U.S. backs Aquino; Reagans leave for Bali

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
AP White House Correspondent

HONOLULU — The United States is stressing its support for the fledgling Philippines government of President Corazon Aquino following President Reagan's courtesy call to Ferdinand Marcos in which the deposed leader reportedly pleaded for help in getting his old job back.

Reagan and his wife, Nancy, meanwhile, took a walk on the beach and stopped for a rare chat with some strangers before leaving Hawaii today for a 14-hour flight across the Pacific to the Indonesian resort island of Bali.

White House efforts to gloss over human rights problems in Indonesia were set back by the Suharto government's determined refusal to permit two Australian journalists accompanying Reagan to cover the U.S. president's visit. President Suharto has banned the Australian news media from his country following publication of an article in a Sydney newspaper comparing Suharto's family to that of Marcos. And U.S. efforts to exempt members of the traveling White House press corps were only partly successful.

When Reagan, in Honolulu for a rest stop on his way to the Far East, telephoned the exiled Marcos to pass along personal good wishes, Marcos indicated he would like Reagan's support for a return to power, a senior U.S. official said.

The source, speaking on condition he not be identified, told The Associated Press that Reagan "said nothing to encourage him."

The conversation, described as an emotional talk, particularly for Marcos and his wife, Imelda, who spoke with Mrs. Reagan when the men had finished, occurred shortly after Reagan arrived Saturday.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes, at a briefing for reporters Sunday, refused to discuss the content of the Reagan-Marcos conversation. But he stressed, "We support President Aquino's government and encourage its policies of economic, political and military reform.... We support political stability in the Philippines, and our policy has been and remains, in the final analysis, it is up to the Philippine people themselves to determine their future, and they have voiced their will in this regard."

Speakes said Reagan called Marcos "because he's an old friend and ally."

The president, staying at a private beachfront residence a short distance from here Marcos has been living in exile since February, had no intention of meeting face-to-face with the ousted leader, Speakes said.

After Reagan's plan to call Marcos was disclosed, the White House announced a new $100 million aid program for the Philippines, and Reagan telephoned Mrs. Aquino and invited her to visit the United States, perhaps in the fall.

A source in Manila who spoke with Marcos after the talk with Reagan quoted the former president as saying the Reagan call was "friendly, congenial, productive and fruitful."

Democrats seeking post offer quite varied views

ELECTION '86

A voter looking for variety can find it in the Democratic race for the 21st Congressional District seat. With four candidates, each seems to offer something to satisfy the tastes of all voters.

Pete Snelson of Midland served more than 20 years in the state House of Representatives and Senate before retiring three years ago; David Hunsicker of San Antonio returned to resolve the issue.

Snelson sees those economic issues centering on the petroleum and agriculture industries. "We need some type of action for developing a long-range energy policy to give impetus to development of energy resources," he said. "Price manipulation by foreign cartels tells us how urgent it is to develop an energy policy for our national security."

GETTING THE PRICE of crude oil stabilized is the first priority, according to Snelson, who added he supports an oil import tariff that would be determined by a bottom price that would trigger the fee. If the market price fell below $20 a barrel, the fee would go into effect to keep the price at that $20 level.

as a psychology instructor; and Terry Lowry of Midland is a petroleum landman who, as a follower of Lyndon LaRouche, espouses the platforms of the National Democratic Policy Committee.

All agree the primary issues in the campaign boils down to economics. But they take different roads on how tired about the same time from 20 years in the Air Force; Joe Sullivan of San Antonio has served in the military and says he holds five bachelor's and master's degrees and works

The oil prices which fell to $10 a barrel and are now hovering in the $13 range will adversely affect all taxing entities in the state, according to Snelson. "We are in a depressing state of economy," he said.

Hunsicker said his motto is "Vote Oil — Vote Hunsicker." "Jobs is the number one issue in this sagging economy brought on by the rapid drop in oil and gas," said the candidate, who also proposes an oil import fee.

MISD moves boundary hearing to San Jacinto Junior High School

From Staff Reports

The site for Tuesday's public hearing to get citizen input on proposed changes in Midland Independent School District boundaries has been moved to San Jacinto Junior High School, 1400 N. "N" St.

The meeting will begin at 7 p.m.

According to MISD officials, the change was made because San Jacinto has a better sound system than Sam Houston School, where the meeting was originally planned.

Also, MISD officials asked that persons wanting to speak at Tuesday's hearing to call the Administration Office for a scheduled time.

Second of home-schooled sons wins scholarship

The Bright Side

BOONVILLE, Calif. (AP) — It's a school even Huck Finn could love, one without tests, report cards or homework assignments.

But then, the students at remote Mountain School in Mendocino County are a teacher's dream. Two graduates of David and Micki Colfax's home-based school for their four sons have won scholarships to Harvard University.

This past weekend, Drew Colfax, 18, decided to accept an offer from Harvard and turned down those from Yale, Princeton, Amherst and Haverford, he said Sunday.

Drew will join his 21-year-old brother, Grant, an honors premed student at Harvard. Drew's younger brother Reed, 16, is "mathematically precocious," according to their father, a former university professor in sociology. And Garth, 10, has a deep interest in ceramics and painting.

"I think they're very bright and very motivated, but I don't think they're particularly gifted," Micki Colfax said Sunday of her sons. "They just have a lot of interests, and they pursue them vigorously."

A spokeswoman for Princeton, where fewer than one in six applicants was accepted this year, called Drew "one of our most extraordinary applicants."

"We've never seen a kid like this," said Princeton's Laura Clark. "He is home-educated and has demonstrated an amazing academic excellence in an unorthodox learning environment."

A Harvard spokeswoman, Margery Heffron, said accepting someone who was taught at home isn't unique, "but it's unusual."

All four boys have been virtually self-educated, Mrs. Colfax said in an interview between goat-keeping chores at their ranch.

Mountain School is the family-coined name for the informal school, and that's how it's registered with state and county authorities to permit the home-based schooling.

"There really isn't any format to it," said Mrs. Colfax, a former English teacher. "After the boys learn to read and write and do math up to pre-algebra, they're pretty much on their own. Rather than being in a school, I like to think of them as self-taught."

The do-it-yourself schooling started 13 years ago when the family moved here to create a homestead.

Family members support themselves by growing their own food, breeding prize-winning goats and operating a bed-and-breakfast inn. David also is a free-lance writer.

Motivating the boys to teach themselves has never been a problem because "what they're doing here is very real," said Mrs. Colfax.

"For instance," she said, "they built their own sheds to house their animals. That means designing and constructing, and you have to know not only carpentry but math. And they put in the plumbing, laid the tiles and did the electrical system for the bed-and-breakfast."

Lessons continue at mealtime, when family members discuss books they're reading or current events. And the boys are encouraged to take on projects that interest them.

Midland-born silent era film star dies

LONDON (AP) — American-born actress Bessie Love, whose career stretched from silent movies to television in the 1980s, died at London's Mount Vernon Hospital, her daughter said Sunday. She was 87.

Her daughter, Patricia Pepper, said Miss Love died Saturday night.

Miss Love, born as Juanita Horton in Midland, Texas, was spotted by film director D.W. Griffith and won immediate success.

She made her first stage appearance in Santa Barbara, Calif., in 1918 in "Burlesque." She was nominated for an Oscar in 1929 for her role in "Broadway Melody," one of the first talking movies.

Miss Love, whose five-year marriage to film director Bill Hawks was dissolved in 1936, settled in Britain soon afterward. The actress, who never remarried, became a British citizen 15 years ago.

Among her other films were "Intolerance," (1916), "Forget Me Not" (1922), "Human Wreckage" (1923) and "Those Who Dance" (1924).

Midlander killed in motorcycle mishap

From Staff Reports

A 20-year-old Midland man was killed Sunday after losing control of his motorcycle on Farm-to-Market 1788 west of Midland, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Norman Hugh Chamblin, Route 3, Box 116, was pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Judy Mastagilli at 8:30 a.m. Sunday, after a passing motorist noticed his body and reported the accident at 7:07 a.m.

He was driving north on FM 1788 when he lost control of his Harley Davidson cycle, which ran off the east side of the road and overturned, according to DPS reports. The exact time of the accident could not be determined.

Chamblin was not wearing a helmet, reports said.

In other traffic reports, a 19-year-old Midland man was listed in stable condition this morning in Midland Memorial Hospital after a Saturday-morning accident on Loop 250.

Alan Norris, 2011 Redondo, was to be transferred from the critical-care unit today, a MMH spokeswoman said. According to Midland police reports, he was injured about 2:30 a.m. Saturday after being ejected from his 1985 Subaru pickup.

Norris was heading west on the Loop near Polo Parkway when the Subaru left the roadway, struck a curb and spun around, according to police reports.

Also recorded in stable condition in Midland Memorial Hospital was Rosemarie Hines Gutierrez of Forsan. Midland, the spokeswoman said. According the DPS reports, Gutierrez was injured Thursday in a traffic accident on the north service road of Highway 80 just east of Midland.

Treated for minor injuries at MMH and released Sunday was Charles Spence, 2501 Oldridge, who was injured in a motorcycle accident on the north service road of West Highway 80, according to hospital and police reports.

Spence, 37, was northbound in the right lane of the service road when he ran over gravel, lost control of his motorcycle, the report said. He was thrown off, according to police reports.

Stacy dam project, river snake come head to head

By DAVID GOELLER

WASHINGTON (AP) — A shy, nocturnal snake and a dam in arid West Texas are posing the first major congressional challenge to the Endangered Species Act since the classic 1970s battle between a tiny fish and the Tellico Dam.

In one corner is the Concho water snake, a 35-inch nonpoisonous serpent that the Interior Department's Fish and Wildlife Service is proposing to list as a threatened species needing legal protection from humans.

In the other corner is the proposed Stacy Dam, a $68 million, locally financed water storage and delivery project that Texas interests say is vital to the future of towns such as Midland, Odessa, San Angelo and Abilene.

The service says that while the snake is found along a 200-mile stretch of the Colorado River, the dam and its reservoir would adversely affect about 74 percent of the Concho's critical habitat.

But Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, saying concern for the snake is a "serious case of misplaced priorities," has introduced legislation to exempt Stacy Dam from the law's provisions giving creatures precedence over projects that threaten them with extinction.

There is a certain deja vu to the situation, which Fish and Wildlife Service officials say is the first time since 1979 that anyone on Capitol Hill has mounted a frontal attack to carve out an exemption for a project.

That effort came over the snail darter, an inch-long minnow that halted the $130 million Tellico Dam in Tennessee in its tracks and produced a Supreme Court decision upholding the tough environmental law.

The Tellico Dam, about 80 percent complete when the darter was discovered nearby in 1973, won an exemption from Congress in 1979. In the early 1980s, darter populations were found elsewhere, and the minnow's status was downgraded from endangered to threatened.

Jim Johnson, chief of the endangered species section at the service's New Mexico office, says the Concho exists in the second smallest geographic area of any U.S. snake.

He said that obtaining a population count on the gray and brown creature is difficult because "the species is very secretive. It hides under rocks and comes out at night to feed."

Johnson said he has no doubt that "the majority of the critical habitat would be destroyed." But he said that whether the dam's construction would threaten the snake with eventual extinction has not been decided.

John Fitzgerald, a lawyer for the Defenders of Wildlife, said his organization believes the dam spells doom for the Concho, which was discovered in 1944.

"If you flood the snake out, it can't reproduce," he said. "The young snakes need shallow running water and rocks. Clearly, there would be some snakes left, but the dam would jeopardize the existence of the species."

Fitzgerald says there are alternatives to Stacy Dam, although they would raise the cost of the water project anywhere from 10 percent to 40 percent.

Construction of the dam is not automatically blocked while the service decides whether to formally protect a species. But Johnson said the Army Corps of Engineers has agreed to withhold the necessary permit until the service makes a decision sometime between now and next January.

Bentsen, whose legislation would require the corps to issue the permit by Nov. 30, said in a floor speech that the Fish and Wildlife Service doesn't know for certain what damage the dam will cause the snake.

"Because of this speculation, the real or imagined threat to some unknown percentage of snakes in the water, the Stacy project is threatened, and more than a snake is jeopardized," he said.

"The only certainties are that water is a critical necessity to people in the area and that delays are penalties in the form of extra expenditures of local funds," Bentsen said.

"I don't think there is any evidence that the snake would be made extinct or even any hard evidence that they don't exist outside the large, 200-mile range," he said.

Suharto, though still in control, facing questions of 'korupsi'

By KENNETH L. WHITING

BALI, Indonesia (AP) — President Suharto recently celebrated 20 years' control of the world's fifth-most-populous nation, his power so complete that there is no clear-cut No. 2 and no obvious successor.

But a recent episode revealed the durable, 65-year-old Indonesian leader has grown thin skin on the issue of Marcos-style "korupsi."

A Sydney newspaper recently likened alleged financial excesses by Suharto and his family to those of former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, sparking a round of Indonesian indignation toward Australia.

Suharto — one name only — has critics at home, some of whom question his business connections. But Indonesians rally around their president when outsiders offer criticism. Students demonstrated at the Australian Embassy in Jakarta and a Cabinet minister canceled a planned visit to Australia.

The Suharto government banned all Aussie correspondents after the Sidney articles appeared — and they will be missing as hundreds of correspondents gather to cover Suharto's meeting this week with President Reagan.

Indonesia, the Netherlands East Indies in colonial days, has had only two presidents in its 40 years of independence. The late President Sukarno was eased from power following an attempted coup in 1965 that was blamed on the Communist Party.

The plotters overlooked a relatively unknown officer in their attempt to wipe out the army high command. Maj. Gen. Suharto found he was the only effective commander in the capital and began to deploy anti-communist units.

With steel-fist-in-velvet-glove style, Suharto positioned his troops and then opened negotiations with the rebels from strength.

Indonesia strutted on the world stage under Sukarno. A vivid personality and outspoken nationalist, he helped launch the non-aligned movement, later pulled this country out of the United Nations and mounted an armed "confrontation" of Singapore and Malaysia.

Suharto is as reserved as Sukarno was flamboyant, delivering his speeches in a monotone from carefully prepared texts.

He led Indonesia back into the United Nations, ended the confrontation with its neighbors and joined them and Thailand and the Philippines in creating the pro-West Association of Southeast Asian Nations.

Suharto reversed Sukarno's leftist, pro-China foreign policy. Peking and Jakarta suspended diplomatic relations in 1967. Direct trade resumed last year, but normal diplomatic ties do not appear imminent.

Critics fault Suharto's authoritarian rule, especially its inability to tolerate dissent, but usually give it high marks for restoring stability and a commitment to economic development. Suharto has materially lifted the standard of living for most of the 165 million people in this resource-rich archipelago.

One great success has been in transforming Indonesia from the world's biggest importer of rice to self-sufficiency in the diet staple.

Health care and education have advanced. Life expectancy is now 55 years, compared with 43 in 1965. The literacy rate is 60 percent and primary school education now is mandatory.

Despite great economic strides, Indonesia remains a poor nation. Workers average the equivalent of 50 cents a day and per capita annual income is about $600 a year.

Corruption, common in Indonesia for years, became rampant during the energy boom of the 1970s. Several government anti-corruption campaigns attested to the problem, but no major figures were ever prosecuted.

First lady Tien Suharto is said to be widely known in business circles as "Mrs. Tien Percent," and other Suharto relatives prosper in enterprises licensed by government. A stepbrother, for example, is involved in the clove importing monopoly.

The article that caused offense said in part that "jokes about the Indonesian first lady being in the mining business ('That's mine, that's mine') were around long before they were told about Mrs. Imelda Marcos."

Political activity was virtually nil in the years immediately after Suharto's takeover and remains low key even now. Politicking is restricted to a brief period every five years when elections are held for Parliament, but diplomatic observers say true power rests entirely with Suharto.

Marcos urges supporters to rally in Manila streets

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Ferdinand E. Marcos proclaimed himself the rightful ruler of the Philippines and urged 12,000 diehard followers to rally peacefully in the streets against the government of Corazon Aquino.

His wife, Imelda, referred to herself as "your first lady" and told the crowd gathered in Manila's Rizal Park that she and her husband "will do everything" to return to their homeland from exile in Hawaii.

Mrs. Marcos sounded like she was in tears as she and her husband talked to their supporters by telephone Sunday.

"I am healthy," Marcos told the cheering crowd. "I am ready to fight."

However, he called upon his supporters to protest peacefully, saying, "I ask you not to use violence. Long live those who hold rallies."

On Saturday, Hawaii time, Marcos talked by phone with President Reagan. The president stopped in Honolulu on his way to Indonesia, where he will meet leaders of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations this week.

A source in Manila called Marcos later and quoted him as saying the talk with Reagan was "friendly, congenial, productive and fruitful."

Marcos reportedly said he and Reagan discussed Marcos' situation "realistically," but did not elaborate, according to the source, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

Reagan called Mrs. Aquino last week. It was their first conversation since she assumed the Filipino presidency on Feb. 25 when Marcos, 68, went into exile in the face of a civilian-military revolt.

Marcos spoke for 20 minutes to the Sunday rally by a pre-arranged telephone call to a former aide, Lito Gorospe, who hooked up the receiver to a loudspeaker. Some people sobbed as they heard the voice of the man who had been their ruler for 20 years.

"I am your legitimate president," Marcos told the crowd. "Because I am not there with you, it is incumbent upon you to embrace our struggle, which is nothing but a struggle for freedom, justice and dignity."

Led by former government officials and several movie stars, the loyalists had rallied for the third straight Sunday to call for Marcos' return.

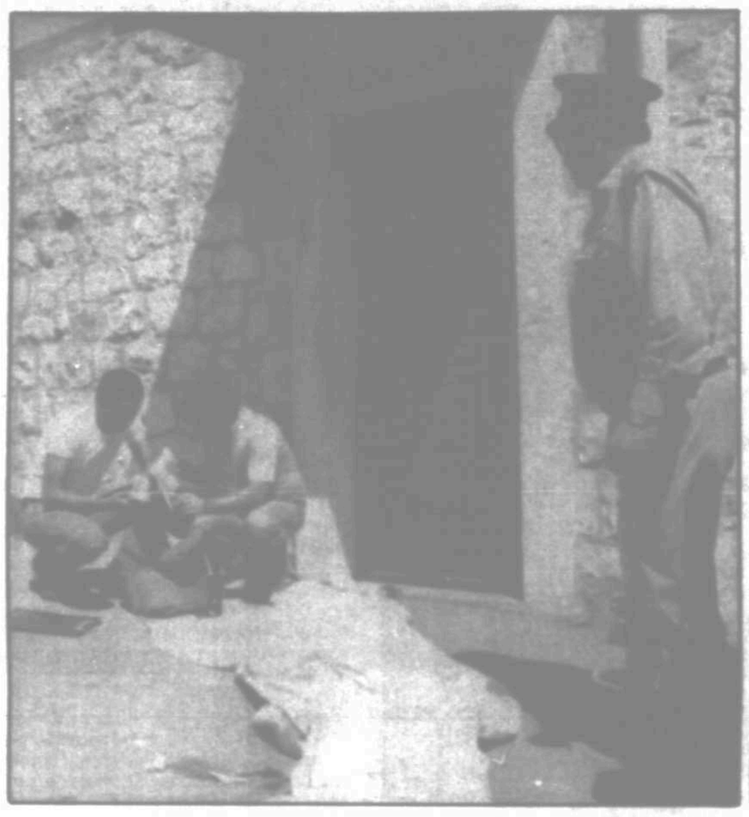

"He has been gone for so long," said one man in the audience, wiping away tears.

For the past two weeks, Marcos supporters have also staged vigils on the lawn in front of the U.S. Embassy, accusing the United States of kidnapping Marcos.

The ousted ruler urged supporters to go ahead with a planned rally on Thursday, May 1, which he said was not only a day for workers, but also the anniversary of his marriage to Mrs. Marcos in 1954.

During Marcos' reign, thousands of Filipino workers marked each May Day with rallies to protest low wages, Marcos' ban on strikes, and alleged military brutalities against workers.

As in previous speeches, Marcos accused the Aquino government of illegally confiscating his property.

Israeli police and demolition experts search the belongings of a man shot to death today at the entrance to the Garden Tomb, a Christian shrine in Jerusalem.

British tourist killed near Christian shrine

JERUSALEM (AP) — A British tourist was shot and killed near a Christian religious shrine in predominantly Arab east Jerusalem. It was the third such attack in six weeks.

The foreign minister, Yitzhak Shamir, called the shooting of 28-year-old Paul Appleby an act of terrorism meant to frighten tourists and hurt Israel's tourism industry.

Police spokesman Rafi Levy said Appleby, of Bristol, was shot once in the back of the head with a small caliber pistol near the Garden Tomb shrine, regarded by some Protestants as the hilltop where Jesus was crucified and buried.

Roman Catholics, supported by most Bible scholars, believe the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, which is several hundred yards from the Garden Tomb, covers the site of the crucifixion and burial.

Police said investigators were studying whether the attack was in retaliation for British support of the April 15 air strikes on Libya. But Prime Minister Shimon Peres said he doubted the gunman knew that his victim was British.

Peres told Israel Radio: "We know these cases where someone falls on an innocent person from behind and tries to kill him. We are fighting this all the time, and we will have to fight it more."

The Rev. William White of Dorset, who supervises the shrine, told Israel Radio that Appleby was carrying a bible when he was killed.

White said a woman told him she heard a shot shortly after noon, and that he ran to call police. "Almost in front of our eyes a life has been taken and this disturbs us. This is where we welcome pilgrims. It's very upsetting," he told The Associated Press.

Two other tourists were wounded in shooting attacks, also near holy sites in the old walled city, since last month. Both survived.

On April 16, a German woman was shot in the shoulder as she strolled the Via Dolorosa where Jesus is said to have carried his cross to crucifixion. On March 7, an American Jewish visitor was grazed in the head after shots were fired near the Western Wall remnant of the ancient Jewish temple and a bullet apparently ricocheted off the wall.

Military sources said last week they were trying to uncover four terror gangs operating out of Jerusalem's Old City and the occupied West Bank.

The sources said the gangs were responsible for recent attacks in and around Jerusalem, including the March 2 assassination of the Israeli-appointed mayor of Nablus, Zafer al-Masri.

34 new arts grants announced

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Endowment for the Arts recently announced 34 new grants totaling $495,120 for arts service projects.

The grants provide artists and arts organizations throughout the country with information and management resources.

Hugh Southern of the endowment said, "The goal of these projects is to assist artists and art groups in obtaining professional management, expertise and resources to improve administrative capabilities vital to their growth and development."

In a separate action, Southern announced 15 grants totalling $207,500 for artists' residency programs at artists' colonies located throughout the country.

The grants will provide the opportunity for 1,100 artist residencies at 14 colonies. Southern said the grants "provide artists with valuable time to work in a setting that is free from other endeavor and distractions."

CONGRESS

Like Sneison, he suggested it be triggered into effect once the price of oil drops below a pre-determined level, such as $22 a barrel.

He reasoned this would pull the North American producing countries, including Canada and Mexico, into a cartel with Great Britain that could take over the leadership in world oil from the Arab countries.

Hunsicker also calls for repeal of the Windfall Profit Tax, deregulation of natural gas and eliminating the Fuel Use Act.

Sullivan, a professor at San Antonio College, has included in his platform a balanced budget and the "wise use of tax dollars."

Lowry headed his list of issues with the economy and the "collapse in oil prices and severe problem with real estate." The state's top banks' loan portfolios have 10-15 percent of the money tied up in energy loans and another 30-40 percent in real estate. As these two industries suffer, it could trigger a collapse of the banks, he said.

"THE BEST WAY to avoid the collapse we face is crash mobilization centered on the Strategic Defense Initiative (Star Wars) program," he said.

Lowry's plan of action involves turning the Federal Reserve Board into a national bank with the money to be loaned to "basic industries" at an interest rate of 2-4 percent. For service-related industries, the interest rate would be higher. Basic industries, he said, are machines, tool, steel, agriculture and energy.

He also wants to see the country return to gold-reserve backed dollars and proposes the country issue $500 billion in new Treasury Notes for immediate injection into the economy.

"This country would be going into debt, but in a constructive manner. It would be channeling money into those basic industries," Lowry said. Service-related jobs such as work at fast-food restaurants, he continued, "contribute very little to the economy."

Sneison also calls for development of an agriculture policy. "Agriculture and ranching are in a similar situation as oil. We're not dealing with the free market place," he said of trade barriers. "And the Ag Department was short-sighted in buying up the herds of dairy cattle. They slaughtered the cows and beef futures go through the floor. Agriculture has to open up more world markets. One of three acres planted in the United States needs a world market."

Lowry called for a moratorium on all farm foreclosures with loans to be made available to farmers at a "real parity price."

Getting the federal budget under control is another item on Sneison's shopping list. The former state senator sees the Gramm-Rudman Bill as one method to "get Congress to focus its attention on the problem."

Sullivan, in a March 27 story in the Reporter-Telegram, proposed putting a tax on imports, such as automobiles, oil and electronic gadgets. He also suggested the United States and Japan work out a balance-of-trade agreement that would be fair and equitable. And he supports the philosophies of reducing the national debt and outlawing deficit spending.

IMMIGRATION IS another major problem for the district, in Hunsicker's opinion. There is a lack of sufficient Border Patrol agents, and illegal aliens now no longer wait until dark to walk into this country, he said.

His solution involves setting up a guest worker program — also called a reciprocal economic cooperation — with Mexico.

"I hear a lot of talk about free trade from the Administration. That's nonsense. There is no free trade out there. Take the oil and gas industry — 75 percent of our oil and gas is controlled by governments, and other countries have trade barriers on certain imports. I would say to Japan we must work toward balancing out the dollar for yen in equal amounts," Hunsicker said.

Sneison prefers to see more foreign investments in Mexico and development of the twin-factory concept. "There is so little confidence in Mexico's banking system. Mexico needs internal reforms of their finance system."

The new bridge that opened at Presidio should help West Texas and Mexico in transporting goods, he noted.

Lowry claimed the SDI program would have a major economic impact on the U.S. and the field of technology. Fusion power that is being developed would revolutionize the steel industry by discovering a method in which more steel could be produced at a lower cost. Cost of the SDI program would be recovered in the many products it would produce. "For every $1 spent on the Apollo sapce program it returned $14," he said.

His other platforms include giving a blank check for research into AIDS, a mass screening of the population to determine who is carrying the virus and a quarantining of those people, and a war on drugs in which bankers involved in laundering drug money are thrown into jail.

Lowry said LaRouche has been slandered by newspapers and televisions. As for his own candidacy, he contended "I've not heard one recommendation from any of the candidates for solving the crises we face."

Hunsicker said his experience as a combat pilot has made him unafraid, plus he spent 4½ years at the Pentagon where he learned about government bureaucracy. "I have the drive, determination and the dedication to go to Washington and serve you as if you were actually present. My special interest groups are the people of West Texas."

Sullivan said his aim is to "fulfill the goals the good Lord has for me. I want to do a good job as a congressman."

And Sneison said his knowledge of the district already and his experience in the State Legislature should be a boost for him. His senatorial district encompassed almost the same boundaries as the 21st Congressional District.

"When you've already plowed the ground it's not hard to cultivate it," hs said. But he also has noticed that this political year is the first time there's been an "economic pessimism rather than economic optimism."

REAGAN

The Reagans, en route to next week's seven-nation summit of the industrialized democracies, took a walk Sunday on the beach near the estate where they have been staying.

The president tossed a coconut with Jim Kuhn, his youthful personal aide, and surprised a man with a home video camera who was taking pictures of a Coast Guard cutter offshore.

The tourist did a double take when he looked up and saw the president, and they chatted briefly before the Reagans moved on. News photographers watched the Reagans' rare walk out in the open but were not permitted to get near them.

Another sunbather intercepted the couple on the walk back to the house and patted the president on the shoulder before a Secret Service agent quickly stepped forward to indicate his disapproval.

Except for the brief walk, the Reagans did not appear in public after their arrival on the island Saturday.

Death row inmates wait for high court's ruling

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Texas prison inmates, including eight scheduled to be executed in May, are awaiting a U.S. Supreme Court ruling on the practice of excluding jurors who oppose the death penalty.

The ruling is expected to come in late June or early July, Attorney General Jim Mattox said. If the highest court maintains the status quo, it could open the floodgates for the 230 Texas death row inmates. Weekly executions would be likely, Mattox predicted.

Texas has executed a dozen inmates by lethal injection since the state resumed the death penalty in 1982.

Scheduled executions in May include Johnny Ray Penry, 29, of Livingston, on May 7, and Robert Streetman, 25, of Silsbee, May 8.

Harvey Earvin, 28, of Lufkin, is scheduled to die May 14, while Jay Kelly Pinkerton of Amarillo faces his fourth execution date on May 15.

In addition, Danny Dean Thomas, 30, of Vidor has a May 20 death date, while Jose Guzman, 22, a Salvadoran national, is scheduled to die May 23.

Others with execution dates are Stephen Ray Nethery, 25, of Hamilton, Tenn., on May 28; and Billy Hughes Jr., 34, of Montgomery, Ala., on May 29.

After Jeffery Allen Barney, 28, was executed April 16 for raping and killing a minister's wife in Pasadena, Mattox said Streetman and Pinkerton were the most likely to die as scheduled. Barney refused all appeals.

Streetman, who received an execution stay in February, was convicted of the December 1982 shooting death of Christine Baker in her ranch home near Kountze in East Texas. Streetman shot Ms. Baker, 44, during a robbery which netted $1 from her purse, investigators said.

Pinkerton was convicted of killing 30-year-old Sarah Dawn Lawrence while burglarizing her Amarillo home in October 1979 when he was 17 years old.

Penry, who is illiterate, was convicted of raping and stabbing to death Pamela Carpenter, 22, of Livingston in October 1979.

Earvin, who has been on death row since 1977, is scheduled to die for the December 1976 robbery and slaying of 75-year-old Ertis Brock at a Lufkin service station. He was 19 when he was convicted.

Nethery was convicted of fatally shooting Dallas police officer John McCarthy in February 1981.

Hughes, a registered lobbyist against capital punishment, was convicted in the 1976 slaying of state trooper Marck Frederick. He has maintained his innocence since the shooting. He had a previous execution date in July 1979.

Thomas was convicted of kidnapping and killing Sylvia Elaine Harrison of Houston after stopping to help her replace an auto fan belt in July 1981.

Two of four inmates recaptured

TRINITY (AP) — Two of four prison inmates who overpowered a guard and escaped from the Eastham Unit were recaptured today about six miles from the prison, a Texas Department of Corrections spokesman said.

Although heavy rains hampered the search for the inmates who escaped Sunday night, the rain also helped authorities recapture Frank Moon, 34 and Vernon Moon, 25, spokesman Phil Guthrie said.

"They told officers after they escaped that they stole horses from the prison grounds and rode double until they were forced to take cover from the heavy rain," Guthrie said.

The inmates were working in a maintenance crew when officer Terry Williams was allegedly hit in the head and then bound. Williams was reported in good condition at a local hospital today.

Tracking dogs led authorities to the two men who were found between 8 a.m. and 8:30 a.m. Both still wore their prison trousers but were shirtless, Guthrie said. They were back in prison by 9 a.m.

Authorities believed the two escaped inmates still at large were in the same area.

Week after tornado 'most challenging'

SWEETWATER (AP) — Just over a week ago, the mayor of this West Texas city thought the toughest challenge in his life had been coping with the oilfield boom of the early 1980s.

But Mayor Rick Rhodes, standing knee-deep in debris that once was the southern section of his city, said the real task lay in helping residents recover from twin tornadoes that caused an estimated $20 million in damage.

In the oil business, "we'd get those days when it was real hectic. I didn't think there could be anything that was more intensive or more involved than that," he said.

"This (the week after the tornado), without a doubt, has been the most challenging situation as far as time demand and energy demands that I have ever been through," Rhodes said.

Rhodes, 32, said he found working with his father-in-law in the oilfield service business challenging. Trying to match personnel, equipment and customers in the rapidly moving oil business was tough, he said.

He said being Sweetwater's mayor was not a full-time job until last year and last week. In October, six months after his election, a group of citizens petitioned for his resignation as the city's leader.

Rhodes said he had learned not to be a "quitter" while he was a student at Sweetwater High School and "to resign would be most foolish, and I, therefore, decline to attempt to placate a few dissidents."

The recall vote failed.

Rhodes said that during the week after the April 19 twisters, residents slapped him on the back and congratulated him on the job he and the city did in coming to grasp with the disaster situation.

"You think about serving, and you really don't think it's that time-consuming, unless you have some major disaster," said Rhodes.

He said that soon after the twisters struck about 7:30 a.m., he met with City Manager David Mattox and Jerry Huffman, the city's emergency action director, to organize and coordinate a recovery plan.

"Your tendency is to go help people. You want to get to an area and help people. But we could help those people more by organizing to help them than to just go running out there as individuals," said Rhodes.

Rhodes and Mattox said the "weakest" decision was not putting stricter controls on contractors immediately.

Sweetwater officials, meeting with their counterparts from Paris, Lubbock and Wichita Falls, realized that 700 to 800 contractors were coming to the disaster scene to do repair work.

Rhodes said the city first required the contractors simply to sign up, but city commissioners later strengthened the requirement, forcing contractors to pay a $5,000 cash bond to operate in the disaster area.

"We should have done that from the start," said Rhodes. "That would have saved a lot of bad feelings."

Rhodes said the cleanup should be complete in about a year and the process of rebuilding will be well on its way.

"Hopefully, some of the people will end up with better housing than what they were in," he said. "I don't think there is any doubt we are going to be a closer community.

"One of the most heartwarming things to see is there are no barriers right now," said Rhodes. "Black or white, Catholic or Protestant, Church of Christ or Baptist — everyone is pitching in, helping do everything they can."

Winner: Victory not related to religion, alcohol

MESQUITE (AP) — One of the winners in a City Council runoff election says his victory had nothing to do with religion or alcohol.

It just means most residents believe it's OK to let some restaurants sell alcoholic drinks, said victorious candidate Mike Anderson.

Anderson, a newcomer, and incumbent Terry Brimer both came up winners in Saturday's council election in which they were opposed by two write-in candidates backed by a Baptist preacher to claimed the city was run by "loose-living liberals."

"I believe the reason for the high voter turnout and the reason we won is because the citizens are in favor of the restaurant district" in which mixed drink sales are allowed, said Anderson, a 29-year-old commercial real estate agent.

"As far as the controversy, they tried to make it sound like an alcohol-religious issue. That really wasn't the issue," he said. "The voters turned out and showed they're in favor of it. I am a Christian. That is between me and God."

Anderson beat write-in candidate Archie Palmore 2,180 to 1,880. Brimer defeated Mary Lasiter, a cable television producer, by a vote of 2,176 to 1,904.

Palmore and Ms. Lasiter were backed by the Rev. Ronnie Yarber, who had preached in church and on a cable television channel against allowing the sale of liquor in Mesquite.

Trail drive preserves ranch's Western heritage

MOUNTAIN HOME (AP) — The 11th annual Y.O. Ranch Longhorn Trail Drive attracted a wide assortment of cowboys and cowgirls, including a U.S. marshal from Dodge City, Kan., and a bride from New Braunfels.

"The trail drive is something I've always done," said Helen Burnett, who got married at the ranch pavilion on the eve of the drive, which ended Sunday.

"I love what this has done for the heritage it preserves," she said Saturday, standing next to her new husband Sam Burnett, an insurance executive from San Antonio.

The Burnetts were among 150 cowpokes who saddled up Saturday and headed down the dusty trail.

The group herded about 35 head of longhorns through the rugged, rocky 55,000-acre ranch on a two-day trek.

"Whoo, cattle," cooed U.S. Marshall Kenny House from Dodge City as he coaxed the longhorns through the trees.

House said he helped Y.O. Ranch owner Charles Schreiner III run the first trail drive to Lubbock in 1976.

"Some of my closest and best friends are here," he said, adding that he participates in the trail ride because he wants "to help out — help Charley."

Schreiner, whose grandfather Capt. Charles Schreiner founded the ranch 100 years ago, said he conducts the trail drive for fun and to keep history alive.

"We like to keep out here as much of the Old West as we can under the circumstances," he said.

Charles Schreiner III, top left, owner of the Y.O. Ranch near Mountain Home, Sunday rounds up some of the 35 longhorn cattle that he and 150 friends and relatives used in a cattle drive Saturday.

"You got to remember your roots — where we all came from," he said, a pinched, dirty cowboy hat in his lap.

So Schreiner invited his friends for a pre-1900s costume party Friday night, a trail drive and night of festivities around the campfire Saturday.

The drive concluded Sunday after a cowboy prayer meeting on horseback and the last few miles of the journey.

The only ones who weren't having a good time were the longhorns.

"These steers are not real wild about participating in this thing," said C.D. "Fibber" McGehee, wildlife biologist for the ranch. "They can be ornery as all git out."

Except for the pickup trucks and four-wheel drives, the trail drive looked much like those that have been depicted on television and in western art.

Cowboys and cowgirls were dressed in jeans, chaps, bandanas, spurs, cowboy hats and boots.

They rode on spirited horses and the less hardy jostled along in covered wagons and a stage coach.

Schreiner, known as "Three" to his friends, said he is satisfied with the trail drive being held on the ranch.

"Besides, we don't have to have parade permits and police escorts," he said.

The drive attracted "doctors, lawyers, ranchers — average ol' boys, just whoever's interested in these western type deals," McGee said.

The event also attracted Rae Fritz, a nurse at Sid Peterson Hospital in Kerrville.

Mrs. Fritz, whose husband Andy works on the ranch, said she has been helping with the drive ever since the 1976 trek to Lubbock.

"I'm a nurse and a cowgirl on the side," she said. "I wish it were the other way around. There's a pleasure you get out of it you don't get working inside.

"I like being around livestock. Livestock is a lot more honest than people," she said.

Rancher's family searches for clues in his murder

MENARD (AP) — Even though Burlene Murchison feels like she's "hit a dead end," she and other family members vow they will find the killer of her son, a 27-year-old rancher who was stabbed to death two years ago.

A $10,000 reward fund has been established for information leading to arrests and convictions in the death of Eddie Murchison, whose body was found by his mother on July 13, 1984, at his home in this West Texas community.

The victim had been stabbed 18 times, and investigators describe the killer as calculating and vengeful.

"It's all very strange. We feel like we've just hit a dead end," said Mrs. Murchison. "We're just ordinary people and don't know who to ask or who to turn to."

The family has hired private investigators.

District Attorney Ron Sutton said the investigation has not been dropped, "and you never know when something might turn up. We've shared information with them (private investigators) at the request of the family.

"We're dealing with a situation that occurred in the wee hours of night. In small towns, people are not out running around and noticing things at that time," Sutton told the San Angelo Standard-Times.

Mrs. Murchison, who visited her son's house about three times a week, said she went to his home the day he was killed when he didn't show up for work.

"The house looked OK, and I used my key to unlock the front door. I started down a long hall to the bedroom and I got about halfway and just got a bad feeling," she said.

Robbery was not a motive, according to investigators who found Murchison's watch, jewelry and about $80 left untouched on a bedside table.

South Texas prairie could be new home for primates

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — South Texas' image as the land of the longhorn and home to such ordinary wild game as deer and quail may be making a change.

It may one day be known as the land of the monkey.

Officials in Florida are seeking out South Texas locations for shipping 80 rhesus monkeys that are overrunning parts of central Florida like invaders from a banana republic.

And these are no ordinary monkeys. They're believed to be descendants of movie star monkeys that escaped into the forest when Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios imported them for Tarzan movies being shot on location in the Florida Uplands in the 1930s.

The encroaching human population in the Ocala National Forest area — where bands of the monkeys roam — has prompted officials to begin capturing nearly half the monkey population.

Though they are not known to have assaulted anyone, they're territorial creatures and have occasionally frightened off humans who come too close, said Georgia Brown, spokeswoman for the Silver Springs nature park in Florida.

Silver Springs is where the troublesome monkeys are being rounded up for possible deportation to Texas.

Humane Society officials in Corpus Christi are expected to be consulted this week about exploring three or four exotic animal preserves in South Texas being considered as sites for the monkeys.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQ1052 ♡KJ65 ◇Q954 ♣
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one club. What action do you take?
A.—You have an excellent offensive hand, which could play well in any of the unbid suits. Despite the fact that your spade suit is so much stronger than the others, we prefer a takeout double to an overcall of one spade.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K10 ♡AK954 ◇AQ9 ♣J76
Partner opens the bidding with five clubs. What action do you take?
A.—Partner's preempt shows a long, strong club suit and the ability to take eight tricks with his suit as trumps. Your hand certainly has plenty of play for four tricks, so we would commit the hand to slam. However, to prevent a lead through our king of spades, which could result in the loss of two tricks right off the bat, we could elect to play in six no trump rather than six clubs.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ7 ♡K4 ◇J102 ♣AQ854
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	3 ♠	Pass	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—You could hardly ask for a better spot for the opponents to play the hand. However, if you double East might decide that his side does have a better contract after all, and take some action. At this vulnerability, you will get 100 points for every trick you defeat the contract. Pass, and be satisfied with possibly a small profit.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A8 ♡A7652 ◇AQ1063 ♣5
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	2 ♠	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Partner is not showing much strength, but since he did not take some sort of preference he should have a fair six-card suit. Your hand is just worth one more move, and the recommended action is a raise to three spades—nothing else is likely to stir him.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠73 ♡AQ983 ◇AQ10 ♣K93

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	2 ◇

What action do you take?
A.—You might or might not have the values to make three no trump. However, you can almost certainly defeat two diamonds, since you rate to take at least five tricks in your own hand. Double. Should partner have the values for your side to make three no trump, you can look forward to a handsome penalty. In any event, should they make their contract you won't have doubled them into game.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQJ ♡7 ◇A83 ♣KJ10652
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Partner has just bought himself a contract. You have more than you have promised to this point, but the hand has all the earmarks of a misfit and you have no sure source of tricks. Therefore, don't even think about two no trump. Pass.

Vincente Minnelli honored

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Vincente Minnelli was awarded France's highest honor at the hospital where the 83-year-old director is being treated for pneumonia as his daughter, Liza Minnelli, and others looked on.

In a ceremony at Cedars-Sinai Hospital, Minnelli received the Legion of Honor for his contributions to French culture, hospital spokesman Ron Wise said Saturday.

Consul General Francois Mouton placed the medal around Minnelli's neck after a speech in French. Among Minnelli's films are "Gigi" and "An American in Paris."

Also attending the ceremony Thursday were Minnelli's wife, Lee, singer Tony Martin and his wife, Cyd Charisse; composer Henry Mancini and producer Jack Haley Jr., Wise said. Minnelli also received messages of congratulations from President and Nancy Reagan, Frank Sinatra and Barbra Streisand.

The director was admitted to the hospital April 18 for symptoms of pneumonia. His condition is stable and fair, Wise said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Entertainer Dolly Parton says she always yearned to change the first letter on the famous hillside "Hollywood" sign. Her dream comes true this week when she opens a theme park near her hometown named "Dollywood."

"It just popped into my mind that it would be a good name for a park," Miss Parton says in the May 5 issue of People magazine. The park outside Pigeon Forge, Tenn., officially opens Thursday.

Parton

However, some changes had to be made regarding a photo of the country music star and her husband, Nashville contractor Carl Dean, that was to hang in a park museum, the magazine said.

"The other day, the photographer for the museum came over to the house, and Carl cut some eyes out of a grocery bag. He had on a suit and put this bag over his head and called himself 'the unknown husband' — like the unknown comic," the performer said.

"That is just his style. He thought it would be fine if I wanted to put that one in the museum, but I thought maybe some people would be insulted."

Dean agreed to have another photo taken.

Max, who's turned out annual portraits of Miss Liberty since 1976, will stand on a 10-foot-high stage in Manhattan's Battery Park on July 4, sloshing away with 6-inch-wide brushes at 10 giant versions of Liberty's head all during the ceremonies, Newsweek said in this week's issue.

Some will go as gifts to Mexico, Canada, France, President Reagan and Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca, who helped lead the statue's restoration effort.

LONDON (AP) — Queen Anne-Marie, the 38-year-old wife of ex-King Constantine of Greece, gave birth to a boy, their fifth child, it has been announced.

The prince, born Saturday at St. Mary's Hospital, weighed 8 pounds, 4 ounces, a spokesman for Constantine said Sunday. Mother and baby were "wonderfully well," he said.

The baby has not yet been named.

Constantine, 45, and Danish-born Anne-Marie, went into exile in 1967 and live in northern London. Their four other children are Princess Alexia, 20; Crown Prince Paul, 18; Prince Nicholas, 16, and Princess Theodora, 2.

Anne-Marie is a sister of Queen Margrethe of Denmark.

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — A 15-month-old infant who suffered from pneumonia and congestive heart failure was in critical condition Sunday after receiving a heart transplant, a hospital spokesman said.

The child, identified only as Baby James, received the heart Saturday at Loma Linda University Medical Center, said spokesman Dick Schaefer.

For reasons of confidentiality, Schaefer said he could not confirm that Baby James had received the heart of a 15-month-old girl who was declared brain dead after she accidentally swallowed the drug Thorazine, which is often used to treat mental disorders.

The girl's heart was removed Saturday and sent to Loma Linda, said Gwen Young, a spokeswoman for the California Medical Center in Los Angeles. Schaefer said the transplant on Baby James was the only one performed Saturday.

The comatose girl was brought to the hospital by her recently widowed father April 20. She suffered cardiac arrest during treatment and was declared brain dead.

The father was suspected of child abuse and arrested, but authorities later cleared him of any wrongdoing. He has not been identified.

HYANNIS PORT, Mass. (AP) — A few out-of-town cars cruised by the Kennedy family compound but all else appeared quiet a day after the star-studded wedding reception for Maria Shriver and Arnold Schwarzenegger.

Workers took down two white tents Sunday, packing them and other remains of Saturday's reception into two rental trucks parked near the seaside homes of the renowned political family.

Most of the famous guests left just after the reception, police said.

The 30-year-old bride, a co-anchor of the "CBS Morning News," is the daughter of Eunice Kennedy Shriver and former ambassador R. Sargent Shriver. She will go by the name of Maria Shriver Schwarzenegger but will continue to call herself Maria Shriver on the air.

Schwarzenegger, 38, is a former world champion body-builder turned actor. He has starred in "Pumping Iron," "The Terminator" and "Conan, the Barbarian."

Their honeymoon destination was kept a secret.

WINDSOR, England (AP) — The body of the Duchess of Windsor lay in a chapel at Windsor Castle today, where she will be buried in the royal family's cemetery beside the man who gave up an empire rather than rule without her.

The oak casket bearing the remains of the former Wallis Warfield Spencer Simpson was escorted to England Sunday from the Paris mansion where she lived with her husband, the Duke of Windsor, for more than 20 years. She died there Thursday at the age of 89.

Queen Elizabeth II and members of the royal family were expected to pay their respects to the duchess today. Buckingham Palace said there will be no public viewing.

The closed casket, covered with wreaths of white flowers, will remain in Albert Memorial Chapel at the royal castle's St. George's Chapel until Tuesday's funeral and burial at Frogmore Gardens.

Power of pressure

America had cause to be disappointed last week when only Britain among the European allies supported U.S. military action against terrorist targets in Libya. This week, the scoreboard on allied cooperation is looking considerably better. More encouraging yet, there are signs that the regime of Moammar Khadafy may be cracking under pressure. All of this can be read as gradual vindication for President Reagan's decision to act boldly.

Begin with the allies. When President Reagan sent U.N. Ambassador Vernon Walters to consult with the Europeans and inform them that the United States planned to attack Libyan targets, the response was decidedly discouraging. But the Walters mission did spur the European foreign ministers to agree on reducing the staffs of Libyan embassies in Europe and restricting the movements of Libya's so-called diplomats. The measures jointly adopted by the Europeans also included stricter visa requirements for Libyan citizens traveling in Europe.

These political sanctions might seem trivial, particularly so when compared with American air strikes. But, in fact, these steps constituted the strongest political measures ever adopted jointly by the Europeans to punish the Khadafy regime and limit opportunities for future Libyan-inspired terrorism.

This much was prompted by American talk. Once Khadafy had actually been given a taste of American steel, the Europeans were moved to act again, stiffening their previous sanctions. This week, the European Community's 12 foreign ministers agreed to further measures shrinking Libyan diplomatic missions throughout Europe to absolute minimum levels consistent with maintaining relations.

Implementation began Wednesday when West Germany ordered 22 Libyan diplomats expelled and imposed travel restrictions on the 39 remaining. Britain, meanwhile, moved to expel 21 Libyan students thought to be potential terrorists. These actions lend direct support to the U.S. position that the Khadafy regime sponsors terrorism and must be punished, in one form of another, for its violations of internationally accepted norms of conduct.

What effect all this has on the erratic Col. Khadafy is anyone's guess. But any European support for the Reagan stand against Khadafy only advances the cause of encouraging saner Libyans — those in the armed forces and government bureaucracy, for example — to recognize that their mad colonel has become a disastrous liability to Libya and its people. And there is reason to hope that the point may have been made well enough by the U.S. air strikes last week. The most tantalizing rumor out of Tripoli during the last few days was that Moammar Khadafy had already been compelled to share power with members of a military junta that may be taking over control of the government.

Even if these reports prove to be unfounded, or at least premature, it is clear that Reagan's decision to act boldly in combating terrorism is accomplishing what would otherwise have remained undone. That argues persuasively for keeping the pressure on Khadafy, and on America's allies as well.

Another View:

Al Capone's next one

Frankly, we had not given a lot of thought to what might be found in Al Capone's vault when it was bulldozed and blasted open recently in a highly hyped two-hour television extravaganza broadcast live and direct from the basement of an old Chicago hotel. We did not even tune in to watch the $1 million production, which was seen on 181 American stations and has been sold to 14 foreign countries. Instead, we watched the Los Angeles Dodgers blow another game to the San Francisco Giants. That is a choice that we will long regret, because it cost us the chance to witness one of television's more stupefying absurdities.

For the vault, as everyone must know by now, was not in fact a vault, and it contained nothing. No Statz Bearcat, no gold bullion, no cache of booze, no Judge Crater. Yet, so we had been assured, scientific instruments had detected the indisputable existence of a long chamber below the building that Gangland's King had used as his headquarters. Adding to the hoopla, the Internal Revenue Service had put an $800,000 tax lien on whatever of value might be found. Chicago's medical examiner had staked his own claim to any stiffs discovered on the premises. Lawyers were heard from, arguing that Capone's heirs deserved their share of the goodies.

When the prime-time demolition work was done, all that was discovered was a lot of dirt and an empty bottle. No remains of Capone's Prohibition-era enemies, no discarded wardrobe — a pity, because we read that The Big Guy was partial to suits of lime-green, purple and yellow — no molls, no roscoes, no bathtub gin, not even a ukulele or a hip flask.

The rating surveys say that millions watched while 120 minutes of nothing unfolded. If that is so, then television's arbiters of popular culture almost certainly will take heart and figure out how to go on from here. How about a miniseries, done on location around the world, on "Where Did I Put That Stuff: The Continuing Search for Al Capone's Treasure"? What say to a bouncy docudrama musical called "Alphonse"? Or maybe a sitcom, "Scarface Knows Best." The tie-ins — T-shirts, Hotel Vault Dolls, Big Al Mugs — could be worth millions. What the hell, the public bought it once, there is no reason that it will not go for it again. Why dontcha run that one through your Chicago typewriter and see who bolts for cover?

U.S. quietly tilts toward Iran

WASHINGTON — Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini, not Libya's Moammar Khadafy, directs the world's most deadly terrorist network. Yet incredibly, the Reagan administration has begun a hush-hush, barely perceptible tilt toward Iran.

Jack Anderson

Take the question of hostages, for example. The implacable Khomeini, not Khadafy, controls the fate of American hostages in Washington has been quietly conciliatory in the behind-the-scenes negotiations with Iran over the American hostages held by pro-Iranian terrorists.

This dramatic, subterranean shift in policy toward Iran goes beyond the fate of the hostages into the realm of global geopolitics. President Reagan has been convinced by his advisers (though there are still some dissenters) that an effort must be made to establish relations with Ayatollah Khomeini.

Their concern is that, without an American presence at all in Tehran, the Soviets may be tempted to occupy northern Iran during any post-Khomeini period of confusion or chaos. When we asked about the warming-up with Iran, one high-level State Department official tacitly confirmed the development by snapping testily: "We deal with the Soviet Union. We deal with Syria. So why not Iran?"

A clue to the surprising change in direction toward Iran can be detected by reading between the lines of President Reagan's hard-line denunciations of Khadafy. Reagan appears to hold Khadafy primarily responsible for the murders of Americans at the Rome and Vienna airports last December, as well as for subsequent terrorist attacks.

However, the terrorist Abu Nidal is known to have masterminded the airport attacks and may have engineered the later ones. Yet in 1985, when Iraq expelled him because it wanted better relations with the United States, Nidal went to Khomeini for help — and got it. Our sources estimate that the ayatollah has been giving Nidal about $25 million a year for his murderous ventures.

In addition, we've seen a classified U.S. intelligence report to the effect that the Rome and Vienna coordinated assaults were approved by the foreign ministers of Iran, Syria and Libya at a meeting in Tripoli on Dec. 23. The three governments' intelligence chiefs oversaw the twin operation, which was carried out by Nidal.

Finally, Nidal was spotted in East Berlin about the time of the discotheque bombing earlier this month. Intelligence sources say he may have had a hand in the atrocity — probably on loan to Khadafy from his protector and bankroller, Khomeini.

Yet Reagan has singled out Libya as the source of all anti-American terrorist evil, even when the evidence suggests that Iran and Syria are at least equally guilty.

In addition to the geopolitical reason for rebuilding bridges to Iran, a senior White House official mentioned a similarly hardheaded inducement: money. It costs the United States a bundle to defend against the chaos that Iran sponsors.

"We have one (sensitive) report that indicates we are spending $10-$12 billion more than we would have to if relations with Iran were normal," he said.

As to what hopes of success the administration has for its overtures to Iran, the White House source said that Iranians in general, and even mainstream Shiites for that matter, are not as viscerally anti-American as they may seem. They have been stirred up by Khomeini to distract them from other troubles, such as the appalling slaughter of the war with Iraq and their declining living standards.

THIS IS A STICKUP: Bonnie and Clyde would be appalled. The FBI estimates that eight times as much money was stolen by bank officials and other insiders in one recent year as was extracted by bank robbers and burglars. Criminal misconduct by financial institution insiders was a major factor in about one-half of all bank failures in recent years. And the situation isn't helped by the punishment meted out. The small number of insiders who are convicted spend less than a year in prison.

CONSTITUTION CAPER: You remember the $150 million monument to the Constitution we told you was being pushed by the staff of the Constitution's bicentennial commission? Well, we may not have to worry about it much longer. A bill, already cleared by a House subcommittee, would ban further construction on the Mall beyond five structures already approved. The Constitution building is not one of the exempt.

MINI-EDITORIAL: Jimmy Carter apparently never learned what the presidency is all about. In 1980, he claimed that he had asked his daughter Amy's advice on nuclear disarmament — a revelation that understandably turned off voters who didn't want national policy set by a 12-year-old girl. Now Carter criticizes the air strike against Libya because Moammar Khadafy's infant daughter was killed. If someone had killed Amy, Carter said, "as long as life lasted I would seek to retaliate." Regrettable as any child's death is, it's worrisome to think that an American president thinks it would be acceptable to use his high office to settle personal scores.

Sen. Laxalt may toss hat in ring

WASHINGTON — Sen. Paul Laxalt is confiding to friends that he will give serious consideration to running for president if he can settle his libel suit against the McClatchy newspapers of California within the next six months.

Rowland Evans

Meeting that deadline probably would require an out-of-court settlement of the case, which involves stories connecting Laxalt to a "skimming" operation at a Carson City, Nev., gambling casino. The major impediment to a presidential bid by the senator always has been reluctance about his racing days. If the suit were settled, Laxalt — general chairman of the Republican Party — would be a formidable rival to front-running Vice President George Bush's support from party regulars.

A fantastic: A sign of conservative Laxalt's popularity in the Senate is a $500 personal contribution to his legal fund by the arch-liberal Democratic liberal, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

BEAVER AND THE SAUDIS

When word leaked out that Saudi Ambassador Prince Bandar had hired embattled ex-Reagan aide Mike Deaver, chances dropped sharply that Saudi Arabia will overcome congressional opposition to President Reagan's proposed $350 million arms sale to Riyadh.

"The Saudis lost 30 votes in the House when they hired Deaver," a longtime Washington representative of a major defense contractor told us. Deaver's increasing problems with alleged influence-peddling might hurt more than help his clients gain their objectives.

At the demand of Democratic congressional leaders, the General Accounting Office is investigating Deaver's alleged involvement with acid rain before he left the White House to take on Canada as a client.

NO MORE STOCKMANS

Incensed by former budget director David Stockman's $2.4 million take from his insider's book about life in the Reagan administration, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has ordered a total clampdown on any such accounts by Pentagon officials — starting with Assistant Secretary James H. Webb, a famed Vietnam novelist.

Webb wrote "Fields of Fire" about the war. He will not be able to sign a new book contract until after he leaves his job as an assistant defense secretary.

Arms control strategist Richard Perle, also an assistant secretary of defense, will be placed under the most embargo for his planned fictional account of bureaucratic wars. Perle says he never intended to pocket a dollar until after his resignation. Now he may not even be allowed to sign a book contract while still at the Pentagon.

LINDA'S WOES

Linda Chavez, a national favorite of the conservative movement as Civil Rights Commission executive director and later a Reagan aide, has been stunned by the cool reception from Maryland Republicans toward her Senate candidacy.

"I think she's badly shaken up," one of Chavez's managers told us. Although considered the weakest of the 50 state Republican Parties, the Maryland GOP is suspicious of Chavez as a recently-converted party member who dropped her Democratic affiliation only last year.

She has been considered by national party strategists as a good underdog possibility against Rep. Barbara Mikulski, the probable Democratic nominee who is a liberal feminist. But Chavez now faces a tough Sept. 9 primary against Bethesda businessman Richard Sullivan, a newcomer to both politics and national affairs who is picking up party support.

WHITHER QUOTAS

Two Cabinet members who are rivals in a year-old administration deadlock over whether President Reagan should issue an executive order banning hiring quotas agreed in a secret meeting April 17 that the issue ought to be brought to a head next month.

The meeting was held by chief of staff Donald T. Regan, plus the two principals: Attorney General Edwin Meese III, who favors the executive order, and Labor Secretary Bill Brock, who opposes it. The leaders of Meese and Brock to reach a compromise means the president will have to decide, unless the question is forgotten.

Some White House aides have preferred to let the order die a quiet death, considering heavy civil rights opposition. But the April 17 meeting decided that the question will be brought to the president when he returns from his Asian trip early in May.

CHARLEY REESE

U.S. needs to support its farmers

Several foreign countries — Mexico, Brazil and Argentina, to name just three — are heavily in debt and cannot pay back their loans.

Charley Reese

Thousands of American farmers are heavily in debt and cannot pay back their loans.

Now, it is interesting but not encouraging to look at how the Reagan administration has reacted to these two similar problems. In the case of the American farmers, the administration has instructed the farm banking system to send out foreclosure notices. Throw the farmers off their land and seize their land, homes and equipment.

In the case of the foreign debtors, however, Reagan's treasury secretary, James Baker, a wealthy Texas lawyer, has mounted a world-wide campaign to prevent — at the taxpayer's expense — the default of the foreign debtors.

Baker is pressuring private banks to provide $20 billion in additional bad loans to foreign countries and is urging additional lending by multinational organizations whose funds come from the taxpayers of their respective countries. The biggest share, of course, comes from American taxpayers.

It is unforgivable to place an additional tax burden on dispossessed American farmers in order to bail out the very large banks that foolishly lent too much to foreign countries.

You may well wonder why the Reagan administration does not mind if a bank declares an American farmer's loan in default but goes to extraordinary lengths to prevent other banks from having to declare foreign loans in default.

Well, if you wonder, I will tell you. The Reagan administration cares a great deal about the welfare of large banks and not a twit about the welfare of small farmers. The big banks have a great deal of influence on the Reagan administration and American farmers have none. The farmers shouldn't feel like Lone Rangers. The American people appear to have very little influence, too.

The striking contrast in the approach to the two problems legitimately raises the question of whether the federal government represents the American people or just those Americans engaged in the banking business.

Let's be very clear about what is happening. The recently passed farm bill did nothing to address the problem of farm debt. The government's decision in that regard was to liquidate the debt by foreclosure. Its message to the American farmers is: "Tough bedna, you borrowed it, you can't pay, so fork up your collateral."

The message to the foreign debtors, however, is: "Please, please don't declare yourselves in default and we will, in fact, bribe you not to do so with additional loans." It is, to hear the bankers and their political lackeys tell it, in the national interest to prevent the default of a foreign debtor but of little consequence if a third of America's farmers lose their farms.

The problem of the American farmers is that they didn't borrow enough. If they had borrowed enough to topple the bank with their default, the bank wouldn't let them default. If the Latin American nations got together and said, "We default," some of the largest banks in the world would collapse.

I don't wish to see the large banks collapse, but I think it is flat unacceptable that the federal government will not take action to prevent large numbers of American farmers from losing their farms. These people are not deadbeats. They are the best farmers, though not perhaps the best businessmen, in the world. They have been undone, at least in part, by government policies that keep their share of the food dollar artificially low.

If Congress curls up around the feet of the banking lobby like a toe-licking puppy, if it votes additional appropriations for the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund but does nothing to prevent farm foreclosures, then I'll be ticked off.

I guess I'm just a bigoted, but I do think an American Congress ought to be at least as concerned about American farmers as they are about foreign borrowers and their bankers.

Terrorism profitable for security businesses

Associated Press

Growing corporate concern about terrorism is proving profitable for security firms, which help clients defend themselves and advise them to keep a low profile overseas.

One company, for example, advises its corporate clients to avoid stretch limos.

"We're seeing a steady rise of multinational companies tooling up to protect themselves," said David Dickinson, vice president of Delta Scientific Corp., a Burbank, Calif.-based company which makes road barriers to defend against suicide bombers.

As concern about international terrorism grows, U.S. firms are taking a closer look at their security needs. While most focus on overseas operations, many corporations also are taking steps to "harden" facilities and protect key personnel in this country.

"Any security director, any management official will tell you budgets have increased considerably," said Myron Weinstein, chairman of the terrorism activities committee for the American Society of Industrial Security.

"When you have a man like Colonel Khadafy saying he's going to bring war to the streets of America, it's got to get the attention of upper management," he said.

Few corporations are willing to talk about their security programs.

"You tell people what your recipe is and they'll bake your cake for you," said a security officer for a major oil company. An official with a computer manufacturer said, "Once you talk about your security procedures they are no longer secure."

But security consultants and equipment manufacturers talk of increased planning and accelerated spending for security among the Fortune 500.

"These kinds of businesses are particularly representative of American capitalism. They are considered more vulnerable than a local manufacturing distributor," said Kerry Lydon, editor of of Security World Magazine.

Weinstein said multinational companies have been tightening overseas security for the past several years. Following the lead of U.S. embassies, companies have installed new walls and barriers around their plants and have instituted auto and package searches.

"The U.S. government has spent several billion dollars to protect its installations," said Weinstein. "It makes them more inaccessible and safer, and makes the business entities softer and more desirable targets."

These steps now are being duplicated in this country, said Joe Barry, a security consultant and vice president with Hirsch Electronics Corp., a California-based manufacturer of high-tech locks and access controls.

Primaries to show if LaRouche wins were flukes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Primaries in the next eight days in Texas, Indiana, Ohio and North Carolina will offer the first gauge of whether victories by disciples of political extremist Lyndon LaRouche in Illinois six weeks ago were a fluke or a forecast.

Democratic Party leaders in those four states discuss the LaRouche candidates, who are running for elected offices ranging from city governments to U.S. senator.

"I believe Illinois was the beginning of the end for them," Ohio Democratic Party Chairman James Rhodes said.

But Illinois Democrats also scoffed at LaRouche candidates — until March 18, when backers of the bizarre LaRouche philosophy won nomination for lieutenant governor and secretary of state.

Since then, Democrats have tried to pinpoint LaRouche candidates on statewide and educate voters about their unorthodox views. A preliminary Democratic National Committee survey showed 140 LaRouche candidates in 21 states compared with LaRouche claims of more than 600 nationwide.

"We certainly don't want to see this fluke that occurred in Illinois occur in another state," DNC spokesman Terry Michael said. "We think the spotlight that's been placed on these people is probably going to do the job in defeating them. I think we'd be surprised if in any race of any visibility, they won again."

LaRouche spokeswoman Nuvelda Cordero-Thompson said Illinois was not an exception.

"In terms of making any predictions, we do not do that," she said in an interview last week. "In all the states (with upcoming primaries), LaRouche supporters have done very well in previous races and we expect that to be the case again unless there's another vote fraud that takes place."

Even as voters prepare to cast their primary ballots in Texas on Saturday and in Ohio, Indiana and North Carolina the following Tuesday, LaRouche supporters have won four congressional nominations in Ohio and Texas by default. No other Democrats filed for the races.

— In Ohio, the LaRouche campaign claims 40 candidates on the primary ballot. Don Scott, who got 45,000 votes against Rep. Michael DeWine in 1984, is challenging Sen. John Glenn. There are 14 LaRouche people running for Congress. Of these, Cuyahoga County is alone in the Democratic primary in the 4th District and John Jones has no opposition in the 9th District. However, Jones recently disowned any link to LaRouche, although the LaRouche campaign claims him and Jones has admitted attending LaRouche meetings.

Said Rhodes, "They're not new in Ohio. They've been running here since 1980. They've never gotten anywhere and they won't this time."

— In Indiana, Democratic Senate candidate Jill Long worries about name recognition in her race against LaRouche candidate Georgia Ivey. Although Long is the party-endorsed candidate, she is little known.

Voters tend to back outsiders, Mondale says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Walter F. Mondale, a pre-eminent insider, says voters have a regrettable tendency to back outsiders for president, candidates like Ronald Reagan and even Jimmy Carter.

"There is a lot of evidence that the public responds to the alleged outsider who attacks everything, attacks government, attacks people's influence and poses as a pure independent with no entangling alliances," said the 1984 Democratic nominee.

"It's baloney," he added "but it works. We're talking about appearances and not reality."

In a wide-ranging, unburdening interview in his law office last week, Mondale said the Rev. Jesse Jackson was treated with kid gloves during the 1984 campaign because he was black.

The former Democratic nominee also had some advice for Vice President George Bush, who often is described as taking the same front-runner approach to the 1988 campaign that Mondale took in 1984.

Mondale was often criticized, first by his Democratic rivals and then by the Republicans, as being too willing to yield to the demands of special interest groups such as organized labor, feminists and others.

"I've got a theory," he said. "There are a lot of powerful forces in America — we might begin with major newspapers and networks, powerful commercial interests — who have an inordinate influence on the process now...I see nothing wrong with farmers organizing in a structure to be heard, working people, environmentalists and the rest. As long as it's aboveboard and clear, I think the process benefits."

But he acknowledged that "that's a minority view right now."

He said he considered it "a fact, I think a regrettable one" that the public is more attracted to candidates who run as outsiders.

He said the nation might be better off "if you could persuade the public that they'd be better off with a smart, tough insider who knew how to make the system work and who didn't flim-flam them. Reagan, even today, is running against his own government."

When asked if his remarks wouldn't apply equally to Carter, under whom Mondale served as vice president, he replied, "I know that Carter did that...I didn't do that and I went down the tube."

Mondale carried only his home state of Minnesota and the District of Columbia in his 1984 campaign against Reagan.

As for Jackson, Mondale said that during the campaign for the party nomination "I recognized that he was the first significant black candidate for president and I thought that he had to be dealt with with dignity and respect and I did.

"But that was not reciprocated, and it hurt my candidacy. If he does that again, it's going to hurt again."

It was Mondale's strongest and most direct expression of the frustration he often felt during the 1984 campaign.

Jackson declined to comment.

A month after the Democratic convention in 1984, Jackson was publicly criticizing Mondale for allegedly having no strategy for winning black votes in the campaign against President Reagan.

Asked about Jackson's impact in 1988, Mondale, speaking very slowly as if weighing each word, said, "I worry about it. We have to have a united Democratic Party, which includes everybody and in which everybody feels they're going to be treated equally and fairly with no senior partners."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Conditions forecast for 6 AM Tuesday

Highs in 90s due in Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

May is still almost a week away, but summer-like weather conditions will continue tonight and Tuesday, with an overnight low near 60 and a high Tuesday in the low 90s. Tonight will be fair, with winds from the south at 10-15 mph. Partly cloudy conditions will prevail Tuesday, with winds from the south at 15-20 mph and gusting, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Sunday's high temperature of 81 was 14 degrees below the record for the date of 95, set in 1974, while the overnight low of 49 was 18 degrees above the 1934 record of 31.

STATE

A weak cold front moving southward through the Lone Star State triggered isolated showers and a few thundershowers in Southeast Texas and the upper Gulf coast today.

The front extended from western Louisiana across Southeast Texas and the south central part of the state. The National Weather Service said patchy light fog also formed over sections of the coastal plains and the lower Rio Grande Valley.

Drizzle and fog reduced visibilities at San Antonio. Drier air filtered into the state from the west behind the frontal boundary.

Skies were mostly clear over the northern two-thirds of the state, and partly cloudy to cloudy elsewhere in the state.

Winds were east to southeast across most of South Texas ahead of the front and 5 to 15 mph, and south and southwest over much of the northern half of the state.

NATION

A cold front pushing across the Great Plains today brought thunderstorms and chilly weather to the nation's midsection.

The front triggered showers and thunderstorms in eastern Texas and the lower two-thirds of the Mississippi Valley. Showers were scattered from the upper valley to parts of the Plains.

A tornado was sighted east of Cleveland, Texas, late Sunday, but no damage was reported, the National Weather Service said. A flash flood watch was posted for east central Texas.

The front put an end to the summerlike temperatures of Sunday, with readings in the 30s and 40s in the northern and central Plains. In contrast, the mercury was in the 60s and lower 70s from the lower Great Lakes to the lower Mississippi Valley and the Southeast.

In eastern South Dakota, cold, damp, breezy conditions prompted a livestock advisory.

Sports in Brief

Baseball

ARLINGTON — The 4-year-old Robert H. Brooks Baseball complex for first-year minor league clubs during the California Angels' Texas spring training camp.

A record thunderstorm struck the downtown Arlington area at 10:27 p.m. CST, play was suspended with one out in the bottom of the eighth inning. An 80 mph wind was registered on the dome roof sensor.

The wind blew around the speakers and lights suspended from the roof to violently rock back and forth. Stadium public address announcer Bob Casey urged the 31,000 fans in attendance to move to the concourse area.

Tennis

TULSA, Okla. — Jimmy Connors won his second straight Bank of Oklahoma Tennis Classic on Sunday, beating Kevin Curren in the rain-shortened, windy event, 6-0, 6-2 in Tulsa.

The singles final was delayed 1½ hours when a thunderstorm system moved through the area. Gusty winds affected both players when play began.

MONTE CARLO, Monaco — Third-seeded Joakim Nystrom of Sweden beat Yannick Noah of France 6-3, 6-2, Sunday to win the rain-marred $325,000 Monte Carlo Open Tennis Championship.

The final, reduced from five to three sets because a shower held up the start for 90 minutes, was played in light rain. Nystrom collected $68,500 for his victory, while Noah won $30,250.

Auto Racing

MARTINSVILLE, Va. — Ricky Rudd outran the field and survived the oppressive heat Sunday to win the Sovran Bank 500 NASCAR stock car race at Martinsville Speedway.

Midland's Bobby Hillin finished a strong sixth.

IMOLA, Italy — Defending world champion Alain Prost of France, exploiting the few drops of gasoline left in his McLaren/TAG car, outdistanced Nelson Piquet of Brazil and won the Grand Prix of San Marino Sunday.

The 31-year-old Frenchman, in posting the 22nd Grand Prix victory of his career, zigzagged through the last two bends of a grueling race to have the engine picking up the fuel last.

Golf

AUSTIN — Don January and Gene Littler shot a final round 64 Sunday to hold on for a two-stroke win in the Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf.

The winners' four-round total of 25-under-par 265 beat the previous tournament record by two shots. Twenty-eight senior teams competed for $600,000 on the par-70, 6,387-yard Onion Creek Country Club course. The winners split $100,000.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Pat Bradley, completely a nearly flawless 65, birdied the 18th hole from 25 feet Sunday to win the $350,000 S&H Classic by one stroke over Janet Coles and move within $3,079 of becoming the first $1 million winner on the LPGA Tour.

Bradley finished with a 72-hole total of 273, 15 under par, that equaled the S&H record set by Alice Miller last year. Coles, who missed an eight-foot putt for birdie on the final hole after Bradley made her's, shot a 69 Sunday for a final score of 273.

Bowling

AKRON, Ohio — Marshall Holman won his 20th career title and surpassed the $1 million mark in earnings Saturday afternoon with a 233-211 victory over Mark Baker in the title game of the $250,000 Firestone Tournament of Champions.

Holman, 31, of Medford, Ore., became the sixth player to win 20 titles and the Professional Bowlers Association's third millionaire. The $50,000 top prize, the richest in PBA history, hiked Holman's career earnings to $1,020,969, behind only Earl Anthony and Mark Roth.

Track and Field

PHILADELPHIA — Defending champion Arkansas, with Gary Taylor breaking open the race on the third leg, won its second relay championship of the 92nd annual Penn Relays Saturday when the Razorbacks cakewalked to victory in the 6,000 meters.

Arkansas won in 14:55.30, with Penn State second at 14:56.71 and Auburn third in 14:58.80.

Seton Hall's Andrew Valmon, Dave Jones, Barron Chambliss and Akanni Obademoti won the sprint medley by an eyelash over favored Texas.

SWC still popular NFL watering hole

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS — The Southwest Conference again will prove to be a popular place for NFL teams to shop in Tuesday's draft with the most curiosity surrounding Kenneth Davis' selection.

Davis was one of the Texas Christian University players who admitted taking cash from a Horned Frog booster. Davis, a consensus All-American as a junior in 1984, had to give up his senior season of eligibility after just one game.

In just three season, the exiled Davis was the third leading rusher in SWC history behind Eric Dickerson and Earl Campbell.

Yet pro scouts aren't sure what to think about Davis. He played only sparingly in the Senior Bowl. Some scouts haven't been overly awed by his workouts.

Davis is projected to go above the third round but nobody knows for sure if they want to take a chance on him in the first round.

"Davis is one of the big mysteries in the draft," said one scout. "Teams are having a hard time figuring where he fits in."

IN ONE year, Davis went from a Heisman Trophy candidate to "Hesitation Trophy" champion of the 1986 NFL draft.

Packers pondering trade for Hogie

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys quarterback Gary Hogeboom will be traded to the Green Bay Packers unless the Indianapolis Colts make a strong last-minute pitch for him, according to a published report.

The Dallas Times Herald quoted sources as saying Hogeboom will be traded Tuesday morning.

Please see TRADE, Page 4B

If Davis isn't a first round choice, there WILL be others from the SWC.

The best guess here is that Texas A&M's 6-foot-6, 280-pound offensive lineman Doug Williams or Houston tight end Carl Hilton will be the top pick from the SWC.

Look for Southern Methodist's 1,000-yard-gaining tailback Reggie Dupard to get a first round ticket. Dupard's stock has skyrocketed in recent workouts by the pro teams.

Center Gene "The Coke Machine" Chilton of Texas should be a coveted first round prize.

Other possible first round choices include Houston's T.J. Turner, who is rated one of the top nose guards in the country, and defensive backs Carl Carter of Texas Tech, Kevin Wyatt of Arkansas, Domingo Bryant of Texas A&M, and Roderick Jones of SMU.

CARTER IS a favorite because of his aggressive, heavy-hitting style, and he should be the first SWC defensive back chosen. He could be the big sleeper of the draft from the SWC.

In the second and third rounds, Arkansas' safety Greg Lasker, SMU defensive tackle Joe Phillips, Texas A&M fullback Anthony Toney, Arkansas center Andy Upchurch and nose tackle Derek Turner of Baylor could be plucked off the SWC rosters.

Traditionally, the SWC has had its share of solid punters and placekickers and there are two excellent NFL candidates this season.

John Teltschik of Texas and Buzzy Sawyer of Baylor are two of the top punters in the country. However, punters traditionally are picked late in the draft except for Ray Guy of the Los Angeles Raiders who was Al Davis' No. 1 pick in 1973.

Angels' lead intact after 10-3 romp

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland's Angels closed a 10-game homestand by opening some daylight over the Beaumont Golden Gators with a 10-3 win before 1,178 fans at Angels Stadium Sunday night.

The rubber game of the series was important in that Beaumont could have pulled into a tie with the West Division leaders with a final night victory. Instead, the Angels head for a five-game series in El Paso with their grip on first place intact. San Antonio is one game behind after winning again Sunday.

A late inning uprising in which Midland exploded for five runs in the sixth and four in the eighth decided it and gave the Haloed Ones a very successful 7-3 homestand.

Kevin King's two-run homer to deep left was the big blow in the sixth and Billie Merrifield's three-run homer was the coup de grace in the eighth.

UNTIL THE sixth, however, it had been a pitchers' duel between Midland's Don Timberlake and Beaumont's Mike McClain, who grew up within an hour's drive of one another in North Carolina.

Gil Brandt turns both eyes to draft day

IRVING (AP) — Gil Brandt's telephone rings on his desk at such a constant pace he could be a stockbroker with a hot tip.

"I've got 43 telephone calls to return, all from sports writers," Brandt says.

He's talking to a writer from the Tulsa Tribune and quickly ticks off players from the Oklahoma area he thinks could be drafted.

A minute later Dallas Coach Tom Landry peeks his head into Brandt's office. It's time for yet another summit meeting.

It's the countdown to the NFL draft and Brandt, the Cowboys' talent guru, is as popular as ever.

Brandt laughs at a suggestion he should like talking to sports writers better than agents.

He no longer is in charge of signing players and negotiating with agents in part of club President Tex Schramm's shakeout from last season.

BRANDT'S PRIMARY duty now is the college draft and he says "I've got a lot more time to concentrate on the job at hand. The knowledge has always been there but now I'm concentrating better."

The Cowboys, all agree, are in dire need of a strong draft.

They could use a cornerback and a backup running back to veteran Tony Dorsett. They could use a linebacker and a slick wide receiver wouldn't hurt.

The Cowboys have been the talk of the NFL because of recent crop failures. Too many Rod Hills and Larry Bethea have offset past successes of draft bonanzas like Charlie Waters and Cliff Harris and free agents Mike Downs and Everson Walls.

In the NFL, it's how well did you do in the last draft. Memories of past success are short.

"It's a lot different when you are picking 20th instead of second," says Brandt. "Hill was a gamble who didn't pan out. Everybody says he was a bust but he started for Buffalo. He just didn't fit our system — that's the mistake we made.

"If Hill had been more competitive, than maybe everything would have worked out."

ALTHOUGH the Cowboys still subscribe to taking the best athlete available, they have changed a part of their basic doctrine.

Raul Tovar a willing Angel

If Raul Tovar leaves the impression that he's hungry to play the game, it's probably because he is.

"Last year I started the season in the Mexican League (Aguascalientes) and played 15 days before I quit," the Midland Angels' centerfielder admitted.

"It was the road trips. They were just too long."

So Tovar returned home to Caracas, Venezuela, and played. "I hit .341, second in the league, and batted in 44 runs."

When the California Angels' Preston Gomez signed him, he was eager to play.

It not only shows in his batting average, but in his play afield. Saturday night, he beat a hasty retreat to the green monster in center and battled the wall for Randy Byers' bid for extra bases. Raul rattled the boards, but made the play with a one-handed off balance catch.

Despite the catch, Midland still lost 11-10, but the play was typical Tovar.

At the plate, going into Sunday's final game of the homestand against Beaumont, Tovar's bat was just as impressive as his defense.

In an eight-game hitting streak, Tovar showed 17 hits for 37 (.459). In the final four games he was 10 for 18, thanks to a 5-for-5 Friday. Sunday the streak reached nine games in a row.

He had gone hitless in just two of the Angels' first 19 games. Ah, consistency. Tovar is thy name.

TOVAR lends the kind of experience to Manager Joe Maddon's 1986 Angels that was so absent last year when the Angels compiled the worst record in the Texas League, although the team was the nucleus of the same one that compiled the best record in the minor leagues at Redwood the year before.

Tovar is no overnight phenom. He spent four years in the Kansas City organization and two more playing in the Detroit farm system.

Two years ago, Tovar batted .224 for the Detroit Class AA farm at Birmingham in the Southern League.

Tovar proved there that he could play at the AA level. His .329 average has convinced Midland fans as well.

MIDLAND MANAGER Joe Maddon feels the trip to El Paso to play the Diablos for the next five nights is part of the reason the Angels are off to such a good start last year.

You see, his club has 20 games under its belt.

Last year Midland opened the season in El Paso against the Glenn Braggs, Billy Joe Riboudoux, Joey Meyers Diablos and it was an immediate disaster.

"It was a shock," said Maddon. "You can talk about that park out there all you want, but until you actually play there, you have no conception of what it's like. The kids couldn't handle it and I didn't know what to tell them. It was new to me, too."

But this year, Midland has 20 games under its belt, opening in pitching-paradises like Beaumont and San Antonio and then coming to Midland as part of the transition and preparation for El Paso.

"There's another difference," says Maddon. "I've told our pitchers to pitch the same here, and in El Paso, as they do in any other park."

And the pitchers have responded. Maddon is very pleased with the way they have come inside on the hitters.

And El Paso? "I told them to pitch like the distances were 600 feet and not to worry about it." It's easy to talk about that park out there, but until you actually pitch there....

High-flying Astros tag Reds with another shutout

Associated Press

HOUSTON (AP) — Three consecutive complete-game pitching performances by the Houston Astros starting staff have pushed the Astros to a two-game lead over the San Francisco Giants in the National League Western Division.

The Cincinnati Reds were the victims of the streak — which included a 3-1 win by Nolan Ryan Friday night, a 1-0 shutout by Mike Scott Saturday night, and a 6-0 shutout by Bob Knepper Sunday afternoon.

Knepper's victory was his fourth in as many decisions, tops in the National League.

"Our pitching is in a great groove," said Astros manager Hal Lanier, "Everything is real positive with this team."

Knepper allowed only four hits while striking out four and walking two. The Reds hit 16 ground balls.

"My sinker ball was super today. I could throw it any time," said Knepper. "It also helps when the team is scoring runs and playing great defense behind me."

Defense was not the Reds' strong point on this day. They committed four errors in the first two innings, leading to three Astros runs. Bill Doran led off the first inning with a single off Reds starter and loser John Denny (1-2).

NL Roundup

Dodgers 7, Braves 4

Jerry Reuss, back in the starting rotation after a brief stay in the bullpen, pitched seven innings and won his first game of the season.

Reuss, 1-0, gave up three runs on nine hits. The veteran left-hander had been put in the bullpen after a poor start.

Bill Russell and Dave Anderson drove in two runs apiece for host Los Angeles. The Dodgers rapped a season-high 13 hits, three by Steve Sax, while Ken Landreaux added a home run.

Mets 5, Cards 3

The New York Mets are on a roll and no one can stop them these days, not even John Tudor.

New York has won nine straight games, while the Cardinals have lost seven in a row. Tudor lost for only the second time in his last 25 regular-season decisions. He was trying to win his 18th straight game, which would have tied Bob Gibson's team record.

Kevin Mitchell and Tim Teufel hit home runs for the Mets while winner Bob Ojeda scattered nine hits.

Tudor's loss was his first in the regular season since last July 20 against Los Angeles. It was his first defeat at Busch Stadium since April 22, 1985, versus the Mets.

The Mets' victory gave them their first four-game sweep over St. Louis since 1979.

Pirates 13, Phillies 5

Bill Almon homered, doubled twice and drove in four runs, powering Pittsburgh past mistake-prone Philadelphia.

The host Pirates broke the game open with seven runs in the second inning. The outburst included only two hits, one of them a two-run double by Almon, but was fueled by errors on three consecutive plays by the Phillies, who finished with five miscues.

Steve Carlton, 1-3, pitched five innings and took the loss. He gave up eight runs, only three of them earned. Mike Bielecki won his first decision of the season as Pittsburgh broke a five-game losing streak.

Cubs 12, Expos 10

Jody Davis, back in the lineup after being given a day off to rest, drove in five runs with two homers, including a grand slam.

Davis' fourth-inning grand slam was the fourth of his career, but only his first home run of the season. Davis led off the eighth with a solo homer, triggering a five-run rally that gave Chicago a 12-9 lead.

Steve Christmas' pinch-hit, two-run double broke a 9-9 tie. Christmas' blow was sandwiched between a pinch-single by Jerry Mumphrey and a pinch-double by Shawon Dunston. The three consecutive pinch-hits tied a major-league record last accomplished by Pittsburgh in 1961.

Padres 6, Giants 4

Tony Gwynn hit two home runs, the first two-homer game of his major-league career, and San Diego held off San Francisco.

Gwynn, who went 3-for-4, singled in helping the Padres take a 1-0 lead in the first inning against Mike Krukow, 3-1. Gwynn hit a two-run homer in the third and had a solo home run.

Cincinnati's Dave Parker gets a little heated over a called third strike. The Reds have lost three in a row and seven of their last eight.

Dodgers nip Diablos; trail M-Angels by one

Texas League

San Antonio edged El Paso 4-3 to stay within one game of the streaking Midland Angels in the Texas League's Western Division.

The Diablos lost for the eighth time in the last nine days on the road. Four of those losses were to the Angels and four to the Dodgers. Tim Cruz, 1-3, claimed the loss for El Paso in eight innings. He gave up six hits and four runs, one earned. He walked one and struck out two.

The Dodgers jumped to a 3-0 lead after one inning. The Diablos got their only runs in the first, third and sixth innings. San Antonio got a run in the third.

Former major-leaguer Bill Schroeder contributed a solo home run for the Diablos. Schroeder is in El Paso getting in shape from a spring injury.

Barry Wohler, 2-2, was the winning pitcher for San Antonio. Jeff Edwards was credited with his fourth save.

In the Eastern Division, Jackson took a 7-3 decision from Tulsa.

Wray Bergendahl, 1-2, was the winner for the Mets. Rick Knapp, 0-3, was saddled with the loss for the Drillers.

Witt proving Rangers on target

AL Roundup

Associated Press

Bobby Witt is proving he belongs. Rick Langford and Jim Clancy are showing they're back. And Jack Morris just keeps rolling along.

Sunday was a good day for some American League pitchers.

In Texas, for instance, Witt set a Rangers rookie record with 11 strikeouts and allowed three hits in seven innings in a 6-2 triumph over Milwaukee. He was aided by Greg Harris, who hurled the final two innings.

Witt, a rookie with a 95 mph fastball, is beginning to feel like a major leaguer. He should with a 2-0 record and 11- and 10-strikeout efforts in two of his four starts.

"I really don't know what to expect from myself this year," Witt, 0-6 last year at Double A Tulsa, said. "But if I can just relax, I feel like I can get into more of a groove. I'm feeling a little more relaxed each time."

Witt had more trouble with a blister on his right hand than he did with Milwaukee, which had had beaten the Rangers seven straight times in Arlington Stadium and scored 21 runs in two previous games there this weekend.

"The blister was just something else to think about out there," Witt said. "I'm starting to feel like I belong. I'm starting to have some fun."

Don Slaught hit a two-run homer to support Witt.

A's 1, Mariners 0

Rick Langford threw his best game in four years for the Oakland A's, allowing only one hit through seven innings and striking out seven. Jay Howell finished the two-hitter for his fourth save.

Comfort has not been a companion for Langford since 1983, when he developed arm trouble and was nearly released by the A's. But he was almost unhittable Sunday, though the Mariners haven't hit anyone lately — they're batting .137 over the last 11 games.

Langford was 19-12 in 1980, his best season. But when the injuries came, the A's offered the right-hander his unconditional release. He chose to go on a rehabilitation program instead, including a brief stint in the minor leagues. He underwent elbow surgery in 1983 and did not win a game for 2½ seasons, before picking up three victories last year.

Blue Jays 8, Orioles 0

At Baltimore, the Blue Jays' Clancy, coming off an injury-plagued season which followed a losing one, blanked the Orioles on nine hits and struck out four.

Clancy also is back from health problems that included appendicitis, a sore neck and shoulder. He was bombed by Texas in his last start, but he kept the Orioles off-balance.

"I used only two pitches, fastball and slider, but I was hitting the corners and staying ahead of the batters," he said.

George Bell, Cecil Fielder and Rance Mulliniks hit home runs for the Blue Jays, while Bell and Jesse Barfield each had three hits.

Tigers 4, White Sox 1

Morris, meanwhile, did what is expected of him in Detroit as he threw a six-hitter and struck out six in leading the Tigers'

Morris and Joel Davis were hooked up in a pitching duel for six innings. Morris, however, continued his mastery, faltering only when Ron Kittle homered in the second, the 10th homer Morris has allowed in five starts this season.

"I know if Jack Morris goes out there 35 times, he's going to throw 16 or more like this," Anderson said. "That was Morris at his best out there. It's a good thing, too."

Davis had a one-hitter before the Tigers broke through in the sixth. But a two-run triple by Lou Whitaker in a three-run spurt was enough for Morris, 3-2.

Indians 9, Yankees 7

The pitchers weren't dominant everywhere. At Yankee Stadium, Cleveland staged two comebacks. The Indians reached New York relief ace Dave Righetti for five consecutive two-out hits — four singles and Brett Butler's two-run double — in the eighth inning. Butler and Joe Carter also homered for the Indians.

Dave Winfield went 3-for-5 and robbed Cleveland of three runs with two sensational catches in right field. Ron Hassey homered for New York.

Angels 8, Twins 7

Ruppert Jones homered, singled twice and scored three runs and Reggie Jackson doubled, singled twice and drove in two. Jackson leads the majors with a .447 average.

With the score tied 5-5, Jones led off the fourth with a checked-swing infield hit. One out later, Jones stole second and scored on Jackson's single up the middle. After Brian Downing struck out, Rob Wilfong doubled Jackson to third. Rick Burleson's broken-bat liner then tipped off the glove of leaping second baseman Steve Lombardozzi and rolled into center field, scoring both runners to make it 8-5.

Fromer Midland Angel, rookie T.R. Bryden picked up his second major-league victory in as many days.

Mark Salas had a three-run homer and Kirby Puckett a two-run shot off Angels starter Ron Romanick.

BRANDT

"We put a lot more emphasis starting last year on competitiveness," says Brandt. "We're putting a lot more emphasis on that than how high somebody can jump."

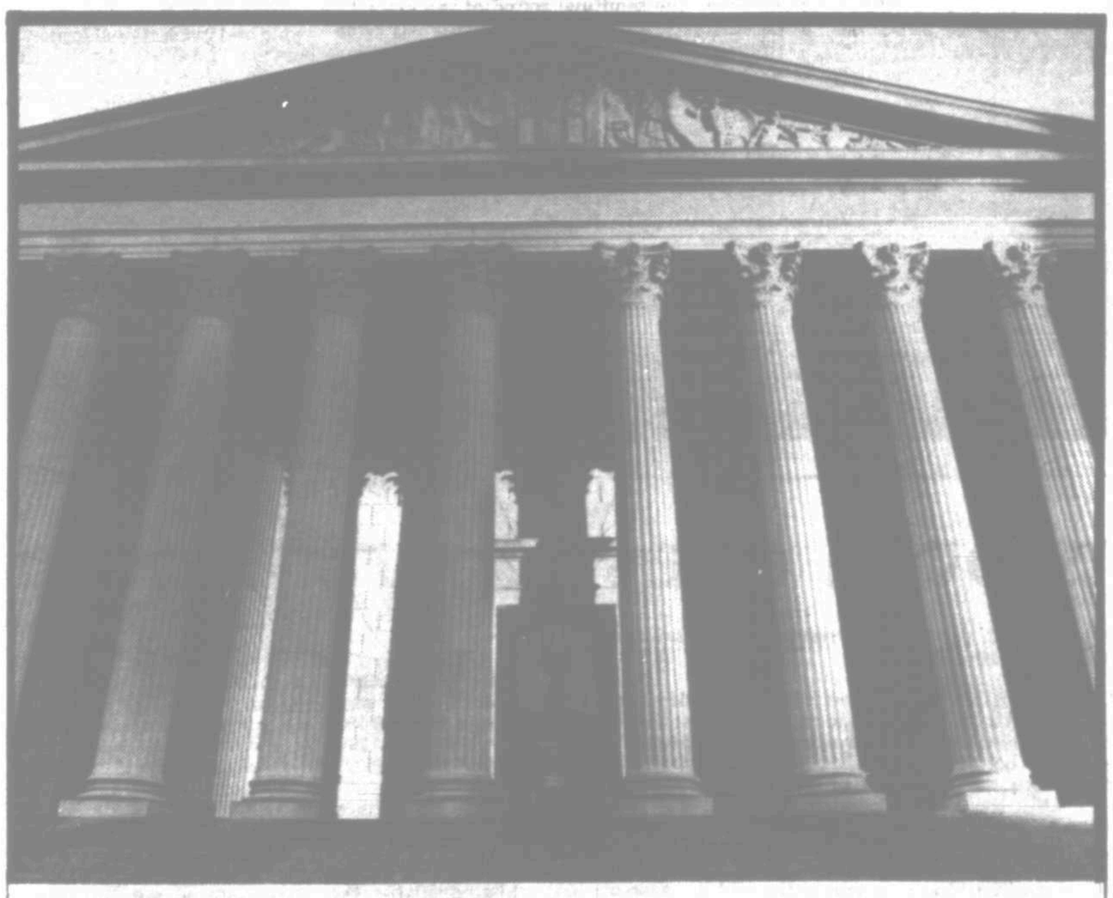

Brandt refuses to call this draft critical although he obviously has a mandate to produce from Schramm. "All drafts are critical," says Brandt.

He says there are a lot of solid players in Tuesday's draft in which the Cowboys get the 20th pick.

"There are a lot of good players but it's not like 1983 where you had the John Elways and Eric Dickerson who were sure Pro Bowl-type performers," he says. "There are just a lot of very good players."

The heat is on out at Valley Ranch for Brandt do something magical.

The final choice on draft day belongs to Coach Tom Landry.

Mavericks no match for storming Lakers

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — There's a storm brewing in these Los Angeles Lakers and it hasn't hit full force yet.

The defending NBA champions struck lightning-quick and thundered over the Dallas Mavericks in a 130-116 victory Sunday in the opening game of the Western Conference semifinals.

The lop-sided victory was the fourth straight for the Lakers, who won their three first-round games with the San Antonio Spurs by a total of 95 points.

"We've been playing with a lot of intensity lately," said Laker forward James Worthy. "We know what it will take to win ... We can play better, we still have not peaked."

The high-flying Lakers ran off to a 22-6 lead in the opening 6½ minutes. The Mavericks never led as Los Angeles opened a 66-48 halftime lead and led by as many as 25 in the third quarter.

"It was like we were numb out there," Dallas Coach Dick Motta said. "We looked tired out there. We made a couple of runs at them, but I felt that they were feeble."

The Mavericks connected on just 17-of-48 first-half shots (35.4 percent), and shot 44.3 percent for the game. Two of their biggest guns, Mark Aguirre and Rolando Blackman, were held to 14 and 11 points, respectively.

"We didn't play up to our capabilities," said Maverick reserve forward Dale Ellis, who came in and hit three 3-pointers in the third quarter that helped cut the Laker lead from 25 to 13 points in the period. He finished with 16 points.

"For us to win this series, the guys on this team have to play up to their ability and some above their ability."

Earvin "Magic" Johnson was at the eye of the Laker storm, scoring 16 points and contributing 14 assists. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar led the Lakers with 28 points. Byron Scott had 24 and Worthy added 23 for Los Angeles.

"We know what we've got to go through," Johnson said. "We've done this all the years I've been here. You can't relax, you need the attitude, 'Hey, this team can beat us' and you go out and do the job."

NBA Roundup

Celtics 103, Hawks 91

Kevin McHale sparked Boston on both ends of the court, scoring 24 points and holding NBA scoring champion Dominique Wilkins in check.

McHale had six of his points during a 14-0 run in the third quarter that extended a nine-point Celtic lead to 66-43. Only Atlanta's 28-17 advantage in the fourth period kept the final score respectable.

McHale also played the major role in holding Wilkins to four field goals in 15 attempts and 13 points.

"He had a terrific game," Boston Coach K.C. Jones said of McHale. "He got the boards, blocked shots. He's been super."

The victory was Boston's 34th straight at home, setting a NBA record for combined regular-season and playoff homecourt wins. The Celtics broke the Minneapolis Lakers' mark that had stood since 1949-50.

76ers 134, Bullets 109

Terry Catledge's mission was simple in the deciding game of Philadelphia's playoff series with Washington — take the ball to Bol.

The 6-foot-8 Catledge, playing center in place of the injured Moses Malone, scored 27 points, most of them in the first half against 7-foot-6 Manute Bol, as the 76ers defeated the Bullets to win their first-round NBA playoff series 3-2.

"I was just throwing the ball up every chance I could," Catledge said. "If he (Bol) blocked it, I was just going to take it right back to him. I was going up as strong as I could.

"After my first two or three shots, he stayed off me. I seemed to have more room as the game went on."

Catledge, the 76ers' No. 1 draft choice from South Alabama, who was 13-for-22 from the field, had 21 points in the first half while Bol, also a rookie, finished with no points, two rebounds and one blocked shot. The NBA's leading shot blocker played little in the second half after Philadelphia jumped ahead 70-52 at halftime.

Rangers send Caps home

Back in February, no one would have believed the New York Rangers or Hartford Whalers would still be playing hockey at this time of year, no less winning key games in the NHL's Stanley Cup playoffs. But that is exactly what has happened.

With their 2-1 victory over the Washington Capitals Sunday night, the surprising Rangers clinched the Patrick Division title and moved into the semifinal round of the playoffs.

The Rangers got two goals from Pierre Larouche and an outstanding performance in goal from John Vanbiesbrouck to beat the Capitals.

NHL Roundup

Whalers 1, Canadiens 0

Mike Liut, back in goal after missing two games because of an injury, stopped 32 shots and Kevin Dineen scored his sixth goal of the playoffs to lead the Whalers over the Canadiens.

Dineen, the Whalers' scrappy right wing and inspirational leader, scored the goal the Whalers needed to send the best-of-seven series back to Montreal for a final game Tuesday night.

ANGELS

Timberlake gave up a solo homer to Shane Mack, the first round draft choice out of UCLA a couple of years ago, in the fourth. McClain didn't even give up a hit until Jeff Schaffer doubled to open the fifth and came home on Raul Tovar's grounder to second.

The Angels drove McClain, 2-2, to cover in the five-run sixth in which Merrifield, Glen Walker and Tovar all contributed doubles.

Timberlake lasted until the eighth when, with one out, Mike DeButch beat out a bunt for a single.

"I felt strong, but Joe (Manager Joe Maddon) said before the inning, if anybody got on, I was coming out," Timberlake said.

"I didn't want him facing Mack again, so I brought in Dwayne Buice. After the homer he struck Mack out in the sixth, but Don wasn't the same pitcher and even a 6-1 lead can evaporate in a hurry in this park," Maddon said.

TIMBERLAKE used a slider and change up to stay ahead of the Gator batters in the count. "That's the big difference, staying ahead of the batter and changing speeds. Tonight I was doing that."

"He didn't have his real good fast ball tonight," said Maddon, "but he was mixing his speeds, which we've been trying to get him to do."

When Timberlake left in the eighth, he had walked just one and surrendered only four hits.

The win gives the big righthander who attends UNC-Charlotte during the off season, a 2-1 record, a far cry from last year when he struggled ...and so, for that matter, did McClain, who was 4-11.

A year ago, June 9, Timberlake and McClain tangled at Angel Stadium and it wound up 13-12 after 14 innings and five hours and three minutes. Timberlake left in the seventh after giving up seven runs and McClain was gone in the sixth after giving up nine runs.

Sunday they weren't the same pitchers. "Last year we got off to a bad start and I never did feel comfortable," said Timberlake of the 1985 campaign. "This year we have a better team and it has done wonders for my confidence. I feel comfortable now."

Timberlake got some outstanding defensive support with Tovar turning in two circus catches. But the night's gem was Brian Brady's thievery on Brent Gjesdal in the fifth. In leaping for the liner, Brady slammed into the wall, but managed to hold the ball.

HALO HOOPS— Catcher David Heath will be out another day as a result of the leg injury suffered in the collision with Beaumont's Eric Hardgrave Saturday night...Heath holds no grudges about the fisticuffs that followed. "I just did what I felt I had to do."...From Maddon, "I thought we were flat early in the game, but we had a talk after the fifth inning. The best thing tonight was the way Timberlake kept us close until we got something going. That and Kevin King's home run. He got solid wood on the ball and it should help his confidence. He has been struggling and working extra hard trying to get things straightened out."

'Strange' putter an OT winner

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

THE WOODLANDS (AP) — Curtis Strange sank a 30-foot birdie putt on the third sudden death playoff hole to win the $200,000 Houston Open over Calvin Peete.

Hit the stroke that netted Strange toward Sunday's $30,000 payday came in Thursday's opening round on the 18th hole when he angrily broke the putter that helped him win a PGA Tour record $540,321 in 1988.

It turned out to be Strange's lucky break.

After snapping the shaft of his putter on a wooden bridge, Strange chunked the head into a lake and parred the final five holes putting with his pitching wedge.

He finished the first round at even par 72 and started Sunday's final round three strokes off the pace.

But Strange birdied the first three holes Sunday and charged into a tie with Peete with a 15-foot birdie putt on No. 17.

Strange's new putter worked again on the third extra hole when his second shot stopped 30 feet from the hole.

"I putted great the last two days using a putter I'd had around the house," Strange said.

Strange sank his pressure putt but Peete, who had hit or shared the lead all four rounds, stroked his 20-foot putt to the left of the hole.

"I stroked it like I wanted to, but I mis-read the green and it broke to the left," Peete said.

Peete, who earned $54,000, shot a final round 69 and Strange had a 6-under-par 66 to end regulation play tied with 14-under-par 274 72-hole totals.

Peete had started the final day tied with Tom Watson and Jay Haas with 205 totals, 11-under-par.

Watson fell off the pace with a 71 and to finish third at 276 and earn $24,000. Watson narrowly missed a 189-yard drive to the green for an eagle on No. 18 that would have put him in the playoff.

Peete and Strange parred the first two playoff holes. Peete's 20-foot birdie putt on the par 4, 376-yard No. 17 stopped at the lip to force the third playoff hole.

It was one of several chances Peete squandered in trying to win his third tournament this year.

"Playing against the top players, you can't beat them with pars," Peete said. "I just didn't play as good as I should have. This was his tournament.

If it had been mine I would have won."

Strange held his cool in the final round with a par at 13 and his 18-foot birdie putt on No. 17 pulled him even with Peete for the first time and set up the tense finish.

SWC DRAFT

Rice's James Hamrick is in the top five of placekickers in the nation.

OTHER SWC players who should go somewhere in the eight round draft include:

—Texas A&M guard Randy Dausin.

—Houston center Todd Schoppe.

—TCU kicker Ken Ossa, defensive linemen Darron Turner and Gary Spann; offensive lineman Tommy Shehan, defensive back Egypt Allen.

—Baylor tight end prospect Ralph Stockemer and offensive lineman Mark Cochran.

—Texas Tech defensive end Tim Crawford, linebacker Mike Kinsey and defensive back King Simmons.

—Houston wide receiver Anthony Ketchum.

Plenty of SWC free agents should be signed on speculation, such as Baylor quarterback Tommy Muecke, who might make a defensive back convert or fleet Texas A&M receiver Jeff Nelson or Texas offensive tackle John Stuart and linebacker Ty Allert.

This, of course, is all unguaranteed. We'll know by midnight Tuesday.

TRADE

The newspaper reported in today's editions that Cowboys coaches have recently been studying films of three Green Bay running backs. A source told the newspaper the backs are Eddie Lee Ivery, Jesse Clark and Gerry Ellis.

The source said Cowboys Coach Tom Landry is especially interested in Ivery, the fastest of the group.

Green Bay Coach Forest Gregg said last week he was interested in Hogeboom but would not confirm a specific offer. The newspaper reported that Landry has twice confirmed phone conversations with Gregg, a friend who played one season for the Cowboys.

Sources told the newspaper Gregg and Landry discussed a Hogeboom-for-Ivery trade and worked out most of the details.

But an Indianapolis scout said the Colts regard a Hogeboom trade as a "stop-gap measure."

Hogeboom flew to Indianapolis last Thursday for a brief workout for Colts Coach Rod Dowhower.

"I couldn't have been more pleased with the workout," said Hogeboom. "They said they thought it was a very good workout."

Workers carry a model of a prehistoric pterodactyl.

Pterodactyl ptechnology

By PAUL DEAN
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SIMI VALLEY, Calif. — Hissed a recent headline in one of the lesser grocery store tabloids: Horror of the Giant Flying Reptile.

Gasped the story: These are things from 60 million years ago, two or three flying reptiles hatched by recent lightning strikes on prehistoric eggs to terrorize both sides of the Texas-Mexico border.

"Touching off a wave of panic...eyewitness reports indicate that the creatures most closely resemble a pterosaur, a winged, bat-like beast with a 50-foot wing span," the article said.

In truth, there's only one creature. Further, it is not just your common or Cretaceous pterosaur but a son (the feminine of the species being pterosauregina) of the sub order Quetzalcoatlus northropi, the largest and last of the pterodactyls.

He also was not hatched by Texas lightning, but was stitched, zippered, painted and glued together here by scientists of AeroVironment Inc. as a stunning answer to an impossible assignment; to build an all-flying, full-flapping model pterodactyl for a movie about the history of flight.

And although radio-controlled QN (lets face it, there is nothing casual or cozy about Quetzalcoatlus northropi has not shown any appetite for El Paso, it did manage to black out a community last year when a test flight ended among power lines.

It is arguable that this latex and carbon fiber model — whether by dint of hyperimaginative sightings or death of responsible journalism — was the basis of the National Examiner story.

But a clipping does hang in the workshop at AeroVironment. Team member Les King likes to think QN had something to do with it. "It would be a fun study to find out the genesis of that story," agreed paul MacCready, president of the company and creator of its creature.

MacCready is the physicist, aeronautical engineer, environmentalist, altruist and purposeful dreamer who has been the genesis of much aeronautical inspiration.

Gossamer Albatross, a package of aluminum and Mylar, a human-powered airplane that was pedaled across the English Channel in 1979, was his. So was Solar Challenger, the world's first sun-powered aircraft that in 1981 flew 180 miles from Paris to England.

Then it was another gnatweight, the Bionic Bat, a hybrid powered by man and a battery pack recharged by the pilot's pedaling.

Now it is radio-controlled pterodactyls.

The idea of building a prehistoric flier was a logical and long-held extension of MacCready's fascination with the "correlation between natural flight and mechanical flight and birds as role models for airplanes and aerodynamics." In 1980, he had a design — extrapolations from the fossil remains of the genius Quetzalcoatlus northropi (after the Aztec feathered serpent god Quetzalcoatl and Northrop Corp., successful dabblers in the development of flying wing aircraft) found by paleontologists in 1972 in west Texas.

This dramatic victim of the Great Extinction about 64 million years ago was estimated to weigh 140 pounds with a wingspan of 36 feet. "The largest of the biological fliers and the size of a four-place airplane," MacCready said.

In 1983, he found a sponsor and a vehicle for development — the Smithsonian Institution's National Air and Space Museum and Johnson Wax, co-producers of an IMAX (large screen) public service movie called "On the Wing."

Scheduled to premiere in June at the Smithsonian's Samuel P. Langley Theater, the movie will explore aviation's known and inexplicable, from condors over the Andes to 747s over Seattle. The QN replica will appear as star and stunt man throughout the movie and, MacCready said, "one goal of the project is to fly the QN replica on the Mall in Washington...in conjunction with the opening."

Scientist Ray Morgan, left, tells schoolchildren how the flying model works. Physicist Paul MacCready, above, used his skills and environmentalist and aeronautical engineer to build the radio-controlled QN apparatus.

In 1984, however, one minor detail remained unsettled. Building QN.

"But I realized that there had been recent advances in the aerodynamic theory of oscillating airfoils, in the theory and practice of stability and conrol, in robotics, mechanism, sensors and servos and in composite structural material and techniques," wrote MacCready in a recent issue of Engineering & Science, an official publication of his alma mater, the California Institute of Technology. "Advances that mean that perhaps now a flying replica of Quetzalcoatlus northropi would be feasible. So we decided to try it." Alec Brooks, who would become manager of the QN project, remembers his reaction. "Wow, that's a wild idea," he said. "Insane...but also a very serious project."

With $50,000 in feasibility study money from the Smithsonian, MacCready and Brooks arranged a two-day workshop at the California Institute of Technology with about three dozen scientists; robotic expecrts, electronic specialists, aerodynamicists, ornithologists, engineers and paleontologists.

QN was analyzed and dismembered. Why the long, strong legs? How did he fly without a horizontal tail to help with pitch (fore and aft) control and stability? How did it dampen yaw (movement around the vertical axis) without some vertical control surface?

Did the claws on the leading edge of its wings perform an aerodynamic function, such as airflow spoilers on a modern airplane? Or were they hands for shredding food and hanging from trees? Maybe this giant pterodactyl even walked on all fours.

"We sort of arrived at a consensus of how big it was, and how heavy and then whether or not it could actually fly," Brooks said.

It was decided that QN in this original form was able to walk and make a running takeoff from flat ground. It could climb, but weakly. It could remain aloft for long periods, but only by harnessing up currents.

Described MacCready: "For Quetzalcoatlus northropi the takeoff and flight characteristics and behavior are envisioned as those that might appear if one combined various features of a frigate bird, an albatross, a pelican and a stork or crane, and then increased the size about sixfold, decreased the density somewhat, and cut the wing flapping rate down to one cycle every two seconds."

MacCready, 60, formed a 15-man team (Including sons Tyler and Parker MacCready) at AeroVironment facilities in Monrovia, Calif., and Simi Valley. The group included a hard corps of real airplane, model airplane and hang glider pilots. QN became their intriguing break from toxic waste controls, wind farms, alternative energies, air quality sampling and other environmental products and sophisticated air services of AeroVironment.

"We wanted it to be as close to the original animal as we could make it," Brooks said. "That meant no ailerons, no rudder, no propeller, no clear plastic tail..."

Easier said than done.

A series of small gliders — with wingspans of three feet, six feet and then 12 feet — were winched aloft. They sacrificed themselves to science by spinning and nose-diving into the ground. Early tests wit flapping wings separated QN's centers of lift and gravity until, presto, a nodding and bobbing and tumbling pterodactyl.

"If the tail boom (jettisoned after takeoff) hit the ground before the bird it was considered a successful flight," said AeroVironment facility manager and chief pterodactyl pilot Ray Morgan.

Then came QN's fall into power lines. The flashes fell somewhere between summer lightning and a warm corner of the Tet offensive. The cost of restoring service to Moorpark, said Brooks, added $600 to the $670,000 cost of QN's research, development and construction.

And that work, MacCready said, turned out to be longer, more expensive and "infinitely more complex than I in my naivete had imagined.

"Instead of jumping to the final solution, we had to go through the evolutionary cycle in our development just like nature did. But we were going about a million years a week."

Said Brooks: "What we have is crude compared to what nature gave it. Mother Nature did it very elegantly.

On the other hand, what MacCready and Brooks and the AeroVironment team now has, in the words of one Smithsonian official, is a test tube pterodactyl 18-feet across, that is so realistic it could fly over a turkey farm and scare the feathers off everything below.

Black tar heroin moving into Texas

EL PASO (AP) — Federal drug officials say Mexican black tar heroin, many times stronger than its white or brown counterparts and potentially deadly in small doses, is moving into Texas through this West Texas city.

Phil Jordan, regional director of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration in Dallas, said El Paso is a "significant transit city" for black tar heroin.

El Paso Police Department Narcotics Division figures show that during the first three months of 1986, agents confiscated 279 grams of Mexican black tar heroin from 39 people arrested on heroin charges.

In 1985, narcotics officers confiscated 1,447 grams of black tar from 101 people arrested. In 1984, 2,157 grams of black tar were confiscated from 92 suspects.

Traffickers can make big profits smuggling small amounts of the black tar because of its purity, said Jordan.

"One ounce of 90 percent pure black tar can sell for $4,000 to $9,000 — wholesale," he told the El Paso Times.

A report issued last month by the Drug Enforcement Administration said a milligram of black tar may sell on the streets for as little as 25 cents, compared with the $2.32 average price nationwide for more traditional forms of heroin.

Black tar heroin has been discovered in 27 states. In 1983, it was reported only in Arizona, California, Oregon and Washington.

Olmecs built oldest stone buildings in North America

CAPILILLO, Mexico (AP) — The discovery of the oldest stone buildings in North America has prompted scientists to re-evaluate the contributions of the Olmec civilization that built them, an Austin architect who visited the site said.

"The Olmecs really had much more influence than we thought," said Logan Wagner, one of several U.S. scholars invited to the site in western Mexico by the Mexican government.

Wagner said he visited the site near Copalillo on two occasions.

"They were the mother civilization," he said Sunday. "Everything started with them. This is an extremely significant site."

All later cultures in the area, including the highly advanced Mayans, used what they learned from the Olmecs to develop their own calendars and writing systems, Wagner said.

Wagner, who is originally from Mexico, said he had a longtime interest in archaeology. The scientists' group, including several University of Texas professors, went in December and again earlier this month, when they were allowed to take their first photographs.

The Olmecs were the first North American people to erect stone buildings.

Ms. South succeeds graduating sophomore Kelly Dumont as editor.

"As a staff member, I am extremely proud of this newspaper and the prestigious reputation is has acquired," Ms. South said. "I want to keep up the tradition of being one of the best college newspapers in the state.

"I'm going to try and make the paper more campus-centered," she said, adding she plans to distribute the paper around Midland in an effort to interest more people in the college and its activities.

She will take over as editor of the El Paisano for the last edition of the paper this semester. That edition will be published May 6.

Grape-catcher fails to top record

DALLAS (AP) — Thirty pounds of grapes pelted the sidewalk, but none of them landed in Paul Tavilla's mouth.

The disappointed world-record holder for grape-catching failed Saturday to top a record he had set previously in Tokyo.

Last month, the 51-year-old Arlington, Mass., produce company owner set a Guinness Book record in Tokyo by catching in his mouth a grape that was dropped from a 52-story building.

Hundreds of people here had hoped to see him top that by catching a grape tossed from the top of Dallas' 72-story InterFirst Bank building.

Tavilla craned his neck skyward for about an hour and a half to no avail — even with the help of walkie-talkies.

Most of the spectators gave up before Tavilla did.

He complained that the reflection off the glass building made it difficult.

Haitian deaths blamed on 'agitators'

WORLD

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The president of Haiti's ruling council blamed a confrontation between police and a mob in which seven people died on agitators trying to destabilize the new government.

Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy did not identify the agitators, but suggested they were supporters of ousted President-for-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier. The clash took place outside Fort Dimanche, the police barracks and prison where opponents were taken by Duvalier and often killed.

Those demonstrating against the new government "have no other goal than to promote their personal ambitions, defend their economic interests or prepare the arrival of a new totalitarian regime in our beloved Haiti," Namphy said in a rare television address late Sunday.

He accused them of trying to destabilize the government that replaced Duvalier when he fled to France on Feb. 7, ending the 28-year Duvalier dynasty.

Namphy's speech came a day after the incident outside Fort Dimanche in which police fired into a crowd of about 3,000 people.

"Police were provoked by agitators intent on causing trouble and perhaps even taking over the Fort Dimanche prison-barracks," the Ministry of the Interior and Defense said in a statement read over national radio and television.

"The investigation has begun to find the agitators whose presence led to the tragic end...of a praiseworthy march," the statement said.

Thousands marched from a downtown church to Fort Dimanche to commemorate the 23rd anniversary of an episode in which Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier, Jean-Claude's father, executed opponents or had them imprisoned and tortured in Fort Dimanche for their alleged responsibility for the attempted kidnapping of Jean-Claude and his sister, Simone.

Jean-Claude became president after his father's death in 1971. He fled 10 weeks ago to exile after three months of widespread anti-government rioting.

Saturday's procession was authorized by the government, and several government officials attended.

But the crowd became unruly, despite efforts by organizers to calm participants. Angry shouts of "Burn Fort Dimanche!" were heard, and when participants pushed against a gate surrounding the fort, police fired in the air and then into the crowd.

Three people were shot dead at the scene, and a fourth victim later died of his gunshot wounds died at University State Hospital. Three others were electrocuted by a downed power line.

Twenty-one people were injured either by police or during the stampede to escape gunfire.

Political leaders denounced the government and police for letting the situation get out of control.

One former member of Duvalier's national assembly, Rockefeller Guerre, called for the three-man, civilian-military governing council to resign or face a general strike today. There was no indication late Sunday the strike had support.

The governing council responded to politicians' criticisms on a local radio station by saying it amounted to an "invitation to chaos and anarchy."

Demonstrations in the first days after Duvalier fled were believed spontaneous expressions of joy that turned into a witch-hunt by people seeking revenge for the brutality of the Tontons Macoute, which served as the personal police force for Francois Duvalier when he took power in 1957.

Israel, Jordan 'open channel'

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Shimon Peres says Israel and Jordan have opened a channel of communication through quiet diplomacy that could lead to a renewal of the stalled peace process.

Jordan's King Hussein said in mid-February he could not continue preliminary contacts with Israel after he broke his year-old agreement with the Palestine Liberation Organization on a joint negotiating strategy.

But Peres said there were new possibilities for negotiations with Jordan after Hussein's break with PLO chief Yasser Arafat, whom Peres called "the greatest obstacle to peace." Peres spoke Sunday in an interview with Israel Television.

"What is visible is a clear and unequivocal rift between King Hussein and Arafat, which everyone sees. This is the first time that an important Arab leader has said Arafat is impossible, he is not a partner," he said.

Peres said that despite the stalemate brought on by the break between Hussein and Arafat, a line of communication had opened.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Bomb attempt averted

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexican police who deactivated a powerful homemade bomb outside the U.S. Embassy here say they are looking for those reponsible for leaving it in a car parked near the downtown diplomatic mission.

Embassy press attache Vincent Hovanec said the device was deactivated Saturday afternoon and is the first time a bomb has been found near the embassy, although it has received numerous bomb threats in the past month.

Mexico City Police spokesman Alejandro Ortiz said Sunday authorities still have not determined who left the bomb in the truck of a small, blue car parked on a side street between the embassy and the fashionable Maria Isabel Sheraton Hotel.

The car was parked about 25 yards from the embassy and if it had exploded probably would have caused damage to one side of the building and the rear of the embassy.

Fire linked to probe

LONDON (AP) — A London newspaper on Sunday linked the fire at Hampton Court Palace last month to an alleged corruption scandal involving repairs carried out in the historic building.

The Mail on Sunday said Scotland Yard was investigating arson, fraud and murder in connection with the fire. Scotland Yard declined to comment on the report.

He confirmed that police are investigating the March 31 blaze, in which 75-year-old Lady Daphne Gale died and millions of dollars in damage was done.

The paper said police were looking into a $38,000 contract to replace the oak panelling in the 16th century cartoon gallery and that arrangements were made to photograph the panelling April 1. But on March 31 the fire broke out, and some of the worst damage was done to the cartoon gallery.

Police sources said Sunday they were conducting a separate investigation of contractors and subcontractors who carried out work at the palace for the government's Property Services Agency.

Explosives discovered

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Police said Sunday that they found 800 pounds of explosives packed in milk churns in the area where Irish Republican Army fugitive Seamus McElwaine was killed by British soldiers the day before.

They also reported a telephoned tip led them to a car packed with 475 pounds of explosives and parked two blocks from where a Protestant march was scheduled to pass by in downtown Belfast. The explosives were defused and there were no violent incidents during the march.

About 185 Midlanders attended the cystic fibrosis fund raiser-tennis tournament, which kicked off Friday night with a dinner and auction on the lawn at the Racquet Club.

Benefit begins with love, money

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Talk of love — and serves, racquets and tournaments past and future — got the ball rolling at the Racquet Club Friday night during "The Hottest Game in Town" cystic fibrosis fund-raiser.

The approximately 185 Midlanders who attended the informal, outdoor, $150-per-couple event were treated to a steak and enchilada dinner. The music of Jade accompanied the camaraderie and the tapping of toes. Decorations included brightly-colored balloons, lights strung between the trees, tennis ball centerpieces on the tables and about 500 tennis balls tied to ribbons and hanging from the trees.

A silent auction during the first portion of the evening featured such items as a brass ceiling fan, crystal, gift certificates, clothing, home accessories and an evening of limousine service. All silent auction items were donated, said Meredith Tinsley, publicity chairman, "so all profits go straight to cystic fibrosis."

After dinner, the live auction began. The eight professional-amateur tennis teams scheduled to play in the next day's benefit tournament were "sold."

The teams, in winning order, were David Eckley and Kent Hunziker, Derek Edmonds and Mike Henthorn, Joe Dan McBeth and Mott Williamson, Jim Ward and Don Poage, Jon Lanier and Tommy Campbell, Gary Pierce and Rick Wertz, Neil McClung and Bill Harris, and Barry Stephens and Bob Carroll.

Each team represented a prize for its "owner," according to its standings in the tournament. Among the prizes were a trip to the U.S. Open in Flushing Meadow, N.Y.; tickets to the W.C.T. in Dallas; a weekend for four at Horseshoe Bay; a ladies sports watch; a gourmet dinner for eight; a tennis pro surprise package; a membership to The Midlander health club; and a men's fur jacket.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Green Tree Country Club's tennis pro Derek Edmonds and his wife Margaret were at the Racquet Club Friday night for the festivities. The team of Edmonds-Henthorn placed second in Saturday's tournament.

"We netted at least $14,000," said Celia Wilson, chairman. Currently, about 85 percent of cystic fibrosis' budget goes to research and development because "they are so close to identifying that gene" which causes the disease. The remaining 15 percent is distributed locally. In the Permian Basin, local agencies include Cystic Fibrosis Clinic in Odessa's Women's and Children's Hospital.

Other agencies that receive funds include the University of Texas Health Science Center for medical research and Santa Rosa's Children's Hospital for care and treatment.

Committee members included Ms. Wilson, event chairman; Lisa Rhodes, invitation chairman; Lisa Davis, art chairman; Connis Scharbauer, program chairman; Susan Tirey and Cadell Liedtke, funds co-chairmen; Paige Innerarity, prize chairman; Linda Green and Melissa Late, silent auction co-chairmen; Ms. Tinsley, publicity chairman; Patty Jennings, decoration chairman; Maria Burdick, dinner chairman; McBeth, tournament chairman; and Frances Mills, advisor.

DEAR ABBY

'Real' Americans look like anyone

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Regarding "100 Percent American," the American of Oriental descent who complained that within five minutes of being introduced to a Caucasian, he was asked, "What are you?": You replied that it was rude to ask personal questions at any time, but because the average Caucasian doesn't know a Chinese from a Japanese, Cambodian, Vietnamese, Korean or a Thai, the question seemed reasonable — but it was still rude.

Rude? I disagree. Inquiries about a person's roots are not necessarily rude. It shows a sincere interest in their heritage.

The Orient is a rich and diverse geography. The face of an Oriental reveals his heritage. His looks tell of a passage through villages, cultures and languages — but which ones? His story is probably quite fascinating. I don't think it's rude to observe that such a face has a rich ancestry. I think it's a positive component of international understanding. — AN AMERICAN NAMED FINN

DEAR AMERICAN: My mail was heavy on this one. Without exception, all writers of Oriental descent resented being asked, "What are you?" shortly after being introduced.

A typical letter:

DEAR ABBY: I am another "100 Percent American" of Oriental heritage, but I was born in the United States of America.

When I am asked (by Caucasians), "Where are you from?" I always reply, "Texas." — TERSE IN TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: Why do people resent being asked what they are? The Irish are so proud of being Irish, they tell you before you even ask. Tip O'Neill has never tried to hide his Irish ancestry. — JIMMY

DEAR JIMMY: For Tip O'Neill to "hide" his Irish ancestry would be like trying to smuggle dawn past a rooster.

Dollar plunges

LONDON (AP) — The dollar plunged to another post-World War II record low against the Japanese yen today and was at its weakest since 1981 against the Dutch guilder and West German mark. Gold prices were lower.

Repeated short bursts of dollar-buying by the Bank of Japan, the state central bank, failed to halt the fall. The dollar closed at 167.25 yen in Tokyo, down three yen from Friday's 170.25. In London, where trading opens after Japan's business day ends, the dollar was unchanged.

The yen's climb was seen as a run-up to the summit of the Western industrial powers starting in Tokyo May 4. Japan is likely to press for a stronger dollar to keep the price of its exports down.

The dollar lost more than three pfennigs against the German mark and 3¼ cents against the Dutch guilder to hit levels not seen since the spring of 1981. It yielded about 1.9 cents to the British pound and 29 lire to the Italian currency. The pound and lira were at their strongest in nearly three years.

"Where the dollar goes depends on the United States," said a Frankfurt dealer. "The Europeans and the Japanese would like to see the dollar around 2.20 marks, but current opinion here is that the Reagan administration would like to see the dollar around 2.10 marks. That will probably be the trading range."

He said the week's trading would depend heavily on what U.S. officials said about exchange rates as the Tokyo summit approached.

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.545, compared with $1.526 Friday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $344.80 a troy ounce, compared with late Friday's $345. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $344.40.

In Zurich, the bid price was $344.45, down from $345 late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell 11 cents to close at a bid $344.51.

In New York Friday, gold fell 90 cents to close at $344.20.

Explaining the insurance crisis

INSURANCE CRISIS
SECOND OF A SERIES

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a two-part series on the crisis in the insurance industry. Today we examine the differing explanations of the situation offered by the various parties involved.

By ALLEN HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

"We have not been able to get past the finger-pointing stage," notes U.S. Sen. Larry Pressler (R-S.Dak.), who is investigating the causes and proposed solutions to the 'insurance crisis'. Participants on each side of the issue are quick to blame those on the opposing side of the situation.

Caught squarely in the middle are policyholders who are being asked to pay increasingly higher premiums for their coverage.

Insurance carriers say that the number of lawsuits and size of jury awards is responsible for spiraling premiums. Reforming U.S. tort law procedures to remove the jackpot mentality from liability lawsuits and the resulting attorneys' fees is crucial to survival of their industry.

Consumer groups say that insurance company greed during the high interest heyday of the early 1980s has come home to roost. They say underwriting standards were relaxed too much in an attempt to attract as many premium dollars as possible, which were in turn plowed back into high-yield investments, where the companies made the bulk of their profits.

Trial lawyers' associations warn that attempts to reform the legal system limiting the rights of injured parties to sue and capping the amount that juries are allowed to award in liability cases endangers basic individual freedoms. They say legislative actions could allow unscrupulous businesses to escape responsibility for negligence in product design or operating practices.

The insurance companies counter that if actions are not taken to make future claims reasonably predictable, that certain types of high-risk insurance coverages will be impossible to get. Availability of product liability and environmental protection insurance is already very tight, according to local agents.

West Texans responding to the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants survey lay the blame on large damage awards by juries (84.8 percent) and unlimited contingency fees for plaintiff's lawyers (68.8 percent). Also cited by more than a quarter of the respondents as contributing factors are investment losses and business failures by insurance companies, absence of uniform, clear standards and definitions of legal liability and the increase in class action lawsuits.

When asked how the situation should be resolved, limiting contingency fee arrangements (73.8 percent) and legislated limits on liability damage awards (68.8 percent) came in on top of West Texans' lists most often.

Statewide the same two solutions (in reversed order) were most recommended by respondents. Also mentioned are uniform product and professional conduct standards for liability, mandatory mediation or arbitration of claims, and stricter regulation of the insurance industry.

On a national scale, federal legislation has been proposed to limit pain and suffering awards at $100,000 and make punitive damages more like a fine, payable to the court rather than to the plaintiff. Also being considered are uniform national standards for product liability cases to replace the current system of 50 often conflicting state regulations.

Chances of repealing windfall tax seem slim

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The decision by President Reagan to endorse congressional repeal of the "windfall profits" tax on oil is not expected to raise significantly the slim chances of passage.

Industry officials and congressional aides say that, even though the tax now generates almost no revenue because oil prices have fallen below the threshold for collection, it would be very hard in an election year for legislators from non-producing states to vote for the tax's repeal. Anyone who does so, one trade association spokesman acknowledged, would find an opponent "saying he's in the pocket of Big Oil."

Rep. Bill Archer, R-Tex., is to introduce the administration's bill this week as soon as the Treasury completes its review of draft language. "I think it's uphill, but I don't think it's impossible," an aide to Archer said of the prospects.

Meanwhile, the oil industry, whose only short-run benefit from repeal would be less paper work, is concentrating its lobbying efforts elsewhere. It is pressing to kill provisions of the tax revision legislation that would cut current preferences, talking up the idea of a new dollar-for-dollar production credit for marginally profitable wells and seeking to abolish an existing income limit on smaller independent oil companies in their use of the percentage depletion allowance.

The Independent Petroleum Association of America meets this week in Nashville to consider these and other issues, but the group's general counsel, H.B. "Bud" Scoggins, says it is not likely to reverse its opposition to an oil import fee although many members support it. The official position is based on a belief that such a fee would not aid the industry because too many exemptions would be made and because it would revive regulatory and bureaucratic "entanglements" with the government.

Merger forms world's largest ad company

NEW YORK (AP) — A merger of three of the nation's largest advertising agencies will create the world's largest ad group — a potential "global creative superpower," its chairman says.

BBDO International, Doyle Dane Bernbach Group and Needham Harper Worldwide announced Sunday they had reached agreement to merge and form a new public holding company.

Allen Rosenshine, president and chief executive officer of BBDO, said in a statement that the merger was the first ever among three advertising agencies.

BBDO, named for Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborne, is the sixth largest advertising agency in the nation when ranked by gross income. Doyle Dane Bernbach is 12th and Needham Harper is 16th.

They have a combined workforce of more than 10,000 employees, and their combined gross income in 1985 was $736 million. Young & Rubicam, the nation's largest advertising agency, had gross income of $536 million in 1985. The new group will have billings of about $5 billion, compared to Young & Rubicam's $3.6 billion.

The merger of the three New York-based companies was approved unanimously by the three boards of directors in special sessions last week, according to Sunday's statement. There had been rumors of a three-way merger in the works.

The independent subsidiaries will be BBDO Worldwide, operating as it is currently organized, and DDB Needham Worldwide, a merger of Doyle Dane Bernbach and Needham.

Conoco trying to sell off interests in Libyan firm

HOUSTON (AP) — Conoco Inc. is trying to dispose of its 16.3 percent interest in the Libyan National Oil Co. to be in accord with United States economic sanctions against Libya, Conoco spokesman Clint Archer said.

But efforts to sell Conoco's interest have been fruitless so far, he said.

Archer said economic sanctions imposed by President Reagan two months ago required Houston-based Conoco to look for a buyer.

"The government said we have to sell the investment as soon as practicable, whether to the Libyan government or to Libyan natives," Archer said. Non-Libyan companies or individuals are not eligible to purchase the interest.

Conoco Chairman Ralph Bailey said the company was given the right to sell its share of Libyan oil to prevent the Libyan government from taking it over. Conoco has no control over the operation of the oil company, he said.

"All facilities are under the total control of the Libyan National Oil Co." Bailey said.

Libya owns 50 percent of the company. Conoco, which acquired its interest in 1955, has the right to receive and sell oil from its share of the concessions.

Analysts says summer will bring gasoline price hikes

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Summer driving will spark gasoline price hikes following five months of steady declines, but the rise will be moderate, an oil industry analyst said.

"The increase in gasoline consumption is not going to cause prices to zoom up," the analyst, Dan Lundberg, said Sunday.

"It is only a minority of the population that actually can take to the road in such numbers as to offset the great tendency of the metropolitan populations not to be able to afford to go out on the road like that."

Lundberg said the steady fall of retail gasoline prices since December is bottoming out, with import fees and an increase in federal excise taxes likely to offset to continued low prices.

Chevron Oil Co. chairman George M. Keller also predicted that oil prices will begin to rebound this summer.

Keller, speaking Sunday on the ABC News program "This Week with David Brinkley," said he expected the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to reach agreement on oil prices in a few months.

If that happens, he said, there would be a 75 percent chance that oil prices would increase from the current $12 to $14 a barrel to $15 per barrel by the end of the year, and a 50 percent chance it would rise to the $18 to $20 range.

Oil must be $18 a barrel or more for the domestic oil industry to remain viable, Keller said.

Lundberg said there was no interruption in the decline of retail prices this past week, but his biweekly survey of 15,000 gasoline stations showed the overall price of gasoline was 89.96 cents a gallon, a small drop of 0.11 cent since April 11.

At the same time, wholesale prices to dealers increased by 1.36 cents a gallon.

Average pump prices for each grade were: 76.82 cents a gallon for leaded regular, 82.72 cents a gallon for unleaded regular, and 97.87 cents a gallon for premium unleaded. Prices include taxes and are from self-serve pumps.

The retail price plunge began last December when the overall price was $1.2145 a gallon. Since then the price has lost 31.5 cents.

Texaco among companies reporting first quarter results

Associated Press

Texaco Inc. reported that its first-quarter earnings grew by 3 percent; Standard Oil Co. and Pennzoil Co. each said their earnings fell by 28 percent; and Amerada Hess Corp. reported a loss.

Texaco's income was $326 million, or $1.37 per share, up from $320 million, or $1.28 per share, in the first quarter of 1985, the company said.

Standard Oil reported $259 million, or $1.08 a share, in net earnings, vs. $943 million, or $1.46 per share in the 1985 first quarter.

Pennzoil said it earned $42.3 million, or 93 cents a share, in the period between January and March, compared with $57.4 million, or $1.20 a share, in the year-ago period.

Amerada Hess said it lost $339.3 million in the first quarter, as opposed to a year-ago gain of $37.2 million, or 44 cents a share.

In White Plains, N.Y., John K. McKinley, Texaco's chairman and chief executive officer, attributed the company's favorable performance to "improved manufacturing and marketing operating margins, reflecting the company's significantly lower acquisition cost of crude oil and petroleum products, along with continuing operating efficiencies resulting from earlier facility investments."

The quarterly performance was affected by a $20 million post-tax charge representing a last-in, first-out (LIFO) inventory drawdown penalty, compared with a similar benefit of $41 million for the first quarter of 1985, Texaco said.

In addition, the company noted that its first-quarter 1985 net income "included a non-operating net gain of $114 million resulting from the sale of a partial stock interest in Texaco Canada Inc."

Texaco's revenue totalled $9.6 billion in the first quarter, vs. $12 billion a year earlier, "reflecting the substantial reduction in crude oil and petroleum product prices," the company said.

In Cleveland, Standard Oil's chairman, Robert Horton, joined other industry leaders in warning that worse times for the industry are yet to come.

"Oil prices have dropped substantially, and we expect significant volatility for the remainder of the year. As a result, our first quarter earnings may not be representative of the earnings of subsequent quarters," he said.

Formerly known as Standard Oil Co. (Ohio), or Sohio, the company changed its name to Standard Oil in February. It is 55 percent owned by the British Petroleum Co. PLC of London.

Its first-quarter revenue was $2.9 billion, compared with $3.2 billion in the comparable year-ago period, the company said.

In Standard Oil's other segments, the company reported earnings of $9 million in coal operations, $5 million in chemicals and $10 million in industrial products. Standard Oil took a $4 million loss in metals mining.

The company's official price for Alaskan North Slope crude oil has fallen almost $9 percent from year-end 1985.

"We have already cut our planned capital expenditures from about $2.3 billion to about $1.8 billion," Horton said.

In Houston, Pennzoil officials attributed the company's earnings drop mostly to the slump in oil prices.

Revenue totalled $511 million in the first quarter, vs. $670 million in the year-ago period.

Company President Richard J. Howe said that while earnings were down in the first quarter, they were affected by the inclusion of a 21-cent-per-share gain from the sale of securities in the first quarter of 1985, "so our operating results were relatively close to last year's."

In New York, Amerada Hess officials reported a 39 percent drop in the company's quarterly revenue, to $1.4 billion from $2.1 billion a year ago.

They said the loss "reflected a substantial charge for inventory write-down to current market values."

Exploration and production earnings totalled $59.4 million, compared with $60.9 million for the first quarter of 1985, the officials said.

Refining and marketing operations suffered a net loss of $79.4 million, compared with a $19.2 million loss in the year-ago quarter, they said.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

GE buys 80 percent stake in Kidder Peabody

NEW YORK (AP) — General Electric Co.'s 80 percent stake in Kidder, Peabody & Co. will give the Wall Street firm the capital it needs to compete with larger rivals in the fast-changing securities business, the companies say.

The all-cash transaction was announced formally at a news conference on Friday, although the purchase price was not disclosed.

The deal will inject $130 million into Kidder Peabody's capital base, giving it a total of more than $600 million, company executives said.

General Motors cuts point off interest rates

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp., fighting slumping sales and the failure of its competition to match a price increase, says it is shaving 1 percentage point off its lowest interest rate auto loans.

The rates of 5.9 percent and 6.9 percent, depending on the car model, will be offered through June 30, GM announced Friday. The rates will be the lowest in GM's history.

Ford offers 36-month, 7.9 percent loans on selected cars, and Chrysler has a program of 60-month, 6.8 percent loans on selected models and cash rebates of $500 and $1,000 on the rest of its line.

GM eliminating 1,150 jobs at parts factory

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. says it will eliminate 1,150 jobs at a parts factory in Rochester, N.Y., one day after announcing the layoffs of 6,600 workers at two car assembly plants elsewhere.

The Rochester action announced Friday was attributed to poor sales and the declining use of carburetors in American-made cars.

The Rochester work force of about 6,000 people will be cut in about 90 days to prepare for increased production of fuel injectors, which require less human labor, GM said.

Sale of existing homes fall during March

WASHINGTON (AP) — The annual sales volume of existing homes dropped 1.2 percent last month, but the seasonally adjusted pace was above 3 million for the 12th straight month, according to the National Association of Realtors.

The trade group on Friday said bad weather in the West and the oil industry slump in Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma were the primary factors in the slight decline.

Homes were sold in March at an annualized rate of 3.23 million units, down from the February rate of 3.27 million units but 7.7 percent above the rate for the same month a year earlier.

Lockheed lays off 530 workers at Austin plant

AUSTIN (AP) — An Air Force decision to postpone production on a Lockheed program will prompt the company's Austin Division to cut 530 jobs, about 20 percent of its work force, in May, officials said.

Company spokesmen on Thursday announced the cutbacks, one week after the Air Force told the company it will postpone for a year a decision to begin production of Lockheed's Precision Location Strike System program.

Officials said the program accounted for about $60 million in revenue for Lockheed Austin last year.

Stock market loses

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market drifted in a narrow trading range today, with most market measures showing slight losses.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was down 2.86 to 1,832.71 at noon on Wall Street.

The New York Stock Exchange's composite index was off 0.35 at 139.17. In the overall tally of stocks listed on the Big Board, losers outnumbered gainers by about 100 issues.

International Business Machines was unchanged at 159⅛. The computer giant's president and chief executive officer John Akers told the annual meeting in Houston that IBM and the computer industry has not entirely put the problems of 1985 behind.

Elsewhere among the blue chips, American Telephone & Telegraph was up ⅛ at 25.

Several tobacco stocks were among the most actively traded issues. A U.S. District Court judge in Boston ruled that health warnings on cigarette packages do not shield manufacturers from liability lawsuits. The decision ran counter to that of a Federal Appeals Court in Philadelphia which ruled that the warnings were adequate.

RJR Nabisco fell 1 to 44¼ and Philip Morris was down 2¼ to 62⅝.

FMC spurted 3¼ to 99. The company said its board approved a plan to raise the cash portion of its recapitalization program by $10 a share to $80. Shareholders, which will vote on the amended plan at a meeting scheduled for May 22, would receive $80 and one new share of the recapitalized firm.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Social Security increases tax bill

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I will be 70 years old this year. I am still working and earning approximately $42,000 per year. In addition, I have a $12,000 annual pension from previous employment, plus dividends from stocks and interest from bonds and certificate of deposit.

Should I start collecting my Social Security benefits this year? If I do, will this put me in a higher income tax bracket?

Doyle

A. By all means, apply for and start receiving your SS benefits, so that the checks will start arriving after your 70th birthday. Most likely, you have paid into SS for all or most of your working life. The time is approaching to start collecting.

At age 70, you can have as much "earned income" — from wages, salary, commissions, fees, tips and such — without any reduction in SS benefits.

Before you turn 70, your SS benefits are reduced by $1 for every $2 of earned income above an "exempt income amount." For 1986, that number is $7,800 for people 65 to 69 and $5,760 for SS recipients under 65.

Your income tax bill will go up, as a result of collecting SS benefits. SS recipients have to pay extra federal income tax when their adjusted gross income, plus half of their SS benefits and all of their otherwise tax-free income from municipal bonds exceeds a "threshold" — $25,000 for individuals, $32,000 for married couples filing joint returns and zero for married people filing individual returns.

Boiled down, this results in some SS recipients paying federal income tax on up to half of their SS benefits. Considering your other income, you'll be well past the threshold and 50 percent of your SS benefits will be subject to federal income tax.

If this complicated exercise — dreamed up by Washington bureaucrats and enacted into law by Congress — puts you in, say, the 38 percent federal income tax bracket, Uncle Sam will take back 19 percent of your SS benefits.

• • •

Q. It is wrong — and probably unconstitutional — for municipal bond interest to be included in the calculation of whether retirees have to pay federal income tax on part of their Social Security benefits. Isn't this just a sneaky way to tax municipal bond interest?

A. Technically, it's not a tax "on" municipal bond interest. In practice, it is a backdoor way to tax the income of retired folks who receive such interest.

It's also a way for the federal government to levy income tax on part of the SS benefits of retirees who have other taxable income. In a nutshell, it's a method for Uncle Sam to take bites out of the SS benefits of many retirees who have investment income — no matter the source.

• • •

Q. I can understand the reasoning behind the taxing of up to half of the SS benefits of people who were employees. Their employers paid half of the "FICA" SS tax. But isn't there an exemption for SS recipients who were self-employed and who paid the entire SS tax during their working careers? If not, why not?

A. The answer to your first query is "no." It makes no difference whether you were an employee or self-employed. The federal income tax bite on part of your SS benefits is the same.

That's the way the Social Security Amendments Act of 1983 was written. I gave up trying to fathom the reasonings of Congress years ago.

• • •

Q. I retired in 1984 at 65 and began drawing full Social Security benefits. I expect to do some part-time work and earn up to the maximum allowed without any loss of SS benefits.

I am advised I will have to pay SS tax on my part-time income but those additional taxes will not increase my SS benefits. Is this correct? I feel it is unfair to pay additional SS tax, without any increase in SS benefits. Where does this money go?

A. What you were advised is true. The money goes into the Social Security trust fund, from which benefits are paid. Most SS recipients receive far more benefits than they paid in SS taxes.

Seattle area rated as top vacation spot

SKOKIE, Ill. (AP) — For a one-stop vacation in the United States, it's hard to do better than the Seattle area, according to a new vacation guide published by Rand McNally & Co.

Although the Seattle-Mount Rainier-North Cascade area ranked no higher than third in any of the six categories used to compare various vacation spots, it earned the best all-around score in "Vacation Places Rated."

"The Seattle area offers the most variety from lakes to mountains, from entertainment to restaurants, with both indoor and outdoor recreation," said Rand McNally spokeswoman Joyce Hodel.

Filling out the top five vacation destinations are Los Angeles, Hawaii, the Miami-Gold Coast-Keys area of Florida, and San Francisco.

Boston rated sixth, while New York City, despite ranking first in three of the six categories, tied with Chicago and the Denver-Rocky Mountains area of Colorado for seventh place.

The Tampa Bay-Southwest Coast area of Florida finished No. 10.

AUTOMOTIVE REPORT

PONTIAC PREPARES TO FIELD ENTRY IN MINI-VAN MARKET

by Tom Cooper

The Pontiac division of GM has revealed plans to enter the Mini-Van market. The Pontiac Trans Sport has been developed as a prototype of the new entry. This particular van will probably never be released in the present form, although something quiet like it is possible. The division would like to produce such a vehicle by the early 1990's but is currently waiting for corporate approval.

The Trans Sport is quiet a unique vehicle. It is designed around the Pontiac 6000 driveline with an experimental 2.9 liter turbo V-6. It shares 2 design features with the Chrysler mini-vans; low floor and front wheel drive but that is where the similarity stops. The Trans Sport is equipped with several features which are very rare if not non-existent in other vehicles, and which incidentally for this reason may never find their way into the production model. One is the steering-hub-mounted control panel. Packed into the hub are all the buttons & switches necessary to control climate, audio and etc. There is also a full keyboard included in the steering hub such as would be found on a personal computer. And speaking of personal computers, that is exactly what you will find packed away in the glove box.

This is a nifty little van that fits the phrase "mini-van" better than most others on the market. It also seems to be quite true to it's last name (sport). As to what the actual production model will look like who knows, but let's hope it has a striking resemblance to this one.

This feature appears each Monday in the Classified Section as a reader service of the Midland Reporter-Telegram.
