Unsolved murder

ALICE — A former Alice police officer says he's willing to be hypnotized to remember details of a 1974 conversation with a suspected drug dealer that may provide clues in the unsolved murder of his then-partner. Albert "Tito" Bernal was a civilian officer in May 1974 when he was teamed with Alice officer Matthew Murphy on an undercover drug investigation. Bernal, who later became a uniformed officer in Alice and now works at a Beeville post office, says their investigation ended after a suspect said a contract was out for the lives of the officers./3B

Mystery trial

WICHITA FALLS — The capital murder trial of a man accused of bludgeoning a Fort Worth couple has several elements often found in a classic murder mystery: intrigue, money and violence. Testimony in Jeff Dillingham's murder trial was set to start here Monday. Evidence will include a tape-recorded statement Dillingham gave police two weeks after the March 12, 1992, attack. Dillingham, 20, is the first of three defendants to face trial in what prosecutors call a bungled murder-for-hire scheme. Caren Koslow, 40, died after being struck 27 times with a pry bar. Jack Koslow, 49, survived./3B

Skinheads: 'We're just kids, not violent supremacists'

By Deborah Hastings
Associated Press Writer

LONG BEACH, Calif. — Their worst vice, they say, is smoking cigarettes. They readily add to the list being young, impressionable and historically ignorant.

Their language is typical teen-ager: all, like, "you've got to be kidding!"

Meet four members of the Fourth Reich Skinheads. According to federal agents and indictments handed down Thursday, the 20-year-old leader of this group, Christopher Fisher, was an armed, bigoted young man who planned to ignite a race war by bombing Los Angeles' most popular black church.

According to Timothy Traster, Samantha Turrill, Kori and Debi — Fisher's girlfriend — it was really an undercover FBI agent and an informant who suggested and pressed for the church bombing and the assassination of Rodney King.

The four, who gathered recently on the back steps of the Trasters' duplex, insist they are regular teen-agers who are proud of being white and tired of feeling discriminated against in their racially mixed communities. Debi, 16, and Kori, 17, asked that their last names not be used to protect their families.

The FBI declined to comment on the youths' claims.

Two rivers assault city on all sides

■ Thousands of volunteers scatter to heighten sandbag levees.

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — After days of waiting, the water came.

Two of America's biggest rivers swelled to record levels and assaulted the city from all sides Sunday, cascading over a levee in a pre-Revolutionary War hamlet to the north and threatening hundreds of homes to the south.

Urgent appeals went out for sandbaggers all over Missouri's largest metropolitan area, where residents spared the flooding saw live television pictures of foaming water gushing through levees and swallowing farmhouses in seconds.

And still the water rose — faster and higher than anyone expected — with crests on the Mississippi and Missouri rivers forecast for a Sunday night collision at their confluence north of the city.

"We're fighting a war," said fire Chief Neil Svetanics in the emergency command post downtown. "The war in Iraq lasted four days. The Israelis won a war in seven days. We've been in this

Flood victims: Some days all you do is cry

By Sharon Cohen
Associated Press Writer

It seems like the tears won't go away until the water does.

These are sad and uncertain days for thousands of flood victims across the Midwest waiting for the muddy rivers to recede, hoping to salvage something of their homes and lives.

Weeks of rain and raging rivers have damaged or destroyed about 37,000 homes in nine states, the Red Cross says. For many of the displaced, it's too soon to gauge losses, so they sleep on cots in schools and churches, camp out in tents, bunk with friends and family — and fret about the future.

"It feels like you'll never get back to where you were," laments Debbie Zachodni, a Missouri factory worker whose trailer flooded. "I just want to cry sometimes and say, 'Why has this happened?'"

Clinton faces tough task of selling risky plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Within a whisker of a compromise, President Clinton is counting on a few final deals to win the votes to pass his economic program.

But it's no sure bet; the votes he needs most are from lawmakers worried about the political impact in November 1994.

That's a long way off, and it's risky to predict what the economy will look like then. So the easy option for Democrats facing tough re-election campaigns is to vote against Clinton's new taxes, removing even a potential weapon from Republican challengers.

It doesn't take a political consultant to tell you so.

"It's going to take political courage to side with the president on this and that's usually in short supply in Washington," said economist David Wyss of the DRI-McGraw Hill forecasting firm.

Simple economics drives that political assessment.

"In the near term, in the first year, it is hard to see how (Clinton) can come out ahead," Wyss said. "Higher taxes and lower spending both tend to drag the economy a bit. I believe the economy is strong enough to withstand that, but from a numbers standpoint this is not a winner for 1994. It probably is a winner for 1996."

If that projection holds true, Clinton and Democrats might have a hard sell next year, when 21 Senate seats now held by Democrats are up, compared to 13 now held by Republicans.

"They are making the electoral environment for the Democratic Party very difficult," Republican pollster Bill McInturff said. "Taxes are electoral poison for Democrats. But it's like catnip — they can't seem to stay away from it."

Clinton's task is made tougher because he can't count on any Republican votes. So in both the House and Senate, he needs to construct a coalition from liberal and moderate Democrats who have some

Baby-swapped teen places her future in judge's hands

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Kimberly Mays goes to court today seeking to preserve her life with the man who has reared her since she was switched at birth with another child in a Florida hospital 14 years ago.

The circuit judge, Stephen Dakan, must decide if the teen-ager can sever all ties to her biological parents, Ernest and Regina Twigg, or allow them visiting rights.

In a case that's already been the subject of a television miniseries and a book, publicity in the week leading up to the trial has been generated largely by Kimberly herself.

The blond, hazel-eyed ninth-grader broke her long silence to express her devotion to the man who raised her, Bob Mays, and her an-

By Anne Thompson

BOSTON — Will John Jr. marry Daryl? Is the latest book about Ted true? Has Willie found happiness in his medical career? And can Joe get his first marriage annulled before he weds a staff member?

After 30 years, the Kennedy family soap opera continues, and the audience remains rapt.

"The Kennedys are the closest thing here to royalty," said Iain Calder, editor in chief of the National Enquirer supermarket tabloid. "There's an American fascination with British royals — well, they're the American royals."

To Calder, the hottest Kennedy story is whether John F. Kennedy Jr. is going to marry actress Daryl Hannah.

Paparazzi staked out Hannah's home this week amid rumors of a secret wedding. Gossip columnist Liz Smith reported Thursday the couple were in Indonesia.

But the 32-year-old Kennedy,

NABATIYEH, Lebanon (AP) — Tens of thousands of refugees began returning to ruined villages Sunday as Israeli tanks withdrew from south Lebanon following a U.S.-brokered cease-fire.

The truce, which took effect Saturday, ended a week-long Israeli blitz that police said killed 140 people, wounded at least 496 and sent 500,000 people fleeing north.

Israeli warplanes, gunboats and artillery had bombarded a broad swath of south Lebanon in the largest and bloodiest offensive since Israel invaded 11 years ago. The offensive followed a rash of rocket attacks by Shiite Muslim and Palestinian guerrillas against Israel's self-styled "security zone" in south Lebanon.

Late Sunday, the Lebanese government agreed to deploy troops in southern Lebanon to hinder guerrilla activity. The only military presence in that part of the country now is the 5,800-member U.N. peacekeeping force. Guerrillas have been able to flourish in the absence of regular troops.

Information Minister Michel Samaha said top government officials would start talks with the United Nations about such deployments.

On Sunday, Lebanese army troops moved into villages formerly controlled by Hezbollah, set up checkpoints, searched militiamen for weapons and began confiscating Katyushas rockets, said an officer who spoke on condition of anonymity.

But Hezbollah leader Sheik Hassan Nasrallah told reporters in Beirut that "no one has asked us to give up our weapons."

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin backed up the sheik's statement, saying on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley" Sunday that Lebanon had taken heavy weapons from a number of militias, but not from Hezbollah.

Nine hours after the cease-fire began, guerrillas fired mortars and assault rifles at an outpost near the zone manned by Israel's surrogate South Lebanon Army. SLA militiamen returned fire, but there were no reports of casualties, security sources said.

They said the skirmish was not a serious breach of the cease-fire, which was negotiated by Secretary of State Warren Christopher.

Israeli leaders said it was part of an understanding that Shiite guerrillas of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, or Party of God, would stop firing Katyusha rockets into northern Israel.

But Hezbollah said in a statement in Beirut that it would "continue to fight the occupier in south Lebanon until he is driven out."

Witnesses said about 150 Israeli tanks and armored personnel carriers returned to northern Israel, but about 45 howitzer cannons were left behind.

News of the skirmishes didn't slow the massive return home by thousands of civilians who fled south Lebanon last week.

On the coastal highway linking Beirut with the south, cars with blown-out windshields and shrapnel scars were loaded to twice their capacity. Children were bundled in the trunks, and mattresses and cooking pots were tied to the roofs.

Many families couldn't find even the rubble of their homes in towns and villages ravaged by the Israeli shelling.

In Mayfadoun, Jaafar Yatim stopped his pickup truck and climbed out with his wife, Zahra, and their three small daughters.

The family hardly walked five yards before they all burst into tears. Yatim, 35, pointed to a heap of debris and said: "This was my house, and this was the barn."

Throughout the region, the destruction was staggering. Many stared in speechless daze at devastated shops and houses. Others sobbed in the ruins and cursed Israel for the attack, the guerrillas for provoking it and the Lebanese government for failing to protect them.

Prime Minister Rafik Hariri said Israel's offensive achieved nothing but the destruction of hundreds of homes in south Lebanon. "It did not destroy Hezbollah. Hezbollah is still there in the south," Hariri said.

Still, Hezbollah militiamen Sunday were for the first time taking orders from the Lebanese army.

Nerves raw on American University campus

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The hundred yards between the two campuses of the American University in Cairo have become an uncertain walk for its students.

Young women in Western clothes are drawing more insults from bearded Islamic fundamentalists. Worse for all the students is the nagging fear of nail bombs.

Recent bombings by Muslim extremists in crowded spots in Cairo have given special pause to students at American University.

The radicals, in their battle to topple Egypt's secular government, rail at American decadence — and influence. While 80 percent of the school's 3,500 students are Egyptians, many people think of them as Americans or somehow connected to U.S. interests.

They speak English, own big cars, eat hamburgers and get jobs quickly when they graduate. The private university's tuition is out of reach for most Egyptians.

In the gap between Egypt's rich and poor, American University students are among the elite. Crossing between campuses, they walk a crowded street where any of the young men they meet wearing close-cropped beards could be an angry, resentful extremist.

"Before, I used to feel safe walking beside bearded men or a veiled woman. I believed they were religious. Now, whenever I see one of them, I feel he is going to get a knife out to stab me," said Amira el-Adawi, an 18-year-old student.

She said many things changed in her life after the radicals began planting nail-packed bombs that have killed 13 people in Cairo since Feb. 26. "I cannot put on the clothes I like anymore, especially when I use public transportation or walk in the streets," she said.

Indeed, the streets seem a different world from the university. Outside is Cairo's grime. Inside are trees, tennis courts and students in the latest Western fashions. Just across the street are Kentucky Fried Chicken and Pizza Hut.

Opened in 1919 by American missionaries, the school — which also draws students from other Arab nations and some Americans — has always held a sensitive position. Some Arabs see it as representing U.S. foreign policy. After Israel seized the West Bank and Gaza Strip in the 1967 Mideast war, there were demands to close the school or rename it the University of Palestine.

But now, Muslim radicals planting bombs make the Arab leftists of the 1960s seem tame. The anxiety keeps the campus abuzz with rumors.

El-Adawi repeated the tale that radicals, in their demand for modest Islamic dress, spray acid on women in short skirts. Others said extremists hand out poisoned cookies or use needles to inject poison into the unwary.

There is no evidence that any of those things have ever happened.

Louis Greiss, press spokesman for the university, said security was intensified and plans developed for evacuating the campus after four bomb threats were received in recent months.

There used to be two guards at each of the school's four main gates and the students generally entered without their ID cards being checked. Now, the number of guards has been doubled and all students are checked and their bags searched.

But students still worry.

May Zakaria, 19, who spends her summers in the United States, said she resents "people coming to me all the time speaking rudely for not putting on the veil."

She thinks the radicals can be stopped only by hanging them in public squares. "They deserve to be treated this way for killing innocent people," she said.

But most others doubted the radicals' campaign of violence can be halted soon, even by harsh government action.

"I feel it is like a chain reaction," said Magdi Wael, 24, a political science student. "Once it starts, it never ends."

Late king's brother to reign as Belgium's monarch

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Prince Albert will succeed his late brother King Baudouin as Belgium's monarch, the prime minister announced Sunday, confounding expectations that Albert's son would take the throne.

Prime Minister Jean-Luc Dehaene said in making the surprise announcement that the "spirit of continuity" was more important than renewal while Belgium was going through tough political and economic times.

In addition to recurrent problems between its 6 million Dutch speakers and 4 million French speakers, Belgium suffers from an economy in recession and a currency under tremendous pressure from speculators.

King Baudouin, who reigned for 42 years, died of a heart attack late Saturday while vacationing in Spain. He will be buried at the St. Michael Cathedral in Brussels next Saturday.

Baudouin and Queen Fabiola were childless, and the 59-year-old Albert was officially the heir to the throne. But Albert's 33-year-old son Philippe was widely expected to take over the throne.

However, at Baudouin's death, it appears that Albert gave into pressure from federal officials seeking experience over youth. Doubts had been raised that Philippe would not be experienced enough to deal with the thorny political situation.

"We have to regroup around the constitutional successor, the prince Albert, who has been called to pursue Baudouin's work in a spirit of continuity," said Dehaene in a televised address to the nation.

Though only a ceremonial king, Baudouin was long the symbol of unity in Belgium, a country often divided between its linguistic groups.

He gained the reputation of being scrupulously impartial in dealing with both groups, whose disagreements have caused numerous governments to fall.

Only recently, a constitutional revision granted wide autonomy to the Dutch-speaking Flanders region, Francophone Wallonia and bilingual Brussels. Many feared that the king's death could lead the country to crumble.

Outside the Royal Palace in downtown Brussels, hundreds of Dutch- and French-speakers gathered to grieve. Mourners — some tearful and many dressed in black — placed bouquets of flowers at the palace gates.

■ Mrs. Nevada wins Mrs. USA competition

Laura Hobbs, an investor relations manager and mother of one, has been married nine years.

Ten 10 finalists were named after an interview, aerobic wear and evening gown competition that began Saturday night and was taped for national broadcast later this year.

Krystal Willhoit, Mrs. Missouri, was first runnerup; Susan Santefort, Mrs. Illinois was second runnerup; Jeannie Schmitz, Mrs. Oklahoma, was third runnerup; and Sheila Sigo, Mrs. Michigan, was fourth runnerup.

The Mrs. USA pageant system is based on recognizing married women whose goals are to build a strong foundation of marriage and family.

■ Restaurant explosion kills 1, injures 5

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — A gas explosion at a restaurant killed one worker and injured five others Sunday, authorities said.

The body of an employee was retrieved from rubble about two hours after the morning explosion at El Torito Grill, police Sgt. Mike McDonough said. The victim's name was withheld pending notification of relatives.

Five other employees received minor injuries when they were hit by flying debris, police said. A nursing supervisor at Hoag Memorial Hospital said all five would be released Sunday.

A gas leak in the kitchen caused the blast, which destroyed part of the roof, McDonough said.

At the time of the blast, workers were preparing to open the restaurant, which stands alone in a parking lot at the Fashion Island mall. No other stores at the mall were affected, McDonough said.

■ Surprise is on robber; bank is closed

EAST HARTFORD, Conn. — A man carrying a pistol and wearing a blue bandana over his face showed up at 3:45 p.m. to rob the bank. The trouble was, the bank closed at 3 p.m.

"He stood at the door looking in for a second and then ran away," police Lt. Paul Lakenbach said of Friday's attempted heist.

Workers inside the Chase Manhattan Bank of Connecticut branch said they saw the man give a locked door a yank. They called police as he drove off in a small, black car. No one was arrested.

"We were not amused," said a bank employee who would not give her name. "Thank God we were closed and he never got inside."

■ Three people die in helicopter crash

EL MONTE, Calif. — A helicopter crashed and exploded in flames at El Monte Airport, killing the pilot and both passengers. Investigators said determining the cause could take months.

The helicopter was about 50 feet above a runway Saturday when it tilted forward and dropped to the ground Saturday, exploding several times on impact, witnesses said.

"It sounded like an earthquake. The house was rattling and everybody was running," said Paula Montenegro, who lives near the airfield.

Witnesses said it appeared the pilot was practicing takeoffs and landings before the accident at the airport 12 miles east of downtown Los Angeles.

Scott Erickson, an investigator with the National Transportation Safety Board, said the agency's investigation could take as long as six months.

Jerry Johnston, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Los Angeles, identified the aircraft Sunday as a Robinson R-44, a small four-seater often used for training flights.

NATO council to discuss air power in Bosnia

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration reacted cautiously Saturday to a Bosnian peace agreement and pressed ahead with its effort to unite NATO allies behind a plan to use air power to force an end to the siege of Sarajevo.

"Essentially, it's a positive step," an administration official said of the peace agreement reached Friday in Geneva. "But the hardest nut is still to be cracked."

Officials in Washington and Brussels said the NATO council would meet Monday to discuss the use of air power in Bosnia.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher was to depart Sunday for the Middle East. There was no indication that he planned to stop in Brussels en route.

White House spokeswoman Lorraine Voles said President Clinton met for about 30 minutes Saturday for a final review of administration plans on Bosnia and other matters, but declined to discuss the substance of the meeting. Among those attending were Christopher, Anthony Lake, the national security adviser, Defense Secretary Les Aspin and Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Political leaders of the warring factions in Bosnia reached general agreement Friday on a plan to partition the former Yugoslav republic into three ethnic regions. Negotiations were continuing on the specific boundaries and governmental structure.

"The general sense is there is very serious negotiation under way," said a Clinton administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

He called the process encouraging but said, "The map is the hardest part."

"There's a lot to be done there about demarcation lines and the actual setup of the government," said the White House official.

"We have to wait and see what's going to go on with the cease-fire," he added.

The official said the cease-fire, which ended fighting that had raged for the last three weeks, particularly around Sarajevo, would not change U.S. determination to push its plan to use air power in Bosnia.

"It is not derailing us from the approach that we're trying to sell to the allies threatening the use of NATO air power to relieve the siege of Sarajevo," he said.

Despite the lull in the fighting in Bosnia, he said "it's too soon to say this is going to be any different from previous cease-fires."

In an opinion piece in Sunday's edition of The Washington Post, Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole said the Clinton administration should "tell our allies that their policies have failed and that a comprehensive strategy toward Bosnia is needed."

He said Clinton should issue an ultimatum calling for "adherence to the most recent cease-fire, the free passage of all humanitarian convoys, a date certain for the placing of all heavy weapons under U.N. control and, finally, the disbanding of all paramilitary forces. If these demands are not met, air strikes will be conducted against heavy weaponry and forces in violation."

Dozens of previous truces have collapsed during Bosnia's 16-month civil war, some as quickly as they were signed.

In Brussels, an alliance official said ministers from the 16 NATO countries would attend the emergency session on Monday.

The administration official said the subject of the meeting would be "Bosnia and the use of air power."

For the past several days, the Clinton administration has pressed with increasing intensity the need to use NATO air power in Bosnia. There was no clear indication how much support the proposal was getting within NATO.

The administration wants to go well beyond the generally agreed plan to use air strikes in response to attacks on U.N. peacekeeping forces in Bosnia.

"We're not talking about just a reactive response," the administration official said.

Pena brings new activism to Transportation Department

By James H. Rubin
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Federico Pena, among the nation's foremost frequent flyers, sat patiently as the jet idled at the gate of Atlanta's airport. The minutes dragged on as the crew waited for a prominent passenger.

Finally, a flight attendant spotted the problem: Pena was sitting in the coach section instead of the first-class seat the airline had reserved for the Transportation Secretary.

No thanks, Pena said. He preferred to skip the VIP treatment.

Pena, who rode keen political skills to become Denver's first Hispanic mayor, loves to retell the story, saying the experience of flying the way most average Americans do helps him in his new job.

Pena is one of several lifelong politicians in the new Cabinet now charged with selling President Clinton's plan to America after years of calling their own shots.

"We're used to being the bosses. We're now reporting to a new boss," Pena said. "Some of us never had that experience before."

Beyond logging tens of thousands of miles — he estimates he has visited more than 40 cities during his first six months on the job — Pena has brought a new sense of activism to the Transportation Department.

Recently, he summoned executives of Northwest Airlines and labor leaders to his office to prod them toward a new contract that would avert a threatened bankruptcy for the airline.

For critics, Pena's action amounted to political grandstanding.

"When an agreement is reached, he wants to be the one sitting in the middle of the groups and he wants to take credit for it," said Michael Boyd, an aviation consultant in Golden, Colo.

But John Peterpaul, vice president of the International Association of Machinists and a participant in the talks, said Pena "played an important role" in encouraging the settlement.

"He's a personable guy and he's knowledgeable. He tries to keep his hands on," Peterpaul said.

Pena is quick to acknowledge he brings to the job a "somewhat different perspective than my predecessors.

"It is not my intention to interfere with the natural market forces," he said. 'However, in isolated instances where, in our opinion, it makes sense for us to be involved because of the unique circumstances of those events, we will be involved."

Pena, an avid runner who says he averages about 20 miles a week and jogs three or four miles per outing, exudes enthusiasm.

When President Clinton nominated him for the Cabinet, he said Pena is "exactly the kind of energetic manager who can ace the task of repairing and rebuilding our nation's infrastructure."

One Republican, well aware of the rigors of the jobs, gives him high marks.

"I've been very impressed. He's off to a good start," said James Burnley, the former Reagan administration transportation secretary. "(Pena) has had the good sense to plug into the (department's) career leadership. An effective political leader recognizes that."

Pena was notified that President-elect Clinton wanted him in the Cabinet while Pena was headed from Washington to Brownsville, Texas, to celebrate Christmas last year with his parents.

18 suffer injuries in amusement park

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — An amusement park attraction that spins people through the air dropped to the ground suddenly Saturday, injuring 18 riders, authorities said.

Injuries ranged from minor bumps and bruises to broken bones and back injuries, said Ceredo Fire Department spokesman Clinton Burley. Eighteen people were treated at hospitals, but only one was admitted.

The ride at Camden Park has several cars that rise off the ground as they spin in a circle, Burley said.

The cars were lifting off when they suddenly dropped back down, and some hit a platform, Burley said.

"The ride was about eye level when a hydraulic hose burst, causing it to come down faster than it normally would," said Camden Park spokesman Keith Spears.

Eleven people were taken to Cabell-Huntington Hospital. Only one, an 11-year-old girl, was admitted. She was listed in stable condition with undisclosed injuries.

Seven people were treated for minor injuries at St. Mary's Hospital.

All of the park's rides are checked daily, Spears said. The 10-year-old ride had never malfunctioned before, he said.

WEATHER WATCH

Via Associated Press

NATIONAL SUMMARY:
A few widely separated thunderstorms will move into the eastern third of the country today, and a few thunderstorms will occur in the southern Plains. A couple of showers will accompany unseasonably cool air in northern Minnesota and northern North Dakota, but the flood-plagued Midwest will be raintree. Sunny, hot weather will prevail in the West with highs of 100 as far north as southern Oregon.

Today, chance of rain, high in 90s

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a 30 percent chance of rain, a high in the upper 90s and variable winds at 5-15 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of rain and a low near 70, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be partly cloudy with a high in the upper 90s.

After an overnight low of 69, Sunday's high reached 99, compared to the record high for that date of 105 set in 1944. The record low was 61 set in 1973.

STATE

A heat advisory was in effect Sunday for North Texas as the region completed its 37th day without rain.

High temperatures were in the 100s for the ninth consecutive day as Texans continued to eye the sky for some relief. Lows were in the 70s.

Conditions were similar throughout the rest of the state. In South Texas temperatures were in the mid-90s to 100s. There was a small shower near the Placios area, but it was otherwise dry.

In West Texas, some thunderstorms brought relief to the area where temperatures were in the 80s to mid-90s.

Forecasts for today may bring some relief to the dry weather in North Texas. Skies should be partly cloudy with widely scattered thunderstorms through tonight.

Highs will be in the upper 90s with lows in the 70s.

In South Texas, skies will be partly cloudy with isolated showers or thunderstorms. Highs today will be in the 90s and 100s with lows in the 70s.

In West Texas, partly to mostly cloudy skies will cover the Panhandle and South Plains with partly cloudy skies elsewhere through Tuesday.

NATION

Hail piled up like snowdrifts Sunday in Nebraska as thunderstorms battered the central and southern Plains.

At midday, showers and thunderstorms were scattered across the southern and central Plains, the lower Mississippi Valley, southern Florida, and the eastern Great Lakes, the National Weather Service said.

During the morning, severe thunderstorms with large hail and damaging wind pounded parts of southwestern Nebraska and northwestern Kansas.

In Nebraska, hail up to the diameter of dimes accumulated in piles like snowdrifts up to 3 feet deep at Palisade, and 3 to 4 feet deep north of Trenton. The storms uprooted trees, knocked down power lines, toppled campers, and broke windows.

The hail shredded corn and other crops and stripped trees of their leaves near Trenton, said Chief Deputy Don Smith.

"Where hail damage was real bad it was laying on the ground like snow, even a couple of hours afterward," Smith said.

Hail the size of golf balls dented cars and downed tree limbs early Sunday at Bridgeport, Neb.

In Kansas, hail the diameter of quarters fell at Scott City, with smaller stones reported at Holcomb and near Deerfield, and wind gusted to 60 mph.

Hail the diameter of quarters also fell during the afternoon at Spearman, Texas, the weather service said.

Hot, humid weather continued over the southern Plains and lower Mississippi Valley, with early afternoon temperatures in the 90s, approaching 100 across parts of northern and central Texas.

Heat advisories were posted across western Mississippi, southern Arkansas, and parts of north-central Texas, where the deaths of two elderly women Friday were blamed on the heat.

Early afternoon temperatures topped 100 in the normally hot desert Southwest.

WAIT: Families hope to be home by holidays

(From 1A)

National Guard troops are stationed near her home outside St. Charles, Mo. Water is everywhere. And people nowhere.

"My whole neighborhood is gone," Mrs. Floyd said. "Not just me, but my friends. Everything is under water. . . . It's not like a tornado or a fire where you can go back the next day. You're totally lost."

"I have good days and bad days," she said. "Some days, you just sit down and all you do is cry."

The Floyds and their 10-year-old son, Kevin, fled their home in early July and lived in a Red Cross shelter for two weeks before the agency helped rent them an apartment in suburban St. Louis.

They have a bed and recently added a table and chairs so they no longer eat standing around a counter. Their son sleeps on a pallet.

"Where's everything I had that made your life a home, a family?" Mrs. Floyd asks, breaking into tears. "You don't have any of that."

The Floyds hope their insurance will help them get another house in St. Charles by fall. Meanwhile, they'll be strapped with mortgage and rent payments, facing months of anxiety.

"It's like your whole world has ended and you're starting all over," Mrs. Floyd said. "You have no idea what your life will be like. The things I want . . . I have no idea if I can get them back."

For Tracy Martinez, this has been the year of the disaster.

First came a spring fire that destroyed one home. Now, a summer flood has damaged another.

She, her husband and their five sons, ages 2 months to 7 years, are huddled in a room in a Red Cross shelter in Tama, Iowa, hoping they'll be back in their home in town within days.

"It's a little frustrating . . . not being able to cook your own meals, not having a place where you can say, 'I'm going home,'" Mrs. Martinez, 30 said.

"A lot of the people here are stressed out," she said. "But you're not going through it by yourself. You have other people sharing the same thing."

The shelter offers little privacy, but Mrs. Martinez is grateful.

"I have the kids," she said. "That's mainly what matters to me. Other things you can replace."

"I'm a strong-willed person," she said. "I don't let things bring me down. It's not going to do you any good to worry. It could be better. But it could be worse."

Shirley and John Jackson had their retirement planned. Or so they thought.

They bought a home in Keithsburg, Ill., 11 months ago. In June, they moved in four rooms of furniture. In July, they lost it all to the flood.

Mrs. Jackson, 56, spends 12 hours a day in the town's firehouse, serving donated food to others sharing her plight.

"It's the only thing to do," she said. "They can't help me no more. . . . We just stay here and work. It keeps your mind as sane as possible. At night, you do a lot of crying, when you sit and think about what you lost. . . . If I ever get back in, it's going to hit me hard."

The Jacksons are staying with their daughter and son-in-law in town and depending on insurance to recoup some losses. For now, she said, "I'm stuck with a house and a lot and no place to live."

"We're coming back to Keithsburg," she said, "but maybe on higher ground."

WHITE: Teens claim FBI suggested bombing

(From 1A)

"The affidavits speak for themselves," spokesman John Hoos said in an interview late Thursday.

On July 15, claiming that Fisher's bombing plans were out of control, the FBI launched a sweep that netted eight people, three of whom were affiliated with the Fourth Reich Skinheads.

The group came to the FBI's attention when the informant discovered a hotline the group operated that played racist rhymes before callers left "white pride" messages. They now concede the hotline was racist and wrong.

In April, according to a federal affidavit, the unnamed informant called the now-defunct hotline and left a message asking to meet with its operators.

When the man arrived for the meeting, he said he was the Rev. Joe Allen of the Church of the Creator, a Florida-based white supremacist organization.

The man invited some members of the group to his Newport Beach "church" office — a warehouse equipped with weight-lifting gear, Hitler pictures and an arsenal of guns.

There, Debi and Traster met the man's "nephew" — "a really good-looking guy" named Mike McCormick, Debi said. "McCormick," the teens believe, was the FBI agent, "Allen" the informant.

Traster said he went there to exercise "except we didn't get to work out."

"They always sat us down and talked to us. They always suggested a race war. If you tried to talk about anything else, like what we did over the weekend or something, they always changed it back to a race war."

Debi said the group had no name until "Allen" pressured them to come up with one.

"It wasn't on our fliers, it wasn't on our hotline," she said. "We never called ourselves that."

Fisher was charged Thursday with offenses including bomb-making, conspiring to blow up the First African Methodist Episcopal Church in South Central Los Angeles and throwing a Molotov cocktail at an Orange County synagogue.

The FBI initially said Fisher plotted to kill King, a black motorist who was beaten by white police officers, but no charges involving King were filed.

Two juvenile group members arrested with Fisher have yet to be charged.

The Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles, which monitors hate crimes, said it had not heard of the skinhead group until the arrests.

The group led by Fisher numbered about 15, the four teen-agers said.

They met at each other's homes, built beach bonfires and hung out at McDonald's. They took pictures of members flashing Nazi salutes but said they didn't "know much about Hitler." They say they had no links to the White Aryan Resistance, or any white supremacist group, as a federal affidavit says.

On the hotline, "we never said kill all the blacks or anything," said Debi, who was questioned by the FBI following Fisher's arrest.

campaign for 25 days and haven't reached the pitch of battle yet."

St. Louis now is the focal point of the months-long flooding in nine Midwestern states that has contributed to 45 deaths and caused $10 billion in damage.

The area came under siege late Friday when water burst through a Missouri River levee in the Chesterfield suburb west of downtown, flooding hundreds of businesses and a commuter airport.

By Sunday, the Mississippi had reached a level of 49.2 feet, 19.2 feet above flood stage. It was expected to crest at 49.7 feet.

That level would be just 2.3 feet from the top of the city's 52-foot floodwall, which sprang a leak at its northern end during an earlier crest on July 20.

Workers repaired that section of the wall, which protects an industrial area north of downtown, and officials prayed it would hold.

Downtown St. Louis and the city's famous Gateway Arch sit on higher ground, safe from the flooding.

But in the south end of the city, leaks sprang all along a 4-mile levee protecting homes on the River Des Peres, ordinarily a narrow drainage channel that feeds the Mississippi.

Water also rose through the sewer system in the River Des Peres area, threatening hundreds of wood-frame tract homes, many of which were flooded during the last crest. Officials went door-to-door Sunday telling people to leave.

Thousands of volunteers converged on the neighborhood to heighten the sandbag levee. Their efforts were aided by a surprising 1-foot drop in the River Des Peres, but authorities warned that was misleading.

The river drop was only temporary, they said, caused by busted levees downstream on the Mississippi where some 15,000 acres of Illinois farmland were flooded with up to 15 feet of water. St. Louis water levels were forecast to rise as the flooded farmland filled up.

Northwest of the city, levees burst Sunday morning in St. Charles, a town of red-brick roads and gaslights.

TRIAL: Teen hopes to sever biological ties

ger toward her biological family, particularly Mrs. Twigg.

"I hate Regina for doing this to me — I really do. And I just want her out of my life," Kimberly said. "I can't wait to see Regina's face when the judge says 'Kimberly Mays has terminated their rights.'"

Her case was bolstered in July when a court-appointed psychologist reported that Mrs. Twigg has deep psychological problems that should be treated before she is allowed unsupervised visits with Kimberly.

The case began in 1978 at a hospital in rural Wauchula, where identification tags were switched and girls born to the Twiggs and to May and his wife, Barbara, went home with the wrong parents.

The exchange came to light nearly a decade later, when the child raised by the Twiggs, Arlena, developed heart problems and blood tests showed she was not their biological daughter.

After Arlena died in 1988, the Twiggs launched a search for their daughter that led them to Kimberly and Mays, a roofing salesman.

Barbara Mays had since died of cancer and Mays' second marriage ended in divorce. He was alone with the girl he thought was his only child and fought hard to protect her.

It took a year before Mays gave in to the Twiggs' demand for genetic testing that might prove their claim to be Kimberly's parents — but on one condition. He made them sign an agreement promising that if Kimberly was their biological daughter they would not seek custody, only visitation.

The visits began in 1990 but Mays cut them short after five sessions, saying the Twiggs were disrupting Kimberly's schoolwork and attitude.

The Twiggs responded by trying to portray Mays as abusive and went to court last year seeking custody. Mays denied the accusations and a judge refused to take Kimberly from him.

About the same time, Mrs. Twigg cooperated with the author of the book "The Baby Swap Conspiracy," which suggested Mays and his late wife were somehow involved in the hospital switch and raised questions about Mays' fitness as a father.

Kimberly decided earlier this year to file a "divorce" action against the Twiggs, saying she was inspired by another Florida child, Gregory Kingsley, who successfully severed all ties to his parents last year. She even hired George Russ, Gregory's adoptive father, as her lawyer.

The Twiggs' attorney, John Blakely, maintains the couple, who have seven other children, are fit parents and notes that courts historically have sided with the biological parents in such cases.

ROYAL: Kennedys hold Americans' attention

once picked as "the sexiest man alive" by People magazine, isn't the only family member in the news this summer.

Even family matriarch Rose Kennedy got a attention, as she has every July for years, by marking her birthday — her 103rd this year.

Joseph P. Kennedy II, a Democratic congressman from Massachusetts and son of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, is seeking an annulment to marry Anne Elizabeth Kelly, who began working for him in 1982 as an office temp.

William Kennedy Smith recently told the media his medical residency in New Mexico helped him restore normalcy to his life after his acquittal on a rape charge.

And Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., is the subject a biography that's already been hotly debated even though it's not in bookstores yet.

"The Last Brother" by Joe McGinniss was instantly controversial because a disclaimer that said some parts of the book were "created by the author." Then, others suggested McGinniss was guilty of plagiarism.

Melody Miller, a spokeswoman for the Kennedys, said no family member would comment about their personal affairs.

"Members of the Kennedy family don't try to speculate on why people are so interested in them," she said. "They prefer to concentrate on the jobs and public service in which they're involved. And take one day at a time."

Calder attributes the fascination to the Kennedy's mix of charisma, wealth, glamour and tragedy.

"This is a family that if an author created them for a novel, people would say it's too far-fetched," he said.

VOTE: Clinton pushes risky plan

conflicting interests.

With a budget deal all but complete, the final barrier was refereeing one last tug-of-war between liberals who think Clinton is cutting too much social spending and moderates who say their votes depend on $500 billion in deficit reduction, give or take a few billion.

In all this political haggling, what gets lost is the economic impact of the budget plan. The politicians can't agree: Clinton says his program will create at least 8 million jobs; Republicans argue its taxes will smother a precarious economy.

The economists tend to be less partisan.

"I'd like a plan that does more than this to deal with the deficit but there isn't one out there," said Wyss. "And this is a heck of a lot better than nothing."

That's hardly a resounding endorsement, but it essentially mirrors Clinton's argument:

"A lot of people who are holding out are saying we want it to be perfect," he said last week. "Well, it can't be perfect. It's just got to be a big advance."

To GOP pollster McInturff, this whole debate is eerily reminiscent of the 1990 budget fight, when President Bush broke his no-new-taxes pledge in the name of what was supposed to be a deficit-busting deal.

"Why the Clinton White House can't remember what sank the Bush presidency is beyond me," McInturff said.

The White House, however, believes the political mood has changed, that for all its distaste of higher taxes, the public is more angry at inaction in Washington.

Making that case is a big part of Clinton's gamble in the final days of negotiating. A victory, however narrow, should generate at least a little momentum for the fights to come this fall, over health care, welfare reform, a crime bill and the controversial free-trade treaty with Canada and Mexico.

Human-rights advocates criticize plan to use guard troops on border

By Pamela Burdman
N.Y. Times News Service

Human-rights leaders attacked Sen. Barbara Boxer's proposal to use the U.S. National Guard to help crack down on illegal immigration at the borders, calling the idea a "militaristic" solution to a human problem.

Boxer, D-Calif., made her proposal last week in a conversation with Attorney General Janet Reno. It followed an earlier proposal by fellow California Democratic Senator Dianne Feinstein to increase financing for the U.S. Border Patrol by imposing a $1 fee for every border crossing.

Meanwhile, a Clinton administration package introduced in the Senate Friday included measures to hire more border patrol agents and purchase high technology surveillance equipment — at a cost of $45 million.

The idea of using the National Guard stirred the most ire among immigration rights advocates. Martha Jimenez, a staff attorney at the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund, said such a move was tantamount to "declaring martial law on the border."

"Barbara Boxer has always been a friend of civil rights," she said, "and we're extremely concerned and disappointed and distressed (that she would) take this kind of position to militarize the border."

MALDEF attorney says move would be tantamount to 'declaring martial law on the border.'

"Last time I checked," Jimenez said, "we were not at war with Mexico."

The measures encourage people to think that "there are hordes coming over and it must be stopped at all costs," Jimenez said. She pledged that MALDEF would become more active in opposing the measures.

With boatloads of Chinese immigrants coming to U.S. shores packed in the holds of smuggling ships, illegal immigration has become a front-burner issue nationwide as well as for California and other border states. But human-rights groups are calling upon the administration to consider the implications of their strategies before they are enacted.

Said Robert Rubin of the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights: "I don't think the legitimate issue of illegal immigration needs to be addressed by such heavy-handed measures."

Many immigrant-rights advocates conceded that increased border patrols are all but inevitable. But they expressed worry that mistreatment of illegal immigrants by border patrol agents will continue. Some of the abuses have been documented in studies by Americas Watch and the American Friends Service Committee.

"The kinds of things we're concerned about are the high-speed chases that have resulted in fatal injuries," said Rubin. "There have been a few shootings.

"I don't think that the Border Patrol has an easy job, yet I do believe that there needs to be adequate training and appropriate oversight to ensure that the pressures of their job do not result in overzealous enforcement actions."

Besides adding border patrol agents, the Clinton administration's proposals, which were introduced in the Senate by Edward Kennedy, D-Mass, call for improved training for agents and a review of civil rights violations at the border.

But none of those measures, Jimenez said, will get at the source of illegal immigration.

"Putting a lot of energies into putting more bodies at the border simply to keep people out, that's like a Band-Aid," she said.

By Jon Nordheimer
N.Y. Times News Service

CAPE MAY, N.J. — The bulletin, carried by telephone hot lines in all 50 states and on an international computer network, arrived like a thunderclap.

"It made the blood race with excitement," said Paul Kerlinger, who helped spread the word.

Within hours, hundreds of people around the nation dropped what they were doing and raced off in cars or headed for airports, praying they could get to Cape May before it was too late.

"It was the most electrifying news in years," said Macklin Smith, a professor of medieval literature at the University of Michigan, who hopped a jet to New Jersey.

The object of all the attention was a visitor to the Jersey Shore, a 10-inch-long blur of gray and white feathers beneath a black cap, listed in bird directories as a whiskered tern (Chlidonias hybridus).

Flitting about in a marshy meadow near the Cape May lighthouse, it closely resembled terns familiar to the region. But the whiskered tern, common in Europe, Africa and Asia, had never been seen in North America. A birdwatcher from Britain who caught the tern in his binoculars before sundown on July 11 couldn't believe his eyes.

It was as if climbers ascending Mount Everest had come across a Central Park pigeon panhandling peanuts at the summit. Not since a rare Arctic bird, a Ross's gull, showed up at a Baltimore sewage treatment plant a few years back had the world of birdwatching been so jolted.

For most of the 20 million or so Americans whose interest in birds goes beyond stocking a backyard feeder, the gentle pleasures of identifying wildfowl by sight and sound are enough of a payoff. In recent years, however, what has traditionally been honored — or mocked — as a lonely but serene pursuit has increasingly set competitive juices flowing.

Those who have the time and money to roam the continent to track down rarely seen species are gaining star quality. Winging It, a publication of the American Birdwatching Association, now ranks the most accomplished birders in the nation by the numbers they claim to have seen or heard.

Among birders, the yearly ratings are anticipated like the Oscars, with a mix of admiration, envy and dismissiveness.

North America has about 850 of the 8,700 bird species in the world, and spotting 700 on this continent puts a birdwatcher into a very exclusive club. Topping 800 is a feat accomplished only by the Babe Ruths and Hank Aarons of birddom.

Smith, currently ranked No. 4 among the top spotters of North American birds, at present has 801 species on his lifetime list, the most recent being a spot-billed duck he spied in the Aleutian Islands of Alaska this spring.

Seeing the whiskered tern in Cape May gives Smith a chance to move ahead of the current No. 3 in the ranks — also listing 801 sightings — once the sighting is officially confirmed, which he said was almost a certainty.

Adding to his pleasure was word that Benton Basham, a Kentucky anesthesiologist who currently ranks No. 1 with 810 sightings, arrived in Cape May too late to see the whiskered tern and when last heard from was slogging after it in a Delaware coastal marsh.

Hundreds volunteer to create Civil War computer list

By Connie Cass
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The first name — Confederate soldier Edwin F. Jemison, killed at age 18 — was punched into a computer Wednesday to launch a database of the estimated 3.5 million Americans who fought in the Civil War.

By early 1996, people who believe their ancestors fought for the blue or the gray should be able to look up their names in the Civil War Soldiers System. Computers at the National Park Service's 28 Civil War sites will be available to access the system.

"It's been estimated that up to 100 million people may be descendants from Civil War soldiers," said John F. Peterson, project manager for the Civil War Soldiers System.

With the database, those people will be able to learn the regiment and battles their ancestors fought in, Peterson said, giving them "a personal connection to a great, historical event."

The original handwritten records, on index cards, are stored at the National Archives, which receives nearly 1,500 inquires each week relating to Civil War records.

By 1996, park visitors should be able to access information about ancestors who fought in America's bloodiest war.

Hundreds of genealogists, history buffs and others have volunteered to use their home computers to type the names onto computer diskettes — donating work that park service officials estimate is worth $4.5 million.

Jemison, a Louisiana soldier who died at Malvern Hill, Va. in 1862, was chosen to begin the database because his photograph is so familiar. The image of his boyish face, staring seriously into the camera from beneath a Confederate cap, has frequently appeared in books and documentaries.

Parks Service Director Roger Kennedy typed Jemison's entry during a press conference at Ford's Theatre, sight of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln.

The Civil War Soldiers System marks a transition from "an obsession with heroes" to "a new kind of history in which the common people who built the place have their role," Kennedy said.

The Civil War Trust, a non-profit historical association, is raising money to pay for computer terminals in the parks.

YOUR PLASMA CAN HELP SAVE A CHILD'S LIFE.

When you donate plasma, you're helping children.
They are burn victims, surgery patients, shock cases. And they are very often children with a medical condition called hemophilia. It's a serious blood clotting disorder that used to shorten hundreds of children's lives every year.
Now thanks to modern medical technology and plasma donors like you, there is hope for the child with hemophilia. When you give plasma, you are supporting new research. You are helping to extend the hemophilic child's expected lifespan. And you are helping the hemophilic child live a more normal, healthier life.
Your plasma can help save a child's life. And for that, we thank you.

'Prokids' measure worthy of support

Secondhand smoke is at the very least a nuisance, and at the very worst a health hazard. So Americans can be grateful that the Environmental Protection Agency announced guidelines the other day on smoking in public buildings. The guidelines, however, are voluntary — which means that it's up to states and localities to make them stick. Some states — among them California, Hawaii, Vermont, North Dakota and Utah — already have regulations on environmental tobacco smoke.

New York might have been on its way to having some intelligent restrictions too, had the state Legislature passed the "Prokids" bill this month. But Senate Majority Leader Ralph Marino seems to have thought the tobacco industry, which was just handed a 17-cent-per-pack tax hike, had taken enough of a hit. The bill, passed overwhelmingly by the Assembly, never made it to the Senate floor.

"Prokids" would prohibit smoking in schools and on school grounds, except during nonschool hours by faculty in a designated smoking room. It also requires separate, enclosed smoking rooms in workplace lounges and cafeterias, and would limit hospital smoking to patients with written authorization from physicians. Smoking in transportation terminals, buses and rest rooms would be banned too, as well as in youth centers, child care facilities, group homes for children, public institutions for children and residential treatment facilities.

When "Prokids" next comes up, possibly as early as this fall, may it go to the Senate floor. The tobacco industry can afford the hit. But nonsmokers, and children in particular, can't afford other people's bad habit.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

Fifty years ago, on Aug. 2, 1943, a U.S. Navy patrol torpedo boat, PT-109, under the command of Lt. John F. Kennedy, sank after being sheared in two by a Japanese destroyer off the Solomon Islands. The survivors managed to swim to an unoccupied island, where they were later rescued. Kennedy, credited with saving at least one of the crew, was acclaimed as a World War II hero.

On this date:

In 1876, frontiersman Wild Bill Hickok was shot from behind and killed while playing poker at a saloon in Deadwood, S.D.

In 1921, opera singer Enrico Caruso died in Naples, Italy.

In 1923, the 29th president of the United States, Warren G. Harding, died in San Francisco.

In 1927, President Coolidge issued a statement to reporters: "I do not choose to run for President in nineteen twenty-eight."

In 1934, German President Paul von Hindenburg died, paving the way for Adolf Hitler's complete takeover.

In 1939, Albert Einstein signed a letter to President Franklin D. Roosevelt urging the United States to begin an atomic weapons research program.

In 1939, President Roosevelt signed the Hatch Act, which prohibited civil service employees from taking an active part in political campaigns.

In 1945, leaders of the United States, the Soviet Union and Britain concluded the Allied conference at Potsdam.

Ten years ago: The U.S. House of Representatives voted, 338-90, to designate the third Monday in January a federal holiday in honor of civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Five years ago: Despite previous threats of a veto, President Reagan said he would reluctantly allow a plant-closing notification bill to become law, accusing Democrats of "political shenanigans."

One year ago: The Bush campaign, accused by Bill Clinton of mudslinging, responded with a vitriolic press release that referred to "sniveling hypocritical Democrats," among other things. President Bush later disavowed the release.

JACK ANDERSON

No one solution to better border patrol

WASHINGTON — Don Teeple works one of the loneliest graveyard shifts in government.

Anderson

During our trip to the Rio Grande Valley in Texas last year, we found Teeple working out of a green and black camouflaged Bronco and keeping his eyes trained on a television monitor for signs of trouble: black dots of heat glowing against a white monitor that can sometimes represent nothing more than a rabbit. But usually it is a sign of illegal immigrants or armed drug smugglers.

Teeple's job was to operate the $2.5 million Improved Image Enhancement Vehicle. Until recently, he said he was the only Border Patrol agent to master this bundle of high-tech, man-hunting equipment. Teeple is only one soldier, manning one battle station in the Border Patrol's increasingly unwinnable war against illegal immigration and drugs.

While patrolling the border has firmly entered the computer age, a 1991 report by the General Accounting Office found that more than half of the Border Patrol's 3,100 vehicles, many of which are used along the Rio Grande in Texas, are in dire need of replacement. The General Accounting Office says that shoddy equipment has cut dramatically into enforcement time: The total work time border agents spend enforcing immigration and drug laws has decreased from 71 percent in 1987 to about 60 percent last year.

President Clinton last week turned decidedly hawkish on regaining control of the borders, and has proposed spending an additional $172.5 million to battle illegal immigration. "We cannot and will not surrender our border to those who wish to exploit our history of compassion and justice," he said.

Clinton vowed to escalate the war against illegal immigration, but he's relying on a police force that will remain understaffed, underpaid and overwhelmed no matter how much is added to the budget. Even if Clinton lives up to his promise of adding 600 new border guards, it can hardly plug a hole in a nearly 2,000 mile border. The Border Patrol deals with armed smugglers, drug lords and poor migrant families seeking a better life. Part of the sense of futility flows from the kaleidoscope of scenes and situations, and the intermingling of illegal trafficking of aliens and drugs.

Increasingly, drug smugglers rope illegal aliens into doing runs across the border, making it difficult to distinguish between hardened smugglers and poor immigrants. "It's an easy way for the dopers to get narcotics across without getting caught," Joe De La Cruz, head of the Laredo Border Patrol anti-smuggling unit, told our associate Dean Boyd. Organizations that once smuggled only people for profit are expanding into narcotics smuggling. Called "mules," these illegals usually have no notion who provided the cargo, and thus are little threat to the smugglers if they are apprehended by authorities.

For Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, the answers lies less in law enforcement than in economics. "We could put a million border patrolmen standing side by side along the border and still not solve the immigration problem," Gramm says. "Solving the immigration problem on America's southern border depends on creating an economic environment in Mexico in which people can afford to stay home. There is no force on earth that's going to stop a starving Mexican from coming across our border if here in the U.S. he can get a job and support his family."

See Spot weep for childen's world of past

Baker

They look unhappy because of the thing George has in his hand. Do you know what the thing is?

No, the thing is not an Uzi. No, the thing is not a machete. Look closely at the thing. Look and see Asbury Park. Look and see the Passaic River. Who knows what the thing is?

That's right. The thing is New Jersey.

See George poke New Jersey in the governor's ribs. See George point New Jersey at the mayor's head. Is it not fun to poke New Jersey in a governor's ribs? Is it not fun to point New Jersey at a mayor's head?

Yes, it is fun. That is why George is smiling. Later the governor and the mayor will give George all your money. Then George will be very happy.

What! You say you will not be happy? You will be cross? You will be cross because the governor and the mayor have given George all your money?

What selfish children you are. Do you not know that George lets his baseball team play in your home town? Suppose George told his baseball team to play in some other home town. Then you would be ashamed, would you not?

Do you remember Jane? Do you remember Sally? Do you remember when you played with them? That was long ago. Remember?

That was before we knew that Jane and Sally were bad for children. That was before we knew that Dick was bad for children too. That was before we knew that you were also bad for children, Spot.

Yes, Spot, you too were bad for children. The other animals all said that having you as Jane and Sally's only animal friend was doggist. Children grew up never knowing they could have a squirrel for a friend. Or a ferret. Or a black Angus bull.

This is why we have not seen you at school in a long time. Do you remember when you jumped so the children could see what a jump looked like when their book said, "See Spot jump"?

Now jumping makes the school children nervous. Look and see how nervous Jane is. Do you know what the thing in her hand is? No, Spot, no. The thing is not New Jersey. The thing is an Uzi.

Oh, Spot, look! Look and see Sally. Look and see the thing in Sally's hand. Is the thing not an Uzi? It is sure to be an Uzi. An Uzi is the weapon of choice among school children.

See Jane's Uzi shoot bullets. Look at Sally. See Sally's Uzi shoot bullets. Look, Spot, look. Jane's Uzi is shooting at Sally. Sally's Uzi is shooting at Jane.

Do you think they are arguing about who is entitled to sell drugs here where their mothers were so happy just to look and see you, Spot, jump?

Don't argue with me, Spot, when bullets are flying! I'm telling you these kids are — oh, good Lord, no, no!

Look, Spot, look. Look and see Dick riddled. Dick has been caught in the line of fire. Poor Dick. Was Dick a straight A student who worked tirelessly to help the poor? Yes, Spot, yes. People caught in the line of fire usually are. Poor Dick. Weep, Spot, weep. Look and weep for Dick and Jane and Sally.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

News reporters lengthen stories with 'what-ifs'

Like a lot of other people I sat in front of my television not long ago and watched the Great Fire of '93 at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium.

Grizzard

It is when there is a breaking local story like this one that television news really shows us it knows how to roll up its sleeves and go after it.

Talk about being on the cutting edge of journalism. The first thing the stations had to do was let us know what a great job they were doing.

"We want to thank (insert name) for the great job he or she has done covering this breaking local story live out there at the stadium," the anchor desks continued to say during the fire and after it.

See, the rest of us didn't know what a great job (insert name) was doing.

The guy I saw simply said something like, "Look, there's a fire," and the camera-person pointed a camera at it and we saw a fire.

In my mind doing a great job covering a fire would have been something like the guy on the scene when the Hindenburg burst into flames and getting live interviews with the pilots a few seconds after the big balloon hit the ground.

But, judging from the in-house congratulations, I suppose there will be a round of Peabodys handed out for the Great Fire coverage.

Another station did do a terrific job of interviewing children who had seen the fire, however.

"There was a fire," one explained.

What is it about being on television that makes, not only teenagers, but adults as well, want to act like idiots? I think it's the waves that are being bounced off those satellites during television transmissions.

They get into people's brains and they think if they act idiotic enough their mothers will see them and think they are cute or somebody will give them a job with local TV news.

The helicopter shots were dramatic. In one helicopter shot from above the stadium, I saw another helicopter.

There are so many news helicopters these days I worry about one running into another one.

Said a television helicopter pilot after his report, "There are helicopters all over out here. I think I'll leave." He deserves some sort of award for obviously being one of the most intelligent persons on the scene.

I don't remember who said this, but either a reporter or a politician offered, "I think the fire started in booth number J."

Number J?

I think some of the "what-ifs" were on target, too. What if the stadium had been full? What if the fire department couldn't have found a place to park?

A satellite fell to earth somewhere several years ago and a local television station did a report on "What if a satellite fell on Atlanta?"

You've got to cover "what-ifs" in a news story. The papers did it, too, but I thought the "what if broadcaster Don Sutton's hair had caught on fire?" angle was a little too much.

And this thing, as far as television is concerned, is far from over. Channel 11 says Channel 2 stole its signal during the coverage.

"They didn't have a camera in position and it was an act of desperation," said the program director of Channel 2, adding, "They got their butt kicked and it was a sort of cheap shot."

Channel 11 is threatening to send Channel 2 a nasty letter from its attorney.

What if this thing broke out into an all-out war and Channel 11 and Channel 2 burned each other down?

What if the Braves' Fred McGriff hadn't hit that home run after the fire was put out? What if the Giants' Bobby Bond's earlobe becomes infected from that jewelry store hanging off it and he can't play, and the Braves, starting from the Great Fire, did win the 1993 pennant after all?

Channel 5 would probably take credit for it all, that's what.

Local drill team's Golden Girls strut to national competition

Staff report

It's off to Sea World in Orlando, Fla., and a chance for Midland High School's Golden Girls Drill Team to strut their stuff in a national competition.

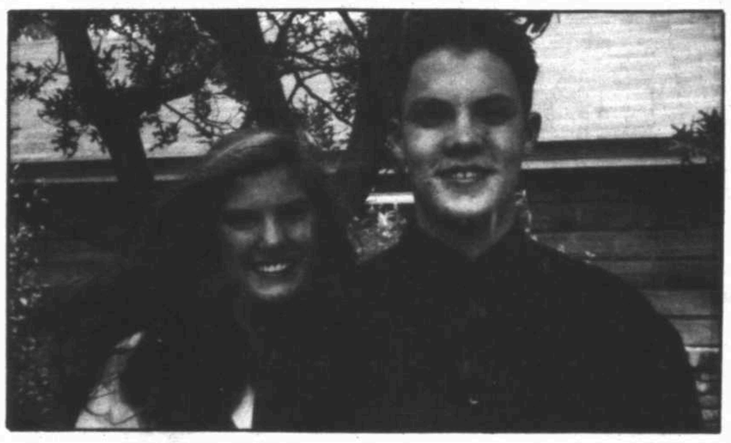

The drill team, under the direction of Melba Linda Ramirez, recently qualified to compete in the 1994 National Dance Team Championship in Orlando.

The team qualified for the national competition at the recent Universal Dance Association camp at Angelo State University in San Angelo.

The Golden Girls won first place for home routine, a superior trophy for performance for camp routines (which qualified them for the national contest), drill down trophy for top team and overall spirit stick.

Julie Lumpkin also received a first-place trophy for her performance in the drill down contest. Gina Perezt received a second runner up ribbon in the same competition.

Gina also was selected to the UDA's All Star Dance Team that will perform in the Parade de Montmartre in Paris, France, during New Year's.

Students gain political experience in national Junior Statesmen school

Two local high school students were the first Midlanders to participate in the Junior Statesman Summer School.

Sheridan Gilkerson and Matthew Stahlbaum, both Midland High School students, recently attended the program that allowed them to witness politics and government in action.

Sheridan attended Stanford University and Matthew attended Yale, where they were able to study college-level government.

Both students helped raise funds to attend the programs. They were selected based on academic achievements, a personal essay, and recommendations from their principal.

MHS Principal Jane Carrens, in a letter or recommendation, wrote that both students had "demonstrated the type of commitment to scholarship and research necessary for the supercharged environment this program represents."

The Junior Statesmen program included a systematic introduction to American government and politics, high-level speakers, and student debates on current congressional issues.

Matthew and Sheridan also have participated in the MHS Model Organization of American States.

Matthew is a member of the Junior Classical League, D-FY-IT (Drug Free Youth in Texas), and and has earned several academic letters.

Sheridan is a member of POSSE (Pursuit of Spirit and Service Excellence), Fellowship of Christian Athletes, D-FY-IT, National Honor Society, and Who's Who Among American High School Students. She has earned various academic awards.

DEAR ABBY

Lie can be kindness when love life at stake

by Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: With all due respect, I think you should reconsider your advice to "No Name or Town," whose husband insisted on knowing how he compared with his wife's former lovers.

Van Buren

You said, "Tell him that he's the greatest — he'll believe you and God will forgive you." In other words, tell a lie in order to keep the peace. (She said she had no intention of telling him the truth — indicating that her husband wasn't the greatest.)

What should she do next? Fake orgasms? Deception is injurious to any state of health — be it mental, emotional, or the health of a marriage.

Abby, consider a different scenario. She turns the tables and starts asking hubby about HIS past lovers. (She had said that neither of them was a virgin when they married.) She should let him know how it feels to be quizzed. Perhaps the worst that could happen is that they would both open up, and together they would enrich their marriage by knowing what truly pleases the other. — QUESTIONING

DEAR QUESTIONING: A couple, in order to "open up" and learn what truly pleases the other, would be better served if they consulted a sex therapist and/or a marriage counselor.

Hubby's ego needs constant reassuring or he would not keep nagging his wife to tell him how his lovemaking compares with her former lovers. (To tell him the truth would emasculate him.)

There are times when a kind lie is better than a cruel truth.

DEAR ABBY: That letter from "No Name or Town" really hit home with me. While dating my second — and definitely last — husband, I made what could have been a horrible mistake by telling him in vague terms about some premarital experiences I had. He seemed amused and intrigued.

After we were married, he would occasionally "tease" me about my former lovers, but I noticed a bitter edge creeping into his tone. After a number of these little zingers, I realized that he was concerned about his OWN performance. Then I told him with absolute honesty, "I wish I'd been a virgin for you, but no one has ever satisfied me as often or fully as you do; you must not realize how much it hurts me to be reminded of my past mistakes."

But I believe what really clinched it was the baldest truth (I swear) of all: "Darling," I said, "don't you understand that all the time I was looking for you?"

Once I said that, with tears in his eyes, he smothered me with kisses — and the subject never came up again. — ALSO NAMELESS IN SOME OTHER TOWN

P.S. My husband is a minister; please do not reveal my identity.

DEAR NAMELESS: Your letter is in the shredder. Trust me.

DEAR READERS: I recently published a lovely poem about surviving the loss of a spouse. It was titled "One or the Other." The person who submitted it did not know the name of the author.

I just received a letter from Philip Guest advising me that the author is his uncle, Edgar A. Guest, who wrote the poem in 1945 shortly after the death of his beloved wife, Nellie.

For everything you need to know about wedding planning, order "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

'Soldier's soldier' receives final salute at Arlington Cemetery

By Richard Keil
Associated Press writer

ARLINGTON, Va. — Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, the heroic commander who led his troops into battle in every theater of World War II and in Korea, was remembered as a "soldier's soldier" as he was laid to rest over the weekend at Arlington National Cemetery.

"The spirit of every American soldier, past and present, is with us today," said Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"More than anything else, Matthew Ridgway was a soldier's soldier," Powell said.

Ridgway, one of the nation's foremost military figures, died July 26 at the age of 98. He led elite paratroops in the European theater during World War II, was the U.N. commander in Korea, and capped his career as Army chief of staff.

Among the mourners who joined Powell alongside Ridgway's grave on a knoll beneath the Tomb of the Unknowns were Defense Secretary Les Aspin and Sens. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.

Army Chaplain Reese M. Hutcheson recalled that Ridgway "was unafraid to take on the most fearsome assignments."

"As a champion of liberty, he demonstrated the kind of courage that will always be an example," Hutcheson said.

Following the service, the 3rd U.S. Infantry Gun Platoon fired a 17-gun salute, and a U.S. Army firing party followed with three volleys. A bugler played Taps as the American flag, held over the urn containing Ridgway's ashes, was folded and presented to the general's widow, Penny.

During World War II, Ridgway, graduate of 'The Point,' led famous 82nd Airborne Division in drops over North Africa, Sicily, France (D-Day), Germany. He later fought side-by-side with troops in Korea.

A unit of the Army's 82nd Airborne, the division with which Ridgway first gained fame, stood at attention throughout the ceremony.

Ridgway, a West Point graduate, took command of the Army's 82nd in 1942 and soon found himself leading the division into paratroop training. He led his troops in North Africa in April 1943, and then on a highly successful drop into enemy-occupied western Sicily three months later.

He also jumped with his men in the middle of the night behind German lines in the earliest stages of the massive D-Day raid of Normandy on June 6, 1944.

After landing in a cow pasture and helping mark landing zones for Allied supply planes, Ridgway's troops fought in D-Day skirmishes and for 32 consecutive days after, suffering 5,245 casualties, including 46 of every 100 infantrymen.

Just before Christmas, 1950, Ridgway was sent to Korea to replace Walton H. Walker as commanding general of the 8th Army. He took over a dispirited troops that had just spent a month in retreat after Red China's entry into the war.

But three months later, a newly-aggressive Army had pushed the Chinese back above the 38th parallel, the border between North and South Korea.

"There, he brought pride back to the troops of a routed army," Powell said. "He restored their dignity."

It was in Korea that Ridgway, famous among military leaders for fighting alongside his men, earned another trademark — wearing a grenade on his right shoulder strap.

"I'd learned long before in Europe that a man with a grenade in his hand can often blast his way out of a tight spot," Ridgway said.

President Truman made him supreme commander in the Far East later that year, and a year later he was ordered to Europe to relieve Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Ranchers say higher fees will hurt business

MOUNTAINAIR, N.M. (AP) — Rancher Oliver "Sato" Lee worries that higher grazing fees could put him and his way of life out of business.

Lee, who has been ranching for more than 30 years, says he expects a grazing fee increase, but is concerned that if it goes up too much, smaller ranches will die.

"We can operate depending on how high fees go," he said while inspecting one of several water tanks on his cattle ranch. "I think people can stand an increase of 40 to 50 cents a month. If it goes higher, many can operate, but they'll have to cut back herds and try to make up for the losses by not putting so much money into improvements."

Lee is among thousands of ranchers throughout the West who are anticipating the federal government will impose higher fees for them to graze their cattle on public lands.

Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt, who has held hearings in five Western states, is expected to release his plan soon for raising the fees.

A proposed series of fee schedules would increase the current fee, $1.86 per cow and calf per month, to fees based on dollar amounts ranging from $3.12 to $10.26 per animal, per month.

However, Interior Department spokesman Jay Zeigler says the $10.26 figure already has been ruled out as too high, given the economics of western ranching.

Environmentalists believe the fee should be as much as eight times more than the current fee ranchers pay to run their cattle on public land managed by the BLM and U.S. Forest Service.

"We are pushing higher grazing fees because ranchers are getting major subsidies," says Jim Norton, head of The Wilderness Society in Arizona and New Mexico.

U.S. agents ban entry of Mexican horses on border

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department has banned the entry of horses, mules and donkeys into the United States from Mexico because of a reported outbreak of Venezuelan equine encephalitis there.

The department also urged horse owners in border states to vaccinate their animals against the incurable and possibly fatal disease, which last broke out in Mexico in 1973.

The ban started July 23, a day after investigators isolated the virus in samples taken from horses in Chiapas in southern Mexico. There have been no reports of any infected horses entering this country.

"We believe closing the border is the most effective precautionary measure we can take to protect the United States from this disease until we have thoroughly evaluated the situation in Mexico," said Billy G. Johnson, deputy administrator of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

The disease is highly infectious among equines and other animal species. Spread by mosquitoes, it can cause flu-like symptoms, and in rare cases death, in humans. There is no vaccine for humans.

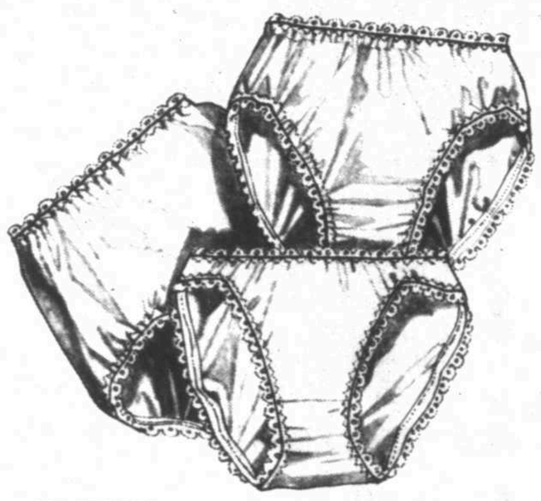

Symptoms among horses and other equines include drowsiness, depression, lack of coordination and other nervous system disorders.

The department says Mexican officials have reported 92 horses have shown signs of the disease and 42 appeared to have died from the disease in Chiapas.

The department says the only outbreak of the disease occurred in 1971 in southern Texas. Hundreds of horses died and many people were hospitalized.

E-mail faxes

Thanks to the volunteer efforts of a group of computer network designers, the network of networks known as Internet now permits users to send an e-mail message to be printed out on fax machines at a growing number of sites around the world.

Because transmission charges on the Internet are minimal compared with those of the long-distance phone calls normally used for faxes, the system is a cheap way to send faxes across the country or around the world.

To use the system, begun this month as an experiment in remote printing, computer mail users include a fax telephone number in the address portion of their message. The message, which may include both text and graphics, will then be automatically routed to a site that has agreed to serve a local geographic "cell" for delivery of the fax message.

No surprise here

Forget the lip service, forget the pat on the head. The size of your paycheck is what counts. That's the conclusion the temporary help firm Accountemps arrived at after asking 150 executives what yardsticks employees use to measure their professional success. Nearly 60 percent said salary, while 26 percent said job satisfaction, 12 percent said job title and 3 percent said fringe benefits and perks.

Fries with that

It's not easy to find workers who stay cool during the lunch rush and keep those burgers moving to harried patrons. So the burly, short-sleeves founder of Wendy's, seen regularly chomping sandwiches in television commercials, has written a book. Dave Thomas didn't wax prosaic over his daughter's pigtails or failed recipes for special sauce. "Dave's Way" tells bosses his views on how to hire good people and what makes a good worker.

Filthy rich fund

More than 4,000 mutual funds carry names that have as much pizazz as a prospectus. Mutual fund executives are filling up conferences on how to distinguish their funds with new names. One such gathering, "Building Brand Identity for Mutual Funds" sponsored by the New York-based Institute for International Research, sold out one session in June and is arranging an encore for October. The conference's seminars include: "Identify your differential advantage," "Rebuild your image and change market perceptions," "Extend your franchise to new products."

Should you offer to be laid off?

By Mary Rowland
N.Y. Times News Service

Here's yet another change on the employment landscape: If you play your cards right, you may be able to walk into your employer's office, negotiate a fat severance package to start a business or a second career and exit with company management viewing you as a loyalist.

"Five years ago, I wouldn't have been able to understand how anybody could do that," said Craig E. Schneier, a management consultant in Princeton, N.J. "These days, it is entirely reasonable and even appropriate in some situations."

Because corporate America is going through yet another round of staff reductions, a volunteer, even if a valued employee, may be welcomed.

"There are a lot of companies right now where there are opportunities to negotiate severance, like I.B.M., General Foods, Honeywell," said Dale Winston, president of Battalia Winston International, a New York recruiting firm. "It has to do with a corporate policy where they want to reduce their head count."

How should you proceed? Delicately.

First, of course, you must be employed by a company that intends to downsize, like Procter & Gamble, which announced in June that it would cut 10,000 jobs. "If you feel that your job may be in jeopardy, I think you have enormous potential upside if you strike first," Schneier said. "A lot of

HOW THEY DO IT

Jumping From Student to Entrepreneur

Bill Neely, 22, of Silver Spring, Md., founded B.G. Graphics in 1990 as a sophomore at Howard University. "My father was doing a seminar and he needed a brochure," Neely said. "He took it to someone, and it didn't look that good. I looked at it and I said, 'Dad, I could do that.' So he let me do that brochure."

He sketched, doodled and worked on computers at a lab at Howard, one at his part-time job and one at a friend's house. For less than eight hours' work, he earned $150.

He then designed a business card and solicited business from neighbors, church members and friends.

"One of my biggest breaks was designing orientation information packets for Howard University. Having that in my portfolio opened some other doors for me," Neely said. The biggest door was that of the Congressional Black Caucus. His company produced graphics for its annual Legislative Weekend in 1992. "It wasn't major work for them, but for me, it was pretty major."

A Design Business Blossoms

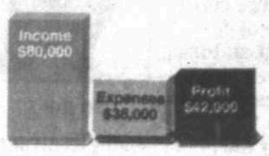

1990 While living at home, Neely bought a Macintosh IIsi computer ($2,700) and a Hewlett-Packard laser printer ($1,500) using money from a full scholarship that would have gone for room and board. By working about 15 hours a week out of his parents' basement, he made nearly $8,000 by the end of 1990.

Smaller jobs, like one-page résumés, cost $25 to $30, including 20 copies. A flier cost $30 to $1,000, not including printing costs. His concept development fee ranged from $30 to $750, and his production rate was $45 an hour.

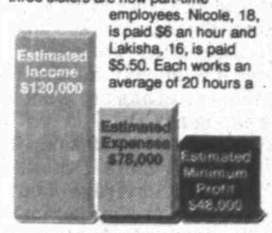

1991 Gross income was close to $26,000, with a profit of $8,600. Among his expenses were computer hardware and software, three business phone lines (including one for his fax machine) and a beeper. He estimated that working out of his parents' basement saved him at least $1,200 a month.

1992 Neely spent about $12,000 for a more powerful computer system — a Macintosh Quadra 700, DuoDoc 230, a 20-inch color monitor, a color scanner and external hard drives. The company grossed about $80,000, and net income was $42,000.

1993 Neely, who graduated in May, expects B.G. Graphics to gross about $120,000 this year, with at least a 40 percent profit margin. Two of his three sisters are now part-time employees. Nicole, 18, is paid $6 an hour and Lakisha, 16, is paid $5.50. Each works an average of 20 hours a

Work vs. Family: Meeting both needs

■ Critics say new law bypasses the needy and hurts small employers.

By Lisa Genasci
AP Business Writer

Sandra Brownsey, a teacher in Greenwood Lake, N.Y., gave birth in May and dreaded the prospect of returning to work come September when the school year begins. She wanted more time off to nurse her newborn.

Now, under the Family and Medical Leave Act, Brownsey can take an additional 12 weeks unpaid leave, keep her health insurance and return to her old job.

"I don't have to spend the summer worrying about child care," Brownsey says. "This will allow me more time to enjoy my baby."

Without the extra time off, Brownsey says, she might have considered quitting.

Brownsey clearly is one of the beneficiaries of the new federal law, which takes effect Aug. 5. But the legislation doesn't just apply to women and doesn't just apply to the birth of a child.

It extends to all employees of companies with 50 or more workers, allowing them leave after an adoption, to care for a seriously ill family member, or if their own health condition makes them unable to perform their jobs.

A rare bird in the hand

By Mary Rowland
N.Y. Times News Service

Companies are making efforts to put their stock in the hands of more employees and to urge — or even require — employees to hold onto it. The belief is that broad-based stock ownership will benefit a company by tying the fortunes of its employees to that of the employer.

In 1989, Pepsico became one of the first companies to introduce a broad-based stock option plan, offering options to 100,000 employees, virtually all its full-time workers.

Last January, the Union Carbide Corp. established a program that requires managers to hold a certain amount of its stock.

The Walgreen Co. has gone a step further by creating a plan that ties together crucial elements of these two types of programs. Its version may well become a model for other stock compensation plans for several reasons.

First, the drugstore company requires employees to make a commitment to buy company stock before granting them options. Second, the stock plan gets employees to maintain ownership in the company. And third, eligible employees appear to be enthusiastic about the plan.

Management expected about half of the 8,000 eligible employees to participate; 83 percent actually did.

Walgreen, which employs 55,000, decided to sweeten its benefits package to attract and keep key people in a business that it expects to become increasingly competitive in the next decade.

John A. Rubino, senior vice president of human resources at the Deerfield, Ill.-based chain, said, "One of the key elements to success is to make certain you have on deck the very best pharmacists and store managers in the business."

The stock option program, part of an enriched benefits package, was introduced in October. It permits eligible employees, those who have been store managers or pharmacists for at least two years and some corporate employees, to receive two stock options for every Walgreen share purchased.

The program is set up with four-year cycles, beginning in 1992. Once in each

Getting the credit card advantage

Staff report

If you're like many Americans, you may be carrying around too many credit cards — and paying interest rates on them that are far too high. Fortunately, credit card interest rates are dropping — and some banks now have special deals on their credit cards that it really pays to check out.

For example, one leading financial institution, Commerce Bank, now has a money-saving Mastercard called Commerce Advantage. It has a super low 9.6 percent variable APR, 25-day interest-free period — and only a $39 annual fee.

To help pay off your other credit card balances faster, you can transfer them to the Commerce Advantage and save on your interest charges with a bonus rate of 6.9 percent APR through your September billing statement. Unlike other cards, there are no cash advance fees — and after your September statement, unpaid transferred balances will continue at a low variable APR for purchases, currently 9.6 percent.

If you're ever low on cash, you can stop by an automated teller machine and get a quick cash advance on your card. You can get cash advances at ATMs when you go on vacation — and save money at the low 6.9 percent APR. Then, after your September billing cycle, your unpaid balances and new cash advances will continue to be a good value at a low variable APR, currently only 16.9 percent — still lower than many other credit cards.

If you pay off your balance each month, Special Connections may be the best card for you. There's no annual fee and at 13.4 percent variable APR, it's still a lower rate than many cards you may be carrying. Plus, Special Connections is a Mastercard/VISA and ATM card in one, for instant cash access to your Commerce Bank checking or money market account.

For more information or to apply for the Commerce Advantage card, call 1 800-453-2265.

A menu of benefits

Q. I've heard "cafeteria plan" used in connection with employee benefits. What is it?
Gunter Haimann, Jamesburg, N.J.

A. Cafeteria plans are employer-sponsored benefit plans that give tax advantages to employees by allowing them to choose between receiving taxable benefits like cash or tax-free benefits like health insurance. Its name comes from Section 125 of the Internal Revenue Code, which has authorized these plans since 1978.

"The sole breadwinner with dependents, the single employee, the person nearing retirement all have different benefit needs," said Michael J. Langan of Towers Perrin, the consulting firm. "Some want more life insurance, others more health insurance and others more disability protection."

A cafeteria plan allows an employee to pick from a menu of benefits and pay for them with pretax salary dollars. As a result, an employee's contribution may stretch 30 to 40 percent further than if it was made after taxes were withheld — depending on the individual's tax rate.

But health-care changes proposed in Washington could affect cafeteria plans, especially if the tax treatment of benefits is changed to make some of them taxable to employees or nondeductible by employers.

Convertible bonds

Q. How can I calculate the break-even time of a convertible bond?
Hyman Dudakoff, Brooklyn

A. The break-even period refers to the time required for the convertible's current yield advantage to recapture the conversion premium. Break-even analysis is one of several means of evaluating the relative attractiveness of convertible securities.

"Convertible security holders usually pay a premium over conversion value for the ability to participate in the appreciation in the underlying stock, while limiting downside risk," said John Georgantas, convertible securities analyst for Kidder, Peabody & Co.

There are limitations to break-even analysis, though, since it assumes such factors as unchanged interest rates and a static level of common dividends over the investment period.

In addition, the analysis does not consider either the risks associated with the issuer's credit quality or the appreciation potential in the underlying stock price.

Credit Card criteria

Q. What criteria do banks use for evaluating credit card applications?
Abe Dubrowsky, West Palm Beach, Fla.

A. Every bank has its own guidelines. But a big consideration for most banks is how well the applicant has handled credit. Usually people establish credit elsewhere before applying for a credit card.

"We want to see some depth of credit experience," said Cynthia A. Graham, president of Barnett Card Services Corp. "We expect applicants to show that they can handle several different creditors and have never filed for bankruptcy."

Banks are also interested in an applicant's current obligations, income and employment history.

'Soldier's soldier' receives final salute at Arlington Cemetery

By Richard Keil

ARLINGTON, Va. — Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, the heroic commander who led his troops into battle in every theater of World War II and in Korea, was remembered as a "soldier's soldier" as he was laid to rest over the weekend at Arlington National Cemetery.

CPA seminar

Van Pearcy, Midland representative for Edward D. Jones & Co. will host a one hour continuing professional education seminar for local tax professionals entitled "Charitable Planning with Charitable Remainder Trusts."

The seminar will be offered from 4 to 5 p.m. at Pearcy's office, 2020 W. Cuthbert.

Guest speaker will be Paul Brooks, president and co-founder of Renaissance Inc.

E-mail faxes

Thanks to the volunteer efforts of a group of computer network designers, the network of networks known as Internet now permits users to send an e-mail message to be printed out on fax machines at a growing number of sites around the world.

Because transmission charges on the Internet are minimal compared with those of the long-distance phone calls normally used for faxes, the system is a cheap way to send faxes across the country or around the world.

To use the system, begun this month as an experiment in remote printing, computer mail users include a fax telephone number in the address portion of their message. The message, which may include both text and graphics, will then be automatically routed to a site that has agreed to serve a local geographic "cell" for delivery of the fax message.

No surprise here

Forget the lip service, forget the pat on the head. The size of your paycheck is what counts. That's the conclusion the temporary help firm Accountemps arrived at after asking 150 executives what yardsticks employees use to measure their professional success. Nearly 60 percent said salary, while 26 percent said job satisfaction, 12 percent said job title and 3 percent said fringe benefits and perks.

Fries with that

It's not easy to find workers who stay cool during the lunch rush and keep those burgers moving to harried patrons. So the burly, short-sleeves founder of Wendy's, seen regularly chomping sandwiches in television commercials, has written a book. Dave Thomas didn't wax prosaic over his daughter's pigtails or failed recipes for special sauce. "Dave's Way" tells bosses his views on how to hire good people and what makes a good worker.

Filthy rich fund

More than 4,000 mutual funds carry names that have as much pizazz as a prospectus. Mutual fund executives are filling up conferences on how to distinguish their funds with new names. One such gathering, "Building Brand Identity for Mutual Funds" sponsored by the New York-based Institute for International Research, sold out one session in June and is arranging an encore for October. The conference's seminars include: "Identify your differential advantage," "Rebuild your image and change market perceptions," "Extend your franchise to new products."

Should you offer to be laid off?

N.Y. Times News Service

Here's yet another change on the employment landscape: If you play your cards right, you may be able to walk into your employer's office, negotiate a fat severance package to start a business or a second career and exit with company management viewing you as a loyalist.

"Five years ago, I wouldn't have been able to understand how anybody could do that," said Craig E. Schneier, a management consultant in Princeton, N.J. "These days, it is entirely reasonable and even appropriate in some situations."

Because corporate America is going through yet another round of staff reductions, a volunteer, even if a valued employee, may be welcomed.

"There are a lot of companies right now where there are opportunities to negotiate severance, like I.B.M., General Foods, Honeywell," said Dale Winston, president of Battalia Winston International, a New York recruiting firm. "It has to do with a corporate policy where they want to reduce their head count."

How should you proceed? Delicately.

First, of course, you must be employed by a company that intends to downsize, like Procter & Gamble, which announced in June that it would cut 10,000 jobs. "If you feel that your job may be in jeopardy, I think you have enormous potential upside if you strike first," Schneier said. "A lot of

HOW THEY DO IT

Jumping From Student to Entrepreneur

Bill Neely, 22, of Silver Spring, Md., founded B.G. Graphics in 1990 as a sophomore at Howard University. "My father was doing a seminar and he needed a brochure," Neely said. "He took it to someone, and it didn't look that good. I looked at it and I said, 'Dad, I could do that.' So he let me do that brochure."

He sketched, doodled and worked on computers at a lab at Howard, one at his part-time job and one at a friend's house. For less than eight hours' work, he earned $150.

He then designed a business card and solicited business from neighbors, church members and friends.

"One of my biggest breaks was designing orientation information packets for Howard University. Having that in my portfolio opened some other doors for me," Neely said. The biggest door was that of the Congressional Black Caucus. His company produced graphics for its annual Legislative Weekend in 1992. "It wasn't major work for them, but for me, it was pretty major."

A Design Business Blossoms

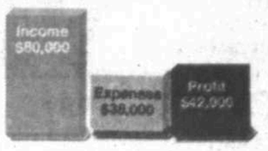

1990 While living at home, Neely bought a Macintosh IIsi computer ($2,700) and a Hewlett-Packard laser printer ($1,500) using money from a full scholarship that would have gone for room and board. By working about 15 hours a week out of his parents' basement, he made nearly $8,000 by the end of 1990.

Smaller jobs, like one-page résumés, cost $25 to $30, including 20 copies. A flier cost $30 to $1,000, not including printing costs. His concept development fee ranged from $30 to $750, and his production rate was $45 an hour.

1991 Gross income was close to $26,000, with a profit of $8,600. Among his expenses were computer hardware and software, three business phone lines (including one for his fax machine) and a beeper. He estimated that working out of his parents' basement saved him at least $1,200 a month.

1992 Neely spent about $12,000 for a more powerful computer system — a Macintosh Quadra 700, DuoDoc 230, a 20-inch color monitor, a color scanner and external hard drives. The company grossed about $80,000, and net income was $42,000.

1993 Neely, who graduated in May, expects B.G. Graphics to gross about $120,000 this year, with at least a 40 percent profit margin. Two of his three sisters are now part-time employees. Nicole, 18, is paid $6 an hour and Lakisha, 16, is paid $5.50. Each works an average of 20 hours a

Work vs. Family: Meeting both needs

■ Critics say new law bypasses the needy and hurts small employers.

By Lisa Genasci
AP Business Writer

Sandra Brownsey, a teacher in Greenwood Lake, N.Y., gave birth in May and dreaded the prospect of returning to work come September when the school year begins. She wanted more time off to nurse her newborn.

Now, under the Family and Medical Leave Act, Brownsey can take an additional 12 weeks unpaid leave, keep her health insurance and return to her old job.

"I don't have to spend the summer worrying about child care," Brownsey says. "This will allow me more time to enjoy my baby."

Without the extra time off, Brownsey says, she might have considered quitting.

Brownsey clearly is one of the beneficiaries of the new federal law, which takes effect Aug. 5. But the legislation doesn't just apply to women and doesn't just apply to the birth of a child.

It extends to all employees of companies with 50 or more workers, allowing them leave after an adoption, to care for a seriously ill family member, or if their own health condition makes them unable to perform their jobs.

A rare bird in the hand

By Mary Rowland
N.Y. Times News Service

Companies are making efforts to put their stock in the hands of more employees and to urge — or even require — employees to hold onto it. The belief is that broad-based stock ownership will benefit a company by tying the fortunes of its employees to that of the employer.

In 1989, Pepsico became one of the first companies to introduce a broad-based stock option plan, offering options to 100,000 employees, virtually all its full-time workers.

Last January, the Union Carbide Corp. established a program that requires managers to hold a certain amount of its stock.

The Walgreen Co. has gone a step further by creating a plan that ties together crucial elements of these two types of programs. Its version may well become a model for other stock compensation plans for several reasons.

First, the drugstore company requires employees to make a commitment to buy company stock before granting them options. Second, the stock plan gets employees to maintain ownership in the company. And third, eligible employees appear to be enthusiastic about the plan.

Management expected about half of the 8,000 eligible employees to participate; 83 percent actually did.

Walgreen, which employs 55,000, decided to sweeten its benefits package to attract and keep key people in a business that it expects to become increasingly competitive in the next decade.

John A. Rubino, senior vice president of human resources at the Deerfield, Ill.-based chain, said, "One of the key elements to success is to make certain you have on deck the very best pharmacists and store managers in the business."

The stock option program, part of an enriched benefits package, was introduced in October. It permits eligible employees, those who have been store managers or pharmacists for at least two years and some corporate employees, to receive two stock options for every Walgreen share purchased.

The program is set up with four-year cycles, beginning in 1992. Once in each

Getting the credit card advantage

Staff report

If you're like many Americans, you may be carrying around too many credit cards — and paying interest rates on them that are far too high. Fortunately, credit card interest rates are dropping — and some banks now have special deals on their credit cards that it really pays to check out.

For example, one leading financial institution, Commerce Bank, now has a money-saving Mastercard called Commerce Advantage. It has a super low 9.6 percent variable APR, 25-day interest-free period — and only a $39 annual fee.

To help pay off your other credit card balances faster, you can transfer them to the Commerce Advantage and save on your interest charges with a bonus rate of 6.9 percent APR through your September billing statement. Unlike other cards, there are no cash advance fees — and after your September statement, unpaid transferred balances will continue at a low variable APR for purchases, currently 9.6 percent.

If you're ever low on cash, you can stop by an automated teller machine and get a quick cash advance on your card. You can get cash advances at ATMs when you go on vacation — and save money at the low 6.9 percent APR. Then, after your September billing cycle, your unpaid balances and new cash advances will continue to be a good value at a low variable APR, currently only 16.9 percent — still lower than many other credit cards.

If you pay off your balance each month, Special Connections may be the best card for you. There's no annual fee and at 13.4 percent variable APR, it's still a lower rate than many cards you may be carrying. Plus, Special Connections is a Mastercard/VISA and ATM card in one, for instant cash access to your Commerce Bank checking or money market account.

For more information or to apply for the Commerce Advantage card, call 1 800-453-2265.

A menu of benefits

Q. I've heard "cafeteria plan" used in connection with employee benefits. What is it?
Gunter Haimann, Jamesburg, N.J.

A. Cafeteria plans are employer-sponsored benefit plans that give tax advantages to employees by allowing them to choose between receiving taxable benefits like cash or tax-free benefits like health insurance. Its name comes from Section 125 of the Internal Revenue Code, which has authorized these plans since 1978.

"The sole breadwinner with dependents, the single employee, the person nearing retirement all have different benefit needs," said Michael J. Langan of Towers Perrin, the consulting firm. "Some want more life insurance, others more health insurance and others more disability protection."

A cafeteria plan allows an employee to pick from a menu of benefits and pay for them with pretax salary dollars. As a result, an employee's contribution may stretch 30 to 40 percent further than if it was made after taxes were withheld — depending on the individual's tax rate.

But health-care changes proposed in Washington could affect cafeteria plans, especially if the tax treatment of benefits is changed to make some of them taxable to employees or nondeductible by employers.

Convertible bonds

Q. How can I calculate the break-even time of a convertible bond?
Hyman Dudakoff, Brooklyn

A. The break-even period refers to the time required for the convertible's current yield advantage to recapture the conversion premium. Break-even analysis is one of several means of evaluating the relative attractiveness of convertible securities.

"Convertible security holders usually pay a premium over conversion value for the ability to participate in the appreciation in the underlying stock, while limiting downside risk," said John Georgantas, convertible securities analyst for Kidder, Peabody & Co.

There are limitations to break-even analysis, though, since it assumes such factors as unchanged interest rates and a static level of common dividends over the investment period.

In addition, the analysis does not consider either the risks associated with the issuer's credit quality or the appreciation potential in the underlying stock price.

Credit Card criteria

Q. What criteria do banks use for evaluating credit card applications?
Abe Dubrowsky, West Palm Beach, Fla.

A. Every bank has its own guidelines. But a big consideration for most banks is how well the applicant has handled credit. Usually people establish credit elsewhere before applying for a credit card.

"We want to see some depth of credit experience," said Cynthia A. Graham, president of Barnett Card Services Corp. "We expect applicants to show that they can handle several different creditors and have never filed for bankruptcy."

Banks are also interested in an applicant's current obligations, income and employment history.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Addressing annuities

By Bill Doyle

Q: My financial problems began with a negative experience in the stock market that resulted in quite a loss. I do not want to take any more risks with my money.

Doyle

Now, with a large certificate of deposit maturing soon and interest rates on new CDs very low, I am looking at an annuity with a fixed 7.5 percent interest rate. My insurance agent claims the annuity is as safe as a bank CD.

Is that true?

A: The insurance agent's statement can be chalked up to an aggressive sales effort. Although it is unlikely you would lose any money, an annuity is not as safe as a bank CD.

Along with other bank deposits, a CD has Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. coverage of up to $100,000 per depositor per institution, backed by the full faith and credit of our federal government.

Technically, an annuity is as safe as the life insurance company that issues it. Insurance companies are regulated by state insurance departments. Holders of insurance policies and annuities are not protected by the FDIC or any other federal body.

That is not cause to panic. Most states have guarantee programs to assist policyholders and annuitants when insurance companies fail to meet their financial obligations. Those arrangements vary widely, so check the situation in your state.

And find out how long interest will accumulate on that annuity at 7.5 percent. In the typical fixed-dollar annuity, the insurance company will guarantee high interest for the first year or so. Past that point, the interest usually will be in line with the return on fixed-rate investments, such as bonds and mortgages. Most annuities guarantee that the rate will not fall below a predetermined rate of about 3 or 4 percent.

Q: I have been assured by my insurance representative that I can make a safe investment with an annuity issued by his company. He told me my money would be available anytime I want to withdraw it and the interest rate is much higher than CDs.

Can this be right? How can a company have money sitting idle, yet pay interest to investors on their money?

A: The money you put into an annuity does not sit idle. The insurance company invests the money received from you and other annuitants to earn more money.

Naturally, the company keeps some of that money in a "cash position," so it will be available to pay annuitants who want to cash out. But that cash position usually is only a small part of the insurance company's "separate account," in which annuity assets are held.

The insurance agent's statement about your money being "available anytime" might be somewhat misleading, though.

If the annuity has a sales charge, which can run from 2 to 9 percent, that portion of your money goes out right away and cannot be recovered.

However, many insurance companies have dropped that up-front sales charge. Instead, they levy surrender fees. Most such fees start at 7 percent if you cash an annuity during the first year and decline by one percentage point annually -- to zero after seven years.

Q: Suppose I put a large sum into an annuity with no up-front sales charge but with a gradually declining surrender fee. Suppose the interest rate at which the annuity accumulates interest falls from 7.5 percent the first year to 4 percent the very next year.

Wouldn't that leave me with only the two bad choices of either keeping the annuity and its new low interest rate or of suffering a 6 percent surrender fee "penalty."

A: Yes, unless your annuity contract has a clause permitting you to get out whole.

Many annuities have "bailout" provisions allowing annuitants to withdraw all their money if the interest accumulation rate falls below a level stipulated when the annuities were issued.

LEAVE: Affordability a big problem

(From 1B)

Employers are required to continue paying health-care premiums during the leave and give the employee back the same job or an equivalent position.

That may sound good, but the legislation has drawn mixed reviews from people on all sides of the issue.

From the employee viewpoint, the act is flawed because it covers only about half the country's workers. About 40 percent of employees work in small businesses that don't fall under the law's guidelines.

For those who are covered, the big question is whether they can afford to take the unpaid leave, says Laurie Kane, a researcher with the Families and Work Institute, a New York-based group that studies work-place issues.

Marie Wilson, president of the Ms. Foundation, says the law divides people by class, helping those who can afford the three months without pay, and bypassing those who can't.

Besides the money, another concern for workers is the impact on their careers. Those who take advantage of work-place programs often aren't seen as serious about work.

This is one reason why men rarely reduce their working hours or take leave to help their families, says Marcia Kropf, director of research with Catalyst, a nonprofit organization that seeks to promote work-place change for women.

"Family leave has often meant maternity leave and is seen as a women's thing," Kropf says.

Still, many workers don't have a choice when it comes to a family emergency. Just knowing they can't be fired for taking time is a benefit, says Heidi Hartmann, director of the Institute For Women's Policy Research, a Washington research group.

"Instead of being nervous about their employers reaction, they'll just take the leave," Hartmann says.

Supporters say another benefit to the legislation, however imperfect, is the right to return to the same job. That theoretically can translate into seniority, better promotions and higher salary.

The law's most ardent detractors are the small-business entrepreneurs who fear they could lose the most. Many large companies already have some sort of formalized family leave policy.

Many smaller companies are frightened by the potential cost. It's expensive to granting 12-week-leaves with full benefits, as well as hiring and training a temporary employee, says Marty Cohen, director of policy studies with the Work In America Institute Inc., a nonprofit research group in Scarsdale, N.Y.

"In an era when cost containiment is the key, the additional costs imposed by the law could be fatal," says Eamonn McGeady, president of Martin G. Imbach, Inc., a marine and heavy construction business with about 65 employees in Baltimore, Md.

Mary Reed, the legislative representative at the National Federation of Independent Business, puts the issue in stronger terms:

"It's an inflexible, impersonal one-size-fits-all government mandate that will hurt small business in the long run."

The legislation, she says, will hurt the very people it is intended to help.

"Small employers are going to be less likely to employ women of child-bearing years and more likely to cut the number of low-skilled jobs," Reed says.

But mostly, small business is upset at the government meddling.

"The beauty of working for a small business is that employers and employees can work out the benefits that work the best for both," Reed says. It's not that small businesses are abusing their workers, she says. Many already have some sort of informal leave program for employees.

"A good employee who is productive is a valuable resource and we'll do anything to keep that employee," says Gerry Harkins, general manager of Southern Pan Services Co., a construction business in Atlanta.

Jim Herr, president of Herr's Foods Co. in Nottingham, Pa., says even among small businesses, those with the best benefits get the best employees. His company of about 1,000 workers has a leave policy used mostly by new mothers.

Defenders of government-enforced family leave point out that several states already have such laws. Despite gloomy predictions from businesses in those states, there have been few problems.

In addition, among the large companies that already have leave programs, some say they have achieved significant savings.

One such success story is Aetna Life & Casualty. In 1988 it began allowing employees up to six months of unpaid leave.

On average, employees take only 7½ weeks off, says Aetna spokesman Mike Bazinet. Of the 44,000 workers, about 1,200 take advantage of the policy each year, Bazinet says. Most have been women.

The leave policy has saved money by helping to retain women who might have left the company once their maternity leave was up, Bazinet says.

STOCKS: Seniority rewarded in new program

cycle, eligible employees are permitted to buy stock equal to a certain percentage of their salaries. The company will help finance the purchase. And it will award two options for each share of stock purchased.

During the first eligibility "window," employees are allowed to buy up to 10 percent of their annual base salary in stock. (The average base salary of eligible employees was $45,000 to $55,000, Rubino said.)

To buy the stock, employees can borrow from the company and pay back the loan over four years through payroll deductions. Interest is charged at the prime rate, which is what banks normally give only their very best corporate customers.

This October, those who have become eligible since the program began will be allowed to purchase up to 7.5 percent of their salary in stock; the following year, newly eligible employees will be able to buy 5 percent, and in October 1995, 2.5 percent.

The schedule of decreasing percentages is intended to reward people with the longest service by allowing them to buy the most stock, Rubino said. In October 1996, Walgreen plans to start a new cycle. All employees who participated in the previous purchase programs will be eligible, as will those who opted not to participate and people who have just become eligible.

Other companies will undoubtedly introduce similar plans, said Jim Woodrum, a consultant in the Lincolnshire, Ill., office of Hewitt Associates. The firm estimates that only 30 large companies now have stock option plans available to a broad range of employees.

Instead, most companies simply give stock options to employees once they reach a certain level in the corporation. Many workers then exercise the options and sell the stock in a single transaction, converting the option into additional income. They do not acquire a stake in the company.

In contrast, the Walgreen's program requires the employee to make the first move. If an employee does not buy stock when first eligible, he or she does not get a chance the following year, but must wait for the next cycle, up to four years. Employees also take on the risk of stock ownership.

Naturally, the performance of Walgreen's stock is an important factor. "In their communications materials, they showed that if you held 100 shares in August 1981, it would have been worth $4,437.50," said Monica Thompson, a Hewitt consultant. "Ten years later, the same 100 shares had turned into 1,600 shares worth $55,000."

LAID OFF: Volunteer could be viewed as loyal

times, you will get a better deal than the regular corporate deal."

Many companies are trying to replace high-salaried people with low-salaried people. If you are one of the former, you may be in a particularly good position to negotiate. "The higher the position, the better bargaining position," Schneier said.

While it pays to note a company's intention to downsize, it's probably not a good idea to wait for the formal program to come out. It will be too late to bargain. "Once the program is announced, there are legal issues, so it is difficult to strike any deals," Schneier said.

You must also have a plan in mind. Trying to negotiate a big bundle of money with no thoughts about what you will do next makes little sense. "It is only reasonable to do it if you have another career lined up or have someplace to go," Schneier said. "You have to look over the wall and think about what will happen if they say, 'Yes.' "

You must also be clean as a whistle. "It's important that you are not the person responsible for the downsizing," said Jacques Leger, a partner in the Ottawa, Canada, office of the Phillips Group, management consultants. "Nor should you be viewed as taking advantage of insider knowledge." Finally, you cannot leave to go to the competition.

But say you are an employee of IBM. It is hardly a secret that the company is going to cut staff. It's only a question of who will be cut. By volunteering you may be seen as a hero. "They may perceive your volunteering to leave as a chance to help rather than hinder the organization," Leger said. "Nobody wants to say, 'We let go 5,000 people.' They would rather say: 'We let go 2,000 and 3,000 left voluntarily.' It's good P.R."

Before you approach your supervisor, you must do some research to find out what a typical severance package consists of at your company. You should also try to find out whether other employees have volunteered and how those offers have been received. You probably need some outside advice from a consultant, lawyer or financial planner who specializes in severance packages. "You have to arm yourself with all that data and put together a game plan," Schneier said.

You also need to know what you would get if you just walked out the door. Check into your pension package. How many weeks severance does your company give per year of service? Naturally, you want to negotiate something better. "When we design programs for companies, we sweeten the pot for those who volunteer," Leger said.

If you are near retirement, you might ask for additional years of service to be applied to your pension. At mid-career, you might ask for a fatter severance package. If your employer typically offers outplacement services to employees at your level, you might ask for that money in cash. Outplacement companies charge about 15 percent of annual compensation.

When you have done all your homework, march in and lay your proposal on the table. "There is only one sure way to get an answer and that is to go in and ask," Leger said. Don't beat around the bush. Don't say: "If a person were to volunteer, what might he expect?" Leger advised.

Instead, say something like: "I know the company is going through tough times and that it must let go senior people. I don't really want to leave. But I've been thinking of opening this donut shop in Florida." The key, Leger said, is to state precisely what you plan to do. "Don't leave the doubt in the other guy's mind that you're being disloyal," he said.

You want to give your employer the feeling that you are "saving him one person off his list," Leger said, not the sense that "you are deserting the ship." You may want references someday. You may want to sell products to your former employer or to hire someone from the company.

Country funds gain worldwide reach

By Chet Currier
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — In a year when overseas stock markets have been outpacing Wall Street, renewed attention has been focused on the fast-growing ranks of country funds.

These investment companies, traded mostly on the New York Stock Exchange, put their money in the financial markets of single countries or regions around the world — from Chile to China, Israel to Ireland.

From a mere handful a decade ago, their number has climbed past 50 and is still expanding.

"With so many economies growing faster than the U.S., this is something that cannot be ignored by the astute investor," says George Cole Scott in his Scott Letter, a newsletter on closed-end, or publicly traded, funds based in Richmond, Va.

Closed-end funds operate like mutual funds, pooling the money of investors to assemble a portfolio of securities chosen and monitored by a professional manager.

A key difference is that while mutual funds stand ready continuously to sell new shares and cash in existing ones, closed-end funds operate with fixed amounts of ownership interests. Their share price is determined by the market like shares of other types of stock.

If they wish, investors who want international diversification can choose among a wide variety of standard mutual funds.

By the tally of Lipper Analytical Services Inc., there are now more than 300 open-ended stock funds operating in this country as international, global and overseas regional funds.

But most single-country funds to date have been organized in the closed-end format. One reason for this, analysts say, is that closed-ends can invest in illiquid securities and markets without fear of having to cope with large amounts of redemptions from their stockholders in stormy moments.

Like other analysts who follow these funds, Scott tends to recommend funds that are selling at or below net asset value, rather than those trading above it.

"Funds which trade at a premium should be avoided as, with patience, time will usually bring the fund back to net asset value," Scott says.

He also urges taking a close look at a fund's annual expenses as a percentage of total assets. "We see this indicator as a key factor in showing how managers control their costs," he observes. "If the fund has a figure over 2 percent, we see this as a red flag."

Hodgson died Saturday at a Midland hospital.

He was born July 15, 1921, in De Kalb. He married Georgia F. Schmitton on Sept. 21, 1966, in Odessa. He moved from Texarkana to Odessa in 1966. He was an oilfield driller.

Survivors include his wife, Georgia F. Hodgson of Odessa; a son, Harold Winston Hodgson of Muldrow, Okla.; two daughters, Sandra Hartman of Odessa and Shirley Hamilton of Oklahoma City, Okla.; two brothers, Wesley Hodgson and Raymond Hodgson, both of De Kalb; a sister, Thelma Montgomery of De Kalb; 12 grandchildren; and 18 great-grandchildren.

Miguel Leal

Services for Miguel Leal are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

Leal died Saturday at a local hospital.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Cyclist identified

Midland police released the name of a 37-year-old man who died Saturday following a motorcycle crash on College Street near Ulmer Park.

The man was identified Sunday as Clyde Eugene Sharp.

The accident occurred at 12:57 a.m. at 2509 College St. The cyclist was westbound on College Street when he hit the curb. Sharp died from massive injuries.

Minors charged

Midland police arrested 17 minors and issued citations for two juveniles early Sunday for being in possession of alcohol and evading arrest.

According to a police report, officers were dipatched to a loud party at 4401 Keri Court at 12:05 a.m. Sunday. When the officers arrived, they found a keg of beer in the house along with several full bottles and cans of beer and wine coolers.

The officers issued citations to two juveniles, who were turned over to their parents, according to a report. The 17 minors were charged with minors in possession and evading detention because they attempted to run from the police officers.

Testimony to begin in slaying of socialite

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — The capital murder trial of a man accused of bludgeoning a Fort Worth couple has several elements often found in a classic murder mystery: intrigue, money and violence.

Evidence will include a tape-recorded statement Dillingham gave police two weeks after the March 12, 1992, attack.

Dillingham, 20, is the first of three defendants to face trial in what prosecutors call a bungled murder-for-hire scheme.

Caren Koslow, 40, died after being struck 27 times with a pry bar. Jack Koslow, 49, survived.

Miss Koslow, then 17, is accused of offering Dillingham and her boyfriend, Brian Salter, $1 million from inheritance money to kill her parents.

In his 37-minute statement to police, Dillingham said he and Salter entered the Kowlows' home, kicked in the bedroom door and began beating the couple.

"Brian handed me the pry bar and I walked over there and I hit Mr. Koslow and I hit Mrs. Koslow," he told homicide Detective C.D. Brannan.

"... I hit the two of them and they didn't move very much. I didn't know what I had done to them ... I went back there and I got the wallet and I came back and I hit them again, 'cause Mrs. Koslow was like upset and screaming, you know.

"And I hit her."

He said they put their bloody shoes, a coat and jeans in a Dumpster. Dillingham said he gave the pry bar to a friend, Paul Carrillo — who notified police.

The case was moved to Wichita County on a change of venue. Jury selection began in mid-June.

Dillingham faces up to life in prison or the death penalty if convicted.

Former officer reveals clues to unsolved murder

ALICE (AP) — A former Alice police officer says he's willing to be hypnotized to remember details of a 1974 conversation with a suspected drug dealer that may provide clues in the unsolved murder of his then-partner.

Albert "Tito" Bernal was a civilian officer in May 1974 when he was teamed with Alice officer Matthew Murphy on an undercover drug investigation.

Bernal, who later became a uniformed officer in Alice and now works at a Beeville post office, says their investigation ended after a suspect said a contract was out for the lives of the officers.

"(The suspect) said, 'I hope it's not true, but they say you're a narc, you and your friend.' I said, 'Do I look like one of those guys? Get me some tecate (a slang word for heroin),'" Bernal recalled.

Bernal said the person refused to sell him anything, and he returned to the car, where Murphy was waiting. Bernal told him they needed to leave immediately and their work was finished.

Murphy, 33, returned to uniform patrol soon after and on Dec. 1, 1974, he became the first — and still the only — Alice officer to die while on the job when he was shot four times during a routine traffic stop.

Police never made any arrests and recently reopened their investigation into the murder. Several people, including a suspected gunman who's already in prison, have been interviewed.

Alice Police Chief Jack Compton is encouraged by Bernal's tip.

"It's significant," Compton said. "Obviously, if somebody knew of a contract, they knew where it came from."

Jim Wells County Sheriff Oscar Lopez, who was police chief when Murphy died, said he was not aware of such a threat. He said Murphy's undercover work ended because he was needed on patrol duty.

"I'm pretty sure if someone would have told me that there was someone after them, we would have investigated," Lopez said.

Compton says he can't discount the tip just because Murphy may not have spoken about it or put it in writing.

"It's enough to know that your investigation is compromised and that going on is fruitless, pointless and hazardous," Compton said.

Diane Giesler, Murphy's widow, said she wouldn't be surprised that her husband kept such information secret to avoid scaring her.

Bernal said he didn't report the incident because he wasn't working for the police department at the time. Nineteen years later, he's willing to be hypnotized to better remember what happened.

Corpus Christi police have used retired Texas Ranger Jim Peters as an investigative hypnotist on the case and plan to continue using him.

Bernal's story is verified by Jim L. Simmons, an undercover investigator with the Texas Department of Public Safety who worked with Murphy in 1974.

"That sounds partially accurate, but I don't know about the dates (of when it occurred). That's basically what did happen," said Simmons, now a deputy with the Montgomery County Sheriff's Department in Conroe.

Parents grieve slaying of two teen-age children

DALLAS (AP) — An East Texas couple buried their teen-age children Sunday still struggling to cope with the brutal, yet unexplainable way the youths died.

James Brian King, 14, and his 13-year-old stepsister, Christina Ann Benjamin, were found last week by a road worker in rural Telico, 30 miles south of Dallas and 15 miles from the teens' home in Garrett.

Lt. Royce Gothard of the Ellis County Sheriff's Department said the girl's naked body was in the brush beside a gravel road. Her head and hands severed and the body was covered with cuts.

Clues are scarce and Gothard said the Texas Rangers and FBI may be called in to help.

He said the Sheriff's Department has contacted the Texas Rangers for help and is prepared to call the FBI on Monday if the case is not resolved.

King's fully-clothed body was found nearby in a creek with no visible wounds, Gothard said.

A memorial service was scheduled for Sunday afternoon at a church in Palmer, about four miles from Garrett. Autopsy results from the Dallas County Medical Examiner's officer were pending, Gothard said Saturday.

The teens were last seen by their father Tuesday when they left their home to go to the store, Gothard said. They weren't reported missing until Wednesday.

"They've never run off before," said Donna Brown, the girl's mother and the boy's stepmother. "We figured we'd give them a chance to come back first."

Monday night, they went to a convenience store for a soda, Ms. Brown said. Around 1 a.m. Tuesday, her husband James King saw his son talking to someone in a light-colored, older-model Ford.

Investigators still are trying to figure out what happened next to the teens, whom one close friend described as "more than brother and sister ... like best friends."

One theory being peddled by Palmer residents linked the teens' deaths to members of a Satanic cult who for several years have terrorized the town's animals.

"Everybody knows they have a thing about blonde hair and blue eyes," said Amy Jones, 21. "How else do you explain how Christina lost her head and hands and Brian, who is dark-haired, was all there?"

Gothard did not deny the possibility that the killing could be cult-related.

Lotto jackpot grows; no one matched all six

Associated Press

No one correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, pushing Wednesday's estimated jackpot to $11 million, state lottery officials said.

The numbers drawn Saturday night from a field of 50 were: 10, 11, 20, 28, 35, 46. The estimated jackpot was $3 million.

There were 150 tickets sold with five of the six numbers, with each ticket worth $1,366. There were 7,206 tickets matching four of six numbers, with each winning $103. And there were 136,618 tickets sold with three of six numbers, with each worth an automatic $3.

Sales from Wednesday to Saturday's draw were $8 million. Total Lotto Texas sales since the Nov. 7 kickoff were $674.1 million.

Kit airplane crash hurts pilot, student

JACKSONVILLE, Texas (AP) — Both people aboard a kit plane were injured Saturday afternoon when the craft crashed shortly after takeoff from the Cherokee County Airport, officials said.

The pilot, Gary Garrett, 40, of Columbia, N.J., was listed in critical condition Saturday night at Mother Frances Hospital in Tyler, a nursing supervisor said.

Joe Danel of Jacksonville, a 16-year-old student pilot who had been given a ride in the Glass Air plane, was in stable condition at Tyler's East Texas Medical Center, an official said.

The plane, described as a high-performance craft, had earlier been on display during an air show.

According to Texas Department of Public Safety communications officer Kenneth Graham, the plane went down about one mile from the airport after the pilot radioed he was returning.

"He (Garrett) didn't indicate at that time that he was having any trouble. Then he turned to the right and the plane nosed down into the pasture," Graham said.

The National Transportation Safety Board was investigating the cause of the crash.

Abortion groups fight problems within own pro-life movements

By Pauline Arrillaga
Associated Press writer

DALLAS (AP) — The street outside the Fairmount Abortion Clinic is quiet. Patients come and go through the front door, instead of sneaking through an entry in the back of the building.

The scene is a drastic change from two weeks ago, when sign-toting anti-abortion protesters swarmed around the clinic — praying, singing, and pledging to stop the "baby-killing."

It was all part of Operation Rescue's 10-day "Cities of Refuge" campaign, which consisted of abortion protests nationwide.

Now the protesters have vanished, the signs have been packed up, the echoes of prayers have faded and anti-abortionists are looking to the future.

While such protests have become an icon for the anti-abortion movement, some insiders say those tactics no longer work. They say it's time for the movement to change — or die.

"This is a crossroads for the pro-life movement," says Bill Price, president of Texans United for Life. "Its credibility and its future are at stake."

Price has been an ardent critic of Operation Rescue, calling the group and its tactics "radical." Prior to the 10-day campaign, Price urged Operation Rescue to cancel its protests.

"There are some very deep philosophical differences (between our groups) regarding tactics and strategy. We still have the same objective ... but we have some very deep differences regarding how to reach the end," he says.

Price says Operation Rescue's explosive tactics have caused a rift between the two groups and in the movement.

"Operation Rescue has become a negative force in the pro-life movement. Their tactics are counterproductive," Price says. "They have become more radical since they began four or five years ago. This is something that I think hurts the movement terribly.

"Mainstream groups have made a serious mistake by allowing them to go unchecked and unchallenged. As a result, Operation Rescue has been allowed to shape the public image of the pro-life movement, and that's a killer to our cause," he says.

Rev. Phillip "Flip" Benham, director of the Dallas-Fort Worth chapter of Operation Rescue, fervently disagrees that the anti-abortion cause is dying at the hands of his group.

"It will not kill the church of Jesus Christ and that's what we are," he says.

Benham says Operation Rescue's tactics are not guided by violence but instead are driven by the Church.

"What we are doing is not radical ... it's just Christianity," he said. "You didn't see wild-eyed terrorists out there protesting. You saw mammas and daddies, little boys and girls who are simply trying to save little babies.

"The church of Jesus Christ is not going to sit down because Bill Price wants us to."

With the state's anti-abortion faction butting heads, one might expect abortion rights advocates to consider advancing their beliefs.

But Tracey Kirchenbauer, interim director of the Texas Abortion Rights League, says the apparent split is more of a hindrance than a benefit to her movement.

"Bill Price has adopted a very smart strategy by saying, 'Hey, those people are the ones who are crazies.' What's happening is Bill Price is able to bring those who have found the violence so distasteful back into the fold," she said. "This makes the anti-choice leaders appear to be split, when they are really working together."

She said the variance in the two sides' tactics is resulting in a two-pronged attack.

On one side, Ms. Kirchenbauer says, the vigilant, scare tactics of groups such as Operation Rescue are causing fewer medical students to enter the abortion field. Some 83 percent of the counties nationwide do not have physicians who perform abortions, she says. In Texas, that number is about 80 percent.

On the other side, Ms. Kirchenbauer says, Price's middle-of-the-road approach is attracting the more moderate anti-abortionist into the movement.

"Until we wake up and realize that we are losing the battle and the anti-choice side is winning — and saying that they aren't — it's going to get worse," Ms. Kirchenbauer said.

Lubbock districts decide on funding plan

LUBBOCK (AP) — The Plains and Denver City Independent School Districts have voted overwhelmingly to authorize their school boards to send part of their tax revenues to the state of Texas to satisfy the requirements of the new school funding law.

The voters in Denver City also voted in favor of a second alternative, one that would authorize the school board to educate students from other school districts with tax revenues from the Denver City ISD.

The two South Plains school districts are among the first districts in Texas to poll the voters in accordance with the new law.

Under the law, the 101 school districts richest in taxable property in the state are required to share their wealth with poorer ones.

The law is designed to meet a court order to equalize funding. School districts are funded by state aid and local property taxes.

The law requires the state's property-rich districts, including 14 in the Lubbock region, to choose among five options for lowering their wealth. They can send money to the state, make payments to poor districts, merge their tax bases with poor districts, consolidate with poor districts or transfer some taxable property to poor districts' tax rolls.

Teaff to leave

WACO— Grant Teaff is expected to end his 21-year association with Baylor University today to accept the executive directorship of the American College Football Association.

Teaff is expected to replace Charley McClendon, who will step down from his position on Jan. 1, 1994.

Teaff, the winningest football coach in Baylor history, handed over the head coaching job at the end of last season to became the fulltime athletic director. He was replaced by assistant Chuck Reedy

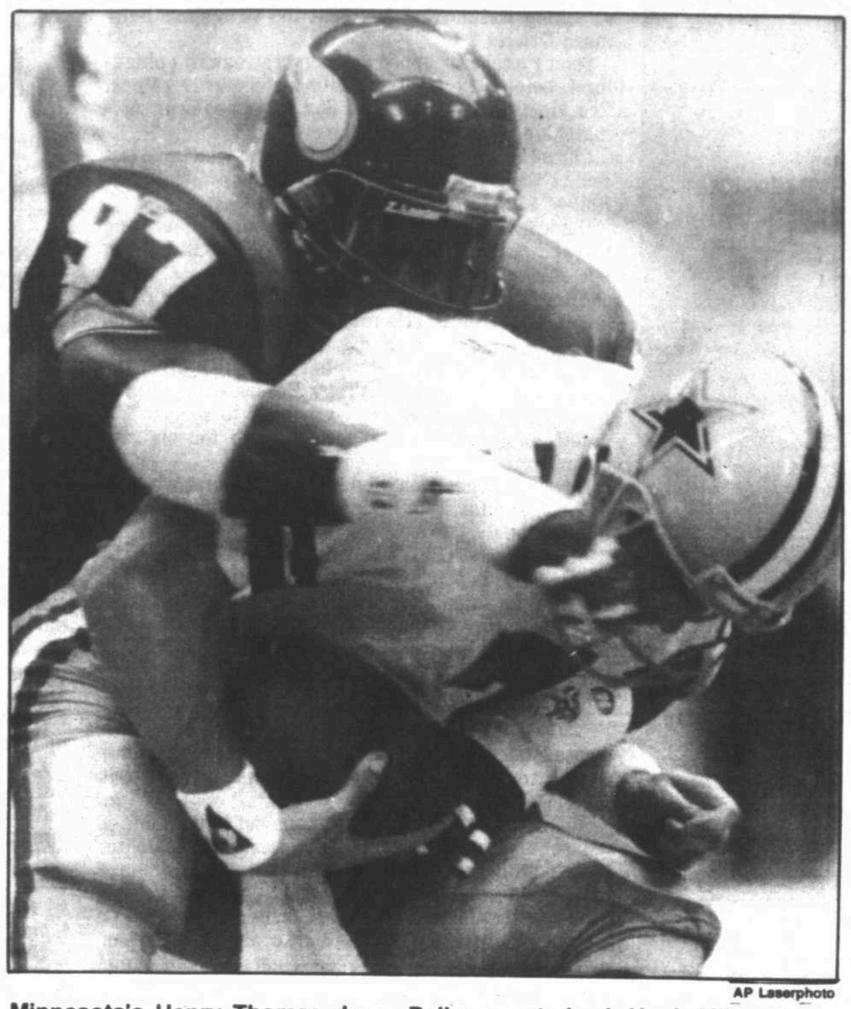

The AFCA has indicated it would move its headquarters from Orlando, Fla., to Waco if Teaff takes the ACFA job.

"I do have a uniqueness for the job," Teaff said. "It goes back to the fact that I've coached at every level. I've been a head coach in Division III. And I've coached in division 1-A."

The 59-year-old Teaff had a record of 128-105-6 and his teams were 4-4 in bowl appearances. Teaff took Baylor to the Cotton Bowl twice only to lose.

Minnesota's Henry Thomas drops Dallas quarterback Hugh Millen for a loss during the Cowboys' first pre-season game of the year Sunday.

Vikings upset World Champs

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING, Texas — Roger Craig's one-yard touchdown run and two Fuad Reveiz field goals Sunday night carried the Minnesota Vikings to a 13-7 exhibition victory over the Dallas Cowboys.

The Vikings took a quick 10-0 lead over the Cowboys before a crowd of 60,110 on a hot, steamy night in Texas Stadium, where the temperature was 95 degrees at the opening kickoff.

Quarterback Sean Salisbury orchestrated a 45-yard drive capped by Roger Craig's one-yard run to give Minnesota their 10-0 lead early in the second period. Salisbury's 15-yard pass to Anthony Carter set up the score.

Millen, who is playing for the world champion Cowboys while Super Bowl MVP Troy Aikman heals from back surgery, suffered two interceptions and three sacks.

He took the Cowboys on a 64-yard drive late in the second period and capped it with a one-yard scoring toss to fullback Daryl Johnston to trim the Dallas deficit to 10-7 shortly before halftime.

A fumble by Clayton Holmes on a punt return was recovered by the Vikings Ron Carpenter to set up a 31-yard field goal by Reveiz in the third period.

It was the only score of the second half as both offenses sputtered.

1993 HALL OF FAME INDUCTION

Reggie Jackson, shown as he bids farewell in a game at Chicago on Oct. 5, 1987, was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame Sunday.

■ Mr. October is in the Hall of Fame where he always said he would be.

By Jim Donaghy
AP Baseball Writer

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. — After years of talking about it, years of waiting, the moment finally happened for Reggie Jackson on Sunday. Mr. October made it into the Hall of Fame, just like he always said he would.

"When fans think about Reggie Jackson, they think about the playoffs and World Series," Jackson said. "They think about three home runs in the World Series and the home run off the light transformer during the 1971 All-Star game in Detroit."

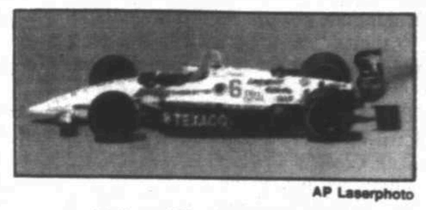

Jackson, who talked about the "magnitude of me" years ago, has the lowest batting average among outfielders in the Hall, but few matched his dramatic flair or huge ego.

He hit 563 home runs with 1,702 RBIs for Oakland, Baltimore, the New York Yankees and California from 1967-1987. But his career average was .262 and he struck out a record 2,597 times.

"I think all the great moments I had put me over the top," Jackson said. "I might have made it without those numbers, but it probably would not have been on the first ballot of eligibility."

Jackson, who played his best when big games were on the line, was elected by the Baseball Writers Association of America with 93.6 percent of the votes. He is the 29th

Mansell beats Mario Andretti

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

BROOKLYN, Mich. — Nigel Mansell ignored the bumpy track and shrugged off a raging headache to hold off teammate Mario Andretti and win Sunday's Marlboro 500 at Michigan International Speedway.

Mansell, running only the second 500-mile race of his career, dominated the 250-lap race on the 2-mile, high-banked oval and regained the IndyCar PPG

The Briton, who was the Formula One champion last season, took the lead from pole-winner Andretti on the 28th lap and led all but 2 of the last 221 laps, including the final 167.

Mansell, who finished third to Fittipaldi in May in his first Indianapolis 500, had more problems with the rough track and the heat on Sunday than he did with any other driver in the 23-car field.

"The circuit is just fantastic," he said. "It stands alone, just like Indianapolis. I've never driven anything like it in my life and it's beaten me. I'm glad there wasn't another 10 laps because I was hanging in there just at the end and I don't mind telling the world I'm tired."

It appears that Mansell would just

Midland's Ron Jumper ...putting in City tournament

Moses crosses City barrier

■ Not many local golf titles have eluded Jeff Moses, but now he can add the City Championship to his list.

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Staff writer

Jeff Moses' consistency gave him the one thing he never had — a city golf championship.

Moses either led or was near the top in all three rounds of the Men's City Golf Championship and that consistency, coupled with an eagle on the par 5, No. 14, helped him edge past Matt Clements and win his first city title Sunday at Hogan Park Golf Course.

Moses, 38, shot a final-round 68 for a three-day total of 209 and held off Clements, 17, who shot a 70 for a 210 total and two-day leader Heriberto Cruz, who had his worst round of the tournament at 74 for a total of 213. Knobby Sanchez blazed for a 66-211 and tied Mac McGee, who shot a 69-211.

"Everybody wins other tournaments here and there," Moses said, "but to win the city tournament is a big one.

"It was a good field and it was nice to slip by all these other guys," said Moses, who never finished higher than second in the tournament.

After shooting a 68 to tie Cruz for the first-round lead, Moses shot 73 Saturday to fall to third and two strokes off the lead.

Moses' eagle came just in time after falling back even when he bogeyed the Par 3, No. 13. Moses missed a 10-foot putt for par.

Then Moses hit a strong shot to the green on his second stroke and placed the ball about 15-feet from the hole where he sank the putt on his third shot. Clements and Cruz both putted for par.

"It looked like a putt I could make and I just wallered it in," Moses said.

After nine holes, the leader board remained virtually unchanged, with Cruz still in the lead at two shots under for the round. Clements, who moved into second place after Saturday's round, and Moses were 1-under. Moses was in third and two shots off the lead going into the final round.

Cruz had birdied holes 5, 6 and 7 for the lead and was cruising along after making par on No. 8 and No. 9. That's when the roof caved in.

Cruz bogeyed the next three holes to go 1-over and then double-bogeyed the par 4, No. 15 to fall back to 3-over and essentially out of contention.

Disaster struck Clements twice.

"I put it in the water on the only two holes that have water," Clements said. "I made bogeys on those two holes and if I hadn't hit into the water, I would have won by one stroke."

St. Louis' Luis Alicea gets out of the way of a sliding New York Met Bobby Bonilla before throwing to first to complete a double play. However, the Cardinals lost big, 10-3.

Braves sweep Astros

Associated Press

HOUSTON — John Smoltz pitched well and David Justice homered as the Atlanta Braves beat the Houston Astros 3-2 Sunday for their ninth victory in 10 games and a sweep of the weekend series.

Smoltz (10-8) allowed two runs on seven hits and one walk, while striking out six in eight innings. Greg McMichael got the final three outs for his third save.

With one out in the fourth, Ron Gant singled and scored on Fred McGriff's double. McGriff took to third on Terry Pendleton's grounder and scored on Greg Olson's single.

Houston loaded the bases with none out in the seventh after Smoltz allowed just two hits in the first six innings. Jeff Bagwell beat out an infield hit and moved to second on Luis Gonzalez' single before Ken Caminiti's hit loaded the bases.

Giants 6, Rockies 5

DENVER — John Burkett became the first 16-game winner in the National League, and San Francisco capitalized on five Colorado errors to outlast the Rockies for a sweeep of their weekend series.

But Colorado set another major-league attendance record, bettering its own mark for a three-game series. With 72,431 on Sunday, the Rockies drew 216,349 for the series, topping the 212,475 they had for their opening weekend against Montreal.

Leading 6-5, Burkett (16-4) lost his shutout in the seventh when Charlie Hayes doubled and scored on Jerald Clark's triple with no outs. But the Rockies stranded Clark at third, continuing a trend that has plagued them throughout the past week.

Mets 10, Cardinals 3

ST. LOUIS — Eddie Murray had a two-run homer, and a tie-breaking double during a five-run eighth inning, and New York got a strong performance from Dwight Gooden to beat St. Louis.

The Mets avoided a three-game sweep and beat the Cardinals for only the second time in eight games. The loss left St. Louis seven games behind NL East-leading Philadelphia.

Gooden (11-10) won his third straight start, working seven innings and allowing two runs on six hits. He struck out three, passing Jerry Koosman for second place on the Mets' career list with 1,800.

Murray hit his 16th homer — the 430th of his career — in the sixth, and got the game winner in the eighth.

■ National League Roundup

Marlins 5, Expos 4

MONTREAL — Darrell Whitmore singled home the tying run in the sixth inning, and led off the ninth with a double and scored on Chuck Carr's bunt hit as Florida beat Montreal.

After Whitmore started the ninth against Brian Barnes (2-5), Jeff Shaw relieved and Bob Natal sacrificed. With two outs, Carr surprised the Expos by laying down a drag bunt to first.

Padres 3, Reds 1

CINCINNATI — Tim Teufel and Tony Gwynn — two of Tom Browning's toughest outs — homered off the left-hander to power San Diego over Cincinnati.

Andy Benes (12-7) allowed four hits in seven innings for his second straight impressive victory, walking four and striking out five. Benes, coming off a five-hit shutout of the Chicago Cubs, lost his chance for a second straight when catcher Brad Ausmus' throwing error led to an unearned run in the fourth.

The Padres closed out a combined five-hitter by using three relievers. Gene Harris pitched the ninth for his 17th save — escaping when right fielder Gwynn caught a long drive by Barry Larkin against the wall to end the game with two runners on base.

Phillies 5, Pirates 4

PHILADELPHIA — Todd Pratt had two homers among three hits and three RBI to lead Philadelphia over Pittsburgh in a game twice interrupted by bench-clearing incidents.

With one out in the sixth inning, Pratt homered off Steve Cooke (5-7) to snap a 3-3 tie.

Roger Mason (3-7) pitched 1 1-3 hitless innings in relief of Tyler Green. Mitch Williams got his 29th save — allowing a run, but striking out the side in the ninth — as the Phillies completed a 5-1 homestand while handing the Pirates their seventh loss in nine games.

Cubs 10, Dodgers 4

CHICAGO — Sammy Sosa and Ryne Sandberg homered and drove in three runs apiece, and Sosa made two fine catches in center field as Chicago beat Los Angeles.

The Cubs struck for five runs in the first inning against Orel Hershiser (8-10) to make an easy winner of Jose Guzman (10-7).

Red Sox nip Orioles

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Danny Darwin pitched 6⅓ strong innings and Andre Dawson homered Sunday as the streaking Boston Red Sox beat the struggling Baltimore Orioles 2-1.

Scott Fletcher snapped an 0-for-12 streak by going 3-for-4, helping Boston to its 14th victory in 17 games. The victory moved the Red Sox 13 games over .500, matching their season high.

Chris Hoiles homered for the Orioles, who have lost five of their last six games and seven of 10. It was Hoiles' 20th homer, tying his career best.

Darwin (10-8) gave up one run on four hits, walking two and striking out four. He is 2-0 with a 0.64 ERA in two starts against the Orioles this season.

After Hoiles' homer in the seventh pulled Baltimore within 2-1, Greg Harris replaced Darwin and got the final two outs of the inning. Mark McLemore hit a one-out double in the eighth, but Harris got Mike Devereaux on a groundout. Tony Fossas came in and retired Harold Baines on a grounder to second.

Sutcliffe gave up nine hits in 6⅓ innings. He is 0-5 in his last seven starts.

Blue Jays 2, Tigers 1

TORONTO — Tony Fernandez's two-out single scored the winning run in the bottom of the ninth inning to give Toronto a come-from-behind 2-1 win over Detroit.

Roberto Alomar singled with one out in the ninth to chase Tigers starter Bill Gullickson. Paul Molitor greeted reliever Mike Henneman (2-2) with a single to left, advancing Alomar to second. Alomar went to third on Joe Carter's fly ball to center and scored on John Olerud's single. With Molitor at third, Fernandez chopped the ball between Tigers first baseman Mickey Tettleton and the foul line to score the winning run.

The Blue Jays have won seven of the last eight games, and five of their last six wins have come in the final at-bat.

Athletics 9, Rangers 5

OAKLAND — Oakland proved it could survive without Rickey Henderson as Ruben Sierra hit a three-run homer in a five-run fifth inning to lead a victory over Texas.

Sierra's homer, his 17th overall and his eighth three-run shot this season, came off Texas reliever Mike Schooler.

Jeff Paquette led off the A's fifth with a homer, his sixth, off Texas starter Kenny Rogers (8-7) to make it 5-3. Jerry Browne then singled, took second on Mike Bordick's sacrifice bunt, and scored on Scott Hemond's double.

Rightfielder Rickey Henderson, who was batting .327 for the A's, was traded Saturday night to Toronto.

Brewers 9, Yankees 2

■ American League Roundup

The loss ended the Yankees' four-game winning streak and dropped New York one game behind Toronto, 2-1 winners over Detroit, in the AL East.

Navarro (7-8) allowed nine hits and two walks, while striking out three in pitching his fourth complete game. One of the hits was Dion James' fifth home run of the season in the first inning, a 420-foot blast, and only the eighth ever hit into the center-field bleachers at Yankee Stadium.

Twins 9, Angels 2

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Dave Winfield hit his 450th home run and hot-hitting Shane Mack added a two-run single as Minnesota snapped a three-game losing streak by defeating California.

Winfield hit his 18th homer of the season in the second inning to open the scoring. Hank Aaron, Stan Musial, Carl Yastrzemski and Willie Mays are the only players in baseball history with at least 450 homers and more hits than Winfield, who is 35 shy of 3,000 after going 2-for-5.

Indians 9, Royals 5

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Cleveland knocked out Kansas City ace Kevin Appier with a seven-run second inning.

A moment of silence was held before the game and pennant flags and the American flag flew at half-staff at Ewing M. Kauffman Stadium in honor of the Royals' owner, who died in his sleep early Sunday morning.

Appier (11-6) was charged with five earned runs in the second as seven runs scored with one out. The Indians had three doubles among their six hits in the inning.

It was the shortest outing of the year for Appier other than a June 7 start at Baltimore when he was struck on the pitching arm by a line drive in the first inning and taken out. Besides that, Appier had not gone fewer than six innings this year.

Bill Wertz (1-1), the second Indians pitcher, went two innings and allowed one run for his first major-league victory. Eric Plunk pitched 1⅓ innings for his 11th save.

White Sox 4, Mariners 0

SEATTLE — Jack McDowell became the major leagues' first 17-game winner when he pitched a two-hitter as Chicago completed a three-game sweep over Seattle.

The White Sox, winning their sixth in a row, expanded their AL West lead over second-place Kansas City to five games by beating the Mariners for the seventh time in nine games this season.

McDowell (17-6) outdueled Chris Bosio (4-6), who gave up only six hits, to win his fifth game in a row for the third time this season. He also won five straight in April and June.

McDowell struck out nine, walked two and had a wild pitch in recording his third shutout and seventh complete game of the season.

The White Sox took a 2-0 lead in the third inning on Joey Cora's two-run triple into the right-field corner. Lance Johnson opened the inning with a single and stole second, Tim Raines walked and Cora tripled in his sixth and seventh runs of the series.

The Mariners had their best scoring opportunity in the bottom of the third when they loaded the bases on a single by Ken Griffey Jr. and two walks.

GOLF: Clements takes 2nd place

(From 1C)

The most crucial water shot came on the par 4, No. 12 when Clements hit his second shot into the water and bogeyed the hole to fall back even. Moses, however, hit a great shot to the green on his second stroke and putted for par after just missing a 20-foot birdie putt. Moses remained even until the eagle on No. 14.

Clements birdied the par 4, No. 16 to pull within one stroke of Moses with two holes to play, but he came up short on a birdie shot on No. 17 which would have tied the two golfers after Moses shot par on the hole.

With a one-stroke lead, Moses put himself in great shape on the final hole after hitting the green on his second shot. Clements, however, shot past the green and had to chip up for a narrowly missed birdie. Moses missed the long birdie shot but putted in for par. Clements also made a putt for par.

"Matt played real well, but he had some bad breaks," Moses said. "I hit the ball pretty solid and made the putts that I needed to and got the good breaks.

"Heriberto and Matt got the bad breaks and that tends to mess up your state of mind for the next couple of holes," Moses said.

Moon turns up volume by players' request

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Warren Moon listens to his Houston Oilers teammates and what he's hearing is that they want to hear more from him.

"If the players are coming to you telling you they want you to be more vocal, then you know they'll accept it," Moon said. "I've tried different things each year and this is just something else I'm going to try for us.

"If that's what they think they need then I'll give it. I'm a certain way behind the scenes. I try not to embarrass anyone in front of the fans, the public and the media."

Moon has mostly led by example. Despite missing part of last season with a broken bone in his upper left arm, the Oilers led the NFL in passing yards for the third straight year. Moon led the AFC in passing efficiency.

But the Oilers have embarrassing playoff losses in each of the last two seasons and they're looking for a rallying point.

Moon says he'll turn up the volume on his leadership role if it will help bring the team closer.

"I do say what I need to say at the right time and place," Moon said. "I'm just going to say it a little more in an overall team sense. They see that I'm not overlooking what's happening out there."

Moon admits to being caught up in the urgency of this season because so many players are in the final year of their contracts. Moon, 36, is part of the core of the team that is aging.

There is a now or never feeling.

"It's an urgency because it's this year," Moon said. "We can't control anything that happens next year. We can't do anything about what happened last year. All we have right now is a good group.

"We need to concentrate on this season because this is the season that's here."

Left tackle is especially concerning because that position must protect Moon's blind side from the rush.

"It's a vital position," Moon said. "He's usually lined up against a team's best pass rusher. I'm not as concerned right now as I might be three games into the preseason."

The run-and-shoot offense still cranks out the yards. It led the NFL with 251.8 passing yards per games and was No. 3 in total offense, averaging 353.4 yards per game.

But Moon knows what the Oilers must do to erase memories of their 41-38 loss to Buffalo in last season's playoffs.

"We have a chance to do something special," Moon said. "It's just a matter of us stepping up to bat and getting it done."

Miller's gold keeps giving big returns

■ Olympic Festival

SAN ANTONIO — The U.S. Olympic Festival ended its 10-day run Sunday with one of its biggest stars, Shannon Miller, picking up three more gold medals in gymnastics.

Miller won the balance beam, vault and floor exercise and took the silver medal on the uneven bars. She had won the all-around title and helped her East team win the team gold Friday night.

"I don't think about the pressure of other people expecting me to win," said Miller, 16, the reigning world champion and winner of five medals at the Barcelona Olympics. "I just try to do my best."

Her score of 9.975 in the floor exercise, the final event, prompted a standing ovation from the crowd estimated at 13,500. She scored 9.90 on the beam and 9.775 on the vault.

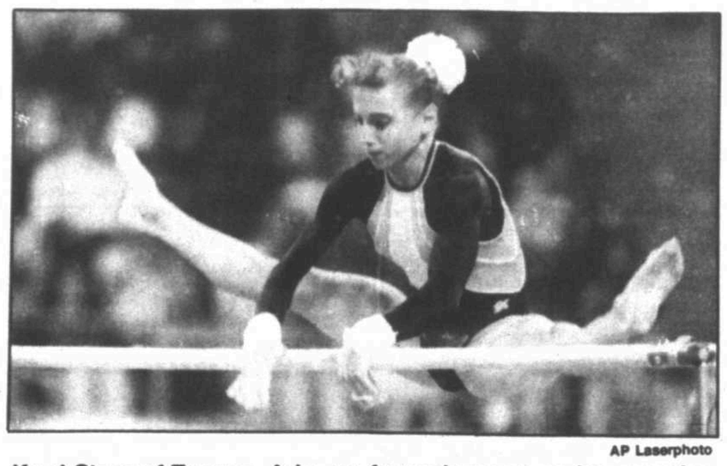

Her 9.875 on the bars wasn't enough to beat training partner Kerri Strug of Tucson, Ariz., who set a festival record with a 9.90. Strug finished second to Miller in the floor exercise and balance beam, just as she had in the all-around.

"I think this is the best one-two punch America has ever had," said Steve Nunno, who coaches both. "They are two of the most-experienced gymnasts we've ever had. I think it's essential to have this level of experience leading our team in 1996, so I hope they'll both stay around for that."

Also Sunday, diver Mary Ellen Clark won the 3-meter springboard title to go along with the gold medal she won Saturday in the platform, and track and field star Connie Price Smith set her second festival record in winning the shot put.

Clark, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., scored 481.32 points on the springboard to easily beat Reyne Borup of Fort Lauderdale, who had 455.64. The bronze medal went to Melisa Moses of Jacksonville, Fla., with 448.50.

Kerri Strug of Tucson, Ariz., performs her uneven bar ruoutine at the U.S. Olympic Festival Sunday.

Clark won a bronze medal on the platform at the Barcelona Olympics and is the current U.S. platform champion. Her best dive Sunday was a reverse 2½ somersault for which she scored 7.5s and 8.0s.

"I've won (in springboard) in high school state meets and other local events," she said. "This is a first for a major event."

The gold medal in the men's platform went to NCAA champion P.J. Bogart of the University of Minnesota, who rallied late to beat Pat Evans and Russ Bertram.

Bogart received five 10s on his next-to-last dive, a backward 2½ somersault in the pike position, and finished with a score of 589.59.

"That's been my most inconsistent dive," Bogart said. "It's been going good here, though. I have no idea why, except for maybe I've had really good takeoffs on it. This is also the first pool where I've been able to see my spot."

Evans, of Cincinnati, had received five 10s on his fourth dive, a forward somersault pike out of a handstand. But he faltered late and finished third with 527.61. Bertram, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., won the silver with 560.07.

■ Golf Roundup

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Nick Price, already the leading money-winner on the PGA Tour this year, won his fourth tournament of the year Sunday when his final-round 66 gave him a three-shot victory in the $1.1 million Federal Express-St. Jude Classic.

It was Price's third victory in as many tour events as he won the Greater Hartford Open and Western Open on consecutive weekends in late June and early July. He also won the Tournament Players Championship in March. No other golfer has more than two tour wins this year.

"I'm just playing well. I'm hitting the fairway. I'm hitting the ball on the green and I'm making putts. There's not much more to say than that," Price said after finishing with an 18-under-par 266.

Jeff Maggert and Rich Fehr finished at 269, one shot better than Fuzzy Zoeller, who began the final round tied for the lead with Price but faded to a 70.

Seniors Northville

JERICHO, N.Y. — Raymond Floyd sank a 30-foot birdie putt on the 17th hole for a 7-under-par 65, tying the tournament record, and won the Northville Long Island Classic by two strokes.

Floyd, who won for the second time this year on the Senior PGA Tour and the fifth time in his career, had 8-under 208 for the three rounds.

He earned $82,500 and became the sixth golfer to top $6 million in career earnings. Floyd, who won 22 times on the regular tour, has made $6,012,997, including $542,009 this year.

LPGA Ping

CANTON, Mass. — Missie Berteotti earned the first victory in her eight years on the LPGA Tour when she beat defending champion Dottie Mochrie on the fifth playoff hole Sunday at the Ping-Welch's Championship.

Berteotti made a 15-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole to finally subdue Mochrie, who had come from five strokes behind at the start of the final round to force the playoff.

Midland American falls to Uvalde in 10

Staff report

WACO — Midland American's stay in the State Senior League All-Star tournament ended here Sunday afternoon on a 14-3 loss to Uvalde in 10 innings at Ferrell Field.

The score was not indicative of an extra inning game, but the Uvalde team erupted for 11 runs on 11 hits and two Midland American errors in the top of the 10th to put away what had been a competitive thriller up to that point.

Mark Holly took the tough loss, American's second in the tournament. However, he pitched 9⅓ innings. He struckout 15 batters and walked only three before hitting the fatal 10th inning when he ended up being charged with 10 runs and 12 hits overall. Russell Dunlavy finished up for Midland.

The two teams were knotted at 3-3 at the end of seven innings of regulation play as Uvalde tied the game in the sixth inning.

Uvalde took a 2-0 lead in the top of the fifth, but Midland came back with its three runs in the bottom of the fifth.

Matthew Withrow started the inning with a walk. John Sosa came on as a pinch runner. Bo Garrison walked and the two runners advanced on a wild pitch. Holly's infield single scored Sosa and Lance Watters plated two runners with a grounder to short that was booted by the shortstop and an outfielder.

Cary Patteson led American's five-hit attack with two hits while Holly, Dunlavy and Watters also had hits in the game.

Young strikes quick against Steelers

■ NFL Exhibition

BARCELONA, Spain (AP) — A year ago, the world came to Barcelona. On Sunday, it was the San Francisco 49ers and Pittsburgh Steelers.

In the first NFL game in Spain, the 49ers beat the Steelers 21-14 in an exhibition before a crowd of 45,330 at Montjuic Olympic Stadium, where the Olympic flame burned for more than two weeks during last summer's Barcelona Games.

"The fans here were tremendous, it happens every year when we come to Europe," San Francisco quarterback Steve Young said. "I'm not sure you need to provide them with any entertainment — they entertain themselves."

American football is still a curiosity in Spain despite the Barcelona Dragons having played for two seasons in the NFL-backed World League.

"The Olympics were here and this shows once again that Barcelona is a great sports town," said NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue, who arrived Sunday from New York.

Young guided San Francisco to a touchdown on the game's first possession, a 7-yard pass to Brent Jones at 9:58. Young completed 5-of-6 passes in the 72-yard, 11-play drive.

"All of a sudden my heart was pounding and was in my throat," 49ers coach George Seifert said. "I couldn't enjoy that first touchdown until I knew what happened to Wallace."

Added Young: "I told him (Wallace) I'd kill him if it was broken."

San Francisco pushed the lead to 14-0 on its first possession in the second half when Odessa Turner scored on a 38-yard pass from backup quarterback Steve Bono.

Pittsburgh made it 14-7 in the final quarter when Steve Avery scored on a 1-yard run to end a 16-play, 80-yard drive engineered by third-string quarterback Alex Van Pelt.

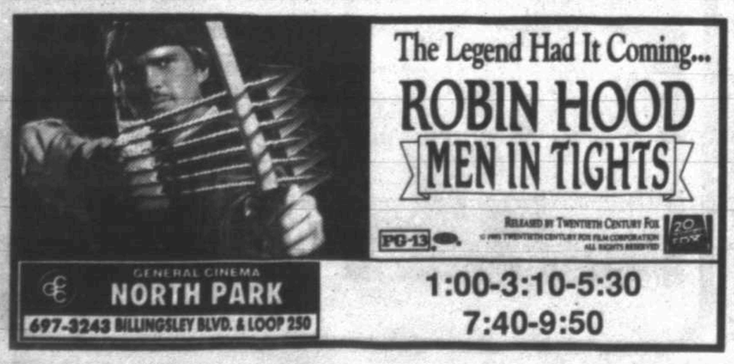

The Steelers tied the score at 4:37 of the final quarter when Mike Tomczak hit Tim Jordan with a 28-yard pass.

The 49ers Adam Walker erased any overtime possibility when he scored on a 1-yard run with 1:35 to play.

SAFE AT ANY SPEED

The remains of World War II bomber hangars loom above the old runway of Rattlesnake Air Base. The course requires a large open driving surface.

PYOTE — The Rattlesnake bomber base, which sent aircraft screaming into the skies during World War II, stands hauntingly quiet in the West Texas sun several miles outside of Pyote.

Only two walls of the old hanger still stand, each with huge, faded World War II propaganda murals painted on them. The air is hot and still, broken only by the sound of an occasional bird and the gunning engine of a police car.

He didn't make it, running over or knocking out four cones.

There was an audible sigh in the front seat of the police unit parked next to the course as Officer Bruce Williams observed the car's movement and marked the number of cones hit. He then picked up his radio mike.

"Ok, you're speed was good, but you've got to make that inertia work for you," he admonished the driver. "You have to move that steering wheel. Now, turn on your lights and pick up those cones."

Welcome to the Midland Police Department's Specialized Performance Driving Course.

The course was started in May 1992 after the site was discovered by Williams and Fred Stubbs at the Midland County Sheriff's Department. The site is used by both the police and sheriff's departments for driving courses.

"The purpose of the course is not to teach the officers how to pursue other vehicles," said Williams, instructor for the course. "It's to teach the officers how to take evasive action, how to make their vehicle work for them in high speed situations. We want to teach them not to just slam on their brakes, but to be able to manuver around obstacles and make the car's inertia work for them instead of against them."

The 40-hour course includes eight hours of classroom instruction and four-ten hour days on the course itself. The driving includes four federally required exercises: a serpentine course, evasive lane change, controlled braking and backing. Each exercise is performed at five mph increments from 35-50 mph and then followed by a qualifying run.

"The serpentine exercise is essentially driving in a figure eight," Williams said. "In the evasive lane change, they drive so far down the lane and then one of officers standing beside it (the lane) flashes a color code at him to direct him to a different lane. The driver has to respond in that direction. Sometimes, we code it so that the driver can choose either lane."

Controlled braking requires that the driver make a 180 turn while recovering from a stop.

The course is conducted twice a month with three to four officers in training in each session. Williams said the he has just finished training all the officers in patrol division and will begin with the detectives next.

"It's tough," Williams said, gesturing to the course. "It's mental stressful to relearn what you have always done in dangerous situations. A lot of people have a false sense of their vehicles' capabilities. Out here, you learn the limitations and how to work best within them."

MONDAY, AUGUST 2, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Taking on new responsibilities will put you in the catbird seat. Bursts of energy give you the competitive edge in October and again in April of 1994. You score the biggest victories when you base decisions on logic, not emotion. Avoid negative people and no-win situations. Love and a stable home life will get 1994 off to a flying start. A longtime dream finally comes true.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: architect Pierre-Charles L'Enfant, figure skater Linda Fratianne, actress Myrna Loy, actor Peter O'Toole.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Romance keeps you guessing. Think before you speak today; sharp words could sabotage your plans. Do not hesitate to ask for legal advice or help in locating needed information.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your employment prospects are bright; you charm everyone you meet. Distant places beckon. There is power in long-range endeavors. Be choosy about the company you keep or your reputation could suffer.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): All may not be quiet on the career or home front. Curb your temper and impatience. An appeal to the heart could produce the results you seek. A good evening to dine out.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A combination of friendliness and dedicated effort can overcome criticism from a VIP. You are able to meet your goals. Your compatibility with a newcomer bodes well for an alliance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A partner may have trouble keeping up with you today. Computer technology captures your attention. You could find a way to expand a business and increase your personal income.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Guard against deception by choosing your allies with care. Cultivate people who share your interest in humanity and social progress. Your artistic talents come to the fore.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You will be happier once you move into a position where you can make independent judgments. An emotional flap will soon pass. Your finances get an unexpected boost from a special friend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A gathering of old chums boosts your spirits. Devote more attention to a relationship that seems to be on shaky ground. Open new lines of communication.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Money arrives from someone at a distance. Better late than never! An older member of the opposite sex arouses your interest. Say "no" to a relationship that you know will never work.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Now is the ideal time to overhaul business procedures. You cannot afford to ignore new technology! Follow up on a financial tip, but do not invest money you cannot afford to lose.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A streak of good luck helps you move toward a career goal. Groom yourself for a leadership position. A friendship may be slowly turning into a romance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your versatility becomes a big asset at work. Get the best professional advice available before tackling a financial problem. Establish a firm foundation for a relationship and it will last longer.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q9853 ♡105 ◇J106 ♣984
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	Pass	Dbl
Rdbl	2 ◇	?

What action do you take?
A.—Partner's redouble shows a good hand, but does not necessarily promise support for the major suits. Therefore, we would stay out of the auction here. Partner can still double to get us to bid.

Q.2—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J10 ♡982 ◇Q9843 ♣J32
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	Pass	Pass	Dbl
Rdbl	?

What action do you take?
A.—You must bid—not out of strength, but weakness. You have a five-card suit, and if you don't show it now, partner is sure to remove to hearts or spades. To prevent landing in a possibly inadequate major-suit fit, respond one diamond now.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q9875 ♡K4 ◇75 ♣K1082
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	Dbl	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You have a useful holding which, opposite the right takeout double, could produce game. To tell partner of your interest, jump to two spades. In response to a takeout double that action is not forcing, merely invitational.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ96 ♡Q102 ◇AKJ4 ♣104
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
3 ◇	Pass	?

What action do vou take?
A.—It looks as if the right contract is three no trump, but ideally partner should declare to protect his club holding. While we won't fault you if you chose that action, we think three spades is more flexible. That might get the hand declared from the right side and has an added plus in that we can think of hands where four spades on a 4-3 fit could be the top spot.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQ76 ♡95 ◇AJ8 ♣AK94
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond. What action do you take?
A.—Reverse your red-suit holdings and you would have a takeout double. On your actual holding, that action is less appealing because partner is likely to respond in your doubleton, leaving you with no convenient call. An immediate one-no-trump overcall is more descriptive.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK5 ♡9643 ◇8 ♣109873
Partner opens the bidding with two no trump. What do you respond?
A.—You are surely going to bid game no matter what your range. Because of your unbalanced hand, as a safety factor you should check to see whether partner has a four-card heart suit, so bid three clubs—the Stayman Convention.

Miller

Tough economic times have led to the decline of theater in America, the 77-year-old playwright told students Friday at the Sewanee Writer's Conference in the University of the South.

"Tickets are $60 or $100 for two — something like that," he said. "So your audience is people on expense accounts or people from out of town."

He said only government intervention could reverse the trend.

"England did it," he said, "but I don't look for it to happen here."

Miller's works include "Death of a Salesman" and "The Crucible." His new play, "Gellburg," is set to open in New York and London next year.

MARTINSBURG, W.Va. — Listening to her fans has kept Kitty Wells in the spotlight for nearly 60 years.

"Fans say don't ever retire, so as long as they keep coming out to our tours and continue to support us, we'll continue to play," the country music hall-of-famer said after giving a five-hour performance Saturday.

Wells, 73, became the first woman to hit No. 1 on the country charts with "It Wasn't God Who Made Honky Tonk Angels." She was the third woman, behind Patsy Cline and Minnie Pearl, elected to the Country Music Hall of Fame.

LOS ANGELES — Actress Nancy Travis, the butcher shop woman who modestly slams a meat cleaver into a sheep's skull in the new film "So I Married an Axe Murderer," has a ready explanation for landing the role.

"How did I get involved with 'Axe Murderer?' I can truthfully say I slept with the producer," Miss Travis said, holding up her hand to show an engagement ring.

Miss Travis, 30, and Rob Fried, the movie's producer, have been dating for four years and are to be married in the spring.

Actresses Kim Basinger and Sharon Stone were among those initially considered to star opposite Mike Myers in the film, but they didn't pan out.

Miss Travis, 30, has appeared in "Three Men and a Baby," "Chaplin" and "The Vanishing." She currently is shooting Universal's "Greed" with Michael J. Fox and Kirk Douglas.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Country singer Billy Dean a...i "Northern Exposure" star Janine Turner team up in the video for Dean's song "I'm Not Built That Way."

"I'm a Texas girl who loves country music, and I'm a big fan of Billy's," Turner said.

Reynolds

Reynolds had lunch Friday with Alabama Development Office director Billy Joe Camp and David Bronner, director of Retirement Systems of Alabama, which administers state pension funds. Folsom joined the group later.

"It was just an effort to have a preliminary discussion," Bronner said. No particular movie was on the table.

After the meeting, Reynolds visited the Alabama Shakespeare Festival and stopped at a shopping mall where he bought several sports prints by Birmingham artist Daniel Moore.

LONDON — Bianca Jagger has accepted undisclosed damages to settle her libel suit against Simon & Schuster, publisher of "The Warhol Diaries," her attorney said Thursday.

Attorney Kevin Bays told Judge Frederick Drake that statements about Mrs. Jagger in the diaries were totally false and that he would not give them further currency by repeating them.

"Suffice it to say that Mrs. Jagger felt she had been singled out for attack by the defendants for no apparent reason.

"She has always prided herself on being an independent woman. Accordingly, she found it particularly hurtful that the Andy Warhol book by its damaging allegations had sought to destroy everything she stood for," he said.

The book was published in 1989, two years after Warhol's death on Feb. 22, 1987.

KENT KWIK CONVENIENCE STORES

DO YOU WONDER WHAT COMPANY NAME WILL BE ON YOUR PAYCHECK NEXT WEEK?

Kent Oil (operating Kent Kwik convenience stores) is a stable West Texas-based company, thirty six years old and still growing. We offer many benefits to our employees. These benefits include:

- Company-assisted medical, dental and life insurance
- Paid vacations
- Sick pay program
- Tuition reimbursement program
- Special incentive programs for all employees
- Profit-sharing and retirement plan
- Intensive new hire training
- Structured continual management training
- Flexible scheduling
- Full and part time hours available
- Work close to home
- Affiliation with Odessa 66 credit Union

We attempt whenever possible to promote from within. Most of our current store managers, middle and upper managment started with the company at the entry level. It is possible to move up quickly based on your experience and level of education.

Working in a convenience store is both exciting and challenging. You have to be outgoing and enjoy serving the public, while at the same time be a self-starter, as you receive very little on the job supervision.

If you are considering a career in the retail industry, give Kent Oil your consideration. Please apply at the Kent Oil office Monday-Friday 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. 3314 N. Loop 250 in Midland. Pre-employment drug test required.

DISTRIBUTORSHIPS

LOOKING FOR PART TIME JOB? HAVE WE GOT A DEAL FOR YOU

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which are available now.

Often Asked ????

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth.

Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have F/T jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors and friends.

Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subsribers'papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday-Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or a family member to substitute a for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!

Come On People!
THIS IS RIDICULOUS!!

Week after week I run ads for different departments in my organization and get limited response. There's NO GIMMICKS - NO SURPRISES - NO HIDDEN FACTORS.
My Company is The Largest in The Nation in its Field and in Texas Since 1974. We have all the benefits that any large corporation could offer. In other words its not only great income but you get all the goodies too, Vacation - Trips - Awards - Insurance - Retirement - Guaranteed Income. Every Week.

Sounds Good So Far Doesn't It?

That's why I can't understand why you wouldn't at least pick-up the phone and investigate. Come see what we have to offer. Monday and Tuesday I'm hiring for sales. No experience necessary, we provide training.

Call Monday and Tuesday, after 8 Am for confidential interview.
