Passengers escape fiery crash

MALAGA, Spain (AP) — A Spanish charter jet en route to New York with 300 passengers crashed and burst into flames shortly after takeoff from the Malaga airport today and police said several passengers were reported trapped inside the burning aircraft.

Police also said there were injuries in the crash but gave no details.

The plane of the Spanish charter company Spantax crashed into a tree nursery shortly after taking off from this city on Spain's southern Mediterranean coast, police said.

First reports said most of the passengers and the 13-member crew escaped from the aircraft before it caught fire.

There was no immediate word on the nationalities or numbers of those aboard or whether any were hurt.

The jet was burning near the airport and alongside the Cadiz-Barcelona highway, the news agency said.

Police blocked off the highway in case the burning jet exploded. No other details were immediately known.

Princess Grace, daughter injured in car accident

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (AP) — Princess Grace and her 17-year-old daughter Stephanie were slightly injured in an automobile accident today in the hills of this island principality, the press service at the royal palace said.

"They were taken in for observation.

It is not serious," said a spokeswoman who declined use of her name.

Radio Monte Carlo said Princess Grace, 52, suffered a cracked pelvis and a broken leg. The broadcast, which could not immediately be confirmed, did not say whether her daughter sustained any injuries.

Juvenile detained in car theft

A car stolen from Pampa was recovered in Abilene, slightly worse for wear, and a 14-year-old Pampa boy has been detained by Abilene authorities in connection with the incident.

Pampa police said the boy was on parole from a Texas juvenile detention center at the time of the alleged car theft.

Police first were aware of the incident last Friday, when Tommy Downs, who lives just off of the Bowers City Highway, called to report his 1975

Chevrolet Blazer missing. Downs said the vehicle was stolen sometime Thursday night from the Halliburton yards at 300 S. West.

The next day, the sheriff's office in Abilene notified Pampa police that the stolen vehicle had been recovered there.

The sheriff's office downstate said the vehicle was abandoned and slightly damaged.

The Pampa boy has been referred to juvenile authorities in connection with the vehicle theft.

New anti-crime package being sent to Congress by Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is asking Congress to make it tougher for juries to find defendants innocent by reason of insanity, the verdict that enabled presidential assailant John W. Hinckley Jr. to escape conviction.

The controversial legislative package, a project of presidential counselor Edwin Meese III, a former prosecutor, was being sent to the House and Senate today. Chances of congressional passage this year are considered slim.

The three-point proposal also was expected to include provisions designed to make it harder to escape conviction because of tainted evidence or to appeal to federal courts after conviction in state courts.

Hinckley, who was acquitted in the attempted assassination of President Reagan by reason of insanity, says sending him to a mental hospital instead of prison "is the American Way."

In an unsolicited letter to Newsweek magazine published in the Sept. 20 issue, Hinckley defends the insanity defense, and says abolishing it would be "a travesty of justice."

In the letter, written at St. Elizabeths Hospital in Washington, where Hinckley is incarcerated under court order, Hinckley says, "Let's leave the insanity defense alone and accept the fact that every once in a while, someone is going to use this 'defense of last resort' and win with it."

Reagan didn't mention Hinckley when he told a national radio audience on Saturday that he would propose what he called "common sense revisions" in laws governing the use of the insanity defense in federal criminal cases. But he said the defense "has been much misinterpreted and abused."

Attorney General William French Smith said Sunday the administration would like to see insanity eliminated as a defense, except when the mental illness is so severe that the intent to commit the crime cannot be established.

"If that necessary intent is not there because of mental defect, then, of course, the crime itself would not be established," Smith said on the ABC television program "This Week with David Brinkley."

"If the crime is established and there is an insanity element to the crime, then that would be something that should be considered during sentencing," the attorney general added.

Helms starts new attempt to halt filibuster

WASHINGTON (AP) — Conservatives in the Senate are preparing a final assault on a liberal filibuster which has so far blocked action on proposed restrictions on legalized abortion.

Opponents of the anti-abortion legislation pushed by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., believe they have painted conservatives into a procedural corner from which they cannot escape.

"We are in a real position of strength," Nannette Falkenberg, director of the National Abortion Rights Action League, said in an interview.

In a critical test last week, the Senate refused by 19 votes to curb a filibuster led by Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore. Conservatives were able to muster only 41 of the 60 votes needed for cloture, the legislative term for limiting debate to 100 hours.

Helms said he expects to improve that total by at least 10 votes this week. More attempts to snap the filibuster were scheduled for today, and probably Tuesday and Wednesday.

Helms said some senators who were absent last week will vote to shorten the debate. Among them were Republicans Orrin Hatch of Utah and Robert Dole of Kansas.

Sources said Majority Leader Howard Baker wants to end the abortion debate by Wednesday and move the Senate on to other issues.

The abortion legislation, and another proposal which would eliminate Supreme Court jurisdiction over voluntary school prayer, are attached to a federal debt ceiling bill which must be approved by Oct. 1. Otherwise, the government will be without authority to borrow funds to keep operating.

Two arrested in burglary

Pampa police have arrested a 19-year-old Pampa man and a 16-year-old juvenile in connection with the burglary of a Pampa house, which netted thieves a bottle of whiskey and a video game.

The burglary occurred last Thursday night at the home of Ray Romack, 1024 Neel Rd.

Romack reported that a liter-bottle of Crown Royal Whiskey and a home-TV video game had been taken during the burglary.

The next day, a warrant was issued charging Roy D. Britt, 1052 Neel Rd., with the crime, and Britt was arrested by Pampa police detective L.A. Brown.

Britt was arraigned on the burglary charge before Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge, who set bond at $15,000.

A 16-year-old Pampa boy was also detained in connection with the burglary, and the youth has been referred to juvenile authorities, according to Pampa police.

Police said the missing items were recovered.

Congressional seniority to be tested Tuesday

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

The value of congressional seniority gets severely tested Tuesday when two senior senators and the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee face tough challenges in a coast-to-coast series of primary elections.

Under attack from within their own parties are Republican Sen. Robert Stafford of Vermont, Democratic Sen. Howard Cannon of Nevada and Rep. Clement Zablocki, Democratic chairman of the foreign affairs panel.

Another incumbent in trouble is Gov. Edward King of Massachusetts, who is being challenged by former Gov. Michael Dukakis, the man King defeated in the Democratic primary four years ago.

Stafford is being criticized for having become too much a part of the congressional establishment during his 10 years in the Senate.

"In all the years I've been in public office," said Stafford, "I've never seen so blatant an attempt to capitalize on general dissatisfaction with an institution or incumbency."

Stafford's opponents, Stewart Ledbetter and John McClaughry, have criticized the senator for his overseas travel and preoccupation with environmental issues. Stafford is chairman of the Senate Environment and Public Works committee.

Cannon, a veteran of 24 years in the Senate, faces a similar attack from Rep. Jim Santini, who opened his primary challenge by declaring that "incumbency is not an automatic divine right to office."

In Wisconsin, the 69-year-old Zablocki is battling a 42-year-old challenger in the Democratic primary. "Thirty-four years is a long time for anybody," argues Lynn Adelman, referring to Zablocki's length of service in the House. "I think people realize it's time for a change."

Those congressional races are among the tighter contests in 12 states and the District of Columbia where voters will go to the polls on Tuesday. In 10 states voters will choose nominees for governor. Ten incumbent senators are seeking renomination, but only Cannon and Stafford have serious opposition.

In the 51 House districts, only 14 incumbents have opponents. There is no incumbent running in seven of the House districts.

Wisconsin will be the first state to hold a statewide vote on the nuclear freeze. The question on the ballot will be whether to inform the president and Congress "that it is the desire of the people of Wisconsin to have the government of the United States work vigorously to negotiate a mutual nuclear weapons moratorium and reduction, with appropriate verification, with the Soviet Union and other nations." At least that was the intent. Because of a clerical error, the word "weapons" was dropped from the ballot. However, since the vote is only advisory anyway and since people of the state are aware of the issue, state officials have said the omission won't really make any difference.

Two familiar names are on the ballot in Minnesota — Eugene McCarthy and Harold Stassen — but neither is given much chance for a successful comeback.

In Washington, D.C., former Carter Cabinet official, Patricia Roberts Harris, is challenging Mayor Marion Barry in the Democratic primary. Barry is seeking a second four-year term and has the endorsement of The Washington Post. The winner of the primary is virtually assured election in November in the strongly Democratic city.

One of the closest and nastiest primary fights is in Massachusetts where Dukakis is portraying King as a Democratic version of President Reagan and describing the King administration as riddled with corruption.

King has tried to move his differences with Dukakis on the issue of capital punishment to the forefront of the primary campaign.

Dukakis vetoed death penalty legislation when he was governor.

The other states holding primary elections Tuesday are Colorado, Maryland, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Utah, Washington and Wyoming.

McCarthy, who served two terms as a senator from Minnesota before deciding not to seek re-election in 1970, is a decided underdog in a Democratic Senate primary against Mark Dayton. The winner will challenge GOP Sen. David Durenberger in the general election.

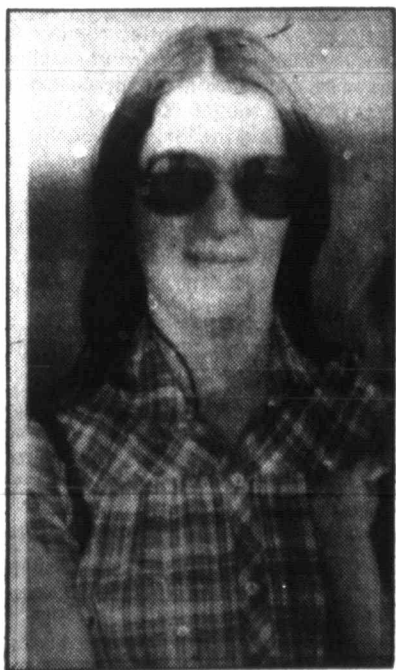

Among McCarthy's problems with Democratic voters is the fact he endorsed Reagan for president in 1980.

Is there too much football on television?

Beverly Condit, Groom: "I guess it's all right the way it is. My husband is a big Cowboy fan. Sometimes I think he spends too much time in front of the TV, especially when something needs to be done. He's going to kill me for saying that."

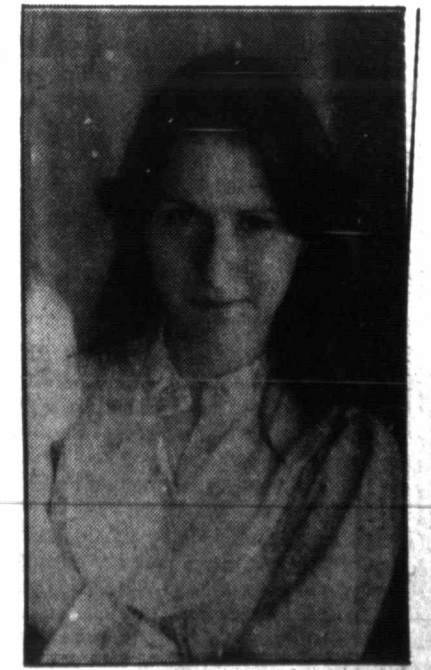

Sherry Terry, Pampa: "I think there may be too many games on the weekends. I'd rather see more western movies instead. My husband isn't much of a football fan anyway. The only sport he cares about is wrestling."

Shirley Flemming, Groom: "I like football, but I don't watch it on TV. I really don't know if there's too much football."

Glenda Hilton, Pampa: "I've never really noticed how much football there is on TV. I really haven't paid that much attention. I am a Dallas Cowboys fan."

Virginia Martinez, Pampa: "There is. I'd rather see more volleyball." "I'm really not much of a football fan."

Detroit teachers threaten strike, walkouts in three other states

By The Associated Press

Public school teachers in Detroit vowed to strike today unless they got a new contract as negotiations broke down over the school board's demand for concessions to ease a budget deficit in the 200,000-student district.

Talks between the school board and the union representing 11,000 teachers broke down about 3 a.m. today, 4 1/2 hours before the strike deadline, and teachers in the state's largest school district were asked to report to their union representatives.

"It looks like a strike right now," Michigan Federation of Teachers President Hugh Jarvis said Sunday before negotiators went back to the bargaining table.

About 73,500 students were due back in school as teacher walkouts ended in two other Michigan districts over the weekend, and strikes in Pennsylvania, Illinois and Ohio were settled Sunday.

But more than 6,000 teachers remained on strike in Illinois, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, keeping 125,000 pupils out of class.

Detroit's teachers agreed last week to a three-day contract extension allowing school to open Wednesday. The extension expired Friday, and teachers said they would strike at 7:30 a.m. today without a new contract.

Jarvis said a state-appointed fact-finder, David Tanzman, recommended that the talks break off today after the union rejected a school board demand that teachers give up four days' holiday pay. No new negotiations were scheduled.

Despite the breakdown, school Superintendent Arthur Jefferson asked students to report to classes today, and said he would try to keep schools open with supervisors.

John Elliott, president of the Detroit Federation of Teachers, said the union's refusal to work without a contract was "irreversible."

The school board wants the 11,000 teachers, who earn between $15,000 and $30,000 a year, to take an 8 percent cut in pay because of a $23 million budget deficit. Elliott said the deficit issue was being "overplayed" and called for a committee to determine the extent of the deficit.

Elsewhere in Michigan, about 700 teachers in Waterford voted Sunday to approve a new contract, ending a strike that began last Tuesday and affected 14,000 students. And negotiators for 300 teachers in Ferndale reached a tentative agreement with the school board over the weekend and were set to vote today on the proposed contract. If the contract is approved, classes would start Tuesday for 5,000 students.

Strikes by about 2,070 teachers continued in the Michigan districts of Troy, Southfield, Novi, Traverse City, Lake City, Suttons Bay and Fenton, affecting nearly 40,000 students.

In Pennsylvania, meanwhile, 755 teachers ended a 19-day strike affecting 17,500 handicapped students in the Allegheny Intermediate Unit. Classes were to resume today.

But 16 Pennsylvania school districts remained paralyzed by strikes involving about 2,500 teachers and 46,000 students. And about 300 teachers in the Greater Johnstown School District rejected a proposed contract Sunday and vowed to strike the 4,900-student district today.

But 16 Pennsylvania school districts remained paralyzed by strikes involving about 2,500 teachers and 46,000 students. And about 300 teachers in the Greater Johnstown School District rejected a proposed contract Sunday and vowed to strike the 4,900-student district today.

In Illinois, a tentative agreement was reached Sunday night in the northwest Chicago suburbs of Palatine, Rolling Meadows and Hoffman Estates, where 550 teachers have been on strike since Aug. 30, and classes for about 10,500 students were to resume today.

Talks continued in Illinois' Wheaton-Warrenville district in a strike involving 600 teachers and 10,000 students. In downstate Sparta, a federally mediated bargaining session was set for Tuesday in a strike by 129 teachers affecting 2,100 pupils. No talks were scheduled in East St. Louis, Ill., where 1,300 teachers and 20,200 students have been idle since Aug. 31.

Striking teachers in North Olmsted, Ohio, approved a new contract Sunday, and a strike was averted in Elyria.

Bush hits hustings for Republicans

WASHINGTON (AP) - A few hours after Rep. Stan Parris of Virginia voted to override President Reagan's veto of a $14.2 billion spending bill, Vice President George Bush stood beaming at a Parris fund-raising party, praising the congressman's integrity and honor.

"We do not look for total rubber stamp uniformity and if we did, we wouldn't find it here," said Bush, making last week's vote against the president sound like a virtuous and courageous act.

In fact, Parris had voted counter to White House wishes a month earlier when he said no to the tax increase that Reagan had sought so desperately — and got, without the Virginian's help.

Such transgressions don't seem to matter to Bush, who — next to the Great Communicator himself — is the most sought after speaker on the 1982 midterm election campaign circuit.

The Parris appearance shows why: the congressman netted $50,000, one fourth as much as his Democratic opponent raised in his entire campaign.

The vice president is planning to speak the next five weeks on behalf of four other congressmen who voted against Reagan on the tax increase and against Reagan on the veto override.

And 19 of the political fund-raisers on Bush's schedule in September and October are for congressmen who voted to override the veto, while only three are for ones who voted to sustain the president.

In the pressure-filled weeks before the August vote, there were reports — unconfirmed and denied — that the White House had threatened to withhold campaign help from congressmen who refused to go along. If ever there was anything to that, Bush wasn't told.

"Once you start going down that road you've got real problems," says his press secretary, Peter Teeley. "What do you do with a guy who voted with you for AWACS and voted against the tax increase bill? Where do you start?"

Apparently not with Reps. Christopher Smith of New Jersey, James K. Coyne of Pennsylvania, Bill Emerson of Missouri and Benjamin A. Gilman of New York. They voted no on the tax increase and were among the 81 Republicans who helped Democrats override Reagan on the spending veto.

Parents day set at WTSU

CANYON - Any Pampa parents who want to check out the college lives of their offspring at West Texas State University in Canyon should attend the Fifth Annual Parents' Day Saturday, Sept. 25.

Parents are invited to inspect residence halls, classrooms and other campus facilities.

In addition to the school tours, parents will be guests at receptions, open houses and a football game.

Visiting moms and dads should register at 9 a.m. in the foyer of the east dining hall.

A reception with staff and faculty, and a luncheon are on tap for morning and noon activities.

A fashion show and a football preview from Athletic Director and Head Coach Don Davis are scheduled after lunch.

Afternoon activities for students and parents include golf, tennis, racquetball, billiards, 42, bowling, basketball free-throw, and a two-mile "jog, walk or crawl."

A show by high school honor choirs and the University Chorus is scheduled in the afternoon at the Northern Recital Hall.

A student horse show is scheduled at 5 p.m.

Parents Day concludes with the football game between the WTSU Buffs and McNeese State University at 7:30 p.m. in Kimbrough Memorial Stadium.

"Parents of the Year" will be honored during halftime.

For more information on Parents' Day, call Frank Castleberry, Activities Center director, at 656-3976.

Thunderstorms, tornadoes hit nation

By The Associated Press

Thunderstorms boomed and lashed towns from western Lake Superior to the Texas Panhandle early today, after tornadoes touched down in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Mississippi.

"The roof is gone, windows are out, two garages and one barn are gone," said Marie Creaser, describing the damage late Sunday from tornado-like winds that struck her home in Dunn County, west of Eau Claire, Wis.

Authorities said about two dozen homes or apartments on Eau Claire's southern fringes were damaged by the storms and four people from nearby Altoona were treated for injuries caused by broken glass.

Downed power lines and power outages were reported in north central Oklahoma, which was pounded by hail, high winds and brief, heavy downpours. Winds of over 60 mph struck Oklahoma City, officials said. Scattered power outages also occurred in Tulsa.

In Viola, Kan., southwest of Wichita, two people were slightly injured when the winds toppled a barn.

Six killed in auto accident

PITTSBURGH, Texas (AP) - Six people were killed and another person was injured early today when two cars collided head-on and burst into flames two miles south of here on U.S. Highway 271, the Department of Public Safety said.

DPS spokesman Larry Todd said one of the cars veered into the other's lane about 1:30 a.m. today. He said five of the victims were in one vehicle.

Todd said the DPS had only been able to identify one of the dead, Jackie McElhane, 18, of Pittsburgh.

Linda Jo Capps, 16, of Muskogee, Okla., a passenger in the vehicle driven by McElhane, was in Pittsburgh Medical & Surgical Hospital. A spokesman for the hospital refused to release any information about the condition of Miss Capps.

Usury ceilings go up, up and away

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

State usury ceilings limiting the amount of interest lenders could charge on different types of loans are gradually being eliminated in many areas, but the battle is far from over.

Voters in at least two states — Arkansas and Washington — will get their say on the issue on election day in November.

The changes in usury laws mean that WHERE you borrow is more important than ever. If your bank credit card is issued in Illinois, for example, there is no limit on the amount of interest the bank can charge on your unpaid balance. If it's issued in Arkansas, there's a 10 percent maximum. And there are almost as many variations of the rules as there are states.

The trend toward doing away with — or at least raising — the interest limits began a little more than two years ago. Market interest rates were rising sharply, but state usury laws restricted the amount those same lenders could charge.

In 1980, Congress passed legislation overriding state usury ceilings on home mortgages and some other categories of loans. States themselves started moving to change limits for interest on other loans. Some states, notably Delaware and South Dakota, abolished ceilings on most consumer loans and encouraged out-of-state banks to move their credit-card operations to take advantage of the new, more liberal regulations.

Lawmakers in the state of Washington, where the maximum interest on retail credit had been limited to 12 percent a year, approved a measure setting the ceiling at 4 percentage points above the rate on six-month U.S. Treasury bills.

Labor unions and consumer groups opposed the measure, however, and succeeded in placing in initiative on the November ballot to restore the 12 percent ceiling.

The situation is reversed in Arkansas. Bankers and other lenders are pushing for change through voter action. An amendment on the Nov. 2 ballot would repeal the state's 10 percent usury limit with a floating ceiling of up to a maximum of 17 percent.

The federal picture remains almost as complicated as the state one.

A House panel rejected a proposal late last year that would have pre-empted all state usury ceilings.

Demo convention ends, but politicking continues at the Hay-Mauro wedding DALLAS (AP) — At what one Democratic presidential hopeful called the "Pillsbury Bake-Off" of aspiring candidates, U.S. Sen. Gary Hart was really cooking.

The 44-year-old Coloradoan seemed to have campaign workers everywhere at the convention of the Texas Democratic Party, even though he has not officially announced his campaign.

Four other would-be Democratic presidential nominees were at the meeting that brought about 5,600 people to the Dallas Convention Center Friday and Saturday, but only Hart had people passing out campaign T-shirts. Only Hart had a huge banner draped near the speaker's platform.

Former Vice President Walter Mondale got the warmest reception when he addressed the convention Saturday morning, and a telegram from the absent U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts drew the second-largest round of applause, but Hart came in third.

His vocal supporters clearly outnumbered those for former Florida Gov. Reuben Askew, U.S. Sens. Alan Cranston of California and Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina — who were present — and U.S. Sen. John Glenn, who was not, but sent a telegram.

"In the straw poll at the convention, we went from 8 percent name recognition to 14 percent, and I think by the time it was over we had 20 percent," said John Poulard, 28, a Dallas lawyer who was Hart's advance man.

Poulard said that Hart spent seven hours on the convention floor, visited every delegation, and shook hands with every delegate.

"I estimate he shook 4,500 hands on the floor, and we got commitments from hundreds of people," Poulard said Sunday. "I think we have coordinators in every county."

The sibling rivalry among Democrats who might be running against each other in 1984 highlighted the convention, but delegates also re-elected party chairman Bob Slagle by a huge margin and approved the 1982 platform without discussion.

Brotherly love and party unity were on everybody's lips.

Askew, who said he has visited 50 states in his quest for the presidential nomination before coming to the "Pillsbury Bake-off" of presidential candidates in Texas, focused on unity.

"Just as there must be unity among Texas Democrats, there must be unity among all Democrats, and among all Americans," Askew said. "Never before has the need for American unity been any greater."

Hart lightly touched on unity, then called for a high-tech revolution that could firmly plant computers on the assembly line and in the classroom.

"Like all Americans, Democrats have always believed that the human mind can shape the future. Our willingness to change — to be revolutionaries — has guaranteed our survival and renewed our spirit," Hart said.

Hollings called for a more traditional route to economic recovery, saying, "You can't deliver grain with an optic fiber."

Mondale, like the others, blasted the Reagan administration, praised Texas Democrats, and called for a united effort in November.

"We can win this election. There are always more Democrats than Republicans because we're a handsomer, sexier bunch and we have more children," Mondale said. "But we sometimes lose because we fight a lot — we're hot-blooded."

The politicking didn't end with the convention Saturday night. Hart and Cranston continued working at a wedding party. Jess Hay, board chairman of Lomas & Nettleton, the nation's largest mortgage banking company, married off his daughter Patty, 25.

Republican convention opens fall campaign

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas Republicans opened and closed their state convention with prayers, and in between preached victory in November.

Texas Gov. Bill Clements proclaimed, "is on the brink of becoming a two-party state."

While Democrats in convention in Dallas were congratulating each other on party unity, Clements was saying "the whole myth of Democratic unity" already had been demolished with the endorsement of GOP candidates by Democrats.

"Many of our candidates this year are former Democrats. All I can say is: Welcome. Come on in, the water's fine!" said Clements.

Before the Republican convention closed Saturday night, more than 3,750 delegates re-elected Chester Upham of Mineral Wells as state Republican chairman and Dorothy Doehne of San Antonio as vice chairwoman. Upham had no opposition.

Mrs. Doehne, a long-time supporter of President Reagan, defeated Libba Barnes, who worked for John Connally's unsuccessful 1980 presidential bid, 2,315 to 1,336. Mrs. Barnes also is from San Antonio.

The possibility of Reagan visiting Texas surfaced when a national GOP committeewoman Fran Chiles said the president had been invited to attend a gathering of statewide GOP candidates at a ranch near Fort Worth on Sept. 18. She said the White House had not said if Reagan would accept.

Delegates also, in effect, killed a proposal to hold a presidential primary in 1984 and selected their 62-member state executive committee, which included 27 holdovers from the current committee.

The executive committee voted to spend $105,000 on advertising supporting the Republican slate of candidates for statewide office. GOP executive director Wayne Thorburn said this would be in addition to $405,000 in party funds already spent this year on certain races.

One plank in the platform, which was adopted Saturday night, reaffirmed GOP support for the Human Life Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Other planks called for repeal of the windfall profits tax, extensive repairs on Texas highways, tougher laws on drunk drivers, repeal of the Sunday closing law, and restriction of the use of insanity as a defense in criminal cases.

The convention chairman, Irving Rep. Bob Davis, said it was his "fervent hope" that Republican strength in the 181-member Legislature would rise from 44 to 58 in the November elections.

There were only 12 Republicans in the Legislature in 1971, Davis recalled, and the growth of the state GOP "indicates the voting strength of the Republican Party throughout Texas."

Nuclear weapons freeze proposal approved

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Organizers of a nuclear freeze vote that overwhelmingly passed here say that approval of the unofficial referendum sets the tone for 24 other such elections scheduled around the nation this fall.

Voters approving a $422.9 million bond election Saturday also passed by more than a 4-1 margin a proposal that calls for President Reagan to initiate a joint nuclear weapons freeze.

The next nuclear freeze proposal will be considered in a statewide referendum in Wisconsin Tuesday.

"When thousands of people come out and vote, politicians take notice," said steering committee member Nina Butts of Austin. "Our big thrust now will be to get the city council to pass a freeze resolution" to send to Reagan.

Campaign officials said about half the number of those voting in the bond election for water, sewer and park improvements, or 17,511 voters, cast ballots in the freeze proposal.

Voting in the volunteer-run election conducted outside polling places showed 14,064 for the measure and 3,451 against. Campaign officials said they had expected 25,000 to 30,000 of the city's 174,000 registered voters to cast ballots on the freeze.

Organizers of the Nuclear Weapons Freeze Campaign said earlier that they would not let bureaucratic snags that kept their proposal off the city bond referendum ballot stop them from having an election.

"I think some voters, rather than vote against, may have just passed it by," said Tony Switzer, campaign director. "But we provided a fair opportunity for them to vote."

At one polling place, more voters cast ballots on the freeze than on the bonds, volunteers said.

"We feel it's real significant because we're proving people on the East Coast aren't the only ones interested in this," Switzer said.

NWFC wanted to hold its own election in August and found about 20,000 registered voters who agreed with them. But the city council would not go along with a separate referendum, and agreed only to combine the nuclear freeze proposal with the city bond election.

However, Secretary of State David Dean rejected the combined referendum proposal because under state law, citizen initiative elections can only be held during four specific months of the year, and September is not one of them.

About 800 volunteers ran the "sidewalk election," which cost an estimated $8,000 to conduct. A state district judge and county clerk helped to organize the election.

Voters were asked to produce their registration cards and the paper ballots were counted by volunteers.

NWFC organizer George Humphrey said the polling was the largest independent election ever held in the United States.

The bond initiative that included water, sewer and parks improvements passed by margins above 75 percent.

Texas college students killed in car wreck

CLOVIS, N.M. (AP) — Three Texas Tech students were killed and three others critically injured when the car carrying them home from a college football game collided with a pickup truck, state police said.

The accident occurred at about 2 a.m. Sunday on U.S. 60-84, about 10 miles west of Clovis, said Lois Snyder, a state police dispatcher.

The students' car was eastbound and collided with the westbound pickup truck, Ms. Snyder said.

Killed were Walter Black, 18, of Houston, Patricia Marchbanks, 18, from Cresson, Texas, and Christopher Heller, 18, from San Antonio, Texas, authorities said. The three victims were pronounced dead on the scene by Bob Morgan, a medical examiner, officers said.

Listed in critical condition Sunday night at Clovis High Plains Hospital were the driver of the car, Lisa Perich, 19, of Clovis; Lisa Owens, 19, of Garland, Texas; and Gary Nordstrom, 19, of Arlington, Texas, a hospital official said.

Another student, Brian Tuerff, 18, of Houston, was listed in satisfactory condition, said Sandra Grigsby, nursing supervisor at the hospital.

Amistad Dam tourism helps offset peso devaluation

By MACK SISK
Associated Press Writer

DEL RIO, Texas (AP) — They originally wanted to call it Diablo Dam, based on the Spanish word for devil, but former Mexico President Adolfo Lopez Mateos decided that Amistad (friendship) Dam would be a more appropriate name.

Since it was completed across the Rio Grande here 13 years ago this month, Amistad Dam has proven to be an economic angel to this area once known primarily for its sheep and goats.

While border cities are suffering a severe economic slowdown because of the devaluation of the Mexican peso, tourists attracted to the huge reservoir in semi-arid Southwest Texas are helping Del Rio through the crisis.

"Right now, considering the circumstances in Mexico, as a border town we are in much better shape than most of them because not only have we trade with Mexico, but we have tourism and the air base (Laughlin AFB), ranching and other things," said Jodie Williamson, executive vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce.

"We have American tourists who come to the lake that we will always have, and it's a growing thing," she said.

While many shopping malls in other border cities were reporting sales off 65 percent after the peso's value was cut in half by the devaluation, rooms at Del Rio motels were at a premium as fishermen and boaters headed for the lake.

"If you come, we'd have to hang you on a nail, because we're booked solid and have been for the last three weeks," said Nell Rose at Amistad Lodge just prior to the Labor Day weekend.

HOUSTON (AP) — A Department of Highways and Public Transportation survey says that Texas motorists are generally obeying the 55-mph speed limit for the first time since the law was passed eight years ago.

Survey results, released Sunday, said that half of Texas drivers are obeying the 55-mph speed limit.

One Texas Department of Public Safety official said 50.3 motorists apparently are driving slower to save lives, save gas and prevent costly tickets.

More than two-thirds of all drivers checked by the highway department were breaking the law in 1973, the last year motorists could legally drive 70 mph, the survey said.

Reacting to the Arab oil embargo, the state officially adopted the 55 mph speed limit in January 1974 as a fuel-saving measure.

"They coming from Odessa, Midland, Austin, San Antonio, New Mexico, all over."

The late President Dwight D. Eisenhower and Lopez Mateos decided on the name for the proposed dam in October 1960 in the neighboring Mexican city of Ciudad Acuna.

Former President Richard Nixon and former Mexico President Gustavo Diaz Ordaz dedicated the dam at a celebration on Sept. 8, 1969.

With 10,000 people looking on, the two presidents embraced beneath the seven-foot tall bronze U.S. and Mexican eagles at the center of the six-mile long structure, which cost $80 million.

The National Parks Service reports that the Amistad Recreation Area it operates attracted 992,250 visitors last year and the figure is expected to top 1 million for the first time in 1982, considering visitation through June was running 240,000 ahead of last year.

Ms. Williamson said Texas tourism officials estimate that each of those tourists spends an average $65 a day, greatly enhancing the local economy.

Since it began impounding water from the Rio Grande, Devil's and Pecos Rivers in 1968, Amistad Dam has backed up water through the region for 74 miles, making it the third largest manmade lake in the world that's shared by two countries, says the U.S. Corps of Engineers.

On the Texas side of the lake, marinas, hotels, motels, restaurants, campgrounds and bathhouses have sprung up across the former scrubby range to accommodate the thousands who come to camp, fish, water ski, swim, and hike.

"Del Rio really boomed when the lake filled up," said Ms. Rose, 58, who was reared on a ranch that now is covered by several feet of water. "We can't feel it (peso devaluation here). Some people in town are feeling it a little, but as far as recreation on the lake, we can't feel it a great deal. The fishermen are still coming."

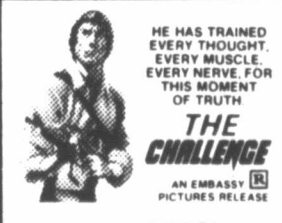

Besides the huge recreation area created by the dam, second in size in Texas only to Lake Texoma on the Oklahoma border.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Coving Commandment.

Sanctions against firms should stick

The French government and an American corporation, Dresser Industries of Dallas, called President Reagan's bluff on recent sanctions against the Soviet natural gas pipeline. The administration had no choice but to enforce its sanctions or surrender its credibility.

Letting this challenge go unanswered would have been tantamount to admitting the government of the United States is helpless to prevent the use of American technology in ways that diminish the nation's security.

The pipeline project — the latest East-West trade deal in history — promises to yield the Soviets $10 billion a year in hard currency. Much of this windfall will inevitably be used to purchase Kremlin needs to modernize its economy and to build ever more lethal weaponry.

The pipeline will also render Western Europe progressively more dependent on the Soviet Union for energy. By the mid-1980s, one-third of West Germany's natural gas will come from the Soviet Union. By the end of the decade, that percentage will likely jump to one-half. Only the hopelessly naive could believe that the Kremlin will not sooner or later seek to exploit this economic leverage for political gain.

Western European governments may profess to be immune to such pressure, but that is no reason for the United States to pretend that the pipeline project represents anything other than an immense economic and political gain for the Soviet Union.

France's socialist government moved from condemnation of the Reagan sanctions to open defiance. President Francois Mitterrand's ministers ordered French subsidiaries of U.S. companies to ignore Reagan's ban on the sale of American technology for the pipeline.

At immediate issue are the three gas compressors manufactured under license by Dresser Industries' French subsidiary. The French government also ordered a second French company manufacturing turbine rotors under license from General Electric to ignore the sanctions as well.

As for Dresser itself, its lawyers recently went to court to seek an injunction against any enforcement of the sanctions by the federal government. Dresser lost, but may try other legal approaches to blocking the sanctions.

The Reagan administration's options, now under review by the Justice Department, range from possible criminal prosecution of any companies or executives who defy the sanctions to administrative action barring European violators from purchasing goods in the United States. The Commerce Department recently invoked this penalty against Dresser Industries' French subsidiary.

The administration could also make one last attempt to negotiate compliance by European governments and the subsidiaries of U.S. corporations. Now that the administration has demonstrated that it intends to make its sanctions stick, negotiations might have a better chance of success. But time is fast running out. The first three Dresser compressors are on their way to the Soviet Union.

European legal and political arguments against the sanctions do not stand the test of international law or simple logic. Most contracts covering the manufacture of American-licensed technology abroad contain standard clauses specifically permitting the U.S. government to cancel sales if they harm this country's interests.

The natural gas Europeans propose to purchase from the Soviet Union could come instead from the North Sea.

If the Francois Mitterrands and Helmut Schmidts of Europe want to mortgage their own countries' political future in an effort to revive the fraudulent detente of the 1970s, that is their business. But let them do it without the aid of American technology.

And let the Soviets not get away with making American corporations accomplices in a pipeline project that will likely be built in part with slave labor and will certainly diminish the security of the West.

Lenders face faulty loans

Neither a borrower nor a lender be, Polonius advised his son. The world runs on credit, nonetheless. It is left to bankers to exercise prudence in their lending, and to urge the same prudence in borrowers, to prove that the high-principled Polonius was wrong.

But the gathering problems for the international banking community suggest there has been something less than prudence by both lenders and borrowers in the flow of credit from the United States. Western Europe and Japan into the Third World and the communist bloc.

The bad news from Mexico has been especially bad for U.S. banks. By one calculation, our nine biggest banks have the equivalent of 40 percent of their capital and reserves tied up in the faltering Mexican economy. Falling oil revenues and fiscal mismanagement have left Mexico scrambling to cover payments due on an $80 billion foreign debt.

Mexico's predicament is not unique. Disappointing oil exports also have made Nigeria a basket case. Sudan and Zaire are rescheduling debts because of a slump in export revenue. The list of problem clients for international bankers in this hemisphere includes not only Mexico but Costa Rica, Jamaica, Nicaragua and Bolivia. Even Argentina, otherwise doing well in managing its credits, may be unable to cover current debts because of its costly Falklands war.

Poland is not the only communist country unable to cover its debts to Western banks. Hungary and Romania also are in trouble. Some bankers are even worried about the relatively productive East German economy.

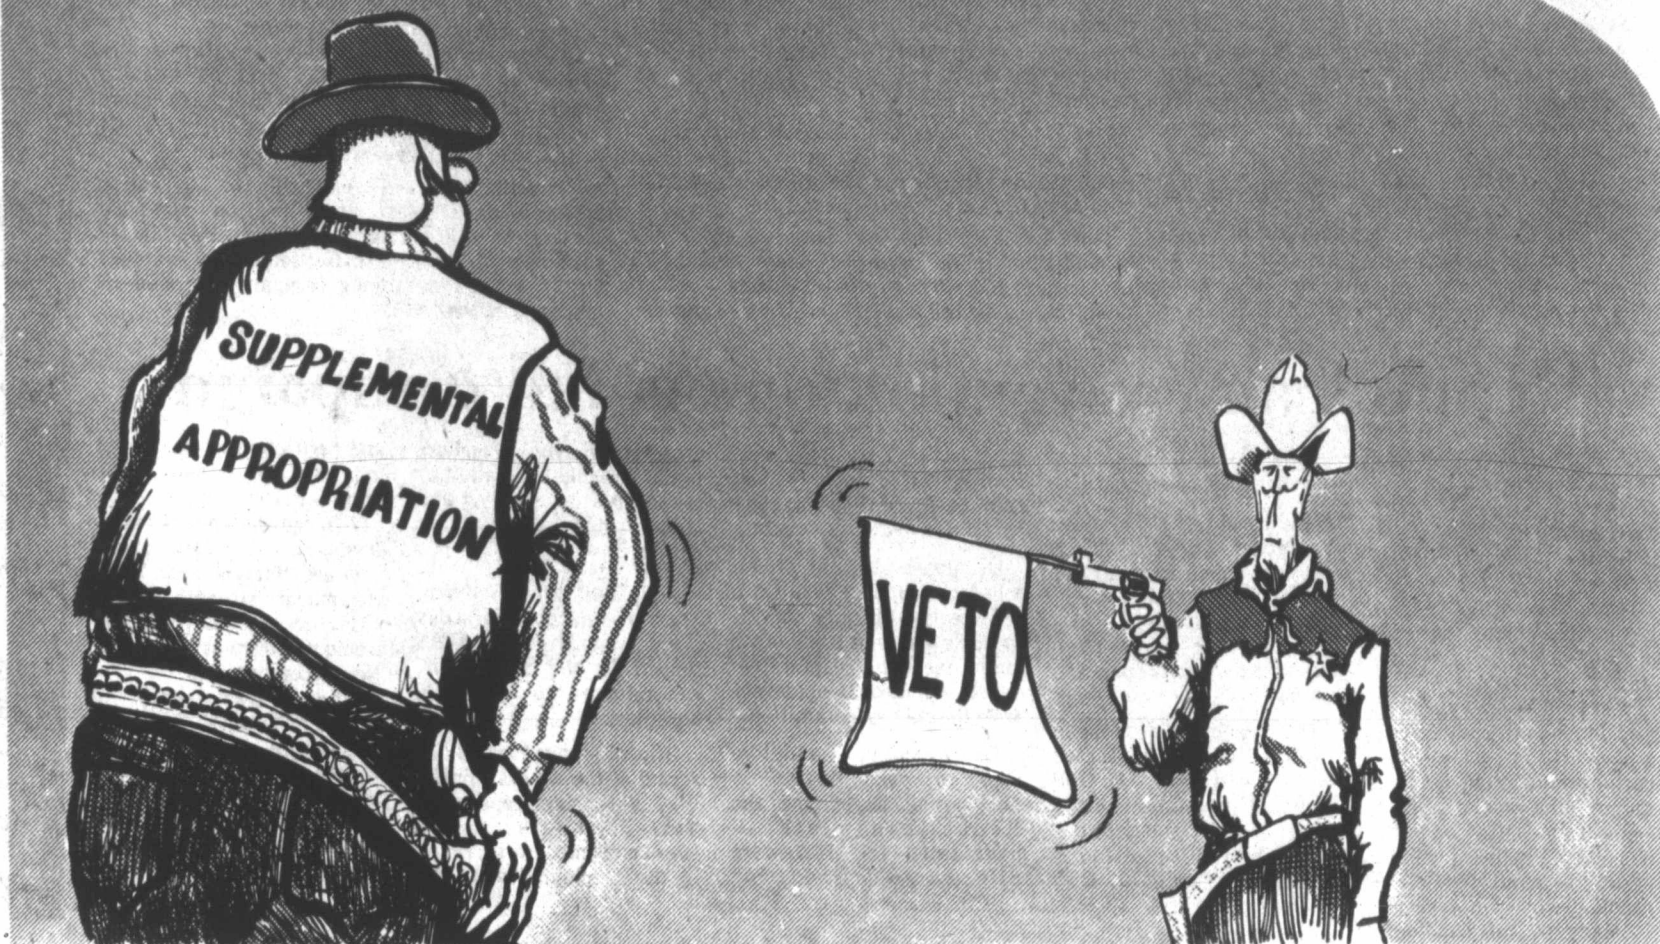

The total in outstanding international bank loans stood at $70 billion only a decade ago. Today it is estimated at $300 billion, and the signals from abroad indicate rough weather ahead if there are further defaults. These problems add to the strain on the U.S. banking system produced by the high rate of mortgage foreclosures and bankruptcies in our own economy.

The U.S. government has aided and abetted the extension of credit to foreign countries with loan guarantees and other programs that had the best intentions. We are a trading nation. Loans which help other countries develop their economic potential serve our mutual interest. A rising tide lifts all boats.

But good intentions are never enough to repeal the laws of economic reality. It was those loan guarantees that expedited loans which otherwise would have been judged too risky. The peril of those excessive risks is being felt now.

We are seeing what happens to over-ambitious borrowers and lenders when the tide turns. International banks have been pouring loans into foreign countries with doubtful records of fiscal responsibility or with socialist systems known to be inefficient and unproductive. Both borrowers and lenders are victims of their own unrealistic optimism in projections of economic growth.

Bankers dealing with less developed countries now must do what they have been reluctant to do in the past — be hard-bitten in responding to requests for new loans or rescheduling of old ones.

By DON GRAFF

Honduras wants help.

The country has had the good fortune so far not to have shared the internal warfare wracking its Central American neighbors, but it has not been spared some of the unpleasant consequences. It is unwilling host to a flow of refugees and as it has just informed the United Nations High Commission for Refugees in Geneva, it is not fair that the poorest country in the region should have to carry the heaviest burden.

And Honduras is poor — so poor, as some cynics put it, that it can't even afford a revolution of its own. Not that it is unfamiliar with the basic ingredients of Central American revolution.

What wealth there is in Honduras is not shared equitably. But, its poor because there is less wealth and more land, the disparity between land-owning elite and largely Indian peasantry is not so grotesque as in El Salvador.

The country has been misgoverned and exploited, but not as ruthlessly as Somoza's Nicaragua.

The real power is held by the military. But it has not been exercised as murderously as in Guatemala. And in January, the army actually made good on a promised transition to civilian rule.

Poor it may be, but Honduras, which traditionally has sought to remain on the sidelines of Central America's more turbulent affairs, has been an oasis of relative stability in the region's current troubles.

For that reason, it has also become a focal point of U.S. activity. Particularly of the military type.

It is receiving some $10 million in arms aid this year and more than $60 million has been promised over the next several. American "Mobile Training Teams" are teaching Honduran troops the rudiments of handling sophisticated new equipment. Several Honduran airfields to be modernized at a cost of $21 million could handle U.S. planes should need arise.

The Honduran army is being strengthened and the jet-equipped air force is already regarded as the most powerful in Central America.

None of this is being forced upon the Hondurans. The new civilian president, Dr. Roberto Suazo Cordova, apparently is in basic agreement with the Reagan administration as to the threat posed to the entire region by Nicaragua and requested assistance in a July visit to Washington.

But it is a heavy burden to be placed on a country in Honduras' underdeveloped condition. The basic banana republic, the country has been hit along with the rest of Central America by declining world prices for the agricultural products it lives on while the cost of imported energy has escalated. Unemployment is chronic and increasing.

On top of all this, there are the refugees — some 30,000 by latest estimate. Most numerous and unwelcome are the Salvadorans, a continuing flow that has brought the Honduran army into cooperation with the Salvadoran military in an attempt to stem.

Most worrying are the Nicaraguans, especially several thousand veterans of Somoza's national guard waging a border war against Sandinist forces — some quarters charge with the assistance of the Honduran military. There is a real danger that the clashes could escalate into a full-fledged conflict, anew front in the Central American wars.

The first casualty would be the relative stability and tentative opening toward democracy that now make Honduras so different from its neighbors.

The temptation to use Honduras for Washington's purposes in Central America is obvious and strong. But the price could be high.

Honduras can't afford it. Neither in the end could we.

The cost of electricity

By ANTHONY HARRIGAN

In the United States, abundant electricity is taken for granted. Americans simply flip a switch and get the power that lights their homes and working places, heats houses and factories and, in general, makes modern life as we know it.

Electricity ought not to be taken for granted, however. Abundant electric power isn't automatic. It is the result of action by investors. Without continuing investment by private citizens — individuals who put their savings to work, Americans won't have abundant, reliable electric service in the future.

This is a simple fact that isn't well understood at any time. It is widely ignored at a time when so many people are feeling an economic pinch and are angry at the leveling off or downturn in their income.

In many parts of the country these days there is considerable public outcry against utilities when they seek and increase in the rates. Individual consumers and organized consumer groups call on state public service commissions and legislators to block electric power rate increases.

It's understandable that people don't want to pay more for a service. What isn't justified is that power companies should be made a scapegoat for citizens frustrated and angry because of worsening economic conditions.

For years, prices have been rising in an inflationary economy. People pay more for an automobile, hamburger, cold drink, medicine, new home, appliances — almost everything. People don't write letters to the editor, however, because a cup of coffee costs more or a motion picture ticket has doubled in cost in a few years. They continue to line up at the ticket window or the fast food outlet. Only the power companies come under a bargain of criticism.

Ironically, many consumer items have increased at least ten fold over the last quarter century, and yet the screams never seem to die down because electricity now costs about three to four times what it did then. Utilities don't expect the public to shed tears for them, but they ask for some intelligent understanding of their problems. They face peculiar and severe regulatory problems. A request for a rate hike may take a couple of years to be approved. They have huge capital requirements for new generating plants. There is a long lead time involved in building a power plant, during which costs rise very rapidly. Rate relief is often too little and too late.

The public needs to be educated regarding the financial realities confronting the utilities. Without investment, continued reliable electric service and new generating capacity are impossible. Without new generating capacity, a community or a state won't get new industrial plants which provide jobs.

Unless utilities have respectable earnings, they aren't able to generate new capital. As Thomas Gephart, associate editor of The Cincinnati Enquirer, has noted: "Who, after all, will risk his savings in an electric utility paying, say, 10 per cent annually when he can put them instead into a risk-free money market paying 13 per cent or 14 per cent?"

This is the basic question which consumers of electric power — all of us, that is — should address. If the politicians should succeed in putting a lid on electric power rate increases, thereby making the utilities unattractive to investors, this, in time, would mean the lights would go out and the economy would have no possibility of growing.

The generation of electric power is America's most basic industry. If it becomes a sick industry, the entire country will be sick.

The need now is for more light and less heat in the subject of utility rate increases.

No lock on labor's vote

By PAUL HARVEY

It may be that the last American President with this much charm was Franklin Roosevelt.

With stentorian eloquence on the new medium of radio FDR could have talked Oedipus into leaving home.

Democrats of the Thirties, behind his handsome facade, cruelly stuck pins in former President Hoover and effectively identified Republicanism with depression — so effectively that American labor voted Democrat for as long as that generation lived.

Democrats can't count on the labor vote any more.

President Reagan was swept into office by a political conglomerate which included enough representation among organized labor, to humble labor's leadership.

Now, stung by that rebuke from within, AFL-CIO leaders are going all-out to rally support for candidates of their own choice.

Now, stung by that rebuke from within, AFL-CIO leaders are going all-out to rally support for candidates of their own choice.

Union members are as fiercely independent as anybody; resentful of being "pushed" by anybody — even by their own union leaders.

This was demonstrated to a degree in the election of 1976 when unions overtly worked for different candidates. In 1980 most union leaders wanted Kennedy; failed even to get him nominated.

Now survey after survey reveals the electorate — including even the unemployed — however they fragment on political and economic philosophy — still approve Reagan.

John Perkins, political director for big labor, is seeking to get an endorsement of a Democrat for President early enough to bind the next convention.

But even if labor leadership should close ranks behind one candidate, even if labor members would do as they're told, their numbers have been so depleted by attrition over recent years that the 15 million who are organized are only 20.8 percent of our work force and that percentage is declining.

Labor unions, per se, have now lost so much political clout that many Democrat candidates might not want labor endorsement, fearful that it would alienate more votes than it would attract.

Big labor got burned so badly in 1972 when candidate McGovern embraced such a proliferation of women, minorities, homosexuals and others — that the white-male-dominated labor movement bolted.

So embarrassed was George Meany that he promptly withdrew the federation from active party participation.

He thereafter adopted the Walter Reuther technique of waiting until after elections, then seeking to ingratiate himself with whomever was in the White House.

Lane Kirkland might want to think about that.

Counselor's Corner

Common abuse of children

BY DAVE BRUMMETT, MDiv
Executive Director

Top O' Texas Counseling Center

School has begun. It is not only for the children because you and I have some responsibilities to handle too. They will make their transitions to new teachers, new students and those who have not been seen since school terminated last May. They are adaptive to accelerated subjects and some to new school environments! They, who are the children, will be in the groove soon.

Before you know it report cards will be sent to inform us on their progress. The children will handle their responsibility: completing homework, participating enthusiastically in various activities, accomplishing their academic purposes. They will get an education, provided all goes well.

What about us, the parents, teachers and adults who expect the children to be educated? Where does our responsibility lie? Here are a few, sometimes forgotten, responsibilities.

Get the children ready. Bedtime chases to an earlier hour in order for rest to rejuvenate the tired bodies. Adequate meals provide nourishment for the maturing muscles and growth processes. Relaxed atmosphere clears unnecessary distractions and helps the mind take on new challenges. Our responsibility is to create rules for good health patterns to be acclimated. Sometimes we present obstacles.

One such obstacle is impatience. The children have early needs. Materials are required for classroom study. Lunch is important: money or prepared meals carried to school. Cleanliness and adequate appearance is meaningful to children because they want their teachers and peers to approve of them. Our responsibility is not to present obstacles which might bring emotional scarring to the children. Get them prepared and to school on time.

Another obstacle is neglect.

Sometimes we do not take interest in a child's school work and play. It is important to the child for us to recognize his efforts to get an education, get along with the teachers and relate to peers appropriately. We neglect to inquire concerning these areas of interest because of various motives which distract us from the children. Being mature adults, let's not neglect the essentials which the children value.

An obstacle too many of us had the children is abuse. We fail to feed them breakfast and their little minds are less able to concentrate on the studies and they feel tired until lunch time. Feeding the children is our responsibility.

Abuse comes in many ways. A certain way is punishment when they fail to live up to our expectations. When we're tired, upset, moody and bothered, punishing the children is a sign of instability. We do not take out frustrations on small children. Our unfinished problems are terminated prior to parenting the children or else abuse is likely to occur.

Frustrations in children not being able to comprehend easily can cause us to be abusive. We lack tolerance and quickly explode in anger aggression. The children become confused and afraid, feel unloved and of little worth because we have been disappointed in their lack of ability. We let frustration lead to abuse of the children who are doing their best to live up to our expectations.

Abuse is unfair to children. They don't deserve to be abused.

When abused the children cannot handle their responsibility well, and neither are we being responsible parents, teachers, adults.

Let's not present obstacles to the children. Let's prepare them for school, teach them carefully in school and praise them for doing the best they can as students. Children deserve the best life has to offer: clean bodies, relaxed minds and comforted souls.

School is a heavy responsibility for the children. It isn't easy for them. School is a weighted responsibility for us. It isn't easy either. School is a good choice though, important for employment and peer interaction, family creating and personal achievement.

Let's remember the children as we plan with them for a good physical, mental and spiritual life.

Remember, the children will grow up and be our leaders soon! Prepare them well!

Risks women take with their health

BY DONNA BRAUCHI
County Extension Agent

During the past several years medical researchers have identified a number of health risk factors associated with the development of disease. A risk factor is defined as anything that can impair health and lead to disease. The following discussion identifies a group of controllable health risk factors that are either unique to or of special importance to women.

RISK FACTOR NO. 1: IMPROPER NUTRITION

Improper nutrition has been linked to heart disease, stroke, cancer, diabetes, arteriosclerosis, hypertension, liver ailments, and gall bladder disease. It is also a major cause of obesity. In addition, inadequate nutrition during pregnancy has been linked to problems with newborns including low birth weight, impaired fetal development and the failure of children to reach full physical and mental potential.

Based on this relationship between diet and disease, women would be healthier and reduce the risk of disease if they consumed: 1. only enough calories to meet body needs and maintain a desirable weight; 2. less fat and cholesterol; 3. less salt; 4. less sugar; 5. more complex carbohydrates such as whole grains, cereals, nuts, fruits and vegetables; and 6. more fish poultry, legumes.

RISK FACTOR NO. 2: OBESITY

Obesity is a risk factor particularly prominent among women. Too much body weight is a risk factor for diabetes, gall bladder disease and hypertension. Obesity can also be a threat to social and mental well-being.

To lose weight, one must take in fewer calories than are burned. To lose one pound of fat, it is necessary to burn 3,500 calories more than is consumed, either by selecting foods with fewer calories, by increasing activity, or, ideally, both. Too drastic a weight loss in a short period of time is hazardous to a woman's health.

RISK FACTOR NO. 3: LACK OF EXERCISE

Physical fitness affects health in a variety of ways. Studies indicate a direct relationship between inadequate activity and overall heart disease mortality. People who exercise regularly report that they feel better and have more energy. Regular exercisers often lose weight as well as improve muscular strength and flexibility. In addition, many stop smoking and excessive drinking and tend to eat more nutritional foods.

RISK FACTOR NO. 4: HYPERTENSION

Hypertension or high blood pressure is one of the most important risk factors for heart attacks and strokes. Heart disease is also the leading cause of death for women. Excessive salt in the diet and stress are factors that contribute to hypertension. Obesity is clearly related to hypertension. Hypertension cannot be cured, but it can be controlled through diet, exercise, relaxation therapy and medication.

RISK FACTOR NO. 5: STRESS

Stress is normal and inevitable. However, when stress or the reaction to stress is excessive, it may lead to an excessive alcohol use, drug abuse, depression, cardiovascular disease, or gastrointestinal disorders. Stress cannot be eliminated. Exercise, proper nutrition, and a variety of relaxation techniques are some ways to cope with stress.

RISK FACTOR NO. 6: SMOKING

Over the past 30 years, smoking has been documented to be a risk factor for various diseases, including emphysema and cancer. The death rate due to lung cancer among women has increased four-fold since 1955. Women who take oral contraceptives increase their risk of heart attack tenfold if they also smoke.

Pregnant smokers run the risk of retarding the growth of the fetus, and increase the risk of spontaneous abortion, fetal death, and neonatal death.

RISK FACTOR NO. 7: ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE

Cirrhosis of the liver and primary liver cancer are both attributable to alcohol abuse. Excessive drinking during pregnancy may cause numerous problems with the fetus. Women far outnumber men in their use of legal prescription drugs.

Dear Abby

WW II affair offends wife today

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were planning a 40th anniversary celebration, but I called it off three months ago when I learned from someone that my husband had had an affair with a young woman while he was stationed in Alameda, Calif., during World War II.

The affair lasted about a year while he was waiting to be shipped out, but never was. When I confronted him with the facts, he admitted it, but said it was "nothing serious." We had been married three years and had one child when all this took place, and I thought we had a perfect marriage.

I am devastated. I feel betrayed, knowing I've spent the last 37 years living with a liar and a cheat. How can I ever trust him again? The bottom has fallen out of my world! Now he asks me to "forgive him," but it's 37 years too late. Our relationship is deteriorating and our marriage is hanging by a thread.

We raised five children, among them a lawyer, engineer, teacher and other professionals. I felt secure and fortunate to have such a solid marriage all these years.

I am miserable and sick inside. How can I overcome this terrible feeling of betrayal? I've been to my minister and two doctors — one a psychiatrist — but nothing makes me feel any better.

Should I hang on for the financial benefits, or go it alone? ABOUT TO CRACK UP

DEAR ABOUT: To dwell on something that took place 37 years ago is useless and self-destructive. You must let go of your obsession with the past and concentrate on the present and future. Your husband's affair was not an act of "betrayal" against you — it had nothing to do with you. He was lonely, she was there, the temptation was strong, and he was weak. Had it been "serious," he would have chosen her.

You need to work out your anger and outrage with a therapist. Find one who is right for you. Forgive, and your own pain will be healed. Who among us has not needed to be forgiven many times in our lives? God bless you. Please write again and tell me how you are. I care.

DEAR ABBY: I am 11 years old. My ex-boyfriend, who is 12, dumped me for an uglier girl. I am not beautiful, but I'm not exactly ugly either.

You may think I am too young to have a boyfriend, but I am very mature for my age. Why do I get dumped by every boyfriend I ever have?

Is it me, or the boy?

DUMPED AT 11

DEAR DUMPED: Please don't worry about it at this stage in your life. Perhaps you're lucky. It would be a sorry state of affairs if every man chose his lifetime partner when she was 11. And vice versa.

...

DEAR ABBY: I was amused at your column on the various methods used to get a letter out of someone who rarely wrote to concerned loved ones. It reminded me of what I did after a number of unsuccessful attempts to evoke a reply from a relative who, at the time, was a Roman Catholic priest in a small Midwestern town.

His unmarried sister, a social worker, resided in the rectory and did double duty as a secretary and housekeeper. In a sort of mischievous desperation I addressed a letter to The Rev. and Mrs. James F. O'Malley (made-up name) in care of the rectory.

Needless to say, I received not one, but two very prompt, though somewhat curt, replies.

G.K. IN CORRALES

If you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say, send for Abby's complete booklet on letter-writing. Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

DEAR ABBY: "Depressed in New Orleans" wrote that she and her husband and their two little girls were at the beach when two couples parked themselves nearby and started using the filthiest language imaginable. She said she lost all respect for her husband because he sat there like a mouse instead of telling those filthy-mouthed strangers to clean up their language.

Your answer was perfect. You said, "Would you have respected your husband more if he had taken them on and been beaten (or worse) in the presence of your children? Furthermore, these days you never know who is 'high' on what, or if a switchblade, gun or lead pipe will be used to settle an argument."

The very same thing happened to me and my family three years ago on July Fourth. My husband was knifed to death in front of me and my kids because I nagged him into going over to two dope addicts and asking them to show some respect.

Had I kept my mouth shut, my husband would be alive today. Now I am a widow with four kids. How I wish I had a "cowardly" husband to cook and wash for, and pay the bills. Please print this, Abby.

Both teams weakened for Cowboy-Steeler clash

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

AP Sports Writer
IRVING (AP) — The Pittsburgh "Steel Curtain" is gone and the Dallas "Doomsday Defense" may have a big hole in it tonight when the two teams clash in a National Football League season opener.

The Steelers no longer have the likes of Joe Greene, and Dwight White, and L.C. Greenwood and have dropped the 4-3 defense for the 3-4 which accentuates the play of the linebackers. The Cowboys still run Coach Tom Landry's intricate "Flex" with the four-man line. However, you've got to have veteran players to man the positions and starting left defensive tackle John Dutton is ailing.

He missed practice last week until Saturday with a foot injured in the final preseason game and whether he starts will be in doubt until the 8 p.m. kickoff. Without Dutton against San Francisco in last year's National Conference title game, the Dallas pass rush suffered.

Should Dutton not play, defensive coach Ernie Stautner will choose Dan Smerek.

Smerek has fully recovered from being shot and wounded outside a Dallas nightclub last year and missing an entire season.

"Dutton may be able to play some but I doubt he can play the full game," said

Landry. "If Dutton is able to play at all he probably will start."

The Steelers will be operating without defensive standout Jack Lambert. The middle linebacker has not recovered from a knee sprain he suffered in practice and did not make the trip to Dallas for the game.

Second year linebacker David Little, making the first start of his pro career, will replace Lambert.

Dallas was a five-point favorite over the Steelers in the nationally televised game.

The Cowboys have won 17 consecutive opening day games, but they've lost the last four times they've played Pittsburgh, including two close Super Bowl defeats.

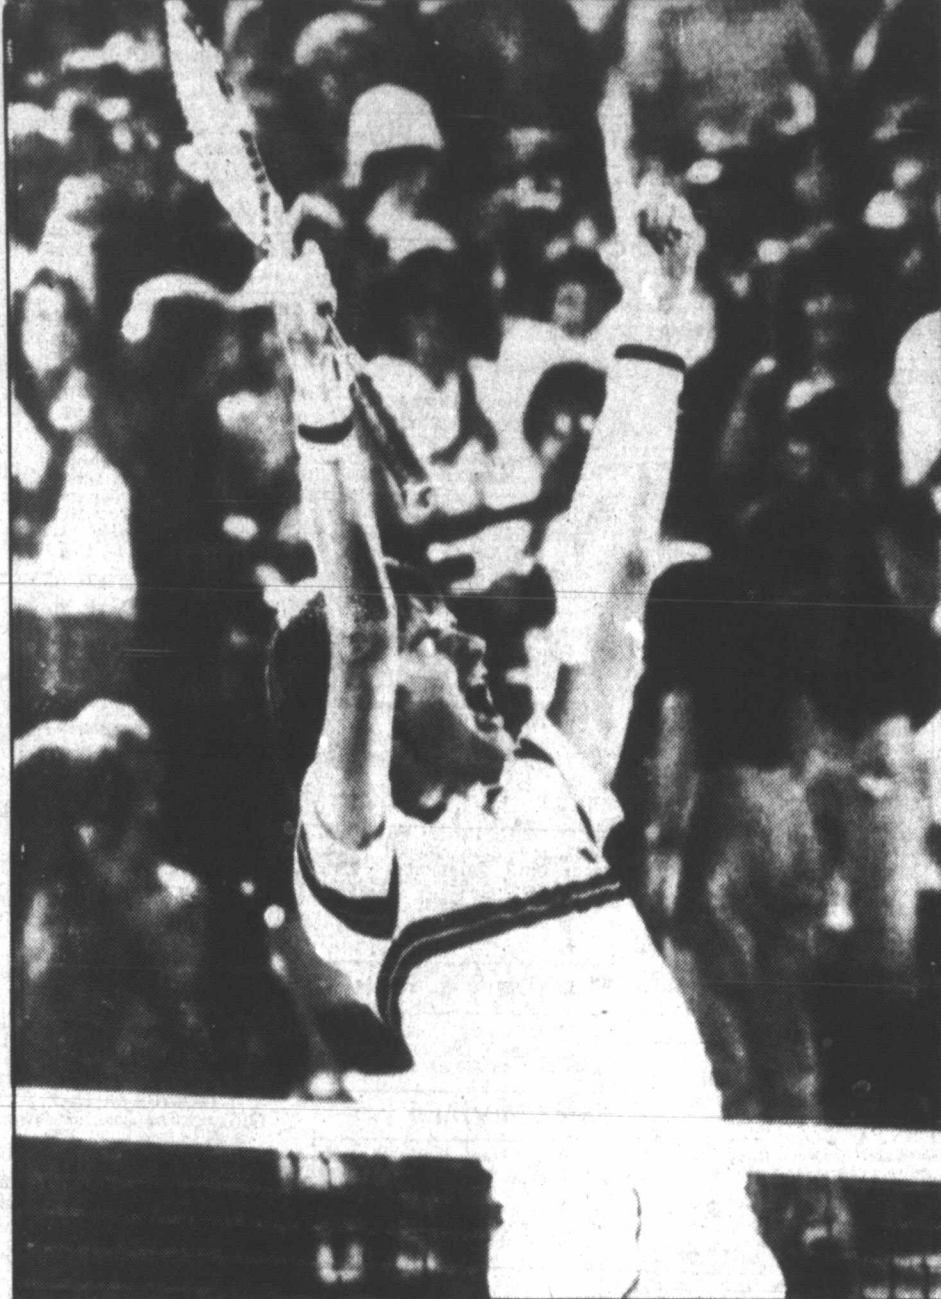

Dallas hasn't lost at Texas Stadium in a regular season or playoff game since Roger Staubach retired as quarterback in 1979.

Over the past five years Dallas is 35-4 in Texas Stadium.

Not since 1964 when St. Louis beat them 16-6 have the Cowboys failed to win their first game of the year. Pittsburgh has an 11-10 all-time edge on the Cowboys.

A sellout crowd of 65,000 was assured, the 45th in a row for the Cowboys in Texas Stadium.

How sweet it is!

Jimmy Connors screams his jubilation after winning the U.S. Open Tennis championship with a 6-3, 6-2, 4-6, 6-4 victory over Czech Ivan Lendl Sunday in

New York. The win makes Connors once again the top-rated tennis player in the world.

(AP Laserphoto)

Connors -- at 30 -- is tennis king again

NEW YORK (AP) — For Jimmy Connors, king again of the U.S. Open and all of tennis, the trip back to the top is more satisfying. And now that may be enough.

Connors, as precise and emotional at 30 as he was at 26, used his entire repertoire of pinpoint shots, bouncing them off the boundaries time and again to wipe out stony-faced Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia 6-3, 6-2, 4-6, 6-4 in the U.S. Open final at the National Tennis Center Sunday.

The women's crown at the Open was won Saturday by Chris Evert Lloyd, who played textbook tennis beating Czechoslovakia's Hana Mandlikova, 6-3, 6-1.

It was the fourth Open crown for Connors, who is also the reigning Wimbledon champion, and solidified his status as No. 1 in the computer rankings of the world's players.

"When I won before, everybody thought I could," Connors said. "When I won now, everybody thought I couldn't. That's pretty satisfying."

Connors said he may cut back on his tennis now that he's No. 1 again.

"I'm at a crossroads," Connors said, who also won the Open in 1974, 1976 and 1978. "I have to think it out. My whole life has been dedicated to tennis. I've got a wife and family and a lot of businesses I'd like to get into. I may be cutting back my schedule."

The left-hander did a workmanlike job on Lendl, baffling and befuddling his younger opponent with an assortment of shots that time and again landed just inside the white lines.

Connors, who celebrated his 30th birthday during the Open, had dipped in the world rankings the last couple of years, passed by younger players like John McEnroe and Bjorn Borg. "I wanted to get back to No. 1," he said. "I liked the view from up there."

So he set out on that quest and took a giant step in that direction when he beat McEnroe at Wimbledon, winning that crown for the third time. "That was my goal," he said, "to win Wimbledon once more, and I did it."

Coming into the Open, McEnroe remained No. 1 in the world, followed by Connors and Lendl, who had won 44 consecutive matches after last year's Open but sat out Wimbledon.

Major league baseball roundup

By The Associated Press

The New York Yankees Sunday continued to hurt the Milwaukee Brewers with a 9-8 victory over the East leaders.

It was the third time that the Yankees beat the Brewers in their four-game series at Yankee Stadium and prevented Harvey Kuenn's team from improving its three-game lead over the second-place Baltimore Orioles, who lost 3-0 to Cleveland.

The Kansas City Royals, meanwhile, beat the Minnesota Twins 18-7 and held onto first place in the AL West by one game over the California Angels, who defeated Toronto 3-2. Elsewhere, Boston outscored Detroit 10-7, Oakland trimmed Chicago 4-2 and Seattle edged Texas 1-0.

In the National League, the Montreal Expos moved to within 2½ games of first-place St. Louis with an 11-3 thrashing of the Chicago Cubs Sunday. The victory, which improved the Expos' September record to 7-3, completed a three-game sweep in which Montreal outscored the Cubs 28-11.

In other National League games, New York topped St. Louis 4-1, but the Cards remained one-half game ahead of second-place Philadelphia as the Phillies fell to Pittsburgh 4-2. Atlanta staged a gallant ninth-inning comeback to edge Cincinnati, 4-3, while Los Angeles downed Houston 7-3.

Gilder wins $300,000 Boston Classic

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — Bob Gilder first a final-round 67 and posted 2-stroke victory over Fuzzy Zoeller in the $300,000 Bank of Boston Classic.

Gilder finished the 72-hole event at 271, 13-under par. Another stroke back and tied at 10-under-par 274 were Gil Morgan and third-round leader Mike McCullough.

the pace and beat European star Carole Charbonnier by a stroke. Spuzich had a final 54-hole total of 10-under-par 206. Chris Johnson shot a 2-over-par 74 and finished in third place, 3 shots behind at 209.

MALMO, Sweden (AP) — Curtis Strange shot a course record 5-under-67 to lead the United States to a 7-3 victory over Sweden in a team golf tournament.

Lee Trevino, Lanny Wadkins and Nancy Lopez also whipped their Swedish opponents, while Pia Nilsson, shooting par 72, beat South African-born Sally Little by five strokes.

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The United States women's golf team, of Julie Inkster, Kathy Baker and Amy Benz won the Women's World Championships at the Cologny Golf Club in suburban Geneva.

The American team had a final round 141 score for a four-day total of 579.

White Deer upsets Phillips, 34-0

PHILLIPS — White Deer, off to its best start in 11 years, upset highly-favored Phillips, 34-0, in schoolboy football action Friday night.

Phillips was ranked No. 2 by the Associated Press going into the non-district contest. The win lifted White Deer to 2-0 for the season while Phillips dropped to 1-1. Its first time since 1971 the Bucks have opened a season with two victories.

White Deer quarterback Darin Bennett had a big night for the Bucks, rushing for 82 yards and connecting on 5-of-13 passes for 148 yards and one touchdown. White Deer's Steve May rushed for 76 yards on 16 carries and scored two touchdowns on runs of eight and one.

Phillips, held to just 112 yards of total offense by White Deer, was paced by Danny Rodriguez, who rushed for 90 yards on 1 carries.

Defensively, Bucks' tackle John Ingles, a 165-pound senior, recorded a pair of quarterback sacks, recovered a fumble and was in on 18 tackles.

White Deer hosts Wheeler at 8 p.m. Friday night in non-district action.

Strike threat doesn't stop pro football season's start

By The Associated Press

Despite threats of a wildcat walkout and the lack of a new collective bargaining agreement, The National Football League opened its regular season on schedule.

But Super Bowl champion San Francisco, the highly regarded Philadelphia Eagles and Bert Jones-led Los Angeles Rams surprisingly were left in the starting blocks.

The 49ers, who knocked off the Cincinnati Bengals last January to win their first NFL championship ever, came out on the short end of a 23-17 score at home against the transplanted Los Angeles Raiders. Jim Plunkett, a former 49er quarterback, tossed the go-ahead touchdown pass in the fourth period and rookie Marcus Allen, the 1981 Heisman Trophy winner from Southern Cal, opened his pro career with 116 yards rushing.

Mark Moseley's right foot was the difference at Philadelphia, where the Redskins' veteran placekicker booted a 48-yard game-tying field goal at time ran out in regulation, then plunked a 26-yarder 4:47 into overtime to upend the Eagles 37-34.

At Milwaukee, the Packers' home away from home, the Los Angeles Rams and Jones soared to a 23-0 halftime lead in Southern California-like sunshine and temperatures. But Green Bay quarterback Lynn Dickey, who passed for 237 yards and three touchdowns, was the eye of a second-half Packer hurricane that brought Bart Starr's team team a 35-23 victory.

In other games Sunday, Cincinnati opened with a 27-7 victory over the Houston Oilers; the Atlanta Falcons tipped the New York Giants 16-14; the San Diego Chargers pounded the Denver Broncos 23-3; the Miami Dolphins crushed the New York Jets 45-28, and the New England Patriots gave new Coach Ron Meyer a 24-13 victory over the Baltimore Colts and their new coach, Frank Kush.

The St. Louis Cardinals tripped the New Orleans Saints 21-7; the Detroit Lions and newly returned Billy Sims stopped the Chicago Bears 17-10; the Buffalo Bills got past the Kansas City Chiefs 14-9; the Minnesota Vikings debuted in their new domed stadium with a 17-10 victory over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, and the Cleveland Browns snuffed the hopes of 55,907 Seattle fans in the Kingdome as they beat the Seahawks 21-7 in a game that was threatened all week by the possibility of a strike by the Seattle players over the release of player representative Sam McCullum.

The Pittsburgh Steelers and Dallas Cowboys complete the first week of the season tonight in Texas.

Bengals thrash Oilers

CINCINNATI (AP) — It was like old times for the Cincinnati Bengals, who snapped out of their summer doldrums Sunday with a sound thrashing of the AFC Central Division rival Houston Oilers.

Coming off a feeble 1-3 exhibition season, the defending American Conference champions manhandled the Oilers 27-6 in a style reminiscent of their 1981 march to the Super Bowl.

Quarterback Ken Anderson, the National Football League Most Valuable Player last year, carved up the Oiler defense with 29 completions in 40 attempts for 354 yards and a pair of touchdowns.

The Bengal defense limited the Oilers to nine first downs and 171 net yards, and the offense doubled their time of possession.

"We weren't worried," wide receiver Cris Collinsworth said of the weak exhibition season record. "But I think some of our fans were getting a little nervous. Some people were starting to give me a little bit of a rough time about it. Maybe our fans will have a little more confidence now."

Collinsworth led a pack of eight Cincinnati receivers who caught passes in the Bengals' ball-control offense, which was on the field for nearly 40 of the game's 60 minutes. Tight end Dan Ross led the receiving corps with five catches for 65 yards, and Collinsworth reached a game-high 95 yards on four receptions. Four other Bengals caught four passes each.

"The way our offense is designed, we're going to take advantage of what's open," Anderson said. Anderson and Ross linked up on an 18-yard touchdown pass play on Cincinnati's first possession, and Jim Brecht added a 43-yard field goal for a 10-0 halftime lead.

TRY WALKING FOR YOUR HEALTH

Thirty years ago the average child walked to school. Twenty years ago the child was content to ride on a bus occasionally. Ten years ago he tried to talk dad into giving him the family car once in awhile. Today he is extremely unhappy and often refuses to go to school unless he either has his own automobile or is driven both ways.

If you have had the opportunity to visit a foreign country, one difference strikes you almost immediately upon getting off the plane or ship. People walk, people bicycle, people participate in sports activities—especially children and teenagers.

Our high standard of living and our automated age seem to have made the United States population a riding and viewing one, rather than actively participating.

Most health experts recognize the problem we face in a luxury society that gives incentive to sitting, riding, and watching, rather than actively participating. For our health's sake, we must go back to a way of life in which moderate exercise is a part, thereby allowing organs of our body to function properly.

Review your family's living habits. If your family eats too much, sits too much, rides too much, and exercises too little, this might be a good time to turn around and go back to some of the wholesome activities that were popular 30 to 40 years ago.

Your doctor of chiropractic reminds you that there have been great advancements made in the health services to help you live a longer and more satisfying life, but real progress can only be made if you have the desire to maintain your health.

Pains of mysterious origin may be caused by spinal insults. Sometimes the symptoms of a back problem appear immediately, allowing the afflicted person to correlate cause and effect. However, sometimes days or even months pass before pain appears, causing the victim to seek treatment for conditions other than the causative spinal disorder.

It is often an act of wisdom to seek qualified professional counsel as early as possible from a doctor of chiropractic. Under chiropractic care, a patient is either treated or referred after a comprehensive differential diagnosis.

Israeli jets launch attack on eastern, northern Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Waves of Israeli jets attacked Syrian and Palestinian positions today in sustained air assaults on eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley, killing 30 troops and guerrillas and setting several military encampments ablaze. Lebanon's state- and privately owned radio stations reported.

The leftist Voice of Arab Lebanon radio station described the assault as the "beginning of a new round of full-scale warfare in Lebanon." It was the fourth cross-border raid in six days.

The reports said Israeli warplanes also staged mock divebombling attacks on the Palestinian refugee camp of Baddawi near Lebanon's northern port of Tripoli, drawing heavy anti-aircraft barrages from guerrilla positions.

Baddawi houses more than 8,000 refugees registered with the United Nations.

The Voice of Lebanon station of the rightist Christian Phalange Party retracted an earlier report that Baddawi was bombed and strafed by jets at 8 a.m. (2 a.m. EDT), saying mock divebombers at the site were mistaken for live bombardment.

The military command in Tel Aviv confirmed the air raids, saying a Syrian SAM-9 missile launcher was destroyed and other Palestinian and Syrian positions were struck. Israel has said it destroyed six Soviet-made SAM-9 missile batteries in the same area over the past five days.

It said the raids were in reprisal for Syrian cease-fire violations and accused the Syrians of aiding guerrilla forces in eastern and central Lebanon.

The Syrians are enabling the terrorists to cross lines and are supplying them with information regarding our employment... Israel cannot agree to this... an Israeli military communiqué said.

Palestine Liberation Organization leaders have visited Baddawi camp several times since their evacuation from West Beirut two weeks ago under a U.S.-sponsored plan.

The visiting leaders, who crossed the border from neighboring Syria into Baddawi, have vowed to wage a new war against Israel.

from northern and eastern Lebanon to average the June 6 Israeli invasion that ousted the PLO from its 12-year power base in the Middle East.

The radio said Syrian positions at Dahr al-Baidar, 18 miles east of Beirut, took the brunt of the latest Bekaa Valley air attacks.

Syria claimed it would keep rolling anti-aircraft missiles into the Bekaa irrespective of Israel's response. The military command in Tel Aviv said "Israel is determined in mind and decision not to allow the Syrians to bring ground-to-air missiles into Lebanon."

Israel says it has destroyed roughly 30 Syrian missile batteries since its invasion of Lebanon began 13 weeks ago.

The Tel Aviv command Sunday blamed Syria for cease-fire violations in Lebanon and said three Israeli soldiers were killed Friday when an anti-tank rocket struck their vehicle in eastern Lebanon.

Syria stationed about 30,000 troops in Lebanon under an Arab League mandate to monitor the peace after the 1975-76 civil war between Christians and Moslems.

Meanwhile, in a four-hour battle in west Beirut, the Lebanese army and police crushed leftist militiamen who fired on a convoy of Sunni Moslems. It was the first flare-up since the Palestine Liberation Organization was evacuated in a U.S.-sponsored plan earlier this month.

In New York Sunday, U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz urged the Jewish state and Arab countries to begin negotiating their differences to achieve peace in the Middle East.

He said President Reagan's peace initiative was an opportunity that "must not be lost" to bring the parties together at the bargaining table.

PLO chief Yasser Arafat arrived in his temporary headquarters in Tunis, Tunisia Sunday following a weekend visit to Algeria, and was expected to travel to Rome Wednesday to attend the Inter-Parliamentary Union's annual conference, the PLO office in Rome said.

Police said the bus driver, seeing the raised barrier, was driving across the tracks when the three-car local train hit it broadside, shearing the bus in two.

The train's engineer saw the bus on the tracks about 165 feet ahead and hit the brakes before hurling himself backward into the passenger compartment, Thomann said.

The bus burst into flames, which spread to the lead train car and engulfed the nearby crossing house where the signalwoman normally stayed, police said. They said it wasn't clear whether she was inside.

Witnesses said the force of the impact scattered bodies through the air. The tracks were strewn with twisted metal, glass and chunks of brick from a demolished signal house.

"Burned bodies, interspersed with pieces of luggage, sandwiches and running shoes were scattered on both sides of the track embankment," said Christoph Zuppinger, a local resident.

The train "sliced through the bus," he said.

All the dead were aboard the bus. Only two bus passengers, both women, survived. They were hospitalized in serious condition, as were the signalwoman and engineer.

Marijuana haul

In search of Meigs County green

By PAUL ALEXANDER
Associated Press Writer

POMEROY, Ohio (AP) — On a warm late summer afternoon, several men dressed in camouflage fatigues sling rifles over their shoulders and fan out across hilly terrain.

An airplane circles above, using its radio to direct them to a patch of land where several 10- to 15-foot-tall bushes with long, thin green leaves sprout.

The men are law enforcement officers. They are searching for marijuana, a growing cash crop in sparsely populated counties of southeastern Ohio where one high quality variety, Meigs County Green, has earned a national reputation.

Sometimes the take is small — 15 or 20 plants spread over a half-acre or more. Sometimes, it's a bonanza — fields with thousands of plants, just days away from prime harvest time and shipment to buyers outside the county.

Meigs County is a 436-square-mile collection of rolling hills and backwoods just across the Ohio River from West Virginia. Its scattered population of 23,000, combined with hot days and cool, humid nights, provides a nearly ideal growing spot for marijuana.

Sheriff James Proffitt said marijuana is probably the county's No. 1 cash crop, way ahead of tomatoes and sweet corn which are the official leaders.

If growers reap their crops, they can earn from $400 a pound for low-quality marijuana to $3,000 a pound for the highest quality sinsemilla, Meigs County Green.

Meigs County Green has about eight times the THC — or tetrahydrocannabinol — content of regular marijuana. THC is the most active ingredient in marijuana. "The stuff that's supposed to give you the high," says Proffitt.

A healthy plant allowed to grow to its peak will yield between one and two pounds of marijuana, so growing ventures can be lucrative. A field of 1,000 sinsemilla plants could yield $3 million to $6 million, law officials say. And the risks, aside from losing a crop to sheriff's deputies or poachers, appear small.

Sinsemilla, first grown widely in Northern California in the mid-1970s, is produced by keeping the female hemp plants that make marijuana away from male plants. The female plants then produce more THC — hence more powerful and valuable marijuana — and no seeds.

Despite the difficulty of keeping the female plants isolated, the risks of growing sinsemilla — which means "without seed" in Spanish — appear small.

In Meigs County and neighboring Athens County, no arrests have been made in the past two years. But 8½ tons of plants were confiscated in sweeps during the period in Meigs County.

Manpower shortages make it difficult to arrange the stakeouts needed to catch growers in the act. And some of the growers take their business seriously, arming themselves to protect their crops and guarding outposts to protect themselves from thieves.

Officials say they aren't aware of anyone being injured yet, but a deputy in nearby Vinton County reported being shot at during a recent raid.

Sheriffs say there is no way to eliminate the problem, so they raid fields in hopes of putting a large enough dent in grower profits to force them to move elsewhere.

This year, large confiscations were recorded in at least six Ohio counties. But Lionel Stewart, agent in charge of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration office at Cincinnati, says the crop is spreading throughout southern Ohio.

"It's increased from last year," Stewart said. "If it continues at the rate it's going, there will be a larger crop next year."

Proffitt, 54, said most big growers come in for the summer, raise their crops, then spend the winter elsewhere living off the illegal profits. They maintain a low profile while here, trying to avoid any trouble that would throw a spotlight on them.

Many have elaborate operations that often include chemically analyzed dirt mixtures with potting soil and fertilizers, reinforcing rods as plant stakes and irrigation systems.

Other growers may be full-time residents who pick up a few thousand dollars a year by planting a handful of plants here and there, or who have large operations and keep to themselves, he said.

Proffitt said his staff of five deputies and an investigator is too small for proper surveillance. So, like neighboring sheriffs, he conducts raids.

Last year, deputies and state Bureau of Criminal Investigation and Identification agents, gathered nine pickup truckloads of the illegal weed in a single day.

The take over a span of several days last year totaled about 7 tons. Three-quarters of it was the top-grade Meigs County Green, meaning the sheriff put a $30 million to $60 million dent in the crop.

"We just go out and harvest it, bring it in and destroy it," Proffitt said. "We feel like we're discouraging the big growers who don't like being ripped off by us."

"It does put the problem somewhere else, though. Our loss is somebody else's gain."

The sheriff said word must have gotten out this year.

Economic interdependence in stress test

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The paper chain of credit agreements that links developed and underdeveloped economies is being put to a stress test these days, and neither borrower nor lender can say when one more tug might rip it all apart.

Already a few strands in the chain have nearly given way. Bolivia has defaulted on payments due to U.S. commercial banks, and Mexico remains solvent only through an aid package hastily contrived in Washington and Basel, Switzerland.

Argentina is over its head in debt, owing about $40 billion, some of which must be paid before the end of the year. And since some of that money is owed to British banks, which aren't in a mood to refinance, a crisis is at hand.

Not helping at all, of course, is the poor condition of lenders. They too are experiencing financial problems, along with inflation, a consequence of which is the feeling they must run their own economies at reduced levels.

This in turn makes the situation worse in the underdeveloped nations, some of which depend on sales of raw materials to the developed nations. Since their sales are down, some of these less developed nations are growing even poorer.

For them to borrow more would, as you might surmise, make their condition even worse, because loans today are at very high rates, so high that an industry must operate extremely efficiently simply to pay the interest due.

If the world economy doesn't get moving soon, a potentially long line of defaulters could develop, and there is really very little that any lending nation or group of them could do about it. That is, except to refinance.

Refinancing, as anyone who ever borrowed a dollar knows, usually adds to costs. Moreover, the repayment terms are made on the assumption that the borrower will be better able to manage his finances somewhere down the line. But when? There is very little prospect for quick turnarounds among borrowing nations. It takes time — and probably a few miracles as well.

Complicating matters is the underlying hostility of nations. Many borrowers blame the United States for their condition, insisting that high U.S. interest rates present impossible obstacles to development. And that hostility isn't limited to lender-borrower. Developed nations too are angry at each other.

What is proved, among other things, is that nations are dependent upon each other — that there is indeed a world economy that transcends geography, economics and politics.

Decision due western railroad merger

WASHINGTON (AP) — A single rail system stretching from the Pacific Northwest and California to the Gulf Coast would be created if the government approves a proposed merger of three profitable western railroads.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, which has been considering the merger for two years, was scheduled to vote on the proposal at a closed meeting today. A news conference was scheduled afterward.

Industry and government sources say they expected approval of the new railroad, which would link the Missouri Pacific, Western Pacific and Union Pacific into a system covering 21 states.

It would be the third largest railroad in terms of track miles and possibly one of the most profitable with access to the grain belt, rich coal reserves and ports all the Pacific and Gulf coasts.

"We anticipate a favorable decision," said Union Pacific spokesman Joe McCartney in a telephone interview from the railroad's Omaha headquarters.

Sources in the railroad industry and in government, who asked to remain unidentified, said it would be surprising if the merger was turned down. But one ICC source noted that even approval could include concessions to competing railroads that claim they will be harmed.

The ICC earlier this year approved the merger of the Southern Railway and the Norfolk & Western Railroad. Two of the country's most successful rail lines — the Burlington Northern and the CSX System — also are products of mergers in recent years.

A combination of the Missouri Pacific, Union Pacific and Western Pacific would mean the creation of a rail system covering 22,800 miles of track over two-thirds of the nation.

Shippers would be able to use a single railroad from Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles to Chicago and New Orleans. The new line would be a major shipper of not only grain, but Rocky Mountain coal as well.

Last year the three railroads, all of which made a profit, had combined revenues of more than $4.2 billion.

Unlike the merger of the Southern and the Norfolk & Western earlier this year, the combination of the three western railroads raised strong opposition from competing rail lines.

North Korea spurns GI meeting request

PANMUNJOM, Korea (AP) — The United Nations Command today said North Korea's refusal to allow a meeting with an American soldier, who purportedly defected last month, was "cruel and insensitive."

At a meeting of the secretaries of the Korean Military Armistice Commission in this truce village, the command repeatedly asked for a meeting with Pfc. Joseph T. White, 20, of St. Louis. He was reported missing Aug. 28 in the demilitarized zone dividing the South and North.

North Korea later said he had crossed the buffer zone to seek political asylum.

North Korean representatives spurned the requests for an interview, referring only to earlier statements White allegedly made from the North saying he wanted to defect and denouncing the involvement of U.S. troops in the South.

They also refused to let White telephone his parents, who claim their son was taken prisoner.

"Your side's response is a cruel and insensitive action, not only to Pfc. White's family, but also to those who must care for the personal and professional affairs of this young soldier," Army Col. Patrick H. Brady told the North Koreans. "Your side's response thus far is unacceptable."

The command had requested a meeting with White two other times, but the session today was the first formal meeting called to take up the subject.
