Inmates take over Oklahoma prison, hold 3 hostages

STRINGTOWN, Okla. (AP) — Inmates at an overcrowded state prison held three guards hostage Saturday following a fiery uprising that left one dormitory gutted and two others damaged, officials said. One guard and one inmate were injured.

Eight guards were grabbed by 10 prisoners when the disturbance began, but five hostages were released unharmed Saturday and the others were reported in good condition, said officials at the medium-security Mack Alford Correctional Center.

The inmates, believed to be armed with crude knives, threatened to kill their hostages if authorities attempted a rescue, said Jerry Massie, spokesman for the state Department of Corrections.

"One inmate is keeping it going," said prison spokeswoman Anita Trammell. "I think the inmates are tired. We have one leader. I think if it wasn't for the leader, things would have been closed up."

The uprising began late Friday after some inmates accused others of theft and threatened retaliation, authorities said. A group of the inmates was being prepared for transfer to a maximum-security prison when they seized hostages.

"They released the (fifth) hostage in return for getting to talk to two specific negotiators," said Massie. He would not identify the negotiators.

Officials said the inmates had "a short list" of specific demands, but refused to disclose what they were.

"I think their primary concern is for their safety and their well-being," Massie said. "It's just real non-specific. It's not like a list of 'We want better food or better water.' "

"We're fine. They're feeding us. They're taking care of us," one hostage was quoted as saying when inmates permitted him to make a telephone call.

The 33-year-old red-brick prison was surrounded by Oklahoma Highway Patrol tactical teams in camouflage clothing, rifle-toting corrections department officers and firetrucks that were used to battle blazes in three buildings.

Lack of interest may kill anti-crime effort

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A volunteer program to bolster police services may be declared dead for lack of interest, police and city officials said this week.

Midlanders Against Crime on Patrol was designed to bolster the force of uniformed patrol officers cruising the streets. Patterned after a highly successful program in Ohio, Midlanders who own mobile CB radios were asked to ride two to a vehicle, and report anything unusual — such as a traffic accident or prowler — to a volunteer CB base station operator, who would then call a police dispatcher.

But the program never got off the ground. At the first enrollment meeting a month ago, only a handful of people showed up, and only three people submitted applications.

"Based on the amount of participation we had at the two meetings, and the number of applications, this would not be a good time to follow through with this program," police Crime Prevention Officer Chuck Chapman said.

"But we have not given up. We are still looking for a volunteer program that will work for Midland," said Chapman, who acted as an advisor to city officials.

Midland Police Chief Richard Czech — who ties a recent crime increase to a lack of uniformed personnel — championed the MACOP idea, and refuses to term it a mistake. Volunteer programs designed to back law enforcement are used in dozens of cities the size of Midland, and will be used here, the chief said.

Adults lend ear to young singers

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE

A common complaint of the young is that adults never listen. The Joy Singers of Rusk Elementary School proved that statement wrong Saturday during the 5th annual Celebration of the Arts.

Adults stopped talking and began listening when the 50-voice choir began a selection with the words "We the people of the United States in order to form a more perfect union." A noticeable pause in activity moved through the area within hearing range of the stage inside Midland Center as the words of the preamble to the U.S. Constitution sounded forth.

The singing group was one of several youth ensembles performing for this year's COA during Saturday's Festival Day.

Today's activities begin at noon and close at 6 p.m. No admission is charged to the two-day event which features, in addition to continuous entertainment, an art show and sale, food booths set up in front of Midland Center and at Centennial Plaza and children's activities on the courthouse lawn.

"The weather has been very cooperative starting with the Sousa concert Thursday (at Midland College) and continuing through this weekend," said Michael Owens, general chairman of COA along with his wife, Stacey. "And in West Texas that's saying a lot because we know how the weather can change at any minute."

About 250 runners came out for Saturday's Festival Day kickoff event — the Run for the Arts, which started at 8:30 a.m. The actual festival opened at 10 a.m.

"We had a good crowd this morning," Owens said. "By noon, the children's area had completely run out of supplies and had to be restocked for the afternoon events."

Christie McFarland, chairman of the children's area, estimated that at least 300 children came through the area Saturday.

"We thought it wasn't going to be as busy as it was," Ms. McFarland said. "We were surprised."

Northeast Family YMCA dedicated to 'enlightenment'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Richardson

The Northeast Family YMCA is to "elevate the minds of our young people into the right direction," the Rev. O.J. Archie, pastor of Macedonia Baptist Church, said at Saturday's dedication of Midland's sixth and latest YMCA facility.

"If it were not for concerns like this (YMCA) in conjunction with the church," Archie said, "the problems with drugs and this satanic movement would be worse."

The concept of the Young Men's Christian Association is to "put Christian principles into practice through programs that build a healthy body, mind and spirit for all."

"If you can just help one person to be enlightened as a whole person," Archie said, "then all of this effort is worth it."

The $1.35-million facility was opened two weeks ago but had been conceived eight years ago.

"There were times when some of you wondered if this (YMCA) would ever get off of the drawing board," Arden Grover, president of the Metropolitan YMCA board, which governs Midland YMCAs, told guests at the dedication. "Times got tough."

But, through perseverance and dedicated fund-raising efforts, "We are going to make our goal and pay for this beautiful building," Grover said.

■ Related photo, Page 2A

"And now that it is completed, it really does your heart good," Grover said.

With the addition of the Northeast Family YMCA, Midland now has "one of the finest and most modern (YMCA) systems in the whole country," he said.

In his tribute to the YMCA, its supporters and its causes, Clarence Scharbauer III noted that the purposes of the YMCA include following the principles set forth by Jesus Christ, seeking the "good things of life," maintaining health and "taking care of yourself."

The YMCA "belongs to you folks," said Scharbauer, who engineered fund-raising efforts for the new YMCA and who is past president of the Metropolitan YMCA board of directors. "Come and use it."

Doris Richardson, past chairman of the Northeast Family YMCA board of managers, said that her "heart is just bursting with joy" over the realization of a well-rounded community YMCA in Northeast Midland.

The facility includes a gymnasium, a 25-meter Junior Olympic swimming pool, a Nautilus strength-and-endurance room, aerobics center, nursery and meeting space.

The YMCA serves people of all ages.

"This is a mammoth facility," Ms. Richardson said. "Our community is blessed."

The YMCA Building, which is located at Scharbauer Drive and Butternut Lane, is "beautiful," she said, "but we have got a few outstanding debts we would like to wipe out. These things don't just fall out of the air. We have got great benefactors. Let's take care of debts."

Al Jackson, executive director of the Northeast Midland YMCA, alluded to a membership drive to build up the YMCA's individual and family members and noted the YMCA support.

"With this kind of dedication from people, how can we fail?" he said.

Durwood Owen, general director of the Metropolitan YMCA, lauded YMCA supporters. They included Nick Sanchez, who in 1980 planted "the seed of thought" that brought forth the Northeast Family YMCA, and Ms. Richardson, who, "standing like an oak tree in a storm of doubt," persevered in helping to fulfill the dream of the new YMCA.

"I'm glad to see us get a new YMCA," said YMCA supporter John "Little John" Anders. "It's about time. It's up-to-date."

Don Mason, current chairman of the Northeast Family YMCA board, said the YMCA facility is "just a building right now until you get people interacting and coming here."

And the "most critical" part of the YMCA is in attracting youth, particularly boys and girls who might be tempted to go astray.

"I am not saying this (YMCA) is a panacea — a cure-all," Mason said, "but with hard work, it will have an impact."

Grand jury hears from San Angelo rancher

SAN ANGELO (AP) — A grand jury heard nearly two hours of testimony from rancher J. Willis Johnson III in connection with a renewed investigation into the shooting death of a man whose body was found on Johnson's land last year.

Johnson, 57, told sheriff's deputies he found the body of Jeffrey Dale Mazuk, 30, on his land March 23, 1987.

According to an autopsy report, Mazuk died March 22, 1987, from a shotgun blast to the chest. The autopsy also showed Mazuk was partially clothed when he was shot and apparently was dressed later.

Johnson was one of 17 witnesses who were called before the grand jury in three days of deliberations in the case that began Wednesday.

Mazuk's death originally was ruled a suicide by a justice of the peace. However, a Bexar County Medical Examiner's report said the cause of death could not be determined.

Tom Green County District Attorney Dick Alcala said late Friday that the investigation was not complete. He said he plans to present more evidence to the grand jury later in its term, which expires in six months.

Alcala reactivated the case after reading a copy of the autopsy report presented to him by The Dallas Morning News.

Absentee voting for MISD runoff races ends Tuesday

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Voters have until 5 p.m. Tuesday to cast absentee votes in the five Midland Independent School District runoff trustee elections slated for this weekend.

At stake in the runoff race to be held Saturday are five single-member seats — Districts 2, 3, 5, 6 and 7 — on the MISD Board of Trustees.

Midlanders James Fuller and Jim Builta won their District 1 and 4 seats outright in the election May 7.

In the District 2 runoff, Clarence "Putty" Zachery will face Adela Marmolejo.

Zachery had 158 votes to Ms. Marmolejo's 141 in the May 7 election.

Ken Morrison will face Don Aldridge in the District 3 runoff. Morrison garnered 217 votes to Aldridge's 130.

The District 5 runoff pits George Staley against incumbent trustee Betsy Robinson.

Staley got 534 votes to Mrs. Robinson's 462 votes on May 7.

Bob Rich will face Dianne Anderson in the District 6 runoff. Rich won 831 votes to Mrs. Anderson's 387.

In the District 7 runoff, Ken Marks will face John Kennedy.

Marks got 768 votes to Kennedy's 630.

The race's major issues include the maintenance of two equal high schools — and how the high school boundaries play a part in that task — as well as intensifying efforts to curb the dropout rate.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Hot, gusty day predicted

From Staff and Wire Reports

Gusty winds may cool off the hot spell Midland will have today, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Today should be hot with a high in the upper 90s. There is less than a 20 percent chance of isolated thunderstorms. Winds will be from the southwest at 10-20 mph and gusty.

Tonight will be fair and the chance for isolated thunderstorms will remain. The low should be near 60.

Monday will be fair with a high near 90.

The record low for today occurred in 1967 when it dipped to 40. The record high for Saturday was set in 1960 when it reached 100.

STATE

High pressure over Southeast Texas continued to pump warm, moist Gulf air and fair skies over most of the state Saturday, but a cold front in Kansas was moving slowly southward.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms had developed along a dry line that stretched from near Dodge City, Kan., where the cold front was located, south through Amarillo and into Midland.

In Oklahoma, scattered thunderstorms were expected in conjunction with the front.

State temperatures Saturday afternoon were mostly in the 80s with some readings in the 90s in West Texas. At 3 p.m., temperatures ranged from 81 degrees in the coastal cities of Galveston, Corpus Christi and Palacios to 94 degrees at El Paso.

NATION

Sunny skies heated much of the Mississippi Valley into the 90s Saturday while scattered showers hit parts of the southern Atlantic Coast, the southern Appalachians and the central Plains.

A low pressure system centered over south central Canada drew warm air well up the Mississippi Valley, bringing record-setting 90-degree weather as far north as Iowa.

Des Moines, Iowa, set a record high for the date of 93. Other records included 89 degrees at Kansas City, Mo., 91 at Memphis, Tenn., and 92 at Baton Rouge, La.

Thunderstorms rumbled over coastal areas of Georgia and the Carolinas and the southern Appalachians from eastern Tennessee and western North Carolina to West Virginia, bringing scattered rain.

A few thunderstorms also hit eastern Wisconsin and south central Minnesota and there were scattered showers from the Texas Panhandle into the central Plains.

There were no reports of significant rainfall, defined as one-half inch or more, in the six hours ending at 2 p.m. EDT.

Sunny skies prevailed in most other parts with temperatures in the 70s and 80s over Florida and much of the California coast, and in the upper 50s and 60s in the Pacific Northwest, the Great Lakes, Pennsylvania, New York and New England.

Temperatures ranged from the 90s to 105 in the Southwest's deserts, down from peaks of around 110 in the past few days.

Scattered showers were forecast Sunday for the coast of the Carolinas, the Great Lakes and the eastern portion of the upper Mississippi Valley. Cloudy skies were predicted for the Oregon coast and sunny skies were expected to prevail over much of the rest of the nation.

Iraqi planes bomb offshore terminal, set fire to 5 tankers

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraqi warplanes bombarded an offshore terminal in the Strait of Hormuz Saturday and set fire to five tankers, including two of the world's largest, in a stepped-up drive to destroy Iran's oil lifeline.

Up to 54 crewmen were reported missing.

One of the ships, the 235,000-ton Spanish tanker Barcelona, was said to be sinking. Two others, including the Seawise Giant, at 564,739 tons the largest vessel afloat, were blazing out of control hours after the mid-afternoon raid on Larak island, according to shipping sources.

Gulf-based sources said Iranian salvage tugs were battling flames aboard the ships, some of which were moored together to transfer cargo.

Iraq announced the raid five hours later, the 10th attack it has claimed against Iranian oil targets since April 29.

Reports of casualties varied widely.

Gulf-based shipping executives said at least 16 crew members were missing, 14 from the Seawise Giant and two from the 457,841-ton British-flag Burmah Endeavour.

In London, Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Unit said that all of the approximately 50 people aboard the Seawise Giant and four from the Barcelona were unaccounted for.

There were no reports regarding crews of the other two tankers, the 152,004-ton Cypriot-flag Argosy and the 231,712-ton Iranian tanker Khark. The Argosy is under Iranian charter and the Khark is government owned.

The attacks were part of an intensified effort by Baghdad to cut off the export revenues that Tehran uses to finance the war with Iraq, now in its eighth year.

"Penetrating Iranian enemy defenses, Iraqi pilots struck at berthing supertankers off the island, setting them ablaze and gutted in fire. Columns of smoke were seen billowing from the hit targets," said the official Iraqi News Agency, quoting a military communique.

The raid was the third in the past seven months against Larak, where international tankers pick up oil cargoes brought from Kharg Island by Iranian ships.

To reach the Hormuz strait, the Iraqi jets must fly more than 750 miles each way, requiring mid-air refueling en route to or from the target.

Five tankers also were hit in the last Larak raid, on Dec. 22, among them the Seawise Giant, which was damaged in the first raid last October.

Both Seawise Giant and Burmah Endeavour, also one of the world's five largest vessels, are under charter to Iran as "mother ships," or offshore storage tankers, at Larak.

More than 500 ships have been damaged in the war, most of them since it spilled into the gulf in 1984. Since the start of 1986, about 300 commercial ships have been hit by one side or the other.

Estimates by maritime agencies and other sources indicate that more than 300 seamen have been killed and many injured.

The Larak raid came hours after a U.S. Navy-escorted convoy of three Kuwaiti tankers sailed through the Hormuz into the Gulf of Oman without incident. It was the 31st convoy of the year.

One of the escorting warships, the destroyer Stump, later returned to the gulf, passing through the strait where the smoke of Larak's fires were still visible.

Earlier in the day, gulf-based sources quoted radio monitors as saying an Iranian fighter plane had warned a U.S. warship to leave an area in the southern gulf, but there was no reply.

An American source said the Navy had overheard an Iranian F-4 fighter-bomber "requesting permission to attack a ship."

The source, speaking on condition he not be named, said there were no U.S. ships in that immediate vicinity at the time.

Meanwhile, Iran reported that it would soon begin 10 days of maneuvers in the southern gulf and the Gulf of Oman.

First RepublicBank Corp. suspends interest payments

DALLAS (AP) — Texas' largest bank holding company announced that it was suspending interest payments on its long-term debt, an action officials said could place up to $838 million of debt in default by the end of July.

The announcement Friday by First RepublicBank Corp., which is restructuring amid a federal bailout, affects $1.3 billion in debt held by creditors, said Joseph Bowles, First RepublicBank spokesman.

He said failure to make interest payments on the debt in the second quarter, which ends June 30, would mean defaulting on $470 million in the long-term debt.

The suspension of interest payments applies only to the Dallas-based bank holding company and does not apply to debt owed by any bank in the First RepublicBank system, said Bowles.

"When you're restructuring a company, that's a route you can follow," he said of the move to suspend interest payments.

"All banks in the First RepublicBank system are expected to continue to pay their obligations when due, including deposits, interest, long-term debt and obligations," bank officials said in a prepared statement.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. pumped $1 billion into First RepublicBank to aid the institution after a run on deposits.

Navy dentist faces court martial for wedding Marine

SEATTLE (AP) — A Navy dentist who married a marine from Texas faces what her father says is a precedent-setting court martial for marrying an enlisted Marine.

Navy Lt. Kathleen Mazure, 29, formerly of Mercer Island, married ex-Marine Lance Cpl. Scott A. Price, of Eden, Texas, last November, said her father, James Mazure, a lawyer and former Navy officer who still lives on the island.

She faces a military trial May 24 on criminal charges of fraternization with a member of the service junior to her rank, he said.

In a live appearance on ABC-TV's "Nightline" with her husband, Ms. Mazure said Friday night she was "shocked that a charge of this kind was brought against me."

She said she could not answer questions relating to the litigation except that a neighbor whom she did not name reported her for fraternization while she and her husband were stationed at the Twentynine Palms base east of Los Angeles.

Military officials refused to provide a spokesman for the TV interview, and attempts to reach a Marine Corps spokesman at the base or in Washington, D.C., were unsuccessful.

Price received an honorable discharge this week. Ms. Mazure works in the base dental clinic.

Mazure said the base commander who initially investigated the marriage recommended that there be no legal punishment or separation from the service, only to be overruled by Marine Corps Maj. Gen. Gene A. Deegan, who recommended a general court-martial that carries a maximum penalty of two years in prison.

The woman's father said charging his daughter with fraternization set a legal precedent because the two were from different branches of the military service and had no official relationship on the base.

"I think we have volunteers who want to help the police department here," Czech said. "I am looking for some program that will work."

The lack of response — especially in a city that prides itself on its volunteerism — did not surprise him, the chief said.

"I think there is a good tradition of volunteerism here, but they have never been approached by the police department before," Czech reasoned. "Maybe the opposite is also true. Maybe the police department made it clear it didn't want any help."

Paul Tryson, the city's coordinator of volunteer services, said the program may yet work.

"If we get enough (volunteers) to do one team sensibly, I'm going to do it," Tryson said, adding that he did not know what dampened response to MACOP.

"I don't know what the problem is. There is some ingredient in here, in this program" that is thwarting interest, he said.

Czech listed examples of jobs at his department that volunteers could fill — jobs that are now neglected.

"We have no history of the department, no archives," the chief said. "We have no one to do that. The department should have some tradition."

Czech also wishes he had volunteers who could phone all burglary victims the day after the crime.

With MACOP apparently breathing its last, the next attempt to stir volunteers may be a "civilian" police academy.

"Austin has an excellent program," Czech said. "It is a 10-week academy, where people are taught what the police department is, what it does, etc., everything. After it is over, the people aren't assigned to do anything specifically, but they become a support group for the police department."

MISD

The first major decision new trustees will face is the fate of $11.8 million in MISD bonds — an issue that passed with voters by an almost 2-1 margin May 7.

The current school board's plan call for the addition at 12 elementary schools of 87 new classrooms, seven libraries and a 15-room primary school.

New trustees may opt for that plan or devise one of their own.

Midland County Elections Administrator Bettye Calvert has reminded voters that they may vote in the runoff race even if they didn't vote in the May 7 election.

ARTS

Under a big tent set up on the courthouse lawn, young people have the opportunity today to make, free of charge, such play items as musical instruments, noodle necklaces, masks, tissue flowers and visors.

Throughout the two-day event, clowns from Clown Alley entertain youngsters, Midge Erskine discusses the birds she brings to the event, demonstrations are given by 4-H club members and artists work at their craft, Ms. McFarland said.

Man's progress in transportation can be charted inside Midland Center through viewing the antique items and paintings on display at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library's booth before looking at the NASA exhibit, which features information about the Space Shuttle called "the first of a new breed, a spacecraft that can be flown repeatedly instead of being burned out like a used match."

Saturday, the past and the present met inside Midland Center at the Crafts of Yesterday booth, where tatting and T-shirt painting were only two of many crafts demonstrated during the day. Demonstrations today will include making rag baskets and hair rolling on rags.

"You don't hardly see anybody that does tatting, and the lady who was here today is fantastic," said Audrey Baker, chairman and member of the Permian Basin Needle Arts Chapter of the Embroiderers of America.

Ms. Baker shared Ms. McFarland's surprise at the numbers who came through the annual event Saturday morning.

"When they opened the doors at 10 o'clock, I wondered who opened the barn door," Ms. Baker said. "Towards mid afternoon, the traffic got light."

In addition to the booths occupied by organizations, close to 40 local artists have booths displaying their work.

"The artists are being very complimentary and are pleased at how well their works are selling, and the food concessionaires seem equally satisfied," Owens said.

Around 200 volunteers, including Mr. and Mrs. Owens, helped stage COA's Festival Days, which are sponsored by Midland's umbrella organization for the arts — Midland Arts Assembly.

"Overall, the fifth year anniversary is a huge success," Owens said. "Stacey and I would like to thank everyone involved who has participated in this year's event."

INMATES

Officers carrying teargas launchers donned bullet-proof vests in a parking lot and huddled around blueprints of the prison. But officials wouldn't say if that activity signaled any impending action.

"That's what you call contingency planning," said patrol spokesman Lt. Stewart Meyer.

A spokesman said Gov. Henry Bellmon had no plans to call in the National Guard to assist the law officers already on hand.

The inmates started a fire that destroyed the east dormitory at the Mack Alford Correctional Center, then moved to another dormitory with their hostages, Massie said.

"If we were to rebuild the dormitory that was destroyed similar to one we have at our Lexington facility, it would cost about $2.5 million," Massie said, adding that it was too early to estimate damage to the other dormitories or other prison areas.

Smoke was still rising from the roof of the torched dormitory Saturday; fires in two other dormitories were doused.

Authorities sealed off a section of the prison that held 82 inmates.

"Ten of the 82 are participating in the hostage situation...the others just got caught inside," said Ms. Trammell. Thirty to 35 of the uninvolved inmates locked themselves in their cells, she said.

Trammell said one guard was treated after apparently being hit on the hand with a rock, and one prisoner suffered a minor stab wound to the shoulder.

Officers were preparing to transfer five inmates to the Oklahoma State Penitentiary in McAlester, about 40 miles away, when the disturbance began. The five had reportedly threatened other inmates who allegedly had stolen from them.

Soviets begin pullout today of Afghanistan

MOSCOW (AP) — Bloodied but unbroken, the Soviet Army begins pulling out of Afghanistan today amid threats of guerrilla harassment and grave doubts about the future of the Marxist government it leaves behind.

On the eve of the withdrawal, the Soviet commander in Afghanistan denied his men had been defeated in the brutal war that has claimed an estimated 10,000 Soviet lives.

But politically, the fruits of the 8½-year Soviet armed intervention seem meager. Militarily, the Soviet presence has proved far from decisive.

On Saturday, in the Afghan capital of Kabul, a bomb exploded inside a truck near reviewing stands built for a ceremony honoring the departing Soviet troops. Eleven Afghan civilians were reported killed. Later, three rockets hit a village outside Kabul, killing four people.

Since Dec. 27, 1979, when the Kremlin sent tanks and troops into Afghanistan, Soviet soldiers have been fighting to prop up the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, but they have failed to break the back of a nationwide anti-Marxist insurgency.

Acknowledging the Kremlin's unwillingness to keep bearing the military and diplomatic costs of the intervention, Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze signed U.N.-brokered accords in Geneva on April 14 that commit the Soviets to a nine-month pullout, beginning today.

As the first of an estimated 115,000 Soviet troops prepare to come home, one major question is how — or if — the Moscow-aligned regime of President Najib, which claims just 40,000 regular soldiers of its own, can survive.

The first Soviets to leave will be from a motor-rifle division garrisoned at Jalalabad, a dusty provincial town 30 miles from the Pakistan border, military officials and Soviet media have said.

Lt. Gen. Boris V. Gromov, Soviet commander in Afghanistan, said Saturday more than 1,000 soldiers would leave Jalalabad today and that a quarter of the entire Soviet contingent would be home by the time President Reagan visits Moscow on May 29-June 2.

In recent days, Soviet media have issued alarming reports about increasing guerrilla activity, perhaps to ready public opinion for losses during the withdrawal, or to stress that the pullout will heighten the likelihood of bloodshed among the Afghan factions locked in a 10-year-old civil war.

Soviet television took its viewers Thursday to the Kabul-Kandahar-Herat road, a 650-mile crescent-shaped track that links three of Afghanistan's major cities, for a taped interview with a Red Army officer assigned to screen the pullout.

"The activity of armed opposition bands has been sharply increasing," said Lt. Col. N.V. Ivanov, who spoke as a truck convoy crawled along the hilly road in back of him. "The road will apparently become an objective for which they will fight till the bitter end."

Guerrilla commanders, who refused to be party to the Geneva agreements, have vowed to give the Soviets no respite during the pullout.

Gulbaddin Hekmatyar, head of the seven-party rebel alliance, offered a limited amnesty to Afghan forces who surrender within four weeks after Soviet troops leave their districts.

He said Saturday in Pakistan that those who surrendered in time would not be tried for war crimes. But he said those who don't surrender and are captured will face Islamic courts.

Gromov, who spoke at a news conference in Kabul, said the rebels had recently received antitank weapons, but warned: "If any group tries to use any weapons, retribution will be quick and severe."

Asked if the pullout was a defeat, the 44-year-old commander said: "The Soviet Army will return home after fulfilling its internationalist duty...During the war, not a single unit retreated in the face of the enemy, so we cannot speak of a military defeat."

Gromov's remarks were made available to The Associated Press in a pool report from the British news agency Reuters. The AP was excluded from the pool because of questions it asked Najib in the Afghan capital last month.

Most of the Soviets will be traveling by land, rather than by airlift. For some convoys, the trek to Soviet border cities like Termez and Kushka is expected to take three days or more, often through rugged, mountainous terrain where the rebels have been active in the past.

Air cover for the retreating columns may be a crucial problem, as the insurgents have U.S.-made Stinger missiles, deadly against low-flying helicopters and planes.

Fearing the heat-seating Stinger, the Soviets and Afghans in 1986 virtually ceased using their aircraft for ground support missions.

As they withdraw, the Soviets will hand over more than 170 military bases with equipment worth $1 billion to their Afghan allies, Gromov said.

Najib, 41, a burly, mustachioed Marxist who is a former head of the Afghan secret police, has scoffed when asked whether the departure of his Soviet allies will bring about the downfall of his government.

However, many of the dozens of posts handed over to his army in recent weeks reportedly have been overrun by well-armed guerrillas.

Soviet media reports have said Soviet soldiers believe they have honorably performed their duty in coming to the support of a beleagured government, but the media have made no secret of the men's desire to return home.

In the television interview, Lt. Col. Ivanov, whose detachment will protect other units as they withdraw, pointed to his men and said: "They say we will certainly envy the first columns that go home."

Indian commandos kill three Sikh extremists

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — Indian commandos shot to death three Sikh extremists Saturday in a fierce firefight at the Golden Temple complex and captured two more buildings from Sikhs holed up inside the sacred shrine, authorities said.

Black Cat commandos uncorked a fusillade of gunfire around 8 p.m. and took over a community dining hall and a prayer hall adjoining the main temple, Sikhism's holiest shrine.

The deaths raised to at least 30 the number of people killed since the temple siege began Monday. The United News of India news agency put the toll at 34. It said several bodies were recovered from the temple on Saturday.

The two buildings are on the small pathway that separates the temple and its residential quarters from the temple's offices and a hostel, a police spokesman said.

Siddharth Shankar Ray, governor of Punjab and the top state official, issued a stern warning to the 100 or so militants inside the temple to give themselves up.

"If the terrorists refuse to see reason, then no one should blame us for our action," he said in a statement from the state capital of Chandigarh.

Ray did not give any deadline for the surrender of the militants, who are fighting for a separate Sikh nation.

Suresh Arora, the city police superintendent, said the security forces also had taken over a tall tower near two buildings captured Saturday. The tower was set ablaze by police, he said.

Security forces are trying to take over another similar minaret near the temple complex, he added. The two minarets have been used by the rebels as watch towers and firing posts.

K.P.S. Gill, the state police chief, said the militants fired at people who tried to leave the temple compound during an hour-long police cease-fire.

Six elderly Sikhs came out of the temple complex Saturday and told reporters they were temple workers.

Journalists saw two women and a child try to leave, but they retreated after the extremists fired a volley of shots.

Gill said about 20 women and children, thought to be relatives of the radicals, were still inside.

Earlier Saturday, Indian security forces sprayed machine-gun fire to pin down the extremists. Sporadic fire was heard from Sikhs inside the sprawling temple complex, their spiritual and military stronghold.

Uttam Singh, a local Sikh leader, appealed over a loudspeaker to the militants. "People, please come out. At least allow the women, children and old people to leave," he pleaded.

"Why don't you come in!" a man inside shouted back.

About 2,800 government police and paramilitary troops, including 300 commandos from the National Security Force, surrounded the temple complex.

It is the largest show of force at the Golden Temple since 1984 when the army stormed the holy shrine to dislodge Sikh radicals. More than 1,200 were killed in that incident.

The current siege began Monday when Sikhs inside the temple complex opened fire and wounded five officers of the Central Reserve Police Force.

Commandos and government troops were deployed in sandbagged bunkers atop buildings overlooking the temple's 20-foot walls. People and food have been prevented from entering the complex since Monday, but the radicals routinely stockpile huge quantities of supplies and ammunition inside.

Hearst kidnapping film debuts at Cannes festival

CANNES, France (AP) — Patty Hearst was the center of attention Saturday at the Cannes Film Festival, where a film directed by Paul Schrader told the story of her 1974 kidnapping by an urban terrorist group.

"I've not completely lost the feeling of anger and I doubt if I ever will," Ms. Hearst said at a news conference. "But I don't carry this through my whole life."

The film "Patty Hearst" recounts how the granddaughter of newspaper magnate William Randolph Hearst was kidnapped by the Symbionese Liberation Army in San Francisco.

She was blindfolded, held prisoner in a cupboard for 57 days and subjected to revolutionary re-education. Renamed Tania, she took part in an armed bank robbery and stayed with the SLA for 18 months before the FBI arrested her in 1975.

The film covers the five years from the kidnapping to February 1979, when President Carter granted her a pardon from her seven-year prison sentence.

Ms. Hearst said she felt no personal responsibility for the criminal act she committed.

"Nothing would have happened if the kidnapping had not taken place," she said.

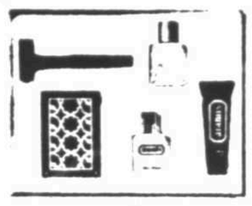

Ms. Hearst said she had read the screenplay that was based on her own account of the affair, "My Voyage in Hell," published in 1978.

She said she been asked for her comments while the film was being made, but she stayed away from the production "because it may have been uncomfortable for personal reasons."

Ms. Hearst was pleased with the film when she saw it.

"I was afraid it would be sex, guns and rock 'n roll but it wasn't," she said.

"The film portrays the visions and sentiments of Patty," he said. "It was never intended to be a sociological film or a comment on the times, but rather the view of a 19-year-old girl who had led a sheltered life."

Pope John Paul expresses sympathy in Peru

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Pope John Paul II arrived Saturday evening in poor, terrorism-plagued Peru and heard a plea from President Alan Garcia to reach out to "those who are sick with hate and who kill and destroy with violence."

John Paul, on a 12-day, four-nation mission to South America, arrived from neighboring Bolivia on an antiquated Aeroperu DC-8 jet.

At Lima's airport he expressed his sympathy with "the huge multitude that has experienced grief, violence, abandonment and hunger" in Peru.

Later Saturday evening, scattered blackouts attributed to leftist sabotage hit Lima while the pope was addressing priests, nuns and seminary students but did not affect the downtown area surrounding the colonial-era cathedral where he was.

Outside the cathedral in Lima's central plaza the pope consecrated a Peruvian version of the Virgin Mary. Tens of thousands of people cheered, waved white handkerchiefs and shouted, "Viva," Spanish for "long life." Then the pontiff retired for the night in the Vatican Embassy.

Small dynamite charges exploded in at least four spots in the city during Saturday night's papal activities, but police said no one was hurt. Authorities attributed the blasts to insurgents.

Earlier in the day about 20 women disrupted a Mass in a Roman Catholic church in Lima, the capital, and appealed in the pope's name for respect for the rights of leftist rebels held in local prisons. Guerrillas in a mountain town ambushed an army convoy and killed three soldiers.

A military intelligence officer, who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity, said two men posing as police with automatic rifles were arrested on the papal motorcade route from the Lima airport to downtown. He said there was an order to shoot and kill any armed suspect near the pope.

Echoing a theme he stressed before in Bolivia and Uruguay, the pope cited Peru's "hunger for bread" and called on its citizens to build "a more fraternal and just society."

Garcia, a nationalistic social reformer who has halted virtually all payment of Peru's $14.6 billion foreign debt, demanded a fairer shake for poor nations of the Third World.

"We reject the usurious terms of the foreign debt," the president told John Paul at the airport.

"Don't go away, holy father. Don't leave us," Bolivian vice president Julio Garrett Ayllon told the pope during a farewell ceremony, repeating a chant heard throughout the pontiff's five-day Bolivian stay.

Addressing a Mass on Saturday in the Amazon basin city of Trinidad, the pope insisted that "constant, intense, honest and efficient work by everyone" was needed to overcome poverty. "We can't expect everything from outside."

It has been three years since the pope has been to Peru, a country bloodied by an unrelenting leftist insurgency. When he was here in 1985 he pleaded with rebels to abandon their armed struggle to overthrow Peru's elected government.

Syrian buildup expected to be completed today

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Thousands of tank-led Syrian troops rolled down from Lebanon's central mountains Saturday and prepared to enter the slums of south Beirut, where Western hostages are believed held by pro-Iranian extremists.

By nightfall more than 4,000 soldiers and 250 tanks and armored personnel carriers were deployed at the edge of the 16-square-mile slum area, buttressing 7,500 Syrian troops already in west Beirut, military sources said.

"The buildup is expected to be completed sometime Sunday, perhaps at daybreak or a little later, after which the forces will move in," one source said on condition of anonymity.

The guns fell silent in the embattled slums when the Syrians arrived, police said.

The move followed the conquest of the slums by fundamentalist fighters of the Iranian-allied Hezbollah, or Party of God, in nine days of savage fighting with the pro-Syrian Amal Shiite Moslem militia. Police said 211 people were killed.

Police estimate Hezbollah has 3,000 combatants fighting Amal, which has thrown about 6,500 militiamen into the battle.

The vanguard of the incoming Syrian forces Saturday rumbled across south Beirut's Ouzai coastal highway at 5 p.m. in 48 T-55 Soviet-made tanks with gunners atop their swinging turrets.

They were led by Brig. Gen. Ghazi Kenaan, Syria's military intelligence chief in Lebanon, and Maj. Gen. Saeed Beirakdar, commander in chief of the Syrian forces in Lebanon.

They headed the battalion in a chauffeured, bulletproof, dark blue Mercedes. Truckloads of infantrymen and ammunition and jeeps mounted with 106mm recoilless guns streamed in afterwards.

Hundreds of plainclothes Syrian secret servicemen at all gateways to the slums blocked reporters and photographers from entering.

Kenaan and Beirakdar, flanked by senior aides, met for an hour with Amal's chieftain Nabih Berri, who is also Lebanon's justice minister, at his heavily fortified house in west Beirut Saturday night.

"They have agreed that the Syrians will go into the slums but not into the nearby Palestinian refugee camps" where rival factions also have been fighting, a Berri spokesman said later on condition of anonymity.

A high-ranking Lebanese military source, also speaking privately, said the Syrian reinforcements were "going to move in peacefully under an agreement being worked out by the presidents of Iran and Syria."

The reinforcements were coming from the Bekaa Valley, where Syria maintains the bulk of 25,000 troops stationed in eastern and northern Lebanon, the source said.

The move came on the heels of a Syrian threat of "immediate and drastic treatment" after Hezbollah's forces stormed through the last Amal stronghold.

"After advancing across half of Shiyah, Hezbollah now controls 90 percent of south Beirut," reported a police spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Noriega prepares for years of confrontation with U.S.

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Despite months of U.S. sanctions and a crumbling economy, Gen. Manuel Noriega is hardening his position and preparing for months or possibly years more of confrontation with the United States.

A confident Noriega on Friday sallied into the provinces, where he was cheered by peasants and hailed by small-town officials. Accompanied by several colonels in a show of military unity, Panama's defiant leader, accused in the United States of drug trafficking, dismissed prospects for a negotiated settlement with the United States.

Noriega's comments to journalists indicated he considers himself and Panama a test case of historical proportions and that he is determined to rise to the occasion and challenge U.S. might.

"Everything fell apart," he said in La Negrita, 90 miles west of the capital, when asked about recent U.S.-Panamanian talks aimed at resolving Panama's political crisis over Noriega's leadership.

The Washington Post, citing unidentified sources, reported in its Sunday editions that negotiations were at a delicate stage and that administration officials believed a deal would be struck within a few days or the talks would collapse.

The administration is offering to drop drug-trafficking charges against Noriega if he relinquished office Aug. 12 and left the country, the newspaper said. In addition, the administration would continue to recognize ousted President Eric Arturo Delvalle but also would allow Solis Palma, Noriega's handpicked chief of state, to continue as Panama's acting president through the May 1989 elections, the newspaper said.

The Post said there were conflicting reports on when Noriega could return to Panama under the deal, but one source said it would be after the elections.

On Wednesday, U.S. media also reported that a Washington-Noriega deal was nearly complete. They said it involved Noriega stepping down and accepting temporary exile in exchange for dismissal of the drug charges.

His lawyers plan to appear in court to request dismissal of the drug charges in about a month. They contend the charges are politically motivated.

"The general isn't going anywhere," his spokesman, Maj. Edgardo Lopez, told The Associated Press in Rio Hato, where small-town mayors met with Noriega. A document signed by 505 mayors called Noriega "the incarnation of Panama's struggle against imperialism" and praised him "for walking among the humble and speaking their language."

Noriega, a mestizo of lower middle-class origins, has tried to present the crisis as a conflict pitting a domineering Washington allied with local rich white "sellouts" against Panama's darker-skinned and poorer majority.

Marcos pledges support to Aquino

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos pledged his support to President Corazon Aquino on Saturday and promised that if she let him come home for his mother's funeral, he would not try a coup.

About 5,000 people rallied to demand that Marcos be allowed to attend the funeral of his mother, Josefa Edralin-Marcos, who died May 4. She was 95. No date for the funeral has been set. Family members have ber hoping Mrs. Aquino would change her mind about Marcos attending.

Mrs. Aquino ruled out allowing Marcos to return. The government also said Saturday that Marcos must repay the billions he allegedly stole during his 20 years in power before he can come home from exile in Hawaii and ordered its consulate in Hawaii to block his return.

Marcos spokesman Gemmo Trinidad read Marcos' statement by telephone from Hawaii, where Marcos lives in exile. In the statement, broadcast by Manila radio stations, Marcos promised he would not exploit his return to undermine her government.

"I reiterate that I oppose violence, that I have no intention of mounting a coup d'etat or causing a civil war," the Marcos statement said. "I, therefore, advise my supporters and those who are fighting for the very same democratic principles that I stand for not to engage in any disruptive and more violent activities."

But in a telegram to the Philippine consulate in Honolulu, the presidential palace said Mrs. Aquino remained convinced Marcos' return would undermine national security.

Marcos supporters have been linked to several attempts to topple the Aquino government.

The telegram, released by the palace to news organizations, also said Mrs. Aquino would "allow him to come back if he returns all the wealth he stole from the country."

Mrs. Aquino's government claims Marcos and his associates siphoned off up to $10 billion during his 20-year administration before he fled after a February 1986 popular uprising.

Marcos' statement also urged his supporters to "join forces with Madame Aquino" to oppose communist rebels and others who "challenge the stability of the current government."

The ousted president said that allowing him to return would "not only adhere to the noble principle of humanitarianism but also would unite various political forces...into an overpowering force which would prevent bloodshed...and at the same time solve the present economic sufferings of our people."

On Friday, Marcos claimed he was negotiating with Manila and Washington to return for the funeral.

Mrs. Aquino's spokesman, Teodoro Benigno, said Friday's statement was meaningless, and U.S. Ambassador Nicholas Platt told reporters that American officials "just haven't been involved at all" in negotiations regarding Marcos' return.

Marcos loyalists gathered in 100-degree weather Saturday and marched to the Mendiola Bridge about 300 yards from the presidential palace. March leader Salvador Panelo said they would remain there until Mrs. Aquino reversed her decision or Marcos appeared before them. But by sundown, the crowd had largely dispersed.

Protesters carried banners reading "Give Us Marcos or Give Us Death." Others claimed Marcos was the only one who could stop the communist insurgency, which erupted and spread nationwide during his administration.

Also Saturday, a bomb exploded at military headquarters, killing one soldier, officials said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

15 bodies found in building collapse

AGUASCALIENTES, Mexico (AP) — Army and civilian rescuers chipped away at concrete slabs Saturday to try to reach two people still missing in a building collapse that killed at least 15 people, officials said.

A state communique said the death toll from Thursday's collapse rose to 15 on Saturday and may go as high as 17. The Red Cross listed 19 dead, Juan Diaz Andrade, in charge of special services for the local agency said.

Rescuers believe they have located the body of one of the missing and believe the second also is dead, said the communique issued Saturday.

Fifty-seven people were injured in the accident and 12 of them hospitalized, the report said.

The governor of Aguascalientes, Miguel Angel Barbarena Vega, visited the site Saturday and said an investigation to determine why the four-story building collapsed will be stepped up Monday.

The building housed a furniture factory on the ground floor and part of the three-level basement area. It gave way as concrete was being poured during construction of three more floors that were being added on.

It is common in Mexico for buildings to be occupied during construction of upper floors.

Premier still in power

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Communist premier Branko Mikulic on Saturday survived calls for his resignation from Yugoslavia's most Westernized republics when the parliament rejected their plan to topple his government.

In a 75-minute speech to the Federal Assembly, Yugoslavia's national parliament, Mikulic denounced Slovenia and Croatia, the two most advanced of Yugoslavia's six republics, for demanding a vote of no confidence in his administration.

The parliament then held separate closed debates in its two chambers, the Federal Chamber and the Chamber of Republics and Provinces. Each chamber voted against even calling a vote on the Slovenian and Croatian proposals for a no-confidence motion, the Tanjug news agency said.

If Mikulic had been voted out of office, it would have been the first such vote against a Communist government anywhere in Eastern Europe.

Yugoslav television said the Federal Chamber voted 125 to 64 in a show of hands against a no-confidence motion. The vote in the other chamber was 64 to 23, Tanjug said.

Woman admits to crimes

CARDIFF, Wales (AP) — A 21-year-old woman admitted in court that she committed 2,257 crimes in a four-year spree that netted 291 cars and other goods worth more than $2 million.

Sharon Head, who wrote a 37-page confession after talking to police for 165 hours, was sentenced to 4½ years in prison Friday by Judge Martin Stephens at Cardiff Crown Court.

"The catalogue of crimes you committed almost defies belief," the judge said.

Ms. Head, who has a 5-year-old son and 3-year-old daughter, said she became involved with a gang of criminals as a teen-ager.

"All I can say is that I was a very stupid person and I am deeply sorry," she said. "I want to get all the crimes cleared up. I want to start afresh."

Ms. Head was arrested after starting a series of fires in a house in Cardiff where she had lived.

35 killed in explosion

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — At least 35 people burned to death when an oil tank truck exploded in the northern city of Kano, spewing a wall of flame that trapped victims in nearby automobiles and buses, newspapers reported today.

Lagos Guardian, an independent newspaper, said the death toll was high because two buses were among vehicles caught in the blaze. The driver of the truck escaped unhurt from Friday night's accident.

MAKING YOUR FINANCES FIT

from Patteann Daniel

Reappraising Your Financial Situation

Once the tax returns are filed, many people would just as soon put away the figures and not consider taxes and finances for another year. Yet the necessary gathering of information offers an opportunity to figure out where you are and where you're going.

Are you still paying off auto loans and credit card balances? Only 40 percent of the interest expense is deductible in 1988; 20 percent in 1989; 10 percent in 1990; then no deduction.

Now that the floor on medical deductions has been raised to 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income, it is more difficult to defray medical costs with tax benefits; plan now to improve your health coverage.

Non-reimbursed business expenses, with other miscellaneous deductions, are now subject to a floor of 2 percent of adjusted gross income. If you've been paying your own business expenses, this may be the year to discuss alternate arrangements with your employer.

"Dear Walgreens:

This is a note of praise. Your pharmacist on duty the morning of Sunday, Jan. 31st was most helpful. I had come in to get a prescription filled for my daughter. When I got there I discovered the doctor had prescribed a medicine she was allergic to. Your pharmacist was very kind and helpful, even letting me use his phone to call the doctor. I doubt if many pharmacists would have been so nice.

I'll admit I was a "bargain shopper" and usually went to a discount drug store. However, I knew Walgreens would be the only drug store open at 9 am on a Sunday morning.

I learned that some things are more important than price—like service—and I now plan on doing all of my prescription buying at Walgreens. Thank you Walgreens!"

New book rehashes Kennedy-Chappaquiddick incident

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the hours after his car plunged off the bridge at Chappaquiddick, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy wanted to tell police that Mary Jo Kopechne was alone in the car, according to a new book about the accident.

In an account attributed to Kennedy cousin Joseph Gargan, Kennedy told Gargan and a friend, Paul Markham, the morning after the accident that "I'm going to say that Mary Jo was driving." Kopechne drowned in the accident, which has shadowed Kennedy's political career for 19 years.

The book, by Leo Damore, is "Senatorial Privilege: The Chappaquiddick Coverup," and is purportedly based, in part, on the first extensive interviews Gargan has ever given for publication. Gargan and Markham went with Kennedy to the bridge shortly after the accident to try to rescue Kopechne from the submerged car.

A statement issued by Kennedy spokesman Jeff Smith said: "As the record shows, no reputable publisher would touch this book. The charges about senator Kennedy are false. The book is an irresponsible rehash of all the old rumor and innuendo, and we have no intention of making any further comment."

Gargan, a lawyer who is now a member of the Massachusetts state Insurance Division's Board of Appeals, did not return repeated telephone calls over the past week. Contacted recently by the Cape Cod Times, he said: "My God, that was 19 years ago. It's just not worthy of discussing anymore."

The book is being published by Regnery Gateway, a conservative publishing house based in Washington, after being rejected by a number of New York publishers. Damore, of Old Saybrook, Conn., is a former Cape Cod resident who has written several books, including a flattering account of John F. Kennedy's years on the cape.

Random House had given Damore a $250,000 contract, but cancelled it, saying an early version of the book was too unwieldy and that the author failed to provide tape recordings to authenticate the Gargan interviews. Penthouse magazine canceled an excerpt plan on ground that Damore couldn't verify key parts of the Gargan interviews.

But Jimmy Smith, a former Kennedy campaign aide and now a U.S. magistrate on Cape Cod, said in a telephone interview that he was present for nearly all of the Damore-Gargan sessions, in 1983. He declined to go over specifics, but vouched for the book's accuracy. Gargan also read the book and made corrections prior to publication, Smith said.

According to Damore, Gargan told him Kennedy concocted the proposal that authorities be told Kopechne was alone in the senator's Oldsmobile when it plunged off tiny Dike Bridge over an inlet on the east side of the Massachusetts island.

The accident occurred the weekend of July 18-19, 1969. Kopechne was one of six women known as the "boiler room girls" who had worked on Robert F. Kennedy's 1968 presidential campaigns and who attended a party Gargan had organized.

"Kennedy was having alternative ideas about the situation," wrote author Damore. "Why couldn't Mary Jo have been driving the car? Why couldn't she have let him off and driven to the ferry herself and made a wrong turn?"

"Kennedy asked to be brought back to the cottage to establish the story. After a while he could leave. Kennedy suggested that when he was back (in Edgartown), Gargan could 'discover' the accident and report to police that Mary Jo had been alone in the car."

But Gargan purportedly rejected the idea, noting that the trio did not even know if Miss Kopechne could drive or had a license.

The senator testified at an official inquest that he "had full intention of reporting" the accident when the trio returned to the Chappaquiddick ferry landing and the senator swam back to Edgartown alone. But he said the tide was pulling him out and "for the second time that evening I knew I was going to drown."

The next morning Markham and Gargan arrived at the Edgartown hotel to find a freshly shaven and neatly dressed Kennedy chatting with several acquaintances about sailing on the hotel balcony. He had not reported the accident.

"I told them about my own thoughts and feelings as I swam across that channel...that somehow when they arrived in the morning that they were going to say that Mary Jo was still alive," the senator has said.

The book said Kennedy did not decide to tell police that he was driving until speaking by telephone with aide David Burke. It took about 10 hours for Kennedy to report the accident, an action that he later called "irrational and indefensible and inexcusable and inexplicable."

The senator pleaded guilty to a charge of leaving the scene of an accident. He received a two-month suspended sentence and had his license revoked for a year.

A manuscript of the book, which is scheduled to be published June 23, was made available to The Associated Press. Washingtonian magazine said it plans to run excerpts in its June issue.

The book quotes Gargan as saying to Kennedy, in 1982, "I've given you 30 years of my life and what do I have to show for it? I'm a fool in the eyes of my own children because of Chappaquiddick."

Mecham trial begins this week

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Impeached former Gov. Evan Mecham, facing trial this week on charges of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan, proclaimed faith in his innocence but uncertainty about whether he will be acquitted.

Mecham remained in the spotlight Saturday, attending his state party convention and narrowly winning a seat at the Republican National Convention.

Mecham, who was removed from office April 4 by the Legislature, could be sentenced to up to 22 years in prison if found guilty on all six felony counts of perjury, willful concealment and filing false documents.

His brother and 1986 campaign treasurer, Willard Mecham, will be tried on three similar counts.

The legal woes did not stop delegates to the state Republican convention Saturday from picking Mecham to be one of the state's 33 delegates when the party convenes this summer in New Orleans.

Mecham finished 17th in the balloting for 18 at-large delegates after losing a bid for one of the delegate seats allocated by congressional district.

Mecham, one of the 717 delegates to his state party convention, said before voting that he believed he had "strong support" from rank-and-file party workers. Mecham supports Vice President George Bush, but Bush campaign officials said Mecham was not on their list of recommended delegates.

In the criminal case, Mecham and his brother are accused of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan from Tempe developer Barry Wolfson by failing to report it on Evan Mecham's personal or campaign financial statements.

"I have committed no crime," Mecham, 64, said in a telephone interview last week. "I should be found innocent because I don't feel myself guilty as far as I can see."

However, Mecham shied away from predicting he will be exonerated by a Maricopa County Superior Court jury and indicated he still may be open to a plea agreement if it didn't involve pleading guilty to a felony, a condition that prosecutors have rejected previously.

Mecham's 15-month governorship was a stormy one, beginning with his cancellation of a Martin Luther King holiday for state workers and ending with his repeated claims that his political and legal problems were the result of a massive conspiracy.

He was removed from office when the Senate convicted him of trying to thwart an investigation into an alleged death threat and misusing $80,000 from a protocol fund by loaning it to his auto dealership.

The Senate dismissed a charge stemming from the campaign loan after some senators argued that voting on it would prejudice Mecham's criminal case.

On Monday, attorneys were set to present oral arguments before the state Court of Appeals on a defense request to throw out the indictment. If they fail there, defense attorneys plan to go to the state Supreme Court.

If there is no delay, jury selection is scheduled to begin Thursday.

In insisting that he broke no laws, Mecham has advanced several arguments:

— That the October 1986 loan was actually reported properly because it was lumped with other funds and listed as a $465,000 loan from Mecham to his campaign. The funds were lumped together as a "time-saving matter," Mecham said.

— That the failure to report the loan was an "honest mistake" by Willard Mecham, who filled out the financial reports "the best he knew how."

— That Mecham is the victim of selective prosecution because other public officials have amended their reports without facing criminal charges.

Teachers said to be crucial in AIDS fight

ATLANTA (AP) — Teachers have a crucial role to play in fighting AIDS and can not only shape the lives of young people but "actually save those lives," says the president of the National Education Association.

"Children trust their teachers and they will go to their teachers for information. We must have factual information and know how to respond to young people," said Mary Hatwood Futrell, attending a three-day AIDS education conference sponsored by the NEA and the Centers for Disease Control.

Educators at the conference are discussing patterns of AIDS infection among young people, problems teachers face in AIDS education, legal issues and other topics.

"Some will say...'Here you go again, getting involved in social issues,' but educators and students will not be immune" from AIDS, Ms. Futrell said in an interview Friday.

Dr. Gary Noble, CDC deputy director for AIDS, said the conference is aimed at helping teachers educate their students about the deadly disease.

"No one should die of ignorance," Noble said. "No child should reach the age of sexual maturity or experimentation with IV (intravenous) drugs without knowing about (AIDS virus) transmission. Teachers have a most unique opportunity to bring the facts out."

The conference was addressed Friday by John W. Washburn Jr., an AIDS patient who is retired superintendent of the Brighton School District near Rochester, N.Y.

"We can put a stop to this plague. You have important roles in this task," Washburn said.

Washburn, 48, was diagnosed last spring with AIDS and publicly disclosed his illness in January. He then embarked on a series of appearances and speeches to educate high school and college students and teachers about the disease.

Washburn said he does not think he is being unfairly exploited as a gay man willing to talk openly about his illness.

"Exploit me," he said. "My time is limited. I want to be exploited by whoever can use me to put windows on what is now happening with AIDS and what is likely to happen.

"My years in public school work have groomed me...I'm not embarrassed by the questions."

Other scheduled participants in the conference, which concludes Sunday, include officials and researchers of the Atlanta-based CDC.

Officials say Contras may face disintegration

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nicaraguan Contras, poorly supplied and politically divided, may face disintegration, with impact beyond Nicaragua's borders, according to U.S. officials.

Less than two months after the rebels signed a temporary cease-fire agreement with Nicaragua's leftist government, administration analysts on Central America say the Contras' future seems bleak for a variety of reasons:

— Up to 3,000 rebels, denied delivery of U.S. humanitarian aid shipments, have fled across the Nicaraguan border into Honduras in search of food.

— Serious rifts have emerged in the Contra ranks. An undetermined number of rebels mutinied recently against military commander Enrique Bermudez at a Contra camp in southern Honduras. Bermudez also faces opposition from at least two members of the rebel political directorate.

— If fighting resumes after the current cease fire ends on June 1, the Contras have enough military supplies to last only one to two months. Congress rejected President Reagan's military aid request on Feb. 3 and there is little support at present for a reversal of that decision.

— Soviet military supplies are continuing to flow to the Sandinistas at a rate slightly ahead of the 1987 pace. According to U.S. estimates, Soviet military deliveries totaled $105 million for the first three months of 1988.

"The Contras seem to be in the process of disintegrating," said one official, insisting on anonymity. "The consolidation of Sandinista rule is upon us."

The official said all of the predictions he and some others in the administration had made in February after the congressional rejection of Contra aid are being borne out.

Specifically, he said the aid vote has contributed to increasing right-left political polarization in Guatemala, reflected in a failed military coup attempt there last week, and in El Salvador, where the rightist ARENA party won impressively in national elections in March, the official said.

He added that the prospective demise of the U.S.-backed rebels in Nicaragua has had the effect of "emboldening" leftist guerrillas in El Salvador who are aligned with the Sandinistas.

These views, however, are not universally shared in the administration. Another official, also speaking privately, said the trends in Guatemala and El Salvador are the result of internal developments unrelated to the situation in Nicaragua.

The prevailing view among more conservative members of the administration is that consolidation of Sandinista rule would generate nervousness in neighboring countries, forcing them to shift priorities from democratic development to concerns over internal security.

If military coups occur, Congress would retaliate by drastically reducing assistance, creating both economic hardship and increasing sympathy for leftist rebels, according to this scenario.

The Contras and the Sandinistas signed a temporary truce in Sapoa, Nicaragua, on March 23. They agreed to try to negotiate a permanent cease-fire during a 60-day period starting April 1.

With the deadline for reaching agreement on formally ending their six-year war just two weeks away, there has been virtually no progress toward that objective.

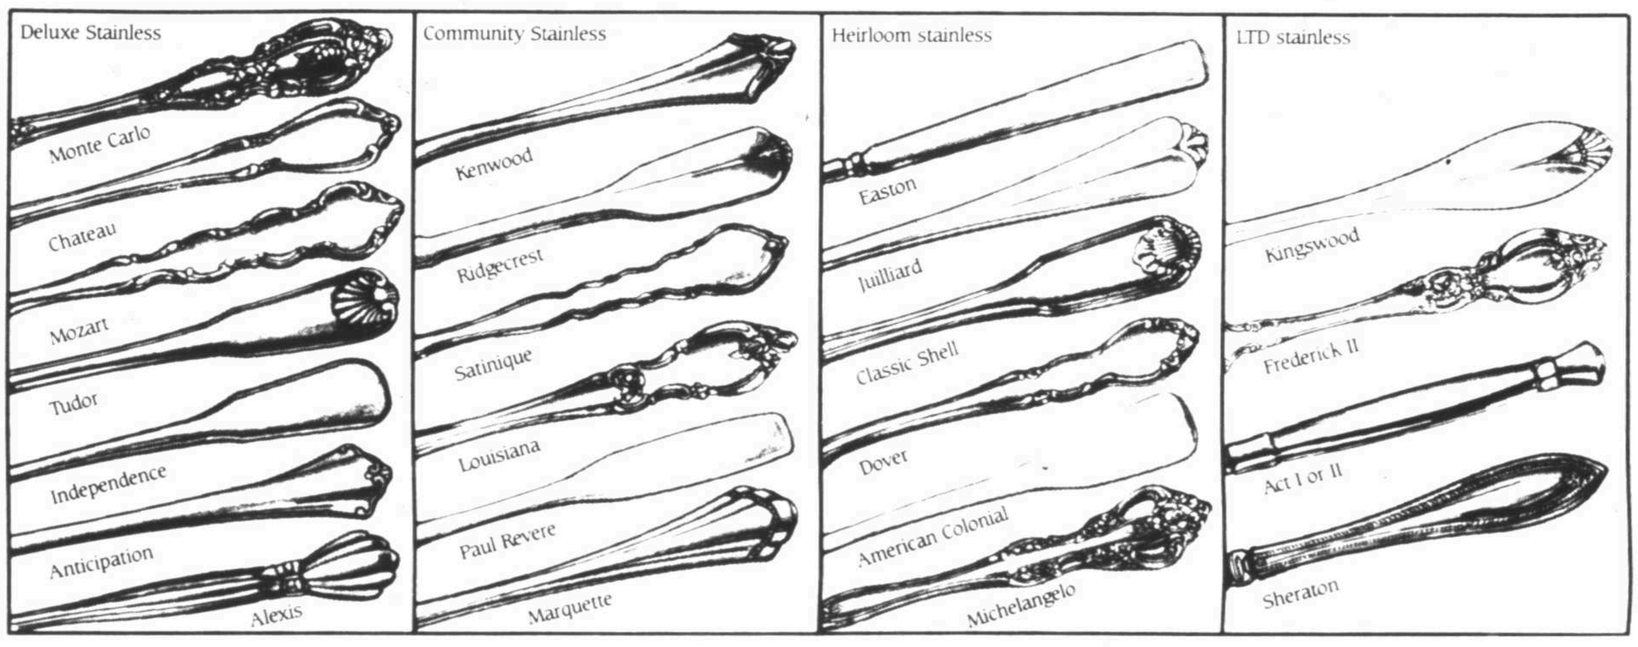

Disputes between the Sandinistas and the Contras have prevented delivery of U.S. humanitarian aid to the rebels inside Nicaragua, leaving the administration with no option but to try to send them cash via couriers.

Dukakis heckled by gays

Associated Press

Democrat Michael Dukakis was heckled Saturday by gay political activists over his stand on their rights to be foster parents, while Republican George Bush fended off a corporate executive's criticism of Reagan administration policies on taxes and trade.

Both parties' presidential frontrunners were spending the weekend campaigning in the West, where the the bulk of the final round of primaries will be held in the next two weeks.

Dukakis, speaking to several dozen homosexual activists at a political action committee meeting in Los Angeles, promised, "You're going to be deeply involved in what we do."

But the Massachusetts governor was challenged over a policy in his state giving low priority to homosexual couples who want to be foster parents.

Dukakis said he favored the Massachusetts policy "because I think it's best, all things being equal, for a child to grow up in a household with a mother and father and other children."

His defense of that policy was met with some hisses from the crowd and occasional shouts of protest. One man shouted, "bigot," and another yelled, "You're anti-gay. Why don't you admit it?"

Dukakis later shrugged off the hostile reception, saying, "It was lively. That's what democracy is all about."

His aides, nevertheless, were pleased with the way the meeting went. "I thought it was very good, very open," said Alice Travis, national political coordinator for the campaign.

Meanwhile, Bush toured an Intel microchip plant in Oregon, where the company's board chairman, Robert Noyce, told the vice president of a need for higher taxes and for President Reagan to sign the trade bill.

"I don't think that there is any chance of a balanced budget without new taxes," said Noyce.

Reagan on Saturday repeated his vow to veto a trade bill passed by Congress because of a provision requiring large companies to notify employees in advance of plant closings.

"The plant-closing aspect of the trade bill does not seem onerous to us," Noyce said. "It is no less than we would do in any case."

Bush said he was not swayed by Noyce's arguments.

The vice president also sought to take the high ground on the issue of the environment, saying, "For too long we have given away the playing field to the Democrats on the environment. I want to make the environment a Republican issue."

Jesse Jackson, campaigning in California, took the environment as his theme, saying he would seek a ban of exploratory offshore oil drilling along the state's north coast forever.

Jackson addressed an enthusiastic crowd in Mendocino using a solar-powered loudspeaker.

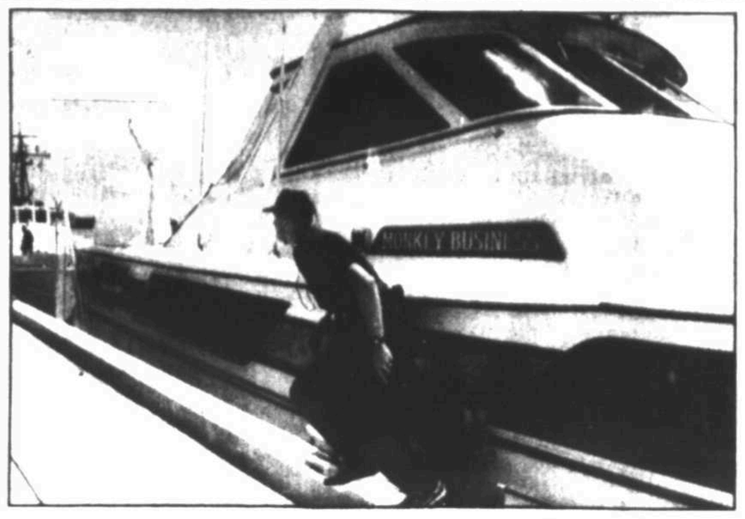

"This plan to drill for oil, pollute the ocean, and dirty the air is environmental violence, it's economic violence," Jackson said.

New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, speaking in Portland, Ore., on Saturday, said he believes Dukakis will win the Democratic presidential nomination but will need Jackson's help to win in November.

"A Jesse Jackson who is an impassioned part of the effort to support Mike Dukakis if Mike wins, and that's the way it looks, that would be helpful, absolutely," Cuomo said.

The next two weeks mark the close to the primary season with Oregon's primary on Tuesday, followed a week later with primaries in California, New Jersey, New Mexico and Montana.

Meanwhile, other states were wrapping up the final rounds of their delegate selection with state and district conventions over the weekend.

Coast Guard find pot on yacht Hart used for trip with model

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The luxury yacht Monkey Business, which ferried former presidential candidate Gary Hart to the Bahamas with model Donna Rice, was seized Saturday when U.S. Coast Guard officers found marijuana on it, officials said.

"They found one gram of marijuana, that's one-twenty-eighth of an ounce. According to 'Zero Tolerance,' if we find enough to test positive it's enough to seize the vesssel," said Petty Officer Dan Vogeley.

The 82-foot yacht was boarded during a routine safety check about 22 miles northwest of the Bahamian island of Bimini, and a member of the boarding party spotted rolling papers used to make marijuana cigarettes.

"We consider that probable cause," said Vogely. A search uncovered a single joint of marijuana in the pocket of a jacket hanging in a closet; the cutter Cape Shoalwater then escorted the yacht to the Coast Guard base here.

During a dockside search, Coast Guard Lt. Jim McCauley said his men found an additional 8 grams of marijuana in another garment hanging in a closet.

The four people on board, whose names were not released, have not been arrested because the marijuana has not been linked to anybody, Vogeley said.

Vogeley said the yacht, worth at least $1 million, is currently registered to Turnberry Isle Marina, and the four crewmembers were wearing Turnberry Isle t-shirts.

When Hart, his friend William Broadhurst, Ms. Rice and her friend Lynn Armandt took their trip in March 1987 to Bimini, about 55 miles east of Miami, the chartered yacht was owned by millionaire developer Donald Soffer and kept at Turnberry Isle in North Miami Beach.

Hart withdrew from the race for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination on May 8, 1987, only weeks after he had announced his candidacy, when The Miami Herald revealed his liaison with Ms. Rice.

Hart, who also had Ms. Rice as a weekend guest at his home in Washington, maintained that the relationship and the trip to Bimini were innocent. He eventually reentered the race, but did not do well and finally withdrew again.

Celebrities who have visited the Monkey Business' rosewood-paneled staterooms include Elizabeth Taylor, Jack Nicholson, Lucille Ball, Elton John, Julio Iglesias and James Caan.

St. Louis tops cities for weather-related deaths

DOVER, Del. (AP) — Summer heat waves are deadlier for Northerners and Midwesterners than for Southerners, where almost no one dies when the mercury soars, a researcher says.

The top six cities for weather-related deaths are St. Louis, New York, Philadelphia, Detroit, Kansas City, Mo., and Chicago, said Dr. Lawrence Kalkstein of the University of Delaware's Center for Climatic Research.

During an average summer, 183 people die in St. Louis because of weather alone, Kalkstein said. In New York, it's 139 and in Philadelphia, 118.

The cities with the lowest weather-related death rates are southern areas: Dallas, New Orleans and Oklahoma City.

"In those three cities in an average summer season, almost no one dies" from heat-related problems, Kalkstein said.

When the temperature in a city exceeds a certain threshold, such as 92 degrees in New York, the number of people who die can increase by up to 50 percent, Kalkstein said.

Kalkstein determined the threshold temperatures using a weather stress index in work funded by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

In a $225,000 study funded by the Environmental Protection Administration, Kalkstein is looking at other aspects of weather's impact on human health, such as pollution and the effect of world temperatures that are expected to continue rising into the year 2060.

The EPA has given Kalkstein scenarios for determining what will happen as temperatures go up.

Kalkstein said, however, that the future heat-related death rate is uncertain because it's unknown whether people will acclimatize, or adjust to increasingly warm weather.

"We wonder if New Yorkers will react like they do today or like people in Jacksonville, (Fla.)," Kalkstein said.

Assuming people do not adjust, if the temperature warms by 7 degrees, New York would see an estimated 1,294 deaths instead of the current 139, said Kalkstein, who arrived at the figures by combining weather and death-rate data. St. Louis would face 1,664 deaths instead of 183.

In general, people adjust, so there is "no real reason to believe they won't acclimatize in the future. But we're concerned that conditions might get so much warmer that it might be too much for humans to tolerate," Kalkstein said.

As the Earth warms, Kalkstein said, there are other factors to consider, such as housing.

"St. Louis is the best example. Most inner-city people live in red brick houses with black roofs. Even if people acclimatize, those houses will be uninhabitable for humans" because they will be too hot, he explained.

People over age 65 were more stressed in hot weather than others, Kalkstein said. He determined that the elderly are generally more affected by hot, dry days, while younger people are more affected by hot, humid weather.

The duration of hot weather appeared to have more effect on death rates than the intensity of the heat, Kalkstein said.

"In the summer, the kind of day that killed most people was not necessarily a day when it got very, very hot, but it got pretty hot and remained warm all day and all night," he said.

Battle to save art deco hotel heating up

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The battle to keep a landmark art deco hotel from being turned into a parking lot heated up as preservationists and the city struggled to save it and the owner began pulling plumbing from the building.

"People are distressed and distraught that we would be losing a building," Nancy Liebman, legislative liaison for the Miami Design Preservation League, said Friday as a work crew carted plumbing and scrap metal from the beachfront Senator Hotel.

"While it's still here, it's worth a continuous battle," she said.

The three-story, green-and-white hotel was built in 1939, and is on the National Register of Historic Places, Ms. Liebman said. It is one of 800 art deco buildings in the mile-square area that comprises the only official art deco district in the world, she said.

The closed hotel's owner, the Royale Group, must raze the Senator for parking spaces as a condition for obtaining bank loans to renovate other art deco buildings it owns, Royale attorney Harold Rosen said.

"It's not we're anti-preservation, but we have to be practical, too," Rosen said. A date for demolishing the building has not been set.

Mayor Alex Daoud said he hopes last-ditch negotiations scheduled next week with the Royale Group's owners will keep the wrecking ball away.

"We're doing everything within our power to preserve it," said Daoud, whose staff is checking legal avenues, possible land swaps and the feasibility of buying the hotel.

Preservationists will keep an eye on the building, Ms. Liebman said.

"It's hard to see where this urgent crush for parking is," she said. "The Senator has every single deco feature. It's a perfect example, an important masterpiece."

The Senator Hotel, built in 1939, is seen as it stands today in Miami Beach, Fla. The hotel is the center of a battle between the owners and preservationists and the city. The owners want to tear it down.

The art deco district's buildings are painted pastel colors and sport geometric designs, its sidewalks are painted pink and it's often featured on NBC's "Miami Vice" television show.

The city is pushing for the renovation of the district's buildings in its effort to bring back the glory days of tourism. The 70-room Senator is a crucial part of the district, said Barbara Capitman, president of the Art Deco Society of Miami Beach and the National Art Deco Societies of America.

"The Senator...has probably the most famous etched glass in the district," Mrs. Capitman said. "It is a particularly seductive building."

Ms. Liebman and Mrs. Capitman accuse the Royale Group of ignoring pleas from them and city officials to save the hotel, which was closed after the group bought it in 1984.

Rosen countered that in the nine months it took his clients to obtain a demolition permit, no one offered a viable alternative. He said none is expected now.

"Our people are more active in preserving than any others on the beach," Rosen said. Preservationists "have blinders on, they're not in the real world."

Daoud said he remained optimistic, but understood the Royale Group's problems.

"They first started to restore it, purchased new doors and fixtures, but what happened was they had to provide this parking," Daoud said.

"It's almost a Catch-22: you've got a developer renovating the area, doing a great job, and he's the same individual who's knocking down one of our architectural treasures to make room for parking."

Reagan insists he must veto trade bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan acknowledged today that giving workers advance notice they will be fired is "the humane thing to do," but insisted he must veto a hotly disputed trade bill because it would cost more jobs than it would save.

"It is unfortunate, but I have no choice but to send this back to Congress," Reagan said of the trade bill which contains the requirement that large company employers give 60-days notice of plant closings. The president made the remarks in his weekly radio address, delivered from his weekend retreat at Camp David, Md.

The president has repeatedly threatened to veto the 1,000-page trade bill, which was delivered to the White House on Friday. He is expected to take the action sometime next week.

Reagan said he found "many positive aspects" in the bill, but also contended that some "would move us a step further toward protectionism, others would create new bureaucracies,"

He said his main objection centered on the bill's mandatory requirements for businesses to give advance notice for layoffs or plant closings.

Such disputes must be decided between labor and management, not government, Reagan argued.

"Let me state very clearly, I believe businesses should give workers and communities just as much warning as they can when it looks as though layoffs or plant closings are going to become unavoidable," Reagan said. "Advance notice gives the community and the workers themselves some time to begin adjusting. It's the humane thing to do.

"But when big government gets in the middle of something like this, dictating all its rules and regulations, the humane way has a way of becoming inhumane," he added.

The president contended that such requirements would actually force struggling businesses to shut down at crucial times, and that management needs the flexibility of using temporary layoffs as a means of getting a business back on its feet. Reagan said the exemption in the bill, supposedly designed for such cases, is "too vague and unclear to be workable."

The core of the bill would overhaul the system for imposing import curbs to retaliate against international trade violations and aid American industries threatened by increased foreign competition.

The bill cleared the House by a 312-107 margin, more than the two-thirds needed to override a presidential veto. But it passed the Senate by 63-36, three votes shy of the two-thirds needed.

In the Democratic response, House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, told Reagan, "America needs this bill...please sign the trade bill."

NATION in brief

After 27 years in cage, gorilla walks outside

ATLANTA (AP) — He was skeptical at first, a little suspicious, not sure what to make of grass, or trees, or sunshine. After all, he hadn't seen those things in 27 years, since he was 3 years old.

But Willie B., Zoo Atlanta's star attraction, quickly grew on Friday to like his new home — a $4.5 million outdoor "rain forest" where, finally, he will live like the Western lowland gorilla he is.

As several dozen reporters, photographers and zoo staffers watched from behind trees and bushes and across protective moats, Willie B. played his part perfectly at what was a coming-out — both for him and for the once-beleaguered zoo where he lives.

Just four years ago the zoo was declared one of the worst in the nation by the Humane Society of the United States.

Friday morning, as only a few zoo employees quietly watched, Willie stepped out of his bad-weather shelter, walked around, felt rain, and ran back in.

Tabatha's funeral set

MADISONVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Transplant patient Tabatha Foster will be buried Monday following services at her family's church, a funeral director said Friday.

Willie Mae Elliot, owner of Elliot Mortuary, said the funeral was scheduled at Oak Grove Baptist Church.

Tabatha, the world's longest survivor of a five-organ transplant, died Wednesday at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh. Doctors said an infection caused her heart, kidney and liver to fail.

The girl's mother, Sandra Foster, was choir director at Oak Grove before leaving to work full-time raising money for medical bills.

The girl received a new liver, small intestines, pancreas and parts of a stomach and colon during an experimental operation that ended Nov. 1.

Plant closing debated

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Voters here may become the first in the nation to shut down an operating nuclear power plant when they consider rival ballot measures to decide the fate of the problem-plagued Rancho Seco plant.

A measure sponsored by a group called SAFE, or Sacramentans for Safe Energy, would order the permanent closure of the 14-year-old plant, one of the few publicly owned nuclear power plants in the country.

An alternative plan put on the June 7 ballot by the Sacramento Municipal Utility District, which owns Rancho Seco, in effect asks the district's voters to give the the plant 25 miles southeast of here another chance.

The utility district, which comprises Sacramento and surrounding areas with a combined population of more than 420,000, has struggled with operating problems at the plant for years.

The plant, built for $375 million by Babcock and Wilcox Inc., has a reactor design like that of Three Mile Island reactor No. 2, the site of the nation's worst commercial nuclear power plant accident in March 1979.

Pilots to return to work

HONOLULU (AP) — The pilots who safely landed an Aloha Airlines jetliner April 28 after the cabin blew open at 24,000 feet said Friday they look forward to returning to the air in a few days.

"I've ridden in a couple airplanes since the incident," the pilot, Robert Schornstheimer, said at a news conference. "I'm really more comfortable at the controls of an airplane than I am in this setting here."

Schornstheimer and co-pilot Mimi Tompkins landed the Boeing 737 on the island of Maui after a third of the cabin peeled away on a Hilo-to-Honolulu flight. A flight attendant was swept to her death and 61 passengers were injured.

A check of Federal Aviation Administration records Friday showed 14 cracks or instances of corrosion were found in several routine maintenance checks on the plane before the accident, but none of the defects was found in the area of the damage.

According to FAA records, each of the cracks or corroded areas was repaired by replacing sections of the plane's metal skin.

Preacher suspended

MARION, N.C. (AP) — The dispute over a 10-year-old Bible-quoting schoolyard preacher, who was suspended a fourth time after he refused to stop proselytizing and go to class, will wind up in court, his mother says.

"It's gone too far now," Robin Strode said Friday after her son, Duffey Strode, received his fourth suspension from Eastfield Elementary School in this tiny town in the Blue Ridge Mountains of western North Carolina.

Duffey, surrounded by dozens of reporters, stood in the school parking lot Friday morning, ignoring requests from Assistant Principal Shirley Ramsey that he stop preaching and come in out of the rain.

He accused onlookers of various sins.

"Thou shall not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain!" Duffey shouted. "Thou shalt not commit adultery! You're guilty! Even your eyes are filled with adultery! Men can't keep their eyes off women and women can't keep their eyes off men. Adulterers shall be put to death and their blood shall be upon them!"

Child launches kite rules

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (AP) — A 70-pound girl whose kite took her on an unscheduled flight returned Saturday to her liftoff site and managed to stay on the ground as she launched a new set of kite safety rules.

DeAndra Anrig's appearance ended a ban on kite flying at Shoreline Park after the 8-year-old's kite string snagged on a passing airplane March 20 and carried her 10 feet off the ground for at least 100 feet.

The third-grader from Dublin still has deep bruises on her back but was so excited about Saturday's event that she couldn't sleep Friday night, according to her mother, Debbie. She flew a stunt kite for about a minute before it fell to the grass.

"It feels fun," DeAndra said shyly to a crowd of reporters, who outnumbered other spectators. "It was fun just to get the kite up in the air and flying it."

She warned other children not to fly kites next to nearby Palo Alto Airport, from which planes were taking off and landing over the park.

War on drugs demanded

WASHINGTON (AP) — The decision by Congress to order the military into the war on drugs came despite warnings from Pentagon leaders that soldiers aren't trained for civilian law enforcement and fears it may blur the line between military and civilian authority.

"Our people are not trained to read Miranda rights. They are trained to shoot to kill," Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci told Congress last week.

Sen. Ted Steven, R-Alaska, said, "The military is uncomfortable with this, that's true, and I think there are very tricky questions here, but they have to realize that the American public wants them to help."

"There's a war going on against our people, a war of drugs, and we need the military's help in fighting that war," said Stevens.

Two weeks ago, the House voted 385-23 to order President Reagan to have the military seal off U.S. borders against drug trafficking.

Last Friday, the Senate voted 83-6 to order an expanded military role, including arrest powers for Navy officers aboard warships that stop drug boats in international waters.

Johnson Center seeks to build 'human dignity'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Tim Baker

Helping the downtrodden escape a dreary existence and find a higher plane of life is a function of Midland's Johnson Center, an intermediate care treatment facility for recovering alcoholics and drug users.

"I want to create an environment that builds strength and gives them a sense of human dignity about themselves and their fellow travelers in life's journey," said Tim Baker, the newly-appointed program coordinator for Johnson Center.

"Most of the people by the time they get here have been beaten down," Baker said. "They have lost their jobs and family, and their self-esteem is very low."

Johnson Center is a 12-bed facility for alcoholics who are in the early recovery stages, just past the "drying-out" and "sobering-up" phases early into their sobriety. But they are not yet out of "the fog" and into straight thinking.

Johnson Center, a function of the Permian Basin Community Centers for Mental Health and Mental Retardation, offers a 90-day program to encourage "the drunk" to bring discipline and spirituality into his life.

"It is not supposed to be a country club," said Baker, 44. "We are not going to tell them (alcoholics) what they ought to do with their lives. But we are going to attempt to give them some tools so they can decide for themselves what direction their lives will take as clean and sober human beings. We try to give them some semblance of respectability."

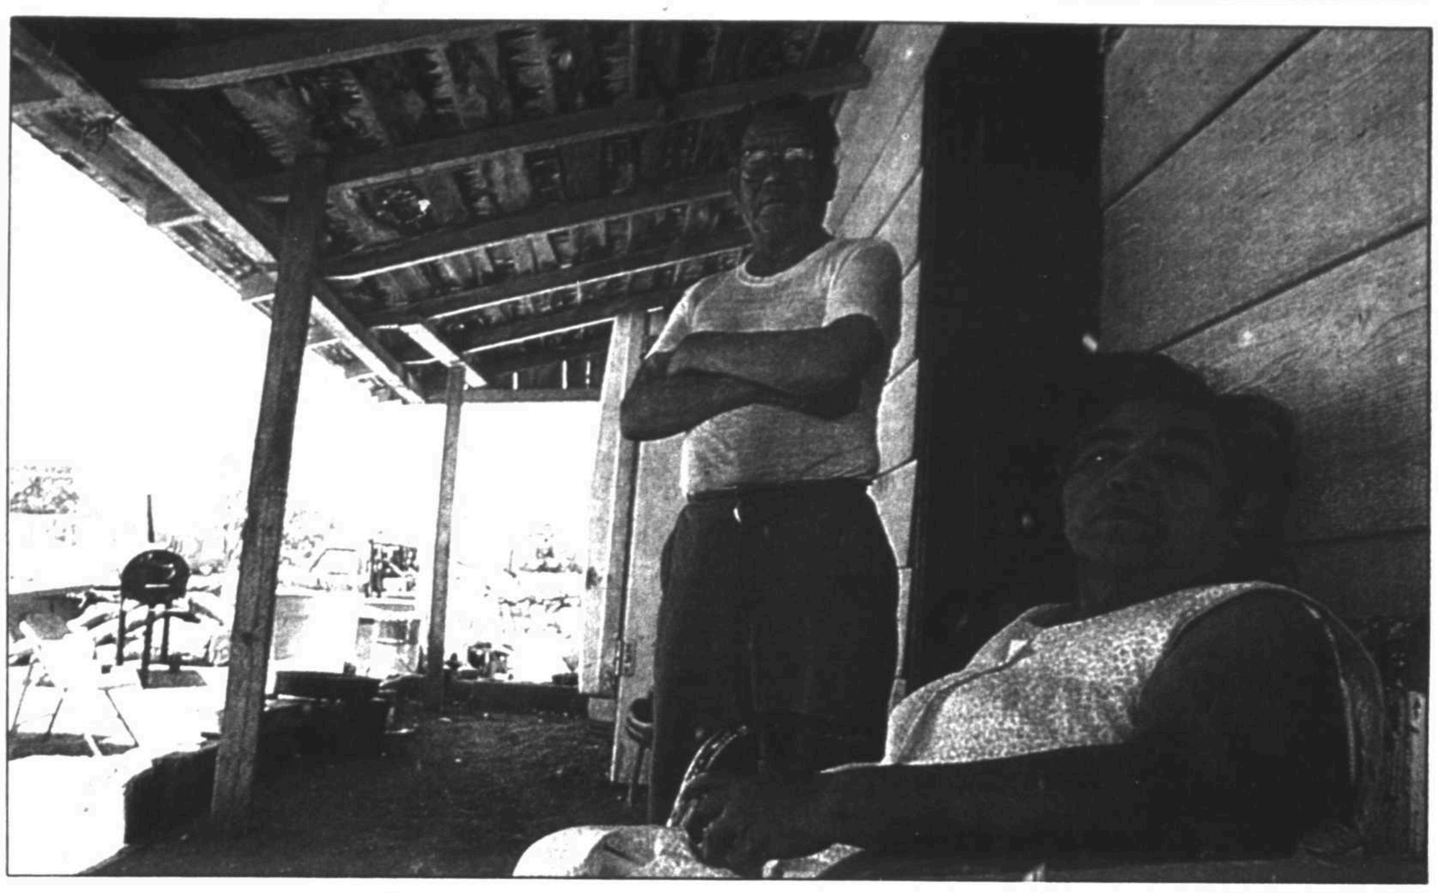

Those tools of recovery include "healthy ways of thinking and behaving."

JOHNSON CENTER began as a community detoxification facility — a "drying-out" place — where "wet" drunks who wanted to sober up and seek a new way of life could come in from off the streets, out of jail, or out of house or apartment. If needed, they would be treated medically, such as in recovering from the DTs — delirium tremens — and could begin recovering their health through good nutrition and a wholesome but austere environment.

The MHMR center was named after the late Jim and Virginia Johnson, who devoted much of their lives in volunteer efforts to help sober up drunks and to show them a better way of living.

"He (Johnson) was very, very active in the Midland Council on Alcoholism," said Watson LaForce, who helped organize Johnson Center and who is on the boards of the Midland Council on Alcoholism and the Permian Basin Community Centers for MHMR. Naming the center in honor of the Johnsons recognized their "tremendous work" with alcoholics and in alcoholism.

Midland County will receive more than $200,000 from the Texas Department of Community Affairs to install sewer lines to an area of the county surrounded by city land. Many residents of the area are pleased. However, Augustine Bennett and his wife, Carlota, say their water well and septic tank work fine and see no reason to hook up to the city's water and sewer services.

Grant will fund sewers, water lines

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County will receive more than $200,000 from the Texas Department of Community Affairs to install sewer lines to an area of the county surrounded by city land.

The ultimate aim in the county's petitioning for the $263,200 grant was to revitalize the area occupied by at least 70 low-income families and get the land annexed by the city of Midland.

Without safe water and sanitary sewer systems, paved roads and vastly improved housing, the city will not consider annexation, said Commissioner Scott Welch, in whose precinct the area dubbed Windowpane II is located.

"They have open cesspools and water wells," Welch said of the area. "So, this is greatly needed."

Windowpane II has awaited annexation by the city of Midland since 1984, when county commissioners unveiled a plan to install water and sewer lines in those neighborhoods.

However, progress has been slowed by the lack of federal funding and the overall size and condition of the area, Gary Harris, a professional engineer with Parker, Smith & Cooper, maintained.

"This is a year by year project," he said. "We have to throw our hat in the ring just like everybody else."

Harris, who has voluntarily submitted the county's applications for federal funding, explained that the 12-block Windowpane II area "is too large to make improvements at one time."

So, the county has opted to install water and sewer services in the western six blocks of the area and add water and sewer services in the eastern six block area when additional grant money becomes available.

The entire area is bordered on the west by Baird Street, on the north by Gist Avenue, on the east by Fort Worth Street and on the south by Longview Avenue. The area is nestled between Midland Freshman High School and Interstate 20.

The western six blocks are flanked on the west and east by Baird and Fort Worth streets and takes in portions of Gist, Stokes, Wolcott, Summit, and Longview Avenue. The eastern half extends to Terrell Street.

Harris said it is the intent of Midland County officials to do for Windowpane II what $1.6 million in federal funds did for Windowpane I — a 300-acre area north of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum and midway between the Rankin Highway and Cotton Flat Road.

Windowpane I called for the laying of water and sewer lines, repairing weathered and neglected houses, rebuilding other dwellings, clearing lots and putting in hard-topped streets, curbing and guttering and filling in the cesspools. Funding for the 1981 project was provided by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The county made its initial bid to get $500,000 in federal Community Development funds administered through the Texas Department of Community Affairs for Windowpane II in 1984, but the project didn't rate high enough on the need scale to get a portion of the money for neighborhood improvement that year.

County commissioners then turned to the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission, seeking a share of $1.5 million available within a 17-county region.

The planning commission finally came through with a $245,500 grant in 1987 to run water lines into the impoverished area. That project is presently under construction.

Harris said bids for the installation of sewer lines in the six-block area should go out later this fall and construction should be completed by the spring of 1989.

Midland City Manager Fred Poe surmised that annexation of the area by the city "would take up to six months once the water and sewer lines are installed."

Windowpane II would then be eligible for additional Community Development Block Grant funding to pave streets and lay curbs and gutters, Poe said.

While some residents within the Windowpane II neighborhood favor the idea of bringing the city's water and sewer service and regulation into the area, others oppose the move.

Augustine Bennett, 70, bought his house, located in the 2000 block of South Fort Worth Street, in 1958. He claims his water well and septic tank work fine and sees no reason to hook up to the city's water and sewer services.

"I won't promise that I'll hook up and I won't promise that I won't," he said.

Ray DeLeon, who has resided in the Windowpane II area for the past 27 years and operates a salvage business next door to his property, favors the water and sewer hook up. He doesn't understand why his neighbors won't agree to the plan.

"I don't know why they don't want city water and sewer," he said. "For us, it's a good thing.

Six Odessans inducted into new Hall of Fame

By FRANK TROMBLEY

ODESSA — The likenesses of six prominent Odessans, three living and three deceased, will be displayed in the foyer of the Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce as members of the Business Hall of Fame.

The Hall of Fame was recently created "to recognize and pay tribute to Odessa's past and present business community," with six individuals selected for induction. Criteria for nominees require that they "show a strong belief in Odessa and its future through his or her community service involvement and business contributions."

Louis Rochester, Tom "Pinkie" Roden and Balie L. Griffith, along with the late W.D. "Bill" Noel, Bessye Cowden Ward and Manuel Gonzalez Jr. were selected from 20 prominent Odessans nominated as candidates for induction into the chamber's Hall of Fame during the annual Small Business Appreciation Luncheon this weekend at the Odessa Hilton.

Announcing the first inductees to the Hall of Fame, Allen cited their past and present accomplishments.

Gonzalez, who died in 1980 at the age of 63, started the Odessa Tortilla and Tamale Factory in 1946 and at the same time began cooking other items for his customers, who he served at four tables in a waiting area where customers fought for seats. In 1955, he expanded this to open a restaurant that seated 12 people. Today, Manuel's restaurant, located on East 2nd Street, seats 500 customers.

Nursing student gets taste of his own medicine with hospital stay

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

You might say Doroteo Flores' fears that he might not graduate from Midland College this semester began with a gut feeling in San Antonio.

Flores had stopped off in the River City to see his dad while driving to the coast for a week-long tour of Houston's vast medical center complex. All MC nursing students must participate in the tour in their final semester, he explained last week.

"I had been noticing before I left I thought I had the flu," Flores said. "At my dad's I thought I had eaten too much. I just felt bloated."

By the time he joined his nursing student peers that Monday, March 7, he started feeling symptoms he'd experienced prior to a 1986 condition that ultimately required surgery — a twisted intestine — so "I ruled out the flu," he said.

Although he'd queasily entered Houston's Ben Taub Hospital that Tuesday as a tourist, he exited 14 hours later — after sitting in the emergency room all day — as a soon-to-be patient of Methodist Hospital, a medical facility down the street from Ben Taub.

Doctors at Ben Taub had diagnosed Flores as suffering from a "small bowel obstruction," he said.

Scar tissue from his intestinal surgery two years ago had grown abnormally and blocked passages in his small intestine, Flores said.

A Ben Taub medical resident vetoed his flying home to Midland. The compression in a plane's cabin would have wreaked havoc on the his digestive system, Flores said.

The only rooms available at Methodist were in the intensive care unit and that worried Flores. "I wondered what they weren't telling me," he said.

While in the hospital, his stomach ceased functioning, he said.

Surgery that Friday corrected the intestinal obstruction, but soon afterwards doctors became perplexed when his stomach wouldn't work, Flores said.

The second week he spent in the hospital came during his spring break vacation, and Flores said he figured he'd be out in time to start school March 21.

Doctors tried in vain to get his stomach to function, but to no avail. Flores couldn't eat and was given liquid nourishment through two tubes stuck down his nostrils, he said.

One went into his stomach and another into his intestines. He lay in the hospital bed as the third week approached.

Jitters turned to outright fear when doctors told him that correcting the stomach problem could take as long as two more weeks, he said.

A MC nursing student at his level can only miss two days of classroom lectures and two days of clinical labs without risking suspension from the program.

Two weeks would have necessitated too many absences, and unfortunately, the courses he would need to retake were only given in the spring.

If he wasn't out of the hospital at the end of that second week, he would remain a nurse's aide — not a nurse — at his part-time Midland Memorial Hospital job for another year.

A phone call to the college, the hospital and his insurance company, the Premier Health Plan, resulted in his flying home via AeroVista air ambulance the early part of the third week, he said.

GARY OTT

Enquiring readers want to know: What's my real line?

Ott

One of the more unusual facets of having a job where your photograph appears in the newspaper on a regular basis is that people assume they know you, so they think nothing of starting up a conversation whenever they spot you sitting alone in a public place.

They say the darndest things.

And, ask the strangest questions. It is that last thing — the questions — that amuse me the most.

Here are some of the more common ones:

Q. Is that all you do, write that silly little article that appears in the paper ever so often?

A. Heavens no. I also whine a lot about being overworked and occasionally start religious arguments with Jimmy Swaggart supporters. And, by the way, I write columns, not articles. There is a difference. I'm not sure what that difference is, but I'm told it sounds more impressive on a resume.

Q. Speaking of Jimmy Swaggart, what is your opinion of the TV preachers?

A. I love them. Television needs more comedies.

Q. You mention alcohol frequently in your silly little articles. Does a person have to drink to write?

A. Absolutely not. Alcohol clouds the brain and should never be relied upon when writing. However, it does come in handy when trying to forget a particularly dreadful effort you have just finished.

Q. Where do you come up with your ideas?

A. I steal them. What's it to you?

Q. Do you read other publications in order to keep up with what's going on in the real world?

A. Yes. I am especially fond of "National Enquirer" and anything that has a headline about Elvis not really being dead on its cover.

Q. Who is your favorite writer?

A. Whoever wrote the story about Elvis not being dead.

Q. Do you ever get tired of strangers striking up conversations with you?

A. Only if they have bad breath and insist on getting right in my face when speaking.

Q. Have you ever considered getting a real job?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever been physically abused because of something you wrote?

A. Only once, and it wasn't really that serious. She had a terrible left hook. I was able to stand up straight and talk normally within the week.

Q. You mention your ex-wife occasionally when you write. Does this offend her?

A. Not at all. It's her lawyer who doesn't have a sense of humor.

Q. Why don't you get a haircut?

A. Ah, mom, give me a break. I'm 36 years old. I can make my own decisions.

Q. Why don't you wash your mouth out with soap, young man?

A. Yes ma'am.

Gonzalez, who was born in San Antonio and became an Odessan by choice, always said his family was living the American dream.

"It doesn't come easy," he is quoted as saying, "but if you work hard enough and treat people fairly, you will always be able to hold your head up."

The plaque noting Gonzalez's induction into the Hall of Fame was accepted by his wife.

Noel was 73 when he died January 1987. He moved to Odessa in the 1940s a few years after graduating from the University of Texas at Austin. Shortly after graduation he went to work for Gulf Oil and later became an independent oil operator and organized and headed a number of companies engaged in the production, transmission, processing and refining oil and gas.

As a native of Fort Worth, Noel's contributions to Odessa, his adopted hometown, are many, but his most significant was the nurturing of business interests that led to formation of the world's largest inland petrochemical complex of four companies, with El Paso Product's six plants serving as the hub.

Noel's community involvement through more than 40 years was extensive and in line with his philosophy that a person should try to return to the community as much as he receives.

He was a co-founder and director of American Bank, now Texas Commerce Bank, member of the Odessa Chamber of Commerce, strong supporter of the Permian Playhouse, Midland-Odessa Symphony, the Globe of the Southwest, the Permian Basin Rehabilitation Center and the Permian Basin Historical Society.

Noel's contributions to education were significant. He established the Ellen and Bill Noel Scholarship for students at Odessa College and University of Texas of the Permian Basin. He also donated his home in Country Club Estates, known as "Noel Oaks," to UTPB.

Grace King, longtime friend and associate of Noel, accepted the plaque citing his induction to the Hall of Fame.

Mrs. Ward, born in Midland in 1898, died in May 1987, leaving behind a long history of involvement and commitment to Odessa as her adopted hometown.

She began working the F-Bar Ranch in 1947. During a 1980 interview she recalled that "Odessa was considered a real rough and tumble place, but the people here are so nice and open...this is where I want to be."

She was a pioneer supporter of the fine arts, providing fund raisers, benefits and sponsorship of plays. She gave of her time "freely and willingly" and was on the board of countless organizations, including the Red Cross, YWCA, Boy's Club, DAR and the Sheriff's Posse.

In 1962, she was declared "Odessa's First Lady." Her plaque was accepted by W.T. Averitt.

Rochester was born in Florence, Ala., moved to Odessa in early childhood, graduated from Odessa public schools and attended Austin College in Sherman.

His involvement in real estate through the years led to development of more than 15,000 acres of land throughout the state, including numerous acres of residential, commercial and shopping centers in Odessa.

He has been a partner, stockholder and/or director of numerous companies including: Murphy & Rochester and Associates Inc., a general insurance agency since 1949, and Murphy & Rochester Inc., a real estate firm. Rochester and a friend originated the concept of mini-warehouses where units are rented to the general public.

He remains a partner, stockholder and director of Colonial Self Storage and Colonial Storage Centers, located throughout southern and southeastern states.

In 1976, Rochester was the first recipient of American Bank's Silver Bar Award. He also has been awarded the Mayor Citation for civic work relating to the development of Odessa.

In addition to development activities, Rochester has been heavily involved in a wide variety of community activities.

He is a past president of the Odessa Chamber of Commerce, member of the UTPB development committee, Odessa Industrial Development Corp. and the Odessa Information Discussion Group.

He has served as an advisor to the Fiesta del Arte, which is comprised of a group of citizens who efforts led to establishment of the Art Institute for the Permian Basin, of which Rochester is a director.

He presently serves on the Fine Arts Society of Texas, the Odessa College Foundation for Excellence and the YMCA Foundation.

Roden, who operated the Pinkie's chain of liquor stores until he recently transferred control to his brother, Bill Roden of Midland, opened his first store in 1938 on 2nd Street.

The single store grew to a total of 23 stores in Odessa, Midland, Big Spring, Abilene, Lubbock and Amarillo. Roden has been involved in numerous business enterprises through the years, including the Lincoln Hotel, built in the 1950s and operated by Roden as the Inn of the Golden West, one of the showcase hotels of Texas in the '50s and '60s.

Roden, a strong supporter of education, was "a behind the scenes force" in bringing UTPB and the Texas Tech University Medical School branch to Odessa.

He was named National Retailer of the Year in 1958 and 1960, Odessa's Outstanding Citizen by the chamber of commerce in 1976 and received the Ector County Junior Bar Association's Liberty Bell award in 1979 and the Texas Commerce Bank's Silver Bar award in 1984.

Roden and Rochester were on hand Friday to accept the plaques commemorating their induction into the Hall of Fame.

Griffith, 83, was unable to be present for the awards ceremony because of illness. His plaque was accepted by his wife.

Born in 1905 in Birmingham, Ala., Griffith worked for 17 years as a district manager for Firestone before deciding to open his own store in Odessa in 1945. The first store was at 1st Street and Grant Avenue.

After losing his lease at that location, he moved to 2nd Street between Grant and Texas and later bought land at 4th and Texas and built the store that stands there today.

Griffith's son joined the firm in 1960 and by 1967 they opened two additional stores in Midland. Two partners, Harold Crawford and Perry Rose, joined them and the group of stores that grew to a total of 91 located throughout Texas, with one in Lousiana, became known as the GCR Group and employed 900 people with sales of $100 million annually when the chain was sold to Firestone in 1987.

Griffith served on the Odessa City Council and was mayor pro tem. He was instrumental in several important projects, including the building of the first dam that provided Odessa's water supply, the school bond election that built some of Odessa's first schools and the bond election to build the City Hall building.

Engraved pictures of the first six inductees to the chamber's Business Hall of Fame will be hung in the lobby of the Odessa Chamber of Commerce building as soon as they are ready, according to Russell Autry, Odessa chamber chief executive officer.

Two other awards were presented at the luncheon.

Debbie Underwood, Permian Basin Bid Center director, was named Small Business Advocate of the Year and David Boutin, manager of Everybody's food store on South Grant Ave., was named Small Business Person of the Year.

The award recipients were announced by Roy Allen, vice president of development for Murphy & Rochester and a member of the chamber board of directors and executive committee, following remarks by Rex Jennings, president of the newly-formed Texas Chamber of Commerce. Allen served as master of ceremonies for the affair.

Boutin was one eight Odessa business people nominated for this year's award. Ms. Underwood was one of two women nominated for the Small Business Advocate award.

Ms. Underwood and Boutin each received a plaque commemorating their awards.

CENTER

The "old" Johnson Center served a basic need. And that was getting drunks sobered up and into support groups, such as Alcoholics Anonymous, Narcotics Anonymous, church groups and fraternal-service clubs.

In recovery, the alcoholic learns to live his life one day at a time.

The "number-one thing" in the life of the practicing alcoholic is drinking alcohol — the compulsion to drink, said LaForce. It becomes an obsession. The challenge is to erode that obsession.

"It's not a curable disease," said LaForce. But alcoholism is treatable. "It's kind of something you live with," he said. And many recovering alcoholics live happy and productive lives often linked to their "continuing to work" with other alcoholics.

IN THE MID-1980s, Johnson Center lost its state funding as a detoxification unit and was converted to an intermediate care treatment facility.

"We do need it desperately again," LaForce said of a drying-out place such as the "old" Johnson Center.

Unlike a "detox" or drying-out unit, an intermediate facility accepts alcoholics after they have been sobered up and prepares them to live "clean and sober" lives.

The Midland Council on Alcoholism/Drug Abuse works closely with Johnson Center.

"We make referrals on a regular basis," said John Reed, the council's executive director. "For a person who has no other alternative — just doesn't have the funds for regular treatment — that is an excellent 90-day intermediate care treatment facility. It's a nice, clean facility," said Reed. "It's well staffed. The counselors are certified counselors."

Reed said that Johnson Center's "success rate is very impressive, providing the client stays there the full 90-day term."

"I think we are very fortunate to have a (public) facility of this type," Reed said.

Baker, a former in-house counselor for the Permian Basin Community Centers for MHMR in Midland, was contracted to operate the MHMR Johnson Center program after his predecessor, Bill Collett, resigned to become a counselor in a treatment center in Hico in Central Texas.

"He (Baker) had done us an excellent job as a counselor," said Clyde McLean, executive director for the Permian Basin Community Centers for MHMR, "and we were impressed with the qualities he had shown."

BEFORE 1985, Johnson Center was a detoxification facility, but that function was discontinued due to the lack of resources to operate the "drying-out" facility under stringent state licensing regulations.

"We originally started a drying-out facility called Park Place," said McLean. Johnson Center, which was built by Midland County and the Midland Council on Alcoholism, opened in 1978.

Anne Plumlee, MHMR acting program director, said Baker is "excellent" and "terrific" in his role with MHMR.

"We are happy to have him in that position" to help "recovering substance abusers," Ms. Plumlee said. "We are real proud of Johnson Center."

Johnson Center offers a "spirit of recovery" evidenced by "people reaching out to help other people," Baker said.

"A great deal of a person's recovery is in his ability to develop a spiritual life," Baker said. And the initial development of a spiritual life often depends on person-to-person attraction.

"What draws the alcoholic out to seek help is the love, empathy and compassion of a person who genuinely cares," Baker said. "Those qualities are not often taught in the classroom.

"If you have not created an environment where there is an atmosphere of compassion, love and empathy, then the client is not likely to receive the tools of recovery."

THOSE TOOLS include teaching a person how to deal with tension and how to live productively and serenely amid daily problems, anxieties and insecurities without seeking escape through drinking alcohol and "doing" drugs.

In their recovery program, Johnson Center's clients are taught "how to understand and accept their own feelings and emotions," Baker said.

For example, "What does it mean when I am afraid. What does it mean when I am sad?" Baker said. "What is an appropriate and healthy response? If I am sad, it is OK to cry. If I am angry, it is OK to express how I feel."

Baker noted that often what "drives" people to drink is their "fragmented" minds that are "racing — trying to solve all of their problems of the past and trying to project the future all simultaneously. Consequently, the 'now' never is. There is no 'now.'"

And "the first thing" a person in treatment must experience before he or she can "attack" problems is to attain "mental peace" through a spiritual program.

"Spirituality is growth toward an inner feeling of unconditional love toward our fellow human beings and ourselves," Baker said. "To surrender is to accept some concept of spirituality."

STUDENT

He landed and was taken to MMH where Dr. Shelton Viney took the two feeding tubes out of his nose over a three-day period and within a short time, Flores' stomach was working.

During that third week, Flores still missed classes, but MC nursing professors gave him assignments to do in the hospital.

So that he would not miss a third clinical lab class, the nursing students came to the hospital and Flores tagged along toting his IV bottle stand, he said.

Flores graduated Saturday with an associate degree in nursing.

Monday he will begin work at the hospital as a nurse — handing out medicine, giving shots and injecting intravenous tubes for starters, he said.

He plans to continue studies at Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center in Odessa to obtain a bachelor's degree in nursing.

Though he wanted to go on to medical school and become a doctor, experiences he had while a patient made him realize the importance of being a nurse.

"I just learned while I was in the hospital to do unto others as you would have them do unto you," Flores said. "I got to see my philosophy at work."

Business burglaries investigated

From Staff Reports

The Midland County Sheriff's Department is investigating two business burglaries that occurred Saturday.

Shortly after 6 a.m., Tim Yeary, 36, of Odessa, reported to sheriff's deputies the theft of a $5,000 flatbed trailer.

The 1961-model 25-foot-long trailer was taken from American Transfer and Storage Co. located at 3412 La Force, reports said.

Later Saturday morning, a burglary occurred at Las Palmas, a nightclub on CR 1140 South, reports said.

Twenty cases of beer, $40 in quarters and a small, window-unit air conditioner were taken from the club.

The burglary was valued at $490, reports said.

MISD runoff vote vital to education

Midland Independent School District voters have already approved the $11.8 million bond proposal and chosen the trustees in Districts 1 and 4, but Saturday they'll be asked to fill the remaining five seats on the board. That means this runoff election will be virtually as important as the May 7th balloting.

Since the school bond has been approved, the voters Saturday will be choosing individuals who will be facing decisions immediately on how the district will spend those funds or attempt to save taxpayer money while redirecting the district's expansion program. Of course, hand-in-hand with the money matters will come the other major concerns the board will be asked to address — how to diminish the threat of drugs and alcohol, how far to go in teaching sex education and AIDS avoidance, the goal of two equal high schools and any future boundary changes.

With those decisions and others in mind, we are recommending individuals we believe would serve the best interests of Midland's school children, taxpayers and others concerned with educational quality.

That being the goal, we've attempted to choose potential board members who, first and foremost, are dedicated to quality education, have a strong interest in the schools and how they function but whose interest stops short of causing them to interfere with daily teaching or administrative staff functions, and who support knowledge as the key to the future.

We again recommend the following by district:

District 2: Clarence "Putty" Zachery. One of our two "new" endorsements this time, has long been interested in the Midland school system and his affiliations prove it. He attended Midland schools and was involved in sports as a youth and other school activities. Since leaving school, he has maintained his interest by serving as president of the Crockett Elementary PTA for two years and has been vice-president and carnival chairman for the past three years. He also is active in youth sports and has two children now attending MISD schools.

On being supportive of the schools, the 1986 graduate of Leadership Midland says parents are going to have to become involved in the school system again. He says, "I know that education is the way out, up and in for our children. Education is the key to the quality of life we all desire."

District 3: Ken Morrison. A certified public accountant by profession, Morrison impresses us as the kind of candidate who would be a logical, thorough and dedicated board member. He would offer level-headed, wise guidance to the board and likely would bring well-researched positions to board action on major issues.

Morrison favors closed campuses if such a move could be done without major cost, but is opposed to the 24-hour disciplinary program now in effect. That may seem a contradiction, but he opines that closing campuses would help the schools supervise youngsters better while the 24-hour policy, he believes, usurps the role of the police, judge, jury and parents of the community.

District 5: George Staley. As president of Staley Gas Co. and a director of First City National Bank, Staley has the business expertise to help the board make its multimillion-dollar spending decisions wisely. That will be particularly important since the bond issue was approved.

Staley also gets high marks from a number of past board members who also apparently believe he would lend business wisdom to the board's spending decisions.

District 6: Diane Anderson. Even before the first endorsement in this race, we were particularly impressed with Anderson's expressed concern that educational programs are not offered consistently throughout the system. She asserts that they should be consistent and we agree. Students need to be offered the same curriculum so that they will be able to progress at equal rates of learning.

Although that is one of the strong points in her campaign, Anderson also has other plusses. She has been active in the PTA and Volunteers In Public Schools and was awarded the Outstanding VIPS award in 1987 at Sam Houston.

Anderson would bring a woman's perspective to the board, and that is important. Whether she is elected or not, however, we encourage the board to look at her concern about the possibility of some areas of inconsistency of education in the MISD and work to correct any that may exist.

District 7: John L. Kennedy. Kennedy has three young children and that definitely gives him a vested interest in the future of the school system. But he also has business experience as a certified public accountant that would be valuable to the board.

Kennedy is a young man and we believe that his youthful perspective could be important in balancing the board's views.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, May 15, the 136th day of 1988. There are 230 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On May 15, 1972, Democratic presidential candidate George C. Wallace was shot and left paralyzed while campaigning at a Laurel, Md., shopping center. Wallace's assailant, Arthur Bremer, was sentenced to 63 years in prison, although the sentence was later reduced.

On this date:

In 1602, Cape Cod was discovered by the English navigator Bartholomew Gosnold.

In 1886, poet Emily Dickinson died in Amherst, Mass.

In 1911, the U.S. Supreme Court ordered the dissolution of Standard Oil Co., ruling it was in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

In 1986, searchers on Oregon's Mount Hood found two teen-age survivors of a hiking expedition that became trapped in a "whiteout" blizzard. Nine other climbers died.

Ten years ago: By a vote of 54-to-44, the U.S. Senate expressed support for President Jimmy Carter's proposal to sell fighter planes to Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia. Carter said he was "deeply gratified" by the vote.

Five years ago: Israel and Lebanon reached agreement on the text of a U.S.-sponsored accord under which Israel would withdraw its troops from Lebanon, as soon as Syria and the PLO agreed to withdraw their forces.

One year ago: President Reagan told a gathering of out-of-town reporters at the White House he did not consider himself "mortally wounded" by the Iran-Contra affair. (The president also got a chance to relive his radio-announcer days when he complied with a reporter's request to read a promo for Nashville station WSM.)

Today's Birthdays: Actor Joseph Cotten is 83. Actress Constance Cummings is 78. Singer Eddy Arnold is 70. Playwrights Peter Shaffer and Anthony Shaffer — twin brothers — are 62. Island paradise beset by money woes

WASHINGTON — In the past three years, the South Pacific island republic of Palau has been ravaged by an assassination, kickbacks, firebombings, heroin trafficking, fake passports and bungled trials.

Jack Anderson

This tale of a tropical paradise lost strikes close to home. Palau is a U.S. trust territory — the only one of four original Micronesian territories yet to sign an agreement of independence to free it from the United States.

The string of sun-swept islands 500 miles east of the Phillipines has less than 15,000 residents. More than two-thirds of Palau's annual $15 million operating budget comes from the United States.

But a series of financial boondoggles has sunk the tiny nation into such deep financial trouble that U.S. taxpayers will have to pay much of Palau's $40 million debt.

Known for its ivory-white beaches and spectacular marine life, Palau has become the focal point of Reagan administration efforts to find alternative sites for U.S. military bases should the United States be expelled from the Phillipines. The pressure is steadily mounting on Congress to approve a Compact of Free Association that would grant Palau independence in exchange for the right to dock nuclear-armed battleships in Palau for the next 50 years.

With half-sunken World War II battleships around the islands serving as a constant reminder of war, Palauan leaders included in their 1979 constitution a clause making the islands a nuclear-free zone. Palauans can change that with a 75 percent majority vote. They have already voted six times on variations of the compact of independence and a seventh vote could come in November.

The House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee is resisting the administration's push for immediate approval of the compact, fearing that Palau's leadership is more driven by money than ideals. Under the compact, the U.S. contribution to Palau would be $20 million a year, plus a $70 million trust fund. The committee is also determined to make sure the compact is constitutionally approved in Palau and that the nation is in good hands before the Department of Interior loses its oversight authority of Palau's finances and law enforcement.

The plight of the Palauans, torn between nuclear-free idealism and their need for more money, has attracted the attention of the American Civil Liberties Union, Greenpeace, the International League for Human Rights and other organizations.

Reps. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., and Ron de Lugo, D-Virgin Islands, of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, asked the General Accounting Office last November to look into allegations of corruption, bribes and political oppression in Palau. The investigation began shortly after reports that a compact opponent had been murdered and others threatened. GAO has also subsequently probed into allegations that top Palauan officials are involved in a fake passport market and heroin trafficking.

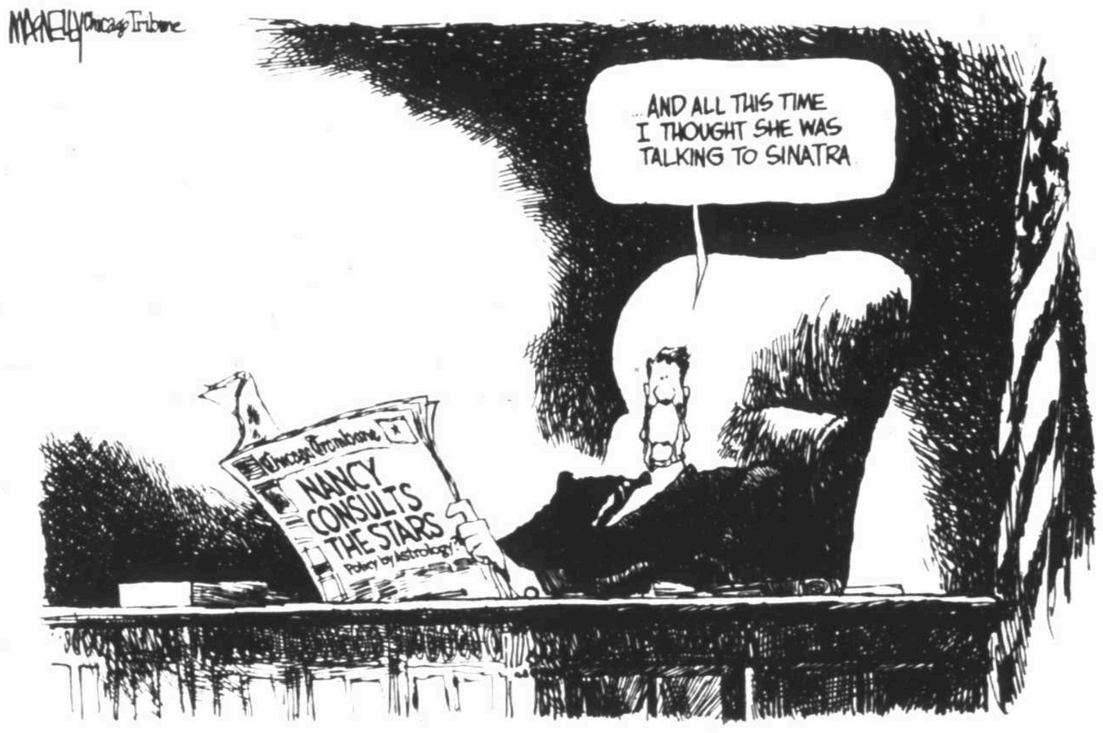

Our associate Jim Lynch has obtained much of the material still under GAO scrutiny. A member of the GAO investigating team told us that they have more leads about corruption in Palau than they have the time to follow.

Palau's first president, Haruo Remeliik, was gunned down outside his home in June 1985. Prior to his death, rumors were circulating that Remeliik was about to expose a bribery scandal. Three suspected assassins were released from jail after an appelate court ruled that they were victims of prosecutorial misconduct. Palauans still don't know who killed Remeliik.

His successor was Lazarus Salii, a man so popular with the White House that he has earned the nickname "Mini-Marcos." It is Salii who now runs through Palau's budget as though the U.S. support promised under the compact was already in the bank.

At the heart of Palau's financial problems is a $32 million debt for a power plant built by International Power Systems Co., IPSECO, a now-bankrupt London firm. Palau borrowed the money from British banks in 1983 and now can't repay the debt.

44-lane interstate 'monster' eating Florida!

NEW YORK — Senator Moynihan, whose public duties include trying to save the country from coming to a complete standstill, says that by the year 2020 Interstate 95 will have to be 44 lanes wide to carry the traffic between Fort Lauderdale and Miami.

Russell Baker

"Pretty soon there won't be anything left of Florida," he says.

It's hard to weep about that because there's almost nothing left of Florida already. Whatever that thing is that's spreading down there may be interesting, or fun, or beloved by those sitting in its air-conditioned condos and traffic jams, but Florida it isn't.

Florida was still mostly there in the 1940s, and there was even a good bit of it remaining in the 1960s, but now there's hardly enough Florida left to fill a glass display case in the Smithsonian.

Robert Frost once said it doesn't take man long to use up a continent. The consumption of Florida shows he can do it practically overnight if the territory is humid and sandy and its winters are milder than Cleveland's.

Senator Moynihan's ruminations about the dubious future down there are evoked by his interest in developing new forms of transportation. A member of the Senate Public Works Committee, he is trying to stir up interest in experimental magnetic-levitation vehicles.

This is hard going because the government is committed to sticking with cars and airplanes to the bitter end. Forty-four lanes of traffic on I-95. Meantime, why spend money experimenting in Buck Rogers stuff like magnetic-levitation vehicles? Star Wars, yes; traffic solutions, no.

The American traffic solution is to widen the road. This is happening all over the once beautiful farmland of the Middle Atlantic states. Dirt roads barely wide enough for two cars to pass nervously are being paved with two broad lanes. Two-lane roads are swelling to four lanes with median strips, and four-lane divided highways are being widened to eight lanes.

The result is always the same. Better roads lure more people to settle alongside them, bringing more cars, which jam the better roads. This angers the people in the traffic jams, who elect new politicians promising to solve the traffic problem by building better roads.

This cycle of destruction has been continual since World War II. You'd think somebody would have realized by now that building better roads doesn't work. Just uses up the continent that much faster.

But everybody, of course, does realize that it doesn't work. We keep on doing it anyhow. For one thing, building highways is something we do well; everybody likes doing what he's good at, even though it leads to a terrible mess.

So we tacitly consent to being duped. We know the better roads being promised will relieve the traffic jam only briefly before doubling its intensity, but we elect the better-roads ticket anyhow.

For a couple of years the traffic gets even worse because of the construction work. Finally comes the year when traffic flows contentedly. But what is this!

You have just discovered yourself surrounded by vast, raw clots of housing developments named Greenery Glen, Forested Fantasy and Wistful Woods. Day after that the new jam-free, eight-lane highway is jammed halfway to Metropolis Bypass. Furious, aren't you? Time to vote for the new better-roads ticket.

So we head inexorably toward the 44-lane highway, cheered on by the incantation of real-estate developers and asphalt tycoons: no use crying, folks, because growth and development cannot be stopped, and anyhow it's good for you.

Why can't growth and development be stopped? In my experience, growth and development raise your taxes, make a shameful mess on the countryside and disperse people from the civilizing influence of city living to barren new communities which bind their victims to lifetimes of driving and offer so few rewards that the breakdown of the TV set becomes a catastrophe.

Anything this dreadful can surely be stopped if somebody puts a mind to it. And somebody certainly should before the rest of the country is as disappeared as Florida.

It would be good if Candidates Bush and Dukakis tried to create some pressure to save a little of the country from burial under the 44-lane highway. A proposal or two for saving a little bit of America for another day would certainly be more invigorating than the tired old campaign gas they have been emitting so far.

Senator Moynihan, with magnetic levitation, is at least trying. Dukakis and Bush should study his lead. They both need levitating.

DuPont 'rejection' marked end of beginning

WASHINGTON — Pete DuPont, looking as fresh as a daisy that has found a meadow much to its liking, passed through Washington last week, pausing long enough to eat a lunch of shad roe (thereby proving that peculiar taste is not an insuperable impediment to a political career) and to reflect fondly about his presidential campaign, beginning at the beginning.

George F. Will

In the spring of 1986, DuPont, meeting with staff to plan his announcement speech, was disconcerted to note that a key aide, Frank Ursomarso, was fidgeting, gazing out the window and being generally inattentive. DuPont asked what was wrong.

Ursomarso (remember this name; this shrewd rascal will be heard from in the future) said he was indeed uninterested in the announcement. The statement that would matter, he said, would be DuPont's withdrawal statement. It is how you will get out that will count, he said.

That is not what a candidate pumped up with adrenalin and optimism wants to hear. Ursomarso explained: To win the White House you have to run several, perhaps three, times. DuPont now knows Ursomarso was right about the first time. He devoutly hopes he was wrong about a third.

And yet...and yet...he loves the process. He is impatient with complaints that the process is "unfair." He believes he had a fair shot at the nomination and that he even may have lost a close call. A few thousand more votes for him in Iowa and for Dole in New Hampshire could have produced.... But never mind might-have-beens.

The lesson he has learned is: how hard it is to get a message across. So? So try harder next time, and until then, too.

He believes that the difficulty in getting a message heard is a sign of national health. Americans do not feel that their essential well-being depends on political choices. Indeed, politics is so marginal to our lives that we only think about it after we have sharpened the lawn mower and put away the storm windows. Americans are as inattentive to politics as an essentially contented people can be.

DuPont, like Jack Kemp, and unlike Bush and Dole, was strong with specifics. He had a fistful of what he calls "Damn right!" issues, the sort that cause the guys in the coffee shops to say, "Damn right!" They were issues like ending the hemorrhaging of the national treasury to finance farm subsidies, denying drivers' licenses to teen-agers who flunk drug tests, and mandatory work for welfare recipients.

Although DuPont spent more than 80 days in New Hampshire, a post-primary poll showed that 62 percent of the voters could not correctly connect him with a single issue. For Kemp, the number was slightly more than 56 percent.

That's the bad news. The good news for DuPont is that his favorable rating rose steeply with familiarity with his issues. He had a 57 percent favorable rating with those who could connect him with one issue, 75 percent with those who connected him with two, 83 percent with those who connected him with three.

Of course, those numbers do not simply prove that the more people knew of him the more they liked him. The numbers also indicate that the more people like a candidate, the more they choose to learn about him. Still, DuPont has concluded, reasonably, that what he needs is "a bigger microphone." He is looking for opportunities to do commentary, in print or broadcasting, as Ronald Reagan did when out of office.

DuPont would run again for the sheer fun of it, such fun as he had when meeting with some fifth-graders in Mason City, Iowa. The topic was drugs until, in the question period, a precocious boy (or perhaps all Iowa children are like this) asked, "How do you handle the rejection?"

Rejection is indeed a politician's lot. DuPont knows the truth of the old joke that presidential candidates, including the winners, comprise the small group of people who know for sure that millions of their fellow citizens do not want them to be President. But he will not take the 1988 "no" for an answer. Which brings us to that withdrawal statement.

DuPont paraphrased Churchill, saying that the end of his 1988 quest was just "the end of the beginning." Ursomarso probably was paying attention and nodding approval.

DuPont cheerfully disagrees with those who say campaigns are too long. The length is in large measure a function of the electorate's healthy inattention. To those who say, well, in any case, campaigns sure are long, he says: You don't know the half of it.

Endorsing political candidates often can be difficult

Modisett

Political endorsements nearly always are difficult. Picking the candidates the Reporter-Telegram endorsed in this month's Midland Independent School District trustee election was particularly so. But newspapers can't — and shouldn't — simply stop doing what they perceive as a vital community service because it's a tough, and sometimes unpopular, job.

Newsmen like to think of themselves as having "thick skins." After this election, we need another steel coating.

We haven't stopped endorsing, though. In fact, on the editorial page today we — the individuals comprising the editorial board of the Reporter-Telegram — are repeating our recommendations for the five undecided school board positions. Only two of those involve new recommendations, a result of the fact the individuals we originally recommended before the May 7th election lost and now those two seats must be decided in a runoff election not involving our original choices.

Everytime this or any other newspaper endorses in a political race, it will win some friends and make some enemies. We recognize the down side of endorsing and we could avoid it altogether if we so decided. Nobody says a newspaper has to endorse. But that wouldn't be doing the job we've sworn as newsmen to do — informing our readers and giving them the benefit, if any, of our reasoning.

It doesn't mean that we're always correct and we certainly don't endorse on the basis of whom we believe will win the election, sometimes even specifically endorsing candidates we feel likely will lose because we believe it's important for the public to know what we support. To endorse only sure winners would be contrary to our basic goal, which we've already stated. We try to tell the readers who we believe is the best candidate in any race and why.

Sometimes it's extremely difficult. It was in the MISD races. The entire original slate of 23 candidates offered numerous outstanding prospects to help guide the future of education in Midland. And that fact made endorsing no small task. In several of the positions, the board was divided about whom we should support. We negotiated, argued, looked at the potential ramifications of various endorsements from all different perspectives, sought additional information about particular candidates and, finally, arrived at a endorsement list we could all accept. It was a "unanimous" decision arrived at only after weeks of study, meetings with the candidates, attending two public candidate forums, and consideration of what was needed on the MISD board and who could help provide those requirements.

We realized that our choices did not constitute a perfect slate. But even if they had (which would be next to impossible to achieve), we still would be alienating readers who support the other unendorsed candidates. That's a regrettable fact about endorsements. When endorsements are made, those who aren't endorsed view it from the perspective that they have been rejected when in actuality, the editorial board views the process as recommending the best of the prospects.

In this instance, particularly, the board was impressed with virtually all the candidates. Each is willing to give his or her individual expertise and guidance to the future of Midland's children and that's admirable.

We'll keep endorsing in political races — and taking the complaints — because that's one of our primary responsibilities. What we're attempting to do is to get for the voters the very best quality of government available.

Kennedy has right credentials for board

I have known John Kennedy for 15 years, the last eight of which he has been employed by my company. Shortly after his graduation from the University of Texas, he was employed by Arthur Andersen, a Big Eight Accounting firm, as an auditor. In the business and financial world, Arthur Andersen is recognized as hiring only the best, training them well, and expecting expert performance. This is the best background possible for understanding and performing in the business and financial world. John does both well.

While John has not had the experience of owning his own business, he has assumed responsibilities in my company and performs his duties as it it were his own. His responsibilities include sales well in excess of the MISD's annual budget.

John has been involved in the community. He has served on the American Cancer Society Board, the Cystic Fibrosis Board, as fund-raising chairman for the Celebration of the Arts, is a graduate of Leadership Midland, is a deacon and currently serving as an elder in his church, and has served in various fund-raising positions for the United Way. He has a proven record of community involvement.

John is not tied to any special interest group. He believes in have two equal high schools and wants to provide Midland with the best educational system possible.

I have found John to be capable, honest, a tireless worker and an independent thinker with sound judgment. John and Leslie's children will be attending Midland schools for the next 17 years. He is vitally interested and has the energy, time, dedication and knowledge to plan and plan well for the educational future of Midland's children. He will be a good school board member.

I heartily endorse John Kennedy for District 7 and strongly urge all the voters of this district to vote for him May 21st.

Coverage of GISD elections earns thanks

As a Greenwood resident, I would like to thank your paper for the coverage of our school board election. I think that your paper was equally fair in coverage of the candidates, the forum, and the election itself.

There are over 2,000 registered voters in this school district. We are often forgotten by your paper, Midland, and Midland County. We are relatively small compared to Midland, but Midland's economy does benefit from us.

We are a part of Midland County, and hold a lot of pride in our school and community. We appreciate the recognition.

Again, thank you for the coverage.

Robinson backs plans to better our schools

As a teacher, I feel that there are some proposals that could be promoted that would help raise the educational levels of our children. These are listed below:

1. Identify potential dropouts in the elementary grades. Work on preventing them from being dropouts with the use of elementary counselors.
2. Mandatory tutoring for students who need extra help.
3. Higher goals for students in regular classes.
4. Junior high and high school students should be grouped according to their abilities.
5. More advanced placement courses for high school students.
6. Promote effective schools.

I find that Betsy Robinson supports these proposals and believes that this will help raise the educational standards for our children. Please join me in supporting these proposals by voting for Betsy Robinson in the school board runoff election on May 21st. Our children need this support.

Robinson behind drug program in our schools

Midland schools did not have a drug program before Betsy Robinson became a member of the board. Because of Betsy's awareness of the drug problem in our schools and because of her concern for Midland's youth, she researched, consulted experts in the field, and then presented a plan to her fellow school board members. Betsy Robinson then guided that plan through discussion and finally implementation. Now, many of the youth of Midland are saying no to drugs.

Let's keep Betsy Robinson on the team. We need her expertise, her enthusiasm, her willingness to pay the price in time and effort to find the best information available — and her ability to stand tough when the best interests of our children are at stake.

Your best judgment will tell you that Betsy Robinson is the candidate best qualified to serve in Place 5 on the school board.

Robinson needed on board for continuity

There will be a lot of unsolved problems facing our new school board when they meet for the first time next month. The continuity provided by staggered elections will not exist in this board, unless we re-elect Betsy Robinson. Since Betsy is the only school board member up for re-election, she is the only one who can bring guidance and leadership to the new board. Betsy's success in establishing drug free schools in Midland is well known. Her work on programs and ideas have won national attention and recognition for Midland schools.

Let's keep Midland's schools drug free. Let's keep working on All Star programs, our policies for Drug and Alcohol Free Schools, Lion's Quest and "Just Say No" month. Let's keep the school trustee who has worked hours a a day for Midland schools. Let's keep Betsy Robinson

Robinson has integrity as well as good ideas

After 25 years of teaching elementary school, 19 of which were at Bonham Elementary School in Midland, I have recently retired.

Being an American as well as an educator, I am very observant of school policy, curriculum, and especially the school board.

It has been my privilege and pleasure to get to know school board incumbent Betsy Robinson. Not only is she an educator, she's a lady of integrity! Betsy's main interest is the good of children.

If you will review her work in the All Star Program, the drug program, and appreciation for teachers as well as parents, you will not find it hard to cast your vote along with mine and many others to return Betsy Robinson to the school board for three more years.

Not only I, but many of my fellow teachers, both active and retired, have reiterated the fact that never were we polled as a group by a state or national organization on our opinions for which a few made claim to the opinions of all teachers as a group.

Please vote absentee so you won't forget. Midland needs Betsy Robinson!

Unprofessional coaches blight on school system

The coaching staff of Midland High must certainly be insecure if they have to call students and intimidate them not to play soccer. The narrow-minded, unprofessional conduct of these coaches is a blight on our school system.

Congratulations to those students who had the fortitude to stand up to this kind of ridiculous pressure from so-called adults.

SPEAKING OUT

Lubbock group gets different perspective on South Africa

Rosalind Haley and a group of eight other American businessmen and women recently toured South Africa on a fact-finding trip, under the leadership of the Rosalind Kress Haley Research Library of Lubbock. The following is some of her impressions of South Africa.

By ROSALIND HALEY

Nine American businessmen and women left on a fact-finding trip for South Africa, determined to get the truth concerning this beleaguered nation. Knowing Americans are dependent on certain strategic minerals for her defense, minerals obtainable only from South Africa, should the United States impose broader sanctions on South Africa? How serious is apartheid? This reply must be the bottom line. It would be necessary to interview mainly blacks.

On arriving at Johannesburg Airport, the Fact Finders were met by friendly, polite folks eager to share their golden sunshine and courteous world of what appeared to be a rainbow of nationalities. Good, mannerly, soft-spoken culture became apparent among Africaans, East Indians, British, Coloured, Blacks from countless tribes. Friendly camaraderie existed. We strained to catch varying accents — all English, but to which our ears were unaccustomed.

Johannesburg is a city of more than 750 million. Whites are outnumbered 1 to 7. Two hundred fifty million blacks live in Soweto, a well kept area with homes ranging from squalid shanty city to elegant. Archbishop Tutu's and Nelson Mandella's wife's are among the most pretentious homes in their "Beverly Hills." The black mayor of Soweto opposes sanctions.

At Cullinan Diamond Mines, we walked for two hours among moving cranes, railroad cars, mines shafts where 13 tons of explosives are processed daily. Here 4,200 employees (5 blacks to 1 white) work together. From 52 tribes from all over Africa, speaking various dialects, it became necessary for safety reasons to develop a common language — Fana Kha Lo, which has 2,000 words but no grammar. Despite these problems, they are satisfactorily resolved.

A meeting with the Building Industry for South Africa revealed that during the last year the free enterprise group has trained 60,000 blacks in building trades and crafts, their relationships sold and ongoing.

There are four independent self governed black nations known as Homelands. We planned to visit two.

A trip to Ulundi took us to the center of the largest single black tribe — the Zulus. We felt they would be sure to have more primitive customs and favor sanctions. We found that throughout the business world of Ulundi and KwaZululand, the women wore skirts and the men business suits. Their primitive customs have been discarded. We found ultra-modern buildings with highly technical security equipment.

Chief Mangosuthu G. Buthelezi left the study of law when he was elected Chief of the Zulu Tribe. The Zulu Tribe numbers over 7 million. This highly respected black is also President of the 150 million member Inkatha, the largest political organization in South Africa.

In a handsomely paneled circular room, we were received and presented to each of the Ministers of the Cabinet of KwaZulu, one being white. Chief Buthelezi, a magnetic man, spoke for several minutes about the problems of KwaZululand, and said they were solving them peacefully, that apartheid is disfunctional but sanctions don't work. They affect the blacks more severely than the whites because blacks lose their jobs. He said it was very important that we carry this message back to the United States and we should bear in mind that the request is backed by the 1½ million member Inkatha.

The Bethelezi Commission of 1982 and the KwaZulu Indaba proposals of 1987 have shown that South Africans of all races can work together and find a solution. His nephew had been murdered over the weekend, bombed by a black United Democratic Front group of ANC terrorists.

We had requested permission to visit the Parliament of the all black homeland of Ciskei, a nation of 1½ million, the size of Delaware, and be permitted to see their cottage industries. Our unusual request was granted. We learned from the Cabinet members of this all-black nation with its up-to-date, modern buildings, that their is no apartheid in Ciskei; however, they hire several whites.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Blie, comparable to our Secretary of State, said, "Sanctions hurt the blacks more than the whites, particularly the homeland blacks." Ambassador Mafani said, "We need investment, not disinvestment. When you apply disinvestment, you raise the price and we blacks lose our jobs. Disinvestment is a good way to strangle the black man. We need new industries, large and small, free schools and church schools, and medical doctors."

"We have never seen Bishop Tutu. He knows nothing of poor people. He eats well," said Jo Ngilanga Jongligana, Deputy Director General of Information for Ciskei. Tutu is resented by some blacks and some did not know who he was as his following in South Africa is small.

During six years of independence, this all black nation has developed enormous industries, damaged only by sanctions.

The travelers learned not only that South Africa does not trust America but that Americans are being given disinformation. Why? What is the ulterior motive in disinformation?

Mitterand's election promises strong leadership for Europe

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — With French President Francois Mitterrand re-elected to a second 7-year term and both British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl re-elected last year, we are now assured of strong, sensible, pro-American leadership in Western Europe for the foreseeable future.

These leaders of the three major allied powers in Europe have served the cause of peace well. They are among the most outstandingly competent leaders in the world today. We are fortunate they are our most reliable allies in helping to deter Soviet aggression in Western Europe that could precipitate an all-out nuclear war.

President Mitterrand's big victory over the Gaullist party leader, Jacques Chirac, promises to move France politically away from both rightist and leftist extremism and toward a centrist moderate-socialist coalition in Parliament.

The son of devout rural Catholics who started his political career as a conservative and won the presidency in 1981 as leader of the Socialist Party, President Mitterrand soon learned socialism was not the cure for economic problems.

He is no longer committed to nationalization of major industries and his economy program differs little from the free enterprise policy of the French conservative party. He has appointed as Prime Minister to replace Chirac a moderate socialist, Michel Rocard, whose bids to become president were blocked three times by Mitterrand.

With his 54.2 percent to 45.98 percent victory over his conservative prime minister, Mitterrand became the first politician in the 30-year history of the Gaullist established Fifth Republic to be elected twice by popular vote. Chirac's defeat, the worst ever suffered by a rightist candidate, was a historic reversal for the Gaullist movement. It has led to speculation that Gaullism may be doomed to the political wilderness in France.

This reminds me of my first meeting with President Mitterrand soon after he became French head of state in 1981. It was a few days after President Reagan sent Vice President Bush to Paris to express concern to the socialist president about bringing four communists into his first cabinet.

What the president said to us about that was not for direct attribution, but we learned he told the vice president that Washington misunderstood what he was doing — that by bringing the communists into the government he was making it difficult for them to attack his policies, thereby weakening the Communist Party.

He added that he intended to destroy the political influence of the communists in France, and he has succeeded in doing just that. He forced the communist ministers to repudiate in writing their pro-Soviet platform and compelled one of them to publicly support deployment of U.S. nuclear missiles in Europe. Not long thereafter, they resigned, and the Communist Party has suffered badly in national elections ever since.

In 1983 our Ambassador in Paris, Evan G. Galbraith, told me and my two colleagues that President Mitterrand was our most effective ally in helping elect Helmut Kohl as Chancellor. That assured Bonn's support for deploying modern U.S. nuclear weapons in Europe which led the Soviets to agree to the removal of all medium and intermediate range American and Soviet missiles.

Last year President Mitterrand agreed to have French troops stationed in West Germany train jointly with German troops so that if the Soviet bloc forces attacked Western Europe, French and German soldiers would fight shoulder to shoulder for the first time since Napoleon.

President Mitterrand has increased French military cooperation with NATO to a greater extent than ever since General Charles de Gaulle withdrew French forces from NATO's integrated military structure.

When the Soviet government tried to include French and British nuclear weapons in the nuclear arms reduction talks, he joined Mrs. Thatcher in flatly refusing. He told us on one occasion he intended to maintain as many strategic nuclear missiles as would be necessary to kill as many Russians as there were French people. He considered that threat his most effective deterrent against Soviet aggression.

We have met with this calm, courteous, stern and rather regal-looking French leader almost each year since he became president. The more I have listened to him and learned about the leading statesmanship role he has played in Europe, the more highly I have respected his political and economic pragmatism. I like him very much as an individual and I would vote for him.

Midland College goes for its fifth national championship in women's tennis this week at Pasadena, Texas. The five-day tournament begins Monday, hosted by San Jacinto College.

The Chaparral women's team took national titles in 1975, 1976, 1981, and 1986. In the 14 years the college has fielded a women's team, they have never failed to qualify for the national tournament...and have never finished lower than fifth. They were runners-up three times, including last year; were third on two occasions, have one fourth place finish, and three fifth place finishes.

Tyler is hosting the men's team May 23-27, and the Chaparral men are among the favorites for that title.

With thunderclouds threatening, the college's annual barbecue was moved rather rapidly from Beal Plaza to Chaparral Center last week. The maintenance staff did a great job in handling the move on very short notice.

It was a nice event, with quite a number of employees receiving five, 10, or 15-year service awards. The college's Spirit Band, directed by Walter Osadchuk, provided music for the occasion.

And seven faculty members had delightful surprises at the barbecue as they were announced as winners of the 1988 Exceptional Performance Awards, which carry $1,000 bonuses along with the prestige. Selected as the winners were: Nancy Shaw, Health Sciences Division; Wayne Young, Technical Studies Division; Clara King, Business Studies Division; Charles Klein, Scientific Studies Division; Dr. Glenda Hicks, Communications Studies Division; Chloice Shofner, Cultural Studies Division; and Warren Taylor, Fine Arts Division.

Men held for fake bills

LEESVILLE, La. (AP) — A soldier from Fort Polk and two men from Texas are accused of passing counterfeit $20 bills in Houston and in three Louisiana parishes, Vernon Parish deputies say.

Kenneth W. Kirkaldy, 20, of Fort Polk, and David M. Miranda, 20, and Archie E. Speer, 18, both of Houston, were arrested Wednesday at a motel near Leesville.

They were accused of circulating the fake bills in Vernon, Calcasieu and Beauregard parishes, as well as in Houston.

EDUCATION

MC pre-registration continues

From Staff Reports

Six days of pre-registration remain for Midland College's first summer term. Persons planning to attend the session can pre-register Monday through Thursday and the first two days of the following week from 7 a.m.-5 p.m. in the Student Services Office, Administration Building.

"Despite one morning when the rain kept almost everyone from coming out, the first week's response was excellent," said Dee Windsor, associate dean of students and registrar.

At the end of the first week, there had been 667 students pre-registered, a hefty increase over the 599 who had pre-registered during the same period in 1987.

Tuesday, May 24, is the final day of pre-registration. Official registration is scheduled May 26, with classes starting Tuesday, May 31. The first session ends July 6.

"During the first summer term, we offer nearly all the academic courses which are taught during the regular semesters. Many of the classes are available either in the daytime or in the evening," Windsor said. "Most of the second semester classes are taught during the second summer term."

Automotive and Welding classes last eight weeks. A computer class in Cobol and an electronics class are 12 weeks in duration. There will be classes offered in Art, Biological Science, Business Administration, Chemistry, Computer Information Systems, Criminal Justice, Dance, Economics, English, Government, History, Journalism/Phogoraphy, Management, Mathematics, Music, Office Education, Physical Education, Physics, Psychology, Real Estate, Sociology, Spanish, and Speech Communications.

Summer session classes meet Monday through Thursday.

Summer course bulletins are available at the Student Services Office. Additional information is available by calling 685-4501.

An evening of dance, "Small Chamber Works," is being presented at Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Building on Saturday and Sunday, May 21-22.

"There will be quite a wide variety of dance styles presented during the program," said MC dance instructor James Cramer. "It might even be called a dance program for those who ordinarily wouldn't care for dance."

The free program is being presented at 8 p.m. May 21 and 2 p.m. on May 22.

The program includes about seven different works, all choreographed especially for this program. The dancers will be performing ballroom, tap, contemporary, ballet, and modern dance styles to music ranging from today's Whitney Houston to the classical Igor Stravinsky.

Ellen Gonzalez, a Midland College continuing education dance instructor and former professional dancer, is assisting Cramer with the choreography and staging for the program.

Cost of the workshop and meal is $25 per person or $40 per couple. The program is limited to 30 participants and deadline to register is May 15.

Checks may be sent to PCRS, Box 11332, Midland, Texas, 79701.

SGA presents the award to employees of member companies who save someone's life, either on or off the job, using skills acquired through the company-sponsored safety training.

Many in the Midland office played a role in helping to rescue Jessica McClure from an abandoned water well last October.

Famous orchestra to visit Fort Worth

From Staff Reports

FORT WORTH — The Philadelphia Orchestra, Riccardo Muti conducting, will appear at the Tarrant County Convention Center at 7 p.m. Thursday. The concert is made possible through the generosity of the Amon G. Carter Foundation and the Sid W. Richardson Foundation.

The Fort Worth program will feature Aaron Copland's Symphony No. 3 and Johannes Brahm's Symphony No. 2 in D Major Opus 73. The Copland work was first performed in October of 1946, coincidentally the year of The Philadelphia Orchestra's most recent appearance in Fort Worth. The first movement's opening fanfare is based on Copland's popular "Fanfare for the Common Man" composed in 1942.

The Brahms Second Symphony was first performed by the Vienna Philharmonic on December 30, 1877, shortly after it had been completed by the composer.

A different program is scheduled in Dallas on May 18.

"This is the first appearance in Fort Worth by The Philadelphia Orchestra in more than 40 years," said John Giordano, music director of the Fort Worth Symphony Orchestra Association.

"Several generations of Fort Worth and Tarrant County residents will have the opportunity to hear this incomparable musical organization close to home for the first time," he said.

Since the 1980 appointment of Riccardo Muti as Music Director of The Philadelphia Orchestra, a virtuosic musical partnership has been forged from the combination of the brilliant conducting talent of Muti and the long tradition of excellence that is synonymous with The Philadelphia Orchestra. In fall of 1986 Muti became Music Director of La Scala in Milan, Italy while continuing his Philadelphia post.

The Philadelphia Orchestra is familiar to generations of 20th century Americans as an orchestra of firsts. It owns the distinction of being the first American orchestra to make recordings with its own conductor, 1917; the first to perform on its own national radio broadcasts, 1929; the first to be featured on national television, 1948.

Tickets range in price from $12 - $25 and may be purchased by calling 1-817-335-9000 or metro 1-817-429-1181; or in person at Central Ticket Office, 1007 Commerce Street, Fort Worth; or the Symphony Ticket Office, 4401 Trail Lake Drive in Fort Worth.

U.S. faces research crisis, Air Force official tells A&M grads

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — The United States faces a growing crisis because excellence in research and engineering is increasingly coming from abroad, U.S. Air Force Secretary Edward C. "Pete" Aldridge Jr. told Texas A&M graduates.

Aldridge spoke Friday during one of three weekend commencements in which 3,103 degrees were conferred.

"There exists a growing crisis facing the United States. Many experts today point to an across-the-board decline in our recent technological advances," Aldridge said.

The Air Force secretary cited 1987 figures that stated that more than 40 percent of the new patents granted by the United States government went to foreign businesses or individuals.

"America has been watching its leadership dwindle — whether in microchips, manufacturing technology or motorcycles," he said.

The National Academy of Sciences is predicting a shortfall of 140,000 computer scientists and 30,000 electrical engineers by 1990, Aldridge said. The academy also predicts a 40 percent decline in aerospace engineering graduates in two years despite a 70 percent increase in demand.

"Without enough high-quality engineers in all fields of research and development, we endanger not only America's economic leadership but also our capability to find those technological advances which provide that qualitative edge which is essential to our national security," Aldridge said.

Graduates should become active participants, he said.

"Many of our countrymen often say that all they want is peace and freedom. Well, peace is cheap, you can have it for nothing," Aldridge said. "All we have to do is give up our freedom. As for the freedom we enjoy, Americans must be willing to pay the bill. Freedom is not free."

Area MS chapter to host 'Longest Day of Golf'

From Staff Reports

The West Texas Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society's "Longest Day of Golf" will be held June 1-30.

Area golfers will have the opportunity to play as many holes of golf in one day as is humanly possible, for a worthy cause, the fight against MS.

Participants raise money on a pledge-per-hole basis to support research projects and provide a wider range of services for local patients with MS.

Top fund raisers will qualify for awards including a "Duffers Delight Vacation" for two courtesy of the Hyatt Regency Hilton Head Palmetto Dunes, Hilton Head Island, South Carolina, with round trip airfare courtesy of American Airlines; a drawing for a weekend vacation with gallery tickets to the PGA Championship, as well as many other fantastic individual prizes.

Sponsors for the event are IBM, American Airlines and Hyatt Regency, Hilton Head Island, South Carolina.

MS is a chronic, progressive disease of the central nervous system with no known cause, effective treatment or cure. MS affects some 250,000 young adults in the U.S., 600 of which are in our local area. Symptoms can range from blurring of vision to poor coordination to complete paralysis.

For more information about the golf tournament, contact the West Texas MS chapter at 699-7787.

STNP suppliers may have falsified information

BAY CITY (AP) — The South Texas Project nuclear plant and operators of 37 other nuclear plants may have used pipe fittings and flanges from two suppliers suspected by federal officials of providing falsified information about the materials.

Nuclear Regulatory Commission officials warned the plant operators a week ago that investigators had paaperwork from two suppliers of piping that "contained false information about material supplied to the nuclear industry."

If the false information was meant to hide substandard materials, it would have safety implications for the atomic energy plants, the commission said in its bulletin to the plants.

Plant operators were directed to send the NRC information about pipe fittings and flanges supplied by Piping Supplies Inc. of Folsom, N.J., and West Jersey Manufacturing Co. of Williamstown, N.J. The NRC is investigating the two companies.

Brian Grimes, director of NRC's division of reactor inspection and safeguards, said that while there is some suspicion about the quality of piping from the two suppliers, "there is no indication at this point that any material is in fact inadequate."

STATE

State denied two-thirds of requested AIDS funds

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Texas health officials said the federal government is biased against the state and it is costing Texas millions of dollars in AIDS funding.

But the federal government laid the blame on the state, saying Texas is not willing to spend enough local money on AIDS.

"I think it's perceived in Washington that Texas is not serious about dealing with AIDS," state Health Commissioner Robert Bernstein told members of the Texas Medical Association at the group's annual meeting Friday.

Bernstein criticized federal officials for awarding the state only $6 million for AIDS educational and surveillance programs this year — $12 million less than requested.

'For some reason, I think Washington has a bias against Texas and we are not getting our share of the funds. It's almost like we're being punished for not spending more state money on AIDS."

Federal officials attending the three-day convention said the deficiency in AIDS funding in Texas is the state's fault.

"Texas' spending is at the bottom of the scale," said Dr. Peter Fischinger, director of the National AIDS Program Office for the U.S. Public Health Service. "Nobody is trying to punish Texas for not spending more, but we are very worried about what is happening here."

The Texas Department of Health will receive $6,031,645 in federal funds for an eight-month period that began May 1, said a spokeswoman for the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. The state's share amounts to 5.5 percent of the $109 million allocated for all 50 states.

Texas has 7 percent of the nation's AIDS victims. Of 60,000 reported AIDS cases, nearly 4,200 have been in Texas, according to the CDC.

The state health department, which has been criticized by AIDS service organizations in Texas for failing to pursue federal funding in the past, submitted the largest funding request of all the states this year, said Nancy Bridger, CDC grants management officer.

"Obviously, we couldn't give $19 million to Texas — one-fifth of the total amount — and divide the remainder among the other 49 states," she said.

Dr. Charles Alexander, former chief of the state health department's bureau of AIDS, defended the state's funding request.

"It represented everything we thought was needed around the state," he said. "Obviously, we didn't expect to get it all. But $9 million or $10 million would have allowed us a bare-bones operation."

The state health department received $3 million from the federal government in the fiscal year that ended April 30. Most of those funds were distributed to health departments and community-based organizations around the state.

Without more federal money, the health department is likely to request a "significant increase" in AIDS funding from the Texas Legislature next year, Bernstein said. The federal appropriation, announced Friday, will not affect existing programs, state officials said, but will mean that the state cannot expand programs this year, as it had intended.

During its most recent session, the Legislature allocated $3.4 million for AIDS educational efforts in 1987-88, placing Texas near the bottom among the states in per capita spending on AIDS.

While other states averaged 53 cents per resident for AIDS-related programs, Texas has spent only 9 cents per resident.

Southland offered $250 million bailout

DALLAS (AP) — Southland Financial Corp., the financially troubled developer that owns the giant Las Colinas development, has been offered a $250 million bailout.

If the deal is approved, Southland Financial's assets in Las Colinas would be controlled by two privately held limited partnerships composed primarily of the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association of America and JMB Realty Corp.

Carpenter family members, including Southland Financial Chairman Ben H. Carpenter and his son, President and Chief Executive Officer John W. Carpenter III, currently control 40 percent of the company's stock.

But that stake would be reduced significantly in the transaction, J. Michael Lewis, Southland Financial's executive vice president, said Friday.

Representatives from JMB and the pension fund would comprise a majority of members on governing executive committees that would run the partnerships.

Under terms of the proposal, to be presented to major creditors this week, holders of two large chunks of debt would be offered 40 cents and 60 cents on the dollar for their notes, or extended terms for repayment. Others would be offered various terms for refinancing or retiring debt.

Shareholders other than the Carpenter family would be offered $1 per share.

"The members of the Carpenter family will not realize any cash as a result of the proposed transactions," Southland Financial said in a prepared release.

The Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association of America, which controls a $60 billion pension fund, would provide the $250 million in the form of a participating mortgage loan. It is also a large real estate lender.

Southland Financial, developer of the 12,000-acre Las Colinas multi-use urban development in Irving has been hard hit by the real estate slump. The company has no link with Southland Corp.

In 1987, Southland Financial recorded a net loss of $94.2 million. Revenues totaled $112.9 million, and assets totaled $1.14 billion. The company has been publicly held company since 1971.

As of Feb. 15, the company was in default on $670.4 million of indebtedness, or roughly two-thirds of its total debt. In the last year and a half, it sold several properties, including the Southland Center complex in downtown Dallas that houses a Sheraton Hotel.

Southland Financial's board has taken the proposal under advisement and authorized the teachers group and JMB to present the offer to creditors.

Officials with the company gave no estimates on how long the approval process would take.

'Daddy's Girl' narrates Houston murders

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

In the early morning hours of June 19, 1982, two masked figures emerged from the darkness along Houston's fashionable Memorial Drive and approached the home of a lawyer named James Campbell.

They crawled through a den window, ascended a flight of stairs and tiptoed into a darkened bedroom where Campbell, 55, and his wife Virginia, 50, lay sleeping. One moved to the foot of the bed where two young boys, huddled in blankets, slept on the floor.

"Hit it!" barked one of the intruders.

When his companion flipped the light switch, he opened fire, pumping six bullets from a .45 caliber pistol into the motionless bodies of James and Virginia Campbell.

They apparently died without awakening. The boys saw nothing of substance and were not harmed.

"Good shooting," an investigator later observed out of professional respect, noting that only an experienced pistol shot could put six rounds from a .45 in the center of human targets at six to eight feet.

"No lunatic shot like that," police observed. "Or else — a special kind of lunatic."

• • •

So begins "Daddy's Girl," the Clifford Irving account of the Campbell murder case which Summit Books describes as "A True Tale of Betrayal, Vengeance, and Texas Justice."

It is that. And more, some of it a little unsettling.

Irving covers the same territory explored earlier by veteran true-crime writer Jack Olsen, whose "Cold Kill" for Atheneum has been described by some critics as more believable but perhaps less readable.

AP Laserphoto

Cynthia Ray, 28, chats with her attorneys at her trial for murder in Houston. She was convicted, after two trials, of murder and sentenced to life in prison. The case is the bases for a new book "Daddy's Girl."

A man of many skills, Irving is an exceptional writer, one who unfortunately will be remembered by many as authoring a phony autobiography of the late reclusive billionaire Howard Hughes.

Irving went to jail for that scam.

"Daddy's Girl" is his 13th book and may well be headed for the best seller charts, although the Campbell murder case was not really a headline grabber until nearly three years after the crime.

That's when Houston private investigator Clyde Wilson sent a sexy, blue-eyed, auburn-haired young operative named Kim Paris to befriend the suspected gunman, David West, then 28. The voluptuous Ms. Paris romanced West for two and a half months and seduced him into a tape recorded confession of the Campbell slayings.

Facing the threat of a death penalty, West, pled guilty in exchange for a life sentence and an agreement to testify against his accomplice.

West identified his former girlfriend as the moving force behind the killings. Her name: Cynthia Ray, 28, the emotionally erratic daughter of James and Virginia Campbell and mother of the two small boys who slept at the foot of their grandparents' bed the night they were slain.

In Irving's account, Cindy comes across as more pathetic than evil, a self-proclaimed victim of parental incest and abuse whose mood swings are no less predictable than her weight, which varies from 120 to 264 pounds.

After two trials, "Daddy's Girl" was convicted of murder and sentenced to life in prison.

It is ironic that Kim Paris broke the case and brought the national media and Hollywood types running to Houston, yet received only minimal attention in Irving's rendition.

Irving wraps up his book with several unexpected twists and largely speculative and unsubstantiated conclusions, based in part on interviews with an unidentified source whom he calls his "anonymous donor."

Some may find his conclusions unconvincing.

Others may be put off more by Irving's personal intrusion into the story itself, although he makes it clear he became a "player" not so much by choice as by circumstance.

Says he:

"I started out in Houston as an observer...I became in turn an investigator, a friend to many of those involved, and a trial witness; and, to my great surprise and mild horror, I helped determine the outcome of events."

Irving writes himself into the book at the start of Chapter 10, explaining: "I can no longer stay outside this story."

Callers demand death of tiger that killed zoo keeper

HOUSTON (AP) — An extra guard has been posted at the Houston Zoo's cat facility and the large cats have been moved because callers have demanded the death of Miguel, the Siberian tiger that killed a zoo keeper, officials say.

Officials said Friday the large cats, including the tigers, were taken out of the public exhibit areas into their holding cages for an undetermined length of time.

"We're leaving them off display to let things settle down," said parks department director Donald Olson. He said he will decide Monday whether to return the large cats to their exhibit areas.

Olson said he didn't know what was said in the phone calls, but that the calls came from people who wanted the tiger killed.

Zoo officials have no plans to kill or even transfer Miguel, a type of tiger on the endangered species list, because of the fatal mauling of zoo keeper Ricardo Tovar Thursday.

"This is a wild animal. It's not a domesticated animal. One of the purposes of a zoo is to preserve species, and tigers are not a domesticated species," Olson said.

While some were calling for Miguel's death, several visitors at the zoo Friday vigorously defended the tiger.

"I'm sorry for the man. But, I don't think he would have wanted it destroyed," said Pat Hodge, a Houston grandmother.

Suzy Sanders, 23, who has a special interest in big cats and goes to the zoo regularly, said, "I don't want to be mean, but I think it was more human stupidity. They knew that animal was dangerous. Obviously, I think more caution should have been taken."

Warren Thomas, director of the Los Angeles Zoo, expressed concern about the death of Tovar, but said he would willingly take up the fight for Miguel's life if his life were threatened in Houston.

"In no way should the tiger be blamed for the death," Thomas said. "He's just a tiger."

Larry Warrendorf, 52, a night keeper-/watchman at the zoo, said he heard negative comments from a few visitors walking by the exhibit area where Tovar was killed.

STATE IN BRIEF

Sewage spill closes Austin swimming hole

AUSTIN (AP) — A sewage spill involving 30,000 gallons of sludge at a creek prompted city officials to close Barton Springs, a popular swimming hole, which will remain off-limits to swimmers until water quality improves.

City-county health officials ordered the spring-fed pool closed Friday as crews worked to clean up the spill at Barton Creek, near the Lost Creek subdivision.

Officials said the pool might be reopened Sunday, depending on the results of water-quality tests. They urged swimmers to stay out of the swimming holes in the creek downstream of Lost Creek because of the threat of contamination.

"There is no evidence the sludge has made its way downstream and we think it is doubtful it will, but we felt we needed to close the pool as a precautionary measure," Bruce Truitt, spokesman for the Austin-Travis County Health Department, said.

NTSU changes its name

DENTON, Texas (AP) — For 27 years, North Texas State University has wanted to be called something else.

On Sunday, the school will get its wish when it becomes the University of North Texas.

But school officials say please don't call it by its initials, UNT.

North Texas chancellor Alfred E. Hurley said the new name more accurately represents the achievements of the 23,000-enrollment school in this Dallas suburb.

"Our research work has increased. We have doubled the amount of research funds from $5 million to $10 million in the last two years," he said.

Bandit has heart attack

DALLAS (AP) — A man police suspected of being the so-called "Dapper Bandit" who was responsible for 25 bank robberies, suffered cardiac arrest and had to be revived by an emergency team at a Dallas Hospital, a hospital source told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

The hospital source told the newspaper Friday that Mark Ervin Reeves, 35, went into cardiac arrest last Monday evening shortly after he became disengaged from a treatment tube at Medical City Hospital.

A hospital spokesman would neither confirm nor deny the report.

Reeves was listed in serious condition at the hospital Friday where he is being treated for a self-inflicted gunshot wound he suffered as police closed in on him following a bank robbery May 4.

The employee, who did not want her name disclosed, told the newspaper that since the crisis Reeves has been connected to a respirator, an apparatus that covers much of his face and pumps air into his lungs.

More inmates sent to TDC

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas judges and juries are sending increasing numbers of non-violent first-time offenders to prison, despite an overcrowding crisis that has forced a limit on admissions to the Texas Department of Corrections.

A new study by the state Criminal Justice Policy Council shows a rise in the number of inmates sent to TDC who had no prior prison or probation records, committed non-violent offenses and received sentences of five years or less, the Austin bureau of the Dallas Times Herald reported.

Key lawmakers said Friday the increase in non-violent offenders in the state prison system should prompt the Legislature to consider adopting new programs and expanding others that provide less expensive alternatives to incarceration.

"It's the simplistic approach, that the only way we punish people is give them room and board in East Texas," said Rep. Al Granoff, D-Dallas, chairman of the House Select Committee on Sentencing and Recidivism. "We have to make some real decisions on what the prison system is for."

Granoff said a continued increase in the number of non-violent offenders being sent to TDC will force the early release of more violent convicts who should be serving longer prison terms.

Council stirs controversy

PATTON VILLAGE, Texas (AP) — A newly elected City Council majority put city officials on notice, saying if they don't like the way things are run to "pick up their marbles and go home."

Robert Devaney, a 66-year-old accountant and former council member who was elected mayor May 7, was sworn in Friday along with new council members Judy Lennon, Cathy Ramsey Naquin and Dorris Smith.

Minutes after taking their oaths of office, the new officials issued a statement telling city hall and police personnel to "pick up their marbles and go home" if they don't like their new representation.

"It's our way of saying, if you don't like the voters' choice, you don't have to stick around," said Devaney, who issued the statement with the new council members.

Convict changes story of officer's shooting

DALLAS (AP) — The man who testified that he watched Randall Dale Adams murder a Dallas police officer in 1976 now says Adams is innocent — but a federal magistrate has made a recommendation that would block Adams' attempt to get a new trial.

David Ray Harris, a death row inmate who testified in 1977 that Adams shot officer Robert Wood after a traffic stop, said in a prison interview this week with the Dallas Morning News that Adams "was not even in the car at the time this happened."

Harris' statement implicates himself, but Harris, awaiting execution for the 1985 murder of a Beaumont man, refused to say whether he killed Wood.

"Even if I get up there and admitted I was the one, it's not going to help him (Adams) substantially — but it could hurt me substantially," Harris said. "I'm not going to volunteer to go to that death chamber over there."

Adams, whose death sentence eventually was commuted to life, said from prison that Harris' statements may mean nothing legally, but they do convince others that he is innocent of the crime.

"I have been screaming in the woods and nobody was willing to listen to me," Adams said. "I think that sooner or later, I am going to win this case."

Harris, who was never charged in the Wood case, also told New York film maker Errol Morris that Adams was innocent. Morris' three years of research for the movie "The Thin Blue Line," to be released later this year, helped attorneys legally attack Adams' trial, particularly the actions of prosecutor Doug Mulder.

But U.S. Magistrate John Tolle, who conducted a hearing in the case 17 months ago, recommended Friday denial of Adams' request for a writ of habeas corpus, which would free Adams unless the state gave him a new trial.

The recommendation was forwarded to U.S. District Judge A. Joe Fish, who will review the same legal arguments made before Tolle, then make a ruling on Adams' request.

"I'm disturbed by this story, deeply disturbed on a number of levels," Morris said.

Education leader: Money doesn't keep students in school

McALLEN, Texas (AP) — The man who may succeed William Bennett as U.S. education secretary says school dropouts cost the country billions of dollars a year, but money is not what it takes to keep students achieving in school.

"Any time you have quality teachers and quality principals, with parents involved in the process, you don't need additional money," said Linus Wright, undersecretary to Bennett.

Wright made the comments Friday to the state convention of the League of United Latin American Citizens.

On Monday, Bennett announced he would be leaving in September and recommended Wright to succeed him in the Cabinet position. The White House has not responded officially.

The role of the education secretary is "to call attention to successful programs that have been observed and to disseminate research programs that have proven to be successful," Wright said.

The LULAC convention, lasting through Sunday, will focus on the theme, "Education is the Solution."

Plainview ushers Midland from playoffs

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

Head coach Tim Whalen could only hang his head in disappointment. That's all Eric Boyt and Kyle Lusby could do, too. They and about 1800 Bulldog faithful.

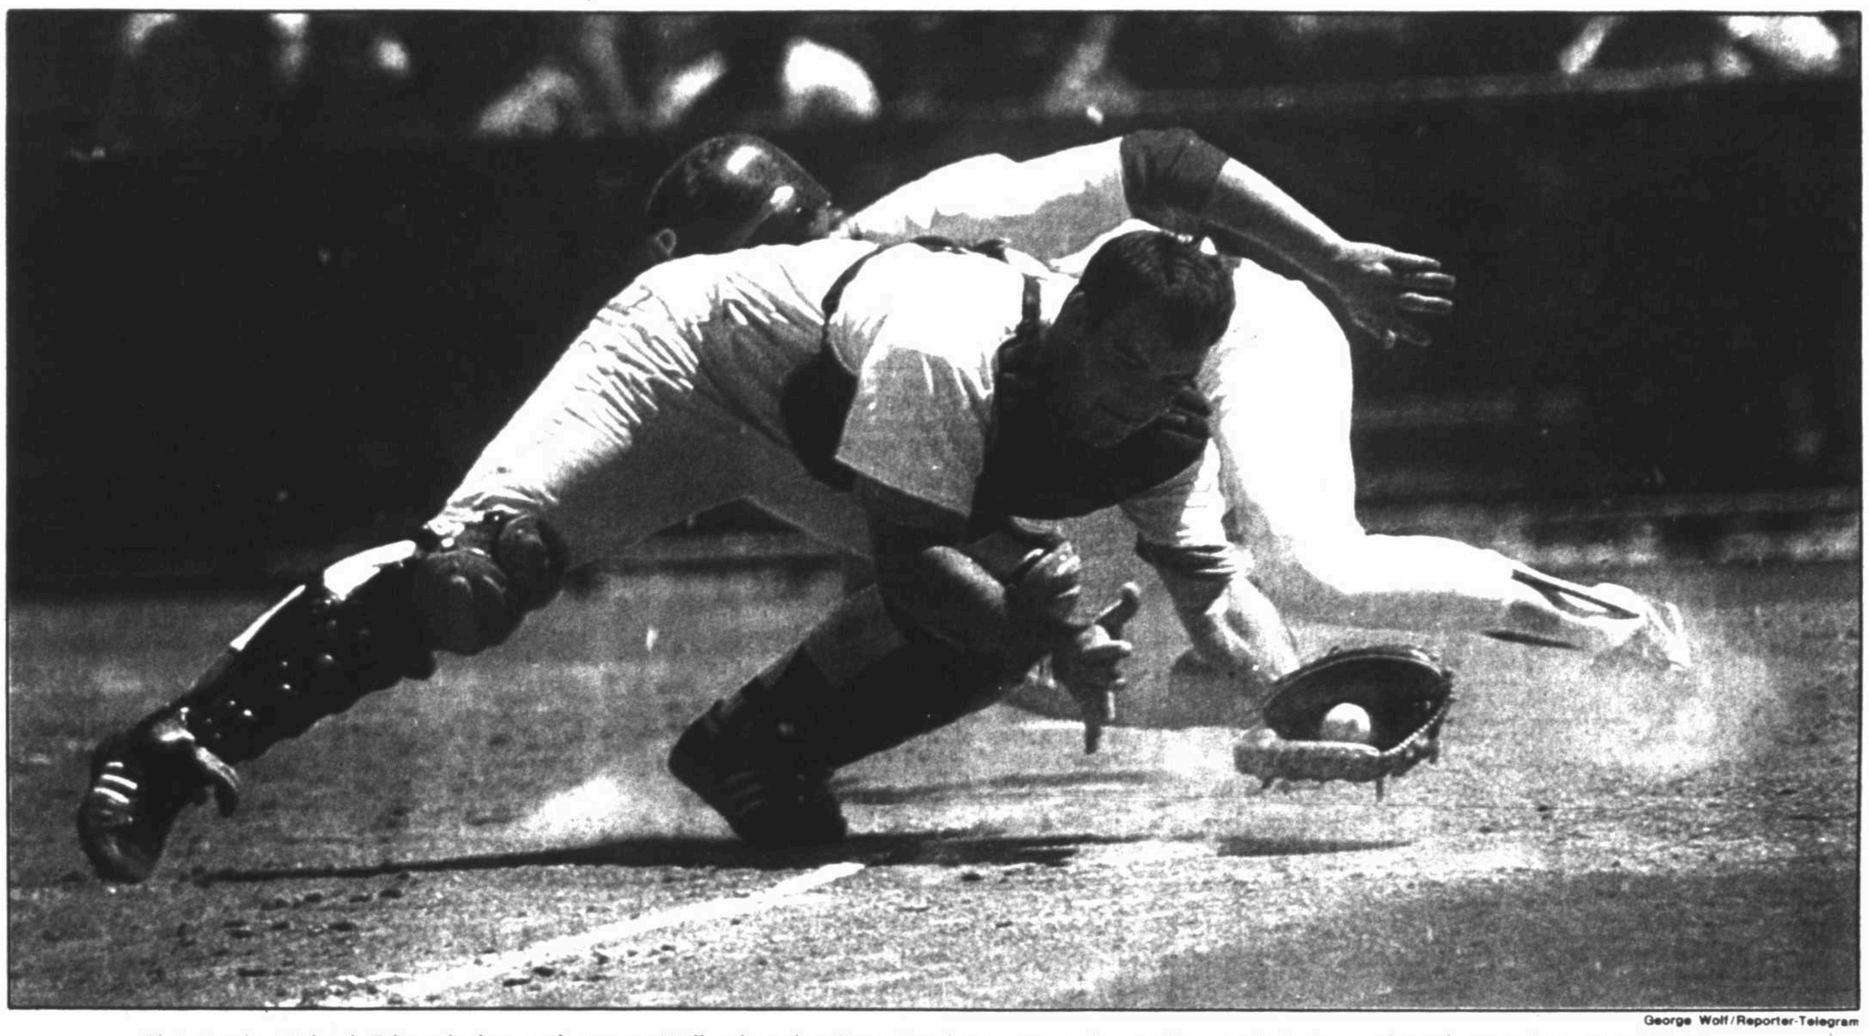

The Midland High Bulldogs' road to the playoffs came to a grinding halt Saturday afternoon, as the 'Dogs lost to the Plainview Bulldogs 4-3 the nine inning, bi-district loss.

In a see-saw battle that saw numerous lead and momentum shifts, Plainview brought home the winning run in the top of the ninth on a throwing error by MHS first baseman Kyle Lusby.

CENTERFIELDER Stan Robertson, on first after a single, broke for second on Rene Perez' single. Robertson ran for third and Lusby's throw sailed over third baseman Joe Rendon's reach, allowing Robertson to come in with what would be the winning run.

"Kyle's throw is gonna loom," Whalen said. "He's crushed. But there were a lot of other key plays. He did fine. He just happened to make the throw that went astray. I just hope everybody remembers all the good plays he's made."

Plainview starter Petey Holland went the full nine innings, throwing the best game of his season. Prior to Saturday's game, Holland had been used primarily as a reliever, collecting only 2⅔ innings pitched. In this the most important game of his career, Holland allowed 11 Midland High hits and walked only one. All three runs Holland allowed were earned.

George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

Plainview's Michael Edwards beats throw to Midland catcher Scott Mowles to score tying run in seventh inning and send game into extra innings.

"THAT KID just did a heckuva job pitching," Whalen said. "He threw it around the plate and did a great job keeping us off the boards."

"I slept about three hours last night," Holland said. "Coach told me if he takes me out, I'm out. Said he needed Pena's bat. I told him, 'I'm not going out, I'm going the distance.

"I prayed every inning. I'd rundown there by the tarp and pray. I knew they'd come through sooner or later."

Midland High's Jason Stone was the leading hitter, collecting three singles in four at bats. Boyt went 2-for-4 and scored two runs. Catcher Scot Mowles also finished 2-for-4 with an RBI.

Midland High opened the scoring in the bottom of the first. Boyt reached on a single and went to second on Holland's balk. Mowles ripped a line shot to the opposite field to drive in Boyt.

Plainview tied it in the bottom of the second when Willie Ansley reached on an error by Boyt at third. Robertson, who finished 3-for-4 with a run scored and an RBI, drove in Ansley with a double to left.

Midland High jumped to a 2-1 lead in the third on an RBI double by Tony Perez, driving in Stone, and Plainview tied it again in the sixth with an RBI single by Lee Keller.

Keller, who appeared for a while as though he would be the Cinderella story of the game, finished 1-for-2. He had replaced centerfielder Willie Ansley, Plainview's hottest prospect, who was ejected for "flagrant contact" when he ran into Boyt on the basepath.

MHS SCORED its final run of the game in the sixth when Boyt scored after David Danley's single.

Plainview proceeded to tie it for the final time in the top of the seventh when Keith Mayberry flew out to center, driving in Michael Edwards. Edwards, a courtesy runner, had come on for Ronny Ballard who reached on a single.

After Ballard's single, Boyt relieved starter Joe Rendon. Through six innings, Rendon scattered eight hits and struck out five. The senior right-hander walked just one, and of the three runs he allowed, only two were earned.

"I wasn't getting tired," Rendon said. "I could've lasted longer. I got kind of upset when (Whalen) took me out, but he's the coach."

For Boyt, it was a performance uncharacteristic of those he is known for. In three innings he allowed five hits and walked one, leaving the bases loaded in the seventh and eighth innings. The one run Plainview scored while Boyt was on the hill was unearned, coming on the Lusby error.

OHS' McDaniel surprised second

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

AUSTIN - The state track meet here Saturday at Memorial Stadium was again a rude host to Permian Basin runners, but the unkindest cut of all was felt by Odessa High's Kasandra McDaniel in the 100 meters.

It appeared to sideline watchers that McDaniel won the 100. She went to the medal stand expecting a gold. She was given the sliver for second place.

"I just know I was first," claimed McDaniel. "All the other girls, including the one they said won (Stacey Clack of Austin Anderson), came by to congratulate me. I even carried the tape all the way to the end of the track."

A PROTEST was filed and denied. McDaniel had a chance to right the situation in the 200, but her concentration was shot. She was really dejected after a third place in the 200. McDaniel and Clack were both timed at 11.6 in the 100.

Things didn't go any better for Midland Lee and Midland High, but there was no doubt in the results.

Lee's Jimmy Fennell placed fifth and Marcus Strambler sixth in the hurdle events.

Fennell was timed at 14.0 in the 110 high hurdles while Beaumont Central's Zachary Chatman, who had never busted 13.8, won with a 13.5.

"I hate it that I have to go out of Lee like this," said Fennell. "But I really never had a chance. We all got out of the blocks clean, but I got hit by (South Oak Cliff's Rayford) Ross over each hurdle with his arm.

"I've never been hit like that in a race and then I hit two hurdles and really sat down on one of them. There was no way for me to recover. I thought I was coming on there for a time in the middle of the race."

STRAMBLER, a junior, ran a good first half of the 300 hurdles before trouble hit.

"I chopped my steps on a hurdle and the field came up and got me," said Strambler. "I'm not disappointed or anything. I ran a good race and I know I'm coming back. They will hear of me again because I've got another shot. I know what it takes now."

Mesquite's Mark Mark (a real name) won the 300 hurdles with a 36.7, much better than Strambler's state ranked time of 37.29.

Midland High's Tracy Parker got over 40-feet in the shot put for the third consecutive meet, but her 40-8 here was far below her Region I record of 41-9. Parker ended up sixth, but would have placed second by equaling her Region I effort. Alief Elisk's Jenny Heisler, the favorite, won easily with a 43-3 3/4.

Felice in record 5K

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

The fifth annual Run for the Arts was billed as a duel between Midland fireman Dave Felice and San Angelo minister John Stukey for the overall championship.

But Felice came out with both guns, 'er feet, blazing en route to a convincing win in the five-kilometer road race through downtown and adjacent residential areas. The former Pennsylvania State University standout ran away from the field with a course record 15:43, while Stukey finished second in 16:44.

John Bednarski set the old course record of 15:50 last year.

The Stukey clan did come up with one winner, as John's wife Brenda easily outdistanced local favorites Cyndi Simpson and Juli Sheils for the women's overall championship. Brenda Stukey was 20th overall in 19:21, while Simpson and Sheils finished 31st and 34th, respectively.

Midland-Odessa runners virtually swept the age-group championships. John Stukey was the only interloper, taking the men's 35-39 title. But the United Methodist pastor couldn't handle Felice in the overall race, despite having posted times below 15 minutes in previous road races.

"I don't know what went wrong," Stukey said. "Last June, I just sort of fell apart and I haven't been able to get back in shape.

"I just need to concentrate on finding out what's wrong. There's no sense in trying to push it."

Troy Kennedy brings long record of successes to Rankin

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Kennedy

Some coaches look at small schools as stepping stones to jobs at bigger schools.

Others make a career out of teaching and coaching at smaller schools because of their compatibility with small-town life. Count incoming Rankin High football coach Troy Kennedy among the latter group.

Kennedy tried big-school coaching early in his career with an assistant's post at the Dallas suburb of Duncanville in the early 1970s. But the 1968 Howard Payne University graduate left for the head job at Grandview in 1972 and has been coaching at small high schools ever since.

Kennedy began his career with a year at Brownwood Junior High before moving to Duncanville.

He takes over in Rankin after nine years in Roscoe, where he had six straight playoff teams — including a state runnerup finish in 1982. But the Roscoe gridders went 3-5-1 last season and Kennedy decided it was time to move on.

SO HE replaced the retiring Dwayne Turner at Rankin. One might think a veteran coach would be itching to move to a bigger school, but not Kennedy. Several factors enter into his reasoning, not least including his belief that small towns are more conducive to a child's upbringing.

"I have three kids in school, and it's my belief that they won't be exposed to what you might call the evils of the world at such a young age," he said. "Also, I like the environment of a small town.

"I'm just not big city folks."

Kennedy has never forgotten what being an athlete did for his life as a high schooler in the central Texas hamlet of Breckinridge.

"My family background is such that I never would have attended college without the scholarship I received to Howard Payne," he said. "So coaching is not just something I want to do.

"You might say I'm paying a debt."

KENNEDY admits the small school athlete may not as polished as his large-school counterpart. But the small-town coach gets to see more of his charges, he said.

"Athletically, there's a difference," he said. "But in a smaller school, you have the same athletes in every sport, giving you a wider spectrum."

There's more of a chance for coaches to chart an athlete's individual growth at a smaller school, Kennedy said.

"You never get rich doing it, but it's pretty fulfilling when you see kids accomplish things and see them progress from their ninth-grade year.

"It's very rewarding to see a 135-pound kid block a 175-pounder. He may not do it all the time, but if he does it enough, you'll win some games."

Kennedy also likes the way small towns rally around their high school teams.

"High school sports are very strong bonding units for a school," he said. "Sometimes, the school activities are the main thing to do in that town."

Rankin will run a Veer offense under Kennedy, a departure from the Wing-T that Turner used in his 18-year stint as the Red Devil grid mentor. Kennedy said the key to Red Devil success will be discipline based on self-responsibility.

"I teach the kids a type of discipline where they understand that anything they do on and off the field is their decision," he said.

"I WANT to always treat the kids as young men," he said. "If they don't live up to that, we treat them as kids."

Kennedy has visited Rankin four times since accepting the head coaching position in an effort to eliminate the possible disadvantage of staying in Roscoe until the end ofd this school year.

"I've given them my playbook, and I'll go down there the last two weeks of school and try to initiate them into my philosophy.

"The advantage of my not being there now is that the kids can approach two-a-days with more enthusiasm," Kennedy said. "There will always be a competition to impress the new coach."

J-Mets pin 3-2 loss on Midland

From Staff Reports

JACKSON, Miss. — The Midland Angels ended a drought of 19 innings without a run, but the Jackson Mets still managed to pin the snakebitten Angels with a 3-2 loss despite an outstanding pitching effort by Steve McGuire.

McGuire, who suffered through some tough outings in the first month of the season, threw a complete-game three-hitter against the Mets. The righthander struck out four and walked three, but his teammates were little help as two of Jackson's runs were unearned.

The Mets jumped out to a 1-0 lead on a double by Felix Perdomo and a line drive by Jeff Gardner that glanced off the glove of Midland third baseman Jeff Manto for an error.

Jackson added two more runs in the fifth on a rally that started with a walk to Gardner, a single by Craig Shipley, and a balk by McGuire that moved the runners to second and third.

Geary Jones then grounded to short to drive in one run, and the eventual winning run scored on a throwing error by Midland catcher Mike Knapp when he attempted to pick Shipley off at third.

But Midland made the game close in the late innings. With two out in the eighth, Jim Thomas reached on an error, Craig Gerber scratched out an infield hit and a passed ball by Jones sent the runners to second and third.

Jesus Alfaro then hit an 0-2 pitch for a two-run single.

The Angels came close in the ninth on a single by Tom Alfredson, a sacrifice by Manto, and a grounder by Erik Pappas that moved the runner to third. But Knapp struck out to end the game.

Tim Burcham, 0-1, starts on the mound for Midland today against Jackson's Blaine Beatty, 3-2, 2.78 earned run average. Game time is 2 p.m.

In other Texas League action Saturday, Wichita routed Tulsa 11-0, San Antonio edged Shreveport 1-0, and Arkansas outhit El Paso 10-7 in the first game of a doubleheader. The second game result at Arkansas was unavailable at press time.

Zimmerman captures rugged cycle race

MAYENS, Switzerland (AP) — Urs Zimmermann of Switzerland captured the toughest, mountainous stage of the Tour de Romandie road cycling race Saturday but Gerard Veldscholten of the Netherlands moved into the overall lead with just one more leg to go.

Zimmermann finished 33 seconds ahead of fellow Swiss Toni Rominger.

Arkansas sweeps pair from Rice

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — A Don Thomas triple, a Randy Bobb double and 10 singles paved the way for the Arkansas Razorbacks as they defeated the Rice Owls 10-1 in the first of two games Saturday.

Arkansas won the nightcap, 9-8.

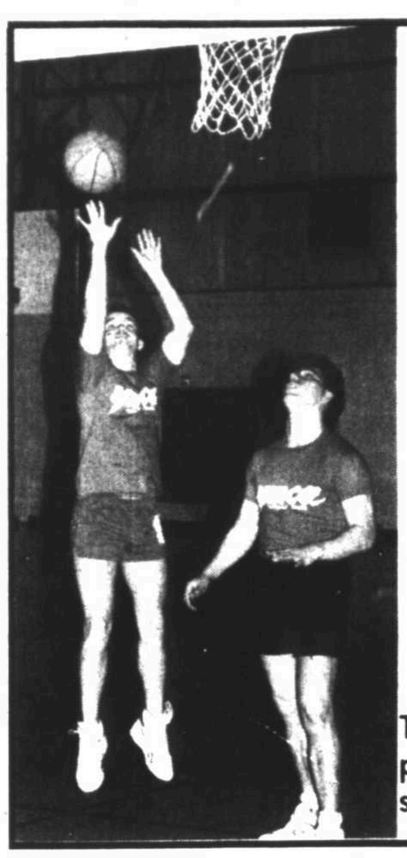

Rice got off to a poor start as pitcher John Pope walked the first three men he faced and five of the 12 in the first inning of the opener. Arkansas scored six runs in the first.

The Razorbacks, 38-18, finished third in the Southwest Conference with a 12-9 record. Rice, dropping to 31-28 on the season, finished the SWC in the cellar at 6-15.

In the nightcap, Arkansas had to come from behind to win. Leading 5-3 in the seventh, Razorback starter John Cebuhar saw the defense behind him falter as three errors assisted in a Rice five-run rally.

Arkansas came back with one run in the seventh and three in the eighth to sweep the twinbill and a three-game series which began Friday.

In the Arkansas eighth, Scott Pose reached first on a fielding error by Rice second baseman Chris Feris. Pose stole second and went to third on a Kelly Zane single to center. Both scored on a Jimmy Kremers double to center to tie the score at 5-5. A Troy Eklund single to left scored Kremers and gave Arkansas the lead and eventual win.

"There is just nothing to say," said the junior Parker with lower lip quivering. "I really felt I could do a lot better than this here at the state meet. This is some incentive for next year. I'm coming back."

Abilene Cooper sophomore Tammy Scott placed fifth in the high jump with a career high 5-6.

The highlight of the 5A competition was the national record 40.0 by Austin Reagan in the sprint relay. No one thought much about it being a national record since the field was so close, but when the times were released, eighth place had a blazing 41.1.

Adam Setliff of Hurst Bell set a state record in the discus with a 198-4, erasing the 198-0 record by Michael Carter in 1979.

El Paso's Gilbert Contreras won the 800 in near record time of 1:49.8, but just failed to become a double winner by placing second in the 1600. Lubbock Coronado's Debra Tinnell won the 800 in 2:10.4.

In Class 2A and A competition, Rankin's 2A 1600 relay placed sixth after making a game attempt a winning the race. Rankin's anchor leg James Watson dropped the baton on the final exchange when the Rankin team was in the medal hunt.

"I just barely got the stick and it dropped out of my hand," said Watson. "We didn't waste a lot of time because I was able to pick it up quickly, but it probably cost us a chance to do a lot better."

McCamey's Roman Zarate was another sixth place finisher after making a push for a victory. In the 2A 300 hurdles, Zarate was leading until the last hurdle and finished sixth with a 39.1.

"I thought I had a chance to win, but I started tightening up the last 80 yards and I just couldn't get anything more out of my legs. I had a good lead there for a while," said Zarate.

Stanton senior Kody Newman found her return trip to state in the girls 2A 100 as a less than fulfilling experience with an eighth place finish.

"I came here as a sophomore and placed fifth," said Newman. "I was hoping to better that, but I guess getting to state twice is something - even if you finish last."

Garden City's Guillermo Morales placed fifth in the 1A 3200 and fifth in the 1600 while Klondike's Sylvia Serrato failed to place in the 1A 800.

Class A's Alison Calicoatte of D'Hanis and 2A's Ginger Dickerson of Refugio were the stars of the Saturday morning session. Dickerson was a rare five-event winner while Calicoatte won in four events.

Felice was surprised he wasn't more seriously challenged.

"I took off from the start, and nobody went with me," he said.

Felice went through two miles in 9:44, but almost lost his bid for a course record because of a stiff east wind. Running by himself didn't help much, either.

"It's always easier to run fast when someone is pushing you really hard."

In the women's race, Brenda Stukey finished about 40 seconds ahead of Simpson despite running more than a minute slower than her personal best.

"I haven't been running much this year," the former Angelo State runner said. "I'm just trying to get back into some decent shape."

RACE NOTES: More than two-thirds of the 167 finishers were from Midland, 117 in all. Most of the rest were from Odessa, but Wayne Ramsey made it all the way from the Austin suburb of Cedar Park to finish 100th overall and fifth in the men's 50-59 division.

Eight-year-old Steve Britton was the youngest finisher, while 61-year-old Van Howbert was the oldest. Ironically, the two were one second apart. Britton finished 134th in 27:06, while Howbert was 136th in 27:07.

"I thought we'd get a run because they like to hit Boyt," Plainview head coach Fred Oliver said. "Their eyes lit up when he came in."

BOYT FINISHES the year at 7-4. In the last 50 innings, beginning with district play, Boyt has compiled a 1.12 earned run average, allowing just eight earned runs and 34 hits. In his last eight appearances, he has struck out an even 60 while walking just 28.

Midland High finishes the year at 20-9, 1-2 in the series with Plainview.

Plainview now advances to area and will host El Paso Sorocco in a best-of-three series May 20 and 21.

"I really felt we could string two or three hits together," Whalen said. "We never could get any momentum going. It was a good series, though. Good pitching, timely hitting. The kind that drive coaches crazy."

Clemens 'off', still wins, 3-0

Associated Press

Roger Clemens didn't have his best stuff Saturday, but what he did have was good enough to lead the Boston Red Sox past Seattle 3-0.

Clemens pitched a three-hitter and struck out 10 en route to his fourth shutout of the season.

"I pitched," Clemens said. "I knew I didn't have my extreme fastball, so I pitched today."

Clemens, 6-1, walked a season-high five and was helped by three double plays as he beat Scott Bankhead, 0-1.

It was the sixth time this year Clemens has struck out 10 or more in a game and the 27th time in his career. The five walks were the most allowed by Clemens since last June 6, when he walked seven against Detroit.

Clemens leads the majors with 93 strikeouts in 76 innings. It was his 14th career shutout in 113 starts and his seventh career three-hitter.

"He (Clemens) got behind a little more than he wanted to," catcher Rick Cerone said. "He was having problems keeping the ball down, so he went mostly with his No. 1 pitch, which is his fastball."

Bankhead, who underwent shoulder surgery last October, allowed only five hits, struck out eight and walked two in six innings in his 1988 debut.

Sam Horn put the Red Sox ahead when he homered in the second inning.

It was the Mariners' fourth straight loss.

Yankees 6, Angels 2

NEW YORK — Home runs by Don Mattingly and Dave Winfield helped Tommy John to his 279th career victory.

John, 2-0, walked two, struck out two and gave up 13 hits in 8 1-3 innings. Dave Righetti, making his first appearance since May 2, came on to get the final two outs and register his fifth save.

Mattingly's second homer came with two out in the fourth off Angels starter Dan Petry, 2-3, the first of four Angels pitchers used in the game, and Winfield ignited a four-run fifth inning with his eighth home run.

Brian Downing homered for the Angels.

Indians 6, Brewers 4

MILWAUKEE — Joe Carter singled in the go-ahead run in the fifth inning 4 for the Indians' fifth straight victory. Carter's two-out single broke a 2-2 tie and came after a single by Willie Upshaw and a balk on Milwaukee starter Mike Birkbeck, 1-3.

The Indians added three runs in the sixth inning off Brewers reliever Odell Jones, two scoring as shortstop Dale Sveum muffed a bases-loaded grounder.

The loss was the fifth straight for Milwaukee following a 10-game winning streak.

Cleveland defeated the Brewers for the third straight game and ran its record against AL East teams this season to 10-0.

Twins 7, Tigers 0

DETROIT — Les Straker pitched his first major-league shutout and Mark Davidson hit his second big-league homer for Minnesota.

Loser Frank Tanana, 6-2, was pounded for six runs on nine hits.

Davidson's first homer of the season in the fourth was a solo shot into the lower left-field seats.

Athletics 8, Orioles 0

BALTIMORE — Mark McGwire and Dave Parker hit three-run homers and Bob Welch pitched a five-hitter as Oakland snapped a three-game losing streak and prevented Baltimore from posting its first two-game winning streak of the season.

White Sox 7, Blue Jays 5

CHICAGO — Light-hitting Fred Manrique hit a tie-breaking three-run homer and drove in a fourth run with a bunt single. Manrique, who came into the contest with one home run this season and seven in 401 major-league at-bats, broke a 2-2 tie in the fourth inning by hitting the first pitch from John Cerutti into the first row of seats in left field.

Bruins advance to finals

Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Craig Janney spoiled New Jersey's comeback bid with his second goal of the game with just under eight minutes remaining and the Boston Bruins went on to defeat the upstart Devils 6-2 Saturday night for the Wales Conference championship.

In capturing the seventh and deciding game of the conference championship, the Bruins advanced to the Stanley Cup finals for the first time in 10 years. They will meet the defending champion Oilers in a best-of-seven series starting Wednesday night in Edmonton.

NHL

AFTER KIRK Muller pulled the Devils to within 3-2 by converting a passout from Aaron Broten at 3:41 of the third period, Boston goalie Rejean Lemelin made several key saves to keep the Devils from tying the score.

Janney, who joined the Bruins after playing with the U.S. Olympic Team, then dashed the Devils' comeback hopes when he intercepted a pass by Ken Daneyko deep in the New Jersey end, went in alone and swept the puck past Sean Burke at 12:05.

Less than two minutes later, the Bruins wrapped up their 16th trip to the finals and a chance for their sixth Stanley Cup when Steve Kasper sent Cam Neely in alone on Burke. Neely, who had been thwarted numerous times during the series by the rookie goaltender, beat him with a backhander at 13:19.

Ken Linseman capped the scoring with a short-handed goal, a long backhand flip into an empty net with 24 seconds to play.

THE BRUINS outshot the Devils 31-19, but Lemelin made the difference in the early going.

The 33-year-old Lemelin, driven to the bench early in the third period of a 6-3 loss in Game 6 in New Jersey Thursday night, frustrated the Devils with three acrobatic saves in the opening minutes, robbing Muller, Pat Verbeek and Tom Kurvers from close-in.

Janney and Moe Lemay then scored three minutes apart midway through the first period for a 2-0 lead and Rick Middleton made it 3-0 less than three minutes into the second period.

John MacLean gave the Devils some life with a goal late in the middle period before Muller brought them to within one early in the final period.

The game was officiated by Don Koharski, the object of Devils' coach Jim Schoenfeld's wrath after Game 3. Schoenfeld was ultimately suspended for one game by the NHL for confronting Koharski after Boston's 6-1 victory.

After the Devils dominated the opening minutes, the Bruins jumped to a 2-0 lead on their second and third shots on goal three minutes apart midway through the period.

Janney opened the scoring with a power-play goal at 8:59 and Lemay scored exactly three minutes later.

WITH NEW Jersey's Mark Johnson serving a hooking penalty, Janney stationed himself about 15 feet in front of the New Jersey goal and tipped Ray Bourque's 45-foot feed from the point between Burke's legs for his fifth playoff goal.

Rangers whip Royals

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Mike Stanley's two-run homer and Jeff Russell's effective pitching in his first start of the season sparked the Texas Rangers to a record-tying eighth straight victory Saturday night, 6-3 over the Kansas City Royals.

The eight-game streak equaled a club record set in 1976 and matched in 1979.

Russell, 2-0, promoted from middle relief into the rotation after Bobby Witt's demotion to the minors earlier in the week, scattered eight hits in 7 2-3 innings, his longest outing since 1985. Russell hadn't started a game since last August.

The Rangers tagged loser Charlie Leibrandt, 1-6, for six hits and four hits in the second inning in sending Kansas City to its eighth setback in nine games.

Scott Fletcher's single drove in two runs and Stanley and Jerry Browne added run-scoring singles after Larry Parrish started the uprising with a one-out double.

Kansas City cut the lead to 4-2 in the third on Kevin Seitzer's RBI single and George Brett's run-scoring double. But the Rangers added two runs in the bottom of the third when Parrish walked and Stanley hit his second home run of the season.

The Royals got a run in the fourth on Jamie Quirk's RBI single.

Leibrandt, who had won five of six previous decisions against the Rangers, allowed six runs and 10 hits in three innings. Steve Farr and Dan Quisenberry blanked the Rangers the rest of the way.

Dale Mohorcic relieved Russell with two out in the eighth but walked Bo Jackson to start the Royals' ninth and Mitch Williams came on for his ninth save.

Nuggets pan Mavericks; Pistons make hamburger of Bulls

Associated Press

NBA

The Detroit Pistons, led by a defense that restrained Michael Jordan, routed Chicago Bulls 101-79 Saturday to re-take control of their NBA Eastern Conference semifinal series.

The Pistons' defense, which carried them through the first round of the playoffs, held Jordan scoreless for the first 17 minutes and limited him to 24 points. Jordan, the league's top scorer, averaged 41.6 points in the first seven playoff games.

Vinnie Johnson had 23 points and Isiah Thomas 19 to lead the Pistons.

But it was the pair's defense more than their offense that won the game as they combined with Joe Dumars to shut down Jordan, who didn't score until 5:23 was gone in the second quarter.

"When you play good defense, it helps build your confidence and when you make a couple of shots, it really grows," said Johnson. "We did a good job of keeping the ball out of Jordan's hands and when he did get the ball, we doubled up on him."

"This was the crucial game," said Detroit Coach Chuck Daly. "We got the home-court advantage back and I had a chance to rest some our players, like Dantley, in the fourth quarter. We played good defense and they didn't shoot very well."

In Saturday's other game, Denver beat Dallas 107-105 on Bill Hanzlik's driving shot with three seconds left to take a 2-1 lead in their series.

In games Friday night, the Utah Jazz took a 2-1 lead against the defending champion Lakers, beating Los Angeles 96-89 in the Salt Palace. The Boston Celtics took a 2-0 lead over Atlanta with a 108-97 victory over the Hawks.

Jordan said his problems began at the start, when he threw a punch at Detroit center Bill Laimbeer. He said that Laimbeer elbowed him when he drew a charging foul. Both players were called for technical fouls.

"That's the first time in my career I actually threw a punch and I didn't land it," Jordan said. "But what Laimbeer did was uncalled for. When he was called for an offensive foul, he elbowed me."

"No matter what happens, I'm the villain," Laimbeer countered. "It happened so fast that I don't know what happened. Our style is to be antagonistic."

Nuggets 107, Mavericks 105

Hanzlik scored four of his nine points in the final 35 seconds, including the game-winner with three seconds to play, to cap a game-long comeback by the Nuggets.

Hanzlik tied the game with 35 seconds left, grabbed the rebound of Sam Perkins' miss with 20 seconds to go and scored on a drive with time running out to give the Nuggets their only lead of the game.

The Mavericks jumped off to a 10-2 lead and were ahead 61-53 at halftime and 87-78 after three quarters.

But Denver cut the deficit to three midway through the period and finally tied it with 35 seconds left when Lafayette Lever stole the ball from Rolando Blackman and fed Hanzlik for a layup.

Alex English led Denver with 23 while Perkins had 17 for Dallas.

Friday Night Games

Jazz 96, Lakers 89

The Lakers, seeking to become the first repeat champion since 1969, are suddenly in trouble. A loss at the Salt Palace Sunday would put them within a game of elimination.

"Not in our wildest dreams did we think we could be down 2-1," said Magic Johnson, who was held to 16 points. "But it's reality now and we have to deal with that."

The biggest problem for Los Angeles is scoring inside against 7-foot-4 Scott Eaton, who helped hold 41-year-old Kareem Abdul-Jabbar to 3 for 13 from the field and six points.

"If Kareem, Earvin Johnson and James Worthy — those are the guys that we depend on — can't get the ball in the post or you cannot run sets for them, they've got to get it other ways," said Lakers coach Pat Riley.

Karl Malone scored 29 points for Utah and John Stockton had 22 points and 12 assists.

Celtics 108, Hawks 97

The best thing going for the Hawks is the scene shift — Atlanta, which has lost 13 straight at the Boston Garden, has beaten the Celtics six of seven times at the Omni.

Giants, Krukow blow over Mets

Associated Press

A wind-blown, two-run triple by Robby Thompson keyed a three-run rally and gave the San Francisco Gaints a 3-2 victory over the New York Mets Saturday.

Right-hander Mike Krukow, 2-2, gave up five hits in 7 2-3 innings in winning a pitching duel with right-hander Ron Darling, 3-3, who yielded three hits in seven innings. Atlee Hammaker finished up for his foruth save.

NL

Ex-Giant Mackey Sasser gave the Mets a 1-0 lead in the third with his first major league home run. But the Giants, winning two games in a row for the first time since April 18, scored all of their runs on three of their hits in the third inning. It was the first time since April 19 that New York has lost two straight.

Jose Uribe singled to lead off the third. One out later, Brett Butler snapped an 0-for-19 slump with an infield single and Thompson followed with a towering drive to right center, scoring both runners.

Krukow is now 18-7 lifetime against New York.

Astros 3, Cubs 1

HOUSTON — Bob Knepper became Houston's first five-game winner with a 3-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs. Knepper, 5-0, went 7 1-3 innings and retained his National League ERA lead with a 0.85. Knepper, Al Nipper, 0-1, took the loss.

Chicago took a 1-0 lead in the first when Shawon Dunston singled and eventually scored on Andre Dawson's sacrifice fly. It was Dawson's 1,000th career RBI.

Houston moved ahead 2-1 in its half of the first. Gerald Young walked and went to third on Billy Hatcher's single. One out later, Kevin Bass singled in one run and the second scored on the play on a throwing error by catcher Damon Berryhill.

The Astros increased their lead to 3-1 in the third on Young's triple and Bill Doran's groundout.

Sluman birdies for Nelson lead

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Jeff Sluman, a non-winner on the PGA Tour, birdied the last hole with a 20-foot putt to take a one-shot lead over faltering Ben Crenshaw and Bruce Lietzke Saturday after 54-holes of the $750,000 Byron Nelson Golf Classic.

Sluman shot a 3-under par 67 for a 200 total, 10-under par, over the Tournament Players Course at Las Colinas.

Crenshaw, who had a two-shot lead when the day began, bogeyed three of the last five holes and staggered to the clubhouse with a par 70 and a 201 total.

Lietzke, who hasn't been within one shot of the lead in a year, had a three-putt bogey on the final green for a 66 to tie Crenshaw, the 1983 Nelson winner. Lietzke won the Nelson in 1981.

Sluman, whose highest finish was a second place at the Tournament Players Championship when he lost a playoff to Sandy Lyle, is one of the steadiest players on tour. In 1987, the New Yorker with a degree from Florida State, was in the money 22 times on 32 tour events.

Crenshaw went out in 31 but began his bogey run when he missed a 6-foot putt on the 183-yard par 3 No. 13. He was blocked by a tree after his tee shot on the 390-yard par 4 No. 14 and bogeyed again.

Paul Azinger, who used only 25 putts, shot a 7-under par 63, just a shot off the course record, to move into contention at 204.

Defending champion Fred Couples shot a 65 for a 206 on a sun-splashed day in which Nelson official Ron Case estimated attendance at 50,000 fans.

Bet Twice wins Pimlico Special

By TIM LIOTTA

BALTIMORE (AP) — Bet Twice snuck through along the rail entering the stretch and out ran Lost Code through the final furlong Saturday to win the $500,000 Pimlico Special, being run for the first time in 30 years.

Alysheba, the 1987 Kentucky Derby winner and unbeaten in three starts this year, faded to fourth a field of six that include five winners of $1 million or more. The odds-on favorite, Alysheba carried 127 pounds, one more than Lost Code and three more than Bet Twice.

Bet Twice, who survived a foul claim by Pat Day, rider of Lost Code, won his first stakes as a 4-year-old and defeated Alysheba for the third time in six meetings, including a victory in the Belmont Stakes last year that prevented Alysheba from winning the Triple Crown.

Bet Twice, trained by Jimmy Croll and ridden by Craig Perret, covered the 1 3-16 miles in a stakes record 1:54 1-5. The old record of 1:55.4 was set by Tom Fool in 1953.

Lost Code was three-quarters of a length back and a length in front of Cryptoclearance, who carried 121 pounds including Angel Cordero.

Little Bold John led for the first half-mile before Lost Code moved to the lead on the backstretch. Alysheba raced just behind the leaders on the far turn and moved up to challenge midway around the turn.

With Lost Code in front and Alysheba unable to gain on the outside, Bet Twice surged to the lead along the rail entering the stretch. Lost Code battled back into the final furlong and the two colts appeared to come together side-by-side before Bet Twice pulled away.

Bet Twice won for the tenth time in 19 career starts and increased his earnings to $2,970,027 with the $325,000 winner's purse.

In 1938, the Pimlico Special served as the famous match race in which Seabiscuit defeated War Admiral. The race's other 21 winners included Triple Crown winners War Admiral, Whirlaway, Assault and Citation.

Mears masters slippery Indy for pole

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Rick Mears muscled into the pole position for the 72nd Indianapolis 500 Saturday, setting one- and four-lap speed records as he mastered a slippery track that ambushed a bitterly disappointed Mario Andretti three hours earlier.

The team owned by silver-haired business entrepenur Roger Penske grabbed the spotlight from Andretti by sweeping the three front-row positions among the 19 drivers who qualified for the May 29 race on the first of the four days of time trials.

Danny Sullivan, the 1986 Indy winner, took the middle of the first row, between teammates Mears and four-time and defending champion Al Unser.

Mears, a two-time Indy winner, grabbed his fourth Indianapolis pole and his eighth front-row start in 11 races at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway with his record run.

A fabulous leaded-glass front door with panels leads to the foyer of the home that has an atrium displayed in front of a large window on both sides of the home's entrance. The foyer is separated from the formal living room by brick columns and has a white tile floor. This elegantly decorated room focuses on a brick fireplace with a ceiling spanning ten feet. This room also has a brick wall and features acoustic white walls with bright white trim and crown moulding.

One step ascends to the formal dining room that is highlighted by a large window that has a wonderful view of the beautifully landscaped backyard. These two rooms are separated by two brick planters that are filled with silk flowers cascading down on both sides.

The kitchen and breakfast room are situated next to the living room. This large kitchen has a central work island and specially designed cabinets that would delight any gourmet cook! The kitchen window views a lovely side yard with blooming roses and features stained cabinets, a white and blue print wallcovering with border and a gray/blue tile floor. The Whirlpool appliances include a stove top with indoor grill, microwave, self-cleaning oven, trash compactor and dishwasher. The other amenities include a built-in spice rack, pull-out drawers for storage and uniquely designed corner cabinets. The cabinets have shelves that swing out for easy access and one part is concealed and would be ideal for silver storage.

The utility room is located off the kitchen and is spacious enough for a freezer and includes a sink with lots of cabinet storage. A rear entry, three car garage with openers is also located off this area.

To the right of the formal living room, the den is situated. The room has paneled walls and a cabinet opens up to reveal a wet bar. The bar has a wine rack and a mirrored wall with glass shelves for displaying crystal glasses. Built-in bookcases and cabinets are located on both sides of the wet bar. This room also focuses on a brick fireplace and has French doors that lead to the covered patio and backyard.

The master bedroom is sequestered to the left of the tile entry. This room focuses on a brick fireplace with a carved French mantle and offers the perfect retreat for any couple at the end of the day. This charming room also has two large windows and a cathedral ceiling.

Two doors open onto a stunning master bath that features separate his and her dressing areas. Mirrors reflect the many areas of the bath that is elegantly decorated with gold fixtures and a floral wallcovering in shades of soft rose and wedgwood blue. A large mirror highlights a make-up table. To the right, the lady's dressing area is situated and focuses on a marble tub. A step leads to the tub which is highlighted by a beveled mirror wall, with a planter of silk flowers reflecting in the room. The man's dressing area is located to the left and features a built-in shower. Both dressing areas have large walk-in closets with specially designed built-in drawers and shelves. Langston Realtors Talk About...
Residential and commercial real estate market

The following is the text of a speech recently given by Mrs. Langston at a meeting of a local service orgnization:

Langston

Being a Realtor, I've found that the opening topic is most casual conversation is "How's Real Estate?" I think those in the energy sector experience the same thing and are asked "How's the oil business?"

These are sincere questions in our part of the country: people want reassurance that the value of their home, usually a person's largest single investment, is secure and they want reassurance that their income, which in Midland, is probably based on the oil market is safe. However, these questions are asked in the same manner as "How are you feeling?"; If you cannot say, "I'm feeling fine" - they really do not want an answer!

So we are happy to report that the real estate business is "feeling fine", there are a lot of good things that can be said about our current market and the outlook for the next several months.

First, as to the residential sector: It's steady, we definitely feel it has bottomed and it is slowly on its way back up. About the worst thing that can be said regarding the residential market is that there are no dramatic improvements except in two areas:

First, the reemergence of the affluent buyer. From November of '86 thru March of '87 - five month period - there were virtually no sales over $250,000! However, beginning in April of '87 - 13 months ago - we have averaged about one sale per month in the $300-600,000 range. We think this signals good confidence in the market.

The second area of dramatic improvement is in inventory. Twenty-four months ago there was approximately 1700 residential properties on the market; a year ago there were 1460; today the inventory hovers around 1200. This is a 30 percent reduction in a two year period! A significant part of the dwindling inventory is due to a corresponding decrease in the number of foreclosure postings. In January of '87, 148 were posted, while 79 were posted in January of '88; that's nearly a 50 percent reduction!

Other encouraging factors in our market are stabilization of prices and a stabilization of marketing time, now about three and a-half months.

The one factor not quite as encouraging is the number of sales; they are averaging a little over 100 a month as reported through Midland Board of Realtors Multiple Listing Service. This figure is much better that the 70-80 per month for the first part of '86 but not as vital as the 150-180 that we experienced last March and April. However, we do not feel this is not an area of critical concern, but rather a reflection of interest rates now back into double digits after months of being in the 9-9 1/2 percent range. The lower statistics may also be the result of sales of new construction being made by builders and not being reported through the Board's MLS. Anyone driving in the areas of Trinity Meadows, Polo Park, Saddle Club South, etc. can readily see the really strong activity in new construction.

To sum up the residential market: we have many encouraging factors working toward a stronger market; we feel busy and we are busy; homes are selling within 7-10 percent of listed prices and some of these have been on the market a year!

The commercial real estate market presents a slightly different picture because it is an area that only now is seeing any recovery from the boom/bust period of the early 80's. Our Commercial Department Realtors feel the slide was over at year's beginning. We have well priced properties, and ample buyers, but we don't have the financing available on the larger properties. Texas has been redlined by lenders in other parts of the country and few of our in-state lenders are in a position because of their own portfolios to make loans to investors. However, on a more positive side, some local lenders are presently offering financing for owner/user buyers and these transactions are being completed.

Finding the money is the key ingredient for any commercial sale. Foreign buyers are rapidly recognizing the potential of the Texas market and are purchasing Class A properties throughout the state. Last month we exhibited 20 million dollars in properties at a trade show in London. The response was overwhelming; to date we have had 155 inquiries! To sum up commercial real estate : (1) don't expect a dramatic rebound but do look for a steady, slow recovery, (2) do consider that now is an excellent time for prudent purchases, and (3) the turn around has already started!

Joanne Langston is the president/broker of Langston Realtors, one of the city's largest real estate firms, with 41 sales associates serving Midland for 23 years.

FOR CRYING OUT LOUD!

For crying out loud! You're tired of cold soup, flies in your salad, a button missing from your brand new coat and rude sales people. It's time to let your feelings be known.

Stop being a doormat. It's time stand up and let your voice be heard. Tell the waiter you want your check now, not after he's through serving everyone else. ... And tell the man at the dry cleaners you take your shirts there to be cleaned and pressed, not to have the dirt and wrinkles pressed in permanently. ... And the hair dryer you bought last week that doesn't dry things — it melts them — take it back to the place of purchase or return it to the manufacturer.

Stand up for your rights as a consumer. Don't let the work place dragons wins.

What?

You wanted to complain, but you didn't. You were afraid your grievance wouldn't be taken seriously and you weren't sure of whom to complain to in order to get results.

Well, here is a lesson or two that might help your cries of complaint be heard.

First, you must remember that the consumer has an obligation to complain when a product or service is unsatisfactory.

An obligation — Why would any business consider it the consumer's obligation to complain, you ask?

Simple. If management is unaware of a problem, they can do nothing to remedy it.

FOR EXAMPLE: You enter a restaurant and are seated. The establishment has a nice atmosphere and good food, but the service is too slow or perhaps the servers are rude to the customers. Instead of asking for the manager and voicing a complaint, you simply decide to no longer patronize the establishment. Several other customers do the same. You also warn your friends of the problems you've encountered, therefore they do not eat at the restaurant either.

Because management is unaware of why business is slow, they can do nothing to improve the situation. Ultimately, this could result in the closing of what could be a wonderful and enjoyable place to eat — all because the customers failed to voice a complaint.

Granted, no one looks forward to hearing something is wrong with their business or product. But most businesses would prefer to know what is wrong and how the customer would like it improved than to loose the customer's business.

Although, some people seem to have a knack for complaining and getting a just reward, effective complaining is not an inherited skill. It is an acquired talent to be reckoned with.

The first step to effective complaining is to have a valid complaint — you must believe in what you're complaining about.

When you have a valid complaint, the next step is to learn exactly how to complain.

Believe it or not, there are those who are so intimidated by the system of corporate structure that they will not complain about shoddy workmanship, a butchered haircut or a lousy meal. Each of these situations represents a valid reason for complaint — a reason for refusal of payment. These people are doormats for those who are willing to wipe their feet.

Then there is a group of people who believe that the louder and more obnoxious they are, the quicker and more efficiently their complaint will be handled. These people seldom get a better response than those who do not utter a peep. They simply make the management angry at their rudeness and embarrass those in their company.

Voicing a complaint doesn't require a person to be rude, loud or abusive to anyone — at least not at the start. The proper way to complain is somewhere in between being a pansy and a bear. An effective complainer patiently holds his ground. He is aware that honest mistakes happen and that everything that goes wrong is not a plot against him.

By using carefully planned tactics, and a little tact, the complainer can usually get some satisfaction.

A POLITE confrontation is usually the best first step in trying to rectify any complaint. Start at the heart of the problem and try not to go over anyone's head. If those on the lower rung refuse to handle your complaint, then work your way up the ladder.

When registering a complaint, make sure it is going to the right place. If you purchase a hair dryer that doesn't work, your first course of action should be to return it to the place of purchase. Talk with a sales person, store manager or the returns department. If that doesn't do it, take your complaint to the owner if the business is small or the corporate office if it's a company.

Some companies offer a local or toll-free number. Call and find out what is the best way to handle your complaint. Also, check the product box and instructions for complaint information. Some box labels state how to register complaints with the company or at least have the company address printed on them.

Some companies that deal with small, inexpensive items prefer to deal with complaints over the phone, but most prefer to receive the complaint in writing.

If possible, write to a specific person. This may require a phone call to find out who that might be. In order to be taken more seriously, experts recommend typing your complaint. If a typewriter is unavailable, print neatly and in a businesslike manner.

Don't pack your letter with emotional outburst and sorted details of your ordeal. As Sgt. Joe Friday said, "Just the facts, ma'am."

"Shorter is better," is the rule for complaint letters. Containing your letter to one page is best. Specify the problem including the name, model and serial number of the faulty product; when and where it was bought; copies of your sales receipt, warranties or any other sales documents; and a list of people you have talked with about the problem. (Do not send the originals.) Include your name and address as well as a daytime and evening phone number where you can be reached.

If the problem is with service rather than a product, it is important to keep all evidence. Take a picture of the problem area, save any pieces showing damage, etc.

In your letter, state exactly what type of compensation you are looking for — but don't ask for the world, be reasonable. If your are looking for a refund, say so. If you want the product replaced or the job done over, state exactly that.

The average normal response time is approximately three weeks. If you do not get a response, call to be sure the right person received the letter and ask when a response can be expected. If the letter did not get to the right person, check to see who the right person is and send a copy.

THESE STEPS usually solve the problem. However, if the solution is unsatisfactory, there are still a few rabbits in the hat. Involve a third party, such as the Better Business Bureau or an industry association. "Gale's Encyclopedia of Associations" lists various industry associations. There are even some nonprofit organizations that teach consumers their rights. One of these organizations might be helpful as well.

The next step is to take your complaint to the city or state government consumer affairs department. This option should be exercised only after a sincere effort has been made at all lower levels.

If all else fails, going to small claims court is the last resort. Be sure to file in the jurisdiction where the other party lives or works and use the correct legal name of the business being sued.

If your complaint is about a restaurant rather than a product or service, here are a few pointers for effective complaining. In a restaurant, a variety of errors can happen.

FOR INSTANCE, you have made reservations at a restaurant. You arrive at the establishment on time to find your table is not ready and there will be a 20 minute wait. At this point, you have a choice. You can leave or you can wait for 20 minutes.

If you choose to wait, look at your watch so you will be aware when the 20 minutes is up. After the allotted time, if you have not been seated, ask the host if your table is ready. If it is still not available, continue to ask about it every three to five minutes. Naturally, they can not give you a table they do not have, but generally those who are most persistent, yet still tactful, will be seated first.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Brighten your day with Memories of the Beach ... Of growing up ... of families ... as our guests for a gala performance of Brighton Beach Memoirs. So began the clever invitations to the theatre party hosted by Nancy and Buddy Anguish, co-producers of Midland Community Theatre's latest production.

Held the evening of May 4, the fun party got off to a festive start with a cocktail buffet in the theatre lobby. Coffee and dessert were served during intermission.

Among those enjoying the evening were the Anguish children, Steve of Amarillo, Ellen of Dallas and Margaret of Midland; Betsy Dwyer, Joan and Pat Baskin, Becky and Doug Ferguson, Marg. Samples with her son, Joe Martin, who has recently returned to his hometown to reside.

Also Sara and Norman Fry, Lou and Decker Dawson, Naomi and Henry Tillett, Lena and John Oehsner, Sharla and Bart Hotchkiss and artist Mary Rasmussen, whose works are currently on display in the theatre gallery, and her husband, Jim.

TO CELEBRATE the publication of Dr. Frank Samponero's book, "Border Fury," a "Margaritas and Nachos" party was held last weekend. Paula and Frank Cahoon hosted the event for a small group of Frank's friends and colleagues.

La Bodega Restaurant was a most appropriate setting for the party, since the book deals with the Mexican revolution and the American military involvement as portrayed in contemporary picture postcards. And those of you who frequent the restaurant know of the similar photographs on its walls.

Frank, a professor of history and chairman of the history department at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, gave a brief slide presentation on the book.

Among the guests were Frank's wife, Marsha; Katie and Bill Heck, Joyce and Joe Baressi, Sandra and Smith Ray, Diane and Roger Olien, Doris and Van Howbert and UTPB president Dr. Duane Leach.

TO HONOR Carrie Hall and her fiance, Robbie Gatlin, a cocktail buffet was held last weekend at the home of Monta Jo and Ted Johnson. Co-hosts were Marian and Charles Reeder.

The serving table was decorated with a pair of crystal swans and flowers in the bride's chosen colors of mauve and dusty blue, and Mexican cuisine was served.

Special guests were parents of the couple, Carol and Gary Hall of Midland, Pat and Howard Grice of Monahans and Lavoyce and John Gatlin of Andrews. Out-of-town guests included Connie Sutherland of San Marcos and Melody Hilburn and Chuck Stewart, both of Dallas.

The couple, who reside in Dallas, will be married on Aug. 20 in Midland's First United Methodist Church.

IN HONOR of the birthday of their aunt, longtime Midlander, Mable (Mrs. L.H.) Humphrey, Paula and Philip Finegan came down from Oklahoma City for a recent visit. They enjoyed a birthday dinner and made plans to attend the graduation of Mrs. Humphrey's nephew, Caleb Finegan, who is graduating magna cum laude from Vanderbilt University this month and plans to enter law school in September.

Mrs. Humphrey has been an active member of the Midland community for more than 30 years.

PAMELA RITTENHOUSE honored her brother, Herschel Rittenhouse, and his fiancee, Felicia Pierce, with an engagement party recently in the Garden Room of Midland Country Club.

A springtime fiesta theme was used in the decor and refreshments. The tables were decorated with a mixture of brightly colored geraniums, petunias and begonias. The menu featured Southwestern fare.

Some 50 family members and close friends were present to toast the couple at the first of the parties scheduled to celebrate their summer wedding.

Special guests included Herschel's parents, Darlene and Dale Rittenhouse, and from out-of-town, Felicia's parents, Wyanza and Donald Pierce; her sister and brother-in-law, Michelle and Jimmy Stuart; Mrs. Johnnie Williams and June and Vernon Bowen, all of Lubbock, as well as Felicia's brother and sister-in-law, Terry and Julie Pierce of Irving.

The couple will be married Aug. 6 in Lubbock.

JULIE STEWARD and Wade Colburn returned from San Diego to their hometown to be married Saturday evening in St. Luke's United Methodist Church. A reception followed at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Parents of the couple are Sally and Ken Steward and Wanda and Jim Colburn.

The pre-nuptial festivities began in April when Julie was home to make wedding plans. A display shower was held at the home of Sara (Mrs. Brent) Watson. Co-hostesses were Lou (Mrs. Don) Matson, Priscilla (Mrs. Scott) Hazen, Elloui (Mrs. Louis) Moseley, Carla (Mrs. John) Foster, Debra (Mrs. Phillip) Holt, Ellen Matson and Kari Watson.

The wedding week got off to a festive start with a pancake breakfast and recipe shower Thursday at the home of Schatzie (Mrs. Charles) Tighe. Co-hosting were Kaye (Mrs. Bill) Franklin, Anne (Mrs. John) Josefy, Carol (Mrs. Bud) Orem, Sue (Mrs. Ross) Roberts, Carol (Mrs. Jack) Steele and Ava Jane (Mrs. Joe) Warren.

Beverly (Mrs. Bob) Bales and Mary Jane (Mrs. Bob) Young entertained with a manicure party Friday at Christine Valmy. The groom's parents hosted a back yard barbecue following the wedding rehearsal.

A bridal luncheon was held Saturday noon in the Garden Room of Midland Country Club. The hostesses were Julie's grandmother Margaret (Mrs. Durward) Mahon of Lubbock; her aunts, Cynthia (Mrs. Mike) Mahon of Amarillo and Dale (Mrs. Jim) Haynie of Austin, and her cousins, Brenda Haynie of Houston and Bekki (Mrs. Greg) Kowalski of San Antonio.

A breakfast this morning at the Steward home for the out-of-town guests will bring the festivities to a close.

Exercise gurus make video

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — They don't look much like Jane Fonda, but hefty Sharlyne Powell and Sharon McConnell are making a splash in the exercise video market with a tape for large women.

The former housewives, who founded the Yakima-based Women At Large exercise studios, star in a slick new video designed for people whose bodies have more curves than angles.

"It's been on the market almost a month and we've sold 11,000 copies," Mrs. Powell said.

The $160,000 production was financed by the women and television host Robb Weller, of "Entertainment Tonight" and the "Home" show. They are splitting the profits 50-50.

Weller and his wife, Barbara, who runs Weller Productions, met Mrs. Powell and Mrs. McConnell when they appeared on the pilot for ABC's "Home" show several months ago.

"They were terrific people and they wanted to do some other projects with us," Mrs. Powell said.

The video, which sells for $29.95, is just the latest success for Women At Large, a chain of exercise studios founded by two, self-described bored housewives in 1983.

The clubs cater to the 30 million women in the nation who wear clothes size 16 or above. Instructors average 175 pounds, and the goal is to build fitness and self-esteem, not lose pounds.

In their determination that pounds do not matter, both women refuse to disclose their ample weight.

Women At Large has sold 24 franchises around the country since 1986 and is negotiating with franchises in Japan, Mrs. Powell said.

"I'm ready to really bust out with it now," she said. "I have all the systems in place."

The two have become media darlings in the last year.

They filmed a segment of the "Today" show on Wednesday morning, then were scheduled to depart for Los Angeles on Monday for national and local television and newspaper interviews.

Shortly after, they depart for a cross-country tour to promote the exercise tape.

"I'm flying around so much I have little time to exercise any more," Mrs. Powell said. "I've got to make a concerted effort to get back on the regimen."

The tape features the women's program of low-impact aerobics that does not include the running, jumping and jogging they feel can damage a heavier body.

Stories can soothe children's fears

Copley News Service

When it comes to calming your children's fears, forget logic and break out a storybook instead.

According to psychologist Dr. Doris Brett, stories help kids conquer their fears because kids understand imagination better than straight facts.

In her book "Annie Stories: A Special Kind of Storytelling," Brett provides tales to use as tools for tackling such terror as nightmares and monsters. She claims hearing how Annie copes with problems similar to their own allows kids to feel like they're not alone.

The stories also include hints for parents as to how the stories should be told. For example, when beginning a story, place it in a setting that's similar to your own child's.

COMPLAIN

Unless you really want a drink before dinner, Los Angeles Times restaurant editor Ruth Reichi advises against going into the bar to wait. Going to the bar can give the impression you are not in a hurry to be seated, thus making it easy for the host to seat someone who is being more persistent.

The dreaded spill is a common occurrence in restaurants. If you spill something, let a waiter know so the mess can be cleaned up. If the waiter spills something on you (that requires above average attention) ask for compensation. The restaurant should pay for dry cleaning and any medical expenses (i.e. hot coffee can cause second-degree burns). Be sure to get the name of the waiter and the name of someone nearby who saw the incident in case you need to support your claim.

Another unpleasant occurrence could be the surprise of a mystery guest in your food. If a return trip to the kitchen doesn't take care of the problem, simply refuse to pay for the meal. If the manager objects, which is doubtful, you can threaten to call the police. The manager probably will not be willing to risk a scene — but then you never know. This also applies if the food is cold or distasteful.

If the service is bad, first complain to your waiter. If he does not give you better service, then complain to the manager.

If your complaint is above receiving a new dish or having your present dish warmed, realize the waiter does not have executive jurisdiction. Complaining to the waiter will get you nowhere and will only frustrate the waiter.

Ask to see the manager or owner and state you case firmly, complete with the compensation you require — but be reasonable. If you do not get results, write to the restaurant or have your lawyer write on your behalf. Notify the Better Business Bureau. In the worst cases you can threaten to sue.

If you still don't get any satisfaction, you can get revenge. Tell your friends of your experience. Surveys indicate that 70 percent of all diners choose a restaurant primarily on the recommendation of a friend or family member, according to Thomas Kelly, associate professor of restaurant management at the School of Hotel Administration at Cornell University. The survey showed that a first-time restaurant-goer happy with a meal tells four people while a disgruntle diner will tell seven.

With all this said, good luck and many happy returns ... or exchanges ... or refunds ... or ...

Babies' dental care part of parenting

By MICHAEL COLIN
Copley News Service

The most difficult thing about being a new parent may well be trying to keep your baby healthy, particularly in the area of oral health. Babies seem to be susceptible to every oral plague known to man.

One of the most prevalent oral problems among children under 3 years of age is known as "nursing-bottle mouth." The cause of this ailment, according to Prevent Baby Bottle Tooth Decay, is the baby's constant exposure to sugary liquids. Fruit juices, formula or soft drinks will cause rapid and severe demineralization and decay of teeth if they are a constant presence in the baby's mouth. This six-panel foldout stresses the importance of good dental hygiene and sound advice on proper oral training.

Send a postcard to National Institute of Dental Research, Baby Bottle, Room 522, Westwood Bldg., 5333 Westbard Ave., Bethesda, Md. 20892. Ask for Prevent Baby Bottle Tooth Decay.

Saccharin artificial

NEW YORK (AP) — The sugar substitute saccharin, which has been around for over 100 years, is made from toluene, a derivative of coal tar and petroleum. It has no food value.

Saccharin was discovered by 1879 by German chemist Constantin Fahlberg and the American chemist Ira Remsen.

Guide helps consumers handle 'living on their own'

By KAY BARTLETT

NEW YORK (AP) — Who among us was raised with an innate knowledge of which telephone company gives us the best deal? Who, in fact, ever dreamed that picking a telephone company would be a way of life in 1988?

And if you "wouldn't buy a used car from that man," whom would you buy one from? And how do you negotiate with him when you're not even really sure what rack and pinion means?

What about the jungle of financial jargon that everyone else seems to understand — like CD's, IRA's, deferred annuity bonds, Keoghs, municipals, etc.?

It was simpler when people just went to the bank that gave the best toaster. If you already had a toaster, the next toughest choice was whether you wanted the Revere Ware pots or a non-brand that had pretty yellow flowers on it.

These are things that almost everyone, at some point in life — just starting out, after a divorce, recently widowed — must learn to deal with without getting stung in the process.

"You aren't born with this knowledge. Kids of people who own businessess or are in the financial world might know some of it, but most of us don't," says Betsy Ashton, a former national consumer affairs correspondent for television, and author of "Betsy Ashton's Guide to Living on Your Own," due in bookstores early this summer.

"This book is not for people who see an ad on television and send $5 away and expect to get a diamond ring in return. They deserve what they get. This book is for reasonably intelligent people who must face these kinds of things for the first time and aren't aware of the pitfalls.

"This book is not about the things your mother never told you, it's about the things your father never told you," says Ms. Ashton. Like taxes, audits, how much insurance you need, which health club to join, how to pick a telephone company and how to deal with the media if you've gotten yourself into a mess that would incidentally make a good story.

A LOT OF ADVICE comes from Ashton's nearly 17 years in radio and television, first teaching art on cable TV, then covering the courts in Washington, D.C., and later as the consumer affairs expert there and ultimately for CBS.

She often got tips from viewers who had been ripped off by one scheme or another. As a local reporter, she named names and products.

"That's the job of the local reporter, but I don't do that in the book," she says. "This is more of a household encyclopedia that would be applicable anywhere." She explains, for instance, some of the oldest tricks in the books, such as the bait and switch ruse, and how not to go for the bait.

It's a practical book. The section on health clubs, for instance, warns against paying the annual membership fee to clubs that haven't opened yet. Some have gone under before they got going. Others, she warns, may be on shaky financial ground, so check them out before handing over your check for a year's membership.

Also figure out what you really need. Are you paying for fancy exercise machines that you're not likely to use. Or a swimming pool, when what you really want is the racquet ball court? She advises going to YMCA's or schools to see if you might get the facilities you want much cheaper. Or, go to a club that has only the facilities you actually intend using. It will probably be cheaper.

She confesses to being a victim herself, joining health clubs to drop that extra 20 pounds that always crept back on. She finally calculated that her demanding schedule, working long days, made it impractical; her visits turned out to cost her $40 a session.

HER BOOK TELLS you what questions to ask up front and urges the timid to push for answers to key questions, especially, "What is this going to cost me?"

"Healthy skepticism is important," she says. "A financial planner or an accountant should be able to explain things to you without talking down to you and telling you to 'just trust me.'

"Ask him or her about fees, about how much of his income is derived from commissions, ask for references, look for possible conflicts of interest."

She tells how to find out what the car dealer paid for the car he is selling you, the toll-free 800 number to call to find out whether the model of used car you're considering has ever been recalled, how to spot cosmetic cover-ups on a used car.

Ashton, 43, and recently remarried, says her book draws on files she had kept as a television consumer expert.

"I spent a lot of time on the telephone updating things, and re-interviewing people, but basically it was years and years of reporting that went into the book," she says.

If you're going to try the media, she tells you how. First, do all the work yourself. The local reporter or columnist doesn't have time to unearth every single aspect of your case. They get hundreds, maybe thousands of letters from irate consumers seeking to enlist the newspaper in their cases.

You, the abused, must document your claim, agree to be interviewed, and, if you live in a multimedia town, don't ship out carbons to every reporter in town. Pick the one you like best, offer an exclusive story, and hope for the best.

It helps if the story is interesting and has broad appeal.

ASHTON HAD AN unusual career trail. She was accepted by the Peace Corps, but fell in love and married instead. A talented artist, whose apartment is decorated with Ashton originals, she worked for an advertising agency, taught art in high school, and decided that if Julia Child could teach French cooking on television, she could teach art on there. So she did.

She did radio interviews around the feminist movement, covered the courts for a Washington TV station, and worked as an artist at the same time.

"You learn that lawyers are very repetitive," she says. "The first time they said something, I took notes, the second time I started sketching the jurors and the third time I added the color."

She turned down the job as consumer affairs reporter the first time it was offered.

"I thought it was going to be all fluff," she says. "I thought it was the equivalent of being the weather girl.

"The second time it was offered, it was explained that it would be more of a Ralph Nader sort of thing. We were going after companies and individuals that were ripping off the public. That I liked."

Ashton grew up in the suburbs of Trenton, N.J. with pretty much of a belief in the goodness of her fellow human beings.

"I really didn't know there were these kind of people, people who simply preyed on others as a way of life," she says.

Belief in marriage keeps couples together

By MIKE DALE and CHUCK EDWARDS
Copley News Service

Does true love hold couples in blissful matrimony?

Not even close, says psychologist David Fenell of the University of Colorado at Colorado Springs.

Based on his study of 50 couples who've been married 20 years or more, the belief in the institution of marriage keeps marriage together.

In other words, Fenell says long marriages rely on the "intellectual" bond more than an emotional tie.

And, in some cases, couples prefer being in a "bad marriage" than not being married at all. They seem to be "afraid" of divorce.

Overall, however, Fenell reports that marriage survives because partners deeply respect each other.

And, above all, they don't have affairs.

Marriage poll shows most would remarry spouse

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Only 7 percent of married women surveyed by Ladies Home Journal say they wouldn't marry their mate again.

The poll of 608 women released Monday found that 88 percent would wed the same man again. The rest were undecided.

Their husband's sense of humor was cited as the reason for falling in love by 49 percent of women surveyed while 39 percent said they decided to marry him because "he shared my vision of the future."

The most common reason given for opposing the idea of remarrying the same man was that the couple had nothing in common, according to the poll published in the June issue.

The magazine said this complaint was most often heard from readers ages 45 to 59.

Other problems cited as interfering with marital bliss included communication problems, a lack of emotional responsiveness and opposition to a spouse's independence.

The magazine said the last complaint was most often made by women younger than age 30.

A particular protest of Midwestern women who said they would not remarry their husbands was, "he's boring."

The Roper organization conducted the poll for the magazine with telephone and street interviews. The margin of error is 3 percentage points.

'Shrinking violets' fascinating to experts

By PHYLLIS BATTELLE
Hearst News Service

Psychologists and psychiatrists have long been fascinated with the social phenomenon called shyness.

About 5 in 10 Americans describe themselves as exceedingly shy. Some describe it as a painful, inhibitive condition. Others — particularly creative types — have thrived on their shyness. Woody Allen has used it as a natural barrier against intrusion on his genius. Albert Einstein, similarly, was so timid that people rarely dared waste his time. "His shyness was legend," a historian recalls. "Possibly the capacity to wonder, and create bold theories, is strongest in those who can still tremble and cherish their uncertainty."

Many famous folk who claim instinctive shyness, including Jackie Onassis, Helen Hayes, Kate Hepburn and, of course, the Princess "Shy Di" of Wales, have done very well indeed despite what is generally looked upon as a personality handicap. But that doesn't keep the parents of shy children from worrying. In earlier eras, when children who were "seen but not heard" were considered model offspring, shyness was considered a sign of good breeding (it still is, in much of Europe). But in 1980s America, a shy child — especially one who remains reserved into adolescence — is a candidate for psychotherapy to cure what is viewed as a "social disease."

Although 40 percent of us describe ourselves as shy, a new study, described in the journal Science, finds that only about 10 percent of infants are actually born with distinct, identifiable traits of what is seen as social timidity. The rest presumably pick up their feelings of self-modesty and aversion to assertiveness along the environmental path of childhood. The new study followed infants with "social inhibitions" from age 2 to 7½ years — and found that their biological tendencies persisted.

The difference between the shyest youngsters and others is a nervous system that reacted differently from the norm. The "shies" had, for example, a higher heart rate than more outgoing children even when sleeping. "The higher the child's heart rate in the early years, the more likely the child would still be shy at age 7. Shy children also reacted to testing with a greater pupil dilation, increased muscle tension and a rise in norepinephrine, a brain chemical secreted by people under stress," says the study.

The researchers — two psychologists from Harvard and one from Yale — said that from birth, the shyest are more easily aroused physiologically by novel or unexpected changes. The early signs of shyness, seen as early as 21 months, include clinging to their mothers more than other children do when in an unfamiliar setting, and being "very slow to play with, or speak to a strange child or adult."

Such early behavior does not necessarily mean the children will remain shy into their school years, the study reassured. For some, the biological traits may gradually be outgrown, but if toddlers with the biological tendency are faced with stresses, such as the loss of a family member, or frequent parental squabbling, their bent toward shyness will persist. And "an older sibling who unexpectedly seizes a toy, teases or yells at an infant," the report warns, "might provide the chronic stress necessary" to turn a potential shy into a permanent one.

Well, not necessarily permanent. A network of "shyness clinics" has popped up around the country offering courses in the modern art of assertiveness and self-possessiveness, at $75 to $100 a private session.

Although the Harvard-Yale study shows a biological tendency toward shyness, no genetic connection is apparent. A shy mother may give birth to outgoing children. And it is well-known that many working mothers with innate chutzpah have produced exceptionally withdrawn, clinging offspring. In such cases, environment may be far more important a factor than heredity, psychiatry seems to indicate. But there is no data to support those views.

What does seem apparent, however, is that there could be a gradual return of respect for shyness (especially among women) as a social grace rather than a sad affliction. After nearly a generation of no-holds-barred sexual liberation, many young men I know are becoming attracted to women who display an uncertain modesty rather than a certain ego. I'd like to suggest, shyly, that in an overly aggressive world, a touch of vulnerability is refreshing. Extreme, pathological shyness is indeed a hardship (although not, as Greta Garbo proved, without its own rewards). But moderate shyness is, in the words of social critic Sam Keen, "a natural defense of our vulnerable sanctuary of self against the intrusion of insensitive and careless strangers. Nobody but a fool keeps open house for latecomers. Friendship requires time and commitment. And the barriers of shyness fall of their own accord when a relationship lengthens and deepens in trust."

Population male

NEW YORK (AP) — The population of Alaska is 52.8 percent male, according to the U.S. Census Bureau.

Other states where men outnumber women, according to Family Circle magazine, are: Wyoming, Hawaii, Nevada and North Dakota. The percentage of males to females, respectively, is 51.4 percent, 51 percent, 50.7 percent and 50.4 percent.

In most cases, men were drawn to these areas because of job prospects.

Traditional occupations becoming extinct

By DAVE BAKKE
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

Five days a week at 5:30 a.m., Butch Minder fires up his 15-year-old milk truck. Like a proud, matronly old woman, the truck waddles down the street, oblivious to the faster, younger cars zipping by.

Gone is the familiar rattle of glass bottles as Minder makes his rounds. All of his products are in plastic containers now. Befitting this age of health spas and tofu, his customers drink more skim milk than ever. Otherwise, things haven't changed much. The uniform, the white, lumbering truck and silver milk boxes are the same as they were 30 years ago.

Meadow Gold Dairy is the last one in Springfield, Ill., to offer home delivery. There are only four milk routes left, which means home delivery will someday be just a memory.

"When I first started," Minder says, "there used to be 150 routes. Now there are only four. What would you say?"

When the weather is nice and his truck doesn't break down, Minder enjoys being outside, seeing the people along his route.

"I think it beats working in a factory," he says. "You meet some interesting people and I like the outdoors."

As he jumps from the truck with his milk, a bathrobe-clad woman standing at the door shouts to him, "Will you bring another 2 percent?"

MINDER HAS been delivering milk for 16 years. He has been bitten by three dogs, witnessed an armed robbery and been chased from a house by a man with a shotgun.

"I came in to make my delivery and the guy was downstairs cleaning his gun," Minder says. "He heard me and thought I was his neighbor. For a joke, he came upstairs and stuck the gun around the corner. I about had a heart attack. I took off running through the house. He was laughing his head off."

Other delivery services are facing similar fates.

The bottom has fallen out of diaper delivery.

The last company to deliver diapers in Springfield went out of business last year. But Master Dy-Dee Service of Peoria announced that in April it will start delivering in Springfield.

Reasons for the diaper delivery decline are many. After the postwar baby boom, the birthrate plummeted. The declining economy of the 1970s turned diaper delivery into a luxury.

But it was disposable diapers that did the most damage.

"I think there's enough disposable diapers thrown away to go to the moon and back," says Dorothy Turchi, vice president of Master Dy-Dee. Rather than swim against the tide, her company now delivers disposable diapers, too.

"If we couldn't beat 'em," she says, "we'd join 'em."

Master Dy-Dee has been in business for 41 years. A contract for delivery to three Peoria hospitals helped it survive lean times.

But things may be turning around. Environmentalists have been warning of the consequences of millions of throwaway diapers. As a result, people have been returning to natural, reusable diapers. There's even a higher demand for the old diapers as cotton rags. Master Dy-Dee sells its old diapers for $3.25 per pound.

KORENE ALVAREZ is one of two diaper delivery persons at Master Dy-Dee. Alvarez delivers diapers in the surrounding small towns and farms. As she drops off a fresh load of diapers, she collects the dirty ones, which are carefully counted at the Master Dy-Dee office.

"It's not as bad as you'd think," she says. "They have an electronic counter that counts them. You just throw them in there."

Home diaper delivery is not always a piece of cake, either. To overcome the major hazards of her job, Alvarez always carries two items she considers essential — a box of dog biscuits and a box of deodorizers.

Skilled workmen also are a vanishing breed. "I'm a seventh-generation watchmaker," says Gene Nardi. "It goes back in my family that far. But when I'm gone, that's the end."

According to the American Watchmakers Institute, there were 52,000 watchmakers in the country in the 1950s. By the mid-1980s, there were between 12,000 and 16,000. "In the next 20 years," Nardi predicts, "there'll be zilch."

Technological advancements have revolutionized the way watches are made. Instead of mainsprings and a maze of intricate, hand-tooled parts, today's watches have quartz batteries and are assembled by computer. Nardi still gets old watches to work on, mostly family heirlooms or antiques, and he clearly enjoys that part of his work the most.

He scoffs at some of today's watches, especially the digital variety. "You can buy one for $2.50," he laughs. "If you buy a box of Wheaties I think they give you one free. They're garbage."

NARDI BECAME familiar with the inside of a watch when he was 8 years old. His father, who ran a watch repair shop in New York City, sat him on a workbench and told him to get busy. "My daddy said to me, 'When you get to be 16 or 18 and go out on your own, I don't care whether you keep on with this or not, but you're going to learn how to do it.' That's all there was to it."

Of Nardi's four children, one is a doctor, one is in law school, one is in criminal investigations and one works for a greeting card company.

"None of them are watchmakers," Nardi says. "They didn't even think about it. They had their lives planned when they were in grade school."

As scarce as watchmakers are, at least they're doing better than American watches. The last American watch factory closed in 1955.

Other traditional service jobs are rapidly becoming extinct, too. Margaret Scott was once fired by a 6-year-old. She didn't really lose her job, but cranky 6-year-olds are an occupational hazard cleaning women must contend with.

Scott cleans seven houses. Most of her clients are well-off financially and live in large homes. She usually works from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. five days a week.

"I start at 9," she says, "because I don't like to go in while the husband's getting ready for work and the kids, if there are any, are getting ready for school."

Scott does general cleaning. That includes dusting, mopping, vacuuming, tidying up and (her favorite) cleaning the bathroom. It doesn't include washing windows, walls, laundry or dishes.

Until the past few decades, cleaning women weren't regarded as the sort of luxury they are today. Cleaning a house was a much harder job and help was often welcome. When portable vacuums and other household appliances became available and affordable, cleaning women began to disappear.

Stained-glass window expert says scarcity increases value

DENVER, Pa. (AP) — You don't buy stained-glass windows — you invest in them, Stephen Andruzak tells his customers.

"I advise every young person to buy it, whether he buys from me or the next guy," Andruzak said. "What you see here, you won't see in 10 years.

"It's finished. There are no more artisans and every time they pass away, there goes the business. They close up."

Andruzak sells stained- and beveled-glass windows north of this Lancaster County community. His shop is a marriage between an old Mobil gasoline station and a carousel he found in the Poconos.

He displays some of his 1,000 refurbished windows inside the carousel, along with a few merry-go-round horses. A 4-foot-high Statue of Liberty lies outside his front door. Her torch and left hand are missing, thanks to an off-course delivery truck.

Stained-glass manufacturers are dying out, Andruzak said.

"Philadelphia had 22 shops and now they have two. Reading had eight shops and now they have one," he said. "When the old ones died off, they didn't have anybody coming up. The next thing you're going to get in this kind of work is plastics."

It takes a lot of time and effort to become a "stained glass man," Andruzak said. "In the first place, they have to develop the strength in their wrists. It isn't that easy."

Andruzak recalled a certain conversation with a stained-glass craftsman.

"While I'm talking to him, he makes a window. That same window that he made would take a novice two months," he said. "The old artisans were sure when they scribed (glass) it would crack good; they had no water wheel to smooth out the jagged ends.

"They were accurate, and it takes about seven years to develop that."

Andruzak doesn't make windows. Instead, he buys old windows, then cleans and repairs them. Prices for finished windows, not installed, range from about $25 to $2,100.

Beveled glass is a best seller, he said. The glass acts as a prism, casting rainbow reflections on the owner's floor.

The glass in the garage is sorted by color in bins. Variations in color are very subtle, but Andruzak said he could usually find a replacement for the piece he needed.

As Andruzak walked around the carousel, he remembered where he found each of his windows.

"A mansion in Columbia, it had its own chapel ... A sample from a Philadelphia shop that went out of business. All the shops had samples they didn't sell ... My first church I bought out ... I bought 12 windows, (I paid) $250 and they were beautiful," he said.

Andruzak said stained-glass windows had fallen out of favor.

"They went out and took them out. They didn't want to wash them, so they took them out and broke them up," he said. "They got 3 cents a pound for the lead and put in plain glass.

"Now stained glass is quite a thing. Quite a thing."

Nutritional, health needs of elderly complicated

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

The fastest growing minority in the United States is people 65 years and older, a population of men and women with unique and sometimes difficult health and nutrition needs. In fact, there are more than 26 million senior citizens in this country, which represents 11.1 percent of the total population; yet these people account for 29 percent of the country's health care costs; 25 percent of the prescription drugs used; 15 percent of all visits to doctors' offices; and 34 percent of all days in short stay hospitals.

Nutrition plays a vital role in the health of an elderly person. Older people are more likely to suffering from chronic illnesses, and health experts believe that poor eating habits contribute to some of these ailments. Conversely, improved eating habits are considered possible therapy for some conditions.

While recommended daily allowances of nutrients for the elderly are still being debated, facts about intake levels are alreay known. As a person gets older, his body generally uses less energy. Food intake is lower, and the amount of lean body tissue decreases while the amount of body fat increases.

Eating habits of older people may change. Reduced vision, decreased senses of smell and taste, loneliness, depression, poor teeth, income limitations, illness and increased medicine and alcohol usage, all have profound effects upon the eating habits of an individual.

To compound the problem, many older people compensate for taste loss by eating using more salt. Poor teeth and gums may make chewing more difficult, limiting an individual to foods that are easy to chew, but that may be lacking in essential nutrients.

The digestive system also undergoes changes as a person grows older. Hydrochloric acid secretions in the stomach generally decreases, which interferes with digestion. Changes in the intestinal tract can lead to reduced absorption of protein, fats, carbohydrates, vitamins and minerals. And the kidneys, which must excrete waste products, become less effective.

Because of these and other factors, the elderly have special dietary requirements and may need more of certain nutrients than they did when they were younger. For example, lack of calcium in the diet can be a factor in osteoporosis, a disease which leaves the bones brittle and prone to fractures. Osteoporosis affects far more women than men, and calcium supplements are often recommended for post menopausal women. Diets with calcium-rich foods, such as cheese, milk and other dairy products, along with regular exercise, are important to good bone renewal.

Many elderly also need more intake of zinc, which is essential for various metabolic processes, such as healing of wounds and the body's immune response, its ability to resist disease and infection. Meats, seafood and eggs are especially good sources of zinc.

Nutrition experts stress that a well-balanced diet will provide most elderly men and women who are in good health with the necessary nutrients. A proper diet should include the following foods:

- At least two servings of milk or other dairy products.
- Two servings of high protein food, such as lean meat, poultry, fish, eggs, dried beans, nuts or peanut butter.
- Four servings of fruits and vegetables including citrus fruit or juice and a dark green leafy vegetable.
- Four servings of bread or cereal products made with whole grain or enriched flour, rice or pasta.

If they are following a proper diet, most older people do not need supplemental vitamins unless prescribed by a doctor. Unnecessary purchases of supplements not only deprive an older person of funds, but can also lead to excessive and potentially toxic intake of certain vitamins and minerals.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Alcoholism in elderly may stem from depression

By JANE E. BRODY
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Until recent years, few professionals or laymen acknowledged the extent of serious alcohol problems among older Americans. It was generally assumed that few people took to drinking heavily after five or more decades of sobriety, and many physicians believed that most long-standing alcoholics either died or stopped drinking before getting old.

But various studies now indicate that 10-15 percent of older Americans abuse alcohol. More than 2 million American men and women over age 60 are believed to suffer from alcoholism. About two-thirds have had long-standing alcohol problems that persist into their later years. In the remaining third, abuse of alcohol develops late in life.

Alcohol abuse in the elderly is often precipitated by an emotional crisis or social upheaval, such as loss of a spouse, retirement, a move to a new community or to a retirement or nursing home. It can also be caused by marital stress, the onset of a painful or debilitating illness in oneself or one's spouse or simply depression over aging.

One 64-year-old man, for example, retired from his job as a railroad mechanic. Shortly after that, his wife died suddenly, leaving him seriously depressed.

A LIFELONG SOCIAL drinker, he dramatically increased his alcohol intake, began behaving strangely in public and was unable to get along with the son he lived with.

In another case, a 70-year-old retired longshoreman had a 40-year history of excessive drinking that finally caught up with him. His physical health deteriorated dramatically and he developed psychotic symptoms, including confusion and hallucinations.

A third example involves a 65-year-old woman married to a successful businessman. She had used beer as a younger woman to assuage emotional discomforts, but after two decades of moderately heavy drinking, she lost control of her alcohol consumption. And after 10 years of alcoholism, she found herself estranged her from her husband and her liver had begun to fail.

Dr. Marc Schuckit, psychiatrist and alcoholism specialist at the University of California, San Diego, said the stresses of old age are often harder on a person than the midlife problems of juggling a job or career and caring for a family and household. In fact, the responsibilities of work and family may help keep a potential alcoholic from drinking too much. But once those demands are gone and the structure of daily life is disrupted, there is little impetus to remain sober. Studies have shown that men and women are at highest risk of becoming late-in-life alcoholics after losing a spouse through death, divorce or legal separation.

Alcohol problems in the elderly often defy the usual routes of detection. Typical giveaway signs, like poor performance at work, being arrested for driving while intoxicated, becoming drunk in public or abusing a spouse, cannot be seen in a retired person who lives alone, drinks mostly at home and rarely drives farther than the market.

Only in a relative handful of cases is alcohol abuse among the elderly recognized and reckoned with by relatives and friends. And rarely are elderly alcoholics brought into effective treatment programs.

EVEN PHYSICIANS, who may be the first to detect alcohol-caused health problems or signs of deterioration, are often blind to the possibility that alcohol is responsible.

Both health professionals and family tend to attribute to old age such alcohol-induced difficulties as memory loss, unsteady gait, accidents or falls, confusion, paranoia, disorientation, hostility and hallucinations. While many other disorders can cause such symptoms, experts urge consideration of alcoholism as a possibility. Even telltale medical problems, like abnormal liver function, overreaction to medications, broken bones or bruises or the development of an alcohol-related cancer, are often not recognized as caused by alcohol abuse.

Detecting the problem is complicated by the fact that many older people are so ashamed of their abuse of alcohol that they vigorously deny it, routinely underestimate the amount they drink and offer other explanations for visible symptoms.

Furthermore, as a person ages, susceptibility to alcohol increases; a smaller amount of alcohol than before may cause drunkenness and medical and behavioral side effects. And if a person is already physically debilitated by some unrelated health problem or taking medication that interacts with alcohol, even a relatively small amount of alcohol could have serious effects on body and mind.

In addition to the other medical or behavioral difficulties, you should suspect alcohol abuse by an elderly friend or relative if you notice any of the following:

- Excessive sleepiness, including a tendency to nap a great deal and fall asleep during social interactions.
- Physical symptoms like a flushed face or a bloated appearance, bruises on arms and legs or broken bones or sprains.
- Behavioral symptoms like slurred speech, an unsteady gait or shaky hands.
- A tendency to seek seclusion for prolonged periods.
- Unusual sloppiness or compulsive neatness about one's surroundings and appearance.
- Acquisition of friends who drink a lot and a loss of old companions who do not.
- Erratic eating and sleeping habits.
- A tendency to make up stories to explain away memory lapses.

Dr. Sheldon Zimberg, a psychiatrist affiliated with Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York, cautions that for most elderly alcoholics, a different approach to treatment is needed than for younger alcohol abusers.

AMONG YOUNGER alcoholics, the most important aspect of treatment is abstinence, which is usually achieved by admitting the person to a detoxification program, or administering the drug disulfiram, which causes violent vomiting when alcohol is consumed. The therapy can also include regularly attending meetings of Alcoholics Anonymous.

Elderly alcoholics, Zimberg reports, typically resist referral to alcoholism treatment programs. Rather, his studies have shown, addressing the elderly person's underlying social and emotional difficulties and treating any pre-existing depression are more likely to succeed than dealing directly with the drinking.

For further information, the Public Affairs Committee, a non-profit educational organization, has published a highly informative 24-page pamphlet, "The Unseen Alcoholics — The Elderly." It was written by Donna Buys, a registered nurse, and Jules Saltman, a medical writer. Individual copies can be obtained by sending $1 to Public Affairs Pamphlets, 381 Park Avenue South, New York, N.Y. 10016.

CBS Labs will be on-site offering the following tests which will provide vital information pertaining to your risk of Coronary Heart Disease. Ten percent of total revenues will be donated to local charitable organizations.
- CARDIAC RISK ASSESSMENT (*Requires 12-Hr. Fast/Same Day Results) $25.00
(Includes testing for Total Cholesterol, LDL- and HDL-Cholesterol, Glucose, Triglycerides, and Blood Pressure.)
This program, based on the Framingham Study, is intended to provide an estimate of the conditional probability (likelihood) of developing Coronary Heart Disease for presymptomatic individuals. The probability being estimated is calculated using eight major risk factors. Data from the Framingham Study have shown that minor elevations in several risk factors can amount to a substantial change in Coronary Heart Disease risk. The program can be helpful in identifying individuals at increased risk who could be overlooked by assessments which do not consider the interaction of risk factors.
- CHOLESTEROL DENSITY PROFILE $16.00
(*Requires 12-Hr. Fast/Same Day Results)
(Includes testing for Total, HDL- and LDL-Cholesterols and Triglycerides.)
The levels of HDL- and LDL-Cholesterols, and the ratio of HDL-Cholesterol to Total Cholesterol are primary factors affecting the risk of Coronary Heart Disease.
- CBS LABS HEALTH SCREEN (NO Fast Required/Immediate Results) $ 9.50
(Includes testing for Total Cholesterol, Glucose, and Blood Pressure.)
- INDIVIDUAL TESTS: $ 6.00

NO FAST REQUIRED: Total Cholesterol, Glucose, Uric Acid, Hemoglobin, Blood Typing

Treasured Chests

Model: Lori Pollard

Cedar chest courtesy Carter's Furniture

Over the years, some gifts have become traditional — roses on Mother's Day, bicycles and dolls at Christmas, candy for Valentine's Day. In the spring, for "sweet girl grads," nothing is more traditional than the gift of a cedar chest.

In the 1920s and 30s, the cedar chest was the gift that started the home. In it, girls would place silver, china, linens and other household items given to her by friends and relatives so they would be safe until she married and could use them in her own home. In fact, the Lane Cedar Chest celebrates its 75th anniversary this year.

In 1930, Lane began their Girl Graduate Program which offered graduating high school senior girls a free miniature cedar chest, complete with locks and keys. These miniature chests are an item many women keep for years. This year, Lane expects to distribute more than 400,000 miniature cedar chests.

CEDAR CHESTS have a long and international history. According to an article in a recent issue of Southern Bride magazine, "In 13th-century Italy, a bride was carried to her husband's house atop her bridal chest, and throughout her life, everything it held remained her property — unlike her lands or monies which passed to her husband at their wedding."

Rob McKelvy, president of Knorr Furniture in Midland, said such chests also were part of another civilization. "I think it (the tradition of the cedar chest) goes back to (ancient) China," he said. "The chest was presented as a dowry. The bridegroom had to present a chest of items to the father of the woman he was going to marry — and they did get married early in life. It's still a big business."

In Europe, according to Southern Bride, the traditional wedding chests were quite elaborate. "Many were created by well-known artists of the day — Michelangelo and Botticelli are known to have fashioned chests for the daughters of wealthy patrons."

The chests were once called "hope chests," said Sherron Howland, home furnishings consultant with Aladdin House, and were used by girls to store linens and other items until they married.

"Christmas, graduation, Mother's Day and marriages are the best times for cedar chests," as gifts, said Anne Killiner, also a home furnishings consultant with Aladdin House.

Cedar provides clothing and other items with protection against moths, she said, "but it's not just moths, it's any kind of insect. ... In some areas, they have a real bad mouse problem, too, and mice can't get in a cedar chest. They won't attack solid wood," although mice can chew through many other substances, including cardboard and plastic.

But times and tastes change, and for some, the cedar chest is no longer as sought after as it once was. "The cedar chest is still traditional," said McKelvy. "Early marriage was a ... reason behind the cedar chest (tradition). I think that the cedar chest has always been a big graduation item, but luggage or a nice item of furniture or accessory item that girls might like to have — or a set of china — might be an alternative."

"I think a lot of the kids now seem to be more career-oriented," Ms. Howland said.

"Girls used to start their silver sets when they were babies," Ms. Killiner said. "That's just not it any more. A lot of kids, if they are on their own and shopping for furniture, are more practical and look for tough furniture ..."

To suit these changing times and tastes, furniture manufacturers are offering many different styles and sizes of chests. "From traditional to contemporary to Oriental to country — they make cedar chests in all collections (of furniture styles)," McKelvy said. "Cedar is protection for clothing, wool mostly."

The styles of chests can be different, too. "A cedar chest was traditionally thought of as a chest," Ms. Killiner said. "Now they have come out with unique styles like armoires and sweater armoires and lingerie chests ..."

And, in relation to other pieces of furniture, a cedar chest doesn't have to be outrageously expensive.

Prices range from a high of about $1200 to a low of $159, said the women.

But even low prices often aren't enough to tempt many graduating seniors, Ms. Killiner said. Cedar chests aren't as popular a gift item as they used to be "particularly with a lot of kids getting cars ..."

From ancient China to 13th-century Europe to today's U.S.A., the 'hope' chest has been sheltering family treasures for centuries.

DEAR ABBY

Angry sister ignores brother's funeral

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Will you please settle an argument between my husband and me? Recently my mother's brother died. He and my mother had a falling out seven years ago, and they had not spoken to each other since.

My mother chose not to go to her brother's funeral. My husband said she should have gone and paid her last respects. My mother said, "I'm no hypocrite. We didn't respect each other while he was living; why should I pay my respects when he's dead?"

My husband thinks my mother was wrong. I think she was right. What do you think? — DYING TO KNOW

DEAR DYING: Funerals are for the living. The deceased will not know who was there and who wasn't — but the grieving family members will. I think your mother's presence at her brother's funeral would have comforted the family — after all, they were brother and sister. Had she attended his funeral and buried her grievances, it might have made her feel better.

DEAR ABBY: Please help us thank all the wonderful people who were kind enough to send letters, Valentines and Easter greetings to us aboard the USS Tower. More than 30,000 Dear Abby readers flooded our ship with messages of love and gratitude — some sent candy and cookies. Our lone postal clerk went bananas!

Morale is certainly high out here; many crew members are corresponding with those who wrote. However, some letters were separated from their envelopes, and others had no return addresses. Even if they were intact, there is no way a crew of this size could answer each writer individually. But we want to thank everyone who wrote.

Each one of us is proud to be an American, proud to serve in the military, and proud to know that we are defending so many caring and loving people. — MIKE CERVI FOR THE CREW OF THE USS TOWER

DEAR MIKE: I appreciate the explanation. Some disappointed readers wrote to say that they had written per my suggestion, but received no feedback. I was assured by the military that if one ship had more mail than it could handle, the overflow would be transferred to another ship. Dear Abby readers don't care where their letters land — as long as they're read.

DEAR ABBY: I was very much impressed with your efforts to cheer up American troops who are far from home in the service of their country. And judging from the letters you received from grateful servicemen, it was a great morale booster. However, being a serviceman myself (Army), I was disappointed to see the U.S. Navy get all the attention. I am stationed in Korea in the DMZ (Demilitarized Zone), and there are Air Force and Marine troops over here, too, you know.

We are stranded up here for a year at a time guarding against North Korean troops trying to infiltrate. So, please, Abby, give us a break and direct a little mail our way. — J. YARGO (DMZ, KOREA)

DEAR J. YARGO: Here's your letter, and don't say I didn't warn you. Just wait until this hits print.

Readers, how about cheering up our men and women in the Army, Air Force and Marines? Write to: Operation Dear Abby-DMZ, c/o Commanding Officer, CO C 122 Signal BN, Camp Casey, Korea 96224-0346.

DEAR ABBY: Every time my wife and I go to pick out wallpaper, we end up in a big argument. This time, I told her to go to the store and pick out the three patterns she liked the best, and I would make the final decision from one of the three.

Well, she picked out three patterns from which I selected one. We hired a professional wallpaper hanger because my wife says I don't know how to hang wallpaper. After spending a lot of money for wallpaper and having it installed, my wife decided she hated the wallpaper.

I have to agree, it doesn't look as good on the wall as I thought it would, and now my wife says wallpaper should be the wife's choice entirely because the wife has to look at it all day.

What do you say? We agreed to abide by your decision because we are going to replace it, although it's only been up for two weeks. — WONDERING IN CAPE CORAL, FLA.

DEAR WONDERING: Wallpaper should be a joint decision, but since your wife selected the three patterns she preferred, and agreed to let you make the final decision, she should have no complaints.

P.S. Next time, consult a decorator, and let him or her take the heat.

CONFIDENTIAL TO ALL PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES: "He who slings mud, generally loses ground." (Adlai Stevenson)

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage and handling are included.

Whimsical tables made from trees classic designs with twist

By SUZANNE SLESIN
New York Times News Service

They stand like a miniature forest, as if transported straight out of a book of children's fairy tales. But Lee Schuette's colorfully painted tree and plant sculptures — including palm, oak, pine, spruce, cedar, lilac and cactus — have hidden agendas. The "trees" are actually tilt-top tables, classic Chippendale or Federal designs with a twist.

Although both Schuette's flip-top tables and their 18th-century ancestors share the same practical point of view, the artist's modern versions are as amusing as their ancestors are austere.

Schuette, a master craftsman and artist who has a studio in Portsmouth, N.H., got the idea for his sculptures a few years ago when he visited a friend Linda Schiwall, a children's book illustrator. At the time, Schiwall was working as a tour guide at Hamilton House, a landmark in South Berwick, Me., furnished with Early American antiques.

The Chippendale tilt-top tables and fire screens in the historic house intrigued Mr. Schuette.

"Linda and I talked about ways of updating them," he said. "We felt a tree would work best, because it was a soft, inviting and friendly image."

The artist, a graduate of the Rhode Island School of Design, counts as one of his most important work experiences a two-year stint as an assistant professor at the Wendell Castle Workshop in Scottsville, N.Y.

Prices for Schuette's sculptures range from $6,500 for the yew topiary bushes to $12,000 for his "Cactus," whose pointed orange spikes are made of rubber dental massagers.

Carol Craven, the manager of the Alexander F. Milliken gallery, where the works will be shown through March 30, said that 7 of the 18 pieces have been sold "to serious art collectors as well as ordinary people who just came in and fell in love with the work."

"They are a bit delicate," Schuette said of his intricately painted surfaces. "I think they should be treated like a Chippendale table — with respect." Strategically placed coasters might also be a good idea.

Pigs trendiest pets of decade

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I used to be a push-over for a newborn anything. Show me a gerbil stumbling around with its eyes closed, and it had a home. Put a puppy in my lap, and just try to take it away from me. Slip me an ad for Pampers showing a baby, and I went right out and bought maternity underwear.

I never had the foresight to figure out that gerbils grew up to look like something I set traps for under the sink, or that puppies drank out of toilets, or that grown children eventually emptied an entire refrigerator by inhaling.

That's why I blanched when I saw a story about pigs becoming the trendy pet of the decade. According to the Short Snout Society, they are gaining in popularity every day.

Pig owners are effusive in their praise of pigs. They claim pigs are intelligent, affectionate, easy to house-train and, despite their reputation, are not smelly.

Owners attest to the fact that pigs don't bark or shed all over the furniture, and they make great watch-hogs.

There was recently a whole page in our paper devoted to a woman whose husband had gotten her a pet pig as a gift. The pig was 8 weeks old and weighed 20 pounds. There were some wonderful quotes about how the pig rolled over on his back so she could scratch its stomach, and when she was on the phone that rascal chewed on her toes so she'd pay attention to him. He even wagged his little tail.

All the time I was reading about "love at first oink" I kept remembering a story I did for "Good Morning, America" a couple of years ago. A doctor in North Carolina had always wanted to be a pig farmer and compromised his fantasy by collecting little ceramic pigobilia. For his 40th birthday, a group of friends presented him and his wife a real piglet called Norma Jean (named after Marilyn Monroe). Norma Jean weighed 10 pounds.

We caught up with the trio 21 months later to see how they were making out.

Norma Jean was everything they had hoped for. She had a coming-out party at the local Ramada Inn, swam every week in the Atlantic Ocean, loved classical music and drank pina coladas out of a bowl.

The bad news was that she wasn't crazy about strangers. I was advised to stand behind a chair until she got used to me. Norma Jean entered the room.

I'm here to tell you that when Norma Jean enters a room, we're talking entrance! All 600 pounds of her grunted and lumbered over to a leather sofa where she arranged herself and pigged out on piece after piece of designer chocolates. The couple was genuinely attached to this pet.

I tried with all my heart to visualize her as a cute 10-pound piglet. It would take several pina coladas to bring this about.

Finance professor recommends graduation gift

Associated Press

LOUDONVILLE, N.Y. — The best gift a college senior's parents can give the 1988 graduate could be a year's paid health insurance policy, says Paul Ruggeri, assistant professor of finance at Siena College.

The finance professor said the gift would be ideal because many college graduates may get entry-level jobs without health benefits, and they may not be able to afford their own.

Oak enhanced with walnut colored oil

By MICHAEL VARESE
New York Times News Service

The tall, narrow chest of drawers that recently set a record price for a piece of Frank Lloyd Wright furniture is an outstanding example of quarter-sawn oak. But whether a piece is museum-quality or a more mundane example, any oak can be enhanced by a good penetrating oil finish in a walnut color.

The Wright design may have been inspired by an English Wellington chest. With a narrow hinged side flap that locks over one edge of the drawers to prevent them from opening, the Wellington chest is usually made of mahogany, rosewood or walnut.

In the United States in the late 1800s and early 1900s during the golden years of oak, chests similiar to the Wellington were made of that wood. Because they were made for the home, rather than military campaigns, these are usually wider than the originals. Comparatively few oak chests were produced, most of which probably suffered an ignominious end, along with other oak furniture, when the look became unfashionable in the 1920s.

As with all exceptional pieces, whether it be Gustav Stickley's best, a Frank Lloyd Wright or even top-of-the-line Grand Rapids, the cost of producing quarter-sawn oak must have been exorbitant even at the turn of the century.

Quarter-sawn oak, a far cry from the monotonous and rather insipid look of much run-of-the-mill oak, is produced this way: A log is first cut into quarters along its length, and these sections are then sawn into boards of equal thickness.

But by doing it this way, vivid rays or splashes in the wood are exposed. Smoother and harder than the rest of the wood, these rays reflect light once the surface has been stained and finished.

With the furniture of Wright and Stickley, a brown aniline stain was often used. The rays, lacking porosity, would shrug off the stain, leaving them lighter in contrast to the rest of the wood, thus producing a two-toned effect.

Not everyone can be the owner of an illustrious piece of oak, so if it is ordinary oak you have, with its standard yellowish-brown look reminiscent of the classroom, then treatment with a walnut-colored penetrating oil finish may be the answer. This color complements oak rather well and can be used to good effect on a nondescript piece obscured beneath a few layers of discolored varnish.

For this type of finish to be effective, the old finish must be removed. Commercial stripping is recommended; the barer the wood the better. The solvents will dissolve the old finish and remove the filler in the pores, which may cause a drab look.

Opening up the surface permits the thorough penetration that is essential for these oil finishes to be effective and lasting. Before applying the new finish, the surfaces should be given a thorough sanding and dusting, for no finish will sit well in clogged pores.

Several brands of walnut-colored oil finishes are available. They range from a light to a dark walnut, according to the brand. The more coats applied, the darker the color becomes, but the change is rather slight between coats, so choose the shade that comes closest to the final look you want. Additional coats in a clear finish can be applied once you have reached the shade you like. Remember, though, that a clear finish tends to darken the look slightly.

If upon completion a few specks show up here and there or the luster needs softening, do not rub down with an abrasive paper, no matter how fine the grade. Doing this has a tendency to sharpen the edges around the open pores, producing an unnatural appearance. Better to rub the surfaces, using medium pressure, with 0000 or 000 steel wool lubricated with liquid or spray wax. Then finish by strenuously buffing with a polishing cloth.

Free-spirited designers breaking rules

New directions in architecture forged

By CAROL OLTEN
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Something refreshing has begun to happen in design as we lurch toward the 21st century. It has to do with a number of free-spirited designers who have started to create new kinds of living spaces, breaking away from old rules governing form, shape and color.

This was the message of WestWeek, the annual conferring of minds and matters at the Pacific Design Center in Los Angeles. Six major ideas run through most of the new directions in architecture and interior design. They are:

An interest in history in terms of putting different periods and styles;

An appreciation of imperfection over perfection in objects, with the fragment often admired over the entity;

Juxtaposition of rich and poor materials to create a different — and often stunning — aesthetic;

A renewal of interest in ornament of all kinds;

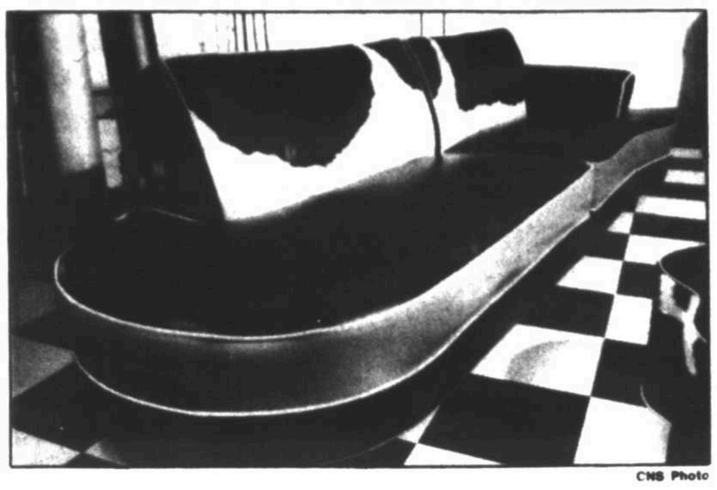

A belief in the integrity of the cheap — plywood is on equal terms with marble in much of the new work; and

The bringing together of objects with a great deal of humor.

In fact, most of the new furniture that awed everyone at WestWeek looked like it might have been designed by Dr. Seuss or some other marvelously inventive gizmo wizard. There was the playful, but threateningly titled "Atomic Dining Room Set" by Peter Shire; several Memphis-design kitsch couches by Harry Segil; anthropomorphic shrimp-shaped chaises by Jed Johnson and a Tower of Babel bird cage by Patrick Naggar.

Designer Naggar, born in Egypt, educated in France and currently working in New York, epitomizes the kind of spontaneous approach to interior design currently gaining vogue. Metaphor, humor, historic reference, offbeat combinations of materials are all important elements of Naggar's designs, whether furniture or interiors.

A gold-leaf paper screen moves around on roller skates. A Hell's Angel chair evokes the black leather cult of bikers but it also has a classical Egyptian reference in the shape of its legs.

CNS Photo

This two-piece Atomic Sofa in vinyl and cowhide was designed by Harry Segil, an innovative furniture designer. The juxtaposition of rich and poor materials to create an asthetic look was a common concept at WestWeek, an annual design conference in Los Angeles.

"And my daybed is partly a bed and partly a chariot," explained Naggar, whose noteworthy work in New York includes an apartment that explores the variety of uses of metals — just metals. "I believe in modern design, but I also like Beaux Arts and Classical styles. In whatever I do I try to create objects and places that have poetic content."

Similar considerations govern the work of Mark Zeff, another New York designer heralded among of the new movers and shakers. Zeff has worked in New York since 1982 when he left London, where he began working in the profession. One of his trademarks is a series of metal frame chairs which are loosely draped with slipcovers.

He began by designing the chairs for Barney's restaurant and cafe in New York and now has adapted them to reflect various styles and periods, including the formidable Louis XV. "It occurred to me that having many chairs with slipcovers that might be changed was a good way to really change an entire room very quickly," said Zeff. "A lot of my clients are students or don't really have any money, so this presented a way to work with them."

Zeff has also designed the Equus Chair, which has a saddle seat and wears a black slipcover with a gold tassel. "Everything should have a sense of humor," Zeff noted. "I like to make a sophisticated and knowledgeable use of history in my designs to present a new style, one not stuck in time but one that really carries us into the 1990s and the 21st century."

Johnson's historical references are more immediate. He often arranges rooms with 19th century American furniture, but to give the arrangement verve, mixes in pieces of Egyptian-revival furnishings, William Morris or Stickley crafts work and some of his own shrimp-shaped chaises. He also has worked a lot with stencil borders and freizes. His most well-known work so far has been Yves St. Laurent's New York apartment and the late Andy Warhol's town house.

"Andy shopped every day and it was hard to keep up for me trying to place things in his home," said Johnson. "But I think we thought the same about objects. We liked anything as long as it was good quality."

Quality and fine craftsmanship also are important in the work of David Hertz, a designer who worked with architect John Lautner of the Frank Lloyd Wright school as well as the iconoclastic Frank Gehry in Los Angeles. Hertz, who is currently engaged in making lightweight concrete furniture as well as shop design, admits to being influenced by Wright, although he also allies himself somewhat to the pop culture of the 1950s.

"I try to create something that will last and not be ephemeral," he said. "Ruins, monolithic objects, hieroglyphics and archaeology are important to me — but in a contemporary sense. That's why I do things like incorporate a hieroglyphic of a 'stop' sign on the side of a building. These are the ruins of our own time."

Hertz' recent furniture includes a lightweight concrete couch with cowhide bolsters and a table that floats a piece of glass through a series of supporting architectural forms.

Shire's colorful furniture and bebop ceramics have been a part of the design scene for some time. He was part of the original group of Memphis-style designers who flashed into view several years ago with a wild use of color, bizarre textured surfaces and unusual shapes.

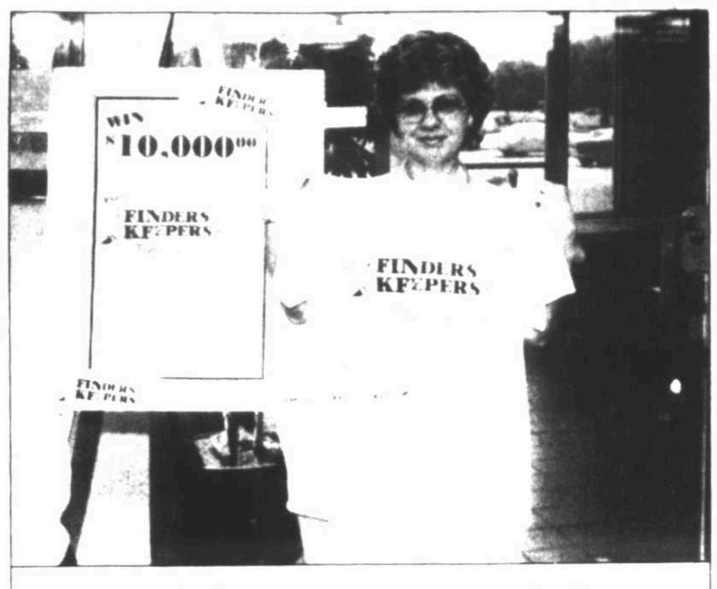

Talking about his "Atomic Dining Room Set" — a black table and chairs which has playful design references to atoms and the bomb, but is not exactly high on comfort — Shire seems to sum up the continuing search for direction in some of the refreshing new work in design: "We know we have a future somehow," Shire said. "But we don't quite know how to sit in it."

Nature celebrated end of war with roses

Copley News Service

The 29-year War of the Roses, a struggle for the throne of England between the house of Lancaster with its red rose and the house of York with its white rose, ended when Henry VII and Elizabeth of York married. The roses merged on the new Tudor coat of arms.

And at the same time, legend has it, nature miraculously celebrated the event with the appearance of a rose never before seen — with red-flocked white petals. This rose is still available today, the Damascena versicolor.

Antique dealers favor coop approach

Find business is better together

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

While the cooperative approach may not be right for all small businesses, some Midland antique dealers are finding that it is exactly right for them, providing resources and savings unavailable as small shop owners.

Antiques Etc., described by some as a virtual antique supermarket or mall, is marking one year of operation in the former Whites Auto building on Meta Drive. The antique "heaven" consists of 40 individual shops in the two-story building and enough items to keep the serious browser busy for the better part of a day.

The unique merchandising concept was the brain child of Yvonne Tighe, an antique wholesaler from Waco who moved to Midland with her attorney husband several years ago, and started a store on Dodson St. The idea of leasing space to others evolved as friends and acquaintances asked her for space to sell their wares.

When Tighe first moved into the 38,000 square-foot building, there were only four shops. Now 40 shops,involving 90 people, sell everything from antique furniture, jewelry and clothing to etceteras such as handmade toys, art, sterling, miniatures, perfumes, and Buddy Holly commemorative posters.

Rental spaces ranges from 100 square feet to 1,200 square feet, with the average shop taking up 400 to 500 square feet. The owners pay rent to Tighe — the amount depends on whether the owner works for the business one day a week or not.

All money from sales is collected at a central register, credited to the business, and proceeds above rent are returned to the owner twice a month, explained Tighe who pays rent and advertising for the group.

According to Tighe, the group grossed just under $500,000 last year, and sees about 300 to 700 customers a week.

Acting somewhat like an incubator, the arrangement helps fledgling businesses get started and grow. Tighe pointed out that new stores get the benefit of help and advice from the more established retailers, and the centralized bookkeeping arrangement helps keep overhead low. Tenants tend not to leave, but to expand and add new lines of merchandise rather than leaving, she said.

"I think the day of the small "romantic" shops are gone," she stated. "People don't want to bother with a small store anymore. This is much easier because you don't have to stay there and run the store; you're free to go look to auctions or estate sales and find things."

Big retail chains stand at crossroads

By JOYCE M. ROSENBERG
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Sears, Penney and Montgomery Ward. The names once dominated American retailing, but growing competition from specialty retailers and discount stores keeps challenging the giants to rethink the business they helped create.

The way they used to do business — known as general merchandising — isn't working anymore.

"It's a very mature industry," said Joseph Ronning, a retail industry analyst with the investment firm Brown Brothers Harriman Inc. "Mature" means there is little opportunity for growth.

As a result, Sears, Roebuck and Co., the nation's largest retailer, is retooling its sales strategy and revamping its management structure.

J.C. Penney Co. Inc., the fourth-largest retailer, already enjoying some success from its shift to apparel, is moving its headquarters from New York to Texas to cut costs.

And Montgomery Ward & Co., the 11th-largest retailer, is going private just three years after many observers expected it to go out of business.

At their height, Sears, Penney and Montgomery Ward stores numbered in the thousands. Where they had no branches, consumers could buy from their catalogs.

But changes in American society affected the way consumers shopped and the way these companies did business.

"The '70s was an era where people went to shopping malls and had more time," said Barbara Loren, a consultant with Loren-Snyder Marketing Inc. in Troy, Mich.

In the 1980s, Ms. Loren said, working women have less time to shop and when they need an item, they go to the store where they are most likely to find it. Increasingly, specialty retailers are the place they turn.

Ms. Loren cited Toys R Us as a specialty retailer that has taken away business from general merchandisers.

"I know Toys R Us will have the best selection and the price is right," she said. "I know I am going to come out with what I want."

Home improvement stores such as Home Depot and electronics stores such as Circuit City also drained business away.

"The specialists were clearly becoming the leaders in the industry," said Bernard F. Brennan, chairman of Montgomery Ward. "If we didn't begin to specialize, we didn't have much of a chance to survive."

A further toll was exacted by discount store chains such as K mart and Wal-Mart, which offered name brands at lower prices while general merchandisers sold goods under their own labels.

Penney was the first to change. In 1983, the company began to move toward specialty retailing by focusing on its clothing lines. It discontinued hardware and automotive items and closed unprofitable stores.

The strategy worked. Penney, in business for 86 years, has seen its profitability improve dramatically.

It was do-or-die at Montgomery Ward. In 1985, after years of losses, the retailer closed its catalog operation and weakest stores and eliminated money-losing lines.

Julio Castilleja, head of Valley farmer's coop shows off squash inside cooler made possible by loan from CEED.

Entrepreneuring center helps small businesses

By JOEL WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

EDINBURG, Texas (AP) — Six ambitious farmers knew how to work the land when they formed a cooperative 2½ years ago, but they had no idea how to cultivate a bank's confidence enough to get a loan.

They wanted to expand their business, but needed $37,000 to buy a walk-in cooler where they could store produce that quickly perishes in the lower Rio Grande Valley's subtropical heat.

"We tried, but banks were not, and still are not making any loans to farmers," said Julio Castilleja, head of the San Juan-based Valley Farmers Co-op.

They learned that securing a loan often is a matter of making the lender feel comfortable with the application.

Free of charge, Pan American University at Edinburg's Center for Entrepreneurship and Economic Development helped the farmers develop a business plan and loan application that brought them financing for the 16,000-cubic-foot cooler.

Castilleja's co-op has since increased to 20 farmers and has seen business soar by 400 to 500 percent as he continues to work with the CEED.

"A lot of these farmers might be out of business by now if they weren't in the co-op," Castilleja said.

Pan American's CEED program has helped 24 small businesses in the Lower Rio Grande Valley obtain loans, account for their money and draw up business plans, and has provided free counseling to more than 600 South Texas businesses.

The U.S. Comptroller of the Currency recently recommended that the CEED be used as a national model for how banks can work with universities to reinvest in their communities.

"Three out of four businesses fail in the first five years because of poor management and undercapitalization," said J. Michael Patrick, director of the CEED.

Some entrepreneurs will take their records to a bank, "virtually in a shoe box," said Roland Simon Arriola, associate director of the CEED. "It's not what the banker wants to see."

The center works to reduce the failure rate by providing the sound business know-how needed to survive.

"You sit down and talk it through with them, and they don't even know what kind of business they're in," or what factors will influence demand for their product or service, Patrick said.

"I'm not a CPA," said Mario Rodriguez, whose 6-year-old American Mesquite Co. based in Donna sells charcoal for barbecue.

He started the business with $2,000 in cash and three used cars as collateral, and grew to more than $600,000 in sales last year. But he needs new lines of credit to keep growing, so he went to the CEED for technical help.

"The bank's already agreed to it. It's just a matter of whether we want to go forward," Rodriquez said.

Patrick says the program has created hundreds of jobs through small businesses in the Valley, where unemployment hovers around 20 percent.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

The case for privatization of government

Pitts

Remember J. Peter Grace? Remember the report he wrote on government waste and how to cut $424 billion from the budget? Most have forgotten, because almost nothing has been done to make the cuts.

Touted by Congress and the public alike as a marvelous, long overdue plan, Reagan's Grace Commission was viewed as a bold effort that could make significant headway toward controlling the uncontrollable federal bureaucracy.

To date little has been done. The Grace Commission Report was delivered, J. Peter Grace was thanked and sent on his way to lecture at college and chamber of commerce functions, and government continued to get fat on the taxes of the working people.

We are still spending $220 billion more than we make each year and face a staggering debt of $2.2 trillion.

How much is a trillion dollars, flippantly nicknamed "trills" by the bureaucracy?

If one were to begin to spend one dollar a second, or $86,400 a day, it would take 31,700 years to spend a trillion dollars. If you had started the day Christ was born until the present, you would have spent only 65 billion, about one-quarter of the annual national deficit.

How does the fat-plagued government get all this money to feed its insatiable appetite for dollars? Simple: it borrows it — borrows it from the U.S. Treasury. And where does it get the money to pay the interest on the unpaid debt — borrows it, of course. And the interest to pay the interest on the interest? You can guess.

Where will it all end? J. Peter Grace calculates that a dollar borrowed today will have cost $71 by 1990. He also estimates that in about 12 years the U.S. debt will be $13 trillion and interest on the debt $1.5 trillion.

What is the problem? Part of the problem is congressional cowardice, the lack of strong moral courage among a leadership that is unwilling to tackle a big problem and put principle ahead of politics. Part of the problem is a public hooked on federal "entitlement" programs, that will turn on a politician at the mention of cutting his favorite handout. Grace says there are now 936 federal social programs. One inspired writer wrote a book about the process — How to Get Yours in Fat City.

But perhaps the heart of the problem is the obesity of federal government. With 2.7 million federal employees occupying 2.61 billion square feet of office space, (the equivalent of all the office space in our 10 largest cities multiplied by four) the federal bureaucracy is so big that it has become a world unto its own. It is so fat that it wastes more in a single day than most nations earn in a decade, and so entrenched that it is totally oblivious to public outcry.

Sure attacks are made on it — almost continually — but it's like attacking a battleship with BB guns. Not the most dedicated president, the most probing commission or the best laid plans of Congress can bring the dollar addict in line.

Is there hope? There is a tested medicine that can absolutely tame and trim the federal government — a medicine so powerful that the mere mention of it sends chills throughout federaldom, making bureaucrats quake in their boots.

It's called privatization and it is becoming once again one of the most talked about topics in and out of Washington. In 1984, the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control identified 600,000 government jobs as unnecessary and recommended that they be privatized immediately. Nothing came of the report, because of the inaction of Congress and the fact that when action is taken the bureaucracy is put in charge of fixing the bureaucracy.

The space launch industry is on the verge of being privatized. There is also new talk about privatizing the Post Office, which is on the verge of pricing itself out of existence. Perhaps the time is ripe to pull out that 1984 report, dust it off and try again to gather support for it.

Certainly the case for taking public enterprises private offers far more positives than the negatives the career public servants can dream up. It would be cheaper because "the world into its own" also has its own pay standards. For example, a proofreader in the Government Printing Office makes $32,000 a year and can retire on 82 percent of that salary. While some jobs in the public sector pay less than the private, most pay more.

Services rendered would also be more efficient and courteous. It is no secret that the private sector outperforms the public sector, and that smaller concerns outperform bigger ones.

She emphasized that the majority of shop owners already have full-time jobs and run their space as a sideline to make extra money or excuse to work on hobbies they enjoy.

The cooperative concept is not new, though it is uncommon to the Midland area. Tighe stated that what makes Antiques Etc. unique is "the blending of the personalities involved. They're more involved here. This is a store where people are still happy to sell something."

She added that a feeling of close friendship and fun prevails. "The owners aren't afraid to leave for a while, because they know someone else will be glad to help sell something."

Susan Sexton, who sells jewelry, bronzes, furniture and dolls, was one of several enthusiastic business owners. "This has been incredible," she said. She was one of the first tenants, and has been with Antiques Etc. since the beginning.

Another tenant familiar with the concept is Ann Hicks, owner of Anna Belles, which offers original designer perfumes at 20 to 50 percent off retail and miniature collectibles. She observed that the Midland store "is more complete than what I've seen. I had a similar space in California, and visited a couple of places in Houston that aren't as complete as this."

Another benefit Hicks and May Lockhart, owner of May's Dolls have found is that, because the owners are working dealers familiar with antiques, the customer gets better service and more accurate information.

Among the plans Tighe has for the business is organizing a buying trip to Europe. And, even though Antiques Etc. has only been in its present location a year, she predicted a move to a larger location, possibley doubling the space. "We have a pretty good waiting list," she noted.

CHAINS

"We clearly went to certain categories in which we had consumer acceptance already," Brennan said in an interview.

The 116-year-old Montgomery Ward is now a specialty retailer, concentrating on appliances, apparel, automotive items and home furnishings.

But Sears — headed by Edward A. Brennan, brother of Montgomery Ward's chairman — has been slow to catch on to new trends and has become a follower instead of the industry leader it once was.

"They were the biggest and most powerful, the most likely to be bound by tradition than anyone else," said Monroe H. Greenstein, an analyst with Bear Stearns & Co.

The attitude at Sears was, "This is what Sears is, what we've always been and what we'll continue to be," he said. As a result, the 102-year-old Sears stagnated.

The company tried to capitalize on its strong points, starting a chain of paint and hardware stores in 1983. But not until 1987 did Sears begin a push into specialty retailing.

Its first steps were through acquiring other retailers, such as Western Auto stores. Now it is experimenting with "neighborhood stores," outlets focusing on specific merchandise lines such as home fashions.

In its full-line stores, the company is trying to jazz up its image, teaming with McDonald's Corp. and Walt Disney Co. to market clothing, toys and other merchandise. And while it has sold appliances only under its own Kenmore label, Sears will now offer brand names, a strategy working for Montgomery Ward.

Sears also recognizes its internal structure must change. In March, the company announced it would overhaul its staff, reducing the number of management levels and making each part of the business more independent. It also wants to cut its costs, which some analysts call the highest in the business.

Sears Merchandise Group chairman Michael C. Bozic indicated Sears has become a giant bureaucracy that has to be more manageable. "We want to measure everything in a smaller arena," he said in an interview.

Some analysts are cautiously optimistic Sears can do it.

Greenstein said Sears' plans should increase its market share, but just how sucessful the company will be is "anybody's guess."

Ronning, of Brown Brothers Harriman, noted Sears' continuing growth in financial services through its Coldwell Bankers real estate, Allstate insurance and Dean Witter Reynolds investment operations.

"Sears is a company shifting from a retailer to a financial services company," Ronning said. "That is pretty much what the thrust of the company is."

Montgomery Ward, however, is a proven success story. Before Brennan became chairman in 1985, the retailer, owned by Mobil Corp., was losing money. By transforming itself into a chain of what Montgomery Ward calls "value-driven specialty stores," it became a profitable and attractive property that found the financial backing to go private.

Brennan said his company will continue to develop its specialty format, but he doesn't see it branching into other directions.

"We are very comfortable with our structure," he said.

Recoverable oil less than thought

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation may leave the 1990s with roughly half as much economically recoverable oil and natural gas as it thought was available shortly after the decade began, due to dry holes and lower energy prices.

If preliminary estimates released Thursday by the Interior Department's Minerals Management Service and Geological Survey hold up, they will mean a decline of nearly 37 percent from estimates of economically recoverable, undiscovered oil and natural gas currently in use and a 46 percent decline from 1981 figures.

Estimated oil remaining to be found onshore and offshore dropped to 42.3 billion barrels from the previously estimated 66.8 billion barrels, and onshore and offshore natural gas fell to 328 trillion cubic feet from 518 trillion cubic feet.

The Interior Department insists it is premature to make the comparisons, but the industry is expected to make them nevertheless.

"We are trying to emphasize that we have not and will not reach a conclusion on the total undiscovered resources of the nation" pending results of an external, expert review, the department stated.

The principal onshore estimates were released at scientific meetings in March by the Geological Survey; the offshore estimates by the Minerals Management Service were released Thursday along with backup materials on both sets of numbers for comment by industry and scientific groups.

Some gas industry groups criticized the department in March for releasing estimates they considered too low. Much of the difference was simple bookkeeping — the department used a higher cutoff for the minimum size field it would study and excluded large quantities of hard-to-produce gas in "tight sands" reservoirs that industry studies normally include.

Current onshore estimates were made in 1981 and offshore estimates in 1985 using 1984 data.

A large part of the differences from the 1981 and 1984 figures results from the current, lower price of crude oil. The study uses $18 a barrel, about the current price. Prices were nearly twice as high in 1981 and around $29 in 1984. The lower prices make exploration crews skip the high-cost gas or oil reservoirs, and more are skipped as prices fall further.

The department is seeking review of the figures by independent experts because of changes in its methods of estimating onshore oil and gas.

The Energy Department used such expert judgments in making estimates of economically recoverable natural gas reserves, discovered as well as undiscovered, that it hoped would persuade more people to use gas.

"Memories of the winter of 1976-77 still linger and unfortunately, those shortages created the lasting misimpression that natural gas is an unreliable energy resource," Energy Secretary John Herrington told a news conference.

Since that winter, which saw some factories close because of gas shortages, most gas has been freed from price controls that many analysts blame for the shortages.

The department's study, using figures from Interior, industry and its own consultants, estimated that if price were no object, current techniques could get 1,029 trillion cubic feet out of the ground outside Alaska. Alaska was excluded because it is too expensive to get most of its gas to market.

At $3 per thousand cubic feet at the wellhead, 583 trillion cubic feet would be produced, but a $5 price would draw only another 174 trillion cubic feet, the study said.

George H. Lawrence, president of the American Gas Association, said the Energy Department study "should allay any concerns about supply availability and price to future users."

TEXAS

CEED was formed in 1986 with a $122,500 grant from the Dallas-based Meadows Foundation, and in 1987 became the envy of the Texas academic community when the Legislature provided it $250,000 for two years' operation.

It has a staff of four professionals, three research associates, 14 business counselors and two secretaries. Students who work with the center find out how the real business world survives. Money also comes from the Small Business Administration, Levi Strauss Foundation and Ford Foundation.

Patrick and Arriola also are trying to start a new non-profit corporation that would provide a $1 million revolving loan fund for small businesses.

It also is researching how to bring more suppliers for the "maquiladora" twin plants in northern Mexico to the Texas side of the border, and another program to identify and find solutions for the problems of unincorporated rural slums known as "colonias."

"The reason we help folks get money is because they help people get jobs," Patrick said. "Our focus, really, is in job creation, job retention, and the way we achieve that is helping people get financing."

"It's the small-business person who is going to lead the Valley recovery ... not the Fortune 500 companies," said John Northcutt, president of Alamo Bank, which has worked closely with CEED.

Banks, he said, do not have the time to piece together business plans or work with poorly produced loan applications.

"By the time it gets through this process, we have a much higher than normal approval rate, because the bad ones are screened out and the business packages for the good ones are well put together," Northcutt said.

PITTS

And if it's good for the federal government, why wouldn't it be good for the state, county and city? Many cities already contract for private garbage pickup, sewage treatment and transportation. Profit-making utility companies deliver electricity, gas and television to our homes.

Couldn't private contractors deliver our water, collect our taxes, repair our streets, operate our prisons, maintain our buildings more efficiently and cheaper?

And wouldn't it be refreshing to be treated like a valued customer instead of an annoying taxpayer?

With all else having failed, privatization may just be the only remaining hope for bringing an end to wasteful, inefficient, unresponsive government.

Rig Utilization

Basin rig count falls by five

From Staff Reports

The U.S. rig count reversed a downward trend while the Permian Basin rig count fell, ending a three-week upward trend.

According to Baker Hughes of Houston, the U.S. count rose 17 to stand at 897 while the Basin count dropped five to stand at 132.

Lea County, N.M. continues to lead the Basin, with 22 rigs at work this week. Next was Andrews County with 16 and Gaines County with 11. Midland County doubled its count, having two rigs at work within county lines.

Rig utilization — the percentage of rigs available being utilized — slipped for both the U.S. and Permian Basin. The U.S. percentage dipped to 21.6 percent from 21.8 percent, and the Basin percentage slipped from 27.8 percent to 27.4 percent.

Among major oil producing states, Louisiana gained nine rigs, while Wyoming added four, Michigan, three, and Oklahoma two.

Kansas saw its rig activity drop by three, Colorado and New Mexico each dropped by two and North Dakota, one.

California, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Texas had neither gains nor losses for the week.

Railroad Commission fines eight companies

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission has assessed $27,000 in administrative penalties to eight oil and gas operators for problems under the TRC's well plugging rules.

The largest assessment, totaling $6,500, went to W.H. COllier Jr., doing business as Westside Production Co., for inactive and unplugged wells in Patricio County.

Other penalties went to Shah Exploratin Co. Inc., $5,000 for wells in Young County; Geo-Logic Inc., $1,500 for a well in Sherman County; T&T PRoductin Co., $4,000 for a well in Robertson County; Rainbow Energy Inc. "A", $6,000 for wells in Milam County; and West East Gas Co., $3,000 for a well in Dimmit County.

Two operators agreed to penalties without admitting any violations: Rodney Jones and Allen Garrett, doing business as Texas Oil Field Equipment, paid $500 for a well in Wilson County.-Petro Management Corp. paid $500 for a well in Jones County.

To date in 1988, the TRC has levied more than $298,000 in pollution and well plugging penalties. Last year some $794,000 was assessed in such penalties.

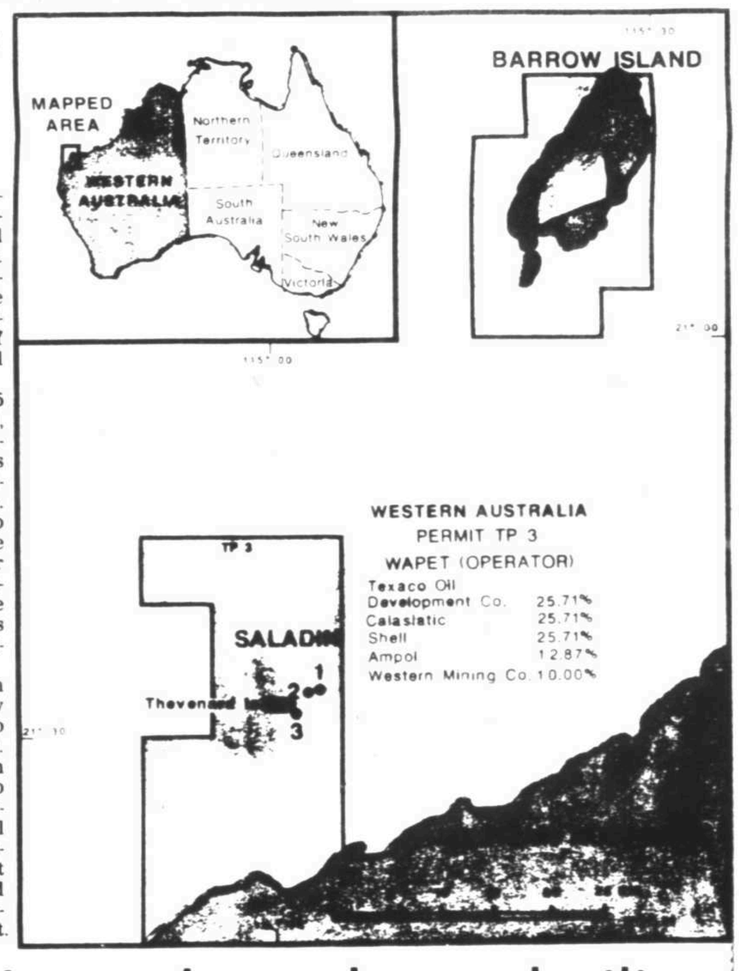

New FMC system named best at OTC

HOUSTON (SWN) — The FMC Wellhead Platform Completion System — incorporating a series of design features that combine to significantly reduce rig time, cut costs and improve safety — was declared the Best Mechanical Engineering Achievement exhibited at the 1988 Offshore Technology Conference.

It was the second straight year that a development of FMC Corp.'s Petroleum Equipment Group, Wellhead Equipment Operation, has won the prestigious annual American Society of Mechanical Engineers Petroleum Division award for outstanding application of mechanical engineering in the design of offshore equipment, components or systems shown at OTC.

According to Don B. Wafer, manager of engineering for FMC's Petroleum Equipment Group, the new high performance wellhead system is already in use in North Sea platform completions where severe conditions exist.

Texaco to begin development of Australian field

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (SWN) — Texaco Oil Development Co., a subsidiary of Texaco Inc., has confirmed that West Australian Petroleum Pty. Limited (WAPET) will begin development of the Saladin oilfield offshore western Australia, located approximately 16 miles north-northwest of Onslow, adjacent to Thevenard Island.

The field was discovered in 1985 with the Saladin number one well, which was then followed by two successful appraisal wells. Saladin's crude oil reserves have been estimated at 30 million to 40 million barrels.

Initial plans call for WAPET to construct and install two offshore production platforms in a water depth of about 56 feet to enable production through three offshore wells. In addition, directional wells will be drilled into the Saladin structure from Thevenard Island.

Construction is scheduled to begin later in the year, with the first daily production, estimated at 40,000 to 60,000 barrels, expected by late 1989.

The participating companies in the Saladin project include Texaco Oil Development Company, California Asiatic Oil Company, and Shell Development (Australia) Pty. Limited, each holders of a 25.7 percent interest, Ampol Exploration Limited with 12.9 percent, and Western Mining Corp. Limited with 10 percent.

Oil industry has adapted to volatility

IRVINE, Calif. (SWN) — Shell Oil Co. President and Chief Executive Officer John F. Bookout has said that the U.S. oil industry has adapted successfully to a volatile marketplace and will remain financially strong in the 1990s.

Speaking at a National Academy of Engineering energy symposium this week, Bookout said, "The exploration and production part of the industry responded dramatically over the last 15 years as the market shifted."

Bookout added that in recent years, "The exploration and production sector has adapted to falling prices by improving productivity. Even though the number of drilling rigs operating decreased as prices fell from 1982 to 1986, the number of wells completed per rig increased nearly 50 percent."

Using the behavior of the exploration and production sector during the past 15 years as a model for the future, Bookout said that industry cash flows should remain positive over a wide range of oil prices. Nonetheless, he added that U.S. oil and gas production may decline by as much as 1 to 3 percent per year for the next decade. The longer-term production outlook could improve if a major geologic surprise or technological breakthrough should occur.

Mexico's prices for crude oil higher in April

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico's oil prices in April for the Americas, Europe and the Far East rose an average $1.50 a barrel over March levels, the government oil monopoly Pemex announced.

Customers in the Americas paid $16.00 per barrel of light Isthmus crude in April, up from $14.29 in March, while the heavy Maya grade sold for $12.77, up from $10.88, the company said.

In the Far East, Isthmus fetched $15.30 per barrel and Maya for $12.60 in April. Isthmus and Maya sold for $13.86 and $11.20, respectively, the previous month.

European buyers paid an average of $15.59 for the light grade oil during the first half of April, up from $14.50 in March.

Christie Hefner rebuilding Playboy empire

AP Laserphoto

Since taking over Playboy Enterprises in 1982, Christie Hefner has made the company profitable the last six quarters.

CHICAGO (AP) — The bow-tied bunny still stands for sexy female centerfolds, lively interviews and men's fashion tips, but behind the flagship magazine a pragmatic new philosophy is emerging at Playboy Enterprises Inc.

Gone are the company-owned key clubs and casinos, the luxurious Chicago mansion and the Big Bunny jetliner — trappings that reflected and reinforced founder Hugh Hefner's hedonistic image.

In their place, Hefner's daughter, Christie, is building a leaner organization that, while more fiscally sound, is decidedly more staid — right down to its recent acquisition of the Sarah Coventry jewelry line.

In six years as company president, the 35-year-old Ms. Hefner has pared Playboy to its core of publishing, licensing and video businesses. The proof of her pruning shows up on the bottom line: profits in the past seven quarters.

She took charge of a company that was reeling from the loss of lucrative casino licenses in Great Britain, denial of permission to operate a casino in Atlantic City, N.J., declining magazine sales and a faltering cable television channel.

Under her leadership, Playboy has closed the last of its company-owned key clubs and disposed of its interests in movie theaters, modeling and book and record clubs.

"The entire management team headed by Christie has repositioned the company to the point where profitability is now the norm and the potential for the future is probably brighter than at any time in the last several years," said investment banker David Leibowitz of American Securities Corp.

Having righted and steadied the ship, Ms. Hefner is charting a course for Playboy that partially follows the successful example of an unlikely model: the Walt Disney Co.

Just as Disney formed Touchstone Pictures and Buena Vista Syndication to make and distribute movies with uncharacteristically adult themes, Playboy hopes to expand by escaping its traditional image.

"In our case it's sort of the flip side of Disney," Ms. Hefner said in a recent interview.

"We make products for adults and under the Playboy name they have a particular aura that is sexy and fun," she said. "That's an aura that works for certain products but not for others. If we want to be able to expand as a licensor or publisher or video-film creator, we'd like to be able to do that without the Playboy name as a restriction."

So in addition to its array of Playboy and Playmate brand videotapes, casual apparel, jewelry and accessories, the company plans to become a distributor of similar products that will not carry the Playboy name or bunny emblem — and theoretically will have a broader appeal.

"It's the mass market, that middle market, that's of most interest to us," Ms. Hefner said.

The first move in that direction was Playboy's quiet acquisition of Sarah Coventry in November through its neutrally named new subsidiary, Licensing Unlimited Inc.

The new strategy doesn't mean the Playboy trademark has outlived its usefulness. Playboy magazine, with an average paid circulation last year of more than 3.6 million, is still the company's strongest suit, though circulation may never again approach the 1972 zenith of 7.2 million.

The magazine survived a government crackdown on pornography and a ban by 7-Eleven stores in 1986, and contributed more than $98 million to Playboy's 1987 revenues of $162 million. Sales of video products, including the revamped Playboy Channel and video centerfolds, added about $29 million, followed by $23 million from other publications and $10.5 million from licensing and merchandising.

Although the Playboy Channel has had trouble holding subscribers, the company maintains high hopes for its video unit, which just released its first Playmate video in eight months thanks to a new distribution deal with HBO Video.

Playboy's $11 million profit in 1987 and strong performance in the first nine months of the current fiscal year followed a $62 million loss in 1986. Before turning profits in 1984 and '85, the company had notched a string of losses stretching back to the first quarter of fiscal 1982, the year Ms. Hefner took over.

"In the early years after I took over we were of necessity mostly engaged in the business of closing down business, selling off businesses and solving old problems," she said.

Permian Partners report net loss for first quarter

HOUSTON SWN) — Permian Partners, L.P. has reported results of operations for its first quarter ended March 31, 1988 and full payment of quarterly cash distributions to Preference Unitholders.

The net loss for the quarter totaled $(6,152,000) and the net loss per Preference Unit was $(.11). Revenues for the quarter totaled $603,554,000.

James E. Haas, chairman of the board and chief executive officer for the General Partner, said, "Although operating margins for the first two months of the quarter continued the pattern of weakness we experienced in the later months of 1987, the month of March did show some pricing improvement. We continue to strive for sustained profitabliity for Permian Partners.

"The cash distribution support system put into place when the partnership was established will allow the General Partner to provide sufficient funds to fulfill all cash distribution obligations for the period," Haas concluded.

There are currently 18.5 million Preference Units outstanding. The Permian Corporation, a wholly-owned subsidiary of National Intergroup, Inc., acts as general partner.

Woman's firm got start in kitchen

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — As an 8-year-old, she baked her first batch of sugared cookies in her mother's kitchen stove Munich, Germany.

They popped out crisp and tasty, just the right treat to brighten a dreary winter day.

Now, 49 years later, Sonja Silvertooth's cookies, pastries and other eatables, made from old European family recipes, have made her a successful entrepreneur. Her growing, diversified food service business projects 1988 gross sales near $500,000.

Sonja's International Confections, which recently expanded into a European-style tea room-cafe and retail giftshop operation, may be franchising into other cities and states in the future.

"I am determined to succeed. I love to work and I believe I have a good product," says the blonde with the quick smile. "My mother always taught me to give your honest money's worth whether in life or in busienss."

Mrs. Silvertooth grew up in a family that operated a gasthaus, a small neighborhood inn where customers came to eat, drink, talk, play cards and seek lodging. Any GI who served a hitch in Deutschland fondly remembers gasthauses as cheerful, friendly abodes where you could while away many hours of the long German winter days and nights.

A war bride at 19, Mrs. Silvertooth came to the United States with her soldier husband in 1954 to Fort Bliss in El Paso.

SHE ENJOYED baking cookies then because it reminded her of her home in Germany where pastries and sweets were almost as popular and traditional on the dinner table as beer.

Mrs. Silvertooth moved to Corpus Christi in 1962 when her husband was assigned to the Army helicopter repair depot.

"When I came to America and became a citizen, all I wanted to do was to be a good housewife, raise my two children, keep a neat house and bake homemnade cookies," she recalls. "I never dreamed I'd ever want to be a career person."

But things changed when she separated from her husband in 1972 and later divorced.

"I had to go to work. I was a woman alone. I had no other choice," she says.

Mrs. Silvertooth worked as a cashier at the Navy Exchange at Corpus Christi Naval Air Station and also helped her brother, Fritz Fischer, in a small carpet cleaning and sales business.

But she desired more challenges and rewards in life.

Her sculptor son, Dennis Silvertooth, whose artwork of cowboys, Indians and horses have been exhibited throughout the country, and her daughter, Evelyn, now general manager of her business, encouraged her to venture into the independent business world.

She had been supplying free pastries and cookies for her son's showings and friends prodded her to open a shop and sell her confectionary desserts.

HER COOKIE-MAKING enterprise moved from the home dough board to the commercial oven in October 1980. Mrs. Silvertooth, her brother, and a third partner each invested $7,000 to lease a building in Flour Bluff and buy some baking equipment and packaging materials.

The first shipment of decorative Christmas cookies worth $2,000 was delivered to a local gift shop in November 1980. In the first five weeks of operation the small wholesale bakery sold 5,000 cans or tins of cookies worth $50,000 to several retail stores.

Some of the cookies were sold to Houston stores such as Sakowitz, Joske's, Marshall Field and Jamail Brothers.

"It just snowballed," Mrs. Silvertooth said. "Some days we worked 20 hours a day filling cookie orders. My Christmas became my business."

After yuletide season passed, Mrs. Silvertooth's cookie sales crumbled, trickling to just enough orders to barely pay her hired help. It was a struggle to survive through the summer.

But in the fall of 1981, she opened a retail counter and began selling to customers at the cookie factory. It lifted business enough to last until the Christmas season rush started again. Sales were up about 20 percent that year.

In 1982 Mrs. Silvertooth added a mail-order operation and began shipping cookies statewide and overseas. Today, cookies are mailed to about 20 countries, including customers in Japan, Egypt and Europe.

SHE OPENED a new retail location in 1983 and added a small party catering service, helping sales to rise another 15 percent that year.

Slow, steady customer growth has continued. Combines sales in 1987 hit $375,000.

Mrs. Silvertooth's regular staff numbers about 15 people, but can double at the Christmas cookie production peak.

In a year's time, Sonja's Confections will produce 35,000 pounds of assorted cookies with 70 percent of annual sales, or about 24,000 pounds, coming during the 60-day Christmas period.

Cookies, packages in 17 different types and flavors, are marketed in containers ranging from $4.95 to $22.95. Top seller is the one-pound European assorted mix of 70 cookies for $6.95. Gift baskets of imported European chocolates and cookies carry pricetags of $15 and $250.

Mail order mutual funds not meant for risk-takers

By CHRIS BARNETT
and ART GARCIA
Copley News Service

American Express, the same company that gives you the world on a piece of plastic, is now peddling a new family of mutual funds to its cardholders. And you don't need a broker to buy.

In a rather gutsy move, the big financial services giant that owns Shearson Lehman Hutton and IDS, both of which sell so-called "load" funds via investment brokers, are selling nine "low load" funds through the mail.

You can charge the enrollment fee to your AMEX card, but not the amount you plan to invest. The big question is, to paraphrase their infamous advertising slogan, "Should you leave home without investing in one or more American Express mutual funds?"

Depends. First, if you do a lot of your own homework and don't rely on your broker to make your investment decisions, this could be a convenient way to invest. On the other hand, there are hundreds of no-load funds that give you the convenience of calling your own shots via a toll-free 800 line but charge absolutely no commission.

The new American Express funds charge a 2 percent sales commission even though there is no broker involved. Still, that is no larceny because more and more no-load funds are charging low to medium loads ranging from 2 percent to 4 percent.

The new fund family will not be levying the 12b.1 charge, at least for the first two years. This is a little-known charge investors pay to help the promoter offset advertising and promotional costs.

According to Jonathan Linen, president of American Express Direct Marketing Group, "The prospectus we filed with the securities and exchange commissions says we can charge a 12b.1 fee, but not for the first two years." AMEX also charges a $50 fee to open an account, an assessment not usually imposed by mutual fund management companies. Portfolio management fees at one-half of 1 percent and scaling downward are very reasonable.

Still the funds offer a broad choice of alternative investments. There are two money-market funds, one for investors who don't mind taxable income and one for investors who want tax-free income. There are four different bond funds — one that buys tax-free municipal bonds with long-term maturities, another for corporate bond investors, a third for people who want long-term U.S. government bond investors, and a fourth for bonds with intermediate maturities.

The three stock-based mutual funds include a growth fund, a so-called "value" fund, which finds and invests in companies with low-price earning ratios (a technique favored by savvy stock market investors), and a fund that invests in shares of foreign companies. In the last year, international stocks have registered strong gains.

Dillards profits up 10.5 percent

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Dillard's Department Stores Inc. said Thursday that its earnings rose 10.5 percent in the first quarter this year.

For the first quarter, Dillard's after-tax profit totaled $16,018,000, or 50 cents per share, on revenue of $517,382,000. That compared with earnings of $14,502,000, or 45 cents per share, on revenue of $416,727,000 in the first quarter of 1987.

A high school graduate, Mrs. Silvertooth attended business school in Germany for one year.

Still she had little practical business experience when she started her operation eight years ago.

"It's been hard for me as a woman. I've been tired and discouraged and wondered what I was working so hard for.

"Many days I've worked 16 to 18 hours. My hands were so numb from squeezing out cookies so long. I still average working 12 to 14 hours a day. I work six days and rest on the 7th day — doing my business books."

WHEN HER catering business was just blossoming, she and her daughter would sell parties, seminars and luncheons for prices prices of $3.50 to $4 a plate, barely breaking even, in order to gain the name recognition and repeat business.

Last Christmas her staff catered the Central Power and Light Co.'s employees' party for more than 850 people. Recently she won a small job to feed 45 people at a fashion show luncheon for $45 a head.

CHAMBER NOTES

Window of opportunity opens for Japan trade

Editor's Note: Mr. Yasuo Hori, consul general of Japan, at Houston will be in Midland Wednesday to provide a special briefing on Japanese investment in Texas and trade opportunities for the Midland area.

By JOHN FOWLER

Trade relations between the U.S. and Japan have been strained in recent years as our trade deficit with that country continues to mount. Yet those very conditions may offer a window of opportunity for West Texas.

With a U.S. trade shortfall with Japan climbing toward $60 billion, several factors have combined which may help America regain lost ground and create new jobs in the process.

Aided by the declining value of the dollar against the yen and other currencies, U.S. manufacturers are more price competitive than the early '80s. No longer is the U.S. a high labor cost location compared to other industrialized nations. Improved technology, aggressive marketing, and low inflation, coupled with expanding world markets, have caused exports to surge in many industries.

Meanwhile, the realities of U.S. polities are not lost on the Japanese, Western Europe , and other export countries to whom North America represents the world's largest market. Fear of protectionist legislation and increasing trade restrictions has stimulated new investment in U.S. plants by foreign companies.

Today, over 3,000 Japanese companies — and thousands more from Canada and Western Europe — are producing manufactured goods in the U.S. And while most of these operations were created to sell to the U.S. market, many are now exporting to other countries — even their own.

This foreign investment has created jobs for hundreds of thousands of Americans, stimulating local economic growth in the cities where they operate and in many instances, bringing new management and production techniques to lagging industries.

Two major opportunities present themselves today to Texas communities. First, opportunities for export of manufactured goods, technology, and services are greater than they have been in several years. Small to medium-sized manufacturers can expand their markets and extend the life of their products by exporting to overseas markets. Second, direct foreign investment in manufacturing will continue to grow over the next few years. Texas already has been a major beneficiary of the Japanese move to U.S. production, with a large number of plants in Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, and other cities. Texas is regarded by many foreign companies as a favorable place to do business, due primarily to its right-to-work law, absence of a unitary tax, and the strong work ethic of its people.

Competition for foreign investment is increasing. At least 35 states, four port authorities, and two U.S. territories have established offices in Japan to help attract Japanese investment. Other cities and states have created liaison offices in Canada and Western European countries. Texas is not among them.

Like everyone else, Japanese companies want to be wanted. A survey was conducted for the Japanese "to determine whether any resistance or animosity has been shown to Japanese companies settling into an American community, and whether a state truly welcomes Japanese investment and Japanese employees." It found "relatively no problem," and that most communities "welcomed them with open arms," and have been very pleased with the economic boost.

The study envisions "a continuous flow of Japanese companies into the U.S. Their ultimate manufacturing complexes here will serve the world markets, including their own in Japan."

Midland is in an excellent position to exploit these new opportunities in a global economy. The new U.S. Customs Port of Entry, and the pending Foreign Trade Zone, will enable local companies to more easily compete in world trade. Foreign ownership of manufacturing began here several years ago, and other international companies have indicated an interest in this area. Major energy companies have long been players in the international scene. The challenge for local communities is to open the doors of world trade to smaller comapnies, and ot compete for new capital investment in a complex international environment.

Velcro makes sanding easy

By the Associated Press

Comedian David Letterman may have pulled off the most outrageous Velcro marriage in history when he donned a Velcro-covered suit and had himself catapulted to a Velcro-covered wall. But Jim Sandusky comes close.

Mr. Sandusky, president of NicSand Inc. in Strongsville, Ohio,has brought Velcro to the sandpaper business. Specifically, Mr. Sandusky's firm markets a patented but simple system of lining the back of sandpaper with a special fabric that clings to Velcro. The sandpaper adheres to sanding wheels and sanding blocks with Velcro surfaces.

A key to the 5-year-old firm's success has been aggressive selling of the ease the Velcro system brings to the job of sanding. "Before NicSand, sandpaper disks had to be bolted, glued or clipped to tools, but we've made sanding easy and that will expand the entire market," Mr. Sandusky said. "People don't like to sand, but our product is so easy to use that's it's idiot-proof, although I don't like that word."

Mr. Sandusky said NicSand's products are sold through 200 sales representatives and are available in about 10,000 stores nationwide. He said adding more outlets will mean a five-fold increase in sales this year over 1987, to an estimated $15 million, with sales in four years projected to climb to $40 million.

"The potential for increasing the use of sandpaper is unlimited and we could eventually be a $300-million-a-year company," Mr. Sandusky said. He currently is working on a national advertising campaign which could be launched next year to increase public awareness of NicSand's products.

Although times are sweet now, Mr. Sandusky had to go through the early trials which face most entrepreneurs. That included long hours spent in his plant filling his first big order for Black ' Decker, which bought NicSand's Velcro pads and sandpaper as attachments for the company's sanding tools.

Cellular phone business grows up

Outgrowing toy image

By CHARLES W. ROSS
Copley News Service

The cellular telephone industry has matured.

The big, quick profits are gone. And the new companies that provide the new mobile phone service have hunkered down for the long haul, trying to keep their customers happy and attract new ones on the basis of providing quality service.

As automobile owners became accustomed to having a phone available while driving, the "new-toy" novelty wore off and the phone became what it really is: a tool that improves productivity and management efficiency.

More phones were installed last year in working pickup trucks, commercial vans and government vehicles than at any time in the relatively new industry's history, but an equal number were put into passenger cars for use by busy executives.

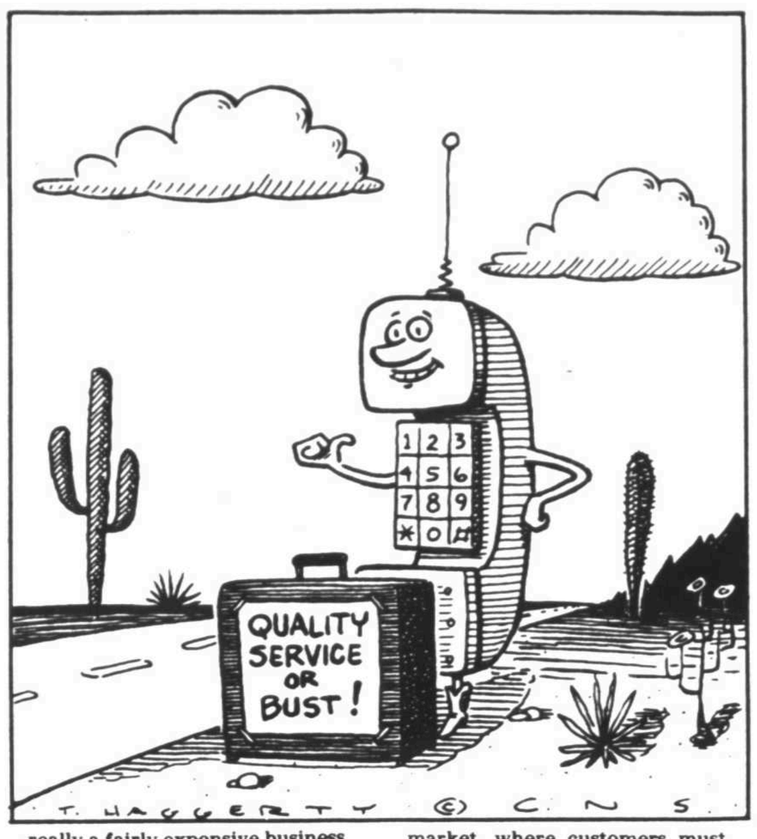

The industry installed its 1 millionth telephone last year, and all cellular firms reported good growth in customer numbers, although the rapid rate of installations has slowed.

Most companies are spending big bucks to expand their intense "downtown" radio coverage into adjacent suburban areas and also are filling in the gaps between large cities with expensive cell towers.

Minutes of use by motorists, however, have been declining as the novelty wore off, thus cutting into industry income. But this relatively minor loss was offset by income from new customers, still attracted to the idea of instant communication while moving about.

A more troubling, bigger and longer-lasting problem for the industry, however, is the high disconnect rate.

Customers are canceling after discovering that a car phone is really a fairly expensive business tool unless well-managed. Some "disconnects" are unhappy with the quality of service, or billing. A huge chunk abandon one company for another in the fiercely competitive industry, while a disturbingly large segment is simply involuntarily disconnected for not paying the phone bills, resulting in costly credit and collection problems.

"In order to realize net growth, subscribers who have terminated service must be replaced and additional subscribers must be added," said one of the nation's largest firms, PacTel Info Systems. "The sales and marketing costs of attracting a new subscriber are substantial, and there is no assurance that such costs will decline in the future."

As a result of this maturing market, where customers must be lured on the basis of quality instead of "new-toy" uniqueness, cellular firms are being jerked into marketing reality.

"We are becoming pro-active," said John DeFeo, president of U.S. West's cellular division. "We want to take care of customer problems before they occur. It is hard for a user to tell the difference between the two systems in each city, in terms of price and quality. The readily apparent difference is our attitude toward customers.

"We actually call up customers and ask them for problems. Are they having problems with call forwarding, or billing? Are they getting credit for bad calls? And we take care of them."

The head of Pacific Telesis Group's cellular operations, Jeff Hultman, says the single word that describes his goal in the changing markets is "quality," which means that "everything we touch has to be quality, and that results in customers feeling that it's easy to do business with us, because we respond to their needs."

While these giant firms worry about raising capital and growing their markets, there are hundreds of small cities where cellular is being installed for the first time, where there are fewer customers of the type that snap up the opportunity for quicker and better communication. For that reason alone, the small city stand-alone markets are less attractive, but attractive nevertheless, particularly when they are close to big cities.

And, according to the FCC and industry analysts, the hustlers and con artists are now working these smaller markets, selling machine-produced duplicate FCC license applications on exaggerated promises of big bucks to the gullible who do not understand the expertise, money and engineering necessary to start up a cellular operation.

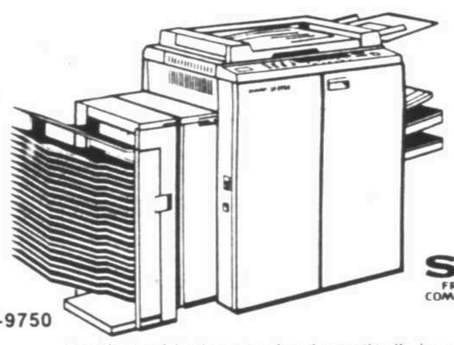

What happens if a recession hits? Most analysts believe the low end of the cellular subscriber market would instantly disappear, but the middle and higher end would show some strength on the basis of communications needs alone.

"Contractors, real estate people, police agencies and the military would continue to need the service," said an analyst.

PacTel cellular expects to increase its subscribers by at least 20 percent this year, with a total growth rate of 33 percent if its wholesaling of air time to resellers is included. It now serves more cellular subscribers than any other U.S. carrier, with 152,000 in San Diego, Los Angeles, Detroit, Sacramento, Atlanta, San Francisco and many smaller markets.

The far-smaller U.S. West, which has 38,000 customers in 14 smaller cities, says the company is in the first year of a five-year plan for the company.

Phillips provides protection

(AP) — Phillips Petroleum Co. will implement a plan to protect employees in case the company is taken over, according to news sources.

The plan, the "work force stabilization plan" announced by Chairman C.J. Silas, will be triggered by a change in control of the company and its board of directors, will provide qualified employees with severance pay and other benefits in the event of termination without cause within two years of any such takeover.

Phillips said the plan is intended to retain and motivate employees. Phillips has been mentioned frequently as a takeover target.

Silas said the plan has been under consideration for some time and is not in response to any anticipated takeover attempt. The plan was approved by the company's board of directors last week.

"Phillips has been mentioned frequently as a takeover candidate, and the board has been concerned that such speculation is affecting our ability to retain and motivate employees, and therefore how well we're able to perform for our current shareholders," Silas said.

Phillips fought off unfriendly takeover attempts in 1984 and 1985. Partly as a result of costs incurred in those battles, Phillips has reduced its workforce by nearly one-fourth since 1984.

Silas said the primary objective of the plan is "reducing the sense of insecurity among employees so they may focus their full attention and energy toward the goals and objectives of the company."

Taiwan claims U.S. cigarette makers enticing teens

By SUSAN CHIRA
N.Y. Times News Service

TAIPEI, Taiwan — The Marlboro cowboy in his white hat, cigarette dangling from his mouth, has come to town. His picture adorns kiosks and mom-and-pop stores throughout this city, next to posters of a guitar-playing, jeans-clad promoter of Winston cigarettes.

This frenetic, fast-growing nation of nearly 20 million people smoked 34 billion cigarettes last year — and for the first time, a substantial number of them were made in America, not Taiwan.

To introduce their unfamiliar brands to Taiwan, American manufacturers have essentially introduced cigarette advertising here, and that has created a furor. Government officials have accused the American companies of enticing teen-agers to take up smoking — a charge the American companies hotly deny. The government-administered operation that had monopolized the market had not advertised, although it does now.

The government agreed to allow others into the business only under pressure from Washington. In the year since stiff restrictions on foreign cigarettes were dropped, sales of American cigarettes in Taiwan have soared, generating much-needed growth for American manufacturers at a time when sales in the United States are way down and the number of antismoking laws is way up.

ACCORDING TO THE U.S. Department of Agriculture, people here bought 5.1 billion American-made cigarettes last year, ringing up sales of $119 million. In 1986, sales totaled just $4.4 million. Foreign cigarettes now hold nearly 18 percent of the market, with American cigarettes accounting for 15 percent.

Indeed, Asian sales accounted for most of the growth in American cigarette exports last year, primarily because both Taiwan and Japan dropped longstanding restrictions. According to the Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., exports of all American-made cigarettes to Asia rose 76 percent last year, resulting in $1 billion in new sales.

In Japan, which has a population of 120 million and where people smoke 300 billion cigarettes a year, imports have more than tripled in the past year. The marketure predicts that it could grow to 15 to 20 percent by 1992.

Taiwan officials say they resent American pressure to open their markets to products that endanger people's health, like cigarettes and alcohol.

"This really hurts our feelings," said Jaw Shau-kong, a legislator. "If the United States does not encourage its people to smoke, why export to Taiwan? Younger people and females are smoking a lot because of American ads. They hire young, attractive 19-year-old girls wearing short skirts to give out cigarettes free in nightclubs. It's very difficult for young boys to resist, and then it becomes a habit. It's immoral."

AMERICAN CIGARETTE PROMOTION became an issue even in recent trade talks between the United States and Taiwan. Wang Chien-shieng, Taiwan's vice minister of economic affairs, registered a strong protest.

"They go to amusement places to give out free cigarettes and gifts," he said recently. "Many schoolteachers told me that junior high school students — 12, 13 years old — are now smoking. How can cigarette companies promote cigarettes like that? It's O.K. to have them occupy the whole markets. We enjoy a $16 billion trade surplus with the United States. But those people are just like robbers. If you are a man, a human being, you won't do that."

American cigarette manufacturers vigorously deny there is anything wrong with the way they are promoting their products and say they have no plans to change their sales pitch.

They are not allowed to advertise on television or in newspapers. Nor have they pushed to do so, they say. They can advertise only through posters hung near cigarette racks or in small stores where cigarettes are sold, as well as through promotions. Cigarette manufacturers may also place 120 ads a year in magazines, each of whose circulation seldom exceeds 200,000.

BEFORE LAST YEAR, such discussion was not relevant. Foreign cigarettes accounted for less than 1 percent of the market here. Taiwan imposed strict quotas on foreign cigarettes, banned imports at the 70,000 retail outlets licensed to sell cigarettes and imposed stiff tariffs. As a result, imported cigarettes cost about 80 New Taiwan dollars a pack ($2.86 at current exchange rates), compared with 22 New Taiwan dollars (79 cents) for a pack of Taiwan-made cigarettes.

The limits on cigarette advertising in Japan are more liberal. Companies can advertise on TV there after 8:50 P.M. and are now conducting an aggressive campaign. Television advertising of cigarettes was outlawed in the United States in 1971. Cigarette packages sold in Japan and Taiwan must carry a label that, roughly translated, says, "For the sake of health, don't smoke too much" — a warning much milder than the health-warning labels mandated in the United States.

In Taiwan, some of the ads for American cigarettes feature the young and fashionable, and many manufacturers do hand out cigarettes in nightclubs. But American companies say they do so only after 9 p.m. and in clubs that are supposed to admit only those older than 38.

The companies say American cigarettes are selling well here not so much because of the advertising as because they are of better quality and taste better. American cigarettes are made of blended tobacco and have less tar than Taiwanese cigarettes, which are not blended.

SOME GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS would have people think that "they've lost 20 percent of their market not because they have an inferior product but because we're doing something insidious," said Don Nelson, director of international trade relations for Philip Morris, whose brands include Marlboro. "It's just not true," he said.

Beginning last year, Taiwan lifted its quotas on foreign cigarettes, reduced its tariffs and eased restrictions on distribution. Now, foreign cigarettes cost between $1.25 and $1.43 a pack, depending on their size. They can be sold at any retail outlet.

American manufacturers also think they have done well because they have been more aggressive in courting retailers.

TEXAS BUSINESS

Most Texas retailers expect 1988 sales increase

HOUSTON–(SWN)–An overwhelming majority of Texas retailers expect 1988 sales to exceed previous year's sales by as much as 10 percent according to a Touche Ross report on Texas retailing.

The optimism displayed by the respondents comes at a time when the same retailers predict the nation's economy as a whole will remain the same as in 1987. More than half of the respondents foresee an increase in net profits this year through better control of expenses, increased sales and better inventory management.

Questionnaires regarding retailing in Texas were sent by Touche Ross, a Big Eight accounting and consulting firm, to retailers in March. Respondents represented a broad cross section of the retail industry with 60 percent being specialty retailers. "With a 9.5 percent response rate, an exceedingly good rate for a direct mail survey, we can feel the pulse of the retailers and better understand the issues they indicate are most important," says David Edwab, director of the Touche Ross Southern Retail Services Group.

"As a result, the Touche Ross Retail Outlook shows the competitive spirit of retailers. While 50 percent of the retailers believe the competitive situation will worsen in 1988, more than 60 percent of the Houston retailers and more than 50 percent of the Dallas retailers are particularly concerned about their competition," Edwab said.

Texas retail optimism is fueled by an upward sales trend that began in October.

Over 70 percent of the retailers responding to the Touche Ross survey say they plan to increase the size of volume of their business by an average of 16 percent this year. To accomplish this, retailers plan to add new stores or remodel existing ones. Surprisingly, few retailers are considering the merger or acquisition of their competitors as a method of growth. Although approximately 11 percent are actively seeking to sell their businesses, only three percent intend to acquire competitors and only three percent plan to merge with competitors.

As expected, virtually all retailers are concerned with local economic conditions, and most are keeping a watchful eye on cash flow and pending tax legislation.

In an effort to deal with the state's current economic environment, approximately 60 percent intend to reduce inventory. Although most retailers believe staffing levels will remain the same, approximately 55 percent plan to downsize their labor force. Additionally, large retailers plan to curb corporate overhead while small retailers plan to reduce advertising and capital expenditures.

Twenty-five percent of the respondents expressed concern with the state's depressed banking industry. Over 42 percent of the Dallas/Fort Worth retailers shared concern with their local banking situation, compared with only 18 percent in Houston.

The 1920s come to life at the Museum of the Southwest Saturday when dancers, from left, June Swift, Judy Coleman, Sally Moody, Becky McClay, Theresa Thetford and James Cramer wear replicas of French designer gowns of the period in honor of the new exhibit "John Held's America: Flappers, The Jazz Age, and Beyond" for the museum's "Dizzy Decade Celebration." The dancers, standing on Ralph Webb's 1927 Model T Ford, will also be performing a free dance concert at Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Auditorium at 8 p.m. Saturday and 2 p.m. May 22.

The Roaring Twenties

Prohibition ruled. The bootleg business soared. Jazz was the music of the decade. The first talkie, "The Jazz Singer," revolutionized the film industry. Charles Lindbergh broke world records. Literary greats such as F. Scott Fitzgerald wrote novels like "The Great Gatsby."

As seen through the eyes of artist John Held Jr., the 1920s was a time of flappers, fraternity hops, football games, speakeasies, spiked-tea parties and couples necking in the rumble seat of a Stutz Bearcat.

A retrospective of Held's work, "John Held's America: Flappers, the Jazz Age and Beyond," is on view at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through June 12. The exhibition was organized under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service (SITES).

In honor of the exhibit, the museum has set aside Saturday as "Dizzy Decade Celebration." Activities are planned during the museum hours from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Between 11 and 11:30 a.m. dancers from Midland College's dance program will be wearing costumes from one of the pieces being performed during the free "Small Chamber Works Dance Concert" at MC's Allison Fine Arts Auditorium Saturday and May 22.

"The composition by Darius Milhaud is a piano duet composed in the '20s, so it has that jazzy flavor of the period," says James Cramer, choreographer for the upcoming dance concert and dance coordinator at MC. The title of the work is "Girls of Good Family."

"We have seven works on the program which show the variety of dance that the college offers — we have ballet, jazz, tap, modern, ballroom and contemporary as in the kind of club dancing you would see at Garfield's," Cramer says. "We're utilizing the students we have here and placing them in dances they are qualified to perform. We've progressed from having a few dancers augment other productions in town to being able to stage our own dance concert. This performance is a real good opportunity to come and see what the college is doing these days."

During the museum's "Dizzy Decade Celebration," local musicians and singers will be playing music from the 1920s in the afternoon.

"We'll have antique cars on the grounds all day," Marilyn Bassinger says. "The cars are from area antique car clubs. Videos of cartoons and movies from the era or relating to that era will be shown throughout the day."

Costumes and memorabilia from that time period will be in the galleries through June 12 along with the John Held exhibit, she says.

The exhibit, which focuses on the 1920s and 1930s, also includes works from early and late in Held's career. Held, an illustrator, sculptor, painter and author of eight books, was at the height of his popularity in the 1920s.

'Cats in Concert'

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

"Memory. All alone in the moonlight I can smile at the old days. I was beautiful then. I remember the time I knew what happiness was, let the memory live again..."

When "Cats in Concert" opens Thursday at Theatre Midland, the songs which made Andrew Lloyd Webber's show an international hit will rekindle the memories of those who have seen the musical "Cats."

The production is a first. Almost.

"The concert version has only been done one other time," says Darryl Knapp, musical director for Midland Community Theatre's production and the organist/choir master at The Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity.

Staging the concert version is, Knapp says, "A phenomenal scaling of a mountain because we are doing it with only 11 singers, but we have some of the finest singers I've ever had the privilege of working with, and they are certainly accomplishing that task."

The production calls for no set number of singers. Those who are singing were selected out of approximately 55 who auditioned.

"The production has no codified orchestration or written choral parts available for it yet," Knapp says. "When you do a Broadway show, they send you everything. Well, in this case, a friend of Don Bachmann's has done the ensemble arrangements, and I've done the orchestrations of it. None of the orchestrations have been released yet, so I had to do a lot of that by ear and listening."

Bachmann, who is executive director of MCT, is director for the production. The vocal arrangements are by Nancy Engelken.

"Cats in Concert" begins with a gala party Thursday, sponsored by ACT IX, MCT's auxiliary organization. Travis Michael is the ACT IX chairman for the opening night and Janie Hofer is co-chairman. Tickets to the gala are $25 per person and include a light buffet and open bar.

The production, sponsored in part by Mr. and Mrs. Jack E. Brown, the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Mrs. Jack Samples, Mr. and Mrs. Earle Craig, La Casa Verde, Starline Printers and Mr. Penguin, will also be staged at 8 p.m. Friday through Sunday and at 2:30 p.m. Sunday. Tickets are priced at $10 per person for the evening performances Friday through Sunday and at $8 for adults and $6 for children under 12 for the Sunday matinee.

For reservations to any of the productions call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111. A drawing for two round trip tickets to New York City, courtesy of American Airlines, will be held at the last performance.

Unlike the original "Cats," MCT's version will be performed in black tie, rather than cat whiskers and leotards. The stage production of "Cats" moves from song to song so there is no dialogue or acting missing, Knapp says.

Knapp feels confident that audiences will enjoy the production which is being staged minus dancing, acting, sets and costumes.

"The T.S. Eliot poems and the music are so fine that that in itself is a very enjoyable evening," he says.

Based on Thomas Stearns Eliot's "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats," the story told in song looks at the secret lives of cats. Eliot, who was born in St. Louis, Mo., in 1888 and became a British citizen in 1927, received the 1948 Nobel prize for literature. He died in 1965.

Charley takes Pride in his singing

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

"Rawhide and Rhinestones" meet at Midland College's Chaparral Center when the fifth annual American Cancer Society Roundup kicks off Saturday at 7 p.m.

Angel-kissing Charley Pride will provide the entertainment along with Fiddlin' Frenchie Burke and Borderline. A prime rib dinner will be served by the Perini Ranch Caterers. In addition, the event features games, dancing and a sealed bid auction, in which a Mercedes Benz and a Chevrolet Suburban will be sold.

Proceeds from this year's Roundup go to help support service, education and research programs of the American Cancer Society. For more information or to buy tickets to Roundup '88, call 683-6374.

Pride, who last performed at Chaparral Center in January 1987, has been told he has "the best show on the road.

"If that's so, all we try to do is make the best better," Pride said in a telephone interview.

Between 1969, when he first hit the Number One spot in the singles charts with "All I Have To Offer You (Is Me)," and 1984, when he commanded the Number One spot with "Every Heart Should Have One," he has scored more than 36 number one singles and is only a couple of Number One records away from being Billboard magazine's all-time record holder in that category.

Pride says his keen sense of competition and his desire to excel come from the values he learned in his early years as a sharecropper's son. Born and raised near Sledge, Miss., 60 miles south of Memphis, Tenn., he was the fourth of 11 children. Today, among his investments is the 119-acre farm where his father was a sharecropper.

He also traces his love of country music back to his childhood when he and his family would come in from a long day in the cotton fields and listen to the country sounds of WSM — Nashville or the WGN "Barndance" out of Chicago. This was the music he came to love the most.

Charley Pride will perform at the fifth annual American Cancer Society Roundup.

"It wasn't just a case of some guy coming into country music just to prove something or just trying to sound like he thought he should sound," Pride says. "I followed it (country music) from the ground up.

"I was a total individualist in that regard, because the other children I grew up with certainly weren't following that kind of music. But, it was just a case of my choosing, at an early age, to be what I am, through and through: a country singer. And, I didn't mind being laughed at by the other kids, which I was sometimes."

Pride bought his first guitar by the time he was 14; however, when he left home at 16, he didn't aim for a career in music. He left to embark on a professional baseball career in what was called the Negro American League.

"At that point, baseball was how I was going to find my way out of the cotton fields," Pride says. "That was how I intended to make my mark. It wasn't the Country Music Hall of Fame I was looking at back then. It was the Baseball Hall of Fame.

"I had a good curve ball and a good knuckle ball," he says, his voice taking on a nostalgic tone. "Quite a few times in All-Star games against black major league players, I managed to strike out Gene Baker and Roy Campanella; all of them but Willie Mays."

Uncle Sam took Pride out of professional baseball, and when he was discharged, he tried again. The results were disappointing.

He then found himself in Helena, Mont., working in a zinc-smelting plant by day and playing country music in local clubs at night. Helena was hardly a place someone would expect to be discovered, but that's where the late Red Sovine and Red Foley heard him sing. They encouraged him to audition in Nashville, and he eventually signed with RCA.

Since then, worldwide, Pride has earned 31 gold and four platinum albums, including one quadruple platinum. He was recently awarded the first "Golden Opal" Award in Australia for album sales in excess of 1.5 million.

In addition, Pride has been awarded three Grammys, the Country Music Association's Entertainer of the Year award and two Country Music Association Best Male Vocalist awards.

"Whatever I have done, I have always tried to do a good job at it," Pride says. "When I was a cotton picker, I was pretty good...I put an emphasis on doing a good job, no slouching around. That's been my philosophy all through life."

"His one-eyed, round-headed 'angels' were hits for Judge and similar magazines," says a brochure from SITES. "By the late 1920s, his drawings of long-legged 'flappers,' and adoring 'sheiks' were in high demand, and he produced two syndicated comic strips as well.

"With the onset of the Depression and the falling of hemlines, Held's artistic trademark rapidly became extinct. The cartoonist turned seriously to creating sculpture and works on gouache, and watercolor, and to writing fiction, including 'Grim Youth,' which offered a less cavalier look at America's young people, and 'The Flesh is Weak.' "

The exhibition, which is dedicated to the late Carl J. Weinhardt, who gave SITES the idea of the exhibit and offered invaluable assistance in developing the project, includes 70 works — about 30 watercolors and gouache paintings dating from the turn of the century through the 1940s, 25 pen-and-ink drawings from the "flapper" period, several early block prints, posters, comic strips and maps.

Held grew up in Salt Lake City, the son of two artistically gifted Mormon parents — an actress mother who loved theater and a Swiss-born father, whose varied career included working as a penman and engraver as well as performing a long stint as the city's most popular band leader.

Born in 1889, Held, before he was 10, sold his first block print to the Politz Candy Kitchen and his first drawing for $9 to a local newspaper. At the age of 15, he sold a cartoon to the old humor magazine Life. A year later, he began work at the Salt Lake City Tribune as a sports illustrator and cartoonist. There, he worked with cub reporter Harold Ross. Later, the two would collaborate on the New Yorker, Ross's brainchild.

After marrying Myrtle Jennings, society editor of the Salt Lake City Tribune in 1908, Held moved to New York City in 1910, where he secured steady work designing street-car cards and posters for Collier's Street Railway Advertising Company, says Shelley Armitage in her book, "John Held Jr. Illustrator of the Jazz Age." His wife joined him in 1912.

Mrs. Held helped him sell his work, somewhat anonymously, to Vanity Fair.

"From 1912 to 1916, Myrtle and the Babette appeared alongside the script 'Held,' " Ms. Armitage says. "Mrytle could not draw a line."

Then in early 1917, his drawings appeared in New York magazines signed by Held himself. Later that year, he toured Central America as an artist-intelligence officer with the U.S. Navy during World War I.

In 1918, his style changed to the one-eyed, round-headed "angel," prototype of the famous 1920s "flapper," says the SITES brochure.

In 1919, Held returned to New York, divorced Myrtle and married Ada "Johnny" Johnson, Ms. Armitage says.

The Helds purchased a farm in Westport-Weston, Conn., as money and commissions began to come in from different publications.

By 1927, his art was featured in Life, Judge, Smart Set, Vanity Fair, The New Yorker; he had his own syndicated comic strips, Margie and Rah Rah Rosalie, and, according to the SITES brochure, "had run a half-hearted, and losing, campaign for Congress, adopted three children, and enjoyed fame and fortune often naming his own price for drawings."

"William Randolph Hearst paid him an unbelievable sum of $2,500 a week for a feature article entitled 'Oh, Margy,' " says Elizabeth Driscoll, exhibition coordinator for SITES.

After his popularity waned, Held suffered a nervous breakdown and in 1931 went to Mexico to get a divorce, says the SITES brochure. The brochure goes on to say, Held married "Miss New Orleans" in 1932 and had a daughter before that marriage ended in divorce. Then, in 1942, he married Margaret Janes.

In 1937, he designed sets for the comedy hit "Hellzapoppin." Then, in 1940, he was artist in-residence at Harvard University, and later that year at the University of Georgia.

The 1950s were a time when Held was rediscovered. Playboy magazine's first issue carried a reprint of his "Frankie and Johnny" linocuts, the SITES brochure says.

"He was widely hailed as the chronicler of the Jazz Age, an artist of such cultural influence that his work formed part of the nation's identity," the SITES brochure says. "Indeed, in 1920s society, it sometimes became difficult to separate Held's characters from the youth who so carefully imitated his caricatures' manners and morals."

Held said of his art in a 1934 interview, "I think there's a door in the back of everybody's head that lets out the dreams, or the creative instinct, or the mild madness or whatever you want to call it that makes us want to make our livings this way, and not sensibly. For the lucky ones, that door closes at puberty; the unfortunates go on all their lives fighting with publishers or art dealers. They never grow up, and don't say Peter Pan or I'll sock you."

CATS

"It's such a good musical score, just listening to the music, every song you hear makes you smile," he says. "Every poem is about a different kind of cat. T.S. Eliot gives different names to cats, for example, the Gumbie Cat is the cat that just sits and sits and sits; Macavity is the mystery cat, the master criminal; and Gus is the theatre cat who played in his time every possible part."

Knapp says the literature and the music make "a happy marriage."

The unique thing about "Cats in Concert" is, Knapp says, "The whole musical score is done by three synthesizers — piano and synthesizer. Much of 'Cats' music was originally scored and done with synthesizers coupled with live musicians. Most audience members didn't realize they were hearing so much synthesized sound."

Putting the concert version together represents for Knapp "a wonderful opportunity and a great challenge."

He's been working on the project for about seven weeks, and the singers have been working for three weeks. The vast amount of music the singers must learn is technically demanding, he says.

"People will have absolutely no idea the amount of work it took for the singers and I to get it together; it will look easy and fun," Knapp says.

Forming the all volunteer musical ensemble are Renee Spicer, Dana Harlow, Marilyn Anders, Pamela Musgrove, Dawn Lester, Dana Cristiani, Kyle Thorpe, Donny Wright, Scooter Tilley, Scott Fleming and Dale Jenkins.

Volunteers working behind the scenes on the production include Cindy Bohannan, stage manager; Beth Carr and Tracie Sewell, assistant stage managers; Robin Portele, projectionist; Larie Nelson, follow spot chairman; and Debbie Colledge, light board operator.

Jon Clark is the sound board operator and Knapp and Kyla Carver will accompany the singers.

"Each singer is a different cat," Knapp says. "Sometimes they share, but each one has a story to tell."

Songs included in "Cats in Concert" are "Mr. Mistoffelees," "Jellicle Songs for Jellicle Cats" and "Memory."

"Cats have nine lives; the concept is that all the cats are going to the Jellicle Ball, where some cat will be chosen to get another life," Knapp says.

"This one cat, who is old and tattered, sings this memory song about the days of her youth. When she is chosen to go to the heavy-side layer, the other side with the new life, she finally sings,

"...Touch me. It's so easy to leave me all alone with the memory of my days in the sun. If you touch me you'll understand what happiness is. Look, a new day has begun."

Dog 'predicts' early summer

OCEAN CITY, N.J. (AP) — Summer will arrive a week early this year, according to a tiny hermit crab and a dachsund named Gus The Amazing Weather Dog.

The crab, named Martin Z. Mollusk, was carried to the beach under warm, sunny skies last week for the annual ritual in this Jersey resort.

Martin "predicted" that summer will arrive June 14 instead of June 21, said city spokesman Mark Soifer.

"For the 13th consecutive year, Martin has seen his shadow," Soifer said. "If it was cloudy, we would use a flashlight to make sure he saw it."

The forecast method is unabashedly similar to that of Punxsutawney Phil, the Pennsylvania groundhog used to predict when spring will arrive.

Gus The Amazing Weather Dog served as Mollusk's translator.

May's arts calendar more than full

Temple

Moons ago too numerous to count, I used to dream longingly about attending ballet, opera, theater, et al. Notice the past tense.

I've had the opportunity to do so now for the past eight years. And just so we don't get off on the wrong foot, I've enjoyed covering events, but...

What stands out in my mind at this moment in time is that I foolishly think each year there is no way to add more events to May's calendar. And each year I'm wrong.

Since the first of May, I've attended art shows, concerts, festivals and a tasting extravaganza (notice the plural use of the noun on the first two entries), along with other arts fans. I don't know about them, but my body is beginning to send out SOS signals. And yet, when I look at the calendar of events, I find we're not nearly through.

Today through May 22 the calendar looks like this:

— Celebration of the Arts Festival Days, noon to 6 p.m. today at Midland Center, Centennial Plaza and the county courthouse lawn, free admission, live entertainment, arts and crafts for sale, games and activities for children, displays, demonstrations and food booths;

— Discovery Chamber Music Series, 3 p.m. today, First United Methodist Church, Odessa and 8 p.m. Monday, Grace Presbyterian Church, free;

— Odessa Jazz Association, 22nd annual Odessa Jazz Party, Tuesday through Saturday at the Odessa Hilton, features 18 professional players from all over the United States, call 1-332-7871 for cost and seating;

— "Cats in Concert," Theatre Midland, Thursday through May 22, call 682-4111 for reservations;

— Fiesta del Arte Preview Party, Art Institute for the Permian Basin, Odessa, $15, includes Mexican buffet, call 1-368-7222;

— "Small Chamber Works Concert," members of the Dance Department at Midland College, Allison Fine Arts Auditorium, free dance concert, 8 p.m. Saturday and 2 p.m. May 22;

— Museum of the Southwest, "Dizzy Decade Celebration," in honor of the Roaring Twenties and John Held exhibit, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., Saturday 10 a.m.-5 p.m., free, call 683-2882;

— Roundup '88, American Cancer Society benefit, Chaparral Center, entertainment Charley Pride and Fiddlin' Frenchie Burke, includes dinner, call Midland Unit of the American Cancer Society, 683-6374;

— and Fiesta del Arte, Art Institute for the Permian Basin, Odessa, arts and crafts show and sale featuring works by 50 artists and craftsmen from all over the United States, food and drinks booths, admission $2, Saturday 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. and May 22 noon to 6 p.m.

And, I'm sure I've left something out.

What seems certain is the following statement: May is no time for busy work — that national pastime started by Uncle Sam and reinforced by big business. (Webster's defines busy work as work that usually appears productive or of intrinsic value but actually only keeps one occupied.)

Instead it is a month of busy.

Not busy as in foolishly or intrusively active, meddling (the type engaged in by bureaucrats); but busy as in engaged in action, occupied; being in use; full of activity, bustling.

And indeed, the arts community bustles in May, yet much of the activity is behind the scenes.

For example, the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's final pops concert of the season offered those who attended the opportunity to spend a relaxing evening listening to music by Rodgers and Hammerstein. Although the Holiday Inn Convention Center was filled to capacity, who sitting in the audience that night thought of the time and effort spent staging the event (besides of course those who worked on it)?

In writing this I've come to the conclusion it's unkind to complain about too many events being staged in May, when so many have done so much to ensure that others have a good time. So I won't.

However, I have another concern.

Lately, I've been receiving at the office on an almost daily basis a lot of mail which pictures in full color and describes in tantalizing detail scenic travel spots. I shall have to put them quickly out of my mind. After all, I'm afraid to dream longingly about them. Enough is enough.

TV shows — it's all in their names

By KATHRYN BAKER

NEW YORK (AP) — So you're a television producer and you want to get a show on the air. And once you get that show on the air, you want it to stay on the air.

What do you do? Hire the best talent in Hollywood? Butter up network executives who can put you on after "Cosby"? Hire a detective agency to locate Nielsen families?

Nope. Throw out all those theories about Nielsen samples and demographics and time periods and counter-programming.

In the prime-time game, it's all in the name.

The right kind of punctuation will sell a show. Just look at CBS. Put an ampersand in the title, and it's a go: "Kate & Allie," "Eisenhower & Lutz," "Cagney & Lacey," &, of course, "Simon & Simon." "The Law and Harry McGraw" was canceled precisely because it had no ampersand.

This, of course, does not explain "Beauty and the Beast," but, hey, a prediction: by the third season, they'll open a private detective agency and call it "Beauty & Beast," or maybe just "B &B."

CBS is also partial to commas. They make shows sound more intelligent: "Murder (comma) She Wrote," "Magnum (comma) P.I." You know these people didn't just drop off a dangling participle or something.

Those daring ABC executives eschew such mundane punctuation as commas and periods and go more for such exotic symbols as question marks, colons, quotations within quotations, e.e. cummings-style lower-case and even exclamation points: "Who's the Boss?" "thirtysomething," "Spenser: For Hire," "The 'Slap' Maxwell Story," "Sledge Hammer!" "Dolly!"

To get a news show into prime time, it must have a number in the title, which explains why "Our World" didn't make it, though a fictional show called "A Different World" did. (That may have something to do with one being opposite "Cosby" and the other following it.)

Note "60 Minutes," "48 Hours," "West 57th" and "20/20," which also has the distinction of being the only network slash show. Numbers did not help "1986," but that was because it was doomed to be out of date within the year.

NBC doesn't care for oddball punctuation, despite having once had one of the pioneers in oddball punctuation, "The A-Team," and settling for one all-capitals show this season, "ALF," which stands for "Alien Life Form." NBC also has one all-numbers show, "227," a street address. NBC goes in more for mainstream catch-phrases: "Facts of Life," "Family Ties," "Amen," "Cheers," "A Year in the Life," "Day by Day."

NBC also likes short titles, which may explain some executive consternation about "The Days and Nights of Molly Dodd." Many words, yes, but at least there's no punctuation.

Another way to help your show with any network: give it a one-word title — "MacGyver," "Newhart," "ALF," "Moonlighting," "thirtysomething," "Wiseguy," "Matlock," "Hunter," "Hooperman," "Dynasty," "The Equalizer" (the "the" doesn't count), "Cheers," "Ohara," "Hunter" and "Amen."

Talk show hosts have long since learned this lesson: "Donahue," "Oprah," "Geraldo." Even "The Tonight Show" and "Late Night" are more often referred to simply as "Carson" and "Letterman."

Who can say that "Once a Hero," the first show canceled last fall, wouldn't have been a smash hit if it was called simply "Hero"? How about "The Oldest Rookie" as "Rookie" — Top 10 show, no doubt about it. Who's to say "Tour of Duty" wouldn't have beaten "The Cosby Show" (always trimmed to the more familiar "Cosby") if it had been called simply, say, "War"?

Of course, there are exceptions: "Valerie" became "Valerie's Family" and still did OK. "Downtown," "Wizard" and "Starman" didn't make it despite catchy, one-word titles.

Surely CBS' "Leg Work" would have been a hit without the space. Two-word titles are acceptable, but only for cop shows: "Miami Vice," "Crime Story," "Houston Knights." Not private eye shows, which must have one- or three-word titles: "Hunter," "The Equalizer" (the "the" doesn't count), "Beverly Hills Buntz," "Spenser: For Hire."

NBC would never have had ratings problems with "J.J. Starbuck" if they dropped the darn initials. All right, all right, so there's "L.A. Law."

Some shows will be hits no matter what they're called. "A Different World" could have been called "The Show After Cosby," or, in keeping with short, simple titles, "Show," and it would still be No. 2.

It's just a theory.

'Salsa' all dancing, no plot

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

"Salsa," the movie which celebrates the Latin dance style of the same name, is like a cross between "Dirty Dancing" and an extended music video — long on the visuals and short on plot. It stars the charismatic Robby Rosa, a four year veteran of Menudo (the band from Puerto Rico composed of young men aged 13 to 18). Rosa plays Rico, a chauvinistic dancer who works as a garage mechanic by day and is a "salseto" (salsa dancer) by night. His only goal in life — other than being cruelly overprotective of his younger sister — is to win the dance contest at the Los Angeles club La Luna and the prize of a free trip to Puerto Rico.

The film opens with a dance number reminiscent of the "Greased Lightning" number in "Grease." It is inspired, as are many of the dance numbers, thanks to the choreography of Kenny Ortega, who choreographed "Dirty Dancing."

The minimal plot is about all the women who keep throwing themselves at Rico, who looks like a Hispanic version of Michael Jackson, and Rico's attempts to keep anyone else from looking at his sister. The "plot" is revealed only through bare bones of dialogue. In fact, there is more speech on MTV between songs than there is between dance numbers in "Salsa."

But it is the dance numbers and the highly fashionable salsa apparel which are most appealing in "Salsa." Even more appealing for teen-agers is teen heart throb Rosa. When one of the characters says, "This isn't the Rico show!" he's wrong. It's obvious the film is the Rico/Rosa show from the moment Rosa does an impromptu dance (nearly nude) while singing his version of "Blue Suede Shoes."

The lack of plot didn't seem to concern most of the pre-teen audience. In fact, several girls age 10-12 said they loved the dance numbers and would recommend the film to friends. The most surprising thing is that the film — which is geared to the pre-teen audience — has so many sexually suggestive scenes for a PG. The fact that this didn't receive a PG-13 rating indicates that standards are becoming increasingly more lax.

But neither the sex content nor the plot are allowed to get in the way of the dancing, which is what "Salsa" is about. However, instead of being a hot and saucy salsa, this "salsa" is more like the mild variety of chile.

"Salsa," rated PG, has some heavy sexual innuendo and brief nudity and is deserving of a higher rating. It is playing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

Stunts best part of 'Shakedown'

Action fans will love "Shakedown," a "Beverly Hills Cop" wannabe, starring Peter "RoboCop" Weller. The film is packed with stunts, car chases and derring-do thanks to the orchestrations of writer-director James Glickenhaus, whose chief claim to fame is the earlier action-oriented "Exterminator."

But despite the action, the film tends to drag quite a bit during the first half. It opens with a confrontation between a plain clothes officer and a drug pusher in Central Park. The officer is slain, and it's up to the courts to decide whether he was shot down honestly in the line of duty or dishonestly while posing as a vigilante on the take.

Enter Weller as Roland Dalton, a legal aid attorney with a penchant for loud ties, Jimmy Hendrix, and breakfast shakes made from instant coffee, milk, orange juice and eggs. Dalton also has a nagging, but extremely wealthy fiance, Gail Feinberger (Blanche Baker), who whines that he doesn't "wear the suits that Daddy bought." Ms. Baker, last seen as the bride-to-be who overdoses on muscle relaxant in "Sixteen Candles," portrays an airhead in "Shakedown.

To add to Dalton's troubles, an old flame, Susan Cantrell (Patricia Charbonneau), happens to be the assistant district attorney on the case. Susan urges Dalton not to give up his 14 years of legal aid and forsake his values by taking Feinberger's offer of a job with his Wall Street law firm. Some of Susan's persuasive tactics are rather torrid (if you get my drift).

The other star of "Shakedown" is Sam Elliott, who plays an undercover cop named Richie Marks who has taken to the streets as one of the homeless and prefers it to his married home life. When Dalton scouts him out and tells him to get home or his wife will pack up his things and throw him out, Marks says, "See what you have to look forward to, Counselor?"

First seen waking up in a sleazy 24-hour movie theater on 42nd Street (with the film on the screen appropriately featuring a shoot-'em-up between machine gun toting ski jumpers), Mark appears to be just another derelict. But he soon establishes himself as an efficient officer and becomes Dalton's partner in hunting down the villains.

Elliott fits his role like a glove and Weller demonstrates that his charm in "RoboCop" was no fluke. The dialogue tends to be aggressively heavy on the hackneyed ("You don't exactly look like chopped liver yourself," "Is this gonna be some kind of female territorial doo-wop?" and Dalton's line to the jury, "I'm not representing Snow White. All seven dwarves couldn't match his record on a weekend in Singapore").

Richard Brooks, as the drug dealer Dalton is assigned to, does the best job of acting in the film, even though he is seen all too briefly.

But the acting takes a back seat to the stunts, including airplane hopping and runaway rollercoasters. Despite its effort, "Shakedown" does not have the fine tuning nor camaraderie of "Lethal Weapon." And a credit for "music composed, arranged and realized," seems excessive. But most fans of the action genre won't be disappointed.

"Shakedown," rated R for sex and violence, is playing at North Park Cinemas.

VAN to host annual spring party

Visual Aid's Newsmobile, an organization that does volunteer work with the blind and physically handicapped citizens of Midland, will hold its annual spring party for clients, volunteers and special friends Monday.

The annual event is held outdoors at VAN headquarters, 2908 W. Ohio Ave., weather permitting.

The theme of the party this year is "Frontier Days" and western decorations will be used throughout the yard. Many of the volunteer hostesses plan to be dressed in western attire.

Transportation will be provided for those elderly and disabled clients among the guests.

VAN was organized by Mayme Kroenlein Martin in 1973, and its volunteers call on nursing home and house-bound clients who are blind, visually impaired or otherwise handicapped. They provide small services for those who have no family to help them, and all are remembered with cards on their birthdays.

VAN is not an agency of United Way and receives no funds from any level of government, but is funded entirely by contributions from local individuals and businesses.

MC dance department to give program

From Staff Reports

Members of the Dance Department at Midland College will present a "Small Chamber Works Dance Concert" in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium at 8 p.m. Saturday and at 2 p.m. May 22. No admission will be charged.

The seven-piece program includes a variety of dance styles from neoclassical and modern ballet to contemporary, jazz and ballroom dancing.

"We have something to please everyone and a few surprises as well," says James Cramer, concert coordinator and choreographer. Cramer said the program reflects the growing versatility within the dance curriculum at MC.

The evening begins with the premiere performance of "Annsong," a modern ballet danced to music by Bohuslav Martinu, with original choreography by Cramer. The work's second movement is performed as a sensual pas de deux featuring guest artist Mary Beth Budd.

Miss Budd is resident choreographer for Music Dance USA, a touring musical-theater company based in New York and Florida.

She trained at the Atlantic Foundation for the Performing Arts, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., and has toured with the Florida-based dance company Dance Alive! throughout the Southeast and Midwest. More recently, she performed with the Metropolitan Opera Ballet in "Turandot" at Lincoln Center.

Second on the program is "Contact," an upbeat contemporary duet featuring dance student Theresa Thetford as a "woman of the eighties," performing with Cramer to Whitley Houston's "Contact Sport."

Ballroom dancing, particularly the Mambo, is in style again, due in part to the popular appeal of movies such as "Dirty Dancing." Ballroom dance instructor Ellen Gonzales offers her interpretation of the Mambo, performed with Cramer to music from "Dirty Dancing."

The program then moves into theatrical dance, as "Girls of Good Family" from the early 1920s step out in their finery for a social evening. The dance is performed to Milhaud's "Scaramouche."

Style and pace change again as Cramer dances the "Daybreak Express," an improvisational tap solo to the music of Duke Ellington.

"Ferefee," a neo-classical ballet performed to music by Igor Stravinsky, is the evening's final selection. Featured dancers in addition to Miss Budd, are Judy Coleman, Andrea Comola, Cramer, Becky McClay, Sally Moody and Kathy Pugmire.

Strange as it might seem, finesses are not an easy subject for a bridge writer. A few days ago, we discussed a hand where the winning line was to avoid having to take a finesse. Today, the road to Eldorado lies in taking a finesse in a suit where you have no loser!

North-South were using transfer bids in response to no trump openings. Thus, North's two diamond response showed a heart suit, and his two spade rebid confirmed game-going values and suggested interest in slam. Since South held a maximum no trump with filling cards in spades, he cue-bid his club ace, and North needed no further urging to go for slam.

Wisely, West decided that he did not want to lead from any of his honors, so he chose a trump lead. That dissuaded declarer from even thinking about a finesse in the suit, and he was delighted to find the queen of trumps dropping on the second round.

It might seem that declarer could now afford to take finesses in both spades and clubs for his slam. If either were to succeed, a 75 percent chance, 12 tricks were there for the asking. However, declarer found a sure-trick line. At trick three he led a low diamond from dummy, intending simply to cover any card that East produced.

When East followed low, declarer inserted his eight. West won the trick cheaply enough with the 10, but he was well and truly endplayed. Whichever suit he returned would give declarer an extra trick in that suit: a diamond would allow three discards from dummy; a heart or a club would resolve declarer's problem in the suit led, and he would get sufficient discards from dummy on the ace-king of diamonds to take care of the other losers in the side suits.

Las Vegas, N.M., to celebrate Rails & Trails Days

LAS VEGAS, N.M. — As Rails & Trails Days, June 3-5 approaches, activity mounts in Las Vegas, N.M.

The three-day event-filled celebration honors the coming of the Santa Fe Trail, the railroad and cattle trails to this small northern New Mexico community. Again this year, the festivities center in the old railroad roundhouse, built to repair steam locomotives.

The popular train ride takes place that Friday afternoon. Passengers catch the one o'clock train to Lamy, and have a leisurely bus ride back to Las Vegas.

A new addition to the festivities this year is a melodrama. "Lilly, the Felon's Daughter" plays June 3 and 4.

The working cowboy rodeo plans on 15 teams competing in branding, cutting, penning and other ranching activities.

"These local teams go all out to prove which ranch has the best teams," says a news release from Rails & Trails Days.

"Visit Las Vegas, and take in fiddle contests, horseshoe tournament, barbecue, quilt show, and have lots of fun at a small town heritage celebration," the release said.

Contact the Las Vegas-San Miguel Chamber of Commerce, P.O. Box 148, Las Vegas, N.M. for more information.

20th century authors' photographs on display

From Staff Reports

HOUSTON — Photographers and Authors: Portraits of Twentieth-Century Writers from the Carleton College Collection opens today at The Museum of Fine Arts, Houston.

This exhibition, on view through July 10, includes 44 photographs of such literary giants as Albert Camus, William Faulkner, Langston Hughes, Aldous Huxley, D.H. Lawrence, Gabriel Garcia Marquez, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Eugene O'Neill, Bernard Shaw, and Virginia Wolf.

These portraits were taken by some of the world's most distinguished photographers including Richard Avedon, Henri Cartier-Bresson, Annie Liebovitz, Man Ray, Edward Steichen, and Edward Weston.

Each portrait in the exhibition represents a collaboration between photographer and author. Many of the subjects and artists were friends and had great influence on each other's lives and work.

For example, the American photographer Man Ray was at the center of a network of creative people. Berenice Abbot and Bill Brandt studied in his studio and Aldous Huxley, Jean Cocteau, and other authors often gathered there.

Alvin Langdon Coburn's first photographic exhibition in London was introduced by the author Bernard Shaw, a photographer himself.

The first edition of Hart Crane's "The Bridge" was illustrated by photographer Walker Evans.

From the turn of the century through the 1930s, many of these artistic interactions took place in London and Paris. After World War II the primary focus of modern artistic activity shifted to New York, and, secondarily, to Hollywood. "Photographers and Authors" includes European, Mexican, Latin American, and American artists, both native and expatriated.

The photographers in the exhibition portrayed twentieth-century authors in one of four ways. They photographed just the face, either frontally, in three-quarter view, or in profile; they created studio portraits by posing the writer formally in his studio or outdoors; they captured the writer as if in conversation with the viewer; or they placed him in an environment which served as a metaphor for his work or role.

Virtually all the photographs in "Photographers and Authors" are formal, public portraits, and in this way function differently from casual snapshots. They are meant to be reproduced in publications, displayed in exhibitions, and seen by the world at large. These official portraits also present the sitter (the author) as occupying a distinguished office: he is laureate, thinker, and spokesman for his age.

"Photographers and Authors: Portraits of Twentieth-Century Writers" from the Carleton College Collection was assembled for Carleton College, Northfield, Minnesota, by Raphael and Jane Bernstein, and Ann Tucker, Gus and Lyndall Wortham, Curator of Photography at the Houston museum and is accompanied by a fully-illustrated catalogue with an essay by Maria Morris Hambourg. The exhibition is circulated by the Art Museum Association of America, and funded by Raphael and Jane Bernstein.

Paintings by American artists at museum

From Staff Reports

An exhibition featuring 46 paintings, watercolors and drawings by American artists is on view at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through May 29.

"A Select View: American Paintings from the Columbus Museum" is composed of works from the Columbus, Ga., museum's permanent collection and reflects close to 100 years of American painting represented by landscape, still life and figure works dating from 1858 to 1966.

Works by landscape artists John Frederick Kensett, Albert Bierstadt and Ernest Lawson are included as are still life paintings by John Frederick Peto and Emil Carlson. Figure painting artists include Frank Duveneck, Robert Henri, Richard Miller and Regional Marsh.

Jean Hagman, director of the Museum of the Southwest, designed the exhibition to be shown in galleries one and two of the south wing. Doric columns flanking the walls create a traditional atmosphere and the lighting heightens the focus on canvas. American art of the 19th and 20th centuries is Ms. Hagman's field of special interest.

Gallery Three, adjoining the exhibition galleries, is an activity room designed for exploring six basic elements of art and for testing visual skills to increase the enjoyment of seeing the artists' work. Children and adults are invited to use the gallery. Sixth graders will start their tours of "A Select View" in this gallery.

Museums which have shown "A Select View" report that "there is something for everyone" and that it has been popular with viewers, says a release from the Museum of the Southwest.

The exhibition is traveling under management of Smith Kramer Fine Art Services of Kansas City while the Columbus Museum builds a new museum faculty. A fully illustrated catalog is available.

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. No admission is charged.

Discovery Chamber Music Series will end

The Discovery Chamber Music Series will present its Grand Finale Concert of the 1987-88 season today in Odessa and Monday in Midland.

"The non-profit series was founded to provide the (Midland-Odessa) symphony musicians with another opportunity to perform, to provide chamber music for the area and to allow the students of the musicians a chance to hear them perform in a more intimate setting," says a news release from the DCMS.

The closing concert will feature the Symphonietta for Winds by van Otterloo, along with two chamber music masterpieces, Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 by Bach and "The Soldier's Tale" by Stravinsky. The concert will be conducted by Dr. Robert Winslow, director of bands at North Texas State University.

The Odessa concert will be held at 3 p.m. today at First United Methodist Church, 415 N. Lee St. The Midland performance is scheduled for 8 p.m. Monday at Grace Presbyterian Church, 2801 N. Garfield St.

The public is invited to attend these free concerts. For more information call 699-0242.

Tourists dazzled by Egytian ruins

By MARGO HAMMOND
Copley News Service

Tourists just can't seem to stay away from Egypt. Egypt, in fact, may well have been the country that invented tourism. As early as 1600 B.C., travelers were chiseling graffiti — "I, Palladius of Hermopolis...saw and was amazed " — in the underground tombs of the Valley of the Kings that by then were already nearly 1,000 years old.

The Napoleonic expedition at the end of the 18th century reawakened the West's interest in the land of the pharaohs (along with his soldiers, Napoleon brought artists and scholars who returned with drawings of half-buried temples and painted tombs published in "Descriptions de l'Egypte"). Throughout the 19th century the graffiti writers returned in full force.

Now American tourism to Egypt, which dropped drastically after the Achille Lauro incident in 1985 when a U.S. tourist was brutally murdered on a cruise ship in the Mediterranean, also is returning — cautiously, but steadily.

"In 1984, 60 percent of our business was with Americans," says Ahmed El Nahas, director of Hilton International Hotels in Egypt. "In 1985, that dropped to 20 percent, and in 1986 to 12 percent. But last year it rose back up to 30 percent, and this year, we expect even more Americans will be back."

Meanwhile, says El Nahas, European and Arabic tourists have taken up the slack, straining the available bed space in the country. Europeans, it seems are less affected by political news than Americans, and are perhaps a little stronger in geography than their Atlantic counterparts.

"Americans hear about trouble in the Middle East and they cancel their trips to Egypt — although we are hundreds of miles away from any troubled areas," laments one tour operator.

News out of Egypt, however, has been reassuring, and a recent trip by Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak to the United States went a long way in re-enforcing the country's image of a peace-loving nation.

"If the political situation remains stable, Americans just won't be able to stay away," insists Ola Leheta of the Hotel Semiramis InterContinental. Built overlooking the Nile, the Semiramis, Cairo's newest luxury hotel, has been booked solid ever since its opening earlier this year. "Everybody eventually wants to come to Egypt," she adds with confidence. "It's that simple."

She's right. A trip to Egypt has always been de rigueur for any traveler worthy of the name. "No country has so many wonders," wrote the Greek historian Herodotus back in 440 B.C. So many wonders, in fact, a visitor actually runs the risk of getting jaded. Dazzled by ruins that date back over 4,000 years, many tourists curiously begin to scoff at anything marked A.D. Whereas in any other country a 5th century Coptic Church or a 9th century mosque would be a main attraction, in Egypt these "newer" sites are woefully undervisited.

"Too many tourists to Egypt come for only a week," complains Frank Wisner, the U.S. ambassador to Egypt, who has had a lifelong love affair with the country. "Pyramids, Upper Egypt, boat, depart — and they miss some of the marvels of Cairo and Alexandria, which I love." Islamic Cairo is particularly overlooked, he points out. Wisner himself has visited such remote areas as the western desert where the Nile once ran ("it's still covered with seashells") and the Sinai.

"A smart businessman would invest in tourism in the Sinai," confides an official in the commercial sector of the American Embassy. "It's an area just waiting for a tourist boom."

Hilton International, in fact, has just opened the first luxury hotel at the edge of the great desert area at Sharm el Sheikh on the Red Sea. The hotel offers some of the world's best snorkeling and deep-sea diving as well as treks into the desert to see how the Bedouins live. Thanks to a recently built underwater tunnel and new highways, Sharm el Sheikh is now accessible by car from Cairo in five hours.

Still a first-time visitor will want to take that trip south on the Nile to Upper Egypt. Maybe it was that fifth-grade world history class — what child hasn't trembled at the thought of mummies? — but most of us when we think of Egypt, think of temples and tombs, sphinxes and pyramids.

There are dozens of tour operators offering packages to Egypt, but not all of them are created equal. Some of them try to tack a trip to Egypt on with other destinations in the Mediterranean. Others try to tell you that all you need to see are the Great Pyramids near Cairo. The really serious ones, however, will offer at least Luxor and Aswan and will provide the services of a trained Egyptologist along the way.

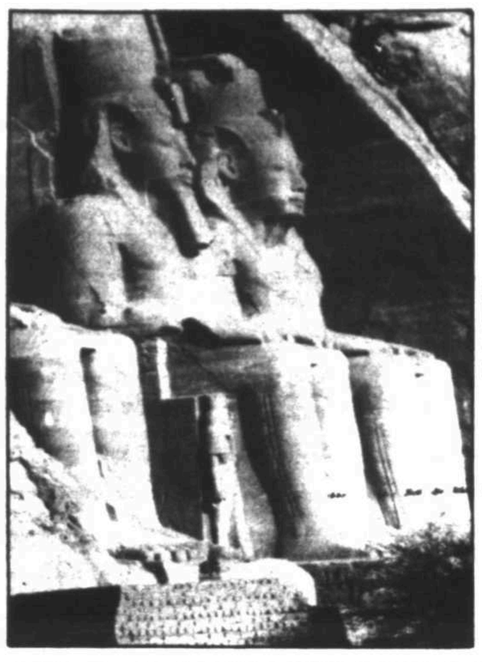

Lindblad Travel, for example, offers a 12-day trip called "A Thousand Miles Up the Nile" that starts in Sakkara with the Step Pyramid built by Zoser in 3000 B.C., and ends up in Abu Simbel to see those magnificent temples in honor of Ramses II and his wife built between 1300-1233 B.C. at the height of the pharaonic glory. In between you visit Cairo, Luxor, Abydos, Dendarah, Esna, Edfu, Kom Ombo and Aswan. (Lindblad offers trips that go in reverse but that's like eating a dinner with the dessert first.)

You can attempt to arrange the trip yourself, of course. If you choose that route,you might want to contact the American Research Center, 2, Midan Qasr Al-Dubarah, where you can hire out Ph.D. students as guides to Islamic Cairo. Only certified Egyptian guides, however, can take you to the country's archaeological sites.

For some unique accommodations, you might want to try any of the three Club Med locations in Egypt, all of which take individual travelers if they are not fully booked with groups. In Cairo the Club Med is located among the dense foliage of a former garden of a prince in the center of the city, while in Luxor and Aswan the Club has spectacular locations overlooking the Nile.

Whether you decide to take a package tour or go solo, however, I would strongly advise any first-time traveler to Egypt to stop off a day or so in Europe before arriving in Cairo to shake jet lag. Cairo, a city that most closely resembles a string of Marx Brothers movies, is best appreciated in a rested state.

Most European carriers offer special stopover deals: SwissAir, for example, has a package that allows travelers to spend a few days in Zurich or Geneva, which includes hotel accommodations and city tours.

Egypt, land of the pharaohs, is a popular place with tourists because of the ancient ruins.

Euphrates River destination of archaelogical tours

Copley News Service

Archaeological excavations in southeastern Turkey near the Euphrates River will be the destination of two in-depth tours of Turkey's rich past and present by Pacha Tours of New York.

A maximum of 20 people will depart on June 3 and again on Sept. 2 for excavations in Nemrud Dagh, the site of a funeral mound and temple of Antiochus I of Commagene, who ruled from 69 to 34 B.C.

At an elevation of 7,000 feet, huge statues with 8-foot-high heads lay toppled. The site was first excavated by the late Theresa Goell, whose brother, Kermit Goell, will conduct the tours.

In addition to the Nemrud Dagh excavations, the group will sail on the Bosphorus, visit cultural attractions, shop in bazaars and be entertained at a reception at the Museum of Anatolian Civilizations in Ankara, to which Theresa Goell left her library. The museum houses art and antiquities from the beginning of history through the classical period, representing Hittite, Hellenistic and Byzantine civilizations.

The tour is priced at $1,750 per person including breakfasts and dinners. The price does not include trans-Atlantic flight.

Pacha Tours also will offer two photographic tours for amateurs and professionals on June 21 and July 10, led by New York City photographer Maury Englander.

The nine-day tours will include day trips from Istanbul to cover the natural beauty of the country as well as ancient villages, palaces, craftsmen making cut-glass crystalware, and carpet-weaving centers unchanged after thousands of years. The photo-tour, which includes three days of leisure, is priced at $900 per person.

Pacha Tours International Inc., 20 E. 49th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 355-5141.

State arts, crafts fair dedicated to immigrants

From Staff Reports

KERRVILLE — The 1988 Texas State Arts and Crafts Fair, set for Kerrville May 28-29 and June 4-5, is dedicated to the skills of immigrants from all over the world who have brought their culture to the Lone Star State.

Brightly colored tents spread among the trees herald the renewal of an ancient custom — market days.

Skills from cultures of widely ranging times and places will be found at the TSACF, including lacemaking techniques from 19th century France and England, handmade chests painted in German folk designs, intricate patterns of waxed Russian pysanky eggs and the art of blown glass, a skill important in Italy and other European and Oriental countries.

In the International Village, demonstrators are costumed for the time and country from which their skill originated. Over fifty separate techniques will be worked.

Performing at TSACF will be Ronald Radford, internationally known flamenco guitarist, who traveled with a gypsy troupe across Spain to develop his authentic style.

Irish songs will also be performed. Using authentic instruments, the Irish group will perform May 28-29 only.

A Texas festival, however, must have Texas music, and an entire stage is devoted to it alone. Here champion cowboy yodeler Randy Erwin joins Chisholm from Dallas in a salute to heritage. Jazz and bluegrass complete the roster.

The production artists are going international, too, with theme competition winners decided by the visitors. In the booths, a special certificate honors Texas artists who have distinguished themselves by exhibit or study abroad.

Known for high quality arts and crafts throughout its 17-year history, the 1988 event promises over two hundred of Texas' finest artists showing and selling their work, says a news release from the TSACF. The official state arts event is limited to resident Texas exhibitors.

Activities for children include a petting zoo, old fashioned games, a hands-on crafts area and internationally dressed characters coming by the children's area for special programs.

For more information, contact TSACF, P.O. Box 1527, Kerrville, 78029-1527. Telephone (512) 896-5711.

'Fifth Child' starts happy, ends sadly

"The Fifth Child," by Doris Lessing. Knopf. 133 Pages. $16.95.

By PHIL THOMAS
Associated Press

A Review

Doris Lessing's "The Fifth Child" is a strange novel that begins happily and ends sadly.

Before they met, Harriet and David were social outsiders. They felt like strangers in a strange land whose inhabitants looked on their beliefs in tradition and family as quaint. Meeting by chance, recognizing at once that they were right for each other, they marry.

They buy a very large house, which they can ill-afford, in order to house the many children they plan to have as well as to entertain their wide circle of friends and family. People such as Molly and Frederick, who Lessing marvelously describes as "large and untidy, with a great deal of grey hair, wearing uncomfortable clothes that complacently despised fashion. They looked like benevolent haystacks."

Things go very well at first. Harriet and David Lovatt have four children. All are well-endowed, all are normal. Then, after a very difficult pregnancy for Harriet, the fifth child is born. "He was not a pretty baby. He did not look like a baby at all. He had a heavy-shouldered hunched look, as if he were crouching there as he lay...his eyes were focused greeny-yellow eyes, like lumps of soapstone."

Obviously, this is no normal child, this Ben, although his parents and society at large pretend he is. But as Ben grows, he becomes a malevolent presence in the once happy house. His grandmother is the first to put it in words when she suggests Ben be institutionalized, saying, "He may be normal for what he is. But he is not normal for what we are."

Even though she has grown to loathe her own child, Harriet cannot bear to leave him in an institution. She brings the boy home and in doing so destroys her world. The warm world of love now has become the cold world of hate, and Lessing has written a novel that will stick with the reader long after it has been put aside.

Township posting duck-crossing signs

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — Bethlehem Township is putting up road signs to remind motorists to be kind to their web-footed friends.

The state Department of Transportation has fashioned its first official "Duck Crossing" sign to protect a flock of mallards that have found a home along a stream running under Willow Park Road. The diamond-shaped sign features a duck's silhouette in black against a yellow background.

The sign was proposed by a young woman concerned about rising fatalities among her feathered friends.

"I was seeing a lot of them hit," said Jennifer Boerstler, 22. "Neighbors would pick up the ducks that got hit and hide them, because they know it upsets me so much."
