Richard Nixon

The postage stamp commemorating Richard Nixon, the 37th president of the United States, went on sale April 26.

Still controversial

WASHINGTON — America's love-hate relationship with Richard Nixon continues. Even a new stamp issued in his memory is enough to get people riled. The postage stamp seems to be generating nearly as much controversy as Nixon did in life. Some 2.5 million of the stamps sold on the first day of issue — April 26 — with lines throughout the day at the Nixon Library in Yorba Linda, Calif. But elsewhere sales have sometimes lagged, with some folks still holding a grudge and refusing to use the postage. Page 12A.

Clinton vs. NRA

WASHINGTON — An apology isn't enough, President Clinton said Friday, challenging the National Rifle Association to give up more than $1 million reaped from a fund-raising letter. Leaders of major law enforcement organizations joined Clinton at the White House in denouncing the NRA and accusing it of putting police officers' lives in danger with inflammatory rhetoric. Cuts in NASA

WASHINGTON — Under pressure to make deep cuts in the once-flourishing space program, NASA's administrator unveiled plans Friday to slash thousands of aerospace jobs and to overhaul virtually every part of the sprawling agency. Page 11A.

Goodman receives 30 years

Jury returns sentence in slaying after more than three hours

■ Defendant testifies that stabbing resulted from dispute he, aunt had.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Jurors deliberated 3 1/2 hours before sentencing Colby Ryan Goodman to 30 years in prison for the May 2, 1994, stabbing death of his elderly aunt.

Relatives of Goodman, 19, testified Thursday about his difficult childhood and the antagonistic relationship he had with his aunt, Wanda Lucille Goodman.

Goodman pleaded guilty Tuesday to the murder. He testified Friday that the stabbing resulted from a dispute in which Ms. Goodman accused him of stealing and selling her jewelry.

Testimony indicated that the Goodman family has been split as a result of the crime. During the reading of the verdict, members of the family sat on opposite sides of the courtroom depending on which side they supported in the trial. The courtroom fell silent at the announcement of the sentence until some of Goodman's supporters began to weep quietly.

Sue McDaniel, Goodman's aunt and adopted mother, testified Thursday that Goodman told her he stabbed the victim because she called him a "bastard."

Ms. Goodman's body was found in a storage unit behind the house at 3515 Thomas Ave. that she shared with the defendant and his adoptive parents. She had been stabbed 18 times, including two stabs to the head that left the tip of the knife embedded in her skull.

According to Goodman's confession, he "got mad" while they were looking for his aunt's jewelry in the shed and she accused him of stealing it. He told police he became angry, went in the house, got a kitchen knife, then went back to the shed and slashed the woman's throat and wrist and kicked her in the face.

Five relatives testified that Goodman had a short attention span and was immature. Each also testified that the victim "picked" on Goodman.

Cisneros ends lawsuit brought by ex-mistress

LUBBOCK (AP) — Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros agreed Friday to pay his ex-mistress $49,000 to end a lawsuit accusing him of fraud and breach of contract.

Attorneys for Cisneros and Linda Medlar reached a settlement that dismisses the $256,000 case and forbids the former lovers from making "disparaging remarks" about each other.

The pair also agreed not to talk to the media about their relationship or to make money off it from books or movies.

Cisneros declined to comment Friday, referring reporters in Washington to San Antonio attorney Seagal Wheatley.

A statement from Wheatley's office said the deal helps to end disruptions created since the lawsuit was filed July 29.

"He has therefore agreed to a final and one-time settlement... even though Henry G. Cisneros is not now nor had he ever been under any legal obligation to Ms. Medlar," the statement said.

Ms. Medlar's attorney said the agreement was reached during a five-hour parley May 12 in Lubbock. Cisneros didn't attend but kept touch with his attorney by cellular phone, Floyd Holder said.

The paperwork was filed Friday in a Lubbock district court.

Cisneros wanted to settle for $10,000; Ms. Medlar wanted to settle for $100,000, Holder said.

But "if she wasn't happy with the amount, we wouldn't have settled," he said.

In an interview last week, the Lubbock woman reiterated her contention that the former San Antonio mayor broke a promise to pay her $4,000 a month after their adulterous affair made headlines in 1988. She alleged that he had agreed to help make up for damage to her career and reputation.

"It has nothing to do with a failed love affair," she told reporters last week. "It has to do with a contract."

Publicity about the affair wrecked her marriage, got her fired from jobs and made her the target of death threats, she

Ceremony pays tribute to officers who lost their lives in line of duty

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — As part of National Law Enforcement Memorial Week residents of Howard County remembered those officers who have fallen in the line of duty, including Texas Department of Public Safety Trooper Troy Hogue.

In a memorial ceremony Friday in front of the Big Spring Police Department headquarters, U.S. Rep. Charles Stenholm honored the three Big Spring police officers and three DPS troopers who have died in that county.

Hogue, who was killed during a traffic stop in December, was the most recent of the DPS officers to die.

It is for freedom, Stenholm explained, that these men died. To free the citizens from the specter of crime, these officers gave their lives, he said. "They give that life in fulfillment of the enforcement of the law," he said.

Stenholm told the crowd about his work with eastern Europe's emerging democracies, which are looking to the west for guidance.

"They are amazed that we can be as critical of our president as we are; that we can be as critical of Congress as we are — and not get shot," Stenholm said.

"They don't understand freedom," he said.

Cuteness counts, even to moms, study says

NEW YORK (AP) — In a startling demonstration of how it pays to be good-looking, a new study says cute babies get nicer treatment — gasp! — even from Mom.

Mothers of cute newborns showed more affection toward their infants than mothers of homely babies did, as measured by such things as holding the child close, patting him or her and cooing things such as "Hi, cute baby, you're such a cute baby."

In contrast, mothers of the unattractive babies spent more time than cute-baby moms did paying attention to other people and performing chores like checking diapers.

"We're not suggesting that parents are not completely in love with their babies even if their babies are unattractive," researcher Jean Ritter said. "All these mothers treated their babies positively and generally saw their babies in a favorable light."

But the study follows others that suggest good-looking people are seen and treated by others as more popular, smarter and better at dealing with other people. The new findings, she said, demonstrate that these "appearance cues" are so powerful that they exist even between mother and child.

Appeals court reverses judgment against ex-spa tycoon

■ Richard Minns, 64, won't be present when case is retried; he was deported late last year.

HOUSTON (AP) — The case against former health spa tycoon Richard Minns may be tried again now that an appeals court has ruled that he does not have to pay $32 million awarded to his ex-girlfriend.

The appeals court at Waco reversed a 1987 award of $18.1 million in actual damages and $14 million in punitive damages to Barbra Piotrowski, who accused Minns of permanently disabling her in a botched murder-for-hire attempt. The court late Wednesday remanded the matter to civil court in Houston.

Minns, 64, will not be present when the case is tried again. He was deported late last year after pleading guilty to passport fraud and is living in Switzerland. He cannot re-enter the country without permission of U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno, said George Bishop, one of Minns' attorneys.

Dick DeGuerin, an attorney representing Ms. Piotrowski, said he would file for a rehearing before the appeals court, and that the opinion will be appealed to the Texas Supreme Court if necessary.

Ms. Piotrowski has been living in California.

Appeals court judges cited nine errors allowed by now-retired family court Judge Bill Elliot.

The appeals court pointed out prominent errors such as there being no pleas or proof that Minns intentionally caused Ms. Piotrowski's injuries; there was insufficient evidence to support punitive damages and that the award was excessive; and the court abused its discretion in refusing to admit evidence concerning Ms. Piotrowski's credibility.

"The bottom line is, he didn't get a fair trial," Bishop said.

Ms. Piotrowski accused Minns, founder of what became the President and First Lady health clubs, of masterminding a 1980 attempt to kill her after their three-year affair soured. She was shot in the back four times as she left a southwest Houston doughnut shop Oct. 20, 1980.

Minns has never been charged with a criminal offense in the shooting. He left the country and has lived abroad most of the time since 1982.

Houston private investigator Dudley Bell and Robert Jess Anderson of Spring were convicted of hiring the men who shot Ms. Piotrowski and were sentenced to 38 years in prison.

Nathaniel Ivery and Patrick Tony Steen, both of California, were convicted of carrying out the plot and were sentenced to 35 years in prison.

Pilot dies during training exercise

FORT BLISS (AP) — An Air National Guard aircraft on a training mission crashed and exploded Friday morning in rugged terrain on the northern end of Fort Bliss, killing the pilot, military officials said.

Ground troops saw the twin-engine A-10 Thunderbolt II jet disappear behind a hill during a joint Army-Air Force training mission at about 9 a.m. MDT.

"Then they heard the explosion and saw a big mushroom cloud come up," said Capt. Tom Collins, a Fort Bliss spokesman.

The single-seat aircraft was from the Air National Guard's 110th Fighter Group at Battle Creek, Mich. The name of the pilot was being withheld pending notification of relatives, Collins said.

No one on the ground was injured.

Military officials quickly sealed off the area so Air Force investigators could review the crash site, which is about 30 miles north of El Paso on the remote northern edge of the Fort Bliss military reservation.

Fort Bliss stretches over hundreds of miles of desert in West Texas and southern New Mexico. The crash occurred just over the state line in New Mexico.

"There's been no word yet" on a cause, said Staff Sgt. Tom Mullican from Holloman Air Force Base, N.M., which will handle the initial investigation.

The accident marked the fourth time in nine days that a military plane has gone down in New Mexico.

WEATHER WATCH

Midland to see some clouds

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies and a high in the low 90s, according to a forecaster at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. Winds should be south to southeast at 15-25 mph and gusty.

Tonight should be partly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of showers or thunderstorms and a low in the mid-60s.

Sunday calls for partly cloudy skies with a less than 20 percent chance of showers and a high between 90 and 95.

After an overnight low of 51, Friday's high reached 88, compared to the record high for that date of 100 set in 1939. The record low was 46 set in 1971.

STATE

DALLAS — Weather across most of Texas should be pleasant today, with the exception of West Texas.

Friday was mostly clear in North Texas due to high pressure centered to the north. Winds were northerly from 5 to 10 mph, except in far western areas, where winds had shifted to the southeast around 5 mph. Temperatures were generally in the 70s and low 80s.

Today will be partly cloudy and warmer with highs in the 80s. Tonight will see increasing clouds with a slight chance of thunderstorms in the west, while the central and east regions will be partly cloudy. Lows will be in the upper 50s to mid-60s.

On Friday, South Texas skies were clear to partly cloudy skies prevailed as high pressure was anchored over the region. Temperatures were in the upper 70s to near 90 degrees. Winds were mostly northerly near 10 mph.

Today will be clear to partly cloudy. Afternoon high temperatures will reach to near 90. Overnight low temperatures will be near 60.

Friday saw West Texas skies mostly cloudy as high-level moisture continued to stream across the region. Temperatures were in the 80s. Winds were mostly southeast to southwest at 5 to 15 mph.

West Texas will be mostly cloudy through Sunday. There is a chance of thunderstorms across much of the region today. Highs today will range from the 70s in the Panhandle to near 105 at Big Bend. Lows will be in the 50s and 60s.

NATION

Thunderstorms scattered large hail and heavy rain across parts of the Southeast on Friday, and cool air trailing in the wake of the storms dropped temperatures to record lows in Texas.

The thunderstorms broke out along a slow-moving cold front that curved from Alabama across Georgia and north through the Carolinas into Virginia.

Several tornadoes and funnel clouds were reported in North Carolina, and authorities said a tornado might have been responsible for damage to several mobile homes in Hoke County.

The same weather system was responsible for thunderstorms, heavy rain and tornadoes that swept across the Midwest and Ohio and Tennessee valleys on Thursday. Three people were killed by a tornado Thursday in Tennessee, where 15 tornadoes touched down.

Behind the cold front, cooler and drier air brought a change from several days of unseasonably humid weather and record heat that had stretched from Texas to Florida and the Carolinas.

Cool air also spread across parts of the West.

Friday's temperatures around the Lower 48 states ranged from the 19 at Flagstaff to an afternoon reading of 92 at Daytona Beach, Fla.

Cisneros denied a contract existed. He said in deposition that he sent money to Ms. Medlar over the years — $55,000 in 1993 alone — because he felt sorry for her.

Holder insisted Friday that money was the point.

"Some people thought it was about sex, power, greed, corruption in high places," he said.

Fallout from the lawsuit includes a Justice Department investigation that concluded that Cisneros provided the FBI with false information about the amount of money he had sent Ms. Medlar. The FBI interviews were

'Some people thought it was about sex, power, greed, corruption in high places.'

Attorney General Janet Reno has recommended that a special prosecutor investigate further.

Friday's settlement also says Ms. Medlar agreed to give interviews to attorneys defending Cisneros in Washington.

The statement from Wheatley says Cisneros wanted to settle to avoid a long and costly trial. He also wanted to compromise "a very doubtful and disputed claim."

Holder acknowledged serious concerns with his client's case. He said he feared female jurors wouldn't sympathize with Ms. Medlar.

Both attorneys said they had been considering settlement offers for several months. Holder said that both Cisneros and Ms. Medlar had grown tired of the emotional and financial drain.

"It's not a lot of money unless you're homeless and afloat," Holder said. "The question is what is a bird in the hand worth compared to how many in the bush? And that depends on your circumstances."

TRIBUTE: Memorial service honors slain law-enforcement officers

(From 1A)

The memorial service began with Big Spring City Councilwoman Pat D'Anda citing the Prayer of St. Michael. "St. Michael the Archangel, protect us in battle..." the prayer begins.

At the ceremony, city officials had originally intended to rededicate the police headquarters building in honor of Hogue, but members of the Texas Attorney General's Office had asked that the renaming of the building be postponed because of possible confusion at the upcoming capital murder trial of Levy Lee Edmondson, 17.

Edmondson is accused of fatally shooting Hogue; prosecutors are seeking the death penalty in the case.

After the ceremony, family members of the deceased officers were invited to sit with Stenholm at a barbecue meal served behind the police station. The city of Big Spring and the Police Department sponsored the free barbecue buffet.

"Y'all are all invited to have food — with us in the back. I don't know what you'd call it at three in the afternoon," Officer Stan Parker told those in attendance.

One of those family members, Maxine Howie David, was in Big Spring from Stockton, Calif., to honor the sacrifice of her father, Henry Howie. Howie was the first Big Spring police officer killed in the line of duty. He died Aug. 10, 1931, she said.

Mrs. David said a friend sent her notice of the upcoming memorial ceremony. "So I called up the chief of police's office to find out when it was ... and we planned it so we'd be here," she said.

SENTENCE: Jury gives Goodman 30 years

(From 1A)

McDaniel, testified that after Ms. Goodman's death, the family found the jewelry she was looking for. It was in the shed, he said. He said a few weeks before her death her room had been painted and her possessions were moved to the storage unit at that time.

Goodman testified that the day of the murder had been "one of the best days" of his life until the murder. He said all day long he received praise from teachers who normally didn't like him and he won first place in a regional competition for a lamp he built.

He said when he arrived home from school that day his aunt began asking him what took him so long to get home from school.

He said he loved his aunt, but he didn't care for the way she treated him.

"A few times we got along, but it was usually when I was doing something for her ... she griped on me a lot," Goodman said as he detailed a list of things he did that aggravated the woman.

Goodman said she had mentioned her missing jewelry several times to him and he told her he thought it might be in the shed. He said she tried to move some boxes and he attempted to help her because she had recently had surgery. He said she slapped his hand away and said she could do it herself.

He said she began to point her finger at him and accuse him of stealing the jewelry.

"She was like Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," he said.

Goodman said he argued with the woman for a few minutes before leaving her in the shed and going into the house.

"I was really mad," Goodman said. "Earlier in the day I knew something had to go wrong; it did on most good days. That really messed my day all up. I can't describe really how mad I was. I could say it wasn't mad enough to do anything."

He said he "truly and honestly has no idea" why he killed her.

"It's hard for me to accept ... she didn't deserve to die. I loved her, but I hated what she did. She didn't deserve to die," Goodman said. "I feel so bad. It's just indescribable pain. What I've done to my parents, how my family is all split up. I'm sort of still in a state of shock. I still can't believe I did it, even though I did."

"I ain't a violent person ... and I don't really like knives. I don't like fighting," he said.

When asked about the severity of the crime — 18 stab wounds including slashes to her throat, wrist, stabs in the neck, arms, skull and torso — he said, "to tell you the truth, I didn't even know it was that bad. I truly didn't."

Goodman began to sob as he testified to thinking life wasn't worth living any more despite his family telling him everything will work out.

"It seems like I can't live with what I've done. It's too hard for me."

He said the medication he was taking for his attention deficit disorder made him short-tempered and said "little things would set me off." He said he no longer takes the medication.

A psychologist who treated Goodman as a preteen said he tested positive for mental disorders. Another psychologist testified that most people who commit "passion"

'There is no justice in a slight punishment for a heinous crime. He's another violent act waiting to happen.'

— Robin Sams,
Midland County assistant district attorney crimes against a family member have a lower repeat rate than for those who commit other crimes.

During closing arguments, defense attorney H.W. "Woody" Leverett asked the jury to consider the "true story behind the incident."

He said Goodman's poor upbringing is not an excuse, but asked for understanding of a young man with mental disorders.

Leverett spoke of family members' testimony that Ms. Goodman was never affectionate to Goodman and referred to the nitpicking she did to her nephew.

He called the murder a "frenzy" of pent-up rejection and insecurity.

Midland County Assistant District Attorney Robin Sams told the jury that many people come from situations worse than unstable homes and ADD diagnoses and "they don't kill their great-aunt."

Ms. Sams again introduced photos of the victim that show the wounds she suffered, including those she received in an attempt to fight off her assailant and those that contributed to her death.

She said Goodman should receive a long sentence because of the following reasons: his victim was a defenseless, small elderly woman, the savagery of the crime — torturing her with repeated stabs and cuts, the humiliation of having her face disfigured and the venting of his frustrations on the woman.

"There is no justice in a slight punishment for a heinous crime. He's another violent act waiting to happen."

Ms. Sams said she was satisfied with the sentence. Leverett declined to comment.

Goodman could have been sentenced in the range of five to 99 years or life in prison. He must serve one-half of his sentence before he is eligible for parole.

Gramm battles many distractions in his pursuit of presidency

By John King
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When Texas Sen. Phil Gramm entered the 1996 presidential race, aides contended he had the three assets most critical to any candidate: message, money and the discipline to stick to a game plan.

But those strengths haven't kept him from controversy in the campaign's early phase.

First came squabbling between Gramm and New Hampshire officials, including popular Republican Gov. Stephen Merrill, over what local GOP leaders view as Gramm-backed efforts to infringe on New Hampshire's traditional first-in-the-nation primary.

Gramm insists he's on New Hampshire's side, but the bickering continues and has probably cost him a ny chance of winning Merrill's endorsement.

Then, despite Gramm's solid conservative credentials, he was criticized by several social conservative leaders for not addressing abortion and other items on their agenda.

To quiet that criticism, Gramm in recent weeks has delivered speeches declaring his opposition to abortion and promising to reverse President Clinton's policy on homosexuals in the military.

But just as Gramm appeared to be making inroads among social conservatives, he acknowledged this week that as a college professor in 1974 he invested $7,500 to help finance a movie called "Beauty Queens," which was to be an R-rated spoof of beauty pageants.

The latest distraction came as several new polls showed Gramm well behind GOP front-runner Bob Dole in early primary and caucus states. In Iowa, Gramm was a distant second, more than 30 points back. In New Hampshire, he was third, well behind Dole and trailing conservative commentator Patrick Buchanan.

While the first balloting is nine months away, those are hardly encouraging numbers for a campaign whose goal in these early months was to boost Gramm's national profile and to establish him as the conservative challenger to Dole.

"There is no question if we had our druthers we would rather not have had the distractions," said Fred Meyer, a Gramm political adviser and the former Texas Republican chairman. "But we also know that this is the kind of thing that goes with a campaign."

Gramm's New Hampshire campaign director, Mike Dennehy, acknowledges a series of "paper cuts" frustrating to a campaign trying to build early momentum. "But they have mostly been media stories," he said. "In grass-roots organizing we are doing quite well."

There was nothing illegal about the investment, which Gramm said turned into a total loss, and the movie never was made. The question is whether it will hurt Gramm's effort to portray himself as "conservative before conservative was cool" with an influential GOP group whose leaders are somewhat skeptical of his commitment to their issues.

"It clearly doesn't help, but I don't think that by itself it is all that major," said Merle Black of Emory University, an expert on Southern politics. "But among the Christian Coalition constituency, it could hurt him and put him on the defensive. He's going to have to explain it."

Gramm called around the country to key campaign supporters Wednesday when word of the movie investment surfaced, and those supporters in turn called local campaign leaders and backers.

"People call up wondering what in the world is going on," said Meyer. "But I haven't had one irate caller."

Contacted Thursday, several Christian Coalition leaders from key GOP primary states did not seem overly concerned with the movie disclosure.

"That is 21 years ago and a lot of people change their views," said David Nelson, the Colorado chapter leader. "It just depends how he handles it," said Ione Dilley, the Iowa Christian Coalition director.

Gary Bauer of the Family Research Council, a Washington-based conservative group, said he did not personally believe the movie investment would cause Gramm much damage. "But sometimes the grass-roots reaction surprises us," Bauer said in an interview.

Drug reduces rejection after transplants, doctor says

HOUSTON (AP) — Preliminary studies show that a new drug can dramatically reduce the rate of organ rejection after kidney transplants, a Houston physician says.

Dr. Barry Kahan, director of kidney transplant services at Hermann Hospital, said the use of the drug rapamycin with standard post-transplant therapy can reduce organ rejection by 25 percent.

Kahan was to discuss his findings Friday at a meeting of the American Society of Transplant Surgeons in Chicago.

Kahan and a team of doctors at the University of Texas Medical School at Houston found that only about 5 percent of 71 patients rejected transplants within six months when they were given small amounts of rapamycin combined with the anti-rejection drug cyclosporine.

That compares with a 30 percent rejection rate among a similar number who received the conventional cyclosporine care, he said.

"The rapamycin is used almost as a spice," Kahan told the Houston Chronicle. "It increases the effect of cyclosporine."

Further studies involving more patients are being undertaken and still bigger studies are planned, he said.

As common as transplants have become, rejection is still a big problem.

In the three months after a kidney transplant, 30 percent to 50 percent of patients experience some episodes of rejection, which occurs when the patient's immune system attacks what it recognizes as foreign tissue.

The addition of rapamycin reduces side effects caused by cyclosporine and steroid treatment, thus shortening hospital stays and reducing hospital admissions, Kahan said.

Cyclosporine revolutionized transplant medicine when approved in the early 1980s. It suppresses the production of biochemicals that affect the body's reaction to foreign tissues.

Kahan said rapamycin works to stop those biochemicals from activating cells that attack transplanted organs.

Death squads reemerge on streets of El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — With names like "Black Shadow" and "White Hand," a new kind of death squad is creeping back onto the streets of El Salvador.

They use the same tactics employed in the killing of thousands of leftists in the 1980s, but this time they target suspected common criminals — and many citizens are applauding them.

A death-squad group calling itself "Black Shadow" has claimed responsibility for the May 9 killings of four youths, all reputed gang members. Squad members travelling in a van with smoky windows stopped the four on a darkened street in a poor San Salvador suburb, forced them to lie face down in the street and shot each one once in the head.

At least two other groups, calling themselves "White Hand" and the "Transitory Executive Anti-Delinquent Command," in recent months have vowed in communiques distributed to news organizations to wage war on common criminals, particularly youth gangs.

There are no firm government statistics on the number of people killed by the new death squads, but police estimate at least 25 murders by the squads over the past six months.

In communiques and anonymous calls to radio stations, spokesmen for the squads have said they kill suspected criminals to help control the crime wave plaguing this Central American country.

Government statistics show there were 1,135 homicides, 6,443 gunshot wounds, 1,876 rapes and 3,484 robberies in El Salvador last year, the types of crimes that are the hallmark of the nation's gangs.

The vice minister of Public Security, Hugo Barrera, blamed the inability to control the death squads — and the gangs — on the previous government and on the former guerrillas. He said both failed to prevent "the lack of security that the country faces in the post-war era."

Similar death squads have sprung up over the past year in Honduras, where political death squads also operated during the 1980s.

Despite their experience with death squad horrors of the 1980s, ordinary Salvadorans fed up with growing crime are voicing their support for the vigilante attacks on radio shows and in media interviews.

They say that the police have done too little to fight the gangs that threaten them and their families, their homes and businesses. And because the squads say they target only criminals, most average citizens don't fear that they themselves would be targets.

"It's good someone is fighting the criminals and gang members," said one housewife, Maria Graciela Cuellar, 28. "But on the other hand, these could end up as extermination squads, singling out opposition politicians."

Human rights activists fear that the government may somehow be involved in the groups and share the concern that the attacks could turn political.

They note that death squads already have made what appear to be political threats against judges, labor unions, teachers associations and former guerrilla fighters.

The Catholic Church's legal office last week charged that the squads include members of the Central American country's defunct security forces, members of paramilitary groups and even current members of the National Civilian Police force.

The new squads "could produce a new wave of political violence against the citizenry," it warned.

Meanwhile, the gangs that have been targeted recently announced that they will respond in kind to violent attacks against their members.

Last weekend, a man who identified himself as a gang leader told a radio station that his group was responsible for a grenade attack on a car carrying suspected death squad members. Three men in the car were wounded.

A gang leader, who asked that he not be identified for fear of reprisal, told an Associated Press reporter that his group has begun to stockpile weapons to defend itself.

"We have heavy armament, grenades and other arms that we will wait until those guys come into our territory," the gang leader said during an interview in the poor capital suburb of Soyapango.

"We aren't afraid of them."

Pope returns to homeland of waning faith

SKOCZOW, Poland (AP) — Jan Swoboda beams with pride. He and his crew built the hill-top altar where 250,000 Poles are expected Monday for a Mass celebrated by "their" pope.

"We are so happy to have him here at last," Swoboda said. As bishop of nearby Krakow, John Paul II was a frequent guest of the highlanders in these Beskid mountains.

The highlanders are overjoyed that the pope, whose previous five trips home bypassed their region, is coming to the mountains he knows so well.

But their enthusiasm is not so widely shared. The homeland that greeted John Paul so triumphantly in 1979, a year after his election, has changed radically. Though nine in 10 Poles are Roman Catholic, religion largely went out of fashion with communism's defeat.

The one-day visit to the southern cities of Skoczow, Bielsko Biala and Zywiec, wedged into a trip to the neighboring Czech Republic, will be the shortest of Karol Wojtyla's trips home — and perhaps the most difficult.

Though they may pay little attention to the church in their daily lives, many Poles are hoping for guidance from the pope, who turned 75 this week and now walks gingerly with a cane after a series of health troubles.

"When he was coming in the old days he would provide encouragement," said Helena Budka a charity worker from nearby Zywiec. "Now we still need it, not less than in the old days."

Many Poles disagree with the pope's conservative teachings, but they are also confused by the post-communist society they fought so hard for and are now struggling to define.

Crime and divorce are up. Unemployment is at 17 percent. Politicians do more squabbling than problem-solving and fewer Poles are looking to the Catholic Church for spiritual nourishment.

The church has plenty of priests in high places, from the president's palace to army units. Church lobbying has succeeded in mandating religion classes in public schools and getting parliament to approve a virtual ban on abortion — as well as a law requiring media to respect "Christian values."

But Catholic clergy overzealousness and doctrinaire support for papal assertions — such as that artificial contraception is a sin — have brought a backlash.

Six years ago, the church ranked first in public trust — almost 90 percent of Poles agreed it well served the society. Today it trails the military and the police with 57 percent support.

Poles "are drunk with the newly gained freedom," said bishop Tadeusz Pieronek, the Polish Catholic Church's second-ranking official. "They want to use it and very often abuse it."

He said his countrymen are caught up in the money-chasing rat race, intoxicated by the very Western consumerism John Paul II frequently criticizes.

Cult's followers begin to lower resistance under police grilling

TOKYO (AP) — Although doomday cult leader Shoko Asahara is maintaining his innocence under intense police grilling, some of his followers reportedly are confessing the cult was linked to nerve gas attacks.

News reports Friday said that Seichi Endo, a leading member of the Aum Shinri Kyo cult, has told police he made sarin at the cult's compound near Mount Fuji where Asahara was arrested Tuesday.

Sarin is the nerve gas that was spread through the Tokyo subway system on March 20, killing 12 people and sickening 5,500.

Earlier reports have said that a top cult scientist, Masami Tsuchiya, told police that Asahara ordered a sarin attack last June in the central town of Matsumoto, in which seven people died.

Japanese prosecutors traditionally rely heavily on confessions — which they often call the "king of evidence" — to make their cases. Confessions could be especially important in the Aum case because there appears to be little physical evidence directly linking the cult to the attacks.

Asahara reportedly has taken a new tack with his interrogators: flattery.

"You investigators look really cool, like detectives in TV dramas," he told his questioners, according to Kyodo News Service.

Two other cult members, while refusing to respond to questions about the subway attack, have also begun to lower their resistance to police investigators.

The Asahi Shimbun newspaper reported in Friday evening editions that Kiyohide Hayakawa, the cult's "construction minister," gave police a letter declaring he wanted to quit the cult. Hayakawa has also admitted involvement in some lesser crimes, the Asahi said.

Takeshi Matsumoto, another cult leader, told police he had been drugged and had his fingertips sliced off by a cult doctor to prevent identification, Japanese media said. As a result, Matsumoto can't lift anything heavier than a piece of paper with his fingers.

In another development, police have also found evidence suggesting the cult was linked to an abortive cyanide-gas attack earlier this month in Shinjuku station, Japan's busiest rail station.

Burning bags containing chemical compounds were found and extinguished before they could mix. Experts said if the poison were released, it could have killed up to 14,000 people.

Troops burn Serb houses, destroy church

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnia's war moved off the battlefield and into civilian life Friday when government troops burned Serb houses in the northwest and Serbs destroyed a Croatian church to the east.

About 6,000 Serbs were on the run after government troops took territory this week near the northwestern town of Bihac, U.N. officials said.

The troops systematically torched Serb homes not damaged by fighting, said Lt. Col. Walt Natynczyk, a U.N. spokesman in Zagreb, Croatia. Homes in six villages were burned, according to Bosnian Serb sources.

It was the sixth church destroyed in recent weeks, apparently by Serbs retaliating for battlefield setbacks.

To the east, a Roman Catholic church was blown up Thursday near the Bosnian Serb stronghold of Banja Luka, according to Kris Janowski, a U.N. spokesman for the U.N. refugee agency.

It was the sixth church destroyed in recent weeks, apparently by Serbs retaliating for battlefield setbacks. Banja Luka's beleaguered Roman Catholic bishop, Franjo Komarica, went on hunger strike in protest, said Janowski.

"An atmosphere of panic and fear reigns" among the few Croats left in the Banja Luka region, said Christiane Berthiaume, spokeswoman for the U.N. refugee agency at its Geneva headquarters.

Serbs forced local Croats to dismantle the fence around the ruins of the church Friday, Komarica said, according to the IKA Catholic news agency in Zagreb.

Serbs are Eastern Orthodox; Croats are Roman Catholic. Banja Luka Serbs have nearly homogenized the region, clearing it of most Croats and Muslims.

Like the torching near government-held

Bihac, the destruction of the churches was meant to drive other ethnic groups out of the region.

Sporadic mortar explosions echoed in Sarajevo Friday, but the level of fighting across Bosnia decreased from early this week, when the worst battles in two years rocked the city. At least seven people died and some 50 were wounded.

It was unclear whether the hull was linked to negotiations between Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic and U.S. envoy Robert Frasure on recognizing Bosnia's borders.

In return for such a step, Milosevic would get suspension of international sanctions on Serbia. His recognition would deal a huge blow to secessionist Serbs in Croatia and Bosnia, who want to join Serbia proper.

Rebel Serbs in Bosnia hold some two-thirds of the country and reject an international peace plan that would require them to hand back some land to the Bosnian government.

In Belgium, NATO asked its members to confirm their commitment to covering the 30,000 U.N. troops in Bosnia and Croatia should they decide to withdraw.

The United States has offered to provide as many as 25,000 of the 40,000 troops NATO has said it is willing to commit to ensuring the U.N. troops get out of the former Yugoslavia safely.

Rio names former terrorist hunter as new security chief

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Rio de Janeiro state has stepped up its war on violent cocaine traffickers by naming a veteran terrorist-hunter as its security chief. The appointment caused a stir because the new chief once commanded a dreaded army unit that killed political prisoners.

Gen. Nilton Cerqueira left his post as a federal congressman to accept the job of quashing the murderous drug gangs who have defied Rio's police and the army.

"Cerqueira is a man of combat," said Rio de Janeiro state Gov. Marcello Alencar.

That's precisely what concerns some human rights activists and leftists. Cerqueira is a former commander of the anti-subversion unit that tortured and killed political prisoners during a 1964-85 military dictatorship.

"This appointment could show a lack of concern for the fundamental rights of citizens," the U.S.-based group Human Rights Watch-Americas said in a statement Friday.

Cerqueira, 64, took charge on Thursday promising fast action to end a "climate of urban terror."

Experts: Widespread quarantine is ineffective, counterproductive

MBANKANA, Zaire (AP) — The government decided Friday to ease a quarantine meant to keep the deadly Ebola virus from spreading, but thousands of people trying to leave the "Hot Zone" were still trapped behind roadblocks.

Soldiers wouldn't let them pass and there was little water, food or shelter, increasing the risk of an outbreak of other diseases such as diarrhea.

Hoping to keep the Ebola virus from spreading to the capital of Kinshasa, the government had decreed a quarantine for Kikwit — a city of 600,000 where the virus surfaced two months ago — and the surrounding province of Bandundu.

On Friday, government officials said the quarantine would be relaxed to cover only Kikwit, 250 miles east of Kinshasa. People from elsewhere in Bandundu province will be allowed to travel and enter Kinshasa province.

"We are following the advice of medical experts who confirm that a broader quarantine is unnecessary," Health Minister Lonyangela Bopenda Bokuma said.

People stranded at roadblocks will be examined and "those who show no symptoms of any infectious diseases will be allowed to continue their journey," World Health Organization spokesman Philippe Stroot said in Geneva.

However, it was unclear how long it would take for all the travelers to be checked or whether authorities in the field even had the capacity to conduct them.

The incurable virus has killed 89 people. At least another 35 people are believed to be infected.

So far, no Ebola cases have been diagnosed in Kinshasa, a city of 6 million people. In Kikwit, five new cases are appearing daily, said Dr. Jean-Jacques Muyembe Tsimba, a virus expert who helped identify Ebola in the 1970s.

But medical experts say a wide-scale quarantine is not only ineffective but counterproductive.

"As soon as you start closing people in you give them a bloody good reason to run," Bob Swanepoel, a South African virologist, said in Kikwit. "The more they run, the more they spread the disease."

Muyembe urged authorities to begin a radio and television campaign to explain how the virus is transmitted — through exposure to body fluids — and to send more doctors and medical equipment to Kikwit.

The Bandundu region is agriculturally rich, growing much of the corn, casava and fruits that feed Kinshasa.

Pascal Payanzo, governor of Bandundu, welcomed the narrowing of the quarantine. "There is no reason to stop all travel and trade," he said.

In the past week, several thousand people trying to get to Kinshasa have arrived from towns in the quarantine region at roadblocks such as the one in Mbakana, about 100 miles east of Kinshasa. About 250 big trucks have lined up there, most of them carrying produce from the quarantine area.

People were sleeping out in the open; there are no villages nearby. They had no clean water and were living off produce from trucks. Officials feared an epidemic of bloody diarrhea among the travelers.

Dozens of soldiers armed with Uzi submachine guns and whips were standing guard to keep people from passing.

People stuck in Mbakana insisted that if they were sick they would have started dying by now.

"There are neither deaths nor illnesses here. In fact, there have been three births. We are clearly all in good shape," said Jean-Claude Mutela, a Kikwit resident who says he has business in Kinshasa.

But some residents in Kinshasa were worried about the arrival of visitors from the infected region.

"It would be a disaster if they let people cross into Kinshasa," said Jerome Mihigo, a computer repairman.

"In the interior, they get around on foot, cities and villages aren't crowded like Kinshasa. Here we're packed together. We ride buses. We work in big offices. The epidemic could spread like crazy."

The virus was named for a river in Zaire that passes by a village where the virus was discovered in 1976.

Two girls survive jaguars, snakes in jungle ordeal

GEORGETOWN, Guyana (AP)

— Two girls lost in the dark Amazon jungle after their uncle died spent a month foraging for berries and evading jaguars, crocodiles and poisonous snakes before being rescued by miners.

The parents of 13-year-old Bertina Domingo and her 9-year-old sister, Bernadette, had given them up for dead after they failed to return from what should have been a short trip through the dense forest.

On Thursday, as the girls lay in a Georgetown hospital covered in angry red mosquito bites, gifts poured in from people touched by their pluck and the government declared them national heroines.

"We respect them for being able to survive that ordeal," said Vibe De Souza, minister of Indian affairs.

It began with the Easter holiday, when schools were closed and the girls' uncle decided to take to see their family farm, about an hour from their home through the jungle on foot.

The girls were no stranger to the Amazon. They belong to the Wapishiana, an Amazon Indian tribe. They left their home in Apter, an Amazon village about 200 miles south of the capital Georgetown, carrying a box of matches, two hammocks and machetes.

At some point during their trek, the uncle lost his way. When the three didn't return, police and local residents tried in vain to track them.

Speaking to reporters from their beds in St. Joseph's Mercy Hospital on Thursday, the girls said they couldn't say when their uncle died, only that they left home April 7, the Friday before Palm Sunday.

In broken English, they described watching him grow thin and become weak. He may have died of the same strain of malaria that Bernadette is suffering from, the phaliparum strain, which can kill within days if not treated.

Left to fend for themselves, the girls hacked their way through the forest, losing track of time. They staved off hunger with berries and other wild fruits and, occasionally, a feast of fish.

Bernadette said they cooked the fish over the flames of the wax-like gum that comes from the Haiwa, a type of tree. They also used the gum as candles to light their way through the dark forest.

Bertina, who is being treated for dysentery she got from drinking creek water, said the most frightening moment was when a jaguar, called a bush tiger locally, came charging at them.

The girls ran to scramble up a tree, but Bernadette stumbled and fell.

"I tell she to climb up quick," Bertina said. "We come down from the tree only when the tiger went away."

At one point, they narrowly missed being rescued, Bernadette said.

"We walk and we hear an engine and I tell she, 'Hear the pork knocker (small gold miner) engine, let me walk up quick.'" But the noise faded away before she could get to the vehicle.

NASA announces deep cuts

■ Agency would cut about 28,000 civil service, contractor positions, restructure each of its 10 centers — start process that would eventually turn over operation of space shuttle program to private industry.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — NASA said Friday that it would make deep cuts in its work force and streamline its operations as its budget shrinks in a new era of austerity.

Under the plan announced by Daniel S. Goldin, administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the agency would cut about 28,000 civil service and contractor positions, restructure each of its 10 centers — several would lose 20 to 30 percent of their workers — and start a process that would eventually turn over operation of the space shuttle program to private industry.

Industry officials have said they could run the shuttle program for less money than the government and still maintain safety.

Goldin said planned improvements in efficiency meant that none of the agency's programs would be canceled or even significantly curtailed.

The plan would mean the loss of 3,560 Civil Service jobs at the space agency, reducing its work force to 17,500 people by the year 2000 from 21,060.

After the cuts, he said, NASA would be the size it was in 1961, before the nation began the Apollo program that culminated July 20, 1969, when astronaut Neil Armstrong became the first man to set foot on the moon. The proposal would reduce the number of jobs at NASA contractors by about 25,000 nationwide.

Goldin said that every agency in the government was facing streamlining or reductions because of budget constraints, and that the space agency had done its part.

It was in the process of reducing its budget by $35 billion over five years when President Clinton asked in January for an additional $5 billion savings between now and the end of the decade, he said. Under that plan, the agency's annual budget of $14.2 billion was expected to decline to $13 billion by the year 2000.

"We've found ways to streamline operations, reduce overlap and significantly cut costs without cutting our world-class space and aeronautics programs," Goldin said. "We're willing to do our part."

But at a news conference to announce the cutbacks, the administrator denounced Republican plans disclosed last week that would cut NASA's budget by at least another $1 billion a year. Additional reductions of this size would require ending vital programs, possibly closing some field centers and gambling on the future of the space program, he said.

"We've taken the appropriate cuts and we've done it without complaining," Goldin asserted. "But the cuts proposed on Capitol Hill go too far. I'll fight the added cuts."

Rep. Robert S. Walker, R-Pa., chairman of the House Science Committee, defended the additional NASA cuts proposed in the House budget resolution, saying they were necessary to balance the budget by the year 2002.

"Republicans made hard choices because NASA, just like every other federal agency, had to take its fair share of cuts," Walker said. He added that the choice to reduce spending by cutting more than 25,000 jobs in the aerospace industry was made by the Clinton administration, not by Republicans.

Under the NASA plan, space shuttle operations now scattered at four centers will be consolidated at the Kennedy Space Center to reduce the staff and save money. Goldin said he wants the agency to get out of the business of operating such systems as the space shuttle and communications satellite networks, and concentrate on research and development.

As part of this effort, the administrator said, the space agency was seeking to turn over the operation of the entire shuttle fleet to a private contractor. Once a system of having a single prime contractor take charge of shuttle operations proves workable, he added, NASA will look into the possibility of privatizing the shuttle and possibly transferring the equipment to a private operator.

The new plan calls for saving money by streamlining operations and consolidating different administrative jobs at certain centers to reduce duplication.

Instead of each center having its own payroll office, for example, accounting and handling paychecks will be consolidated at one center, resulting in reducing scores of jobs, an official said.

The plan also calls for transferring the management of some science programs to institutes on or near centers that would be operated by universities or business partnerships.

In addition, the management and operation of major NASA science and technology programs will be given to individual centers instead of being scattered among several, officials said.

NASA officials said they believe they have the authority to make most of the changes, but some may require congressional action.

Prosecutor offers gruesome scenario of double murder

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Nicole Brown Simpson was likely lying face down when her killer put his foot on her back, pulled her head up by the hair and slit her throat, a prosecutor said Friday.

At a hearing over whether graphic autopsy photos should be introduced, defense attorney Robert Shapiro responded that the pictures would cause "revulsion and horror" in jurors. "It's unlikely anyone would look at these photos and not get sick to their stomach," he said.

Offering the most detailed description to date of the murders of Ms. Simpson and Ronald Goldman, Deputy District Attorney Brian Kelberg said the defense was trying to "keep from the jury the best evidence of what we contend O.J. Simpson did."

Kelberg, a newcomer to the case, also raised the possibility prosecutors will seek an instruction in second-degree murder in case jurors don't find the premeditation necessary for a first-degree-murder conviction.

Defense attorney Gerald Uelman said the defense continues to pursue an "all or nothing" verdict. The jurors and Simpson weren't in court for the afternoon hearing. Earlier, a DNA expert underwent a second day of cross-examination.

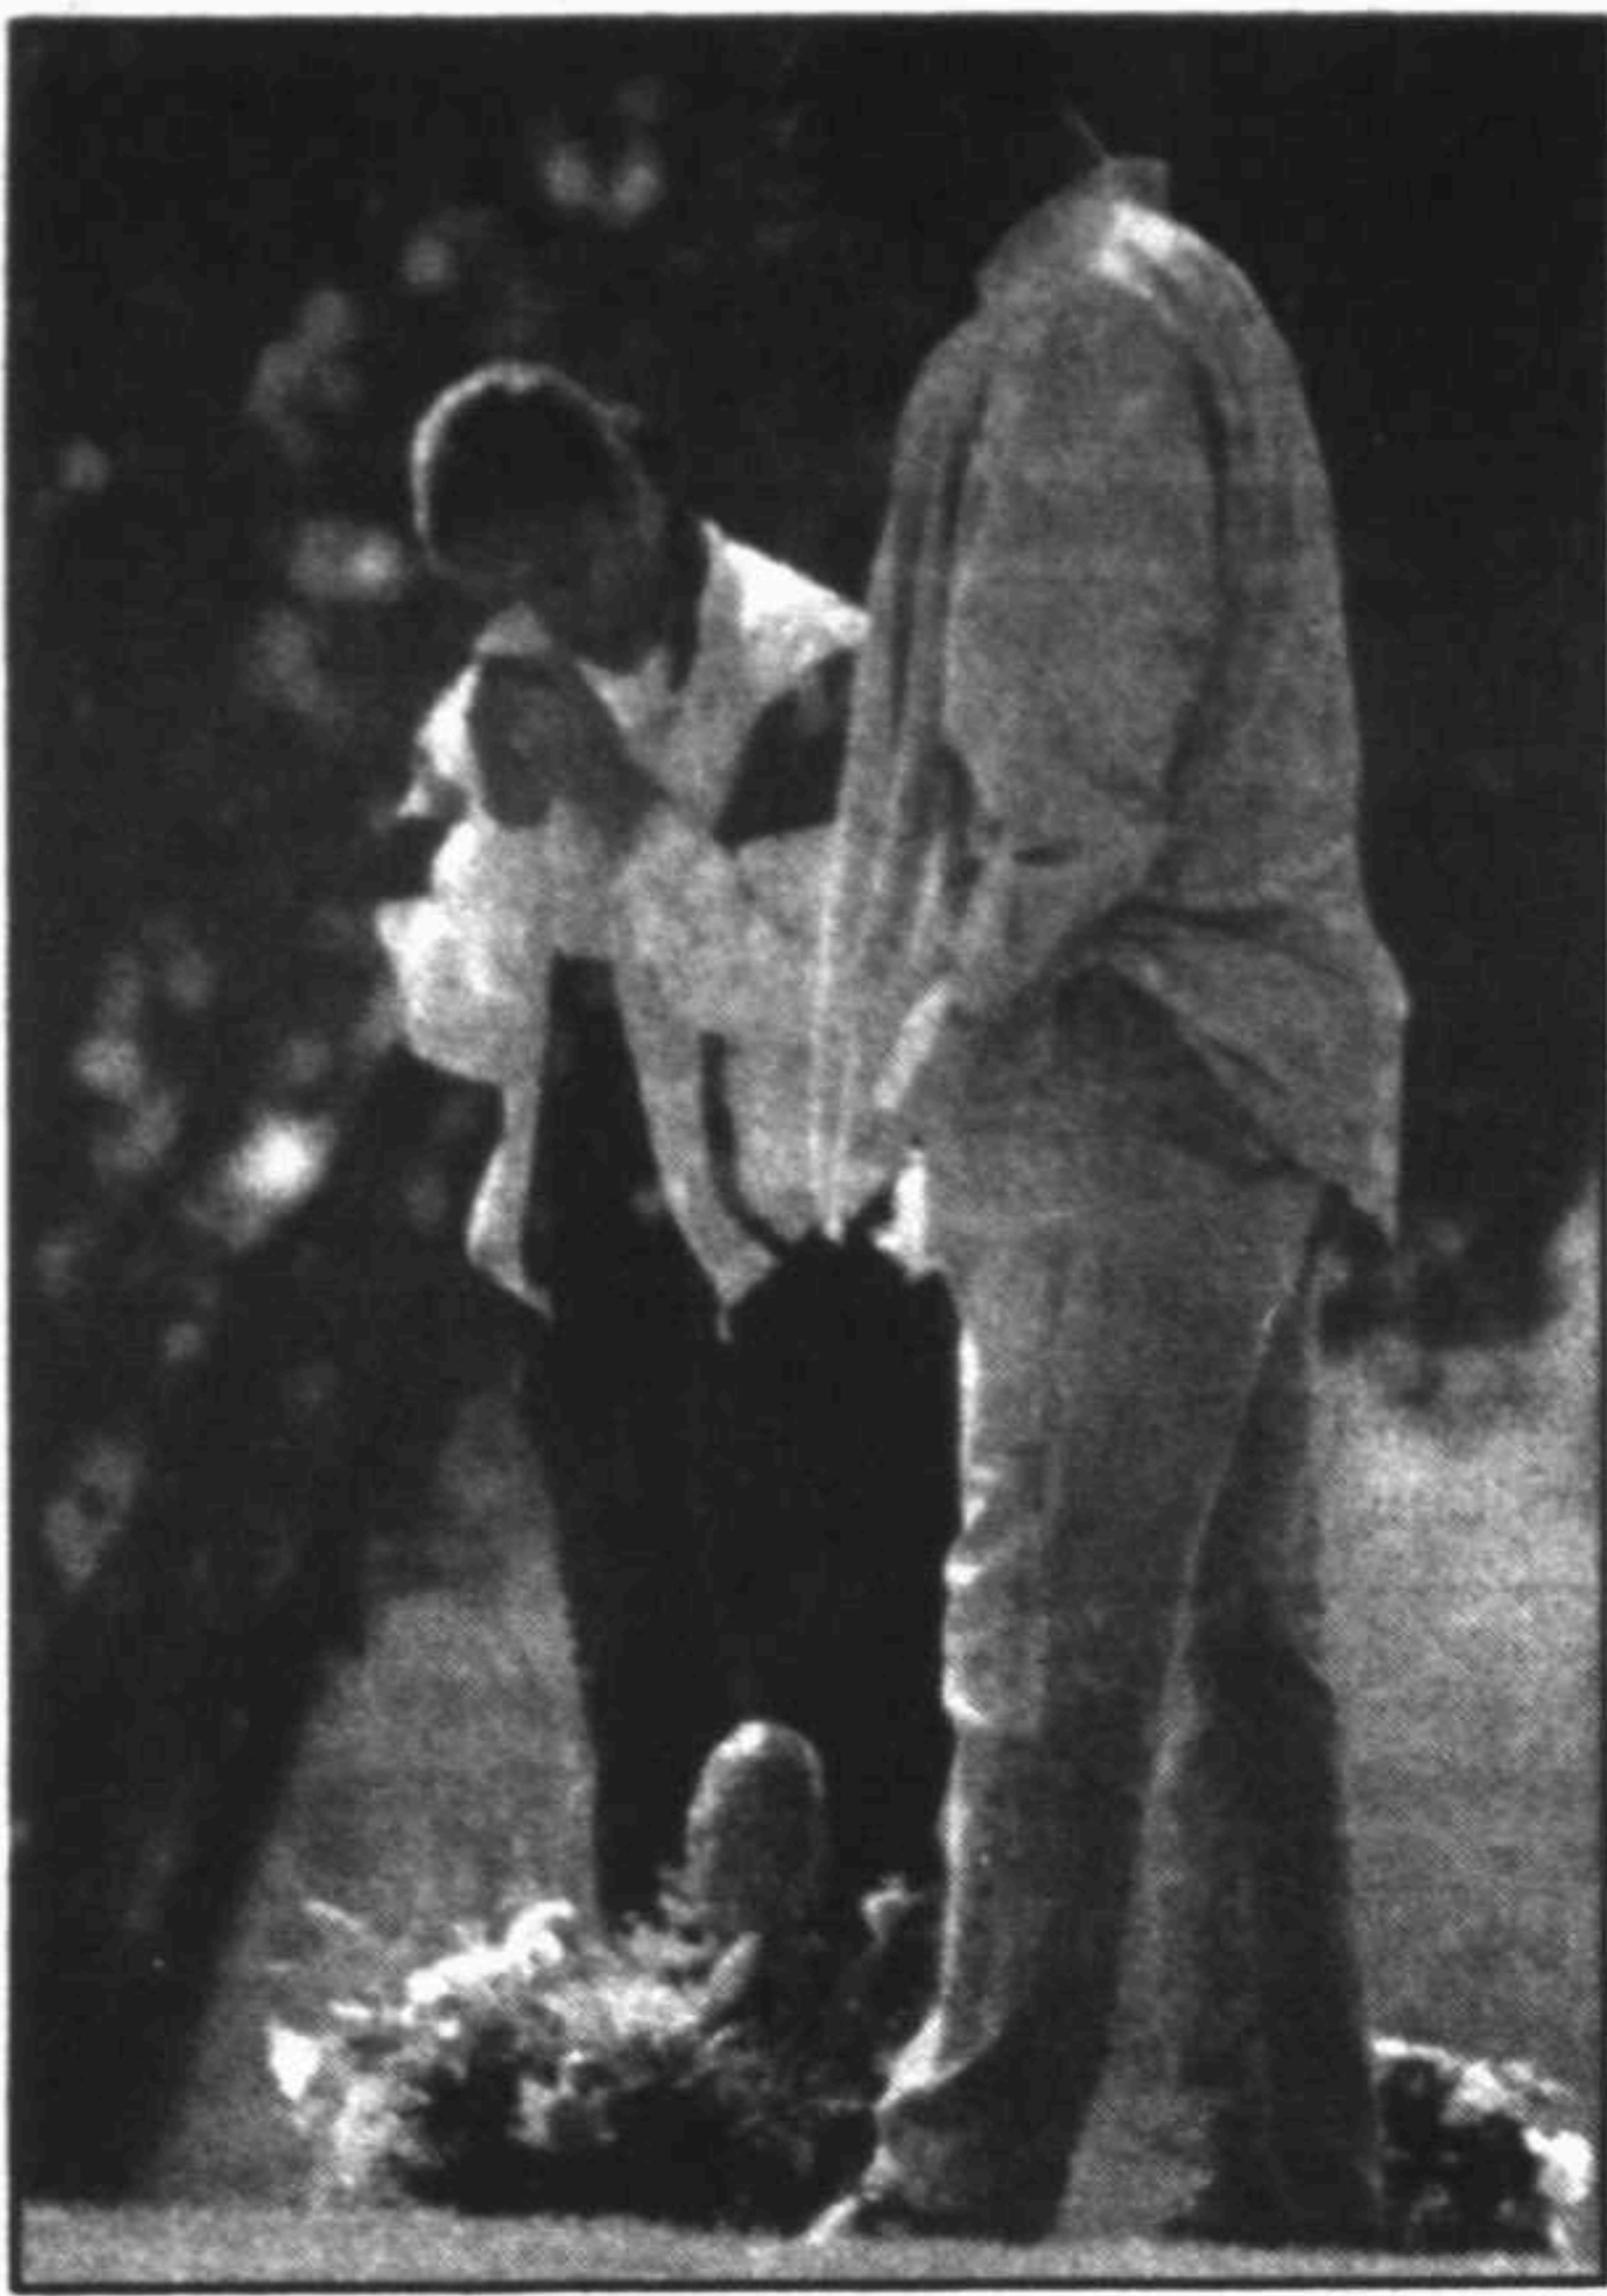

In arguing for the photos, Kelberg said Ms. Simpson's wounds are consistent with her killer "coming up from behind her, placing a foot on the part of her back that has this nonspecific blunt force trauma ... then pulling with one hand her hair and pulling her head back, which would obviously then expose the full area of the neck."

"And then with his right hand taking a knife and drawing it across from the left to the right ... to cause what is this major wound that would sever both the carotids of the left and right and the jugular veins of both the left and right sides," he said.

Although prosecutors have said Goldman fought his assailant, Kelberg said Goldman's wounds show that he also was stabbed when he could offer "little, if any, resistance."

Simpson's motive in delivering the coup de grace to Goldman — Ms. Simpson's friend and waiter who was returning a pair of glasses — was to avoid being identified, Kelberg said.

Both victims' wounds were described in detail at last summer's preliminary hearing, and prosecutor Marcia Clark offered a tentative scenario of the killings during her opening statement. But her reconstruction wasn't as graphic or detailed as Kelberg's.

Shapiro argued that the heads of the victims had been propped up in the photos to show open, gaping throat wounds. Kelberg said this was necessary to show the force of the knife thrusts.

Judge Lance Ito said he would issue written rulings on which photos could be used.

Outside court, the family and friends of Ms. Simpson marked what would have been her 36th birthday.

The family issued a public birthday message and Simpson's friend and a daughter by his first wife left orchids and a card at Ms. Simpson's grave, which was decorated with bouquets and balloons.

Foundation agrees to liquidate its assets

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — With fraud investigators closing in, a foundation that once promised to double the money of charities and philanthropists agreed Friday to liquidate its assets and begin settling up with its creditors.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Bruce Fox agreed to change the bankruptcy status of the Foundation for New Era Philanthropy from Chapter 11 to Chapter 7.

That means the death of the suburban Philadelphia foundation, which owes millions of dollars to some 300 creditors, including universities, museums and some of the nation's most sophisticated investors.

No timetable for repayment has been set because the organization's books are said to be in chaos.

New Era's founder, John G. Bennett Jr., requested Chapter 7 status after realizing he had no hope of reorganizing the foundation under Chapter 11, the organization's attorney, Neal Colton, told the judge.

"He no longer has the support of donors," Colton said. "Mr. Bennett has exhausted every possible charitable donor who might be willing to speak with him."

A Philadelphia lawyer, John Carroll III, was appointed as the interim trustee of New Era's assets.

No criminal charges have been filed, but the state has accused Bennett of running a Ponzi scheme, in which yesterday's creditors are paid off with today's donations. In a lawsuit, the Security and Exchange Commission has accused him of fraud for allegedly diverting $4.2 million to his businesses.

The FBI, the U.S. Attorney's Office and the state attorney general are also investigating. Federal agents on Thursday evening removed five boxes of items from Bennett's $620,000 home, for which he paid cash last year.

New Era promised Christian charities, major museums and universities and philanthropists it would double their money in six months with matching donations from anonymous benefactors. Then he was supposed to send the funds back to the nonprofit groups and to the philanthropists' favorite charities.

Over the weekend, Bennett acknowledged that the anonymous benefactors did not exist, according to New Era lawyers.

Postal customers give Nixon stamp of disapproval

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's love-hate relationship with Richard Nixon continues. Even a new stamp issued in his memory is enough to get people riled.

The postage stamp commemorating the 37th president seems to be generating nearly as much controversy as Nixon did in life.

Some 2.5 million of the stamps sold on the first day of issue — April 26 — with lines throughout the day at the Nixon Library in Yorba Linda, Calif.

But elsewhere sales have sometimes lagged, with some folks still holding a grudge and refusing to use the postage.

And at least one who puts Nixon's visage on his letters adds the words: "I am not a crook," recalling one of his most-quoted statements.

■ The opposition:

Omnika Simmons of New York said she "wouldn't buy it. Now that he's deceased, it's like anybody can commit any crime ... and then be totally forgiven for it later. I just don't think it's right."

"I hate to see him glorified in any way, yet he did do some constructive things for the country," said West Hartford, Conn., resident Stephanie Allinson.

"In a Democratic city he's not going to be popular," observed Walter Simpson, a clerk at Washington's main post office, who said some customers are rejecting the stamp.

■ The fans:

"I like Richard Nixon ... He may have done some things wrong, but I think he did a hell of a lot right," said Mace Berrin, 32, a postal customer in New York.

"My personal feeling is that he's a former president and he deserves a stamp regardless of any shenanigans," said Mark Petrizzo, a window clerk in the downtown post office in Hartford, Conn.

In New York, postal customer Jim Vitiello said: "I thought he was a decent president. Everybody makes mistakes. I have absolutely no negative connotations of it at all."

■ The humorous:

A Seattle postal clerk told of one customer "who came up and showed me that he had given Nixon a speech balloon saying 'I am not a crook' for every stamp that he had used."

"I'd say the reaction has been mixed," said postal clerk Phil Van Vleet in Des Moines, Iowa. He said one customer bought a stamp and commented: "I never thought I'd be licking the back of Nixon."

■ The indifferent:

"I don't matter to me, as long as it gets the mail there. But I guess I'd rather have Elvis," said postal customer Tony Janssen of Des Moines.

■ The sympathetic:

"Poor Nixon. I've had people come in and say, 'Give me any kind of stamp, just don't give me Nixon,'" said Ivy Delvalle, a New York City postal clerk.

"I wouldn't mind buying the stamp. Poor guy. I would've thought that people would have gotten over it by now," said Seattle customer Paul Billington.

Azeazly Jaffer, manager of stamp services for the post office, said a few offices have ordered extra Nixon stamps and none have been returned unsold.

Clinton to NRA: Give money back

WASHINGTON (AP) — An apology isn't enough, President Clinton said Friday, challenging the National Rifle Association to give up more than $1 million reaped from a fund-raising letter calling law enforcement officers "jack-booted thugs."

"I hope the NRA knows by now that anyone who pretends that police officers are the enemy is only giving aid and comfort to criminals who are really the enemy," said Clinton. He has battled the gun lobby throughout his presidency.

Leaders of major law enforcement organizations joined Clinton at the White House in denouncing the NRA and accusing it of putting police officers' lives in danger with inflammatory rhetoric.

"I think the NRA is just out to dishonor law enforcement," said Bob Scully, executive director of the National Association of Police Organizations.

The NRA, holding its annual convention in Phoenix, did not respond immediately to Clinton's challenge.

The group has been on the defensive since former President Bush resigned his lifetime NRA membership in protest of its accusations against police. After a week of growing criticism, the NRA apologized for any offense, particularly to law enforcement officials.

"If the NRA's apology is sincere," Clinton said, "what they ought to do is put their money where their mouth is. They ought to give up the ill-gotten gains from the bogus fund-raising letter. ... They ought to turn that money

President Clinton meets with law enforcement officials in the Cabinet Room of the White House, Friday. The president challenged the National Rifle Association to surrender the money it raised by a fund-raising letter that attacked law enforcement officers. AP Laserphoto over to the organization that helps the families of police officers who died in the line of duty."

"They made the money by attacking the police, they admitted they did the wrong thing, they ought to give the money up," the president said, flanked by uniformed officers in the Cabinet Room.

Clinton used the occasion to pledge anew that he will oppose any effort to repeal either the Brady Bill, with its restrictions on handgun purchases, or the ban on assault weapons, or to scale back a commitment to put 100,000 new police officers on the streets.

"If Congress gives in to the political pressure to do this and repeals any of these measures, I will veto them in a heartbeat," Clinton said. The president said the NRA, despite its apology, was bragging about the success of the fund-raising letter.

Indeed, NRA officials said the letter has drawn more than 900,000 responses, most of them positive, making it one of the group's most successful ever. NRA executive vice president Wayne LaPierre said it would raise well over $1 million.

Clinton's challenge to the NRA was echoed by leaders of police groups.

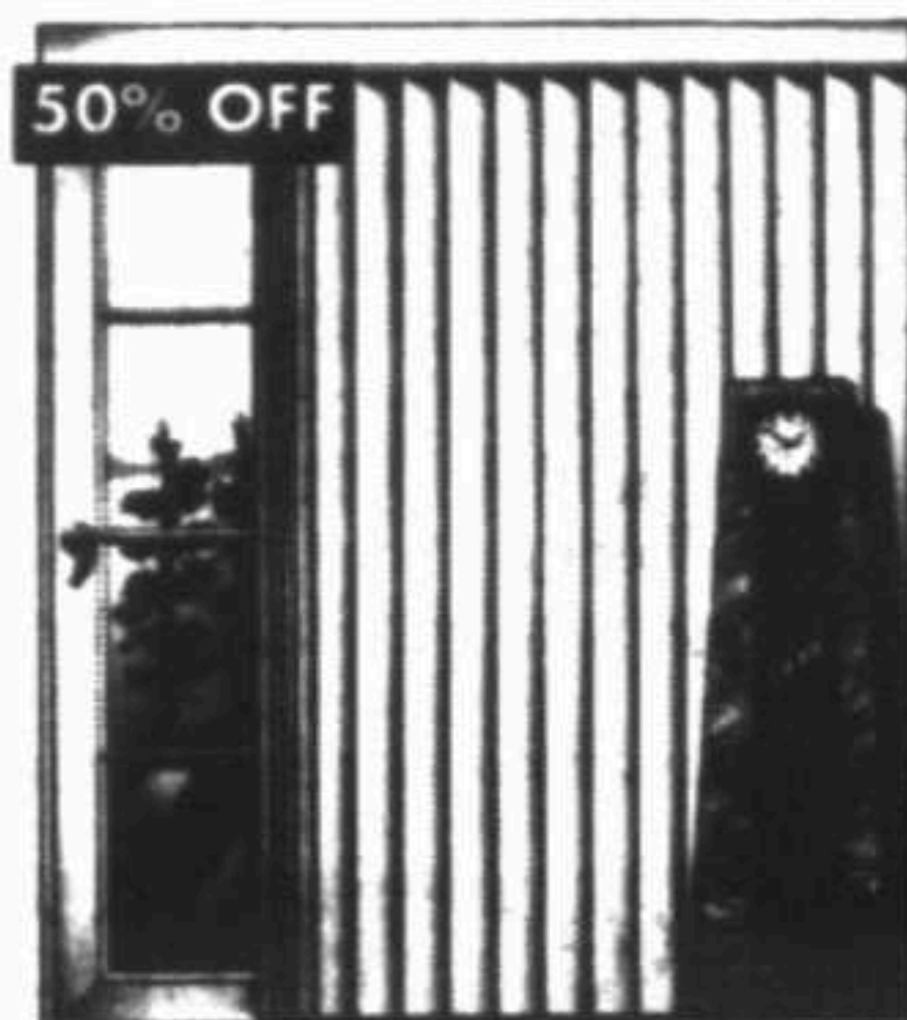

"If they raised that much money, then why don't they give it to law enforcement officers' widows and widowers ... and start their solicitation over again," said Scully.

"Every law enforcement officer in this country that does wear a badge ought to be outraged at what the NRA is doing," said Dewey Stokes, head of the Fraternal Order of Police.

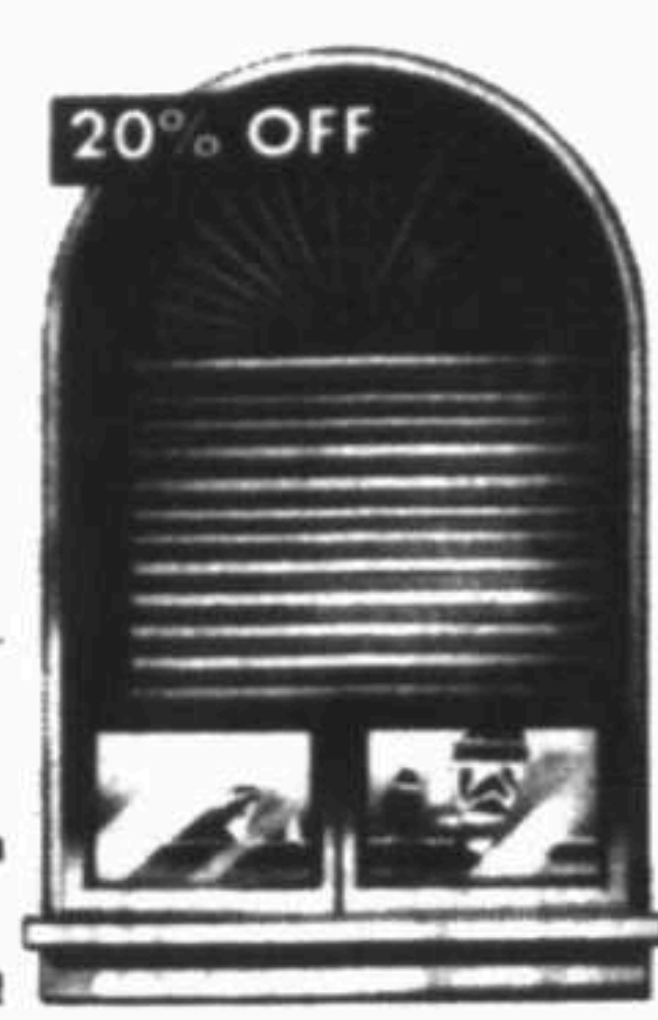

Scully said, "Crime against us is going up and we attribute that to the remarks that certain people are making in this country, like the NRA, like certain talk show hosts and like prestigious defense attorneys."

Friend ties McVeigh to explosion in statement to prosecutors

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — An Army buddy of Timothy McVeigh, the first suspect charged in the Oklahoma City bombing, has told federal authorities that he and McVeigh inspected the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building there as a target several days before the blast, law-enforcement officials said Friday.

Michael Fortier, a close friend of McVeigh from their days together at Fort Riley, Kan., also told the authorities that McVeigh confided to him about plans for the bombing months earlier when McVeigh was with him in Kingman, Ariz., the officials said.

Fortier made the statements to federal prosecutors as part of negotiations toward a possible deal in which he may cooperate with the government, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Fortier said the two men drove from Arizona to the federal building in Oklahoma about a week before the bombing in a visit that officials said appeared to be a trip to inspect the nine-story building.

Fortier has denied that he had any direct role in the bombing. Nevertheless, the authorities have been intensely interested in him since the blast. They had questioned him and searched his trailer in Kingman and an adjoining storage shed, but had said they had no basis to suspect him of involvement.

The offer of cooperation could represent an important breakthrough in an investigation that has appeared stalled in recent weeks, with hundreds of federal agents working nationwide in a frustrating search for possible conspirators. In addition to McVeigh, one other man, Terry Nichols, has been charged in the April 19 blast, which killed 166 people.

Fortier's discussions with the government began after he was subpoenaed earlier this month to testify to a federal grand jury in Oklahoma City. Rather than testify under oath, Fortier apparently approached the government about a negotiated settlement and made his statements about McVeigh in an initial offer of the kind of evidence he could provide.

It was not clear whether prosecutors believe Fortier is culpable in the case or could be charged as an accessory to the bombing.

It is possible that he would seek full immunity from prosecution in return for his information, but prosecutors may be unlikely to accept such a deal from anyone with knowledge of the blast.

The officials said that federal prosecutors were unlikely to agree to any deal without closely examining his account because they are wary of entering into any arrangement now that might later prove unwarranted if investigators find additional evidence implicating him in the attack.

It was unclear whether Fortier provided the government with any information about the possible involvement of Nichols or other possible confederates in what the authorities have said they believe is a wider circle of conspirators.

Fortier's statements, if investigators verify them, represent the most important break in the ranks of silence of McVeigh's few known associates and the first person to directly implicate McVeigh in the bombing.

Nichols, who turned himself in to authorities three days after the bombing, told investigators McVeigh had told him days before the blast that "something big" was about to happen. But he denied further knowledge of the plot, an assertion prosecutors rejected after linking him to purchases of the kind of fertilizer used in the attack.

Federal agents said they were optimistic that Fortier could rejuvenate an investigation that has seemed to slowly lose momentum in recent weeks. Investigators have recently seemed unable to move the case forward after the thousands of tips to a public hotline dwindled and each fresh lead seemed to take agents to another dead end.

Fortier, according to other soldiers who served in their unit at Fort Riley, was one of McVeigh's closest friends in the Army. They lived in the same barracks for nearly three years, beginning in 1988.

For most of the last two years, Fortier appears to have been McVeigh's main anchor in the high desert town of Kingman, Ariz.

Witnesses accuse N.Y. police of drunken rampage

NEW YORK (AP) — Scores of New York City police are accused of going on a drunken rampage while visiting Washington, D.C., some of them groping women and firing automatic weapons in the air. One hotel had to be evacuated.

Several thousand officers from around the country were in the nation's capital last weekend to attend ceremonies honoring police killed in the line of duty.

"To take an event that is designed to honor the memory of police officers who have given their lives ... and desecrate it, I can't imagine what they were thinking," Mayor Rudolph Giuliani said at a news conference today.

Police officials said 300 to 400 New York officers had attended the memorial service on their own time. Despite numerous complaints, Washington police made no arrests.

The New York Times reported that up to 100 New York City officers joined in the misbehavior, some stealing license plates and firing weapons in the air at the downtown Hyatt and at least four other hotels.

Some female hotel guests were grabbed and groped. The Washington Post reported. Officers claiming to be federal agents tried to force their way into the hotel rooms of some female guests, New York Newsday said.

The Post also quoted hotel security guards and other witnesses as saying some of the officers stripped nude, poured beer on the center strip of a lobby escalator and took turns sliding down.

"They dishonored themselves and they dishonored the public they are paid to serve," Police Commissioner William Bratton said. He said they should be fired.

Deputy Commissioner Tom Kelly, the city's chief police spokesman, said he has confirmed that officers staying at the Hyatt sprayed fire extinguishers into the ventilation system, forcing the evacuation of the hotel, and caused $30,000 in damage to hotel rooms.

There were 200 New York City officers registered at the hotel, and officials were trying to identify which of them were involved, Kelly said. He described the erring officers as "morons and nitwits."

Three members of the police Internal Affairs Bureau returned from Washington on Thursday after interviewing witnesses and Washington police. Washington Police Chief Fred Thomas ordered his Internal Affairs Division to investigate as well.

Any officers involved could face administrative disciplinary charges, criminal charges in Washington and civil liabilities from the hotel, Kelly said.

One man strives to restore western legacy

By Cindy Horswell
Hearst News Service

RAYWOOD— The Stetson hat shading his eyes doesn't block the gleam from his 14-karat grin.

Without a moment's concern about staining those gold-capped teeth, A.J. Walker Sr. dips into the Skoal stored in his shirt pocket and tucks a pinch into his cheek. He wears scuffed boots, jeans and a red bandana knotted at his neck.

But being African-American, Walker knows he doesn't fit the romanticized role of a cowboy from the John Wayne genre. That's why at age 65 he is working to restore the black cowboy to his rightful place in history.

His business card even sports the logo, "Legacy of the Black Cowboy," as a reminder.

"Lots of people don't know there ever was a black cowboy," said Walker at his 40-acre ranch in this Liberty County town about 50 miles east of Houston.

He stages monthly rodeos at the ranch in an arena that he built himself.

Last May, he joined eight other black cowboys in presenting oral histories, singing songs and performing rope and whip tricks for the National Museum of American History, a branch of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C.

The cowboys signed autographs for two hours afterward.

"People enjoy us so much," Walker said. "It does surprise us."

He has since been invited to tell his story to a radio station in Memphis, Tenn., at the National Black Arts Festival in Atlanta and at Colorado College in Colorado Springs, Colo.

"There is great interest in expanding knowledge about the West, particularly the black cowboy," said Alan Govenar, founder of Documentary Arts in Dallas, who organized the trips. "The appeal is to rewrite the history of the West to be more inclusive."

Govenar, who has a doctorate in arts and humanities, first met Walker in 1986 after noticing a sign advertising his rodeo. That year, Govenar had been scouring the countryside for talent for a folk festival to celebrate Texas' sesquicentennial.

He described Walker's Circle 6 arena, which can seat 1,000 spectators, as "ranch rodeo at its best." Spectators are treated not only to a rodeo at such close range that one can see the sweat on a cowboy's brow, but also catfish and barbecue cooked on the spot and zydeco music played at the ranch's dance hall.

Years later, when officials at the Smithsonian asked Govenar to research the black cowboy, he immediately remembered Walker and asked him to be in the program. Govenar also is including him in a documentary film about Texas black cowboys being funded by the Texas Commission on the Arts.

"People need to understand that how the West was settled was not purely a white phenomenon," said Govenar. "Cowboys were a culturally mixed, diverse group."

While an estimated 20 percent of the cowboys in the West were black, only two of the 200 cowboys inducted into the National Cowboy Hall of Fame and Western Heritage Center in Oklahoma City are black. One of those is Bill Pickett, who is credited with inventing bulldogging, or wrestling a steer to the ground. He mimicked English bulldogs by biting the steer's nose to make him fight harder.

But when the U.S. Postal Service issued a commemorative stamp in Pickett's honor, it used a picture of the wrong man. Govenar said that is typical of the way the black cowboy has been overlooked in Texas.

Yet the only place in the West where the black cowboy was prevalent before the Civil War was the Texas Gulf Coast, said Don Reeves, curator of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame.

Some started their careers as slaves, others as free men. But all had a common love of cattle, horses and the freedom of the open range.

Walker's parents moved to Texas from Louisiana about 1920, 10 years before he was born. His father was a sharecropper who worked long hours to care for his nine children, planting any crop he could and raising cattle and chickens.

Life was tough, with no electricity or running water, and Walker's clothes were made from flour sacks.

"I'd milk four or five cows, feed the chickens and then walk two miles to school," he recalled. "Saw wood at night to start the wood stove and shell corn. All we'd eat was milk and corn bread. There was mighty little beef. Maybe a cow's head, feet or liver once in a while."

As the oldest boy, Walker quit school in the ninth grade to help at home. His father had managed by then to save enough to buy the 40-acre homestead in Raywood.

Walker spent long days working in the fields, breaking horses and herding cattle. From age 16, his entertainment came from testing his mettle at the rodeos by riding bulls and bucking broncos.

In 1947, a few years before his father died, he spent a year building the 200-foot arena that he used for practicing his skills and promoting his local show. He named the arena after his father's brand, Circle 6.

Walker performed in rodeos all over Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and even Massachusetts and New York.

One highlight of his career came when he won the $800 first prize in bull riding at Madison Square Garden when he was 22 years old.

"While we could compete against the white cowboys, we had to ride after they were done at the end of the show," he said.

Plus, the black cowboy had to mount the bull from the back to avoid being seen by the fans and appearing too "uppity," he said.

"When we traveled by train, we had to ride in the back with the feed, saddle and horses," he said. "If we were driving and stopped some place to eat, we'd head to the kitchen. Blacks raised in the north who ate in the front asked what we were doing back there. I just accepted it, because we couldn't do that at home — didn't want to take those kinds of chances."

Walker also rode in the all-black circuit and one year was named "best all-around" at a rodeo near Beaumont.

It's a deal

Microsoft Corp. and NBC announced an alliance earlier this week to produce an array of multimedia products and services. But the details were so fuzzy that some industry analysts said the announcement was the digital-age equivalent of agreeing to be friends.

William H. Gates, the chairman of Microsoft, and Robert C. Wright, the president of NBC, said in a conference call with reporters that the companies would jointly develop CD-ROMs, interactive television services and products for Microsoft's new on-line service, the Microsoft Network.

"I'm a big believer that the interactive world can be very complementary with the broadcast world," Gates said.

But unlike MCI Communications Corp., which recently agreed to invest up to $2 billion in Rupert Murdoch's News Corp. — in part for access to its programming — Gates said Microsoft would not pay NBC up front for access to NBC services like its coverage of the Summer Olympics or the presidential election next year.

"None of the discussions with NBC have, in any way, involved investing in all or part of NBC," he said.

Prodigy prices

Prodigy, the only major on-line service with a graphical browser of World Wide Web, has introduced a new price plan for heavy users.

The 30/30 plan allows for up to 30 hours of monthly usage for $30, with additional hours costing $2.95. For people who spend more than 12 hours a month on line, this represents a major savings over the basic price plan of $9.95 a month for five hours connect time and $2.95 an hour after that.

Prodigy offers new users 10 free hours of time; software may be obtained either by calling Prodigy at (800) 776-3449 or by downloading it from Prodigy's web site, <http://www.astranet.com>.

Pentium Fix

Remember that flawed Intel Pentium chip that caused errors in complicated mathematical calculations? Of course you do. But even if you've replaced your chip (at Intel's expense, of course), you may still have faulty data left over in your Excel or Lotus 1-2-3 spreadsheets — and up until now the only way to make sure you didn't was to re-enter data, which can take a long time.

To address the issue, Circle Systems of Seattle has recently shipped PentFix, a Windows program that will scan your hard drive for worksheets and make sure 1-2-3 and Excel recalculate them when they are reloaded, thereby eliminating errors resulting from erroneous calculations made by the old Pentium.

The program, which costs $49 for a single copy, can be obtained by calling Circle Systems at (800) 366-3794 or faxing them at (206) 328-4768.

Web wanderings

If you're traveling and out of money but armed with a Visa or Plus card and somehow near a computer with Internet access, Visa is ready to come to the rescue.

The credit card company has posted a useful ATM locator that can be searched by country or by airports. The country lists tell you what local banks will honor Visa for cash advances, while the airport list actually features on-line diagrams showing where in the airport you must go. Visa's site on WWW is <http://www.visa.com/visa/>.

Bookport, an on-line bookstore, and Albion Books are offering an on-line version of Virginia Shea's Netiquette, a slim but useful guide to social skills on the Internet. The on-line version, which has links to sources and resources cited by Shea, costs only $6.95. You can also buy the bound version for $19.95, which includes access to the on-line version.

Impassioned cyber-journalist does it his way

Writer-editor reaches 800,000 computer lovers through on-line magazine

By Elizabeth Weise
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Reporter Brock Meeks surveys the information highways and byways, and writes it as he sees it.

Then he ships his words straight into the computers of his 800,000 readers with no intervening paper or editor — nothing but his own passionate take on the facts.

Meeks pounds out another installment of his CyberWire Dispatch every few weeks, depending on his time, sources and the constraints of his day job as Washington bureau chief for the trade journal Interactive Week.

Working at night after his wife has gone to sleep, Meeks, 39, writes opinionated, wickedly precise accounts of what's happening in the world of computers and communication.

Take his story, "You Can't Fool All the People All the Time." It starts: "The brain-dead, ill-named Communications Decency Act was, as expected, folded into the Senate's telecommunications reform package today ..."

Meeks fulfills a long-held online belief in the ability of the individual to use computer technology to bypass traditional media and reach the masses.

Computer activists love to speculate about a brave new world where information consumers will have a broad spectrum of independent news sources to choose from.

They have a poster boy in Meeks, whose accomplish-

Normal human beings, the kind who still think "harem" when someone says "Unix," have limited choices of ways to gain access to the Internet. This is obviously a temporary situation, since everybody who has ever used electronic mail is now either starting an Internet business or writing a book about the Internet, and Internet software will probably be stuffed in cereal boxes before too long. But for now, there are two main alternatives for getting wired without becoming a Unix administrator.

On one side are the commercial on-line information services like Prodigy, CompuServe and America Online, which are in a race to provide their subscribers with Internet access. Think of them as marketing majors who are just now beginning to regret making fun of the nerds in college.

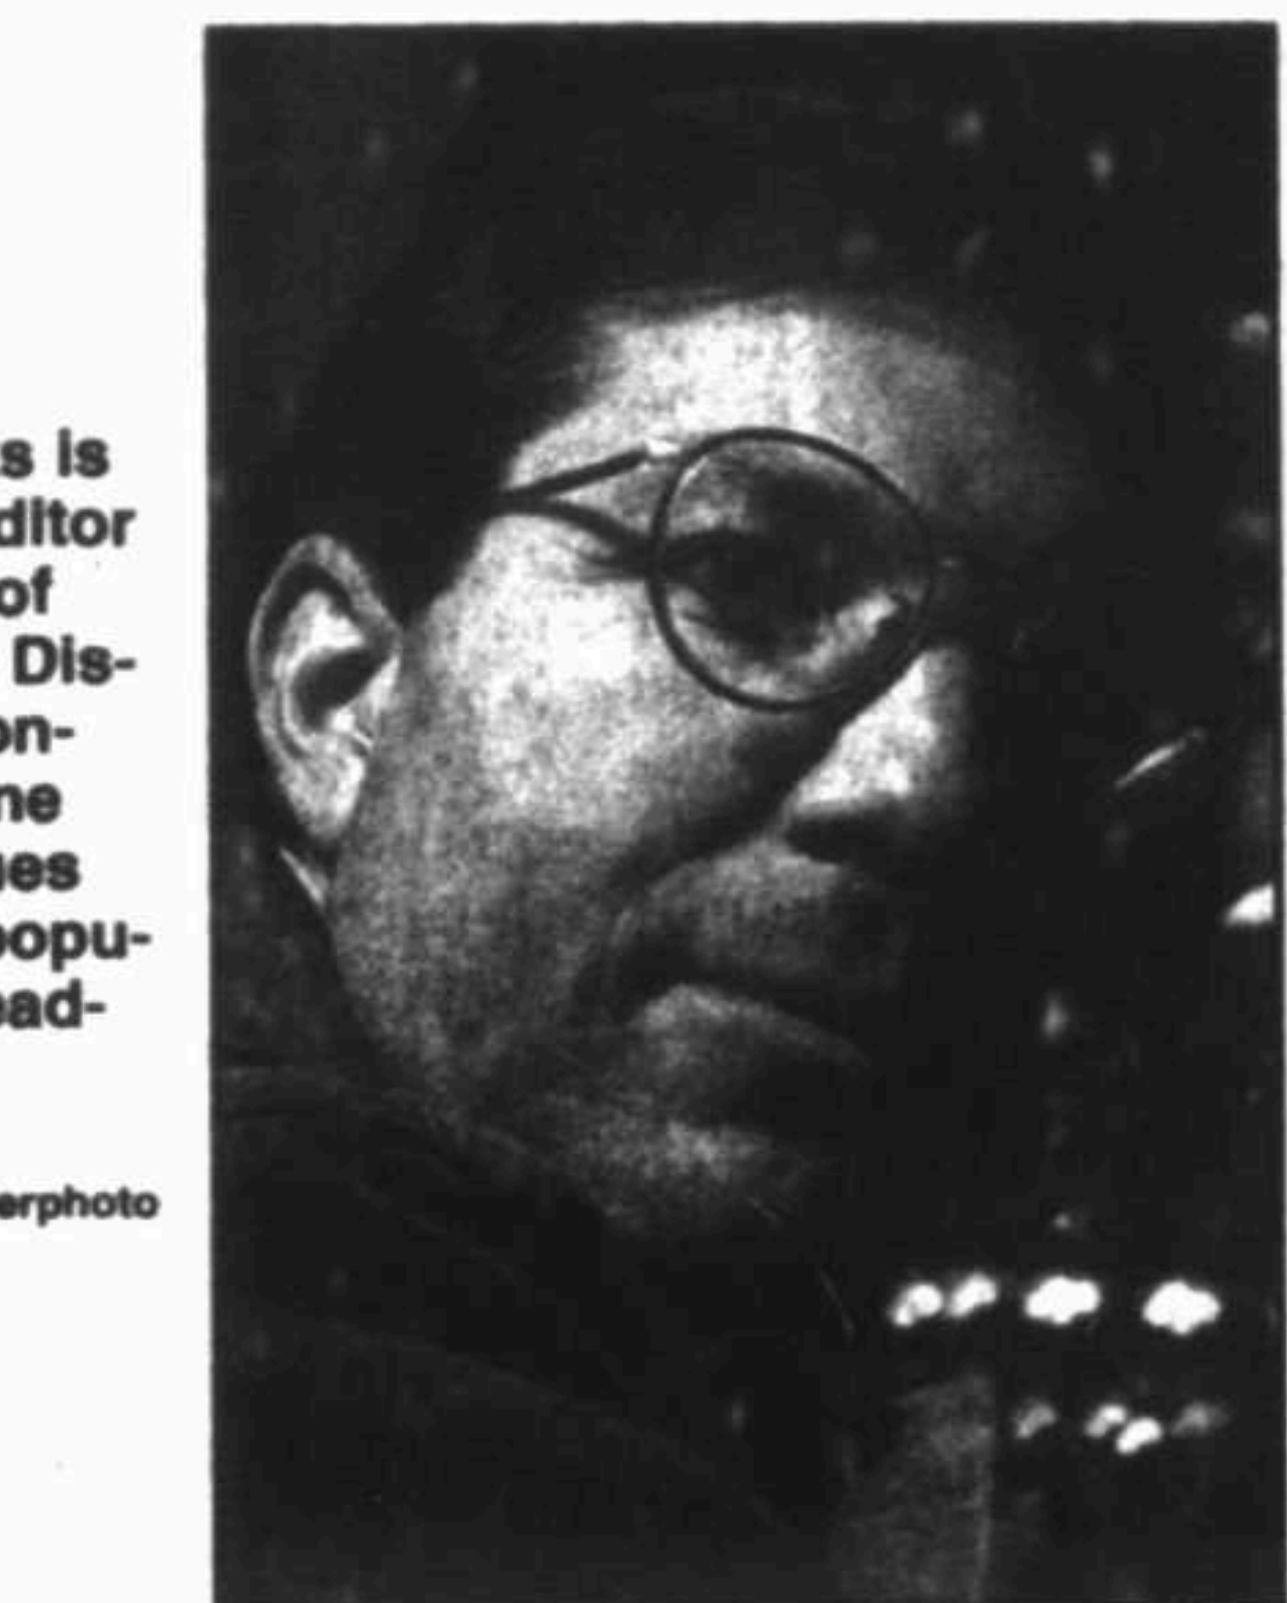

On the other side are the Internet service providers, who are struggling to create user-friendly faces for their previously user-hostile technologies. Think of them as computer science nerds who are kicking themselves for not minoring in business administration.

Netcom On-Line Communications Services Inc. of San Jose, Calif., falls into the latter category, and thus stands apart from the commercial services reviewed in this column in recent months.

Long one of the leading providers of Internet connections to big businesses, Netcom has in recent months made a successful push into consumer Internet services for individuals. It now claims to have more than 130,000 customers, which makes it one of the biggest Internet service companies in the world.

At least half of those users have come to Netcom for a service called Netcruiser, a simple all-in-one package for connecting to the most popular Internet services, including the World Wide Web. Netcom portrays Netcruiser as being just as easy to use as Microsoft Windows, which is either reassuring or ominous,

Porn wave brings 'SurfWatch'

SAN FRANCISCO — Software that allows parents, teachers and bosses to block access to sexually explicit material on the Internet was to be unveiled Monday by a Los Altos startup firm.

The new blocking technology by SurfWatch Software Inc. — apparently the first of its kind on the market — could play a role in the growing debate in Washington over the censorship of cyberporn, analysts said.

The software, which costs $49.95, allows users to bar Internet connections to more than 1,000 sexually explicit World Wide Web pages, FTP and Gopher sites; several hundred chat lines; and about 300 Usenet newsgroups.

By paying a monthly subscription fee of $5.95, users can have their databases automatically updated as new sexually explicit Internet sites come on-line.

SurfWatch's software works only with direct Internet connections, the firm said. It will not work with commercial on-line services such as Prodigy and America Online. A Macintosh version was to be released Monday; a Windows version is

Mac clone now available for Apple users

By Walter S. Mossberg
The Wall Street Journal

Finally, there's a clone of the Apple Macintosh on the market. Like the first successful clones of IBM's standard PC, this first Mac clone works just like the original, but is less expensive and comes from a smaller company, in this case a new Austin outfit called Power Computing.

Unlike the IBM clones, this one is licensed by Apple and uses some custom chips Apple supplies to guarantee compatibility. I'm writing these words on a operating speedily and reliably.

Unfortunately for Apple's corporate welfare, the Mac clone is about six years too late. If Apple had permitted cloning back in 1989, just before Microsoft was able to establish its Mac-imitating Windows software as the standard on IBM-compatibles, the computing world might be a radically different place. Apple might be the industry's leader instead of Microsoft.

While it may be too late to do Apple much good, it's not too late for consumers to take advantage of the cloning of the Mac. This month Power Computing has introduced three models in limited quantities, all driven by the super-fast PowerPC chip Apple uses in its own new Macs. They are roughly comparable to Apple's three top-of-the-line models. Production will increase until it hits full tilt around July 1.

Hiring outside firms to run computer systems isn't always a bargain

By Louise Lee
The Wall Street Journal

This is how it is supposed to work: A company hires IBM to run its internal computer system so that the company can focus its attention on its core business. Everybody wins.

In practice, it is another matter.

Consider Southern Pacific Rail Corp., which last year hired an International Business Machines Corp. unit to handle its computing for the next decade. Computer breakdowns delayed accounting reports, and when connections failed at a major California rail-car-switching yard, a technician was left to direct 1,200 cars a day by hand. On other occasions, Southern Pacific's maintenance director has had to wait for weeks for help from IBM's distant workers.

"IBM has not very successfully met any expectations," says Roy Carlson, a Southern Pacific manager who used to oversee computer systems. "It's not seen as a successful relationship." An IBM official blames the problems on his company's inexperience in dealing with railroads, and says performance has improved in the past few months.

Most firms expect things to be different when they pay hundreds of millions — or even billions — of dollars to turn over their computer systems to the experts. Such

My test machine has the same 100 MHz PowerPC 601 chip Apple uses, with a whopping 16 megabytes of memory, a large 730-megabyte hard disk and a fast quadruple-speed CD-ROM drive. Power sells it for $3,250 without a monitor. That's significantly less than Apple charges.

The most comparable Apple 8100 model is officially priced at $4,559 without a monitor, but sells for closer to $4,000 at discount stores, still around $800 more than Power's price. Apple includes a one-third larger hard disk but a 50 percent slower CD-ROM drive, and Apple's price doesn't include a keyboard or any bundled application software. Power throws in several programs, including Quicken personal-finance software and the ClarisWorks integrated package.

At first glance, the Power 100 looks nothing like a Mac. In fact, it looks like a PC. It uses a standard, bulky-looking PC-type desktop case with a few minor modifications to accommodate the Mac's unique buttons and connectors — a far less expensive box than Apple's usual stylish custom-designed enclosures. The famous Apple logo is replaced by a red circle around a stylized "P."

But inside, this computer is designed to warm the heart of any Mac fanatic. It includes the key set of proprietary chips, all bought from Apple, which makes a Mac work like a Mac. There's generous room for expansion. Power has also built in a special high-speed video connector and a separate connector that permits the use of an IBM-type monitor. The machine comes with the same mouse and keyboard Apple uses, and even apes one of Apple's dumber "features," the lack of an indicator light to show hard-disk activity.

Just as important, the Power 100 also includes Apple's official Macintosh operating system. It even briefly flashes the old smiling-Mac symbol when starting up, before displaying Apple's new blue "Mac OS" logo.

It wasn't surprising, therefore, that the machine seemed to me to be perfectly compatible with Apple's official Macs. It successfully ran every Mac program I threw at it, including a few old and obscure ones. It was every bit as fast as I expected a PowerPC to be, and on a few simple benchmark tests I ran, the Power 100's scores were identical to those of Apple's 8100 model.

This is a very capable computer. Just now, I'm writing this column while simultaneously playing an old Beatles CD in the computer's CD-ROM drive and downloading several items from America Online. When I use new Mac programs specifically designed for the PowerPC processor, this clone flies, but it also handles older Mac software crisply.

ments are impressive. CyberWire Dispatch is read by upwards of 800,000 readers — including many at the Pentagon, the FBI and the Commerce Department.

During the debate over the Clipper Chip, a government proposal that would install a "back door" into every computer in America, he was summoned to a secret rendezvous by some government officials.

"They wanted to make it known that they were paying attention. It wasn't threatening, but it was all kind of Spy vs. Spy, at Georgetown at two in the morning."

Working in an older style of journalism — one still practiced in Europe, where newspapers take unabashed stands — Meek does the cloak of a crusading avenger. Which is what makes his work so exceptional.

But Meeks also stakes his reputation on the accuracy of what he writes.

"It's a position and a responsibility that's not lost on me, and one I take seriously. I try to make sure that my stories are all correct and that my journalistic integrity is unimpeachable."

The facts are there, but not just the facts.

"I tell people, 'If you took all the attitude out of the Dispatch articles, they could wind up in The New York Times. I have a commitment to reporting the facts, I just go off with those facts as I see fit.'"

Meeks had been writing periodic journalistic rants for quite awhile, but actually named the series 18 months ago.

He had been leaked a confidential FBI cost analysis of the controversial Digital Wiretap Plan. The White House had signed off on it based on incorrect figures given to them by the FBI, and Meeks had the real ones.

"I wrote about the White House being essentially duped."

I put it out on CyberWire Dispatch on Friday. On Saturday it showed up in The New York Times — without attribution."

After that, he decided to name and copyright his stories. A wire service of one was born. It seems to have worked. In April, The Economist picked up one of his stories and cited CyberWire Dispatch as its source.

Meeks learned his journalism in the trenches, not in school. After some time in college he did a stint as a member of Air Force Intelligence. In 1980 he left the military and ended up doing famine relief work for Ethiopia in San Francisco in 1984.

"I began to see how screwed up the whole relief community was. CARE fought against Save the Children, everyone was fighting for their turf. I got disenchanted and started writing about that for small lefty publications."

Soon afterwards he got interested in the possibility of using telecommunications to "level the playing field."

"With a toy computer you could tap into the same type of info that the Fortune 500 companies have access to."

That led to jobs writing for trade publications and a memo-able stint as a foreign correspondent covering the war in Afghanistan for the San Francisco Chronicle.

Meeks says he feels blessed that his editors at Interactive Week trust him enough to allow him to do his "straight gig" for them and also put out his dispatches.

It's not a totally altruistic endeavor, Meeks says, though he gets no money for the stories.

"If I told you I didn't enjoy the exposure and recognition that my work gets, I'd be lying. I like the fact that all the hard work and effort has created a brand and reputation that's respected. That's the payoff — it makes a difference. That's why I went into this business."

NETCOM: Smart choice for the beginner

depending on your experience.

Indeed, the Netcruiser software is available only for computers using Microsoft Windows 3.1 and a version of DOS numbered 5.0 or higher. Users of Macintosh, Amiga and older PC computers are out of luck. Netcom officials said the company was developing a version of Netcruiser for Macintoshes, but it declined to say in what year it might be available, never a good sign.

True to the company's word, Netcruiser for Windows appears to be easy to set up and use. I was bit-surprised on the World Wide Web within minutes of installing the software.

The Netcruiser software itself is free, but there is a $25 set-up fee to establish a Netcruiser account, plus $20 a month for the use of one of Netcom's 200 local connections to the Internet. The monthly fee is a bargain, as it includes 40 hours of "prime time" connections and unlimited "after hours" Internet connections.

Netcom defines prime time rather expansively, as the hours from 9 a.m. to midnight in the user's time zone.

The Netcruiser software contains most of the major tools needed to take advantage of the Internet's many resources, including electronic mail, World Wide Web, Gopher, file transfers, telnet, Internet relay chat and Usenet news groups. If the computer has the proper equipment and software for generating sounds, Netcruiser will automatically play sound files. It also displays most major graphic formats automatically.

The tools are adequate but not as elegant as some of the other tools that are available either in stores or in the many software repositories on the Internet itself. On the other hand, Netcruiser puts all the tools on one screen, which is more convenient than having them scattered in different parts of the computer's hard disk.

Some users, especially beginners, may not care to go to the extra trouble of finding, downloading and configuring those fancier supplemental programs. Indeed, when Netcruiser first appeared last year there was no choice.

However, the newest version of Netcruiser, called 1.6, comes with "sockets" that give users the freedom to plug in different software modules. (In technical terms, it is Winsock-compliant.) For example, one can use the built-in Netcruiser browser to download a copy of Netscape Navigator 1.1, a much better browser that is available at no charge to individuals.

Netcruiser is not a good choice for people who want to do more advanced Internet activities, like tapping into the power of Internet "host" computers that are more powerful than the user's personal computer. But then, one might argue that anyone who wants to run a powerful software compiler on someone else's computer is probably sophisticated enough to cope with the complexities of an Internet host account. Netcom sells such host accounts for those who want them.

In short, Netcom's Netcruiser is a smart choice for beginning and moderately advanced Internet users who are already familiar with Microsoft's Windows software. It is easier to use and less expensive than many other Internet options, and it offers more Internet features than the so-called consumer services like America Online.

More information on Netcruiser is available by calling (800) 353-6600. Netcom can be found at the following location on the World Wide Web: <http://www.netcom.com>.

PORN: Windows version due out in July expected out in July, the firm said.

(From 1B)

"This makes it unnecessary for the government to censor the Internet," said Bill Duvall, chief executive officer of 5-month-old SurfWatch.

A pioneer of the Internet's fore-runner, ARPAnet, at SRI International in 1968, Duvall said he never got around to cruising cyberspace until recently. He was shocked at what he saw.

"My first reaction was wonder that all the things we predicted for it back then had come true," he said. "My second reaction was, 'There's a lot of stuff there I don't want my 14-year-old daughter to see.'"

As schools, libraries and businesses move to provide Internet access, others have had the same reaction.

Netscape, the Mountain View-based maker of a World Wide Web browser, recently released a "proxy server" that allows systems administrators to block access to certain Internet sites for an entire network.

"When we released it people went wild," said Netscape spokeswoman Rosanne Sline. "There is really a demand for this."

Netscape's tool requires users to identify each Internet site or area they want to block. SurfWatch's blocker makes the decisions for the user.

Jay Friedland, the firm's marketing vice president, said a team of college students is paid to do nothing all day but cruise the Internet in search of cybernauts. When they find a new site, it's added to the list.

"We have to make some judgment calls on what to block, and it's not always easy," he said, adding that SurfWatch's smut threshold is approximately that of X-rated movies.

Any Usenet newsgroup with sex in its name, for example, is automatically added to the forbidden list. Parents or teachers can override the blocking tool to access material with redeeming social value — or to cruise the Net after the kids go to bed.

Paul Rische, systems coordinator for the Cupertino School District, said he installed a test version of the blocking software on computer networks at four schools.

"We'd had a couple instances where kids had been exposed to inappropriate material," he said. "I've seen how easy it is to get to that stuff."

Rick Spence, an analyst at Dataquest, said Fortune 1000 firms might be interested in the tool as a way to dissuade employees from doing their "Personal" Net surfing on company time.

"Perhaps more important," he said, "is preventing lawsuits from employees who are exposed to racist material by co-workers."

Others hope the software will significantly alter the debate about censorship of the Internet.

Its release comes as Congress prepares to debate the Communications Decency Act by Sen. James Exon, D-Neb., which would impose a fine of up to $100,000 on anyone who transmits any "obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy or indecent" material over the Internet.

Daniel Weitzner of the Washington D.C.-based Center for Democracy and Technology said blocking tools such as SurfWatch should render Exon's bill moot.

"Parents now have the ability to make these choices for themselves," he said. "This is an example of why Congress should take a step back and look at the technology before rushing into anything."

In an opinion piece written for Scripps Howard News Service in April, Exon said he was open to the idea of "a parental lockout mechanism as a possible solution."

But Friday his spokesman, Russ Rader, said Exon would press ahead for passage of his legislation despite the availability of such a blocking tool.

"He believes we have to have something done now to lay down ground rules to make the information superhighway as safe as possible for kids," Rader said.

"This (blocking tool) is not something immediately and widely accessible to people."

RENT: Many customers pleased

established companies as IBM's Integrated Systems Solutions Corp. unit or Electronic Data Systems Corp., a unit of General Motors Corp., promise more efficient systems, tailored software and lower costs.

The allure is so powerful that 40 percent of the Fortune 25 have farmed out at least part of their computer systems to someone else, according to the Yankee Group, a Boston-based market-research firm. The frenzy has been especially pronounced in the past two years, producing such high-profile deals as Xerox Corp.'s $3 billion, 10-year pact calling for Electronic Data Systems Corp. to run its world-wide computer systems. And the $16 billion annual market for such services is expected to more than double over the next five years.

Why? For companies that have grown weary of running their own internal computer system, outside firms can routinely handle such tasks as installing systems for payroll or billing, or managing data-processing centers. Besides taking on the company's computer department, some computer-service companies run other areas, such as the customer-service center.

But some companies find that many rent-a-techs often know little about how their industries work or about their individual corporate cultures. And hiring an outsider may not even save the companies money in the long run.

Rudy Hirschheim, a University of Houston professor who studied 14 Fortune 500 companies that hired outsiders from 1984 to 1993, says that over the long term, "seven or eight years out, companies are paying for services through the nose."

Some of the assumptions about computer-services companies' cost-cutting abilities, such as buying computers at a discount, are also questionable. Large companies, Mr. Hirschheim says, should be able to get similar price breaks.

Once the contracts are under way, companies also learn that breaking up is hard to do. After 25 years with EDS, Blue Shield of California concluded last year that EDS's performance was so poor that it needed a change. But it couldn't just dump EDS because EDS knows more about its computer systems than Blue Shield itself.

"We were sticking together for the sake of the children," says Cora Tellez, a senior vice president at the San Francisco health-maintenance organization.

Such concerns could ultimately make it harder for computer-services companies to get customers. Great Western Financial Corp., in Chatsworth, Calif., for instance, last year considered bids from four companies before deciding to stick with its own 400-employee computer-systems department. The thrift didn't think an outsider would save enough to make the effort worthwhile, and there was "fear over the control we'd supposedly give up," says Jesse L. King, controller.

Still, many customers are quite pleased with the results they have gotten from computer-services companies. Bethlehem Steel Corp. hired EDS in 1993 under a 10-year, $500 million contract at a time when it was spending about $100 million a year on its computer operations. It credits EDS with bringing it up to speed technologically and helping it boost revenue.

Among the major accomplishments: EDS has combined Bethlehem's two data-processing centers and strung miles of fiber-optic cables for a high-speed data and video network linking field offices to headquarters in Bethlehem, Pa.

"We absolutely made the right decision," says Curtis H. Barnett, Bethlehem's chairman.

"We have no second thoughts."

Among EDS customers who aren't so happy is the Dallas Market Center, a group of wholesale merchandise centers. It broke off a 10-year contract with EDS at the halfway point in 1993, concluding that it could cut costs if it brought computer operations in-house.

"EDS was expensive for us," says Michael Harrison, a Market Center manager, who estimates the company is now saving $500,000 a year.

Orphan Train

Woman feels need to share father's lonely legacy

By Jerry Breeden
Associated Press

BENTON, Ark. — Imagine you're only 3 years old, all alone in the world and you've just been put aboard a train taking you somewhere far away to live with people you don't even know.

A frightening scenario, to be sure. Yet, it's true.

It happened in 1909 to Peggy Pounder's father, the late Milton Peter Manachisa Toffier.

Pounder, who lives in Little Rock, considers it her life's mission to spread her father's story.

On a recent visit to her daughter Leah in Benton, Pounder stopped by Angie Grant Elementary School. There, she talked to her fifth-grade classmates of her grandson, Taylor Randall.

She told how Taylor's great-grandfather became one of some 150,000 Orphan Train riders in America from about 1850 until 1929.

The journeys were missions of mercy, salvation transportation for youngsters no one seemed to want.

POUNDER'S STORY begins with the unceremonial birth of her father on Jan. 8, 1906.

When he was just 9 days old, the infant was taken by a woman claiming to be his mother to the New York Foundling Hospital of the Sisters of Charity.

The child had no name until given one by nuns at the hospital. They called him Peter Manachisa. He was baptized under that name on Jan. 18, 1906, at St. Vincent Ferrer's Catholic Church.

Hospital records eventually obtained by Pounder show her father's mother was known only as "Manachisa-Italian-Gold St., NYC."

It could have meant that the baby's mother's last name was Manachisa, that she was of Italian descent and that she lived on New York City's Gold Street. But records-keeping procedures, being somewhat lax at the time, makes one guess as good as another.

The journeys were missions of mercy, salvation transportation for youngsters no one seemed to want.

In 1909, when he was only 3 years of age, Peter and about 300 other children boarded the Orphan Train in New York City. He wound up in Loreauville, La.

There, he was met by his indentured parents, Hypolite Toffier and his wife Louisa. Arrangements had been made by authorities ahead of time for the French-Cajun couple to meet Peter at the railway station.

THEY IDENTIFIED him by a preassigned number dangling from his neck on a chain or string.

Pounder's research revealed that Louisa Toffier had wanted a boy child in the worst way.

"It has been said," Pounder recalled, "that she cried when she first saw Peter, who, at the time, looked like a girl because he had shoulder-length and curly auburn-colored hair." But once the tears had dried and it had been determined that Peter was, in fact, a boy, the newly united family headed for home along the bayous of St. Martinsville, La.

Hypolite Toffier was a farmer, but in 1910 he packed up the family's meager belongings and moved them to Dewar, Okla., where he became a coal miner. A year later, the Toffiers signed indenture papers assuming formal guardianship of Peter.

The Toffiers couldn't read English and thought at the time they were signing bonafide adoption papers, which would have made Peter legally theirs. But the fact is they never legally became his adoptive parents.

Peter himself had to learn English after starting school in Dewar. His schooling lasted only eight years. At age 12, Peter got a job emptying bed chamber pots at a local hotel. By the time he was 16, he had become a miner like his "father."

WHEN HE was 19, Peter Toffier married a local school teacher, Zalema Adean Skidmore. The new Mrs. Toffier paid a heavy price for matrimony. Prejudice was openly practiced in Oklahoma, and many other states as well, at the time.

She was fired from her teaching post for marrying what the locals considered to be "a foreigner."

Ultimately, the marriage produced two daughters, Peggy (now Pounder) and Nellie Louise.

Sometime around 1925, an unidentified woman went to Dewar and began asking questions about her "missing son."

Hearing about the woman's inquiries, Toffier confronted his indentured mother. "Had she talked to the woman?" he wanted to know.

She apparently had. She is reported to have said:

"She (the mystery woman) come smiling. I tell her, 'Peter has mother'. She leave crying."

FROM THEN on, Toffier became so engrossed in his search for his birth mother that he actually developed ulcers. Pounder said her father's ulcers always troubled him, but especially around Mother's Day each year.

In 1928, Toffier, his wife and daughter Peggy (Nellie Louise wouldn't be born until 1933) moved to Bisbee, Ariz. There, he worked in the copper mines. He also built two homes in Bisbee, both by hand and by himself.

When Toffier was diagnosed as having "dust on the lungs," the company for which he worked dismissed him.

With $300 in "impaired health" pay in his pocket, Toffier took his family back to Dewar. He bought a grocery store-gas station. He subsequently became postmaster and sold insurance.

His quest to find his birth mother included Toffier corresponding with and making two trips to New York City and the Foundling Hospital.

During one visit, he was even arrested and jailed for trying to steal hospital records. Even then, he wasn't allowed to examine the files.

DESPITE HIS inner turmoil, his daughter said, he freely gave of himself to the town of Dewar and never let the prejudice he and his wife experienced influence his desire to help the town grow.

He initiated efforts to provide the community with a sewer system, street lights, paved roads and other municipal improvements.

Through it all, Toffier maintained his devotion to the couple who had loved and cared for him as if he were theirs by birth, Pounders said.

Peter Toffier died at 58 never knowing his natural mother.

Computer system may improve medical care at many prisons

By Leslie Zganjar
Associated Press

ANGOLA, La. — The contrast is jolting.

Inmates at the isolated prison farm, hoes resting on their shoulders, march two-by-two down gravel roads to the fields under the watch of armed guards on horseback.

Just steps away, a small team of prison employees are putting the finishing touches on a hospital computer system that could improve medical care at prisons throughout the nation.

The U.S. Justice Department is negotiating with Louisiana to buy the new software.

Prison hospital workers and their computer consultant "stumbled across" the system while looking for a way to free an already stretched, small medical staff from paperwork, said Jim LeBlanc, assistant secretary of the state Department of Corrections.

The system does away with so much paperwork that the 12 physicians and nurses now have more time to care for the 4,500 inmates at this 18,000-acre prison, located in a huge bend of the Mississippi River 50 miles from the nearest major hospital.

With the new software, doctors at Louisiana's largest maximum-security prison can simply punch a button to review inmates' medical files, learning everything about past surgeries to the location of tattoos.

As they examine inmates, physicians add information to the computerized file using a single key to move medical terms from a list to a spot on the individual's chart.

From the same computer, doctors can write prescriptions, order lab work and schedule follow-up appointments.

Until January, when the new system went on line, the staff was buried in paper work.

Consider these statistics: More than 17,000 hospital passes were issued to inmates between October and January; doctors often write 800 prescriptions in a single day.

Victor Alexander, a doctor at the hospital who helped create the computer system, brings meaning to the numbers when he tells visitors that Angola's thick medical charts can stretch the length of five football fields.

Other prisons in the nation have similar problems and that's why the Justice Department wants to use the program in 37 federal facilities, said LeBlanc, adding that Louisiana could make $1 million off the deal.

The Division of Administration is scrutinizing the federal agency's proposed contract, LeBlanc said.

Several private hospitals have also inquired about the program, state corrections officials said. They won't identify the potential buyers.

"There's no medical automation software that's been developed that's standard for the industry," LeBlanc said.

Work on the computer system began in 1992. A year earlier, the hospital had only one computer, which was used to schedule patient visits and staff shifts.

The system was two years in the making and cost roughly $500,000.

The prison hospital now has 50 computers linked to the system and each doctor has a machine in his office.

Alexander says the system can be upgraded in the future. He says plans call for placing bar codes on the back of inmate cards that can be scanned, eliminating the need to type a prisoner number into the system.

The system can also be made to respond to the human voice, allowing doctors to speak and have the information recorded by the computer, Alexander said.

Hillary wants to end naysaying, she tells viewers of 'CBS This Morning'

BURBANK, Calif. — The bomb squad blew up Tom Selleck's T-shirt in the line of duty.

A parcel sent to the actor's office at Walt Disney Studios made security personnel nervous because they couldn't determine the contents using an X-ray machine.

The bomb squad was summoned, and the package was blown sky high Thursday. It turned out to contain a shirt and some petunia seeds.

Information about the sender wasn't disclosed, and no one would say if Selleck was at his office at the time.

MADRID, Spain — The royal palace is threatening legal action against an Italian magazine that published photos of King Juan Carlos sunning himself in the nude on his yacht.

The singer, who is a lesbian, said she and her lover, Julie lover, June Cypher, talk a lot about holding a wedding ceremony.

"I think it will be barefoot. And we'll both wear dresses," she said. "But it won't be traditional."

Melissa Etheridge
and children.

The palace "deplores the publication in the Italian media of a manipulated photographic series, apparently taken some years ago, which affects the privacy and reputation of his majesty," the palace said in a statement Friday.

"The king, as a Spanish citizen and as head of state, has these rights protected under the constitution."

The magazine, Novella 2000, published the photos recently. They show Juan Carlos wearing only a hat. Most of the pictures are lacking in detail.

The photo have not created a scandal in Spain, where the king and Queen Sofia regularly top opinion polls as the most popular and respected personalities.

Thoughtful Moments™

Grow Old Along With Me
 ROBERT BROWNING

Grow old along with me!
 The best is yet to be,
 The last of life, for which the first was made:
 Our times are in his hand
 Who saith, "A whole I planned, Youth shows but half; trust God, see all, nor be afraid!"

Scripture of the week

And when Abram was ninety years old and nine, the LORD appeared to Abram, and said unto him, I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect. GEN 17:1

"Enthusiasm among the golfers was at a fever pitch and all those who participated are to be congratulated for a job well done," Ford said. "Golfers and caddies alike proved that when it comes to support for Heartstone, they truly do have children at heart."

The conference, made up of churches of various sects from around the state, issued a "pastoral statement" recently imploring congregations to push for strict gun control legislation and help children escape violence.

"It is time to take on the gun lobby and serve notice to the NRA (National Rifle Association) that its radical stance is morally inexcusable and socially irresponsible in light of the gun violence against children and youth," Sidorak said.

In its statement, the coalition backed a state ban on assault weapons currently being appealed at the state Supreme Court.

"Guns turn what might have been a fistfight many years ago into a homicide today," the statement said. "For far too many children, fear of a premature death has become a preoccupation."

Hayes puts Lady Rebels in semis

By Stewart Doreen

AUSTIN — No one on the Midland Lee softball team will try to fool anyone into thinking the Lady Rebels played their best game, but it really didn't matter. Lee will take Friday's 2-1 quarterfinal victory over Pearland in the UIL Class 5A State Softball tournament played here at the Pleasant Valley Softball Complex.

"I'll take it," said Lee coach J.C. Gotcher. "The victory feels good because we can play better than that. We didn't look sharp. I think it was nerves."

With the victory, the Lady Rebels remain undefeated at 30-0 and have advanced further into the playoffs than any other Lee team this year. The Rebel football team finished in the top eight last fall.

The chance for Lee to go even further will come today when the Lady Rebels play a semifinal game against Plano East, at 9 a.m. at the Pleasant Valley Sports Complex. A win would send Lee into the championship game against the winner of the other semifinal. The championship game is scheduled for 6 p.m. today.

Watters' one-hitter checks Monterey

By Bill Pettitt
Staff Writer

LUBBOCK — Prior to Friday Chad Crow was to the Midland Lee baseball team what Archie "Moonlight" Graham was to the game of baseball in the movie "Field of Dreams." Crow had been in one practice game prior to the start of the season. After that the junior was delegated to the junior varsity squad, a team that he was named the most valuable player on the year before.

Friday, Crow took a piece of the limelight as he went 2-for-3 with the game-winning RBI in the top of the fourth as starting pitcher Lance Watters continued his mastery of the postseason with a one-hit gem in the Rebels 2-1 victory over Lubbock Monterey in a Region I quarterfinal showdown at Lowrey Field. In the film, Graham was in the major leagues just long enough to record one at-bat before he joined the team of old-timers in the Iowa corn field.

Lee improves to 19-9 on the year while Monterey ends its season at 26-5. Lee advances to the regional semifinals for the first time since 1978 and will await either Grapevine or Fort Worth Eastern Hills at a site and time to be determined next weekend. Grapevine won Game 1 of

Midland hears 'Moose' call

■ Cowboy fullback Daryl Johnston still marvels at fans around the country who yell his nickname.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Dallas Cowboys' quarterback Troy Aikman turns and hands the ball to fullback Daryl Johnston. Only the cry from the fans remains.

"Moose! Moose!" is the chant on every Johnston carry. Surprisingly, it's not just a Dallas event. Moose is known around the country -- and even Mexico. Everywhere he goes he hears the cry.

Johnston got the nickname when he was a rookie with the Cowboys in 1989 from then backup quarterback Babe Laufenberg.

"At that time, we had a bunch of backs, all about 5-foot-8 and 195 pounds. I was 6-2, 245," Johnston said Friday at Christensen Stadium where he was on hand to sign autographs for Midland fans. "Babe would see me, and the other backs, come in and would say, 'He looks like a moose in a field of deer.'"

"That went from the lockerroom, to the radio, the TV and then to the stadiums across the country."

He is still amazed when he hears the Moose call.

"There is no question you can hear the call. It can be really loud. I never get over that. It's a form of recognition around the league," said the two-time All-Pro.

Johnston played his college ball at Syracuse and was a teammate of former Midland Lee star Rodney Johnson.

"Rodney and I played together. In fact, I got to visit with him before coming to the park."

Johnston was only a phone call away from leaving the Cowboys after the 1994 Super Bowl.

"It was close," Johnston admits. "In fact, I was on the phone with the people in Washington from Dallas when the Cowboys came up with the right offer. Dallas was able to do some things with my contract structurally that allowed me to stay. And I really didn't want to leave Dallas."

Baker, Moses fire 68 to lead MCC Invite

■ Bill Baker and Jeff Moses take advantage of good conditions to lead the pack at the Midland Invitational.

MRT Correspondent

Bill Baker and Jeff Moses used almost perfect weather and course conditions to fire a four-under-par round of 68 to claim the first round lead in the championship division after the first day of the 25th annual Midland Invitational Tournament.

They hold a slim lead over a logjam of teams that are bunched closely behind. Twelve teams are within six strokes of the leaders entering today's second round. The teams of Tim Hamilton and Tim Little and the tandem of George Tucker and Steve Whitside, who shot scores of 69, trail Baker and Moses by a single shot.

Said Baker, "There was enough breeze out there to make it interesting."

Moses elaborated on the performance by he and his partner. "If we both stay in the hole together and don't make the mistakes we'll do well."

Football-like numbers in Angel loss to Tulsa

■ Midland pounds out 17 hits but falls to the Drillers 20-10 before 4,058 at Christensen Stadium.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

What kind of Texas League night was it at Christensen Stadium Friday?

Well, the Midland Angels pounded out 17 hits, scored 10 runs and hit five home runs -- and lost to the Tulsa Drillers, 20-10.

Yes Virginia, this was a baseball game, but after all, Dallas Cowboy fullback Daryl Johnston was in town to sign autographs for the 4,058 fans. It was more like a football atmosphere. And in that light, the Angels lost only by a touchdown and a field goal.

What kind of night was it? Tulsa starting pitcher Scott Smith, who lost to the Angels last week, gave up 15 hits and 10 runs in six innings of work -- and still got the win to go 3-3 on the season.

Also, the Drillers had to come from behind twice against the Angels, who scored five runs in the first two innings of play. Tulsa only had four to that point, but inning by inning built a 10-0 lead.

Knicks will series to continue with win

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (NTV) — An incredible series continued, because the New York Knicks showed an incredible will to survive.

Fighting the odds and history, the Knicks held off a furious fourth-quarter comeback by the Indiana Pacers to capture a dramatic 92-82 victory Friday night at Market Square Arena.

It was a victory that showed the Knicks' character and courage, and after trailing by 3-1 in the four-of-seven-game playoff series, the Knicks are one victory from shocking the Pacers, as well as the many who believed the Knicks were finished. And history is on their side: The home team has won the last 20 Game 7 National Basketball Association playoff showdowns.

The Eastern Conference semifinal series is tied, 3-3, with the decisive Game 7 to be played Sunday afternoon at Madison Square Garden.

No National Basketball Association team has recovered from a 3-1 deficit to win a series since 1981, when the Boston Celtics did it against the Philadelphia 76ers.

The Houston Rockets will try to do it against the Phoenix Suns on Saturday afternoon. And the Knicks, thanks to their faith in each other, can do it Sunday.

It was a devastating loss for the Pacers, who lost a 3-2 lead to the Knicks last year in the Eastern Conference finals.

The Pacers have to be having nightmares after losing another Game 6 at home to New York for the second straight season. They have never beaten the Knicks in a playoff series and, once again, they failed to show the willpower to close out a team that refused to quit.

The Pacers fell behind by 16 points as Reggie Miller, their leader, was held to just 3 points in the first three quarters.

Miller tried to rally Indiana with a brilliant 15-point fourth quarter, but it was too late. And with only one day to regroup before Game 7, it remained to be seen whether the Pacers had enough time to recover from losing this game.

The Knicks never trailed in the fourth quarter, and they never broke Friday night, even when the Pacers cut a 16-point fourth-quarter deficit to 79-76, with 5 minutes 32 seconds left to play.

Charles Oakley (19 points), who had a huge game, answered with a 3-point play, making a layup while being fouled and adding the foul shot. Then John Starks made a key 3-point shot to give New York a 84-76 lead with 2:47 left.

The Pacers eventually closed within 84-79 after Mark Jackson's 3-pointer with less than two minutes to play.

Adelman, fired from Portland, back in NBA as new coach of Golden State Warriors ■ Newest NBA head man stresses that his players are the stars and he won't get in the way.

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Rick Adelman returned to the NBA as a coach Friday when he was hired by the Golden State Warriors.

Out for a year after being fired by the Portland Trail Blazers, somehow Adelman did not seem the same.

He explained the change. "I shaved my mustache last May and everybody told me I looked younger, so I kept it off," he said with a grin.

The comment epitomized the low-key and unassuming personality of Adelman, who stressed during a news conference that his players are the stars and that he won't let his ego get in their way.

That should be a salute to the Warriors, some of whom battled publicly last season with the egotistical and intimidating Don Nelson.

After winning 50 games in 1993-94, the Warriors succumbed to injuries and internal dissension while going 26-56 this past season. Nelson, who resigned in mid-February, never recovered emotionally from a bitter personal battle that led to Chris Webber's trade to Washington last November.

"I like to coach the way I liked to be coached when I played. It's not my team, it's our team," Adelman said. "The NBA is a players' league."

Adelman, a guard who played for San Diego, Portland, Chicago, New Orleans and Kansas City in 1968-75, coached the Trail Blazers to the NBA Finals in 1990 and 1992. His Portland teams in 1989-94 won 65 percent of their regular-season games, the sixth-best winning percentage in league history.

the contract, but said Adelman was the only coach they interviewed for the job.

Adelman was hired by Dave Twardzik, another former Portland player, who was named general manager of the Warriors last week. The two have been close since Adelman was a Blazers assistant and Twardzik was the team's director of community relations and a radio analyst in the mid-1980s.

Twardzik tried to downplay that friendship as a motivating factor in the hiring of Adelman, but the two men poked fun at each other Friday and showed they clearly enjoy each other's company.

"Our goal was to hire a head coach with a wealth of NBA experience," Twardzik said. "He brings a sharp basketball mind, strong work ethic and great communications skills to the Warriors' bench."

Adelman, when asked about a personality that has been characterized as bland, joked that he spent his year away from basketball reading books of interesting quotes.

Throughout the session, he referred to the Warriors as "they" and said his only knowledge of the team's rifts — including the public clash between star guards Latrell Sprewell and Tim Hardaway — came from newspapers.

"This team really needs a new identity. That's the first order of business," he said. "We all have to have a commitment that together we can turn this thing around."

No decision has been made yet on Adelman's assistants. Twardzik said the fate of Bob Lanier, who posted a 12-25 record as the team's interim coach after Nelson left, was still undetermined.

Unlike Nelson, who predicted greatness for the Warriors before last season, Adelman refused to promise success or a quick turnaround of the league's worst defensive team last season.

"If this team is healthy, they can be a very impressive offensive team," he said. "I think there was a real lack of commitment to defend anybody."

MOOSE: Johnston stands behind coach

(From 1C)

The Moose stands behind coach Barry Switzer.

"Coach Switzer came to the Cowboys in a no-win situation last year. If we win, nothing is said. If we don't win the Super Bowl, it's his fault."

"People are blaming him for our loss to San Francisco last year, but if I remember correctly, he didn't have five turnovers or give up 21 points in the first four minutes. He didn't have much to do with that."

"I don't think you will have football dynasties as in the past," Moose said. "We were on the verge, but the game has changed. We could have been a dynasty because we had a young team and all the people in place, but the change came."

"Football isn't like baseball where you might be able to go from worst to first in a year. If you can hit a baseball, you can do it anywhere, but the schemes are so different in the NFL that it takes time for a team to come together and gel. And now you might not keep that team together very long. The teams that can do that the best will be the successful teams."

Johnston isn't sure where the Cowboys stand for 1995.

"There are just too many unknowns right now," he said. "We've lost people like Jeffcoat, Washington and Stepnowski. It's a different team. I do know that we are going to have to ask that the rookies and second year guys step up this year."

But when Daryl Johnston steps up, you'll know it. "Moose! Moose," will remind you.

WIN: Purser homer scores two runs coach Tony Pallanez said. Greenwood plays the winner of Friday's Eastland-Brownfield game in the area round next week.

Alpine (22-4) returned several players from last year's state final four team. But Buck starter Kevin Losoya had control problems and Greenwood's Josh Jones and Chad Berry held Alpine to three hits. Jones struck out six batters in six innings.

"You just can't win ball games on three hits," Alpine coach Mike Pallanez said.

The Rangers scored five runs in the fourth inning to break a 2-2 tie. Losoya (7-2) walked three batters in the frame and hit one with a pitch. Ranger third baseman Rusty Purser hit a two-run home run in the third inning to get Greenwood to a 2-2 tie.

"The difference was preparation," said Tony Pallanez, whose team had a four-game losing streak against Alpine and lost to the Bucks 11-2 last year in the same playoff round also at Monahans. "We pushed a positive attitude all week."

In the fourth Berry reached on an error and Matt Gilly hit a single. Casey Otho, Bucky Smith and Watzl then walked, scoring Berry and Gilly. Purser was hit by a pitch and Jones hit into a fielder's choice that scored two more.

Purser and Jones each went 2-for-3 with two RBIs.

Rockets eager to see how Suns respond

By Eddie Sefko
 Houston Chronicle

■ Rockets at Suns
 2 p.m., NBC

PHOENIX — Charles Barkley says the Rockets haven't won a thing.

The Rockets counter that Barkley and his Phoenix teammates haven't felt the noose tighten around their necks and are eager to see if the Suns can respond when it does today.

Both camps are right, of course. The mind games are part of the fun of a seventh game in an NBA playoff series. On Saturday, the head games end. One team's season will, too.

Game 7. All the chips on the table. Everything to be won or lost in this test of will. Check your feelings at the door. The talk will be tough, and so will the style.

"You can't dress up Game 7," the Rockets' Kenny Smith said. "It's already in a tuxedo."

Like the commercial says, it doesn't get any better than this — unless it's Game 7 of the NBA Finals instead of the Western Conference semifinals.

The Rockets and Suns are tied with three wins apiece. Saturday's winner heads to San Antonio to open against the Spurs on Monday.

Will it be an All-Texas Western Conference final?

If confidence and momentum count, the Rockets are in the driver's seat. They have won two in a row to turn this best-of-seven series into a best-of-one. They can become only the fifth team in NBA history to climb out of a 3-1 hole. Also, no team has won a Game 7 on the road since 1982. Visitors are 0-20 in that span.

The Suns? They're trying not to think about their spot in history if the Rockets pull out a win today.

"From our point of view, Game 7 is something we really wanted to get to," coach Rudy Tomjanovich said. "And it's something they (the Suns) didn't want to get to."

"If somebody had told me during our low points in the (regular) season that we'd have one game to advance to the conference finals, I'd have taken it in a minute."

As usual, the Rockets feel no pressure. In the past three seasons, they are 9-1 in playoff games when a loss would have meant elimination. They have survived four sudden-death situations in the first two rounds of the playoffs.

They need one more great escape.

"Since the first two games, the pressure has been on us all the way," Tomjanovich said. "Then we came home and lost one. We've been in a survival mode ever since."

Rangers knuckle under to Sparks' effort, fall to Brewers

The Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Steve Sparks can now be remembered for more than separating his left shoulder while attempting to rip a phone book in half.

Sparks, a rookie righthanded knuckleballer, allowed five hits over 7 1-3 innings for his first major league victory as the Brewers snapped a four-game losing streak with a 1-0 shutout of the Texas Rangers on Friday night.

"That (the phone book incident in 1994 spring training) was blown a little out of proportion but for whatever reason, that's what's stuck with me," said Sparks, the only knuckleball pitcher in the American League. "Hopefully I can go ahead and prove myself."

Sparks (1-0), making his first major league start, avoided potential problems in the second and seventh when his defense backed him with double plays. He struck out three and allowed four walks to snap Texas' four-game winning streak.

"The more he pitches, the better he'll be," Milwaukee manager Phil Garner said. "He was getting

Athletics 10, Royals 3
KANSAS CITY — Terry Steinbach went 4-for-5 to lead an offensive surge by the Nos. 6, 7 and 8 hitters in Oakland's lineup as the Athletics beat Kansas City.

Steinbach, Brent Gates and Scott Brosius were a combined 7-for-14 with three doubles and four RBIs for Oakland.

Ron Darling (1-1) got his first victory of the season, snapping a five-game losing streak that dated back to last season. The veteran right-hander worked five innings and limited the Royals to one run on seven hits, walking three and striking out four. Five relievers finished up for the Athletics.

Tom Browning (0-2) took the loss for Kansas City, allowing six hits and four runs in 4 1-3 innings. The Royals left 14 runners on base one night after stranding 23 in a 14-inning victory over Seattle.

fourth, fifth and sixth innings to take a 6-1 lead before Kansas City rallied for two runs in the bottom of the sixth. The Royals still had the bases loaded in that inning

Orioles 7, Yankees 5

NEW YORK — Brady Anderson hit a three-run homer with two outs in the ninth inning, giving the Baltimore Orioles a come-from-behind victory over New York.

New York had a 5-3 lead entering the ninth and was on the verge of ending its three-game losing streak. But Harold Baines singled off Steve Howe. Chris Hoiles drew a walk off John Wetteland (1-1), pinch-hitter Matt Nokes singled to load the bases and Jeff Manto hit an RBI single to make it 5-4.

After Brett Barberie hit into a 1-2-3 double play, Anderson homered into the lower deck in right field on a 2-0 pitch, giving Wetteland his second blown save of the season.

Blue Jays 4, Tigers 2

DETROIT — Shawn Green and Ed Sprague homered on the first two pitches of the seventh inning, helping Toronto snap a three-game losing streak with a win over Detroit.

David Cone (3-2) scattered four hits, including Cecil Fielder's eighth home run, walked three and struck out five to win his second straight complete game. Cone did not allow a hit over the final four innings and retired the last seven batters he faced.

Indians 9, Red Sox 5

BOSTON — Kenny Lofton went 3-for-3 and scored four times, including the go-ahead run on Carlos Baerga's two-out single in the ninth inning, as Cleveland rallied for a victory over Boston.

Boston was one out away from extending its winning streak to six games, but Omar Vizquel hit a single past Mo Vaughn to drive in Wayne Kirby and tie the game 5-5. Baerga followed hit a bloop single to center that drove in Lofton, and Albert Belle followed with a three-run homer off Ken Ryan (0-1).

Twins 8, Mariners 6

MINNEAPOLIS — Rookie Marty Cordova homered for the fourth consecutive game and Pat Meares broke a seventh-inning tie with a solo homer as Minnesota rallied for a victory.

Astros take long ball to win over Expos

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Tony Eusebio hit the first grand slam of his career and Jeff Bagwell hit a two-run homer as the Houston Astros overcame the ejection of pitcher Darryl Kile to beat Montreal 10-2 Friday night.

Kile and manager Terry Collins were ejected in the fourth after Kile hit Roberto Kelly with a pitch. Kelly was the first batter for the Expos after Montreal starter Pedro Martinez hit Luis Gonzalez with a pitch in the third inning.

Eusebio highlighted a seven-run seventh with his first homer of the season, off Reid Cornelius. Craig Biggio hit a two-run double in the inning and another run was forced home when Bryan Eversgerd hit Gonzalez with a pitch.

Eusebio has started only 10 games this season, but leads the Astros with 14 RBIs.

Martinez (3-1) had won eight straight decisions since last July 14. He also had won six in a row on the road.

Martinez, who led the NL with 11 hit batsmen last year, pitched six innings with five strikeouts and two walks. Overall, the Expos had won four straight on the road.

Dave Veres (1-0) replaced Kile and pitched three innings with three strikeouts.

Bagwell, in the throes of a season-long slump, hit a 2-1 pitch from Martinez over the center-field fence in the third inning, giving the Astros a 3-1 lead after Biggio had doubled to center field. It was Bagwell's third homer.

Gonzalez singled, went to third base on Dave Magadan's single and scored on Eusebio's double-play grounder in the second.

Braves 4, Marlins 0
ATLANTA — Pinch-hitter Dwight Smith hit a grand slam with two outs in the ninth inning, lifting Steve Avery and Atlanta over Florida.

Avery (1-1) gave up five hits in the sixth shutout of his career, and first since June 7, 1993, against San Diego. He struck out seven and walked four in Atlanta's first complete game of the season.

Smith hit a 3-1 pitch over the right-field fence off Richie Lewis, the fourth Florida pitcher of the game. It was his second homer of the year and lifted his average as a pinch-hitter to .500 (5-for-10) with seven RBIs.

The Braves won for the fourth time in five games. The Marlins have lost 10 of 12.

Jeff Blauser started the ninth with a double off the right-field fence against Randy Veras (0-1). Marlins starter Bobby Witt gave up four hits in seven innings.

Mets 5, Phillies 1
PHILADELPHIA — Rico

Brognia hit a three-run homer in the seventh inning and the New York Mets beat Philadelphia, just the Phillies' third loss in 15 games.

Mets starter Bret Saberhagen left the game after five innings because of shoulder stiffness. He will be re-evaluated by the Mets' medical staff Saturday.

The Mets broke a 1-1 tie with four runs in the seventh. Jose Vizcaino's RBI grounder put New York ahead and Brognia homered off Paul Quantrill (1-3).

Eric Gunderson (1-0), who replaced Saberhagen, pitched two innings. Saberhagen gave up five hits and four walks.

The Mets opened the scoring in the fourth. Bobby Bonilla walked on four pitches, moved to second on Joe Orsulak's single, then scored on Jeff Kent's RBI single past third.

Philadelphia tied the game at 1 in the fifth, but Saberhagen allowed only the one run after loading the bases with one out.

Quantrill walked, went to second on Lenny Dykstra's hit, to third on Mickey Morandini's walk and scored on Gregg Jefferies' sacrifice fly to left.

CINCINNATI — Pete Schourek pitched eight strong innings and Cincinnati got to .500 for the first time this season, beating Colorado.

struck out eight and walked two, and got help from his defense.

The Rockies' best chance came in the fourth when Walt Weiss singled and tried to score from first on Larry Walker's double. But second baseman Bret Boone relayed a throw from right fielder Reggie Sanders and cut down Weiss at the plate.

Counseling can release Cox from charges he hit his wife

MARIETTA, Ga. (AP) — Atlanta Braves manager Bobby Cox may escape charges of striking his wife if he successfully completes violence counseling and an alcohol evaluation, his lawyer said Friday after a court appearance.

Cox agreed to the counseling during a brief hearing in Cobb County Domestic Violence Court. Magistrate T.O. Sturdivant put the charges on hold for 90 days pending the outcome of the counseling.

Cox, 53, was charged with simple battery May 7 after his wife called police to their home northwest of Atlanta. Pamela Cox told police her husband hit her, but retracted the statement the next day.

The judge instructed Mrs. Cox to attend a YWCA battered women's program.

"With the counseling, if completed, the case should be dismissed," Cox's attorney, Stephen Steele, told reporters after the hearing.

The couple declined to comment. Mrs. Cox followed closely behind her husband as they left the courtroom, putting her arm around him.

Steele said the Atlanta manager has already chosen a counselor, but declined to identify that person or say how often they will meet.

"This is something the Coxes had discussed and were willing to go along with from the very beginning," he said.

Steele said he and solicitor Ben Smith agreed not to discuss the case further.

Mrs. Cox called 911 the night of May 7 to ask for help in getting her husband "out of the house."

Prep player who pleaded guilty makes official college visit

WASHINGTON (AP) — A top New York City high school basketball guard who pleaded guilty in January to felony sexual abuse reportedly made an official recruiting visit this week to George Washington University.

The visit to GW by Richie Parker was arranged this week and concluded Thursday night. The Washington Post reported.

A spokeswoman for the school said she didn't know if Parker had been on the campus.

Parker's recruitment has created problems at several other universities.

Seton Hall, the university that signed Parker to a letter of intent in November, rescinded its scholarship offer about 10 days after Parker's plea bargain in the sex abuse case. Utah and one other school in which Parker had expressed interest also halted their recruiting efforts for him.

GW basketball coach Mike Jarvis has the support of university president Stephen J. Trachtenberg in recruiting Parker.

"The question you're asking is:

Does this institution believe in redemption?" Trachtenberg told the Post earlier this week. "And the answer from my point of view is that if there is demonstration of contrition ... and he is now prepared to get on with a constructive academic life, we're not going to throw ourselves in the way."

lead at one point. Reliever Chip Duncan pitched a scoreless last three innings to pick up his first save of the year.

But that wasn't before the two teams chipped out 37 hits, 10 of them over the wall (five by each team). The only problem was that Midland dingers accounted for seven runs. Tulsa bombs brought home 11.

Tulsa's Frank Charles, who had only two homers on the season coming into the game, blasted out two homers. He had four hits on the night and drove in six runs. His second homer in the eighth inning off Mike Butler was a grand tater, breaking the Christensen Stadium scoreboard, which can't count above 19 runs. Tulsa also got two homers from Osmari Estrada, who drove in four runs. It was the first two blasts out of the park this season for Estrada. Johnny Monell also homered for the Drillers while driving in five runs with three hits.

Midland also hit the long ball often. J.D. Ramirez, who last had two homers in one game on opening night last season, hit a pair off of Scott and now has four for the year.

Todd Greene, who leads the Texas League dinger list, blasted his 12th of the season, a solo shot in the third. George Arias, who is chasing Greene for the TL homer title, kept pace with his 10th, a two-run shot in the first inning.

Tulsa touched Midland's five pitchers for 20 hits. Mike Schooler, the last of the Angel mound parade, was the only Midland hurler not to allow Tulsa a run, pitching a perfect ninth when the Angels were out of it.

Angel Dust: Emmitt Cohick, who played for the Angels last season, has rejoined the club from Triple-A Vancouver. He got his first hit for Midland, a single in the fifth. Pitcher Kyle Sebach is also back with the Angels while pitchers Darrel Akerfelds and Steve Renko will join the team soon as will outfielder Steve Hoesy, another former M-Angel. Infielder Rene Gonzales has been promoted to Vancouver while pitcher John Thibert was released. Pitchers Anthony Chavez and Tony Mack have been optioned to Lake Elsinore. A pre-game air show will kickoff today's 7 p.m. game between these same two teams with B-1-B Bomber, A-10, F-16 and F-17 Stealth to have fly overs. However, it looked like the rocket's red glare started a day early with the 30-run Friday night.

Sixty-nine year old defies laws of aging

By Marty Sabota
San Antonio Express-News

SAN ANTONIO — Sixty-nine-year-old Jim Law defies the unwritten law of aging.

In fact, the nation's fastest senior citizen is the antithesis of that popular notion that older is slower.

Once an overweight, two-pack-a-day smoker with a dizzyingly high cholesterol level, Law now is a paragon of fitness.

Billed as "America's Fastest Man at Age 65," Law holds United States and world records in the 100, 200 and 400-meter runs in his age group, with times that are just seconds off the recognized world record pace.

For his achievements during his "twilight stint," the Charlotte, N.C., professor and administrator of 45 years is considered THE megastar among the 8,000 athletes competing in the 1995 U.S. National Senior Sports Classic V, which began Wednesday.

The world-class sprinter's celebrity status was evident on the event's first day when he easily won his heat to qualify for the semifinals in the 400-meter, 65-to-69 bracket as 200 fans at Alamo

AP Laserphoto
Jim Law crosses the finish line in the over-65 400 meter trials Wednesday in San Antonio.

Although his 1:03.97 didn't best his world outdoor 400-meter record for his age group of 58.79 seconds, the adoring crowd seem to care.

Even his competitors were rooting for him.

"He is so good," exclaimed Bill Brobst, 65, a fellow North Carolinian from Kitty Hawk, who said he runs "a lot better" when Law is competing.

Although the retired nuclear engineer didn't run near the race Law did, he was thrilled with his once-around-the-track 1:16 because it was his second fastest 400-meter ever and he was just six weeks out of prostate cancer surgery.

Fellow competitor Darrell Mitchell, 65, a retired United Methodist pastor from Marshalltown, Iowa, also lauded Law for his attitude both on and off the track.

"He goes out of his way for you," Mitchell said. "If he's met you, he won't forget you."

Chimed in Brobst: "He's an inspiration to us all."

Asked whether he considered himself a role model, Law said modestly: "I hope so."

Much of that credit, he said, belongs to the organizers of the Senior Olympics for "showcasing a lot of people who fly in the face of aging."

Law also is quick to share the limelight with fellow athletes at the nation's premier sports competition for seniors, many of whom he considers like family.

"We've had reunions," he said. "That's a big part of what goes on the fun and the fellowship."

Like some of his peers, Law was active in sports in high school and in college. But he slacked off for more than 40 years while he focused on family and career as an educator at Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte.

Nine years ago, he had a life-altering experience.

"My doctor told me my cholesterol was 322," Law said.

When the interviewer gasped, he laughed and said: "Yeah, that was the reaction of a nurse friend, too."

Law changed his lifestyle immediately. No longer did he fight others at gatherings for those delicious deviled eggs.

His motivation was a simple one: "It was out of a kind of fear."

A change of diet — convenient fast foods were scrapped, for instance, and exercise paid off in nearly no time at all.

"Within seven months, my cholesterol level was 188," he recalled.

These days, he claims: "I'm in better health than I was 20 years ago."

The trim, 5-foot-10 sexagenarian doesn't go in for obsessive training. He runs thrice weekly.

Blair makes transition to full-time role model

More Sports/8C

DALLAS (AP) — Five-time Olympic champion Bonnie Blair has hung up her professional skates but continues to be an inspiration, admittedly not one of the goals she set for herself years ago when she took to the ice.

Now, as the American female with the most Olympic gold medals, the status of role model "comes with the territory," the retired speedskater said Friday during an appearance at the Women's Sports Foundation Summit '95.

Blair said that as she passionately pursued the sport she loves, she idolized speedskater Eric Heiden, East German women skaters and a former competitor from her youth, Sarah Doctor.

"I think being a speedskater, people always looked up to Eric Heiden," she said of the great who took home five gold medals during the 1980 Lake Placid Olympics. "I mean that is just a given because what he did was totally incredible."

But it was always Blair's family members who were highest on her pedestal.

"They were the ones that I always looked up to. They were always there for me, no matter what," she said. "They're the reason that I am the way I am today."

Blair, 31, began skating at the tender age of 2, following in the footsteps of her five older brothers and sisters.

Now, it's others who want to follow in hers. She was invited to speak at the foundation's annual gathering, which is addressing the education, development and promotion of female athletes. The meeting continues through Sunday.

Asked about the importance of girls and young women having female role models, Blair said she's glad that women's sports are gaining ground in media coverage.

"I think it's nice now that women's sports are out there in the public eye quite a bit more ... because it does give us another option where quite a few years back it was only the men that you see," she said.

"I think that's probably why, when I was younger, I did kind of look more to the Eric Heidens because those were the ones that you saw a little bit more."

Since making Olympic history last year by winning her fifth gold medal, she's been raking in numerous awards, including the 1994 Sportswoman of the Year from Sports Illustrated magazine and the 1994 Female Athlete of the Year from The Associated Press.

Blair ended her career in March at a speedskating invitational at Calgary's Olympic Oval, winning both the 500 meters and 1,000 meters. In February, she set the world record of 38.68 seconds in the 500-meter sprint at the same venue.

Blair is the only U.S. Winter Olympian to win a gold medal in the same event in three separate Olympic Games and the only woman to win consecutive gold medals in the 500 meters.

LEE: Watters dedicates game to coach

the best-of-three series 3-1 on Friday in Grapevine and will play Game 2 today at 1 p.m. in Fort Worth with a third game, if necessary, immediately following.

"You want to give a kid a chance and I thought about it last night and decided that I would go with Chad," said Midland Lee coach Jesse Benavidez, who gathered his 100th victory at Lee. "I thought I would give (Monterey starter Monty Ward) someone new to look at, give him something different out there."

"Coach (Benavidez) told me on the bus that I was going to start today. I was excited about the chance," said Crow, after being asked if he was scared to face a pitcher of Ward's caliber. "We all knew how big a game this was. I just wanted to be relaxed when I went up there."

Crow hit a Texas League single over third baseman Robert Castillo's head into shallow left field with the bases loaded and one out, scoring Kevin Jordan to give Lee a 2-1 lead that Watters refused to surrender.

The senior from Lee allowed only a double to lead off hitter

Dusty Hart in the third inning. The rest, while not the prettiest thrown game, was enough to keep the Plainsmen baffled as he struck out nine and walked seven.

"This one was for Coach Benavidez. This was a present to him," said a jubilant and emotionally fatigued Watters. "My fastball did not have too much velocity, but my curveball was working real well today. It was dropping off the table. The big difference was our guys were real hyped up about this game and they played great defense."

Britt Harper, who misjudged Hart's double in the third inning, made a sliding hip pocket grab of an Eric Jorgensen fly ball in the second inning. First baseman Mark Holly scooped out two low throws, one in the fifth inning with a runner at second base, and catcher Mike Phillips lunged in front of numerous pitches that bounded around the plate to keep the Plainsmen offense stifled.

"Watters is just wild enough that he is hard to hit," said a philosophical Monterey coach Bobby Moegel, who completed his 36th season with 1,002 career wins.

"We tried to set the table several times during the game, but we just failed to hit the ball."

Despite allowing only hit, Watters was working out of tight spots throughout the game. He walked the leadoff batter in three of the first four innings and that kept tension high as he and Ward battled pitch-for-pitch early.

Ward (11-5) took the loss after being tagged for two runs in the fourth after his team staked him to a 1-0 lead. The Texas Tech signee, who finished the season with 157 strikeouts for the year, fanned 13 Lee batters.

In the fourth, Lee received back-to-back doubles to lead off the inning by Raymond Martinez and Jordan. Jordan's hit scored Martinez to tie the game at 1-1. Following a Harper strike out, Phillips struck out, but an error by Monterey catcher Eric Ochoa allowed Phillips to reach base. A walk to Holly loaded the bases.

Ward struck out Justin Ham on a 1-2 pitch to set up the heroics by Crow.

"I thought it would be a real close game," said Benavidez. "I gave all the credit to our kids to come back with two runs after they scored one."

"It was a split finger fastball and it found a hole," said Jordan of his team-leading 29th RBI that tied the game. "This game is very special to me. You have to applaud Lance for doing a great job out there."

"This makes our season a success," said Harper. "After losing here last year we really wanted to beat them. I want to go further, but this makes this season a success."

And Friday, Crow made Lowrey Field his "Field of Dreams."

SEMIS: Lance catch saves Lady Rebs

(From 1C)

The nerves might have been going full throttle but the Lady Rebels were the first ones to get on the board thanks to some Pearlman mistakes.

With one out in the top of the first, Lee shortstop Susanna Reed singled to center and moved to second on what was called an illegal pitch — the first of three errors by Pearlman freshman pitcher Melissa Coronado (15-3). After Christian Lance singled and stole second to put runners on second and third, Coronado threw a wild pitch on a third strike to Emily Hayes that caused Reed to break for the plate.

Reed should have been out by ten feet but the ball was thrown to Coronado, who dropped it while applying the tag.

Pearland, which scored one run on two hits, came back in the third proving it too could force Lee into making a few mistakes — even if it was for just one inning.

After an infield single by Pearlman's Missy Ladd, Angela Burkett hit the ball right in front of the plate. The throw by Lee catcher Amee Pullen was dropped allowing runners to advance to second and third with no one out.

Ladd then scored from third base on a passed ball, but with a runner on third and no one out, the play that put Lee into the next round was made.

Leadoff hitter Burkett took an Emily Hayes pitch to right field. Right fielder Christian Lance, who made an outstanding shoe-lace catch in the first, handled the fly ball and fired the ball home to nail Burkett, trying to score. The throw kept the game tied at one and probably will be looked at as the play that moved Lee, 29-0, into the semifinals.

"Christian Lance saved us," Gotcher said. "They could have had two or three runs if she hadn't made that play."

For Lance, the play was nothing she could give reason for after the game. It just represented the fact that Lee was here to play against the state's best competition.

"Everytime I get into that situation I just do it," said Lance. "We didn't know what to expect. We knew we had to play our best. We couldn't get too tight, but we couldn't slack it off."

The play proved to be a springboard for the defense that along with the pitching of Emily Hayes (19-0) did not allow another batter to reach base. Hayes, who didn't look like the over-powering pitcher that struck out 29 batters in the first three postseason games, struck out two and let the defense behind her make the plays to retire the last 14 batters she faced. She did this while pitching just 65 pitches with only ten balls.

The Lady Oilers' two hits came in 23 at-bats. This coming from a team that hit .350 coming into the game.

In the end, it was another Pearlman mistake that gave the Lady Rebels their winning run. In the top of the sixth inning with one out, Michelle Primeaux (a pinch runner for Hayes, who opened the inning with a single) was on first. Adrian Nobles put down a bunt to sacrifice Primeaux to second. Primeaux advanced to third on a wild pitch.

Pearland, which ended its season at 28-6, then made another huge mistake when catcher Carrie Tullis let a Coronado pitch go by her to allow Primeaux to score her team leading fifth post-season run to break up the tie.

The win wasn't pretty for the Lady Rebels. They scored two runs on just three hits and left five players on base. However, they caught up to a pitcher that was much faster than any they had seen during the year. The players also realized that they had eclipsed the football team's feat.

"We heard all week that the football team got to the final eight," said Reed. "We were going to see if we could go farther than they did and we did."

Pasadena Dobie's Williams' no-hits Humble softballers

UIL Softball

AUSTIN — Christa Williams pitched a no-hitter with a state tournament record 14 strikeouts and drove in five runs on three hits to lead Pasadena Dobie to a 7-0 quarterfinal win over Humble in the Class 5A state softball tournament.

Williams had a state tournament record 14 strikeouts, facing the minimum 21 batters Friday in her 11th no-hitter of the season.

But she was equally as deadly from the plate with a first-inning RBI triple, two-run single in the third and a two-run single in the fifth.

Plano East 1, San Antonio Marshall 0
Michelle Heitter's sixth-inning RBI single broke a scoreless tie, leading Plano East to a 1-0 quarterfinal win over San Antonio Marshall in the Class 5A state softball tournament.

Heitter's second hit of the day drove in Jessie Dees for the only run in the game. Meanwhile, Lady Panthers' starting pitcher Catherine Ardis held Marshall to just five hits to seal the win.

Plano East (16-7) advances to face Midland Lee in Saturday's semifinals. Midland Lee beat Pearlman, 2-1, earlier Friday. The Lady Rams (24-2-1) had an eight-game winning streak snapped, losing in the state quarterfinals for the second straight year.

Left-fielder Allison Kawazoe had three of the Rams' five hits but

Heitter looped the ball just over the head of Rams second baseman Michelle Haby with the bases loaded to score Dees and break the tie. Dees had doubled earlier.

Two runs in the top of the seventh ruined the shutout for Lide (18-2), who struck out three.

Molly Miller had two hits for the Lady Tigers, who finished at 18-6. Erin Fasel (18-6) took the loss.

Grand Saline scored their first run in the second when Leah Koonce singled, advanced to third on walk and a single and scored on Jada Violet's RBI ground out.

Waco Midway 6, Keller 5

Melissa Morris' two-run, seventh-inning double capped a comeback behind 6-5 win for Waco Midway over Keller in the Class 5A softball tournament quarterfinals.

Midway (23-5) faces the winner of Pasadena Dobie, who defeated Humble 7-0 in a Friday night quarterfinal game. Keller's season ends at 30-10.

Stacey Dean had three hits to lead the Indians in the losing effort.

With Midway trailing 5-4, Teffani Tyler led off the seventh inning with a double. She advanced to third as Joanna Berg reached on an error by Dean, Keller's shortstop. Berg then stole second base, leaving runners on second and third with one out.

Lukas hopes to avoid Preakness controversy

By Ed Schuyler Jr.
AP Racing Writer

BALTIMORE — Should Kentucky Derby winner Thunder Gulch or stablemate Timber Country win the Preakness, it would stir interest.

But it wouldn't stir anything like the controversy trainer D. Wayne Lukas' first victory in the race did 15 years ago.

"I thought everybody was happy I won until I got to the track the next day," Lukas said Friday. "I thought they were congratulatory telegrams. But they were 100 to one in saying, 'You S.O.B., you mugged the filly.'"

"Everybody wasn't pleased about Codex's victory of over Genuine Risk, the Kentucky Derby winning filly, in the 1980 Preakness at Pimlico.

"When I got to the track, I was told at the stable gate I had a stack of mail," Lukas said Friday. "I thought they were congratulatory telegrams. But they were 100 to one in saying, 'You S.O.B., you mugged the filly.'"

The outrage stemmed from jockey Angel Cordero's riding tactics on Codex. With Codex leading Genuine Risk into the stretch, Cordero angled the colt out and forced the filly extremely wide, costing her any chance of victory.

Lukas has won two Preaknesses since, with Tank's Prospect in 1985, and with Tabasco Cat last year.

Should Thunder Gulch win, he would become the first Triple Crown challenger since Sunday Silence won the Derby and Preakness before finishing second in the Belmont Stakes in 1989.

A victory by either of the Lukas duo would make him only the second trainer to win four straight Triple Crown races. Lucien Laurin did it when Riva Ridge won the 1972 Belmont and Secretariat won the Triple Crown in 1973.

Lukas' three-race winning streak includes Tabasco Cat's victories in the Preakness and Belmont last year, and Thunder Gulch's victory in the Derby.

For the Preakness, Thunder Gulch was the early 2-1 favorite. Timber Country, third in the 1 1/4-mile Derby, was the third choice at 9-2. The front-running Talkin Man, 12th in the Derby, was 4-1 in the field of 11 3-year-olds for the 1 3/16-mile test.

As for being in a position of beating one of his horses with another, Lukas said, "I've been in this situation a lot. I've had five horse-entries going back to the 1960s when I trained quarter horses."

Lukas has had multiple starters in three Preaknesses, but they weren't always coupled in the betting. Thunder Gulch and Timber Country won't run as an entry either because of different owners.

Of course, Lukas had three Derby starters this year, with the filly Serena's Song finishing 16th. Serena's Song ran in the Black-Eyed Susan on Friday at Pimlico.

The only others from the 19-horse Derby field entered in the Preakness were runnerup Tejano Run and fifth-place Mecke.

Newcomers to the Triple Crown competition will be Oliver's Twist, Our Gatsby, Star Standard, Mystery Storm, Itron and Pana Brass. All of the latter's five career starts have been in Panama.

Oliver's Twist is bred, co-owned and trained by J. William Boniface, who bred, co-owned and trained Deputed Testimony. He was the last non-Derby starter to win the Preakness, in 1983.

Oliver's Twist was to make a 40-minute van ride from Boniface's Bonita Farm at Darlington, Md., Saturday morning. That's the same way Deputed Testimony arrived at Pimlico, at 11 a.m. on Preakness Day.

Snead at best in foul-weather gear

The Associated Press

MALVERN, Pa. — Whenever J.C. Snead pulls out the foul-weather gear, he says he looks forward to playing good golf.

Snead included an eagle 2 in a 4-under-par 66 Friday on a raw, gray afternoon where temperatures dipped into the 40s, to take a two-stroke lead after the opening round of the Bell Atlantic Classic.

"For some reason I play better when the weather's crappy," Snead said.

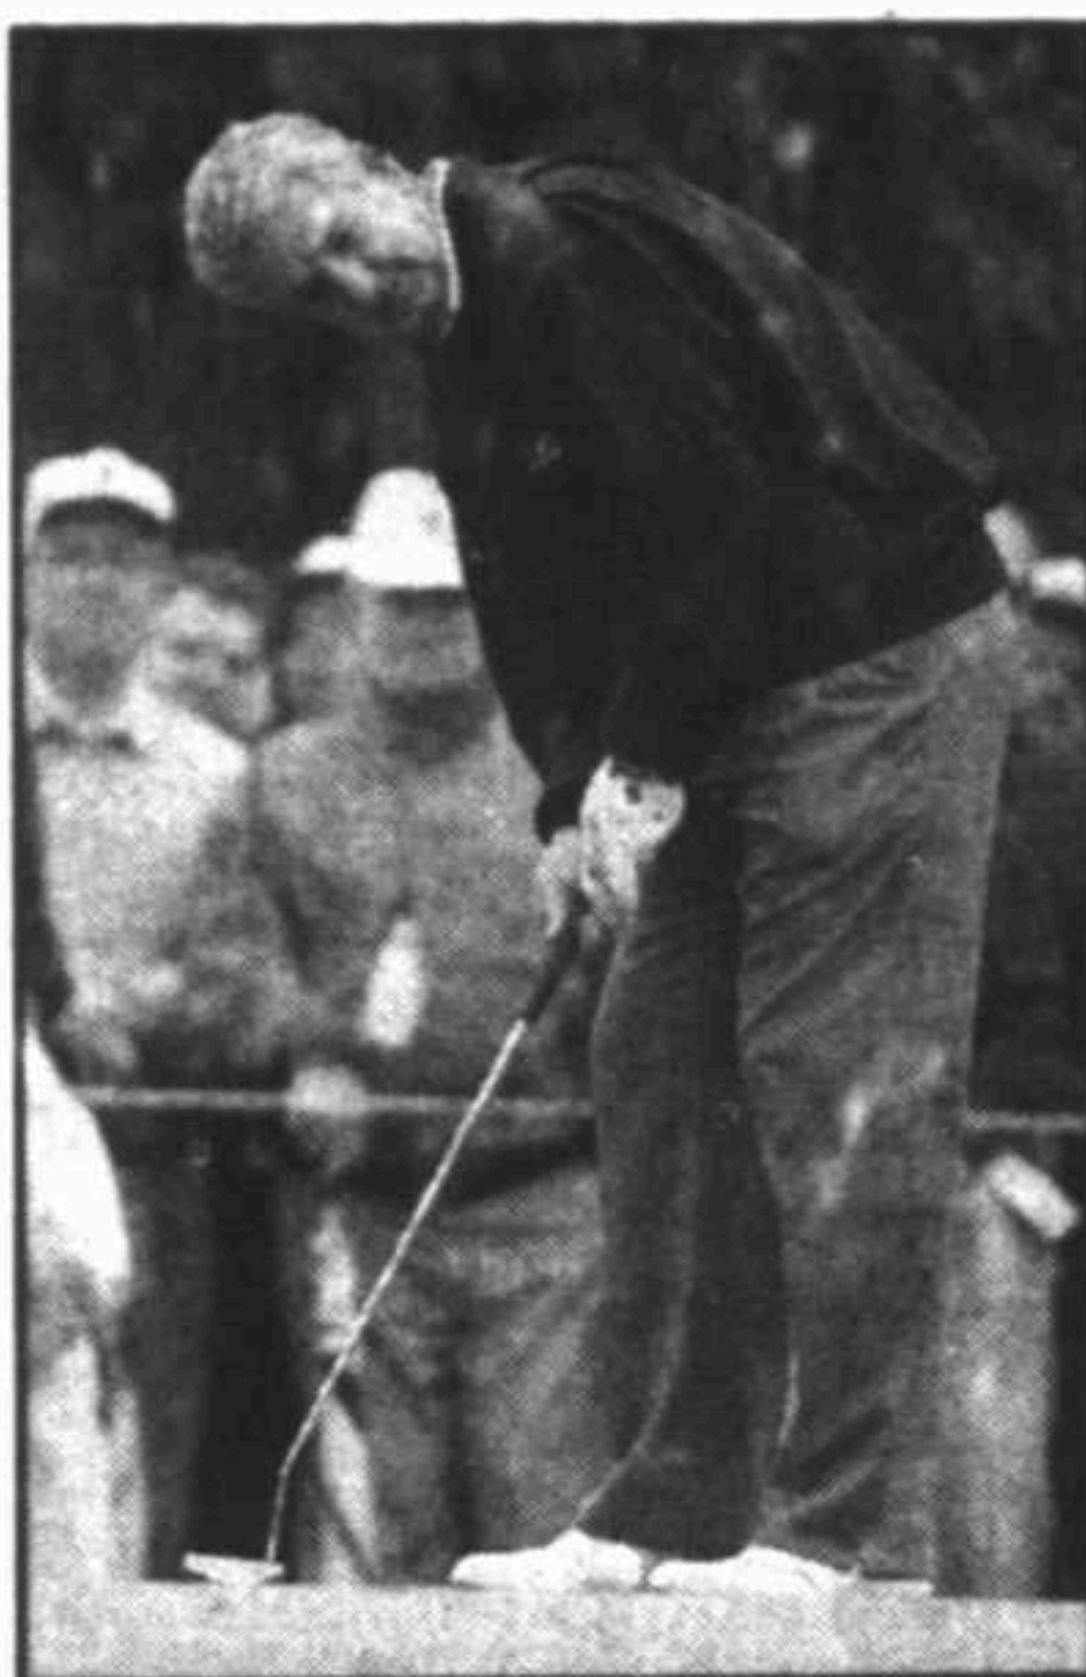

While the rest of the 78-player field was shivering on the Chester Valley Country Club course, Snead was taking advantage of the resulting high scores.

Dave Stockton, Isao Aoki, Jim Colbert and former PGA commissioner Deane Beaman were at 68, while defending champion Lee Trevino was another stroke back. Jack Nicklaus struggled in his opening round, recording three bogeys and one birdie to finish with a 72.

Snead was one under when he teed off with a 2-iron on the 357-yard, par-4 11th. He put the ball in the rough on the right side of the fairway 124 yards from the pin and holed-out with a 9-iron.

Beaman, who spent 20 years as head of the PGA before retiring in 1994 and joining the senior tour, birdied Nos. 3, 11 and 17 and bogeyed only the tough No. 13 for his 68. Beaman, who has yet to finish in the top 10, has been hampered by an injury to his lower back and rib cage since last September. His round Friday was his best showing so far this year.

J.C. Snead puts in the first round of the PGA Senior Bell Atlantic Classic Friday in Malvern, Pa.

Buick Classic
HARRISON, N.Y. — Chris Perry, who set the Nike Tour earnings record last year, and Mike Hulbert, the PGA Tour's only one-handed putter, shared the lead Friday, midway through the Buick Classic.

Perry lost his PGA Tour playing card in 1993 but got it back by winning $167,148 on the Nike Tour. The 35-year-old son of former major league pitcher Jim Perry and nephew of Hall of Fame pitcher Gaylord Perry had six birdies in a 4-under-par 67 that gave him a 36-hole total of 136.

Hulbert, who has only his right hand on the club when he putts, had a second 68 over the 6,779-yard Westchester Country Club. Hulbert, 37, has three victories in a 14-year career.

The two were one shot ahead of first-round leader Doug Martin, who had a 70, and U.S. Open champion Ernie Els, who had a 69.

At 138 was Bobby Wadkins after a 68 and he was one stroke ahead of Vijay Singh, the 1993 Buick champion, who had a 69.

Perry had five of his birdies in a seven-hole span starting at No. 5. The longest of the putts were a couple from eight feet. The others were from 5 feet, 1 foot and 18 inches.

"All I have to do is keep hitting the fairways," Perry said. "This is not a course you can win on unless you do. The rough is incredible."

Hulbert didn't make a rash move to the one-handed style, adopting it in February after practicing it for seven years.

"I just wasn't comfortable," he said after closing with a bogey at 15 and a birdie at 17. "Why continue to do something that isn't producing any results? People chuckle when they watch me. I look at them and say to myself 'Why don't they want to see the results?' The results have been good. Sure it's something that is unusual, but it's something that works. I've raised a lot of eyebrows and that's good."

Els, 25, lost his chance of grabbing even a share of the lead when he bogeyed the 477-yard, par-4 15th. He hit his second shot into a sand trap, blasted 15 feet past and needed two putts.

Three-time British Open champion Nick Faldo had a second 70 and was tied with Brad Faxon, who took a 9 on the final hole Thursday that included a two-stroke penalty when his caddy gave him the wrong ball. He came back Friday with a 68, using the same caddy, John Burke.

Defending champion Lee Janzen was among the 78 who bettered the cut of 145 but he needed a final-hole eagle for a 71 that put him at 144.

Star Bank LPGA Classic

DAYTON, Ohio — Tracy Hanson, a 23-year-old rookie, shot a 5-under-par 67 on Friday for a one-shot, opening-round lead in the $500,000 Star Bank LPGA Classic.

One shot behind at 68 were Danielle Ammaccapane, Chris Johnson and Lisa Walters shots 68s, and Julie Inkster, Elaine Crosby and Lori West had 69s over the 6,319-yard Country Club of the North course in suburban Dayton.

Hanson, who had previously played on the European and Asian tours, had no bogeys and hit 17 greens. Hanson birdied the second and fourth holes and then took the lead alone with a 5-foot putt for birdie on the ninth.

Johnson was 5-under after three straight birdies on the back nine, but bogeyed the 18th after driving into a right side bunker. Two days of heavy rain made the soggy course play especially long. Several players had to make drops from casual water. Nine players, including Hollis Stacy and Patty Sheehan, shot 70 and another 16 were at 71, four back of the leader.

MCC: Rodgers-Jones lead President's Flight after first round

(From 1C)

Other first round leaders include the team of Johnny Rodgers and John Jones in the President's Flight who shot a 68, while Lynn Conine and Gary Trotter posted a 71 for a one shot lead in the First Flight division. The top eight teams are within six shots of one another in the First Flight.

"This is the largest number of teams that we've ever had for this tournament," said MCC golf pro Terry Lester of this year's 124 team field. He also added that the golf course was in great shape for the three-day event.

Over in the Second Flight, Steve Harper and Mike Canon blasted their way into the lead with a one stroke advantage over Jim Goates and Fred Crawford.

The Third Flight leaders are Ken Carter and Tom Albrecht with a score of 70. With a first round outing of 73 the tandem of Frank Swafford and Jim Harrison hold a two stroke advantage in the Fourth Flight.

Jim Chase and Midland College men's basketball coach Pat Rafferty showed they were able to hit from long range with a low score of 72 in the Fifth Flight and the Bolgers of Midland, Perry and Barr, shot an 80 to lead going into today's second round of the Sixth Flight.

Today's second round begins at 8:45 a.m. with the Championship, President's, First and Second Flights fighting for the coveted MIT trophy.

Flights three through six will tee off at 2 p.m. The tournament continues through Sunday.

Honda installs hearty V6 in its popular Accord Sedan

By Bob Plunkett
Special to The Reporter-Telegram

Honda's compact Accord series — which debuted last year in an award-winning new design with variations for coupe, sedan and station wagon formats — corrals more retail customers than any other label in the country.

Still, if you drove one like I did last year at Honda's high-speed oval test track in the heartland of Ohio, you too could conclude that even with Honda's impressive 4-cylinder 145-horsepower VTEC engine aboard, Accord could use a little something extra in the power department.

What Accord needs, at least to compete with its closest rivals, is more cylinders under the hood.

Two more cylinders is precisely what Accord Sedan earns for special 1995 LX and EX models which mark the first deployment of a V6 powerplant in Honda automobiles.

Interestingly, the new V6, composed of recycled aluminum and manufactured at Honda's Anna, O., engine plant, will appear only in Ohio-built Accords for domestic buyers, thanks to America's taste for V6 muscle and our relatively low cost of fuel. The rest of the world, it seems, must contend with Honda's 4-cylinder engines stocked in some 100,000 Accords that Honda also builds in Ohio for export to 36 countries, including the Japanese motherland.

Honda borrowed the design for new Accord V6's engine from an earlier Acura Legend, then modified concepts and content to apply specifically to the smaller car's structure. The result: A new 2.7-liter 90-degree V6 with single overhead camshaft, four valves in each cylinder and a multi-point programmed fuel injection system.

Horsepower climbs to 170 at 5600 rpm, while the maximum torque rating reaches 165 lbs/ft at 4500 rpm. Still, fuel figures climb as high as 25 mpg for free-way cruising.

What does this mean for the Accord V6 driver?

It means quicker off-the-line action, more throttle response for passing, fatter torque for mid-range speeds.

My tests in the new Accord V6, covering 250 miles across Arizona's low desert and over those jagged ridges east of Phoenix, traversed flat free-ways, corkscrew canyon 2-laners and steep mountain passes, plus congested urban routes threaded through Tempe and Scottsdale.

In every application, Accord V6 performed with a willing, even zestful spirit which, thanks to a number of high-tech auxiliary systems, makes driving this Honda so easy, even fun.

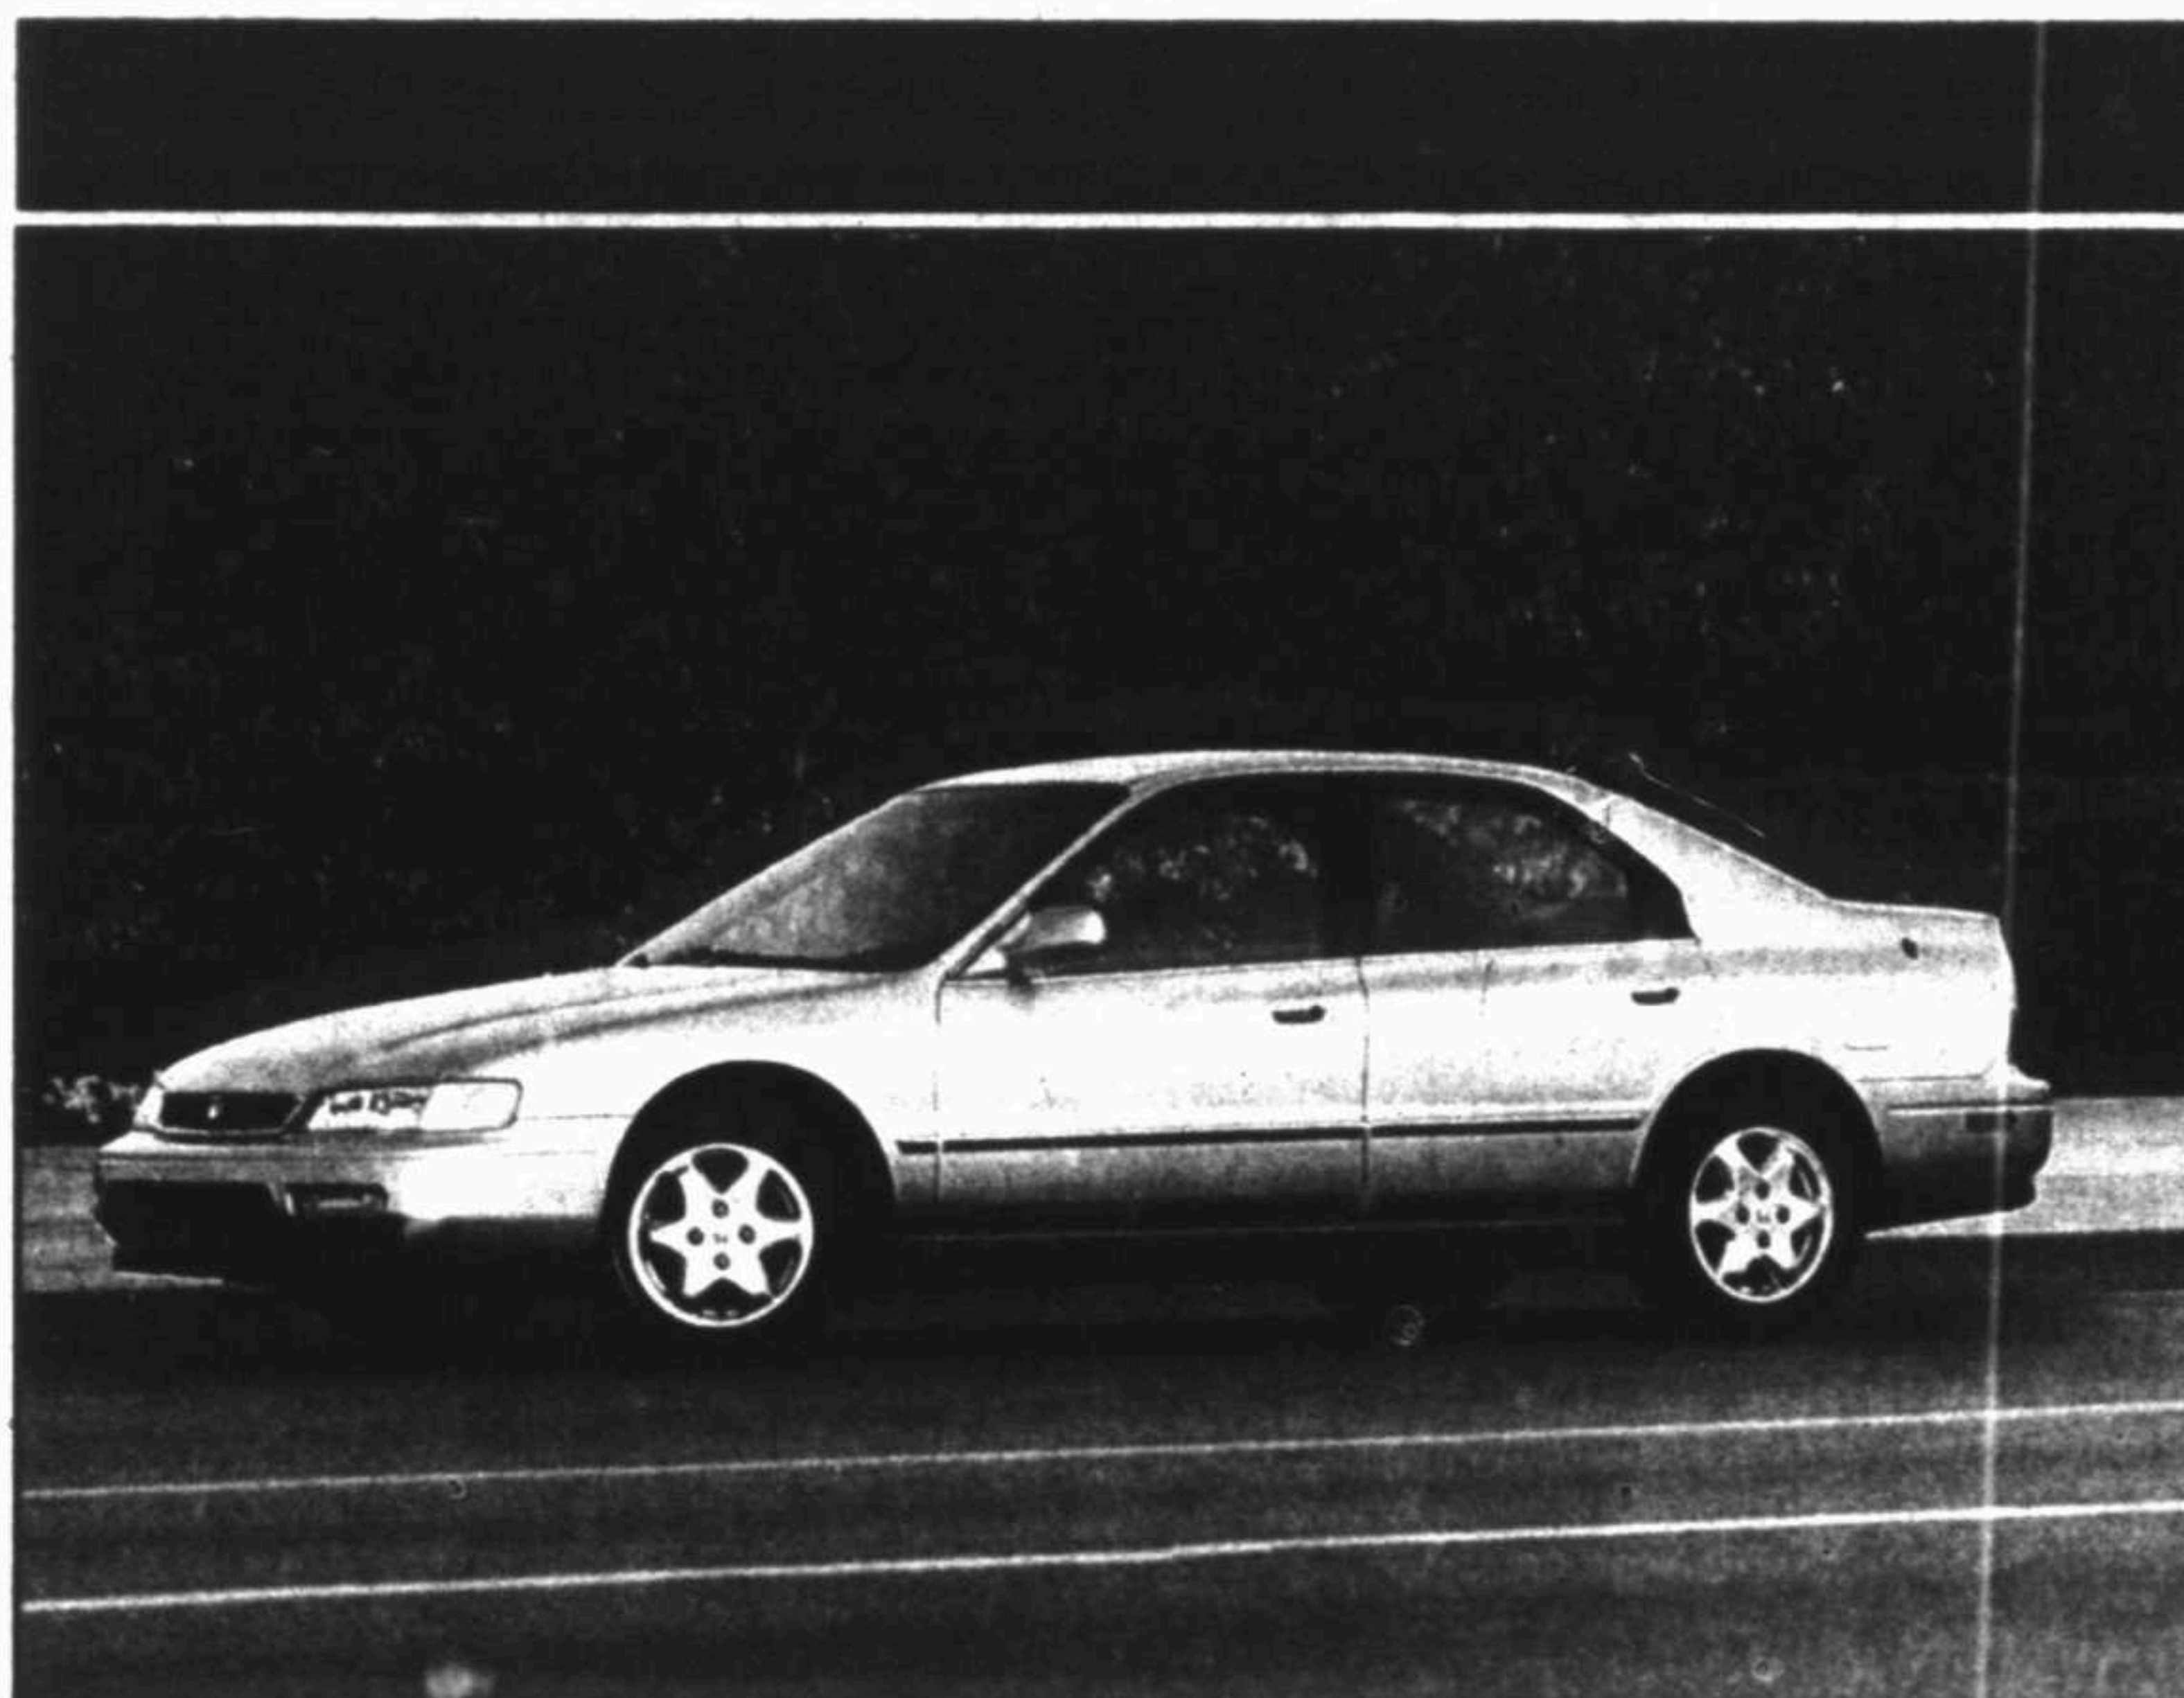

Keep in mind, though, that this is not simply the Accord 4-in-line car with more cylinders added.

Accord's chassis was beefed up and sheet-metal shapes were changed forward from the cab to accommodate the larger and heavier engine.

Frame rails extend, the front end stretches forward for 77 additional millimeters, there's a revised blackout grille treatment added and galvanized steel body stampings to improve durability. Further, Accord V6 has a new front air dam and on side rails a low strake to channel air away from the undercarriage and enhance aerodynamic efficiency.

Then the frame gains new strength members at critical points like door jams, A and B pillars, lower side sills and side rails.

Still, the overall appearance seems quite similar to 4-cylinder Accords. To detect differences, you would need to park the two side by side and compare.

With the addition of a new V6 engine, Honda's Accord sedan now offers quicker, off-the-line action, more torque and greater throttle response for passing. All in the familiar, popular package.

Hidden assets set up the best features.

New liquid-filled engine mounts, for instance, along with dynamic damper masses and a sound-absorbing hood blanket work in combination to significantly reduce engine vibrations and noise. Also, the cabin area earns additional insulation systems behind dash and inside door pillars, below front and rear floor panels and in wheel arches and the rear bulkhead.

In the handling department, bigger discs for the four brakes enhance Accord's stopping power, while Honda's exacting double wishbone suspension system morphs to manage the added weight and inertia of that larger engine — with subtle changes to spring rates, shock absorber bushings, wheel bearings, hubs and axles.

For convenience, Honda installs a new automatic 4-speed transmission in every Accord V6. It features electronic controls via 16-bit microprocessor, plus a lockup torque converter and unique "grade logic" shift point governor which selects third and fourth gear settings after measuring such variables as throttle position, road speed and rates of acceleration and deceleration.

Luxury's the by-word inside, with cushy front bucket seats divided by a console, power controls for windows and door locks, illuminated vanity mirrors, rear heating ducts, air conditioning, a fine stereo sound system with cassette deck, plus remote releases for fuel door and deck lid.

Accord V6 EX adds leather upholstery for seats and door panels, a leather-wrapped steering wheel, 8-way power controls for the driver's seat, as well as alloy wheels and power moonroof.

Competitive pricing begins at $22,300.

Looks can be deceiving with the '95 GMC Safari

By Tom Keene
Special to The Reporter-Telegram

Looks can be deceiving. The exterior of the 1995 GMC Safari looks like a delivery truck, but inside it's a plush van that seats seven in exceptional comfort.

Maybe it was the new appearance of the front end that caused my confusion. GMC has given the 1995 Safari XT a nose job. It now has smooth composite head lamps, and the air dam is integrated with the front bumper fascia. The park and turn lamps are mounted higher, which gives the entire front end a strong, massive truck-like appearance. Setting off this new look are big red letters: GMC. And let's not forget GMC is General Motor's truck division.

On the other hand, it could have been the side of the van that misled me into thinking the Safari was a delivery truck. The windows on the sliding door in the rear portion of the van are tinted. From the outside, they appear as black as the paint — the color of the test-vehicle I drove.

This tinted glass adds to the interior comfort. In bright sun, there is no need to squint, as the darkened glass cuts down on the glare. It also reduces the buildup of heat from a hot summer sun.

GMC is getting a reputation for producing up-scale plush vehicles, and the Safari is a good example — once you manage to get into it. It's a chore climbing aboard, as this vehicle sits higher than a minivan; but it is worth the effort, as the interior has much more room compared to a minivan. This vehicle was configured to seat seven people, and the extra wide opening of the side door allows easier access to the rear seat, compared to rear-seat access in most minivans.

All the seats are comfortable, except for the seventh seat, which is located in the center of the rear row. But even that seat isn't bad. Each of the other seats has an individual fold-down armrest and three-point safety belt. Speaking of safety, as a truck, this vehicle only offers a driver-side airbag, but dual airbags are coming.

When it came to rolling down the highway, I had to remind myself that I was in a vehicle with a truck platform. GMC has improved its springs and also has an optional FE2 touring suspension. There are many features I associate only with luxury cars. It has six-way power driver's seat, power windows and door mirrors. It even has the remote keyless entry, which is especially convenient. I purchased some plants at a nursery. With the remote keyless entry, opening the rear doors, loading seven large potted plants was easy. I simply released a couple of latches and tilted the rear bench seat forward. The plants (seven of them in buckets) were easily loaded, but I was horrified when the pots soiled the light gray carpeting. To my surprise, there were no stains to be seen.

sure and friction. The power booster lessens the pedal pressure needed to apply the pads and shoes to the drums and rotors. The first item to check is the brake booster. Check for vacuum going to the booster. Next with the truck up on a lift, check that both front and rear brakes work when the brake pedal is applied. Is the parking brake adjusted properly? Has anyone bled the hydraulic system? Were the drums and rotors cut at the proper setting? I have never had any problem with this type of truck, nor am I aware of any reasons why you are having a problem.

Dear Doctor: I own a 1987 Nissan pickup truck. I have one problem that I believe is dangerous — the brakes. They do not stop as well as they should. In fact, I cannot lock them up no matter how hard I try. I had a full brake job done including resurfacing the rotors and drums. Both my mechanic and I are puzzled. Can you help? Charlie P.

Dear Charlie: You are right, brakes that do not work properly are dangerous. The brake system requires hydraulic preslem when a General Motors car or truck has a heater a/c blower motor that stops working is a poor ground connection at the blower motor itself. There are two wires going to the blower motor. One is positive, the other negative. The negative wire is screwed to the blower motor base. If the connection is poor, it will cause the problem you describe. Both the heater and air conditioner use the same blower motor.

Dear Doctor: I own a 1992 Buick LeSabre. From day one, especially on a cold morning when I shift gears for the first use of the car for the day, it makes a scraping sound. I have been back to the dealer and they said it is characteristic of the car. The GM fix was a special lubricant that cured the problem for a short time. Is this normal? M.A.

Dear M.A.: The Buick LeSabre is one of my favorite big GM cars. Without hearing the noise it is hard for me to tell you if it is normal. I suggest that you leave the car at your auto repair shop. Then you and the technician start the car in the morning. He should be able to tell you if the noise that you hear is normal.

Dear Doctor: Could you advise me if it is necessary to change the oil in my car every 3,000 miles, or should I change it in fewer miles because I drive very little. My driving is all local. Dorothy N.

Dear Dorothy: The oil and filter should be changed every 3 months or 3,000 miles on most cars, and especially in your case because you take short trips. The oil becomes contaminated with gasoline and acids break down the oil. It may cost you a little more money, but in the long run, it is cheaper than an engine overhaul.
