HAPPY NEW YEAR!

County Is Defendant In Dist. Court Case

Aransas County has been named a defendant along with Joe Colin of South Coast Development Corp., in a suit filed in the 156th Dist. Court here involving county development of a road.

Alvin C. Reif Jr. of Bexar County, has asked the court to stop defendants from building a road on his 160-acre tract in Lamar Peninsula. He has asked for $50,000 in damages he alleges occurred when trees were felled on his property.

The county has been in the process of clearing what was said to be a dedicated road, from Park Road 13 to St. Charles Bay, a distance of approximately one-half mile, to serve as an alternate route out of Lamar.

The road would give access to a residential development under way by Conlin and South Coast Development Corp.

Reif claims in the petition that he has kept the tract continually enclosed by a fence for more than 20 years and says that any easement or right to use the land known as 8th Street was abandoned under the provisions of Art. 6703A.

Reif also charges that Conlin, acting for himself and the corporation, unlawfully entered his property by cutting the fence.

C of C, Tourist Ass'n Seeks Federal Aid For Tourist Business

Officials of the Rockport Chamber of Commerce and Rockport-Tourist Association, citing a $1-million loss already, appealed Dec. 20 to the Federal Energy Administration for help in restoring winter visitor activity in the Rockport-Fulton area.

The federal agency was asked to assure visitors who normally make this their winter home that gasoline will be available for their return to northern and midwestern states in the spring.

Bill Janacek, president of the Rockport Chamber of Commerce, and Jim Fowler, president of the Rockport-Tourist Association, also sent telegrams to congressional representatives.

"Normally our facilities are filled to capacity by this date," the FEA was informed. "Today we only have 15 per cent occupancy," local officials advised the federal agency.

Many cancellations from regular seasonal visitors have occurred because of fears that they would be stranded here due to gasoline curtailments in the spring of 1974, officials said.

Unless relief is forthcoming, Chamber and tourist interests said that the Rockport-Fulton area winter economy faces financial ruin.

Hundreds of jobs are at stake in the 39 motel and hotel enterprises and the more than 25 mobile home parks and related winter visitor-oriented facilities, the FEA was told.

From an energy-saving standpoint, the federal agency was informed that home heating fuel savings would result if persons who usually migrate to warmer climates in the winter were encouraged to continue the practice.

"With a year-round temperature of 72 degrees" home heating requirements are much lower in the Rockport-Fulton area, it was reported.

Coming Events Data Unavailable

For years the Pilot has published each week a little column called "Coming Events" in which birthdays, wedding anniversaries and meeting dates for the coming week were published.

The information for this column was taken from the calendar which in past years was published by the Band Boosters Club.

Last week the Pilot was informed by officials at Rockport-Fulton High School that no 1974 Band Boosters Calendar was planned.

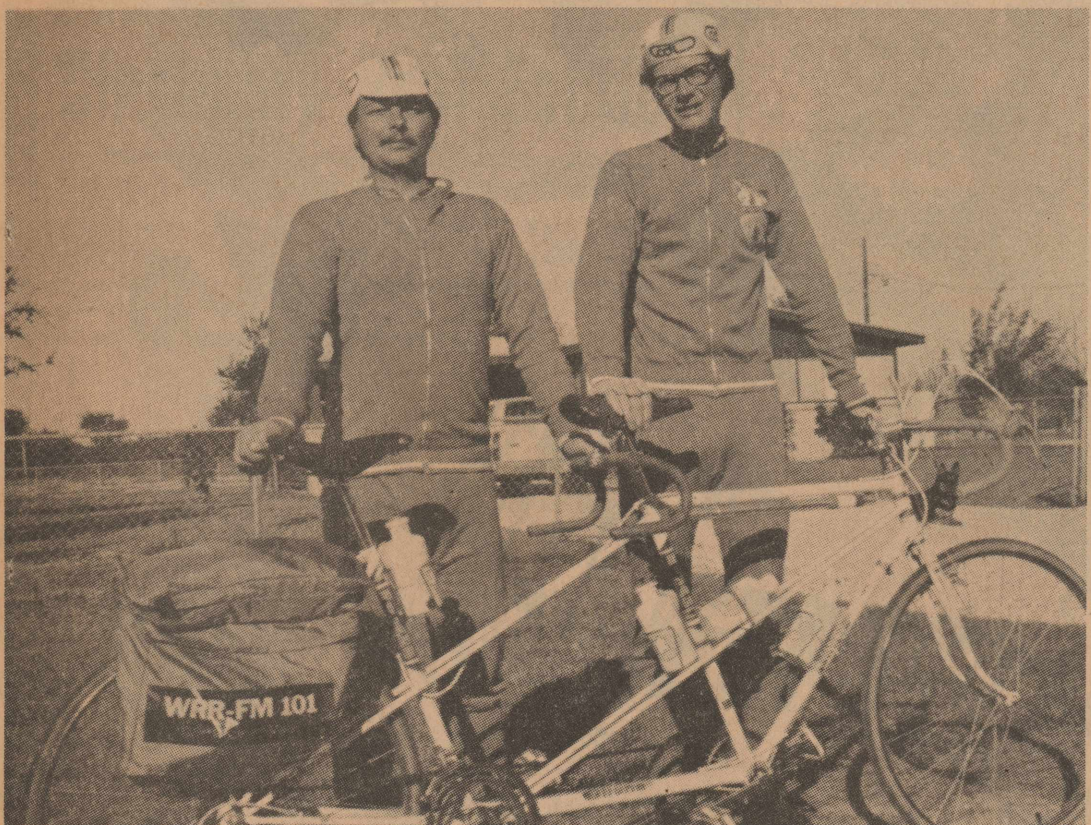

Consequently, people who have birthdays or wedding anniversaries they would like to have published in the paper, and organizations which have meeting dates they would like to list in the paper will have to call the Pilot to have such events or dates published.

Just call us or mail in the information well in advance, and the paper will publish it.

Two Rugged Young Men Ride Bike From Dallas to Rockport

Dave Vavra (left), formerly of Rockport, and Victor Marshall, both associated with Radio Station WRR in Dallas, rode this tandem bicycle from Dallas to Rockport to demonstrate that the trip can be made without gasoline.

Dave Vavra, 26, who used to live in Rockport, and Victor Marshall, 25, work for Radio Station WRR in Dallas. Vavra is an account executive and Marshall is an announcer.

Last week as an adventure and a promotion event sponsored jointly by WRR and Radio Station KEYS in Corpus Christi, the two young men rode a tandem bicycle from Dallas to Rockport and then on to Corpus Christi.

They said they made the rugged trip "to prove that you can go from Dallas to Corpus Christi on less than a thimble of gasoline, if you ride a bike instead of driving a car."

They reported that the ride from Dallas to Rockport was about 360 miles, that they covered about 100 miles on Dec. 17, 120 on Dec. 18 and 140 on Dec. 19. They rested in Rockport on Dec. 20, and the following day rode to Corpus Christi where they were greeted by officials of Radio Station KEYS and city officials who accepted the thimble of gasoline which Vavra and Marshall brought with them.

Vavra, the son of Al and Matilda Vavra, said that although cold weather bothered them some on Dec. 19, "it did provide a strong tail wind which enabled us to really move along quite fast."

Besides the thimble of gas, the two cyclists also carried a proclamation from Dallas Mayor Wes Wise. Both WRR in Dallas and KEYS in Corpus Christi gave away prizes to listeners who guessed the estimated time of arrival in Corpus Christi. All along the way Vavra and Marshall reported their progress to WRR and KEYS.

GOING WITH THE GRAIN, this 60-year-old elevator was recently abandoned in Kolin, Montana. Rather than leave it to suffer the usual fate of obsolete equipment, its owners decided to move it to a new plant in Moore, some 21 miles away.

NAMES OMITTED

The names of Julia Gray, Peggy Hunt, Mona McNutt, Gwynne Howland and Teresa Howland were inadvertently left out of last week's news item about members who attended the Christmas party of the Ladies Auxiliary of Rockport Fire Department.

TIPS FOR OUTDOORSMEN

by Vern Sanford

Some anglers save empty cardboard cartons that once contained milk, wash them clean (inside and out), fill them with cold drinking water, and store them in the freezer side of the home refrigerator, overnight.

Next morning, when they get ready to leave on a fishing trip they place a few of the frozen-solid cartons in the iced-down cooler to help keep the food, sodas and other canned or bottled refreshments cold. And, their catch too!

When the ice in the cartons melts, the water is used for drinking purposes, for removing the fish odor from the hands, or for tidying up the boat.

Anglers who prefer to toss their catch into an ice box, instead of putting them on a stringer, usually add a wide rubber band or two around each carton. This, after filling the carton with water and folding the tops down flat and tight, helps to keep the aroma of the fish out of the frozen or melted ice and the resulting drinking water.

Most of the time fishermen take along a couple or more of these cartons of frozen water for each person in the party.

Some anglers who want to keep their catch fresh and pictureable, hence don't want their fish frozen stiff, pack a half dozen or so pint-sized frozen cartons of water in the box and use no other means of icing. Mainly, this is a matter of how warm the weather and how far one is from home.

If home base is some distance away the quart size cartons are utilized.

One of our crappie fishing friends uses a gallon size milk carton for storing his fileted fish. He drops the filets into the big container, fills the carton with water, folds the top down tight and places the gallon of goodies in his deep freezer.

Sure beats wrapping them in foil individually.

Only trouble here is—that's a lot of fish for one meal, unless you have a bunch of hungry youngsters—lots of company to feed.

How Does Social Security Affect Women? Questions and Answers

Today, over 32 million women are building social security protection for themselves and their families through their own work.

The working woman has both disability and survivors protection. If she becomes unable to work for a year or longer because of a disabling accident or severe illness, she and her dependents may be eligible for monthly cash payments from social security. If she dies prematurely, monthly cash payments from social security can help her children through school—until they're 22, if they remain full-time students and unmarried.

Even though her husband may be working at a full-time job, her children are still eligible for benefits on her work record.

On her own work record, the working woman can retire at 62 with reduced monthly cash payments. Or she can wait until she's 65 and get full monthly cash benefits.

Women need to know about the social security program and how it affects them and their families. Here are some typical questions the Social Security Administration has recently received from women.

grade-school children, has a kidney ailment. She wants to know more about the coverage of chronic kidney diseases under Medicare.

A. Mrs. J. W. can get Medicare coverage if she has chronic kidney disease and has worked long enough under social security—or if her ex-husband has worked long enough and they were married 20 years or more. People under 65 who need dialysis treatments or a kidney transplant are eligible for Medicare beginning the 3rd month after they start treatment. Coverage lasts through the 12th month after the dialysis ends or the patient has a kidney transplant. Mrs. J. W.'s two young children are also eligible for this coverage if they need such treatments—provided either their mother or father has worked long enough under social security.

Q. Mrs. B. K. gets monthly retirement checks and works part time as a saleswoman. She wants to know: how much money can she earn this year and still get all her social security checks?

A. Mrs. B. K. can earn as much as $2,100 this year and still get her full social security payments for the year. If she earns more than $2,100, $1 in benefits will be withheld for every $2 she earns over $2,100. And no matter how much she makes for the year, Mrs. B. K. can get benefits for any month in which she neither earns more than $175 nor does substantial work in self-employment. As a result of a recent change in the social security law, the amounts will go up to $2,400 a year and $200 a month next year.

Q. Mrs. S. M. enrolled in Medicare some time ago and was told then that she had to sign up for medical insurance within 3 years if she wanted it. Is there still a deadline on signing up for Medicare medical insurance?

A. No. Any person eligible for hospital insurance can now enroll in the medical insurance program during any general enrollment period (January 1—March 31 of each year). Also, most people 65 and over can sign up during this period even if they're not eligible for hospital insurance. But people who delay their enrollment more than a year pay higher premiums, depending on how long they wait to sign up.

Have a question about social security and its retirement, survivors, disability or Medicare benefits? See your telephone directory for the phone number and address of the nearest social security office.

Fall Brides Should Change Name With Social Security

A fall bride's list of "things to do" should include changing her name on social security records, according to social security officials here.

When she changes her name, the new bride is keeping her social security earnings record accurate and up to date, a spokesman said. "Any earnings she had under social security before her marriage, as well as any earnings after her marriage, can then be correctly credited to the same record," he said.

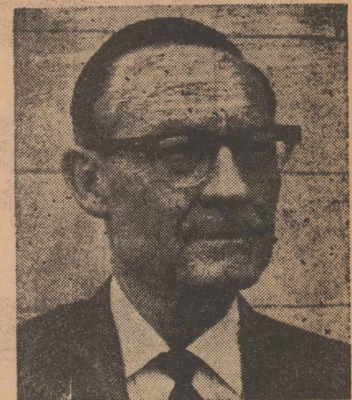

"Her earnings record determines the amount of her cash benefits--and not just for when she retires," the spokesman noted. "The disability and survivors programs also provide protection for the young bride and her growing family during her working years."

A new bride can change her name by calling, writing, or visiting any social security office. "Or, she can get a form at any post office and many employer personnel offices," the spokesman said.

Mrs. E. B. Shelton and Mr. and Mrs. Travis Bailey. There will be no fines charged for overdue books through January 2.

THE FAMILY LAWYER

Collision With Ambulance

Driving home from work, Harold crashed into an ambulance at a busy intersection. In short order he found himself facing a charge of "failing to yield the right-of-way to an emergency vehicle."

But in court, Harold came up with the following facts in his own defense:

1) that the traffic light had been in his favor;

2) that he had not heard the siren because he had his windows up and his radio on; and

3) that he had not seen the ambulance until the last moment, because other cars were obscuring his vision.

Under these circumstances the court could find nothing negligent in Harold's conduct, and dismissed the charge.

Traffic codes generally do give special privileges to ambulances. However, these privileges are not absolute. In case of a collision between an ambulance and a private car, the court will weigh the entire situation on its merits.

Furthermore, ambulances have privileges only when there is (or at least appears to be) a true emergency.

Thus, in another case, an ambulance that was merely returning to its home office was held not entitled to go through a stop sign.

And an ambulance transporting a patient to the hospital, with no apparent need for haste, was held not entitled to disregard a red light.

Still, in most situations, the ambulance's right-of-way will be upheld. One indignant citizen decided this preference was a form of unfair discrimination against the motoring public. But when he challenged it in court, the judge held that he had no kick coming.

"The grant of special privileges to an emergency vehicle," said the judge, "is a proper exercise of the police power of the state. When human life may be at stake, prompt performance of the duties imposed upon drivers of emergency vehicles is imperative."

MENTAL HEALTH MATTERS

Bertram S. Brown, M.D.
Director
National Institute of Mental Health

Drugs do not cure mental illness, insofar as is now known. But they can relieve its symptoms in many cases and aid other methods, such as psychotherapy, to be applied. Thus, psychoactive -- mind-affecting -- drugs have many benefits, when properly administered. They usually have their best results when appropriately used as part of the total program of treatment. Dangers can lurk in the use of these drugs; and some authorities especially accent that there are hazards involved in psychoactive drugs, even those prescribed for an individual by a physician. They point out that a drug prescribed for, say, a middle-aged man who has lost his job or a school child in emotional trouble may only hide or mask the difficulty and does not reach the sources of the worry. This may be indisputable, yet advocates of drug therapy hold that drugs are useful, that alone they cannot do the whole job, that they should be used with care and caution, and that a number of things, sometimes a galaxy of services, must be provided to help the patient and get at more than the surface causes of his mental illness. So, they maintain, drugs can be properly considered as one of the tools or aids in treatment and psychotherapy in one or more of its various forms is cardinal to adequate treatment. Viewed in this light, drugs have two sides, good and bad, and both sides--and the whole coin, as it were--have to be considered in the giving and taking of psychoactive drugs for mental illness. It goes without saying almost, but perhaps should be said for emphasis that the casual taking of any drug, whether mind-affecting or not, should not be done without realizing that there can be risks of undesired or toxic effects. This is so with regard to both prescription drugs and OTC (Over The Counter) or non-prescription drugs. In any event, it is best to consult and rely upon a physician when considering any course of drug treatment.

MENTAL HEALTH MATTERS

PROGRESS AND HOPE

Research and its application are our major means to achieve progress against mental illness and to promote mental health. A look at the situation today shows that we are making progress. The picture is a hopeful one, both because of past accomplishments and the promise of ongoing research. Consider this national perspective:

In the mid-1950's State mental hospitals had a population of almost 600,000. Just 15 years later, we have achieved the goal of cutting that number by 50 percent.

There are now fewer than 300,000 patients in institutions for the mentally ill in the United States.

Breakthroughs are also being produced from current research to brighten this picture even more. For instance, we have been searching for the places in the brain at which heroin operates to give the user a "high."

Recently, two scientists at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, working with scientists from HEW's National Institute of Mental Health, announced the finding of these sites (receptors) in the brain where heroin and morphine are received.

We can now anticipate having methods for screening drugs that will produce effects antagonistic to narcotics. These drugs can then be used in the prevention and treatment of addiction. "Narcotic antagonists" are drugs chemically similar to heroin and opiates but without their harmful properties.

The new finding will also permit rapid screening of large numbers of new and potentially nonaddicting pain-killing drugs, which will be a great boon.

This one study shows the value and importance of research. A whole gamut of study is essential, from the effects of our environment to those of our physical and emotional inheritance. We must continue the search for knowledge.

Knowledge without application is foolish. But the returns from research of the kind illustrated are proved—and are an underpinning of our service and treatment efforts in mental health.

presented by the Philadelphia College of Art

Many fine artists have portrayed the beauties and grandeur and excitement of the Old West, but none more brilliantly than Frederic Remington.

The earliest artists of the American West were, of course, the Indians themselves. The first white artists arrived with parties of explorers and government expeditions, mainly during the early years of the 19th century. Their mission was to send back accurate information about the new territories: the government was anxious to learn about its unfamiliar plants, animals, rivers, mountain ranges, deserts, and native inhabitants. For these purposes, the artist who could describe with pictures was as important as the writer who could report with words. Many young and adventurous painters went on their own, accompanying trappers and traders, but it was the fascination of the unexplored which drew them all on.

Frederic Remington was such a free-lance artist. A young Easterner, an art student at Yale, Remington first went west in 1880 because of ill health. He was nineteen. Blessed with independent means, he was nevertheless determined to make his own way in this land of open space and adventure. He worked first as a clerk, then as a cowboy, gold prospector, and rancher. He was captivated by all that he saw, by the continual action and excitement of life around him. He sketched incessantly, filling many notebooks with drawings, mostly of men and animals; at this time, however, it apparently never occurred to him to live by selling his paintings.

During these first years, he lived and worked in Montana and Kansas. Though he returned to the east coast, the lure of the West drew him back time and time again for the rest of his life. After 1885, he made frequent trips through the West and Southwest, setting down details of roundups, wagon trains, campfires, fights, military sorties, branding and cowpunching, the comedies, tragedies, and trivia of everyday life. His eye and his memory were always busy; what he didn't have time to paint or draw on the spot, he stored up for future use.

In 1886, the first of his illustrations appeared in Harper's Weekly magazine. This brought him almost instant fame, and thereafter he was much in demand. During the late 1880's, he travelled with the United States Army as they pursued the Apache tribe back and forth across the plains. In 1890, he was assigned as illustrator to cover the last Plains Indian War, and later he served as war correspondent for the Hearst newspaper chain during the Spanish American War.

Remington was a painter in the realistic manner, though his colors were often raw and unrealistic. He was also a sculptor, illustrator, and writer; in all media, his subject matter was almost exclusively the life and manners of the western plains; even his books bore such titles as "Pony Tracks," and "Crooked Trails." His canvasses are often suffused with a sense of speed and spirited action -- ponies galloping, lariats whirling, stones flying up from dashing hooves. Unlike the earliest artist-reporters, Remington's primary aim was not to document so much as to popularize and romanticize. He loved drama. Every chase, every race, every Indian attack, was caught and drawn at the peak of excitement; his gatherings round the campfire were picturesque and mellow; and the loneliness of his empty spaces was seemingly limitless: though drawing from life, he made everything larger than life. Yet there was an urgent need to set it all down, for it was a way of life that was fading even as he watched it. Remington was a tireless worker, completing more than 2700 paintings and drawings. His canvasses have been often reproduced as prints, and replicas of famous bronzes appear in many museums and private collections.

Frederick Remington wanted his epitaph to read: "He Knew the Horse." It cannot be left so simply: he knew the cavalrymen, the cowboys, the Indians, the beasts, the plains, the corals -- all the life and living of the Old West.

OUTDOORS 'n things

by

Lightning is a beautiful thing and some knowledge of what it can do is of vital importance to people who enjoy the outdoors. More than 500 Americans are killed by lightning each year and at least three times that many are injured. More than 90 percent of those struck by lightning are sportsmen or outdoor workers. Lightning touches the ground somewhere more than a hundred times a second, so it just makes good sense for people who are outdoors a lot to understand lightning and know some safety precautions.

Lightning is, of course, a flash of electricity within a cloud, between two clouds, or between a cloud and the earth. A typical flash of lightning lasts less than half a second as it seeks a path to the ground. It will usually strike the tallest thing around, especially if that thing is a good conductor of electricity. This is why it is dangerous to stand under a tree during a thunderstorm. The lightning will strike the tree, then flash across to your body because the tree is not a very good conductor while your body is. If your clothing is wet it makes a very good conductor and the lightning may travel through it. You may even survive such an experience. When lightning strikes a tree whose bark is dry, it travels inside the bark, in the sap. The sap is superheated to steam instantaneously, and expands so abruptly that the tree explodes.

There are basically two forms of lightning, hot and cold. Hot lightning is of long duration and low current. This type often sets fire to anything it hits. Cold lightning is of very short duration and very high current. It has an explosive effect on anything it strikes.

Lightning is extremely important to growing plants. One of the most important plant foods is nitrogen, and the atmosphere is full of it, but in a form which the plants can't utilize. As lightning flashes across the sky it heats the air to about 30,000 degrees centigrade. This tremendous heat causes the nitrogen in the air to combine with the oxygen to form nitrogen oxides which are soluble in water. The rain washes these oxides out of the air in the form of dilute nitric acid. After a summer thunderstorm the air sometimes seems so clear that you can see halfway into tomorrow and there is a biting, pungent odor that you can't quite identify. It just smells clean; that is the only way to describe it. This is the nitric acid that has been added to the soil with the raindrops where it will combine with other minerals to form nitrates that are essential to plant growth. I'm sure you've heard many people say something about "one good rain is worth more to the lawn than all the watering you can do." This is true, and the lightning is what makes the difference.

Thunder, of course, is the sound waves created by the air as it is pushed out of the path of the bolt of lightning. The air around the channel of current is pushed aside in all directions faster than the speed of sound. This is like the expansion of gases in an explosion. You can tell how far away lightning is by counting the seconds it takes you to hear the thunder after you see the lightning flash. Every five seconds equals one mile away.

Now, to protect yourself. When a storm comes up -- get out of the storm if at all possible. The safest place is a closed car or a metal framed building. Don't stay on a bicycle, or hold a metal object like a rifle or golf club. If caught outdoors, don't get under a tree or on top of a hill. Stay away from metal fences. Find a low place or a ditch well below the crest of any hill and lie down in it. Avoid, however, any pools of water, and don't stay in a swimming pool.

The best way to protect a boat is to get a continuous conductor, such as a heavy copper wire or a steel cable, up as high as you can above the highest part of the boat, then down to a metal plate or even a heavy lead sinker in the water. In other words, make a lightning rod to guide the bolt away from the boat and down the conductor into the water.

One General Electric scientist said about lightning: "If you hear the thunder, the lightning didn't strike you -- if you saw the lightning, it missed you -- if the lightning did strike you, you wouldn't know it."

The Lieutenant Governor's Report

By BILL HOBBY

AUSTIN -- It should now be apparent even to the most determined skeptics that this country is in the midst of what has been called an energy crisis.

More accurately, it should be called an oil and gas crisis. For it is these precious fuels which we have squandered.

This pillaging has been the result of decades of inept federal regulation, particularly of natural gas prices.

Through federal regulation, natural gas shipped in interstate commerce has been kept ridiculously low. As a consequence, industries in the north-eastern U. S. have used it as boiler fuel.

This is a terrible waste of one of our most environmentally acceptable fuels.

Boilers can and should be fired by coal or fuel oil. Admittedly, this will require substantially greater investments in pollution control equipment.

But that is one of the prices we will have to pay for our shortsightedness.

Vast coal reserves exist in this country--enough to fill our energy needs for generations to come. We must move quickly to shift our reliance from oil and gas to this much more plentiful resource.

Our limited oil and gas reserves must be directed to their highest uses. Oil, of course, is presently the only practical fuel for our nation's transportation and defense systems.

Natural gas is the perfect petrochemical source, from which fertilizers, pesticides, plastics, and many other organic materials vital to our everyday lives are made. Thus its highest use obviously is not as a boiler fuel.

The greatest portion of natural gas currently available is being produced from reserves discovered years ago when financial conditions were much different than today.

In 1956, more than 16,000 exploratory wells were drilled, compared with only 7,000 in 1971. Exploration costs are now so high that only major companies can afford them. These rising costs have not been matched by increases in the allowable price.

It is obvious we have tremendous natural gas resources awaiting discovery both onshore and offshore. The question we must face today is how we can go about finding and developing new gas reserves.

We must re-examine our taxing, pricing, and leasing policies as well as the subject of which lands are available for exploration.

Short-term, crisis-initiated measures are not enough. We cannot overcome the folly of years of inattention in a matter of weeks or months.

The ultimate aim of any new state or federal regulation must be to encourage exploration and conserve this most versatile resource.

A Resolution

One resolution millions would like to see come true in 1974 is a resolution on the part of the television networks to mercifully end the continuing round of specials honoring various television stars or so-called comedians.

Many of these whingdings represent a kind of show-biz nepotism, and the specials are swapped back and forth among the New York types who dominate commercial television today. The latest catastrophe inflicted on American viewers was a Milton Berle special.

Very few overpaid U.S. television performers deserve specials dedicated to their ego and future earning power. The sugar tossed back and forth is often so phony, the high praise so undeserved, and the star buildup so obvious, one develops indigestion before he or she can switch to another channel.

Fix-It Tip

With the advent of the energy crisis, a lot of people will be using their fireplaces more than ever before. You need air for a working fire. The flow of air up the chimney makes the fire burn properly and keeps the smoke from backing up into the room. This is what is known as the proper draft.

To get this, there is a moveable plate at the top of the fireplace in the chimney that opens and closes. This is the damper. Make sure it is fully open to provide the proper draft. A damper may sometimes get clogged with soot.

You also need ventilation in the room for a constant flow of fresh air. A slightly open window or door will provide the flow of fresh air needed for a working fire.

T'was The Season To Be Jolly

'Twas the season to break his three-drink limit, too. What the heck, though, the Christmas Season comes but once a year, right? Sure it does. Assuming you're around to see it. Just remember, some people have a lower tolerance to alcohol than others. For them, one or two drinks can be trouble when they try to drive. If you're feeling a little too jolly after this year's big party, call a cab or get a sober friend to take you home. It could have a lasting effect on your happiness.

FESTIVE FUN WITH PORTABLE APPLIANCES

Many portable appliances can make you the "hostess with the mostest" — with much less effort.

One of these especially nice appliances is the electric chafing dish/fondue. The thermostat of this type appliance, as with any other heating appliance, accurately controls the desired temperature of your food. Proper use allows you to cook at a higher temperature and later while serving, to reduce the temperature to warm, exactly right (not too cool, not too hot) for tasting.

Below are two recipes which you might like to try in your chafing dish or fondue:

PEANUT BUTTER FONDUE

1 cup peanut butter
1 cup light cream
1/2 cup honey

Place peanut butter in fondue pot or chafing dish. Allow to melt at low heat. Gradually stir in light cream. Blend in honey. Heat over medium-low, stirring constantly until mixture starts to boil. Keep warm while serving. Serve apple wedges, strawberries, pear wedges, and pitted dates for dunkers. Chopped peanuts and flaked coconut may be provided for topping. To serve, spear a fruit piece with fondue fork, dip into peanut butter mixture, then coat with chopped peanuts or coconut.

The origin of fondue is not clear, but many believe the word "fondue" is derived from a French word which means "to melt". Others believe it means "to dunk." Nevertheless, dipping is a necessity when fondueing. Everyone, each equipped with a long, slender fondue fork, dips into the same pot, creating a congenial, festive atmosphere.

In our country, probably the best known version of fondue is the cheese or Swiss Fondue; although there are many popular meat and dessert fondues. Fondue provides for fun, festivity, and feasting. According to legend, if a would-be dunker loses a piece of food from his fork while dipping in the pot, he is pleasantly "penalized" by having to kiss the person of his choice.

The following recipe is traditional cheese fondue with a delightful Mexican twist. Try dunking corn chips, tortilla chips or other corn snacks in this dip:

HOT CHEESE FONDUE

1 small can tomatoes with green chiles
1 pound American Cheese

Puree tomatoes. Combine tomatoes and cheese in electric fondue or chafing dish. Heat at medium temperature until cheese is melted. Keep warm while serving.

The use of a chafing dish/fondue will definitely add an air of festivity to your holiday entertaining, while it relieves the hostess from the drudgery of being in the kitchen all day. She can definitely be the "hostess with the mostest." If you do not have an electric chafing dish/fondue, you may prepare both of the above recipes in a double boiler on the range-top and transfer them to a pre-warmed (oven-proof) dish for serving. Or perhaps you would like to add this appliance to your "Santa" list.

PUBLIC NOTICES

BECAUSE THE PEOPLE MUST KNOW

(Editor's Note: Public Notice advertising plays a unique role both in American history and in the process by which this country's democracy is preserved. Its one premise is that people must be informed if they are to govern themselves competently. Public Notice advertising first came into being with the Congress of 1792. That body, recognizing its responsibility to the people, required the Postmaster General to advertise for bids for the construction of new post offices. From that inauspicious beginning to the complex publication requirements in federal, state and local laws today, government officials have come more and more to understand their obligations to inform the public through Public Notice advertising. Newspapers over the years have been the vehicle by which these obligations have been fulfilled. They will continue to be as long as the public demands that it be informed frequently and by the best means possible.)

THE STATE OF TEXAS

To Billy C. Williams Defendant, Greeting:

You are hereby commanded to appear before the Honorable 36th Judicial District Court of Aransas County at the Court House thereof, in Rockport, Texas, at or before 10 o'clock A.M. of the first Monday next after the expiration of forty-two days from the date of the issuance of this citation, same being the 21st day of January A.D. 1974, then and there to answer Plaintiff's Petition filed in said Court, on the 8th day of June A.D. 1973, in this cause, numbered 4832 on the docket of said court and styled John Anderson, et al, Plaintiff, vs. Billy

C. Williams, Defendant.

A brief statement of the nature of this suit is as follows, to wit:

Plaintiff John Anderson claims damages in excess of $1,000.00 for storing and repairing defendant's boat pursuant to an agreement. Compensation for plaintiff's services is due and unpaid, as is more fully shown by Plaintiff's Petition on file in this suit.

The officer executing this process shall promptly execute the same according to law, and make due return as the law directs.

Issued and given under my hand and the Seal of said Court, at office in Rockport, Texas this the 4th day of December A.D. 1973.

Attest:

PAGE THIRTEEN

What factor releases the moisture of the air, acquired by evaporation, over the various areas of the earth producing life and vegetation?

Millions of tons of water are absorbed by the air through evaporation every second. This gives the layer of gases above the surface of the earth (our weather) its moisture.

As this air rises usually because of heating from the earth, which is heated by the sun, it ascends into colder temperatures. In the colder weather the air condenses and its water capacity decreases.

When the dewpoint is reached, or when the moisture content becomes the absolute maximum, precipitation follows. Since air travels hundreds of miles a day usually, to the east in this hemisphere, absorbed moisture can be carried great distances before precipitation is finally triggered by a combination of altitude and low temperature.

NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTION
A new year is a good time to resolve to change or refine a way of doing something. Many people talk about making resolutions, some even go so far as to make a few. I would like to suggest a list of resolutions that will make your shopping easier.
1. Shop harder by making at least a tentative list before going to the market.
2. Compare prices by reading the grocery ads as you make your list. We think you'll find our prices very competitive.
3. Include the basic four food groups everyday for good nutrition. Take advantage of nutritional labeling whenever possible.
4. Use some method of comparative unit pricing to determine the most economical size to buy for your needs.
5. Make use of "planned-overs" (international leftovers) in your weekly meal planning to save time and energy.
6. Try new foods — a different cut of meat, a new fruit or vegetable, a new recipe — every month to add variety to mealtime.
7. Take advantage of the consumer programs offered by this store. Ask questions and request more information when necessary.
We will help you keep these resolutions by providing product and nutritional information, by helping you learn more about selecting and cooking meat, by offering the freshest perishables and the widest selections; and by keeping our prices as low as possible while providing the services you want.

OUR NEW MEAT LABELS TELL YOU WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW

Our new meat identification program takes the guesswork out of selecting meat and how to prepare it... helps you be a "smarter" meat shopper and a better cook. Our improved meat label tells you at a glance the type of meat (Beef, Pork, Lamb or Veal), where it comes from, and the specific portion or common retail name.
