If money were votes, Republican State Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland would soundly whip his Democratic challenger, Gilberto M. Garcia.

With reported 2000 campaign funds yet to be released by the Texas Ethics Commission (TEC), Craddick's campaign has generated more than $127,000 in contributions. Those funds' sources include political action committees in Austin, Dallas and Virginia and individuals, including his Midland friends and supporters, in such amounts as $3,000 to $20 and including streams of $1,000, $500, $250 and $100 donations.

Toward the other end of the spectrum, Garcia, a 52-year-old Midland school administrator and former teacher, has raised about $4,065, including a $400 loan, and has spent more than $4,800 in campaigning.

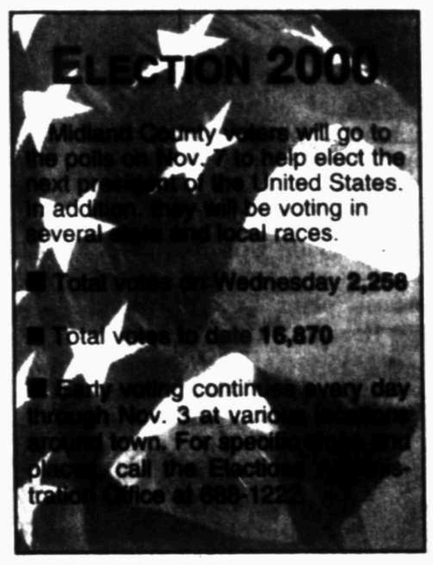

Craddick, through his campaign treasurer, Katie Heck of Midland, has listed $50,332.64 in political expenses from the first of the year to late September.

Craddick, 57, said that the 2000 campaign is bringing in more money than his previous contested campaigns, including the 1984 campaign in which he estimated that he spent between $40,000 and $50,000 in defeating Odessa Democrat David Smith.

Craddick noted that a May 2000 fund-raiser, his first, he said, "put on by a bunch of Midland people ... pretty much raised most of my money — a lot of it.

"It's the most I've every raised" and was

Wildcatters honor Henry Petroleum

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Henry Petroleum Corp., one of the Permian Basin's oldest and most successful independent oil companies, was honored Wednesday at a Midland Wildcatters reception at the Petroleum Club of Midland.

The company, which began 31 years ago in Midland as a two-man consulting firm with no income and no production, now operates more than 1,000 active wells with daily production in excess of 10,000 barrels of oil equivalent per day. The company employs more than 45 contract employees.

"We are extremely proud to have actively participated in the oil and gas industry of the Permian Basin for the past 31 years," said Jim Henry.

He said the company was formed in the summer of 1969, when he and another employee of Solar Oil Co. were visiting outside Solar's office before leaving for home. The topic was their future and both agreed that it would be nice to some day have their own company.

That brief conversation was the genesis of Henry Petroleum. A short time later, they were given the opportunity to start on that career path because Solar lost its primary investor and had to lay off most of the staff.

Henry said the plan was to begin as consultants, then become oil and gas operators and eventually emerge as an independent oil company. The proposal was presented to their wives, who readily agreed even though both families had small children and had very little money to put into the company. On Nov. 1, 1969, H&L Consultants was created based on a foundation of solid family support and strong religious principles.

In July 1971, an oil and gas operating company was established: Henry & Landenberger Inc. In 1977, the company's producing assets were split down the middle when Landenberger decided to retire. The remaining assets became Henry Petroleum Corp.

On Dec. 1, 1980, Dennis Johnson, now a principal, joined Henry Petroleum as vice president of production. "Dennis proved

Flu shot clinic brings large turnout

By Timothy V. Kreitz
MRT Correspondent

The Abell-Hanger Medical Pavilion's Urgent Care Center received its first shipment of flu vaccine this week and offered a vaccination clinic to a select group of Midlanders on Wednesday. Vaccinations were available for $10.

Janet Courtroul, director of nursing over intensive and surgical services, said the clinic was offered only to people over 65, or those suffering from chronic respiratory or cardiac problems.

"We only have 300 shots to administer today," she explained. "After that, we won't be receiving another shipment until sometime in late November or early December."

Ms. Courtroul said the shots had arrived late this year and that the Abell-Hanger Medical Pavilion was among the first in town to receive a shipment. "Many doctors' offices have not yet received their vaccination shipments," she said, and added that some of the reason for the large turnout at the Abell-Hanger Medical Pavilion may have been correlated with people's awareness of

Health insurance may increase for MISD employees

■ Costs could go up by as much as 15 percent.

By Danielle Belton
Staff Writer

Health insurance costs may be going up as much as 15 percent for Midland Independent School District teachers, administrators and staff. This change would impact nearly 81 percent of the employees covered by the districts' three health care plans.

Because of statewide health care increases, MISD may be forced to raise insurance rates for its employees. MISD Director of Finance David Garcia said no action has been made final yet.

"We're still in the negotiating phase," Garcia said. "There is a projected increase based on the bid we received but we haven't finalized what the plan is going to look like yet."

Employees are also facing the threat of losing their lower cost health options. The current cheaper HMO plan could be phased out, leaving employees with only the more expensive Preferred Provider Organization and Employee Retirement System health from which to choose.

According to Garcia, if the insurance increase occurs, "The HMO is basically going away and we're going to have a basic PPO."

Almost half of all MISD employees are enrolled in the Seminar educates cities on economic development

By Ian Heald
Staff Writer

Midland is not the only West Texas town scratching its head, wondering how to diversify its economy.

Representatives from various West Texas cities, including Sonora, McCamey and San Angelo, attended an economic development seminar at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin's Center for Energy and Economic Development.

Also in attendance was Dennis Clayton, economic development director for the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

The seminar was another regular installment of lectures sponsored by UTPB, said Troy Williamson. Economic development lectures are held once every two years.

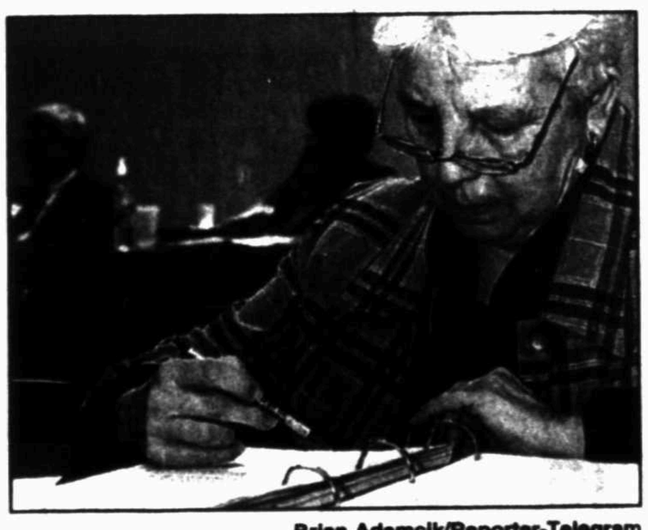

One topic of discussion was the economic development sales tax, a concept that is hardly foreign to Midland. Twice in the 1990s Midland voters rejected the tax. Then in 1999, voters approved a sales tax increase to fund construction of the Scharbauer Sports Complex.

Chamber officials have said that the reason the tax has failed has been the lack of public knowledge about what an economic development sales tax can do. If an economic development sales tax is ever again posed to voters, the chamber has said it will do everything it can to educate the public.

After the meeting Clayton said that there is no plan to begin another campaign for the passage of an economic development sales tax.

"I think we recognize the need for it in order to compete, but there is no discussion about pursuing that, to my knowledge," Clayton said.

CAMPAIGN 2000

■ Bush, Gore hard at work

Halloween is over, but the George W. Bush campaign is still accusing Al Gore of trying to scare people. The charge came after Gore appealed to Florida voters Wednesday by saying Bush would turn Social Security into a "grab bag where everyone is out for himself." The Bush campaign countered that Gore was using scare tactics. Bush is due back in Florida later this week. Wednesday, Bush campaigned in Seattle and then went to Minnesota, where he promoted his plans for a $1.3 trillion tax cut over 10 years and portrayed Gore as an advocate of "spending without discipline, spending without priorities, and spending without end."

■ Lieberman tries for Florida

Joe Lieberman returned once again to the key state of Florida Wednesday to meet with firefighters and police and pitch a Social Security plan to older voters. Lieberman began a day of rallies at Hollywood fire station No. 5, talking with firefighters about the campaigns' Social Security plans. Then he visited the Broward County Public Safety Department to view a computerized program for monitoring safety inside and outside the county's 61 public schools. He said he and Al Gore are committed to adding another 50,000 law enforcement officers across the country and noted falling crime rates. Next, Lieberman headed to rallies in Boca Raton and Daytona Beach.

■ Both spread thin in finale

With less than a week left in the campaign, more than a dozen states could go either way — and seven other states that are leaning toward one or the other are not a sure bet for either. In most presidential campaigns, only a few states are undecided this close to the election, but the opposite has happened this time. The battle zones have ballooned and the candidates plan to spend their final days scurrying through a long list of undecided states from Washington to Florida. Fifteen states that appear to be up for grabs are Oregon, Nevada, New Mexico, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee, Florida, Michigan, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, Delaware and Maine.

■ Black pastors cooling to Gore

The gathering of more than 200 African-American leaders at the White House two nights ago underscored the trouble that Al Gore has encountered energizing the black community, a crucial component of his electoral coalition. Said the Rev. Michael Eric Dyson of Harlem: "There is a skepticism on the part of many black people they are not sure of (Gore's) intimacy with black culture. Even though they agree with his viewpoints in many areas, there is no certain familiarity with black people. President Clinton developed a trust and confidence with black people that was built up over the years." The Rev. Jamal Bryant, a Baltimore pastor and former NAACP national youth director, said that not only are African-Americans not excited about Gore, "America is not excited about Gore. We need a booster shot to get us revived."

■ Gore ads to remain positive

Al Gore touts his experience in a new TV ad, but his advisers have put off a sharper spot questioning whether George W. Bush is up to the job of president. In a subtler approach, Gore's team plans to continue questioning Bush's credentials from the campaign trail while staying positive over the airwaves — at least for the moment. Not so for Bush, who began airing a tough new ad Wednesday accusing Gore of "bending the truth," a departure from what has been mostly a positive ad campaign. The Bush ad concludes with a video clip from a debate during the primaries where Gore says he's never said anything that was untrue. The announcer responds: "Really?"

■ Phone calls attack Gore

Taped telephone calls for George W. Bush's election from one-time rival John McCain have reached some Democratic voters in Florida, who challenge the veracity of the message from a maverick wanting to be known for "straight talk." On the phone, McCain calls Bush a reformer who "takes on special interests," and says Al Gore "has no plan for education and Social Security." Carlos Diaz, a professor at Florida International University, received a call. "(McCain) based his maverick candidacy on the idea of talking straight," Diaz said. "But whether you agree with Gore or Bush, I don't think you can say that Al Gore has no plan for education or Social Security. To me, that's a lie."

Newspapers pull 'Doonesbury' over claims of drug use by Bush

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — At least two newspapers pulled Wednesday's installment of Garry Trudeau's "Doonesbury" comic strip over a panel in which a character accuses George W. Bush of cocaine abuse. One of those newspapers will also pull Thursday's edition, an editor said.

An editor at Universal Press Syndicate, which distributes "Doonesbury," said those offended by the strip should consider the character making the allegations: Duke, the renegade presidential candidate whose mind has been permanently scrambled by years of alcohol and drug abuse.

In Wednesday's strip, Duke — upset by polls that show him receiving 0 percent of the vote — is told that voters have concerns about his lifestyle.

He responds: "My lifestyle? What about Dubya's? He's got a history of alcohol abuse and cocaine!"

The Texas governor and GOP presidential candidate, responding to questions during the primary season, said he had not used any illegal drug in the past 25 years, but he would not elaborate. No evidence has surfaced that he ever used cocaine. He has said he has not had an alcoholic drink since his 40th birthday. He is now 54.

"We certainly believe every journalist is entitled to their opinion. However we do believe this is a little over the line," Bush spokesman Dan Bartlett said of the Trudeau cartoon. "But we understand that this is part of the process."

The St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press pulled Wednesday's strip and will also pull Thursday's, managing editor Vicki Gowler said.

"I pulled the two that stated flat-out that George Bush abused cocaine," Gowler said. "I don't think there has been evidence reported to date that he has, and he has never confirmed it."

The San Antonio Express News also pulled Wednesday's strip, said Kathie Kerr, a spokeswoman for Universal Press Syndicate.

In an editorial, the Express-News said Trudeau "stepped way over the lines of truth and fairness" in Wednesday's strip.

"The best cartoons rely on satire and exaggeration," the editorial said. "Today's cartoon went far beyond that straight into serious, unsubstantiated charges.

"Never would we consider letting a letter writer or columnist make such an unfounded accusation."

In today's strip, Duke does not accuse Bush of cocaine use but notes that Bush has never denied it. The Express-News, in its editorial, said it plans to publish that installment.

"Editors know best what content to put in their paper and what to leave out," said Lee Salem, an editor and vice president at Universal Press Syndicate. "We respect those editorial decisions."

However, Salem said, "We believe fans of Doonesbury will understand the context, given the character of Duke. Duke is a character who has lost far too many brain cells and always makes outrageous statements."

The editorial page editor of another Texas newspaper, the Amarillo Globe News, agreed that "Doonesbury" readers know the strip is satirical.

"We just sort of saw it as pretty typical Doonesbury," said John Kanelis, who ran Wednesday's strip. "He has often taken in the past license with his facts, if you will, and we sort of saw it as a typical Doonesbury cheap shot.

"It was tough, but it wasn't over the line," Kanelis said. "It got real close."

Trudeau does not grant interviews for stories about the content of his strips, which have generated enough political controversy over the years that some newspapers run "Doonesbury" in the opinion section rather than on the comics page.

Presidential candidates fight familiar issue on unfamiliar terrain

Ron Fournier
Associated Press

Focusing on Florida less than a week before Election Day, Al Gore urged senior citizens Wednesday to "save Social Security" by electing him president. He drew fire from a Republican general who said "we're in a war right now" to convince voters that George W. Bush will protect and improve the retirement program.

The presidential candidates were campaigning in one another's political backyards — Gore hoping to spring an upset in GOP-leaning Florida, Bush in Minnesota where he hoped third-party candidate Ralph Nader might drain Gore's support and help Republicans win a state that usually goes Democratic.

Voters looking for serious talk on the issues found plenty to choose from.

The vice president began running a tough new ad criticizing Bush's record as governor of Texas on taxes, health care for children, the minimum wage and the environment. The ad also takes a jab at the Republican's plan for Social Security and ends with a tag line that sums up Gore's central argument against Bush: "Is he ready to lead America?"

It comes on the heels of Bush's latest ad, which directly questions Gore's credibility — a campaign-closing theme he carried into Minnesota. "This country needs a president you can believe in," Bush told supporters, before turning to the issue that dominated the day.

"I have a Social Security reform that gives people a stake in the future," Bush said in Minneapolis. While proposing to allow investments in the stock market, the Texas governor said Gore offered only "an old and tired approach" on Social Security and other issues.

Appearing with his wife Tipper in the heart of the retirement belt, Gore told Kissemmee, Fla., seniors that Bush is using "soothing words" and "fuzzy math" to disguise serious flaws with the plan to privatize portions of Social Security.

Former Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf said the Republican ticket was fighting "a war" to combat the Democratic criticism that the Bush plan would leave Social Security vulnerable to market shifts.

"This is not only untrue, it's a blatant lie," Schwarzkopf said in Punta Gorda in southwest Florida. Joining the general on stage, vice presidential candidate Dick Cheney accused Gore of "peddling a lot of garbage" about Social Security.

Democrats were comfortable with the focus. "I ask you to save Social Security when you vote Tuesday," Gore said, allowing runningmate Joseph Lieberman, an Orthodox Jew popular in the retiree haven, to set out high stakes for Florida: "If we can win it here, we'll win it everywhere!"

Bush in Minnesota and Gore in Florida — the topsy-turvy travel strategies underscored how untraditional and unpredictable this presidential race has become: Bush is pressing Gore in no fewer than six Democratic states, while fighting for his political life in the state governed by his brother Jeb.

Former President Bush, wife Barbara Bush and the GOP candidate himself will visit Florida before Tuesday's election, knowing the importance of the state' 25 electoral votes.

Republicans are grumbling that Bush could lose the state. Some are already pointing fingers at Jeb.

"We didn't give George W. the support he needed because of our overconfidence," said former Florida GOP chairman Tom Slade, who called Bush's state campaign "anemic."

Gore has kept Florida competitive largely because of his appeal with older voters, who make up almost a third of the electorate. In three recent polls, the vice president led Bush among seniors and on the issue of Social Security.

Susan MacManus, political scientist at the University of South Florida, said Gore's focus on Social Security has won him a lion's share of senior votes but he risks alienating younger voters by talking about little else.

As if on cue, the vice president flew to Tampa to promise a ban on new oil drilling off the Florida coast. He accused Bush of waffling on the issue and giving voters "a real choice on the environment in six days." Bush spokeswoman Mindy Tucker said her boss supports the current moratorium on new drilling leases, but existing pacts would be considered on a case-by-case basis.

Opinion polls show the candidates tied or Bush ahead.

Democrats and Republican alike say Bush has the easier road to the 270 electoral votes necessary for victory. He has a base of 16 states and 135 electoral votes, plus another half dozen or so states leaning his way. Florida is part of almost any Bush equation.

Gore was counting on a base of 10 states plus the District of Columbia with 107 electoral votes, but six of those states are still in doubt: Iowa, Minnesota, Oregon, Washington, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

Later this week, Gore will be forced to defend Democratic turf in Tennessee and West Virginia while Bush courts swing voters in the big battlegrounds of Michigan and Pennsylvania.

The Nader threat worried Gore allies. Former President Carter endorsed Gore for president and said it would be "a serious and far-reaching mistake" for fellow Democrats to turn away from the party as some did from Hubert Humphrey in his 1968 loss to Richard Nixon amid the Vietnam War.

A number of Democratic operatives fretted over a poll released Wednesday by the Pew Research Center which offered evidence that voters are increasingly comfortable with Bush's judgment, experience and personality.

Minnesota and its 10 electoral votes are up for grabs largely because of Nader, who threatens to crowd Gore in such key states as Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Oregon, Washington and Wisconsin.

Those six states alone add up to 68 electoral votes, more than one-fourth of total needed. Bush hadn't been to Minnesota in weeks, but added Wednesday's stop to take advantage of a shift in poll support. From Minnesota, Bush was heading to Iowa, another Democratic stronghold where Nader has been active.

In reform-minded Minnesota, led by independent Gov. Jesse Ventura, Bush called Gore a champion of big government. "Al Gore's massive spending would mean slower growth and higher taxes. And it could mean and end to our prosperity," Bush said.

Nader was in Madison, Wis., a hotbed of liberal and Democratic voters.

Some parts of nation see Halloween turn ugly

By The Associated Press

A 12-year-old boy was killed in a shooting over a Halloween egg fight, several women were burned when their costumes caught fire and several hundred revelers pelted police officers near a college campus.

And in Minneapolis, a 49-year-old man was arrested for allegedly giving trick or treaters candy bars containing pins. Police said a 14-year-old bit into one of the bars and was stuck by a pin, but did not require medical attention, and officers recovered seven candy bars containing pins from other children.

The man, whose name was not released, was arrested on suspicion of altering packaged goods.

A 14-year-old boy in Atlanta shot and killed a 12-year-old boy because he was angry about being struck in a Halloween egg fight, police said. The boys' names were not released.

The older boy was charged with murder. Police said he was hit by an egg Tuesday evening when he walked past children taking part in a fight that is a neighborhood Halloween tradition.

Six women were burned at a Halloween party in Bellevue, Wash., when their costumes caught fire. One, a 76-year-old woman, was hospitalized in critical condition.

Fire Battalion Chief Warren Merritt said the six women had been standing around a fire in a pot of alcohol when someone apparently poured in more alcohol and the fire flared up.

About 2,400 Halloween revelers mobbed streets near Southern Illinois University in Carbondale, Ill., leading to dozens of arrests.

At one point, several hundred people surrounded seven police officers, pelting them with rocks, bottles and cans while the officers fired back with mace, The Southern Illinoisan newspaper reported.

More police soon moved in and broke up the crowd with tear gas. The officers, who were wearing protective body vests, were not injured.

A 13-year-old boy who may have been hanging by the neck for as long as 15 minutes in a Halloween prank accident was in poor condition Wednesday.

Police in Newark, Ohio, said Michael Markley and a friend set up a hangman's skit Monday evening to scare trick-or-treaters. Michael stood on a plastic laundry basket to reach a noose hanging from a tree branch, and fell with his head in the noose when he either slipped or the basket collapsed.

A 14-year-old in Las Cruces, N.M., was treated for neck bruises and abrasions after he was hanged during a school-sponsored haunted house exhibit.

Police Sgt. Todd Gregory said the teen was standing on a stool and investigators hadn't determined if he slipped or if the stool was kicked away.

Gregory said other students in the darkened room didn't know right away that Eric Palafox was in trouble. "He was hanging there and everyone thought it was part of the show or that it was a joke," the officer said.

RAISE: Garcia says his money goes 'a long way'

(From 1A)

the "first one (fund-raiser) I have ever done — ever. I've had people give me money before, but I've never done a fund-raiser."

Craddick said his supporters "were extremely generous, now that I had an opponent" — his first since 1988.

Garcia, who has raised about 3 percent of the money that Craddick's campaign has generated, said, "I make my money go a long way.

"I just have a bunch of regular people giving me a little bit of money," Garcia said. "It just goes to show I am very fiscally responsible.

"If I lose the election, I don't have any problem with leftover money," Garcia said. "If old Goliath happens to lose, he's got a problem."

Craddick, who is a sales representative for Mustang Mud Inc. of Midland, was first elected to the Texas House of Representatives in 1968 and has won subsequent bids for re-election mostly without opposition.

"This is my first campaign, ever, as far as running for office," said Garcia, who has lobbied the Texas Legislature for public-school teacher insurance.

In his list of campaign expenditures, Garcia reported $1,102.50 to Cable Time for advertising, $600 to himself for initial campaign cards, $530 to Mid-Tex Specialities for yard signs (posters), and $530 for newspaper advertising.

Craddick's list of political expenditures includes $18,325.55 to himself for expense reimbursements, including, for example, $2,874 in airfare via Southwest and Continental Airlines, $1,758.57 for Republican National Convention hotel expenses at Philadelphia Marriott, July 2000, and for political gifts.

Expenses also include $3,000 to Susan G. Wynn for clerical-fund-raiser expenses and $1,033.13 to Qualified Printers of Midland for fund-raiser expenses. Additional campaign expenses, such as those for posters and other advertising, are to be in forthcoming reports.

Garcia's lists of political contributors include the Texas State Teachers Association (TSTA) PAC, which contributed $500 to his campaign, and Jane Bale, who donated $15.

PAC contributors to Craddick's campaign include Friends of the University PAC, $500; the National Rifle Association's Political Victory Fund, $250; TAIFA-PAC (Texas Association of Insurance and Financial Advisers), $300; Texans for Lawsuit Reform, $1,000; Texas Association of Mortgage Attorneys, $1,000; Texas Federation of Republican Women, $1,000, and LUMPAC (Lumbermen's Association of Texas PAC), $500. The Pink Elephant Committee contributed $1,000 to Craddick's campaign.

Craddick's District 82, which takes in the counties of Midland, Glasscock, and Reagan, previously had been in the 70th, 68th, and 76th Representative District. It was the 82nd District by the 1992 election.

Including his initial election at age 25 in 1968 and the 2000 campaign, Craddick has been in seven contested general elections and in 10 elections without opposition.

Before Democrat Garcia's 2000 campaign to succeed him, Craddick's most recent opponent was in 1988 against Libertarian Leonard Carl. Craddick defeated Carl by a 16-to-2 ratio: 32,292 votes to 1,932 votes.

His home-free election years were 1974, 1978, 1980, 1982, 1986, and 1990 through 1998. Craddick's contested seven races were in 1968, 1970, 1972, 1976, 1984, 1988, and the 2000 race.

In his first race in 1968, Craddick defeated Democrat Ray O. Howard, who was a Midland city councilman in the 1950s, by a vote of 14,493 to 5,963.

Craddick, who succeeded Midland Republican Frank Kell Cahoon as Midland's state representative, has had only one fellow Republican opposition in a primary election and that was the 1968 campaign when Craddick defeated Joe S. Davis by a 1,698-626 vote.

At that time, Midland was predominantly Democratic. Today, it is overwhelmingly Republican.

In his closest-ever race, Craddick in 1970 defeated Democrat Bob Northington by 8,470 to 7,752 votes. "That was the closest race I ever had."

Two years later, in 1972, Craddick overwhelmed Democrat Willie DuBose, who later became a Republican-aligned Texas district court judge, by 16,547 to 6,517.

In 1976, Democrat R.L. "Bob" Corley took on Craddick but was defeated by 18,780 votes to 6,976.

In the 1984 race that pitted Craddick against Democrat David Smith of Odessa back when part of Ector County was in Craddick's district, Craddick defeated Smith, then an Odessa lawyer, by 32,608 votes to 6,827.

HEALTH: Other schools face the same problem

three health care plans. Employees using the HMO plan would be the most affected if insurance rates increase. Garcia said that currently, MISD employees are paying $163 a month for the HMO plan, $200 a month for the standard PPO and $268 for the ERS plan. If the district decides to phase out the HMO plan, the decision would affect 1,581 employees. They would essentially have to buy into a plan similar to the current PPO option.

Garcia said that often employees who use HMOs think they only need the minimum health coverage. HMOs typically come with fewer options and premiums as opposed to the PPO and ERS.

"You typically have the people with the least amount of medical cost in the HMO plan," Garcia said.

Garcia also said for employees in the standard PPO the change would be minimal and the cost may even go down. Currently, only 347 employees participate in the PPO and only 21 participate in the ERS plan.

Garcia and MISD school board President George Lara said the district expected some increase in insurance costs. Garcia said MISD only expected an increase of 7 to 10 percent. Statewide, insurance costs have increased by nearly 35 percent this year. Garcia stressed that this is a problem affecting many other Texas school districts.

"When we adopted the budget there was a memo attached that there would be a possible increase in insurance premiums. The increase has been more than expected," Lara said.

Garcia also said that if the increases do occur, MISD employees have always had the option of not accepting MISD's health care plan and shopping around for a better plan.

"Employees are not required to buy their insurance from us," Garcia said. "There are carriers in the marketplace that offer plans that might tailor to their needs."

To keep the current HMO in place would cost the district $1.6 million. Garcia said MISD cannot cover that cost.

"Health insurance is complex," Garcia said. "There's a cost benefit side on every issue. Had the costs been the same (for the HMO and PPO), maybe employees would have elected to go into the PPO. There are nuances that you have to take into consideration."

So far all the current figures regarding the increase are projections and not finalized. Garcia said nothing will be final until after the MISD insurance committee meets Nov. 9. The committee will then discuss the best possible solution. After meeting, the committee will present its findings to the school board at its regular meeting Nov. 14.

According to Garcia, MISD typically budgets for 2,800 health insurance plans. MISD usually employees between 2,600 and 2,800 permanent and temporary staff on a regular basis. Insurance contracts are usually renewed in the middle of the year. Garcia said MISD wants to make sure there will be enough funds to cover all employees.

HENRY: Company in process of new drilling to be a valuable addition to the team, and in 1998 became president of the company," Henry said.

Privately owned with only two principals, Johnson said the company can make decisions quickly. He noted that experience is also a factor in the company's ability to move quickly. "Most of our company's seven managers have been with the company over 10 years, and have 20 or more years of industry experience encompassing operations, production, engineering, geology, geophysics, accounting, land and acquisitions."

Johnson said the company for several years has focused on enhanced recovery projects. "Henry has undertaken and completed grassroots unitization efforts on six different enhanced recovery units during our history, including one each in 1998, 1999, and 2000. In late 1999, the company completed unitization efforts on the Henry Cowden Unit, a Grayburg-San Andres waterflood recovery project in Andrews County."

He said the 65-year-old field that went under waterflood early this year is expected to recover an additional 2 million to 3 million barrels of oil.

Currently, Henry is in the process of drilling 12 wells in the newly formed Homann San Andres Unit in Gaines County. This unit, which became effective Sept. 1 of this year, should see its first water injection within the next 90 days, again on the way to recovering an additional 2 million to 3 million barrels of oil.

Henry is also in the midst of a four-well infill drilling program in the Ackerly Dean Unit and a five-well infill drilling program in the East Ackerly Dean Unit, targeting bypassed oil in these 25-year-old waterfloods.

With a goal of implementing one EOR project per year, Henry is now working on a project that appears on track for unitization and waterflood initiation in 2001.

While waterflood has been the primary recovery method over the past several years, the company has expanded to include CO2 flooding. The company currently operates two CO2 floods including what may be the only active immiscible, secondary CO2 flood in the United States. Collectively, the individuals of Henry have direct experience with ten different CO2 floods and several dozen waterflood projects.

Added Henry: "A second area of strategic focus for the company has been partnering with other industry companies to jointly exploit and develop properties where Henry can bring technical expertise and capital resources to bear on properties which may have been under-exploited for a variety of reasons."

Recent examples of these type of activities are:

- a 1999-2000 workover program that increased production approximately 1100 BOEPD;
- completion of the first drill well in a second field and planning for a horizontal re-entry within the next 30 days to recover trapped attic oil; and
- in a third field, a 30-well workover and 27 well plugging program will begin before year's end.

"The final area of strategic focus for Henry Petroleum is its exploration program," Henry said. "We are now putting the final touches on a several thousand acre block of oil-prone acreage that we will test in 2001. We are also in the leasing stage of a 7,500-acre block of acreage with 20 BCF natural gas potential. If successfully leased, this block will undergo an extensive 3-D seismic survey in 2001."

He said Henry Petroleum had also participated as a non-operator in several oil and gas projects spread across a variety of operators in 2000 and anticipates participating in up to three more of these prospects in the last two months of 2000.

SHOTS: Urgent Care Center administers flu vaccines

the shortage.

According to the Texas Department of Health, delays in the arrival of this year's flu vaccine were caused by "manufacturing issues" that resulted in inoperativeness in some early productions of the vaccine.

The vaccination clinic, which lasted from noon until 6 p.m. on Wednesday, brought a large turnout of mostly senior citizens to the Urgent Care Center. There was in a long line that stretched out the door and around the northwest corner of the building at mid-day. Many of the people waiting in line expressed surprise at how many were on hand for the clinic, especially during its first hour.

To keep things running smoothly, Tamara Glenn of the Urgent Care Center took registration clipboards out to the crowd by the arm full. Ms. Glenn explained that by getting the paperwork filled out as quickly and efficiently as possible, the entire process could be streamlined, which would result in faster-moving lines and less fatigue for the seniors who had come for vaccinations.

"By preregistering everyone and issuing each person a number, we can make things more pleasant for both us and the patients," she said.

Shane Terry, who suffers from asthma, said he was getting a flu shot to help him avoid the on-set of chronic bronchitis, which is a potential problem for flu-affected asthmatics. "I got the flu last year and my doctor was very displeased with me," Terry said. "I figured I better get a flu shot this year to help me avoid what could end up being major respiratory problems."

Ms. Courtroul said the Urgent Care Center expects to administer a total of about 1,200 total flu vaccinations this year.

"We may consider holding another clinic when the next shipment comes in," she said.

Nader attacks efforts to undermine his campaign

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Ralph Nader rallied supporters on the steps of the Wisconsin Capitol on Wednesday, asking them to ignore the pleas of Al Gore's backers to vote for the vice president.

"The real decision-makers in Washington are not the Republican and Democratic parties," the Green Party candidate told 1,500 to 2,000 people. "They're just competing over who's going to go to the White House so they can receive the marching orders from their corporate pay masters."

But at a news conference inside the Capitol, Nader allowed that in his view, Gore is a bit better than Republican presidential candidate George W. Bush. Nader offered grades of D-minus to Bush and D-plus to Gore.

If Gore loses, Nader said, "it would be clear he beat himself."

Nader derided Democratic "dirty tricks" to undermine his candidacy, saying they were led by "desperate surrogates of the Gore campaign," especially abortion rights groups.

Organizations closely aligned with Nader's liberal views have been appealing to people in closely contested states to vote for Gore instead, fearing a vote for the consumer activist will give victory to Bush on Tuesday.

Recent Wisconsin polls have been at odds over whether Bush or Gore was leading in the state but they've agreed that Nader is drawing the support of about 5 percent. Nader has been getting a little less than that in national polls but his performance in certain swing states could help determine the outcome between Bush and Gore.

Some nervous Nader supporters in battleground states are exploring the concept of vote-swapping, in which they would vote for Gore on condition they could persuade a friend in another state, where the race between the Democrat and Republican is not so close, to vote for Nader.

In theory, that would help Nader get the votes needed for his party to qualify for federal matching money in the next election — 5 percent of the votes nationally — but not deprive Gore of votes in states where he needs them most.

Morel Stackhouse, 49, a Madison therapist at Nader's rally, said she is calling friends in other states to try to arrange such a trade. "If I don't find someone to swap votes, I'll vote for Nader," she said. "My heart supports Nader. He's the only candidate that's spoken the truth."

AP Photo
Green Party presidential candidate Ralph Nader addresses a crowd at a rally on the steps of the Wisconsin State Capitol Wednesday, in Madison, Wis.

Nader called vote swapping "imaginative, but it's frivolous and diverting."

Some of his supporters booed environmentalists who voiced support for Gore before the rally. Teacher Steve Guthrie, 51, whose vote is not up for trade, said: "I'll never vote for a big candidate again that takes billions that corrupt our system."

But lawyer Bill Scanlon, who held up a Gore sign, said he considered Nader reckless because he could help Bush win.

"I think George Bush would move the country so far to the right that all of the pleading of Ralph Nader would never become a fact in our lifetime," Scanlon said.

In Boston, a federal appeals court rejected Nader's claim that it was illegal to let corporations contribute to the staging of the presidential debates.

Nader had pointed to a federal law that bans donations by corporations "in connection with" presidential elections. He argued that corporations were essentially contributing to the Bush and Gore campaigns by showcasing them, and excluding others, in the debates.

But the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said Federal Election Commission regulations allowing corporate contributions to the debates fall within the scope of the agency's authority.

Officials say missing toddler froze to death

PARK CITY, Utah (AP) — An autopsy found that a 2-year-old boy froze to death after leaving his father's pickup truck and wandering into the Utah woods by himself, authorities said Wednesday.

The boy, whose pajamas feet were worn through, walked for miles after leaving the truck last Thursday, the Utah medical examiner said in a preliminary finding. Gage Wayment died at an unknown time of hypothermia.

The finding appears to end suspicions that the boy was killed by his father, Paul Wayment, Summit County Detective Rob Berry said. However, a lie-detector test was still expected to be performed later this week.

"He's as anxious to clear himself from any accusations as we are to determine all the facts in this particular incident," Berry said.

The boy had a scratch on his face — indicating he walked through brush — but no other injuries, authorities said.

A volunteer and his dog found the boy under several inches of snow early this week. The searcher was lost and couldn't notify police until Tuesday, telling them he found the boy in a fetal position and carried the body for hours.

There was no explanation of how the little boy got so far into the wilderness that hundreds of searchers and dogs couldn't find him.

Wayment, 37, told police he had parked his truck while he scouted for deer in the rugged hunting area 35 miles from Salt Lake City.

He said the boy was sleeping and strapped in his car seat when he left, but was gone when he returned about 40 minutes later.

United Way enjoys victory in campaign

Some have wondered aloud: What has happened to Midland's "can-do" spirit? The overwhelming amount raised in this year's United Way of Midland campaign ought to alleviate any fears that the optimistic, make-it-happen spirit of Midland has fallen by the wayside. That spirit is alive and well.

Some believed that the $2.9 million goal set for the drive this year was too ambitious.

Midland has suffered a loss of good-paying oil business management jobs over the past couple of years. The people who held those jobs had a strong history of giving to the United Way. And there was fear about the potential loss in corporate donations.

But the leaders of this year's United Way campaign, notably chairman Jose Cuevas, forged ahead with great optimism and hope.

It paid off.

Earlier this week, hundreds of United Way supporters cheered as it was announced that this year's campaign had topped the $3 million mark.

No doubt about it, this year's campaign had challenges to overcome.

Cuevas has demonstrated that he is one of our community's strongest leaders.

He served admirably in city government for years. He is a self-made businessman with a strong entrepreneurial spirit.

He wasn't about to accept defeat in this year's United Way campaign.

While Cuevas and the United Way campaign were able to pull in some mighty chunks of money from various foundations and businesses, we believe that individuals have made the difference in this year's drive.

Although we haven't seen the exact tally, we have a hunch that it was the working men and women, who found a way to give a little more of themselves and of their paychecks, who really put the campaign over the top.

We know the United Way has a positive impact on Midland through great agencies that touch people's lives. Those agencies include the American Red Cross of Southwest Texas; Big Brothers, Big Sisters; Boy Scouts - Buffalo Trail Council; Boys and Girls Club; Camp Fire Boys and Girls; Casa de Amigos; Center's for Children and Families; Community and Senior Services; Freewill Foster Home; Girl Scouts of the Permian Basin; Midland Need to Read; Midland Rape Crisis Center; Palmer Drug Abuse Program; Safe Place of the Permian Basin; the Salvation Army and the YMCA.

Congratulations to the leaders of the United Way on such a tremendous success.

And thank you to all of those who gave a bit of themselves to build a better community.

The can-do spirit is alive and well in

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Nov. 2, the 307th day of 2000. There are 59 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 2, 1948, President Truman surprised the experts by being re-elected in a narrow upset over Republican challenger Thomas E. Dewey.

On this date:

In 1783, Gen. George Washington issued his "Farewell Address to the Army" near Princeton, N.J.

In 1795, the 11th president of the United States, James K. Polk, was born in Mecklenburg County, N.C.

In 1865, the 29th president of the United States, Warren G. Harding, was born near Corsica, Ohio.

In 1889, North Dakota and South Dakota became the 39th and 40th states.

In 1920, radio station KDKA in Pittsburgh broadcast returns from the Harding-Cox presidential election.

In 1930, Haile Selassie was crowned emperor of Ethiopia.

In 1959, game show contestant Charles Van Doren admitted to a House subcommittee that he'd been given questions and answers in advance when he appeared on the NBC TV program "21."

In 1963, South Vietnamese President Ngo Dihn Diem was assassinated in a military coup.

In 1979, black militant Joanne Chesimard escaped from a New Jersey prison, where she'd been serving a life sentence for the 1973 slaying of a New Jersey state trooper. (Chesimard, who has since taken the name Assata Shakur, now lives in Cuba.)

In 1994, a jury in Pensacola, Fla., convicted Paul Hill of murder for the shotgun slayings of an abortion provider and his bodyguard; Hill was sentenced to death.

Ten years ago: The White House announced that President Bush planned to spend Thanksgiving with American soldiers in Saudi Arabia.

Five years ago: A man claiming to have a bomb hijacked a school bus with 13 learning-disabled children aboard, leading authorities around Miami-area highways for an hour and a half before being fatally shot by police.

Electoral College could choose unpopular candidate

WASHINGTON — The Electoral College has a bad name. It seems undemocratic, especially if it elects as president someone other than the person who garnered a majority of the popular votes. The institution was created by the Founding Fathers and memorialized in the Constitution, but they had not anticipated the rise of political parties. This was partially corrected with passage of the 12th Amendment and further altered by custom as states adopted the "winner take all" policy, which means that the winner of the popular vote in each state wins all of that state's electoral votes. The Electoral College, by state, is comprised of two members (one for each senator) plus a number equal to the state's membership in the House of Representatives.

Anderson

Four elections were won by men who lost the popular vote:

In 1824, no single candidate received a majority of electoral votes, so the next president was selected by the House of Representatives. Although Andrew Jackson had won the popular vote, the House elected John Quincy Adams.

The election of 1860 was won by Abraham Lincoln, who received the largest popular vote in a field of four, but whose total vote amounted to only 39 percent of the electorate. So he holds the distinction of having become president with the lowest percentage of the popular vote in American history.

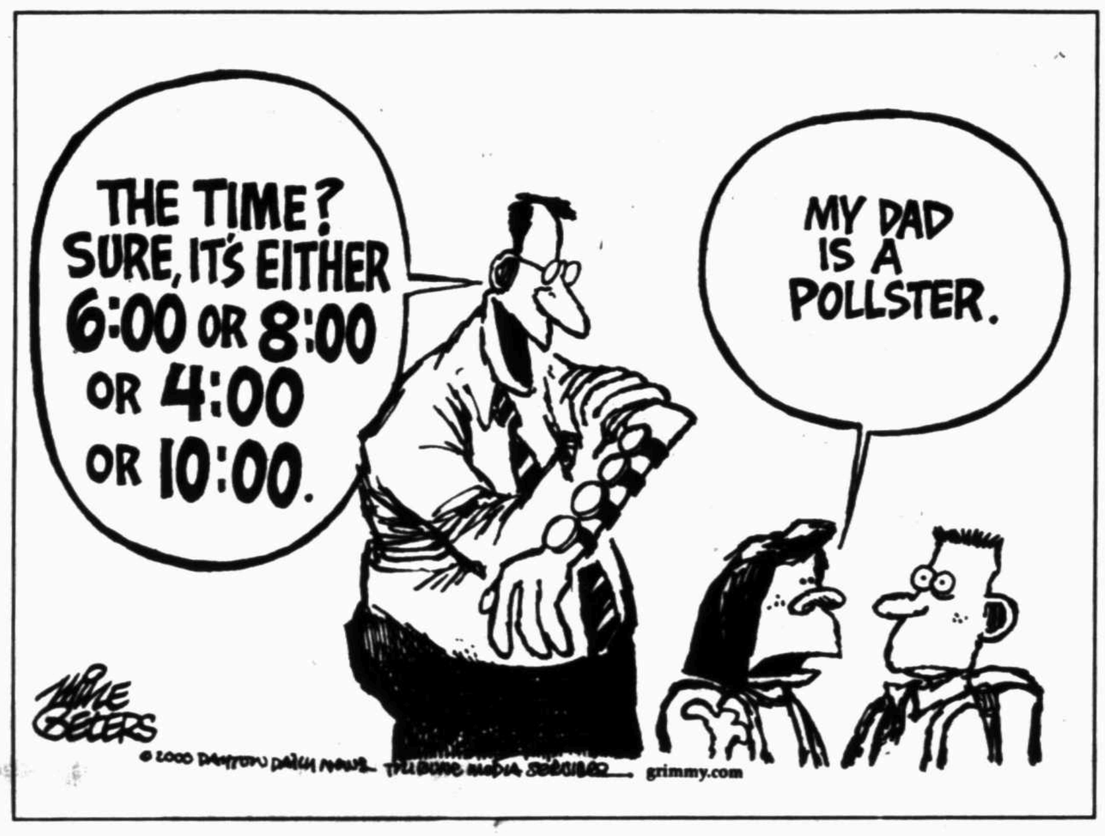

As a result of the election of 1876, Congress passed a law in 1887 that said each state had the sole authority in selecting its presidential electors. This occurred because Samuel J. Tilden had won the 1876 popular vote, but electors from three Southern states supporting him were challenged. A 15-member commission was appointed by the Republican-controlled Congress to decide the issue, and, voting along party lines, it disqualified the Democratic electors and threw the election to Republican Rutherford B. Hayes. Benjamin Harrison won the electoral vote in 1888, although the incumbent Democratic president, Grover Cleveland, won the popular vote. This was made possible primarily as a result of Cleveland's large homestate majority in New York.

The primary argument against the Electoral College is that it is unrepresentative. The primary argument in favor of the Electoral College is that it prevents a majority in one region of the nation, such as New York in 1888, from determining who will lead the nation.

But then there was that election of 1860, when Lincoln did not even come close to winning the popular vote. And it could therefore be argued that the Electoral system failed, because the election so alienated one section of the country, the South, that it led to civil war. So we have not two, but three arguments. Between the first two, we come down on the side of the Electoral College. After all, should California or New York or Texas have such a loud voice that smaller states and regions are drowned out altogether?

On the other hand, the election of 1860 proved what could happen when there are multiple candidates. We witnessed it again in 1992, when Ross Perot won 19 percent of the popular vote. Bill Clinton won with 42 percent of the vote to George Bush's 37 percent. The Constitution is an evolving document, both by interpretation and amendment, and we have not heard the last from it regarding the Electoral College. But the only change we would currently recommend is that a runoff election should be held between the two top vote-getters if no one achieved more than 43 percent of the vote.

CHARLEY REESE

There is clearly a choice come Nov. 7

The upcoming presidential election will say more about the American people than it will about the candidates.

You have Al Gore, who has the support of the homosexual crowd, the infanticide crowd, the feminist crowd, the socialist crowd and the Hollywood crowd. You have George Bush, who is supported by the pro-life crowd, the pro-Constitution crowd, the military crowd and the pro-traditional-values crowd.

Reese

Don't let anyone tell you there isn't a clear choice.

I've said from the beginning that I think Al Gore doesn't belong in the White House. I'm tired of a bunch of lowlifes who hold the military in contempt, who expand its missions while shrinking its resources, who insist on homosexualizing and feminizing the armed forces, and who make sure no one but politically correct bootlicks make it to high command ranks.

I'm also tired of lies, evasions, character assassination, extreme partisanship and outright corruption. I'm tired of a so-called strong economy in which nearly 60 percent of the mothers in America have to work in order to maintain a decent standard of l iving.

I'm tired of an administration that lusts to surveil and disarm the innocent rather than deal with criminals. I'm tired of an administration that speaks in Orwell's newspeak. I'm tired of an administration that openly shows contempt for the Constitution.

Very likely what the election will show is that Americans have developed irreconcilable differences in their most basic beliefs. There is no compromise on such moral issues as infanticide, commitment to truth and fidelity to the Constitution, as well as the issue of a free-market economy as opposed to a socialist or fascist economy.

That is the result of politicians playing the divide-and-conquer game that pits one racial group against another, one ethnic group against another, one age group against another.

Of all the nations on Earth, the United States most needs leaders who will unite rather than divide. We split once at a cost of 600,000 lives, and it is entirely possible we will split again unless Americans abandon their egoistic ways and their superficial attention to everything that doesn't affect their pocketbooks.

I always hear the argument that the lesser of two evils is still evil. True, but in a popularity contest held in an evil world, why do you expect saints as candidates? In an evil world, as poet Amos Oz once said, you must learn to distinguish degrees of evil. Any world that says a mother may hire someone to murder her baby right up to the day of its birth is evil. Any administration in which a cabinet officer, Madeleine Albright, can casually say of the deaths of 500,000 Iraqi children, "it's worth it" is evil.

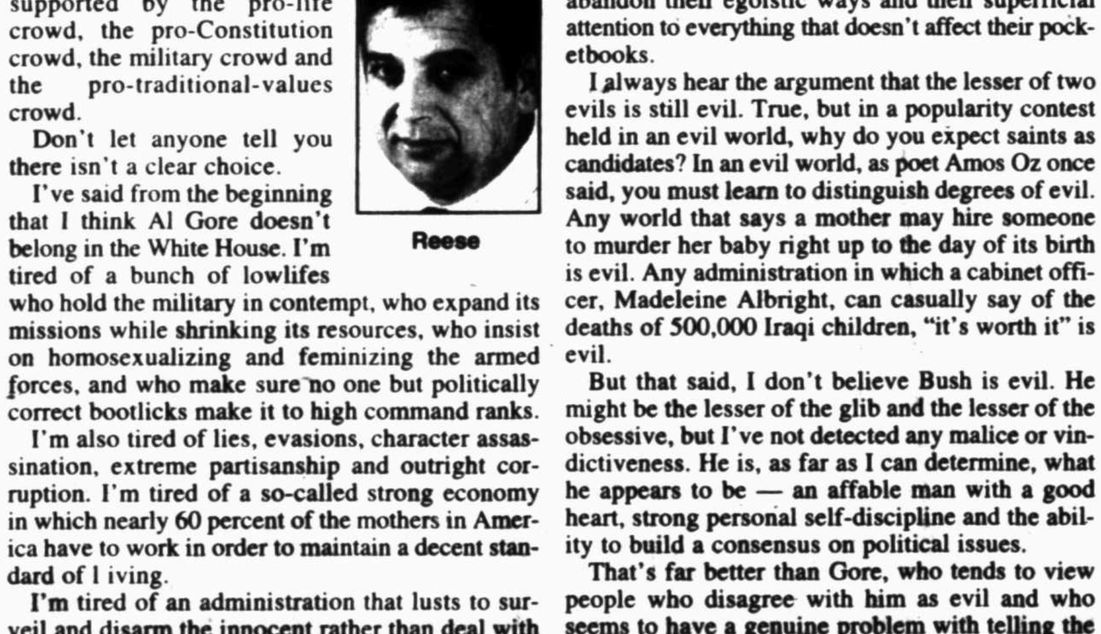

But that said, I don't believe Bush is evil. He might be the lesser of the glib and the lesser of the obsessive, but I've not detected any malice or vindictiveness. He is, as far as I can determine, what he appears to be — an affable man with a good heart, strong personal self-discipline and the ability to build a consensus on political issues.

That's far better than Gore, who tends to view people who disagree with him as evil and who seems to have a genuine problem with telling the truth. Gore lies even when it's in his own best interest to tell the truth. It's interesting, too, that Democrats say the same thing of Bush that they said of Ronald Reagan — that he's not a detail guy and works short hours.

News flash: A detail guy is the last thing you want as a president, and long hours equals inefficient. We're electing a decision-maker, not a clerk.

ART BUCHWALD

Are 'lefties' to be persecuted by all others?

We were arm-wrestling with each other at Lefty's Bar and Grill the other night, when word reached us that lefties were an inferior species who were responsible for more accidents and premature deaths than any other group.

Buchwald

Lefty George was so outraged that he knocked over a bottle and spilled beer on his pants. "I knew it would come to this. They have nobody left to persecute, so they have decided to go after left-handers."

Lefty Eddie said, "Before I make any comment, I'll have to study the report. Until then, I deny that I have any physical or psychological disorders."

"Why are you setting the tablecloth on fire?" Sam the Southpaw asked.

"I am left-handed," I admitted. "And I am not ashamed to come out of the closet and say it. The report was obviously written by right-handed psychologists who have persecuted left-handers since time began."

"Listen to this," Lefty Deardorf said as he read from his newspaper: "'Left-handers are more prone to diseases and disorders than right-handers.'"

Lefty Cronheim yelled, "That's a stack of horse manure." He clutched the air as he fell off his stool.

We all turned to Fred the bartender. Since he owned the saloon, he was ambidextrous.

"Fred, do you think left-handers are more dumb than right-handers?"

He replied, "No, they are just slower. Look at Frieda over there. No one will dance with her because she has two left feet. Frankly, I have no problem with lefties unless they're the designated drivers."

"Do you really believe that we're accident-prone like the study indicates?"

"Not all of you," Fred said, "but I do worry about your reflexes. I heard on television that lefties always forget to put gas in their cars. It's something to do with genes."

Most of the left-handed people at the bar were edgy and dropping their pretzels everywhere. Several kept stooping to pick up the coins that constantly fell onto the floor through holes in their pockets.

Lefty Dowd cried, "Let's kill the right-handers before they kill us."

"How can we? There are no left-handed guns," I told him.

"We should have had the brains to figure that out," Frieda declared.

"That's just the point," Lefty Stanton moaned. "Our brains work differently from other people's."

"But we're smarter than right-handers," I said. "So we can get them to do all our dirty work for us."

Lefty Cronheim announced, "Left-handers are better lovers than right-handers."

He had our attention. He explained, "I have heard this from many women who have been kissed from the right and from the left. Left-handers hold women as if they mean it."

Frieda asked, "What about left-handed women? Are they better romantically than right-handed ones?"

"Probably," I assured her. "But the ideal situation is if you put a left-handed woman with a left-handed guy. Then you'll really see the earth move."

Extortion scheme nets $1.5 million, terrorizes Tennessee families

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — The law calls it extortion. Douglas Daigle called it "the love connection."

It worked like this: Find a married woman who manages a bank. Abduct her and her husband in their home, separate the two and use the husband as a hostage, telling the woman that a bomb has been strapped to his back.

Through the night, make the woman practice disarming a bomb, which is actually just an alarm clock with loose green and red wires attached. Tell her it is a skill she needs to master by sunrise.

Then, in the morning, make her go to the bank, empty out the vault and drop the money at a prearranged location. The bomb is ticking, the woman is told, and failure to produce the money will mean her husband's death.

Daigle reasoned — correctly — that a woman devoted to her husband would never jeopardize his life for a bag of someone else's money.

The extortion plot worked three times in 1995 and 1996, netting more than $1.5 million, and caused a night of terror for three Tennessee families.

But when the plot unraveled, it led to Daigle's suicide, the alleged murder of an accomplice, and the convictions of three men.

"Nobody really knows what we went through or how terrible this has all been," one of the bank managers, Patricia Farry, said after the trial last month of three Daigle accomplices.

Daigle found his victims by visiting banks and looking for women managers. He would then look up the women's names and addresses to determine whether they were married and lived in a secluded neighborhood.

"He had a plan to get his hands on huge sums of money — a plan which would inflict terror and absolute fear on these innocent families," U.S. Attorney David Jennings said.

Daigle called on a circle of close friends, starting with his new wife, Capri. She served as a stand-in for the bank managers as Daigle and his accomplices rehearsed each kidnapping. She also helped him get aerial maps of the victims' homes from city hall, going along with Daigle as he posed as a developer.

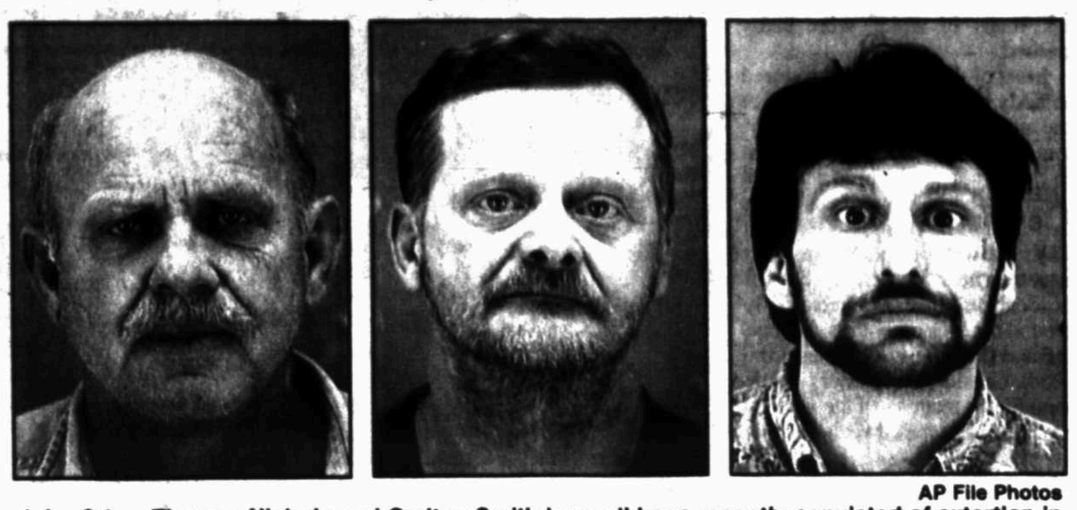

And she helped spend the money. Ms. Daigle added a pond to their home near Knoxville and bought new living room furniture. She said her husband buried jars filled with cash.

"He would say, 'You going to the store? How much money do you need?' Then he'd go out in the back yard and unbury it," she said.

The first of the victims was Farry.

For nearly a month, Daigle hid among the trees in Farry's back yard, learning her family's routine. He watched her shower, looked on as her daughter scurried to school, and learned when the family ate dinner, watched television and went to bed.

Then in September 1995, Daigle, armed with a gun, knocked on the door of the Farrys' ranch-style home while their daughter was away. When the couple opened it, Daigle and an accomplice shoved Farry and her husband, Jon, to the ground, bound their wrists and ankles with duct tape, and threw pillowcases over their heads.

John Crisp, Thomas Nichols and Carlton Smith have all been recently convicted of extortion in a scheme to steal money from several Tennessee banks. The extortion ring mastermind, Douglas Daigle, commited suicide in jail. Daigle's wife is testifying against Crisp, Nichols and Smith in exchange for a reduced sentence.

The next morning, Farry withdrew $333,000 from a bank in Knoxville, left it in her car on an empty street corner and did not call the police until Daigle had fled into the Smoky Mountains.

The scheme worked again in March 1996, this time in Chattanooga. Teresa Bailey emptied $345,350 from a vault and handed it over to Daigle in hopes of saving her husband's life.

"After I got the money ... all I could think about was getting the bomb off of him," Bailey said.

Then in December 1996, Cynthia Pierce was forced to take $851,000 from a bank in Clarksville and gave it to Daigle.

All three women were told to await instructions on where to find their husbands, after which they were supposed to disarm the bomb. Daigle and his cohorts left the husbands tied up at their homes or in a car. But there was no a bomb, phony or otherwise, strapped to the men.

Daigle was the first to be arrested. He never hid his identity during the extortions, and the victims were able to describe him. The FBI released his picture, and he was pulled over by police in 1997.

Faced with the possibility life in prison, he strangled himself in jail with a bed sheet at age 43, according to the FBI.

Ms. Daigle was the government's star witness, testifying in exchange for a reduced sentence on money laundering charges. She helped convict her husband's accomplices John Crisp, 56, Thomas Nichols, 46, and Carlton Smith, 35, of extortion.

Crisp could get up to 90 years in prison, Nichols up to 50 and Smith as much as 15. Sentencing is set for March.

Another man allegedly involved, Ted Roberts, has been missing for years and is believed dead. Daigle told investigators that Smith shot Roberts in a dispute over the proceeds. No one has been charged.

Donald Pierce, who was held hostage for more than 10 hours, said the convictions were a small victory.

"There is not a day that goes by I don't walk through my door and think about what's on the other side," he said.

Three injured, one missing after fiery Arizona train crash

BELLEMONT, Ariz. (AP) — Authorities searched for clues Wednesday to the cause of a fiery freight train collision that left crumpled and charred cars sprawled across the snowy landscape.

Three crew members were hurt in Tuesday's crash and another was missing and presumed dead in the wreckage, where flames still lingered Wednesday.

"It doesn't look good right now," Coconino County Sheriff Joe Richards said.

One Burlington Northern-Santa Fe train rear-ended another that had stopped on the tracks about 10 miles west of Flagstaff.

Railroad spokesman Steven Forsberg said it wasn't unusual for trains to be sharing tracks, or for a train to stop on them. Dispatchers work to keep trains separated, but it wasn't immediately known why the two trains collided.

The crash pushed several cars off the tracks. Three locomotives burst into flames and thousands of gallons of diesel fuel burned, sending flames licking into the sky through Tuesday night.

The parked train was carrying a small amount of hazardous materials but authorities said there wasn't a spill. Fifteen families were evacuated but were allowed to return Wednesday.

Chris Lavy, a construction worker from Bellemont, had gone to the nearby Navajo Army depot to take his two daughters trick-or-treating when he heard the explosion and saw flames.

"I can't win the lottery, but what are the odds of someone wrecking a train with hazardous materials right there to make us evacuate?" he said.

The engineer of the rear train was listed in critical condition Wednesday at the burn unit at Maricopa Medical Center in Phoenix. Two crew members from the standing train were treated at Flagstaff Medical Center and released Tuesday.

Singapore Airlines defends pilot's decision to take off in storm

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Families of Singapore Airlines crash victims began arriving in Taiwan early today to retrieve their loved ones' bodies as officials tried to determine what caused the plane to burst into flames during takeoff, killing 79 people — at least 23 of them Americans.

Survivors said they felt Flight SQ006 hit something as the plane barreled down the runway. But as emergency workers pulled bodies from the charred, blue-and-tan wreckage Wednesday, early speculation also pointed to wind as a possible factor in the Boeing 747-400's accident: At the time of takeoff, the airport was being lashed by the swirling gusts and torrential rains of an approaching typhoon.

Some relatives of those who died have blamed the pilot, Capt. C.K. Foong. On Wednesday, one woman pounded the counter at a Singapore Airlines ticket counter in Taipei and shouted at the company's employees, "How could you take off in this weather?"

But the airline — which had not had a major accident in 28 years of operation — defended Foong's decision.

"Conditions were well within safe operational limits," company spokesman Rick Clements told reporters in Singapore. He noted that a flight by Taiwan's China Airlines took off just 15 minutes before Singapore Airlines' takeoff.

Taiwanese aviation official Billy K.C. Chang said Tuesday night's visibility levels of 1,650-1,980 feet at Chiang Kai-shek International Airport exceeded the minimum requirement of 660 feet needed for takeoff. Measuring safe wind speeds is more complicated, but the gusty winds were not excessive, he said.

In general, control towers in Taiwan monitor wind speed and direction, visibility, air traffic and other factors before authorizing takeoffs, especially during storms such as typhoons. It is then up to the pilot to decide whether to go ahead with the takeoff or to abort it if unexpected problems develop on the runway.

As investigators probed and victims' loved ones hurled accusations amid their tears, medical workers tried to identify the bodies, many of which were badly burned.

Most of the corpses were stored in body bags in an old terminal at the airport. Lined up in neat rows, the 70 or so bodies were laid next to caskets of honey pine and dark cherry wood. DNA tests were expected to be completed today.

As Taiwanese guards stood at attention near the caskets, dozens of local Buddhists walked slowly around the area early today, chanting and ringing a bell to honor the dead. Outside, volunteers made soup for the relatives of the victims, but none had arrived yet to inspect the bodies.

In addition to the 79 people who died in the accident, 39 were hospitalized and 61 suffered minor injuries or escaped unhurt, Chang said.

The airline gave slightly different figures. It released a list of 80 people who it said were "dead or unaccounted for." It said 79 of the 80 were dead and that one person's whereabouts were not known, but it did not know which person that was. The discrepancy could not immediately be explained.

Forty-seven of those aboard were Americans, and on Wednesday President Clinton offered condolences to people who lost family members and friends in the crash.

"It's too early to know the cause of the accident, but the United States is helping Taiwan authorities to find the answers" by sending investigators to Taipei, Clinton said in Washington.

AP Photo

The charred remains of a Singapore Airlines Boeing 747 jetliner lie on the runway of Taiwan's Chiang Kai-shek International Airport in Taipei Wednesday. The plane's pilot reported hitting an object on the runway while trying to take off. At least 68 of the 179 people on board were injured and 23 Americans were killed.

Within hours after the crash, many victims' relatives were rushing to Los Angeles International Airport looking for flights to Taiwan. Ten flew out of Los Angeles aboard a Malaysian flight and arrived in Taipei early today.

Fifty-five more Americans were to leave late Wednesday aboard a Singapore Airlines plane, airline spokesman James Boyd said, and relatives of victims from Singapore and New Zealand began arriving in Taipei earlier in the day.

Officials still didn't know what Flight SQ006 might have hit as it tried to take off, but the damage was spectacular: Huge tongues of flames lit up the rainy night sky as the plane broke into three pieces. Afterward, parts of the fuselage were badly charred.

Foong — who survived the crash — "saw an object on the runway and he tried to take off to avoid the object, and he hit the object," said Clements, who wouldn't speculate about what the plane might have struck.

Chou Kuang-tsan of the Aviation Safety Council, which investigates Taiwanese air accidents, said the plane apparently swerved off its runway and onto a spare runway that was under repair. Chou said it was not clear why the plane would have done that.

The airline said there was no evidence that the plane was using the wrong runway. The plane's debris flew across the two adjacent runways upon impact, which might have led to the speculation about the plane being in the wrong place, Clements said.

Chou said he will begin analyzing the plane's "black boxes," or flight data and voice cockpit recorders, today. "We still can't rule out any possibilities," he told reporters.

Theories about the crash abounded in Taiwan's media.

■ More World news/4B

Local TV stations suggested the pilot might have tried to take off from the wrong runway and slammed into construction equipment near the strip. TV reports showed a damaged crane near the accident site. Others speculated that strong winds blew construction debris into the path of the plane.

The accident was the first major one for Singapore Airlines, consistently voted the most favored airline of business travelers. The plane that burst into flames Tuesday was bought new in January 1997, had had no problems and had undergone a maintenance check on Sept. 16, airline officials said.

Angola plane crashes; 48 killed on board

LUANDA, Angola (AP) — A charter plane burst into flames minutes after takeoff, crashing into a remote jungle in a key diamond-mining region, authorities said Wednesday. All 48 people aboard were killed, reports said.

The cause of the crash Tuesday evening was not immediately known. Flight disasters in Angola are commonly blamed on poor aircraft maintenance or rebel gunfire.

The Antonov 26 had just departed from the northern Angolan town of Saurimo, 500 miles east of Luanda, when it exploded into a fireball at about 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Civil Aviation Director Branco Ferreira said Wednesday.

An army team reached the crash site late Wednesday and found no survivors, the state-run television network TPA said. The flight data and cockpit voice recorders had not yet been retrieved.

The region has been the focus of fierce civil warfare between the army and rebels from the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, or UNITA. They have been fighting since the southwest African country gained independence from Portugal in 1975.

The Soviet-built plane, owned by the Angolan company Ancargo, was chartered by a travel agency called Guicango, the Portuguese new agency Lusa said.

Stroud found guilty, sentenced to 99 years

■ Stroud, 43, has spent a total of 18 years of his life in prison.

By Brian Rogers
Staff Writer

After only 30 minutes of deliberation Wednesday morning, William Timothy Stroud was found guilty of murdering 31-year-old Robert Keith Osburn on Christmas Day last year.

He was sentenced to 99 years in prison and will be eligible for parole in 30 years.

Deputies were called to the murder scene after Stroud used a shotgun he had sawed off to shoot Osburn in the head.

The trial, which began on Monday, included testimony from members of the Allen family, who Stroud was staying with while attempting to evade police for a parole violation.

The jury heard closing remarks Wednesday morning before adjourning to deliberate.

Stroud had taken the stand in his own defense Tuesday to explain that he believed Osburn was about to attack him with a knife. A knife was found in Osburn's possession.

The eyewitness to the shooting, Toby Allen, could not say whether Osburn was about to attack Stroud when he was shot. Allen also said he didn't notice when Stroud picked up the sawed-off shotgun because Stroud usually had the shotgun with him.

In his closing remarks, assistant district attorney Eric Kalenak said the photographs of the dead man's position showed a man who had been sitting, not attacking, when shot.

During the punishment phase of the trial, the prosecution called Kim Osburn to the stand. She spoke about the impact of the loss of her husband to her and her two children.

The defense called Stroud's father, D.W. Stroud, to the stand. Defense attorney Rusty Wall said the father came from his home in Mississippi to offer moral support during the trial.

After the punishment, Wall said Stroud got a fair trial.

"Mr. Stroud wanted to be heard, and he accomplished that," Wall said.

'We're very sorry for the Osburn family. There are too many sad people involved with this case.'
— Rusty Wall, Defense attorney for Stroud

He also said Stroud knew he would be going back to prison for parole violations regardless of the outcome of this trial.

Stroud, 43, has spent a total of 18 years of his life in prison. He had previously pleaded guilty to two felonies, an aggravated robbery in 1979 and an attempted burglary in 1985. Stroud was on parole in 1999 when he received a DWI and then broke parole.

To escape detection, he moved in with the Allen family on State Highway 349. According to Stroud, he and the Allen family had been making and using methamphetamine for a period of months before the shooting.

Wall said, "It was never a question of if he had to go back, Mr. Stroud just wanted his version of the facts in this case to be heard."

Wall also said, "We're very sorry for the Osburn family. There are too many sad people involved with this case."

Kalenak said he was satisfied with the verdict. "This jury did a good job of listening to the facts and making a decision," Kalenak said.

Texas-Size Garage Sale slated for this weekend

By Judy Serbantez
MRT Correspondent

Where can you find vintage glassware, an early 1900s adding machine and a room full of clothes in virtually any size for men or women?

The Texas-Size Garage Sale benefiting Meals on Wheels and Homebound Services for Midland's elderly and disabled is the place. Kelly Ives, executive director for Meals on Wheels, said organizers of the event hope to raise more than $50,000. An early bird sale will be from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Friday at 407 E. Scharbauer Drive on the northwest corner of Scharbauer Drive and Lamesa Road. Admission for the early bird sale is $3.

The Saturday hours for the garage sale will be from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

"Everything was donated by the community, and we've been collecting since May," said Ms. Ives.

She estimated that more than 10,000 hours have been invested in organizing the event. Shelves and shelves of books, an old grand piano and hundreds and hundreds of knick-knacks filled the warehouse.

"Anything you can possibly think of is in here," said Ms. Ives.

All of the donated electronic equipment has been checked out.

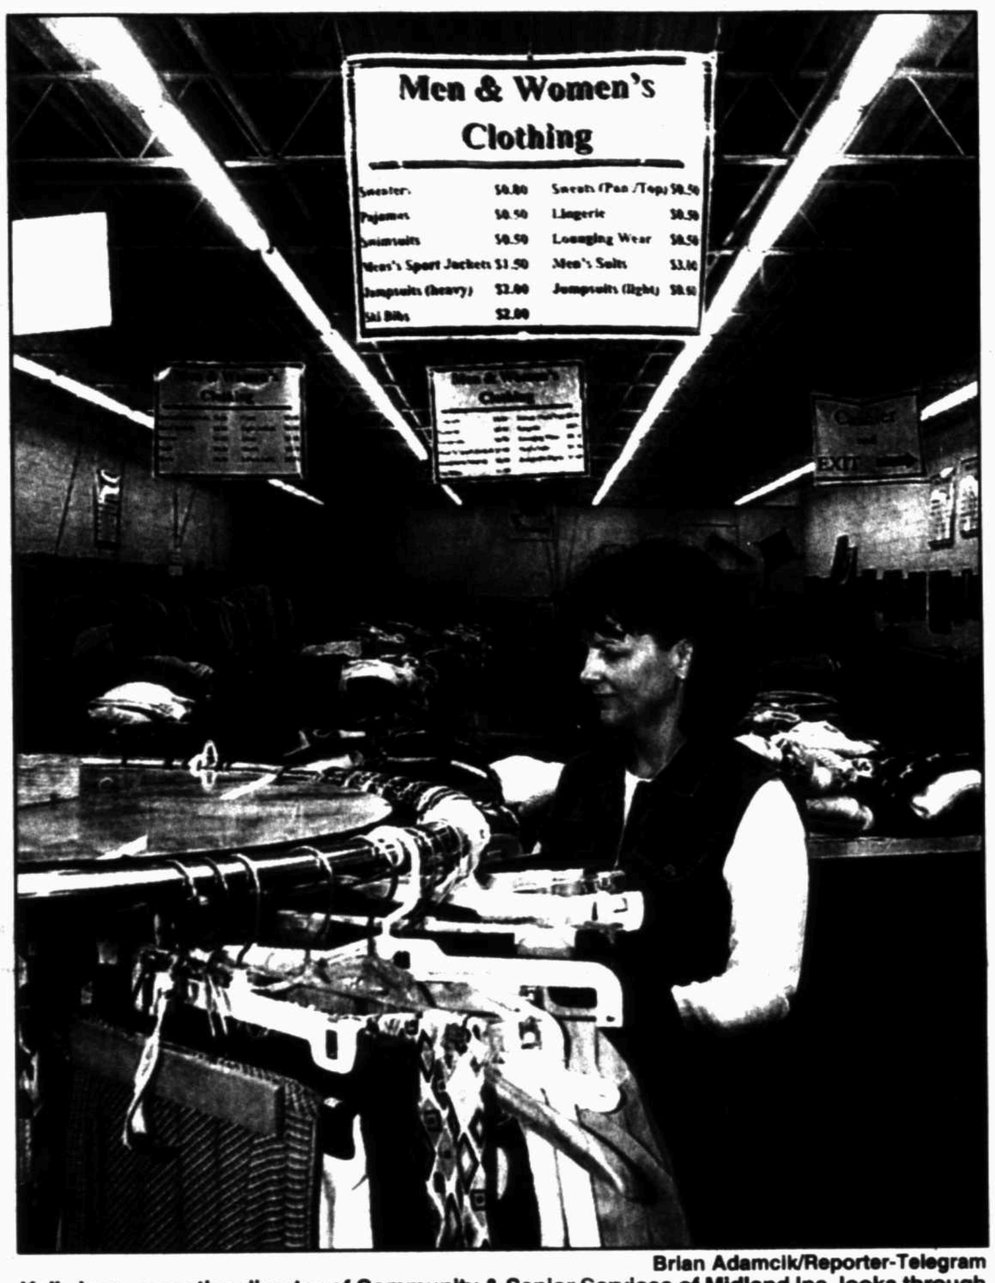

"All of the volunteers made sure the electronic equipment worked, and the televisions were checked out also. Cox Cable does a real nice thing for us. They give us free cable to test the televisions," said Developmental Director and Community Senior Service Director for Meals on Wheels Jami Owen.

The proceeds benefit programs such as Telephone Reassurance, a program geared toward senior citizens designed to alleviate the isolation of living alone, said Ms. Owen. A volunteer calls a senior citizen letting them know someone cares, and is thinking about them.

"Somebody calls once a day, just to say hello. It makes them feel better, and it's a good program for the senior citizens," said Ms. Owen. Grocery Express delivers groceries to the elderly and disabled. Meals on Wheels serves more than 400 people daily.

"The money stays right here in Midland," said Ms. Ives.

For more information or to volunteer, call Community and Senior Services at 689-6693.

One injured in crane accident in Andrews

By Brian Rogers
Staff Writer

ANDREWS — Bobby Warren King, 28, of Odessa, was in stable condition in Lubbock Wednesday night after being trapped in the cab of a collapsed and overturned crane in Andrews earlier in the day.

According to a statement from the Andrews County Sheriff's Department, the crane's boom buckled and fell while hoisting the last portion of a 360-foot tower into place, pinning King in the cab.

The industrial accident occurred 13 miles north of Andrews on U.S. Highway 385.

The Sheriff's Department received the call at 11:53 a.m.

King, who was operating the crane, was trapped for more than an hour while the Andrews Volunteer Fire Department and the Seminole Fire Department worked to free him from the wreckage.

The Andrews EMS, the Seminole EMS, Permian General Hospital and Aerocare treated King while he was trapped.

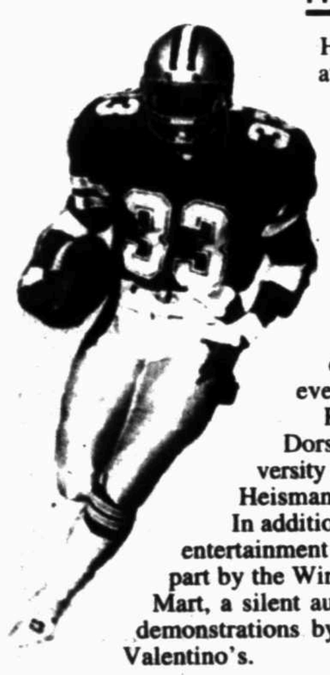

King was conscious when he emerged from the wreckage, however he was airlifted to Covenant Medical Center in Lubbock for his injuries. Eric Willman, the nursing supervisor at Covenant confirmed that King was in stable condition.

No one else was injured in the accident.

The tower was being erected for Western Wireless. The crane was owned by Marks Crane and Rigging Co. of Odessa.

Shriners offer to fund hospital costs of burned Lee students

By Isela Agundis
MRT Correspondent

Shriners Hospitals for Children has extended an offer to fund all medical care for Brooke Bagley, Teran Nix and David Dutchover, three Lee High School students burned in an Oct. 10 chemistry class accident.

"We let the parents of the students know since Day 2, that we could help," said Bob Gaines, treasurer of the Midland Shriners. "If they had gone to us for help originally, the $10,000 spent on a helicopter ride to Lubbock's burn center could have been paid by the Shriners."

If the offer is accepted, the Midland Shrine Club would be charged with providing all round-trip transportation costs for the victims and their parents to the Shrine Club's Galveston burn center during the entire treatment. In 1999, the local club provided transportation to more than 100 patients from Midland County and the surrounding areas, spending close to $33,000. Once the teens were accepted as patients, they would continue to receive help until age 18 and even later if their physicians thought it necessary. One patient treated in the past received care until age 21. The Shrine Clubs would also take care of counseling for the burn victims, their families and even fellow students. Local attorney among finalists for MISD law job

From Staff Reports

School officials are getting closer to selecting the new Midland Independent School District school attorney.

Ellen House of Midland's local firm Cotton, Bledsoe, Tighe and Dawson, and Derrell Coleman of the Texas Education Agency are the two finalists for the position. Both candidates were interviewed at last month's school board meeting on Oct. 24.

Charles Tighe — who is a partner in the firm Ellen House represents and a member of MISD's board of trustees — will sit out during the decision process due to a potential conflict of interest.

"It would not be appropriate for him to participate," said MISD executive director of communications Barney Welch.

According to MISD board of trustees president George Lara, the administration will give its recommendation on Nov. 14 at the regularly scheduled board meeting.

No salary has been determined for the position.

Program seeks furry volunteers to help take a bite out of trauma

The Midland Rape Crisis and Advocacy Center (MRCAC) is looking for volunteers to lend a helping paw.

The Ther-a-pets program has helped put dogs into hospitals, nursing homes and rehabilitation centers across the country. Now, with a grant from the Permian Basin Area Foundation, the MRCAC will soon be able to provide victims of traumatic events with the comfort of a canine companion, at least for a few hours.

Betty Dickerson, executive director of the MRCAC, said the program is being initiated to have people, who love their dogs, volunteer the dogs to be petted and comfort people going through traumatic events.

"Animals can relax people, especially children, in traumatic situations," Ms. Dickerson said.

She added that any dog could volunteer, as long as it has the right temperament.

"The dog has to have a basic obedience certification before it can be involved with the Ther-a-pet program," Ms. Dickerson said. She also said if the dog doesn't have an obedience certification, the MRCAC may be able to help pay for the training.

The Ther-a-pet training must be completed after the obedience certification. The trainer for the program, Ed Nix, said the training includes, "No fight, no flight and no bite."

Nix, and his wife, were sent to Carlsbad, N.M. to learn about the Ther-a-pet program.

He said the program has had success reaching people who have been hospitalized and don't respond to any other stimuli. Nix said he saw an example of a young man with brain damage who didn't respond to any conventional stimuli, but could brush a dog, and respond to directions about brushing the dog.

Ms. Dickerson said the MRCAC would pay for all of the training for the dog, if the owner can make a time commitment a few times a

'Walk With Me' raises kids' awareness of good health

By Danielle Belton
Staff Writer

Area fourth-graders walked away with success Wednesday as they completed the new "Walk With Me" state health awareness campaign.

Students, teachers and staff met with executive director of the Governor's Commission for Women, Ashley Horton, in the courtyard at Bowie Elementary. Horton talked with the students about proper health, exercise and the importance of the program.

"This is what you should be doing for the rest of your life," Horton said.

More than 70 Bowie Elementary fourth graders completed the "Walk With Me" program. "Walk With Me" is a project of the Governor's Commission for Women. The program was sponsored by H-E-B, the Texas Education Agency and the Texas Parent Teacher Association.

The fourth graders were required to take three 20-minute walks per week with an adult partner — usually a teacher or parent. This program took place for the entire month of October. Children were given a walking calendar and a workbook to further educate them about the value of good health. Horton encouraged the children, teachers and parents to continue the healthy regime after the programs completion.

"As parents and care givers, we can work together to better our health," Horton said.

Bowie was invited to join this state pilot program because it is the former school of Texas' First Lady and Midland native Laura Bush.

"Walk With Me's" purpose it to encourage better health and fitness for children. According to Horton, many children are leading more sedentary lives by watching TV and playing video games rather than participating in more aerobic activities. This behavior has led to a nationwide increase in childhood obesity and non-insulin dependent diabetes in children.

Schools that finish and meet "Walk With Me's" criteria are eligible for state grants for physical fitness and health education.

month.

Even after jumping through the hoops, the handler has to be with the animal at all times while it is volunteering. One dog can only be used a few times a month, so the MRCAC is hoping for a large pool of volunteers to help out.

Andra Chamberlain, the Child Advocacy Center program director, said although Ther-a-pets have been used in other settings, this is the first time in Midland that pets have been used in therapy.

"Our cases mainly involve children who have been sexually abused. Some have parents who have been murdered, or the children are physically abused. It's a hard time for them," Ms. Chamberlain said.

She added, "This is an effort to make our agency more comfortable, to lower anxiety."

There will be an orientation meeting Nov. 9 for the dog owners who want to know more. No dogs will be allowed at this orientation. If you and your dog are interested in being involved, call the MRCAC at (915) 682-7273.

family would be responsible for would be prescription medication costs incurred outside of the hospital.

Shriners Hospitals is a network of 22 hospitals across North America which includes four major burn centers in Boston, Cincinnati, Galveston and Sacramento, Calif. The Galveston facility, which opened in 1965, has a budget of $29 million and a research budget of $4 million for 2000. That particular site would be the most convenient for this area, Gaines said.

Many of the breakthroughs in burn treatment have been made by Shriners research, he said. The organization has provided more than 12,000 children with expensive, specialized medical care for orthopedic problems, burns and spinal cord injuries without cost to patients and their families.

Shriner 1999 statistics for the Galveston burn facility, include 1,378 admitted patients, 1,366 surgeries, and 3,709 in-house clinic visits. A total of 191 Shrine Temples raise funds for research and to pay for medical costs of patients.

The families of the three burn victims were said to be made aware of the offer from Shriners, but the parents may not have taken it due to the inconvenience of trips to Galveston, Gaines said. MISD officials also have insurance benefits available for the students.

A spokesman for MISD said school officials feel the Shriners' offer is generous but the parents should be the ones to make decisions.

"We're doing what we can," MISD Communications Director Barney Welch said. "The Shriners offer is wonderful, but it's up to the parents to do what they feel is right."

Study says West Nile virus may have strong host in common house sparrow

HOUSTON (AP) — The West Nile virus, which has appeared in several East Coast cities, could have a strong host in the common house sparrow, according to a new study.

Nicholas Komar with the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, revealed the findings Wednesday during the American Society of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene's annual conference.

The Fort Collins, Colo.-based, ecologist examined several species of birds, including pigeons and blue jays, and found sparrows tend to develop a very high concentration of the virus in their blood.

Mosquitoes who feed on the sparrows then more easily develop the virus, which is transmitted to humans through the insect's bite.

Scientists do not know which species of birds are affected by the disease, Komar said.

Komar said his study's findings can help health officials determine the best way to minimize the time and money allocated to spraying for mosquitoes to help control the virus.

"House sparrows tend to congregate at night in communal roosts," Komar said. "In these roosts, that's where the transmission can occur. So the spraying can be concentrated on these spots instead of all over a city. It's cheaper and there's less of a risk to people."

The study's findings do not mean that humans are at an increased risk to contract the virus, Komar said.

The West Nile Virus, which originated in Africa and west Asia, was first discovered in the United States last summer in New York City. Seven people died there last year and another died in New Jersey this year.

The virus has spread to 12 states and 63 species, including horses, raccoons, bats, squirrels, humans and close to 60 species of native North American birds.

It is a mosquito-borne viral infection that can cause inflammation of the brain. Most people who are infected show no symptoms or may have a mild fever and headache.

The infection also can cause encephalitis, an inflammation of the brain, and meningitis, an inflammation of the brain's lining and the spinal cord.

"Sparrows are resident birds and do not migrate, so they are probably not involved in transporting the virus," Komar said. "It is likely that other birds are also reservoir hosts for the virus, and the species that is responsible for the migration of the virus along the East Coast has yet to be identified."

Komar said his study has been conducted over the last year and he plans to continue it for another year.

Participant in inheritance scheme executed for woman's killing

■ Dillingham was the 34th convicted killer to receive lethal injection in Texas this year, three short of the record 37 executed in 1997.

By Michael Graczyk
Associated Press

HUNTSVILLE — Jeffrey Dillingham, smiling, winking and blowing kisses at relatives, went to his death Wednesday for fatally beating a Fort Worth woman in a murder-for-hire scheme he thought would get him $1 million from the victim's stepdaughter.

"I would just like to apologize to the victims of the family for what I did," he said in his final statement. "I take full responsibility for that poor woman's death and for the pain and suffering I inflicted on Mr. Koslow."

Dillingham, 27, confessed to police as the murder plot unraveled some two weeks after Caren Koslow was slashed and beaten to death with a metal pry bar in an attack at her home. Her husband, Jack, was beaten and left for dead but survived.

Dillingham, in his last comments, recited a prayer in which he thanked God and his parents.

"Thank you heavenly father for getting me off of death row and for bringing me home out of prison," he said.

Looking toward family members, he repeatedly mouthed, "I love you all, you all take care."

Then he smiled and winked before grunting and gasping as the drugs took effect. He died at 6:28 p.m., eight minutes after the lethal dose was administered.

Dillingham's father, his father's fiancee and his stepfather were led in prayer during the execution by two spiritual advisers.

No one was present from the victim's family. Outside, about a dozen demonstrators held candles during a steady downpour.

'I take full responsibility for that poor woman's death and for the pain and suffering I inflicted on Mr. Koslow.'
— Jeffrey Dillingham,

The bloodshed occurred six days after Dillingham, who worked in a video store, turned 19.

An accomplice, Brian Salter, and his girlfriend, Kristi Koslow, the murder victim's stepdaughter, both received life prison terms. Dillingham rejected a plea bargain and a jury sentenced him to death.

On Tuesday, the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles rejected requests for commutation, a pardon and a reprieve. Dillingham's lawyers had argued it was unfair that his two accomplices received life terms and he got death.

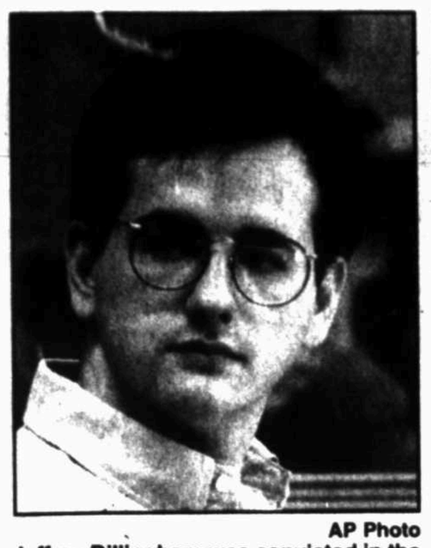

Dillingham was the 34th convicted killer to receive lethal injection in Texas this year, three short of the record 37 executed in 1997 in the nation's most active death penalty state. He was the first of six set to die over the next 16 days.

Salter, also 19 at the time, testified against Kristi Koslow, who then was 17. They both are eligible for parole in about 27 years.

Testimony showed she wanted her father and stepmother dead because she didn't get along with them after her father remarried. She also believed she would inherit as much as $12 million and she had promised $1 million to Dillingham.

"Dillingham did not even know the victim," recalled Robert Mayfield, one of the prosecutors in the case. "But it didn't matter to him. He was going to get a million dollars. That was the key point. What I argued to the jury is that he did a cost-effective analysis, and stepping over two bodies was nothing."

In the early hours of March 12, 1992, according to testimony, the men arrived with a drawing of the 4,000-square-foot house and codes to disable an alarm system — both provided by Kristi Koslow. They broke through a door, went to an upstairs bedroom and ordered the couple to the floor. Jack Koslow tried to load a shotgun he kept in a nearby closet.

Jurors heard how the man and woman were attacked and how the intruders left with $120 and Jack Koslow's wallet. Blows to Caren Koslow broke her skull and jaw. The slashing of her neck nearly decapitated her.

Dillingham gave his bloody clothing and the weapon to a friend who cracked under the pressure of knowing about the slaying and told police, said Mayfield, now a Johnson County judge.

At his trial, Dillingham wept nonstop.

"I believe the jury interpreted that as 'poor pitiful me' rather than any compassion for his victim," Mayfield said.

The Koslows were active in Fort Worth society and the arts. Jack Koslow is remarried and still lives in Fort Worth, where he is involved in the business community and plays golf. Besides a scar across his throat, he has no lingering injuries from the attack, according to some of his friends.

He has since sold the two-story brick house with large shutters, trimmed hedges and a brick sidewalk. Few people in the upscale neighborhood where the murder took place wanted to discuss the case.

"There's a part of the westside community that's close, in some respects almost family-like," said Bill Meadows, a former city councilman who lives in the area. "You can appreciate the depth of the tragedy because you were close to the (Koslows) and cared about them. But people are ready to move on and get it behind them."

15 year-old student holds several hostage in Carrolton high school

DALLAS (AP) — A 15-year-old boy who had been reported as a runaway took a loaded gun to a Carrollton high school Wednesday morning and held several students hostage before police broke into the locked classroom and took him into custody, police said.

No one was injured in the incident at Newman Smith High School, although medical personnel checked the student's teacher as a precaution because she is pregnant.

School remained in session after the student, a freshman, was apprehended about 8:40 a.m. School officials met with hundreds of frantic parents at a church across the street from the high school.

"We want everyone to know the students and staff at Newman Smith are safe," said district spokeswoman Cindy Randle.

The suspect was in geography class with the teacher and 18 other students when the incident began shortly after 8 a.m., said Judy Thurman, another spokeswoman for the district.

"Apparently there was some type of homework assignment that the teacher asked him for and he said he didn't have it and she said she was going to send him to the office," said Carrollton police spokesman Sgt. David Sponhour. After pleading with the teacher not to be sent to the office, the student pulled the gun out of his school bag and pointed it at her, Sponhour said.

"Apparently she put her hands up and said, 'OK, what can I do for you?'" Sponhour said.

The suspect then instructed the other students in the classroom to put their hands on their desks, Sponhour said.

Police were called at 8:16 a.m. and began evacuating the area around the classroom.

"At first, he let two students go. Right after that, he let all the female students leave," Sponhour said. "That left nine male students and the female teacher."

Sponhour said reports that shots were fired were incorrect, but that the suspect set off firecrackers in the classroom.

Police forced the door open and apprehended the student. They recovered a loaded 9 mm Sig Sauer automatic handgun with an unknown number of rounds, Sponhour said.

The student was charged with delinquent conduct. He could face charges of aggravated assault or kidnapping if he is charged as an adult.

Sponhour said the youth was reported as a runaway Tuesday night. His name was not released because he is a juvenile.

Newman Smith High School is in the Carrollton Independent School District, about 13 miles northwest of Dallas. It is equipped with handheld metal detectors, which are used only when officials suspect someone may be armed,

The incident was the latest in a series in the Dallas area.

On Oct. 12, a Cedar Hill High School sophomore took a loaded .32-caliber gun to school in his backpack. The following day, Eagle Mountain-Saginaw Independent School District authorities found a Regent .22-caliber revolver and 550 rounds of ammunition under the driver's seat of a senior's car. And on Oct. 16, a 15-year-old boy took a .22-caliber gun to Wilmer-Hutchins High School after a skirmish at a football game the previous Friday.

Texas native among survivors of Singapore crash

PAMPA (AP) — A Texas native was among the survivors who narrowly escaped death Tuesday when their Singapore Airlines flight crashed and burned on takeoff from a Taiwan airport.

Former Pampa resident Walter Lee Young was among the 47 Americans aboard the flight. Seventy-nine of the 179 people aboard died in the crash.

Young, 44, is hospitalized in Taiwan with first-and-second degree burns on his arms and hands, his mother, Blondine Young, told The Pampa News Wednesday.

Mrs. Young said she expected to hear from her son this evening. He already has spoken with his sister, Connie Coble, she told the newspaper.

Mrs. Young said her son is having a hard time resting "because so many people ... are in his room and won't leave. They keep trying to get him to eat."

Mrs. Young said her son was seated on the right side of the airplane by the wing when the accident happened.

"It blew that part off," she said, "and that's how he got out. The explosion knocked his glasses off. He picked them up, then crawled through a hole in the plane and dropped 10 or 20 feet into a mud hole.

"When they were going down the runway Walter said he heard a pop and thought it was a blowout," she said. "The first thought that went through his mind was, 'Now, we're going to have to sit here another hour.'"

Young, a 1976 graduate of Pampa High School, was a Navy medic for more than 10 years before receiving a discharge and taking a job as a medic with Dyn Marine, a Virginia Beach, Va.-based shipping company.

Mrs. Young said her son had been asked to go to Taiwan to take the place of another medic. When he got there and learned the job would last four months instead of one, Young turned the position down and decided to return home, she said.

Mrs. Young said she was unaware that her son had been aboard the flight, but "there was something about the plane crash yesterday that kept drawing me to it," she said of the television coverage.

"I was jumpy. I went to my sister's and asked her if she'd seen the crash on TV. I told her I didn't know why it was bothering me so," she said.

"It's a miracle," she said. "We are just so thankful."

That's about the time Mrs. Young got a call from her son, who ended up leaving a message on her answering machine without telling her he had been in the crash. Young later learned from her son-in-law that her son had been on the plane.

When he got contacted his sister, Walter told her his instinct to provide medical attention to other passengers overrode concern about himself.

He told her he immediately began helping a female passenger, who didn't survive. He also told his sister of difficulties he had communicating with emergency medical personnel in Taiwan due to the language barrier and a lack of equipment aboard their ambulances, his mother said.

Three Israeli soldiers, six Palestinians killed in gun battles

JERUSALEM (AP) — Three Israeli soldiers were killed Wednesday in clashes with Palestinians in the West Bank, the military said, after wounded Israeli soldiers were pinned down by intense Palestinian gunfire that prevented their evacuation. They were the first Israeli soldiers to die in combat since Oct. 1.

Six Palestinians also were killed Wednesday as intense fighting broke out at several spots in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. At least 160 people have now been killed, most of them Palestinians, since Palestinian rioting erupted Sept. 28.

Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak called his Cabinet into special session and said Israel would not tolerate what he called "grave escalation." A statement from his office said Barak told the Cabinet his army "will act forcefully but without being dragged into adventurism."

Israel radio's Arabic service warned the residents of two West Bank neighborhoods in the city of Hebron to leave their homes, fueling expectations among Palestinians that Israel would retaliate for the deaths of the soldiers. Local TV stations in Hebron and Bethlehem said they had been warned they could be targets of Israeli attacks.

"Israel will not sit idly in the face of the grave escalation initiated by the Palestinian Authority," Barak said at a televised news conference.

Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erekat was unable to leave for talks in Washington, set for Friday. He said Israeli forces refused him permission to leave his home in Jericho. The military said Erekat was detained only briefly for routine checks.

In Gaza, cabinet minister Shimon Peres and Barak aide Gilead Sher met with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, the first high-level meeting since the riots erupted. After the three-hour meeting, Peres left without comment. Barak said earlier that Peres was not going to negotiate.

The fiercest battle Wednesday took place outside the village of Al Khader, near Bethlehem. Two Israeli soldiers, one an officer, and three Palestinians, including a policeman, were killed in the clash. Israeli attack helicopters and tanks were sent in to attack after Palestinian gunfire prevented Israeli forces from evacuating the dead and four wounded soldiers.

Scores of Al Khader residents, trapped on the main road during the shooting, huddled close to a cement wall, and one man sought cover under a car. A Palestinian boy screamed in panic when he heard a helicopter gunship approach.

Bullets also sprayed the entrance to the Yamamah Hospital on the outskirts of Al Khader. An injured Palestinian brought to the clinic's door in a car crawled out of the vehicle as those accompanying him ran for cover. The injured man collapsed from the effort and eventually was carried to safety indoors.

Another Israeli officer died when Palestinians shot at an Israeli outpost near Jericho. Israel retaliated by sending helicopter gunships and tanks to fire on the Palestinian intelligence headquarters in Jericho, the military said. And in Gaza, three Palestinians were killed in armed clashes.

Elsewhere, Palestinian gunmen attacked the Gilo neighborhood on the southern edge of Jerusalem from positions in the adjacent West Bank town of Beit Jalla. The gunmen hit several homes and a kindergarten, with one youngster and several adults still inside. There were no reports of injuries.

Palestinian mourners shout slogans against Israel while one of them holds the Koran, the Muslim holy book, during the mass funeral of the four Palestinian protesters who were shot and killed during clashes with Israeli soldiers Tuesday prior to being buried in Gaza Wednesday.

Israel responded with machine-gun fire from the ground and from helicopters. Troops also fired several anti-tank missiles at Beit Jalla. The fighting lasted for more than three hours.

In Gaza, more than 20,000 Palestinians joined a funeral for five of seven Palestinians killed in the past two days at the Karni crossing. "Goodbye, martyrs, we will meet in paradise," the crowd chanted. "We will take revenge against the Israelis, and this will happen soon."

The military has predicted the fighting could go on for months and could escalate, and a senior military official said Israel was calling up its army reserves. About 1,000 reservists have been activated already, and by the beginning of December, all the reserve forces will be called up to serve stints in the West Bank and Gaza, said the official, who insisted on anonymity.

Palestinian envoy Saeb Erekat was to meet with U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan and Secretary of State Madeleine Albright on Friday. Israeli Foreign Minister Shlomo Ben-Ami was meeting Albright on Wednesday.

Erekat said he was carrying letters from Arafat to Annan and Clinton with a request that the United Nations send a force to protect Palestinian civilians and for the establishment of an international inquiry into the causes of the violence. U.S. Ambassador Richard Holbrooke criticized the Palestinian demand for U.N. protection, saying it was "written as an attack on one side," meaning Israel.

Israel has rejected calls for an international inquiry, fearing bias. Instead, Israel suggested that the United States conduct an investigation.

Working against time, divers seek to break into bow of sunken sub

MURMANSK, Russia (AP) — Russian and Norwegian divers extended their working hours during a spell of clear, frosty weather over the Barents Sea on Wednesday, struggling to search the sunken nuclear submarine Kursk before storms again set in.

After retrieving 12 bodies from the stern of the wreck in the Arctic depths, the divers sealed the entrances to the rear compartments and moved their search to the mangled front.

The fore sections of the Kursk were ripped apart by a huge explosion that sank the vessel Aug. 12, and officials initially said no remains were likely to be found in the bow. All 118 seamen aboard the Kursk were killed, and so far there seem to be no clues about what caused the disaster.

Russian media and other observers have speculated that the navy may be seeking to recover sensitive military equipment and documents that could shed light on what caused the tragedy, before heavy storms put the Kursk out of reach for months.

However, naval officials insist that they're looking for bodies. The third compartment, where divers were working on Wednesday, was the location of a rescue vehicle that was designed to carry seamen to the surface in case of emergency.

A note found on the body of one of the Kursk's officers, Lt. Dmitry Kolesnikov, said that 23 sailors who had survived the initial explosions moved to the stern of the vessel after the sinking. Several attempted to use an escape hatch there, he said.

Divers may be searching for evidence of a similar escape attempt at the other end of the submarine, which could indicate that more than 23 seamen had survived at least the first moments of the disaster.

Russian and Norwegian divers have removed the rubber coating from the hull over the third compartment in the Kursk's fore part, and have cut a hole in the thinner, outer hull of the submarine, Northern Fleet spokesman Vladimir Navrotsky said Wednesday. The divers were clearing obstacles from between the Kursk's two hulls, and were planning to begin cutting the thick steel of the inner hull on Thursday, Navrotsky said.

The divers' shifts were extended from four to six hours under water as they worked to get inside the fore part of the wreck, Navrotsky said. "Time is pressing, as the weather can sour again," he said.

The heavy fogs that had blanketed the Arctic site for days have lifted and storms have subsided. The lull is expected to last for another two to three days, Navrotsky said.

The last eight bodies retrieved from the submarine were delivered Tuesday by ship to a laboratory in Severomorsk, the headquarters of the Northern Fleet. Four had been delivered earlier by helicopter.

Four of the 12 bodies been identified. Besides Kolesnikov, they are Lt. Alexander Brazhkin, 23; Warrant Officer Viktor Kuznetsov, 28; and Warrant Officer Mikhail Bochkov, 23, Russian news reports said.

Russian officials have focused on the theory that the blasts were set off by a collision with another, possibly foreign, ship during exercises in the Barents Sea. Others have said the most likely cause was a torpedo exploding in its tube.

Government seeks to make an angling skill more tourist-friendly

ANDROS, Bahamas (AP) — For those not familiar with bonefishing, the first question might be, why bother? Bonefish aren't exactly a culinary delight; they're, well, very bony.

And the above-water life can sometimes seem equally unattractive. The guides who take anglers out to hunt for bonefish have a reputation for being incompetent, uncommunicative, even surly.

The government is trying to remedy that by putting a new generation of guides through courtesy training: along with the practical advice on how to catch the elusive gamefish they're counseled in the rudiments of a tourist-friendly smile.

As to why bother, the answer is in the chase and the catch, not the eating. The allure is that bonefish must be stalked and then wrestled aboard the boat. Let 80-year-old "Bonefish" Sammy Ellis explain:

"The bone, he is a sneaky fish — and fast, fast, fast.... When you hook it, and bring your rod up, he's already gone 100 yards. People don't believe their eyes."

In his prime, before his eyesight dimmed, this legendary fishing guide swears he could track the elusive fish by reading the delicate mouth-prints they left in the sand as they rooted for food beneath the clear, shallow waters of the Bimini flats.

"Bonefishing comes through experience," Ellis says.

So he's skeptical about the effort to teach social skills. "You can have all the skills in the world," he says, "but experience is the only teacher when it comes to bonefish."

The fish earned its many nicknames — "gray ghost of the flats" is popular — because of its ability to blend in with its surroundings. Seasoned bonefishermen don't look for the fish itself; they look for its shadow.

There are few greater challenges in the world of fly-fishing — historically an upper-crust, leisure-time sport whose soaring popularity in recent years has filtered down to the fishing mainstream.

Bonefish (Albula vulpes) are a booming industry here, and also an easily sustainable, eco-friendly one; sport anglers usually release the caught fish, which generally weigh 2 to 14 pounds.

"The number of bonefishing lodges has certainly mushroomed," says Benjamin Pratt, the bonefishing expert at the Ministry of Tourism. He doesn't have numbers, but "It's certainly become a multimillion dollar business here in the Bahamas."

In response to the growth, and the complaints about uncooperative or incompetent guides, the government last year formed the National Fly fishing Council to set minimum standards for the country's 100 or so professionals. They flew in top fly casters from the United States to give casting lessons, and also taught the basics of outboard engine repair and first aid.

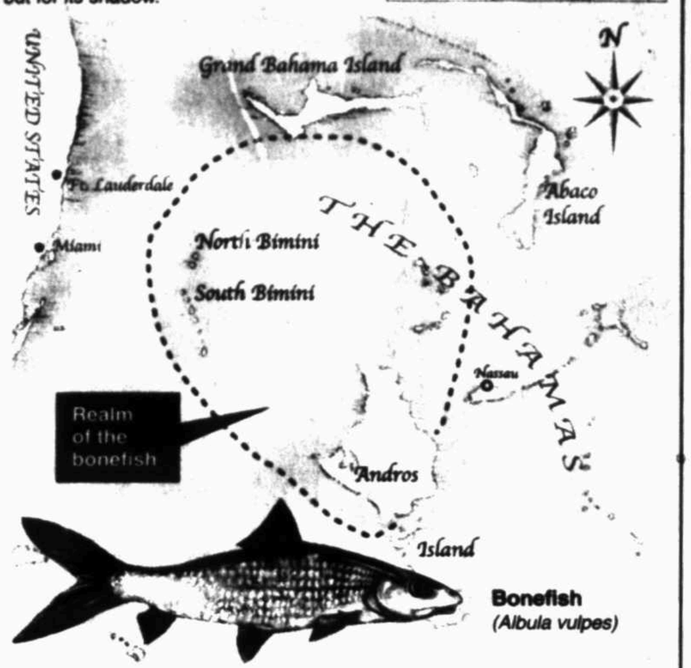

Twenty-three guides have been certified under the program in recent months.

Most guides, particularly older ones, "are traditionally commercial fishermen and haven't yet learned how to deal with human beings," Pratt explains. "We're hoping to get them to understand the importance of customer relations."

Chasing the Bahamas' gray ghost

Bonefish are not for eating but for catching! In the Bahamas, they're a booming industry drawing anglers from all over the world to face the challenge of catching these sneaky, and very fast fish. Because of the fish's ability to blend in with its surroundings, it has earned the nickname "gray ghost of the flats." Experienced anglers look not for the fish but for its shadow.

Wm. J. Castello/AP

In an area of Andros known as the "Promised Land," program graduate Joel Moxey is doing his best. Manning a shallow-draft skiff, he points out bonefish to a client and rolls out a steady stream of quiet, friendly advice: what to look for, where to cast, how to set the hook.

A school of nervous bonefish moves in. One, a medium-sized fish, swims over slowly to inspect the bait, a fly tipped with fresh conch. There is a light tug on the line — tentative at first — and then the hook is set.

The water seems to explode where the fish took the bait. Line screams off the reel. The rod bows almost double. The bonefish, maddened by the sting of the hook, slashes through the water like a miniature freight train, careening this way and that, trying to tear out the hook.

The rest of the school, 50-strong and alarmed by the action, shoots wildly past the boat like underwater bullets.

After a furious fight, the fish is brought to the boat, and Moxey holds it gently up to the sun, the light catching the silver in its sides.

He releases it and the fish, with a flick of its tail, is gone in an instant.

"Phenomenal," marvels Moxey. "Their speed is just phenomenal."

Colombian paramilitary boss kidnaps lawmakers to pressure peace talks

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A notorious right-wing paramilitary leader said Wednesday that he was holding seven lawmakers hostage and would release them only if the government gets tougher in peace talks with leftist guerrillas.

"Kidnapping is a way of telling the president that we're not willing to tolerate his misguided way of negotiating," Carlos Castano, head of the United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia, told the RCN radio station.

"Nobody doubts in the slightest that the FARC is laughing at the president and Colombia," Castano said, referring to the country's largest guerrilla army, the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, by its Spanish acronym.

Government officials said they would not bow to pressure, and Colombia's congress declared an indefinite recess to protest kidnappings by all sides in the South American country's 36-year conflict.

The United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia was widely suspected in the abductions, carried out during the past two weeks in several regions. But Castano had not publicly acknowledged his role or explained the reason for the kidnappings.

In the RCN interview, Castano said he was particularly upset by indications that President Andres Pastrana is considering a rebel proposal to swap some 500 police and soldiers the guerrillas hold hostage for roughly 400 guerrillas held in government jails.

The proposal is on the table in peace talks with the FARC. Critics warn such a deal would dangerously strengthen the rebels.

Castano said he would accept a "prisoner swap" only if the guerrillas also release all the civilians they hold hostage in ransom kidnappings — by some estimates as many as 1,500. Kidnapping is a major source of rebel financing.

Another rebel group, the National Liberation Army, or ELN, on Wednesday released the last 17 hostages who had remained in captivity after more than 50 people were abducted in September near Cali, Colombia's third-largest city.

The lawmakers — one from a state assembly and six from the national legislature, including a former senate president, Miguel Pinedo — were being held in humane conditions, Castano said, but whether they are freed would depend on how the proposed prisoner swap is handled.

Castano's 6,000-strong militias are backed by landowners, drug traffickers and elements within the military in their scorched-earth war against the guerrillas and suspected leftist sympathizers. Human rights groups hold them responsible for widespread massacres.

Yugoslavia admitted to U.N., hailed for democratic change

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Yugoslavia's new democratic government joined the United Nations on Wednesday, opening a new chapter in Belgrade's relations with the international community after eight years of U.N. ostracism under former strongman Slobodan Milosevic.

By acclamation and with a loud round of applause, the 189-member General Assembly overwhelmingly approved Yugoslavia's application for U.N. membership and hailed Belgrade's democratic transition and the newly elected president, Vojislav Kostunica.

"This indeed is a historic day for the United Nations, and for the Balkans — for all of Europe, indeed for all of the world," said U.S. Ambassador Richard Holbrooke. "We welcome Yugoslavia as the United Nations' newest member."

After General Assembly President Harri Holkeri proclaimed the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia admitted, the Yugoslav delegation was led to its seats in the General Assembly hall where a "Yugoslavia" nameplate was placed in front of the members.

Once the meeting adjourned, ambassadors gathered outside U.N. headquarters to watch as the red, white and blue flag of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was lowered for the last time and the flag of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia — identical but without a big red star in the middle — was raised.

"With legitimate pride, the Yugoslav people are going to take their rightful place in the concert of nations," French Ambassador Jean-David Levitte told the assembly, speaking on behalf of the European Union.

"Also this evening, an important step will be taken towards reconciliation, stability and peace in a region that has been marked by so many trials."

Under Milosevic, Yugoslavia had refused to comply with the General Assembly's 1992 demand that it apply for U.N. admission as a new country following the breakup of the Yugoslav socialist republic in the early 1990s.

Milosevic had argued that his government was the legitimate successor state and didn't need to apply. As a result, Yugoslavia was barred from speaking or voting in the General Assembly, although it remained a U.N. member and the communist-era flag flew at U.N. headquarters.

But last Friday, a month after ousting Milosevic in elections, Kostunica requested the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia be admitted. His application moved quickly through the U.N. bureaucracy, with the Security Council recommending Tuesday that the General Assembly approve it.

All four former Yugoslav republics of Bosnia, Croatia, Macedonia and Slovenia, which are now independent states and U.N. members, co-sponsored the assembly resolution, which was adopted without a vote.

Several of them, led by Croatian Ambassador Ivan Simonovic, reminded Yugoslavia in speeches to the assembly that U.N. membership obliges Yugoslavia to cooperate with the U.N. war crimes tribunal, which has indicted Milosevic and other senior officials.

"It is by accepting responsibility for the events of the past that sound foundations can be laid for the future," Simonovic said.

Kostunica's envoy, Goran Svilanovic, who is a top candidate to be Yugoslavia's next foreign minister, didn't refer to the issue of the war crimes indictments in his speech to the assembly.

But he offered his assurances that Yugoslavia "will be a trustful neighbor and a conscientious member of the international community and will invest its best efforts to promote peace and stability in the region as well as worldwide."

Kostunica, a Serb nationalist, has avoided any commitment to send the former president to The Hague to stand trial.

The admission of Yugoslavia, which now comprises the republics of Serbia and Montenegro, moved ahead despite calls from Montenegro's pro-Western leadership to hold off on the decision until relations between the constituent republics are resolved.

Beatles to launch Web site that will feature songs and films

LONDON (AP) — The Beatles plan to launch their first official Web site, complete with films and archive material.

The site will contain material contributed by Paul McCartney, George Harrison, Ringo Starr and John Lennon's widow, Yoko Ono, EMI Records said Wednesday.

It will launch on Nov. 13 to coincide with EMI's release of a new collection of The Beatles' biggest hits called "1." The site is based on the 27 tracks on the 79-minute compact disc, each of which has topped the charts in Britain or the United States.

The site also will feature 24 promotional films, single sleeves from around the world and charts from the Beatles' heyday in the early 1960s.

LONDON — First Stephen King, now Frederick Forsyth.

The best-selling author is publishing a series of short stories exclusively on the Internet. Five stories, published by Online Originals, will be available to download for $2.99 each.

"I'm really just a techno peasant at heart but I like the idea that for just the price of a sandwich anyone, anywhere could sit down and read a story that I might have only just completed," said the author of "The Day of the Jackal" and "The Odessa File."

The first story, "The Veteran," is a tale of violent crime committed in London. It was available starting Wednesday. The other stories in the collection, titled "Quintet," will follow in approximately three-week intervals.

Forsyth has sold more than 60 million books worldwide.

King became the first famous writer to publish exclusively on the Internet when he released the first installment of his tale, "The Plant," in July.

LONDON — It was the first double dubbing of modern times.

Queen Elizabeth II on Tuesday knighted millionaire twins Sir David and Sir Frederick Barclay.

"I don't think it's happened before in recent history and I don't think it's going to happen again in a long time," Sir David said. "For us, it's a wonderful day."

The Barclay brothers, 66, have built an eclectic business empire and amassed vast personal fortunes. Among other assets, they own London's Ritz hotel and The Scotsman, Scotland on Sunday and Sunday Business newspapers.

ATLANTA — Elton John's extensive photography collection is going on display.

The British-born pop star's 380 photographs from his private collection from his homes in Atlanta, France and England will be at the High Museum of Art in Atlanta beginning Saturday.

"I never get fed up with looking at images," John said Tuesday. "I can honestly say that of all the thing's I've collected in my life, nothing has endeared me more than collecting photography."

The exhibition, which primarily comprises vintage 20th century black-and-white photographs, emphasizes portraits, fashion and floral subjects.

John said his collection — more than 2,500 prints — depicts different stages of his life, including a battle with drugs.

One of the prints exhibited is a portrait of John by Chuck Close.

"I wanted it to be as honest as possible," John said. "It's me in the flesh. There's no touching up."

NEW YORK — Ring Lardner Jr., the last surviving member of the Hollywood Ten, a group of screenwriters who were jailed and blacklisted during the McCarthy era in the 1950s, has died. He was 85.

Lardner, whose father was the humorist and baseball writer, died of cancer Tuesday at his home in New York City.

Lardner was a Communist but held that his political views were none of the government's business.

Lardner, with Michael Kanin, won an Oscar for best original screenplay in 1942 for "Woman of the Year," starring Katharine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy. In 1970, he won an Oscar for best screenplay based on another medium for the movie "M*A*S*H," which was based on a Richard Hooker novel.

From 1947 to the 1960s, Lardner had a hard time finding work because he was blacklisted along with the other members of the Hollywood Ten, who included Alvert Maltz, Dalton Trumbo, Samuel Ornitz, John Howard Lawson, Herbert Biberman, Robert Adrian Scott, Lester Cole, Alvah Bessie and Edward Dmytryk. Of the 10, only Dmytryk finally named names.

Lardner served about nine months in prison in the 1950s, then worked in Mexico, New York and London writing TV series. He employed various pen names.

Lardner, who was born in Chicago and grew up in Greenwich, Conn., and Great Neck, is survived by his wife, Frances Chaney, three sons, two daughters, seven grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Thursday, Nov. 2, 2000:

Make the most of opportunities. Learn the art of discussion and learn to help move a partner from his position. Friendship plays a strong role in your decisions. You might opt to work for a cause. As you do this, you meet new people and broaden your horizons. If single, a relationship could build through a friendship, or vice versa. Networking opens the door to new friends. If attached, work together as a team to create something you both want. CAPRICORN understands you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ Build on existing premises and remain direct with another. Deal with finances head-on. Taking charge suits you. You need to know the facts, especially about money. Listen to another as well. Tonight: A must appearance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ You might be unduly serious. Make calls and seek out new information. If facts seem off, do your best to figure out what is wrong. Listen to another's insights, especially if this person is in a position to know more than you. Do nothing halfway. Command your own ship. Tonight: Take in a movie.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ Work with another. Do all you can to avoid depression or being overly serious. Keep to facts and get down to the basics of what appears to be a problem. A discussion with someone in the know takes you in a different direction. Work on a joint investment or project. Tonight: Streamline a problem to basics.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★★ Defer to another only if this is what you want. Emphasize long-term goals with others. You have a stronger power base than you realize. Someone's whimsical behavior helps him understand where you are coming from. Make necessary demands. Tonight: Just donbe alone.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Though you are a sign that believes in fun and good times, work dominates the scene around you. Listen carefully to another's suggestions. Enlist the cooperation of associates. High drive and diligent work make you a winner with money. Go for what you think is key. Tonight: Burn the midnight oil.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Your vitality makes a difference to another. Do not underestimate your abilities or your creativity. When you want something, you make it so. Make calls. Harness your mind and find solutions. Consider signing up for that seminar or workshop. Tonight: Start thinking "weekend."

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★½ Another's efforts could be touching, but the problem remains that this person is pulling hard to get something. Use your insight and strong direction. Don't hesitate to switch gears if you feel that it will add to your security. Take time for an associate. Tonight: Togetherness counts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Another proves to be difficult. You might not be able to convince this person that you are on the right path. Set an example, and maybe he will respond. In a meeting, reach out for those around you. What you say counts. Others listen. Popularity grows. Tonight: At your favorite haunt.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Your drive pushes you beyond your normal limits. If you want, you could accomplish more than you need to, perhaps setting up tomorrow as an "empty" day. The world's top-ranked player is Bob Hamman of Dallas, Texas. See how carefully he handled this spade game to bring home a contract at which most of the other declarers failed.

With a better than minimum opening bid, there was no reason for North to raise spades immediately with only three-card support. The delayed raise implied extra values and, when Hamman showed a distributional hand by rebidding hearts, North judged the hand to be worth a shot at game.

The opening heart lead was won with the ace, and a low club was returned, declarer's king losing to the ace. The club return was covered with the nine and queen and ruffed in the closed hand. A trump was led to the king and ace, the queen of spades was cashed and, when the lie of the trumps became apparent, Hamman countered beautifully — a high club was led and a diamond was discarded from the South hand!

The ace of diamonds was cashed and a diamond was ruffed in the closed hand, followed by a low heart trumped with the table's last trump. Now East was down to the J-9 of trumps and Q-10 of diamonds, while declarer held the 10 of spades and K-Q-J of hearts and dummy held the K-J-9 of diamonds and a high club.

Hamman led dummy's club and East was a dead duck. If the defender ruffed low, Hamman would overruff and play good hearts until East ruffed. East would then have to return a diamond into dummy's tenace. If East ruffed high, a trump return would allow declarer to take the remaining tricks in hand, while a diamond exit gives South two tricks in that suit and the 10 of spades is the fulfilling trick at the end. And if East discards, declarer simply cashes the king of diamonds and scores his remaining trump en passant.

Football squad comes Sunday

The Reporter-Telegram will unveil Midland's Best Ever football team, a squad put together from the top players in the city's history.

Red Raider senior receiver turns into master of short touchdown receptions

By Stephen Hawkins
AP Sports Writer

Big yardage isn't a necessity for Texas Tech receiver Derek Dorris to be productive. He's at his best when the field shrinks.

While Dorris had five catches for just 33 yards last weekend, he set a school record with four TD receptions (5, 2, 11 and 12 yards) as the Red Raiders beat Kansas 45-39. When he had nine catches for 124 yards a week earlier against Baylor, his only score was on a 1-yard play.

He's proving wrong that old football adage that it's harder to score a touchdown from inside the 20, where the action is more compacted.

"No, it really isn't. If you get off the line decent, it's whoever wants the ball more," Dorris said Wednesday. "We don't march down the field to kick a field goal. We want to score and our offense is capable of doing that."

Dorris has eight TD catches, averaging 7.4 yards per score with the longest being 14 yards. He has averaged 11.4 yards on the rest of his 31 catches this season.

He insists that his scoring barrage was a matter of consequence.

"It's the called plays and the plays happen to be open," Dorris said. "We've just had man coverage out there and are calling the routes."

One of the best routes for Dorris is the fade pass from sophomore quarterback Kliff Kingsbury. Dorris' "long" TD catches last Saturday, the 11- and 12-yarders, came on fade routes.

Kingsbury and Dorris have developed quite a connection as they continue to evolve in the pass-happy offense brought to Tech this season by new coach Mike Leach.

"When we need that big play, I can throw it up and let him go do his thing. He's a huge target for us," Kingsbury said. "It's just one of those deals. I have confidence in him that where I put the ball, he'll go get it. And he knows I can make the throws."

If done right, the fade route almost can't be defended, even when it is expected by defenders.

"One of the common rules is that if you throw it right, it's almost indefensible," Kingsbury said. "I haven't always made the greatest throws, but he sheds defenders and goes and gets the football."

In the past four games, Dorris — a 6-foot-2, 200-pound senior — has 27 catches for 273 yards and six TDs.

He is still playing with a separated left shoulder suffered in the opener. And he overcame a slight setback after coming out early against Louisiana-Lafayette on Sept. 16 when someone rolled over his leg while he was blocking for Kingsbury. That was the only game he didn't have a catch.

Steering toward perfection

Snyder offers tough test for 4-4A's leader

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

If the Big Spring football team wanted to, it could take some time to bask in the glow of some much deserved attention, and this would be the perfect week to do so.

After all, the Steers have already sewn up a playoff berth in the rugged District 4-4A with two weeks still to go in the regular season. With a 5-0 district mark alone atop the district, Big Spring has plenty to celebrate, and it knows it will be playing beyond the second weekend in November.

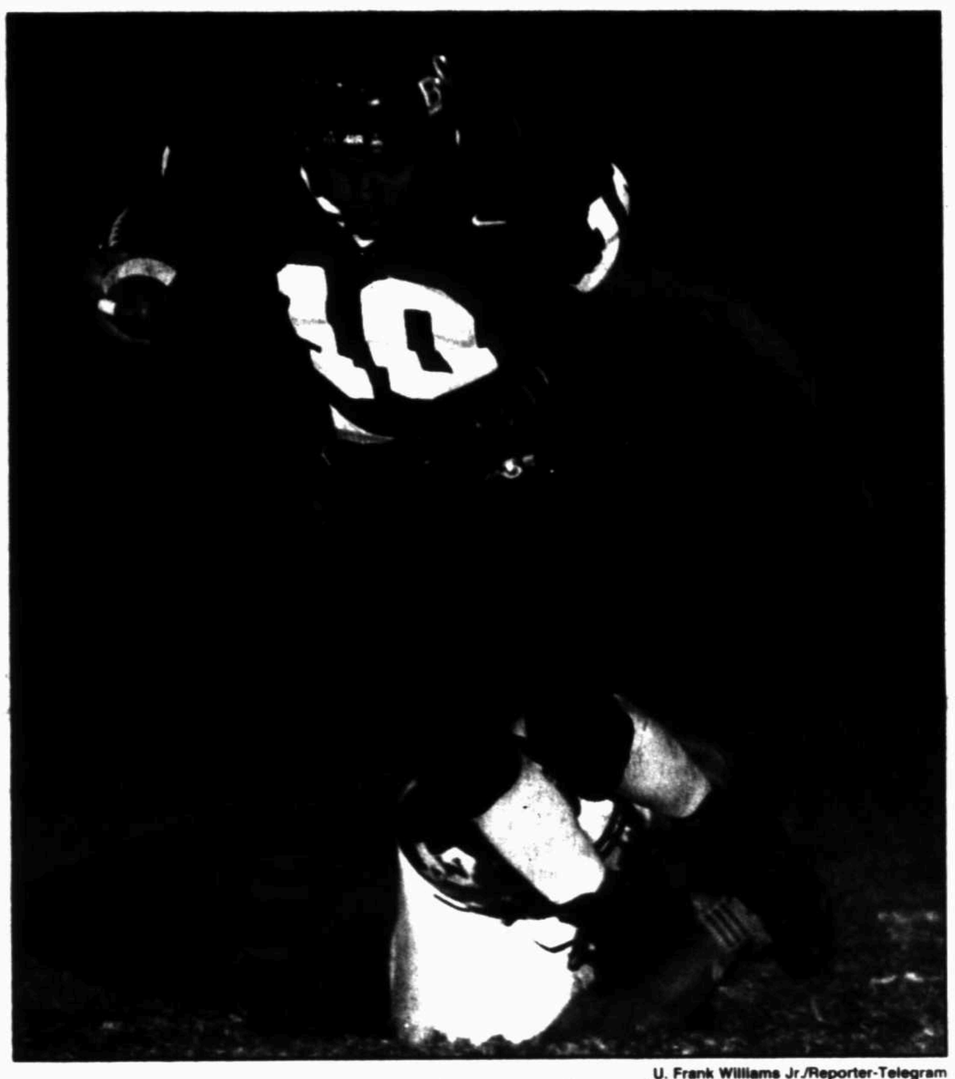

"That's about as good as you can get," said Dwight Butler of his team's situation. "We've at least taken care of that part of the season."

As would befit such a rugged district, though, the toughest part for the Steers isn't behind them. On paper, Friday's game at Snyder at 7:30 p.m. might appear to be little more than a warm-up for what could be a titanic battle with Wolfforth Frenship for the district title a week later.

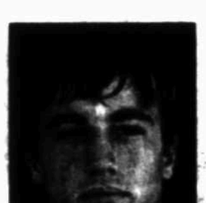

That makes this week's game more than a little dangerous for the Steers (6-2 overall). With a 2-3 district mark, Snyder is only mathematically alive for the playoffs, but if both Frenship and Andrews win, the Tigers can start thinking about next year.

Nonetheless, Butler doesn't see Snyder as

Mustangs go after 3rd straight title

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

The Midland Christian Mustangs will be going after their third straight district title when they travel to Fort Worth Christian at 8 p.m. Friday.

The Mustangs (7-2 overall, 2-0 in TAPPS District 1-4A) put themselves in the position to take the realigned district by winning a wild 39-28 affair against Denton Liberty Christian last Friday. Midland Christian trailed 28-27 with 1:17 left in the game but managed to recover a fumble, and the Mustangs got a 5-yard touchdown run by Josh Gunter and added a 25-yard TD insurance pass from Jamie Beeghley to Chase Feeler for positive points sake. With the win, the Mustangs also ended Denton Liberty's run of 14 consecutive district championships.

It doesn't get much easier for the Mustangs when they face a Cardinals team with a lot of size. The Fort Worth Christian offensive line averages 280 pounds per man. Its leader is 6-foot-4, 280-pound guard Cole Smith, who recently committed to Texas A&M, which should be no surprise because his brother, Vance Smith, is the backup quarterback for the Aggies.

"Their offensive line is bigger than most colleges' offensive line," said Midland Christian coach Greg McClendon. "The only thing I question is their speed."

With a big offensive line, the Cardinals (5-4, 1-1) like to just hand off to their 5-10, 230-pound fullback Cody Kiser and let him make things happen.

A key for the Mustangs will be to counter the Cardinals' size with some speed.

"We have to use our quickness," McClendon said. "With that size, there usually comes a lack of speed. I think it'll be crucial to out-quick them."

Lady Bearkats strive for spot at state meet

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

GARDEN CITY — The Garden City girls have been one of the pleasant surprises around the region cross country scene this season.

Saturday at the Region I-A cross country meet in Lubbock, they would like to replace "pleasant surprise" with "state qualifier."

The top three teams from the region meet, which will be held at Mae Simmons Park, advance to the state meet, and after defeating Iraan to win its district title, Garden City is major player for one of those three spots.

"We are getting to the point where the top girls are running in a group. That places them all high and keeps scores low," Garden City coach Shana Kirkland said.

And in cross country, keeping the score low is the whole point. The first place runner earns one point for her team, second gets two and so on.

At the district meet, Garden City finished first, third, fifth, sixth and 17th. That translated into 32 points. Iraan finished with 49.

This season, Garden City has exchanged wins with Iraan and owns a win over another region contender, Nazareth. That came on the same Mae Simmons course in Lubbock, where the region meet will be run. Kirkland also says that Petersburg will among the teams to watch.

Randall readies for Philly return

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — The last time Randall Cunningham played at Veterans Stadium, he received a standing ovation. Really.

Philadelphia fans weren't always so kind to Cunningham during his 11 seasons with the Eagles, but their fond farewell is what he remembers as he prepares to return Sunday for the first time since 1995.

"I'm kind of enthusiastic about it," Cunningham said Wednesday. "I've spent most of my life as an adult there, and I've got a lot of great memories.

"I'd like to be cheered, but if I'm not, I'm not going to be upset about it. There's not a lot of guys on the Philadelphia Eagles that I played with, which is going to make it a lot different for me."

The biggest difference is that Cunningham will be playing for the Dallas Cowboys, which automatically makes him the enemy. Remember, the last time Dallas played at the Vet, Philly fans cheered what ended up being a career-ending injury to Michael Irvin. Cunningham delicately described those fans as having "just a lot of enthusiasm."

Cunningham could feel that enthusiasm targeted against him from the start. On Wednesday, he took a step closer to being the starting quarterback as continued back pain

Beeghley stands out with three TD tosses in MCHS' win

In order to win some of the biggest games, it helps to have some key players rise to the occasion.

Last Friday, in a game which had both postseason and district title ramifications, the Midland Christian Mustangs escaped from the grips of defeat and ran away with a 39-28 win over Denton Liberty Christian, a powerhouse in TAPPS Class 4A football for several years.

LeRoy

In that game, Midland Christian's biggest stars stepped up to the challenge. First, there was running back Josh Gunter, who rushed for 133 yards and two touchdowns. T.J. Midkiff continued his solid blocking from his fullback spot and also totaled 12 tackles from his linebacker position. Chase Feeler also shined bright Friday night with 160 yards receiving on five receptions and three TDs. But probably the biggest key player, who rise to the occasion, was junior quarterback Jamie Beeghley, who was 12-of-22 passing for 197 yards and three TDs to go along with his 98 yards rushing.

Beeghley's individual performance in a great Mustangs' team performance earned him Reporter-Telegram's Area Player of the Week.

"He came out and was pretty souped up against Denton Liberty," said Beeghley's head coach Greg McClendon. "He made some mistakes in the first half, but what I'm most proud of is that he settled down. He was 8-of-10 passing for 135 yards in the second half."

Beeghley's talent as a quarterback has never been questioned. It just may be his leadership skills are more important in helping the Mustangs win.

"He has great leadership ability. Our kids really respond being along side him," McClendon said. "Probably his biggest strength is his composure. He's calm, cool and seldom will you ever see him lose his composure."

The 6-foot-2, 190-pound Beeghley has started all three years for the Mustangs. In those three years, he has completed 55 percent of his passes for 3,725 yards and has a 2-to-1 touchdown-to-interception ratio. He has also rushed for 1,200 yards during his three-year career.

"I've been a little spoiled to have the same quarterback for the past three years," McClendon said. "He's a kid that's grown up in the system and that's been awfully nice to have."

It sure is nice to have guys like Beeghley, Gunter, Feeler and Midkiff when you're goals are set high like those of the Mustangs who have their sights set on a TAPPS state championship.

Other notable performances from last week:

Trinity received a boost with the return of fullback Nathan Pirtle from an foot injury. The senior rushed for 155 yards and scored four touchdowns in the Chargers' 48-7 win over Lubbock Christian, which clinched the TAPPS District 1-3A title. Quarterback Matt Midkiff and tight end Dustin Truitt also combined for a pair of scoring passes.

Andrews' Jamie Bueno turned in another fantastic performance to help his Mustangs trounce Plainview, 42-19. Bueno had 123 yards on 20 carries and a 70-yard touchdown run.

On the defensive side of the ball, Andrews' Brady Haygood had an interception and a fumble recovery.

Big Spring pounced on Lubbock Estacado, 41-7, and the Steers' Jason Woodruff had plenty to say in that game with 124 yards rushing on 16 carries and two TDs. Teammate Bowe Butler again was a force on defense with 16 tackles from his linebacker spot.

Stanton cruised to a 34-6 win over Coahoma, and the usual suspects for the Buffaloes had a pair of big games. Running back Jeremy Hull rushed for 133 yards and three touchdowns, while backfield teammate Clay White ran for another 77 yards and two scores.

Garden City's defense continues to shine and in last week's 21-7 win over Robert Lee, Erik Halffman had 11 tackles to go with his two interceptions and a sack, Anthony Wheat tallied 11 tackles and two sacks, and Kyle Kight also chipped in with 11 tackles.

White Sox' Manuel receives AP's top manager selection

By Nancy Armour
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO — Jerry Manuel, who led a young Chicago White Sox squad to the best record in the AL, was voted The Associated Press Manager of the Year on Wednesday.

Manuel, in just his third year as a major league manager, received 27 votes in nationwide balloting by writers and broadcasters. Dusty Baker, who led the San Francisco Giants to the best record in baseball, was second with 23.

"It's quite an honor, being in the big leagues in the position of manager for three years," Manuel said. "I think it says a lot about the staff I work with, the organization I work with and, obviously, the response of the players throughout the season.

"I just happened to be in place at the right time."

Art Howe, who led the Oakland A's to the AL West crown despite a payroll of just $32.7 million, was third with 21 votes, followed by Seattle's Lou Piniella and the Mets' Bobby Valentine (13 each).

St. Louis' Tony LaRussa was sixth with four votes. Joe Torre, who led the New York Yankees to their fourth World Series championship in five years, was seventh with two votes. Atlanta's Bobby Cox got one vote.

Despite a payroll of $37 million and a team that featured 18 first- or second-year players, the White Sox won 95 games and coasted to the AL Central title.

They made the playoffs for the first time since 1993, though they were swept by Piniella's Mariners in the first round.

"I enjoyed the season, but I think my main thing was to remain focused," Manuel said. "I knew there was still work to be done, so I don't know if I had a great deal of fun because right after the last out of a game you were thinking about the next game."

While no one outside the team gave the White Sox much of a chance this year, Manuel said he had a feeling in spring training the team could be something special.

"It appeared to me that we had a chance to compete if a lot of things went right for us," he said. "And, obviously, a lot of things went right for us to finish where we were."

A much-publicized blowup with Manuel during spring training re-energized Frank Thomas, and the White Sox got off to a strong start. They won 17 of their 25 games in April — despite an ugly brawl with Detroit that resulted in several suspensions. They took the AL Central lead on April 19, and Cleveland never caught up.

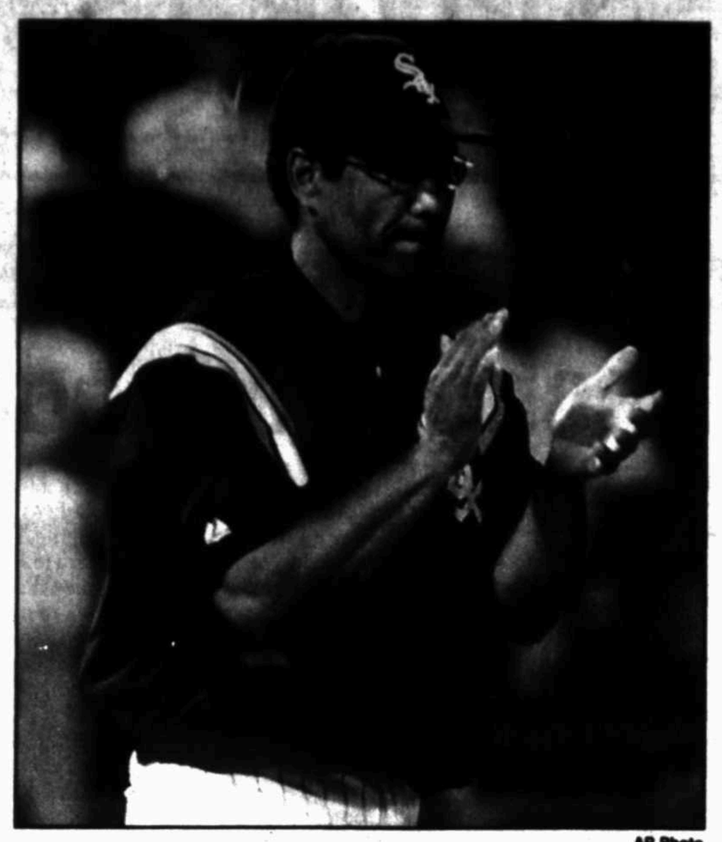

By June 2, the White Sox had the best record in the AL. And for all those who doubted the White Sox, they proved they could beat the best teams when they went 7-0 on a road trip to Cleveland and New York.

When the White Sox took the field for the first game after that road trip, a sellout crowd of 43,062 gave them a standing ovation.

"Going into Yankee Stadium and sweeping the Yankees after sweeping Cleveland, those back-to-back series were probably the most enjoyable series," Manuel said. "... They were fun to look back on. That was a good time."

While managing his young and oft-injured pitching rotation was his biggest challenge, one of Manuel's greatest joys was watching Thomas' rejuvenation. Thomas had been in a two-year slump, and Manuel had never had a chance to see the player who was a two-time MVP and earned the nickname "Big Hurt."

But Thomas was his old self this season, hitting .328 with 43 homers and 143 RBIs. He also emerged as a team leader, joking with his younger teammates and finally looking as if he was enjoying baseball again.

Cubs' announcer retires after 18 years

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Chicago Cubs announcer Steve Stone said Wednesday he will retire after 18 years with WGN-TV.

Stone, 53, the station's color commentator, said in a statement issued by WGN that he has "a tremendous desire to work with young athletes."

"In the past, I have worked with baseball players, as well as athletes from other sports, on their competition skills," he said. "I found that to be very rewarding."

Bob Vorwald, executive producer of WGN Sports, said Stone wants to be a "competition consultant" to either individual athletes or a pitching tutor for a team.

"It's pretty wide open," Vorwald said.

"While we are sorry to see him go, we are happy that he is pursuing his dream," WGN station manager Bob Ramsey said. "We wish him nothing but the best."

Stone, a former Cubs and White Sox pitcher, won the 1980 AL Cy Young Award while pitching for the Baltimore Orioles. He retired from baseball in 1982, then joined WGN the next year.

Stone did not broadcast the last six weeks of the season, taking an definite leave of absence in August for health reasons, including fighting a viral infection and kidney-stone removal.

Baseball Notes

Japan's top hitter available to play in the majors

TOKYO — Ichiro Suzuki, the 27-year-old Japanese outfielder who hit .387 this year for his seventh straight Pacific League batting title, is available to major league teams.

The Orix BlueWave informed the Japanese commissioner Wednesday that it has made Suzuki available for bids from major league teams.

Major league teams have four business days to submit bids. The commissioner's office will pick the highest bidder, and the Japanese team will accept or reject the offer.

Suzuki had 153 hits, 12 home runs and 73 RBIs this year. In his nine-year career, Suzuki has a .353 average with 1,278 hits, 118 home runs and 529 RBIs.

Speier joins old friend Brenly with Diamondbacks

PHOENIX — Chris Speier was hired as third-base coach of the Arizona Diamondbacks by new manager Bob Brenly on Wednesday.

Speier, a minor league manager in the Diamondbacks' system for four seasons, was the first coach hired by Brenly, who joined Arizona on Monday. They are former teammates.

Red Sox exercise $1.66 million option on Pichardo

BOSTON — Reliever Hipolito Pichardo's $1.66 million option for 2001 was exercised Wednesday by the Boston Red Sox.

Pichardo, a 31-year-old right-hander, was 6-3 with one save and a 3.46 ERA in one start and 37 relief appearances this season, striking out 37 and walking 26 in 65 innings.

Blue Jays re-sign Fletcher and Todd Greene

TORONTO — Catcher Darrin Fletcher agreed Wednesday to a $7.75 million, two-year contract with the Toronto Blue Jays, who also agreed to a $475,000, one-year deal with outfielder Todd Greene.

Fletcher, who was eligible for free agency, gets a $450,000 signing bonus and salaries of $3.3 million in 2001 and $3.6 million in 2001. Toronto has a $4 million option for 2003 with a $400,000 buyout.

Fletcher, 34, set career highs last season with a .320 batting average and 20 home runs. He also 58 RBIs in 122 games while leading American League catchers with a .994 fielding percentage.

Greene, 29, hit .235 for Toronto last season with five home runs and 10 RBIs in 34 games. He was first signed by Toronto on April 10; Anaheim released him on March 29.

Ripken, Orioles agree to one-year deal

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Cal Ripken and the Orioles agreed Wednesday to a $6.3 million, one-year contract that virtually ensures he will end his playing career in Baltimore.

Ripken, 40, also received $6.3 million this year in the final season of his recently expired contract.

"Obviously, I am very pleased to have the contract completed," Ripken said. "I always have been an Oriole and I always want to be an Oriole. My back feels great and I'm looking forward to having the opportunity to compete."

The two-time American League MVP and 18-time All-Star had discussed with the team whether to include an option year for 2002 in the new contract. Untimately, the sides decided to take it one year at a time.

Ripken, who holds the major league record for most consecutive games played at 2,632, has spent his entire career in Baltimore.

He he was limited to 86 games in 1999 because of lower back pain and missed two months this season for the same reason.

When he's played, he's been effective. Ripken hit .340 with 18 homers and 57 RBIs in 1999, and last year he hit .282 with two homers and 12 RBIs in September after returning from a lengthy stint on the disabled list.

Ripken made the decision to return for a 21st season after a September in which he played well and without pain. If his back bothered him during that time, he would have probably called it a career.

BOYS: Cunningham has been hot, cold for Dallas kept Troy Aikman out of practice.

(From 1C)

Cunningham took the majority of snaps will get at least half Thursday, even if Aikman returns.

"Troy is a tough guy, so don't count him out," coach Dave Campo said. "I feel he's capable of going out Friday and taking care of business Sunday."

Cunningham played against the Eagles for the first time in the opener after Aikman suffered a concussion. He started the next two games, went 1-1, then returned to the bench until playing three quarters in a 23-17 overtime loss to Jacksonville on Sunday.

Dallas fans already have gone hot-and-cold with him. They wanted him to keep starting when Aikman was ready to play again, then started longing for Aikman when Cunningham committed two turnovers in the second quarter Sunday.

Cunningham arrived in Philadelphia in 1985 as a second-round pick. With a strong arm and fast feet, he became a fan favorite, but he also frustrated fans and coaches with his willingness to run and many of his passing decisions.

Things were great from '88-90 when the Eagles made the playoffs and Cunningham made the Pro Bowl each season. In '91, he blew out his left knee in the opener and was done for the year.

He returned in '92 and again led Philadelphia to the playoffs, only to have another injury cut short his '93 season. The one-time love affair between him and the city never recovered.

"For nine years, everything was really very, very good. My last two years got a little tougher," Cunningham said. "Whenever you're somewhere eight, nine, 10 years, you get kind of old there. People get used to your face, what you've got to say and a change of pace is sometimes good."

In his final season, Cunningham played just seven games as Rodney Peete won the starting job. Cunningham's contract was up, so fans knew he wouldn't be back in '96.

Coach Ray Rhodes let Cunningham bid adieu by sending him in to mop up a 58-37 playoff win over Detroit.

"I came off the bench and the fans gave me a standing ovation," Cunningham said. "I called a keeper and went for a first down. There was a scuffle and our guys stood up for me. The fans were pretty excited and I was thankful for it."

A few weeks ago, Cunningham remembered the end of his Eagles career with more anger.

"When I retired, I hated football," said Cunningham, who sat out the '96 season to start a marble, tile and granite business in Las Vegas. "It was because of persecution.

"Getting benched, coming back in the lineup, getting booed, still doing well but still getting booed — there was no answer to justify my situation. That was the hardest part.

"It wasn't that I was a weak person, it was just that I had put up with it for about a year and a half and I figured I was at the point of retirement."

Houston, Jacksonville, Detroit get Super Bowls

Associated Press

ATLANTA — The Super Bowl is headed to Houston, Jacksonville and Detroit.

NFL owners voted Wednesday to award the 2004 championship game to Houston, the 2005 game to Jacksonville, and the 2006 game to Detroit.

Neither Detroit nor Houston had opposition. Jacksonville, which had competition from Miami and Oakland, won its first Super Bowl in a tightly contested vote that went to four ballots.

Detroit's delegation was led by Mayor Dennis Archer and racing team owner Roger Penske.

Houston was represented by Mayor Lee Brown and Bob McNair, owner of the Texans expansion team that will begin play in 2002.

As part of his $700 million entry fee, McNair was promised a Super Bowl as soon as possible. It will come at the end of the Texans' second season at their new 69,500-seat retractable roof stadium, under construction next to the Astrodome.

Houston first played host to the Super Bowl in 1974 at Rice Stadium. The city had a bitter split with the NFL in 1996 when the Oilers left for Tennessee, but Wednesday's decision brought the reconciliation full circle.

Kamis earns ASC honors

Schreiner College soccer player Scott Kamis, a graduate of Midland High, was named the American Southwest Conference West Division Player of the Week last week.

Kamis, a senior, was a huge factor in Schreiner's 2-1 overtime win over St. Edward's last week. Kamis scored the game tying goal in the 86th minute, then assisted for the game winning score in overtime. He leads the team with eight assists this season, and is the school's alltime leader in assists.

Blast U-19 wins twice

The Midland Blast under-19 girls soccer team won twice in Dallas to clinch first place in Division II of the Lake Highlands Girls Classic League on Saturday.

Courtney Heineman scored the only goal against the Lightning while Amanda Davis, Heineman, Lindsey Johnson, Adrienne Monroe and Melissa each scored against Phoenix. Barbara Butts had three assists while Rachel Tuck and Raffi Belizaire had one apiece.

Defensively, Stephanie Byrd, Ashleigh O'Neil, Sarah Tinslar and goalie Catherine Wade led the Blast.

TECH: WR Dorris makes impression

(From 1C)

"One of the biggest milestones in his development is he's been healthy a couple of weeks in a row," Leach said. "That's helped him tremendously. He's maintained his continuity in practice and things he's just got better and better."

STEER: Andrews eyes playoffs

(From 1C)

a major underdog.

"I think we've got plenty left, but what worries us is Snyder," said Butler. "We think they're a much better team than their record. It's always a real physical game.

"We've got our hands full, there's no doubt."

Snyder (4-4) has been evenly matched with just about everybody this season, and despite its losing record in district, has outscored 4-4A opponents, 111-108. The Tigers are only a couple of plays from still being in the thick of the hunt. Their most wrenching loss in district was a 7-3 defensive struggle at Andrews.

Linebacker Mark Medley and end Jamaal Pruitt lead a strong defense, while speedy Matthew Grimmett is a standout both at receiver and defensive back. The Tigers figured to have enough talent to be one of last year's teams from District 5-4A (along with Andrews and Big Spring) making an impact on the northern teams in the district.

"I thought we might get to (the Tigers) when they were 4-1 or 5-0," said Butler. "They've kind of had some injury problems."

Right now, it's where Big Spring is that most the other district teams are shooting for. Last week's 41-7 win over Lubbock Estacado, which clinched a playoff spot, shows in a nutshell how the Steers got to where they are.

After surrendering an 80-yard scoring run only 20 seconds into the game, Big Spring's defense put on the clamps and the offense came to life. Jason Woodruff and Jaroe Parnell each ran for a pair of touchdowns to lead a rushing attack which piled up 295 yards.

"We would just like to improve on every part of our game," said Butler. "That's what we've been doing the last four weeks."

If Snyder breaks a big play for a score early, Steers faithful shouldn't push the panic button. The Steers also survived a 99-yard opening kickoff return for a touchdown and beat San Angelo Lake View, so game-breaking plays haven't broken their backs.

"I think they do that because they like to aggravate their coach," Butler said jokingly of his team's propensity to give up a big play early. "I think what it does show is the resiliency of the kids when something bad happens."

Andrews can clinch playoff spot

With a victory over Lake View Friday at 7:30 p.m. in the Mustang Bowl, Andrews would join Big Spring as the second team from last year's 5-4A to clinch a playoff spot in 4-4A. The Mustangs can also advance with a loss if Levelland, Estacado and Snyder all lose.

Andrews (5-3 overall, 4-1 in district) could be a big favorite over Lake View, which has won only once in eight tries this season and lost all five of its district games. But the Chiefs haven't made it easy on opponents.

Last week Lake View threw a scare into No. 9 Frenship before losing 22-20. The Chiefs, featuring David Lankford throwing to Demetrick Hallman, have a passing attack comparable to most teams in the area and are averaging over 26 points a game in district.

"The biggest thing is that they're 0-5, and they could very easily be 5-0," said Andrews coach Mike Lebby of Lake View. "Our kids have seen the film and know how dangerous they are."

The problem for the Chiefs is that they can't play their offense all the time. Lake View's defense is surrendering over 33 points a game in district. Defense, on the other hand, at times even produces points for Andrews.

In last week's 42-19 win over Plainview, the Mustangs scored half of their points with their defense, returning two fumbles and an interception for touchdowns.

"There's times when that doesn't happen over the course of the whole season," said Lebby. "We didn't make many adjustments on that side of the ball and just let things happen to make plays."

Andrews has given up only 86 points in district, only two more than Big Spring for lowest total allowed in 4-4A. Such dominance on that side of the ball isn't anything new for a Lebby-coached team.

Defense has been a big reason the Mustangs have often played beyond the regular season, and if they win Friday, it will mark their sixth consecutive trip to the playoffs.

"We're not going to change what we're doing," said Lebby. "We still need to improve in several areas, but we feel if we can do that we're going to play awhile."

Garden City faces crucial game

The first Friday in November over the last few years in Garden City hasn't carried much significance except to salvage some dignity from a sub-.500 season. But when the Bearkats host Roby Friday at 7:30 p.m., it will be the first November game in awhile which means something.

Garden City has made one of the more impressive turnarounds in the area this season, and with a 6-2 mark on the season, the Bearkats are already guaranteed a winning season. At 2-1 in District 9-A, they sit a game behind Roscoe and Rotan, who play each other on the same night.

First-year coach Wade Wesley likes what his team has accomplished so far, but doesn't want to get too happy.

"We are very pleased about the way our season has gone but we don't want to be complacent," said Wesley.

At 1-2 in 9-A, Roby is the only other team in the district with a shot at the postseason, and with a loss, the Lions are eliminated. Garden City's defense has been stellar all season, and faces the challenge of containing Roby's Lance Moore, one of the district's best running backs.

If Garden City rises to the challenge, it will face a major showdown with No. 6 Roscoe in the regular season finale which could determine a playoff spot. A lot depends on how the Roscoe-Rotan game plays out as to what Garden City has to do.

"We talk about that to (the players) and they're challenged by that," said Wesley of the prospects of making the playoffs. "This senior class wants to do something special like that. I feel like they have done an excellent job in providing leadership."

Greenwood's Brandon Smith runs the ball against the Stanton defense in non-district action played earlier this season. Smith and the rest of the Greenwood Rangers take on Brownfield this Friday.

MCHS: Greenwood, Stanton hit road

(From 1C)

With that speed, the Mustangs would like to limit the Cardinals' big play ability and force them into long yardage situations.

"(Fort Worth Christian) has a tendency to make mistakes on offense," McClendon said. "They like to just pound it at you. What we need to do is disrupt their offensive rhythm."

Considering that the Mustangs are playing in a tougher revamped district this year, the fact that they are in the running for a district championship has surprised many people.

"I think it's pretty safe to say that not many people in Midland and especially the Dallas area gave us much of shot to be playing for the district championship at this point of the season," McClendon said. "Our kids realize we've still got a lot of business to take care of, but these guys have been through some junkyard fights this year. When you talk about a tested group of young guys, these kids were tested every time."

The Mustangs have come a long way since a 35-14 loss to Seagraves earlier in the year put them at 1-2. Since then, Midland Christian got some key players healthy, turned its fortunes around and won six straight.

"Honestly, I thought this was the type of football we could play once we got healthy," McClendon said.

Considering everything the Mustangs have had to overcome this year, Fort Worth Christian's size shouldn't matter.

"We will definitely be out-sized in body but I don't think we will be out-sized with our hearts," McClendon said.

Playoffs scenarios: If Midland Christian wins, they will host the first round of the playoffs at 2 p.m. on Saturday, Nov. 11 against either Dallas First Baptist or Dallas Bishop Dunne. If Fort Worth Christian wins by more than four points then the Cardinals are the district champs and Midland Christian would have to travel to Dallas to play the 2 p.m. Saturday playoff game.

Rangers head to Brownfield to wrap up playoff spot

After a tough 34-17 loss to No. 2 Lamesa last week, Greenwood coach Bob Purser must convince his troops that it wasn't the end of the world. That's so considering that the Rangers (5-3 overall, 2-1 in District 3-3A) can wrap up a playoff spot with a win 7:30 p.m. Friday in Brownfield.

"Normally, it is tough to get up after a ballgame like that," said Purser, whose team led the Golden Tors, 17-6, at halftime. "But we started preaching to our players right after the game to forget about the loss and start thinking about Brownfield because a win there will put us in the playoffs."

Brownfield (3-5, 1-2) is coming off a convincing 35-0 victory over Seminole. Cubs quarterback Ty Sellars rushed for three touchdowns, while running back Jacob King added two more against the Indians. Sellars is what makes the Cubs click on offense as he is a threat to run on every play.

The Cubs struggled early in the season after playing a non-district schedule and getting adjusted to a new coach. Recently, however, the Cubs have started playing well and that concerns Purser.

"Brownfield has gotten better," Purser said. "They are now developing some confidence and we're real concerned whether or not we can handle their size."

It seems every opponent the Rangers have faced has been bigger. Brownfield is no different as their offensive line averages between 230-260 pounds per man. Greenwood's biggest lineman is Sam Skidmore at 270 pounds. The rest of the line is around 200 or smaller.

"There's no doubt that we're always going to be playing teams that are bigger than us," Purser said. "That is always a concern because you eventually start to wear down. Being small in stature kind of takes a toll in the long run."

Stanton travels to always tough Forsan

The Stanton Buffaloes needed a big win to get some confidence back and got it with a 34-6 trouncing of Coahoma last week.

In what has always been a good rivalry, the Buffaloes played with some intensity and some consistency — something they haven't always done according to head coach Mark Cotton — as they rolled 368 yards against the Bulldogs. Jeremy Hull continued to tear up opposing defenses with 133 yards and three touchdowns, while teammate Clay White pounded out 77 yards and two touchdowns.

"We needed that type of game," said Cotton. "It was good for us."

The Buffs (6-2 overall, 2-1 in District 3-2A) need that type of confidence when they head to Forsan (3-5, 0-3) for a 7:30 p.m. game Friday.

"Ever since I've been in Stanton, it's always been hard to win in Forsan," Cotton said. "Every time we've gone there, it's been a battle."

Forsan has led at the half in every district contest except during last week's 20-0 loss to Colorado City, which means that these Buffaloes are capable but haven't won the close ball games. Forsan will concentrate primarily on the running game, led by tailback Wes Longoria. The Buffaloes don't throw much but can be effective when they do.

From here on out, the Stanton Buffaloes are in a playoff mode of sorts another loss could jeopardize their chances for the postseason.

"If we lose this week, our playoff chances are in dire straits," Cotton said. "If we win we're in pretty good shape. We've just got to prove that we can come off a big win and play well the next week. We haven't done that yet this season."

RUN: Garden City teams try for state

(From 1C)

"For us to have a good chance to get to state, we have to do the same thing we did at district," Kirkland said. "We have to run as a pack and pull each other along, and make each other work harder. That will push the other teams back in the team standings."

Kirkland, who is in her first year at Garden City, came into the season knowing she was going to have to make at least one reservation. Her predecessors had to.

The reason is Michelle Fuchs, a senior. Fuchs has made three trips to state and is almost a lock for her fourth. She has won meets in Odessa, Big Lake, Big Spring and district, where her two-mile time — 12 minutes, seven seconds — was a new district record.

"She expects to get back and we are working on getting her time down, so she can medal at state," Kirkland said.

Fuchs, whose career-best finishes are fifth at regionals and 12th at state, thinks a fifth title is possible.

"Winning regionals has been one of my goals," said Fuchs, who was the top 1A finisher at the Lubbock meet. "I would like to end my career with a regional title and follow up at state."

BOYS NOTE: The Garden City boys will also make a run at a state berth. Kirkland says this group has made strides and ran a solid district meet, finishing third.

Garden City's Girls Team: Michelle Fuchs, M'Lynn Niehues, Jessica Hoch, Allison Jansa, Noemi Guerrero, Anna Flores, Leslie Jansa, Summer Eoff and Brecklyn Hughes.

Garden City's Boys Team: Samuel Sanchez, Anothny Hoelscher, Roger Alvarado, Kendall Goodwin and Brandon Bednar.

Gold rises

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar was down against other major currencies in European trading Wednesday. Gold rose.

The euro was quoted at 85.78 cents, up from 84.79 cents Tuesday. Later, in midday trading in New York, the euro traded at 85.85 cents.

Other dollar rates in Europe, compared with late Tuesday, included 108.45 Japanese yen, down from 109.09; 1.7760 Swiss francs, down from 1.7968; 1.5265 Canadian dollars, up from 1.5262.

The British pound was quoted at $1.4455, up from $1.4504.

In midday trading in New York, the dollar bought 108.45 yen, and the pound was worth $1.4450.

Based on euro rates, the dollar is worth 2.2790 German marks, down from 2.3050; 7.6434 French francs, down from 7.7308; 2.5678 Dutch guilders, down from 2.5972; 2,256.20 Italian lire, down from 2,281.99

Gold closed in London at $265.60 bid per troy ounce, up from $264.20 late Tuesday. In Zurich the bid price was $265.40, up from $263.95. Gold rose $1.40 in Hong Kong to close at $265.65.

Silver closed in London at $4.74 bid per troy ounce, up from $4.73.

Sharp contrast

NEW YORK (AP) — Investors cashed in some of their winnings from this week's big rally Wednesday, sending blue chip stocks and technology issues sliding. A last-minute round of buying offset some of the damage.

Analysts attributed the declines to profit-taking, rather than a return of investor anxiety about the market's direction.

The Dow Jones industrial average closed down 71.67 at 10,899.47, ending a 580-point winning streak that began Friday.

Broader stock indicators also fell. The tech-focused Nasdaq composite index slipped 36.24 to 3,333.39 after rising 178 points Tuesday. The Standard & Poor's 500 index was off 8.18 at 1,421.22.

Trading was quiet, a sharp contrast with Tuesday's frenzied session.

Futures jump

NEW YORK (Dow Jones News) — Crude oil futures jumped Wednesday on fresh Mideast tensions that renewed the specter of supply disruptions.

Crude products futures traded higher, too, at the New York Mercantile Exchange as industry data showed surprise draws in U.S. inventories.

In other commodities markets, copper futures fell and orange juice futures moved higher.

December crude surged 55 cents to $33.25 a barrel, December heating oil was up .51 cent to 94.09 cents a gallon and natural gas for December delivery rose 19.6 cents to $4.686 per 1,000 cubic feet.

December unleaded gasoline was up .84 cent at 88.43 cents a gallon.

Iraq's Oil Minister Amir Muhammed Rasheed said Wednesday the country wanted to sell crude oil to Syria outside the terms of its United Nations oil-for-food program. U.N. diplomats said they were very unlikely to approve the plan.

The situation puts Baghdad back on a collision course with the U.N. just days since Iraq threatened to halt exports if the U.N. didn't approve its plan to switch its dollar-denominated oil revenue account for euros.

Amazon.com ventures into Japan

By Joji Sakurai
Associated Press

TOKYO — Amazon.com Inc. extended its online empire Wednesday to Japan, one of the world's most book-loving nations, but razor-thin margins and an already glutted market make the venture a risky one, analysts say.

Amazon faces stiff competition from online book vendors like Internet giant Softbank Corp. and major retailer Kinokuniya, which announced Wednesday it is working with Microsoft Corp. to begin selling electronic books.

And one of Amazon's biggest strengths — competitive prices — will be hard to offer Japanese consumers because of legal restrictions that prohibit large discounts and any bypassing of the sales tax. Japanese books are already cheap, with the average paperback selling for about $4.50.

"The prices remain pretty much the same and in addition you have to pay extra for shipping and handling," said Hiromi Abe, an Internet analyst with Morgan Stanley Dean Witter. "It's going to be hard for an Amazon-type company."

At first glance, Japan appears an ideal place for the world's largest Internet retailer to set up a Web site.

Books are a multibillion dollar industry here, the online market is starting to boom, and the economy is recovering from its doldrums.

But Japanese still remain averse to using credit cards online. Other Internet book sellers have introduced a system of payment and delivery at convenience stores — the sort of innovation Amazon might have to come up with.

Amazon.com founder and chief executive Jeff Bezos said that his company's customer-friendly business has already cultivated big clientele here even without its physical presence.

"If you do a good job with customers, they tell their friends," he told reporters in Tokyo. "The reason we have gotten so many customers is that we have concentrated on the customer experience. This is a big market and there will be lots of room for our competitors."

Amazon.co.jp, which promises a 30 percent discount on foreign books, will still be able to offer English-language books at a bargain compared to the wildly inflated prices they sell for at Japanese retailers that stock them.

At one foreign-language bookshop in Tokyo's swank Ginza district, Michael Crichton's "Timeline" was selling for about $14 — almost twice the publisher's suggested price of $7.99.

That helps explain why Japan has been Amazon.com's largest market outside the United States, with 193,000 customers and annual sales of $34 million.

Overall, Amazon lost $720 million on revenue of $1.6 billion in 1999.

Still English-language book sales account for only a tiny fraction of the $9.3 billion book industry that makes Japan such an attractive market for a company like Amazon.

Amazon.co.jp is the company's first Internet book sales site in Asia and its fourth internationally after the French-language Amazon.fr, the German-language Amazon.de, and Amazon.co.uk.

Officials at the Seattle-based Amazon, which also sells music CDs, videos, toys, computer software, electronics appliances and other household items, said they are considering adding music CDs as part of their future business in Japan.

Amazon's best chance for success here may be to turn to areas outside books, where there are more possibilities for discounts. Publishers in Japan have a tight grip on pricing.

"If Amazon extends its operations to other areas there might be a chance to be a winner in Japan," said Abe.

Shares of Amazon.com were trading up $1.81 to $38.44 on the Nasdaq Stock Market.

Fed finds growing proof of slowdown in national economy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy was growing at a moderate pace in the early fall, with various parts of the country reporting signs of slowing activity in such key areas as retail sales and housing, the Federal Reserve said Wednesday.

In its latest survey of business conditions around the country, the Fed painted a picture of an economy that is slowing from the sizzling pace of earlier in the year with inflation remaining under control.

The Fed said business activity had slowed significantly in five regions — Philadelphia, Atlanta, Cleveland, Richmond and Dallas — and all areas were describing growth as "moderate."

The new Fed survey, which will be used by central bank policy-makers when they next meet Nov. 15 to set interest rates, joined a growing body of evidence that the economy has shifted to a lower gear.

Supporting that view, the National Association of Purchasing Managers said activity in manufacturing contracted for a third straight month in October, with its index dropping to 48.3 percent.

A reading above 50 percent on the purchasing managers' index indicates growth in manufacturing while anything below that level indicates a slowdown.

Last week, the government said the overall economy, as measured by the gross domestic product, grew at a rate of just 2.7 percent in the July-September quarter, less than half the 5.6 percent pace of the spring.

"The economic slowdown is unfolding before our eyes," said Sung Won Sohn, chief economist at Wells Fargo & Co. in Minneapolis. "We have a slowing economy with very modest inflation."

Sohn and other analysts predicted that the Fed, which pushed up interest rates six times from June 1990 through last May in an effort to prevent the economy from overheating, will leave rates alone at its next meeting and for many months to come.

THE ECONOMIST

Legislative steps must be taken to address industrial tax burden

By M. Ray Perryman

Historically, Texas has been the "go to" state for industry — an international benchmark for doing business in the world's ever-changing economic landscape. Many firms looking to expand or relocate have found in Texas the right mix of elements to foster success. The state's oft-touted advantages include a key geographic location for international trade; a large, young workforce; a rich natural resource base; competitive costs; and a business-friendly operating environment. Moreover, the state's attractiveness to industry has been enhanced in recent years by tort reforms, changes in workers' compensation guidelines, and research and development tax incentives. Texas is in a prime position to take advantage of opportunities other states simply do not have. So why is Texas lagging behind South Carolina, Michigan, Ohio, North Carolina, California, Virginia, and Georgia in landing international expansions?

Perryman

A more specific statistic concerns the state's ranking among states that attract new manufacturing plants. It's true that high-tech industries are a growing part of the Lone Star State — especially around the Richardson Corridor and the Austin-San Marcos areas. When the black and white numbers are produced, however, Texas places fifth on the Top Ten list of states attracting new manufacturing plants (behind California, Michigan, Ohio, and Illinois). A few years ago, we ranked first, and the total number of new facilities has dropped by 30 percent. Something clearly needs to be done to bolster the state's ability to attract lucrative manufacturing facilities.

We have all the other pieces of the economic development puzzle. Consider that Texas is home to the Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport, one of the largest and most active airports in the world — and a vast majority of the traffic involves business interests. Texas cities such as Austin, Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston and San Antonio provide extremely attractive reasons to locate all kinds of manufacturing facilities (not just technologically-intensive ones). Each city possesses at least one major university from which businesses may attract new employees. Each city also possesses the necessary infrastructure and general manpower necessary to make any type of manufacturing facility profitable.

Therefore, Texas should be constantly knocking on the door of the number one position in every economic category considered. The only explanation to why Texas lags behind instead of driving and pushing forward is the current tax environment. The common denominator among those states that have surpassed us is aggressive incentive measures. Therefore, legislative steps must be taken to ensure that the Lone Star State is able to take full advantage of every opportunity. This goal can best be accomplished by addressing the industrial property tax burden.

Property taxes are, of course, essential to local governments. Both homeowners and corporations pay property taxes; in general, they are used by school districts to pay a substantial share of educational expenses. Property taxes are not new nor are they unfamiliar. In fact, the property tax has long been established as a means of generating revenue for government use. The Roman Empire paid her vast and skilled professional armies with funds collected from "tributum" — a tax on capital resources. In the time before money, lords would exact a tribute from their subjects in more readily useable forms: livestock and harvests.

Texas is a unique entity. Texas is not like California or Michigan or any other state, because Texas laws are different, Texas thought is different, and Texas life is different. Given the absence of a state income tax in Texas and the local funding of public education, a relatively greater load of the tax burden is borne by the property tax than is the case in many states. On the business side of the tax ledger, this responsibility is not even equally distributed among Texas industries. The most capital-intensive industries such as manufacturing, oil and gas, and utilities bear over half of the tax burden. Since the overall health of the Texas economy greatly depends on the performance of these sectors, and location decisions are highly competitive, Texas must devise a strategy to lure large facilities into the state.

No matter how you feel about incentives (I don't like them myself on a philosophical level), they are an integral part of today's economic development landscape. If Texas is to again be effective in attracting the types of major manufacturing that promote industrial expansion, we must be players in the game.

It is not certain whether Virginia Tech quarterback Michael Vick, seen here diving over Temple's Philip Shepard for a touchdown in a game played earlier this season, will play this Saturday as the Hokies take on the No. 3 Miami Hurricanes. It is a game which should have national title implications.

Vick or no Vick, Hokies brace for No. 3 'Canes

By Richard Rosenblatt
AP Football Writer

Virginia Tech quarterback Dave Meyer hopes to fare better in Saturday's Hokies-Hurricanes game than Miami's Ken Dorsey did in last year's matchup.

Dorsey, who replaced an injured Kenny Kelly in the second half of the Hokies' 43-10 win in '99, was harassed nearly every play. He was sacked twice, intercepted once and hit just 6 of 17 passes for 45 yards.

"I was overwhelmed and my head was spinning," Dorsey said.

Meyer, a fifth-year senior, starts for the injured Michael Vick when No. 2 Virginia Tech (8-0, 6-0 Big East) visits No. 3 Miami (6-1, 3-0) in a national title elimination game at the sold out Orange Bowl.

"I'm ready," said Meyer, who led the Hokies on the field-goal drive that produced a 37-34 win over Pittsburgh last week. "From week to week, I prepare to start, whether I'm the backup or starter."

Vick, among the Heisman Trophy favorites, has a sprained right ankle but coach Frank Beamer hasn't counted out his star. Vick will be fitted with a special ankle brace and may play. Miami coach Butch Davis expects to see Vick, Vick and more Vick.

"He's not hurt," Davis said earlier this week. "If you think he's hurt, you're kidding yourself."

He's hurt for sure, but how seriously remains to be seen.

Against the Panthers, Meyer was 7 of 13 for 114 yards, his last three completions going for 12, 11 and 11 yards to set up Carter Warley's game-winning 27-yard field goal with 16 seconds left.

"He's tall, he's athletic. He can throw the football. He's smart," Beamer said of Meyer. "I think it's obvious he's not quite as quick as Michael. He doesn't throw the ball quite as quick. His release is not like Michael's and he probably doesn't throw quite as far as Michael."

Vick, with 1,023 yards and seven TDs passing and 584 yards and eight TDs rushing, isn't the only star fighting off an injury. Hokies top receiver Andre Davis — 23 catches for 318 yards and two TDs as well as three punt returns for scores — has bursitis in his left foot.

Four Miami starters were hurt in last week's 42-31 win over Louisiana Tech, but all are expected to play — LB Dan Morgan (sprained ankle), FB D.J. Williams (separated shoulder), OL Brett Romberg (broken finger) and S Al Blades (biceps).

Dorsey has rebounded nicely from his Hokies experience. This season, he's thrown for 1,675 yards and 14 TDs for the nation's top-scoring team, at 45 points per game. The Hokies are fifth (42 ppg).

Vick isn't the only hurting Heisman-contending quarterback: A healing Chris Weinke leads No. 4 Florida State (8-1, 6-0 ACC) against an ailing Woodrow Dantzler and No. 10 Clemson (8-1, 6-1) in Bowden Bowl II — Tommy's Tigers against dad Bobby's Seminoles.

Weinke, hampered by a sore left ankle since Sept. 28, tries to keep the defending national champions in the running for another title. Last year, he rallied the 'Noles from an 11-point halftime deficit to a 17-14 win.

Dantzler reinjured his left ankle in the first half of last week's 31-28 loss to Georgia Tech. If he can't play, freshman Willie Simmons gets his first start — just 20 miles from where he played at Shanks High School in Quincy, Fla.

Alabama's DuBose to resign at season's end

By John Zenor
Associated Press Writer

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — The sight of Alabama players sitting on the turf in disbelief after a humiliating homecoming loss was just too much for one of the proudest programs in college football.

Coach Mike DuBose will resign at the end of the season, bringing an end to four turbulent seasons. He survived a sexual harassment scandal to lead the Crimson Tide to a conference title last season, but watched the team collapse this year.

"I thought Monday in my heart and soul that I needed to make a change," athletic director Mal Moore said Wednesday during a news conference. "We both agreed that new leadership is needed to move the program forward."

Alabama was ranked No. 3 in the preseason poll, with many fans expecting the Tide to roll through their Southeastern Conference opponents and make their way to the national title game.

But the Tide opened with a loss at unranked UCLA, were shut out by Southern Mississippi, also lost to Arkansas and Tennessee and fell 40-38 on Saturday to Central Florida. At 3-5, Alabama needs victories in its final three games to make the SEC championship game and stay alive to qualify for a bowl game.

"We're all pretty much stunned right now," quarterback Tyler Watts said. "We're going to stick together. Across the board, everyone would love nothing more than to win these last three and go to Atlanta for coach."

DuBose followed Gene Stallings as coach in 1997, five years after the Tide won their sixth national title. Bear Bryant led Alabama to five titles between 1958-82.

Moore said DuBose would be paid his salary and benefits through January 2002 and there would be "no lump sum payment."

DuBose, 47, a former Alabama player and longtime assistant coach, was under contract through Jan. 31, 2004. He is 24-20 in four seasons as head coach.

Moore said he will search for an experienced head coach to replace DuBose, who was given the job without college head coaching experience.

The athletic director said he would pick a successor without a search committee. He declined to identify any possible successors but said "you always have coaches in mind in these situations."

Moore said money would not be an issue, though DuBose's $525,000 annual compensation package made him one of the Southeastern Conference's lowest paid football coaches.

"We will do what we need to do to move forward this program, and take it to the level that is expected and demanded of it," Moore said.

He said DuBose would coach the team through a bowl game if it makes it that far. Moore isn't worried that that might affect the interest of prospective successors.

"I will be looking for coaches that I feel certain will be in bowl games, from top programs that have had success and are having success at the present," Moore said.

DuBose met with the team Wednesday afternoon after working out final details of the resignation agreement with Moore.

Longhorns defensive backs try to remain No. 1 in nation

By Suzanne Halliburton
Cox News Service

AUSTIN — The statistic is a confusing one, taking in an opponent's completion percentage, the number of touchdown passes and interceptions thrown combined with the total passing yards.

Unless someone is a math professor, in order to figure it, you need a calculator and a copy of the intricate formula.

It's called the defensive passing efficiency rating. And when members of the University of Texas secondary saw the national statistics on Sunday, they were slapping high fives.

Although the group has no idea how to figure the rating, they knew that if your team is at the top of the national rankings, it means you're considered the best in the country in pass defense.

"That was our goal, to be number one," said UT cornerback Quentin Jammer. "All our work has paid off. Now our goal is to stay there."

Defensive coordinator Carl Reese has yet to pop any champagne corks to celebrate the ranking.

"It means we're getting teams to throw a lot and they're not catching very many of 'em," Reese said. "Like any stat, shoot, if after the season, you still had it, that would be nice. But it's not going to get us any points OFF the scoreboard on Saturday."

And there is irony in the timing of the ranking. The Longhorns, with a pass efficiency rating of 83 (100 is considered an average or median), vaulted to the top of the rankings the week that UT plays Texas Tech. The Red Raiders rank 11th in the country in passing offense, averaging 301.2 yards a game.

Coincidentally, Texas Tech runs the exact same offense as top-ranked Oklahoma, which dusted this same Longhorn defense a month ago for 289 yards through the air, 534 yards total, in a 63-14 win.

"Obviously, against the best passing team in the country, we weren't very good," said UT Coach Mack Brown, "I don't think we were the best passing defensive team in the country that day in the Cotton Bowl."

In UT's two losses, against Oklahoma and Stanford, opposing quarterbacks have completed 50.7 percent of their passes and have thrown a total of four touchdowns and no interceptions. In UT's six wins, opposing quarterbacks have completed just 38 percent of their passes with a collective three touchdowns and 12 interceptions.

These statistics have been helped, in part, by the inexperience of the quarterbacks the Longhorns have faced. Four of the teams UT has played this year have been led by redshirt or true freshmen quarterbacks.

However, unlike last season, when the Longhorns faced numerous power running teams, the UT defense has been forced to deal with potent passing attacks.

As a result of all the passes thrown UT's way, Reese has been forced to bench his strongside linebacker and sometimes a defensive tackle in order to play six defensive backs, or a dime package. He'll likely use six defensive backs most of Saturday's game. And UT probably will use some of its corners or safeties to blitz in an effort to harass Tech quarterback Kliff Kingsbury.

Tech coach Mike Leach came to Lubbock from Oklahoma, where he installed the Sooners passing scheme and groomed quarterback Josh Heupel. Leach's offense is basically a second-generation run-and-shoot scheme, one that employs a no-huddle and keeps the quarterback in a shotgun at all times. The tailbacks are primarily used as outlet receivers.

UT's goal probably will be to keep Tech's passing yards to 250."It's ironic that we're playing Texas Tech this week," said UT cornerback Rod Babers. "It's going to be a challenge. The whole OU offense is going to come at us again right after we're ranked No. 1."

Hispanic Citizens Police Academy:

Shooting 101

Sergeant Chuck Sims, demonstrated a number of tactics the Special Weapons and Tactical (SWAT) Team use in emergency situations on the Oct. 28 Hispanic Citizens Police Academy meeting.

The class took place at the Midland Police Shooting Range outside the city limits. The small building is situated in between meadows of green grass and tall trees. Large dirt hills surround the shooting targets and help prevent bullets from straying.

Wearing camouflage clothing, Sims along with Sergeant Rick Lewis, demonstrated their skills. Taking his 308 precision riffle Lewis hid behind a small rolling hill unnoticed by the attendees. Sims asked the students to remain near a tower. Carrying his walkie talkie in hand, Sims reached over to it and gave a signal to fire.

In a matter of seconds shots rang.

The attendees wearing ear protectors and plastic glasses watched in amazement.

'Officers are trained to shoot in close parameters. They can shoot while moving and usually have knowledge of several different weapons.'
— Sgt. Chuck Sims, Midland Police Department

Lewis shot right on target, and never missed a shot. Although it was a windy morning, Lewis' precision was evident.

"Officers are trained to shoot in close parameters," Sims said. "They can shoot while moving, and usually have knowledge of several different weapons."

The SWAT team wears clothing to camouflage themselves in any given situation. If an emergency hostage situation took place in downtown Midland the team would wear gray clothing. Gray colors would help them hide easily because the gray buildings and colors that surround the city of Midland. The green and brown camouflage clothing would help the SWAT team if a hostage situation took place in an area of greenery.

Placing two orange roadway cones on the 25-yard line, Sgt. Joe Rogers simulated an entry weapon demonstration. The two cones were placed right beside each other representing a doorway entry.

Carrying a .45-caliber pistol, he made the procedure look like a real life situation.

"I like using a .45-caliber pistol because it saves time," said Rogers, a patrol officer for the SWAT team. "I don't have to reload and those few seconds can mean saving a life."

A few of the attendees tried their firearm skills. Rogers explained the primary targets officers try to shoot in a hostage or emergency situation.

The primary targets included the belly and thigh area.

"The Sage SL 1 is a less lethal gun, and it won't kill unless the person is shot in a vital area," Rogers said. "It's a synthetic reflex, if you hit hard enough the rest of the body will go down. The thigh is a major muscle area, and hitting that major muscle makes the rest of the muscles go down."

Heriberto and Maria Ramirez both took turns shooting the targets on the range.

"I like shooting. Ms. Ramirez said. "I hardly ever do it. My husband has a ranch in Mexico, and he shoots bottles."

Giving his wife an encouraging hug, Heriberto watched as she shot the target.

"I enjoyed the demonstration," Heriberto said. "I had fun shooting. I'm glad my wife had some fun too."

SWAT team leader Sgt. Chuck Sims (top) fires at one of the targets on the police firing range. Members of the Hispanic Citizen's Police Academy were at the range to learn about the different weapons police use. Field Training Officer Joe Rogers (center) gives a weapons demonstration to the students. Sgt. Rick Lewis (bottom) shows is sniper equipment to Sally Cruz (left) and Maria Roman during the Saturday class.

For lovers of Latin beats, Web sites are appearing left and right

By Debra A. Klein
N.Y. Times News Service

When Ricky Martin swiveled his hips at the 1999 Grammys, he set off a tide of Latin pop record sales in this country.

A year and a half later, on the eve of the first Latin Grammys, a new group of Internet entrepreneurs is trying to ride that tide by offering Latin music Web sites that include crash courses in the different rhythms of mambo, bomba and merengue, and also sell the latest salsa and rock en Espanol CDs.

And while many Spanish-language music sites originate from Brazil and Mexico, these upstarts from the United States are in English to attract a new audience: bilingual Hispanic-Americans as well as fans who do not speak Spanish.

Francisco de la Torre founded Eritmo.com (www2.eritmo.com) one year ago to fill a void on the Net. Latin music styles vary from country to country, de la Torre reasoned, so Eritmo.com ("ritmo" means rhythm in Spanish) customizes news and information with separate pages and headlines from Puerto Rico, Mexico, Brazil, Argentina, Venezuela and the United States.

Eritmo.com publishes limited concert reviews, news and opinion articles, and music rankings by country. It also has chats, puzzles and games. Its Supermall sells CDs by top-of-the-charts Latin performers and links users to a site to make their own CDs.

If Eritmo.com feels like the sterile but stocked neighborhood superstore, the LaMusica.com site (www.lamusica.com) is a fan's basement, crammed with colorful photos and video interviews with the stars of the Latin pop, salsa, merengue and Tejano scenes.

What LaMusica.com does best is to give access to small concerts and corner top performers in interesting places. When visited recently, the site had an interview with Son by Four in Central Park and one with Marc Anthony, holding forth from a bed (fully clothed). The site includes timely reviews of festivals sponsored by radio stations and of rare concert appearances, and links to Latin music radio shows featuring styles like freestyle and Latin jazz.

The Spanish word "descarga" means "to unload," but it also refers to a type of musical jam session. In that spirit, Descarga.com (www.descarga.com) is an amalgam of opinion, instruction and sales.

Critical essays that assume familiarity with major figures in Latin music, and rare recordings and percussion instruments, like afuches and timbales, for sale make the site seem like a Greenwich Village music shop on the Web. The glossary is basic but useful for those encountering decades of Latin music for the first time. The catalog includes hard-to-find recordings like Israel (Cachao) Lopez's Cuban jam sessions and Afro-Cuban Santeria vocal and drum music.

Two-year-old LA'Ritmo.com (www.laritmo.com) offers Top 25 charts in several Latin music genres, as well as the Tu Ritmo collection of digital sound clips, a handy sampling tool that gives beginners who cannot decipher Spanish labels a place to start looking for Latin CDs.

The Latino Wired news link chugs with the latest industry music news and is updated daily; the extensive archives of reviews, charts and interviews go back two years.

Dgolpe.com (www.dgolpe.com) offers a vast English-, Spanish- and Portuguese-language digital catalog for downloading, and though the six-month-old site's name is a pun on the Spanish word for coup, Dgolpe.com insists that all of its MP3 downloads are legal.

Ritmoteca.com (www.ritmoteca.com), which made its debut in December, has a Latin catalog on its site, which is decorated with a deep red border, maracas and bongos. Artists' pages offer brief biographies and discographies to help users select CDs.

A Latino lifestyle site, Latino.com (www.latino.com), available in Spanish and English, has an extensive music section, with news articles on things like hip-hop and salsa, and video links to Latin artists, but its best item is a map. The clickable, color-coded guide describes and matches Latin musical genres to their countries of origin.

There are dozens of fan pages for specific artists and categories, as well as specialized sites with narrow city and club guides. Salsaweb.com (www.salsaweb.com) is a bright site with a few salsa headliner tour schedules, a listing of dance events around the world and an eclectic collection of features on topics like Japanese salsa and dance floor etiquette. The Latin Jazz Network (www.latinjazznet.com) compiles reviews, profiles and in-depth interviews with musicians, and links users to a calendar of jazz festivals and other events, as well as to Latin jazz radio stations online.

For a primer on the backbone of Latin music, the spare but colorful Latin Rhythms site (www.cam.org/(Tilde)raybiss/rhythms) pulses with clickable musical staffs and congas with brief explanatory paragraphs for each pattern of beats.

Latin American Musical Styles (havana.iwsp.com/radio/lamusic) illustrates its regional glossary of Latin genres, from aguinaldos (Venezuela) to zouks (French Caribbean), with clickable snippets from popular recordings of each.

Visually oriented fans can click on a handful of Latin artists' streaming videos on AllLatinMusictv.com (www.alllatinmusictv.com), including one from the legendary Celia Cruz and a video of Enrique Iglesias performing an English cover of Yaz's "Only You."

DEAR ABBY

Operation Dear Abby sends holiday greetings overseas

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My family and I participated in last year's Operation Dear Abby.

Van Buren

It was a blessing to us. We sent a box of 40 cards to each address you listed.

We realize that is an insignificant number when compared to the number of military personnel who are away from home, but my children are 12 and 7, so that was as many as we could handle.

They were not happy when I asked them to sign so many cards, but we did one box each week to keep us from getting writer's cramp and to keep the postage costs manageable.

As we sent out each batch of cards, we looked on the Internet for information about that area. This "activated" my kids.

They talked about their new knowledge with their classmates and teachers.

I sent the addresses to their teachers, and the classes sent out cards, too. We didn't do it for recognition, but we received three thank-you cards from commanders.

This "family time" turned out to be so much more than just that — my children learned a valuable life lesson: the importance of our military and the fact that these people are real, not fictitious characters in a distant place.

The kids have begun asking me if we can do it again this year.

Abby, when will you be printing the addresses for 2000? — AMANDA ENNIS, LITHIA SPRINGS, GA.

DEAR AMANDA: Now is the hour, and thank you for giving me this chance to announce the launch of Operation Dear Abby XVI.

Once again I would like to thank everyone who has worked so hard to make Operation Dear Abby the smashing success it is every year.

The cards and letters you send remind our servicemen and women that although they are stationed far away, they are in our hearts.

Many schools and clubs make this a group project. I can't think of a better morale booster.

In order to ensure that the mail is received within the required time frame — and that it falls within the Department of Defense security guidelines — this year mail is being limited to ONLY first-class letters and cards, 13 ounces or less.

No packages will be accepted.

Operation Dear Abby has been assigned four addresses for use during the 2000 holiday season.

Specific units and countries are not being targeted — only major U.S. military aerial mail terminals and fleet mail centers overseas.

Once the mail is received, these hubs will distribute it on a fair-share basis to all branches of the armed forces.

This means a letter addressed to a "soldier" may be distributed to an airman, sailor or Marine, allowing for wider distribution.

This will also prevent the transportation system or specific units from being inundated.

To send mail to a specific area, address it to the closest geographic hub:

FOR EUROPE AND SOUTHWEST ASIA:
Any Service Member
OPERATION DEAR ABBY
APO AE 09135.

FOR THE MEDITERRANEAN BASIN:
Any Service Member
OPERATION DEAR ABBY
FPO AE 09646.

FOR THE FAR EAST:
Any Service Member
OPERATION DEAR ABBY
APO AP 96285.

FOR THE PACIFIC BASIN:
Any Service Member
OPERATION DEAR ABBY
FPO AP 96385

The U.S. Postal Service will begin accepting this mail on Nov. 15, 2000. After Jan. 15, 2001, mail will no longer be accepted for these addresses.

Readers, because Operation Dear Abby ZIP codes are temporary, they are not always entered into postal computers, and clerks may not be aware that they are valid.

If you encounter difficulty at your local post office, ask the clerk to check postal bulletins 22035 (Oct. 19, 2000) and/or 22036 (Nov. 2, 2000).

To order "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, IL 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

U.S. and Mexico move toward WTO arbitration on Telmex dispute

By Graham Gori
N.Y. Times News Service

MEXICO CITY — A long-simmering telecommunications dispute between the United States and Mexico appeared Tuesday to be heading toward an arbitration panel at the World Trade Organization.

Telefonos de Mexico, known as Telmex, announced late Monday that it would ask a court to overturn a recent ruling by federal regulators to reduce by nearly two-thirds interconnection fees, which the company charges competitors to begin and end international calls in Mexico. The ruling would allow international rivals greater access to Mexico's telecommunications market.

Earlier in October, Mexico's telecommunications regulatory panel, Cofetel, ordered a 63 percent reduction in interconnection fees, to 1.25 cents a minute from 3.36 cents.

The new regulations are scheduled to go into effect on Jan. 1.

Competitors like AT&T and WorldCom have repeatedly complained that the interconnection fees make competing for a slice of Mexico's $12 billion telecommunications market a losing battle. They also argue that these practices violate trade agreements.

In July, United States trade representatives threatened to take Mexico before a WTO arbitration panel unless regulators ordered Telmex to abide by agreements signed by both countries.

In October, the deputy U.S. trade representative, Richard Fisher, traveled to Mexico and said he left hoping that Mexican officials would force Telmex to cut its interconnection fees. At the time, Washington had relaxed its public stance, saying it would resort to a WTO trade panel ruling only if needed.

"This is a giant step backward in the process," Fisher said today after learning of Telmex's decision to try to overturn the regulators' ruling. "This is what we were worried about — that Telmex would use the judicial system to thwart the independence of the regulatory agencies."

Now, he said, the United States must wait and see how the courts will handle the injunction. But "this does not relieve Mexico from living up to its commitments under WTO telecommunications agreements," Fisher said. "Let's see what the Mexican government does."

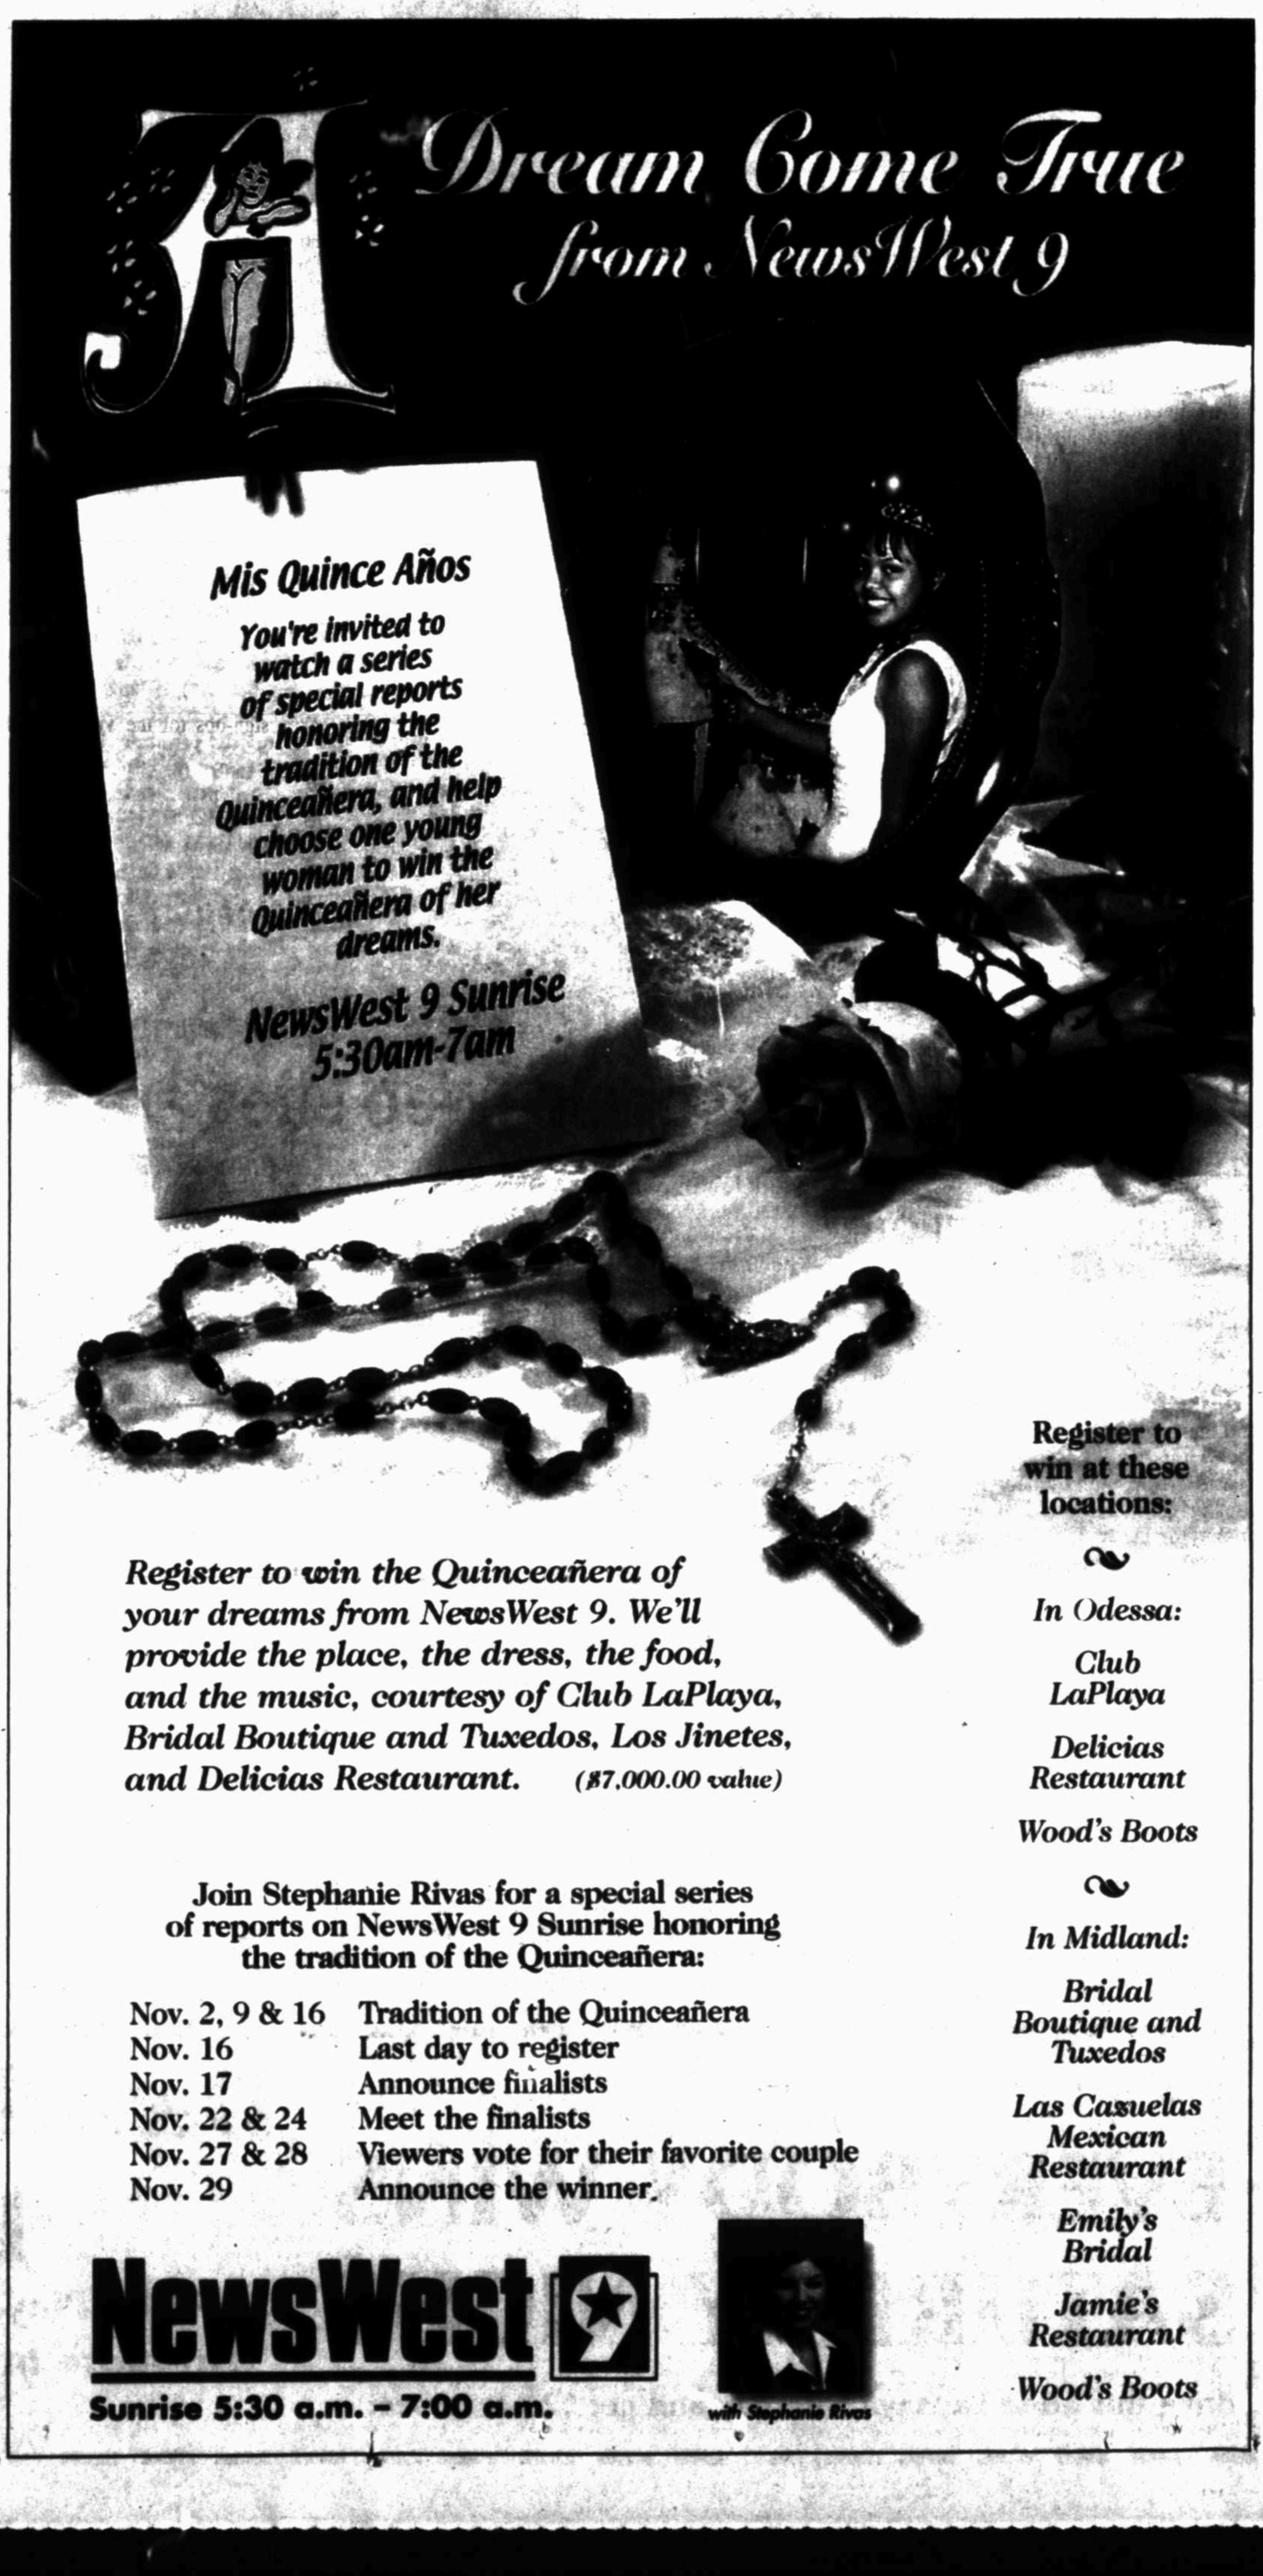

Telemex has a reputation for operating above the law in Mexico, repeatedly tying regulatory decisions up by filing appeals in court, exploiting the Mexican government's weakness in enforcing antitrust regulations.

Telmex, run by one of Latin America's richest men, Carlos Slim Helu, was deemed a monopoly two years ago by federal regulators. The decision, if enforced, would have resulted in large reductions of the company's grip on the telecommunications market. The company's share of the long-distance market in Mexico has rebounded to 81 percent after falling to about 70 percent. And it still enjoys more than 95 percent of local service.

Vicente Fox Quesada, Mexico's president-elect, who takes office on Dec. 1, has said that regulatory agencies will have to be strengthened to allow more competition across the board in markets here.

Emilio Goicoechea Luna, a congressman from Fox's National Action Party, said he was working with Fox's transition team to present legislation to Congress that would give regulatory agencies more teeth and greater enforcement ability. The proposed law would limit the appeals process, and more important, would prevent companies from avoiding regulatory decisions with endless court appeals.

"We need in this country better laws for competition and for telecommunications," he said.
