Midland's air service about 90 percent normal

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

While the air traffic controllers' strike is causing chaos at many of the nation's airports, many of which are operating with a 50 percent reduction of flights, Midland Regional Airport's flights are currently running at 90 percent of normal.

"Locally, we're doing fine — much, much better than expected," Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation, said this morning.

Banks said Midland Regional Airport is experiencing some delays in flights, but there is only a 10 percent reduction in both private and commercial flights.

Four controller supervisors are now working the tower, and they are experienced, competent and able to handle anything coming in or out of the airport, Banks said.

"Safety is our paramount concern," Banks said. "I have the utmost confidence in their (supervisors) capability. They are highly competent and skilled people."

According to Bill G. Hill, chief tower supervisor, the tower is "keeping the aircraft moving," and he advised "passengers to stay in close contact with the airlines" if they are connecting flights.

William M. Thurmon, a spokesman for Braniff International, said Braniff would continue with the same schedule of flights followed Monday until further notice.

"We're (all Midland airlines) really all miniature Southwest Airlines — if you're going to Dallas, we can get you there, but beyond that the passenger is on his own in making connecting flights and baggage transfers," Thurmon said.

Southwest Airlines runs 13 flights daily to Dallas. All flights ran Monday, but officials from Southwest could not be reached for comment early today for further schedule information.

Continental Airlines through today is scheduling four flights to El Paso, Denver, Austin and Houston. Chuck Logue, manager, said "things were running pretty good with no problems in delay."

American Airlines has three flights scheduled today, all to Dallas-Fort Worth. A. Jack McAdams, general manager, reported a 20-minute delay in American's 7:04 a.m. flight today, but said there is "plenty of room to Dallas.

"Anybody interested in traveling beyond Dallas will have to check with the airlines for service," he said.

Texas International has temporarily suspended all flights until further notice, but officials from the other four airlines serving Midland said they were optimistic about the situation. All reported a slight drop in business and speculated customers were either canceling previous plans or making other arrangements.

"Business has dropped off because people are scared — they're afraid of not getting back," Banks said.

Air controllers hit on all fronts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Determined to break the first nationwide strike by federal workers, the Reagan administration is attacking on many fronts in an attempt to shatter the resolve of air traffic controllers.

The controllers, however, showed no signs of giving in and abandoning their illegal walkout, which cut commercial air traffic in half Monday, caused passengers widespread delays at airports, and cost the airlines millions of dollars.

Robert E. Poli, president of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, accused the administration of attempting to "'break the union" and said even President Reagan's threat of firing controllers who do not return to work by Wednesday will not stop the strike.

"We wouldn't have entered into this if we weren't going to stay," Poli said in an interview with Associated Press Radio.

"Intimidation can't beat us," he said. "The only thing that can beat us is going back to work."

Reagan, described by White House aides as being "as tough as nails" on the controller issue, said the strikers were "in violation of the law" and the oath they took as government employees. If they are still on strike by 11 a.m. Wednesday, they wil be dismissed, he said.

And, according to the White House, the public is firmly behind Reagan's stand. By late Monday, the White House had received 1,390 telephone calls in support of Reagan's position but only 77 opposed, deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said today.

On Capitol Hill, 55 senators signed a letter warning the strikers that the Senate would block any settlement resulting from an illegal walkout. A new pay scale would have to be approved by Congress.

Meanwhile, FAA administrator J. Lynn Helms said the government's contingency plan for keeping air traffic operating at reduced levels was "working well." He said 60 percent of regularly scheduled flights operated Monday if some commuter services were included in the tally.

Helms said he hoped as many as three-fourths of the 14,200 daily scheduled flights might be able to fly later today. And, he predicted that an increasing number of controllers, who are conscious of the president's ultimatum, may return to work today or Wednesday.

The FAA chief said 70 percent of the 17,000 did not report for Monday's day and night shifts. The union said 85 percent stayed off the job.

PATCO could face millions of dollars in fines if the strike continues. U.S. District Judge Harold Greene found the union in contempt of court for violating a back-to-work order and imposed accelerated fines Monday night that would reach $1 million a day by Thursday.

Poli said the union had anticipated such fines and repeated that the organization has only $3.5 million to be taken.

Varied feelings aired in air controllers' strike

Midland control tower open with short crew, schedule

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

While Midland Regional Airport's 18 controllers are picketing at Lubbock International Airport, four supervisors are running Midland's tower.

Under normal conditions, Midland's tower is run by a minimum of five controllers from 6 a.m. to 8 p.m.

The tower usually operates 24 hours per day — today it is operating 18 hours.

"What they've got up there is four people on an 18-hour day," Tommy Urpes, one of the striker-controllers and the secretary-treasurer for Midland Controllers local 428, said this morning via phone from Lubbock.

"When you get tired, what is your margin of error? You make mistakes," he said.

Asked to comment on Urpes' statements, a spokesperson for Bill G. Hill, chief tower supervisor at Midland Regional Airport, said this morning: "Mr. Hill chooses not to dignify the remarks made with a response."

But Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation, said: "As far as I'm concerned, I have the utmost confidence in the people at the tower. They are not going to do anything to cause any accidents. They are highly skilled and competent."

Meanwhile, Urpes said Midland's controllers joined 62 others in Lubbock to picket in their strike efforts to get the government to improve its $40 million contract offer to their satisfaction.

"We'll be here tomorrow when the dealine approaches," Urpes said, referring to President Reagan's statement that controllers would be fired beginning Wednesday morning if they did not return to work.

"We expected this (being fired). Matter of fact, we expected it Monday. It's a psychological ploy Reagan's pulling, but it's not going to work. There are 18 controllers in Midland — 18 are on strike. We'll stay out until we get what we want," Urpes said.

Alternatives to replace controllers have included non-union supervisors, possible military controllers and retired controllers.

Urpes said he had not heard of any

Pilot says his counterparts think demands 'excessive'

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Air traffic controllers who walked off their jobs Monday haven't gained the approval and backing of pilots, according to a Midlander who flies for a corporation.

Norm Melick with RPM Transco said Monday afternoon that general aviation pilots "are not for the strike at all. We think their (controllers') demands are excessive."

And despite predictions by the controllers that a strike would bring air traffic almost to a halt, that situation isn't going to occur, Melick added.

"The flights are going pretty well, even with the cutbacks," he noted.

Melick criticized one of the major contentions by controllers that stress should be a determining factor behind the demands for more pay, shorter work week and better retirement benefits.

"They're not telling the whole story," he began. "They knew about the job pressure before they signed on. 'We can't take it now,' they say, but for $10,000 a year more they can.

"These controllers have to pass a Civil Service examination. And once they get on, everything including schooling is paid for by the government. The (air traffic control) academy is tremendous with its pressure."

And how does one determine stress in one job is worse than stress in another? he asked. "Stress can't be measured in a way that would be fair to everyone. I match their (controllers) stress against that of pilots or police chiefs or police officers."

The controllers' strike won't knock the pilots out of flying, Melick claimed. General aviation pilots, such as Melick, fly by Visual Flight Rules and can still do so without supervision from the controllers. Major airlines, however, use Instrument Flight Rules, which separate aircraft by altitude and time.

"Controllers have created a big hullabaloo. They say 'you need us' and that's not true. You can still fly VFR," said Melick. "Controllers are not going to shut the system down. It's still the pilot's responsibility to see and avoid other aircraft."

And he denied an allegation by controllers that the supervisors in charge of operations during the strike are unqualified. These people started out

Bank sweetens bid with library funds

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The First National Bank of Midland, unchallenged in its bid for the Midland County Library property at 301 W. Missouri Ave., added overwhelming persuasion to its bid on Monday when it offered to contribute the "first" $5.5 million toward construction of the proposed three-story county library in the bank's envisioned Eagle Plaza.

The downtown plaza is to be highlighted by a 40-story bank tower and, possibly, a second tower.

Charles D. Fraser, president of the billion-dollar bank which is billed as Texas' largest independent financial institution, tendered a written offer and a $701,240 bid on the land to the Midland County Commissioners' Court and to the Midland City Council.

The two governing bodies were meeting jointly, as the city and county claim title to the property.

County Judge Bill Ahders read the proposal, but not without faux pas.

"...We herewith tender a 'blank' — a bank — money order," said the judge, who quickly righted his slip of speech. "I wish it were 'blank,' " he digressed, for the gesture would solve any county financial woes, he said.

The bank's offer, which apparently came as a windfall to the judge, the four commissioners and Mayor G. Thane Akins and two city councilmen, also included parking spaces on the bank's proposed North and South Super Blocks in downtown Midland and more.

"Additionally, The First National Bank of Midland or its assigns will bear the cost of architects' fees, demolition of existing library and site preparation, interim construction financing, costs of sale, etc., at no cost to the public," said Fraser's proposal.

THE COMMISSIONERS held the offer in abeyance until Monday, although Commissioner Durward Wright immediately had moved for unreserved acceptance of the bank's bid and offer to build the new library.

Just as quickly, Commissioner Charlie Welch seconded the motion.

But fellow Commissioner Win Brown put a damper on the motion and suggested that the offer be carefully considered and then acted upon in the Commissioners' Court meeting next Monday. The bank's offer stands firm until 5 p.m. Aug. 18.

"From what was read," Brown said of Ahders' reading of Fraser's offer, "it sounds pretty good."

The judge was more specific.

"I don't think there is any question about what we are going to do," Ahders said. "I think it is a fine bid, and I want to congratulate the bank on their community effort. We do appreciate it."

The bank's offer was contingent on the joint approval of the proposal by the city and county and delivery of the property deed to the bank. But only the mayor and Councilmen Tom Sloan and Carroll Thomas were representing the city, and the threesome was not enough to make a quorum.

Nevertheless, Wright seemed eager for the Commissioners' Court to accept the bank's offer.

"I really don't see any need for a postponement," said Wright.

"Well, really, I don't either," conceded Brown, who nevertheless demurred that the bank's offer may need "clarification."

BROWN MOVED that any action on the bank's proposal be tabled until Monday; Wright seconded the motion, which was agreed upon by the court.

"It's really a nice public gesture," Brown said of the bank's proposal. The bank "really has the public concern uppermost in their mind."

The city came into the county library deal, as the city of Midland claims title to 2½ of the 12 lots making up the library property, which is part of Block 87 of the Original Town of Midland.

After the matter was tabled and bankers Fraser and Jno. P. Butler had departed, the mayor expressed delight in the bank's offer to construct the county library.

"I just feel like breaking out in applause," Akins said. "It's tremendous. I wish somebody could do something like that for the streets."

The city's supposed share of the impending land sale to the bank would amount to $146,091.67.

And the mayor, speaking lightly, proposed how to spend the money.

"We'll probably blow it on something frivolous like the streets," he jested.

LATER THAT afternoon, Commissioner Brown suggested that the county actually holds rightful, if not legal, title to the 12 library lots. He said he

Tax cut could boost year-end paychecks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The tax cut that President Reagan promises will restore the United States' economic prowess is about to reach his desk in time to give Americans slightly larger paychecks during the last three months of 1981.

Expected House approval today of the largest tax cut in history would send the measure to Reagan. He probably will add his signature on Wednesday, clearing the way for the first small stage of the personal tax reduction to start showing up in paychecks after Oct. 1.

The Senate approved the compromise version of the tax bill by a 67-8 vote Monday after rejecting, 55-20, an effort by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., to slash the measure's special tax breaks for the oil industry.

The bill will permanently reduce personal tax rates in three steps, with the rate cuts totaling about 25 percent for each income level. Starting in 1985, the rates for each income bracket would be changed automatically each year to offset the "bracket creep" caused by inflation.

A typical four-member family with two wage earners and a $20,000 income can expect a tax cut of about $2 a week the last three months of 1981.

Next year, the bill would give that family $323; in 1983, $554. When the bill is fully effective in 1984, the family's tax liability — which this year is about $2,013 — will be cut by $662.

Democrats claim that inflation and rising Social Security taxes will offset the cuts and leave a majority of families — those earning $20,000 a year or less — with a bigger federal tax burden than they have today.

The bill gives 32 percent of the personal tax cut to those with incomes of $50,000 or more. Reagan and his supporters say these upper-income taxpayers, who now pay 33.8 percent of all income taxes, will invest their reductions in ways that will benefit the economy.

Contract agreed on

The Midland County Tax Appraisal District's board of directors in a 4-1 vote on Monday agreed to contract with Western Data Services Inc. of Waxahachie to keep computerized records of the district's tax rolls and appraised valuations on property taxed by the six taxing entities in the county.

The first-year contract with Western Data may range between $65,000 and $85,000.

"We appreciate being able to work for y'all," Western Data's George Singleton told Board Chairman Gil Tompson and board members Fred Wright, Charlie Welch, Joe Nuessle and Walt Holton.

Holton, who cast the dissenting vote on the measure, was not equally appreciative.

He had advocated the contracting with a Midland-based computer company to file the tax information. However, he had no quarrel with Western Data.

"My philosophy," Holton explained after the vote, "is that we had a local option on this thing...and we didn't use it."

Holton, who represents Midland Memorial Hospital on the appraisal board, is a private-enterprise advocate and a state rightist who believes in using local recources wherever possible, practical and economical.

"I'd like to see this thing kept on a local basis," he said.

Western Data will be keeping the tax rolls and relative information for the city of Midland, Midland College, the Midland Independent School District and the the hospital and will be doing the appraisal work for those four entities and for Midland County and the Greenwood ISD. Midland County Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield will continue to collect taxes for the county and Greenwood.

Earlier this year, the appraisal board hired Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., an accounting firm, to evaluate computer data companies which were bidding on keeping the tax records for the six taxing agencies. The firm recommended Western Data.

"They did a great job," Holton said of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co.

Chief Appraiser Virgil Jones Jr. and his 25-member staff are to move into their leased headquarters at Dellwood Shopping Mall by September to begin the appraisal work.

Welch jabs city again

Charlie Welch, the Midland County commissioner who works at keeping his feud fuming with the city of Midland on Midland Draw, saw a chance to jab the city and its overburdened sewage treatment plant during Monday's Commissioners' Court meeting.

The timing came as his fellow commissioners were about to embark on a discussion of a Midland County ordiance regulating septic tanks and cesspools in rural Midland County.

Specifically, Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis was concerned about the sewage and wastewater disposals from a proposed 268-unit mobile home park off Cotton Flat Road in his Precinct 3 south of Midland.

Welch pre-empted the discussion.

"...We've got 123 acres....of open cesspools out there," Welch said of the holding ponds where effluent is stored in southeast Midland. "Nobody's doing anything about it but talk."

Welch, who for years has been critical of the city's over-taxed sewage-treatment plant and the recent overflow of effluent into Midland Draw, again voiced his ire.

The commissioner said officials should "quit slapping at gnats and go fighting the elephant."

The city of Midland has a permit from the Texas Department of Water Resources to store effluent and to allow its use for irrigation on agricultural land. But the permit does not allow the dumping or leaking of the treated water into the draw.

The Commissioners' Court will consider the septic-tank system in a public hearing at 7 p.m. Sept. 14 in the Midland County Courthouse.

Hobbs man killed in oilfield fire

ANDREWS—Juan Mendoza, about 31, of Hobbs, N.M., was killed in an oilfield fire which erupted about 1 p.m. Monday at a site 19miles northeast of here off Highway 115.

Mendoza was on the derrick when pressured oil and gas in tubing blew out and erupted in flames, according to an Andrews County Sheriff's Department spokesman.

He was an employe of X-Pert, a well service pulling unit from Hobbs.

The body was taken first to Singleton Funeral Home in Andrews and then transferred to Hobbs.

would suggest next Monday that the city's share of the land sale be handed to the county.

Brown noted that the present 1958-built library was financed in a bond issue, which amounted to more than $387,000, and that the bonds would not have been underwritten had the county not had clear title to the land.

He reasoned that the "quick claim deed" which he contends gave the city's 2½ lots of the property to the county "probably" was never placed in proper records.

"It would be unethical, immoral and fattening," Brown said in a humorous vein, for the city to lay claim to the money.

"It's only rightful purpose is for the library."

Most pilots opposed

as air traffic controllers and worked their way up through the ranks, he said.

Melick, who has been a pilot for 13 years and an instructor for 10 years, viewed the previous settlement as "fair." And he highlighted the fact that the controllers' "counterparts" in the flight service station aren't striking, even though they have been working without a contract for three years.

The controllers have been offered what Melick feels is a fair wage. "I know a lot of other government people who would take it."

Denying another charge that pilots can find a job with another airline while controllers can work only for the federal government, Melick said that is another situation which controllers knew about before they went through the training.

And it's not that easy to switch jobs from one airline to another, he added. "It's very hard to get a job with an airlines," he said. Unlike controllers, pilots pay for their own trainng, Melick claimed.

"I knew if I didn't make it, all that training would be for nothing."

Nor does Melick have any sympathy for the controllers if they refuse to get back to work by a Wednesday deadline and President Reagan fires the group.

"He's trying to find out who really wants to strike and who wants to work."

Controllers in Lubbock

military controllers being used throughout the nation yet. However, Mike Cheatheam, PATCO member from Abilene, said if they are used, it will be a mistake.

"If FAA uses military controllers, it will be an extreme mistake on the part of the government. Those military controllers do not have the experience or the capability to perform in our job. If they use them, somebody is going to get killed in an airplane," Cheatheam said.

Urpes, who was a military controller for seven years, agreed with Cheatheam.

"I thought I was a pretty good controller, but when I got hired by FAA it was an entirely different ball game," Urpes said.

Urpes said he would not comment directly on the supervisors working at Midland, but across the nation he said the FAA is telling the public that the aircraft are running safely. Urpes disagrees. He said the controllers' first concern is also the safety of passengers, but "FAA is not telling the public the supervisors are running the airplanes 20 miles apart."

The 20-mile spread is the maximum, according to FAA law, that a controller can traffic the aircraft. This is called a slowdown, according to Urpes.

"Normally aircraft are run three miles apart," he said. "If a FAA controller ran a 20-mile separation under normal conditions, he'd probably be fired or sent back to training school.

"If they (military) are as qualified, why isn't the traffic run the same?" Urpes added.

Another alternative that has been proposed is the retired controller. Cheatheam said FAA has sent an appeal to retired controllers.

"As I understand it," he said, "they (retirees) are being offered six months employment."

These retirees are familiar with the job, but statistically only 11 percent reach normal retirement — others are advised to retire because of mental or physical problems, Urpes said.

"This morning in Lubbock, a retired controller crossed the picket line. I think this is a strong indication that the FAA is hurting," he said.

When controllers are hired, they are required to sign an affidavit saying they will not strike.

Ron Lovell, striker-controller from Midland, said this does not pertain to the controllers because they have been working without a contract since May.

"They're (FAA) saying I broke the law — what about twisting our contract by taking articles out. They changed their mind; I change my mind."

Air traffic controllers Monday rejected a last-minute offer from the government and began an outlawed strike, which could ground half of the nation's commercial air traffic.

Air strike like a trip to the dentist

EDITOR'S NOTE: Like thousands of other American travelers, Reporter-Telegram Sports Editor Ted Battles and his wife, Lisa, were caught in mid-vacation by the air traffic controllers' strike. The following is an account of Battles' return trip to Midland Monday.

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

For two Midland travelers, the air traffic controllers' strike turned out to be like a trip to the dentist. The sleepless night of anxiety was worse than the session with the drill.

Sunday found a vacationing Midland couple faced with a trip from Greenville, N.C., to Midland, Texas, complicated by disturbing strike reports which left them pondering their options...the bus schedule or hijacking a son's car for the dash back to the Lone Star State.

Airline authorities offered no guarnatees and little consolation outside of the prediction that the controllers wouldn't strike, maybe.

So when the couple embarked before sun-up for the 25-mile auto trip to Kinston, N.C., and their 7 a.m. Piedmont flight to Charlotte, N.C., the only assurance offered was that it was an early flight and perhaps someone would still be around to direct traffic.

Actually, with only four Piedmont flights a day and a like number of Sunbird commuter flights, Kinston isn't that busy. One of the Piedmont flights was departing at 6:45 a.m. for Louisville and Chicago as the flight from Atlanta to Charlotte was landing in a rain squall. "We're going to try to get off before 7 a.m.," the ticket agent assured in reference to the deadline for the walkout.

Actually, the packed plane was taxiing toward the runaway before 7 but didn't take off until 7:01 a.m. for the 40-minute flight to Charlotte. The travelers from Midland were still thinking in terms of a bus trip. But hope persisted that since Piedmont's Charlotte-to-Dallas flight was more than the minimum 500-mile prerequisite the search for a bus schedule might be delayed until Dallas.

Actually, the flight took off within 10 minutes of its scheduled departure time and as one Piedmont ticket agent noted, "If you'd gone by way of Atlanta, you might not have been so lucky. This is a smaller airport and things are still running smoothly (at 8:30 a.m.)."

Upon arrival at Dallas-Fort Worth, the Midland travelers exhaled in unison upon discovery that the 11:35 a.m. Braniff flight to Midland was still "On Time." But evidence of the strike was every where. Stacked suitcases and time-biding travelers stranded by canceled flights filled the corridors and lounges, waiting for the stand-by summons. Frequent announcements over the terminal P.A. apologized for the inconvenience and kept passengers advised of the latest strike developments.

The actual takeoff delay was 25 minutes, 15 of which were made up en route to a 12:50 Midland touch down. When the Braniff 431 was cleared for take off at DFW, there were nine planes impatiently waiting their turn. The tails of others were visible beyond the overpass which crosses the airport highway and leads from the west strip of DFW to the east strip.

The stack-up was mute evidence of the strike's mounting toll. Things were getting worse and more flights would be scratched before the day was done, 500 miles minimum or not. Somehow we had blundered along our merry way and a day and journey that started out like a three-day disaster was just another routine trip.

U.S. envoy to Switzerland leaving

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — U.S. Ambassador Richard D. Vine said today he will leave his post Sept. 1 after nearly two years as envoy to Bern and the Swiss press said a Philadelphia attorney is his likely successor.

Swiss press accounts identified Fait Ryan Whitlesley, 42, a Philadelphia attorney who worked in Ronald Reagan's presidential campaign, as the candidate likely to replace Vine.

Vine, a 55-year-old career diplomat, proved a popular envoy here, partly because he speaks the country's three official languages — German, French and Italian, according to Swiss press.

Midlander gets card from Reagan

Gladys Venable is 81 today. And someone very important remembered her birthday.

Mrs. Venable, 3308 Terrace Ave., received a special birthday card in the mail on Thursday. After wishing her a very happy birthday it was signed, "We hope today is filled with special joy and that the coming year brings you every happiness, Ronald Reagan."

According to a spokesperson at the White House, not everybody receives a birthday card from the president. It has been a practice of past presidents to try to send best wishes to those citizens turning 80 or over, but it is impossible to remember everyone.

Mrs. Venable was born Aug. 4, 1900, in Ennis and later moved to Midland. She returned to Midland about 11 years ago after she retired from teaching school in Garden City.

She said she has lived in West Texas most of her life. But this year on her birthday she received congratulations from someone a little farther north.

Police looking for rapist

The 26-year-old woman told officers the man entered her near westside home through a rear door about 12:10 a.m. and held a gun on her. He was described as white, in his late 20s, about 5 feet, 9 inches tall, and weighing 160 pounds. He was wearing blue jeans and a red short sleeve shirt.

In theft and burglary complaints, Ricky McKinney of Route 5, Midland, reported the theft of a stereo amplifier and two speakers worth a total of $1,100.

Mrs. Earl Ray of 2205 Country Club Drive said her house was broken into and ransacked but nothing appeared to be missing. Entry was gained by breaking a sliding glass door at the rear of the residence.

Max Wright of 4704 Leisure Drive told officers a briefcase, calculator and assorted other items valued at $500 were taken from a pickup truck parked in his driveway.

And John Hooks of 2827 Stutz Drive said guns and other goods worth a total of $1,200 were stolen from a pickup that was parked behind his residence.

Marcello and Roemer to appeal Brilab convictions

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Brilab convictions of reputed Mafia boss Carlos Marcello and a former high state official on conspiracy charges shows that a "sting" operation "is the only way you can catch the sacred cows," says a federal prosecutor.

Marcello, long the target of a federal deportation effort, and former Louisiana Commissioner of Administration Charles Roemer say they will fight their convictions on grounds they were entrapped by the undercover FBI Brilab scheme.

Marcello and Roemer both were found guilty Monday, after a 19-week trial, of conspiring "through a pattern of racketeering activity" that included bribes to win a rich state contract for group life insurance. It would have brought them a monthly commission of $87,000, according to a federal indictment.

Marcello was cleared of 11 other counts against him, while Roemer was acquitted on the three other charges he faced.

Two other men — I. Irving Davidson, 59, a Washington lobbyist, and New Orleans lawyer Vincent Marinello, 43 — were acquitted.

The case got its name from joining the names "bribery-labor." Agents originally targeted possible labor union racketeering for the investigation but followed leads that took them to state contracts.

Defense attorneys for both men already have asked U.S. District Judge Morey Sear to reverse the convictions. They claim that government agents overreached their bounds when it came to giving the defendants chances to take bribes.

"This is the only way you can catch the sacred cows," said U.S. Attorney John Volz when asked about the motion for acquittal. "You have to use a sting operation."

Roemer, 58, and Marcello, 71, each face a possible maximum penalty of 20 years in prison and a $25,000 fine. A sentencing date was set for Sept. 9.

A fifth defendant, Aubrey Young, 58, a former government official in Baton Rouge, won a directed verdict of acquittal in July after the prosecution finished presenting the case to the jury.

Volz said he was "pleased" with the results. "We got convictions on the main people," he said.

Jurors reached their verdicts after 15 hours of deliberation during the weekend. The verdicts were sealed and read in court Monday.

"I still feel I was innocent. We'll simply have to appeal the case and see what we can get from it," said Roemer, a multi-millionaire and a former power in Louisiana politics.

Roemer was state commissioner of administration — the state's chief administrator after the governor — from 1972 to 1980. He is the father of U.S. Rep. Charles "Buddy" Roemer, D-La.

The younger Roemer's Washington office said he would have no comment on his father's conviction.

"I can't say a thing right now," said Marcello, the 5-foot-2 "Little Man" of New Orleans, as he left court Monday.

Marcello, a self-made millionaire with a fortune estimated over the years by authorities at between $60 million and $500 million, has been the subject of deportation efforts by the federal government since 1953.

Police records show he was linked to gambling in Louisiana during World War II, including slot machines, horse racing wires and casinos. He also was involved in gambling in Cuba before the takeover of Fidel Castro in 1959.

Marcello, believed born of Italian parents in Tunis, Africa, will have his deporatation case pending while he exhausts his appeals for the Brilab conviction, Volz said.

Marcello once served a four-year term for a bank robbery and also spent a year and a day in federal prison in 1938 on a narcotics charge.

His last brush with the law was when he punched an FBI agent he mistook for a newspaper reporter. He served five months of a two-year sentence for assaulting the agent and was released from a federal hospital in Springfield, Md., on March 12, 1971.

Mistaking the identity of FBI men got him into trouble again beginning in 1979, when crooked insurance men from Los Angeles allegedy began offering bribes and kickback deals in exchange for business.

They were real FBI agents, and hours of conversations about the illicit deals were tape recorded, then played for jurors during the trial.

The key to the government's case was Joseph Hauser, a twice-convicted Los Angeles insurance swindler who cooperated with the government to reduce his sentence on another conviction. He currently is in the government's witness-protection program.

Hauser agreed to lead the FBI to men he allegedly had dealt with in the past and offer them the opportunity of bribery deals.

Sex bias employment regulations reversal sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education Secretary Terrel H. Bell wants to reverse a regulation that forbids federal aid to local school districts found to have practiced sex discrimination in their employment practices, a women's rights group says.

Judith Lichtman of the Women's Legal Defense Fund said Monday that Bell has asked the Justice Department to switch sides in a Connecticut case pending before the U.S. Supreme Court.

The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York last year upheld Department of Education regulations prohibiting local school districts from sex discrimination in employment under the 1972 Title IX Education Amendments.

Ms. Lichtman said Bell has asked the Justice Department to join local school boards as a plaintiff in the suit and abandon the government's six-year status as a defendant in such cases.

Bell's chief spokesman, Lou Mathis, and his top aide, Elam Hertzler, said Monday night that they did not know whether such a request had been made. The Washington Post quoted an unidentified Bell aide as confirming that the secretary had contacted the Justice Department on the matter.

"In a careful reading of the statute, we don't think the law justifies such an expansive interpretatioin," the aide was quoted as saying.

Ms. Lichtman said the regulations enable employees who believe they have been discriminated against to file a complaint with the Education Department.

If after an investigation, such discrimination is found to exist and is not corrected, the government can suspend federal aid to the local school district.

Local school boards have contended that the employment regulation went beyond the intent of Congress in the 1972 law forbidding sex discrimination in education programs that receive federal funds.

They cite the 1964 Civil Rights Act which fobids discrimination according to race, color and national origin but exempts employment discrimination from coverage unless the worker is paid with federal funds or the recipient of a service is adversely affected.

Since 1975, the Juse Department has repeatedly defended the employment regulations under Title IX, but lost four cases in federal appeals courts. The Supreme Court agreed to review the issue after the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and 5th U.S. ircuit Court f Appeals in New Orleans upheld the regulation.

Ms. Lichtman said Bell has told Justice officials that the Education Department plans to issue a notice of proposed rulemaking which would delete the current employment section from Title IX regulations and substitute language similar to the 1964 law in its place.

"This is an administration that says it's against the Equal Rights Amendment but is for statutory enforcement of equal rights," Ms. Lichtman said. "And, here's the only law that requires sex equality in education employment and they're trying to gut the regulation."

Brady suffers severe seizure

WASHINGTON (AP) — The road back to health for White House press secretary James S. Brady now looks more uncertain after a severe seizure interrupted what had been described as a generally steady recovery from a gunshot wound to the brain.

Doctors at George Washington University Hospital were reported to be disappointed but not surprised by the "grand mal" seizure suffered Monday by Brady, who was injured during the March 30 assassination attempt on President Reagan. They are keeping Brady under close observation, waiting to see how he rebounds from the attack.

"He's in good condition and stable," a hospital spokesman said early today. "His vital signs are all normal. He's been asleep all day. He's still in the recovery room, asleep on a barbituate anesthetic."

Experts said a "grand mal" seizure is not uncommon among those who have suffered brain injuries, as Brady did when he was struck in the forehead by a bullet.

The seizure raises the possibility that Brady will suffer future seizures that could develop into epilepsy. This form of epilepsy is common with brain damage of this type and can be treated successfully with drugs.

The seizure struck Brady shortly after he had breakfast in his hospital room, deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said.

Doctors immediately treated Brady with intravenous medication and anesthesia, Speakes said.

Brady's vital signs were reported to be normal through Monday as he continued to sleep under the effects of the anesthetic. Doctors were monitoring his brain activity with an electroencephalograph, which tracks brain waves, a White House statement said in late afternoon.

Dr. Arthur Kobrine, the surgeon who operated on Brady and who has supervised his treatment, is reported to be disappointed with the seizure.

After talking to Kobrine Monday, White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III said the doctor felt the occurrence of the seizure now was surprising and that it was equally surprising it had not happened earlier, according to David R. Gergen, the chief White House spokesman.

Such seizures are "not exactly unexpected in cases of this type," Speakes quoted Dr. Daniel Ruge, the White House physician, as saying.

This seizure may be only the first of a series that could trouble Brady for the rest of his life, Speakes said.

A neurosurgeon not connected with the case said such seizures are common with injury to the frontal lobe of the brain, as sustained by Brady. If a series of such seizures should follow, this could mean post-trauma epilepsy, he said.

The surgeon, who asked not to be identified, said this form of epilepsy can be controlled by drugs and has a good remission rate.

Speakes said that such a seizure does not necessarily leave any noticeable effects.

"In most cases, you are unable to notice any effects after the patient has come out of the anesthesia," Speakes said.

Cindy poses no threat

MIAMI (AP) — Cindy, the third tropical storm of the 1981 season, moved across North Atlantic shipping lanes today, posing no immediate threat to land, forecasters said.

The tropical storm could pick up strength, and is expected to pass close to the southeastern tip of Newfoundland on Thursday, said forecasters at the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

At 6 a.m. EDT, its center was near latitude 39.9 north and longitude 61.2 west, about 350 miles south-southeast of Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Highest sustained winds were estimated at 55 mph, with gale-force winds extending less than 100 miles out from the center. The storm was moving east-northeast at about 15 mph.

To be classified a tropical storm, a storm must have minimum sustained surface winds of 39 mph. If Cindy's sustained winds strengthened to 74 mph, it would be classified a hurricane.

Forecasters said a tropical disturbance in the far eastern Atlantic continued to be tracked by satellite as it moved westward. The system, located just west of the Cape Verde Islands, had some potential for development, they said.

Polish demonstrators paralyze traffic

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Workers protesting food shortages paralyzed traffic in the center of Warsaw today, jamming the capital's biggest intersection with a milelong blockade of trucks and buses. The demonstrators refused to move until a two-hour strike Wednesday.

The official Polish news agency PAP said the blockade was "paralyzing traffic" in the city center. Unarmed police were diverting traffic from the congested area and blocked further passage by the motorcade.

About 300 vehicles converged on the main thoroughfare Monday and have remained idle in a stand-off with police who refuse to let the convoy pass by to Communist Party headquarters a block away.

Uniformed Solidarity union guards kept several hundred curious pedestrians from the center of the circle this morning where Marszalkowska Street and Jerozolimskie Avenue meet.

Crowds join buses, trucks and taxis at a traffic circle in downtown Warsaw Monday morning during a demonstration to protest food shartages. The protest, which clogged Warsaw streets and snarled traffic, was organized by the Polish union Solidarity.

Solidarity workers opened makeshift canteens, press and information bureaus and offices in buses at the blockade. Women made sandwiches for the protesting Solidarity workers.

Solidarity, the independent labor federation, suspended talks with the government on the food crisis because of the street confrontation. Union officials said the talks probably would resume Thursday.

The Communist government's labor troubleshooter, Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski, warned in a television interview Monday night that "people are being drawn into street demonstrations where any spark can lead to an explosion."

But Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, who met for four hours Monday with Rakowski, said the Soviet bloc's only legal independent union had "conceded too much ground so far."

"The vehicles can remain where they are even for 18 days if necessary," said Walesa. "We are in control of the situation and will continue to be for a long time."

The motorcade Monday was the largest protest so far in 11 days of strikes and marches in several cities to complain about food shortages and government plans to increase food prices.

With horns blaring and headlights flashing, hundreds of cars, trucks, taxis and city buses roared through the city. The vehicles were festooned with Polish flags, union banners and placards reading "We Can't Work on an Empty Stomach," "If You Want Us to Work Let Us Have Food First" and "A Hungry Nation Can Eat the Government."

"We're tired of the shortage of food, of fuel and of engine oil," said one taxi driver.

"Yes, they honk their horns, but what good will it do?," said a woman standing in a line at a department store.

Another demonstration was reported in Wloclawek, west of Warsaw, where thousands of workers marched Monday under Solidarity banners. Strike alerts were posted in Piotrkow Trybunalski and Czestochowa to the south. The Solidarity local in Gdansk, the Baltic port, said it would meet Wednesday to discuss a new protest, and a march was planned Thursday in Krakow.

PAP, the official news agency, reported that the Communist Party's new 200-member Central Committee, which was elected at the special party congress in mid-July, would meet Saturday to consider "current problems and counteracting the worsening socio-economic situation."

Workers are angry over empty shelves, long food lines, proposed price hikes of up to 400 percent and a cut in the monthly meat ration for August from 7.7 pounds to 6.6.

Arabs may have broken spirit of cease-fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. will look into reports that Saudi Arabia violated the "spirit" of the Mideast cease-fire by supplying light arms to the Palestine Liberation Organization in Lebanon, Israel's U.S. Ambassador Ephraim Evron says.

Evron made the statement Mondy after a meeting with Haig at the State Department occasioned by Israel's signing of an agreement with Egypt on a peace-keeping force in the Sinai peninsula next year.

The State Department said it had no information about any Saudi Arabian arms deliveries to the PLO, which Evron said is taking advantage of the cease-fire to re-equip its units in Lebanon.

"Quantities of arms have been shipped there from Saudi Arabia," Evron said. "We believe this is certainly a violation of the spirit of the cessation of hostilities agreement."

He said shipments of light weapons not of American manufacture were approved by the Saudi government.

"We have raised it with the American government because the American government was instrumental in bringing about the cessation of hostilities," Evron said.

He said the cease-fire agreement did not explicitly bar such shipments, but "it was certainly the understanding that there be no rearming, that the period of quiet would not be used in order to make preparations for resumed hostilities."

Evron refused to say if Israel planned any specific response.

He also said he urged Haig to press for release to Israel of 10 F-16 jet aircraft. The Reagan administration suspended their shipment because of Israel's recent actions, including the bombing of Palestinian enclaves in Beiruit last month.

"We feel they should be under way to Israel as soon as possible," Evron said.

Haig said the Sinai agreement was "a clear manifestation of the United States' continuing support for the peace process in the Middle East."

The Sinai force of up to 2,500 troops will patrol the Egypt-Israel border after the withdrawal of Israeli troops from the Egyptian Sinai next April. More than 1,000 soldiers, including an infantry battalion, will be American.

Welcome, Dr. Parrish

Monday marked something of a new beginning for Midland College as Dr. Jess H. Parrish assumed the presidency of the institution.

Dr. Parrish, thus, became only the second president in the college's history. He succeeds Dr. Al G. Langford, who has guided Midland College through 12 years of tremendous growth and change.

Most Midlanders are familiar with Dr. Langford's performance at the college's helm. His devotion, dedication and interest in the institution were vital in its formative years.

It goes without saying that without the leadership of a man of Dr. Langford's caliber, Midland College might not have achieved the success nor enjoyed the reputation it does today. We are appreciative of all Dr. Langford did for the college during his tenure.

But now Dr. Langford has chosen to pursue other ventures and it's time to talk about the future of Midland College.

At this particular point in history the challenges facing institutions of higher education are unprecedented. The cost of an education has been skyrocketing in recent years and social changes have altered the demands for turning out graduates with different abilities. It's likely that the changes encountered in the field of education will continue into the 1980s.

As a community college, MC has the lofty goal of providing for the educational needs of all the city's residents. Meeting that goal in the context of the present and the future is the challenge that now has passed to Dr. Parrish.

We feel Midland College is fortunate to have as its' second president a man of his stature in educational circles. We join with all Midlanders in welcoming Dr. Parrish to the Tall City and offer any assistance possible in helping him to continue the great tradition of Midland College.

Mr. Christopher returns

Remember Warren Christopher? During the Iranian hostage crisis the name of the deputy secretary of state was in the news almost every hour on the hour. Then he disappeared.

He did not really go into hiding, of course. The publicity-shy Mr. Christopher merely returned to the Los Angeles law firm where he is an esteemed partner. He kept a low profile until he made a speech the other day at his alma mater, Stanford University.

This sometimes quiet man spoke, of all things, of the value of talking. With typical Christopherian directness and simplicty, he said talking is a "central element in our foreign relations ... and receives less attention than it deserves."

The hero of the hostage horror went on: "We may come to think we can punish our adversaries by refusing to talk — or, by our silence, induce changes in policies we deplore. But without talking, without diplomacy, an essential ingredient of our national security is lost ..."

He related the diplomatic treasure of talking to our relations with the Kremlin: "We and the Soviets, even when our differences are sharpest, still share at least one common interest — the interest in survival. We therefore have a common need to talk, to seek dependable ways to avoid the conflagration that could consume us both."

The philosopher-statesman stepped again into the limelight with a sensible message. His wise counsel on the art of keeping the conversation going in foreign affairs gives new insights into his success in getting 52 American prisoners freed from bondage in Iran.

Without Warren Christopher's willingness to talk, the tragedy might have lingered much longer.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Aug. 4, the 216th day of 1981. There are 149 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 4, 1914, Britain declared war on Germany, as the U.S. declared its neutrality at the outset of World War I.

On this date:

In 1790, a United States naval force — later known as the Coast Guard — was formed.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Labor Department tried to cover mistakes

WASHINGTON — Labor Department officials not only bungled an investigation of the notoriously corrupt Teamsters Central States Pension fund during the Carter years — they also did their best to cover up a report that laid out evidence of their failure to dig into the mess.

Jack Anderson

The "investigation" and subsequent coverup are described in a secret draft report by the Senate Permanent Investigations Subcommittee. My associates Clark Mollenhoff and Tony Capaccio have examined the explosive report.

The basic flaw in the department's approach was then-Labor Secretary Ray Marshall's decision to concentrate on civil suits to protect the union members' pensions, with little or no effort to bring criminal actions against the fund officials who had squandered the assets.

"On balance, the department's investigation was a failure because the real villains in the affair — the reputed organized criminals who systematically looted the fund of millions and millions of dollars for the past two decades — were not brought to justice," the Senate investigators concluded.

The department's kindly attitude toward "the real villains" was such that the head of the Special Investigative Staff "did not think it appropriate for him to refer the names of reputed organized criminals to the Justice Department when his investigators came across them in their examination of pension fund transactions," the Senate report declares.

The subcommittee staff reserves its strongest criticism for Labor Department officials who covered up the creampuff probe, particularly then-Assistant Secretary Rocco Charles DeMarco. It was he who "had on two occasions destroyed what turned out to be the only official copies at the Labor Department headquarters of a highly sensitive report," the Senate investigators charge.

DeMarco even denied the existence of the embarrassing report, which was prepared by two department investigators, John Kotch and Richard Crino.

What made the suppressed report so explosive? "The Kotch-Crino report contained information indicating serious inefficiencies in a major government operation," the Senate investigators explain, adding: "Because of the seriousness of the information and allegations contained in it, the report should not have been destroyed."

But there was an even more important reason for preserving the report. States the staff: "The Kotch-Crino report should not have been disposed of because it was against the law to do so."

Even worse, neither Secretary Marshall nor Labor Department Solicitor Carin Ann Clause saw anything wrong with DeMarco's destruction of the damaging report, the Senate investigators say.

"The Krotch-Crino report accurately reflected the sorry state the department's investigation had reached," they conclude. "The Labor Department tried to destroy the evidence of its own shortcomings. At worst, criminal violations were committed in the destruction of the report by Labor Department officials. At best, it was a very poor performance."

What the Labor Department brass failed to foresee, of course, was that a copy of the Kotch-Crino report would survive their coverup attempt and — like the Watergate documents before them — fall into the hands of congressional investigators.

Perhaps Labor Secretary Ray Donovan can get an advance copy of the subcommittee report — and of the Kotch-Crino report that contributed to it. They could help him fulfill his pledge to make labor racketeers a top-priority target of his department.

FLYING HIGH — Convicted felons can't vote, and in many states they can't be licensed to operate such commercial enterprises as mortuaries and beauty salons. But a convicted embezzler was recently recommended for a Civil Aeronautics Board permit to open an overseas air cargo operation.

The man in question is Roberto Polit, an Ecuadorian exile who fled his homeland, after conviction on embezzlement charges. He settled in Miami. His company, Trans-Panama S.A., applied to the CAB for permission to fly cargo routes between Panama and Miami, New York and Los Angeles. Administrative law judge Elias Rodriguez gave Trans-Panama a favorable recommendation last March.

The airline's one plane, a DC-8-21, is mortgaged to Jet Traders Investment Corp., whose president, Nigel Winfield, an aircraft dealer and racehorse owner, was recently denied a license by the New York State Racing and Wagering Board. In a 13-page decision the board turned Winfield down on grounds of "financial responsibility, experience, character and general fitness."

The racing board cited Winfield's association with known mobsters, as well as a 1978 indictment charging him with conspiracy to defraud the late Elvis Presley in a jet-leasing scheme. Winfield, owner of the Kentucky Derby's losing favorite, Proud Appeal, is still awaiting trial on the charge.

Meanwhile, the CAB's Bureau of International Aviation and a competing airline, INAIR, have filed petitions with the board seeking a review of the administrative law judge's decision.

WATCH ON WASTE — Non-veterans are cheating the government out of millions of dollars' worth of medical care at Veterans Administration medical facilities. The VA's humane policy is to admit patients for treatment and ask questions later. By the time the lengthy process of determining eligibility is completed, the nonvets have often skipped. Auditors found the VA had been stuck with bills of $15 million in 27 months by ineligible patients; only $1.2 million was recovered.

INSIDE REPORT:

President Reagan said interested in still deeper cuts

WASHINGTON — Only minutes after Congress had granted his wish for the biggest tax reduction bill in history, President Reagan expressed interest in still deeper cuts.

Rep. Jack Kemp, pioneer congressional advocate of supply-side tax reduction, in a post-victory telephone conversation with the president Wednesday evening suggested moving next for a top marginal rate of 30 percent on all income (compared to the present 50 percent). "Jack," Reagan replied, "this time I want to get taxes to 40 percent." That was the president's first commitment to still deeper tax cuts.

Robert Novak

A footnote: No House Republican leader was more upset than Kemp about the lone House Republican defector on the tax vote — Rep. James Jeffords of Vermont. At Jefford's pleading, Kemp had agreed to address the Vermont Republican convention Oct. 30. "I should have got a commitment from him before I agreed," said Kemp.

CLEARING CASEY

Although Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) Director William J. Casey was told by the Senate intelligence committee there is no reason to find him "unfit" to run the CIA, he was privately put on warning: Get the CIA back into shape fast or you may be in trouble.

That warning was stressed by committee chairman Barry Goldwater, who had been the most insistent senator calling for Casey's resignation. Goldwater, backed by other committee members, gave Casey two major pieces of advice: "Reform" the CIA's analysis and assessments of foreign intelligence, using outside experts as well as the CIA's own staff; put clandestine operations back into business, but in a way that will not soil the reputation of the U.S.

Goldwater's warning to Casey to get cracking is part of the low-key "clearance" he won from the committee. Goldwater was saying: You're in the clear for now, Bill, but you won't stay there if you don't do what we want you to.

JUSTICE TO SENATE?

Influential Republicans in California, fearful of prospects for Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. landing in the U.S. Senate in 1983, are talking seriously of getting Attorney General William French Smith to run against him.

That would almost certainly require the personal cooperation of Los Angeles lawyer Smith's most famous and important client: Ronald Reagan. The president would have to talk Smith into running and, even more difficult, talk Republican Sen. S.I. Hayakawa out of running. Hayakawa is a sure loser in the Republican primary, but Smith would not even consider running against him without presidential pressure.

A footnote: Although nobody really knows how Smith would do in his first attempt at elective office, California politicians believe the one Republican most likely to beat Jerry Brown would be liberal Rep. Pete McCloskey. But conservatives have never forgiven McCloskey for his opposition to the Vietnam War and will do everything possible to prevent his nomination.

KIRKLAND VS. WHITE HOUSE

It will soon be announced that President Reagan is reappointing AFL-CIO president Lane Kirkland to the Federal Productivity Commission, but relations between the labor leader and the White House have grown cooler than ever.

Kirkland was distressed that Reagan administration personnel chief Pen James simply telephoned him to reveal the commission appointments as a fait accompli. When Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter were in power, the White House had consulted the AFL-CIO on prospective choices.

But Kirkland would have been even more chagrined if he had known about deep-seated opposition at the White House to his mere reappointment. Regarding him as a political activist intent on taking over the Democratic Party and ruining the Reagan administration, some presidential aides consider Kirkland's appointment as nothing less than incredible.

SLAPING SADAT

The refusal of a House appropriations subcommittee to approve one cent of the $400 million in the military aid asked for Egypt reddened faces all through the Reagan administration on the eve of President Anwar Sadat's state visit to President Reagan this week.

Sadat, who will spend several days here this week in Mideast peace talks with President Reagan and Secretary of State Alexander Haig, is not likely to go public against the subcommittee's hostility. Privately, however, he will work hard toward getting the decision reversed in the full committee. Reagan supports him in that goal.

A footnote: Egyptian Ambassador Ashraf Ghorbal, concerned that the pro-Israeli congressional lobby might be working behind the scenes to cut the military aid Reagan has asked for Egypt, telephoned Israeli Ambassador Ephraim Evron. Evron assured him that Israel was not interested in blocking U.S. arms help for Egypt.

City's streets not amusing

To The Editor:

"Streets Not Amusing".....and the list goes on----recently reconstructed Midkiff still rides like an old washboard, with pits and fissures that appear to be waiting for one of West Texas annual downpours to open up treacherous holes which gobble up cars big and little.

Driving Midland streets seems comparible to driving through a mine field. I watch road crews daily filling giant chuck holes, check out Scharbauer Drive and three to five days later the holes are back again. About the time you start feeling safe and forget where the car-gobbling monsters once resided a little shower or lawn sprinkler run-off opens them up. The little puddles conveniently camouflage them and the little gobblers put the capture on your car.

Crossing the tracks is also a major challenge, as the ruts and ridges are a chasis shaking experience equivalent to a 5 on the richter scale since 1953 — amusing?

I frequently drive in other area cities such as Odessa, Abilene, Lubbock, Amarillo, etc. and find that I can travel the length and breadth of those cities with minimal start and stops. In Midland it seems that synchronization means that you must stop for every signal light twice before you can procede. The only feasible way to advance is to keep making right turns on red.

So, a tip of the hat to K.E. Robinson for his letter to the editor on Sunday 26, 1981, when he said "one could almost believe that there is no one in charge of planning...."If there is someone in charge-----it should be someone else.

Are there other Midlanders who are distressed about the quality of our streets or the flow of traffic in this fine city? What about The Reporter-Telegram? Any reporters interested in doing a continuing feature on the many hazzards that face the city's drivers.

MidTran helps

To The Editor:

I am glad that my tax money goes to help the public transportation program for Midland. Midland needs public transportation. MidTran has a lot to offer those who would otherwise not have transportation for whatever reason.

I see the MidTran buses all over town helping handicapped (in wheelchairs) in and out of the buses and wherever they are going. I am not handicapped but am healthy and am thankful that I do have my health. No one plans to be in a wheelchair and I hope that Mr. Allan never is because he wouldn't want to put his tax money on some kind of waste like Midtran. Should he ever become handicapped I hope that Midtran is still around so that they can help him.

I hope people like him do not bring an end to something that helps others.

Sandra Purcell
Midland

Thanks offered

To The Editor:

I am a taxpayer. I am not a handicapped or senior citizen. I am very happy that I have my health and am able to get around. I'm very happy to pay $2.50 per ride for Midland to have the fine service of Midtran.

I would be very happy for $5 of my tax money to go for each ride if it gave the elderly, handicapped or low income a chance to be independent and to be able to help themselves. I am very sorry about Mr. Allan's attitude. Not all of us Americans are that selfish. Not all of us are so hung up on money that we cannot see the needs of others. Midland is a growing community and needs public transportation. Thank-you Midtran for the great service you offer to Midland and keep up the good work.

Woman's place?

To The Editor:

A woman's place is in the home; a woman's place is in the market; a woman's place is in the community. If you adhere to this view, then you no doubt believe that a woman's place is in the Bored Room.

Actually, I believe that women can be "at home" almost anywhere. More and more women are working and "working out." So, let's put them in first place — where they belong. Instead of concentrating on women's work, let's applaud working women.

Omar Torrijos to be buried today

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Strongman Omar Torrijos is being buried today in an atmosphere of political uncertainty and optimistic expectations among his opponents.

Opposition parties, which had been agitating for a speedup in Torrijos' timetable for presidential elections in 1984, believe their chances for gaining power have been improved by his death.

A major unanswered question is whether the national guard, Panama's army and Torrijos' power base, will continue to back President Aristides Royo, who was put in office by Torrijos. Royo's leadership has come under increasing criticism in recent weeks.

Torrijos, who died in a plane cr$sh Friday, lay in state Monday in the Metropolitan Cathedral while thousands of mourners passed bythe close, flag-draped coffin. The general's trademarks, his .45caliber pisto belt and his cavalry hat, were atop the coffin. Many in the crowd wept.

Today was a day of national mourning, with all businesses closed. After a requiem Mass at the cathedral and a funeral procession through downtown Panama City, burial was to be in the Amador cemetery.

The U.S. delegation to the funeral included the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. David Jones; Vice President George Bush's wife, Ellsworth Bunker and Sol Linowitz, the Panama Canal treaty negotiators, and Thomas Enders, assistant secretary of state for Latin American affairs.

Cuban President Fidel Castro had been reported planning to attend, but he sent Vice President Carlos Rafael Rodriguez. Rodriguez said Castro wanted to come but his cabinet decided against it because of "the atmosphere prevailing in Latin America."

He did not explain. But the government newspaper Critica sharply criticized Castro last March 24 after it became known that Colombian guerrillas returned home via Panama after being trained in Cuba. Informed sources said Torrijos also had become increasingly worried about the massive military buildup in Nicaragua and its swing toward Cuba.

Torrijos handed over the position of chief of state of Royo in 1978, after 10 years of dictatorial rule, but continued as commander of the national guard and remained the real power in the country.

Well-placed political observers believe his death greatly diminishes the chances of his Democratic Revolutionary Party winning the presidential election in 1984, if it is held as promised. The possibility Torrijos himself might run hampered efforts by other parties to line up candidates.

Liberal Party leader Juan Ramon Aporras said the death of the strongman "implies substantial changes in the government. ... I would say it provides additional alternatives to organized groups aspiring to govern. With the presence of Gen. Torrijos, our possibilities were much more remote."

The opposition newspaper La Prensa in a front-page editorial said Torrijos' 13 years of rule had left a government built around the man and not an institution.

"All political sectors should be aware of the need to orient the nation toward a rapid and defintive democracy before we become embroiled in a violent internal struggle," it said.

"The political situation is stable, and the atmosphere is one of absolute calm," said U.S. Ambassador Ambler Moss. But he added, "You hear a lot of stories about who is jockeying for what position, That's natural, and there is no reason to believe there will be any short-term change."

Leaders of the national guard and the government named the guard's chief of staff, Col. Florencio Flores, to command the army. But it was not known whether he would be a contender for political power.

The major legal parties include the Liberals and Christian Democrats in addition to Torrijos' party. Three-time president Arnulfo Arias, now 80, heads the giant Panamanista Party but it is not legally registered.

U.S. criticizes Soviet military buildup in Cuba

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration says a Soviet military buildup in Cuba has reached a level far in excess of the island's defense needs and is "intimidating and endangering" Cuba's neighbors.

State Department spokesman Dean Fischer said Mondhat the latest addition to Cuba's "bulging arsenal" is a 2,300-ton Koni class frigate equipped with surface-to-air missiles, 76mm guns, torpedoes and mines.

Fischer said the vessel, described as the most advanced warship ever supplied to Cuba by Moscow, is a demonstration of "Cuban and Soviet disregard for stability in the Caribbean.

"This vessel is one of several weapons systems now in Cuba's inventory that allow the Castro government to project power far beyond Cuba's shores, posing a threat to shipping in the Caribbean as well as intimidating and endangering neighbors," Fischer said.

Other officials said equipment previously made available to Cuba includes 120 MIG 19's, 12 MIG 23's, two Foxtrot submarines, troop transport planes and other items.

The officials, who asked not to be identified, also said the Soviets supplie enough small arms to Cuba during April and May to equip a 1 million man militia. Last week, Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig said Soviet weapons deliveries to Cuba this year were more than twice the volume delivered during all of 1980.

Cuba is said to believe additional defense measures are necessary to combat U.S.-based Cuban counter-revolutionaries. The Cuban government announced last month the capture inside Cuba of five exiles who, it claimed, were caught with weapons, explosives and counter-revolutionary propaganda.

It said the exiles planned to commit acts of sabotage against key installations and to assassinate government leaders. Cuba has long maintained that exile military training centers in south Florida operate with American government support.

U.S. uneasiness about the weapons buildup has been heightened by intelligence reports indicating that Cuba is continuing to send equipment to guerrillas in El Salvador and Guatemala and to the Nicaraguan armed forces as well.

Intelligence information reaching here suggests the Nicaraguans have received at least 27 tanks, which are believed to have been sen5 through Cuba.

Fischer refused to specify what measures the administration may take to counter the Cuban activities. But one official said strong consideration is being given to establishing a "Radio Free Cuba," which would beam propaganda broadcasts into Cuba. The operation would be similar to ½adio Free Europe.

The official also said the administration is concerned about violations of the U.S. trade embargo against Cuba and is considering ways to "reinvigorate" the embargo.

Officials believe a hard-line policy against Cuba would enjoy substantial support in the Caribbean and in Latin America. Many countries in this area, including several which previously sought friendly relations with Cuba, now are openly hostile to Cuban President Fidel Castro, according to the officials.

Reagan administration irritation with Cuba was aggravated last week when Castro suggested the CIA may have been responsible for an epidemic of Dengue fever in Cuba, which has claimed more than 100 lives and caused sickness to more than 250,000 people. The State Department said the allegation was "totally without foundation."

Castro made the accustation nine days after the Commerce Department authorized the shipment of a pesticide to combat the disease. The pesticide is scheduled to be shipped early this month.

Cuban freed

ATLANTA (AP) — A Cuban who spent 15 years in Fidel Castro's jails, then went on a hunger strike while in prison here, has been freed by a federal judge.

U.S. District Judge Marvin Shoob ordered Mario Solano Vasquez released on parole to sponsors in Atlanta. Shoob also ordered that Solano undergo a psychiatric examination after leaving the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary Monday.

An assistant U.S. attorney, Douglas Roberto, had said earlier he would not argue against Solano's release, but Roberto asked the judge Monday to delay the release for a week in order for a team of pychiatrists to test and evaluate the refugee.

Solano spent 15 years as a political prisoner of the Fidel Castro regime. Roberto mentioned some "extreme anti-Castro feelings" but would not comment further in court on why officials felt psychiatric testing was needed.

Shoob refused to grant the government's request for a week's delay but agreed to allow a panel of five psychiatrists to examine Solano Thursday.

Solano was the third Cuban freed from the Atlanta prison since nearly 130,000 Cuban refugess arrived in the United States during the "Freedom Flotilla" boatlift last year.

He was one of more than 1,700 Cubans who have been held at the Atlanta prison because they lacked proper entry papers when they arrived in this country or because authorities believed they committed some crime in their homeland.

Solano's attorney, John Pickens, said Solano has a sponsor awaiting him in Miami and people in Atlanta to look after him until he can make the trip to Florida.

Through his attorneys, Solano contended he was being held only because he lacked the proper entry papers.

Oscar-winning actor dies at age 80

NEW YORK (AP) — Melvyn Douglas, twice an Oscar winner and leading man to Greta Garbo, Katharine Hepburn and dozens of other Hollywood glamor queens, died early today of pneumonia and heart problems. He was 80.

Douglas had been hospitalized at Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center for four days, according to his son, Peter Douglas.

The younger Douglas said his father did not have cancer but was at Sloan Kettering because he had come to know doctors there when his wife, Helen Gahagan Douglas, was treated there prior to her death last year.

He was born Melvyn Hessleberg in Macon, Ga., the son of a Russian pianist and a Kentuckian mother from whose ancestors he took his stage name.

Douglas' first acting jobs were with traveling stock companies. He made his Broadway debut in 1928 in "A Free Soul." But it was David Belasco's last stage production "Tonight Or Never" in 1931 that brought Douglas double fortune: It was his first broadway hit and it introduced him to his co-star and future wife, Helen Gahagan, who at the time was praised as one of the 10 most beautiful women in the world. They were married during the run of the play.

Mrs. Douglas left the stage and films to become a three-term California congresswoman. She was defeated in a 1950 Senate race by Rep. Richard Nixon, who used widely criticized campaign tactics. Without calling her a communist, Nixon expressed Mrs. Douglas' liberalism in a way so that she appeared to be one, or at least a sympathizer.

After her defeat, Mrs. Douglas returned to the theater and concert stage occasionally during the 1950s and continued to be active on behalf of liberal causes and Democratic candidates who espoused them.

Douglas, also accused of being a communist sympathizer, served in the Army in the Burma-China theater in World War II and was discharged a major and resumed acting in Hollywood.

After many Broadway successes including "The Best Man," for which he received a Tony, Douglas appeared in 70 films, including "Hud" in 1963, and "Being There" in 1980, both of which won him Oscars for best supporting actor.

His film career had two phases, first as a leading man to Gloria Swanson, Barbara Stanwyck, Miss Hepburn, and Joan Blondell. That phase began in 1931 when he made "Tonight or Never," with Miss Swanson, and included "Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House" in 1947; "The Great Sinner" in 1948; "Carriage Entrance" in 1949; and "On the Loose" in 1951.

In 1962 Douglas began a phase as a character actor, appearing in "Billy Budd" in 1962; "The Americanization of Emily" in 1964; "Hotel" in 1967; "I Never Sang for My Father" in 1970; "One is a Lonely Number" and "The Candidate" in 1972; and "The Tenant" in 1976.

Hospital changes admission policy

Midland Memorial Hospital admission procedures for outpatient testing and services will be changed beginning today, according to Arlene Strickland, MMH public relations director.

Registration for outpatients, non-admitted hospital patients, has been moved from the admitting offices at the Illinois Avenue entrance to the emergency department on Ohio Street. Patients should use the door marked entrance three.

Strickland said all diagnostic outpatients, those patients who need lab work, X-rays, physical therapy, respiratory therapy or occupational therapy on an out patient basis should report to the emergency department admissions desk. They will then receive a pass and will be sent to the proper testing or service department.

Outpatients receiving radiation therapy should still go to the Allison Cancer Center. Pre-admission patients, those providing information prior to their admission to the hospital, are asked to go to the admissions office at the Illinois Avenue entrance.

MMH staff to hear oncology lecture

Hackney

Richard D. Hackney, will speak to the medical staff of Midland Memorial Hospital at noon Wednesday in the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center Conference room.

Hackney, the district oncolgy manager for Bristol Laboratories, will speak on "Cell Cycle Kinetics and Cancer Chemotherapy Use." He was an assistant professor of clinical pharmacy at Texas Southern University in Houston. He also served as the drug information specialist at the M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute in Houston.

The Bristol Company is sponsoring Hackney's visit to Midland in conjunction with the MMH Continuing Medical Education program.

Iranian named despite bombings

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — President Mohammad Ali Rajai today named Hojatoleslam Mohammad Javad Bahonar as prime minister of the ruling Islamic party. The appointment comes a day after two bombings marred Rajai's swearing-in ceremonies.

The official Pars news agency said Rajai decreed the Bahonar's premiership in a letter read during a morning session of Iran's Parliament, which will vote on the appointment during a special session.

Bahonar was secretary general of the Islamic Republican Party, which led the yearlong campaign of the Moslem clergy to oust former president Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, who is in exile in Paris.

Children's books released

The Putnam Publishing Group has released four unique children's books this year for children of various ages.

The books range in mood from light, whimsical and nonsensical, to educational and even sensitive.

Ruth Park's "When the Wind Changed" is delightfully illustrated in full color. The hilarious pictures appropriately tell the story of Josh, a boy of a thousand faces, most of them repulsive.

He terrifies dogs, scares his grandmother, shocks the mailman—all by contorting his features. His father, an accomplished facemaker in his youth, finds it amusing, but warns Josh that if he makes a face and the wind changes, it will stay that way.

"Ho, ho," Josh chortles. But one day when he creates his best face of all, one so hideous that he almost scares himself, the wind changes...

This one is great for quick reading to young children at age four or five or for children through age eight who prefer to read their own stories with exciting pictures.

Illustrator is Australian Park's daughter, Deborah Niland, who was illustrator of "Stuff and Nonsense."

It is composed of 32 pages and retails for $8.95 in hardback and $4.95 in paperback.

Just as delightful, but for a younger group is "Get Set! Go!" by Shigeo Watanabe and illustrated by Yasuo Ohtomo.

It is the story of Bear and his four friends who set out on an obstacle race. Bear confronts each obstacle with optimism, rebounds after each upset, and keeps going bravely to a finish that will have young readers and liteners cheering him on.

Bear's triumph, however, is not in winning the race but in persevering to the end of a difficult and sometimes embarrassing task. His bumbling bravado and sturdy independence will be recognized by readers of "How Do I Put It On?" and "What A Good Lunch!" by the same author-artist team.

Like the earlier books, "Get Set! Go!" offers insights and encouragement to small children just beginning to do things all by themselves. An "I Can Do It All by Myself Book."

The 32-page fiction is recommended for children ages 2 to 5 (though I would recommend it for kids no older than 4), and is available at $6.95 in hardback.

My personal favorite of the four books reviewed is "Now One Foot, Now the Other" written and illustrated in three colors by Tomie de Paola.

Though recommended for children ages 3 through 7, I would hesitate to give this book to just any child. The difficult subject is treated sensitively and lovingly, but most children probably would not understand it unless they had personally experienced the same thing, or it was explained thoroughly in advance.

The book concerns the story of Bobby and his grandfather Bob. They did so many things together until Bob suffered a stroke, and Bobby was frightened and confused. That is, until he was the one to realize that even though Bob couldn't move or talk, he did know what was happening around him. It was Bobby who began to help Bob with some of the things his grandfather had helped him to learn—how to eat by himself, to talk and even to walk again.

This companion book to the artist-author's "Nana Upstairs and Nana Downstairs" presents a warm and perceptive look at a situation experience by many families.

The fictional book, 48 pages long, is avalable at $7.95 hardback and $3.95 in paperback.

"The Book of the Pig"—I found it entertaining, especially for children who may not have been too close in contact with this thoroughly fascinating creature.

Written by Jack Denton Scott and illustrated with black and white photographs by Ozzie Sweet, the book focuses on the pig, whose name is too often used as a catchall word for dirty, greedy and sloppy.

Though at times it may be a little too technical for young children (it's recommended for all ages), the book shows pigs nosing around in sundappled meadows with their irresistible piglets, being judged at county fairs or strolling down a New England street.

All in all, it effectively dispells the bad image of the pig and shows that they, too, have personality, in addition to being intelligent, clean, sociable and adaptable.

Scott and Sweet also show how useful pigs are, the most popular types bred in the United States, how they are born and raised, and their fascinating history as a species that dates back to prehistoric times.

The 64-page nonfiction sells for $8.95 in hardback.

DEAR ABBY

Moocher gets dose of own medicine

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: A word to IN THE HOLE, who asked how to handle "El Cheapo," a cheapskate moocher in her office. (He never contributed toward the daily snacks of coffee and Danish, but he always ate well.)

Years ago, I worked in the bookkeeping department of a local bank. One woman always kept a box of candy on her desk and the rest of us would chip in to pay for it.

Our "El Cheapo" never put in a penny. Even worse, he would grab a handful of candy, eat it and take another handful — cleaning her out.

In a fit of disgust, we decided to teach him a lesson, so one day we filled the candy box with chocolate Ex-Lax. We never had any trouble with him again. — ETHEL IN MELBOURNE, FLA.

DEAR ETHEL: Touche. One might say he cleaned her out, and vice versa!

DEAR ABBY: I read with interest the letters regarding marriage to a disabled person. They all missed one very important point: All physically handicapped people are not noble, heroic and courageous. Many are, of course, but some are not.

When I married my husband, he walked with a decided limp and had to use a cane because of an industrial accident. He was awarded a disability pension and was on Social Security. His doctor gave him some exercises to improve the use of his leg. (He never did them — too boring.) A vocational rehabilitation service offered a course to retrain him for another job. He flatly refused to consider it.

Instead, he sat home, day in and day out, watching soap operas while I went to work. He did absolutely nothing. He called himself "sick." ("I'm too sick to do this, too sick to do that.") This "sick" man could eat like a horse, and did. He put on weight, making it harder for him to walk.

I finally left him, and I can assure you, it had nothing to do with his leg. Never mind the physical handicap. The important question is, does the person have a character handicap? — FORMER WIFE

DEAR FORMER WIFE: Your point is well taken. There are lazy, selfish, bitter people among the disabled population, just as there are lazy, selfish, bitter people among the able-bodied. One should view a disabled person as a PERSON first. And if he happens to have a disability, he should be regarded as a PERSON with a disability.

Bath good for relaxing, recouping

By IRENE GARDNER KEENEY
Hearst Feature Service

Feeling frazzled from the day's hectic pace? A little tense from too much exercise? Are the kids driving you bananas?

Retreat: Whatever is bugging you will keep. Slip into a warm, relaxing bath. It's not guaranteed to solve all your problems, but it's a great way to relieve tired muscles and simply recoup.

Fill the tub with warm water. It dilates the blood vessels, stimulates circulation and helps tight muscles to release their tension. (If water is a problem in your area, take half a bath to conserve it. The bathing benefits are the same, it won't relieve just half your tensions.)

Add one-half cup or more baking soda to the water. It's a pure, natural bath additive that soothes and softens skin just as well as the more expensive bath oils and powders do. Baking soda in the bath also helps relieve minor skin irritations such as sunburn, windburn, insect bites and stings.

While you are soaking, try a short massage. With your fingers, knead the soles of your feet, your legs and the back of your neck to loosen taut muscles.

After bathing, smooth on your favorite body lotion. Damp skin provides essential moisture that the lotion traps under a protective film, leaving the skin soft and smooth.

Housewares exposition reflects consumer desires

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Population trends, the changing style of homes, and consumer activism were not officially a part of the recently-concluded National Housewares Exposition in Chicago.

But these concepts certainly had a great deal to do with the products that were on sale at the semiannual market for retailers.

As manufacturer after manufacturer talked about the need for long-lasting, high-quality, multi-purpose appliances to fit today's pattern of living, it seemed clear they had gotten the message being sent by American consumers.

Having already saturated the market with multi-purpose and single-purpose small electric appliances, manufacturers brought out no new major types of miracle machines. Instead, they concentrated on offering new models of food processors, electric mixers, juicers, coffeemakers and electric cookers that combine as many functions as possible within the same machine.

For other products, such as electric irons and personal-care items, a greater variety of desirable features seemed designed to make the products so appealing that consumer sales resistance would disappear. Some irons, for example, offered more settings, rust-resistant water reservoirs and reversible cords.

Manufacturers of pots and pans — another major product category at the market — also stressed higher quality in non-stick coatings, heavy-duty construction and professional "restaurant" styling.

Comments from manufacturers reinforced the picture of an industry seeking to give the public what it seems to want. There was a decided marketing point-of-view in comments such as those by Carl Sondtheimer, president of Cuisinarts, Inc.

"The main fact of life that will influence marketing of food-preparation products over the coming few years is the reduction in size of kitchens. This is inevitable because population is growing while available space is not," he said.

"It means that multiple-use food-preparation products will increase in importance. But the day of the single-purpose food appliance has ended. While they will still be available, I expect to see their sales fall off slowly."

Cookware trends are hard to predict, Sondtheimer said. "But the need to make do with smaller storage space will cause people to buy higher quality cookware, but fewer pieces of it, in my opinion."

Ingenious storage systems should do well, he added, because of space limitations.

"In cookstoves, convection ovens should replace all other types of ovens in built-in stoves because the food either cooks faster or at a lower temperature than in standard, radiant-heat ovens." Microwave ovens, in Sondtheimer's opinion, will be popular "especially in homes where defrosting food is a major activity and where there is no interest in gourmet cooking."

Sondtheimer's view was backed up by other manufacturers. Harry Hill, general manager of Proctor-Silex, noted that small kitchens and lack of counter space have made multi-function products more important than they used to be.

Five years ago, his company introduced a countertop electric appliance that broils, toasts, bakes and is a slow cooker. "And we find that sales are getting stronger each year," he said. This despite the fact that it is a generally-held opinion in the electric housewares industry that products which do more than one or two things are hard to sell.

Quality is another feature some manufacturers have finally become convinced is a desired product attribute.

Tom McNeil, marketing vice president of Proctor-Silex, explained: "There has always been a small segment of the market that would spend more for better products. But today this is a larger segment. Inflation is a factor. There is less of a throwaway mentality than there used to be."

At least one product designer was pleased with what he saw at the housewares show. Larry Peabody, whose clocks and wall-storage product designs were on view, noted that "all of the things we urged on people 20 years ago have come to pass. Many of today's young people seek natural products that are well-designed.

"You can't sell these people fake products. If it is plastic, they want it to look like plastic. And if the product is pine, that's what they want to see. They don't want their pine to have a fake maple coating."

Teachers say profession difficult

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Why is there such a high attrition rate among teachers? The demands of the profession are great and the rewards are few, says an education specialist at Syracuse University.

Gerald M. Mager, assistant professor of education, helped document the experiences of 12 beginning teachers in "Biting the Apple: Accounts of First Year Teachers," which he wrote with colleagues while he was a doctoral student at Ohio State University.

Mager says teaching is a difficult profession. Teachers face a multitude of problems, they are often plagued by personal doubts and they receive limited financial rewards.

"Financial rewards aside," he says, "other kinds of rewards are very limited. There aren't many people around patting people on the back and saying 'You did a nice job of that' or 'We really like the way this turned out and you should be given the credit for it.'

"Teaching has been described as an isolated profession, one in which you have to find your own successes. You're not going to have people come up and tell you exactly how good they think things went for you in a particular class, or in a given academic year."

Mager says teachers who are not able to derive satisfaction on their own from indirect comments and actions are not likely to be happy in the profession.

Computers being used in industry

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP) — The modern cattleman has added a computer to his horses, ropes and branding irons as basic tools in raising cattle.

The American Angus Association of St. Joseph, Mo., for example, uses Honeywell computers to maintain records on some 10 million cattle for its 35,000 Angus rancher members.

Ranchers who register their purebred black cattle with the association are issued pedigree certificates along with ancestral information dating back to the Angus breed's original Scottish ancestors.

Computer printouts not only help the breeder determine which calves are likely to be the most productive, and which sires and dams tend to produce the best calves, but also help the rancher decide which animals to keep for breeding and which to cull.

Act IX, support group to the Midland Community Theatre (MCT), presented a check for $20,000 to the MCT board of governors at its monthly meeting held recently. The money was raised through the Act IX Charity Antiques Show held in May at Chaparral Center. Bill Morrow, president of the MCT board of governors, and Susan Wilson, past chairman of the Antiques Show, admire a 250-year-old royal imperial child's ceremonial robe from China. The robe was one of the items sold at the show. Plans are currently underway for next year's show, scheduled for April 30 through May 2 at Chaparral Center.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Marble-cleaning cues

DEAR HELOISE:

I have a favorite piece of furniture which has been in my family some 60 years and was old when my parents acquired it. Now it is in my home.

The problem is that people who come to visit are often careless about cigarettes and beverage glasses. As a result, the marble top is stained.

Is there a way to remove these discolorations, and is there any way, after the stains are removed, to put a protective coating on it so this won't happen again? — A.W.M.

Dear heart, if the surface of the marble is merely etched, a good rubdown with a marble polishing powder, such as tin oxide, should take care of the problem. (This powder is available in marble shops).

Follow directions on the container or wet the surface with clear water, sprinkle a little of the powder onto the table and, using a damp cloth, rub it into the surface. Continue rubbing until the etch marks disappear and the surface shines.

Deep-seated stains call for the use of a poultice which can be made from white blotting paper, such as white paper towels, napkins or tissues. According to the Marble Institute of America, the poultice should be soaked in one of the following solutions, depending on the type of stain:

"Organic Stains are those caused by wine, tea or coffee, fruit, tobacco, or colors leached from textiles or paper. Soak the poultice in hydrogen peroxide (20 volume) or full strength household ammonia.

"Oil Stains are caused by butter, milk, cream, salad oils, hand lotions, etc. Soak these in a poultice of amyl acetate or acetone.

"Rust Stains can be caused by flowerpots or cans — any metal which rusts. Soak the poultice in a commercial iron rust remover to remove them. As the marble's sheen is usually dulled or even etched by this treatment, you will need to use the marble polishing powder afterwards."

It may be necessary to use the polishing powder after removing any stain. Marks may remain which can only be removed with it.

Should your table not respond to the recommended remedy, all is not lost. Have it professionally refinished by a reputable dealer in your area and it no longer will be a dingy shadow of its former splendor.

As to the prevention of future stains, use a marble sealer, also available at marble shops, to help protect against accidents.

For day-to-day cleaning and maintenance, wipe up spills quickly, then go over the surface with warm water to which you have added a drop or two of mild detergent.

I hope these tidbits of information have helped solve your problem. You might want to cut this article out of your newspaper and have it handy for future reference should some thoughtless person set a glass down on the unprotected table, or should it develop another type of stain.

If your household is like most, someday one of these mishaps is bound to happen! — Hugs, Heloise

LETTER OF WARNING

Dear Heloise: When softening hardened brown sugar which comes packed in a heavy plastic bag, remember to remove the brown sugar from the bag before placing it in a conventional oven.

The plastic can become extremely hot, resulting in a possible burn when you try to remove it and you also run the risk of its melting and ruining a pan or perhaps even your oven. — Lenore Lada

AT WIT'S END

Woman's substitute for an albatross

By ERMA BOMBECK

I could have predicted that men wouldn't stick with "handbags" in their wardrobe.

Oh sure, it looked wonderful, didn't it? Having a bag that held all those little notions close to you at all times, like a clean handkerchief, breath spray, car keys, money and comb.

I knew they'd get sick of it.

I only knew of one woman who was born with a handbag: Queen Elizabeth. The birth was tricky because the purse would not turn and the handbag was born breach. The rest of us, however, received one when we were little girls. They usually had a chain on them and a picture of Donald Duck or Snow White's castle.

They always had a shiny new penny in them. For some of us that's as good as it ever got. Whenever we put it down our mother would say, "Where's your purse?" That was to be the beginning of purse paranoia.

A woman learns early that a handbag is as much a part of her anatomy as any of the four major appendages. She carries it to the beach, the ski slopes, to church, to school, to her wedding and to picnics. It's the first words she utters to her children: "Get my purse." It's the last thing a policeman places on your chest at the scene of the accident. It's the only meaningful conversation she ever has with her husband: "Watch my purse."

Some women (who are into self-punishment and weekend flogging) also dedicate their lives to having a purse match something. Heaven forbid they should be caught with the red lizard shoes and the navy wet leather handbag at the same time.

I refuse to play that game. It's bad enough that since I have been able to balance myself, I have had to carry a purse around that has held everything from used nose tissue to a dead hamster awaiting a hero's burial . . . from plastic silverware to rubber bands . . . from road maps to laxatives . . . from footlets to batteries.

If you want to know the truth, I'd rather carry a sow's ear . . . than a silk purse!

Doctor says nasal contraceptive possible

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A researcher says an artificial hormone tested on animals and human volunteers could lead to a safe male contraceptive taken as a nasal spray or nose drops.

The artificial hormone's effects are believed to be reversible, said Dr. David Rabin, a professor of medicine and obstetrics and gynecology at Vanderbilt University.

"Let me say we are encouraged but it's still in the early days," Rabin said Thursday. "The animal studies indicate the process is reversible and on that basis we're using it in men. There have been no harmful side effects and that is the basis for continuing the research."

He said the key is an imitator of luteinizing hormone releasing hormone, or LHRH, the hormone that triggers the pituitary gland to signal the testes to produce sperm.

He said the testes are no longer signaled to produce sperm if the pituitary is exposed to an analog of LHRH that is 200 times stronger than LHRH.

"LHRH is a wonderful fertility agent but animal nature is wily," Rabin said. "With so much of the LHRH analog, the pituitary gland stops telling the testes to produce sperm."

He said the male volunteers were injected with the analog during a 30-week period. They continued to be tested for an additional 10 weeks after the injections were stopped to see if they regained their fertility.

Rabin declined comment on the results but Vanderbilt University officials said the sperm returned to normal when the injections were halted in humans and animals. The university later declined to say whether fertility returned in males, citing Rabin's decision not to discuss details of the test conclusions. The doctor would say only that the conclusions were "promising" and that he wanted other doctors to review his research data.

Rabin said the use of the LHRH analog as a nasal contraceptive may be five years away.

"In five to 10 years a series of new analogs will be easier to administer and we'll have better selectivity over their action," he said. "We have a promising and novel way of attacking the problem of male contraception where we've not seen others having success."

In 1978, Swedish medical researcher Dr. Sven Johan Nilius said he and a team of scientists at Uppsala University in Sweden were studying a daily nasal-spray contraceptive technique.

Nilius said at the time that the nose-spray method used an artificial hormone that affects only the ovaries and testes. He said his team had produced "promising results" in experiments on women, but said the possibility of using the spray to halt sperm production in men "is only theory so far."

It was unclear whether the two researchers were focusing on the same chemical agent, or how far Nilius' work had progressed in three years.

The doctor said the LHRH analog has the "potential" to affect male sex drive because the pituitary gland controls that function.

Reports of royal home in New York denied

NEW YORK (AP) — The British Information Service says there is no truth to published reports that Prince Charles and Princess Diana plan to buy fashionable digs on Fifth Avenue.

The New York Post ran a story quoting sources as saying the prince would buy a $5 million, 21-room condominium here, but spokesman David Wiggs of the service said Monday, "There is no truth at all in this story."

Prince Charles and Princess Diana

The Post said its sources told them that Charles discussed the deal with real estate developer Donald Trump when the prince was here for a visit in June. Trump was not available for comment, and a secretary in his office, who refused to identify herself, said Trump left instructions that "he does not plan to comment on it at all."

The story said the royal family would use the condo during visits. A similar story about the royal family's plans to buy a New York apartment appeared in New York magazine.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — There are no limits to what this town can do to return a favor.

Johnny Cash's new tune, "Chattanooga City Limits," touched a tender chord here. So Paul Clark, the public works commissioner, is meeting Cash today in Nashville to give him a city limits sign and a sketch of the singer published recently in The Chattanooga Times.

Clark said the metal sign is inscribed on the back: "Thanks, Johnny. We love you. The city of Chattanooga, 1981."

The song is included on Cash's latest album, "The Baron."

LONDON (AP) — The Swedish rock group ABBA has decided to stay together for no more than two years, the magazine Woman reported today.

The magazine said the group, popular around the world, will make no more major tours and will split up because there no longer are any financial reasons for them to keep their act together.

The two couples who make up ABBA — Bjorn Ulvaeus and Agnetha Falskog-Ulvaeus and Benny Andersson and Anni-Frid Lyngstad — are divorced. Woman quoted Ulvaeus as saying, "I expect we'll be together for two more years, but that will be the tops.

"The end is in sight. I can't imagine our touring again, certainly not a city-by-city tour in Australia, Europe, Asia or America."

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Yippie Jerry Rubin has resigned as director of business development at the Wall Street brokerage house John Muir & Co. to start his own money-management firm because, he says, "I'm into total money management, not only stock brokerage."

Several GED testing dates scheduled throughout August

ODESSA — The General Education Development (GED) exam will be given several times during August by the testing center at Odessa College.

The GED is recognized as the legal equivalent to a high school diploma.

The entire test will be given from 8 a.m. to approximately 4:15 p.m. Wednesday and on Aug. 18, 22 and 26. Portions of the test will be given from 12:45 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Aug. 11 and 12, according to Dr. Phil Booth, OC's director of testing.

Persons can complete the GED during the all-day testing session; specific parts of the test or retakes can be taken on either the half-day or full-day testing date.

Results of the exam are available at the end of the testing session.

The GED test covers the areas of writing skills, reading skills, mathematics, social studies and science.

Those persons taking the GED test must present a Texas Driver's license or a Department of Public Safety identification card prior to taking the exam, Booth says.

Persons who are 17 years old must present a letter verifying their date of withdrawl from high school. Both 17- and 18-year-olds are required to sign a form stating that they are not currently enrolled in high school.

Fee for the GED is $10 for the complete test or $2 per test for any part to be retaken. The exam will be given in Room 118, East Wing, of the Fine Arts Building. To pre-register for the test, persons should contact Booth at OC.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Stroke victim best helped by letting him help himself

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father will soon be discharged from the hospital where he was taken after suffering a stroke. He is 72 years old. He has made remarkable progress, and naturally I want to help him continue his recovery.

Would you have any suggestions about what I might do for him once he comes home? I'd like to make things as easy as possible for him, and I would appreciate any suggestions you might offer. — Mrs. A.F.

Dear Mrs. F.: It sounds paradoxical, but sometimes it is better not to do too much for stroke victims. Obviously, specific recommendations for your father's care will have to come from his doctor, who is familiar with his condition; but if, as you say, he has made remarkable progress, you should try to build on it. Specifically, bear in mind that an overprotective attitude may not only not be helpful, but may actually retard his overall recovery.

In one study conducted at the University Department of Community Medicine in Edinburgh, Scotland, almost one-fifth of 67 stroke patients who had been considered independent at the time they left the hospital, were reclassified as dependent after one year. An important factor in the patients' deterioration, the researchers believed, was the tendency of the families to be too protective. The rule of thumb, in general, is to permit the patient to do for himself as much as he can.

The desire to help a parent or other family member who has been ill is completely understandable. But just as children must be permitted to strike out on their own — even at some risk — so, too, must patients be permitted and encouraged to do as much for themselves as possible. Otherwise, whatever functional recovery they may have achieved in the hospital may gradually be lost.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If being overweight can affect one's health, and if giving up cigarettes means that a person will gain weight, what's the point in giving up cigarettes? It seems to me that you're only substituting one risk to health for another. — Greg

Dear Greg: I disagree with your assumption that giving up cigarettes necessarily means that a person will gain weight. While this undoubtedly does happen with some people, it does not have to.

A well-motivated person can stop smoking and even lose weight by following a diet that provides increased chemical alkalinity. Such a diet enables the nicotine to leave the smoker's body gradually, thus reducing the craving for the drug. At the same time, it permits the person to cut down on calories. I have used such a diet with a number of my patients with a substantial amount of success.

If you would like additional information about the diet and the role of exercise and behavior modification techniques in giving up cigarettes, you might want to check my new book, "Stop Smoking — Lose Weight," published by G.P. Putnam's Sons.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've just learned that an uncle of mine has lung cancer and will be undergoing radiation therapy. Is this just a formality because the doctors don't know what else to do, or can radiation really accomplish some good in these cases? — Michael

Dear Michael: Radiation treatment for lung cancer patients is more than a formality, although I would not minimize the seriousness of the disease. A study by the Medical College of Wisconsin showed that of 54 patients treated by radiation, 22 percent survived five years; however, none of 28 patients who were not treated lived more than 22 months.

In addition, eight of those who were treated were alive and well from 53 to 100 months after treatment.

Dear Dr. Solomon: One of the people with whom I work was in and out of the hospital the same day for some minor surgery. Twenty years ago, I think he would have been hospitalized for at least a week. Is this in-and-out surgery experimental, or does it represent a general trend in other cities as well? — Lennie

Dear Lennie: Ambulatory or same-day surgery is rather widespread. According to the American Hospital Association (AHA), it accounts for about 18 percent of all surgical procedures carried out in urban hospitals with more than 100 beds. The AHA also reported that ambulatory surgery is being performed in 70 percent of the nonfederal hospitals in the 134 largest metropolitan areas.

President Sadat arriving for five-day visit to U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and President Reagan will use their first meeting to explore ways to reopen negotiations with Israel on Palestinian autonomy in Israeli-occupied territories, senior U.S. officials say.

Sadat was scheduled to arrive in Washington this evening for a five-day U.S. visit that also will include a trip to Plains, Ga., for a private meeting Saturday with former President Carter.

Reagan will meet with Sadat at least three times: after an official welcoming ceremony at the White House on Wednesday, at a state banquet in Sadat's honor Wednesday evening, and again on Thursday.

A major purpose of Sadat's visit will be to discuss ways of reopening talks between Israel and Egypt on achieving autonomy for the 1.2 million Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip, said the U.S. officials, who asked not to be identified.

Sadat has expressed hope that his visit would help Reagan formulate a more coherent Mideast policy, particularly regarding Israel's military actions in Lebanon and the stalled Palestinian autonomy talks.

But on the eve of Sadat's visit, the Reagan administration refused to take a stand on whether Israeli settlements on the West Bank are illegal and an obstacle to peace in the Middle East.

U.S. officials said Monday that the question of Israeli settlements is being reviewed.

"The settlements have been viewed as a potential problem in the past and may yet be so viewed," an official said. "We have, of course, consistently said that the settlements are not necessarily helpful to the peace process."

The issue of Palestinian autonomy also will be raised with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin when he visits Washington in early September. An actual resumption of the talks likely won't take place until after the Begin visit.

But former President Carter's last special Mideast peace negotiator, Sol M. Linowitz, said the best thing the Reagan administration can do to further the peace effort is simply to start talking again.

"We've got to go back to the negotiating table," Linowitz said in an interview Monday with The Associated Press. "There has been too long a delay. We've lost some momentum."

Linowitz said Sadat will want confirmation that "the effort be a genuine one and that there be mutual commitment on both sides."

The Palestinian autonomy negotiations are provided for in the Camp David accords worked out between Sadat and Begin with Carter's help. The talks were allowed to lapse last year because of the change in U.S. administrations and also because of the June 30 election in Israel.

"The situation in Lebanon makes clearer than ever that the Palestinian issue will not go away and cannot be placed on the back burner," Linowitz said.

He said he is optimistic that an agreement can be reached because differences were narrowed significantly during the final 18 months of the last negotiations.

The toughest remaining issue, he said, is whether to include Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem in a referendum for a self-governing authority for Palestinians. That would imply some division of the city, which Israel opposes, he said.

Linowitz said a second major difficulty is what to do about the Israeli settlements in former Arab lands.

A senior U.S. official said in a briefing for reporters Monday that one purpose of the Sadat visit is to establish "a close working relationship between Reagan and Sadat."

The U.S. official said Reagan and Sadat would discuss the strategic situation in the Middle East "especially with respect to the threat posed by the Soviet Union and its surrogates, such as Libya and Cuba."

Boy wants out of cubicle

By SUSAN STOLER
Associated Press Writer

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — School bells and the swelter of a waning Texas summer greet children here soon, but Raul Espino Jr. hopes that will not mean another semester of peering at his classmates from inside a plexiglass box that protects him from the heat.

The 7-year-old's parents asked a federal judge on Monday to order their son's entire classroom air conditioned to free him from the transparent cubicle. An auto accident when he was an infant left the boy a paraplegic and his body unable to control its temperature.

None of the Brownsville Intermediate District's 28 primary or junior high schools, which open Aug. 25, have air conditioning, and the district's solution to Raul's problem was the box.

U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela said he would decide by Aug. 15 whether to grant the request from Ana and Raul Espino.

"Other alternatives have not been considered," Vela said. "We may be able to find a solution with the present setting."

The accident damaged the hypothalmus gland in Raul's brain that controls the body's temperature and some movement. He is confined to a wheelchair and must stay in an environment between 72 and 78 degrees.

Doctors say the injury did not affect his intelligence, and teachers call him an above-average student.

When he transferred last year from a school for the handicapped to Egly Elementary School, the box with a portable air conditioning unit was built for him to use when temperatures climbed above 78 degrees. A two-way sound system was installed so he could converse with his teacher and classmates.

Mrs. Espino testified Monday that she was overjoyed to hear her son would be with normal children last school year, but then she became dismayed to learn that he would be confined to the cubicle.

After failing to persuade the Texas Education Agency and the State Board of Education to order classroom air conditioning, the Espinos took their case to federal court, arguing that the district is violating a law that requires handicapped children be educated in the "least restrictive environment."

Local Superintendent Raul Besteio testified that he decided build the box instead of air conditioning the room for fear of jealousy among other parents and teachers. Besteio said he turned down a woman from Pennsylvania who offered to pay for air conditioning because that would have been "discrimination."

The district, with a relatively low tax base in the Rio Grande Valley, cannot afford to air condition the classroom, he said.

No estimates of thcost of air conditioning were available, but based on costs at the three high schools in the 28,000-student district, it could come to $5,700 a room.

Ron Schraer, director of special education for the school, said the National Aeronautics and Space Administration heard of the case and suggested fitting Raul with an air-condition3d vest that would allow him to sit the classroom. But "it hasn't been developed to the point that it's available for a person of his age," Schraer said.

Raul spends about half the school year in the box, emerging in the cooler days of winter and early spring, said Inez Vega, who taught his first-grade class last year. Even in the summer, he's able to spend 10 to 15 minutes away from air conditioning without harm — about enough time to visit a restroom or get to and from the air conditioned van his mother uses to take him between home and school.

"He's not able to participate in certain activities in the classroom," she said, adding that the sound system malfunctioned occasionally and that the air conditioner was noisy.

A psychologist, Emmett Hutto, who examined Raul and once sat with him in the box, testified that the youngster suffers no emotional or psychological problems because of the box, but the enclosure nevertheless was "inappropriate for learning."

"It's almost like he is on display in the room."

Slum proposals clear Senate

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Three proposals that would offer property owners tax breaks to put residential and business slums in better shape cleared the Senate on Monday.

"This is a reasonable and worthwhile program," said Sen. Ray Farabee. "There are no grants or giveaways in this. It is an organized approach to (improving) blighted areas.

"Even the most fortunate of states have inner city problems," he said.

Farabee's legislative package includes a proposed constitutional amendment, which would be placed on a Nov. 3 statewide ballot, and two bills carrying out the intent of the amendment.

One of the bills would authorize cities to contract with industrial and residential property owners to improve their property in exchange for property tax reductions over five years. It is thought that such a plan would make cities eligible for federal tax relief in blighted areas.

Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, said the idea had been advocated by President Reagan as an alternative to government aid.

The other bill would allow cities to issue tax-free bonds for public works — such as lighting, sidewalks and parking — in deteriorating commercial slums. Future tax increases would be used to pay off the bonds.

Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, questioned whether the proposals could be considered under restrictions placed on the special legislative session by Gov. Bill Clements.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby ruled that they qualified for consideration under the evision of the Property Tax Code.

Farabee said more than 20 states, including Louisiana recently, had adopted such tax break programs. He also said the Texas Municipal League and National Urban League had endorsed the concept.

The proposed constitutional amendment was approved, 26-1, with Leedom voting no. Both bills were sent to the House on voice vote.

Leedom told Farabee he would "like to hear some success stories," and Farabee responded, "I do not have a detailed report on success stories," but "I will try to get some information."

Cubs, Dodgers have keen taste for TL scalps

The Midland Cubs and San Antonio Dodgers have literally put a torch to the Texas League the past few weeks, but the big question is which of those teams will end up burning after a five-game series between the two teams at Cubs Stadium? The answers will start coming tonight at 7:30 when they square off in the first game of the series.

The two teams have been leaving no scalps in their march through the second half Texas League race and both are hotter than the proverbial smoking pistol. The Cubs enter the series with a slim one-game lead over the Dodgers, winning 26 of the 38 games they have played in the second half. The Dodgers have 12 losses, the same as the Cubs, but have played two fewer games.

Midland has won 15 of its last 20 games while San Antonio has recorded 16 wins in that same span.

Just to show how hard it is to gain ground in this tight-fisted race, the Cubs just completed a long 10-game road trip to Jackson and Arkansas, winning seven times. However, they lost a game to the Dodgers, who won eight of 10 from Shreveport and Tulsa while at home.

On the last homestand, Midland won eight of 10 from Jackson and Arkansas and hit the road with a 2-game lead over San Antonio. The Cubs enter the series with the Dodgers with a four-game winning streak.

The Dodgers insured themselves of a playoff berth by winning the Western Division's first half title. The Cubs must win the second half to get into the playoffs and this series may go a long way in deciding that fate. However, the Cubs still must face the Dodgers in San Antonio later in August.

Pitching has been the big key for the Cubs in their second half drive, but no one has been better than Craig Lefferts, who has won his last four outings — two by shutouts. Mike King is scheduled to be on the hill tonight for the Cubs. He was a 6-1 loser to Arkansas in his last start and that was his first loss of the year in five decisions.

Jack Upton continues to lead the Cubs' hitting parade with a .337 average, despite hitting at a .261 clip on the road trip. Mel Hall got 12 hits on the road trip to keep his average at .318, but Fritz Connally got only four hits in 35 trips to the plate to fall below the .300 mark for the first time, hitting now at .298.

Carmello Martinez continues to be the hottest Cub, however. His 15 hits on the road trip led everyone with a .417 mark. His season average climbed 18 points to .285. Joe Carter, hitting at .281, had 10 hits on the road and Dave Pagel got nine safties to raise his average to .281.

The Cubs will be at home through Aug. 13. The Amarillo Gold Sox come to town Sunday for a five-game set with the Cubs. Amarillo is 19-19 in the second half, seven games behind the Cubs as of now. The Sunday game with Amarillo will start at 6 p.m. while all the other games of the homestand will have 7:30 p.m. starts.

Friday and Saturday night games with San Antonio have been designated at two-bit beer nights. In addition, Saturday's game will feature a sky diving exhibition by some Crane jumpers at 7:15 p.m. The sky divers will deliver the game ball by "air mail".

The famed San Diego Chicken will make his second appearance of the season at Cubs Stadium on Wednesday, Aug. 12, during a game with Amarillo. Fans are urged to get tickets early for that contest.

Air strike hits baseball with more problems

CHICAGO (AP) — With the heart of the baseball season ripped by the 50-day strike, major league club owners have been forced to wait until Thursday before wrestling with the question of how to complete the campaign.

The owners had scheduled their meetings for today, but delayed them because of the air traffic controllers strike. If air travel is still restricted Thursday, they will discuss ratification of the strike agreement and plans for the remainder of the season by a telephone conference call.

The season is scheduled to resume Monday after the All-Star Game is played in Cleveland Sunday night. There is strong support for the split season concept. Or, the owners could decide to resume play as scheduled, ignoring the games missed because of the strike.

IF A split season, common in the minor leagues, is adopted, it would mean the New York Yankees, Oakland A's, Los Angeles Dodgers and Philadelphia Phillies have clinched playoff berths by being declared winners of the first half — the season before the strike.

Teams emerging winners in the second half would engage in a mini-playoff series with the first-half winners after the regular season ends Oct.3 to determine divisional champions. If a team wins both halves, it apparently would receive a bye to the pennant playoffs.

All of which would extend the season and push back the World Series for anywhere up to a week.

There also is the possibility that one league might vote to play out the season in regular fashion and the other might opt for the split season. If that happens, Commissioner Bowie Kuhn would have to step in to decide the matter.

"It may divide the leagues," said George Steinbrenner, owner of the New York Yankees. "The public's not in the mood for gimmicks, so if we don't handle this carefully, it could backfire on us."

Haywood Sullivan, owner of the Boston Red Sox, not only favors the split season but indicated that if the fans flocked to the ball parks because of newly generated interest, baseball would have to consider adopting the split season permanently.

ALSO ON the agenda of the meetings will be owner ratification of the settlement reached last week by negotiators for the players and the owners. That is expected to be a mere formality.

The executive board of the Major League's Players Association met last Saturday and unanimously approved the settlement. The player representatives of each club were to take a vote of individual players on each club this week.

National League owners also are expected to approve sale of the Chicago Cubs by William Wrigley Jr. for $20.5 million to Tribune Co., which was announced June 15.

Andrew McKenna, incoming chairman of the Cubs, said no decisions involving the Cubs will be made until the sale has been approved by both the National League and the team's stockholders, who will vote late in August.

Star starters dominated by four Yankees

NEW YORK (AP) — Four New York Yankees — outfielders Dave Winfield and Reggie Jackson, second baseman Willie Randolph and shortstop Bucky Dent — head the American League All Star team announced today.

They will be joined in the AL starting lineup for Sunday night's game at Cleveland Stadium by first baseman Rod Carew of California, Kansas City third baseman George Brett, catcher Carlton Fisk of the Chicago White Sox and Baltimore outfielder Ken Singleton.

Earlier Monday, Commissioner Bowie Kuhn announced the starting lineup for the National League stars. It is headed by Philadelphia's Pete Rose, named at first base for a record fifth starting position.

Joining Rose in the NL infield are second baseman Davey Lopes of Los Angeles, Cincinnati shortstop Dave Concepcion and third baseman Mike Schmidt of Philadelphia.

In the outfield, the NL will have three sluggers — Cincinnati's George Foster, Dave Parker of Pittsburgh and Montreal's Andre Dawson. Gary Carter of Montreal was named the starting catcher.

Pitchers for both squads will be named Thursday and the reserves on the 30-man teams will be announced Friday.

THE 52ND annual All-Star game, originally scheduled for July 14, will mark the return of major league baseball following a 50-day strike that ended last Friday morning.

The major league owners, who had been scheduled to meet today in Chicago to ratify the strike settlement and discuss plans for the remainder of the season, were forced to postpone the meeting because of the air traffic controllers walkout. The owners will meet Thursday instead or, if necessary, talk via conference call.

Major league teams continued working out, preparing for the resumption of the regular season next Monday. At Cooperstown, N.Y., the Oneonta Yankees defeated the Elmira Red Sox in a New York-Penn League game played as a replacement for the scheduled Hall of Fame contest between the Oakland A's and Cincinnati Reds.

The All Star teams were selected on the basis of just over 3 million votes, compared with the usual 12 million ballots cast. Computer card balloting for the All Star teams, sponsored by Gillette, began in major league parks before the start of the strike June 12. During the period of the walkout, voting continued in minor league parks and at retail outlets.

Brett was the leading vote-getter among the American Leaguers garnering 1,144,272 votes, almost 800,000 more than third base runner-up Graig Nettles of the Yankees, who had 302,398.

Second base presented the closest race with Randolph edging Frank White of Kansas City by just over 66,000 votes, 488,128-421,829. Oakland's Tony Armas was the fourth outfielder in the balloting, finishing 50,000 votes behind Winfield. Jackson led the way among the outfielders with 631,522. Singleton was second with 541,100 and Winfield and Armas collected 505,580 and 465,789, respectively.

In the other races, Fisk outdistanced Ted Simmons of Milwaukee,, 849,006-442,339 at catcher; Carew outpolled Willie Aikens of Kansas City at first base, 784,354-375,169; and at shortstop, Dent bested U.L. Washington of the Royals, 564,735-404,391.

Schmidt was the only National League player to top the million-vote mark, attracting 1,037,307 of the 3,243,674 which were cast. He was an easy winner over Ron Cey of Los Angeles, second with 363,347.

NFL exhibitions could change

By The Associated Press

It is highly unlikely, but it is conceivable that, come later this week, the games you're expecting in the National Football League's preseason might not be the games you see.

Unlike the regular season, exhibition games are contracted individually by the NFL's 28 teams. So adjustments in the schedule can be made under unusual circumstances — and the air traffic controllers' strike which has disrupted nationwide travel certainly qualifies.

"It could come down to this — that if we couldn't get off the ground, we might try to find another nearby team with the same problem and work something out," said an executive of one East Coast team, faced with the prospect of losing his previously booked charter flight for better than 100 people — players, coaches and other club personnel.

CHARTERS HAVE generally been the first to be canceled in the current strike, followed by the regularly scheduled flights of smaller carriers. But Mike Kensil, traveling secretary of the New York Jets, says Eastern Air Lines had confirmed Monday, "Our flight will go. It's on the books."

The Jets are to play in Denver Friday night, the same night the Kansas City Chiefs are to play the Redskins in Washington. On Wednesday night, San Francisco is to play in Seattle, and on Thursday night, Philadelphia is to visit Houston.

"It's too far to bus it," the Jets' Kensil said. "We can't jump on a train. I guess we'll just have to deal with it when and if we come to it ... We've never been faced with this problem before.

"From what I hear, though, I would assume the strike would be settled before then. These guys (the air traffic controllers) are playing with the big boys now," Kensil said, referring to the federal government. "I can't imagine them staying out much longer."

Busing it is one of the options the Chiefs have in mind, albeit a remote one.

"WE HAVE a charter scheduled to leave Kansas City at 10 p.m., local time, Thursday night," said General Manager Jim Schaaf. "Because of that time and because of the late takeoff time from Washington after the game (roughly midnight Friday), TWA is encouraged that we'll have no problems. We're also endeavoring to make reservations on regularly scheduled flights Thursday afternoon.

Richard may face Rangers Friday

HOUSTON (AP) — Just over a year ago, fireballing Houston Astros pitcher J.R. Richard lay near death in a hospital bed, the victim of a stroke.

Monday night, the 6-foot-8 righthander threw about 100 batting practice pitches to teammates in a 15-minute display of his rehabilitated arm and reflexes that delighted his doctor and Astros General Manager Al Rosen.

Team officials now say there's a chance Richard, who is still on the disabled list, will pitch, possibly only an inning or two, in Friday night's exhibition game against the Texas Rangers at the Astrodome.

Not bad for a man whose physicians thought he might be paralyzed forever — if he survived.

"When you got God, ain't nothing impossible," Richard said after the practice, held before an audience of about 1,000.

The 6-foot-8 fastballer collapsed on the field July 31, 1980, during a practice session. He had complained of a tired arm for several days.

Doctors operated twice to remove blockage in a blood vessel in the right side of Richard's neck.

"I thought he threw very well," Rosen said after Monday's practice. "Some pitches were way off, but that's just due to a lack of concentration. That happens during batting practice."

"I think he did fine," said Dr. William Fields, a neurologist who has been treating Richard.

Fields said he was especially pleased by what he saw on one ball that called on Richard's agility.

"That first ball hit went right at him, and he was out of the way right now," Fields said.

But the man behind the plate was more conservative in his assessment of Richard's performance. Batting practice catcher Strech Suba said Richard still tires easily.

"He gets to the point where he starts losing a little and it (the ball) starts to go all over," Suba said.

"But he's getting a greater number of consecutive pitches around the strike zone," he said.

Richard said he would not be overcautious because of his lessened control.

"If I hit somebody, I don't consider that I hit them," he said. "I feel that they just didn't get out of the way."

Networks to share playoffs

NEW YORK (AP) — If major league baseball's club owners vote to adopt the split-season format, ABC and NBC are expected to share coverage of the resulting extra tier of intra-divisional playoffs.

Tom Villante, baseball's broadcasting director, suggested in a letter to executives of the networks which share baseball's television package that ABC handle the American League and NBC the National League.

Although any announcement would be premature, since the club owners won't vote on the split-season idea until Thursday, officials of both networks reacted positively to the proposal.

"We haven't ironed out the details but it's safe to say that we plan to be involved in some fashion," Jim Spence, senior vice president of ABC Sports, said Monday. And Geoff Mason, executive vice president of NBC Sports, said his network was "hopeful of being involved in the playoff coverage in an equitable way."

Under this proposal, the extra round of playoffs would be best-of-five series beginning Oct. 6 and extending as late as Oct. 11. That would push the start of the leagues' championship series, to be televised by NBC, back one week to Oct. 13. The starting date of the World Series, to be shown on ABC, would be Oct. 20.

Orantes starts net comeback

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A year ago, his left elbow bandaged following surgery, Manuel Orantes impatiently watched from the stands. This year, the 32-year-old Spaniard is ready to go after his fourth U.S. Clay Court tennis championship.

"It feels good to be on the court again," Orantes said after a first-round victory Monday over Czechoslovakia's Stanislov Birner, 6-4, 6-2. "Last year was quite terrible. It took a long time to build up my strength and confidence. It's coming along now."

Orantes, who won the Clay Court singles title in 1973, 1975 and 1977 — alternating years with Jimmy Connors — underwent surgery a week before the 1980 tournament. Since then, he's reached the semifinals of three tourneys, but he's still looking for his first championship.

"I couldn't play the way I wanted to," he said of the past frustrating year. "Nothing seemed to work. It wasn't fun to play."

Monday's victory put the unseeded Orantes into the second round against the winner of today's first-round match between Czechoslovakia's Pavel Slozil and fifth-seeded Mel Purcell, the runnerup to Jose-Luis Clerc last year.

"He's a very promising player and very talented," Orantes said of the 22-year-old Purcell, "but he'll still have a tough match against Slozil. These kinds of matches are good for me. If I lose, it's not too bad, and if I win, I beat another good player."

Orantes, never in serious trouble against Birner, said his chief problem now is consistency. "I play well two days and then play bad. I never know the way I'll play, but I think I'm slowly coming along. That's what it takes, to practice and be patient."

He said Monday's victory was "very important. I've been very short of tournament play, and this is one of the biggest tournaments on clay. It has a lot of prestige and for me it's important because I've won three times."

Among the other first-round winners on Monday was 14-year-old Kathy Rinaldi, the wunderkid of women's tennis who made her professional debut with an easy 6-1, 6-3 victory over Cissie Donigan.

Rinaldi, a ninth-grader from Jensen Beach, Fla., who earlier this summer became the youngest player ever to win a match at Wimbledon, was seeded 14th in the 56-woman field. First prize for the women is $27,500; the 64 men are playing for a top prize of $32,000.

"I'm very excited," Rinaldi said, "but I always have butterflies."

After a quick first set and a 2-0 lead in the second set, Rinaldi faltered a bit against Donigan, a fellow Floridian from Gainesville. Donigan rallied to a 2-2 tie and traded service breaks with Rinaldi for the next three games. Rinaldi held serve for a 5-3 lead, then broke Donigan again to win the match.

"I started rushing and making unforced errors I shouldn't have," Rinaldi said of her mid-set slump. She said the gusty weather had no effect on her play. "Where I play at home, it's pretty windy, so I'm gettng used t that.

"Right now, my goal is just to improve my game and do as well as I can. My ground strokes are my strongest part, fut I've been working on my serve. Also, I lack the mental concentration. It's hard when you're out on the court to concentrate on one thing."

Two seeded players were beaten Monday by unranked opponents. Hans Simonsson of Sweden dropped men's No. 11-seed Terry Moor 6-2, 6-4, and Anna Marie Fernandez dropped women's No. 10-seed Sandy Collins 6-1, 6-2.

In other matches, No. 6-seed Jose Higueras of Spain easily downed Jose Lopez-Maeso of Spain 6-1, 6-1; No. 9 Hans Gildemeister of Chile beat Steve Denton 6-3, 7-6; No. 10 Jose-Luis Damiani of Uruguay ousted Jim Gurfein 6-4, 6-3, and Mark Edmonson of Australia, seeded No. 15, downed Mike Cahill 6-2, 6-1.

Fans now deserve positive gestures from players, owners

An AP Sports Analysis
By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

And now, to put things back together ...

Baseball may be able to recover from the awful turmoil of this summer if it approaches the problem of mending the wounds sensibly with some fresh, new ideas.

Ray Kroc, the hamburger king who runs the San Diego Padres, came up with a good one when he said he would open the gates and charge no admission for his team's first game back. That's a nice one-day gesture to the fans, but here's a suggestion to take it a step further.

Everyone agrees that one week of summer training camps, even at a double-time pace, isn't enough to overcome the rust caused by seven weeks on strike. The quality of games, at the start at least, won't be quite full-fledged major league. So, for half-quality games, why not half-priced tickets?

Now we understand, all too well, that management is not in baseball for the sport of it, and the profit motive is important. So set a limit on the cut-rate seats. Maybe a week, maybe two weeks. Maybe just reserve one or two sections of the stands for half-priced tickets for the rest of the season. The details and mechanics are not important. But at least use the leverage of reduced prices to show the fans you care about them.

That's an idea the owners can mull over after they have decided what to do about the balance of this butchered season. That decision is due Thursday in Chicago, and it is not an easy one.

There are two options available. One is to go back to business as usual next Monday and complete the season based on a single set of standings. The other is to go to a split-season concept, treating the renewal of baseball as a second half, separate but equal from what went on from Opening Day until June 12, when the strike hit.

Now, regular customers know the custodian of this department is a traditionalist who frowns on gimmickry. And given that approach, it would follow that the support here should be for the first option. As golfers would say, "Play it as it lies."

But there are exceptions to every rule, and this may be one of them. The interruption in action has been so long and so disruptive that starting over fresh might be a good idea. This is forever an asterisk season anyway. Go ahead and scramble things up with an extra tier of playoffs between first- and second-half winners leading up to the regular league championship series and the World Series. What more damage could it do than the fallout left by a seven-week strike?

Starting over hurts the teams that were within striking distance (interesting choice of words) of the leaders when the season stopped. That is unfortunate, but it's one of those things. There are more teams who would benefit from a fresh beginning than would be hurt by it.

It would be like April all over again. Baseball thrives on its Aprils when every team has hope and a chance. The disappointment of the previous season's losses and finish are forgotten, replaced with a fresh slate.

The Cubs will be in the race, and so will the Twins. Don't laugh. The A's won the American League West for the first half, didn't they? Anything can happen. Look out for the Mets and Blue Jays. They could turn the two East races upside down.

Plan for festive opening ... err, make that re-opening ... days with marching bands and first-pitch ceremonies. Dress up the stadiums with banners and bunting. Make it a fun in the sun day at the ballpark, a time to forgive and forget. Why not?

One more suggestion, though. If any first-half winner — either the Yankees, Phillies, A's or Dodgers — wins the second season, then give them a bye to the league championship series. Please, no wild-card team to even up the playoffs. There is just so much tinkering we can take.

There is a drawback to all of this, of course. It is the calendar. An extra tier of playoffs pushes back the whole postseason schedule by one full week in the meteorologically capricious month of October. The mini-series would start Oct. 6. The league championship series could not start until Oct. 13 and the World Series would be delayed until Oct. 20. That creates a potential seventh game of the World Series on ... brrr ... Oct. 28, barring rainouts of course.

Let's see Bowie Kuhn avoid an overcoat for that one.

Lakers strike a peace with unhappy Kareem

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar doesn't want to move to New Jersey after all.

The six-time National Basketball Association most valuable player has come to an understanding with Los Angeles Lakers' owner Jerry Buss and will not be traded.

It had been reported recently that Abdul-Jabbar was unhappy about a 25-year, $25-million contract that Earvin "Magic" Johnson signed with the Lakers and would ask Buss to trade him to either the New Jersey Nets of the New York Knicks.

However, Abdul-Jabbar and Buss both said after a meeting Monday that talks had been productive and Abdul-Jabbar will remain with team with no changes in his contract.

"A team is like a family, when you pick one person out in front and say he's my favorite child, the others in the family definitely feel affected," said Abdul-Jabbar, referring to Johnson. "No one knew exactly what was going on. Some members thought that they had to compete for the affection of our owner rather than what they were doing on the floor."

Johnson's lucrative contract provides for him to remain with the team in a management capacity after his playing days are through.

"Kareem's concern was that they were taking a guy like Magic and tying together the playing and management aspects of the contract," said Tom Collins, Abdul-Jabbar's business agent. "Then as soon as Magic would be walking in the locker room, players would see him as management and not as a player."

Buss said that "there was a misunderstanding and you could chalk that up to my inexperience (as an owner). The air has been cleared sufficiently for me to walk away happy.

"In round terms, the basic issue in Magic's contract is two phases," continued Buss. "One is as a player, the other is his involvement with management. There was a feeling by the players that those two phases became intermingled to the extent that they would suffer as a team.

"It was not my intent to create that, but I did ... It was my inadvertant mingling of management and player aspects."

Cowboys cut seven players

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys released seven players Monday, including eighth-round draft choice Paul Piurowski and veteran tackle Richard Grimmett, to reduce their training camp roster to 87 players.

Piurowski, a 6-3, 232-pound middle linebacker from Florida State, was one of four linebackers drafted by the Cowboys.

The other rookie linebackers are fourth-round picks Scott Pelluer of Washington State and Derrie Nelson of Nebraska and free agents Angelo King of South Carolina State and Robert Miles of Georgia.

The Cowboys now have three middle linebackers in camp, veterans Bob Breunig and Bruce Huther and fifth-round choice Danny Spradlin of Tennessee.

Also placed on waivers Monday were five free agent rookies, wide receiver Cedric Jackson of Delta State, defensive back Derek Martin of San Jose State, running back Richard Overton of Pittsburg State (Kansas), tackle Phil Rich of Western Kentucky and linebacker Kim Thomas of Long Beach State.

Camp has Pokes grumbling

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) - Training camp wouldn't be training camp without players grumbling.

In this heaven-for-a-football-camp setting near the cool breezes of the Pacific Ocean, the Dallas Cowboys have managed to work up their fair share of gripes.

Let's give the soap box to wide receiver Butch Johnson, who has spent the majority of the training camp on the sidelines nursing a sore tendon.

"MY WORTH to this team is like sticking a finger in a bucket of water...the hole you see in there is my worth to the Cowboys," said Johnson.

Interpreted, Johnson, who recently signed a three-year contract, wants more playing action but doesn't think he's ever going to get it.

"Some people say you should be satisfied with what you've got ... well, you can't respect somebody who says that ... it limits your growth potential," he said.

Johnson, while not officially in Coach Tom Landry's doghouse, has drawn some recent stares from the boss man for his noisy chattering on the sidelines while his teammates are working.

Another wide receiver, Tony Hill, also has missed most of the scrimmages and workouts due to minor injuries, and this isn't setting well with the coaches.

HILL IS trying to renegotiate his contract.

Also mumbling about his contract is yet another wide receiver, Drew Pearson, who has been the sensation of camp with his sparkling, mid-season form play.

Pearson also is renegotiating his contract.

The defensive tackle is in his option year and has agent Howard Slusher in talks with the Cowboys' brass, headed by personnel director Gil Brandt.

"It (the contract talks) is in the back of my mind but I'm not concerned," said White. "I came out here to get ready to play football for the season."

Or a Billy Joe DuPree.

"Nobody is ever paid what they think they are worth," said the Cowboys' tight end.

OFFENSIVE LINEMAN Pat Donovan also is on the option year of his contract, but the talks have been going quietly with no open griping.

Donovan even led the applause at a recent practice when placekicker Rafael Septien showed up late at practice.

"Nice of you to come in," Donovan kidded. "What are you getting paid?".

Like DuPree said, Donovan, not what he's worth.

Austin is national softball capital

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Although the Amateur Softball Association has its headquarters in Oklahoma City, many Austin residents think of their city as the national softball capital.

With more than 1,000 city league teams and 20,000 players, Austin may have the highest per capita ratio of softball players in the nation.

"The interest in softball hasn't reached its peak, and already the demand far exceeds our playing capacity," said Bunny Brown, assistant athletic director for the city Parks and Recreation Department.

Clerc takes Argentina: Now the world

NORTH CONWAY, N.H. (AP) — Now that Jose-Luis Clerc has taken his native Argentina, what next?

"He has the potential to be the best," said Pato Rodriguez after watching his young charge demolish fellow Argentinian Guillermo Vilas 6-3, 6-2 Monday in the final of the $175,000 Volvo International Tennis Tournament.

It was Clerc's 19th straight clay court victory, his third consecutive tournament championship and his second title triumph in a row over Vilas, who was beaten last Monday night 7-5, 6-2 in the Washington Star final.

Four years ago, when Vilas was winning 57 straight matches on clay, Clerc was ranked 278th. By last year, he had climbed to No. 8.

Now, for the first time, Clerc has overtaken Vilas in the world rankings, No. 5 to No. 7.

"On clay, he can be No. 1, and he is not very far from beating someone like (Bjorn) Borg," Rodriguez said. "It's a question of confidence. He has the game to play well on other surfaces — the serve, the ground strokes.

"He is one of the hardest hitters in tennis. He has the mental toughness.

"He just needs to win one big tournament to get the confidence. If he wins a big tournament, new horizons are going to open for him."

Right now, Clerc is concentrating on match No. 20 in a row in the U.S. Clay Court Championships being played this week in Indianapolis. Then, after a few weeks off, comes the U.S. Open in New York.

"I think he can do good in the Open," Rodriguez said.

Clerc, 22, is certain to be one of the top seeds after winning in Boston, Washington and now North Conway, where he was seeded third, one ahead of Vilas and behind Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia and Jimmy Connors.

The three victories earned him $84,000 to boost his winnings for the year to $162,000.

He won the Italian Open and the title in Florence earlier, and reached the semis in the French Open.

At Volvo, Clerc's powerful serve and ground strokes never let Vilas, 28, into the match. He needed only 85 minutes.

Big Vike question is who's 'King Ugly'?

MANKATO, Minn. (AP) — Life in a National Football League training camp can be murder for rookies. There's two-a-day practices, learning the playbook, catering to veterans and the misery of being away from family and friends for an extended period of time.

There's also the interesting little sidelights that further bewilder the young men — such as the Minnesota Vikings' second annual "King Ugly Contest" and the traditional singing for your supper routine in the evening.

Monday, the King Ugly man contest began at Mankato State University.

"Everybody's eligible," growled veteran defensive tackle Dave Roller, contest chairman. "Players, coaches, general managers ... sports writers."

Nominations are taken and after the best (or the worst, depending on how you look at it) are weeded out, the final candidates have their pictures posted on a bulletin board in the dining room.

Then, the voting begins, with players paying a $1 fee to cast their dubious ballots.

The unfortunate winner has one consolation: he receives all proceeds, said to be hundreds of dollars. Last year's champion was Anthony Norman, an Iowa State linebacker who spent the 1979 season on injured reserve and then was cut shortly after winning the contest in 1980.

Singing at dinnertime, of course, is a ritual all rookies must endure in NFL training camps. Some rookies really get into it, foresaking their college fight songs for current popular ballads or swinging disco sounds.

They usually receive considerable applause.

"I wouldn't get up in front of a bunch of people and sing, not if I had a choice," says Sendlein, the Vikings' a second-round draft choice out of Texas. "But really, this isn't as bad as it was in college. Your first week, you were a slave in the dining hall. You had to get the upperclassmen whatever they wanted to eat and drink."

After dinner, the grind continues, as the rookies try to absorb the foreign terminology of a professional playbook. When he can no longer concentrate on defensive formations, Sendlein calls his wife, who is seven months pregnant with their first child and back in the Twin Cities setting up housekeeping.

"I've been calling to tell her what's going on, telling her that I miss her," says Sendlein, a native of Las Vegas. "But she's busy, too. She's taking care of some bills we have back in Texas. And she's been busy decorating the baby's room."

Hopefully, that baby will never have to tell friends that daddy once won a King Ugly contest.

Denton beats Midland in state tournament

WACO — Midland's Western Optimist dropped a 3-2 decision to Denton Coca Cola here Monday in the opening round of the Sophomore Teenage League state playoff tournament to fall into the loser's bracket of the double elimination playoff.

Denton scored the winning run in the bottom of the fifth inning when a runner scored on an error by the Midland shortstop, Derick Westbrook, who gave up only four hits in 5⅓ innings of work was charged with the loss on the unearned run.

Midland jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first when one run scored on a passed ball and the other came home on a single by Kevin Strickland. Strickland also had a double in the game and was the game's only player to have two hits.

Denton tied the game at 2-2 in the bottom of the fourth to set up the winning run in the fifth.

Midland reliever Terry Baxter retired all five batter he faced in the sixth and seventh innings.

Western Optimist will face Clarksville today at 6 p.m. and the loser will fall from the tournament. Clarksville dropped a 9-3 decision to San Angelo in another first round game.

Midland got the state tournament by winning the Western Sophomore League championship in Midland and then winning the District Sophomore tournament held in Odessa last week. The loss to Denton was their first in the playoffs.

Juan Eichelberger to hurl first Padre game for free

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Following the lead of San Diego owner Ray Kroc, Juan Eichelberger, the Padres' winningest pitcher, announced Monday he will pitch next week's reopener for free.

Eichelberger, 6-3, said he will let the Padres keep an undisclosed sum of his paycheck.

Kroc, San Diego's 78-year-old multi-millionaire owner, is giving away all 50,000 seats for the game with Atlanta in a gesture to ease animosity from the 50-day-old baseball strike.

"I figure the players need to show the fans they appreciate their support too," said Eichelberger, a 27-year-old righthander from Daly City, Calif.

San Diego Padres President Ballard Smith said he was surprised by Eichelberger's action, adding the pay returned to the club will be donated to any charity Eichelberger chooses.

Eichelberger said even if he is selected to the National League All-Star team and is scratched from pitching the following day Aug. 10, he will donate his pay to charity.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Blonde bombshell Loni Anderson, who plays Jennifer on the TV hit "WKRP in Cincinnati," shares this birthday with you. A positive mental attitude is very important to your success during the next four months. A pragmatic attitude works better than the dreamy-eyed approach you often use. Choose the right partner and romance can be better than ever! Love and marriage go hand in hand now. The financial outlook is much more promising than in the recent past. Guard against sloppy habits. Tackle one project at a time and give it your undivided attention. Your associates ask that you explain your decisions; do so without delay.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): This should be a banner day for you. Do not waste a single second! Money difficulties will not stand between you and success if you put your shoulder to the wheel.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Today's events bring you both happiness and profit. You receive some long overdue news. Career goals are subject to change. You find romance when you least expect it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Keep your sense of humor and any troubles will quickly fade away. An old friend helps supply some missing information. Show your gratitude in meaningful ways.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Decisions made now can have a profound effect upon your professional or personal future. Good news arrives from people at a distance. Your property is worth more than you realized.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Seize a unique opportunity to team up with successful partners. Pool your talents and ideas, and get ready to think along new lines. Avoid envious gossips who covet your good fortune.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do not misuse your contacts. Close your mind to distractions. Big decisions probably involve financial considerations. Consult experts to erase any doubts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Put current activities on a stable basis by finalizing your decisions. Go over bookkeeping records. Romance is in the spotlight. Postpone making any new commitments for the time being.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Employers offer additional money for overtime. Someone's forceful personality makes an indelible impression on you but it may not be the right one. Reserve judgment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Events related to your job help you achieve your personal goals. You have won your boss' confidence. A few words from your mate should help put your mind at rest.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A good day for developing original ideas. It will be relatively simple for you to get the support you need. Strike while the iron is hot! A pragmatic approach wins you converts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A good day for putting existing business liaisons on a firmer basis. Financial support is available. A promotion, additional income come into sight. Your chances for advancement are enhanced.

Opening lead: King of ♠.

The punishment more than fitted the crime when declarer took advantage of a slight indiscretion by one of the defenders in the bidding to land a difficult no trump game.

Except for North's raise to game, there is little about the auction that calls for admiration. South should have opened two no trump because his hand valued to 22 points—one additional point should have been for having all four aces. With his 12 points mostly in queens and jacks, West would have been better advised to remain silent to hear how the auction developed rather than hazard a takeout double—especially since his queen of diamonds was of doubtful value, and he had only defensive trick. Had South doubled at his second turn, the normal way to show a strong hand, North would have converted to penalties and accurate defense would have netted 700 points. Instead he ventured into uncharted waters and landed in a shaky game.

West led the top of his spade sequence, and when dummy came down declarer could count only eight tricks. The chief hope of developing a ninth was the diamond suit. Normally, declarer would have relied on a 3-3 break and gone down to defeat. But West's takeout double almost surely marked him with diamond shortness, so declarer tried a different tack.

He made the correct technical play of allowing West to win the first spade trick, then he captured the continuation of the queen with the ace. Next, he led a low diamond and inserted dummy's nine when West followed with a low card.

East won the ten and shifted to a heart. Declarer won and led another diamond, capturing West's queen with the table's king. Now he had a tenace position in the suit over his right-hand opponent. A diamond was led from dummy and, when East played the six, declarer finessed the eight. West showed out and declarer quickly claimed nine tricks—three in each red suit, the ace of spades and the ace-king of clubs.

Area operators plan 18 wildcats, two discoveries finaled

Eleven wildcats have been scheduled for District 8 and 8-A along with two discoveries filed in Lynn and Reeves counties. Also, seven wildcats have been planned in District 7-C of the Texas Railroad Commission.

BORDEN VENTURES

John H. Hendrix Corp., Midland, will drill the wildcat, No. 1 Sterling Williams, to 10,000 feet, 10 miles northwest of Gail.

The drillsite is 1/4 mile south of the Banam Corp. Spraberry discovery well, No. 1 Williams, a work-over plugged back to 7,314. The well was a 10,035-foot Mississippian discovery well, drilled by Sinclair. It was worked over once by R.D. Allen, who drilled down to 10,143 feet.

The project spots 1,980 feet from the north, and 660 feet from the east line of section 45, block 32, T-6-N, ELRR survey.

Tucker & Gilmore, (address not provided) plan two Good 10,000-foot wildcats, 3 miles east of Vealmoor.

The No. 1 Good will be located near the 7,840-foot dry hole, Trice No. 1 Good.

The No. 2 Good will be located 3/8 mile west of the Fundamental No. 1 Good, a 7,844-footer, abandoned March 14, 1970.

T&C's Goods, it appears, will be 2,000 feet deeper than anything in the vicinity.

No. 1 is staked 467 feet from the south and west lines of section 22, block 32, T-3-N, T&PRR survey.

No. 2 is staked 1,973 feet from the south, and 467 feet from the west line of the same section.

CRANE SEARCHER

Race for oil on in Arizona

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — An oil-drilling cosortium's exploratory drilling near Tombstone, Ariz., has reached the halfway mark of 10,000 feet, a spokesman for a consortium spokesman said Monday.

The drilling reahed 10,000 feet Friday and is expected to go to 20,000 feet before it is finished early next year, said Dan Harrisonn, a Phillips Petroleum Co. spokesman in Bartlesville, Okla.

Besides Phillips, the consortium consists of Anschutz Corp. of Denver and People's Energy Corp. of Chicago.

Harrison said plans announced in June to drill test wells at 10 sites from Kingman to Douglas have been postponed until next year.

Across the state, spokesmen for another oil and gas exploration company and for Yuma County farmers said that a natural gas discovery by Pemex, the Mexican national oil company, has sparked a scramble for oil and gas leases near Yuma.

Pemex discovered natural gas off Isla Montague, an island at the northern end of the Gulf of California at the mouth of the Colorado River. The island is about 70 miles south of Yuma.

Kenneth Evans, president of the Yuma County Farm Bureau, said Utah-Texas Resources Inc. of Spring, Texas, has applied for oil and gas leases on 50,000 acres of private land and 27,000 acres of federal and state land near Yuma.

Evans said the oil exploration companies' interests near Yuma are within 20 miles to the east and south of the city.

Mobil raises bid to $8.6 billion

NEW YORK (AP) — Mobil Corp. has raised its bid to $8.6 billion in the high-stakes auction for Conoco Inc., but Du Pont Co. may still walk off with the prize for only $7.3 billion.

Mobil is confronting stockholders with a version of the old question: Is a bird in the hand worth two in the bush? Mobil hopes they will decide that the antitrust risks confronting its bid are offset by the higher price it will pay for stock.

Many of the shareholders may have to answer that question by midnight tonight. Du Pontu had a majority of stock offered to it, but those shares can be withdrawn until midnight. If enough shares are left, Du Pont will be able to buy them and end the fight.

Mobil has asked a federal judge in New York to block the Du Pont offer on grounds that it violates securities laws, and a ruling in Mobil's favor could buy time.

Mobil, the second-largest U.S. oil concern, raised it bid for the ninth-largest oil company to $115 a share from $105, for 51 percent of the stock. It did not change the other part of its offer, calling for other shares to be acquired for securities worth $85 each.

But it cannot buy any of that stock immediately, because the Justice Department is seeking more information on the competitive effects of such a merger. Mobilnot buy stock until 10 days after it answers the questions, and it is possible that the deparment will file suit against the takeover.

Du Pont was expected to remove the last legal obstacle to its offer today by signing a consent decree with the Justice Department, whose only objection to a Du Pont-Conoco deal regards Conoco's joint venture in petrochemicals with Monsanto Co., a major competitor of Du Pont.

The Justice Department announced Monday night that it had approved an agreement between Du Pont and Monsanto and would file the proposed decree as soon as the boards of the two companies ratify the agreement.

"We are pleased to have reached an agreement with Monsanto that ... is completely satisfactory to the Justice Department. This should eliminate any concern about antitrust questions and permit us to take another significant step to bring about the merger of Conoco and Du Pont," Du Pont Chairman Edward G. Jefferson said in a statement late Monday.

Du Pont, which has signed a merger agreement with Conoco, is offering $95 a share for 45 percent of the stock and 1.7 Du Pont shares — now worth about $77 — for each remaining share, or a total of $7.3 billion.

The third bidder, Seagram Co. Ltd., began buying Conoco shares for $92 each on Saturday and has accumulated about 18 percent of the stock. But it seems unlikely to acquire much more unless it raises its bid.

Conoco is prized for its large reserves of coal, oil and natural gas. Any takeover of Conoco will dwar the $3.6 billionacquisition of Belridge Oil Co. by Shell Oil Co. in 1979, which is now the largest U.S. corporate merger ever.

Mobil said it "raised its already superior offer in recognition of the fact that a Conoco shareholder will now have to wait longer for payment" from Mobil than from other bidders.

Mobil Chairman Rawleigh Warner repeated Mobil's promise to buy stock unless an injunction is issued barring it from doing so. "Such an event seems quite unlikely to us," he said, adding that Mobil would buy the stock "and then take its chances on the ultimate outcome of any antitrust lawsuit."
