Reagan asks Congress to adopt budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today asked Congress to exhibit "political courage" and adopt a low-growth $973.7 billion budget for next year that would freeze, trim or eliminate scores of familiar domestic programs.

At the same time, the program Reagan portrayed as austere would fail to meet his own earlier target of halving the federal deficit by 1988.

The budget proposes a $30 billion increase in defense spending — guaranteed to provoke congressional criticism — while chopping domestic spending by nearly $40 billion.

It recommends sharp reductions in mass transit, housing and student aid; an end to the revenue-sharing program that turns federal tax dollars back to state and local governments without strings; termination of the federal subsidy of the Amtrak rail-passenger system, and a 5 percent pay cut for all federal civilian workers.

Budget 'unacceptable,' say lawmakers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican as well as Democratic congressional leaders are delivering a united verdict to President Reagan: his $974 billion budget contains too large an increase in defense spending to be politically acceptable on Capitol Hill.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., suggested the Republican-controlled Senate may wind up paring back the president's proposed defense spending increase of $31 billion by roughly half.

"The president, I must say, is in a fairly comfortable position. He says, 'Don't touch Social Security. Don't touch defense. Don't raise taxes. And you can't touch interest on the (national) debt.' That doesn't leave a great deal," Dole said.

"Those of us in the Congress have to maybe look beyond some of the president's promises of the campaign," he added.

Formal release of the budget kept the president on a collision course with Congress, where leaders of both parties have said for weeks that cuts in popular programs, already slashed during Reagan's first term, would be difficult to enact without accompanying spending restraint in defense programs.

While "still a far cry from a balanced budget," Reagan said his spending outline is "a significant step in the right direction" and a "second installment" on the deficit-reduction effort begun last year.

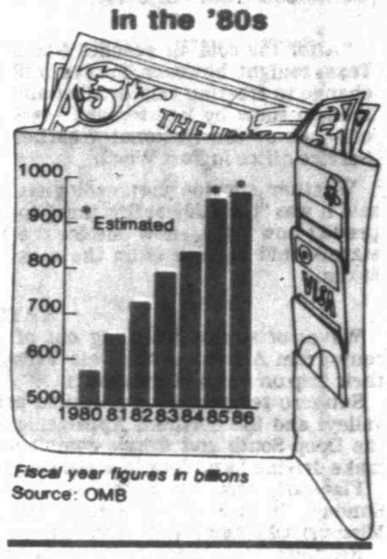

"It will require political courage of a high order to carry this program forward in the halls of Congress," the president declared in a statement accompanying his five-volume blueprint for the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1

Congress was expected to begin work on the budget, the first of Reagan's second term, almost immediately.

The Senate Budget Committee scheduled hearings beginning Tuesday, and Republican Senate leaders predicted floor action on the overall package as early as March. Meanwhile, the House of Representatives, under Democratic control, planned a series of hearings on the budget in various cities for later this month.

Smart sheepdog

Old English sheepdog William of Arethyn keeps a paw on the pulse of the stock exchange with a copy of the Financial Times. Owned by Anthea Clift, the canny canine has amassed a stocks and shares fortune of nearly 100,000 pounds ($112,400), on which he doesn't have to pay tax. Ms. Clift used to work for a stockbrokers' firm and the British Inland Revenue Department has allegedly passed the case to its legal section.

Another snowstorm forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders could possibly be caught in yet another heavy winter storm, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

"There's a low pressure over New Mexico right now," said a spokesman. "That, coupled with warm winds from the Gulf of Mexico and cold winds sweeping down from Canada, is going to produce a 60 percent chance of heavy snow by Tuesday."

A heavy snow is classified as "more than four inches in 12 hours," according to the NWS.

"Everything is going to collide right over us," said the spokesman.

The forecast calls for colder temperatures and cloudy skies tonight with a 40 percent chance of snow after midnight. Lows should be in the low 20s with winds out of the north at 10 to 20 mph.

"We'll have a winter storm watch through Tuesday," said the spokesman. "We don't have an exact prediction on the amount of snow that could fall — that's why we call it a 'watch'."

"Until things firm up, we really can't make an accurate prediction."

The NWS did say, however, that there should be a slight warming trend after Tuesday.

The high for Tuesday will be in the low 30s with northern winds at five to 15 mph. The record high for today's date was a balmy 80 degrees in 1976. Twenty years earlier, a record low was set at nine degrees.

STATE

Freeways in San Antonio were closed and residents were urged to stay at home until midmorning today because of a layer of ice left on the highways by a freezing rain that fell throughout the early morning hours.

Major highways out of the city were open, "but potentially hazardous," state highway officials warned.

A traveler's advisory was in effect for all of the Hill County and South Central Texas today because of the icy road conditions, caused by freezing rain and light snow throughout the region.

Light snow was also reported in scattered areas or Northeast Texas, the South Plains and the Panhandle, and weather officials warned that the state probably will be hit by another round of snow and ice before it can thaw out from last week's winter storm.

Another surge of very cold air approached the Texas Panhandle and North Texas this morning and was expected to begin moving across the rest of the state late tonight and Tuesday.

For the most part, the precipitation was expected to be in the form of scattered areas of rain throughout today.

Libya postpones Britons' release

LONDON (AP) — Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy's regime today postponed for at least 24 hours the release of four Britons held there for nine months, citing "unforeseen circumstances," the British consul in Tripoli said.

Hours earlier Terry Waite, the archbishop of Canterbury's special envoy who negotiated the men's release, was quoted by the British Broadcasting Corp. as saying he was "cautiously optimistic" they would be released early today.

But Consul Hugh Dunnachie said in a telephone interview with Press Association, the British domestic news agency: "The statement from the Libyans said it was due to unforeseen circumstances and I don't know any more than that.

"This is only a 24-hour delay in a nine-month wait, so it is not that bad."

The Church of England press office said it it had no information on the delay.The British Foreign Office called it "disappointing news." A spokesman who declined to be identified said: "...This has very much been a wait-and-see operation."

On Sunday, the Libyan government expressed anger at Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher for unveiling a memorial Friday to a policewoman allegedly shot by a gunman in the Libyan Embassy last April.

The four Britons were arrested weeks after the shooting and the ensuing Libyan Embassy siege.

Late Sunday, the official Libyan news agency JANA said of the unveiling: "This crusader-like and hateful act by Margaret Thatcher may hinder the release of the four Britons imprisoned in Libya."

Police searching for suspect in bar bombing

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Police launched a nationwide hunt today for a man in connection with a bomb blast at a bar in which 80 people, including 69 American military personnel and their dependents, were injured.

Police said the man was seen entering Bobby's Bar in the suburb of Glyfada before the Saturday night explosion and was described by witnesses as being about 25 to 30 years old, dark-skinned and carrying an attache case. Customs officials at Athens Airport, ports and border points were alerted in the event the man tried to leave the country.

Most of the 80 people injured were released after receiving emergency first aid treatment at the nearby U.S. Air Force's Hellenkin Air Base adjacent to Athens airport.

Thirteen U.S. servicemen and dependents, among the 69 Americans wounded when the bomb exploded, were airlifted Sunday to a U.S. base in West Germany for treatment, U.S. and Greek officials said.

Greek police said seven Greeks, a West German and an Ethiopian also were reported injured when the time bomb went off under one of the tables at Bobby's. Police said today two other people were treated and left in the confusion, and it was uncertain what their nationality was.

An anonymous caller who said he represented the "National Front" claimed responsibility for the blast in a call Sunday night to the Athens daily Eleftherotipa. He criticized the United States for the "continuing situation" on Cyprus, where Turkish troops occupy 33 percent of the island.

Some Greeks feel Washington has not done enough to pressure NATO ally Turkey into removing its troops from Cyprus, which Turkey invaded in 1974 following a coup by the Cypriot national guard, led by Greek army officers. Turkey claimed it was protecting the ethnic Turkish Cypriot minority against the Greek Cypriot majority.

The caller said the group would "strike again where Greeks and Americans frequent."

A police official who asked not to be identified said: "We have our doubts as to the authenticity of the so-called National Front. It's totally unknown to us but we are intensifying our investigation because we consider these people extremely dangerous.They struck without warning and went right for blood."

Police said they found parts of a wrist watch and wire in the ruins of the bar, indicating the explosion was caused by a home-made device.

The conservative opposition daily Apoyevmatini claimed today that Premier Andreas Papandreou's socialist administration was shaken by the incident "because it is unable to stop unknown terrorists from committing bomb attacks to express his government's anti-Americanism."

Papandreou came to power in 1981 on an anti-U.S. platform.

The explosion collapsed part of the bar's ceiling, smashed chairs and barstools, blew doors off their hinges and showered the street with glass. Some of the 200 patrons, their clothes scorched, were trampled in the rush to get out.

Ingenuity enabled them to survive, ex-POWs say

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Training and ingenuity enabled American prisoners of war to survive their harsh captivity in North Vietnam, two former POWs say.

"What we were able to do points out how well the American military man is trained," Col. Joseph E. Milligan said. "When you get in a situation like that, it's amazing how far you can reach back into your training."

Col. Donald R. Spoon, a fellow POW with Milligan, said time and time again he saw "the sheer ingenuity of my fellow man with limited resources."

The two men were honored recently for their elevation to colonel in a ceremony at the headquarters of the Aerospace Medical Division at Brooks Air Force Base in San Antonio.

Both men were shot down over North Vietnam in 1967 while flying combat missions in F-4C aircraft and spent six years in the same POW camp until they were released in 1973.

Spoon said that Milligan graphically demonstrated the creativity of the POWs when he healed his burned arm without receiving any medical treatment from his captors.

Milligan's arms were burned when his plane crashed. His wounds were dressed, but the bandages were never changed.

When his arms got badly infected, "I started to smell so bad the guards wouldn't even walk into my cell," Milligan said.

Using techniques taught in survival school, Milligan took off his bandages and let maggots get into the wound and eat away the infection. Once they had done that, he used his own urine — "the closest thing I could find to a sterile solution" — to wash the wounds, he said.

"What he just described is a fairly efficient medical therapy," Spoon said of Milligan's unusual treatment. "Maggots are some of the world's best surgeons, because they get to the infection on a microscopic level."

The prisoners' ingenuity also showed in their ability to make up games and skits to entertain themselves day after day, Spoon said.

One man had worked for three years as a movie usher and knew the plots of more than 300 films by heart, Spoon said. Each night, the POWs would "go to the movies" by gathering around the ex-usher for his recounting of another story.

Milligan completed a doctor of veterinary medicine degree in 1979 at Cornell University, along with a doctoral degree in nutrition and physiology at Rutgers University.

Spoon received his medical degree in 1977 from Washington University, St. Louis, and completed the flight surgeon basic course at the School of Aerospace Medicine at Brooks in 1978.

WEATHER SUMMARY

National Weather Service NOAA, U.S. Dept. of Commerce
AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts snow for Tuesday for the Midwest and Great Lakes and the central Atlantic coast and rain from the eastern Gulf to South Carolina.

SNOW

"After the cold air reaches North Texas tonight, however, the rain will change to freezing rain or sleet and then to snow by late tonight," said officials at the National Weather Service office in Fort Worth.

Weather service meteorologists said it was "too early at this time" to predict how much snow and ice the state would receive from the new storm.

Early morning temperatures today were in the teens in the Panhandle, in the 20s in North Texas, in the 30s in Central Texas, and in the 40s along the coast. At 4 a.m., the mercury ranged from 19 at Amarillo to 42 at Brownsville.

The forecast for today was for snow in the Panhandle, with highs in the 20s; cloudy with rain in North Texas, with highs in the 30s and 40s; and cloudy with occasional light rain or drizzle in South Texas, with highs in the 40s and 50s.

NATION

Waves of storms whistling out of the Northwest from Canada spread snow from Arizona to the Ohio Valley today while low temperatures held their grip on much of the nation.

Sub-zero temperatures prevailed across the upper Ohio and Mississippi valleys and the northern Appalachians. Ice-slicked roads were common in the Deep South and drizzle combined with near-freezing temperatures to make driving hazardous in south central and southwest Texas.

Flagstaff, Ariz., has 28 inches of snow on the ground after 7 inches fell Sunday. Up to 3 inches of snow was likely today across parts of Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma and Nebraska.

Readings early today in the 20-below-zero range were widespread across Montana, northern Colorado and North Dakota.

Rain was scattered from north Florida across South Carolina's coast.

Temperatures across the nation at 1 a.m EST ranged from 34 degrees below zero at Butte, Mont., to 75 degrees at Key West, Fla.

Today's forecast called for snow over the lower Ohio Valley, the Tennessee Valley, the middle Mississippi Valley, the Central Plains, Oklahoma, the southern two-thirds of the Rockies and from Utah across northern Arizona.

Rain was forecast for southern Arizona, the Texas Gulf Coast and the central Gulf states.

Highs will be below zero across North Dakota and northern Minnesota; around 10 degrees for northern Maine; the teens through the central Plains; the 30s for the central Atlantic Coast and along the Washington coast; near 40 for central Texas; around 50 for the desert Southwest; and near 60 for southern Texas and southern California.

BUDGET

If adopted by Congress in anything approaching its current form — an unlikely prospect in view of congressional performance in the past — the budget would amount to a virtual net freeze on all government spending.

It calls for a growth over this year's $959.1 billion budget of a bare 1.5 percent, representing payment of interest on the national debt alone. It would be the smallest increase in federal spending in more than two decades.

Reagan said his budget would reduce deficits, now soaring over $200 billion, to $144 billion for 1988 — missing his earlier target of a reduction to $100 billion by that year.

The projected 1986 deficit would be $180 billion, down from an estimated $222.2 billion in the current year.

The budget does not call for tax increases or reductions, although it repeats Reagan's earlier proposal for Congress to enact a tuition tax credit for parents of students in private schools. Reagan said he would submit a tax simplication plan later in the year.

Not all programs would be trimmed.

Social Security benefits for 65 million Americans would be left untouched, although the budget would cancel cost-of-living increases built into a number of other federal programs. Reagan said earlier he would consider freezing Social Security benefits only if Congress insisted.

The administration is projecting a 4.1 percent cost-of-living increase this year, which would produce a hike in benefits by that percentage next January.

The budget would eliminate popular programs of three past presidents: Richard M. Nixon's general revenue sharing, Lyndon B. Johnson's $600-million-a-year Job Corps to train disadvantaged youths as part of a war on poverty, and Jimmy Carter's Urban Development Action Grants to restore depressed urban areas.

It would also halt the Carter program to stockpile crude oil in a Strategic Petroleum Reserve as insurance against another Mideast oil embargo.

The budget would also increase the civilian space budget by $425 million, to $7 billion — including $230 million in design funds for a 1990s space station.

And, while Reagan's budget trims $8.7 billion from an earlier Pentagon proposal, the final document calls for an increase in actual military spending of some $30 billion, to $277.5 billion — a level the president called "necessary to ensure our national security."

Research money for the president's controversial "Star Wars" proposal for a system to intercept incoming nuclear missiles would be increased from the current $1.4 billion to $3.7 billion under the plan. And development of nuclear weapons would rise from $7.3 billion this year to $8 billion.

In a statement accompanying his budget, Reagan said his proposal would "reduce spending by $51 billion in 1986, $83 billion in 1987 and $105 billion in 1988."

However, Reagan's figures not only reflect budget cuts but projected savings by virtue of projected lower interest payments on the national debt and the $8.7 billion in defense "savings" that do not represent cuts but a reduction from a draft Pentagon budget.

The president, possibly anticipating congressional moves to hold down the growth in Pentagon spending, said he would "not exclude other economies that Congress may devise, so long as they do not imperil my fundamental constitutional responsibilities to look after the national defense and the general welfare of the American people."

Senate Republicans, who had hoped to assemble their own deficit-reduction plan before Reagan's budget was submitted, missed their deadline. But Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., indicated he would keep working on the plan, calling for deeper long-range cuts, as a separate effort.

"Without getting specific, we're going to be negotiating this whole budget," especially the defense portion, Dole said before today's release of the budget.

House Democratic leaders, who earlier had said Reagan's budget would be "dead on arrival," said they would give the budget what Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., called "a respectful" airing.

Under the president's projections, spending would rise above $1 trillion in 1987 for the first time, to $1.0266 trillion.

Aid for college students would be reduced by $2.3 billion in the budget — a 27 percent cut that would deny assistance to more than 1 million students who would currently be eligible. Students would be denied low-interest government loans if their families earned $32,500 or grants if their families earned more than $25,000.

The plan would cut Medicare by $4.1 billion — including a freeze at current payment levels to hospitals and physicians for medical care for the elderly. Other health programs would be cut by $1.7 billion.

LEADERS

Interviewed Sunday on the ABC-TV program "This Week with David Brinkley," Dole said the Senate might slice the president's defense proposal from the 5.9 percent increase his budget seeks — after inflation is subtracted — to a level of around 3 percent. That would reduce the overall budget by $18 billion to $20 billion, he said.

House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, interviewed on the same program, said the proposed budget shows "a blind spot on the part of Mr. Reagan and also Mr. (Defense Secretary Caspar) Weinberger. When they speak of spending, they don't mean military spending. When they speak of shrinking government, they don't think of the Pentagon as a part of government."

"This (budget) doesn't lead us out of the wilderness," said Sen. Lawton Chiles of Florida, the senior Democrat on the Senate Budget Committee. "If he can go to the countryside, and he gets everything that's in this, we're still in bad, bad shape."

Chiles said the administration's claims that defense reductions have already been made is based on "starting from their wish list, not from what they got" and that the president's overall budget, with its proposed $313.7 billion defense component, "doesn't make economic sense."

The proposed budget for the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1 calls for $973.7 billion in spending and projects a $180 billion deficit — if all the spending cuts Reagan wants are approved. This year's deficit is expected to run $222.2 billion.

It recommends domestic spending cuts of around $39 billion — including cutbacks in Medicare, farm price supports, student loans, housing aid and mass transit. It also calls for a termination of general revenue sharing and for an end to the federal subsidy of the Amtrak rail passenger system.

"It is not a freeze (when) you increase Pentagon spending" by $31 billion, said William Gray III, D-Pa., chairman of the House Budget Committee. "The president walked away from the deficit issue and is leaving it in the hands of the Senate and the House, and that's bad news for America," said Gray, interviewed on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

But Gray added that "everyone in Congress recognizes the cancer of these deficits" and that "I think the House is willing to take cuts on everything if everything is on the table."

Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., agreed that defense spending would have to be held down more than the president's budget advocates — but he also said that deep domestic cuts and freezes would also have to be achieved if a target of reducing the deficit by $50 billion next year was to be realized.

Domenici said the White House and Senate Republicans, who are working on their own deficit-reduction plan with an overall freeze as its centerpiece, are "pretty far apart."

He said the president's unwillingness to freeze defense spending and Social Security benefits makes the job of spending cuts in other areas more difficult.

"It's getting very sticky and very tough, especially since the president does not include everything in his freeze. A total freeze would make a real healthy start, but he doesn't have everything in it. So it's doubly difficult," Domenici said Sunday on the Cable News Network program, "Newsmaker Sunday."

In other reaction to the president's budget, Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, in a speech Sunday to a group of housing officials, said Reagan's budget shows "a repudiation even of the housing programs that he has personally espoused."

DeVon Woodland, president of the National Farmers Organization, criticized the administration's proposed budget for farm programs, saying farm aid should not be cut at a time when farmers are suffering their worst financial pains since the Depression."

Defense budget includes missile, bomber

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today sends Congress a $313.7 billion defense budget that continues full-scale procurement of major weapons systems such as the MX missile and B-1 bomber, boosts research spending on "Star Wars" projects and increases the size of the armed services.

The fiscal 1986 spending plan also reflects the administration's continuing emphasis on modernizing conventional forces — although the number of planes and ships to be bought has been reduced compared to last year's projections — and contains funds for defensive biological weapons and a military pay boost.

Presenting the proposed budget to the Senate Armed Services Committee today, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger cautioned against cuts by Congress.

Weinberger urged Congress "not to be lured by the deficit situation into making additional reductions to defense."

But Senate Armed Services Committee chairman Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., told Weinberger defense spending "can and will be reduced."

And a former chairman, Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., told the defense secretary that he has "a growing concern, and apprehension too, about the federal financial affairs of this government."

Stennis said that although he has been a staunch Pentagon supporter for decades, "I may not go for all the items this year...I'm going to vote for something that I think has a chance of passing."

Although Goldwater said the defense budget will be reduced he said he does not believe a freeze on military spending is the route to follow. "All areas of government spending have helped to create the deficit and now all must contribute to reducing it," Goldwater said. "Defense is no exception."

But he said that because of the continuing military threat from the Soviet Union reductions should not be deep ones.

"Now is not the time to be talking about major defense reductions or the unilateral cancellation of strategic programns," Goldwater said.

In his prepared statement, Weinberger defended all major components of the military budget, including the MX missile and research into a space-based strategic defense system. He repeated his arguments that the Pentagon already has trimmed billions in defense spending.

"We cannot continue to reduce further and achieve our national security goals," Weinberger said.

Because of a well-publicized fight within the administration two months ago, the gross totals for the Pentagon's fiscal 1986 spending plan have been known for some time. The Reagan budget asks Congress to authorize programs totaling $313.7 billion during the 12 months starting Oct. 1.

That represents a 5.9 percent increase, after discounting for the effects of inflation, over the $284.7 billion in budget authority granted by Congress for the current fiscal year.

Not all the money authorized each fiscal year is actually spent in that year, however, because purchases of major weapons normally are spread out over several years.

In fiscal 1986, actual spending would total $277.5 billion, up from a revised fiscal 1985 total of $246.3 billion.

More than 38 percent of next year's spending total, or $106.2 billion, is for programs that were authorized in previous years. That reflects the huge defense buildup initiated by Reagan four years ago.

According to long-range forecasts included in the 1986 budget, the Defense Department expects its spending to climb even more over the next five years, rising to $354 billion in fiscal 1987 and to $477.7 billion by fiscal 1990.

While Weinberger's annual report to Congress spoke glowingly of the improvements to be made next year in conventional forces and readiness levels, it is the president's so-called strategic modernization program that receives the highest budget priority.

For example, the plan calls for the procurement of 48 more MX missiles, at a cost of $4.04 billion, and completing the planned acquisition of 100 of the 10-warhead nuclear weapons.

So far, Congress has approved only 21 of the missiles, and the program stands in jeopardy of being scaled back or halted. A series of key test votes will occur this spring on whether the 21 missiles included in this year's budget actually will be purchased.

The 1986 spending plan also calls for $6.2 billion to acquire the last 48 B-1B bombers, bringing the total acquired to 100.

Further, the budget asks for $1.7 billion to acquire a 13th Trident missile-firing submarine, as well as another $2.86 billion to continue research and development of a larger, more accurate Trident 2 missile.

Also requested is another $624.5 million to continue development of a mobile, single-warhead missile known as the Midgetman that would augment the MX force.

The budget calls for a major increase — from $1.4 billion to $3.7 billion — in research money for Star Wars and other futuristic weapons programs. Star Wars research is aimed at developing a strategic defense system in space that could shoot down Soviet missiles.

Economy will grow, administration predicts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite big budget deficits, the economy will grow steadily for the rest of the decade while unemployment declines further, inflation fluctuates at low levels and interest rates keep falling, the Reagan administration predicted today.

Private economists have expressed doubts about the long-term chances for such a combination of events, especially in light of skepticism that the deficits will be reduced even to the still-high levels projected by the White House.

Nevertheless, the same analysts, impressed by two years of economic recovery in the face of record deficits, say the administration predictions could well prove true, at least through 1985 and perhaps longer.

Economic assumptions underlying the budget sent to Congress today include projections that:

—Economic growth, measured by inflation-adjusted gross national product, will slacken to a healthy 3.9 percent this year from the robust 6.8 percent of 1984 and will continue at around 4 percent annually through 1990, when it will be 3.6 percent.

—Unemployment will decline from the 7.1 percent average in the fourth quarter of 1984 to 6.9 percent in the final quarter of this year, 6.8 percent at the end of 1986 and down to 5.7 percent in the fourth quarter of 1990.

The figures include military forces based in the United States. A more commonly used rate for civilian unemployment generally runs one-tenth of a percentage point higher.

—Inflation, as measured by the Consumer Price Index, will rise from the 3.4 percent average for all of last year to 4.1 percent this year and 4.3 percent in 1986 before beginning a decline to 4.2 percent, 3.9 percent, 3.6 percent and then 3.3 percent by 1990. The more widely reported 4 percent index figure for last year compared inflation at year's end to the level at end of 1983.

BOMB

A spokeswoman at the Hellenikon base said 32 Americans, the Ethiopian and a Greek were released after treatment at the base hospital.

Thirteen servicemen and dependents were airlifted to Ramstein Air Base in West Germany and taken to the nearby U.S. Army hospital in Landstuhl, a hospital spokesman said.

One victim was in "very serious" condition, seven were in "satisfactory" condition and five appeared to be out of danger, a spokesman for the Army's 7th Medical Command said.

A spokesman at Hygeia Hospital identified four of the injured Americans as Charles Curmutt, 23, and his wife Carla, 20, who were burned.

Two Americans treated for burns at Athens General Clinic were identified as Mark Gordon, 35; and Ervin Stewart, 30.

Two women, Celeste Smith, a policewoman assigned to the Air Force's 7206th Support Group stationed at the base, and Brenda Burg, 30, wife of a U.S. serviceman, underwent surgery to remove fragments from their legs, officials at the clinic said. Officials did not release the hometowns of the injured.

BRITONS

Two of the Britons were held on charges ranging from communicating with the British news media to carrying letters defaming Libya. The other two men were held without charges.They have been held in a villa outside Tripoli.

Eve Keatley, spokeswoman for Runcie, spiritual head of the Church of England, announced the planned release Sunday, saying: "Mr. Waite has been told that the detainees are to be released to him as a representative of the church, out of respect for the humanitarian involvement of the church in this matter."

The four men are engineers Malcolm Anderson and Robin Plummer and teachers Michael Berdinner and Alan Russell.

Berdinner's sister Mary said she was "overwhelmed with delight" at the news of the release, and Russell's wife Carol said Waite "single-handedly achieved a miracle."

Waite flew to Tripoli on Saturday on his fourth attempt to persuade Libyan authorities to free the Britons.

Britain broke off diplomatic relations with Libya after the siege of the embassy, which followed the killing of the policewoman and the wounding of 11 Libyan dissidents by shots police said were fired from the embassy building during a demonstration against Khadafy.

Although the British government had said freeing the Britons would improve its relations with Libya, it refused to exchange them for five Libyans awaiting trial in Britain on charges of taking part in bomb attacks on Khadafy's opponents.

Despite repeated assurances from Khadafy that the Britons would be released, Waite had been unsuccessful in gaining their freedom in three previous trips to Tripoli.

Man questioned in deaths of family

HOUSTON (AP) — A warrant authorizing police to hold a 20-year-old man being questioned in connection with the slayings of four members of his family was set to expire this morning.

Reginald Lewis was taken into custody Friday. Police questioned him throughout the weekend after obtaining permission from a judge to hold Lewis without charges until 9 a.m. today.

Lewis told investigators that when he came home shortly after 2 a.m. Friday, he found his father's body in flames on the hallway floor and ran outside the house to get help, police said.

Neighbors said they helped Lewis snuff the flaming body of his father, Henry Lewis Sr., 42. Authorities said the man apparently had been shot and strangled.

Mary Lewis, 42, and sons Henry Jr., 22, and Byron, 13, had been shot at close range in different parts of the house, police said.

Police said the family either let their assailant in or left the house unlocked. Officers said no weapon was found in the house, which is located in a Missouri City subdivision.

Fort Bend County Justice of the Peace R. George Molina on Saturday granted a request to hold Lewis another 48 hours. State law forbids authorities to hold a person in custody for more than 24 hours without charges or unless a judge grants an extension.

State Sen. Craig Washington, a Houston attorney representing Lewis, said he met with his client Saturday at the police station.

Washington said Lewis knows "absolutely nothing" about the deaths or why anyone would want to kill his family.

"That tragic situation presented itself to him when he arrived home," Washington said. "He was not involved."

Police said the body of the elder Lewis had been doused with a flammable liquid and ignited. He had been shot and a telephone cord was found wrapped around his head, said Jay Evans, a Harris County medical investigator.

Four empty containers — including a gasoline can — that could have contained flammable liquids were found in the house, investigators said.

Castro allows brothers to visit family in U.S.

HOUSTON (AP) — Fidel Castro's agreement to allow two young men — one of them in the military — to fly to Texas for an extended visit with relatives is a strong indication the Cuban premier seeks a warmer relationship with the United States, a congressman says.

A 50-year-old Houston woman cried with joy Sunday night when she was reunited with nephews she was forced to leave behind in Cuba 21 years ago.

"Oh my God, bless you poor babies," Ruth Halfon repeated over and over as 24-year-old Solomon Imiak and his brother, Abraham, 21, stepped off a private jet with U.S. Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Texas, of Houston, at Houston's Hobby Airport.

After Mrs. Halfon had been refused repeatedly on previous requests that her nephews be allowed to leave their homeland and visit her, Leland intervened on her behalf two weeks ago.

It was "not difficult at all" to get Castro's permission for the brothers to leave Cuba, said Leland, who has made several trips to Cuba in recent years to meet with Castro.

"There is no question about the fact that Mr. Castro wants to ease tensions between our two nations and he is trying desperately to make overtures like this to the Reagan administration," Leland said.

Abraham Imiak's release marked the first time Castro has allowed someone in the military force to quit and leave the country, Leland said.

Mrs. Halfon and her husband left Cuba in 1964 when the government took over their Havana furniture store.

Mrs. Halfon said she began working 16 years ago to get her nephews out of Cuba but had no luck until she appealed to Leland two weeks ago.

"I pleaded. I went to Costa Rica twice and to Mexico. I knocked on every door," she said.

"Being with my family, that is No. 1 for me," Solomon Imiak told reporters in broken English. "It's very emotional to be in the U.S. I'm trembling all over."

His parents, Gregorio and Fany Imiak, and a sister were allowed to leave Cuba two years ago and now live in Venezuela, but Mrs. Halfon said the brothers were denied visas because they were medical students and of military age.

"There are just no words that can explain my feelings," Mrs. Halfon said. "I'm grateful, but I feel guilty because there are so many more families in the same situation who have their sons still over there."

Roadside ditties warn against drunken driving

TYLER (AP) — The state mental health agency is following in the footsteps of Burma Shave, which bowed out of the road sign business with:

"Farewell, O verse
Along the road
How sad to Know you're
Out of mode."

The unlikely comeback of roadside ditties is part of an anti-drunken driving campaign launched in Smith County by the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

Last year the county had 34 traffic fatalities, the largest in the 18-county highway patrol district that includes Tyler, a dry city 15 miles from the nearest liquor store.

The pointed message is clear:

"It's best for
One who hits
The bottle
To let another
Use the throttle."

Deeann McFadden, a community coordinator for MHMR, said the signs are paid for by civic groups and placed on privately-owned land.

"Its not a statewide campaign — just something we're doing locally," she said.

Ms. McFadden said it costs about $375 to put up a series of signs. Two sets have been erected so far, she said.

The slogans are taken from Burma Shave signs promoting highway safety in the 1940s and 1950s.

Ms. McFadden said plans include signs bearing this Burma Shave classic from 1950:

"Drinking drivers
Nothing worse
They put
The quart
Before the hearse."

Burma Shave produced 700 such jingles between 1925 and 1963.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, February 5, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Enter a competition or battle fully prepared and you emerge victorious. A timely business decision gives you a financial boost. Your family has greater influence than in the past. Take constructive advice in the spirit in which it is given. A young person begins to find his real niche. A struggle has strengthened a love relationship. New York Times publisher Arthur Ochs Sulzberger, comedian Red Buttons, actor John Carradine, home run king Hank Aaron, actress Barbara Hershey, NBC News' Bernard Kalb and the Detroit Tigers' Mike Heath share your birthday. Also born on this date: German composer-conductor-pianist Felix Bartholdy Mendelssohn.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Work goes according to plan. Seek solitude if trying to sort out a tricky business or personal problem. A friend boosts your spirits. The news from abroad is encouraging. Plan a trip.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Use greater tact when dealing with difficult co-workers. Jealousy could be the cause of someone's irritation. Share the credit and you win a friend for life. Moderation is the key to romantic success.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Paying attention to detail will save you time and money. Follow up any "hot" leads that sound practical. Romance could give you some anxious moments. Go slow on making a commitment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Steer clear of a friend or relative's get-rich-quick scheme. Keep your savings in the bank. Flexibility helps you become a winner in romance. Keep any diet or exercise resolutions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An affair of the heart cannot be ignored. Postpone making any major decisions until the weekend. A Taurus continues to play a key role in your business or financial affairs.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Good things begin to happen! Finish whatever you start. A Libra enters your professional or personal life in a dramatic way. Make peace with a longtime friend or neighbor.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): By all means, listen to your intuition. Creative and artistic ventures bring rich rewards. A Leo asks probing questions. Be careful how you answer!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Buying a new outfit at a sale will boost your spirits without wrecking your budget. Spend more time with small fry. An older person provides the answer to a riddle.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You have lots of good ideas for self-improvement; put them into action. Focusing on one project at a time will help you become more productive. Avoid scattering your energies.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Pay greater attention to detail and you can avoid costly mistakes. Be patient when dealing with someone who is difficult. A Taurus has some great ideas to share with you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A change in lifestyle benefits the entire family. Donate "white elephants" to your favorite charity in return for a tax write-off. Some of life's greatest pleasures cost little or nothing.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Find constructive outlets for all that nervous energy you have now. A friend or co-worker is under considerable pressure. Be more charitable. Romance is better the second time around!

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South with 60 on score on you hold:
♠94 ♡KQ1095 ◇K1076 ♣Q6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	1 ♠
Dble	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—A close decision. Obviously, you have enough strength in the combined hands to fulfill a partial and, thereby close out the rubber—that could be accomplished easily by bidding one no trump. With a competent defender as partner, however, we would opt to pass and play for penalties, which might be sizable. However, if for a moment we thought that our opponents were the stronger pair (does any bridge player ever?), we would choose to complete the rubber.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠764 ♡AQJ103 ◇KQ8 ♣AQ
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
4 ◇	Pass	4 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—You have shown a strong hand with slam interest, and thus far you have denied a spade control. Partner has shown no interest beyond game, so probably he does not have spade control either. You could bid five hearts to invite slam should he have second-round spade control, but that runs the risk of your side losing three spade tricks. Trust partner and pass.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♡J652 ◇AQ762 ♣J1053
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—You do not have the values for a two-over-one response: you cannot count 3 points for the void in partner's suit. However, you do have enough to act, and the only bid you can make is one no trump.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KJ4 ♡AJ1065 ◇7 ♣A852
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass
3 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—After partner's "high reverse," you are in the slam zone. It's simply a question of how to proceed. What are your choices? You could jump to four spades, but partner might pass, fearing club losers. Or you could cue-bid the ace of clubs before raising spades, which runs the risk that partner might never imagine such splendid trump support. We suggest a third option—bid three spades now and cue-bid the ace of clubs at your next turn. Now partner will know that you have good spades and are interested in slam.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable with 40 on score, you hold:
♠J5 ♡AQJ ◇AQ62 ♣A987
Partner opens the bidding with three spades. What action do you take?
A.—At this score, partner's preempt might be made on a hand slightly stronger than usual. Therefore, you should make some move toward slam, and his obvious choice is a raise to four spades. That expresses your slam interest without getting your side overboard should partner have no more than the seven tricks he promised.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ1072 ♡AK743 ♣762
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you bid now?
A.—As a general rule, two-suited hands do not lend themselves to a takeout double. It is much sounder to show both your suits, so start by overcalling one spade, intending to bid hearts at your next turn. The trouble with a takeout double is that you would be awkwardly placed should the bidding come back to you after your left-hand opponent has made a preemptive raise in diamonds and partner has passed.

AIDS' advances raise hopes it can be conquered, doctors say

By PAUL RAEBURN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Science has made a remarkably rapid advance toward understanding AIDS, raising hopes that the deadly and mysterious disease will be conquered, researchers say.

The work has become more urgent each day. It's estimated that as many as 300,000 people have been infected, and one researcher expects 40,000 new cases in the next two years.

On Thursday, researchers at the National Cancer Institute and Massachusetts General Hospital announced that they had found an antibody that neutralized the retrovirus believed to cause AIDS — an encouraging step in the search for a vaccine.

"There has been more progress with this virus than with any other retrovirus in a short period of time," said Dr. James Curran, director of AIDS activities at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Retroviruses, types of viruses which have been known for some time to cause cancer and other illnesses in animals, have only recently become appreciated as important causes of disease in man.

Last year, researchers at the National Cancer Institute and the Pasteur Institute in Paris reported independently that they had found retroviruses that appeared to cause acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or AIDS.

Now, said Curran, "AIDS is reasonably well understood. The virus has been discovered, and progress in understanding the mechanism of the virus and the genetic code of the virus is proceeding very rapidly."

In recent weeks, these advances have been reported:

— A chemical used in many spermicide creams and gels on the market can kill the AIDS virus in the laboratory.

— Researchers have identified the exact spot where the AIDS virus latches on to certain white blood cells of the immune system, thus weakening the body's defenses against disease.

— At least two anti-viral drugs have been found to be effective against AIDS, again based on laboratory tests. Human tests with one of the drugs, suramin, have begun, and tests with a second, ribavirin, are scheduled to begin very soon.

— The entire complement of the AIDS virus's genes has been isolated and deciphered and can now be produced in large quantities for study.

— A test that detects antibodies to the AIDS virus and thus can identify people exposed to the virus and can screen blood for evidence of the virus will be licensed by the government for general use in a matter of weeks or months.

"Progress in understanding the mechanism of the virus and the genetic code of the virus is proceeding very rapidly," Curran said.

That good news has been tempered, however, by ominous findings concerning the spread and nature of the illness.

On Friday, Curran said he believes some 300,000 people have already been infected with the virus believed to cause AIDS.

Dr. Thomas Quinn of the National Institutes of Health used a study by Curran and others to predict 40,000 cases of AIDS in the United States during the next two years.

Elizabeth Taylor says she took sleeping pills for 35 years

Elizabeth Taylor

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Elizabeth Taylor says she took sleeping pills two at a time for 35 years and mixed the painkiller Percodan with alcohol before family and friends finally convinced her to enter a rehabilitation program.

Miss Taylor spent seven weeks in the Betty Ford Center, a drug and alcohol rehabilitation facility near Palm Springs, Calif., where actresses Liza Minnelli, Mary Tyler Moore and country singer Johnny Cash also have gone. The center was named for the former first lady, who has also undergone treatment.

In an interview in today's New York Times, Miss Taylor, 52, said she entered the center after members of her family and actor Roddy McDowall visited her in a hospital.

"Then they sat down and each read from papers they had prepared, each saying they loved me, each describing incidents they'd witnessed of my debilitation, and each saying that if I kept on the way I was with drugs, I would die," she said.

The actress said she had taken sleeping pills — at least two at a time in order to sleep — for 35 years, and "I was taking a lot of Percodan. I'd take Percodan and a couple of drinks before I would go out. I just felt I had to get stoned to get over my shyness. I needed oblivion, escape."

Miss Taylor also told the Times that she had just decided to break off her engagement to Dennis Stein, who would have become her eighth husband. The paper did not eleaborate on the reported breakup.

NEW YORK (AP) — Rocker David Lee Roth, stepping out on his own to produce a mini-LP without the rest of Van Halen, says he "always wanted to be exactly what I am now — Al Jolson for the '80s."

The new disc, "Crazy from the Heat," features sendups of pop standards "Easy Street," "Just a Gigolo," "Coconut Grove," and the Beach Boys' "California Girls."

"These were songs I grew up listening to, and now, hey, I get to pretend I am a Beach Boy or Louis Prima," Roth, 29, says in the current issue of People magazine.

He says that making the video for "California Girls," — chock full of girls in tiny bikinis — "was like a high-budget home movie."

Ron Darling

BOSTON (AP) — New York Mets pitcher Ron Darling, one of 71 Massachusetts residents named in a federal complaint for unpaid student loans, says that no one told him he was in default and he "wasn't trying to duck anything."

The complaint, filed Friday by U.S. Attorney William Weld, seeks $223,000 in unpaid federal loans. Darling, 24, of Millbury, owes $4,951 that he used to get through Yale University, it says.

Darling, a 12-9 rookie last year who received a reported $100,000 for signing with the Mets, said by telephone from Virginia that he would take care of the overdue loan today.

"I wish I had been notified personally instead of through the media," he said. "I don't appreciate the fact that someone is trying to make a name for himself at my expense."

Garry Trudeau

BOSTON (AP) — Some critics say Garry Trudeau's Pulitizer Prize-winning comic strip "Doonesbury" has gotten too big for the funny pages, and now some editors agree.

Universal Press Syndicate, which distributes the strip, has pulled it from at least three newspapers that refused to run it at the 44-pica width — about 7½ inches — Trudeau wants.

The newspapers, The Standard-Times of New Bedford, The Daily Transcript of Dedham and the Central Maine Morning Sentinel of Waterville, Maine, want to use the strip at the industry standard of 39 picas — a difference of about five-sixths of an inch.

"No foreign force shall intrude on what I publish or how I publish it," said James Ragsdale, editor of The Standard-Times, which will stop getting the comic on April 1. "What troubles me is why the newspaper industry has taken this so quietly. We've fought for our freedom for a long time and now we've been cowed by Garry Trudeau."

Saving farmers

More than a few young women have found marital bliss by heeding the sage advice of their mothers, that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach.

Now a congressman from Texas, Kika de la Garza, appears to be suggesting, albeit inadvertantly, that the old adage might well apply to the search for peaceful co-existence between the United States and the Soviet Union. Or, if not peace, at least a more mutually beneficial relationship.

The congressman suggested during a recent annual meeting of the National Cotton Council that the Soviets' current interest in arms talks may be directly related to that nation's need for food. Farmers in the United States annually produce vastly more food than the people of this country require, yet the tillers of the soil are struggling through economic hard-times and many are leaving farming in search of work.

That's an extremely sad situation because the work farmers perform is necessary to produce the food people need for life and statistics show that once farmers park the tractors and unhitch the plows, many never return to the soil for their livelihood. The farm population in this country already is down to only 3 percent of the nation's total — down from one-third a century ago — yet the farmers are efficient enough to meet the food needs of this country and still provide for millions of others worldwide.

In the past half century, various programs have been utilized in attempts to save American farming. None has worked well enough to insure farming's future, while meeting the standard of fiscal responsibility necessary for these times.

Yet it's obvious the Russians almost annually need more food than they can produce and American farmers typically produce more than the United States can use. Government subsidy programs seem to have only increased marketability hardships.

As the Congress considers the Reagan administration's proposals on farm legislation this year, members certainly should look at the domestic situation. Food for Americans — at reasonable prices — must be assured. But they also should look at the world picture and farming's dilemma. Farmers need the opportunity to compete fairly on the world market

They should look to the prospects for bringing together nations with the excess food produced in this country. Food can bring peace. As former U.S. Sen. George D. Aiken of New Jersey once noted:

"I've never known a country to be starved into democracy."

Another View:

Quebec moderation

Fifteen years ago, French Canadians rioted in the streets, a government minister was kidnapped and murdered by separatist terrorists, and it looked then, and for many years afterward, as if Canada might literally be torn apart by the most divisive issue ever to face this country's northern neighbor.

Times have changed. Quebecers have turned steadily away from confrontation with Canada's central government, which long has been dominated by Anglophone Ontario. This change reflected in a nearly two-thirds decline in membership of the governing Parti Quebecois, and by a recent poll showing only 4 percent of Quebec's French-speaking voters favoring independence — has come about partly because continuing economic hard times have caused people to concentrate more on bread-and-butter issues and less on such questions as whether merchants should be allowed to advertise their wares in English as well as French.

In any case, the Parti Quebecois, which was founded on the single issue of creating an independent Quebec, has pulled back from a party resolution adopted last year announcing it would campaign in the next provincial election (expected in 1986) principally on the issue of Quebec sovereignty. Instead, the party conference, which met the other day, watered down the resolution to a statement that independence is a "fundamental objective" but will not be made the "raison d'etre" of the party's campaign.

Ironically, this moderate shift, which won a better than 2-1 majority, was led by provincial Premier Rene Levesque, once the most hard-line separatist of all. That doesn't mean that Levesque and his followers are abandoning independence altogether, or that the rank and file will necessarily fall meekly into line. A large group of delegates stormed out of the party conference declaring that "our party has been stolen from us."

So long as substantial numbers of Quebecers see themselves as second-class citizens, the threat of a separatist resurgence remains. But clearly Canada, thanks largely to the efforts of former Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, himself a bilingual Quebecer, has turned an important corner in reconciling the interests and the deep ethnic diversity of the country's two principal groups.

TODAY IN HISTORY

In 1783, Britain declared a formal cessation of hostilities with its former colony, the United States of America.

In 1789, presidential electors unanimously chose George Washington to be the first chief executive of the United States.

In 1801, John Marshall was sworn in as Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.

In 1861, delegates from six southern states met in Montgomery, Ala., to form the Confederate States of America.

In 1932, New York Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt opened the Winter Olympic Games at Lake Placid.

In 1938, the play "Our Town" by Thornton Wilder opened on Broadway.

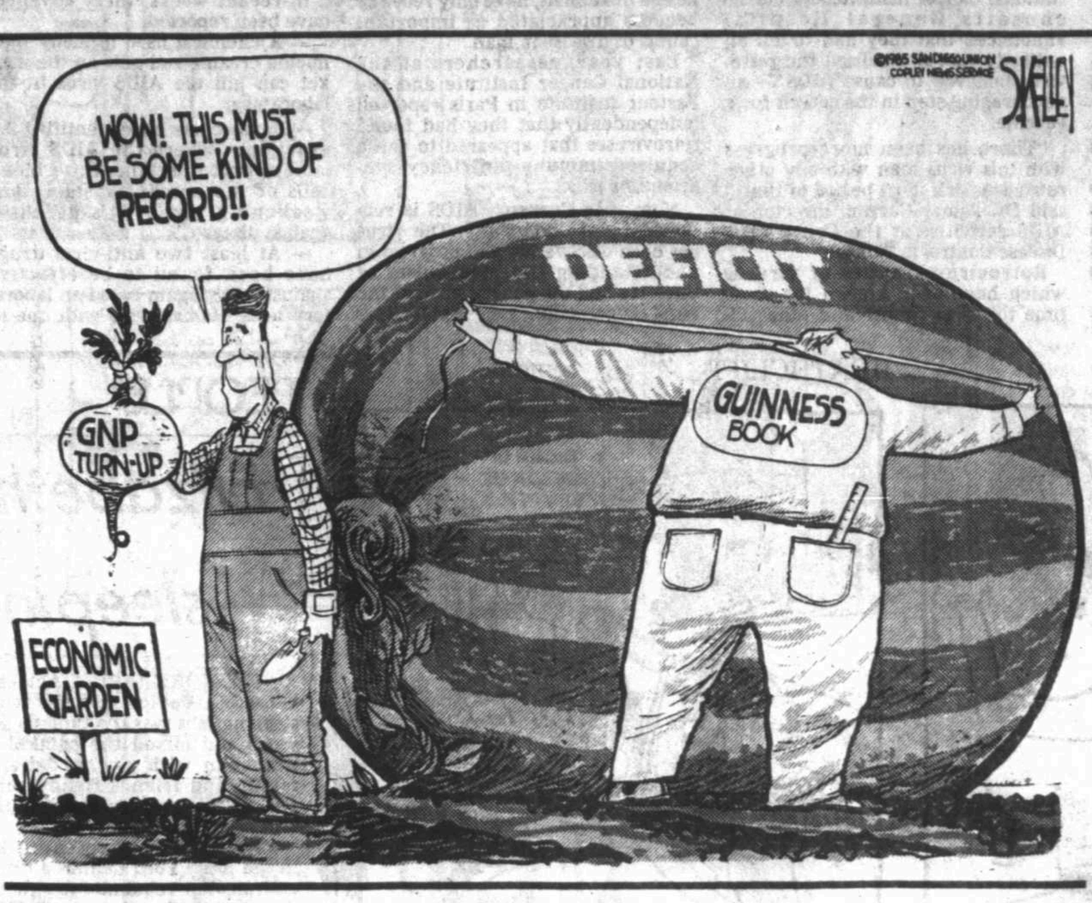

In 1941, the United Service Organization (also known as the USO) was founded.

Five years ago: Congressional leaders promised full investigations of charges that some members of the House and Senate had accepted bribes in the FBI's Abscam undercover operation.

One year ago: U.S. space experts were searching for a missing Westar 6 communications satellite that disappeared after it was launched from the space shuttle Challenger the day before.

Today's birthdays: Actress Ida Lupino is 67. Author-activist Betty Friedan is 64. Actor Conrad Bain is 62. Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., is 47. Comedian David Brenner is 40. Rock singer Alice Cooper is 37. Actress Lisa Eichorn is 33.

Thought for today: "The first and final thing you have to do in this world is to last in it, and not be smashed by it." — Ernest Hemingway (1899-1961).

Phone woes continue to mount

WASHINGTON — Few Americans need to be told that the Justice Department's breakup of the Bell System was a blunder that is costing average consumers both money and inconvenience. Rates have gone up; monthly bills are almost indecipherable.

Jack Anderson

For the pure sport of attacking a monopoly, the department's antitrust division disrupted the best telephone system in the world simply because it was big, efficient and profitable. President Reagan, with his unerring feel for the pulse of America, expressed the consumer's bewilderment succinctly when he was briefed on the divestiture order. He asked: "If it isn't broken, why are we fixing it?"

The situation now, unfortunately, is beyond repair. Like Humpty Dumpty's sad case, there's no way the Bell System can be put back together again. It's now the formidable chore of individual telephone customers to decide which service or combination of services is best for them.

Buy a phone? Lease it from the telephone company? Pay Ma Bell a monthly fee for maintenance or take a chance that nothing will break or wear out? Stick with the company's long-distance service or opt for one of the competitors that, like American Telephone & Telegraph, make their slick pitches on television? Whom do you believe — Burt Lancaster? Cliff Robertson? Andy Griffith? What do they know?

I have another question: Where is the government now that we need it? Having caused the problem, the Justice Department's irresponsible trustbusters have offered consumers absolutely no help in solving it. A government that instructs its citizens on everything from burping a baby to building a back porch somehow hasn't found the time or the energy to give telephone users proper guidance on dealing with the AT&T breakup.

"There should have been the largest consumer information campaign in the history of the country to go along with the breakup of the largest consumer service in the country," Sam Simon, executive director of TRAC, the Telecommunications Research and Action Center, told my reporter Scott Barrett.

Long-distance service is hopelessly confusing. Pity the poor consumer who tries to check out the various possibilities. In three calls to Western Union, for example, TRAC was given three different answers to a fairly simple and important question: "What is the number of cities from which your service can be used?" The answers TRAC got were "20," "269" and "128." If the providers of a service don't know what they're offering, how can the poor consumer make a sensible decision?

The confusion over long-distance options is probably hardest on the elderly. Not only do they generally have less money to throw around, but they grew up in an era when the English language was more straightforward than the obfuscatory, pseudo-scientific jargon favored by the phone companies' hucksters today.

Ironically, the confusion has been to the advantage of the Big Bad Wolf the Justice Department set out to defang. According to the American Association of Retired Persons, the perplexing options have helped convince more than nine out of 10 elderly phone customrs to give up the quest for an alternative and stick with AT&T's long-distance service.

The chaos in the marketplace is being exacerbated by the Reagan administration's anti-regulatory philosophy. According to sources, the competing companies are banking on lax or non-existent enforcement of the law by the Federal Communications Commission.

This confidence is not misplaced. When 17 senators signed a letter to the FCC asking it to develop a standard disclosure form for long-distance companies, commission Chairman Mark Fowler replied with a lecture on "the concept of a competitive, unregulated marketplace."

The attitude at the Justice Department — the original source of all the trouble — is equally laissez-faire. "We want to make this as non-regulatory as possible," said Rick Rule, a top antitrust official. Suiting action to words, the staff that handles complaints about the divestiture has been cut from about 12 to three in recent months.

The results of this relaxation of enforcement efforts are predictable: The customer will be left pretty much defenseless.

One illustration of this involved Allnet, the fourth largest long-distance company in the country. For several months last year it maintained a double billing system for its business and residential customers. During the period, business customers got a new, lower rate while residential customers paid the old rate. The company insisted there was no discrimination, because residential customers could have switched simply by calling the company. The rub is that the company didn't tell its existing residential customers about the bargain rate until several months after it took effect for business customers.

Whether Allnet was in violation of the Federal Communications Act, which requires rates to be "just, fair and not unduly discriminatory," may never be determined. Though a consumer group plans to file a complaint with the FCC this month over the incident, the agency's attitude hardly encourages any hope that it will pursue the case with vigor.

Footnote: The one discernible effort the government has made to cope with the problems it unleashed with the Bell breakup is a modest booklet entited "A Consumer's Guide to Telephone Service." It was put together by Bell Atlantic for distribution in its area. A Bell official said candidly that something like that "usually has more credibility" with the government's backing.

Regan angered by press leak

WASHINGTON — Donald T. Regan, who had previously vowed to stem leaks as the president's new chief of staff, was angered when he read in Wednesday morning's newspapers that he would retain Craig Fuller on the White House senior staff.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

On the previous day, Regan informed only three people of his intent to keep Fuller: President Reagan, Nancy Reagan and Fuller himself. When word leaked out anyway in less than 24 hours, he was furious.

In the first hours after being designated chief of staff, Regan promised that anybody caught leaking to the press would be fired summarily. The transgressor would not even be given a chance to resign, said the ex-Marine colonel.

NO TO DACHAU

With White House Jewish Affairs adviser Marshall Breger acting as spearpoint, Jewish leaders across the nation are pressing Reagan to change his decision not to visit the infamous Dachau extermination camp during European ceremonies celebrating the destruction of Hitler's Nazi state.

But the president will not be budged. Advisers have told him that placating the American Jewish community would have an enormous cost in West Germany, America's most important European ally. They add that the extraordinary decision to house a holocaust museum on the Washington Mall, an unprecedented gesture, has adequately manifested U.S. sentiment about Hitler's slaughter of the Jews.

Reagan wants to give the celebration of the end of World War II a forward flow, not unleash new anti-German passions. But the pressure to "go to Dachau" is continuing to a point that some high officials are privately angry at what they call the Jewish lobby.

DERWINSKI NIXED FOR U.N.

The probability that ambassador at large Vernon (Dick) Walters will succeed outgoing Jeane Kirkpatrick as U.S. ambassador to the U.N. became prohibitively strong when Secretary of State George Shultz gently turned back a request from one of his top conservative aides, counselor Edward Derwinski, to be considered for the post.

Afraid not, Shultz murmured to the former Illinois conservative Republican congressman; you are much too valuable where you are. But in fact, Derwinski feels he does not have enough to do. His latest assignment: a new salmon fishing agreement with Canada.

BUSH'S NO-SHOW

Vice President George Bush did not help his 1988 presidential chances when he skipped last week's Capitol Hill reception honoring Lee Atwater as the newest partner in the Black, Manafort and Stone political consulting firm.

The prestigious Republican firm has not decided whom it will support to be Ronald Reagan's successor, but is considered split between Rep. Jack Kemp and Bush. What made the vice president's absence so surprising was the fact that Atwater, deputy manager of the Reagan-Bush campaign, is Bush's staunchest supporter in the firm.

His absence was unfavorably commented on by some of Atwater's friends. "The vice president doesn't go to lobbyist parties," a Bush staffer told us. That referred to the fact that the firm lobbies in Washington as well as runs campaigns.

MAUREEN IN N.Y.

New York Republican State Chairman George Clark has been pleading with Maureen Reagan to come East from California, establish residence in New York and run against Democatic Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan in 1988.

She has shown no interest whatever, but Clark is persistent. In a recent letter to her, he added a p.s. suggesting New York was a pretty good place to live.

The president's daughter unsuccessfully sought the Republican nomination for the Senate from her native California in 1982 and has not abandoned hopes of trying again later. She is continuing to work as a consultant for the Republican National Committee.

Abortion cheapens life's value

Morality aside, the pro-abortion crowd bugs me because they try to substitute propaganda for reason. People usually do that when the truth and what they want to do are on opposite sides.

Charley Reese

You will hear them say sometimes, "Who knows when life begins?" That is an asinine assertion. It begins with conception. If conception doesn't produce life, you don't need an abortion.

Well, tey will hem and haw, I mean human life. Another ridiculous attempt to run from the truth. In nature not only can you not get something from nothing, you can't get something from something else. Every human pregnancy which has ever been allowed to proceed has produced a human being. Our country alone has 236 million pieces of evidence that the life in the womb is a human life. Nobody ever went to an abortionist and said, "I don't want to have this pot plant."

There's no getting around the facts: life begins at conception and that life is human.

Yes, but a fetus is not a viable human being. That's true. Neither is a baby. A baby or even a child under, say four, cannot sustain its onw life without the assistance of others. Paraplegics are not viable human beings. Some of the elderly, the ill, and the retarded are not viable human beings. But, in our country at least, we don't allow them to be killed for the "crime" of being unable to sustain their own livws without assistance.

Pro-abortionists get their noses out of joint when you point out the similarity of their philosophical positions and those of Nazi Germany. If you choose to wear jackboots, however, you should not object to others correctly identifying your footwear.

It was indeed Nazi Germany which promulgated laws which decreed death to non-viable human beings and sterilization for other undesireables. It was indeed the Nazis who thought of using death as instrument for "improving" society or, as a modern pro-abortionist would put it, imporving the quality of life.

Human beings, however, are not cattle to be bred for desireable characteristics an slaughtered if they have defects. And no society, worthy of being called civilized, would allow people to kill other people simply as a matter of convenience. Abortion as a defacto contraceptive is killing for convenience sake.

Please note that I have compared the thinking of pro-abortionists to the thinking of the Nazis. I am not saying that pro-abortionists are Nazis.

Many people simply have not thought through the issue. Others have been misled by propaganda designed to hide the truth that what is being aborted is a human being. Some have been confused by the propaganda relating abortion on demand to the issue of women's rights.

As for the latter argument, there is no such thing as a right which necessitates the loss of another right. To claim the right to have an abortion is to claim the right to d3ny the right to life of another human being. That is a contradiction.

A woman's body belongs to her. She is free to have sex or not have sex. She if free to use contraceptives or not use contraceptives. But the moment she becomes pregnant, a second peson is involved and she should not be free to dispose of that person's life.

There was a little saying in an old Western movie about a bounty hunter. When life is cheap, death becomes profitable. That little saying describes abortion on demand perfectly. Cheap life, profitable death.

Another wise person said that nobody can ever do just one thing. What he meant was that every act sets off an endless chain of reactions. A society which cheapens the respect for human life to rationalize abortion on demand soon finds that respect for all life is cheapened. Such a society becomes a dangerous and unpleasant place to live.

Social programs face massive spending cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal health and welfare programs — including Medicare, food and drug safety, health research and disease control — face spending freezes or cuts under President Reagan's 1986 budget.

The budget, sent to Congress today, also calls for a cap on Medicaid payments to the states for health services to the poor, a change the administration says will save $16.6 billion over the next five years.

The administration allowed for a 4.1 percent cost-of-living increase next January for recipients of Social Security and Supplemental Security Income, the federal assistance program for the very poor, although the actual amount will depend on inflation over the next year.

Medicare payments to hospitals and physicians, to pay for medical care for the elderly and disabled, would be frozen at current levels. The administration says that would save $2.3 billion from projected cost increases.

And recipients would face an increase in Medicare Part B insurance premiums, which pay for doctors' bills. The premiums will increase $1.30 per month next year over the current $15.50 and continue to rise for the next five years.

The budget also proposes a cap on Medicaid expenditures at $22.2 billion, an increase of $400 million over 1985 but a reduction of $1.3 billion from current 1986 cost estimates for the medical insurance program for the poor.

It would begin a six-year staff reduction within the Social Security Administration that would cut the federal payroll by 17,000 people by 1990, leaving the agency staff at 62,945.

The budget also calls for freezes in programs of the Food and Drug Administration; a $287 million reduction in spending by the National Institutes of Health, most of it in cuts for research grants; and a $16 million cut in spending by the Centers for Disease Control.

Research into AIDS — acquired immune deficiency syndrome — a deadly disease that strikes mostly homosexuals, is cut from $96 million this year to $86 million in 1986. The department said, however, that the cut comes in one-time 1985 expenses and actual research will continue at 1985 levels.

In programs of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the administration is proposing to increase fees for Veterans Administration and Federal Housing Administration mortgage loans.

Election landslide smothers Reagan's pre-victory budget

By EVANS WITT
AP Political Writer

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — What a difference 54.4 million votes make.

Last year, President Reagan spoke of excellence in education and proposed a $100 million election-year hike in education spending for 1985.

With his landslide re-election in the history books, Reagan's post-election budget would chop $2 billion from the Department of Education's bottom line for 1986.

During the election campaign, Reagan dedicated a Buffalo senior citizens apartment house built partially with federal money under a program called Section 202. His 1986 budget would all but wipe out that program.

The president's pre-election spending blueprint suggested only an $8.9 billion cut in domestic programs. This year, the administration wants about $39 billion slashed from domestic spending.

Reagan's 1986 budget, sent to Congress today, gives the voters a first look at the priorities they supported by giving him a second four-year term.

There aren't many surprises.

With the president's last election behind him, the careful effort in 1984 to craft a budget with one eye on keeping voters happy has been discarded.

This first spending blueprint after a landslide re-election victory is generally a rerun of the script laid out in the Reagan budgets of 1981, 1982 and 1983: cuts in domestic spending, increases in defense spending, hopeful talk of balanced budgets and huge federal deficits.

"We said 'no' frequently in 1981...but we did not accomplish enough," Reagan said in his budget message. "We have no choice but to renew our efforts with redoubled vigor."

If his budget seems a change from some things Reagan said and did in 1984, it certainly does fulfill some of his campaign promises and deal with areas where the campaign showed vulnerabilities.

Social Security benefits are untouched, just as Reagan promised after Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale began pummeling the Republican incumbent on the issue during the fall campaign.

Reagan pledged repeatedly during the campaign to stand fast against tax hikes.

"If we fail to reduce excessive federal benefits to special interest groups, we will be saddled either with larger budget deficits or with higher taxes — either of which would be of greater harm to the American economy and people," he said.

Budget would slash farm commodity programs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Department spending would drop by 15 percent in the 1986 fiscal year, mainly through huge cutbacks in farm commodity programs, under the budget President Reagan proposed today.

Overall, the department's spending for the year beginning Oct. 1 would be reduced to $38.5 billion from a near-record $45.1 billion estimated for 1984-85.

The budget for the department's Commodity Credit Corp., which finances price support operations for major crops such as wheat, corn and cotton, along with dairy supports and others, would account for $4.5 billion of the $6.6 billion in USDA cuts.

Other big reductions would include cutbacks in soil and water conservation, rural electric and telephone financing, rural housing and community development, overseas food aid and some child nutrition programs.

Although much of the cutback in commodity programs will be handled under present authority — no payments for idling land are expected in 1986, for example — some of the Reagan blueprint will require new legislation or at least a tacit nod from Capitol Hill. In this area would be the virtual elimination of some long-standing programs.

One of the administration's main targets is the basic apparatus under which federal price supports are carried out.

This includes "loan" rates, which tell farmers how much they can borrow from USDA by using their crops as collateral, and "target" prices, which are goals used to compute federal subsidies when market prices fall below the targets.

Another of Reagan's pet peeves has been the practice of paying farmers cash "diversion" payments for taking part of their land from production when surpluses develop.

If the current farm programs are not changed, the budget report said, commodity spending could total $73 billion in the 1986-89 period. But if Congress goes along with the budget and the administration's farm bill proposals — which are expected to be announced later this month — costs could be held to $34 billion, it said.

Total USDA outlays rose to a record of about $46.4 billion in 1982-83 in the aftermath of huge crop production and rising unemployment, which swelled food stamp rolls.

One reason for the surge this fiscal year was a decision to make advance payments for 1985 crop cutbacks available when farmers began to sign up last fall, just before the November election.

Some other items in the Reagan budget would:

— Phase out by 1990 the rural electric and telephone programs handled by the Rural Electrification Administration. Electric loan guarantees next fiscal year would be reduced to $1.1 billion from $2.6 billion this year. Guarantees for telephone borrowers would be terminated.

— Phase out soil and water conservation programs over two years. Funds and staff of the department's Soil Conservation Service would be cut two-thirds by 1987. Watershed assistance and other development programs would be dropped.

Exporter diverts U.S. choppers to North Korea, agency says

WASHINGTON (AP) — North Korea has received more than 80 U.S.-built helicopters — similar to military models provided to South Korea — through a West German exporter who allegedly diverted them there illegally, the Commerce Department says.

Commerce's deputy assistant secretary for export enforcement, Theodore Wu, said Sunday that the aircraft, if modified for military use, would be enough "to give close air-to-ground support for a whole regiment of troops."

The transactions involving Hughes model 300 and 500 helicopters "is probably the largest illegal diversion of U.S.-manufactured aircraft, of helicopters, that we know of," Wu said in a telephone interview.

U.S. policy provides for an embargo against any goods being shipped to North Korea, with the sole exception of non-commercial quantities of humanitarian items.

On Friday, Customs and Commerce Department agents armed with search warrants seized documents from two Los Angeles-area freight companies that Wu said were allegedly involved in packing and forwarding some of the helicopters. He identified the companies as Unitrans International Corp. in Inglewood and Associated Industries in North Hollywood.

Also on Friday, the department revoked the export licenses of two West German companies, an official of one of the firms and eight related parties, most of them in the Los Angeles area. That step made it illegal for anyone to deal with them in transactions involving goods of U.S. origin, Wu said.

Wu said the evidence indicates that Kurt Behrens, managing director of Dela-Avia Fluggerate Gmbh., had ordered at least 85 helicopters from Hughes for delivery in 1983 and 1984, and at least 80 of the craft were delivered.

But instead of going to Behrens in West Germany, the helicopters were shipped to North Korea, he said.

The latest shipment, involving 15 helicopters and repair parts, was shipped from Los Angeles on a Panamanian-flag vessel, the Westwood Merchant, Wu said.

They were unloaded in Antwerp, Belgium, trucked 75 miles north to Rotterdam, the Netherlands, and put on a Soviet vessel, the Prorokov. The ship was ostensibly bound for Hong Kong, but the helicopters apparently went instead to North Korea, he said.

The evidence shows that another shipment, in 1983, went from Los Angeles to Japan before being diverted to North Korea, he said.

Wu said there is no information so far to indicate that Hughes Helicopter, based in the Los Angeles suburb of Culver City, knew anything about the scheme. "The company is cooperating with the Commerce Department" in its further investigation with the Justice Department, said Wu.

But he said documents indicate that the traders who filed export papers with the U.S. government concerning the transactions "had reason to know, or in fact knew, that the copters were not going to West Germany but were intended for North Korea."

Military versions of the model 500 helicopter are capable of carrying anti-tank rockets and machine guns or of transporting up to seven soldiers, according to the authoritative reference book Jane's All the World's Aircraft.

The book says South Korea has for several years been building military versions of the model 500.

The "related parties" denied U.S. export privileges, he said, were Associated Air Services of Van Nuys, Calif.; National Helicopter Service and Engineering, Van Nuys; Associated Industries; Spedition Killewald Exportrans Gmbh., Berlin; Arnold A. Semler, Studio City, Calif., and a company bearing his name; Ronald H. Semler, identified as general manager of Associated Industries; and Monte Barry Semler.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Chief: Party made mistakes

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam's Communist Party chief Le Duan has acknowledged his country suffers from the party's "shortcomings and mistakes" in economic and other affairs, the Vietnam News Agency reported.

In a speech marking the party's 55th anniversary, Le Duan also called for strengthening ties with the Soviet Union and improving relations with China and Southeast Asian countries, VNA reported Sunday.

Le Duan said Vietnam has made great strides since the communist victory in 1975. "Nonetheless, we have had shortcomings and mistakes in the organization of the economic structure, in socialist transformation, in management, in ideological and cultural work and organizational and cadre work," he said.

Crash kills skydivers

CANNET-DES-MAURES, France (AP) — A single-engine plane carrying a pilot and five members of a skydiving club crashed into a hill near the French Riviera, killing all aboard, police said.

The cause of the crash, which occurred soon after takeoff Sunday, was under investigation. Police said the plane exploded after it hit the hill.

Car bomb explodes

PARIS (AP) — A bomb explosion destroyed three cars and damaged a dozen others outside the French ministry that oversees the territory of New Caledonia.

There were no injuries and no group claimed responsibility for the Sunday bombing.

Pope pleads with rebels to end fighting

AYACUCHO, Peru (AP) — Pope John Paul II has urged leftist rebels in the heart of Peru's guerrilla war zone to lay down their weapons and convert "to the cause of reconciliation and peace."

The pope visited the military-controlled city of Ayacucho, birthplace of the leftist rebel group known as the Shining Path, on Sunday and pleaded for an end to fighting in the Andes Mountain region that has claimed 4,000 dead in four years.

The army, buttressed by 5,000 extra soldiers, banned the wearing of ponchos or hats, used by people in the region to ward off the mountain cold. Security authorities claimed terrorists might try to smuggle arms and explosives under their garments or hats.

The pontiff returned to Lima on Sunday, and was scheduled to travel to two northern cities today, the third day of a Peruvian journey. He is to deliver an afternoon Mass at the agricultural and industrial city of Trujille. The area boasts pre-Incan ruins and the remains of an adobe city built by the Chimu Indians, who were moon worshippers.

He also plans to visit Piura, the first South American city founded by Spanish conqueror Francisco Pizarro, in 1532. The area just below the border with Ecuador was devastated by heavy rains two years ago which caused widespread damage and disease.

On Sunday, the pope told cheering crowds at the heavily guarded, sandbagged airport at Ayacucho: "I ask you then, in the name of God, to change your road, convert yourselves to the cause of reconciliation and peace."

"You still have time," he said. "Many tears of innocent victims await your response."

The Maoist guerrillas say they want to oust the elected federal administration and install a Marxist government. Besides the dead, another 1,000 people have been reported missing. Peruvian security forces have been accused of responsibility for many of the missing.

"I beg you with pain in my heart, and at the same time with firmness and hope that you reflect over the roads you have chosen," John Paul said. "Violence is not a means of construction."

He told the people of Ayacucho, which means "corner of the dead" in the Incan language of Quechua: "In Peru you are presented with a task that cannot be postponed — work through non-violent means to re-establish justice in human, social, economic and political relations."

Before traveling to Ayacucho, where Peru won its independence from Spain in an 1824 battle, the 64-year-old pope spoke to thousands at the ancient Incan capital of Cuzco, which sits 11,000 feet high in the Andes and is a major tourist area famous for its terraced hills and hand-cut stones.

He lashed out against class disparities, violence, corruption and cocaine trafficking. The crowd hailed the pope's comments by blowing shell horns.

After his speech, the pontiff donned a traditional Andean poncho over his white overcoat.

At a Sunday afternoon Mass to more than 1 million people at a race track in the capital of Lima, the pope defended Catholic teachings. He condemned divorce, unmarried couples living together, sterilization, contraception and abortion.

Firefighters sprayed water hoses to help cool the crowds packed into the stands in the hot sunshine. Several people fainted from the heat.

The pope began his 12-day journey Jan. 28.

O'Meara no freak

By BOB GREEN

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Mark O'Meara said there was a special value in his victory in the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am golf tournament.

"It shows that last year was not a freak of nature," O'Meara said Sunday after winning the event.

Last season O'Meara was universally regarded as the most improved player on the PGA Tour.

After playing three seasons without particular distinction, he put together one of the more enviable records in the game. He won once, was second five times, finished in the top 10 in 15 events, led the Tour in birdies and was second only to Tom Watson in money-winnings with $465,873.

With an early-season triumph to his credit this season, the sturdy 28-year-old appeared poised to make another run at the top rank of golf's leading performers.

"I'm becoming a good player," he said. "But there's a lot of room for improvement.

"I'm going to keep on grinding, keep on working on my game, keep on trying to improve.

"I want to be a good player, maybe a very good player. I want to see how far I can go."

O'Meara had a chance to win this title a year ago. He had an 8-foot eagle putt on the 18th hole that would have won it. But the young man, in a position to win for the first time, 3-putted and eventually finished third.

This time it did not escape.

And it was his pressure putting on bumpy greens that turned the trick.

Leading by one and under a three-man attack, O'Meara had to drop a 6-foot putt to save par on the 15th. He missed the green and again faced a 6-footer for par on the 16th.

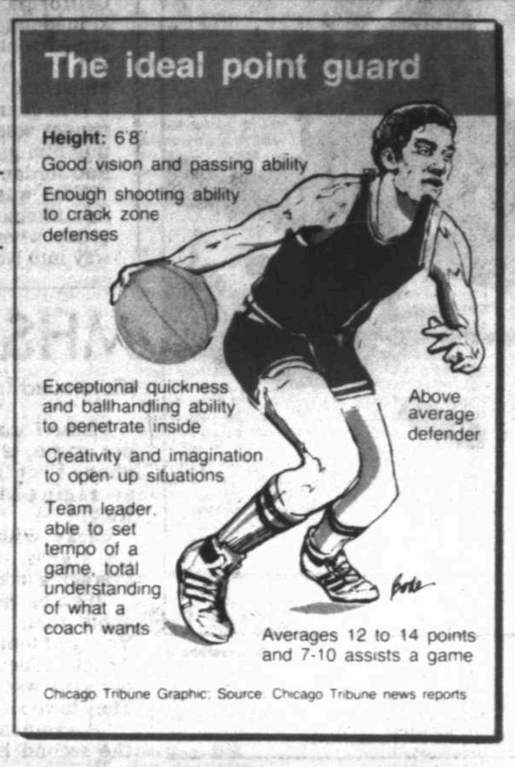

On the tough 17th, a par-3 jutting into Carmel Bay, he buried his tee shot in a bunker and came out long, 10-12 feet from the cup.

He needed that putt to save par and the lead.

"The greens were bumpy," he said. "I said to myself, 'well, just give it the best stroke you can. That's all you can do'."

"It bounced up a little, then hit a bump and went right, and hit a bump and went left, and back to the right, then left again and right in the cup.

Chaps in first all by selves

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland College returns to action at the Langford Chaparral Center at 8 p.m. today against South Plains College after a perilous trip into the frigid wastes of the Panhandle last Thursday.

Coach Jerry Stone embarked on the journey to the hinterlands just hopeful that the team returned with a victory and the bus didn't break down in a snow drift on a lonely stretch of road somewhere.

As it turned out, the Chaps not only returned with a victory over Clarendon's Bulldogs, 69-49, but there was a bonus waiting back home. New Mexico Junior College had upset Odessa College in Hobbs, N.M., so the Chaps were back in first place all by their lonesome.

On the face of it, the Chaps should have no trouble keeping the Wranglers at arm's length. MC defeated South Plains 88-61 at Levelland the last time around and SPC is still looking for its first Western Junior College Athletic Conference victory.

However, SPC has played some folks close, losing to OC, 62-56; NMJC, 93-81; Howard 89-82, and going into overtime before succumbing to Clarendon. A win tonight would make the season for the Plainsmen.

Midland College takes a 9-1 conference and 18-3 overall record into the contest.

Steve Liford, 22.2 points per game, and Tony Burt, 11.3, are the scoring threats for SPC. Liford also is averaging 6.8 rebounds a game while Henry James is a 5.6 per game rebound man and Burt and Titus Dock each are pulling down 5.4 a game.

Liford does a little of everything, including steals. He has 72, which is tops in the league. Burt is tied for third in blocked shots behind MC's 6-9 Teviin Binns, the leader with 69. Burt has 31.

After tonight's game, MC must journey to Roswell, N.M., to play New Mexico Military Institute Thursday night, which looms as one of the tougher tasks in the season's last half.

Carner easy Arden winner

NORTH MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — JoAnne Carner, though troubled by a pulled muscle in her left shoulder, fired an 2-under-par 70 in the final round Sunday and coasted to a six-stroke victory in the $200,000 Elizabeth Arden Classic women's golf tournament.

Carner, who picked up a winner's purse of $30,000, had a four-round total of 280 to outdistanced defending champion Patty Sheehan and Jane Blalock, who tied for second place.

Sheehan's 5-under 67 was the low score for the final round, while Blalock had a 1-under 71 on the 6,092-yard Turnberry Isle course.

Carner held a five-stroke lead as play began under balmy conditions, but wasn't comfortable even with that advantage because of the nagging painful injury suffered during Saturday's third round.

"I thought it was going to feel better today, but it didn't," said Carner, who had hurt her shoulder while attempting a bunker shot at the 10th hole.

"It's the first time I hurt my shoulder that bad. There were times out there when I'd really have to flinch because of the pain," said Carner, an LPGA veteran whose earnings before Sunday's victory neared $2 million.

Carner said she aggravated the injury twice before the final round began.

"I pulled a muscle on the practicing tee last night and again this morning," Carner said. "The trainer gave me an ultrasound treatment and massaged it, but I really didn't know what to expect."

Carner was forced to change her strategy. Instead of counting on long drives, the Lake Worth, Fla., golfer concentrated on short putts to protect her lead.

"I usually shoulder putt, but I couldn't even do that," she said. "I had to go lower and use my wrist a lot."

Carner, who had won this LPGA event in 1982, felt assured of the title after No. 15 when Janet Coles triple-bogeyed the par-4 hole — although the champion bogeyed the hole herself.

Tied for third place at 287 were Lauri Rinker, after a closing round 69, and Coles and Alice Miller with 72s.

Second at stake at MHS tonight

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

San Angelo will meet Midland High's Lady Bulldogs at 8 p.m. today in the MHS gym under some dire set of circumstances in the girls District 4-5A basketball race.

San Angelo, Midland High and Midland Lee are all tied for second place in the 4-5A war with identical 9-3 loop records. Odessa Permian owns sole possession of first place with a 10-2 reading, but there are only two league games left to be played.

Tonight's MHS-San Angelo loser can almost bet that a playoff berth will go by the wayside while the winner will live to fight for another night.

Midland Lee, who was off to a perfect 7-0 start in the first half, has faltered badly in the second half, losing three of five games. Lee will try to rebound from a loss to Permian Saturday when they travel to 3-9 Big Spring tonight. Lee will finish at home Friday in the Lee gym against 4-8 Abilene High.

Those are two games Lee should win, so the MHS-San Angelo game tonight becomes a big one for the winner and a tough one for the loser.

MHS will finish regular season play Friday on the road at 4-8 Abilene Cooper.

MHS defeated San Angelo on the road in the first half in a narrow 44-40 contest and another match like the first one is expected again.

Please see MHS, Page 2B

Foyt, Unser team pilot Porsche to victory

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — While the winners celebrated their good fortune, Englishman Derek Bell sadly explained the problems that cost him and his teammates a victory Sunday in the Daytona Sun-Bank 24-Hours sports car endurance race that had seemed secure until the final two hours.

The quartet of A.J. Foyt, Frenchman Bob Wollek, Al Unser and Belgian Thierry Boutsen drove a Porsche 962 prototype — virtually identical to the one driven by Bell, Al Holbert and Al Unser Jr. — to a stunning triumph at Daytona International Speedway in America's most prestigous endurance event.

"It's just an awful feeling," said Bell, who watched helplessly as Wollek drove his car past and into the lead while Bell was desperately trying to restart his Porsche. "It (the victory) didn't just slip away, it went with a dirty great fall."

THE BELL-Holbert-Unser Jr. car led from the fourth hour until just 43 minutes from the end, a total of 574 laps around the 3.56-mile, seven-turn road circuit.

But a combination of fuel flow and electrical problems turned the last two hours of the race into a nightmare.

Foyt approached Bell as interviews were beginning following the race and said, "It's like a storybook. Everything was going good (for you), then everything went to hell."

Wollek drove the last two hours for his team, which had trailed by as much as 13 laps Saturday night and was still four laps behind going into the final two hours.

"I knew when I got into the car that we were picking up 10 seconds a lap," said Wollek, who along with Foyt won here in 1983 and finished second last year. "We knew they were having problems and we knew we could win. The only thing we didn't know was they were going to stop."

Foyt said that after the lead car began to develop problems Sunday, car-owner Preston Henn's team made a decision.

"We all agreed to go for broke," Foyt said. "We were gonna break the car or win. And we all pretty much agreed that Bob could go the fastest and take care of the car the best at the end."

THE WINNERS, who took the lead for good on lap 681, completed 703 laps, covering 2,502.68 miles at an average speed of 104.162 mph.

Bell still was leading by a seemingly comfortable three laps when the car stalled on the high banking with 46 minutes remaining. He managed to restart the Porsche after the lead was cut to less than two laps, but it stalled again moments later.

This time, it took an agonizing 13 minutes to restart the engine.

It was the second victory in this race for Foyt and Wollek, who won here in 1983 and finished second last year, all in cars owned by Florida flea market owner Preston Henn.

Both Foyt, 50, and Wollek, 41, had complained about feeling ill prior to and during the race, apparently suffering from flu. That's why Henn hired Boutsen, the only Formula One regular in the 76-car starting field, as a fourth driver Saturday night after the car in which he started the race retired with a mechanical problem.

But both Foyt, a four-time Indianapolis 500 winner, and Wollek, a six-time Porsche Cup champion, were able to continue taking their driving shifts Sunday.

IT WAS the first such victory for both Boutsen and Unser, a three-time Indy 500 winner making his debut in the International Motor Sports Association Camel GT series.

It looked like a runaway by early Sunday until the leaders were slowed by a near-miss with the younger Unser at the wheel, a pair of clogged oil filters and, finally, the first ignition problem just 90 minutes from the end.

Holbert's crew had to change the front bodywork on the car after Unser was tapped by another car in the early-morning hours. Then there were two long stops to change the fuel filters and clean out the fuel lines.

Then, with just 1½ hours left, Holbert drove the car slowly into the pits with an apparent ignition problem. In fact, the car failed to start for a few moments and the pit stop took 3 minutes, 8 seconds.

Bell nursed the car through the final 90 seconds, at times turning laps nearly a half-minute slower than it had been earlier in the race.

He rolled slowly into the pits one hour from the end. The crew changed "a few ignition parts" in the one-minute stop and the car was back up to speed for a few moments.

And the revolution continues

I don't know how to say this, maybe because I never thought I'd have to.

Tyrone Bogues has more impact on a game than Spud Webb.

That sounds ridiculous, I know, so you had to see it to believe it.

Maybe it's simply a classic case of a good little man-being better than a good big man.

Wake Forest beat North Carolina State before the horrified eyes of West Texas on tv Saturday, 94-61 or 91-64, it really doesn't matter. It was a rout from the word go and the difference between the teams was Tyrone Bogues, all five feet, three inches of him.

Even Al McGuire, an abashed Spud Webb "Here comes the PT boat" fan, was won over by Bogues' performance.

Al blurted out, "This kid could revolutionize the game. He gives the game a whole new concept."

Come on, Al, I said that two weeks ago...about Midland College's 5-3 Pooky Wigington.

McGuire said Bogues was as intimidating as any big man could be. And he was right. The Wolfpack didn't have any one with the size to handle him.

IT'S NOT that the 5-7 Spud, who only a few nights before had been one of the prime motivators in State's stunning walloping of Georgia Tech, was so bad, it's just that Bogues' was so good. Even Reggie Jackson, the self-acclaimed straw who stirs the drink, had to be envious.

The former Midland College All-America has more physical tools than Tyrone, but Bogues makes up for his inability to jump 39 inches vertical with his ability to make things happen.

Saturday it was a case of the Wolfpack not having any one quick enough to keep up Bogues. It may mean every team will have to recruit a pepper pot just to keep the opposition within reach.

The little waterbug makes so many things happen. He's every where at once and comes from so many different angles that the bigger guys are flustered. They stand around in helpless disbelief as Bogues runs circles around them.

They say he can't shoot from outside, his one weakness, and if he can dunk, it's only with a running start, but otherwise he's like an execution, electrifying. Even as one-sided as the game was Saturday, it still held the interest because of the two smallest players on the floor. Although the heart was with Spud, they were both a delight to watch.

WATCHING Bogues, you sat there marveling, "The big fellows are great athletes, too...for their size."

It does make you wonder how many more Tyrone Bogues there are around—I don't imagine too many—that are passed over simply because they don't have the height numbers that recruiters demand.

Abe Lemons, observing the fact that basketball players are growing so tall that the 10-foot basket has become a joke rather than a challenge, once suggested you could really revolutionize the thinking of the game by boring holes in the floor and make the object to drop the ball in. He felt that would bring back the "quick smaller player."

Ewing, Sampson, Alajuwon, Koncak, enjoy it while you can. Your days may be numbered as the super stars.

As for Bogues and Webb, Saturday was one game. I can't wait to see the return match for Spud's reply to Tyrone.

New Jersey's Kampuri Hannu blocks a shot with his stick in NHL action.

Kidnapped cager turned loose

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — Tony Neal, a basketball player at California State-Fullerton, was kidnapped before a game by an armed robber who threatened to kill him, but then released him unharmed, officials said.

"I'm gonna spare you," the kidnapper told Neal, 21, before letting him go, Santa Ana police Lt. Bob Jordan said.

Neal was stopped at a Santa Ana intersection at 5:50 p.m. Saturday when the man forced his way into Neal's car, Jordan said.

Pointing a revolver, the man ordered the 6-foot-6 forward to drive him to several locations before the two ended up in Sante Fe Springs, about 20 miles north of Santa Ana, Los Angeles County sheriff's deputies said.

The man then took $40 from Neal's wallet and threatened to kill the college senior, Jordan said. But he instead threw the player's keys in the bushes and fled.

Neal recovered the keys and reported the incident to the sheriff's department.

One of the Titan's top players, Neal was reported missing after failing to show up at the Fullerton gym for a game against Pacific Coast Athletic Association rival Long Beach State.

Fullerton Coach George McQuarn said he last saw his top scorer and rebounder at the team's pregame meal at 1 p.m. He then made repeated attempts to contact Neal when he failed to show up for the game, which Fullerton won 69-60.

MHS

Denise Lanz, averaging 15.4 points per game, is leading the Bulldog charge while Diedra Knapp is averaging at a 8.3 clip and Tina Knight 7.4.

Becky White's 9.0 average paces Lee's girls, who have no one else averaging over 7 points per game.

"It's a big game. There is no doubt about that," said MHS coach Jane Young of tonight's meeting with San Angelo. "They have a good team, but our girls will give it their best shot. They have all year long.

"We've done some good things in the second half. We lost our first two district games and have lost only once since then. We would be in real good shape right now if we hadn't lost to Permian by one point in the second half."

Lee coach Shirley Stephenson said, "We have to put the Permian loss behind us and win the last two games."

The top two teams from every 5A district enters the playoffs. Should two teams end up in a tie for second place, a one game playoff will be held to determine which team advances.

A Midland High victory tonight could set up a key second place playoff battle with Midland Lee — provided the Rebels win out.

It's nail-biting time for the girls of 4-5A.

Hess slalom winner

BORMIO, Italy (AP) — Swiss skier Erika Hess won the women's combined slalom today for the World Alpine Ski Championships, and according to a preliminary computation of points the victory gave her the world combined title.

Hess, 22, from Grafenort, mastered two perfect heats down the Stelvio track in this Italian resort to clock a winning aggregate time of 1 minute, 30.79 seconds.

Davis return buoys Suns

Associated Press

After missing the first 47 games of the season with torn knee ligaments, it was fitting that veteran guard Walter Davis scored 11 points in an 11-point Phoenix victory.

Davis, who averaged more than 20 points per game and was one of the kingpins of the Suns as they made the playoffs in each of his first seven NBA seasons, played a relatively minor role in the team's 120-109 victory Sunday night over Seattle.

Maurice Lucas hit eight of 10 field-goal attempts and led the Suns with 19 points, while Alvan Adams and James Edwards both had 18 points and 12 rebounds.

NBA

Mavericks 114, Nuggets 106

Rookie Sam Perkins, making his first start since Nov. 29, had 18 points and 16 rebounds and scored five straight points in the fourth quarter to help Dallas defeat Denver.

Jay Vincent, who did not start despite averaging 18.5 points and 10 rebounds per game, had 24 points and 13 rebounds for the Mavericks. Alex English paced the Nuggets with 20 points.

Lakers 122, Pacers 100

Kurt Rambis had 17 points and a season-high 15 rebounds and Earvin "Magic" Johnson keyed a decisive third-quarter spurt for Los Angeles against Indiana.

A technical foul on Johnson enabled the Pacers to get within four points of the Lakers, but he then scored seven during an 11-0 streak that put Los Angeles ahead 84-69 with 3:12 remaining in the third period.

Even without fastball, Gorton may make name

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Slade Gorton cannot throw as hard as Dwight Gooden nor hit as productively as Don Mattingly. His name even sounds as if he should be the hero in a John Tunis baseball novel. In fact, Gorton has made an impact in a more significant way than Gooden and Mattingly, and he may make an even greater impact in the coming months.

As attorney general of the state of Washington in 1970, Gorton sued the American League after the Seattle Pilots moved to Milwaukee. The suit led to the league's expansion to Seattle and Toronto. Now, as a U.S. senator, Gorton has introduced a sports bill that, among other things, would regulate the transfer of franchises from city to city and would require baseball to add two expansion teams. The Senate Commerce Committee is scheduled to have a hearing on the bill Monday and another Feb. 20.

"We are opposed to the bill," Bob Wirz, spokesman for Commissioner Peter Ueberroth, said the other day.

THE PLAYERS, on the other hand, would be in favor of such legislation, especially if they fail to negotiate an expansion agreement to their liking.

"Expansion is pretty important to us," said Donald Fehr, acting executive director of the Players Association. "I don't think the owners understand this is a serious issue for us. It means jobs."

Cities such as Denver; Indianapolis; Buffalo; Vancouver, British Columbia; Tampa, Fla., and St. Petersburg, Fla., also see expansion as important to them. Club owners have decided to put off talk of expansion until after they negotiate a new basic agreement with the players, but public officials in this country and in Canada are pushing for a commitment to expand.

The Canadian government would like a team in Vancouver to go with those in Toronto and Montreal, although Vancouver isn't what Gorton and his supporters have in mind. Federal regulation isn't what baseball officials have in mind; they prefer doing business at their own pace.

Sandy Hadden, the deputy commissioner for special projects, will relay that message at Monday's hearing. The Commerce Committee had expected to hear from Bowie Kuhn, the former commissioner, who is supposed to work for the commissioner's office as a lobbyist in Washington, but Wirz said Hadden would speak for baseball at the hearing.

MEHR plans to testify at the Feb. 20 hearing. He noted that the basic agreement that expired Dec. 31 provided for the addition of two teams in the National League but did not commit the owners to expansion.

"They want to negotiate something that will let them do whatever they want later on," Fehr said. "We've asked for specifics. If they want the right to expand in this agreement, we want to negotiate specifics. We want a commitment for expansion; we don't want maybes."

A bill similar to the Gorton measure was placed on the Senate calendar last year, but time ran out before it reached the floor. Why has Gorton included expansion in the bill?

"Without expansion, I don't think you can get the support of the have-nots," said Marianne McGettigan, Gorton's legislative counsel. "They wouldn't be able to explain to their constituents why they should vote for a bill that might prevent teams from moving."

And why did he specify two expansion teams?

"It was a figure we decided on," she said. "We could've easily said four or six. It may well be that number could go up. It could be that two wouldn't be sufficient to meet the demand."

Baseball Expansion

WHEN ANDY Messersmith and the Los Angeles Dodgers disagreed over the club's attempt to renew his contract a second time, their dispute led to the creation of free agency. Subsequent negotiations, though, gave the clubs the right to renew a player's contract as often as it wants in his first six years in the majors. That rule has enabled Andy Hawkins to establish what is believed to be a record.

Hawkins, a pitcher for the San Diego Padres, has played the past two seasons under renewed contracts. In other words, he did not reach agreement with the Padres on a new contract for the 1983 or 1984 seasons.

"Jack McKeon fancies himself an astute judge of talent and has great confidence in his ability to put a value on a player," Alan Hendricks, Hawkins' agent, explained. "Andy is very sure of where he feels he ought to fall, considering his contribution. Last year we negotiated very hard, but their best offer wasn't enough to get Andy to sign. They renewed him again. Whose fault is it? Both people's. It's like a divorce. We could've said yes; Jack could've said yes."

For 1983, the Padres renewed Hawkins at a $40,000 salary; last season, they renewed him at $65,000. There will not be a third renewal this year. That's because the 25-year-old right-hander, eligible for the first time, has opted for salary arbitration. Hawkins, who had an 8-9 record with a 4.68 earned-run average last season, wants $225,000; the Padres want to pay him $140,000.

IN THE first nine years of salary arbitration, three players and no clubs submitted salary figures of $1 million or more. In this year's flurry of figures, seven players soared onto the $1 million plateau and three clubs joined them. Furthermore, clubs put in salaries of $600,000 or more for 13 players compared with seven last year and four in 1983. Seventeen players went in at $600,000 or more compared with 14 last year and nine in 1983.

This year's biggest difference between player and club figures is $450,000, registered by Bill Caudill and the Toronto Blue Jays and Kent Hrbek and the Minnesota Twins. The previous record gap was $437,500 in 1983 between Dennis Lamp and the Chicago White Sox.

As in other years, some players and clubs settled not long after swapping arbitration numbers. Among the settlements: Fernando Valenzuela of Los Angeles, $1.2 million for one year; Kirk Gibson of Detroit, $685,000 for one year plus a $15,000 attendance bonus; Joaquin Andujar of St. Louis, 3 years for $3.45 million; Mike Witt of California, 3 years for $2.15 million plus a possible three-year total of $600,000 in bonuses.

Franchise seeks spot in Dallas

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS — There's a sports franchise out there literally giving the shirt off its back trying to make us take notice.

In fact, that's what did it the other night when I saw "Tatu" (we'll get back to his real name in a moment) flinging his shirt into the crowd celebrating a goal.

At the time, I was turning the cable dial looking for basketball buckets.

Tatu's goal scored a point for his Dallas Sidekicks team in the Major Indoor Soccer League. But he celebrated it like the effort had propelled Brazil past England in the final of the World Cup.

There was much hugging and back-slapping before he offered his sweat-soaked shirt to the crowd. Some fan eagerly grabbed the garment despite the fact it would have to be laundered.

The demonstration was an interesting one. It also gave pause for thought: How are the Sidekicks doing in the very expensive game of wooing public interest?

THE SIDEKICKS are surviving surprisingly well considering they lost their first 10 games and are playing in a town where the winter sports dollar is eaten alive by the Dallas Mavericks of the National Basketball Association and highly ranked Southern Methodist of the Southwest Conference.

Although they are dead last in the league, Patrick Wallace, the Sidekicks' tub-thumper, said crowds are averaging around 4,000 with a high of 6,800.

"At first the fans came out just curious about the sport," said Wallace. "They have learned quickly and now they are howling for penalties and even screaming at referees by their names."

The Sidekicks are basically pleased by their first effort into the MISL at Reunion Arena.

"We would love to average 10,000 fans per game but we know that's not going to happen right away," said Patrick. "We haven't had time yet to build up any rivalries."

OF COURSE, Dallas has failed to support indoor and outdoor soccer.

Lamar Hunt, who has a pretty nice bank account, finally got tired of his outdoor Dallas Tornado taking an annual red ink drowning in the North American Soccer League.

Indoor soccer was also played at Fair Park with limited success.

Flutie flowering may take while

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

The greening of Doug Flutie is set for Tuesday in Donald Trump's Fifth Avenue Tower, a magnificent glass and steel monument at an appropriately expensive Manhattan address.

It has taken more than a week to write the 40 to 50 page document which will serve as Flutie's $7 million contract. Two teams of attorneys from the city's most prestigious law firms have been involved day and night.

This is a Big Deal.

NOW, IT naturally follows that if the New Jersey Generals and Trump are spending that kind of money on the little quarterback from Boston College, they expect immediate returns. The United States Football League, hungry for a flamboyant star with a grab-you-by-the-lapels style, is rooting for nothing less.

But the flowering of Flutie may take longer to accomplish than the greening did.

Last month, quarterbacks Joe Namath and Roger Staubach were voted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame. Neither, it should be remembered, was an instant hit on the field.

NAMATH, for all his swaggering self-confidence and $427,000 contract, spent the first half dozen games of his professional career on the bench, watching less-glamorous Mike Taliaferro quarterback the New York Jets.

Staubach was in a revolving door situation at Dallas, sharing the job for a long time with Craig Morton while Coach Tom Landry, who felt strongly both ways, tried to make up his mind. The situation was much like the Cowboys' current Danny White-Gary Hogeboom affair. There was a time when Staubach and Morton even alternated from play to play.

Terry Bradshaw took the Pittsburgh Steelers to four Super Bowl championships but he wasn't quite an immediate hero, winning the job only after a difficult three-way quarterback struggle with Terry Hanratty and Joe Gilliam.

THE DAY after Flutie signs with the Generals, Joe Montana will stop by New York to pick up his second Super Bowl MVP car from Sport Magazine. Like the other quarterbacks, Montana waited his turn with San Francisco, playing behind journeyman Steve DeBerg before staking his claim to the job.

So, stepping in cold is no simple task for a freshman passer. But that at these prices, that's exactly what Trump must expect of Flutie.

The USFL has to feel the same way.

Flutie, whose stature was enhanced by his no-contest romp in the Heisman Trophy voting, is not only this year's top glamour guy in college football. He also is the only really big name guy who has chosen the young league so far this winter, a fact that warms the hearts of National Football League scouts.

After him, the best known players the USFL has enrolled from its January draft are Alabama running back Paul-Ott Carruth, signed by Birmingham, and Florida placekicker Bobby Raymond, who went with Tampa Bay.

And that's all.

SO THE faster New Jersey gets some production from Flutie, the better off the league will be.

The Generals reached the playoffs last year with NFL-dropout Brian Sipe, a $2.1 million Trump pickup, at quarterback. Coach Walt Michaels, perhaps more concerned with poise than publicity, did not press the Flutie pursuit. Trump, who builds towers, not bungalows, did.

For his part, the 35-year-old Sipe was bemused by the excitement the signing has created. "What happens is out of my hands," he said. "What better way to end a career than with a quarterback controversy in the media capital of the world?"

Trump, recognizing that his coaching credentials are somewhat slimmer than those of Michaels, does not suggest that the signing of Flutie carries with it a must-play order, especially with the more-experienced Sipe already on hand.

"There will be a competition," the owner said. "We'll just have to see. Brian and Doug are going to make that decision."

And maybe even Walt will, too.

Johnstown claims title as amateur capital

By BOB DVORCHAK

JOHNSTOWN, Pa. (AP) — A city that has survived three killer floods and endured some of the nation's worst unemployment is hoping for an economic turnabout by touting itself as the amateur sports capital of the world.

"Never underestimate this crazy little town," said William Glosser, president of the Greater Johnstown Chamber of Commerce and an officer of Glosser Bros. Inc. retail stores.

"To us, amateur sports is an industry. We're going to promote this thing any way we can, the same way we're promoting tourism," Glosser said.

The idea of a national sports center may seem like a pipe dream for a city of 35,500 people built on the flood plain of the Conemaugh River Valley between Pittsburgh and Harrisburg.

But when the local steel and coal industries collapsed three years ago, a group of businessmen founded the nonprofit Amateur Sports Capital Corp. as a possible way of luring athletic dollars.

"It's not entirely pie in the sky. What we want is a positive anchor to promote our community and diversify our economic base," said D.C. Nokes Jr., head of a billboard company and chairman of the sports corporation.

"We're a community fighting for survival. With all the unemployment, people came into town expecting to see tumbleweeds blowing down Main Street and long bread lines," said Nokes.

"I guess there's a debate whether anybody takes us seriously. But it's a no-lose proposition. If people laugh at us, at least they're thinking about us and laughing at us."

Johnstown now holds amateur sports events in baseball, golf, schoolboy football, schoolboy basketball and a marathon. In 1983, the city and various hosts spent an estimated $500,000 to stage a number of events, which in turn reaped $1.5 million in hotel, restaurant and spin-off business, Nokes said.

This summer, the city plans to ask the U.S. Olympic Committee to use Johnstown as a regional Olympic training center. Boosters also hope to attract other athletic events and tournaments.

But when it comes to being a sports boom town, Johnstown resembles David competing with Goliaths such as Indianapolis, Ind.

Indianapolis is home of the national Amateur Athletic Union, five governing bodies of U.S. Olympic sports and a professional basketball and football team. And in 1987, it will host the Pan America Games, the Western Hemisphere international multi-sports, pre-Olympic games.

The Lilly Endowment, the nation's sixth-largest charitable foundation, gave $25 million to help build a domed stadium and $10.5 million for a natatorium in Indianapolis, said spokesman Tom Keating. The endowment also funds the Indiana Sports Corp., which has 12 paid staffers.

"They probably earn more interest off their endowment in a day than we'll spend in a year," said Nokes, an energetic cheerleader who has run in 34 marathons.

In Johnstown, meanwhile, the sports promoters have $6,000 in membership fees and no paid staff. Point Stadium was built in 1926 for baseball and football, while the Cambria County War Memorial for ice hockey and basketball has a maximum capacity of 7,500.

SWC showdown in 'them thar hills'

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) - The fourth-ranked Southern Methodist Mustangs take a two-game Southwest Conference lead into their showdown with the Arkansas Razorbacks in Fayetteville on Wednesday night.

"We're looking forward to going to Arkansas because we've always played pretty well in Barnhill and it ought to be a great game," said Mustang center Jon Koncak, who scored 22 points, blocked 5 shots and collected 9 rebounds in a 68-52 victory over Rice on Sunday.

SMU may have played well there recently but SMU hasn't won at Arkansas since 1976.

The Mustangs hold a two-game lead over Arkansas and Texas A&M, who are tied for second in the SWC standings.

ARKANSAS fell 56-39 to Georgetown on Sunday while Houston lost 77-76 to Illinois in another intersectional game.

Rice did the only thing it could against SMU — slow the ball down — but it worked only a half.

Then the Mustangs pressed the Owls into mistakes and Koncak got hot.

"It was not a pretty game," said SMU Coach Dave Bliss. "Rice tested our patience by working on the 45-second clock. I don't think we got caught overlooking Rice. We did a good job defensively.

"We were just too impatient on offense."

Rice Coach Tommy Suitts said the Owls had to try to lull SMU to sleep.

"We had to play slow and passively because it was our only chance against them," Suitts said. "That was our only chance against them.

"The faster they play the better they are."

Bliss said it took the Mustangs a full 20 minutes to settle down.

"Sometimes we get going so hard that it just doesn't turn out right," Bliss said.

Koncak said, "It seems everybody really gets pumped up to play us. That's what happens when you're ranked as high as we are.

"Rice played awfully hard."

SMU INCREASED its overall record to 18-2 and the Mustangs are 8-1 in the SWC.

The Owls, losing their seventh consecutive game, fell to 8-11 and 1-8.

SMU, leading by only a point at halftime, outscored Rice 18-2 to start the second half behind Koncak, the seven-foot Olympian, and Scott Johnson, who tied a season high with 14 points.

Rice's slowdown tactics worked perfectly in the first half as frustrated SMU led only 21-20.

The Owls worked down most of the 45-second clock before shooting. Freshman Jeff Crawford of Bardwell, Ky., making his first start, scored six straight baskets and a career-high 12 points for Rice in the first half.

Crawford was scoreless in the second half and Greg Hines came on to score 14 points to lead the Owls in scoring.

Bliss started Terry Williams in place of forward Larry Davis to experiment with a several defenses.

"We worked on the defenses Friday and Larry missed most of the work because he was getting new contact lenses," Bliss said. "Terry had worked on the defenses and Larry didn't."

Davis came off the bench to score 14 points including four slam dunks.

Suitts said he will pick SMU over Arkansas in the game.

"I like SMU's chances," Suitts said.

Walker still alive and well with NJ Generals

By Associated Press

USFL

The New Jersey Generals had a different look for their first exhibition game of the year, except for one thing: Herschel Walker was still scoring touchdowns for them.

Walker, who led the club in scoring for the past two seasons, scored the Generals' first TD of 1985 Saturday to trigger the Generals to a 16-3 United States Football League preseason victory over the Memphis Showboats.

The play occured on a classic Walker run of 5 yards around right end, pacing himself behind blockers, with 7:49 remaining in the first quarter. The TD made it 9-0 in favor of the Generals, who had scored earlier on a safety.

Clarence Harmon later scored on a 2-yard run for Generals' final points in the last minute.

With eight regulars out for various reasons, Coach Walt Michaels used several new players in Saturday's game, and was generally pleased with their performances.

Brent Ziegler, a rookie fullback from Syracuse, "made some good blocks," Michaels said, and fullback Dwight Sullivan, starting for Maurice Carthon, was "a hard worker."

Michaels also liked Donnell Daniel, who started at strong safety and returned kicks with proficiency — two punts for a total of 37 yards and two kickoffs for 37.

"An exciting ballplayer," Michaels said.

In other USFL exhibition action Saturday, Bobby Hebert threw a 31-yard touchdown pass to Ricky Martin and Novo Bojovic booted a 38-yard field goal as the Oakland Invaders beat the Arizona Outlaws 10-3.

Jerry Golsteyn completed 12 of 15 passes for 147 yards as the Orlando Renegades took a 16-10 win over the Baltimore Stars, who have never won a pre-season USFL game. Both teams are playing in new towns this year — the Renegades having moved from Washington and the Stars from Philadelphia.

The Los Angeles Express and the Denver Gold played to a 17-17 tie. Express quarterback Steve Young completed 7-of-9 passes for 149 yards and two touchdowns, while Gold quarterback Vince Evans completed 18-of-28 for two TDs.

Birmingham's game at San Antonio was postponed by bad weather.

U.S.Olympic figure skating hopes perk up

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — U.S. figure skating, rebuilding after the Sarajevo Olympics, has three new champions and new hopes for a strong showing at the Calgary Winter Games in 1988.

The new leaders were crowned during the week-long U.S. Figure Skating Championships at Kemper Arena.

The brighest prospect, of course, is Tiffany Chin, a 17-year-old schoolgirl from Toluca Lake, Calif., whose champion quality already sets her apart from her competitors.

"It's been tough preparing to be No. 1 but you have to do it. You have to give it your best," said the skater who already is being compared to Olympians Peggy Fleming and Dorothy Hamill.

Chin replaces three-time U.S. champion and Olympic silver medalist Rosalynn Sumners.

Brian Boitano, 21, of Sunnyvale, Calif., a runner-up at the nationals the past two years, finally has claimed the men's title for himself.

"The frustration is finally over. It's like I've made it over the mountain," said the tall skater.

He replaces four-time U.S. and World champion Scott Hamilton, who retired from amateur skating after winning a gold medal at Sarajevo.

Pairs, considered skating's weakest category after Kitty and Peter Carruthers retired with an Olympic silver medal, now has its hopes pinned on Jill Watson and Peter Oppegard.

"It's like a dream come true. I still can't believe it," said Watson, 21, who skated with another partner last year at the nationals and finished third.

Dance hardly has changed.

Judy Blumberg and Michael Seibert, disappointed with their fourth-place Olympic finish and not satisfied with the bronze they won at the 1984 World Championships, are trying for World gold again.

They won their fifth U.S. dance title Saturday night, but it's the top spot they want next month in Tokyo, site of the World Championships.

"We want to win. We believe we are as good as anybody competing in the event. We didn't stay in it to finish fourth or third or second," Blumberg said.

John Nicks, Chin's coach who also has coached such pairs stars as Tai Babilonia and Randy Gardner, says U.S. figure skating ranks are nowhere near depleted.

"The United States is one of the strongest figure skating powers in the world," said the British-born Nicks.

"Its depth is astounding. I believe it has the most depth of any country in the world."

The top two teams in each of the four skating categories will represent the United States at the World Championships in Toyko March 2-14.

Debi Thomas, 17, of San Jose, Calif., is Chin's partner on the world team.

Ron Sexton warns the referee to stop counting him out during his match. In a strange ending, the referee counted Champ Chicky Starr out, but he came back and pinned Sexton.

Down for the count

Neither Ron Sexton, near the corner of the ring, nor U.S. Junior Heavyweight Champ Chicky Starr appear capable of continuing. Starr managed to recover and retain his title.

This wrestler, known only as "The Egyptian Mummy," prepares for his match on a Tuesday night card of Southwest Championship Wrestling at the Ector County Coliseum. He wraps his 385-pound frame before each event and unravels yards of wrapping at the conclusion.

The fans expend as much energy as the wrestlers at the Tuesday night professional wrestling. Clayre Smith and Ron Sale drove from Grand Falls for the festivities.

Howard Ross, 62, of Odessa, said he never misses a match. He sits in the front row at ringside, then slides his chair even closer to the action.

The cast of villains poses before going ringside. From left, "The Snake," Waka-Hi of the Maoris, Ron Sexton, and Tai-Nui, the other half of the Maoris — the Southwest Tag Team Champions.

ODESSA — The crowd loved every minute of it.

From the Snake's first "cheap shot" to the unceremonious tumble of Eric "the Fabulous Blonde" Embry from an 8-foot scaffold to the mat below ending the finale — the estimated 2,200 fanatics in attendance were engrossed in the action.

They traveled from towns across West Texas and Eastern New Mexico to cheer on their heroes and taunt the villains.

As match time approached Tuesday night, lines grew from the ticket office into the parking lot of the Ector County Coliseum.

Twice monthly, many claim seats they have reserved a year in advance. Scuffles over these preferred perches are said to have rivaled those inside the ring.

One gentleman, Howard Ross, 62, of Odessa, ignored the ordered rows to push his chair closer to ringside. Throughout the match, he acted as impromptu cheerleader, abusing the "bad guys" and shouting encouragement to the "good guys."

The division between good and evil was clearly defined from the time the two sides emerged from separate dressing rooms and leered from opposite corners.

But no reminder was necessary for this crowd of regular fans of Southwest Championship Wrestling.

"There's a class of people that it is entertainment to," said Walter Rowell, a veteran of 10 years of professional wrestling who oversees the matches for the State Department of Labor and Standards. "There's another class that thinks it's real."

The night's highlight was a Strap-Scaffold Match. Arch enemies Bob Sweetan and Eric Embry were to be attached by a strap while grappling atop a scaffold in a rematch of a Saturday night TV struggle.

But the crowd had been howling for more than two hours when this match began.

"The Snake", a 225-pound masked man, opened the show for the villains. He and 210-pound Manuel Villalobos immediately played to the crowd. Villalobos called for his opponent to take off his mask to the crowd's cheering approval.

Taking advantage of Villalobos turning his back while extending his hand, "The Snake" struck and the action had begun.

A series of acrobatic throws, spinning kicks and slapping right hands later, both lay prone on the mat after bumping heads. The crowd screamed as Villalobos emerged victorious. Undaunted, "The Snake" wanted more and strutted out of the arena to the jeers of the masses.

Next, "The Egyptian Mummy," a groaning 385-pound "bad guy," did his best to lure handsome Vinnie Valentino into traps. After gesturing to a heckler in the crowd, the mammoth man turned to his 225-pound opponent and threw him down hard. The crowd was livid.

Valentino's flying drop kick knocked the villain out of the ring. "The Mummy" looked to be having the better of the match, but the hero won out again, as the two and the referee tumbled to the ground. "The Mummy" could not believe the turnaround, but the crowd was delighted.

Before Chicky Starr put his Junior Heavyweight title up against Ron Sexton, "good guy" Ric Casey signed autographs for more than 50 fans.

Despite Sexton's pre-match claims that the championship belt "is gonna look good on me, Starr. It's gonna look real good on me," Starr managed to retain his title after a rough-and-tumbling match.

As the champ applied apparently painful holds to a fallen Sexton, a fan moved to ringside and taunted, "Where's that big mouth of yours now, Sexton?"

The action was furious inside and outside of the ring. Each wrestler banged the other off the steel structure supporting the scaffold.

Dog who bit woman hasn't been found

From Staff Reports

The owner of a dog that bit a pregnant woman outside of a Midland grocery store Friday evening has still not been found, according to Midland Animal Control.

"We haven't heard anything further," said Rice Freeman-Zachery, information officer for the organization.

Concern over the danger of a rabies infection has the woman, who is two months pregnant, worried and Animal Control officials busy looking for the owner of the dog.

"The victim described the dog as mostly white with a black spot on the head and 'not shaggy,'" said Ms. Freeman-Zachery. "The dog, which bit the woman on the right leg, was not on a leash."

The owner, who was using an outdoor pay phone, was aware of the incident and responded by pulling the dog away. The attack occurred at the M Systems grocery store near Scharbauer and A streets at approximately 7:30 p.m.

The victim went to a minor emergency clinic where she was treated for a "fairly serious bite." The dog's owner was decribed as in her 20s with shoulder-length blonde hair.

Ms. Freeman-Zachery reported that there was concern over a possible rabies threat due to previous rabies incidents in Midland County.

"We are in an area that does have a rabies problem," said Ms. Freeman-Zachery. "Last year there was a rabid cat that attacked a man in his yard and the year before there was a total of 35 reported rabies cases in Midland County alone."

The spokeswoman indicated that it is difficult to know if the victim has rabies. "Rabies is an insiduous disease. The incubation period is between five days and 1½ years."

Police report trailer taken from residence

From Staff Report

A Speedy Striper paint machine worth $1,500 was taken from a trailer in the yard at 2605 Emerson Saturday or Sunday, according to police reports.

Jimmy Brunson told police the machine was taken from a trailer on the southwest corner of his yard. A red Chevrolet Camaro with three unknown men in it was seen driving slowly through a nearby alley, but no suspects have been identified.

In other complaints to police over the weekend, Victoria Bufler, Star Route B, Box 105, told Midland County Sheriff's deputies someone took a red '84 Honda ATC three-wheeler valued at $1,473 from her yard between 1:30 p.m. and 3:30 p.m. Saturday.

Another theft in the county was reported by Rosemary Hernandez, Route 4, Box 8R, P11, who told sheriff's deputies someone took two rings from her residence between Tuesday and Thursday. The rings were valued at $1,213.75, according to reports.

The La Frontera western store at 800 S. Terrell St. reported that someone broke the front window and took a $14 blouse and two pairs of cowboy boots worth $70 from a box near the window. The burglary occurred at 1:10 a.m. today, according to store owner Manuel G. Suchil, who estimated the damage to the window at $250.

Don Ketenbrink, Box 798-H, reported the theft of two full-size mattresses and a bed frame from his mobile home sometime between August and Sunday. The missing items were valued at $240, according to reports.

DEATHS

Marcel Armstead

M. Armstead

Marcel Armstead, 82, of Midland, died Saturday at a local hospital following a lengthy illness.

Services will be at 1 p.m. Saturday at Upper Zion Baptist Church in Marlin. Local arrangements are being handled by Jackson Funeral Home.

Armstead was born July 3, 1902, in Falls County, where he lived until 1952 when he moved to Midland.

Survivors include a daughter, Ella Mae Gibson of Midland; a son, Earl Armstead of Marlin; a sister, Sallie Booker of Marlin and several nieces and nephews. Seven brothers preceeded him in death.

Hugh A. West

Graveside services for Hugh A. West were to be at 11 a.m. today in Fairview Cemetery with the Rev. Bob Porterfield officiating. Arrangements were to be handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Friday following a lengthy illness.

West was born in Arkansas and moved to Midland in 1928 where he was employed by the Atlantic-Richfield Pipeline Company. In 1928 he rose from District Clerk to Division Superintendent of West Texas and New Mexico and was later transferred to Dallas in 1959 as operations manager for Texas and New Mexico. He moved to Independence, Kan., when Arco and Sinclair merged in 1969. In Independence he was vice president and head of the Engineering Department. He became associated with Petrotech International in Dallas following his retirement from Arco in 1971.

He was a Mason and a member of the Baptist church.

Survivors include his wife, Margaret West of Dallas; a son, Hugh F. West of Houston; a daughter, Linda West Cox of Plano; a brother, Clinton O. West of Midland; and three grandsons.

Winnie M. Groves

Winnie M. Groves of Midland died Sunday at her home following a lengthy illness.

Services will be at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the First Presbyterian Church in Garland. Burial will follow in the Big Spring Cemetery in Richardson.

R.J. 'Jack' Wood

R.J. "Jack" Wood, 69, of Colorado City, died Saturday in a local hospital following a lengthy illness.

Services were to be at 3:30 p.m. today in the chapel of the First Baptist Church of Midland with the Rev. Glenn Butler of Hermleigh and the Rev. Bob Porterfield officiating. Burial will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Wood was born Sept. 16, 1915, in Colorado City, where he was reared. He attended Tarleton State College, Texas A&M and West Texas State in Canyon. He lived in Rising Star and Ranger, moving to Colorado City in 1930. He was employed with Coltex Refinery, which was later moved to Big Spring. He married Mildred West Sept. 16, 1940. She preceeded him in death. He later returned to Colorado City where he met and married Dollie McAlister July 31, 1982. He retired in 1983.

He was a member of the Plainview Baptist Church in Colorado City.

Survivors include his wife; four daughters, Kathleen Wood of Floydada, Jeanie Wood of Wichita, Kan., Mary Helm of Colorado City, and Nancy Clark of Rayville, La.; a stepdaughter, Eddie Lou Hunter of Midland; three brothers, John Wood of San Antonio, B.J. Wood and Eugene Wood, both of Colorado City; four sisters, Marie Bassham of Colorado City, Rachel Garner of Seminole, Juanita Gree of Usk, Wash., and Telitha Stikes of Lake Stevens, Wash.; and eight grandchildren.

Honorary pallbearers were to be Paul Wood, Don Wood, Charles Wood, Austin Helm and Ron Pinkowski.

The family suggests memorials be made to Hospice of Midland or the American Cancer Society.

Odessa police probe two shooting deaths

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Police were on the scene of two shooting deaths Sunday.

Harry Lynn Herring, 26, was free on $30,000 bond today after his arrest by a sheriff's deputy near where police were called to the scene of a shooting about 2:42 a.m. Sunday.

Allen Dale Smith, 28, of Odessa, died later at Medical Center Hospital from multiple gunshot wounds he suffered, reportedly after being found by Herring in an upstairs bedroom of a northside residence with Leslie Faye Herring, no age available.

Ms. Herring suffered a gunshot wound in the leg during the incident at 1112 E. 52nd St. in Odessa. Police reports did not indicate the relationship between the suspect and Ms. Herring, but the city directory listed the supect's wife's name as Leslie.

No condition report was available on Ms. Herring. A nursing office spokesperson said police had ordered all information withheld on her.

According to sheriff's department reports, Herring was spotted by Sgt. Larry Kiker about one block from the scene of the shooting and arrested after the deputy approached Herring and spoke with him.

Justice of the Peace R.G. Hungerford pronounced Smith dead at 5:10 a.m. Sunday and ordered an autopsy.

Also, the body of Alberto Gamino Tadeo, 21, of Odessa, was found at 12:30 a.m. Sunday sitting upright in the driver's seat of a pickup parked outside a southside Odessa night club, with one gunshot wound to the head.

Police are looking for a Hispanic couple, who were seen leaving the parking lot of the El Rancho Grande by witnesses. Hungerford pronounced Tadeo dead at 2:30 a.m. Sunday.

Victims' families frustrated by workings of justice system

FORT WORTH (AP) — For the families of the victims of a series of disappearances and killings, it is an agony intensified by not knowing.

It is an agony made more acute by an investigation, conducted in the glare of publicity, that twice has followed seemingly promising roads to disappointing dead ends.

But while the survivors are not critical of law enforcement efforts to find the killer or killers of their loved ones, some are frustrated by a criminal justice system they say favors the accused instead of the victim.

"I just want the man in jail," said Sharon Hayden, who found her 18-year-old daughter stabbed to death in their southwest Fort Worth apartment on Sept. 5.

Ginger Hayden's case is among eight slayings and one disappearance under investigation by an unprecedented 40-member police task force, now in its fourth week of operation.

"For five months, (I was tempted) to ask people, 'Did you kill my daughter?'...I suspect everyone. I really do," said Ms. Hayden, a postal worker. "I even suspected myself."

In the past three weeks, two suspects have been arrested and later released after being questioned about the disappearances and slayings, most involving young women who vanished from the city's southwest side since September.

On Jan. 12, investigators for Tarrant County Sheriff's Department arrested Timothy Paul Volkmar, a 25-year-old maintenance man and the son of a Fort Worth minister, and charged him in one of the killings.

Volkmar was released four days later after authorities admitted that a fingerprint on a victim's car wasn't Volkmar's, as they'd first thought.

Remsen Wolff, a 44-year-old freelance photographer, was arrested Jan. 24 in connection with a 1984 rape and questioned about two slayings and a disappearance.

New sheriff institutes 'lean cuisine'

ROCKWALL (AP) — Pork chops, ham and rib-eye steak aren't on the menu at the jail anymore. Rockwall County has a new sheriff and now inmates are eating tuna, hamburger and oatmeal.

Sheriff John McWhorter, the first Republican sheriff in county history, says he was stunned to see prisoners eating better than he ever did at home.

It all started with a pair of huge pork chops he spotted in one of the inmates' meals last month soon after he took office.

"I said, 'Where did that come from, the restaurant across the street?'" McWhorter recalled. After learning that it was jail food, "I said, 'My word, I never ate pork chops that big at my house.'"

The 31-year-old sheriff said he was amazed to find that prisoners were being fed three hot meals a day that included regular servings of pork chops and ham — and occasionally rib-eye steak.

"I thought maybe the sheriff needs to eat in the jail," he said.

But instead of eating at the jail, McWhorter decided to order leaner cuisine for the inmates.

He hired a new chief jailer to plan the meals. He said she is trying to cut jail food costs in half by serving more hamburger, chicken, tuna and sandwiches.

"They were a little too extravagant," he said. "I want the meals to be appealing. I want them to be nutritious. But I think they can be both and still be cost-efficient."

New chief jailer Shelley Jett, who worked at the Lew Sterrett Justice Center in Dallas about 20 miles west of Rockwall, said, "I've worked in jails for a long time, and I've never seen jail food that good."

Ms. Jett said she still makes sure the prisoners are given a hot meal and two vegetables at lunch. But at night, they're usually fed bologna or peanut butter and jelly sandwiches.

And no more bacon and eggs for breakfast, she said — instead, it's oatmeal or cold cereal.

"What I'm feeding them now is not bad," she said. "It's nutritious. It's just not elegant like they were having before."

McWhorter said that last year the sheriff's office spent an average $2.43 per meal for each prisoner.

"That's just too much," said McWhorter, who said he plans to buy food from a wholesaler rather than a supermarket. "I'd like to cut it to about $1 or $1.25."

Dallas candidate openly admits he's gay

DALLAS (AP) — Bill Nelson is making Dallas political history. He is the first acknowledged gay to run for city council.

In fact, he is the first acknowledged homosexual to run for any major political post in Dallas.

Nelson says he doesn't have the undivided support of the gay community and he has been unable to obtain the services of a professional political consultant.

He says his first bid for public office will be an uphill battle and he isn't counting on the gay vote to win.

"That is not my intention. That is not possible in District 2," he said.

He is running against incumbent Councilman Paul Fielding, who also faces opposition from Lori Palmer, a longtime neighborhood activist; Joe May, a Hispanic businessman; and Jack Borden, a used car lot manager.

Homosexuals are estimated to make up about 20 percent of the population in the 125,000-resident district. The district also includes many blacks and Hispanics.

Nelson, who owns two antique stores and some rental property, says his background as a gay activist has taught him the consensus-building skills a councilman needs.

But he admits he has problems in gaining support within the gay community.

"We are too diverse. There are members of the gay community who think that my openness about my lifestyle and insistence on gay rights is too aggressive," he said.

Said Fielding: "The gay community in Dallas was the only one in Texas that voted for Ronald Reagan for president. That should tell you something. It's a conservative group of people."

Observers say some members of the homosexual community may not back Nelson because he supports a gay rights ordinance for Dallas, an issue expected to be a centerpiece of his campaign.

Nelson is one of the first council candidates to set up a headquarters and begin organizing volunteer workers.

Fire damages one-room house

From Staff Reports

A one-room house at 205½ N. Lee St. was heavily damaged early this morning by a fire which was apparently caused by an overheated stove, according to fire reports.

The house was owned by Odell Walker, 807½ N. Baird St., and occupied by Elizabeth Price. No injuries were reported in the fire, which began about 12:12 a.m. and was put out by 1:45 a.m.

On Sunday, an "excessive" fire in the fireplace got out of control in a house on County Road 1140 just south of Highway 80, according to fire reports.

The fire in the house, owned by Daniel Randolph, was reported at 1:13 a.m. and extinguished by 3:47 a.m. No injuries were reported, but there was heavy damage to the attic and roof, fire reports said.

Budget cuts will hurt state, analysts say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas lawmakers already facing a $1 billion deficit would likely lose another $440 million in federal grants if Congress approves budget cuts proposed by the Reagan administration, state analysts said.

The rug could be pulled out from under aid programs for the economically depressed Rio Grande Valley, and other changes proposed in the fiscal year 1986 budget could have far-reaching effects on Texas agriculture and the petrochemical industry.

The administration wants Congress to eliminate general revenue sharing, the Small Business Administration, economic development assistance grants and urban development action grants.

WRESTLING

"Go, Chick, Go," chants revitalized Starr. After several reversals, including the referee wrongly counting him out, Starr rose to the occasion and pinned the villain.

The tag team bout between New Zealand's Maoris and Casey and Al Madrill began with the foreigners waving their country's flag and the crowd chanting, "U—S—A." A woman rushed to ringside and offered to burn the flag.

Although the action throughout was all "America's Team," the Maoris retained their belt by losing the match by disqualification. The match was called when Waka-Hi kicked the referee, but grappling continued until other heroes came to the rescue of the bleeding Casey and Madrill.

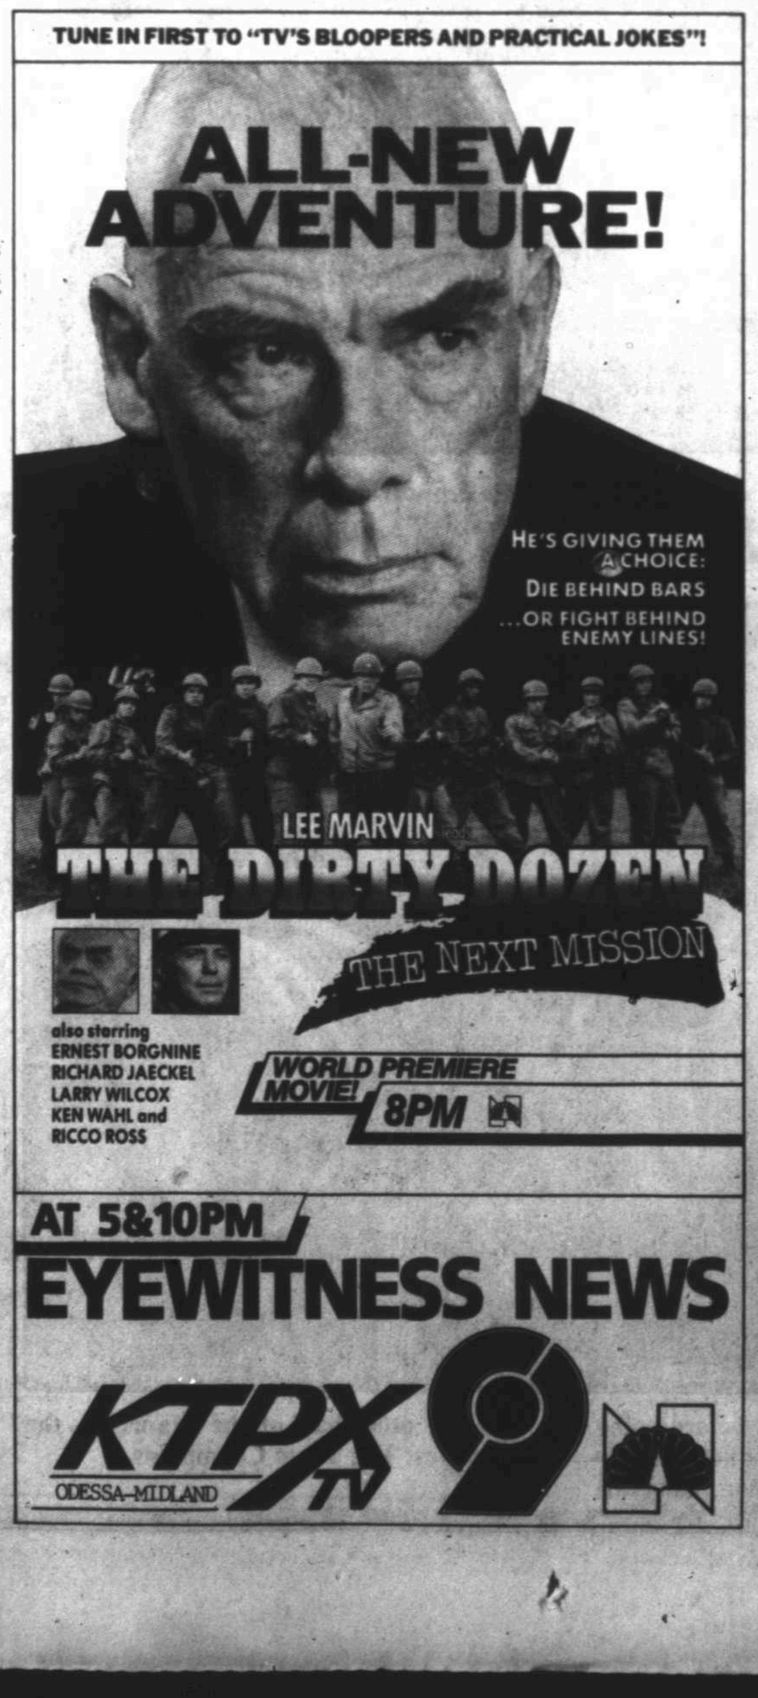

Next, "Mr. Piledriver," Bob Sweetan, lumbered into the ring to meet young upstart Embry, who learned the Sweetan's trademark move from the master and now wants the title.

The strap never fastened the two, as was intended. Instead, they alternately beat each other with it.

In a replay of the Saturday TV match, Sweetan emerged victorious. Embry must leave Texas.

Both left the arena apparently bleeding from head wounds, Sweetan supported by fellow heroes and Embry wobbling past a gleeful crowd.

Chalk another one up for the "good guys."

School teaches tricks of ice-driving

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, Colo. — In the snow, flitting through the headlight beam, the curve in the road came suddenly. There might have been a warning, a sign. But my mind was elsewhere.

It was a sharp curve, nearly 90 degrees to the right. I was driving about 40 and didn't have a chance.

The front wheels were the first to go. They turned but didn't hold. The Cherokee went straight through the curve, across the other lane. There a patch of side gravel caught the wheel, and it lurched back across the road. A fishtail followed, and I was back on track, awake, driving on a mountain road.

The scene is common in snow country. People get killed and injured, cars damaged and stuck, because of skids of however. I was on my way home from an ice-driving school.

I had spent the day learning to recover from skids, to balance the car with acceleration and deceleration, to stop and start quickly, smoothly.

BUT WHEN I hit that patch of ice, on a curve, all was forgotten. I had violated the most basic rules. I was tired, I was driving too fast, I was overestimating my ability. And I panicked.

Each morning, on their way to work, Jean Paul Luc and Jean Bernard Vieu race across a parking lot of packed snow, spinning wheels, pull brakes and pirouette. Their cars slide, spin and, as if left by valets, park side by side.

They are not showing off, they insist in soft, south-of-France accents. They are demonstrating their work: ice driving.

They are instructors for the Renault-Michelin ice-driving school. Unique in the United States, but patterned after courses in France, the school has taught police, fleet drivers and housewives to better handle vehicles on winter roads.

Luc and Vieu are professional rally drivers from France, team drivers, who handle their cars like extensions of their limbs. To watch as they drift through a curve, intentionally skidding, without a brake, and emerge safely is to watch a mechanical ballet.

LAT Photo

Students drive on snow as part of the training at a Renault-Michelin ice-driving school.

THEY BEGAN the course with a technical lecture on car balance and grip, using videotape and diagrams. These were the keys to safe winter driving, they said.

If you allowed the front wheels to lose grip, the car would push across the curve. If you allowed the rear wheels to lose grip, the car spun.

A decelerating car shifted the weight to the front wheels, off the rear. An accelerating car shifted weight to the rear wheels, off the front. Those were the principles, they said. The proof was in the driving.

With time spent in front-wheel, rear-wheel and four-wheel-drive vehicles, the students began driving the curves and straightaways, plowed from the pasture and ice. They learned to start without spinning, and at 40 mph, to pump the hurtling cars to a safe stop.

As Luc and Vieu watched from a hill, CBs in hand, they spoke encouragement in their soft French lilt.

"Don't just steer into the skid," they said. "Accelerate gently, too." That shifts weight to the rear wheels so they can grip. The students tried again, to overcome years of bad habit.

The tendency of front-wheel cars and four-wheel drives is to understeer, that is, go straight through a curve, according to the Renault instructors. Panicked drivers tended to keep turning. The answer was to decelerate (to shift the weight to the front tires) and straighten the wheels — toward the ditch you are headed for — to allow the tires to grip.

FOR MOST students, it was the hardest lesson to learn. Those who caught on kept driving. Those who didn't spent time pushing themselves out of the deep snow.

Luc and Vieu then moved to an advanced technique on front-drive cars: pulling a handbrake in the curve, to force the rear to spin. If you accelerated at that moment, the car came under control. It was an exhilarating feeling, a controlled spin that worked for you.

At day's end, for fun, the school taught rally turns, in which no brake was used. The students laughed their way through piles of snow, their wheels spinning, as they tried to master the smooth lines of the pros.

At the end, their confidence high, students challenged each other, in a timed race through the course. We overdrove, skidding more than we should have, correcting more than we should have.

After the course, the urge to spin and slide, to continue the fun on a slick patch, was strong. But there is no room for folly on a highway, Luc and Vieu emphasized.

The real lesson, they said, is not to lose control in the first place. Anticipate, drive slowly, drive smoothly. Good drivers, however confident, never have to use skid-control.

Cold weather tips given

From Staff Reports

NEW YORK — The weather outside may be frightful, but don't let common myths about keeping warm make the winter even colder. Seventeen magazine offers five cold-weather myths — and the right ways to stay warm:

— Myth: Drinking hot liquids warms the body.

Fact: Drinking warm liquids actually lowers body temperature because: "As the liquid goes down it warms up the core of the body, and the blood vessels open up," Don Sleeper of the American Red Cross is quoted in the magazine. "But when the vessels on the skin surface begin to open up, heat escapes and you end up colder."

— Myth: The heavier the coat, the warmer the person.

Fact: The reality is a too-heavy coat will make its wearer perspire more and get cold faster, because the body is losing heat. The best way to dress for the cold is in several layers of light clothing which can be removed as the wearer feels warmer. The layers trap air between them and help keep the body warm.

— Myth: Gloves are warmer than mittens.

Fact: Not true, said Sleeper. Fingers stay warmer when bundled together inside warm mittens. "Heat from one finger can help another stay warm."

— Myth: Overweight people stay warmer because they're better insulated.

Fact: In reality, heavy people don't stay warmer than thin people. Overweight bodies have to work harder just to stay comfortable in the cold, because a heavier person has a greater number of bloodvessels and more bulk to maintain, so his body demands more from heart and circulatory system.

— Myth: If signs of frostbite appear, rub the affected area until it returns to normal.

Fact: The fact is, rubbing frostbitten skin can be extremely harmful, possibly causing cell damage or even gangrene, Sleeper said. The best remedy is to place the affected area under the clothing and, when possible, against a warm part of the body, such as the armpit.

When the weather is frosty, follow these simple tips for a warmer winter.

Warm bed one of winter's true pleasures

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

For some, happiness may be a warm puppy, but when the thermometer dips below freezing, most of us would opt for a warm blanket or comforter.

This year, keeping warm has taken a twist toward the natural: Bedding made of natural fibers and goose and duck down is definitely hot, according to retailers. Many New York stores say that flannel sheets, made of 100 percent cotton, are big sellers this season, too. Lamb's-wool blankets also are logging in sales this year, many retailers say.

And there are innovations in keeping warm that start from the bottom up: mattress covers, one made of wool and another electric. One company also has come out with the latest in electric blankets: "a blanket with a brain," designed to vary its temperature in relation to your body heat.

BELOW IS a look at some of the bedding that is available to keep you — and your puppy — warm.

— Flannel sheets. After several years of being sold only through mail-order catalogs, flannel sheets are now readily available in most department stores and have become one of the hottest trends in bed linens. The interest, marketers say, reflects the popularity of natural fibers and a return to traditional themes in decorating.

Available in a range of colors, patterns and prices, flannel sheets cost little more or the same as regular cotton sheets. For instance, twin flat or fitted sheets in 100 percent cotton flannel can be found for about $10.

— Down comforters. Interest in down comforters has grown tremendously in the last eight years as more and more people return from Europe "wondering where they could get a comforter like that wonderful one they slept in," according to Ellen Stark, executive director of the Feather and Down Association.

Proponents of down comforters say that they are lightweight, drape to the body, hold no cold spots and, if well cared for, can last a lifetime or two. The most expensive comforters are made of goose down — down being the undercoating of a waterfowl, which, unlike feathers, has no shaft, more loft and insulates the bird from water and cold. Goose down is better because it contains more oil, a natural insulator, says Sue Orczyk, manager of the bed linens department at Bloomingdales in Garden City, N.Y.

— Other comforters. For those who cannot afford down, polyester-filled comforters, albeit heavier, remain popular and a relative bargain. Although "quite effective" in terms of warmth, most consumers buy polyester-filled comforters "primarily as a fashion item," according to Neil Happel, product manager for sheets and comforters at Fieldcrest Mills Inc. in Eden, N.C.

— BLANKETS. IN keeping with the trend toward natural fibers, 100 percent wool blankets are also popular this year, according to retailers. Like down, wool, if properly cared for, can last a lifetime but often requires more care than synthetics.

Scientists study snow's secrets

Associated Press

Scientists studying the nature of snow have learned how to create "cloned" snow and are developing an early warning system for detecting avalanches.

In the not-too-distant future, according to an article in the February issue of Popular Mechanics, they may be able to "seed" snow clouds to produce more than twice the water that can be squeezed from seeded rain clouds.

"Cloned" snow is a genetically engineered product made from bacteria. It is being used this year for the first time to create artificial snow at ski resorts in Colorado and New England.

Artificial snow has been produced on ski runs for decades by mixing chilled water with compressed air, a process that is wasteful of both water and energy.

The breakthrough in bacteria-cloned snow came five years ago, when Advanced Genetic Sciences of Greenwich, Conn., developed Snow-Max, a freeze-dried product made from crushed Psuedomonous syringae bacteria.

Added to the traditional compressed air and water system, it produces at least 20 percent more snow from any given amount of water than the old method.

The cloned snow has been tested for three years at Colorado's Copper Mountain and for one year at Stratton Mountain in Vermont.

Snow science also is perfecting a system of predicting avalanches hours before they happen, something Dick Sommerfeld and fellow researchers at the U.S. Forest Service are developing along Berthoud Pass, about 130 miles from Fort Collins, Colo.

Avalanches can develop when a brittle layer of snow sits beneath a wetter outer layer. A weak surface in the snow, where two layers don't bond together well, can start cracking under the weight of the outer surface. As the crack radiates outward, the undersurface begins to slip and an avalanche is in progress.

Until now avalanche forecasters have depended on watching weather conditions and reports of small avalanches from a network of observing stations, but deadly avalanches develop so quickly that the system often fails to predict them.

Sommerfeld's team places sonar sensors on the experimental station path and then reads a computer printout. "Noise" from nearby roads and ski lifts is accounted for. The remaining noise is recorded as a subsurface, avalanche-causing crack.

"Noise from snow has very little character," Sommerfeld said. But after eight years of research, he believes experimenters have worked out a mathematical system for spotting a subsurface crack hours before an avalanche starts. It may be in commercial use before the end of this decade.

While some researchers work on the ground, other snow scientists have their heads in the clouds — studying snow crystals to learn how snow is formed.

"The structure of snow crystals tells us a great deal about the conditions under which snow is made," said Charles Knight of the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colo. "We now have a pretty good idea of how the basic snow cloud mechanism works. But there are gaps in our knowledge we're just beginning to fill in."

DEAR ABBY

Policy makes finder weeper, not keeper

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I had brunch on the 12th floor of the Ritz Carlton Hotel in Chicago on Nov. 18, 1984. In the bathroom, on the floor near the commode, my sister found a gorgeous diamond ring. Without a moment's hesitation, she took it to the manager's desk and gave it to the manager. (He did not take her name and address.) After leaving the hotel for the airport, I decided to call the manager and give him my sister's name.

Since then, we have gotten a lot of static from people we've told this to about our "stupidity."

My sister called the hotel manager a week later and was told that nobody had claimed the ring, that the hotel would hold it for a year, and if it was not claimed, it would be turned over to the Chicago police!

When my sister asked why wouldn't it be returned to her, since she had found it, the manager replied, "This is our policy; all you will get out of it is the satisfaction of knowing you did the honest thing."

Question: What should one do if one finds a valuable article in a public place? I have always believed that a found article, if not claimed, should be returned to the finder after a reasonable amount of time. I feel very uneasy about this, because I am sure that the person who lost this beautiful ring is heartsick, and I have the feeling that she will never see it again.

I am signing my name, address and phone number in case you need it, but sign me ... UPSET IN ST. PAUL, MINN.

DEAR UPSET: Write to the American Bar Association and ask what the laws of Illinois say about finding and returning valuables. (Laws vary from state to state.)

The address for the American Bar Association is 1155 E. 60 St., Chicago, Ill. 60637. Include in your letter what you told me, and be sure to enclose a business-sized, self-addressed, stamped envelope for a reply.

DEAR ABBY: To clarify what has become a confusing issue concerning the tomato: If an edible part of a plant comes from the flower (ovary), it is a fruit. If it comes from any other part of the plant, it should be considered a vegetable. Therefore, from a botanical standpoint a tomato is NOT "both a fruit and a vegetable" as was stated by Mr. Griesman in your column.

Abby, in regard to your question, "Where do the nuts fit in?": Nuts that come from the flower are fruits. This includes filberts, pecans, chestnuts and walnuts. Others that are not true nuts, but are actually seeds, are Brazils, cashews, almonds and peanuts. (I assume that we are talking about the same kind of nuts.) — MICHAEL L. DAVIS, BIOLOGIST, KNOXVILLE, TENN.

DEAR BIOLOGIST: You would not believe the number of letters I harvested on the tomato controversy.

A Tucson botanist wrote more about the tomato than I (or you) really want to know, but this sign-off was thought-provoking:

"Abby, I would like to believe this letter has cleared up the confusion, so in closing may I say, nuts to you!" — John Weins, Botanist

DEAR ABBY: Here it is, long after Christmas, and I feel like a jerk. The problem? When I was taking down my Christmas decorations, I found a stack of some 20 Christmas cards with my annual newsletter — all addressed, stamped and ready to be mailed before Christmas, of course.

I thought they had been mailed with another batch of cards I had written, but nope, here they are, setting on the table, bursting with Christmas cheer and last year's holiday news. Some were not very important, but many were to far-away relatives, who by now probably consider me an ol' "Bah-humbug"!

Should I mail these embarrassingly late Christmas cards with an apology — or just toss them out? Sign me ... SNAFU

DEAR SNAFU: Mail them with an apology. Better late than never.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Dollar up

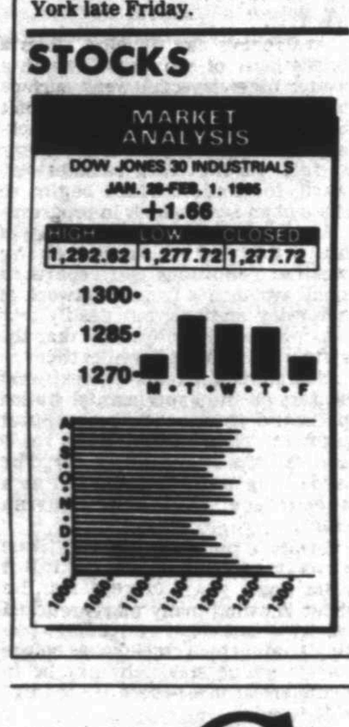

LONDON (AP) — The dollar, propelled by expectations of higher interest rates, soared on foreign exchange markets early today.Gold bullion fell in response to the dollar's rise.

A few hours after European markets opened, the dollar was being quoted at an all-time high against the Italian lira, a 13-year high against the Dutch guilder, a 12-year high against the West German mark and a seven-year high against the Swiss franc.

In Tokyo, the dollar jumped to 259.10 yen, up from Friday's close of 255.45 yen, in heavy trading. The Bank of Japan moved in to protect the yen, with dollar sales variously estimated between $100 million and $300 million. Later in London, the U.S. currency was still being quoted at 259.10 yen.

Gold was quoted at $303 in New York late Friday.

Reagan proposes energy spending cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — Citing declining oil prices and the weakening of the world petroleum cartel, President Reagan today proposed slashing government spending on energy 40 percent and continued reshaping of the Energy Department into an adjunct of the Pentagon.

Most of the $3.2 billion decrease in budget authority for activities of the Energy Department and energy programs of other agencies would come from halting oil purchases for the nation's emergency stockpile, raising the price of electricity from government-owned dams, phasing out conservation programs and cutting non-nuclear energy research.

"It is not necessary to have substantial federal spending to meet our national energy needs," the budget documents said. "The best way to meet this need is to let market forces work."

Nuclear weapons work would grow from $7.3 billion, or 64 percent of the Energy Department's current $11.4 billion budget, to $8 billion, or 82 percent of the $9.7 billion in budget authority proposed for next year.

Energy conservation funds, including weatherization subsidies for schools, hospitals and homes, would drop 30 percent to $381 million and end entirely by 1990.

Total energy research would fall only 5 percent, to $2.2 billion, as the administration continues to focus on nuclear power as the primary option for meeting future needs. But $233 million of the fission research budget of $631 million is devoted to cleaning up radioactive wastes from uranium mines and mills.

Coal and other fossil energy research would drop 40 percent to $172 million, while funds for research on solar and other renewable resources would decline 19 percent to $197 million.

The administration estimates it can save $2.1 billion by halting purchases of oil for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve begun as a response to the oil shortages of 1973-1974 and 1979-1980.

The reserve, located in salt caverns in Texas and Louisiana, now has 450 million barrels — 90 days' worth of imports — but Congress has said it should be 750 million barrels.

"OPEC (the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries) is under continuing pressure to cut prices," the budget documents said in arguing that the reserve is big enough.

As a deficit-reduction measure, the budget also calls for doubling the current 5 percent interest rate on the $14 billion debt owed the Treasury by the Bonneville Power Administration and four other power marketing agencies.

The debt helped build about 100 large hydroelectric dams, most of them in the West. Raising the interest rate would increase by $1 billion the annual power bills for customers of 1,000 municipal utilities and rural cooperatives.

The administration wants to phase out the Rural Electrification Administration, a New Deal-era Agriculture Department agency that has become a last refuge of help for financially troubled nuclear power plants.

The budget would cut the agency's lending ability from $4.5 billion to $900 million. The budget says legislation is being prepared to double the 5 percent interest rate on $37.7 billion in outstanding REA loans.

Higher fees for VA, FHA loans planned

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is proposing a temporary halt to building and fixing public housing for the poor, postponement of a program to help the poor pay rent and an increase in charges to new VA and FHA borrowers.

Housing and lending interest groups immediately attacked the president's fiscal 1986 housing budget as a devastating blow to efforts to meet the housing needs of low- and middle-income Americans.

A Mortgage Bankers Association analysis of the user fees for federally insured home loans said new charges to borrowers and increased fees for selling those mortgages to investors could cost Federal Housing Administration borrowers an additional $928 at settlement. Veterans Administration borrowers would have to pay an additional $2,900 at closing or $30 a month for the life of the loan.

The administration wants to increase the loan insurance premium collected by the FHA from 3.8 percent to 5 percent on single-family homes.

The 225,000 veterans expected to apply for VA home loans in 1986 will pay a 5 percent loan origination fee under the budget proposal. The fee is now 1 percent.

The budget, presented to Congress Monday, seeks a two-year halt of a voucher program to help poor people pay rent and other programs to fix up rental housing units and build new subsidized housing for the poor, elderly and handicapped.

Robert J. Spiller, chairman of Boston Five Cents Savings Bank and president of the Mortgage Bankers, called the fees "the latest attempt in a long series of backdoor initiatives that will cut the legs off programs that foster home ownership."

William J. Retzlaff, president of the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, said the cuts "constitute total abandonment of any pretense that this administration is trying to meet housing needs of low- and moderate-income Americans."

Saying state and municipal governments are in better fiscal health than the U.S. government, Reagan proposes a $1.23 billion reduction in federal community and regional development spending, a cut of about 15 percent, and elimination of the Urban Development Action Grant program, which acts as a magnet for private funding of development in depressed areas.

The administration argues that paying for programs like UDAG merely assists local governments to compete with other areas to attract private investment.

The budget, which covers spending for the 12 months starting Oct. 1, also proposes eliminating Small Business Administration disaster loans to homeowners and businesses and a two-year moratorium on Farmers Home Administration rural housing programs.

Reagan also suggests raising rates and changing coverage in the national flood insurance program.

The sale of Conway Yards in Conway, Pa. has local residents worried that jobs are going to be lost.

Proposed sale of Conrail gives townsfolk 'the jitters'

CONWAY, Pa. (AP) — Townsfolk who once boasted about the world's largest automated railroad yard are suffering the jitters over the proposed sale of Conrail, the government-owned railroad.

Workers fear that a new owner could eliminate jobs or move the yard straddling the Chicago main line, where about 40 freight trains a day are assembled and routed to their destinations.

"Rumors are flying around. We're almost afraid to look at the newspaper. The morale is really bad," said Sandra Brandenburg, the daughter of a railroad engineer and secretary of the borough of 3,000 residents about 25 miles northwest of Pittsburgh.

The government wants to sell its 85 percent interest in Conrail, formed from six bankrupt Northeast railroads by Congress in 1976 as a freight hauler serving 15 states as far west as Missouri. The region was devoid of rail service when the Penn Central Railroad, the largest carrier in the group, went bankrupt.

Conrail has turned a profit for the past four years, and earnings are expected to reach $500 million for 1984. But its future is unclear; the sale faces a likely congressional battle.

The 16 unions representing 35,000 Conrail workers want it sold to Alleghany Corp., a New York holding company. Private bids were also made by the Norfolk Southern Railroad and a group headed by hotel owner J. Willard Marriott.

U.S. Rep. Robert Edgar, D-Pa., has introduced legislation for a public stock offering under a plan modeled on a proposal by Conrail management.

U.S. Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole, who is reported to favor the Norfolk Southern bid, is expected to announce her recommendation soon.

Norfolk Southern, a Midwestern competitor of Conrail, has classification yards that do the same work Conway does. The Conrail workers here worry that Norfolk Southern's ownership would eliminate their yard.

New bank opens today in Stanton

From Staff Reports

STANTON —A newly-chartered bank opened its temporary headquarters today in Stanton pushing the total number of financial institutions in the community to four.

Stanton National Bank, located on State Highway 137 south of Interstate 20, opened at 9 a.m. today with depositor turnout expected to be high, according to bank president Claude C. Roper Jr.

"I really don't know what to expect but I think we'll be well received. We're hoping for a good turnout," Roper said. "Right now we're in temporary headquarters. We won't be in the new facility until next year."

The bank, a member of Stanton National Bank Corp. and insured under the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., will offer customers complete banking services with the exception of safe deposit boxes, according to Roper.

"We're offering all types of checking accounts, savings accounts, money market accounts and certificates of deposit," he said. "We also provide commerical, agriculture, consumer and short-term real estate loans in addition to a drive-through window."

Regular banking hours are from 9 a.m.-3 p.m. Monday through Friday; with drive-through windows hours set from 9 a.m.-6 p.m. Tuesday and Friday.

The bank's board of directors include Roper, J.D. Crawford, chairman; Charles G. Koonce, Louis G. Koonce, James B. Lewis, J.P. Stroud, all of Midland; and James. E. Wheeler of Stanton.

Stock market gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed higher today, rebounding from some early selling.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down more than 3 points at the outset, was up 4.74 at 1,282.46 by noontime on Wall Street.

Gainers took a slight lead over losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Investors have been getting a steady diet of upbeat news about the economy lately.

A monthly survey of corporate purchasing executives, the results of which were reported over the weekend, found that economic activity rebounded in January after a sluggish final four months of 1984.

The National Association of Purchasing Management said that both new orders and production increased sharply last month.

Along with the improved pace of the economy, however, has come a growing belief on Wall Street that the chances have diminished of any further easing of credit by the Federal Reserve.

With recession worries calmed, many analysts say, the Fed may be ready to go back to concentrating on keeping inflation at bay by restraining the growth of the money supply.

That prospect, in turn, has brought caution to many interest-rate forecasts. Rates rose moderately in early activity in the credit markets today.

Among actively traded blue chips, American Telephone gained ⅜ to 20⅞; Exxon ⅛ to 47⅝, and International Business Machines ⅝ to 136¼.

Real estate investor makes money buying while others sell

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK — Craig Hall was on his way to a great fortune even before he graduated from college, where he earned his way by buying and rejuvenating apartment complexes that others thought were losers.

Since then his company, Hall Real Estate Group, has become perhaps the nation's largest private syndicator of apartment properties, but Hall remains the same confident, independent-minded risk-taker he was back then.

In fact, much of Hall's success — his Dallas-based companies operate 51,000 units valued at $2 billion — is related to a contrary-thinking nature that draws him into areas and deals that others avoid.

When the Midwest began to look like an industrial wasteland in the first couple of years of the 1980s, Hall bought up apartment and office properties at fire sale prices.

The reason: He didn't believe the widespread notion that jobless workers were migrating to other parts of the nation and that they'd never come back. Instead, he found jobless workers had simply doubled up.

"During recessionary cycles, people move in with family or friends, or double up, instead of living on their own. Obviously, this is not a permanent life style," he relates in his annual real estate outlook.

"Similarly, we found evidence that many of the office space and retail cutbacks were not permanent but would change with the economy."

With their owners fleeing, Hall had his pick of the crop. After buying, he poured money into buildings to make up for their current losses, waiting for better times. "We persevered because we believe in cycles," he said.

Now, less than two years later, he says, "The people who said real estate will never be what it was in the Midwest, and that the auto industry will never come back, are saying that Michigan is the best place to invest."

Hall's straighforward views are especially valuable because of the rising interest in real estate by pension funds and individual investors, and because of impending legislation that might change the nature of the investment.

Here's a sample:

— "Frankly, we think the possibility of a true flat tax is very small. But it really doesn't matter. Housing and office space will not go out of style. The need for real estate will not cease to exist."

— "1985 will be a buyer's market. It may well be the first buyer's market since the 1974-1976 buyer's market which formed the basis for many enormously profitable real estate investments."

— "As so often happens in real estate, hindsight will later prove that many investors deserted the Sunbelt just at the time it would have been best to be a buyer!"

Houston "is on everyone's list as a place to avoid, but we have been buyers in that market. We believe over the next three to eight years Houston will come back strongly, and we will be well rewarded."

Areas high on Hall's selection list are Dallas-Fort Worth, Michigan, Chicago, Indianapolis, Washington, Philadelphia, Phoenix, Atlanta, Nashville, Orlando, St. Petersburg, Minneapolis and St. Louis.

Hall, who is still in his 30s, suggests that any real estate investor, whether he or she invests directly, through a syndication or through a pension fund, keep in mind four fundamentals:

— When things look worst it is generally the time to buy. When the market is recovering it is time to be cautious.

— The key between success or failure is the discipline and ability to stick with the basic plan of going against normal emotion. "When things are well, most people buy. We sell. When things are going poorly, we buy."

— Staying power, in both a financial and management sense, is the key to taking full advantage of real estate market cycles.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Funds with long-term bonds have higher yield

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I have had $20,000 in a money market mutual fund for about a year. Since interest rates started falling, the yield on this fund keeps going lower. I am thinking of transferring this money to a mutual fund that holds bonds and has a higher yield. I am in a low income tax bracket and can use the extra money. Would this switch be a wise move?

A. Strictly for income yes. "Income mutual funds" holding long-term bonds naturally produce higher yields than money market mutual funds, which hold short-term debt securities. It's the old story: the longer the maturity, the higher the yield.

Just be aware that you will take on some risk by making that switch. There is virtually no risk in a money market mutual fund. The value of shares in a mutual fund holding long-term bonds can fall or rise, in line with the values of the investments it holds.

Q. My home is worth about $90,000 and the balance on the 9½ percent mortgage is approximately $30,000. I plan to move to a different state. I won't need that money from the sale of my present home to buy a new home. Will it be better for me financially to sell my present home or to rent it out?

A. You might do well by renting — if you get high rent, find a good tenant and have someone manage the rental for you.

Management can be a problem. It involves collecting the rent, handling maintenance, repairs and such. It's awfully difficult to do that long distance. Letters have come to this column over the years telling of difficulties on that score — and also with tenants.

By selling, you'll have the money and no worries.

Also, if you buy or build a new "principal residence" within two years after selling your present home, you'll postpone paying tax on the profit from the sale. And, if you're 55 or older, you can take the "once-in-a-lifetime" exclusion and never pay tax on that profit.

All things considered, my advice is to sell your present home.

Q. We are two women, both 56, living in a condominium we bought in July 1983. We have a 30-year, $72,500 fixed-rate mortgage at 12½ percent. Our monthly payments, including taxes, are $1,180 — $590 each.

We are thinking about using some of the money we now have in six-month savings certificates, which pay less than 12½ percent, to pay off the mortgage. Would that be a wise move? There is a possibility we will sell the condo in two or three years. Should this influence our decision?

A. Without knowing many more details about your financial situations, it's impossible to come up with a flat-out answer to your first question. However, it's unlikely that paying off the mortgage would be the wise thing to do.

You're allowed to take the mortgage interest payments as itemized deductions on your income tax returns. You would lose those deductions by paying off the mortgage. I have to assume that, because you can meet the mortgage payments, you have reasonably good incomes and are in rather high income tax brackets. That makes the mortgage interest deductions valuable to you by saving you tax dollars.

The other side of the coin is that it doesn't pay to have a debt — your mortgage — on which interest is high when you have money working someplace else — your CDs — where interest rates are lower. You get a tax deduction on the mortgage interest but you have to pay income tax on the CD interest.

Nevertheless, the mortgage interest does greatly increase your itemized deductions and reduces your income tax bills. My vote would be to leave the mortgage as is.

Impaired sense of smell affects sense of taste

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother went to her doctor because she felt that food didn't taste the way it used to, and he said that he wanted to test her sense of smell. Why would he be interested in her sense of smell if she was complaining about her sense of taste? — Ms. W.L., Lexington, Ky.

Dear Ms. L.: An impaired sense of smell may be responsible for an impaired sense of taste.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've heard the expression that familiarity breeds contempt, and maybe that is why some people consider aspirin to be less valuable than other drugs for the treatment of arthritis. But that still does not answer the question of why aspirin is used so much when there are so many other drugs available. — Kenneth, Winston-Salem, N.C.

Dear Kenneth: If you were searching for a drug to be used to treat any condition, what factors would you consider important? I suggest you would want a drug that is effective, inexpensive and relatively free of side effects. Aspirin meets these criteria in the treatment of arthritis, and that is why it is prescribed for so many patients.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Would you please explain what a colostomy is? I would also like to know if everyone who is operated on for cancer of the colon or rectum has to have a colostomy. — Douglas, Clearwater Beach, Fla.

Dear Douglas: A colostomy is a surgical procedure that connects the opening of the colon to an opening on the surface of the body. The procedure itself is a rather simple one. Only about 10 to 15 percent of patients who have colorectal cancer require a colostomy.

People who have had colostomies can do virtually everything they did before the operation, both in regard to their work and social activities.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a pretty bad case of eczema and my doctor says that it may be due to a food allergy. Is this possible? — Ms. A.W., Modesto, Calif.

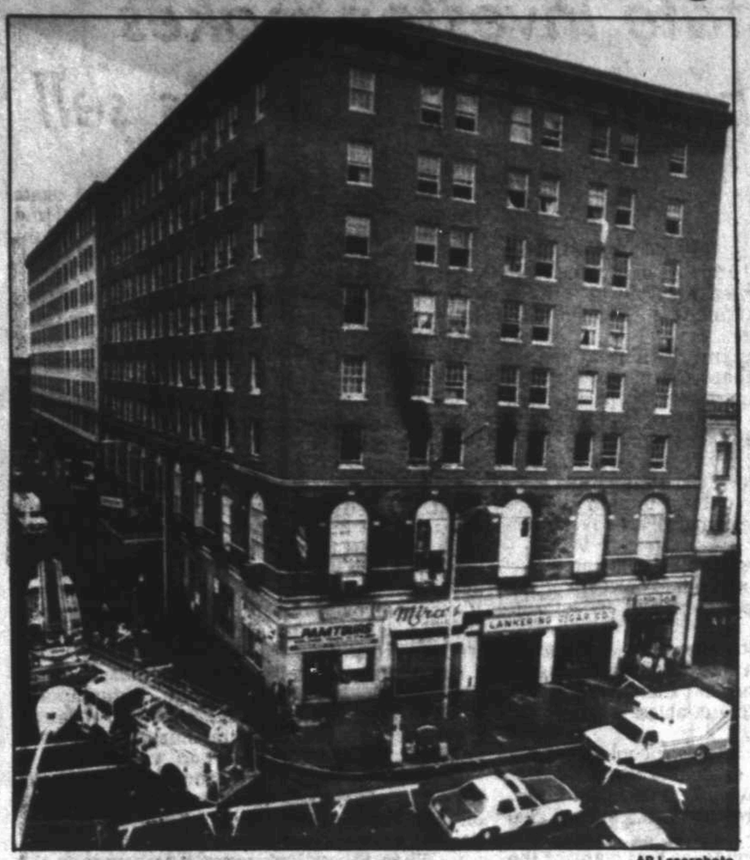

Dear Ms. W.: There is some controversy among physicians as to the role of food allergy in the development of eczema. One physician who believes that there is a link is Dr. William T. Kniker, of the University of Texas Health Science Center in San Antonio.

Dr. Kniker recommends that a person with moderate to severe eczema be placed on an elimination diet — that is, a diet that eliminates the probable offending foods. If the patient improves, these foods can be permanently eliminated from the diet, and a diet with safe foods can be prescribed.

In my own practice I have seen may patients with eczema. After careful history, thoughtful physical examination and special testing I tailor-make the treatment for that particular patient's problem. Many of these patients have then shown significant improvement.

Burned-out hotel sign of terror, hope

AP Laserphoto

Nearly four months after 14 people died in a fire at the Alexander Hamilton Hotel in Paterson, N.J., developers hope to turn the gutted hotel into the centerpiece of the city's redevelopment.

By JOHN DIAZ

PATERSON, N.J. (AP) — Nearly four months after fire swept through the run-down Alexander Hamilton Hotel, the building stands as a sign of possible urban redevelopment, and reminder of a night of terror that left 14 people dead and 44 injured.

The first floor of the eight-story, 62-year-old building is a testimony to the fire's destructiveness and the toll it took on residents' lives. In the six rooms untouched by flames, a few pictures sit on mantels and cigarette-filled ashtrays remain on nightstands.

Judy Bullock's 15-year-old daughter, who was trapped for three hours in the burning hotel that was their home for 10 years, still "wakes up crying a lot," and Ms. Bullock said that she, too, has nightmares.

"I keep dreaming my girlfriend is alive," she said. "I keep seeing dead people. And I guess it won't go away for a while."

By the night of the fire, the hotel's history of elegance was long faded. Most residents were on low or fixed incomes, many relying on welfare or Social Security checks for rent that ranged from $20 a day to $80 a week.

Owner Paul Lachman has a tentative agreement to sell the building for $1.1 million to two developers who are considering spending $8 million to turn it into a first-class hotel.

Some officials see the project as a centerpiece in the redevelopment of this struggling industrial city but others are uncertain about how to replace the Alexander Hamilton as a low-income residence and a haven for people dispossessed by fires elsewhere.

If the sale does not go through, Lachman said he will rebuild, spending about $500,000 for a more modest renovation.

Russel Conklin, the 44-year-old tenant and handyman accused of starting the Oct. 18 fire after arguing with a desk clerk, is in the Passaic County Jail awaiting an April 15 trial on charges of murder and aggravated arson.

Relocating the 300 other residents was no small task for local government and relief agencies. As Mayor Frank X. Graves put it, Paterson may be "on a roll" in business development, but housing has lagged behind.

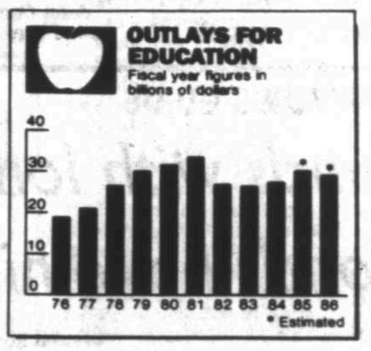

Some of the residents were taken temporarily to Camp Hope, a wooded camp for disadvantaged children about 60 miles away in West Milford. But with winter approaching, the last were moved out of the lightly insulated cabins Nov. 9.

"If you're a kid going to summer camp, it's a great summer camp," said county Administrator Nicholas DiDonna. "If you're a family looking for winter housing, it's more difficult."

Pamela Goar, the county's director of human services, said there are "still a few stragglers" but the rest of the Alexander Hamilton tenants have found new homes.

"Most people, including myself, had to settle for places we really couldn't afford," said Ms. Bullock, who found a $350-a-month apartment in nearby Haledon.

Budget would cut $2.3 billion from student aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan asked Congress today to slash the student aid budget by $2.3 billion, wiping out loans, grants and other financial assistance for more than 1 million college students.

In his fiscal 1986 budget, Reagan proposed barring students from families with adjusted gross incomes above $32,500 from the Guaranteed Student Loan program, starting in the 1986-87 school year.

Moreover, students with family incomes above $25,000 could not get Pell Grants, National Direct Loans or earn money from campus jobs under the College Work-Study program, under the Reagan budget.

Acting Education Secretary Gary L. Jones said the student aid cuts reflected "a major philosophical shift," returning "to the traditional emphasis on parent and student responsibility for financing college costs."

Reagan moved to freeze most of the Education Department's big-ticket programs for elementary and secondary education, including a $3.2 billion remedial education program for the poor, a $532 million block grant program; $1.1 billion to teach handicapped children; $838 million in vocational and adult education, and the $143 million bilingual education program.

The department, which is spending $17.4 billion this year, said its expenditures without any cuts would hit $18 billion in fiscal 1986. The cuts and rescissions will hold that figure to $16.9 billion next year and produce $2.6 billion in additional savings in 1987.

The department's budget authority would dive from $18.4 billion to $15.5 billion, a 16 percent drop.

Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., father of the Pell Grant program which would lose 808,000 of its 2.8 million recipients, said:

"It is hard to believe the administration could seriously propose such Draconian changes. How can we build an 'opportunity society' if we deny so many young people educational opportunity?"

Reagan also wants to rescind $169 million from 10 school programs for fiscal 1985, and to scrap 38 programs — including several of the student aid programs — next year to save $1.1 billion.

The student aid programs now have an $8.6 billion spending limit. Some 5.3 million students, or one in every two attending college half-time or more, now get help from one or more of the programs — Pell Grants, Supplemental Grants, Work-Study, National Direct Loans, State Incentive Grants and Guaranteed Loans.

The Reagan plan would provide aid to 4.25 million students, or 1,027,000 fewer.

Reagan would prohibit a student from drawing more than $4,000 in federal grants, loans or work-study salaries. In cases of dire need, some now draw up to $11,000. All students would have to come up with $800 on their own before they can get a grant or loan.

The middle-income students knocked out of the heavily subsidized Guaranteed Student Loan program could borrow from an auxiliary program called PLUS on much less favorable terms.

Under the Reagan plan, the maximum PLUS loan would climb from $2,500 to $4,000 and interest rates, now 12 percent, would be pegged to the Treasury bill rate plus 3 percent.

Also, borrowers would pay a 1 percent guarantee fee to help cover defaults. The PLUS program charges interest and requires payments while students are still in school.

Migrant education would be cut by $41 million. The so-called TRIO programs to groom minority teenagers for colleges would lose $93 million of their $175 million. A $24 million school desegregation advisory program would be phased out over two years, and $75 million for magnet schools would be rescinded.

Libraries would lose $125 million in aid. Impact aid for school districts with heavy enrollments of children of federal employees would be cut by $152 million to $543 million.

Also slated for rescission would be $79 million in higher education programs, including $27 million for international education and foreign language study, and the $13 million Fund for the Improvement of Post-Secondary Education.

Reagan wants Congress to take back $5 million earmarked for a new "Excellence in Education" program for exemplary school districts.

He vowed to press again for a tuition tax credit that would start at $100 in 1985, at a cost of $359 million, and a modest tax break for parents who save for their children's college educations.

Regan, Baker complete Washington job swap

WASHINGTON (AP) — Donald T. Regan and James A. Baker III formally completed their job swap today — Regan reporting for work as President Reagan's chief of staff and Baker taking the reins at the Treasury Department.

Regan took the oath of office shortly after he arrived for work at the White House at 7:20 a.m. EST, said presidential spokesman Larry Speakes.

Baker, who had taken the oath as treasury secretary in his home Sunday, was back at the White House at midmorning today, but just for a meeting.

Ceremonial oath-takings are to be held Friday in the Oval Office, with members of the two men's families on hand, Speakes said.

The Baker-Regan job switch had been underway for several days. Deputies and aides have been filling boxes and transferring belongings from one building across the street to the other.

The two men took their closest aides with them, but the personnel changes don't appear to alter significantly the White House staff structure.

A series of staff announcements said Assistant Secretary Thomas C. Dawson, Regan's business and trade adviser at Treasury, was moving to the White House as executive assistant to the new chief of staff. Banking expert David L. Chew became Regan's new staff secretary in charge of paper flow to and from Regan's desk.

Assistant Secretary Alfred H. Kingon, Regan's policy and communications chief at Treasury, is succeeding Craig Fuller as secretary to the Cabinet, with the rank of deputy assistant to the president. Fuller will help coordinate the transition, then leave government for an unspecified post in private business, the White House said.

Regan also took his executive assistant at Treasury, Christopher Hicks, to the White House to take over the duties of John F.W. Rogers, the present director of administration. Reagan plans to nominate Rogers to the new post of assistant treasury secretary for management.

Baker aide Richard G. Darman is following the outgoing White House chief of staff to Treasury to serve as deputy secretary.

Coroners' checks, balances vary widely throughout U.S.

BY MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK — In Peoria County, Ill., it's an inquest jury. In Denver, it's the possibility of a lawsuit. In South Carolina, it's a report to the governor.

Such are the checks and balances on coroners or medical examiners, whose decisions on how people died rarely get public scrutiny.

Coroners don't review every death in their jurisdiction; generally, they get involved in cases of violent death or cases in which the cause of death is not apparent.

Their rulings — accident, suicide, murder — play major roles in cases of police brutality, institutional care and insurance reimbursement.

The potential for abuse has been highlighted recently in New York City, where the chief medical examiner is being investigated following newspaper reports that he issued misleading autopsy reports to protect police from charges of brutality and gave misleading testimony at homicide trials.

Elsewhere in the country, safeguards against such abuse are as varied as the ways in which suspicious deaths are investigated. Some counties elect coroners, who are generally not physicians but who can use doctors for autopsies. Others appoint medical examiners, generally physicians, though not necessarily trained in the procedures of the job. Some states use a mixture.

Coroners and medical examiners do get pressure on occasion about their determinations on manner of death. Families may want suicides ruled accidents so they can collect insurance money, or because of personal or religious reasons.

"I've had people come into my office — attorneys, families — that absolutely insisted that a death was not a suicide," said Herbert Buzbee, 41, the elected coroner in Peoria County for 10 years.

Buzbee calls on an inquest jury to make decisions in cases of apparent suicide or other violent deaths like drownings, shootings, stabbings and industrial deaths. Deaths in police custody are usually suspected suicides, and juries decide the manner of death, he said.

Juries decide about a quarter of the 850 cases he handles each year.

"I think it's a good check and balance," Buzbee said. "I don't believe one person should have the right to say Jane Doe died from a medical cause, and then also give the manner (of death)."

NATION IN BRIEF

Man's death leaves teen as sole survivor of crash

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — The death of a 45-year-old man today of injuries suffered in the crash of a Galaxy Airlines plane last month brought the death toll to 69. A teenager who walked away from the Reno crash remained the only survivor.

Robert Miggins of Plymouth, Minn., died at 4:05 a.m. at Southern Nevada Memorial Hospital, said nursing supervisor Jackie Griffin.

Miggins had suffered burns over 90 percent of his body in the Jan. 21 "gamblers' special" crash.

The death of Miggins, 45, left 17-year-old George Lamson Jr. as the sole survivor of the Jan. 21 crash.

The youth, his father, George Lamson Sr., and Miggins were the only three people aboard the flight to survive the initial impact.

The younger Lamson suffered only minor hand burns and a head cut, but the elder Lamson had severe injuries and died Jan. 29.

Prison returning to normal

PENDLETON, Ind. (AP) — After searching the entire Indiana Reformatory for weapons, officials are concentrating on returning the maximum-security facility to normal after a 15-hour standoff in which inmates held three people hostage.

Nine inmates involved in the incident Friday have been segregated from the prison population and officials are reviewing procedures used to defuse the uprising, state Correction Commissioner Gordon Faulkner said Sunday.

Five of the seven guards stabbed in the uprising remained hospitalized Sunday and one of the hostages, a counselor, said some of the inmates "kept us alive" when others held homemade knives to the captives' throats.

Men charged with arson

CHICAGO (AP) — Two men charged with murder and arson for profit and held on $1 million bail apiece had an accomplice who may have fled to Korea after a blaze that killed three firefighters, authorities say.

Suk J. Kim, 36, of Skokie, and Jang Han Bae, 35, were charged Saturday with three counts of murder and one of arson in the Friday fire. Cook County Judge James Meeghan reduced bond Sunday for both men from $5 million.

Bae, of Streamwood, owned Victstar Electronics, which was housed in the building that collapsed during the fire, killing the three firefighters and injuring a fourth, said Detective Lawrence Poli.

Firefighters hand out fliers

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — Authorities don't know whether only one person is responsible for a string of 19 fires that have caused more than $900,000 damage since Dec. 29, but they're taking steps to cut down the risk.

Firefighters last week distributed 5,000 fliers warning residents to dispose of combustible materials and trash that could help start a fire or make it spread. No one has been injured in the blazes.

"If it is the same person, we have a real sickie out there," said Fire Marshal Rayford Hiatt. "I'd like to nail him and give him some help."

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO CONDUCT WEATHER MODIFICATION OPERATIONS IN THE STATE OF TEXAS

Date of the first of three weekly publications of this notice: February 4, 1985.

1. Notice is hereby given that North American Weather Consultants, a professional weather consulting company, 1521 East 3900 South, Suite 103, Salt Lake City, Utah 84124 intends to file an appliction with the Texas Department of Water Resources for a State Permit to conduct weather modification operations to change or attempt to change the natural development of clouds for the purpose, objective, period, and by the methods summarized below.

2. North American Weather consultants submitted an application for a Texas Weather Modification license on December 11, 1984.

3. The purpose of the weather modification operation is to increase rainfall. The objective is to affect the water resources of the City of San Angelo. The period of the proposed permit is April 15 through October 15 for a four year period beginning in 1985.

4. The proposed weather modification operation is to be conducted for and on behalf of the City of San Angelo, P. O. Box 1751, San Angelo, Texas 76902.

5. The proposed weather modification operation is to be carried out in an "operational area" and a "target area" to cause the intended effects to occur only in the target area. The operational area includes all of Irion, Tom Green, Reagan, and Glasscock Counties and portions of Sterling, Coke, Schleicher, Crockett, Upton, and Midland Counties. This area is bounded by the following points: a point on the Martin-Midland County line four miles east of Interstate 20, south to a point on the Upton-Crockett County line four miles west of the Reagan County line, southeast to the City of Ozona, east to the intersection of Sutton-Schleicher-Crockett County lines, east along entire Schleicher-Sutton County line, north along Schleicher-Menard and Tom Green-Concho County lines, west along Tom Green-Runnels County line, northwest to the intersection of highway 163 with the Sterling-Mitchell County line, west along Sterling-Mitchell and Glasscock-Howard County lines, then west to starting point.

6. The area to be affected by the proposed weather modification operation is the target area. The target area includes all of Irion County and portions of Glasscock, Sterling, Tom Green, Schleicher, Crockett, and Reagan Counties. This area is bounded by the following points: a point at the intersection of highway 87 with the Glasscock-Sterling County line; due west for 20 miles to a point in Glasscock County; due south to the City of Bert; southeast to a point on highway 163, 10 miles south of the City of Barnhart; due east to a point on highway 2084, 8 miles north of highway 190; due north to a point on highway 380, 8 miles east of City of San Angelo; northwest to a point 10 miles due east of the intersection of highway 87 with the Glasscock-Sterling County lines; due west back to the starting point.

7. The methods and materials to be used in conducting this operation are summarized herein: a licensed meteorologist will select cumuliform clouds for cloud-seeding using a dedicated weather radar display, standard meteorological data, and forecast techniques to direct seeking aircraft equipped to dispense the seeding particles, silver iodide crystals, into cloud tops or into updraft air at cloud base.

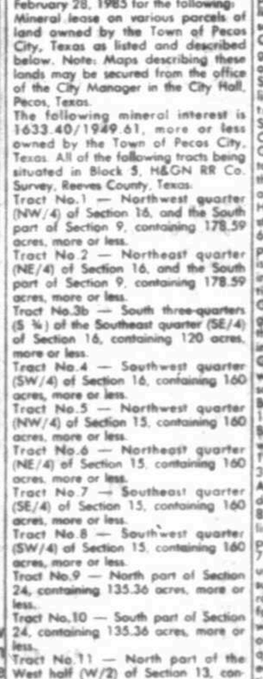

8. The Texas Water Commission shall, if requested by at least 25 persons, hold a public hearing in the area where the operation is to be conducted prior to the issuance of a permit. No public hearing will be held on this application unless a request for a hearing is made within 30 days of the date of the first publication of this Notice. Requests for a hearing should be made in writing to the Office of General Counsel, Texas Department of Water Resources, P. O. Box 13087, Capital Station, Austin, Texas 78711. Telephone (512) 475-7836.

9. Requests for further information about the proposed weather modification operation should be made to the Weather and Climate Section, Texas Department of Water Resources, same mailing address as above. Telephone (512) 475-6318.
