for indecent exposure, he said.

Inside, most hotels served buffet style meals as they worked to reopen restaurants closed by the strike. Casinos, whose floor workers are mostly non-union, have stayed open during the strike.

With previously booked conventions bringing thousands of tourists to town, most major hotels reported strong occupancy rates and increasing casino business.

"WE'RE RIGHT AT 100 percent occupancy this weekend compared to 85-90 percent during the week," said Bill Bray, a spokesman for the MGM Grand Hotel. "The casino, which didn't look very busy earlier in the week, looked as busy as ever last night and this morning."

But a spokesman for the Culinary Union, which represents about 15,000 of the 17,000 striking workers, said hotels were "hallucinating" in claiming full occupancy. Union studies showed business off up to 60 percent at some resorts, said spokesman Dan Swinton.

Policeman fakes cancer

MINEOLA, N.Y. (AP) — A retired police officer has been accused of falsely testifying that he was dying of cancer in order to gain sympathy from judges during two court proceedings.

Benson Huggard, 44, of Lynbrook, was arrested Friday and charged with perjury, said Nassau District Attorney Denis Dillon.

The first incident occured in January, when Huggard, a former Nassau County police officer and long-distance swimmer, was arrested and charged with beating his estranged wife, Nancy.

During a hearing in that case, Dillon said Huggard produced a letter, purportedly from Dr. Willet Whitmore of Memorial Sloane-Kettering Cancer Center, stating that Huggard was undergoing cancer treatment.

The letter said Hubbard had cancer of the prostrate and Hodgkin's disease. Whitmore heard about the incident and told authorities he did not know Hubbard, Dillon said.

The second incident occurred when during divorce proceedings, Huggard showed another judge a letter that said he was terminally ill, Dillon said.

He became well known in the New York City area after swimming the English Channel four times in the 1970s. He also swam around Manhattan several times and from Florida to the Bahamas.

Unionized workers picket brass company

ANSONIA, Conn. (AP) — Violence flared briefly with workers throwing rocks and scuffling with police early Saturday when 450 unionized workers went on strike against American Brass Co.

No arrests were made during the flare-up outside the plant's main gate in downtown Ansonia, but one worker was arrested in another incident later in the day.

The plant is one of five operated across the country by American Brass, a division of the Los Angeles-based Atlantic Richfield Co. United Steelworkers union officials said about 1,900 workers are participating in the strike at Ansonia, Waterbury, Buffalo, N.Y., Kenosha, Wis., and Paramount, Calif.

Negotiations being held at Tucson, Ariz., broke off Saturday morning with no new talks scheduled, union officials said.

A telephone operator at the Ansonia plant said company officials couldn't be reached for comment.

Police declined to comment on the early morning violence, but union officials say the trouble began when Police Chief James J. McGrath "struck down" worker John Pasqualucci.

"Their emotions were at a higher level than ours and we were the ones who just went on strike," John Didato said of the police.

Didato, secretary of United Steel Workers Local 6445, was among a handful of strikers gathered Saturday afternoon at the local's headquarters.

"After the chief threw the guy to the ground, they started pushing us back" with their nightsticks, Didato said. "That's when all hell broke loose."

At issue are the company's demands that workers accept a freeze in cost of living benefits and receive no wage hike. They make about $8 an hour, said Didato. The workers also said the company wants them to pay a greater share of health insurance costs and is seeking mandatory overtime.

"That's slavery," Didato said. "That's going back to the 1800s."

The workers at the Ansonia plant will meet Sunday to vote on the company's proposals.

Republican congressman has decided to seek eighth term

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Rep. George Hansen, convicted of failing to report $333,978 in personal loans and other financial dealings on disclosure statments, says he has decided to seek an eighth term because of overwhelming support from voters.

The conservative Republican said 85 percent of the estimated 300 people who turned out for a public meeting in Pocatello on Thursday night urged him to run, based on a poll conducted at the session.

Hansen said he expects his campaign opponents will make an issue of the conviction.

Hansen, 53, plans to hold a series of news conference across southern Idaho next week to formally kick off his campaign, and at the same time file the required candidacy petitions with the secretary of state. The deadline for the May 22 primary is next Friday.

Flagpoles banned

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Parochial schools in the Archdiocese of Philadelphia have been told to remove free-standing flagpoles after a study prompted by the accidental deaths of two pupils.

An engineering study of 50 flagpoles on archdiocesan property found that about half were potential safety hazards, the Rev. John Sibel, a spokesman for the archdiocese, said Friday. He said the archdiocese insurance committee recommended poles at all 350 institutions, including churches, schools and hospitals, be removed.

Two children were killed and five were injured on Dec. 7 when wind toppled a steel flagpole onto the playground of St. Barnabas Roman Catholic School.

Men await repair

MIAMI (AP) — Two Miami men whose disabled boat strayed into Cuba's waters are waiting for their vessel to be repaired before returning home, but otherwise are "free to come and go," the wife of one of the men says.

Peggy Tillinger said the State Department told her Friday that her husband Wendell and his friend Bob Shepard had washed up in their disabled 38-foot sailboat on the northeast coast of Cuba last Sunday.

"They can leave whenever they want to," Mrs. Tillinger said. "I'm sure they won't leave without the boat."

The men had radioed that their ketch had developed engine problems and their navigation equipment was malfunctioning.

Fifty-eight defrauded

CHICAGO (AP) — Fifty-eight people were defrauded of more than $350,000 by a man who falsely promised them interest-free loans from Moslem leaders in the Middle East, federal prosecutors say.

U.S. Atttorney Dan K. Webb announced indictments Friday against Asmar Abdul-Hamid, 41, also known as Paul Kelly and Michael Fields.

Abdul-Hamid, formerly of suburban Lansing, is named in 20 fraud and related counts alleging he falsely claimed he had sources whose Islamic faith prohibited charging interest for loans. In return for arranging the loans totaling $35.5 million, the indictment said, he charged a 1 percent loan application fee.

Company files suit

CINCINNATI (AP) — Procter & Gamble Co. is suing to force the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services to release data from its investigation of toxic shock syndrome, which was linked to P&G's Rely tampons.

The company filed suit Friday saying it needs the documents as part of its defense of pending damage suits. "We believe the information we seek will show that the manufacturers of the product have acted responsibly," said P&G spokeswoman Sydney McHugh.

A study by the federal Centers for Disease Control found that 71 percent of women who developed toxic shock in July and August 1980 had used Rely tampons. P&G stopped selling Rely in September 1980.

Priest wants 'complex'

CROMWELL, Conn. (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest wants to build a $10 million "peace complex" at the site of an abandoned Nike missile command site.

"After deep reflection on the former nature of the site — part of the government's defense system against war — I thought it appropriate that it now be dedicated to the Prince of Peace," the Rev. Edward Doherty said Friday.

His plans for the 8.7-acre site call for a library and an educational center, along with housing for the elderly and possibly a convalescent home.

Mondale wins Wisconsin caucus

AP Laserphoto

he Rev. Jessie Jackson raises the hand of his Louisiana cam-gn chairman Ernst Dutch Morial, who also happens to be the yor of New Orleans, in the Louisiana Superdome Friday night. kson addressed the First National Assembly of Black Church anizations as their keynote speaker.

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Walter F. Mondale, reversing the results of a non-binding primary earlier in the week, trounced Sen. Gary Hart in Wisconsin's Democratic Party caucuses Saturday and captured another large group of national delegates..

The former vice president was leading Hart almost 2-to-1 in the raw vote from the caucuses. The Rev. Jesse Jackson was a distant third.

In the primary, Hart got 46 percent of the vote, Mondale had 43 and Jackson 10, but that was strictly a beauty contest.

It was the caucuses that determined allocation of 78 of the 89 delegates Wisconsin will send to the Democratic National Convention in July.

With returns in from 114 of the 126 caucuses, the raw vote totals were:

Mondale 16,499 or 59 percent
Hart 8,563 or 31 percent
Jackson 2,293 or 8 percent
Uncommitted 550 or 2 percent

The caucuses chose delegates to congressional district meetings in May when national convention delegates will be chosen.

With 91 percent of those delegates chosen, Mondale had 60 percent, Hart 31 percent, Jackson 7 percent, and uncommitted 2 percent.

Party officials said it was impossible to say precisely what the breakdown would be in the national convention delegation, but Mondale clearly will have the largest single block.

National party rules contemplate that the percentage of local delegates selected in the first round of caucuses will be reflected all through the process to the final makeup of the national delegation.

That would suggest Mondale should get at least 47 delegates and Hart 24 and that they are likely to divide the other seven.

It was uncertain whether Jackson would get any delegates because of a requirement that a candidate get at least 15 percent of the votes in any one caucus district to win representation to the subsequent level.

It is because of a 5 percent difference in the threshold requirement for winning preliminary delegates at the first level and the 20 percent threshold for winning delegates at the congressional district level that the final delegate count could vary slightly from the projections suggested by Saturday's vote.

A native of neighboring Minnesota, Mondale had powerful held from organized labor, teachers and many of the state's leading politicians, including Gov. Anthony Earl.

Mondale's Wisconsin victory came four days after his big victory in the New York primary and only three days before the Pennsylvania primary.

Israelis bomb Lebanese building in retaliation

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli jets Saturday bombed a building in the central Lebanese town of Bhamdoun in retaliation for a terrorist rampage in Jerusalem, and Lebanese Moslem and Christian factions traded heavy artillery fire in Beirut.

President Amin Gemayel and Syrian President Hafez Assad arranged to meet in Damascus on Wednesday to try to speed up an end to the fighting, reports from the Syrian capital said.

The target of the Israeli air strike was a five-story wing of an abandoned hotel in Bhamdoun, on the Beirut-Damascus highway 14 miles southeast of the Lebanese capital. All planes returned safely from the dawn raid, the Israeli command in Tel Aviv said.

The command said the building was a base of the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine — a Palestinian group that claimed responsibility for the terrorist attack Monday in Jerusalem's Jewish sector, where 48 people were wounded by machine gun fire and grenade blasts on a busy street.

However, pro-Syrian Lebanese militiamen said that they controlled the building, and that there were no Palestinian guerrillas in the town.

They said there were no casualties in the bombing, carried out by three Israeli jets. The building's top three floors had collapsed.

The militiamen said the basement of the building, next to Bhamdoun's Carlton Hotel, was being used as an munitions depot for their group, the Syrian Social National Party.

The organization, founded in the early 1940s, advocates the unification of Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, pre-Israel Palestine, Iraq, Kuwait and Cyprus into a "greater Syria." It is allied with Syrian-backed Lebanese Druse and Shiite rebel forces.

A militia's commander said his group's weapons and ammunition were not damaged. "We did not suffer any casualties, none of us is wounded and we have not lost one single bullet," he said, asking that his name be withheld.

It was Israel's sixth air attack on Bhamdoun this year and took place on the Jewish Sabbath, an unusual move seen as an effort to surprise the guerrillas'.

Lebanese and Syrian sources said the scheduled talks between Amin and Assad would concentrate on ways to curb escalating hostilities in Beirut, including proposed buffer zones between Lebanon's factions and the formation of a national coalition government.

Radio stations in Beirut said the Lebanese army and Druse militia gunners were locked in heavy artillery and rocket duels around the mountaintop town of Souk el-Gharb, east of the capital.

Police said rival Christian and Moslem militias traded barrages of rocket-propelled grenades and gunfire across the "green line" between Christian east and Moslem west Beirut at mid-afternoon. It followed random overnight shelling that killed at least seven people and wounded 53.

Christian-controlled radio stations said 120-mm shells were hitting east Beirut neighborhoods and appealed to residents to stay in basements and bomb shelters for a third.

Later Saturday, the Christian "Lebanese Forces" militia issued a communique saying it would retaliate. As the announcement was made, shells could be heard crashing into west Beirut, and police said the mostly Shiite southern suburbs also were being shelled.

Women protest camp's destruction

LONDON (AP) — Hundreds of women blocked streets in central London Saturday to protest the destruction of their camp outside the NATO nuclear missile base at Greenham Common. Police made 31 arrests.

The camp had become a focus of protest against deployment of cruise missiles in Britain.

The women lay down in the streets, halting traffic, and had to be dragged away by officers. Those arrested were charged with obstruction, police said.

Bailiffs and hundreds of police evicted women Wednesday from six camps outside the nine-mile fence surrounding the U.S. Air Force base at Greenham Common, 50 miles west of London.

The Department of Transport ordered the evictions, claiming the camps interfered with a road-widening project. The camps were destroyed, but a day later about 30 women began erecting a new settlement in woods near the base's main gate.

Troops find poppy plantation

CIUDAD VICTORIA, Mexico (AP) — Mexican troops engaged in military maneuvers near the Texas border stumbled on a hidden poppy plantation and seized the largest quantity of the heroin-producing flowers found in Mexico in a decade, authorities said.

Heroin made from the poppies would have been destined for Texas cities and for shipment through the state to points north, authorities said.

The discovery confirms rumors of increased drug cultivation in the Mexican state of Tamaulipas which shares about 200 miles of border with Texas between Brownsville and Laredo, said Ken Miley, agent in charge of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration office in McAllen.

"The first we heard of poppies in Tamaulipas was two years ago," Miley said. "Since then we've been hearing of more and more fields..." there.

Mexican officials also seized laboratory equipment used for processing plants into heroin and 50 kilograms of poppy and marijuana seeds at the plantation known as El Roble, about 200 miles south of McAllen, according to a report in the newspaper, El Mercurio.

More than 75 acres of marijuana and 40 acres of poppies were discovered March 31 by Mexican troops engaged in exercises in the agricultural valley near the Sierra Madre mountain village of Llera, according to Gen. Alfredo Moran Acevedo.

Soldiers found lush citrus trees camouflaging bushy, 4-foot high marijuana plants and carpets of pastel poppie flowers filling space between the grapefruit groves.

Authorities said the plants were worth at least $1.1 million, but did not estimate the value of the orchards, irrigation system, fertilizer, tractors or other farm equipment seized at the site.

Forty workers who hadstarted harvesting the fields fled before troops arrived, according to other workers at the Ejido Emiliano Zapata, a collective farm adjacent to the drug plantation.

No arrests had been made as of Friday, according to authorities.

About 35 soldiers toting automatic weapons have been assigned to the plantation to keep visitors away.

The soldiers are also harvesting and burning the plants in hip-high stacks, an operation that is expected to take two weeks, said Capt. Marcelino Bravo, who is supervising destruction of the fields. He said 70 tons of marijuana were burned Friday.

Authorities are searching for the owner of the property, believed to be from the state of Sinaloa, a major drug-producing area, said Benito Montoto Villarreal, editor of El Mercurio.

Montoto said the seizure signals the beginning of a crackdown on increased drug cultivation in Tamaulipas.

Mexico's secretary of defense has sent military officials instructions to intensify narcotics investigations in Tamaulipas, said Acevedo.

Montoto said a crackdown on growers in notorious marijuana-producing states like Sinoloa and Oaxaca has prompted drug growers to look for safer soil.

DEA's Miley agreed. "You stomp it out in Sinoloa and it comes out in Tamaulipas or Nuevo Leon," he said.

The land and climate in the mountains of Tamaulipas resembles that of Sinoloa, Montoto said. And, he said, rural Tamaulipas has the added attraction of being isolated from city-based law enforcement agencies and close to the border making it convenient for smugglers.

"I feel the increase in drug production here is going to continue unless authorities take stronger measures," he said.

Authorities said the owner of El Roble may own as many as five other large plantations in Tamaulipas and adjacent states.

And they are all likely to be just as secluded. The long trip on a rutted, dirt road from the highway to El Roble passes mud and thatch huts, ox-drawn plows, fields of head-high corn and crosses a clear, mountain creek impassable at certain times of the year.

Youths vaccinated against meningitis

RANDERS, Denmark (AP) — Health officials prepared Denmark's first mass vaccination against meningitis Saturday after more than 25 youths contracted the disease and one died in this town of 60,000 people.

The government Health Agency ordered the vaccination of 14,000 young people — everyone from two to 19 years old — and began flying in emergency supplies of vaccine from Finland and France, hoping to halt an outbreak that started late last year and is baffling medical experts unable to trace the source.

The Health Agency's order came after four new cases of meningitis were registered over the past week. Also, nearly 40 percent of the area's youths were examined and found to carry meningococci, the bacteria causing meningitis, an inflammation of the membrane around the brain and spinal cord.

Japanese leader in U.S.

TOKYO (AP) — The head of the Japan Socialist Party, the nation's top opposition party and a strong opponent of U.S.-Japan security ties, went to the United States on Saturday on a fact-finding, fence-mending tour.

During the 10-day visit, the seven-member delegation led by Chairman Masashi Ishibashi will meet Secretary of State George Shultz and other government and business leaders to exchange what often have been widely divergent views.

Ishibashi also hopes to meet Vice President George Bush, National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane and U.S. Trade Representative William Brock for talks on defense, nuclear disarmament, trade and the situation in Korea.

Schools heart of dispute

VALLETTA, Malta (AP) — Thousands of Maltese rallied in a peaceful protest against the government's threat to take over Roman Catholic schools.

The government has threatened to take over the schools unless the Roman Catholic Church agrees to provide its secondary education free of charge when the next school year starts in September.

At the rally Friday night, Fenech Adami, a leader of the opposition Nationalist Party, stressed the parents' constitutional right to choose the education they want for their children. The government says both rich and poor students should have the education of their choice; the church says it doesn't charge tuition to those who can't pay it.

Political observers say the government demand is a maneuver to force church-run schools under state control.

Alleged killers seek post

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP) — Two men charged in the kidnap-killing of Indian diplomat Ravindra Mahtre plan to run for seats on the Birmingham City Council, officials said Saturday.

Mohammed Siddiqe and Janghir Akhter Miraza have declared their candidacies for wards which have high percentages of Asian-descended voters.

Both men are in Birmingham's Winson Green prison awaiting trial in connection with the abduction and killing in February of Mahtre, 43, an assistant commissioner at the Indian embassy.

U.S., Japan reach agreement on import quotas

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and Japan reached agreement Saturday on increasing the import quotas on sales of American beef and citrus products to Japan, ending a long-simmering dispute between the two allies.

The agreement was reached after nearly six hours of talks that culminated four day of negotiations between U.S. Trade Representative William Brock and Shinjiro Yamamura, the Japanese agriculture minister.

Yamamura had extended his visit here twice in an effort to settle the trade dispute.

While the amount of sales of the products to Japan is not substantial, the dispute had become symbolic of the trade problems between the two countries.

Brock, through a spokesman, expressed his pleasure with the agreement. "We've guaranteed our cattlemen a minimum of $300 million in new sales over the next four years to Japan," he said.

That would bring total U.S. beef sales to Japan to $800 million over the four years.

There was no immediate comment from the Japanese embassy here, but Yamamura was scheduled to hold a news conference later in the day.

David Demarest, Brock's spokesman, said Japan agreed to increase its quotas on high-quality U.S. beef by 6,900 metric tons a year for the next four years.

The import arrangement that expired last Saturday had allowed a yearly increase of 3,300 metric tons, which brought exports to 30,800 total tons in the last year of the agreement. A metric ton equals 2,204 pounds.

Under the new arrangement, the total imports by the last year of the agreement will be 58,400 tons.

"I'll take doubling exports any day of the week - especially to Japan," Brock said.

Agriculture Secretary John Block said he was "pleased that we have reached this accord with Japan," which he said is "good news to American farmers."

Roger Berglund, vice president of the National Cattlemen's Association, an umbrella group for beef cattle producers, said in Denver that the agreement "represents progress, but we're still disappointed that the amount will not be still larger, particularly the way we open our markets to the Japanese. We feel they should grant greater access. We certainly would have liked to see more."

The two sides also reached agreement on new quotas for oranges, to allow an increase of 11,000 tons per year for the next four years.

American producers had been permitted to ship a total of 82,000 tons of oranges in the last year of the old agreement.

ADJUSTABLE MORTGAGE LOANS

The adjustable mortgage has come into great popularity today, especially in the eyes of lenders who have found themselves holding old mortgage loans which were given at half of today's current rates. The principle is that mortgage renewal periods will arrive each 3 to 5 years and be adjusted up or down to reflect the current mortgage interest rate. Most buyers (as well as banks) assumed that there was no way but up as far as interest goes. However, it can work both ways and many who purchased a home with an adjustable mortgage have actually found that their rate has DROPPED rather than increased.

According to the latest ruling by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board (FHLBB), the regulations which apply to one-to-four family houses do not place any limit on interest rate changes.

Notice of change must be given to the borrower at least 30 to 45 days in advance and prepayment penalties are not allowed with adjustable mortgage loans.

Britain objects to rebels mining ports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Great Britain has informally registered an objection to the United States because rebels with CIA support are mining ports in Nicaragua, a British official said Saturday.

A Britash Embassy official said Great Britain has made no formal presentations to the administration, "we have made our objections clear in informal sessions.

"During the course of our regular contacts we have expressed our disapproval, as well as deploring the actions at the United Nations," the official said.

A British Foreign Office spokesman in London said Britain's Ambassador to the United Nations, Sir John Thomson, told the Security Council on Wednesday that Britain deplores the mining of Nicaraguan waters. "We deplore any threat to navigation whenever and wherever it occurs. We are in constant touch with the United States and the Americans are aware of our concerns," the spokesman said.

The mines are widely assumed to have been planted by anti-government Nicaraguans, who are receiving U.S. support through the CIA.

The mines have damaged at least seven ships in the past few weeks, including a Soviet oil tanker and a Japanese freighter, injuring crewmen of both nations.

On Friday and Saturday, newspaper and broadcast reports suggested that CIA employees helped the "contra" rebels lay the mines.

The New York Times in Saturday editions reported that Americans made and deployed the mines, but it was unclear whether Americans were overseeing an operation carried out by Central Americans or actually involved in planting mines.

In a letter released in Managua on Friday, French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson said the mining of Nicaraguan waters poses "serious problems of political ethics" because they are directed at a small country not at war.

Last Wednesday night, France joined 12 other members of the United Nations Security Council in supporting a Nicaraguan-sponsored resolution condemning the mining operation.

Israeli election unlikely to bring changes

By ARTHUR MAX

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and opposition leader Shimon Peres, both veterans of political battles, are entering a tough 100-day election campaign with their futures on the line.

For the Israeli public, however, there may be less at stake than the fierce tone of the election debate might indicate.

While there are policy differences between Shamir's Likud bloc and Peres' Labor Party, it is unlikely that either will radically change the direction of the economy or achieve a breakthrough toward peace with the Arabs.

And if, as expected, neither party wins a clear majority in the Knesset, whichever forms a new government will be hamstrung by the smaller parties it takes into a governing coalition. These fringe groups often hold the balance of power and can bring down the government on a major policy dispute.

After seven years of Likud government, mostly under former Prime Minister Menachem Begin, Labor senses a chance on July 23 to regain the seat of power that it held for Israel's first 29 years as an independent nation.

Polls give Labor a comfortable edge as the campaign begins. But Labor's hopes to unseat Likud have soared before, only to be crushed.

Labor is viewed as more accommodating toward the Arabs. But the demands of what Israelis define as national security leave even doves little maneuvering room.

Political analysts generally agree that the electorate has become progressively more hawkish, which works to Likud's advantage.

Labor is counting on the same public disaffection with government that led to its own downfall in 1977. Likud's weakness is the flagging economy and rampaging inflation of more than 200 percent a year.

The issue on which policy differences are most clearly defined is the West Bank, which Israel captured from Jordan in 1967.

Shamir adheres to the Likud ideology that claims all of ancient Eretz Israel, including the West Bank, belongs to the Jewish state by birthright and by right of strategic necessity.

Likud rejects President Reagan's proposal for Palestinian autonomy on the West Bank in association with Jordan. It insists that discussion of the Palestinian problem be held under the umbrella of the Camp David accords signed by Israel and Egypt and their plan for limited local self-rule.

An Analysis

Labor says it wants unconditional talks with Jordan on the West Bank's future, and it is prepared to discuss some points of the Reagan plan. It wants to trade most — but not all — of the West Bank, including the big Palestinian cities, to Jordan in exchange for peace.

Labor refuses to consider permitting an independent Palestinian state on Israel's eastern frontier, as is demanded by many Arabs.

Likud has sprinkled the West Bank with Jewish settlements, with the declared aim of preventing any future government from relinquishing the territory. It pledges to continue the settlement drive.

Labor says it would restrict new settlements to clearly defined areas which Israel needs for its security.

The Lebanon policies of the two parties are gradually converging. Labor demands an immediate withdrawal of the army that occupied southern Lebanon in June 1982. Likud says it will pull out only when Israel's northern border is secure. In practice, the parties are likely to act similarly in office.

But Labor, which persistently criticized the government for fighting "an unnecessary war," may try to keep Lebanon as an election issue, playing on public anger over the 576 Israelis killed since the invasion.

Neither Shamir nor Peres fire the public imagination as did Begin or the giants of the Labor Party, David Ben-Gurion and Golda Meir. Both Shamir and Peres are uninspiring speakers, but both are considered solid leaders and good political infighters.

Labor has buried its rivalries for the first time since the late Mrs. Meir left politics in 1974, and it has united behind Peres, 61, who led the party to its two previous electoral defeats.

Peres is less popular with the public than are former President Yitzhak Navon and former Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, but he has the party machinery solidly behind him.

Shamir, 68, who is expected to be confirmed as his party's nominee next Thursday, is untested in elections as party leader. He took over after Begin's retirement last September, defeating his closest rival, David Levy, in an internal Likud vote.

If Shamir loses, his age and pressure from his party critics may eliminate him from future contests.

St. Helena islanders cheer Prince Andrew

LONDON (AP) — Islanders thronged a beach singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" on Saturday as Britain's Prince Andrew left St. Helena after a three-day visit for its 150th anniversary as a British colony.

In a dispatch from the South Atlantic island, the British news agency Press Association said the 24-year-old prince, second son of Queen Elizabeth II, returned to the HMS Herald, the 260-foot survey vessel that took him to St. Helena.

The ship was returning to Ascension Island, another volcanic British colony in mid-Atlantic, it said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Almost half a century after her husband was executed for kidnapping and killing Charles Lindbergh's son, Anna Hauptmann remains convinced of his innocence — and says she can prove it.

Mrs. Hauptmann, 85, said at a news conference Friday that she was with Bruno Richard Hauptmann the day he is alleged to have committed "the crime of the century" in 1932. Her lawyer, Robert Bryan, insisted that he has documents to clear Hauptmann posthumously.

"They are trying to wash their guilty hands," Mrs. Hauptmann, of Yeadon, Pa., said of authorities who have rejected her claims. "They are young. I am old now. But I will live a little longer, because God gives me the strength to go on. Because I am fighting for the truth."

On Thursday, U.S. District Judge Frederick Lacey in Newark, N.J., dismissed the last of her claims in a $100 million wrongful death suit. He said most of Mrs. Hauptmann's claims against New Jersey, the FBI and the Hearst Corp. for its reporting on the case were filed past the statute of limitations or were not adequately supported.

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Former Dallas Cowboys linebacker Thomas "Hollywood" Henderson has pleaded innocent to a charge of bribing two girls so they wouldn't testify against him on molesting charges.

Henderson also said in municipal court Friday that he could not afford a defense attorney.

He and Richard T. Belcher are accused of bribing the girls whom Henderson is accused of abducting and molesting at his apartment last November. The girls were 16 and 17 at the time and one is a paraplegic.

Judge W.H. Winston Jr. asked Henderson if he had any assets that could be sold to pay for a lawyer.

"I've sold everything," Henderson replied.

Henderson is scheduled for trial April 25 on one count of forcible oral copulation, two counts of false imprisonment and one count of sexual battery. The bribery charge was filed separately.

• • •

SALISBURY, Md. (AP) — Frank Perdue, a leader in the East Coast chicken industry, has been honored for his distinctive television and radio commercials boasting plump, tender chickens good enough to carry his name.

Perdue was honored Friday by the Leukemia Society of America's New York chapter in the first of a planned series of annual fund-raising award dinners honoring corporate executives who do their own advertising, said Larry Jannello, executive director of the chapter.

Chickens sold under the Perdue Farms Inc. label are advertised heavily along the East Coast, with Perdue tersely and humorously knocking the competition as vastly inferior to his birds.

Jannello said a society committee nominated Perdue for the first award "because of the quality of his advertising and the obvious concern he has for the quality of his product."

• • •

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — Among some giants of commerce, young Noah Flesher drew the most attention at a Cornell University program honoring entrepreneurs.

Flesher, 11, was invited to Cornell's first annual Entrepreneur of the Year program, which attracted an estimated 300 guests Friday to honor innovation and industry in business.

The Langhorne, Pa., youth launched his business career three years ago with a letter to Hickory Farms of Ohio offering hand-made leather key fobs, colored to look like Swiss cheese, as marketing gifts.

"I can make as many as you want," Noah said in the letter which struck the right chord in Hickory Farms executive Donald P. Berens, who ordered 250, then 250 more, and finally 1,000.

The last order bogged down when Flesher said he was raising his price from 50 cents to 69 cents apiece.

"I had to let him know it wasn't that easy to raise prices," said Berens, who wound up ordering 1,000 at 65 cents.

The boy has since put his older brother and sister to work on the project, and said he has started a $2 car wash and is making magnet-backed, cloth animals for household note-holders.

"I think the kid is already on the way to having a commanding presence," said Cornell graduate Kenneth H. Blanchard, author of the best-selling "The One-Minute Manager" and "Putting the One-Minute Manager to Work."

'Terms of Endearment' favorite

EDITOR'S NOTE — Monday night is shaping up as an endearing evening. "Terms of Endearment" is a strong favorite to win at the Academy Awards. But there have been surprises before.

By BOB THOMAS

But will history agree? Ten or 20 years from now, will film historians declare that the Oscar should have been presented to one of the other contenders: "The Big Chill," "The Dresser," "The Right Stuff," "Tender Mercies"?

The 4,000 voters of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences are only human, and they are swayed by sentiment, loyalty and trendiness as well as judgment of artistic merit. Historical hindsight shows numerous instances where justice may not have been done.

Last year, for example. The award for best picture went to "Gandhi," an admirable, plodding old-fashioned biography, instead of "E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial," a work of soaring imagination and incidentally the most popular movie of all time.

What about the previous year, when the Oscar inexplicably was awarded "Chariots of Fire" rather than the beautifully textured, gorgeously acted "On Golden Pond"?

Those two examples are too recent to form a historical judgment. But a survey of the history of the Academy awards reveals a number of inequities. Among them:

1934 — The sweep for "It Happened One Night" brought Claudette Colbert the Oscar for best actress despite the magnificent performance by Bette Davis in "Of Human Bondage," who was not even nominated.

1935 — "Mutiny on the Bounty," a stout-hearted adventure, was chosen over John Ford's "The Informer" even though Ford was named best director. The Academy remedied its omission of the previous year by giving Bette Davis the belated Oscar for the now-forgotten "Dangerous."

1936 — Chaplin's "Modern Times" was not among the 10 nominees for the best-picture award, which went to "The Great Ziegfeld."

1937 — The Academy chose the stodginess of "Life of Emile Zola" over such nominees as "Lost Horizon" and "A Star Is Born." Despite Greta Garbo's greatest performance in "Camille," Luise Rainer was named best actress for "The Good Earth."

1939 — "Gone with the Wind" was the obvious winner, but why did the voters overlook Clark Gable's immortal Rhett Butler? The winner: Robert Donat for "Goodbye, Mr. Chips."

1941 — "Citizen Kane," which many historians consider the greatest American film, was passed over for John Ford's "How Green Was My Valley." Orson Welles also missed out as actor and director but won for original screenplay (with Herman Mankiewicz).

1946 — "The Best Years of Our Lives" swept the awards, overpowering Laurence Olivier's sublime "Henry V."

1951 — The sentimental favorite, Humphrey Bogart, won for "The African Queen" over two young actors at the peak of their powers: Marlon Brando in "A Streetcar Named Desire" and Montgomery Clift in "A Place in the Sun."

1952 — The Academy made up for years of ignoring Cecil B. DeMille by naming his hokey "The Greatest Show on Earth" as best picture. "High Noon" was obviously 1952's best.

1953 — William Holden admitted that "Stalag 17" was not his best performance. But he won the Oscar over Montgomery Clift in "From Here to Eternity."

1960 — Elizabeth Taylor, recovered from a serious illness, won as best actress for "Butterfield 8," which even she detested. Better choices could have been Shirley MacLaine, "The Apartment," or Melina Mercouri, "Never on Sunday."

1966 — Academy voters chose the sedate "A Man for All Seasons" instead of the controversial "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?"

1972 — If "The Godfather" won as best picture and for Marlon Brando's Don Corleone, why wasn't Francis Ford Coppola chosen for best director? Instead, Bob Fosse got it for "Cabaret."

1976 — Did Peter Finch's death help win the Oscar for "Network" over co-star William Holden and the dynamic debut of Sylvester Stallone in "Rocky"?

1977 — "The Deer Hunter," an overwrought, overlong account of the Vietnam War was chosen over the more insightful "Coming Home."

Monday night's festivities may bring other bloopers, but then, nobody's perfect.

Answer Line

By Franchelle Moore

It is my understanding that Midland has a street maintenance office which reports to operations which reports to a Public Works Department. Which of these offices is responsible for securing and accepting bids on work to be done on our streets? Who is head of that department?

I also would appreciate a comparison of costs on streets built in Midland as compared to those in Odessa, as well as the average length of time such streets last in each city before repair work is needed.

These are many questions, but your attention will be appreciated. — Doris E. Hembree

ANSWER: Fred Baker, director of the Public Works Department of Midland, provides answers to most of your questions. The Public Works Department primarily is responsbile for receiving bids on street construction and presenting recommendations to the City Council, which, in turn, awards the contracts.

The office of the City Manager functions in a coordinating role, directing questions on streets to the Public Works Department.

Baker points out that streets in Midland currently being rebuilt are more than 30 years old, with the normal design life of streets being 20 years. These streets have experienced traffic flow increases four times greater than anticipated. Baker says these streets originally were constructed for residential use and have become major thoroughfares.

Baker also states that newly constructed streets in Midland are built to handle anticipated traffic flows and have not suffered the deterioration as the 30-year-old streets have.

As far as the cost of street construction, only the lowest responsible bids are accepted by the city.

I have been wondering why Midland does not have public radio as some of the larger cities in Texas do. Can you find out? — A.T.

ANSWER: The Midland-Odessa area, according to Parker Humes, manager of Midland radio station KCRS, already has 18 radio stations, which does not make this market very enticing to public radio, which is supported as public television stations are.

At the present time, Humes says, the Federal Communications Commission is considering allowing two more FM stations in the Midland-Odessa area.

Humes says that the larger markets, such as Dallas, New York and Boston, among others, are substantial enough to support public radio.

My husband refuses to make out a will. Can I make one for him? Will it be considered legal? — L.G.

ANSWER: A will is a legal document which expresses the desire of the testator, (that is, the person who makes it) as to what shall be done with his property when he dies, according to the State Bar of Texas.

Because the will affects the personal wishes of the testator, it can only be made by that person, your version of his will would be completely ignored. If your husband refuses to make out his own will, then his property will be distributed (upon his death) to his family according to the laws of descent and distribution set out by the Texas Legislature.

Could you please answer this question for me? The other day the subject of the southside streets came up. Is it true that the majority of the streets on our side of town which are unpaved is because there isn't enough tax money being paid? If not, could you please advise us what we could do to get some of them paved? Your advise would truly be appreciated. Thank you. — Kristi Mitchell

ANSWER: Fred Baker, director of the city's Public Works Department, says that city streets are paved by assessment programs or revenue sharing funds, and are not financed by general tax monies. He points out that the majority of streets on the southside for public use are paved.

In addition to the assessment programs and revenue sharing funds, community development block grants finance street paving and that some additional streets on the southside are to be paved this fiscal year with these funds.

POSITIVE THINKING

Fight fear by replacing it with another emotion

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Peale

Fear is best dealt with, not by an act of will, but by displacement in which something stronger crowds it out. It is difficult to achieve the conquest of fear by simply saying bravely, "I will not fear." Such bravado often serves only to make it all the more stubborn. A direct frontal attack is not always, indeed seldom, the best strategy. A better plan is to let something bigger than fear take over in your thinking, something that fires your imagination, captures your interest, and becomes so tremendously significant that there remains no room for fear in your mind. Displacement rather than operation has proven to be the most successful method for dealing with fear.

One night, crossing the ocean, I was unable to sleep because of worries and anxieties. Before dawn I arose and went up to the hurricane deck, where I was entirely alone. It was neither dark nor light. A murky gray pallor hung over ship and sea. The black smoke from the funnels drifting sluggishly off to the east blended smuttily into the gloomy atmosphere. The ship, lifting on a gentle swell, pushed forward heavily throught the murk. Shadows were everywhere.

The entire dreary scene was but a reflection of my own inner mood for I was the harried victim of worry and fear. Then on the eastern horizon came a faint glow. I watched it rise higher in the sky. It was for all the world like a mammoth chimney with an enormous glowing, ruddy fire on the hearth. Presently the far-off sky became a delicate rose color, which spread, as I watched, to the tip of every wave. The sun bathed the ship and sea and sky in golden, glorious sunshine.

Then I saw something never to be forgotten. It seemed that of a sudden all the shadows that had been lurking in every corner fled from their hiding places, scampered across the deck, for all the world like mice, and leaped into the sea. The ship became in an instant a thing of glistening white beauty, gliding over a sea of blue and gold.

It struck me that, of course, I should have know the shadows could not remain in the same place with the sun, for the sun is too big and strong for shadows. It taught me an unforgettable lesson. Let some real big thing take over in your thinking and the dark, lurking shadowy fears will scamper away. The process of displacement is the road away from fear.

JOIN OUR COMMUNITY IN ENFORCING THE LEGAL DRINKING AGE...

Midland has a problem with the illegal consumption of alcoholic beverages. The result is that the leading cause of death in our 16-24 year-old age group is alcohol-related traffic accidents.

Under Texas Law, youth under the age of 19 cannot buy, try to buy, or drink any form of alcohol beverage. Fake I.D.'s are illegal. It is against the law to provide alcoholic beverages for youth, obtain them for youth, or allow underage youth to use your I.D. Any person violating the law can be sued by parents or anyone else who might be harmed as a result of such actions.

As a parent, be aware of your children, their friends, the parties they go to, and the kinds of activities in which they are involved. Hosting, supervising, or in any way allowing your home or property to be used as a location for drinking parties for underage youth is illegal.

Midland needs your full support. What can you do?

- •Talk with your children about the law
- •Share this information with others
- •If you have information that any business is supplying alcoholic beverages to underage persons, notify the Midland Police Department or the County Sheriff's office.

We urge you, when holding parties, to celebrate in a safe, legal, and socially acceptable manner.

We ask your support and cooperation for the sake of all our children.

Morris bleaches White Sox

Tigers hurler pitches no-hitter

CHICAGO (AP) — Jack Morris decided he would break the tension of pitching a no-hitter Saturday and told pitching coach Roger Craig in the eighth inning, "I'm going to get it."

"Actually, I was more nervous in the seventh inning than I was in the ninth," said Morris after pitching the Detroit Tigers to a 4-0, no-hit victory over the Chicago White Sox.

"I knew I had it going in the fifth inning," said Morris. "Usually, by the fifth inning I don't have a no-hitter going. I looked up at the board and saw the zero."

Morris figured the turning point in his masterpiece, which included six walks and eight strikeouts, came in the fourth inning. He had gone through the first three innings flawlessly.

He opened the fourth by going 2-0 on Rudy Law and then went to his mouth at which time umpire Durwood Mrrill charged him with a third ball.

Two more walks filled the bases and then came what Morris said "was the turning point of the game. The bases were loaded and there were no outs."

Morris got Greg Luzinski to bounce back to the mound and he threw to the plate to start a double play before striking out Ron Kittle to end the inning.

"Going into the ninth I wasn't gung-ho on the no-hitter," said Morris. "I wanted to get the first hitter out. I threw (Carlton) Fisk a good fork ball and got him. Then I got gung-ho about the no-hitter."

So much so that with a count of 2-2 on Luzinski, Morris fell off the mound after throwing the next pitch and eventually walked Luzinski with two outs before striking out Kittle again on the 120th pitch of the game to get the no-hitter, the first by a Detroit pither since Jim Bunning threw one against Boston in 1958.

"You know, you need a lot of luck to pitch a no-hitter or even a shutout," said Morris. "I've had better stuff before."

In 1980, Morris had a one-hitter against Minnesota when "Rob Wilfong hit a bloop over third base in the first inning of that game."

Morris admitted, "I'm so nervous I can hardly talk. I'm happy, very happy, but I'm uncomfortable with all this attention."

It was the first no-hitter in Comiskey Park since Chicago's Joe Horlen no-hit Detroit on Sept. 10, 1967. And it tied the record for the earliest date on which a major league no-hitter has been pitched. Ken Forsch, pitching for the Houston Astros, did it on April 7, 1979 against the Atlanta Braves.

Except for some fine plays by right fielder Kirk Gibson and first baseman Dave Bergman, a late defensive replacement, all the other defensive plays by Morris' Tiger teammates were routine.

By BOB BRUNDAGE

It wasn't pretty but it was nice.

Midland Lee, taking advantage of four Odessa High errors in the fourth inning, moved into sole possession of second place in District 4-5A Saturday with a 7-5 victory over the Bronchos at Lee. The Rebels are now 6-2 and trail Abilene Cooper by half a game.

The Cougars and San Angelo Bobcats were rained out Saturday and make up the game 4 p.m. Monday in Abilene.

With Lee trailing 4-3 in the fourth, Keith McDonald started the rally when he reached first on Brent Lunceford's throwing error and scored on a wild throw by Freddy Alvarado. Two more errors and doubles by Steve Woodlee and Donny Rivas brought home three more runs and the Rebs had a 7-4 lead.

Boyd Cowan scored the final OHS run in the fifth when he ripped Lee pitcher Bryan Willis' first pitch of the inning over the right field fence for a solo home run to make 7-5.

WILLIS, WHO went the distance for Le, improved his record to 4-1 in district and 7-2 overall. Cowan, the loser, is 0-3, 2-3 overall.

The last time Lee and OHS met, Willis pitched a four-hit shutout. This time, the Bronchos collected eight hits and five earned runs, the most any team has scored against Lee this year.

"The second time around is always harder," said Willis. "They know your pitches. They know what you throw and what your ball will do. They hit me a little harder this time. It wasn't real nice, but we came out on top. Our hitting is getting better, at least better than it was last week."

Donny Rivas and Willis are examples of somewhat improved hitting. Both went 2-for-3 with a double. Against Midland High and Cooper, the entire Lee lineup only accounted for six hits.

"This is the best hitting day I've had," said Rivas who collected his first two hits and two rbi of the season. "I've been working hard on what coach said about opening up my stance because I've been striding too much. It seemed to work for me."

"At least we hit a few," said Coach Ernie Johnson about his team's eight hits. "We didn't exactly wear anybody out but it was better than one or four hits."

Lee's win snaps a two-game losing streak that had Johnson worried.

"If we hadn't won this game, we might not have won two more the rest of the season," said Johnson.

"Winning relieves us of the pressure," said Rivas. "Everybody had a good day and I think everybody came ready to play. I think if we had lost, it would have been tough to come back."

REB NOTES: Rivas and Willis were the only Rebels with more than one hit while Woodlee added the third double of the game...Danny Gonzalez picked up his first hit of the 4-5A season...Lee travels to San Angelo Tuesday for a 4 p.m. game with the Bobcats.

Lee Velarde, whose tender, loving care gives Midland a natural playing surface that is rated by some as the best in baseball, puts a finishing touch on Cubs Stadium for Tuesday's Texas League opener against San Antonio.

Cubs open season Tuesday

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

When the Midland Cubs open the Texas League season against San Antonio at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Cubs Stadium, there will be five holdovers from the team that finished with a 63-73 record last year.

Six other players saw varying degrees of service with the 1983 team.

Gone is Manager Tom Harmon, but back is George Enright as manager—after a two-year absence—along with pitching coach Glenn "Goose" Gregson, who reportedly may leave the Mesa, Ariz.-to-Midland flight Monday at El Paso. Goose needs to get in his running. If so, he may be late for the 6 p.m. workout at Cubs Stadium.

Also returning for a second year is Dennis Brogna, in charge of reviving weary muscles and soothing twisted ankles.

Shortstop Shawon Dunston, the Brooklyn youngster who was the No. 1 draft choice in all of baseball two years ago, has been awaited with much-anticipation after a big '83 at Quad Cities.

Ricky Baker, who set the club record with 15 triples last year and led the club in stolen bases, 59, while hitting .303, heads the outfielders. The St. Louis flyhawk will be joined by Danny Norman, Darrin Jackson and Jim Auten in the outfield.

Mike Anicich, the streak-hitting home run basher, who pounded 21 last year while batting in 86 runs, is back to reclaim first base. Other infielders are Jeff Rutledge, here late in the season; Tony Woods and Gary Varsho.

Don Hyman, who wintered during the off-season in Midland, heads the catching corps that includes Antonio Cordova, and Joe Henderson.

Collins sees tighter race

SMU Coach Bobby Collins sees the SWC tightening up this season after being monopolized by Texas and Southern Methodist the last two seasons.

"The lower echelon is closing the gap on the upper echelon. Baylor and Texas A&M will be stronger and I look for Texas Tech to be greatly improved. And Houston has some people returning and should be stronger...

The Mustangs face a non-conference schedule of Louisville, North Texas State and Nevada-Las Vegas this year, but Collins assures it will get tougher in the future.

Still, he's not complaining this year. With a young club, this year's less taxing schedule may be to the Mustangs' advantage, just as was last year's after the loss of Dickerson and James from the 11-0-1 team of 1983.

Collins, however, isn't conceding that it will be easy. "I've been to Louisville before and I don't look forward to it as being easy. North Texas is neighborhood." and I guess a team can never feel secure against the Running Renegades of Vegas.

Things get tougher in '85 when Oklahoma comes on the schedule and '86 when Notre Dame returns...

"IF ROBERT E. Lee or Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson ever got wind of this, they'd roll over in their graves, if there's any life left in 'em." If you've been following the Quotebook that perhaps sounds like something from the dulcet tones of Jerry Coleman, the one-time San Diego baseball announcer, who is bettered rememberd for his malaprops than his days as Yankee second baseman.

But, are you ready, who is the newest member of the Yankee Conference? Remember, this is the league that was organized in 1947 and was composed of the six New England state universities, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut. With a league like that, what else could they name it but Yankee.

In recent years, there have been a few changes, like Boston University and Delware becoming members of the lodge. But the latest addition is even more contrary to nature than Midland and Odessa becoming sugar-borrowing neighbors.

Give up? Honest, the new member is the University of Richmond. What remarkable wonders are wrought in the unpredictable world of sport.

I guess that's no worse than Atlanta being in the National League West. Okay, Okay, it is worse...

ROGER GODIN, former director of the U.S. Hockey Hall of Fame in Minnesota, is assistant director of the Petroleum Museum and put together the exhibit on Midland baseball which will be on display through May 23.

Godin has always been interested in baseball. In fact, he is the author of an unpublished book on the 1922 St. Louis Browns, which immediately raises some questions.

Why the Browns, baseball's most unsuccessful franchise? The Browns won just won pennant from 1903 until the 1953, when the franchise was moved to Baltimore.

"It's true, the Browns' only pennant was in 1944, but probably their best team was the 1922 team which had George Sisler (.420) at first; Ken Williams, John Tobin and a total of six guys who hit over .300," defends Roger. "Quickly now, name me one member of the 1944 Browns."

Midland blows 7-0 lead, slips into third place

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

ODESSA - After the dust had cleared on a game-ending double play, Midland High baseball coach Tim Whalen had to take a walk to ease his mind.

What he had just seen didn't please him. In fact, the affable manager was downright ticked after his Bulldogs had blown an early 7-0 lead to lose 8-7 to Odessa Permian here in a crucial District 4-5A game.

The immediate effect of the setback is that Midland High now drops into third place at 5-3.

Abilene Cooper is in first with a 6-1 mark. The long-range problems for Whalen's Bulldogs are unfolding. The district schedule has six games remaining, with only Big Spring (0-8) and Abilene (3-5) out of the running.

"WE JUST choked," a disgusted Whalen said. "We had it under control. We were in the exact position we needed to be in."

That position was a favorable one. MHS jumped on usually steady Panther starter Craig Steen for three runs in the second and four in the third, chasing him for Mark Fowler.

To that point, MHS had gotten a few breaks. A gusty wind made several routine fly balls magically turn into seeing-eye doubles. Bulldog catcher Jeff Magness got a 125-foot two-bagger in the second, and five batters later Mike Stanton benefitted.

Magness and Stanton knocked in runs in the fourth and MHS was cruising.

Enter Fowler. He got out of the third inning in relief of Steen when Bulldog Darren Thorpe got picked off of first base. Then he flirted with disaster by walking seven in the next three innings, but surrendered only two hits and allowed no runs. On a day when the wind was playing havoc with fly balls, Fowler was the only one of six on either side with the sense to keep the ball very low.

Doug Daehling's location wasn't bad, but his luck was. When Wootan retired in the fourth in Permian's four-run rally, he had given up six walks, four hits and four runs.

Daehling didn't give a pass to anyone, and gave up two hits. But he had the misfortune to have three unearned runs tag him with his second loss of the season.

THE WINNING runs came in the Permian sixth. Daehling had done a good job in relief and threw out leadoff batter Kirk Strahan to open the inning.

Panther shortstop Ronnie Lovera had a base hit taken away when MHS centerfielder Mike Timlin made a shoestring catch for the second out. Then, Tommy Tyler and Fowler delivered consecutive singles.

Daehling's replacement at third, Mark Torres, got snakebit. Jaime Salgado chopped a soft roller to Torres, who threw wildly to first base, scoring Tyler.

Whalen brought Timlin on to pitch for the tiring Daehling, who then made the fatal mistake. Timlin grooved a 3-0 pitch to Steen, who crushed the ball into left-center for a triple.

Steen earned his redemption at the plate after being knocked off the hill. Although he allowed all seven Bulldog runs as a pitcher, he knocked in four Panthers and scored once while going 3-for-3.

MHS used two walks in the ninth to get runners at first and second with one out, but Mike Stanton grounded into the double play that ended the game and sent Whalen hiking.

"WE'VE BEEN reading our press clippings too much," Whalen said. "We showed no killer instinct, we could not smell the blood. Consequently, we lose. We needed it, should have had it."

Rookie, Mookie whip Astros

Strawberry homers as Mets win 3-2

From Wire Reports

HOUSTON — Dwight Gooden scattered three hits over five innings in his major league debut, while Darryl Strawberry homered and Mookie Wilson hit a two-run double to lead the New York Mets to a 3-2 victory over Houston Saturday night.

The 19-year-old Gooden, who struck out 300 batters in the Class A Carolina League last season, struck out three of the first six batters he faced. He did not allow a base runner until he walked Denny Walling to open the third, then yielded his first hit to Alan Ashby, a single to left field.

Gooden gave up two more hits and lost his shutout in the fifth inning. Ashby reached base on a fielder's choice, went to second when Gooden walked pinch-hitter Harry Spilman and scored on Bill Doran's single. Gooden finished with five strikeouts.

Strawberry clubbed a solo homer to center field n the second inning.

Giants 11, Cards 0

SAN FRANCISCO — Rookie righthander Jeff Robinson pitched six shutout innings and San Francisco hit three home runs in an 11-0 win over St. Louis.

Robinson, 23, recalled from Shreveport in the Double-A Texas League two days before the opener, scattered four hits, struck out four and walked three in his six-inning stint.

A three-run homer by Johnny LeMaster and two-run homers by Manny Trillo and Jeff Leonard accounted for most of the Giants' scoring off starter Dave LaPoint, 0-1, and relievers Jeff Lahti and Ricky Horton.

Bucs 3, Dodgers 0

LOS ANGELES — Dale Berra dumped a two-run single into right field in the seventh inning and John Candelaria and Don Robinson combined on a nine-hitter as Pittsburgh blanked Los Angeles 3-0.

In the seventh, after two were out, Tony Pena and Doug Froble singled to center. Berra then got his hit to right, scoring Pena and Froble.

The Dodgers had several scoring opportunities, but failed to capitalize. In the fifth inning, German Rivera led off with a triple, but was stranded. In the eighth inning, Steve Sax opened with a left-field double off Robinson, but Dave Anderson popped out and Robinson then struck out Terry Whitfield and Guerrero.

Phils 9, Reds 1

CINCINNATI — Joe Lefebvre drove in five runs and Mike Schmidt ignited a four-run sixth inning with a bases-loaded single as Philadelphia blasted Cincinnati 9-1 Saturday.

Jerry Koosman allowed seven hits over seven innings in his first National League start since 1978 as the Reds lost their third straight.

The Phillies scored twice in the second on Lefebvre's RBI single, the first of his four hits, and Glenn Wilson's sacrifice fly.

Dave Concepcion hit a third-inning sacrifice fly, scoring Dann Bilardello for Cincinnati's only run, and Len Matuszek countered with a homer in the fifth for a 3-1 Philadelphia lead.

The Phils loaded the bases on Ozzie Virgil's double and a pair of walks in the sixth. Schmidt drilled a two-run single nd Lefebvre doubled for two more runs.

Expos 7, Braves 2

ATLANTA — Pitcher David Palmer and Tim Wallach also hit two-run homers as Montreal beat Atlanta 7-2 Saturday night.

Gary Carter drove in three runs for the Expos, including two with a bases-loaded single in the ninth.

Palmer, 3-0 lifetime against the Braves, was making his first major league start since Aug. 13, 1982, when he left a game in the third inning with a pain in his right elbow. He missed the 1983 season after undergoing surgery for the removal of a calcium deposit and a tendon transfer.

Pete Rose opened the game by hitting Falcone's first pitch up the middle for a single, the 3,994th hit of his career.

Bruce Benedict hit his first homer in the seventh. The Braves loaded the bases later in the inning before Jeff Reardon fanned Dale Murphy and went on to gain his second save.

McEnroe, Lendl to meet again

TENNIS— John McEnroe beat Jimmy Connors 4-6, 6-3, 6-4 Saturday and will face Czechoslovakian Ivan Lendl in the finals of the four-man, $250,000 '84 Suntory Cup in Tokyo. Lendl beat Yannick Noah 6-2, 4-6, 6-2. McEnroe unleashed sizzling passing shots in the first set while Connors' drop shots and volleys were inconsistent, but Connors took the set when his 25-year-old opponent became visibly irritated at some of the line calls and lost his service twice. "I took three weeks off, so I'm not as match-tough as I'd like," McEnroe said. "It's what I've got to work on. I would say the linesmen had an off-day." He also engaged umpire Frank Hammond in a five-minute dispute over a shot by Connors that McEnroe insisted was "way out." "I think Frank is a nice person, but I don't think it's a good idea to have him do my matches."...

FOOTBALL—TBS has extended its contract to televise the Hall of Fame Bowl game through 1986. The game is scheduled Dec. 29, a Saturday night, at Birmingham's Legion Field...

Former Dallas Cowboys linebacker Thomas "Hollywood" Henderson is free on bail after pleading innocent to a charge of bribing two girls he is accused of molesting. During Friday's hearing, attorney Arnold Barry Gold was appointed to represent Henderson after Henderson told the court he could not afford a lawyer. Public defender Robert Schmitz told the judge his office couldn't take Henderson's case because it already is representing his co-defendant, Richard T. Belcher. Henderson was asked him if he had any assets that could be sold. "I've sold everything," Henderson replied...

GYMNASTICS—Seniors Megan Marsden and Linda Kardos paced Utah to its fourth consecutive NCAA women's championship at UCLA. Utah finished with a total 186.05 points, outlasting host UCLA which had 185.55 points. Fullerton State finished third with 183.90, the ninth straight year the Titans have finished in the top three.

BASEBALL—Glenn Wright, 83, shortstop for the Pirates, Dodgers and White Sox in the 1920s and 1930s, died in Olathe, Kan. Nicknamed "Buckshot" for his throwing arm, Wright once said, "Guess I scattered a lot of fans behind first base. Charley Grimm told me I broke concrete in every park I played in."...

Pittsburgh Pirates relief pitcher Rod Scurry plans to immediately enter a drug rehabilitation program to overcome a drug dependency. The left-handed Scurry, 28, will be replaced temporarily on the roster by left-handed pitcher Chris Green...

Rich Olsen allowed only two hits over seven innings and Randy Bass drilled a game-tying home run in the seventh inning to lead the Hanshin Tigers to a 2-1 victory over the Yomiuri Giants in Japanese League baseball. The new Greenwood gymnasium is home of the basketball Rangers.

Growing Pains

Greenwood set for class switch

GREENWOOD — As the academic year draws towards an end, the athletic program at Greenwood High School is preparing for bigger and better things. The University Interscholastic League, Texas' governing body where athletics are concerned, reclassified the school from A to AA, effective in 1984-85.

Fortunately, foresight on the part of the school board of Greenwood is making the transition easier than usual. Growth has always been part of Greenwood's "big picture". Consequently, the athletic facilities at GHS have been designed and built with expansion in mind, and the big little school is ready, willing and able to become a member of District 8-AA.

"We've spent quite a bit of money here," says Greenwood Athletic Director and head football coach Joe Longley. "Our facilities are comparable or better than most AA schools have, except for our football stadium, which has no seating capacity. But our school board is planning to upgrade it."

The new high school campus and the existing facilities boast an impressive array of variety for a school barely into its' second decade.

GREENWOOD ONLY competes in five varsity level sports, but has facilities for more. Besides the football stadium, there are four fully usable gymnasiums, including a spanking new basketball arena unequalled in the area if Chaparral Center is discounted. Also on campus is a huge indoor pool, used in physical education classes and open during the summer months. A complete weight room with nautilus equipment is used to boost the strength of the varsity athletes, and is used as a regular feature of the P.E. classes.

As for the switch in classification, things are moving rapidly for Longley and his charges. In their fourth year of football, Longley's Rangers exited from A ball in style with a district title, Greenwood's first. The celebration was short-lived as the Rangers bowed from the playoffs after only one game, and this year things will probably be tougher in a district that features state quarterfinalist McCamey, playoff entry Wall, Reagan County, and Stanton.

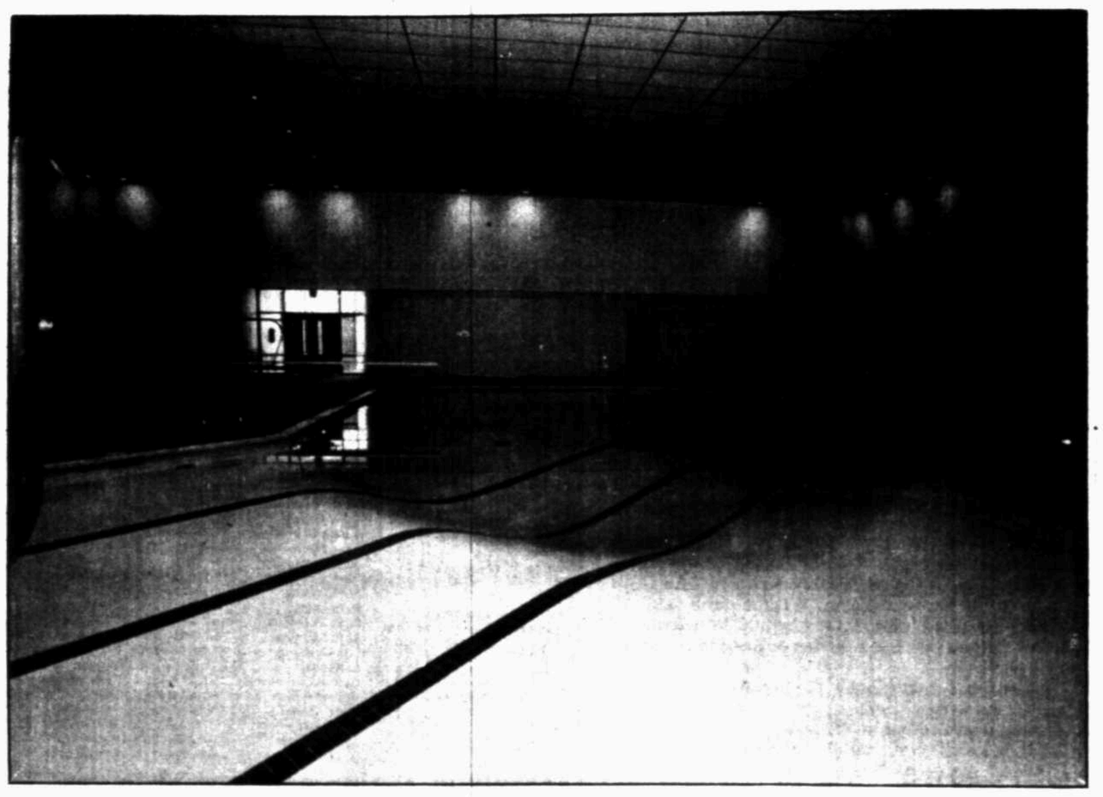

LONGLEY'S FOOTBALLERS are most likely to suffer the most from the shift upward. "It won't be like going from high school to the NFL," said Longley, "The other schools are playing high school kids just like we are."

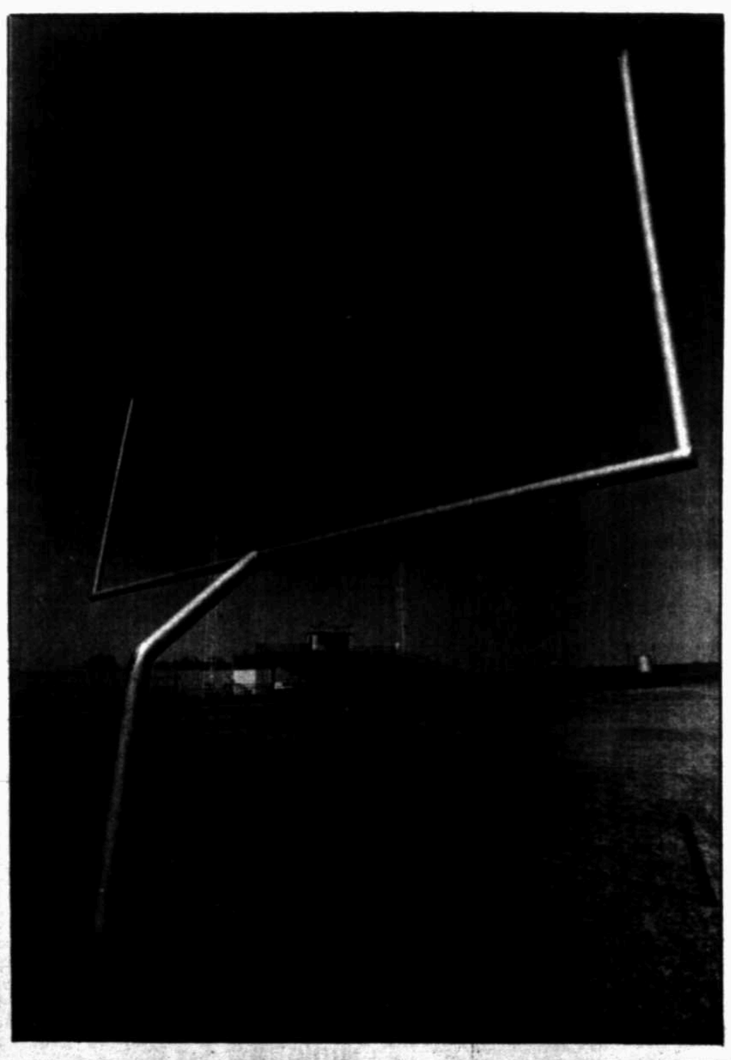

The state-ranked basketball programs won't feel the pinch quite as much. Roger Goldsmith's boys and Cliff Stephens' Rangerettes only face class A schools in the district schedule, opting to beef up the non-league play with AA and AAA schools.

"I have mixed feelings about it," Longley said of the impending hike. "For our total overall program, it will probably be a little rough."

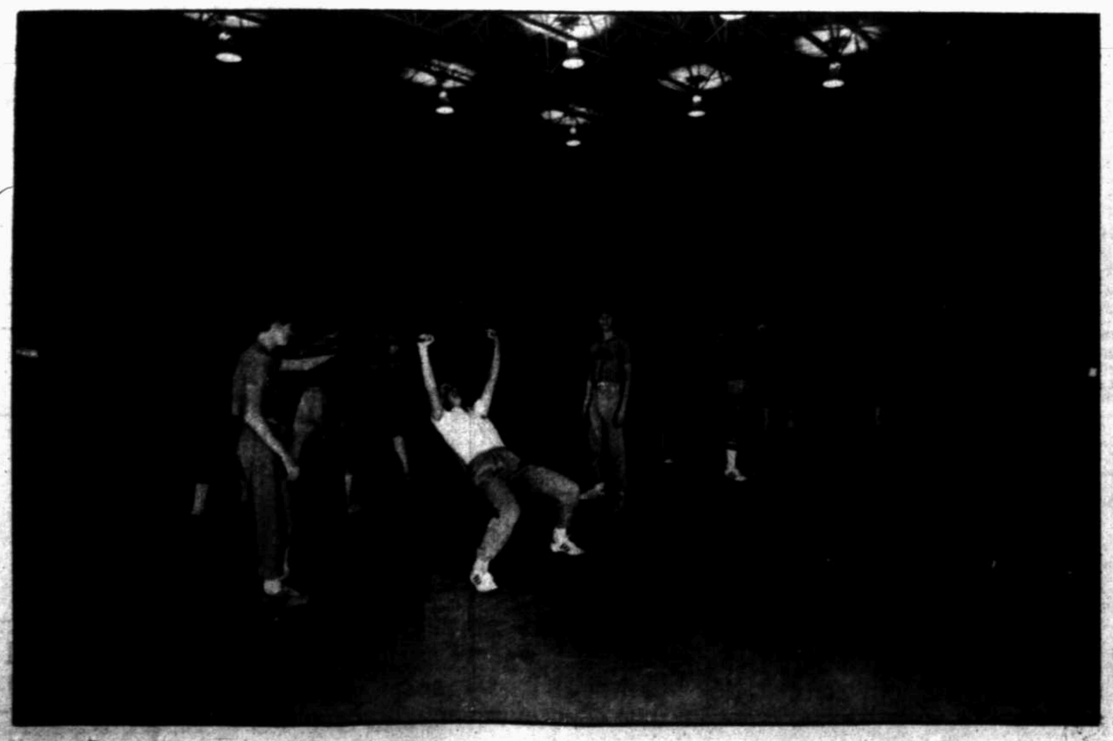

Still, it's a move that Greenwood's leaders expected, although perhaps not so soon. "We expect to be in AAA in a few years," Longley said. "The community looked ahead and provided us with the facilities to handle even a AAAA school. I feel like we've had good leadership."

As fast as the once-tiny school is growing, that leadership is in danger of being passed by a herd of Rangers on the road to success.

Thomas came to pitch for Cubs and found a home

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Chicago had moved its Class AA Texas League farm club from San Antonio to Midland during the winter, but as Mark Thomas boarded the team bus at Scottsdale, Ariz., nothing could have been farther from his mind.

This was only his third year in pro baseball and he was on his way to pitch for Wichita, the Cubs' AAA farm club in the American Association. His bags were safely stowed and the matter was settled. It wasn't a leap from A ball to the majors, like his longtime rival Rick Reuschel was making, but A to AAA wasn't bad.

Back in college, Thomas missed most of his senior year because of arm trouble and he hadn't even expected to be drafted.

When the bus for Wichita pulled away from the Motel 6, Thomas was waving at his buddies from the driveway. Criminals get a last minute reprieve. Thomas got a last minute sentence. He was going to Midland, some place in Texas.

BEFORE REPORTING to Midland, the Iowa native had to return to Illinois to fulfill a National Guard committment.

"I had to drive to Midland, but first I had to look it up on the map," he recalls. "I remember spending a night in Amarillo and my introduction to Texas continued the next day when I drove through Plainview, which had been hit by a tornado and was pretty torn up."

"Between Lamesa and Midland, the wind was blowing so hard and the dirt off the cotton fields was so thick, I had to pull off the road and stop. I saw my first tumbleweed and I could see pump jacks in a nearby field, but I didn't even know what they were."

"As I sat there, I thought, 'If the Cubs didn't want me to play, why didn't they just say so?'"

IF YOU'VE ever wondered what happens to Midland Cubs who get sidetracked before making it to the majors, Mark Thomas may not be typical, but he is special in that he made his home here. And despite a less than overwhelming first impression, Thomas is not only still here, but is worried that P&O Falco, for whom he is district manager, may ship him off to Houston.

"I moved to the Chicago area when I was 13 and had all the big city I wanted. That's one reason I settled here. Now, I even defend it against detractors."

He adds, "Even when I first came here, I found it an exceptional place, aggressive and progressive at the same time."

Thomas pitched for Midland in 1972 and 1973. "We opened that first year in San Antonio and I think I pitched my best game there," he remembered.

"I continued to have arm problems in 1973 and knew I wouldn't play the next year. I had interviewed for a job. In college, I had been an economics and accounting major. I thought I was going to go to work as a bank examiner for the state of Illinois...before I was drafted by the Cubs."

Thomas had several baseball scholarship offers after graduating from Lockport, West High in 1966, but choose little MacMurray in Jacksonville, Ill. "It was small and I could have played baseball a lot of places, but I figured here I could play basketball, too."

IN COLLEGE, Rick Reuschel who was later to become a friend pitched for Western Illinois. "I guess we pitched against each other 10 times."

In the summers Thomas pitched in the Central Illinois College League. "That's where I first ran into Mike Schmidt." He won't show the scars.

Until injuring his arm in his junior year, Thomas looked like a first round draft choice. "After I hurt it, I didn't expect anyone to pick me."

Sent to Huron, S.D., Thomas was idle three weeks after taking cortisone shots. "I had a rotator cuff problem before much was known about it. I didn't know about cortisone either." When he finally got in a game with two out in the seventh, he fanned the last batter, then fanned the side in order in the eighth and ninth to tie the Northern League consecutive strikeout record.

> "As I sat there, I thought, 'If the Cubs didn't want me to play, why didn't they just say so?'"

Thomas relates, "In Huron, they put the players up in private homes. The woman who got us was very happy. The year before she had had Greg Luzinski and our appetites combined weren't as big as his."

TWO YEARS later, Thomas was in Midland. "The field was special even then. But the first thing I remember about the park was the Viva LaCock sign in left. Fete (the son of TV personality Peter Marshall and later played for Kansas City) says he didn't know it was going to be there. But I think he did."

"I also remember the long bus rides. Most of the guys on the team were from the north and east and had never been to Mexico. On our first trip to El Paso, most of us wound up borrowing meal money from the manager."

Midland's first Texas League entry didn't come close to winning the pennant. Thomas reviews, "We had a new manager, Al Spangler, it was his first managerial job; it was a new team, too, and new players. Few of us played together previously. But we had good talent." That was proven late in the year when the Cubs jelled and won 29 of the last 41.

Thomas remembers that in those days "they used to put the dollar bills in the screen after a home run. A player could pick up $100, which was a lot of money for a player making $800 to $900 a month."

Of all the players on that team, Rob Sperring, Don Schroeder and Randy Crews are about the only ones Thomas has kept in touch with. The rest scattered to the winds.

Sperring and Schroeder stayed in Midland. Sperring played three or four years in the majors with the Cubs, Giants and Astros and finished in AAA ball, but he worked in Midland during the off season and married a Midland girl.

"He got a job with Tesoro after his playing days were over and transferred to San Antonio and is doing well. We still keep in touch."

RANDY BOBB, the No. 1 draft choice out of Arizona State, the team's eccentric, was killed about a year ago in a car wreck. "He had the talent to make the big leagues, but never really applied himself."

Others on the team were Jim Tyrone, Matt Alexander, Ralph Pipes, Chris Ward, Bill Huisman, Crews, Ron Dunn, and Dennis Lamp joined the pitching staff in 1975.

Alexander made a major league career of base-running with Oakland and Pittsburgh. He came to the Cubs from Grambling and boasted Ralph Garr was almost as fast as he was.

Crews won the 1971 Midwest League batting championship. Chicago had great hopes for him, but he was never the same after a beaning.

LATER, MIKE Krukow, Bruce Sutter and Donnie Moore joined Lamp on the 1975 pitching staff that was the backbone, along with late-arriving Steve Hamrick, who also still resides in Midland, of the championship team.

Lamp, Krukow, Sutter and Moore are still in the majors. Thomas shakes his head at the amount of their contracts. "The big change in baseball since I started," he says, "is the million dollar contract. The average player signs for $500,000-600,000. The game is more of a business now and the way in which players move around, it removes team identity and some of the sport from the game. The player goes to the highest bidder, and you can't blame him as long as the owner is willing to pay those figures."

Despite the jump in major leagues salaries, the Texas Leaguers who begin the season in Midland this week aren't much better off than they were then. "A good salary at the AA level was $1,000 a month. That's what I made. That was just during the playing season. It's about the same today."

Thomas adds, "I vowed that as long as I was in the minors, I wouldn't get marrid."

When he finally got married, it was to Donna Becker, a Midland girl, in 1976. Now there is a girl, five, and boy, 11 months.

"Being sent to Midland proved to be the biggest turning point of my life. It was here that I found my wife and my profession and may home."

THE GUY who moulded those Midland pitching staffs was the late Fred Martin, whose Renoir was and is Bruce Sutter. It was Fred, the one time Cardinal pitcher, who showed Bruce the split-finger fastball.

"Fred Martin," says Thomas, "is what my protype of the old-time ball player in the 1930s and 1940s would be. He had a million stories."

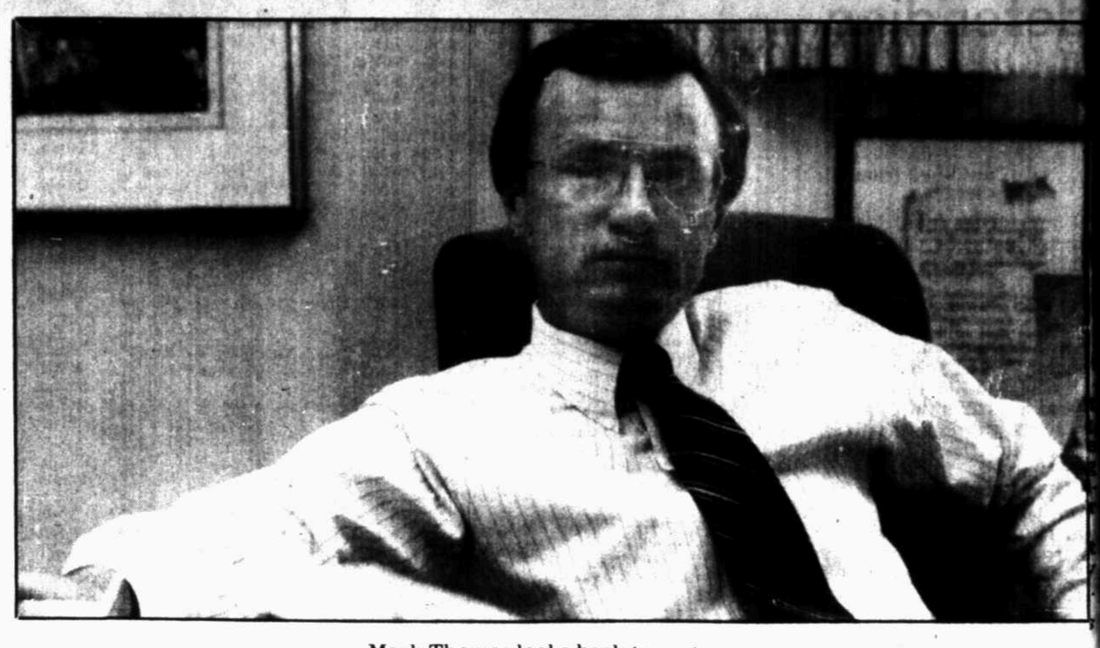

"You also were never sure when he was being serious. I remember one night I was throwing in the bullpen at Cubs Stadium and asked Fred if he could help me with my curve. I was deadly serious. So was Fred when he said, 'You know the old saying, you can't make chicken salad out of chicken manure', or words to that effect.

"I was absolutely crushed. Then, when he saw I had taken him seriously, he began to laugh. It was quite a while before he convinced me he had been kidding."

THE 6-2 Thomas' playing weight was 185 and he hasn't allowed himself to get out of shape. He runs three to five miles daily and plays basketball at the Y. He took up skiing after his playing days and now saves a week in March for a Purgatory fling.

Unlike some athletes who like to brag after their careers are over that, "I haven't seen a game since I hung 'em up," Mark is a Cubs Stadium regular. He has a season box, but confesses he doesn't go as regularly in the unsettled spring months as in the summer.

"I like baseball and enjoy being out at the park on a summer evening. I really don't think most fans realize how good the talent is in the Texas League. Most of the players who have no chance to make the majors have been weeded out between A and AA. All of the players they see here have the potential to make the majors. Some are injured and some fail to realize their potential, but they all have major league capability."

Mark Thomas looks back to early years.

Arnie preps for Masters

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Arnold Palmer, tuning up for next week's Masters Tournament, fired a 4-under-par 68 to take a three-stroke lead Saturday after the second round of the Greater Daytona Senior Golf Classic at Pelican Bay.

Charles Sifford, 60, was alone in second after shooting a 3-under-par 69 over the 6,993-yard course. His two-day total was 142.

Four shots back at 143 were Bob Stone, Dan Sikes and Don January, followed by Orville Moody, alone at 144.

"I played a little better today," said Palmer, with a two-day total of 5-under 139. "I didn't have as many bad shots and I putted better."

Palmer got off to a fast start when he holed a 12-foot birdie on the first hole and then scored an eight-foot birdie on the par-5 three. He later fifth here last year, couldn't get his putting game on track.

"I never made one," he said. "I three-putted twice. I'm going to have to do better than that to finish tomorrow. I don't have any idea if anyone can catch (Palmer)."

Stone, who never has won a Senior tournament, produced a 73 Saturday, while Sikes shot a 71. January a 73 and Moody 74.

The three-day tournament concludes Sunday.

birdied No. 8, 11, 14 and 16.

His only bogies of the afternoon came on a pair of par-4 holes, 6 and 12. He three-putted on No. 6 and missed a six-foot putt for par on 12.

Despite his three-shot lead, Palmer refused to be overly optimistic about winning the $150,000 tournament for pros 50 or older.

"I don't think three shots gives you the driver's seat," he said. "But it's not the worst position you can be in. There are some guys out there capable of shooting some very low scores. I can't say that I'm in control."

Sifford, who has won two Senior events since 1975, played a steady three-birdie, no-bogey round. He scored his birdies on holes No. 8, 9 and 16.

January, who won a half doz-en Senior crowns in 1983 and finished

Have You Read Any Good Sidewalls Lately?

Maybe you didn't realize it, but there's a lot of good information on the sidewall of your tires.

The sidewall tells you the maximum inflation pressure recommended. The number of body plies used. The kind of cord. And more.

But most important, it tells you the brand name. That's especially critical since all tires look so much alike—on the outside.

Next time you read a sidewall, look for the name Goodyear. It's a brand name you can trust for sure.

Beaumont defending TL champion

Hyman batted .251 last year, but flirted with the .300 mark most of the first half of the season.

Six-five Ron Richardson and reliefer Ron Soff spent the season here, but lefthander Jim Boudreau was 3-0 after coming up late in the season. Mike Capel was 1-1; Joe Housey, 1-4, and Neil Bryant, 1-1, in short term stays with the Cubs.

TUESDAY'S opener marks the start of a 10-game home stand and, of course, San Antonio, a Dodger farm club, is always a contender. Last year, the Dodgers were 68-70, finishing third in the first half and second in the second half.

Most noticeable changes at Cubs Stadium this year will be the 38-foot high scoreboard, complete with computerized message center, that will loom in left field. And for fans who often who complained about not being able to hear the public address system in many locations, General Manager Bill Schammel reports the new system should be a 100 per cent improvement.

AS MIDLAND begins its 13th season in the TL, Carl Sawatski returns as president and the league resumes operations with no franchise or affiliation changes.

Defending champion is the Beaumont Exporters. The San Diego farmhands won the first half pennant, finished last in the second half and then beat El Paso (Brewers) for the TL West title. Jackson (Mets) beat Arkansas (Cardinals) in the TL East. Beaumont, which had moved from Amarillo for 1983, then swept Jackson, 3-0.

Earnest Riley of El Paso won the batting championship with a .349 average, beating out Carlos Ponce by one point. Tulsa's Kevin Buckley was the home run leader with 32 while Beaumont's Mark Gillaspie led in rbi with 122.

San Antonio's Sid Fernandez led the pitchers with a 2.82 and was traded by the Dodgers to the Mets organization in the off-season. His 13-4 record was also the best in the league.

Texas beats Yanks, rain

ARLINGTON — Wayne Tolleson slammed a bases-loaded double in the fifth inning to snap a 5-5 tie and give Texas an 8-5 win over New York in a rain shortened game.

The Rangers ended the tie in the fifth with a double by Tolleson into the right-field corner off reliever Jay Howell, scoring Larry Parrish, Gary Ward and Ned Yost.

The rains came with two outs remaining in the inning and umpires waited for an hour and a half before calling the contest.

The Rangers led off the scoring in the first inning when Buddy Bell came home on a double by Parrish and scored four more runs in two innings on an RBI triple by Billy Sample in the second and a three-run homer by Pete O'Brien in the third.

The Yankees rallied in the fourth with four runs. Dave Winfield singled home one run, Ken Griffey doubled in another and Roy Smalley singled home a third run and scored the fourth on an error.

Rangers starter Danny Darwin lasted 4 1-3 innings. Darwin was lifted during the Yankee rally in the fourth. Yankee starter Ray Fontenot also lasted 4 1-3 innings.

Red Sox 3, A's 0

OAKLAND — Bruce Hurst pitched a four-hitter and Tony Armas homered as Boston beat Oakland 3-0, handing the A's their first loss.

Hurst, a left-hander, gave up a bloop double to Mike Davis in the third inning and two-out singles to Bruce Bochte and Davy Lopes in the sixth and Dave Kingman in the ninth.

Armas' homer, was a line drive just inside the left-field foul pole with two out in the sixth off Mike Warren, 0-1. Boston also scored single runs in the third and fifth innings, rookie Jackie Gutierrez starting each burst with a single and walk.

Twins 12, Orioles 4

MINNEAPOLIS — Tim Teufel, Tim Laudner and Lenny Faedo hit home runs as Minnesota buried error-prone Baltimore 13-4, handing the winless Orioles their third loss.

John Butcher scattered six hits over eight innings. He came from Texas with pitcher Mike Smithson in an offseason trade that sent designated hitter Gary Ward to the Rangers.

Mike Flanagan was rocked for seven runs in the first two innings — three earned due to three Baltimore errors. Flanagan, who had a 14-game winning streak against the Twins dating back to 1977, lasted only 1 2-3 innings.

The Twins scored five runs in the second, loading the bases as Dave Engle walked, Gary Gaetti singled and Tim Laudner was safe on catcher Joe Nolan's error.

Faedo singled to score Engle and Gaetti, both Faedo and Laudner took an extra base when center fielder John Shelby bobbled the ball, Brown singled to score Laudner and, after Teufel walked, Kent Hrbek's single brought Faedo and Teufel home.

Midland loses

Whalen didn't back down from the problem. "We are worrying too much about other things and it's getting us hurt as a team. It is kind of a snowball effect. Our bench gets quiet, their's gets louder, the guys on the field feel abandoned."

BULLDOG NOTES - The district race is still open, but Whalen won't be able to write this one off. Sometimes, losses have a way of getting deep under skin. Whalen said it wasn't going to cause him any sleep loss, "But it might make me wish I had another job"...Magness swiped his first base of the year in the third inning...Daehling has walked only five batters in 11 innings...Wootan had walked only three batters in 16 innings prior to Saturday. Against Permian, he issued six...Magness' 2-for-2 performance will bolster a district batting average of .190.

Mavericks keep NBA Midwest hopes alive

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Mavericks kept their Midwest Division title hopes alive behind Rolando Blackman's 32 points in a 109-100 win over the Utah Jazz in National Basketball Association action Saturday night.

The victory, before a Reunion Arena sellout of 17,007, pulled Dallas within 1½ games of Utah with four games to play.

Reserve forward Jay Vinson added 22 for Dallas, which played without forward Mark Aguirre. Aguirre, the league's second leading scorer, sprained his right foot in Friday night's win over San Antonio.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Former Pittsburgh Pirates' pitcher Dock Ellis, treated four years ago for drug dependency, says he was under the influence of LSD when he pitched a no-hitter against the San Diego Padres in 1970.

Ellis, now the coordinator of an anti-drug program in Los Angeles, also told The Pittsburgh Press he was on pep pills when he intentionally tried to hit several Cincinnati Reds' batters, including Pete Rose and Johnny Bench, during a 1974 game.

Ellis, 39, said he didn't know until six hours before his June 12, 1970, no-hitter that he was going to pitch.

"I was in Los Angeles and the team was playing in San Diego, but I didn't know it," Ellis said in a story published in the Press' Sunday editions. "I had taken LSD . . . I thought it was an off-day. That's how come I had it in me. I took the LSD at 12 (noon).

"At 1, the girl (he was with) looked at the paper and said, 'Dock, you're pitching today.'

"That's when it was $9.50 to fly to San Diego. She got me to the airport at 3:30. I got there at 4:30 and the game started at 6:05 p.m. It was a twi-night doubleheader.

"I can only remember bits and pieces of the game. I was psyched. I had a feeling of euphoria. I was zeroed in on the (catcher's) glove. But I didn't hit the glove too much. I remember hitting a couple of batters and the bases were loaded two or three times."

Ellis said he never pitched again under the influence of LSD or alcohol, but was high on May 1, 1974, when he opened a game against the Reds by hitting Rose, Joe Morgan and Dan Driessen, walking Tony Perez on four pitches and throwing two balls to Bench before being removed by angry Pirates Manager Danny Murtaugh.

Rangers fail to live up to name

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

ARLINGTON - The baseball Texas Rangers got their nickname from an outfit that prided itself on the motto of "One Riot, One Ranger" but have hardly lived up to the monicker on or off the field.

In 11 dreary years for the Rangers of the American League, it's been a dozen managers, 222 players, three different owners, one second-place finish and no pennant cigar.

Not to mention the million dollars lost in mismanagement and sour contract deals.

The Rangers have been a circus of chuckles; a franchise without respect in the cutthroat circles of major league hardball.

NOW, BACKED by Eddie Chiles' wallet, the Rangers are going to run their defeat-tattered flag up the pole for the dozenth time.

The boat is loaded and if it goes down this time the franchise could possibly sink with it.

Not even Chiles can tolerate multi-million dollar losses year after year which has been the case recently for the Rangers.

Chiles has found the task of making the Rangers successful as difficult as working one's way from an oilfield roughneck to chairman of the board of The Western Co. of North America, which he did.

"Success is Mr. Chiles' primary goal for the Texas Rangers and there will be no bending of the resolve to achieve that goal," says the 1984 Ranger media guide.

And, now, they've really rolled the dice.

THE RANGERS have spent $10 million to improve Arlington Stadium.

They own the whole ballpark now, parking, concessions, suites, scoreboard, not to mention the broadcast and television rights.

They spent $6 million on a wrap-around scoreboard that is 29 feet atop the back row of the general admission area. There is a 100-foot score-by-inning section, not to mention the $2 million "Diamond Vision" screen which is 35-feet wide.

The Rangers constructed 54 new "Super Suites" and sold 53 of them by opening day for some hefty bucks.

If it didn't move, the Rangers painted it in the off-season in a most expensive redecoration of the cozy 36,000-seat Arlington Stadium.

The "new" emphasis in the front office has worked its way to the field where the Rangers have three "new" starters in shortstop Curtis Wilkerson, outfielder Gary Ward and catcher Ned Yost, and a "new" lawnmower to make the infield faster so routine grounders can become singles.

EVERYTHING was all clean and shiny and optimistic and youthful to start the season.

However, the front office has already booted several grounders and dropped a few routine pop ups.

Lines at the concession stands were three and one-half innings long for the opening 9-1 loss to Cleveland and there were no television or radio monitors so the hungry and thirsty fans could keep up with the action.

Parking was a nightmare because of untrained attendants and the loud speaker system was garbled so it was difficult to hear lineup changes.

In a behind-the-scenes tete-a-tete, Larry Schmittou, vice president of marketing and administration, took control of the press box away from The Baseball Writers Association of America without warning. A prote to the Commissioner of baseball pending. Hard feelings abou because the print media is n mixed with the electronic med both with different sets of deadlin and delivery.

However, it's the on-field perfo mance that counts.

THE RANGERS must start wi ning or at least become reasonab competitive because the fan patience has been thorough streched.

The Rangers drew 1.3 million fa with a big fade at the end and lo several million dollars.

But the pressure has never be heavier to win at Arlington Stadiu where the Rangers normally ha been a riot.

Flatlanders Club wins Texas Ski Council cup

Midland-Odessa's Flatlanders Ski Club won the Texas Cup, the top prize awarded by the Texas Ski Council, for the 1983-84 season. the cup was presented at the Final Showdown in Breckenridge, Colo., recently.

Mike Nance, president of the 250-member club, said Flatlanders earned more points per person than any of the other 13 clubs in the Texas Ski Council. Points were awarded through a standard National Standard Race course of 16 to 18 gates.

Points were compiled on five TSC trips to Keystone, Colo.; Sun Valley, Ida.; Crested Butte, and Heavenly Valley, Calif.

Ten club members must compete in TSC sponsored races and this was the first year the Flatlanders were able to compete against the council's larger clubs.

The club meets the first Thursday of each month. Officers for 1984-85 elected were: Mark Clark, Odessa, president; Chad Spears, Odessa, vice president; Valerie Piper, Midland, secretary, and Susan Tidwell, Midland, treasurer. For information, contact Nance (685 1776).

Lubbock winners

The Midland Boys Club took third place in Division II of the New Mexico/West Texas Area Boys Club basketball tournament at Lubbock. Maury Collins, Midland, was named to the all-tournament team.

Letter awarded

Robert Kelly, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mike Kelly of Midland, received his basketball pin at Orme School college-preparatory boarding school located on the Quarter Circle V Bar Ranch north of Phoenix.

Orme was the Independent School champions of 1984. Kelly, a senior, is serving his second term as student body president.

Rangers' peanut vendor canned

ARLINGTON (AP) — The Texas Rangers fired their No. 1 peanut salesman of a year ago after he wrote a letter to a newspaper complaining about the club's cutting vendors' commissions by 25 to 33 percent.

Bill Pratt wrote to The Dallas Morning News after the Rangers cut the commission of peanut vendors from 20 percent to 15 percent, and beer vendors' commissions from 15 to 10 percent.

His letter, criticizing the club for raising concession prices while cutting vendors' commissions, was published in Sunday's paper. Pratt got a telephone call the next day informing him that he had been fired, the News said in a story Friday.

Dave Wood, the club's director of food and beverage, confirmed that Pratt was the No. 1 peanut salesman of 1983 at Arlington Stadium and that he had been fired because of the letter he wrote.

The letter mentioned Eddie Chiles, the club's majority owner, and Larry Schmittou, the Rangers' vice president in charge of marketing and administration, by name.

"... So the next time you Ranger rans wish to buy something to munch on at Arlington Stadium, be resigned to digging in your pockets a little deeper," Pratt's letter said.

Bean ups lead to two

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Andy Bean rolled in a very long putt — perhaps 50 feet in length — on the final hole, completed a hard-won round of 72 and expanded his lead to two strokes Saturday in the third round of the Greater Greensboro Open.

Bean, seeking his first victory in two years, finished 54 holes in 210, six shots under par on the 6,984-yard Forest Oaks course.

Bean had a four-shot advantage at one point, but bogeyed the 14th from a bunker, then snatched a drive out of bounds and double bogeyed the 16th.

Buddy Gardner, now in his seventh season of PGA Tour activity without a victory, birdied the same hole and, the beneficiary of a three-stroke swing, suddenly found himself in a tie for the top.

Gardner, with a 70, was tied for second at 212 with David Peoples, who had a 71 in the brisk, breezy weather.

The group at 213, only three shots off the pace, included Jack Renner, veteran George Archer, Clarence Rose, Mac O'Grady and Scott Simpson. Archer, a former winner of this old event, closed up with a 68. Rose and Simpson had 70s. O'Grady shot a 71 and Renner 74.

Fred Couples, winner of the Tournament Players Championship last week, had a 71 and was at 214.

Three share first in Dinah Shore golf

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — JoAnne Carner and Pat Bradley, two of the LPGA's top players over the past decade, and Dale Eggeling, who has won just once since turning pro in 1976, were locked in a three-way tie for the lead Saturday after three rounds of the $400,000 Nabisco Dinah Shore.

Carner, who held a one-stroke lead over Bradley and Patty Sheehan heading into the round, shot a 2-under-par 70 over the Mission Hills Country Club course.

Bradley followed a second-round 66 with a 69 to move into the tie for the lead. The second consecutive low score helped her rebound from an opening 75.

With a 67, Eggeling also fought her way back, after a first-round 74. Looking for her first victory since 1980, she had shot a second-round 69.

Although Carner, an LPGA Hall of Famer, has won 39 tournaments since she joined the tour in 1970, the 45-year-old veteran has never won the Dinah Shore, the women's most prestigious event.

Lease to Own...

car leasing comes to Midland

Cheapy Car Lease has openned in Midland at the corner of Highway 80 and Midland Drive. They offer a new concept to buying an inexpensive second car or one for the working person. Their LEASE—PURCHASE is th economic way to own a car.

Bill Buttry, owner-operator, has many years of experience in the field of leasing cars and trucks. However, Mr. Buttry feels that now is the time to lease good quality used cars.

Explaining how the lease-purchase works Bill Buttry stated that at the end of the leasing term the lessee will receive clear title to the leased car for only $1.00. For a small down payment and (interest free) weekly, biweekly or monthly payments, it is a good way to own a car.

Cheapy Car Lease is located at 4400 West Highway 80 in Midland so why not drive out and take a look at the LEASE—PURCHASE program being offered by Bill Buttry. If you have any questions give Bill a call at 699-1772.

Cheapy Car Lease has brought the concept of quality used car leasing to Midland. For more information call Bill Buttry at 699-1772 or stop by the corner of Miland Drive and the North Service Road of Highway 80.

Bob Hawk offers monthly parking lot maintenance

With today's economy it is neccessary to use quality materials, have pofessionals install them and maintain them properly to get yur money's worth.

Bob Hawk and Associates are blacktop specialists, having been in the business since 1946. They do asphalt paving, sealing, trench patching, and drivway and parking lot construction, repair and maintenance. The most modern equipment is utilized to give you the fastest and most dependable service available.

Bob Hawk and Associates is home owned and operated, with each and every job given the time and attention to assure the absolute best of every time. With 37 years experience working with asphalt, Bob Hawk knows the properties and tendencies of asphalt, as well as the importance of proper maintenance and repair.

Along these lines, Bob Hawk has initiated a new service, parking lot maintenance. They will bring the lot back up to top shape. Once it is in excellent condition, Bob Hawk and Associates will maintain the lot to keep it that way. Once the three year contract is signed, they will, for a monthly fee, maintain your lot.

By having Bob Hawk maintain your lot you won't have the worries of trying to get someone out to repair that pothole that is getting bigger by the day, someone else out to reseal the asphalt and still someone else to stripe the lot. Bob Hawk does all of these automatically when they need to be done. Besides being more convenient for you it is also a good idea from a bookkeeping point of view. Once a contract is signed you will pay the same monthly fee for the next three years- putting an end to unexpected bills.

Weather and time can destroy asphalt if it is not cared for properly. For longevity it is important to keep the asphalt sealed with a impervious coal tar emulsion. This emulsion should protect against deterioration from gasoline, oil, jet fuels and other hydro-carbons that tend to deteriorate asphalt.

Bob Hawk and Associates has the equipment and the know how to save you money on expensive repairs or replacement of your parking lot investment to say nothing of the the enriched look and the ease of cleaning your parking lot.

Unlike city streets, traffic on a parking lot runs in definate patterns. Cars do not constantly change lanes in a parking lot.They follow the same paths and consequently only a very small area gets the traffic that is so vitally needed to keep the asphalt surface sealed. This is one reason why proper sealing and maintenance is so necessary. Bob Hawk and Associates have the professional crack routing and sealing equipment to properly repair and seal cracks in asphalt pavement. This is also the most important procedure to prevent moisture from entering the pavement and rendering the susbase unstable, which in turn causes more cracks and "alligatoring". They also furnish and install precast concrete bumpers and stripe parking lot stalls.

"Give us a call- We do it all" is their motto. If you are in need of these or are interested in the maintenance contact, give Bob Hawk a call at 694-6572.

Bob Hawk and Bob Hawk Jr., of Bob Hawk and Associates, are shown here with a paving machine. They are waiting to help you with your asphalt needs. They also now offer parking lot maintenance to keep your lot in top shape. Give Bob or Bob Jr. a call at 694-6572 today.

Vacuum Cleaner Shop offers customer service

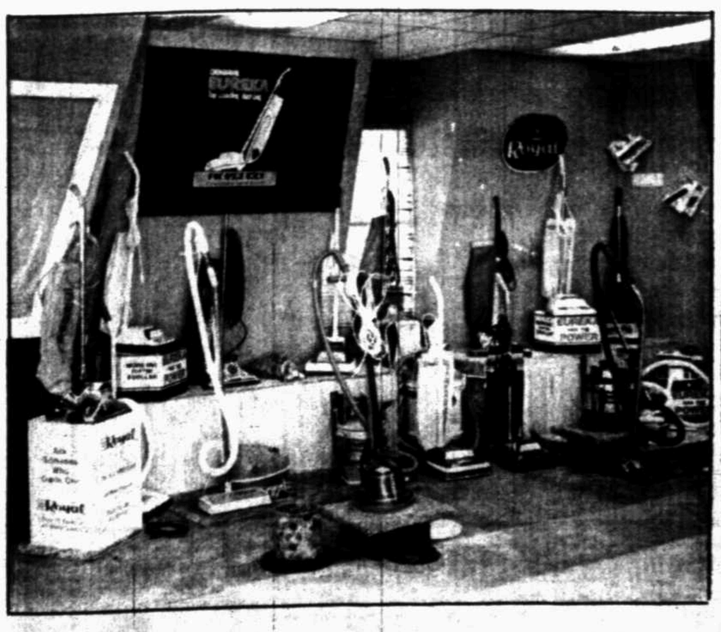

Ah, the days of years gone by.Man has advanced more technologically in the last century than in centuries and centuries before. Time Magazine recently released a special anniversary issue entitld The Most Amazing 60 Years in History. But for all of the advancement, people still look back and reflect upon the "good old days". Those were the days in past years when we didn't have to worry about the price of oil. We didn't sit back scared to death of ho woul nuke who first. Those were the days of penny candy. But most of all, those were the dayswhen the merchant had a sincere interest in both quality and service to his custmers. With inflation and the state of the economy today, everyone is trying to make as much money as they can, as easily as they can. This means that service and quality are fast becoming extinct. If you find a business that is truely concerned about each and every customer; one that still believes in service after the sell and selling only quality merchandise, you had better remember where yu found it. The Vacuum Cleaner Shop, 3102 . Cuthbert in Midland, is one place you had better remember.

The Vacuum Cleaner Shop has moved from their previous location at 3001 W. Cuthbert (corner of Gibson's parking lot) into a better locationat 3102 W. Cuthbert, across from Gibson's. The service you recieve at the Vacuum Cleaner Shop is of the type that you hardly see anymore. Owner Jack Snoddyfirmlybelieves in giving his customers the very best service possible anywhere. This includes not only sales of new makes and models, but inrepairing as well. The Vacuum Cleaner Shop offers probably the best repair service available. Service is available on all makes and models.

The Vacuum Cleaner Shop offers the largest selection of new vacuums with over 26 different models. Jack's shop was the P1 Sanitaire Blue Line Dealer in Texas in 1982, as well as the P1 volume vacuum cleaner shop in the Fort Worth branch. The record speaks for itself. Those who have discovered the Vacuum Cleaner Shop know the importanceof shopping somewhere that is truely concerned about the needs and desires of ach and every customer. And you have never known the meaning of service after the sell or repair service until you have been to the Vacuum Cleaner Shop.

Mr Snoddy's store caries all major door to door model vacuum cleaners at greatly reduced prices; most are up to ½ off. He carries many rebuilt Kirby vacuums which are probably better built thanmost new vacuums, as they are all metal construction. You can ven find a shop vac for your garage or commercial cleaners at the Vacuum Cleaner Shop. In addition, you can find a complete line of bags, belts and accessories for most models.

Before you buy any vacuum cleaner, check ith the Vacuum Cleaner Shop. Check on their repair service, and your vacuum cleaner could be as good as new ata fraction of the cost of a new machine. If you do need a new machine, come by the Vacuum Cleaner Shop andcompare the prices before you buy anywhere. The new building mans even better service to the custmer and more room for the merchandise, giving you a larger selection. And, of course,you can still find the pride in service and and the genuine concern for each and every customer. Come by 3102 W. Cuthbert or call 699-7555 today. The ays of quality, service and customer satisfaction can still be found if you just know where to look.

The Vacuum Cleaner Shop offers excellent repair service on all amkes and models, as well as 26 differnt new models to choose from. Come by 3102 W. Cuthbert or call owner Jack Snoddy at 699-7555.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Ann Richards shows pride in State Treasury's new record

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Treasurer Ann Richards knows how to get legislators' attention: promise to make money for them. She also knows how to get their respect: by delivering on what she promises.

A recent report by the State Treasury notes that with changes in investment authority approved by the Legislature, at Ms. Richards' request, the state increased its interest earnings, and for the last nine months of 1983 earned interest at the same rate as the nation's 10 largest money market funds.

Ms. Richards' theme since taking over as treasurer has been to see that the Treasury runs as efficiently as possible, and that the state gets the maximum return possible on money which it has available to be invested.

Lawmakers don't need much convincing on Ms. Richards' argument that every dollar earned by investing tax dollars is a dollar that won't have to raised by new or increased taxes. So last session, when Ms. Richards asked for new equipment and new authority, promising to return 10 times the cost of that appropriation, lawmakers readily agreed.

Ms. Richards now is urging lawmakers to look at additional authority for her office, including issuance of "cash management paper."

Ms. Richards points out that despite the fact that Texas' balanced budget allows state government to be "one of the healthiest in the nation," there is a mismatch in timing of expenditures and revenue which will cause a cash-flow problem in 1985.

The problem, she says, is like a business which has peak sales at Christmas, and peak costs in the summer so that in the fall there may be a shortage of cash.

In the state's case, expenditures from the General Revenue Fund (accounting for 58 per cent of Texas' overall spending) are "front loaded" in the fall, when the state spends hundreds of millions of dollars at the start of the school year.

But the greatest revenues come during the early summer months, with the General Revenue Fund at its critical point in April.

Transfer between other state funds is possible only under a number of restrictions, she notes.

The problem isn't new, but for the past 10 years, Texas has had an average cash surplus of $781 million in the General Revenue Fund, which has cushioned the cash flow problems.

But that cushion won't be there next spring, Ms. Richards says.

Issuance of cash management paper would be a solution to the immediate problem, she aruges, with the long-term solution to better match income and expenditure patterns.

Ms. Richards is working with the Joint Select Committee on Fiscal Policy and the Asset Management Committee on recommendations for such coordination.

"We are better able to bring to the Legislature the importance of addressing this," she says. "What it will do for us is to give us a better forecast, to be able to have longer maturity dates on our money, and as a consequence, a higher yield."

Ms. Richards says she's pleased with the success of efforts made thus far to overhaul the Treasury.

"Looking at the period since we've been here," she says, "the best single thing is the move we've made to get money into the Treasury, and to get it earning interest."

The Treasury had been taking up to two days, or even longer, to get checks deposited, she says. Now, she says, "no check stays here longer than 90 minutes."

Other efforts have been aimed at speeding collection of money from agencies operating outside Austin, starting with the Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

The "concentration account" system is allowing collections made by the agency one day to be moved into the Treasury the next day, Ms. Richard reports, and the program is being expanded to other agencies.

A new computer system, due to be installed this summer, should provide even greater efficiency for the agency, she reports.

Ms. Richards also plans to ask lawmakers for "cleaning up the statutes on unclaimed property," to "get some uniformity there."

And, she says, the Treasury will be looking at "any proposal that is going to increase the yield (on investments) to the state."

But Ms. Richards also feels the Treasury is making progress in some other areas which may not have received as much attention.

"I think we've made gains, not in a monetary way, but in commitment," she comments.

Staff morale at the Treasury is excellent, she believes, and she points to increased hiring of women and minorities which has occured under her administration.

"I think the statement we're making here is that if you give talented people an opportunity to produce, they will produce. I think we've showed we've got the talent."

EARNEST KIKER

Fertilization important in weed control

Green clumps of rescue grass continue to cause consternation. Most people incorrectly call the grass winter or annual rye. Annual rye is used for overseeding bermuda and St. Augustine to maintain a green turf for most of the year. Annual rye dies out as the day and night temperatures increase, allowing the greenup of bermuda and St Augustine. Annual rye is desirable. Actually, the rescue grass dies out also, but because of its clump nature most homeowners find it offensive.

Earnest Kiker

Control of lawn weeds is achieved through proper irrigation, fertilization and the correct use of herbicides. Most weeds causing problems got their start because of poor irrigation, insufficient mowing and incorrect fertilization last year. Thin, unhealthy turf allows weeds to establish and complete their life cycle releasing more seeds for continued problems.

Pre-emergent herbicides must be used early (January or February most years). Balan, Betasan, Dacthal and Betamec are pre-emergents that control annual grasses and broad leaved weeks. Balan and Betamec control annual grasses, while Dacthal and Betasan control some broad leaved species. The labels on these herbicides may indicate that treated areas cannot be seeded or reseeded for a specific period of time. Dacthal and Balan should not be used on dichondra.

Postemergent herbicides provide best weed control when weeds are actively growing, but before weed maturation is completed. MSMA or DSMA compounds are labelled by various companies. Repeat applications of adequate coverage will control sandbur, puncturevine (goat head) and nutsedge. Banvel and 2,4-D products also control a large number of broad leaved weeds.

Many summer problems are caused by improper use of herbicides. There are many weed killers on the market and they have very specific labels and restrictions. Nonselective herbicides (Roundup, Doomsday, Kleenup) must be used with great care. All these facts cause consumer confusion. To help eliminate this confusion you should:

1. Practice good turf management programs, including correct fertilization and irrigation, and frequent mowing.
2. Know your weeds and their time or predominance.
3. Know what herbicides are available and what they will kill.
4. Read ALL labels carefully, following recommended rates and cautions.
5. Realize the unavailability of "smart herbicides".

There will be a Tri-County (Midland, Upton and Reagan) meeting for all livestock producers Tuesday morning, April 10th, beginning at 8:00 a.m., at the Handley Driver Ranch, in southeast Midland County. Dr. Gary Sides, Area Extension Livestock Specialist and Dr. Allan McGinty, Area Extension Range Specialist, from Fort Stockton, will present the program on poisonous plants and livestock nutrition in relationship to these plants. The program will be presented in lecture form, as well as on the range observation.

To reach the Driver Ranch, go south on County Road 1379 until you pass the intersection of 1379 and County Road 1379. It will be the second cattle guard on the left. Watch for signs, as there will be markers up.

Earnest C. Kiker is Midland County Extension Agent for Agriculture.

Oilseed supply tightens

WASHINGTON (AP) — The world's oilseed supply has tightened because of drought damage to peanut and sunflowerseed crops in parts of Africa, says the Agriculture Department.

According to the department's latest estimates, total output in 1983-84 now is estimated at 164.9 million metric tons. That is down 8 percent from the record global production in 1982-83 of 179.1 million tons.

Spring is a season when many a young man has been known to fall head over heels, but it's not often one pedals heels over head. This youngster demonstrates his topsy-turvy alternative to an exercise bicycle at the Pease Elementary playground.

Party leader blasts 'liberal' label for SDEC

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Bob Slagle doesn't get upset over criticism of his actions as state chairman of the Democratic Party. He doesn't expect to please everyone. But he takes exception to his rule when the State Democratic Executive Committee comes under the ax.

Last week, Midlander Harris Kerr — a member of the SDEC from the 21st District — chopped the committee and Slagle for being too liberal and not considering West Texas in its decisions.

Most of those allegations are false, Slagle said Saturday. He was in Midland for an SDEC workshop on phone banks, voter registration, precinct organization, delegate selection and direct mail. About 60 persons from as far away as Fredericksburg and Dell City attended.

Slagle, who acknowledges Kerr's charge that he is a Walter Mondale supporter, said he will work for Gary Hart if he wins the nomination at the national convention. A straw poll of the 60 registrants at the workshop revealed an undecided West Texas — 22 for Mondale, 21 for Hart, 13 uncommitted with one of those leaning toward Hart, and one for Jesse Jackson.

THE SDEC ISN'T classified as liberal, moderate or conservative, said Slagle, who has been chairman for 3½ years. "There are at least 15 clearly identifiable conservatives and another 25 who would call themselves moderates," he said of the 66-member committee. "We're all pretty pragmatic and want to work in the best interests of the Democratic Party."

Dallas and Houston don't control the committee's votes, Slagle said in denying another of Kerr's charges. Dallas has six members, Houston nine. Nor does labor influence the SDEC's decisions, with seven members belonging to unions.

The last time the AFL-CIO was involved with a decision, of its seven members three voted with the union and four against. Slagle said when he was elected chairman in September 1980, he promised nothing to the special interest groups, and has since had open conflicts with the AFL-CIO.

WEST TEXAS, he contended has not been forgotten by the SDEC. "I've been in over 100 West Texas counties in the three years I've been chairman," and that includes Ector County twice and Big Spring five times. That doesn't include the list of small towns where he's gone instead of the candidates: Aspermont, Eden, Paint Rock, Silverton, Turkey, Floydada, Stamford.

Maneuvering by the State Democratic Party during the special election held when Phil Gramm jumped the fence to the Republican Party in 1982 was approved by the county chairmen in that district, according to Slagle. Kerr had lashed out at Slagle for deciding to turn money over to Dan Kubiak's campaign when there were eight other Democrats in the race.

Slagle explained there were only 35 days prior to the election, and with Mark White getting ready for his inauguration as governor a lot of Democrats had their attention on Austin and not College Station.

A study by the House Congressional Campaign Committee showed Gramm had 95 percent name recognition in his district, where he was seeking election on the Republican ticket The poll showed that of the nine Democrats, the two highest ranking were Kubiak with a 3-1 favorable rating and John Henry Faulk with a 3-1 negative rating.

"Faulk has been a friend of mine for a long time," said Slagle. After talking with the 14 county chairmen in the congressional district, "11 told me to designate Kubiak as the one to get behind, one said he had to pass and the other two had no opinion."

Midland area Democrats 'organizing'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Democrats are pounding away at Republican strongholds in Texas.

They're doing it in Midland, where Democrats on Saturday were organizing themselves and readying for a political takeover.

The Democrats are "definitely" making inroads in Midland County, a Republican garrison, said Janet Massey, chairman of the Midland County Democratic Party.

"Absolutely. I can see it right before my eyes," said Don Boydstun, Midland County coordinator for Lloyd Doggett's campaign for the United States Senate.

"I think we can attribute to Mr. Ronald Reagan all this unity and organization (within the Democratic Party)," he said at a party press conference in the Midland Center on Saturday afternoon.

"It (Reaganomics) obviously is not working here in Midland County, and it was supposed to work here most of all...We've had bank failures and a depression in the oil industry."

On Saturday night, about 100 Democrats, including candidates, rallied at their 1984 Campaign Kick-Off at the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 4149.

"It's coming up," Rick Kerr, 26-year-old justice of the peace candidate, said of the party. "This is the year of the Democrats."

State Sen. Bill Sims, however, said he views the people of West Texas essentially as political independents.

"I think the people of Midland are just like the people of West Texas. When they see a good horse, they like to tie onto it, like to ride a good horse," Sims said. "The people of West Texas have a very open mind about politics...They are very conservative."

Among the '84 Democratic Party campaign memorabilia circulating at the rally were "We Will! Help America Smile Again" buttons and bumper stickers.

To be auctioned in a fund-raising drive were "LBJ for the USA" bumper stickers and "Vote Adlai," "John F. Kennedy," and "Don't Blame me — I Voted Democratic" buttons and an unopened Billy Beer can.

Doggett, a 37-year-old lawyer and state senator, is challenging Bob Krueger and Congressman Kent Hance for the Democratic Party nomination for senator. Winner of that race will face the victor of the Republican Party primary. A frontrunner in the Republican race for that seat currently held by Sen. John Tower is U.S. Rep. Phil Gramm.

C. Fred Bush's story has good flavor, good purpose

C. Fred Bush

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

C. Fred, an unpretentious honey-colored, sad-eyed member of the George H.W. Bush family, has the household at his beck and paw.

In his 10 years with the family, he has lived in Peking, chewed up a fur coat, barged in on an African dance and has been misidentified as a cat in China and a golden retriever in the U.S. His life as the number one and only Bush dog is chronicled in a humorous, first-dog account known as "C. Fred's Story." The story of the vice presidential dog's life, written in "chewy" details and "edited slightly" by Barbara Bush was released last week by Doubleday.

Although C. Fred couldn't make the trip to publicize his book, Mrs. Bush is doing the rounds. She took a day off last week between appearances in New York, Washington and Houston to visit with her son, daughter-in-law and two grandchildren in Midland, a city where she once lived. B. Dalton and Waldenbooks in Midland Park Mall are ordering the book.

C. Fred (his name is explained in the book), is considered as much a member of the family as the sons and daughter and spouses. Speaking seriously of "Freddy" but with a sparkle in her blue eyes, Mrs. Bush explained that C. Fred's book began as a family joke. But once she decided to make it a reality, she put the book to a purpose — that all proceeds go to two national organizations to fight illiteracy.

The story behind C. Fred's story begins with a dog magazine which had asked "Freddy" some questions. "My office kept saying, 'You'd better answer the letter.' She whipped out an answer, but was told it would be better as a book.

The rest of the family began joking about Freddy's book and the vice president mentioned it offhand one day to a friend, Nelson Doubleday. Soon after, a woman from the book publishing company called Mrs. Bush.

"I'm very busy," she told the woman. But Mrs. Bush wrote out a couple of chapters in longhand, then typed it with two fingers on a speech-writing typewriter. Doubleday liked it.

Barbara Bush tells where the idea for a book by C. Fred, the family cocker spaniel, originated. Released last week, the author's proceeds will go to her campaign against illiteracy.

She'd rather be twins' 'Ganny' than Freddy's editor

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

"Who's this?"
"Ganny."
"Who's this?"
"Gampy."
"And who's this?"
"Gumpy."

The two girls look at their grandmother flipping through the pages of a book with the adoring looks that only 2-year-olds can give. And Barbara Bush hugs them both, praising everything they do and calling them "perfect in every way."

Mrs. Bush, the wife of Vice President George H.W. Bush, occasionally schedules a break from her duties and flies to Midland where she becomes simply "Ganny" to her two granddaughters and gets on the floor to play with them.

The twins of George and Laura Bush, the two girls recognize Ganny and Gampy through pictures and television. Barbara has blue eyes and light brown curly hair; Jenna has green eyes and straight blonde hair.

The visit is a personal time for Mrs. Bush, a time when she can do what she likes to do — be a grandmother.

"Make music for Ganny," she tells Jenna. And the blonde deftly puts a record on her tiny player. She bobs her head to the beat of "Camptown Races" while Ganny claps her hands and sings. Barbara, meanwhile, picks up two plastic phones and carries on a conversation.

Mrs. Bush picks up the book written by her dog, C. Fred, and asks the girls to name the people in the pictures. There's, naturally, Ganny and Gampy (the vice president), and Gumpy (C. Fred, because he's grumpy when the granddaughters visit).

But the outside world is not entirely forgotten.

As the grandmother points out people in the pictures she comes to one man both girls have heard of often.

"And this is President..." Ganny asks.

GARY OTT

Hey, staff, what's the good news today?

There has been a lot of criticism directed at the news media lately due to what many readers perceive as a lack of good news.

"All I ever see in the papers is murder, kidnappings and personal tragedies," the average citizen is apt to say. "Why don't you give us some good news?"

We in the news business then stare at our shoes and mumble something like, "Well, uh, when a plane lands safely at an airport, that's not news. When it crashes, it is." As you can imagine, that response makes us feel rather silly, but it has been the journalist's stock answer for so long we continue to use it. Call us creatures of habit.

Still, some newspapers are attempting to do something about this sorry state of affairs. One publication in Arizona, for example, recently published its "Good News" edition. In it, almost nothing appeared except happy stories, the kind that make you feel good about mankind.

Some of my fellow journalists have scoffed at this new approach, but not me. Indeed, I find it refreshing and, as a result, have recently conducted a tour of the newsroom in search of good news.

First stop: The wire desk, a place where world and national events transform into the printed word. In my most cheerful voice, I asked, "What's the good news today?"

The wire editor glared and then screamed something incoherent about a shooting spree in Houston and child-care officials in California being accused of taking pornographic photographs of small children. "Is that your idea of good news?" she exploded. "You think I enjoy publishing this morbid sickness?"

Of course not, I had to admit, "But what about politics? Anything happy there?"

"Sure," she retorted. "If you consider the 'sleaze factor' and mud-slinging happy news, we've got all you could possibly want."

"You know, happy news...weddings, engagements, that sort of thing. Surely you've got something for me," I pleaded.

"Get lost," she replied, dismissing me from her office. "I don't have time to deal with your petty philisophical questions. I'm working on next Sunday's cover page."

"Oh, really? What's it about?"

"Teen-age violence."

I headed for the business department but before I could ask my question, I overheard something about a bank collapsing and moved on.

My next stop was the sports department. After making casual conversation, I approached the subject, explaining in great detail what I was looking for.

The sports editor paused and gave it great thought. "No," he finally replied, "I can't think of anything."

He apologized, but I assured him his department was no different than any other and I started to leave.

"Wait," he shouted. "A bulletin just moved on the wire."

"Is it good?" I demanded.

He studied the story and finally exclaimed, "Yes, yes. It's happy news."

"Well, what is it?"

"Four major league baseball players who were convicted of cocaine possession have just been released from federal prison."

Slagle leads workshop, comments on allegations

"WE ALL KNOW and love (Hance) so well," said Boydstun, who predicted Hance would come in third in the Democratic Party primary. "He won't be in the runoff."

Boydstun described Doggett, state senator pro tem, as a "firm believer in 'pay as you go.' If you can't afford it, don't buy it." Despite that, he'll be cast as an ultra-liberal, he said.

Though he's unopposed in the May 5 Democratic Party primary election, 26-year-old David Smith already is campaigning to overthrow Republican State Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland in the Nov. 6 general election.

Smith, an Odessa lawyer, said Craddick has been in office 16 years and has offered the people "nothing."

"We haven't seen the water bill passed," Smith charged. "He's done something to make everybody in this county mad. No representation is bad representation...We're going to give more and better representation."

Smith said Craddick has sold a lot of mud (in the oilfield), but he hasn't done very good as a representative of the people of Midland County, and I think it's time for a change."

Again sighting on Craddick, Smith said "It's time for bank directors to stay home and take care of the banking business."

TWO CANDIDATES who are tussling with one another for the right to take on Republican Congressman Tom Loeffler of the 21st Congressional District in the general election also campaigned in Midland.

Joe Sullivan, a psychology professor at San Antonio College, said he wants the congressional job, since he wants to represent all the people.

"It takes an ordinary person to represent ordinary people, usually," he said.

His opponent, San Antonio building contractor Bobby Locke, a former Republican, said he became disenchanted with President Reagan and his failure to balance the budget and to "create an economic atomosphere that would be beneficial to everyone."

Sullivan, 53, said he got into the race after Locke had filed for candidacy.

"A lot of people can teach school quite well," he said, "but there are few people who are prepared or willing to run for public office...I want to represent all the people."

In 1984, "so many really heavy issues," such as taxation and national defense, confront the nation, said Sullivan, a retired U.S. Air Force Colonel and minister. He said the American people are "over taxed," while the big corporations and the wealthy are "not paying their share. I don't think the American people can take much more taxation...We want responsible government."

Sullivan said he's really running against two Republicans: Locke in the Democratic Party primary and, he hopes, Loeffler in the general election.

"YES," said Locke. "That's a fact (that he's an ex-Republican). There's no doubt about it."

He twice was a Republican congressional nominee.

But he said he switched political parties because Reagan did not make good his promises to balance the budget, to improve the economy for the benefit of all and to create less government and to effect less governmental interference in private lives."

Locke said the Reagan administration in almost four years has spent about a trillion dollar on defense. "And our military is not in any better posture than it was then (when Reagan took office in 1981.)"

Campaigning in Midland was Justice Sam Houston Clinton of the nine-member Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

Clinton, 60, who has been on the bench since 1979, said his marks are "hard work and dedication to productivity."

He views his role in part in making "the law more certain, so people will know...the certainty of the rules...the predictability of the law."

Clinton is opposed in the Democratic Party primary by 155th State District Court Judge Oliver S. Kitzman of Waller County in Southeast Texas. Winner of that race will go up against Republican Judge Virgil E. Mulanax of Gilmer in the general election.

In his political assaults, Kitzman has accused Clinton of being "verbose" in his opinions and of "demanding perfection in the trial court."

Of the verbosity charge, Clinton cited a comment by Roy R. Ray, Southern Methodist University emeritus professor of law. Ray wrote that Clinton's opinions "demonstrate a devotion to scholarly research and lucid expression...You have brought a real distinction and integrity to the court."

As to the "perfection" charge, Clinton said: "I suppose we ought to do the best that we can and be as demanding as we can."

Although Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox and Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro were to have attended the Midland County Democratic Party rally and press conference, they didn't show up.

"We had last-minute cancellations from Mauro and Mattox," said Ms. Massey, Democratic Party chairman, "and they gave us rain checks...It was something that they could not help, and it had to do with state business."

Midland's Democrats planning 'takeover'

Money from the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee went to Kubiak. Because of these tactics, Slagle contended the Democrats held Gramm to a 55 percent win rather than the 65 percent that was expected. Slagle didn't expect the Democrats to win the seat from Gramm. "Just to hold his margin of victory down, all the Democrats felt good about the 55 percent. If I had a choice to make again, I'd do it again."

THE DEMOCRATIC chairman denied Kerr's charge that the SDEC has selected Bob Krueger as the party's nominee for U.S. Senate. In fact, he said, all three Democratic candidates (Krueger, Kent Hance and Lloyd Doggett) in that race have donated money to the computer project in which they can buy lists of voters' names for their phone, mail and walk campaigns.

Nor did Slagle use the name of the Democratic Party in pushing the State Legislature to vote in favor of four year status for The University of Texas of the Permian Basin, he said. Dan Hemphill of Odessa is a friend of Slagle's who asked the chairman to help them on the UTPB issue, but didn't include the party. "It was some Odessa people who were saying it was a Democratic vs. Republican fight. Mark White is the one who authorized his people in Ector County to say he was for four-year status when he was campaigning."

A gag rule which Kerr complained about was in effect before Slagle was elected, but the chairman supports it. It's the same as when someone votes in the Democratic primary they agree to support all Democratic candidates, he said.

Slagle said unequivocably he is a Mondale supporter. And he will support Hart if the national convention selects the Colorado senator.

But he disagreed that the caucus system this year on selecting delegates is any different than four years ago. In 1980 there was a place on the primary ballot for voters to mark the candidate they preferred, but it didn't affect the delegate selection process. They still were picked in caucuses starting at the local precinct.

In 1980, 90 percent of the precinct conventions voted the same way as the precinct went that day on the ballot, according to Slagle. "The precinct leaders and people who go to their conventions tend to be for the person that can carry their precinct."

Slagle has discovered that politics "is a contentious area where people have strong opinions. You get a lot of personal animosity. Kerr is the only one (on the SDEC) I know that's mad.

"As chairman of the SDEC, I make hundreds of decisions about programs and what the party will do," Slagle said. "They have the potential to make someone angry. If only one member of 66 is mad, I don't feel so bad about it."

Assistant city editor earns honors in TPW contest

Lana Cunningham, assistant city editor of the Reporter-Telegram, has received four awards in the Texas Press Women annual communications contest. Winners were announced Saturday night during the TPW convention in El Paso.

Other area winners included two from Stanton.

Ms. Cunningham received two first place awards and two seconds. The first places were for special articles-agriculture and special articles-other subjects.

Entered in the first category were stories on the drought in West Texas last summer and congressional attempts to find monetary relief. Three articles covering the efforts by Midlanders to save the First National Bank of Midland and the resulting collapse were entered in the second category.

A second place award was given in spot news for newspapers over 25,000 circulation for a story on the plane crash that killed the KOSA-TV news crew. And the other second place award was given in the category of government-politics, which included stories on taxing tips, cutting MidTran and recalling John F. Kennedy.

Priscilla A. Williams, formerly of the Stanton Reporter, received a first place for an article in a general magazine. "Helping Hands Across West Texas." She also received three second places: news reporting for newspapers under 5,000 circulation, feature story in a magazine for general or specialized circulation and editing a page or pages regularly.

Wanda Kilmer Oglesby received a first place for a short fiction book, "Grampa and Billy Clyde."

Dog's book lets Barbara Bush share concern

"We had so many pictures and I realized one day we really had a marvelous record; that he really did have a book here," said Mrs. Bush.

THE PICTURES tell C. Fred's story — and that of his globetrotting family — their life in Peking, his "father's" job with the CIA, his marriage, his life in the vice presidential house and the famous people who know him.

Publishing was a whole new world to Barbara Bush, who had to wait one year after turning in the manuscript and photos for the final version to come off the press. "It was like birthing a baby. It was really fun."

But Mrs. Bush is taking her role in this book promotion as simply a fill-in for C. Fred. "He realizes if it weren't for his father, no one would be interested in him," she said with a laugh, explaining that, yes, she and the vice president are known to Freddy as his parents.

She hopes that people who buy the book will get a laugh from it, and that enough are sold to assist the fight against illiteracy. She selected Laubach Literacy Action and Literacy Volunteers of America, Inc. as recipients of the funds "because they are national organizations."

IF PEOPLE cannot read or write, they drop through the system, she said. In her campaign against illiteracy, some progress has been made.

She cited programs asking teachers to help illiterates, college students to assist and projects that once were localized now taking on a national scope. A toll-free number has helped identify people who need help and those who want to volunteer. That number is 1-800-228-8813.

"You can call it and find out where the nearest program is," said Mrs. Bush.

She believes newspapers can be the best tool for teaching people because "it has something for everyone. If a boy is interested in sports, it's in there. If girl is interested in fashion, it's in there."

The realization that spending money to educate employees will improve productivity and morale is spreading. Mrs. Bush pointed to a Pratt and Whitney factory in Hartford, Conn., which has started continuing education programs on the plant grounds. During a round table discussion, she heard from a man who had done nothing more than carry crates because he couldn't read. Now, he is floor manager for his department.

And there was the woman who called herself the late bloomer. Chuckling, Mrs. Bush said the woman writes her letters every week describing in detail what she has done. The woman who once couldn't read or write is now teaching others and serving as a testimony for the program.

STUDIES SHOW the factory "has happier employees, a smaller turnover and fewer mistakes."

Texas faces a major problem with illiteracy because of its border with Mexico and the high number of illegal aliens who cross each year into the Lone Star State, said the vice president's wife.

"That adversely impacts Texas and adds a burden to our state," she said. "It adds a burden to the school system that's almost insurmountable. But in school systems, such as Midland where parents take an active part" the illiteracy can be attacked.

"A lot of people my age say their chidren are through school and their grandchildren are taken care of" and they aren't affected by the problem so they don't get involved.

"But I'm affected if my next door neighbor's child can't read. Between 60 to 80 percent of the illiterates can't get a job so they resort to something outside the system" for survival and that is crime.

"If I want to be safe, I want people to read."

And so does C. Fred.

Coastal villages favor gambling

TIKI ISLAND, Texas (AP) — Residents of two Galveston-area villages approved non-binding referendums on legalized gambling Saturday.

Tiki Island residents voted 100-51 in favor of the measure and residents of Crystal Beach, located on the west end of Galveston Island, approved a similar prorposal 140-63.

The referendum ballot in Tiki Island asked voters, "Do you favor government control of legalized gaming within the village of Tiki Island?"

Aldermen set the vote shortly before a similar measure was defeated by about a two-to-one margin in Galveston in January.

The Texas Legislature still would have to approve legalized gambling for the villages.

One of the main supporters of the measure in Tiki Island, restaurant owner Lloyd Lambert, had predicted the referendum would pass by a large margin. Lambert said many residents were upset because they could not vote in the Galveston election.

In nearby Galveston, residents elected the city's first woman mayor as Jan Coggeshall defeated former state Rep. Doug McLeod 5,971 to 5,048.

Hearing set on federal grants

A public hearing on federal block grant funds for three state agencies will be held Wednesday in Abilene.

The hearing concerns the Commission on Alcoholism, the Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation and the Department of Community Affairs (Drug Abuse Prevention Division and Economic Opportunity Division), which are applying for federal funding. The public is invited to comment on the intended use of the money.

Preliminary summaries of the intended use of the funds for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, 1984 will be provided at the hearing, which will be held in the Taylor County Courthouse at 300 Oak St. from 10 a.m. to noon.

Television, other items taken from hotel room

A color television set worth $350 was taken from a room at the Continental Inn at 2500 Commerce sometime between midnight and 8:30 a.m. Saturday, according to police.

Also taken were an end table, a lamp and some blankets. Total value of the lost items, including the TV stand which was destroyed, was $577.

Many Midlanders have taste for surplus cheese, butter

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Judy Bolten's job of substance involves food.

"Everybody wants to get in on the cheese and butter," she says. "They want whatever we are giving away."

This Tuesday, the giveaway will amount to about a ton of process cheese food and butter from federal surplus foodstuff stored in Lubbock. The dairy products will be distributed from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the El Rancho Grande Club (Eastside Lions Club Building) at Scharbauer Drive and Lamesa Road. There, Ms. Bolten, director of the Midland Neighborhood Center of West Texas Opportunities Inc., a community-action agency; volunteers from St. Vincent de Paul of Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church, Midland; and Catholic Charities of Odessa will be distributing the cheese and butter to more than 300 Midland families.

Judy Bolten

They have qualified for the food because they can't afford it.

A minimum of five pounds of cheese food and at least one pound of creamery butter will be distributed to each family. A similar amount may be doled out monthly to each family. As they become available, the food products could be expanded to cheddar cheese, corn meal, flour, honey, dried milk and rice.

Poverty-level individuals, including the handicapped and elderly, couples and families who meet specified low-income requirements are eligible to receive the food. Those people who are recipients of federal Food Stamps, Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), Supplemental Security Income (SSI) and Medicaid automatically are eligible.

Ms. Bolten, who has been on the job since mid-March, has launched an outreach program to inform people about the three programs in her charge: the Emergency Food Assistance program, the weatherization program and the Energy Crisis Intervention (ECI) program. ECI provides funds to restore electric and gas services to residences or to pay portions of past-due bills if applicants meet income requirements.

As needed, cases may be referred to the Salvation Army, St. Vincent de Paul organization or other charities where help may be available.

Among other places, Ms. Bolten has spread word of the cheese-and-butter program at Hillcrest Manor, a home for the retired and handicapped, and Casa de Amigos, another community service for the poor, aged and handicapped, and has put notices in church bulletins.

"I've done a little bit of outreach," she said, "but mostly it's been word of mouth."

"Most of them (the elderly) are living on fixed incomes, so they qualify," said Ms. Bolten, 27. "If they had some investments that are paying off, they (usually) don't qualify."

Ms. Bolten suspects she has barely made inroads in informing Midland's poor people of community and governmental benefits that are available to them.

"Service to the poor, the elderly and the handicapped is the greatest need Midland has," she says. "A lot of people in welfare work feel the way I do."

An individual who earns less than $527 a month can qualify to receive the cheese and butter. For each additional member in a household, the income criterion for receiving the food increases by $182 a month.

To her, the work is pressing and important.

"This is the first job of any substance I've had." In a prior job, her role as an administrative assistant to a mechanical engineer was "keeping somebody's office organized."

"This is much more interesting; it has substance. The days are different, and they are fast. There's not enough time in a day to see the people."

By mid-year, Ms. Bolten expects up to 1,000 Midland families will be participating in the cheese-and-butter program. In Odessa, almost 2,000 families sign up to receive monthly food assistance through Catholic Charities.

Applicants for food assistance may sign up each quarter at Ms. Bolten's office, 1302 N. Big Spring St., and may telephone her at 682-8126. In addition to Tuesday's distribution, food is to be handed out again May 8 and June 12.

"They don't seem to mind the paperwork," she says of the poor. "They're just glad it (the food) is there."

Coin traders just 'grown up' collectors

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Ask most coin collectors why they do what they do, and they'll shrug their shoulders and fumble for an answer.

Not Val Kotrous.

"I think man's urge to collect goes back to the cave man days — the urge to accumulate something of value," he said Saturday at the second annual Midland Coin Show at Midland Center. Val is president of the Midland Coin Club, which is sponsoring the event.

More than 40 coin dealers from Texas, Arizona and as far away as Colorado are in town for the event, which continues today from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

"We travel almost every weekend," said Bill Klein of Albuquerque, N.M., who with his brother Ken was presiding over three tables piled high with rare coins, paper currency, political buttons, medals, tokens and even beer labels.

"It started out as a hobby, but eventually we got so much stuff we had to start selling just to support our hobby," said Bill.

Gus Ganze, from Odessa, didn't travel quite as far as the Kleins to get here, but then, he doesn't deal coins full time, either.

"I travel one or two weekends a month," said Gus, who works for a petrochemical company. Like most dealers, Gus started out as a collector.

"What generally happens is that you eventually have a problem (with duplicate coins), so you start selling the duplicates. Eventually, you start buying to sell."

History is part of the appeal of coin collecting, according to Gus. He displays an 1875 20-cent piece which was almost identical in size to a quarter.

"History repeats itself. People rejected this coin because it was the same size as a quarter. Sound familiar?" he asks, holding up a 1980 Susan B. Anthony dollar.

Many coin collectors concentrate on foreign coins, Val said, because American coins haven't been redesigned much in recent years.

"A lot of foreign coins are works of art. Our coins have been kind of blah for the past twenty years, so collectors are really glad that they're finally coming out with some commemorative coins."

He mentioned the recent George Washington commemorative 50-cent piece, and the series of coins based on the theme of the 1984 Olympics, which is also the theme of this year's coin show.

"They're finally coming out with some interesting and evolving designs," said Val.

The Olympic coins and thousands of other rare and beautiful specimans will also be on display today, and there's no charge for the public — you don't even need a coin to get in.

Vacant house destroyed by fire

From Staff Reports

A vacant house at 924 N. Weatherford was destroyed Saturday night by a fire of unknown origin, fire officials said.

No one was injured by the blaze, which was reported at 6:58 p.m., but a fire department spokesperson described the house as "a total loss." The house was unoccupied and the owner is unknown.

Five units and the batallion commander responded to the fire, which was put out by 8:08 p.m. A house at 922 N. Weatherford owned by Ciro Sanchez received minor damage to its north side, but its occupant, Esther Rubio, was unhurt.

Channel-2 counts on Lunn to make ratings lunge

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Although one side won't talk about it and the other won't say so directly, Channel-2's acquisition of Channel-7's popular, longtime weathercaster J. Gordon Lunn signals a sharp escalation in the ratings battle between the two stations.

In an on-air announcement last week, Channel-2 said Lunn would be going to work for the ABC affiliate April 23. He's been with Channel-7, the CBS affiliate, for six years and has achieved high audience appeal.

So much so that Channel-2 News Director Mike Barker says:

"Polls show we're the news leader in Midland-Odessa and that all we needed to round out our news team was J. Gordon Lunn.

"He's a personality who's very well-known in the local market. He's by far the most popular of the three weathermen. People watch us for news but turn to 7 for the weather."

Channel-7 News Director Jon McCall declined comment.

Other than to say "an equitable agreement" had been reached between Lunn and the station, Barker won't comment on how much it cost to obtain the 45-year-old Greenville, Miss., native whose background in the entertainment industry dates back to his high school days.

Barker also won't admit that acquiring Lunn was a coup. He won't even acknowledge that there's a ratings war going on. The closest he'll come to saying it is: "All three stations are in a competitive situation. That's the nature of the business."

The third station is Channel-9, an NBC affiliate that ranks third in the number of adults who watch the news at 6 and 10 p.m.

Channel-7 has long dominated the ratings, with Channel-2 coming in second. But, says Barker, "We've been on a continuous rise for the past 1½ years."

One example of that claim comes from the latest Arbitron survey. For February 1983, it showed Channel-2 with a 15 share of the market for its 6 p.m. newscast. Channel-7's share was 52, while Channel-9's share stood at nine.

In February of this year Channel-2 showed a 22 share, with Channel-7 declining to a 45 share. Channel-9 had dropped to a six share.

Figures for the 10 p.m. news during the same period, however, show a one-share gain for Channel-2, with Channel-7 jumping to a 54 share and Channel-9 registering a 12 share.

One reason for the fluctuations between the 6 p.m. and 10 p.m. figures may have been the Olympic games, which were broadcast by Channel-2.

"It kicked some of our newscasts back a half-hour," said station Manager John Foster. "People may have turned to another channel or gone to bed early."

The reason ratings are so important is that the larger audience a station has, the more it can charge for its commercials. Channel-2, for instance, derives about 26 percent of its total ad revenues from its local and national newscasts.

But adding J. Gordon Lunn to the news staff isn't the only method Channel-2 is using to attract a bigger audience.

On Feb. 27, the station was purchased by Telepictures Corp. — an international firm that specializes in syndicating such popular TV shows as "Here's Lucy" and "More Real People."

One of the company's first moves was to pump $800,000 into Channel-2's capital improvements program. "We're the first TV station they bought," said Barker. "They're buying others, but we're their flagship station."

Free seminar on data processing offered at MC

By H.A. TUCK

Data processing is a growing field, with lots of career opportunities available. People who would like to know more about jobs in this field are invited to attend a free, one-hour seminar from 12:30-1:30 p.m. Tuesday in Room 106, Occupational/Technical Building.

Debbie Allmon, a Midland College instructor in data processing, will make the presentation about various employment fields, education or experience required, and salary ranges. She has 12 years experience in the field, which allows her to relate the needs and opportunities in the business world.

MC received its 1984-85 catalogs last week and should have its summer bulletins within a couple of weeks. Dalton Harvey, a part-time student, took the striking catalog cover photo.

Of course, there's always at least one goof in such a publication, regardless of how many times it's proofed. This catalog's mistake should prove to be interesting in December 1985, when the calendar shows Dec. 23 on Monday and also on Tuesday. However, the week ends properly, since there is no December 27 for the month. Most would agree it's better to eliminate December 27 than, say, December 25...and most of us can use an extra day just prior to Christmas for that last-minute shopping. After all, Dec. 27 is only useful for another minor football bowl game.

EDUCATION

An exhibition of art work in the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, will stimulate your imagination or have you scratching your head. Either response makes it worth your time to view the contemporary prints by Richard Ash and the watercolors by Elizabeth Yarosz. They are members of the art faculty at Midwestern University, Wichita Falls.

For this display, the McCormick Gallery is open Sunday from 1-5 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m., Friday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. and Saturday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m.

This show ends April 19, to be followed by the spring semester Student Show April 25-May 11.

MC tennis players wrap up their conference play this week as they host New Mexico Military Institute on the MC courts at 1:30 p.m. Monday before going to Levelland on Tuesday for matches with South Plains College.

Coach Joe Williams is preparing his charges for the Region V men's and women's tournaments in Waco April 27-28. The top two teams from those events advance to the NJCAA national tournaments, which will be held in Ocala, Fla. The women's national tourney is May 14-18 and the men's tournament is May 21-26.

There's a conference tournament slated April 20-21, but that is primarily for individual honors.

At 3 p.m. today the Commercial Music Department is having its spring concert in the Allison Fine Arts Building recital hall. Of course, it's free and open to the public. Ron Franklin, who has really moved the Commercial Music program along, will have several groups performing. They'll play country and western, bluegrass, rock, and Latin American tunes.

With their new recording studio, the Commercial Music Department students now can learn several facets of the music business in addition to performance. And that's the goal of the department: to teach students about the business side, recording, management, and other parts of being a professional in the music industry.

Everyone is excited about the construction of the Health Sciences Building, the first major instructional facility construction project since the Allison Fine Arts Building, Chap Center, and the addition to the Occupational/Technical Building were built. It's a much-needed addition and will free up some space for other needs.

The facility will have a 100-seat lecture hall that should be used by both the college and the community.

Library's Friends to discuss plans

From Staff Reports

Midland County Commissioner Durward Wright, County Librarian John Deats and Library Advisory Board Chairman Mary Jane Young will discuss plans for the Midland County Public Library at 7:30 p.m. Monday.

The occasion will be the annual meeting of the Friends of the Library in the Girl Scouts' Midland Service Center at 901 W. Dengar Ave.

Durward Wright

John Deats

Mary Jane Young

At the meeting, members of the Friends, the Library Advisory Board membership and others interested in fate of the library may submit library-related suggestions and make inquiries into library services and facilities, according to Rob Sutphen, president of the Friends' Board.

"The purpose of the meeting," said Sutphen, "is to let people who use the library communicate with the library leadership and to express their feelings on the present and future library services and needs."

The meeting is open to members of the Friends and Library Advisory Board and others who are interested in the library.

Earlier in the 1980s, library patrons had promise for a new, multi-story library to replace the 1957-vintage downtown library. But those hopes fated with the decline of the [illegible] resultant recession.

At present, a library committee is studying the continued maintenance of the library, the possible establishment of branch libraries to serve the expanding community and is speculating on when economic times again might be conducive to a new central library.

BIG 2 NEWS SHOWS YOU HOW TO QUIT SMOKING!
Starting Monday, April 9th at 10 pm join Mike Barker for his five part series: "Smoking . . . How to Break the Habit Before it Breaks You."

A free, one week plan that works!

Stop smoking starting Monday on Big 2 News at 10 p.m. News Anchor Mike Barker, a heavy smoker for many years, will show you the steps in this unique stop smoking plan as he tries to quit along with you. Big 2 News designed this unique television plan with the help of The American Lung Association. It's free. A one week plan that can make you a permanent ex-smoker by the end of next week.

Pull this ad and use it every day as you participate in the Big 2 News stop smoking plan.

But before you do anything else, think of all the reasons why you want to quit smoking. For example, "fear of heart disease and cancer," or "don't want my children to copy me."

Having strong motives is the first step toward making you an ex-smoker. So in the space below, write down the reasons you want to quit.

Your reasons for quitting:
1 _____
2 _____
3 _____

Day 1.

Keep a record.
Keep a smoking diary. Keep a record for the next five days of every cigarette you smoke. Write the time in the form below and write down what you were doing when you lit up in the "situation" column.

Then, using the scale below, write down the intensity of each smoking urge. Example: if you smoke after dinner and want the cigarette a lot, that's a 4 on the intensity scale. Use the intensity scale below to make entries in your Smoker's Diary.

Intensity scale: "I want a cigarette
1 a little (not really at all)
2 somewhat (perhaps)
3 moderately (a vague desire)
4 a lot (a need)
5 badly (a craving)

Day 2.

Know your habit.
In your smoking diary you will see a pattern of situations that "trigger" your urge to smoke. If you look at these things you were doing when you lit up you will discover certain situations "trigger" your desire. Some of the "triggers" are stressful situations like getting stalled in traffic jam. Some "triggers" are relaxed situations like having a cup of coffee.

Look at your Smoking Diary and see what situations made you want to smoke. Write those "trigger" situations in the form below.

Trigger situations:
1 _____
2 _____
3 _____
4 _____
5 _____
6 _____
7 _____
8 _____

Day 3.

Do something instead.
There are smoking times when you're under stress and smoking times when you're relaxing. This step will teach you ways, other than smoking, to deal with stress and "relaxing" situations. We'll show you how to cope with both situations.

Step one: Learn to relax. When you're feeling stress, choose one of these exercises:
a) concentrate your thoughts on something pleasant
b) tense and relax your muscles
c) breathe deeply

Step two: Do something else. When you find yourself in a relaxed situation such as having a cup of coffee, watching TV, or having a drink, look for other ways to relax.

Day 4.

Learn to quit permanently
Most smokers can quit smoking, but not permanently.

But one way to improve your chances of becoming a permanent ex-smoker is to predict the things that might in the future tempt you to smoke.

Step one: List what those future temptations might be.
1 _____
2 _____
3 _____
4 _____

Step two: Write down a game plan. List the things you plan to do in the future when you are tempted.
1 _____
2 _____
3 _____
4 _____

Day 5.

Sign a contract. Do it!
This is quitting day. You started this program wanting to quit. You knew it wouldn't be easy. You're much more conscious about reaching for that cigarette. Now you can understand your habit through your Smoker's Diary, and we've given you the necessary skills to become a permanent ex-smoker.

Step one: List your rewards. Write down all the benefits for not smoking.
1 _____
2 _____
3 _____
4 _____
5 _____

Step two: Sign a contract. Signing your name to this contract is the hardest part of all. A tough, "negotiated" agreement which is a personal commitment to yourself that you'll never smoke again. Do it now.

A different kind of luxury car.

The 1985 Buick Electra.

No longer can a luxury car be judged by the thickness of its seats and the smoothness of its ride alone. Now there is the new Electra. Of course, its seats are comfortable and its ride unruffled. That's to be expected from any car bearing the name Electra. But now there's more. There's the response of Multi-port Fuel Injection. The precision of power-assisted rack-and-pinion steering. The traction of front wheel drive. And the ride of a four-wheel independent suspension.

30 Automobiles

AFTER LOOKING AT THEIRS, MAYBE WE SHOULD CHARGE MORE FOR OURS.

The Volvo Diesel and the Mercedes 300D are both well-appointed diesel automobiles.

The Volvo, for example, comes with a long list of standard equipment including air conditioning. Power windows and door locks. A sunroof. And an electrically-heated, orthopedically-designed driver's seat.

Of course, the 300D comes with an impressive list of standard features too.

But what makes the 300D so exceptional is not what it comes with, but what it goes for. More than twice the price of the Volvo.

So if you're in the market for a roomy, well-equipped diesel that's built to last, you can spend a small fortune on a Mercedes.

Or you can make the much wiser purchase and buy a Volvo. Or two.

"WE WANTED A QUALITY LIFESTYLE, NOT GIMMICKS AND GIVEAWAYS..."

"...That's why, when John and I were transferred to Midland, we chose to live at Oakridge Apartments. Sure, we passed up a few gimmicks and giveaways offered by the other communities. But what we got instead is an apartment community superior to anything else we saw. New on the market this year, Oakridge Apartments are bright and beautiful with sparkling new amenities and lots of extras. But more than that, Oakridge is a real quality neighborhood. The people out here are just great, and the management team is the best we've ever had."

1-, 2- and 2-bedroom studio apartment homes are available now. Take Loop 250 to N. Holiday Hill Road and look for the giant American flag.

PRIVATE PROPERTY WEEK

REALTORS, real estate professionals who are members of the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS, invite you to observe Private Property Week, April 8-14. This week long observance reaffirms the rights that come with owning property. For most of us this means a home of our own.
The rights that attend ownership are precious and must never be taken for granted. Rather, they must be protected and preserved for future generations.

Join us in this year's observance of Private Property Week.

WHEREAS, Owning one's home and preserving these rights fosters democracy because it stimulates individual decision-making that collectively affects the well-being of our community; and

WHEREAS, Each year REALTORS nationwide observe Private Property Week and celebrate the eligibility of all our citizens to own real property;

NOW THEREFORE, I, G. Thane Akins, Mayor of the City of Midland, Texas do hereby proclaim the week of April 8 - 14, 1984 to be:

Still the American Dream.
Owning your own home.

Your Home.

Home is where your heart is, but more than that it's a source of pride, of a feeling of permanence and security. Home brings a new spirit of caring, about yourself, family, neighbors, your community, your country. It's a place to dream in, laugh in, feel free in, safe in, teach in and set good examples in. Home, an investment in the truest sense, making possible the seemingly impossible, your stake in America's future. Home is where your heart is, and more, much more.

The blossom of a scented-leaved geranium, though the fragrance is released only when the flower is touched, is unique to each plant. Blossoms have been identified in different colors and patterns. Generous amounts of the fresh or dried leaves can be used to spice recipes.

Spicing up life with

Herbal Geraniums

Julia Child may shudder to think of tossing a geranium into the pot while preparing one of her gourmet dishes. But Karen Thompson of Midland wouldn't.

Several of Mrs. Thompson's favorite recipes include generous amounts of fresh or dried "scented-leaved" edible geraniums — an herbal flower kin to the regular variety grown in flower gardens throughout the country.

"Scented-leaved" geraniums — otherwise known by experts as pelargoniums — are unique in size and shape. Some plants are small, others are tall. Some climb and others trail.

Their blossoms are white, pink, purple or red, Mrs. Thompson said. Some are solid colors and others are striped or spotted blossoms.

Mrs. Thompson, who grows the plants in her home, said 250 types of the "scented-leaved" variety have been identified. But they have one characteristic in common: The leaves on each plant have a distinct aroma and when touched, they release one of four fragrances.

"Rose scenteds are known as the great pretenders," said Mrs. Thompson. "You can use rose geraniums to make rose geranium jelly and rose geranium cake or you can candy the flowers and use the leaves for tea. I like to use dried rose leaves for potpourri and to line linen and lingerie drawers."

Citrus scenteds are characterized by distinct lemon, lime and orange fragrances. These plants may be used in molded or tossed salads and desserts and as garnishes for fish, she said.

Other ideas include garnishing cocktails with the citrus-flavored foliage in place of lemon or lime slices or drop a few sprigs into finger-bowls at the table.

Fruit and Spice scenteds occasionally require an imaginative nose, says Mrs. Thompson.

Like other groups of scenteds, the fruits and spices such as apple, nutmeg, old spice and coconut are edible, she said. "But I use them mostly for potpourri, sachets, bath-bags and fresh or dried bouquets and nosegays."

Mint and pungent scenteds are ideal for making jelly and cake, she said, and they make wonderful mint juleps as well as creative bookmarks.

All scented geraniums are easy to grow on a sunny windowsill or under florescent light, she added. "In fact, they thrive on neglect, even under extremely hot and dry conditions.

"I use them in so many things and I enjoy stroking them when I walk by," she says. "It doesn't hurt to take a sprig or two every now and then. It's okay to pet your plant."

The following ideas for ways to use "scented-leaved" are taken from "What You Need to Know About Scented Geraniums," Fox Hill Farm, 1980; and "The Herb Book," 1980 Octupus Books Limited.

Apple, nutmeg, old spice and coconut scenteds are edible, "but I use them mostly for potpourri, sachets, bath-bags and fresh or dried bouquets and nosegays."

Karen Thompson

GERANIUM LEAF SORBET

12 scented geranium leaves
6 T. sugar
1½ cups water
Juice of one lemon
1 egg white
4 small geranium leaves to decorate

Wash geranium leaves and shake them dry. Put the sugar and water in a pan and boil until sugar dissolves. Put leaves in pan, cover and remove from heat. Leave for 20 minutes, then taste. If flavor is weak, bring liquid to a boil once again, remove from heat and let stand for another 10 minutes.

When flavor is satisfactory, strain syrup into a container, add lemon juice and cool. Freeze until semi-frozen, about 45 minutes to one hour, then fold in a stiffly beaten egg white. Continue to freeze until mixture reaches a mushy consistency, about one hour. Serve in glasses, each one decorated with a tiny geranium leaf.

ROSE CAKE

Place a layer of fresh rose geranium leaves on bottom of pans.

Frost and garnish with rose geranium flowers, fresh or candied.

GERANIUM JELLY

Steep one cup of fresh scented geranium leaves in hot liquid for jelly recipe for 15 to 20 minutes. Strain to remove leaves. Using the fragrant liquid, follow the jelly recipe.

Place two leaves or one sprig of scented geranium in each jelly jar. Fill with hot jelly and seal.

OTHER USES:

BATH BAGS

Place two or three hands full of dried or fresh geranium leaves in center of large cotton handkerchief. Lift edges to form a pouch and fasten with thread, string or rubber band. Steep bag in very hot water for 10 minutes. Add "tea" to bath water. Or, tie bag to hot water faucet while filling tub.

Gently scrub skin with fragrant bath bag.

CLOSET FRESHENER

Fasten nylon hose to a coat hanger. Fill with a blend of scented geranium leaves and stems. Fresh geraniums are allowed because the open weave of the fabric allows for drying.

Hang in closet. As leaves dry, pack down and add more fresh or dried material.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

Flowers fabulous for lovers of blue

By ELVIN McDONALD

If blue flowers turn you on, make note of this name: Alyogyne Huegelii.

It's a blue hibiscus having deeply cut leaves, first cultivated here, in California, in 1964. I saw a light blue form from the Los Angeles State and County Arboretum in Arcadia; Kartuz Greenhouse horticulturist Steve Brigham tells me there is also a medium blue from UC Santa Cruz, where work is being done toward a dwarf purple. Already there is a dark blue, a compact dark blue and compact violet blue.

The blue hibiscus can be grown in a pot to any convenient size or in the ground (3-8 ft.). It needs as much sunlight as possible, survives mid-20 temperatures, better not below 27F. Within generally warmer range of 50-75F. it blooms all winter, off-on through summer. Steve says, "Pinch back a lot. Blooms on new growth. Flowers last two-three days and it is prolific. Grows well in sandy soil or potted in a peat-lite mix."

If not at your garden center, blue hibiscus is available from Kartuz Greenhouses, 1408 Sunset Dr., Vista, Calif. 92083 (catalog $1), or Logee's Greenhouse, 55 North St., Danielson, Conn. 06239 (catalog $3.50).

Q: I have started a collection of orchids and have an uneasy feeling about the amount of water needed. Do you recommend a moisture meter?

A: Yes, definitely. Some orchid growers pot a group of plants and fill one pot with the same planting medium, but no plant. They water the plantless pot the same as the others and in order to check moisture content they simply dump out and examine its contents. There's a saying it takes a genius to kill an orchid but overwatering — or not watering at all — can be almost as effective.

Q: The orchids I see in shows are super beautiful. Is there some secret to these flowers' extraordinary appearance?

A: Great lighting helps but an old orchid grower once said to me, "Orchids are like horses. You pay $500 for a work horse, $5 million for a racehorse. All horses eat oats."

Mostly what is so special about show orchids, the winners at least, is that they are truly "racehorse" stock. At a glance one might seem no different than a common garden flower, yet there are subtleties in shape, color and texture that spell the quality you admire — the number 9's of the orchid world.

Show specimens also tend to have been grown by experienced gardeners, but not necessarily. Success means being consistent in the care you give a plant. If that doesn't produce the desired results, make a definite change. Then when you get it right, you will also know how to duplicate that success.

Q: I set a bunch of geraniums to root in sand. Some have wilted and are blackened at the base. Can such a cutting be saved?

A: Get rid of that sand and the rooted cuttings. I am sure you know someone who will share more cuttings. Make the final cut at a node, right through that part of the stem where a leaf grew before. Remove any of the small green stipules and insert an inch or two deep in a clean rooting medium such as equal parts perlite and vermiculite. Many growers insert geranium cuttings directly in Jiffy 7 peat pots.

Set your geranium cuttings to root where night temperatures stay fairly warm, say between 60 and 70F. Some direct sun or 6 inches from the tubes in a maxi light garden helps add up to rapid new rooting.

Geraniums also need fresh air circulation. Stem roots and leaf blights are encouraged by high humidity and stale or still air.

Lots more answers are in my notebook sheets, "What Makes Geraniums Bloom?" Send 50 cents coin and a stamped, self-addressed, long envelope with "Geraniums" written on the back flap to Elvin McDonald Reader Service, Box R, Niagara Falls, N.Y. 14305.

Quick Take: If you are planting a tuberous begonia or gloxinia tuber having two or more sprouts, you can cut it into as many parts as there are spouts, or "eyes," as in a potato. It will help if you dust the tuber cut parts with a rooting hormone. Then set to grow in a soil-less starting mix.

Q.T.: Tiny rosebushes having even tinier flowers, some as sweet as any rose, are in the new free color brochure from Moore Miniature Roses, 2519 Visalia Ave., Visalia, Calif. 93277. Perhaps most surprising is that, since these roses grow on their own roots, they are hardier than the big ones, which are grafted onto a special rootstock.

Q.T.: Pruning is a vital part of success with most plants, indoors and out. Nowhere is there more how-to, clearly illustrated, than in Ortho's "All About Pruning," $5.95 at garden centers and bookstores. Pruning is also highly beneficial therapy — enjoy!

Microorganisms enrich soil

Copley News Service

The microorganisms that live in the soil are among our most efficient recyclers.

They decompose nature's litter and mankind's refuse into many of the soil compounds essential to plant and animal life as well as their own survival.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Baby showers have taken a new twist. First it was the grandmother shower. And now the latest to come to our attention is the "Baby Brother Shower" which honored Lissa Wilson, daughter of expectant parents Sally and Jim Salners.

The fun party, which featured the traditional pink and blue decor and shower games, was hosted by Amy Furgeson in the home of her parents, Nell and Don Furgeson.

The 20 guests attending the shower are classmates of Lissa at Midland Freshman High School and very excited about the baby. We understand there will be no dearth of baby-sitters. All the girls are eager for the job when Lissa is unavailable.

The Salners have one other daughter, Claire, and the family is currently "thinking blue" in anticipation of the baby's mid-April arrival.

A GROUP of 25 of Midland's young professional set entertained with a dance recently at the National Guard Armory. Approximately 600 guests enjoyed dancing and listening to the lively music of The Argyles from Austin.

Spearheading plans for the very successful party was Shirley Swanson. Also hosting were Mark Earl, Kris Sliger, Mona Lyman, Dikka Fitting, Mark Embrey, Fred Wagner, Terry Harden, Matthew Blair, Craig Aldridge, Mary and Kelly Fish, Craig McDonnold, Bill Neale, Greg Curry, Paul Talbot, Bryan Riggs, Darla Currie, Kelly Thomas, Julia Vaughan, David Brigham, Megan Coffield, Margaret Schafer and Kathryn and Mark Hardwick.

KAY BROCKMAN celebrated a milestone birthday in style last weekend. Festivities included a surprise party at her home and a family dinner. In addition yard signs, a newspaper ad, a T-shirt presented to the honoree and the birthday cake all proclaimed "Kay is 40."

The party was given by Kay's husband B.J., with assistance from their son John; her daughter Rebecca Miller of Lubbock and her parents Elizabeth and Lloyd Haseltine.

Some 60 friends were on hand to surprise Kay and wish her well when she and B.J. and three other couples returned from a dinner party. Decorations, all in black, included bouquets of balloons, bows and a funeral wreath on a stand with the inscription "Over the Hill." The buffet table was centered with a large birthday cake iced in black and a bouquet of black carnations.

TEN MEMBERS of the Flatlanders Ski Club returned triumphantly from Breckenridge, Colo., last Sunday with the coveted Texas Ski Cup. Sponsored by the Texas Ski Council, the season-long competition for the cup began last Thanksgiving at Keystone, Colo., and ended in Breckenridge the last of March.

Still on a high from their win, the local skiers are especially ecstatic because the Flatlanders, a comparatively small club of 150 members, beat out some stiff competition from the larger clubs (some with as many as 1,200 members) to gain the trophy. A year-end victory party will be held here in the near future.

THE MINUET CLUB held its annual spring guest dance recently at the Petroleum Club. The music was provided by the Ran Wilde Orchestra of Dallas. Members and guests enjoyed a late night breakfast.

Forming the receiving line were the club's officers and directors: Suzy (Mrs. Jim) Boldrick, Ann (Mrs. Ronnie) Williams, Eileen (Mrs. Rosy) Stallter, Nancy (Mrs. Buddy) Anguish, Ruth (Mrs. Kelly) Bell, Mafy (Mrs. Henri) deCompiegne, Mary (Mrs. Bill) Kennedy, Frances (Mrs. John) Mills and Norma Jean (Mrs. Bud) Boles.

DR. AND MRS. ROBERT K. SETZLER of Albuquerque, N.M., were guests of honor at a family dinner party Saturday evening in Ranchland Hills Country Club. The occasion for the gathering was their 50th wedding anniversary.

The party was given by the couple's three children and their spouses, Susan and Robert G. Setzler and Georgia Lon and Rudy Bill, all of Midland, and Mary and Dave Larson of Washington, D.C., with Susan and Robert serving as hosts.

The party featured champagne toasts, a three-layer wedding cake made by Georgia Lon and a slide showing of family events over the past 50 years. A highlight of the evening was the announcement of the engagement and approaching marriage of the honorees' grandson Michael Setzler and Dana Lee Stewart.

Others attending were the couple's grandchildren Eric Setzler and wife Vickie of Odessa, Keim Bill and wife Faye, Chuck and Craig Bill and Susan's sister Janet Philley and her children, Jennifer and Ted.

AND LAST BUT not least. On the social agenda for this coming weekend is the Coterie Club's spring dance. It's set for Friday the Thirteenth from 8 p.m. to midnight at Midland Country Club. Music is by Bernie Rose, and dress is semi-formal.

Fans once French luxuries

Fans were once such a fashionable French luxury item that legislation was passed to govern the business of fan making.

Some 150 fan makers were registered in Paris in 1753, but only after each had undergone a four-year apprenticeship and created a fan that satisfied his colleagues.

'Dial-a-grandparent' does odd jobs

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — The next time area residents need help with odd jobs or yard work, or need a reliable house sitter during a vacation, Charlie Coffey hopes they'll call on grandma or grandpa.

No, not their own grandparents. He hopes they'll turn to Dial-a-Grandma Hire-a-Grandpa Inc., one of the newest temporary help agencies to hit Pennsylvania.

By matching up job-seeking "grandparents" with people willing to hire them — and taking a percentage off the top — Coffey hopes to make his business profitable.

Coffey, a 59-year-old retired salesman, remortgaged his Bethlehem house to start the business. He says he will spend at least $50,000 to get the agency off the ground.

Coffey believes that many retired and elderly people would enjoy temporary, occasional work. He says "grandma" and "grandpa" have a wealth of knowledge and experience that could be put to use in a variety of jobs, and the extra money they earn will help make ends meet on a fixed income.

Coffey is convinced that many people would be willing to hire a bonded and insured elderly or retired person to help with such things as baby-sitting, house-sitting, tutoring, house cleaning, yard work, companionship or odd jobs.

The employment service is patterned after a highly successful program in Florida. Dolores Fry, the founder of the Florida program, got the idea after overhearing a vacationing couple on the beach lamenting that they could not find a baby sitter.

Coffey, a jovial man with snowy hair and a neatly trimmed mustache, signed a contract with Ms. Fry and became her first out-of-state branch office. He has embossed hats, aprons, and tote bags with the Florida company's logo and is using her marketing techniques and fee schedules.

It's not a franchise arrangement, Coffee says, but Ms. Fry eventually will be paid a percentage of the profits at the Bethelehem location. Also, Ms. Fry sits on the board of directors of Coffey's corporation.

A typical fee for house-sitting services, Coffey says, might be $15 per night, with slightly higher fees if pet care is involved. For an entire week, the services might cost about $100, he says.

Of that money, 55 percent is paid to the worker and 45 percent is kept by Coffey as a fee to cover expenses and profit. The fee split is the same as the Florida operation, and is governed by Coffey's contract.

Honey may give babies botulism

Hearst Feature Service

Avoid feeding infants honey because it may contain botulism spores, warn health officials in California.

"Even honey labeled 'pure' or 'filtered' still contains the spores," said Dr. Stephen Arnon senior investigator for the state's infant botulism project.

The irony, said Arnon, is that honey has no nutritional value for an infant — it's only a hazard.

The symptoms of infant botulism are severe muscle paralysis, constipation, feeble crying and shallow breathing. The treatment often requires hospitalization in the intensive care unit and the child must be put on a respirator, he said. A month's hospital stay could cost $50,000.

Arnon said spores — dormant bacteria — can get into the honey through the air or from the honey combs. Like a seed, when the spore lodges in the infant's intestine, it begins to grow and releases its deadly toxin.

Children under one year old are susceptible because apparently the infant's system processes food differently from adults, Arnon said.

In adults, he said, the spores can't grow. Adults get botulism from eating tainted food.

"The number of cases in (California) is five times as high as it was last year," Arnon cautioned. For the first three months this year 20 cases have been confirmed statewide.

Stores 'evolving'

RIVERDALE, N.Y. (AP) — Conventional supermarkets will soon be as extinct as the dinosaur, predicts Gerald Lewis, head of a store design firm here.

"With more than 60 percent of American women working outside the home the 'traditional' family is being drastically reorganized and shopping patterns are keeping pace with those changes," says Lewis, chairman of CDI Designs.

By the turn of the century, he says, a number of new types of shopping facility will evolve — including what his firm calls a "super triad" — a combination supermarket warehouse, restaurant-service center and upscale specialty shop. Shoppers can not only purchase their groceries, but can do their banking and grab a quick lunch.

And, adds Lewis, shoppers won't need money to buy products ranging from household products to live lobsters to freshly baked croissants. Instead they'll use credit-debit cards. Computer terminals and display boards will provide product pricing information, announce specials and even suggest recipes.

All this will take place in a lush "back-to-nature" environment, where shoppers will wheel carts past trees and gardens that feature splashing fountains, in decors of stone, tile and hand-crafted wood, rather than chrome and plastic, Lewis says.

Mother's job advice not quite right

By ERMA BOMBECK

I don't pretend to know a lot about football, but the other day when I was taking a three-week supply of newspapers out of the family room I noticed where an All-American quarterback, Steve Young, signed a contract with a team in Los Angeles for $40 million over a 43-year period.

I figured the kid has to be 22 or 23 years old. In 2027, that would make him 65 or 66 years old. That seems old for a quarterback to me, but what do I know? If he eats sensibly and takes Geritol, it could happen.

When I mentioned this to my son he said a lot of football contracts offered big bucks on a long-term basis. He said "Magic" Johnson of the Lakers has a 25-year deal worth $25 million and Dave Winfield of the Yankees will be paid $15 million over the next 10 years.

He also reminded me of how I discouraged him from playing football because there was no future and no money in it.

Children have a wonderful talent for remembering every lousy word of advice you gave them, but none of the good stuff. I had a feeling I was about to hear a replay of my more forgettable lectures.

"You wanted me to work for Ma Bell, remember? You said there was security in the phone company ... especially when there was a monopoly.

"Then you pushed for me to be a teacher. You said children would always be in great supply in this country. The demand for English teachers would always be with us. That was two years before the English teacher glut.

"Then you got the idea I should go into the automobile industry. You said America's affair with the big car would never be over, but would take me right into retirement."

Some mothers are lucky. They raise their sons to be 65-year-old quarterbacks who take their $1.3 million a year, their Social Security benefits and their Grecian Hair Formula royalties and live the good life.

With my luck, my kid would suit up for the game in 2027 and Los Angeles wouldn't be there.

Should you buy a kit for creating a craft project, or should you buy each necessity separately and strike out on your own?

If price is your only consideration, you will be better off putting it together yourself. Kits will run considerably higher than the cost of the supplies alone because your are paying for having everything already cut out and planned for you. However, once in a while you will come up short on thread or fabric. It doesn't happen often, I'm happy to say.

My one and only experience with a disastrous kit offer was for an "oval embroidered picture" that came with frame, linen and embroidery floss. All I had to do, said the ad, was embroider the linen with the floss and put it all into the frame.

The frame was paper-thin plastic that had been formed into a vague semblance of an "antique" frame. It snapped in two the first time I picked it up.

The linen was of very poor quality (not really linen, to my thinking) and the design stamped on it was so pale that I could barely make it out.

The only thing worth anything at all was the embroidery floss. It worked OK. Fortunately, not all kits are so frustrating.

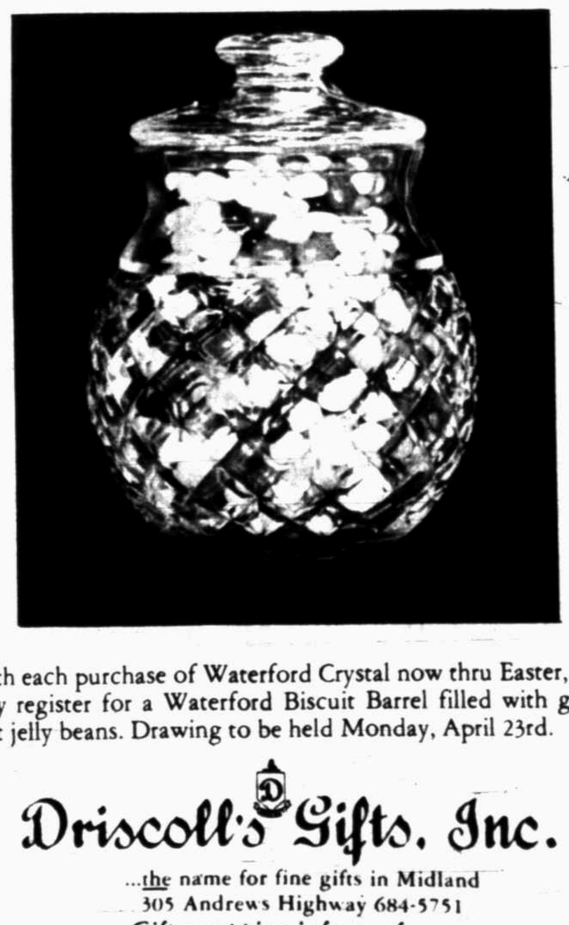

Read the description very, very carefully; then assume that it will be slightly exaggerated. When you receive your order, check it over. Make sure it is exactly what you ordered. If not, I would suggest returning it right away and asking for a full refund.

Maximum television view arranged without ruining decor

By The Associated Press

How do you arrange your television set for maximum viewing convenience without destroying a room's decorative theme?

Some award-winning ideas include the following:

— Installing a freestanding "tower" that houses the set and accessory items in sections that pull out as needed.

— Placing a set in a room divider located between the sleeping and sitting area of a master bedroom.

— Converting an alcove into an "invisible" cabinet through use of a see-through mirror. When the set is on, the picture is seen through the mirror; when off, it isn't seen.

— Creating a cabinet that looks like the footboard of a bed. The television rests on a shelf that is raised and lowered automatically.

These ideas and others were developed by professional designers when RCA Corp. conducted a video design competition in cooperation with The Designer Magazine. The assignment was simple: use today's television equipment and other home entertainment components in a creative way in the home.

RCA executives and the editor of the trade magazine for interior designers reasoned that many families have recently acquired new video equipment and need good ideas for integrating the equipment into their homes.

The winning designers, who received cash prizes and RCA components, discussed their ideas and showed the renderings of their rooms in New York recently. Several offered suggestions based on their designs for the general public to consider in the arrangement of their home entertainment spaces.

Don Killaby, a space planner who also teaches at Cornell University's interior design division, offered suggestions for a room designed solely for television watching.

In the small room he created, a large cabinet is located directly in front of a window. The cabinet, whose doors retract when opened, is sized generously so new video components will fit as they come into existence.

Killaby said that in rooms designed mainly for video there should be little to distract the eye from the set. It's important to be especially careful about light entering the room. If light enters behind the viewer, it can reflect off the surface ofhe screen and create glare. it Uters behind the set, viewers' eyes muconstantly adjust from low light to high light, which gives the eyes extra work.

Instead, cover the windows so you screen out light when daytime watching occurs. Artificial lights should be on dimmers so that they can be lowered as required. Uplighting, which throws a wide diffuse light, should be employed instead of downlighting which concentrates a beam of light onto a surface.

For many people, the prospect of devoting a room solely to television is impractical or undesirable. George Wachob, a designer and teacher at Louisiana State University, thought of them when he created a traditional living room designed to include activities such as television watching, listening to music, talking, reading and entertaining.

He created an "electronic hearth" in which the space normally occupied by a fireplace holds television and other home electronic equipment. Two "columns" which flank this space provide storage space for cassettes and video disks.

All the designers and RCA's head of product design David Tompkins agreed that present and future television equipment will be more versatile than in the past.

Tubs used for sitting

By The Associated Press

Folks in Sterling, Colo., call Richard Bedford, the upholsterer, even before they phone the plumber when they plan to redo their bathroom.

They have learned Bedford can be counted on to come and wrestle their old claw-footed tub out of the house. These cast-iron monsters which often weigh more than 200 pounds are not easy to pry loose, but go they must if an up-to-date bath is the goal.

Bedford is no samaritan. He has a remarkable use for the tubs. After cutting away part of the sides, he upholsters them and sells them as loveseats and chairs.

As a novelty, an upholstered tub can hardly be beaten. But at a cost typically of about $350 (local delivery only) the tubs also make an economical furniture conversation piece.

Although he has been creating the sofas and loveseats since 1972, when a customer brought the first one in and asked him to turn it into a sofa, he only recently received national recognition for his specialty. Bedford was declared the winner in a reupholstering contest sponsored by Uniroyal.

The purpose of the competition was to demonstrate the advantages of reupholstery as a practical, economical and design-worthy alternative to purchasing new seating.

Though he has made between 30 and 40 such pieces and finds a steady demand for them locally, Bedford said he was astonished that he won the first prize of $500. He has also reupholstered antique buggies and antique cars over the years.

Upholstering almost anything is surprisingly easy, he said. To redo the tubs, he starts by cutting the sides down with a welding torch. He attaches a fifth leg to keep the tub from tipping backwards — a precaution learned through experience. Then he removes the paint, if any, and glues solid blocks of foam to the tub.

Webbing goes on next to provide shape and to support a filling of shredded foam. Over it all he places a fabric cover in a material such as velvet, tapestry or vinyl that looks like leather. Most customers select a cover in keeping with the Victorian looks of the piece, he said.

Bedford's feat suggests you can upholster the most unlikely items as long as they accommodate the human frame in a seated position, but most reupholstering jobs are considerably more mundane.

A booklet by Uniroyal on the subject is geared toward more ordinary seating. The company claims you can save about one-third of the cost of a new sofa or chair by re-covering your existing piece, provided it has a sturdy hardwood frame in good condition. Frames today cost about $200, the booklet says, so at least you should save that expense.

If you are tired of your existing sofa or chair, it is good to learn that frames can be restyled so that a straight arm can be rounded or flared or a rounded arm made more angular. An upholsterer can lower the sides or back of the sofa, knock off sharp corners and cut down sofa arms. Your sofa can also be remade into a loveseat.

If you have back problems, your piece can be restyled to provide firmer support at the upper or lower back or at the shoulders and neck.

Nowadays, synthetic fibers play a more important role in seating than they once did. Whereas formerly feather and down combinations and animal hair were the choice fillings — the former for softness, the latter for firmness — today, polyurethane, polyester and other synthetic fibes and blends of synthetics and natural fibers are available in a variety of densities which determine firmness.

Synthetics are also important in fabrics. Blends of natural and man-made fibers are widely available. These tend to be both more soil-resistant and easier to clean than each would be alone, according to the company.

Regardless of fiber, fabrics which are closely woven (a test is to hold a swatch up to the light; the less light that penetrates, the more closely woven) are generally more durable and longer wearing.

Snorers alarming

DETROIT (AP) — Most people snore occasionally, but some snorers register as much as 80 decibels — a sound as loud as a pneumatic drill.

According to a World Health Organization study, such truly loud snorers — those who can be heard a room away — may total 10 percent of adults.

Without Abbott, Costello would never have gotten to first base.

Teamwork was the name of the comedy game for Abbott and Costello and it kept generations of television viewers laughing. After all, what is a funny guy without a straight man?

They were successful individuals who found that special chemistry in each other that brought them to even greater achievements. Their ultimate success was in combining their talents. Working together.

Teamwork can work for cities, too. Cities like ours.

Crisp colors brighten room, give blended look

By BARBARA HARTUNG

A great place for the family to gather and get away from it all is this room designed in wedgewood blue upholstered furniture, combined with a country French floral rug, a runner used as a wall hanging and white Italian tile flooring.

Q: We are remodeling our garage into a family room. I don't want a formal room but neither do I want an extremely casual feeling — rather something in between.

I have planned that we will have a freestanding fireplace on one wall. Now I need to make a decision on walls and floor and furniture.

Please suggest some ideas for creating an attractive room. — E.I.

A: You might like a room created by designer Patricia Gaylord.

She began with prisine white walls and white Italian floor tiles. She selected Wedgwood blue as the major color for a sleeper sofa and a love seat placed in an L in front of a fireplace.

To add warmth and charm she used a country French floral wool rug and a matching runner as a wall hanging. An antique pine trunk serves as a cocktail table and doubles as a place to stow linens for the sleeper sofa. A corner table with white laminated top is on casters and can readily be moved through sliding glass doors onto the patio when the living moves outdoors.

Gaylor flanked the built-in fireplace with an antique hutch on one side and a large basket for wood on the other.

Lighting is mainly natural because of two skylights. Indirect lighting comes from recessed spots in the ceiling as well as table and pharmacy lamps near the seating.

Q: I have been trying to find a pewter chandelier in an Early American design. I'm also interested in some lanterns in a country motif.

A: You might try Virginia Metalcrafters. Write to them at 1010 E. Main St., Waynesboro, VA 22980.

Q: We've moved into our first home — a lovely condominium — and are furnishing the living room with a sofa and two chairs in an Art Deco style with tables in contemporary designs.

I am trying to decide what type of window treatment I want. We have only two vertical windows in the room, one on each side of the sofa. We need privacy at night. What would be a good treatment? — B.V.

A: Visit some model homes in your area and shops featuring the newest in window fashions. There are many excellent contemporary window treatments that are both aesthetically pleasing and functional.

You might like slim horizontal blinds, wide vertical ones or an energy-efficient pleated shade that gives a horizontal feeling.

All of these options can give you complete privacy as well as the warmth of sunshine when you choose.

Q: We have recently removed the wall between our kitchen and den to have a comfortable seating and dining area just off our kitchen.

I want to redecorate my kitchen now to blend this new space and the kitchen together. Please suggest some ideas. — W.N.

A: Treating the floor in the same manner will tie the rooms together. An attractive new vinyl floor covering will freshen the space immediately.

Consider your kitchen cabinets. Do you like them? And are they in good shape? If so, consider repeating the feeling and design and finish of your kitchen cabinets in the new space so you will have a wall for storage for accessories and dining needs.

Paint or paper the walls in both areas the same and likewise choose the same window treatment. This will give you a continuity in the new space so you have a pleasant, finished look.

Q: I have some of those dreadful metal folding chairs which I use when we have large numbers of people for dinner. They have been repainted and recovered so many times they look very bad.

I have seen in decorating magazines fabric slipcovers that look quite nice. Where could I find directions to make these? — L.Y.

A: The spring Simplicity pattern book in yardage shops has a pattern such as you describe. The covers do look very attractive and hide a multitude of sins.

Q: The home I am living in now is a starter home with secondhand furniture. The home I'm moving into is a lovely new four-level.

Neither my husband nor I has any creative decorating talents. Where can we go to get help in coordinating purchases for this new house — furniture, wall hangings and other basics from the bottom up.

I fear that we would buy things piecemeal that would not blend well and end up wasting the money we will have on a limited budget. Any suggestions will be appreciated. — P.G.

A: I'd suggest three options.

First, you might look in the Yellow Pages of your telephone book under interior design or under National Society of Interior Designers. There you will find a listing of professional interior designers who have passed rigorous interior design examinations and have design experience.

Call several and discuss over the phone whether they do residential interior design work and on what basis you might obtain their services. Some work on a fee basis, others on a special arrangement whereby you agree to buy through them, and some are with the design studios of department stores.

You have some assurance that NSID members have the professional training and experience to create a functional design with your needs dictating the plan. But working with a designer is a personal experience and you should select someone you feel you can be comfortable and work with.

Another option is to inquire at your favorite furniture shop or furniture department of a department store. Often you can enlist the services of a designer if you plan to purchase through that store.

'Cocktails' traced to war

One legend traces the origin of the word to the Revolutionary War and a New England tavern run by Betsy Flanagan, where American officers gathered and complained to her about a prosperous Tory who lived nearby.

One night, according to Heublein Inc., she served the officers a drink of rum and fruit juice — each cup decorated with a tail feather plucked from the Tory's prize rooster. When she told where the feathers came from, the Americans shouted their praise of the drink, as did a French volunteer who said, "Vive le coq's tail."

Home needs two miles of wood

FORT BRAGG, Calif. (AP) — If all the lumber in an average house were placed end to end, it would stretch two miles, according to Georgia-Pacific.

The firm says the typical single-family home requires about 10,000 board feet of lumber.

Genetic flag warns rheumatic fever risk

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Some children carry a genetic "flag" that warns they have a higher-than-usual risk of getting rheumatic fever, researchers have found.

The discovery may lead researchers to develop a blood test for singling out newborns especially vulnerable to the disease in later life, said Dr. John Zabriskie, a professor of microbiology and immunology at Rockefeller University in New York.

In poorer countries, such a test would mean that health authorities won't face the expense of treating every strep-throat victim with penicillin to head of a potential rheumatic fever case.

Rheumatic fever, which can lead to permanent heart damage, occurs most often in poorer countries and strikes children who have recently recovered from strep throat. It causes feverish fatigue and painful swelling of joints, and may also reduce a victim's coordination.

Only about 3 percent of children with untreated strep throat get rheumatic fever. But up to 60 percent of rheumatic fever cases lead to rheumatic heart disease, which can cause permanent damage.

Rheumatic fever strikes 15 million to 20 million people a year in Third World countries. In the United States, 264 cases were reported in 1981.

Zabriskie said he and colleagues at the university and abroad have found a substance in the immunological cells of 75 percent of rheumatic fever victims. The substance is produced at the instruction of the person's genes, and Zabriskie said people who carry it run about 15 times the normal risk of getting rheumatic fever after strep throat.

Zabriskie said he didn't know when a blood test would be available to identify newborns carrying that substance.

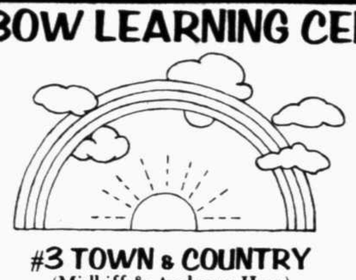

Most rheumatic fever victims who don't carry the substance do have a similar one instead, and a later blood test might look for the second substance, Zabriskie said.

Epilepsy often misunderstood

NEW YORK (AP) — One of the misconceptions about epilepsy is that it is a disease, according to the Epilepsy Institute.

In fact, epilepsy ia a condition of disturbed electrical activity in the brain. The most common cause of epilepsy is a head injury which damages the brain. Each year, 540,000 Americans suffer head injuries and some 20,000 of them will develop persistent epileptic seizures as a result, the institute says.

Advance study could benefit heart surgery

WASHINGTON (AP) — Researchers who have discovered how to improve the oxygen-carrying capacity of a major blood component say the advance could help save organs for transplant and protect the heart during open-heart surgery.

The New York researchers said that they have developed a process to chemically treat hemoglobin so that it more easily releases its oxygen throughout the body.

Hemoglobin is a protein rich in iron that gives blood its red color. The substance captures oxygen from the lungs and distributes it to cells elsewhere.

Drs. Reinhold Benesch, Ruth E. Benesch and Lubos Triner of Columbia University Medical School said they found that the hemoglobin molecule can release more oxygen when two of its four components are strongly bound to one another.

Each component, or subunit, is a separate string of amino acids. Treatment with a synthetic phosphate compound creates a special crosslink between two of them that normally are loosely joined, changing the oxygen-binding properties of the molecule, they said.

"Our studies with the crosslinked hemoglobin show that much more oxygen can be unloaded to the heart than with normal hemoglobin," said Benesch.

Testing the modified hemoglobin on rabbit hearts, the researchers found that the better oxygen availability improved the mechanical performance of the heart, said the researchers.

After 90 minutes, hearts through which the modified hemoglobin was pumped maintained two-thirds of their original ability to contract. In contrast, hearts using normal hemoglobin declined to one-fifth of original function, they said.

The research, sponsored by the National Science Foundation and the National Institutes of Health, could have applications to low-temperature heart surgery. By cooling the heart down and slowing its functions, doctors can perform delicate surgery not normally possible.

The cross-linked hemoglobin, unlike normal blood, can release significant amounts of oxygen at low temperatures, Benesch said.

"This would make it useful for supporting the normal functioning of the cell during low temperature heart surgery and for organ preservation," he said.

Downtown shopping malls new city successes

Copley News Service

A few years ago, 16th Street in downtown Denver was a bustling and noisy mix of cars, buses and pedestrians — all nervously competing for limited driving-walking space.

Today, the cars are all gone. The number of pedestrians has increased, but they walk and shop in a much more leisurely and relaxed manner.

They seem to actually enjoy their walk between stores, stopping occasionally to enjoy a performing musician or perhaps sit on a bench to watch the fountains and trees that are now interspersed between the skyscrapers.

This is the current and future scene on Denver's new "16th Street Mall" — a 13-block oasis smack-dab in the center of a major city. The mall also exemplifies a national trend.

The only motor vehicles allowed on this stretch of downtown Denver, dominated by walking human beings, are no-charge shuttle buses continually running the entire length of the mall.

About 220 trees have been planted where cars used to dart and honk. Lights, benches and fountains have also been installed.

Denver's 16th Street Mall sparked tremendous controversy when the concept was proposed and during its planning period. Today, there is little doubt about its value.

It has revitalized the downtown economy, providing a powerful magnet that is attracting residents back to the downtown area.

"Our downtown area is no longer an aging, deteriorating section of a fine old city," this writer was told by a spokesman for the Denver Partnership organization.

An estimated 60,000 persons per day now come to the Denver mall — reflecting a steady increase since it opened in late 1982. Retail sales in stores and shops within the mall have increased 15 to 25 percent during the past year.

Other cities have developed, or plan to develop similar downtown malls.

If designed strategically to meet local needs, it seems to be a winning formula for injecting new life and vitality into downtown areas.

"Downtown shopping malls are shining centerpieces in many cities today, drawing millions of visitors to trendy shops, restaurants and entertainment centers.

"The success of these malls has many dimensions: They enhance the landscapes of previously bleak and declining urban centers; their holiday atmosphere brings vitality of tourists, conventioners and local shoppers; and they have negated the idea that the future of retail trade resides in the suburbs."

As for the future, mall designers and developers are coming up with new ideas and concepts to add even more people-generating appeal.

For example, two unique retail centers are now being developed within Denver's "16th Street Mall" — one at both extremities of the mile-long strip.

They will include a variety of colorful specialty shops. One will open in the spring and one in the fall of 1984.

Students predict next 25 years

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The wonders of the world in the next quarter century will include pills that prolong youth, solar-powered mass transit systems and communications networks that make business districts obsolete.

These predictions for the year 2008 were included among those made by 10 college students whose essays on future advancements were judged the best among 750 entrants.

The winners of the Honeywell Futurist Awards Competition covered six topics: computers, aerospace, biomedical technology, electronic communications, energy and marine systems.

BURBANK, Calif. — Did you hear about the termite who walked into a saloon and asked: "Is the bar tender here?"

Selma Glasser not only heard about it, she used it in her newsletter as an example of a filler item for which a national magazine paid a reader.

For 30 years she has been the Magic Johnson, the Bill Shoemaker of the contest world, the winner and still champion. A station wagon, a microwave oven, annual vacations to faraway places — all have come her way because she told something in 25 words or less.

And checks, albeit modest ones, have frequently showed up in her mailbox because she submitted magazine fillers. She also included in her newsletter the check-producing anecdote of a family on a hiking trip.

The way Glasser looks at it, there are diamonds all over the place, just waiting to be picked up.

She won the station wagon writing about deodorant.

"I was in a drugstore on New Year's Eve and bought some deodorant pads. I saw that there was a writing competition regarding them, but the deadline was that very night."

She wrote a brief essay, dropped it in the mail before midnight and forgot about the matter.

"A couple months later I received a letter saying 'Congratulations, you have won the wagon.' I thought they were talking about a kid's wagon."

Winning contests by writing about a product isn't that difficult, she maintained. First, you follow the rules. You'd be surprised how many people don't. If the stipulation is one entry per person, you do that. If they say send all entries in different envelopes, you do that.

"There are people who send green or pink envelopes, which accomplishes nothing. I suppose that if you are an artist, you can embellish your entry, but no amount of embellishing can substitute for a good entry."

Glasser said an entrant should be thoroughly familiar with both the product and the company, and in this respect the public library is your best friend.

Her travel nuggets have included an all-expense trip to Holland as guest of Queen Beatrix. Indeed, her latest entry involved why she would like a voyage on the Queen Elizabeth II.

"I once won a long weekend in Las Vegas. But I don't gamble. I had a lot of fun, but I didn't bet a dime." Vegas loves people who don't give a dime.

She also won a date with Sid Caesar (for composing a verse that you will be spared here), and an evening at a club as guest of Engelbert Humperdinck for winning a radio contest to rename him. Her suggestion was Howie Sings.

The effervescent Glasser said she has even scored with tips for greeting cards.

"Those people get stale sometimes," she explained. "I once was paid for a card that asked on the outside, 'How'd you like to share my pad?' When you opened it, a note pad was inside."

Drawing on her success with these various opportunities, in October she began a monthly newsletter, "Write Ideas Inc.," available for $24 annually from 25 Penn Blvd., Scarsdale, N.Y. 10583. She also is the author of a book, "The Complete Guide to Prize Contests, Sweepstakes and How to Win Them."

She also teaches an evening adult course at her hometown Brooklyn College, a course titled "Writing for Prize and Publication."

The Brooklynite doesn't like to describe herself as a professional. Trying to make a living by means of contests and fillers is, at best, adventurous.

"I look at it as the whipped cream on the cake," Glasser said. "It's the world's greatest hobby. I am thrilled by anything I ever win — even if is a can opener that breaks after a week. The point is that something I wrote was appreciated."

Meals tested in Ohio

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The restaurant meal you order in six months may be cooking away now in a test kitchen in this "test market" city.

"Columbus has become the fast food concept capital of the country, with 10 restaurant franchise and chain operations based here, most started in the last 20 years," said John Christie, Columbus Area Chamber of Commerce president.

"One reason the area has become a restaurant chain center is that the ethnic, racial and socio-economic mix makes it a natural to become a favorite test market."

DEAR ABBY

Sluggish couple needs shove

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Our 18-year-old son got married without our permission. He didn't have a job and neither did the girl he married. She's 19 and very lazy.

They lay around our house for a couple of weeks, eating, listening to music and watching television. Neither one of them went out to look for work.

My husband finally told them they would have to get out because they were getting on our nerves, so our son went down and joined the Marines. He was ordered to go to boot camp, so I asked him where his wife was going to stay and he said, "With you, Ma."

I couldn't kick her out and she couldn't go to her own mother's because they had kicked her out for marrying our son. We put up with her for three weeks, then our son was sent back from the Marines. They said he wasn't Marine material, whatever that means.

Now we have the two of them lying around eating, listening to music and watching television all day. My husband is fed up and so am I. What should we do? I hate to be cruel. — BALTIMORE MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: If you continue to give them bread and board, they will not be motivated to earn their own. Sometimes we have to be cruel to be kind. Let them paddle their own canoe.

DEAR ABBY: You told a reader that in America one summons a waiter by first catching his eye, then raising his hand with one finger pointing heavenward, and if necessary calling, "Waiter."

Abby, please specify which finger. I used the wrong finger once and got a lap full of lasagna — hot! — CHARLIE SCHWARTZ

DEAR CHARLIE: The index finger.

DEAR ABBY: As a young man just starting out in my profession, I now receive many telephone calls and letters from others in my profession whom I have never met. Because these people are total strangers, I always address them as Mr., Miss or Mrs. — using their surnames.

I am astonished that they call me "Daniel" immediately. Some even go so far as to call me "Dan" or "Danny." I think I deserve more respect and I deeply resent this uncalled-for familiarity. I don't know how to confront these presumptuous strangers and demand to be called "Mister" without sounding offensive, so I say nothing.

All my friends and associates to whom I've mentioned this tell me I'd be foolish to even mention it because that's the way people are nowadays. They say that to demand that business acquaintances call me "Mister" would put a strain on our professional relationship.

What do you think? — WITHHOLD MY SURNAME

DEAR WITHHOLD: I agree with your friends and associates. There is no way you can demand to be called "Mister" without coming across as arrogant, pretentious and self-important.

Most young professionals just starting out would be grateful to be called anything, as long as they're called.

Racing crew advice given

WINCHESTER, Va. (AP) — Lawton Foushee, crew chief of the Jaguar auto racing teams, says he gives this advice when asked how to break in as a professional crew member.

"You really need well-rounded, hands-on experience in all aspects of automotive work," says Foushee. "Staying in school is important.

"I would say the ideal candidate would be one who has a college degree in mechanical engineering and four to five years of broad-based experience either in a new car dealership or in a general repair shop.

"That experience gives you the background to diagnose a problem and fix it in a hurry, often under bad conditions, and always under the pressure of the clock."

Children's science show popular

NEW YORK (AP) — American youngsters are showing an ever-increasing interest in science, according to a nationwide study commissioned by the producers of an educational television series aimed at 6- to 11-year-olds.

Audience measurement studies by the A.C. Nielsen Co. reveal that viewing of the Children's Television Workshop's "3-2-1 Contact" program was up 13 percent this past fall — in the second series of the daily show on the PBS network — over the winter of 1980, when the series was introduced.

An estimated 16.3 million homes with children in that age bracket tuned into that second season's run of eight weeks, the study shows.

This represents 38 percent of the country's households with a child of under 18 living within the signal coverage of the series.

English once 'barbarian'

Copley News Service

At the outset, English, the Anglo-Saxons' language, had no written literature and was considered barbarian.

It rose briefly to the eminence of a written language in King Alfred's time, but submerged after the Norman Conquest.

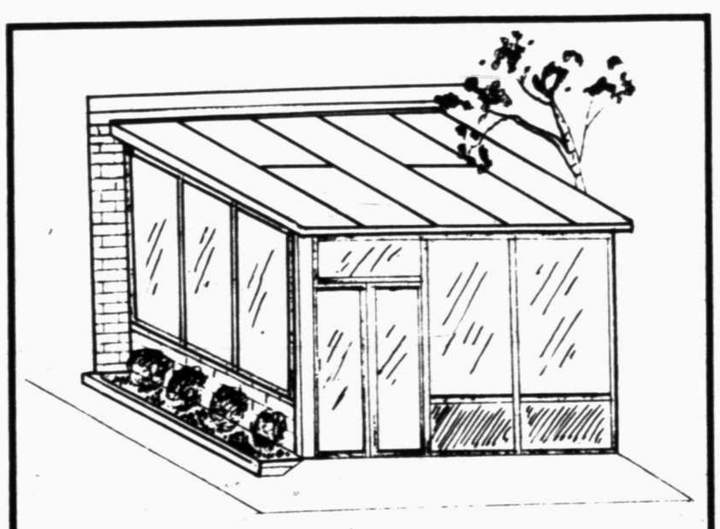

Compared with the Conquerors' aristocratic French and the learned community's Latin, English was often dismissed as simply the crude dialect of farmers, woodcutters and swine herds.

When English resurfaced in the 14th century, however, it had become the rich language of Geoffrey Chaucer.

Wise management important

By ADELE SCHEELE, PhD.

To small business owners, the line, "I like to work with people," can produce hysterical laughter. Their people are often precisely the problem. It's the tasks that are easy.

Gail is a perfect example — a small business owner, half scientist and half entrepreneur. Her technical company is based solely on her own chemical patent. Over the past few years, she hired a staff of chemists and technicians to help build her company. It has been working; her business has been growing. Gail has shared the profits with her employees.

But she was frustrated by the many petty complaints — which she called "dumps" — from her staff. No amount of reading better management practices seemed to help. Small things got to her.

For example, the way her employees physically cared for the lab bothered her. Her anger at her employees' childishness or irresponsibility mounted. The straw that broke the camel's back was preposterous — cigarette butts and empty toilet paper rolls on the bathroom floors one too many times.

In a fit, she banged furniture around and finally decided to find specific medicine to cure the carelessness disease, rather than just treat the symptom. After all, she could just pick up the litter herself, which she did. "It's part of being president," she told me in a mean mood. So Gail went on to apply the scientific method.

She asked a consulting psychologist to watch her in the act of listening to a staffer's complaints. To her shock, she found that she did most of the talking, which didn't help anything. Impressed, she kept quiet during the next session until the very end of the employee's story and then both expressed sympathy and asked for a suggested solution. It worked. Gail felt a lot better and so did the employee. Sound too simple? Often we ourselves are at fault when we think we are acting right. Only we don't know it and in frustration blame everyone else.

Emboldened, she moved to the second problem. She tried thinking of litter as a business problem, not child's to be corrected by a nagging parent. On the next regular meeting's agenda, she included "extra janitorial services." She started off telling her staff that they, of course, were scientists, not janitors, and she valued and paid for their scientific expertise. Therefore, she would never ask them to clean — that is, pick up butts or trash. One solution to the current problem of litter would be to hire more janitorial help. It would cost a lot extra each month. She wrote the amount multiplied by 12 for the year, an amount that would be subtracted from profits.

It was a significant price for them to pay but if they thought it was worth it, she'd proceed. Gail concluded that she'd abide by the staff's wishes. Not surprisingly, the staff rejected the cost of hiring the extra cleaning help and took care of the problem themselves. That's just the beginning of their new attitude — a proprietary one.

Gail won both rounds, yet she felt conflicting emotions — joy and sadness. Her surprising disappointment lay in having to manipulate that situation in the first place. Yet "manipulate" shouldn't carry only its negative connotation: to twist the situation. It literally means to "put hands on," to take charge. That's precisely what a manager should do, yet so few do so well and act so appropriately to raise consciousness about sharing problems as well as profits.

Funny enough, management case studies in textbooks vary so much from the ones experienced on the home front. While the academic one is often theoretical, the daily gripe is so humdrum, so grubby, so much like cigarette butts or toilet paper rolls, that we get embarrassed to complain about it and keep resisting dealing straight.

People aren't so difficult, after all, if we stop focusing on their careless behavior and offer up a series of choices. Like voting, it gives us all a chance for better involvement. Little lessons to the Gails of us that mean big changes.

Dr. Adele Scheele, PhD., is a columnist for King Features Syndicate Inc.

'Dragster's idol' changed

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — To kids of the '50s and early '60s, he was neat-o, boss, hip and rank (drag strip lingo that connoted monstrosity).

"The kids idolize me," custom car designer Ed "Big Daddy" Roth said in 1964, "because I look like someone their parents wouldn't like."

The beard, "shades," wild clothes and beatnik jive that made him the baaaadest dude in the Southern California hot rod scene are gone.

Nowadays, Big Daddy is into polyester threads and black boots. His hair has thinned and he's carrying a spare tire around his midriff.

But there is still motor grease under his fingernails — and that's what's really important.

"I'm now the guy parents like, and kids don't like," said the 52-year-old folk hero, with a hint of whimsy to his voice. "What a switch."

Things have changed drastically for the tall, chunky Roth since the days when he was raking in $100,000 a year building and pinstriping hot rods and designing plastic car models.

He plans to earn only $25,000 this year — "can't use more, can't live with less," he said — airbrushing his souped-up hot rod designs onto T-shirts in the garage of his Los Angeles home.

Roth's fame as the dragster's idol traces back to his high school years in the early '50s. His first car was a radically altered 1934 Ford, minus bumpers and fenders, and with a brutishly powerful engine.

Upon graduation, he landed a job as a clerk in a Los Angeles Sears store — a position decidedly in conflict with his rebellious style.

He soon rented a garage and began pinstriping custom designs — orange-and-red flames, eyeballs, names — on customers' cars for $50 to $150 a pop.

Roth's success allowed him to expand his business — he started designing and building his own cars, and selling custom bumpers and gearshift knobs — and his fame spread throughout California.

Among his masterpieces was Road Agent — handmade from stock car parts, with chrome-plated axles and springs, plastic canopy, two side-mounted auxiliary fuel tanks and painted in eye-popping candy apple colors.

But it wasn't until 1959 that his name became a household word, especially among teenage boys.

"That's when I got into painting monsters," he said.

A car club had approached him about creating an emblem for the group. Instead, he produced a series of weirdly exaggerated portraits of club members.

The firm saw the potential in Roth's designs and signed him to an exclusive contract that was earning him in the range of $3,500 a month in 1963.

But the business deal was short lived. When Revelle objected to Roth riding and designing so-called "outlaw bikes" — souped-up Harley-Davidson motorcycles — he left the firm and jumped into the custom T-shirt business.

Throughout the '60s, he employed 13 people just to open envelopes full of orders for his hot rod designs airbrushed onto cotton shirts.

Then Roth became a born-again Christian in 1973 and his life took another twist. He decided to drop out of the hot rod scene and finish raising his five sons.

His star began to rise again two years ago when the Stray Cats, a New York-based rock band, recruited him to supply the hot rods to grace the cover of the group's first album, "Rant 'N' Rave."

And last year, he started designing new cars "simply because nobody was building anything far-out," he said.

"This whole punk rock thing today doesn't leave much room for guys like me," he said. "The whole scene has shifted from car shows to the street. Kids like rock bands like I liked cars."

Age limits often cause problems for retirement communities' owners

By The Associated Press

There are lawsuits going on all over the country as to whether the owners of so-called retirement communities can set limits on the ages of its residents.

It's easy enough to regulate that you cannot live in this or that condominium or cooperative complex unless you are over 55 or 60 or 65. It's what occurs later that is causing the problems. What happens, for instance, if circumstances force an elderly couple to bring up their grandchildren? And even if it is only for a temporary period, what is a temporary period — a month, a year, five years?

Is a couple in their late 60s who chooses a retirement community so that they can live in peace and quiet for their remaining years entitled to do so? How is this state achieved if the couple next door are faced with the necessity of raising two or three small grandchildren who cannot possibly or compassionately be silenced 24 hours a day every day in the week? What happens when a couple's child, someone between 35 and 45, for example, gets into a family or financial tangle that forces him or her to live with the parents in a retirement area where the minimum age limit is 60?

These are not isolated cases. They are happening all the time, which is why the courts are filled with legal battles among owners, mortgage holders, homeowners' associations and assorted other individuals and groups. Decisions do not come easily, because there is so much to be said for either side. And courts in different states have issued what appear to be contradictory decisions, which in many cases actually are not, because the circumstances are seldom the same.

The retirement community idea really got rolling in 1960 when Del Webb started Sun City in Arizona. After a slow start, it took off like a rocket and in a matter of years became a sizable city, so much so that a second Sun City, called Sun City West, was started nearby and has grown steadily.

There are even bigger developments than the original Webb project. Many builders are using various methods of getting around the possible legal squabbles over age limits by lowering them considerably and making all kinds of exceptions.

Several communities have no strict age requirement except that no children under 18 are permitted, which solves some but not all of the problems. Some have lowered the age limit to 40 and there is at least one that uses 35 as the cutoff age. From the builders' standpoint, of course, the more buyers the better, but they always have to consider the possibility that some purchasers will be scared off if the age limit isn't high enough.

Another angle to be considered is that some elderly people don't want to live in a community where everybody is as old as or older than they are. I recall reading some years ago about a retirement village where some residents were disturbed because an ambulance was always parked in a highly visible space. They didn't want to be reminded constantly that someday they might have to ride in it. Yet, when a poll was taken, it showed the majority of the residents liked the presence of the ambulance as a reminder that help was close at hand if it were needed.

Today, probably because the elderly have more money than they had when retirement housing started 25 years ago, the higher-priced retirement houses sell at least as quickly as — or more often that not, more quickly than — medium-priced homes, condos or coops. In one new development in Tampa, Fla., boasting such amenities as a spa, piped-in music, an underwater stereo system in the swimming pool and a total solar system, the houses cost $250,000. And, so far, the elderly are snapping them up.

FF

Peaches 'n Cream Pastries

1 package (11 ounces) pie crust mix or sticks
1/2 cup dairy sour cream
Cinnamon-Sugar Glaze (below)
1 can (16 ounces) sliced peaches, well drained
1 cup chilled whipping cream
2 tablespoons powdered sugar

Mix pie crust mix or 2 pie crust sticks and sour cream with fork until pastry holds together; divide into halves. Wrap each half; refrigerate at least 8 hours.

Heat oven to 350°. Roll each half of pastry into circle 1/8 inch thick on floured cloth-covered board with floured cloth-covered rolling pin. Cut each circle into four 4-inch rounds. Place rounds on ungreased cookie sheet; brush with Cinnamon-Sugar Glaze. Bake until light brown, about 15 minutes. Remove from cookie sheet; cool.

Reserve 4 peach slices. Coarsely chop remaining peach slices. Just before serving, beat whipping cream and powdered sugar in chilled bowl until soft peaks form. Fold in chopped peaches. For each serving, put 2 rounds together, spreading about 1/4 cup whipped cream mixture between each. Top desserts with remaining whipped cream mixture; garnish with reserved peach slices. Refrigerate any remaining desserts. 4 servings.

Cinnamon-Sugar Glaze: Mix 3 tablespoons sugar and 1 teaspoon ground cinnamon; stir in 1 tablespoon water.

High Altitude Directions (3500 to 6500 feet): Heat oven to 375°.

Orange-Strawberry Angel Parfait

1 package (16 ounces) one-step white angel food cake mix
1-1/3 cups cold orange juice
Strawberry Sauce (below)
1 package (8 ounces) cream cheese, softened
1 cup sugar
2 teaspoons grated orange peel
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 cups chiled whipping cream
1 cup miniature marshmallows

Heat oven to 325°. Prepare cake mix as directed on package except—substitute orange juice for the water. Bake until top crust is golden brown and cracks feel dry, about 1 hour. Cool as directed on package.

Prepare Strawberry Sauce; cool. Tear cake into about 1-inch pieces. Beat cream cheese, sugar, orange peel and vanilla in large bowl on medium speed, scraping bowl occasionally, until smooth and creamy. Beat whipping cream in chilled bowl until stiff. Gently fold marshmallows and cream cheese mixture into whipped cream. Toss with cake pieces.

Reserve 1/2 cup of the Strawberry Sauce; cover and refrigerate. Lightly spoon about 1/3 of the cake mixture into 3-quart glass soufflé dish or bowl; gently spread to make a layer. Spread half of the remaining Strawberry Sauce (about 1-1/4 cups) over layer in dish. Repeat with half of the remaining cake mixture. Top with remaining Strawberry Sauce. Spoon remaining cake mixture over sauce. Cover and refrigerate at least 8 hours. Just before serving, drizzle reserved Strawberry Sauce over top. 12 to 16 servings.

Strawberry Sauce: Mix 2 packages (16 ounces each) frozen sliced strawberries, thawed, and 1 tablespoon cornstarch in saucepan. Cook over medium heat, stirring frequently, until mixture thickens and boils. Boil and stir 1 minute.

High Altitude Directions (3500 to 6500 feet): Prepare cake mix and bake as directed in high altitude directions on package (do not use orange juice). Continue as directed in recipe.

Raspberry-Filled Lemon Cake

1 package (18.5 ounces) lemon cake mix
1 package (3 ounces) cream cheese, softened
1 jar (10 ounces) red raspberry jam
Lemon-Cream Cheese Frosting (below)

Heat oven to 350°. Grease and flour 2 round pans, 9×1-1/2 inches. Prepare cake mix as directed on package except—omit oil; mix in cream cheese with the water and eggs. Pour into pans. Bake as directed; cool 10 minutes. Remove from pans; cool completely.

Prepare Lemon-Cream Cheese Frosting. Spread 1 cake layer with 1/4 cup jam, 1/2 cup frosting and another 1/4 cup jam. Top with remaining layer; spread with remaining jam to within 1/2 inch of edge. Spread remaining frosting on side of cake. Refrigerate at least 1 hour. Refrigerate any remaining cake.

High Altitude Directions (3500 to 6500 feet): Prepare cake mix as directed in high altitude directions on package except—omit oil; mix in cream cheese with water and eggs.

Blueberry-Filled Granola Bars

Blueberry Filling (below)
1 package chewy granola bar mix (any flavor)
1/2 cup flaked coconut
1/4 cup packed brown sugar
1/4 cup plus 2 tablespoons margarine or butter, softened
1/2 teaspoon baking soda

Heat oven to 400°. Prepare Blueberry Filling. Mix granola bar mix (dry), coconut, brown sugar, margarine and baking soda in large bowl. After work, Una Marie Pierce, 45, runs 15 miles to her home.

When she 'runs home,' she means it

Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — After a long day at work, when Una Marie Pierce says she has to run home, she means it.

She runs 15 miles from Naranca Elementary School in suburban El Cajon, where she is a third-grade teacher, to her house in suburban North Park.

Ms. Pierce is a running commuter, choosing to pass by freeway traffic and automobile exhaust, and make it to and from work using leg power.

Ms. Pierce, 45, a marathon runner who describes herself as "a nut on saving gas," is able to get in a good share of the 50 miles a week she runs by running home from work twice a week.

Running home is a "really nice, calming thing to do in the evening," Ms. Pierce says. She prefers running at night anyway because it is cooler. And the darkness doesn't frighten her.

"Oh, sometimes someone will call out something, but usually it's something nice," Ms. Pierce said cheerily. "Nobody's ever said anything bad or tried to hurt me. Besides, I don't scare too easily."

When Ms. Pierce runs home, she follows a tri-city course that loops through El Cajon, La Mesa and the city of San Diego. In a pouch specially made for running shoes, she carries her house key, her classroom key and $1.10.

The $1 is in case she needs to take a bus home. The dime is for a phone call. She never has had to use either in the four years she has been a running commuter.

On Monday, Ms. Pierce drives her car to work, fills it with a week's worth of clothes and lunches and leaves at school until Friday afternoon. Three days a week she bikes to work, and on Friday, she takes a bus to work.

No matter how she gets to or from work, Ms. Pierce does not like to bring her schoolwork home with her, so carrying papers is not a problem. But she always is at school by 6:30 a.m., leaving her home two hours before class for preparation. And she usually stays after school a few hours, as well.

Ms. Pierce started running six years ago at 39.

At that time, she was finishing her master's thesis for teaching. Ten unwanted pounds hugged her hips.

She started entering 10K (6.2 miles) races and ultimately marathons (26.2 miles). She has frequently placed among the top three or four finishers in her division.

Ms. Pierce, who is 5 feet 3 inches and a muscular 120 pounds, encourages her pupils to run, too. Twenty minutes before lunchtime, she takes her class out to the school field and has them run three laps — about a mile — with her.

Ms. Pierce started the daily class run several years ago because she thought the exercise would induce the children to eat more of their lunches. She had seen many children simply discard much of their lunch in the trash.

Coffee caffeine: Emergency asthma treatment

BOSTON (AP) — Asthma sufferers caught without their medication can turn to a home remedy first recommended over a century ago — strong coffee, whose caffeine can open breathing passages as effectively as a common anti-asthma drug, researchers report.

But while two cups of java have been found to relieve asthma as well as theophylline, the standard prescription therapy, the nation's 6 million to 8 million asthma patients shouldn't try to replace their pills with coffee, the doctors said.

"If patients with asthma were really stuck and didn't have their usual anti-asthma medication with them, it might be worthwhile trying a very old remedy. Some strong brewed coffee might well be expected to have some medicinal effect," said Dr. F. Estelle R. Simons, one of the researchers.

But she added: "For sure, patients shouldn't go off their asthma drugs and switch to coffee."

Coffee's ability to relieve asthma was first reported by Dr. Hyde Salter in a British medical journal in 1859, but few doctors are aware of its therapeutic properties.

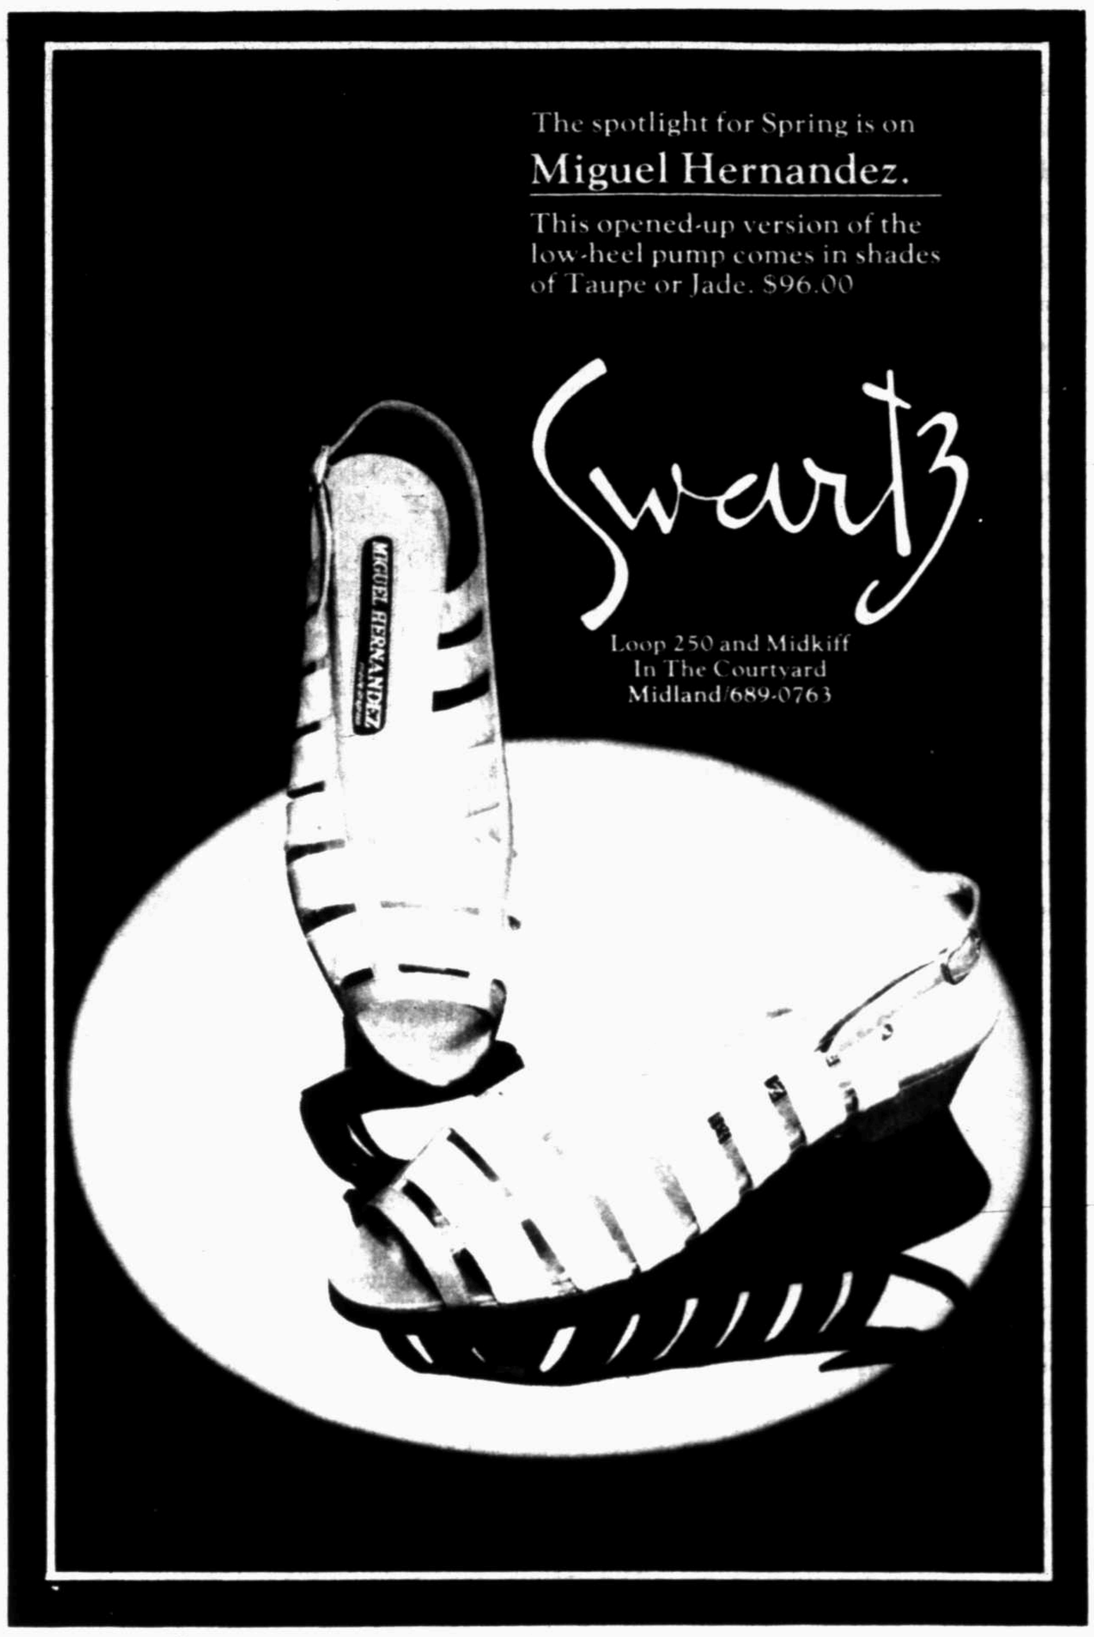

Death rate drops

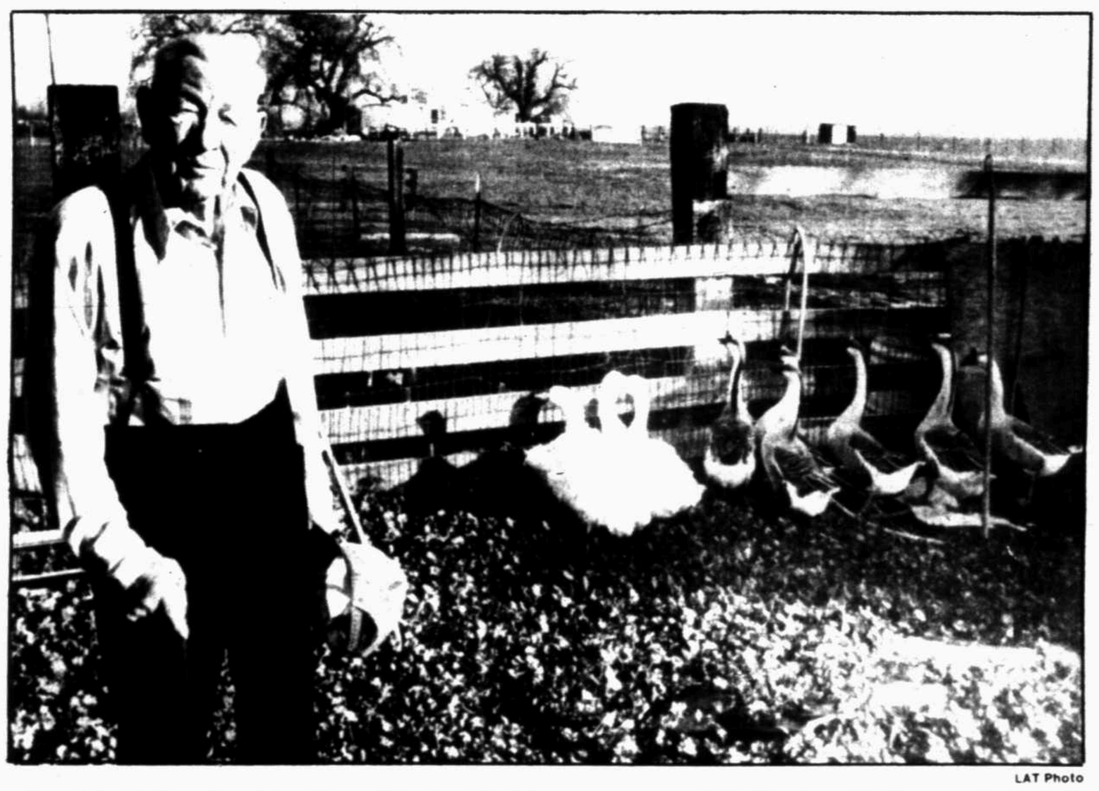

By The Associated Press

Some 100 of every 1,000 children died before their first birthday 70 years ago, according to the American Council of Life Insurance. Today, because of medical and technical advances, the rate is 11 deaths per 1,000 infants born.

At the turn of the century, the average life expectancy was 47.3 years. A child born today, however, can expect to live 74.5 years.

Between 1959 and 1970, the death rate among young children declined by 53 percent.

Leo CLark, 92, who styles himself "a tough old bird," with his white Sebastopol and brown Chinese geese at his Corning, Calif. spread. Clark is also renowned among fanciers of iris.

'Tough old bird' still self-employed

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Four honking snowy Sebastopol geese came running toward him, followed by a dozen equally vociferous brown Chinese geese.

"I'm a tough old bird, still self-employed," Clark allowed. "Sure, I'm ancient and knocked out and some days feel like 192. But other times I feel like I'm only 42."

Clark has lived his entire life on his Northern California farm in a two-story, stone-and-mortar house built in 1852.

He is affectionately known throughout the world by iris fanciers as the "Grand Old Man of Iris," and throughout the United States by exotic fowl breeders as the "Grand Old Man of Rare Birds."

"By God, I'll never give up till they bury these tired old bones six feet under," he said.

Clark is busy as ever developing new plants and breeding his birds.

"Those white peacocks that just flew out the door go for as much as $100 each. I sold 40 to 50 last year," he observed. "The Sebastopol geese bring $65 a pair."

In a pen filled with blue Andalusian chickens, Clark explained: "These are my latest acquisitions. I picked them up last week at a chicken swap."

He has a couple of acres in iris, dormant this time of year, with each plant marked with a white descriptive tag.

"Good Lord, Leo has introduced well over 100 hybrid irises over the years," said Tom Wilkes, 73, of Las Vegas, Nev., who for years served as president of the International Aril Iris Society and editor of its journal.

"Leo has done as much for iris as any person living. You do know oncocyclus iris is considered the most beautiful and difficult plant to keep alive in captivity," Wilkes added.

Clark has done a lot of work with oncocyclus. Many iris hybrids have been named after Clark by society members and commercial growers. He attributes his success with irises to his having been the first to import many species from several foreign nations, plants that had never been in this country before.

He has spent years meticulously cross-pollinating irises from overseas with domestic plants, developing hybrids with vivid new colors, new sizes, new shapes.

"Genes of hybrids that Leo Clark produced will go on forever," said William D. Hawkinson, assistant superintendent of the Los Angeles State and County Arboretum.

As for his work with fowl, Clark has won top awards since the 1920s for breeding his birds to best of show.

Cholesterol lowered in diet

From Staff Reports

Cholesterol has gained new importance to health-conscious Americans because a 10-year study has shown lowering blood cholesterol can help prevent heart attacks.

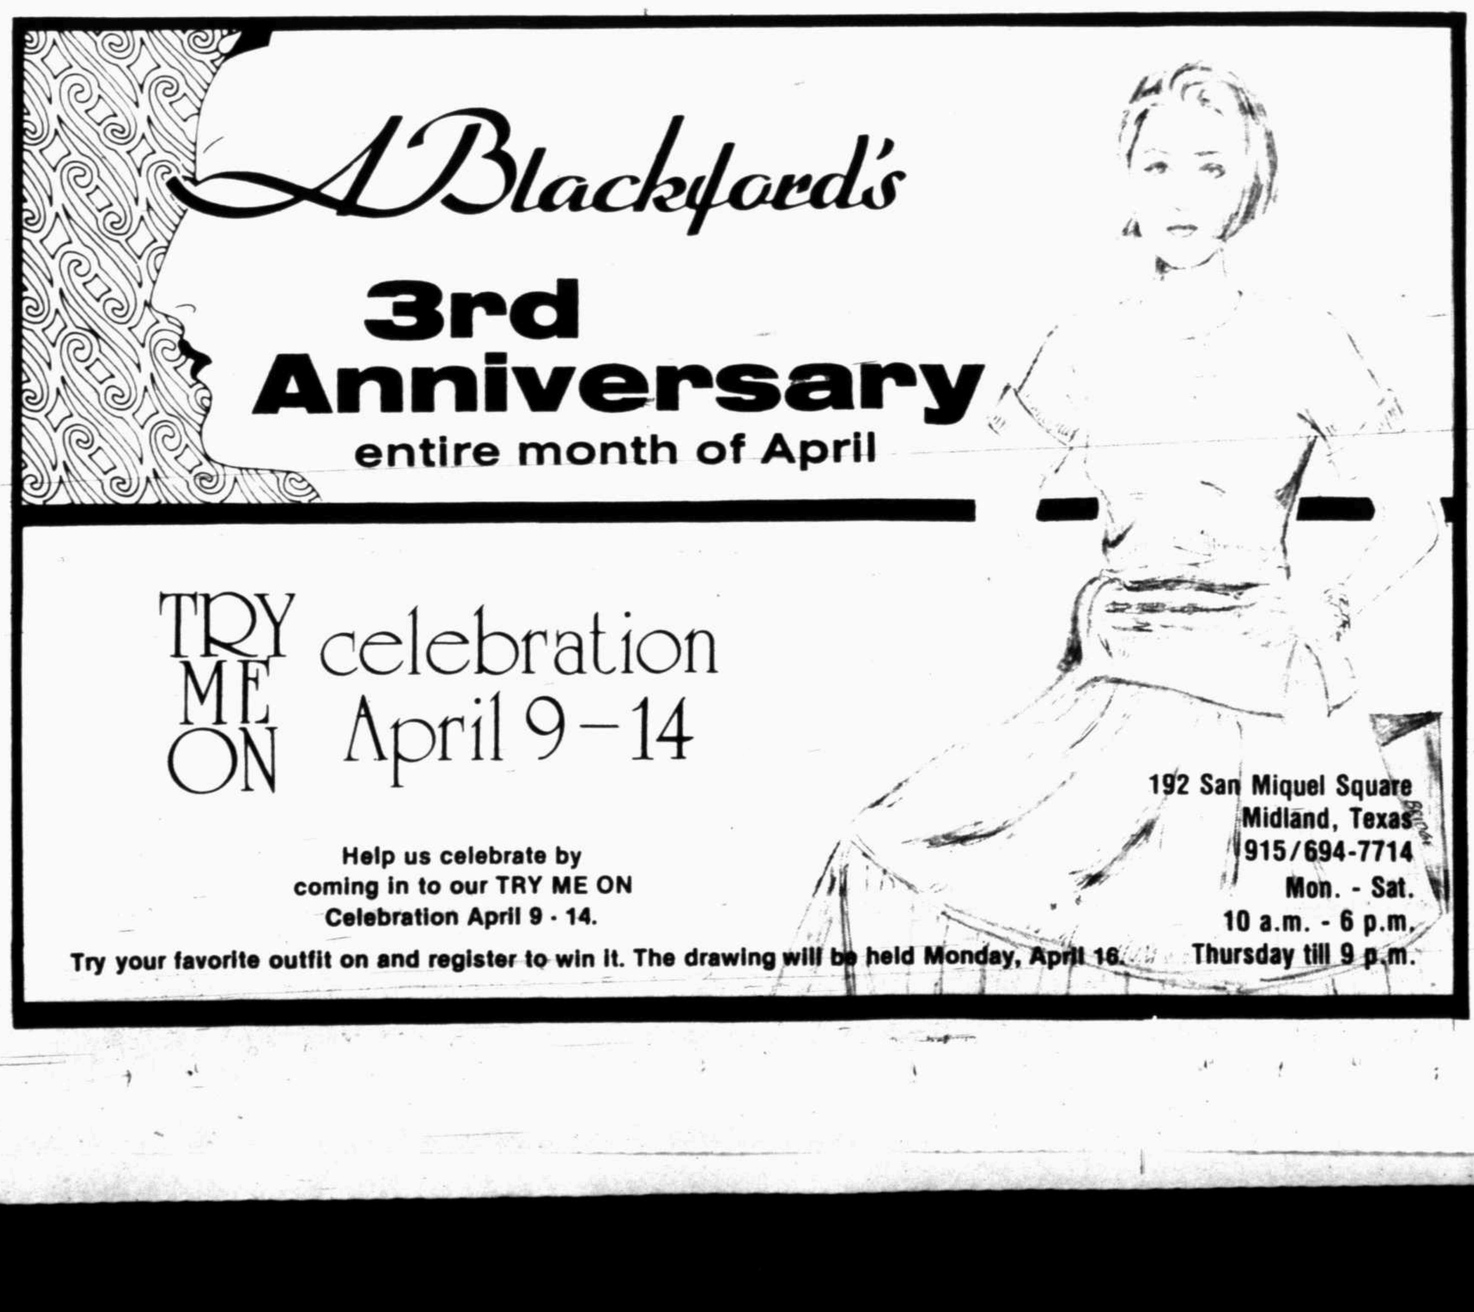

Dietitians at ARA Services, which served 400,000 meals per day at 350 hospitals and nursing homes across the country, offer the following guidelines to lower blood cholesterol through diet:

— Decrease total intake of fat. Instead of obtaining 40 to 50 percent of calories from fat as in the "typical" American diet, follow a "heart-smart" diet which provides 30 to 35 percent of calories from fat.

— Eat less saturated fat (usually of animal origin and solid at room temperature), such as that found in red meat, whole milk and butter. Two vegetable oils high in sturated fat are coconut and plam, commonly fond in non-dairy creamers.

— Decrease total saturated fat consumption by decreasing overalll-meat intake. Eat more poultry, fish and dried beans instead of red meat. Avoid luncheon meats, frankfurters, bacon and sausages, all full of fat. Avoid frying — bake, broil, roast or boil instead. When using fat use polyunsaturated variety, which is vegetable in origin and liquid at room temperature (such as corn, safflower, sunflower, sesame, cotton and soybean oils).

— Restrict intake of foods high in cholesterol. Because foods high in saturated fat often are high in cholesterol, cutting back on these fats means cutting back on cholesterol.

'Spotreducing' dieting fable

By DAN RILEY
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

"How can I get rid of this?" I'm asked that all the time, by men pointing to the bulge flowing over the belt, by women pointing to their back porch.

Then come the other questions: What exercises can I do?

If I do a lot of situps, will I get rid of my belly?

What about a 10-minute sauna?

How about wrapping one of those sweat belts around my waist or hips, won't that help melt away the fat?

The questions are all aimed at "spot reducing" — a term used to describe losing weight in one area. And it's a lost cause — because there's no such thing as "spot reducing."

You can't lose weight in just one area of the body through diet or exercise. It's impossible physiologically, metabolically or logically.

The literature available is absolute in this area. No exceptions, no maybes: It can't be done.

You're probably shaking your head and saying, "No, that can't be." I know it's hard to believe that you can't target-burn those bulges of pork.

That's not what many of you have been told. You've been misled, deceived or lied to. Many books, magazine articles and fitness "experts" have explained and outlined programs designed to spot reduce.

Initially people believe that balderdash. It would be great if you could do a few side benders to get rid of all those Milky Way bar bulges. Don't be fooled. It doesn't work that way.

Many of you have probably already learned the hard way.

Why does this fat tend to accumulate in select areas of the body? Because there are individual tendencies to deposit fat in different body areas. This is an inherited characteristic that cannot be altered.

The average man deposits more fat around the midsection, while a woman stores more around the hips and buttocks. Understand, however, that you store fat throughout the entire body. Therefore, when you gain weight (fat), it's deposited throughout the entire body.

Unfortunately, it's not distributed evenly. More is deposited in certain areas than others.

On the other hand, when you lose fat you lose it from all areas of the body. Not just from those areas where you have the largest deposits. You can't lose it from just the hips or belly.

To lose fat you must take in fewer calories than you burn off.

If you burn off 2,500 calories a day and take in only 2,000 calories, your body will need 500 calories worth of energy from somewhere else. The body will make up the 500-calorie deficit by using your stored supply of fat.

It will take that fat from all parts of your body, not just from the areas of excess (belly, hips, buttocks, etc.). Some of the fat will come from your face, neck, shoulders, arms, and so on.

For example, let's assume you have five pounds of visible excess fat hanging around your midsection. If so, you'll probably have an additional 15 pounds of extra fat distributed more evenly throughout your body. It won't be as visible as that blob around your middle, but it's there.

Dollmaker's costumes historically correct

SHARON, Pa. (AP) — For Sheila Wallace, historic figures represent more than dry facts and people far removed from contemporary life. Her extensive reading, research and reflection have given her insight into the humanness of some of history's most powerful and interesting characters.

And Ms. Wallace, of Grove City, uses this insight as she fashions dolls from beeswax, recreating royal personages from years long past.

Her one-of-a-kind dolls have been displayed at museums in the United States and England and are considered collectors' items.

The dolls, 18 to 20 inches tall, are sculpted from bleached beeswax rather than cast from molds.

"The recipe I use is roughly based on one from the 16th century," Ms. Wallace said. "I add basic color pigments when I melt the wax so I can achieve a light complexion for female figures and a darker one for men. I have complete control over the color process."

Ms. Wallace said part of the challenge lay in miniaturizing all the features, clothing and jewelry. The dolls' feet are reinforced plastic to provide a firm foundation. The bodies, cloth-filled with polyester fiber, are costumed lavishly over copper wire.

Beeswax has proven to be a surprisingly durable substance for Ms. Wallace.

"Its melting point is 145 degrees. It's durable," she said. "Egyptian and Greek artists used wax to do some figures, and some of their works survive."

Making beeswax dolls started as a hobby when Ms. Wallace was an art and anatomy student in England. She studied at London art shools, including Heatherley School of Fine Art. Ms. Wallace also studied at Madame Tussaud's wax works.

"I think Madame Tussaud must have seen a marvelous piece of history," Ms. Wallace said. "Death masks of famous people were made and that was really something."

After returning to the United States, Ms. Wallace turned a hobby into her full-time work. She has been designing dolls for about 10 years and codes them to keep track of where the figures have homes around the world.

"I finally hit 100," she said.

Ms. Wallace draws on her research to make certain that each doll's costume is historically correct — from the outer layers to the undergarments. Sculpting and costuming an Elizabeth II figure in her coronation robes took Ms. Wallace three months.

"The undergarments must be correct or the costumes won't hang right," Ms. Wallace said. "For example, a Gibson-era bride would need a straight-front corset with yards of frilly petticoats to give her outfit the right look."

Ms. Wallace brings the faces of her figures to life by using a needle to set hair, eyebrows and eyelashes. She paints the faces and does hairstyles according to the styles of the periods. And to achieve detail and accuracy in her dolls, Ms. Wallace studies paintings.

Researchers say interferon could be first effective AIDS treatment

BOSTON (AP) — A new study buttresses researchers' hopes that interferon will be the first effective means for reviving the devastated immune systems of AIDS victims and protect them from deadly infections.

The research shows that the bodies of AIDS sufferers fail to produce a crucial disease-fighting substance called gamma interferon. In the test tube, doses of interferon appear to restore this germ-killing power.

The research, directed by Dr. Henry W. Murray of Cornell University Medical College, was published in a recent New England Journal of Medicine. Studies are already under way elsewhere to determine whether interferon injections can rearm AIDS patients' immune defenses.

One of these experiments is being conducted at Boston's New England Deaconess Hospital by Dr. Jerone Groopman, who said: "Dr. Murray's work further substantiates the rationale for the use of gamma interferon in AIDS patients, and we're very optimistic about its ultimate clinical utility."

So far, more than 3,500 Americans have been stricken with AIDS, and more than 1,300 of them have died. Most of the victims are male homosexuals or drug abusers, but hemophiliacs, Haitians and people who receive ordinary blood tranfusions also face an increased risk.

Interferon is not likely to cure AIDS. Instead, researchers hope that it will eliminate the most dangerous complications of the disease, much as insulin is used to treat but not cure diabetes.

These complications are called "opportunistic infections." Acquired immune deficiency syndrome destroys the body's defenses against ordinary germs. Many victims become overwhelmed by these viruses and bacteria and die from the infections.

"All we're doing is trying to put out the major fire, and that is death from opportunistic infection," Murray said in an interview.

If interferon works as well in the body as it does in the test tube, it will prevent these lethal attacks.

"It holds the promise of being able to bypass the defunct immune system entirely and deliver what we think is the key product that you've got to have to be able to kill most of the organisms that infect these patients," Murray said.

In healthy people, gamma interferon is produced by white blood cells called helper T cells. However, AIDS victims have far fewer of these T cells than do healthy folks, and the ones that remain don't release the interferon.

Ordinarily, these helper T cells produce gamma interferon when exposed to germs. This substance activates other blood cells called macrophages. And they, in turn, release hydrogen peroxide and kill the microbes.

"Since 96 percent of all the patients with AIDS and opportunistic infections who have been admitted to New York Hospital have died within 12 months from another infection, it is difficult not to be pessimistic about what appears to be an irreversible and uniformly fatal immune defect," the researchers wrote.

"However," they added, "for two reasons, the results of our study can be viewed as encouraging."

The study identifies a defect in the production of a specific substance that is now available in large quantities from genetically rearranged bacteria, and "our studies establish a rationale for vigorously pursuing evaluation of gamma interferon as a molecular replacement therapy."

In addition, they said, gamma interferon revives disease defenses in the test tube, and it may work as well in the body.

Telephone program helping save lives of heart attack sufferers

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — A man calling from a phone booth described his chest pain to a coronary care nurse at the other end of the line. Then he put the mouthpiece to a small, portable transmitter over his heart and sent her an electrocardiograph reading.

His symptoms and recorded heartbeats made it obvious to the nurse — the person on the phone was having a heart attack. Her next words probably helped save his life.

Instructed by the nurse, the man injected himself in the thigh with lidocaine from a specially designed package and settled back into the booth to wait for paramedics from Los Angeles Fire Station 53.

Eight minutes later he was admitted to San Pedro Peninsula Hospital. There, cardiologists confirmed he was, in fact, having a heart attack.

The man is one of 336 people who are part of San Pedro Peninsula's Pre-Hospital Intervention System — one of the few programs in the nation designed to reduce the death rate among those released from the hospital after a heart attack.

Although the exact impact is difficult to assess, the system's cardiologists estimate they have held the death rate of those involved to 6 percent during the critical first year after discharge. During that time, the chance of having another heart attack is 50-50.

Overall, during the hospital's five-year study, an estimated 17 percent (4.3 percent a year) died of a variety of causes, including heart problems.

At hospitals without such a program, an estimated 10 percent of their patients die of recurring heart problems within the first year after discharge.

"This is the No. 1 problem in cardiology today," said Dr. Bruce Goldreyer, one of the heart specialists involved in the program. "Relatively high mortality rates following a heart attack still remain."

Coronary artery disease and heart attack represent the major causes of death in the United States. An estimated 1.5 million people a year suffer heart attacks or develop heart disease. Amost half die.

If the 10 percent figure is correct, another 75,000 die of heart-related complications within the first year of their initial attack.

San Pedro Peninsula's cardiologists attribute their program's apparent success to the extension of basic medical techniques into their patients' homes and workplaces. By doing so, they have given them quicker access to emergency care.

Now, instead of hoping paramedics will arrive on time, cardiac patients can phone the hospital, determine their condition and, if necessary, give themselves medication to help stave off a heart attack.

"This really expedites things," said Roger Bandy, a paramedic at Fire Station 53. "By the time an emergency crew has arrived, the nurse is on the phone with the medical history. The person may have already taken lidocaine. ... A few minutes can mean a life."

Before their release from the hospital, high-risk patients learn about their particular heart problem, the risks and the medications they should take. After discharge, they are told to make routine "appointment calls" to inform the hospital about their present condition.

They are required to call every day for the first four weeks, weekly for the next month and monthly from them on. Patients are to make emergency calls anytime they experience chest pain, irregular heartbeats, nausea, unusual sweating, fatigue, difficulty breathing or anxiety.

In addition, the patient is given an electrocardiograph transmitter, nitroglycerin to stop chest pain and two small cartridges of lidocaine — an anesthetic that can stall the onset of a heart attack.

During the routine calls, a cardiac care nurse, who has the patient's chart before her, checks up on the person and takes a one-minute electrocardiograph reading.

Drowsiness still unfortunate side effect of antihistamines

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been using antihistamines for a case of hay fever, but taking them is almost like using knockout drops. I don't know whether it's worse to sneeze or to walk around in a daze. Can't anything be done about this condition? — Calvin, Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Calvin: As you indicated, drowsiness is a particularly disturbing side effect of antihistamine use. Although efforts are undereay to remedy the condition, the hay fever patient has few alternatives: Either use the antihistamines and avoid driving or working around machinery that requires alertness; refrain from using any medication and suffer the symptoms of hay fever; or use corticosteroids, which I would rarely recommend and which, in any event, should be done only under medical supervision.

The only other alternative is to hope that continued research is successful in eliminating drowsiness as a side effect of antihistamine therapy, or a better control for allergy can be found.

Dear Dr. Solomon: You have commented at various times on how alcohol affects a man's sexual performance, but if you have written about women, I must have missed it. I'm not talking about a woman who has had a drink, but about someone you would call an alcoholic. How is such a woman's sexual life affected? — Florence, Los Angeles, California

Dear Florence: Most studies indicate that women alcoholics experience a decrease both in the frequency and in the intensity of their sexual drive.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I took your one-day treatment in Baltimore and stopped smoking about six months ago but I still worry about the possibility of lung cancer. How can I check to make sure I don't have it, or if I do have it, that it is still at a point that something can be done about it, such as an operation? — Charley, Oakland, Calif.

Dear Charley: A recent study conducted by the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota, indicates that chest X-rays every four months are the best method for detecting lung tumors while they are still at an early stage.

Warts caused by viral infection on upper skin

By JEANNE A. PETREK, M.D.

My daughter has two warts on her hand and I am concerned that she will get more. What can I do about it? Do I need to take her to a dermatologist?

Warts result from a viral infection of the upper layers of the skin. The virus invades tiny cuts and cracks. Warts are found almost exclusively in adolescents. While they are contagious, only persons with a poor immune system will develop a severe case. Accordingly, it is not necessary to avoid a person with warts.

Warts usually do not require treatment, since they disappear with time. However, sometimes because of their ugly appearance, a dermatologist will remove them, usually with liquid nitrogen.

As far as removing warts yourself, there are reasonably effective nonprescription commercial preparations containing salicylic acid. If you follow the directions exactly, you can take care of small numbers of common skin warts.

Do not treat skin that is extensively covered with warts or warts that are in a place where a cosmetic result might matter. Certainly, one should never try cutting off warts, as I have seen patients do, with manicure scissors. This may result in unnecessary scarring and spread the virus more deeply.

A few of my friends have either developed lupus or their doctor suspects it. What causes this disease? Can it be treated? How serious is it?

The cause of lupus is unknown. It occurs in women three times as often as in men and mostly in the 30-to-45-year-old group. As with some forms of arthritis, lupus is believed to be an auto-immune disease. That is, the woman appears to be producing antibodies against her own normal tissue; as everyone may know, antibodies should be produced only against foreign substances.

Genetic factors may play a role, since lupus runs in families. Viruses also may be a factor, and a viral syndrome is often found with the beginning of the illness. Because its symptoms are varied and like those of many other diseases, lupus has often been called "the great imitator."

Instances of lupus are often precipitated by infection, injury or emotional stress. Even sunlight may precipitate the disease. In 30 percent of lupus cases, the patient will note a sensitivity to light or perhaps feel sick in sunlight even before diagnosis. Lupus patients should wear broad-rimmed hats, use sun screens and avoid exposure for more than 20 or 30 minutes at a time.

The flare-ups result from greater activity of the disease. Since lupus affects the entire body, causing it to function below par, fatigue often occurs. A long rest period in the afternoon may alleviate the symptoms. If the attack is more severe and accompanied by fever, complete bed rest is often necessary.

Aspirin in regular doses is often sufficient for the usually painless inflammation and is used more to control inflammation than the pain. If aspirin does not suffice, an antimalarial drug — hydroxycholoquine, related to quinine — is often used. In addition, steroids are usually necessary for the more serious manifestations of lupus such as fever, anemia, seizures or kidney problems.

Dr. Jeanne A. Petrek is a columnist for King Features Syndicate.

Dietary supplement soy lecithin suspected to be fetal hazard

NEW YORK (AP) — A pregnant woman may alter her infant's brain development if she takes commercial preparations of the dietary supplement soy lecithin, a researcher says.

Although the warning is based on a study of rats, there is "every reason to discourage pregnant women, or women who would like to get pregnant, from taking dietary supplements of lecithin," said Joanne M. Bell, a behavioral pharmacologist at Duke University Medical Center in Durham, N.C.

In a telephone interview, Ms. Bell said lecithin found naturally in eggs, soybeans, liver and nuts poses no problem. The potential hazard comes from adding lecithin intake with commercial dietary supplements, she said. Some people take supplements because lecithin removes cholesterol from the arteries, which has led to its use in treating hardening of the arteries.

"If you take too much of it, it might be dangerous," she said. Since the dietary supplements contain other chemicals beside lecithin, it is unclear just what produced the brain abnormalities in the rats she studied, she said.

Offspring of the rats who ate the supplement showed significant differences from the other rats in their brains and behavior. The cells in the brain's cortex matured more slowly.

Visitors steer cruisers down Scottish canal

From Staff Reports

INVERNESS, Scotland — The Caledonian Canal that cuts 60 miles through the Scottish Highlands has evolved from a major trade route to become the center for one of the most unusual and exciting vacations available in Scotland — cabin cruising.

About 160 years ago fishing vessels and cargo boats sailed the waters of Scotland's Great Glen. Today these are much fewer and are joined by luxurious two- to eight-berth cruisers chartered and driven by visitors from all over the world.

Neither seafaring experience nor a bumper bank balance are necessary for these holidays with a difference. Instruction from charter company staff members is available, and with charter costs starting about $280 per week for a four-bunk curiser, hotel bills are non-existant.

The locks and lochs of Caledonian Canal, which runs southwest from Inverness to Fort William, make cabin cruising both an adventure and a pleasure. Travelers can scout Loch Ness for a glimpse of the elusive monster "Nessie," assist in navigating through the locks allowing boats to climb from one water level to another, stop for a round of two of golf or moor and picnic in picturesque coves lining the banks of the lochs.

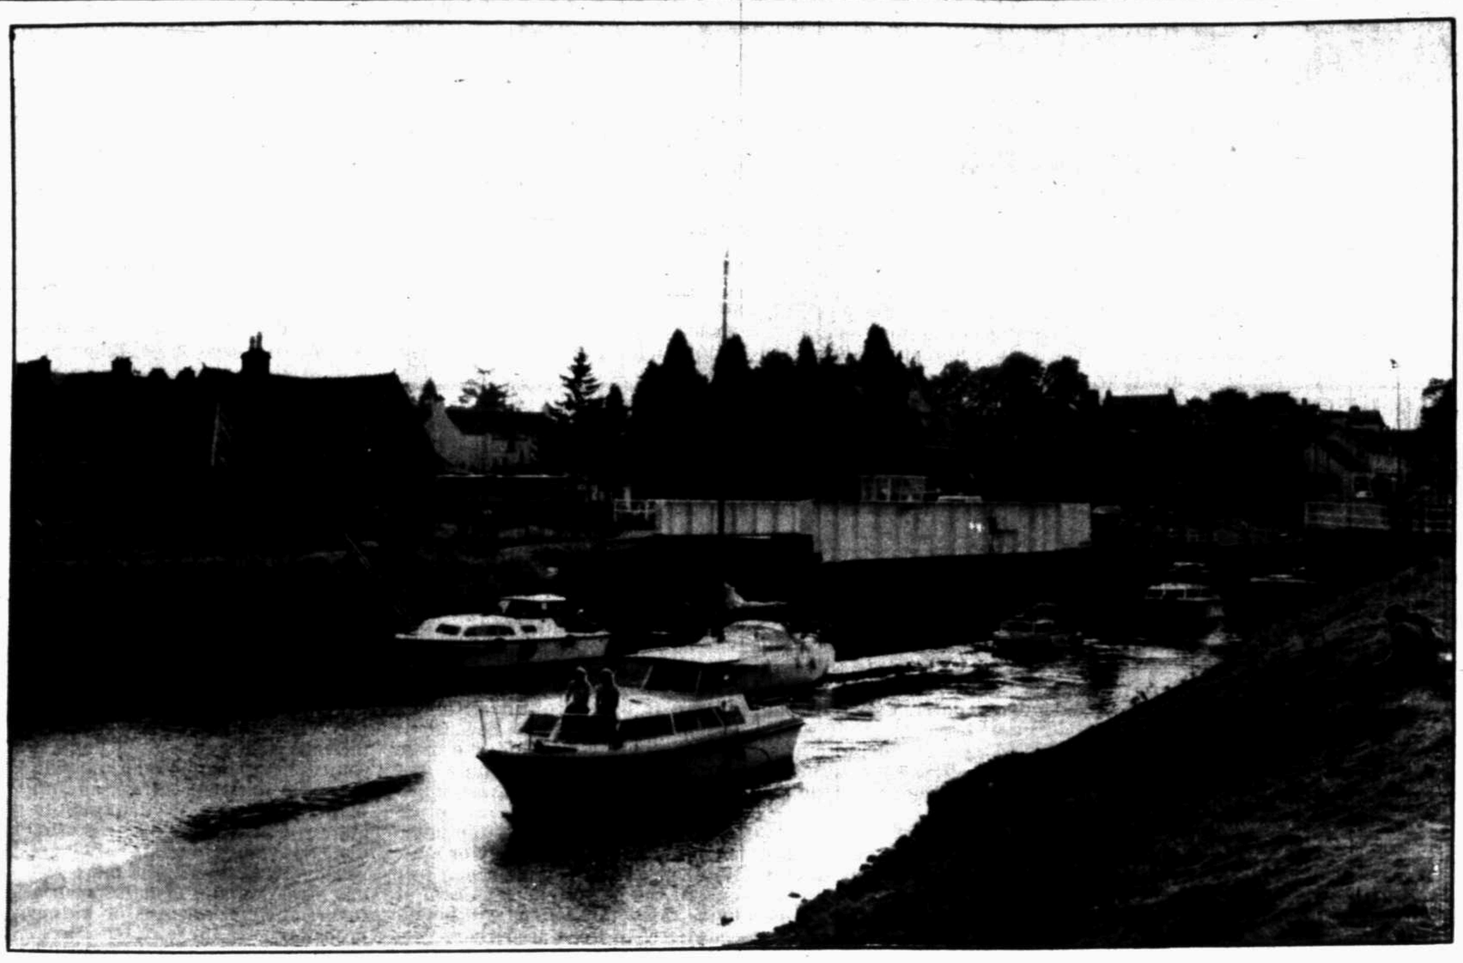

The Caledonian Canal is not totally canal — 38 miles are natural, deep-water lochs. The rest has been dug and filled by hand. From Inverness visitors pass through Loch Ness, Loch Oich and Loch Lochy before arriving at Fort William on the southern reaches of Great Glen.

Several firms charter cruises to visitors, but one of the largest fleets belongs to Caley Cruisers in Inverness and is run by Jim and Elizabeth Hogan. The 50-vessel fleet consists of different configurations that sleep from two to eight. All boats in the Caley fleet have fully-equiped galley, storage space, washrooms and toilets. Larger vessels have showers.

Groceries can be delivered. Those wanting to fish can obtain permits for salmon, sea trout, brown trout, eel and pike through Caley. Fuel is provided on deposit and payable at the end of each charter.

A 5 percent discount is given when two weeks are booked, and taxes are not included.

Inverness is accessible by air, road or rail from major British cities. For further information and reservations contact Caley Cruisers, Dept. MS, at Canal Road, Inverness, Scotland IV3 6NF, telephone 0463-236328.

Cabin cruisers at Fort Augustus, Scotland may be chartered and self-navigated for vacation cruising down the 60-mile Caledonian Canal running from Inverness through the Scottish Highlands' Great Glen, Lochs Ness, Oich and Lochy. Charters are ideal for both experienced and novice boatsmen, providing the means for cruising at your own pace.

Marketplace in Holy Land distracting

Copley News Service

NAZARETH, Israel — Outside the Church of the Annunciation, built over the site where the angel announced to Mary she would be the mother of Jesus, vendors hawk postcards — 20, even 40, for $1 — souvenir crosses and Yasser Arafat-style scarves.

At the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem, where Jesus was born, you can buy candles bearing the city's name.

At the Jordan River baptismal site north of Jericho you can buy bottles of river water from the stream where St. John the Baptist baptized Christ.

At other religious sites and shrines throughout Israel you can buy earth from Calvary (certified by a Greek Orthodox prelate), sketches of the Old City of Jerusalem, biblical figures carved of olive wood and your pick of a seemingly inexhaustible supply of rosaries, medallions and other keepsakes.

For this is the Holy Land, the "land of the Bible," a land revered for the same as well as different reasons by Christians, Jews and Moslems.

For some pilgrims, all this buying and selling constitute an undignified commercialism that disfigures the shrines they revere, but others accept it as unavoidable, reasoning that only if nobody came to the Holy Land would the ubiquitous vendors and gift shops disappear.

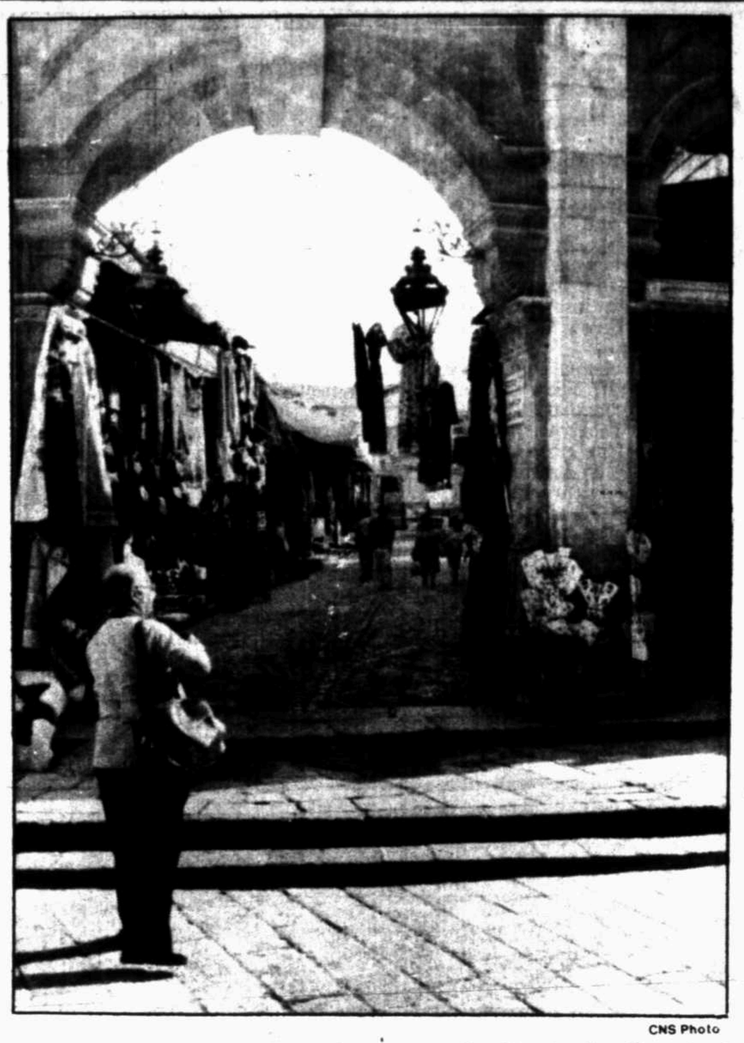

Their counsel, therefore, is to prepare pilgrims in advance or just ignore it.

"As long as they keep it out of the church, we can live with it," said the Rev. John Dumotor, a Franciscan priest from Canada at the Church of the Annunciation in Nazareth.

"It doesn't bother me at all," said the Rev. Kash D. Amburgy, an Assembly of God minister from New Lebanon, Ohio.

The Rev. Gail Ott, pastor of an Assembly of God Church in Vancouver, Wash., says Holy Land commercialism is probably unavoidable as long as great numbers of pilgrims go there.

"I pastor a church in Washington, but I don't have people coming to my church by the hundreds of thousands because it's not a place of general interest," Ott said. "So I think, yes, it's commercialized in some ways, but that's because so many hundreds of thousands of pilgrims want to see these places."

CNS Photo

Souvenir shops line the ancient streets leading to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, as they do around most of the shrines in Israel.

Does the commercialism detract from the dignity of the holy places?

"Yes, I think in some sense it does, but not enough not to come to the Holy Land," Ott said.

"Look at the Statue of Liberty in New York. Look how many people go there. That's not a religious shrine, of course, but just the fact that so many people go there doesn't diminish the dignity of the place."

But the Rev. Frank Genevieve, a Roman Catholic Franciscan priest from Boston and first-time Holy Land visitor, said the commercialism definitely detracts from the dignity of the Holy Land shrines.

"I think it is too commercialized, especially along the Via Dolorosa (the street on which Christ carried his cross up to Calvary)," he said. "I really felt there should have been more of a holy atmosphere there, a sacredness or sanctity, and it doesn't seem to be there at all."

Juanita Meller of the Southern California Charismatics Renewal Services, a Catholic charismatic organization in Los Angeles, said that with adequate preparation, Christians can minimize the commercial aspects of the Holy Land.

"You need to come with the thought of going on a pilgrimage, not a tour," said Meller, who has visited the Holy Land six times.

"We try to create a healthy, holy atmosphere while at the same time not forgetting time for play. You need balance," she said.

Meller said she meets with pilgrims twice before the tour and usually twice afterward.

Mike Rogoff of Jerusalem, a licensed tour guide, said it's only natural that tourists would want to buy souvenirs of the Holy Land and that the commercialism there is no worse than anywhere else.

"Put it this way," he said. "There are several places where I find the commercial element disturbing. Every now and again you hit a place where it's just a bit too much. It just kind of detracts from what the place is all about but, in a general sense, I don't think it's gone overboard, certainly no more than in other countries."

Denmark remembers Holocaust victims

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

GILLELEJE, Denmark — Only one person escaped. One of 80. The rest — men, women and children — were taken away by the Gestapo. Taken away and murdered.

Today, 40 years after that terrible Oct. 6 in this tiny Danish fishing village, they are remembered — remembered by a small Star of David sent from Israel that hangs on a wall of the Gilleleje church, and remembered by the many who risked their own lives to save the Jews.

The inscriptions are terse, heartbreaking. Born Nov. 18, 1922. Died Mar. 18, 1944. Dachau. Born Mar. 2, 1902. Died Nov. 16, 1944. Buchenwald.

The markers form a circle under the reaching limbs of towering birch trees in Copenhagen's Mindelunden Memorial Park. Each holds the remains of a Danish Jew who died in a Nazi concentration camp.

October 1943 was one was one of the few bright moments in a dismal period for Denmark.

The Holocaust had already consumed the lives of millions of Jews elsewhere, but the Nazis had left the 7,000 Danish Jews pretty much alone. Then word came from Germany to round up the Danish Jews and ship them to concentration camps. The madness was about to reach into the tidy farmlands of Denmark.

The operation was to begin on Oct. 1 — Rosh Hashanah — a time when most Jews would be conveniently found in their synagogues or at home. Ships were dispatched across the Baltic to carry them off to the horrors of Dachau, or Buchenwald, or Theresienstadt. All were places of unimaginable cruelty and unspeakable horror.

But, before the Gestapo could act, word was passed to the Danish Jewish community and the "Danish Miracle" began. In one day, every Jew — all 7,000 of them — disappeared.

The Danes rallied to help their Jewish neighbors. Jews were hidden in farmhouses and barns, basements and attics, hospitals and churches. From these hiding places they were smuggled to fishing boats sailing out of Denmark's many harbors. The boats carried their human cargo, frightened men and women and children, to neutral Sweden and safety.

But not all escaped. Some were captured and sent to concentration camps and almost certain death.

The 80 who remained were in high spirits despite the cold winds that chilled the attic and the primitive toilet facilities that consisted mainly of a few buckets and some straw. They were alive, and that evening they would sail to Sweden and freedom.

But they were not so lucky. A Gestapo commander had heard rumors of what was going on in Gilleleje and surrounded the church with his troops. Kleig lights were turned on, machine guns were armed, and the Jews were flushed out of their haven above the nave. Resignedly, they trooped out of the church, except for a single man who successfully hid in the belltower, and were loaded into trucks for the inevitable one-way trip to the concentration camps.

The 79 had been caught, but they were among the few. Fewer than 500 of Denmark's Jews were captured by the Nazis. The rest escaped, thanks to the remarkable humanity of the Danish people.

As King Christian X told the Gestapo when asked where all the Jews had gone: "But there are no Jews in Denmark, only Danes."

The Rocks: Once plagued, now place of pride

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

SYDNEY, Australia — When The Rocks section of Sydney was at the height of its Sodom and Gomorrah fame — a time of drunken sailors and street gangs, brothels and bars — ships' captains entering lovely Sydney harbor claimed they could hear The Rocks for a mile out to sea, and smell it for two miles.

Things became so bad in The Rocks that grown men walked in groups for safety, and garbage and excrement lay on the streets, waiting for a rainstorm to wash the filth into the harbor. Rats scurried everywhere, as brazen as pet cats and nearly as large. The Rocks was not a nice place to visit, and an even meaner place to live, where only the toughest thugs and the most tarnished women survived.

In 1900 the bubonic plague came to The Rocks, killing 130 residents and infecting twice as many. Sydneysiders, enraged by the violence of The Rocks, and now threatened by its plague, descended on the area like avenging angels. Buildings were pulled down, touts and louts were thrown out, great piles of dead rats were burned, and The Rocks was — in a minor way at least — cleaned up.

But even after the plague era The Rocks remained a rough place. Well into this century the pubs were crowded with sailors and other men as ready to fight as a junkyard dog, and women dispensed their favors in squalid little rooms over the pubs. It was not the kind of place you would take your wife for a night out.

The patient Sydneysiders finally became fed up with the sordid life of The Rocks and, in 1970, the city prepared to move bulldozers into the area and shove everything into the sea — the houses, the pubs, the history.

Ultimately, it was history that saved The Rocks. Australians finally decided that pulling down The Rocks would be a little like uprooting Plymouth Rock. For it was in The Rocks that, on January 26, 1788, 757 convicts and a party of British officers landed to begin the European settlement of this vast country.

The convicts, many of them sentenced to death for a crime as minor as stealing a loaf of bread, formed the backbone of the early settlement of Australia. Many became respected citizens, and some of Australia's finest families proudly trace their heritage to the first convict settlers.

The Rocks (so named for sheer 150-foot sandstone cliffs facing the ocean) soon became the center of commerce and shipping in Australia's greatest city. While the filth and savagery continued at the base of the cliffs, on the top were built magnificent mansions for merchants who grew fat on imports and exports.

The merchants could look down on the riffraff below and be snug in the knowledge that the lower classes could not reach their fine homes because of the cliffs. Although this smugness ended when the Argyle Cut was made through the cliffs to connect the lower streets with the higher ones, the merchants remained in their mansions while the poor stayed trapped in their hovels below.

Evidence of history in The Rocks — great old warehouses, narrow cobblestone streets, fine mansions, unique examples of Georgian and Victorian architecture, the two oldest remaining pubs in Sydney and its only village green — still existed in 1970. And thanks to the efforts of the Sydney Cove Redevelopment Authority, they continue to exist today for the enjoyment of visitors to The Rocks.

Visitors today can dine in the warehouse of Robert Campbell, Sydney's first merchant, and shop for souvenirs in the Argyle Center, begun in 1843; they can have a glass of beer at the pub of the Mercantine Hotel, which retains its 1930s art deco exterior, or have a pint of ale at the Hero of Waterloo or the Lord Nelson pubs, both built in 1842; and, they can walk through Cadman's Cottage, the oldest (1816) house in Australia, and then stroll across the street to the charming Bank of New South Wales, which is located in a building that once housed a brothel, a Chinese laundry and an opium den when this section of The Rocks was also Sydney's Chinatown.

There is a vast amount of things to do for a visitor to The Rocks, both for the seeker of history and the seeker of a good fun. Places like the Argyle Center and the Metcalf Arcade house first-rate shops (The Australian Design Center is particularly interesting), and a number of restaurants line the streets and side alleys.

The Rocks, once the home of the dregs of English and Australian society, is now a prize for Sydneysiders and foreigners alike — a tourist destination that rivals the Opera House, Ayers Rock and the Great Barrier Reef. The next time you try Australia, try it on The Rocks.

Paddington Lane much like London's Soho

By the Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

SYDNEY, Australia — Lacy ironwork fronts the houses of Paddington Lane, its delicacy making even the rudest town house a thing of quiet beauty. Shade from a thousand trees casts delicate shadows across the tidy front gardens of Paddington Lane, and leaded glass doors and windows open to elegant drawing rooms. Elderly ladies wearing severe tweed skirts and jackets walk fat, dowager dogs along the twisting street, giving the place an air of refinement, of solid values and old-school ties.

Just a few blocks up the hill is Oxford Street. Here the look is different, and totally commercial; not the quiet commercialism of Savile Row or Rodeo Drive, but a blatant, shouting commercialism that screams its messages with multicolor signs and window displays. You can buy anything here: fine antiques or a bar of rough soup, beautiful linens or a horse blanket, a hearts-and-flowers valentine for Mom or a bawdy card that shows parts of the human body one doesn't really expect — or want — to see on a greeting card.

The street people here are different, too. One young man walks down the street: his hair is orange, except for a startling canary pigtail; he is wearing mock leopard pants so tight you can see a blemish on his butt; his electric blue shirt exhorts freedom for Australia's aborigines; his rhinestone sunglasses glitter in the midday sun. His is a uniform of defiance, the new wave, the new generation.

All of this exists together in Paddington, a section of Sydney that is much like Soho, with a touch of Greenwich Village, a dollop of Sausalito, and just a hint of Georgetown folded together.

Paddington has become the fashionable place to live in Sydney, after decades of existing on the edge of poverty. Today a town house in Paddington will fetch upwards of $200,000 for a father-son-and-holy-ghost (three story) townhouse that is so narrow — to paraphrase Mark Twain "there is room to turn around in, but not to swing a cat in, at least with entire security to the cat."

Paddington, unlike the other renaissance section of Sydney, The Rocks, does not live for tourism. It lives for its residents, both the old ladies and the punk rockers, who seem to coexist very nicely. A tourist must accept Paddington on its terms. It is a neighborhood, a place existing for its people, and it is above pandering to tourists. And that, in this era of competition for the fat American dollar, is reason enough to visit Paddington.

Paddington is close to the downtown city tourist hotels; a 30-minute walk or a 10-minute cab ride will get you there. But the 400 acres of Paddington, clogged with hundreds of examples of Victorian terrace architecture, 37 antique shops, 45 boutiques, 34 art galleries, 24 restaurants and coffee shops and 17 pubs, is as far removed from the modern chrome-and-glass skyscrapers of Sydney as it is possible to be and still be in the same city.

"Paddo," as the locals affectionately call the area, is home to many of Sydney's artists, actors and writers, all living in the terrace houses fronted with what is commonly referred to as "Paddington Lace." The houses, most of which date from the 1880s, are distinguished by a phalanx of iron staves with mitered tops, intricately worked iron with patterns of sunflowers and heraldic emblems, topped by balustrades of vases, urns, scalloped shells and minarets.

In another part of Paddington called The Village you find even older buildings, mostly built in the 1840s, that form an eclectic collection of Irish bog cottages, North Country English stone cottages and colonial style buildings, all a product of the diverse backgrounds of the settlers who first came to this section of Sydney.

On Oxford Street is the magnificent Town Hall, built in 1890 for the then-outrageous sum of 10,000 pounds to flaunt the wealth of this area of Sydney. It now houses an art center, movie houses, a library and a ballroom. Not far away is the Victoria Barracks, one of the finest examples of Victorian Colonial architecture in Australia. If you're there on a Tuesday at 11 a.m. you can watch the changing of the guard and then be given an escorted tour of the still-active (it is headquarters to the Field Force Command of the 2nd Military District) facility.

All these areas are well marked on the map of Paddington contained in the good (and free) "Paddington Book" available at many giftstores on Oxford Street.

But the real fun of Paddington, the real reason to come here in the first place, is to make your own discoveries. To find an antique doll in As Good As New, or a tribal mask from New Guinea in The Art of Man Gallery; to discover a fine old writing desk in the shop of Guy Beange or a puzzle that is made up of tiny sterling silver animals at Puzzles.

You will stumble across the huge, pink bulk of the 1880 London Tavern where you can still drink a draft with the boys, and the simple, cornerside elegance of Pegrum's, one of Sydney's finest restaurants.

Paddington is a place to be savored slowly, like a fine Australian port wine. It remains in this time of instant cuteness and celebrity, a place of character and integrity and — if you take it in the right spirit — great good fun.

Jackets, coats and blouses can sometimes be made tighter or looser by moving the buttons. However, care must be taken to prevent throwing the hang and fit of the garment out of shape. This can result if the buttons are placed too far in, too far out, or if they are not lined up evenly. To determine whether moving the buttons will work, pin the garment closed through the buttonholes at the position where you want the buttons to be. Line the pins up in a straight line, keeping them parallel to the old buttor placement. If the new layout does not distort the side seams or the hang of the garment, and it changes the fit sufficiently, remove the buttons and sew them to those positions.

Texas Instruments turns on to military

Plan makes local plant profitable

By JULIE FAUBEL
Business-Energy Writer

Texas Instruments Inc.'s military products division has long been a leader in developing state-of-the-art products for military applications.

But this past year, TI's Midland-Odessa military semiconductor group took an unprecedented leap back into that market, developing 256 new integrated circuit products for the military, according to James F. Watson, TI vice president and manager of the Midland-Odessa operation.

The effort marked a definite shift in operations for the Permian Basin plant. In past years, due to market trends, emphasis had shifted to developing new products for commercial applications rather than the military.

"THIS REPRESENTED a danger to the military because they were not getting the best," Watson said. "It also had implications to national security because competitors — the U.S.S.R. for example — could buy the latest technology in commercial semiconductors in a number of ways, while our military was using 10-year-old technology. The net result was that competitors were catching up to American military technology and closing the gap."

Watson and his group spent time identifying the problem, then took a leadership position with the Department of Defense to highlight the problem.

The DOD is beginning to take action to turn the situation around, according to Watson. "The feedback we're getting now is positive. Those involved are wanting to know what can be done to correct the situation," he said.

Another aspect of the problem is the time it takes to develop new military technology. According to Watson, it takes between five and seven years before new technology is available for design and use in military applications.

Because parts generally are designed for commercial use, it takes time to modify them for military use. To overcome this delay, the military products division is working closely with the other TI commercial divisions to be certain that when products are initially developed they will be ready for installation in military systems.

James F. Watson

"OUR SUCCESS IS dramatic. Last year we introduced 256 integrated circuits and products. That compares to 16 the year before and 34 the year before that."

Normally, after introducing a new product it takes several years, even in commercial use, before a company realizes income from it. But because TI did its homework, the company will realize a significant income this year, said Watson.

"That is unprecedented not only in military business but in the commercial as well," he added.

According to Watson, the semiconductor industry began back in the late '50s or early '60s because of military needs — such as the minuteman missiles and airplanes which go through extreme temperature changes; and ships in which integrated circuits are exposed to the corrosive salt water.

"The general pattern was to design a product which would meet the rigorous needs of military use as opposed to commercial use. Those that couldn't be sold for military applications were downgraded and sold for commercial applications.

"THE REQUIREMENTS of an F-16 airplane, which goes through extreme temperature changes in a matter of minutes, is much different than the integrated circuit which goes into a television at home," he explained.

Watson said this practice continued through the '60s until the "big computer houses" recognized the opportunity for incorporating integrated circuits into their products.

"Their demand — dollar volume — began to outstrip the military demand and the whole pattern shifted from military first to commercial first and military second.

That has continued to the point where most of the research and development — the money being spent by private industry — is being spent for commercial applications instead of military applications.

TI ALSO IS taking a leadership role in developing software programs for military computers.

"In the military world where you have computers in airplanes, tanks, ships and radars and all the various other applications, if you don't have a consistent programming language or a consistent software concept, its chaos — computers can't talk to each other.

After-tax profits rise 4th quarter of 1983

WASHINGTON (AP) — After-tax profits for manufacturing firms averaged 4.4 cents per dollar of sales in the last three months of 1983, up slightly from the preceeding quarter, the Commerce Department has reported.

Fourth-quarter profits were up from 4.3 cents per dollar of sales posted in the July-September period, and were 57 percent above the level in the fourth quarter of 1982, the department said.

All manufacturing categories except one showed improved profits on a year-to-year basis, the government said, with the durable goods categories of transportation and machinery posting the biggest increases.

The only decline was suffered by manufacturers in the instruments category, which includes scientific, optical and photographic equipment. After-tax profits in that segment declined from $938 million in the final three months of 1982 to $922 million in the same period in 1983.

Manufacturing sales were $564.5 billion in the fourth quarter, a 5.1 percent increase over the third quarter.

Stockholders received a 12 percent rate of return on their equity from October to December, compared with 11.4 percent in the third quarter and 7.2 percent in the final quarter of 1982.

In other parts of the economy, mining companies had after-tax profits of 0.4 cents per dollar of sales in the final quarter of 1983, down a sharp 3.8 cents from the preceeding quarter.

After-tax profits for wholesale trade firms held steady at 0.9 cents in the third and fourth quarters. After-tax profits for retail trade corporations averaged 3.9 cents per dollar of sales, up from 1.3 cents in the third quarter.

The figures are based on the quarterly financial reports of more than 9,400 corporations. While the manufacturing figures cover all manufacturing companies, the mining and trade figures cover only those companies with assets over $25 million.

What a well!

LAFAYETTE, La. — Tee Oil Inc. and King Ranch Oil & Gas Inc., partners in the South Bell City field, reported results of initial production tests on their Frio-Hackberry confirmation well, the No. 1 Edwards, in Calcasieu Parish, La. Tee Oil is the operator. Lear Petroleum Corp., and Phillips Petroleum Corp., are also partners in the well.

The No. 1 Edwards well was completed on April 4, 1984 in the Frio-Hackberry C sand from perfortions 14,462 to 14,478 feet. The well flowed at a rate of 12.5 million cubic feet of gas and 1,600 barrels of condensate per day on a 21/64 inch choke, with flowing tubing pressure of 9,200 psi.

According to Tee Oil, there is an additional 50 feet of pay which has proven to be productive by a formation test.

The discovery well to the No. 1 Edwards in Hackberry C sand was completed on Jan. 24, 1984 in the No. 1 St. Romain and tested at 4.5 million cubic feet of gas and 624 barrels of condensate per day on a 12/64 inch choke, with flowing tubing pressure of 9,065 psi.

Getty workers may face layoffs

Hearst Feature Service

Texaco's acquisition of Getty Oil Co. is now complete, and industry experts say that a significant number of Getty's 19,400 employees will lose their jobs. Many others will find themselves working for new employers who purchase Getty assets from Texaco.

For the time being, jobs in domestic oil and gas operations are safe because the Federal Trade Commission has ordered Texaco to run Getty as a separate entity until the agency finishes evaluating the merger, a process that will last at least another month. After that, Texaco says it will try to hire as many Getty employees as it can.

"The heads of departments at Texaco have been directed not to fill any arising organizational vacancies until a thorough review of potential Getty candidates for the positions can be completed," says Robert E. Hoxie, a Texaco spokesman.

But analysts agree that a large number of Getty jobs will eventually be axed.

"It would be nice to think that nothing will change," says Thomas Lewis, an oil industry analyst with Duff and Phelps, "but Texaco took a tremendous amount of debt to purchase Getty. If it is going to make a profit, things will have to change."

Texaco paid $10.1 billion to purchase Getty, the second-largest buyout in U.S. corporate history.

"There will be a period of grace for six months or so when there won't be any wholesale slashing," says John Turo, an analyst with Rotan Mosle. "But after that, there will be pink slips, and people will begin to look for other jobs."

Once the pruning begins, it will probably proceed quickly. Says James L. Van Alen, a securities analyst with Janney Montgomery: "If they take a long time, there will be serious morale problems, and the company will end up losing people it doesn't want to lose,"

The most vulnerable employees are those in staff positions in Getty's Los Angeles headquarters – legal, financial, accounting, public affairs and strategic planning – that duplicate similar positions in Texaco's Purchase, N.Y., headquarters.

Top Getty officials, including executives close to Board Chairman Sidney R. Peterson, also may be in danger. "I'm not sure if Peterson realistically needs the kind of support staff he has," Turo says. "I think half of his staff will be lopped off."

Although neither Peterson nor Texaco officials have announced the chairman's plans, several analysts believe he will leave the company. "He's a rich man, and he has had a chance to run his own show. That kind of gets in your blood. I'm not sure he would want to take a backseat" by working for Texaco, Turo speculates.

Getty's oil exploration staff also may be scaled back. "You can't have two geologists doing the same thing – one from Texaco and one from Getty," says David Ullom, an analyst with Bateman Eicher, a Los Angeles securities firm.

Getty geologists may find it particularly difficult to find new jobs. Most of the major oil companies have decreased their exploration efforts over the past couple of years as part of a general move to cut costs. "There are a lot of qualified geologists who can't find jobs," Van Alen says.

Current Getty employees who do keep their jobs may find themselves working for new companies. Texaco is expected to sell off significant portions of Getty's assets, especially company-owned gas stations and refiners to meet antitrust requirements.

Public bank list could be right step

By THOMAS R. PROCOPIO

What do you think about the Fed making public its list of troubled banks? Couldn't adverse publicity have a serious impact on these banks?

I think this will help bring more discipline to the marketplace. If a bank doesn't want to be on the troubled list then it ought to step up its administration of bad loans and bad practices.

There are a lot of good banks which have weathered the economic storms and are still in existence. It's a poor excuse if banks blame their problems on exposure in the media. The press is not arbitrary and capricious. They'll know the circumstances behind whether a bank on the list is really in danger of failing.

Many individuals believe large banks with non-performing loans will be singled out by the media. I disagree. What will be singled out are banks whose capital is impaired because of these non-performing loans. Every bank has some non-performing loans; that's to be expected. However, it is our responsibility to make public the ones which have undue risk — that's the intent of making this list public.

In my opinion this is a service to the community. I would appreciate knowing if my bank had abnormal non-performing assets. Then, if I had more than the insured amount ($100,000) on deposit, I could bring it down to the insurance level so I could protect my hard-earned money.

• • •

With all the bank failures expected this year, how will this affect FDIC liquidation procedures? Will the liquidation process become longer and will it become harder to liquidate assets? Could this become too great a burden for the FDIC to handle and who could you call on for assistance?

No, I don't think it will become too great a burden for the FDIC to handle. The system we have allows us to hire people locally, as you all know. We also have an examination force of between 1,000-1,500 to help us out and we are using them more and more.

As far as the number of liquidation units we have operating in West Texas, we will probably consolidate some of them. In the past, for example, in Knoxville, Tenn., where there were six or seven failed banks in the area, the FDIC consolidated these units into a sub-area office. As a result, there is one big liquidation unit instead of six or seven small units.

We will be consolidating the Metro and NBO liquidation units this year into this office.

• • •

Suppose I buy treasury bills through a bank and have them put in safe keeping with the bank. Later the bank is declared insolvent and taken over by the FDIC before my bills mature. Is my money safe? When can I receive my money?

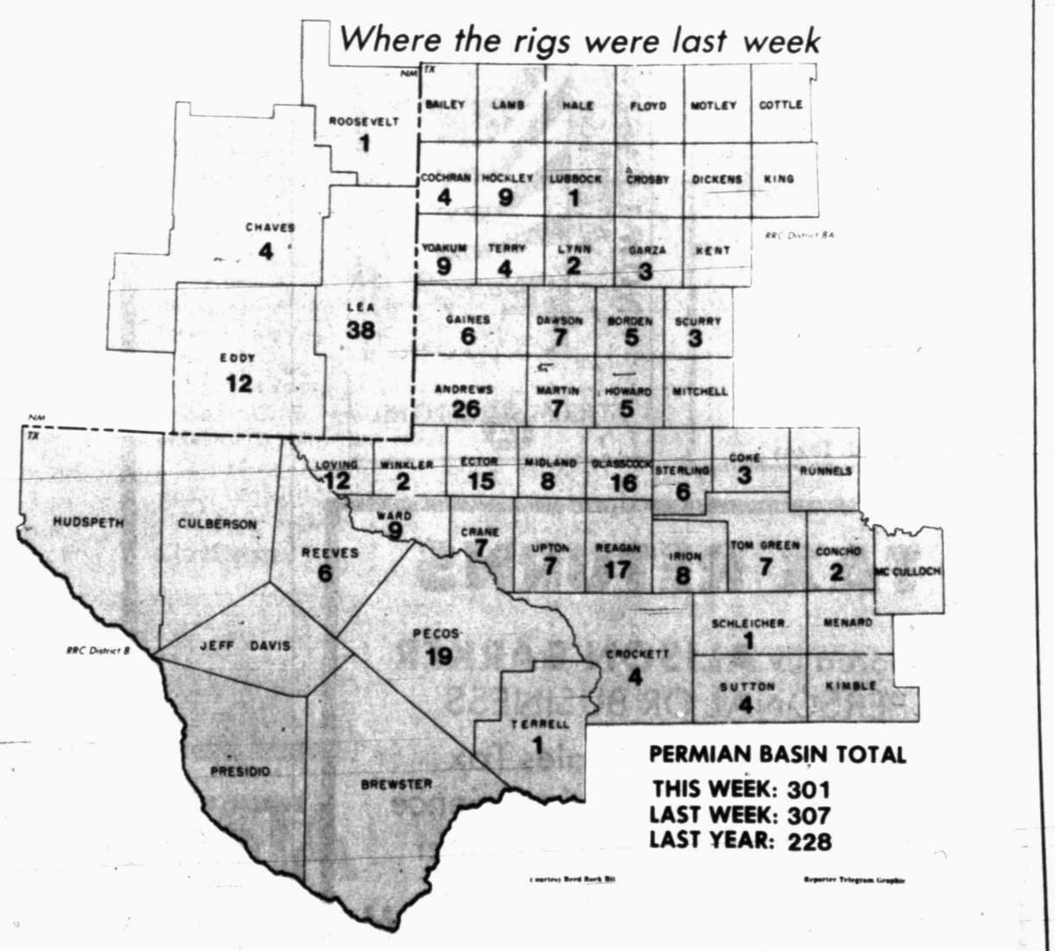

The bills that are bought and put in the safe keeping of the bank are usually turned over to the assuming bank. If they're not turned over to the assuming bank and the FDIC takes over the bank, the items are safe and you can have your money upon demand. Unless it is pledged to a loan, we have no rights to retain your money.

Executive swapping on increase

Talent more important than nationality

LONDON (AP) — Trans-Atlantic swapping of top executives is on the upswing between the United States and Great Britain as talent becomes more important than nationality.

American executives are breathing new life into several British companies, including the multinational British Oxygen Co. and the health care and household products conglomerate LRC International.

BRITISH EXECUTIVES who cut their commercial teeth in the United States have returned home to tackle the sagging fortunes of state-owned British Steel and British Airways and the computer giant ICL with American management know-how.

And British chief executives have gone to the United States for top posts with American giants, such as Dennis Fill with Squibb, Edward Jefferson of DuPont, and Harry Taylor with Manufacturers Hanover bank.

"I think without a doubt we're going to see more and more trans-Atlantic trade of executives," said Harry Cressman, director of the American Chamber of Commerce in Britain.

THE TOP LEVEL TALENT swaps have replaced two trends — the British brain drain of the 1960s and '70s and the worldwide flood of American executives working at all levels for big multinationals in the 1950s and '60s.

Thousands of trained Britons started moving across the Atlantic 25 years ago to escape high taxes and to seek opportunity for quicker advancement in the higher-paying U.S. market. But Cressman said the brain drain ended when Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government came to power in 1979 on a platform of less state interference in business and lower taxes.

"AMERICAN COMPANIES are using far less expatriates to run businesses, not just in Britain but all over Europe, because an American expatriate is a very expensive person. U.S. companies have gone a long way to get British people trained along American management styles," Cressman said.

> "I think without a doubt we are going to see more and more trades of trans-Atlantic executives."
>
> — Harry Cressman

Currently, the British operations of companies like Ford, IBM, TWA, Gillette and National Cash Register are all headed by Englishmen, with very few American employees.

"Now, what we're getting is senior Americans coming here and top British executives going to the States," Cressman said.

"IT'S SOMETHING that's been coming into the system for the last 10 years — the cross-fertilization of talents regardless of nationality. From a language point of view, it's obvious for Britons and Americans to interchange."

Larry Langley, a former Royal Air Force pilot who is TWA's chief executive in Britain, said nationality became less important with the arrival of the jet age and the 10-nation European Community's removal of the need for work permits. Americans and Europeans taking up residence on the other side of the Atlantic still need work permits.

"COMMUNICATIONS and the interchange of people are now so rapid that I'm as home in Scottsdale, Ariz., as I am in Guildford, England. I have no difficulty switching from driving on the right to the left," he said. "I think of myself very much as an Anglo-American."

At the top, American salaries are still the pacesetters and the price has to be right to attract the best brains.

Britain's highest-paid executive is Richard Giordano, a 49-year-old American who was lured from the States by British Oxygen. He earned $730,100 last year — an $80,500 pay cut from the previous year because of a switch from an annual bonus to a stock option.

SINCE GIORDANO arrived in 1979, British Oxygen's pre-tax profits have grown from $102 million to $134 million in 1983.

It took $210,000, a $35,000 "disturbance allowance," the option of 1.4 million cut-price company shares and other perks to lure British executive Robb Wilmot from U.S.-owned Texas Instruments to crisis-torn ICL. In two years, Wilmot and a new chairman have turned the computer company around.

But British and American executives say it's also the challenge that counts.

BARBARA THOMAS, the 37-year-old former commissioner of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, told London's Financial Times she turned down several lucrative jobs in the states to join the 134-year-old British merchant bank Samuel Montagu because "Montagu is a shooting star."

Colin Marshall, lured to America 20 years ago with a job offer from the car rental firm Hertz, gave up a high-paying job as president of Avis last year to return home and take on the challenge of putting British Airways on a money-making course for just $123,000.

Why bother hunting top talent overseas?

THE DIFFERENCE in style seems to benefit both sides.

American business is theory- and management-oriented while Britain's is less scientific and still heavily reliant on practical experience.

Ann Burdus, a British advertising executive, left a top job with the parent company of McCann Erickson in New York last year to return to England as deputy chairman of Audits of Great Britain Ltd. She said a foreigner can successfully challenge old habits and practices.

"The reason why so many people from Britain and Europe do so well in the states is that they challenge all the fixed precepts with a quirky and new way of looking at things."

PBGC offers Well Control Refresher

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer four courses in the PBGC building, 105 W. Illinois.

Well Control Refresher, April 16, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. This school is designed as a review for those students that have completed an approved Well Control School. Mike Dibbley, Prentice & Records Enterprises Inc. Lafayette, will instruct the course. Fee is $225.

Marine Evaporites, April 16, from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. This course is based on geologic history of evaporites as revealed by the rocks themselves and from diverse modern analogs. However, these observations and their implications are carried into other regions, including the Permian Basin. Charlotte Schreiber, Phd., professor of geology, Queens College (C.U.N.Y.) and senior research associate, Lamont-Doherty Geological Observatory, will instruct. Fee is $150.

Well-Site Training Workshop, Mondays, April 16—May 14, from 7—10 p.m. Designed for new geologists, geophysicists, engineers, or anyone who may be required to, or interested in sitting wells. It will be team-taught by: Ab R. Ellis, district development geologist, Sohio Petroleum Co.; David Rosen, consulting geologist; and Woddie J. Walthall, owner, Walthall Consultants. Fee is $125.

Developing the Professional Woman, April 17, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. This seminar will help you deal effectively with job-related problems. Texas' supply of natural gas dwindling

AUSTIN — "I want our nation's leaders and opinion-makers to understand that Texas supplies of natural gas are dwindling and that we, as a state, are already having serious problems in meeting our own needs," Texas Railroad Commissioner Jim Nugent said in announcing nationwide distribution of a speech supported by studies conducted by his office.

Nine Days on the Brink, title of a monograph which traces events during nine days of winter cold spell in December of last year, was delivered by Nugent at the kick-off of the annual oil and gas State of the Industry meeting in Ft. Worth March 20.

"We have distributed copies of the speech and accompanying charts and graphs to all United States Representatives and Senators," Nugent said. "In addition, we have distributed the same information to key newspapers throughout the nation, major magazines and radio and television networks.

"I believe it is important that not only decision-makers but also people throughout all walks of life in the United States begin to shift their prception of Texas from being an unending source of energy to the rest of America to an understanding that we can't and won't always be able to meet unlimited demand," Nugent said.

Nine Days on the Brink describes in detail how Texas could not produce enough natural gas to meet demand during the extremely cold weather Dec. 20 through Dec. 28. In the speech, Nugent points out that the only way demand was met during those "nine days on the brink of disaster" was by drawing down on natural gas storage reservoirs at maximum rates.

"At that," he notes, "we were only able to meet human needs. Fortunately for everyone, the Christmas holidays coincided with the cold spall, so schools were closed and most businesses shut down during the worst of the weather."

Nugent drew the conclusion that, "had the cold spell continued for even another 48 hours, I'm convinced we would have experienced serious disruption in residential deliverabilyt.

"It is essential that the rest of the United States understand that we've got some serious problems in Texas," Nugent said. "We need to establish and foster an economic atmosphere which encourages drastically increased exploration for new natural gas supplies — for the sake of Texas and the nation."

Nugent said copies of Nine Days on the Brink are available through his office or the Office of Information Services at the Texas Railroad Commission, P.O. Drawer 12967, Austin, Texas 78711.

Geological computer course set

Personal computers are becoming an important tool for the exploration geologist. Geological applications using an IBM PC XT will be featured in a course Basic Geological Computer Applications to be presented April 10 and 11 at the Permian Basin Graduate Center. Lecturers will be Philip H. Stark and Lyndon Bell of Petroleum Information Corp., Denver.

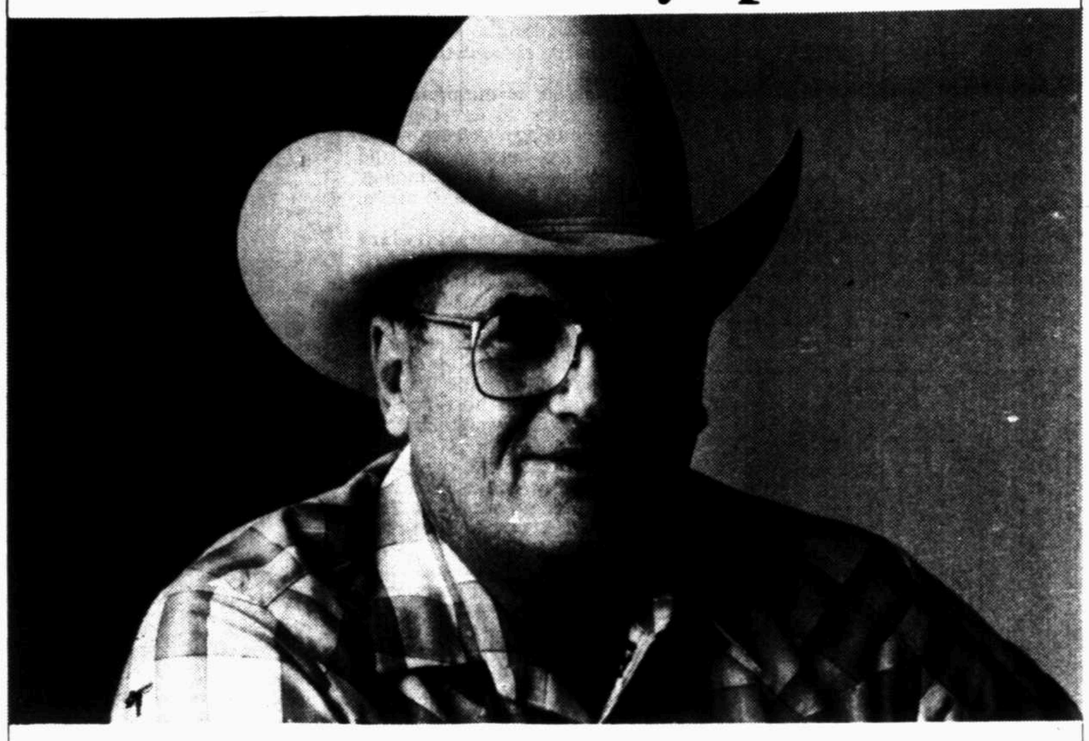

Before May 1, 1984, PI's well and production data bases covering well histories and producing leases in Texas and SE N.M. will be available for on-line access. The course will feature the use of personal computers as a geological work station.

The use of PC's as an intelligent terminal to search, retrieve, and download pertinent data from the on-line files will be demonstrated. Hands-on instruction will focus on basic applications such as geological mapping and production decline plots. The PC work station can also be used as an interactive digitizing station for logs, maps, and seismic records.

The course will provide an understanding of computerized data, geological applications, software and hardware that are available to support the Permian Basin exploration geologist.

Policymakers to keep monetary course

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve policymakers agreed in late January and again last week to maintain their current monetary course while tolerating recent increases in open-market interest rates, according to a central bank report.

The report, covering deliberations of the Federal Open Market Committee, gave no indication that the Fed had substantially restricted the availability of credit, which some analysts had suspected as a cause of recent interest-rate increases.

Paul Volcker, chairman of the committee as well as the Federal Reserve Board, earlier told Congress the "straightforward explanation" for the higher rates was the clash of heavy government and private credit demands caused by the high federal deficit and brisk economic growth.

The new report said the committee voted unanimously at its Jan. 30-31 meeting "to maintain the existing degree" of restraint on bank reserves.

Later, in a March 20 telephone conference, the committee decided to keep the targets set at the January meeting, even though many short-term interest rates had risen in the interim.

Bankruptcy courts temporarily extended

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan signed legislation extending the temporary authority of federal bankruptcy courts to operate, giving Congress another month to resolve its differences over a permanent plan for the courts.

The current bankruptcy court operation had been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court and is operating under the temporary authority until the constitutional problems are resolved.

Both the House and the Senate passed bills bringing the court system into line with the Supreme Court decision. But their measures differ, primarily over new judgeships and cancellation of labor agreements, and the two houses have not been able to agree on a single version of the bill to send to the White House.

In the meantime, the temporary authority for the bankruptcy courts expired at midnight Friday, hours after the stopgap bill was passed by Congress. The measure extends that authority through April 30 and prevents any actual lapse in operations. Reagan signed the stopgap measure Saturday.

U.S. factory orders rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders to U.S. factories rose 0.7 percent in February, the Commerce Department said. But the agency revised downward its estimate of January's orders to a gain of 0.6 percent from 1.2 percent.

In another revision, however, the department said that new orders for durable goods — those expected to last three years or more — actually rose 0.9 percent in February instead of falling 1.2 percent as it earlier estimated in a preliminary report.

Orders for non-durable goods rose 0.4 percent in February.

Also contributing to last month's gain in factory orders overall was orders for non-defense capital goods — a key indicator of future business investment — which rose 6.2 percent, the highest gain since a 9.5 percent advance last September.

The increase reflects industry's plans to add equipment for future production and is considered an important barometer of future business activity. The latest gain put these orders at a record $26.9 billion, topping the old mark of $26 billion set in October.

Poll shows Canadians blame unions

TORONTO (AP) — Labor content in school curriculums is sorely lacking and that is one reason why Canadians have a poor attitude towards unions, says a sociology professor.

Paul Grayson, who teaches at York University's Atkinson College, told a symposium people need only to look at the education system to understand why opinion polls show the public generally blames unions more than business for the country's economic problems.

Grayson, appearing Saturday at the symposium on The Future of Unions, said many Canadian universities have business and economic programs with a pro-management slant and no labor content. There are also few labor study programs, he added.

"We have entire faculties devoted to business but very little is offered on labor," Grayson told the crowd of about 100. "In research, labor's viewpoint is not looked at, unlike what you see in west European countries."

He said the pro-management attitude in such programs is unfortunate because most of the funding for education comes from workers.

RepublicBank shares offered to public

DALLAS — RepublicBank Corp. announced that it has filed a registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission relating to a proposed offering of 750,000 shares of preferred stock with cumulative and adjustable dividends. Salomon Brothers, Inc. and Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc. have been designated managers of the underwriting group that will offer the shares to the public.

Proceeds from the sale of the shares will be used principaly to provide additional equity capital to member banks to support the growth of their deposits, loans and investments. The balance will be used for general corporate purposes.

Coal leasing jeopardized sound environment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interior Department personnel were so pressed to lease large amounts of federal coal in the West under former Secretary James Watt that they jeopardized sound environmental decisions, according to a draft of a forthcoming report from the Office of Technology Assessment.

The report said the rate of leasing should be scaled back from Watt's plan, or more staff should be added, to permit staff members of the Bureau of Land Management to consider thoroughly what they are doing.

The report's summary chapter found that "some aspects of the 1982 rule changes significantly increased the risk that environmentally sensitive tracts would be leased, and undermined public confidence in the environmental soundness of the federal coal leasing program."

That chapter was made available to The Associated Press by one of the people asked to review it. A cover letter said it had incorporated reviewers' initial comments.

Of the 35 tracts leased under Watt, none has yet been through the state examination of mining plans, so no decisions about the feasibility of reclaiming the land have been made, and the study did not cover whether reclamation was feasible.

But it found "no fatal flaws that would absolutely preclude mining on tracts that have been leased since 1979."

"In many cases, BLM's pre-sale data and analysis have been inadequate to base a decision on whether recently leased tracts can be developed in an environmentally compatible manner," the report said.

The staff of the Bureau of Land Management in field offices in the West often used old data because Watt revoked the standards by which the bureau judged the adequacy of data in the past.

"The primary cause of data inadequacy is high leasing rates ... (which) increased the number of tracts that had to be evaluated during land use and activity planning, yet field personnel were not given additional time in which to complete those evaluations," the draft said.

That meant some tracts that should have been eliminated early for environmental reasons were carried to the lease stage, it added. And that meant "overuse of stipulations to address uncertainties about reclamation potential and mitigation requirements."

"Lower but steady leasing rates would reduce the land area that has to be evaluated in a given period of time and allow interested coal companies to plan their leasing activities more effectively," said the chapter.

Interior Secretary William Clark has said he will lease no more coal in 1984 while he reorganizes the leasing program.

A study commission recommended that Watt's planned 6.9 billion tons of leasing in the current fiscal year be scaled back to 2 billion to 4 billion tons over two years.

Egypt turns to sunshine for energy

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Egypt, the land of sunshine, is slowly turning to solar power as an infinite source of energy as the country faces a future of declining oil resources and shortages in electricity.

But Egyptian experts say the program won't get off the ground until the government encourages people to use solar equipment in place of conventional fuels, which are cheap here thanks to the government subsidy program.

Egyptian engineers predict the country will fall short of its electricity needs by 1997 using conventional sources such as oil and water power from the Aswan Dam. They have urged the government to use solar, wind and geothermal sources to make up the shortage.

Two years ago, the government unveiled plans for expanding the use of solar power, with the goal of producing 5 percent of the nation's total energy needs by solar and other renewable sources by the year 2000.

To finance the plan, the government has earmarked $50 million for solar development. The United States, Brazil and Canada have provided loans and grants worth more than $45 million, with the Americans contributing $24 million of the total package.

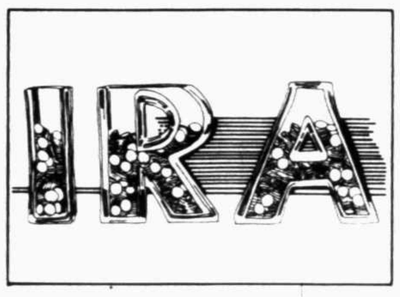

But Egyptian experts doubt solar power will catch on with the public unless the government encourages them to purchase solar devices for such things as heating or operating small private generators.

Although Egypt has abundant sunshine, many Egyptians see no need to use solar power when their heating and electric bills are already so low due to government subsidies of electricity, oil and butane gas, the principal fuel for cooking and heating.

Government statistics show it costs 8 cents to produce one kilowatt hour of electric power, while Egyptians pay only 2 cents a kilowatt hour for the product.

Although the subsidies are a burden on the national economy, they are a boon to average Egyptians. Monthly electric bills for private homes and apartments rarely amount to more than about $24.

Horse racing could rival oil industry

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Oklahoma and Arkansas will compete for tourist dollars when pari-mutuel horse racing begins in Sallisaw, and promotion efforts will be the key to who comes out ahead, says the publisher of the Oklahoma Horse Racing Digest.

Law Godwin, of Broken Arrow, said the race begins when Blue Ribbon Downs in Sallisaw has Oklahoma's first-ever pari-mutuel race on Aug. 16. Godwin said government and business need to be promoting it now.

He said Oklahoma City, Tulsa and Fort Smith, Ark., will compete to become "the gateway to horse racing in Oklahoma."

Godwin said if officials in Oklahoma City and Tulsa take the lead, they can claim many of the out-of-state tourist dollars coming into Oklahoma because they have the airline service, hotels, restaurants and night life to attract racing fans.

Sallisaw will get its share of the tourist bucks, but he said Oklahoma City and Tulsa, both less than two hours away from the track, should be able to promote themselves as the place to stay.

Godwin said Fort Smith, just across the state line near Sallisaw, lacks the services to make it the choice of racing fans. But he said the Arkansas city already is making efforts to woo Oklahoma horsemen and race fans.

"No one ever says let's go to Fort Smith and party," Godwin said.

"We are sitting on a gold mine, but a gold mine has to be worked," he added.

Godwin claims Oklahoma City may be ahead by a nose because of the large number of horse shows and rodeos, including the National Finals Rodeo.

Godwin predicts nothing but a strong financial future for Oklahoma's horse industry.

"It will outshadow the oil industry," Godwin predicted.

Despite the fact that this is the first year for pari-mutuel racing in Oklahoma, Godwin said the state has always been of the big producers in the horse industry.

In 1983, Oklahoma was third in horse population behind California and Texas.

"We have the factory - the horses," he said.

And out-of-state horses come to Oklahoma to race, he added.

"Their owners figure if they can win here, they can win everywhere."

"There's no question Oklahoma will benefit from pari-mutuel racing, but how much it will benefit?" he asked.

Godwin is publisher of a bimonthly publication for the horse breeding and racing industry. It is distributed on news stands throughout Oklahoma and Arkansas.

EPA trimming gas mileage numbers

Should reflect more accurately what to expect on road

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many drivers have considered government gasoline mileage ratings unbelievable, and now the Environmental Protection Agency is trimming them to reflect more accurately what drivers can actually expect on the road.

The agency said Thursday it will still compute the published "city" ratings the same way — based on a laboratory test simulating a calm, warm, dry day with fully inflated tires and a feather-footed driver — but will deflate the number by 10 percent before publishing it.

The "highway" number — which hasn't been published for five years, but which car manufacturers have been free to advertise — will be deflated by 22 percent, and will be published along with the city rating.

The deflation percentages, to be applied to 1985 model cars coming out this fall, are "based on the average difference between the laboratory estimates and the fuel economy data the agency has collected on vehicles in use," EPA said.

For the best-rated 1984 model car, the Honda Civic coupe, the change would have meant the city rating of 51 miles per gallon would have been published as 45 mpg and the highway rating of 67 mpg, if published, would have appeared as 52 mpg.

EPA was given the job in 1975 of testing for mileage because its exhaust pollution tests were a convenient way of doing the calculation. In addition to pollutants, engineers measure all the carbon compounds in the exhaust, and calculate a mileage figure on the assumption that all the carbon comes from the standard test fuel through known chemical reactions.

The result almost always overstated what mileage a real car gets on the road, and has led to many proposals for more realistic ratings over the years. EPA admitted the test results were artificial, never intended to represent real mileage, but provided a fairly reliable guide to the relative differences in mileage among various car models.

The agency stopped publishing the highway figure in 1979 on the ground that the city number better represented most people's experience.

The highway test simulates a 10-mile trip at an average of 48 mph, well under the national 55-mph speed limit. The city test was based on an engineer's 23-mile daily commute in the Los Angeles area.

New printing institution announced

HOUSTON — Leaders of the printing and publishing industry revealed plans to erect the Texas Printing Institute. The new educational facility will offer special seminars and training institutes for printers and publishers and will eventually offer certificate, associate degree and baccalaureate degree programs for new entrants into the industry.

The Rochester Institute of Technology, the recognized world leaders in technical and management education for the printing and publishing industry, will be providing consultative and advisory services to the founding group.

Citing the existing problems associated with a growing Texas printing and publishing industry, trade leaders expect to attract students from the entire southwestern region of the nation.

Dr. M. Richard Rose, President of the Rochester school, expressed his belief that the new institution would fill an existing void in Texas, and the region, for advancing training in the new technologies of printing and publishing.

The Texas Printing Education Foundation is spearheading a funds raising campaign to provide the $10 million for the initial phase of development. "We are very pleased that this effort has already generated $1.8 million in cash and pledges", stated Jack H. Emmott, Jr., Chairman of the Board. "We are particularly appreciative of the pledge by the Houston Litho Club whereby 75 percent of the earnings of the Southwestern Graphics Trade Show will be donated to the foundation", stated Emmott. The owners of the 20,000 sq. ft. Graphic Arts Conference Center, Printing Industries Building, Ltd., have pledged the $1.5 million facility to the Foundation as the Instsitute's first facility.

Location of landfill in South, West T

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

"There are no guarantees in modern industrialized society. Ships sink...planes crash...trains derail...chemicals spill...oil and gas wells blow out. Earthquakes shake," said Frank B. Conselman in writing on nuclear waste.

And even low-level radioactive waste "dies" a slow half-life over and over forever.

The proposed and controversial storage of low-level radioactive waste in a landfill somewhere in Texas is causing a flurry of concern and protests in those remote West and South Texas areas where the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority is considering buying land and burying radioactive waste.

Law forbids the agency from exercising eminent domain — condemning the land for a site in the name of the public welfare. The Texas Legislature surmised that such power really would rile the public. The Authority has $375,000 set aside to purchase surface and mineral rights in a section — 640 acres — and an additional $100,000 authorized for attorney's fees.

THE BURIAL site would be on a 50-acre tract in the middle of the section, as bulk of the land would act as a buffer, said Dr. Lawrence R. "Rick" Jacobi Jr., a nuclear engineer who is general manager of the agency.

He envisions no hazards in selecting and maintaining a proper site.

The agency is studying 16 sites in 16 counties: Hudspeth in far West Texas; Garza, Borden, Scurry, Howard and Mitchell in the Red Bed Plains; and Knox, Baylor, Haskell and Throckmorton in the Abilene area ("We're not having much luck in that area," says Jacobi); and Dimmit, Maverick, Zavala, LaSalle, Webb and Frio in South Texas. The most site-promising counties are Garza, Dimmit, Borden and Hudspeth, he said.

In some cases, the agency retreated because of resistance and when property owners are unwilling to sell their land to the state.

Virtually no one wants the waste. Opponents' overriding fear is that their water supplies could get contaminated.

"The county has objected to it wholeheartedly," said Borden County Commissioner Ed Rinehart. The Commissioners' Court there unanimously passed a resolution against locating the site in the county. "There wasn't but one person who was willing to sell, and he didn't have the mineral rights."

"You know," said Rinehart, a farmer, "we don't have any (underground) water for drinking purposes — old brine. We're the big watershed (for the Colorado River Municipal Water District) and all the stock water is surface water...Surface water is our life's survival.

"God have mercy," he said, "don't put any (radioactive waste) where there's water below it."

CONTRARY to what the agency says, the location of the site in Borden County would not economically benefit the area. People go outside the rural county (population, 859 in 1980) to shop. "All we have is a school, a courthouse, one cafe, one service station...and three churches — Baptist, Methodist and Church of Christ." Gail is the county seat.

Rinehart, 51, said those "well educated boys" from Austin were in Borden County last year just "stirring up people and saying there is no danger in low-level waste. They were sharp kids. They had an education...but knee-deep radiation scares me.

"If it's not dangerous, put it where they're making it."

"We reacted strongly against it," said Wanda Smith of Gail. Borden County is about 65 miles northeast of Midland.

"We were the first to prote)) way back in 1983," said Howard County Judge Milton Kirby. "We got upset — not mad."

As did Rinehart, Kirby was concerned that the radioactive material could leach into the underground water zones or somehow appear on the surface and eventually get washed into the river and into Lake Thomas, one of two (the other is Lake Spence at Robert Lee) reservoirs serving the CRMWD. The district provides water to several West Texas cities, including Midland, Odessa, Big Spring, Colorado City, and Stanton.

Further, Kirby said he is not convinced that nuclear engineers can differentiate exactly when low-level radiation blends into high-level wastes.

YEARS AFTER the site is abandoned "some old boy might go in and drill" and possibly cause radiation to get out.

"I told them I wouldn't protest it a bit if they could prove to me it (the site) would be a safer deal than Three-Mile Island," Kirby said.

"If this stuff is not dangerous, why are they coming out to West Texas. Why don't they put it in Houston or Dallas? Like us, they don't want their water supply messed up."

LOW-LEVEL R

IN SEARCH

The judge said that "anybody who knows anything about it is against it."

"I hope they move it somewhere else; I don't want it here. It's an unknown...We don't need it."

Likewise, Midland County Commissioner C. Wallace "Wally" Craig doesn't want a nuclear waste dump in West Texas.

"My feeling would be the same as the people in East Texas, who want it west of the Concho (River)...I want it somewhere else, too."

He fears any radiation leak would "pollute the ground water and streams."

In years to come, the proper disposal of radioactive waste is "going to become a more serious problem. It's a very inexact science as to how safe it really is," Craig said.

Fellow Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis said he is opposed to a waste site in West Texas and Eastern New Mexico principally because of the possibility of aquifers and water wells getting contaminated.

"Then you've got problems right here in River City. Our life's blood is underground water," Davis said. "I am not very enthusiastic about a nuclear waste site located in this territory."

O.H. Ivie, general manager of the CRMWD, said if a site is selected within the district, the CRMWD would have engineers make geological studies to determine if the site would pose any "adverse effects on water quality."

Decision a challenge

A new day is dawning on the Texas landscape. For most Texans it will be marked by uncertainty; to some it will be accompanied by fear and concern.

Concern already is present because that "new day" involves a technology unfamiliar to most people — nuclear energy — and the byproducts of that technology. People typically fear the unknown, particularly when it holds the potential to threaten their lives and their homes. But one point readers should recognize as they read today's stories in the "Low-Level Radioactive Waste: In Search of a Home" package is this: Texas is past the point of deciding whether it will have to address this futuristic problem. The problem is here and the question now is how will the state meet the challenges it presents.

The problem is really quite simple. American society is generating voluminous amounts of radioactive wastes. For example, Texas now is producing 30,000 cubic feet of radioactive wastes each year, but by 1990 the state will generate five times that much low-level waste, according to officials with the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority. Those wastes must be disposed of in a safe and efficient manner in order to protect human, plant and animal life.

Essentially the wastes fall into two categories, high-level wastes including highly concentrated radioactive liquids and spent nuclear reactor fuel rods, and low-level wastes which include various byproducts such as garments used in hospital X-ray rooms, various radioactive substances from medical research facilities and, in some instances, other low-level wastes generated by nuclear plants. The amount of both types of waste is growing — daily. So the disposal problem is one that must be addressed now.

A federal law passed in 1980 addressed the disposal situation by making each state primarily responsible for the radioactive wastes it is producing. There are various options, of course, such as joining a compact of regional states. In doing so, Texas might be able to avoid nuclear wastes altogether. There also is the very real possibility that the Lone Star State could end up as a host state for the compact, having to serve as the final resting place for not only this state's radioactive waste but also all the other states in this region.

There are three ways to view this situation. Texans can consider it a matter not worthy of their attention. Or they can over-react to the issue. We hope neither happens.

The third way to view the situation — the correct way — is to recognize that it is a challenge but not necessarily a calamity. The Texans of today are the stewards of tomorrow. We should strive to meet this challenge effectively so that our children's futures are adequately protected — both their lives and their environment. Safety must be the number one concern.

Currently the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority is seeking a site for disposal of the wastes in South and West Texas, primarily based on geologic, rainfall and population concerns. The authority's current plans call for burying the wastes in shallow trenches and monitoring the site for a lengthy period.

While officials at the Nuclear Regulatory Commission say the shallow burial method is safe and effective, concerns raised about possible pollution of Texas' water table are understandable and valid. In this state where water means life and, in many cases, work, that concern must be considered. For that reason, the authority should continue to look at other disposal methods including above-ground storage of the wastes.

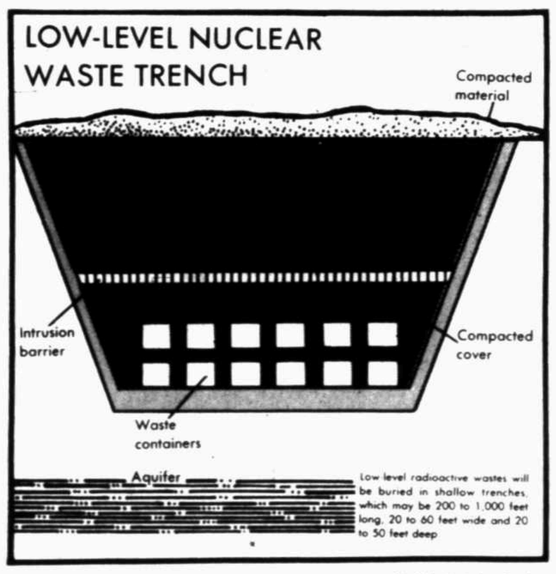

But Texans who fear this new day for the state also should keep in mind that in very few years the state could be facing a serious situation if the authority cannot locate a landowner willing to sell a site. The growing volume of radioactive wastes being generated could well mean cutbacks in vital medical services — like cancer therapy — or power shortages, if new power generating plants can't come on line to meet demands from the state's expanding population.

One thing is sure. The use of nuclear energy is now a fact of life and so is the problem of deciding what to do with the waste created by that use. Meeting this challenge is essential for the state's safe and progressive future.

'Migration' into water supply feared

Staff Artist: Jan Drake

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

One of the key concerns in shallow land burial of low-level radioactive waste is the possibility of migration of radioactivity from the trenches into the water supply.

The delicate water situation in Texas makes this an even greater concern for operation at a state site.

Extensive safeguards and monitoring systems are used at sites currently operating to keep moisture and water from entering the trenches during the time they are being filled and after they have been closed.

The trenches are designed so that liquid that does get inside is pumped out.

Definitive studies on the effects of the relatively low levels of radioactivity in the water have not been completed. No report has been released on the effects at the West Valley, New York site where water infiltration occurred to the largest extent.

The Cattaraugus Creek, which flows into Lake Erie, runs near the closed site. The creek still meets federal and state safety standards, but "that doesn't mean we agree with the standards," said Lisa Finaldi of the Sierra Club's Radioactive Waste Campaign.

The Seneca Nation, whose reservation lies along the creek, has undertaken a study of the effects on their people, due to suspicion the tribe has high cancer rates. The Sierra club fears some contamination of wildlife has resulted in an area where fishermen and hunters frequent.

"We have deemed these things to be safe," said Jim Shaffner of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. "With all the experience we've had with shallow land burial, it's an adequate method."

He said "controlled release" of the materials from the trenches occurs, but that the amounts released have not been found to be harmful.

No data is available on long-term effects of exposure to the low-level wastes. "There's always a concern," said Shaffner.

Exposure to radiation is part of human existence. Industry spokesmen point to natural radioactivity sources to which people are routinely exposed.

The sun's radiation varies depending on a region's elevation. Water and food intake add to radiation levels, as do x-rays, jet-plane travel and TV viewing.

No one knows what, if any, difference the added exposure to low levels of radioactivity from wastes makes to humans or the environment.

"Safe is a relative thing," said Sierra Club attorney Rick Lowerry from Austin. Problems with opening of the four Texas nuclear plants may slow the projected increase in production of radioactive wastes, but "there's going to be a lot over a long period of time," he said

Regents to hear waste site recommendations

A University of Texas System committee which studied the environmental impact of possible low-level nuclear waste sites on University of Texas land in Hudspeth County in Far West Texas is to make recommendations on those sites to the UT Board of Regents, according to Steve Hartmann of University Lands in Midland.

The UT System owns those potential sites, which the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Authority in Austin is considering among possible sites in 15 additional counties. One site is to be selected for burying Texas-produced radioactive waste.

Two geologists, Dr. Samuel Ellison Jr. and Ed Reed, on the 16-member committee "had some severe reservations about the site," said Hartmann, assistant to Billy Carr, manager of University Lands surface interests. "The two geologists did not report favorably on the sites," he said, because of fractures in the formation and possible contamination of underground water should radioactive particles leach into the aquifer.

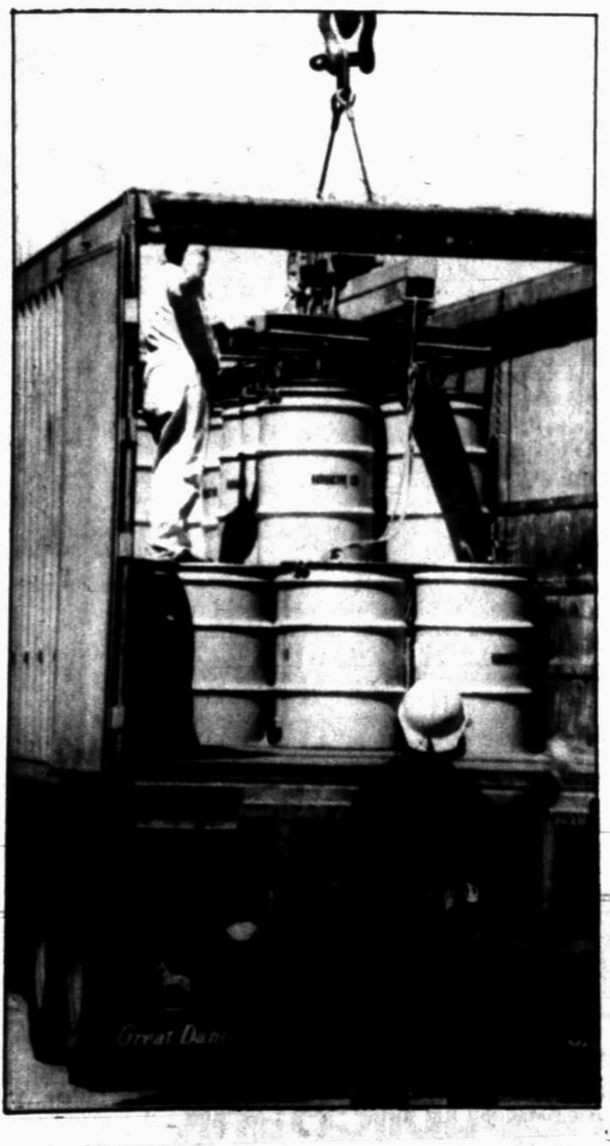

However, a UT botanist, Dr. Beryl Simpson, uncovered "nothing adverse" to the biological life at the proposed sites south of Dell City were radioactive buried there.

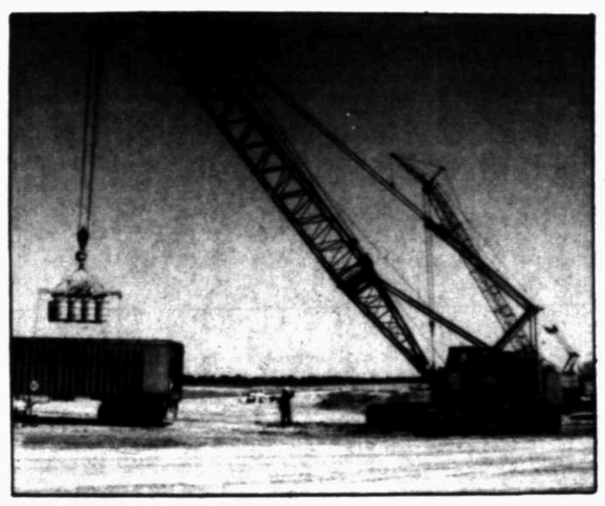

The Board of Regents is to determine in its April 12 and 13 meeting in San Antonio if it would turn one of the two sites over to the Authority.

The ultimate location "should be the optimum site," said Hartmann. "It should be the very best available whether it's on our site or somewhere else."

By Aug. 30, the Authority is to select a site, which is to be in operation by 1988. Waste would be buried in a 50-acre tract on the square-mile site.

On the UT Committee On Low-Level Radioactive Waste are Dr. Samuel Ellison Jr., professor emeritus of the UT School of Geological Sciences; Dr. Beryl Simpson, UT professor of botany; Ed Reed, Midland geologist and hydrologist; Dr. James Duncan, UT vice chancellor for academic affairs; Dr. Charles Mullins, UT executive vice chancellor for health affairs; Grover Campbell, UT special assistant for governmental relations; Joe Roddy Jr., UT director of public information; Harry Mandt, safety coordinator for the UT System; Dr. James Bowen of the Department of Molecular Carcinogensis and Virology at the UT System's Cancer Center in Houston; Dr. Robert Parkey, professor and chairman of the UT Department of Radiology at the UT Health Science Center, Dallas; Billy Carr, manager of University Lands surface interests; Steve Hartmann, Carr's assistant; Linward Shivers, senior attorney; James Crowson, UT general counsel and committee chairman; and ex-officio members, Texas Sen. Bill Sims, a San Angelo businessman rancher, and Texas Rep. Larry Don Shaw, a Big Spring farmer.

cerned about it." But Ivie said he's "confident" that the State of Texas "wouldn't do anything that would be detrimental to the water supply."

The agency has an option on a radioactive waste site in Dimmit County near the Rio Grande in South Texas.

"We're still in limbo," said County Judge R.L. "Rod" Guerra of Carrizo Springs. "We have formed a coalition of 12 counties opposing the Authority. I don't know what is going to take place. We may eventually go to court, but I hope we don't. We're willing to fight it all the way."

Commissioner Joaquin Salgado, who calls the agency "The Enemy," said "the people are really upset."

MANY FARMERS and others in Hudspeth and adjoining counties in Far West Texas are opposing two proposed sites south of Dell City, an agricultural area north of Sierra Blanca and near the New Mexico border.

Unlike others, Hudspeth County Judge Doyle L. Ziler supports a site on remote range land.

"For the most part, we've got a very vocal, vociferous group that's opposing it...I really don't see much hazard. It's not a technical problem," he said. "It's a social problem."

One proposed site looks like "an old eat-out prairie dog town" near Apache Canyon, and the other site is covered with greasewood. Both sites are owned by University Lands, and action by the University of Texas Board of Regents would be required before any sale of the land could be made.

Both are "pretty barren," Ziler said, "and are pretty far away from water, drinking water, bathing water.

Ziler said he is "for the whole law" — the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority Act — which in 1981 authorized the creation of the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority. That law was mandated by the federal statute, the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act of 1980.

"THEY'RE NOT violating anybody's civil rights,...nobody's taken them to court."

Further, Ziler said the county needs the business — needs to broaden its economic base.

The county, which is rooted in agriculture (cotton, vegetables, pecans, alfalfa, winter wheat, feed lots) and mining is about five times larger than Midland County but is sparsely populated — 2,728 people.

"So, what I'm looking at is economic development," the judge said.

Were the county selected as the statewide low-level waste site, it would be enriched by 25 new jobs and by $500,000 a year. "That's more than half of the county's budget," he said.

"It can be a good operation," Ziler said. He noted that the Texas Department of Health would monitor the waste at site of its generation and at the disposal site. "I don't see much of that high stuff getting away." He said the waste would be transported in a rag-top truck, which further indicates the relative safe-level of the radioactive waste.

Further, Ziler said the agricultural-rich Dell City area near the New Mexico border holds "light deposits of decayed uranium" ore, a source of atomic energy.

"It still will get off that Geiger counter and things like that. There's Gamma and Beta rays in it. It has been decaying for millions of years, and I guess it will continue to decay for millions of years."

Ziler said he's not "all that optimistic" about the waste site being located in the county. "It (the law) may have to go back to the legislature."

Still, the problem of disposing of the waste exists.

AN ACTIVE movement is underway to keep radioactive waste out of the county.

"All the good people are against it," said Marsh Farmer. He said 99 percent of the people countywide are against it. Ziler said there's a 50-50 split. Jacobi said an agency survey reflected that 69 percent of Hudspeth County people are opposed to the site there; 31 percent are in favor of it or have no opinion.

Dell City farmer James Lynch, a spokesman for the Alert Citizens for Environmental Safety (ACES), said the area is geologically unsuitable as a site for radioactive material. He said that it is unfit for waste storage due to fissures and caverns in the uplifted area and to the possibility of radioactive water, contaminated by the waste, leaching into the underground water basin, the county's source of irrigation. "It's severely fractured."

The Trans-Pecos area, he said, is "subject to earthquakes."

Those 10- to 12-inch rainstorms which periodically drench the countryside could be contaminated and drain into the caverns. "It would immediately go to the watertable." In addition, high winds eventually could erode the site and scatter the waste.

"It's really a tragic thing," he said. Lynch said when state authorities "fully understand the geology" and climatic conditions of the county, they would no longer consider burying the waste in this mountainous county.

Were the aquifer, which he said is the state's only closed basin, to get contaminated with radioactive particles, "It would wipe out the agricultural industry." Agribusiness is a $20-million annual industry in the county.

Lynch said ACES is suggesting that the waste be stored above the ground and not buried. "It could come back to haunt us."

Radioactive wastes must be "dealt with in a sensible, reasonable and responsible manner."

"The nuclear industry has been encouraged by the government," he said, "but they have left one-half of the job undone: safe disposal of waste."

Contrary to Ziler's contention that the county is divided 50-50 over the issue, Lynch said "Judge Ziler is virtually the only person" wanting the site in Hudspeth County. "He absolutely does not represent the county people. He's losing his influence; he has lost all of his credibility."

Lynch said "virtually all" of the civic and governmental bodies from Dell City, Sierra Blanca, Fort Hancock and Van Horn to El Paso are opposed to putting the site in Hudspeth County.

"You have to take care of the land and water," Lynch said. "That's absolutely essential to have good agriculture...

"There are only a few pristine areas left (in the nation)," he said, and Hudspeth County is one of them.

Q. and A.

Only solid wastes slated for Texas facility

What is the difference between high-level and low-level radioactive waste?

Not all radioactive wastes are created equal.

Only solid materials will be buried in Texas' facility.

Liquid wastes and other relatively more hazardous radioactive materials — such as byproducts of federal defense weapons projects and spent reactor fuel — will not be put in the ground at this site. What will be buried will come from hospitals, research facilities, industry and nuclear power plants across the state.

Much of the initial volume will consist of discarded clothing and other articles used by hospital workers and researchers exposed to radiation on the job. Also contributing will be contaminated tools, parts and equipment from industrial and nuclear plants, and medical and research facilities.

Environmental groups such as the Sierra Club are quick to point out that another type of waste — resins used to clean reactor waters — while making up a small part of the whole, represent a more serious concern because of their higher level of radioactivity.

Some of the radioactive elements remaining in these resins after they have been used to purify the coolant water have half lives of up to 30 years, meaning they must be isolated from the outside environment for up to 300 years.(The accepted rule is that materials need to be kept away from the environment for 10 half lives before their contamination levels are diminished enough to be safe.)

Federal law defines as low level any contaminated material with a half life of 35 years or less, which translates to anything that needs to be kept from exposure to the environment for 350 years before the radioactivity level is within acceptable levels. Materials containing small quantities of transuranics (materials within atomic numbers above uranium such as plutonium) also qualify as low level.

The following list of general questions about selection and subsequent operation of a radioactive waste disposal site in Texas were submitted to the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority in Austin recently. Questions are in bold type. The authority's answers follow.

1. Generally, what are the guidelines the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority uses in selecting a site? Does the soil have to be sandy or clay? Does the area need to be relatively dry? Hilly or flat? The Authority used 24 different criteria in evaluating the state for potential disposal sites. The most important include stable geology and the absence of water. A suitable area would have clay soils, arid climate, simple geology, no surface water, and deep groundwater.

2. With the amount of radioactive waste the site would receive each year, how long would this site meet the needs of the state? The site is designed to satisy the state's needs for a minimum of 30 years.

3. What specific types of waste would be stored there? Only low-level radioactive wastes will be disposed of at the site. These include wastes from hospitals, universities, the oil industry, and nuclear power plants, and will consist of such items as papers, coveralls, resins, metal components, and tools. No liquid wastes or spent fuel rods will be allowed on the site.

4. How long would the material remain radioactive? Most materials that the Authority will receive will remain radioactive at decreasing, but detectable, activity levels for up to about 350 years. Under special conditions, very small amounts of materials which remain radioactive for more than 350 years can be disposed.

5. Won't there be a danger to plant and animal life? There will be no danger to plant or animal life. This will be ensured by placing operating the site in the best possible manner under stringent federal and state regulations.

6. How would the general public be protected from the site? Would it be fenced or would guards be posted? The site will be much like other industrial sites, with both fencing and security guards.

7. How would the radioactive waste be brought in? On trucks? During the life of the site, almost all materials will be brought in by truck. If railroads are available, they might be used for very large items.

8. What would be the danger if a collision occurred? The danger to the public would be minimal because of strict packaging requirements followed in shipping the wastes. A recent study revealed only two accidents in the last 10 years in which a package had been broken open. No one was harmed by radioactive materials in either case.

In addition to steering their rigs, the drivers are expected to survey and document each load's cargo before setting out. They are restricted to 450 miles of driving each day, must follow state-approved routes and stop every two hours for a safety check. Safety and quality assurance inspectors also check loads before they leave for the disposal site.

Each vehicle entering the site undergoes a radiation survey and inspections for quality assurance, safety and health. A truck or van falling short of licensing and safety requirements is not to be allowed to enter the facility.

Full documentation is entered into a computer bank, cataloging each load that enters the site.

After passing the inspections, the trucks pull up 20-ft. deep, 100 -ft. wide, 100-ft. long trenches designed so that any liquid inside the enclosures can be detected, sampled, collected and removed by monitoring systems. The trucks are unloaded, with radiation tests performed during the entire process.

Vans and other larger carriers are unloaded by forklifts or special vacuum unloaders, while radiation levels of the materials are checked. The location of each type of waste placed in the trench is marked on a grid system, documented and input into the computer system.

At the close of each workday, the trenches are backfilled with sand and covered with clay to keep out moisture. When a trench is filled to capacity, it is mounded and capped with special clay and covered with one foot of topsoil.

Grass is planted atop filled trenches to prevent against erosion and catch water seeping into the enclosure. Granite plaques mark each completed trench and list the contents and size of the hole into which the radioactive materials have been dumped.

After leaving the trenches, the vehicles move to an area where they are measured against safety standards and the carrying casks are tightened for the return trip. They are washed and inspected for health and safety — then passed along to quality assurance inspectors before their release.

An on-site laboratory gauges the environmental effects of the disposal. Samples taken at different stages of the process are studied by physicists and technicians.

Devices set strategically around the site measure radioactivity levels, with sump pipes at the edge of the trenches in place to detect any liquids escaping the designated areas.

Wells are positioned to sample any effects on water tables. Samples of the soil and plant life from the site and the surrounding area are checked for radioactivity.

The Barnwell site services an average of 15-18 carriers each day, with turnaround time on each operation taking from 2½-3 hours.

All these steps are taken as safeguards against the radwastes moving outside the trenches and contaminating the outside environment.

n 1962 as the first commercial low-level radioactive waste disposal site licensed by the Atomic Regulatory Commission. The burial site takes up 46 of the 86 acres leased from the state.

It has only recently begun accepting large quantities again as the political climate has improved.

In May 1979, a truck carrying low-level wastes caught on fire at the Beatty site. "As far as the radiation hazard, there wasn't any," said George Colbenschlag of U.S. Ecology, but public opinion turned against the site.

Both U.S. Ecology sites are in arid, desert regions, simplifying management. Despite the relatively dry conditions, the danger of moisture entering the trenches, giving the radioactivity a vehicle for escape from the protected area, is the major concern in managing these sites.

Two of the three sites no longer in operation — the Illinois and Kentucky burial locations — were managed by U.S. Ecology. Sheffield was closed in 1978 after the permitted area reached capacity.

Surface erosion was a problem at this site, though U.S. Ecology maintains it was monitored as part of the facility's regular maintenance procedure. A lawsuit is pending between the state and the management company over which of the two is responsible for the waste left on the site after closure.

Maxey Flats was closed in 1977, due to problems in keeping moisture out of the trenches. Plastic membranes are now being stretched across trenches as an experiment in protection of the waste-filled trenches from water seepage and surface erosion.

Traces of plutonium were found near the site's border by a federal study. "At no time has any agency said that there was an environmental or health hazard," stressed Colbenschlag.

The state of Kentucky bought out U.S. Ecology's interest in the facility, while retaining the company to close it. Despite the problems, U.S. Ecology also has a 10-year option on future operations of the site, should it ever be necessary to re-open it.

Probably the worst example of a shallow land burial site is the now closed West Valley site, located 35 miles south of Buffalo, which closed after 12 years of operations in 1975.

Water infiltrated this facility's trenches to such an extent that radioactive water must be periodically pumped out. The technologies and precautions now taken at sites were not in use during the operation of the West Valley facility.

ABOUT THE WRITERS:

Low-Level Radioactive Waste: In Search of a Home was researched and written by three Reporter-Telegram staff members — Editorial Page Editor Bill Modisett and Staff Writers Lawrence Budd and Ed Todd.

Its purpose is to give Reporter-Telegram readers a full overview of the search for a site for disposal of low-level radioactive wastes, a growing problem that increasingly will affect Texans' lives.

Modisett has been a member of the Reporter-Telegram staff five years, first serving as county and court reporter. He became editor of the editorial pages in January 1980.

Prior to 1980, Modisett was employed by newspapers in San Angelo and Livingston.

Budd is the Reporter-Telegram's reporter in Odessa. He joined the staff in November when coverage was expanded.

He came to Midland from the Plano Daily Star-Courier where he worked as the county reporter.

Todd has covered the state and federal districts courts, county government, the region and has written a general-interest column since he joined the Reporter-Telegram news staff in 1974.

He has worked on other Texas daily newspapers, including those in Galveston, Wichita Falls, Abilene and Marshall, and did public information work at Tarleton State University, Jarvis Christian College and Sul Ross State University.

Effect of waste on water table draw questions

Lowerry suggested the state may be stuck with more than just its own wastes should they have an established site by 1986. Other regions attempting to form compacts with neighboring states are running into intense opposition.

"If we move too quickly, we might put ourselves into the position of being a national disposal site," he said. The state law creating the authority calls for disposal only of Texas wastes.

Robert Avant, assistant general manager of the authority, said "I don't think it's much of a possibility that Texas would become a dumping ground against our will." This is a question courts would be called on to answer.

Placement of a disposal site for low-level wastes would not increase the likelihood of the same area being chosen for more hazardous waste disposal. Lawrence R. Jacobi, general manager of the authority, noted the geology for a low-level site must be different than for high-level.

While the three U.S. sites use the traditional shallow land burial method, other technologies are being developed and used in other parts of this country and the world.

The Tennessee Valley Authority has constructed an above-ground storage facility in which the materials will be isolated in large cement structures.

Low-level wastes from eight Canadian nuclear plants are stored at a site in underground specially engineered containers, above-ground cement structures similar in design to mausoleums and in-ground concrete trenches. More radioactive materials are initially kept underground or in the cement structures, then moved to other above-ground buildings when the radioactivity has deteriorated to safe levels.

Dartmouth College has developed its own storage facility since the costs of outside disposal increased significantly. Depending on the level of radioactivity, the wastes are stored differently and moved as the levels deteriorate, with much of the volume eventually incinerated.

While the Texas authority has not committed to the traditional shallow land burial, they are leaning toward some variation of this most commonly used method.

After arriving and being inspected at the Barnwell, South Carolina low-level radioactive waste disposal site, casks packed with the wastes are lifted by cranes from their transport and placed in the trenches.

'Live from Dallas, it's GOP convention'

DALLAS (AP) — In a crowded convention hall buzzing with the sound of brass bands and glad-handing politicians, a row of reporters from dozens of local television stations — even Deadwood, S.D. — will stand almost shoulder-to-shoulder and read their scripts.

Satellite technology and its availability will let local television reporters from across the country deliver stand-up reports live from both the Republican convention here in August and July's Democratic National Convention in San Francisco.

"This is something new we've not dealt with before on a large scale," said Susan Sachs, assistant for press operations for the 1984 Republican National Convention.

In 1980, six stations broadcast live from the national nominating conventions, according to Tina Tate, superintendent of the House Radio and Television Gallery, which handles press credentials for both presidential nominating conventions.

"Going live was quite a 'to-do' four years ago. But that's not true any more. This year we have 87 requests for live stand-up positions at both conventions," Ms. Tate said.

"Why is it happening? Because everyone can do it now," she said.

Overall, more than 500 local TV stations will send crews to Dallas. In 1980, the Republican National Convention attracted only 15-20 local crews, convention manager Ronald Walker said.

"That poses enormous problems for us," Walker said.

One problem, convention officials said, is finding room outside the convention hall for dozens of satellite dishes.

Most television stations now have the ability both to beam a signal up to a satellite from a remote location and capture it back at the station, said Dan Schllinger, news director at KEVN in Rapid City, S.D., one of the smaller stations in the country that plans live coverage of at least one of the two conventions.

"It's (live reports from far-away spots) a lot more prevalent now because a lot more stations have down-links and the cost of booking satellite time is down," Schllinger said.

"There's a certain amount of prestige in it and I think more people are looking at the journalistic advantages of being able to report on what you're local delegates are doing," he said. "The national media can't do that for you."

Mike Morgan, news director of the Duhamel Broadcasting Enterprises, covers parts of the Dakotas, Wyoming, and Nebraska with four television stations. He plans to send a crew of two to both conventions.

"We're able to get the information out now quicker, whereas before, videotape would have had to have been shipped by air. Now we can either go live or have same-day coverage," he said. "It's a good local story for us."

Duhamel, which includes KHSD in Lead-Deadwood, S.D., sent reporters to the 1980 conventions and managed to feed videotape back through the lines of the network with which it is affiliated.

Questions on waste disposal answered

9. What if unanticipated pollution occurred? Who would be responsible? How would reparations be made? Who would pay for any damage? If unanticipated pollution occurred because of the operation of the site, the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority would be responsible. Reparations for damages would be made through the judicial system.

10. Why does Texas have to build a disposal site and what if it didn't? What would be the adverse impact? The federal Low-level Radioactive Waste Policy Act of 1980 requires states to be responsible for waste generated within their borders. As of Jan. 1, 1986, the three operating disposal sites in the country can refuse to accept wastes not generated in their states or regions. If these sites are closed to Texas, the state would have to stop producing wastes if it did not have a disposal site. Hospitals using radioactive material for diagnosis and treatment would have to discontinue those processes. Many research activities would have to shut down, and the nuclear power plants would be inoperative.

11. Can't we contract with another state to accept our radioactive waste? After Jan. 1, 1986, other states will not accept Texas wastes on a permanent basis.

12. How is this waste packaged? Is it buried? The waste is packaged either in steel drums, wooden boxes, or high-integrity containers, depending on the type of waste being shipped. Packaging and shipping is regulated by the U.S. Department of Transportation. The method of disposal is burial in trenches which are 20-45 feet deep.

13. After the site is no longer useful for radioactive waste disposal, it can't be used for anything else, can it? The central 50-75 acres of the site will be controlled and closely monitored for a post-closure period of 100 years. The surface could be used for grazing or growing shallow root crops. The primary reason for these restrictions is to prevent excavation of the waste.

14. Where are other similar sites located in the nation? To your knowledge, have they suffered problems like spills or leakages that have endangered people? There are three sites currently operating in the country, located in Barnwell, South Carolina; Beatty, Nevada; and Hanford, Washington. There are also three closed sites, one each in West Valley, New York; Maxey Flats, Kentucky; and Sheffield, Illinois. There have been operating problems at two of the three closed sites. No one has been harmed by any site operations.

15. How will the operation of this site be paid for? Will the taxpayers fund it? Until the site is operational, funding is provided by the Legislature. All of these funds must be repaid during the first 20 years of operation. When the site begins operating, the users of the site will pay disposal fees which will be used to pay back the Legislature, pay for day-to-day operations, and pay for a post-closure care period of 105 years.

16. Won't more and more of these sites be needed in coming years? Over the next 30 years, only one site will be required in Texas.

17. Won't the area get a bad reputation because of the site? Not necessarily. In some cases, property values around the site have increased, and the operations have been well received by the local communities.

18. Is partisan politics a consideration in selection of a site? No.

You Can Count On An IRA Account For Retirement Security...

And You Can Count On Security For Your IRA Account.

You've heard it said . . . and it's true, the best way to save for retirement security today is with an IRA account. The money you put into an IRA now earns interest and defers taxes on that money until you begin receiving distributions from your account.

With few exceptions, any wage-earner is eligible to have an IRA account and you can contribute up to $2000 of your annual earnings (or $2250 for yourself and a non-employed spouse). The other good news is that you have until April 15, 1984 to make contributions to your 1983 IRA account . . . thereby earning a tax deduction for last year.

We think everyone who can should take advantage of the tax laws that allow you to save money for your retirement with the IRA account and we'd like to help you have one at Security National Bank. It just makes good sense to save more for tomorrow without taxing yourself today.

Occidental to finance coal field

By the Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

PEKING — Occidental Petroleum Corp. agreed Thursday on the financing of a $600 million development of China's Pingshuo coal field, where the Los Angeles-based oil company plans to operate a vast, 15-million-tons-a-year strip mine.

The agreement, delayed for a year by a 23 percent drop in international coal prices that upset all the project's financial projections, clears the way for the final joint-venture and operating contracts, Western business sources said.

Armand Hammer, Oxy's 85-year-old chairman, is expected to sign the final agreements amid much fanfare — the project is the largest China has undertaken with Western capitalists — during President Reagan's visit to China in late April.

Although details of the financial agreement and related documents signed Thursday by John J. Dorgan, Occidental executive vice president and chief financial officer, and Yin Qinong, deputy general manager of the China National Coal Development Corp., were kept secret, substantial Chinese concessions appear to have been made to revive a deal that seemed dead.

China agreed, according to Western business sources, to accept lower payments for the work of its miners while international coal prices remain depressed. Originally, Chinese miners were to get a nominal $12 an hour, a figure based on United Mine Workers' scale but nearly all of which would have gone to the government.

China also agreed that it would take, at pre-set prices, the coal that could not be sold abroad by Occidental because of the depressed market, the sources said.

Finally, the Bank of China agreed, under pressure from the government, to guarantee repayment of Oxy's borrowings of perhaps $360 million from three American banks.

"For China, this project had become very, very important," a Western banker familiar with the deal said. Unemployment reaches peak

WASHINGTON (AP) — First-time claims for unemployment benefits edged up for two straight weeks in mid-March, hitting the highest level since January, the Labor Department reports.

New claims — 366,000 in the week ended March 24, up 8,000 from the previous week — are still far below the levels of a year earlier.

But the recent increases could be read as one early indication the national unemployment rate will begin leveling off soon after dropping steadily for more than a year.

The national rate has declined from 10.7 percent in December 1982 — the highest since 1940 — to 7.8 percent of the civilian labor force in February.

However, economists also say the economic recovery is probably slowing. If so, that would probably mean at least a temporary leveling-off in the unemployment decline before long.

The weekly initial-claims figures fluctuate enough under normal circumstances that analysts are reluctant to put much weight on one or two weeks' increases or declines. And rises in new claims do not necessarily mean the jobless rate will rise because that overall rate also is influenced by the number of people gaining rather than losing jobs.

Top retailers post increase

By The Associated Press

All the top eight U.S. retailers posted March increases, albeit modest, except for No. 2 K mart Corp, which said sales declined 0.2 percent, and Woolworth Co., No. 7, which had a 0.4 percent decline.

The mixed sales results, reported Thursday, were blamed on a late Easter and miserable weather in many parts of the nation.

Easter fell on April 2 last year, with sales of spring finery showing up in the March sales results. This year Easter is much later, April 22, and those results won't show up until next month.

Only one week in March had favorable weather, noted Edward R. Telling, chairman of Sears, Roebuck & Co. He said sales for the industry leader during that week were 10 percent over a year ago, but for the month, its sales grew only 2.4 percent.

J.C. Penney Co. said its sales rose 7.7 percent; No. 4 Federated Department Stores Inc. said sales were up 5.9 percent; Fifth-ranked Dayton Hudson Corp. reported a gain of 13.2 percent; No. 6, Montgomery Ward said sales were up 10.5 percent; Wal-Mart Stores Inc., ranked No. 8, reported a 47 percent jump.

TI announces medical billing system

NEW YORK — A computerized medical billing system designed around the specfic needs of medical practitioners and the advanced features of the TI Professional Computer was announced by Texas Instruments.

The TI Medical Billing System is a unique, completely integrated all-in-one hardware and software package that was designed with the assistance of practicing physicians and industry consultants. The TI system can decrease time spent on paper work, increase billing accuracy, faciliate data analysis, and speed cash flow in the doctor's office.

According to TI's Data Systems Group vice-president Tom Ellis, "TI's extensive research into the needs of the medical office illustrates our commitment to providing complete system solutions and estensive service and support to specific markets. In addition, we are providing our dealers with the training and tools they need to provide the medical market with quality product training and after sales support."

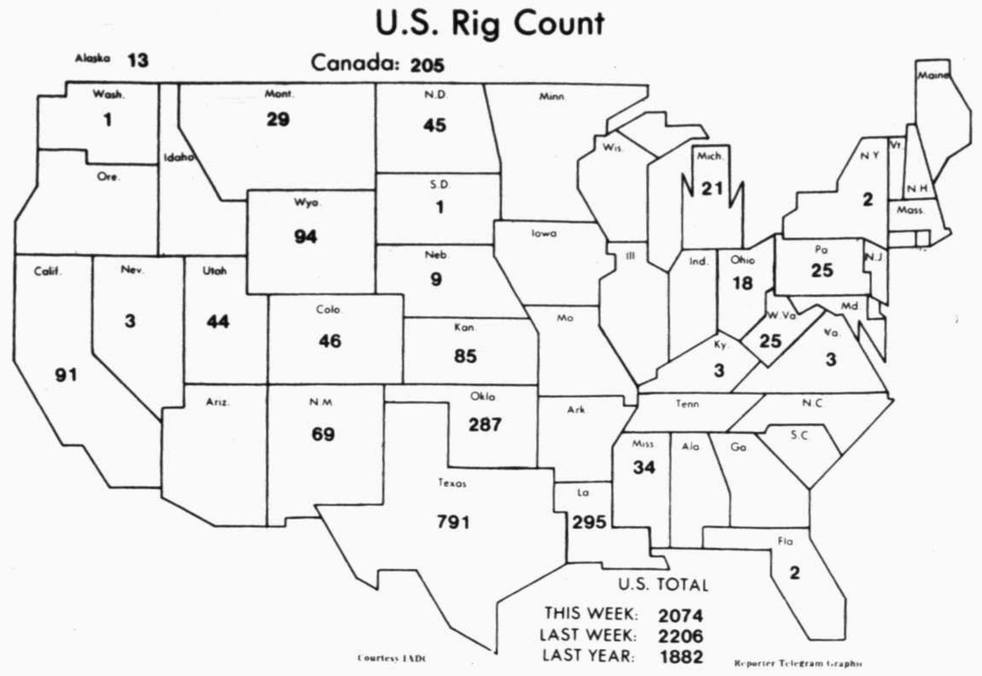

Jeffrey Youngkin, Phd., who has been using the Texas Instruments Medical Billing System, says "BY spending less time on adminisstrative tasks, I can concentrate more on each of my patients and the constant flow of new research relevant to my practice."

"My staff and I have found the TI system quite easy to learn and operate. We use it for recording and reviewing billings, insurance forms, daily records, reports, and appointment scheduling, among other things." Youngkin explains.

Among its many design features are its easy-to-use keyboard, compact size and high-resolution color display. It provides both hard-disk storage for easy and fast information access along with back-up diskettes for data and program storage.

The Texas Instruments Medical Billing System is designed to meet current office needs and is expandable to take advantage of future technology. It has flexible programming, with printing formats adaptable to a wide-variety of billing and insurance forms.

U.S. Rig Count

The nationwide rig count was up substantially this week by almost 70 rigs. Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma again were leaders in the count, although the Texas count decreased slightly. This week's count was up 82 over the same period last year.

After all this time, power plant opens

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — After a decade of delays, cost overruns and fatal accidents, part of Pacific Gas & Electric's Helms hydroelectric plant finally has begun providing electricity to northern California customers.

Tests on the controversial and complicated system's Unit Two in the Sierra Nevada were completed recently, and it then went "on line" producing electricity, spokeswoman Francis Squire said Monday.

Helms, 250 miles southeast of San Francisco, was scheduled to be completed in 1980 but encountered a series of delays and accidents that resulted in heavy cost overruns and criticism.

Other problems included severe winter storms, strikes, problems in drilling tunnels, a major pipe blowout in September 1982 just before the system was to go on line, and equipment problems.

Costs skyrocketed from $235 million at the plant's conception in 1973 to an estimated $992 million now. PG&E officials have said interest charges prior to getting the system on line added $10 million a month to the bill.

The state Public Utilities Commission staff recommended that the utility be forced to absorb $57 million in construction costs because of the delays, but the commission has not acted.

The unit now functioning has generated more than 400,000 kilowatts an hour in test runs, making it "the largest hydroelectric plant in PG&E's system," Ms. Squire said. The largest previous plant was Kerckhoff II, which opened last year and provides 114,000 kilowatts.

Helms is a pumped storage plant, which means that after water flows downhill from Courtright Reservoir to spin the generators, it is pumped back up to Courtright from Wishon Reservoir at night to be used again.

The purpose is to provide extra electrical capacity during periods of peak need, particularly in hot summer months, while using excess power at off-peak hours to pump water back up the mountain.

The premise was that cheap nuclear energy from Diablo Canyon would be available for night pumping, but Diablo is not on line.

Enstar seeking to sell company

HOUSTON — ENSTAR Corp. announced that is was seeking to sell the company. In that connection it has engaged the investment banking firm of Morgan Stanley & Co. Inc. to seek potential buyers for all or parts of the company.

The company also states that it had delivered to Roy Huffington, a director who has threatened a proxy contest for control of the company, terms of a proposed settlement. That proposal would have permitted him to appoint, right away, all four directors up for election this year who would then have been able to participate in the effort to sell the company. Huffington rejected the proposal and insisted that he be given immediate control of the company.

Construction complete on spray ice test

HOUSTON — Exxon Co. U.S.A. has successfully completed the construction phase of a spray ice barrier test in the Beaufort Sea as part of a program designed to increase protection for Arctic offshore drilling structures.

The purpose of the test was to demonstrate that large-scale spraying of sea water can be used effectively to build large grounded ice barriers rapidly.

The spray ice barrier, a concept developed by researchers at Exxon Production Research Co., is designed to act as a buffer between an offshore Arctic drilling structure and moving sea ice. The barrier absorbs the impact of an advancing ice sheet causing it to fragment.

Engineering data from the test will be used in the design of an operational spray ice barrier next winter in the Alaskan Beaufort Sea where Exxon plans to utilize a new type mobile drilling structure, the Concrete Island Drilling System (CIDS) at a drill site east of Point Barrow. Because of its unique reusable quality, CIDS is an alternative to gravel island for offshore Arctic drilling.

During the recently-completed phase of the barrier test, sea water was sprayed from an ice-breaking vessel at the rate of 16,000 gallons per minute or one ton of water per second up to 250 feet in the air and over a 500-foot-wide area. Most of the spray was deposited as hail, snow, or slush.

Auto sales pushed up

DETROIT (AP) — U.S. automakers says a brisk 18.7 percent rise in their sales in late March pushed sales for the first three months of the year 35.1 percent ahead of last year.

The companies said that sales for March were the best for the month since 1979 and were up 26 percent from that month last year.

"These sales looked fine," said Joseph Phillippi, an automotive industry analyst at Dean Witter Reynolds in New York. Phillippi said sales should remain high through this summer.

Among the Big Three, Ford Motor Co. 10-day sales were up 23.3 percent from the comparable period a year ago. General Motors Corp. reported a sales inceaseZ(A¼yof 6.3 percent.

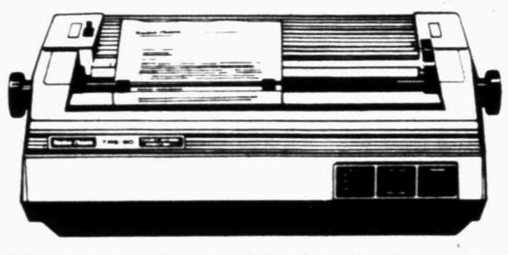

Sales for the final 10 days of March worked out to an annual rate of 8.1 million, which means that many cars would be sold in a year at the late-March rate. That's a relatively high figure, approaching the last good year in the U.S. auto industry, 1979, when domestic automakers sold 8.2 million cars.

Brown & Root to build 550-mile Arab pipeline

HOUSTON (AP) — Brown & Root Inc., a Houston-based worldwide construction and engineering firm, has received a contract to build a 550-mile pipeline that would carry crude oil from Iraq to Yanbu, a Saudi Arabian port.

Brown & Root spokeswoman Carmen Goldthwaite confirmed the company has a contract for part of the work, but declined to give further details.

The pipeline, which will cost $2 billion to $3 billion to build, will bypass the politically unstable Strait of Hormuz through which Iraq now ships its oil, the Houston Chronicle reported today.

Eight million barrels of oil per day — one-fifth of the non-communist world's oil supply — are currently shipped through the strait, which lies at the mouth of the Persian Gulf between Iran and Oman.

Bechtel Petroleum Inc., also based in Houston, has been awarded a contract for another Iraqi oil pipeline that would carry oil to Aqaba, a Jordanian port on the Red Sea. The Jordanian pipeline is expected to cost about $1 billion.

Iraqi officials estimate that the two pipelines could carry 2.8 million barrels of crude a day. But officials in the pipeline and petroleum industry say the system's capacity could exceed 4 million barrels a day.

The two 48-inch diameter pipelines would allow Saudi Arabian Petroline to export 7 million barrels a day through Red Sea ports. The Petroline currently produces less than one million barrels a day.

Help Wanted Index peaks

NEW YORK (AP) — The Help Wanted Advertising Index, an economic indicator usually sensitive to changes in demand for labor, reached a three-year peak in February, The Conference Board says.

The business-financed research group said the seasonally adjusted index rose to 129 in February from 123 in January.

The index has risen each month since it stoood at 97 in August and is currently at its highest level since it reached 130 in February 1981. The index, which is based on 100 in 1967, had been 83 a year ago.

"The steady labor market improvement results from continued strong economic expansion as well as an apparent slowing in productivity," said Kenneth Goldstein, one of the board's economists.

"Business' appetite for additional worklers remains whetted, which implies that unemployment will continue to decline, perhaps to about 7.3 percent by mid-year," he said.

The nation's civilian unemployment rate fell to 7.8 percent in February, down from 8.0 percent in January.

Banks must not be disadvantaged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker says the nation's banks must not be put at a competitive disadvantage as Congress goes about re-regulating the ways Americans get their financial services.

Volcker told Congress on Wednesday that in the past two years, nonbank companies have used legal loopholes to break down some decades-old barriers between banking and other businesses, leaving a system "that is changing helter skelter."

He renewed his plea for Congress to pass legislation spelling out new guidelines to bring order to the changes.

Those guidelines, if approved, are widely expected to give both banks and other businesses at least some leeway to move into each other's traditional fields. But Volcker said, in testimony before the House Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Consumer Protection and Finance, that new rules are especially important to protect the banking system.

Billions of dollars awarded synthetic fuel projects

WASHINGTON (AP) — Playing "Beat the Clock" while Congress second-guesses its 1980 decision to finance a synthetic fuel industry, the government is beginning to award billions of dollars in aid for half a dozen projects.

The U.S. Synthethic Fuels Corp. told the Treasury Department to set aside $4.33 billion in tax money as subsidies for synfuel projects in Colorado, Louisiana, Kentucky, Texas, California and Maine.

The tentative awards were announced amid an effort by 16 senators and 187 members of the House to rescind $15 billion that Congress approved four years ago to develop the capability for converting coal, shale and other solid fuels into oil and natural gas.

"They're trying to get the money out before Congress shuts them down," said Robert Roach of the Environmental Policy Center, a vocal critic of the program. "It's a race against the clock."

Except for a $120 million price support awarded last July to another California project, the subsidies are the first by the quasi-government corporation.

"We are designing a program that will give this country an option for utilizing solid energy resources in the United States equal to six times the amount of oil in the Middle East," Synfuels Chairman Edward Noble said Thursday.

He called the day-long, closed meeting of the corporation's four-member board of directors "the most productive in the history" of the controversial agency.

With world oil prices falling 25 percent the past two years, the program is under wide-scale attack as being too expensive and unneeded, even though the United States still depends on foreign supplies for one-third of its oil, just as it did during that 1973 Arab embargo.

But in addition to the world oil glut and depressed energy prices that have reduced the economic attractiveness of synthetic fuels, the program has been plagued with charges of mismanagement, cronyism and wrongdoing.

On Tuesday, House Energy Committee Chairman John Dingell, D-Mich., called for the resignation of Synfuels President Victor Thompson from his $135,000-a-year job because of violations of federal laws by the Oklahoma bank that Thompson headed until five weeks ago.

Noble affirmed his confidence in Thompson on Thursday, saying he has known him as an honest friend and businessman for 15 years. But he also said that the issues raised by Dingell, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Comptroller of the Currency in Thompson's operation of the Utica Bank of Tulsa "would be looked at very carefully."

The corporation said in a business plan filed with Congress in February that it intends to grant $14.77 billion in loan guarantees and price subsidies for more than a dozen projects by spring 1985.

Noble, however, said Thursday the long-term subsidies will have only a $2 billion impact on the federal budget between now and 1990.

The price supports approved Thursday range $37.50 to $67.50 per barrel for oil compared with an average world price of $29 a barrel now. The subsidies for synthetic natural gas range up to $12.50 per 1,000 cubic feet — four times current spot prices.

They still have to be put into the form of final contracts that cannot be signed until the board's next meeting on April 26. But officials conceded that is only a paperwork delay.

The largest award, $2.7 billion in price guarantees, is for an 80,000-barrel-per-day expansion of Union Oil Co.'s oil shale project in Garfield County, Colo. The project already has $400 million in price subsidies from the Department of Energy for its first phase to squeeze 10,000 barrels of oil a day out of shale in the area.

The supports for the second phase would guarantee an initial price of $60 a barrel for that oil but would allow it to rise up to $67.

Other projects approved for Synthetic Fuels Corp. subsidies are:

—Dow Chemical Co.'s Dow Syngas project near Plaquemine, La., to produce about 30 million cubic feet of synthetic natural gas from coal. Price guarantees over 10 years for the project total $620 million at between $11 and $12.50 per 1,000 cubic feet.

—Greenwich Oil Co.'s Forest Hill project in Wood County, Texas, to convert heavy oil into 1,750 barrels a day of usable crude. It includes loan guarantees of $22.57 million and price guarantees of $37.43 million over 10 years for a total of $60 million. The price supports would guarantee a price of $40 a barrel for the first 500,000 barrels and $37.50 for each barrel thereafter.

—Ladd Petroleum Corp.'s HOP Kern project in Kern County, Calif., to produce 3,600 barrels of usable crude per day from heavy oil. The award includes $71.2 million in loan guarantees and $28.8 million in price supports over 10 years. The guaranteed price is $28.50 per barrel adjusted for inflation and market prices.

—Texas Gas Development Corp.'s Kentucky Tar Sands project in Logan County, Ky., to produce 5,000 barrels of oil a day. The award is for up to 10 years of price guarantees totaling $543 million and represents a supported price of $55 a barrel for the first 3.3 billion barrels and $40 per barrel thereafter.

—Signal Energy Systems Inc.'s Northern Peat energy project at Milford, Maine, to produce 290,000 tons of low-sulfur peat-derived fuel for replacing fuel oil in industrial, utility and commercial boilers. The award includes $160 million in loan guarantees and initial price supports of $205 million that can be increased up to $365 million as the loan is repaid. The price guarantee is equivalent to about $10.50 for 1,000 cubic feet of natural gas.

Deadlines on negotiations for the Great Plains coal gasification project in North Dakota and the Chaparrosa Ranch and Enpex Syntaro project in Texas were extended until April 26.

Dollar rallies against all currencies

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rallied against all major currencies in early European trading on news of an increase in the U.S. banks' prime lending rate. Gold bullion prices dropped in quiet trading.

Dealers said the dollar rose sharply from Thursday's closing prices in Europe, but was below overnight highs in New York which followed an announcement by major U.S. banks that the prime lending rate was being raised from 11.5 percent to 12 percent.

In Tokyo, where trading ends as Europe's business day begins, the dollar bounced back after sagging for two days to finish the week at 225.78 Japanese yen, up from 224.95 yen late Thursday.

In London, the dollar rose against the British pound. It cost $1.42325 to buy one pound sterling compared with $1.4331 on Thursday.

—2.6276 West German marks, up from 2.6115.

RCA to end videodisc production

NEW YORK (AP) — RCA Corp. says it will end production of its videodisc player, a machine that never met sales expectations and generated $580 million in losses since it was introduced three years ago.

RCA said Wednesday that $175 million of the losses were charged to this year's first quarter to reflect the cost of phasing out the player's production by year's end.

Still, a $75.7 million gain from an accounting change helped RCA's first-quarter profit rise 73 percent from a year earlier, to $50.3 million, or 40 cents a share, from $29 million, or 14 cents a share.

Sales climbed to $2.36 billion from $2.03 billion, said RCA, which also has interests in broadcasting, transporation and other consumer electronics.

Interest rates may stabilize

NEW YORK (AP) — Credit market analysts say interest rates may be headed for a period of stability despite a $2.2 billion rise in the nation's basic money supply in late March and an increase in the prime lending rate at major banks.

The increase in the money supply was slightly higher than analysts' expectations, but left the basic money measure, caled M1, within the growth targets sought by the Federal Reserve.

Interest rates in the money markets edged lower after the Fed released its money supply figures during late trading Thursday.

For example, rates on short-term Treasury bills, which had been slightly higher earlier in the day, slipped and closed the day unchanged to slightly lower.

Earlier in the day, major U.S. banks nationwide lifted their prime lending rates for the second time in three weeks, boosting them one-half percentage point to 12 percent.

The move lifted the banks' prime, or base, lending charge to its highest level since October 1982, when it also was 12 percent.

Firms oppose overseas tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — American companies with foreign operations are campaigning against a proposal in Congress to resume collecting U.S. taxes on Americans abroad who earn less than $80,000 a year.

The proposal would start taxing Americans overseas who earn over $30,000 a year. The limit was raised to $80,000 in 1981.

J. Philip Hinson, director of Middle East affairs at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said Wednesday that as many as 500,000 Americans would be affected by the proposal.

The proposal came from Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., as part of an effort to bring in new taxes and cut the federal government's deficit.

'Thrilling' Michael Jackson

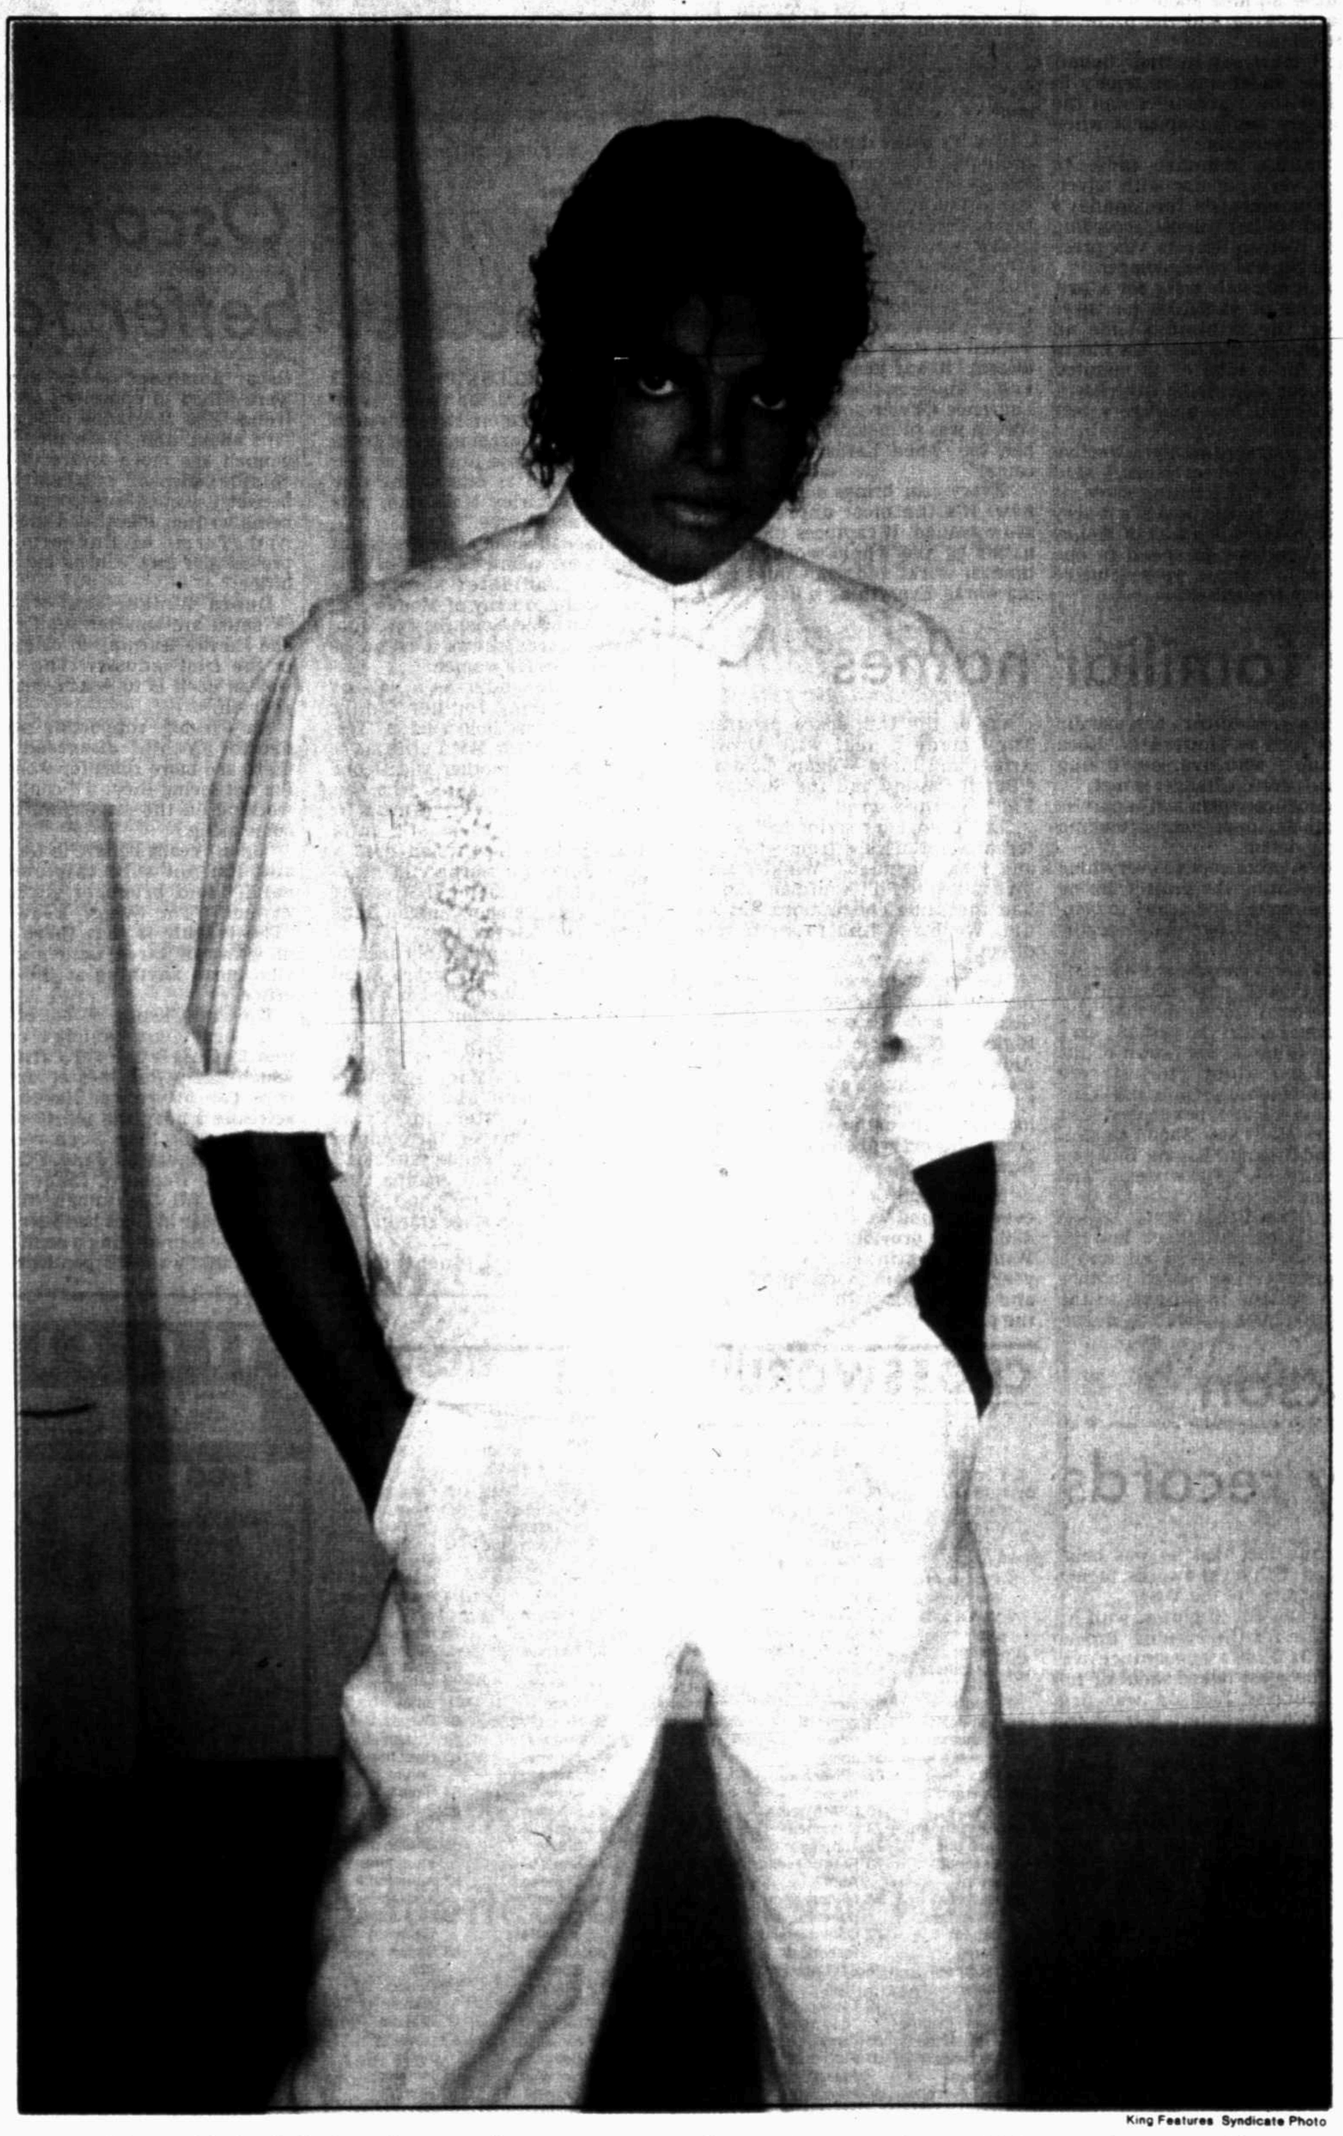

By MARK BEGO
King Features Syndicate

The year 1984 will surely go down in history as the year that everyone re-discovered George Orwell's prophetic novel, "1984," and listened to Michael Jackson's music around the world. It is already the year that Jackson has broken every imaginable record that the recording industry has ever tallied, and has collected every entertainment award possible.

To date, Jackson's phenomenal album "Thriller" has sold in excess of 30 million copies worldwide. He is the first person to place six hit singles in the American "Top 10" from one album ("The Girl Is Mine," "Billie Jean," "Beat It," "Wanna Be Startin' Something," "Human Nature," and "P.Y.T.") and now with the title cut, "Thriller" that makes seven.

The "Guinness Book of World Records" stopped its presses this year from January 20th to January 23rd to note these facts, and at the rate that Jackson is selling albums and singles, these facts are already out of date.

This doesn't even take into account his million-selling number-one duet with Paul McCartney "Say, Say, Say." Or the phenomenal 14-minute video version of "Thriller" that has literally re-defined the realm of music videos. Or the fact that in February he set a new record for Grammy Awards, winning in eight categories.

MICHAEL JANKSON is universally recognized as the decade's most sensational and successful superstar, and his story is a legacy of talent, work and creative perfection. He is an author, composer, producer, choreographer and he is only 25 years old.

Jackson was one of the stars of the 1978 motion-picture version of the Broadway smash "The Wiz," he hangs out with Jane Fonda and Steven Spielberg, gossips on the phone with Liza Minnelli and Adam Ant, dates Tatum O'Neil, produces hit songs for his best friend, Diana Ross, and is visited by Katharine Hepburn backstage when he headlines Madison Square Garden.

In November it was announced that Jackson and his five brothers and two of his three sisters would reunite for a worldwide concert tour, coordinated by boxing promoter Don King, and underwritten by the Pepsi-Cola Corporation.

As part of the deal with Pepsi, Jackson and his brothers agreed to tape a special effects-filled television commercial that debuted on the night of the Grammy Awards. A mishap involving fireworks accidentally ignited Jackson's hair.

Through the accident, he was left with a hairless burn mark on his scalp, and that week's orders for the "Thriller" album reached an additional million copies.

My first introduction to his charismatic style was in October of 1969 when Diana Ross & The Supremes presented the national television debut of The Jackson Five on TV's "The Hollywood Palace."

AFTER THEIR introductory medley from the Broadway musical "Hair," The Supremes took a deep bow, and Ms. Ross took the microphone and announced, "It's wonderful to return tonight as your hostess, especially tonight, when I have the pleasure of introducing a great young star who has been in the business all of his life.

"He has worked with his family, and when he sings and dances, he lights up the stage. Here he is, Michael Jackson and The Jackson Five."

There was 11-year-old Michael, surrounded by his four older brothers — Jackie, 18; Tito, 16; Jermaine, 15; and Marlon, 12 — tearing into their first Motown single, "I Want You Back," which became a number-one million-seller. Since that time Jackson has gone on to sell almost 90 million albums and singles, both with his brothers and as a solo act.

As Motown Record Company's premiere family act, Michael and The Jackson Five from 1970 to 1976 amassed a number of million-selling hit singles, including "ABC," "The Love You Save," "I'll Be There," "Mama's Pearl," "Never Can Say Goodbye," "Sugar Daddy," "Corner Of The Sky" and "Dancing Machine."

In 1972, while still the lead singer of The Jackson Five, Jackson began releasing singles and albums as a solo artist as well, conjuring "Got To Be There," "Rockin' Robin" and "Ben" into million-selling certified "gold" status.

In 1976, in a political move, Jackson's father and manager, Joseph Jackson, declined renewing his sons' contract with Motown Records, and moved the act to CBS-owned Epic Records. Each of the boys obeyed their father's wishes and signed the new contract, with the exception of Jermaine, who remained with Motown.

MICHAEL AND HIS brothers changed their group's name to The Jacksons, replaced Jermaine with younger brother Randy, and went on to further recorded success. But it was always Michael who was in the forefront.

In 1979, following his movie debut in "The Wiz," Jackson resumed his solo recording career with his eight-million-selling album "Off The Wall." With it Jackson became the first person to place four singles into the "Top 10" off of the same album ("Don't Stop 'Till You Get Enough," "Rock With You," "Off The Wall" and "She's Out Of My Life").

He has since broken his own record.

According to Mary Wilson of The Supremes, "I remember seeing Michael and his brothers that night at The Hollywood Palace. Basically they were pretty shy little kids, and all of the attention was going toward Michael. You could see then that there were plans for Michael, that he would emerge as a major star.

"It was very clear to me that he would, that he actually had the capacity of going on to do the type of things that Diana did. That was very noticeable. He had 'star quality' at that age."

Since Jackson's career so totally eclipses his brothers' successes, how do they feel about his incredible superstardom? "The family enjoys what I do," Jackson explains, "Each person in the group has a thing that he does. I sing and dance and the other brothers sing and dance, but I sing lead.

"A lot of interviewers and fans ask the brothers if they ever get jealous because Michael does this or he's out front all the time, and they all scream for him a little more? It's a silly question, but it's interesting.

"WHEN THEY ASK me, I just answer that they know what I do. I've been doing this since I was 5 years old on stage, and I feel it's something that God gave me to do. I'm the one who sings lead. They can sing lead, but I've been chosen. They kind of understand it, and they accept it because that's what I do."

Where does Jackson get his incredible style? According to him, "I would say the people who have influenced me the most were mainly Motown artists, but especially Stevie Wonder. I've learned so much from him. Sitting in on his sessions and talking to him and listening — he's just phenomenal.

"I had an interview with George Harrison in England and we got on the subject of Stevie. George said, his exact words were, 'Stevie Wonder — he makes me want to retire.' He said Paul McCartney feels the same way.

"You can't explain what Stevie does. The way he creates lyrics and melodies so effortlessly. He hears your voice, and even if you're trying to disguise it, he knows you. I'll come in the door and he'll start singing my name and just instantly create a song. It's incredible."

Jackson's other idols include "Ray Charles, Jackie Wilson, Chuck Berry and Little Richard — I think they had strong influences on a lot of people because these were the guys who really got rock 'n' roll going. I like to start with the origin of things because it gets along, it changes. It's so interesting to see how it really was in the beginning."

Jackson admits to living part of his life in a fantasy land. This explains one of the reasons why his next big project is so appropriate for him: the movie "Peter Pan" directed by Steven Spielberg.

"WHAT'S WONDERFUL about a film," Jackson analyzes, "is that you can become another person. I love to forget. And lots of times, you totally forget."

He continues, "I love putting on an outfit or a costume and just looking at myself in the mirror. Baggy pants or some real funky shoes and a hat and just feeling the character of it. That's fun to me. I love it so much. It's escape. It's fun.

Glamorous Oscar broadcasts get worldwide audiences

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As a television event, the Academy Awards presentations is without rival: spectacular, glamorous, suspenseful. Even when the Oscar broadcast drags, it still gets phenomenal ratings.

Few TV programs get the audience — the worldwide audience — that the Oscars will command when ABC telecasts the 56th annual Academy Awards show April 9.

ABC estimates 80 million people saw the Oscar show last year in the United States, but no figures were available for the worldwide audience. This year the ceremony will be telecast to 75 countries, a record number.

Marty Pasetta, who is directing the Oscars for the 13th consecutive year, said he hopes to control the program's tendency to run long.

"Everyone is working to bring in the show at three hours this year," he said. "Last year it was three hours and 35 minutes, which is too long. So we're not going to do any major production numbers at the opening. We're going to stick to the five nominated songs. We have to do that for pace so that we have some peaks and valleys in the show."

The most uncontrollable factor is the speeches, which often get long-winded, but they're also working on that.

"The Academy calls everyone ahead of time and tells them to prepare themselves so that they can say it in a quick and short manner," said Pasetta. "I think all those great feelings and promises are left in the seat when the winner hits the stage. They have no idea about how long they're speaking and the promises get left behind.

"But I must say in their behalf there's an enormous electricity in the air at the ceremonies and the winners are caught up in it when they hear their name."

The show's immense audience makes it very popular with advertisers. Commercials for Monday's show sold out last August, according to ABC's Warren Boorom, vice president and general sales manager.

The commercials went for a premium price of $1,650,000 for three minutes, the minimum time an advertiser can purchase. Six blocks of time, for a total of 18 minutes, were up for sale. Some advertisers, such as Revlon, buy time every year on the show.

"It's an extraordinarily attractive show for the advertisers," said Boorom. "It's an exciting show, it has a quality image, and it's a very promotable show. It's a lot of money for an advertiser to spend in one night, but it's also a very valuable advertising franchise."

The advertising rate figures out to $275,000 for 30 seconds, which is the basic time unit for TV advertising. The average rate for 30 seconds of prime time on ABC is $100,000, said Boorom, but the figures range from a high of $200,000 to a low of $60,000.

Pasetta said it's a difficult job making the Oscars new and exciting every year. "It's like doing the Hit Parade with the same songs every week," he said. "We're still giving out the same awards. So we try to come up with new ways of packaging.

"We try to use the new tools of the trade that have come out in the previous year. We want to make a certain amount of flash, but not too much. This is the granddaddy of the award shows and class is very important. Flash is not important."

He recalled that the most electrifying Oscar moment for him was on his first show, when Charles Chaplin walked on stage to receive a special award. "It was just spectacular," he said. "Another time was when Sir Laurence Olivier got an award. His speech was so meaningful. I remember, too, when Katharine Hepburn came.

"Every year brings out something new. It's the most unpredictable show around. It captures the imagination of the whole world. Sometimes it works and sometimes nothing works. Everything is live."

Barbara Streisand — Meryl Streep — Debra Winger

Female Oscar nominees indicates better female roles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After 15 years of lackluster races, Academy Award voters have a wealth of female performances from which to choose the best actress of 1983, and as one of the contenders, Shirley MacLaine, puts it, "It's about time."

Although some actresses might argue the point, the list of this year's candidates before the National Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for Monday's awards shows a trend of better roles for women:

Jane Alexander as a valiant mother caring for her family after a nuclear holocaust in "Testament"; Miss MacLaine as a wildly erratic mother and Debra Winger as a daughter who can match her in willfulness in "Terms of Endearment"; Julie Walters as a beautician with a fiery desire for learning in "Educating Rita"; and Meryl Streep as a swinging Oklahoman who finds a cause in "Silkwood."

The year brought other memorable female roles: Barbra Streisand, who masqueraded as a man to win an education in "Yentl"; Bonnie Bedelia, the single-minded race driver in "Heart Like a Wheel"; Mary Steenburgen, the novelist who braves the Florida backwaters in "Cross Creek"; Tess Harper, the compassionate wife in "Tender Mercies"; war correspondent Joanna Cassidy in "Under Fire"; and Anne Bancroft, Polish stage star in "To Be or Not To Be."

At the recent luncheon for Oscar nominees, a few guests were asked to comment on the trend. Miss MacLaine observed: "It's about time. Both men and women are more aware of the complexities of relationships between women and scripts are being written about such themes. And 'Terms of Endearment' proves that they can be big box-office."

Debra Winger said wryly: "Women are smarter than men, and they're learning to catch up in the film industry. The only way to do it is to watch out for yourself."

Amy Irving, supporting nominee for "Yentl," disagreed: "If there are more roles for women, I'm not seeing them. I'll continue working on the stage until they come along."

"I don't really believe in trends, and I'm not sure this one is valid," said producer Richard Zanuck ("The Sting," "Jaws"). "The trouble is that there are only two or three women stars who mean anything at the box office."

The latest listing of box-office stars bears out Zanuck's comment. Quigley Publications, which has polled theater operators for 50 years, listed no actresses among the top 10 moneymakers of 1983. Such recent Oscar winners as Jane Fonda, Katharine Hepburn, Diane Keaton and Jill Clayburgh didn't even appear in films last year.

No one is predicting a return to the 1930s' "women's pictures" in which Joan Crawford, Bette Davis, Greta Garbo, Norma Shearer and others delighted the matinee crowd. But "Terms of Endearment" proved that themes about women can prosper.

The problem is supply. Studios are run by men, and most scripts are written by men. Stars like Miss Fonda and Miss Streisand have discovered that the only way to find suitable vehicles is to originate their own projects.

The plethora of good women's roles in 1983 is also remarkable for this fact: with the exception of Julie Walters, all of the nominees, as well as the other standout performances, were Americans. The situation is unlike earlier years when the Oscar often went to Europeans: Audrey Hepburn, Anna Magnani, Ingrid Bergman, Simone Signoret, Sophia Loren, Julie Andrews and Julie Christie.

The emergence of home-grown actresses contrasts with the plight of the American actor. This year's race for best actor features a lone American, Robert Duvall of "Tender Mercies," surrounded by a quartet of Brits: Michael Caine, "Educating Rita"; Tom Conti, "Reuben, Reuben"; Tom Courtenay and Albert Finney, "The Dresser."

While English actors continue winning hefty roles — last year's Oscar winner was Ben Kingsley for "Gandhi" — the American stars often play cardboard heroes, the kind that don't win Academy awards.

Producers not familiar names

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — When the final Academy Award is announced Monday night, it will be claimed by one of five producers, whose names are hardly familiar to the general public.

They are Michael Shamberg, for "The Big Chill"; Peter Yates, "The Dresser"; Irwin Winkler and Robert Chartoff, "The Right Stuff"; Philip S. Hobel, "Tender Mercies"; and James L. Brooks, "Terms of Endearment."

Yates and Brooks have won recognition as directors, and Winkler and Chartoff won the 1976 Oscar for producing "Rocky."

What does a producer do? The general public may have only the faintest notion, and many of those who toil in the film industry can't really define the functions of a producer.

The reason may be that there are different kinds of producers. The dealmakers, for example, are often international operators such as Dino DeLaurentiiswho are skilled at putting together film packages and arranging financing.

Executive producers are usually veterans such as Howard W. Koch ("Airplane") who oversee filming and make sure the budget is met.

Line producers plan and supervise the day-to-day operations, attending to filming details.

And total producers do everything from originating the project, hiring writers, directors and actors to planning the ad campaign and checking final prints.

Winkler provides a good example of the latter category. He and Chartoff have been among the most prolific filmmakers in the past 15 years, releasing films through most of the major distributors. They started with an Elvis Presley musical, "Double Trouble," and have produced such hits as "They Shoot Horses, Don't They?" and "Raging Bull," as well as misses — "Nickelodeon," and "Valentino."

Using "The Right Stuff" as an example, Winkler outlined how he and Chartoff operate. Four and a half years ago, they outbid another company for the film rights to the Tom Wolfe book about the beginnings of the U.S. space program. They made a deal with United Artists and hired William Goldman ("Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid") to write a script.

"But Goldman's script had a different point of view from what Bob and I had in mind," Winkler said. "We talked to Phil Kaufman, and he had the same conception that we did. We hired him to write and direct."

The project proved too expensive for the ailing United Artists, and Chartoff and Winkler moved "The Right Stuff" to the Ladd Company. Along with Kaufman, the producers interviewed hundreds of actors to fill the 105 speaking parts, chose locations, hired the special effects crews and everyone else needed for filming.

"Either Bob or I was on the set every day, and we watched all of the dailies (the previous day's filming)," Winkler continued. "We spent a year and a half in post-production and then dealt with the selling of the picture."

'Thrilling' Jackson breaks industry records

"It's just neat to become another thing, another person. Especially when you really believe it and it's not like you're acting. I always hated the word 'acting' — to say, 'I'm an actor.' It should be more than that. It should be more like a believer."

According to Spielberg, "Michael is one of the last living innocents who is in complete control of his life. I've never seen anybody like Michael. He's an emotional star child.

"Sometimes he appears to other people to be sort of wavering on the fringes of twilight, but there is great conscious forethought behind everything he does. He's very smart about his career and the choices he makes. I think he is definitely a man of two personalities."

The recent video versions of the songs "Billie Jean," "Beat It" and "Say, Say, Say" have allowed Jackson to reach an even wider audience, and to perfect his style in front of the movie camera. Jill Klein, the girl who picked out clothes for Jackson in "Billie Jean," found that he comes alive in front of the camera.

SAYS MS. KLEIN, "He has real flair for turning on the magic in front of the camera. I think that the makeup and the hair, and the clothes and everything really gets him going. He gets real excited by all that."

Ms. Klein also revealed that "He's wearing a leather outfit in 'Billie Jean,' and he's wearing a leather coat in his poster, but you wouldn't catch him wearing that in his everyday dress. It's purely for show.

"He doesn't like the idea of leather clothes, or killing animals."

Besides being concerned about conservation of animals, Jackson is admittedly shy. He was so emotional about his appearance on the recent televised event, "The American Music Awards," that he refused to take his sunglasses off on stage. He preferred to hide behind them, despite the fact that he was being presented with eight awards, including Entertainer of the Year.

All decked out in glitter, with his flashy date for the evening, Brooke Shields, Jackson's appearance was one of the most talked-about of the year. Peerless Jackson was presented with his Entertainer of the Year award by fellow superstars Diana Ross, Kenny Rogers, Barry Manilow and Quincy Jones... and preferred to hide behind his shades.

Many of his close friends and acquaintances have expressed their feelings that Jackson is too sheltered for his own good. Diana Ross has tried to encourage him to be more outgoing, Jane Fonda has been instrumental in helping him break out of his shell, and people like Paul McCartney have done their best to get him over his feeling that the world is pushing in on him.

Jackson himself admits, "I have a lot of trouble with friendships because I've spent so much of my life on stage. I don't always trust myself with regular people, so to speak.

"MY IDEA of your average person is someone in a crowd who's running toward me trying to get my autograph or tear my clothes off. I still get afraid. It's a whole other life, and I haven't really experienced that.

"I was raised on stage and that's still where I'm the most comfortable. Everything else is foreign to me. I'm just beginning to know and learn about friendships."

This over-protection is best illustrated by the recent party in New York City that was thrown in Jackson's honor at the American Museum of Natural History. Round-the-clock police protection for Jackson cost the city of New York $6 million for his three-day stay, and tickets for the party were considered the hottest item of the year.

Local barbershop chorus formed

The Permian Basin Chorus of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America, Inc., has been organized and is in the process of becoming a licensed chapter within the international group, SPEBSQSA, a world-wide organization of male singers dedicated to "barbershop style" four-part harmony.

The local group will have its first major public performance May 19 at Midland's Celebration of the Arts festival. Charter membership is open to men singers in the Permian Basin area.

Current membership includes men from Andrews, Midland, Odessa and Stanton. Will Collier was recently elected president of the local chapter and Tom Roberts was chosen as director of the chorus.

The chapter rehearses in Midland Mondays at 7:30 p.m. at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Bach music sets mood

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

Georgia Temple

West Texans are a hardy and resilient lot as evidenced by last Sunday's turnout for the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's seventh subscription concert. Despite heavy winds, chorale enthusiasts filled the sanctuary of St. Ann's Catholic Church.

It is doubtful anyone left disappointed. The program included two works by German composer Johann Sebastian Bach (1685-1750) and the Requiem Mass by French composer (1845-1924) Gabriel Faure.

The outstanding member of the greatest musical family the world has known, Bach's cantatas bring together the religious intensity of the music of Danish organist Dietrich Buxtehude and the operatic forms and beautiful melodic writing of the Italian masters Vivaldi, Corelli and Albinoni.

In 1705, Bach traveled 300 miles, all or part of the way on foot, to hear the nearly 70-year-old Buxtehude, considered the greatest organist of his generation. From this experience, Bach had a vision of how, on a large scale, to relate music to religious worship.

His "Christ Lag in Todesbanden" was written for Easter Sunday 1724 for a church which almost didn't consider him for its director's position when it became available in 1721.

When the position of director of music at St. Thomas in Leipzig and cantor of the Thomas-Schule opened up, the Leipzig City Countil drew up two lists of possible candidates. Bach's name was on neither, but the council finally decided that Bach should at least be heard.

His talent is evidenced by the more than 200 cantatas he wrote — works which spanned emotional, musical and devotional worlds and were generally related to some passage of the Gospel appropriate to a given Sunday on the church calendar.

In 1725, there were 32 Sundays, birthdays and holidays for which he is known to have written new cantatas. His duties included having a cantata ready for Sundays and holidays for St. Thomas and the associated church of St. Nicholas.

His cantata "Christ Lag in Todesbanden" formed a comfortable opening for the concert. The chorale members' voices blended clearly until midpoint in Verse IV when the clarity became briefly blurred.

Soloists soprano Mary Jan Sikes and tenor John Fleming turned in compelling performances. During Verse VI, however, Fleming got off tempo slightly but quickly recovered.

Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G Major is one of six Brandenburg concertos written when the 33-year-old composer was in the service of Prince Ludwig of Anhalt-Coethen. These works were the result of a commission for a set of concerti grossi by the Margrave of Brandenburg. It was during this period in his career that Bach composed the bulk of his secular instrumental music.

For the Bach cantata and the Faure Requiem Mass, the chorale was accompanied by a 26-member chamber orchestra of musicians from the Midland-Odessa Symphony. For the Brandenburg, 16 players left the hall. The 10-member ensemble's playing was smooth and precise.

Following intermission, the chorale and the symphony chamber orchestra performed the work many had come to hear. Faure, a composer and teacher, was, in a quiet way, one of the most influential musicians of his time (teaching, among others, Ravel, Enesco, Roger-Ducasse, Florent Schmitt and Nadia Boulanger).

His music has the simplicity of a polished gem. His creations, especially the 96 songs he wrote, flow gently, are often passionate but seldom dramatic.

In this work, the chorale and chamber orchestra, directed by Dr. Stanley Engebretson, often performed as one. The most dramatic of the seven movements (the same number as in Bach's cantata), is the third which was executed by all concerned in what sounded like a flawless manner.

Male soloist bass-baritone John Roberts gave a sterling performance which was matched by soprano Jane Kisner.

This work ends on a soft note, leaving the listener with the sense of almost floating away. It was a special way to spend a Sunday afternoon.

Old remake lacks magic

By BEULAH CASEY

Beulah Casey

"Where the Boys Are, '84" suggests in the title that it is an updated version of the 1960 movie starring Dolores Hart, Connie Francis (who sang the title song), and George Hamilton. Well, it is and isn't.

What is the same — four snow-bound college girls head for the sun and surf of Fort Lauderdale, Florida, during spring break and find or fake variations on their fondest fantasies; plenty of bikini-clad bodies litter the standing-room-only beach; post-pubescent libidos go into overdrive; and the locals behave with a patronizing yet benign tolerance of the visiting hordes.

What is different — the teen-age girls look like older women trying to look young (in the '60s version it was the other way around); the language has changed, with "a major SA alert" (stud alert) meaning checking out the guys; more slang for the word "urinate" that can be believed; and instead of the girls just showing up so they can be "chased" by the guys, these women do the chasing.

But for all that, producer Allan Carr and director Hy Averback ("Suppose They Gave a War and Nobody Came"), are begging the comparison, and they just don't deliver. Maybe it's the times in which we live. Maybe kids have changed. Maybe they were trying to get the jump on the mindless crop of beach blanket bingo movies about to flood over us. Maybe.

Regardless, the poignancy of the '60s version is missing here. Oh yes, Lisa Hartman is lovely and wistful as Jenny, the one who has to choose between two guys. But who can forget Dolores Hart in that part — the doe-eyed actress who stunned Hollywood when she went into a novitiate at the height of her career to become Mother Dolores?

But don't get me wrong. "Where the Boys Are" was not a great film, just better than it's remake.

On its own though, "Where the Boys Are, '84" rolls out the beer kegs and throws an endless party with Lynn-Holly Johnson ("Ice Castles") as the true funseeker in search of a "Conan-the-Barbarian," Lorna Luft as the girl who only thinks she wants something different from the boy back home, Wendy Schaal as the one who is "least likely to" and does, with a married man, and Lisa Hartman as the nice one.

Convertibles are back, and so is the pink-ruffled string bikini, only this time there is nudity (including a totally tastless scene at a party when a woman "of uncertain age" drops her top to reveal chain-encircled breasts) and grass.

And as for the men, they try hard, but androgyny gets a foothold and never lets go. "Where the Boys Are, '84" gives all the machismo to the women. It's still a girl who says, " What if he's trying to use me?" Only now, it's a girl who answers, "Use him back!"

One interesting casting choice is Alana Stewart (as in rock star Rod Stewart) as Maggie, the kind of hanger-on bored socialite who people may imagine she is in real life and probably isn't. Married the first time to the original "Where the Boys Are" star, George Hamilton, she makes inside jokes about her failed second marriage in this movie. And even without the background information, the scene is uncomfortable and she is stilted.

Rated R, "Where the Boys Are, '84" equals the original in length (90-plus minutes), if not in tone, is devoid of lasting value and most likely meant to be. Go if you just want to get a jump on summer, but when a girl hovers breathlessly over a phone and mutters, "Oh, God, make it ring, and I'll never eat another Godiva chocolate as long as I live!" don't say you weren't forewarned.

SNYDER — Two photographic exhibits, "Texas West of the Pecos" and "Out of the Forties" open in Snyder today.

Color photographs mde in the Trans-Pecos area by Jim Bones Jr., will be shown at the Diamond M Museum in the show "Texas West of the Pecos."

The Scurry County Museum at Western Texas College will host "Out of the Forties: A Portrait of Texas from the Standard Oil Collection." The 114 photographs in this show were taken from more than 6,000 pictures made between 1943-1950 as a part of a public relations project of Standard Oil of New Jersey. Most were taken in small towns and in the country, a sign of the times when Texas was just beginning to pass from an agricultural to an industrial society.

The county museum will host an autograph party for Snyder author Charles Anderson today at 1 p.m. Anderson's new book, "Deep Creek Merchant," tells the story of W.H. "Pete" Snyder, the trader for whom the town of Snyder was named.

Both museums will be hosting receptions from 1 to 4 p.m. today to mark the opening fo the new exhibits. There is no charge for admission at either museum.

For more information on either exhibit call Eunice Irwin, director of museums at WTC, 1-573-6107.

"Texas West of the Pecos" and "Out of the Forties" are being circulated by the Amon Carter Museum of Fort Worth. Texas Monthly Press has published a collection of the Standard Oil photographs in a book by the same name. Texas A&M University Press has published Bones' photographs in the book "Texas West of the Pecos."

These books as well as Anderson's "Deep Creek Merchant" will be available in the Scurry County Museum gift shop.

Local artists' works to be exhibited at Gallery 1114

Works by local artists Cristi Branum and Travis Beckham go on display at 1 p.m. today at Gallery 1114, 1114 N. Big Spring St.

Both artists are native Midlanders who left the Tall City to acquire professional artistic training. Subsequently, they have returned to Midland to pursue artistic careers.

Ms. Branum has entitled her collection of new works "Color Gravity," a term inspired by Mark Helprin's "Winter Tale."

"The paintings on display and for sale at the Gallery are the product of a natural progression from my very realistic work," Ms. Branum says. "I began to feel tht I couldn't express my feelings adequately except through abstraction and vivid, vivacious colors. I also felt compelled to work on a large scale which is also a departure from my earlier style."

Beckham, a graduate of the University of Houston, first worked in an abstract style. His early shows at the University and Dimension-Houston were large abstract canvases full of emotion and fervor. Over the years, however, Beckham's style has changed and developed to accommodate his desire to depict the interaction between man and nature. His work now reflects a feeling of isolation and loneliness.

"I guess I would describe my work as depictions of the effect of man on his environment through the image of the car and the road," Beckham says. "Recently, I have been trying to achieve a middle point between the conservatism of realism and the freedom of the non-objective technique. I'm trying to incorporte the color strength and organization of abstraction into the realism of the visual world."

This two-person show will be on display through June 2. Gallery 1114 is open Wednesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 1 to 5 p.m. Also on display are works by other gallery members, including John Harmon, Jack Hickman, Warren Taylor, Ruth Hill-Radcliffe, Deborah Hamilton, Sharon Seay nd Boyd Harris.

'The Lion in Winter' opens Friday

James Goldman's award winning comedy-drama, "The Lion in Winter" will open at Midland Community Theatre Friday and will run through April 28.

In his preface to this play, Goldman says that history gives much of the fact of famous people but little of the humanity. Goldman works in "Lion in Winter," to present the humanity, wit, humor and excitement of the people whose lives he portrays.

Katherine Hepburn won an Oscar for her portrayal of Eleanor of Aquitaine in the film version and Peter O'Toole was nominated for best actor for his Henry II.

The setting is Chinon, France, in 1183, where Henry, King of England, has called together his family for the Christmas holidays. The plot develops into a power struggle.

Eleanor, Henry's wife and queen, tries to usurp the throne for her son Richard the Lionhearted. Middle son, Geoffrey, wants a piece of the action, but is outcast by everyone. John, the youngest, is Henry's favorite and choice for the crown. In with this lively group is Alais, Henry's ward and current mistress, and her brother Phillip, King of France.

The political games heat up and the dialogue fairly crackles with wit and humor. Eleanor puts it pragmatically when she says, "Oh well, what family doesn't have its little ups and downs."

For reservations call 682-4111. The production will be staged in Theatre One at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Model can't play piano

NEW YORK (AP) — Barbara Walters asked Christie Brinkley to play the piano in her apartment for an ABC special Monday, but the model said she couldn't.

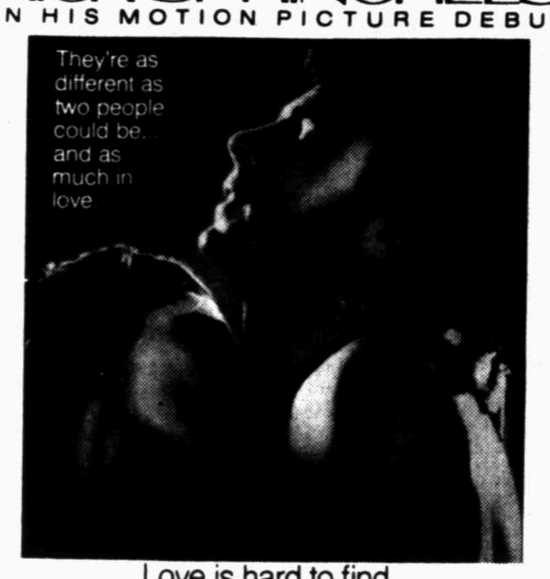

Perhaps, Miss Walters suggested, her boyfriend, rock superstar Billy Joel, could play instead. Sorry, Miss Brinkley said, he can't play either.

Actually, both play — but only as the sun goes down. The grand piano is in the living room of her $1 million apartment, but Miss Brinkley said they don't play it before 5 p.m.

Moms can affect child's IQ, experts say

By SUSAN CRAIN BAKOS
King Features' Syndicate

"It's ironic that the flood of new scientific data about the needs of young children — especially for individualized mental stimulation — comes at a time when so many new opportunities are becoming available to women besides full-time mothering," says Joan Beck, author of the best-selling "How To Raise a Brighter Child," and another book, "Best Beginnings: Giving Your Child a Head Start in Life."

Ms. Beck's careful analysis of the new research and its implications for mothers adds yet another voice to the growing professional chorus begun by early-learning theorists Maria Montessori and Jean Piaget. They have a disturbing message for working mothers: Early individualized learning is vitally important to life-long intelligence.

These professionals consider parents the most important teachers a child will ever have; and the teaching begins at birth.

"Talk to your baby all the time," Ms. Beck advises. "Free him from the crib early on. Read to him. Listen to him. Take him on short trips. Toddlers need freedom to move about in spaces where there are fascinating things they can handle."

Mothers who can and do opt to stay home with their young children have this kind of constant control over the child's environment.

THEY CAN "FREE him from the crib early on." They will be consoled to hear that nobody does it better than Mom; and the time they spend playing with baby prepares her for a career as a research scientist or an artist someday.

But what does this imply for working mothers and their kids? The new research on children's early learning needs and the most recent findings about problems day-care children face combine to create more guilt. If there's one thing working mothers don't need, it's more guilt.

"I would like to stay home with my baby for the first few years," says Lacey Morehouse, a new mother at 28. "But I can't. We need my income. Do I really have to choose between meeting the mortgage payments and giving my child a good start in life?"

Ms. Morehouse's dilemma is a poignant and all too common one in 1984. For many women, an extended motherhood leave isn't possible for financial and/or career reasons. Do they really have to choose between their own best interests and baby's intellectual development?

"What you do — or don't do — during infancy and early childhood can raise or lower your child's potential I.Q. by at least 20 or 30 points," says Burton Scofield, a West Coast child psychologist.

"We used to believe that I.Q. was completely genetically determined, but research done since the 1960s proves otherwise."

SCOFIELD, LIKE OTHER child-rearing experts, bases his opinion on research gathered from the disciplines of pediatrics, neurology, psychology, biology and education.

Some of the first studies, conducted at Harvard University, involved infants who were waiting for adoption. They were kept in white cribs with white sheets and crib bumpers.

Harvard scientists provided colorful crib ornaments as stimuli for some of the babies. Those babies were more visually alert — and achieved hand-eye coordination sooner than the others.

More recent, and far more complex, neurological studies have indicated that abundant early learning stimulation not only increases intelligence but also changes the size and chemical composition of the brain.

Separate studies conducted at the University of California and the University of Chicago determined that newborn infant brains have about the same number of tiny branches (dendrites and axons) and interconnecting links (synapses) as adult brains have.

During infancy, the number of synapses increases rapidly until they reach a maximum which is almost 50 percent higher than the average for adults.

UNUSED SYNAPSES begin to atrophy — and their density starts to decline at age 2 until age 16, when it stabilizes.

According to Dr. Peter Huttenlocher, a pediatric neurologist at the University of Chicago, this great abundance of early synapses is the "anatomical basis for what scientists describe as the 'plasticity' of the very young brain."

Early learning, which takes advantage of the plasticity, has a lasting quality which makes it somewhat different than learning acquired later in life...even as "late" as school age.

After age 8, experts believe the general level of intelligence can only be changed by approximately 20 percent. The more a child can see, hear and do in the early years, the higher the chances for intellectual achievement as an adult.

Obviously, children who get the kind of mental stimulation they need during the preschool years will have an important intellectual head start in life. But can they get it from babysitters and day-care workers as well as from full-time mothers?

Today the mothers of 8 million preschool children work outside the home. Half those children are in the care of relatives and other sitters. The other half are in day care.

MS. BECK ADVISES mothers to stay home as long as possible. The next best choice to being there is a relative, followed by a sitter who comes to the home. "If you get a good one, cherish her."

"A child learns best individually, at the precise moment when his mind is most open to a particular kind of information and at the rate most comfortable and encouraging to him."

Any mother substitute, relative or not, has to be carefully selected. Working mothers know this, of course — but they may be using the wrong selection criteria.

Altavise Phillips, Illinois child psychologist, says, "Often mothers want sitters who have everything picked up by 5 p.m. when they should be looking for someone who enjoys the child and spends time playing with him."

Not every mother can afford a sitter. That leaves day care, which has been described by the nation's news weeklies as a "national disgrace" because of inadequate facilities and understaffing in many centers, especially those geared to the working poor.

Ms. Beck says the problems with day care as the source of early learning are threefold:

— SOMETINMES THEearly learning prOgrams are too authoritarian and structured.
— Often learning is forced upon a child during certain designated learning periods.
— Some day-care proprietors tack educational labels on their programs, which are little more than understaffed babysitting services.

"The younger the child, the more likely learning is to take place on the run, in snatches of time no longer than a minute or two," she says. "The curious assumption that children must sit still to learn is one reason so many people thought youngsters weren't old enough to learn much until they were old enough to sit in school.

"But no one has yet been able to demonstrate that thinking takes place in the part of the anatomy involved in sitting."

DAY-CARE LEADERS who make a big fuss about putting "everybody in their seats" should be suspect. But there is good news about day care and early learning.

Parents magazine reported that 30 studies conducted over a period of 15 years found no detrimental effect on children's I.Q.s by good day-care programs.

Test scores were lower for children in day-care centers employing only one day-care worker for every 16 to 25 children. These children suffered from little interaction with care givers — and from a minimal amount of freedom to explore their physical worlds.

Children seem to learn best in warm, democratic atmospheres (rather than cold, authoritarian ones) where there is adequate staff to meet their needs for individualized attention.

Psychologist Bryna Siegel-Gorelick has written a comprehensive book, "The Working Parents' Guide To Child Care," which helps parents look for that right environment when they visit day-care centers.

If staying home with preschool children isn't possible, get the best substitute care you can afford.

THEN STOP FEELING guilty. You haven't abdicated the role of parent-as-teacher just because you've opted to work full time. The very nature of early learning makes it a process which is just as likely to take place after office hours as during.

"With a few simple guidelines, any parent can enrich the child's learning environment," Ms. Beck says.

It's easier to take advantage of those "learning on the run" situations if the child's home is filled with learning opportunities.

When a learning experience or plaything is appropriate for a child, psychologists call it a "match" for his particular stage of development. Finding the match is integral to good learning. And Ms. Beck says, the easiest way to tell when a child, even an infant, has this match is to watch his reactions.

"If you are attuned to his learning processes, you can almost sense his brain recording and integrating new data. You can also tell rather easily when he is bored or overstimulated or not ready for a particular experience."

An overstimulated baby shuts out excess stimuli. Toddlers may suck their thumbs, cry or cling.

EVEN WHEN A child is ready for a learning experience, helping may not necessarily mean teaching him.

"Sometimes the parent's role is just to coach or cheer. Sometimes you react and enforce. Always you provide feedback and share his excitement about his accomplishments."

One of the easiest ways to stimulate the child's mental development is by sharing your activities with him. Including children, from infancy, in family gatherings and outings is a natural way to do this.

Meredith Anderson, Ms. Morehouse's neighbor, worked throughout her pregnancy and was back on the job when son Brendan, now 7, was only 3 weeks old. He doesn't seemed to have suffered intellectually.

"He's very bright," she says. "I believe he is so intelligent because we talked to him from the day he was born. No baby talk either. We insisted the sitter do the same."

At Ms. Anderson's suggestion, Ms. Morehouse has found a good way of sharing stimulating time with her baby. She puts him, securely fastened in an infant seat, in the middle of the big kitchen table while she cooks dinner every evening.

"I TALK TO him and sing to him," she says. "He follows me all around the room with his eyes, kicks his feet and swings his fists."

Children, even as babies, do want to learn; and the desire makes teaching easier.

Their drive to learn — to investigate the environment, manipulate mechanical objects, master control of their own bodies — is innate, like hunger and thirst.

Penguin makes do

In a remarkable adaptation to an environment almost totally lacking in building materials, the emperor penguin of the Antartic lays its egg on its own feet and covers it with an abdominal fold.

Just like Pinocchio?

Found on the island of Borneo is the proboscis monkey, whose wide, flabby nose may grow so long that it hangs over his mouth and must be pushed aside at mealtime.

History book is 'what history does to people'

Post-Reconstruction Era," by Page Smith; McGraw-Hill; $29.95; 930pp

A Review

Page Smith, the distinguished historian, has been working for the last dozen years on the multivolume "A People's History" of America, to encompass nothing less than the Colonial period to the present. In some ways this is the kind of history the '60s generation had called for: "history from the bottom up"; not presidents, generals, intellectuals and business tycoons, but the forgotten, inarticulate masses — workers, immigrants, minorities, the poor and the oppressed. Smith has answered the call with a sprawling but lucid narrative that includes just about everything but the kitchen sink.

Big books are a publisher's nightmare, yet Smith plunges ahead as though he were carrying out a mission. The previous installment in the series came to roughly 1,200 pages; the present sixth volume, covering the last two decades of the previous century, goes on for 930 pages. Not since the 19th century has an American historian written so extensively and passionately about his country.

Even Henry Adams, perhaps America's greatest historical mind, gave up the subject of American history when he discovered that its truths eluded him. Smith writes as a lover loves — from the heart. And his love for America can best be seen in his disappointment with it.

Compare, for example, Smith's gigantic enterprise to the three-volume study produced two decades ago by Daniel J. Boorstin, now the Librarian of Congress. Boorstin explained America as the great success story of modern times: a nation that avoided the blood bath of revolution and counterrevolution as it easily moved forward to economic development and technological innovation, all the while enjoying an amazing political stability that supposedly came from the "genius" of the American character, specifically its resistance to "ideology" and other false doctrines that led European countries astray.

WITH SMITH, in contrast, we are less sure that ours is a spotless history of progress, liberty and virtue.

Where Boorstin emphasized consensus, Smith concentrates on conflict between capital and labor, science and religion, natives and immigrants, farmers and eastern corporations. There is also a curious undercurrent of determinism in Smith's work — for a "people's history" often turns out to be what history has done to people. Thus Smith offers a panorama of pathos; men and women are frequently not so much history's subjects as its objects, not conscious agents but victims to whom things happen.

Appropriately, the first five chapters deal with the plight of native Indians: the Sand Creek massacre after the Civil War; the hunting down of the Apache chiefs Cochise and Geronimo, and the valiant resistance of the Sioux leaders Crazy Horse and Sitting Bull. This section ends with Smith quoting the old abolitionist Wendell Phillips, that the Indians and Chinese immigrants "were part of a common human brotherhood and must be so perceived and so treated." Yet the Chinese were used to build the railroads across the American continent, as were the Irish and other recent immigrants. Here one wonders why the Indians refused to follow the immigrants and take up the life of wage labor. Smith tells us that various tribes could not be "transformed" by the Protestant, industrial values dominating America.

Did their ancestral customs of hunting and warfare render manual work beneath their dignity? Tragically, those who live by the code of pride must pay the price of progress.

American labor had also to pay the price, if for different reasons. Today, when even professional athletes are powerfully organized, it is too easy to forget former eras when there were no child labor laws, no collective bargaining, health insurance, retirement or social security benefits. Neo-conservatives who want to turn back such "entitlement" programs would do well to read Smith's vivid descriptions of labor conditions in the late 19th century: A 60-hour work week was common, strikes were called to make sure there would be food on the table, and children found themselves yanked out of the classroom to dig in coal mines.

Those on the Left might also benefit from reading what Smith has to say about labor militancy. In many of the great industrial strikes the rhetoric of socialism was in the air, to be sure. But American workers, Smith observes, were "too busy trying to improve or maintain their status to worry overlong about the needs of the working class" and the dream of "freedom and justice for all."

IN STATUS, Smith has a key to explaining why American workers failed to sustain Socialist sentiments and thereby resisted being absorbed into bourgeois society. Smith rightly emphasizes what Alexis de Tocqueville, Thorstein Veblen and other social theorists had also perceived.

In a new, liberal society that lacked Old World traditions like class, clan and community, the only way Americans could establish their identity and validate their lives was by making money as a symbol of success.

Here is where Smith differs from the younger radical historians of the '60s. Where they argue that American wealth established its authority — or hegemony, as the Marxists put it — by controlling educational and cultural institutions, Smith reminds us of "the active complicity of the mass of Americans" in their own emulation of capitalist values.

Resistance to those values came from the intellectual class, the very class that, ironically, is usually excluded as too "elitist" by those who do history from the bottom of society. Smith's discussion of the intellectuals' response to the doctrines of Social Darwinism has contemporary relevance. For the question then and now remains: Is capitalism compatible with Christianity? Recently George Gilder, a speech writer for President Reagan, wrote "Wealth and Poverty" to prove why religion and riches are perfectly reconcilable. At the turn of the century, however, the philosopher Charles S. Peirce contrasted Jesus' Sermon on the Mount to the "Gospel of Greed," contrasted love, humility and charity with egoism, success and envy.

It may be a measure of Smith's piety that he sides with Peirce against the Darwinists and capitalists. If so, his piety is at war with his '60s populism. "A People's History" does nothing to relieve us of the suspicion that the American people choose to forget what Peirce wanted to remember — the eye of the needle.

One of the great characters of bridge was the late Cornelis "Bob" Slavenburg of Holland. A hulking man of over six feet, he was a tennis player of international class, a raconteur par excellence, a man who would gamble on anything and a great success with the ladies. He was one of the fastest analysts at the bridge table that we have ever seen. In 1966, he and his partner, Hans Kreyns, won the World Open Pairs Championship. This hand, from his country's 1948 European Championship match against France, will long linger in our memories.

With the vulnerability in his favor, Slavenburg decided to muddy the waters with some psychic bidding. When his one spade overcall was doubled, he retreated to one no trump. It was his intention to back into clubs after the opponents doubled one no trump, but North came to his "rescue" with two spades. Now Slavenburg feared that, if he corrected to clubs, his partner would again return to spades, so he decided to take his medicine in two spades doubled.

West reasoned that it would be wise to cut down on declarer's ruffing power, so he started off with the king, queen and ace of trumps. He was rather surprised to find that he had brought forth the J-10-9 from partner.

All would still have been well had West now shifted to a red suit. But, for some reason known only to himself, he was reluctant to lead from either red tenace, so he chose a "safe" exit of the ten of clubs.

Clarer won in dummy with the king, used the eight of spades to draw West's last trump, and then ran six more club tricks to make two spades doubled. Not a bad result, especially when you consider that the opponents can make a vulnerable grand slam in any one of three suits, including spades!

'Dracula's Diary' 'extraordinarily silly'

Dracula's Diary. By Michael Geare & Michael Corby. Beaufort Books. 153 Pages. $10.95.

A Review

Michael Geare and Michael Corby must have planned "Dracula's Diary" as camp. If not, they're in a lot of trouble.

Not to say that something being camp excuses this extraordinarily silly book. But it would explain why it is so ridiculous.

In a tradition becoming far too common, Geare and Corby have taken a well-known character from literature and have expanded upon his life, trying to fill in the blanks left by the character's original — and much more talented — creator.

In Dracula's case, we learn of his youth and his tutor "Bulldog" Drummond, his Uncle Vlad (the Impaler) and his education in England. While in England, he meets every available Victorian character, either on his own or through his distant cousins, Roy and Shirley Dracula. Honest.

Dracula, a young man of society, rubs shoulders with Sherlock Holmes and Dr. Watson, Dr. Jekyll (and Mr. Hyde), the poet Swinburne and relies heavily on a tonic created by Sweeny Todd, the Demon Barber of Fleet Street.

His loyalty to his new country is soon put to the test and Dracula becomes a spy for the Queen, working for a man known as "K" and roaming on tramp steamers and the like.

He also must learn of his vampire skills and his ability to love. The vampire skills make him a music-hall success for a bit, while his sexual prowess confuses him.

Why this book, filled with bad puns and sick jokes, was published is anyone's guess. But the character Bram Stoker created must be turning over in his casket.

Novel account of one man's pain, struggle

"At the Border," by Robert Hemenway; Atheneum; 240 pages; $14.95.

A Review

Look back over anyone's life and you'll find there are a number of instances where goals, desires and motivations come into sharp focus. These instances could be grouped to form a synopsis of a person's life.

Robert Hemenway has taken the crucial moments in the life of his hero, John Everett, and worked them into a loosely connected account of the things that motivate and push this man.

But there is a naive element in his telling. Where is the pain and struggle that most people go through in the path to self-awareness? Where is the pain involved when not one, but two, marriages fail? And where is the pain in never knowing one's mother?

Instead what evolves is a modern fairytale, well told but emotionless. There is a dreamlike focus on Everett's childhood and its effect on the rest of his life. There are larger-than-life images of the people he knew as he grew up — his grandmother who raised him, the eccentric man he took care of for one summer, his father who left home when his mother died.

And there is a focus on the women. From his mother who died when he was a small child to the woman in an etching which hung in his childhood family room to the various women he loved and left, Everett's life is a search for the holy grail of femininity.

In this search he becomes something of a modern knight. He is always kind, usually honest, and looking for the woman who will give meaning to his life.

But this search is unsuccessful. Instead he comes to a better understanding of his place in the world. And, hopefully, in the telling so will the reader.

Isn't that why fairytales are told?

Steak, potato salad easy party foods

An easy-to-prepare menu for entertaining:

PARTY STEAK TERIYAKI

1 medium onion, sliced
1 small garlic clove, minced
½ cup soy sauce
2 tablespoons brown sugar
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon salad oil
1¼ teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon ground ginger
2 beef top round steaks, each cut 1 inch thick (about 1½ pounds each)
Creamy Stuffed Eggs (below)
2 medium cucumbers

In 12-inch by 8-inch baking dish, mix first 8 ingredients. Place beef top round steaks in marinade, turning to coat. Cover and refrigerate at least 8 hours or overnight, turning steaks occasionally.

Preheat broiler if manufacturer directs. Place steaks on rack in broiling pan. Broil steaks 10 to 15 minutes for rare or until of desired doneness, turning steaks once. Refrigerate steaks until serving time.

Mince enough cucumber to make 2 tablespoons; thinly slice remaining cucumbers; set aside. Remove steaks to cutting board and thinly slice. On center of large platter, invert 1- to 1½-quart bowl.

Creamy Stuffed Eggs: In 4-quart saucepan, place 10 eggs and enough water to come 1 inch above tops of eggs; over high heat, heat to boiling. Remove saucepan from heat; cover tightly and let eggs stand in hot water 15 minutes; drain.

Carefully peel eggs under running cold water. Slice eggs lengthwise in half. Gently remove yolks and place in medium bowl. With fork, finely mash yolks.

Stir in ½ cup mayonnaise, 4 teaspoons lemon juice, 1 tablespoon milk, ½ teaspoon salt, and ¼ teaspoon pepper until mixture is smooth. With spoon, pile egg-yolk mixture into egg-white centers.

POTATO SALAD JARDINIERE

9 medium potatoes (about 3 pounds)
Water
1 10-ounce package frozen pea and carrots
1 cup mayonnaise
1 tablespoon sugar
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon coarsely ground black pepper
1 16-ounce can diced beets.

In 4-quart saucepan over high heat, heat potatoes and enough water to cover to boiling. Reduce heat to medium-low; cover and cook 25 to 30 minutes until potatoes are fork-tender; drain. Cool potatoes until easy to handle; peel and cut into bite-sized cubes.

Meanwhile, prepare peas and carrots as label directs; drain.

In large bowl with fork or wire whisk, mix mayonnaise, sugar, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Add beets, potatoes and peas and carrots. With rubber spatula, gently toss to coat well with dressing.

Serve salad at room temperature. Or, cover and refrigerate to serve chilled later.

MARINATED TOMATOES

5 large tomatoes, sliced
¼ cup salad oil
3 tablespoons red wine vinegar
1 teaspoon sugar
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon oregano leaves
2 green onions, minced

Arrange tomato slices in 13-inch by 9-inch baking dish, overlapping slices.

In small bowl with fork or wire whisk, mix salad oil, vinegar, sugar, salt, oregano leaves and green onions. Spoon dressing over tomatoes.

BANANA-SPLIT CUPS

1 cup all-purpose flour
¼ cup cornmeal
3 tablespoons sugar
¼ teaspoon baking soda
⅛ teaspoon salt
4 tablespoons butter or margarine (½ stick), softened
¼ cup water
½ teaspoon vanilla extract
½ 6-ounce package semisweet-chocolate pieces (½ cup)
2 tablespoons milk
3 pints vanilla ice cream
3 medium bananas
10 maraschino cherries

Into large bowl, measure flour, cornmeal, sugar, baking soda and salt. With pastry blender or two knives used scissor-fashion, cut butter or margarine into flour mixture until mixture resembles coarse crumbs. Stir in water and vanilla extract. With hands, knead mixture until well blended.

Preheat oven to 375 F. Grease five six-ounce custard cups. Invert custard cups on jelly-roll pan for easier handling. Divide dough into 10 equal balls.

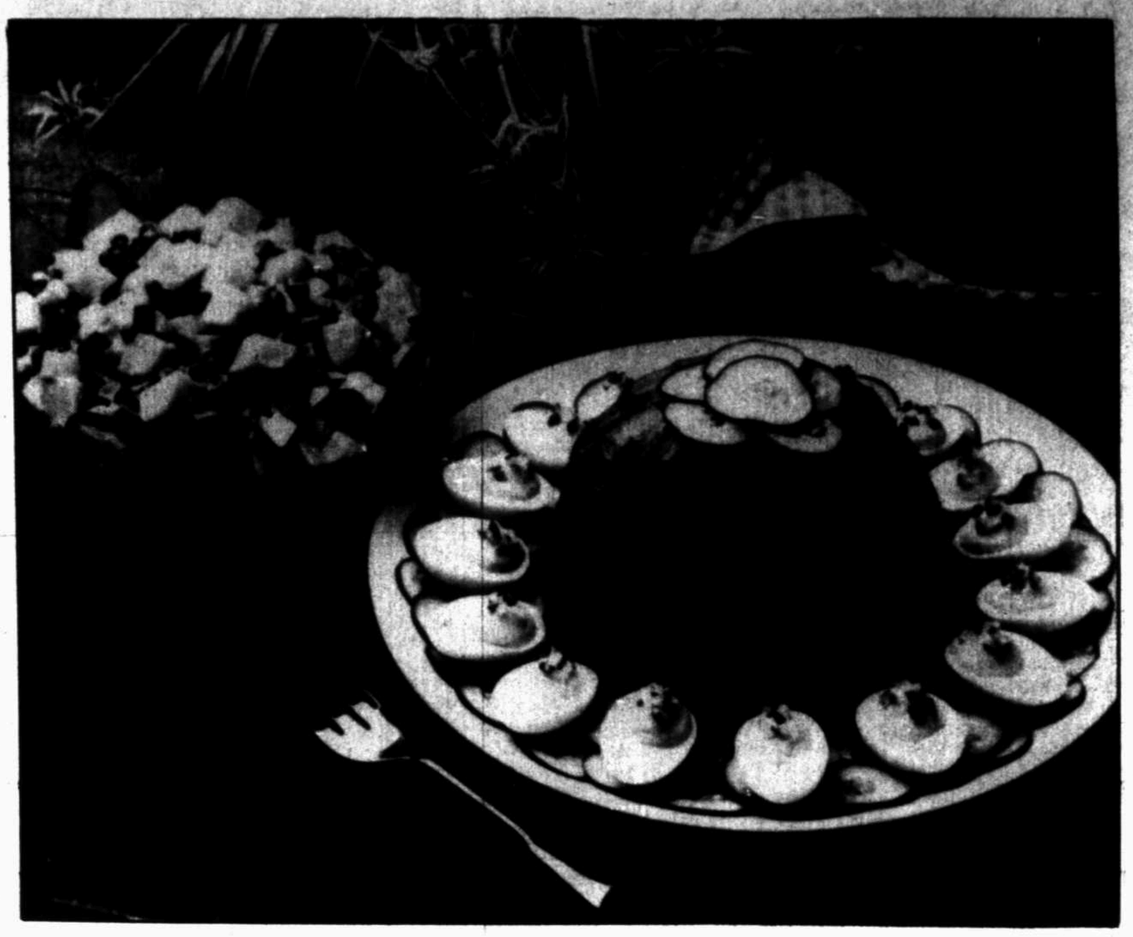

On lightly floured surface, with floured rolling pin, roll one ball into a paper-thin circle (edges may be ragged). Place pastry circle over outside of a custard cup, shaping pastry to fit cup and fluting edge as necessary.

Repeat with four more balls. Bake 12 to 15 minutes until lightly browned. Keep remaining balls covered to prevent them from drying out. Remove jelly-roll pan to wire rack; let cool 10 minutes.

With small spatula, loosen edges of pastry cups from custard cups; gently slip custard cups out. Let pastry cups cool completely. Repeat with remaining dough balls.

In heavy 1-quart saucepan over low heat, heat chocolate pieces and milk until chocolate is melted and smooth, stirring frequently. Remove saucepan from heat.

With ice-cream scoop, scoop out a ball of ice cream into each pastry cup. Slice bananas; arrange banana slices around ice cream; drizzle with chocolate sauce; top with cherries. Freeze until ready to serve. Makes 10 servings.

Taste buds allegedly disintegrate with age

By CANDY SCHULMEN
King Features Syndicate

My husband has always told me that one's taste buds disintegrate with age. Therefore, he hypothesizes, one's desire and tolerance for spicy food increases. In other words: Fill up your pepper mills after the age of 30.

I never believed him. After all, I was a child bride of 22 when I married the aging, 29-year-old man with failing taste buds.

Savoring bland foods like Muenster cheese and hard-boiled eggs, I made it clear right after the honeymoon that I didn't eat Szechuan food. Sometimes I watched in disbelief as he devoured take-out tai chien chicken. He'd remark, "That was so delicious that even my lips are anesthetized!"

We were incompatible.

"When you come closer to 30, you'll understand," he warned me. "I wasn't always this way. As a youngster, I thrived on Jell-O and Wonder Bread."

"I think you're going through a severe life crisis," I told him. "You're trying to dull the pain of turning 30 by fiddling with your taste buds."

"When you turn 30," he said, "I'll bet you'll start buying cloves of elephant garlic."

When my husband turned 30, I asked him to choose a place where we could celebrate the big event. He suggested a well-reviewed Indian restaurant known for sultry cuisine. I suggested marital counseling.

Our food controversy heated up through the years, but like most married couples, we learned to live with our differences and make compromises.

He ordered extra garlic and pepper on his half of our pizzas. We made separate Bloody Marys — one with Tabasco, one without. And when I refused chilis on my nachos, he used mine for a double dose of numbed lips.

"But don't you want to kiss me later?" I asked, fearful that the romance had gone out of our marriage.

"My lips are burning with desire," he assured me.

Desperately I searched for stars in his eyes. But he saw only the stars in margins of Chinese restaurant menus, the stars that meant "hot and spicy."

I can't remember when it began to happen, but I think it was about six months before my 30th birthday. The change was gradual, almost unnoticeable to me, but my husband sensed it all at once.

Why, he inquired, was I suddenly stealing bits of his shrimp with garlic sauce? And how come I'd switched from Muenster to extra-aged Gouda, a very sharp, crumbly cheese? And why did I consent to try a new neighborhood Indian restaurant?

"Gandhi," I said. We'd seen the movie that week. So hungry was I that night, I inhaled the food without flinching or blushing, without even bringing tears to my eyes. "I have a cold," I explained. "Can't taste a thing."

"You're almost 30," my husband smugly said. "Goodbye, taste buds."

"My taste buds are just as acute as ever!" I insisted, slipping a fiery portion of murg mumtaz into my mouth.

Growing old wasn't easy. My husband was nearly 38, but he was thinking less about tongues these days and more about other body parts.

Mother likes freedom now that daughters grown

By EULALIA BENEJAM COBB
King Features Syndicate

Sometimes at night I can remember how it felt to nurse a baby; how, unaccustomed to a newborn's hunger, I used to think that all of me would disappear into that flower-like mouth. After all these years my fingers have not forgotten the grasp of tiny fists.

And I can still see that first smile, dedicated to me alone. Back then the books said those early grins were only gas, but I knew a smile when I saw one, and smiled back.

I often put myself to sleep now with such thoughts. But these are only nighttime musings, the longings of a body still able to work at making life. I guess I'll never get over missing an infant's weight in my arms.

In the light of day, however, my memories of those years are different. Yes, I had two clever girl babies adorned with heads of curly hair, and my love for them was earnest and conscientious.

But to tell the truth, what I really remember of my middle and late 20s is an overwhelming fatigue, and the single-minded obsession with finding a room where I could sit alone and stare at the ceiling for a while.

AT 28, I felt 90. If someone had offered me a bed in a nursing home, I would have jumped at the chance. Ah, to be fed instead of feeding, to be watched instead of watching, to be the recipient rather than the giver of the daily TLC!

I recall one time I moved heaven and earth to attend a professional conference. My husband, my mother and every friend for whom I had ever done a favor were enlisted to feed, diaper, burp, dress and transport the girls.

The conference was fine, although I don't remember much about the lectures and discussions. But I will never forget the thrill of having only myself to dress in the mornings, and of leaving my razor beside the hotel bathtub without endangering lives.

Many years have passed, and now my daughters use my razor on their own legs, with only occasional loss of blood. When, in a fit of nostalgia, I wrestle them into my lap, they spill out of my arms like fledglings who have outgrown their nest.

"Mom," they yell, thrashing, "are you getting sentimental again?"

Some women greet the dawn of their children's adolescence with dismay. "My daughter's started wearing a bra. I feel so old!" they wail, as if there were only a certain amount of youth and beauty allotted per family, and the children's gain implied the parents' loss.

NOT ME. Ever since my youngest stepped out of her last wet diaper, I've watched my children's progress with pride and a good bit of self-interest.

When they got tall enough to get their own drinks of water at the bathroom sink, I knew that I had turned back the clock. And after the first winter when they managed to zip up their own parkas, I felt like a new woman.

But an even more significant milestone was my children's learning the real meaning of the word "emergency." It did not happen overnight.

After years of not being able to do any writing at home, the summer when the girls were 6 and 8 I decided to take a chance. I called them into my room, looked deep into their eyes and told them that Mommy had some important work to do, that she needed peace and quiet, and must only be disturbed in case of an emergency.

Some of my intensity must have gotten through to them, because they nodded sagely and went out, closing the door softly behind them. I bent over the paper, picked up my pen.

Could it be that it was finally happening? Was this really me, working at home?

BEFORE LONG, there was a knock at the door: My older daughter wanted to know if I had seen her skates. I told her where they were, nibbled my pen, took a deep breath and wrote down a word.

There was another knock. Number Two announced that her shoelace had broken. I recommended a double knot, reread my work, tried to think of what I had meant to write next.

The second knock was followed by a third.

"Is it an emergency?" I yelled.

"Yes!" my daughters answered in chorus.

I ran to the door, a speeded-up disaster film playing in my head — the dog run over, the kitchen in flames...

"What?" I shouted, flinging the door open.

The girls looked up into my haggard face and asked, "Can we take the dog for a walk?"

AFTER THAT DAY I had to admit that the time was not ripe for working at home. I went back to reading after the kids were in bed and limited my writing to Christmas cards.

It took a couple of years, but gradually the band-aid box began to last more than a week, and my daughters learned to discriminate between life-threatening situations and those that simply threaten my sanity.

Winless Steers due Bulldog BP

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

If history holds true to form, the Midland High Bulldogs should rebound from Saturday's 8-7 loss to Odessa Permian when they host the Big Spring Steers Tuesday in a 4 p.m. game at Memorial Stadium Diamond.

What history says is this: Big Spring is 0-8 in 4-5A play this year and most teams have been using Steer pitchers for batting practice. And the Bulldogs, though they haven't exactly hit the cover off the ball, do have some strong hitting in their lineup.

Mike Timlin is leading Midland High in hitting with a .500 average. In 24 plate appearances, he has nearly as many extra base hits as he has singles with five, producing six runs and nine RBI.

Steve Wootan is a distant second at .417 with no extra bases but is tied with Darren Thorpe in runs scored with seven. Chris Herbert, .346, Keith Clay, .316, and Mike Stanton, .313, are the remaining 'Dogs above .300 this year.

Timlin and Wootan have also been Midland High's most effective pitchers. Timlin has pitched 26 innings of duty for the Bulldogs and has an ERA of 2.69 while Wootan has another 19⅔ innings and a 4.98 ERA.

However, Midland High coach Tim Whalen may opt for one of three other pitchers against the Steers, saving his best for Saturday when the Bulldogs have a rematch with Abilene Cooper. Doug Daehling, Paul Neatherlin or Mike Boswell are likely candidates for the start against Big Spring.

With a 5-3 4-5A record, 7-10 overall, Midland High needs a victory against Big Spring to keep playoff hopes alive. The 'Dogs are in third place behind 6-2, 13-6 Midland Lee and 6-1, 14-5 Cooper. The Cougars and San Angelo were rained out Saturday and will play a make up game today.

WHILE MHS is hosting Big Spring, Midland Lee will be taking on San Angelo, 3-4, 8-11, on the Bobcats' home turf.

Against Odessa High Saturday, the Rebels snapped a two-game losing streak, finding some defense and hitting that was lacking in the two defeats. Coach Ernie Johnson hopes it's a sign of better things to come.

"At least we hit a few against Odessa," said Johnson. "We did a little better with the bat but we still didn't look good."

After the hitting slump Lee has been in, only three Rebels are above .300. Steve Woodlee has a .458 average and hits with power with four doubles which have produced eight runs and nine RBI. Bryan Willis, at .417, has also swung a clutch bat with eight RBI and six runs while Jimmy Phillips is hitting at a .385 click.

Johnson has yet to pick a starter for Tuesday's game against San Angelo, but is looking at "Mike Small or George Matta. "We won't throw Bryan Willis again, at least we won't start him. we might bring him in to relieve if we need to."

Willis went the distance against Odessa for the win to improve his record to 4-1 in district play and 7-2 overall. Matta is 2-1 for Lee while Small has yet to post a decision.

Tom Seaver was tagged with the loss in his American League debut with Chicago

Tigers tame Tom Terrific

By The Associated Press

The hot Detroit Tigers continued to roll with a 7-3 triumph over the Chicago White Sox, while the Baltimore Orioles and Milwaukee Brewers remained winless after Sunday's baseball action.

Rookie Barbaro Garbey drove in three runs with two doubles as the Tigers completed a sweep of their weekend series with the defending American League West champions and improved their record to 5-0.

The Tigers spoiled Tom Seaver's American League debut as the 39-year-old, three-time Cy Young Award winner failed to last five innings and was tagged with the loss.

Garbey's first double was his first major league hit, a pinch-hit, two-run shot off reliever Juan Agosto in the fifth inning. He also doubled to drive in a run in a two-run seventh.

"He's an outstanding hitter and an excellent fielder," said Detroit Manager Sparky Anderson of Garbey. "He can run, swing and field. I don't know what else ball players are supposed to do."

The defending world champion Orioles, meanwhile, lost to Minnesota 7-3 as Mickey Hatcher collected four hits and knocked in three runs. Jim Palmer lost his first start of the season, giving up four runs and seven hits in four innings, as the Orioles lost for the fourth time this season.

Said Baltimore Manager Joe Altobelli of his club's spin, "I'm not happy, period. I doubt I'm even content."

The Brewers, considered another of the AL's strongest teams, dropped to 0-5 under new Manager Rene Lachemann with a 5-4 loss to Seattle as Jack Perconte rapped three singles, scored three runs and drove in one.

In an NL night game, George Foster's two-run single and three hits by Darryl Strawberry led the New York Mets to a 3-1 decision over the Houston Astros.

In other AL action, Orlando Sanchez dumped a pop double in short center field with the bases loaded in the eighth inning, scoring two runs and lifting Kansas City to a 5-4 victory over Cleveland.

Don Mattingly's pop fly double down the left field line, his fourth hit of the game, scored Omar Moreno in the 13th inning to boost New York to a 4-3 victory over Texas.

Reggie Jackson and Doug DeCinces homered on consecutive pitches in the eighth inning to rally California to a 4-3 victory over Toronto. Davey Lopes singled home a run during a six-run first inning outburst and belted a two-run homer in the fifth as Oakland rolled to a 14-2 victory over Boston.

In the National League, Len Barker scattered four hits over 6 1-3 innings and Glenn Hubbard got his first two hits of the season, the second a solo home run in the sixth, leading Atlanta over Montreal 6-2.

Eddie Milner's two-out single in the 11th inning drove in Paul Householder to cap a two-run rally and give Cincinnati an 8-7 victory over Philadelphia. Lee Lacy collected four singles, walked once and drove in three runs sparking Pittsburgh to a 5-2 victory over Los Angeles.

Shortstop Garry Templeton's 10th-inning error allowed Steve Lake to score from second base and Ryne Sandberg added insurance when he tripled and stole home as Chicago beat San Diego 8-5.David Green drove in two runs with a homer and single as St. Louis rolled to 9-3 victory over San Francisco.

Sonics earn playoffs

SEATTLE (AP) — Seattle center Jack Sikma scored 29 points and grabbed 20 rebounds Sunday as the SuperSonics defeated the Houston Rockets 120-107 to clinch an NBA Western Conference playoff berth.

The victory gave Seattle a 39-40 record, while Houston slipped to 29-49.

Sikma scored six points as the Sonics scored eight unanswered points in the final two and a half minutes of the second quarter to gain a 66-50 halftime lead.

Over the first 4:16 of the second half, Seattle out-scored the Rockets 15-2 to take an 81-52 lead with 7:44 to go in the quarter. After that, Houston gradually closed the gap but never seriously threatened.

Forward Tom Chambers added 23 points for Seattle, while rookie center Ralph Sampson led Houston with 24 points despite some foul trouble. Guard Allen Leavell, who made some spectacular penetrating baskets, added 20 points for the Rockets.

Both teams shot well, but Seattle outmuscled Houston on the boards in the first half for a 22-7 rebounding edge. Sampson, among the league's leading rebounders, finished with four, while teammate Rodney McCray grabbed nine.

Lakers roll, 118-113

By The Associated Press

The Los Angeles Lakers left Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Jamaal Wilkes at home, although the Portland Trail Blazers didn't notice much difference.

James Worthy scored a career-high 37 points as the visiting Lakers beat Portland 118-113 Sunday to clinch their third straight Pacific Division title.

With Abdul-Jabbar suffering from a bruise near his left eye and Wilkes missing his third straight game because of a virus, the Lakers got the ball inside to Worthy.

Portland, second in the Pacific with a 47-31 record, raced to a 72-55 lead at halftime, but then ran into problems against the Lakers, 53-25.

Earvin "Magic" Johnson, Bob McAdoo and Mitch Kupchak, who started in place of Abdul-Jabbar, ignited a 20-4 streak over a 6½-minute span as the Lakers pulled within 78-75 with 5:48 left in the third quarter.

Johnson had 25 points, 12 assists and eight rebounds for the depleted Lakers.

Celtics 117, Bulls 110

Larry Bird scored 30 points and Kevin McHale added 24 as the Celtics never trailed in Boston.

The Celtics led by 20 points late in the first half before Chicago pulled within 105-99 with four minutes left.

Nets 124, Cavaliers 97

Darryl Dawkins scored 17 points and was one of eight New Jersey players to hit for double figures as Cleveland lost its 15th straight game on the road.

Suns 126, Nuggets 121

The teams both entered the game with records of 38-41, tied for sixth spot in the Western Conference playoff standings. Eight teams from the division make the playoffs.

Andy Bean

Bean captures GGO; points for Masters

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Andy Bean, having won a tournament for the first time in two years, had a simple answer to the question.

Are you playing well enough to win the Masters, he was asked.

"Yes," he said, a big smile on his face.

It was some time before he got back to the subject, discussing instead his two-stroke victory Sunday over George Archer in the Greater Greensboro Open, the ninth victory of Bean's PGA Tour career and his first since the 1982 Doral-Eastern Open.

"I finally got it over with," he said of that long drought.

"Now, let's talk about Augusta (site of the Masters which begins Thursday).

"I've definitely got my sights set on next week's tournament.

"I'm driving the ball good. I'm hitting my irons very, very good. I'm putting good. Things are going great for me.

"Winning a major would do a lot for your confidence. And that's definitely what most of this game is — confidence. When you think you're going to play good, usually you do play good."

That confidence began building over the last 18 holes at the Forest Oaks Country Club, which he played in 2-under-par 70 in chilly weather under threatening skies.

Although never headed, a birdie by the 44-year-old Archer on the 10th put them in a tie.

"I felt confident," Bean said. "I was determined to make a couple of birdies."

And he did, taking the lead alone with a 10-12 footer on the 13th, and then stretching it out with a 15-footer from the fringe on the 16th. He parred home for a 280 total, eight under.

"I had a chance, but it was not to be," said Archer, who missed several putts in the 10-12 foot range coming home.

Archer, a two-time winner of this old event and a former Masters champion, finished with a no-bogey 69 and second alone at 282. He won $43,200 to Bean's $72,000.

Ben Crenshaw came out of the pack with a 67 that lifted him into a tie for third at 285. Also at that figure were Jack Renner, Scott Simpson, Buddy Gardner and Fred Couples, the winner of last week's Tournament Players Championship. Simpson and Couples had 71s, Renner 72 and Gardner 73.

Bean admitted there was frustration and disappointment in the two-year non-winning string,'which was touched off by wrist and shoulder injuries.

"I could have won maybe four tournaments last year, and a couple this year. I was right there, but I didn't finish there," he said.

"But I figured if I kept knocking on the door, sooner or later it would open. And I had a feeling that when it opened, it would open big.

Isles rally; force fifth game

By The Associated Press

John Tonelli triggered a four-goal burst in the third period as the New York Islanders, just 20 minutes away from seeing their four-year domination of the National Hockey League end, rallied to beat the New York Rangers 4-1 Sunday night and even their Stanley Cup playoff series at two games apiece.

The deciding fifth game of the Patrick Divison semifinal round will be Tuesday night at the Islanders' Nassau Coliseum.

The host Rangers, on a goal by Pierre Larouche at 5:26 of the middle period, led 1-0 going into the third period. But the Islanders, who have won an NHL-record 16 straight playoff series and are seeking to become the only team other than the 1956-60 Montreal Canadiens to win five consecutive Stanley Cups, came back.

Tonelli converted a mishandled puck in front of the Rangers' net into the tying goal 49 seconds into the final period.

At 11:04, Brent Sutter backhanded a rebound for the 2-1 Islander lead. The Rangers lost their captain, defenseman Barry Beck, for the remainder of the playoffs with a separated left shoulder on the play. Beck was checked into the boards by rookie Pat Flatley, skated a few steps and then collapsed to the ice just before Sutter scored.

"There was no doubt in my mind that we would do it, that we wouldn't lose," said Sutter.

Tuesday night's winner will face the Washington Capitals, who completed a three-game sweep of Philadelphia on Saturday night in the other Patrick semifinal.

Jorgen Pettersson scored his third goal of the game at 2:42 of overtime to lift St. Louis to a 3-2 victory over the Detroit Red Wings as the Blues won the Norris Division semifinal series three games to one.

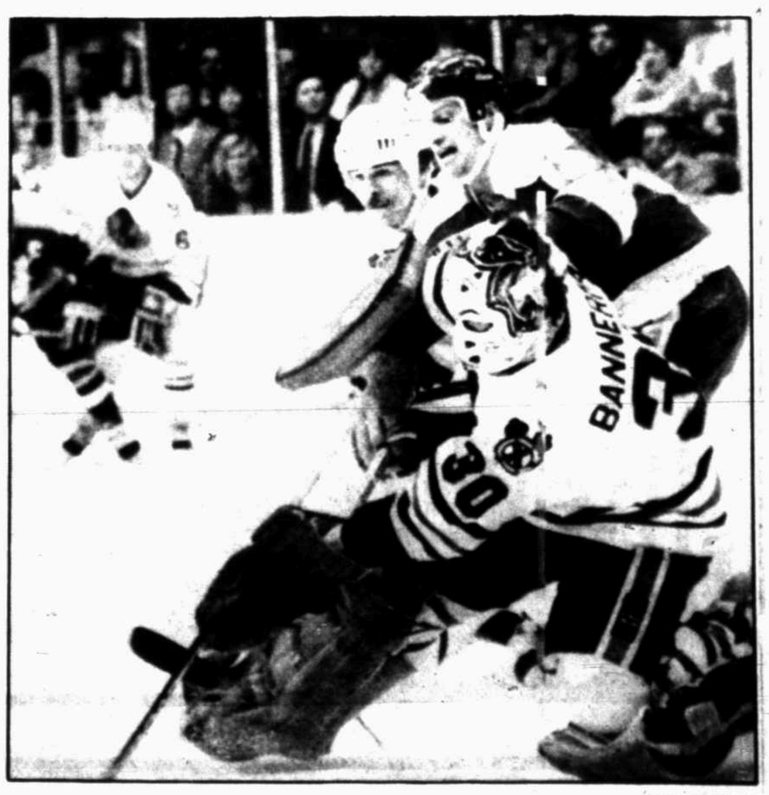

It was the second overtime victory in as many nights in Detroit for the Blues, who downed the Red Wings 4-3 in two extra periods Saturday night.

The Blues will face the winner of the Minnesota North Stars-Chicago series, which is tied at two games apiece after the Black Hawks won 4-3 Sunday night.

Center Troy Murray split the Minnesota defense and scored with 5:51 left to lift host Chicago.

The deciding fifth game will be Tuesday night in Minnesota.

Denny homers thrice as UT slams TCU

From Wire Reports

FORT WORTH - David Denny slugged three home runs, including a grand slam, to lead No. 2-ranked Texas to a 16-8 Southwest Conference baseball victory over Texas Christian on Sunday.

The home runs tied the an SWC record for the most by an individual in a single game and accounted for seven Longhorn runs.

Denny's grand slam came in the top of the ninth off TCU's sixth pitcher of the game, Mickey Kazmierski. It was the fifth for the Longhorns, who also got solo and two-run shots from Denny and two-run homers from Jamie Doughty and Scott Vondemkamp.

The Frogs, who had jumped out to a 5-0 lead by the third, got an eighth-inning, two-run home run from Mike Ramsey.

Longhorn reliever Lanny Hengst, 5-1, got the win. Kight Higgins recorded the loss in relief for TCU.

Texas, the NCAA defending champ, now 40-9 overall and 6-2 in the SWC, moves into a tie with Texas A&M for the conference lead. TCU dropped to 17-13 and 4-8.

Texas Tech 8-10, Houston 6-5

LUBBOCK - Wes McKenzie's three-run double in the opener and Todd Howey's second home run of the day in the nightcap helped Texas Tech sweep a doubleheader with Houston, 8-6 and 10-5.

John Grimes slugged a home run in the third inning of the opener, and Howey had his first round-trip of the day in the fifth.

Grimes was intentionally walked in the fifth to load the bases and McKenzie responded with his three-RBI double off the left field wall, capping a five-run rally and making the score 8-4. Houston came back with two runs in the sixth.

Mark Puckett, 5-0, came on in the second to scatter six hits and take the win. Cougar starter Stuart Stauffacher, 2-2, took the loss.

In game two, Tech got three home runs in three innings from Howey, Jim Sullivan and McKenzie, to take a 7-0 lead. Tech added three more runs in the sixth.

Rod Simon, 3-2, went all the way for Tech, scattering seven hits. Starter Ed Clark, 4-5, recorded the loss for Houston, which fell to 24-19 overall and 1-11 in the SWC.

Tech is now 27-15 and 6-6.

Baylor 2, Rice 1

WACO - Kenneth Patterson's two-run triple gave Baylor a 2-1 win over Rice.

Freshman Craig Gummelt, 3-1, scattered four hits in going the distance for Baylor. Tim Englund, 5-2, also went the distance for Baylor and held the Bears hitless for 5-2/3 innings, until Ronnie King singled in the sixth. Brad Meyer then singled, and Patterson tripled to score the two runs.

Rice's lone run came in the seventh when Carl Mikeska scored on Jeff Tousa's ground out.

Baylor is now 22-16 over all, 6-6 in the SWC. Rice is now 28-8 and 7-5.

Stars startle Wranglers

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

On paper, George Allen's Arizona Wranglers look like one of the United States Football League's top teams. But the 61-year-old Allen has been around long enough to know that what looks good on paper doesn't mean much on the football fields.

The Wranglers, favored to walk away with the USFL Pacific Division, lost their fourth game in seven starts Sunday, blowing a 21-6 halftime lead to drop a 22-21 decision to the Philadelphia Stars on Chuck Fusina's 11-yard touchdown pass to Willie Collier with 1:40 left.

"I can't think of a loss over the years that was more disheartening and devastating as this one," said Wrangler Coach Allen. "It's like a morgue in this locker room. We worked hard all week for this game. It's wasted when you don't win.

Philadelphia's win, achieved without injured star running back Kelvin Bryant, was its fourth straight and improved its record to 6-1. That kept the Stars tied for first in the Atlantic Division with the New Jersey Generals, who topped the Memphis Showboats 35-10.

In USFL games played Saturday, Oklahoma handed defending champion Michigan its first loss in 12 games going back to last year, 20-17 on Efren Herrera's a 32-yard field goal on the final play of the game; the Chicago Blitz beat the San Antonio Gunslingers 16-10 on Vince Evans overtime touchdown pass; the Birmingham Stallions topped the Jacksonville Bulls 24-17 on Joe Cribbs' 11-yard TD run with 2:17 left, and the Tampa Bay Bandits trounced the winless Oakland Invaders 24-0.

Los Angeles is at Denver and Washington at Houston on Monday night.

In Tempe, Philadelphia Coach Jim Mora was as ecstatic as Allen was dejected about a turn of events that saw Arizona's veteran quarterback Greg Landry fumble twice in the closing minutes.

"It was particularly satisfying without Kelvin," Mora said of playing without Bryant, last year's USFL Most Valuable Player, out with an injured knee. "I told our guys why they won — because this team has great character. They just don't know when to quit. We refused to lay down."

Breakers 27, Maulers 24

Glenn Carano, who sat on the Dallas Cowboy bench for six years, had his best day as a pro, completing 35 of 48 passes for 388 yards for Pittsburgh. But that wasn't enough as another former National Football League benchwarmer, Johnnie Walton, engineered two late drives that allowed Tim Mazzetti's 41-yard field goal with 12 seconds left to win it.

The Maulers led 24-17 with 2:46 left. But Walton marched New Orleans 80 yards in 62 seconds, passing 24 yards to Charlie Smith for the tying touchdown. Then, after a Pittsburgh punt, he took just five plays to drive the Breakers 40 yards to the Mauler 24 to set up Mazzetti's kick.

Carano was intercepted three times by a patched-up New Orleans secondary.

"I made a couple of bad decisions when I should have audiblized," he said.

A heralded battle between Mike Rozier of Pittsburgh and Marcus Dupree of New Orleans never materialized:Rozier got 45 yards on 13 carries and also caught seven passes for 23 yards.

Dupree had 41 yards in 10 carries and sat out most of the second half with a persistent hamstring problem.

Generals 35, Showboats 10

New Jersey kept pace with Philadelphia as Brian Sipe fired three touchdown passes and fullback Maurice Carthon ran for 104 yards and one touchdown in the absence of Herschel Walker, out with a shoulder injury.

Sipe completed 13 of 16 passes for 193 yards as the Generals completely controlled the game against 2-5 Memphis. He hit Clarence Collins for a nine-yard TD, Tom McConnaughey from 30, and connected with tight end Jeff Spek on a 59-yard play when the ball deflected off Collins and into Spek's hands. end zone.

Rookie takes LPGA Dinah Shore

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Rookies are supposed to wilt under pressure. Apparently Juli Inkster hasn't been on the LPGA tour long enough to learn that.

The 23-year-old former amateur golf star, who joined the LPGA circuit last August, charged into a tie with veteran Pat Bradley on the final hole of regulation, then won the first playoff hole Sunday to capture the women's richest event, the $400,000 Nabisco Dinah Shore.

Bradley, 33, winner of 13 titles since joining the tour in 1974, appeared to feel the pressure. She began spraying her drives on the final holes of regulation, then drove into the trees on the playoff hole.

After Bradley took four shots to reach the green and made a 10-footer to salvage a bogey, Inkster made her 2-foot putt to collect the $55,000 winner's prize.

Inkster, who began the day two shots behind leaders Bradley, JoAnne Carner and Dale Eggeling, carded a closing 68, 4-under-par over the Mission Hills Country Club course.

She and Bradley, who shot a final-round 72, finished at 8-under-par 280. Eggeling, with a 72, was third at 282, with Beth Daniel pulling into fourth with a 69.

Carner struggled to a 74 to wind up tied for fifth with Sally Little.

Inkster said she was in her element during the final holes.

"I felt the pressure, but I get myself psyched up under pressure," said Inkster, who won three consecutive women's U.S. Amateur championships ending in 1982.

"I enjoy it and I think that's what golf's all about. I wouldn't be out here if I didn't like pressure."

Bradley, on the other hand, said, "In the last few holes I got a little anxious out there. I felt my swing getting a little quick."

Bradley got lucky on the final hole of regulation. She hooked her drive badly, but the ball hit a tree and bounced back onto the fairway and she wound up with a par and a share of the lead. However, her luck finally ran out.

"Sometimes the breaks just catch up with you and they did on the playoff hole," she said.

Inkster, recalling Bradley's costly tee shot on the playoff hole, said, "I couldn't believe she hit her drive into the trees. I hit a good shot, so I was pretty confident.

"I felt down the stretch that I had the momentum. I felt she'd have to beat me. Pat's a great player and I'm happy to be able to beat her."

Inkster, playing in the threesome ahead of Bradley, had applied the pressure when she made a 3-foot birdie putt on the final hole of regulation to move into the tie at 8-under.

Trip can delay tax pain

WASHINGTON (AP) — When it comes to filing their federal tax returns, some people go to great lengths — Canada, Europe, the Bahamas — to delay the inevitable.

If the April 16 deadline approaches and you still haven't filed, you can get an extension to June 15 by proving you were not in the United States or Puerto Rico on the deadline. If you and your spouse file a joint return, only one need be abroad to meet the test.

"It's legal to do that but you can get the same result by making a formal request for an extension," explained Internal Revenue Service spokesman Larry Batdorf. That extension, good until Aug. 15, is obtained simply by filing Form 4868 by April 16.

There is one major difference. If you file 4868, you must estimate what you owe and send a check with the application for extension. Otherwise, you may be liable for a penalty for late payment.

But if you leave the country, you don't have to pay an estimated tax, although you will have to pay interest from April 15 until you file your return.

Many taxpayers who are filing the one-page Form 1040EZ are delaying their refunds by failing to use the pre-addressed mailing label provided with the form, the IRS says. The form and mailing label are designed to be "read" by a scanning device, much like that used in supermarkets to record the price of food at the checkout. Without the label, the return has to be processed manually.

If the label is incorrect, the IRS says, it should be changed neatly and attached to the return.

The IRS expects about 97 million couples and individuals to file returns this year, but the number so far is still behind last year's pace, when about 95.3 million returns came in. Through March 30, the latest tabulation, the IRS had received 55.2 million returns, compared with 56.8 million during the same period a year ago.

Of the 40 million returns that the IRS had processed, 30.5 million qualified for refunds. Those refunds averaged $741, compared with $714 during that period in 1983.

Through March 30, 1,340 filers had responded to a suggestion by IRS Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. and mailed checks to reduce the national debt. Those contributions ranged from one cent to $25,000 and totaled $138,167. The national debt barely noticed; at last count it was $1.49 trillion.

H. Connely Plunkett of Jackson, Miss., claimed to be a professional mud racer and truck puller — undertakings that earned him $1,914 from 1976 through 1978. But he took deductions for more than $47,000 of expenses in carrying on those trades. The IRS rejected the deductions, saying he was not mud racing and truck pulling with the motive of making a profit.

Plunkett sued the IRS in Tax Court and now has won a partially sympathetic ear. The court ruled that his truck pulling was a legitimate effort to turn a profit but his mud racing was not.

Even if Plunkett had won every mud race he entered, wrote Judge William A. Goffe, "his total winnings would have been significantly less than his attendant expenses."

But truck pulling — that's another story. "Through his diligence and devotion of large amounts of time and effort, petitioner (Plunkett) was ultimately ranked 35th in the nation by Truck-O-Rama, a national truck-pulling promoter," the court noted. The profit potential in truck pulling is far greater than in mud racing, Goffe added; there are bigger purses, more spectators, fewer crashes.

While Plunkett didn't make an immediate profit, the judge wrote, he "had a bona fide objective of making a profit when he began to compete."

Mud racing, Goffe explained, involves "the racing of four-wheel-drive vehicles through specially built mudholes." Truck pulling involves modified vehicles pulling a weighted sled along a runway.

A business counseling firm, General Business Services, has a recommendation for reducing the paperwork burden on Americans: require individuals to file tax returns only every other year. Those with Social Security numbers ending in an odd digit would file in odd-numbered years; evens would file in even years.

"Tax reporting is the largest single element in the paperwork burden, the organization's president, Bernard S. Browning, said in a letter to Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan.

The treasury would continue getting most of its money through the tax withholding system, he added. On the other hand, many of the three-quarters of taxpayers who receive refunds each year would have to wait longer to get their money back.

California oil spill not dangerous

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Globs of oil washed up along a three-mile stretch of beach Sunday, but officials said damage was minimal after 1,500 gallons of oil leaked from an offshore platform in one of three unrelated fuel spills.

With two other spills in Los Angeles Harbor on Saturday, Southern California's coastal waters were coated with at least 5,750 gallons of goo.

Beachgoers could be seen scraping tar balls off their feet Sunday and two sea lions washed up dead, their bodies spotted with oil, on the shoreline about 50 miles south of Los Angeles.

"Although these are not major spills, we do not get spills of this size occurring three times in one day," said Coast Guard Lt. Noris Turner.

Inspectors from the Coast Guard, the state Department of Fish and Game and Aminoil USA Inc. found no serious environmental damage to Bolsa Chica State Beach after Saturday's spill from a platform about a mile offshore.

Dollar falls; Gold up in early trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against all major currencies in early trading today. Gold bullion prices were up.

European dealers said the dollar's drop was traced to an unexpectedly small half-point rise Friday in the U.S. Federal Reserve discount rates.

Dealers in Frankfurt said they had expected a rise to 9.5 percent but instead the Federal Reserve raised its discount rate to 9 percent. Higher interest rates make the dollar more attractive to investors.

–2.6155 West German marks, down from 2.6180.

–2.1715 Swiss francs, down from 2.1745.

–8.04625 French francs, down from 8.0545.

–2.9495 Dutch guilders, down from 2.9530.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Royal group will go to stockholders

NEW YORK (AP) — Royal Dutch-Shell Group of Companies says it will go directly to Shell Oil Co. stockholders with its $5.2 billion offer for the 30.5 percent of Shell stock it does not already own after Shell's directors rejected the offer as "inadequate."

In turning down the offer of $55 a share for 94.5 million shares of common stock, Shell's board noted Thursday that an outside directors' committee viewed $75 a share as the appropriate price, one that would raise the value of the deal to $7.1 billion.

Royal Dutch-Shell appeared to rule out any bargaining, saying: "No further discussions with Shell Oil Co. with respect to the proposed acquisition are contemplated."

The impasse left Shell's shareholders in "a sort of individual anguish," said Sanford Margoshes, an oil analyst at Shearson-American Express Inc.

Because Royal Dutch-Shell already holds a clear controlling interest in Shell, the eighth-largest U.S. oil company, "there is absolutely no alternate buyer" that could emerge with an improved offer, Margoshes said.

Mutual funds rises to highest level

NEW YORK (AP) — Assets of the nation's 328 money market mutual funds rose $460.6 million in the latest week, climbing to their highest level in 11 months, the Investment Company Institute says.

The increase, to $171.7 billion in the week ended Wednesday, followed a $360 million rise in the funds' assets the previous week and reached the highest level since April 27, 1983, the Washington-based mutual fund trade group said Thursday.

It was the 11th increase in the last 12 weeks, bringing the gains for that period to $8.06 billion.

The funds' assets hit a record high $232.6 billion in the week ended Dec. 1, 1982, but then quickly lost ground to competition from insured money-market deposit accounts that commercial banks and savings institutions began offering in mid-December 1982. A historic stock market rally also drew investments out of the funds and into stocks.

But with interest rates rising lately, and stocks performing sluggishly, the funds have been staging a comeback.

Ford chief to get more than $1.4 million

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. says its chairman, Philip Caldwell, will receive more than $1.4 million for his work in 1983 — a bonus of $900,000 and a salary of $520,534.

Ford made a record profit last year of $1.87 billion after three consecutive years of heavy losses during which executive bonuses were not paid.

Also, the statement Friday said Caldwell last year exercised accumulated stock options totaling $5.9 million in net pre-tax value.

Ford President Donald Petersen, 57, made a salary for 1983 of $413,256 with a bonus of $700,000.

The bonus amounts were much bigger than average for U.S. executives, but were not records.

The disclosures were made in the annual proxy statement to stockholders. Ford also said former Texas Gov. John Connnally was one of two new nominees to the board of directors.

The bonus amounts likely will be an issue this summer when Ford sits down at the bargaining table with the United Auto Workers union. Its members gave up billions of dollars in wage-and-benefit increases in 1982 during the height of the U.S. auto sales slump.

Industry using 10 percent less energy

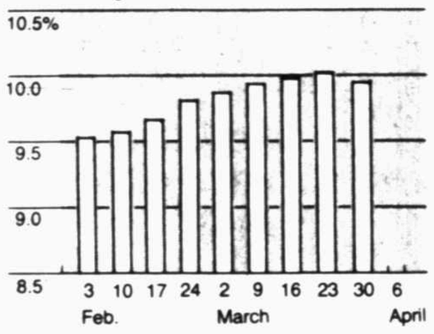

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Energy conservation is not only having an impact on the homeowner, but industry also has learned to conserve.

Today, manufacturers are using 10 percent less energy to produce a ton of steel than they did in 1972, 19 percent less to produce a ton of cement, and 23 percent less energy to produce a gallon of gasoline, according to Phillips Petroleum.

Overall, the U.S. real gross national product has grown 25 percent since 1972, but energy use has remained practically unchanged while oil use is down 7 percent.

Damson Oil, Dorchester Gas Corp. stock buy completed

NEW YORK (AP) — Damson Oil Corp. said today it has purchased approximately 16.1 million shares of common stock of Dorchester Gas Corp. for $361.6 million, giving it 94.1 percent of Dorchester's outstanding stock.

Identity of man killed by police still unknown

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A man killed by police after he wounded two airport security guards was trying to get to a doorway leading to runways at McCarran International Airport, authorities said.

"We don't know if the suspect might have been trying to hijack a flight, if he was a wanted subject or what," said a police spokesman who would not give his name. The man was carrying a passport, but authorities were unable to immediately verify his identity.

The man was halted when he tripped a metal detector at a boarding area for Pacific Southwest Airlines around 7 a.m. Sunday. He wounded one unarmed guard, ran for the door, then twice shot another guard who gave chase, police said. Both guards were in stable condition.

Alarm mistaken for show

BOSTON (AP) — One of more than 100 guests evacuated during a motel fire said he'd mistaken the beeping of the fire alarm for part of a television broadcast on the flight of the space shuttle.

The two-alarm fire Sunday filled all seven floors of the Howard Johnson's Motor Lodge near Kenmore Square with dense smoke and caused an estimated $50,000 worth of damage. No injuries were reported.

"I was watching the space shuttle on TV, and I kept hearing this beep, beep, beep," said John Wilson, a Chicago businessman. "I thought it was part of the shuttle broadcast." Wilson said he didn't realize his mistake until he shut off the television.

Graves give way to condos

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — An anthropology professor has criticized the lack of state laws to stop a developer from paving over what is believed to be the city's first cemetery.

Excavating and studying the recently unearthed graves, dating back to 1725, could reveal much about the early residents of New Orleans, said J. Richard Shenkel of the University of New Orleans.

Vesta Construction Co. is building condominiums at the site. Calls to its offices were unanswered over the weekend.

Kathleen Byrd, head of the state division of archaeology, said Sunday she is powerless to halt the construction, but will meet with the developer to discuss the matter anyway.

Inmate population drops, but prisons remain crowded

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's prisons ended 1983 with a record 438,830 inmates, 10 percent over capacity, despite a sharp drop in the growth of inmate populations, a jail cell construction boom and expanded early release programs.

In an annual report, the Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Statistics said Sunday the state and federal prison population grew by 24,468 during the year, a 5.9 percent increase compared to the record 12.2 percent increase in 1981 and the 12 percent increase in 1982.

The slowdown in growth, all accomplished at the state level, resulted from the aging of much of the post-World War II baby boom generation past the prison-prone ages of 20 to 29 and from the expansion of early release programs, often under court pressure, to relieve crowding.

In all, 15 states reported 21,420 prisoners received early releases in 1983 because of crowding.

In addition, the bureau said nearly 42,000 beds were added to prisons in 1981 and 1982. And in 1982, another 28,000 beds were under construction and more than 73,000 were planned in 49 states.

But the bureau said the 1983 inmate increase suggests that 500 new beds need to be added each week just to accommodate new inmates. In 1983, state systems reported more than $900 million in construction outlays and about $2.25 billion in bonds and other revenue-raising mechanisms to support capital improvements.

Nevertheless, only nine states were below capacity: Georgia at 99 percent, Kentucky at 95 percent, Minnesota at 90 percent, Missouri at 91 percent, North Carolina at 95 percent, North Dakota at 87 percent, Rhode Island at 98 percent, Texas at 91 percent and Vermont at 93 percent. The American Correctional Association recommends a population at 90 percent of capacity.

The bureau said 10 percent of all inmates were housed in prisons built before 1875, and 18 states held almost 8,100 sentenced prisoners in local jails because of crowding at prisons.

The bureau attributed the prison population explosion that began in the early 1970s to the arrival of the post-World War II baby boom generation to the prison prone ages and to stiffer sentencing and parole laws.

That generation is now moving past those ages, and in the last two years there has been a decline in the crime rate.

Congress ready to address record deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — After months of decrying the record federal deficit, Congress is preparing to do something about it by raising taxes and cutting spending.

The Senate was opening debate today on a measure to raise taxes by $48 billion through Sept. 30, 1987, and reduce spending by $14.8 billion. Committees are putting together legislation that would make further cuts, especially in the growth of defense spending.

The House will consider a $49 billion tax increase on Wednesday and soon afterward is expected to vote on a package of spending cuts.

Meanwhile, the Senate Budget Committee is writing a target budget for fiscal 1985, the 12 months beginning next Oct. 1. That nonbinding outline is expected for the first time to give the government authority to spend more than $1 trillion in a single year, just as the version passed by the House last week did.

Congressional leaders had hoped to complete action on all the budget and deficit-reduction proposals before taking a week off for Easter, but now it appears that final action by Memorial Day would be a better bet. The House and Senate plan to adjourn no later than the close of business Friday and to return on April 23.

The federal deficit, which is expected to total about $175 billion this year, is clearly the No. 1 political issue in Congress at the moment, chiefly because of fears about rising interest rates. Many economists say there is a direct connection between the large deficit and investors' uncertainty that again threatens to push up the cost of borrowing and ignite a new round of inflation.

President Reagan has joined members of Congress in calling for lower deficits, but the effort to reduce the red ink was slowed by the administration's oft-stated opposition to higher taxes as a solution. The president eventually agreed with Senate Republican leaders on a combination of spending cuts and tax increases that would cut the deficit by about $150 billion in the 1985-1987 period.

Now, with the Senate Budget Committee writing its own blueprint for 1985, there is no assurance the Reagan compromise will be accepted by the Senate.

But one thing is for certain in this election year: Congress is unlikely to pass any tax increase that has a significant effect on a large number of taxpayers.

The Senate and House tax bills would extend the 3 percent telephone service tax due to expire at the end of 1985. They would raise the tax on liquor. They would delay or repeal a new tax break for savers and make it more difficult to save taxes by averaging earnings from an extra-good year against previous years.

But mostly, the two bills would crack down on tax provisions that often provide unintended benefits to upper-income investors; delay some new tax breaks for business; reduce tax advantages for investment in real estate.

A horseshoe-shaped crater is formed by the lava streaming from Mauna Loa Saturday on the big island of Hawaii. The volcano is still erupting after 15 days.

Molten rock continues to flow from Mauna Loa

VOLCANO, Hawaii (AP) — Molten rock flowed from Mauna Loa at the rate of 1 million cubic meters per hour while scientists reported that lava was bubbling below the surface at neighboring Kilauea.

Lava spilling out of a 60-foot-high spatter cone at Mauna Loa's 9,400-foot level had sent three successive major flows to within a few miles of Hilo, the state's second-largest city, since the eruption began March 25.

But all three flows have grown stagnant as lava spread out over other areas of the volcano's eastern flank, Bobby Camara, a naturalist with the Hawaii Volcanoes National Park, said Sunday.

Lava spilling from the spatter cone was overflowing a channel between the 7,500-foot and 6,900-foot level, while ponding continued at a lava delta about 400 feet farther down the slope of the world's largest active volcano, Camara said.

Another vent near the cone reactived Sunday morning, fountaining lava 130 feet into the air to feed "a multitude of flows" that moved down to the volcano's 8,300-foot level by nightfall, he said.

Meanwhile, vulcanologists continued to keep watch on neighboring Kilauea, the world's most active volcano, which has passed through a number of phases of an eruption that began Jan. 3, 1983.

Glowing lava was seen Sunday about 80 feet below the surface of spatter cone that has been the site of many recent volcanic outbursts, Camara said.

The two volcanoes were in simultaneous eruption for the first time in 116 years when Kilauea fountained for 22 hours on March 30.

While the Mauna Loa eruption has only damaged a small power line, Kilauea has caused more than $4 million damage to the remote subdivision of Royal Gardens.

Yes, Parties Are Possible When Cutting Back On Salt!

Until lately, it has been a challenge to plan a low-salt menu suitable for entertaining guests. Let's face it, many low sodium products are tasteless. That does nothing to change the fact that more than 40 percent of your guests probably are watching their salt intake, or so says the U.S. Food and Drug Administration about the American population.

Fortunately, a new product has been introduced -- one with Italian gusto that makes up for no added salt. It is no salt added spaghetti sauce with a masterful blending of Italian herbs and spices that opens the door to low sodium entertaining. Here, then, is a low-salt Italian recipe to build a party around.

Italian food implies Italian flair and time honored traditions. Antipasto is one. Sometimes limited in definition to mean one type of appetizer with lettuce and cold Italian meats and cheeses, in Italy "antipasti" (plural of antipasto) encompasses all that comes "before the pasta." Entering a restaurant in Italy, often one finds a linen covered table laden with an array of antipasti.

By arranging an antipasti table in your home and expanding the number of selections, you can offer guests a complete meal buffet style. Succulent Polpettine al Sugo, or tiny morsels of ground beef and water chestnuts in red sauce are a substantial dish. These meatballs are formed with ground beef, crunchy water chestnuts, bread crumbs, onion and garlic, that are moistened with a rich no salt added spaghetti sauce. Once the "polpettine" are browned, they are simmered in more of the "sugo" or sauce for a delicious serve-it-yourself dish with toothpicks.

Polpettine Al Sugo

1½ pounds ground beef
1 jar (15¼ ounces) Prego No Salt Added Spaghetti Sauce
⅔ cup fresh bread crumbs
½ cup chopped onion
½ cup chopped water chestnuts
2 large garlic cloves, minced
2 tablespoons salad oil

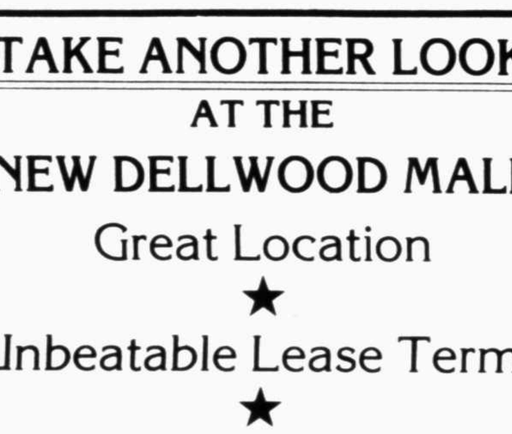

1. In large bowl combine beef, ¼ cup spaghetti sauce, bread crumbs, onion, water chestnuts and garlic.
2. With hands form the ground beef mixture into evenly shaped 1-inch meatballs
3. In 10-inch skillet over medium heat, in hot oil, cook meatballs. Turn with a spoon until well browned on all sides. Spoon off fat.
4. Pour remaining spaghetti sauce over meatballs. Heat to boiling. Cover; reduce heat to low, simmer 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Makes 32 Meatballs

Earth-bound engineers steady gyrating satellite

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — With a dramatic series of radio commands, engineers on Earth steadied the gyrating Solar Max today, enabling Challenger's crew to make a new attempt Tuesday to snare the crippled satellite with the shuttle's robot arm and haul it in for repair.

"We've decided not to do it today; we'll wait 'til tomorrow," Mission Control radioed, leaving the five astronauts with a leisurely schedule today — taking pictures and conducting medical and scientific experiments.

Astronaut James van Hoften took a look at a box full of 3,300 honeybees and counted about a dozen dead ones. The survivors, he said, appeared to be building a good honeycomb in their weightless world.

Spacewalker George Nelson failed in an attempt to capture the Solar Max on Sunday, and experts on the ground worked feverishly to salvage the world's first satellite rescue mission. They succeeded so well in stabilizing Solar Max that they now have to start it spinning slowly again to enhance chances of grabbing it.

That meant Commander Robert Crippen and his crew could not make an attempt today. Instead Mission Control radioed instructions for re-rendezvousing with their target on Tuesday.

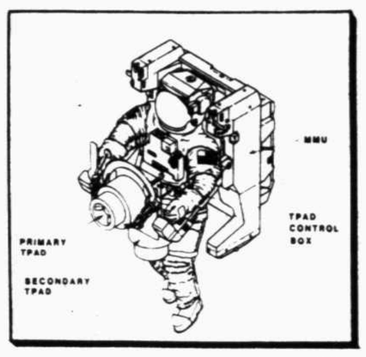

If the capture is successful, the astronauts will extend their flight an extra day, until Friday, providing a full day to repair the satellite on Wednesday and for the ground to check it out on Thursday before it is released.

After engineers at Goddard Space Flight Center in Maryland succeeded in stopping the satellite from wobbling in all three axes — roll, up-down and left-right — Mission Control determined that when Challenger approached, the docking pin to be snagged by the arm would be on the opposite side of the satellite.

"To get in position would require a flyaround, and that would cost valuable fuel," capsule communicator Guy Gardner told Crippen. "So we've decided to reload the Solar Max computers and start it spinning slowly at one-half degree per second."

He said this "will guarantee the grapple fixture would come around at some reachable point and provide more time and opportunities for grappling it."

The spin rate could not be established in time for an attempt today, he said, and told the crew to stand off for 24 hours at a distance of about 50 miles from Solar Max and to devote the day to experiments and system checks.

AP Laserphoto

The trunnion pin adapter, the socket-like receptacle labeled primary TPAD, is the unit that failed to close on the Solar Max trunnion pin. Mission specialist George Nelson maneuvered out to the satellite and attempted to connect, but failed.

Mission Control woke the five astronauts just after midnight and told them to be ready to try the rescue later today, but said it might be delayed a day.

"We have some good news for you; the Solar Max rates are coming under control," Mission Control told Crippen at the astronaut wakeup call. "The latest we have is it has zero rates in all axes and is pointed at the sun.".

"That's dandy," Crippen replied. Then he congratulated the engineers at Goddard who had devised the wobble-stopping commands.

When Challenger first approached the 18-foot-tall satellite on Sunday, it was rolling slightly at about one revolution every six minutes — the rate that will be restored for Tuesday's effort.

Nelson, propelled by a rocket-powered jet-pack, cast off from the shuttle Sunday and scooted untethered 200 feet over to the satellite. He tried to attach himself with a spring-loaded device to a pin on the spacecraft to try to stop the spinning observatory so it could be snared by the arm. But the device would not latch.

"I bounced right out," Nelson reported. "I hit the thing square on. I bounced out and I went back in and I hit it again and it didn't snap either time."

Nelson then flew slowly over to the satellite's solar panels and tried to steady Solar Max by grabbing it and using the jetpack for thrust.

Mondale rejects 'front-runner' label

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) — Walter Mondale enjoys a large delegate lead and has run well in recent primaries and caucuses, but the last thing he wants in the Democratic nomination fight is to get tagged again with the label "front-runner."

"I think the last several weeks have taught me the lesson of humility and I don't intend to unlearn that lesson," he says, referring to Gary Hart's early string of victories in primary and caucus states.

"Just after I've been nominated and the gavel hits the lectern (at the Democratic National Convention) I think I'll be the front-runner," he told reporters recently.

Humility aside, Mondale's aides say being viewed as front-runner is of little use politically, and losing it has made Mondale into a more appealing campaigner.

"The label doesn't do a thing for us," says press secretary Maxine Isaacs. "There's no reason why we should accept it voluntarily. I don't think it helped us before."

Mondale campaigned for 14 months as the front-runner in the Democratic presidential race, but that was before Gary Hart defeated him in the first primary, on Feb. 28 in New Hampshire.

Hart quickly scored other successes, but Mondale began a comeback that took hold beginning in mid-March.

Since then, he has scored primary wins in two big states, New York and Illinois, as well as Puerto Rico, and won caucuses in six states. Hart has won the Connecticut primary and caucuses in Montana in the same time. He also won the non-binding Wisconsin primary vote but lost the caucuses that determined distribution of the state's delegates.

Moreover, Mondale's solid wins in the New York primary last Tuesday and his success in the Wisconsin caucuses on Saturday give him 899.8 delegates, compared with 554 for Hart and 141.2 for the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

It takes 1,967 delegates to win the nomination, and that means Hart must win more than 70 perent of the delegates still be be selected in order to be assured of the nomination.

But James Johnson, Mondale's campaign chairman, says, "The moment you sit back and say the arithmetic is with us, it is very bad psychology..."

A Hart victory in Pennsylvania on Tuesday and later in other states, he says, could create the impression of a candidate who is growing in strength, and that could overcome a delegate shortage at the convention.

Hart: Reagan would step up cuts in social programs

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Pressing his campaign theme that he is the Democrat with the best chance to beat President Reagan in November, Gary Hart is predicting that if re-elected Reagan would call for far deeper cuts in many social programs.

Speaking to a predominantly black audience Sunday night at the Harry Hosier United Methodist Church, Hart described Reagan as a man "who doesn't believe in the things we believe in."

"He does not believe in civil rights, he does not believe in equal opportunity, and he does not believe in the federal government playing a role in breaking down barriers," Hart said of Reagan.

He said that for Democratic voters the most important question is "which of us has the best chance to defeat Ronald Reagan."

Entering his last full day of campaigning before the Pennsylvania primary, Hart scheduled stops today on the Philadelphia waterfront, at a Bethlehem Steel Co. plant, at a senior citizens center in Pittsburgh and at a shopping mall in suburban Bucks County.

Hart campaign aides said they agree with surveys that indicate Hart and Walter Mondale are running close in Pennsylvania with the Rev. Jesse Jackson a distant third.

A new Washington Post-ABC News poll said that among 468 Pennsylvania voters surveyed Friday through Sunday, Mondale was ahead 41 percent to 36 percent, with a 5 percentage point margin of error. In a larger sample taken Wednesday through Sunday, Mondale's lead was just 2 percentage points.

Voters on Tuesday will express their presidential preference and also elect 117 convention delegates. The outcome of the delegate race also will determine the apportionment of 55 more slots on the state delegation to the Democratic convention next July — meaning 172 delegates are at stake in the primary.

Hart's stop at the Methodist Church was one of his few direct appeals to black voters in his presidential campaign.

Kathy Bushkin, a campaign aide, said the appearance was designed as "an important gesture to the black community, to let them know you want their vote."

Jackson and Mondale have far stronger ties to the black community than Hart.

Jackson can't 'muzzle' supporters' comments

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson says "I disagree" with threats of violence but that he cannot "muzzle" comments made by his supporters.

Jackson, the civil rights leader campaigning for the Democratic presidential nomination, made the comments when he was asked in a television interview Sunday about remarks Black Muslim leader Louis Farrakhan made about a black reporter who has covered Jackson's campaign.

"Of course I disassociate myself from the statement," Jackson said on NBC's "Meet the Press" two days before the Pennsylvania Democratic presidential primary.

"I have no ability to muzzle a surrogate who wants to make a contribution. That statement certainly was not a campaign statement or a campaign-authorized statement," he said. "It was a mistake. All of us who are in the public domain make errors."

Farrakhan, in a radio address, talked about Washington Post reporter Milton Coleman and said, "one day soon we will punish you with death." Farrakhan later denied he had threatened Coleman and said his remarks had been quoted out of context.

Farrakhan, meanwhile, said he will support Jackson "till the end."

The campaign, he said, "is bigger than Jesse, bigger than the presidency. It's the salvation of our people. It's the cornerstone of a new world order."

"I'm not trying to frighten black reporters with threats. This is what happens sometimes when the boss upstairs decides you (reporters) downstairs must bring your brother's head on a platter," Farrakhan, head of the Nation of Islam, told reporters Sunday night.

Jackson was scheduled to resume his pitch for support among the jobless when he returned to Pennsylvania today following a trip to Chicago.

Coleman had reported that he heard Jackson refer to Jews as "Hymies" and New York as "Hymietown" in a background discussion with another reporter. Jackson subsequently apologized for the remark.

'Patient' survives terminal illness

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — High above the Earth, circling the planet once every 90 minutes, the "patient" was terribly sick, and NASA assembled its top team to find a cure.

The patient was the Solar Max, a science satellite that had been crippled since 1980. It lapsed into an apparently terminal illness on Sunday when an attempted salvage resulted in an out-of-control tumble. Its batteries were running down and there was little hope to stabilize the spinning, twisting, wobbling craft.

"We kept talking about whether the patient will live," said Frank Cepollina, a Goddard Space Center scientist who was the mission manager for Solar Max. "We went from crisis to crisis."

Max had been spinning slowly when astronaut George Nelson, flying a jet pack from the space shuttle, attempted to attach a clamp on the satellite and stop the spin. Nelson thrice jammed the clamp, called the Trunnion Pin Adapter, against a handle on Max's side. But each time the clamp failed to snap closed.

The impact of Nelson's attempts sent Max into a wobble and then to a tumble. What had been a gentle spin became a three-axis gyration.

Solar panels that usually supply power were denied sunlight. Max began to pull electricity from its batteries.

A National Aeronautics and Space Administration official announced that Max had only six hours left to live. After that, the electricity was gone. With no power, a tumbling Max would be space garbage.

Cepollina and a team of experts sent signals to Max to bring itself under control. The craft was ordered to use its torque bars — electro magnetic bars that use the Earth's magnetic field to control its movements.

What Cepollina got back was gibberish. Max's gyros, the engineers learned, were "saturated," sending out false signals. They were useless.

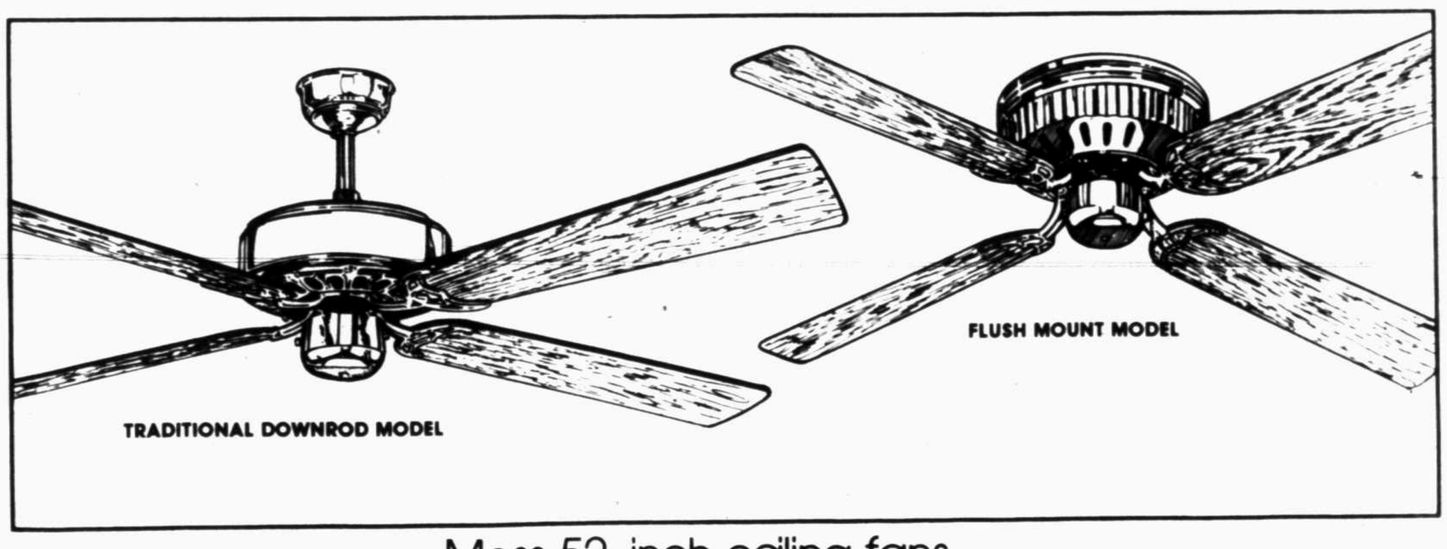

The team ordered Max to purge its computer and a new program was sent up. There were 40,000 words in the program — enough for a short novel — and they had to be sent in 4,000 word segments. It took two hours.

By then, Max had only four hours to live.

The new program was the perfect medicine. Max, the patient, responded almost immediately. Its spin and tumble slowed.

Then the solar panels caught sunlight. At first, it was only briefly, just enough to send a burst of energy to the batteries. The spin and tumble slowed even more. Max was getting better.
