Two killed, 11 injured in air base bombing

American military forensic experts sift through the wreckage of damaged cars after a car bomb exploded at Rhein-Main Air Base at Frankfurt, West Germany.

U.S. officials suspect Red Army Faction

By KEVIN COSTELLOE
Associated Press Writer

FRANKFURT, West Germany — A bomb hidden in a parked car exploded outside the headquarters of the U.S. Rhein-Main Air Base this morning, killing two people and injuring 11, authorities said. They said the leftist Red Army Faction was suspected in the attack.

Base spokesman Sgt. Dave McMahon told The Associated Press one of the dead was a U.S. serviceman and the other was a civilian woman. He said the woman's nationality had not been established.

U.S. Air Force Capt. Lorrie Bourland told reporters that names of the dead and injured were being withheld pending notification of next of kin.

Three of the injured were hospitalized in U.S. military medical facilities. Their condition was not made public. The others were treated at the Rhein-Main medical clinic and released.

The bomb went off at 7:15 a.m. (1:15 a.m. EDT) in a parking lot as many base personnel were reporting to duty.

Kurt Rebmann, West Germany's chief federal prosecutor, said: "The circumstances of the attack point to the Red Army Faction."

The leftist terrorist gang has been responsible for several attacks on U.S. and NATO military installations in West Germany in the last decade.

Investigators said that the bomb was placed in a car that had false American Forces license plates on it.

Ms. Bourland said the bomb blew up between the base's headquarters building and a nearby dormitory. The blast shattered windows and turned nearby cars into twisted wrecks.

Wreckage was thrown onto the roof of the building and strewn up to 200 yards away.

West German radio said that a "very, very strong bomb" caused the blast at the heavily guarded base, although the type of explosive was not known. Eyewitnesses said the blast left a crater about 3 feet deep and 6 feet wide.

Cmdr. Tom Connor of the U.S. European Command in Stuttgart, West Germany, said both West German and U.S. investigators were at the scene.

Security at the fenced-in base is tight, and all drivers are stopped at a checkpoint and asked to produce identification before entering the parking lot where the blast occurred.

The Rhein-Main Air Base is a tiny city in itself with living quarters and offices for 4,000 U.S. Air Force personnel and 4,000 dependents. It is located across the runways from busy Frankfurt Airport.

Hesse state Interior Ministry spokesman Jan von Trott said the bomb was placed inside a parked car near the headquarters building of the 435th Tactical Airlift Wing. Trott said 29 cars were damaged in the blast.

U.S. Air Force spokesman Capt. George Sillia told the AP that buildings in the immediate area were heavily damaged by the explosion, which took place place between buildings 347 and 350 on the base.

West German radio reported that investigators were searching for a taxi that was seen leaving the scene around the time of the blast. However, police said the search ended when the taxi driver turned himself in and proved he had nothing to do with the explosion.

The Red Army Faction's last major attack on a U.S. military base was the bombing of the U.S. Air Force's European headquarters at Ramstein, in southwestern West Germany, in 1981. No one was injured.

That year, gang members also tried to kill the commander of the U.S. Army-Europe, Gen. Frederick J. Kroesen, with a grenade launcher. He was not hurt.

In December 1984 and January 1985, the Red Army Faction was blamed for more than 30 bomb and arson attacks on NATO facilities and government buildings.

Heat wave boosting business at local pools, bars

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

As the sweltering heat continues to parch the already sun-baked West Texas Plains, crowds gather at neighborhood swimming pools and other local watering holes.

Still, others choose to hybernate indoors and pray for the first sign of a long-awaited cool front.

That can only mean one thing. The dog days of summer are upon us.

The month of August is a favorite among warm weather lovers, particularly air conditioning repairman, bartenders, public swimming pool supervisors and the electric company.

Texas Electric Service Company reported its customers used 15,430 megawatts of power by August 1 — a 1.1 percent increase over the 1984 peak.

"That's a significant increase," said customer service supervisor Jumper Davis. Customers systemwide used 15,265 megawatts when power usage peaked on August 29, 1984.

Public swimming pools also are reporting significant increases in numbers.

According to Don McCartney, supervisor of Midland's four public pools, "We've seen a significant increase especially in the last two days."

During it's first two hours on Wednesday, Doug Russell Pool, 9000 N. Midland Drive, reported attendance rose by more than 150 over the 200 swimmers recorded the day previously.

"More adults are coming out to swim later on in the day," McCartney added.

As for overall attendance, McCartney noted that the number of persons using public pools "has gone down because there are more private pools in the area than in the past. Ten years ago, we probably would have had 600 people in this pool."

Doyle Wolfe, general manager of Water Wonderland, W. Highway 80, said attendance there has increased about 10 percent as compared to figures recorded at this time last year.

"The weather had some affect on us earlier on because it was cool and rainy, but it's progressively going higher. Folks just want to come out and cool off," he said.

Other local watering holes say business is as steady as the 100 degree temperatures.

Kevin Butler, bartender at The Bar, 606 W. Missouri Ave., said "We've been going through a lot of beer. People come in and say how hot it is and want to quench their thirst. But they don't stay very long." The heaviest crowds are between 5 and 9 p.m.

Garfield's manager John Hayes, said on the other hand, "All of our numbers are about the same. They may be drinking other drinks, but the numbers are still the same."

Arrests made in three-year-old killing case

James Robert Chambers

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Sheriff's Office investigators looking into a three-year-old unsolved killing arrested five Midland men Wednesday on suspicion of capital murder.

"They were somewhat surprised," said Sheriff's Sgt. Monnie Weddel of the five men, who are suspects in the June 10, 1982 murder of Wylie Randolph Wilson.

Held in county jail this morning on $100,000 bonds were Elroy and Leroy McKee, 25-year-old twin brothers who live at the Plantation Apartments, 3000 W. Kansas, and James Robert Chambers, 25, 1101 Hamby. The three were charged with capital murder. The names of the other two suspects arrested were being withheld by the Sheriff's Office because the men, both 19, were juveniles at the time of murder.

According to Sheriff's Sgt. Buzz Cupp of the Youth Services Division, the men will be handled as juveniles until the Juvenile Court waives jurisdiction.

"It's more a formality than anything else," he said.

Randolph, 45, 1300 Cotton Flat Road, was found lying in a pasture near County Road 160, just east of FM 1379 in Midland County, about 9:15 a.m. Investigators believed he had been killed in the city and the body taken out to the county, but they were unable to track down any suspects.

"We pulled it out the other day and got lucky," said Weddel, who worked on the case with Texas Ranger C.J. Havrada. "We kind of hit things that hadn't been touched on."

"We asked for his assistance," said Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter of Havrada, who is stationed in Midland. "They hit it like it was a brand-new case and started over, and everything fell into place."

The motive for the murder was robbery, Weddel said. Wilson, a salesman for Aladdin House Furniture on West Wall Avenue, died of severe head injuries after being beaten with a blunt instrument. Shortly after his body was found by a passing oil-field crew, investigators were called to the Kingsway Motel, 3801 W. Wall Ave., because blood had been seen inside a Datsun 280ZX which turned out to be Wilson's.

No further details of the murder have been released, but a woman who was staying at the motel at the time told reporters that one of two men who were sharing a room there had been driving the car. The keys were found in the ignition.

More than a month after the killing, the Reporter-Telegram reported that the Sheriff's Office had questioned 40 people but turned up no suspects.

Canadian relief worker taken captive in Lebanese market town

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Gunmen today kidnapped the Canadian head of a religious relief agency in south Lebanon, hours after the Lebanese manager of the ABC News bureau in Beirut was freed unharmed by his abductors.

Police and Canadian Embassy officials said that 30-year-old Robert P. Burkholder was kidnapped by gunmen as he headed to work in Nabatiyeh, a Shiite Moslem market town about 37 miles south of Beirut.

A Lebanese companion with him was left behind by the gunmen, police said.

In Damascus, Syria, an official at the Canadian Embassy confirmed the abduction of Burkholder, whose name was originally given by Lebanese police in Arabic and transliterated as Berkholder.

The Canadian Embassy moved its operations from Beirut to the Syrian capital during the June hijacking of a TWA airliner when 39 Americans were held hostage for 17 days.

School days fast approaching

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Local merchants would probably agree the items most difficult to keep in stock these days are book bags and Masters of the Universe lunch boxes.

That can mean only one thing. In just three weeks summer officially ends for school children.

It's also that time of year when some parents tearfully see their first-born off to his or her first day of classes, and others skip all the way home because their last child has finally entered school.

Back to School
— Section B

Midland Independent School District opens it doors Sept. 3 with an expected enrollment of 18,000 students and the addition of a new elementary school.

Construction of Scharbauer Elementary School, 2115 Hereford Blvd., was completed this summer, making the school ready for classes this fall.

With the addition of the new school, boundaries and cluster assignments have been changed slightly from last year.

The only differences are in Cluster 5, where fourth grade will be held at Parker, fifth grade at Houston and sixth grade at DeZavala.

Cluster 6 fourth graders will attend Bonham, fifth graders will be bused to Scharbauer and sixth grade will be at Washington.

Students new to MISD and those who have moved to a new attendance area during the summer must pre-register at the school they will attend. Pre-registration for elementary school children will be from 8-11:30 a.m. and from 1-4 p.m. Aug. 14 at each elementary school.

Junior high, freshman high and senior high school students new to Midland who wish to register and/or receive an individual orientation should make an appointment this month.

Parents or students who are unsure what attendance area they live in can obtain boundary maps and cluster information at the administration building, 702 N. N St. or call the office of the neighborhood school.

A child must be 5 years old on or before Sept. 1 to enroll in kindergarten or 6 years old at the time to enroll in first grade. First-time students should have a birth certificate and immunization record.

Fierce riots continue in Durban area of South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Fierce rioting broke out for the first time in black townships around Durban, and hundreds of Indian families fled from black looters. Hospital officials said at least 16 blacks were killed and more than 150 injured in 24 hours of clashes with police.

Apart from bitter street-fighting between police and youths, blacks armed with spears and sticks turned on black mourners at a service for a slain civil rights lawyer Wednesday night, wounding several people, said Lechesa Tsenoli, spokesman for the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid alliance in Natal.

Busloads of blacks arrived as the service ended at 10 p.m. and waded into the mourners in Umlazi township, Tsenoli said.

The unrest ended relative calm in Natal, the only province largely untouched by nearly a year of rioting that has left more than 500 blacks dead. Durban is not one of the 36 cities and towns under a state of emergency imposed 19 days ago by the white-minority government to quell black unrest.

President P.W. Botha told reporters in Pretoria that his government had no plans to extend the emergency decree to the Durban area, "but if necessary, we will do it. We are quite capable of controlling the situation," he said.

Police confirmed they shot dead five blacks in clashes late Wednesday and early today, and recovered four more bodies of blacks found in riot areas. That brought the official death toll to 11 since late Tuesday.

But an official at King Edward VIII Hospital in Durban, who asked not to be identified, said six people were dead on arrival Wednesday and seven more during the night from gunshot wounds and stonings. The spokeswoman said 102 people were treated for injuries.

"The casualties are still coming in, we haven't had time to count. There are probably about 50 (wounded) so far," said a spokesman at Prince Mshiyeni Memorial Hospital in Umlazi township. He said three blacks died at the hospital overnight.

"They've got lacerations, birdshot wounds and there are one or two with fractures. It looks as if they jumped over walls or out of buildings," he said.

The only white among the wounded was a man who was stoned as he drove through Inanda township, news reports said. The man was reportedly blinded in one eye.

Police headquarters in Pretoria said riot patrols used shotguns, rubber bullets and tear gas to break up crowds of rioters in several Durban townships during the night, and arrested 15 blacks.

The violence flowed from student boycotts in Durban's townships this week to protest the assassination on week ago of Victoria Nonyamezeleo Mxenge, a prominent black civil rights lawyer outside her home in Umlazi township.

Indians in the Durban area were among the targets of the rioters, and many were evacuated.

Six men rode shotgun in a 10-ton truck late Wednesday to rescue 30 Indians trapped by a mob in Inanda township, driving through a hail of stones to take the people to safety, the South African Press Association said.

Youths burned a government administration building, a mortuary, the homes of two school principals, and numerous cars and trucks. A number of homes of Indians were gutted and still smouldering this morning, reporters said.

Police also reported scattered incidents of rioting elsewhere in the country, mainly in Johannesburg and Port Elizabeth townships, where the unrest has been concentrated in recent months.

A funeral in Daveyton township for a 16-year-old black girl shot by police in a clash last month ended peacefully, witnesses said. Police provided seven buses to transport more than 1,000 mourners to the grave site, in keeping with restrictions banning marches and political speeches at funerals.

Police say they have detained 1,465 people during the state of emergency, but have released more than a third. By police count, 868 people still are held without charge.

About half of the blacks killed in the past 11 months have reportedly died at the hands of other blacks who accuse them of collaboration with the government. The other half were killed by police at riots or demonstrations against apartheid, South Africa's legal system of race segregation.

Praveen Gordhan, a senior member of the anti-apartheid Natal Indian Congress, said by telephone that 200 to 300 Indian families had fled Inanda, a mixed township of Indians and blacks, following looting of their homes and businesses.

Other students new to MISD need immunization records to register. A report card or withdrawal form from the district last attended also is helpful.

Texas law requires all students to be immunized for the following diseases: tetanus/diptheria, polio, measles, rubella and mumps. A student entering school for the first time also must have had a polio and tetanus/diptheria booster shot after his fourth birthday.

Greenwood students begin classes Sept. 3 with an anticipated enrollment of more than 2,000. Students may register the week of Aug. 26 and should contact the school at 683-6461 for more information. Superintendent of the Greenwood Independent School District is Samuel C. Martin.

Midland families seeking alternatives to the public school system have seven private schools from which to choose.

With an enrollment of about 400 students, Midland Christian School, 2001 Culver St., is one of two state-accredited private schools in the city. The 40-member staff, directed by Eddie Lee, teaches pre-school through 12th-grade classes. In addition to the regular curriculum, which meets requirements for public schools, there is daily Bible study. Classes are scheduled to begin Sept. 3.

Trinity School, 3500 W. Wadley Ave., has a pre-school program for 3- to 5-year-olds and offers classes through the ninth grade. Margaret Simmons is the head master of this state-accredited private school. Classes will begin Sept. 3 with an enrollment of about 450 students and 40 staff members.

Hillander School, 1600 W. Wadley Ave., teaches children from age 3 through the sixth grade. An enrollment of about 300 students is expected and the staff numbers 28.

St. Ann's School, 2000 W. Texas Ave., expects an enrollment of about 335 students when classes begin Aug. 29. Principal Brigid Keane directs a 28-member staff. Students range from 4 years old through the sixth grade.

Permian Basin High School, which will begin its fifth year Sept. 4, is accredited through the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools. According to director John Banfill, about 30 students in grades eight through 12 will be taught one-on-one by 14 instructors. Located at 3100 N. A St., the school is described as college preparatory and offers a strictly-academic curriculum.

Accelerated Christian Education is offered at Midland Baptist Temple School, 3001 N. A St. Scheduled to begin Aug. 26 with about 160 students and 11 staff members, the self-paced program covers kindergarten through 12th grades. David Piearcy is administrator.

Developmental Disability Center, 2705 W. Michigan, is in its second year of operation. It is designed for children who are developmentally delayed due to mental retardation, Down's Syndrome, learning disabilities or other disorders. Classes are offered year-round to children from 18 months to 8 years of age. Administrator Kay Bynum oversees two faculty members who prepare individual educational plans for seven students.

Decision could restrict workers' rights

AMARILLO (AP) — A bitter dispute between vegetable growers and union organizers that began five years ago in an onion field ended in federal court Wednesday when a judge struck down seven Texas laws restricting workers' rights.

U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson ruled that the statutes restricting the right to picket and organize unions are unconstitutional because they violate free speech guarantees.

The dispute began when Deaf Smith County officials arrested Arizona labor organizer Karen Kincaid in 1980 for allegedly trespassing on an onion field six miles west of Hereford.

The arrest spurred a group of High Plains growers to seek a court order to stop union activists from organizing protests.

A restraining order was granted by State District Judge Wesley Gulley. But the order was quickly overturned by U.S. District Judge Halbert O. Woodward on July 9, 1980. The case then moved to Ms. Robinson's court.

Her ruling strikes down for the whole state of Texas statutes that have limited the ability of workers to picket and organize.

"The attorney general of the state of Texas, the sheriff of Deaf Smith County, Texas, and the criminal district attorneys of Deaf Smith County, Texas, and all those in active concert or participation with them, are hereby permanently enjoined and restrained from enforcing or attempting to enforce the statutes declared unconstitutional... " her judgment said.

Specifically, the laws:

— Limit the amount of picketing in a given area near a workplace;

— Forbid picketing that would stop or intimidate nonpicketing employees from working;

— Forbid picketing that presented libelous and slanderous statements;

— Make it illegal for a minority of employees to strike or picket with intent to impel, coerce or force an employer to recognize or bargain with any labor union or coerce, force or compel any employee to join such an organization.

Ms. Robinson's decision forbids law enforcement agencies from enforcing those statutes.

Palestinian guerrilla headquarters hit

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli warplanes blasted a Palestinian guerrilla headquarters today in the the Bekka Valley not far from the Syrian border, apparently in retaliation for recent attacks in Israel's "security zone" in the south, police said.

Police said at least two civilians were injured in the attack — Israel's second air raid in Lebanon in less than a week and the 10th this year.

Local reporters quoted a guerrilla spokesman as saying his men vacated the building on Wednesday in anticipation of the attack.

But Israeli military sources and Lebanese radio reports indicated the building was being used as a headquarters, and the Christian Voice of Lebanon radio said four people were believed buried in the rubble.

Police said two Israeli jets staged three divebombing runs against a three-story building formerly used as command headquarters for the Libyan-backed Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command.

"The building was badly damaged and at least two civilians, including a woman working in a nearby field, were injured. We have no reports of fatalities," said a police spokesman, who requested anonymity.

Voice of Lebanon radio said: "The building collapsed in a huge cloud of smoke and dust as it took direct bomb and rocket hits. Four bodies are believed buried under the rubble."

Six other jets flew cover as the thunderous bombing sorties were carried out on a dirt road between the villages of Barr Elias and Tanayel, seven miles west of the Syrian border.

All eight planes released scarlet heat balloons that deflected barrages of ground-to-air missiles unleashed by Palestinian and Syrian army batteries, police reported.

The police spokesman said the main target of the raid at 7:10 a.m. was the former PFLP-GC base on Tanayel's outskirts near the Beirut-Damascus highway, about 10 miles west of the Syrian frontier.

The PFLP-GC commander of the base, whose code name is Abu Zohair, told reporters at the scene: "We suffered no casualties and the raid is a complete failure," he said.

The Israeli command in Tel Aviv said its pilots scored direct hits on their target and returned safely to base.

The position 1.6 miles west of Barr Elias was the target of an Israeli raid on July 29, when reports from Lebanon said Israeli planes missed their target and caused no damage or casualties.

Observers in Israel said the raid followed the killing of two Israeli soldiers and the wounding of two others Monday in a guerrilla attack near the village of Majd Al Salim in southern Lebanon.

They were the first officially confirmed fatalities since Israel withdrew the bulk of its troops from Lebanon in June 10.

But Lebanese reports said the attack was apparently in retaliation for an attack Tuesday by a mule-riding suicide bomber in Israel's "security zone" in southern Lebanon. The rider and his mount were killed, and Israeli reports said a Lebanese was wounded.

The Moscow-oriented Lebanese Communist Party claimed responsibility for the bombing, in which Israel said one Lebanese civilian was wounded.

The Communist Party is a close ally of Ahmed Jibril's PFLP-GC, the most radical among the eight guerrilla factions that make up Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization.

The raid came as President Amin Gemayel prepared to leave with Prime Minister Rashid Karami to the Syrian capital of Damascus for summit talks with President Hafez Assad on ways to end the Lebanese civil war.

Lebanese radio stations, meanwhile, said Israel was expected to withdraw its occupation force today from Hasbaya in the foothills of Mount Hermon.

The move would narrow the "security belt" Israel maintains in southern Lebanon to serve as a buffer against renewed cross-border guerrilla forays.

The last attack was Aug. 2, when Israeli planes bombed the headquarters of the Syrian-backed Syrian Social Nationalist Party in the Bekaa Valley town of Chtaura.

Arab summit opens in Morocco

By G.G. LABELLE

CASABLANCA, Morocco (AP) — Morocco's King Hassan II opened the first Arab summit in nearly three years Wednesday with a call for unity, but the meeting was torn by dissension and a boycott by five of the 21 Arab League members.

Libya was a last minute drop-out. Its representatives attended ministerial-level preparations but were not present at the summit opening. Syria, Algeria, Lebanon and South Yemen had said earlier they would not attend.

Among the 15 nations and the Palestine Liberation Organization that sent delegates, only nine, including Hassan, were heads of state.

Hassan said he regretted the absence of nations boycotting the session but said delegates present should not lose hope because of the differences.

"The Arab nation has need for all its components," Hassan said. "This meeting is not disintegrating. Our common denominator is Arab dignity, which is now represented in occupied territory and the Palestinian cause."

He was referring to the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Golan Heights, and the Palestinian quest for a homeland.

Chadli Klebi, secretary-general of the Arab League, and PLO chairman Yasser Arafat spoke after Hassan completed his 15-minute address. Arafat thanked Hassan, the league's current chairman, for calling the emergency session.

The chief Libyan delegate, Ahmed el-Shahati, left Casablanca Tuesday after angry exchanges at a preliminary meeting of foreign ministers over Libyan attempts to have the summit condemn Iraq for its war with Iran, and Jordan and the PLO for their joint initiative for peace talks with Israel.

Palestinian sources, who demanded anonymity, said Hassan met with the heads of state present before the evening session to try to limit the discussions to Arab unity and the question of a Palestinian homeland.

After the opening remarks in an ornate conference room the session was closed to the public. It was the first since the 1982 summit in Fez, Morocco. A summit had been scheduled 1983 in Saudi Arabia but was called off because of divisions in Arab ranks over the Palestinian issue and the Iraq-Iran war.

A Kuwaiti newspaper reported Tuesday that shortly before the meeting, five Americans and three Frenchmen kidnapped in Lebanon would be released. It quoted an unidentified Western diplomatic source as saying Syria would engineer the release.

LEBANON

The Canadian official, who refused to be identified by name, said the embassy was contacting Lebanese government leaders as well as militia commands in Beirut to try to secure Burkholder's release.

Reporters in Nabatiyeh said Burkholder lived there for three years with his wife and three children. They said the Canadian, from East York Township, Ontario, worked as administrator for the South Lebanon Project of the Mennonite Central Committee, a relief and agricultural aid organization based in Akron, Pa.

Nabatiyeh is controlled by Shiite militiamen of the dominant Amal movement, plus some radical Hezbollah, or Party of God, Shiites.

Burkholder is the fifteenth foreigner reported missing in Lebanon since March 1984. Seven Americans, four Frenchmen, a Briton, an Iranian and a Kuwaiti have been kidnapped by Moslem gunmen in west Beirut.

The Lebanese manager of the ABC bureau, Shakib Hmeidan, walked into west Beirut's Commodore Hotel early today wearing a green T-shirt and dirty jeans provided by his captors. Hmeidan was kidnapped as he drove to Beirut airport on Saturday.

"I have no idea who took me or why," the 50-year-old Hmeidan said later as he toasted his release with champagne. "I don't know exactly why they let me go."

Security sources who spoke on condition they not be identified said Hmeidan apparently was not abducted by the kidnappers believed to be holding a group of Westerners, some for more than a year.

Meanwhile, Israeli warplanes blasted a guerrilla base of the Popular Front For the Liberation of Palestine-General Command in eastern Lebanon's Bekaa valley Thursday, Israeli military sources and Lebanese radio stations reported.

Police said at least two civilians were hurt in the attack. The Christian Voice of Lebanon radio said four people were believed buried in the rubble of the three-story building.

It was Israel's second air raid in Lebanon in less than a week and the 10th this year. Observers in Israel noted the raid followed the killing of two Israeli soldiers and the wounding of two others on Monday in a guerrilla attack near the village of Majd Al Salim in southern Lebanon.

Hmeidan, who has a heart condition, was heading to the airport for a flight to Geneva en route to Houston for a medical checkup, when he was abducted.

HEAT

While the increased business may delight local merchants, Midland Police Department Lt. Jim Colburn, said the rise in temperatures sometimes causes tempers to flare, meaning a larger than normal number of local arrests.

Unable to provide statistical data, Colburn explained, "some people become irritated by the heat and thereby make trouble. It's also a proven fact that there are more arrests during a full moon."

Those irritated by the unsightly heat must make do, however. The chance for immediate relief is slight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Forecasters say the extended outlook calls for continued sunny days and fair nights with a slight chance of isolated thunderstorms through Sunday. Otherwise, highs will reach the upper 90s to near 100 and the lows will dip to the lower 70s.

Sandinistas claim U.S. staged kidnapping of reporters, activists

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — An American peace group and the leftist government accused U.S.-backed rebels of kidnapping 29 peace activists and 18 reporters on the Costa Rican border. Guerrillas charged the abduction was a "show" put on by the government.

The Sandinista government said in a statement Wednesday that rebels intercepted a boat carrying members of the Witness for Peace organization on the San Juan River, 11 miles west of the abandoned rebel camp at La Penca. It said the group was taken into Costa Rica.

Witness for Peace opposes the Reagan administration's support for anti-Sandinista rebels. Yvonne Dilling, head of the organization's Washington office said Wednesday the group's goal "is to change U.S. policy toward Nicaragua to one that fosters peace and friendship between the two nations."

Costa Rican officials said they could not verify that the group was in their country.

Nicaragua said the group of captives included 29 American peace activists and 18 Nicaraguan and foreign journalists. The peace group said radio contacts with the rebels and the captured activists indicated no one was hurt in the incident.

President Daniel Ortega visited the organization's Managua office late Wednesday and called the incident "a typical terrorist action executed by mercenaries financed by the North American administration."

"Therefore, it is in the hands of the United States that these terrorists release the kidnapped people," he said.

Peace group spokeswoman Sharon Hostetler in Managua said the United States was responsible for the safety of the alleged prisoners. "We will hold responsible President Reagan and those members of Congress who voted in favor of funds for the Contras for any injuries the Contras inflict against our group," she said.

Guerrillas of the Revolutionary Democratic Alliance, or ARDE, denied they had any contact with the Americans who went to a former rebel camp to pray for peace on Tuesday.

"The forces of ARDE have not shot at nor have they detained any person," spokesman Jose Davila told The Associated Press in San Jose, Costa Rica. He said the incident was "a show mounted by Managua."

Eduardo Sam, an ARDE leader who is in Union, New Jersey, recuperating from injuries sustained in a helicopter crash, said Pastora's forces are about 20 miles away from where the incident occurred.

He said Pastora had a base in the area until it was taken by government forces about a month ago.

The peace group left Monday on a trip from the northwest shore of Lake Nicaragua to San Carlos, at the mouth of the San Juan River, 125 miles southeast of Managua despite a warning from ARDE leader Eden Pastora that his guerrillas would attack them.

Pastora has claimed Witness for Peace is politically motivated and is working against Reagan's Central American policy.

A spokeswoman for Nicaragua's Defense Ministry, Lt. Mary Jane Mulligan, said reporters from the government newspaper Barricada, the pro-government paper El Nuevo Diario and CBS News were aboard a government helicopter flying over the area when the group was apprehended, and that they photographed the incident.

She did not explain why a helicopter carrying journalists was over the border area at the same time.

A spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Managua said the Embassy tried to send a small plane into the area, but it could not land because of heavy fog. It said it sent three officials to the area by car instead.

Herb Gunn of Fayetteville, Ark., the peace group's deputy coordinator, told reporters in Managua he contacted the rebels by radio and was told the Americans were unharmed and were being held in an undisclosed location in the jungle.

Gunn told reporters he was in radio contact with the group at the time of the incident and "we heard bursts of machinegun fire — shot in the air, we learned later."

Ms. Hostetler told the AP Wednesday night she made radio contact with the group again later, and was told "everything was all right."

The group later released what it said was a text the radio conversation between Warren Armstrong, of Wayne, Pa., who is reportedly on board the boat, and Ms. Hostetler. It quoted Ms. Hostetler as asking Armstrong if the armed people were Contras, and Armstrong replying affirmatively.

Ortega says Israel trains Contras

JERUSALEM (AP) — The president of Nicaragua, Daniel Ortega, claimed in an interview published today that Israeli army officers are training and arming anti-government rebels in his Central American country.

The Haaretz newspaper quoted Ortega as saying he had statements from defectors and captured rebels, along with other intelligence evidence which he declined to disclose, that showed Israeli officers were in rebel bases.

Ortega said Israel was "a clear tool of the United States in Central America," Haaretz reported. It also quoted him as saying that "Washington forced Israel through the means in its hands to serve the same role in Honduras."

The Israeli government has denied any involvement in Nicaragua. Privately, officials say it is possible that Israeli mercenaries are advising the rebels, known as the Contras.

In a 70-minute interview with Haaretz reporter Yoav Karni in Managua, the capital of Nicaragua, Ortega was quoted as saying that Israel's long support for the Somoza family was behind Nicaragua's decision to sever relations with Israel in 1982.

Gen. Anastasio Somoza was ousted in the Sandinista revolution in 1979. When Managua cut ties with Israel, it cited Israel's invasion of Lebanon as the reason.

"The Israeli government was the main partner of the United States in supporting Somoza," Ortega was quoted as saying.

"The fact is that Israel supplied weapons to Somoza and continued to do so after the United States itself stopped. Even after the victory of our revolution, Israel did not learn its lesson and continued to support government...(and) serve the interests of the United States in Central America," he said.

Questioned about the Arab-Israeli conflict, Ortega said he supported the national rights of the Palestinians.

"We are not anti-Israeli," he was quoted as saying. "The people of Israel have national rights and are entitled to their state. Our opinion is that it is unreasonable to grant one people national rights at the expense of the rights of another people."

Archaeologists reconstruct Greek temple

NEMEA, Greece (AP) — A team of American archaeologists has rebuilt part of a 2,300-year-old Greek temple in a sanctuary where athletic contests once were staged for crowds of thousands.

Only three columns from the 4th century B.C. Temple of Zeus, set in a vineyard-filled valley in southern Greece, are still standing. The team intends to reconstruct at least 12 of the 32 Doric pillars that once formed an elegant colonnade surrounding the building.

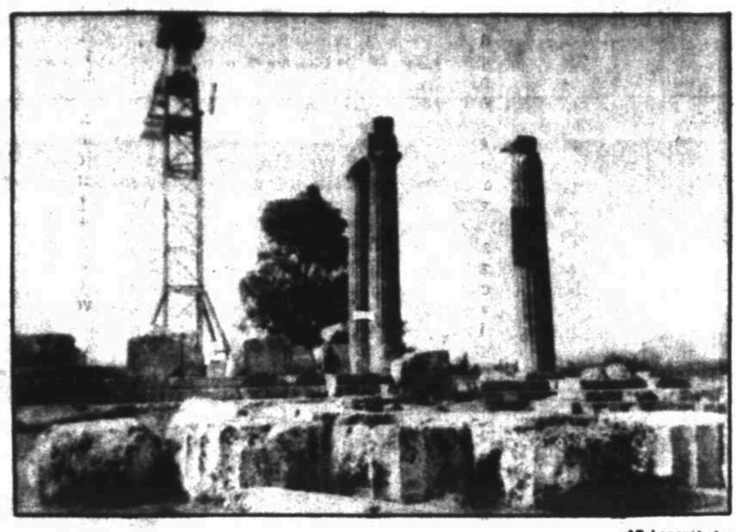

"We're doing it to conserve the remains. Blocks and column drums left lying on the ground for centuries are much more decayed than those still standing," said Stephen G. Miller, director of the American School of Classical Studies in Athens.

"We're also making a good many new discoveries about how ancient temple builders worked," he said. The complex where they are working includes a stadium where spectators could watch the Nemean Games, held every two years as part of an ancient sports circuit.

The temple's tapering limestone columns, coated in white marble stucco, once gleamed beside a sacred grove of dark cypress trees. Inside, the archaeologists believe, stood a bronze statue of Zeus, king of the Greek gods.

Athletes from all over Greece flocked to worship at the temple when the Nemean Games were held.

"The valley would have become a tent city for the duration of the games. At a conservative estimate, the stadium held 30,000 spectators," Miller said.

Ruins of the 4th Century B.C. temple of Zeus at Nemea in Southern Greece, where ancient athletic contests were staged, are being rebuilt by a team of American archaeologists.

Miller has directed excavations at Nemea since 1974, unearthing the ruins of an ancient hotel, a bath house and aqueduct, a row of pavilions probably used by the athletes and the horseshoe-shaped stadium cut into a hillside.

The Nemean Games belonged to an ancient circuit of athletics contests. Most famous were the Olympics at Olympia, also on the Peloponnesus. But other games on the circuit were at Delphi, site of a famous ancient oracle, and at Isthmia near Corinth.

"All these sanctuaries had a resident oracle, a female seer who prophesied the future," Miller said. "The Nemean oracle may have spoken from a crypt found beneath the temple of Zeus."

The archaeologists are using a crane to put new blocks of stone in the temple's base to replace slabs looted from the site.

"We couldn't match the blocks as tightly as the ancients until we tried sawing between each pair to get a proper fit," Miller said. The method involves running a saw in the crack between two blocks to work off any irregularities and ensure a tight fit.

The rebuilding is a large-scale jigsaw puzzle. Miller said more than 1,000 blocks have been measured, photographed and their origial positions identified as a first step toward reconstructing the temple.

Miller's team plans to restore two columns at the northeast end of the colonnade.

"We're ready to go as soon as we get more funding," he said. "The project turned out much more expensive than we thought and it's going to cost around $250,000 to raise each pair of columns," Miller said.

Each column is 31.5 feet high and made of 13 cylindrical drums, each weighing about 1.5 tons.

The temple was completed about 330 B.C. on the site of an earlier temple as part of a building program that might have been financed by King Philip II of Macedon, father of Alexander the Great.

"The games were at their height during this period of Macedonian power over southern Greece," Miller said. "Later they were moved further south to Argos and by the 2nd century A.D. the sanctuary was abandoned."

Canadian held in Lebanon

NABATIYEH, Lebanon (AP) — A Canadian who heads a religious relief and agriculture agency was kidnapped by unidentified gunmen today in Nabatiyeh, a Shiite Moslem market town in southern Lebanon, police said.

Officials said Bob Berkholder, 30, was abducted at gunpoint as he headed to work in Nabatiyeh.

A Lebanese companion with him was left behind by the gunman, police said.

Reporters in Nabatiyeh, 37 miles south of Beirut, said Berkholder lived there for three years with his wife and three children. They said he was the head of the Central Commission for the Menonites, a social relief and agricultural aid organization.

Nabatiyeh is controlled by Shiite militiamen of the dominant Amal movement, plus some radical Hezbollah, or Party of God, Shiites.

They moved into the town when Israeli troops evacuated last April after occupying the area for almost three years.

Canadian Embassy officials in Beirut were not available for comment because the embassy moved to Damascus, Syria, during the June hijacking of a TWA airliner when 39 Americans were held hostage for 17 days.

BBC broadcasts resume; Censorship debate continues

LONDON (AP) — News reporting resumed today on British airwaves at the end of a 24-hour journalists' strike to protest the BBC's cancellation of a documentary on Northern Ireland that featured an interview with an alleged IRA leader.

But the row over alleged government interference rumbled on. The British Broadcasting Corp. said it would screen the program later after it was edited.

The news blackout affected TV and radio audiences in this nation of 56 million, as well as an estimated 120 million people abroad who tune in to BBC external radio services broadcasting in 37 languages.

In its first news bulletin today after 24 hours of music interspersed only with announcements explaining the strike, the BBC's English-language World Service said: "A 24-hour strike which blacked out most of Britain's television and radio news services is over." The bulletin went out immediately after midnight Wednesday.

It added: "The Home Secretary, Mr. Leon Brittan, who asked the BBC to withdraw the program, insisted that he had not acted as a censor and said he believed in the independence of the corporation."

Survival combat game captures Japanese

ATSUGI, Japan (AP) — An import from the United States is becoming a rage in Japan. It is the Survival Game — wherein young people dress up in surplus U.S. Army combat uniforms and spend weekends in the woods playing war.

"Japan has been in a peaceful period for many years," says Takashi Kawamoto, who brought the fad to Japan from California two years ago. "That's not to say we want to wage war, but the game shares a fundamental point with judo; you're against an adversary."

The simple rules — steal the other team's flag before you get shot — attract some 30,000 players across the country, he says. Businessmen and bartenders, truck drivers and college kids flex muscles and wits to outsmart their opponents. Although most are in their 20s and early 30s, the game is catching on among junior high schoolers, despite a ban on purchases of the toy guns by children under 18. The guns shoot plastic pellets.

"Nobody thinks about getting shot, only about shooting the enemy," explained one weary "soldier" after a recent game near Atsugi airfield, once a World War II base for Japanese kamikaze pilots and now a U.S. facility, southwest of Tokyo.

His dog-tagged buddies offered various reasons for joining the game on a sweltering Sunday: a chance to get out of the city, be a hero, find friends, lose weight.

Akiko Shibazaki, one of three women among 75 men, commented with a giggle that she came to "hunt more than flags."

"The game's a great way to get rid of stress," said storekeeper Shigeru Nakasugi. "Japan may be rich, but life is still hard. There's so little space, and you have to bow down to your boss at work. 'Survival' is even better than baseball because there are no fixed positions."

The participants dress up like U.S. soldiers, complete with combat boots, web belts, shoulder patches — and plastic goggles to protect the eyes from the pellets.

"Dressing up makes us feel like actors," said Toshio Arai, a 25-year-old security guard, decorating his face with camouflage paints. "We don't have any direct experience with war, so we know about it mostly from American movies like 'The Deer Hunter' and 'M-A-S-H.'

"It's just a game," said one player. "Don't think about it too hard, or you'll think we like the military. It's exciting to hide in the forest, without knowing whether there's someone nearby trying to get you.

"Besides," he added, "Japan lost. Instead of continuing the losing feeling the older people keep, we'd rather imitate the winners."

He thumbed his uniform collar proudly. "It's authentic from '43."

"It would look really strange if we walked down the street dressed like the Imperial army, don't you think?" a teammate suggested.

"It's just a game," said another. "Don't think about it too hard, or you'll think we like the military. It's exciting to hide in the forest, without knowing whether there's someone nearby trying to get you.

"It's not like real life. We like to play war, but don't want a real one."

Japan's postwar constitution limits its military to a strictly defensive role, and the government keeps defense spending below 1 percent of the gross national product.

In an indication of the Survival Game's popularity, Makoto Tobo, manager of the Ogen gun store in Tokyo, said in an interview that his tiny shop made more than 30 million yen (about $125,000) last year off the game. A replica of a military rifle costs 8,000 yen ($34), with some prestige models going for more than 100,000 yen ($420).

About 50 hobby and toy stores in Japan sell the equipment now, according to Combat magazine, the bible for devoted players, who hope to form a national association soon.

But one who expressed shock at the whole thing is American writer David Klass. He noted that a surfer's haunt near his home in the coastal resort of Atami started selling toy guns.

Lima blackout suspected work of Maoist guerrillas

LIMA, Peru (AP) — A power outage blacked out this capital city of 5.5 million people for over an hour Wednesday night.

A spokesman for the state power company, Electorlima, was quoted on Radio Programas as saying the cause of the blackout was not known immediately. However, 13 power outages since 1982 have been blamed on sabotage by the Maoist-inspired Shining Path guerrillas.

In his inaugural address, President Alan Garcia, leader of the populist Aprista Party, said he would seek to open a dialogue with the guerrilla group in an effort to end political violence that has claimed at least 5,000 lives since 1980.

The previous power outages were caused by the dynamiting of power towers in the Andes mountains, hundreds of miles southeast of Lima.

The last complete blackout of the city was June 7 when guerrillas also exploded car bombs, including one near the government palace, and burned nine major department stroes and supermarkets.

Although there were no reports of violence in the blackout which began at 8:32 p.m. and ended at 9:45 p.m., an announcer for Radio Programas told listeners to be careful with candles to avoid fires, to lock their doors and to put their dogs outside to ward off thieves who try to take advantage of the situation.

Meanwhile, police in the Andes city of Ayacucho, 345 miles southeast of Lima said Wednesday that army helicopters brought in the bodies of six soldiers killed in a rebel ambush.

Police said the six were killed near the town of Huancasancos, 130 miles south of Ayacucho, Tuesday night. Police have no information on whether there also were soldiers wounded in the attack or whether the guerrillas suffered casualties.

Ayachucho has been center of guerrilla insurgency, but in recent months the rebels have been increasing their attacks in Lima.

Telephone callers to Radio Programas reported seeing a giant hammer and sickle, the Shining Path's symbol, burning on a hillside on the outskirts of Lima.

Traffic jams the tranquillity of Yosemite Valley park system

By RONALD B. TAYLOR
Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. — Traffic jams in Yosemite Valley have Park Superintendent Robert O. Binnewies envisioning a high-tech mass transit system to shuttle visitors around on smog-free electric buses.

Others, like park research scientist Jan van Wagtendonk, say that traffic congestion is only a symptom of mass urbanization. The solution, van Wagtendonk says, is "to go low-tech...We must limit the numbers of people we allow in and provide them an opportunity to get out of their cars and see the park."

While the high-tech, low-tech debate is new, the traffic problem in Yosemite, the most-visited national park in California, is at least 25 years old — and so is the struggle to find a solution. Two recent events have focused new attention on Yosemite's traffic:

On Memorial Day 1984, thousands of vehicles gridlocked for four hours in Yosemite Valley, the worst traffic jam ever. To avoid a similar snarl this spring, rangers set a limit on the number of cars that can enter the valley. So far, rangers have not been forced to invoke the limit.

Newly appointed National Parks Director William Penn Mott made $700,000 available to speed up the lagging efforts to solve overcrowding in Yosemite Valley, indicating that he wants congestion greatly reduced or eliminated by 1990, the park's centennial year.

Visitor limitations would affect only those wanting to enter the granite-walled valley for the day. They would be directed to other areas of the park. Visitors holding confirmed reservations in Yosemite Valley would still be allowed to enter.

Yosemite's traffic problems date back at least to the late 1950s. Oldtimers here talk about huge snarls each evening when thousands tried to park near Stoneman Meadow and Curry Village to watch the famous fire fall, a cascade of hot coals from Glacier Point to the valley floor, 3,000 feet below.

The fire fall was canceled in 1969, mainly to relieve congestion. Later, a one-way traffic pattern was put in place in the valley, a reservation system was adopted for campgrounds and free shuttle buses were introduced. Feeding the bears was even outlawed.

But those actions hardly kept pace with the increasing congestion. More than 3 million visitors are expected this year before the first snowfall this winter.

The National Park Service in 1980 adopted a master plan that called for a reduction of urban services. One aspect of the plan was removal of all auto traffic from the valley in favor of a park-and-ride mass transit system. However, the price tag on that was put at more than $100 million, and the policy was quietly shelved not long after it was announced.

Conservation groups support both the creation of an auto-free environment in Yosemite Valley and the current plan to restrict traffic.

"Yosemite Valley is not crowded with people; it's crowded with cars," said Destry Jarvis, vice president of the Washington-based National Parks and Conservation Association, an organization devoted to the preservation of the nation's 334 parks, monuments and recreation areas.

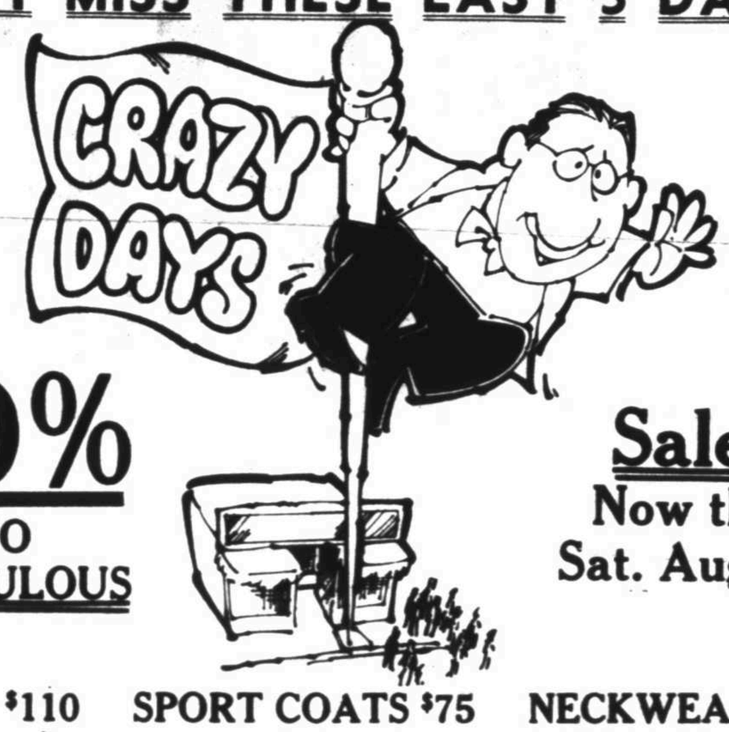

Jarvis was critical of the Park Service, contending it was never committed to a master plan that would cut off auto traffic in Yosemite Valley. But he praised Mott for sending "a strong signal to go ahead."

Now that Mott has ordered an aggressive attack on the problem, a Yosemite task force is making a detailed study of traffic flows and looking at alternative transportation systems. But so far the results are not too promising, according to ranger Bruce Fincham, the task force leader.

"The current mass transit systems are just not suitable for our needs," Fincham said. As a result, various long-range plans are still just in the talking stages.

One of the most promising systems seen so far by park planners would use electric buses that recharge their batteries as they move, drawing power from underground cables. But it is still in the experimental stages. Experts predict it will be at least a decade before such buses are commercially available.

Pope takes message to Africa

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II, carrying a forceful message of human dignity, social justice and peace, set out today for a 12-day swing through Africa.

The pope's special Alitalia DC-10 jetliner took off at 10:05 a.m. (4:05 a.m. EDT) from Leonardo da Vinci Airport for the West African country of Togo.

This is the pope's third and longest journey to Africa, where Roman Catholicism is growing faster than anywhere else in the world.

During his tour of seven nations, the pope will seek to consolidate the church's gains and improve relations with Islam, the continent's largest religion.

Togo, a country about half the size of Ohio, is where voodoo originated and still is widely practiced.

Christians constitute about 27 percent of the country's 2.9 million people. About one-fifth of Togo's Christians are Roman Catholic. The rest are voodooists who believe in sorcery and the power of charms and fetishes, and animists — people who follow tribal religions based on the belief that all objects are imbued with spirits and demons.

After a two-day stay in Togo, the pope flies to the Ivory Coast, followed by visits to Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Zaire, Kenya and Morocco. The 15,803-mile journey is the 27th foreign tour by 65-year-old John Paul since he became pope in 1978.

In Togo's oceanfront capital of Lome, women and children on Wednesday swept the streets with homemade brooms. Christian and Moslem leaders as well as priests and sorcerers of the 70-percent animist majority offered special prayer for the pope's visit.

Tens of thousands of faithful were reported travelling to Lome and other sites of the pope's appearances in Togo from neighboring countries of Ghana and Benin.

Carrying sand for a new road that leads toward the local church, women in Togoville, Togo, prepare for today's arrival of Pope John Paul II.

AP Laserphoto

None of the seven countries on the papal tour is high on Africa's economic critical list. But they will afford the pope a glimpse at the continent's pervasive poverty, explosive population growth, racial problems, famine victims and refugees.

On the eve of his departure, John Paul lashed out at South Africa's apartheid policy of segregation and prayed for victims of famine and violence.

"Our repudiation of every form of racial discrimination is absolute and total...To those who suffer the violence of such an inhuman situation, I express sentiments of fond participation and support," the pontiff told 10,000 people gathered at his weekly general audience.

He also deplored restrictions against the church in Burundi and expressed the hope that the people of Uganda, whose government was recently toppled in a coup, will be able to enjoy "a real and lasting internal peace with the assurance that the rights and freedoms of the various ethnic and religious communities will be respected."

Vatican officials this week called Africa a "key battle ground" for evangelization. The church of 800 million followers worldwide has been making substantial gains there and in Asia.

The pontiff has said the main objective of his 12-day tour of seven countries is to stimulate "harmonious" growth of the Christian faith there.

Bomb strikes crowded hotel in Greece

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — An explosion ripped through a seaside hotel packed with more than 130 vacationers early today, injuring 14 people, and triggering a fire that gutted the building, police said.

A police spokesman said investigators believed a leaky gas canister caused the powerful explosion at the Hotel London, occupied mainly by Britons. He said several hotel residents had noticed a strong smell of gas in the building before the 3 a.m. blast.

"We think we've traced the explosion to a leaky gas canister in the hotel kitchen. It definitely wasn't caused by a bomb," said the spokesman, who declined to be identified.

The blast in the hotel basement tore a gaping hole in the lobby floor at the hotel, and an ensuing fire gutted the five-story building that sat on King George Avenue.

"We were sitting around the swimming pool having a late-night coffee when there was a deafening noise and glass started flying everywhere," said a British tourist, who asked not to be identified.

The hotel is one of dozens set along a main avenue in Glyfada, a seaside suburb near Athens Airport.

Last January, a bomb blast in a crowded bar in Glyfada injured more than 60 people, almost all American servicemen from the U.S. base at Athens Airport. No arrests were made following that explosion. A little-known extremist group claimed responsibility.

Black Forest in danger

LEONBERG, West Germany (AP) — Air pollution has killed or damaged 75 percent of the trees in southwestern West Germany, including the Black Forest, conservationists said Wednesday.

Georg Lohrmann, director of the Baden-Wuerttemberg State Forest Council, said the damage figure in the state had grown from 50 percent in 1983 and 66 percent last year.

"The damage to these woods can be seen with one's own eyes, because the beeches have already lost their rich green color and are now looking light green and yellow," he said.

Alarm about the forests has inspired efforts to introduce unleaded gasoline, require automobile exhaust converters and impose a speed limit for the first time in West Germany.

Altar drawn from sea

MIDDELBURG, Netherlands (AP) — A third-century altar devoted to a Germanic goddess was hauled from the eastern Scheldt estuary by a fishing boat, a spokesman for Zeeland Province said Wednesday.

The altar, devoted to fertility goddess Nehallennia, is one of about 200 such altars found on the estuary bottom in recent years, according to spokesman Trimpe Boer.

The stone altar weighs 220 pounds and is 32 inches high, Boer said, adding that under Dutch law, it is the property of the fisherman who dredged it up Monday.

Churches criticize U.S.

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The central committee of the World Council of Churches on Wednesday said U.S. policy was heightening tension and human rights abuse in Central America.

The policy-making committee, meeting in Buenos Aires, also denounced the South African government's policy of racial separation and its recent declaration of a state of emergency to suppress black unrest.

The 157-member committee approved a letter to Central American churches which condemned militarization of the region and laid most of the blame on the United States. The letter's contents were based on a 10-day tour of El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica and Nicaragua by a four-member council team in July.

Three rescued from ice

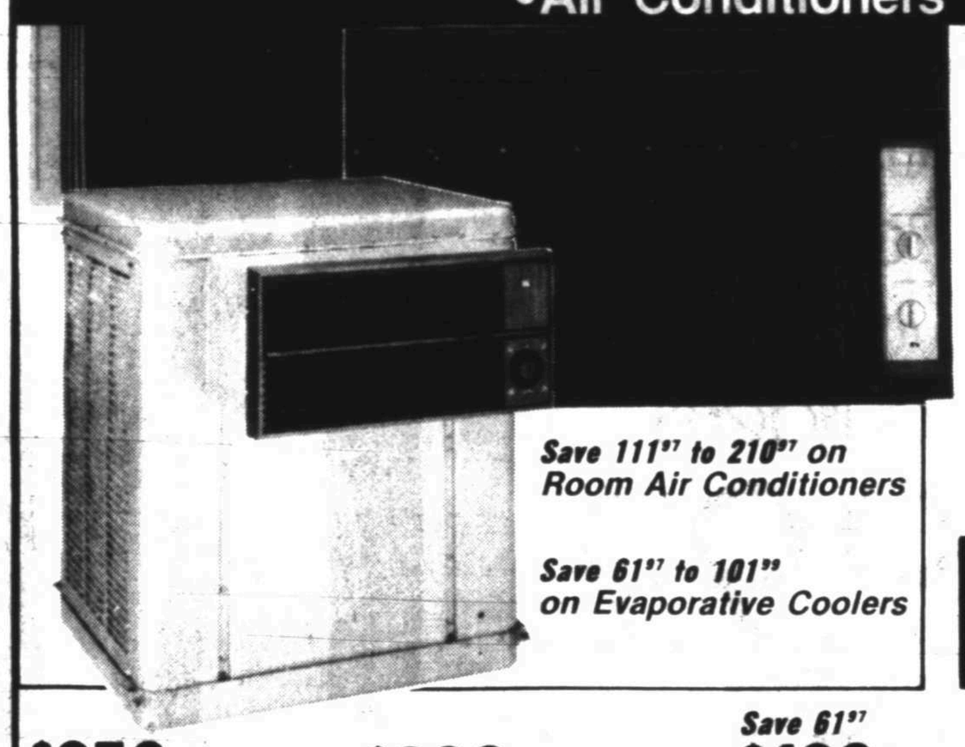

NUUK, Greenland (AP) — A helicopter has rescued three Frenchmen who were lost, without food, for five days on the Greenland ice cap, police said Wednesday.

They said the leader of the group, Alain Misner, 31, and his two companions were rescued Monday and were in good condition. Police gave the ages of the other two men as 25 and 30, but said their names were not available.

Misner's group set out July 9 from Angmagssalik on Greenland's east coast, to ski across the ice cap to Soendre Stroemfjord.

Religion 'under siege' by secularists, Reagan officials claim

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Religion is an integral part of America's heritage but is increasingly under siege from people demanding separation of church and state, according to two top Reagan administration officials.

Education Secretary William J. Bennett warned Wednesday of an "assault of secularism on religion" that he said is comparable to past intolerance of Catholics and Jews.

And Attorney General Edwin Meese III decried "this idea of religious nihilism as a principle of government," pledging the administration will resist that notion.

The two cabinet members made the comments in speeches to the Supreme Council of the Knights of Columbus, a Roman Catholic lay organization meeting in Washington.

Both men said people who demand total separation of church and state are mounting an assault on religion.

The speeches recalled a theme President Reagan enunciated on Aug. 23, 1984, in Dallas on the day he accepted renomination from the Republican Party.

Addressing a prayer breakfast, Reagan said, "The truth is, politics and morality are inseparable. And as morality's foundation is religion, religion and politics are necessarily related."

Bennett, in his speech Wednesday, declared: "Our values as a free people and the central values of the Judeo-Christian tradition are flesh of the flesh, blood of the blood."

"...American history — the fundamental shape of the American experience — cannot be understood without reference to the Judeo-Christian tradition, a tradition which gave birth to us and which envelops us," he said.

By contrast, Bennett said, the Supreme Court seems to treat entanglements of religion and the schools "as something akin to entanglement with an infectious disease."

Speaking a few minutes later to the gathering, Meese said the framers of the Constitution wanted to give Americans the freedom to express their religious beliefs in their own way and without "the heavy hand of government" or a national church.

But they also believed that "without a sense of public and societal morality, that society would not endure," Meese said, arguing the First Amendment was never intended to "preclude federal aid to religious groups, so long as that aid did not favor one group over another."

"There never has been, and hopefully never will be, an official church in the United States," Meese said. "But at the same time we must recognize that, through time, Congresses have aided certain churches on a non-discriminatory basis...

"The government should be able to distribute tax benefits to parents regardless of where they send their children to school," Meese said, "...and we have contended that government should be able to extend aid to all people, whether they intend to use it for secular or religious education."

Meese did not mention the Supreme Court. But Bennett repeatedly criticized the court, saying it has consistently failed to recognize the strong bonds between religious values and American values.

Bennett said a recent ruling limiting aid to parochial schools is the latest in "four decades of misguided court decisions" that have shoved religion out of the schools, to the detriment of both children and society.

In its 5-4 decision last month, the court struck down a New York City program allowing public school teachers to conduct remedial classes in parochial schools. Bennett said the decision would impede the government's ability to help needy children.

"We at the Department of Education will do our best to nullify the damage done by the...decision to the education of needy children," he pledged.

Edwin Meese says drug education campaign needed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III, calling the government's sweeping marijuana eradication program a success, says a companion educational campaign is needed "to get kids away from drugs."

"All the enforcement efforts that we can try in this country, all the police agencies both in this nation and worldwide will never be able to stem the supply of drugs in this nation until we have first decreased the number of users and have decreased the demand for these drugs," Meese said Wednesday.

In a speech to a conference here of the Knights of Columbus, a lay Roman Catholic church organization, the attorney general gave rave reviews to the Justice Department's coast-to-coast, marijuana search-and-destroy mission.

"Already, this week alone, we have confiscated and eradicated over 200,000 marijuana plants...confiscated numerous weapons, taken over greenhouses where marijuana was being grown, taken apart booby traps that were used to prevent the law enforcement agents from getting into the fields," Meese said.

He added: "At the same time we are going forward with a parallel effort to warn our citizens everywhere that the education campaign and the prevention campaign must be equally as effective as the enforcement campaign against these drugs."

Although many states have been involved for some time in efforts to destroy cultivated marijuana cannabis plants, approximately 2,200 federal, state and local law enforcement officers joined in a coordinated campaign to uproot the plants beginning Monday.

Through late Wednesday, the Drug Enforcement Administration said, authorities had burned, cut or otherwise destroyed some 225,000 cultivated plants and had made 133 arrests nationwide.

DEA spokesman Con Dougherty said that 52 firearms and other weapons had been seized and that 1,100 plots of marijuana had been sighted.

He said Missouri was leading all other states in the number of eradications — 41,600 through midday Wednesday.

Salvadoran released after arrest at church

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Federal officials have released a Salvadoran refugee who was being offered sanctuary in a church, but only after the man agreed to two things he feared: revealing his identity and applying for political asylum.

The refugee's priest said the government reneged on its word not to go to or near the Piscataway church to arrest the refugee, who uses the pseudonym Ramon Flores.

"They said they had no intention of coming down here," said the Rev. Henry Atkins of St. Michael's Chapel at Rutgers University.

Flores was released Wednesday from the Passaic County Jail, where he was being held on $5,000 bail, said Martin R. Greenfield, an assistant district director of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Flores, his wife and three children fled El Salvador in June 1984 and were given sanctuary at the chapel. The 35-year-old refugee was arrested Tuesday when he left church grounds to pick up his daughter at a day care center.

He was arrested as an illegal alien, but also was wanted as a witness in an Arizona trial of religious workers in the sanctuary movement.

The federal government has cracked down on churches and organizations that harbor aliens who claim they are victims of political persecution in their homeland.

Flores was released on his own recognizance Wednesday following a meeting with INS officials, Greenfield said. Authorities believed Flores would appear at a deportation hearing that has yet to be scheduled, he said.

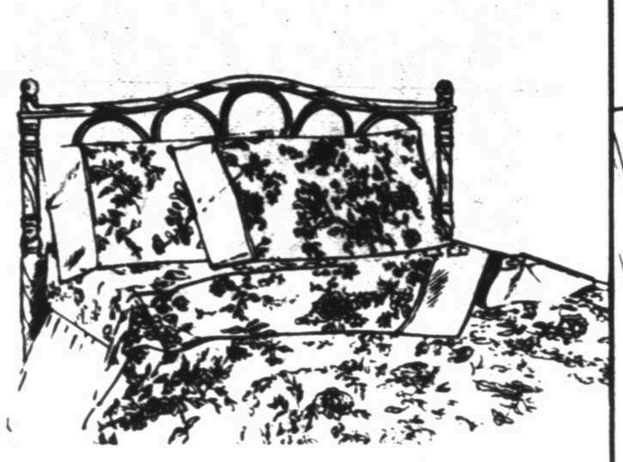

But the priest said Flores was released when he told officials his real name and said he and his wife would apply for political asylum.

Atkins has said Flores feared that if he revealed his true identity, the government would supply it to officials in El Salvador, where he was imprisoned for 10 months for allegedly aiding rebels.

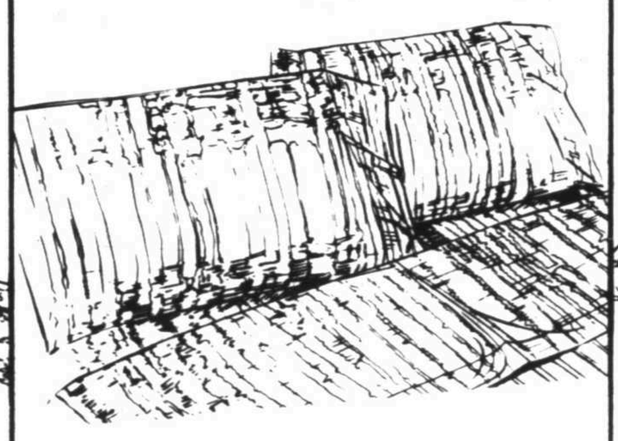

The family members had refused to apply for asylum because they feared it would not be granted, said Atkins. "Over 97 percent of Salvadorans who apply are rejected. If you are rejected you are deported. And (Flores) believes he will be killed or tortured or arrested."

Atkins said before the hearing that INS officials visited the church in January and July, and offered assurances that they would not go to the chapel to arrest Flores.

Agent 'legend in the FBI, and not J. Edgar Hoover kind,' lawyer says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Richard W. Miller was an FBI legend, a fat, inept bumbler whose final bid for glory as an FBI agent landed him in prison on espionage charges, his lawyer told a jury.

But defense attorney Stanley Greenberg insisted Wednesday that no matter how incompetent Miller was, he never spied for the Soviet Union.

"He is not on trial for being a perfect person or not," Greenberg said. "The question is whether he intended to betray his country."

The government launched its case Wednesday against Miller, 48, the first FBI agent ever charged with espionage. Miller is accused of passing classified documents to the Soviet Union for a promise of $65,000 in cash and gold and a gift of an expensive trenchcoat from his lover, emigre Svetlana Ogorodnikov.

Three members of Los Angeles' Russian community testified about emigre life and the anti-U.S. sentiments of Mrs. Ogorodnikov and her husband, Nikolay. More government witnesses were scheduled to take the stand today.

The Ogorodnikovs pleaded guilty to conspiracy in June and were sentenced to prison. Mrs. Ogorodnikov may testify against Miller.

Greenberg described his client as undisciplined, overweight, of low intelligence and out of his element in the FBI.

"If you picture Ralph Kramden without the humor, you've got it," he said, referring to the blustering bus driver played by Jackie Gleason in the 1950s TV series, "The Honeymooners."

Miller sat with his back to the packed courtroom as his lawyer spoke. He did not flinch as Greenberg pointed and said, "We all know what an FBI agent looks like, and he was not it."

U.S. Attorney Robert Bonner earlier had portrayed Miller as a vulnerable agent lured by Mrs. Ogorodnikov with money and sex.

Greenberg told jurors they would have to sort out the evidence and decide whether Miller was attempting to become a spy for the Soviets or trying to become a double agent in order to help the FBI.

Greenberg, suggesting Miller's motive for his liaison with Mrs. Ogorodnikov, said the agent decided to launch "a dangle operation," depicting himself as recruitable in order to fulfill his dreams of penetrating the Soviet intelligence network and redeem his disastrous career.

"By the 1970s, Mr. Miller was a legend in the FBI and not the J. Edgar Hoover kind," Greenberg said. "He was frequently disciplined for failing to follow rules and for his weight...The truth is he was out of his element from beginning to end."

Greenberg read from Miller's 20-year FBI file, which included entries about his censure for leaving his credentials in a supermarket and an incident in which he left his keys in the door to the FBI building and wandered away.

"The evidence will show he was of a far lower level of intelligence than was required by the job, he had a lower level of sophistication, a lower level of skills," the attorney said. "He was not disgruntled; if he was anything, it was frustrated. He had the desire. What he did not have was the ability or the discipline."

Miller confessed his affair with the Soviet woman to his supervisor, P. Bryce Christensen, on Sept. 27, 1984. Bonner suggested that Miller knew he was being followed by the FBI.

Greenberg told jurors that in four days of intensive interrogation, Miller never admitted to spying.

FBI agents recall surveillance leading to John Walker's arrest at brother's trial

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — FBI agents picked through trash to find a package they believed contained classified material intended for the Soviet Union and then hid nearby as the alleged leader of a spy ring returned, an agent testified.

The May 19 surveillance that led to the arrest of John A. Walker Jr. was described Wednesday during the espionage trial of his brother, Arthur J. Walker, who authorities say was recruited into the ring by John.

However, FBI Agent Bruce Brahe II testified that Arthur Walker never was seen near the drop site.

Agents in a plane watched John Walker as he drove from his Norfolk home to Montgomery County, Md., FBI Agent Francis McKenzie testified. Walker drove in circles and stopped several times along the road, apparently trying to detect surveillance, McKenzie said.

Walker stopped twice at a spot where he dropped something, he said.

Arthur and John Walker and John's son, Michael L. Walker, are charged with spying, along with Jerry W. Whitworth. The others face trial later.

After John Walker left the area, FBI agents searched through trash for the material he had dropped, Brahe said. "In every way, it looked like a Soviet drop site. I had a feeling that's where it was going to be."

Most of the trash was insect-infested and damp, but Brahe said he spotted one dry grocery bag. Inside, agents found empty bottles, a soap wrapper and a package wrapped in a white garbage bag.

The package was taken to an FBI headquarters and four agents hid themselves about 10 feet from the alleged drop site, Brahe said.

Agents also followed a van that returned to the scene twice, he said. The driver got out and scanned the area, apparently checking for the package.

John Walker was arrested at a motel early the next morning.

Under cross-examination, Brahe said he did not see Arthur Walker there.

Arthur Walker is charged with seven counts of espionage. Prosecutors say he took classified Navy ship repair documents from VSE Corp., his employer, and photographed them for his brother, who sold the information to the Soviets.

The documents were a repair manual for the USS Blue Ridge, one of the Navy's two amphibious command ships, and repair reports from the Navy's five amphibious assault ships from 1977 to 1980.

Navy officers testified that the documents contain information that could be used to help sink Navy ships and reveal the readiness of the U.S. fleet.

The repair manual, known as a damage control book, could show the Soviet Union how much damage the ship can sustain and still remain afloat, said Capt. Robert Johnson, who commanded its sister ship, Mount Whitney, for two years.

"It gives you a good idea of how many weapons you're going to need to inflict damage upon the ship to sink it," he said. The two ships carry fleet commanders and have more sophisticated communications equipment than other Navy vessels, he said.

Capt. E.D. Sheafer, a Navy intelligence specialist, said the classified data could help the Soviets confirm the accuracy of ship information they can gather from unclassified sources.

"I'd give my eyeteeth to have the readiness of any class of Soviet ships in a four-year period," he said, adding that the Soviets had lagged behind the United States in developing amphibious vessels, but have begun deploying very sophisticated amphibious ships in recent years.

Congressmen backing Iranian group unaware of its alleged terrorist links

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than a dozen members of Congress who signed letters or statements endorsing an Iranian resistance movement were unaware the State Department had labeled the group a terrorist, anti-American organization, according to interviews with lawmakers and their staffs.

The names of 22 House members appeared in a full-page advertisement in The New York Times on July 28 as supporters of the People's Mujahedeen Organization of Iran, the National Council of Resistance and its leader, Massoud Rajavi.

The State Department says the Mujahedeen — sometimes spelled Mojahedin — took a measure of responsibility for the holding of 52 U.S. hostages in the American Embassy in Tehran for 444 days and was responsible for killing at least six Americans in Iran. The organization denies the State Department evaluation of its role in the cloudy world of Iranian politics.

Within the past 13 months, lawmakers of both parties, including Sens. Gary Hart, D-Colo., Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., have written messages of support addressed to Rajavi.

Generally, the letters refer to the need to restore democracy in Iran and end human rights violations.

An aide to Kennedy, who spoke on condition of anonymity, called his letter of June 27, 1984, "a mistake...it wasn't checked carefully enough."

Rep. Mervyn Dymally, D-Calif., one of those whose name appears in the advertisement, says he was duped into sending out a "Dear Colleagues" letter and a petition in support of Mojahedeen and Rajavi.

Dymally said his initial involvement came after some well-dressed and articulate Iranian students visited his office and asked his help.

The students portrayed themselves as peace-seeking, freedom-loving exiled Iranians trying to expose the ruthlessness of the Ayatollah Khomeini regime, Dymally said.

Before learning more, Dymally circulated among colleagues the letter and a petition accompanied by a statement, which talked of the rise of the Iranian resistance and mentioned Rajavi by name.

"The purpose of the petition is to allow members of congresses and parliaments to indicate their support for resistance of the Khomeini regime," Dymally's letter said.

Once apprised of the State Department's view, Dymally said he disavowed the material, adding he was "very distressed" to learn his name was on the advertisement.

But another congressman who signed a statement of support, Bob Wise, D-W.Va., questions the State Department's view on the Mujahedeen, his spokeswoman says.

"He will support any resistance to Khomeini and he's not sure the State Department is right," the aide, Erin Splaine, said. "We're asking for more information from both parties."

Richard W. Murphy, assistant secretary of state for Near East and South Asian affairs, told a House committee on July 24 that the organization "has sort of been masquerading under a cover which attracted a surprising amount of support, judging by some letters from Congress."

He added: "During the 1970s the Mujahedeen were at the forefront of the opposition to the shah and were the Iranian group most engaged in anti-U.S. and anti-Western terrorism. In this period they assassinated at least six Americans in Iran...

"The Mujahedeen took a measure of credit for the prolonged holding of American diplomats as hostages, advocated putting them on trial as spies and staged a large demonstration in Tehran in January 1981 protesting their release," Murphy testified.

He said the group is leftist, and poses as freedom fighters. The department describes the National Council of Resistance as a "Paris-based front dominated by the PMOI (the Mujahedeen.)"

The National Council of Resistance denied the allegations.

Invasion sends City Hall workers 'flea-ing' building

LAKE MARY, Fla. (AP) — Operations are back to normal following an invasion of sand fleas that closed City Hall earlier this week.

The bugs, stirred up in a crawl space under the one-story structure by a worker, swarmed into the building, causing the city's seven full-time employees to slap and scratch until they could stand it no longer.

"They were just hopping around all over the place," said Brenda Cobb, a planning and zoning clerk.

Convicted killer considered 'one of the family' by unknowing couple

GREENSBURG, Pa. (AP) — Convicted killer and master burglar Bernard Welch enjoyed three months of freedom after a prison escape, deluding an elderly couple who considered him "one of the family," until he was snared by a parking violation, authorities say.

Welch, who escaped May 14 from a Chicago prison where he was serving a 143-year term for the murder of a prominent Washington, D.C., cardiologist, was arrested Wednesday by police checking on an illegally parked car.

"I don't think it was Bernard Welch's finest hour," said Associate Deputy Attorney General Jay Stephens, who prosecuted Welch in 1981 for the 1980 murder of Dr. Michael Halberstam.

Halberstam was shot outside his home after he surprised Welch during a burglary there. He ran Welch down with his car before collapsing from the bullet wound.

Halberstam's widow, Elliott, said Wednesday night she was "exhilarated" by Welch's capture.

"I could not stand the idea of his being out there somewhere, being free after my husband had given his life to catch him," she said in a telephone interview from her Washington, D.C., home.

Her brother-in-law, journalist David Halberstam, said from his home in Nantucket, Mass., "Everybody in the family is relieved that he's been picked up. After what we went through as a family, we're glad there's less possibility it will happen to another family."

A sullen, unshaven Welch was led in shackles from the Westmoreland County Detention Center on Wednesday and taken to the federal penitentiary in Marion, Ill., the most secure facility in the federal prison system, said Howard Safir, assistant director for operations of the U.S. Marshals Service.

Authorities say they believe the 45-year-old Welch had been pulling burglaries while living a quiet life in a rented room in this Pittsburgh suburb. The couple who had rented the room in their home to him since mid-June were stunned.

"He was a clean-cut fellow, very respectable," said Richard Pershing, 65. "He'd sit on the front porch like one of the family."

"He was polite, gentle, courteous," Janet Pershing, also 65, agreed.

Welch said he had been working at an airport in Saudi Arabia for two years and that he had returned to the United States "to take it easy for a year before heading back," Pershing said.

Thomas Tridico, chief of detectives for Westmoreland County, said a caller suggested Tuesday that police check an illegally parked BMW. The car had been stolen in Milwaukee and its license plates had been stolen in Carlisle.

Budget hardly resembles plan Reagan put forth

WASHINGTON (AP) — The budget Congress passed last week hardly resembles the proposal President Reagan sent to Capitol Hill last winter, and falls short of the expectations of legislators who hoped for a sizable reduction in the government's flood of red ink.

"Yes, the budget resolution that we got was not as much as we had hoped," Reagan told reporters earlier this week, looking back over the seven-month budget struggle.

Just hours after budget negotiators reached agreement on a compromise package Aug. 1, the House approved it on a 309-119 roll call and the Senate followed 67-32, clearing the way for a month-long congressional recess.

However, the lopsided margins of passage in each chamber disguised the topsy-turvy, tortured history of the budget this year.

The blueprint Congress adopted — it does not require the president's signature but only serves as a guide as legislators make their spending decisions — calls for spending $967.6 billion in the 1986 fiscal year that begins Oct. 1.

The Senate calculated that the plan contained $55.5 billion in deficit-reduction recommendations, while the House, using slightly different projections, fixed the savings at $57.4 billion.

Next year's deficit was estimated at $171.9 billion by both chambers.

Three-year savings are $276.2 billion by Senate reckoning and $279.6 billion using House figures. The budget writers estimated that the deficit by 1988, with all the suggested savings, would be just under $113 billion.

However, the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office, using less optimisitic estimates of the economy's performance, said the estimated savings for next year would amount to only $39 billion. The congressional economists also pegged the 1988 deficit at about $162 billion.

The Reagan administration and congressional leaders began the year with a dual goal of enacting at least $50 billion in savings for next year and settling on a plan that would cut deficits by more than half — to less that $100 billion — by 1988.

On Feb. 4, Reagan sent Congress a $973.7 billion budget that called for eliminating, cutting or freezing a wide range of domestic spending programs to pare the deficit to $180 billion next year and $144.4 billion by 1988.

Reagan called for terminating programs such as the Small Business Administration, Amtrak, Urban Development Action Grants, the Jobs Corps.

But even before Reagan submitted his budget, Senate Republican leaders, saying the president's anticipated plan was too strong on domestic spending cuts and too lenient with the Pentagon, began drafting their own package.

Dangerous path

A caller to the Reporter-Telegram earlier this week voiced a complaint a great many people may be sharing of late: In all the news coverage of this week's 40th anniversary of the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, Japan, little mention has been made of the reason for the bombing or of the earlier attack on Pearl Harbor in which about 3,700 people died.

The woman was upset — understandably — because of the overemphasis on America's bombing of Japan and the overwhelming lack of concern for Japan's earlier bloodthirsty attack on Pearl Harbor. The attack on Pearl Harbor, in fact, seems practically forgotten in the current discussion.

Her anger has to be appreciated by anyone who lived through the bombing of Pearl Harbor and those who have been subjected to the shallow denunciations of this nation by those too unappreciative of the blessings of this country to fully understand that the liberties they flaunt so recklessly are not shared worldwide. It's obvious that those seeking peace sometimes allow themselves to be blinded to the harsh realities of the world — that certain nationalities do not enjoy the blessings of liberty and certain leaders seek domination rather than peaceful co-existence.

Yes, the United States did propel the world into the Atomic Age in 1945 when the two Japanese cities were bombed, but to remove that act from the perspective of history is to strip away the humanity of the act.

Thousands died in the bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, but it's more than likely that thousands more would have perished had the war with Japan been allowed to continue, and millions of American lives had already been lost in World War II.

Yes, women and children and old people died in the bombing of the two cities, but when the world is at war — as it was in 1945, with Hitler having attempted to subjugate all of Europe — and with the German scientists having been close to development of similar weapon technology, little rationality existed for agonizing over the deaths of innocents among the Japanese attackers. The United States turned to the atomic bomb as a way out of a war in which more than 55 million people had died worldwide.

That's the problem with so-called "peace movements." They fail to consider history from a valid perspective; they place today's technology into yesterday's conflicts and arrive at ways — presumably — to avoid what was once viewed as necessary actions. Necessary, at least, if liberty and freedom are to be preserved for future generations in a world still snarled with stabs at conquest.

Pearl Harbor must never be forgotten and for more reasons than the 3,700 or so people who died there needlessly. America was attacked, bravely withstood the attack and learned a number of valuable lessons.

It's interesting to consider where the world might be had the atomic bomb never been invented. But it was. That technology exists — worldwide now — and thoughts of that "other" tomorrow are only that, daydreams.

Peace is fine, but an elusive goal and peace is not a one-way street. It takes two parties — two nations — to make peace a reality. If one nation does not seek that peace, the process is flawed from the outset. Then it becomes a matter of survival. To survive — to save lives where possible — man will sometimes resort to weapons which lead the world down new and frightening roads.

Yet those in the peace movement seem to be forgetting the lesson of Pearl Harbor and that, too, is a dangerous path on which to tread.

Another View:
The terrorism ploy

In the wake of the TWA hijacking in Beirut, the Reagan administration has decided to get tough, not on terrorists in the Mideast, but on its old foes in Nicaragua, the Sandinistas.

Officials do not deny news reports that the United States was prepared to launch an air strike against Nicaraguan installations in retaliation for the murder of four U.S. Marines by leftist rebels in El Salvador. "If we can identify to our satisfaction the existence of a base where terrorist acts are being planned," said Secretary of State George Shultz, "I don't have any heartburn about trying to do something about it."

If the dangers of such actions do not register in the administration's gut, it ought to set off alarms in congressional heads. Turning the conflicts in Central America into a blinkered holy war against terrorism is a recipe for deeper U.S. military involvement.

The administration's case against Nicaragua as a fountainhead of terrorism is both simple and unconvincing: Nicaragua provides political, military and moral support to Salvadoran guerrilla groups; one of the rebel groups commits acts of urban terrorism against Americans; therefore, Nicaragua is a terrorist nation.

But there is no evidence that Nicaragua controls the rebels it succors any more than the United States controls the contras to whom it has supplied aid and encouragement. The four main Salvadoran rebel groups are often at odds over tactics and remain fiercely independent. The terror tactics adopted by some rebels recently have drawn criticism from within the rebel camp. The Sandinistas can be blamed for having the wrong friends, but to place the responsibility for Salvadoran leftist terror at Managua's door is unfounded.

Even if the terror in El Salvador could be pinned on Nicaragua, a policy of U.S. military retaliation against the Sandinistas would be suspect on pragmatic grounds. If the U.S. could bomb Nicaragua to retaliate for terrorist acts in El Salvador, on what basis could it object to Nicaragua's bombing contra bases in Honduras to retaliate for the anti-Sandinista's own terror campaign? A policy of retaliation invites a Central American war without limit.

Terrorism is a legitimate worry. But the administration's behavior aims less at combatting terrorism than at increasing public and congressional support for its campaign against Nicaragua itself. This terrorism ploy not only risks deeper U.S. military involvement in that crusade but threatens to muddy the debate over the proper response to terrorists around the world.

JACK ANDERSON
Free food programs wasteful

WASHINGTON — While people are starving in Africa, rodents and thieves have been getting fat on a 4-year-old federal program intended to supply the needy with surplus food.

Jack Anderson

Agriculture Department investigators have learned that at least $1 million worth of food either spoiled or disappeared in just four states audited by the department. Here are some of the abuses uncovered by the investigators:

— In Chicago, six truckloads of Cheddar cheese worth $100,000 had to be carted to the dump; it had turned rotten because a malfunctioning refrigerator truck couldn't make deliveries. At the same charity $275,000 worth of honey, flour, nonfat dry milk and processed cheese simply disappeared. The Agriculture Department dropped the charity from the program.

— In Detroit, butter, cheese and turkeys worth $210,582 spoiled when a refrigerated warehouse broke down. City officials had known for two months that the warehouse wasn't working right. At another warehouse, investigators found that rats and water had contaminated $68,121 worth of dry food. An additional $139,571 worth of food was unaccounted for, bringing the loss by two city-run programs to 568,195 pounds of food worth about $418,275.

"We found that the city of Detroit ordered commodities in excess of its needs and did not provide adequate warehousing for these commodities," the auditors reported.

— In Texas, weevils and rats ruined quantities of flour and cornmeal, while careless workers drove front-loaders through honey dripping from broken jars. Some labor unions in charge of distribution in El Paso gave food only to union members, while some church groups in the area also screened food applicants, in violation of regulations.

In Floydada, the investigators turned up $75,537.99 worth of invalid or exaggerated claims for reimbursement. The questionable claims included $39,367 for salaries and $29,057 for repairs and insurance — none of it supported by proper documentation, according to the auditors.

— In Mississippi, the investigators discovered that $81,925 worth of food had disappeared from trucks or distribution points in one six-month period. The auditors couldn't pinpoint the cause of the loss, but said it could have been anything from pilferage to sloppy bookkeeping.

Things will get worse in October, meanwhile, if Congress accepts the Reagan administration's proposal to cut off $50 million now provided to the states for refrigeration, accounting oversight and other costs of fighting waste and fraud. State officials predict that many of the charities that now distribute the free food will be forced to drop out of the program if they don't get the federal money.

According to Eliot Zirkle of the Texas Food Bank, about 70 percent of the volunteer food-distribution groups in Dallas, Houston and San Antonio have said they will drop out of the program if the federal government stops paying administrative expenses. And Joanne Morrisey of the Massachusetts Bureau of Nutrition said half of that state's volunteer food groups would go out of business without federal funding.

Both officials told our reporter Stewart Harris they doubt that their state governments will come up with the money for storing and distributing the free food — about $3.2 million in Texas and $859,000 in Massachusetts.

CONSUMER REPORT — It was unscrubbed tapes, not unshredded documents, that did in President Nixon and his co-conspirators in the Watergate scandal. But that hasn't stopped a New York company, Shredex, from giving its latest paper shredder the whimsical name, "Watergate Top Secret." Company president Mike Falco said he just wanted to give his customers "something to smile about" as they feed company secrets into the machine to keep them out of the hands of rival outfits' spies. In addition to industrial firms, Falco said, Shredex customers include the CIA and other government agencies.

MINI-EDITORIAL — It may be hard for those of you "outside the Beltway" to sympathize, but Washington is not always the best of all possible worlds. To make life bearable, we denizens of the nation's capital spell relief G-O-S-S-I-P, and for the last 10 years the nonpareil supplier of our daily titillation fix has been the columnist Diana McLellan, sometimes known as "The Ear." Imagine our dismay, then, when Diana announced that she is retiring from the gossip field for a "respectable" job on a magazine. Washington will be a sadder, no wiser and far stuffier place without Diana's witty needle puncturing the pompous. We'll miss her.

GEORGE F. WILL
Stockman book won't be steamy

WASHINGTON — Nothing since the death of Napoleon has been so pleasing in so many ways as the fact that an informal auction among publishers has produced the hilarious result of a $2.5 million contract from Harper & Row for David Stockman's memoirs. He deserves the money as deferred compensation. Government service has been costing him $1 million a year in salary forgone. And he needs it. His current occupation — househusband — pays poorly.

George F. Will

When I called to congratulate him, he had just finished the morning feeding of Rachel, age three months. Rachel's mother, Jennifer, is carrying the family until dad goes back to work for Salomon Brothers. That investment-banking firm will pay him handsomely, but in just 12 years Rachel will need an orthodontist. In 18 years she will need college tuition, which may then be $250,000 a year, if the monster deficits stretching "as far as the eye can see" (Rachael's father's words) produce proportionate inflation.

Stockman once was, like some other Reaganite intellectuals, a keeper of Karl Marx's flame, in this sense: He subscribed to an Economic Interpretation of History. He believed that economic calculation — rationality — rules the world. Reasonable measurements of marginal utility make the world go 'round. So, clever policies should cause economic variables to vary in ways certain to alter mass behavior in predictable ways and enhance the wealth of nations.

Now Stockman is the beneficiary of an outbreak of economic irrationality among publishers. Their animal spirits — the heat of the chase, the lust to win — resembled the bidding for free-agent athletes that has afflicted baseball.

The publishers' behavior reveals something of the social soil in which the publishing houses are rooted, something of the provincialism of midtown Manhattan. The publishers probably assume his book will be a vinegary exercise in settling scores and spilling beans, brimful of bitterness and "inside" stories.

Manhattan's intelligentsia, marinating in its animosities, takes all disagreements passionately and personally. Washington is different, and the difference is not the lassitude of cynicism. The difference is, in part, a reflection of this axiom about academic politics: Bitterness is inversely proportional to the stakes. Also, an attractive aspect of professional politicians is their emotional equilibrium.

Arthur Balfour wrote to a friend: "I dined last night with the Asquiths, and Asquith and I had a rather sharp passage in the House (of Commons) after dinner. I felt a mild awkwardness in replying to a man in the strength of his own champagne! I did it all the same, and with considerable vigor." Stockman's readers will find a similar goodwill, which reflects his understanding that in contemporary government honest mistakes are more important than dishonorable motives.

His book will be valuable as a study of intellectual chemistry — what happens to ideas in the heat and pressure of the political crucible. But it will not be a page-turner full of steamy "inside" stories. In Washington, the "inside" story is often less interesting and usually less important than what is done in full view. Besides, prudential and ethical considerations will combine to produce in Stockman a seemly reticence.

He is 38 and might be — I hope he will be — in the Cabinet in the year 2015. He will not now want to betray confidences by revealing conversations that occurred when the participants were assuming that there was memoirist on duty in the room.

What about "the public's right to know"? More often than not, that incantation is less a thought than a substitute for thinking. It gives writers an easy conscience about behavior that is, for them, fun and profitable. A right to know should be related in some way to a need to know, and an appetite is not necessarily a need. The public does need good government, which depends on candor in private councils. Such candor will be a casualty if frenzied competition among publishers for Washington memoirs produces an Economic Law of History Writing: As contracts become astronomic, discretion becomes a drug on the market.

It used to be said that best-sellers were about animals or medicine or the Civil War — ideally, "I was Lincoln's Vet." Today Stockman's $2.5 million title should be, "The OMB Diet for Thin Thighs." A long title, summing up four long years, might be: "How Rosie Scenario Fell Off Her Trojan Horse When It, Too, Stopped to Feed at the Public Trough." A short title, telling the full story of the meeting between budget-balancing theory and political practice would be: "Oops!"

ART BUCHWALD
Kremlin watchers see it all!

EDITOR: While Art Buchwald is on vacation we reprint some columns from the past.

A diplomatic reception in Moscow has tremendous significance, not only because of the good food and free liquor, but because it is where most foreign observers learn what is going on in the Soviet Union.

Art Buchwald

I attended a large diplomatic cocktail party at one of the foreign embassies recently, and I was amazed at what the professional Kremlin-watchers got out of it.

This is how the conversation went later on in the evening, when everyone was comparing notes:

"Did you notice Golvosky arrived after Kubinsky?"

"That's very interesting, because at the Fourth of July party at the American Embassy Kubinsky arrived after Golvosky."

"And at the Fourteenth of July party at the French Embassy they came together."

"Very significant. By the way, did anyone see Petrov shake hands with Puchinsky?"

"I was going to call that to your attention. It's strange that Petrov should shake hands with Puchinsky when the last time they met, Petrov only nodded at Puchinsky."

"Perhaps Puchinsky's star is rising in the Presidium."

"Or maybe Petrov's star is falling."

"I think we have overlooked the real significance of the handshake. It is not that Petrov shook hands with Puchinsky, but Puchinsky's wife did not talk to Petrov's wife."

"Are you sure?"

Of course I'm sure. Puchinsky's wife turned her back on Petrov's wife to say hello to Bolgonov's wife. It was a deliberate snub."

"That's very interesting. But to me the most important thing that happened at the reception was that Bolgonov was drunk and spilled vodka all over Marshal Igorvich's uniform."

"What is so important about that?"

"Igorvich was the one who apologized."

"Bolgonov's star must be rising faster than we thought."

"No doubt about it. Marshal Igorvich even went and got Bolgonov another vodka."

"Did Bolgonov spill anything else on Igorvich's uniform?"

"No, but he stepped on the Marshal's foot and wouldn't get off it."

"I wonder if this means they're going to make Bolgonov Minister of Defense?"

"He's obviously in for something big. I've never seen Marshal Igorvich allow someone to stand on his foot for so long."

"Did anyone see Zubelkin at the party?"

"You mean the Tashkent poet who was ousted from the Writer's Union for writing a poem attacking the traffic policemen on Gorsky Street?"

"That's the one. He's been rehabilitated and is now permitted to write anything he wants, provided he doesn't ask anyone to publish it."

"The Writer's Union must be going through one of their liberal periods again."

"I don't know if this means anything, but Kavasky spoke to me."

"That is significant because Kavasky never speaks to foreigners. What did he say?"

"I asked him about the Polish problem and he replied, 'I'm sorry, I never speak to foreigners.'"

"Did anyone notice that Gogol spilled vodka on Mutiken?"

"It means nothing. Everyone in Moscow spills vodka on Mutiken. He's become a regular bar rag."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 8, 1974, President Richard M. Nixon announced in a nationally broadcast address that he would resign his office at noon the following day. Nixon's decision to resign followed further erosion of his remaining support in the wake of new revelations connected to the Watergate scandal. Nixon said he "deeply regretted" any injuries he had caused and said some of his judgments had been wrong.

On this date:

In 1973, Vice President Spiro T. Agnew branded as "damned lies" reports that he had taken kickbacks on government contracts in Maryland. He vowed not to resign.

NATION IN BRIEF

Bomb dropped on MOVE had military explosive in it

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The police bomb dropped on MOVE headquarters May 13 contained C-4, a powerful military explosive that police commanders had earlier denied was part of the device, a top city official says.

City Managing Director James S. White said in a statement Wednesday that the information about the makeup of the bomb "was discovered as part of the ongoing police investigation" and was reported to him by Police Commissioner Gregore Sambor.

Sambor and other city officials had repeatedly said the bomb contained only Tovex TR-2, an underground mining explosive. Sambor, asked May 14 if C-4 had been used, replied: "It was not."

The Philadelphia Inquirer reported today that C-4, a plastic explosive, is about 80 percent more powerful than an equivalent quantity of Tovex when detonated above ground. C-4 also generates more heat, the newspaper reported.

White said the C-4 "was included in the explosive charge by the individual officer without the knowledge of his superiors or the police commissioner."

A city fire marshal's report last month concluded the bomb triggered the fire that resulted in 11 deaths and the loss of 61 homes. The fire left 270 people homeless and caused $10 million in damage.

White House aids rebels

NEW YORK (AP) — White House officials have circumvented Congress and are giving direct advice to rebels fighting to topple the Nicaraguan government, according to a report in today's New York Times.

Reagan Administration and National Security Council officials have given the rebels advice ranging from tactical influence on military operations to raising money from private sources, the Times reported, quoting senior administration and Congressional officials.

The administration began giving the advice last year after Congress declined President Reagan's bid to give them military aid, the report said.

Congress has since voted to give the rebels, known as Contras, $27 million in non-military assistance.

Congressmen quoted by the Times said that the National Security Council apparently has not acted illegally.

Jenco 'release' false

JOLIET, Ill. (AP) — Relatives of the Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, the Roman Catholic priest held hostage in Lebanon for seven months, say they're still hopeful he may be released soon, despite false reports that he had been freed.

The family waited Wednesday for the State Department to confirm or deny a report that five Americans held hostage in Lebanon had been released.

Earlier, a Kuwaiti newspaper, quoting an unnamed Western diplomat, had reported five American and three French hostages would be released Wednesday.

But both reports appeared to be false.

Jenco's brother, John, said from New York Wednesday that he had been told the five Americans were en route to Damascus, Syria. He was in New York to meet with with officials of Catholic Relief Services, the agency his brother worked with in Lebanon.

Is romance sound's source?

SAUSALITO, Calif. (AP) — A school of romantic, albeit noisy, fish are believed responsible for a mysterious underwater hum that has kept Waldo Point houseboaters up at night for years, scientists say.

Ten toad fish, also know as plainfin midshipman fish, were caught Tuesday by marine biologists and acoustical engineers trawling Richardson Bay.

"These critters could be it," said John McCosker, director of San Francisco's Steinhart Aquarium. He said toad fish are recognized for the "romantic hoo-hooing" that males make during mating season.

However, uncertainties remain. Six of the catch were juveniles and therefore too young to be in voice, McCosker said, adding, "We're not sure we have any singing males in our batch."

The fish will be taken to the Golden Gate Park aquarium where scientists will test their sound pattern, he said. "Maybe we can get a quartet out of the four adults."

CDC urges AIDS testing

NEW YORK (AP) — The federal Centers for Disease Control is urging patients treating themselves with serum from an unconventional cancer clinic in the Bahamas to be tested for AIDS because the serum may be contaminated.

Many patients say, however, that they will not be tested and will continue to inject themselves with serum obtained from the clinic before it was ordered closed by the Bahamian health ministry in mid-July.

The CDC said Tuesday that reproducing AIDS virus had been isolated in a sample of the serum belonging to a patient living near Tacoma, Wash.

The patient, who asked that she not be identified because she works in a hospital, told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that she would continue injecting herself with the serum.

"I just feel like I'm immune to everything at this point," she said. "I've been using the serum with the AIDS, and I don't have AIDS in my blood."

Chain saw rules dropped

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chain saw safety has been improved so much in recent years that government regulation has become unnecessary, the Consumer Product Safety Commission has concluded.

The commission cut short its normal procedures and voted 3-0 to drop its eight-year investigation of chain saw injuries on Wednesday, after being informed that more than 90 percent of the saws on the market already meet voluntary safety rules.

Scheduled only for a discussion, with the vote next week, the commissioners found themselves in agreement on ending their regulatory efforts and decided to skip the normal waiting period and act immediately.

More tainted melons found

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Pesticide-tainted watermelons have turned up again in Kern County as inspectors continue inspecting fields for traces of a chemical that sickened hundreds of people in several states last month.

All the harvested melons belonging to grower Tim Yaksitch were destroyed and the fields plowed under after inspectors found traces of aldicarb sulfoxide in melons from his land, the state Department of Food and Agriculture said.

The Yaksitch field is the only one in which the pesticide has been found recently, the department said Wednesday.

The state is inspecting and giving the green light to melons from at least 50 fields a day in a dozen counties. Aldicarb sulfoxide is blamed for making nearly 300 people sick last month, although no deaths have been reported.

VOTE FOR WATER
Saturday, August 10,
Vote FOR Water FOR Midland.

Midland Depends on Water, Lots of It!

Midland depends on water for its economic life. More than water to wash cars, water lawns or do dishes, water is essential to the quality of our life and our existing industry, plus, the key to new industry. Without water, and plenty of it, we could quite literally "dry up and blow away".

Since 1970, water used in Midland has grown to over 21 million gallons of water each day. Peak demand skyrockets to over 38 million gallons per day! In fifteen years, if we assume less than predicted growth, peak demand for water could exceed the capacity of our existing water supplies — even when they are fully developed!

The Proposition.

On Saturday, August 10, you will have the opportunity to insure the uninterrupted water future of Midland for generations — by voting FOR the last renewable water source ever to be constructed in West Texas! By voting FOR Proposition One, you will authorize the Midland City Council to contract with the Colorado River Municipal Water District to:

1. Share in the engineering and construction costs to build the Stacy Reservoir on the Colorado River near San Angelo. Our share of the cost will be 16.54% or approximately $11,125,000. We would also share the same percentage of the administrative and operating costs of the reservoir.

2. Share in the project by receiving 16.54%, or 15,000 acre feet of water from the reservoir each year. That means that by 1991, the anticipated date of water delivery from Stacy, Midland could be assured of 4.8 BILLION gallons of water each year — well into the next century.

The Costs.

How much will this water independence cost? About fifteen cents per thousand gallons. That means for an average water bill (not including sewer and trash collection) of $37.70 per month, the proposed water contract would add $2.70.

Please Vote.

The Water For Midland Committee encourages all registered Midland voters to "Vote FOR Water FOR Midland" on Saturday, August 10. Participation in this last renewable surface water resource is vital to the future of Midland.

Pd. Pol. by Water for Midland Committee, W.H. (Bill) Collyns, Treasurer, P.O. Box 1690, Midland, Texas 79702

Vote FOR Water FOR Midland Saturday, August 10.

From Staff and Wire Reports

Near record-breaking temperatures are expected to continue in the Midland area through Friday as forecasters call for a high reaching past the 100-degree mark, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Forecasters are calling for fair skies tonight with a low in the lower 70s, becoming sunny with continued hot temperatures near 101 Friday. Winds will be from the south at five to 10 mph tonight, increasing Friday to less than 20 mph.

Wednesday's high of 103 was one degree below the record set in 1964. This morning's low was 17 degrees above the 1939 record of 57.

STATE

Small planes were overturned at the Angelina County Airport by a severe storm packing hurricane-force winds that moved through the Lufkin area Wednesday night, officials said.

George Ellis, with the Federal Aviation Administration Flight Service Station, said the winds near Lufkin reached 83 mph at 6:45 p.m.

"I didnt wait around to keep watching the machine to see if they went any higher, but i don't believe they did," Ellis said.

The winds knocked out the windshield of his car and others on the parking lot, Ellis said, and damaged many airplanes.

No tornado report was issued and the weather service office in Fort Worth said the damage could have been caused by strong straight-line winds.

NATION

Thunderstorms rumbled from the Plains into Texas and rain dotted other sections of the nation today after hurricane-force winds blasted a Texas airport, damaging cars and airplanes.

A band of showers and thunderstorms stretched from eastern South Dakota and southwest Minnesota to the Texas Panhandle.

Rain also dampened sections from southern New England across the mid-Atlantic Coast states while showers and thunderstorms were scattered across the Ohio Valley and Southeast.

A cold front moving through the northern Rockies triggered thunderstorms in Montana and northern Idaho and sent gusty winds through the Northwest.

MISD guides 18,000 students enrolled in 30 schools

About 18,000 kindergarten through 12th grade students are served by Midland Independent School District's 30 schools.

Special programs include bilingual education for students with limited proficiency in English, Gifted Education in Midland (GEM), honors courses for advanced students and special education for those with physical, emotional or learning disorders.

MISD has two freshman and two senior high schools, three junior high schools and 23 elementary schools.

In addition, there is Bunche Early Childhood Development Center, which offers pre-school activities for disadvantaged 4-year-olds; Cerebral Palsy Center for handicapped children; Carver Cultural Center, which is used by GEM Students and for integration activities for children in primary grades; and Carver Occupational-Development lab for older mentally retarded students.

GEM serves more than 500 gifted students in grades three through eight. The children are pulled out of their regular classroom two days a week to attend GEM classes. The program, which begins its fifth year, includes field trips, guest speakers, investigative learning and research projects.

Honors classes, offered in the freshman and high schools, cover more material, require a higher level of abstract thinking and count more toward a student's grade point average than do regular courses.

They also provide the opportunity for students to pursue special projects working at their own pace in English, science, social studies, mathematics and foreign languages.

Enriched activities in mathematics and language arts are available to high achievers in kindergarten through eighth grade.

Midland's desegration plan primarily involves students in grades four through six. The cluster system has been in operation since 1977.

Kindergarten through third-grade students remain in their neighborhood schools. The only exception is that kindergarten students at Travis and South attend Bunche. Students in K-3 have eight desegregation activities each year, meeting youth from other schools.

Each cluster integrates three elementary schools in different economic areas. In Cluster 1, for example, all fourth grade students attend Henderson, fifth graders go to Emerson and sixth grade children attend Pease.

In Cluster 2, fourth grade students attend Jones, fifth grade classes are conducted at Bowie and sixth grade is at Milam.

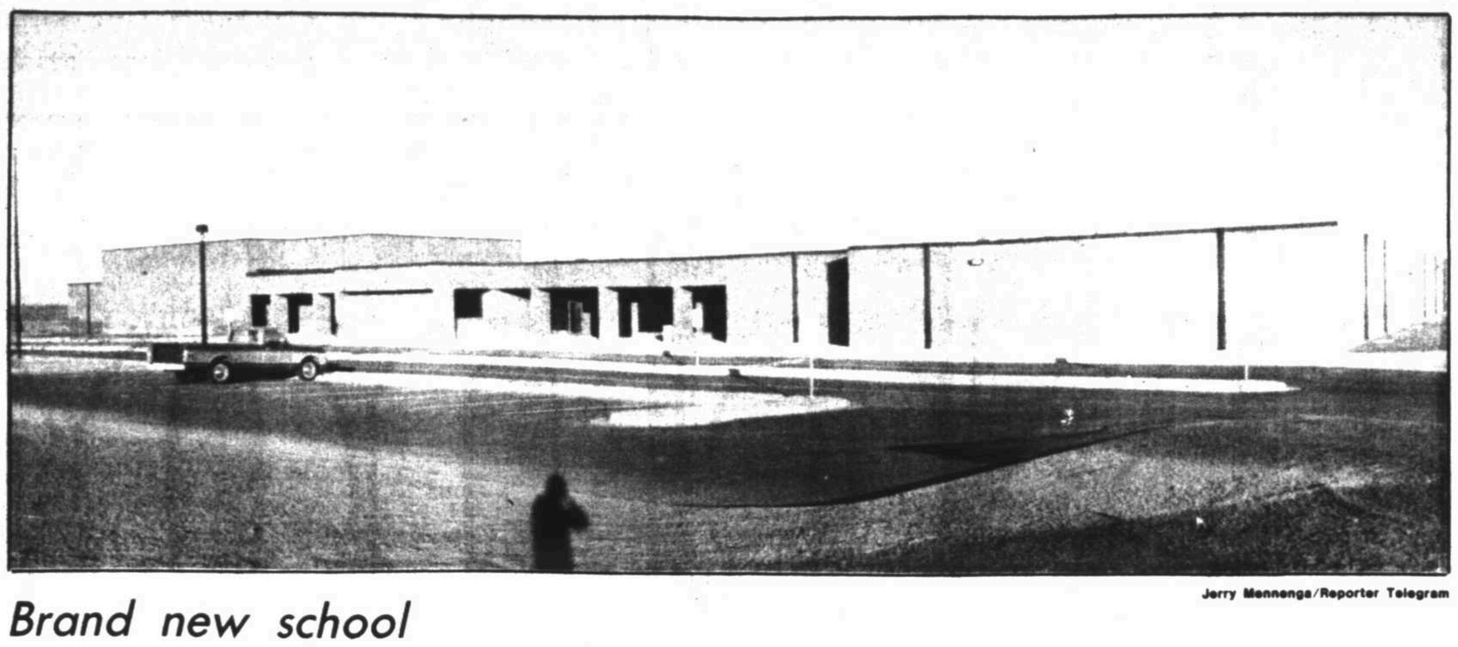

Cluster 3 fourth graders go to Burnet, fifth graders attend Fannin and sixth grade is held at South.

Fourth grade classes in Cluster 4 are conducted at Lamar, fifth grade at Rusk and sixth grade at Crockett.

In Cluster 5, fourth grade is held at Parker, fifth grade at Houston and sixth grade at DeZavala.

Cluster 6 fourth graders attend Bonham, fifth graders are bused to Scharbauer and sixth grade is at Washington.

In Cluster 7, fourth grade is at Long, fifth grade at Santa Rita and sixth grade at Travis.

UTPB offering tuition assistance

From Staff Reports

Persons concerned about the new increases in universities' tuitions and fees this fall should know that the University of Texas of the Permian Basin now offers several new programs and has expanded on many others already in existance to facilitate students burdened with financial problems.

As in the past, UTPB offers a variety of assistance programs, including scholarships, state and federally funded grants, work and loan programs.

New programs include "Emergency Tuition and Fees Loan Program," according to Dr. Ross Monahan, dean of admissions and executive director of student affairs.

The program allows a percentage of enrolled students to obtain an interest-free loan on a short term basis, but not to exceed the cost of tuition and required fees.

Texas Public Educational Grants also are being awarded to students based on financial need. Although this program has been in force for years, additional funding was authorized along with the tuition increase mandate.

Another new program, "Option to Pay Tuition by Installment," will allow students the choice to pay tuition and fees through several alternatives. Students selecting this method of payment must contact the accounting office at least two weeks prior to the semester in which they plan to enroll.

Another option available to students are various scholarships offered at UTPB. Students may qualify for a vast number of scholarships established to assist those who attend the university.

Scholarships are awarded to students on the basis of financial need and academic achievement.

Scholarships now in operation include the Jesse Jones/Mary Gibbs Jones Scholarship, available to Texas and New Mexico students who reside more than 50 miles from UTPB; The W.D. Noel "B" Scholarship, available to Ector County residents; and the W.D. Noel "A" Scholarship, awarded to students whose parents are employed by El Paso Products Company.

The Permian Honor Scholarships are awarded to students attending one of the five community colleges in the Permian Basin, and recipients must transfer to UTPB to complete their degree program.

Also availabe is the UTPB Merit Award Scholarship. This scholarship is awarded to outstanding students transferring from one of the community colleges in the Permian Basin. To be eligible, a student must attain a 3.0 grade point averagae and receive recommendation from the community college president.

The Master's Degree Scholarship is available to graduate-level students in the amount of $100 per semester for six consecutive semesters. To qualify, a sudent must enroll in at least six hours in an advanced degree program as certified by an academic advisor.

For information on these and other financial programs, call the UTPB Placement Office at 367-2354. Midlanders should call 563-2400, extension 2354.

Some students qualify for free lunches

Regular lunch prices for Midland school children are $1 in the elementary grades and $1.10 in secondary schools.

Children from families whose income is at or below the level shown on the accompanying chart may be eligible for either free meals or meals at a reduced price of 40 cents for lunch or 30 cents for breakfast.

Parents may apply for benefits at any time during the year by completing an application form and returning it to the school. Within 10 days of receiving the form, the school will notify the parent or guardian of eligibility. Also, students who were eligible for free or reduced-price meals at the close of school last year will be eligible for the same benefits during the 10-day approval period for the new application.

Application forms and a copy of the guidelines will be given to each student the first day of school. The application requires the name and social security number of all adult family members. Adults without social security numbers must indicate that they do not have one. Schools may verify the source and amount of income as well as household composition.

MC serves educational spectrum

Midland Junior College, located at 3600 N. Garfield St., offers occupational and technical programs, continuing education courses and general studies for students planning to earn bachelor's degrees.

An enrollment of 3,400 students is projected for this fall. In addition, MC expects to serve about 9,000 local residents enrolled in more than 300 adult education classes offered by the Department of Community Services.

Courses are offered during the spring and fall semester, two summer sessions and concentrated interim sessions during the Christmas holiday and after the spring semester.

Adult Basic Education programs help high school dropouts earn a General Educational Development Diploma and also teach English as a second language tuition-free. Senior citizens also may take MC courses free of charge except for fees.

Education, schedules women-oriented courses and gives assistance to women who want to continue their education. It also provides free tutoring for vocational students requiring assistance.

An early admissions program permits high school seniors to earn college credit. Some high school vocational classes are taught at MC.

MC competes in four intercollegiate sports — men's basketball, golf, tennis and women's tennis. In addition, a fulltime student activities director provides a variety of opportunities for students to participate in clubs, organizations and on-campus activities. An intramural director organizes and supervises non-varsity competition.

Jess Parrish has served as MC president for five years. A nine-member elected board of trustees sets policies and oversees operations.

Administrators for the coming year include: Don Hunt, vice president of instruction; Robert Phillips, vice president of fiscal affairs; Richard Holmes, dean of occupational-technical studies; Raymond Yell, dean of transfer-general studies; Camal Dakill, dean of students; Hosni Nabi, assistant to the president; and Dee Windsor, associate dean of students and registrar.

Four fulltime counselors provide assistance to students regarding transfer to other colleges, career choices, financial aid and other problems.

Private schools offer educational choice

Midland families seeking alternatives to the public school system have seven private schools from which to choose.

With an enrollment of about 400 students, Midland Christian School, 2001 Culver St., is one of two state-accredited private schools in the city. The 40-member staff, directed by Eddie Lee, teaches pre-school through 12th-grade classes. In addition to the regular curriculum, which meets requirements for public schools, there is daily Bible study. Classes are scheduled to begin Sept. 3.

Trinity School, 3500 W. Wadley Ave., has a pre-school program for 3- to 5-year-olds and offers classes through the ninth grade. Margaret Simmons is the head master of this state-accredited private school. Classes will begin Sept. 3 with an enrollment of about 450 students and 40 staff members.

Hillander School, 1600 W. Wadley Ave., teaches children from age 3 through the sixth grade. An enrollment of about 300 students is expected and the staff numbers 28.

St. Ann's School, 2000 W. Texas Ave., expects and enrollment of about 335 students when classes begin Aug. 29. Principal Brigid Keane directs a 28-member staff. Students range from 4 years old through the sixth grade.

Permian Basin High School, which will begin its fifth year Sept. 4, is accredited through the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools. According to director John Banfill, about 30 students in grades eight through 12 will be taught one-on-one by 14 instructors. Located at 3100 N. "A" St., the school is described as college preparatory and offers a strictly-academic curriculum.

Accelerated Christian Education is offered at Midland Baptist Temple School, 3001 N. A St. Scheduled to begin Aug. 26 with about 160 students and 11 staff members, the self-paced program covers kindergarten through 12th grades. David Pleacy is administrator.

Developmental Disability Center, 2705 W. Michigan, is in its second year of operation. It is designed for children who are developmentally delayed due to mental retardation, Down's Syndrome, learning disabilities or other disorders. Classes are offered year-round to children from 18 months to 8 years of age. Administrator Kay Bynum oversees two faculty members who prepare individual educational plans for seven students.

Back-to-school bells may ring in anxiety

By SAM HAMILTON
Copley News Service

Back-to-school bells will ring soon, signaling the return of thousands of children to the classroom.

For most, it's a time of excitement and anticipation, but for some — particularly kindergartners — it can be a time of anxiety. Leaving the security of home for the uncertainty of school can be downright frightening for a 5-year-old.

"No doubt about it," says Terry L. Maxson, manager of a child guidance clinic at a children's hospital in California. "For some 5- and 6-year-olds going off for the first time, school can be a scary place."

But Maxson says that parents, through communication, can help alleviate a child's fears for those first few days.

"If a child detects a cautious attitude on the part of the parent, the child is likely to pick it up and act accordingly. Telling him to watch out for this and to be careful about that can really make a child nervous."

The guidance officer suggests talking to the youngster about what he will be doing at school. Although parents can't predict the school program, he says they can assume it will include storytelling, painting and drawing with crayons, as well as play and rest times.

"Knowing about the thing you're going to do before you do it helps the child prepare for it," Maxson says.

Maxson also feels it is a good idea to take the child on a trip to the school before the start of the school year to acquaint the youngster with the teacher and surroundings. Many schools offer visitation programs the year before the child's enrollment or just before the start of school.

The first day of school can be traumatic for a kindergartener.

Maxson was asked if there were certain things first-time students should be told not to do. "I would be less inclined to tell a child dos and don'ts," he says, "because the teacher will be the one in charge of doing that.

"At the kindergarten level, what the teacher is trying to do is open up lots of new worlds to children...to expose them to many things they may not have heard before...to use that period for expanding the child's life and to start socializing in school."

If a child is nervous and tearful — which can be the case the first day and for several days after — the teacher is well prepared to handle the situation, says Maxson. "They (teachers) see this quite often."

If a child's anxieties continue for a long period, parents would be wise to work with the teacher to solve the problem. "That's when the teacher can be enlisted in terms of support," says Maxson, "because he often will have suggestions."

Maxson also sees the transition from elementary to junior high as an important time in a student's life.

"In elementary school, there tends to be a dependable relationship between the kids and the teachers, whereas in junior high students may have several different classes and teachers.

"Even the issue of changing clothes for physical education class can really get a lot of kids nervous."

As with younger children, we recommend that parents communicate with their kids to help alleviate any anxieties. Take them to the new school, walk around, meet some of the people there and get familiar with it."

Maxson also talked about "school phobia," when the child tries to avoid going to school in a very significant way.

"That's when parents are likely to see the child with real physical complaints...regularly complaining about headaches and stom-achaches.

"And it's not that the child is making up that he hurts. If your brain tells your stomach that you're scared and worried about something, then your stomach starts turning over.

"So, for the child, it can feel very much like he's sick."

For children experiencing problems at school, Maxson suggests the following:

— Establish a good parent-to-child line of communication. Talk about the problem.

Children can help plan brown-bag lunches

Copley News Service

For parents and children alike, back to school is a mixture of blessings and problems. But the problem of what to take for lunch need not be a study in confusion nor a monotonous parade of the "same old thing" sandwiches.

Parents who include the kids on grocery shopping trips and let them help plan and prepare lunches will find that if the kids help select the foods, they are much more likely to eat them.

Of course, there are no guarantees that once at school the carefully made nutritious lunch will not be traded for a couple of snack cakes, but it won't happen all the time and especially not when the kids themselves have made some of the choices.

Taking the kids grocery shopping may not sound like a fun trip to some parents, but it could turn into valuable mini-lessons in food planning and nutrition education for children. Imparting knowledge of food selection to avoid overweight and nutritional deficiency problems is vastly more important today with our national pastime of frenzied dieting.

Nutrition can be simplified by encouraging kids to always select their foods from the four food groups — milk and dairy products; meat, fish and fowl; fruits and vegetables, and breads and cereals. It's easy, simple and very effective. While planning lunches, it can be shown that the "empty calories" of excessive sugar will give them cavities and undesirable weight gain, and most kids are smart enough today to want to avoid them. No one wants to be overnourished with too many calories and undernourished with nutrients, but it easily can happen at any age if fatty, sugary foods make up a large part of the diet.

While sandwiches of whole grain breads and meats, fish, cheese, peanut butter or egg salad fillings are excellent choices, a variety of other snacks easily can be put together, too.

Pita bread stuffed with almost anything makes a super lunch.

'Re-entering' college students find older can mean wiser

By JOSEPH THESKEN
Copley News Service

Lynn Jenkins can empathize with students who feel apprehensive about returning to a university campus after years away from the academic life.

She followed the same path before finding her niche as a counselor in a career-planning center at San Diego State University.

"I know exactly how they feel," she said.

"I was graduated from SDSU with a bachelor's in philosophy and music. It wasn't exactly the kind of degree that made me a hot prospect on the job market, so in time I decided to go back and get a master's in counseling.

"I wasn't out of school that long — only four years — but I remember I was a little worried about how I would do in a classroom with younger students. It turned out I did just fine."

"They usually have an advantage over younger students because they have a clear idea of why they are in school. They know what they want and go after it. I'd say most are pretty assertive.

—Lynn Jenkins

Re-entering students are a growing minority on campuses across the country, Jenkins said.

Some students are seeking new careers. Others are sharpening their professional skills to win job advancements. Some go back to university life for the fun of it.

Said Beryl Brown, chairman of the re-entry advising committee of the University of California at San Diego: "It is a national trend, and it will get more pronounced as the average age of our population rises — we have more older people than we've ever had — and the number of people between 18 and 22 gets fewer and fewer."

The re-entering students have basically the same fears, Jenkins said.

"The main one is: Will I fit in? Being a mature person in a classroom with mostly younger students, how will I be able to compete?

"Since the majority of re-entry students are women, they have family concerns. If she is divorced with a growing family, who will watch the kids while she's in school? Or, if she's working, how can she fit her school schedule in with her work schedule?

"Depending upon the time that has elapsed between the first time they were in school and their return, they may worry about whether they can hack it academically. Will they be able to sit themselves down to the grind of studying difficult subjects and get good grades?"

Jenkins said re-entering students generally do quite well.

"They usually have an advantage over younger students because they have a clear idea of why they are in school," she said. "They know what they want and go after it. I'd say most are pretty assertive.

"They are motivated and, as a result, they do all right in the classroom."

Jenkins said those are reasons that counseling offices at many universities offer special programs to ease re-entering students into campus.

Most programs include a tour of the campus to acquaint the students with classroom buildings, the cafeteria, the bookstore and other points of interest.

Special care can prevent campus burglaries

By DEBRA COOPER
Copley News Service

College students often are so preoccupied with either study or social events that they neglect to protect personal property. As a result, college campuses are favorite targets for theft of everything from bicycles and jewelry to stereos and personal computers.

But a few simple steps can help prevent crime on campus, according to the Society of Chartered Property and Casualty Underwriters.

The first step is to have valuable belongings engraved with some type of identifying number. Most police departments have forms to list belonging with Operation ID, a national anti-theft program. The police department issues a number, registers it on a card file and engraves it on the item.

If stolen property is reported, the police feed the information into a computer storing information on recovered property from throughout the United States. Even if a student attends college in New Jersey and the stolen property is discovered in Alabama, the police can recover the goods and return them.

If a police department doesn't participate in Operation ID, the items still can be protected by having a Social Security number engraved on them.

Marked items are less likely to be stolen. Burglars are interested in reselling the merchandise for quick money, and those who buy and sell stolen goods will not buy goods with engraved numbers on them.

Students should keep a record of the assigned numbers, serial numbers, manufacturer's names and model numbers of each piece of property being engraved. It's a good idea to make three copies of the list, keeping one in a safe-deposit box, one at home and one at school. If goods are stolen, information about them will be ready to give to police.

Engraving property can help recover it or deter a thief, but there are other ways to make a campus room an unlikely traget for a thief:

— Don't go anywhere without locking your door, even if you live in a dorm and are going down the hall for just a minute. It's easy for someone to walk in, take money or jewelry and be gone in seconds.

— Don't store money in obvious places such as desk drawers and don't leave jewelry on top of furniture. The harder it is for a thief to find valuables, the more likely it is the intruder will give up and move on to an easier target.

— Don't tell friends where you keep money. They may mention the hiding place to the wrong person. In most cases, the criminal and victim know each other.

— Don't list your room number when advertising for rugs, books or rides.

How to survive as a parent of a college freshman

By DEBRA COOPER
Copley News Service

The freshman year at college is a trying transitional period — not only for students, but for their parents, as well.

"In some respects, the transition to college life is harder for the parents, because the older you get, the harder it often is to live with change," said Robert Mannes, the dean for student life at the University of Southern California.

But college freshmen are expecting to change, to "expand their horizons," and so often are very receptive to new ideas and philosophies to which they are exposed.

During the opening weeks of school, however, child and parent alike usually feel uneasy and suffer from "anxiety of the unknown," according to James M. Dennis, vice president for student affairs at USC. The anxiety is resolved differently, however.

"Students are unraveling a little of the unknown each day. Parents, on the other hand, may have to wait days or weeks for a few clues, depending on how reliable their offspring may be in calling or writing," Dennis said.

No matter how little parents may know about their child's activities and no matter how much they want to know, they should resist the urge to visit campus immediately.

"We advise parents to wait about two months before visiting," Dennis said. "It's important for students to experience their sense of independence, to operate freely on their own for a while."

In any case, parents generally will receive a "check-up" telephone call about a month after school has started. "A student may call, out of the blue, and ask about the dog, the car, his old bedroom and other things," Dennis explained. Sometimes, the call indicates homesickness. Generally, however, the student merely wants to touch base or to assert independence.

Other things parents can expect? Amateur psychoanalysis, probably around the Christmas holidays. "Freshmen go through Psychology 101 or they have lots of philosophical conversations with their new friends," Dennis said. "Then, over the winter break, many feel prepared to psychoanalyze their parents."

Many students also feel ready to question the family's value systems, traditions and beliefs. "Parents should be prepared to have their beliefs and values tested," Dennis said.

"Parents need to know where they stand on things," Mannes added.

A parent who is outraged by his offspring's new attitudes and views might take solace in Mannes' observation: "Students use parents as a reference point. They want to try out new ideas, but they want to try them out on someone they're confident with."

Parents also may take solace in the fact that many universities offer orientation sessions specifically for parents. While the sessions usually are not titled "How to Be a Parent to a Freshman," that's the gist of the information presented. Most of the suggestions offered during the sessions apply to parents of students living on campus, but many would apply to parents of commuter students, as well.

Especially valid is the suggestion to keep lines of communication open, no matter how strange or uncomfortable topics brought up by the freshman may be to parents.

Resist the urge, the administrators advised, to say, "That's the dumbest thing I ever heard," when your budding intellectual starts talking about a new religion, political theory or philosophical belief.

"AN EDUCATION WITHOUT MUSIC IS INCOMPLETE"

Latchkey children need guidelines

Copley News Service

National concern about children's safety is at an all-time high. With good reason — more than 6 million children care for themselves every day, before or after school, while their parents are at work. More families than ever have two working parents, so this trend seems certain to continue.

The start of the school year is a good time to take a positive, preventive approach to the safety and well-being of children. Parents can help children gain self-confidence and learn to cope with all sorts of situations, by teaching them to prevent trouble before it begins.

Following are a few simple, commonsense pointers to get parents started. Many of them are listed in the Safety Phone Book For Kids, a booklet available through the Texize Co.'s OPERATION KIDSAFE program, a national corporate program to promote child safety in terms of prevention, awareness and education.

— A child should know his full name, address and phone number, including the area code.

— In an emergency, teach a child to dial 911 or 0.

— Children should lock the door immediately after arriving home, and should call and check with parents at work.

— Key phone numbers for every child to remember: Mom and Dad at work, grandparents and at least one trusted neighbor.

— If a stranger calls when parents aren't home, a child should say, "Mom can't come to the phone right now," rather than admitting that he is home alone.

— In case of fire, children should leave the house immediately and seek help from a neighbor.

— Be sure a child's route to school is safe. Parents should walk the route with their child a couple of times to be sure. If at all possible, have him walk to school with friends, rather than alone.

"Our goal for OPERATION KIDSAFE is to teach parents and children the kinds of safety information every child should know — to protect children before they become victims," said Jack F. Mayer, president of Texize, a manufacturer of household products. "We want every family in America to know the basics of child safety, and we want to instill children with self-confidence they can rely on in an emergency."

In addition to educating children about safety, parents can make children feel better about taking care of themselves and spending time alone.

"Children need to follow simple but clearly spelled-out rules to ensure their well-being, but they also need to feel welcome and safe," said Jan Roberts, home economist for a dairy products company.

The company has developed a brochure that gives helpful tips. Some may seem very simple, but they often are overlooked, according to Ms. Roberts.

First, suggest leaving a radio or television on to create noise and make the house feel less empty. During shortened winter daytime hours, leaving lights on will ensure that a child does not enter a dark house.

Second, it's important to occupy the child's after school time while waiting for parents to arrive home. Ms. Roberts suggests planning activities with a child the night before.

"The child needs to take ownership of the ideas and feel some element of control. Planning activities together usually makes the game or project more enjoyable.

"Planning snacks the night before, and even preparing them in the case of young children, cuts down the eating of empty calories." Ms. Roberts also points out that, contrary to popular belief, snacks can be healthy supplements to children's diets rather than non-nutritious fillers.

The brochure features recipes that are easy for children to mix in a blender of help make the night before. Here's a couple to try:

— Peanut Banana Nog. Combine 2 cups milk with ¼ cup chunky style peanut butter, 1 banana and 2 tablespoons honey in blender container. Blend just until combined. Makes 2 cups.

— More-Than-A-Pudding. Prepare instant pudding mix according to package directions, using 2 cups cold milk. Spoon into individual serving dishes and chill. Before serving, have child top with any of the following: cereal flakes, granola, raisins, chopped peanuts, sliced banana or other fruit.

Year-round school helps overcrowding

Copley News Service

For more than 300,000 students across the United States this year, the fall "back-to-school" season doesn't really mean back to school.

These students attend the more than 350 schools nationwide that observe a year-round system of scheduling classes.

According to statistics compiled by the National Council on Year-Round Education, more than 50 school districts in about 15 states use a year-round system of scheduling classes in their schools.

Some educators see year-round schools as a solution to overcrowding, relying on efficient scheduling rather than costly new buildings to hold an increasing number of students. Lambert Baker, associate dean of the school of education at United States International University in San Diego, urges parents and educators to take a second look at the year-round system of education.

For most, it's a system in which students go to school for 45 days and then have 15 days of vacation, according to Baker, although other schedules are in use.

In "multi-track" systems, various classes using the same school building rotate vacation time so that the building always is in use. This is a cost-saving system — it allows increases of student population by 25 percent over the traditional system of closing schools in the summer. So when student population temporarily increases, fewer new schools need to be built.

"With the number of students peaking and then declining every seven to nine years, why would any school district (and its taxpayers) choose to build a school building they will have no use for later on?" asked Charles Ballinger, executive secretary of the National Council on Year-Round Education.

Baker also is an advocate of the "single-track" system of year-round education, in which vacations are taken by the entire school at one time, but are spread throughout the year. Schools choose this system as an educational alternative rather than a cost-saving measure.

There are mixed results about achievements by students when comparing year-round and traditional schools. There are, however, no known studies showing that year-round students have lower scores, and there are many documenting improvement, especially in reading and especially for students in the lower halves of their classes, according to the national council.

Also, according to the council, year-round schools have much less vandalism, and attendance records for both teachers and students are better. Perhaps it's easier to "tough it out" when you know there's a vacation coming soon, Ballinger suggested.

Teachers in short supply, statistics indicate

CINCINNATI (AP) — After looking at the hopes and dreams of 45,000 high school seniors, sociology professor Theodore C. Wagenaar says the future of education is in trouble.

He came to the conclusion after finding statistics showing teachers traditionally have less academic aptitude and preparation than other professionals. And he said the pool of prospective teachers may be in short supply as standards get higher.

Because educators lack prestige, reward and mobility, the Miami University professor says the supply of teachers may become critically short as bright young women — who used to dominate the field — go into more rewarding professions.

"There are a lot of people you can blame — the school boards who pay $13,000 a year, the public for not voting more money, society for not holding teachers in more prestige, education colleges, the government, you, me, everybody," says Wagenaar.

For a study for the National Center for Education Statistics, Wagenaar analyzed data on 17,000 high school students who were seniors in 1972 and 28,000 who were seniors in 1980, keeping tabs on them as they entered and completed college.

He found that education experienced a sharp decline in the periods studied. Aptitude declined in most fields between 1972 and 1980, but the drop in education was greater than most other fields. And education students completed fewer math, foreign language and science courses in high school than those in other fields.

Wagenaar said that while grades increased for most other students, they did not among those planning to be teachers. "These students are also in the bottom half for amount of homework completed," he said.

Wagenaar found a link between high school preparation and completion of a college degree; those who take more math, science and foreign language courses are more likely to complete college.

Children can help plan school wardrobe

Copley News Service

Say the words "back-to-school wardrobe" to many mothers, and you conjure up visions of crowded clothing stores, big bills and children who later won't wear the purchased items.

There are several ways, however, to avoid this. The child can help plan and select his wardrobe or parents might make the clothing themselves.

"Making your child's back-to-school clothing yourself can save a lot of money," said Janet Laue, manager of consumer fabrics for a chemical products company.

There are several ways to interest a child in planning a sensible and affordable wardrobe. Ms. Laue suggests making a game of evaluating last year's clothes and hand-me-downs. After the child has modeled potential outfits, make piles of the fashions: one to give away, one to save for a younger sister or friend, one to be altered and one to wear.

Older children can make a list of the clothing to keep, noting colors and styles and mix-and-match possibilities; younger children can draw a simple picture of each clothing item. Point out what pieces and colors will be needed to complete the back-to-school outfits.

One of the best ways to get children interested in sewing is to go shopping — the purpose need not be to buy. If the child likes to look at clothes, take her to a store — the more fashionable the better — and let her show you what she likes. Be sure to remind her to look at the price tags. Then let her choose patterns and fabrics similar in style. The joy of the bargain will be felt when she helps recreate a designer look at half the price.

Following are other advantages to sewing a wardrobe:

— Mix and match separates to create a number of outfits.

— You can pick prints appropriate to a child's size and tastes in easy-care fabrics that are machine washable and need little ironing.

— Many quality children's wear manufacturers now license their styles to pattern and fabric companies so you can recreate expensive dresses.

Optometric examinations recommended

Copley News Service

Back to school means back to homework, reading, sports and other tasks that require good vision.

According to the American Optometric Association, parents should not assume that a child who has received a quick vision screening or successfully passed an eye chart test has perfect vision. The school eye chart, a test that has been in use with few changes since 1862, measures only what the viewer can see clearly at 20 feet. Therefore, passing this test does not mean that a child has perfect vision, since no check has been made of eye coordination, near vision and other important skills.

The best way to be sure that a child has all the vision skills required is to have him undergo a complete optometric examination. The association recommends this as an annual procedure for all children beginning at age 3.

A child's comprehensive vision examination should include a review of the patient's and family's general health and eye history; an examination of the eye's interior for signs of eye disease or general health problems, and tests for a variety of vision skills. Tests for depth perception, color vision and eye-hand coordination should be included.

Aside from professional care, parents should be on the lookout for early warning signs that may indicate a child has a vision problem, according to the association. Among these signals are: a tendency to sit very close to the television set; squinting when looking at distant objects; holding reading material either very close to the nose or more than 16 inches away; irritability after a period of sustained concentration, or tilting the head or the entire body when looking at a book or other material. Complaints about an inability to see the school blackboard, headaches and aching or burning eyes should be investigated and reported to an optometrist.

The association also offers the following tips for parents to encourage children to practice good vision and eye safety habits:

— Set up a homework center.

Copley News Service

Do famous names such as Snoopy and Charlie Brown — or Papa Smurf and Smurfette — really mean anything to a kid who needs eyeglasses?

You bet they do, say spokesmen for Avant-Garde Optics and BerDel International Optics, two manufacturers of children's eye wear. In fact, they claim that such popular characters can make the difference between a child's wearing his eyeglasses or hiding them.

Eye wear designed exclusively for children is created to bring smiles rather than tears to young faces. And with over 16 percent of American children between the ages of 3 and 16 wearing eyeglasses, according to the American Optometric Association, that's a lot of smiles.

Too many parents, unfortunately, regard their child's eye wear as a necessary evil, not to be given as much consideration as the latest designer jeans or sneakers. Children's eye wear is, in fact, very important business.

"You'll find that top-quality, well-constructed frames offer the greatest comfort and durability, and with the addition of tiny cartoon characters, eye wear can be a lot of fun, as well," said Carlos Berl, executive vice president of Avant-Garde.

Well-built frames can be used through a number of prescription changes. That's why it is vital to purchase frames that appeal to a child's sense of style and comfort. Otherwise, the eyeglasses may disappear in school or at play.

For optimum use and enjoyment, Avant-Garde and BerDel recommend the following guidelines when selecting eye wear for children:

— Build up excitement and anticipation at the prospect of getting glasses. If either a parent or a sibling wears glasses, be sure to include your child when discussing, selecting or purchasing any family member's glasses.

— Look for a proper fit. Bridge size is especially important. Too narrow a bridge will pinch and leave unsightly marks; too wide a bridge will slide down the small nose of a child. Check for proper, comfortable temple length, as well.

'Let's play three'

By DICK BRINSTER
AP Sports Writer

Ernie Banks, whose motto was "Let's play two," would love the day after the strike. The American League is doing it five times.

Five double-headers were on tap today in the 14-team AL, which because of its unbalanced schedule has no other way to make up some of the games lost to baseball's second in-season strike. With a full slate of six games in the National League, the 18 games would make this one of the busiest days in major-league history.

"Let's play three," joked Boston's Bill Buckner as the Red Sox gathered in Chicago to meet the White Sox in one of those twinbills.

In other AL double-headers, East leader Toronto hosted Baltimore, Cleveland was at New York, Milwaukee was at Texas and Detroit was at Kansas City. West leader California was at Minnesota and Oakland at Seattle in single games.

In the NL, it was Cincinnati at West leader Los Angeles, East leader New York at Montreal, Pittsburgh at Philadelphia, Atlanta at San Francisco, Chicago at St. Louis and Houston at San Diego.

"NOBODY IN their right mind likes to play a double-header," Toronto Manager Bobby Cox said. "But for the fans it's a great thing to come back and see a double dip ... two games for the price of one."

With the resumption of the pennant races, the first team on the spot is Cincinnati, which trails Los Angeles by five games heading into a four-game series with the Dodgers.

"The big thing really was not losing any games with the Dodgers," Cincinnati's Nick Esasky said. "If it (the strike) went longer, we could have lost four games with the Dodgers, and we need as many games as we can to make up ground."

The Reds, trying to strengthen themselves, made a five-player deal Wednesday with Philadelphia. The key acquisition was catcher Bo Diaz, whose best season with the Phillies was 1982 when he hit 18 home runs and drove in 85 runs. The 31-year-old Diaz missed most of last season with a knee injury, losing his job to Ozzie Virgil.

"When you get the chance to get Bo Diaz, you jump at it," Cincinnati General Manager Bill Bergesch said.

SAN DIEGO'S Tim Flannery said he was glad the Padres, seven games behind the Dodgers, will get a chance to make up two postponed games at Cincinnati.

"Hey, when we go back there, we'll have Goose with us, and we'll be a better ballclub," Flannery said, referring to relief pitcher Rich Gossage, on the mend after arthroscopic knee surgery.

Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda, happy to be back on the job, said he hoped the Dodgers would sustain the momentum that carried them from fourth to first in the last two months.

"We were playing very well, playing up to our capabilities," he said.

So was Toronto, and Bobby Cox didn't want that to go to waste.

"We're nine games ahead of two other ball clubs (New York and Detroit) right now and that is something," said Cox, who added that the Blue Jays' most successful season in history would have been a disappointment had the strike ended it.

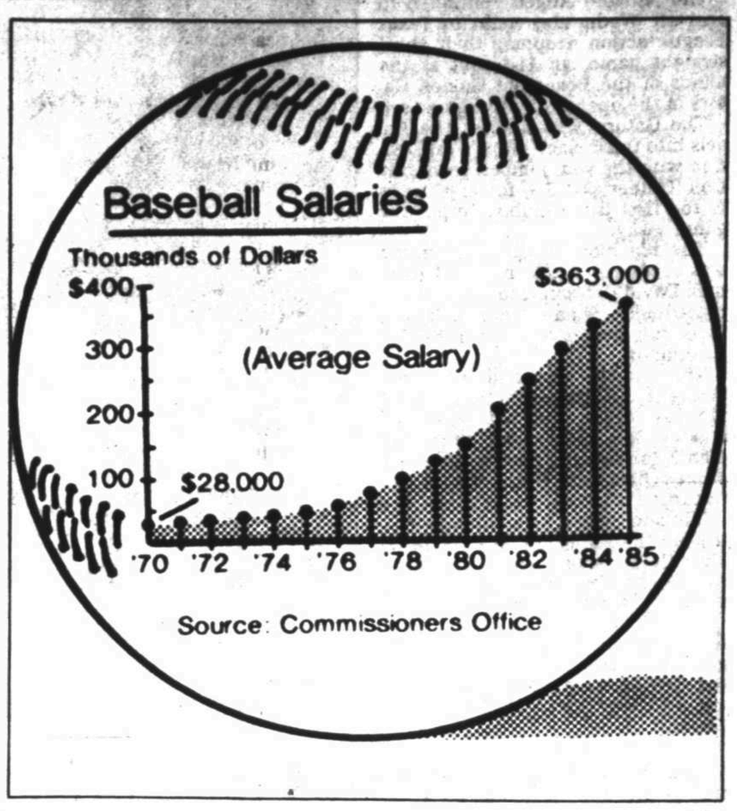

Although California leads Kansas City by five games, Angels Manager Gene Mauch was concerned with the club's pitching.

"The only thing on my mind right now is how to rearrange our pitching rotation, starting with who we're going to use tomorrow night in Minnesota," Mauch said Wednesday. Ron Romanick, 13-4, got the nod.

IN THE NL East, the hot Mets, who lead the slumping St. Louis Cardinals by a half-game, were anxious to get started again.

"We're back in business. Who's pitching?" Manager Davey Johnson said with a laugh. "Is it Doc's turn again?" he said, referring to Dwight Gooden, who has fashioned a 17-3 record.

The end of the strike also means a continuation of torrid races for individual honors and the pursuit of some milestones.

Big hitters ready to repeat Arnie's glory

PGA Championship

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

DENVER — The 67th PGA Championship at Cherry Hills Country Club might open with a long-range artillery barrage of tee shots Thursday at the 346-yard, par-4 first hole as the big hitters attempt to reach the green and duplicate Arnold Palmer's famous shot a quarter of a century ago.

Palmer, then 30 years old, opened the final round of the 1960 U.S. Open by driving the green and two-putting for a birdie 3. He went from there to a six-under-par 65 and his only U.S. Open championship.

Palmer, now 55, said Wednesday, "Just for old time's sake, I may use the driver there — at least in the first round."

Greg Norman and Seve Ballesteros are among the big young hitters who said they would probably go for it each day of the PGA Championship, which is the last of the season's four major golf tournaments in men's professional golf.

No one attempted to drive the first hole during the 1978 U.S. Open at Cherry Hills. The U.S. Golf Association, which conducts the Open, decided to have a new tee built more than 50 yards back and left of the "Palmer" tee, making the opening hole a 399-yard test with a dogleg left.

The Professional Golf Association of America, which runs the PGA Championships, decided to return to the "Palmer" tee this week. So once again No. 1 at Cherry Hills is a straight par-4 hole reachable with a huge drive from the high tee down to the small green. And the golfers are playing more than a mile above sea level, where balls travel considerably farther than normal.

NORMAN, AN Australian, said, "Go for it? Why not. A faint heart never won anything. I've hit a 3-wood 300 yards easily in Switzerland where we play this high, and I hit a driver 400 yards at Sun City in South Africa, which is also about a mile high."

Ballesteros, the Spaniard who has two Masters victories, said, "I'll go every day for it. Norman is longer than I am. But I'll try."

Lee Trevino, the defending champion, said he did not intend to go for the tiny target.

Fuzzy Zoeller, the 1984 U.S. Open champion, laughed and said, "No way try to drive the first green. I'll just hit my little iron off the tee and hit a wedge up there."

Hal Sutton, the 1983 PGA champion, said, "I won't even try unless there's a gale behind me."

So far this has been a year with no dominant player on the men's tour, although Curtis Strange has won three times and could set a single-season earnings record this week.

"All the indications are that it's becoming almost impossible to pick anyone to win," Palmer said. "Right now there's not anyone dominating the game or even coming close. You have a few players who are consistent high finishers, but it's difficult to put your finger on anyone.

Schramm shows proof to repute 'doublecross'

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Dallas Cowboys president Tex Schramm has shown reporters copies of Tony Dorsett's contracts in an attempt to refute the training camp holdout's allegations of a contract "doublecross."

Dorsett, who has been plagued by financial troubles, claimed he got only $100,000 of a $662,000 signing bonus promised him in 1977 when he was a Heisman Trophy winner out of Pittsburgh.

"They have talked about how much they loaned me. But ask them about the $662,000 signing bonus. And ask them where it went. They know where it went. It's still in their pockets," Dorsett said.

According to the two pool reporters, Jim Dent of the Dallas Times Herald and Paul Hagen of the Forth Worth Star-Telegram, a May 26, 1977, contract said Dorsett was to receive a $662,000 bonus.

Of that, $62,000 was paid to Dorsett's agent and lawyers; $100,000 was used against a loan at Park Cities Bank, $500,000 was to be paid at $20,000 a year for 25 years, the reporters said.

WHEN DORSETT renegotiated his contract in 1980, a clause in the new contract voided whatever remaining bonus there was, the pool reporters said.

Dorsett, who says he may retire or ask to be traded if his latest contract demands aren't met, is also accusing Schramm of "spreading my financial business all over town."

Schramm said that all Cowboy contracts include a confidentiality clause, but Dorsett broke the clause by discussing details of his contract with the media. Schramm said that is why he allowed reporters to see the documents.

Dorsett has also said Schramm promised him two years ago his contract would be renegotiated.

"Tony says he feels he was doublecrossed. There would be no earthly reason for me to do that. He's a Cowboy. He's a part of our family. That would be the last thing I want to do," Schramm said at a news conference here.

"He made the specific statement that I promised him we would renegotiate. I never, never said to Tony Dorsett or (agent) Witt Stewart that I would renegotiate," Schramm said.

Schramm said Dorsett received copies of all his contracts and that they were all negotiated by well-known and apparently competent people.

"If he doesn't understand it, I wouldn't know why. Or maybe he lost some of the papers," Schramm said.

DORSETT CLAIMS stories about his business problems were "planted by Tex."

Schramm denied it.

"I can say that the things he said are not accurate. As far as my integrity of doing things in a responsible manner, I can just fall back on my 36 years in the NFL," Schramm said. "I still have a lot of hope his problems can be resolved and that he will be able to join us at an early date."

Schramm was quoted by the Dallas Morning News Wednesday as saying the club is willing to change Dorsett's contract in structure to resemble that of Randy White's $6.4 million annuities-type deal.

Luster returned to Ueberroth's tarnished image

baseball

By IRA BERKOW
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — "Does this mean," someone in the Yankee office Wednesday afternoon wanted to know, "that the commissioner will be taking bows?"

"I guess so," came the reply, and, not without some sarcasm, "Did anyone ever make Man of the Year two years in a row?"

There was a settlement between management and labor in the baseball negotiations. And the commissioner of baseball is Peter Ueberroth. The same guy who ran the Olympics in such successful fashion.

But for the last several weeks, or while the baseball negotiations appeared to be going nowhere, he seemed to be going in the same direction, and looking rather foolish in the process. It was easy to ridicule him as nothing more than a public-relations sham.

There is no doubt in this case, or at least at this writing, that the commissioner has made a remarkable comeback in esteem.

THERE IS nothing more to go on than the facts. The last time there was a strike over a collective bargaining agreement, when Bowie Kuhn was the commissioner, the strike lasted 50 days.

This time, with Peter Ueberroth having replaced Kuhn, the strike lasted two days.

Ueberroth said he would be involved. He urged the clubs to open their books, and they did. He said that he would devote "every ounce of energy I have to avert this strike."

He didn't avert it, but it was distinguished for its brevity. The pigeons hardly had time to take over the empty ballyards when the announcement came that they'd have to evacuate.

The individual styles of Kuhn and Ueberroth can't escape comparison. Kuhn, never denying that he was the owners' man, had said he tried to work behind the scenes to effect a settlement between management and labor.

So good was he at staying out of sight that The New York Times columnist Red Smith was moved to say during the 1981 strike, "if Judge Landis or Bowie Kuhn were alive today this strike would never have happened."

IT IS true that Ueberroth took the position with certain provisos that he would not be simply a wind-up mannequin for the owners, provisos that Kuhn was not able to extract from the owners when he took the job in 1969.

Last October, when Ueberroth took office, the umpires were going on strike and he solved that quickly, by urging the owners to give the arbiters what they were asking for, which was fair, from his view.

The owners realized it would look untoward if they were to buck their new selection in his very first action, and acceded to his wishes.

But times changed, and the commissioner, it seemed, began to alienate some of the owners. He said, for example, that the owners, in the recent negotiations with the players, were unjust in asking for a salary cap and spoke about the players' rights to participate in the free enterprise system. He also said that the owners could not ask the players to solve their financial problems.

This was not exactly chamber music to the ears of the owners. "He double-crossed us," said one owner.

AND HE criticized both sides for being laggard in their respective proposals.

Ueberroth was taking the high road, however ingenuous it seemed.

When he had proposals to make, he used some that were suggested by some fans. But this was in keeping with his position that he was "the fans' man," and tried to stay neutral between owners and players.

And if he had alienated some owners, well, the Players Association was suspicious, if not hostile.

When Donald Fehr had mentioned the commissioner, he did so in the context of Ueberroth and "his constituents," or the owners, who hired him to begin with.

It was mentioned by one of the knowledgeable parties the other day that the commissioner had not even been given the courtesy of the two parties discussing his proposals at the bargaining table.

Marvin Miller, the former union executive director and now a consultant, said that the commissioner had proceeded like an amateur, and had not even contacted the negotiators privately rather than making his proposals public.

It turned out that what he had suggested was, with one prominent exception, accepted in large measure by the contending sides.

THE PLAYERS compromised on the arbitration and the pension contributions from the owners, just as the commissioner had suggested.

The owners gave in on their demand for a salary cap, just as Ueberroth had urged.

Significantly, though, he had agreed with the owners that there should be no more than a 100 percent raise allowable in arbitration. The players fought that successfully.

Throughout the last several days, Ueberroth was on the phone to both sides, several times a day, urging them to call each other, to sit down with each other, when each side was thinking that hard-to-get was the best approach.

"Now, you've got a meeting," he was supposed to have said, "try to get something going."

This was not necessarily knocking heads, but there was, in the view of the owners, the possibility that he might attempt to invoke a "best interests" clause. When Bowie Kuhn negated the sale of top players by Charlie Finley in 1976, Kuhn stopped the sale, saying the commissioner had it in his powers to determine what was or what was not in the best interests of baseball.

Finley took Kuhn to court and a federal judge in Chicago ruled for the commissioner.

KUHN DIDN'T attempt this in 1981 because, conceivably, it would not in his opinion have been in the best interests of the owners.

Ueberroth all along has said that the fans were his major concern, and that he would act in their benefit above all others — theirs and the game of baseball.

At this point, it seems that there is considerable substance behind those glossy remarks.

Fund established for bicyclists

From Staff Reports

In memory of George Hoffman and Dave Werner, the Midland Metropolitan YMCA is accepting donations that will be ear-marked for two separate projects and the Midland Angels will join in by contributing half the proceeds for the Aug. 18-19-20-21 games against Beaumont to the fund.

George Hoffman, an independent oilman, and Dave Werner, an eighth grader at Goddard Junior High, were struck and killed while riding bicyles on Highway 191, west of Midland early this summer.

A group of their friends have formed an ad hoc committee to undertake suitable projects at the Central Y as a memorial to Hoffman and Werner. The committee desires to have a memorial of a permanent nature, on one hand, and serve the community and the Y on the other.

As a result, $20,000 is being raised for the Hoffman-Werner Playground. The Y serves more than 100 children five to 15 years of age, at the YMCA each day, but has no outdoor playground. The playground will be built on the infield of the Y jogging track and will include playground equipment, a shelter and picnic tables, landscaping and a drinking fountain.

The other project, for which $10,000 is earmarked, is the Endurance Sports Safety Council, which will work to promote safety and health in endurance sports (cycling, running, swimming) in Midland. Funds raised will, be used for projects to develop bicycle lanes and trails, developing safety programs and purchasing and distributing bicycle/jogging warning signs on commonly used routes.

Tickets for the Midland Angels' games that contribute proceeds to the fund raising are available at Peyton's Bikes, the Central YMCA and the Midland Angels' office.

Angels drop third in a row

From Staff Reports

The Midland Angels continued to cool off Wednesday night in Texas League action dropping their third straight game, an 11-4 rout at the hands of the Beaumont Golden Gators in the opener of a five-game set.

The Gators, who nudged the Angels into third place inthe West Division with the win, jumped on starter Don Timberlake, 5-9, for eight runs in the first three innings to put the game away.

The big blow in the first inning was a two-run triple by third baseman David Corman, and in the third, rightfielder Shane Mack belted a three-run homer to make it 8-0 for Beaumont.

The Angels, who had won nine straight ballgames before losing Monday night, did not score off starter Joe Bitker, 7-0, until the eighth inning on a two-run triple by James Randall. Both runs were unearned.

Midland picked up another pair in the ninth inning on hits by Billie Merrifield, Doug Davis and a sacrifice fly by Greg Steen and an RBI single by Mark McLemore.

The victory was especially sweet for Beaumont coming off a five-game road trip to El Paso in which the Golden Gators lost four of the contests to the division-leading Diablos.

Mets 9, Captains 8

Greg Olson scored the winning run in the bottom of the ninth inning to break an 8-8 tie as the Jackson Mets edged the Shreveport Captains 9-8 in a tight Texas League baseball game Wednesday.

Drillers 3, Travelers 2

Tulsa broke a 2-2 tie in bottom of tenth on a double to center by Larry Klein, scoring Javier Ortiz who singled.

Earlier, Klein had tied the game with a squeeze bunt in the bottom of eighth that let Mark Gile triple.

Diablos 9, Dodgers 0

With 24 games remaining in the season, El Paso has an 11½-game lead over second-place Beaumont and any combination of 13 Diablo wins and Beaumont losses will clinch the second-half championship for El Paso.

Biondi fells U.S. record

MISSION VIEJO, Calif. (AP) — It appears only experience stands between Matt Biondi and a world record in the men's 200-meter freestyle.

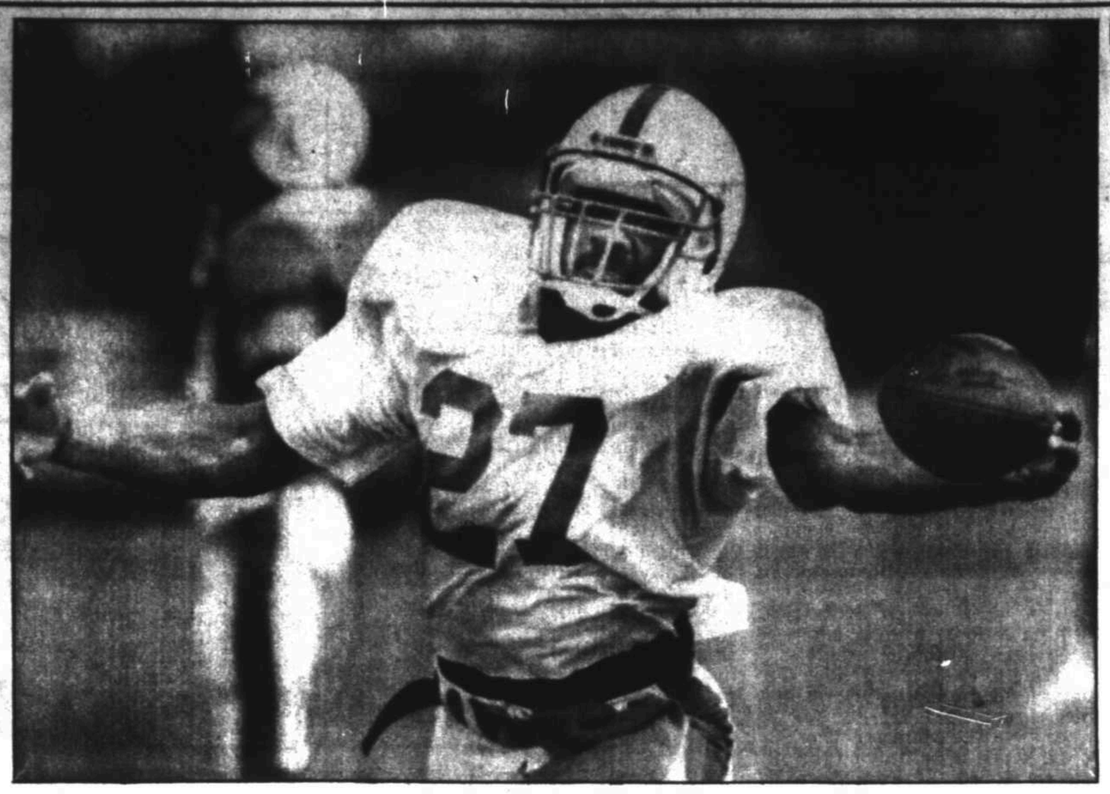

Biondi, of Moraga, Calif., swam the event for the 10th time in his career Wednesday night, set an American record and missed the world mark by little more than a half-second.

The 6-foot-6, 195-pound Biondi turned in a clocking of 1:47.89, breaking Mike Heath's American mark of 1:47.92. Biondi, who twice lowered the world record in the men's 100-meter freestyle Tuesday night at the Phillips 66 U.S. Swimming Long Course National Championships, swam his first 200 freestyle 16 months ago and knows his experience in the event is lacking.

"I've only swam the 200 10 times," Biondi said. "I still don't have too much confidence in this event.

"I know Michael Gross has swam the 200 more than 10 times."

Gross of West Germany is the world record holder with a mark of 1:47.44, set at last summer's Olympics.

Quick settlement a lesson for future

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball's second mid-season strike was over almost before it began, and the men who settled it hoped their achievement would be a guideline for future labor negotiations.

Donald Fehr, acting executive director of the players union, said he had "one hope" developed over 10 years of baseball negotiations — "that maybe ... sometime down the road, we could find a way to do this particular job in a way which does not result in the threat of crisis, or crisis itself.

"If that can manage to come out of this process, than that will have been a good thing."

Lee MacPhail, who as president of the owners' Player Relations Committee faced off against Fehr for eight months, hoped a lesson had been learned.

"One reason I took the job with the PRC was in the hope that I might contribute to some extent, a little bit, to try to help better the relationship and the feeling of trust between the players association, the players on one hand, and the clubs and the owners on the other," said MacPhail. "With the strike it would not appear that I have contributed very much to that.

"BUT I really do think that perhaps this negotiation might start things moving in a good direction. We got through a difficult negotiation without rancor, without acrimony."

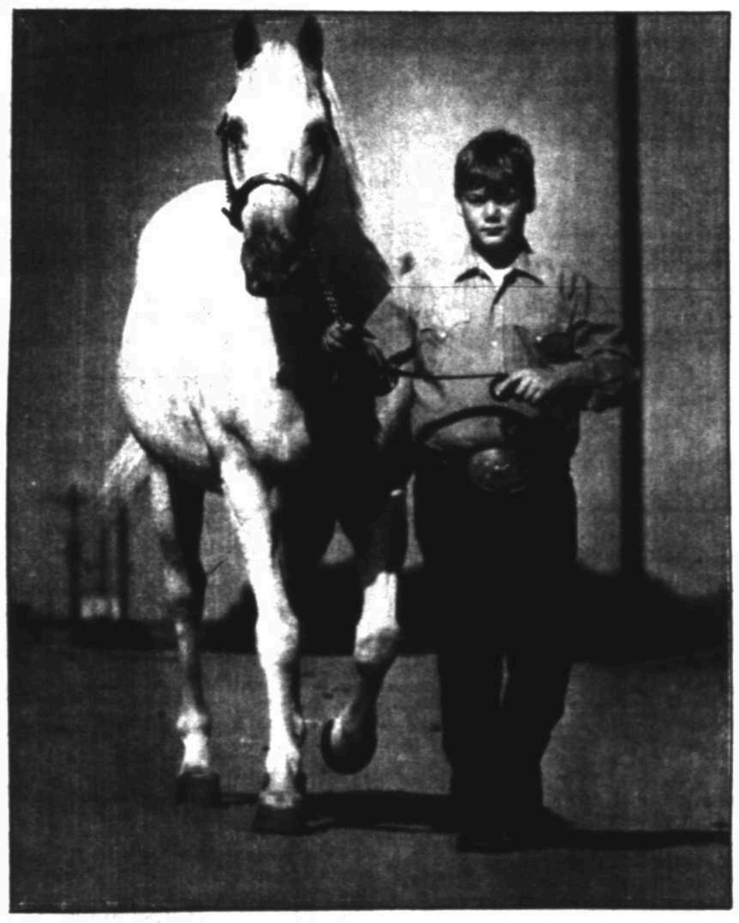

Fehr recalled that baseball bargaining "for some reason is a terribly difficult enterprise. Problems crop up most often here. The bargaining was hard."

But, MacPhail noted, it was also beneficial.

"We've also been able to negotiate a joint drug agreement, which is, I think, a landmark for us together. And I think that this negotiation and the clubs' opening their financial information to the players and the public is a real step, a progressive step in this direction."

Asked what served to get the negotiations going, Fehr replied: "In one fashion or another, a sense of urgency eventually pervaded the negotiations. That got the ball rolling.

"When you have a problem that you can't see your way through, you seek thoroughfares that both can travel on. When you locate an avenue, a framework, things can move quickly."

Skins' Butz draws fine; Cincinnati signs Brown

Defensive tackle Dave Butz is reportedly being fined $1,000 a day until he signs a new contract with the Washington Redskins, an action the National Football League Players Association says is illegal.

"This is totally out of line," Gene Upshaw, president of the NFLPA, said of the report. "This is ridiculous. We are going to look into it. Are the Redskins negotiating in good faith with Dave Butz?"

The Washington Times reported the Redskins are offering Butz, a 13-year NFL veteran, a $200,000 signing bonus, a salary of $325,000 for this season and $450,000 for 1986.

On Wednesday, the Washington Post quoted Butz as saying he was "disheartened" by the the reported fine.

Upshaw said the collective bargaining agreement allows teams to fine players under contract who do not report to camp. But Upshaw said Butz is not subject to that rule because he is a free agent...

The Cincinnati Bengals broke a week-long deadlock and signed first-round draft choice Eddie Brown. The 6-foot, 185-pound University of Miami receiver was the 13th player selected in the NFL college draft...

The New England Patriots, who lost rookie receiver Gerard Phelan with a knee injury, signed Bill Cowley, a rookie free agent from Holy Cross who was waived Monday by Dallas...

Blessed with backfield talent, the Los Angeles Raiders released running back Joe McCall, a third-round draft pick in 1984. McCall, who played college ball at Pittsburgh, appeared in just five games last year and had only one carry for three yards...

NFL Roundup

After putting veteran John Misko on waivers, the Los Angeles Rams handed the punting job to Dale Hatcher, their third-round draft pick.

Hatcher, considered the finest collegiate punter in the nation last season at Clemson, is the only punter left in training camp.

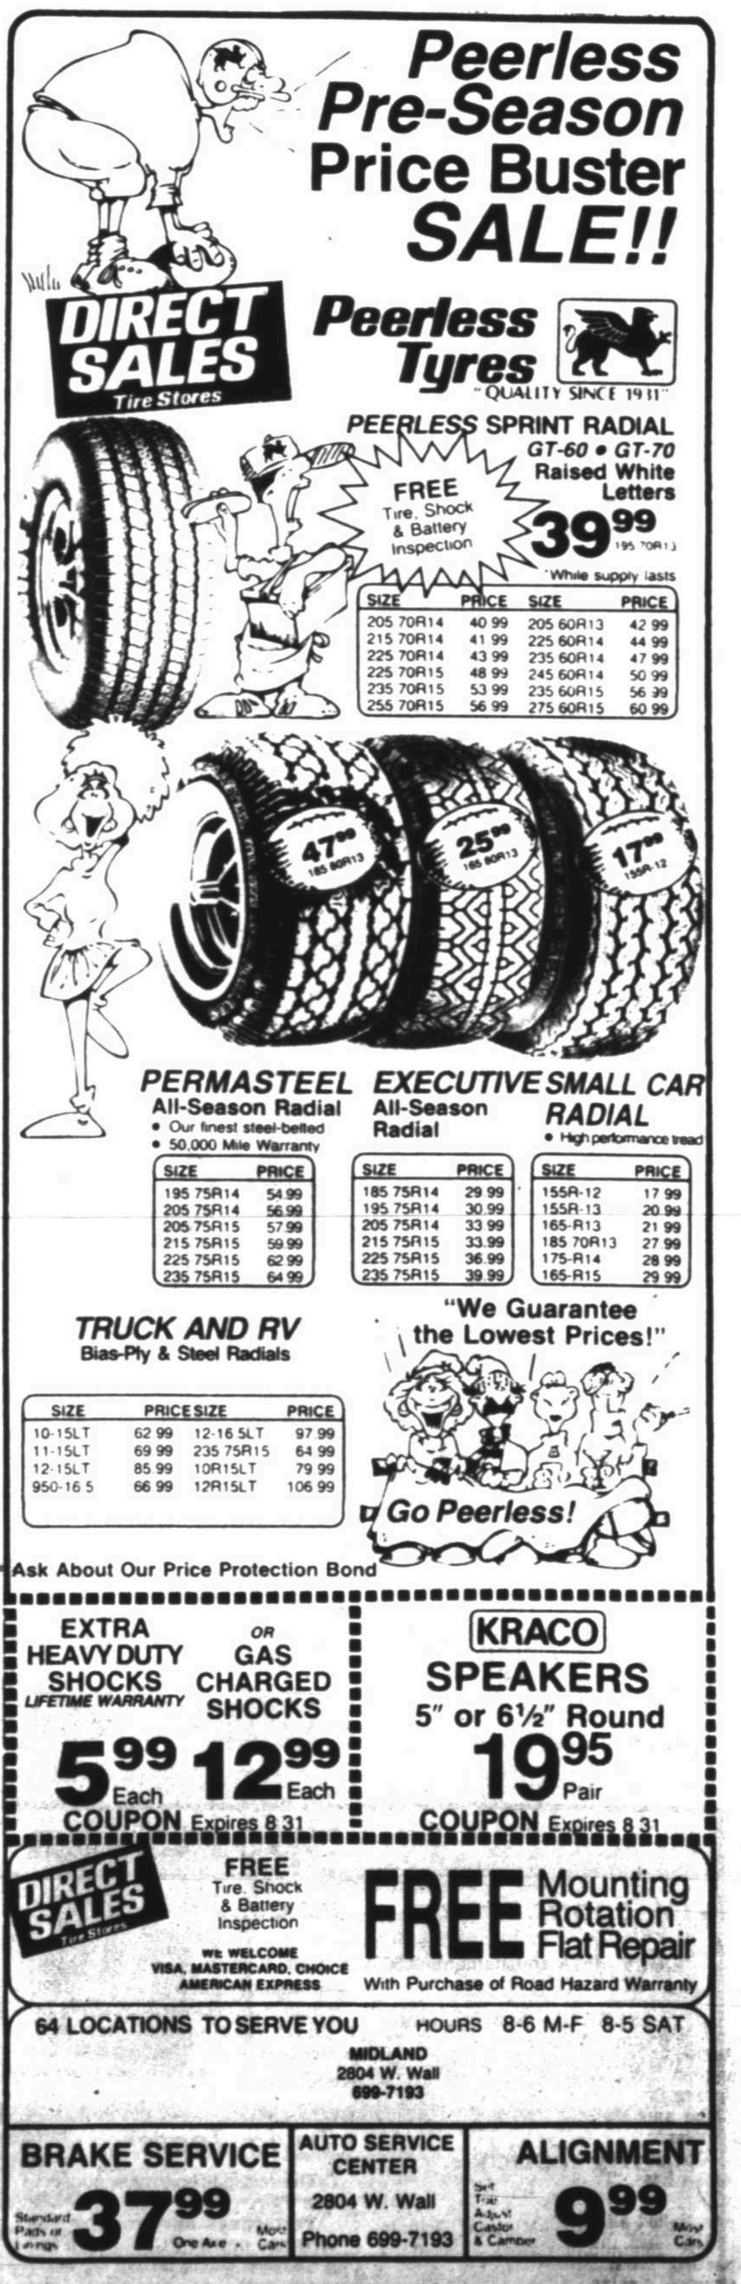

The decision to waive Misko, the Rams' punter for the last three seasons, came 24 hours after five-year veteran Russell Erxleben walked out of camp...

The San Francisco 49ers signed cornerback Wymon Henderson, a veteran from the USFL, and two free agent centers, Chris Jackson and Mark Shupe. Henderson, 23, will be trying out with the NFL champions after three seasons as a starter with the Los Angeles Express of the USFL...

Also signing was linebacker Duane Bickett of Southern California, the Indianapolis Colts' top draft choice. The 6-foot-5, 235-pound Bickett was the fifth player taken in the draft.

The Atlanta Falcons have signed wide receiver Vince Courville, who played the last two years in the United States Football League as a free agent in Houston.

Courville, 5-9 and 160 pounds, has played the last two seasons with the USFL's Houston Gamblers. He played college football at Rice University for two years after attending Texas Southern and Ranger Junior College.

Fire-ravaged Arlington still plans to run Million

CHICAGO (AP) — The Budweiser-Arlington Million, the richest grass race in the country, may be run on familiar turf after all.

Joseph Joyce, Arlington president and chief executive officer, said "no decision has been reached on the status of the Million." But despite a fire last week that destroyed Arlington Park's grandstand and clubhouse, reports say the race will be run there as scheduled.

Arlington Park officials have scheduled a news conference today to discuss the Aug. 25 race.

Stories in both the Chicago Sun Times and Chicago Tribune on Wednesday said plans were underway to hold the race at Arlington Park before a limited crowd.

Tents and temporary stands will be set up to accommodate an estimated 15,000 people, and facilities for stewards, track announcer Phil Georgeff and a television crew, the Tribune reported.

Betting windows will be open, but most wagering is expected to be done at nearby Hawthorne and Maywood Park race tracks, which will simulcast the race, the Tribune said. All arrangements are contingent on the approval of the Illinois Racing Board.

ARLINGTON PARK'S grass track would appear to be the only logical site for the 1¼-mile Million, because Hawthorne's grass course measures less than a mile.

Crews at Arlington are working around the clock hauling off rubble left by the July 31 blaze that has been tentatively blamed on an electrical malfunction.

After missing four racing days, Arlington Park resumed its 121-day meeting at Hawthorne on Monday. The first-day attendance of 8,035 was just under an average Arlington turnout. A crowd of 6,710 was on hand Tuesday, and 7,755 watched on Wednesday.

Ironically, the Arlington racing dates transferred to Hawthorne are actually part of the Washington Park meet. Washington Park, south of Chicago, was destroyed by fire in 1977 and never rebuilt, but its summer thoroughbred dates had been transferred to Arlington in 1958 and run there continuously until last week's fire.

LeMond goes home to win 6th leg of Coors Classic

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Greg LeMond of Nevada returned to familiar training ground Wednesday to capture the 67-mile sixth leg of the Coors International Classic and took the overall lead from teammate Steve Bauer.

LeMond, who is from Washoe Valley, just south of Reno, covered the mountainous run in 2 hours, 21 minutes, 56 seconds to finish just ahead of Andrew Hampsten of Boulder, Colo., who was given the same time.

Alex Steida of Canada took third at the head of a large group that finished 4:22 behind. Bauer and five-time Tour de France winner Bernard Hinault were in that group along with Colombian racer Argemiro Bohorquez.

LeMond took over the cumulative lead with an overall time of 12:22:59. That is 1:25 ahead of Hampsden. Bauer was third, 3:08 behind LeMond. Steve Speaks of Waterloo, Iowa, was fourth, 4:51 back, while Hinault retained fifth overall at 5:01 behind his LeMond.

Bauer, LeMond and Hinault all race for the Red Zinger team.

Bauer entered the leg in overall first spot, followed by Davis Phinney, of Boulder, Speaks, LeMond and Hinault. Phinney dropped to 20th overall Wednesday, 10:43 behind the leader. Colombian Martin Ramirez was 17th overall, 8:18 back.

The race began Saturday in San Francisco and moved into Nevada for Wednesday's race and Wednesday night's 30-mile criterium, or lap race, through downtown Reno before returning to Grand Junction, Colo., Thursday evening.

LeMond, who came off a second-place finish in the Tour de France to train along Wednesday's course, said beforehand he thought the warm temperatures in the 80s and the thin air in the high altitude would take its toll on the European racers.

The leg began some 8,000 feet above sea level at Lake Tahoe and plunged 3,000 feet to the valley floor before climbing again to Virginia City then dropping back down to finish in front of Reno's downtown casinos.

Dorsett has three years left on his seven-year, $2.7 million contract with the Cowboys and has asked agent Howard Slusher to negotiate a deal similar to White's.

Dorsett, whose problems include an IRS claim of $400,000 in back income taxes and a $250,000 divorce settlement, hinted that he might ask the Cowboys to trade him "so I can bargain in good faith with another team."

PGA

"CURTIS STRANGE, by what he has done this year, you might have to pick him. On the other hand, I suppose you could say Tom Watson is the likely favorite simply because he has not won a PGA Championship."

Palmer, like Watson, has never won a PGA Championship although he has won each of the other three majors at least once.

Berhnard Langer won the 1985 Masters, the first major event; Andy North, who won the Open here in 1978, won the U.S. Open in June, and Sandy Lyle of England won the British Open, the third major. Lyle is not at the PGA Championship.

In a practice round Tuesday, Palmer attempted to reach the first green with his driver and came up 15 yards short of the green and 25 yards short of the pin. When he drove the green in 1960 he was pin high.

"I tried to see how it might be," Palmer said. "After all, what's 25 years? About a yard a year I guess."

MARC swimmers reap medals

From Staff Reports

The Midland Association for Retarded Children sent a nine-member delegation to the Texas Special Olympics Swim Meet in San Antonio last weekend and all came home with medals.

Coach Sara Burleson and assistant Ann Creamer took the team to the four-day meet and were more than pleased with their results.

Stacy Wiesepape was the big winner with three gold medals — in the 25-meter freestyle, 50 free and 50 backstroke as well as getting a bronze medal for being on the relay team. Chelle Dumas won a gold medal in the 50 free and was a member of the bronze medal relay team.

Artie Deande took a silver in the 50 backstroke, a bronze in the 50 butterfly and was a member of the silver medal relay team.

David DeLone won the 50 back and took a bronze in the 100 free as well as being on the silver medal relay. Bryan Gum won a pair of bronze medals in the 50 free and 100 free and a silver on the relay.

Kathy Kirkpatrick was also a member of a silver medal relay and Derick Stice brought home a silver in the 25 free and a bronze in the relay.

Donnie Thompson captured the gold in the 25 free and Holly Tucker earned silver medals in the 25 back and 25 free and a bronze medal in the relay.

Fans will come back, Valentine says

ARLINGTON (AP) — Bobby Valentine believes the major league baseball fans will forgive and forget the two-day strike of 1985.

"I believe the fans will come back because both sides used good judgment," the Texas Rangers manager said Wednesday. "Now we want to show the fans we're worthy of their support."

The Rangers and Milwaukee Brewers scheduled a doubleheader today with the Brewers flying into town at noon then leaving immediately after the game for Chicago.

"I'm happy we don't have to do that," said Valentine. "That could be a little tough on the Brewers."

The first game starts at 5:35 p.m. and the mercury has been hovering around the 100-degree mark at that time all week.

Rangers players said Wednesday night they will vote to ratify the new agreement between the major league owners and the union. Twenty of 24 players showed for an optional workout at Arlington Stadium Wednesday night that drew only three fans.

"I'm happy as hell with the contract," said Rangers pitcher Dave Stewart. "It didn't take long to settle it and everything looks good."

PLAYER representative Burt Hooton said the settlement "looks good to me" and recommended his teammates accept it.

"I don't think our team will have any problem with it at all," said Hooton.

First baseman Pete O'Brien said, "It's a good feeling to know it's over. You still have to prove yourself for three years then you have some clout."

O'Brien praised Commissioner Peter Ueberroth, saying, "He got in there and utilized his power in an effective and good way. I was surprised it came so quickly. We got some stonewalling early and I figured it (the strike) might be a long one."

Hooton, who noted that "the salary cap just wasn't going to fly," added that "we won't have a vote right away but the agreement will have to be ratified by all the teams later.

"My initial belief was that if the strike lasted more than a week we would have to write off the whole season," said Hooton. "However, the settlement really came quickly."

Valentine said, "I was hoping the settlement would be quick. If it had lasted two weeks it would have been just as disastrous as two months."

TOM GRIEVE, general manager of the American League's Rangers, said the quick settlement was "very encouraging. I was surprised a little bit. I didn't think an agreement would be reached so quickly."

Grieve said he hopes major league baseball hasn't lost any fans.

"Perhaps the quick settlement will help with the fans," Grieve said, quipping that "I wanted to schedule a triple header for the fans Thursday."

The Rangers moved quickly to fill an open spot on their roster, calling up right-hander Jeff Russell from Oklahoma City.

Russell will pitch the first game of the doubleheader today against Jamie Cocanower of the Brewers. Hooton will go against Pete Vukovich in the second game.

Astros prepare for second chance

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Astros are to set for tonight's game against the Padres in San Diego following the short-lived major league strike and players couldn't be any happier.

"I'm glad it's over," said outfielder Kevin Bass. "I was kind of sweating it out for a while. We figured it would last all season."

Bass and his teammates are departing from Houston today on a charter airplane that will carry a four-game winning streak to the West Coast.

"We're leaving tomorrow to play the Padres tomorrow night," Astros General Manger Al Rosen said Wednesday following the announcement of an agreement between players and owners.

The Astros play the Padres today and Friday and then take on the San Francisco Giants next week in San Francisco. The strike cut the Giants and Astros three-game series in Houston down to two with the Astros sweeping both games.

ALL THE Astros except one are expected to board the charter plane to San Diego, said the team's public relations director Rick Rivers.

"The only player that left Houston was Bob Knepper," Rivers said.

Knepper, the Astros' player representative, had already made plans to fly home to Orgeon even before the strike became official, Rivers said.

"It was of such short duration that it shouldn't hurt our momentum," Astros Manager Bob Lillis said. "I'm just happy it was such a short strike, and we can get back to playing baseball."

Joe Niekro, who will be the starting pitcher for the Astros tonight, spent Wednesday morning caddying for his daughter at a local junior golf tournament.

"I don't think it's a case of who won or lost," Niekro said Wednesday.

Nolan Ryan summed the short-lived strike with: "I think both sides received pretty much what they wanted."

USFL's Hebert goes to Saints

RUSTON, La. (AP) -

Free agent Bobby Hebert, a former United States Football League quarterback, signed Wednesday night with the New Orleans Saints of the National Football League.

"I know I'm going to enjoy this situation. I'm looking forward to playing for Bum Phillips and being in a situation where people can pronounce Hebert," said Hebert, pronounced Ay'-bair. He played with the Oakland Invaders last year after two seasons with the Michigan Panthers.

Hebert, a native of Cut Off, La., played college ball at Northwestern State University at Natchitoches, La., where he now makes his home.

'Refrigerator' a 'wasted pick'

PLATTEVILLE, Wis. (AP) — A disgusted Buddy Ryan on Wednesday called Chicago Bears tackle William Perry a "wasted draft pick" because Perry is so out of shape and missed part of Tuesday's practice.

"He's a wasted draft pick, just going on what I saw yesterday," said Ryan, defensive coordinator for the Bears.

Ryan then said, "I don't know if he's a wasted draft pick or not, but he's not in any shape and can't do anything."

Perry, a defensive tackle from Clemson who is known as "The Refrigerator" because of his 300-plus pounds, reported to camp two weeks late and in terrible shape after holding out for a $1.356 million contract.

"I don't know how he's going to get into shape," said Ryan, architect of the National Football League's top defense last season. "He's got to diet, practice every day and push himself. It's got to come from within him."

The criticism came after Perry missed Tuesday afternoon practice because he suffered dehydration cramps from losing 13 pounds in the morning practice.

PERRY COULD not be reached for comment Wednesday, Bears' officials said.

Head Coach Mike Ditka also criticized Perry after Tuesday's practice.

"That's what two weeks of putzing around has done," said Ditka. "When a guy's not as good a football player as he can be, he can blame himself and his agent."

Perry, listed in the Bears' media guide as 6-foot-2 and 318 pounds, played at up to 360 pounds at Clemson.

He missed two weeks of training camp in a contract dispute, and when he reported on Monday, team officials said he weighed about 330 pounds. Perry's contract includes incentive clauses for staying in shape.

Perry, who practiced well on Monday, has been subsisting on small portions of fish, vegetables and soup at the team's training table.

"He's inclined to be a fat guy and that's not going to change," said Ryan. "He's always going to be a fat guy."

Endurance is Perry's main problem, Ryan said.

"He's strong enough to lift up a boxcar full of wheat," said Ryan. "But he's got to be able to play for 60 minutes."

RYAN PLANS to toss Perry into the fire Friday night, playing him 60 minutes in the season's first exhibition game at St. Louis.

"I'm going to let him play his way into shape," said Ryan, chuckling at the prospect.

Michael Graham returns to Hoyas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Michael Graham, who left Georgetown University last year after helping lead the Hoyas to the national championship as a freshman in 1984, will return to school this fall, The Associated Press has learned.

According to sources close to the Georgetown basketball program, both Graham and Ralph Dalton, a five-year student, will play for Coach John Thompson this season.

It was not immediately known whether Graham, 22, will be eligible to play until the second semester, in January.

Neither Thompson or the players were immediately available to comment.

An official announcement is expected on Friday, according to the sources.

Dalton, who graduated in June, is eligible to play another season having sat out his freshman year with a leg injury.

Graham moved into the Hoyas' starting lineup mid-way through his freshman year, averaged 4.7 points and four rebounds a game.

Board to finalize proposal on how to spend funds

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

A Citizens Governing Board formed of volunteers late Wednesday night will meet again this evening to finalize a proposal on spending $899,000 in federal Community Development Block Grant funds.

The organization was formed after a meeting Wednesday of about 40 residents in the designated target area — east and south Midland — met with members of the City Council and city staff at De Zavala Elementary School to find out how CD funds had been spent in previous years and hear recommendations for the 1985-86 allocation. On the agenda were Susan Howell, Community Development coordinator for the city; George Logan, director of parks and recreation; Richard Hennessy, director of planning and community development; and Fred Baker, public works director.

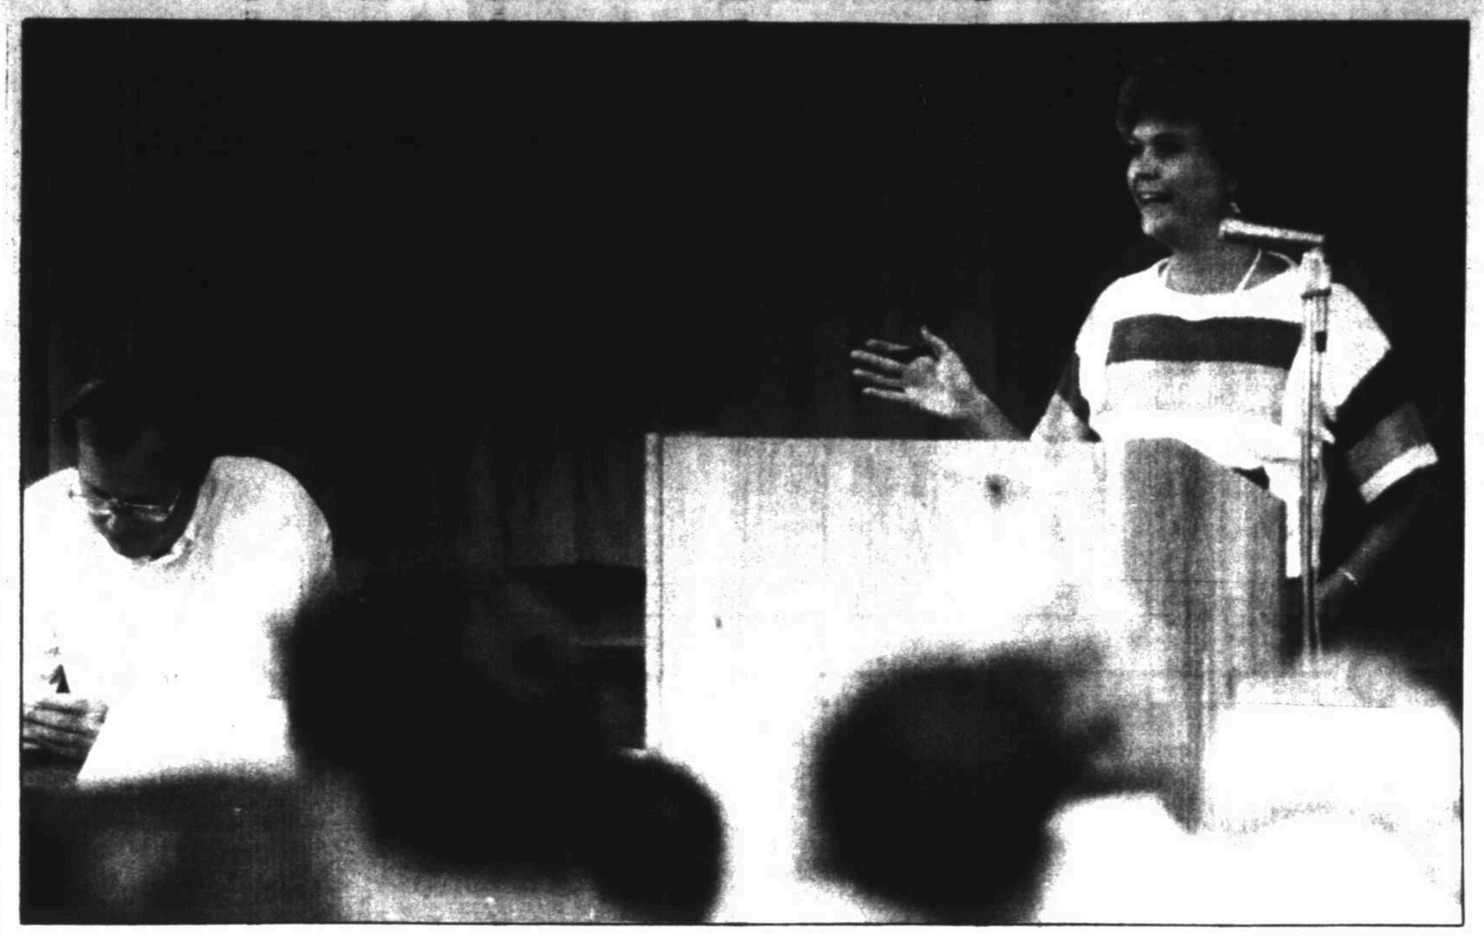

Time and place of the Governing Board meeting was to be decided today by the two who pulled together the first meeting: Amado Calderon with the League of United Latin American Citizens, and Charlie Jackson with the Black Advisory Council. Their recommendations will be presented at the City Council's Tuesday meeting for that panel's final decision.

Wednesday's meeting was sparked with questions from the citizens and some allegations that all the money hadn't been spent where the people wanted it. The meeting, in fact, was called after several residents complained they had not been contacted about giving the city input into the proposal.

Jackson noted that if "there is an honest interest in allocating funds for the east and south there should be a better way to notify us." Toward the end of the meeting, it was suggested that a list of names, phone numbers and addresses be furnished Ms. Howell for her to contact in the future.

The first public hearing was held June 26 at 7 p.m., and only one person showed up at City Hall. Ms. Howell compiled a list from requests that had been submitted by city department directors. A second hearing was held at the City Council's July 23 meeting, and requests totaling almost $700,000 were presented by several organizations.

Cody Bell/Reporter-Telegram

Susan Howell, Community Development funds coordinator for the city, explains how the federal monies have been used in Midland in previous years. City officials met with residents of south and east Midland Wednesday night to gather ideas for how the 1985-86 funds should be used.

Terry Lowry

Terry Lowry announces he will run for Congress

From Staff Reports

Espousing the doctrine of the National Democratic Policy Committee, Midlander Terry Lowry, 32, announced Wednesday he will enter the 21st Congressional District race on the Democratic Party ticket.

However, Lowry said he wasn't certain if he would have the support of the local Democratic party. The NDPC — a splinter group of the Democratic Party — is headed by former presidential candidate Lyndon LaRouche. Lowry said LaRouche last year was attacked by the National Democratic Party, which he also said was run by Eastern families.

The 21st Congressional seat is held now by Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt, who has indicated he will run for governor next year.

In his campaign, Lowry said he will focus on international financial problems and the threat of global domination by the Soviet Union. An independent landman, Lowry said he also will talk about the oil and gas and agriculture issues but "it is important for the voter to realize we are not isolated here."

The world is on the verge of an international financial collapse as a result of several factors, he said, "the most important of which are the combined effects of the austerity measures being imposed on our allies and trading partners by the International Monetary Fund and the resulting global trade."

The IMF should be dismantled and the government should support initiatives of people like the newly elected president of Peru, Alan Garcia.

"In our own country, we must expand production, which means that we must adopt monetary policies that will provide long term, low interest credit to such ends as rebuilding our nation's steel industry and our decaying infrastructure. We must provide our farmers parity prices and end the insane policy of running the family farmer out of business," he said.

To demonstrate the global threat by Soviets, Lowry said he will present findings from the Executive Intelligence Review report titled "Global Showdown."

"This fully documents the existence and methodical escalation of the Soviet efforts to not only fight but win a thermonuclear war against the United States and Western Europe.

"To combat these crises, I will fight for the policies that have been proposed by the NDPC" under LaRouche, Lowry said.

This isn't the first race for Lowry. Last spring he ran unsuccessfully for a position on the City Council, and in 1984 he sought the Democratic Party county chairmanship and lost to Janet Massey.

Bishop continues crusade against juvenile crime

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Although his beloved red, white and blue "Crime Stop" van was recently damaged in an accident, Bishop Louis Calvin Browning persists.

"I'll get it fixed," said the pro-youth evangelist, who is as energetic in his crusade against juvenile delinquency today as he was 29 years ago in Temple, where he first began "Youth Crime Prevention League," a national program designed to keep youths in school and off the streets.

"We emphasize education," said Browning, a bishop in the Independent Methodist Church. "Our program is designed to educate youth against crime and trouble."

Browning uses an acronym in his message.

"SIS can stand for three things," he said. "Stay in the streets, sit in the streets or stay in school.

Browning, who visits schools across the state during the year and holds summer activities with the theme "Keep it Cool" for youths, ages seven to 17, was to hold a anti-crime youth rally at Washington Park 2 p.m. today, where more than 200 youths were due to hear Mayor Thane Akins speak.

"We're here to congratulate young people who have stayed away from crime and to encourage them to finish their education," repeated Browning, in his tireless drive to drive home the point to wayward youngsters.

"My motto is 'youth in the future' and 'future in the youth,'" he said. "If you save the youth, you save America."

Browning's 30-year crusade has not gone unnoticed. With pride he highlights the bright moments — commissionings by three Texas governors as "good will ambassador;" a close association with the Rev. Martin Luther King during the 1960's civil rights movement; public denouncements of more militant blacks such as Dick Gregory, Stokely Carmichael and H. Rapp Brown, also during the 1960's, for their role in urging violent retaliation against the whites — all proudly documented in a black scrapbook that has seen many miles of show and tell.

And then there was the time Browning ran for the office of president of the United States.

In June 1983, Browning climbed to his perch on a specially built platform at the rear of his van and announced his candidacy.

"I was the first black ever to run," said Browning, who at 79, admits that he had no real chance of winning.

Still, his message at the time was that of a serious contender.

"Adults must learn to listen to the youth of America," he announced at a Washington Park youth rally. "It is time for our nation to forget race, creed and color and start saving our children from drugs and crime."

Questions about what he would do as president, as can be expected, centered around his beloved youth.

"I will build more and better schools and train teachers better," he promised.

Although he never achieved his lofty goal, Browning today remains effervescent in his mission. The Youth Crime Prevention League is headquartered at 109 S. Judkins St. in Fort Worth.

Tucker convicted of voluntary manslaughter

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

After more than 5½ hours of deliberations Wednesday, a Midland jury found Edward R. Tucker guilty of voluntary manslaughter in the April stabbing death of a 16-year-old Midland youth.

The six-man, six-woman jury was to consider Tucker's punishment today. He faced a possible penalty of two to 20 years in prison and up to a $10,000 fine for killing Catarino Jurado, whose body was found in a pool of blood shortly after midnight April 19 in the 700 block of South Big Spring Street.

If the 142nd District Court jurors give Tucker 10 years or less, they may also consider probation, because he has no prior felony convictions. In finding Tucker guilty of the lesser included offense of voluntary manslaughter, the jury in effect split the difference between the prosecution's plea for a murder conviction and Tucker's claim that he acted in self-defense.

Two days before Jurado's death, his older brother Raymond had lost a fistfight with Tucker's older brother Frank, but Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre urged the jury to ignore the older brothers' feud in considering what happened between the younger brothers.

"Who cares?" said Schorre of the feud. "It didn't justify what happened."

"I think there's a lot of evidence that Catarino Jurado cared," defense attorney Chris McCormack told the jury. McCormack suggested that Jurado attacked Eddie Tucker with a tire iron to avenge his brother's beating, and Tucker stabbed him in self-defense.

Jurado had been stabbed six times, including a fatal wound to the heart, according to the pathologist who performed the autopsy.

After his arrest, Tucker gave police a statement saying he was riding his bicycle when he came upon Jurado standing next to a car in the 700 block of South Big Spring. According to Tucker, Jurado said he was going to kill Frank Tucker, "and he said he was going to kick my ass, too. That's when I told him to come on."

Tucker testified he pulled out his knife when Jurado came at him with a tire iron. But Schorre pointed out that Tucker's statement to police said he'd pulled out the knife before he was attacked, and in his testimony before the grand jury, he'd claimed to have pulled out the knife as Jurado was getting the tire iron from the car.

Edward R. Tucker

"That's wrong — he got the pipe first," Tucker said.

McCormack also scored points in this fashion, finding inconsistencies between prosecution witness Pete Belloc's testimony and statements he'd earlier given police about his brother-in-law Catarino Jurado's anger towards Frank Tucker.

McCormack put Midland psychologist Harvey Durbin on the stand to testify that Eddie Tucker was of "borderline" intelligence and possible not capable of planting a tire iron near Jurado's body, as Schorre suggested. But the district attorney turned Durbin to his advantage, asking over McCormack's objection if people who commit violent crimes tend to be of lower intelligence.

"I would think so," replied Durbin after 142nd District Court Judge Pat Baskin overruled the objection.

As his intelligence was bandied back and forth by Durbin and the attorneys, Eddie Tucker sat quietly, his hands in his lap, his eyes on the table in front of him.

TDWR to hold hearing concerning Odessa chromium contamination

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The Texas Department of Water Resources will hold a public hearing at the Odessa City Hall this evening concerning two chromium contamination sites in the city.

TDWR representatives will be on hand to explain a study to be done by a Houston consulting firm to determine the extent of contamination in the two areas. One of the areas, designated Chromium I, is an eight acre portion of an aquifer near West 44th Street and Brazos Avenue and the other, Chromium II, is located northwest of Odessa's city limits near the Andrews Highway. The suspected sources of contamination are several now-defunct local industries that generated chromium contaminated wastewater from the plating of metals and cleaning of radiators.

June 13, TDWR entered into a $938,916 contract with IT Corp. of Houston for Superfund studies to assess the full extent of the contamination at both sites. The study is expected to take about 18 months. The accompanying feasibility study will develop and analyze various alternatives of an environmentally sound closure of the sites, according to the TDWR. The range of alternatives will be presented to citizens of the area at a second public meeting.

The chromium contamination, which has shown up in some of the water of wells used by area residents, can pose a threat to those who use the water.

Today's meeting will be at 7 p.m. in the city council chambers, 411 W. 8th St.

Harris County has most vehicles per mile of road, insurance board says

AUSTIN (AP) — Loving County has only two vehicles per mile of road, but it has almost three vehicles per resident, according to figures used by the State Board of Insurance to set new rating territories.

Loving and King counties had the lowest vehicle density at two vehicles per roadway mile. Harris County had the highest density — 179 vehicles per mile.

The insurance board Wednesday unanimously approved new rating territories, increasing the number of territories from 40 to 52. The changes were made to reflect changes in vehicle density, a key factor in setting auto insurance rates.

The 1983 statistics used to set the new territories showed Harris County as the most traffic-clogged with 2,203,766 vehicles for the 179-per-roadway-mile density. Dallas County had 1,528,308 vehicles for a density of 171 per roadway mile.

Among the other more congested counties were El Paso with 161 vehicles per roadway mile; Tarrant, 152; Bexar, 143; Travis, 132; Galveston, 107; and Jefferson, 105.

King County in Northwest Texas, population 425, reported 429 vehicles for a density of two per roadway mile. Loving County, on the New Mexico state line, had 261 vehicles. Loving reporter 91 residents in the 1980 census.

CD

The original list included: $100,000 for housing rehabilitation; $100,000, code enforcement; $100,000, parks improvements; $400,000, street paving, sidewalks and drainage; $175,000, administrative costs; and $24,000 contingencies.

This list, Ms. Howell told the group, "is not set in concrete. It's just a proposal. I had several calls from groups and knew there would be some changes." Concerning the notification of the June meeting, she said an advertisement had been placed in the June 16 edition of the Reporter-Telegram and a story in the June 23 edition.

She pointed out a budget approved by the City Council must be submitted by Sept. 1 to the Fort Worth office of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, which allocates the money.

In response to questions about $175,000 — or almost 20 percent — in administrative costs, she said it was a soft figure. That money pays her salary and that of a code enforcement officer and would include a part-time clerical worker for the code enforcement department. After the city staff and council left, the citizens talked of reducing that figure to $100,000.

After listening to plans for parks, streets and code enforcement, residents focused on streets and questioned how CD money allocated for street paving in previous years had been spent.

Baker said that money had paved 16 miles of streets, or 256 blocks. Federal Revenue Sharing funds paved another five miles in the target area, giving a total of 21 miles.

In selecting streets to be paved with CD money, Baker said the directive given his department by the council was "to get the people out of the mud. It was aimed at providing access for people to get from their home to the store and to work."

The blocks which have been paved had the most houses on them, he contended.

"If you have a particular street you want paved, I urge you to put it in a letter or a note and give it to us so there's no misunderstanding," Baker said.

But one woman said she had asked Baker to pave a block of Jackson Street and it hasn't been done yet.

The cost of paving varies, according to Baker. If penetration paving is put down, the cost is $4,000 per block. If curbs and gutters are added, the cost goes up to $22,000 a block.

Of the $400,000 listed for streets, Baker said he is planning to use about $175,000 of that to widen the bridge at Jackson Street and provide a wider drainway. As the city grows northward, he said, this part of the drainway will be carrying more water during rains.

Later, though, the residents talked of eliminating that bridge and using the $400,000 only for street paving. Instead of the less expensive penetration paving, one woman said they wanted the curbs and gutters on all the streets.

Logan explained his request of $100,000 for parks and submitted a list that broke it down into projects for parks in the target area, which included Dunagan, Taylor, Halff, Garrett Brown, Ulmer, Washington, Ratliff, Sparks, Hidalgo and Dennis the Menace.

Previous monies have been put into the ground, he said, by installing irrigation systems which he called the "key to making parks a green area."

Money for parks throughout Midland, including the target area, also comes from the General Fund budget. He noted that $175,000 is pegged to develop on the west side a tract that has been designated a park for 25 years. But Edia Hernandez with LULAC questioned why money for the eastside parks came only from CD funds and not the general budget.

"This is icing on the cake," said Logan. "If this money (CD funds) were not available, I'd be asking for this much for those eastside parks."

One woman charged the City Council hasn't spent the money in the manner it had stated it would in previous years, nor had they hired any minorities at City Hall. Barbara Harris reminded the group that last year $6,000 was designated to study the feasibility of building a multi-purpose center in south Midland. That study hasn't been done yet.

Deputy City Manager Fred Poe pointed out that one of the code enforcement officers hired is a Hispanic. As to the study, he said some of the projects haven't been completed.

"The city has not done anything for our community in previous years. One priority has been met and that is Washington Park," Ms. Harris said and then left the meeting.

Afterward, Calderon said the turnout had been good and a proposal should be ready Friday for the council's consideration on Tuesday.

Gibson named to alcohol task force

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Odessa attorney Jay Gibson has been named to a legislative task force created to study commitment procedures for alcoholics and other substance abusers.

The 18-member Task Force Relating to Alcoholics and Drug-Dependent Persons was established by lawmakers earlier this year, and will report to the next regular session in January, 1987.

Gibson was appointed to the group by House Speaker Gib Lewis, who also named State Reps. Frank Madle, D-San Antonio, and Bruce Gibson, D-Cleburne, to the task force.

The group is to study possible changes in certification, licensure and commitment procedures for substance abusers, according to the speaker's office.

Gibson is a former member of the House who lost his seat last November to Rep. Kelly Godwin, R-Odessa.

Troopers arrest escaped prisoner

AUSTIN (AP) — State troopers have arrested David Powell, 20, identified as an escaped Bastrop County prisoner who is believed to have led officers on a car chase in which a Williamson County deputy died.

The arrest came Wednesday after a northwest Travis County resident reported a person hiding under his house.

Powell was found hiding under a house on Hudson Bend Road.

The arrest of Powell by two troopers ended a two-day search for a motorcyclist chased by Austin police and a Williamson County sheriff's deputy in northwestern Travis County before dawn Tuesday.

Commission cancels Marfa grant

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Aeronautics Commission has cancelled a $55,000 grant to Marfa for airport improvements because the community was unable to come up with required matching funds, a TAC spokesman said.

Bill Schnerr, TAC, said the commission approved the funds last October, with Marfa having 90 days to make a "formal application," and to provide 25 percent matching money.

Marfa was unable to provide the matching funds, although three extensions of the deadline were granted, Schnerr said.

The funds will be used for another project, he said.

Marfa had planned to use the funds for sealcoating a runway and parallel taxiway, and restripping the runway.

Murder trial scheduled to begin

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The murder trial of 25-year-old Donny Lee Bretz, accused of the October 25, 1984 stabbing death of 39-year-old lounge owner Gayle Stifflemire, is scheduled to begin Aug. 13 with jury selection.

Bretz and his 19-year-old stepbrother, Gary Lynn Waqua, were first indicted on charges of capital murder by an Ector County grand jury Jan. 10, but were reindicted July 29 on the lesser charge of murder.

Stifflemire was stabbed to death at the Tally Ho Lounge, 3114 W. 2nd St. and reportedly robbed of about $300.

No new trial date has been set for Waqua.

Jewelry valued at $4,000 taken

From Staff Reports

More than $4,000 worth of jewelry, weapons and other items were reported stolen Wednesday by Michael Reid, 4721B W. Harvard, according to police reports. Among the items taken in the burglary were a $600 diamond necklace, a $600 shotgun and a $600 electric guitar.

Kevin Mahoney, 1114 Mogford, reported the theft of $450 in stereo equipment from his car Wednesday. The theft occurred at 500 W. Indiana, reports said.

Austin may implement water sprinkler ban

AUSTIN (AP) — The city of Austin, which has plenty of water but a shortage of water treatment plants, was waiting today to see if it would expand its watering restrictions to a ban on lawn sprinklers.

If Wednesday water use topped 157 million gallons — as it did Monday and Tuesday — the city manager would be authorized to order "phase three" restrictions.

Those restrictions limit lawn watering to buckets, hand-held hoses and drip irrigation systems. Since July 31, Austinites have been under mandatory restrictions limiting the use of lawn sprinklers to one every five days, based on addresses.

Jerry Lawson, director of the city Resource Management Department, said Wednesday he expected City Manager Jorge Carrasco to order the tighter restrictions if the 157 million gallon mark was exceeded Wednesday.

"I predict that if the figure goes above the 157 million gallon mark today, you will be seeing an emergency manager's report to the council tomorrow," he said.

Austin's three water plants can pump and treat 165 million gallons a day. There is no shortage of water, but there is a shortage of facilities to pump and treat water for the fast-growing city.

Monday's usage was 159.8 million gallons. It increased to 161.1 million Tuesday.

Lawson said phase three would be "much more difficult for the police department, for the water department and for the citizens."

Austin police are enforcing the mandatory restrictions, with violations punishable by fines of up to $200.

Lawson said the city's booming population growth is the problem.

"I think the citizens are willingly observing the restrictions," said Lawson. "The problem is not that people are not following the rules, but the fact that there are just that many new hookups."

By summer 1987, the city will have an extra 100 million gallons of treatment capacity and watering restrictions could be abolished, he said.

Gramm campaign committee continues to take donations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican Sen. Phil Gramm's campaign committee has continued full-steam spending and accumulation of donations so far this year, Gramm's first in office.

Gramm, a former Democratic congressman from College Station, won his first six-year Senate term last November. According to his campaign finance report for the first six months of 1985, his campaign committee raised $207,080 and spent $447,134, putting his total expenditures for the race at $9.9 million.

Gramm reported cash on hand of $91,577 and a campaign debt of $12,000 as of June 30.

The Federal Election Commission has asked a Dallas federal judge to order Gramm's fund-raising committee, Friends of Phil Gramm, to turn over its financial records for an audit.

The FEC says it believes Gramm's committee didn't disclose debts and misreported contributions and expenditures.

The Gramm committee is resisting the audit, admitting it did not disclose the debts but denying any intentional wrongdoing.

Gramm's Democratic opponent from last year, former state Sen. Lloyd Doggett, an Austin attorney, had a campaign debt of $213,225, with $9,009 on hand, according to his report.

That debt was dwarfed by those of the other two candidates for the Democratic Senate nomination.

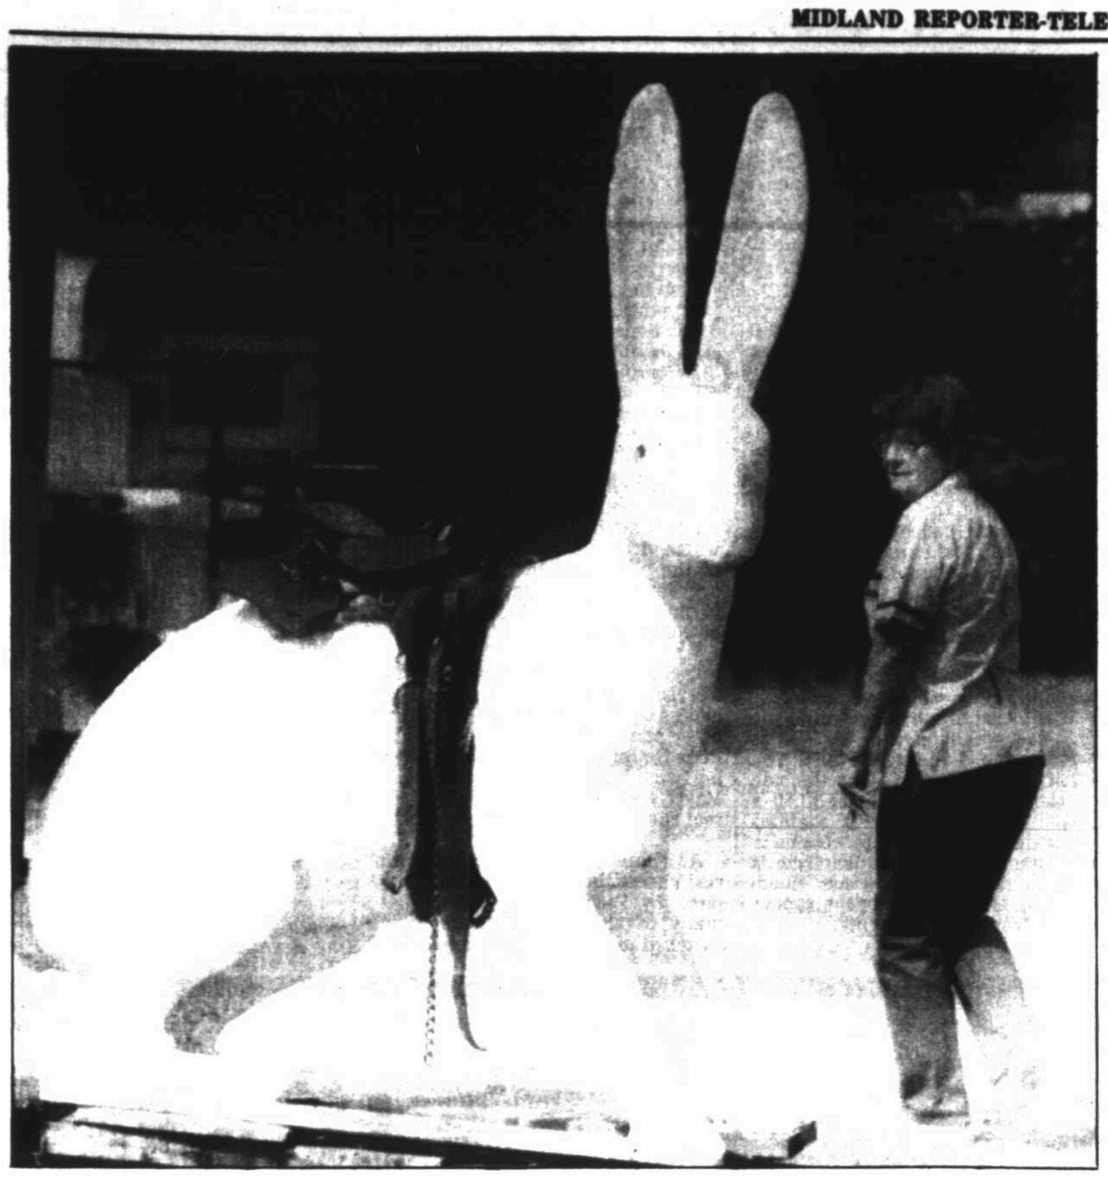

Former Lubbock Congressman Kent Hance, now a Republican expected to run for governor next year, reported owing $583,680 with $5,440 on hand.

Hance narrowly lost a runoff to Doggett after squeaking out a surprise win in a three-man primary race.

Sherman man trains firefighters

SHERMAN (AP) — Firefighting has come a long way from the days when the bell rang and the town's people grabbed buckets in an often futile attempt to save a neighbor's house. Now, with sophisticated firetrucks costing upwards of $100,000, the buckets have been replaced by hoses and the town hires professional firefighters.

But those firefighters have to be taught the tricks of the trade. That's where Jack Gott, training officer and director of emergency medical services for the Sherman Fire Department comes in. He directs the only firefighting school in North Central Texas that is open to firefighters from industries and agencies from other cities. Texas A&M University also has an open firefighters' training program.

Gott's North Central Texas school is open to both men and women, and students come from up to 100 miles away to participate. They study subjects ranging from fire and arson investigation to community relations and mathematics.

"There are 23 different subjects they have to complete that are required by the state for firefighter certification," Gott said of the training all fire personnel must undergo within one year of being hired. Texas requires 335 hours of training, Gott said, but "My school requires 360."

"The school is 80-percent classroom and 20-percent field experience," Gott said. But, the field practice is the most exciting part.

The summer's class included 10 students from the Greenville Fire Department, four from Sherman, and one from the Grayson County Airport. Local industries often send their fire brigade workers to the school.

"The idea is to get us used to the heat and smoke, as well as teamwork," said student Barry Witherspoon, a Greenville firefighter and 20-year volunteer with the Paris Fire Department. "For some of the rookies, it's the first time they've been in a fire."

The idea of the field experience, of course, is to simulate a real fire and to use hose and water stream techniques firefighters will later use when lives and property are at stake.

The outdoor training includes extinguishing controlled natural gas fires, oil fires, house fires and fires in taller buildings. Firefighters also learn rescue techniques.

"We're taught theory in the classroom," Witherspoon said. "This is the practical part."

Working in 100-degree heat is hard enough, but trainees often work in scorching temperatures of over 1,000 degrees. "That fire (in the oil pit) was close to 1,500 degrees," said Greenville firefighter Benny Thompson.

The idea of the training is to allow new members to practice before fighting the real thing. "The training is for the protection of property and people," Thompson said.

Gott generally holds the school one or two times per year. It is, he said, an all-or-nothing shot. "They have to successfully complete each subject with a 70 or above or that's it, they're not firemen," the 14-year training veteran said. "If my men fail, we just let them go. We hire another person."

Cashier fired for shooting gunman who robbed convenience store

PASADENA (AP) — A convenience store cashier who wounded a gunman after he robbed her store was fired because she went against company policy that forbids employees to carry weapons while working.

Mary Woods, 56, said she was fired almost immediately after Tuesday's holdup at Billups convenience store.

"It's terrible, but that's the way life is," Ms. Woods said.

She was taking garbage behind the convenience store Tuesday afternoon when a man snuck up on her and stuck a gun in her ribs, said Pasadena police spokeswoman Betty Parks.

The gunman ordered Ms. Woods back into the store and told her to empty the cash register drawer into a paper bag, police said.

Ms. Woods followed the man's orders but pulled a .32-caliber revolver from her pocket and turned it on the thief when he wasn't looking. The thief also fired his gun, but Ms. Woods' bullet struck him near the spine.

"I was terrified," said Ms. Woods. "I just reacted automatically. I don't know what happened."

The gunman's shot struck a fire extinguisher, and the chemicals inside the device gushed out and made it impossible for either the cashier or the thief to see, police said.

Ms. Parks said the gunman ran off, leaving behind him his gun, the $40 that was in the cash register and a hat.

A police dog tracked down the man, who had collapsed in the front yard of a house. The residents of the home called police.

Ramon Avilez Jalomo, 31, was arrested in the incident and charged with attempted capital murder and aggravated robbery. Bond was set at $20,000 and Jalomo was in stable condition at Ben Taub Hospital's county jail ward.

Man having marital problems kills wife, two daughters , himself

PASADENA (AP) — A man who was having marital problems killed his wife and two daughters with a .30-caliber carbine and then used a .357-Magnum to kill himself, police said.

A police spokesman said Michael Marquette, 35, shot his wife, Catherine, 33, and his two daughters, Amy, 13, and Michelle, 10, as the wife attempted to enter their home Tuesday to get personal belongings and the girls.

The spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said Mrs. Marquette called police from her sister's home at 11:35 p.m. Tuesday to accompany her home. She told police she and her husband were having marital problems, the spokesman said.

"When she got to the front door it was locked and before she could open it, five shots were fired from inside," the spokesman said. The two officers accompanying Mrs. Marquette were unharmed.

Following the five shots, the two officers said they heard more shots inside the home and then a single shot.

Inside officers found Amy and Michelle with multiple wounds and Marquette, an unemployed truck driver, with a gunshot wound in the head, police said.

Mrs. Marquette and Amy were pronounced dead at the home at 11:55 p.m., police said.

Michelle was flown by Life Flight to Hermann Hospital in Houston where she died during surgery at 5 a.m., a hospital spokesman said.

Marquette was died early Wednesday at Ben Taub Hospital in Houston, a hospital spokesman said.

Marquette had recently been released from the Harris County Jail where he was being held for a Louisiana felony theft charge, the spokesman said.

Human consumption of pet foods dangerous?

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. I am a medical social worker with a home health care agency and have searched all over this town for information on the dangers of cat food for human consumption. I checked with senior agencies, the health district, aging services, cooperative extension and the Food and Drug Administration, but no one had any information for me. Our agency services many senior citizens, and on isolated occasions we have suspected a patient was eating cat food. Please provide anything you can regarding this problem. Sharon Sells, Las Vegas, Nev.

A. Cat food, particularly canned, is safe for humans to eat, says Christina Stark, R.D., and an extension associate at Cornell University, who checked with the veterinary school at Cornell for this information. Stark says that in terms of saving money on a food bill, however, canned cat food is relatively expensive, and a person would do much better by buying food for humans.

One occasionally reads reports of people eating dog food, too, which, according to a Cornell fact sheet written by Sue Travis, is also basically safe. Dog food, however, is formulated for a dog's system and is therefore high in calories and carbohydrates.

It contains a lot of animal parts a human doesn't generally eat, such as the esophagus, diaphragm, intestines and blood vessels. Dry dog food has a much greater chance of having bacterial and insect contamination than canned dog food. Although manufacturers make an effort to keep hair and hide trimmings, stomach contents and manure out of the dry food, inclusion of such items may occur.

Cat food is so expensive nowadays that several people I know are making up their own weekly batches from the cheaper cuts of meat and poultry and adding fillers such as bread and pasta. They also put their cats out more often to hunt.

Q. I just read your column on the two women who tasted from the vanilla bottles in the supermarket, then screwed the caps back on and walked away. Yuck is right. Now I'm wondering if you could help me with a question. Somehow I read not to use the vanilla that comes from Mexico. Do you have any information on this? Mrs. M.J. Wolf, Clinton, Iowa

A. There are three ways to make a liquid that tastes like vanilla: One is by extracting the liquid from real vanilla beans, called vanilla extract and its the most expensive; another is by making a liquid which tries to imitate the color and flavor of vanilla by chemical means, called imitation vanilla and it's expensive; another way is by extracting the liquid from tonka beans, which taste like vanilla. This is called coumarin.

It is illegal to sell coumarin in the U.S., as it was banned by the FDA as a food or food additive in 1954. You can buy it in Mexico along the side of the road for a little as $1.50 a quart, but don't do it. It contains warfarin, a derivative of coumarin that damages the liver. Warfarin is used in rat poison as it has blood-thinning effects, causing the rodent to die from hemorrhaging.

Interestingly enough, warfarin, also known as dicumarol, is contained in certain prescription medicines known as anticoagulants, which decrease the clotting ability of the blood and therefore help to prevent harmful clots from forming in blood vessels. The side effects can be quite serious.

Q. Round Table Pizza advertises on television that they use only real cheese on their pizzas and hints that other pizza places do not. We eat at Pizza Hut often and now I'm wondering what they use on their pizzas. May I also ask what is wrong with real cheese? L.V., Port Chester, N.Y.

A. There is nothing wrong with real cheese, but in a fact sheet supplied by Pizza Hut it claims that many of their competitors have switched to artificial cheese because real cheese is being priced out of the market by government supports.

Pizza Hunt claims to be the nation's largest user of real mozzarella cheese, more than 100 million pounds per year. They also buy 3.8 million bushels of wheat and 17 million pounds of soybean oil. In addition, every day 7,500 hogs and 1,600 head of cattle give their lives for Pizza Hut, and every day 85,000 cows give their milk. This fact should come as a surprise to a reader who wrote to complain that she could not get any milk for her coffee at Pizza Hut, only non-dairy creamer.

Here's one for trivia buffs: What single company holds the largest number of beer licenses in the country? You guessed it — Pizza Hut!

BETTER BUSINESS

Arbitration workable alternative

By LINDA TRUITT

Arbitrating marketplace problems as an alternative to filing lawsuits is gaining nationwide recognition and credibility. As the cost of litigation continues to rise, government, business and consumers will be turning to arbitration as a viable method in settling marketplace disputes.

A good example of how successful arbitration can be is the agreement between the Federal Trade Commission and General Motors Corp. requiring the company to set up a program in conjunction with the Better Business Bureaus under which consumers may obtain reimbursement or repairs for problems with engines or transmissions in GM cars or light duty trucks.

GM agreed to the order after the FTC alleged in 1980 that GM failed to notify consumers of serious problems in the THM 200 transmission; camshafts in 305- and 350-cubic-inch V-8 gasoline engines; and fuel injectors and injector pumps in 350-cubic-inch diesel engines. The order is the first to incorporate a nationwide third-party arbitration program as a remedy for such problems.

The FTC compiled data on consumer settlements submitted by BBBs between mid-January 1984 and mid-November 1984 in five of the 150 cities where the arbitration program is operating. The figures show 9,529 consumers in Atlanta, Cleveland, Dallas, Milwaukee and Salt Lake City received more than $3.3 million during the 10-month period. The average complaint was settled in 40 days, and the mean payment for consumers who requested cash was $358.

FTC Chairman James C. Miller III has stated the FTC is extremely pleased with the results. He expressed approval at being able to get money directly into the hands of consumers in a short period of time.

The data covers only 10,000 out of an estimated 100,000 or more consumers nationwide believed to have completed the program to date. The data also does not reflect payments GM made directly to consumers who in turn did not notify the BBB, or the cash value of some repairs performed by GM.

This specific program is scheduled to continue through 1991.

For more information on this program call the BBB Autoline, 563-5264. To register a complaint the BBB needs to have the make, model and year of the vehicle, the vehicle identification number, a brief description of the problem, and, if possible, copies of repair bills and cancelled checks.

Activists seek ban on diaper rash lotion

WASHINGTON (AP) — An activist health group asked the Food and Drug Administration today to ban a popular lotion for treating diaper rash, contending its active ingredient has been shown in animal tests to cause nerve damage.

The Public Citizen Health Research Group said in a petition being filed with the FDA that the drug, most commonly known as Vioform, can be absorbed through the skin of infants in amounts that raise serious concerns about its dangers.

The active ingredient in the drug is iodochlorhydroxyquin, also known as clioquinol, which already has been banned in the United States and most other countries in its oral form because of its hazard, the group said.

The petition acknowledged there have been no cases of nerve damage attributed to the lotion, but argued that "there is reason to believe that this form of the drug poses a significant threat of toxicity."

Recent tests on dogs at the University of Nebraska indicate that as much as 40 percent of the drug rubbed on the skin for treating diaper rash can be absorbed through the skin and can accumulate in tissue, the group said.

"Because there is significant and rapid absorption of iodochlorhydroxyquin through the skin, and because of the known toxicity of (the substance) in animal skin absorption experiments at doses similar to those that infants may get, all products containing this ingredient should be removed from the market," said the group's director, Dr. Sidney M. Wolfe.

Vioform, a non-prescription drug, and Vioform-Hydrocortisone, the main prescription version, are produced by Ciba-Geigy Corp. of Summit, N.J. The prescription version also is produced under other names in smaller quantities by other manufacturers.

At Ciba-Geigy, spokesman Joe Boyd said company officials hadn't seen the petition, making it difficult to respond. But, he said, "we have checked all our adverse reaction reports on our computers, which date back to 1968, and we do not have a single report which documents harm to infants or adults."

He said "we have gathered substantial data regarding the safety of the product," including a January 1985 Food and Drug Administration advisory report on over-the-counter drugs. That report, according to Boyd, said the product "is safe and has been shown to be safe. ..."

The Health Research Group, which was organized by consumer advocate Ralph Nader, was joined in its petition by Drs. Sidney Stohs and Jeffrey Baldwin of the University of Nebraska Medical Center, who conducted the animal testing, and Dr. John Graef, a pediatrician and chief of the toxicology clinic at the Harvard Medical School.

The petition said that the Nebraska researchers originally had intended to test the drug's absorption on infants' skin, but canceled those studies after the results of the animal tests were known, saying the potential hazard to the children would make further testing unethical.

In the Nebraska tests, a solution containing the substance in the same concentration as Vioform was rubbed on five dogs twice daily for 28 days. Of the five, the petition said, all lost weight; all became "lethargic and less responsive to stimuli;" one died and one was paralyzed in the hind legs. Four of the five dogs, including the one that died, suffered liver damage.

The amount applied to the dogs' skin was about 17 milligrams per day per kilogram of body weight, the study said. An infant receiving three treatments a day for diaper rash could receive 9 milligrams, it said.

However, the petition said the difference in the amount absorbed into the system may be smaller. Inflamed skin, such as a rash, absorbs more readily than normal skin, the petition said, and infant skin is more permeable than adult skin.

The chief danger of the substance is a malady called subacute myelooptic neuropathy, or SMON, which is a poisoning of the nervous system that can result in blindness and paralysis, the Health Research Group said.

The oral form of Vioform once was used to treat traveller's diarrhea, but it was pulled from the market more than a decade ago after being linked to more than 10,000 cases of SMON in Japan and other countries, the group said.

Vioform is a popular treatment for diaper rash. More than 740,000 prescriptions were written for the drug in 1984, of which more than 600,000 were for the Ciba-Geigy version, the Health Research Group said.

Pet owners told to beware of cheap dog, cat foods

Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — Even though he had a home and a family to call his own, the Doberman pinscher looked as though he were slowly starving to death.

He was 18 to 20 pounds underweight for an adult dog of his size, said Fred Lee, executive director of the San Diego Humane Society and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

When calls from concerned neighbors brought the dog's condition to the attention of animal welfare workers in 1982, it must have seemed like just another case of neglect and cruelty to animals.

But this case was different, Lee said. The dog's owners claimed they fed him regularly.

"At the time, we claimed that they weren't feeding the animal because he was so thin," Lee said. When the dog continued to worsen, he was removed from his home and taken to the Humane Society's local animal shelter.

"We felt that if we didn't take some kind of action, the dog would die," he said, remembering feelings of frustration and bewilderment about the situation. "We asked them what had they done for the dog and they said, 'Well, we fed it more.' But it was even thinner than before."

After a thorough physical examination, which determined that the animal had no internal parasites, the dog was fed a regular shelter diet consisting of a well-known, nationally marketed brand of dog food.

He gained almost 5 pounds the first week, Lee said.

"Our vet said the food they (his owners) were feeding him was a contributing factor," Lee said. "They told us they were feeding him generic dog food."

Lee's story illustrates what some veterinarians, armed with the recently released results of nutritional studies, claim are dangerous dietary deficiencies in two classes of pet foods.

Some generic dog food products, industry officials say, meet only minimum nutritional maintenance requirements for adult dogs and are often misused by pet owners who feed them to dogs with greater nutritional needs, such as growing puppies, active adult dogs and pregnant dogs.

Even when used properly, the nutritional quality of generic dry dog foods has been questioned. Preliminary results of a Veterinary Medical Teaching Hospital study at the University of California at Davis refer to "generic dog food-associated disease," nutritional deficiencies that appeared when dogs were fed only those products.

The results of the study, soon to be published in the Journal of the American Veterinary Medical Association, indicate a zinc deficiency that prompted skin lesions on the test dogs, said Dr. Peter Ehrke, who led the research.

Questions have also been raised regarding another class of pet foods — the private label, or supermarket-brand variety. These products are often labeled complete and balanced for all stages of a pet's life, but sometimes contain poor-quality ingredients that make what nutrients they do contain indigestible.

Abuse of animals' prescription drugs dangerous, official warns

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some veterinarians could be threatening the food Americans eat by illegally dispensing prescription drugs for animals, federal officials say.

Despite potential problems, however, a top Food and Drug Administration official said the agency had received no specific complaints about food supplies contaminated by toxic drugs.

Asked if any consumers have been hurt, Lester M. Crawford, director of the FDA's Center for Veterinary Medicine, said he had "no evidence" of that.

But he added that illegally sold prescription drugs "could contaminate the meat" and other animal-based foods if they were used on a large scale.

Another FDA official, Clifford G. Shane, who is based in Kansas City, said the government is facing a growing problem stemming from the illegal sale of prescription drugs by veterinarians and distributors.

Both men appeared recently before a House Government Operations subcommittee, chaired by Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y.

Discussing the problem, Weiss said he viewed the illegal sale of animal drugs "as potentially dangerous as the misuse of human drugs."

And Weiss said his preliminary findings indicate there are "fundamental shortcomings" in the FDA's willingness to regulate the development, use and marketing of drugs for animals.

Of the roughly 20,000 drugs on the market for animals, Weiss said his figures indicate only 2,500 have been formally approved under proper government procedures.

Most of the unapproved drugs, Crawford said, are given to dogs and cats. But some are available for livestock, which are often fattened artificially, he acknowleged.

DEAR ABBY

Man wonders if good cook has right marriage ingredients

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Please answer this as soon as possible. I have been living with this wonderful girl since last October. She is a good, clean housekeeper and wonderful cook. She always has supper ready when I get home from work. She is 23 and I am 24, and she wants to get married. I have never been married and neither has she.

The problem is that she had been the same as a wife to four other men before she met me, but she promised to be faithful and true to me as long as we live. I love her very much and told her I would write to you and do whatever you said. — UNDECIDED IN WHEELING, W.VA.

DEAR UNDECIDED: What's the hurry? A decision that you expect to live with for a lifetime deserves more thought than you have given to it. I have no way of predicting whether this girl will be true to you as long as you both live. (Nor have you — or she, for that matter.) Don't marry anyone because she's a good cook and housekeeper. You can hire someone for that. If you have to ask me whether you should marry her, I say don't. It's easier to get married than divorced. And much cheaper.

DEAR ABBY: Last week, a busload of us senior citizens went to Niagara Falls and Canada for an outing, financed by our town (West Edmeston, N.Y.)

There were 37 of us on this trip and we had a wonderful time except for one thing — the Falls on the American side were grossly neglected and looked terrible. But the Falls on the Canadian side were beautiful, bright with flowers and well-maintained. The comparison made us Americans feel somewhat ashamed and therefore sad.

I know it would cost our government a few dollars to beautify our side of the Falls, but it would be well worth it to restore our national pride.

I sure hope I see this in print. -SAD SENIOR

DEAR SAD: And I sure hope Secretary of the Interior Donald Hodel sees it, too.

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Tired of Waiting," whose in-laws' graves are still unmarked after five years because one of their sons wanted to put something on his father's headstone crediting him with having served in the Army overseas but didn't know how to word it.

They should contact their local Veterans Administration office and apply for a monument, available in granite or marble. It is free to any deceased veteran who was discharged under conditions other than dishonorable. The serviceperson's name, dates of birth and death, branch of service, last rank attained and war served in can be engraved on the marker or headstone.

The family need pay only for the installation, as even the freight is paid for by the government. — GLAD TO HELP

DEAR GLAD: Thank you for helping to solve this serious problem.

DEAR ABBY: I am presently going with a boy who is five years older than I am, and my mother is having a fit! She says he's too old for me.

Now, here's the kicker: My mother married a man who was 18 years older than she was, so I don't see how she can tell me that a man five years older than me is too old for me. Her marriage isn't perfect, but it's not a disaster either.

Maybe you can shed some light on this situation. — CONFUSED

DEAR CONFUSED: How old are you? If you're 21 and he's 26, that's one thing. But if you're 13, and he is 18, that's something else.

(Problems? Write to Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. All correspondence is confidential.)

Cinnamon rolls 'sense'-able treat

By LINDA ANDERSON

The sight of a clear dawn breaking over snow-capped mountains, the scent of the ocean and the purr of a kitten are all pleasing to various senses.

But for pleasing all five senses at the same time, nothing beats good, fresh, hot, sweet, gooey, homemade cinnamon rolls. They smell, feel, sound and look terrific, but best of all, they taste died-and-gone-to-heaven good.

Some expert cooks can whip up a batch of these perfect cinnamon rolls in nothing flat (my children's grandmother even makes the process look easy), but for those of us who would rather eat them than make them, really wonderful cinnamon rolls can take more time, patience and baking ability than is available.

Pillsbury Co., realizing some cooks need much more help than others, have long marketed refrigerated dough — including cinnamon rolls — in cans. All the baker has to do is open the can, place the dough on cookie sheets and put it in the oven. Even I can handle that.

Now the company has introduced Pillsbury's Best quick cinnamon rolls (sounds like a put-down of Pillsbury's regular cinnamon rolls), which are supposed to be the best in the field. Pillsbury thinks so, anyway.

The usual taste-testers — adult, children and teen — tested ordinary Pillsbury's cinnamon rolls in a can against Pillsbury's Best for taste, price and advertising accuracy.

Pillsbury's regular cinnamon rolls cost 99-cents for a six-ounce can of five, complete with icing. Pillsbury's Best, in a 16-ounce box with dough to make eight rolls and a packet of icing, cost $1.79 — which averages out to about 20-cents each for regular cinnamon roll, and 22-cents each for "Best."

Both are baked in the same easy way — grease pan, put dough on pan, bake at 375°F for 13-17 minutes for regular or 350°F for 25-30 minutes for Best, remove from oven, cool and ice with already-prepared packet of icing.

Both smell terrific while they are in the oven, giving the house the aroma of 'real home baking.

And both labels contain information telling consumers how to contact the company about the products, although the regular cinnamon rolls' label lists a mailing address (The Pillsbury Company, Consumer Affairs, Box 550, Minneapolis, Minn. 55440-0550), while Best cinnamon rolls' label lists an invitation and a telephone number: "If you have questions, comments, or are not satisfied with the quality of this product, call toll-free 800-328-4466."

The adult and teen taste-testers agreed that they preferred the Best cinnamon rolls, which tasted more like the made-from-scratch kind. The regular rolls tasted as if they had come from a can — which they had. The small children decided they really didn't like cinnamon rolls. At all. They will probably change their minds when their taste-buds mature.

Regular cinnamon rolls in a can aren't much more than "just OK," but, like their advertising claims, the Pillsbury's Best cinnamon rolls really are best — well, better, anyway.

Kitchen appliances' uses expandable

By MARIAN FARR

Marian Farr

Rather than buy more electrical kitchen appliances, many consumers would be better off making full use of the ones they currently own. Too many of us have electric fry pans, griddles or blenders gathering dust in cupboards while we shop for food processors and electric woks. Manufacturers try to develop appliances that are as versatile as possible to improve sales, but consumers tend to habitually use them for one primary function.

Expanding the use of appliances you already own requires deliberate action, but it can be worth it. For example, greater use of a blender or food processor can save money by reducing your purchase of prepared foods. The extra processing done by the commercial company makes food more expensive. You can use the appliance to perform some of the same tasks and save those dollars.

You can make new uses for appliances you already have if you:

— Periodically read the "use and care" book that came with the appliance, magazine and newspaper articles for new ideas on how to cook with it.

— Analyze recipes. What processes are required to complete the product and what appliances will simplify these processes? You may not do things in the same order or in the same manner as when you do them by hand.

— Combine processss whenever possible. For example, in making a meat loaf you could crumble the crackers or bread in a blender first, followed by the addition of the eggs, milk and seasoning. This mixture could then be combined with the meat or the entire meat loaf could be mixed in a food processor.

— Consider alternative uses for the appliance. An electric fry pan will do more than fry foods. It can be used for stir-frying, baking pizza, cake or muffins; popping corn or slow cooking. That means you can eliminate a wok, toaster-oven and popcorn popper. Or if you have a wok, try using it for searing, braising, poaching, deep frying, stewing and popping corn.

Let your imagination and determination expand the use of those small appliances already taking up space in your kitchen.

Officials agree to seek federal approval of election

AUSTIN (AP) — Yielding to federal pressure, state officials have agreed to request Justice Department approval of the special 1st District congressional election.

But Attorney General Jim Mattox says Texas will continue to appeal what he called "this important state's rights issue," and Gov. Mark White predicts Texas ultimately will win its case.

Without comment Wednesday, U.S. Supreme Court Justice Byron R. White turned down the state's request for a stay of a lower court order that directed Texas to obtain the Justice Department's OK.

Mattox and Secretary of State Myra McDaniel said the request would be submitted by Friday's deadline.

White, maintaining the Justice Department's motives were political, said he is "confident that eventually the higher court will rule in our favor and the political maneuverings of the Justice Department will be seen for what they were intended to be — politics."

Although Texas will request approval of the June 29 special election and the Aug. 3 runoff, Mattox said the state also will appeal to the full Supreme Court its argument that Justice Department permission isn't necessary.

"We are submitting this information under protest, and we do intend to pursue this important state's rights issue," Mattox said. "We will continue the appeal to protect the integrity of future special elections and to protect the governor's statutory authority to set such elections."

In Saturday's runoff, Democrat Jim Chapman edged Republican Edd Hargett by less than 2,000 votes. The runoff was scheduled after no candidate got a majority in the June 29 special election to replace Rep. Sam Hall, a Democrat who resigned to become a federal judge.

A three-judge federal court panel last week threatened to void the election results unless the state asks for Justice Department clearance.

When Justice White refused to block that order, Mrs. McDaniel said Texas was left with few options.

"I suppose one has a choice if one doesn't mind being in contempt of court," she said. "The court said it would void the election if we did not make the submission. That is not a desirable outcome."

"We are submitting this information under protest, and we do intend to pursue this important state's rights issue. We will continue the appeal to protect the integrity of future special elections and to protect the governor's statutory authority to set such elections."

— Attorney General Jim Mattox

The Reagan administration challenged both the June special election and the runoff, contending White should have gotten Justice Department clearance because it is required by the federal Voting Rights Act.

That 1965 law, designed to protect minority voters, prohibits election changes in Southern states without federal approval. Justice Department lawyers said the election dates to fill the 1st District vacancy were different than those specified by Texas law for such cases.

But state officials disagree.

"We feel we should not have to preclear all future elections," Mrs. McDaniel said.

Mattox charged that the Republican-run Justice Department challenged the special election for political reasons, hoping to confuse voters and reduce Democratic turnout in the Northeast Texas district where no Republican has won since Reconstruction.

"To sit back and allow a politically motivated Justice Department to interfere with our state elections simply is not feasible, particularly in light of the fact that the current Justice Department is clearly trying to intervene for partisan reasons," Mattox said Wednesday.

Mattox predicted the election will win federal approval, adding, "The voters in the 1st Congressional District have spoken, despite the Justice Department's attempt to intimidate them."

Man's second wife killed same way as first wife

HOUSTON (AP) — The slain second wife of a Houston restaurateur was shot in the head at close range with a small-caliber weapon, as was the businessman's first wife, according to a medical examiner.

Paula Brawley Goss, 42, wife of former dinner theater owner Dean Goss, was found dead around midnight July 31 in the couple's southwest Houston home, investigators said.

No arrests have been made in the case.

In March 1982, Goss' first wife, Elaine Goss, 43, was found dead in the same house. She had been shot in the back of the head at close range with a .22-caliber handgun, authorities said, and her murder has never been solved.

Dean Goss was recovering from surgery at Methodist Hospital at the time of his second' wifes slaying and was released Monday night, said hospital spokesman David Blackshear.

Paula Goss' assailant apparently placed the barrel of a .25-caliber pistol at the back of her neck and fired one shot, said Dr. Joseph Jachimczyk, Harris County medical examiner.

Her throat also was slashed, she had been stabbed in the chest, had a cut on her back and three head wounds that were caused by a blunt instrument, the medical examiner said.

"According to her body temperature, she died just a short time before she was found," Jachimczyk said Tuesday after officially declaring Mrs. Goss' death a homicide.

The direction of the bullet indicated the gunman fired the shot down into the body, as if Mrs. Goss was kneeling at the time, the medical examiner said. However, she could have been slouched over from the other injuries when she was shot, he said.

Inmate wants ashes in tiny coffin

Death row inmate Charles Raumbaugh has made a tiny coffin out of matchsticks in which he wants his ashes placed after his scheduled execution next month.

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Charles Rumbaugh, a Texas death row inmate scheduled for execution next month, says he wants to be cremated and his ashes placed in a tiny coffin made of matchsticks.

"I look at my casket and I say to myself, 'I'm going to be inside.' It's appropriate," said Charles Rumbaugh, scheduled to die by injection Sept. 11.

Rumbaugh was convicted in the April 4, 1975, killing of Michael Fiorillo, a jewelry store owner in Amarillo.

The 28-year-old inmate said Wednesday in an interview at the Texas Department of Corrections' Ellis Unit that he is a "non-participant" in his scheduled death date.

"This game has been going on for 10½ years and it's gotten a little old," he said. "If they execute me this time, fine. If they don't, that's fine too. But if they don't do it this time, they'll do it some other time."

If his court-ordered punishment is carried out, Rumbaugh said he wants his body cremated and his ashes placed in the hand-made casket and sent to a female friend.

"She has specific instructions on what to do with them," Rumbaugh said without elaborating.

Rumbaugh said he doesn't know if anyone is working to block his execution.

"As far as I know I don't have any lawyers. If one wants to volunteer to do something, that's fine. I'm doing what I want to do, which is nothing," he said.

"This game has been going on for 10½ years and it's gotten a little old. If they execute me this time, fine. If they don't, that's fine too. But if they don't do it this time, they'll do it some other time."

—Charles Rumbaugh

Rumbaugh's first execution date was set for July 22, 1982, after he wrote a state district judge saying he wanted an execution date set.

His parents then went to court, claiming their son's action proved he was insane and incapable of deciding whether to continue appeals.

A federal judge in Texas stayed the execution, but ruled in February 1983 that Rumbaugh had been able to make a rational choice — even though he tried to get himself killed during a competency hearing.

At the hearing, Rumbaugh pulled a makeshift metal knife, lunged at a deputy U.S. marshal and shouted "Shoot me!" He was wounded in the left arm and chest.

Hurricane-force winds overturn small planes

LUFKIN (AP) — Small planes were overturned at the Angelina County Airport by a severe storm packing hurricane-force winds that moved through the Lufkin area Wednesday night, officials said.

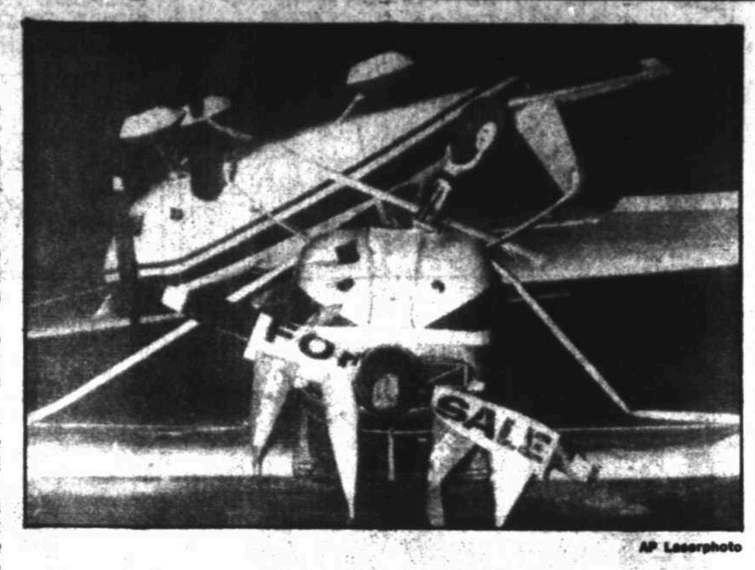

George Ellis, with the Federal Aviation Administration Flight Service Station, said the winds near Lufkin reached 72 knots (83 mph) at 6:45 p.m.

"I didnt wait around to keep watching the machine to see if they went any higher, but i don't believe they did," Ellis said.

The winds knocked out the windshield of his car and others on the parking lot, Ellis said, and damaged many airplanes.

No tornado report was issued and the weather service office in Fort Worth said the damage could have been caused by strong straight-line winds.

Other heavy thunderstorms Wednesday afternoon were a few miles northeast of Corsicana and between Lake Whitney and Hamilton. Other showers and thunderstorms were in West Texas between Midland and San Angelo and in the Trans-Pecos between Fort Hancock and southern New Mexcio.

Two airplanes owned by Bob Sandel of Burke, including one previously for sale, were destroyed at the Angelina County Airport Wednesday when winds of more than 80 mph blew through the airport. Sandel, owner of Bob's Aviation, said his three planes, worth $42,000, were destroyed. At least five planes and some hangars were damaged in the storm.

Inmates become sick

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Prison officials say food poisoning may have caused about 300 inmates at the Texas Department of Corrections Diagnostic Unit to suddenly become ill.

About 8 p.m. Tuesday, prisoners began reporting symptoms of diarrhea, vomiting and nausea, and 114 inmates required medical treatment, said TDC spokesman Phil Guthrie.

"The symptoms were painful but not considered serious," he said Wednesday. "Initially it was thought the illness may have been transmitted by some infection that was present in one of the kitchen workers. But they're also checking food left over from last night."

Most of the sick prisoners were no longer ill or had recovered Wednesday, Guthrie said. Seven inmates who already suffer from unrelated health problems remained in the Huntsville Unit, where they were taken for observation.

The Diagnostic Unit, located near Huntsville, is the facilty at which new inmates are housed until they are permanently assigned to one of TDC's 27 regular prisons.

Houston men indicted

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Three men who placed loan ads in The Wall Street Journal were indicted on wire and mail fraud charges by a federal grand jury in connection with an advance fee loan scheme, FBI agent Robert Pence said Wednesday.

A grand jury in Charlotte indicted Thomas Southerland, 52, of Hickory, Quimet Petersen, 48, of Houston, and John Bennett, 49, of Houston, on charges that they furnished worthless loan commitments from August 1980 through March 1983, Pence said.

Residents from Utah, California, Texas, Oklahoma and Missouri were among people who were furnished with phony advance loan fees from the three men, the indictment alleges.

Southerland is charged with 15 counts of wire fraud and mail fraud. He faces up to 75 years in prison and $15,000 in fines; Peterson is charged with eight counts of wire fraud and faces up to 40 years in prison and $8,000 in fines and Bennett is charged with one count of wire fraud and faces up to five years and $1,000 in fines.

State senator hospitalized

HOUSTON (AP) — State Senator Craig Washington was in stable condition at Hermann Hospital after being admitted with chest pains, a hospital spokesman said.

Washington, 43, was flown by Life Flight from Kersting Memorial Hospital in Liberty on Tuesday. The Democratic senator was in the middle of jury selection in Liberty when he started complaining of chest pains, District Clerk Joy K. McManus said.

A spokesman for the senator said Wednesday he "is under observation and doing fine."

District Judge Clarence Cain on Wednesday ordered a week-long recess in the capital murder trial of David Wayne DeBlanc, whom Washington is defending.

DeBlanc, 29, of Houston, is charged with killing the Rev. Henry Bouchie, a 68-year-old Catholic priest, during a Feb. 18, 1983 robbery at Our Mother of Mercy Church in Ames.

UT head finalists chosen

AUSTIN (AP) — The five finalists for president of the University of Texas-Austin include the presidents of the University of Vermont and the University of Iowa, and a top adminstrators for the University of Illinois system, the Austin American-Statesman said.

James Duncan, chairman of the advisory committee and executive vice chancellor for academic affairs for the UT system, said he expects regents to choose a president during a closed-door session Friday morning.

The newspaper said the finalists are Lattie Finch Coor, University of Vermont president; James O. Freedman, University of Iowa president; Morton W. Weir, vice president for academic affairs in the University of Illinois system; Gerhard Fonken, vice president for academic affairs and research at UT-Austin; and William Cunningham, dean of the College of Business Administration and the Graduate School of Business at UT-Austin.

The finalists were drawn from a list of 141 people who were nominated or applied for the presidency after Flawn announced his retirement plans late last year. Flawn is scheduled to step down from the presidency Aug. 31.

Official undermined efforts to curb guard brutality, report says

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The current director of the Texas Department of Corrections may have taken actions that undermined efforts to curb brutality by prison guards, according to a federal court monitor's report.

The report, which was filed Wednesday in U.S. District Court in Houston and had been obtained earlier by the Houston Chronicle, examines guard brutality in the Texas Department of Corrections from May 1984 to February 1985, when Raymond Procunier was prison director.

Actions by Lane McCotter, who was then director of prison operations, apparently undermined TDC's efforts to stop guard brutality, the Chronicle quoted the report as saying.

McCotter replaced Procunier as director after he retired in June.

"Lower-ranking officers are now usually responsible for the actual use of excessive force. Nonetheless, failure to report and false (reporting) continue at almost all rank levels," the report stated. "It appears TDC does not regard the failure to report the use of force very seriously."

The 109-page report, when complete, will be filed with U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice of Tyler, who in 1981 ordered widespread reforms in the prison system.

The document was prepared by court-appointed monitors Paul Belazis and Gary A.Kuiper, according to the Chronicle's copyright story published Wednesday.

McCotter, the document said, in October 1984 promoted TDC guard Richard Simmons to captain at the Coffield Unit in Anderson County. Eight months earlier, Simmons was demoted from the rank of major for his alleged role in the April 1983 beatings of five inmates.

McCotter contended he was not aware of Simmons' demotion, but Simmons said he discussed it with McCotter two weeks before he was made a captain, the Chronicle reported.

TDC Chairman Robert Gunn told the Chronicle that McCotter probably suffered from "sincere fuzzy memories" and did not lie about the incident.

But Kuiper said, "The monitor cannot accept the explanation that Capt. Simmons' promotion was a matter of administrative oversight."

Gunn declined to comment on the report, but said, "We're doing the best job we can and if it doesn't satisfy the public, then they should do something about it."

"We're never going to be able to get on with the job if we're going to two-bit these things from now on," Gunn said.

Contributing the the guard brutality, the report said, are poorly kept records on TDC employees.

In one incident, prison officials erroneously thought a guard who allegedly beat an Eastham Unit inmate in April 1983 had quit his job. But TDC later learned it was the guard's father who had quit.

The guard was suspended and fired in December after court-appointed monitors informed TDC of the mistake.

The report also criticized TDC for the length of time — up to 10 months — spent to complete some investigations into inmate beatings and the closing of some brutality probes that needed to be reopened.

Procunier and McCotter were criticized in the document for handing out more severe punishments to guards caught possessing drugs than with those found to have beaten inmates.

But Procunier, who now lives in California, disagreed.

"There's nothing like a hostage situation from an emotional standpoint," Procunier told The Dallas Morning News.

After six months of coping with nothing but favorable breaks, which resulted in a wallet that was several hundred dollars lighter, things were beginning to turn around for Trump Coup Tommy. He was beginning to run into more than his share of bad trump breaks, and his remarkable skill at handling those contracts almost offset the thousands of points he frittered away with bad bidding or flubbing simple plays.

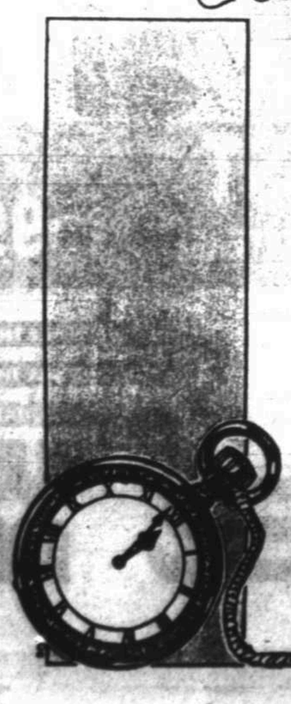

For a while this looked like another hand where Tommy might find a way to go down in a cold slam, reached in exemplary fashion. North's hand was all prime controls, so he correctly treated it as worth more than 17 points. His bid of four clubs showed concentrated values in the suit, support for hearts and a maximum no trump. Tommy wasted no time in getting to slam.

West led a spade. Tommy won in hand and cashed the ace-king of trumps to get what, for him, was good news. He had a certain trump loser and, it seemed, an apparently cast-iron contract was going down the drain, since Tommy had a spade loser as well.

However, Tommy saw that, if East had started with at least three spades, two diamonds and three clubs, the contract could still be made. He cashed the queen of trumps and the three high clubs. Next came the ace-king of diamonds and, when both of those held, Tommy was almost ready to claim his contract. He ruffed a diamond, crossed to the ace of spades and led dummy's last diamond. If East ruffed, Tommy would discard his spade loser and take his trump at the end; if East discarded, Tommy would ruff to score his 12th trick.

Baryshnikov pauses for knee surgery

Barishnikov

NEW YORK (AP) — Ballet dancer Mikhail Baryshnikov will continue his duties as artistic director of American Ballet Theater after surgery for damaged cartilage in a knee next week, a spokesman for the company said.

Baryshnikov, 38, will not dance with the troupe during scheduled engagements at Wolf Trap Farm in Vienna, Va., Aug. 26-31, or in New York Sept. 3-15, said the spokesman, Bob Pontarelli.

The Soviet defector hurt his right knee in a class last week in Cleveland during a tour of Baryshnikov and Company, which had appeared in 20 cities.

Surgery was scheduled for next Tuesday after the knee, which required surgery two years ago, worsened, Pontarelli said.

"We will be watching his recovery very carefully, and hope that he will be able to rejoin the American Ballet Theater on tour by January," Pontarelli said. "He will continue as artistic director during the whole time."

ALTAMONTE SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — The new Miss Florida-USA says that an automobile accident in which a pedestrian was killed and she was arrested on a charge of vehicular homicide "can't be forgotten."

Despite the charge, Kathy Rosenwinkel, 20, of Altamonte Springs, can keep her crown and represent the state in the Miss USA Pageant in Miami in May, pageant officials said Tuesday.

As a result of the Feb. 27, 1984, accident, Miss Rosenwinkel is in a four-year pre-trial program in Alachua County. If her record is clean at the end of that time, charges will be dropped.

"I love people," she said. The accident "will stick with me the rest of my life. It can't be forgotten."

Hefner

WASHINGTON (LAT) — Look out world, Playboy's Hugh Hefner is writing his autobiography and Bantam Books, Inc. has bought it, paying the hipster of hedonism another one of those big-bucks contracts that recently have become so common. Bantam isn't saying exactly how much it is paying, but is letting it be known that it is paying him something in the "substantial seven-figure range" for hardback, paperback and world rights. Hefner's agent, Kathy Robbins, said she believed the more than a million-dollar figure is unprecedented for an autobiography of a nonpolitical personality.

Just this week, political personality and former OMB director David Stockman, sold his book for more than $2 million. Hefner, who founded Playboy magazine in 1953 and developed it into a multi-million dollar empire, will tell his story with the writing talents of Leo Janos, the successful author who helped write famed test pilot Gen. Chuck Yaeger's book, "Yeager: An Autobiography," currently number one on the nonfiction best sellers lists.

Hefner, who has spent much of his time dressed in silk pajamas and surrounded by an ostentatious bevy of well-endowed centerfolds, is credited with helping revolutionize sexual attitudes and mores over the past 30 years. The book is expected to be published in 1987.

Combative Blake survives — in spite of himself

ENTERTAINMENT

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Robert Blake is a survivor, in spite of himself.

"I'm about three-quarters loser. I'm much more comfortable coming off the ropes," the combative actor said. "All I have to hear is somebody say I'm through, then I'm up. As soon as I get on the gravy train, I blow it."

Blake, the child actor from "Our Gang" who never really grew up, gets another chance to test his psychological mettle and a network's patience with his new NBC series "Hell Town" this season.

Given his past as a royal pain but a ratings winner on ABC's "Baretta," it's a good bet that Blake won't make things easy for NBC executives, a breed he disdains by calling them "suits" at every reference.

For the series, in which Blake plays a former convict turned barrio priest, NBC gave him an initial order of six episodes. He demanded — and got — 13. NBC wanted guest stars, but Blake prefers to populate his cast with real street people and pay them $2,500 — "or less if I can."

"If NBC wants somebody for more, they have to pay the breakage," Blake said.

Blake warns that he will lie, cajole, demand and break rules, whatever it takes, to get things done. "I have no responsibility to the truth. My only responsibility is to 'Hell Town.' If I told the network the truth, there'd be no 'Hell Town.' "

So far, he's gotten his way. "If this show fails, I will have no one to blame but myself," he said in a recent interview.

His downfall in the past has been an all-consuming, all-controlling, tempestuous approach to work. His self-designated credits for the pilot included writing, directing, hiring the cast, acting and brawling with the network. "This time I can't do too much, otherwise I'll run me into the ground and be a drug addict," he said.

After "Baretta" went off the air in 1978, Blake turned to drugs. That, in addition to his reputation as a troublemaker, kept him virtually unemployed. "The whole enchilada was falling apart," he said.

But three years ago, the syndicated Operation Prime Time took a chance on him as Jimmy Hoffa in a miniseries. He got great reviews, was well-behaved on the set and took orders reasonably well.

Squat and dark, Blake, 50, isn't going to get leading man parts. He also doesn't want to do another cop show like "Baretta," so he said he turned down action pilots, including ABC's "Blue Thunder" last season.

He figured the only way to get the role he wanted was to write the script and produce the project. He decided to try the role of an unorthodox, battling priest, even though TV series with religious leads have not been successful.

"All human probems are the same," Blake said. "The trick is to solve them without a gun, without a badge, and entertain people without a machine gun...My attitude is I'm all you got, otherwise there'd be another cop show in the time slot."

The two-hour movie pilot was broadcast last March and was a hit, resulting in NBC's best performance against top-rated "Dynasty."

Now, on a weekly basis, "Hell Town" is up against "Dynasty." "That's part of the deal. It's like climbing the mountain," Blake said. "I never made any small claim to sanity."

Actress gets to play 'Scarlett' role

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Delta Burke came to Hollywood hoping to be cast as Vivien Leigh in a film biography about the Academy Award-winning star of "Gone With the Wind" and "A Streetcar Named Desire."

"I'd heard Marisa Berenson was doing some pictures as Vivien Leigh in this outfit from 'Anna Karenina,' " she said. "I had an outfit like it and I took some pictures. The movie never got made but I was in that kind of a mood when I went in for 'Charleston.' "

The producers of the television movie "Charleston" were looking for someone who looked like Vivien Leigh. "They were saying it wasn't 'Gone With the Wind,' but it was," said Miss Burke. "I was Scarlett. It was a lot of fun. I got to wear all those corsets and things."

Miss Burke came to Hollywood several years ago after completing her training at the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Arts.

"I'd planned to go to New York," she said, "but decided to check out Los Angeles first because I knew I'd end up in Hollywood because I'm fascinated by films. I drove here with my grandmother, Ruby, and pulling a trailer I never learned to back up. Ruby carried a gun because she'd heard there were bandits in the desert."

"Charleston" wasn't a hit, but it vaulted Miss Burke to numerous roles in television. Three years ago she starred in her first comedy series, "Filthy Rich," and now is the star of "First and Ten," a comedy series on Home Box Office.

She plays Diane Barrow, who gains ownership of the California Bulls pro football team in a divorce settlement.

If that sounds like Georgia Frontiere, who inherited ownership of the Los Angeles Rams after the death of her husband, Miss Burke professes ignorance.

"I didn't know anything about Georgia Frontiere until this, but I've heard a lot about her since then," she said.

"First and Ten," first seen last December when the pilot was broadcast, starts a 12-program series Saturday night on HBO.

"The part of Diane Barrow was originally written for an older woman, but after I read for the part they decided to make her younger," Miss Burke said. "The producers also told me I couldn't be too sexy. Since 'Filthy Rich' I had specialized in doing sexy vamps. So they changed her to a Mary Tyler Moore type who's in the midst of all this madness. They've kept her real.

The series contains some nudity, which Miss Burke said she believes is all right "as long as it's kept in the right place, as long as they don't abuse it...In the locker room it's real. But you won't see me walking around talking trashy-mouthed or taking my clothes off."

Miss Burke, a former Miss Florida in the Miss America Pageant, may be the only actress named after a cat. She tells it this way: "My uncle came to see my mother at the hospital when I was born and said I reminded him of a cat mother used to have called Delta. I don't know where the cat got its name, either from the Mississippi Delta since my family's from Mississippi or from my mother's sorority, Tri Delta."

Brian Ferry seeks U.S. recognition

By DIVINA INFUSINO
Copley News Service

Brian Ferry

"He's right here. He's coming. Just wait."

Click.

The phone disengaged. The hold button broke.

Well, why not? Annoying, but persistent, mishaps riddled Bryan Ferry's week of whirlwind press interviews, television and radio spots from New York.

Just the day before, the former lead singer for the internationally acclaimed band Roxy Music rushed back to his hotel room with a "merciless headache," from a morning under television lights, forcing him to cancel his day's commitments.

Today, with his interviews rescheduled, he is running 30 minutes late and the phones aren't cooperating. All this should put him in a swell mood, I mumble to myself.

It's well-known that Ferry hates the promotion routine even under the best circumstances. And in many ways, you can't blame the guy.

Everywhere else on the globe, he's a superstar. His 11-year recording career with Roxy Music, one of the most original, experimental and successful rock groups of the '70s, has made him a millionaire several times over. His face fills the covers of European-editions of Vogue magazine. Many big stars of the '80s, like Duran Duran, American groups like The Cars and The Motels, and countless English, European and Australian rock singers claim him as their chief role model. Critics regularly laud him as one of contemporary music's best and most influential singers.

BUT IN THE United States, Roxy Music had only one hit single, "Love Is the Drug," in 1975. Roxy's sound was subtle and too varied for a market accustomed to bands that sounded basically the same throughout their careers.

In Roxy, influences collided — blues, avant-garde music, disco, Motown, Tin Pan Alley and '60s pop. Its music swung from crooning ballads, to moody experiments with synthesizers, to grand, but gutsy art rock. Roxy Music confused American audiences and the band's high-camp, chameleonlike image didn't help matters.

So despite his status everywhere else, Ferry must come to America and charm record executives, smile for television, ham it up for radio and bare his soul to the press with a ferocity that superstars half Ferry's age (and half his talent) sniff at.

Bearing all this in mind, I brace myself for a conversation that's short, perfunctory, maybe even somewhat rude.

But instead, Ferry answers the phone (after his press people get it working again) laughing at the wonders of technology and quite willing to talk about his career, his feelings and even a bit of his personal life.

At the top of the list, however, was his new and third solo effort, "Boys and Girls," an album of dreamy atmospheres, undulating rhythms, elegant musicianship and romantic lyrics. Many have compared it to Roxy Music's final album, "Avalon," as if "Boys and Girls" picked up where "Avalon" ended.

"After Avalon, I thought, well, what do I do now? Everyone liked Avalon so much. It's the best received work I've ever been involved in. But I did want 'Boys and Girls' to be more rhythmically aggressive."

A dance album?

"NOT SO MUCH dance as sway," he chuckled.

Ferry should know. Although he employed such illustrious musicians as Nile Rodgers, David Sanborn, Omar Hakim, Andy Newmark and Mark Knopfler, Ferry kept complete control over the project, building the songs and arrangements in the studio, working with only one musician at a time. "Each would come in and sort of respond to what was already on tape," said Ferry. "I hoped that each musician would play his own way, but still adapt to the music that was there."

Ferry enjoyed the freedom of not working with Roxy Music, even though the band was largely under his direction in the last few years. "You always have restrictions when working in a group format," said Ferry. "Working alone, I had total freedom in the way I could use soloists."

Is Roxy Music over for good this time?

"You say that as if you're relieved," Ferry joked, as he often did throughout the conversation. But I had to ask that inevitable question. For the last three years, rumors have circulated that Roxy Music was dead, then alive, then in hiatus, then recording again. Formed in 1971, the band actually did break up in 1976, but only to regroup in 1978 and go on to greater heights of popularity. What is it this time?

Movies offer weird visions of future

By JANET MASLIN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Considering the wide range of fantastic adventures on the screen this summer, it's astonishing that the overall effect should be so thin. Yes, audiences can visit space again ("Explorers"), or venture to the bottom of the sea ("Cocoon"). They can travel in time ("Back to the Future") or embark on the action-packed kiddie adventure of a lifetime ("The Goonies"). They can even reacquaint themselves with the spaceling ("E.T.," now in re-release) who already looks like the granddaddy of them all. Why then, in the face of so much novelty, is there so little that's really new?

Mel Gibson and Tina Turner star, respectively, as Mad Max and Aunty Entity, the deadly ruler of Bartertown, in the action-adventure film "Mad Max Beyond Thunderdome."

The culprit is Steven Spielberg, of course, though having built a better mousetrap is his only crime. Spielberg has made two films, "E.T." and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," that between them have established an entire school of fantasy film making, with the inspired visual hallmarks — blue light, ascending pancake-shaped spaceships, mischievous glimpses of suburban life, children's awestruck faces in the presence of secular miracles — that have been so widely imitated they will someday seem as passe as a sequined glove.

And in his entrepreneurial capacity, Spielberg has launched a lot of talent while also exerting some inadvertent influence of his own. Robert Zemeckis, whose "Back to the Future" is easily the most sustained and entertaining of this summer's adventure fables, has already emerged as a writer-director with his own particular brand of whimsy.

Joe Dante, whose "Explorers" was not made with Spielberg (but whose "Gremlins" was presented by him), still uses many of the standard Spielberg touches but also displays his own eccentric — even bizarre — sensibility.

MOST DIRECTORS working on this kind of adventure film have attempted, at least in passing, to break free of the mold; only Richard Donner, whose "Goonies" plays like a breathless, preadolescent composite of Spielberg's greatest hits, has hewn as close as possible to a proven formula. His pragmatism is perhaps understandable in view of the disaster that has befallen other Spielberg proteges who stray too far from a sure thing. The crazily incoherent new "Lifeforce" from Tobe Hooper, who directed the much more impressive "Poltergeist" for Spielberg, is at least circumstantial evidence that when a master hitmaker offers suggestions on the set, his associates might as well listen.

The eagerness of up-and-coming film makers to stick with what seems foolproof isn't hard to understand. However, the simultaneous appearance of so many superficially similiar, teen-oriented entertainments has the unfortunate effect of diminishing even the best of them. It suggests that this particular imaginative vein is close to exhausted, and will remain that way until Spielberg or one of his peers comes up with something equally contagious. In the meantime, it makes anything that's the least bit different look unexpectedly welcome.

"Mad Max Beyond Thunderdome" and "The Emerald Forest" are the two maverick adventure movies that, ragtag and ridiculous as they sometimes are, seem particularly exciting in a production-line season. If they both generate mild feelings of deja-vu, it is only for the earlier work of their respective directors, George Miller (making his third film in the "Mad Max" series) and John Boorman (whose cinematic foray into a dangerous wilderness at times recalls his own "Deliverance").

Neither one of them can be said to have outdone himself entirely, since "The Road Warrior" will remain No. 1 in the heart of "Mad Max" purists, and since "The Emerald Forest" has its dewily utopian side. However, each of these films has its visionary intensity, and each has the rude, self-sufficient energy that makes for a true spirit of adventure.

"MAD MAX Beyond Thunderdome" may not be more ferocious than its forebears ("Mad Max" and "The Road Warrior" are the series' earlier installments), but it's certainly bigger, louder and every bit as brutal. And it has the same mesmerizing attention to weird detail. The costume and production design are so wickedly inventive that a character may have two heads, one real and one decorative, for reasons the viewer is left to figure out alone. Miller's improbably droll vision of a post-nuclear future encompasses outfits decorated with used industrial parts and vehicles stripped down to their skeletons, though they may also be decorated (as Max's is in the final go-for-broke chase sequence) in something like palomino hide. One of the things that gives the film its hold on the imagination is that all of these details are made to seem perfectly utilitarian, even when their exact function remains a mystery.

The "Mad Max" series, for all its violence, is beginning to take a beatific turn, now that the third film finds Mel Gibson's magnetic anti-hero straying into the midst of a whole tribe of feral children, who are lost in the wilderness and in the market for a savior. Never mind. "Mad Max Beyond Thunderdome," directed in tandem by Miller and George Ogilvie, retains its brazen originality even in the face of such sappiness.

The startling innovation of the Thunderdome alone — a hive-shaped arena in which contestants are suspended from the ceiling for fights to the death, while onlookers cling avidly to the outside of the structure — is unlike anything anyone other than Miller might imagine. As long as this series sticks to its original guns — not to mention knives, bats, chainsaws and anything else the dauntless Max can handle — it will at least retain the power of its fierce individuality.

Dollar lowers

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar drifted lower against all major currencies except the Canadian dollar in early European trading today. Gold bullion prices were slightly higher.

Britain's pound sterling, which has been the focus of market attention in recent days, rose. Dealers said its price appeared to be stabilizing.

The pound was quoted at $1.3495, up from $1.338 late Wednesday.

One Frankfurt dealer said the pound's sharp slide had been halted by intervention by the Bank of England in New York on Wednesday, which built confidence in the the pound and put downward pressure on the dollar.

Still, the dealer said, the dollar's strength this week had made traders "very uncertain" about trying to push the American currency sharply lower, especially in the middle of the U.S. Treasury's record $21.75 billion refinancing operation.

–2.8365 West German marks, down from 2.8450

–2.3445 Swiss francs, down from 2.3545

–8.6675 French francs, down from 8.6850

In Zurich, Europe's biggest bullion market, gold was selling at a bid price of $322.75 a troy ounce at noon, up from late Wednesday's closing bid of $321.40.

In London, the city's five major bullion dealers set a recommended trading price of $322.90, up from $321 bid the previous day.

Earlier in Hong Kong, gold rose the equivalent of $1.44 to close at $322.97 compared to Wednesday's $321.53.

Silver bullion prices were slightly higher on the London market where the metal was selling at a bid $6.15 a troy ounce, compared with $6.14 late Wednesday.

Bond yields hit two-year low while trade gap at new high

Associated Press

Yields on 10-year U.S. Treasury notes to refinance debt sunk to their lowest levels in more than two years, while the Commerce Department reported a record $33.4 billion foreign trade deficit for the last quarter.

Today's planned sale of 10-year notes marks the end of a three-day series of securities auctions to raise a record $21.75 billion in new debt financing.

The Treasury Department sold $6.8 billion in 10-year notes at an average yield of 10.6 percent on Wednesday, down from 11.3 percent at the last auction, held May 15. The rate was the lowest since the 10.16 percent for 10-year notes on May 4, 1983. The sale attracted bids totaling $15.8 billion.

Meanwhile, the Commerce Department announced that the U.S. trade deficit hit a record $33.4 billion from April through June, aggravated by severe drops in farm exports and surging imports of oil.

It said the trade deficit grew by 12.8 percent from the first three months of the year, when the gap between imports and exports was $29.6 billion.

The trade report confirms parallel figures released last week showing an even larger deficit of $37.9 billion for the April-June quarter. The new report shows a lower deficit because it omits such factors as military sales and the cost of shipping and insurance.

The $33.4 billion April-June deficit topped the old record of $32.5 billion set during the July-September quarter last year.

In the second quarter, oil imports rose 17 percent, an increase analysts attributed to efforts by oil companies to increase stockpiles during a period of falling prices.

On the export side, agricultural sales dropped by 15 percent to $7.1 billion. Soybean sales dropped a steep 34 percent, corn sales were off 25 percent, and cotton sales declined 7 percent. Sales of wheat remained unchanged.

Right-to-work group challenges Saturn preliminary union pact

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. and the United Auto Workers have been accused of denying future workers in the automaker's Saturn plant a chance to choose not to join the union.

The National Right to Work Committee, a non-profit group opposing compulsory unionism, filed a challenge Wednesday to an agreement between the union and the company.

The committee asked the National Labor Relations Board to order the UAW to refrain from acting as collective bargaining representative for Saturn Corp. workers unless a majority select the organization as the one they want to represent them.

Henry Chiles, acting NLRB regional director in Detroit, said he would assign an investigator to the case, who would report back within 30 to 45 days.

"If there's a violation, we'll try to settle it, and if it can't be done, it will go to a hearing," Chiles said.

GM's Saturn plant in Spring Hill, Tenn., eventually will employ 6,000 workers, although today its site is a pasture about 30 miles south of Nashville. The plant is expected to produce its first car in 1989 or 1990.

In July, before the selection of the Spring Hill site was announced, the UAW Executive Board approved a letter of intent for a Saturn contract that would depart markedly from traditional labor agreements in the automotive industry.

In a statement Wednesday, UAW President Owen Bieber and Vice President Donald F. Ephlin said, "While we have not had an opportunity to study the charge by the so-called 'right-to-work' group, it is not unexpected, and we believe it is totally without merit."

"In our view, we have done nothing illegal and intend to defend our position in front of the NLRB," said Edmond J. Dilworth Jr., GM assistant general counsel.

Under the preliminary agreement, present GM workers and former workers would get first crack at the Saturn jobs.

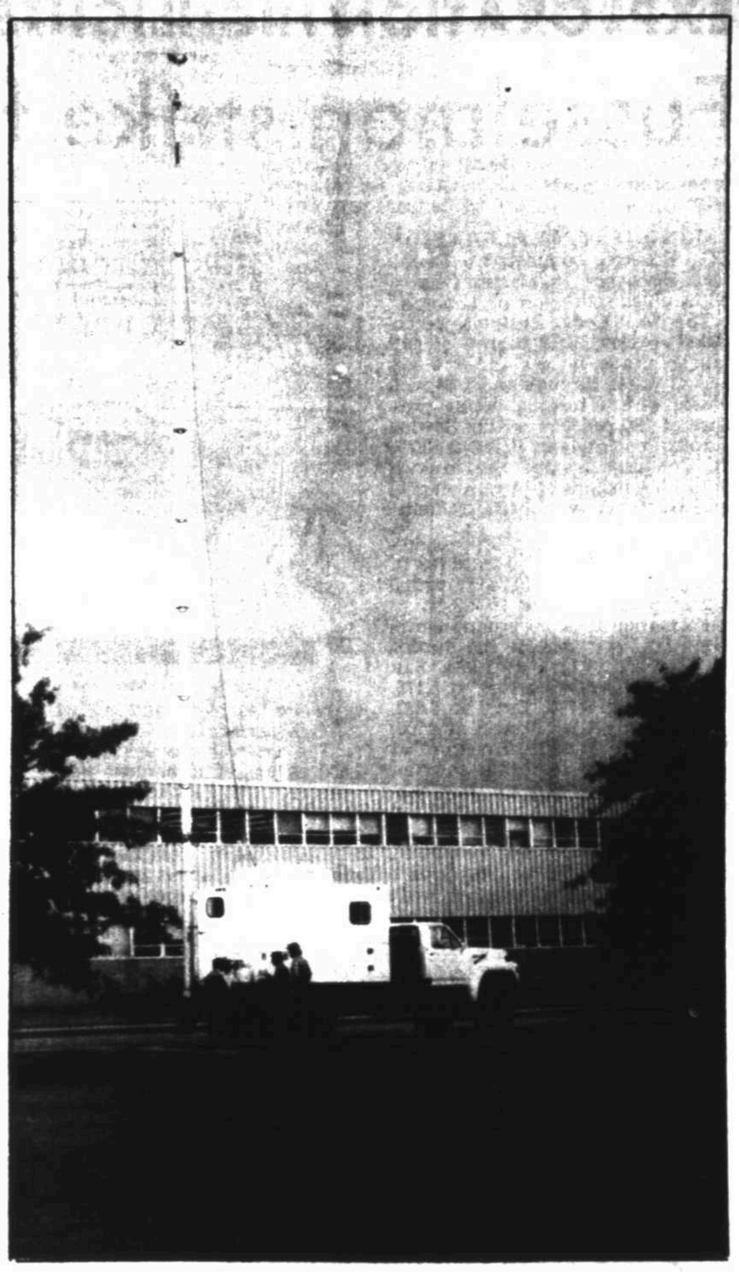

The committee's complaint, filed in Detroit, said the agreeement "restrains and coerces employees in their right to express a free choice ... concerning a bargaining representative."

The committee also said it "discriminates with respect to employment opportunities for individuals who are not members of the UAW. Furthermore, such agreement tends to encourage union membership."

The innovative work rules and wage structure outlined in the UAW-GM letter of intent constitute a key element in the $5 billion Saturn project, which is GM's attempt to build small cars at prices competitive with Japanese automakers.

Tennessee, which won the Saturn plant in fierce competition with 35 other states, is a right-to-work state where it is illegal to require workers to join a union to get or keep a job. Additionally, employers have the right to dismiss a worker without giving a reason for a dismissal unless required to by a contract.

The Right to Work Committee, based in Springfield, Va., challenged the Saturn agreement based on federal law but claims the agreement is illegal under Tennessee law as well, said Clayton Roberts, a committee spokesman.

Turner broadcasting to acquire one-time 'star factory'

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios boasted of having "more stars than there are in heaven" back when Hollywood was loud and lusty and Leo the Lion reigned as king of the movie jungle. Now there's a new tiger in town.

Turner Broadcasting System Inc. agreed Wednesday to acquire MGM-UA Entertainment Co. in a $1.5 billion deal. Turner would get a studio rich in Hollywood history, and acquire a film library of 2,200 titles.

It was the the latest twist in the 61-year history of the movie giant that dominated filmmaking in the 1930s and '40s.

The boy-wonder era of Irving Thalberg, movie mogul Louis B. Mayer's view of the star family, and classic films such as "Gone With the Wind," "Mutiny on the Bounty," "The Wizard of Oz" and "Dr. Zhivago" were MGM creations.

In its heyday, MGM employed the biggest stars — Clark Gable, Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton, Fred Astaire, Spencer Tracy, Katharine Hepburn, Judy Garland, Mickey Rooney, Greer Garson, Ronald Colman, Lana Turner, Jean Harlow and a young Ronald Reagan and Nancy Davis Reagan.

A quarter-century before becoming governor of California, Reagan performed before the MGM cameras in "The Bad Man," and in 1949 then-Nancy Davis starred in "Shadow on the Wall." In 1954, Reagan starred in "Prisoner of War."

James Stewart began his film career at MGM in 1935.

Moviegoers escaped to MGM's epics "Mrs. Miniver," "Ben-Hur," "Quo Vadis," "The Unsinkable Molly Brown" and "Gigi." Mickey Rooney grew up at MGM with the "Hardy" movies.

The once-greatest of film factories was founded May 17, 1924, and Lot 2 at the Culver City backlot was the lion's den of activity.

Lot 2, now a shopping center, was the site of the procession in "Easter Parade" with Fred Astaire and Judy Garland; of Gene Kelly skating through the street facade of "It's Always Fair Weather," of Glenn Ford teaching Sidney Poitier at an MGM schoolhouse in "The Blackboard Jungle."

MGM's slogans were famous and vulnerable to jest. The lofty motto on Leo's scroll, "Ars Gratia Artis' (meaning roughly, Art for Art's Sake) invited sardonic comment and "More Stars than there are in heaven" was dropped when somebody thought it referred to the dear departed.

During MGM's quality era, Thalberg was the brilliant director while Mayer supported him on the business end. After Thalberg's death in 1936, Mayer took complete charge and built the biggest stable of stars in Hollywood history.

Important was Mayer's concept of the studio as a family unit. He saw himself as a father figure, the stars as his children. He encouraged the shy ones, scolded the naughty ones, preached thrift to those who asked for more money and reminded them all of the cold, cruel world awaiting those who ran away.

Turner seen as welcome new face in Hollywood

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Whether Ted Turner is buying MGM-UA Entertainment Co. to boost his ego or strengthen his assets was debated by analysts, but most agreed the maverick broadcaster could bring a breath of fresh air to Hollywood.

"He has always been a programming entrepreneur who is looking to expand his wealth of product," said Sharon Armbrust, entertainment analyst with Paul Kagen and Associates in Carmel. "He likes to put his stamp on things... You know he won't be bereft of ideas."

Turner, chairman of Turner Broadcasting System Inc., is buying MGM-UA for $29 a share, or $1.5 billion in cash, and dropping his takeover bid for CBS Inc., which rebuffed him, the companies said.

"The acquisition of MGM represents an excellent opportunity to improve the strength and stability of TBS," Turner said in a statement. "We think the business of MGM is highly compatible with TBS' existing operations."

With the acquisition of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Turner would inherit a film library with more than 2,000 titles, including such gems as "Gone With the Wind," "The Wizard of Oz" and "Doctor Zhivago."

"He will have an ensured supply of programming at a reasonable cost," said Harold Vogel, analyst with Merrill Lynch in New York.

The MGM-UA agreement has been approved by both companies' directors but faces the scrutny of stockholders and government regulators.

In May, financier Marvin Davis and publishing tycoon Rupert Murdoch agreed to buy Metromedia Inc.'s seven television stations in a transaction worth about $2 billion. Six weeks earlier, Murdoch bought a half-interest in 20th Century-Fox Film Co. from Davis for $250 million.

One Hollywood observer, A.D. Murphy of the entertainment industry newspaper Daily Variety, said Turner and Murdoch are two of a kind.

Hilton, AT&T introduce video conferences

WASHINGTON (AP) — AT&T has inaugurated a plan to breathe new life into its sluggish Picturephone business by introducing a marriage of the telephone company's technology and the meeting-marketing expertise of Hilton Hotels Corp.

Hilton has installed $200,000 worth of cameras, TV screens and associated electronics in meeting rooms in its hotels in New York, Washington, Chicago and San Francisco.

On as little as 30-minutes notice, a customer can reserve a $250 room in any of the cities and an AT&T Accunet video link to connect two of them for half an hour.

The line costs vary from $94.50 to $440 per half hour, depending on distance and time of day. Being able to leave the equipment set up and pay for the circuit only when it's needed greatly reduces the cost of teleconferencing, which used to be $15,000-$20,000 for a coast-to-coast ad hoc production.

Hilton plans 31 video conference rooms, including ones opening later this year in Los Angeles, Boston, Pittsburgh, Atlanta, Miami, Dallas and Houston.

Hilton hotel division president Carl T. Mottek said his company hopes to use the system to "attract a whole new segment of the meetings market."

The AT&T Accunet video lines, which also transmit documents, are available in 33 cities and several foreign countries, and the circuits will be extended to 42 cities by the end of the year.

NMOGA vice president resigns

SANTA FE — Peter Hanagan, executive vice president of the New Mexico Oil and Gas Association, has elected to take early retirement January 1, 1986. Hanagan has served as the Association's chief lobbyist and general manager for more than 15 years.

Prior to joining the Association in 1970, Hanagan practiced law for 13 years in Washington, D.C., where he also taught business law at American University and was editor-publisher of a bi-weekly newspaper.

A native of Roswell, Hanagan comes from a pioneer family of independent oil producers active in southeast New Mexico since the mid-1920's.

In announcing the retirement, Association President Bob Enfield expressed appreciation of Hanagan's management of Association activities, and noted that the industry has benefited from his representation over the years. Enfield will appoint a search committee soon to recommend a successor to Hanagan.

THE TEXAS RESTAURANT ASSOCIATON has published marketing information that identifies consumer trends in eating out.

The information is based on studies conducted by the association and published in "Texas Tastes," TRA's quarterly newsletter.

Diamond drills 9800 ft completion

DALLAS–(SWN)–Diamond Shamrock Exploration Co., a subsidiary of Diamond Shamrock Corp., has completed a natural gas field discovery in Lipscomb County, Texas.

The well, designated the Lydia Bradford No. 3, flowed 2.3 million cubic feet of gas and 25 barrels of condensate per day during completion testing through a 16/64-inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 2,590 pounds per square inch. The well has a calculated absolute open flow potential of 9.3 million cubic feet of gas per day.

Drilled to 9,800 feet, the discovery well was perforated for testing in the Lower Morrow formation between 9,579 and 9,585 feet. The well is located 2-1/2 miles south of the nearest Lower Morrow gas production.

Diamond Shamrock Exploration Co. is operator and has 100 percent working interest in the discovery well. The company also has 3,061 net acres surrounding the discovery and plans to begin a development drilling program on the acreage during the third quarter of 1985.

DML Exploration reports San Patricio strike

David M. Levin, president of DML Exploration, Inc. reported a new oil field discovery in the Het Field area in San Patricio County, Texas. The No. 1 Jostes was drilled to a total depth of 3200 feet and was perforated from 3105 feet to 3110 feet in the No. 1 Frio sand, which flowed 100 barrels of oil per day through a 10/64 inch choke on a four test.

At least two additional offset locations are already expected to be drilled to delineate the extent of this new field discovery. The Het Field is located five miles north of the town of Mathis.

Coastal Flow expands gas analysis facility

PASADENA–Coastal Flow Measurement, Inc. has expanded their Austin Gas Analysis Laboratory. The new facilities will allow complete analysis of natural gas samples with the latest gas chromatographic instruments.

The computer-generated gas reports will include a compositional breakdown by mole percentage, the liquefiable hydrocarbon content, calculated and determined specific gravity, as the heating value in dry, wet and deliverable BTUs per cubic feet.

Union Texas expands gas gathering system

HOUSTON–Union Texas Petroleum will expand its natural gas processing plant and gathering system in Woodward County, Oklahoma.

The expansion will increase the plant's processing capability to 185 Mcfd and extracting ability to 14,000 barrels of gas liquids daily.

As part of the project, the company's skid-mounted plant near Piedmont, Oklahoma will be moved to the Chester facility, eight miles from Chester, a distance of 75 miles.

With the additional capacity, Union Texas will be able to nearly triple its Chester unit's processing capability from 8.5 MMcfd to 25 Mcfd. The project also calls for 12 miles of pipeline to be laid to connect an existing gas gathering systeminto the Panhandle Eastern Bado System.

Completion is scheduled for late 1985.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Enjoy life, don't worry about heirs

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I am selling my home. After paying off the mortgage and all my other debt, I will have $60,000. What to do with it? I can purchase a suitable home for $35,000 or a little less, leaving me a $25,000 balance to invest. Or I can rent for a total cost, including utilities, of about $500 a month. I am 70, with monthly income of $720 from Social Security and $500 to $800 from a small hobby business. I don't know what $60,000 or $25,000 would earn nowadays with safety and don't really know what would be best for my heirs.

I lean toward the cash purchase of a nice little masonry house. I was in the real estate business and know where I can buy in my price range. May I have your suggestion?

Doyle

A. More than a suggestion, my firm advice is to do what is best for you and stop worrying about your heirs. All too many letters come in from senior citizens who tell how they are doing without things, in order to leave something behind. Your first concern should be yourself.

You seem to have your heart set on that little house. Buy it.

By shopping around at different federally insured banks and savings and loan association, you can find certificates of deposit yielding about 10 percent — $2,500 a year on $25,000. With that, your Social Security and hobby business income, you should be able to afford living in that house, although not in the lap of luxury.

• • •

Q. We are two maiden lady sisters in our eighties. Due to a very poor childhood, we saved through the years and denied ourselves luxuries. Between us, we have stock investments and CDs totalling about $500,000.

We always owned our home and were very happy, but we were forced to sell because of crime in the neighborhood. We are unhappy where we live now. I want to buy another house for about $125,000. My sister says we would lose too much income by doing so.

We are very active and don't think a small house would be too much work for us. What do you say?

A. You should be able to live comfortably on the income from your investments, after buying a home. There's no reason for your sister to fret about that.

However, are you sure you'll have to pay $125,000 for a "small house"? You should spend some time looking for something less expensive.

A big question is whether you'll really be able to handle the work that goes with home ownership. At your age, some people can; some can't. I think you should look at condominiums and town houses, where the lawn and other outside work will be done for you.

• • •

Q. My wife and I have sold our home and are buying a smaller one. We could pay cash for the new house. But we are considering putting approximately half down and investing the rest of our money. We would then use the interest from the investment to pay off the 30-year mortgage on the new house.

We have been encouraged to invest in "Ginnie Maes" to accomplish this. What is your opinion?

A. Unless the interest you receive from the Ginnie Maes — the shorthand term for Government National Mortgage Association modified pass-through securities — is higher than the interest you would pay on the mortgage, don't do it.

Instead, pay cash for your new home.

You come out ahead by borrowing money — through a mortgage or any other loan — only if the interest you pay is lower than the return you get by putting the borrowed money to work. This is basic.

Some people will tell you that you will save on income taxes, because you get a deduction for mortgage interest. That's misleading as all get-out. You have to pay income tax on the interest from Ginnie Maes. If the Ginnie Mae interest is lower than the mortgage interest, you'll come out a loser.

When inflation was running wild, there was some sense in having a big mortgage with the intention of paying it off with "cheaper" dollars in the years ahead. Now that inflation has moderated, that idea no longer holds water.

To determine the two-digit code for any letter of a Ticker Symbol, remember: The first key to be depressed is always the one on which the letter appears. The second key is always a "1," "2" or "3" indicating that letter's position on its own key (first, second or third position). EXAMPLE: "IBM" = "43 22 61"; "BX" = "22 92." Remember to depress the star key (*) after entering each code.

None hurt in crash landing

DALLAS (AP) — An Air Midwest commuter plane was forced to make an emergency landing without landing gear at Dallas Love Field on Wednesday night, officials said. No injuries were reported.

The twin-engine Merlin SW-4 was heading to Dallas with only two crew members aboard, said Danny Bruce, the city's director of aviation. The flight originated in Fayetteville, Ark., said Bruce's assistant, Frank Breedlove. Officials had said it was on a flight from Oklahoma.

"The aircraft came in with gear up," said Tim Turner, operations supervisor at the airport. "There are no apparent injuries."

The emergency landing came five days after a Delta Air Lines jumbo jet crashed at nearby Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, killing 133 people.

Lawyers set up shop at DFW

DALLAS (AP) — Families of victims of the Delta Air Lines Flight 191 crash are being besieged by lawyers and insurance representatives, one side trying to spur lawsuits and the other trying to fend them off, officials say.

Melvin Belli's San Francisco law firm set up shop here two days after Delta Air Lines Flight 191 crashed Friday night and left 133 people dead.

Richard E. Brown, a Belli associate who is operating out of a suite at the Dallas-Fort Worth Airport Hilton, said he came at the request of potential clients, but other attorneys criticized the Belli firm's quick action.

Meanwhile, United States Aviation Underwriters Inc., which represents Delta's insurers, has been accused of trying to persuade victims' families to agree to immediate settlements instead of hiring lawyers and suing. U.S Aviation denies that.

The controversy is hurting everybody concerned, but particularly the grieving families, said New York City lawyer Lee S. Kreindler, who has been involved in air-crash cases for more than 30 years.

"It puts the insurance industry and the bar in very bad repute," he said Wednesday. "It's unseemly."

The effect, Kreindler said, is that bereaved families are victimized twice.

"Their privacy is invaded. It's terrible. It's an awful time for them and everybody is knocking on their door."

Brown, meanwhile, said a relative of a Delta crash victim told him of solicitations by insurance representatives.

"They (insurance agents) said, 'We'd like to settle before you see an attorney. We'd like to offer you $100,000,'" he said.

An attorney for Esther Ledford, a Florida woman who filed suit against Delta on Tuesday, said Mrs. Ledford was approached by representatives of U.S. Aviation on Sunday.

"She was approached in the hospital and given (business) cards and told representatives were in Dallas this week and could be contacted," said Miami lawyer Paul Siegel.

Robert L. Alpert, senior vice president of U.S. Aviation, denied that his agents were contacting survivors or victims' families to negotiate settlements.

"What we're trying to do is get the bodies identified and the bodies back home to the next of kin. It's premature at this point to discuss any claim or negotiation of settlement," he said.

Alpert said Wednesday he is too busy working with Delta to discuss how this case will be handled, or to talk about past cases. A Delta spokesman said the company would have no comment regarding insurance or possible litigation.

Lawyer F. Lee Bailey said a close friend who lost a wife in the Delta crash has told him that many victims' families are expressing open bitterness toward both parties.

"The reports that I'm getting is that they are very resentful of being solicited," he said. "It's like invading Bhopal, India, before all the bodies have been buried."

Belli made a highly publicized trip to Bhopal to sign clients in the wake of the Union Carbide toxic chemical leak last year.

Wednesday night, National Transportation Safety Board member Patrick Bursley said the nine-member NTSB operations group, which is spearheading the investigation, had completed its work here and would reconvene Monday in Atlanta, Delta's home city.

Those investigators will examine training records of Delta pilots and the airline's policies about flying in severe weather, Bursley said.

Some of the eight other NTSB investigative teams probing the crash will be working into next week at the airport, he told a press conference.

Tapes from the Federal Aviation Administration controllers in the tower at the time of the crash are expected to be released Monday, Bursley said.

Baby reminder of father killed in Delta crash

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — Two-day-old Paul Raymond Reynolds II has left the hospital, but his homecoming was a reminder of what the infant, his mother and his 2-year-old sister had lost.

The baby's father, Paul Reynolds, was one of 133 people killed when Delta Air Lines Flight 191 crashed Friday night.

Fifty-six hours later, Reynolds' wife, Kitty, went into labor. But it was her sister, not her husband, who aided in the delivery of Paul Raymond Reynolds II.

The brown-haired, blue-eyed boy, weighing almost 7 pounds, was born at 3:28 a.m. Monday — 12 days sooner than expected — at Memorial Hospital in Hollywood, Fla.

"Paul and Kitty knew they were going to have a boy, and they had decided to name him after Paul," said John Reynolds, the crash victim's eldest brother.

"But Paul didn't want a junior," John told The Dallas Morning News. "That's one thing this has changed. They named him 'the second,' not junior."

Paul Reynolds I and his youngest brother, Brian, 23, were aboard Flight 191 Friday afternoon for a trip to Denver. They were scheduled to change planes at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

It was supposed to be a short business trip for the brothers, who were partners in a Hollywood-based investment firm with oil interests.

Paul and Brian were hoping to meet with prospective investors in Denver, John said.

Paul, Brian and a third brother, Robert, started their business several years ago. Robert, however, could not make the trip to Denver last week.

"They were becoming very successful," John said. "They had learned to re-invest what they had made.

"They worked extremely long hours, and they were constantly under self-imposed pressure. Even though he was the youngest, Brian probably had the best business sense of all of us.

"Now they are up there pulling strings for us," John said.

John said family members would establish a trust fund to provide for the upbringing of Paul Raymond II and his 2-year-old sister, Jacqueline.

"They were literally robbed," John said of his niece and nephew. "Paul was one of the kindest people on Earth."

Bargain fares soon harder to find

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Air travelers will have to search harder for bargains as a result of decisions by major airlines to increase both discount fares later this month.

United Airlines, the nation's largest airline, will boost all of its discount Super Coach fares and two-thirds of its regular fares by $2 to $70 for tickets purchased on or after Aug. 17. Eastern Air Lines, American Airlines, Republic Airlines, Delta Air Lines and other carriers now plan to raise some rates to coincide with the United increase. Other carriers, such as Piedmont Airlines, are still mulling over a fare plan.

Since the introduction of airfare discounting in 1977, air travelers and travel agents have fought to snag discount seats, which can be as much as 70 percent cheaper than a full-fare ticket. Today, discounts vary greatly from airline to airline, but in general, the longer a ticket is bought in advance, the greater the savings.

Airlines have profited from the complex strategy of balancing discount and full-fare customers to fill their planes. According to Airline Economics Inc., 84 percent of airline revenue in the first six months of this year came from tickets sold at discount fare. About half of all revenue comes from business travelers.

"To optimize those profits, we want as many of those seats to be full as possible," said John Hotard, manager of corporate communications at American Airlines, which gave the first large discount to flyers eight years ago. "We play a very refined game of how many seats to sell at what price." In fact, an airline can wait until 15 minutes before flight time to determine whether seats can be sold at the discount price.

Airline officials say that the new fares are pegged to the distance flown but admit that factors such as competiton and popularity of the route contribute to the pricing of a flight. "Fares are really based on a combination of mileage and competition," said Robert Coggin, assistant vice president of marketing development at Delta.

Plans by airlines to increase the price of bargain seats indicate that their popularity has grown so much that the industry is confident that travelers on limited budgets will fight for the discount seats even at slightly higher prices, according to industry analysts.

Although some airlines have added special discount plans, many of which are similar to United's new "Super 14" plan that allows a traveler to save about 45 percent if the ticket is bought two weeks in advance, the lowest-price tickets are going up in price more rapidly than full-fare tickets at most airlines. Despite advertisements of low rates, the number of seats available for discounted prices can be very low or even non-existent on popular routes at peak times because the airline can fill a plane with customers paying the full fare.

The heavy discount fares "were uneconomically low," said Robert Coggin, Delta's assistant vice president of marketing development. Delta plans on Aug. 17 to add 8 to 11 percent to fares with the largest discounts, although the company may hold back fare changes until Eastern puts its new fares into effect on Aug. 24, according to Coggin.

Texas Airlines cutting back number of flights

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Texas Airlines Inc., which recently announced the acquisition of three new 19-passenger airplanes and extended service, is drastically reducing its number of flights.

Airline spokesman Randall Morton said Wednesday the airline has suspended service to Hobby Airport in Houston, Love Field in Dallas and Madison Cooper Airport in Waco. He said the airline will fly to Hull Field in southwest Houston.

John E. Peterson Jr., who was elected president of the airline in July, said Tuesday that 50 employees, including 21 pilots, had been suspended.

"Texas Airlines was unable to recapitalize the operation and as a result was forced to terminate," he said.

A decision to close down the airline was made Tuesday night, Peterson said, in a telephone conference of investors after five weeks of "fighting the financial situation."

That decision was modified Wednesday, when it was announced Texas Airlines would still operate, but on a trimmed-down basis.

Peterson, who was formerly executive vice president of United Savings Federal Savings and Loan and who has his own public accounting firm in Houston, said he plans to leave Texas Airlines.

The ill-fated airline has had an up-and-down history since Rafael Rivas, its first president and chief operating executive, visited Galveston in April 1984, full of plans and enthusiasm for the project.

The Galveston-based carrier began operation in September 1984.

Service was first provided to Houston Intercontinental Airport, Lake Jackson, San Antonio and Austin from the Galveston base.

Routes were changed frequently, and service was extended to Beaumont and Tyler in November 1984, then to Houston Hobby Airport.

In December, Rivas began to blame the airline's woes on the lack of support from Galveston. By January, Sugar Land had been added to the flight schedule while Houston Intercontinental Airport was dropped from service.

In April a new Piper Cheyenne III was put into service and Rivas reported growing support in Galveston for the airline.

Rivas resigned his post in June and the business was reorganized with Peterson at the helm.
