Help in the heat

Elnora Hemphill is one of many Midlanders using simple box fans to try and fight off the summer heat. Mrs. Hemphill has borrowed this fan from a friend, but local agencies say they are in need of others to donate to needy residents.

Donations dwindling as heat 'fans' need

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

A fan given to her four months ago by an ex-boyfriend serves as Elnora Hemphill's only source of relief from the onerous day-to-day summer heat.

The 66-year-old cannot afford an air conditioner on her $354 per month disability check, so she sits inside the Casa De Amigos center during the day for five days a week.

When Ms. Hemphill doesn't escape to the center, she must endure the sometimes 100-plus degree temperatures by sitting in front of her fan or venturing outside her 1906 Hudson Ave. home to catch an occasional breeze.

"It makes me sick," Ms. Hemphill, a diabetic, said of the heat. "I get dizzy. I have to stand it because I've got nothing else to do."

Her requests to local service agencies for a window-unit air conditioner or an extra fan have come up empty.

Martha Covarrubias, Casa De Amigos social services director, said Thursday that no one has responded to the center's pleas for donated fans and window units.

"We've never been faced with this before," Ms. Covarrubias said. "Everybody has kept them for their own use. Even a little fan would help.

"I thought someone would come, but we haven't had even one. I'd be glad to help distribute them."

She said Casa De Amigos workers know of at least 60 people in desperate need of a way to keep cool.

"We have definitely seen a lot of need out there," she said. "People have little young babies and no fans. My concern is for the elderly, young and sick."

Needy people of all age groups, from pregnant women to the elderly, have requested help, Ms Covarrubias said.

Maj. Harvey Harwell of the Salvation Army in Midland recalled a generous donation last summer, when a Midland citizen bought 12 fans and gave them to the Army to donate.

However, this summer has been different. The Salvation Army had only one fan to give away late Thursday. That one will be given away on a first-come, first-served basis, Harwell said.

Rainfall little relief

From Staff and Wire Reports

The rain that dropped on Midland today relieved wilted citizens, though the year's total rainfall amount lags 4-inches behind the annual average, a forecaster said.

At 9:45 a.m. today, .03-inches of rain had fallen at Midland International Airport. Larger amounts were recorded in other parts of town.

The amount at the airport brought the official total rainfall level for the year to 3.55-inches, National Weather Service meteorologist John Frazar said.

Usually by this date, 7.56-inches has fallen.

Local TAB branch part of acquisition

By JULIE JEROME

Midland's Texas American Bank opened its doors this morning as Texas American Bridge Bank, in the process of being acquired by Dallas-based Deposit Guaranty Bank.

Thursday, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. closed 24 Texas American subsidiary banks, including the Midland bank, establishing an interim institution until they are fully acquired by Deposit Guaranty Bank.

Tom Mastor, a vice president with Deposit Guaranty Bank, said in Midland this morning the process should take approximately four months.

He assured local depositors the action will have no impact on current accounts. In addition, none of the local bank's employment will be affected, he said. The bank, located at 2301 W. Wall Ave., is temporarily a branch of the bridge bank.

"We don't view this as a takeover, but a merger," he said. "Everyone in this organization is as important to us as we are to them. We are thrilled to death, especially with this unit."

According to 1989 second quarter bank call, Midland's Texas American Bank deposits totaled $131.6 million, up 3.33 percent from the first quarter of this year. The total reveals an increase of 0.1 percent over second quarter deposits of 1988.

Texas American Bank loans at the end of the second quarter of 1989 totaled $30.3 million, up 0.01 percent from the first quarter of this year. The bank's loans reflect a decline of 0.09 percent from the second quarter of 1988.

Mastor said Charles Grimes will remain president of the Midland bank.

In addition, Mastor said, Deposit Guaranty anticipates no changes in existing accounts and bank employment after the merger is completed.

According to the Associated Press, the transaction was the first time the FDIC awarded a large failed Texas bank to another Texas bank.

"Obviously we're excited," said Robert Steinhart, chairman and chief executive officer of Deposit Guaranty. "We have a unique opportunity here. We see an opportunity for a Texas-based bank and Texas-managed bank."

But Texas American said it intended to file lawsuits against the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the FDIC, according to the AP.

"Texas American Bancshares is greatly disappointed in the actions taken by these agencies and feels the company has been dealth with unfairly," the company said in a statement.

The FDIC will spend $900 million in the Texas American bailout, according to the Associated Press. Deposit Guaranty, a $600 million, privately-owned company, will contribute approximately $175 million.

The bridge bank, to be managed under contract by Deposit Guaranty, has total assets of approximately $4.2 billion and deposits of approximately $4.1 billion, according to AP.

Deposit Guaranty will transfer problem loans into a "special asset pool" guaranteed by the FDIC, according to a statement by the bank.

The acquisition of Texas American Bridge Bank marks the latest and largest of a string of some 14 bank acquisitions.

So far this year, 107 banks have failed nationally, including 71 in Texas. The FDIC's only assistance transaction in the nation this year has been in Texas.

Six Midlanders make magazine's money list

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Some Midlanders still may be weathering an economic downturn, but money is somewhat less of a problem for six residents who appear on a Texas magazine's list of the state's wealthiest citizens.

The six, who Texas Monthly in its August issue says have a combined net worth of $1.32 billion, were unavailable for comment Thursday.

But their money speaks loudly enough.

Some of their names probably are familiar to most city dwellers.

The Scharbaur family, owners of Kentucky Derby victor Alysheba, racing's all-time leading money-winner, and a 150,000-acre ranch that stretches across West Texas, were representated on the list by patriarch Clarence Scharbauer Jr.

The magazine estimated Scharbauer's wealth at $250 million.

Also present were Jack Wagner and Cy Brown, Midland oilmen who of late are finding more profit in company takeovers like the Insilco deal last fall. Texas Monthly estimates their combined wealth at $500 million.

John Lee Cox, called the "Sprayberry King" for the killing he made in the Sprayberry Trend, is worth $325 million, according to the magazine.

Perot still wealthiest with $3 billion

AUSTIN (AP) — Times may be tough in Texas, but it still takes $100 million in net worth to make the list of the 100 richest Texans, according to the first such ranking by Texas Monthly magazine.

Dallas businessman H. Ross Perot, with a net worth of $3 billion, tops the list in the August 1989 issue.

Perot is listed as the fourth richest man in America by Forbes magazine.

Second in Texas is Dallas financier Harold Clark Simmons, 58, with an estimated worth of $1.6 billion.

Third, fourth and fifth are Margaret Hunt Hill, 73; Haroldson L. Hunt III, 71; and Caroline Rose Hunt, 66, all of the $1 billion Dallas hotel and oil-and-gas empire founded by Arkansas oilman H.L. Hunt.

Forbes lists Margaret Hill 39th in the nation, with worth of $1.2 billion. It also says Ray Lee Hunt, 46, part of H.L. Hunt's second family, has an individual fortune of $1.3 billion and ranks him 34th in the U.S. Texas Monthly ranks him 37th in the state and says he shares his fortune with siblings June, Helen and Swanee.

Rounding out the top 10 of the Texas 100 are the Bass clan, "far and away the richest family in Texas," with holdings in oil and gas, real estate, stocks and other investments totaling at least $5 billion, the magazine said.

Midland's first crack case leads to probated sentence

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The first jury to hear a crack case in Midland convicted a 22-year-old Odessa man of possessing the drug Thursday, but rejected a prosecutor's call for a "zero tolerance policy" regarding the cocaine derivative and instead sentenced him to five years probation.

The jury took just 30 minutes to decide that if Earnest Jaymie Derrick violates terms of his probation, he will be sentenced to 10 years in state prison and fined $10,000. He could have received up to 20 years in prison for cocaine possession, a second-degree felony under state law.

Jurors — who did not know until after the case their unique position — said they took seriously the fact crack was involved in the case. But they instead focused on the fact Derrick had no criminal record and a stable family in Odessa.

"We took into account the circumstances," said juror Sheryl Buffaloe, 33. "We did not feel the state's evidence was that conclusive. We thought he was just at the wrong place at the wrong time. We didn't want to show we were just sloughing off the case, that we were serious.

"But they didn't prove he was a drug user or pusher."

Another juror said the fact crack was involved played no role.

The "FORWARD MIDLAND" program announced Thursday is one of the most significant diversification projects ever launched here.

What are its prospects for success and what is the history of past efforts?

Beginning Sunday, the Reporter-Telegram will take a comprehensive look at these and other issues related to Midland's future growth in a multi-part series published over a five-day period.

ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION: Beyond the hype.

RAIN

A low pressure system "similar to a cold front" passed through the Permian Basin today on its way to the Missouri Valley area, Frazar said.

Frazar predicts isolated to scattered thunderstorms through Tuesday.

It last rained in Midland July 18.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms will continue across extreme West Texas and the Big Bend area tonight and spread over much of the state Saturday.

The showers and thunderstorms will keep temperatures on the cool side for most of the weekend.

Lows tonight will be in the 60s and 70s except in southern and southwestern portions of the state where readings will be in the 80s.

Highs Saturday will be mostly in the 80s and 90s except in the Big Bend area where readings should reach near the 100-degree mark.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms dampened the Permian Basin early today and some showers and thunderstorms were reported over extreme West Texas from the Guadalupe Mountains to El Paso.

Early morning temperatures were in the 80s in the lower Pecos valley the Rio Grande Plains and in the 60s and 70s over the rest of the state. Extremes ranged from 60 at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 82 at Del Rio.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 63 at Amarillo, 65 at Wichita Falls, 66 at Fort Worth, 68 at Waco, 74 at Austin, 73 at San Antonio, 68 at Houston, 74 at Corpus Christi and Brownsville, 66 at San Angelo, 65 at Lubbock, 73 at Midland and 66 at El Paso.

NATION

Temperatures dipped into the 40s this morning in New England after heavy rains that drenched parts of the country from Boston to Arizona.

Winds gusting up to 63 mph knocked a mobile home off its blocks Thursday night in the Great Falls, Mont., area, and hail cracked the window of a car.

Thunderstorms were scattered in parts of Arizona and New Mexico, and dust was swept up in 40-mph gusts in Utah.

Rain caused flooding in central Indiana and Centre County, Pa.

Clear skies spread across most of the Great Plains, but a lone thunderstorm crept Thursday evening from southwest Iowa across Nebraska to northeast Kansas.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours ending at 2 a.m. EDT included 1.35 inches at Jacksonville, Fla., an inch at Ozark, Ala., 0.77 inches at Chicopee Falls, Mass., and 0.41 inches at Peoria, Ill.

Temperatures this morning were in the 40s and 50s across northern New England and northeastern New York state; and in the 50s in northern Michigan, parts of Nebraska, the Rockies and the Pacific Northwest.

The high temperature in the nation Thursday was 123 degrees at Death Valley, Calif.

"We're not getting near the response that we hoped we would," he said of solicitations for fan and window-unit donations.

Elvis Curb, Midland Red Cross chapter manager, said the problem goes much deeper than a dwindling supply of coolers to give away.

Many of those who need the devices have had their electricty cut off because they could not afford to pay the bills, Curb said. The Red Cross this summer has spent $10,000 helping 400 Midlanders pay off their electricity bills, he said.

In addition, Curb said those in low-income, high-crime areas have been reluctant to help themselves.

"They choose to nail the window shut and refuse to allow natural ventilation in," he said,

Because of living in a high-crime area, they stay in their homes and will not seek shelter at a neighbor's home, a library or a shopping mall.

They apparently aren't taking advantage of shelter offered by local service agencies such as the Salvation Army.

The Army has set aside a room at the 300 S. Baird St. center for those wanting to escape the heat. Harwell said few have come.

However, the homeless have taken full advantage of the shelter. "We're getting a lot more transient fellas spending longer and longer times with us," Harwell said.

Midland Memorial Hospital spokesperson Sue Ristom said emergency staff members can recall treating only one patient with a heat-related sickness. The patient was treated and released.

"Apparently it has not been a problem," Ms. Ristom said. "We have not been overrun with people having heat stroke or heat exhaustion."

Crash death toll now 109; Two still missing

SIOUX CITY, Iowa (AP) — Rescue officials have recovered 109 bodies from the wreckage of the DC-10 that crashed after it lost its steering, the city manager said today.

Officials planned to lift one of the wings with a crane today to see if there were two more bodies underneath, City Manager Hank Sinda said at a news conference.

Sinda reported 184 survivors from United Airlines Flight 232, which would bring the total aboard to 295. That figure conforms to the total reported Thursday by National Transportation Safety Board officials.

United was sticking by its previous figure of 293 people aboard, United spokesperson Ann Thoma said today in Chicago.

"A person may have checked in at the ticket counter, gone to the lounge and had a glass of beer and missed the plane," Sinda said, explaining a possible reason for the discrepency. "Or they might have got on the plane, gotten off to use the washroom and missed the plane."

The National Guard and medical examiners had asked families for dental and medical records and other information that would help identify the victims, said Sinda.

"They're having a hard time identifying the bodies. Some of them are in very poor condition," he said.

Investigators said Capt. Al C. Haynes, the pilot, had virtually no control as he struggled to land the DC-10 after it lost an engine fan and sustained holes in the small wing of the tail.

The jumbo jet's hydraulic system, which is routed through the tail and allows the pilot to manipulate wing and tail controls, contained no fluid as Haynes tried to bring the plane into Sioux Gateway Airport, NTSB officials said Thursday night.

"The aircraft could only be turned to the right. They made three 360-degree turns" before Wednesday's crash landing, NTSB member Jim Burnett said.

United released the names of survivors Thursday but withheld a list of casualties while relatives were notified.

As workers continued to search wreckage strewn through a cornfield and across a runway, investigators released details of the harrowing last hour of the flight bound for Chicago and Philadelphia from Denver.

The chief flight attendant told the NTSB an explosion rocked the jet over western Iowa, knocking flight attendants to the floor, Burnett said. The attendant, who was unidentified, went into the cockpit and found the flight crew struggling to regain control of the plane, he said.

Thirty-four minutes before the crash landing, the pilot told air traffic controllers he had almost no control of the aircraft, Burnett said.

Eight minutes later, the crew expressed "serious doubts" they could reach Sioux City and began discussing small airports and four-lane highways as possible landing sites, he said.

Eight on ground killed as plane overshoots runway in Manila

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A Philippine Airlines plane carrying 98 people today overshot a runway, plowed into a concrete wall and bounced onto a highway, killing at least eight people on the ground, officials said.

The dead were crushed in their cars when the twin-engine BAC 1-11 jet careened onto Manila's 12-lane South Expressway, said witnesses and officials at nearby hospitals. The plane then came to rest on a railroad track.

Airline spokesman Enrique Santos said 91 people were injured, four critically. The critical injuries occurred on the ground, Santos said.

Eighty-five people on the plane, including two crew members, were hurt, he said.

Santos said the plane was arriving in Manila from Zamboanga City, 540 miles southeast of the capital, when it crashed at about 3:23 p.m. (3:23 a.m. EDT).

Air traffic controllers said the pilot, Capt. Ricardo Misa, reported that visibility was poor because of heavy rain and that he could see only half the runway as he approached.

"It was raining at the time, but weather conditions were above the minimum for landing, so he was cleared to land," Santos said. "He landed and he ranout of runway."

CRACK

"I looked at it strictly as a criminal case," said 39-year-old Doris Hayes.

Juror Michael Shelton, 33, agreed that Derrick seemed to be a victim of circumstance.

"He was there and it (the crack) was on him," Shelton said. "But it wasn't our position that he was a seller or user."

According to testimony before 142nd State District Judge Pat Baskin, Derrick was a passenger in a car that was pulled over by Midland police for racing on Big Spring Street. When Officer Kevin Wolf approached the vehicle in the early morning hours of April 16, he spotted Derrick hiding a small plastic bottle. The bottle contained 12 pebbles of crack, according to testimony.

Wolf testified he saw Derrick handle the bottle. But Derrick told the jury he was trying to hide a beer bottle from the officer, and insisted he knew nothing about the cocaine.

In June, Midland police told the Reporter-Telegram that crack has become so popular in Midland that the city had become linked with the deadly street gangs of Los Angeles.

So far in 1989, police narcotics officers have made at least 17 crack-related arrests, according to department records.

Crack is made from powder cocaine that is cooked into a concentrated, rock-like form. When smoked, it produces a "high" which is quick and intense, users have told police. Some users also lace marijuana cigarettes with bits of crack, according to officers.

In Midland crack is peddled in pebble-size quantities for $20 and is highly addictive, police say. Crack use first was noticed by police in Midland in 1988, and since then has slowly but steadily gained momentum.

Juror Katrena Neagle, 48, said she realizes the danger of crack.

"I don't know a lot about drugs, but from my understanding crack is fairly new to our area," Ms. Neagle said. "We are definitely against it being in our community."

Testimony during the two-day trial showed Derrick, an employee of the City of Odessa Parks Department, attends the New Hope Baptist Church in that city regularly, sings in the choir and at one time was superintendent of the Sunday School program. That combination convinced jurors to reject prosecutor Randy Fluke's call for a "substantial" prison sentence.

"The reasoning on our part was that this was his first offense, he comes from a good family who seemed very supportive of him, and he had nothing in his background to indicate he had been a troublemaker or in trouble before," Ms. Neagle said. "It seemed like he was in the wrong place; he was just caught with it.

"I have zero tolerance for drugs, but you do have to take other things into consideration when you are dealing with someone's life.

Abner Burnett, the Odessa attorney who represented Derrick, earlier had admitted contact with crack was "a bad deal." But he urged jurors to give his client probation.

"This is a young man who might be saved by probation and destroyed by prison," Burnett said in closing arguments. "He has no prior felonies, no indication of any kind of record."

Fluke kept hammering away at the crack issue in his argument before the jury.

He referred to the form of cocaine as "dangerous, new to this area," and "heinous."

"I want a zero tolerance policy of crack cocaine," Fluke said, asking jurors to send a message that crack involvement will result in "hard time and not probation."

"Does that send a message, if you possess crack cocaine, you are going to report to a probation officer?" the prosecutor asked.

"We hear all the talk about a war on drugs ... well, folks, now is the time you can do something about it."

After the sentence was handed down, Fluke reacted.

"I will never argue with a jury verdict on guilt/innocence or punishment," he said. "He (Derrick) seemed to be a person who was able to present evidence to the jury of a good character and a solid family background. Yet at the same time he was found guilty ot possession of one of the more dangerous drugs we have."

Fluke said the "luck of the draw" brought "literally a choirboy" to court as the first to face a Midland jury for crack.

"It's scary because it shows how drugs have permeated our society," he said.

Another juror said she felt sending Derrick to prison would have been a waste.

"It (crack) is a very prominent subject around the country," said 58-year-old Janet Moore. "Crack is one of the worst drugs there is. We do not know that he sold it or used it. It was just in his possession, as far as we were concerned ... we didn't feel the prison system would help this young man."

Fluke's call for a "zero-tolerance policy" did not fall on deaf ears, Ms. Moore said.

"I know he wanted us to send a messagem but we feel like under the circumstances it is the best message we can send."

One veteran law enforcement officer said he was not surprised at the jury's punishment, despite crack's bad reputation nationwide.

"If he is a first offender, it is not uncommon for him to get probation," said Capt. Clayton McKinney, who handles operations for the Midland County Sheriff's Department. "What is uncommon is that police officers will never have to handle him again. Probation doesn't work in 90 percent of the cases.

"Midland has good juries, but I think human nature is to be lenient the first time," McKinney continued.

"I tend to go with the jury, that he deserves a chance, but at the same time in narcotics cases that rarely ever works."

Finally, the list includes Katherine Kleberg Yarborough, a heir to the King Ranch in South Texas whose husband, W.B. Yarborough, recently retired from running King Ranch Oil and Gas.

The magazine places the Yarborough fortune at $120 million.

Of the state's larger cities, Texas Monthly says that Dallas money leads the list, with $13.5 billion, followed with Fort Worth money, at $6.6 billion, and Houston money, with $5.9 billion.

It might have added that Midland money comes in fourth. Perusal of the list indicates that the city leads San Antonio, Austin, Victoria and Denton in combined wealth of its wealthiest citizens.

A former Forbes magazine reporter, John Anderson, helped Texas Monthly compile the list. In estimating each representative's net worth, the magazine used public documents, real estate records and public corporation records.

Also of help were brokers and analysts, money managers, attorneys, bankers and business partners, the magazine said, adding that the figures quoted should be considered minimums.

Dallas entrepreneur H. Ross Perot led the list with an estimated net worth of $3 billion, and other names that might be familiar to some readers are Mary Kay Ash, Anne Bass, Dolph Briscoe, Trammell Crow, Dominique De Menil, Bill Hobby, and Lamar and Nelson Bunker Hunt.

A man from Fort Worth named Charles Dickie Williamson made $135 million in clothing — the "Dickies" brand that bears his name.

Also, a series of "close, but no cigar" entries listed names of prominent Texans who just didn't have the bucks to make the $100 million cutoff.

They included Gov. Bill Clements, with $70 million, former First Lady Lady Bird Johnson, with $75 million, and Department of Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher, also at $75 million.

LIST

Descended from the legendary Texas wildcatter Sid Richardson, the Fort Worth family members listed include Perry Richardson Bass, 74, and his sons, Sid Richardson Bass, 47; Edward Perry Bass, 47; Robert Muse Bass, 41; and Lee Marshall Bass, 33.

Forbes lists Robert Bass as the 20th most wealthy person in the U.S., with an estimated fortune of $1.6 billion. Sid Bass is ranked 52nd, and Lee Bass, 53rd, both with $1 billion.

Youngest and at the bottom of the Texas 100 is Austin's Michael Dell, whose computer firm has produced a $100 million fortune for the 24-year-old.

On the "close-but-no-cigar" roster, the magazine listed Texas Gov. Bill Clements, whose worth is estimated at $70 million; Lady Bird Johnson, Robert A. Mosbacher, and T. Boone Pickens, all with $75 million; and William Dean Singleton, $50 million.

The total worth of Dallas residents on the list is about $13.5 billion; Fort Worth, $6.6 billion; and Houston, $5.9 billion. Twenty-three on the list are women.

Combined net assets of the Texas 100 are about $33.6 billion. Fifty on the list inherited most or all their fortunes. Twenty-three are women.

The source of a $200 million worth attributed to Anne Hendricks Bass is listed as "divorce." Her split from Sid Bass came with the largest settlement in Texas history, the magazine said.

The average age of the Texas 100 is 60, with the oldest being J. Howard Marshall, 84, of Houston.

Eight on the list own all or part of a professional baseball, football or basketball team.

Flight professionals praise DC-10's pilot

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — The pilot who guided a crippled jetliner to a crash landing showed superior airmanship and "ought to be elected to the aviation hall of fame," according to a flight engineer familiar with DC-10s.

"If he lost all three hydraulic systems, then the world ought to be thankful that as many people survived that did," said Joe Sullivan of Richardson, Texas, retired flight engineer for American Airlines. "Without hydraulic, you're out of business."

Haynes

A United Airlines DC-10 bound from Denver to Chicago crash landed at Sioux Gateway Airport on Wednesday after pilot A.C. Haynes, a 33-year United veteran, radioed that he had a "complete hydraulic failure."

At least 76 people died, but 174 or more survived the crash. Haynes was hospitalized, but he and the other two cockpit crew members were among the survivors.

"If all the hydraulics were out, he ought to be elected to the aviation hall of fame," Sullivan said. "He had to call on every bit of his airmanship, and it had to be superior, not just good. I think it was a major miracle."

Jim Burnett, a National Transportation Safety Board member, told a news conference Thursday night that the DC-10's hydraulic system, which allow pilots to manipulate wing and tail controls, contained no fluid as Haynes tried to land the plane.

Earlier, Bob Raynesford, a spokesman for the FAA regional office in Kansas City, said the aircraft may have lost some hydraulic power but some must have remained.

"We were in constant contact with the crew for about 40 minutes, and the aircraft became more and more difficult to control as it got closer to Sioux City," Raynesford said. "We are hearing about total hydraulic failure, but it is way too premature to say for sure."

John Nance, a pilot and aviation writer in Seattle interviewed by the AP News Network, agreed the jumbo jet had to have some hydraulic pressure to stay airborne.

"I think we can say that we have a flight control problem but we did not, repeat, did not, have an airplane that was totally out of hydraulics, or he wouldn't have been flying at all."

The pilot probably relied on a backup source of hydraulic power called the ram air turbine that would have made it increasingly difficult to control the aircraft as it approached the airport, Nance said.

The ram air turbine operates some control surfaces by directing the rushing outside air. As the airplane slows for a landing, the forced air pressure would be reduced, thus making the surfaces harder to control.

"If all you've got powering your hydraulic systems is a ram air turbine, then as you slow down it will slow down, and then there will be less hydraulic pressure available and thus less control over the airplane," Nance said.

"I'll tell you what, I'll bet that damn thing hasn't been used twice," in the history of the aircraft, said Sullivan. "It's an absolute last resort. It's not going to save you."

Ken Plunkett, a researcher for the Aviation Safety Institute of Columbus, Ohio, said the DC-10 has three separate hydraulic systems that control virtually every function of the airplane.

"It controls the wing flaps, the tail elevators, the rudders, the brakes, the steering — everything," he said. "If you lose it, you lose most of your control over the plane. That seems to be what happened here."

On small planes, control surfaces are small and can be operated by direct linkages from the control panel. But on large planes, the hydraulic system provides a power assist. If it fails, there are no alternative manual controls.

"The DC-10 has redundant hydraulics," said Maury Seitz, a retired Delta Airlines pilot who now lives in Hurst, Texas. "It's set up so that if you lose one, you won't lose all of your hydraulic fluid. And if you lose one system, you still have other systems.

Seitz speculated that the pilot lost rudder control just as he approached the runway.

"From the looks of it, he had that baby under control, but then he got into a roll situation," he said.

Sioux City shows caring spirit after crash

SIOUX CITY, Iowa (AP) — This Missouri River city opened its arms to the survivors of United Flight 232 as residents offered their time, blood and prayers to heal the wounds left by the fiery crash.

"I didn't get any sleep last night, but I don't think I'm going to have any problem tonight," fire Capt. Terry Schmidt said late Thursday. He had been at Sioux Gateway Airport around the clock since the DC-10 jumbo jet crashed while trying to make an emergency landing the day before.

While crews stopped searching the wreckage and began to close off the area, more than 300 people gathered at the Cathedral of the Epiphany to pray for the victims and the survivors.

"The heroism, care, the concern, of the passengers and crew of flight 232 was harvested in this sacred field," the Rev. Jerry Cosgrove said of the cornfield where the plane came to rest.

"A field which became a tomb for far too many was also a cradle of new life for others. A field became a sacred place."

Vacationing, off-duty and former employees of the city's two hospitals pitched in to deal with the emergency.

At times there were two doctors to every patient as survivors were wheeled into emergency wards a dozen at a time, said Dr. David Greco, chief of the emergency department at Marian Health Center. He said people turned out in such numbers to give blood Wednesday night that less than a third of it was needed for injured passengers.

"I think there was a tremendous feeling of people wanting to do something," said Les Horrell Jr., chamber of commerce president.

Sioux City, a beef, pork and grain processing center, is a town of 82,000 that sits on the east bank of a giant bend in the Missouri River.

"Our chief of staff chartered an airplane and flew home from vacation in Minnesota," said Sue Conner, spokeswoman for St. Luke's Medical Center.

"We had offers of help from doctors and nurses at hospitals in three states," she said. "Several hospital burn units also offered to send nurses or treat our patients."

At Marian, Vice President Andrew Allen said supplies arrived from hospitals in Sioux Falls, S.D., and Omaha, Neb. "We probably got five months of inventory inside of three hours," he said.

Nurses were handing out emotional support along with bandages, said Jane Morgan of St. Louis, Red Cross health services officer for the relief operation.

"They need someone to listen to them," Ms. Morgan said. "Someone to go through the feeling they have — the anger, the grief, the guilt."

The Rev. Bob Condon, a Roman Catholic priest and psychology professor at Briar Cliff College, where many survivors were put up for the night, said the school was swamped with volunteers.

"People want to help in any way they can, so much so that is was almost overwhelming," he said.

Pat Kosse, a recent graduate of Briar Cliff, arrived Thursday morning when the school already had more volunteers than it could use. She ended up giving directions to news people and others on campus.

"A lot of people's hearts are going out to the victims of the crash. I couldn't believe that something like this happened in Sioux City," she said.

Clean air bill would ease motor vehicle pollution demands

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's final clean air bill is sparking stinging criticism from environmentalists because it would ease an early draft's requirements for reducing motor vehicle pollution and provide wide government latitude to meet industry's concerns.

An Environmental Protection Agency summary of the legislation was given to members of Congress Thursday and made available by lawmakers to reporters. The summary showed the final version, to be sent to Congress today, was changed from a preliminary draft that was written June 30.

The new language, compared to the earlier draft, would push back new emissions standards for cars, trucks and buses, and would give the EPA administrator discretion to delay new regulations even further.

Other provisions of the final bill, some known previously, would give the administrator, local governments and industry flexibility in taking measures to reduce ozone pollution, acid rain and airborne toxic chemicals. The EPA chief could specifically address industry's economic costs in making key decisions.

Richard Ayres, head of a coalition of all major environmental groups, said the legislation's flexibility was a prescription for "chicanery and fraud" by industry. He said acid rain components would be reduced less than promised, and said giving weight to economic concerns would reduce the effectiveness of provisions to control toxic emissions.

But EPA Administrator William Reilly, who would get to make many key decisions under the legislation, called the bill "faithful in every respect to the spirit and letter of the promises he (Bush) made" to clean the nation's air.

"There are a lot of tough things in the bill," said an EPA official who, speaking on condition of anonymity, contended environmentalists were focusing on "relatively minor concerns."

Rep. Henry Waxman, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce environment subcommittee, scheduled the first hearing on the Bush bill for Monday.

He called the final language "weaker than last month's draft, which was far weaker than the president's promises."

"It undercuts the clean fuel program, pushes back compliance deadlines and loosens emissions standards. The bill actually appears to allow emissions from cars and trucks to increase from today's levels," Waxman said.

According to the summary, new buses operated in cities with more than 1 million population would be required to use clean-burning fuel. The June 30 draft would have imposed the requirement on all cities of 250,000 or more.

While the bus program would be phased in over the 1991 through 1994 model years, the EPA administrator would have the authority to delay the plan for two years for economic reasons.

The final language also would allow the administrator, for economic reasons, to revise and postpone for two years a clean-fuel program for cars — a cornerstone of the Bush program.

The bill would establish a schedule requiring sale of clean-fuel cars, beginning in the 1995 model year, in the most heavily polluted cities. One million of these cars would be sold in each of the model years 1997 through 2004.

Station faces financial, time obstacles

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Now that President Bush has endorsed "a journey into tomorrow" — a tomorrow that includes people living and working on the moon and Mars — Congress will first have to give NASA a space haven closer to home.

It's called Space Station Freedom, an orbiting laboratory, that was to have become a reality in 1992 but will be lucky to be built in time to greet the 21st century.

Only a few hours after Bush spoke Thursday, the station survived another financial cliffhanger in the House of Representatives, one of a long series.

When President Ronald Reagan proposed the station in 1984, the cost for that single component of a moon-Mars future was estimated to be $8 billion. Today's guess is $30 billion and some experts say even that won't come close.

Returning to the moon and going on from there to Mars would cost untold billions more and would require a buildup of NASA engineers and industrial machinery not unlike the Apollo days of the 1960s. More than 400,000 people worked on the moon program; today, NASA and its civilian contractors employ fewer than 150,000.

One of the president's chief aides, Budget Director Richard Darman, was the only administration official to say what Bush's vision might cost.

"Our current estimates are roughly — very, very roughly — that if you went to Mars by the year 2020 and did so first establishing a lunar base and then going from the moon, the pricetag over this 30-year period would be on the order of $400 billion," he told reporters. The figure, he said, is in today's dollars, not figuring in inflation.

"I know it seems like a very large number but you have to remember that it is over a 30-year period," Darman said. "Obviously, it puts the system to the test. It is a question of how much one cares about the future."

Bush, in a speech that commemorated the 20th anniversary of the first landing on the moon, said pointedly that it is up to Congress to make the space dreams a reality.

It is in the Congress, he said, "where the future of the space station and our future as a spacefaring nation will be decided."

Bush called the space station an essential bridge to the moon-Mars proposals for the 21st Century.

Members of Congress criticized Bush's omission of a timetable and estimated costs but the House readily turned back an attempt by Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., to transfer $714 million from next year's budget for the space station to programs for veterans' medical care, pollution control and low-income and elderly housing.

"If the Schumer amendment had passed, it probably would have killed the space station," said Rep. Bill Nelson, D-Fla.

Nelson, who once rode on the space shuttle and is a strong advocate of Bush's proposals, said that NASA can't meet those goals on its present budget level of about $10 billion a year.

"It will have to be a $30 billion a year NASA to carry this out," he said. That would represent more than 2 percent of the national budget — but still far less than the 4 percent-plus required to send Apollo to the moon.

AIDS may infect more cells than once estimated

WASHINGTON (AP) — AIDS patients may have up to 1,000 times more diseased blood cells than previously believed, making it even harder to stamp out the virus that causes the fatal disease, according to a National Institutes of Health study published today.

In a study led by Steven M. Schnittman of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, researchers discovered that in a patient with active AIDS the virus that causes the disease can infect up to 1 percent — 1 of every 100 — of a blood cell known as the T4 lymphocyte.

Schnittman said in an interview that previous studies, which used indirect measurements of the infection rate, had calculated that only 1 in every 10,000 to 100,000 of the T4 lymphocytes in such a patient were infected.

The higher rate of infection, a factor that doctors call "virus load," suggests that it will be more difficult to develop a therapy to find and eliminate each and every pocket of the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) which causes AIDS.

"The quantity of the virus (found in the study) was a lot higher than previously expected," Schnittman. "There are more cells infected, a greater proportion, than we knew before."

Schnittman said the study showed that a new research procedure, called polymerase chain reaction, or PCR, may be used to monitor the level of AIDS infection as a patient progresses from a point of showing no symptoms to where the disease becomes life-threatening.

With PCR, he said, researchers could measure precisely the effects of drugs being tested to control or kill the AIDS virus.

A research report authored by Schnittman and eight other scientists was published today in the journal Science.

Schnittman said he and his colleagues used blood samples from patients with active AIDS to conduct the PCR search for the virus.

Researchers first separated from the samples the T4 lymphocytes. These immunity cells are thought to be the primary target of the HIV virus.

Blood studies in the past counted the number of cells infected with the AIDS virus by measuring proteins triggered by an active HIV virus. Thus, the level of infection was inferred instead of directly measured.

But Schnittman said the PCR technique detects the genetic pattern of the AIDS virus while it is within a cell. In this way, he said, the researchers could find infected cells even when the AIDS virus is inactive.

The PCR survey, which was developed only about a year ago, he said, is an important new tool to help scientists understand the life cycle of the highly complex AIDS virus, and perhaps find a weak point where the killer disease could be attacked with drugs.

Schnittman said the PCR study also showed that the AIDS virus does not readily infect another type of immunity cell, the monocyte, which also circulates in the blood. This finding is a surprise, he said, because a monocyte matures into an immune cell called macrophage. Studies have shown that macrophages in the brain, liver and lymph nodes can be heavily loaded with AIDS.

"The real Trojan horse in the body is the T4 cells and not the monocytes," said Schnittman.

War heroes urge change in Bill of Rights

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former prisoner of war in Vietnam says changing the Constitution to ban flag desecration would start a wave of amendments which the United States would "not survive as a free nation."

James Warner, a Marine flight officer who spent 5½ years in a North Vietnamese prison camp, and Vietnam War Medal of Honor winner Gordon Roberts urged Congress Thursday to resist the political pressure to change the Bill of Rights to outlaw burning of the American flag.

President Bush is supporting an effort in Congress to use an amendment to undo the Supreme Court's ruling last month that flag burning was a protected form of political expression.

More than a dozen Republican lawmakers demonstrated their enthusiasm for the amendment at a demonstration Thursday where congressmen drenched an effigy of a flag-burner on the steps of the Supreme Court.

Testifying to the House Judiciary constitutional law subcommittee, Warner said, "If this amendment be issued by this House, and ratified by this nation, there will come a deluge against the Bill of Rights."

"Our Bill of Rights has served as a legal restraint upon our government for 200 years," said Warner, who is a lawyer. "If these restraints be removed, we shall not survive as a free nation."

Roberts, who served with the Army in Vietnam, said the flag has a special place in his heart, but said men do not "serve this country for the flag alone."

"Each of us that has worn the uniform of this country are fully aware that the Pledge of Allegiance ends in the words, 'And Justice for All,'" he said.

Roberts recalled that on a recent visit to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial he saw the flag reflected on the granite wall etched with the names of the dead. "They were as much a part of the flag as the cloth and stitching," said Roberts.

He also warned that an amendment would spark competition among state legislators politicians for who could then enact the toughest penalty for flag burning.

The attractiveness of such one-upmanship was demonstrated before a crush of television cameras in front of the high court, where the Republican congressmen carried fire extinguishers and a bucket of water to show how intended to deal with flag burners.

The legislators, reacting to rumors that a flag-burning was going to take place, cheered and shouted as some of them sprayed and splashed their water at a stuffed-clothing effigy of Gregory Lee Johnson, whose 1984 Texas flag-burning led to the court decision.

Rep. Dana Rohrabacher, R-Calif., said Republicans were showing Americans how to deal with flag burnings.

"If they don't have a bucket of water, I hope they take care of business however they can," Rohrabacher said.

Reservation rally leaves two dead, nine wounded

WINDOW ROCK, Ariz. (AP) — Hundreds of supporters of an ousted Navajo Indian chairman clashed with police and took over a tribal building in a melee that left two men dead and nine wounded, witnesses and officials said.

Supporters of suspended tribal Chairman Peter MacDonald occupied the tribe's business and finance building for five hours late Thursday after a pro-MacDonald rally that turned violent, authorities said.

Tribal officials said the dead men were shot by tribal police defending their fellow officers.

MacDonald disagreed vehemently in a statement issued today.

The tribal police, he said, "randomly opened fire on Navajo civilians who assembled to protest their rights to redress the reasons why the interim government was established." The ousted chairman said he was "shocked, appalled and angered" by the police actions.

Tribal police, federal agents and state police sealed off the area today. In Albuquerque, N.M., U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs area director Sid Mills said he had dispatched as many agents as available to the reservation.

A federal Bureau of Indian Affairs tactical team was working with tribal police and FBI agents were sent to the remote reservation, said Steve Goldstein, a spokesman for Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan Jr. in Washington.

The violence in the tribal capital near the Arizona-New Mexico line was the latest episode in the struggle for power on the Navajo Reservation. With 200,000 members the Navajos are the nation's largest Indian tribe.

The two victims, both MacDonald supporters, were Arnold Begay and a man identified as either Jimmy Dixon or James Dickson. Both men were shot, said Rosalyn Curtis, spokeswoman for the Indian Health Hospital in nearby Fort Defiance.

Four of the other nine hospitalized suffered gunshot wounds, and the others were treated for cuts and other injuries, Ms. Curtis said.

According to Goldstein, tribal Police Chief George John was in Washington and pro-MacDonald forces were trying to reinstate former Police Chief Wilbur Kellogg.

In January, MacDonald was accused during U.S. Senate hearings of accepting kickbacks and personally sharing in the $7.2 million profit realized by non-Indian businessmen who sold the tribe a ranch for $33.4 million in July 1987. He was placed on administrative leave by the Tribal Council on Feb. 13.

After a rally at the home of a MacDonald booster about a mile from the government buildings, a throng of 300 members of the MacDonald-backing Pro-Dineh Voters group and others marched or drove early Thursday evening to the seat of government. "Dineh" is a Navajo word meaning "the people."

NATION IN BRIEF

Teacher pay keeping pace with inflation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Average teacher salaries are at an all-time high this year but still amount to just $737 above 1972 levels when adjusted for inflation, the American Federation of Teachers said today.

The union released an annual 50-state survey that put the average 1988-89 salary at $29,629. That compares with a $9,705 average salary in 1972, which translates into $28,892 in 1988 dollars, according to the group.

AFT President Albert Shanker said the bottom line is that all the raises teachers have received between 1972 and 1989 amount to about $41 a year.

"That's obviously not enough to pay a mortgage or provide for one's family, and it's certainly not enough of an incentive to enter teaching," he said in a statement.

Shanker said real earnings fell for a decade after 1972 and while salaries have jumped in the 1980s, "trying to recover the salary high water mark is as motivating as trying to get ahead on a treadmill."

The AFT survey, based on information from state education departments, showed that the average teacher salary has increased 5.5 percent over 1987-88. Alaska had the highest average salary at $41,832 while South Dakota was at the bottom with $20,525.

Fourteen states reported starting salaries exceeding $20,000 and four — Idaho, North Dakota, South Dakota and West Virginia — had starting salaries below $16,000. Five states — Alaska, California, Connecticut, Hawaii and New York — reported first-year wages of more than $22,000.

Taggart has no records

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Jim Bakker's former personal aide testified Thursday in his federal tax evasion trial he didn't have any way to prove that cash advances he took while at the PTL ministry were for business use.

David Taggart said under cross-examination by prosecutor David Brown that proper record keeping would have helped determine whether sums of money he drew from PTL accounts were taxable or not.

Taggart, 32, and his brother, James, are charged with evading $525,000 in income taxes after taking nearly $1.2 million in PTL money for their own use during a four-year period beginning in 1984.

Under questioning by defense lawyer Ben Cotten, Taggart said that as a vice president of the ministry, he had direct authority from Bakker to take large cash advances, sign PTL checks, use PTL credit cards and authorize bonuses for PTL employees.

Human bones found in dig

LAKE CITY, Colo. (NYT) — Scientists on Thursday were brown-bagging the bones of four of the five victims of "Colorado's Cannibal."

The excavation team now has identified bones from four individuals in a 4-by-5-foot shallow grave that originally yielded parts of one long-dead prospector, but on deeper digging turned out to hold a jumble of skeletons.

A mostly intact skull, a zig-zag of leg bones and some complete spines were revealed Wednesday with trowels and whisk brooms. A good portion of Rhursday was needed for cataloging those bones in paper bags and boxing them up for the ride to a laboratory in Tucson, Ariz.

There was still no certainty as to whether self-confessed cannibal, and known liar, Alferd Packer had an 1874 picnic of his companions in this formerly rugged area of the San Juan Mountains.

Panel approves student aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House panel on Thursday approved two bills that would make it possible for Chinese students to remain in the United States until the turmoil in their homeland subsides.

The measures, approved by the Judiciary immigration subcommittee, go to the full Judiciary Committee as early as next week. Backers of the bills say the visibility of the Chinese students' plight may be what it takes to propel the so-called "safe haven" provisions into law this year.

Texan's 'road kill' creations make use of bones

And flesh-eating beetles found in bat cave do part of the work

By DEBI MARTIN
New York Times News Service

MASON, Texas — Donna Hensley brakes for dead animals.

She picks up carcasses on Texas 71 between Austin and Mason, and uses the bones of the dead animals in her novel creations of necklaces, earrings, wall hangings and furniture.

To remove the skin from the bones, she places them inside a 20,000-square-foot cave filled with thousands of flesh-eating beetles and millions of female Mexican free-tail bats. When Ms. Hensley returns to the cave to retrieve her art supplies, the beetles have eaten everything but the bones.

"They are so meticulous," Ms. Hensley said as she marveled at the job the beetles had done on a bat skeleton she had just removed from the cave. "They clean in between even the tiniest of bones."

Ms. Hensley, who lives in Austin with her singer-songwriter husband David Halley, also has a home in Mason 10 miles from the cave, which has one of the largest bat colonies on the continent.

ON A HOT DAY in July, Ms. Hensley went into the cave to reclaim two snake carcasses.

The smell in the cave was overpowering. The aroma, which can be smelled several feet from the mouth of the cave, comes from the ammonia that is released when the excrement of millions of bats decomposes.

The cave is usually 10 degrees hotter than it is outside.

Bats cover every inch of the walls and ceiling in the cave. Hundreds of them fly over her head while she is in the cave.

The floor of the cave is a moving sidewalk, densely populated with beetles and the soft black powder of fresh bat droppings.

To keep from inhaling the fumes, she wears a respirator.

To protect her head from bat droppings, she wears a hat.

"It's like a light sprinkle on your head, but you forget about it once you are down there, it's so fascinating," Ms. Hensley said. 'It's like being on another planet. Right now the bats are having their young. You can watch the babies actually pull themselves out of the birth canal. They reach out with their little claws and grab their mother's stomach, otherwise, they'd fall and hit the floor. They perch, and start nursing."

Standing outside the large opening to the cave, holding a bag filled with snake carcasses, Ms. Hensley said the beetles eat dead bats and anything that is sick that crawls into the cave.

"The beetles can sense when something is sick," said Ms. Hensley, standing tall in her plastic cowgirl boots, a flashlight hanging around her neck. "I never go down there with a headache."

She is not afraid when she is in the cave. She usually goes into it alone. "The smell is so bad, you just know that no one is lurking in the shadows."

WHY NOT JUST get a bunch of beetles and forget about going into this smelly cave? That would be impractical, Ms. Hensley said.

"If I were to have, say, a large freezer of beetles, it would take them a month to devour a deer. In the cave, it only takes a week. Besides, I'd have to feed the beetles constantly."

Back at her home studio, Ms. Hensley sat on the floor and polished a coyote rib with a buffing drill.

She said that there are some bones that she will pass on. She is not interested in dead raccoons. She said that their bodies are so oily that their bones have colors in them that are hard to remove. "Nobody wants to wear blue bones around their neck," Ms. Hensley said.

Ms. Hensley bleaches the bones after she has removed them from the cave. The process gives them a clean, sleek look. She also polishes them and carves designs with drilling tools.

She developed the process after talking with friends who work with wood.

"I used to go to supply shops and say, 'If you were to polish a bone, what would you use?' I got some funny looks."

Bones are just about everywhere in Ms. Hensley's home studio in this small town about 30 miles from Llano.

Bones are used as door stops and mantelpieces.

On the wall in the living room hangs "Initiation," a Hensley piece that includes a deer head and bones from a vulture.

"A vulture came down to eat a dead deer on the road and he got hit too. It was a big mess. I took them down to the cave, then put them together in this piece of art.

She sees her work in the context of folk-art traditions.

"The true meaning of folk art is to use available materials."

Dead animals found on the highway certainly qualify under that definition, she said.

"But most people think, before they see my work, that it is going to be death-rockish, macabre and satanic."

A TABLE IN the kitchen is covered with bones, sorted by type, so that she can quickly find what she needs while creating a piece. Vertebrae have been organized into a separate pile. There's a stack of small claws. One used to belong to a bobcat. Armadillo bones sit apart from those that came from snakes, her favorite.

"Snake bones are so tiny. They are also the hardest to come by. Vultures can easily carry them off the road. If I see a dead snake, anytime, anywhere, I pick it up. They are small enough that I can store them in the freezer."

Between trips to the cave, most of her carcasses are kept in a prickly-pear patch behind her home.

Bones from bats are not a major element in her work, but she does believe that having their carcasses around brings good luck.

When she began Road Kill, the name she chose for her line of jewelry and furnishings, Ms. Hensley had no reputation in the art world. Her works were quickly picked up by galleries in Dallas and Los Angeles.

One of her furnishings, a cabinet made of pine, cedar, antler bones and rawhide cord, sells for $1,625. Her jewelry, which is priced between $20 and $40, will be available after July 15 in Austin at J.B. Tollett Gallery on San Antonio Street.

Buyers and sellers of her art seem to be as impressed with her pieces as they are by the process through which they are created.

When she first started picking up carcasses she wondered if she had gone batty.

"I thought that I had gone a bit nuts, that I was taking art a bit too far. It's strange to walk up on something that is dead. But after a while I realized that when I saw a dead animal that there was nothing there anymore. What's left there on the road really has nothing to do with some cute little furry creature anymore."

Ms. Hensley, 34, got the idea for Road Kill after meeting a group of biologists who studied the bat cave last year. She had been going to the cave to watch the bats fly out at night. She made friends with the scientists, who taught her what she needed to know to go into the cave safely.

SHE HAD BEEN thinking that she needed to do something creative.

"I started getting this vicarious thrill out of David's career (he wrote "Hard Livin," which made it to the Top 10 on the Billboard country charts) and I realized that I wanted to be creative too."

Ms. Hensley, who grew up in Lubbock and has a degree in journalism from Texas Tech University, believes that she has found her niche in Road Kill.

Thanks to the heavy traffic on Central Texas highways, she is in no danger of running low on art supplies.

"These huge trucks come down the highway and they can't stop because they've got something like 24 gears. Sometimes the number of smashed animals from Mason to Austin is just incredible. The highways are littered with them."

There are so many carcasses on the roads that she can be selective.

"I can pick and choose. There is a good road kill and a bad road kill. One that's been nicked and is dead, I can use. If it's been really smashed, the bones are all broken, and I can't use it. If it's on the side of the road, that's even better because I won't endanger myself running across the highway after it."

Ms. Hensley also gets bones for her works from a meat-processing plant in Mason. Hunters bring in their deer kill. After the plant removes the meat from the bones, the head, backbone and legs are thrown away.

Bush performance shows he's a leader

After observing his performance at two western summits, it's becoming increasingly obvious that President George Bush is a world-class leader who can play the international power game with the best of them. In fact, a number of foreign observers have given Bush high marks for his performances in Brussels and, most recently, in Paris.

Following the Paris summit, a staff member to French President Francois Mitterrand made the comment that:

"President Bush is not a larger-than-life personality, but he has the pertinent facts at his fingertips and the global picture well in mind."

Other foreign observers have found Bush equally adept at international politics and not been hesitant to say so. That should be encouraging to Americans who may have thought the United States lost a great deal of its "edge" in the international arena when Ronald Reagan, with his noted personal appeal and political savvy, left office.

Reagan's political acumen and affability were noteworthy indeed. But Bush's performance since taking office should have removed most of the doubt that he's a capable leader. For one, the president is notably relaxed in carrying out the functions of the office — even meeting the press. He gives the impression that he likes what he's doing and is comfortable in his role. He's not uncertain nor hesitant about making decisions; he obviously is in control and wields that lofty power with both humility and wisdom.

In countering the public relations assault by Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, Bush has been both determined to protect Western interests and open-minded enough to allow the Soviets to develop their new relationship with the Western world and to move toward a freer society. Bush is following Reagan in that regard, but it is precisely the kind of leadership that the United States and the free world needed at this point in time: Cautious, yet open to change.

Of course, there's no question that Bush had the experience of a true world leader — even while serving as vice president. He had served as director of the Central Intelligence Agency, U.S. envoy to the United States to People's Republic of China and U.S. ambassador to the United Nations. Those positions necessarily prepare an individual for the tasks he will confront as president.

Bush is meeting the difficult challenges of the presidency in good fashion, and if the comments from other world leaders who have witnessed his performance at summits are any indication, he will continue to ably lead the free world in the right direction.

Another View:

China courts dollars

These days, China has something of a public-relations problem. The world, it seems, can't erase the bloody images of the Tiananmen Square massacre no matter how hard Chinese officials push their disinformation campaign.

Now, the same officials who ordered the slaughter of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of pro-democracy demonstrators are wringing their blood-washed hands in concern over lost tourist dollars. Last year, 4.3 million visitors pumped $2.2 billion into the Chinese economy. But after the bullets flew in Beijing, tourism skidded to a near halt.

Last week, China called in 400 travel agents from around the world for an all-expenses-paid emergency seminar on ways to salvage what was expected to be a lucrative summer season for all. Never mind the propriety of accepting the invitation, the travel agents' advice bordered on the ludicrous.

China's problem, the agents concluded, is one of "destination credibility." Lapsing into some ironic combat metaphors, one agent complained to The Associated Press that "until there is some sizable effort from big guns in Chinese tourism, we are fighting an uphill battle."

What the foreign travel agents want China's "big guns" to do, among other things, is end martial law in Beijing. A wise idea, but the recommendations didn't stop there. A San Francisco agent, for instance, suggested that Chinese soldiers be ordered to keep their fingers off the triggers while tourists are around and "smoke a cigarette or drink a Coke in order to ease the tense situation."

An Australian agent complained that tourists from his country get "jittery" when confronted with armed soldiers. "Australians are used to taking vacations on beaches," the agent noted, "and you don't find men with guns on beaches."

Demonstrators savagely slaughtered by the Chinese government were motivated by a desire for democratic reform. The tour operators now joining in efforts to sponge off China's bloody image are motivated by something far less laudable — profits for themselves and a government that befogs the truth about its own brutality.

JACK ANDERSON

Soviets continue to revel in openness

MOSCOW — It's 1776 in the Soviet Union. The United States and France have already celebrated the bicentennials of their respective democratic revolutions. But what the Soviets lack in timing, they more than make up for with enthusiasm.

Jack Anderson

Political dissidents and ethnic minorities are demanding more glasnost and perestroika than Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev had in mind. The Baltic States are agitating for autonomy. Elsewhere in the Soviet Union, democratic expression has taken the form of violent protests.

There is a sense here that openness may be short-lived, and the Soviets we met — officials, dissidents and common citizens alike — seem eager to exercise their new freedom of speech before they lose it. There is a compulsion to tell the truth. They volunteer confessions about the atrocities of the past and criticisms of the present government.

Soviets have good reason to spill their emotions now because they may be gagged again. The hardliners who oppose Gorbachev's reforms are warning bitterly that freedom could lead to anarchy. The democratic reforms have brought to the surface social, political, ethnic and economic conflicts that could tear the Soviet Union apart.

Every nation should belong to the people who inhabit it, but the "people's republics" of the communist world are ruled by an elite. They govern in the name of, but without the consent of, the people.

No government is likely to agree to its own termination, and the communist regime that rules the Soviet Union is no exception. Gorbachev's reforms have caused repercussions that he didn't anticipate. But he reportedly believes that perestroika, like pregnancy, cannot be done halfway.

On his recent tour of China, Gorbachev witnessed a preview of what could happen here. The scenario was familiar: China's aging leader, Deng Xiaoping, introduced economic reforms that stirred demands for political reforms. When the outcry threatened party rule, he ruthlessly suppressed the demonstrations.

Gorbachev closely watched and analyzed the tumultuous events in China. Our sources think that if Gorbachev had been in Deng's place, he would have granted more political freedoms. His strategy is to endure the ups and downs of perestroika and adjust to the changes.

But Gorbachev concedes this much to his critics in the Kremlin: Too much freedom could fracture the Soviet Union into 15 independent republics. He has no intention of allowing perestroika to go that far.

The winds of democracy, meanwhile, have swept a new parliament into Moscow. It is still called the Supreme Soviet, but it is nothing like the old one that used to rubber-stamp party policies.

The new Supreme Soviet is exploding with democratic debate. At first, the refreshingly contentious sessions were watched on live television by so many people that Soviet productivity dropped off by 20 percent. The authorities had to shut off the television cameras so people would go back to work.

The parliamentary chambers still ring with open debate. The voices of opposition are heard loud and clear. But Gorbachev has developed a simple device for controlling democracy in the Supreme Soviet. When the people's elected representatives start to speak the unspeakable, he turns off their microphones.

RIDING HIGH — The Commerce Department keeps a fleet of limousines that sit around burning up money. Federal investigators recently inspected the motor pool and found that the chauffeured limos were being used about 20 percent of the time. Many of the government drivers are idling their time away. When the cars were on the road, they usually carried bureaucrats to places that are within Washington's central taxi zone, where the fare is $3. In contrast, the taxpayers spend about $30 every time a limo pulls out of the Commerce garage. The cars were often used after hours when the drivers were on overtime.

MINI-EDITORIAL — A recent Washington Post poll revealed that more Americans know who is on "The People's Court" than who is on the Supreme Court. We're not surprised. Judge Wapner isn't shy about TV cameras in his courtroom. But, more importantly, if somebody burned your flag, he'd make them pay.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, July 21, the 202nd day of 1989. There are 163 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty years ago, on July 21, 1969, Apollo 11 astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin blasted off after 21½ hours on the lunar surface and returned to the command module, piloted by Michael Collins. They left behind a plaque that read in part, "We came in peace for all mankind."

On this date:

In 1816, Paul Julius Reuter, founder of the British news agency that bears his name, was born in Hesse, Germany.

In 1831, Belgium became independent as Leopold I was proclaimed King of the Belgians.

In 1861, the first Battle of Bull Run was fought at Manassas, Va., resulting in a Confederate victory.

In 1899, author Ernest Hemingway was born in Oak Park, Ill.

In 1925, the so-called "Monkey Trial" ended in Dayton, Tenn. with John T. Scopes' conviction for violating state law by teaching Darwin's Theory of Evolution. The conviction was later overturned.

In 1944, American forces landed on Guam during World War II.

In 1944, the Democratic convention, meeting in Chicago, nominated Sen. Harry S. Truman to be vice president.

In 1949, the U.S. Senate ratified the North Atlantic Treaty by a vote of 82-13.

In 1954, France surrendered North Vietnam to the Communists.

In 1961, Captain Virgil "Gus" Grissom became the second American to rocket into a sub-orbital pattern around the Earth, flying aboard the Liberty Bell 7.

In 1980, Walter Polovchak, a 12-year-old Ukrainian boy who said he did not want to return to the Soviet Union with his family, was granted political asylum in Chicago.

In 1983, Maine schoolgirl Samantha Smith ended her two-week tour of the Soviet Union. She and her parents left without getting to see the man who had invited them, Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov.

CHARLEY REESE

Dose of paranoia leads to understanding

Deep Throat, the source of the Watergate scoop by then Washington Post reporters Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein, was actually a Soviet agent who had become a high-ranking CIA official.

Charley Reese

CIA intercepts of communications from the Soviet Embassy in Washington to Moscow revealed that Dr. Henry Kissinger had advised the Soviet ambassador on how to negotiate arms control with the incoming Carter administration.

The Soviet defector who cleared the KGB of any complicity in the John F. Kennedy assassination was actually an agent whose mission was to mislead the CIA.

The head of the CIA's counter-intelligence, the late James Angleton, was himself a Soviet mole, according to an internal CIA investigation.

These and other interesting matters are argued or reported in a book called "Widows," by William Corson, Joseph J. Trento, and Susan B. Trento (published by Crown).

It is a fascinating book. Some books about intelligence are rah-rah books and some books are of the bash-the-spooks genre. This one is more in the way of spooks have clay feet. Neither the CIA nor the FBI cooperated and that's understandable, but it does appear to be a well-researched book with copious footnotes.

There is none of this anonymous source stuff. The authors name the CIA agent who came to the conclusion that Angleton was a mole, and they name the agent who made the allegation against the man they believe to be Deep Throat.

The book centers on three men who officially were patriots and who officially committed suicide or were kidnapped by the Soviet secret service, the KGB. The authors contend and build quite a good circumstantial case that the two were Soviet agents who faked their ends and returned to the Soviet Union while the third was murdered by the KGB.

What discerning readers will get from this book are no clear answers, but a very clear picture of the difficult and byzantine world of counter-intelligence. They will also get a picture of Washington which will disabuse them of any pollyanna notions about the nation's capital. They will come away feeling a great deal less secure than one does after reading a Tom Clancy novel, where the good guys are kind, brave and handsome, never make mistakes, and always win.

The world as it is, warts and all, is always preferable to fantasy disguised as reporting. If things were perfect, they'd be dull. Humans are capable of heroism and nobility because they are in fact vulnerable, fallible, and ultimately mortal but on occasion rise above their frailities. It is no big deal to part the Red Sea if you are God.

This book will remind readers that despite what Mikhail Gorbachev and George Bush may say at formal banquets, our two systems remain locked in combat and conflict. The worse the Soviet economy becomes, the more it will probably rely on espionage to steal the technology it cannot afford to develop or purchase.

The Soviet Union's KGB is not a fantasy operation with men 10 feet tall, but it is a formidable opponent. Spying and intrigue have a long tradition in Moscow that predates communism, and the KGB does not have to worry about congressional committees, newspaper reporters, or authors adept at using the Freedom of Information Act.

I said the book will make you feel less secure. It should also give you a better appreciation of how much hard work is going on at the FBI, the CIA, and other intelligence agencies and a much better understanding of what these men and women do.

Read "Widows" and "Spycatcher" by Peter Wright, the story of the infiltration of Britain's MI5 by Soviet agents, and you will really have a good dose of paranoia that should last until Labor Day or the World Series at the latest.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Humorist offers to donate name to posterity

I don't have any children. There are many reasons why not, one being I'm afraid if I had a son, he would come home one day wearing an earring and I would have to strangle him.

Lewis Grizzard

Unless hearing-impairment is involved, I stand firmly against male ear adornment. Isn't that covered in the Bible somewhere?

Doesn't the Bible say something like thou shalt not wear an earring unless thou is the same sex as the woman at the well?

But that's not what this is about. This is about the fact that a number of my over-40 friends suddenly are having babies and, with no children of my own in sight, I have tried to convince each of them to name their newborns after me.

I think it would be a wonderful gesture of kindness and friendship.

At least two of these new dads have already turned me down. They both had girls.

"What kind of name is Lewisianna?" one said to me.

"It's a fine name," I said. "It's a very American name, too. Not only does it reflect my friendship with you, but it also makes reference to one of our states."

"If I were going to name my child after a state," he said, "Rhode Islandia would be my first choice."

My suggestion to the other friend, who also had a baby daughter, was to name her Leweez.

"It's even misspelled," he said. "I can't name my child a misspelled word."

Now my friend B.A. and his lovely wife, Nancy, had a baby the other day, too. Another girl. My friends' chromosomes obviously agree with me on the earring issue.

B.A. and his wife haven't gotten around to naming their child yet, so I've been at it again, reflecting my never-say-die attitude.

"I've always thought Lewette was such a lovely name," I said to B.A. during my recent visit to see the baby.

"Are you still here?" said his wife, as she entered the room.

"Look," I said, "the clock is ticking on me here. I'm not going to say there's no chance whatsoever I'll ever have any children of my own, but just in case I don't, I would like to at least have one named after me."

I could see the concern come over my friends' faces when I put a little guilt on them.

"OK," said B.A., "give us some ideas but forget Lewette."

"How about Leween?" I suggested.

"Putrid," said Nancy.

"Lewzeenia?"

"Sounds too much like a Third World country," said B.A.

I was not about to give up.

"Lewzandria?"

"Now that sounds interesting," said B.A.

"Are you out of your mind?" said his wife.

I was running out of time and ideas for names. I got desperate.

"Lewalsindra. She might grow up to be a basketball player."

"No."

"Lewpolia? She might want to go into law."

Now I was past desperate. I was dead in the water.

"Grizzinda?"

They both laughed uncontrollably. But I'm still not giving up.

Anybody out there with a new baby daughter? "Grizzenthia" is such a lovely name, don't you think?

Publisher Earl May displays his World Status Map in his Vienna, Va., office recently.

Publication advises travelers on foreign 'do's and don'ts'

By BILL BASKERVILL

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Be prepared to explain why you are carrying a camera when visiting Ethiopia, don't travel in the Soviet Union unless you're in good health, and be sure to have a visa upon arrival in India or you'll find yourself on the next plane out regardless of its destination.

"Improper sexual relations" with Chinese citizens are verboten, and if you are of criminal inclination, never take illegal drugs into Malaysia, where traffickers face a mandatory death sentence.

So advises World Status Map, a slick bimonthly publication that offers such travel advisories and disease warnings below its orange fold-up map, which colors war zones and other danger spots in red.

Much of the information comes from the State Department and the Centers for Disease Control, but publisher Earl W. May of Fairfax says he uses more than 150 other sources, including the World Health Organization, the United Nations, world governments and news services.

May said in a telephone interview that the idea grew out of his brother's world travels. May said he offered to find out about civil unrest and disease in various hot spots for his brother, who worked for a company that drilled oil around the world.

He found there was a State Department desk officer for each country. "Theoretically, I would have to make 200 calls, and half the time they weren't at the desk," he said.

He decided there was a need for a publication to pull all of the available information together.

The first World Status Map, published by May's WSM Publishing Co. in Merrifield, came out in 1983. Since then, said May, his subscription list has grown to more than 2,000 travel agents, individuals, corporations and universities.

The most recent map warns that "detention and heavy fines have been imposed on visitors engaging in improper sexual relations with Chinese citizens."

May is not sure what those banned relations are.

Despite the unrest in China, "it probably is a very safe country right now" for travelers, he said. "China is probably doing all they can to get those hundreds of thousands of tourists back that they lost," he said.

Binoculars, cameras and video equipment should not be taken into Ethiopia, which is ruled by a military government fighting rebels in the northern provinces of Eritrea and Tigre.

"In many of these countries you are at great risk if you take a picture of any building that they consider important to the government or the military," he said.

If you're ill, a sure way to feel even worse is to travel in the Soviet Union, said May. "It has to do with the level of medication and hospital services available," he said.

May also advised against taking alcoholic beverages, even the tiny sample bottles offered by airlines, into Kuwait.

"It's just your basic dry country," he said. "When you arrive, if you don't declare with a customs agent that you have liquor, you are subject to arrest if they find it on you." Other Islamic countries have similar restrictions.

For anyone planning a trip to Europe this summer, it's a green-light with orange all the way across the continent on the latest issue of the map. There is this for visitors coming the other way, however: A warning that the United States is jailing visitors who arrive with AIDS unless a waiver has been obtained in advance.

The World Status Map costs $36 for a year's subscription.

Musicians battle to keep live showrooms in Vegas

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The stifling desert heat radiates from the sidewalk outside the Tropicana Hotel where the band that for years provided the music now walks a picket line to protest its replacement: taped music.

Inside the lavish resort, singers lipsync and dancers kick their legs to recorded music during the popular Folies Bergere show's twice-nightly performances.

Musicians are locked in a fight for survival at the Tropicana and two other Strip resorts, where cost-conscious managers also want to replace live music in production shows.

"The musicians ultimately make the product that puts musicians out of work," lamented Mark Tully Massagli, leader of Musicians Union Local 369. "Think of the irony of that."

The conversion to tape now affects about 45 full-time musicians, but it has raised passions among many more who feel spontaneous entertainment is being sold out by gaming corporations.

"We can't have this town — which was built on live entertainment — go the other way," said singer Sammy Davis Jr. "Don't let them do this to us."

Davis and a few other big name entertainers gathered recently to back the musicians.

"If we lose live music in this town, we've got serious problems," said comedian Jerry Lewis.

Lewis and Davis were appearing together at Bally's, which plans to replace the 19 musicians backing its Jubilee production show with taped music but keep live musicians in its main showroom.

Hotel officials say musicians are an expensive luxury not found in Atlantic City, N.J., hotels, which allow taped music and synthesizers in place of live performances.

"We're not doing away with musicians in the Celebrity Room," said Robert Ostrovsky, a Bally's executive. But "we feel taped music is appropriate for production-type showrooms."

The 14 union musicians who backed the Folies Bergere show at the Tropicana walked off their jobs June 3, upset over the hotel's unwillingness to budge on the issue. The show was closed while a tape was prepared, and reopened June 25 to what hotel officials say are increasingly full audiences.

"We're doing very well with it," said hotel spokesman Ira David Sternberg.

Musicians at Bally's and the Flamingo Hilton, meanwhile, have stayed on the job despite the refusal of the hotels to increase their offer of two to four musicians at each hotel on the payroll and severance pay to the others.

Officials at the three resorts sent letters to the musicians last week informing them they would not be needed further when they implement their final offer on Wednesday and go to taped music.

Perhaps more ominous, however, to the estimated 250 musicians who make a living in the hotels is a plan by the resorts to pay musicians only for the shows they actually perform.

Many entertainers bring their own bands to Las Vegas, limiting work for the Las Vegas musicians.

Under the contract that expired June 1, musicians were guaranteed their $654.71 a week salary for at least 38 weeks a year.

Bay life slowly dies out

By JANE KAY
Hearst News Service

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Here on the Chesapeake Bay, the greatest estuary in North America, precious sea life is slowly disappearing. The hardy folk who dredge for oysters tell of boundless piles that once covered the decks of their skipjacks.

On San Francisco Bay, the nation's second-largest estuary, fishers bring up scant catches of tiny bay shrimp. Full nets are only a memory.

The two mighty bays are like sisters. A continent apart, they're seen as special places where freshwater rivers meet the salty sea. They're so alike that the striped bass native to the Chesapeake has thrived in San Francisco Bay since it was brought there by railroad a century ago.

But today the striped bass is failing on both coasts. The fish's struggle is a warning that pollution and development are choking the life out of the bays. And bay dwellers on both coasts are fighting made.

"We've seen everything — the abundance of the bay, the red tide coming in, a change in the bay, more pollution," said Judy Szynborski, 31, as she sunned on a beach along the wide Chesapeake near the Maryland-Virginia border.

In Tiburon, Calif., Frank Brooks, 67, a native who worked all of his life on San Francisco Bay, said: "They're ruining everything. It's just sickening. If the old-timers were still alive, they wouldn't believe what's happening."

From the turn of the century, the San Francisco Bay has had shrinking populations of fish, shellfish, zooplankton and birds. Recently, the Sacramento River winter run of the chinook salmon was listed as endangered, and the striped bass are disappearing.

In the Chesapeake, underwater vegetation has all but died off. The oyster catch is down from 55 million bushels a century ago to just 400,000 last year. Many fish species are vanishing, including the famed striped bass. And this month, for the first time, Maryland and Virginia will propose limits on the famous Chesapeake blue crab.

San Francisco Bay has much to learn from Chesapeake, where scientists have spent years trying to better understand its complicated ecosystem. Further, Chesapeake had to hammer out beneficial agreements among warring state, industrial and environmental interests. At stake is a 380-year-old sports and commercial fishing industry, considerably larger than San Francisco's, and 6,800 miles of shoreline, nearly seven times larger than San Francisco's.

Volunteers dig history from tar pits

Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — Like the mythical figure Sisyphus, a group of hardy volunteers is sweating and toiling over an endless task here, this one in the famed La Brea Tar Pits.

Sisyphus was condemned to push a boulder uphill for eternity in Hades. Though it won't be that bad for the amateur paleontologists in La Brea, it is a job that conceivably could take forever.

Earlier this month marked the beginning of their annual summer dig at Rancho La Brea, with about 100 volunteers going about the endless task of scooping up buckets of the black, sticky goo as part of their excavation for Ice Age fossils.

They worked deep in Pit 91, hauling the crude oil residue that continually oozes up from the bottom of the 13-foot pit. But instead of being punished for avarice, the volunteers said, they are chained to the pit in search of serendipity.

"That's the whole fun of it — the element of surprise," said Trudy Lee, a buyer for vintage clothing stores when she isn't digging for bones. "I like old things."

Although one volunteer found the partial skull of a 33,000-year-old saber-toothed cat, chief excavator Eric Scott said the emphasis this season is to unearth rodent and reptile bones, such as mice, moles, bats and rattlesnakes.

"With the little guys, you get a better idea what the local conditions were like over 30,000 years ago," Scott said. "Large carnivores, like bison, migrate. But the smaller animals tended to stay in a localized area."

Scott said the team will probably expose about 600 to 700 large carnivore fossils, mixed with several hundred smaller bones in the 11-week excavation at La Brea.

Animals in that time period didn't sink in the tar pits and drown, as is widely believed. They got stuck in the goo and probably died of hypothermia or heat stroke, Scott said.

The pits are known to have the richest deposit of Ice Age fossils in the world. More than 1 million large fossils have been uncovered from about 100 pits in the park since 1915.

Unlikely team saving artifacts from encroaching sea

By JOAN RIGDON
New York Times News Service

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — Damming the Santa Maria and Santa Ynez rivers may have accelerated cliff erosion on the southern Santa Barbara County coast, endangering prehistoric Chumash artifacts buried there, according to Univeristy of California-Santa Barbara archaeologist Jon Erlandson.

To dig up the relics before they are lost, Erlandson is working with John Ruiz, a legal and cultural representative of the Coastal Band of the Chumash Nation.

Ruiz is a tall stout man who wears sunglasses and a long black braid under his baseball cap. If he had his way, no one would dig on Chumash land. He lets Erlandson dig because he figures the land will be lost to erosion anyway.

Ruiz is disgusted by the speed of coastal erosion here. "Our people believe that when things fall in the ocean (by) natural process, that's OK. But not to this point," he said, waving his arm vaguely toward the Pacific Ocean. "This is accelerated destruction."

On the south Santa Barbara County coast, waves gnaw away at six inches to 18 inches of cliff per year, according to David Stone, the county archaeologist.

Some geologists say that before the Santa Ynez and Santa Maria rivers were dammed, they carried sand around Point Conception to beaches on the south county coast. The sand slowed cliff erosion by forcing waves to break farther from the shore.

Other geologists, including Robert M. Norris, professor emeritus of geology at UCSB, argue that the sand carried by those rivers went into the ocean, not around Point Conception.

Norris said that south county coast erosion is actually accelerated by the drought: since streams such as Gaviota Creek are running low now, they don't deposit as much sand on the south coast as they used to.

Whatever the cause, the cliffs are retreating. Some storms take out 20 feet of cliff in one bite. And when that land falls into the ocean, precious pieces of a prehistoric puzzle disappear with it.

Erlandson is applying for money so he can dig out some pieces of the puzzle before the ocean reclaims them. To date, he has received $600 from Santa Barbara County.

His digging so far leads him to believe that the Chumash were not always hunters and fishermen. In fact, Erlandson argues, women may have played a much more important food gathering role than has previously been acknowledged.

Between 6000 B.C. and 4000 B.C., the melting of the ice caps transformed the south coast into a series of estuaries full of shellfish, which replaced fish and mammals as the staple of the Chumash diet.

Because shellfish were traditionally collected by women, Erlandson said, "It makes you wonder, 'What were the men doing? Lying around on the beach?'"

He theorizes that the men probably helped the women. But he argues that "male chauvinist" archaeologists and historians have traditionally downplayed the role of women in tribal economies.

Now Erlandson has found shells that might indicate otherwise. And as he digs some out, others fall into the sea.

For 13 years, Erlandson, who comes to the land with shovels, trowels, whisk brooms and dustpans, and Ruiz, an outspoken Chumash who talks about nature in terms of Grandfather Sun, Grandmother Moon and Mother Earth, have been meeting over holes of varying sizes up and down the Santa Barbara County coast.

Their claims to the land make them polar opposites, but their common goal to save it has forced them into an unlikely partnership.

Technically, Ruiz goes along on Erlandson's digs to watch over him, make sure he doesn't discover any skeletal remains and remove them. Looting archaeological sites is a felony, and Ruiz is working with the sheriff's department and park service officials to catch anyone trying to dig up artifacts without permission.

But after more than a decade of working with Erlandson, Ruiz trusts him. He has concluded that Erlandson is not like the looters who dug up sacred burial grounds near Point Conception last August, leaving behind a blue wheelbarrow painted with the slogan "Romancing the Bones."

Erlandson and Ruiz work as a team because Ruiz' emotional arguments about how the land is sacred don't always go over well with local government.

When Chevron put down pipelines through Point Conception in 1986, Ruiz argued that to Indian tribes all over the country, the Point was the "exit," or in Christian terms, the gate to heaven. Nevertheless, the pipes were laid.

"People can go out there and they can say how a Native American person feels," Ruiz said. "But it doesn't really mean anything. In this culture, if it isn't written down on paper, it isn't true."

That's where Erlandson comes in.

Where Ruiz makes emotional pleas, Erlandson talks about carbon dating and buried history. Erlandson's arguments come in the form of a doctoral dissertation, reports, charts and graphs. Erlandson's studies helped get Chevron to reroute gas and oil pipes around Chumash lands in 1986 and helped prevent the destruction of a village site near the county jail in 1977.

But he harbors no illusions that the Santa Ynez and Santa Maria rivers will be undammed. Instead, he wants to dig up the history of the Chumash before the Pacific Ocean destroys it.

"There are literally hundreds of sites that are washing into the sea," he said, mopping his brow with the back of his hand.

Clements blames attorneys as session ends

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Lawmakers cleared out of the Capitol Thursday to catch up with their business, to get reaquainted with their families and in some cases to take vacations that were postponed for the past month.

But after spending most of the past seven months in Austin, legislators left town knowing they will be called back this fall for another special session to close the gap between the House and Senate on workers' compensation reform.

Gov. Bill Clements blamed plaintiff attorneys for blocking efforts to reach a consensus on dispute resolution and impairment benefits.

A fall session will give legislators the "opportunity to get away from Austin and the chance to hear firsthand back home the cry for meaningful workers' compensation reform from the business owners, large and small, in Texas," the governor said.

Clements ignored the petition of 28 senators, including Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, who sought to keep working toward a compromise. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said Wednesday night the postponement of work on the reform bill did not fit with the representation of a crisis in workers' compensation.

But many House members agreed with Clements and House Speaker Gib Lewis that a few months of hiatus might help efforts to close what otherwise appeared to be irreconcilable differences between the House and Senate versions of the bill.

Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, said he was concerned the Legislature was not going to get a bill that would bring the cost of workers compensation coverage under control.

"I think the business people are crying and screaming. We're going to have more and more people who are going to drop their insurance," Craddick said.

"It's hurting business people in our area and it's the No. 1 problem in the regular session as well as this that I'm hearing from my constituents over," he said.

But Craddick said it may take time to close the gap between the two chambers.

"I think there is a big difference in the House and Senate view," he said. "The House is more business-oriented than the Senate and the Senate has a more labor and trial lawyer position."

While Craddick believes the House and Senate can find common ground in the reform bill, he said, "I'm not sure people are ready to do that in the Senate."

While Clements placed the blame with the trial lawyers, saying they blocked efforts to install an objective standard for review of injury cases and a strong administrative system that discourages appeals to district court, Lewis said the business community is partly to blame for not putting more pressure on their legislators.

"I hear them when I talk to them, but I didn't see their presence," he said. While there was a general lobbying effort by businesses, he said lobbyists for particular groups, such as school boards, trucking and nursing homes, never got involved in the action.

"They should have been involved," he said. "They were protecting their own individual interests and not the interest overall."

Lewis was pleased the negotiations between the House and Senate conferees produced some areas of agreement.

"The bill is a much better bill than passed the House and a much better bill than passed the Senate," he said.

That should help when the Legislature returns to the task, he said.

"I don't think they'll have to start over ... The only thing different in November is they will have more time to look at it and pick up where we left off."

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, a labor-oriented lawyer who led Senate negotiators on safety regulations, disputed the governor's claim that trial lawyers were the cause for the stalemate. Instead, he singled out insurance companies.

Parker predicted that workers' compensation insurance companies would soon start to complain that they cannot do business in Texas and threaten to pull out of the state, while others would seek a rate increase.

"Insurance companies are greater villains in this process than they're getting credit for," he said. "Nobody's shooting at the insurance companies and the ratemaking process. They figure they're going to have it made whichever way it goes."

But Parker said the compensation carriers will not get off so easily, as he got Senate approval Wednesday night for an interim study of ratemaking and oversight of workers compensation insurance.

Fired up

Matt Buckingham, 15, of Midland, recently won a gold medal in the 10-meter air-rifle competition at the United States International Shooting Championships in Los Angeles, Calif. The competition, which requires "a lot of mental training" to excel, was sponsored by the National Rifle Association. The discipline demanded in shooting accuracy "teaches you patience and dedication," said Buckingham, who is seeking a place on the United States Development Team in order to try out for the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team. Buckingham, son of Rusty and Judy Buckingham of Midland, is an Eagle Scout and is a sophomore at Robert E. Lee High School in Midland.

Bunton irritated by dispute over exotic sheepskins

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A federal case over disputed sheepskins and horns brought out of China by Clayton and Modesta Williams following their China-sanctioned hunt for the wild Argali sheep has climbed to the "ridiculous" from the viewpoint of a West Texas judge.

"This is ridiculous," United States District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton said Thursday after he had ordered lawyers in the dispute between the Williams couple and the U.S. Department of the Interior to settle the case by negotiations and to keep it out of the courtroom.

The dispute took on fuel in April 1988 in San Francisco, Calif., when the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service seized the horns and hides, videotapes and films of the hunt after alleging the horns and hides were from an endangered sub-species of the Argali sheep, a long-horned high-mountain animal.

The government, the Williams couple claimed, turned the dispute into a "criminal investigation" and sought out scientists to shore up its contention.

Clayton and Modesta Williams, however, said the sheep on the hunt were not an endangered species and that they had secured the blessings of the People's Republic of China, which sanctioned and hosted the hunt, before they took off on the trip, according to court records.

The Williams couple and the Chinese government claim the two sets of hides and horns are from the Ovis ammon darwini sub-species of Argali sheep, not from the endangered Ovis ammon hodgsoni sub-species of Argali sheep — only are found in Tibet along the Sino-Indian borders more than 1,000 miles south of the Chinese Gansu Province where the Williams took the two long-horned Argali sheep.

"I am sure those hides mean a great deal to the Williams," Bunton said in Midland Thursday after he, presiding in Pecos earlier in the week, had ordered the government and the Williams' attorneys to settle the dispute out of court.

"I have other things to do" of greater significance, the judge said.

Bunton said if lawyers in the dispute could not or would not settle the civil argument in a closed room, then he threatened to "put the hides in with them" to speed up the negotiations.

By end of the work week, the lawyers had not settled the case, had not gotten together, and the government's counsel had declined to negotiate with counsel for the Williams.

"Somebody is going to talk to somebody before it is through," Bunton said Thursday in his Midland chambers.

Midland lawyer Harris Kerr, an attorney for the Williams, said Thursday that "the federal government doesn't want to talk."

Justice reform bill offers 'flexibility'

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Understanding criminal justice reform came a little easier for local law enforcement officials following a Thursday conference sponsored by the Texas Adult Probation Commission.

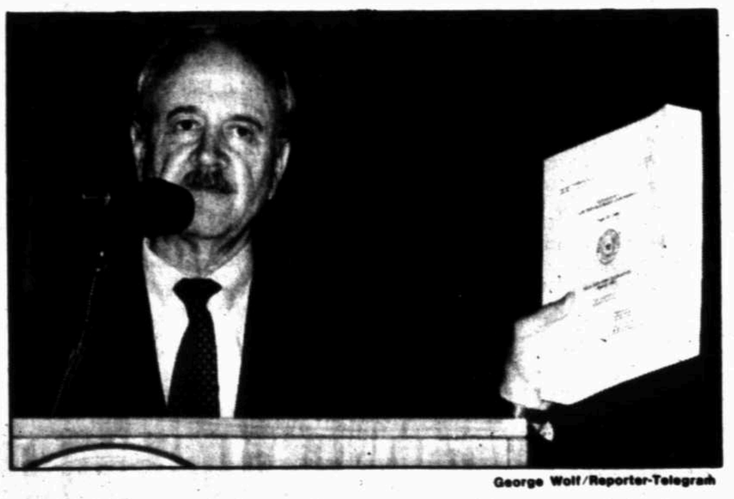
Jim McDonough, executive director of the Adult Probation Commission, said the intent of the Community Corrections Conference is to explain the various alternatives under House Bill 2335, which is designed to alleviate overcrowded jails and prisons.

"This new bill offers a lot more flexibility in corrections," McDonough said. "There are more programs, more flexibility within the programs, and more involvement at the local level."

The Midland conference — one of five scheduled across the state — was held in cooperation with the Texas Department of Corrections, Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles, the Governor's Office and the Bureau of Justice Assistance.

Judges, attorneys, chief probation officers, county and city officials and other interested citizens attended.

Among those speaking were District Judge Clarence Stevenson, chairman of the Texas Adult Probation Commission; and Carl Reynolds, counsel for the Senate Criminal Justice Committee.



George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

State District Judge Clarence Stevenson, chairman of the Texas Adult Probation Commission, discusses recent prison reform legislation with local law enforcement officials Thursday.

Malcolm MacDonald, director of Program Services for the Texas Adult Probation Commission, said lawmakers devised HB 2335 to offer both "bedspace and financial relief" at the state and local levels while emphasizing community corrections.

More than $73 million in state funds will be available in Fiscal Year 1990 for adult community corrections. Another $141 million will be allocated in fiscal year 1991 for the same purpose, MacDonald said.

Highlights of the bill include:

- Expanded community corrections programs;
- Additional innovative programs;
- Reduced probation supervision ratios; and
- Rehabilitation along with punishment.

MacDonald said increased community corrections will enable courts to divert more of the first time nonviolent offenders and probation and parole violators from jail or prison.

Therefore, prison and jail space will be reserved for dangerous and career offenders who will serve out more of their prison terms than they do presently, MacDonald said.

Another aspect of the legislation is the consolidation of the Adult Probation Commission, the Texas Department of Corrections and the Board of Pardons and Paroles into a new agency, the Texas Department of Criminal Justice.

Dubbed the Community Justice Assistance Division, the new state probation agency has been charged with working with adult probation departments, county officials and judges to fund, establish and operate community corrections programs and facilities.

MacDonald said the state envisions the implementation of a variety of community programs, including restitution centers and court residential treatment centers, plus new boot camps and county correctional facilities.

U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, R-Texas, accepts a petition containing the names of 5,300 residents, which he plans to present to the speaker of the house as part of a push to create a constitutional amendment protecting the American flag. Looking on is Newnie Ellis.

Commission OKs Faudree Road extension plans

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

To prevent future traffic fatalities and forge a more convenient path for motorists, the state plans to construct Faudree Road from the Old Bankhead Highway to U.S. Highway 80 in Midland County.

Plans are still in the design stage, a Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation engineer said, but were approved Wednesday by the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission.

TDH District Engineer Marshall Huffman said bids should be taken by March 1990 for the project, which is expected to cost $400,000.

Construction is "primarily for safety," Huffman said Thursday.

"The Old Bankhead Highway that runs around the (Mission Dorado) golf course and ties into Highway 80 service road is a pretty dangerous intersection.

"There have been several fatalities. They run stop signs. This new road will provide a much better access for that development and for the people who live in the area," the engineer said.

Currently Faudree Road runs a north-south route between State Highway 191 and the Old Bankhead Highway.

When complete, Faudree Road will continue south to a U.S. Highway 80 service road.

The new road will contain four driving lanes and a continuous left turn lane, said Jerry Tschauner, director of planning for the PBRPC.

Only state funds will be used in the construction, Tschauner added.

Currently, motorists' options for traveling between State Highway 191 and U.S. Highway 80 include Midland's Loop 250, Odessa's Loop 338 and FM 1788, the men added.

Smith to present flag petition to speaker

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, R-Texas, said he plans to support and push for a constitutional amendment that would prohibit anyone from desecrating the American flag.

Smith, who accepted 5,300 signatures from Midlanders Jerry Norton and Newnie Ellis, used the Midland County Courthouse as a backdrop for a news conference, which included a symbolic flag-raising gesture.

"What I plan to do is hand deliver these petitions to the speaker of the House to let him know just how the 21st District feels about the need to protect this flag," he said.

Smith said the flag is a symbol of values and heritage that hundred of thousands of Americans have died for since the birth of the United States. "This petition represents the largest outpouring of public sentiment that I've ever seen since I took office."

The congressman said he expected some action on a constitutional amendment sometime in August.

Smith said the U.S. Supreme Court was "out of step" with the American people and his office.

The court ruled in June that destruction of the flag was permissible within the parameters of the First Amendment protecting freedom of speech.

U.S. justices felt compelled to address the issue in response to Gregory "Joey" Johnson's flag-burning actions at the 1984 Republican National Convention.

DEATHS

Barton A. Belknap

Graveside services for Barton Austin Belknap of Midland will be at 11 a.m. Saturday at Resthaven Memorial Park with the Rev. Marshall Mason of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity officiating.

Services are under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Wednesday night at his home.

Belknap was born June 22, 1923, in Chaffee, Mo., and attended schools in Fort Worth.

He was a graduate of Texas Christian University. He served in the U.S. Air Force during World War II. He later completed a master's degree in geology at Texas Tech University.

He married Dorothy Thompson in Fort Worth on Oct. 14, 1951.

Belknap was employed as a geologist with Exxon from 1951 until his retirement in 1986. He worked for Exxon in various locations in New Mexico, West Texas, Alaska, Brazil and Ireland.

He and his wife had been Midland residents since 1966.

Survivors include his wife of Midland; three sons, Kevin Belknap of Arlington, Bruce Belknap of Dallas and Shannon Belknap of Houston; one daughter, Laurel Belknap of Hobbs, N.M.; one brother, A. Rudy Belknap of Marysville, Kansas; and one sister, Audrey Moore of Fort Worth.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland Inc., P.O. Box 2621, Midland, Texas, 79702.

Walter O. Wise

Services for Walter O. Wise were to be at 2 p.m. at the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Jim Fields officiating.

Interment will follow at Fairview Cemetery with military honors under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Wednesday night in Austin.

Wise was born Oct. 22, 1912, in Yellowpine, La. He came to West Texas with his parents and lived in the Stokes community a number of years. He came to Midland in 1937.

He entered the service during World War II and served in the 62nd Battalion with Gen. George Patton in Tunisia, Sicily, Normandy, Northern France, Germany and in Central Europe.

He returned to Midland in 1945 and began work with the Midland County Road and Bridge Department as a heavy equipment operator. He worked for Midland County for 30 years.

He moved to Austin in April due to ill health.

Survivors include a sister, Alma Earlene Wise Matlock of Austin and two nieces.

The family requests that memorials be directed to the American Cancer Society.

Leon William Moss

Services for Leon William Moss of Midland are pending with Greenwood Funeral Home in Fort Worth.

Local arrangements are being handled handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

Moss died Wednesday night at a Midland hospital.

He was born June 18, 1917, in Moscow, Kansas. He served in the armed forces during World War II. Following his discharge, he attended college for two years.

Moss was a retired truck driver and was preceded in death by his wife, Frances Amos Moss and by a daughter, Barbara Ann Cook.

Survivors include a grandson, Jeff Cook of Los Angeles, Calif.; three granddaughters, Toni Snow of Midland, Patti Scholl of Clayton, Ind., and Lori Culpepper of Fort Worth; and six great-grandchildren.

The family requests memorials be directed to the Multiple Sclerosis National Permian Basin Chapter, 3200 W. Cuthbert Ave., Midland, Texas, 79701.

Senate panel votes $225 million for SSC

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate Appropriations subcommittee voted Thursday to spend $225 million to begin construction of the super collider in fiscal 1990, with the panel chairman saying the particle accelerator will unlock some of science's greatest secrets.

But Sen. Bennett Johnston said an amendment may be introduced in the full Appropriations Committee that would hold up the project until foreign governments agree to certain "specific participation" agreements.

Johnston, a Louisiana Democrat who is chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee on energy and water development, said he would oppose the amendment because he does not want to hold up the project, to be built near Waxahachie.

Also, "there's sentiment in our committee to adopt report language which will, in effect, say 'Don't give away the great technological contracts to the Japanese or to any other participant.' That's the sentiment of our subcommittee," Johnston said.

Johnston said the $4.4 billion collider is the most important basic research project in the country today and pledged to support it in subsequent years.

"It unlocks the secret of what we're made of, what the universe is made of, what energy and matter and all of the basic stuff of the universe is made of and it's exciting," Johnston said.

Johnston, however, said he has "limited enthusiasm" for sharing the cost of the project with foreign countries.

"I think this research is so important we ought to do it in this country if we can and not farm it out to have somebody else build the most important technological parts of it," Johnston said.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said he agreed with Johnston, and if "we're going to be spending the money for most of it" that he wants to keep the technology here.

"We need that in this competitive world of ours to increase productivity, to have the breakthroughs in science, to bring on the new products and have them stamped 'Made in America,' " said Bentsen, a Texas Democrat.

While President Bush had sought $250 million, Johnston said budget constraints forced him to seek $225 million for the project. The House has approved less, however, voting to set aside $200 million.

Dead boy's father says he's not to blame

EL PASO (AP) — The father of a young boy who died while he was being treated for starvation-related ailments says he is not to blame for the boy's death because he thought he had left the boy with a woman who would take good care of him.

Carlos Hoyos Vera Thursday told The El Paso Times in a telephone interview from Colorado that he doesn't feel responsible for the death of his son, Carlos Hoyos Rascon, 7½, who died Wednesday at Providence Memorial Hospital in El Paso.

"I thought I had left Carlitos with a good woman," the father said of his deaf mute, retarded son.

"I never expected to find him in a shopping cart in an outhouse, his little body covered with bloody sores," Hoyos said. "He couldn't stand up, cry or even eat."

He said he then took the boy to the Juarez Red Cross after he found him last month.

The boy weighed only 20 pounds at the time of his death.

The father, a farm worker, was located near Denver by the newspaper and asked that his exact location not be revealed.

Juarez officials have searched unsuccessfully for Hoyos.

Hoyos said he left his son in the care of a Juarez woman in 1987 so he could seek farm work in the United States.

He said he did not see his son again until he found the boy wasting away and took him first to Juarez General Hospital and then to the Juarez Red Cross.

"They gave him better care at the Red Cross," he said. "But I was relieved when they took him to the hospital in El Paso. I really thought for sure he was going to get better."

Hoyos said he had been unable to see his son for more than a year and a half because he was an undocumented alien applying for amnesty in the United States and could not leave the country.

"I thought that by leaving Carlitos with her I was helping a mother and her children have a place to live, and my son would have somebody care for him," he said. "If I had known what she would do I never would have left him with her."

He explained that he allowed the woman and her husband and their children to live in his tiny cinder block home and he sent the family $80 per month for caring for the child.

Detectives seek clues at site of Abilene oilman's murder

NOODLE (AP) — Jones County Sheriff's detectives are searching for clues on a rural oil field where the bullet-ridden bodies of an Abilene oilman and his lawyer were discovered.

The bodies of George Robert Gibbons, 56, and William Shelbern Perry, 53, were transported to the Southwestern Institute of Forensic Sciences in Dallas for tests.

Gibbons was owner of GRG Operating Inc., and Perry was a real estate attorney who had represented him in recent oil field litigation and reportedly was working on collecting a large court judgment for Gibbons.

Investigators were probing the possibility of a link between the court action and the deaths of the men, officials said.

A niece of Gibbons who identified herself only as Sara said Gibbons had told her he thought his life was in danger as a result of a longstanding business dispute he was involved in.

"He was concerned for his life," she told the Abilene Reporter-News.

The bodies were discovered early Thursday near oil wells in a ravine on the lease about four miles northwest of Noodle. The town is in Jones County about 40 miles northwest of Abilene.

Gibbons' roommate, William Smith, alerted the sheriff's department that something was amiss when he arrived to work at the oil lease shortly before 6 a.m. Thursday, District Attorney's investigator Woodrow Simmons said.

Gibbons and Perry each suffered three bullet wounds, said Foy Easley, justice of the peace for Jones County. He said each man was shot once in the head.

Authorities believe the men were killed sometime Wednesday, Easley said.

He said a high-caliber pistol was found at the scene.

Kerr said the government's counsel, Assistant U.S. Attorney John Paniszczyn of San Antonio, had declined to talk to him about settling the case before Bunton does it himself in a courtroom setting.

And, Kerr said, "Mr. and Mrs. Williams are in Canada on vacation, and they really can't be reached" for comment on the case.

The Williams had sought a court order so that they could take possession of the "partially tanned" hides and the horns before the hides deteriorate.

Kerr said the case is important to the Williams.

"This really is important to Mr. Williams," said Kerr. They were invited to China for the hunt, noted Kerr.

"It does matter to him (Williams)," since the hunt was a "once-in-a-lifetime" adventure. "They (Clayton and Modesta Williams) both are avid hunters and 'sportsmen' in the best sense of the word," Kerr said. "They never would consider killing an endangered species."

Kerr said the Williams, who are Midland ranchers, bankers, oil operators, entrepreneurs and big-game hunters, are conservationists who are interested in preserving wildlife.

"You don't want to tamper with nature," noted Kerr. "There is a balance between predator and victim. There has to be a natural balance."

"The Williams are absolute supporters of the concept of preservation of wildlife for future generations," Kerr said, and they practice conservation on their ranch land.

A zoologist, a Smithsonian Institution representative who was on the hunt, ascertained that the Argali sheep killed in the hunt were not the endangered species.

And Tian Anshun, director of the Nature Protection and Wildlife Administration of China's Gansu Province Forestry Department, said in a statement that the hunt was "in all respects approved by the Ministry of Forestry" and said that the Argali sheep killed on the hunt were not an endangered species.

"We are committed to protect these (endangered) sheep," Anshun said in a court document, and said he and the China government "strongly object" to the suggestion that the sheep in the hunt were the endangered Ovis ammon hodgsoni sub-species of Argali sheep.

"This is not true," Anshun said, "and our scientists dispute this opinion."

Johnson had been convicted and sentenced to a one-year prison term by a lower court.

However, Smith argued that speech and actions are two entirely separate issues that the Supreme Court failed to recognize.

Amending the Bill of Rights will be no easy task.

According to Smith, such a change will require three-quarters approval by both the House and Senate as well as three-quarter approval by the states.

Both he and Norton, the University of Texas at Austin student who collected the bulk of the signatures, noted that the Constitution has been amended 26 times in U.S. history.

"When such a need arises, we need to amend it," said Norton.

Added Smith: The flag represents the embodiment of all that is right about America."

Economist says water cost Texas about $51 million

DENVER (AP) — A Colorado economist says an illegal diversion of Pecos River water by New Mexico cost Texas about $51 million while generating millions of dollars for New Mexico's irrigation districts.

Dr. Chuck Howe, a University of Colorado economics professor, explained his study of water diversions in the fourth day of a special water hearing in U.S. District Court to resolve a dispute over Pecos River water between the two states.

In 1987, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled New Mexico used 340,100 acre-feet of water during the 1950s that it was not entitled to under the 1949 Pecos River Compact.

New Mexico and Texas are arguing about whether New Mexico should compensate Texas in cash or water. New Mexico has offered cash, but Texas wants water. The hearing, before special master Monte Pascoe, is scheduled to last another week.

Howe said the water New Mexico used boosted individual net farm income and total state income by increasing irrigated acreage from 1952 to 1986.

Howe said the Roswell, N.M., irrigation district benefited by $900 million from the water and the Carlsbad, N.M., irrigation district by $300 million. The Roswell district was irrigated by groundwater while Carlsbad used largely surface irrigation, he said.

In determining Texas' loss, Howe said, he used water shortfalls, crop patterns, farm income loss, effects on other sectors of the agricultural economy and increased transportation costs, among other factors.

But he said it was difficult to reconstruct two state economies over a third of a century.

"When one looks at the complex pattern of shortfalls and the effects of the shortfalls on the population of one state, it involves the complicated pattern of social and economic dynamics in a quantitative sense," he said.

Six-year-old Texan has inventive future 'in the bag'

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Six-year-old Lillian Allison, who helps her mother bag the grass clippings when they mow the lawn at their Dallas home, has invented a way to find the line between plastic bags on a roll so they can be separated more easily.

Lillian's idea? Apply colored adhesive tape along the perforations between the bags.

Lillian, who calls her invention "rainbow bags," is one of 45 regional winners in a nationwide competition to encourage inventiveness.

She won both a Texas state competition for kindergarten students as well as a 10-state regional contest — one of five nationwide —for her grade level.

Lillian and each of the other regional grade winners, along with their parents, will come to Washington July 23-27 when national champion inventors from kindergarten through eighth grade will be chosen and their creations displayed.

The competition, in its third year, is organized by Invent America, a spinoff of the U.S. Patent Model Foundation, an organization that recovers major patent model collections for preservation, exhibition and educational programs with the Smithsonian Institution.

Invent America provides more than $600,000 each year in awards and grants to students, teachers and schools.

In Washington, the young inventors will meet pilots Dick Rutan and Jeana Yeager, who flew a plane, the Voyager, around the world without refueling for the first time. They also will be treated to a congressional ice cream social.

Despite her early success at inventing, Lillian said in a telephone interview that she plans to become a policewoman when she grows up.

Her mother, Helen Allison, said that her precocious daughter's career plans change "from day to day."

In the fall, the younger Allison will enter a private school sponsored by a Episcopal Church where her grandfather was a minister. Her father, Christopher F. Allison, is an attorney.

Another Texas winner, 13-year-old Daniel Buechler who lives in Dallas suburb of Plano, invented a device to make it easier to pour water into the pan under a Christmas tree. He said he figured that almost everyone hates that chore.

Daniel created a Christmas tree ornament using a funnel, connected it to a tube leading to the pan, and solved the watering problem.

Daniel, who wants to enter the Invent America contest again, said he has an idea "for a device, using a razor and a compass, that will enable you to cut circles without having to draw them and cut them with scissors."

Already thinking about college, Daniel said he probably will study law or medicine — "whichever has the lowest entrance fees." But he said he might also consider engineering.

William James (Jim) O'Donnell of suburban Houston, who will be going into the sixth grade this fall, won first prize in the Texas competition for fifth graders with a game he calls "Election, U.S.A.: State Trivia."

The object of the game is for players to move around a board, answering questions about the 50 states. "By doing this," he explained, "you collect electoral votes and when you have 270 you win the presidency and the game."

O'Donnell, the son of an electrical engineer, wants to become an architect. He was inspired to invent a game because he likes Monopoly, chess, checkers, and the computer game, Nintendo.

The other state winners from Texas include: Stacey Bittner, second grade, Weimar; Pamela Gayle Bartley, third grade, Dallas; Sachin N. Patel, fourth grade, Schulenberg; Chris Sanner, Charee Walker and Trisa Riveria, Garland, for a cooperative effort in sixth grade; and Greg Hayes, eighth grade, Mineola.

J. Morgan Green, the Invent America chairman, a 55-year-old retired San Francisco Bay area banker, said the non-profit program is "designed to help rekindle the spirit of American ingenuity by teaching elementary students to develop and apply inventive thinking skills."

Green said he started the program, with Nancy J. Metz, a marketing consultant from Alexandria, Va., "to help spark the imaginations of this country's children."

Drug victims turning grief into crusade

New York Times News Service

SANTA FE, Texas — Jim and Helen Kilroy have emblazoned the name of their murdered son across the windows of a storefront wedged between a pizza parlor and a printing shop in a suburban shopping center.

Inside, at old metal desks, they stuff envelopes and make phone calls all day long. They are turning their grief into a crusade.

Like many other middle-class parents, the Kilroys learned about the damage done by drugs by becoming victims. They also became celebrities; after burying their son with television news cameras whirring, they decided it was their mission to remain in the limelight.

The son, Mark Kilroy, was a smart, clean-cut, 21-year-old college student who disappeared off the streets of Matamoros, Mexico, March 14 during a spring-break revel in that border town.

A month later his mutilated body was one of 13 corpses found on a nearby ranch. All had been killed by a drug-smuggling ring.

Young Kilroy had been picked at random for kidnapping and murder by marijuana traffickers who believed human sacrifice and voodoo rituals would protect them from the police.

The big letters spell out "M.A.R.K." on the windows of the Kilroys' headquarters here in Santa Fe, a tiny town 32 miles from Houston. The letters stand for "Make A Responsible Kommitment."

Speaking on the steps of the State Capitol in Austin, appearing on talk shows, in churches and at business conventions, the Kilroys are campaigning to get five million signatures on a petition demanding a federal crackdown on drugs.

They say they will present their case Wednesday to the federal drug policy director, William J. Bennett, when he visits Houston.

The Kilroys have developed suggestions including measures like rehabilitation camps run by the military for drug sellers, but they are not promoting any specific policy or proposal; they say they just want action.

"This is a critical situation, and we want the government to do something about it before drugs destroy us," Kilroy said. "The biggest lie is that this is a victimless crime. Everyone except the pushers and the addicts is an innocent victim. So, we want everyone to demand a policy that works because that is only way we are going to get one."

The MARK petitions read: "Yes! We have had enough! We support a great change in the national drug policy!"

A woman wearing a man's shirt over blue jeans walked into the store recently. "You the Kilroys?" she asked. Receiving a nod, she added her name to the petition. "You're right," she said. "Anyone who smokes just one joint is helping wreck the country."

Until they launched their campaign at the end of May, Kilroy, a chemical engineer, and Mrs. Kilroy, a paramedic, say they had never thought of influencing the government on any subject. In a photograph that has appeared repeatedly in Texas newspapers, their son's yearbook smile seems an emblem of their previously happy, uneventful lives.

Kilroy, who is 45, has not returned to work since his son disappeared. He is on a three-month unpaid leave so he can work full time on the MARK campaign.

A native of Chicago who has kept a Midwestern twang through 20 years in Texas, Kilroy does not disguise his amazement when he recites statistics that link drugs to everything from homelessness to suicides of teenagers.

"Every day we learn more and more and every day it looks worse and worse," he said, shaking his head.

Almost apologetically, his wife interjected: "Honestly, we were not aware of what was going on with drugs. Most people like us aren't aware because what we see on TV and in the paper seems so far away."

"Who do we blame for our son's death?" Kilroy said. "We blame people like ourselves who let this go on."

So far, the Kilroys have not counted the names they have collected on their petition.

"We've stopped and wondered what we were doing several times," Mrs. Kilroy said, "but I think we were meant to do this because at every bad moment we hear from somebody, an addict, a parent that has lost a child, somebody who says they want us to keep going."

"If we couldn't put our energies into this," she said, "it would be a much more difficult time for us."

Hospital hostage crisis ends with man's death

AUSTIN (AP) — Police thought they were close to negotiating a peaceful resolution to a hostage-taking that ended in the death of man who held a hospital secretary captive at gunpoint.

Terry Lee Primus, 30, of Austin, was shot to death by police after taking Marsha Anderson hostage at Seton Medical Center Thursday.

The shooting ended a two-hour standoff that began when Primus seized Ms. Anderson at random in a first-floor office.

Ms. Anderson was not harmed physically, but was shaken up, hospital officials said.

One police officer who spoke on condition of anonymity said tapes of telephone conversations indicated Primus wanted to commit suicide by confronting police.

Primus, police said, made comments such as, "It's going to take a lot of nerve to do what I'm about to do," and "This lady may be the last person I'll ever see. I'm counting on you to do your job."

Deputy Police Chief Ken Williams said Primus, who was not a patient, was killed after charging police officers as he carried a handgun.

"He came out with a gun in hand. As soon as he saw where our officers were located, he pointed the weapon at them, charged towards them, and we ended up shooting him," Williams said.

Seven shots were fired, all apparently by the officers.

Officers said they thought they would be able to end the standoff without bloodshed.

Senior patrolman Tony Pellatt, the first police officer on the scene, said the negotiation at one point seemed "to be going well. They're working on terms, explaining to him what he has to do when he comes out of that office to protect himself and make sure the hostage is not injured."

"Our understanding was he was going to surrender," Williams said. "He said that he was, that he was coming out to surrender."

One officer who asked not to be identified said Primus kept opening and closing the door as if he was uncertain what to do. After the shooting, however, police believed "he may have been sizing up the SWAT team, that's what we think," the officer said.

Appeals court reinstates $1.2 million for worker

HOUSTON (AP) — A state appeals court Thursday reinstated a $1.2 million award for a Port Arthur refinery worker who was shot several times 10 days after he crossed a 1982 picket line, an attorney said.

The 14th Court of Appeals in Houston ruled 2-1 to reverse a judge's order that had thrown out a jury's decision to award damages to William Hinote, who had filed a lawsuit in September 1984, attorney Martin Kaufman said.

Jurors ruled in October 1987 that Local 423 of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union and several of its members had conspired to assault Hinote, inflict emotional distress on him and his wife and violated his right to work.

But retired Texas Court of Criminal Appeals Justice Truman Roberts, who presided over the 1987 trial in Huntsville, set aside the jurors' verdict without explanation. Hinote's attorneys then appealed to the Houston court, which heard arguments in the case last year.

The Huntsville trial was Hinote's second. He lost a first trial in 1986, but a judge ordered a new trial after it was learned a juror was related to one of the defendants, Kaufman said.

Hinote was shot five times Oct. 2, 1982, as he was getting in his truck to go to work at the American Petrofina refinery, which is now the Fina Oil & Chemical Co. The shooting occurred 10 days after Hinote, who had been a member of the OCAW for 20 years, cross a picket line the union had set up against the company.

Kaufman, an attorney with the National Right to Work Legal Defense Fund in Springfield, Va., said no arrests were made in the shooting. Attorneys for the defense fund helped represent Hinote, who has recovered from his gunshot wounds and lives in Port Neches.

Tom Swearingen, a Port Arthur attorney who represents the OCAW members who were sued, said the court's decision will be appealed to the Texas Supreme Court.

Apollo 11 reunion blasts off in Houston

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — The three Apollo 11 astronauts were greeted Thursday by thousands of past and present NASA employees gathered to celebrate the 20th anniversary of their lunar landing.

The astronauts arrived in a van at a Johnson Space Center recreation facility about 6:50 p.m. after flying to Ellington Field from Washington, where they lunched on barbecue with President Bush.

As hundreds crowded a driveway to the Robert R. Gilruth Recreation Facility, JSC Director Aaron Cohen boarded the van to officially greet astronauts Neil Armstrong, Buzz Aldrin and Michael Collins.

Hans Mark, a former JSC director, also greeted the astronauts.

"Twenty years ago, I sat in Mission Control when these guys came down and I wouldn't miss this for the world," said Mark, who now serves as chancellor for the University of Texas System.

Thursday's "Splashdown" party was patterned after the informal celebrations that followed each Apollo mission.

"This is just like the splashdown party 20 years ago, except then they threw everybody in the pool," said Cookie Leisenring, a former NASA employee, who was trying to take pictures of the astronauts.

The parties 20 years ago, she said, were at local hotels that had swimming pools.

Collins, Aldrin and Armstrong each exited the van to loud applause and went in different directions to mingle with the crowds.

Separate outdoor areas of the recreation center were designated for different departments such as engineering and development and recovery crew. Inside, a band played in a gym-sized room decorated with star-shaped ballons and blue balloons with the U.S. flag on them.

Mark said the astronauts were not surprised by the estimated crowd of 10,000 and were very pleased to return and visit with old friends. Many of those in the crowd wore buttons showing Armstong on the moon and read "July 20, 1969-1989 We Were There."

On July 20, 1969, Armstrong and Aldrin planted their footsteps on the moon while Collins circled above in the spacecraft that later carried the three men back to Earth.

The splashdown party is one of many events being held this week to commemorate that historic flight.

"It is exciting to get to see all these guys that figured out how to go to the moon in the first place," said Ken Schultz, an engineer for Lockheed Engineering & Science Co. Inc. "I'm just sitting here and going 'Wow.'"

After the celebration, the three former astronauts attended a private party at a nearby hotel where they watched a light display on Clear Lake dubbed "Thousand Points of Light" and a fireworks display.

That celebration began at 9:56 p.m. — the moment Armstrong stepped on the moon two decades ago — when a group of boats simultaneously switched on strings of lights.

The Apollo 11 astronauts also planned to attend today's 20th Anniversary Gala black-tie dinner in Houston.

The space center's Homecoming Parade, with Aldrin as grand marshal, will highlight Saturday's activities in Houston. Several other astronauts, including the Apollo 12 crew, plan to participate in the parade.

Man linked to ritual, drug ring gets plea bargain

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Prosecutors arranged a plea bargain with a man linked to a cult ring that allegedly smuggled marijuana and killed at least 15 people in rituals intended to magically protect its operations.

Serafin Hernandez Rivera, 45, pleaded guilty Thursday to possession with intent to distribute 113 pounds of marijuana seized in May 1987.

Prosecutors will recommend dropping four other drug-related charges against Hernandez, along with a firearms indictment, in exchange for Hernandez's cooperation, said Assistant U.S. Attorney John Crews.

Hernandez Rivera was the only person arrested in the United States in connection with the discovery of 15 bodies, many of them horribly mutilated, near Matamoros, Mexico, in April.

Hernandez was never accused in any of the killings.

His son, brother and three other men are in jail in Matamoros on murder and drug charges. Six other people have been jailed in Mexico City, and another of Hernandez's brothers is a fugitive.

Prosecutors also agreed not to seize Hernandez's Brownsville home, indict him in connection with an alleged 75-kilogram cocaine purchase last year, or recommend that the resident alien be deported to Mexico.

Crews would not say how Hernandez is expected to cooperate.

Hernandez's attorney, Richard Hoffman, could not be reached for comment Thursday.

Crews said prosecutors would not oppose Hernandez's release on bond. Hernandez faces up to 20 years in prison when he is sentenced Aug. 24.

The firearms charge stems from the seizure of a sawed-off shotgun during a search of Hernandez's residence after the discovery of the bodies near Matamoros. Hernandez was arrested April 17 in Houston.

Officials said the drug ring smuggled a ton of marijuana a week into the United States.

Far more teachers work outside jobs

Nearly 17 percent of public school teachers — more than 300,000 nationwide, work outside jobs for additional income during the school year, according to a new study by the National Center for Education Statisics.

In contrast, only 5.4 percent of American workers hold second jobs, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reports.

Chinese crime gains attention after protests

BEIJING (AP) — China's worsening crime problem has been getting a more attention in the official press since troops crushed the student-led protests for greater freedoms.

In the nearly two months since Communist authorities suppressed the pro-democracy movement, the number of reported arrests for embezzlement, bribe-taking, smuggling, armed robbery and other common crimes has multiplied.

The government is apparently trying to satisfy popular discontent over official corruption — a chief target of pro-democracy protesters.

Reports of arrests of protesters, by contrast, have trickled nearly to a halt, perhaps to avoid further international condemnation.

Although China's crime rate still is one of the lowest in the world, in recent years the leadership has noted its rapid rise with alarm.

The government said early this year that the number of people sentenced for crimes in 1988 was up 13 percent from the previous year, at nearly 368,800.

Rarely have the media devoted so much space and energy to crime reports.

In recent weeks, it has not been unusual to find three or four reports of crime and corruption at all levels of government and in all sectors of society in each of the nation's leading newspapers, sometimes all on the front page.

The number of cases and range of people involved — from private entrepreneurs to factory managers to high-ranking officials — hints at how pervasive crime and corruption is in Chinese society.

Siberian miners returning to work, but strike spreads

PROKOPYEVSK, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Coal miners in Siberia ended their strike today after exacting promises of better food, housing and working conditions, but the wave of unrest they launched continued in other key coal regions.

Some of the 150,000 miners who went on strike last week in Siberia's Kuznetsk coal basin region returned to work Thursday and the rest went back today, strike leaders and the official Tass news agency said.

Despite announcements that President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's sweeping concessions — including granting miners greater control over their industry — apply nationwide, tens of thousands remained off the job elsewhere.

Strikes continued in Russian republic, the Ukraine, the northern city of Vorkuta and the Karaganda coalfields of Soviet Central Asia, official media said. A Ukrainian dissident reported another strike near the Polish border.

The labor turmoil is the Soviet Union's worst in six decades.

Gorbachev has expressed sympathy for the strikers and placed much of the blame for the miners' deteriorating working and living conditions on leaders of the officially sanctioned trade unions.

Still, he and other Communist leaders have warned that if the strikes don't end quickly coal shortages will shut down much of the country's industry.

On Wednesday, the Kuznetsk strike committee and members of a high-level government commission signed an agreement meeting many of miners' demands.

The workers were promised higher wages, increased deliveries of meat, sugar, soap, clothes, furniture and other consumer goods, more housing construction and — most important — a greater voice in running their industry.

"It's a victory over the system that we've had in the Soviet Union for the last 70 years, a system in which we work hard but get little in return," said Pyotr A. Menayev, an engineer at the Taldinski Severny open pit mine on the outskirts of Prokopyevsk.

Strike committee member Vyacheslav G. Akulov stressed that the miners had agreed to "interrupt the strike, not to end it."

He said the miners would hold the government to its word: "If the government doesn't keep its promises, we will go back on strike."

The strike wave began 11 days ago in Kuznetsk, the country's second-largest coal field.

Tass said late Thursday that strikes had ended at six mines in the Ukraine's Donetsk coal basin but that most mines in the region — the country's largest coal field — remained on strike.

Earlier Thursday, more than 16,000 miners in the Karaganda region, the country's third-largest coal field, refused to go into the pits and were massing by the thousands for rallies, Tass and the government newspaper Izvestia reported.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Briton hanged in Malysian prison

KAJANG, Malaysia (AP) — A Briton convicted of heroin trafficking was hanged in prison today and spent his last hours clutching a photograph of his 7-year-old daughter, authorities said.

Derrick Gregory was the first Briton to be executed under Malaysia's stringent 14-year-old drug law. Authorities had ignored pleas from British diplomats that he be spared death.

Gregory clutched the photo of his daughter, Tara, through the night until he was marched to the gallows early today.

Gregory, 39, had not seen his daughter since she was an infant. He was arrested in 1982 at a Malaysian airport, reportedly on his way to Los Angeles from Singapore, with 576 grams of heroin hidden in his boots.

His wife divorced him soon after he was sentenced to death in 1987.

Gregory, of Middlesex, England, was turned down in his final appeal for clemency by the Penang State's Pardons Board last week.

Israel hearing appeal

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel's Supreme Court is hearing an appeal by four peace activists convicted of meeting with PLO officials, a politically charged case that mirrors the debate over a possible PLO role in any peace settlement.

The court arguments are legal ones, but they focus on the wider issue of whether dealing with the PLO can hasten peace or only give credibility to what the government considers a terrorist organization bent on Israel's destruction.

Attorney Avigdor Feldman says his clients, the first people convicted under an amendment to Israel's anti-terrorist law, met with PLO officials to help end the long Arab-Israeli conflict.

"They were trying to stop the bloodshed in the (occupied) territories," Feldman said. "Their meeting was for the purpose of peace."

Refugee camp shelled

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Heavy shelling today pounded a Cambodian refugee camp run by communist Khmer Rouge guerrillas, killing one refugee and wounding 10 others, Western relief officials said.

One official said 27 shells crashed into the Site 8 camp in Thailand near the Cambodian border. The three hours of shelling followed overnight fighting in the area, said a Thai security official.

The U.N. Border Relief Operation declared the camp off limits to relief personnel for safety reasons.

Photographer released

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Authorities today released American photojournalist Tony O'Brien six weeks after he was arrested in Kabul in the company of anti-government guerrillas who brought him into the country.

"I want to walk on the street," O'Brien, 43, of Santa Fe, N.M., said moments after he was formally handed over to U.S. consular officer Renny Smith.

FAMILY MATTERS

Spouses: Cost is high for mates' spending frenzies

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: Yesterday you answered a letter from a woman complaining about her husband spending too much money. I need to introduce her to my wife. My wife is spending us into the poor house. We both have good jobs and make plenty of money to live on comfortably, but my wife just can't seem to understand that we don't make enough money to buy everything in the stores.

We have fought and argued over this problem the entire two years that we have been married. We both just dread the first of the month when the charge card statements come. It seems like there is a monster fight over them every month. She has even hidden one statement and insisted that it didn't come.

My wife is a wonderful person. She just can't stop buying. She buys clothes like there is no tomorrow. I don't know what to do. Our arguments are getting worse and worse. She always says she is very sorry and will never do it again. I think that she means it, but she does it again.

You told the other woman (from the prior letter) to learn to say "no." I have said no, but it doesn't do any good. What other suggestions do you have? BROKE

DEAR BROKE: Compulsive overspending is an addiction, but it is also a form of abuse — financial abuse. Most addictions are not done to hurt the other person. I am sure your wife is sincere in her desire to stop spending and her belief that she can.

She is addicted, and you have enabled her addiction by not demanding that she seek help. I encourage both of you to seek professional counseling in order to deal with the addiction that you live with. Go to a Co-Dependents Anonymous meeting to start the process of understanding the interactive nature of addiction. Call 682-4721 for times and places.

Just saying "no" is not enough. You must be prepared to take the necessary actions to support your demand. Recovery from an addiction is hard work, and can be painful for everyone involved. But is it worse than the pain you and your wife are living with now?

DEAR FAMILY: Your letter from the woman whose husband had a financial addiction really hit home. I have been trying since the bust to get my husband to slow down on his spending and he won't do it. We did have a lot of money, but we don't now. I sometimes feel that I must be crazy because I can see all our money going out faster than it is coming in.

I also think that my husband drinks too much. He says that it relaxes him. I think that he does it just to forget how much money we don't have anymore. It makes me very sad to see him come home from golf with his buddies slurring his words and falling to sleep on the sofa.

I'm afraid to say too much about his spending or his drinking. He made the moeny and I guess he can lose it. Fortunately, our children are all grown and independent.

I don't really have a question, I just wanted to say thank you for answering the letter the way you did. I know that you are right, but I don't know how to demand that he stop spending money that he made. — STUCK

DEAR STUCK: Stuck isn't comfortable. Who "stuck" you? You have described two potentially fatal addictions — money and alcohol. I encourage you to go to an Al-Anon meeting. I know it's embarrassing, but you must start the "unstuck" process.

Your husband sounds as if he is already well along a socially acceptable path of ruin. Our society is remarkably tolerant of those who appear to have money and are alcoholic. Don't let his addiction ruin his life and yours. Do something for yourself. Call 682-4721 and find out about Al-Anon. Write again and let me know how you're doing.

Book helps cancer victim's psychological rehabilitation

By SUE REILLY
New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — In the years since being told she had breast cancer, Los Angeles psychologist Mimi Greenberg has gotten scared, well, mad and even.

Her physical treatment was a lumpectomy and radiation.

Simple, almost painless. Breasts intact. No problem.

Her psychological rehabilitation was another story.

A book, in fact.

"Invisible Scars" is Greenberg's $4.95 paperback (St. Martin's Press) written to help others cope with their doctors, families and themselves when diagnosed with breast cancer.

It was her gift to others, and a way of dealing with a lot of residual anger.

She said she felt abused by the insensitivity of some of the medical community.

She was appalled at the lack of psychological support and practical assistance available to her at the time she underwent treatment.

She needed to do something about those feelings, she said, something that would relieve the anger that began with a phone call from her doctor in the fall of 1983.

Greenberg, on this particularly pleasant November afternoon in Los Angeles, was in possession of all the statistics about breast cancer, but they did not apply to her.

She knew more than 100,000 women die of breast cancer every year, as well as almost 1,000 men.

She knew breast cancer is right behind lung cancer as the leading cancer killer of women in the United States.

She knew one out of 10 women in America will develop breast cancer.

Very big deal, but not for her.

She was healthy, and there was no history of cancer in her family.

She was a single, 43-year-old woman of independent means, with a thriving, fulfilling counseling practice, dozens of friends and a gorgeous new condominium she was in the midst of decorating.

Life could not have been better when, a few days earlier, her doctor had suggested a mammogram.

To humor him, she went ahead and had one.

When he called her later to say she had breast cancer, she said she was horrified, then suicidal.

"I decided I would rather end it all than live hopelessly disfigured and die a terrible death," Greenberg said.

The wild thoughts translated into rage.

She said she crashed around her beautiful new condo, screaming at the top of her lungs and bashing anything that crossed her path.

Then she was calmer, but no less frightened.

Looking back, she realizes she was given a lot of misinformation and misguided medical advice by friends, even though they had the best intentions.

What she could not forgive and forget was being told about her condition over the phone and having to face that trauma alone.

To this day, the fact that many oncologists routinely telephone negative test results to patients rankles her.

"It is just so wrong," Greenberg said.

According to Saar Porrath, a radiologist, this usually happens because of pragmatism or a pushy patient.

"Sometimes a patient will not come in to the office to hear the results, and insists you give the information out over the phone," Porrath said.

"Unloading that kind of information over the phone is inexcusable," Greenberg said. "The terror is so great, and the anger and helplessness so overwhelming. It is absolutely the wrong thing to do."

Greenberg got well, thanks to early detection of the cancer and the subsequent treatment.

But there was still the anger.

Border school nurses face life of highs, lows

By REBECCA THATCHER

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — In a scene that has probably been repeated — in one form or another — countless times in the city's schools, school nurse Adell Becker advised a student not to take the diarrhea medicine her mother purchased across the Mexican border in Matamoros.

"I don't recommend that you do that," she tells the young lady in a voice that is both firm and non-judgmental.

Ms. Becker, the school nurse at Cummings Intermediate School, explains that diarrhea is the body's way of flushing out something it could not tolerate.

It should only be treated with prescription medicine on the advice of a physician, she adds.

Such a scenario is probably a routine interchange for the Brownsville Independent School District's 44 school nurses, who are at the front lines in providing care to the city's many impoverished youth.

"In Brownsville the school nurse is the only health care provider that some school children see for years and years," said Ana Milan, the director of nursing for BISD.

During the past academic year, BISD nurses recorded about 166,000 patient visits and 109,000 health screenings.

THEY PERFORMED 41,243 vision and hearing screenings, and referred 370 students for hearing problems and 1,999 for faulty vision.

It is a life full of highs and lows, the school nurses say.

Hector Iracheta, a school nurse who rotates among five intermediate and high schools, said he enjoys the opportunity to educate young people about their health.

"The reason that I like school nursing is because you have an chance to educate the students, to teach them about self-care and prevention," Iracheta said.

"Most of the students are receptive to learning. Health education is one of the most important ways to prevent illness, and prevention is the best medicine."

Iracheta is one of the four nurses in the system whose salary is partially funded by the federal government through funds allocated to provide health care to migrant workers.

Under the Migrant Student Record Transfer System, copies of the health records on all migrant children are kept on file at the Department of Education in Arkansas, and the records follow the children from place to place.

Iracheta, himself a child of migrant workers, said the volumes of paperwork is just one of the activities that differentiate today's school nurse from the stereotypical distributor of Band-Aids.

"We do a lot more than just putting on Band-Aids," Iracheta said. "The school nurse is a counselor, a social worker, even a seamstress," he said with a grin as he handed a student a needle and thread.

"We do first aid. We do screenings. We refer. We have to file reports to the state. We do follow-ups. There are a lot of things that are involved in school nursing," he said.

WHEN THE Texas Education Agency completed its accreditation report on the Brownsville schools, they called for an improved coordination of health services with the district's educational program.

Clara Sanchez has been the nurse at Canales Elementary School for the past four years.

A former emergency room nurse, she said the student-nurse ratio at the school — about 1,000 to one — made it difficult for her to get into the classroom.

"I love this school, the people are great, but because I have so many patients I can't really get out of here," she said, gesturing at the tidy clinic that is carefully decorated with health posters. "It would be ideal to have some time set aside for teaching."

Ms. Sanchez said she is hoping to do more teaching next year when she goes to Putegnant Elementary School, where the student-nurse ratio is lower.

Nurses also speak of the struggle to get medical care for children whose parents either can't afford it or don't think their children really have a problem. "One of the things that is most frustrating for the nurse is when you don't get compliance from a parent," said Iracheta.

MS. BECKER, the nurse at Cummings, said there is also the nightmare of not being able to contact parents when their child is ill.

"The socioeconomics of the place permeates everything," Ms. Becker said. "Some of the kids don't have telephones, and their neighbors' phones don't work or something.

"It gets real scary when you have somebody that's really hurt and you can't find anybody," Ms. Becker said.

At times it falls upon the school nurse to report serious problems such as child sexual abuse, said Ms. Milan, the director of nursing. "If a kid comes in a few times and you sit down and ask them, 'What's bothering you?' and they say, 'Dad is touching me in the wrong place.'

"The first time that happened to me ..." her voice trailed off, as if she was unable to say exactly how she felt.

Though the nurses say they are exposed on a daily basis to the failings of the health care system, they say they also find joy in their work.

As Ms. Becker put it, "It's kind of challenging ... you have to know a lot about the community ... (And) at least in school nursing, when the bell rings, you're pretty much off-duty, it's not like a hospital."

Exercise may clear blood, according to IRA study

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Running 15 miles a week — well within the reach of many exercisers — may help lower blood cholesterol levels and possibly ward off heart trouble, research indicates.

The researchers say the study suggests that exercise — independent of the standard techniques of weight loss and low-fat diet — can reduce levels of fatty particles called triglycerides.

These particles in the blood may lead to the formation of deposits on arterial walls, which can lead to heart disease and death.

The researchers think this is the first study to separate the effects of exercise from those of weight loss and diet.

"We can't guarantee (exercisers) that they'll be rewarded by not having heart attacks, but there will be an improvement in their blood," Dr. Jan L. Breslow of Rockefeller University in New York City said in a telephone interview.

Breslow and colleagues at Adelphi University in Garden City, N.Y., and at Hadassah University Hospital in Jerusalem did the research.

They published their research in Circulation, a medical journal of the American Heart Association.

The researchers tested six men with normal blood fat levels to establish a baseline — their blood fat level before exercise.

The men then began a seven-week, 29-session exercise program in which they jogged on a treadmill for 30 minutes, including a five-minute warmup and a five-minute cooldown.

The volunteers also were kept to a strict meal plan, so the scientists could control the fatty acids the men ate, and balance intake against energy expenditure to keep the men from losing weight.

Researchers made two kinds of measurements of very low density lipoproteins — the protein shells that make fats soluble and able to travel in the blood. One was done soon after a meal, and the other was 12 hours later.

Breslow considers the post-meal measurement crucial, and an improvement over previous research. He says that a flood of fats into the bloodstream after a meal may increase the risk of deposit formation on arterial walls.

The scientists say the exercisers reduced their after-dining lipoproteins by 32 percent, and their levels 12 hours after a meal by 16 percent.

The report says previous studies have indicated that exercise may make the body convert blood fats to energy before they can lead to arterial deposits. And they say they increased amounts of an enzyme that breaks down triglycerides in the lipoproteins.

Besides getting better blood, the men simply became more physically fit, the researchers say. Their ability to use oxygen during exercise increased 43 percent, and the increase in conditioning linked up well with the decreases in lipoproteins.

But Breslow concedes that his study is not the last word on the subject. Although some studies have linked high triglyceride levels with an increased risk of heart disease, others — using different methods of computing results — have not, he says.

And he says his study doesn't necessarily endorse exercise as a way to fight high levels of blood fat, because his subjects were healthy to begin with.

Removing ticks not a tricky trick

New York Times News Service

Chances are you know of a half-dozen tricks to remove ticks.

But none of these methods works, according to a carefully controlled study by Dr. Glen R. Needham of Ohio State University.

Needham, an entomologist, is among many who suggest the following technique, outlined last summer in Patient Care magazine, for removing ticks from people and pets.

1. Use a blunt pair of tweezers, or if one is not available, use your fingers protected by a rubber glove, paper towel or disposable tissue.
2. Grasp the tick as close to the surface of the skin as possible and pull away from the skin with steady pressure. If necessary, lift the tick slightly upward and pull parallel to the skin until the tick is detached. Do not yank or twist.
3. Dispose of the tick (without touching or crushing it) by dunking it in alcohol, flushing it down the toilet or wrapping it in adhesive tape before placing it in the garbage.
4. Disinfect the bite site with alcohol or peroxide or at least wash it with soap and water. Also wash your hands thoroughly.

Time will tell results of Compound Q tests

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Doctors running the underground trial of Compound Q say it will take at least one or two months of patient follow-up to learn if the drug is effective against AIDS.

But they say they do know this: Trichosanthin is doing something to the human immunodeficiency virus, which causes AIDS.

Levels of P24, a protein the virus is thought to release as it reproduces, fell at least 50 percent in all patients who received the first dose of Compound Q, Dr. Larry Waites said.

After five days, the levels rose again slightly, indicating cells being killed by the drug might be releasing the virus back into the bloodstream as they die. If so, Compound Q would have to be used in conjunction with other drugs to repress viral replication – assuming that Compound Q works at all.

All but one patient treated in the San Francisco tests had T4-cell counts below 25. The normal count for T4 cells, the immune system cells killed by HIV, is 800 to 1,000. The patients' T4 cells have not risen significantly, a disappointing finding.

Waites and Dr. Alan Levin said it is possible the patients' bone marrow may be able to produce more T4 cells over time.

They also hope Compound Q will show better results in patients who have healthier immune systems when treated. The next group of patients studied will have T4-cell counts of 100 to 250.

"We think this is killing the virus," Waites said, but "we don't know how rapidly the immune system can recover after having been battered by the virus for eight to 10 years."

U.S. farmers get $3.78 billion in drought benefits

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — In New Jersey, 905 farmers collected federal 1988 drought benefits totaling more than $17.1 million, an average of about $18,925 each.

Eight farmers in Arizona got $132,836 from the Agriculture Department under last year's drought aid program, an average of about $16,600 each.

Most payments, however, averaged far less than those examples, according to financial reports released by the department's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

Nationally, a routine ASCS report showed recently, approximately $3.78 billion was paid to 789,707 farmers under the Disaster Assistance Act of 1988. Payments by state were listed but the numbers of farmers in each state were not.

The agency provided supplemental information, including a breakdown of the number of farmers by state, at the request of The Associated Press. A sampling of state averages, including the top five states, was computed by the AP.

Karen Kostoff of the agency's information resources management division said Wednesday the numbers of farmers listed by state would not add up to the national total.

That is because if a farmer has property in two states, for example, each will show up in the state figures, she said. Nationally, however, the farms under the same ownership are counted as a single unit.

Most of the producers nationally — 709,222 as of June 30 — benefited because of crop losses due to last year's drought, with some also collecting under other provisions of the program, such as livestock feed benefits.

The national figures showed that more than $3.3 billion of the $3.78 billion paid out so far was for crop losses.

On an overall basis of total benefits, North Dakota led the nation with about $407 million received by 49,144 farmers, an average of $8,280 each.

Wisconsin was second with nearly $396 million going to 52,285 producers who averaged $7,490 each.

Third was Illinois where 98,775 farmers averaged $3,830 each for a total of $378.8 million.

Iowa was fourth overall at $326.5 million, an average of $4,520 to each of 72,169 farmers.

Minnesota was fifth with more than $311 million, averaging $5,450 among 57,083 recipients.

In all, farmers in the five states collected about $1.82 billion under the 1988 drought program, accounting for 48 percent of the total.

The state with the smallest number of drought aid recipients was Alaska, where the report showed one farmer collecting $6,640 from the government. Rhode Island showed two farmers, but they got only $4,282, an average of $2,141.

California, traditionally the leader in terms of agricultural sales value, got about $20.8 million in drought assistance, an average of $7,260 among 2,864 farmers.

David C. Hulst, left, examines young tomato plants treated at his research farm near Hughson, Calif., with protein bacteria that kills caterpillars.

Protein inserted into tomatoes hoped to provide defense against caterpillars

HUGHSON, Calif. (AP) — Tomatoes soon may become deadly enemies of the caterpillars that love to gnaw on them.

A gene from bacteria, researchers say, can't hurt other living things and will be inserted in tomato seeds, letting plants and fruit that germinate from those seeds ward off caterpillar-type insects without use of artificial pesticides.

"When the insect eats the plant, it ingests that bacterium and dies," said David C. Hulst, director of Hulst Research Farm Services, where a field trial on caterpillar-resistant tomatoes is being conducted this summer.

The bacterium, Bacillus thuringiensis, is fatal only to organisms with a specific alkaline level in their systems, making it dangerous only to the caterpillar family, Hulst said.

Hulst said the bacterium is nature's way of controlling the number of caterpillar-type insects.

"It's one of those antagonisms put in nature to reduce populations of certain insects," Hulst said during a tour of the test field. "It is possible that without (this bacteria) in the environment, the insects might eat everything around."

The U.S. Department of Agriculture agreed to the field test at Monsanto Co. last month, but approval for general use is several years away, said Roy Fuchs, a Monsanto researcher who directed the lab work that prepared the way for field tests.

Researchers predict widespread use of this biological control because of growing concern about environmental effects from pesticides that don't always keep insects at or below acceptable levels, Fuchs said in a telephone interview from his office in St. Louis. He cited Department of Agriculture statistics that farmers spend $150 million annually on chemical insecticides, yet caterpillar-type insects alone cause $450 million damage a year.

"There's a real need for alternatives," Fuchs added. "That's what will make or break the technology for farmers — to see a real benefit, and we're confident they will when they have a chance to look at...insect-tolerant plants."

A big advantage of the bacteria approach is "that it has a very long history of safe and effective use in agriculture," said Trevor Suslow, spokesman for DNA Plant Technologies, a pesticide laboratory that is not directly involved in the tomato research.

However, he said one major concern is that widespread use of bacterial pesticides will cause insects to develop resistance more quickly.

Field tests are being conducted at four locations by independent contractors to give Monsanto and Environmental Protection Agency researchers a broad geographic spectrum of the types of caterpillars the new tomatoes will kill.

Tests began in Illinois two years ago and have spread to Florida and Mexico to see if they will halt tomato pinworms and to Hughson 100 miles southeast of San Francisco to determine the effect on tomato fruit worms and beet armyworms. The protein also has been tested on tobacco plants.

Fuchs said taste tests will be conducted later, but he doesn't think the protein will alter the flavor of the tomato.

"Any vegetables that have caterpillar insect problems could benefit from this technology," Fuchs said.

Commodity Credit farm investments remain low, agriculture report says

The total value of commodities acquired by CCC in the first eight months of the fiscal year that began last Oct. 1 was $1.72 billion, the report said. In the same period of 1987-88, CCC acquired products valued at $9.62 billion.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The taxpayer's investment in surplus farm commodities continues to show a sharp decline from last year's levels, largely as a result of drought-reduced crop production in 1988 and rising market prices.

An Agriculture Department report released Monday showed the Commodity Credit Corp. had $13.5 billion invested in price support loans and actual inventories as of May 31. That included $9.1 billion in loans outstanding, and $4.4 billion in government-owned commodities, said the report by Keith Bjerke, the CCC's executive vice president.

A year earlier, on May 31, 1988, the CCC had an investment of $23.1 billion, including $14.3 billion in loans outstanding and $8.8 billion in inventories.

The CCC finances various price support operations of the department, including those for wheat, feed grains, rice, tobacco, cotton, soybeans, dairy products, honey and sugar.

In the case of the major grain crops, the 1988 drought reduced production and pushed up prices. That reduced the need for price support loans and forfeitures, which means the CCC takes over ownership of crops when farmers opt not to repay the loans.

When market prices are high enough, it's usual for farmers to pay off the loans and use or sell as they choose.

The farmer-owned grain reserve, which enables wheat and feed grains to be stored and kept off the market under government loan until prices rise enough to trigger their release, consisted of 287 million bushels of wheat valued at more than $1 billion as of May 31, the report said.

Corn and other feed grains in the reserve totaled more than 1.03 billion bushels valued at $2.57 billion.

The total value of commodities acquired by CCC in the first eight months of the fiscal year that began last Oct. 1 was $1.72 billion, the report said. In the same period of 1987-88, CCC acquired products valued at $9.62 billion.

Net losses to CCC totaled about $3.52 billion through May 31, the report said, compared with a loss of more than $10 billion in the same eight months of 1987-88. The decline was mainly due to the smaller volume of grain moving into CCC inventories, and reduced payments to farmers.

Dairy inventories held by CCC also continued to edge down from the high levels of a few years ago.

As of May 31, for example, total holding were reported at 567.6 million pounds of products valued at $759.4 million, compared with 715.9 million pounds with a CCC investment of $820.1 million.

Inventories of dried milk and cheese were down sharply, but the butter stockpile was up from a year ago.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Department scientists are working on an edible, nearly invisible coating made from milk that could extend the shelf life of fruit and vegetables.

Attila E. Pavlath, a chemist with the department's Agricultural Research Service, said tests are concentrating on a film based on casein, a milk protein. A small amount of vitamin C is added to help protect against browning.

Pavlath, who works at the agency's research laboratory in Albany, Calif., said in a report released here on Monday that small pieces of sliced and peeled apple dipped in the coating stayed fresh for several days. Unprotected pieces shriveled and turned brown within a few hours.

The scientists want to make the film thinner, a process that might take two more years, Pavlath said.

Films that "the tongue cannot feel and the taste buds cannot detect" also could be made from protein in soybeans, corn and wheat, the report said.

"Some people who like fresh produce don't necessarily want to spend time in their kitchen washing, slicing, peeling, pitting and paring," Pavlath said. "It's part of the trend toward buying food that is ready to use and easy to store."

A successful coating would allow more types of produce to be presliced and packaged. Such coatings may have other potential uses, perhaps for keeping fillings in pizzas or preventing pies from soaking the crust.

Unlike waxes on cucumbers or other edible coatings such as the "skin" on sausages, new films could be modified to add flavors or colors to standard fare, Pavlath said.

John M. Krochta, a former chemical engineer at the Albany laboratory who is now at the University of California, Davis, said an ideal edible coating should keep out microbes that promote softening, browning, mold and other types of decay.

Soviet farms dwarf U.S. enterprises

WASHINGTON (AP) — A major new reference by the Agriculture Department shows that the Soviet Union has about 1.5 billion acres of agricultural land spread among huge farms that dwarf most American enterprises.

For example, the average size of state-owned farms in the Soviet Union is almost 40,000 acres. Collective farms operated cooperatively by families average nearly 16,000 acres each.

In all, the Soviet Union in 1985 — the most recent figures tabulated — had 22,690 state farms and 26,660 collectives. No figures were available for private plots.

According to USDA estimates for last year, the United States had 999 million acres in about 2.16 million farms, virtually all privately owned and operated as family enterprises. Those averaged 463 acres each.

The new booklet published by the department's Economic Research Service is the first revision of statistics for Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union since 1983, said Nancy J. Cochrane, who coordinated the project.

New tables have been added on farm structure for selected countries, and these reflect some of the recent wave of reforms in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

No comparisons are made between those countries and the United States, however, and many of the units are in the metric system. For example, hectares are used for land area, with one hectare equal to 2.47 acres. Production is in metric tons of 2,205 pounds each, and per capita consumption in kilograms of about 2.2 pounds each.

Besides the Soviet Union, seven Eastern European countries are included: Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Poland, Romania and Yugoslavia. Albania was omitted.

Official statistical sources of the countries were used as the primary source of information, along with some supplemental sources. However, Cochrane noted that "data on Albania were too scarce to include."

The 129-page booklet shows some of the many changes and differences that have occurred in agriculture in the Soviet bloc since 1965.

In the past, it was a common practice for all the countries except Yugoslavia to distinguish between two types of socialized farms, state and collective, or cooperative.

"This system has been changing in many of the countries since the early 1970s," Cochrane said in the booklet's introduction. "Bulgaria has abolished the system altogether in favor of agro-industrial complexes."

Now's time to refill soil's water storage

Plan proper residue management now for a head start on your 1990 crop. Give careful attention to present field conditions and crop residues, for these will have a big influence on next year's crop yields.

Kiker

For many parts of Texas, a significant percentage of annual rainfall comes during the fall and winter months, so it's important to begin refilling the soil's water storage capability. Proper residue management aids this process.

Some deep, fine-textured soils will hold two or more inches of available water per foot of depth. This deep moisture is what can sustain crops when the going gets rough next summer.

Good crop residue management requires that stubble be shredded right behind the combine while it still has a high moisture content. Also, destroy root systems to prevent regrowth and subsequent use of soil moisture.

Tillage equipment to be used should include a sweep, chisel or subsoiler, singly or in combination, or any one of a number of other methods.

If a crop is to follow the land preparation shortly (30 to 60 days), nitrogen fertilizer applied to the residue may be a paying proposition, but a soil test should be taken to make sure about the nutrients needed.

An inch of moisture stored deep in the root zone this fall will go much farther toward future high yields than an inch of moisture in the form of light showers next summer.

Moisture that doesn't soak in runs off, and also carries soil and plant nutrients with it. With proper residue management, producers can hold the maximum amount of water where it falls and make the excess move slowly to the bottom of the slope.

Young 4-H equine enthusiasts from across Texas will display their top horsemanship skills and their horses' best performance during the State 4-H Horse Show in Abilene July 24-29.

More than 800 entries are expected for the statewide event. The show is billed as one of the world's largest and most competitive youth activities.

The show has two parts, the open invitational and qualifying levels of competition with the open invitational activities featured first.

The qualifying show, which will wind up the week's activities, is for 4-H contestants who competed and placed high enough in district competition to be eligible for the state 4-H horse show finals.

Events will take place in the Taylor County Coliseum and the Horse Barn, both located at Abilene's equestrian center grounds.

Tyson tells Truth: No one will take my title

Champ says he'll be jittery, but ready

By TOM CANAVAN

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The divorce is behind him, the weight has not been around the 276-pound mark in a while, the manager and trainer controversies are almost second nature and there hasn't even been a speeding ticket in recent memory.

Mike Tyson appears ready for Carl "The Truth" Williams in tonight's heavyweight title bout, and the world's undisputed champion says he is.

"Friday, I'll be there and I'll be ready," Tyson said. "No one is taking the title. I'll be champion still."

Few, with the obvious exception of the Williams' camp, expect the challenger to win. Williams, 29, is a 12-1 underdog in the fight to be held at the Atlantic City Convention Center and many experts think Williams and his questionable chin will make him an early victim.

Still, there are some questions the 23-year-old Tyson has to answer in his sixth defense of the undisputed title. He was not his usually impressive self in stopping Frank Bruno in five rounds at Las Vegas, Nev. on Feb. 25.

Jay Bright, one of two co-trainers who replaced Kevin Rooney in that position, says Tyson had other problems then.

"I felt there were a lot of inhibiting factors the last fight," said Bright, a 31 year-old protege of the late Cus D'Amato, which explains his association with Tyson. "Mike was coming down from 276 and was going through the divorce.

"As much as you'd like to let things bounce off you, it had an affect on him," Bright said. "That fight was the downside of his career. You'll see him on the upswing on Friday."

Tyson, who weighed 219¼ at Thursday's weigh-in, refused to make predictions about the fight and added he would be jittery coming in, just like he is before any fight.

"Just come to the fight and I'm sure you'll enjoy it," said Tyson, who is undefeated in 36 fights with 32 knockouts. He has won his last five by knockout.

Williams, 22-2 with 17 knockouts, has been remarkably calm coming into his biggest fight since losing a 15-round decision to Larry Holmes in May 1985, a bout Holmes had to rally late to win.

"I'm going to put up one heck of a fight," Williams, who weighed 218, said. "Look at me, you can see the muscle. I'm not just a fighter who can stay outside and box. I've got power. What does he have? He's one-dimensional."

That's been a point Williams' camp has harped on in the pre-fight news conferences. Trainer Carmen Graziano has said that if Williams can settle down and use his jab effectively, he can win.

"There is no finesse with him," Graziano said of Tyson. "He is a mechanical robot. Up to now he's been flawless. He fights with a desire to hurt people."

Williams said that too many of Tyson's opponents have fought him just looking to survive. He said his intention is to win.

"I'm going into the lion's den and take the meat from him," Williams said. "I've waited long enough. A lot of people put me on the back burner, for what reason I don't know. I'll give it all I got."

Williams reportedly will make between $1.3 million and $1.6 million. Tyson reportedly is expected to pocket between $5 million and $6 million.

The bout will be televised live by the HBO cable network, starting at 9 p.m. CDT.

Stewart's 65 sets record

By LARRY SIDDONS

TROON, Scotland (AP) — Payne Stewart of the United States broke the course record with a 7-under par 65 today, but it wasn't enough to keep Australian Wayne Grady out of the early second-round lead at the 118th British Open.

PGA

On a day of chilly rain and low scores, Tom Watson also was among the leaders. Aiming for a record sixth Open title, the American veteran shot a 4-under par round of 68 that included an eagle at the par-5 16th to move into second-place tie with Stewart at 137, two shots behind Grady.

The play of the leaders was indicative of the whole field. Of the first 45 finishers, 24 were at par or better, and it looked as if the cut for the final two rounds could be as low as 146 — just 2-over par.

Grady, who plays on the U.S. PGA Tour, had a 5-under par round of 67 for a 36-hole total of 135.

That was enough to hold off Watson, the last American champion of the Open in 1983, and Stewart, who never has won a major tournament but has been the most successful American at the Open in those five barren years.

And on a day when unusally warm weather gave way to more traditional British summer fare, he was better for one round than anyone who ever struck a club at Royal Troon.

Stewart, however, was unimpressed.

"Course records do not mean anything unless you win the golf tournament," he said. "If I come out on top on Sunday, then it will really mean something."

His round over the 7,067-yard, par-72 links course included an eagle, six birdies and one bogey. The 65 was one stroke better than the old course mark, tied most recently in Thursday's first round by English surprise Wayne Stephens.

It left Stewart one stroke in front of two journeymen from the European tour, Eduardo Romero and David Feherty, after 36 holes. Stewart held the lead briefly before Grady, playing in the following threesome, finished his own torrid round.

Joining Stewart at 137, Watson birdied the second, sixth, 11th and 12th holes, and eagled the 542-yard 16th.

Two-run double downs Angels in ninth

By TED BATTLES

It wasn't exactly the kind of revenge that could be called "true satisfaction," but Chris Jelic 's two-run ninth inning double snatched victory from the jaws of defeat and gave Jackson a 7-5 Texas League victory over the Midland Angels Thursday night.

And for Jelic, a catcher from Mt. Lebanon, Penn., who's struggling to regain the full use of his throwing arm after missing most of the 1988 season, beating a Texas team won't make up for Pitt's Cotton Bowl loss to SMU a few years ago, but will have to do for now.

Jelic's hit capped a three-run rally and came with two out off Midland relief ace Luis Merejo, a pitcher whose sidearm delivery usually gives opposing batters fits.

"AGAINST SIDE-ARMERS, you have to be aggressive early in the count," said Jelic, "because it's tough to pick up the release point of the ball. If you get behind, you are in trouble, so you have to hit 'em when they are throwing strikes.

"I think he hung a slider inside." In any case, Jelic, who came to the Mets in the spring of '87 with pitcher David Cone from the Royals' organization and then developed trouble, was ready and jumped on it.

He lashed the ball into the right-field corner to chase home two runs to retrieve a game that would have left the Mets down 0-2 in the five-game series. John Monell had bounced a single up the middle to score Angelo Cuevas with the run that tied it.

End not in sight for Rose

By JOE KAY

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Pete Rose's lawsuit isn't going anywhere fast. Neither is the Cincinnati Reds' manager.

A federal judge in Columbus won't have a decision in Rose's case for at least another 10 days, leaving Rose to manage the Reds under court protection. The investigation of gambling allegations against Rose is five months old — and there's no telling how long it will be before there is a conclusion.

A baseball lawyer who argued the case Thursday before U.S. District Judge John D. Holschuh said a quick resolution isn't baseball's top goal at this point.

"It's more important now that we get this matter straightened out," lawyer Louis Hoynes Jr. said. "Getting this straightened out and getting the right result is more important than the time it takes to get it straightened out."

One thing is certain: the case will drag on at least until the dog days of August.

The next step in the case is a ruling by Holschuh on whether Rose's lawsuit against Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti should be heard in state court, as Rose has requested, or in federal court, as baseball suggests.

Holschuh, known as a deliberate decision-maker, heard arguments on the issue for an hour and 45 minutes Thursday afternoon in a crowded courtroom. He pointed out that lawyers have filed thick briefs that will require further legal research, and the judge's docket already is crowded.

"The fact is that there are other litigants whose cases to them are just as important as this one is to Mr. Rose and Mr. Giamatti," Holschuh said.

Holschuh said he won't have a decision until at least July 31, and it might be longer. Rose is protected from suspension or firing for three days after Holschuh's decision.

That leaves Rose to manage a team that has lost 26 of its last 36 games and has tumbled to fourth place in the National League West. Injuries have played a major role, with 10 players going on the disabled list this season.

Ink Man's play makes Rangers forget trade

By CHARLES RICHARDS

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Pete Incaviglia, who was being shopped around by the Texas Rangers, says he benefited from the rest he got while on the disabled list and at the All-Star break.

The Rangers' left fielder came back from the All-Star break on a hot streak.

Going into Thursday night's game against the New York Yankees, the former Oklahoma State All-American was 9-for-24 with three home runs and 12 RBIs in seven games since returning from a left elbow injury he suffered on July 4 when he was hit by a pitch.

He hit only .215 for the first half of the season, but his average has inched steadily higher to .230.

Being on the DL and then having time off during the All-Star break, Incaviglia said, "gave me a chance to take a look in the mirror and see what I want to do. I love to play baseball. It gave me time to focus."

He tied a team record for RBIs in consecutive games with four on Sunday and five on Monday, when his grand slam earned a prolonged ovation from an Arlington Stadium crowd that has grown accustomed to booing him for his frequent strikeouts.

"I said to myself, 'Go out and do what you do. Hit like you did in college and the second year (with the Rangers). If you have enough natural ability, you'll be successful. If not, you'll have tried.'

"So I'm not thinking about where my hands are. ... I'm just thinking about hitting the baseball as hard and as far as I can. That's the way I always played. I'm not gonna let anything get in the way of that."

AP Laserphoto

After suffering through a lackluster first half, Pete Incaviglia appears to have turned things around for himself, and for the Rangers.

Rangers general manager Tom Grieve said Incaviglia has attracted little interest around the league.

Incaviglia said he doesn't know where trade negotiations stand.

Riding a five game losing streak, Hough tries to endure rough times

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Charlie Hough was the ace of the Texas pitching staff for several years, but this season the Rangers have remained in contention in the AL West despite Hough, not because of him.

Since beating the New York Yankees in mid-June, Hough is 0-5 with a 5.18 earned-run average and is in the second-longest losing streak of his big league career.

"Bad pitches, terrible," the 41-year-old Hough said of a disastrous first inning Wednesday night that started him on the way to a 4-0 loss to Boston.

The Red Sox slapped five singles off him for a 3-0 first-inning lead, and Hough dropped to 5-11, the most losses in the American League.

By the time Hough left in the fifth inning, he had given up nine Boston hits.

Hough's money pitch, the knuckleball, is considered by many to be the most unhittable of all deliveries, when thrown correctly. It's also the hardest for a catcher to handle.

Charlie Hough

But Wednesday night, catcher Jim Sundberg said, "he was pretty easy to catch" — proof that Hough's knuckler wasn't working.

"That's how I gauge it," Sundberg said. "He was real flat. It was not a

A's, Stewart down Orioles

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

AL Roundup

Dave Stewart usually pitches against the Baltimore Orioles like he did against the National League All-Stars — poorly.

That wasn't the case Thursday night, when Stewart did what he usually does to the rest of the American League.

Stewart won his 14th game, tied for most in the majors, by ending a five-game losing streak to the Orioles in the Oakland Athletics' 5-2 victory.

"On any given day, I'm capable of beating any team in this league," said Stewart, hit hard last week in his All-Star Game start.

Those given days have rarely come against Baltimore, a team that turned Stewart down for a tryout when he was temporarily out of baseball in early 1986. Stewart, a 20-game winner the past two seasons, had not beaten the Orioles since Aug. 29, 1986.

Even last year, when the Orioles were the worst team in the big leagues at 54-107, Stewart went 0-2 with a 5.82 earned-run average against them. This season, he made one start versus Baltimore and was tagged with a loss.

Stewart, 14-5, joined Mike Scott and Ed Whitson as the top winners in the majors. He is 9-1 at home this season.

"The only streak I know about right now is that I haven't lost two games in a row all season," he said, "and that's one streak I'd like to continue all year."

The victory kept Oakland tied with California atop the AL West. The Orioles remained 7½ games ahead in the AL East.

In other games, Texas beat New York 6-2, Cleveland stopped Kansas City 4-0, California got past Detroit 4-3 and Seattle defeated Toronto 5-2.

Stewart gave up two runs on seven hits in seven-plus innings. Mickey Tettleton, a former catcher for the Athletics and now Baltimore's surprise slugger, said his former batterymate showed something new.

"I thought the first time we saw him, his forkball was up in the strike zone," Tettleton said. "Tonight, he had it down. He adjusted. That's why he's the best pitcher in the league right now. Tonight, he was typical Dave Stewart."

Dennis Eckersley pitched one inning for his 15th save. It was his first save since May 21, just before he hurt his arm and went on the disabled list.

Dave Schmidt, 8-9, lost for the first time in six career decisions against the Athletics. He is 1-4 with a 6.17 ERA in his last six starts and could be headed back to the bullpen.

Carney Lansford hit an RBI single in the third inning. Jose Canseco' run-scoring single helped make it 3-0 in the fourth.

The Orioles broke an 18-inning scoreless streak with two runs in the sixth, but Dave Henderson hit a two-run single in the Oakland seventh.

Rangers 6, Yankees 2

Nolan Ryan struck out 11 in 7 1-3 innings and won his 284th career game, pitching Texas past visiting New York.

Ryan, 11-6, gave up five hits and did not walk a batter. He leads the majors with 166 strikeouts, and fanned at least 10 batters for the ninth time this year and the 190th time in his career.

Kenny Rogers relieved with one out, the bases loaded and the Rangers ahead 4-1 in the eighth. Steve Balboni hit an RBI single, but Don Mattingly grounded into a double play, although replays appeared to show Mattingly was safe at first base.

Steve Buechele, who had three RBIs, hit a two-run single in the eighth and Rogers finished for his first save.

Andy Hawkins, 11-9, extended his scoreless-inning streak to 23 before Pete Incaviglia hit a solo home run in the fifth for the game's first run. It was Incaviglia's 10th homer this season and fourth in his last eight games.

Indians 4, Royals 0

Greg Swindell got his 13th victory, pitching two-hit ball for seven innings as Cleveland won at Royals Stadium. Kansas City leads the majors with a 32-13 home record.

Swindell, 13-2, won for the ninth time in 10 decisions. Jesse Orosco and Doug Jones each pitched one hitless inning.

Bret Saberhagen, 9-5, had his six-game winning streak stopped.

Joe Carter, who had hit five homers in his last six at-bats, singled in four tries. He failed to tie the major league record of six home runs in three consecutive games, done seven times. Mike Schmidt was the last to do it, in 1976; Gus Zernial was the last AL player to accomplish the feat, in 1951.

Carter's leadoff single in the seventh inning started a three-run burst that broke open a scoreless game.

Mariners 5, Blue Jays 2

Scott Bankhead set a team record with his eighth consecutive victory — also an AL high this season — as Seattle beat Toronto.

Bankhead, 10-4, has won seven straight starts and eight of his last 10 outings. He gave up two runs on six hits in 7 2-3 innings and Dennis Powell went one inning for his second save.

Angels 4, Tigers 3

Wally Joyner singled home Claudell Washington from second base with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning as California sent Detroit to its 12th loss in 14 games.

The Angels scored the winning run against Mike Henneman, 6-3, on two walks and Joyner's third hit of the game.

Chuck Finley, 11-6, gave up 10 hits, struck out 12 and walked one. Tigers starter Doyle Alexander remained winless in 10 outings.

NL Roundup

As a hitter, Les Lancaster is a thinking man's pitcher.

"Believe it or not, I was looking for it," Lancaster said after shocking the San Francisco Giants with a two-out, run-scoring double in the 11th inning that gave the Chicago Cubs a 4-3 victory. It was only his sixth hit in 71 career at-bats.

"The pitch was a hanging slider," Lancaster said. "I didn't over-swing."

Lancaster, whose hitting feat made him the winning pitcher, batted because the Chicago bench was depleted of all reserves but a backup catcher. His first hit of the season scored Curtis Wilkerson from first and capped a most improbable comeback. In the ninth, Wilkerson had a two-run single in a three-run rally that tied the game.

"I was moving," Wilkerson said. "I practically swallowed my chewing tobacco going around third."

Lancaster, batting for just the second time this season, hit a hard grounder off the glove of third baseman Ken Oberkfell that rolled down the left field line. Wilkerson scored easily as the Cubs snapped San Francisco's five-game winning streak.

"I was just trying to keep the ball in play," Lancaster said of the hit off loser Randy McCament. "I wasn't thinking about driving in the winning run. I was just trying not to strike out.

"I knew they'd play me to hit to the opposite field," Lancaster, a right-handed hitter, said. "I didn't even see where the ball went after I hit it. I just saw that it was fair."

San Francisco manager Roger Craig took the defeat in stride.

"When a pitcher beats you like the way Lancaster did tonight, you weren't supposed to win," Craig reasoned. "We just have to forget about this and come back tomorrow."

Elsewhere, it was Montreal 4, Cincinnati 1; New York 4, Atlanta 1, and St. Louis 7, San Diego 1.

"With the wind blowing in the way it was, it really looked like a pitcher's night," Cubs manager Don Zimmer said, perhaps not realizing just how right he was. "For most of the night it looked like we were going to get shut out."

In fact, the Cubs were down to their last out before breaking through against San Francisco relief ace Steve Bedrosian on the mound.

Mark Grace and Damon Berryhill were aboard via one-out singles. One out later, Dwight Smith singled to drive in a run, with Berryhill taking third and Smith second on right fielder Candy Maldanado's overthrow to the plate. Then Wilkerson tied the game with a single to left.

Maldonado, replacing injured major league home run and RBI leader Kevin Mitchell, helped the Giants build a 3-0 lead with two doubles and two runs scored.

Starter Mike LaCoss tied his career high with nine strikeouts, while giving up three hits and walking one. He gave way to Bedrosian after seven innings because of stiffness in his shoulder.

Expos 4, Reds 1

Mark Langston continued in his role as Montreal's stopper with 13 strikeouts.

"This was a big ballgame coming off two tough losses," Langston said after reaching his season high for strikeouts while pitching a four-hitter.

"The most gratifying thing is to pick the club up, but that's the way it is with our staff," Langston said. "We won't have too many losing streaks."

The same can't be said for Reds, losers of five straight games and 10 of their last 11. Ironically, Langston, who dropped a 5-3 decision Saturday at Cincinnati, was their last victim.

Cardinals 7, Padres 1

Tom Brunansky hit a three-run homer and Joe Magrane allowed five hits in eight innings for his sixth straight victory as St. Louis snapped a four-game losing streak.

Magrane, 11-6, walked four and struck out five while shutting down the Padres, who had scored 26 runs in their two previous games. Todd Worrell pitched a hitless ninth inning.

Brunansky hit his sixth home run in nine games at Jack Murphy Stadium, a three-run shot which highlighted a four-run third inning off Walt Terrell, 5-13. Burnansky leads St. Louis with 13 homers.

Mets 4, Braves 1

Darryl Strawberry hit his 21st homer and drove in three runs as New York won a game delayed twice by rain for a total of 1:48.

Bob Ojeda, 6-9, gave up two hits in 5 2-3 innings to win for the first time in five starts since June 26. Both hits off Ojeda — who walked six — were singles by Andres Thomas, the second driving in a run in the sixth.

Rick Aguilera came on with the bases loaded and struck out pinch-hitter Tommy Gregg.

"You have to ask Tom Grieve about that. I'm just going to go out and play hard. I'm not really worried about it. What uniform I'm in, I'll give 110 percent," Incaviglia said.

"I haven't heard anything one way or the other. That's up to them. I'm just going to do Pete Incaviglia's job and don't worry. I have no control over that. I'm trying to make plays in the outfield and hit the ball hard. If we keep going the way we are, it'll be a lot of fun."

After his grand slam against the Red Sox on Monday, fans cheered until Incaviglia stepped out of the Rangers' dugout for a curtain call.

"I was a little bit surprised. I was glad. That made me feel real good. It was a little feeling that the fans are still behind me. I hope to bring them a lot more thrills," Incaviglia said.

"If I start swinging the bat good, it should make everyone else better. It will help Julio (Franco) and Ruben (Sierra)," teammates who were selected for the All-Star team this year. "People will think twice about pitching around them."

Despite Incaviglia's fast start since the All-Star break, Rangers manager Bobby Valentine held him out of Tuesday night's game against Boston's Roger Clemens.

Incaviglia has struck out in all seven plate appearances against Clemens, in a rivalry dating to college, when Clemens pitched for the University of Texas.

"I'm not going to mess with things that are going well," Valentine said. "He tries so hard against Clemens. I don't want to put him in a tailspin."

Incaviglia returned to the starting lineup Wednesday night against Boston's Mike Boddicker and collected two of Texas' five hits in a 4-0 loss.

CHARLIE

good knuckleball. One out of five was a good one, and that's not enough. He had one inning that was halfway decent, and that's because he changed speed.

"I just saw it in his face. It was real frustrating. You could just see him fighting to make the ball move."

The only ball hit hard off Hough all night was a down-and-in knuckleball that Boston's Mike Greenwell hit "right on the money" and deposited into the right field bleachers.

Rangers manager Bobby Valentine said it wasn't as bad as it looked.

"He's had better knuckleballs, that's for sure, but they weren't killing him either. Greenwell hit his ball good, but that was the only one. Three of those ground ball singles could have been double plays."

That was little consolation to Hough.

"They didn't kill the ball, but they were pitches they can hit into the outfield, even if they didn't hit the ball squarely. They all broke flat. I had no arm speed with it," Hough lamented.

Hough's longest losing streak is six games, between June 8 and June 30 in 1985.

Spurs sign Caldwell

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Caldwell Jones, the oldest active player in the NBA, signed with the San Antonio Spurs on Thursday.

No terms were disclosed.

Jones, a center-forward who turns 39 on April 4, began his pro career with San Diego of the American Basketball Association in 1973. He moved to Philadelphia when the ABA and NBA merged in 1976 and played six seasons with the 76ers, two for Houston and one for Chicago before spending the last four seasons with Portland.

He was in 72 games with the Trail Blazers last season, including the final 40, and had a season-high 11 points in Portland's final game of the season as the Blazers won to make the playoffs. Jones, who averaged 2.8 points per game, became an unrestricted free agent after Portland was eliminated from the playoffs.

"He knows how to win and that is very important to a team," Spurs coach Larry Brown said. "With David Robinson in his first year, it's important to have Caldwell for the transition."

Jones is one of four brothers to play in the NBA. One, Charles, is still active with the Washington Bullets.

ANGELS

of runs they shouldn't have, but also didn't score a bunch of runs they could have.

AFTER JACKSON erupted for three first-inning runs against David Martinez, Midland pecked away with single runs in the second, third, fourth and fifth to take a 4-3 lead. Dave Liddell doubled home Jelic, who had walked in the eighth to tie it 4-4.

Midland then scratched out a run in the home eighth. Steve DeAngelis led off with a walk, took second on Otto Gonzalez' sacrifice, third on Reed Peters' single and scored on Jeff Barns force out grounder to second.

But it was the Midland ninth inning that summed up the kind of night it was for the Angels, fighting to hold first place in the TL West.

Chris Graves and Scott Cerny opened the inning with singles off Jackson relief ace David Trautwein, 4-5, but 10 saves. Dan Grunhard grounded to second as Cerny appeared to break up the almost certain double play. Interference was called, two were out and Graves summoned back from third to second.

Graves was so upset he was thrown out of the game and then shortstop Tim Bogar made a back hand stop of Chris Cron's hit bid and made a tremendous throw to get the game-ending out.

So tonight at 7 o'clock, it will be Chris Beasley, 3-1, going for Midland against Toby Nivens, 6-5.

MIDLAND SCORED in the second on singles by Cron, DeAngelis and Peters. Graves' speed paid of in a run Midland shouldn't have had in the third when he pushed a bunt by the pitcher, took second on an infield out, stole third and came home on the wild throw.

In the fourth it was a double by Cron, single by Gonzalez and run-scoring hit by Barns that tied it 3-3. The Angels got one, but could have had more with a little luck. Gonzalez held at third on Barns' hit, but the throw home got away and if he had been chugging all the way, would have made it.

In the sixth Craig Ropaz' glove work at third robbed Gonzalez and Peters of inning-opening hits. Barns and DiSarcina then singled, but Graves hit into a 3-6 force to end what agaom could have been a productive ining.

In the seventh, Dan Grunhard tripled with one out, but was cut down at the plate when he tried to score on Cron's short fly to Angel Cuevas in center.

AS A result, Jelic was in position to become the game's hero and get back, just a little, for that 7-0 loss to SMU in the Cotton Bowl.

"SMU had Eric Dickerson and Craig James. I returned punts in that game. It's strange, we stayed in Fort Worth the week before the game and it was 85 degrees. On the day of the game, it was rainy and cold, which is the reason Dan Marino didn't have a good game that day."

Although spring practice kept Jelic from playing baseball as a freshman at Pitt, he played the next two springs and did so well that he was drafted by the Kansas City Royals after his junior year.

Thursday he was the DH, but has been playing a lot of first and third this year to save wear and tear on the arm.

HALO HOOPS: Chelsea Michelle, 7 pounds two ounces and 18¼ inches, was born to Michelle Rose, wife of the Angels' Bob Rose .

ABC fouls things up for Twins' kids

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Most parks departments are canceling plans to take thousands of youngsters to the Metrodome next week because ABC-TV has insisted that an afternoon baseball game be played at night so it can be broadcast nationally, Minnesota Twins officials say.

Jack O'Hara, ABC's director of sports programming, said that it was unfortunate that changing the time of next Thursday's Twins game with Baltimore "inconvenienced some people," but that ABC had only five games to choose from, "the fewest in memory."

About 10,500 children were planning to attend the Twins' largest park and recreation day in 14 years, but most parks departments are canceling because it won't be feasible to take children to a game that starts at 7:05 p.m., and other dates cannot be arranged, Twins officials say.

O'Hara said ABC told Major League Baseball a year ago of eight dates on which it was going to broadcast games, "so all the clubs should have known their games on those dates were subject to change ... the Twins were involved with one of those days."

ABC can tell a team one week in advance if it wants to switch a game time, said Laurel Prieb, the Twins' marketing director. Networks try to pick a game that won't require a schedule change, Prieb said, so the Twins felt safe making Thursday's 12:15 p.m. game a parks day.

"You are usually looking at a very remote risk, and the remote came through. We don't feel great about it," Prieb said.

Neither does Ted Schultz, one of 80 youngsters from Lake Crystal whose trip to the Dome was canceled.

"I saved up all my money," said Schultz, an 11-year-old Little Leaguer. "I was going to buy a set of little bats ... I'm unhappy." It was to be his only trip this year.

Jared Poole, 11, of Albert Lea, won't be going to the game, either. "I'm mad," he said. "I think it's unfair."

Jack Belesi, a Twins sales representative, answered phone calls Thursday from disappointed parents and park officials. "I'm crushed for the kids," he said, many of whom were coming 150 to 200 miles.

Some senior citizens scheduled to attend the game also have canceled.

The Twins learned Tuesday that ABC picked Thursday's game as its last regular game of the week.

"Our national agreement with ABC allows them to select a primary and a backup game," said Leslie Lawrence, broadcasting director for Major League Baseball. "There were very few games available. Baltimore being in first place, and Minnesota being a world championship team, it was very attractive for (ABC)."

Jerry Bell, Twins president, asked ABC to reconsider. The network said it would, but called back to say it was sorry it couldn't do anything about it. ABC is in its last year of a contract, and such rescheduling is not allowed under contracts next year with CBS-TV and ESPN, Bell said.

"You hate to disappoint kids, you hate to disappoint senior citizens," said Bobby Brown, American League president. But he said both sides must abide by the contract.

The Twins have offered to refund park departments the ticket money, come up with another date with the same discounts or give departments a date next year. The Minneapolis Park and Recreation Board has found another date, as has the Eastside Neighborhood Organization.

For others, another date is impossible. Most of the 1,000 children signed up by the Anoka-Hennepin School District won't be able to go. Nor will the 150 youngsters from Albert Lea, some of whom come from low-income families and could not afford the trip except through the Recreation Department. "It was always one of our big events," said Sue Becker, Albert Lea recreation supervisor. "The kids were hyped about it."

NFL accused of monopolizing television

By MARY FOSTER

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The founder of the ill-fated United States Football League accuses NFL owners of forming the World League of American Football to discourage potential rivals and monopolize the television marketplace.

"I couldn't believe they would really do it," David Dixon said Thursday. "Earlier this year, we were ready to announce our own new league until the NFL moved so hurriedly to stop us. If they get away with this you can bet free football on TV will become a thing of the past, and expansion of the league will be a dead issue."

Ed Garvey, the former chief executive of the National Football League Players Association, will help the proposed league, America's Football Teams Inc., try to block the NFL move.

ROSE

Rose lawyer Robert Stachler said he doesn't think the Reds' failures will create pressure for a change in the court agreement protecting Rose from firing.

"I don't see that as a problem," Stachler said, following the arguments Thursday. "You can see they've got injuries. They're bringing the (Class AAA) Nashville team up to play. You can't blame that on him."

Reds owner Marge Schott has declined to comment on Rose's performance since the lawsuit was filed. The Reds are remaining neutral in the lawsuit, a point baseball stressed Thursday.

Baseball's lawyers want the case kept in federal court, where the commissioner's broad authority has been upheld in previous decisions. Rose wants the case given back to Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert A. Nadel, who already has determined that Giamatti improperly prejudged the manager.

The legal skirmish over whether the case belongs in federal or state court depends upon how Holschuh interprets the relationship between the Reds and the commissioner.

Stachler contends Rose and the Reds are involved in a breech of contract dispute that properly belongs in the state courts because both parties live in Ohio. Stachler described Giamatti as a chief executive officer of major league baseball who actually acts on behalf of the Reds and other teams, rather than an independent person.

"He's the chief executive officer like you have a chief executive officer of any other entity," Stachler told Holschuh. "Any way you look at it, he is still their agent."

Such an interpretation would make the case a matter for the state courts.

Combs fires third ace on same hole

From Staff Reports

Max Combs fired a hole-in-one on the No. 6 hole at Greentree Country Club. It was the third ace on that hole for Combs since he began playing at Greentree in the early 80s.

The No. 6 hole at Greentree is a 146-yard, par-3; Combs used a five-iron to accomplish the task.

Combs was witnessed by Royce Gilmore, John Nobles, Andy Hancock, Wayne Potter and Wayne Gil.

Also, Ross Brunner scored a hole-in-one Thursday at Midland Country Club, acing the 159-yard, No. 3 hole with a nine iron. He was playing in a group with George Tope, Lynn Durham, Al Dillard, John Carey.

SATURDAY, JULY 22, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Scale your ambitions down to a more realistic, manageable level. Some of you should think about returning to school to complete or further your education. Excellent profit potential will be there after Labor Day. Buying and selling will be easier. You are headed in the right direction so far as a relationship is concerned. It just takes time.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: pitcher Scott Sanderson, Sen. Robert Dole, psychiatrist Dr. Karl Menninger, singer Margaret Whiting, fashion designer Oscar de la Renta, matriarch Rose Kennedy, jockey Ron Turcotte, actor Willem Dafoe.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Variety rules the day. Spend time by the pool or head for the shore. When seeking pleasure, you overlook any difficulties in making reservations. A picnic lunch delights friends of all ages.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A health matter will command your attention early in the day. Do not neglect family members for friends. A visit with an older person is very rewarding. You glean new insights after sharing confidences.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Go over your social plans, consulting mate and family members. Major decisions are best postponed until more data is available. Patience is your strongest ally. Romance needs more time to mature.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Pay bills on time to preserve your credit rating. Keep all lines of communication open. A real estate venture could prove highly lucrative. Investigate. Romance holds few surprises. Count your blessings!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Face up to an embarrassing situation before it gets competely out of hand. Tackle unfinished chores before indulging in pleasurable activities. Postpone pursuing romance until partner gives you a positive sign.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Resist someone who is keen on spending your money. Remember your upcoming vacation. Others respond favorably to your serene approach. Both reading and sports hold great appeal this weekend. Ask loved one's preferences.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Think twice before acting in opposition to loved ones' wishes. Channel your efforts into beneficial ventures. A platonic relationship intensifies. Be honest if you are not yet ready to make a commitment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be careful when dealing with someone who shows an immature attitude. Your energy level will rise if you remember to follow a diet-and-exercise regimen. An older person offers some sound advice.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your conversation wins you a favor today. Accept all invitations. Meditation helps you come to some startling conclusions. Romance lifts your spirits. You receive public praise when you least expect it!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If you procrastinate, you will harm your own cause. Clarify your aims before seeking assistance from others. An excellent evening for socializing. You and your date share some interesting insights. Be tactful.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Think before you act and you will prevent embarrassment. Be wary of someone who flatters you just to win your favor. Your cash could be involved. Be discreet in every way.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good time to set your sights in the right direction. Pursue your aims with conviction. A telephone call or letter lifts your spirits. Your enthusiasm is contagious. Others respond in a positive way.

Opening lead: Queen of ♠

The duel between a skilled defender and a brilliant declarer can be a joy forever. This hand is one of rare beauty.

North-South bid well to the only game that stood a chance. Note North had no second thoughts about rebidding clubs—when partner was unable to raise, he was happy to play for a nine-trick contract.

Had dummy held one, more spade, life would have been easy. As it was, West's opening lead removed a key dummy entry. At trick two declarer cashed the king of clubs and, when East dropped the ten, made the excellent unblock of the eight from hand. Next came a low club from dummy to the nine, and it was West's turn to star. Realizing that winning the club would be futile since his remaining honor could be finessed, West allowed the nine to hold!

Now declarer switched horses. Since there were three club tricks and two spades in the bank, he needed only four tricks from hearts to bring his total to nine. To make sure that he did not muddle his entries should that suit split 4–2, declarer continued with a low heart from hand.

This far-sighted series of plays left the defenders helpless. The best they could do, no matter how they defended, was to take four tricks. At the table, West won the heart and shifted to the king of diamonds and another. East took two tricks in the suit and declarer claimed the balance.

Paraplegic climber enthusiastic on second day of mountain ascent

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. (AP) — A ranger hoping to become the first paraplegic to scale the steep face of El Capitan was a little sore but enthusiastic Thursday on the second day of a weeklong ascent.

Mark Wellman, 29, climbed 8½ hours on Wednesday to the first resting spot 900 feet from the base of 3,569-foot El Capitan, said Gwen Schneider, who is staying in touch with Wellman by radio.

Wellman and fellow climber Mike Corbett "sounded great. They sounded a little tired, but it was morning. I think Mark did pretty well." Schneider said. "He felt a little sore because he had a pretty good distance to go."

Wellman spent the first night on a portable ledge, which Schneider said is more comfortable than a rock ledge. He is being led by Corbett, El Capitan's most experienced climber, who is on his 42nd ascent of the monolith rising above Yosemite Valley 150 miles east of San Francisco.

The men are taking a route known as The Shield.

Ironically, it is one of the monolith's steepest climbs, but was chosen for this climb because of "the smoothness of the rock — we don't have to zig zag," Corbett said before starting the climb.

Corbett climbs ahead and sets up ropes that Wellman pulls himself along with his arms using a device Corbett designed for the climb.

Wellman became a paraplegic after a climbing fall seven years ago.

The climb normally takes three to four days.

LONDON (AP) — Princess Beatrice took her first faltering steps in public while her parents, the Duke and Duchess of York, were thousands of miles away in Canada.

The flame-haired princess, who celebrates her first birthday Aug. 8, toddled a half-dozen paces on the grass at the Guards Polo Club in Windsor Great Park.

Her grandfather, Maj. Ronald Ferguson, was on hand to see the barefoot tot's performance.

Wearing a white dress and frilly bonnet, Beatrice stood and walked as her nanny led her to Prince William, her 7-year-old cousin, who was sitting quietly on the grass watching his father, Prince Charles, playing in a polo match.

Prince Andrew and the former Sarah Ferguson are on an official visit to Canada.

• • •

PORTSMOUTH, R.I. (AP) — It wasn't kryptonite but champagne that actor Christopher Reeve used to commission his new sailboat.

Reeve

Reeve, 36, who starred in the "Superman" movies, is an avid sailor. He first saw a version of his new 46-foot boat at the 1988 Newport International Sailboat Show, but his $500,000 craft was custom-designed with room in the galley to accomodate two cooks.

The forward galley was enlarged to accommodate Reeve's 6-foot-4-inch frame.

Reeve named the boat Sea Angel in honor of the "guardian angel" that he says watches over him in his quest for adventure.

• • •

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Mary Treen, a character actress whose credits over more than three decades included "It's a Wonderful Life," died Thursday of cancer at age 82.

Miss Treen appeared in more than 40 films, including "Babbitt" in 1934, "The Birds and the Bees" in 1956 and "Who's Minding the Store?" in 1963. In "It's a Wonderful Life," the 1947 film starring Jimmy Stewart that has become a Christmas film classic, she played the cousin.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Cosmetics giant Revlon Group Inc. has elected former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger to its board of directors, which includes actress Audrey Hepburn and Ann Getty, wife of oil heir Gordon P. Getty.

Kissinger

The cosmetics company announced Thursday that Kissinger will become the 14th member of the board and will serve an indefinite term.

Last month, the privately held company announced that former first lady Nancy Reagan had become a director.

Revlon Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Ronald O. Perelman said Kissinger's "unparalleled knowledge of world affairs and global markets will provide an invaluable perspective to our board's oversight of Revlon's growing international operations."

Kissinger, who was secretary of state from 1973 to 1975 and won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1973, already serves on the boards of American Express Co., Union Pacific Corp., and R.J. Macy & Co., among others.

• • •

PARIS (AP) — Marie-Madeleine Fourcade, 79, a French Resistance hero, died Thursday of natural causes.

When France fell to the Germans in 1940, Mrs. Fourcade and a few friends organized a resistance group called Alliance, which eventually numbered about 3,000.

Her group relied on radio operators to collect and pass on information from France, Spain, Italy and Germany to British intelligence. The Germans caught Mrs. Fourcade four times, but she was released or escaped each time.

Following the war, Mrs. Fourcade helped found President Charles de Gaulle's Union for the New Republic Party.

In 1968, she published a book about her experiences entitled "Noah's Ark."

• • •

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Television evangelist Billy Graham is getting a spot on the Hollywood Walk of Fame, which bears the names of radio, TV, stage and screen personalities.

Graham, a native of Charlotte, was one of 15 honorees named during the June meeting of the Walk of Fame's secret selection committee.

A spokesman said Graham, 70, was visiting Hungary after a monthlong crusade in England. He said the evangelist had agreed to be present when his Hollywood star is unveiled Oct. 15.

• • •

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — Forrest H. Anderson, a former governor of Montana, died Thursday from a self-inflicted gunshot wound. He was 76. Anderson was elected to the state House of Representatives in 1942. He also served as Lewis and Clark County attorney, state Supreme Court justice from 1953-1957 and attorney general from 1957-1968.

Anderson served one term as governor, from 1969-1972. He overhauled the structure of state government, worked to create the state Board of Investments, and pushed for the new state constitution approved in 1972.

Compromise offered on bailout bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The senior Republican on the House Banking Committee is proposing a compromise intended to break a deadlock over how to fund President Bush's proposed savings and loan bailout.

The dispute between the House and the Senate is the most significant hurdle to be overcome if Congress is to send savings and loan legislation to the president's desk before leaving for its August vacation.

The Senate, in its bill adopted in April, favored the administration's financing plan, which would create a new, quasi-private agency to borrow $50 billion in S&L rescue costs. That mechanism would keep the spending from ballooning the federal budget deficit.

The House, in its plan passed last month, would include the $50 billion in the budget deficit in what Democrats say is more honest accounting. The plan would be slightly cheaper than the administration's because S&L funds would be borrowed directly through the federal government.

Rep. Chalmers Wylie of Ohio, the senior Republican on the House Banking Committee, said Thursday that under his plan, the first $25 billion in S&L spending be borrowed this year and the remaining $25 billion go "on-budget" in 1991.

By that time, the government would be selling enough property from failed S&Ls to partly offset the spending strain, he said.

He conceded the scheme would put great strain on the ability of the administration and Congress to reach agreement on the federal budget as the 1992 elections approach.

Wylie said Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady's "visceral reaction was not very favorable." But, he said that Brady nevertheless planned to raise the proposal when House and Senate conferees next meet publicly on Tuesday. The staffs of the two chambers have been working behind closed doors trying to resolve most differences in preparation for the session.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, chairman of the House Banking Committee, and Sen. Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, were informed of the proposal but have so far been noncommittal, Wylie said.

Meanwhile, a House aide, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said a tentative agreement has been reached that would give the Bush administration the authority it sought in disposing of an estimated $300 billion in real estate and other property from failed S&Ls.

The House has dropped its demand that L. William Seidman, chairman of the politically independent Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., have a nonvoting seat on a five-member board overseeing disposal of S&L assets.

Seidman still will be in charge of the day-to-day operations of the Resolution Trust Corp., the new agency being created to handle the property.

But the policy-making responsibility for it will rest with the board, chaired by Brady. Other members will be Greenspan, Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp and two private citizens with background in real estate or finance.

Coast Guard warns of offshore oil spills

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON – The federal government cannot adequately contain oil spills that result from drilling accidents off the Alaska coast, a senior Coast Guard official told a House subcommittee Tuesday.

Rear Admiral Joel Sipes' comments were made as Interior Department officials stepped up efforts to block bans on offshore drilling that were approved by the House last week.

Asked to describe his "comfort level" in dealing with oil spills off Alaska, Sipes said "I'm not comfortable with it at all. ... We have not done near enough work in that region."

Sipes, chief of the Coast Guard's office of marine safety, said that he will urge Interior officials to "understand what the (cleanup) limitations are" in Alaskan waters but that he will not take a position on whether offshore drilling should be allowed.

"I'm not part of that decision-making process," Sipes said. "If (federal officials) want to accept the risk (of offshore drilling in Alaska), then let's go do it."

As Sipes expressed his reservations, Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan was telling a gathering of the Western Governor's Association in California that lawmakers should be focusing their regulatory actions on the movement of oil-bearing tankers in harbors rather than on restricting offshore development.

One such safety move is a new tanker escort service which has been initiated in Price William Sound to excort laden oil tankers out of the sound as part of a new safety program.

Echoing Lujan's message, Edward Cassidy, deputy director of the Interior Department's Minerals Management Service, told the House panel that the lawmakers are "shooting at the wrong target" by prohibiting oil drilling and that tanker traffic presents a far greater risk.

Industry opposes proposed oil tax

From Staff and Wire Reports

Members of the oil industry in Texas have come out strongly against two new proposed taxes on oil production.

One proposal would authorize a new tax rate on domestic oil to raise funds for spill control, another would level out Superfund taxation of foreign and domestic crude oil.

Neither are fair nor logical and will likely hamper domestic production at a time when the United States should be encouraging it, said Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association (TIPRO) today.

Harry Spannaus, executive vice president Permian Basin Petroleum Association, called the new proposals extremely unfair. "There is no mention of putting the tax on imported oil — just oil produced in the United States. I would call that tax discriminatory, especially at at time when the domestic oil industry is already operating under a burden."

Spannaus added that the last four oil spills were not caused by oil and gas industry, but by high seas and vessels transporting oil. Two of the four accidents, he said, were transporting foreign crude.

"The cost of clean up should be born by the high-seas transportation industry with possibly a per barrel tax on oil transported," he said.

Spannaus also noted that there was a need to look at international regulations to insure that those operating and in command of such vessels are trained and qualified to comply with established safety standards, and that U.S. Port Authorties should share responsibility for safe ingress and egress of oil tankers using U.S. ports.

TIPRO President James E. Russell said economic difficulties are already keeping independent producers from drilling new wells. "Increasing taxes on oil production will only aggravate the problem for an industry that is trying to recover from the most devasting depression it's ever faced," he said. Traditionally, independents have drilled 85 percent of all new wells in this country.

Nelson Bunker Hunt

Hunt brother spends time on lawsuits

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nelson Bunker Hunt, heir to one of the world's greatest fortunes and some of the globe's richest oil fields, testified Thursday he was forced to use paintings, a Rolex watch and other belongings to cover debts.

Once a billionaire, the Texan is in U.S. Tax Court challenging $155 million in 1982 taxes the Internal Revenue Service says he owes from the dissolution of a partnership set up to repay his debts from the silver price collapse of 1980.

Hunt said he and his brothers were thrown into a "straitjacket situation" after their silver-buying binge that began in 1973 culminated on Silver Thursday, the day in late March 1980 that silver prices fell from about $50 an ounce to around $10 an ounce.

The brothers were left owing as much as $2 billion, while the value of their silver collateral was sharply eroded. The banks, under a March 14, 1980, directive of the Federal Reserve, refused to make additional loans on silver.

Crash won't affect United earnings

New York Times News Service

The stock of United Airlines parent UAL Corp. dipped 1½ to 172 on Thursday, the day after a jet crash in Iowa killed more than 100 people, but analysts downplayed the economic significance of the accident for the company.

They added that the crash would have little effect on companies aiming to try to take over the nation's second largest airline. United, regarded by analysts as an undervalued stock, has recently been touted as a takeover candidate. The takeover talk has boosted United's stock price in recent days.

"People who do these takeovers are pretty mature and don't scare easily," said Morten Beyer, chairman of Avmark Inc., an Arlington, Va., aviation management consulting firm. "The only way it would have a negative effect would be if there were a chain of United Airlines accidents."

Because airline accidents are relatively rare when measured against the number of daily flights, short term economic effects from Wednesday's crash are expected to be small and long term consequences nearly nonexistent, analysts said.

"The current publicity about the crash will have a limited negative effect," Beyer said. "But United is recognized as a premier airline and the DC-10 is operated by many if not all of the U.S. airlines. The airline frequent flier programs are a far greater incentive to use an airline than accidents are to deter people."

Analysts said they expect no serious effects to United's business unless National Transportation Safety Board investigators find that the crash was caused by negligence or problems that were the fault of United.

Analysts added that Wednesday's United crash is not like last December's Pan American World Airways Boeing 747 flight that blew apart at 30,000 feet and crashed in Lockerbie, Scotland, killing all 259 people aboard and several on the ground. In that case, terrorists appeared to be focusing on an American airline in particular.

The 15-year-old DC-10 wide-body jet that crashed in Iowa, is one of 56 owned by United Airlines. It was made by Douglas Aircraft Co., a Long Beach unit of McDonnell Douglas Corp.

United is said to be considering a large order of similar sized jets to augment its DC-10 fleet and eventually replace it. Analysts said United is believed to be considering the MD-11 (tri-jet), which is a derivative of the DC-10, or the four-engine Airbus Industrie A340, which is a similar size.

In late April, United agreed to purchase as many as 370 narrow-body Boeing Co. jets with a total potential value of $15.74 billion. United, with its 412 aircraft fleet, has a total of 469 jets on order through the 1990s.

Stephen M. Wolf, chairman and president of the airline and UAL Inc., its parent, has said that there would be an "orderly" phaseout of older jets as new ones are delivered. But the net result of the new orders would be an expansion of the United fleet.

Wolf visited the accident scene in Sioux City, Iowa, Thursday and met with officials of the National Transportation Safety Board and the Federal Aviation Administration.

"The bottom line is that a crash is going to cost an airline in insurance and loss of the use of that aircraft," Beyer said. "And if it is perceived that it did not act prudently, the airline could lose some business. But you need to put this accident in perspective."

Miners set to make new proposal

DUFFIELD, Va. (AP) — The United Mine Workers union planned to put a new offer on the table today in its 3½-month-old strike against the Pittston Coal Group Inc., a union official said.

UMW spokesman Joe Corcoran said the offer would be made today, the third day of talks that resumed Wednesday following a six-week hiatus. He did not disclose the terms of the offer.

Boston Mayor Raymond L. Flynn visited the southwest Virginia coalfields Thursday to throw his support behind the union, telling miners that political leaders should help "protect legitimate gains which workers have made."

The Boston City Council Wednesday night gave a vice president of a Boston bank, who is a Pittston director, seven days to take action on ending the strike. If not, the council threatened to remove about $20 million in city funds from Shawmut Bank. William Craig, bank vice president, said he was planning a statement urging a fair resolution of the dispute.

Pittston Coal Group spokeswoman Susan Copeland declined to comment on Flynn's visit.

Staff members of the U.S. House Subcommittee on Labor Management Relations also were in the coalfields Thursday interviewing miners and family members. The subcommittee members were to talk to the coal company today.

Also Thursday, 11 Pittston operations were hit by a power outage caused when several utility poles were damaged. Police said the utility poles were damaged by gunfire, a chainsaw and an explosion.

Miners struck Pittston on April 5 over wages and benefits, eventually idling 1,900 miners in Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky. Talks broke down last month, but resumed Wednesday after a private meeting between both sides in a federal judge's chambers.

The union wants the president of The Pittston Co., Greenwich, Conn.-based parent company of the coal group, to enter face-to-face negotiations with UMW President Richard Trumka. Paul Douglas has declined, saying local management is authorized to negotiate a contract.

MARKETS

Oil prices holding firm

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices continue hovering in a narrow range.

At midmorning on the New York Mercantile Exchange, September contracts for West Texas Intermediate had gained 3 cents to $19.71.

The August contract, which expired Thursday, ended with a gain of 5 cents, settling at $19.90. The September contract gained 13 cents to $19.68.

Wholesale home heating oil prices rose Thursday amid expectations of energy supply shortages overseas due to the labor and ethnic unrest in the Soviet Union.

On the NYMEX, No. 2 heating oil for August delivery rose 1.46 cents to 51.83 cents a gallon, after falling 0.13 cent on Wednesday.

Contracts for heating oil delivery in more distant months also posted gains and the September contract rose 1.56 cents, settling at 52.57 cents a gallon.

Among other refined products traded on the exchange, the August contract of unleaded gasoline declined 0.59 cent to 54.10 cents a gallon, adding to Wednesday's drop of 1.37 cents.

Other unleaded gasoline contract months settled with moderate gains and losses, with the September contract falling 0.29 cent to 53.08 cents a gallon.

Evan Baron, of the energy group at Elders Futures Inc., said continuing troubles in the Soviet Union which have disrupted production in various industries "is creating tight supplies in European heating oil markets right now and that, in turn, is affecting our markets."

He said there have been reports that scheduled oil shipments from the Soviet Union have not moved.

News that saboteurs in the country's Abkhazia region have damaged the electric power system added to speculation that the Soviet Union will need to keep more of its oil at home to compensate for energy shortages due to strikes at coal mines.

Dollar softens, gold firms

LONDON (AP) — The dollar waned while gold gained today in European trading.

Metal traders in London said buyers had responded to the softening of the dollar.

The currency market wavered between opposing reaction to Thursday's statements by Federal Reserve Board chairman Alan Greenspan.

"Recent developments suggest that the balance of risks may have shifted somewhat away from greater inflation," Greenspan told a Congressional committee in Washington. " ... What we seek to avoid is an unnecessary and destructive recession."

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $370.75 a troy ounce, down from $372.45 late Thursday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers set a recommended price of $372.25 per troy ounce.

In Zurich, gold traded at $372.90, down from $371.75 bid at the close Thursday. Gold rose $3.56 in Hong Kong to close today at the equivalent of $372.67 per troy ounce.

Silver bullion was unchanged from Thursday's late price of $5.22 a troy ounce.

Late selloff sends stocks lower

NEW YORK (AP) — A sudden selloff near the close pushed stock prices lower Thursday, wiping out an early gain that carried the Dow Jones industrial average briefly past 2,600 for the first time since the fall of 1987.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up about 30 points at its midsession peak, closed with an 8.92 loss at 2,575.49.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 4 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 646 up, 871 down and 482 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 204.59 million shares, against 215.74 million in the previous session.

Analysts said the late decline stemmed in part from selling by professional traders engaged in computer program strategies involving options and index futures contracts, some of which expire after the close on Friday.

They also said investors seemed to back away from an initially enthusiastic response to testimony by Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, before the House Banking Committee on the Fed's credit policies.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Recently bought stake in First City sold

DALLAS (NYT) — The Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp. said Thursday that it had sold a 10 percent stake it acquired in the First City Bancorporation of Texas within minutes after buying the shares Wednesday from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

The shares were converted to 2.2 million common shares from an equal number of junior preferred shares after the transaction with the FDIC and then sold them to several institutions at $34 a share by equity traders at Donaldson, Lufkin.

Donaldson, Lufkin had paid a net price of $33.575 a share to the FDIC. The investment firm will keep 7 percent of First City's common equity.

First City's stock rose $1.625 a share Thursday, to $35.75, after hitting a new high of $36 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Texas partnership bids for ICH

DALLAS (NYT) — Hicks, Muse & Co., a new leveraged buyout partnership, says it has made a $425 million cash offer to take the ICH Corp. private in a leveraged buyout.

ICH is an insurance holding company based in Louisville, Ky. Its chairman, Robert T. Shaw, and its top officers hold voting control of the company through its class B common shares.

Last September, ICH's management expressed an interest in finding partners to take the company private.

Analysts said Thursday that they were unsure of what the group's reaction to the Hicks, Muse offer might be.

Teacher awarded $300,000 against broker

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — A schoolteacher who claimed that a former Merrill Lynch broker put her in unsuitable investments and "churned" her account has been awarded $57,029 in compensatory damages and $250,000 in punitive damages by a Pacific Stock Exchange arbitration panel, according to the investor's attorney.

The total award falls $20,000 short of being the biggest ever handed down by the PSE arbitration program, according to John Katovich, the exchange's general counsel.

Deficit target could force recession

WASHINGTON (AP) — Meeting deficit-reduction targets in fiscal 1991 without a tax increase or a cutback in Social Security benefits would require a 10 percent across-the-board cut in federal spending, the Congressional Budget Office said.

The $74 billion to $88 billion in spending cuts needed to meet the fiscal 1991 defict target of $64 billion without raising taxes would likely force the economy into a recession unless the Federal Reserve Board further loosens its reins on inflation substantially, the House Budget Committee was told Thursday.

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Eddy producer flows 1,536 barrels

From Staff Reports

A prolific Wolfcamp producer has been completed in the Parkway field of Eddy County, N.M.

SIETE OIL & GAS CORP. potentialed the No. 8 Osage Federal to flow 1,536 barrels of 49 grvity crude, 3 Mmcfd and no waer on a 21/64 inch choke with flowig tubing pressure of 1,865 psi. The well flowed from perforations 9,256 to 9,295 ft., which had been acidized with 6,000 gallons of 20 percent HCL acid. Gas-oil ratio was 1,953:1.

Permitted as a 12,100 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 11,900 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 10,011 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 3,320 ft., include the Salt at 398 ft., Base Salt at 1180, Yates at 1300, Seven Rivers at 1695, Delaware Sand at 3430, Bone Spring at 5615, Wolfcamp at 9250, Strawn at 10,307, Atoka at 10,670, and Morrow at 11,010 ft. Pay was topped at 9,256 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from north and east lines of Section 34, T19s, R29e.

Howard County yields 130 barrel discovery

A Fusselman discovery has been recorded in Howard County, west of the Zebulon field.

EXXON CORP., Midland, finaled the No. 1 Repps B. Guitar to pump 130 barrels of 48.2 gravity crude, 9.6 Mcfd and 12 barrels of water from perforations 10,390 to 10,408 ft. The interval was acidized with 500 gallons of 15 percent HCL Gas-oil ratio is 73.8:1.

Permitted as a 10,600 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 10,408 ft. A 4 1/2 inch liner was hung from 7,561 to 10,397 ft.

On ground elevation of 2,496.9 ft., formation tops include the Leonard at 4,707 ft., Spraberry at 6,455, Wolfcamp at 7,955, Woodford at 10,323, and Fusselman at 10,304 ft. Pay was topped at 10,390 ft.

Location is 899.86 ft. from south and 1,856 ft. from west lines of Section 17, Block A, Bauer & Cockrell survey, nine miles west of Big Spring.

Martin completion flows 545 barrels

AMERADA HESS CORP., Tulsa, has completed a very strong producer in the Hill Ranch (Fusselman) field of Martin County.

On potential test, the No. 1 E..A. Haddock flowed 545 barrels of 41.3 gravity crude, 17 Mcfd and no water on a 7/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 525 psi. Production was natural from perforations 10,716 to 10,728 ft.

Permitted as an 11,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 10,739 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,636 ft., include the Wolfcamp at 8,391 ft., Pennsylvanian at 9,180, Canyon at 9,560, Strawn at 9,890, Upper Mississippian at 10,005, and Fusselman at 10,716 ft. Pay was topped at 10,716 ft.

Location is 99 ft. from north and 880 ft. from east lines of Section 6, Block 34, T-2-N, T&P survey, 18 miles north of Stanton.

Orxy tests Wolfcamp find in Lea County

ORYX ENERGY has completed a Wolfcamp discovery in Lea County, N.M.

The No. 1 Hudson Federal was tested to pump 90 barrels of crude, 11 Mcfd and 11 barrels of water from perforations 11,353 to 11,532 ft.

Total depth was 13,720 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set. The well was plugged back to 13,617 ft. Pay was topped at 11,353 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from north and east lines of Section 17, T19s, R33e.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Dividends from municipal bond investments tax-free

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I invested in a municipal bond unit investment trust, because I was told the dividends I receive are tax-free. Now, I am beginning to have doubts. Is it true that the dividends are really tax-free? More important, is this investment safe?

Doyle

A. Your dividends are free from federal income tax. While it can't be called rock-solid safe, your investment carries very little risk.

A unit investment trust such as yours uses the money you and other investors pay in to buy municipal bonds, which pay interest not subject to federal income tax. The trust collects that interest and passes it along as dividends to you and your fellow investors, also free from federal income tax.

Some unit investment trusts acquire municipal bonds issued in just one state. Residents of that state who invest in the trust then usually escape state and/or local income tax on their dividends, because interest from bonds issued within a state normally is exempt from that state's income tax bites.

The risk in this type of investment is that the value of the trust "units" — think of them as shares — can fall between the time you bought them and the time they are redeemed. If you have to sell while the value is down, you'll lose money. However, if you hold onto your units until the trust is liquidated, you should recoup your entire investment.

All the bonds the trust holds will be redeemed when they mature or are called for early redemption. As each bond is redeemed, the trust receives that bond's face value — or a slightly higher call price — and distributes that money to unit-holders. Unless some of the bonds default and never pay off at face value, the unit-holders come out whole.

Q. My unit investment trust holds some Washington Public Power Supply System Project 4 and 5 bonds, which are in default. My broker says, "Not to worry. The trust's bond portfolio is insured." Does that mean the trust is still collecting interest on the defaulted bonds?

A. Technically, the trust is not getting interest on those "Whoops" bonds. It is collecting money equal to the interest payments due. As far as you are concerned, that's the same thing.

Because the trust has blanket insurance on its portfolio, the insurance company must make good on missed interest payments. If the trust sells bonds out of its portfolio, the bonds lose their insurance coverage. The sale would result in a loss. It makes better sense for the trust to hang on to those bonds, collect semiannual payments equal to interest and wait for the insurance carrier to pay off the bonds at face value when the bonds mature.

Q. Almost every month, I receive a notice that one or more of the bond held by my unit investment trust have been redeemed. I usually receive a payment for my proportionate amount. However, I have also received statements saying, "Principal amounts under $1 per unit will not be distributed."

I realize it is not economical to remit amounts varying from one cent to 99 cents, but I wonder what happens to this money. Does it belong to the company to be spent on the next office picnic?

A. Not for one minute. Neither the "sponsor" which organized the trust nor the bank which handles the trust's business can dip into the trust's assets.

That money and any other cash on hand goes into the trust's treasury. Assuming the bank is doing its job properly, that money is put into short-term money market investments to earn additional cash until the next monthly distribution date.

At that time, leftover small amounts from previous months should be added to the upcoming distribution. Let's say you were entitled to 55 cents from a bond call last month but that small amount was not distributed. And let's say you have another 46 cents coming to you this month. You should get a $1.01 check.

OIL

New legislation, proposed by the House Ways and Means Committee, would increase the current tax rate on all domestic and imported oil for an oil spill liability trust fund from 1.3 to three cents per barrel and authorize its collection until $300 million has been raised.

Russell said TIPRO symphathizes with the need to raise funds to control and clean up oil spills. But, he added, "It is illogical at best to tax onshore domestic oil production to help resolve environmental problems caused by tankered oil. Instead, onshore production should be encouraged as a safe substitute to help reduce the tankered oil that is involved in spills, and the tax ought to be placed where it belongs–on oil tankered into U.S. waters."

Russell said lawmakers should be looking for ways to maximize domestic production and minimize imports. The American Petroleum Institute recently reported that for the first time since 1977, crude oil and petroleum product imports for the first half of the year exceeded domestic crude oil production--the United States produced 7.7 million barrels per day and imported 7.8 million barrels per day. This increase in foreign oil imports was cited as the major contributor to the nation's 23.6 percent increase in the trade deficit for May, according to reports by Reuters News Service.

TIPRO suggests a new environmental tax on crude oil brought into U.S. waters by tanker be initiated to provide the majority of funding for spill control. The group also believes such a tax should be used to defray costs of maintaining the Strategic Petroleum Reserve (SPR).

Other legislation also recently approved by the Ways and Means Committee would increase domestic crude oil production fees while reducing import fees to level out taxation of foreign and domestic crude oil that finances Superfund clean up of toxic waste. The new fee would amount to 9.7 cents per barrel on domestic crude production for an increase of 1.5 cents. The fees paid currently on most of the oil brought in by tanker would be reduced by two cents per barrel.

Russell said this tax increase also poses a threat to the independent oil producing industry. The association believes other elements of the economy should help support the Superfund to handle toxic waste.

WARNS

"Every gallon of oil that you prevent from being produced on the outer continental shelf is another gallon that will have to be imported and moved by foreign tankers," Cassidy said, adding that tanker accidents annually account for 45 percent of all oil spills and that offshore oil production accounts for only two percent of the oil spills.

That prompted a heated response from Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., chairman of the House Interior Committee's offshore energy subcommittee, who argued that Lujan and Cassidy had failed to realize the extent of the skepticism concerning the ability of the oil industry and the government to prevent environmental damage caused by oil spills.

"This distinction that (Lujan) and you (Cassidy) are trying to draw about the source of the spill is a distinction without a difference in political terms," Miller said. "... Before the Congress makes a decision about the expansion (of oil drilling), people have to once again have confidence in the system: This is a new day and I don't think you understand that."

HUNT

"At the insistence of the banks, we had to put up everything we owned as collateral, including pictures on the wall and what not," Hunt told U.S. Tax Court Judge Jules G. Korner III.

Even his brother's Rolex watch may have been pledged as collateral, said Hunt, whose younger brothers, William Herbert and Lamar, are also contesting substantial 1982 taxes. Herbert is challenging more than $158 million in taxes, while Lamar, owner of the Kansas City Chiefs football team, is contesting $505,377 in taxes.

50 LEGAL NOTICES

WILLIAM MOORE, et al. v. EL PASO PRODUCTS COMPANY, et al.
No. 88-034911, 295th JUDICIAL DISTRICT COURT OF HARRIS COUNTY, TEXAS

NOTICE OF PENDENCY OF CLASS ACTION AND PROPOSED SETTLEMENT

TO ALL PRESENT OR FORMER EMPLOYEES OF THE REXENE CORPORATION, A DELAWARE CORPORATION, REXENE PRODUCTS COMPANY, A DELAWARE CORPORATION, (FORMERLY KNOWN AS EL PASO PRODUCTS COMPANY, INCLUDING ITS PREDECESSOR, A TEXAS CORPORATION), OR ANY OF THEIR DIRECT OR INDIRECT SUBSIDIARIES (COLLECTIVELY, THE "COMPANY") WHOSE DESIGNATED EMPLOYMENT LEVEL AT ANY TIME FROM JANUARY 1, 1984 THROUGH APRIL 13, 1988, INCLUSIVE, WAS GRADE 9 OR BELOW (THE "CLASS");

Your rights may be affected by a lawsuit pending in the 295th Judicial District Court of Harris County, Texas, William Moore, et al. v. El Paso Products Company, et al., Civil Action No. 88-034911 (the "Class Action Lawsuit"), and a proposed settlement of the Class Action Lawsuit. The three named plaintiffs, Messrs. William Moore, Michael Gibson and Richard Siler, are the designated Class Representatives (the "Class Representatives"). Class Counsel are Ronald G. Franklin and Gregory N. Jones of Hill, Parker, Franklin, Cardwell & Jones of Houston, Texas, and Jacks C. Nickens and Justin M. Campbell III of Miller, Bristow & Brown also of Houston, Texas (the "Class Counsel"). The Class Representatives, Class Counsel and all but two of the Defendants have agreed to the proposed settlement, and they recommend that all Class members accept the proposed settlement.

William Moore, Michael Gibson, and Richard Siler commenced the Class Action lawsuit on behalf of themselves and the other members of the Class on June 16, 1988. The defendants are Rexene Corporation, El Paso Products Company (now known as Rexene Products Company), Ellen W. Noel as Independent Executrix of the Estate of W. D. Noel, deceased, O. R. Clements, John B. Mason, Bobby E. Seltz, Val G. Bennett, Patrick E. Munn, Andrew J. Smith, Werner F. Goeckel, Miller C. Hawkins, and Fred S. Valles. The plaintiffs allege that the individual defendants, on behalf of themselves and the Company, in an effort to induce the Class to contribute their labor to the Company and join them in the struggle to save the Company, promised the Class stock ownership in the Company. The Class alleges that the defendants misrepresented their intent, failed to satisfy their promises, and made other fraudulent misrepresentations and omissions through which they obtained the benefits of the Class' commitment to the Company and profited at the expense of the Class.

Defendants deny the Class's allegations of wrongdoing in all respects. They deny having made any misrepresentations or material omissions, and they affirmatively contend that the Company was employee-owned and that they satisfied any obligations to the employees by establishing a Stock Bonus Plan pursuant to which all participants shared in the ownership of the Company.

On June 8, 1989, the Court determined that this lawsuit should be maintained as a class action on behalf of all present and former employees of the Rexene Corporation, Rexene Products Company, formerly known as El Paso Products Company (including its predecessor, a Texas corporation) or any of their direct or indirect subsidiaries whose designated employment level at any time from January 1, 1984 through April 13, 1988, inclusive, was grade 9 or below. The court has preliminarily approved a settlement between the Class and the settling defendants. If you are a member of the Class, you may be entitled to a portion of the Settlement Fund. Also, if you are a member of the Class, you have the right to exclude yourself from the Class or to object to the settlement. In either event, you will be required to mail certain information to the Committee of Counsel.

Persons who have been identified as possible members of the Class are being advised by mail of their rights with respect to the lawsuit. This Notice is being published because some Class members may not receive the mailed notice either because they have not been identified as members of the Class or the mailing information is inaccurate or otherwise incorrect. If you are (or may be) a member of the Class but do not receive individual notice of your rights by June 30, 1989, you should notify immediately the Committee of Counsel, Rexene Products Company Litigation, P.O. Box 53353, Houston, Texas 77010, giving your correct name, telephone number, current address and social security number. You will then be mailed a more detailed explanation of your rights in this litigation and be placed on the mailing list for any future notifications regarding this suit.

A hearing for final approval of the settlement is scheduled in the 295th Judicial District Court of Harris County, Texas, on August 2, 1989, 8:00 a.m. If you have not received notice by mail, you should notify the Committee of Counsel immediately at the address listed above. To exclude yourself from the Class or object to the settlement, you must do so in writing and mail your exclusion request or objection to the Committee of Counsel postmarked no later than July 26, 1989, or you may forfeit and lose forever valuable rights.
