Accord hits 1st setback

Bosnia's nationwide prisoner release falls far short of goal

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Dashing hopes that a major deadline in the Bosnian peace agreement would be met, a planned nationwide prisoner release on Friday fell far short of its goal — the accord's first big setback.

But officials of the NATO-led force backing the accord indicated that the pact's other important Friday deadline had been largely met: the warring parties had moved back from most front lines to create 2 1/2-mile-wide buffer zones.

The failure to release all prisoners of war registered with the Red Cross — a major test of the warring parties' will for peace — would likely complicate efforts to track down unregistered prisoners and missing persons.

"It's a mess," said Pierre Gauthier, the top official in Bosnia for the International Committee of the Red Cross. "We are very disheartened."

Missing children

WASHINGTON — After Jimmy Ryce was abducted in the Miami area last year, his parents posted his picture in public buildings in the desperate hope that someone — anyone — would report seeing him. In some of the buildings, the pictures were removed. They had not been "authorized." On Friday, as Claudine and Don Ryce watched, President Clinton acted to ensure that won't happen again. He signed an executive order to set aside space in every federal building for such pictures and urged people to inspect them closely. Story 10A

Study: Minors set most arson fires, account for more than half arrests

BOSTON (AP) — In 1994, an 11-year-old boy set fire to a newspaper and tossed it onto the porch of William and Helen LaBroad's home, killing the elderly couple. The youngster was later convicted of manslaughter.

There was nothing remarkable about the arsonist's age.

For the first time ever, juveniles account for a majority of all arson arrests in the United States.

According to the National Fire Protection Association, children and teenagers made up 55 percent of arson arrests in 1994, compared with 49 percent in 1993 and about 40 percent over the previous 15 years.

> 'These are strictly kids who know what they're doing.'
> John Hall researcher

According to the study, one-third of all those arrested for arson in 1994 were under 15. Nearly 7 percent were under 10.

No other serious felony has such a high rate of juvenile involvement.

The figures do not include children who play with matches and accidentally start a fire, said John Hall, an NFPA researcher. "These are strictly kids who know what they're doing," he said.

In 1993, the most recent year for which figures on arson fires of all types were available, 519,800 such blazes were reported, down from 575,200 in 1985, according to the NFPA, based in Quincy. But youngsters are setting more fires and accounting for the largest share of the arrests, the agency said.

The NFPA wouldn't speculate as to why, but Carol Gross, who runs the firesetter program for the Phoenix Fire Department, said: "Kids today seem to be much more stressed than in the past. Using fire is a real sense of power."

However, Jerry Bills, an arson investigator in Rochester, N.Y., said he thinks it's a question of better reporting.

"What happened in the past is we labeled it as vandals or children playing or things of that nature and now we're being more specific," he said. "I think

Weather whiplash

Record highs drop to below freezing; snow melts into flash floods

Associated Press

The Winter of '96 whipsawed much of the nation Friday, sending Midwestern temperatures crashing 58 degrees in one Illinois town and melting blizzard snow into flash floods in the East.

Several towns in West Virginia were warned to evacuate after the Greenbrier and Potomac rivers jumped their banks. In Keyser, helicopters were used to lift some people to safety, and some residents had to be removed by boat in Parsons when the Cheat River flooded.

"We're stranded and no one can get to us," said Cindy McQueen of Marlinton, a town of 1,100 on the backbone of the Appalachian Mountains about 180 miles west of Washington. "If it gets to our house, the whole town will be wiped out. Water is running in basement windows in our section of town."

Some 330 West Virginia roads were closed because of high water and officials estimated that at least 430 homes were damaged. That number was expected to rise as some rivers crest today.

There was also flooding in Virginia, Maryland, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York. In Ligonier, Pa., rising creek water trapped at least 16 people in the township building.

"I think we're here until it goes down," said Keith Whipkey, secretary-treasurer for the township in western Pennsylvania.

In the Midwest, Plains and South, a blast of Arctic air sent temperatures tumbling, giving people weather whiplash.

"Thursday, we were working in shirtsleeves. Today, we're trying to figure out how to get ice out of the truck hoses," said Phillip Caputi, plant manager for Athens Oil Co., in Athens, Ga. The temperature went from 65 degrees to 31 overnight.

Cities that saw record highs on Thursday woke up to Violence marks eve of Palestinian elections

EL BIREH, West Bank (AP) — In the final hours before the first Palestinian elections, three Muslim militants were killed Friday after firing on Israeli soldiers, Palestinian police broke up an opposition protest and voters complained of confusion about polling stations.

Despite the problems, Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat hailed today's vote as a "milestone on the way toward establishing a Palestinian state."

A high voter turnout would give Arafat a solid mandate to continue peace negotiations with Israel.

Militant opposition groups have urged Palestinians to stay home and said they would claim victory if fewer than 50 percent of the 1,013,235 registered voters cast ballots.

Polls open at 7 a.m. today (11 p.m. CST Friday) and close 12 hours later. First results were expected late today.

Palestinians were choosing an 88-seat autonomy council and a president of the Palestinian Authority. Arafat is running for president, and his only challenger is Samiha Khalil, a 72-year-old social activist.

Violence marred preparations for the vote.

In the West Bank village of Jalameh, three members of the Muslim militant group Hamas fired on Israeli troops at an army roadblock in an attempt to disrupt the elections. One soldier was wounded. Troops returned fire, killing the three assailants.

In response, thousands of angry Hamas activists marched through the nearby town of Jenin and ripped campaign posters from walls. Palestinian police met with Hamas leaders and urged them to delay the funerals until after the polls close today.

Former President Jimmy Carter, leading an international team of observers, met with Palestinian human rights activists Friday and heard reports about arrests of journalists and campaign activists by Arafat's security forces.

"I'm still quite concerned that there have been some obvious (violations) perpetrated by the authorities," Carter said. "Criticism of the central authority has not been permitted."

Carter said he hoped the election would lead to greater sharing of power.

In the West Bank village of Idna, a Palestinian was shot dead in a fight between rival clans after each clans' candidate had accused the other of collaborating with the Israelis.

In Ramallah, also on the West Bank, Palestinian police broke up a march by some 100 opposition activists. Police pushed and shoved protesters and broke the cameras of two news photographers.

Seeking to prevent attacks on election day, Israel sealed the West Bank and Gaza Strip on Friday, barring Palestinians from entering Israel. The army also ordered Israelis to stay out of PLO-ruled areas and asked Jewish settlements to shut their gates.

In two likely trouble spots, east Jerusalem and the West Bank town of Hebron, Israeli police deployed reinforcements to thwart possible attempts by Israeli right-wingers to sabotage the vote.

Hundreds of Jewish settlers from the West Bank stayed with families in Jerusalem overnight so they would not have to drive to the city in violation of the Jewish sabbath. A large right-wing rally was scheduled for tonight.

International observers toured polling stations Friday and questioned elections officials. A member of the Carter delegation said he was concerned members of Arafat's 30,000-strong security force might vote more than once.

"It is possible that irregularities could occur," said Kenneth Stein from Emory University in Atlanta, Ga.

Many Haitians are upset with hero's middle-class bride

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Wedding bells are chiming for Haiti's priest-turned-president, and many Haitians fear they'll be left standing at the altar.

Many Haitian peasants who welcomed Jean-Bertrand Aristide as one of their own are unhappy that their hero today is marrying a woman from the lighter-skinned upper class that they distrust, a Haitian-American they see as hoity-toity.

In the struggle for Haiti's freedom, Aristide risked his life and lost his priesthood. Now, he's putting his political career and his nation's affection on the line for love.

Upset callers have inundated the phone lines of the private Radio Quisqueya, some sounding like jealous lovers.

Some said they felt betrayed. Some described the bride as an upper-class, light-skinned foreigner. One summed it all up: "If he loves us so much, why didn't he choose one of us?"

Haitians long have been divided between the majority dark-skinned peasants, who are the descendants primarily of African slaves, and an elite class of mixed-blood people who also are descended from European or Middle Eastern colonizers and traders.

Aristide's bride, Mildred Trouillot, was born 33 years ago in New York City to Haitian professionals. Though she speaks the peasants' Creole and — albeit haltingly — the elite's French, she was brought up in the United States and studied there to become a lawyer.

Trouillot was never a political creature, but in 1993 was hired as an adviser to Aristide's government-in-exile in Washington at a salary of $10,000 a month — more than the average Haitian earns in a lifetime.

Aristide, 42, anticipated a negative reaction to his wedding plans. On state radio Thursday, when he belatedly announced the impending marriage, he tried to reassure Haitians.

"Our relationship of fidelity and commitment cannot change if there is someone who shares my life with me," he said. "She has agreed to participate in the struggle with me."

Many are not convinced.

"He'll forget us. His wife will turn his head," said Junior Louis, a 13-year-old boy who lives on the streets.

At a street market, some people thought the marriage would strip Aristide of the saintly image he has cultivated.

"Aristide's magic is finished," said carpenter Gesner Michel, 34.

"He's had a lot of mystic power. Now he is going to lose it," agreed food seller Suze Brunache, 46.

ODZAK, Bosnia-Herzegovina — American troops watched helplessly as Milenko Rakic tore electrical cables from the house where he was born in hurried, last-minute preparations Friday to flee the town.

The cables were among the last items Rakic could take as he and the 18,000 other Bosnian Serbs in this town packed all their belongings, unscrewing every toilet, bathtub and electrical socket. They even took the windows and roof tiles, leaving only bare walls.

Rakic, 49, was among the last to leave Odzak before the NATO-led force charged with implementing peace in Bosnia took over.

The northern Bosnian town falls inside the 2 1/2-mile buffer zone that took effect Friday along the front lines. In March, control of Odzak will pass to a Muslim-Croat federation in one of the many land swaps of the U.S.-brokered peace accord.

The Friday deadline called for all troops to abandon the buffer zone, but did not apply to civilians. Even so, the Serb residents fear living under enemy rule.

They took away what they could — and destroyed what they couldn't. Some fleeing residents burned down or mined the shells of their houses in an ultimate revenge against the Croats and Muslims who plan to resettle the town.

"If I can't live in my home, no one will," said Rakic, who was moving to Modrica, seven miles to the north, which will remain in the Serb-controlled half of Bosnia mandated in the peace accord.

Odzak, before the war a prosperous Croat-dominated municipality, now resembles a ghost town. Stray dogs roam the streets and yards are filled with garbage and broken furniture that no one — not even looters — wanted to take.

Rakic and a few other Serbs still in the town Friday were in a hurry to leave, fearing their enemies might move in immediately.

"We cannot wait to be butchered by our former neighbors," said Goran Miletic, 18. "What could be expected, when we chased them out at the beginning of the war?"

The exodus was the latest in a series of movements of population during the brutal four-year war, which left an estimated 200,000 people dead or missing and 2 million displaced.

"It's sad to see those people leave their homes in such a fashion," said U.S. Army Capt. Nick Charles of Washington, idling in a Humvee as soldiers from his armored battalion negotiated the formal takeover of Odzak.

U.S. troops distributed a NATO publication in the local language, describing their mission in an attempt to foster trust among the Bosnian factions. But there was little they could do to stop the fleeing Serbs.

"It's not our job to prevent them from leaving or staying," said Lt. Tyler Durham, 24, of Fayetteville, N.C.

One Serb family heading out of town on a tractor overloaded with belongings politely took the paper, only to throw it away once they turned the corner and were out of view.

Rakic and other Serbs said they have nothing against the U.S. troops being stationed in Odzak. But they don't think Americans can guarantee their safety in the town where 90 percent of some 9,000 pre-war inhabitants were ethnic Croat or Muslim.

"Americans are naive if they think we can remain here. Only a few months ago, we were shooting at Croats and Muslims on a front line not far away. And today, we are told to live together. That's impossible," Rakic said.

The last item he removed from the house was a portrait of the late Yugoslav communist leader Josip Broz Tito, who held the former Yugoslavia's ethnic groups together in a single country.

"If he was alive, nothing like this would have happened," Rakic said as he took the portrait from a wall and loaded it onto his tractor.

Rakic sat down on the tractor and took one last look back at his birthplace.

"May it rot in hell," he said, "together with its future owners."

Yeltsin gambles on tough image to survive in upcoming elections

By Deborah Seward
Associated Press

■ News analysis

MOSCOW — Every time Boris Yeltsin cracks down, a legion of critics are ready to write him off, but the Russian president is gambling that being tough and crushing Chechen rebels could boost his political fortunes.

His public appearances throughout the nine-day standoff were vintage Yeltsin: menacing grimaces, slamming of fists, tongue-lashing of ministers.

The no-nonsense performance was designed to show that Yeltsin, who is expected to run for a second term this year, is fully in charge after a two-month absence from the Kremlin to recuperate from a heart attack.

Top opposition politicians, including Communist Party chief Gennady Zyuganov and reformer Grigory Yavlinsky, said Yeltsin's decision to wipe out Chechen rebels who held more than 100 hostages in a village in southern Russia — turning the village into a scorched ruin in the process — would hurt his chances of being reelected.

Otto Latsis, a prominent political commentator at the newspaper Izvestia, wrote Friday that the decision to annihilate the rebels was "a fateful mistake" that could cost Yeltsin a second term.

But Yeltsin's critics have written his political obituary many times before — in 1993 after he sent tanks and troops to drive his political opponents from the parliament building; in 1994 when he ordered the army to put down Chechnya's independence drive. Each time they have been thrown by the 64-year-old former construction boss's ability to survive.

Yeltsin also was criticized last year for another Chechen hostage crisis, in which more than 100 people were killed and the rebels went unpunished. Critics said that fiasco probably encouraged the rebels to try again.

Yeltsin's strong actions to crush the rebels this time were those of an exasperated president, and an attempt to put an end to the Chechens' cycle of guerrilla actions.

But they also can be seen in terms of an impending election campaign by a shrewd politician who is unabashed by his reliance on force to resolve political crises.

The victory by Communists and nationalists in December's parliamentary election showed Russian voters want politicians who are tough and ready to defend Russia's interests — at any price.

Politicians opposed to the war in Chechnya, like former prime minister Yegor Gaidar, bombed in the election. Although the public is disgusted by the army's performance in the 13-month war, being soft on Chechnya is a dud at the polls.

Yeltsin's actions this week clearly show he's in tune with prevailing opinion.

A VTSIOM poll of Moscow residents taken Monday, the day Russian troops began their assault on the village, found that 44 percent of those asked thought the Russian government's handling of the crisis was correct, while 36 percent thought it was not.

So far, Yeltsin's handling of the hostage crisis in southern Russia has not translated into improved ratings for himself, and he could run into trouble if he doesn't make good on a pledge to rub out Chechen terrorism.

The December elections also showed that many Russians are disillusioned with the market reforms Yeltsin introduced in 1992, which have turned millions into paupers and created a small class of millionaire princes.

Today to be sunny, high mid-60s

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies, high in the mid-60s, west to northwest winds at 10 to 20 mph and gusty, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be fair with a low in the mid-20s.

Sunday is expected to be mostly sunny with a high 60 to 65.

After an overnight low of 17, Friday's high was 59 compared with the record high for that date of 74 set in 1986. The record low for today's date was 8 set in 1963.

STATE

Clear skies and warmer temperatures prevailed across Texas on Friday as the edge started to come off the winter chill.

The Arctic high pressure area that had brought blustery, bitter days and nights to the state moved to the east, allowing the wind to shift back out of the south.

Wind speeds varied from 10 to 15 mph across the central and eastern portions to 15 to 25 mph and gusty across the western sections. Temperatures were beginning to warm Friday because of the abundant sunshine and southerly winds.

Temperatures were generally in the 40s and 50s across the state. Afternoon temperatures ranged from 33 at Paris and Sherman to 50 at Fort Stockton.

The weekend forecast for North Texas promises partly cloudy skies today, except for mostly cloudy skies toward Lufkin. Winds will be gusty toward Wichita Falls. Highs from near 50 northeast to 63 southwest. Skies will be clearing tonight.

In South Texas, skies will be partly cloudy with highs in the 50s and 60s and lows in the 30s and 40s.

NATION

Heavy snow fell Friday across the region between the Sierra and the Rockies, closing major highways through the mountains. Unseasonably warm temperatures in the East combined with rain to produce flooding in many areas.

Up to 9 inches of snow fell in some areas along the populous Wasatch Front in northern Utah, much of it landing during morning rush hour. Up to 17 inches fell in the Snyderville Basin area near Park City. In the past three days, some nearby ski resorts have received up to 5 or 6 feet of new snow.

Snow also fell across much of Montana, western Wyoming, northern Colorado, Idaho, northern Nevada, and in parts of Washington and Oregon. Over a half foot of new snow fell at pass levels in the Washington Cascades, with an inch or two in the Columbia Basin. From 8 to 10 inches of new snow fell in the Oregon Cascades.

An arctic air mass dominated most of the Midwest, Great Lakes and Ohio Valley and the Northeast. Freezing temperatures were expected to reach as far south as south Texas, the Gulf Coast and central Florida.

The mercury at Devils Lake, N.D., dipped to minus 39 degrees in the morning, breaking the 1985 record of minus 31. Biloxi, Miss., dropped to 22 degrees, tying the 1994 record.

Heavy rainfall, which totaled 1 to 2 inches in the upper Ohio Valley and lower Great Lakes regions, along with the warmer temperatures led to rapid snow melt and ice jams that produced flooding from central Ohio through New England.

By midafternoon, most of the heavy rain had shifted off the southern and central Atlantic Coast, but downpours persisted in northern areas through the afternoon.

Winds gusted to over 40 mph in the east, including gusts of 57 mph at Philadelphia, 56 mph at New York, 47 mph at Buffalo, N.Y., and 47 mph at Boston.

SHORT: NATO hits setback in Bosnia accord

(From 1A)

istered with the Red Cross had been freed. About 400 were to have been released by the Bosnian government, about 400 by the Bosnian Serbs and about 100 by the Bosnian Croats.

After being assembled at Sarajevo airport, 218 people were freed — 68 Bosnian government soldiers and 150 Bosnian Serbs. Another seven Serbs held by the Bosnian government didn't go to the airport, but chose to stay in Sarajevo for the time being. The Croats didn't release anyone.

Under the Bosnian peace plan, all prisoners were to have been released unconditionally by Friday, not swapped for prisoners held by the other side, as had been the case previously.

The prisoner release was originally scheduled for early in the week. But the Bosnian government insisted it would not free its POWs until the Serbs accounted for some 20,000 missing Muslims.

In northern Bosnia, Bosnian Serb forces also balked at freeing their captives, claiming not enough was being done to track down about 500 missing Serb soldiers.

Gauthier said the international community would have to try to force the release of the remaining prisoners, but it was unclear what could be done. The NATO-led Implementation Force has narrowly defined its duties as limited to military tasks, such as creating the front-line buffer zones.

"We are not in a prisoner-release mentality, we are still in a prisoner-exchange mentality and that is a serious problem," said Gauthier.

Gauthier said all sides were clearly still trying to use POWs as leverage for concessions, such as information on missing people.

Hopes had soared that the prisoner releases would go ahead as planned after the sides agreed Friday to create a "working group" that would account for missing soldiers and civilians

That followed the intervention of U.S. envoy Richard C. Holbrooke, who brokered the accord reached in Dayton, Ohio. He flew to Sarajevo on Thursday to try to convince the government that it was mixing two distinct issues — prisoners of war and missing persons.

He then took the issue to Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic in Belgrade. Milosevic promised to use his influence to press the Bosnian Serbs.

Milosevic's help may be crucial in determining the fate of thousands of Muslims from the eastern Bosnian enclave of Srebrenica, which was overrun by the Serbs in September. There is mounting evidence that many may have been massacred.

Since Srebrenica is to remain under Serb control under the peace plan, Milosevic's support for an investigation there is necessary.

"We are going to keep a very sharp spotlight on this," said U.S. human rights envoy John Shattuck, who was expected to be allowed into the town soon.

In Dobrinja, a Muslim suburb of Sarajevo, refugees waited anxiously to see if loved ones were among the released. But seven of the 26 Bosnian Serbs released from the city's central jail made a beeline for the nearest bar.

The former prisoners crammed their rucksacks and plastic bags under the table and ordered a round of cognac and beer — and reminded the bartender to keep the drinks flowing. A woman in a fur coat peered through the bar's window.

"A toast," said Predrag Nisic, who was jailed 10 months on charges of spying, hoisting a glass of cognac, "to king booze and to Sarajevo. This is my hometown and will be forever despite all the schmucks." He said he hopes to leave as soon as possible to join his wife and two children in Pittsburgh.

Unlike the prisoner releases, the deadline for separating front lines appeared to have been met.

NATO jets and choppers buzzed overhead in northern Bosnia and Humvees, Bradley fighting vehicles and trucks jammed roads and narrow dirt tr ks checking compliance. Officials expected a full assessment on Saturday.

Commanders of the NATO-led Implementation Force were "confident that the zones of separation will be cleared," spokesman Lt. Col. Mark Rayner said in Sarajevo.

Early Friday, Britain's Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Walker, commander of the NATO Allied Rapid Reaction Corps, inspected the Jewish cemetery, one of the bloodiest front lines in the Bosnian capital.

Touring empty Bosnian army bunkers, behind which stood the bombed-out remains of homes used as snipers' nests, he said: "This is a microcosm of what is going on the confrontation lines around all of Bosnia-Herzegovina."

PLUNGE: Temperatures drop as much as 58 degrees

a deep freeze. Moline, Ill., fell to minus 2, a 58-degree drop; Chicago went from 61 degrees to 10, with a wind chill of 21 below zero. Indianapolis was 61 on Thursday, and 4 on Friday. Atlanta fell from 63 degrees to 21.

The storm blew into the East with driving rain and lower temperatures. Wind gusting to 61 mph closed New York City's Verrazano and Throgs Neck bridges to motorcycles and trucks. The temperature in Buffalo, N.Y., dropped 17 degrees in one hour.

In New York, a 9-by-12 foot section of the dome above the U.N. General Assembly was ripped up by the gusting winds, forcing workers to put a half-dozen metal garbage cans around the podium to catching leaking water. Eight subway lines experienced problems, mostly due to flooding in the tunnels.

For many in North Dakota, Minnesota and Nebraska, it was still too cold to begin digging out from the blizzard, which blasted the region with more than a foot of snow on Wednesday and Thursday. Schools, offices and businesses were closed a second day.

"As far as I'm concerned, nobody should be leaving home or work or wherever they are," said police Sgt. Dean Mueller in Fargo, N.D., where the wind chill made it feel like 80 below. "To get out and get stranded is to risk dying."

Bismarck, N.D., hit a record minus 39 and Minot, N.D., had a record 31 below. Fosston, Minn., had the nation's low with 44 degrees below zero, while Morris, Minn., had a wind chill reading of 76 below. Snowplows broke down when their heaters burned out.

At least six deaths were blamed on the storm in Minnesota. Two ice fishermen were missing in Kansas, and one person was killed by flooding in West Virginia.

Despite power outages and the bitter cold, few people took refuge in Red Cross emergency shelters in Minnesota's Twin Cities.

"Minnesotans seem to be hardy souls who will put up with just about anything for an evening," said Paula Beck, a Red Cross spokeswoman.

Still, Tina Malone said a shelter was better than another night in her freezing house.

"It got real cold," Malone said, sitting in a shelter in suburban Crystal with her young son sleeping on her chest. "We saw our breath in the house, and we had to sleep with all our clothes on."

ARSON: Juveniles account for 55 percent of arrests

(From 1A)

the awareness that's going on throughout the country now is making people report what it really is."

Arson fires caused 550 deaths and $1.6 billion in damage in the United States in 1994, the NFPA reported. The agency does not distinguish how many deaths and how much damage was caused by juveniles.

An 8-year-old boy in Jersey City, N.J., was charged as a juvenile with murder last week after an elderly man died in a Christmas Eve fire that began when he was playing with a lighter.

In 1985 in Springfield, a 17-year-old doused a house with gasoline before setting it on fire, killing five members of the same family. The teen-ager was convicted of murder.

Children who set fires can fall into several categories, specialists said: those too young to understand the consequences; those who know what fire can do but are curious; and those — typically older — who intend to harm.

Often, experts said, a child sets a fire as a cry for help for other problems, such as physical or sexual abuse. In Portland, Maine, investigators found that an 11-year-old girl who was setting fires had trouble at home: her mother had a personality disorder.

Many children require professional counseling to help control their fire-lighting tendencies.

One problem, fire safety specialists said, is that children simply aren't taught well enough that fire can be dangerous.

Among many parents, "the attitude is 'kids will be kids,' and meanwhile they don't realize what can happen," said Lt. Robert Callahan, who heads Springfield-'s arson division. "In the case of the LaBroads, two people died."

In Rochester, Bills said the problem of "curiosity" arson is so great that the Fire Department is developing a program for preschool children.

The NFPA recommends that parents teach their children at an early age that matchers and lighters are for adults only. The agency suggests keeping matches and lighters in a locked cabinet.

"We think of them as having the same deadly potential as a loaded weapon," said Meri-K Appy, assistant vice president for public education at NFPA.

GOP gives ground on missile defense, peacekeeping

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hoping to gain President Clinton's support for a $265 billion defense bill, Republican leaders abandoned their demands Friday for a missile defense system and restrictions on U.S. participation in U.N. peacekeeping.

Vetoed by Clinton last month, a revised 1996 defense authorization bill emerged from a closed meeting between Republicans and Democrats involved in negotiations to settle differences over the measure.

It will go to the House floor next Wednesday with Senate action expected to follow soon after.

In their new version of the bill, Republicans threw out provisions requiring deployment of a national missile defense system by 2003 and restricting the president's power to place U.S. troops under U.N. command.

"It's somewhat of a compromise, but I think it will be a good bill," said Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Both Republicans and Democrats said they had consulted Defense Secretary William Perry to determine if the new version of the bill would be accepted by the president. A White House official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Clinton plans to review the new version of the bill before deciding whether to sign.

"Talking with Defense Secretary Perry, he thought he could recommend to the president that he sign the bill," said Rep. Floyd Spence, R-S.C., chairman of the national security panel.

Perry said later he had received assurances from congressional leaders "that a number of my concerns with the earlier bill are being satisfied, but I can make no decision on my recommendation to the president until I see the final bill."

Although Clinton enumerated several objections to the bill, White House opposition focused on three key provisions that were either discarded or weakened by the House-Senate leaders. The lawmakers agreed:

■ To drop policy language calling for deployment of a system capable of defending all 50 states against a small-scale missile attack by 2003. Instead, they will pursue that goal — a high priority dating back to the Reagan administration — in a separate bill. Clinton had argued that the language could lead to a violation of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty with Russia.

■ To drop language that would prohibit placing U.S. troops under United Nations command unless the president certifies that there is a national security need. Clinton considered the provision an encroachment on his authority as commander in chief. It also reflected a philosophical divide between Republicans, who have sharply criticized U.N.-led operations, and the president, who favors a multilateral approach.

■ To change from binding law to sense-of-Congress language a provision requiring the defense secretary to submit supplemental requests for funding to Congress for any troop deployment expected to cost more than $100 million. Clinton said this, too, infringed upon his presidential authority.

"That was the key that unlocked the veto," said Sen. John Warner, R-Va., of the three changes. Warner's compromise version formed the basis of Friday's agreement.

Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia, ranking Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee, said he still objects to parts of the bill but would support it on the floor.

Lawmakers left untouched language banning abortions at overseas military hospitals and requiring the discharge of service members who test positive for the AIDS virus. The measure also approves $493 million for possible expansion of the B-2 bomber fleet. Clinton objected to all of those provisions, but his chief concerns were the restrictions on his own authority.

Presidential approval of the bill would clear the way for a 2.4 percent military pay raise. The final four-tenths of a percent of that raise had been held up by the veto of the bill.

Fire illustrates plight of many asylum-seekers

LUEBECK, Germany (AP) — Julia Menaime doesn't know how long she has lived in Germany, or where she will live next, or why her home — a shelter for asylum-seekers — was burned to the ground.

But the 9-year-old Angolan knows every detail about what happened when the fire broke out. She remembers racing to the staircase, already in flames; then running upstairs to the attic.

"My mother was the first one," Julia recalled Friday. "Then she jumped out the window with my sister."

Her mother and 6-year-old sister were among the 10 people killed in the pre-dawn blaze Thursday that injured up to 50 other immigrants, most of them seeking safety from wars, political turbulence, famine and poverty in Africa.

Whether it was a vicious neo-Nazi attack or an accident, African immigrants are angry it took so many deaths to draw attention to their uncertain circumstances. Although many have been in Germany five years or more, they remain in bureaucratic limbo: asylum applicants who are unable to seek work or their own shelter.

> 'I think it's a shame that people are only discussing the problem when others have died.'
> — Benkindo Diangana, Zairian who has lived for 20 years in Germany

"I think it's a shame that people are only discussing the problem when others have died," said Benkindo Diangana, a Zairian who has lived in Germany for 20 years. Men sitting around one of the city's asylum centers nodded in agreement.

Three suspects were freed Friday after police said they had an alibi and there was no strong evidence to hold them. A fourth man also was held briefly Thursday night, but details were unavailable.

Police have not ruled out an electrical fire.

Diangana said the tragedy demonstrated problems faced by immigrants seeking sanctuary in Germany. Forced to live in shelters, they can become easy targets for hate-mongers and have limited contact with ordinary Germans.

"When the asylum-seekers are isolated like this, there is less acceptance from the people," he said.

At a town meeting Friday, the mayor opened a discussion about integrating asylum-seekers, but some immigrants were disappointed when financial considerations were raised.

"The Germans always say it's an economic problem," said Bacar Gadji, a Senegalese who is the spokesman for the African Society of Luebeck.

Some 300 Germans crowded the meeting hall to show their willingness to help change the conditions that have isolated the immigrants.

GOP leaders request 24-hour wait between State of the Union and response

■ ABC, CBS, CNN, C-SPAN, NBC and Fox all plan live coverage of Clinton's speech and GOP response.

NEW YORK (AP) — For the first time ever, Republican leaders are asking the networks to let them wait 24 hours to respond to President Clinton's State of the Union speech.

Friday's request complicated plans for television coverage of Tuesday's 8 p.m. CST speech, which by tradition is followed immediately by a response from leaders of the party not in the White House.

ABC, CBS, CNN, C-SPAN, NBC and the Fox Broadcasting Co. all plan live coverage of Clinton's speech and the Republican response.

CNN spokesman David Talley said that network would air the GOP response on Wednesday. ABC rejected the unprecedented request for a prime-time slot the next day.

"We feel strongly that our audience is best served by hearing the Republicans' response to the address immediately following the State of the Union as has always been the practice," said ABC spokeswoman Eileen Murphy.

NBC, CBS and Fox news executives were still considering the request. C-SPAN didn't immediately return phone calls. Cable's Comedy Central also plans live coverage.

"We're going to rethink it and decide on Monday," said Lane Venardos, CBS' vice president for hard news and special events.

In a letter to the networks, Sen. Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., asked for a 9 p.m. EST Wednesday time slot to respond to the speech.

"Allowing 24 hours to pass between the President's address and the Republican response will enable us to best contribute to the national dialogue, and to most appropriately respond to the President's message," the letter said.

"We also assure you that the Republican presentation will not be of undue length," it said.

GOP officials said the party spokesman was likely to be Dole, the front-runner of Clinton's potential adversaries in November.

Clarkson Hine, press aide to the senator, did not return calls seeking comment, and there was no immediate comment from the White House.

Last year, Gingrich chose New Jersey Gov. Christie Whitman to respond to the State of the Union.

Sherri Bebitch Jeffe, a professor at the Claremont Graduate School's Center for Politics and Policy, noted that the televised partisan response is a recent phenomenon.

"This is Bob Dole being presidential, this is not Bob Dole being the loyal opposition," she said. "It is part of the positioning of Bob Dole as the presidential actor of the Republican party."

The Republicans, recalling how Clinton's last State of the Union speech ran 81 minutes, may want a chance to review the speech overnight, address it point by point, and in more than 10 minutes, Ms. Jeffe said.

"Even given this strategy, I'm wondering whether it is the right strategy," she said. "If there is an audience for the president, will that audience tune in the following evening? ... That's a two-evening commitment."

No lurid testimony is likely in Presley-Jackson divorce, attorney says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — OK, so what really happened between Lisa Marie and Michael Jackson? Don't count on finding out. Not from them, anyway.

Lisa Marie Presley cited irreconcilable differences this week in filing for divorce from Michael Jackson. And under California's no-fault divorce laws, that's all either of them have to say publicly:

No questioning by a judge, no listing of peeves, no documentation at all as to what tore this coupling asunder.

In fact, as long as they both make nice, the two can ask that all divorce documents be sealed, and they won't need to appear in court at all.

"If both sides are thinking rationally, I don't see this being settled in anything but a private way. And money makes people very rational," Southwestern School of Law professor Robert Pugsley said Friday.

"There won't be any lurid testimony," said divorce attorney Marvin Mitchelson, the man who introduced "palimony" to the American lexicon. "I can't see Michael Jackson wanting to get it all out."

Since their secret May 1994 wedding in the Dominican Republic, few took the marriage seriously. Critics called it a cheap stunt to bolster Presley's singing career and Jackson's image after a 13-year-old boy claimed he was molested by the self-proclaimed King of Pop.

"Because she does have money, unless she's extraordinarily greedy, I think that she'd be very ill-advised to want to make public the details of this marriage," Pugsley said.

She, of course, is Elvis' daughter, worth $100 million as sole heir to his estate. Jackson is worth millions himself.

Melvin Belli, who's handled a few publicized divorces, including his own, dismissed the entire marriage, despite Presley's hints during a TV interview that they were hoping to have a baby together.

"I think they tried to build up his reputation and hers," Belli said. "I don't even think they were sleeping together."

In her petition, under the section marked "community property," Presley's attorney wrote "the nature and extent (of) the community property, if any, has not been ascertained."

So, if Jackson doesn't contest the divorce, which he says he won't, and there indeed is no community property, the whole business could be over in six months — the period in which a California divorce becomes final.

Unless one of them jaunts down to the Dominican Republic, where a quickie divorce can be obtained in two to three days.

"A lot of my clients have done that," Mitchelson said.

Indeed, rumors swirled in San to Domingo on Friday that Presley was on her way to finish the job.

"We have no knowledge of her whereabouts, so we couldn't say one way or the other," said the secretary to her publicist, Paul Bloch.

Americans gather to let voices be heard

AUSTIN (AP) — Teresa Farris barely has enough money to pay the bills each month. She has three grown sons and a 9-year-old boy who is emotionally handicapped. She doesn't vote unless it's a presidential election and doesn't think her voice matters to officials in Washington.

But on Friday, Ms. Farris was in a classroom at the University of Texas with 15 strangers discussing U.S. foreign policy as part of the National Issues Convention.

The NIC is a political experiment that has brought roughly 500 randomly selected Americans to Austin to debate on three issues — U.S. foreign policy, the economy and family — and allow them to interact with presidential candidates.

The number of Republican candidates who will personally attend the convention had dwindled to one, Sen. Dick Lugar, R-Ind. Three other Republicans — Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas, former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander and publishing executive Steve Forbes — will participate via satellite TV. Vice President Al Gore will attend in place of President Clinton.

But convention officials and many of the delegates say the forum would meet its goal of articulating citizen views, with or without a large number of candidates.

Delegate Chris Kelsaw, a 34-year-old industrial worker from Fort Wayne, Ind., said he hopes the convention will allow "the voice of America to be heard."

"The voice of America has been silenced for a long time," said Kelsaw, who is married and has seven children. "It's great to allow people to speak on how they feel. The polling itself may be a bunch of paperwork, but I hope the candidates listen to us."

Ms. Farris said she was impressed by the cross section of people who were selected as delegates and the wide range of opinions they have voiced during small-group sessions on the issues.

"I sat in today's discussions and felt stupid in some ways because there are other people more educated than I am," said Ms. Farris, of Midlothian, Va.

"But people are listening to others' opinions without getting angry. It's better than I expected. I almost didn't come," she said.

Ms. Farris said if she could ask one question of the candidates or Gore it would be, "Why aren't there any truthful politicians?"

She may get her chance.

The GOP candidates will take questions from the delegates Saturday night, while Gore will do the same Sunday. The interaction is part of a concept developed by convention creator James Fishkin known as deliberative polling.

Fishkin, a UT professor, says such polling differs from ordinary polls, which offer a snapshot of the current state of public opinion. Instead, deliberative poll samples opinion on specific topics before and after people have the opportunity to learn about and discuss those issues.

Edith Wolpin, a delegate from Howard Beach, N.Y., said she doubted that many people would change their minds about an issue.

"It's been very informative, but it's very hard to change what people think," said Mrs. Wolpin, a dental hygienist who has two grown children. "I don't think this forum will change too many minds on any issue."

Don Worcester, a 38-year-old delegate from Flagstaff, Ariz., said he hadn't participated in an in-depth discussion about democracy since seventh grade.

"I hope the candidates take to heart what we tell them," said Worcester, who is studying to be a psychologist. "I think you are going to hear some angry questions about Congress' handling of the budget and differing opinions on family values."

Local company seeks to buy Stanton bank

From Staff Reports

Midland American Bancshares Inc., the parent holding company of Midland American Bank, has signed an agreement to acquire Stanton National Bank, the bank's first venture outside Midland.

The acquisition has been approved and agreed to by both banks' boards of directors but is subject to final approval by the shareholders of Stanton National Bank and the proper bank regulatory agencies. The approval is anticipated near the end of the first quarter.

John Grist, president and chief executive officer of Midland American, said that when the acquisition is finalized, Stanton National Bank will become a full service branch of Midland American Bank. All Stanton National Bank personnel will be retained, including Joe Hodges, president of Stanton National, who will remain in his management position.

"We are pleased that our initial acquisition is well managed and will complement our banking services base," Grist said.

Hodges said he and his staff are looking forward to the association. "Our primary emphasis will continue to be handling the agricultural financial needs of the producers in this area of West Texas."

Clinton orders space in federal buildings for missing children's photos

WASHINGTON (AP) — After Jimmy Ryce was abducted in the Miami area last year, his parents posted his picture in public buildings in the desperate hope that someone — anyone — would report seeing him.

In some of the buildings, the pictures were removed. They had not been "authorized."

On Friday, as Claudine and Don Ryce watched, President Clinton acted to ensure that won't happen again. He signed an executive order to set aside space in every federal building for such pictures and urged people to inspect them closely.

> 'The only lead we have is the child's face. We don't know who took (the child) most of the time in these predator takings.'
> — Claudine Ryce, mother of Jimmy Ryce

"It's more than a bulletin board you're going to have here. This is a helping hand going out to the parents," Claudine Ryce said. "The child, remember, could be anywhere. They're taken in one location, but they're often taken a thousand miles away."

Attorney General Janet Reno said every federal building will have a person designated to maintain the area. The displays will emphasize "children who have been abducted by strangers, or who are in imminent danger, so that we can focus our efforts on making sure our children are returned," she said.

The General Services Administration, the government's landlord, said the order could involve more than 80,000 locations.

As part of the child-finding effort, Reno said, missing notices will be transmitted faster to the country's 16,000 police departments.

The executive order was signed two days after the body of 9-year-old Amber Hagerman, her throat cut, was found in a rain-swollen Arlington, Texas, creek. Witnesses saw a man drag her screaming into a pickup truck last Saturday.

Jimmy Ryce disappeared two weeks before his 10th birthday last September in Homestead, Fla. A 28-year-old ranch hand confessed to killing the boy and led investigators to his remains.

The Ryces and hundreds of volunteers had conducted a three-month search for Jimmy. They distributed flyers and petitions, offered a $100,000 reward and appeared on "America's Most Wanted" and other television shows. The parents also lobbied for legislation now pending in Congress as the Jimmy Ryce ASAP Child Assistance Act.

The posting of pictures was part of the campaign. Their removal was not. "We were told it wasn't authorized" to post pictures, Mrs. Ryce said Friday.

On the verge of tears, she talked about the expense and difficulty when parents alone try to distribute the child's picture.

"The only lead we have is the child's face," she said. "We don't know who took (the child) most of the time in these predator takings. We don't know what kind of car they had."

Attorney General Reno said federal building photo displays will not be mixed in with wanted posters, job openings and other notices. Clinton's executive order requires that a space be set aside solely for missing children.

In signing the order, Clinton said, "We must do whatever we can to help parents in these situations find their children." He urged people to "look twice at the photos of missing children you see in the mail, on your milk cartons, and now in federal buildings across the country."

About 300 children are kidnapped each year by suspects who are not family members, the Justice Department's National Center for Missing and Exploited Children reported. Family abductions account for 350,000.

Other parents at the Friday's signing were:

- Colleen Nick, mother of 9-year-old Morgan Nick, kidnapped by a stranger in an Alma, Ark., ballpark last June.
- Linda Koerner, paternal grandmother of Adam Croote, taken at age 6 by his maternal grandparents from Dormansville, N.Y., but recovered after three years.
- Marc Klaas, father of 12-year-old Polly Klaas, whose Oct. 1, 1993, kidnapping from her bedroom led to a nationwide search until her body was found beside a road near her Petaluma, Calif., home.

Border patrolers move down south in U.S. crackdown

NOGALES, Ariz. (AP) — Border Patrol agent Eldon Hurst has put away the parka and is wearing his summer-weight uniforms.

He's working 1,237 miles south of his usual post on the Canadian border in Idaho, and for the next month, he'll be a lot warmer — and a lot busier. The agent has been reassigned to the Mexican border as part of a U.S. crackdown on illegal aliens and drug smuggling along the nation's southern boundary.

"I did not want to come down here," Hurst said, "but now that I'm here I'm enjoying it. I've been telling people that they had to pry me off my snowmobile to get me here."

Fifty-two veteran agents from around the country are now in southern Arizona for up to three months to bolster the 400 permanently assigned Border Patrol officers here.

Federal officials announced plans last week to tighten control of the whole Southwestern border — with 300 additional agents in Arizona and California.

For officers like Hurst, who ran a three-man station at Bonners Ferry, Idaho, contrasts between north and south abound.

The southern Arizona region, the nation's second-busiest in illegal alien activity behind San Diego, had 227,000 arrests during the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30. The Bonners Ferry station arrested about 100 in all of last year.

The agents coming from the North are "just not accustomed to the numbers," said Ron Colburn, assistant agent in the charge of the Nogales part of the operation. "And they may be a little bit amazed by it."

"We find groups of 20 or so coming across all the time," Hurst said.

Drug seizures abound, too.

In a 24-hour period this week in the Nogales area, agents seized 240 pounds of cocaine in a parked van, and recovered 1,000 pounds of baled marijuana that backpackers had brought across the border through a canyon.

At the Bonners Ferry station, Hurst had no drug seizures at all last year. The worst he sees is contraband alcohol and cigarettes headed to Canada. A year and a half ago, agents seized a truck with 240 cases of liquor.

"It's not easy at all," Hurst said of the vastly different setting and tempo here. "This is the first time I've been down here."

John France, sent from Casa Grande in central Arizona to Nogales for three months, said another difficulty has been the isolation he has felt in the few days he has been on the job here.

"I drive through the drive-through, I eat fast food, we work long hours and the rest of the time I've been in a motel room," he said.

Hurst, who is used to the frozen North in midwinter, spent two days with an agent who showed him the area — a small downtown area, with hilly desert to either side, separated from Mexico by a 10-foot-high steel fence. Then he was on his own.

"We just had to get out and become confident in being able to find one location and another," Hurst said.

Some temporary transfers see it as a nice break in routine, and most enjoy the work level, Colburn said. He said most agents' attitude is: "If you're going to be away from home for a long period of time, you may as well be busy."

Republicans in Congress look for ways to prevent another shutdown

WASHINGTON (AP) — Battered by the first two federal shutdowns, congressional Republicans say they want to avoid another one next weekend but concede they are divided over how to do it.

House Republican leaders decided Friday to recommend a bill that would run for 30 days and keep most agencies at no less than 75 percent of last year's budgets, the same level now in effect. But when the GOP rank-and-file considers the measure next Tuesday, it may insist that it pinch even tighter.

With temporary spending authority for scores of agencies and programs expiring next Friday night, GOP leaders hope to send President Clinton a bill next week keeping civil servants at work and the government open. But so far, they have not figured out how to simultaneously satisfy moderate Republicans in the Senate, deficit-slashing conservatives in the House and a president who stands ready to defend his own budget priorities.

Although many lawmakers seem willing to put off a confrontation with the White House for now, they are not willing to do so for very long — especially with budget talks stalemated.

"I think the administration has decided it wants war with us, a war right through the election," said Rep. Robert Walker of Pennsylvania, a member of the GOP leadership who wants to eliminate programs Republicans consider unnecessary. "Well, that war won't have one-sided casualties. ... They'll find we are not going to passively sit by and allow liberal programs to survive."

With most lawmakers due to return to the Capitol from a winter recess next week, House leaders scheduled a leadership meeting for Monday and a gathering of House GOP lawmakers for Tuesday to decide what to do. Their thinking is also likely to be shaped in part by Clinton's State of the Union address Tuesday evening, which, if confrontational, could presage a battle over spending later in the week.

Right now, the goal of the GOP leadership is to move a bill through Congress next Thursday that Clinton would sign so an immediate crisis is averted. Such a measure would once again temporarily provide funds for the nine Cabinet departments and dozens of agencies whose 1996 spending bills remain incomplete.

The bill also might end up eliminating some programs Republicans oppose — particularly Clinton initiatives such as his national service program. That could set up a veto confrontation and perhaps trigger another shutdown.

Following the expiration of that measure, House leaders envision passing subsequent bills lasting 30 days apiece at steadily declining spending levels. But conservatives prefer an even tougher, more targeted approach, financing programs Republicans favor for the rest of the year and leaving others to expire.

"I believe there will be programs that will be zeroed out," House Budget Committee Chairman John Kasich, R-Ohio, said this week. "We're going to have to work through that as a team, but we intend to do it. And we're going to take our case to the public."

But that targeted approach is receiving a cooler reception in the Senate. Many Republicans there would prefer to do less cutting and are less eager to prolong the confrontation with Clinton, which would make it harder for Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., to spend time campaigning for the GOP presidential nomination.

Big Brother watches parts of Baltimore on video cameras

BALTIMORE (AP) — In a move reminiscent of the society depicted by George Orwell in his book "1984," city officials said Friday that video cameras would be installed all over downtown to watch for criminals.

Police have set up the first two cameras near Lexington Market, a popular indoor food bazaar plagued by crime and loiterers. By next year, they hope to have every block in downtown Baltimore under surveillance.

"I know some people get nervous with Big Brother watching, but people want us to do everything to make our neighborhoods safer," Mayor Kurt Schmoke said as city officials showed off the system.

Within two weeks, 14 more cameras will be installed, covering 16 blocks around the market at a total cost of $58,000, said Frank Russo, director of public safety for Downtown Partnership of Baltimore, a group that gets private and city money to promote downtown businesses.

The stationary cameras, mounted on traffic signal posts, will be monitored 16 hours a day at a nearby police substation that resembles an oversized telephone booth.

The city hopes to enlist private security guards who already monitor cameras at nearby hotels and offices to help police watch the rest of downtown, by feeding the police videos into their offices, Russo said.

The videotapes can record for 96 hours, and then will be taped over, unless police or prosecutors suspect they show crimes being committed, Police Commissioner Thomas Frazier said.

Frazier promised that they would be used for official, crime-fighting purposes only, and never be handed over for private investigations.

"It's not an invasion of anybody's privacy. It's filming what you can already see," Frazier said.

If the test at Lexington Market is successful, about 200 more cameras and 11 more monitoring sites will be added in the downtown area at a cost of $1 million, Russo said.

"Next year, every block in downtown will be under camera surveillance," he said.

Newark, N.J. set up six cameras in the downtown in 1991 but scrapped the program a year later for lack of funds, Russo said.

Factory hiring spurt offsets holiday layoffs, holds unemployment steady

WASHINGTON (AP) — The biggest spurt in factory hiring in nearly six years helped offset holiday layoffs at department stores to hold the unemployment rate steady at 5.6 percent in December.

The Clinton administration hailed Friday's jobless report as evidence of economic strength, but some economists worried that the better-than-expected labor market would keep the Federal Reserve from lowering interest rates at the end of the month.

Wall Street shrugged off its initial concerns about future interest rates to finish the day up strongly. Stocks climbed 60.33 points to close at 5,184.68, putting the gains for the week at 123.56 points, more than erasing sharp losses in the previous week.

Private analysts were split on the issue of whether the jobs report would delay any further interest rate cuts by the Fed.

Some argued that while business payrolls rose by 151,000 in December, much of the strength came from temporary factors such as the return of striking workers at Boeing and did not reflect underlying strength.

But others forecast the Fed, which just trimmed a key rate at their last meeting in December, would remain on the sidelines at their Jan. 30-31 session because of the unemployment report.

"This weakens the case for another prompt easing," said Robert Dederick, chief economic consultant at the Northern Trust Co. in Chicago. "It is consistent with the notion that the economy is now on a sedate growth path but it is not slipping into anything more ominous."

Joseph Stiglitz, President Clinton's chief economist, said the administration was pleased that the first major economic report following a month-long delay caused by the government shutdown depicted stronger growth. He said it should put to rest worries that the economy was flirting with recession.

"These numbers show strong and broad-based job growth," he said. "The economy continues to operate at full capacity with steady growth and low inflation."

In addition to the unemployment report, the Commerce Department released revised figures for overall growth. During the July-September quarter, the gross domestic product, the total output of goods and services, was expanding at an annual rate of 3.2 percent, slightly better than the previous estimate of 3 percent. The newfound strength was led by higher export growth.

But analysts widely believe growth slowed considerably in the final three months of the year, reflecting sagging consumer demand because of high debt burdens and weak income growth.

The unemployment report noted that department stores and other retail establishments laid off 48,000 workers during December, a time when they ordinarily would be busy hiring extra help for Christmas sales.

This decline was offset by a jump of 52,000 in factory jobs, the biggest increase since February 1990. However, the gain followed three straight monthly declines and was inflated by the return of 31,000 striking Boeing workers. In addition, employment at auto plants rose by 10,000 as workers laid off because of excess inventories were brought back.

Overall, business payrolls grew by 151,000 last month following a gain of 166,000 payroll jobs in November. For all of 1995, payroll jobs climbed by 1.7 million, just about half the 3.5 million gain recorded in 1994.

But analysts said the slower job growth was to be expected in the fifth year after the end of the last recession. The administration noted that even the slower job growth meant that the economy has created 7.84 million new jobs since President Clinton took office, within striking distance of the 8 million he promised to create during his first term.

Forbes includes provocative ideas in political agenda

By John King
Associated Press

BEDFORD, N.H. — He is for term limits and a return to the gold standard, eager to overhaul Social Security, bullish about America's role in the world and ready to open some pristine land to oil drilling.

There is a lot more to Steve Forbes than the flat tax.

While often short on specifics, Republican presidential hopeful Forbes is fleshing out an agenda ripe with provocative — and sometimes controversial — ideas, from scrapping the existing tax code in favor of a pure flat tax to dramatically changing Social Security.

While most of his proposals fall within the Republican Party mainstream, some might not find favor among activists who tend to dominate the presidential nominating process, particularly social conservatives in Iowa and South Carolina, two critical early contests.

Forbes, for example, supports President Clinton's policy allowing gays to serve in the military and does not support the Republican Party platform calling for a constitutional amendment outlawing abortion. Swimming against the current GOP tide, Forbes favors liberalizing immigration laws.

As he makes the transition from businessman to politician, some ideas pushed by Forbes the candidate seem at odds, or at least strained, from positions he has taken over the years in the private sector.

A recent example: his campaign call for a balanced budget amendment to the constitution and swift deficit reduction. For years, he advocated a supply side view urging dramatically lower taxes and dismissing deficit worries.

His positions, and shifts, are sure to get more attention now that rivals in the GOP presidential race have decided the Forbes surge into second place in Iowa, New Hampshire and beyond is no fluke.

"Steve Forbes has historically taken positions at odds with most Republicans who participate in primaries and caucuses," Texas Sen. Phil Gramm said Friday. "I think it's very indicative that Steve Forbes says he's not a politician, but the minute he enters politics, he starts waffling on things he's believed all his life."

Beyond the flat tax, here are some Forbes views — now and then.

TAXES: He is a critic of the child tax credit on grounds it would "provide no lasting stimulus to the economy." The credit was pushed by President Clinton in his 1992 campaign and was part of the 1994 GOP "Contract with America." The Christian Coalition, a major force in GOP affairs, supports the $500-per-child credit. Forbes would, however, provide a generous $5,000 per-child tax exemption in his flat tax plan.

IMMIGRATION: Forbes has long advocated a liberal immigration policy, saying more people in the workforce create more competition. In a 1985 Forbes magazine column he said Mexico needed a "safety valve," making the case that Mexico's most educated and talented workers would cause social strife at home if they had no hope of entering the United States.

SOCIAL POLICY: Forbes opposes a constitutional amendment outlawing abortion, saying any changes in the law should be made "little by little" after a national debate. He won't say "yes" or "no" on whether he supports the Roe vs. Wade decision legalizing abortion. He opposes mandatory federal funding of abortions in programs like Medicaid but hasn't said he would prohibit all such funding. Forbes supports Clinton's "don't ask, don't tell" policy allowing homosexuals to serve in the military.

"Steve Forbes has managed to hide his social agenda very effectively," said Larry Disney, a conservative Iowa state legislator.

SOCIAL SECURITY: He believes the system should not be changed for anyone within a dozen years of retirement, since they have already made investment decisions. But he favors shifting younger workers to a system that puts some Social Security payroll deductions into private retirement accounts. The American Association of Retired Persons has concerns about that.

Dear Doctor ...

Dear Dr. Bombay: I did the impossible. I installed a program with a space in the directory name. Now it takes up space on the hard drive and I can't access the directory to get rid of it.

—Hair tear

Dear Hair: You have inadvertently discovered one of the greatest practical jokes that can be played on the technologically challenged: the unremovable directory. It'll never replace the whoopee cushion, but it's still fun.

In ancient days, programmers started using numbers to represent letters so machines would understand what people were trying to say. A standard code developed where, for example, a capital A would be represented by the number 65, B by 66 and so on. The code — for mathematical reasons that make your head hurt to think about — has room for 256 characters, numbered 0-255. There was room for not only the alphabet and punctuation, but special characters that tell the computer to do things like beep irritatingly.

Maybe the computer guys back then ran out of imagination, because character 255, the very last one, looks like a space, even though it's not. You've probably got one of those in your directory name.

Dr. B found this tip thumbing through a Home PC magazine: You can type that phantom space by holding down Alt and Shift and typing 255 on the numeric keypad. Let's say your directory name is MS(space)SOLUT. If you have DOS 6 or later, you can type in DELTREE/MS(Alt-Shift-255)SOLUT, then Enter to wipe out the whole thing.

(Noted computerologist Dr. Emilio Bombay offers occasionally accurate advice about most things electronic. He can be reached on Internet at: fwst(at)onramp.net, via snail-mail at Fort Worth Star-Telegram, Box 1870, Fort Worth, Texas 76101, or fax: (817) 390-7257.)

Netscape-MS

Bloomberg Business News

Is Netscape Communications Corp. the next Microsoft?

Speculators think so. Their pitch: Netscape has computer software that allows consumers to find things on the Internet and lets companies set up shop there. The Internet has horizonless potential. Therefore, Netscape will have gigantic earnings and a soaring stock price.

So far, these investors have got the part about stock price right. Netscape shares soared last year from their public offering price of 28 to 139, giving the company a market capitalization of $5.4 billion.

At that price, Netscape sells for 66 times sales -- not earnings. Microsoft Corp. sells at 6.5 times sales.

No matter, say the believers. The Internet, connecting about 35,000 computer networks, "is not a market to which traditional valuation should apply," because "long-term growth is so potentially enormous," George Novello, a money manager in charge of $500 million at Smith Barney Mutual Funds, said recently.

"In this environment, you can't be as closed-minded as you used to be," Novello said.

Investors are valuing Netscape as if it had the next MS-DOS, the foundation of the $25-billion-a-year personal computer software industry -- and the foundation of Microsoft's business.

Survey reaffirms technology's growing popularity

Almost 10 million Americans — including 1 million children — now have access to, or have used the 'Net, according to the American Internet User Survey.

Associated Press

Internet users spend an average of 6.6 hours a week on the Net, time they used to spend in front of the TV tube or talking on the phone, according to a survey released last week.

The survey reported 9.5 million Americans, or 3.6 percent of the population, now use the Internet, including 1.1 million children under 18, said Thomas E. Miller, who directed the American Internet User Survey.

Half of the people surveyed said they first tapped in last year. America Online is the most popular Internet access method, serving 30 percent of users, and a quarter of all Internet users have more than one access method.

Two-thirds of all Internet users look for information weekly and about a quarter search daily. The average session lasted 68 minutes.

The survey found the average Intenet user is 36 years old, and use of the Internet closely follows college education. The average household income of the Internet user is $62,000.

Overall, 31 percent of Internet users were under age 30; 27 percent were 30-39; 26 percent were 40-49, and 13 percent were 50 or older.

Nearly a third of the users said they spent less time watching television; a quarter said they spent less time on long-distance telephone calls; 15 percent said they spent less time watching videos and 10 percent said they spent less time listening to the radio.

Interestingly, 12 percent and 13 percent said they decreased the time they spent reading newspapers and magazines, but a similar number, 9 percent and 11 percent, said they increased the time they spent reading, primarily because they were trying to learn more about the Internet.

Debunking the image of the Web surfer, the survey found nearly two-thirds of Internet users visited fewer than 50 Web sites in any depth. The Web is a popular portion of the Internet that allows anyone with a personal computer and modem to tap into information and graphics, pictures and sound from businesses and organizations and other individuals.

Only 23 percent of Intenet users had visited more than 100 Web sites in any depth. In addition, the interviewers found that Web users often had little recall about the sites they had seen, remembering a truck, for instance, rather than a brand name.

"We feel that the image of the Internet as an advertising medium needs some adjustment," Miller said.

New digital video brings first-rate images on disk

By Stephen Manes
N.Y. Times News Service

I hold in my hands an iridescent artifact from a civilization of the future. The civilization, or so the global entertainment, electronics and computer industries would have us believe, is our planet's, just 11 months from now. The artifact, which I acquired earlier this month at the Consumer Electronics Show in Las Vegas, looks for all the world like a compact disk. But no CD or CD-ROM player can decipher the information on it.

Think of DVD as a bigger, faster CD-ROM that can deliver full-screen video that looks like TV, not expanses of fuzzy blocks.

The artifact is a new medium, a direct descendant of the compact disk that is read by similar laser technologies. It goes by the name of DVD, which stood for "digital video disk" until the medium's diverse possibilities became obvious. Although the V briefly came to stand for "versatile," the industry's official line now is that the initials stand for nothing particular at all.

Just as the compact disk changed the face of the music business, DVD is meant to transform the

Apple's woes may turn out to be good news for risk takers

NEW YORK — It is not an investment strategy for the weak of heart, but buying Apple Computer

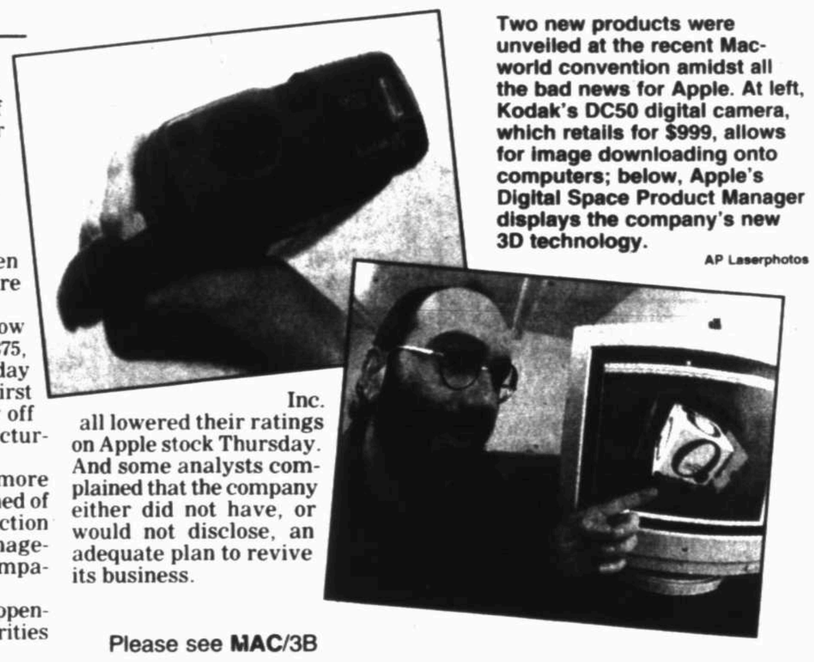
Inc. at its lows has historically been one way to make nice returns. So, are there any buyers?

Apple's shares fell to a 52-week low Thursday, dropping $2.0625, to $31.9375, after the company reported Wednesday that it had a loss of $69 million in its first fiscal quarter and that it would lay off 1,300 employees as part of a restructuring plan.

But Thursday's drop reflected more than the loss, which Apple had warned of a week earlier, but also dissatisfaction with the sketchy plans Apple management articulated for turning the company around.

Analysts at Paine Webber Inc., Oppenheimer & Co. and J.P. Morgan Securities Inc. all lowered their ratings on Apple stock Thursday. And some analysts complained that the company either did not have, or would not disclose, an adequate plan to revive its business.



Two new products were unveiled at the recent Macworld convention amidst all the bad news for Apple. At left, Kodak's DC50 digital camera, which retails for $999, allows for image downloading onto computers; below, Apple's Digital Space Product Manager displays the company's new 3D technology.

New integrated program made just for Windows '95

By L.R. Shannon
N.Y. Times News Service

For the most part, Windows 95 seems to run Windows 3.1 applications just fine. But the real test of an operating system is how well it runs applications written especially for it.

Microsoft Works 4.0 for Windows 95 is an integrated program. Let me confess that I have a weakness for integrated programs, ones that house several applications under one roof. Their individual modules are not as powerful as leading stand-alone programs, but they are often brawnier than most of us need.

The complexities of Microsoft Word are a bit much for writing ordinary business letters or notes to the teacher, and Excel is overkill for a simple expense account.

Another confession: I have not used any version of Microsoft Works for a long time. My default integrated program is Clarisworks, which is just out in a Win95 version; more about that another time.

■ Software

Microsoft Works includes word-processing, database, spreadsheet and communications tools; the package says it also includes drawing tools, which it does, but not as a separate module. The CD-ROM also contains Bookshelf 95, a wonderful reference program. More than 30 Taskwizards, cunning little helpers, help you carry out a job.

Let's write a letter with a Taskwizard looking over our shoulders. In the task launcher, the initial screen offers 10 opportunities. Under one, common tasks, are address book, letter, letterhead, newsletter, resume and "start from scratch."

I picked letter, and was given the option to choose from a list of prewritten letters or to create one of my own. I moved a couple of steps ahead, selected "show me a list of documents," but no list appeared. I went a step back, selected "yes, run the Taskwizard" and was given three choices of letter: professional, simple and formal.

Being a simple soul, I selected that one, was given the opportunity to modify five items likes type style, and then clicked "create document." There was a brief pause, then the window went from 0 percent to 100 percent in a flash, followed by a long pause.

An already-written letter appeared, with "Company Name" for the company's name, fake telephone numbers and other elements to be changed for individual circumstances. I changed the company name to Beleaguered (I always have to look up the spelling) Computing, but did not bother with the rest. There were more elements of Works 4.0 to explore.

I looked in the file and tools menus for a way to start the spreadsheet and, failing, resorted to asking for help. Following instructions, I clicked "new" in the file menu and, when the task launcher appeared, selected Works Tools from it, rather than from the tools menu.

A handsome spreadsheet appeared, with eight menus across the top, and a line of 18 icons, from Task Launcher to Address Book, under them. Back to the task launcher, then database, which offers a demonstration or step by step instructions.

Next: communications. The 486/DX2/66 on which I was working belongs to a rarer and rarer breed, a computer that is connected neither to a network nor, via modem, with the rest of video industry. Even in its simplest form, a single disk can hold a 135-minute feature film complete with three separate language tracks of surround-sound audio and four sets of subtitles. Picture quality can visibly surpass what videocassettes deliver. DVD players will also read current audio compact disks. Players that connect to TV sets and hundreds of movies on disk are expected to appear in time for Christmas. Eventually, portable players should be no bigger than paperback books.

DVD: New technology designed to transform video industry

What has this consumer device to do with the personal computer? Why did an impatient computer industry step in to compel a reconciliation between two warring factions wedded to incompatible digital disk formats that threatened a replay of the Beta-VHS wars? Because the information on the DVD, as on the CD, is stored as digital 1s and 0s. But unlike the CD-ROM, which tries to extract a silk purse's worth of video, sound, animation and data from a medium originally intended to fill our ears with music, the DVD was designed from the outset to deliver the full panoply of material encompassed in the term "multimedia."

You can think of DVD simply as a bigger, faster CD-ROM that can deliver full-screen video that looks like TV, not expanses of fuzzy blocks. In its basic form a DVD-ROM, as the first computer incarnation will be known, can hold 4.7 gigabytes of information on a single side, about seven times the capacity of current CD-ROMs. Double-layered DVDs will hold 8.5 billion bytes, and double-sided disks will double those numbers. Data can flow steadily from the disks at a rate of 1.35 megabytes per second, more than twice as fast as this year's so-called 4X CD-ROM players. Recordable, and later re-recordable, DVD disks are expected to appear a year or two later.

DVD-ROM drives for computers will probably not be able to decode standard DVD movies without help from a technique called MPEG-2 decoding, which requires that special circuitry be built into video cards and computers. Just as CD-ROM add-on kits typically include sound cards, DVD-ROM drives may come bundled with MPEG-2 decoders, and will be able to play current disks that use the much less impressive MPEG-1 encoding, making today's higher speed CD-ROM drives and MPEG-1 hardware something of a dead end. "We think it's going to turn out that MPEG-1 is really a transition phase and that MPEG-2 is what people are really looking for," said Ken Wirt, vice president of marketing for Diamond Multimedia Systems Inc.

The personal computer business expects big things from DVD. Brian Dalgetty, program director of product marketing for the IBM Aptiva line, expects the product "to have a significant impact on the industry," adding, "It's going to miss having a splash in 1996, but for 1997 I think it's almost as critical as when CD-ROM's were introduced."

Frank LoVerme, vice president for advanced media sales at WEA Media Services, predicted, "By the end of next year, every computer is going to have a DVD drive."

Similar prophecies were made back in 1986 for the CD-ROM, which in reality took the better part of a decade to become successful. Richard Harada, a marketing manager at the Panasonic Communications and Systems Co. who lived through that history, suggested DVD would reach computers far faster. Prices are likely to drop quickly, he said, because of economies of scale brought about by greater similarities in the consumer and computer products, a far larger installed base of computers and more manufacturers producing equipment. And in the era of CD-ROM, consumers are no longer totally ignorant about the very concept of multimedia and are beginning to understand the limitations that DVD is likely to transcend.

'It's on our radar screen and we're testing it right now. When there's a critical mass of players, we'll be there.'
— a spokesman for IBM's Multimedia Studio, on the advent of DVD technology

Software developers are impressed but wary. "It's on our radar screen and we're testing it right now," said a spokesman for IBM's Multimedia Studio, which produces consumer-oriented software. "When there's a critical mass of players, we'll be there."

"It's very exciting stuff," said Emiel Petrone, senior vice president of Philips Media. "To have that kind of capacity to work with is a developer's dream."

Catches remain. Standards for the way data is laid out on a disk are still unfinished. Software giving access to disks and drives is not yet available, nor are tools that help software developers create their wares, nor are many of the prototype drives themselves. Conflicting audio specifications for movies released in various parts of the world may prevent the DVD disk from becoming a single global standard like the CD. Although MPEG-2 decoding is likely to improve over time, so that a 1997 disk may look better on a 2001 machine, some experts fear that basic video quality may sometimes be compromised to cram longer movies or more information onto each disk. And creativity for producing better titles is always in short supply.

"I do not see any roadblocks in the success of DVD-ROM," said Carl Stork, director of Windows hardware programs at the Microsoft Corp. "I think it's a no-brainer." But he also included the caveat so necessary in the overoptimistic world of computers: "It's just a question of when."

the world.

Works knew that there was no modem, which it called a "valid telephony device," and offered to enlist a wizard to set one up. No. A form then offered to connect me with another computer, even though the program knew I did not have a modem. I canceled, to explore the communications program further.

Besides save, copy, paste and other icons, there were ones for altering communications, terminal, phone and transfer settings.

Extensive help is available. If you select help for communications, there are subheadings for basics, starting a document, setting up modems, establishing connections, preparing to exchange information, sending, receiving and saving information, scripts and ending your work. Setting up modems leads to "to install a new modem" and "to change the COM port."

The installing instructions consist of seven apparently simple steps, "apparently" because I did not install a new modem.

So much help may make you suspicious that Works is not all that easy to use. That may be. But it must be remembered that thick manuals, which we usually did not read and soon could not even find, are going out of style. On-screen help is always available.

The Microsoft Works for Windows 95-Bookshelf 95 CD-ROM is widely available for $80 or less. Works alone is around $55.

Have some fun by giving away your old system

ATLANTA — I once had a two-ton love who was happiest when playing in the mud.

She was an International Harvester Scout four-wheel drive. I drove her for 11 years and she never let me down. But as the years and the miles mounted, I began to spend more on upkeep and insurance than the Scout was worth.

I couldn't sell her. I can't even explain why not, other than saying it would have been like selling 11 years of memories. So I gave the Scout away. I was able to decide where she'd end up that way. Now she sits pampered and polished on a farm in Arkansas — she's the best and newest vehicle those folks own. She's still playing in the mud, still carrying the groceries. And even today that Scout gives me joy.

It can be the same with a computer. Maybe you got a fancy new machine as a holiday gift and — despite your plans to use the older PC to write letters — it sits unused. You thought about selling it, but that's a lot of trouble for very little money. So it just sits there with the layer of dust on its monitor getting thicker all the time.

Giving that old computer away can be enormous fun. First of all, it's the closest that most of us can come to feeling rich. You get the fun of finding someone who needs a computer and then you have the joy of putting that machine in their hands and watching their eyes light up. Believe me, you'll feel great.

You can even be practical if that suits you. If you give the computer to an organization that qualifies as a tax- exempt charity, you may be able to deduct the fair market value of the machine from your taxes next year. Just ask the organization if a gift qualifies as a tax deduction.

Many organizations looking

There are plenty of fine organizations that would be delighted to have your computer: I get calls all the time from schools, churches and charities that are looking for a machine. And most of them aren't choosy. An old 80286 or 80386 machine can still write a lot of letters and figure a lot of budgets, and can even be used to connect folks to the Internet.

You'll be helping someone out and getting a tax credit, too.

Or, and this is even more fun, you can be wildly impractical and forget about the tax deduction. Let me suggest a way to get the most joy from that old computer.

Conduct your own give-a-computer-away contest.

Write a classified newspaper ad, or post a note on a computer bulletin board, offering to give the computer away. As the boss of this contest, you get to set the rules. You could ask folks to write an essay explaining why they want your computer and what they'd do with it if they win. And you'll be the judge.

You don't have to leave a phone number and a name. In fact, I wouldn't do that at all unless you enjoy answering the phone a lot at weird hours. If you use a classified ad, your responses can go into a special box and then be fowarded to you.

If you use a computer bulletin board, the responses can go there. That way people don't have to know your name or address. You can just sit back and read the responses and decide the winner in your own sweet time.

And it will be sweet, I guarantee you that. I'll bet you'll enjoy the whole process even more than playing a computer game.

Have a question?

Call 404-222-8268 and leave a brief message, your name and a daytime phone number. Bill Husted can't personally answer individual questions but will address as many as possible in the newspaper. You can send e-mail to Bill at techbud (AT) ajc.com.

Keyboards catch up to computer revolution

By Dawn Yoshitake
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Computers are getting faster, monitors clearer and larger, but keyboards have been total laggards in the technology revolution — until now.

Keyboard manufacturers are adding features such as built-in speakers, microphones and video cameras to cash in on the booming multimedia computer market with its sound and video capabilities.

"In the next 18 to 24 months, consumers will see a different look in keyboards, from scanners to sound controls to video cameras," said Jim Hamilton, vice president and general merchandise manager for Texas-based retailing giant Computer City Inc.

Sitting at a multimedia keyboard is more than just a typing experience. Hit a switch and sound wafts from the built-in speakers and wraps around the user's body, tap a mute button and, poof, the sound is on hold.

"This is an all-in-one keyboard and allows people to get rid of the speakers and cables that clutter their desk," said Don Johns, vice president of engineering at NMB Technologies Inc., a keyboard manufacturer.

But some customers may be hesitant to buy the new generation of keyboards.

Built-in speakers create a wider board that takes up more desk space and doesn't allow flexibility to move the sound around, analysts said.

"The problem with multimedia keyboards is the sound doesn't have a direct line to your ears, especially if your keyboard rests on a pullout drawer. Then the speakers are around your waistline," said William Zinsmeister, a PC hardware analyst with International Data Corp., a Massachusetts-based computer research firm.

Nonetheless, NMB and other manufacturers are betting that consumers will buy. NMB began marketing its Right Touch ConcertMaster to retailers in November. Lite-On Peripherals Inc. in Milpitas started selling its SK-5002W multimedia keyboard a year ago.

SC&T International Inc., based in Phoenix, began selling its Platinum Sound MAK-100 and MSK-200 in the spring. And Key Tronic Corp. of Spokane, Wash., plans to launch its multimedia keyboard early this year.

"Keyboards are slowly becoming one of the most important parts of the peripheral system," said Maceo Trotter Jr., a Lite-On spokesman. "There is talk of putting the (central processing unit) and monitor into the keyboard. That's definitely a futuristic view, but slowly, gradually, these elements will work their way into it."

But the multimedia keyboards of today are largely rectangular boards with built-in speakers and microphones with special keys to quickly access the Windows 95 operating system.

SC&T's high-end MSK-200 features a built-in 13-watt stereo amplifier and left and right speaker balance controls.

NMB's ConcertMaster touts palm-sized speakers embedded in the top of the keyboard with surround-sound capability at a flick of a switch. Volume can be amped up with a turn of a dial and a mute button tapped to kill the sound when the telephone rings or quiet is needed.

Another switch activates a built-in microphone for recording or video conferencing. And a set of jacks are embedded along the side for headphones, additional microphones and a sub-woofer.

Lite-On features built-in speakers that peak at 30 watts, a built-in microphone and jacks for headphones and additional microphones. U.S. Logic also features built-in speakers and a microphone, but plans are in the works to add a video camera during the second half of 1996.

"If you're looking for bells and whistles and a higher price, then go with ConcertMaster. But if you want better speakers with higher wattage and durability vs. a toy, then you'll want us," said Trotter of Lite-On.

ConcertMaster sells for about $130, while Lite-On tags its product at about $60. Meanwhile, SC&T's multimedia keyboards sell for approximately $80 and $130 in retail stores.

Standard keyboards typically sell for $20 and the new Windows 95 keyboards run about $25. Stand-alone speakers, meanwhile, range from $10 to $600 and microphones from $10 to $40.

Multimedia keyboards have sold well in retail stores, but helping to drive that demand are consumers interested in upgrading their boards to get the Windows 95 keys, Hamilton said. Customers are willing to shell out a few more bucks to get multimedia keyboards with Windows 95 keys, he said, since they are already shopping for a new keyboard.

Multimedia keyboards may total 50 percent of Computer City's keyboard sales in the next two years, Hamilton says.

Lite-On is shipping 1,500 to 2,000 multimedia keyboards a month and NMB expects to ship 3,000 to 5,000 a month in its first year.

Multimedia keyboards go a step beyond the ergonomically designed keyboards that hit the market a couple of years ago. Ergonomically designed keyboards take the existing function of the keyboard and reconfigure its shape to reduce stress and injury to users' wrists.

MAC: Decline in Apple's share price could renew prospects for a takeover

(From 1B)

The decline in Apple's share price could renew the company's prospects as a takeover candidate. A number of companies, including IBM, AT&T, Oracle and Motorola, have been floated as possible acquirers, and might find Apple more attractive now that the company is valued at less than $4 billion.

Some analysts said it was the possibility of a takeover that was keeping the stock from falling even further.

"Among technology investors there are two articles of faith right now," said Roger McNamee, a principal in Integral Capital Partners, a fund based in Menlo Park, Calif., that focuses on technology investments.

"The first one is the semiconductor industry is dead, and the second one is that Apple is toast. Any consensus that extreme is likely to be wrong." He said buying Apple was a good contrarian move right now.

"Apple still has a terrific product franchise," McNamee said. "You have a company that has the No. 2 market share in personal computers, $11 billion in sales and 14 million satisfied customers."

While it has a low market share overall compared to Microsoft Windows, it has a high market share in several interesting pieces of the market, including education and the Internet.

"Apple's share of Internet servers has gone from zero to 25 percent in a couple of quarters, which doesn't look like a dying business to me."

While Apple's conference call with securities analysts Wednesday left most of them unsatisfied, Kimball Brown, an analyst with the market research firm Dataquest, said he found more cause for hope in a subsequent one-on-one conversation with Apple president and chief executive Michael H. Spindler.

He said Spindler told him that Apple's outlook could change radically in the second half of the year with the release of the common hardware reference platform, or CHRP.

This is a computer design agreed to by Apple, IBM and Motorola that could use not only the Macintosh operating system, but also the Unix, OS/2 and Windows NT operating systems. Other companies could manufacture the CHRP platform as well.

In the best-case scenario, Brown said, the common hardware platform would expand the use of the Macintosh operating system and end the talk of the Mac becoming obsolete. This strategy is not without risk, however, because Apple's share of the Mac market would drop even as the Mac's share of the PC market would rise, but it would give the Mac greater critical mass.

"Apple's still got great industrial design, great customer loyalty," Brown said, which should help it compete with clones.

Other analysts said the CHRP platform was a hopeful sign, but one that was still too far away to justify owning Apple shares today.

The common platform "clearly helps and will play an important part in enhancing their licensing strategy; it will help stimulate that move," said Todd Bakar, an analyst with Hambrecht & Quist.

"It's clear that one of the important milestones for Apple in the next year is getting that out there and far more aggressively driving their licensing platform."

"Unfortunately," he added, "Apple's playing against the clock as well as the other team, so the best offense in the world won't help if it comes too late."

Regarding Apple shares, Bakar said he saw no need to hurry. "The value investors who have historically bought the stock in the low 30s are probably doing so today," he said. "We think the challenges now are great, and it's going to take time for a turnaround. We're not in a rush to jump into the stock."

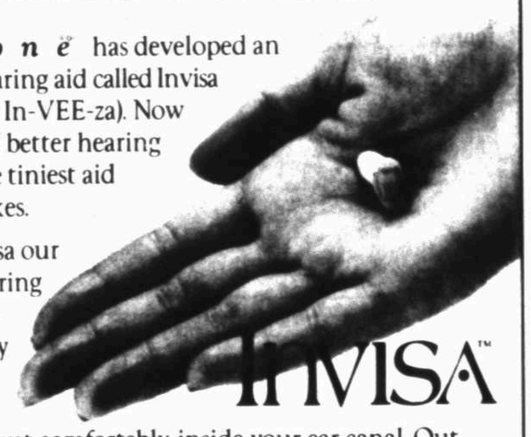
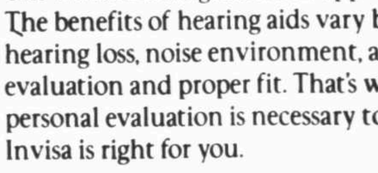
MEET THE HEARING AID THAT HIDES INSIDE.
Beltone has developed an exciting hearing aid called Invisa (pronounced In-VEE-za). Now all the joy of better hearing comes in the tiniest aid Beltone makes.



We call Invisa our "hidden hearing aid" because its incredibly small size allows it to hide deeply, yet comfortably, inside your ear canal. Out of sight and out of mind.
It's also available with a selection of faceplate colors designed to match the shadow of your ear canal. This natural camouflage makes it virtually impossible for anyone to see Invisa once it's in place.
Invisa also gives you the luxury of totally hands-free operation. Your Beltone specialist will pre-select a volume setting that's right for you, so you'll never have to fuss with a volume control.


Invisa is as small around as a soft contact lens
The Invisa hearing aid is not appropriate for everyone. The benefits of hearing aids vary by type and degree of hearing loss, noise environment, accuracy of hearing evaluation and proper fit. That's why we feel that a personal evaluation is necessary to determine if the Invisa is right for you.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SATURDAY, JANUARY 20, 1996

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will finally have the freedom to realize your dreams. Keep your hopes high. Every ending means a new beginning. Freeing yourself of an emotional burden this coming spring will revitalize your love life. Take an understated approach in business. Never promise more to a client than you can deliver. Long-distance travel will bring a new contract and improved financial security. Settle in at home for the Christmas holidays.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: actress Shelley Fabares, actress Patricia Neal, director Federico Fellini, former astronaut Buzz Aldrin.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Devote more time to your personal relationships. A tender romantic interlude could be the highlight of your weekend. Make an overdue change in your living arrangements.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your finances show improvement thanks to a determined effort to hold down spending. Do not shortchange your loved ones. A close relative or neighbor reveals a secret.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Socializing sounds great today! Just catch up on your household chores before heading out. Organize your closets or file drawers. Family members may be willing to help out.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Parents could receive a pleasant surprise. Stick to your position if certain you are right about a business decision. You can find great happiness if you are willing to give as much as you get.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A weekend project has romantic overtones. Avoid making a commitment unless your heart is really in it. Remain neutral in a family argument. A small gathering may be more fun than a larger one.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You will glow with high spirits and good will today. Share your joy with those who love you. Students need to catch up on their studies before joining friends for fun. Exercise self-discipline!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A friend or partner offers excellent advice regarding a financial decision. You may be falling in love with someone who has special gifts. Understand what lies ahead before saying "yes."

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It is time to think about your own future, not your friends'. Family life will be especially rewarding if you promote activities loved ones of all ages can enjoy. Do not blame your mistakes on others.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Anything could happen where romance is concerned. You may be tempted to go off on a tangent. Show a willingness to compromise for the sake of peace. A family member is well-intentioned but disorganized.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Casual entertainment holds the greatest appeal this weekend. Children will keep you on your toes. Seize a chance to clear up a misunderstanding. Set the record straight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Greater financial security will give you the freedom you seek. Do not get discouraged; there is a light at the end of the tunnel! Lend a hand to an older person who needs help.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Being a hermit will not bring happiness. Widen your circle of friends. A no-nonsense approach works wonders with an impractical neighbor. Offer a simple choice.

Fonda donates buffalo coat that was good luck charm to Braves

ATLANTA — Jane Fonda's buffalo coat — a good-luck charm for the Atlanta Braves during the World Series — should bring good fortune to a charity.

Jane Fonda donates coat to auction to benefit adolescent pregnancy prevention.

Fonda donated the coat, covered with images of buffalo, for a May 10 auction to benefit the Georgia Campaign for Adolescent Pregnancy Prevention.

"Because I love the coat so much, I thought it would show how much I care about adolescent pregnancy prevention," the actress said. As for its worth, "How can you put a price tag on my favorite good luck charm?"

The coat became famous when Ms. Fonda, the wife of Braves owner and cable executive Ted Turner, wore it to the playoffs and World Series.

The auction also will include a week's vacation at the Turner ranch in Montana, where the couple raise buffalo.

LOS ANGELES — Rosie O'Donnell, the chubby standup comedian whose movies include "A League of Their Own," and "The Flintstones," loves to see how kids react to her roles.

Rosie O'Donnell loves to see how children react to her roles.

She gets offers for serious parts too, but O'Donnell told "Entertainment Tonight" for broadcast next week that "there's nothing better to me than having a 9-year-old say 'Betty Rubble' and get all excited."

"Harriet the Spy," a Paramount movie taken from Louise Fitzhugh's children's book, tells the story of a young girl who keeps scathing notes about her friends and ultimately gets caught. In the film due out later this year, O'Donnell plays Harriet's nanny and mentor, Olle Golly.

NEW YORK — Dennis Franz says the producers and writers of "NYPD Blue" encourage the actors to speak up, and because of his suggestions, his character, Andy Sipowicz, no longer teeters on the brink.

"In the first episode, his life had hit bottom and he was living with some sort of death wish," the 51-year-old actor says in Sunday's Parade magazine, "and ever since he's been battling.

"I think he's a good man inside, but his drinking had gotten out of control. Now he stands tall again.

"But I never want him to become too comfortable. Andy is most interesting when he's on the edge."

Franz, who was married on April Fool's Day to longtime girlfriend Joanie Zeck, also made a movie recently with Dustin Hoffman — "American Buffalo," based on the hit play by David Mamet.

PATERSON, N.J. — Penny Marshall was in a fog.

So the television star-turned-director had to cut short filming of her latest movie, "The Preacher's Wife," a remake of a 1947 film starring Denzel Washington, Whitney Houston, Gregory Hines and Courtney Vance.

But stopping the action due to the poor visibility and damp weather Thursday didn't seem to dampen the spirits of people who gathered around City Hall, snapping Marshall's picture at every opportunity.

Marshall hopes to resume filming Monday and Tuesday, once the weather clears.

SAN RAFAEL, Calif. — His high school sweetheart, his acupuncturist, his personal trainer — all have claims on Jerry Garcia's estate.

Thursday was the deadline to file for some of the money Jerry left behind.

No one's saying how much his estate is worth, but the claims total $38 million.

Garcia, lead guitarist of the Grateful Dead, died Aug. 9 at 53 while at a drug treatment center. He left a third of his estate to his widow, Deborah Koons Garcia. The rest is supposed to go to four daughters, his brother, his former wife and the daughter of author Ken Kesey.

The largest claims, $15.6 million and $12 million, were from two art agents, one of whom said he was Garcia's personal manager.

RELIGION IN BRIEF

Presentation set

Gian-Carlo Menotti's "Amahl and the Night Visitors" will be presented by the Music Ministry of St. Luke's United Methodist Church at 8 p.m. Jan. 27, at the fellowship hall, 3011 W. Kansas Ave.

Cast members will be Tyler Fields, Amahl; Vivian Moss, Mother; Bruce Peeler, Kaspar; Ron Douglas, Melchior; Don McCartney, Balthazar; and Ryan Douglas, Page. Fields is a fifth-grader at Fannin Elementary.

Tickets, $8 for adults and $4 for children, may be purchased from the church office or at the door.

Adult class offered

Midland Lutheran Church, 2705 W. Michigan Ave., will offer a new adult education class beginning Sunday entitled "The Use of the Means of Grace: A Statement on the Practice of Word Sacrament."

Glenn Kramer will teach the class, which will run for six to eight weeks during the education hour, which begins at 9:15 a.m.

Topics of interest such as the use of Scripture to worship, baptismal practices, frequency of communion, age to admit children to communion and elements of communion will be included in this course.

For more information about this or other programs of Midland Lutheran, call the Kramer, 694-1373.

Special service set

"Bread of Life: Spirit of Justice" is the theme of United Methodist Women Sunday at Hollowell United Methodist Church, 400 S. Marshall St.

Whitiker

The 11 a.m. worship Sunday will have as its guest speaker Frizella C. Whitiker of Odessa. A covered dish lunch will follow.

Ms. Whitiker is a retired educator with the Ector County Independent School District. She is the daughter of a Methodist preacher. She received her bachelor's and master's degrees in English from Huston-Tillitson College in Austin and Texas Southern University.

The public is invited to this special service, which is an annual event observed throughout all area United Methodist Churches within the bounds of the Northwest Texas Conference.

For more information, call Margie Titus, 684-8974, or the Rev. Hadley R. Edwards, pastor of the church, 682-1574 or 682-3240.

Haley misses

IRVING — One day after returning to practice, Dallas Cowboys defensive end Charles Haley missed Friday's workout.

The problem wasn't his back, which caused him to miss the last six weeks while recovering from surgery. It was the flu, which forced him to miss Friday's and Wednesday's drills.

"He had a little relapse," coach Barry Switzer said.

Dallas is hoping to have Haley healthy for the Super Bowl in part because he was so effective the last time the Cowboys played Pittsburgh. Haley had four sacks in a 26-9 victory over the Steelers in last year's season opener.

Haley almost played during last Sunday's 38-27 NFC championship win over the Green Bay Packers but sat out because he wasn't certain his back was 100 percent healed. Earlier that week, he had been considered a 50-50 chance to play.

Pope sinks Bulldog ship

■ Midland High's boys fall into a three-way tie for third after losing to San Angelo by 31 points.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

San Angelo's Kris Pope wasn't around to help finish off the Midland High Bulldogs at Chaparral Center Friday night, but he threw out enough torpedoes to start the ship sinking.

Pope scored a game-high 24 points as the Bobcats handed the Bulldogs 95-64 whipping in a key District 4-5A basketball game.

Pope injured an ankle with 2:55 left in the third quarter and didn't play again. But by that time San Angelo held a 30-point lead, 64-34, and the script was written.

"The ankle isn't all that bad," Pope said, "and you can bet I didn't want to come out of the game. I was just throwing some of those shots up there and they just, somehow, kind of went in. Things were rolling my way."

Several of Pope's baskets came on layups off the fast break against a Bulldog defense that just didn't exist. Still, some of those shots were sent with prayers — and most of them were answered — rolling along the rim, and then finding a two-point home. Pope hit on 10 of his 14 shots from the field.

But Pope's performance was just the tip of this iceberg that took a bite out of the Bulldogs. Bobby Townsend scored 20 points while Josh Lowe and Blake Behrens each had 16 in a game that was a rout from early on.

The Bobcats led by as many as 16 points in the first quarter and never trailed after MHS' James Whitfield nailed a three-point shot in the first minute of play. Things would only get worse.

"Momentum and confidence is a great combination," said San Angelo coach Alan Gillispie. "We got momentum early and that gave us confidence. The kids just played great and we needed this win. It keeps us in the race since a lot of teams now have three losses like us.

"I was worried about playing here (Chaparral Center), but it didn't seem to bother us."

The Bobcats hit an amazing 39 of 65 shots (60 percent) from the field. MHS countered with a 41 percent shooting eye. The Bulldogs just were never really in this one.

Josh Lane led MHS with 18 points while Terry Johnson countered with 14 points and Whitfield 10. Johnson hit four treys in the game and now has nine in his last two outings. It just wasn't enough when the defense seemed to disappear.

"I wish we could play just one game where something doesn't go wrong," said MHS coach Jack Stephenson, who saw his team escape Abilene High earlier in the week, 82-81, after a bus broke down on the way to Abilene. "We just weren't focused out there. I can tell you that this one wasn't much fun. This was a lot like Lee's loss to San Angelo where San Angelo scores 40-something

Season sees Cowboys go from NFL joke to Super Bowl favorite

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — With all the distractions and adversity, it's a wonder the Dallas Cowboys ever made it to the Super Bowl.

Quarterback Troy Aikman put it this way: "This 1995 team overcame more than any Super Bowl team I've been on."

Did it ever, starting with a bad break and bad manners in the opener against the New York Giants.

Week 1

Cornerback Kevin Smith, who had been given a $11 million deal just the day before, was lost for the season with an achille's tendon tear in the second quarter of the 35-0 rout as Emmitt Smith rushed for 163 yards and four touchdowns.

Dallas owner Jerry Jones, who had already irritated the NFL with a Pepsi Cola deal earlier in the summer that shot a hole in Coca Cola's exclusive league franchise, slapped commissioner Paul Taliabue and the Giants ownership in the face at halftime.

While the Giants were trying to retire Phil Simms' number, Jones paraded Nike chief Phil Knight and tennis star Monica Seles around the stadium in full view of the fans and the national television cameras.

The NFL later sued Jones over the Nike deal, saying it infringed on property rights agreements.

Week 2

Jones announced he had signed Deion Sanders to a $35 million contract including a $13 million bonus, beating out the San Francisco 49ers, whose club president, Carmen Policy, called the offer "irresponsible."

On the field, the Cowboys beat Denver 31-21.

Week 3

Deion arrives at Valley Ranch, buys a new home and meets his new teammates, who claim they are not bothered by his outlandish salary.

On the field, the Cowboys beat Minnesota 23-17 in overtime

Gretzky hogs All-Star news

By Howard Ulman

BOSTON — Hockey's top players support Wayne Gretzky's decision to tell the Los Angeles Kings he'd leave if they don't obtain better players. His timing, however, could be better.

FOX, 7 p.m.

At a time when the NHL, coming back from last season's lockout, wants to show its best side, the focus of this year's All-Star game is on Gretzky's demand.

"That's out of my power," he said Friday, the day before he'll skate for the Western Conference all-stars. "This has been going on for 10 days."

"I think he would probably admit that maybe his timing was a little wrong," said Detroit defenseman Paul Coffey, who played with Gretzky on three championship teams in Edmonton.

The lockout forced cancellation of last season's All-Star game and cost fans in San Jose a chance to see the league's top performers. The NHL has worked

Midland teenager leads Mega Bucks bull riding

By Stewart Doreen

ODESSA — It would be safe to say that Midland's Toby Golden is not your average 16-year-old.

While others kids his age are getting their driver's license or trying to make a varsity team, Golden is riding bulls and leading the first 50 riders after the first day of the Mega Bucks Thunder National Bullriding Championships held at the Ector County Colesium Friday.

Golden, who rode in the night's second group, got on his bull needing to break 79 by Canada's Chad Pighin. Golden's end result was better as he rode the beast named Orange Crush to a mark of 84.

"It was really nice," said Golden. "I thought he was going to make three jumps and turn but he

Courier wins 4 1/2 hour duel against Australian

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

MELBOURNE, Australia — For sheer drama, Jim Courier may never play a match that will top the one a year ago at the Australian Open when Pete Sampras wept uncontrollably on court for his cancer-stricken coach and still won.

For utter tension, Courier may never experience a match more riveting than his 4-hour, 31-minute victory, from Friday night to Saturday morning, over Australian Todd Woodbridge and a crowd that treated the former two-time champion like an evil invader.

Courier's final forehand into the corner, a shot the exhausted Woodbridge couldn't return, came at 1:13 a.m and closed out a 6-3, 6-7 (7-2), 7-6 (7-3), 3-6, 8-6 win that kept 15,000 fans screaming to the end.

"It was a good, tough-fought match, and those are fun to win," Courier said. "The crowd was on me tonight. They were telling me

New Crane football coach ready to put up clippings, get to work

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

New beginnings and great expectations are synonymous when head coaches are hired, especially in West Texas.

But don't expect Monahans native Alan Cherry to run from the fire as he attempts to rebuild yet another program as the head football coach at Crane High School.

"It will be a nice challenge to go back to West Texas and to make a difference in the kids' life at Crane," said Cherry, who has a career 51-18 record and was selected to replace Johnny Burleson as the Golden Cranes head coach Tuesday. "Our goal will be to have high expectations and we're going to get the standards needed to reach that goal."

Achieving that type of success is nothing new. In his three years as the head coach of Hamlin, Cherry compiled a record of 31-8 and reached the playoffs in each of those years. There was also prosperity in the "second season." The Pied Pipers reached the 2A state semifinals in 1994 and the regional semifinals in 1995. The 1995 run included an area win over the Stanton Buffaloes.

"I think our chances for success have to improve," said Crane ISD superintendent Roger Hailey. "We are

'Dr. Dirt' leads Bob Hope Classic

PALM DESERT, Calif. (AP) — Brad Bryant, "Dr. Dirt" to his pals on the PGA Tour, cranked out his second consecutive 7-under-par 65 Friday to take a one-shot lead after three rounds of the Bob Hope Chrysler Classic.

Bryant was at 15-under, one ahead of Nolan Henke, who shot a 64 on the third day of the five-day, 90-hole tournament.

Five players, including second-round leader Paul Goydos and opening-day co-leader Mark Brooks, were another stroke behind at 13-under.

An 18-year tour veteran who ended a 17-year run without a win by taking the rain-shortened Walt Disney World Classic in 1995, Bryant was tagged "Dr. Dirt" by fellow PGA tourist Gary McCord.

Unlike some of the more corporate-looking players on the tour, Bryant, who is swarthy, has a scraggly moustache and likes to head to the wild to fish and hunt, isn't exactly a clothes horse. His often-disheveled appearance might suggest that he naps in his outfits.

"If this was a beauty contest, I probably wouldn't be here," Bryant joked.

There was nothing ugly about his round Friday, as he birdied eight holes at Indian Ridge Country Club, one of four courses used for the Hope.

"I'm maybe the most improved wedge player in the world. I'm 50-50 getting them close. And I hit so many good putts, it wasn't like me playing," said the 41-year-old Bryant, who earned a career-best $723,834 on tour last year.

His birdies included a 10-foot putt on his first hole of the day, No. 10 at Indian Ridge, and 15-footers on No. 12 and No. 14. A bad pitch on the par-4, 452-yard No. 16 cost him his only bogey of the round.

"I've done well in pro-ams. I won the Disney and finished sixth in Las Vegas," Bryant said, then added with a grin, "I get to keep my own card in those deals, I guess, you know."

■ Golf Roundup

In the $1.3 million Hope, all the golfers play one day at each of the four courses the first four days, each time with amateurs, then the field is cut, with pros only in Sunday's final round at Indian Ridge.

Scores are always low in the Hope; last year's winner, Kenny Perry, finished at 25-under.

"You know going in you have to make an awful lot of birdies," Bryant said. "These courses are shorter, and they're in such good shape. You have to be aggressive and the emphasis is on making birdies."

Henke began the day five shots off the pace set by Goydos, who started the third round at 11-under. Henke played at Indian Wells Country Club, as did Goydos, who shot a 70 and lost ground.

Brooks also played at Indian Wells, shooting a 69 to stay in contention. Also in the group at 13-under were Fulton Allem, with a 67; Donnie Hammond, with a 67; and Mark Wiebe, with a 65.

Senior Tournament of Champions

DORADO, Puerto Rico — Defending champion Jim Colbert stood at the 11th tee with a one-stroke lead when the rain came, showering him with thoughts of familiar battles past.

Colbert, the 1995 Senior PGA Player of the Year, quit when an hour-long rain storm pelted the Hyatt Dorado Beach east course, halting play in the first round of the $800,000 Senior Tournament of Champions.

Only two of the 23 players finished the first round, but all made the turn. The first round will be completed Saturday morning prior to the second round.

Colbert, who won the season-ending Senior Tour Championship to take the earnings title last year over Raymond Floyd and Dave Stockton, found himself in a familiar position.

"It was one of those good news, bad news days," said Colbert. "The good news was that I played well, the bad news was that I couldn't finish it off.

"But it's good they called it. It levels the playing field for the second round. Playing extra holes shouldn't bother anyone out here."

Friday's opening round in the Senior Tour's season-opening event was a replay of last-year's dramatic battle for the earnings title, with Colbert taking a one-stroke lead over Floyd and Stockton with a birdie on the par-5 10th hole to go to 5-under-par, minutes before the storm began.

Colbert, who battled all day in the same group with Floyd, enjoyed the challenge.

"It would be nice to renew our rivalry," Colbert said of Floyd. "If I stay close to him all year, I should be in pretty good shape."

Colbert starter with a birdie on the first hole, but stalled until birdies at the fifth, sixth and ninth holes took him to 4-under-par 32 at the turn.

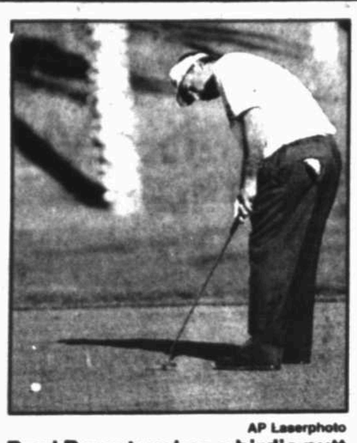
HealthSouth Inaugural

ORLANDO, Fla. — When Patty Sheehan finished her final tournament last season, she took a much-needed break.

"I put my golf bag in the garage and didn't even unpack it," she said. "I was just so tired. It hit me the very first tournament of the year and I struggled the whole year. It was a tough time for me."

So for 3 1/2 months, she did not play a competitive round of golf.

Now rested, she's back on top of the leader board after Friday's first round of the HealthSouth Inaugural at Walt Disney World's Lake Buena Vista course.



AP Laserphoto

Brad Bryant makes a birdie putt on the seventh hole at Friday's Bob Hope Chrysler Classic.

With a bogey-free 6-under-par 66, the LPGA Hall of Famer earned a one-shot lead over Caroline Pierce, who fashioned a seven-birdie, two-bogey 67. Kelly Robbins and Dana Dormann were at 68 and Kim Bauer shot 69.

"I'm happy to be out here this year," Sheehan said. "I had a good rest. I had time to rejuvenate myself. I feel good again."

Starting on the back nine, Sheehan opened with six pars before her first birdie on the 137-yard, par-3 16th and added a two-putt birdie on the par-5 17th to make the turn at 2-under. After getting up and down to save par on Nos. 1, 2 and 3, she birdied four of her final five holes, dropping putts of 20, 16, 16 and 8 feet.

"My balance seemed to be a little off and I wasn't hitting many good shot early," Sheehan said. "Then at the par-3 16th I had a real good shot for birdie and that gave me a little cushion. I didn't feel like I had to try so hard to make birdie. Then I just settled down."

Short supply of seniors diminishes all-star game

Senior Bowl 1 p.m., TBS

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — They call it the Senior Bowl for a reason. The problem is, many college players don't stay in school long enough to be seniors.

Twenty-five players decided to leave school early this season and enter the NFL draft. Some of them will wish they hadn't.

The impact is felt mostly by the college teams that watch their stars depart prematurely. Ohio State, which lost Craig Powell, Lorenzo Styles and Korey Stringer to the draft last year, is a perfect example. This season, wide receiver Terry Glenn decided to test his earning potential.

But it also puts a strain on the already uncertain business of NFL scouting.

"A lot of these guys don't declare if they're coming out until the last minute, and then you're scrambling to get a fair evaluation on the player," said Chicago Bears coach Dave Wannstedt, coaching the South team in Saturday's Senior Bowl.

The Senior Bowl, one of the most important postseason all-star games, has missed out on visits by players like Rashaan Salaam and Ki-Jana Carter in recent years. Organizers watched a legion of underclassmen depart for the promise of riches this season, including Lawrence Phillips, Tshimanga Biakabutuka, Eddie Kennison and Glenn.

It seemed almost odd to hear Florida State junior running back Warrick Dunn say he was staying in school.

Senior Bowl president Steve Hale said he's not panicking.

"Last year, I had the exact same conversation," he said. "The perception and the reality don't match up."

Despite all the hype over players leaving, Hale said the best players still are found in the senior class. Last year, despite a high number of 33 early departures, 10 Senior Bowl players were picked in the first round of the NFL draft, the most in at least a decade, Hale said.

"We had Steve McNair, Kerry Collins, Derrick Brooks," Hale said. "All these guys were great draft prospects."

This year's lineup includes Florida State quarterback Danny Kanell and wide receivers Eric Moulds of Mississippi State and Bobby Engram of Penn State.

"Everybody tends to assume that these guys are head and shoulders above the ones that stayed," he said. "But look who stayed."

Indeed, Hale has a point. As the early exodus remains popular, the list of players who got bad advice or made poor judgments gets longer.

Last year, Florida receiver Jack Jackson came out early and was picked in the fourth round. Auburn defensive back Brian Robinson declared for the draft, skipped the Hula Bowl, tested positive for marijuana and ran a dismal 4.9 in the 40-yard dash. He wasn't drafted or even offered a free agent contract. Auburn's sports information office doesn't even know where he is.

Wannstedt, whose Bears got good production out of Salaam this season, said it's hard to pass on a player of that calibre, even if he's young.

For a change, baseball should have full season

NEW YORK (AP) — For the first time since 1993, it actually appears that baseball will have a full season.

No strikes, no lockouts.

162 games per team.

The chance to break records.

It seems almost strange.

"I've heard no one raise the possibility of a lockout," acting commissioner Bud Selig said last week during a break at the winter meetings in Los Angeles.

Players and owners still are operating under the terms of the collective bargaining agreement that expired on Dec. 31, 1993. But players, for now, don't fear owners will try to implement their own system without the union's consent.

An injunction issued by U.S. District Judge Sonia Sotomayor keeps the old system in place until one of three things happens:

— a new agreement.

— a genuine impasse in bargaining that she approves.

— a final ruling on the unfair labor practice charges filed against owners by the National Labor Relations Board.

Thus far, owners haven't appeared interested in resolving the outstanding charges, which accuse them of bargaining in bad faith. The trial, already postponed eight times, is scheduled for Jan. 29 but likely will be postponed again.

Owners gave the union a new proposal on Nov. 15, their first new proposal since March 27. Players, who made their last offer on March 30 — the night before Sotomayor issued the injunction — are likely to make a counteroffer later this month or during the first half of February.

Spring training is scheduled to start on Feb. 14, and the focus this year will be on hitters and pitchers rather than lawyers, judges, has-beens and never-weres.

Can Albert Belle hit 62?

Can Matt Williams?

Can Greg Maddux win 30?

"We need to have a long-term agreement," Selig said.

Well, maybe not.

Players are happy to play under the terms of the expired agreement. While some owners may not like it, the injunction means they have no choice.

Relief may even be coming from small-market teams. On Jan. 18, 1993, when owners approved their revenue-sharing agreement at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., they said it wouldn't take effect until players agreed to a salary cap.

Tech's Winder takes OU job

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma coach John Blake named Texas Tech offensive coordinator Dick Winder to the same position with the Sooners on Friday.

"He has been one of the most respected offensive coordinators in the country for several years and I think his credentials and repeated success speak for itself," Blake said.

Winder has been with the Red Raiders for the past 12 years after 13 years as a high school coach in New Mexico and Texas.

In seven of the nine seasons Winder was offensive coordinator, the Red Raiders scored at least 300 points and had 298 another season.

Tech has set 59 offensive school records while Winder has been offensive coordinator, including 21 single-game marks, 24 season records and 14 career records.

The Red Raiders ranked 22nd nationally last year in scoring offense, averaging 30 points per game and 25th in rushing, averaging 205.3 yards per game.

Winder, 54, is a native of Craig, Colo. He played for Mesa Community College in Grand Junction, Colo., and for Utah State.

The appointment brings to eight the number of full-time assistants Blake has named, leaving one appointment to be made.

Oklahoma assistants Merv Johnson, Kenny Pope and Clarence James are remaining. Blake has hired Bill Young, Joe Dickinson, Pete McGinnis and Chris Thurmond.

CRANE: New coach compared to Johnson

(From 1C)

extremely proud and think it will be a good partnership between Crane and Coach Cherry."

Hailey went on to say he could not be happier with the selection of the Angelo State graduate, chosen over three other finalist, which included Winters coach Robin Byrd. Hailey even gives a comparison to another renown coach just hired in Florida.

"Why is Jimmy Johnson in Miami," said Hailey. "He has the track record of building winners. That is the same for coach Cherry."

Cherry comes to a Crane program that went 3-7 in the last three seasons. Rebuilding is an area that Cherry has experienced first hand. At Class A Hart, where Cherry coached from 1990-92, he took a team that had not won a district title in 15 years and led it to an appearance in the state quarterfinals in 1992.

"If we mirror that success, we'll be tickled," said Hailey. "I like the fact he has been at programs that have been down and that he has turned them around."

Cherry will begin work at Crane right away and expects to have an off-season timetable for Crane football by Feb. 1. Cherry, however, wants to do things at Crane one step at a time and will not leave any stone unturned. The dynamic coach thinks that all the factors are there and the eventual outcome will be a positive one.

"We're not going to cut corners and we don't want to miss anything," said Cherry. "I'm going to have four months to get going and it will be important that we can do as much as possible.

"Crane has young men capable of success and a community that is hungry."

Cherry, who also has seven years experience at McMamey and Levelland, is ready to get acclimated at his new position and get the hiring hoopla out of the way.

"I'm fortunate to be successful," said Cherry. "But we have to put paper clippings aside and get to work."

Cherry will bring with him a fast-paced multiple-I offense and 52 defense. It is not known how many assistants will accompany Cherry to Crane but he will bring defensive coordinator Joe Perrin, who has been with the new Crane coach for the last six years.

Cherry, who is looking forward to the battles of District 8-3A with Greenwood and Colorado City, says that the one thing that will get Crane there is effort.

"We have plenty of room to go up and there will be a lot of hard work," said Cherry. "If it was that easy, it wouldn't be that much fun."

Season carried more pressure for Newton

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Nate Newton says there was more pressure on the Dallas Cowboys during the regular season than they'll probably feel at the Super Bowl.

Newton says the Cowboys worked under smothering pressure throughout the regular season. The playoffs have been something of a relief, allowing the team to relax and play its best.

"We were the first ones to say in training camp that the Super Bowl was our goal," Newton said. "The pressure started building up right there. Then the media came along and picked up on it and it got out of hand."

Newton, a Pro Bowl offensive tackle, said winning big was the only acceptable outcome for each regular season game.

"The wins weren't good enough and the losses sure weren't," Newton said. "It's amazing how everything we do gets blown up. It's been a wild year. If we lost and were doing a radio talk show, then that was supposed to be the reason we lost. It was crazy."

Newton, who has Super Bowl rings from the Cowboys' two wins under Jimmy Johnson, said the team is solidly behind coach Barry Switzer.

"We believed in each other and we had high expectations and we pulled it off," Newton said. "We let some things the media said bother us but we shouldn't have. We should know by now that nothing makes any difference except what we do on the field."

Newton said the Cowboys are relaxed and confident now.

"I think we'll play a very good Super Bowl," Newton said. "Pittsburgh is good, but we have two good games against Philadelphia and Green Bay to build on. I think we'll play a good game. I don't think we'll be uptight or pressing."

Fullback Daryl Johnston said the fact the Cowboys have Super Bowl experience doesn't automatically mean they are better than the Steelers, who haven't been to the NFL championship game since the 1970s.

"I remember on our first trip, the Buffalo Bills had been there three straight years and it didn't do them much good," Johnston said. "The experience factor didn't bother us. However, the team that has been there might have a little advantage."

The Cowboys are going to Arizona Sunday to get adjusted to Super Bowl week. The Steelers are waiting until Monday.

Some players are bringing in limousines from Dallas so they will have ready transportation in Phoenix.

Former Cowboys wide receiver Drew Pearson said jokingly: "In my day we were lucky enough to have enough money to hail a cab."

Former Steeler quarterback Joe Gilliam Jr., shown with Terry Bradshaw in a 1974 file photo, now begs for money on the streets.

Ex-Steeler QB Gilliam from hero to homeless

By Teresa M. Walker
AP Sports Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Joe Gilliam plans to watch his old team, the Pittsburgh Steelers, in the Super Bowl.

Where he'll watch, Gilliam doesn't know. He doesn't know where he'll sleep that night, either.

Jefferson Street Joe, who won two Super Bowl rings with the Steelers in the 1970s, is living on the streets of his hometown. He's been fighting drug addiction for over two decades now.

The fact that he will watch the Steelers try for their fifth championship is about the only sure thing Gilliam knows right now.

"I take one day at a time, you know. A couple of days, that's too far down the line at this point," Gilliam said last week at a restaurant in his old neighborhood.

He said he hasn't used heroin, a drug he began taking in late 1975, in over five years. Now he smokes some crack, but said only God can help him stop.

"I'm not really as bad as I seem," Gilliam told The Tennessean. "I'm over the hump. I can take it or leave it."

Gilliam has mixed stints as a drug-rehabilitation counselor between a string of arrests on charges ranging from possessing drugs and weapons to a 1991 armed robbery of a Louisiana restaurant.

Slipping back to drugs is too easy for an addict, Gilliam said, no matter what kind of support comes from friends and family.

"I stopped doing the things that I was supposed to be doing, the things that helped me with my sobriety," he said. "Almost everybody who's had a relapse has stopped doing something he should've been doing to help maintain his sobriety. That's exactly what happened."

Gilliam's place in NFL history is solid enough.

Picked in the 11th round by the Steelers in 1972, Gilliam became the first black quarterback to start a regular-season game when he led Pittsburgh over Baltimore 30-0 in the 1974 opener.

He got his chance when Terry Bradshaw refused to cross the picket line that summer during a players' strike. Gilliam said coach Chuck Noll promised him a shot at the starting job if he crossed the line.

But he lost his spot despite a 4-1-1 start and a three-game winning streak. Gilliam said he thinks race, hate mail and rumors of threats to Three Rivers Stadium played a part. Noll said he simply wanted a change.

Gilliam stayed involved the rest of the 1974 season, standing next to Noll and helping with play selection during the Steelers' Super Bowl victory over Minnesota.

In 1975, Gilliam remained a backup and threw only 48 passes. He started using heroin late that year.

The New Orleans Saints claimed him off the waiver wire in 1976. Gilliam lasted a short time before being dismissed for breaking team rules.

Hometown headlines chronicled his attempts at semipro ball and the USFL. Also noted were numerous arrests, repeated trips to drug-rehabilitation units and his work as a rehabilitation counselor.

In the late 1970s, he hocked his Super Bowl rings to buy drugs. An ABC report during the 1988 Super Bowl resulted in a group of businessmen buying back one ring for Gilliam.

He now has both rings, but they are at his parents' home for safekeeping.

Good nights come when Gilliam has enough money to stay in a rooming house. Other times, he sleeps where he can.

He's in frequent contact with his family, who have repeatedly tried to help him. His older brother Craig even gave him a job as his offensive coordinator in 1993 at Lane College, a Division II school in west Tennessee. Gilliam passed his drug tests but stayed only one year.

Craig Gilliam wishes people would quit dredging up his brother's story.

"All they are doing is capitalizing on that hype, that's all. Now everybody is writing about him. Why not last year? What about 19 years ago? It's a bunch of hogwash," Craig Gilliam said.

The Steelers' return to the Super Bowl has put the former quarterback back in the spotlight here. Everyone wants to talk football, who he thinks will win, and how he's faring.

Wearing a new warm-up suit, sneakers and black baseball cap, Joe Gilliam said he had hopes for the future.

He has talked with his father, former college coach Joe Gilliam Sr., about a football camp for juvenile and adult offenders looking to learn a skill and how to cope with life after jail. He's also looking for a job.

Gilliam doesn't worry about what might have been and the mistakes he's made in life.

"Other people do it for me, you know what I mean ... and I just refuse to look at it that way. I'd never be able to get up, you know? I couldn't go on. It happened, I let it go," Gilliam said.

AFC continues to lose Super Bowl battles

■ Logic defies reason NFC has won 11 straight NFL championships, most by wide margins.

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

Four times over the last 11 seasons, the San Francisco 49ers have won the Super Bowl. The Dallas Cowboys are expected to win their third in four years next Sunday.

When it's not the 49ers or the Cowboys, it's the 1985 Bears, perhaps the greatest defensive team in modern NFL history.

Or the 1986 Giants, whose defense rivaled the Bears. Or Joe Gibbs' Washington Redskins, who won three titles with three different quarterbacks and one of the best offensive lines ever.

They all have one thing in common.

They all play in the NFC.

It's been assumed during the 11 straight seasons that the NFC team won the Super Bowl that it's simply cyclical, a swing of the pendulum following a decade when AFC teams won eight of nine.

It's hard to call it cyclical any longer.

In the last 11 Super Bowls, the NFC teams have outscored the AFC 428-181, or 38.9 points to 16.4. That's approximately the score of the first game of the streak — San Francisco 38, Miami 16, at Stanford Stadium Jan. 20, 1985, Dan Marino's only Super Bowl appearance and Don Shula's last.

Almost nobody expects the Pittsburgh Steelers to beat the Dallas Cowboys next Sunday. They only question if the Steelers can keep it close.

Even Steelers fans.

"Of course I'm glad they got there, but I don't have much hope," said Adam Wolfson, a New York insurance broker and a longtime Steeler fan. "In fact, sometimes I wonder if it would be better if they'd lost to Indianapolis on a 'Hail Mary' than to have them win then get embarrassed by Dallas."

If that's a Pittsburgh fan, what does the rest of the world think?

The world according to Las Vegas, has been raising the line since it opened at 11 1/2 right after the Cowboys' 38-27 win over Green Bay that set up Sunday's game. It jumped a point in the next three hours, meaning a lot of heavy money came down kerplunk on the Cowboys.

But that's been the trend.

This will be the third straight game in which the line will be double figures — Dallas was favored by 10 over Buffalo two years ago and San Francisco by 19 over San Diego last season.

Both covered.

In the last 12 years, the NFC team has been favored by a touchdown or more nine times and the AFC team has been favored just twice — Denver by three over Washington in 1988 and Buffalo by six over the Giants in 1991.

Only two of the last 11 games have been truly competitive.

The first was in 1989, when Joe Montana led the 49ers on a 92-yard, 11-play drive and hit John Taylor from 10 yards out with 34 seconds left to beat Cincinnati 20-16. That was the third of San Francisco's five Super Bowl wins.

The second was in 1991, when the Giants edged Buffalo 20-19 as the Bills' Scott Norwood was wide right with a 47-yard field goal attempt on the game's next-to-last play.

That may have been the only game in which the AFC team was demonstrably better on paper, but New York won it by holding the ball for 40 minutes and 33 seconds, keeping Buffalo's high-powered, no-huddle offense off the field.

In only two other games did the AFC team even lead at the half.

The most recent was two years ago, when the Bills, in the last of their four straight losses, led the Cowboys 13-6 at intermission. But just 55 seconds into the second half, Leon Lett stripped the ball from Thurman Thomas and James Washington picked up the fumble and returned it 46 yards for a score, irrevocably turning the game.

The other was in 1987, when the Broncos led the Giants 10-9 at intermission and might have been up more had Rich Karlis not missed two short field goals.

In the second half, New York converted a fake punt on the first series, outgained the Broncos 162 yards to 2 over a 20 minute span, scored five straight times to go ahead 39-10 and won 39-20.

The others were monumental blowouts — Chicago's 46-10 rout of New England in 1986; San Francisco 55-10 over Denver in 1990; Dallas' 52-17 win over Buffalo three years ago.

And most often they're over almost before they start, like last year's 49-26 San Francisco win. Take that 55-10 game.

"After the second series, Bill Walsh looked at me and said, 'It's over,'" said Carmen Policy, the 49ers' president, who happened to be sitting with the man who had coached San Francisco's first three victories.

"I said, 'Not so soon.' And he replied: 'There's no way they can stop you.'"

Why such domination by the NFC? Just about every theory has been debunked:

— Styles. The NFC was supposed to be the conference of power and defense, the AFC of finesse. But Dallas and San Francisco, who have won the last three games, have quick-strike offenses that were supposed to be the AFC province.

— Coaches and general managers. Bobby Beathard, who won three Super Bowls in Washington, is now general manager in San Diego and Bill Parcells, who coached the Giants to two, is now in New England. San Diego has made it once but the Pats haven't come close. Will Jimmy Johnson make a difference in Miami?

— Cycles. True, the AFC won eight of nine Super Bowls between 1973 and 1981, but six of those wins were by two of the best teams in NFL history, the Dolphins and Steelers. The aggregate score in those eight wins was 200-111 — an average 25-14 — and Dallas' 27-10 win over Denver in 1978 gave the NFC at least a taste of victory.

In fact, the conferences are far more competitive than the Super Bowls show.

Over the 12 years of the streak, the NFC leads just 323-308-1, in part because the AFC's bottom teams may have been better than NFC teams like the Cardinals and Bucs.

And things might have been relatively even the past four years if Dallas and San Francisco, clearly the class of the league, had been lopped off the NFC.

Buffalo, despite going 0-for-4 in the final game, is clearly the third best team of the '90s, behind the Cowboys and 49ers.

But in the Super Bowl, only first place counts.

COWBOYS: From weak to strong in 16 weeks

(From 1C)

on Smith's 31-yard touchdown run.

Week 4

A $300 million suit by the NFL over the Nike and Pepsi deals jars Valley Ranch.

On the field, the Cowboys act like nothing has happened with a 34-20 win over Arizona on Smith's two touchdowns.

Week 5

Sanders has surgery on his left ankle and doctors say it will be several weeks before he can play.

On the field, former Dallas offensive coordinator Norv Turner picks apart the team he knows so well and the Washington Redskins win 27-23.

The game triggers a tempest of finger pointing. Barry Switzer rips Leon Lett, Tony Tolbert and Charles Haley for their play. Later in the week Switzer apologizes for going public with his comments.

Week 6

On the field, Dallas beats Green Bay 34-24 but a still-irritated Haley threatens to quit.

It's the sixth consecutive loss by the Packers to the Cowboys and the two teams are destined to meet again in the NFC championship game.

Week 7

Haley sheepishly admits he was wrong for his outburst and begs the team's forgiveness. He says he will play out the rest of the year.

On the field, Dallas rolls over San Diego 23-9 as the enraged defense produces six sacks.

Week 8

In a bye week, holdout linebacker Darrin Smith finally signs a contract for $400,000 and joins the team for conditioning work.

Week 9

Sanders bounces back quicker than expected and says he will make his Dallas debut against his former team, the Atlanta Falcons.

On the field, Sanders makes no big impact in a 28-13 victory. He is used on offense and drops a 48-yard pass from Aikman that skips off his fingers in the end zone.

Week 10

The NFL substance-abuse policy hits home as Lett and Clayton Holmes are both suspended. Lett gets a four-game suspension but Holmes must sit out the year.

Jones countersues the NFL, asking for $700 million in the battle over sponsorships.

On the field, Dallas cruises to a 34-12 win over Philadelphia on Monday Night Football. Michael Irvin ties an NFL record with his seventh consecutive 100-yard receiving game.

Week 11

Hype galore over the meeting between the 49ers and the Cowboys, who are seeking revenge for a 38-28 loss in the NFC championship game the year before. Sanders and Jerry Rice exchange verbal shots.

On the field, San Francisco whips Dallas 38-20 as Rice catches an 81-yard touchdown pass on the second play of the game.

Aikman is knocked out with a bruised tendon in his left knee in the first quarter.

Week 12

Some Cowboys players privately question why Aikman didn't at least return to the sidelines in the second half of the 49ers game.

Most players are in a snit with the media and hide out.

Cornerback Larry Brown's son dies three days before the game.

On the field, Dallas beats Oakland 34-21 as Smith scores three touchdowns and Sanders intercepts his first pass.

Week 13

Haley goes to Los Angeles to have his back checked. Middle linebacker Robert Jones is hospitalized with an ear infection.

On the field, center Ray Donaldson breaks a leg and Emmitt Smith sprains a knee but the Cowboys win a Thanksgving Day match with Kansas City 24-12.

Week 14

Lett returns from his suspension. Smith recovers from knee sprain and Jones says something like that won't happen in 1996 because he's going to plant grass in Texas Stadium.

On the field, Smith rushes for 91 yards but Washington shocks the Cowboys again 24-17.

Week 15

Haley, who has a herniated disk, announces his retirement from football for the second time in a year. The next day he changes his mind and says he will return to the Cowboys as soon as possible.

On the field, Switzer's fourth-down gamble on his own 29 late in the fourth period makes him the subject of national ridicule. The Cowboys fail twice to make a yard and Philadelphia wins on a field goal 20-17.

The Dallas Morning News headlines it "Fiasco in Philly."

An eastern newspaper calls Switzer "Bozo the Coach."

Switzer says: "We're shattered right now."

Week 16

Jones backs Switzer, saying he will return as coach. Jones backs his earlier statement that Switzer will be back unless "he is shot or hit by a truck."

Sanders goes on a tirade in the Dallas locker room, saying "Switzer is doing a good job. Get off his back."

On the field, the struggling Cowboys get lucky as Chris Boniol makes five field goals, including a 35-yarder with 0:00 on the clock, in a 21-20 win over the Giants.

Week 17

Defensive line coach John Blake takes the Oklahoma job and Switzer gives him permission to leave the team.

On the field, the Cowboys beat Arizona Christmas night to earn the NFC East title, and home-field advantage throughout the playoffs.

The Playoffs

The finally together Cowboys get a week's rest to heal physical and mental wounds and roll into Tempe with a 30-11 win over Philadelphia and a 38-27 win over Green Bay.

"I can't ever remember a Dallas team overcoming so much adversity," 13-year veteran Bill Bates said. "It was such a grind. We had a lot of stuff to overcome. We did it. That's what makes this such a special season."

And outspoken Irvin said it was time Switzer started getting the credit he is due.

"The man brought the ship in," Irvin said. "He should be given credit for doing the job."

Smith seconded the motion.

"Give coach Switzer credit," Smith said. "He got us to the Super Bowl. We're the son of the 'Bootlegger's Boy' now."

MHS girls get 20th win

SAN ANGELO — Midland High crossed the 20-game win mark with a 62-57 victory over San Angelo Central in District 4-5A girls basketball action here Friday night.

Ogonna Merritt poured in 25 points, including MHS' only three-point goal of the night, to lead the Lady Dawgs past a strong Lady Cat team. Kim Paschall added 10 and was the only other double-figure scorer for MHS but the Lady Dawgs got a balance attack as Laura Childress and Toya Zachery had eight each.

The win took the Lady Dawgs' mark to 20-3 overall and a perfect 8-0 in district as they appear to be headed toward what would be their fourth-straight district title if they can hold on. An undefeated district record is also at stake as the 1994 MHS squad became the first team since the 1986 Lady Cats to win district without a loss.

In the junior varsity contest, Casey Fore was the only player in double figures with 14 points but the Lady Dawgs got a balanced attack to beat Central 55-43. MHS improved to 15-7 overall and 6-2 in district. The MHS sophomores also won by a mark of 57-42. Lane and Gunter each had 13 for MHS while Calhoun and Rogers had 11 a piece.

Lady Reb soccer takes Amarillo

The Midland Lee girls soccer team defeated Amarillo High 2-1 in the opening-round action of the Lubbock Tournament Friday.

Lee, 4-2 for the season, opened up scoring as senior foward Kelly Sowell took an assist from senior midfielder Christi Johnson. AHS tied the game moments later, but Johnson came up with the winning goal on a penalty kick with 20 minutes to go. Jennifer Connell and Jennifer Nobles split time in the goal.

The win puts Lee back into the winning column after its shootout loss to Midland High.

"A win is a win," said Midland Lee coach Van Gravitt. "It is good to get back on track and that is what we wanted to do in the tournament."

Lee will play the winner of Lubbock Coronado and Canyon Randall today.

MHS girls get soccer win

WICHITA FALLS — The Midland High girls soccer team is off to its best start ever Friday behind a 10-0 whipping of Azle at the Ice Bowl tournament. The Lady Bulldogs are now 5-1 overall, which ties a team record for most wins since they have been competing in UIL-sanctioned games.

The Lady Bulldogs face District 5 opponent Abilene High today at 9 a.m. in a match that does not count against the league standings. They will also play Wichita Falls at 5 p.m. and MHS coach Scott Hodkinson said the competition will be a lot tougher.

"We saw them last week at the tournament and we kind of knew what was coming our way," said Hodkinson. "I did the best job I could to keep the score down. I talked to the coach after the game and he said he lost games by 18-0 and 19-0 this year. I'm sure tomorrow's games will be a little bit tougher."

Goals were scored by Sonja Lackey, Ann Smith and Becky Salgado with a penalty kick. Jacque Ketter scored two goals along with Anna Laengbert. Bridgit Walker, Tina Richardson and Mary Elizabeth Prentice had one goal each. Walker and Salgado each had an assist.

Midland Trinity beat Amarillo Christian 50-25 in TAPPS district girls basketball action Friday but was paid back with a a 54-51 loss to ACHS in the boys contest.

Sarah Gifford led the Trinity girls with 14 points as the Lady Chargers took an 18-2 first-quarter lead and never looked back. Trinity improved to 10-7, 3-1.

Despite 16 points from Richard McMillan and 10 from Matt Dickman, the boys team, still seeking their first district win, could not get over the hump against ACHS. The Trinity boys fell to 2-13 overall and 0-4 in league play.

Abilene sophs slip by Midland

Chris Cox poured in 27 points for Midland High but the Abilene High boys pulled out the 72-71 victory Friday night in sophomore boys basketball action.

Warren Stricklin added 12 points for the Bulldogs, who fell to 14-5 overall and 4-2 in district action.

MHS frosh boys dent Hood

The Midland High freshman boys White team pressed Odessa Hood into submission Friday with an 84-28 victory in boys basketball action.

Charles Tatum led MHS with 16 points, Chico O'Neal had 13, Justin Wilson added 11 and Jerome Lightfoot finished with 10 as the Bulldogs improved to 18-0 on the season and 8-0 in district.

Hood simply had trouble breaking the swarming fullcourt press by MHS as the starters played all of about 10 minutes of the 32 total in the game.

MHS will take its undefeated record up against Midland Lee next.

Lee Maroon boys top Lee White

The Midland Lee freshman staged a contest between their two teams Friday with Maroon taking a 71-61 boys basketball decision over White. Josh Ralston led Maroon with 23 points while Blake Hinsley and Jeremy Conaway each pumped in 16. Nate Brignon finished out the double-figure scoring for Maroon with 10. Eric Clodfelter led White with 21 while Matt Winston finished with 20. Maroon improved to 11-5 overall and 7-1 in district while White fell to 11-5 and 6-2.

BULL: Midlander gets his first big money surprised me with one jump."

Golden is in line to make a nice pay day if the score goes through the today's group of 50 riders. The $5,000 given to the winner will make his $325 won last week at Amarillo's Bull Bash '95 seem like chump change. Even if Golden doesn't win, he has basically assured himself of his biggest pay day of his realitively young career. The event will ply only the top six places over the two days from the $16,000 total purse. That's not bad for Golden, who like the other cowboys put down a $100 entry fee.

"This is my first big money rodeo," said Golden. "I've been bull riding for four years but never came close to making this much money."

But as amazing as the youthfulness of Golden, who is riding against guys five to 15 years his elder, is the slight frame, but looks can be decieving as the tough kid received kudos from the many of the other cowboys, who appreciated what he did on this given night.

"They(the cowboys) take it seriously," said Pighin, whose 79 led for most of the first night. "There is a lot of money to be won and it is growing every year."

Golden, who is not going to a high school but being educated at home, wants to attend Odessa College like world champion bullrider Jermome Davis and Ty Murray did before him. However, for now, he will keep concentrating on his technique and listening for the bell that lets him know his eight seconds are over.

"All I do is listen for the buzzer when I get that far," said Golden. "When you know you are making it out there, that is what you listen for."

After this weekend, Golden will travel to Lubbock for the Mid-Winter Series Rodeo, which will pay $10,000 to winner. Later on, he wants to make his attempt at winning the bullriding title at the American Junior Rodeo Association, and then eventully make his mark on the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association circuit.

However, he will be back tonight and see just how much he will be able to put in the savings.

points against Lee in the fourth quarter. It just snowballs on you."

That ends the first half of District 4-5A play, meaning that the Bulldogs face Lee at 8 p.m. Tuesday at the Chap. Now the victories and losses really start to have some meaning.

The Bulldogs, Bobcats and Odessa Permian are all left with a first half reading of 3-3 and tied for third place in a race where only three can go to the state playoffs. Odessa High could have been added to that list, but fell to Abilene High Friday as the Eagles won their first district game of the season, beating OHS, 91-88.

Cooper leads after the first half with a 5-1 record after Friday's 58-56 nail biter against Permian. Lee still owns sole possession of second place at 4-2 after Friday's open date. Both MHS and Permian had a chance to tie Lee for second place with wins Friday, but they didn't come. Just who does really want these playoff berths?

In junior varsity action, Midland High took a 74-51 win over San Angelo, climbing to 9-7 on the year and 2-4 in district play. Camar Jackson had 20 points and James Clay added 14.

Johnson hires assistant

MIAMI (AP) — The Miami Dolphins announced the hiring Friday of former Tampa Bay assistant Kippy Brown as running backs coach, leaving coach Jimmy Johnson with two vacancies remaining on his 11-man staff.

Assistants George Hill, Larry Seiple and Mike Westhoff said Johnson has told them that they will be retained, but the Dolphins declined to confirm those moves.

Johnson remained in the market for a defensive coordinator and offensive line coach.

Hill, who coached linebackers for coach Don Shula, is a possible choice as defensive coordinator.

Hill lost his job in Dallas when Johnson became the coach there in 1989. This time, Johnson decided to keep Hill.

"We talked several times, and I could tell he'd talked to a lot of people who know me and know my work," Hill said. "It's exciting for me to get the chance to work with him."

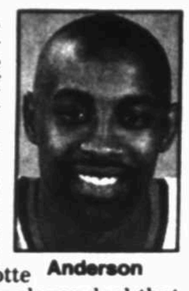
Seiple, a former Dolphins player, learned Thursday that he gets to keep his job as receivers coach.

"I'm very happy to be staying with the team I've spent 20 years with," he said.

Westhoff will continue to coach special teams.

Johnson also will retain offensive coordinator Gary Stevens and defensive backs coach Mel Phillips from Shula's staff. The newcomers are Brown, Cary Godette, Bill Lewis and Pat Jones. One Shula assistant, offensive line coach Rich McGeorge, remains in limbo.

New Jersey trades Anderson to Charlotte



Anderson

■ NBA Roundup/3C

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Kenny Anderson's desire to test the free agency market at the end of the season left the New Jersey Nets with no choice. They picked his new team for him.

Facing the prospect of losing the former All-Star point guard and getting nothing in return, the Nets sent Anderson to the Charlotte Hornets on Friday in a four-player deal that continues the teams' recent trend of blockbuster trades.

In return for Anderson and seldom-used swingman Gerald Glass, the Nets received guards Kendall Gill and Khalid Reeves.

Charlotte should be able to sign Anderson to a new contract, said his attorney, David Falk.

"I can't imagine Kenny Anderson not being a part of Charlotte's future for a long time," Falk said in Baltimore prior to the Nets' game against the Washington Bullets.

Anderson rejected a six-year, $40 million contract at the start of the season, saying he hadn't made up his mind on free agency. The two sides continued to talk in recent weeks, but the Nets wanted something done before the NBA trading deadline next month.

Last week, Falk told the Nets that Anderson was leaning toward free agency, Nets general manager Willis Reed said.

"We didn't want to end up at the last hour just having to do something," Reed said. "We wanted to be comfortable doing something that would help the team."

Getting Gill and Reeves gives New Jersey two young guards with multiyear contracts. Charlotte gets a player who has career averages of 15.3 points and 7.7 assists. However, Anderson has struggled this season and was shooting only 38 percent from the field.

"We have just acquired one of the best point guards in the game today and have solidified our point guard position," said Bob Bass, Hornets' vice president of basketball operations. "There could not be a better point guard tandem in the league than Kenny Anderson and Muggsy Bogues."

Anderson, a former New York City high school star who was the second pick in the 1991 draft, wasn't bitter.

"It's something that happens when you become a free agent," he said. "We were trying to weigh my free agency market-wise, just play it out and weigh the options. I didn't want to make a hasty decision."

Falk added: "We never told the Nets Kenny Anderson didn't want to come back. Based on the interest (around the league), he was leaning toward moving. Based on that attitude, they accelerated the process."

Anderson's departure will allow the Nets to move Chris Childs into the point guard starting position with Reeves and veteran Vern Fleming as his backups.

Gill, now in his sixth season, should become the Nets' shooting guard. He was averaging 12.9 points, shooting 48 percent from the field and 31 percent from 3-point range, the kind of accuracy the Nets have lacked since Drazen Petrovic was killed in an automobile accident in 1993.

Reeves, Miami's top draft pick in 1994, averaged 8.1 points and 3.1 assists in 20 games. The former New York City high school star was acquired by Charlotte in the Mourning deal.

OPEN: Bananas, sports drinks keep Courier going to double-fault.

" Australians are known for their fair play, in general. I think probably a few people ... just aren't tennis knowledgeable. It didn't affect me on the court, but it's extra satisfying to win because of those people."

From Woodbridge's point of view, the crowd was "fantastic," giving him his greatest thrill in tennis.

"I've never played anywhere and had people just yelling for me," the popular Woodbridge said. "It was phenomenal. The experience was one that I'll never forget. When I broke back to go 5-4 (in the final set), I'm sitting down and I've got goose bumps, which is something I've never experienced on a tennis court before. The whole place went bananas. I'm sorry I couldn't finish it the whole way for them."

Speaking of bananas, Courier chomped through a bunch of them and gulped sports drinks to keep from cramping through the long match on a warm night.

"In tennis, we don't have a clock ticking, so if you're still on the court, you still have a shot," Courier said. "I felt good all the way through."

Courier, seeded No. 8, said he'd never seen the No. 29-ranked Woodbridge play so well.

"If his game has come that far since he has been married, maybe I should look for a wife," Courier said.

Woodbridge, married last April in Melbourne, told his wife Natasha to go home early in the fifth set, though she ignored him and stayed to the end.

"What a gentleman," Courier said. "If it was my wife, I'd tell her, 'You'd better not be leaving.' "

Woodbridge's sore right shoulder needed massage a couple of times during the match, but he played through the pain and fended off three match points in three games during the fifth set.

"I am disappointed I lost, but I guess the only smart way to look at it is that I played a terrific match," Woodbridge said. "I couldn't have tried any harder. I left my insides on the court. Emotionally, I left everything I could out there."

NL managers will have to obtain designated hitters

NEW YORK (AP) — In less than a year, NL managers will have to find designated hitters for up to 5.5 percent of their games. That doesn't bother Cincinnati Reds manager Ray Knight.

"I know purists say, 'Leave it the way it is.' But, hey, we went away from the way it was when there were eight-team leagues," Knight told The Cincinnati Enquirer. "We miss a lot by not seeing a Ken Griffey."

When owners unanimously approved interleague play for 1997 in a vote Thursday, they said the deal was subject to approval by the players' association. NL president Len Coleman and AL president Gene Budig said it's likely the DH will be used in AL ballparks during the interleague games in '97.

Owners also have to talk to umpires about how to implement the plan, which calls for each team to play 15 or 16 interleague games.

The leagues could leave umpire crews intact, letting NL tandems work games in NL parks and AL crews in AL parks. Splitting crews could result in logistical problems, although it would ensure that teams would have at least two umpires they're familiar with during every series.

Many players said they were excited about the advent of interleague play.

"Me, personally, I've really never had a chance to play against a Ken Griffey or a Frank Thomas," Phillies second baseman Mickey Morandini told The Philadelphia Inquirer. "I've never faced Roger Clemens. I never got to face Nolan Ryan. So unless you got to play against those guys in a spring-training game — which isn't the same — you didn't really get to play against the best players in the game. Now you do, and I like that part."

Braves pitcher Tom Glavine, influential in the players' association during strike talks, said he didn't forsee difficulty in striking an interleague play deal between players and owners.

"I can't see us being against anything that would create more interest in our game," he told the Chicago Tribune.

NHL: Gretzky has two All-Star MVP's in 14 seasons hard to come back from that and is staging this year's game in the new FleetCenter.

(From 1C)

On Friday, the board of governors approved the sales of the Dallas Stars and the Winnipeg Jets, who will move to Phoenix.

"The lockout certainly had its share of moments, but for the most part the game is bigger and better and reaching more people than ever," said Mark Messier of the New York Rangers.

But talk of the Gretzky controversy is intruding on this year's game. He has told the Kings to acquire a top defenseman and a top scorer, or he will leave as an unrestricted free agent after this season.

He said Friday that talks with management this week ended on a positive note but that he didn't expect a resolution for a while.

"I don't know what's going to happen. I don't really have an answer for anybody right now," Gretzky said, "but I made my point and said my piece and I don't back down from what I said."

Fellow all-stars backed him.

"I think Wayne knows he's at the twilight of his career," said Messier, who played with Gretzky on four of Edmonton's Stanley Cup teams. "It's important for him to be in a situation where he is visible in the playoffs, for the Stanley Cup, for the game. I think the league understands that."

"Wayne isn't a star player. Wayne is a superstar player that really has transcended the game," Toronto's Mike Gartner said. "He's done more for hockey in the United States over the last several years than anyone else. I think Wayne has to be treated in a more special manner."

"I think it was good for him, being a free agent at the end of the year and giving the Kings actually an opportunity to make a decision what they want to do," the Rangers' Brian Leetch said.

The Kings are tied for seventh with Vancouver in the race for the West's eight playoff spots. They are 16-19-11, and Gretzky, in his 17th NHL season and eighth with Los Angeles, is fourth in the league in scoring.

He has been the MVP twice in his previous 14 All-Star games. He holds the record for most All-Star goals with 12 and is tied with Gordie Howe for most points with 19.

On Saturday night, he'll get his wish to play with better players. Then it will be back to normal as he hopes the Kings focus on going for the Stanley Cup now rather than building for the future.

Gretzky, who turns 35 next Friday, thought the issue might come to a head earlier this week when he met with Kings officials.

"I didn't want the thoughts of the organization to be that our plan is to win three years from now because that doesn't do a whole lot of good for Wayne Gretzky," he said. "I'd like to have a chance to win now."

In that respect, he's no different than any of the other players participating in Saturday's game.

Gretzky has said St. Louis might be a possible destination. Brett Hull, his close friend, already plays there.

"We had dinner last night but we didn't talk about it," Gretzky said.

Gretzky holds the NHL single-season record with 92 goals, and Hull once scored 86. There won't be that many Saturday night, although a lot of offense is expected. The last six All-Star games have produced 104 goals.

Pittsburgh teammates Mario Lemieux and Jaromir Jagr, the NHL's top two scorers and the leading vote getters in the all-star balloting, lead the Eastern Conference.

The other East starters are wing Brendan Shanahan of Hartford, defensemen Scott Stevens of New Jersey and Ray Bourque of Boston and goalie Martin Brodeur of New Jersey.

The West starters are Gretzky, Hull and Anaheim's Paul Kariya at forward, Coffey and Chicago's Chris Chelios on defense and Chicago's Ed Belfour in goal. Kariya replaces Vancover's Pavel Bure, who is injured.

No one, on or off the ice, is likely to attract more attention than Gretzky but he's not worried his sparkling reputation as an ambassador for the game will suffer.

"Sometimes I get criticized for not being strong enough and now I have come forward and said my piece," he said, "I said from day one that the bottom line was I wanted what was best for myself and what was best for the Los Angeles Kings.

"If it was Messier or Mario they probably would have stepped forward a long time ago and made their points clear."

The controversy is taking a toll on him.

"I'm at a point now where I won't say I'm worried about it but obviously I'm thinking about it," he said.

Street wins second World Cup

CORTINA D'AMPEZZO, Italy (AP) — Picabo Street has an affinity for Olympic tracks and for Cortina.

A surprise silver medalist in the Olympic downhill at Lillehammer in 1994, Street on Friday earned her second World Cup victory of the season and the eighth of her career at the Italian track which hosted the Olympics 40 years ago.

It was Street's second victory at the venue where she began a streak of five downhill triumphs last year.

"This is my lucky course, I love it," Street said. "It's like dancing when you go down. It's a nice, natural track. It's technical, and you can go fast without taking too many risks."

In the first of two World Cup downhills in this fashionable winter resort, Street was timed in 1 minute, 28.84 seconds, beating Sweden's Pernilla Wiberg by 0.58 seconds and Italy's Isolde Kostner by 0.61.

It was the best downhill finish since March 1994 for Wiberg, an Olympic and world giant slalom champion.

She said her improvement in downhill resulted from training with Street last summer.

"I have learned from her to like speed and downhill a lot," Wiberg said.

Wiberg will skip a World Cup downhill and a super-G at Crans Montana Feb. 3-4 to prepare for the World Championships, which begin at Sierra Nevada, Spain, Feb. 11.

Street plans to start in all speed races prior to Sierra Nevada, where she can become the first American woman to win a world downhill title.

Last year, she became the first American woman to win the World Cup downhill title.

"I feel strong ... I feel that I can win the world title," Street said.

The free-spirited Street said disco and pop music help her relax and concentrate on winning.

"I listen to the same tape throughout the season," she said. "I'm more energetic after hearing music."

She skied a faultless run down the 2,490-meter long Olimpia Tofane.

She said that the presence of her mother Dee — for the first time at the finish line of a European race — did not affect her.

"Before the race, she told me, don't worry about me," Street said. "And I did it."

Olympic downhill champion Katja Seizinger of Germany was eighth in 1:29.99.

World Cup leader Martina Ertl, a giant slalom specialist, finished 19th, but remained on top of the overall standings with 784 points.

Austrian Anita Wachter earned two points for finishing 29th and held second with 717 points. Seizinger was third with 709 points.

Street strengthened her lead in the downhill standings, with 300 points, and vaulted to seventh place overall, with 428. She won at Lake Louise in Canada earlier this season and placed third at St. Anton.

Another downhill will be held Saturday and a giant slalom Sunday.

School district prepares gender inequity report

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Corpus Christi school district officials are preparing a report to describe how and when they will correct inequities in girls athletics.

An investigation last year by the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights concluded there are inequities in the district's baseball and softball facilities that discriminate against female players.

The school district was found in violation of Title IX, which outlaws gender-based discrimination in athletic programs at schools receiving federal money.

Investigators gave district officials until Feb. 1 to submit a report describing how they plan to correct the problems.

District Athletic Director Richard Avila said he met with Superintendent Abelardo Saavedra and maintenance department personnel Thursday morning to plan the district's report.

Saavedra agrees there are inequities but says the district has been trying to address the problem. Because the district implemented softball last year, it has not had time nor sufficient funding to bring girls facilities in line with those for boys, he said.

One problem is the girls play their games at a city-owned softball complex and the fields do not meet University Interscholastic League specifications for girls fastpitch softball.

Avila notes that a bond issue approved by voters in September allocates $700,000 for construction of two softball game fields.

"We've already improved," Avila told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times in Friday editions. "We didn't have softball before last year and now we have it. We have (practice) fields. This year we have three coaches at each campus and before that we had two or one. That's a definite improvement."

When Avila became athletic director four years ago, the district offered nine UIL sports to boys and seven to girls. It since has added softball and volleyball for girls.

The district played its first softball schedule last year. Volleyball is scheduled to begin at the seventh- and eighth-grade levels next year.

The Office for Civil Rights began its investigation in 1993 after receiving two complaints that the school district was discriminating against female athletes.

TCU officials glad state fined sports agent who funneled money

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Christian officials say they are glad that the state fined a sports agent $16,500 for funneling money to Horned Frog running back Andre Davis.

The fine was part of a settlement between Jeffrey R. Newport and the Texas Secretary of State Antonio Garza, who registers and regulates sports agents.

"I'm elated that we have the (agent) law in the state of Texas and we have some teeth in the law," said TCU athletic director Frank Windegger. "Things of this nature can go a long way toward eradicating this problem — agents dealing with (college) players."

Under a 1987 law, sports agents are required to register with the Texas Secretary of State.

Newport, a Houston attorney, and his employees also are forbidden from acting as a sports agent for two years, under the settlement.

Newport was out of the state and could not be reached for comment, said a spokeswoman at his office.

Davis from Longview, was suspended by the NCAA for four games last season for accepting benefits from Newport through his former roommate.

The NCAA said the benefits were given to Davis based on the expectation they would be repaid when he signed a contract with an NFL team, which is a violation of NCAA rules.

According to the settlement, Newport bought a $250,000 disability insurance policy for Davis in December of 1994 and provided money and clothing and "other things of value" to Davis through another client, Jimmy Oliver, who was once Davis' roommate. Oliver now plays for the NFL's San Diego Chargers. Jessie Stanford also helped funnel the money.

Swindel, Clemens to play in UT alumni game
