Police nab second bus kidnap suspect

CHOWCHILLA, Calif. (AP) — James Schoenfeld, the second of three suspects sought in the Chowchilla bus kidnap, was captured without a struggle today after he was spotted driving a van on a freeway south of San Francisco.

At the moment he was captured, Schoenfeld's brother, Richard, 22, was being taken from the Alameda County jail at Oakland for a three-hour drive to Chowchilla for arraignment in the bizarre abduction of 26 children and their bus driver.

One suspect in the July 15 kidnaping remains at large. He is Frederick N. Woods IV, 24, whose father owns the quarry in Livermore where the children and the bus driver were imprisoned in a van for 18 hours before they dug their way out.

James Schoenfeld was booked at the San Mateo County Jail in Redwood City on kidnap and unlawful flight charges, officials said.

Both Schoenfelds and Woods were charged in a warrant issued last week with 27 counts of kidnaping and 16 counts of robbery. The robbery charges stem from the taking of clothes and other items from the kidnap victims.

After a week-long odyssey in which he was reported seen in several areas of the Pacific Northwest, James Schoenfeld, 24, was seen Wednesday night by "someone who knew him" as he drove an Idaho-licensed van through Menlo Park, a San Francisco Peninsula community only a few miles from his home.

An all-points bulletin was issued and the search continued through the night.

According to early reports, James Schoenfeld was spied again by police at Mountain View at about dawn on U.S. 101, a major north-south freeway. Schoenfeld turned off the highway into Menlo Park where he was captured at about 6:55 a.m. just off the freeway by San Mateo County deputies and officers from the Menlo Park and Redwood City police departments.

FBI agents then reportedly took him to the San Mateo County jail in Redwood City. The van, which had been purchased at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, was found to contain camping gear, toilet articles, old clothes and sleeping bags.

There was no immediate word on whether the van contained any weapons.

Authorities, meanwhile, transported Richard Schoenfeld to his arraignment in Chowchilla. He was being driven here from the Alameda County jail in Oakland for a formal reading of the charges before Judge Howard C. Green, who set bail at $1 million when the younger Schoenfeld brother surrendered last Friday.

Immediately after the arraignment, authorities planned to fly Richard Schoenfeld back to Oakland, 175 miles north of here, where he has been held in a hospital cell for observation.

Richard Schoenfeld's lawyer, William Gagen, said his client will plead innocent to the 43 counts pending against him.

His lawyers have said they plan to ask for a reduction of bail and a change of venue to get the trial moved out of the county where the kidnaping occurred.

With emotions running high in the small farming community since the kidnaping, Madera County Sheriff Ed Bates said police officers will be stationed on rooftops along the two blocks of Chowchilla's main street during the arraignment. A Special Weapons and Tactics (SWAT) team also will be on alert.

Bates said only a few spectators, reporters and court personnel will be allowed in the 48-seat courtroom, and that all will be searched.

He said an unidentified person fired three rounds from a shotgun into a window of the old abandoned Chowchilla courthouse Tuesday night. The new courthouse is directly across the street.

"It was obviously an act of vandalism, but somebody was trying to tell people something," he said.

The Schoenfelds are sons of a wealthy podiatrist of Atherton. Richard Schoenfeld surrendered after an all points bulletin was issued last week.

The FBI said a car found Wednesday in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, was registered to James Schoenfeld, and that agents believed the auto had been there since July 22.

Thomas Drukin, special FBI agent-in-charge for Montana and Idaho, said the auto, a beige 1963 Chrysler, had the same license plate numbers as one driven by James Schoenfeld in two attempts last week to cross the Canadian border before he was sought on the kidnaping charges. He was turned back both times by customs agents.

Court blocks gas price hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Court of Appeals is blocking a $1.5-billion a year increase in natural gas price ceilings while opponents seek to cancel the new ceilings.

The court issued an order Wednesday to temporarily stop the higher rate ceilings approved on Tuesday by the Federal Power Commission. Opponents said the new rate ceilings are so close to rates charged for unregulated intrastate gas that they amount to an FPC attempt to abandon its legal responsibility to regulate interstate prices.

A coalition of 16 petitioners challenged the FPC rate ceilings Wednesday, asking the appellate court to prevent collection of higher rates until the court hears the case. The order granting a delay did not say if the appeals court would accept the case for review.

Issued by Judges Charles Fahy and Spottswood Robinson III, the order imposed an immediate stay of the increase "until further order."

Opponents of the higher FP-

Approved rate ceiling said they also were asking the FPC to reconsider its decision approving the boost.

As approved by the FPC, the new rate ceiling would allow interstate natural gas pipelines to double and triple the previous price ceiling on new natural gas supplies sold by producers to the pipelines.

The petitioners in the court case said it would take the FPC at least 60 days — probably longer — to review their request. They argued that without a court order blocking the new price ceilings, the higher rates would cost consumers at least $367 million during the appeal.

They said there is virtually no chance consumers could get a refund if the FPC or the courts eventually overturn the price increase.

The petition urging the court to block the new rates claimed the increases eventually will be ruled illegal by the courts.

The FPC has maintained a price ceiling of 52 cents per thousand cubic feet on gas brought into the interstate market since Jan. 1, 1973. At the same time, unregulated gas sold in intrastate markets recently has commanded an average of $1.55 per thousand cubic feet.

To make interstate pipelines more competitive for available gas supplies, the FPC authorized a new national price ceiling of $1.42 per thousand cubic feet in Tuesday's decision, with additional increases of one cent every three months.

House votes for censure

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted overwhelmingly today to reprimand a subcommittee chairman, Rep. Robert L. F. Sikes, on two counts of financial misconduct.

It was the House's first punishment of a member since 1969 when it fined Harlem Democrat Adam Clayton Powell and stripped him of seniority.

There were only three speakers in the debate before the reprimand against Sikes, a Florida Democrat.

One of the speakers, Rep. Andrew McGuire, D-N.J., said the House ethics committee should have recommended a stiffer punishment than censure. He said members should consider whether to take away Sikes' chairmanship of the House military construction appropriations subcommittee next year.

The House approved the reprimand by a 381 to 3 vote, with five members voting present. Voting against the reprimand were Reps. F. Edward Hebert, D-La., Tom Steed, D-Okla., and Olin Teague, D-Tex.

Crash kills Odessa man

ODESSA — An Odessa man was killed this morning when his car struck a light pole and overturned.

Keith Leroy Cooper, 31, formerly of Midland, apparently lost control of his car and struck a light pole in the 2700 block of East 8th Street, Odessa police said.

The car overturned two and half times, coming to rest on top. An emergency medical team was unable to remove the body until the car had been turned over on its wheels, police said.

Cooper was pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Manuel Vailles.

Major Chinese industrial city virtually wiped out by quakes

TOKYO (AP) — The major earthquakes that rocked a heavily populated industrial area of northeast China may have virtually wiped out the big city of Tangshan, according to reports from witnesses today.

The press here carried accounts from Japanese technicians who were injured when their Tangshan hotel collapsed in the first and most severe quake Wednesday. "Most buildings in our sight collapsed," said one of the survivors.

The reports, from Peking, also said a 23-member French friendship delegation that returned to Peking from Tangshan Wednesday night gave the impression that the city of one million people was devastated.

The Chinese Communist party said today there were "great losses" of life and property in the hardest-hit areas east and southeast of Peking. Hsinhua, the official Chinese news agency, reported "extremely serious damage and losses" in Tangshan, which is about 80 miles southeast of the capital.

Aftershocks were reported continuing.

Hsinhua said the first quake was centered in the Tangshan-Pengnan area and "comparatively strong shocks" were felt in Peking and Tientsin, China's third largest city with a population of 4.3 million.

"Since the quake was not predicted in advance, it is believed that many of the residents of Tangshan did not have time to escape," the Peking office of Kyodo, the Japanese news agency, reported.

Kyodo said damage in Peking "has been held to the minimum" but "damage of considerable scope is reported in Tientsin."

Former Prime Minister Gough Whitlam of Australia, who was in Tientsin when the first quake hit, said most modern structures withstood the shock, but older buildings "collapsed completely." He said the first tremor was followed by "very large explosions on the horizon" and many after-shocks.

Foreigners in Peking said the casualty toll in the capital did not appear to be heavy. The U.S. Liaison Office reported that all Americans in Peking and Tientsin were safe, and the head of the American mission, Thomas Gates, offered the Chinese government American aid.

"Our great leader Chairman Mao, the Party Central Committee and the State Council (cabinet) are very much concerned for the masses of people in the earthquake-stricken area," said Hsinhua.

It said Communist party officials of Hopen province rushed to the quake areas to direct quake-prevention and relief work. People in the areas "have been promptly organized in a united fight against the effects of the earthquake," the agency said.

It was the first official Chinese report on the quake, and it was not issued until 20 hours after the first shock.

The U.S. Earthquake Information Service recorded the first quake at 3:40 a.m. Peking time Wednesday and said it measured 8.2 on the Richter Scale. It was the strongest earthquake registered by the service since the Alaska quake in 1964, which measured 8.4.

About 15 hours later a second major quake registered 7.9 after minor tremors throughout the day.

The open-ended Richter Scale measures ground movement. An increase of one whole number means a tenfold increase in the force of the quake.

Daughter, employer charged in pair's death

BAYTOWN, Tex. (AP) — Investigators today charged Paula Cantrell Derese and a former Lamar University football coach with the strangulation-slashing deaths of the young woman's parents Sunday.

Officers said Mrs. Derese, 26, and her employer, Vernon McManus, 33, were arrested separately Wednesday after an intensive three-day investigation.

Police released only sketchy details of the couple's arrest but said the case was being taken directly to a Harris County grand jury in Houston this morning.

The bodies of the woman's parents were discovered in the den of their fashionable Country Club Oaks home here about 1:30 a.m. Sunday. Police said Paul Harvey Cantrell, 51, and his wife Mary, 47, had been strangled and their throats slashed.

Mrs. Derese told investigators she returned home from a date after midnight Saturday and discovered the bodies of her parents lying face down on the den floor.

Police said Mrs. Derese, who is twice divorced, had been living with her parents. Her father was the owner of an electric company and a former member of the Baytown City Electrical Board.

Mrs. Derese ran screaming to the home of a neighbor, who summoned police.

"This is kind of a weird one," said one police official, B.H. Turner. "This has shocked everybody."

Turner said McManus is in the plywood business after a stint as an assistant football coach at Lamar University. He was a high school All-American at Baytown Robert E. Lee in the early 1960s and starred at Lamar in 1965, when he was named to a Little All-America squad.

He joined the coaching staff there in 1971 as an offensive line coach and was named offensive coordinator in 1974. He resigned in December 1975.

At least one honeymoon's over

The honeymoon is over between OESTE and at least those readers of the ilk of Mark A. Fairchild, a petroleum engineer whose letter should have been in an asbestos envelope but which listed no return address.

He refers to the "inane ramblings" of this column (a fair analysis, I'd say, for the most part) and scorches my eyeballs in reference to an Aggie joke I cited here last Saturday.

"In a land that we helped build, fought and died for, there is no more revolting reference that can be imagined than your banal 'Aggie Joke,'" he notes, and adds: "Suffice it to say that you and your column are not funny, cute, Texan, or representative of any thinking individual. The state of the art in American journalism is at such a low ebb and the 'Fifth Estates' (sic) opinion of their readers filled with such rancor and ridicule that no redress from you can be or is expected. However, any further 'jokes' will cause to be initiated an effort that may result in your being allowed to ply your trade of ridicule and misplaced sarcasm in some other city and most hopefully, another state."

Mr. Fairchild is mistaken on one count: I am not "an admitted interloper in Texas." Although I've worked and lived in Arizona, California, New Mexico, and Ohio, in the main, I was born in Coke County and am, therefore, a "reloper" at the very least.

It is obvious from the acidulous tone of his letter that I have deeply incensed Mr. Fairchild and, I'm sure, many of like minds, and I'm sorry, above all, for their inability to share a joke. Perpetual humorlessness is not only bad for your friends; it's bad for your health. (Mark Twain said man is the only animal that can laugh at itself—or needs to.)

And, in fairness, I referred to the Longhorn football team as another 'Aggie Joke' in the same breath—which Mr. Fairchild didn't view as another "revolting reference" about another great educational institution.

Will somebody please send me jokes about the University of Texas at El Paso which I attended when it was called Texas Western? I'd like to print them to prove that, although I'm not "funny, cute, or Texan," I'm at least non-partisan.

Mr. Fairchild's attitude is not universal, even among Aggies of course, many of whom tell 'Aggie jokes' and most of whom secretly enjoy them. (They're like Texas jokes, calling attention in reverse to our state's many unprecedented appeals.) And no great institution (such as I'm compelled and proud to classify Texas A & M University) is really likely to be thought less of because somebody chooses to make a humorous remark about it.

But if my job depends on whether or not I tell Aggie jokes, I'm in a heap of trouble anyway.

First Martian dirt now in Viking's lab

By RICHARD SALTUS

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The first sampling of Martian soil in the Viking lander, nourished by light, water vapor and "chicken soup" as scientists search for life on the Red Planet.

When the robot lander's arm dug the sample and deposited it in three chambers Wednesday, it represented the first time that earthlings began to analyze substances on another planet for life.

The experiments will take weeks, and answers are not expected soon. But scientists displayed immediate joy that the project was underway.

Until a pin that had jammed the robot arm was dislodged last weekend, there had been doubt that Viking could pick up the dirt.

"I'm delighted — ecstatic. I can't tell you how thrilled I am," said Dr. Gerald Soffen, a scientist.

One piece of bad news intruded: An instrument to search for molecular "building blocks" of life signaled it did not get a sample of soil.

Engineers said it may have been a false signal, or Viking's extended digging arm may have come up empty when it tried to collect the soil sample for the instrument.

Called a gas chromatograph mass spectrometer (GCMS), it is designed to search for organic compounds. It could check the results of biology experiments, and it might be able to find signs of life that once existed on Mars even if such life failed to survive.

"I'm not at all happy to hear that word about the GCMS," said Dr. Fred Brown, a biologist.

Officials said they would order Viking to photograph the soil-receiving funnel Friday to see if dirt was placed in it.

There was some new information about the nature of the soil itself. The mechanical hand left a six-inch trench, about two inches deep, in the ground. The dark, steep-sided trench did not collapse, as it might have if the surface was extremely dusty.

Instead, a project spokesman said, it looked "like wet sand" — indicating the soil was sticky, although not necessarily moist.

Inside the lander, in the $50 million miniature biology lab, the dirt dropped in and a carousel immediately started rotating. It distributed soil to three chambers — about the size of flashlight batteries — in which the samples are being incubated.

A tiny light flashed on — much to the excitement of scientists, to whom it signaled the real beginning of Viking's life search. It will provide simulated sunshine for one experiment.

In another experiment, the sample was suspended above a cup of the "chicken soup" nutrient — a nickname for a rich food which contains amino acids, vitamins and other substances that promote organisms on earth.

The first trench dug on Martian soil is shown in this picture released by the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif.

Amin bids to reassure Britons left in Uganda

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — President Idi Amin appeared to be taking a relaxed attitude today toward Britain's break in diplomatic relations with Uganda. But one of his aides told a Nairobi newspaper that Britons remaining in Uganda "will become Ugandan citizens."

In a broadcast on Radio Uganda, Amin said he was studying the implications of Britain's move, announced in London Wednesday.

"British nationals who have chosen to stay in Uganda should follow the situation in its present perspective and not listen to the imperialist mass media," he said.

The Nairobi newspaper Daily Nation said an official at Amin's command post in Kampala told it by telephone that "we don't mind" about the break in relations.

"The French government will handle the remaining British citizens here, and we know most of them have opted to stay," he said. Then he added, without explanation, "They will become Ugandan citizens."

Between 200 and 300 Britons still live in the former British colony in East Africa. Most of them are longtime residents, and many are missionaries. About 250 Britons have left since the Israeli commando raid on the Entebbe airport to free more than 100 hijacked hostages.

In London, members of the House of Commons from all three major parties said the British government broke relations with Uganda because it thought Amin's hold on power was weakening and it hoped to undermine his political position further. But Foreign Secretary Anthony Crosland told Commons the action was being taken because it was no longer possible for Britain's representatives "effectively to discharge their normal duties."

The break, Britain's first with a member of the Commonwealth, followed Amin's expulsion of two ranking members of the staff of the British High Commission (embassy) in Kampala following his refusal to produce one of the hostages the Israelis said they did not rescue. The hostage was a 75-year-old widow, Dora Bloch, who had British and Israeli citizenship and who was hospitalized during the week the passengers and crew of the hijacked French airliner were held at Entebbe by Palestinian and German terrorists. Amin claimed she had been returned to the airport before the raid, but one of the British officials he expelled said he saw her in the hospital afterward. She is believed to have been murdered by Amin's troops.

70 persons feared dead in Czech crash

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Seventy people were feared dead in the crash of a Czechoslovak Airlines plane into a lake just outside Bratislava, the capital of Slovakia.

An airline spokesman said a Frenchman was among six survivors of the crash Wednesday near the Austrian border. The other five survivors, who were not identified, were still unconscious, sources said.

An official report said the dead were still being identified, but they included a West German and several Soviet citizens.

The Soviet-made Ilyushin 18 airliner crashed into the Zlate Pisky (Golden Sands) recreation lake seconds before it was to land at the Bratislava airport on a flight from Prague.

Unofficial reports said two of the plane's four turboprop engines failed. The weather at the time of the crash was good.

Photographs of the crash site showed that the plane broke in two, leaving only the tail and part of the fuselage sticking out of water.

The aircraft carried 69 passengers and a crew of seven on the 200-mile flight from Prague. A commission was appointed to investigate the crash.

No one at the recreation area was reported hurt. On a hot day, as many as 10,000 people use the facilities on and around the lake.

Grand jury rules White House guard justified

WASHINGTON (AP) — A grand jury will not issue criminal charges against a security guard who fatally shot a man who climbed a fence to get onto the White House grounds.

Asst. U.S. Atty. Robert Schuelke said the grand jurors heard three days of testimony before deciding Wednesday that the evidence "did not warrant the institution of criminal charges."

A Washington taxi driver, Chester M. Plummer, 30, was killed in the Sunday night incident on the White House lawn. He was shot by Pvt. Charles A. Garland of the Executive Protective Service, a branch of the Secret Service.

Plummer was carrying a three-foot length of metal pipe when he scaled the fence surrounding the White House, officials said. According to a statement from the U.S. attorney's office, Plummer was shot after attempting to hit Garland with the pipe.

Schuelke said a Superior Court grand jury heard 20 witnesses, about half of them civilians not connected with the Executive Protective Service.

Schuelke, who supervised the grand jury investigation, said testimony showed Plummer scaled the fence, walked toward the White House and refused repeated orders from Garland to stop. U.S. 83 near this South President Ford was in the west Texas town Wednesday night killed three of the incident but was persons, Department of not aware of the shooting Public Safety officers until later.

Air slowdown to delay flights

By The Associated Press

The air traffic controllers' union is predicting that its "work by the book" job action will delay scheduled airline flights at airports across the nation today.

The slowdown was the newest in a series of pending labor developments that involve groups from cannery workers to coal miners to rubber workers.

During the initial hours of the slowdown by the nation's 14,000 air controllers late Wednesday, no substantial effects were reported because of light air traffic.

In Washington, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration — employer of the air controllers — said, "We haven't seen any impact now, but we're watching it closely."

Meanwhile, meetings with a federal mediator were scheduled to resume in Washington today in the 14-week-old rubber strike which has idled 60,000 workers.

In California, 30,000 striking cannery workers prepared to vote Friday on a new contract while the state's fruit and vegetable crops sat rotting in the fields.

And in West Virginia, the wildcat coal miners strike entered its 10th day today with more than a third of the nation's 150,000 miners taking part in the walkout.

The air traffic slowdown was called to protest the U.S. Civil Service Commission's delay in completing a pay reclassification study for the controllers.

The Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization said the "work by the book" protest meant controllers would "adhere to strict compliance with separation standings," the distance between airplanes during takeoff and landing.

The FAA said the average journeyman controller at a busy airport now makes about $28,000 a year, including overtime.

Talks on the United Rubber Workers' new contract were resumed after a three-week layoff at the urging of U.S. Labor Secretary W.J. Usery and James F. Scearce, director of the Federal Mediation Service.

Little progress was reported in the strike which has idled workers at the nation's four largest rubber producers — Goodyear, Firestone, Uniroyal and B.F. Goodrich. Wages and other economic issues remain the major unsettled issues.

The Appalachian coal strike has shut down almost all mines in West Virginia and some in Ohio and Virginia.

The strikers are demanding an end to coal companies' use of federal courts to settle disputes which they say can be better solved at the mine site. But the coal operators contend they do that and use the courts when a wildcat strike occurs.

Nixon aides solicited criticism of "Papers"

WASHINGTON (AP) — Newly released court documents show the lengths the government went to five years ago in its futile effort to block publication of the Pentagon papers.

The State Department sent an urgent request to its 249 embassies and consular posts around the world on June 16, 1971 for reports on any adverse foreign reaction to publication of excerpts from the government's secret history of the Vietnam war.

An affidavit by William Macomber, then deputy undersecretary of State and now ambassador to Turkey, said that U.S. ambassadors to Canada, Australia, the Philippines, the Soviet Union, Yugoslavia, Jordan, Israel and Burundi thought publication would harm their relations with officials of those countries.

But Macomber's "top secret" 25-page report, released with other documents Wednesday, cited only one case in which a foreign government officially protested publication of Pentagon papers' excerpts, which appeared first in the New York Times on June 13, 1971.

Canada's Foreign Office in Ottawa summoned the U.S. ambassador to express "concern over impressions created in Canada" by revelation of the Canadian role in contacts with North Vietnam, according to Macomber's report.

At the time, Macomber faced stiff questioning behind closed doors from U.S. District Court Judge Gerhart Gesell, who challenged the claims of diplomatic damage and commented, "You have read to me sort of a Pavlovian kind of reaction solicited by the State Department."

That exchange was also part of the 232 pages of documents that the Justice Department released after receiving Gesell's permission last week to unseal most files in the Pentagon Papers court case.

The Justice Department moved to unseal the court documents after it received requests for them under the Freedom of Information Act.

An exception was an affidavit by Vice Adm. Noel Gaylor, director of the National Security Agency, which is still being kept secret.

The Washington Post published excerpts from the papers on June 18 and 19, 1971.

Federal open meeting bills need compromise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Both chambers of Congress now have passed "sunshine" bills that require federal agencies to open their meetings to the public, but differences remain to be ironed out in conference.

The House approved its "sunshine" bill Wednesday by a lopsided vote of 390 to 5. Four of the negative votes were cast by Texans: Democrats Omar Burleson, W. R. Poage and Olin Teague, and Republican Jim Collins. The fifth was cast by Alabama Republican William Dickinson.

The measure also requires federal agencies to avoid private communications intended to influence decisions.

The Senate passed a similar bill last November.

The House bill applies to about 50 boards and commissions, including the Securities and Exchange Commission, Federal Communications Commission, Federal Reserve Board and Federal Power Commission.

The agencies could vote to close their meetings only when certain sensitive types of information were under discussion.

These would include defense and foreign policy matters, internal personnel affairs, private commercial information, criminal and other law enforcement topics, and matters that would amount to invasion of an individual's privacy if aired publicly.

Even when a meeting was closed, minutes would have to be kept so courts, if asked, could review the decision to close the session and possibly order some or all of the information released.

House banking chief wants social security checks handled better

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government should force banks to provide better service for the 4.5 million persons whose Social Security checks are deposited directly into bank accounts, the head of the House Banking Committee says.

Chairman Henry Reuss, D-Wis., said Wednesday his committee has received a "flood of complaints" from senior citizens about the program inaugurated last August.

The most frequent complaint is that banks do not notify citizens when their checks have been deposited so that money can be withdrawn. Reuss said. One person complained that a bank charged $1 when customers telephoned to see if their Social Security check had been deposited.

Others said personal checks bounced even after the banks had received the Social Security deposit to cover them.

The government conceived the optional plan as a way of speeding up payment, preventing loss or theft from mailboxes, cutting paperwork and waiting lines at banks, and reducing handling costs.

Reuss charged that the Treasury Department failed to issue regulations requiring the banks "to guarantee there would be no hassle and no delay" for Social Security recipients.

He urged Treasury Secretary William Simon to straighten out the problems. He noted that the banks benefit by reduced operating costs, more deposits, free use of the money until it is withdrawn, and a chance to attract new customers.

The Treasury Department expects to enroll 6 million in the program by the end of this year. When the program began last year, the Treasury said it hoped to have at least 40 per cent of the 44 million recipients of regular federal payments on the direct deposit program by 1980.

Scientists eye diet in cancer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans who fail to eat a balanced diet or eat too much are promoting their chances for cancer, five scientists told Congress.

However, the scientists were cautious when asked for details on what specific foods and brands would be either good or bad for an individual.

Improper diets are related to 60 per cent of all types of cancer in women and 41 per cent of those in men, Dr. Gio B. Gori, deputy director of the National Cancer Institute's division of cancer cause and prevention, told the Senate Select Nutrition Committee on Wednesday.

The scientists were careful to emphasize that an imbalanced diet has not been found to be a cause of cancer but rather is associated with the disease's development.

An excess of fats, for example, has been especially linked in research to breast and colon cancer, they said. The panelists would not condemn any specific types or brands of food, despite urging by some senators.

Gori said that he thought "any modification of our diet in the right direction should effect a decline in the incidences of these cancers in five to ten years." By way of comparison, if everyone stopped smoking, he said, it would be 10 years before lung cancer cases would noticeably decline nationwide.

Smoking is "the single, clearest cause" of cancer, he said, and "the most preventable.... We don't need to smoke, we do need to eat."

Others on the panel were Drs. Gerald Wogan, professor of food toxicology at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Dave Kritchevski, of Philadelphia's Wistar Institute; Ernest L. Wynder, president of the American Health Foundation and editor of the Preventative Medicine Journal; and D.M. Hegsted, nutrition professor at Harvard University School of Public Health.

Kritchevski recommended "a well-rounded diet, eaten in moderation."

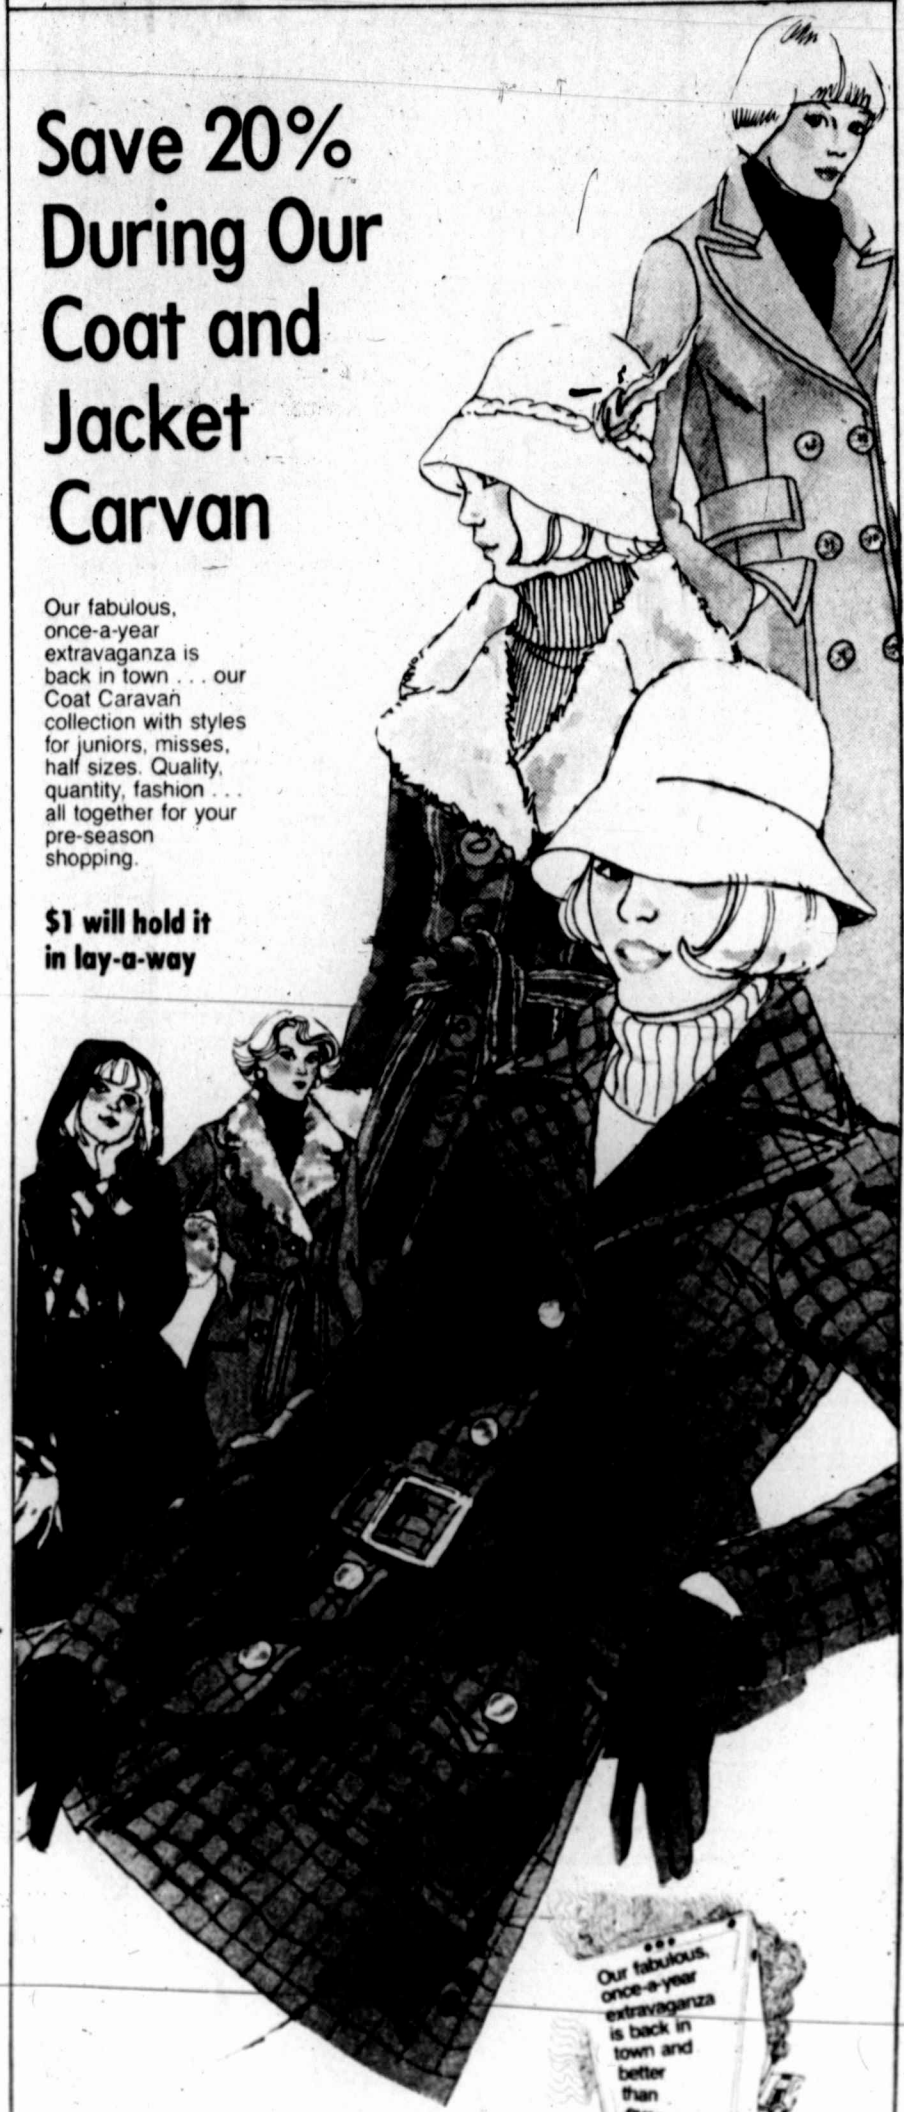

Sen. Henry Bellmon, R-Okla., asked what specific diet Gori would recommend for a 50-year-old male blue-collar worker who wanted to cut his chances of getting cancer.

Ford scores gain in Mississippi

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford grabbed an edge in the fight over Mississippi's uncommitted delegates as he and challenger Ronald Reagan turned their attention today to Pennsylvania, now the other major battleground in the contest for the GOP nomination.

Ford picked up the endorsement of Clarke Reed on Wednesday, robbing Reagan of the influential Mississippi state chairman's backing in the struggle for the state's votes, the largest uncommitted group headed for the Kansas City convention.

With Ford now having 1,097 votes in The Associated Press delegate survey, Mississippi's 30 votes could put him within reach of the 1,130 total needed for the nomination. Reagan now has 1,023 votes, with 139 delegates uncommitted.

Reed said in a statement released in Jackson, Miss., that he defected because Reagan picked Pennsylvania

Sen. Richard Schweiker, a liberal, as his running mate.

"I believe having this kind of vice president is too big a price to pay for the nomination," Reed said.

He said Ford promised him he would pick a running mate who would be "philosophically compatible with himself and the mainstream of the Republican party."

Even before Reed's statement, Ford and Reagan backers in Mississippi said the President was picking up strength among the delegates, who had long been considered to heavily favor Reagan.

Although Reed said he was not going to ask other delegates to follow his lead, his defection could give Ford a majority of the delegation's votes, enough to control all 30 ballots under a unit rule.

As the Schweiker choice was cutting into Reagan's Southern backing, Schweiker himself sought to turn his alliance with the former California governor into a plus for Reagan.

He prepared to talk to the 103-member Pennsylvania delegation at a Capitol meeting late today to try to swing votes to Reagan.

After meeting with Schweiker, the delegation was scheduled to go to the White House to meet with Ford, who now holds a 70 to 6 edge in the delegation, with 27 delegates undecided.

Reagan said from his Santa Barbara, Calif., ranch, that Reed earlier had pledged to support him.

"I was disappointed that Clarke won't keep his longtime personal commitment," the former California governor said.

As the GOP nomination fight heated up, Democratic presidential nominee Jimmy Carter received a 5½-hour briefing from CIA Director George Bush on Wednesday. Bush said the briefing went into a "great deal of detail" on top-secret intelligence matters.

Reed said he would vote for Ford in the Mississippi caucus in Kansas City. Traditionally, the state's delegation has gone to the convention uncommitted and then voted as a bloc, following the wishes of the majority of the delegation.

"I have not asked any members of the delegation to support any candidate and I do not intend to do so," Reed said.

The reaction among Mississippi GOP leaders was predictable: Ford backers were happy and Reagan supporters vowed to continue the fight.

"I am very happy with it, because Clarke is one of the most astute politicians in the country," said Ford campaign manager Gil Carmichael. "This serves as a signal to the rest of the state delegation that we have the power now to get on with the selection of the President and bring unity to the party."

Billy Mounger, Reagan's state leader, said the Reed decision "doesn't do much damage. It's another vote, which I don't like to lose, but Reed does not control the delegation. I'm still working like heck for Reagan; I still want to get this delegation for him."

Schweiker claimed Wednesday in Washington that he had swung six delegates from Ford to Reagan and 14 more Ford delegates into the uncommitted column in Pennsylvania.

But, of the 84 Pennsylvania delegates interviewed since late Monday by The AP, only three Ford delegates said they were now uncommitted and none said they were backing Reagan.

As Reagan's choice of Schweiker continued to cause controversy, the Washington Post and the New York Daily News both reported that Reagan had previously offered the spot to William Ruckelshaus, the former Nixon administration official.

The newspapers quoted Ruckelshaus as saying Reagan campaign manager John Sears had made a "hard offer" to be Reagan's running mate, but Reagan campaign aides denied the report.

President Ford discussed whom he should pick as a vice presidential candidate with congressional leaders on Wednesday, with a variety of names being floated following the meeting.

One of the names was that of former Texas Gov. John Connally, who endorsed Ford on Tuesday. But two of Ford's home state politicians urged him not to pick Connally. Michigan Gov. William Milliken and GOP Chairman William McLaughlin said Connally's ties with former President Richard Nixon, whom he once served as Treasury secretary, could "conjure up images of Watergate."

Judge reserves decision on wiretap records ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge is reserving decision on whether to permanently bar the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. from giving records on government wiretaps to a congressional panel.

The Justice Department asked U.S. District Court Judge Oliver Gasch on Wednesday to make permanent the temporary restraining order he issued last week forbidding AT&T from complying with the House Investigations and Oversight subcommittee's subpoena for the records.

The House panel wants records of wiretaps installed on the phones of suspected foreign spies, double-agents and other persons monitored for national security reasons.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Rex Lee argued that the records are as sensitive as top military secrets and should be kept from congressional scrutiny.

"The greatest security risk is there in the Congress," Lee said during the 2½-hour court hearing.

Lee said a House rule allows all 435 members access to material subpoenaed by any subcommittee. Even if subcommittee members can keep a secret, he said, other House members may not.

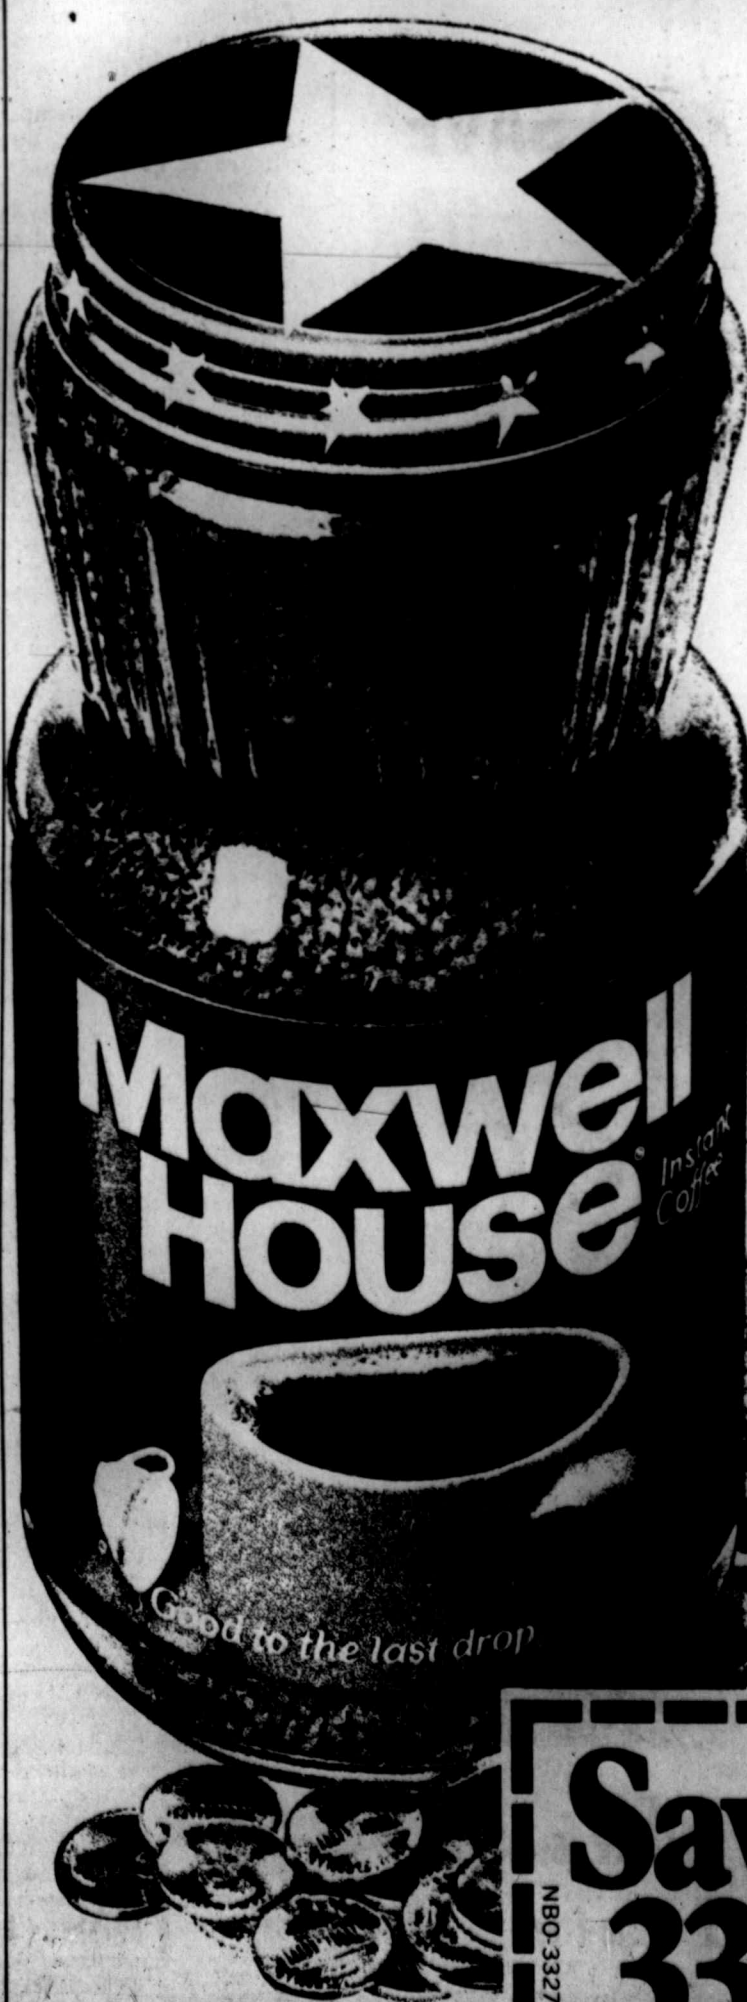

Subcommittee lawyer

Joseph Hassett said that if Congress is denied the records, "then we certainly will have rewritten the notion of balance of powers" between branches of government.

Hassett said the AT&T records might show that the FBI or Justice Department did not abuse their right to install national security wiretaps without first obtaining court permission.

Soaring prices for services said near peak

By JOHN CUNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — Keep your fingers crossed, but the surge in prices for services that had plunged some forecasters into despair about controlling inflation seems to have abated.

One quarter doesn't make a trend, but the news about service prices in the second quarter is at least good news. After sharp increases in the first half of 1975 and early 1976, service inflation abated this spring.

The rise of 5.3 per cent in the April-May-June quarter compares with 9.8 per cent in the previous two quarters, and a frightening rate of 14.2 per cent during the bad days of mid-1976.

From that period on through the second quarter of 1975, the service inflation rate declined steadily to 6.3 per cent, but then it took off again through the first three months of 1976, and consumer pessimism grew. Now it looks as if we're getting at least a breather, and maybe a good rest.

The debate among economists now is whether the slowdown will persist. The Morgan Guaranty Survey believes it will; it finds evidence that the surge was due to special rather than general factors.

It cites, for example, the 40 per cent increase in New York's subway fare late last summer that helped push up the public transportation category of the Consumer Price Index by 46.4 per cent. The figure is now down to 3.1.

Another special factor that contributed to the big rise in service prices late in 1975 and early this year was automobile insurance. Rising costs of replacement parts and ever-rising hospital bills pushed rates up 50 per cent.

A third factor that played a special role in the inflationary surge was an increase in postal charges during the first quarter of 1976 amounting to 140.7 per cent. The most recent rate was 3 per cent.

But even with these special influences partially out of the way, at least for the foreseeable future, that indefinite term to which forecasters cling, there remains upward pressure on prices in general.

Some prices, in fact, have been rising against the falling trend.

The rate of increase in housing repair costs, which make up 10 per cent of the service component of the price index, jumped from 5.8 per cent in the first quarter to 9.8 per cent in the second.

Recreational services also are on an ascending track. Although the inflation rate for this category was only 5.9 per cent in the second quarter, it has been rising steadily for a year.

Property insurance costs also are high. Late last year the inflation rate in this category was only 1.5 per cent. In the first two quarters of 1976 it averaged 13.3 per cent.

Upward pressure also can be expected in charges for hospital care, doctors' fees and gas bills.

But when you add up the long list of services for which we regularly pay, it does seem that inflation may be slowing.

Energy savers get discounts on bank loans

By DEAN KATZ

SEATTLE (AP) — Borrowers who can show that a coveted house, boat or car conserves energy are being offered below-market interest rates on loan and mortgages in a program its sponsor says combines good citizenship with good banking sense.

The program, which the Seattle Trust and Savings Bank says could save borrowers thousands of dollars in interest charges, offers a 1/2 to 3/4 per cent discount on home mortgage and improvement loans for dwellings that conserve energy.

Sailboats and new cars that get at least 25 miles a gallon also qualify for the discount.

President Joseph C. Baillargeon said the bank has received more than 3,000 inquiries since the start of the program July 7. But while conceding its value as a marketing device, he also insisted "it is not a gimmick. It is based on a very solid community need."

Baillargeon says the program makes good banking sense besides offering incentives to save energy, which he says the private sector is long overdue in providing.

Baillargeon told a congressional committee earlier this month that one banking advantage of energy-efficient homes, cars and boats was that they depreciated less in value and thus left loan and mortgage holders in a better market position in case of default.

"We felt we could ill-afford to wait until 1980 or some earlier date for both ourselves and our customers to discover themselves unprepared for economic-efficient lifestyles," he said.

The Seattle program offers conventional 30-year mortgages at 8.5 per cent, compared with a current market rate of about 9.25 per cent, for homes that meet specified energy conservation standards for heating, insulation and appliances.

Buyers of older homes which do not meet the standard can get improvement loans at 8.75 per cent, 3/4 per cent below the market rate. These loans are available to present homeowners.

For a 30-year, $40,000 home mortgage, the difference between an 8.5 and 9.25 per cent interest rate would be $7,744 over the life of the loan. Monthly payments would be $307.57, compared with $329.08.

Loans for sailboats and for energy-efficient new cars can be had for 8.75 per cent, compared with 9 1/2 per cent or higher interest rates.

Ship channel fire protection said lax

HOUSTON (AP) — A special legislative committee has been told that fire protection in the Houston Ship Channel area is inadequate and disorganized.

Several persons, testifying at the public hearing Wednesday, called the industrial complex around the channel "a no man's land" in which no fire department will claim jurisdiction.

"We've got a good number of people with a lot of concern, but no one with the legal authority," said Don Horn, secretary-treasurer of the Harris County AFL-CIO.

Pasadena Mayor John Ray Harrison and Harris County Fire Marshal J.J. Pruitt both suggested legislation designating some entity as responsible for fire safety inspections and for fighting fires in the industrial areas.

"We have adequate, trained manpower," Harrison said, "but we need to get them all under one umbrella."

Exhibit puts visitor inside hurricane

By JEAN M. WHITE

WASHINGTON — Howard Speller survives at least 150 shipwrecks a day amid hurricane-like rain, thunder, and lightning on each regular eight-hour work shift.

Speller, a security officer, puts in his stormy days guarding several million dollars in gold and silver treasures recovered from a Spanish galleon sunk off the Florida Keys in a storm one September Sunday morning 354 years ago.

The National Geographic has stirred up the elements to show off the "Treasures of the Atocha," a light-and-sound exhibit in their Explorers Hall here through Sept. 26.

Rain, simulated by splashes of light, pelts down lighting crackles from strobe flashes; thunder crashes, and a 10-mile-an-hour wind (toned down from the 73 mph-plus force of real hurricanes) whips over the exhibit area from two huge blowers.

AMID THE CRASHES and flashes, the 26-year-old Speller stands calm and unruffled.

"You get used to it after a while," he explained, his face lit up by a strobe light-flash. This thunder and lighting isn't upsetting like the drip-drip-drip of a faucet is. There's a regular pattern to it. If it were shut off, now that probably would give me a start."

"We tried to tap all the senses to give a 3-D environment experience," observed Peter J. Purpura, newly arrived curator of Explorers Hall.

The sights and sounds of the ship-sinking hurricane play dramatically over a well-size recreation of the Atocha breaking up on the raging waves near Marquesas Keys, 70 miles from the Florida mainland.

It is a programmed storm that strikes at regular intervals. A telephone touch-tone decoder triggers the rain, lightning, and thunder from tape recordings of an actual hurricane. The ingenious light-splashes of rain are thrown from revolving, angled mirror balls like those used in old ballrooms.

For an "I-was-there" eyewitness account of the Atocha shipwreck, a visitor to the exhibit can tune in to a recording based on reports made by sailors who survived the storm on other ships in the Spanish treasure fleet. The accounts were found among old papers in archives in Seville.

On a September morn in 1622, the 28-ship fleet sailed for Spain, bearing silver and gold to replenish the coffers of Philip IV, who was strapped by war expenses. One day out of Havana, near the Marquesas Keys, the storm lashed out, scattering the fleet and sending the Margarita and Atocha to the bottom within sight of each other.

LOST ON THE ATOCHA were 265 persons, the sea turtles and chickens they carried for food, and silver and gold and jewels worth perhaps $100 million today.

Mel Fisher, who left his Midwest chicken farm to hunt for sunken treasure, turned up the first traces of the Atocha five years ago. But it wasn't until five years later that he could be certain that he had located the grave of the ship itself. Less than a tenth of the treasures of the Atocha have been salvaged so far amid legal fights with the Florida state government and the federal government.

The treasure hunt is a tale out of "The Deep," Peter Benchley's latest mining of the seas for best-sellers. Benchley, incidentally, includes in the book a character who quits the National Geographic after he tries of writing pictures legends (captions). Benchley has written three free-lance articles for the magazine but no legends.

In the exhibit cases — in their natural habitat for more than three centuries — the Atocha treasures lie on sand. There are encrusted ducats, silver bars, a 1-2 pound puddle of gold today worth enough to cover the down payment on a house and a gold chair with links sized to specific value. The links were pulled off to pay debts in a 17th Century variation of the credit card.

In a tank of sea water, the blurred outlines of coral-encrusted swords, daggers, and navigator's dividers from the wrecked ship are displayed. They are kept in the tank because they would disintegrate if exposed to air. The iron of the swords and daggers disintegrated long ago in sea water. Now only the shadow — the coral outlines remains. Left in air, the shadow, like the iron before it, would also disappear.

Billboards may push nutrition

By DAVE RILEY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Remember driving down the highway in the old days and being entertained by those signs that read:

 "The monkey took one look at Jim
"And threw the peanuts back at him.
"He needed Burma Shave."

Well, maybe the government should sell nutrition the way Burma Shave used to sell shaving soap, says Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn.

At a hearing Tuesday, federal health-officials stressed the need to encourage Americans to take more interest in nutritional eating habits.

It occurred to Humphrey that the Pentagon spends millions of dollars for roadside advertising in its constant search for enlistees. So, he asked, why not billboards telling people that eating right can help them live longer?

"And believe me, most people would rather live longer than join the Army," Humphrey suggested.

That doesn't mean that signs extolling the virtue of good eating habits will spring up overnight, but someday, you might see billboards like this along the freeway:

 "For Sam and Sue it was the finish.
"When Sam refused to eat his spinach.
"He needed: Health, Education and Welfare."

One thing for which the government is well known, however, is the competitive spirit among the various departments and bureaus that make it up. Therefore, you can expect other agencies to get into the act.

"Throat feel scratchy? Cough and choke?"

"We tried to tell you not to smoke."

"Listen to your Surgeon General."

If the campaign works, you can expect the military to ditch its old advertising campaigns and begin slapping up Burma Shave-style signs along more fertile fields.

"Is your old car hard to crank?"

"Trade it for our Patton tank."

"—The U.S. Army."

And then, one day, no doubt the ultimate in roadside signs:

"Fight pollution, if you please."

"By ripping off dumb signs like these."

"—Environmental Protection Agency."

Reagan's choice!

Ronald Reagan certainly hogged the spotlight, newswise, in his surprise announcement of a vice presidential running mate, should he win the Republican presidential nomination next month.

And his choice for the place was just as surprising as was his announcement, which fractured all tradition.

Sen. Richard S. Schweiker of Pennsylvania is Mr. Reagan's choice.

The two-term senator is an out-and-out liberal of the first order. He ranks right along with Sen. Walter Mondale of Minnesota, whom Jimmy Carter, the Democratic party presidential nominee, selected as his vice presidential running mate.

And Mr. Reagan's political views are no more compatible with those of Senator Schweiker than are those of Gov. Carter's with Senator Mondale.

Sen. John Tower said he couldn't imagine two people with more widely different views on the same ticket, "particularly a Republican ticket" than Reagan and Schweiker.

The Reagan choice must be classed as political, and this must be disappointing to many Reagan supporters, particularly in Texas.

Some Texas Republican leaders expressed amazement and disappointment at the selection, while others defended the move as one seeking to broaden the GOP base in preparation for a national election campaign.

Be that as it may, it cannot be classed as a helpful measure for Reagan on the Texas front.

Schweiker gained an 89 per cent "liberal coalition" rating from Americans for Democratic Action in 1975 with votes for oil corporation divestiture and repeal of the oil and gas depletion allowance for major oil companies.

This in itself is enough to turn off much Texas support. Ed Thompson, executive director of the Midland-based Permian Basin Petroleum Association, says Schweiker "doesn't have one single vote in favor of the oil industry."

Schweiker also has a strong pro-labor voting record. He has been given a 100 per cent rating by COPE, the AFL-CIO's political arm. Senator Mondale received a 95 per cent rating from COPE.

There is no use in getting excited about it. Mr. Reagan has made his selection and that's all there is to it. It was a bold move, indeed, on Reagan's part.

The next move is up to the delegates voting in the upcoming Republican convention at Kansas City. They are the ones who must decide on a presidential nominee. Then will come the time for getting all worked up about a vice presidential running mate.

'Judicial murders'

The London Sunday Express pulled no punches in criticizing the action of Angolan officials in executing the mercenaries recently.

The Express said editorially: "There was one overriding reason for the execution (in Angola) of the mercenaries. They were on the wrong, the losing side."

"No specific offenses were proved, or even alleged. It never was a crime to be a mercenary. The men shot in Angola were put on trial by a government that did not even exist at the time the mercenaries were supposed to have broken the law.

"President Neto, who owes his own position to Cuban mercenaries, no doubt imagines that the executions will bring acceptance and strength to his regime. He could not be more mistaken."

"At the very birth of his country, he has stained its name with judicial murders."

The Sunday Express hit the nail squarely on the head. The unjust executions constitute something which Angola will be a long time in living down, if ever.

NICK THIMMESCH

The Catholic vote: Big but soft for Jimmy Carter

WASHINGTON — The pollsters claim that if the election were held now, Carter-Mondale would banish either Gerald Ford or Ronald Reagan to some Valhalla for Republican presidential candidates. This Democratic ticket would sweep everything, including the Catholic bloc which makes up nearly half of the Democratic electorate.

Why, then, are Democratic Party professionals worried about the "soft" Catholic voter? After all, only one time in generations did it ever vote Republican, and that was in 1972, when 52 percent of Catholic voters went for Richard Nixon.

The party pros are concerned because of what might boil up in the minds of Catholics out of their subconscious thoughts and what might soak into their minds on certain issues. If there is considerable defection of Catholic voters, the Democrats would be in real trouble. Such a defection would come from two sources of concern.

The first is a bias by ethnic people in the North, including Catholics, against evangelizing rural Southern Protestants. The old images of the Ku Klux Klan, Southern bigotry and the like bothers these city folk, wrong as these images are in 1976.

In a word, there is Northern bigotry against what once was Southern bigotry. Though Carter seems safe on this now — and deserves to be, by his actions and life — the issue could surface later in a most destructive manner to his ticket, which has a heavy overtone of Protestantism.

But Catholics have reason to have more legitimate concern about the Carter-Mondale ticket. The concern should focus on issues.

Carter is against any federal aid to private or parochial education, including Catholic education. Carter approves the Mondale-sponsored "child and family service act" which many observers believe would allow the federal government to intrude on American family life.

While Carter told me personally that he is against the federal funding of abortion, he is against the constitutional amendment which is of symbolic and real importance to pro-life groups.

Mondale has consistently voted for federal funding of abortion, is against federal aid to parochial education and is the author of the aforementioned "child and family service act."

Moreover, Mondale, despite his agonizing rhetoric, supports compulsory busing of students for purposes of racial balance in school systems. The latter is still a hot issue in many big cities with large Catholic populations. Try to run it by the ethnic folk in South Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit or Chicago — just for openers. Mondale could be forced into the open on this question.

WASHINGTON MERRY — GO — ROUND

High executioner of foreign aid

By JACK ANDERSON with LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON — In the cause of saving the taxpayers' money, Rep. Otto Passman, D-La., has traveled to faraway countries and has told their respective potentates which companies they should do business with if they want U.S. aid.

He has also told the U.S. officials, who disburse the aid, when to ship certain commodities and how much to ship. Our sources have been present when Passman has called about an allocation, say, of rice to a needy country. "That's not a good idea," he has said.

On other occasions, he has complained about contracts to companies that he doesn't favor. Their bids, he has declared sternly, are "improper."

Government officials have often found it more expedient to accept his suggestions than to risk losing their appropriations. For the 77-year-old Passman is the Lord High Executioner in charge of cutting foreign aid budgets in the House.

His constant interventions with food shipments has aroused the curiosity of the Agriculture Department, State Department and the FBI. Indeed, the FBI is investigating Passman's relationship with the companies that have been getting foreign aid contracts.

The Agriculture Department is also investigating whether the old curmudgeon has tried to manipulate the commodities market by influencing overseas sales.

These are charges that he has denied, with righteous outrage. He has sworn to us, by all that he holds holy, that he intervened solely to save the taxpayers' money and to help all-American companies.

Otto Passman was born at the turn of the century to tenant farmers and was brought up on unseasoned corn bread and clabbered milk. At age 10, he was hired out to a neighboring farmer for $5 a month.

He decided to make his own way in the world after he turned 14. He dropped out of the fourth grade, worked on a cotton-and-rice farm for a while and eventually got a job in a grocery store.

The memory of his grim childhood developed in him a fierce attachment for every dollar he ever earned. He managed to hang on to enough money to invest in one business after another. His Passman Wholesale Equipment Company, a commercial refrigeration firm and Passman Investment Company thrived under his tight fist.

While he treated every dollar with tenderness, he was not unkind of those less blessed. He tithe to the church and became an active Mason. When friends were down on their luck, he was available for a loan and a lecture on economy.

Passman became admired in Monroe, La., whose burghers elected him to Congress in 1946. He made foreign aid his specialty. His knowledge of the intimate details of foreign aid is unparalleled. Or as one of his colleagues once said in exasperation: "(Passman) knows the number of coat hangers they have in Khartoum, but not what the AID program is doing in the Sudan."

He developed a special interest in rice. This might seem natural enough, since his native Louisiana is the nation's leading rice producer. But the company that usually benefited from Passman's intervention in rice

ART BUCHWALD

Simple procedure for winning uncommitted

WASHINGTON — A fellow went in to see the President last week and said he was an uncommitted delegate from Suffolk County, N.Y. The President said he was glad to see him. The fellow said he was glad to see the President, too. The reason was that Suffolk County had a sewer problem and the only one who might be able to solve it was the President of the United States. The President said he was very good at solving sewer problems and if any place got a new sewer next year it would be Suffolk County. The fellow walked out of the President's office and told reporters he was now a committed delegate for President Ford.

As the race for the Republican presidential nomination gets hotter, more and more uncommitted delegates are being asked to visit the White House and spend time with Gerald Ford. The White House has angrily denied the President is bribing anyone to vote for him.

But can we be sure? By early August the visits may go something like this.

"Mr. President, this is Mr. Gladstone, an uncommitted delegate from Minotree, Me."

"How do you do, Mr. Gladstone. Welcome to the White House. Can I make you some scrambled eggs?"

"No thank you. I'm not hungry, Mr. President."

Art Buchwald

"I understand you're an uncommitted delegate. Can I ask you why you're uncommitted?"

"Because the train don't stop at Minotree anymore."

"What's that you say?"

"The five-o-five used to stop in Minotree on the way to Boston. But they took it off last year."

"No one told me about this! Get me Secretary of Transportation Coleman on the phone... Mr. Secretary. This is the President. Why wasn't I informed that you took the train service off Minotree, Me., last year? ...I don't care if it was an Amtrak decision. I told you to wake me day or night when you decided on any change in this nation's train schedules. Now I want the five-o-five to Boston to stop at Minotree even if it means rerouting the 'Broadway Limited' from Chicago. This is a matter of national security. Thank you... Goodbye... There, Mr. Gladstone, that should do it. Is there anything else I can help you with?"

"That will be enough, Mr. President. I want you to know I will be proud to vote for you in Kansas City."

"Thank you, Mr. Gladstone. You should have told me about your train problems sooner."

"Mr. President, this is Mr. Ronald Felder of Sawtooth, Mont. He's an uncommitted delegate."

"You're darn tootin' I am. We was promised a ski lift two years ago and danged if we got so much as a piece of rope."

"That's odd. I specifically remember signing a bill for a ski lift for Sawtooth, Morton, what happened to that bill?"

"You didn't sign it, Mr. President. You vetoed it."

"Then I'll unveto it. Morton, find the bill and I'll sign it this afternoon. Mr. Felder, I hope I can come to Sawtooth next February and be the first one to ride your ski lift. That is if I'm the President, of course."

"If it's up to me you'll be the President in February."

"Thank you, Mr. Felder. Who's next?"

"Sarah Lockenbocker of Racine, Wis."

"How do you do, Mrs. Lockenbocker. What is your profession?"

"I'm a chambermaid in a Holiday Inn."

"That must be interesting work."

"I hate it."

"What would you like to do?"

"I thought I'd like to be a federal judge."

"Well, I'll speak to Ed Levi, the Attorney General, about that. If you can't be a federal judge, what would be your second preference?"

"I wouldn't turn down being ambassador to the Court of Saint James."

"Now that's easier. Take this note over to Henry Kissinger at the State Department and be sure and tell him I sent you."

"Thanks a lot. I guess this means I have to vote for you in Kansas City."

"Not necessarily. I want you to vote your conscience. But I did hear Ronald Reagan is going to give the post to Frank Sinatra."

"Over my dead body. You just got yourself an uncommitted delegate."

"Thank you, Mrs. Ambassador. Who's next, Morton?"

THE BIBLE

CAN YOU QUOTE IT?

By LAVINA ROSS FOWLER

1. "All right, Joe — get over — wanta hog the whole road?" is the jargon that goes on over all the highways of the world; Chinese and Russians may say it a little differently, but it all means the same hectic attitude that takes approximately 1000 lives per week. Even in the Holy Land, taxi drivers are called the descendants of Jehu. Why? 2 Kings 9:20 (King James), 4 Kings 9:20 (Douay)

2. Who literally broke all the Commandments first? Exodus 32:19

3. While Jesus was teaching in the Temple daily, where did He take his rest? Luke 21:37

4. What command did Christ give to those who are converted? Luke 22:32

5. "Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that..." Psalms 33:18

Four correct...excellent. Three correct...good. See Bible.

Anyone for sensuous soap?

The Washington Post
By NINA S. HYDE

"Benandre: to recapture the sensuous past in the beautiful present, turn on the taps, turn on Benandre, then just turn on."

Would you believe, sensuous soap? In full-page ads in current issues of Mademoiselle, Harper's Bazaar and Vogue, Ben Rickert, Inc., manufacturers and importers of luxury products for the bath, is introducing three new products — bath oil crystals and gelee and a highly perfumed soap — in terms that might make some customers blush.

Not something to simply scrub up with after a sweaty trip home from the office, mind you, these are products, the ad suggests, you might want to use in a bath shared with a friend.

"You have come to your senses now. Tonight in your own perfumed and private sanctuary, there are just the two of you. The only two who matter at this perfect moment."

After a two-paragraph reverie for the bath, but particularly the water, enter the soap.

"You touch in a new way. For this the bath is a touching experience. Your fingers trace a delicate pathway across a silken shoulder, down a responsive spine, and suddenly, the walls of your bathroom fragment, fall away and dissolve."

Just what is this product that's so devastating it even demolishes walls?

No 99 and 44-100ths per cent pure soap imitation, to be sure. According to a company spokesman who asked to remain nameless, the major ingredient is "refined collagen hydrolysates."

Another definition, according to Dr. Norman Estrin, vice president for science to the Cosmetic, Toiletary and Fragrance Association, is a fibrous protein that has been broken down. An animal by-product, in other words. Estrin believes that it has been used previously in wrinkle creams.

Actually, the company isn't expecting each Benandre user to grab a pal and hop in the tub. "We're not selling sex. We're talking about a pleasant experience that some might like to try," a company spokesman explains.

"We're saying that bathing with our product is a pleasant experience that will make you feel better. What you do after it is your business," he adds.

For some the bath is more than a method of getting clean, he continues. "The bath is quite an important event in the lives of some people. It's ritualistic. It's a place to meditate, or prepare, if you will. It should be an event."

By linking up with the bath, rather than saying its stuff will get you clean, Benandre has made the product personal, both emotionally and physically, he concludes.

So no quick in and out of the tub for Benandre users: "You cleanse each other scrupulously, fastidiously, as if performing a lovely rite that makes you one," the ad gushes.

Mademoiselle magazine's staff said they had no problem, though admittedly a few giggles, deciding to accept the Benandre ad. The May issue of the magazine pictured apparent friends bathing together.

"The company makes legitimate products that are very successful," said Frederick Jackson, publisher of Mademoiselle. "As for the creative approach of presenting the products, there is nothing salacious or harmful. It is their choice."

Apparently Benandre's turn-on for some people, was a turn-off for the publisher of Glamour. That magazine rejected the advertisement.

Beauty victim of ID crisis

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — Kevin Gale was the first runner-up in the Miss USA pageant this year, but it wasn't the case of a male invading a female territory.

Miss Gale is a 22-year-old blue-eyed blond.

Given her name because her parents wanted it to be unusual, she said she had been the victim of identity crisis since infancy.

"I was constantly teased and kidded about my name," she said. "I had a complex about meeting new people because I knew what would happen when they heard my name."

Guests reported

Out-of-city guests attending the wedding of Kenneth D. Anderson and Elizabeth Carol Guinand at Deerfield, S. Dak., included Col. and Mrs. C. E. Bissell, grandparents of the bridegroom; Mrs. Warren D. Anderson, grandmother of the bridegroom, and Mr. and Mrs. Payton V. Anderson, uncle and aunt of the bridegroom, all of Midland.

Mrs. Carter hosts Altrusa breakfast

Mrs. John J. Carter of 1903 Hughes St. was hostess to a breakfast when the Altrusa Club of Midland, Inc., held its first business meeting of 1976-77.

Assisting Mrs. Carter were Mrs. W. E. Stirmann, president, Mrs. J. P. H. McMullan Jr., immediate past president, and her mother, Mrs. Loleta B. Guffey.

Committee chairmen, or their representatives, reporting on plans for the ensuing year, were Mrs. Carter, community service; Mrs. W. Keisling, Altrusa information; Mrs. Loydd Wornell, vocational services; Mrs. Guy Saunders, international relations; and Mrs. Roy F. Gardner, membership. Mrs. McMullan presented a report on recommendations from the board of directors.

Club members decided to extend financial aid to a licensed vocational nurse student who will enter training in the fall. This is one of Altrusa, International's projects. The Midland club has assisted more than 12 LVN trainees.

Mrs. C. E. McCain, treasurer, reported on the club's booth at the Bicentennial Fun 'A' Fair. She announced that cutlery, hammers and stationary, the club's fund-raising projects, will be available from members throughout the year. She also announced

Make sure you receive tax refund

Copley News Service Q. I understand the IRS must redeliver thousands of refund checks each year. How can I make certain my refund check is delivered? — T.S.

A. Most refund checks are not delivered because the taxpayer has moved and has failed to leave a forwarding address with the Postal Service. Many taxpayers neglect to attach the label attached to their tax forms. Making sure that the IRS receives your correct name and address on this label can expedite delivery of your refund check. Taxpayers who contact the IRS about undelivered refund checks should give their name and address as it appeared on the return, and their present name, address, Social Security number and the type of form they filed.

Q. What can I do to correct an error on my return?

A. Taxpayers who discover after filing their return that they made an error can correct the mistake by filing a Form 1040X.

DEAR ABBY

Daughter faces possible fraud

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My daughter is married, has four children and was separated from her husband when she went to live with a divorced man. (I'll call him John.) She lived with him for 14 months, then he was killed.

After John died, my daughter claimed that she was his widow, and now she is receiving his Social Security, which amounts to a lot of money.

I am worried sick about this. Doesn't the Social Security Office check these claims? And if they do, and it becomes known that she was never married to John, what can they do to her?—NO NAME OR TOWN, PLEASE

DEAR NO NAME: The Social Security Office requires the birth certificates of all the children if the woman is claiming benefits for them, plus a marriage certificate to prove that she is indeed married to the man. Your daughter must have forged these documents.

If the S.S. office discovers a possible fraud, they turn it over to the District Attorney's office for investigation and possible prosecution. If found guilty, the accused must repay all the money and possibly face a fine and/or imprisonment.

DEAR ABBY: I am going to give my girlfriend a diamond soon, but here's the problem:

Her father is in the jewelry business, and I don't know whether I should buy the ring from him or not. I'm afraid if I go to him, he might think I'm expecting a better price, which I assure you I am not.

If I buy the ring from a competitor, I'm afraid my girl will be hurt.

What should I do?—BUYING A DIAMOND

DEAR BUYING: Buy the diamond from your future father-in-law. If he offers you a special price (and he probably will), don't be a schnook—accept it.

DEAR ABBY: When I was 19, I married a man who was 27, and we were so much in love we never thought we would have any problems. We have been married two years, and I am miserable.

He is a professional man, and I never got past the ninth grade. He is always correcting my English and has even suggested I go back to school and graduate.

Abby, I feel that he thinks I am not good enough for him. If he loved me as I was, why is he ashamed of me now? What should I do?—UNEDUCATED

DEAR UN: Get in touch with your public education system and resume your schooling where you quit. It can be done by mail or in evening classes with other adults. Your husband loves you, or he wouldn't encourage you to graduate. There is no shame in not knowing—only in refusing to learn.

Everyone has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply, write to ABBY in care of this newspaper. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

Today's brides are older

NEW YORK (AP) — Today's brides are slightly older than their counterparts five years ago, according to a survey of its readers by Bride's Magazine, which shows women are now marrying at an average age of 21.5 years, compared with 20.6 in 1971.

They appear to be more traditional, with 81 per cent saying they used engraved wedding announcements and 61 per cent using the services of a wedding gift registry.

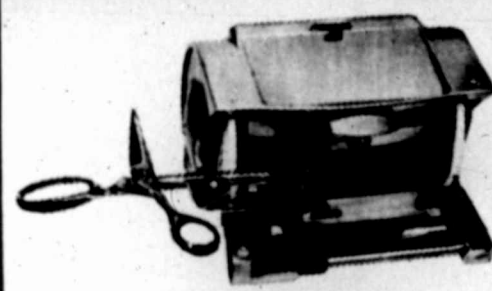

The general desire was for 12 five-piece place settings of fine china, silver and crystal as opposed to only eight settings of casual ware previously.

Brides also spend a third more on outfitting their first home — $4,808 average compared with $3,460. All expect to have stereo, equipment and 80 per cent expect to have color television.

Of those responding to the survey, 95 per cent plan to work for four or five years, after marriage. Five years ago the respondents expected to continue working for only three years.

Agence France Presse

France-Press

PARIS — Just when some concrete trends appeared about to emerge from this week's haute couture shows, Lanvin and Ted Lapidus asserted their fashion independence.

The two houses showed no nostalgic feelings, so prevalent elsewhere, for the 1950's.

Lanvin's Jules Francois Crahay preferred Anna Karenina tiered capes, edged in silver fox fur, while Lapidus spiced up his classical sportswear collection with a series of flapper dresses for modern molls.

These designers also expressed the literal long and short of it where hemlines were concerned, as Crahay kept coats, especially, levelled off at the bottom of the calf for day while dropping them to the floor for evening. Lapidus, on the other hand, preferred shorter styles, hemming some dresses as high as mid-knee.

The Lanvin show was unusually brief — only 47 models were presented — because of a 12-day strike by some key personnel just before this week's fashion rounds began.

Much of it was devoted to evening wear, which was romantic and colorful. Lanvin's women next winter will have tiny busts, displayed to advantage in deep, wide necklines. All the fabric — yards and yards of it — will go into high-waisted skirts of taffeta, usually, or crepe. Expectant mothers might especially appreciate Crahay's evening designs.

While greys and browns predominated in the Lanvin collection, Ted Lapidus preferred winter whites in cashmere or vibrant tones such as emerald green and rust in his trademark chamois leather.

Lapidus was the only designer so far to use the soft, thick fawn-colored fur of the South American guanaco in his coats and jackets, an interesting counterpoint to the English and Scottish wools which he favored for walking suits and riding costumes.

Once again, knee-length trousers appeared alongside knickerbockers and knit slacks, banded just above the ankle. Traditional trousers were out at Lapidus, although one pair, in black velvet, was tucked into tall boots to match the mood of a figured black velvet tunic with stand-up officer's collar.

Evening brought shimmering, embroidered flapper dresses with tank tops, flat bodices and a slight flare to the skirt. Instead of jewels, the models wore a dusting of glitter on neck and chest.

Emanuel Ungaro was in a peasant mood putting together strange combinations of prints which somehow matched, as in his wool challis overblouse of tiny green and yellow flowers on a red background, worn with a pleated skirt made of two wool challis scarves spashed with giant bouquets.

Ungaro used velvety chenille extensively for coats, which he paired with silk panne dresses and ensembles in naive prints and paisleys, designed by Sonja Knapp.

For evening, bodices were minimal or, in one case, non-existent — the model wore gold breast makeup — but necklines were covered by metal bibs of Byzantine sculpture with enamel or stone inlays.

Folklore also influenced Louis Feraud, but he drew on his native region of Arles for giant fringed shawls and tight corset-like bodices. Scandinavia also provided inspiration for cozy jacquards and some distinctive per spook geometric prints.

Nor was the American continent neglected to the extent that one long coat, in flat black with colorful appliques, looked like a walking totem pole. Feraud also used fringe on dresses, skirts and vests (waistcoats) in jersey and leather, always black.

Largely ignoring the taffetas and satins preferred by his colleagues, Feraud offered a selection of cashmere gowns in white or black with matching shawls — all in Russian flower prints.

Louis Feraud presented this black and white striped cashmere dress worn with a white flannel hooded cape coat in his winter collection shown in Paris Tuesday.

AT WIT'S END

Have a good day irritates

By ERMA BOMBECK

A letter from a reader the other day did a pretty good job on me. She wanted to know if I got paid for this drivel. Said she wouldn't blame my children and my husband if they left home and never came back. Felt sorry for me because I was obviously godless and would some day be left alone to repent for all my sins. Apologized for having to tell me all this, but everyone else was thinking it. She ended with a gummed yellow label above her signature with a half smile that implored, "HAVE A GOOD DAY."

The good Lord knows I tried, but after that I didn't get too far with it. Maybe I'm suspicious, but I felt she wasn't sincere in her greeting. Frankly, "Have a good day" is beginning to get on my nerves anyway.

Don't get me wrong. It's not the sentiment that bothers me, it's the mechanical, wooden way in which people say it when they don't really mean it. Funeral directors say it. IRS men say it. Traffic policemen say it. Bankers say it. Auto mechanics say it. Dentists say it. Clearly, it has become one of the most abused phrases in the English language.

Take the words "thank you." Thank you used to carry a lot of clout. It meant something. Nowadays, people automatically say "thank you" without a thought. They say thank you for the time of day — when it's a recording. They say thank you when the washer repairman gives them a bill for $43.25 for taking a pair of training pants out of the hose. They say thank you when a soft drink machine spits out a bottle.

I have often wondered how my favorite character, Elwood P. Dowd, the beautiful, uncomplicated, fuzzy man from "Harvey," would have responded to "Have a good day."

He would probably have said, "Compared to what?"

Nervously, his greeter would respond, "Compared to a bad one." Elwood would then have pinned him down with, "Is there another choice or is that it?"

"Uh . . . just the two . . . good or bad."

"Then I'd be an idiot to choose the bad one, right? So, why do I need reminding?"

Good wishes are too important to become clichés — and sentiments too special to come pre-assembled. Besides, they make people skeptical.

The other day my husband pulled up to a car with a bumper sticker that invited, "HONK IF YOU LOVE JESUS."

He laid on his horn and two minutes later, a man appeared at his window and threatened to rearrange his nose.

That's the trouble when you don't write your own material. A lot can be lost in the translation.

Actress shuns olive oil when cooking Italian

By JOHNA BLINN
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD—Actress Bernadette Peters, a luscious, dark-eyed blonde, is an old-fashioned girl, a romantic and a nester. She's also an Italian cook of no mean skill. Seated in the charming living room of her Hollywood Hills duplex apartment, she laughed and said, "I've lived here nearly three years now, so I guess it's time I tried out the fireplace." She sounds like a delighted child when she laughs.

Her favorite piece of furniture is a couch hand-carved with dolphins and mermaids and still covered with the original cut velvet upholstery. She brought it out from New York after the big decision to leave her native city and try it here on her own.

Life for Bernadette has been especially sweet of late. She not only can be seen in Mel Brooks' "Silent Movie," a screwball comedy about the making of silent films, she will be on the tube this fall in the new CBS series, "All's Fair." She plays a free lance photographer who is, as is Bernadette in real life, a vegetarian. Bernadette's been a vegetarian for about a year. "I feel fabulous. I never get tired anymore, whereas before, when I used to eat meat, I tired very easily and was even anemic. Diet is very important!"

And cooking, according to her, "is fun. Within my diet, there are so many delicious casseroles to make, fish to bake and wonderful vegetables to choose from." Before she became a vegetarian, her cooking was, again according to her, "so terrible not even I could eat it!"

What Bernadette enjoys most in the kitchen is preparing Italian vegetarian delights without using the traditional olive oil. "My diet doesn't permit any oil except what occurs naturally in food. I don't even use oil in salads." Lately, she's been trying to concoct a pesto (a classic Italian oil and herb sauce) without oil. She even avoids avocados because of their high fat content. "These days, in fact, I can hardly even look at food that has fat in it."

"I know it sounds like a cliché to say my tomato sauce is delicious because I'm Italian," she said with another laugh, "but it happens to be true. My mother is a good cook and so was her mother. Naturally, they taught me to make all the good Italian dishes." The secret to her sauce and good vegetarian cooking, Bernadette claims, is in the use of herbs and spices. "I load my sauce down with tons of sweet basil; that's the way my mother and grandmother always did it." Her closely knit family, the Lazarras, still live in Ozone Park, N.Y., where her father has a truck route for Italian bread.

"I start with canned tomato sauce and then add the herbs and a dash of sugar. For flavor and texture, I then add minced fresh vegetables—without sauteing them, of course! Towards the end of the cooking, I thicken the sauce naturally by grating in a raw potato and letting it cook down."

"There are so many things I like to fix—lasagne, for example. I make my own noodles and use a soybean meat replacement and mozzarella cheese. I also like to make a baked zucchini casserole with tomatoes, cheddar cheese and herbs, with toasted crumbs on the top." One of her favorite dishes for entertaining is baked eggplant Parmesan. "I slice the eggplant very thin and brown it either in a skillet that I've coated very lightly with vegetable oil spray or in a Teflon pan."

Eating out presents no problems to her diet, says Bernadette. "You can always get a good piece of fish. The only difficulty is getting it cooked without frying!" She is looking forward to trying out London's vegetarian restaurants when she makes her first trip there to film a Christmas TV special with Bing Crosby.

Bernadette, who is unusually reserved in talking about herself, is a self-described homebody. "Frankly, I enjoy solitude. I never liked to go out just to go out, even when I was a teenager. I've never felt comfortable in the 'swinging singles' disco scene. Actually, I think it's rather sad. I do enjoy the company of a few close friends, but I think it's important to be able to be by yourself."

Not a member of any organized religion, Bernadette has a definite philosophy and believes strongly in meditation. "It's important," she says, "not to give in to things that bother you. If you have a leg that pains you, for instance, and you just forget it and walk on it, the pain will usually just go away." Bernadette regards anxiety as the greatest danger faced by anyone. "Conquering your fears is the best thing that can happen to you. I have a strong feeling of God, and once you have that, what is there to fear?" Bernadette's recipe follows:

EGGPLANT PARMESAN BAKE

For the sauce:

- 1 medium-size onion, peeled, finely minced
- 1/2 cup green pepper, minced, optional
- 2 stalks celery, minced
- 1/2 tsp. garlic salt
- 3 cans (8 oz. each) tomato sauce
- 1/2 cup water
- 1 1/2 tsp. dried basil
- 1 tsp. chopped parsley
- 1/2 tsp. dried oregano, crumbled

- 1 bay leaf
- dash of sugar to taste
- salt, freshly ground pepper to taste
- 1 small potato, peeled, grated

Combine all the ingredients except potato in saucepan. Bring to boiling point, reduce to simmer. Cook sauce, stirring often to prevent burning. Add potato during last 30 minutes. Rub sauce through colander or put into electric blender, whirling long enough to make a smooth sauce. Set aside.

For the eggplant:

- 1 eggplant, weighing about 1 lb.
- salt, freshly ground black pepper
- spray cooking oil
- 1 8-oz. package cubed mozzarella cheese
- 1/2 cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese
- 1/2 tsp. crumbled basil
- 1/2 tsp. dried oregano, crumbled
- salt, pepper

Wash eggplant, cut into 1/4-inch slices. Sprinkle with salt; let them drain 15 minutes to draw out water. Pat dry with paper towel. Dust lightly with salt and pepper. Spray large skillet lightly with spray vegetable oil or heat Teflon-coated pan over medium heat. Brown eggplant slices lightly on each side. Line a 9 x 12-inch baking dish with aluminum foil. Pour some of the tomato sauce in bottom of casserole. Add layers of cooked eggplant, tomato sauce, Parmesan cheese, herbs and seasonings. Repeat the process until all the eggplant is used, pouring extra sauce and cheese on top of the final layer of eggplant. Cover, bake in preheated 400 deg. F. oven 20 minutes or until cheese is brown and bubbling. Serve at once. Delicious meal with Italian bread and tossed green salad.

AFTERTHOUGHTS: Bernadette's sauce can be made ahead or frozen. It's also good on baked fish, pasta or eggs.

American treaty delegation in 'first class mess'

By GEORGE C. WILSON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The American delegation, which will resume efforts in August to negotiate an international treaty for dividing up the riches of the ocean, is in "a first class mess," according to the Pentagon executive who used to work on national ocean policy.

What is needed, Deputy Defense Secretary William P. Clements Jr. said in an interview, is "a general housecleaning" of the American bureaucrats "who have literally made a career" out of traveling around the world to Law of the sea conferences.

Those conferences, under United Nations auspices, are designed to get nations of the world to agree on how the deep seas shall be used and exploited — including mining for minerals.

The next Law of the Sea Conference is scheduled to be held in New York City from Aug. 2 to Sept. 17. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has called the Law of the Sea negotiations "one of the most important" that have "ever taken place."

Kissinger has warned that if the Law of the Sea negotiations "are not completed this year, the world will have lost its best chance to achieve a treaty in this generation."

While not disagreeing with the importance of negotiating a treaty for developing the deep ocean, other American officials involved in the negotiations predicted in interviews that no agreement will be reached in 1978.

Instead, they said, the best that can be hoped for until after the November U.S. Presidential elections is a narrowing of remaining differences on Law of the Sea questions. The central concerns are how the seabed should be mined and how the money made on ocean minerals should be divided among nations.

In what Kissinger said was President Ford's attempt to underline the importance of next week's Law of the Sea talks, Kissinger was told by the President to head the delegation himself.

Clements and others interviewed said that Kissinger will be taking over a delegation that has been torn with dissension since T. Vincent Learson succeeded John F. Stevenson as chairman on Dec. 15, 1975. (Carlyle E. Maw, under secretary of state for security assistance, chaired the delegation between Stevenson's departure and Learson's appointment.)

"All this behind-the-scenes knifing, backbiting and so forth didn't start until after he was appointed," Clements said of Learson without mentioning his name.

"I think it's a first class mess,"

Clements said when asked how the negotiations are being handled now. American Law of the Sea policy making "hasn't had the direction and management that it should have had."

Clements served on the Under Secretaries Committee on Law of the Sea policy from Jan. 30, 1973, when he became deputy secretary of defense until Sept. 17, 1975, when he withdrew from the committee because of his concern about conflict-of-interests.

He said in an interview that as soon as he learned that his former firm — SEDCO of Dallas — planned to go into seabed mining, he withdrew from Law of the Sea discussions.

Clements acknowledged that before resigning from the Under Secretaries Committee he had reviewed the seabed mining rules the U.S. delegation planned to offer at the Law of the Sea conference in Caracas in 1974.

He said that the proposed rules were so easy on the seabed mining companies that would have leased great tracts of ocean, that he and two other under secretaries "hit the roof."

As a result of their protests, Clements said, the seabed mining rules were toughened at a time the bureaucrats who had drafted the rules were "getting ready to give away the store."

Turkish government believes two-year-old program has halted underworld dope supply

By EMEL ANIL

AFYON, Turkey (AP) — Turkish officials believe they have cut off the Turkish heroin supply to the underworld through a two-year-old program controlling the cultivation of poppies.

United Nations drug control officials here are inclined to agree, saying the program "definitely works" and that they intend to continue U.N. financial support for it.

The poppy, source of such drugs as heroin and morphine, has been grown on the arid central Anatolian steppes for 2,000 years. This summer it is once again ripe for harvest in Afyon province and six other provinces where cultivation is permitted under license.

Poppy cultivation was banned in Turkey in 1972 by an interim military government, under strong American pressure. At the time, the United States claimed that 80 per cent of the heroin reaching American addicts originated in Turkish poppy fields, reaching America through the "French Connection" via Marseilles.

With the return to power of an elected government, Turkey resumed poppy cultivation in 1974. Before doing so, however, Turkish officials went to the U.N. agencies involved in prevention of drug abuse, asking for advice and funds to finance an effective control system to prevent diversion of opium poppy production into smugglers' hands.

U.N. experts counseled that Turkey adopt the "straw process" method of harvesting, which forbids the farmer to cut the poppy pods for the extraction of the opium gum inside.

Heroin is processed from the opium gum; therefore no gum, no heroin, Turkey agreed to the suggestion.

"This was a courageous decision, even a gamble," says Prof. Paul Reuter, head of the U.N. International Narcotics Control Board. "The system had never been tried before outside of the Communist Bloc, where it is used in Poland and the Soviet Union."

"It was also a risky decision because the system had never been applied on such a large scale in the past," adds his colleague, Gilbertus de Beus of the U.N. Fund for Drug Abuse Control.

The two U.N. officials recently visited Turkish poppy fields and storage facilities here and talked to farmers and officials in charge of the control program.

"Our conclusion is that the system definitely works. We therefore feel fully justified to continue our support," says de Beus, who holds the purse strings on U.N. financial support.

Since 1974, the U.N. fund has provided about $4 million in aid for the purchase of 104 vehicles to patrol the poppy fields, telecommunications equipment and storage facilities.

Campus Crusade now reaches to 80 countries

By RUSSELL CHANDLEI
The Los Angeles Times

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. — Twenty-five years ago, a young couple cautiously entered the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority on the University of California at Los Angeles campus to present the message and claims of Jesus Christ.

To the astonishment of Bill and Vonette Bright, more than half the coeds responded, and Campus Crusade for Christ International was born.

Today, Campus Crusade is a giant operation with more than 5,000 staff members in 80 countries, and an annual income of more than $30 million and a goal of "saturating every country in the world with the gospel of Jesus Christ" by 1980.

Crusade is the dream and vision of William R. Bright, 54, energetic one-time candy manufacturer turned evangelist and master strategist.

"From the beginning it has been a ministry of miracles and the supernatural so God would get all the glory," Bright says repeatedly.

Though the crusade's growth, by anyone's standards, has been super (and many call it miraculous), the biggest push is still ahead, according to Bright.

By the end of 1978, Bright's "Here's Life, America" campaign to convert to evangelical Christianity 25 million Americans in 265 major cities is scheduled to be accomplished. So far, campaigns have been staged in about 20 cities.

Bright thinks the nation will fall to communism unless Christians get behind the election of "men and women of God to public office" this November. And that's why he is confident "Here's Life, America" is "the greatest thing in history."

Humanly speaking, the task seems impossible: church leaders close to "Here's Life" believe it is far behind schedule.

Not so Bright, whose response is typical of his attitude to criticism: undeterred and resolute.

"As a nation, we're in a grave, grave crisis," Bright said the other day during an interview in his office at crusade headquarters in Arrowhead Springs overlooking San Bernardino.

"But in despair and frustration, we as a nation will turn to God. I believe we'll see a great awakening that will influence every facet of society. We'll see a tremendous healing."

Bright believes that, though "such a statement sounds audacious, preposterous, even arrogant," God has commissioned the crusade's "Here's Life" to be the vehicle to bring about this national — and then worldwide — revival.

The campaign is based on a model used successfully last year in Atlanta, where, according to crusade statistics, people in 130,000 homes were personally contacted in a three-week mass media blitz. 25,000 people called the telephone evangelism center and 10,000 indicated "decisions for Christ."

(Bright and Campus Crusade identify closely with the strain of Christianity that stresses the need for being "born again" or converted to Christ through a definite act of faith commitment, the same concept underscored by presidential candidate Jimmy Carter.)

"Think of your people burning with a vision to reach their friends and neighbors for Christ and experiencing the daily joy of disciplining others. Your church involved in an unprecedented movement of God's Spirit changing the character of your entire city.

"Capturing your city for Jesus Christ! It can happen through 'Here's Life, America,' a proven plan of evangelism."

So proclaims an announcement about the campaign Bright feels is the "final thrust" before Christ's return.

Project Final Thrust is Bright's fund-raising effort to undergird "Here's Life" with $100 million — $40 million for the United States and the balance to finance the 1980 deadline to preach the gospel worldwide.

Outsiders are skeptical that that much money can be raised in time to pay for the media time.

Democrats warming House leader race

By EDMOND Le BRETON

WASHINGTON (AP)—While Republicans around the country focus on the GOP presidential nomination, Democratic members of the House are warming up to an election race of their own.

Four men are seeking the post of majority leader, a top prize in the legislative branch. Because not only the candidates but the voters are professional politicians, the election has a special flavor. In the words of one long-time congressional operator, seeking votes for a leadership position is "a very personal thing. Nobody can do it for you. You've got to look right in the guy's eyes."

The contest became four-cornered Tuesday when Rep. Jim Wright of Texas, a 22-year Democratic House veteran who has long worked in the leadership circle, announced his candidacy.

Already seeking votes for the No. 2 party position — next to the House speaker — were these representatives:

—Phillip Burton, a hard-driving Californian who won the chairmanship of the Democratic caucus with a shrewd and energetic campaign aimed largely at the big class of Democratic freshmen.

—John J. McFall of California, the soft-spoken Democratic whip. That position, No. 3 in the party hierarchy, in recent years has been a stepping stone to the leadership and speakership.

—Richard Bolling of Missouri, rated as one of the House's intellectuals. Bolling has written books and articles on House procedures and leaders, winning a reputation as an expert on the chamber, but also ruffling feathers by their outspoken criticism.

The list of candidates may not be closed. Rep. Brock Adams of Washington, who emerged from relative obscurity by heading the new House Budget Committee, has been reported taking soundings.

House Democrats, who will make their choices at a caucus in December, will be playing a sort of game of musical chairs. Speaker Carl Albert is retiring. The present majority leader, Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill of Massachusetts, has no opposition in sight to his plan to move up to the speakership.

The contest for leader, therefore, is wide open.

The four announced candidates, all strongly partisan Democrats, present contrasts in personality and philosophy. Burton and Bolling are seen by some as the more abrasive of the four. They are also considered somewhat more liberal, though neither McFall nor Wright is classed as a conservative.

Chief named

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Ford Wednesday nominated Gen. Bernard Rogers, a one-time Rhodes scholar who now heads the the Army Forces Command, to be Army chief of staff.

If confirmed by the Senate, Rogers will succeed Gen. Frederick Weyand, who is retiring Oct. 1.

Weyand, the last U.S. commander in Vietnam, will be 60 years old in September, and associates say he believes senior military officers should retire at that age.

Rogers, 55, has commanded the Army Forces Command at Ft. McPherson, Ga., since 1974. He served in the key post of Army deputy chief of staff for personnel while the Army was converting from the draft to an all-volunteer force.

Weyand is in the middle of a four-year term as Army chief of staff. He was promoted to the post after the death of Gen. Creighton Abrams in September 1974.

Weyand has sought to revitalize the Army from the slump in morale and readiness that grew out of its Vietnam war experience.

Rogers, born in Fairview, Kan., held infantry combat commands in World War II, Korea and Vietnam and won the Distinguished Service Cross, the Silver Star and other decorations.

He graduated from West Point and attended Oxford University after World War II as a Rhodes scholar. There he received bachelor and master of arts degrees in philosophy, politics and economics.

Eaton still seeking rapport with Soviet Union

By GEORGE ESPER

CLEVELAND (AP) — At 92, industrialist Cyrus S. Eaton still pursues his goal of better relations for the United States with Communist countries — a quest that keeps him in regular contact with Communist leaders.

He observed his birthday in Havana last Dec. 27 as a Christmas holiday guest of Fidel Castro. He keeps in touch with the Chinese government through its United Nations ambassador, Huang Hua. And he says he communicates regularly by phone and letter with Leonid I. Brezhnev, Alexei N. Kosygin and Andrei A. Gromyko of Russia, as well as with leaders of Poland, Romania, Hungary and Bulgaria.

For 20 years Eaton has criticized anti-Communist aspects of U.S. policy. His statements, especially in support of Castro, once brought him headlines. They seemed strange utterances for an American businessman whose aides say he's worth close to $2 billion.

Eaton says he takes for granted "that the CIA and the FBI have in the past tapped my phone and spied on me" — a charge the FBI denies. The CIA says, "We have never commented as a matter of policy on allegations of this sort."

The billionaire sees himself as an advocate of the free enterprise system who nevertheless is a link with the Communist world; and an advocate, in frequent contacts with American leaders, of a foreign policy based on "commerce and friendship with all nations of whatever religious or political persuasion."

His day is still a long one. He arises at 6 a.m., reads three newspapers in bed, and by 9:30 is in his office suite on the 36th floor of a building overlooking the Flats, Cleveland's industrial heart. The office is for business — until just after lunch — and the rest of the day is for détente, conducted by telephone, telegram and letter from his home on an 800-acre farm in nearby Northfield.

He won't, however, discuss the details of his contacts with world leaders.

"Doctors say that I'm good probably for another eight years," Eaton says. "But one doesn't want to rely too much on that. When you get to be 92, the inevitable might be just around the corner. I have no fear of death, so that I'm not uneasy about that. I'm going to keep going as long as I'm physically able."

His voice is raspy. There are long pauses, and unfinished sentences. The rumpled dark blue suit, with lint on it, matches the crinkled blue eyes. His hair is snow white. There is a hearing aid and Eaton acknowledges that he sometimes reads lips to understand. A cane lies on a chair nearby.

It was acquired a year ago, after Eaton suffered a painful back injury when he stepped into a hole while tramping through woods in Nova Scotia. He was born there in 1883 and still spends summers in Nova Scotia — at Thinkers Lodge, his ancestral home, or at his cattle farm there.

"I feel," he says, "that no matter what your differences may be philosophically, religiously, economically, politically, that you can't use force to change people's minds."

For this reason, he is critical of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, whom Eaton sees as an advocate of a foreign policy based on force. He first met Kissinger when the secretary of state was a Harvard professor participating in annual Pugwash conferences.

It was in 1955 that Eaton first invited scientists, authors, scholars and statesmen from both Communist and non-Communist countries to a conference at Thinkers Lodge in Pugwash to promote international understanding and to consider ways to lessen the hazards of nuclear, biological and chemical warfare. The Pugwash conferences are still held, but in various cities around the world.

"Kissinger has been a great expert in covering up his recommendations in Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, Cuba and Chile," Eaton says. "And if they're ever paraded and backed up with the facts, the American people will be through with Mr. Kissinger."

He blames U.S. foreign policy for Cuba's decision to send troops to Angola, although Castro wasn't sure he was doing the right thing.

"I think," Eaton says, "the Cubans themselves have some question in their minds as to whether that was the wise thing, but they were put in this position. They are a small country right close to us and the most powerful nation in the world is endeavoring to destroy them economically and the question is what can they do back."

"Now they can't do anything back to endanger the United States economically. They haven't got the strength or the power to do it, but here is a chance where they've found out the United States is secretly backing an element in Angola to be sure that Angola didn't go Communist."

"The one way in which they could be effective was to send some of their troops there. Now whether that was wise or not is another question. But it was the one way they could do something to thwart the most powerful nation in the world."

"So they yielded to human nature to the extent of doing that. I'm not sure it was a wise thing to do. That's their reason. There's no secret about it. They discussed it very frankly with me and they raised questions in their own mind that they weren't sure they were doing the right thing."

"But here is this powerful giant trying to snuff them out. What could they do back? It was a very tiny thing they could do to get world attention and world influence."

Revision study denied

AUSTIN (AP) — The 3rd Court of Civil Appeals agreed Wednesday with lower courts that state Rep. Luther Jones, D-El Paso, cannot stop Gov. Dolph Briscoe from having the Legislative Council do a study on property tax revision.

Jones sought a permanent injunction against Briscoe and other state officials to keep them from entering into an interagency contract with the Legislative Council for a study to determine the ability of each school district's ability to support public education. An appropriation of $5 million was made for the study by the 1975 legislature.

Jones contended that the legislative act did not contemplate spending any money to prepare a proposed revision of property tax laws.

The suit was dismissed by a Travis County district court and Wednesday's decision upheld that ruling.

"In an effort to carry out the mandate of (the legislative act) the governor entered into the contract with the Legislative Council for the council to prepare a proposed revision of Texas property tax laws. We are of the view that the governor's decision to enter into the contract was an act authorized by the section," the court said.

The appellate court added that the governor's choice of the way to implement the act "was the act and decision of the state and however perspicacious the governor's decision may or may not be a suit to test its validity is a suit against the state which cannot be maintained without legislative permission."

House to join check

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A committee from the Texas House may join other state agencies in investigating claims that Giddings State Home and School officials sexually pressured students, according to state Rep. Lane Denton.

"I have instructed my staff to get copies of all investigations, and then I'll be in a position to tell the committee (the House Social Services Committee) whether we should investigate this matter," said Denton, who is the committee chairman.

Denton said Tuesday he is researching allegations that officials at the co-ed juvenile delinquency institution propositioned and had sexual relations with students in return for their early release.

The state investigated these allegations earlier this year and closed the case in April.

South cagers defeat North Stars, 95-90

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
R-T Sports Writer

HOUSTON — San Antonio Jefferson's Micah Owens only averaged 19 points per game as a senior in high school, but his 33 points in Hofheim Pavilion Wednesday night was the difference in the South's 95-90 All-Star basketball victory over the North.

OWENS, a 6-6 post man, who is headed for New Mexico State University this fall, provided the inside punch for the South with 15 of 26 shots from the field.

"I thought Owens dominated the game from start to finish," Midland Lee Coach Paul Stueckler said in the North dressing room after the game.

"He also hurt us rebounding and they had a little more size. We just never had anybody that could cover Owens."

The South's victory narrowed the North's advantage to 17-13, but the physical contest was a good show for the 7,000 in attendance.

"Morton's Mike Williams had to guard Owens most of the night," Stueckler said. He did a good job considering he is only 6-3.

HE PLAYED about 6-5 for us. When he fouled out, that really hurt us. I ended up having to use 6-2 Jim Bowden inside late in the game," added Stueckler.

Williams led the North with 19 points, but he fouled out with 4:21 left in the game while the North was holding a slim 83-79 advantage.

It didn't take long for the South to surge into the lead after that. Port Arthur's Thaddeus Sanders, who will go to Texas Tech and who followed Owens with 15 points, put the South into the lead for good at the 2:56 mark of the fourth period with a layup.

The North had a chance to get back into the game, but a bad shot and a traveling violation quickly stopped any momentum.

The North also got off to a slow start in the first half as the Rebs. opened a 33-20 lead in the second quarter on a 25-foot jumper by Carthage's Eric Carter.

Williams and the North, however, caught fire and outscored the South, 15-1 to take a 35-34 lead with 6:14 left in the half.

The lead changed hands seven times before the North went into the dressing room at halftime with a 49-47 lead.

STUECKLER HAD two players foul out. Williams and Lubbock Estacado's Ronnie Phenix, but four others were playing with four fouls when the game ended including San Angelo's Arnold McDowell, Abilene's Derrell Baxter also had four. The North's 13-point deficit in the game made them play a little more aggressively and they ended up paying for it in the end.

"We had good guard play from Phil Hale and Jim Bowden," said Stueckler. "But we were just out-manned outside. I would have gone to a zone to get more help inside if we had been playing with man-to-man rule. I also thought we could have gotten a little more pressure from our press."

The Texas High School Association All-Star slate will come to a close tonight with the 42nd annual North-South football game at 7:30 in the Astrodome. Midland High's James Zachery will be a starting linebacker for the North.

Diablos lead by game

By The Associated Press

El Paso has taken a one-game lead in the Texas League West again thanks to an extra-inning victory by Jackson over Amarillo, 4.

While the El Paso

Diablos were beating Shreveport 5-3, the Mets whipped Amarillo 5-4 in 11 innings. In other games, Midland crushed Arkansas 16-6 and San Antonio whipped Lafayette 7-2.

El Paso took a 5-1 lead into the ninth when Shreveport scored twice and had the tying runs on second and third with two outs when reliever Fred Kahualua came in to strike out the last batter, giving Lamar Wright his third victory in four decisions. Julio Cruz hit a two-run single to pace the Diablos attack.

Luis Rosado singled home Jim Kidder with the winning run in the 11th inning for Jackson, which trails Shreveport by 1½ games in the East.

The Mets got their previous four runs on two two-run homers by Manny Lantigua and Wayne Bauers in the third inning.

Doug Duncan hit a three-run double in the third to break a scoreless tie and lead San Antonio over Lafayette. Bobby Thompson hit a two-run homer for the Brewers.

CUBS BRIEFS — If the Miss Softball America All-Stars aren't ready for their tournament next week, it won't be Ernie Banks' fault. The Chicago Cubs roving coach spotted the girls working out near Cubs Stadium and stopped to watch. Then he invited them over to the Stadium to meet the Midland players and put them through a workout before the game and even let them take a few "rips" during Cubs batting practice.

The team stayed on to watch the Cubs victory...Ernie will be in Midland through the series....

One of the weird plays of the year came in the first inning when Jose Ortiz fouled out catcher to third. Catcher Ed Davis circled under the pop at the plate and got a glove on it, but lost the ball. Third baseman Jim Riggelmeyer, racing in, caught the rebound before it hit the ground....

One of the Texas League mysteries has been why Arkansas first baseman John Young is still in the league after batting .330 for the Travelers last

Midland's bats boom in 16-6 win over Travs

BY TED BATTLES

Midland's Cubs began to beat a steady bat tattoo from the sixth inning on Tuesday, but it wasn't enough to pull out a hopelessly lost cause. However, they just picked up where they left off Wednesday night to pound Arkansas, 16-6, in Texas League action at Cubs Stadium.

The win squared the current series at 1-1 going into tonight's 7:30 game. Righthander Wayne Doland, 9-5, is Manager Denny Sommers' tentative starter for the Cubs while John Urrea, who once was 9-2 this season, will take his eighth shot at his 10th victory. In the interim, John has picked up four more losses.

Chuck Rogers, who usually works on a meager ration of runs, was the beneficiary of the impressive Cubs' bat display. As a result the 6-6 University of Michigan journalism major who hopes to go into radio or TV eventually, notched his eighth win.

"I HAVEN'T had that many runs since early in the season when they got me 10 runs in a couple of starts," said Rogers, who scattered 14 hits in going the route for the 10th time this season. "I stuck mostly with a fast ball, although the double Young (John) hit in the fifth was a change up."

Tony Franklin, Scott Thompson and Ed Putman combined to make it a rocking chair victory for Chuck.

Ed Putman

year. "No, I didn't get a chance at a higher club in spring training, because I arrived late. I was finishing up my spring semester at Auburn," John also attended Bowling Green, but bails from Los Angeles. "Yes, I know Tony Franklin. (was a Los Angeles product). We were the right side of the infield for the Crenshaw Crunchers semipro team, but we played against one another in high school basketball. Ask Tony how I held him scoreless!"

"Scoreless?" snorted Tony. "That's just because they didn't teach them to count at Mt. Carmel. At least, we learned to count at Centennial."

George Riley, a 19-year-old left-hander who has a nickname of "Heat", and outfielder Joseph Hernandez, a 23-year-old from Houston who is known as "Joltin' Joe" will join the Midland Cubs today from Pompano Beach, replacing Mike Sember and Dave Geisel, called up to Wichita. Hernandez played college ball at San Jacinto JC and also for two years at Pan American University.

Franklin hit a three-run inside-the-park homer to center in the fourth. Putman cracked three singles and a double to knock in five runs while Thompson lashed out three hits and plated three runs. Earle Chew also chipped in with three hits.

The Cubs sent nine men to the plate in both the fourth and fifth innings to break the game open with four and six run bursts.

Mike Gordon's awesome three-run homer highlighted the fifth. The Brockton, Mass., buster poled his eighth homer over the double deck green monster in center, only the second time this season that feat has been accomplished. El Paso's Willie Aikens was the other to do it.

THOMPSON CONTINUED a hitting streak that began five games ago with his three hits, giving him nine for his last 20 at bats.

Thompson, who has been learning first base this season, played in right field, but claims where he plays doesn't really make any difference in how he hits.

"I know some guys feel playing an unfamiliar position hurts their hitting, but it's just the opposite with me. When I'm in the outfield, I'm inclined to think about hitting. When I'm at first I'm concerned with playing defense, it keeps me in the game and I really think it's better for my hitting because I don't worry about it so much."

Rogers didn't walk a batter and the only moment of anxiety for him came in the fifth when it looked like he might not stick around long enough to pick up the win.

MIDLAND WENT into the inning with a 7-1 lead and the Travelers rallied for four runs as John Young and Nick Leyva paced a fourth-inning surge with doubles, all the damage coming with one out.

"It was about dusk and it was hard to pick up some of those fly balls," Rogers pointed out.

Rogers settled down to get Jim Riggelmeyer, who was to homer in the eighth, on a grounder to second and whiff catcher Davis, one of his five strikeouts.

Young collected three hits off Rogers and shortstop Ken Oberkfell lashed out four for the Travelers.

U.S. athletes lag in medals

MONTREAL (AP) — The United States now is almost hopelessly out of the medals race in the XXI Olympic Games and, in fact, doesn't even have a very good shot at second place.

The Americans, who once dominated these quadrennial celebrations of sports, suffered a gold medal shutout again Wednesday, their third in five days. They have gained only one gold medal since Sunday night and, in that period, have fallen far back of Russia and East Germany.

Russia, which picked up four golds Wednesday, leads with a gold-silver-bronze count of 33-31-23. East Germany has 30-19-18. The United States is a poor third at 22-26-19.

The trend, however, could be reversed.

The key could come in today's activity. Maxie Parks, Los Angeles, Fred Newhouse, Baton Rouge, La., and Herman Frazier, Philadelphia, have promised a 1-2-3 American finish and a shutout of Cuba's Alberto Juantoreno in the men's 400 meters.

"We're ready to run him right out of a medal," said Newhouse.

AND TONIGHT, big John Tate of Knoxville, Tenn., will take on Cuba's favored Teofilo Stevenson in a heavyweight boxing semifinal, the feature of the television coverage.

Tate is one of seven Americans who has reached the boxing semifinals. All of them are assured of at least a bronze medal. By comparison, the United States won only two boxing medals in the 1972 Games at Munich.

"We're doing it for Davey," is the boxers' rallying cry. Featherweight Davey Armstrong, Puyallup, Wash., whose mother died only six days before the Games started, was eliminated in the quarter-finals. His teammates say, quite frankly, he was robbed.

Tate, who suffered an eye cut, put together a strong third round for a 3-2 quarter-final decision over West Germany's Peter Hussing, clearing the way for the important bout with the formidable Stevenson, the defending Olympic champion.

Other Americans in tonight's semis are the fighting Spinks brothers, middleweight Mike and light-heavyweight Leon; light-welter Sugar

Ray Leonard, Palmer Park, Md.; lightweight Howard Davis, Glen Cove, N.Y.; bantamweight Charles Mooney, an army sergeant stationed at Ft. Bragg, N.C., and flyweight Leo Randolph, Tacoma, Wash.

THE SPINKS, like Tate, won quarter-finals Wednesday. The others had advanced earlier. Mike Spinks, from St. Louis, took a 5-0 decision over Ryszard Pasiewicz of Poland.

Leon, a Marine corporal at Camp Lejeune, N.C., had more trouble with the referee than he did Ottomar Sachse of East Germany. Leon scored one knockdown and an easy decision but was warned once for talking to the referee. And when he showed up for the judges' decision wearing a white cap with a red tassel, the referee yanked it off and threw it in a corner.

The United States, which has won only the basketball gold in the past three days, was limited to two medals Wednesday, a bronze by four-time Olympian Willie Davenport, Baton Rouge, La., in the men's 110-meter hurdles, and a silver by Hawaiians David McFall and Mike Rothwell in the Tornado class yachts, behind the British boat which already had clinched the gold.

Russia's four golds came in men's and women's team handball, women's team foil fencing and in the men's hammer throw, where Yuriy Sydeksh set a Games record with a throw of 254 feet, 4 inches and led a Soviet sweep of the medals. Aleksey Spiridonov was second and Anatoly Beonderchuk was third.

The East German women also swept the women's 200, with lightly-regarded Baerbel Eckert winning the gold in 22.37, setting an Olympic record and beating 100-meter gold medalist Annegret Richter and defending champion Renate Stecher.

Anders Garderud of Sweden set a world record of 8:08.02 in the steeplechase and East Germany's Rosemarie Ackermann won the women's high jump with an Olympic record 6-4.

Guy Druet, a French national hero and generally considered the nation's best athlete, won the hurdles in 13.30, followed by Alejandro Casanas of Cuba and the 33-year-old Davenport.

U.S. swimmers mock the spirit of Olympic Games

By JOE GERGEN
Newsday

MONTREAL — They are young, tall and vigorous, with sun-tanned skin and chlorine-bleached hair, they are superior athletes who have enjoyed considerable success in the past and appear unable to cope with the slightest hint of failure. They are the spoiled youngsters who comprise the United States women's swimming team, and they are the Ugly Americans of the 1976 Olympic Games.

Forget what they have done in the competition. Second place is nothing of which to be ashamed. Rather, it is what they have said which has been a source of dishonor both to themselves and their country. Surely Shirley Babashoff and her teammates have mocked the team of East Germans which defeated them and, in the process, mocked the Olympic spirit.

Certainly, they have met frustration here. Time and again, race after race, they finished a length, a stroke, a touch behind the East Germans. They won their only gold medal in the final event, a relay race at that. But to react by questioning the womanhood of the competition is indefensible.

JUDGING another people's values by one's own is an issue the Olympics, by its very nature as a community of nations, has sought to defuse. If the U.S. women do not want to lift weights and enter heavy training, that is their privilege. But that does not give them the right to say, as Babashoff and others have said, "I don't want to look like THAT." The sentence ends in a sneer.

The image projected by such a statement is that of a muscle-bound, steroid-stuffed mastodon in a one-piece swimsuit. Without doubt, the East German women are big. But Babashoff, at 5-10 and 160, is no nymph and there is not a swimmer at this level, male or female, whose shoulders are not developed beyond the rest of their physique.

So when the U.S. women raise the femininity issue as the reason they failed to defeat the East Germans, it is not only insulting but misleading. Apparently, the Americans can't decide whether they want to be treated as princesses or athletes. Clearly, the East Germans have chosen the latter, which is an outgrowth of their ideology and culture, and that is not something to be derided by leering, snickering innuendoes from a group of adolescents who suffer from tunnel vision.

IN THE socialist countries, of which East Germany is stepping to the forefront, both men and women are exalted equally for their athletic accomplishments. It may be difficult for us to grasp this notion, but we may choose not to accept it as the way we want to conduct ourselves. Still, we must respect it.

John Naber, one of the few American swimmers of either sex who has the ability to relate to the world as a land mass, made an interesting observation the other day. In the socialist countries, he said, both the men and the women are subsidized. In the U.S., it is only the men who have been subsidized, through the college scholarship programs. That's why the East Europeans have made their greatest inroads in women's sports.

Already, the system is changing in the United States, although the male athletic power structure is resisting fiercely. Whether the women respond to the increase in college scholarships and push themselves as male athletes have done for years is something only they can answer.

THERE ARE positive signs. One of them is Karin Smith, a 20-year-old student at UCLA who came to Montreal to throw the javelin. Smith is 5-6, 137 pounds and appears physically incapable of hurling a spear great distances. She bridled when it was suggested the sport was not for her.

"Most people's reaction is that I'm too small," she said. "For me the joy of it is that every time I throw I learn something more about my body. I want to get stronger. I try to think of myself as a little stick of dynamite. People scoff at a girl with muscles but I think muscular definition is esthetically pleasing to look at. I wish mine was better." And then she held out her hand and tightened her grip until it brought a wince. And little Karin Smith, who wants to be bigger, reached the finals and finished a respectable eighth.

But the U.S. swimmers have decided if they can't beat the East Germans in the water, they will lash them with their tongues. The Germans have smoldered but said nothing, with the exception of a journalist who briefly took on Babashoff at a post-race conference during the past week. The dialogue added nothing to the cause of human understanding and the exchange of values the Olympics is pledged to promote.

The U.S. men have supported the women in certain individual cases, but at least have taken a hard, realistic look at the situation. Perhaps, their overwhelming success over the East German men and the rest of the world gives them a different perspective. "If they (U.S. girls) want to catch the East Germans," Rod Strachan said after taking some gratuitous shots at the formidable team from behind the wall, "they'll have to follow the same kind of program, including weightlifting."

But the women said this is impossible, this would compromise their femininity. Perhaps, it would. But if this were a beauty contest and not an athletic competition, some of those making the jokes would not have qualified for the finals, either.

An order of sour grapes for the ladies, garcon. They're sure to like the taste.

Permian, Stadium go tonight

BIG SPRING — Midland's Stadium Sports and Permian Rebels remained the only unbeaten teams at the district Sophomore baseball tournament here Wednesday.

Sam Driskill, Matthew Hamm and Tracy Gann combined for a 16-strikeout performance as Stadium edged the Odessa Downtown Lions, 4-2.

Stadium broke up a 2-2 tie with a run in the fifth and added an insurance tally in the seventh. Craig Bales had a triple for the winners.

Permian used a four-run outburst in the fourth to roll past the Odessa Police Department, 7-4, in a game that was called after six innings because of rain. Terry Willis picked up the victory for the Rebels and hit a double to aid his own cause.

Should the fields dry out, Stadium would play Permian in a winner's bracket game tonight. In loser's bracket contests, the Downtown Lions take on Odessa's Bill Sears while the Police Department tangles with Blakely Construction, also of Odessa.

The winners of the loser bracket games are scheduled to play after the Stadium-Permian contest.

Brazoswood 4A grid favorite

HOUSTON (AP) — Brazoswood, Beaumont Hebert, Rockdale, Big Sandy and Groom were tagged Wednesday by Texas sportswriters as favorites to win state champion football titles in 1976.

Coach L. Z. Bryan, who led Brazoswood to the Class 4A state title in 1974, was picked again to win the 4A crown by a panel of sports writers attending the Texas High School Coaches Association coaching school.

Beaumont Hebert, dropping back into 3A this season, was picked to win the Class 3A crown. Rockdale was picked No. 1 in 2A, Big Sandy, in A and Groom in B.

Bryan, who was compiled a 63-7-1 record since coming to Brazoswood in 1970, compiled a 10-2 record last year before losing to McAllen in a bidistrict playoff. The Bucs went 14-1 en route to the state title in 1974.

Big Sandy, which dominated Class B last season en route to the state title, moved up to Class A this season and is the favorite to go all the way again under Coach Jim Norman.

District favorites in all classifications are selected by coaches. A panel of writers then picks the state champs from district favorites.

Hebert has 15 lettermen, including 11 starters returning from a team that compiled a 9-1 record last season in Class 4A. Rockdale also is changing classifications this season, dropping back to 2A from 3A, where it gained the state quarterfinals in 1975.

Season football ticket option holders for Midland Lee and Midland high schools will have until Aug. 13 to purchase tickets being held for them. Tickets not renewed at that time will go on public sale Aug. 16.

Season tickets will go on sale Aug. 2 in the Athletic Director's office at Midland Memorial Stadium. Any tickets not under option will be sold to the general public at that time. All season tickets sales close Aug. 27.

A book of four Midland High tickets is $8 while six Midland Lee home games are $12. Lee will be the home team in the annual intra-city clash.

Pre-game tickets will go on sale each Wednesday morning at 8 and close at 1 p.m. each Friday for all home games. Tickets for a reserve seat are $2.50 pre-game and $3 at the gate. Pregame student tickets are 75 cents and $1.50 at the gate.

Young Leonard started out by beating Cliff Carlsson of Sweden, then he jabbed Clinton McKenzie of Britain into submission, won a slugfest from Russia's Valery Limasov and beat Ulrich Beyer of East Germany in a fight that had the crowd standing and screaming.

game. And he said he wants to do it as much for the Broncos as for himself.

"I would like to know how the other players react," said Kiick during a rest at the Bronco training camp at Colorado State University.

"I want to see them enjoy that contentment. I wish everyone who plays on a professional football team could enjoy that. After all, that's what you're here for."

Aside from his running and pass catching during the 1968-74 seasons, Kiick became known for his beard and mustache at a time when such accoutrements were the exception among professional athletes.

But last March, before he signed with Denver, the image changed, and he became clean-shaven.

"A beard gives the image of a bad guy," said the 5-foot-11, 208-pounder. "But my wife wants me to grow it back. She says I look too young."

Kiick's wife Alice and Brandon, their 5-year-old son, already are living in Evergreen, Colo., a Denver suburb.

Peterson in narrow victory

MONTREAL (AP) — Ben Peterson, wearing his U.S. warmup suit with a towel around his neck, stood in the night air outside the Olympic wrestling arena chatting with friends.

"USA, eh," interrupted a passerby. "How did you do tonight?"

"Well, I won by this much," Peterson responded, holding his thumb and forefinger about as far apart as the width of the gold medal he won at the 1972 Olympics.

Peterson, of Cumberland, Wis., needed a two-point move as the clock ran out to earn a 14-13 victory over Choukri Lutviev of Bulgaria Wednesday night in the second-round of the 198-pound freestyle class.

The Bulgarians argued that Peterson was a split second too late and that he had not rolled his opponent over far enough to expose his shoulders to the mat at an angle of less than 90 degrees—the requirement for a two-point.

What's so special about Mineola anyway?

By BRUCE CAMPBELL

Oh well, who wanted to go 500 miles to Mineola anyway.

That was the only bright spot for Midland's Tri-Service Drillers Wednesday night as they were embarrassingly eliminated from the District 5 Texas Teen-Age Hi-Junior Baseball Tournament by Odessa American Legion, 16-1, at Simon Field.

Odessa, who sent Monahans home earlier in the evening, 12-4, will play unbeaten San Angelo at 6 p.m. today. If Odessa wins, the two teams will play for the championship and a berth in the state tournament in Mineola next week immediately following. Should San Angelo win, they would take home the district title.

ODESSA WAS a rude guest to the host Drillers as they hopped on Midland starter Gary Owen for three runs in the first and continued the assault on three Tri-Service relievers in the later innings.

The winners wouldn't even allow a "mercy killing" to make the death of the Drillers' season a little less painful. Odessa had a 10-1 lead with only one out in the fifth needing just one more run to have a chance to end the game under the 10-run rule.

But Patrick Lewis struck out and pinch-hitter Danny Herrera flied out to Ricky Seeker in center to prolong the game two more innings.

When Midland's Todd Clements retired the side in order the next inning, it appeared the suffering might end for the Drillers but it wasn't the case as Odessa used two hits, four walks, two errors, a couple of wild pitches and two stolen bases to score six times.

IN FACT, it may have been worst if catcher Clay Calhoun and reliever Todd Clements didn't combine to nail Victor Barrientes trying to score from third after a wild pitch.

Barrientes was tough on the Drillers all night as he went the entire seven innings on the mound allowing only four hits and did not give up more than one hit in a single frame.

Midland scored its only run in the second thanks to some rare Odessa charity. With two outs, Brent Bates advanced to second on a throwing error by shortstop Raul Larez and scored on a single by Michael Moore.

After that "rally," the closest the Drillers came to scoring was in the third when Terry Bond made it to second after an error and a base hit by Michael McCrea but Jimmy Zachry grounded out to third baseman Gary Hex to end the threat.

JEFF LUTKE advanced to second in the fifth on a walk and a single by Don Rasure but in a play which Driller fans questioned strongly, the Midland right fielder was double off when Clements lined out to second baseman Barney Marquez.

Barrientes was effective in keeping the ball down as his outfield did not have to handle a single fly ball. Fifteen of the 21 outs he recorded were on ground balls. He struck out two and walked only one.

In addition, the Odessa hurler was two-for-two at the plate and scored three runs. Larez had three hits for the winners while Lewis and Hex joined Barrientes in the two-hit club. Hex, Larez, Lewis, Ben Rhodes, and James Thurmond each scored twice for Odessa, who broken open the game with two in the third and fourth and three in the fifth.

ODESSA HAD a little harder time putting down Monahans needing big innings in the fourth and seventh to do so.

Monahans took a 2-0 lead in the fifth only to see the Odessans bat around in a five-run outburst with Barrientes, Larez, Lewis and winning pitcher Herrera collect key base hits.

Eddie Greer drove in Johnny Grimes to put Monahans within two going into the last inning but history repeated itself in the seventh as the American Legion-sponsored team tallied seven times on six hits, all singles.

Craig Shelton took the loss for Monahans while Herrera pitched five innings of one run ball for Odessa in relief of starter Barney Marquez.

Thurman collected three hits for the winners while Herrera, Larez and Barrientes each had two. Catcher Chucky supplied the big blow for the losers—a two-run double in the second.

DeSantis leads junior golf meet by 2 strokes

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Leading player Dave DeSantis of Tucson carried a five-under-par 139 into today's third round of the Junior World Golf championships which run through Friday.

DeSantis shot a two-underpar 70 Wednesday on the Torrey Pines north course. Doug Clarke of La Jolla, Calif., also shot 70 for a two-day total of 141 and second place.

Chip Larson of Scottsdale, Ariz., was another 70 shooter for third place at 142.

They are in the major event of the tournament, the boys' 1517 division, which this year has attracted 647 players from 29 nations.

Carolyn Hill of Placentia, Calif., had a six-stroke edge on first place going into the third round of the girls' 15-17 competition.

Thieves find chance in Bicentennial year

CHICAGO (AP) — Thieves, like hawkers of tacky souvenirs, are finding the Bicentennial is a chance to make a buck. Thefts of historic documents from libraries, archives and courthouses are on the rise.

So says the Society of American Archivists, which is starting a campaign to recover these and other valuable stolen documents.

The group is compiling a nationwide list of documents known to be missing or stolen. It plans next month to send the first registry—with more than 2,000 entries—to book and manuscript dealers, collectors, archives, libraries and public officials who might be offered the purloined documents for sale.

The list includes 19 letters and documents signed by George Washington, letters of Abraham Lincoln, Harry Truman and other presidents, and 450 letters from Texas governors.

The society's program is funded with a grant of $99,690 from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Timothy Walch, associate director of the society's archival security program, said in an interview Tuesday that the thefts have reached "alarming proportions" and seem to have increased lately because of interest in American history associated with the U.S. Bicentennial.

One section of the list identifies documents reported missing since 1975. A second section includes those in the period 1955-1975. The list is being updated every two months.

Walch said the value of items on the first registry certainly runs into hundreds of thousands of dollars, and one Edgar Allan Poe volume missing from the University of Virginia is itself worth $125,000.

But he said the society wants to emphasize the historic or literary value of the documents, and their irreplaceability, rather than their monetary value. For many documents the figure is not known, he said.

The Library of Congress, the National Archives and the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office have been targets of major thefts.

Items are also listed from the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, the North Adams, Mass., Public Library, the Pearl S. Buck Foundation, the Buffalo and Erie County, N.Y., Historical Society and the archives of the states of Texas and Georgia.

Careful plans make raid go

By DON OBERDORFER

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Israel's daring commando raid which rescued 103 hostages from Uganda three weeks ago was made possible by painstaking intelligence, elaborate secret preparations and advance approval of the Kenyan government to permit refueling of the raider aircraft, according to a book on the operation being published Monday.

The 216-page account, which evidently benefited from cooperation by Israeli authorities, also says that three of the terrorists involved were captured alive and taken by Israel for interrogation. The bodies of seven other terrorists were photographed and fingerprinted after being shot by commandos during the raid, the book said.

"90 Minutes at Entebbe" by William Stevenson, a Canadian, and published by Bantam Books, contains many details of the raid which had not been previously reported. In a telephone interview Sunday Stevenson said he had talked to members of the Israeli task force who planned and executed the operation, including nine soldiers who were on the ground at Uganda's Entebbe airport or in the command and hospital planes hovering overhead.

The account was not cleared by Israeli censors but some material he obtained was not used under "off-the-record" ground rules for security reasons, Stevenson said. He said he spent 11 days in Israel gathering data for this "instant history."

Some new details from the book are:

—Time timing of the Entebbe raid (around midnight of Saturday, July 3, Uganda time), was dictated by intelligence reports that the hostages — perhaps one by one — were to be executed Sunday morning.

—A white Mercedes, painted black to resemble Ugandan President Idi Amin's personal automobile and filled with Israeli commandos with blackened faces and wearing Uganda-style uniforms, led the ground attack and successfully deceived airport security guards.

—Israeli cabinet ministers and high-ranking military officers listened to radio transmission of the raid including sounds of gunfire and tactical communications relayed over a prearranged radio channel from Entebbe to Tel Aviv 2,500 miles away.

—Amin, at his house not far from Entebbe, slept through the raid and evidently knew nothing about it until he was awakened by a telephone call from his Tel Aviv contact, former military attaché Lt. Col. Baruch Bar-Lev, who thanked a puzzled Amin for his "cooperation."

The newly published account made no mention of earlier reports that Israel achieved surprise by saying the raiding aircraft were bringing prisoners to be exchanged in return for the hostages, and by diversionary bombing of one end of the Entebbe field. Stevenson says he believes both these widely published reports are untrue.

Stevenson's account gives no report of prior U.S. knowledge or involvement in the raid. It also says that Prof. Zbigniew Brzezinski of Columbia University (a foreign policy adviser to Democratic presidential candidate Jimmy Carter) dined with Israel's defense minister and the chief of intelligence a day before the raid, and former U.N. Ambassador Daniel P. Moynihan dined with Israel's foreign minister — in both cases without obtaining any clue of the operation then being mounted.

Stevenson does say, however, that a U.S. Air Force P3 Orion long range reconnaissance aircraft was seen at the Nairobi airport only a few hours after the Israeli raiding party had refueled there and taken off for home.

Kenya's involvement in the operation, as described by the Stevenson account, may touch off further bitter charges by Uganda and additional complications between the neighboring African countries.

According to Stevenson, a group of 50 intelligence officers disguised as "businessmen" flew to Nairobi three days before the raid and set up a headquarters in the private home of an Israeli trader. Contact was made from there with Lionel Bryn Davies, Nairobi's chief of police, and Bruce McKenzie, a former British officer who is close to Kenyan President Jomo Kenyatta.

The commander of Kenyatta's secret police, Geoffrey Karithi, gave assurances that the Kenyan president "would turn a blind eye" to the refueling of Israeli planes if the airport area were sealed off during the stopover and the aircraft were disguised as Israeli Commercial charters, the book says. It adds that Kenya Attorney General Charles Njoro offered the legal opinion that refueling facilities could not be refused if the laws governing civil aviation were observed, at least in the eyes of Kenya's airport authorities.

The aircraft which made the raid were two Israeli Air Force Boeing 707s disguised as El Al civilian airliners and four C-130 military cargo planes given with civil registration numbers.

One of the 707s was a flying control center bearing Israeli Air Force commander Gen. Benny Peled (listed on the manifest as a South African furrier named Sidney Cohen) and elaborate communications gear operated by "businessmen" in civilian suits. The other 707 was a flying hospital ship with doctors, nurses and emergency operating room equipment. The 707s did not land at Entebbe.

The commandos in the four C-130s had studied plans of the layout of the Entebbe airport, which had been built years before by an Israeli construction firm. The commandos also had detailed descriptions of the terrorists. Stevenson said some information was supplied by Israeli informants inside Amin's government.

Teams of Israeli commandos swiftly killed Ugandan security forces and terrorist guards, then led the stunned hostages to waiting C-130s for their evacuation. Another team in armored vehicles and jeeps armed with recoilless rifles ambushed a counter-attack by Ugandan troops.

Other teams destroyed Soviet MIG fighter planes of the Ugandan Air Force and invaded the main Entebbe radar center, removing major items of Soviet-supplied gear before blowing it up to hide the evidence of what equipment had been taken.

"Out of ten terrorists, seven were killed and their fingerprints and photographs recorded. Three other terrorists, it would seem, despite Israeli denials, were taken alive for interrogation," Stevenson wrote.

Multibillion-dollar headache industry, government target

By TENDAYI KUMBULA
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Both the government and private industry are seeking ways to combat what one executive has wryly described as the "multibillion-dollar headache" — alcoholism among employees.

Company-sponsored alcohol recovery programs are sprouting all over the country, spurred both by economic and humanitarian considerations.

Bill Durkin, who heads an alcoholism program for Atlantic-Richfield employees in Los Angeles, explained:

"The program pays off in two ways. We perform a personal service to an individual who would otherwise suffer a personal tragedy through alcohol — and the company saves a valuable employee."

In 1971 alone, the latest year for which statistics are available, alcoholism cost the government and industry more than $25 billion.

Randy Taylor of the National Clearing House on Alcohol Information, a part of the federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare, said a breakdown showed $9.35 billion was lost because of reduced worker production.

Of the rest, he said, $8.29 billion went for health and medical treatment and $1.29 billion for research, social welfare, the criminal justice system and alcohol programs.

She said her agency's rule of thumb is that in an average company with 500 employees, about 125 are alcoholics and the company is losing $60,000 a year due to absenteeism, lowered efficiency, work dodging, medical treatment and work accidents.

Weldon Butterworth, director of occupational program services at the Alcoholism Council of Greater Los Angeles, cited studies showing that the cost of alcohol-related absenteeism usually amounts to about 25 per cent of the worker's salary.

"There are no two ways about it — 10 per cent of the American population are problem drinkers," said Butterworth. "They include managers, board chairmen, lawyers, doctors, top executives, men and women, white and blue collar workers. Alcoholism is a people's disease. It affects all levels."

With the increasing recognition of alcoholism as a disease, more and more companies and corporations are instituting treatment and recovery programs for problem drinkers.

In smaller companies, Butterworth said, "the loss of one valued employee, one key worker, can be a catastrophe. Such an employee may be replaceable in a major company but his loss is most strongly felt in a smaller company."

Pioneers in setting up company programs for alcoholic employees were Du Pont, about 30 years ago, and Bell Telephone, 20 years ago.

Since then they have been joined by an increasing number of others.

In most such programs, a recovery or rehabilitation unit for problem drinkers is established within the company's medical department. In some cases, a recovered alcoholic heads the program.

A supervisor who notices a problem, such as reduced job performance, long lunch hours or frequent absenteeism, is expected to talk with the employee about his performance.

If warranted, the supervisor refers the employee to the medical department for diagnosis. If the employee is diagnosed as having an uncontrollable drinking habit, then he or she is referred to the head of the company's occupational alcoholism program.

Arthur L. Hall, director of Pacific Telephone's program, explained: "Our program is rehabilitation up to and including termination if necessary. Obviously we do not want to terminate because usually the alcoholic is a longtime employee who is very valuable and whom we do not want to lose."

Hall's duties include alcohol-abuse education, counseling and even accompanying employees to their first Alcoholics Anonymous meetings.

An employee who is fired can be rehired if he recovers, Hall said, citing as an example a 12-year employee dismissed because he was a habitual drinker.

He was rehired two years later and has not had a drinking problem in the last five years.

"It took termination to convince him of the problem. It also took considerable effort on our part to convince his manager to rehire him," said Hall, himself a recovered alcoholic.

At Atlantic-Richfield, as at other companies with similar alcoholism programs, a great deal of emphasis is placed on the confidentiality of the program and on the fact that a recovered alcoholic can retain his job and, despite his former drinking habits, will have the same chance for promotion as others.

The Atlantic-Richfield program was started less than two years ago. In that period, Durkin said, the recovery rate has been 75 per cent, which is higher than the 60-70 per cent recovery reported by many other companies.

John Newton, 53, an alcoholic for 21 years before opting for sobriety nine years ago, heads the Union Oil alcoholism program.

He said it is difficult to estimate the program's monetary benefits.

"How, for example, do you measure the costs in a marriage that did not break up, a family that did not split up? An accident that did not happen? A medical bill that did not have to be paid? You can measure absenteeism but you cannot measure many of the other intangibles," he said.

Those who work in recovery programs say that often it is the threatened loss of a job that finally causes an employee to seek assistance.

Robert Baugh, director of the U.S. Postal Service's Program for Alcoholic Rehabilitation (PAR), explained:

"A man may lose his family. He may lose his home or his credit. As long as he has a job he can go on. But when the job is threatened he sits up and takes notice. The job is often his rock bottom. From then on he must go up."

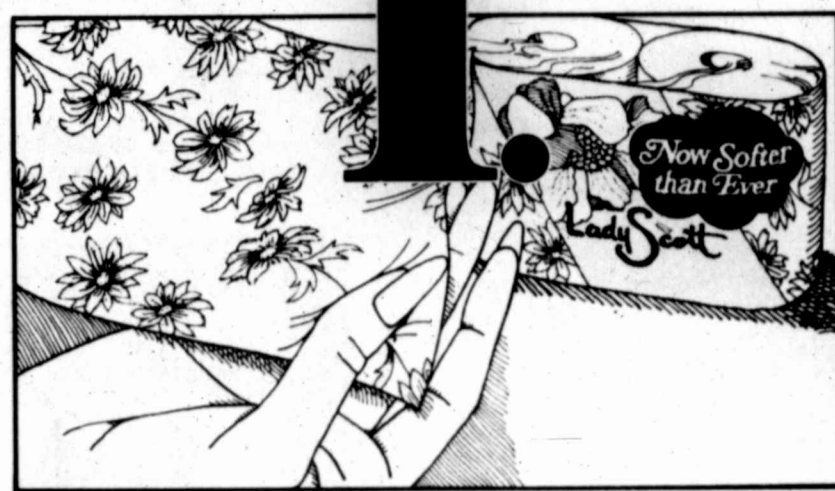

Six years ago, PAR had 145 counselors at postal installations around the country. Now, said Baugh, there are 4,300. Recovered alcoholics do the counseling.

The greatest problem, said the Alcoholism Council's Butterworth, is getting an alcoholic to admit that he cannot handle liquor.

He said at work the drinking employee often has friends, co-workers and supervisors who cover for him when he is frequently absent, takes two-hour lunches, dodges work or does not produce up to par.

"When an employee has the problem you should be stern but understanding in dealing with him. You should not try to fool sorry for him. But you should let him know that he has a chronic disease, that if he wants he can control it. He should be able to make the choice," Butterworth said.

Here's why new improved Lady Scott® is Fact ignored in illegal gifts

NEW YORK (AP) — illegal payments of "What's overlooked in all this business about illegal corporate gifts and bribes," the man was saying, "is that the money handed out was the stockholders' money. It didn't belong to the executives."

He declined to be identified, but he is responsible, intelligent, hardworking and possessed of other attributes we tend to respect. And he is a stockholder.

He might even be safely called a typical small investor. He has a few thousand dollars to invest, generally for the long term. He doesn't ask much, just fair dividends and the prospect for growth, which he feels comes with good management.

When he spoke he was angry, bitter, disaffected, but he'll get over it — or will he? "Sometimes I wonder if we're not being ripped off by management," he said.

"They give the stockholders' money away and then when they get caught they charge us again for the lawyers to defend them. They offend my ethics, my sense of fairness, my politics, and then my finances. It's too much to accept."

The reference was to the management of Occidental Petroleum, whose chairman, Armand Hammer, was convicted of having made corporate funds to the 1972 presidential campaign of Richard M. Nixon.

"They," he said of the company's management, "spent at least $850,000 of stockholders' money to defend themselves. First they give away the money illegally and then they follow it with more hardworking and to hire lawyers."

Occidental, he conceded, has been profitable under the creative management of Hammer, even though the stock sells today for less than half its 1968 price. He thought that Lockheed's use of company assets was less forgivable.

Lockheed, you might recall, sought and obtained a $250 million loan guarantee from the U.S. government in order to stay in business. Then came revelations of payoffs to influential foreigners.

During the disclosures, Lockheed's chairman and chief executive, Donald J. Haughton, and its vice chairman and chief operating officer, Carl Kitchian, resigned. Regardless, they remain on the payroll, probably into the 1980s.

According to papers filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, the two officers each are to be paid $100,000 a year for five years, and $50,000 each for another five, as "senior advisers."

Capitol Hill sexism: some favor it, some don't

By MYRA MACPHERSON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The woman is pretty and endowed with all the vital statistics, as they used to say, befitting bathing beauties. Hardly the description feminists desire today, but important to this story about sexism and sexual attitudes on Capitol Hill.

It took several years but this woman — who was always asked if she could type and take shorthand, even though she had a college degree in political science and experience in grass-roots politics — worked her way up from clerk to be a top member of a congressman's staff. Then one day recently her boss called her into his office where he sat with three other men. He needed her political expertise on a certain issue.

But before she could impress them with her knowledge, the congressman, looked her up and down, and made a low reference to her body. She tersely gave them the information, walked out, finished her work for the day and quit.

"When I closed that door," she recalled in an interview, "something just snapped. I said, 'I don't have to put up with that.' It was really the final blow. For one thing, I was getting less pay than the men, although I ran that office. And for another, he no longer cared about the people he's supposed to represent. He's just on a power trip."

SHE PAUSED when she thought of looking for another job. "The thing that bothers me the most is that he can give me a horrible recommendation, without any basis whatsoever, and I have absolutely no recourse. He's already done that to others who have left."

It is a telling point that this woman — like many others who speak of unfair hiring and firing practices on the Hill; who speak of sexism and sexual harassment, innuendo and favoritism — only after being assured of anonymity. There is a fear of losing one's job or of getting a bad recommendation for another.

Fighting sexual innuendos or not getting equal pay or being passed over for advancement can be a part of the job for women in all occupations. But there is one major difference on the Hill.

Each congressman or senator rules absolutely over his own fiefdom. A career on the Hill is founded on the quicksand of personal interplay not unlike the Machiavellian maneuverings of medieval courts — with a tangle of egos, jealousies, competition and power plays.

Members of Congress enjoy complete immunity from the laws they have passed to protect employees in the private sector — they simply exempted themselves from all antidiscrimination laws, such as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act and the Equal Pay Act. There is no union, no job security, no appeal if one gets fired.

"It is a very serious problem," says Rep. Patricia Schroeder (D-Colo.), who is so much an outsider in the white-male-dominated congressional establishment that she refers to her colleagues as "they."

"They feel they have the right to make passes, and they DO have that right. They can fire you without reason and with no notice. They can ruin you. They're even exempted from wage-and-hour laws. That's why they can get someone on their staffs to tend bar or run out and do errands at midnight. They are the only employers in the country who can get away with this. The Hill today is what it used to be like to work anywhere 100 years ago."

THERE ARE TWO pervasive reasons why reformers have been unable to change the system.

One is that the women, who comprise the majority of low-paying and non-professional jobs, are divided in their desire for change.

A caste system prevails, with many women who are dedicated either to their careers or marriages resenting the blanket connotation that all women on the Hill are easily accessible. But there are others, in both professional and clerical classifications, who are willing participants in job related sex, either for the glamour of it all or to further their careers.

A woman who took a professional Hill job five years ago — "at $5,000 less than my male predecessor" — has a friend "with a master's degree who is sleeping with a congressman. He just upped her past $20,000. I get furious with her sometimes. It's her fault that the system goes on, just as much as his. She makes it difficult for all of us to change it."

Her own fortunes went downhill when the staff director of a committee took her to lunch and promised her a higher paying job, "until I took his hand off my lap and put it back on his. Since I've refused him, I've impaired relations with that committee."

The second reason the system functions so easily is that women still have to fight a macho view of politics that typifies them in inferior roles.

"Many congressmen are not used to treating women as equals," says Schroeder. "They feel a woman is like a table, if you dust it every day it is supposed to be happy. They are the ones who come in my office and they see good looking staff members joke about having 'draft choices.'"

One such congressman, patiently trying to explain the facts of life to Schroeder, said, "Being in Congress means Chivas Regal, beautiful women and Lear jets."

When Elizabeth Ray this spring topped Rep. Wayne L. Hays' once powerful career by charging that he put her on a $14,000-annual federal salary to be his mistress, reformers hoped to capitalize on the publicity.

Schroeder and Rep. Charles Rose (D-N.C.) proposed this month to establish a voluntary Employee Rights Committee for the House. Members would pledge not to discriminate on jobs and would authorize a committee composed of three members of Congress and three staffers to investigate complaints. Only 15 members have signed the proposal so far.

Schroeder says they will go ahead with the committee this fall, but she is disappointed that so many colleagues are balking at even this moderate voluntary proposal, which has no enforcement provisions.

"IT'S AMAZING — some of the responses I've gotten from the quote liberal unquote members. John Moss of California wrote that if he lacked the 'confidence and balance' to fairly deal with his staff then he lacked the confidence and balance to serve as an elected representative."

Schroeder wonders how Moss would react to a corporate executive who took the same approach to the equal employment opportunity laws.

Moss argues that, because of the "highly personal" duties in an elected politician's office, a congressional member should have total authority over his staff. "No grievance system should be set up to override the hiring and firing decisions of a member. I am accountable only to the people of my district," he said in a telephone interview.

Others have been tougher. One congressman went up to Rose and said, "No one's gonna mess around with my slaves." Others have verbally attacked Schroeder on the floor. The "good old boy" club was in action, as members on the floor passed around a cartoon depicting six gorgeous women and one homely old frump. The caption said that she would be the one hired under the Schroeder-Rose proposal.

ONE WOMAN who now wonders whether it is worthwhile to speak out is Colleen Gardner, who told the world and federal prosecutors that she was paid a high level salary by Rep. John Young (R-Tex.) primarily for sex.

The 28-year-old former legislative research clerk, who said she was paid up to $26,000 a year for "forced" sex, is going broke. She hasn't been able to get a job "because of the publicity."

Unlike Elizabeth Ray, she turned down "several" offers to do a book, "because it would hurt my credibility."

The House ethics committee — hardly known for its zealotry — has not even been asked to investigate Young; a committee spokesman said there are no plans to initiate an investigation.

The Justice Department has transcribed Gardner's more than 50 hours of taped conversations with Young and other female staff members, but Gardner does not know if the department considers the material strong enough to prove her charges of sexual extortion.

"I'm beginning to feel 'what's the point of all this?'" she said recently. "It's as if I did all this for nothing. They aren't even going to investigate him on the Hill! He's using money allotted to him by the government to do this. We're not talking about a congressman's personal sex life. We're talking about a sexual program that is part of the job."

Young, 59 and the father of five, dismisses it all as "poppycock," but on the tapes of their telephone conversations, in a slight drawl, he makes dates to meet her in motels, brags about how he would deny it all if the story got out, talks about women on his staff who "had no skills at all" and "couldn't do anything."

Gardner, a divorcee with a 12-year-old daughter, says she stayed in Young's office because she needed the money.

ONE FORMER STAFFER, Melanie Hall, at first corroborated Gardner's story that Young made advances to the staff, but has since refused to talk. Other women Gardner thought would support her allegations that Young forced them to have sex to keep their jobs have not done so.

Gardner, who insists she told her story to expose a corrupt system, now feels alienated from two groups — the women who continue to go along with sex on the Hill, and those who never condoned it in the first place.

"I think a lot of feminist groups don't understand how a woman can be drawn into this," Gardner said. "I don't know if they have sympathy for me or not. But I always had the feeling if you proved yourself so skilled and competent, he's finally leave you alone."

One woman Hill lawyer said, "I can sort of understand how she came to that sort of thing — but I have trouble with the fact that she would be so 'complete' in doing it."

Gardner's mother, Isabela Chaly Caserta, a lawyer and executive secretary of the Inter-American Commission of Women at the Organization of American States, defends her daughter and has a fiery retort to the rather constant suggestion that "if women don't like it, why don't they quit?"

"Why should they have to quit? Why should that be the only alternative? Even if a girl were promiscuous, this does not justify the man to abuse her. Whether she is married or has 50 lovers is not the issue. The issue is that when a man or woman goes to work they should have job security and should not be subjected to these types of pressures. Many offices are not like this, but none should be."

Rep. Schroeder agrees, and refers to a large classification of women on the Hill with the "Colleen problem."

There is a great American institution which nobody talks about on the Fourth of July — but you sure see it on the Hill.

"That's the young woman, age 23 to 28, divorced, supporting two or three children, little education," says

Olympics' coverage takes ratings 'gold'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If the Nielsen ratings people gave out medals, ABC would have taken home gold, CBS silver and NBC bronze last week. But ABC will have to be happy with huge home audiences for its Olympics.

It had cause for cheer this week when ratings arrived for its first full week of evening Olympics telecasts — July 19 through 25. They contained the thrill of victory for ABC, the relative agony of defeat for CBS and NBC.

Of the nation's 20-most watched TV shows last week, the top-rated seven were on ABC — seven Olympics nights seen each evening, on the average, in more than 16.8 million homes by an estimated 47 per cent of the national audience.

The highest-rated Olympics evening — which ABC suspected was due to massive audience interest in 14-year-old Nadia Comaneci, the gold-medal gymnast from Romania — came on Thursday a week ago.

Nielsen estimates said viewers in more than 18.4 million homes, 51 per cent of the national audience, tuned to ABC that night.

The next highest-rated Olympics night, one also featuring Miss Comaneci's class in perfect gymnastics, was on Wednesday. More than 18 million homes, 48 per cent of the national audience, were tuned to ABC then.

A few folks must have stepped out for a beer on Saturday night. ABC's Olympics broadcast had its smallest audience then, about 14.7 million homes. But that was enough to win the evening's rating derby.

All told, ABC's seven Olympics nights, plus its cent of the national College All Star football game, were seen on the average in more than 16.9 million homes each night last week, Nielsen estimates show.

By contrast, the respective CBS and NBC 18 million homes, 48 per cent of the national audience, were tuned to million and 7.5 million homes, on the average.

Odessan named ambassador

SAN ANTONIO — Odessan John Ben Shepperd has been named an ambassador for the fifth annual Texas Folklife Festival coming up next week.

Shepperd is one of 49 Texas residents selected to serve as liaison persons between their areas of the state and the festival.

The Texas Folklife festival, sponsored by The University of Texas-San Antonio and its Institute of Texan Cultures, opens Aug. 5 to showcase fun, foods, crafts and customs of more than two dozen nationalities, cultures and racial groups in Texas. The event was designed to give these diverse groups the opportunity to display their traditional costumes music, dances, games and contests to the world, and to each other. The festival, continuing through Sunday, Aug. 8, will take place at HemisFair Plaza in downtown San Antonio.

Sculptors to present show, sale

ODESSA — Kara Mac Productions Inc., of Austin and San Antonio will stage a two-day art and crafts show and sale here this weekend.

The event is scheduled Saturday and Sunday in Ector County Coliseum here, with show hours to be 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day. Admission will be $1 persons, with children under age 12 admitted free of charge.

Kara Mac Productions is an organization made up of two couples, Ed and Marilyn Karaback and Sam and Mary Lou Machotka. The Karabacks create metal sculptures ranging from desk-size windmills to large wall-hangings of sunbursts and abstracts. The Machotkas make miniature metal sculptures that include a wide variety of flowers as well as hill country and desert scenes.

Performance to recall life, times of Chopin

LUBBOCK — Composer Frederic Chopin, as portrayed by actor and musician Robert Guralnik, will reminisce about his life and times, as well as his music, in a show tonight in the Texas Tech University Center. "Chopin Lives" is the title of Guralnik's one-man show which is presented under auspices of the Texas Tech University Center cultural events office. The program, open to the public at $2 per person, will begin at 8:15 p.m.

Dressed in 19th Century formal apparel, Guralnik will narrate the show as well as performing a variety of Chopin keyboard works. They range from the well-known "Polonaise" to various mazurkas, waltzes and etudes. The musical program is subject to change.

Guralnik's show, in two acts, has been presented more than 50 times at colleges and universities across the country. Guralnik also has performed as a keyboard recitalist and as soloist with numerous major symphony orchestras in Europe and in the U.S.

Tighter secrets needed

By PEGGY SIMPSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chief lawyer for the CIA says the government should tighten its means of keeping secret information from the public instead of trying to punish newsmen who reveal classified documents.

CIA counsel Mitchell Rogovin told the House ethics committee on Tuesday that he approves of its $150,000 investigation into the manner in which CBS reporter Daniel Schorr obtained the House intelligence committee's secret final report.

But he said he hoped the panel would not call Schorr or other members of the press to testify in an effort to find out the source of the leak.

During a break in the hearings, Rogovin said he had defended reporters during his work as an attorney and he knew if they were called before the committee they would refuse to answer questions about their sources and would go to jail if necessary.

"The damage was done by someone who gave the report," Rogovin said. "The reporter is just doing his job in trying to get the information."

He said, "I think the executive branch and the Congress have to develop a front line of defense, which is to insure that its employees don't turn this classified material over."

"I don't really hold reporters as being in that same category. If reporters are called and punished for their refusal, they have got the wrong people in jail."

During his testimony, Rogovin said the CIA could not have furnished the House intelligence committee's final report to Schorr.

There were more than 88 discrepancies, Rogovin said, between the CIA's copies and the copies supplied by Schorr to the weekly Village Voice.

Illegal aliens bill studied

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill that would set penalties for businessmen who hire illegal aliens is under consideration by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The bill, before the panel today, also would seek to equalize the system of selecting immigrants from the western and eastern hemispheres and would require congressional approval before large numbers of refugees could enter the country outside regular immigration quotas.

It is the most far-reaching measure of its kind since the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1965, which abolished the national origins quota system of immigration that critics contended favored northern and western Europeans over other peoples of the world.

The new bill was introduced by Sen. James Eastland, D-Miss., the Judiciary Committee chairman.

To deal with what was described as a huge influx of illegal alien labor, the bill would make an employer of illegal aliens subject to a fine of up to $500 for a first-time violation and for a subsequent violation, a fine of up to $1,000 for each alien involved.

The bill, however, would continue to allow employers to obtain temporary workers from other countries for jobs for which domestic workers are unavailable.

Immigration from North and South America would be put on the same preference basis as from Europe, Asia and Africa.

The annual ceiling on immigrants from the Western Hemisphere.

Porno King identified with prostitution plan

The Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — The so-called "porno king" of New York, identified by police as being linked to organized crime, was one of the figures allegedly planning a large-scale prostitution operation along the trans-Alaska pipeline, The Los Angeles Times has learned.

Former U.S. Atty. Richard L. McVeigh, indicted two weeks ago in a separate Alaska sex and gambling conspiracy, was to arrange "protection" from Alaska law enforcement agencies for the new venture, according to federal documents.

The "porno king," Martin Hodas, now is serving a one-year federal prison sentence in Florida on a tax evasion conviction.

Hodas, in his trial last year, admitted he withheld money from the government to pay $175,000 to the Mafia in the late 1960s to keep his Times Square peep shows open.

In 1972, Hodas and two associates were indicted on charges of fire-bombing two competitive massage parlors in New York. The associates subsequently were convicted but Hodas was acquitted.

During trial, however, a deputy district attorney charged that Hodas "deals directly with the heads of organized crime families."

According to police, he headed a multimillion-dollar pornographic empire involving explicit sexual literature and pictures, peep shows and massage parlors.

Hodas' name surfaced in connection with Alaska in the federal grand jury indictment of McVeigh on charges of conspiring to use interstate facilities to promote racketeering and transport women across state lines for the purpose of prostitution.

Seven other men, including known Mafia figure Charles (Charley the Blade) Tourine, and one woman also were indicted in that scheme, which was centered around Valdez at the southern terminus of the pipeline.

All but Tourine, who is hospitalized in Florida with a heart ailment, pleaded innocent in a San Francisco federal court last week. Tourine is to appear Aug. 9.

The indictment further charged that McVeigh, now a lawyer for the powerful Alaska Teamsters Union, was to assist Hodas and two other men "to establish large-scale prostitution" in the state's largest city, Anchorage, and all along the 798-mile pipeline.

McVeigh, according to the indictment, told an FBI undercover agent his role with the Hodas group was to arrange for "protection" from local law enforcement agencies through the use of "payoffs."

William Aronwald, who heads the federal organized crime strike force in New York, said Hodas traveled to Alaska in the summer of 1975 while under indictment on the tax evasion charge.

Although Hodas and his associates — Anchorage attorney Martin Farrell and Connecticut businessman Jerry Modell — were named in the McVeigh indictment, they were not indicted themselves.

Federal sources said an investigation is continuing. Hodas declined through prison authorities a request by The Times to be interviewed, and efforts to reach Farrell and Modell were unsuccessful.

The indictment of McVeigh and the others followed a 16-month investigation by a San Francisco-based federal strike force headed by Thomas E. Kotoske into reports of widespread corruption surrounding construction of the pipeline.

Uganda places blame on neighboring Kenya for its shortage of petroleum

The Los Angeles Times

NAIROBI, Kenya — Kenya, proclaiming itself blameless for a growing state of crisis in neighboring Uganda, said Tuesday that it was Uganda's "voracious adventures" which got her into trouble.

But of Uganda's biggest trouble — the oil shortage for which Uganda President Idi Amin blames Kenya — Kenya's spokesman told a differing story Tuesday.

Foreign Minister Dr. Munyua Waiyaki said — in answer to a question — that Uganda had paid Kenya what it owed for petroleum refined in Kenya.

Earlier Waiyaki had been quoted here as saying that Amin owed Kenya some $60 million for oil received but not paid for.

If Uganda has paid its petroleum bill, why isn't it getting petroleum? "They have tankers," said Dr. Waiyaki. "They can easily come and collect their petrol. Or we can send it up by train."

But Uganda radio reports that Kenya has impounded 309 Uganda oil tankers between the refinery on the Indian Ocean and the Uganda border. Kenya has not replied to this charge.

Officially, Kenya says Uganda is not getting oil products now because Kenya drivers are afraid to enter Uganda because Amin's soldiers have beaten and threatened them.

But knowledgeable sources here say that Kenya truck drivers are being discouraged from going through Uganda, that Uganda trucks have indeed been impounded — and that Kenya is encouraging the oil shortage to bring about Amin's downfall.

Waiyaki released the Kenya side of the dispute at an unusual press conference and diplomatic meeting held, apparently, to put on the record Kenya's story that it is not responsible for the turmoil in Uganda.

The heads of mission of the more than 50 foreign embassies in Nairobi were asked on short notice Tuesday morning to meet with Waiyaki. The press was also invited.

Waiyaki read a five-page statement emphasizing that Kenya has not closed its borders to Uganda, that Kenya wants peace, and that Kenya has been the victim of Ugandan aggression and not the other way around.

During a question period for newsmen later Waiyaki said Amin "has now paid for petrol," and that the $60 million owed to Kenya was for trade debts, nationalized assets, and blocked or frozen funds.

In Kampala, the Uganda capital, Amin said it was "Nonsense" that his country owed Kenya such a debt. "Uganda doesn't owe Kenya money," he said. "Uganda is ready to pay in advance for anything from Kenya."

Actually, sources here said, Uganda has been paying for its oil in hard cash for six months — because that has been the only way it has been allowed to get any.

Gulf test swabs oil

Gulf Oil Corp. No. 1 Reese Cleveland, ¾-mile northeast stepout to the Kingdom (Abo reef) field of Northwest Terry County, swabbed 135 barrels of oil and eight barrels of water in 11 hours.

Recovery was through perforations at 7,828-7,954 feet. Drilled to 8,200 feet, it has 5½-inch casing set on bottom.

Testing continued at the project which spots 660 feet from north and west lines of section 7, block D-14, C&M survey, 19 miles northwest of Brownfield.

Gas pool extended

Pierce & Dehlinger of Midland has completed its No. 1 Shanklin, ¾ mile west of a three-mile northwest extension to the Campanero (Canyon) gas field of Edwards County.

It had a calculated, absolute open flow potential of 850,000 cubic feet of gas per day, producing through Canyon perforations at 3,790-4,571 feet, after acidizing with 1,500 gallons and fracturing with 43,910 gallons and 13,500 pounds.

Total depth is 5,500 feet. It was scheduled as a wildcat.

Location is 2,240 feet from south-west and 520 feet from most northerly east lines of section 1, GC&SF survey, abstract 1030.

Fisher test pumps crude

Lario Oil & Gas No. 1 Weathersbee, Fisher County reentry operation, ¾ mile west of the current one-well Saturday (Canyon) field, pumped 14 barrels of oil and three barrels of water in 24 hours, from an unidentified pay section.

Testing continued through perforations at 5,158-5,183 feet. Originally drilled by Nueve Operating Co. & Mayfair Minerals, Inc., it was plugged and abandoned in July, 1964 at 3,930 feet. It has been deepened to 5,920 feet, and has 5½-inch casing set on bottom.

Location is 3,469 feet from south and 1,121 feet from east lines of J. Chumley survey 312, four miles north of Roby.

Jack G. Goodwin

Goodwin promoted

Jack G. Goodwin has been promoted to division geologist in Texaco Inc.'s Midland Division, Producing-Central U.S.

Goodwin, who received a B.A. degree in Geology from Texas Christian University, joined Seaboard Oil Co. as a geologist in 1956 at Jackson, Miss.

Since the merger of Texaco Inc. and Seaboard Oil Co. in 1958, Goodwin has served in responsible positions in Texaco's geological department, with assignments at Tyler, Dallas, Trinidad, Houston and Midland.

Pecos draws detrital well

G. W. Brock, Inc., Midland, George R. Brown and Highland Resources, Inc., both of Houston, and Equity Oil Co. of Salt Lake City, reported a calculated, absolute open flow potential of 33 million cubic feet per day, for No. 2 Wimberly-Bryan, Pecos County detrital discovery.

The flow was gauged through perforations at 9,699-9,738 feet, which had been acidized with 1,500 gallons (corrected from 15,000 gallons).

Total depth of the strike is 14,983 feet, and it is plugged back to 9,899 feet in 7½-inch casing seated at 10,080 feet.

Well site is 1,017 feet from south and 1,320 feet from west lines of section 9, block 100, EL&RR survey, 26 miles southeast of Fort Stockton.

European drought won't hurt world food supply

By BARBARA BRIGHT-SAGNIER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — This year's drought in Western Europe is the worst in a century, but its impact on world food supply, according to a U.S. Agriculture Department economist, will be negligible because of improved crop prospects in the United States, the Soviet Union, Brazil and India.

Rainfall in France, the nation that is normally West Europe's breadbasket, was as much as 60 per cent less than normal in some areas through mid-July. Italy's Po Valley, portions of West Germany, England's southeast and much of the Netherlands and Belgium have also had abnormally dry, hot weather.

But James V. Parker, an agricultural economist with the USDA grain and feed division, and a member of the two-man team that returned last week from a two-week tour of the drought-affected region, said earlier dire predictions must be revised since recent rains have begun to restore moisture to the earth.

The 1976 West European grain crop, according to the report Parker and his colleague, R. E. Vickery prepared, is now expected to total only 125 million metric tons — 5 million tons below last year's poor crop and 17 million tons less than initial early season estimates.

In world terms, however, the shortage will cause the need for only a 6 million ton increase in feed grain imports, which Parker said can easily be met by an expected record feed grain crop of 200 million tons in the United States alone. Last year's feed grain production was 184 million tons.

Despite complaints of too much rain in the Soviet Union, Parker said the Soviet spring crops are in fair condition and the production forecast now is 195 million tons — a healthy recovery from the disastrous 140 million tons last year, which led to massive imports from the United States.

In Brazil and India, he added, the wheat crop forecast is up 2.4 million tons and 2 million tons, respectively.

"There will be enough to go around," the economist predicted.

Reports from the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization back up the USDA prediction, indicating that world grain production will rise this year by 7 or 8 per cent above 1975 to about 1.1 billion tons.

The USDA's optimistic forecast, Parker acknowledged, depends on whether the rains that now have started will continue.

National Weather Service agricultural meteorologist Richard Felch said yesterday that rain swept over almost all of West Europe last week, and generally, he said, "the picture seems more encouraging."

Parker and Felch said the rainfall now still should save the sugarbeet, corn and potato crops. Felch added that the French vineyards are expected to produce a smaller yield but the grapes would have a higher sugar content because of the extended sunshine, allowing a probable vintage year but low production.

"The early crops and the hay crops were really hard-hit," said Parker, "but the main concern is forage." He said France's hay production is normally 80 million tons, but "this year, there will be a 20 to 40 per cent loss of output."

Last month, when parts of Europe had received hardly any rain since mid-February, some French and German farmers slaughtered their cattle because they feared that dwindling stocks of fodder and parched pastureland would be inadequate over the summer.

Just last week a farmer in the Orne River Valley predicted gloomily that the extended drought would wipe out eight to 10 years of work and cost French farmers more than $2 billion.

Parker says such predictions are "the old cry of wolf," adding that some farmers are exaggerating damage claims to increase government subsidies.

Parker said he expects the slaughter of cattle will subside because the French government has indicated it will pay a subsidy per head to cattle farmers later this year. "The average herd is only 20 to 25 head," he said, "they can't afford to kill them off."

France has also made it illegal to chop and burn straw.

Italian area still affected by explosion

By SARI GILBERT
The Washington Post

SEVESO, Italy — More than two weeks after a chemical-factory explosion released what people here call "a cloud of poison," experts and officials are still unsure what to do to ward off its possibly disastrous effects.

More than 200 residents have been evacuated from this northern Italian area, more than 100 treated for skin burns and other ailments believed to be related to the explosion and resultant cloud, and at least 18 persons have been hospitalized with nausea and diarrhea.

People have been told not to eat the possibly contaminated produce of the region, and a Genoa doctor has advised couples to try to avoid conception for the next three months.

TWO OFFICIALS of the chemical plant are under house arrest for "unpremeditated disaster," and the mayor of this town of 17,000 blames the company for delays in warning residents of possible dangers.

"They came around and collected soil and urine samples to send to their home office in Zurich, but they didn't mention (the toxic chemical) until at least 10 days had gone by," said Mayor Francesco Rocca.

"Who knows? Maybe they themselves didn't realize at first the import of what had happened."

The mayor added, bleakly, "The truth is that we really don't know what to do. We are taking all the precautions we possibly can, but we have to wait for guidance from our scientists and technicians."

Others in the area are less well-disposed toward the plant management, which reportedly told its 170 workers after the explosion to "go home and take a shower."

"I say let's burn it down," said a man on a bicycle to a group gathered outside the now-silent factory. "They've been poisoning us for years with their smelly fumes and now they're endangering the lives of our children."

Another, from a nearby workshop, opposed arson but agreed that the plant had to go. "You should have seen this place right after the cloud passed," he said. "Vegetables were shriveled, plant leaves were spotted with brown and until the rain came there was a terrible odor."

Prof. Silvio Garattini, head of the Mario Negri pharmacological research institute in Milan, said that about five pounds of a reportedly indestructible toxin, dioxine, was released into the atmosphere July 10 when a faulty safety valve caused a 500-gallon vat of trichlorophenol to explode.

He said that dioxine is capable of causing long-term damage to humans, including liver and kidney lesions, birth defects and cancer.

SINCE THE EXPLOSION, more than 600 birds, rabbits, cats, dogs, chickens and rats have died — most after an initial period of swelling, vomiting and lethargy.

One resident said that when he picked up his dead cat to bury it, its tail fell off; two days later, when he went to dig it up for examination at the request of health authorities, nothing was left but the skull, he said.

Some experts believe that the skin irritations that have developed in humans since the explosion stem more from eating contaminated food than from direct contact; but because of confusion over the composition of the cloud, official warnings against the consumption or sale of foodstuffs from the area were issued only a few days ago.

A policeman in the Seveso town hall suggested that many people had eaten contaminated food because "it looked all right," adding:

"Why, I heard of one guy who over the past two weeks has eaten 10 of his 26 rabbits that died."

Local health official Giuseppe Ghetti pointed out that "it's hard to make people understand that although one apricot has caused them no ill effects, two or three might be very dangerous indeed."

SOME EXPERTS SAY, in fact, that the main danger now is the accumulation of the toxin in the body; past lab studies have shown that the chemical agent is capable of altering chromosomes at infinitesimal doses; such as 0.2 parts per billion.

Until Monday, rumors were circulating that a special chemical-biological-radiological army unit equipped with flamethrowers was to come in and burn the contaminated topsoil. But a general said this morning that such a decision would have to be made "by the civil authorities on the advice of our scientists and not by the army."

Representatives of the chemical plant have indicated that it stands ready to cooperate with the authorities in clearing up the damage and compensating victims.

TRICHLOROPHENOL, the company said, is used in the production of hexachlorophene.

In 1972, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration banned over-the-counter sales of cosmetic products containing hexachlorophene after the deaths of 36 French babies who had been treated with talcum powder containing an accidentally high percentage of the chemical.

Chess player defects

AMSTERDAM — Top Soviet chess player Viktor Korchnoy asked for political asylum in the Netherlands and will be granted a temporary resident's visa, the Justice Ministry said.

Korchnoy, who won the 1975 International chess tournament here Saturday, was given a place to live, a ministry spokesman said. But his exact whereabouts were not disclosed.

The Soviet chess player had extended his stay in Amsterdam to take part in simultaneous matches.

His request for asylum comes 12 days after the arrival here of dissident Soviet historian Andrei Amalrik, and his wife, who will take up residence in the West.
