Storms could cost counties $190 million

HOUSTON (AP) — Storm damage in Montgomery and Harris counties, hardest hit during a weekend of whirling tornadoes and swirling floodwaters, may total nearly $190 million, officials said.

Officials in both counties asked Gov. Mark White Monday to declare their counties disaster areas and make them eligible for state and federal loans.

About 5,000 people were evacuated following heavy rains, twisters and flooding, officials said.

Harris County Judge Jon Lindsay estimated $60 million to $90 million damage in that county. He said as many as a million Harris County residents were affected by the storms.

Montgomery County Judge Jimmie C. Edwards III said damage in his county from tornadoes and subsequent flooding would be in the millions, "possibly $100 million."

Efforts to tabulate the exact amount of damage and the number of people affected have been hampered by flooding along the San Jacinto's east and west forks.

Lake Houston crested at a near-record level at 11 a.m. Monday, sending a four-foot wall of water crashing over the top of the city of Houston's dam in northeast Harris County.

The water level of Lake Houston stopped rising at 48.54 feet. The record of 49.07 feet was set in April 1979. Flood stage is 44.50 feet.

"You better believe it's a lot of water," said W.F. Reed, a dam operator.

Skies remained clear Monday night, leading officials to voice optimism for the first time since Friday, when twisters in southeast Texas killed 10 people and floodwaters which killed two more began to rise.

"We think it's tapering off and we're going to be all right," said Willie Rankin, a Lake Houston pump operator.

In the Southeast Texas town of Kountze, near Beaumont, the body of the second of two drowning victims was recovered Monday from rain-swollen Wildwood Lake.

Kyle Bertrand, 17, of Wildwood was found 20 yards from where a companion's body was found Sunday morning, authorities said.

Hardin County Sheriff H.R. Holzapfel said Bertrand and Pat Vigreux, 18, were boating at about 6 p.m. Saturday when the boat tipped over into churning water on the lake spillway. The lake was several feet higher than normal, officials said.

About 15,000 people were still without power Monday afternoon, Houston Lighting & Power spokesman Aaron Koen said.

"We're down to the hard-core areas now," Koen said. "We have to pack equipment into a wet area. We're having to hand-carry both poles and transformers into the area and that makes for slow work."

He said about 5,000 workers, including about 2,800 employees of other power companies and private contractors, were working 12- to 15-hour days on repairs.

In east Harris County, the Lynchburg Ferry, which transports about 4,000 motor vehicles daily across the Houston Ship Channel near Baytown, was still closed. The ferry was shut down late Saturday because of the debris from the flooding.

Monthly figures indicate new trends in economy

Sharp, short-term increases in consumer prices expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices, barely rising so far this year, are likely to increase sharply in coming months because of higher gasoline taxes and weather-damaged fruit and vegetable crops, economists say.

Even so, economists say the jump, expected to be the biggest in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index since last summer, should only last a few months.

"It is a temporary blip in the index," Ted Gibson, economist at San Francisco's Crocker National Bank, said in advance of today's release of inflation figures for April.

"We don't think it's a fundamental upward shift in the rate of inflation," he said.

Gibson predicted consumer prices rose by a seasonally adjusted 0.6 percent last month, and another private economist, Donald Ratajczak, forecast a 0.7 percent gain.

If so, that would be the sharpest gain since the summer when consumer prices soared 1.1 percent in June and 0.6 percent in July.

After the summer, price increases tapered off considerably.

Those costs went up only 0.1 percent in March, after falling 0.2 percent in February and rising 0.2 percent in January.

That meant for the first three months of the year, consumer prices rose at an annual rate of 0.4 percent, the smallest advance for a calendar quarter since 1965.

April's expected surge is being blamed on the nickel-a-gallon increase in federal gasoline taxes that began on the first of last month and increased fuel oil prices.

Local unemployment rate falls to 5.6 as labor force dwindles

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

Midland's unemployment rate during April dropped to 5.6 percent, a figure that appears low in comparison to the U.S. unemployment rate of 10 percent. It's also lower than rates in some other Texas cities — Odessa with 9.4 percent, El Paso 12.5, Houston 9.5.

Statewide, the rate is 8.1 percent. Cities like Dallas (5.3 percent including Fort Worth) and Lubbock and San Antonio, have low rates similar to Midland's.

Midland's labor force dropped by 200 people in April from the previous month, according to preliminary Texas Employment Commission figures released Monday. At the same time, 400 persons were added to the labor force in Odessa.

The number of people available for work in this city — 64,700 — is more than 2,000 workers fewer than in April 1982. Unemployed persons within this group numbered 3,600, showing the same 200-person drop that was evident in the labor force in March. Odessa's unemployed persons numbered 100 fewer from March to April, down to 6,800.

"Either these people left the area or they are no longer looking for work," said TEC-Midland manager Ed Miller.

Commissioners can't seem to settle county jail issue

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Ways and means of building a new Midland County Jail cropped up Monday like an old unsettled lawsuit lodged in trial.

The Commissioners' Court knows it must be settled but how to do so is the issue.

The court's new approach to an old subject gained impetus after voters on April 23 rejected an $11.69 million bond issue calling for a new jail, courthouse addition and a 25 percent tax increase to pay off the proposed indebtedness.

In their latest approach, commissioners are considering issuing certificates of obligation (COs) to raise cash for the jail. It doesn't require voter approval.

The April 23 rejected approach was through general obligation bonds, which by law requires majority approval by the electorate.

Rather than building a jail on the courthouse square, commissioners are considering putting the jail on a nine-acre site adjoining the Midland County Exhibit Building off U.S. Highway 80 east of Midland or on the 7.6-acre County Barn site which commissioners last year rejected — after protest by the citizenry — as a plot for a stockade to relieve the jail's overcrowded conditions.

Related stories, Pages 1 and 2C

"IT'S...A STRAIGHT shot down (U.S.) 80," Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith said of the Exhibit Building site. "There is plenty of room..., room to expand, no parking problems."

The sheriff suggested an economical "plain vanilla" metal building to form a "shell" over the cells could make for a suitable jail.

After the four commissioners, County Judge Bill Ahders and the sheriff discussed the type of jail and sheriff offices at the proposed site, Larry Skiles, a municipal bond broker for Rauscher Pierce Refsnes Inc., explained certificates of obligation to the court.

Though the commissioners could sell the COs and raise taxes to pay off the bonds without going to the voters, the electorate could petition the court for an election to approve the COs. That election would have to be called if 5 percent of Midland County's 44,000 qualified voters signed the petition before the commissioners authorized the COs following public notice of their intentions.

If voters rejected the CO proposal, the commissioners could try again, and once again the voters could sign another petition calling for an election.

"It's a Catch-22 situation," said Skiles.

HOWEVER, HE NOTED that by law commissioners somehow must provide a jail for the sheriff to operate.

Man convicted in convict's death

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — A frustrated man who waited four years for the state to execute the killer of his parents, then set up the murder of the Death Row inmate, was sentenced to prison by a judge who said he "understood" the crime but could not condone it.

"People cannot take the law into their own hands," said Circuit Judge James Morris, sentencing Richard "Tony" Cimo to eight years in prison.

Cimo had first denied any knowledge of the prison bombing in September that killed 24-year-old Rudolph Tyner, but pleaded guilty Monday to conspiracy to murder, threatening to kill by means of an explosive and failure to report his knowledge of a felony.

Donald "Pee Wee" Gaskins, a convicted mass murderer, has been sentenced to death after being found guilty in March of getting a booby-trapped intercom placed in Tyner's cell at the Central Correctional Institution and detonating the explosives. Two other men face trial in the case and a third has pleaded guilty.

Friends and co-workers testified that Cimo, a 36-year-old bricklayer and father of two, became distraught after his mother and stepfather, Myrtie and Bill Moon, were shot to death at their Murrells Inlet grocery store in 1978.

Tyner was arrested and found guilty, but the conviction was reversed because of prosecution error and a new trial was ordered, disturbing and frustrating Cimo, witnesses said. Tyner, who was again convicted and sentenced to death, also boasted about the murder in prison, according to other testimony.

Solicitor Jim Dunn of Horry County said that while Cimo tried to work within the legal system, Tyner was grinning at him during the murder trial.

"I loved my father and mother very much," Cimo told the judge at his sentencing. He said he was able to handle the pressure until he heard that Tyner's first conviction had been reversed.

"That hurt me bad after all that hard work," he said. "We just wanted to get it over with. People in the prison told me how my mother was begging on her knees before he shot her."

"Tony Cimo is a tragic figure," said Deputy Solicitor Richard Harpootlian. "He's even more tragic now."

Before pronouncing sentence, Morris said, "I do not sympathize or condone what you did, but I understand it. The wheels of justice do turn slowly. There are others such as yourself who would like to see them move more swiftly."

The slow pace ensures that no mistakes are made and that justice is served, the judge said.

Natural gas bill to be drafted

Washington Bureau

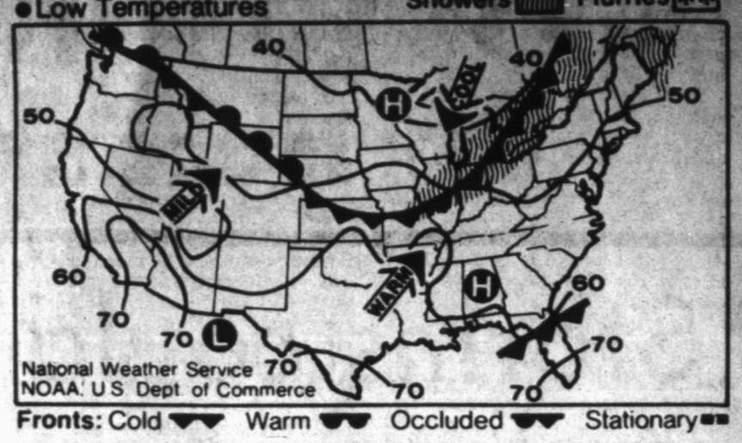

WASHINGTON — A natural gas bill will be drafted in the House of Representatives this week, starting Wednesday morning, Rep. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt, announced this morning.

The bill as proposed by Rep. Phil Sharp (D-Indiana) is not one that will please most producers, Loeffler's office said.

Two Texans are on the fossil and synthetic fuels subcommittee, which will debate this bill. They are Rep. Russ Hall, D-Rockwell, who is familiar with oil and gas problems, and Rep. Jack Fields, R-Houston. Loeffler is not a member of the subcommittee and cannot be present at its sessions. Instead, he will attend meetings of the House Appropriations Committee, of which he is a member.

Several hundred clergymen and nuclear freeze proponents demonstrate in the Capitol Rotunda Monday against the MX missile program and nuclear arms. Debate continues on the issue, with President Reagan lobbying in favor of the program.

Reagan may influence MX vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's personal lobbying may make the difference as Congress prepares to vote on the MX missile — the nuclear weapon critics fear could renew the arms race but supporters call necessary to win arms control concessions from the Soviet Union.

"It's close, but if a vote were taken right now, we'd win," Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., an MX supporter, said Monday after three hours of debate in the Democrat-controlled House.

In the Senate, where Republicans dominate, Reagan is also likely to have his way, said Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., an opponent of the 10-warhead weapon the president calls the "Peacekeeper."

Both the House and Senate were tentatively scheduled to vote late today or Wednesday on whether to permit the Pentagon to go ahead and spend $625 million to develop and test the missile.

Reagan, who told reporters he was optimistic, invited about 60 House members to a White House dinner Monday night for a final round of lobbying.

"He's really pressing hard on this. The president can be pretty persuasive," said Aspin, a former MX opponent who now supports the missile as a way to reach arms control agreements.

"He was behind before, but I think we are OK, now," said Aspin.

As the congressional debate began, police arrested about 200 persons who gathered in the Capitol rotunda to protest atomic weapons, including the MX. Such protests are illegal inside the Capitol.

Congress has rejected two previous Reagan administration plans for basing the MX.

Panel can't seem to settle county jail issue

Skiles said the Texas Legislature authorized the "quick" CO approach to jail financing to handle emergency situations of overcrowded jails, court orders and Texas Jail Commission Standards recommendations to upgrade jails or build new ones.

"They (COs) can be done quickly and with a minimum amount of paperwork," he said. "It is not necessary legally to have an election on that matter."

He noted that Val Verde County, under federal court order, issued $3.2 million in COs to build a 150-prisoner jail near Del Rio.

"They really had no choice," he said. But he did note that the jail in effect would be paid for by the federal government, which leases cell space to hold illegal aliens. Due to that situation, the Val Verde County Commissioners' Court probably will not have to effect a tax increase to pay off the indebtedness.

As for Midland County, the "market is good," he said. "Midland County should have the ability to issue a significant amount of bonds" at about 8 percent interest over a 10-year period. For a jail, that issuance could be done "relatively painlessly," Skiles said before he mentioned the possibility of voter intervention.

BUT ONCE the commissioners have authorized COs, the court's CO commitment "cannot be rescinded once you issue the bonds." To do so, he said, would undermine the value — the security — of the bonds. "They would be worthless.

"That's just my understanding, based upon what the bond attorneys have told me," Skiles said of the no-recall aspect. "But they're not ready to put that in writing yet." He suggested that Midland County likely would be able to get a financially-sound "AA" bond rating.

While neither the financing nor the architectural scheme of the proposed Midland County Jail is settled, the sheriff is proposing a facility for 250 inmates, though cells initially might be built for only 175 prisoners.

The present jail, on the fifth floor of the downtown Midland County Courthouse, usually holds about 80 to 90 prisoners, though it has held more than 120 inmates in violation of jail standards in peak prisoner loads in recent years.

In setting a jail apart from the courthouse, Smith noted that new problems, such as transporting prisoners, arise.

"Surely with the number of jails being built now," said Commissioner Win Brown, "we can profit by their mistakes" and avoid reoccurring problems.

"ARE WE WORRIED about aesthetics?" asked Commissioner Durward Wright. The sheriff said that a pre-fabricated metal shell to insulate prisoners from the elements would suffice. "You're building a jail inside the shell," he said. "I don't see why something like that wouldn't be acceptable."

"The cheaper is the best as far as I'm concerned," said Ahders, adding as long as the jail is secure.

The sheriff said that no jail is escape proof.

"They thought Alcatraz (Prison) was escape proof," said Ahders, "and they had some (prisoners) escape."

Noted Wright of security at the proposed jail: "They're going to have to break out with a cutting torch, and by then somebody is going to see you."

In planning a new county jail, Brown suggested the commissioners and the sheriff check with other counties to see "what they are doing."

Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis said the commissioners might investigate new jails at Denton, Abilene, San Angelo and Sherman.

"If you're talking about a tin barn or whatever," he said, "you better see what the others are doing."

Smith, who is a member of Texas Commission on Jail Standards, allowed that he has "the advantage of having an understanding you (commissioners) don't have" of jail functions and designs.

The sheriff said the jail's interior ideally should lend itself to a good work environment to attract jailers. "Generally, people do not like to work in jails," he said. And sometimes those who do are "people who cannot get a job anywhere else" or have a "psychological" hang-up over jails.

Smith said the public may view jails as a series of steel cells in which prisoners may be packed.

No so, he said.

Prisoners' safety and well-being need to be protected.

"Who wants to have someone to die in your jail?"

The sheriff said that every prisoner has a family — people who care for him or her.

"Without fail, everyone of them...has an attorney" to protect the prisoner's rights, he said.

Senate approves payroll tax bill

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Senate has approved and sent back to the House a $1.3 billion payroll tax bill designed to cure the state unemployment benefits fund by October 1986.

The bill, approved 30-0 by the Senate, returns to the House for approval of an amendment.

Sen. John Sharpe, D-Victoria, said the measure was structured to go easy on small employers.

"For one thing the tax rate is based partly on a flat rate and partly on the employer's experience rating (the number of unemployment claims filed)," said Sharp.

"Another thing, this bill spreads the effect of the bill over three years."

The Legislature's struggle with the state's sagging uneployment compensation fund has continued since lasat year's discovery that the fund, administered by the Texas Employment Commission, was about to go broke, which it did last November.

Rising unemployment in the state drained the compensation fund, and it took a special session in 1982 to authorize the state to borrow money from the federal government to keep the fund afloat.

Odessa man arrested in robbery

ODESSA — An Odessa man has been arrested in connection with last week's armed robbery of the Bargain Palace at 701-A N. Dixie Blvd.

Municipal Court Judge Otis Moore set $10,000 bond Monday on 23-year-old Randy Wilson, who was arrested at his home Sunday on a warrant charging him with robbing the store of $130 on May 18.

A woman employee told officers a man came into the establishment about 10:30 a.m. that day and took the money at gunpoint.

Senior student doesn't look part of 'Mr. Math'

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — High school senior John Steinke doesn't wear wire-rimmed glasses, have posters of Albert Einstein plastered on his wall or answer to the nickname "Mr. Math."

But he's a certified math whiz, who recently outscored 400,000 other students to win this year's USA Mathematical Olympiad.

The win gave Steinke, 18, a No. 1 ranking on the six-student U.S. team that will compete in the International Mathematics Olympiad in Paris this July.

And although he has more than 50 trophies, ribbons and medals won in local, state and national math competitions, Steinke insists he's just a normal kid.

His math awards share space in his room with his rock 'n' roll records.

"I guess I've always loved math," Steinke said, "but I've done fairly well in all of my school work. The last time I got a B was in ninth grade in a band class, I think."

Steinke finished his Madison High School career with a better-than-perfect grade point average — made possible by "enriched" classes — was voted "most intellectual" and will graduate summa cum laude.

He plans to head to Houston next fall to major in engineering at Rice University.

Steinke said his first-place finish in the USA Mathematical Olympiad was a goal he set for himself when he first entered the school-sponsored University Interscholastic League mathematics events.

He was informed of the top ranking this week, but said he does not yet know his overall score.

And Steinke doesn't even have any math secrets, other than "not giving up," he said.

"I really enjoy attacking a neat problem I want the solution to," he said. "You have to look at all ways of attacking a problem and I guess it doesn't hurt to strive for perfection."

He got to take most of last week off while his fellow students slaved over final exams.

Unemployment rate falls as labor force dwindles

"Being unemployed in Midland is pretty expensive," Miller said, explaining that most of the 200 persons who left went back to their former homes all over the United States. "There are few natives here," he said of the Tall City.

Preliminary figures can be revised later, but the unemployment rate in Midland showed a slight drop — from 5.9 in March to 5.6 percent in April. By comparison, the April 1982 rate or 7.2 percent was high.

The Odessa jobless rate fell slightly, to 9.4 percent in April from the 9.6 reported for March.

These figures aren't seasonally adjusted. Thus, Miller expects Midland's unemployed rate, and the total labor force, to rise this summer as high school and college students scramble to snap up scarce job opportunities.

"Some lucky students already in the labor force will work full-time this summer," Miller said, "but in June we will see a climbing unemployment rate as students get out and around in looking for work.

"Although this is the 20th year of our Work-a-Rama, we don't anticipate too many jobs for young people — they will be competing with adults in the labor market," even for low-paying jobs, Miller said.

"The oil industry isn't developing, and no large buildings are scheduled to start (other than Independence Plaza). It's going to be tough for young people, who usually gain jobs in small construction projects or doing landscaping," said Miller.

The TEC office here will participate with Channel 9 and area businesses in a televised "Job-a-Thon" starting June 24. Miller said he hopes the television coverage will lend a positive note to the situation. He feels jobs may be generated through the use of television as publicity for the companies involved.

Frank Kasko, Odessa TEC manager, said, "Job orders seem to be increasing in all areas, and the unemployment insurance load is remaining steady.

"April is the first bright spot we have seen in many months," Kasko said. "The labor force is stabilizing itself and it should stay around that figure (72,100). It's (growth) is slow but it is sure. We can't get too excited yet."

Kasko said the Odessa labor market is so oil-based that "we can't use the word seasonal," in describing unemployment figures. "We just wait for the roll of the dice in the oil industry."

Correction

Registration dates for Midland College summer school terms were incorrectly reported in MC Public Relations Director H.A. Tuck's column Sunday.

The correct dates and times are 2 to 4 p.m. and 6 to 9 p.m. Thursday, not June 2, as reported in his article.

Registration will be in the physical education building and first term will be from May 31 through July 5.

In 1946, fallout warning was issued, ignored

WASHINGTON (AP) — The safety chief at the first post-war atomic bomb test warned in 1946 that the health of 42,000 American servicemen could be jeopardized by radiation fallout, according to a report prepared for a congressional hearing today. It said he was ignored.

Once-secret memos on the Bikini Atoll tests showed that another safety expert, identified only as "Capt. Lyon of the Radiological Safety Section," complained in vain about the disdain of ship commanders "for the unseen hazard" of radiation.

The fallout jeopardized sailors who slept on the decks of contaminated ships "with nothing more than shorts on," the memos said.

Today's report was based on letters and memos written or collected by the late Army Col. Stafford Warren, who was radiological safety chief during the Manhattan Project that developed the atomic bomb and held the same job during the first two post-war atomic explosions, Operation Crossroads.

In one of those tests, a 6,000-foot high column of radioactive water sprayed U.S. Navy ships and their crews.

The tests were conducted on Bikini Atoll in the South Pacific during July 1946 and were witnessed by about 40,000 U.S. servicemen and 2,000 civilian contractors.

Warren's declassified memos were found a few months ago among his papers in the library of the University of California at Los Angeles.

The report on his papers was prepared for a hearing of the House Veterans Affairs investigations subcommittee. The papers were analyzed by two physicists, Arjun Makhijani and David Albright, for the International Radiation Research and Training Institute on behalf of the National Association of Atomic Veterans.

The association says a large number of the 250,000 American participants in 236 open-air atomic tests in Nevada and the Pacific, conducted between 1946 and 1962, are suffering from cancer. It is asking the government to give them medical treatment and compensation.

But the Pentagon's Defense Nuclear Agency says radiation exposures in the tests "generally were within established radiation exposure limits" and found no reason to believe that the health of participants was damaged.

U.S. Sen. John Tower addresses a joint session of the Texas Legislature Monday. Tower told lawmakers he envied the control they have over state spending. At left is Sen. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, who introduced Tower. House Speaker Gib Lewis stands to the right.

Tower says cattle may be quarantined

AUSTIN (AP) — The federal government is about to tell Texas it cannot ship cattle out of state, but Washington won't send nuclear waste in, according to U.S. Sen. John Tower.

Tower held the "good news-bad news" press conference after he addressed a joint session of the Legislature on Monday.

Texas faces a federal quarantine because the state's brucellosis control program has been overturned by state court decisions.

Tower said he talked Monday morning with U.S. Agriculture Secretary John Block and that Block told him he felt "obliged to recommend a quarantine" and that "the papers had already gone to the White House."

Brucellosis is a contagious disease that causes cows to miscarry or have weak calves. A federal control program provides for an interstate quarantine of cattle that are not tested and vaccinated for the disease.

South Texas rancher R.J. Nunley won a permanent injunction against enforcement of the program, and a lawsuit seeking to overturn that decision backfired when an Austin state district court ruled the whole program unconstitutional.

A measure that would revive Texas' brucellosis program and bring it into compliance with federal regulations has been approved by the House but still lacks a final vote in the Senate.

"If the legislation passed, a quarantine would not be necessary," Tower said.

Tower said he would not fight a cattle quarantine, because "I cannot encourage the administration to abrogate laws or regulations."

"I can't stand up here and swear on the Bible or anything, but I feel certain no nuclear waste will be dumped on Texas."
— Sen. John Tower

But the three-term Republican senator told reporters Texas should not worry about a proposal to put a nuclear waste dump in the Panhandle.

Last week, U.S. Department of Energy officials held hearings in Texas, which is on a list of six states being considered for the first national, permanent, high-level nuclear waste dump, to be constructed in the 1990s.

"I can assure you that Texas will not be selected for a nuclear waste dump," Tower told reporters.

Tower said he did not have any kind of "deal" with the Reagan administration on locating the dump elsewhere, and he said he did not think a decision on the site had already been made. DOE officials have said they will narrow the list down to three sites by the end of this year.

"I can't stand up here and swear on the Bible or anything," said Tower, "but I feel certain no nuclear waste will be dumped on Texas."

In his speech to the Legislature, Tower told lawmakers who have refused to raise taxes despite dwindling state revenues that he envied the control they have over state spending.

Committee rejects White's taxes

AUSTIN (AP) — If Gov. Mark White expects the Legislature to raise taxes so he can keep his promise of a big pay raise for teachers, Rep. Stan Schlueter says the governor will have to call a special session to do it.

The regular session ends a week from today, and some of White's tax proposals met a quick death Monday night when they faced their first legislative votes.

The House Ways and Means Committee voted down a proposed tax hike on gasoline and diesel fuel and new taxes on computer programs, video machines and electricity sold to factories.

Chairman Schlueter, D-Killeen, said he called for the vote to prove he was not the only one against new taxes in the face of a public campaign by White to raise $1.2 billion in new revenue.

"The press has painted this committee as obstructionist. They painted me as being the one person who was killing the governor's program, and here's an opportunity for them to see there's a pretty much across-the-board objection to those bills at this time," he said. "I'm tired of being a scapegoat for all of this."

The vote was 14-1 against the gasoline tax, and five other tax proposals were simply tabled without objection, in effect killing them for the regular session.

Schlueter said the main objection among committee members was that they were not told how the proposed new taxes would affect their districts.

"We've still got the opportunity — in a special session, if that's what he wants to have — to resolve the problem and give the members an opportunity to get the printouts they need to determine the impact on their districts," Schlueter said.

Just before his committee met, White's legislative aide, Max Sherman, revealed a modified package of tax proposals designed to raise the same amount as White's previous plans — $1.2 billion to finance a 24 percent pay raise for teachers — but in different ways.

The latest plan would extend the state's sales tax to tobacco, mixed drinks, video games and cartridges, and tickets to movies and concerts. It also included the gasoline tax that died in Schlueter's committee. Previously, White had proposed taxing liquor, wine and beer.

"The governor feels first and foremost we need to do something about education, and he is trying desperately to get enough votes to do something about it," Sherman said. "I think you could say there has not been a great groundswell" for White's originally proposed "sin taxes."

The latest plan, a "working paper" drafted during the weekend, retained White's previous call for a 2 percent tax on industrial use of utilities, while reducing the commercial rate from 4 to 2 percent — with both rates equalizing at 2 percent to raise $301 million. That measure, too, was rejected by the House Ways and Means Committee Monday night.

Sherman said the working plan also called for increasing the state sales tax in unincorporated areas from 4 to 5 percent. The tax is already 5 percent in most cities, with the state taking 4 percent and 1 percent going to the city.

Meanwhile, Rep. Bill Haley, D-Center, told the House he plans to bring up his education funding bill later today. It could be the vehicle for a compromise teacher pay raise. The measure would give education funds back to local districts to distribute for local needs, including teacher pay.

A House-Senate appropriations conference committee has found little extra money for a teacher salary hike. Haley's measure would be a "shell" which can be funded, but contains no money now.

Pecos school board member not amused by proposed taxes

PECOS (AP) — School board member Ronny Daniel says he is torn between seeking more money as an educator, and watching his amusement business become the target of a state move to finance teacher pay raises.

"I'm in favor of the raises but I don't think we necessarily need a huge tax increase to pay for them," said Daniel, an amusements machine owner.

Gov. Mark White hopes to generate more than $800 million to finance teacher pay raises with a tax hike on amusements, tobacco, mixed drinks, video games and cartridges, and tickets to movies and concerts.

Daniel and his father, doing business as Dan Daniel Music Inc. of Pecos, may pay up to $47,600 more to the state next year if White's so-called "sin tax" increases are approved by the legislature.

About $30 million of those revenues would come from increase taxes on amusements machines.

The Daniels own about 400 locally.

Dan Daniel currently pays nearly $6,000 a year — $15 in tax on each machine — in addition to a $500 annual state fee to maintain their operator's license.

White's proposed increased machine tax would double that amount and an additional proposed gross receipts tax of 4 percent on weekly profits would raise the amount paid to $41,600.

Compromise spending bill cleared for debate in Legislature's last days

AUSTIN (AP) — A compromise $30.8 billion state spending bill for 1984-85 has been cleared for debate in the closing days of the 67th Legislature.

House and Senate negotiators reached agreement late Monday, with little, if any, money left for a teachers pay raise.

"I'd guess there is between $40 million and $60 million available that could be used for teachers," said Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, one of the House members of the Appropriations Conference Committee.

"That's not enough. It would take at least $70 million for just a one percent across-the-board raise for teachers."

Rudd said if there is more money in the bill than appears, or if Comptroller Bob Bullock raises his estimate of state revenues the next two years, then the House-Senate negotiators might take another look at the teachers pay situation.

Jim Oliver, director of the Legislative Budget Board, said the remaining money left in the compromise of the House and Senate bills could range from $20 million to $50 million.

"We won't know until we count it up," Oliver said.

The compromise bill will be printed and distributed to House and Senate members for consideration before the end of the regular session next Monday midnight.

The compromise came from a House bill that totaled $30.8 billion from all funds and a Senate bill of $30.9 billion.

Senators get shot at gasohol

AUSTIN (AP) — State senators get the next shot at a measure ending the motor fuels tax exemption now allowed for all gasohol sold in Texas.

Under the measure approved on voice vote in the House on Monday, the exemption would be allowed only on gasohol produced with Texas grain.

Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, said the exemption — approved in 1981 — has been taken advantage of by non-Texas companies, and has done little to spark a gasohol industry in Texas.

Marrying minister ticketed

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston minister who purposely broke the law by performing weddings on the street says he is following the precedent of others who believed civil disobedience was sometimes the only way to bring change.

"How did Martin Luther King test (the law) except by getting arrested?" the Rev. Charlie Neal asked shortly before he was cited for the misdemeanor offense Monday afternoon.

Neal is fighting for what he says is his right to park his rolling wedding chapel — a steeple-topped van — in front of the Harris County civil courthouse and try to sell wedding services to couples on their way to civil ceremonies.

His van is equipped with a stereo system which blares out "The Wedding March" and gospel music. Neal used to charge couples $19.95 for a simple ceremony and $24.95 for the deluxe model. The latter included a color photograph and a cassette tape of the servicce.

He asked for donations Monday rather than charging a flat fee.

Neal performed several weddings Monday before he was ticketed at 3:15 p.m. for occupying a structure on a public street for private enterprise or calling. If convicted, he faces a maximum fine of $200.

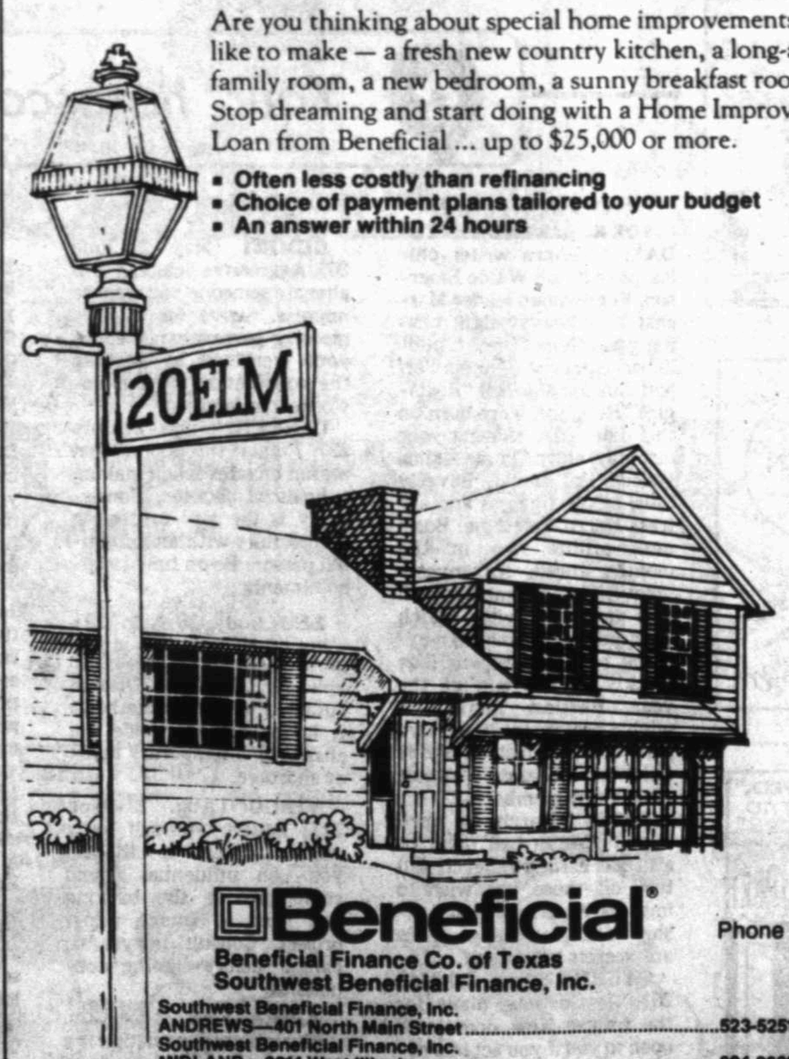

He was ordered to appear in municipal court June 8.

'Bay City Blues' airs next season

NEW YORK (AP) — The baseball season won't end with the World Series. "Bay City Blues," coming to NBC next fall from the producer of "Hill Street Blues," is about the major league dreams of a minor league baseball town.

Steven Bochco, the Emmy-winner who revitalized the tired cop-on-the-beat TV theme, will look for more of life's absurdities — real and imagined — this time with baseball as the backdrop.

Can you see the bickering Hill and Renko as a double-play combination? Wild-eyed Belker as team mascot? Pompous Howard Hunter as team owner?

The Class AA Bay City Bluebirds — and the working-class California town supporting and feeding off the ball club — will find their own identities as the Tuesday-night series develops.

But you can be sure that Bochco and the writers he recruited from "Hill Street" and "M-A-S-H" will create characters with more dimension than their baseball cards.

"I've always been a big baseball fan," says Bochco. "Last July, I went to an old-timers' game at Dodger Stadium. There were old guys with big guts hanging over their belts, but they could still hit the ball. It struck me that this game defines our culture. We worship ballplayers and the game itself. But underneath the game is a wonderfully complex and fearful arena.

"Guys going up, guys desperately trying to hang on — and they're all affected by the random nature of the game. There's some real interesting dynamics inside and outside, too, with the working-class town struggling with a difficult economy.

"But it's not actually a show about baseball," adds Bochco. "It's primarily a show about people."

Bochco is aware that sports series have not fared well. Programs like the quickly canceled "Ball Four" appeal to male viewers, and it's the women who control the dial in prime time.

"Our characters will have mass appeal because people can laugh at them and will, most importantly, be able to identify with their situations and feelings," he says. "People get involved in 'Hill Street,' even though their only contact with the law might be a jaywalking ticket. The most pertinent stuff we do is the human stuff."

Trump Coup Tommy had never felt the need to make his mark on the national scene. However, when the American Contract Bridge League held its Spring Championships in Hawaii, he could not resist the lure of sunny climes and joined thousands of bridge players on the pilgrimage to the first of the year's shrines of the master point.

On the first board that Tommy played in tournament competition, he found an exotic line to convert his eight fast tricks into six. That had not failed to make an impression on West. This was the second board of the set, and West had no qualms in converting his partner's double of two spades to penalties. He did not know what effect a bad trump break made on Tommy, changing him instantly from Daffy Duck to Mighty Mouse.

West led a low club, and dummy's king lost to the ace. A club was returned to the queen, and West shifted to a heart. Tommy played low from the table, and East's ten was taken by the queen in the closed hand. The ten of diamonds was run to the king, and East cashed the ace of hearts before exiting with a heart. The defenders had four tricks in the bank, and it looked as if they surely would get at least two trump tricks. But that did not make allowance for Tommy's extraordinary talent.

Tommy ruffed the heart, ruffed a club in dummy, cashed the ace of diamonds and then ruffed his second winner — the queen of diamonds. He and dummy were now down to three trumps each, and West still had four.

When Tommy led his last club, West was forced to ruff low. Dummy overruffed with the nine. The jack of diamonds was returned and Tommy ruffed in hand with the king!

West could do no better than overruff with the ace and return a trump. But there was no deflecting Tommy from his appointed task. He played low from dummy, won the ten in hand and the doubled contract was home for a top score.

Funding terrorism

Muslim fanatics are believed to be responsible for the April 18 bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut which cost 63 lives. The terrorist operation apparently had its roots in Iran. Now comes a report from CBS news that the Iranian government not only condoned the bombing but helped carry it out.

CBS says U.S. intelligence intercepted cables from the Iranian foreign ministry in Tehran to the Iranian Embassy in Damascus, the capital of Syria, setting up payment for a terrorist operation against an unidentified target in Lebanon. The cables directed the Iranian Embassy in Damascus to assist 12 Iranians passing through en route to Beirut shortly before the April 18 bombing. The same 12 Iranians reappeared in Damascus several hours after the bombing.

The Defense Department and the Department of State have neither confirmed nor denied the CBS report. They will go no further than to say that the bombing involved Iranians.

If the evidence on which the CBS story is based is substantial enough, the U.S. government should not hesitate to speak out against the Iranian government and to take whatever steps are in our power to bring pressure against it. We have no formal diplomatic relations with Tehran, but we do have something the Iranians would not want to lose: Purchase orders for Iranian oil.

Oil traffic between Iran and the United States collapsed with the seizure of hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran in 1979. It resumed last summer. U.S. imports from Iran averaged 60,000 barrels a day during the last seven months of 1982. That's nearly $1.8 million a day which Americans are contributing to Iran to help finance its war against neighboring Iraq — and, who knows, such terrorist operations as the Beirut bombing.

We are reminded daily that there is a surplus of oil on the world market. Why is it necessary, then, for the United States to be importing oil from Iran? Denouncing Americans as "foreign devils" remains a favorite sport of Iranians and there is now reason to suspect that the crackpot government in Tehran is up to something worse.

The Iranians need oil revenue, but we don't need their oil. Let's leave Iran to oil merchants who don't mind doing business with thugs.

Another View:

Immigration realism

U.S. Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., deserves a great deal of credit for skillfully ushering his version of the 1983 Immigration Reform and Control Act through the Senate. Wednesday's vote of 76 to 18 approving the measure was indicative of the consensus that Simpson was able to hammer out on an emotional issue that Congress has evaded for too long.

The Simpson bill's greatest strength is its firm approach to limiting the jobs that lure many immigrants into the United States. Most important is its provision requiring that the president set up a national worker-identity system within three years. That is the only fair way to enforce sanctions that prohibit employers from hiring illegal immigrants. Other less expensive systems, such as using drivers' licenses and other easily obtained documents, could be abused. And unless all workers are required to provide information about their immigration status, there is a risk that the new sanctions will lead employers to discriminate against workers who look or sound foreign.

Simpson's bill offers a two-tiered legalization system for persons now living in the United States illegally. Those who entered before 1977 would be granted legal status, and those who entered before 1980 are granted temporary resident status. The House version of the immigration bill, authored by Rep. Romano L. Mazzoli, D-Ky., is much more generous. It would allow anyone who has been in the United States since Jan. 1, 1982, to petition for legal status. That is preferable, because the simpler and more generous an amnesty is, the more people will be willing to come out of hiding to accept it.

Mazzoli's bill also would provide 100 percent federal reimbursement for local governments, such as Los Angeles city and county, that might have to pay for extra government services once many immigrants were legalized. Simpson's bill would provide a one-time-only block grant of $1.4 billion for this relief. That might be enough to deal with the effect of legalizing a still-unknown number of immigrants, but what if it weren't? That could generate fiscal crises in localities and needless hostility toward their newly legalized residents. Since the current immigration mess resulted from the federal government's failure to adequately enforce immigration laws for so many years, it is only fair that the federal government pay the cost of rectifying the situation.

The national consensus that something must be done to control immigration is understandable, but it is to some extent based on an oversimplified definition of the immigration issue. Immigration is not just a problem that can be solved with a new law. Immigration does cause problems, such as the exploitation of illegal immigrants and the displacement of U.S. workers from certain jobs. But it also brings benefits to the United States, such as cheaper goods and services for U.S. consumers, and stability in underdeveloped countries like Mexico. Overall, Mazzoli's version of the immigration-reform bill takes a more realistic account of that complexity.

Once Mazzoli's bill is approved by the House, as it should be, a conference committee will work out a compromise measure that should combine the strong points in both bills.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Synfuels Corp. squanders money

WASHINGTON — The high-salaried executives of the U.S. Synfuels Corp. might be forgiven their wastrel ways if they were spending the taxpayers' billions on alternative-energy projects of actual or even potential merit.

Unfortunately, they're squandering money on grandiose schemes of so little promise that private industry wouldn't touch them with a stick unless Uncle Sam was picking up the bill. In fact, the major oil companies have abandoned synthetic fuel ventures even with the lure of government loan and price guarantees. That's how little Big Oil thinks of synfuels' future.

This leaves the Synfuels Corp. with $15 billion to hand out — and only second-rate programs to spend it on. Five of the six finalists under consideration for the second round of Synfuels' largesse were rejected by the corporation the first time around.

My associates John Dillon and Corky Johnson have obtained internal Synfuels documents that show the dubious chances for success of the expensive projects the agency is considering. Here are two glaring examples.

— First Colony is a consortium that wants Synfuels money to convert peat into methanol in North Carolina. One member of the consortium is the Energy Transition Corp., of which CIA Director William J. Casey is a founding investor.

Originally turned down by Synfuels because of serious deficiencies in management structure, First Colony bounced right back with its hand out. It now has the distinction of having received the first "letter of intent" from Synfuels, promising $455 million in loan and price guarantees.

Yet internal documents show that Synfuels still has some reservations about the project, mainly because First Colony's price expectations are considered unrealistically optimistic.

"The First Colony project is considered a high risk project based on (Synfuels') methanol price projections, which are lower than sponsor expectations," says one internal evaluation. "The project is a relatively high risk one in terms of its long-term economic viability."

Despite these misgivings, Synfuels officials OK'd First Colony's application. Now the General Accounting Office is investigating and wants to know the corporation's "legal authority for offering price guarantees of up to double current oil prices as an incentive...."

— The North Alabama coal gasification project is backed in part by Santa Fe International, a company owned by the government of Kuwait. So Synfuels is considering a $1 billion handout to some of the very Arab sheiks it was supposed to liberate the country from.

Interior Secretary James Watt recently barred Santa Fe International from holding U.S. gas and oil leases, because the Kuwaitis don't allow Americans to hold energy interests in their country. Watt's concern appears not to be shared by the Synfuels board.

Another North Alabama sponsor is Air Products and Chemical Co. Though it's in the Fortune 500 list of wealthiest corporations, and recently spent $230 million to gobble up another company, Air Products wants the government to put up most of the money for the gasification project. Does it know something we should know?

STIFLING CRITICISM: The leaders of the "emerging democracy" of Honduras can't stand criticism in the press — and the nation's editors obediently toe the government line. I know. They've stopped running my column ever since I reported on Honduras's U.S.-backed militarization.

Somehow the offending column slipped by the Honduran censors, so the newspapers thought it was safe to print it. But then, according to my sources, the U.S. ambassador in Tegucigalpa, John Negroponte, and a spokesman for Gen. Gustavo Alvarez, the Honduran military boss, denounced me in separate but obviously coordinated statements. Editors got the message and my column abruptly disappeared from their newspapers.

As one source put it, "Every daily in the country carried Jack Anderson's column six months ago. Now, no one will touch it."

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES: Two sensitive reports critical of Israel are being suppressed on Capitol Hill while Congress tries to ram through $400 million more in military aid than the White House wants. One is a GAO study of alleged misuse of U.S. arms aid by the Israelis. The other is a report by a nine-member congressional delegation that looked into Israeli harassment of U.S. Marines in Lebanon.

— Secretary of State George Shultz's shuttle diplomacy has taken its toll on aides who accompany him. Several have come down with "Middle East Malaise" in the digestive tract. One victim confided that he'll take his own grub on the next trip — even if it's no more than GI field rations.

— Even though the extended investigations of Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan turned up no conclusive proof of alleged ties to organized crime, insiders say access to the normally outgoing secretary has now been severely controlled by ultra-protective aides. As a result, some of those inside and outside the department who were most supportive during Donovan's ordeal complain that they can no longer drop in for a chat as they could in the past.

INSIDE REPORT:

Central crisis dividing Honduras

PUERTO LEMPIRA, Honduras — Flying low over the impenetrable Montanas de Colon on the way to this suddenly-aroused village at the remote eastern tip of Honduras, signs multiplied of coming conflict here between the communist and non-communist worlds — Latin America's "central conflict" in the words of a Honduran political leader.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

"Those mountains have never been mapped," our guide told us, gesturing toward the rugged panorama below. "No one knows where the real border (between Honduras and Marxist-controlled Nicaragua) is." That explains recent deployment of the Fifth Battalion of the minuscule Honduran army into those uninhabited border areas near this desolate stretch of seacoast.

Honduras is running scared. The communist world — Cuba, the Soviet Union, East Germany, Bulgaria — is pouring the stuff of war and propaganda into Central America. The U.S., belatedly awake to the "central crisis," is countering. But confidence that the U.S. will stay the course is not high here or in any other Central American state. Every utterance in the U.S. Congress gets avid attention. There is genuine fear of future sellout.

And little wonder, judging from this contrast: aggression from the communist superpower; defensive reaction, too often half-hearted, from the American superpower.

Near this fishing village a dangerously short dirt runway has been lengthened and widened by U.S. Navy Seabees. Ostensibly, the need for a decent runway is to accommodate C-130 transports that carry food and supplies to tens of thousands of Miskito Indians uprooted from ancestral villages just across the Nicaraguan border a few miles south of here. Fleeing Sandinista brutality, they are now under international refugee care in Honduras a few miles from Puerto Lempira. There are no roads.

In reality, though nobody mentions it, the refurbished airstrip would be converted overnight to military uses if the Honduras-based anti-Sandinista forces are defeated and, in reprisal, Honduras is punished by Nicaragua. "We are not completely stupid," a Honduran military leader advised us back in the capital of Tegucigalpa. "If the anti-Sandinistas fail, we will be made to pay even if the U.S. stays with us."

Nicaragua is seeding the ground with dragon teeth. A Nicaraguan agent posing as a campesino recently was picked up in Puerto Lempira, where any stranger is conspicuous. He carried a radio receiver tuned to a transmitter in Nicaragua which sent him coded messages at designated times. He was ordered here to establish contacts, arrange drop points for future visits and perform other well-known tricks of the subversion-sabotage trade.

Hidden deep in the mountains we had flown over to get here is a suspected Marxist guerrilla headquarters on the Honduran side of the border. "We can't find it but we know it is down there," our guide said in the plane. Honduran military leaders told us that a complete set of anti-Honduran war plans developed by the Sandinistas has been "picked up." Part of the assignment of the Nicaraguan intelligence agent arrested here clearly was to probe the disposition of the Fifth Battalion, the first military force Honduras has ever had to deploy anywhere near this remote region.

Propaganda from radio transmitters at half a dozen places in Nicaragua juices across the border day and night. The Hondurans have no means to make an effective reply. The kept Sandinista press in Managua spews out threats against Honduras, quoting Honduran insurgents as saying late last month that "hundreds of U.S. military advisers and CIA agents operate inside" Honduras. The target of such threats is nervous congressmen in Washington as much as fearful Hondurans.

Beyond propaganda, the Sandinista intelligence network has already been planted. On April 8, four insurgency groups set up a Unified Revolutionary Coordinating Board to win "the struggle in Honduras." Consequently, to protect U.S. diplomats in Tegucigalpa, security has been drastically tightened; the new U.S.-built radar station near the capital is under 24-hour guard.

Gen. Gustavo Alvarez, who commands Honduras' modest armed forces, privately makes no secret of his government's fear about the credibility of U.S. promises and the continuity of its policy. He flew secretly to Washington last week seeking reassurance, knowing that the circle is beginning to close on Honduras as it has on Nicaragua and El Salvador.

Col. Martinez, the Fifth Battalion's articulate commander, put it this way to us: "Over there, they are exporting their revolution across this border. We are not talking about games. We are talking about lives."

Hospital questions

To The Editor:

I read with interest and confusion the article which appeared in the April 29, 1983, issue of the Reporter-Telegram. This article reported on the actions of the Midland Memorial Hospital Board meeting of April 28, 1983.

The article stated that the board has approved future plans for expansion of the hospital to 400 beds in order to better serve the citizens of Midland. The article went on to say that this expansion could facilitate a satellite hospital located remote from the existing hospital.

This action posed several questions:

— If there is a need for 400 beds in Midland why did MMH only apply for an expansion of 77 additional beds to the Texas Health Facilities Commission?

— If there is a need for 400 beds, why did MMH fight so hard to prevent Parkview from building their proposed 110-bed facility? With MMH's 198 beds currently plus their proposed 77-bed addition and Parkview's 110-bed new hospital, Midland would have 385 hospital beds to serve our citizens.

— If it is going to cost MMH $15.1 million to add 77 beds to its existing facility, how much will they have to spend to add 125 more beds?

— Where is all the money going to come from to finance all of these proposed plans. If my memory serves me correctly MMH has plans to build the following projects: A) A chemical substance abuse facility; B) an addition of 77 hospital beds to the existing facility; and C) a proposed future expansion of 125 beds in a possible annex location.

The hospital management has stated that it plans to retire the revenue bonds necessary for the 77-bed expansion with monies generated from hospital billings (which remains to be seen). Does it also plan to finance these other major projects with the same monies. I cannot believe our hospital is generating ths type of revenue. If so, why don't the monthly financials we read in the newspaper reflect it?

I am all for progress and free enterprise and most of all good quality patient care, however I feel that all progress should be accomplished through and by sound management principles tempered with financial management.

Why is MMH so determined to be the only hospital in Midland? Is it because they feel they couldn't meet competition on a head to head basis? I have always found that competition creates a better product in any business and I see no reason why this would not be true in the health care industry.

Free enterprise must surely take a step backwards each time a company or business is allowed to prevent competition from asserting its basic right to conduct their business in the same city. I cannot help but wonder how a business entity acquired that power or once it is known, how public minded citizens allow it to continue.

Don't jump!

To The Editor:

This is in reference to the young man who climbed a tall building in Houston and leaped off, with sounds of horror in the background — "Oh No!" — and opened a parachute to the relief and delight of all observing.

It was announced on the same newscast that this young man had done this in another place, had been charged with trespassing and put on probation and now he is to be charged again with this and his probation is being repealed (or whatever legal term fits this offense.)

Aw! Come on, fellas! All the folks were watching and rooting for this guy to make it. What in the world harm did he do? He actually created an incident of great excitement and entertainment for a whole bunch of people, some whose day was brightened and made special by a totally different experience. It may have even discouraged someone from committing suicide for fear they might hurt themselves. In addition, the young man got his kicks doing his thing, whatever that is. We are all entitled to some craziness.

Man's inhumanity to man boggles the mind sometimes.

City loses

To The Editor:

What a shame that we have to lose Wayne Kohout! Under his direction, the parks in this city have never looked better. New and imaginative parks have been built. The recreation program has expanded to offer something for almost everyone. I think he has done a superb job.

More than that, Wayne and his wife, Sharon, and their three children have been a real asset in their church, this community and throughout the state.

We are the losers. Some other city will get the best parks and recreation director we ever had.

state in brief

Senate OKs emergency fund providing basics to poor Texans

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate approved a bill Monday directing the Department of Human Resources to set up an emergency fund to provide poor Texans with the basic needs of life such as food and shelter.

The state fund would be limited to $5 million and would match local funds on a 1-1 ratio.

A single county could not receive more than $100,000.

Background material noted that applications for food stamps in December 1982 increased 65 percent over December 1981, and applications for Aid to Families with Dependent Children rose by 30 percent in that same period.

The House-approved bill was passed by the Senate on voice vote and sent to the governor to be signed into law.

Bill specifies appointments

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill to end the controversy over whether an outgoing or incoming governor should appoint University of Texas and Texas A&M regents was approved by the Senate on Monday.

The bill specifies that terms expire on Feb. 1 of odd-numbered years, which would give incoming governors the chance to appoint regents.

Austin Sen. Lloyd Doggett's bill was sent to the House on a 31-0 vote.

Artificial reefs may be extended

AUSTIN (AP) — Senators on Thursday directed the Texas Coastal and Marine Council to extend artificial fishing reefs along the upper coast.

Artificial reefs now stretch from Freeport to Port Mansfield, according to a printed analysis of a proposal by Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur.

Parker's resolution says the Gulf of Mexico has over 4,000 oil-and gas-related structures, and an estimated 40 structures are declared obsolete each year.

Senate extends attendance law

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate voted Monday to extend the state law requiring school attendance to children in kindergarten.

A child in kindergarten would have to attend class or have an excused absence for at least 82 days during each semester.

Senators passed the House-approved bill and sent it to the governor to be signed into law.

Houses oppose farm foreclosures

AUSTIN (AP) — A Senate vote Monday put the Legislature on record against foreclosures by the Farmers Home Administration.

A resolution notes that 270,000 Americans have outstanding loans from the FmHA, and that delinquency rates in some Texas counties are running as high as 85 percent.

The resolution, which already has been approved by the House, calls for a moratorium on FmHA foreclosures. It was adopted on voice vote.

Rancher's lawyers claim 38 horses died from 'circumstances'

MARSHALL (AP) — Attorneys for an East Texas rancher charged with cruelly treating a herd of wild horses claim 38 horses died as a result of a "combination of circumstances" and not intentional mistreatment.

Testimony continued today in the trial of Joe Corbett, charged with three counts of inhumane treatment and abandonment of horses.

In November, a deer hunter discovered 38 dead horses and dozens of malnourished one on land leased by Corbett. Authorities seized the animals, nursed them to health and distributed them to area ranchers.

Corbett obtained the horses in December 1981 from Nevada through the Bureau of Land Management "Adopt-A-Horse" program designed to prevent starvation and control population of large herds.

Defense attorneys said Monday at the opening of the trial that disease and environmental changes, not intentional mistreatment, caused the deaths of wild horses found in Corbett's Camp County pasture last November.

Prosecutors said Corbett's alleged mistreatment of the horses was "extreme and outrageous."

Corbett's attorneys argued that the horses' physical conditions resulted from a "combination of circumstances."

"We don't dispute that last Thanksgiving some horses were in poor and very sad condition," said defense attorney Judith Moss. "But they were able to get into this bad shape without being treated inhumanely or abandoned."

Man asks honor for friend

DALLAS (AP) — Preacher Hays said his friend did the county a favor when he helped gun down Bonnie Parker and Clyde Barrow 49 years ago, and now he wants Dallas County to do something for his friend.

Hays, a former sheriff's officer, told county commissioners Monday that he wasn't among those officers who ended the bank robbing careers of Bonnie and Clyde. But his friend and fellow sheriff's deputy, Ted Hinton, was.

Hays told commissioners on the 49th anniversary of the robbers' deaths Monday that he wants a plaque placed in the Downtown Dallas County Historical Plaza, site of the Kennedy Memorial, to recognize the bravery of six men who cornered Bonnie and Clyde on a road outside Gibsland, La., in 1934.

Hays said Hinton, who helped him serve civil warrants for the Dallas County Sheriff's Department before Parker and Barrow began their series of robberies, joined the search for the couple. Hays did not, he said.

Hinton and five other officers pumped 100 bullets into Bonnie and Clyde on a road outside Gibsland, La. The legendary ambush made Hinton part of history, but Hays said it made him leave the department.

"It had a lot to do with me turning over my badge because it wasn't my cup of tea," said Hays, 74, who became a newspaper pressman. "I guess my streak was a little weak. When I put on a gun, I didn't even know how to cock it."

The plaque would also honor Bob Alcorn, another law enforcement officer from Dallas County and the shooting of Bonnie and Clyde. Both Hinton and Alcorn have died.

'Budget process is at stake'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The congressional budget process by which President Reagan muscled his economic program into place has now become an obstacle that he and some of his supporters appear ready to ignore.

"Some say the congressional budget process is at stake," Reagan said last week. "I say the stakes for the American people are greater. The real question is do we keep our hard won economic recovery moving forward or do we stop recovery by reversing course?"

That echoes a strategy some conservative House Republicans have been quietly discussing for weeks now.

The idea is that the president could win acceptance of what he wanted more easily if there is no budget blueprint calling for legislation for higher domestic spending, restrained defense spending and increased revenues — items the president does not want.

The absence of a budget would also make it easier for the president to build a case for vetoing tax and spending bills.

In effect, the president is setting up the argument that the budget process is being misused to take apart his economic program.

"I am not so sure they (the president and some of his advisers) want the process," a frustrated Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Budget Committee, said on the Senate floor last week as legislators struggled to settle on a spending plan.

He added that if the Senate stalemated and agreed on no budget plan, "it seems to me that in a very real way, at least for now, you have done exactly what they (the White House) would like."

Congress has had a comprehensive budget act only since 1974.

Before that, the president submitted budget recommendations and Congress then enacted a series of separate measures — drafted by a variety of committees — authorizing programs, appropriating money for those programs and providing for taxes to pay for government operations.

However, Congress felt its position as a separate and equal branch of government was threatened during the Nixon administration when President Nixon impounded some $20 billion Congress had directed to be spent. In addition, lawmakers were concerned about a lack of fiscal discipline on Capitol Hill.

Thus, the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 was enacted, requiring Congress to set out a specific spending blueprint for each fiscal year that includes two budget resolutions — the first setting revenue and spending targets, and the second, later in the year, revising the targets and making them binding ceilings for Congress.

To achieve the levels of the second budget resolution, the budget committees of the House and Senate may use a so-called reconciliation directive forcing various congressional committees to draft legislation changing existing law so that spending or revenues will achieve the targets.

The full potential of the reconciliation device was never fully realized until 1981, when Reagan and his allies in Congress translated the wave of popularity for the new president into an omnibus budget package of tax and spending cuts.

Animals allowed to visit inmates, patients

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — Dogs, cats and other pets would be allowed to visit prison inmates and patients in state health care facilities under a measure before the Oregon Legislature.

Approved by the Senate and sent to the House on Monday, the bill would require state mental health, corrections and health officials to set up guidelines under which patients or prison inmates could receive visits from pets.

State Sen. Jeannette Hamby of Hillsboro, Senate floor manager for the measure, said various studies have noted the therapeutic value that pets can have on people in health facilities and prisons.

Stroking a dog or cat can lower a person's blood pressure and can help "prolong the lives of heart disease patients," she said.

"Talking to animals is far more relaxing than talking with other human beings," Mrs. Hamby said.

Earthquake still shaking Coalingans

By R.H. GROWALD
Copley News Service

COALINGA — He grips the arms of the chair and his back straightens. There are no tears but his voice rushes with the unrhythm of emotion. Bob Green is speaking from the heart or the brain, maybe both.

"If someone offered me a job somewhere else, I'd go. The people are nice here but ..." the Coalinga school administrator says. The voice fades into silence. His fingers begin working on the chair arms.

Green's right hand flashes in front of his face. The mind is overcoming the heart and the hand is signaling. Green's blond head relaxes, the wrinkles depart the forehead and there comes a smile and the words, "Oh, the family and I will probably stay right here. The people are so nice. This is home, Coalinga is ... nice."

Green, agile although it's been a generation since he tinkered with professional sports before going into teaching, does not stand up. He leaps. He vaults the sad-eyed Irish setter that came shivering and howling to the Green house after the May 2 earthquake.

For the first time since then, says Green, he has now talked aloud of his fears and feelings. "Now I am putting the doubts and bad things behind me. The family is coming back and we will stay and beat this thing."

The earthquake crumbled downtown buildings. It cracked or tumbled hundreds of homes. The damage to things is being fixed. The 6,500 citizens of Coalinga are only now coming to grips with the damage to their hearts and minds.

What happened to Bob and Gerry Green is not atypical. When the earthquake struck, daughter Erin, 9, and son Tom, 14, were playing in the open, cuddled by teachers, safe from such identified flying objects as tables, roofs, pianos and persons. The Green's third and eldest child, Mike, 15, was not so lucky.

Mike is 6-feet-1 and weighs 210 pounds and the tremor caught him in the high school locker room. Mike stuffed himself into a locker. It was not a happy hiding place.

Bob was in the downtown Radio Shack. "I knew what it was, this sound that seemed to herald the explosion of Mother Earth. I had gone through a quake in Southern California and that's why I moved here — to escape earthquakes.

"TV sets flew off the wall. This electronic shrapnel filled the room. I ran to a doorway and threw out my arms to brace myself on either side. But the walls disappeared.

"Then there was a pause in hell. I ran out to the street to get my car and find my wife down at her florist shop.

"I was a few dozen feet from the car when it exploded. I began running down the street toward my wife's shop. As I ran, building after building began exploding. I drove my eyes toward my wife's shop and I saw the dust of more exploding, collapsing buildings. Holy God, I thought."

Green had begun his remembrance of terrible things past with no more emotion than a clergyman listing the wages of sin. But now the voice pitch had gone higher. The breathing was deeper.

He found Gerry on hands and knees under the fat wooden table he had built for her florist shop. "She had expected to make a couple thousand dollars that Mother's Day weekend. But she survived and that was better than money and there in the street and dust and wreckage we hugged and kissed and I never appreciated her more."

They plucked Mike from his locker and located Erin and Tom and found only hairline fractures on their house. The tremors had made spaghetti of the furnishings and the Greens tossed out the breakage and put things back on shelves and righted tables and cleaned carpets. Her florist shop as flat as a wildflower in a Victorian memory book, Gerry decided to help locate Coalinga's lost dogs and cats.

She taped notices on doors, saying call her and she would list pets lost and pets found and match them. "Gerry loves dogs," says Bob as if announcing the woman he loves also dotes on catsup and mayonnaise sandwiches. "Dogs that are housetrained can be OK."

Within three days townspeople phoned and listed as lost a pit bull, a dachshund, a Pekingese, two cocker spaniels, three Irish setters, a husky, a Chihuahua, a spitz and two dogs of mysterious parentage. And someone said a Manx cat was lost.

"She managed to connect two owners to their lost pets. Then, last week, my son Mike, the husky football player, came to me," Green said.

"Dad, I'm having trouble sleeping," Mike had said. And his father had asked him the cause, knowing it was the earthquake. Was that it?

"The boy nodded and then he said he had seen me in stress situations and I didn't seem scared then but now he saw something else in me. My son Mike asked me if I was scared.

"I said yes, I am scared. I had been in Watts during the trouble there but nothing was like the Coalinga earthquake. Yes, I was scared," said Green.

Drillers tie series with 9-4 win over Cubs

Questionable call hurts Midland rally in sixth inning

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The Tulsa Drillers took the edge off a sixth inning controversy at Cubs Stadium Monday night by erupting for four runs in the ninth inning for a 9-4 Texas League victory over Midland's Cubs. However, you wouldn't know it by talking to Midland manager Tommy Harmon after the game.

The Cubs may have lost a chance for a big inning in the sixth when base umpire Jim Urenovitch awarded Tulsa with a double play after calling Bill Hatcher out at second base on an interference call.

Tulsa relief pitcher Al Hartman walked A.J. Hill, Rick Baker and Trey Brooks to open the sixth and Tulsa then called on Larry McLane to put out the fire. Hatcher grounded to second to score Hill, but was safe on an error by Tulsa second baseman Greg Tabor. That set up one of the biggest controversies of the year at Cubs Stadium.

Randy LaVigne followed Hatcher with a grounder to shortstop Jim Foit, who flipped to Tabor at second forcing Hatcher. Hatcher bowled over Tabor with a hard slide and Urenovitch ruled interference on Hatcher and awarded Tulsa with a double play, also erasing LaVigne from first while moving Rick Baker, who had scored on the play, back to third and Brooks back to second.

Harmon raced to the infield and was quickly tossed out of the game by Urenovitch.

"The rule says you can't go out of your way to break up a double play, and Hatcher didn't. He went in hard, just the way we teach our kids to do. Tulsa didn't have a shot at the double play anyway," Harmon said.

"The guy (Urenovitch) just blew the call. If he wants to call kissy-face baseball, maybe he should join a Brownie troop. They would run him out of the majors with a call like that."

Even Tulsa's Tabor was somewhat confused by the call. "I really didn't expect that call to be made. It was a controversial call. This is where you would need to look at some film to see if it was interference," Tabor said. "I wasn't going for the double play anyway. I couldn't have gotten the runner at first. I was going to fake to first and turn to see if the runner on third went past the bag."

At any rate, McLane got Tom Lombarski on strikes after that and the Cubs came away with only one run.

TULSA HELD a mere 5-4 lead heading into the ninth, but the Drillers touched reliever Jim Gerlach with four runs, including a leadoff homer by Steve Buechele, his second of the game. Buechele doubled and homered twice off the Cubs. He has only four homers this year and three have come in this series, which is now squared at 2-2 heading into today's 7 p.m. contest, the finale of the season between the two teams.

"I've never been what you would call a power hitter," said Buechele. "I hit five last year in half a season and I only had six in my final season at Stanford. Our hitting instructor came to Tulsa right before we left and he spotted some things wrong with my swing and I guess that helped."

Buechele was enough trouble, but the Drillers also got a solo shot from Chuckie Canady and six other extra base hits in a 13-hit attack. Tulsa roughed up Cub starter Stan Kyles (1-4) for seven hits and four runs through two batters of the fifth inning. Midland's Ken Pryce came in with an excellent relief performance, giving up only an unearned run in the sixth, but Tulsa got to Gerlach for four hits in the ninth to put the game away with a homer, double and triple.

The Cubs led 2-1 in the second inning when Baker delivered a two-run single off winner Billy Taylor, who was making his Texas League debut after being called up from Salem. Midland scored an unearned run in the seventh to close to within a 5-4 margin when Mike Anicich scored on a double play grounder by Bruce Chaney.

CUB PRINTS: Bill Johnson, who was acquired from the Philadelphia organization in a Major League trade that sent Chicago's Willie Hernandez to the Phillies for Dick Ruthven, is expected to be activated by Midland today. Johnson reports to the Cubs from Class AA Reading, Pa. Johnson was on the 40-man roster of the Phillies and last year recorded 12 saves and an 8-3 record in the minors...Hatcher climbed the wall in left to rob Tabor of extra bases in the seventh, a defensive highlight in a sloppy game Monday that produced six errors...Baker stole his 20th base of the year in the second and catcher Don Hyman threw out two Tulsa runners and was the only Cub with two hits...

Jabbar would like at least one game to prepare

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar said he wasn't making any excuses, but he wants the National Basketball Association to give the teams in the championship finals at least one day to prepare for the series opener.

"I don't think that's unreasonable," said the 7-foot-2 center of the defending champion Los Angeles Lakers who trail the Philadelphia 76ers 1-0 in their best-of-seven title series.

Philadelphia won the opener Sunday, 113-107, against a Laker team that had played three games in four days and had no time to physically or mentally prepare for the Sixers.

"I think we earned a chance to prepare to be our best," said the 36-year-old center, the second oldest player in the league.

The Lakers, who meet the 76ers Thursday in Game Two, obviously were a tired team in the fourth quarter when they usually are at their best.

"This is the world championship (of basketball). It's supposed to be basketball at it best. The teams should have a chance to prepare. This way is disappointing," Abdul-Jabbar said Monday.

He was asked if the NBA Players Association should take steps to see that the system is changed.

"Obviously it's out of our control," he replied.

"Television controls. I'm very happy we're on the network. I'm glad they feel we deserve that type of exposure. But it should allow us to be our best, that's all I'm saying."

Abdul-Jabbar made it clear that he wasn't trying to detract from the 76er victory. He said the opener was a great game, but resents it being manipulated for television purposes.

"The game was played prematurely in terms of the day. It wasn't the best we could provide in terms of effort. It doesn't happen in the World Series, Super Bowl or in hockey," he said. "We shouldn't be put in that position either.

"I don't think anybody objectively can look at this and argue that the game wasn't played too early."

Los Angeles Coach Pat Riley agreed with his center.

"I think we should try and develop a system, some policy, that would reduce any undue pressure on teams that get to the finals. I think they'll do that. It's better for the game."

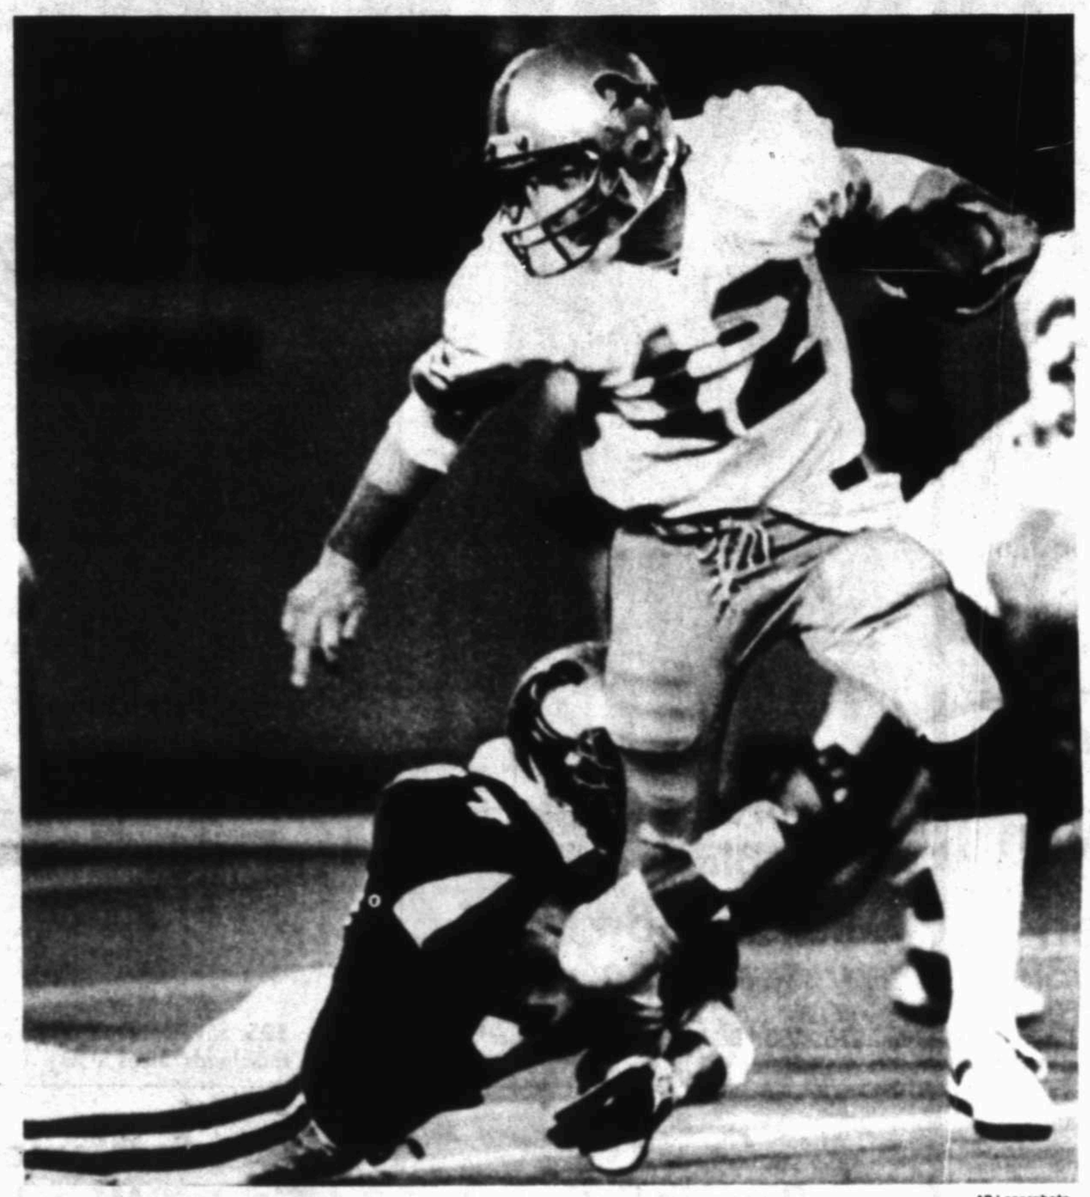

Riley predicted fans would see an obviously fresher team Thursday.

"Both psychologically and physically, we'll be a different team. We'll do things a little better. We didn't execute our half-court pressure, didn't contain the ball very well."

Neither team practiced Monday. They'll be back on the court today. Abdul-Jabbar's opponent at center, Moses Malone, predicted a very tough series.

"Three more (victories) seem a long way off," said the 6-10 Malone. "But if we can win Thursday, it might be easy."

Guard Mo Cheeks said of the 76ers, "What we have now is confidence to go with our desire to win the title. But all it means is that we're one up. There won't be an easy game in this series."

'Price' is right for Reds, 2-1

By The Associated Press

For the Cincinnati Reds, the Price is right — again.

Cincinnati left-hander Joe Price, thrust into the starting rotation by early-season injuries, then sidelined May 1 with an elbow injury, returned to action for the first time in three weeks Monday night and went right at the St. Louis batters, throwing hard for six innings to help the Reds edge the sagging Cardinals 2-1.

"Three weeks off is a long time," Price said. "I went out there with no thought of being tentative. I had to find out if I could throw hard from the first pitch."

The Cards, dropping their fourth in a row, got only one run on three hits off Price when George Hendrick walked and came around on second-inning singles by Lonnie Smith and Ozzie Smith.

"I was lucky," Price insisted.

And Joaquin Andujar was unlucky. He worked seven innings and gave up only three hits — but one was a two-run double in the sixth inning by Wayne Krenchicki.

"When you are going bad, everything falls apart," said Andujar, who has been on the losing end in six of his last seven decisions.

Mets 4, Giants 3

New York Manager George Bamberger, who used to count on Neil Allen as his stopper before Allen fell apart and wound up in the starting rotation, has a new saver in Jesse Orosco.

The Mets' reliever put two men aboard with nobody out in the ninth inning, then got the next three batters to preserve the Mets' victory, built on George Foster's fourth-inning homer and decisive eighth-inning sacrifice fly.

In his last 12 appearances, 26 innings' worth, Orosco has allowed only one run. Overall, his earned-run average is 0.67 over 27 innings covering 14 appearances.

Dodgers 2, Phillies 0

Fernando Valenzuela checked the Phillies on four hits and Steve Sax provided the Dodgers with some punch, scoring one run and driving in the other one.

Expos 3, Padres 1

With the score tied in the eighth inning, Gary Carter beat out a one-out infield single off Dave Dravecky. It was Montreal's eighth hit and it prompted San Diego Manager Dick Williams to summon Luis DeLeon from the bullpen.

Tim Wallach looked at DeLeon's first pitch, then sent the second one into the left-field seats for his fifth home run of the season. Carter singled home the Expos' other run.

Astros 3, Cubs 2

Ray Knight's two-run, sixth-inning double propelled Houston past the Cubs, who managed only four hits off Joe Niekro and two relievers.

Braves 6, Pirates 3

Bob Horner and Claudell Washington each drove in two runs and Pete Falcone, with six innings of six-hit pitching, was Atlanta's winner in his first start of the season. He allowed solo home runs by Steve Nicosia and Bill Madlock.

Stallions get short break after win over Panthers

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — You can't blame the Birmingham Stallions for feeling slightly cheated despite a five-game winning streak.

Scott Norwood's 46-yard field goal at 4:32 of overtime Monday night boosted the Stallions to a 23-20 victory over Michigan and left both teams tied with 7-5 records in the United States Football League's Central Division, one game behind the Chicago Blitz.

The problem is, the Stallions had to be right back out on the practice field today, getting ready for a game Friday night with the Denver Gold.

"We've got to wake up tomorrow and think about Denver right away," said quarterback Bobby Lane, who tossed a pair of second-quarter touchdown passes to stake the Stallions to a 17-7 halftime lead. "But I think we've laid down a solid base for Denver with this game. This is the chance you wait for and we made the most of it."

Birmingham Coach Rollie Dotsch said the dramatic victory seemed to bring his team together.

"Our players believe now," Dotsch said. "We may or may not get to the playoffs this year, but we're laying down an awfully good foundation."

THE PANTHERS' John Williams's second 1-yard fourth-quarter touchdown, with 2:52 remaining, could have given Michigan the game, but Birmingham's Herb Spencer got a hand on Novo Bojovic's extra-point kick and knocked it wide.

The defeat snapped the Panther victory string at six.

A crowd of 20,042 was on hand for the game in the 80,000-seat Silverdome — far fewer than the 32,862 who witnessed last week's victory over the New Jersey Generals, but slightly ahead of the Panthers' average of 19,582 attendance.

The Stallions almost won on a freak play moments before the end of regulation. Michigan's Fred Logan intercepted a pass intended for Ron Frederick on the Birmingham 1-yard line, rolled into the end zone and lost the ball attempting to spike it. Darryl Mason fell on the ball and one official signaled a Birmingham touchdown, but after a long discussion, the ball was given to Michigan on the 1 and the Panthers ran out the clock.

Leading 20-14, the Stallions attempted a 49-yard field goal with 7:24 remaining in the fourth quarter but Norwood's boot fell short.

The Panthers then drove 68 yards in nine plays, capped by Williams' second TD.

IN THE second quarter, Lane tossed a 1-yard touchdown strike to Steve Stephens and also had a 15-yard TD flip to Greg Anderson with 27 seconds remaining in the first half.

Norwood booted a 23-yard field goal in the second quarter and was good on a 25-yard shot in the third period.

The Panthers lone first-half score came on an 81-yard bomb from Bobby Hebert to Anthony Carter which the fleet wide receiver gathered in at the 25 after it had been tipped by two Birmingham defenders.

Williams first TD for the Panthers on a 1-yard plunge on the first play of the fourth quarter.

Devils negotiating with Czechoslovakia for help

NEW YORK (AP) — The New Jersey Devils, who finished the National Hockey League season with the third-worst record overall, may turn to Czechoslovakia for some coaching help.

The Devils are negotiating with Dr. Vladislav Horsky, one of the foremost hockey authorities in Czechoslovakia and a former coach of the Stastny brothers, who now star for the Quebec Nordiques.

Horsky, who has a doctorate degree in sports sciences, is negotiating with Czechoslovakian officials for permission to join the Devils as an assistant coach. He would become the first Czechoslovakian coach to work in the NHL.

"It's a bit premature, nothing has been formally decided," said Marshall Johnston, New Jersey's assistant coach. Johnston has known Horsky for "four or five years," and helped initiate discussions with him.

"He coached Division I in Czechoslovakia in Bratislava," said Johnston. "If any coach had anything to do with the Stastnys' development in the early years, I would say he did."

Horsky's main role with the Devils probably would be in the area of conditioning. The Devils were notoriously weak in the late stages of games all season.

"In physical fitness and training techniques, especially off-ice conditioning, he is an expert. He has documented as much information as anyone," said Johnston.

"He doesn't speak English very well. When he was here, he needed an interpreter. But he has told us he wants to become involved and would learn the language."

Johnston was introduced to Horsky by Lou Vairo, the coach of the 1984 Unites States Olympic hockey team. While Horsky was touring the U.S., conducting clinics and coaching seminars for the Amateur Hockey Association of the United States earlier this year, he expressed his interest in working with an NHL team.

Miller touched by tribute from Denver fans

DENVER (AP) — After 11 games on the sideline, Red Miller watched Sunday's Denver Gold game at home on television, and the tribute paid to him by the players and fans left him feeling touched and somewhat vindicated.

"Those players laid it on the line for me and I'm grateful to them," Miller said. "They played as well as they could and they could have won — and maybe should have won." They lost 14-10 to Los Angeles.

Asked what he thought when he saw so many of the fans wearing red to protest his firing by owner Ron Blanding, the former Gold head coach said, "It was amazing and heartwarming. We (the coaches) tried awfully hard and I think we helped the players improve. It's gratifying to know that the fans realized we did the best we could with what we had to work with."

Asked if he'd rather be back on the sidelines than watching a game on television, Miller said, "You know me, so you know how I feel. Who knows? Maybe I'll be back coaching some day."

Besides the fans who wore red clothing, numerous pro-Miller and anti-Blanding signs were displayed throughout Mile High Stadium Sunday. The Gold captains wore red-and-white baseball caps during the coin toss at midfield just prior to the game, and injured offensive guard Glenn Hyde wore a red T-shirt. More than 6,000 fans simply stayed home, many of them presumably to protest the dismissal of Miller.

Blanding appeared unmoved by the protest. "Sure, I saw everything, but it didn't bother me," he said. "Everybody's got to do what they have to do in this world. I did what I thought was right (in firing Miller last week). I have not changed my mind. It's my obligation to do what I think is right for the franchise."

The loss was the first for interim head coach Charley Armey, formetly the defensive line coach. "Charley did a hell of a job in getting this team ready for this game," said Blanding. "It was a difficult week for everybody. I'm very proud of how the coaches handled everything, and I was very proud of how the team played."

Twins go distance with Viola, defeat Orioles, 12-4

By The Associated Press

The Minnesota Twins expect home runs and have been getting them. They want complete games and finally got one.

Tom Brunansky and Gary Ward each homered twice and Dave Engle added a solo shot while Frank Viola became the first Minnesota pitcher to go the distance this season as the Twins routed the Baltimore Orioles 12-4 Monday night.

"The relievers have been doing a fantastic job and our hitting has been there," Viola said. "The starters just haven't been able to keep us in the game.

"It's nice to give the bullpen a day off," he said.

In other American League action, Toronto blanked Detroit 4-0, Boston beat Chicago 6-4, Kansas City topped Texas 5-2, California defeated New York 3-0, Seattle nipped Cleveland 3-2; and Oakland edged Milwaukee 5-4 in 17 innings.

Viola, 2-2, allowed eight hits and struck out seven. He had snapped a personal eight-game losing streak last week in beating Oakland 16-5, though he wasn't able to finish the game. Nonetheless, that effort made his job against Baltimore a little easier.

"Winning that first game last week took all the pressure off me," he said. "It was a heavy load off my shoulders. Now, if I can do something about those home runs."

Viola, who allowed a two-run homer by Cal Ripken and a solo shot by Gary Roenicke, has now given up 12 homers in 53 2-3 innings this season.

Minnesota displayed plenty of long-ball power, too, starting in the fifth inning. Brunansky — who knocked in five runs — hit a two-run homer, Engle followed with another homer and Ward socked a three-run job in the fifth inning.

American League

Ward, who also doubled and singled, smacked a solo homer and Brunansky added a three-run shot in a ninth as Baltimore lost its fourth straight game.

The seven home runs tied the Memorial Stadium record, accomplished three times previously.

"The simple reason is that we have guys on this team that can hit the ball out of the park," Ward said.

Said Orioles pitching coach Ray Miller: "We threw up enough yardage to play golf tonight."

Blue Jays 4, Tigers 0

Luis Leal and Randy Moffitt combined on a three-hitter for Toronto's third straight shutout, setting a team record of 27 consecutive scoreless innings.

Leal, 4-3, pitched eight strong innings — allowing Detroit's hits — before running into trouble in the ninth. Moffitt recorded his fifth save.

Willie Upshaw, Ernie Whitt and Lloyd Moseby homered off Milt Wilcox in the fourth inning.

After Whitt homered in the sixth — tying a team record for home runs in a game — Wilcox threw two inside pitches to Moseby, who started to rush the mound but was restrained.

Royals 5, Rangers 2

Dennis Leonard withsteed a shaky first inning and turned in a fine effort before leaving because of a sore knee in the eighth. Leonard gave up two runs on three hits in the first but allowed only two more hits. Quisenberry went the final 1 2-3 innings for his ninth save.

Kansas City managed just four hits off Charlie Hough and Dave Schmidt. But those hits included homers by Hal McRae and John Wathan and a two-run single by Amos Otis.

Red Sox 6, White Sox 4

Tony Armas homered twice and rookie Mike Brown, 4-3, pitched a seven-hitter.

Armas, who now has seven homers, put Boston ahead 1-0 in the second inning with a home run and added a two-run shot in the third.

Greg Luzinski homered for the fourth straight game — giving him six home runs for the season — and Tony Bernazard belted a solo blast for Chicago.

Mariners 3, Indians 2

Bob Stoddard and Bill Caudill combined on a seven-hitter for Seattle.

Stoddard left in the eighth inning, leading 3-1, after yielding Julio Franco's one-out triple. Caudill allowed Rick Manning's RBI single before recording his ninth save.

Dave Henderson scored Seattle's first run when he escaped on a rundown on second baseman Manny Trillo's throwing error. Henderson singled in the second Mariners run.

Angels 3, Yankees 0

Geoff Zahn tossed a six-hitter and Rod Carew raised his major league-leading average to .450.

Zahn, 4-3, escaped a first-inning jam when Dave Winfield singled and Don Baylor doubled him to third. But Zahn retired Steve Kemp to stay out of trouble. Zahn did not allow a New York hit after Baylor doubled in the fourth inning.

Carew went 2-for-4, including a run-scoring double.

A's 5, Brewers 4

Rickey Henderson's two-out single in the bottom of the 17th inning drove in Dan Meyer from second base to end the longest game in the majors this season.

Meyer singled off Jim Slaton, 5-1, to open the 17th and went to second on a sacrifice by Davey Lopes, who had homered twice in the game. Daryl Cias grounded out, Tony Phillips walked and Henderson singled in the winning run, ending the five-hour, 17-minute marathon.

Oakland had been just one out away from victory in the ninth, but pinch hitter Roy Howell hit reliever Steve McCatty's first pitch for a three-run homer to put Milwaukee ahead 4-3.

Lopes then hit Don Sutton's first pitch in the bottom of the ninth for a game-tying homer, forcing the extra innings.

Evans picked to play in All-Star game

Greenwood's Renvy Evans, a three-year All-District player who averaged 21 points and 12 rebounds per game this season, has been selected to play in the Texas High School Coaches All-Star game in Lubbock on July 9.

Along with her All-District 14-A honors this season, Evans was also selected for the Region I-A second team and made the Amarillo Globe News Class A All-State second team.

The Greenwood senior has been honored for talents off the basketball court as well. She's the valedictorian of her graduating class and has received the Faskin Foundation Scholarship Award and the Ultimate Student Achievement Award.

For the 1982-82 school year, Evans was voted Homecoming Queen, Miss Greenwood High School, Most Likely to Succeed and Most Talented. She's the school's Student Council vice president and the choir president of Greenwood Baptist Church.

Connors young enough to win French Open

PARIS (AP) — Jimmy Connors, who turns 31 in September, says he is still young enough to win the French Open tennis title on the slow clay courts of Roland Garros stadium.

"I'm in good shape," Connors said after his first-round victory Monday, the opening day of the two-week tournament. "I don't think I'm too old for clay. I just have to be in the right frame of mind."

He needed only 97 minutes to shatter Australian Craig Miller 6-2, 6-2, 6-1.

Connors, the top seed at the $1.3 million grand slam event, has never won a major clay court tournament and has not played on clay since his last appearance in Paris a year ago when he was eliminated in the quarterfinals.

"I'd rather be a dangerous floater than seeded No. 1," he said. "Unseed me and put in the draw somewhere."

Connors is attempting to become the oldest player to win the French title since Spain's Andres Gimeno took it in 1972 at age 34 years and 10 months.

The first grand slam event of the year continued today when top seed Martina Navratilova, the defending woman's champion, played fellow American Mary Lou Piatek.

In the men's division, Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia, seeded third, met qualifier Pedro Rebolledo of Chile, while No. 4 seed Guillermo Vilas of Argentina plays Florin Segarceanu of Romania.

John McEnroe and Chris Evert Lloyd, seeded second in their respective divisions, were not scheduled to play until Wednesday.

In other matches Monday, defending champion Mats Wilander, the 18-year-old Swede who last year became the youngest player to win a grand slam event, was leading 4-6, 6-2, 6-0, 2-1 when Spain's Juan Avendano withdrew because of a shoulder injury.

"I am nervous now that I am here," Wilander said about defending his title. "I think it is just the first one or two matches of the tournament that are difficult."

Bernard Fritz, a 29-year-old Frenchman, topled No. 13 seed Wojtek Fibak of Poland, 7-5, 7-6, 4-6, 6-3.

The women's upsets — all involving American players — were more impressive. Pam Casale ousted her compatriot Zina Garrison, seeded 11th, 6-0, 6-0. Organizers here said it was the first time they recalled a seeded player being eliminated without winning a single game.

American Kathy Jordan also completed her upset in straight sets, defeating No. 14 seed Ann Smith 6-2, 6-3.

Another high point among the women came when Steffi Graf of West Germany became the youngest player to compete in a grand slam event. Graf, age 13 and 11 months, defeated Sweden's Catherine Karlsson 6-4, 6-1.

North Slope gas unmarketable

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alaskans will have to wait a decade before they can hope to reap any major benefits from the vast natural gas reserves on the state's North Slope, according to government auditors.

The General Accounting Office said a surplus of gas supplies in the lower 48 states, cheaper prices for alternate fuels in Alaska itself and poor export prospects make the North Slope gas unmarketable through at least 1990.

The congressional watchdog agency said the inability to guarantee a market for the estimated 26 trillion cubic feet of Alaskan gas is the major obstacle to completing a 4,800-mile pipeline from the North Slope, through Canada, to California and Illinois.

The 145-page GAO study, requested by Senate Republican Whip Ted Stevens of Alaska, was released late Monday. The agency said the national security interests in developing the North Slope reserves, which are equal to 15 percent of the total reserves of the lower 48 states, were beyond the scope of its inquiry.

The 4,800-mile pipeline was approved by Congress and former President Carter in 1977, when there was a severe shortage of natural gas in the United States.

Since then, the project's cost has escalated from $10 billion to $43 billion, and the pipeline and oil companies building the system have thus far been unable to secure the financing to complete it.

"The lower 48 states are experiencing a surplus of gas supplies and adequate supplies are expected to continue throughout the decade under current regulations," the GAO said. "Timing of the project will depend on whether a clear need for the gas can be demonstrated in 1990 and beyond."

But it also said the alternatives of exporting the gas to Japan, processing it into liquid methanol for use in the chemical industry or using it for power and heating in Alaska itself are equally unattractive.

A commission headed by former Alaska Gov. Walter J. Hickel in January recommended abandoning efforts to complete the 4,800-mile pipeline in favor of a new 820-mile pipeline to Alaska's Kenai penninsula, where the gas could be liquified and placed on freighters to Japan.

The GAO report said Japan "would be unlikely to need gas from Alaska through 1990 and beyond" since several other nations already have agreed to supply it with gas.

Alaskans themselves could use the gas for heating and generating electricity only through the construction of a 400-mile intrastate pipeline. That would make the costs unattractive for the state's small population because of the availability of other, less-expensive energy supplies, the report said.

The agency said the prospects of North Slope gas being used for petrochemicals also are dim because of expected continued depression in the industry.

"The only near-term use for Alaskan natural gas may be its continued reinjection" into the ground as it is pumped out with oil, the GAO said.

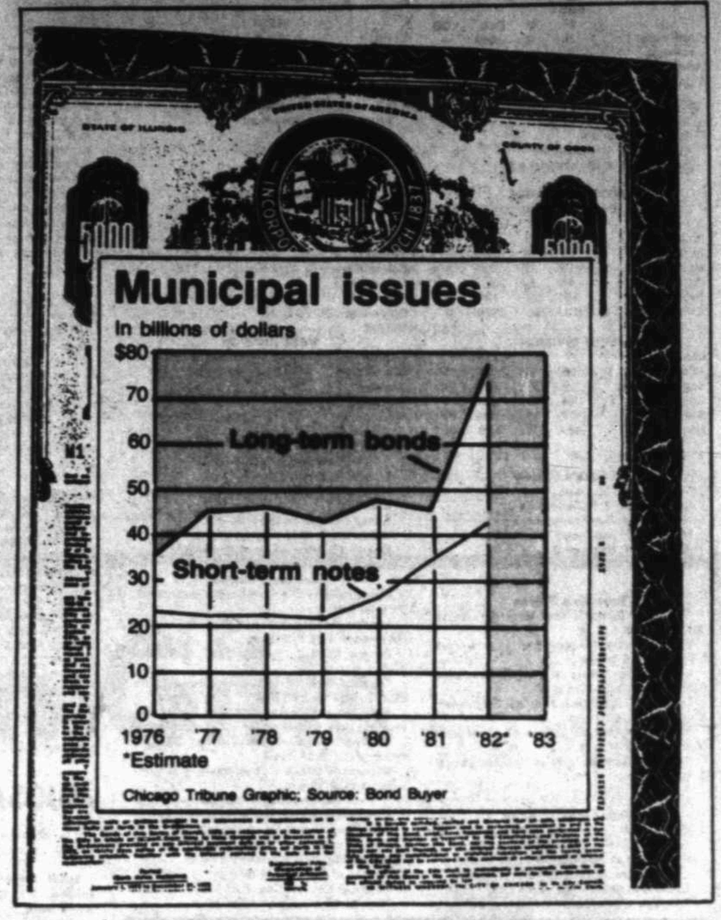

J.N. Vallely, a spokesman for the Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Co., said the GAO report indicates that completing the 4,800-mile Alaska Natural Gas Transportion System is still preferable to the alternatives.

"When that comes about is really going to be a function of an improved economy," he said. "There is a surplus now in the lower 48, but we know that in time that gas is going to be needed."

More than 1,500 miles of the system, the portion in the lower 48 states and southern Canada, have been built. But the 1987 goal of completing the remaining segments in Alaska and northern Canada has been moved back to late 1989.

"We acknowledge that his could slip further, depending on the economy," said Vallely, whose company is one of eight U.S. pipelines building the 4,800-mile system.

The oil companies that own the North Slope gas — Exxon Corp., Standard Oil of Ohio and Atlantic Richfield — are putting up about $9 billion of the costs.

Pipeliners forcing lower prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many of the nation's major pipeline companies awash with unsold natural gas are forcing suppliers of deep and other high-cost gas to take lower prices, according to a survey released Monday.

While the effect on consumer rates was not calculated, analysts said the so-called "market-out" options being exercised by interstate pipelines will have a dampening effect on the skyrocketing home heating bills of the past several winters.

The survey by the Interstate Natural Gas Association of America, an organization of the nation's 21 largest pipeline companies, also shows that one-third of the new contracts signed in the last half of 1982 were at prices below federal price ceilings.

The Reagan administration, in pushing for decontrol of all natural gas prices, has argued that the ceilings under the 1978 Natural Gas Policy Act have acted as "floors" that have pushed prices upward.

The association said its members reported exercising more than 3,100 market-out options for 540 billion cubic feet of high-cost gas, about two-thirds of the existing high-cost supplies.

The result, the association said, was that the average price for that 540 billion cubic feet of gas fell from $7.25 per 1,000 cubic feet (mcf) to $4.50. However, many contracts signed in the late 1970s when there was a critical shortage of gas have no market-out provisions and pipelines are paying as much as $9 per mcf under some of them.

Market-out options allow pipelines to set a lower price for gas if they cannot sell the fuel at the existing price. If a producer does not want to accept that price, the gas covered by the contract is released so that he can try to sell it elsewhere.

While high-cost gas is only 6 percent of the national volume, it was responsible last year for 20 percent of the pipelines' purchasing costs, which are passed on to local utilities and their industrial and residential customers.

About half of the nation's remaining supply gas is "old" gas discovered before April 1977. That gas, now selling at an average price of $1.25, is what the Reagan administration wants to decontrol.

New gas discovered since April 1977, excluding the deep and other high-cost gas, now has a federal price ceiling of $3.39 per mcf. Prices for it, however, have been averaging between $2.75 and $3.25 since January.

The survey showed that so-called "take-or-pay" contracts signed by the pipeline companies during the shortages of the later 70s are still their biggest problem. Those contracts require pipelines to pay for a certain percentage — often up to 95 percent — of the volume they agreed to buy whether or not they take it.

The major pipeline companies reported that they could pay as much as $7 billion from 1982 through 1985 for gas that they do not take.

A provision in the administration's bill would change take-or-pay provisions to cover 70 percent of the contracted volumes. Other bills would set the take-or-pay ceiling at 50 percent.

Law disgracefully enforced, Dingell says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Energy has been allowing some oil companies to repay overcharges to other than the individuals or agencies who actually paid too much, a General Accounting Office official says.

The distributions have come by agreement with the department, James Duffus III told a House subcommittee Monday.

Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., cited a General Accounting Office decision that the department must attempt to return overcharged funds to those actually injured, instead of to others such as states, the federal treasury or the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

He said those overcharged would include school districts, municipal governments, small businesses, farmers, utilities and individuals.

"The administration of this law has been absolutely disgraceful," Rep. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., said. He suggested changing the name from the Department of Energy to the "Department of Amnesty."

Dingell said one case alleging overcharge of $23 million was settled for $675,000.

The oil pricing regulations expired in 1981, but the department is still required to get back overcharges from companies.

Rayburn Hanzlik, a department official, insisted that the settlements are negotiated by experienced professionals.

"Our major refiner settlements reflect the government's assessment of each case, taking into account the overcharges that would result from the cost and recovery allegations, the relative strengths and weaknesses of the legal issues involved, the risks and costs of prolonged litigation, and the value of recovery today as opposed to the value of recovery after several years of litigation," Hanzlik said.

Texans discount bureacrats' threat

By SARAH MCCLENDON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Threats of the Department of Agriculture to quarantine Texas breeder cattle from interstate shipment, if the Texas legislature does not pass a bill for brucellosis-eradication by Monday, were discounted by leaders of independent cattlemen in telephone calls to Washington Monday.

C. W. McMillan, assistant secretary of Agriculture for Marketing and Transportation, told The Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau "we will wait to see if the Legislature acts — but if it does not act, then we will have no choice but to quarantine."

Replying to this, former Gov. Dolph Briscoe of Uvalde who is leading the independents, said "I do not believe the U.S. Department of Agriculture will quarantine our cattle."

"It has threatened to do this before and has not done it."

"Besides, at this time, I do not believe President Ronald Reagan would let them do this to Texas cattle."

"And I do not believe our Texas congressional delegation and our two Texas senators would permit it."

"I know I would feel mighty bad if I was a high ranking senator of the Republican party and my party did this to my state," said Briscoe referring to Sen. John G. Tower, R., Texas.

(Briscoe has been mentioned in speculation by political writers in Texas as a possible candidate for the Senate against Tower. Today, Briscoe said he was not ready to talk about that.)

Secretary McMillan cited "heavy pressures" being put upon the Department of Agriculture by other cattle producing states, saying the heaviest pressure was from New Mexico which calls itself "a Class-A cattle state," by Mississippi which buys a lot of dairy breeder stock from Texas, by Oklahoma, Colorado and Kansas.

Brisco said "we do not believe that New Mexico is putting on the pressure to that extent — in fact State Sen. John Traeger has a letter from the New Mexico Cattle Raisers association saying they are not pressuring for a quarantine of Texas cattle." (New Mexico letter appears at end of this article.)

Says McMillan: "New Mexico cattlemen tell us that they do not want those infected Texas breeders to get among their healthy herds."

McMillan said he did not believe that President Reagan is aware of the situation as it exists. Asked if the President had not recommended in his Agriculture budget for 1983 that the brucellosis eradication program be "phased out," McMillan said "I do not believe that is right — he did call for a reduction in funds and we have done some of that."

McMillan, who before he came to the Agriculture Department was vice president for goverment affairs of the National Cattlemen's association, said "we at the Department today are experiencing great pressures to clamp down on Texas cattle going into interstte commerce."

Briscoe said: "actually a quarantine on Texas cattle will have a very negligible effect, according to a study made in 1975 by the Texas Animal Health commisson."

That study, Briscoe says, shows that the brucellosis requirements only affect breeder cattle, and would not affect beef cattle going to feeder lots or going into the market interstate. Only breeder cattle are required by federal law to be vaccinated against brucellosis, both McMillan and Briscoe confirmed.

Secretary McMillan in further discussions as to why this 15-week cattle controversy is taking place said: "Brucellosis is an economic threat to herds, both cattle and hogs. It is not a threat to humans. The danger is in inherent loss to herds by the disease is very small."

Asked what about charges of Roy Wheeler, president of the Independent Cattlemen's association, that the law is outmoded, unnecessary and a "boon doggle paying a subsidy to big ranch operators, " McMillan replied: "We could do without eradicaton of brucellosis. The disease could be controlled. We could go to a controlled program whereby you do not eradicate but you use management practices. Some people would be willing to do this, some would not."

The New Mexico Cattle Growers Association, Albuquerque sent the following letter to John Armstrong, chairman of the Texas Animal Health Commission, Austin, Texas: "I am writing today in regard to comments attributed to New Mexico Cattlemen in relation to a threat of a federal brucellosis quarantine on Texas cattle."

"The rumor seems to be out that New Mexico is unhappy with the Texas approach to the brucellosis control and have actively encouraged a federal quarantine. Also, that New Mexico has joined with several other states in expressing this concern. These rumors are false."

"For the record, we would like to clarify our position in relation to the threat of quarantine to your state. Neither our association or the New Mexico Livestock board have made any statements on the issue nor do we intend to...."

"We have never presumed to tell any state how to handle its livestock health regulations and have tried to discourage the feds from doing so. All the gains that have been made in brucellosis control have been done on the state levels. Federal arm twisting is no warranted."

The letter was signed by Denny Gentry, executive vice president, New Mexico Cattle Growers association.

There is a second letter from Dr. Robert Pyles, state veterinarian, with the New Mexico livestock board, supporting the first letter, Senator Traeger said.

Treasury opposes strip mining deductions bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Treasury official says allowing strip miners to take deductions in advance for restoring land is a "disastrous policy."

William S. McKee, acting deputy assistant treasury secretary for tax policy, told a Senate subcommittee Monday the Treasury strongly opposes a bill that would make such advance deductions official government policy.

He said the potential revenue loss for the government "would be prohibitive."

"We find more and more cases where taxpayers are designing deductions for future expenses in which tax savings, when invested, more than pay the cost of the expense," he said.

The Senate bill would simply legislate a principle that already has been established by the courts in the Ohio River Collieries Co. tax case, proponents told the energy taxation subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee.

McKee said the Treasury Department believes the Ohio River decision was wrong and that the proposed legislation would encourage broader application of the principle.

Joseph E. Nichols Jr., testifying on behalf of the National Coal Association, urged adoption of the bill so the mine operators won't have to keep going to court to fight the Internal Revenue Service.

Despite the Ohio River ruling, "the tax treatment of reclamation costs appears to be one of those issues that will not be a settled issue between the coal industry and the IRS unless specific legislation is passed," Nichols said.

He said the Ohio case decision was justified because of an "Ohio law requirement for a strip miner to estimate his reclamation cost and post a surety bond to cover it."

Shamrock pursusing energy, shipping firm

SAN FRANCISCO — Natomas Corp. executives met Monday to consider a surprising — and apparently unfriendly — $1.4 billion takeover offer from Diamond Shamrock Corp.

Natomas, a San Francisco-based energy and shipping company, issued a statement saying it would comment later on Diamond Shamrock's bid. The company said it learned of the offer Monday morning.

Oil industry analysts yesterday called the bid generally fair, but warned that another competing bid could develop.

"The smoke isn't clear yet and before it is there is going to be some more action," said William Tichy, analyst at Dean Witter Reynolds in San Francisco.

The stock of Natomas has been extremely volatile in recent months as rumor after rumor of a takeover has swept the stock market. The reports have lifted Natomas' stock price from about $13 in January to $18.50 on Friday.

After news of Diamond Shamrock's $23 per share offer for 51 percent of Natomas' stock spread, Natomas' stock jumped $3.87½ to $22.37½ in early trading yesterday on the New York Stock Exchange.

If the tender offer succeeds, Diamond Shamrock will exchange .92 of a share of its stock for the remaining 49 percent of Natomas stock.

Dallas-based Diamond Shamrock launched its sudden takeover try Sunday in what appeared to be a classic corporate maneuver to catch its target off guard.

Saying it particularly coveted Natomas' vast Indonesian oil interests, Diamond Shamrock made its offer to Natomas in a letter delivered yesterday morning.

In the letter, a copy of which was obtained by The Hearst Newspapers, Diamond Shamrock chairman William Bricker wrote Natomas chairman Dorman Commons that studies "led us to conclude" that combining the companies would be "in the best interests of our respective companies and shareholders."

"We admire and respect your company," Bricker added in his letter, which was addressed, "Dear Mr. Commons."

"We have thoroughly considered the possible legal issues that could be raised and are convinced that there are no legal impediments" to the transaction, Bricker told Commons. A union of the two companies would be subject to federal antitrust scrutiny.

In terms of revenue, Diamond Shamrock is twice the size of Natomas. The Dallas company's 1982 sales of $3.2 billion compare to Natomas' $1.6 billion.

According to Diamond Shamrock officials, a combination with Natomas would strengthen the Dallas company's overseas presence, while giving Natomas Diamond Shamrock's "expertise and sizable capacity" in natural-gas processing, crude-oil refining and in the marketing of refined products in the United States.

Diamond Shamrock announced a year ago it was seeking to acquire a company involved primarily in oil exploration and production.

"Diamond Shamrock's reserves are 82 percent natural gas, while Natomas' energy reserves are 83 percent in crude oil," said a company official. "Diamond Shamrock has 90 percent of its reserves in the U.S., while 90 percent of Natomas' reserves are overseas."

In his letter, Bricker observed that Natomas has been considering energy diversification here and abroad and that a combination would "permit your shareholders to quickly realize" the gol

"eig itinrobyksense," said Tichy of Dean Witter. "It's a realistic price considering today's market, but not overly generous if you consider demand and prices will pick up in the future."

Signal Cos., holding 12.5 percent of Natomas' stock, would be a key vote on any deal. Said at one time to be interested in acquiring Natomas itself, Signal, a conglomerate, has rejected such talk.

Cody Sloan, son of Mr. and Mrs. H.L. Sloan of Midland, takes advantage of the unique education offered at Permain Basin High School. The key to this alternative education is the one-to-one learning concept. Language arts teacher Patti Groce instructs Cody with this concept.

Alternative education offered at Permian Basin High School

The only place in the Permian Basin for students in the eighth through twelfth grades to obtain an "alternative" education is at Permian Basin High School.

Not everyone fully understands what "alternative" education is, as defined by the Commission on Secondary Schools of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools. Specifically, the Commission's definition states, "Schools that depart from (usually because of the special needs of their students) the usual patterns or organizational structure, learning experiences, teaching methods and staffing to require a different approach to evaluation and accreditation are considered as an "alternative" school."

Different private schools may depart from the traditional educational structure but that, in itself, is not sufficient to qualify as an alternative school.

Permain Basin High School was founded on the premise of being an "alternative" school in the fullest sense. When founded in 1980, PBHS was one of three alternative schools in the state of Texas. The others were located in Dallas and Houston.

To qualify as an alternative school was not the only goal of PBHS. Rather, directors and administrative personnel were dedicated to gaining full accreditation from the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools. Even prior to admitting the first students in September 1981, PBHS had begun the long and detailed process of gaining this accreditation.

Briefly, the steps leading to accreditation include requesting approval to seek accreditation from the State Committee and must include justification of status as an alternative school; a detailed self-study conducted under the guidance of the State Committee; working with a consultant approved by the State Committee during the course of self-study; a two-day intensive visit by a committee appointed by the State Committee with a written report of their findings sent to the State Committee for review and evaluation; and following completion of the self-study and visiting committee phases of evaluation, the school is eligible to file an application for accreditation.

Once accreditation is granted, alternative schools must submit to follow-up visits arranged by the State Committee members. This is applicable for two years following the initial visit to confirm that the school is observing the principles of accreditation and the standards of the Commission of Secondary Schools. This confirms that the school is maintaining its commitment to its stated purpose, philosophy and objectives. Accreditation was granted to PBHS in December 1982, in Atlanta, Georgia.

"Alternative" education in the Permian Basin is available only at Midland's private Permian Basin High School. One of the primary characteristics of PBHS is the one-to-one educational format which offers each student one-teacher one-student learning opportunities. Classes are scheduled similar to college classes allowing the school's faculty to work with a larger number of students, all on the one-to-one basis.

On May 26, PBHS will graduate seven seniors, the first to graduate since the school was accreditated. School enrollment for the 1982-1983 year totaled 49 students in grades eight through 12. PBHS has a capacity for 80 students. Late registrations are still being accepted for summer school.

Interested persons should contact Glen Walton or Wanda Mouton at the school by calling 683-4448. Permian Basin High School is located at 3100 North A Street, building E.

Economists predict high unemployment through '83

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The National Association of Business Economists, in its quarterly survey of members, says unemployment may remain near 10 percent through 1983 while the economy makes a moderate recovery from the worst recession since the 1930s.

Last November, the economists estimated that the unemployment rate would fall to 9.2 percent by the end of 1983. In its May survey, however, they raised that projection to a 9.9 percent unemployment rate through this year.

"I think they're too pessimistic," Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said of the business economists' numbers on unemployment.

The economists were far more optimistic about a more dramatic drop in inflation for 1983 overall, partly because the recovery was much slower in starting than they had expected last winter.

Edgar R. Fiedler, NABE president and vice president of economic research for the Conference Board, told a news conference that the manufacturing sector seemed finally to be joining the general recovery picture. Inventories of supplies are falling two times faster than they were accumulating in the manufacturing sector, he said.

Despite continued worries about the long-term deficits, Fiedler said, "in every sector of the economy the outlook is becoming more optimistic."

The unexpected bad news on unemployment projections is consistent with reports 10 days ago from Fortune 500 chief executives meeting at the Business Council. Many of them said very little rehiring would take place this year, partly because the companies wanted to remain lean to recuperate from past bad experiences. For example, when business executives thought the 1980 recession had ended, it started again within nine months.

If the business leaders and the business economists are on target about the unprecedented high levels of unemployment, however, it could prove a political dilemma for the Republicans as they approach the 1984 presidential elections.

Democrats and a minority of Republicans already are pushing through Congress a variety of relief measures for the jobless that go beyond last year's job-training programs. These include proposals for emergency extensions of health insurance and protections against mortgage foreclosures.

President Reagan has included these in his general condemnation of House Democratic budget-busting measures which he promises to veto.

Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., illustrated the sensitivity of the unemployment problem for Republicans —throwing up his hands in a symbol of despair and saying of the 9.9 percent figures: "that's too high, it's way too high."

His solution, however, illustrated the peculiar ideological and political schisms that have permeated the Reagan administration.

1916

April — The British government announces that it will take complete control of the output, exports, imports and distribution of motor spirits or gasoline throughout Great Britain and its possessions.

DOE says expense public necessity

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Department officials say the money the agency is spending to provide information on nuclear power is necessary to educate the public.

They made that assertion Monday as Rep. Richard Ottinger, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee's subcommittee on energy conservation, criticized the department for increasing spending on nuclear public relations.

"It is ironic that the stepped-up efforts at DOE coincide with a massive public relations blitz being conducted by the nuclear industry," Ottinger told a hearing by his subcommittee.

He quoted President Reagan as saying three months after he took office:

"The federal government is spending too much on public relations, publicity, and advertising. Much of this waste can be traced to unnecessary magazines, pamphlets and films produced by the government and paid for by taxpayers."

Ottinger said that during the two years since the president made his statement, Energy Department officials increased spending on nuclear energy public relations by at least $1.5 million per year.

He cited approval of the production of a $250,000 movie about the start-up of a fictional nuclear power plant and plans for museum exhibits and pamphlets with such titles as "Why Nuclear Power Is Safe."

Shelby Brewer, assistant secretary for nuclear energy, told the subcommittee the department was spending only one-twentieth of 1 percent of its total nuclear energy budget on public information.

Some 50,000 requests for information on nuclear energy are received by the department each year, he said.

"When the public asks questions, it's my duty to provide answers," Brewer said. "I do not believe my office should remain silent in the face of requests for public information."

He said "examples abound of public misinformation and fear about nuclear power" and added that "the public looks to its government to provide effective, factual data."

Ottinger said that while he does not dispute the department's authority "to disseminate truly objective information, your department does not provide public information programs on other burning issues, such as natural gas pricing."

First step toward cuts to be taken

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The first specific step to cut price supports on all milk and to curtail all milk production will be taken here Tuesday afternoon in the House Agriculture committee. Rep. Kika de la Garza, D., Mission, Texas will be in the chairman's seat as the full Committee assembles.

The body will be considering an agreement worked out in numerous meetings held in recent months between the House and Senate committees on Agriculture and Agriculture Secretary John Block, representing the Reagan administration.

De la Garza is predicting that the committee will approve the terms of the agreement and that the House will soon pass the bill.

The Senate is expected to do likewise. When the bill gets to the White House, leaders who have worked on this bill in a bi-partisan way understand that the President will sign it.

The agreement calls for cutting price supports by 50 cents from the $13.10 now paid and also for paying farmers $10 per hundred weight if they agree to cut production from 5 to 30 percent.

Which ham should you choose? The difference is clear.

This water-added ham weighs 10 pounds.	This Cure 81® ham weighs 10 pounds.
The water-added ham can give you 9 pounds of meat and nearly 1 pound of extra water.	The Cure 81 ham gives you 10 pounds of full-flavored meat, naturally juicy.
The water-added ham costs a little less than the Cure 81 ham.	The Cure 81 ham costs a little more. Meat costs more than water.
The government requires that hams containing this much extra water carry the words, "water added" on the label. Some of them omit these words in their advertising, but you'll find "water added" on their labels in the store.	Hormel requires that each Cure 81 ham be inspected and registered to assure you it will be lean and tender with a haunting, smoky flavor. And nothing else. The difference is clear. Meat costs more than water.

Hormel America's first name for ham.

Students can't transfer to GISD

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

About 60 students who live on the corner of three school districts won't be allowed to transfer into Greenwood Independent School District, GISD trustees decided Tuesday night.

Although 26 of those students are not of school age yet, the influx into an already growing enrollment was not acceptable to trustees.

Also during the regular meeting, preceding a special meeting scheduled for 7 p.m. today, trustees heard a report on results of the Texas Assessment of Basic Skills (TABS) tests, which indicate students are maintaining or almost maintaining achievements made during the past three years. Rapid growth in enrollment seems to be a factor in a slower increase in achievement, trustees were told.

In other action, school board members also accepted bids for gymnasium bleachers, library shelving and met in an executive session to discuss personnel matters.

Some students living in the El Paso Natural Gas camp in Midkiff, located on the corner of Greenwood, Midland and Rankin school districts, had requested transfers into GISD. During the April board meeting, trustees discussed the possibility of allowing them to transfer at no cost.

Tuesday night, Superintendent James Warlick reported the students still would have a long bus ride were GISD to provide transportation for them.

The students, who presently travel some 40-50 miles to attend school in Rankin or Big Lake, would have to travel 20-25 miles to Greenwood. From a point at the intersection of Farm-to-Market roads 307 and 137, students would have a 45-minute bus ride.

"That is our longest route," Warlick said, adding for most residents, the trip to Garden City would be about the same length. Garden City runs a bus through the area, although it is illegal beause it is in the Big Lake school district, Warlick pointed out.

No formal action was necessary on the decision.

A counselor from Region 18 Education Service Center presented TABS tests results, administered to students in third, fifth and ninth grades under state law.

According to Don Melton, Greenwood students "are doing just nearly equally as well" as they have since the testing began in 1980 for the fifth and ninth grades, and in 1981 for the third grades.

"(Greenwood students) are doing just nearly equally as well (as they have since the testing began)."
— Don Melton, educational counselor

Melton said it was possible the increase in students has slowed down the increase in achievement.

"I think that would be fairly accurate to say," he said. "Although I don't have any data to support it, based on what I have gathered from the number of students coming in, I think that could have a bearing. But even then, the scores are doing pretty well."

He pointed out the number of students in the third grade has grown from 51 in 1981 to 74 in 1982. This year, 112 third grade students took the tests.

In other action, trustees approved a bid for gymnasium bleachers submitted by Central Distributing Co., of San Antonio. Price for the three-piece, contour seating with electrical operations was approved at $13,062.

The bleachers, which may be pushed against the wall, will be placed in the new gymnasium and used primarily by spectators at basketball games.

Trustees also approved a low bid on shelves for three sides of the new library at a cost of $28,617.66. The bid was submitted by Indeco Sales Co., Inc., of Temple.

An item pertaining to the Homestead Exemption Act 40 percent tax plan was tabled due to a delay from the tax appraisal office. Trustees also were shown a plaque presented to Greenwood Elementary for its participation in the Jump Rope for Heart event in April.

According to Principal Bob Pheil, the 675 students participating at Greenwood raised $7,674. Bowie Elementary came in second with 612 students raising $3,944; third place was South Elementary, with 235 students raising $3,706.

Trustees are expected to approve a depository bid and the hiring of additional teachers during a special meeting tonight.

Children's health clinic to open

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Volunteers will open a long-awaited and needed children's health clinic two half-days each week, beginning June 7.

An idea fattened with a donation, a church task force committee stroked by many prayers and volunteers have made the dream of the Clinic of Commmunity Children's Ministry a reality.

Gloria Hinojosa, director of St. Andrews Presbyterian Mission, said a two-year-old donation to the eastside church was set aside for a special project — a sick children's health clinic.

"There's been a need for a clinic like this for a long time," Ms. Hinojosa said. "We wanted to use the money for something that was really needed.

"In September, a Lubbock clinic established through the churches was visited and it gave us some ideas. We came back enthusiastic. We got busy and called the doctors."

The clinic, at 307 N. Weatherford St., will be opened Tuesdays and Thursdays from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. It will serve infants to 12-year-olds for a small charge only to those who can afford to pay.

"The clinic is for sick children of low-income families," Ms. Hinojosa said. "Between Casa de Amigos and St. Andrews we already know most of the people we'll be serving."

Although Ms. Hinojosa said she expects many walk-ins, Midland churches and organizations will be contacted about the clinic's services.

"Usually these kids will be ones who do not have a regular family doctor," Ms. Hinojosa said, explaining that many times low-income families cannot afford to seek medical attention for a runny nose or a sore throat.

Consequently, these symptoms sometimes turn into a serious condition.

"For example, a child who has an ear infection may never see the doctor because there isn't any money," said Ann Swendig, a registered nurse who chaired the St. Andrews task force for the clinic.

"Then the eardrum ruptures. Usually the parent will go see Gloria for money to see a doctor. Now with the clinic, these children can be referred directly to the clinic."

While the Midland City-County Health Department has a "well baby" clinic, there has not been any kind of medical facility in Midland for low-income families to take their sick children.

According to Ms. Swendig, Midland Memorial Hospital will not turn any accident victims or seriously ill people away, but a sore throat or a runny nose is quickly referred to a doctor. Because these people don't have the money, they don't go to the doctor.

Although Midland pediatricians support the clinic concept, they really don't have the time to donate any more of their services. All pediatricians rotate "on call" duty at MMH, take turns with the well baby clinic and, according to Ms. Hinjosa, have always been ready to help a needy family.

Nevertheless, with help from the Midland pediatricians and a "little more prayer," the clinic will have a doctor.

Dr. Rosie Walia, who recently moved with her husband and child from Nebraska to Midland, has accepted the physician position at the clinic.

But the doctor wasn't the only "miracle" that the St. Andrews group experienced.

Ms. Swendig said "none of this could have happened without the support from the community."

Registered nurse Ann Swendig, left, and Gloria Hinojosa, director of St. Andrews Presbyterian Mission, discuss "finishing touches" at Midland's new sick children's clinic, 307 N. Weatherford St.

Ms. Hinojosa explained that the use of the building, the carpet, floors, cabinets and furniture were all donated through the community.

"Everything you touch and see in here has been donated," she said. "And we have enough money to operate the clinic two half-days a week for one year."

According to Ms. Swendig, "another miracle" has allowed simple urine and blood tests, along with throat cultures to be performed at the clinic.

"We got the use of the building, the doctor and a pharmacist who will make medications available, but our lab work was going to be expensive," she said. "Then, I was talking to some people and found a technologist who has some culture ovens that she wanted to donate — this whole project has been a miracle."

Property owners can get tax relief

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County property owners who unwittingly are paying ad valorem taxes on public roads can get some relief.

The Midland County Commissioners on Monday noted that untold numbers of property owners are paying taxes on land which they had given to the county for public roads, which the county maintains and which the public uses.

Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis said he is a victim. He's paying taxes on 1½ miles of the county-maintained Davis Road (County Road 140 West) which fronts his homestead and which his father, Cecil Davis, had dedicated to the county in the 1940s.

"What do I do to get some (tax) relief?" asked Davis.

The answer is to deed the road easement to Midland County through County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry.

The Commissioners' Court noted situations similar to Davis' circumstance exist "all over the county."

Once the land is deeded to the county, then who owns the mineral rights?

"Well, I don't know," said Chief Appraiser Roland Wilkinson of the Midland County Appraisal District. "That's the question."

Davis noted the situation "is not a small item when you think about it."

A mile stretch of a 60-foot wide county road, including the right of way, takes in 7.27 acres.

"When you dedicate a county road, unless there is a deed of record, you (the land owner) are paying taxes on the road which the public is using," Davis said.

Gobbledygook lexicon defines cries of turkeys

Edwin Newman published "Strictly Speaking" in 1974.

If anything, however, the misuse of English has increased tenfold since then.

I've therefore decided to jump Newman's sinking ship and capitalize on this unfortunate situation by putting together the world's first dictionary of gobbledygook.

The writing of such a lexicon is a difficult process, largely because those who debase the language do so in such fashion that it's all but impossible to determine what they're talking about.

Anyway, here's a rather disorganized preview of what I'm compiling. I hope it will be of value not only to you, the general public, but also to future lexicogs who face the stultifying task of making sense of words and phrases that make no sense.

TRAUMA CENTER: a hospital.

Chemical dependency facility: a hospital or hospital ward reserved for alcoholics and drug addicts.

Comfort station: a bathroom, toilet or john; found along interstate highways.

Shortfall: a shortage.

Landfill: a garbage dump.

Landfall: something hurricanes do when they hit the mainland.

Misspoke: a verb meaning to have lied or been in error; an oral mistake.

Stimulative dialogue: contradictory terms.

Public service: (1) all too often a deceit practiced in pursuit of personal interests; (2) a term denoting the use of a telephone, as in this police broadcast to an officer on patrol: "Unit 2, public service your wife at home."

Exit interview: a process whereby employees are encouraged to state their reasons for leaving the employ of a firm whose policies or practices drove the employee to seek other employment. (Note) Remaining employees consider this a mere ritual in that the company's method of operation seldom changes.

INFORMATION BREAK: a newscast or commercial "message."

Parental unit: a mother, father or guardian; formerly, a parent.

Primary longitudinal factors: parents; see, parental unit.

Spouse-equivalent: a person with whom bed and board are shared on a more or less permanent basis without sanction of church or state; see, cohabitation. (Note) Some people consider this a sinful arrangement; others view it as an informal compact from which great financial benefits derive, especially at tax time.

Parameter: a constant that functions in the operation of a given system; often confused with perimeter.

"Let me ask you this...": an irritating, unnecessary preface.

Eventuate: a verb, as in, "Should that eventuate, we would have to reconceptualize and set new parameters;" see, occur.

Learning resource center: a museum or library.

Near-miss: a term originally used to describe an artillery shell that lands off mark yet still manages to damage its target; now, employed in describing the near-collision of two airplanes in flight.

Counter-productive: an act detrimental to achieving one's goal.

Prioritize: a verb, as in, "Should that eventuate, we would have re-prioritize our conceptual modes and utilize a cognitive restructuring process."

PRIVATIZE: turn over to the private sector.

Department of Corrections: a prison; see, Huntsville.

Department of Public Safety: the state police; formerly, the Highway Patrol.

Public Safety Building: a police station.

Impacted: misuse of the Anglo-Saxon verb to strike, as in, "Hurricane Andrew made landfall at dawn today, sustaining the area with heavy damage activity when it impacted."

Sustain: a verb meaning to bear up or endure; often confused with suffer, as in, "Joe Smith died of trauma sustained in a multi-vehicle traffic event Tuesday night."

Nuclear event: anything from atomic destruction of the entire planet to core meltdowns at nuclear-powered generating stations; see China Syndrome.

Containment: something that will not occur in the event of a core meltdown.

Shaving system: a razor.

Information provider: that which provides news to sell ads; see, magazine or newspaper.

Information consumer: a person who reads magazines and newspapers; a human being.

Sound system: a mechanical device that plays music; formerly, a record or tape player.

Role model: a person who is admired and emulated; a hero or heroine; less frequently, a parental unit.

The list could go on forever. Please consider this a mere concept manifestation of limited duration.

If my unique resource material medium fares well financial-wise upon completion, I may parameter yet another millstone in the annals of verbal communication: the first piece of fiction written entirely in gobbledygook — which, by the way, is a word denoting the cries of turkeys.

Forgive me, Edwin, but I've already composed the first line in such a work. It goes like this:

"Finding himself outplaced at one misfortunate point in time, Winston sighed and....

Among burglary and theft complaints lodged with city police during the past 24 hours, James Husband, owner of Midland Car Center at 2800 W. Wall Ave., reported that someone pried open an office window and took the keys to all the vehicles on the lot. Also missing were a 1976 Chevette and the titles to about 50 cars.

Minister Dan Johnson of the Northside Church of Christ, 1511 N. Fort Worth Ave., told officers a television set and a telephone answering machine worth a total of $325 were missing after a break-in at the church. Entry was gained through a window. About $130 worth of damage to two doors also was reported.

Randy Irwin of 2438 Whitmire said 1,300 quarters of 1976 vintage were removed from a dresser in his apartment. He last saw them about three weeks ago.

And a $100 bill and a gold bracelet valued at $1,000 were reported taken in a burglary of the Annie Attaway residence at 1600 W. Tennessee Ave. sometime Monday. Entry was gained through a window.

Midkiff Volunteer Fire Department near goal

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The Midkiff Volunteer Fire Department is $15,000 nearer its goal to construct a fire department building and to purchase a fire engine. Midland County Commissioners' Court on Monday agreed to lend economic aid to the community, which serves part of four counties, including Midland.

"Oilfield fires would be our biggest problem," T.O. Midkiff, chairman of a committee to fund the fire department, told the Midland commissioners.

Jokingly, Midkiff said the community, about 35 miles southeast of Midland, had been "waiting on George to do it, and George hasn't done it."

The $15,000 from Midland County and the $30,000 from Upton County, in which Midkiff is located, will afford the community a 30-by-50 metal building and a multi-purpose 1-1½ ton fire truck with a 350- to 500-gallon water capacity, Midkiff said.

"We're trying to get one unit that will do all this," he said of fighting grass, oilfield and structural fires.

The department may be in operation by late summer.

"We hope we don't have any fires before that or ever — as far as that goes," Midkiff said.

The Midkiff VFD would serve the several oil camps in the area.

Previously, Burl E. Pillows has lent his C.J. Penn Truck Service water-hauling truck in fighting fires, Midkiff said.

The Midkiff VFD would serve at least a 20-mile radius reaching into Upton, Midland, Reagan and Glasscock counties.

Currently, volunteer fire departments are located in St. Lawrence, Garden City, Big Lake and Rankin. Reagan County is planning to put a fire-fighting unit at Stiles, about 18 miles north of Big Lake.

"Seems to me there is a real need," Midland County Commissioner C. Wallace "Wally" Craig said of the Midkiff fire-fighting unit.

In other business, the commissioners:

—Authorized the Bullock Scott & Neisig law firm $14,574.84 for legal for work the firm's Robert Rendall did on the Midland County Library Project.

—Loaned the county-operated but federally-funded rent-subsidy program $5,000 until additional U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development funds are forwarded to the Midland rental operations. Funds became in short supply after rental units increased in recent months from 42 to 62 housing unit.

Some smokers can quit

A trend away from smoking, spurred by health concerns, is pronounced among Americans aged 25 to 44. One-third of those who smoked have quit; one-third of the men and one-half of the women have never smoked.

The reduction in smoking is most pronounced among the better educated. There has been a 14 percent drop in smoking by persons with some college, but only a 4 percent reduction among those who did not complete high school.

DEAR ABBY

Rape victim's husband compounds problem

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I was raped four months ago in my own home by a "friend" of my husband. Because I wasn't beaten half to death or killed, my husband insists I must have led the guy on.

Now I'm living in hell, and wish to God I'd kept my mouth shut. It did me no good to tell – only harm. Why do men think a woman would lie about such a thing?

I had told my husband years ago to keep this guy away from our home because he had made passes at me, but he wouldn't listen. This "friend" had raped another woman, but he got off because he'd known her for a long time and she was too embarrassed to press charges. My husband knew all this, but he still accuses me of encouraging the guy.

If you had any idea of what I've been through, you'd know why so many rapes go unreported. I know there must be plenty of women who have been through the same thing. Maybe if you print this it will open the eyes of men who claim to love their wives, but blame them if they get raped.

My marriage is hanging by a thread. I've cried until there are no more tears. Thanks for letting me get this off my chest, Abby. I feel better already. – DON'T USE MY NAME

DEAR DON'T: Please call your local rape crisis facility without delay. It offers free counseling to women -- even those who were raped years ago but have felt too guilty and ashamed to tell anyone.

Just being able to verbalize the terrifying experience with others who have shared that nightmare can be enormously therapeutic. And from what you have told me about your husband, he needs counseling to understand that YOU were the victim and deserve support and comfort – not blame.

DEAR ABBY: How can I get my husband to be as romantic and thoughtful as he was before we were married?

Our first anniversary came and went. No flowers. No card. Nothing. That day really meant a lot to me, Abby. A holiday to him is just another day.

I'm a very sentimental person, and it hurts to be forgotten. I enjoy doing special things for him, but he never reciprocates. I know he loves me, but it would be nice to have some tangible evidence once in a while. – FEELING DEPRIVED

DEAR DEPRIVED: Wait for the appropriate time, then without being critical, judgmental or sulky, tell him you feel sad when he forgets those special occasions. And just to make sure he remembers, clip this column and tape it to his bathroom mirror the day BEFORE you want to be remembered.

High school seniors and three bad habits

A five year survey of high school seniors shows frequent marijuana use peaked in 1978 and then began to fall.

Alcohol use stayed steady.

Frequent smoking has also dropped -- more rapidly among boys than girls. For the survey's last two years, more girls than boys smoked.

In all categories, there were more infrequent users and abstainers than frequent users.

AT WORK

Strange reactions

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

We say we want a better job, when we feel stuck. We say we want any job, when we're out of work. And yet, when a good one is within grasp, sometimes we respond in strange ways.

I received in the mail a cover letter and resume that quite touched me. A 50-year-old man had been in manufacturing management all of his working life. He lives in an Eastern city where manufacturing has been shut down for several years. Unemployed, he has been living on welfare for three years, desperate about not finding work.

The honorableness of his intent coupled with his extensive experience impressed me. At a dinner party that night I sat next to an executive of a medical supply company with plants throughout the country. I told him the story and he said he'd be happy to employ such a qualified person to run one of his plants.

I took his card, and although I don't usually act as a placement counselor, I did send it to the writer of the letter.

I called the executive after a month's time to find out how the new manager was doing. The executive was still waiting for the writer's call! I wrote to the writer again, asking what had happened. His response came within a week. He was waiting for the executive to call him.

I was astonished. How could he be so passive? Why hadn't he jumped at the chance for this job, especially after so many years of not having one? It made me wonder about all the people who only sit and wait and complain. But later, after reflection, I came to these thoughts to explain his lack of initiative.

First, he may not have wanted to move, for surely he would have had to. Many of us get comfortable in our cities or towns, and can't conceive of moving.

Second, he could be resisting changing over to a medical field which he doesn't know, though he does know how to supervise getting things made. Does everyone who works in field A give up all hope when A no longer is profitable or even existent and refuse field B?

Third, he could have simply been terrified. After several years of rejection, one's confidence gets shaken. Perhaps he was worried that he could no longer do what he had once done so well. Many of us face that during periods of our life. The only way out, of course, is to do something. Every one of us who is out of work or "making do" in a job we don't like must find ways to be useful. If you can't get paid for it, then volunteer your time doing work for the community, a charity, political or religious group. Keep your hand and heart in it.

Fourth, sometimes we wait because of a false notion of politeness. Whose turn was it to respond? His or the executive's? False politeness often masks our fear of wanting something too much.

After all, lack of initiative comes from the depression about being out of work and out of step. But if you stop to analyze the situation, it is not your fault that manufacturing is down, that your city no longer makes the products it used to.

Your choices? Adapt to something viable in your own city or look for that same kind of position in another place. Sounds simple, but it requires real introspection and determination to act. William James once advised how to do just that. "I try to live as if I make a difference," he said. If only our writer could have followed through. He could have made a difference.

Time savings don't help

By ERMA BOMBECK

It used to be the incentive for buying a product or a service was to save you money.

Now the whole world is dedicated to an even rarer commodity – time. I have never had so many people interested in saving me time and making my every minute count. There's the mattress that will improve my sleep in 30 days. There's a non-stop flight to New York that will save me two hours. And a conditioner that will repair split ends and make my hair fat in 10 days.

If I run a mile every day for the rest of my life, I will not only feel wonderful, but will add 10 years to my life. If I devote just 15 minutes a day to the care of my skin, men will flock to light my cigarette even though I don't smoke. A pouch of stroganoff dropped in boiling water will give me a meal in five minutes, saving me three hours of preparation.

My oven will clean itself as I sleep. If I get a phone with the right stuff built in, I can save minutes each day by not having to dial the number myself.

I'm always hearing people say there aren't enough hours in the day. If there were any more, I'd pass out. I can remember when people used to do one thing at a time. Now we jog and listen to music at the same time, cook and talk on the phone simultaneously, and eat dinner and watch TV.

I did some fancy mathematics the other day and figured out the following:

Using a one-coat paint on my house would save me three days.

Buying a detergent with the finishing rinse already in it would save a minute and a half each week.

A cold tablet that raced to my bloodstream would save me two days' sick leave a year.

A food processor with 30 attachments would save me several hours a week of chopping and slicing.

A one-step floor polish would save me two hours a week.

I added all those together and subtracted all the products I didn't need, like making me a non-smoker in four days, growing a headful of hair in 60 days to combat my baldness, and a flea collar that outlasted all the others by two months.

I computerized how much time I needed to work, play, sleep and maintain myself. Then I averaged out how many things I could do at one time and finally figured out with all the time-saving devices and products, I had 15 extra seconds in my life.

Then I subtracted the time it took me to computerize the whole mess and you know something? I'm into a 25-hour day again.

DIET FACTS & FALLACIES

HIGH BLOOD PRESSURE

May is National Blood Pressure month. Having your blood pressure checked is a painless, yet informative way to help you understand what is going on inside your body. It measures the pressure exerted by the blood upon the walls of the arteries and veins.

Your blood pressure is affected by what you are thinking, what you are doing, by stress, obesity, high-salt (sodium) intake, etc. It is therefore important for you to know within what range your blood pressure usually falls. Blood pressure above your normal range for extended periods of time can be dangerous. Frequent blood pressure checks can be helpful, and perhaps you may want to learn to monitor it yourself.

Excess weight is a major contributing factor in high blood pressure. Your Diet Center Counselor can provide you with assistance in planning a program for good health and proper weight control.

Policies of Mexico's 'devalued president' had value

By RICHARD KIPLING
Copley News Service

The battle over former Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo's place in history has begun.

While many of his countrymen accuse Lopez Portillo of following policies that pushed his country to the brink of financial insolvency, some experts argue that he is not to blame for Mexico's current economic crisis.

There is more than a little logic in their case.

Lopez Portillo, whose sense of helplessness near the end of his term last year led him to describe himself as "a devalued president," has been accused by critics of being blinded to the dire realities of Mexico's economic condition by his ambition to make Mexico into a powerful industrial nation.

He is maligned as having led oil-rich Mexico down a dead-end economic path that led to an $80 billion foreign debt burden, three currency devaluations, triple-digit inflation and skyrocketing unemployment.

A recent survey of Mexicans by a Mexico City polling firm showed that more than a third of those interviewed place the blame for Mexico's depressed economic condition on decisions by the Lopez Portillo government.

But the argument can be made that Lopez Portillo read the economic variables of the time correctly when he committed his nation to almost $80 billion in foreign loans and a huge capital investment program.

"It's a mistake to attribute the problems (of Mexico) to overborrowing," said Brookings Institution economist Robert Solomon, who is a former senior international economist for the Federal Reserve Board. Mexico's strong economic performance for the decade of the '70s justified that country's participation in huge foreign borrowing, he said.

"Mexico had an enormous increase in capital formation starting in 1977," Solomon said. "Look at the GNP (gross national product) figures. From 1976 to 1980 (during Lopez Portillo's term), Mexico's compound annual rate of GNP growth was 7.3 percent. That's a healthy growth rate, one that doubles the GNP in a little more than a decade. So I think if Lopez Portillo deserves criticism, it's a much milder criticism than you normally see."

"They were doing something right with the funds (they borrowed)," Solomon said. "The problem is not the result of mismanagement."

Even economists who insist that Lopez Portillo embarked on an overambitious development policy, that he tried to build Mexico into an industrialized nation too quickly, acknowledge that there were a lot of variables in Mexico's economic collapse over which Lopez Portillo had no control.

Says economist Sergio Bitar, a fellow in the Latin American Program at Washington, D.C.'s Woodrow Wilson Center and former minister of mines and energy under Chilean President Salvador Allende:

"Blame can be placed on at least three actors for Mexico's economic difficulties: The government of Mexico for following policies that were too expansionary; United States and foreign banks for their lending policies, which were too expansive and based on a bad analysis of country risk, and the United States and other industrial nations, which through their policies pushed the world economy into rapid slowdown with high interest rates and a recession that caused commodities prices to plunge."

So Mexico could do little about high interest rates or plummeting oil prices.

Still, the question looms: Couldn't Lopez Portillo have seen that inflation and interest rates were rising out of control, that the international economy was faltering, that it was necessary to cut back on his dream? Couldn't he — and the leaders of other developing countries such as Brazil, Argentina and Venezuela — have slowed the rush to insolvency?

According to Solomon, the former president — and other leaders — couldn't have because no one did.

"Lopez Portillo couldn't foresee that real interest rates would rise so high — no one could have foreseen that," Solomon said. "What he and other Latin debtor nations could have done is cut their growth and brought on recession in the developed countries earlier — and I'm not so sure that's a positive result."

According to Bitar, one of Lopez Portillo's most controversial moves might have been one of his most prescient.

"Lopez Portillo's nationalization of the country's banks is in the nature of financial arrangements in Latin America — and in its future. Mexico — and other Latin countries — need stricter foreign exchange controls. It is already taking place. In Venezuela, the state is in charge of more than half the country's banking activity; in Chile, it's even larger."

Solomon is steadfast in his refusal to pass negative judgment on Lopez Portillo's policies.

"All of this handing out of blame is a lot of baloney. Lopez Portillo's overambitious investment program (was) based on the expectation — which all of us shared — that the price of oil was going to go up and continue to rise until the end of the century. They evolved the program on the basis of expectations that they had a right to hold — I don't call that a mistake. Reality simply didn't turn out as expected."

French panel debates university reform bill

PARIS (AP) — The National Assembly began debate today on a controversial university reform bill as thousands of students and teachers prepared for massive protests against the measure later in the day.

The proposed revisions, formulated by Education Minister Alain Savary, in recent weeks sparked demonstrations in French university cities around the country. Many of the protests turned violent.

Savary rejected demands that the parliamentary debate be postponed until autumn to allow consultations with student groups.

The protests, though widespread, have involved students from only about 30 of France's 69 universities. The numerous outbreaks of violence have been attributed to extreme right-wing groups, a minority in the French university system, and opposed by the organizers of the demonstrations.

The National Coordination of Students and Teachers, made up of five groups close to France's conservative opposition, spearheaded the protests that began last month.

The umbrella organization completely rejects the "Savary Law" which they feel is government interference in the university system that will lower the quality of education and value of degrees.

A second group, led mostly by socialist and Trotskyist organizations and leftist students, largely approves of the government proposal but is opposed to plans to control the specialized studies students may follow after the "first cycle," usually two years.

The third group calls itself the "independents." Like the National Coordination group, they reject the reform plan, but want to separate themselves from political affiliation and represent the "silent majority" of students outside organizations.

The single common factor among the three groups is that they want the assembly debate put off for further discussions.

The organizations plan to gather in separate parts of the city this afternoon and march on the National Assembly as it begins its debate. Passage of the measure is a foregone conclusion given the Socialists' absolute majority in the assembly.

The reform project is a complex, sometimes deliberately vague plan the government says is intended to improve the quality of higher education. Many of the details will be worked out by the government and university administrators and applied by decree.

Of particular concern are plans that could direct students to universities other than those of their choice. The law also will control enrollment in various fields of study, an attempt to fit students to the job market after an as yet vaguely defined selection process.

Many opposed plans to reduce student and teacher representation on various university boards and committees and bringing in more people from outside the university system.

On Friday, the country's 35,000 medical students voted to end their three-month-old strike after reaching an agreement with the government based on the proposals of a mediation committee. The medical students were to return to the classroom today.

A spokesman for the Interior Ministry would give no details on police reinforcements for the planned demonstrations, but officials said last week that 2,500 police and gendarmes had been mobilized to control earlier marches and were on alert in and around the capital.

Mozambique says bombing creates 'a war situation'

MAPUTO, Mozambique (AP) — Mozambique is "in a war situation" following a South African air strike on suspected guerrilla bases to avenge last week's bombing in South Africa's capital, Information Minister Jose Luis Cabacom says.

"Our sovereignty has been attacked by a neighboring country," Cabaco said late Monday night, after South African Impala fighters strafed and rocketed suspected hideouts, safe houses and training centers of the African National Congress on the outskirts of Maputo, the Mozembican capital.

Cabaco made it clear that, despite Monday's raid, he did not consider his Marxist government to be committed to an active war against the militarily more powerful white-minority government of South Africa.

Asked whether Mozambican officials would be willing to confer with South African officials to seek peaceful solutions, he replied, "Certainly."

South Africa said the raid was in response to the car bomb detonated in Pretoria on Friday outside Air Force headquarters, killing 18 people and wounding 216. Responsibility for the blast was claimed by the ANC, a group outlawed in South Africa which for 22 years has waged a guerrilla campaign to overthrow the Pretoria government.

This was the first time South Africa carried out an air raid on one of the nations where it says ANC has military bases and training camps.

The official Mozambique news agency AIM said rockets caused heavy damage to a jam factory, killing three workers there, and to several houses in neighborhoods where no ANC members lived.

"South African planes attack homes, factories and a nursery school," was the headline today in the government-controlled Mozambican newspaper, Noticias.

AIM and South African officials said seven jets swooped over the city Monday morning, warned the Maputo airport tower an attack was about to begin, then unleashed a barrage of rockets and machine-gun fire.

Israeli doctors return to work; No-confidence vote debated

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Some of Israel's striking doctors began returning to work today, avoiding a showdown with the Health Ministry and easing the critical understaffing in the nation's hospitals.

Meanwhile, Parliament prepared to debate a no-confidence motion against the government brought by the opposition Labor Party over the state of the economy. Prime Minister Menachem Begin's coalition was expected to defeat the motion by a narrow majority.

The motion was introduced before the doctors intensified their strike on Sunday to back demands for more pay and a shorter work week, and was prompted by record 13.3 percent inflation during April.

Eli Yosef, a Health Ministry spokesman, said the ministry rescinded back-to-work orders to 1,300 striking public health doctors after the Israel Medical Association agreed early today to boost hospital staffing to 30 percent. The hospitals had been operating with just 10 percent of their normal number of doctors since Sunday.

IMA leaders, after meeting until after 4 a.m. today, could not be reached by telephone for comment, but a doctor at the strike headquarters in the IMA offices confirmed that some of the doctors were returning to work.

Nicaragua cites Costa Rica

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — This Central American nation, which has no army and seeks to stay out of regional strife, is accused by Nicaragua of destablilizing that neighboring country as it plays unwilling host to anti-Sandinista forces.

"We are presented as a country that is attacking instead of a country that is attacked," said Costa Rican President Luis Alberto Monge in a recent interview with The Associated Press. "Our good relations with Washington are presented as part of aggressive acts against Nicaragua."

The Costa Rican president last month declared the nation's formal neutrality in any regional conflict, hoping to protect itself from the increasing regional tensions.

Honduras and Nicaragua accuse each other almost daily of border attacks. El Salvador is torn by a civil war between the U.S.-backed rightist government and leftist rebels the Reagan administration says are supplied by Nicaragua. To the north, Guatemala is fighting a leftist guerrilla insurgency of its own.

Journalists survive ambush

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — A dozen foreign journalists traveling in a military convoy survived a rebel ambush in northern Nicaragua that left 11 guerrillas and two government troops dead, officials report.

None of the journalists, who included four Americans, was wounded in the attack Sunday afternoon outside Jalapa, a town near the Honduran border 175 miles north of Managua, Manuel Espinoza, a spokesman for the leftist government, said Monday night.

Espinoza said Karen DeYoung, foreign editor of the Washington Post, and Time magazine staffers Richard L. Duncan, chief of correspondents, senior editor Henry Muller and diplomatic correspondent Strobe Talbott were in the ambushed convoy.

U.S. conducting night flights

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon says U.S. airplanes are conducting night flights over El Salvador to search for arms shipments by land from Nicaragua to Marxist guerrillas.

The Pentagon acknowledged the reconnaissance on Monday, saying the Air Force AC-130 airplanes are without weapons or ammunition and have infra-red and low-light-level TV sensors designed to detect movements in the dark.

Officials, who spoke only on condition they remain anonymous, said no such flights are being conducted over Nicaragua, which the Reagan administration has blamed for funneling weapons and other supplies to Salvadoran guerrillas by land, sea and air.

U.S. officials believe a considerable amount of the clandestine arms move at night from Nicaragua across Honduras into El Salvador.

CIA director denies prediction

WASHINGTON (AP) — CIA Director William J. Casey has denied a published report that he predicted U.S.-supported rebels had a good chance to oyerthrow Nicaragua's leftist government this year.

Responding Monday to a story published in the New York Times, Casey denied he made the prediction during testimony before a closed congressional hearing.

"No such prediction has been made," Casey said during a rare public statement. "There is nothing in the record of the congressional briefing which remotely resembles the story."

The New York Times article, which was carried in Monday's editions of the newspaper, quoted unidentified congressmen and administration officials, as saying the prediction was made by Casey and Thomas O. Enders, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs.

U.S., NATO consider Poland

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and its NATO allies are attempting to coordinate strategy for normalizing relations with Poland if that country liberalizes its internal policies, U.S. officials say.

The goal, according to the officials, is to induce moderation in Poland by assuring the Poles that the allies are prepared to reciprocate if there is an easing of repression.

Although deputy White House press secretary Lyndon K. Allin said Monday that "we are exactly where we have been all along," on the Polish question, other officials said formal discussions began recently for the first time on coordinating allied strategy.

The other officials, who spoke only on condition that they not be identified, disputed a published report suggesting the allies plan to dismantle the sanctions gradually regardless of whether Poland demonstrates greater restraint towards its domestic opponents.

Masked witness tells of credit card fraud

WASHINGTON (AP) — Credit card fraud is a "very lucrative business," complete with training seminars designed to increase the profits from stolen or counterfeit cards, a criminal contends.

Hidden behind a black hood and cape, with his voice disguised, "Mr. Witness" told a House Banking subcommittee how he had earned a living through credit card scams.

"I wouldn't say I was super, but I existed," the man said Monday. "I went from hot dogs to caviar."

On a good day, he said, he was able to charge $5,000 in cash and merchandise to stolen or counterfeit credit cards.

The witness said schools were set up to educate street workers about the finer art of credit card fraud. Instruction focused on how to speak, how to dress and how to deal with sales clerks.

"You wouldn't expect someone to use a gold American Express card wearing blue jeans and sneakers," said the man, who was arrested 20-25 times and has since become a police informant.

When the course is completed, he said, "the diploma is the green."

Contending that credit card fraud is a quick way to earn "easy money," he added.

Security was tight in the hearing room. Observers had to pass through metal detectors before they were allowed to enter, and plainclothes and uniformed law enforcement officials stood guard while the man testified.

The penalty for betraying a fraudulent credit card operation is death, the witness said. He said one person who was in the management level of his organization was killed after he "spun away and made his own deal."

Seven-Up refreshes another soft drink war

NEW YORK (AP) — A year after triggering tumult in the soft-drink industry, Seven-Up Co. is again touching off another round in what it calls "The Soft Drink Wars, Part II."

Seven-Up was expected to take its caffeine-free soft drink campaign a step further to claim that its product contains no artificial coloring or artificial ingredients, unlike its competitors, sources said.

The company's formal statement in advance of a news conference today was that it would announce "another consumer information program highlighting additional food additives in soft drinks ..." that is likely to be as "controversial and revolutionary" as its no-caffeine campaign.

Seven-Up's formula is essentially unchanged since it was born, in the late 1920s, but a year ago the company revolutionized the industry with its advertising campaign that stressed Seven-Up contains no caffeine "and never will."

After an initial outcry, Seven-Up's competitors all developed caffeine-free colas, culminated by Coca-Cola Co.'s entry into the market last month.

At that time, Coca-Cola said demand for caffeine-free soft drinks would double by 1984 to 15 percent of the total soft-drink market.

Seven-Up said its caffeine assault a year ago "changed the face of the soft-drink industry, triggering competitors' attacks that have become known as the 'Soft Drink Wars.'"

Seven-Up was accused by its competitors of raising an apparent health issue.

Caffeine is a stimulant found substances including tea, coffee and cocoa beans.

The Food and Drug Administration has warned pregnant women to avoid caffeine because heavy doses caused birth defects in laboratory rats. Other studies, however, contradict those findings.

According to the advertising magazine "Adweek," Coca-Cola was preparing telegrams to bottlers, castigating Seven-Up for implying that other soft drinks have an "unclean, unrefreshing and spoiled taste."

PepsiCo Inc. had not prepared a response.

Except for lemon-lime formulations, most soft drinks use coloring that is "artificial" by FDA standards.

In colas, the coloring is produced by burning sugar to make caramel — a process that is natural but considered artificial for labeling purposes.

Radio station seeks contribution for impoverished towns

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A radio station wants listeners to give money to the needy: a dozen industrial towns it believes were hit hard by the recession. But after three months and more than 400 commercials, no one has given a dime.

"Generally, people from Pittsburgh are really good about these kinds of things. But, I don't know, maybe people just don't have money these days," said Renee Ioli, promotions coordinator for WHYW, a 15,000-watt FM station.

The station's "Save Our Boroughs" campaign asks listeners to send in money "to help our local municipal governments in distress." Station officials say four or five announcements have been airing daily since Feb. 26.

The idea, Ms. Ioli said Monday, is to raise cash to distribute among a dozen suburban municipalities near Pittsburgh, mostly older mill towns stricken by heavy layoffs in the steel industry.

"A borough like Braddock doesn't even have the money to fix their police cars and their walkie-talkies," Ms. Ioli said. "We realize there are a lot of towns in trouble and we want to help out."

The Pittsburgh area is struggling under a 16.5 percent unemployment rate. The only one of the 12 municipalities large enough for its own jobless figure, heavily industrialized West Mifflin, has a 19 percent unemployment rate, state officials said.

In addition to pleas for contributions, the station has been selling T-shirts at $5 each to boost the fund. According to spokeswoman Carolyn McNamara, "We sold a couple on Saturday."

Any donations would go directly to municipal treasuries or, if officials want, to local groups like food banks, Ms. Ioli said.

"We hope they will know what to do with the money," she said.

But three mayors whose municipalities would gain say they aren't excited about the campaign.

"I didn't know we needed to be saved," said James Joyce, an optician and mayor of Brentwood, a suburb of about 12,000 people.

"I think there are plenty of unemployed in Brentwood and we wouldn't turn down any kind of help. But we're balancing our budget and the borough is functioning very well," Joyce said.

"We're not begging and no one but ourselves is going to bail us out," said Homestead Mayor Steve Simko, whose community of 5,000 includes U.S. Steel Corp.'s huge and partly idle Homestead Works.

Homestead laid off four street department workers six months ago, but has rehired two of them part-time, he said.

"We're going to find our way and we don't expect any charity," Simko said.

West Mifflin Mayor Peter W. Richards, whose municipality includes U.S. Steel, Westinghouse and General Motors plants, says the borough has hired back 10 street workers since January layoffs.

New treatment won't be used

MILWAUKEE (AP) — An experimental but controversial hot blood treatment designed to kill liver cancer cells will not be used on a 52-year-old woman because her cancer has spread, doctors say.

Shirley Angsten was to have undergone the procedure Monday at Froedtert Memorial Lutheran Hospital. But Dr. Joseph L. Skibba said the procedure was canceled after it was learned that cancer had spread through her body around her liver.

The treatment, called hyperthermia, circulates blood heated to 108 degrees Fahrenheit through the liver in an attempt to kill cancer cells while leaving normal cells unharmed.

Guards assigned to dump sites

CHICAGO (AP) — A judge has extended his order to keep guards at 10 northern Illinois dump sites contaminated by cyanide-treated film chips, saying the sites pose a public danger.

Cook County Circuit Judge Albert Green, who had issued a temporary order earlier this month requiring around-the-clock security at the dump sites. The order was to expire at midnight Monday but the judge extended it for 24 hours and said he would extend it again by 24 more hours if needed to prevent public access to the sites.

State Attorney General Neil F. Hartigan filed suit earlier this month against Film Recovery Systems Inc. of suburban Elk Grove Village and several other companies allegedly involved in illegally storing the chips at nine sites in the Chicago area and one in Dixon.

The chips are a by-product of extracting silver from used film.

Plant given 30 days to respond

WALNUT CREEK, Calif. (AP) — A utility company modifying the $3 billion Diablo Canyon nuclear plant to correct more than 200 design defects has 30 days to respond with corrections to three "minor" quality control violations cited by federal officials.

Jim Hanchett, a spokesman for the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, said Monday the agency did not fine Pacific Gas & Electric Co. for the violations "because of their relatively minor nature. ... They are largely procedural deficiencies."

PG&E spokesman George Sarkisian said he was unable to comment on the report because it had just been delivered, but he emphasized that all the violations were minor. The utility is building the twin-reactor plant near San Luis Obispo on the Central California coast.

Plan may save Moon's church

NEW CASTLE, N.Y. (AP) — A plan by members of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church may save the church's 98-acre estate from foreclosure to satisfy $252,000 in back real estate taxes, a local official says.

Although Town Attorney Lawrence Dittelman would not elaborate on the plan Monday, he said, "The church still has an opportunity to pay or redeem the property. The church has made a proposal for payment."

The church, founded by Moon, a Korean evangelist, has challenged the town's $2.9 million assessment of the estate and its 120-room mansion as excessive and has filed a lawsuit. It paid $650,000 for the estate in 1979 and paid taxes that year, but has not done so since.

Pothole causes bus accident

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A 4-foot-wide pothole caused a bus driver to lose control of her vehicle, which then jumped a curb — killing one pedestrian and injuring two others, police said.

"Witnesses stated she was not going fast, just making a turn," Officer Claude Russell said Monday. "There was a hole and it just jerked the bus out of control."

The Southern California Rapid Transit District bus was empty except for its driver when the accident happened near downtown Los Angeles, officials said. William Reason, a transit company spokesman, said the pothole was about 4 feet wide and 8 to 10 inches deep. Two elderly women were injured and a third woman who had been pinned under the bus about 20 minutes died later, authorities said.

Strollers to get attachments

WASHINGTON (AP) — The manufacturer of about 49,000 E-Z Roller baby strollers will voluntary issue plastic attachments to ensure that infants' fingers do not become entrapped in metal hinges.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission said Monday that Graco Children's Products Inc., of Elverson, Pa., will provide free plastic hinge guards to owners of the affected strollers, which were sold nationally between January 1982 and April 1983.

Graco said there have been four incidents in which the fingers of infants became entrapped in the main metal folding hinge while the stroller was being unfolded for use.

Group dislikes commercials

WASHINGTON (AP) — A public interest group says radio and television advertising for beer and wine should be banned or balanced with disclaimers about the health hazards of alcohol.

The Center for Science in the Public Interest, a non-profit consumer group founded by Ralph Nader, Monday accused beer and wine distributors of aiming their advertising campaigns at heavy drinkers and youths.

The center's 150-page report entitled "The Booze Merchants" also proposed banning the use of celebrities, whom youngsters might worship as heroes, in commercials for beer and wine.

Families spend at restaurants

WASHINGTON (AP) — About a third of the average American family's food budget is spent in restaurants while younger families use an even larger proportion of their food dollar to dine out, according to a government study.

The report on consumer spending issued Monday by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, said families with higher incomes tended to dine out more than members of lower income households. The bureau surveyed 5,000 American households in 1980 and 1981.

Younger families spend about 40 cents of each food dollar to dine out, according to the study. Compared to other age groups, people over age 65 spend a greater proportion of their food budget on meals consumed at home, the study showed.

Company to air Reagan talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reversing last week's decision not to carry President Reagan's Saturday afternoon radio talks, the Mutual Broadcasting System says it will continue to broadcast the president's live speeches.

But pre-recorded speeches might not be offered to network affiliates, Mutual said in a statement issued Monday. The decision whether to broadcast a pre-recorded address would depend on its news value, the network said.

Last Friday, Mutual announced it would drop the Saturday broadcasts altogether. In explaining the earlier decision, Charles F. Eldridge, the radio network's director of news operations, had cited an increase in the number of the pre-recorded speeches.

Free meals, baskets increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of free meals or food baskets distributed by private soup kitchens or emergency food programs increased sharply in the last year, according to a research group.

The Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, which has frequently criticized Reagan administration cuts in social spending, said Monday that more than half the 181 programs it surveyed reported a 50 percent increase in meals served. Almost a third of the programs run by churhes and charities doubled in size, the report said.

Many agencies reported a large increase in the number of people who had exhausted a month's supply of food stamps, the center said. Unemployed workers sought food from nearly all the programs surveyed, the center said.

Stars applauded as 'Jedi returns'

Carrie Fisher

NEW YORK (AP) — "Return of the Jedi" stars Carrie Fisher and Mark Hamill arrived late for a benefit preview of the movie at a Broadway theater, but still won the applause and cheers of their fans.

Miss Fisher and Hamill arrived separately in limousines, both after the preview's scheduled 7 p.m. Monday starting time.

"I'm late. I'm late," said Miss Fisher, who plays the character Princess Leia, as she rushed into the theater. A host of other moviegoers already had arrived for the New York Cancer Society benefit.

Hamill, who plays Luke Skywalker, arrived even later, but still paused under the marquee to pose for photographers and wave to his fans.

The crowd cheered and several women screamed as Hamill, wearing a tuxedo, stepped out of the limousine. When one man shouted, "Luke, may the force be with you!" Hamill replied, "Thanks. You too!"

The movie opens around the nation Wednesday.

CHICAGO (AP) — Women alcoholics face more social pressures than do men who abuse liquor, and are slower to seek help, says former first lady Betty Ford.

Speaking to about 250 people attending a National Restaurant Association luncheon, the 65-year-old wife of former President Gerald R. Ford said women who are alcoholics also are thought of as sexually promiscuous, are overly protected by their families and thus slower to seek help than men are.

"A man who falls down drunk is still a man," she explained. "For the woman who fell down intoxicated, she was a tramp."

Mrs. Ford, who has been treated for alcoholism, also said women alcoholics find it easier to get prescription drugs because doctors allow them to have pills quicker than they would give them to alcoholic men. The drugs, she said in her address Monday, "are too hard to resist," and women who enter alcoholic treatment centers are often much sicker than are men who enter such programs.

NEW YORK (AP) — Historian Barbara Tuchman, who has twice won the Pulitzer Prize, suggests there should be more women leaders because men have a "much greater difficulty admitting mistakes than women do."

In an interview in the June issue of GEO Magazine, she says "It doesn't mean anything to me to say, 'Oh, I was wrong about that.' But men — presidents and other leaders especially — seem to be terrified of admitting that they are going in the wrong direction and turning around.

"The great example, of course, is Vietnam," the 71-year-old author said.

"It's all connected with proving manhood, and this requires domination," she said. "And I think this explains a lot of the fighting."

Lash La Rue

CONWAY, Ark. (AP) — Actor Lash La Rue, who played the "Cheyenne Kid" several decades ago and used bullwhips that sometimes were 35 feet long, says he doesn't find enough security in his Social Security, and he's looking for work.

Nicknamed "King of the Bullwhip," La Rue was popular at the box office in the mid 1940s and early '50s.

Last week he visited this central Arkansas city to negotiate with representatives of Castle Industries of Arkansas Inc., a mobile home manufacturer, for public relations work.

"Being on Social Security is not so secure as people would think it would be, so I work, every once in a while, to supplement it," La Rue said.

Asked about his age, "I'm not as old as George Burns," he said.

Biographies vary. One book says he was born in 1917. Another says 1921.

Born Alfred La Rue in Gretna, La., his career as a western hero began in 1945 when he made the "Song of Old Wyoming." As the "Cheyenne Kid," he was a bad guy who wore black and carried a whip. The character turned good in the end, but was killed.

Lash La Rue comic books sold in English, Spanish, German and French at the rate of 12 million copies a year.

Estrogen replacement in menopausal women lessens or stops bone lose

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am interested in the question of bone loss in women who are in the change of life. If a woman starts taking estrogen, will the bone begin to grow back again? — Joan, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Dear Joan: The Council on Scientific Affairs of the American Medical Association reports that the replacement of estrogen in menopausal women stops or lessens bone loss, but does not replace lost bone tissue. Nevertheless, treatment with estrogen does reduce the incidence of fractures.

In my patients I noticed that treatment with estrogen is most beneficial if started befoe significant bone loss has occurred. When treatment is stopped, the bone loss resumes.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter was recently married and she and her husband want to start a family. But she has ulcerative colitis and I'm worried about what might happen if she becomes pregnant. Do you have any information on the subject? — Mrs. V.A., Anapolis, Md.

Dear Mrs. A.: According to Drs. Peter J. Baiocco and Burton I Korelitz, of the Lenox Hill Hospital in New York City, a history of inflammatory bowel disease (which includes ulcerative colitis) is no reason for a woman not to have a baby, They suggest, however, that the woman not become pregnant during the time the disease is active.

Their conclusions are based on a study of 78 women who were treated by Dr. Korelitz in his private practice.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know that you have written a lot about hemorrhoids, but exactly what causes them? — Mr. S.A., Atlanta

Dear Mr. A.: Stress and pressure on the network of relatively delicate hemorrhoidal veins is considered to be a major cause of hemorrhoids. Straining during bowel movements and constipation can damage the hemorrhoidal cushions and cause them to swell. Lifting heavy objects, or even violent coughing or sneezing can put pressure on these veins and result in hemorrhoids. Hemorrhoids also have been attributed to sitting or standing for long periods. The weight and pressure of a growing fetus often cause hemorrhoids in pregnant women. For most women, however, the hemorrhoids disappear shortly after delivery. The problem of hemorrhoids can beome a vicious cycle. It can begin with constipation, with straining during bowel movements, or excessive sitting or standing. As a result, poor blood flow or "venous back pressure" occurs with blood being "trapped" inside the hemorrhoidal veins. The stagnation causes blood clots to form in the swollen, inflamed hemorrhoidal tissue, leading to pain, bleeding and itching. Symptoms of hemorrhoids are further aggravated during an acute attack by bowel movements or prolonged sitting and standing. As pain becomes more severe, the hemorrhoid sufferer dreads the prospect of a bowel movement. This fear can lead to constipation thus beginning the cycle again.

For Peter, New Orleans, La.: According to Dr. David Davis, of the University of Missouri-Columbia School of Medicine, major depression can develop in people of any age. However, women are affected more than men in a ratio of about 2:1.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

Dear Dr. Solomon: My grandson has been treated for leukemia and as far as I know, the treatment seems to have been successful. But I've heard that the treatment itself may cause problems for both children and adults. Could you explain this a little? — Mrs. A.P. Pittsburgh

Dear Mrs. P.: In general, children stand up under cancer therapy better than do adults; however, the long-term effects of the treatment are difficult to evaluate. Dr. W. Archie Bleyer, of the University of Washington School of Medicine in Seattle, says that the effect of treatment for cancer on physical growth and development seems minor, although some of these children do appear to be slightly smaller than other children their age. Radiation therapy directed to the head may also affect intellectual development.

On the other hand, the use of drugs in the treatment of cancer does not seem to increase the risk of these children having abnormal offsprings.

Airline draws thousands of reservations for London

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Hoping to succeed where Sir Freddie Laker failed, People Express has sold about 25 percent of the seats for its cut-rate airline flights to England this summer, while still waiting for Britain to approve the fare.

The inaugural flight from Newark to London is planned Thursday. The airline began accepting reservations Monday, and booked more than 8,400 of the 34,000 seats available to Europe and back through Sept. 13.

"We're going crazy here," said airline spokesman Russell Marchetta. "We don't have enough people to fill all the demand."

The airline hopes to make five round-trip flights a week using a 747 jumbo jet leased from Braniff Airlines, which stopped flying and filed for bankruptcy protection a year ago. The one-way fare is $149 for economy and $439 for first-class.

The nearly seven-hour flight to London's Gatwick Airport won't feature the usual airline frills. As on People Express' domestic flights, no free meals will be served and checking baggage costs extra.

Sir Freddie Laker's cheap and popular Skytrain trans-Atlantic service collapsed last year, and the lowest fare currently available is $275 for standby bookings. But People Express says it can make money at the lower fares because of reduced overhead.

In London, spokeswoman Bonnie Lund said People Express was confident of getting a British permit in time for the Thursday flight. But David Deas, a spokesman for the British Trade Department, said the application, filed April 11, was "still under consideration."

Marchetta said people who made reservations would not pay until they boarded. He said those who purchased tickets through a travel agent could get refunds if service is not authorized.

British and U.S. officials are involved in a dispute over the Laker collapse, and Britain may not give People Express the go-ahead until the matter is resolved.

A suit filed in Washington by Laker's liquidators alleges that major airlines drove Laker out of business by lowering their fares in violation of U.S. antitrust laws.

The British government contends that fares are regulated by the Bermuda Agreement and that British Airways and British Caledonian, two former Laker competitors, are not subject to U.S. antitrust law.

U.S. Justice and State Department officials arrived in London on Monday to continue talks on whether the airlines should be required to give evidence in Washington.

'Video games,arcades no threat to American Youth'

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Despite parental fears, kids who spend hours in video game arcades aren't likely to play hooky, turn into glassy-eyed zombies or let Pac-Man gobble up all their lunch money, a researcher says.

Instead, B. David Brooks argues, arcades are safe, reasonably wholesome places for youngsters to hang out with their friends, and may help otherwise unpopular children gain the esteem of their peers if they are good at the games.

Brooks, a specialist on juvenile crime at the University of Southern California, spent five to eight hours a week in the arcades for two years, interviewing kids and watching them play.

He presented his results Monday at a video game conference organized by the Harvard Graduate School of Education and financed in part by Atari Inc., a maker of video games.

Brooks' conclusion: "The concerns heard all over the country appear to be based on fear and not on facts."

Some towns have tried to ban video arcades. Others seek to limit the number of games in stores and restaurants — all because of concern that the quarter-gulping machines are a bad influence on children.

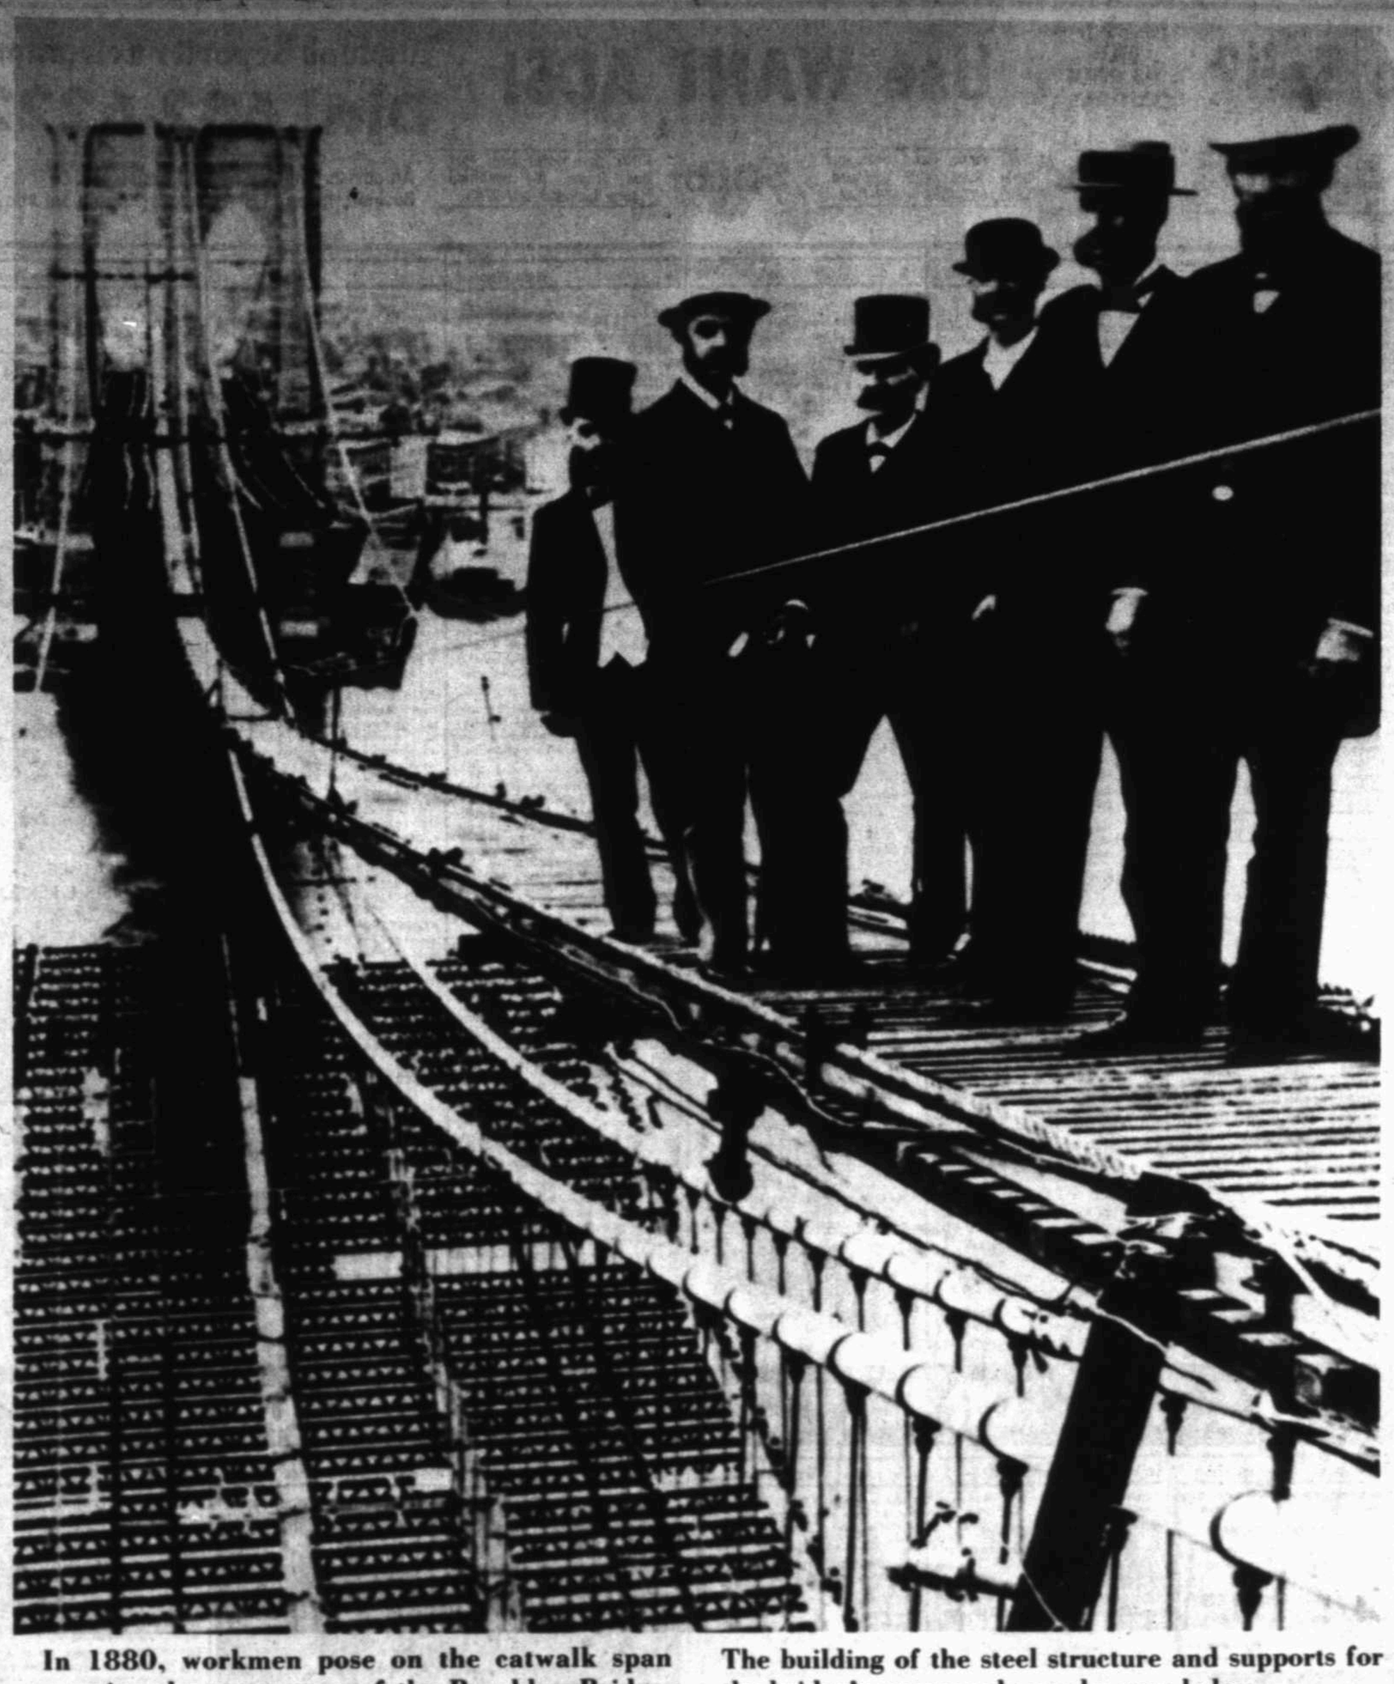

"The arcade serves as a place of recreation for kids," Brooks said. "And it does not pose a threat to the morals of American youth."

Brooks based his findings on a survey of 973 youngsters between the ages of 10 and 18 who played in video parlors in the Los Angeles area.

A separate study presented at the conference found that most families spent less than 45 minutes each day playing home video games, even when they are new.

Brooks said 80 percent of the youngsters surveyed claimed to plunk less than $5 worth of quarters into the machines each week. Only 6 percent said they or their friends skipped school to play the games.

In 1880, workmen pose on the catwalk span connecting the two towers of the Brooklyn Bridge. The building of the steel structure and supports for the bridge's promenade can be seen below.

Spanning time

Text and Photos
By The Associated Press

The Brooklyn Bridge, whose soaring granite towers and graceful steel cables inspired painters and poets, filmakers and flimflam men, passed the century mark today, still recognized as an engineering marvel from a proud, young America.

About 15,000 marchers, many in period costumes, prepared to walk this morning across the suspension bridge that linked the nation's first- and third-largest cities on May 24, 1883.

Its 276-foot towers dwarfed any other buildings; its 5,989-foot span made it the longest in the world. It was the first bridge to use steel wire; it was the first to use electric lighting across a river.

Other plans for the birthday celebration included a flotilla of ships and boats on the East River below, formal rededication ceremonies, and a sound-and-light show and massive fireworks display tonight for tens of thousands of people expected to jam lower Manhattan and the Brooklyn shoreline.

The bridge, originally intended for horse-drawn carriages and now carrying 110,000 cars each weekday, was closed at midnight for the big day. A complement of 3,000 officers was assigned to direct traffic, keeping in mind the structure's first party 100 years ago, when newspaper headlines reported "Immense crowds attracted by the ceremonies."

The bridge, painstakingly assembled with hand-made rivets and more than 14,000 miles of wire, took 14 years to build at a cost of more than $15 million. It claimed at least 20 lives, and its designer, John A. Roebling, never lived to see it finished; he died of tetanus when his foot was crushed as he surveyed the Brooklyn side.

Flags flutter from lamp posts as cars and pedestrians cross the Brooklyn Bridge, dedicated 100 years ago today.

His son, Washington, directed construction of the bridge, though he became an invalid after suffering the bends from his work in the bridge's underwater caissons. His wife, Emily, relayed his instructions to the builders.

"It is a bridge not only from New York to Brooklyn but also from that era to our own," said David McCullough, author of "The Great Bridge."

"What bridge?" wrote Thomas Wolfe in 1935. "Great God, the only bridge of power, life and joy, the bridge that was a span, a cry, an ecstasy — that was America."

The bridge unified two cities — Brooklyn and Manhattan were joined officially in 1898. Its fame has spread around the world. An Italian chewing gum called Brooklyn has the bridge's picture on the wrapper. A Netherlands man publishes a newsletter called the Brooklyn Bridge Bulletin. The bridge has been used recently to advertise Kentucky Fried Chicken and cowboy boots, and a revival of Arthur Miller's "View From The Bridge" is playing on Broadway. The movies "Annie Hall" and "Sophie's Choice" both included scenes from the bridge.

The story of its builders, the Roeblings, is told in "The Eighth Wonder," the sound-and-light show which debuts tonight. Paul Roebling, an actor and great-grandson of Washington Roebling, plays a part in the drama.

The inspiration for today's festivities was "People's Day," the celebration that marked the bridge's opening. On that day, President Chester Arthur came to New York to listen to speeches, attend grand receptions and witness one of the largest fireworks exhibitions of the time.

The bridge has sparked legions of stories about unscrupulous hucksters who "sold" it to unsuspecting visitors, but commercialism has been raised to a high art for the centennial.
