Nation's economists optimistic over 1982

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices climbed 3.5 percent last year, the smallest rise in 11 years and less than half the gain of 1981, the government reported today. Gasoline prices fell a record 8.6 percent.

In December alone, the Labor Department said, prices rose a minuscule 0.1 percent — markedly off from November's 0.6 percent and the smallest one-month change since prices fell 0.1 percent in September.

Economists, assessing the year's greatly improved inflation picture, point to the worldwide oil surplus, which has held down gasoline and heating oil prices; bountiful harvests; and the lingering recession, which has driven the unemployment rate to 10.8 percent, the highest since 1940.

Supporting that view, the department's own analysis said today that energy prices actually fell 0.1 percent since December 1981. In comparison, such costs had soared 14.1 percent in the preceeding 12 months.

The drop in gasoline prices was the most precipitous since the department began keeping such records in 1947. The previous record fall was 8.1 percent in 1954.

FOOD PRICES, the department added, rose a modest 2.1 percent in 1982, up only slightly from the 1.4 percent gain of 1981.

The full-year wholesale price gain was sharply under the 7.1 percent registered for all of 1981. Wholesale prices rose 11.8 percent in 1980 and 12.8 percent in 1979.

The 1982 increase was the smallest since the 3.2 percent of 1971.

Wholesale prices actually fell in four months last year, the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said. The sharpest monthly climb was a 1 percent jump in June.

For all of last year, the department said, the moderation in energy and food prices actually restrained the overall wholesale price gain for consumer goods, which, if those two areas were omitted, would have risen 5 percent.

THE DEPARTMENT gave this breakdown of specific changes in the Producer Price Index for finished goods, as the wholesale price calculation is formally known:

—Energy costs: The record drop in gasoline prices was helped by a 0.3 percent drop in December. Natural gas prices, which had soared following congressional price decontrol in 1978, surged 20.7 percent in 1982, although dipping 0.8 percent last month. Home heating oil costs were unchanged for the year despite a 0.4 percent drop in December.

—Food prices: The moderate 2.1 percent yearly gain was helped by a tiny 0.1 percent jump in December. Prices for fresh fruits tumbled 11.9 percent last year and were down 4 percent for the month of December. Vegetable prices tumbled 12 percent for the year, compared with a sharp 12 percent gain in December. Beef and veal prices fell 2.9 percent last year, including a 0.7 percent drop in December. Pork prices, however, skyrocketed 19.7 percent in 1982, although rising 1.1 percent in December. Poultry prices rose a modest 2.2 percent for the year, even though tumbling 2.7 percent last month.

—Automobile prices rose a moderate 1.9 percent last year, compared with a 1 percent increase in December. Light truck prices were up 1.8 percent for 1982 and 0.5 percent in December.

—Capital equipment costs rose 4 percent for the year and 0.6 percent last month. Those costs are for machinery and transportation equipment used by business and industry.

IN ALL, THE unadjusted Producer Price Index for finished goods stood at 285.1 in December, meaning that goods costing $10 at wholesale in 1967 would have cost $28.51 last month.

If prices rose for 12 straight months at December's rate, the yearly rise would be 0.8 percent. In reporting its inflation figures, the department bases its compounded annual rate on a more precise calculation of monthly changes than the figure it makes public for the one-month change.

Price changes that show up in the producer price measure are a good barometer of how food, energy and other commodity prices will move at the retail level. The Consumer Price Index, though, checks for a broader range of items, including housing and medical care, than does the wholesale inflation measure.

Economists are also forecasting an improved 1982 inflation rate for consumer prices, which were rising at an annual rate of 4.5 percent in the first 11 months of the year.

Such an increase for the year would be the smallest since the 3.4 percent gain of 1972, when wage and price controls were in effect.

Final 1982 figures on consumer prices will be released next Friday by the Labor Department.

In advance of today's release of year-end wholesale price figures, Edward Yardeni, chief economist at Prudential-Bache Securities Inc., predicted a smaller increase — about 3 percent — in wholesale prices in 1983.

A continuing high level of unemployment, he said, will ease pressures for big wage increases and that, in turn, will help hold down price boosts.

For the last time

Gov. Bill Clements greets Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby upon arriving for his final speech before a joint meeting of the state Legislature Thursday. Clements told legislators that he doesn't think additional taxes will be necessary during this session and, in his budget proposal, asked for salary hikes for state employees and teachers. Additional ZIP codes should update service

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

To accommodate the city's growth, enhance the efficiency of mail delivery and prepare for the impending nine-digit ZIP codes, Postal Service officials today announced changes and additions to put some "zip" back in Midland's ZIP code system.

Stan Sartain, officer in charge of Midland's Postal Service, said delivery customers north of Golf Course Road and on either side of Midkiff Road will receive new ZIP codes. Additional codes also will be established for mail boxes at several detached postal stations throughout the city.

"Not since 1963 have changes been necessary for ZIP codes in Midland and Midland County," said Sartain, who presented the renovated system at a morning news conference. "Because of the enormous growth in the number of new streets and addresses during the last 20 years, it is impossible to efficiently distribute the mail using basically two ZIP codes for residences and businesses in all of Midland County."

Sartain said the Postal Service attempted to minimize the disruptions by adding only one east-west ZIP boundary and creating only two new codes for delivery customers north of Golf Course Road.

Presently, Midland is parceled into three ZIP-code areas. Delivery customers east of Rankin Highway, north of Interstate 20 and east of Midkiff Road fall within area 79701. Those west of the line reside in area 79703. Boxes at Midland's Main post office are in area 79702.

The new system includes 12 codes, with new codes 79705 and 79707 for delivery customers and several new codes for boxes located at remote postal locations.

Craddick: Session will be tough

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland said legislators are facing "one of the toughest sessions" ever seen with regard to hold ing the line on taxes, though Gov. Bill Clements told House and Senate members Thursday there is no reason for any new taxes this session.

In his State of the State Address before the 68th Legislature, Clements said state expenditures — adjusted for price increases and population — are less this fiscal year compared to fiscal year 1979 when he was first elected.

"As I have said before, state government must cut the pattern to fit the cloth," the outgoing governor said. "We must live within our current income, and we can do that and still increase the budget by 20 percent."

"It's up to us to hold the line," Craddick said after Clements' speech. "It will probably be one of the hardest things we've ever seen."

While the Midland representative said it is possible "to get there" with no new taxes, he admitted legislators will probably be looking at some sort of tax bill.

"It's up to us to hold the line. It will probably be one of the hardest things we've ever seen."
— Rep. Tom Craddick

Clements mentioned abolishing and consolidating state agencies and reducing personnel in his address, and Craddick said that would have to be done to keep taxes down. "We've got to keep spending down," he said, reiterating the governor's belief that the budget can be increased 20 percent without tax legislation.

Craddick said Clements did a "super job" on his gubernatorial task forces set up since the end of the 1981 session and charged with studying such critical issues as water, small business, higher education and other concerns. The new Legislature will be receiving reports from each of the 15 task forces, Clements told the lawmakers.

"The reports will be accepted real well," said Craddick, congratulating Clements for being the first to get people to participate with conviction on the task forces. The groups are reponsible for getting "a lot of civilian input" and Craddick said he believes the task force program should be continued, echoing Clements' hope that the program will become a permanent feature of state government.

Sen. Bill Sims of San Angelo, saying he agreed with Clements' remarks, also believes the state should not raise any taxes prematurely. "I don't know of anyone who wants additional taxes," he said. "I thought it was a good speech."

Bingo morality may be decisive issue

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The morality of bingo may be a major issue Saturday in the county-wide election to legalize the game of chance in Midland County.

The electorate will be asked to vote for or against "Legalizing bingo games for charitable purposes as authorized by the Bingo Enabling Act for Midland County, Texas."

Though far from furious, the pro-bingo campaign apparently has been more active than any opposition against it. But if the anti-bingo stance taken by Midland's 6,000-member First Baptist Church is an indicator of opposition to bingo, the passage may not be a shoo-in.

Wednesday night at the church, approximately 1,000 Baptists voiced "very adamant opinions" against bingo, said James Nance, the church's minister of music.

"WE BELIEVE that bingo is Biblically wrong, is morally wrong and is socially wrong," Nance said Thursday. "If people are saying that they need it to raise money (for charity), there are so many other things that are so much more positive."

Proponents hold that bingo is a fun, family game which benefits the players and charities and is an innocent form of entertainment for those who choose not go to the theater, movies, symphony, video parlor or bowling.

"Our No. 1 premise is that we believe that it's gambling, and gambling in any form is wrong," Nance said of bingo. "It's unethical and immoral."

But Nance admitted that the issue might pass if voter apathy is widespread and leads to a low turn-out of voters.

"If you want evil to triumph, all it takes is for good men to do nothing," the minister said.

He said that the 13 million members of the "Southern Baptist Convention are against gambling, and bingo is a form of gambling."

BINGO CAME to the fore in Midland following a Sept. 23 bingo raid by State Comptroller Bob Bullock's "Raiders" on the Veterans of Foreign Wars' Post 7208. The "Raiders" shut down the game of about 150 players and confiscated bingo scorecards and $1,200 in cash which was bound for charity but made no arrests. The next month, the Midland County Grand Jury took no action on operators of the VFW bingo game.

But VFW Commander Jack Leonard did act. He submitted to Midland County Judge Bill Ahders the signatures of more than 3,000 voters who petitioned for a local-option election, similar to a vote to legalize the sale of alcoholic beverages, and, after enough names were certified, the Midland County Commissioners' Court set the election.

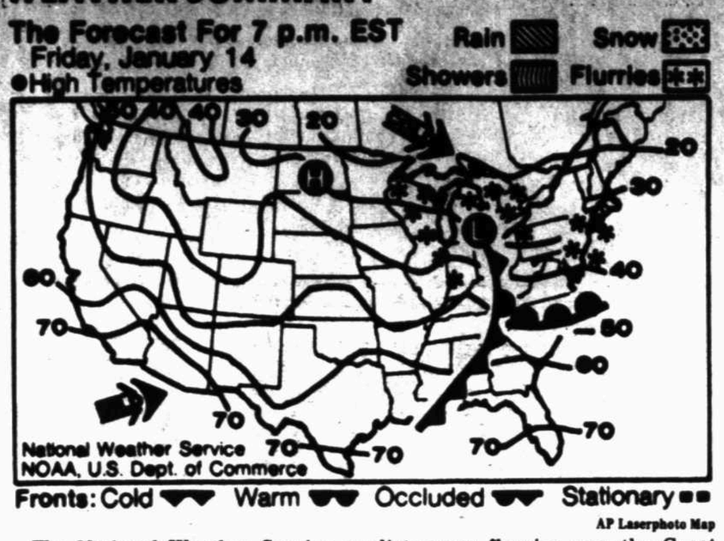

Since last January, when the Bingo Enabling Act went into effect, more than 300 Texas counties, municipalities and peace justice precincts have legalized bingo. Less than 20, including Lamesa and Dawson County, have rejected the proposition.

Under the Texas Penal Code, gambling is a Class C misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of up to $200, while gambling promotion is a felony punishable by up to a 10-year prison sentence and a $5,000 fine.

If bingo is sanctioned here, non-profit organizations such as veterans and fraternal groups, churches, medical societies, and volunteer fire departments — if Midland County had any — could obtain licenses to operate bingo. Net proceeds would go to charity, while a maximum of $2,500 could be awarded in total prizes in any "one bingo occasion; the value of a single prize would be limited to $500." In addition, the Commissioners' Court would levy a 2 percent tax on gross receipts;

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service predicts snow flurries over the Great Lakes and into Illinois and Indiana tonight. Snow flurries are also expected in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland.

Winter weather hasn't materialized

The winter weather that was expected to descend upon the Permian Basin did not make its dramatic appearance.

However, temperatures are expected to be slightly colder, with the lows tonight near 30 and the highs on Saturday climbing only near 60, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The cloudy skies and roaring winds also forecast must have had a change of mind as skies are expected to remain fair through Saturday. Winds should be light and variable tonight, increasing only to 5-10 mph Saturday.

Thursday's high of 67 missed hitting the record high of 80, set in 1957, by 13 degrees. The overnight low of 36 was 23 degrees warmer than last year's record low of 13.

Skies clear; Air cool

By The Associated Press

Clear but cooler weather moved into Texas this morning as a cold front extended from central Oklahoma into Southwest Texas, dropping temperatures into the 30s.

Early morning temperatures were in the 40s and 50s ahead of the front, and reached into the 60s in the Lower Rio Grande Valley. Temperatures statewide ranged from 31 at Amarillo to 65 at Brownsville.

The forecast called for fair skies over the North Texas. South Texas was expected to be cloudy with a chance of rain through tonight in the Rio Grande Valley.

Farmers divided over PIK

DALLAS (AP) — The American Farm Bureau Federation's adoption of President Reagan's "crop swap" program received mixed reviews from farmers at the close of the conservative organization's convention.

Federation president Robert B. Delano's prediction that the voluntary program could eliminate price-depressing surpluses within two years was not shared by some farmers.

"Even if everyone delved into the program, it is not going to salvage agricultural programs in the long run," said Cecil H. Miller Jr., one of two farmers elected directors Thursday at the close of the AFBF 64th annual meeting.

"It is a short-run solution," he said.

Delano said the program could eliminate the surpluses that have driven down commodity prices, and restore crop supply and demand to equilibrium within two years.

The program, presented by Reagan to delegates Tuesday, also would cut farmers' production costs. U.S. Agriculture Secretary John Block said the payment-in-kind proposal would remove about 23 million acres of cropland from production.

"With the information that I have, it seems that with good participation by farmers in the program, it will work," Delano said.

But Miller, a former AFBF vice president from Phoenix, Ariz., said the impact of a "crop swap" is questionable.

"I can't see a whole lot of change in prices for next year," he said. "Surpluses are a determinant of the market."

Miller, 55, said the five-day AFBF meeting has served to "highlight the frustrations of the American farmer more than any one thing we have done."

Delegates backed Wednesday the president's proposal to reduce surpluses of grain and cotton by giving farmers commodity payments in exchange for withdrawal of acreage from production.

They also approved resolutions urging a dairy price support program to align milk supplies at demand levels, and backing federal credit and disaster loan programs.

"The philosophy of the Farm Bureau has not changed, and its direction has not changed," Delano said. "We continue on an approach toward a return to the free market system."

Miller, who with his brother farms about 10,000 acres of cotton, grain sorghum and durham wheat, said the program was the best alternative to rigid government price supports.

"The crop swap program should be extremely encouraging to grain farmers," said Mackey. "It is the best thing I have seen in a long time that will reduce the tremendous surpluses we have."

Under the plan, he said, farmers would receive about 80 percent of the commodities they would have produced on land before it taken out of production.

Mackey, who raises 1,300 of grain, said farmers would be compensated for diverting croplands with surplus grain being stored in silos and bins under loan.

"The best thing about it is that farmers want a market oriented agriculture and that we need to get back to supply and demand," he said. "Once the supply gets back to normal, the program will self-destruct when the grain is used up."

Midland's Postal Service will soon add two new ZIP codes for delivery customers currently served by only two codes. The new ZIP codes areas, 79705 and 79707, lie north of Golf Course Road on either side of Midkiff Road. The Postal Service will also add new ZIP codes at several detached mail box locations. Mail officials said the move will help make delivery more efficient and accommodate the introduction of nine-digit ZIPs later this summer.

"We tried to have as few people as possible that have to change their ZIP codes," said Sartain, who said the changes should establish Midland's major ZIP code areas well into the future.

"We hope it will improve service," he said. "It will definitely keep costs down."

Sartain explained that having more, smaller ZIP code areas helps speed the task of sorting. Mail arriving from Dallas, for instance, will already be sorted into the 12 ZIP areas, easing the sorting load borne by Midland postal workers.

The nine-digit ZIP code, "ZIP plus four," will be introduced to Midland this summer, according to Sartain. He said the nine-digit system also will increase the ease of sorting mail. But because the additional four digits would be exhausted in designating delivery points inside an extremely large area, some dividing of Midland's ZIP code areas was necessary, he said.

Sartain said the ZIP code changes could eliminate the need for some clerks and should help reduce overhead costs.

He conceded that unionized postal workers may not appreciate the changes, because some workers may lose their jobs to increased efficiency and mechanization.

"They're aware of it. They don't necessarily like it," said Sartain. "They understand that in order for the Postal Service to continue to survive, we can't afford the luxury of each piece of mail being handled by each clerk."

Hoot Gibson, local president of the National Association of Letter Carriers, said the ZIP changes will have little effect on mail carriers' duties.

But Gibson noted that many postal clerks may lose their jobs to sorting machines that "read" nine-digit ZIP codes. Gibson said customers also will face the confusion — and in some cases the great expense — of changing letterheads and addresses.

Ron Bouldin, vice president of Midland's American Postal Workers Union local, said he expects ZIP code changes to eliminate jobs in some large post offices, but not in Midland. Bouldin said the new system will make mail sorting more efficient.

Pete Munoz, "ZIP plus four" coordinator for Midland, said the Postal Service is now testing optical character readers and bar code readers that will eventually incorporate bar codes into the mail sorting process.

Munoz said the streamlined procedures are especially targeted at business customers, which account for 86 percent of the Postal Service's mail volume.

The ZIP code system — both five and nine digit — is voluntary. But Sartain said "we do encourage it strongly because of the benefits involved."

He recommended that customers pondering a large printing order for stationery or envelopes should contact the post office for pertinent ZIP code information.

Sartain said the Postal Service will not return incorrectly coded mail to the sender. He said that although mail with an outdated or incorrect ZIP code may take slightly longer to deliver, it will be delivered.

Customers will be notified of the restructured ZIP codes by mail within the next six weeks. Since the new codes became effective Jan. 1, Sartain said customers may begin using the new codes at any time.

He suggested that customers needing additional information now should call 684-5801.

Paper details small paper load

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has succeeded in reducing the time Americans are spending filling out government-required paperwork. You can read about the accomplishment in an 89-page booklet, a three-page statement, or a two-page list distributed at the White House.

The White House press office held a briefing Thursday to draw attention to the anti-red tape efforts.

In achieving the reduction, the administration was complying with the Paperwork Reduction Act, passed a year before President Reagan took office.

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Almost 200 years ago, Mexican residents were chased off their lands by Indians and settlers from Texas. Thursday, their Mexican-American descendants argued in court for compensation.

U.S. District Court Judge Thomas Hogan heard arguments here Thursday on a motion by the Mexican government to dismiss a suit that would force the country to pay approximately $1 billion in land claims.

The land in question is 12 million acres in Texas south of the Nueces River and north of the Rio Grande.

The Mexican government in the 1920s filed land claims against the United States, seeking either compensation or return of the land. But a 1941 treaty between the United States and Mexico resulted in an exchange of claims between the two countries, leaving Mexico responsible for compensating the relatives.

Attorneys representing the Mexican government argued Thursday that the U.S. courts do not have jurisdiction over that country.

"The history of the case is great and colorful and exciting and irrelevant to the issue," said John Shenefield, a Washington attorney representing Mexico. "This concerns the policies of the Mexican government. This is a sensitive case."

Judge Hogan, however, conjectured that "it seems to be a debt case. I'm not sure it's a sensitive matter."

Attorneys for the Association de Reclamantes, the group who has filed the suit on behalf of the 2,000 descendants, most of whom are U.S. citizens, countered that the Foreign Sovereign Immunity Act permits American citizens to seek compensation in U.S. courts from a foreign country. The law was passed in Congress in 1976 and has never been tested in the courts.

Russell B. Hall, an attorney representing the descendants, noted that the Mexican government promised in 1941 that it would settle the claims.

"We've waited for 42 years," said Hall. "I argue that there is some reasonable doubt."

Judge Hogan said he would probably issue a decision in two to three weeks.

Morality coming to fore in county bingo election

Burns Center and special projects of Lions Clubs. Last year, Leonard noted, the VFW gave $2,000 to the hospital and donated $1,350 in food baskets to Midland's needy. The $1,200 which Bullock's "Raiders" confiscated last September was bound for the burn center. "They got $1,200 of our money, and they promised to give it back," Leonard said.

Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church, which held bingo twice weekly until last year, has not instituted an active pro-bingo campaign, said the church's pastor, the Rev. Jim Foelker.

"I just hope that the interest in people will be enough and that they will get out to vote," he said. "I'm totally indifferent to it (bingo), but if they (parishioners) want it, we'll provide a place for it. They enjoy it."

Across town at St. Ann's Catholic Church, the Rev. Frank Beazley said the church was "not campaigning for it." Traditionally, the church has sponsored bingo only once a year, at its annual St. Ann's Family Fair each autumn.

"I'm encouraging people to vote for it, although we don't have it" except as part of the two-day fair. "It's something the people enjoy," he said.
the Comptroller would monitor games.

BINGO PROPONENTS are advertising via radio, television and newpapers to encourage Midland County's almost 43,000 voters to vote "yes" for bingo. "It seems like it's going pretty good," the VFW's Leonard said. "We haven't heard of any opposition yet...I have lots of confidence it'll pass."

Leonard said the VFW post had used bingo proceeds to benefit the West Texas Boys' Ranch, West Texas Rehabilitation Center, the Scottish Rite Crippled Children's Hospital, Shriners

Fireworks flying in Chicago mayoral race

CHICAGO (AP) — They're fighting over the birthday bash, railing about a rapid transit line and shooting sparks about fireworks. It's election time again, and nothing is too silly to be part of the bare-knuckles battle.

Mayor Jane M. Byrne, locked in a three-way Democratic primary, is trying to hold together her ruptured party and fend off the most aggressive effort ever to elect Chicago's first black mayor.

Challenging her are Cook County State's Attorney Richard M. Daley, 40, whose father's one-man rule dominated the city for a generation, and Rep. Harold Washington, a fiery 60-year-old lawmaker who made an unsuccessful mayoral bid in 1977 and is now hoping to mobilize more than a half-million black voters.

Though Democrats have wrestled over the spoils before, this race is novel because every candidate has a good shot at grabbing, or in the mayor's case preserving, the power and patronage of City Hall.

"For the first time, we're going to have a real race," says Washington campaign organizer Renault Robinson, referring to the Feb. 22 primary. The victor will face a Republican, probably former state Rep. Bernard Epton, on April 12.

"NOBODY IS SURE who the (Democratic primary) winner is going to be," says Milton Rakove, a political science professor at the University of Illinois-Chicago.

Indeed, Rakove says the last time that happened was more than 25 years ago when an ambitious politico named Richard J. Daley deftly manuevered his way into Chicago's top job.

"This is the first time since 1955 where there's been a primary situation where (the committeemen) have to make some choice," Rakove says.

This year, Mrs. Byrne, 48, is the darling of the Democrats with party backing, an overflowing war chest and a politician's penchant to use the perks of her office.

Last month, the Byrne administration asked the federal government for more money to finish part of a rapid transit line that would extend to O'Hare International Airport and be a boon to commuters from the city's Northwest Side. The Urban Mass Transportation Adminstration has not acted on Mrs. Byrne's request.

More sparks flew on New Year's Eve when the mayor, using public funds, sponsored a fireworks extravaganza.

AND A FEW days after New Year's, the mayor announced a temporary jobs program for 3,800 workers, some of whom will be in snow removal jobs. Daley and Washington said it was just a public relations trick.

The seven deaths from cyanide-laced Tylenol even entered the campaign after a report that Mrs. Byrne sent Christmas cards to people who turned in Tylenol products following a city ban.

Daley said Mrs. Byrne was exploiting tragedy. Washington called it "ghoulish." The mayor has refused comment on the incident.

She's been quite vocal, however, in the campaign, portraying herself as a leader who, despite some stormy times, has rescued the city from the brink of financial disaster.

"Her campaign is based on 'Forgive me for those early years because I've overcome those problems,'" says Don Rose, a political strategist who masterminded the mayor's 1979 campaign.

Though Democrats have wrestled over the spoils before, this race is novel because every candidate has a good shot at grabbing...the power and patronage of City Hall.

Daley is not about to accept Mrs. Byrne's apologies. He claims the 1983 Jane Byrne is the same leader who appointed four police chiefs, four comptrollers and four budget directors in three years.

Daley, making a conscious effort not to trade on his father's name, has emphasized his record as state's attorney and as a former state senator who championed reform of nursing home and mental health facilities. He has even embraced independent Democrats dissatisfied with the Byrne administation.

ON THE OTHER hand, Washington claims there's "not much difference between Daley and Byrne," says Robinson. "They both represent a continuation of machine-dominated politics and government by back-room bargaining."

Blacks, who make up about 40 percent of the population, "have never been represented by the machine in any kind of equitable sense," says Robinson. "The only way we're going to get it is through a black mayor."

Washington, however, carries the stigma of serving a 30-day sentence for failing to file income tax returns for four years.

Mrs. Byrne has been trying to defuse increasing black resentment caused by some of her appointments.

Though the mayor says "you can't undo segregation or bad feelings in 3½ years," she says she's made inroads.

Still, the mayor faces a party with divided loyalties.

"The organization is split right down the center," says County Board President George Dunne, who was ousted as chief of the county Democratic Organization and replaced by a Byrne ally.

"The organization is trapped," he said. "They always has one guy to back. Now the white committemen had to choose between Daley and Byrne. If they don't support Byrne, she'll cut their throats. If they do, and she loses, then what? Most are hedging their bets."

Sheriff has unorthodox way of getting jurors

JOLIETTE, Quebec (AP) — The sheriff sent out a posse, but many residents in this town of 13,000 made a quick getaway after a judge tried a no-excuses way to fill a jury box for a murder trial.

Judge Jean-Guy Boilard of Quebec Superior Court told Sheriff Jeanne Matte to round up 100 candidates at random after an initial pool of 225 candidates produced only 11 jurors.

But many people heard news reports that jury duty could involve a six-week separation from family and jobs, so they quickly scurried for cover, officials said.

"It's not going too well," Matte said before completing his roundup. "My feet are frozen, the people are afraid and they are hiding."

The sheriff was accompanied by four police officers who put prospective jurors on a school bus to be taken to court.

After the first bus was unloaded, the sheriff looked around the streets in this city 30 miles north of Montreal, saying: "It's a real ghost town now."

More candidates were pressed into service when they were rounded up at a suburban shopping center.

Senator wants lawmakers to be required to vote from their seats

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress' most senior member, Sen. Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va., who has served since 1932, also had some objections to way the lawmakers have been conducting their business.

"At the proper time I will reintroduce a Senate rules change to require senators to vote from their desks," Randolph said. "Our desks are intended to be used as we transact our business in this chamber."

Senators, who are often away from the chamber when a roll call begins, customarily cast their votes from the aisles as they arrive and catch the eye of the presiding officer.

Only on special occasions, such as the vote on the Panama Canal Treaty, are they summoned to their regular places in advance of the vote.

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., did not comment on Randolph's proposal except to thank him and say the veteran West Virginian "has often insisted in the past that the Senate comport itself appropriately to the importance of its undertaking."

Curious neighbors gather around the house, second from right, where seven members of an unidentified religious cult had held Partrolman Robert S. Hester captive since Tuesday night. The siege ended Thursday when a police tactical squad stormed the house after it was determined Hester was already dead.

Memphis police criticize actions

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Some angry police officers say their department moved too slowly to rescue a colleague who was tortured and beaten to death by seven religious fanatics killed in a shootout when police finally attacked.

"They let him die," said one patrolman, who asked that his name not be used. "It's like being on the microphone...screaming for help and nobody comes. They let him die. That's just the bottom line."

Police used tear gas and automatic weapons Thursday morning to storm the house where Patrolman Robert S. Hester had been held hostage since Tuesday night.

The seven members of an unnamed religious cult were all black and authorities said their leader believed police were agents of the devil. A civil rights leader charged later that racism may have played a part in their deaths.

Police Director John Holt said a tactical team held off storming the house because "it was believed that a pistol was being held to the officer's head and entry could not be gained without meaning certain death to the officer."

Police fired on the people inside the house only after being fired upon, Holt said.

A police tactical unit rushed the small house in north Memphis about 30 hours after Hester, 34, was taken hostage. The seven men inside, ages 18 to 49, died after a brief shootout, but Hester was already dead.

Some officers, who asked for anonymity, complained Holt was too slow to order the assault.

"If someone calls for help — a civilian or a woman screaming for help — the TACT squad could have busted in there," one officer said. "He was screaming for help."

Another officer said the tactical squad wanted to attack early in the siege, but was overruled by high-ranking police officials.

"If these people with the proper training had been left in control Hester would have come out alive," the officer said.

Ray Maples, president of the 1,100-member Memphis Police Association, had at first said police "waited far too long." But after talking with police officials, Maples said he had "shot off his mouth" without knowing all the circumstances.

"Hindsight is a lot better than foresight," Maples said. "We know they (the captors) didn't intend to come out alive and didn't intend to let officer Hester come out alive."

A local official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asked the U.S. Justice Department to investigate the killing of the blacks inside.

"It had to be stopped, I realize that, but I don't think all the lives that are gone had to go," said Maxine Smith, executive secretary of the Memphis NAACP branch. "I can't help but think that racism had it's part in it...I would think a well-trained police unit could have captured the standoffs without killing them all."

Hester's captors were identified as Lindberg Sanders, 49, a former mental patient and leader of the sect; Sanders' son Larnell, 26; David Jordan, 29; Cassell Harris, 21; Michael Colemen, 18; Earl Thomas, 20; and Andrew Houston, 18.

Death sentence overturned

ATLANTA (AP) — A death sentence has been overturned for a convicted killer who twice asked to be executed, after a judge found a prosecutor's remark to be "highly improper."

Jack Howard Potts had received two death sentences, one for a 1975 murder conviction, another for kidnapping.

U.S. District Court Judge Charles A. Moye Jr. overturned both death sentences, but upheld the murder conviction. Moye is to be resentenced in the killing.

Jack Potts

In a 30-page ruling filed Jan. 7 and disclosed Thursday, Moye said that the prosecutor's reading of excerpts from an old capital case — including the quote, "We have too much of this mercy" — during the sentencing phase of the trial was "highly improper."

Moye also said the jury in the abduction trial had found Potts guilty only of kidnapping, not the capital felony of kidnapping with bodily injury. Potts is to be retried on that count.

Potts, 38, was convicted of kidnapping in Cobb County and murder in Forsyth County in the March 1975 shooting death of 24-year-old Roswell mechanic Michael Priest, a "good Samaritan" who gave Potts a ride after Potts told him he had been in an accident.

"If anybody deserved the death penalty, he did," said Forsyth County District Attorney Rafe Banks III.

Death penalty specialist Millard Farmer of Atlanta, who represented Potts, praised Moye.

"I think that's all he could have done," Farmer said. "They were blatant constitutional violations, and he had the courage to address them."

Banks would not say whether he would seek the death penalty against Potts again.

Robert Stubbs, Georgia's executive assistant attorney general, said the state made no immediate decision on whether to appeal the judge's order.

Paula Putney, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Offender Rehabilitation, said Thursday that Potts was still on Death Row at the Georgia Diagnostic and Classification Center near Jackson.

"We can't do anything until we get the paperwork on him, and sometimes it's months until that happens," she said.

AudioVideo
1982
Audio Retailer of the Year
Electronic Service Center

In recognition of outstanding achievement in sales performance, customer service, and professionalism in the conduct of business during the past year, as verified by AVI's annual national survey among leading manufacturers of Hi-Fi equipment.

ELECTRONIC SERVICE CENTER
WINS "Audio Retailer of the Year" AWARD

Electronic Service Center has been notified that they were the recipient of the coveted "Audio Retailer of the Year" award. This is a distinguished award and would have been an honorable achievement had it of been just for the West Texas area, but the AVI survey is conducted nationwide.

The ground rules for the 1982 Retailers of the Year start with sending ballots to manufacturers and reps who are asked to submit the names of dealers they felt met the standards for Retailer of the Year honors. While sales volume is not a criterion, voters are requested to make recommendations on the basis of the store's strength in the areas of service and management. The service aspects are covered under headings such as "knowledgeable sales force, consumer education and customer service", while under the management umbrella fall "financial stability, sales growth and advertising/promotion."

Winners are elected by the votes of more than 325 manufacturers and more than 1,100 representatives. Retailers of the Year were selected from about 500 dealers across the United States, and from these 500, Electronic Service Center was voted in the top twenty-three.

Audio Video International notified Electronic Service Center of their top award with a certificate that reads as follows:

"Audio Video International proudly presents its 1982 Audio Retailer of the Year to Electronic Service Center, Odessa/Midland, Texas. In recognition of outstanding achievement in sales performance, customer service, and professionalism in the conduct of business during the past year, as verified by AVI's annual national survey among leading manufacturers of hi-fi equipment."

Mr. Milt Thornton, president of Electronic Service Center, expressed his gratitude to staff and customers that made such an award possible.

Midland and Odessa have the right to be proud of a home grown business , achievement such as this, because it's not often a business with roots in West Texas gets nationwide recognition.

Mr. Milt Thornton, president of Electronic Service Center, began his business in 1959. Since that time, his customer services have expanded and as they did, so did sales performances.
When Mr. Thornton reflects on the growth of Electronic Service Center, with stores in Midland and Odessa, he credits the professionalism of his staff and the good folks of West Texas.

New taxes may hurt standard of living

By KINGSBURY SMITH
National Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — It is becoming clear that substantial new increases in federal and state taxes loom ahead for the average taxpayer in the mid-eighties, if not before.

Coupled with cutbacks in federal and state spending on public service, the virtual certainty of new taxes portends a decline in living standards, especially for the middle class.

The only bright spot at the moment is that President Reagan's 10 percent tax cut scheduled to become effective July 1 appears likely to hold.

There will be efforts in Congress to eliminate, defer or limit it to lower income families, but maintaining the full 10 percent cut is likely to be the president's price for agreeing to a contingency tax increase program that would start in calendar year 1985 if the economy has not improved sufficiently to bring the federal deficit below the $100 billion mark.

THERE IS serious doubt among administration economists and members of the new Congress that it will be possible to get the deficit below that figure by the end of next year.

President Reagan has said there will be "horrendous" deficits for "several years." He has also said the budget cannot be cut enough to balance it. While he doesn't believe taxes can be raised enough to balance the budget, he now apparently realizes that if the economy does not recover sufficiently to avert projected $200 billion to $300 billion deficits, taxes will have to be increased simply to reduce the gap.

Until this week, the president kept insisting he would not agree to any new tax increases to reduce the deficit. He told Hearst Newspapers executives and editors last month that "the only thing that is going to bring down those deficits is restoring the economy."

His economic advisers and Republican leaders in Congress have come to the conclusion it is highly unlikely the economy can be restored without further tax increases in one form or another.

Last week six of the president's chief economic advisers met secretly at a catered dinner in the Treasury Department's dining room to discuss what should be done about the soaring federal deficit. The conclusion was that in addition to cutting back sharply the proposed increase in defense spending, a contingency plan must be adopted to raise revenues through new taxes if the president's recovery program has not brought deficit projections below the $100 billion mark by 1985. On Jan. 10 the president reluctantly authorized the economic advisers to draft a contingency plan for tax increases for fiscal year 1986, which starts Oct. 1, 1985.

AMONG THE possible federal tax increases now being talked about within the administration and Congress are the following:

— Limiting or eliminating deductions for state and local taxes and for interest on comsumer debt, except for cars and homes. One proposal would place a ceiling on non-mortgage interest deductions of $2,000 on a joint return and $1,000 on a single return.

— Taxing employer-paid medical insurance premiums above a certain level and reducing the $50,000 level above which employer-paid life insurance premiums are presently subject to income tax as compensation. The Congressional Joint Committee on Taxation has estimated that taxing employer contributions in excess of $150 a month for each family would raise $9.7 billion in 1986 and $12.3 billion in 1987.

— Subjecting Social Security retirement and other benefits to federal income taxes if the individual has a substantial income from other sources.

— Repealing the tax indexing scheduled for 1985. Indexing is intended to stop inflation from causing bracket increase.

In addition to the widespread feeling in Washington that increased taxes are inevitable to reduce the deficit, there is growing sentiment in Congress and among some of the administration's economic advisers for a freeze on government spending, including defense, for the next year or so.

Money main motivator behind author's success

The author of 230 novels, mostly historical romances and steamy love stories, Sellers is motivated by a simple passion: to sell more books.

"If that sounds mercenary, it sure as hell is," says the 60-year-old Shubuta, Miss., native.

"I know people say, 'You write for nothing but money.' No, I write to be heard, but nobody's going to hear me if they don't read my books."

A large, strong-bodied man with graying hair and a weatherbeaten face, Sellers looks more at home outdoors on his 60-acre southern Oregon ranch where he lives with his wife, Mary, than inside his dark and cluttered office.

For 27 years, Sellers has penned tales of lust, tragedy, greed and happiness. He now writes only if a publisher has agreed to buy the completed book. His latest advance, for an account of three generations of prostitutes in Virginia City, Nev., was $85,000.

His novels have appeared under 94 names, both female and male, including his own.

As Robert Crane, he wrote seven suspense thrillers about the adventures of a fictional Sergeant Corbin during the Korean War. As Lee Raintree, he wrote the novel "Dallas" to capitalize on the popularity of the television series of the same name.

Sellers began his career in fiction by writing "hairy-chested shoot-'em-ups" for men's magazines, he said in an interview last week. From there, he moved into "soft" pornography — books with titles like "The Business of Wife Swapping" and "Alcoholic Nympho Ward." Sellers says the books contained lots of description, but no four-letter words.

"I can look back and improve on any of them. But I'm not ashamed of anything I wrote," he said. "If there was a choice between sticking up a grocery store and (not) eating, I'd stick up a grocery store. I had a family to feed."

For the past six years, Sellers has taught that philosophy to would-be writers who sign up for his class at Rogue Community College in nearby Grants Pass.

"I tell them, 'If you want to be heard, you have to write what people are reading,'" he said.

"I like poetry. But (Rod) McKuen is the only rich poet. In most cases, you can't give it away, let alone sell it. I tell them, if you want to write poetry, get out of my class, we can use the chairs. But if you want to put poetry in your writing, then you're off and running."

His message pays off, he says. Several of his students have published novels, some receiving advances ranging from $750 to $40,000, Sellers said.

People ought to stop telling jokes about their neighbors

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — "Let there be peace on earth," one of the new Post-Vatican II folk hymns sung in both Catholic and Protestant churches, fascinates me every time I hear it.

To begin with, the music is scored for waltz time, and it's strange to hear a three-quarter beat emanating from a choir loft. You can close your eyes when the organ strikes up and think you're at a roller skating rink.

Mostly, I like the lyrics: "Let there be peace on earth, and let it begin with me."

But lately I've been thinking: let it begin with Iowa or Minnesota, or New Hampshire and Massachusetts, or with a kinder attitude toward Philadelphia and Louisiana Cajuns.

We'll never have peace on earth as long as people keep making fun of their neighbors. New Hampshire has got to give up calling its neighbor Taxachusetts, and Massachusetts had best forget that old saw about New Hampshire being the ideal location for maple syrup because at the state Capitol in Concord the sap is always running. The Boston Globe and the Manchester Union Leader have been trading insults for decades.

My friend Larry Green, writing in the Los Angeles Times, reports that a full-scale joke war has erupted between Iowa and Minnesota. There never will be peace in the Midwest until that radio station in St. Paul desists from telling its listeners that the University of Iowa library has shut down because someone stole the book, or until Iowans refrain from fighting back by pointing out that Minnesotans drink less Kool Aid than folks in other states because they can't figure out how to get two quarts of water into that little paper envelope.

Not too long ago, Mike Royko, the eminent droll in Chicago journalism, declared Indiana a superfluous entity and suggested that the Argentines recover from their failure in the Falkland Islands by invading Indianapolis; or India-no-place as it is called around the Loop. I visited the city recently and found it a rather pleasant place. Folks there told me the Chicago Symphony is always welcome on tour, because it's nice to see people from Chicago arriving in town with violin cases that actually contain violins.

I always pity poor Philadelphia because it is made fun of by people far away in Hollywood and Las Vegas and doesn't even have to depend on neighbors for insults. Stand-up comics say when you ask for a wake-up call in a Philly hotel, the bellhop slips a calendar under your door. And the City of Brotherly Love never has recovered from the legendary W.C. Fields tombstone inscription: "On the whole, I'd rather be in Philadelphia."

Mulligan's Stew

When I joined The Associated Press down in Baton Rouge, an engineering safety consultant named Justin Wilson began a whole new career in show business specializing in Cajun jokes, told in the authentic patois. In his bayou yarns, alligators always emerged with a slightly higher IQ than the registered voters. Justin became a much in demand banquet speaker across the nation and sold thousands of Cajun joke books and record albums.

I recall one about two drunks crawling out of a roadhouse near Bayou LaTech and "dem fellows start walking on de tracks of the Sodden Pacific railway..."

"I don't mine these stairs so much," one says, "but dem low han'rail is givin' me de devil."

In the Protestant sections of Ulster, you hear a lot of IRA jokes, like what do you do if an IRA man throws a pin at you? Run like Hell, is the answer, because he's got a grenade in his mouth.

Across the border in the Republic, where they are convinced all IRA jokes are propagated by MI-4, the British intelligence agency, as a weapon of psychological warfare, they retaliate by telling jokes about the royal family. During the royal wedding, playwright Hugh Leonard, who brought "Da" to Broadway a few seasons ago, wrote in the Irish Times that Prince Charles going up the aisle of St. Paul's with "those famous jug ears looked like a Land-Rover with the doors open."

Norwegians warm themselves up during the long bitter winter by telling knee slappers about the Finns and Swedes. They say the Finnish national dance is a knife fight, and the only thing dumber than a dumb Finn is a smart Swede. The ancient Babylonians were believed to have said the same thing about the Syrians. Aussies, the butt of New Zealand jokes, make fun of Tasmanians.

When Pope John Paul II visited his native Poland a year after his accession to the Throne of Peter, I was amused to learn that the Poles tried to forget their daily miseries by telling endless jokes about the occupying Russians.

I remember a university professor in convulsions telling me about the driver of a Russian police prowl car who asked his partner if the flashing red light on the roof was working.

"Yes, it's on," the other Russian replied. "No it's off. It's on. Off. On. I don't think it's working at all."

It was several moments before the professor got control of himself, and he took off his glasses to wipe the tears of mirth from his eyes.

As the echoing laughter discloses, peace is not just around the corner on the banks of the Vistula.

For one of my New Year's resolutions, I have pledged to give up telling New Jersey jokes, unless anyone has heard any good ones lately.

Weed still in tobacco products

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A swamp weed called deer tongue that contains a chemical banned in food products may still be used in American tobacco products, The Florida Times-Union reported earlier this week.

The weed, characterized by a long, purple-tinted leaf shaped like a deer tongue, lends a vanilla flavor to tobacco because of a substance called coumarin.

Evidence that tobacco companies are using the flavor additive, which grows in the swamps of north Florida and south Georgia, is based on statements by deer tongue suppliers and sources in the tobacco industry, the Times-Union said.

Use of coumarin in tobacco products has not been banned, the newspaper said.

In 1954, the U.S Food and Drug Administration banned coumarin in foodstuffs in the United States because tests showed it harmed the liver. West Germany banned the substance totally at one time, but eased restrictions in 1981 after tests showed it was not as dangerous as had been thought.

The newspaper said U.S. Department of Agriculture tests conducted in 1973 and 1978 showed significant amounts of coumarin in tobacco smoke, but tests in 1982 showed only slight amounts.

Spokesmen for the tobacco industry said they consider use of additives a trade secret. The federal government does not know what goes into tobacco products sold in the United States, although it is trying to find out.

The Times-Union conducted a three-month investigation with Mother Jones magazine and found that as much as 1 million pounds of deer tongue a year was being marketed.

Officials of major firms that process deer tongue for tobacco products say cigarette manufacturers are their only customers, the newspaper said.

"The only real use is in tobacco," said Kenneth Wilcox of Wilcox Drug Co. in Boone, N.C., a supplier of natural products for use in tobacco, medicines, cosmetics and other items.

"As far as I know, every one of them (tobacco companies) uses deer tongue," said Tommy May, a deer tongue supplier from Brunswick, Ga.

"We really do consider flavor enhancing to be a trade secret and we prefer not to discuss that area at all," said Robert J. Ruckeyser, public affairs director for American Brands Inc., parent company of the American Tobacco Co.

The newspaper said an official with U.S. Tobacco Co., a leading maker of snuff and pipe tobacco, said his firm annually buys about 12,000 pounds of deer tongue. The official asked that his identity not be revealed, the newspaper said.

In 1980, then-Surgeon General Julius Richmond launched an effort to see a list of cigarette additives from the six major manufacturers.

Murder charges dropped

RICHMOND (AP) — Four capital murder charges against a Mexican national were dropped after he pleaded guilty to four counts of kidnapping in the abduction of a group of Salvadorans.

Jorge Alfredo Munoz Rodriguez, 24, was sentenced to 20 years in prison Thursday after he entered the plea as part of a agreement with the Fort Bend County district attorney's office, officials said.

State District Judge Charles Dickerson sentenced Rodriguez to four 20-year prison sentences to run concurrently.

Authorities alleged Rodriguez was part of a ring that smuggled illegal aliens into the Houston area for a fee. They allegedly demanded a higher fee for the aliens' safe release and then killed several of the aliens when the fee was not paid, prosecutors said.

Magnetic heart implant unveiled

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A noiseless mechanical heart pump that can be implanted in the body and give a patient total mobility to lead a normal life was unveiled earlier this week at a Veterans Administration Hospital.

But scientists from the University of South Florida Medical College said human implants are seven to 10 years away, and the magnetic heart must still be tested on animals.

Since September 1981, they have been working under a Veterans Administration grant.

"We felt it was timely to bring attention to the work being done here," Kovacs said. The scientists said the device can be implanted in a patient with a failing heart so the person can undergo normal activity without being hooked to any external equipment, as is required by the artificial heart implanted in Barney Clark at the University of Utah.

"It duplicates what the human heart does for the normal level of activity," Yarnoz said. "It is noiseless. There are no moving mechanical parts. It is a magnetic engine with a direct energy transfer system."

The device can function with or without the patient's natural heart, the scientists said.

The device, weighing less than 2 pounds, would be implanted in the abdomen, and batteries would be worn around the waist. If the heart is beating, the pump would synchronize to it. If the heart stands still, the pump would take over automatically.

A small 30-minute safety battery would be implanted in the chest area to take over when the person is changing the main battery pack, which needs daily recharging.

The heart pump works like a magnet, converting power into pulsating rhythms that force the diaphragm to open and close, pumping blood through the veins and arteries.

There are times when declarer will help you defend. If he is reluctant to adopt a certain course, it is probably to your advantage to try to force him to do so.

East's one no trump response had just enough preemptive value to keep North-South from getting to their best spot. This hand is from a duplicate tournament, and that accounts for West's close double. A score of 200 is the magic number at duplicate, and that was what West was trying to achieve.

West led the king of clubs and East started an echo with the nine. West continued with the ace of clubs and another club to East's queen. Instead of ruffing, declarer chose to sluff a diamond. That aroused East's suspicions.

With a relatively good diamond suit sitting in dummy, why would declarer choose to sluff a potential winner? The only answer was that declarer did not want to ruff because, if he ruffed, he might lose trump control. If declarer was afraid of that, then it had to be right to play a forcing game.

So at trick four East shifted to the ace of diamonds. Now declarer had to ruff, and the defenders were about to gain control. Declarer led the king of trumps. West won the ace and forced declarer with a club. Now declarer and West were down to the same length in trumps. West won the next trump with the queen and led his last club. Declarer was forced to ruff again, and West's long trump was now promoted to the setting trick.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Your horoscope

Saturday, January 15, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: The late Aristotle Onassis, slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King, Jr. and industrialist Pierre Samuel DuPont were born on this date. And celebrating this birthday with you are actor Lloyd Bridges, drummer extraordinaire Gene Krupa and actresses Maria Schell and Margaret O'Brien. A very rewarding year lies ahead, but you must be careful to keep your guard up at the office. Some of the people you work with may be devious. See that they do not take advantage of your kindness and generosity. Romance becomes far more satisfying. Some people find unemployment a blessing in disguise.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): When helping others, do not overlook the needs of your own family. A phone call changes all of your weekend plans. Love at first sight is possible. Children respond better when treated as equals.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A surprise party gets out of hand when twice as many people show up as were invited. Stop comparing a current love with a former flame. A reconciliation is successful.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A special vacation becomes affordable. Your attire plays an important role in the way you are perceived by new friends. Hidden pleasures will get you into trouble unless you are more discreet.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An intellectual approach to dating will turn out to be a big mistake. An absence makes the heart grow fonder. You get double trouble when twins ask you out.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may not realize what burning the candle at both ends is doing to your health. Are you really having that much fun? Romance can be somewhat disappointing now.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Stop being so systematic in everything you do. A family vacation plan that was rejected last winter has strong support now. Travel stimulates romance. Learn to accept compliments graciously.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Success comes easily for those who do their best today. Have faith in yourself and family members will follow your lead. Parents give their blessing to a relationship not of their choosing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Either avoid an old flame or be prepared for a battle with your current love. Newly divorced or widowed individuals should force themselves back into the social swim as soon as possible.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may not like to set specific goals, but it would certainly help you clarify your aims. Tension will grow unless you come up with financial solutions. Think bold!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Put family needs first today. You are luckiest when you surround yourself with loyal individuals. Bad breaks disappear. Make a point of socializing with those who can help your business.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Contests are lucky for you this weekend. You will feel better if you get some exercise. Be bold about approaching someone who can help advance your mate or child's career goals.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Parents may help you buy that new home if you reveal just where things stand. Take greater pains with your appearance. Travel is too rich for your pocketbook right now.

GEORGE B. IRISH, PRESIDENT AND PUBLISHER
JIM SERVATIUS, EDITOR

Mrs. Bush's 'home' visit

It was a pleasant experience — as it always is — Thursday when Barbara Bush, wife of Vice President George Bush, came back to Midland to appear at a couple of worthwhile fund-raising events and to socialize with a number of friends and acquaintances.

We like to think — and we kind of believe — what brought Mrs. Bush back to the Tall City was more her friends and family still residing here than the fund-raising events. But we won't even attempt to detract from the fund-raisers. The fund raisers were for the Reading is Fundamental program, which is a pet project of Mrs. Bush's, and a reception for the Associated Republicans of Texas.

Mrs. Bush made a number of interesting revelations, not the least of which was that President Ronald Reagan remembers Midland for its notable Christmas in April volunteer housing repair project. Mr. Reagan recognized Midlander Bobby Trimble, one of the moving forces behind the project, last year along with three others nationwide.

There are plenty of less notable characteristics for which Midland could be remembered. The Christmas in April program leaves pleasant memories in everyone's mind about Midland, apparently, largely because the project embodies the best of human nature — people unselfishly working to make life a bit more pleasant for those less fortunate in our society.

But more than what she told Midlanders at the two events was the simple fact that Barbara Bush was "home" again for a short while. As ever she was gracious and cordial. She brought good thoughts to us again about the two men at the helm of our nation's government.

We only wish Vice President and Mrs. Bush could visit in Midland more often. It's a joy to have them here.

Waging peace again

The waning days of 1982 found peace efforts in the Middle East in a sort of holding action. They were not exactly stalemated, but they were not progressing with the velocity that characterized the period Egypt's President Anwar el-Sadat was on the scene.

These first days of the New Year find new momentum for the waging of peace between Israel and its Arab neighbors. Promising activity has arisen on several fronts, including Cairo, Washington and Jerusalem.

In Cairo the man who followed Sadat to the presidency, Hosni Mubarak, urged a speed-up in the peace process between Arabs and Israelis in accordance with proposals made by President Reagan. He said:

"If we are going to lose another year with just delivering statements without any activity so as to put the Reagan initiative into action, it will be a big loss and the problem will be more difficult to solve."

In Washington, President Reagan did his part to get peace talks off dead center by asking his special envoy, Philip Habib, to return to the Middle East for negotiations with all parties. He echoed Mubarak's frustration over the past few months by saying:

"It is a disappointment to all of us that headway has not been made. The president believes that the withdrawal of an estimated 100,000 Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian forces from Lebanon is essential and remains a top priority as we move ahead on a broader front to a workable peace in the area."

Also in Washington, administration officials said they were counting on Jordan's King Hussein to get into the act to help solve the Palestinian problem. They hoped this could happen as early as next month.

Perhaps the best omen of all was that Habib lost no time in boarding a plane for Israel. He will talk with the man who teamed with Sadat to get the peace process going in the first place, Prime Minister Menachem Begin, and other officials.

These developments do not mean that solutions will be found overnight for all the complicated problems remaining. They do mean that statesmen of good will are not only hoping that 1983 will be a more productive peacemaking year for the Middle East, but are working at a faster pace toward that end.

Another View:

Get closer to reality

The fierce quarrel over economic forecasts within the Reagan administration and the Republican Party has gone far beyond the usual technicalities. The administration's forecast having been extravagantly wrong a year ago, the economists believe that it's essential to be careful this time. But some of the politicians regard the economic forecast as a sort of statement of purpose, and vehemently attack anything less than wild optimism as a retreat from the original Reagan spirit.

The economists are right. If the White House were to come out with blue-sky projections of high growth and rapidly falling unemployment in its budget and its Economic Report at the end of the month, people would properly conclude that the administration was simply taking a vacation from reality. They would then begin to protect themselves in ways that would not help the prospect for the economy's recovery.

The forecast is the foundation on which an administration bases all its economic plans. To say merely that the Reagan administration's forecast erred a year ago is a considerable understatement. Geoffrey H. Moore, who was commissioner of labor statistics in the Nixon administration and is now at Rutgers, recently surveyed successive administrations' annual forecasts over the years. Generally, he finds, they run pretty close to the consensus among other economists outside the government — but there was one important exception. That exception was the 1982 forecast, which was far more optimistic than the consensus — and, as it turned out, even the consensus was too optimistic.

That error had important consequences. It misled the president into expecting a quick end to the recession last spring, with a strong recovery over the summer. Similarly, this month's forecast will inevitably influence the president's choices throughout the year.

The White House has now adopted a forecast that shows the real growth rate of the economy rising to about 4 percent a year by next summer and continuing at that level — a very moderate rate for the recovery from a deep recession. But it is important for the administration to show that it is not counting on high growth rates to arrive suddenly out of nowhere and that its plans will not come unraveled if that high growth does not appear on cue. Perhaps the present forecast does not seem very cheerful, but there's one thing that you can say for it. Those numbers are a good deal closer to reality than their predecessors were a year ago.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Beaujolais caper bamboozled Park Police

WASHINGTON — The telephone call to the U.S. Park Police in Washington that morning was businesslike. A security officer at the Mayflower Hotel, the dowager of the city's hostelries, asked that a police escort be provided for "a French dignitary" arriving at National Airport.

Jack Anderson

"They said there was a lot of press involved, and they were concerned for safety," recalled Lt. Ronald Miller. Security is the first priority in requests for a police escort.

Miller obligingly dispatched a motorcycle officer to escort the dignitary from the airport to the hotel. When the officer arrived at National, he found a limousine, two Mayflower employees and "a female VIP with luggage." Presumably, she was the French dignitary.

Off they roared up the parkway, across the 14th Street Bridge and into downtown Washington, the late-morning traffic giving way to the familiar sight of a police-escorted limousine. It was a few minutes before noon when they pulled up at the hotel entrance.

It was the last leg of a long journey that had begun at one minute past midnight on Nov. 15 in east central France. The VIP — described by sources as gay, soft, light and very young — had crossed the Atlantic on the Concorde, then had made the trip from Kennedy Airport to National in a chartered Learjet.

But the VIP, though undeniably French, was hardly a dignitary. It was six bottles of Beaujolais Nouveau — a tasty, popular, lighthearted table wine. It's the kind of wine a host might offer with the old line, "I think you'll be amused by its presumption."

The Park Police, of course, were not amused by the presumption of the new wine and its companion, Joy Palmer, Washington manager of International Vintage Wine Co., a division of Heublein.

The whole thing was a publicity stunt to alert American wine buyers to the fact that, as happens every year, a new Beaujolais vintage had arrived. The Mayflower and the Plaza Hotel in New York each had invited journalists and other oenologists to lunch for a sampling of the 1982 vintage.

For reasons that are important to wine lovers — or at least to press agents — each hotel wanted to be the first to decant its Beaujolais. The Plaza, whose six bottles had arrived on the same Concorde, seemed to have the edge. But the Learjet and the Park Police escort got the Mayflower guests their wine while the Plaza's was still creeping through Manhattan traffic.

Lt. Miller told my reporter Andrea Siegel, with stoic understatement, that he feels he was "taken" by the Mayflower's deceptive request for an escort. The Park Police is the only constabulary that can legally escort VIPs from the airport in Virginia across the Potomac into the District of Columbia.

They get more than 100 such escort assignments each year. It was the Park Police, for example, who escorted President Johnson's body from Andrews Air Force Base, Md., to the Capitol to lie in state. Most of the VIPs are both human and alive, but the Park Police often safeguard Very Important Parcels for the Smithsonian Institution.

The Beaujolais caper was the first time the Park Police had escorted booze, however. "And it will be the last," vowed Lt. Miller grimly.

Footnote: There was a genuine French dignitary at the Mayflower lunch: Jean-Marc Thevenin, commercial attache at the French Embassy. He made his way to the hotel unescorted.

URANIUM TO SOUTH AFRICA: The State Department has quietly circumvented longstanding U.S. foreign policy by allowing an American company to act as middleman in a deal that has sent enriched uranium to South Africa.

The Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act bars the export of nuclear material to any nation that refuses to allow international inspection of its nuclear facilities. South Africa, which does not allow such inspection, is believed to be dangerously close to production of nuclear weapons — if it has not already succeeded.

Yet Edlow International, a Washington-based brokerage firm, arranged two shipments of enriched uranium — the raw material of nuclear bombs — from the United States to South Africa through European nations. And Edlow did it with the full knowledge of the State Department.

Harry Marshall, senior deputy assistant secretary of state, admitted to Rep. Howard Wolpe, D-Mich., that he had met with Edlow officials while the deal was being made. He told Wolpe that he had neither encouraged nor discouraged Edlow's uranium transaction.

Marshall told Wolpe, who is chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Africa, that there really was little the State Department could have done to discourage Edlow's defiance of the non-proliferation law. Yet the Reagan administration didn't hesitate to lean on private American companies that wanted to sell the Soviets machinery for the natural-gas pipeline to Western Europe.

WATCH ON WASTE: To boost morale, Air Force base commanders in West Germany put only two enlisted men in dormitory units built to hold three. Unfortunately, this widespread practice also boosts the cost to the taxpayers, because there aren't enough rooms to go around. Many enlisted men and women must live off the base, with allowances of almost $1,800 a year. Government auditors estimated that at the Bitburg, Hahnz and Spangdahlem Air Force bases alone, at least 800 more personnel could be accommodated in three-man rooms now used for two. It would save about $1.3 million a year.

INSIDE REPORT:

MX folly reducing Reagan's credibility

WASHINGTON — The depth of the administration's self-inflicted wounds in the dreary saga of the MX missile was unwittingly revealed when a top presidential adviser told the National Security Council just before the first meeting of the new blue-ribbon MX panel that "our duty now is to minimize further damage to the president."

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Saving what is left of President Reagan's credibility in the administration's extraordinarily inept handling of the MX was not the given reason for the commission being appointed. The purpose was to salvage the MX, not the president.

But like so much else in an administration whose foundation seems to be cracking, the MX has become a microcosm of what ails Reagan and his men. To White House insiders, the present objective is to steer the MX commission into a unanimous pro-MX recommendation to save the president in an increasingly anti-MX Congress and with an increasingly bewildered Western alliance.

Even before the commission got down to its work in a Pentagon sanctuary, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger was being faulted by bitter grandees in Congress. Their consent will be essential if the commission's recommendations are to be accepted and Reagan's prestige saved from further damage.

After discounting for overblown congressional pride and arrogance, the bitterness is real. It threatens whatever new basing plan Reagan sends to Congress in the next two months and has two sources, one tied directly to the MX follies and the other to the new defense budget.

First, although Reagan's Jan. 3 statement appointing the MX rescue mission specifically noted the importance of "the views of Congress," leaders of the defense-oriented congressional bloc were ignored in the composition of the commission. Weinberger did not help himself on Capitol Hill by personally eliminating former defense secretary and energy secretary James Schlesinger, a specialist in nuclear defense issues who packs a political wallop with the Democrats.

Weinberger is also charged in Congress with vetoing former defense secretary Donald Rumsfeld, an ex-congressman still well regarded on the Hill. This failure to consult congressional leaders over commission membership rankled the pro-defense leaders whose good will and consent are so badly needed by Weinberger and Reagan.

Second, Weinberger on Jan. 11 agreed to an $8 billion reduction in defense spending for the new fiscal year (mainly cosmetic cuts), completely bypassing the Senate's Mr. Defense — Sen. John Tower, chairman of the Armed Services Committee. It was that imbecilic omission that provoked the usually benign Tower to lash out at Weinberger for a "squalid political approach" to the national security issue.

Such rancor on Capitol Hill compounds the president's problem with the MX that started with his ridicule of the old "racetrack" basing plan of Jimmy Carter and his defense secretary, Harold Brown. Now it is that same Harold Brown who is the key member of the MX commission.

If Brown wants to return to some modified form of the old and ridiculed "racetrack" scheme with its built-in deception, Reagan and Weinberger will bite their tongues and go along. Without Brown's approval, there is no conceivable way that Reagan could persuade Congress to accept the MX in any way, shape or form.

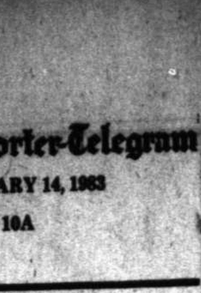

Hence the irony. If further political damage to Ronald Reagan in the strange case of the MX missile is to be "minimized," the minimizer will not be Cap Weinberger or any other Reagan factotum. It will be Harold Brown, transformed overnight by the political folly of the Reagan administration from vilified to beatified.

CHARLEY REESE

Don't believe white-wash of pope plot

Shortly after Pope John Paul II was shot, I wrote in this column the Soviet Union ordered his assassination. There were two clues even then. The gunman was a leftist, not a rightist, as the Communist press tried to paint him. And the Soviet Union had a motive.

Charley Reese

The Soviets were planning to deal with Solidarity, the independent Polish trade union which was threatening a rebellion in Poland. They wanted to nullify the Catholic Church and its Polish-born pope. Now, the Italian police, by linking the killer to the Bulgarians who are KGB errand boys, have established all the proof it will ever be possible to establish that the Soviets did indeed try to kill the pope.

The present leader of the Soviet Union, Yuri Andropov, must have given the orders. He was head of the KGB at the time.

What is interesting, however, are the reactions to the evidence of Soviet complicity. These reactions tell you all you need to know about what's wrong with the Western leaders.

To begin with, there was no enthusiasm at all, except for the Italians, to pursue the case beyond putting the trigger man in jail. In fact, the Central Intelligence Agency tried to discourage the Italian police.

Then, as the Italians began to uncover the truth anyway, there was an orchestrated scoffing at the idea of Soviet guilt. A great deal was made of the fact that there is not the kind of evidence that would lead to a conviction in an American court. There never is in such matters. No head of state is going to order an important assassination in writing and distribute copies of the order.

Finally there is now, at least for some, an expression of shock. What is so shocking about a killer trying to kill? The Soviet regime has murdered millions of its own citizens as well as Hungarians, Czechs, Afghans, Ukrainians, and others. Why does anyone think they would hesitate to kill a pope? After all, they are atheists.

Furthermore, the life of an Afghan child is just as important as the life of a pope. I'm sure Pope John Paul would agree on that point. So it is nothing less than hypocritical for people who have ignored other Soviet murders to get excited about one more attempted murder just because the victim is famous.

The dumbo reaction is the claim by some commentators that the Soviets failed. The assassination failed, but its purpose, to intimidate the church, succeeded. When the Soviet Union's bully boys made their move and crushed Solidarity, the church stayed well away from the barricades. There were no stinging denunciations. No public crusades. The Soviets had made their point: if you interfere, you'll get hurt and not even papal robes will protect you.

What makes Western liberals so uncomfortable about the KGB plot to murder the pope is that it makes it hard for them to sell ideas like detente, arms limitation treaties, trade and other forms of appeasement. Now, even the man in the street can see for himself that the leader of the Soviet Union is nothing but a two-bit, cold-blooded killer.

For 22 years, the establishment in America has been white-washing the Soviet Union, by downplaying its deceptions and cruelties. Communist leaders get White House receptions. Soviet dissidents do not. The establishment does this because its policy, stripped of rhetoric, is simply appeasement. Unlike the establishment, however, the American people still have plenty of courage and a sense of right and wrong. If given the full story of the Soviet Union, they will never consent to appeasement.

If you've bought this white-wash job, you should reconsider. Do you want to bet your life and liberty on an arms agreement with a government that would murder a pope just to make it easier to crush a trade union?

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 14, 1784, the United States ratified the peace treaty with England that ended the Revolutionary War.

On this date:

In 1914, Henry Ford's first assembly line went into operation, greatly reducing the time it took to produce a car.

Apprehension of aliens from Mexico increasing

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Apprehensions of illegal aliens in Southern California have soared 73 percent during the first 10 days of 1983, while 1,300 undocumented Mexicans attempting to sneak across the border here for work have been captured, officials say.

In Chula Vista, Calif., the busiest border crossing point, 11,105 illegal aliens — an average of 1,110 daily — were captured and returned to Mexico by patrolman toting infared night scopes or in helicopters, said assistant chief border patrol agent Gene Smithburg.

"That's a healthy chunk — up 73 percent over the same time last year," he said.

Elsewhere in Texas, apprehensions of Mexican aliens fleeing economic hardship in their native country rose about 30 percent in the first 10 days of 1983, as compared to the same period last year, officials reported.

Agents also said they had witnessed a recent dropoff in the activities of alien smuggling rings and an upswing in drug seizures along the border.

"We're beginning to see more drugs," said Laredo border patrol sector chief Bill Selzer. "We're seeing a resurgence in marijuana, some of which used to be bound for the Gulf Coast."

Selzer reported apprehensions of illegal aliens last month was up 40 percent in his sector over December, 1981, saying a persisting drought in Central Mexico and that country's worst economic crisis since the Mexican Revolution in the early 1900s was responsible.

"And we're getting a better educated entrant," Selzer said, "one who used to be in the middle class (before three Mexican peso devaluations in 1982)."

Assistant chief E.J. Vickery of the McAllen sector predicted this month's apprehensions would rise by 30 percent.

In Del Rio, apprehensions through the first 10 days of this month are up 27 percent over the same period last year, assistant chief Donald Coe said.

"We feel the entrants are destined for the largest cities in the interior," he said. Surveys of captured aliens showed Dallas-Fort Worth and Houston were their primary destinations 60 percent of the time, he added.

In El Paso, at population 450,000 the largest U.S. city along the 1,760-mile Mexican border, intelligence agent Joe Aubin said apprehensions of illegal aliens also were up 27 percent this month as compared to the same period in 1982.

Officials said at least 400 aliens seeking work were captured this week in El Paso, up from an average of 250 per day.

"From here, if they don't work in El Paso, they head for Chicago, Denver and Los Angeles," Aubin said.

Illegal aliens sometimes find work that pays up to 15 times the dollar-an-hour average union wage they get in Mexican industrial cities such as Monterrey, Aubin said.

Oil field and factory workers in the U.S. sometimes are paid $12 to $15 an hour, even if they are illegal aliens, Aubin said.

But officials reported a new wrinkle had emerged in the organized smuggling of aliens.

Earlier this month, a Juarez man was convicted in Albuquerque, N.M., of illegally smuggling aliens into the U.S. in an operation government prosecutors estimate netted the man $24 million annually.

Now, smugglers insist their clients pay cash in full before they will attempt to sneak them into the U.S., Selzer reported. In the past, many smugglers accepted partial payments and would extort the money from the aliens' families in Mexico if they didn't pay up, he said.

"Now there's no money to extort, so they demand the money upfront," he said.

Selzer reported the recent seizure of 1,400 pounds of marijuana at a Rio Grande crossing near Laredo indicates drugs have come back to Texas' Lower Valley.

Mexican authorities said three aliens also were shot to death on their side of the river in a subsequent gun battle with Laredo border agents.

Pressure from the Vice-Presidential Task Force in South Florida may have put too much heat on smugglers using Gulf Coast unloading sites, Selzer said.

Officials crack down on hotels turning off heat

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Tattered winos huddle against the doors of the Tenderloin in the fog-dimmed glow of white streetlights and yellow sex-show signs. The January night air is 42 degrees — a dank, bone-chilling 42 degrees.

It was just as cold inside many of the cheap hotels in the neighborhood, home to thousands of the poor and elderly, before a Dec. 6 newspaper story touched off a crackdown on unheated hotels.

"Since the article in the (San Francisco) Chronicle, the heat is on in the Tenderloin," said Don Feeser, 57, who says he's lived at the Fairfax Hotel on Eddy Street for 17 years.

"It would actually be warmer outside," Feeser said of the times before the revelations. "I would come in and sit down. It would be so cold you'd have to go to bed."

Following the story, building inspectors launched an emergency inspection program in the rundown Tenderloin and South of Market areas to find hotels violating a city ordinance requiring 11 hours of 70-degree heat a day.

Politicians tramped through the streets looking for guilty hotels. On Jan. 5, District Attorney Arlo Smith filed charges against two hotels and a Board of Supervisors committee recommended stiffer criminal penalties and an increase in the mandatory heat to 15 hours a day, still short of the state's 24-hour requirement.

Building inspectors discovered a dozen hotels that didn't even have a working boiler or a working connection to steam. One was a building the city paid to house transients. Violations of heat laws were found in about 100 of the 300 residential hotels inspected, said Donald Chan of the Bureau of Building Inspections.

But Randy Shaw of the Tenderloin Housing Clinic, which offers legal assistance to tenants, said much of the problem had already been solved by alarmed hotel owners who turned on the heat before inspectors arrived.

"The point is, how long will it be on?" Feeser noted.

"None of us has ever said that people have broken boilers," he added. "The problem is that they don't turn them on...I think it's a conscious decision not to turn on heat."

"The story is that there has been a constant battle each year against landlords who wilfully withhold heat," said Jane Benedict, chairwoman of the Metropolitan Council on Housing, a tenants union.

San Francisco's Tenderloin, sprawled between the towering luxury hotels of Union Square and San Francisco's majestic City Hall, is one of the last, seedy centers of low-income housing near downtown San Francisco — a role the city has tried to protect by restricting the spread of high-rent tourist hotels.

"We consider it the heart of the city," said Feeser, who said he pays $105 a month for his room because of rent control. The average for a new room would be about $220 to $240 a month, Shaw said, despite the rats, filth and other problems found in some of the hotels.

"The most serious widespread housing problem is simply lack of decent housing for poor people, not only the lack of heating but all the other myriad defects," said Tom Pulliam, director of litigation for the San Francisco Neighborhood Legal Assistance Foundation.

He said his agency had been representing individual tenants complaining of no heat "probably ever since we've been in existence," starting in 1967.

Chan said the city had started falling behind on inspections in the late 1970s. Tax-slashing Proposition 13 forced the city to cut its inspection force from 13 to seven for a time. At the same time, the city ordered new tasks for inspectors: checking smoke detectors, security measures and condo conversions.

"With all the things that have been added, it's almost impossible to get back to what we're supposed to be doing," Chan said. His agency had just now regained full strength of 14 staffers.

"The city has to bear some of the blame for this," said Erik Jorgensen, an attorney who represents three major hotel associations in San Francisco. "They issued certificates of occupancy to hotels which had no heat at all."

He said the extent of the cold hotel problem had been exaggerated.

"I think there might be people in this depression squeezed between various expenses, they might be tempted to cut corners...But I don't think any of them are really wilfully violating the law," he said.

He noted that the hotel operators, many of whom share heat with tenants, often have only a short lease and can't afford to make a large investment. "Some hotels are exposed to fantastic attacks of vandalism," he said. "What usually happens is someone is being evicted and he pulls the thing (radiator) out of the wall."

Shaw said he's happy with the city's response, but added, "you don't want to jump for joy...These people have a lot of problems in their lives...The fact you had to worry about heat, that's really a shame."

Gift for the man who has everything: Reactor vessel

LOWER ALLOWAYS CREEK, N.J. (AP) — It's a little late for Christmas but a utility has a gift idea for the person who has everything: a 697-ton pressure vessel from an abandoned nuclear power plant.

Public Service Electric & Gas Co. put the reactor vessel up for sale by advertising in the local paper, The Sampler. The want ad appeared right under an appeal for the return of a lost cat.

The reactor vessel, 62 feet high, 21 feet wide and 6 inches thick, was declared surplus when the utility decided not to complete Hope Creek II nuclear power plant in southern New Jersey.

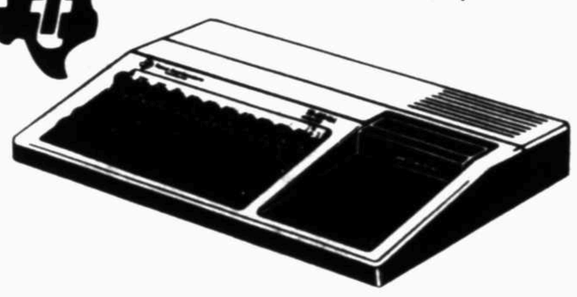

Utility officials said they didn't really expect to sell the reactor through the want ads. The ad was necessary to meet state utility regulations.

"What will probably happen is that it will be sold for scrap," Arthur Lenehan, a utility company spokesman, said. He figures the reactor and related equipment could go for about $5 million.

Future home will be controlled by electronic brain, says architect

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — What will the home of the future be like? Ask Roy Mason, who calls himself a "futurist architect."

For one thing, he says, an electronic brain will control such activities as cooking, maintaining the budget and selecting the right music for the right mood.

"By 1990, between 15 percent and 20 percent of new homes will have brain systems built into them and become as commonplace as putting in air-conditioning. The average home will be a vast communications network of electronic technology."

Mason, who practices from Washington, D.C., addressed a gathering at the International Winter Consumer Electronics Show headquartered at the Convention Center here. The event, a huge trade exhibition of audio and video equipment, has attracted 70,000 visitors.

Mason is a founder with a group of forecasters, planners and researchers of the World Future Society, and architectural editor of the society's magazine, the Futurist.

IN AN INTERVIEW, he elaborated on the concept of "a home nerve center." A home brain is a revolutionary step, he said, but "affordable homes of tomorrow — 1,500-square-foot houses costing $60,000 — will come complete with a brain component. The average family will be able to afford it."

In his speech, Mason said, "We have entered into the telecommunications era... We are creating a computer society. Knowledge is doubling every five years. We are becoming information rich, demanding instant data, facts, new entertainment: the threshold of boredom is lower. Soon the information junky, 'the informaniac,' will go to his corner kiosk and get a quick fact fix."

He is currently designing an office building in Houston, his hometown, that will incorporate the latest in electronic technology. "Already, data and word processing technology have virtually eliminated paper," he said.

The structure will be "the first intelligent office building of the future," Mason said. The building will contain a Central Nervous System linking each tenant with the latest in high-technology and telecommunications.

"This office of tomorrow will be automated and integrated with satellite communications and provide things like teleconferencing, telemarketing and electronic mail via satellite which will greatly decrease dependency on traditional mail and business travel. And next we'll move to electronic hotels and stores."

MEANWHILE, NEW technology will turn the home into an entertainment mecca, a workplace, and an education center, he said. Shopping and banking will be done from the home. Capability to tap information worldwide will be at one's fingertips.

"Residents can program their own heating, lighting and security systems," Mason said, and the same computer will remind the family of important appointments, sort out the day's receipts and automatically switch on favorite TV programs.

Mason is also designing a prototype home of the future called "Xanadu" that will be constructed in Orlando, Fla., near Disney's Epcot Center. Among its features:

—Microprocessors that enable the automatic monitoring and controlling of appliances.

—Individual microstations in each room that gather intelligence and automatically provide lighting, cooling and other sensory comforts.

—A computer graphic art gallery.

—A COMPUTERIZED kitchen in which the house brain keeps track of food on hand, its nutritional value with recommendations of well-balanced menus, utilizing family recipes.

—Adjacent to the kitchen, a hydroponic greenhouse, where "vegetables, fruits and herbs grow year-round in a computer-regulated climate."

Homes of the future, Mason said, will have entertainment centers or "sensoria" that feature walls which become "large-screen video displays that change colors in time to music, or, linked through biofeedback sensors, respond to people's moods. The sensorium also features a free-standing holostage that generates three-dimensional TV images from broadcast, cable or recordings."

Scientists call dambala 'wonder bean'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Is the dambala or "winged bean," the soya bean of the next century?

Scientists searching for a high-protein inexpensive food staple for overpopulated tropical nations have called the dambala the "wonder bean" or "the supermarket on a stalk."

Unlike the soya bean plant where only the beans are used, every part of the dambala can be eaten. The pods, leaves and seeds are rich in protein and vitamins and, like the soya bean, the seeds produce an edible oil. Even the roots are rich in protein content.

Dr. Cyril Ponnamperuma, chairman of the American Chemical Society's International Activities Committee, is working toward establishment of an international institute in Sri Lanka which would study new ways to improve production of this plant.

At present the dambala grows as a vine or creeping plant in Southeast Asia where it has been harvested as a backyard crop for years.

One drawback to mass cultivation is the fact that the dambala must be staked in order to produce abundant yields of pods and seeds, Ponnamperuma points out.

The challenge for scientists at the dambala institute will be to one day produce a hybrid dambala plant that is free standing and easy to harvest, he says.

Aide has solution to controlling Reagan's tendency to crack jokes

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, who has shown a certain lack of discipline when he approaches an open microphone, has an aide who is more than willing to help control his tendency to crack a joke before an unseen audience.

Every Saturday the president delivers a five-minute radio address to the nation. And on more than one occasion, he has had some words of wisdom as he tests the microphone just before going on the air.

It was before one such speech that he described the leaders of the Polish military government as "a bunch of no-good, lousy bums." His comments could be heard by reporters waiting for the speech although they were not carried on the air.

One Saturday, a producer and engineer from the Mutual Broadcasting System drove to Camp David, Md., where Reagan was spending the weekend, to set up the equipment needed for the live broadcast of the weekly speech.

After setting up their microphone and other broadcasting equipment, they watched as a Reagan special assistant, David C. Fischer, walked in and pulled the microphone from its plug.

Only after strenuous objections — and threats by the producer to walk out and leave the president high-and-dry when the nation was waiting for the speech — did Fischer return the microphone.

It was then that a military aide spied in the engineer's briefcase an elaborate diagram of the electronic circuitry in the room from which the broadcast was originating.

Because Camp David is a military installation, the aide reached for the paperwork and tore it to shreds.

• • •

White House aides like to say that when it comes to speeches, the president is his own writer. He may be that, although he has a staff of speechwriters, but he is also his own editor.

When the president made a hastily arranged trip to Louisiana to view flood damage on his way home to Washington from a California vacation after the New Year's holiday, Reagan's staff prepared a brief radio speech for him to give to the local citizens.

The president set his hand to a typewritten text and smoothed out some of the more awkward language. The president's scratchy handwriting could be seen where he crossed out and rewrote parts of every paragraph of the speech.

"I've come here today to tell the people of Louisiana that you've not been struggling alone," was changed by the president to read: "I welcome this opportunity to tell you — the people of Louisiana, you are not alone."

"Your homes and life's possessions may have been washed away, but your grit and mettle have not," became "I know many here have lost their homes and life's possessions."

A speechwriter prepared the text this way:

"The entire nation wants to come to your aid. And as in past national (natural) disasters, the federal government will provide firm and immediate support...I have told Gov. Treen that I am ready to review his request that portions of Louisiana be declared a disaster area. I intend to speed the process along when I return to Washington, but I can assure you now that the federal government will provide every bit of assistance possible, and without delay."

After the president got through with it, it came out this way:

"As in past nat. disasters, the entire nation wants to come to your aid...I know Gov. Treen is framing a request that portions of Lousiana be declared a disaster area. I have told Gov. Treen that I approve that request. The federal government will provide very bit of assistance possible, and without delay."

And, when it came to shaving just a few words to make a smoother text, Reagan knew what he was doing:

"I'm told that..." became "I know."

"The people of Louisiana should know that the rest of America is standing with them," became "Please know the rest of America is standing with you."

Physicist honored

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Physicist Paul A.M. Dirac, who won the Nobel Prize 50 years ago, has been honored with a commemorative stamp issued by the Swedish government.

It is the latest in a series of commemorations, including symposiums and conferences, being held throughout the world to honor Dirac as he enters his 80th year. He turns 80 on Aug. 8.

Dirac is now a physics professor at Florida State University. He won a Nobel in 1933 for his discovery of new forms of atomic theory that have helped make possible television, computers, space travel and other aspects of today's technology.

The Swedish stamp is among five commemoratives honoring those who contributed to the discovery of quantum mechanics. In white on a lavender background, the Dirac stamp features an illustration of the production of electrons and positrons above Dirac's name.

The British-born scientist has been on the Florida State faculty since 1971.

He was described by the 1975 Compton Encyclopedia Yearbook as possibly the greatest living theoretical scientist and an equal of Einstein and Newton.

Hot shooting Chaps avenge loss, beat HC 87-79

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

If the Pack is Back, then so are the Chaps, but they haven't been away nearly as long as Green Bay.

Midland College shook off two successive losses to rebound with a score-evening 87-79 victory over Howard College in the kind of tension-filled atmosphere usually reserved for post season tournaments.

Some 4,000 fans showed up at Langford Chaparral Center Thursday to see "What's wrong with the Chaps" after a 102-96 loss to Howard in the OIL Classic finals at Big Spring Saturday followed by a 71-65 WJCC defeat at the hands of Amarillo College in Amarillo Monday.

The way 16-3 MC played Thursday, it was quite evident that nothing was wrong with the Chaps...anymore.

THIS PROBABLY was MC's best game of the season. The Chaps, who were scorched for 59 points in the last half as Howard hit 24-of-36 field shots Saturday, played good defense, constant movement away from the ball opened up shot opportunities and, perhaps most of all, they exercised patience in shot selection.

In a nutshell, the Chaps were a study in concentration.

"It took the Amarillo defeat, but we had their attention this week," said Coach Jerry Stone. "Even the Chaps were wondering what's wrong with the Chaps?"

"We were ready to play tonight," summed up assistant Coach Reggie Franklin, "Monday at Amarillo we were not ready to play. We were flat."

STONE SAID, "It has been so long since we lost two in a row, that it was like losing six in a row for someone else."

In other WJCC action Thursday, Amarillo College beat Frank Phillips, 89-65; South Plains ripped Clarendon, 69-53, and New Mexico Junior College outlasted Western Texas College, 85-81, in overtime.

After a first half in which the score was deadlocked 12 times and both teams enjoyed four-point leads, Midland forged in front in the first four minutes of the second half, widening a 48-46 intermission lead into a 58-50 advantage as a three-basket salvo by Nate Bufford supplied the impetus.

The Chaps led 64-54, 70-58 and 72-60 midway through the final half. The Hawks repeatedly rallied, but 83-79 with 2:22 left was as close as they came.

One reason was 5-6 point guard Spud Webb, whose floor generalship was even more important than his 19 points. "Everybody was up tonight. We were ready and all I tried to do was control our pace." Ball movement and patience while setting up the "right" shot was as good as defense.

"I thought we played well at both ends of the courts and that's something we hadn't been doing," Stone said.

BUFFORD was high with 24 points while 6-7 Chester Smith had 18 and Brian Essary, with a big contribution off the bench, had 12 points.

The Hawks, 4-of-6 from the line, might have made it closer down the stretch, but missed two one-on-one opportunities and both ends of a shooting foul situation in the final four minutes.

"We played hard; gave a great effort, but just didn't make the plays...those free throws," said Howard Coach Harold Wilder, whose Hawks suffered their second league loss and slipped to 15-2 for the season. "And against a team as good as Midland, those things will come back to haunt you."

But he was still pleased. "We showed we can play with the best. This year I have eight players who can do the job."

WHILE HOWRRD packs potent scoring arsenal, Wilder felt it was the defensive job MC did on Nathan Givens that was the key. "They did a good job on Nate. Chester (Smith) is a good defensive player and he got help. (Jerome) Crowe was dropping off Reggie (Childress) to help out."

As a result, Givens was held to a modest 19 as teammate Leon Isaac took point honors with 22.

Howard narrowed MC's lead to 64-58 when Webb ripped a 15-footor, a steal by Ervin Williams set up Bufford on a fast break and then Bufford struck again from underneath to make it 72-60.

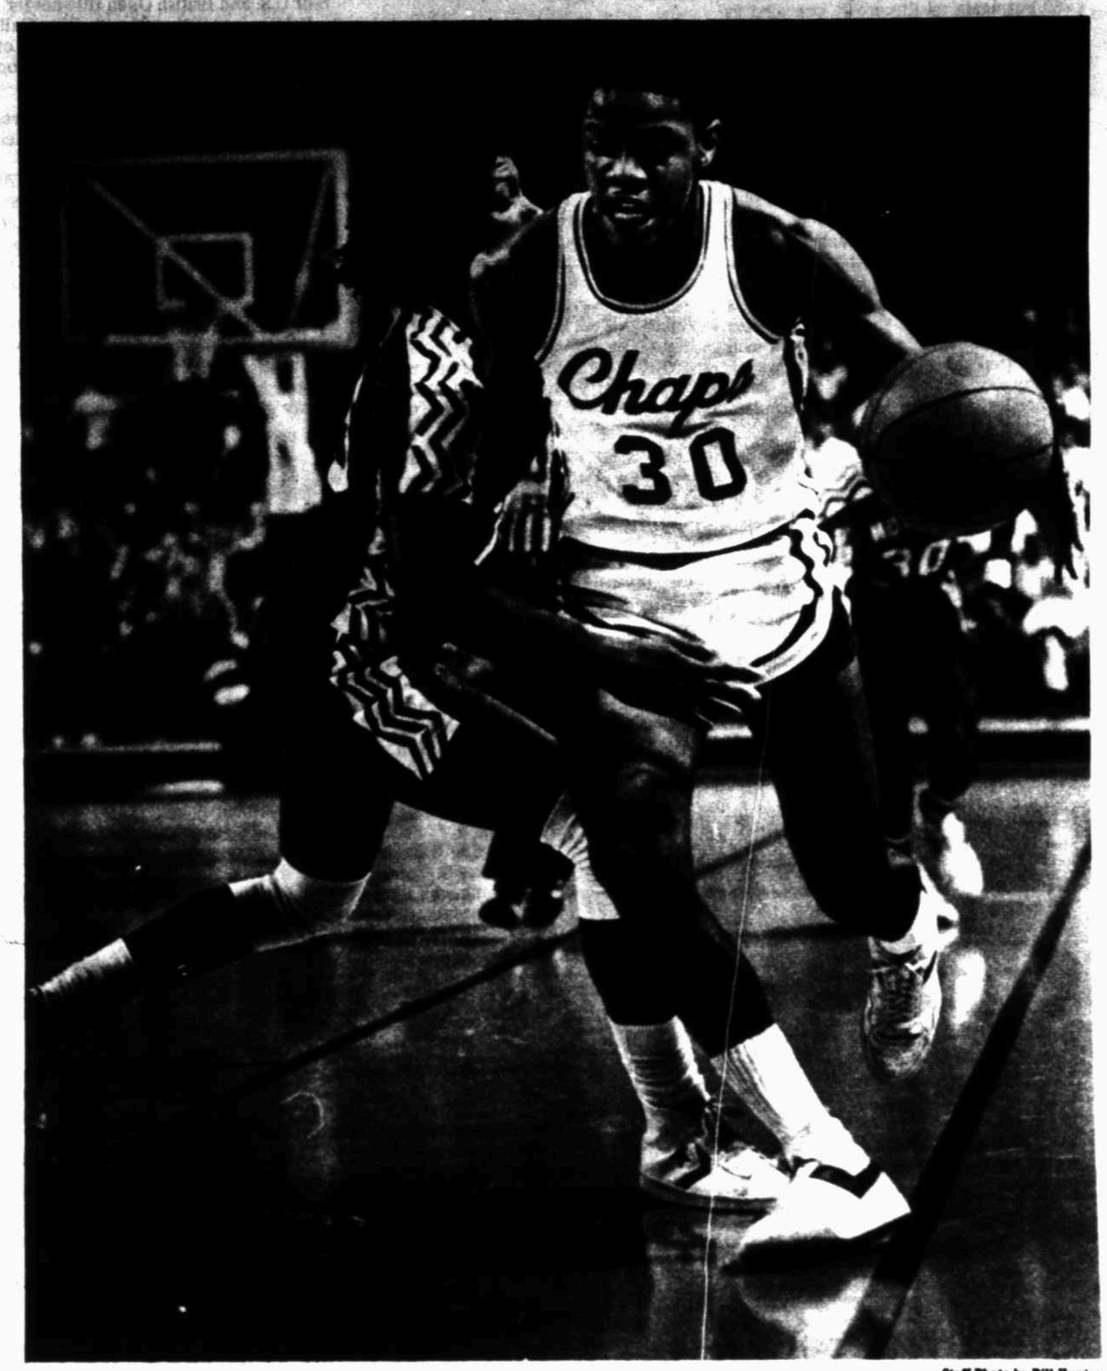

Howard refused to roll over, as Givens with three points, Childers and Isaac with two baskets each rallied the Hawks to a 74-69 deficit with 7:29 left and the HC hovered uncomfortably close the rest of the way.

Bufford had six second half baskets and Webb scored 13 of his 19 in the final 20 minutes as MC hit 18-of-30 from the floor to wind up 40 of 69 for the night for a 58 percent touch.

Dogs take on only unbeaten; Rebels play host to Permian

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The Midland High Bulldogs are in a position where they can turn District 4-5A's basketball race into a three-way tie for first place when they travel to Odessa to take on the Bronchos today at 8 p.m.

Odessa High is currently the only district team with an unbeaten record while three others — San Angelo, Abilene High and MHS — are one game back at 2-1. One of the three runner-ups in the race will fall to .500 since San Angelo and Abilene High are also scheduled to play tonight.

In other 4-5A encounters, Midland Lee will host Odessa Permian at Chaparral Center and Abilene Cooper will take on Big Spring. All games are scheduled for 8 p.m.

THE OHS-MHS matchup will be the second of the year between the two schools, the first coming in the Odessa Invitational basketball tournament where OHS posted a narrow two-point victory, 58-56. Bulldog head coach Jack Stephenson would like to reverse that decision to put his troops atop the 4-5A standings.

"Odessa High is playing better right now and I didn't expect them to beat Big Spring over there (Tuesday night in Big Spring)," he said. "I'm happy they did beat Big Spring because that gives us a chance to tie for first place and drops Big Spring to 1-2. There's also a big game between San Angelo and Abilene High."

Even though the Bronchos are leading the district, Stephenson isn't convinced that they're playing better than any other team in the league.

"I don't really think they are," he said. "Success breeds success. They beat Cooper by five or seven at home (in Odessa) and we had the opportunity to blow Cooper out several times. They're not playing any better than we are right now or better than San Angelo or Abilene High."

What the game could feature is a contrast in styles with the Bronchos going to their big men under the basket in a set formation while the Bulldogs throw out the "wave attack" to keep fresh players on the court to run the full-court press on defense and utilize the running attack on offense.

ODESSA PERMIAN, since defeating Midland High in the opening game of the 4-5A season, is still looking for its second victory while the Midland Lee Rebels will be out to wipe out the 0-3 blemish on their record.

In fact the Rebels, 2-17 overall, are looking for their first win since they won one-of-three in the Clovis Tournament shortly before the conference schedule got underway.

"First of all I'd like to comment about the players. Going into the season, they knew it would be a tough season," said Stueckler. "The junior varsity didn't have a very good season last year and the kids knew they didn't have any height this year.

"But, hope springs eternal and you hope something magical will happen. Maybe the press will start working better and we'll be able to beat some people.

"The kids on this team are just wonderful human beings. Since practice started they have not had a single bad practice, we haven't had anyone late to practices and no one has missed a practice. They work hard and are enthusiastic. Even though we're 2-17, it doesn't seem like we are."

Stueckler sees Permian as a team that would be in the same boat as his Rebels except for the closing of Ector High last summer. "Permian would be in about the same shape we're in if they hadn't closed Ector and gotten quite a few of their great players. It really boosted up their players."

The game appears to be a matchup between two similar styles of play. Both Permian and Lee like to run the ball and press on defense and both have a lot of quickness. With a lack of heighth on both sides, the inside game could prove to be the difference.

MHS girls get fast start in win

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The game started 15 minutes early and by the time a few fans arrived for an 8 p.m. Thursday tipoff, the Midland High girls had things under control. The rest was just fun against the Odessa High Bronchos.

MHS, now 5-1 in District 4-5A play and still at the top of the standings with Midland Lee and Big Spring, scored six points in the first 13 seconds of play. They reeled off a 10-0 lead and ran to a 20-4 margin in the first period. From there it was an awesome kind of fun in a 71-47 romp over the 0-5 Bronchos.

"I've never had so much fun playing basketball," said Rebecca Caton, who scored 13 points including the basket for a 6-0 lead with 7:47 still left in the first period. "We had six points before 20 seconds was gone. I thought that was really neat."

And neat it was as the Bulldogs did everything you would want a basketball team to do. In 4-5A, play a romp is a rare treat, but this one was well deserved.

MHS hit 31 of 57 shots for a 54 percent shooting eye, good in any league. Their press was harder to break than the Iron Curtain and some of the individual performances were well worth noting.

For instance, Shelia Christian, who leads all city scorers with a 14 point per game average, scored a season high 26 points by hitting 13 of 22 frorn the field. Orvetta Johnson scored a career first with 20 points on a nine of 12 effort from the floor. And Caton, who was plagued with fouls while having fun, hit five of six from the field.

Christian had eight points in the first period, four coming in the first five seconds, and 10 points in the fourth quarter. Johnson had eight in the second quarter and five in the third on her way to her first 20 point night.

Some could say it was because the Bulldogs were playing Odessa High, but the Bronchos hit 17 of 41 from the field for a 42 percent mark, which isn't bad. However, OHS got 16 fewer shots than the Bulldogs because they couldn't get the ball downcourt against the ever pressing Dogs.

"We just can't play any better than that," said MHS coach Jane Young. "We had a lot of turnovers ourselves, but our little hearts were racing full speed and we can accept those kind of mistakes. The press was as good as we've run it this year. We just can't play that way every time out."

OHS did hit for 21 points in the second quarter to pull to within a 38-31 margin at the half, but the Bulldogs outscored OHS by a 33-16 margin in the second half.

Pam Allen hit 18 points to lead the Bronchos while Karen George had 10.

There is possibly one Bulldog who would like to forget Thursday's game. Cindy Besek had a minor car wreck on the way to the game and the obviously upset point guard did not score a point.

The Bulldogs complete the first half of the 14-game 4-5A schedule Monday with a trip to San Angelo in a crucial game for the 13-8 Bulldogs. However, if they continue to play like they did Thursday, there will be little trouble in notching one of the two playoff berths open to the district. The MHS girls are hoping for their first playoff berth in history.

The MHS Bullpups also captured a romp in the junior varsity contest with a 58-30 romp over OHS. Deidra Knapp led all scorers with 14 points while Lucy Garza led OHS with 11.

Gambler claims NFL games were fixed

NEW YORK (AP) — An imprisoned gambler interviewed in a public television documentary says a dozen National Football League games were fixed from 1968 to 1970 by gamblers who paid off a coach, quarterback and defensive captain of at least one unidentified team.

John Piazza, makes the allegations in the first offering of the Public Television System's "Frontline," to be aired next Monday on public television stations nationwide.

The documentary, screened for the press here Thursday, also implies that Los Angeles Rams owner Carroll Rosenbloom, who drowned in April 1979, was murdered by an underwater swimmer who grabbed his legs and pulled him under. The official cause of his death was accidental drowning.

The fix allegations were made by Piazza, whose family was paid by PBS for his testimony that four games were fixed in each of the 1968, 1969 and 1970 seasons. None of the players or teams involved were identified, and Mike Kirk, the senior producer on the show, said their names had not been given to the NFL.

"All of the variables that are associated with this have been checked out. I believe the corroborating evidence," Kirk said by phone from WGBH in Boston, which produced the show. He said Piazza had passed a lie detector test.

But Kirk, who said research would continue until air time, added, "I'm not prepared to say who these people are because you're really damaging reputations. We don't want to transmit slander. We don't have enough information to name the names. We are carrying a story. We believe it enough to carry it."

Don Weiss, executive director of the NFL, said the league would have no comment on the show until it viewed the entire film.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle is interviewed in the film by narrator Jessica Savitch, but is not asked directly about the Piazza allegations. Kirk said Savitch talked to Rozelle on the phone and the commissioner said he had never heard of Piazza.

The gambler, interviewed in prison, said the fix involved what he called "a consortium" of players. He said they were paid a flat fee of $300,000 plus 10 percent of what the gamblers made on the fixed game. He said the biggest payoff was $800,000.

"We had the coach and we had the quarterback, who was the offensive captain, and we had the defensive captain," he said. He said the players were constantly aware of the point spread on the game, or as he said, "the perimeters of the score we wanted to hold."

"Say the offense got close to the goal line and a touchdown would have put it above the spread," he said. "The quarterback would throw a pass away and they would only have a field goal."

Piazza said the coach was paid so that he wouldn't remove the quarterback "if he started throwing passes into the ground or all over the place."

At one point, Piazza said, he was along when a payoff was made to "an intermediary" and two players. He said the gamblers insisted on seeing the players themselves before any money changed hands.

Piazza gave his interview in return for money to take care of his family. The producers also paid Jimmy "The Weasel" Frattiano for general information concerning connections between professional football and gamblers.

Asked how much Piazza and Fratianno got for their interviews, Kirk said, "I know it was not substantial. I don't think it was thousands. I know it wasn't anything like $25,000."

Friday's editions of the New York Times quoted Lou Wiley, the series editor, as saying Piazza's wife would be paid by "Frontline" up to $10,000 in moving expenses in return for his information.

The Times also reported that Piazza was awaiting sentencing for illegal possession of a silencer and he also faced drug related charges.

Attempts to reach Kirk and Wiley by telephone Thursday night were unsuccessful. Calls to their office went unanswered, and a person at WGBH said Kirk had left his office there earlier in the evening.

As for Rosenbloom, the show strongly implies that his drowning death in April of 1979 at Golden Beach, Fla., was murder, not accidental drowning as ruled. It says Rosenbloom was apparently grabbed from below the surface of the water by a swimmer in a black wetsuit and held under until he drowned.

Rebels remain tied with 56-43 rout over Abilene

ODESSA — Odessa Permian has never beaten Midland Lee in girls basketball over the six-year span the girls have participated in the sport. That mark held here Thursday night as Lee ran to a 56-34 District 4-5A victory over Permian.

Felicia Farias paved the way for the Lady Rebels with 23 points, her first 20-point night in district competition. Stacy Harmon was the only other Rebel in double figures with 12. Leading scorer Yshun King was held to a mere five points, being slowed with an ankle injury. Denise Hatch had her best point production of the season with seven points.

Lee never trailed in the game that figured to be much closer. Permian dropped from the league leadership with their second district loss in six outings. Lee, Midland High and Big Spring all share first place honors with 5-1 marks, but only two of those teams can be at the top after next Monday's schedule that has Lee facing Big Spring in an all-important shootout. Midland High also faces a stern test against 3-3 San Angelo, a team picked to make a strong playoff berth run.

Stephanie Sorrels had 11 points to lead Permian while Laura Bartlett added 10. Melissa Harrison was held to eight points by the Lee defense.

Big Spring kept pace with MHS and Lee with a 40-29 win over 2-4 Abilene Cooper as Sylvia Randle hit for 12 points and Monette Wise 10. San Angelo stayed in the race with a 52-31 win over hapless 0-6 Abilene High as Monica Bradley canned 16 points and Bonnie Smith 13. Jennifer Robinson had a 10-point night.

Palmer gives GC-LA Open excitement

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It was a scene from another, earlier era.

There was Arnold Palmer, trailed by that vast army exulting in his move on the leader, whooping and yelling at his every success.

There was Palmer, hitching his britches with the old, familiar, nervous gesture; Palmer boldly threading trouble shot through the trees; Palmer, now 53 but again on the prowl, charging as he did so well so many years ago.

Calling on the magic he exerted before some of his current competitors were born, Palmer fought his way to a 5-under-par 66 — his best score on the PGA Tour in at least two years — Thursday in the first round of the $300,000 Glen Campbell-Los Angeles Open, a title he first won two decades ago.

He was two strokes back of leader Fuzzy Zoeller, who fired a 7-under-par 64. Gibby Gilbert and Australian Open champ Bob Shearer had 65s. But it was Palmer, probably the most popular player the game has ever known, who generated the excitement on a warm, sunny day.

Zoeller, a former Masters champion, was in a mass interview, describing his four consecutive birdies and his front side of 30, when he looked up and saw Palmer.

"Come on in, 'King.' They're waiting for you," Zoeller said, surrendering the floor. But not before he got in a couple of parting shots.

"How old are you, anyway?" he asked.

"None of your business," responded Palmer.

"I'm playing at 7:40 in the morning. Early in the year like this, it's sometimes hard to get up that early," Zoeller said. "It must be really tough on you old guys."

"I'll give you a wake-up call at six," said Palmer.

Palmer's heroics — which included two escapes from the trees, a two-putt for par from 20 yards off the green, and a two-putt birdie-4 on his final hole which drew roaring applause from his gallery — all but overshadowed Tom Watson's spectacular finish.

Watson, opening defense of the title he won last year at Riviera, scored an eagle-3 on his 17th hole. And on his 18th, another par-5, he lashed a 2-iron second shot to within 30 inches of the flag. But he missed the eagle putt and had to settle for a birdie that finished off his 67.

"A 67 for the first round of the year. I'm satisfied with it. But I'd like to have made that last putt. That'd be some finish: eagle, eagle," said Watson, the current U.S. and British Open title-holder.

Palmer was tied at 66 with Gary Hallberg and Payne Stewart, neither of whom was born when Arnold first won the Masters.

Tied with Watson at 67 were Lee Trevino, Gary Koch, veteran Gene Littler and Mac O'Grady.

PGA champion Ray Floyd had a 70 for his first round of the year. Masters champ and 1982 leading money-winner Craig Stadler and Cal Peete, a four-time winner last season, each shot 73 and must improve Friday if they are to qualify for the final two rounds.

Palmer took the national seniors title in 1981 and won twice on the seniors tour last season, but hasn't won on the regular PGA circuit for 10 years.

"My game," he said, "is not and has not been very good for a long time. But it's improving and is on the verge of getting a little bit better.

"I'm driving as long as at any time. And that's a big factor, both in my game and in my mind, just knowing I have that. Maybe with some good iron shots and a couple of putts here and there, maybe I can start playing a little better.

"I hit a couple of good shots from bad positions today, hit some good irons, made some putts and missed some.

"I should be reasonably pleased with the round, I suppose. But I felt like it should have been a couple of shots better."

Then he flashed that famous smile.

"But I'm sure not gonna complain about it."

And, he was asked, what would it mean to him to win again?

"Oh, my," he said, and looked away. "I can't even say."

Then the old, eager look came into his eyes.

Trojan tailbacks highlight AFC matchup

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It'll be just like old times for All-Pro running backs Freeman McNeil and Marcus Allen Saturday when the New York Jets challenge the Los Angeles Raiders in a second-round National Football League playoff game.

McNeil, a second-year member of the Jets who led the NFL in rushing during this strike-interrupted season, played his college football at UCLA.

Allen, a Raiders' first-round draft who led the NFL in scoring and was a unanimous selection as the league's outstanding rookie on offense, was a standout at Southern Cal.

Both played their home games as collegians at the Los Angeles Coliseum, site of Saturday's nationally televised contest.

And both, as might be expected, played down the significance of their first game against each other as pros.

"Marcus is a great running back, but I don't think that's the issue here," said McNeil. "The incentive is not whether Marcus or I does better. The incentive is the Super Bowl."

"There's never been one individual who has won a ball game," said Allen. "Both teams have a lot of talent."

The Raiders, whose 9-1 record is the best in the AFC, were listed as 4-point favorites over the Jets, 7-3. Kickoff time is 1 p.m. PST.

Not only are the Raiders favored to beat the Jets, they are the choice of oddsmakers at this stage of the season to win their second Super Bowl in the past three years.

"I'd be lying if I said I didn't enjoy being the favorite," said Coach Tom Flores of the Raiders. "I don't know anyone who likes being an underdog. But when the ball is kicked off, reputations and odds don't mean a thing."

Coach Walt Michaels of the Jets agreed with Flores about the odds, saying, "In playoff games, you take all the rankings, records and statistics and just throw it all out the window. It's a one-game season and it comes down to who is best on a given afternoon."

Allen, who rushed for 697 yards on 160 carries during the regular season, gained 72 yards on 17 carries and caught six passes for 75 yards during the Raiders' 27-10 victory over the Cleveland Browns last Saturday.

Los Angeles quarterback Jim Plunkett completed 24 of 37 passes for a career-high 386 yards.

McNeil, who gained 786 yards on 151 carries during the regular season, picked up 202 yards on the ground during New York's 44-17 triumph over Cincinnati last Sunday.

Computer key to Redskins-Vikings game

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Washington Redskins have been doing their homework as they prepare for a final exam of sorts, Saturday's game with the Minnesota Vikings in the second round of the National Football League playoffs.

The 9-1 Redskins began preparing for the Vikings, 5-5, last week, before either team had gotten past the first-round of the playoffs. The coaching staffs broke down Minnesota films, charting out each play over a two- or three-game period.

Three game films were eventually analysed. A computer study of the Viking defense was run off. Coaches studied Minnesota's offensive and defensive tendencies and how the Redskins can be effective in those circumstances.

And by early this week, the players were given instructions on the inital part of the game plan. Then, the plan was executed in practice and later reviewed by coaches.

"What we don't like we change," said Dan Henning, the Redskins' assistant head coach. "What we like, we keep in. But everything is tested thoroughly before it is used ... For example, we may want to run a certain play against two different defenses. Before the week is out, we'll make sure we try it that way in practice."

After a couple of more days of filming and reviewing the practices, the players were given a chance to respond.

"If we aren't comfortable with something, we'll say so," said safety Mark Murphy. "The coaches are very good at listening to us and making adjustments.

Stemrick, Wilson charged in drug-related incident

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers plan to enroll two cornerbacks in a therapy program after the players were arrested leaving a northside bar and one was charged with possessing a controlled substance, head coach Ed Biles says.

Greg Stemrick was charged with possession of a controlled substance Thursday and released from the city jail on $5,000 bail, said a spokesman for Harris County District Attorney John Holmes.

J.C. Wilson, 26, was charged with driving while intoxicated and driving without a valid license, the spokesman said. He was released on $1,600 bail.

The two were arrested Wednesday night by officers making a narcotics investigation at a north Houston bar.

"We have good therapy programs that are available to the people who want help," Biles said Thursday from California.

"We obviously have encouraged this," he said of the treatment. "Maybe we'll have to take stronger steps now."

The coach mentioned liquor and drugs at a Houston news conference last week as two problems that plagued the 1-8 Oilers this season.

FOOTBALL

SUWANEE, Ga. (AP) — The Atlanta Falcons have fired Leeman Bennett, the only winning coach in the team's 16-year history, according to published reports.

The Falcons scheduled a news conference for today at their training complex northeast of Atlanta, but Executive Vice President Eddie LeBaron refused late Thursday night to confirm or deny that it was to announce the firing.

The Atlanta Constitution and Atlanta stations WGST and WXIA-TV all said Thursday night that Bennett was fired Thursday.

HOCKEY

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Glen Sonmor announced his resignation as coach of the Minnesota North Stars following the Stars' 2-1 National Hockey League victory over the Toronto Maple Leafs and assistant coach Murray Oliver was named acting head coach.

Earlier Thursday, Sonmor suffered a black eye and a possible broken nose in a fight in Pittsburgh, where the North Stars defeated the Penguins 7-0 Wednesday night. He said the fight with a Pittsburgh fan made him realize he was under too much pressure and was no longer enjoying his job.

Chinese using rough hockey style

An AP Sports Analysis
By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

While a team of touring Soviet All-Stars and six National Hockey League clubs were grabbing the attention, an international hockey series was taking place on the other side of the globe — with disturbing results.

The Southern Alberta Institute of Technology hockey team spent two weeks in China playing five games against the Chinese national team. Hockey is relatively new in China and such exchange programs can be valuable in the advancement of hockey in the world's most populated nation.

But two of the games turned into brawls and two Chinese players wound up getting suspended.

On Dec. 21 in Harbin, following a penalty to a Canadian player, a member of the Chinese team hit the Canadian player in the head with his stick. The Canadian, whom officials from both sides refused to identify, wasn't severely hurt.

But Coach Bob Moore said, "If it had hit two inches lower, he could have broken his neck."

The next day, another Chinese player thrust his stick over the boards by the Trojans' bench. When a Canadian player grabbed it, the Chinese player began swinging it, precipitating a melee that set off a wave of rock and bottle throwing from the stands. The Alberta team left the ice twice "to survive," according to Moore.

"We went over there hoping to contribute something towards their program and to learn something ourselves," said Moore. "Neither one happened. Instead, we came back with very bitter feelings."

The school and its players raised $72,000 for the trip, spent $44,000 in advance and then, according to Moore, were given second-rate accomodations, meals and travel arrangements. The team was 1-3-1 on the trip, but the defeats were insignificant in light of the incidents which occurred in Harbin.

"The Chinese officials all thought it was a big joke," said Moore. "They stood there laughing."

The Chinese Sports Commission wasn't laughing about the incidents and it barred the two players from going to Japan for a series of games. The Chinese Ice Hockey Association apologized to the Trojans.

"Despite the fact that the incident involved both sides, the Ice Hockey Association deemed it improper for the Chinese players to misbehave," said a spokesman for the Sports Commission. "It is not in conformity with the idea of spiritual civilization we have been advocating."

Soviet News, the Chinese government newspaper, said, "Not only do they (the players) not uphold the Chinese people's dignity but they disgrace the Chinese people."

As for any Chinese teams being invited to Canada, Dale Henwood, a representative of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association who saved the tour by spurring the Chinese officials to action, has indicated that it won't happen. He also told Chinese sports officials that, in view of what happened on this tour, other Canadian teams won't be so anxious to visit China.

Paterno, Wacker receive coaching honors

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Joe Paterno and Jim Wacker, who captured 1982 national championships at Penn State and Southwest Texas State, won Coach of the Year honors Thursday from the American Football Coaches Association.

Although the actual vote count was, as usual, not announced, Paterno and Wacker won in balloting conducted by AFCA members at their annual convention — Paterno in the University Division, Wacker in the College Division. They were honored Thursday night at the AFCA's annual Coach of the Year banquet.

Paterno, 56, who also won the award in 1968 and 1978, coached Penn State to its first national championship last season. The Nittany Lions beat Georgia 27-23 in the Sugar Bowl and finished with an 11-1 record. In 17 years as Penn State's head coach, Paterno's record is 162-34-1.

Other University Division district winners were Jack Bicknell, Boston College; Bobby Ross, Maryland; George MacIntyre, Vanderbilt; Dennis Green, Northwestern; Tom Osborne, Nebraska; Billy Brewer, Louisiana Tech; Ken Hatfield, Air Force, and Jim Sweeney, Fresno State.

At a news conference anouncing the winners, Paterno said he was "proud, but a little bit embarrassed" because some of the other candidates "could have done a better job than I did." He said Penn State's administration had a lot to do with his success because "the jobs are such good jobs that most of my assistants haven't had to move on to other places."

Under the 45-year-old Wacker, who has since been named head coach at Texas Christian University, Southwest Texas State posted the best record in its history — 14-0 — and won its second consecutive NCAA Division II national title.

Wacker's record in four years at Southwest Texas was 42-8. He began his college coaching career as defensive coordinator at Concordia College in Nebraska from 1964-68 and held the same job at Augustana College in South Dakota in 1969-70.

His first head coaching job at the college level was at Texas Lutheran from 1971-75. He coached at North Dakota State from 1976-78 before moving to Southwest Texas. Wacker's overall record is 104-33-1.

Hula Bowl will test Dickerson's pass catching

HONOLULU (AP) — Eric Dickerson, whose running helped Southern Methodist University become the No.2 college football team in the nation this season, says he's anxious to show that he also can catch the ball.

Dickerson and Nebraska's Dave Rimington, winner of the Lombardi Trophy and two-time Outland Trophy winner, will lead the West team in Saturday's Hula Bowl game against the East.

"We never threw the ball to the running backs," Dickerson said of SMU's team. "We were strictly a run-attack team."

Dickerson said he's never had the ball thrown much to him, but is confident he can catch it.

"I'm entitled to drop a few, but I can catch the ball when I have to," he said.

"That's what games like this are for," he added. "It's a time when you can find out what a person can really do."

Dickerson heads a West backfield that includes running backs Robert Craig of Nebraska, Stan Wilson of Oklahoma and Jessie Clark of Arkansas. The West offense also will have UCLA quarterback Tom Ramsey.

The West's offensive line averages 6-foot-5, 270 pounds, the largest in the 37 years of the Hula Bowl.

Wide receiver Anthony Carter of Michigan, a three-time All-American, and running back Curt Warner of Penn State head the East team. The starting quarterback will be Dan Marino of Pittsburgh.

Dickerson, Rimington, Carter, Warner, Ramsey and Marino all finished in the top 10 in the Heisman Trophy balloting.

Jackie Sherrill of Texas A&M is the East coach, and Don James of Washington is directing the West squad.

The game will be televised by NBC-TV, beginning at 9 p.m., EST.

An AP Sports Analysis
By BRUCE LOWITT

A year ago, things got a little out of hand when Dan Fouts, Kellen Winslow, Don Strock and the rest of the San Diego Chargers and Miami Dolphins got together for a friendly playoff game.

Records fell like dominoes as the Chargers survived 41-38 in overtime. Coach Don Shula and the Dolphins will keep things a little more under control this time. They'll beat San Diego and set up an American Football Conference championship game against ... the New York Jets.

In the National Football Conference, the Washington Redskins are on a roll and should have an easy time against Minnesota. But the Dallas Cowboys look ripe for picking and will get picked apart by Green Bay.

Last week's mark against the spread: 5-3. The record through 10 weeks: 67-64.

Saturday
American Conference

LOS ANGELES RAIDERS minus 4 vs. New York Jets: Running back Marcus Allen of the Raiders will have one of his typically brilliant days. But quarterback Jim Plunkett will spend much of the day either on the run or on his back. Freeman McNeil of the Jets won't rip up LA the way he did Cincinnati, but Richard Todd could have one of his greatest games. Take the Jets.

National Conference

WASHINGTON REDSKINS minus 6½ vs. Minnesota Vikings: Defensively, the Vikes are generally weak against the pass, which means 'Skins quarterback Joe Theismann will have a field day. Against the run, Minnesota's only so-so ... so we see a 100-yard game from John Riggins. Washington's front-line will tee off on Tommy Kramer. Take the Redskins.

Sunday
American Conference

San Diego Chargers minus 2 vs. MIAMI DOLPHINS: A year ago in the playoffs against San Diego, Don Strock had to come to David Woodley's rescue. But Woodley has matured and, teaming with the Andra Franklin-led ground game, he'll methodically roll up the yards and points while the Chargers bomb away at the Miami pass defense, the league's best. Take the Dolphins.

National Conference

DALLAS COWBOYS minus 7 vs. Green Bay Packers: Dallas' defense wasn't that good last Sunday. The Bucs' offense was terrible. The Green Bay bomb squad won't be quite as accomodating. The Packers' defense is virtually the equal of Tampa Bay's, which means the Cowboys are going to have to rely on coming up with the big plays again. Don't count on it. Take the Packers.

$18 settlement could cost NFL millions

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An $18 court judgment to a fan for interest on tickets he was unable to use during the National Football League Players strike could escalate into millions of dollars if interest claims are allowed throughout the National Football League cities.

Robert R. Benkert, a small claims court commissioner for Los Angeles County, awarded Raiders fan Jeff McKnight of Woodland Hills a default judgment Wednesday for $786 dollars, including $720 for 10 tickets to each of four canceled games, $48 court costs and the $18 interest.

The interest award could cause the largest problem since teams generally plan only to either return ticket money or credit it to future purchases.

"I thought of the $2.4 million advanced to the (Raiders') owners for season tickets and I had a feeling the owners wre using such funds to finance the strike," said the 24-year-old McKnight, in explaining why he filed his suit.

The Raiders had no comment on reports that interest to their 40,000 season ticket holders could reach $720,000. With 28 teams in the league all missing games because of the strike during the 1982 regular season, the total would be in the millions.

Susan Fletcher, counsel for the Philadelphia Eagles and daughter of team owner Leonard Tose, said similar claims had been filed in other NFL cities, including one against the Eagles. Fletcher said the Eagles will file a preliminary objection to the claim.

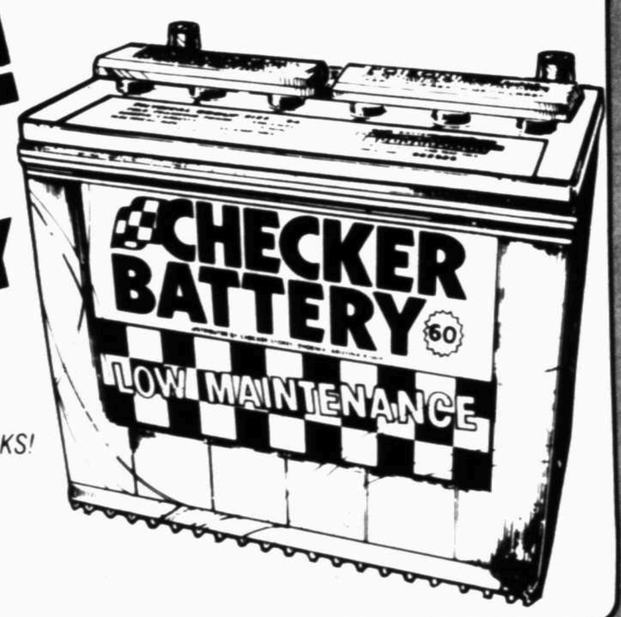

Mike McCormack, president and general manager of the Seattle Seahawks, said that interest "is part of the income projection and it's built into the ticket projection. If we didn't have interest, it probably would mean a $1 per ticket increase."

Commissioner Benkert's clerk, Pat Kennedy, said there was no precedent set in the McKnight case.

"The Small Claims Court just issues a judgment and there is no written opinion," said Kennedy.

AP Laserp.

Texas A&M guard Reggie Roberts drives against Arkansas center Joe Klein, has his shot blocked and draws the foul.

AP Sports Writer

Fresh off an upset of 20th-ranked Ohio State, Purdue meets fourth-ranked Indiana Saturday in a game that could well set the tone for this season's Big Ten Conference race.

"It's another Big Ten game," Purdue Coach Gene Keady said, "but I know the Purdue fans don't think of it that way."

Purdue honed its game for the meeting with cross-state rival Indiana by defeating Ohio State 64-57 Thursday night. Sophomore Jim Bullock led the way with a career-high 18 points, and the Boilermakers rallied from a five-point deficit midway through the second half by running off 13 straight points.

Ohio State led by as many as 10 points in the first half.

"Our team didn't do a good job offensively, and if you don't play well for 40 minutes, you get beat," Ohio State Coach Eldon Miller said.

Center Russell Cross, who did not start because of back spasms, added 17 points for Purdue, 11-2 and 2-1 in the conference. Ohio State dropped to 9-3 and 1-1 in the Big Ten.

In other games involving ranked teams, No. 4 Indiana defeated Illinois 69-55, fifth-ranked UCLA beat Oregon 97-69, No. 7 Arkansas edged Texas A&M 66-64, eighth-rated Nevada-Las Vegas defeated Pacific 86-63 and 12th-ranked Iowa beat Northwestern 66-57.

Top Ten

Randy Wittman scored 17 of his game-high 27 points in the second half, and Indiana's front line overpowered Illinois. Forward Ted Kitchel scored 20 points, and sophomore center Uwe Blab had 13 for the Hoosiers, 12-1 and 2-1 in the Big Ten.

Indiana led 36-33 at halftime but stretched that lead to 44-35 with 16:54 to play on the shooting of Wittman.

Three UCLA players — Darrin Daye, Kenny Field and Rod Foster — scored 17 points apiece for the Bruins, who had to sidestep a second-half Oregon rally to win at home. The Bruins led 40-30 at halftime but only by 60-56 with 11 minutes to play before running off 15 straight points in this Pacific 10 Conference game. UCLA is 10-1, 3-0 in the Pac 10.

Willie Cutts hit a pair of free throws with six seconds left to give Arkansas the pad it needed to defeat Texas A&M in the Southwest Conference. Center Joe Kleine paced the Razorbacks, 12-0 with a 2-0 league mark, with 19 points.

A&M trailed by only one point, 63-62, when Cutts hit his two free throws. Arkansas led by 15 points late in the first half before the Aggies came back behind the scoring of guards Reggie Roberts and Ryren Naulls. Roberts finished with 23.

Sidney Green scored 23 points and grabbed 14 rebounds to pace Nevada-Las Vegas over Pacific in a Pacific Coast Athletic Association contest. Jeff Collins added 17 points for the Runnin' Rebels, 13-0 and 3-0 in the PCAA.

Nevada-Las Vegas led 48-32 at the half and Pacific never got any closer.

Second Ten

Iowa surged ahead of Northwestern with seven straight points by Greg Stokes early in the second half and breezed to its 10th victory in 12 games. The Hawkeyes are 2-1 in the Big Ten, as are the Wildcats. Stokes finished with 17 points, while Jim Stack had 25 for Northwestern.

Unranked Teams

In the other Big Ten Conference game Thursday night, Kevin Willis scored 17 points to lead Michigan State over Wisconsin, 86-66. Michigan State now is 2-1 in the conference, while Wisconsin fell to 0-3.

Antoine Carr scored 24 points to lead Wichita State over Tulsa, 92-74, in the Missouri Valley Conference. Wichita State improved lits record to 11-1 and 3-0 in the MVC, while Tulsa fell to 1-2 in conference play.

Alex Agudio scored 25 points, and Penn State upset West Virginia 79-74 in the Atlantic 10 Conference. James McDonald scored 20 points as Southern Cal rallied to beat Oregon State 74-69 in the Pac 10.

Suns, Bucks NBA winners

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — With a six-game National Basketball Association losing streak plus majority owner Sam Schulman on their collective backs, the Seattle SuperSonics wanted to beat Phoenix in the worst possible way.

Fortunately for the Suns, that's just the way Seattle went about it Thursday night as the Sonics squandered a six-point lead entering the fourth period and lost the game 102-99 plus their claim to second place in the Pacific Division.

Rookie forward Rory White scored 12 of his career-high 14 points in the fourth quarter while veteran Maurice Lucas had eight of his 15 in the final 5½ minutes as the Suns won for the 11th time in the last 15 games. Phoenix also got 20 points from Dennis Johnson — seven coming on fourth-quarter free throws.

Seattle suffered its eighth loss overall in the last 10 games despite a game-high 23 points from Gus Williams, 20 from Lonnie Shelton and 17 from Greg Kelser.

Bucks 110, Cavaliers 100

Sidney Moncrief hit 12 of 19 shots and scored 30 points as Milwaukee handed Cleveland its 15th consecutive road loss.

The Bucks, who have beaten the Cavaliers the last 19 times the two teams have met, led by 13 points late in the third quarter, but Cleveland rallied to cut the deficit to 103-100 with 2:50 to play. Then Moncrief hit two free throws and Milwaukee scored five more points in a row to pull away again.

NHL's best goalie thinks success is weird

Leading the National Hockey League's goaltenders with a goals-against average of 2.26 per game, Peeters notched his fifth shutout of the season Thursday night as the Boston Bruins blanked high-scoring Quebec 2-0.

"This is a weird season for me," said Peeters, acquired from Philadelphia in a relatively minor trade last summer. "I'm not used to shutouts.

"I owe a lot of credit to the people in front of me," Peeters said. "I don't consider it my shutout. I consider it a team shutout."

Peeters, unbeaten since a 3-2 loss to Quebec in Boston Nov. 11, stopped 25 shots by the Nordiques, who have scored only five goals in the past five games.

Peeters, 25, came to Boston last June for defenseman Brad McCrimmon. The trade, he said, bothered him, but he said, "Sometimes it takes a trade for an individual to mature a little bit, and I've matured with the experience."

Boston defenseman Brad Park gave Peeters much of the credit for the Bruins' five-game unbeaten string. "He's playing better than anybody I've ever seen over a stretch like this," Park said.

Elsewhere in the league, Philadelphia clobbered Pittsburgh 8-1, Hartford defeated Montreal 4-2, the New York Islanders beat New Jersey 5-2, Calgary downed Vancouver 5-2, Minnesota edged Toronto 2-1, and Detroit and Los Angeles skated to a 4-4 tie.

Whalers 4, Canadiens 2

Blaine Stoughton scored three goals to pace Hartford to its first victory in 13 games. The Whalers had lost six in a row and had not won since Dec. 17 when they blanked Winnipeg 2-0.

With 10:02 gone in the game, Hartford led 3-0 a goal by Paul Lawless and two by Stoughton. Stoughton's first goal came on a power play at 7:59 of the period.

Flyers 8, Penguins 1

Bill Barber and Darryl Sittler each had a pair of goals, and Philadelphia set a club record by winning its 10th straight game. The Flyers' longest previous streak of nine came during their record 35-game unbeaten streak in the 1979-80 season.

The Flyers scored three goals in a span of 4:45 of the second period to take a 5-1 lead. The burst included a shorthanded goal by Barber and a power-play tally by Bobby Clarke.

Islanders 5, Devils 2

Bryan Trottier had two goals to power the defending Stanley Cup champions to their fourth victory in a row. Mike Bossy added three assists as the Islanders continued to rebound from a seven-week slump that saw them go 8-14-7.

Roland Melanson was in goal for the Islanders, as he had been for the previous three games of the streak, and turned away all but two of New Jersey's 27 shots.

Flames 5, Canucks 2

Lanny McDonald scored two goals, both in the second period, as Calgary defeated Vancouver for the second straight night to move into sole possession of second place in the Smythe Division.

North Stars 2, Maple Leafs 1

Minnesota's Brad Maxwell took a pass from Craig Hartsburg and beat Toronto goalie Rick St. Croix from the point at 11:30 of the third period to snap a 1-1 tie. St. Croix was nonetheless magnificent in goal for the Maple Leafs, stopping 39 shots.

Kings 4, Red Wings 4

Willie Huber scored with 34 seconds to play, lifting Detroit into a tie with Los Angeles. Huber intercepted a pass by Kings defenseman Jay Wells and scored on a 55-footer.

Mary tabbed as best female athlete for '82

TRACK — Mary Decker Tabb was named The Associated Press Female Athlete of the Year Thursday.

In the balloting by sports writers and broadcasters, announced Thursday, Tabb received 29 votes. Tennis player Martina Navratilova was second with 21 and golfer JoAnne Carner was third with 9.

Last year, Tabb was undefeated in 14 races, indoors and outdoors, and shattered numerous records before an Achilles tendon injury prematurely ended her season in August.

Both outdoors and indoors, Tabb set three world bests. She also set an American record of 8:29.71 for 3,000 meters.

For the year, she was ranked No. 1 in the world in the 5,000 and 10,000, and No. 1 in the United States in those events, plus the 800, 1,500 and 3,000.

No other American woman's distance runner ever has been so versatile and so good.

BASEBALL — The Milwaukee Brewers, defending American League champions, say they have inadvertently sold more than 70,000 tickets to their home opener April 15, although Milwaukee County Stadium seats only 53,000 fans. Brewers' officials said Thursday that telephone calls from fans hoping to purchase groups of tickets came in such a flood last month that ticket office workers were not able to keep a close count. "Somebody didn't count right," said Dick Hackett, the club's vice president in charge of marketing.

OLYMPICS — The 1984 Winter Olympic Coin Program was officially launched Thursday with the announcement that the first in a series of 18 gold and silver coins will be available in the United States within two weeks. Yugoslavian Olympic officials predicted that worldwide retail sales of the coins would range between $70 million and $90 million, with some $20 million to $30 million in sales in the United States.

FOOTBALL — Joe Gibbs of the Washington Redskins was named Pro Football Weekly's Coach of the Year and his placekicker, Mark Moseley, won the Golden Toe Award Thursday. San Diego quarterback Dan Fouts won the Offensive Player of the Year Award and Dan Hampton of the Chicago Bears was named Defensive Player of the Year, edging Mark Gastineau of the New York Jets and Hugh Green of the Tampa Bay Bucs by a single voite.

Marcus Allen of the Los Angeles Raiders and Chip Banks of the Cleveland Browns were named the offensive and defensive rookies of the year, respectively.

American Conference players dominated the All-Pro offensive squad selected by reporters, columnists and editors of the publication, with wide receiver Dwight Clark of the San Francisco 49ers the only National Conference player selected to that unit. The lone unanimous choice on the team was tight end Kellen Winslow of the Chargers.

Cowboys' Martin accused of using cocaine

DALLAS (AP) — An admitted drug dealer turned government witness said that he used cocaine with Dallas Cowboys' defensive end Harvey Martin "two or three times" and that he and Martin shared the cost of the drug.

Danny Stone, a former North Dallas barber, testified Thursday in the trial of four accused cocaine dealers that he and Martin "were in on some deals together, where he would come over and we'd do some (cocaine) and he would pay for his part."

Martin, reached after practice Thursday, acknowledged knowing Stone, but denied any dealings with him in cocaine.

"It's all a lie," Martin said. "I never thought he would lie about me like that."

Stone originally faced several federal drug charges, but pleaded guilty to a single charge of conspiracy and agreed to testify against his co-defendants in the case.

He testified about Martin outside the jury's presence, and assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Smith successfully objected that the statements were irrelevant.

Stone said outside the courtroom that he was concerned that his testimony would hurt Martin's career.

Martin, meanwhile, said, "Since Danny Stone is going to the penitentiary, he really didn't mind perjuring himself. For him to really lie on me like that, I think he would have to think he had nothing to lose, so why not perjure himself."

Stone said he was friends with Cowboys' President Tex Schramm and vice president Gil Brandt, because he cut their hair.

Schramm, reached in San Francisco, acknowledged knowing Stone. But Schramm said that "other than him being a barber in a barbershop, I wouldn't know anything else about it."

Schramm declined to comment on Stone's testimony.

Smith said he could not comment on whether Martin was investigated, or why he was not prosecuted after Stone made his allegations, but the prosecutor said that the amount of cocaine Stone said was involved probably was not enough to warrant an investigation.

On trial are John Russell Webster Jr., 40, and John Caperton, 33, both of Dallas; Delbert Paul Hoskins, 50, of Gainesville, Fla., and Robert Bode, 36, of Philadelphia. All are charged with conspiring to distribute cocaine.

Vaulters clear new heights using two poles

NEW YORK (AP) — Dan Ripley can hardly believe it — the way pole vaulters have learned to grab the top of the crossbar while soaring over it, preventing it from falling.

"I've never been that smart to think about doing it," Ripley said Monday. "I just try to get over the bar."

While Ripley has not yet taken advantage of the manuever, others have profitted greatly. One is Dave Volz of Indiana University, who set an American record of 18 feet, 9½ inches last June in a triangular meet against West Germany and Pan Africa at Durham, N.C. Another is Joe Dial of Oklahoma State University, who cleared 18-2 in beating Ripley in the Dartmouth Relays at Hanover, N.H. over the weekend.

"VOLZ IS a master at it," said Ripley, whose career best of 18-9¼ was an American record when he reached it early last June in the USA Championships at Knoxville, Tenn., where he tied Billy Olson for the title.

"Dial, I know, has been working on it in practice.

"It's not going to work every time. You can't count on it. But when it works, you can add three or four inches to your height."

There is no rule preventing a vaulter from intentionally trying to keep the bar aloft with his hands while in the process of clearing.

"It would be difficult to enforce," Ripley said.

That manuever, along with motivation spurred by the 1984 Olympic Games at Los Angeles, has helped American vaulters regain their world prominence, Ripley said.

The United States, which won 16 of the first 17 gold medals in the Olympics, has not won the gold since Bob Seagren in 1968.

NBC wants quality, better ratings

By DON FREEMAN
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Historians have recorded that if Christopher Columbus had been on NBC, the world would have been flat. And as long ago as 1979, Bob Hope, himself on NBC, cracked on one of his TV specials: "Christmas is the only thing on NBC that hasn't been canceled."

Well, it is all a matter of cycles. ABC was once the doormat network, the one you forgot to introduce at a party, the one whose phone calls were never returned. In that time, it was said that the best way to stop the war in Vietnam was to put it on ABC and it would be canceled in 13 weeks.

A year and a half ago, NBC brought in Grant Tinker to assume the tiller for the No. 3 outfit. The network was in a tailspin and most of the blame was falling on Fred Silverman, who a few years earlier had defected from the executive suite at ABC.

NBC, they say, had lured Fred by offering a cool million-plus-a-year and perks. His mission was to bring in the ratings. And, if it wasn't too much trouble, some prestige, too.

Silverman was — well, he was different. In the past, the networks had been run by sleek, faceless men who never perspired and whose names were known only to readers of Variety. Suddenly, we had this upstart Fred Silverman as a symbol for the high-powered TV mogul and his name was not only in Variety but all over the papers that the (in show biz terms) civilians read.

WHY WAS THAT, anyway? Silverman himself had, then and now, all the personality of a dial tone. But he walked with power. And his spectacular rise — and his bouncing around the networks, always in top jobs — coincided with the feeling in some quarters that the public is helplessly intrigued by these chieftains and their corporate chess moves.

I, personally, believe that this is a myth.

It is my contention that if you were to have stopped the average person on the street (away from Beverly Hills or midtown Manhattan) and said: "Listen! Fred Silverman was just canned and he was replaced by Grant Tinker! What do you think of that?"

The query would have brought a blank stare: "Who the hell is Fred Silverman and what does he do?"

Well, that is a good question. He was a network big shot, a potentate, a muncher on hummingbird wings atop Mount Olympus. Fred didn't get fired because he permitted the "Steve Allen Comedy Hour" to be canceled (although I would call that a firing offense). Fred was cashiered because he couldn't raise NBC's ratings and also NBC's profits, all of which affected the stock of NBC and its parent company, RCA. Ratings mean money, bushels of it, and a network needs money to function. And small profits, in the millions, aren't enough. This is big-time pool.

Fred, in short, didn't pick the right shows for his schedule. He initiated such gems as "Supertrain" and "98" and "Sweepstakes." The Russians invaded Afghanistan and NBC took a bath when its Olympics coverage was canceled.

IT WAS ABOUT THEN that Silverman said, wryly: "If J.R. had been on NBC, and somebody took a shot at him, they would have missed."

Along came Grant Tinker, a different kind of fellow. It was once said of Fred Silverman: "His idea of small talk is the present schedule, and his idea of important talk is next year's schedule. You wouldn't want to sit next to him at a dinner party."

Grant Tinker has always stood for quality.

And now here was Grant Tinker, given a trying year and a half in the top job, at a press conference recently before the wilted flower of the television press and he is saying: "We can only handle so many quality, time-period-starting shows." And: "The history of television is that well-written, well-directed and well-acted shows are not immediate hits."

He cited "MASH" and "Mary Tyler Moore" and "All in the Family" and, of course, "Hill Street Blues."

IT IS A MASS medium, network television is, and the game is to attract the multitudes to lead off your schedule. But Tinker would still like those mass shows to be, in his phrase, "made to the premise and executed well." He is searching for a smash, non-junk lead-in hit (a "Mork & Mindy," say) with mass appeal while the estimable quality percolates. It is harder to do this than he once thought it would be. He says he won't stoop to putting on "witless stuff." That makes it harder.

So, Tinker says, NBC is edging up but slowly. Still, the network is No. 2 several nights a week now and that's news. The trend has been reversed. They are no longer shooting themselves in the foot.

Afterward, I asked Tinker if he was watching much TV and he grinned and said: "That's at least one reason I'd like television to be better. I'd like to watch some television. But I am watching more on NBC — for pleasure and professionally — than I used to not so long ago. I hope — no, I expect — to be watching even more."

Churchill once shunned as buffoon

NEW YORK (AP) — It is strange to think that for several years before World War II, Winston Churchill was shunned by many as a buffoon and even a dangerous crank.

But the man millions the world over consider among the most important figures of the century was driven into virtual exile in the decade before his period of greatest achievement.

The story of the time Churchill spent out of power in the 1930s is dramatized in "Winston Churchill: The Wilderness Years," scheduled to begin Sunday night on public TV's "Masterpiece Theatre."

The eight-part, British-made series paints a vivid portrait of this strange and remarkable man who seemed doomed at the time to becoming a minor footnote to history.

The production was adapted from Martin Gilbert's account of Churchill's life between 1929 and 1939. Richard Broke, the director, says he was sold on the idea of a TV series after reading proofs of Gilbert's book, and talking with the biographer.

"Churchill was a rebel," Broke says, "a good character for a drama. Even though he had lost his political power, he stood up in the House of Commons and over and over again attacked his own party over the India question.

"He also worked harder than anybody I've ever heard of," the director says. "He had his finger in every pie. He said in a letter to Clemmie that 'there is no battlefield on which one can afford not to be present.' And he was present on every one."

Entering 1929, Churchill was the second most powerful member of the British government, having distinguished himself from his earliest years as a soldier, writer and politician.

An engineer for Grumman Aircraft of Long Island, New York, uses computer graphics to design a single-seat prototype airplane. For Designers and draftsmen, the growing use of the computer has meant liberation from the time-consuming process of drawing engineering plans by hand. Grumman says that by using graphic plotters connected to computers, engineers have access to thousands of geometric shapes used to design aircraft parts. The engineer can generate quality drawings in minutes by pushing a button.

Inflation down sharply due to recession

By Robert Burns
AP Business Writer

Wholesale prices nudged up 0.1 percent in December, bringing the rise for all of 1982 to 3.5 percent, the smallest gain since the 3.2 percent increase 11 years ago, the Labor Department reported Friday morning.

The inflation rate at the wholesale level was down sharply from the 7.1 percent rate of 1981 and the double-digit rates of 1980 and 1979.

Prolonged recession, which has raised unemployment to a 42-year high and the business failure rate to a 50-year high, combined with bountiful harvests and a worldwide oil glut to hold down prices, economists said.

But in a switch from its previous gloom, the American auto industry is exhibiting signs of modest improvement as lower interest rates lure more car buyers.

New car sales in early January were up 11.6 percent from one year ago, the five major companies reported Thursday, in a hopeful sign for an industry that has stagnated for three years. Domestic automakers have been suffering from the high cost of borrowing and stiff competition from imports.

But falling interest rates and a dropping rate of inflation has helped stimulate automobile sales in recent weeks. Sales in December were up 25.3 percent from a year earlier.

The automakers also reported Thursday that the number of U.S. workers on indefinite layoff fell this week to 269,227 — the first drop in eight weeks.

The five major U.S. companies said they sold 112,322 new cars in the first 10 days of January. The daily sales rate of 16,046 vehicles was the best for that period since 1980.

Ford Motor Co. had the best year-to-year increase, up 33.3 percent. Ford also announced it will not pay a dividend to holders of its common stock in the current business quarter, marking the first time since the company first sold stock to the public in 1956 that it has failed to pay a dividend for more than one year.

General Motors Corp. reported a 9.9 percent sales gain. Sales at Chrysler Corp. dropped 13.1 percent, and Volkswagen of America Inc. was off 8.1 percent. American Motors Corp., which does not report 10-day sales, was up an estimated 99.6 percent.

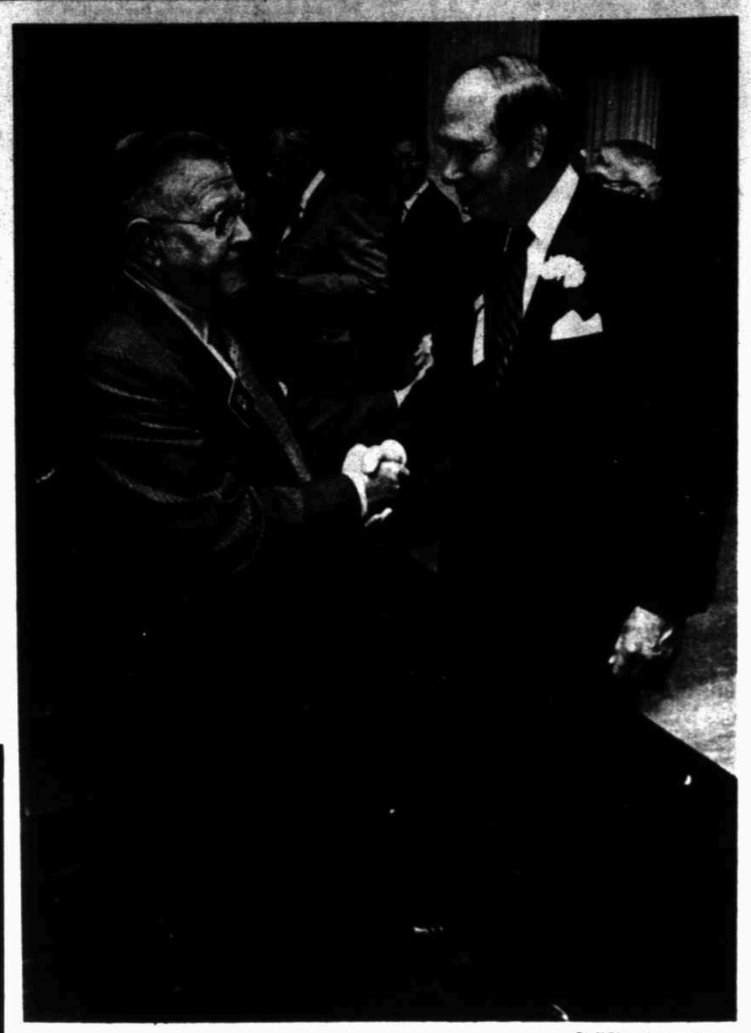

In other economic developments Thursday:

—The Commerce Department reported that overall business sales rose 1.2 percent last November. That was a reversal from the 2 percent drop of last October. The report also said businesses reduced their inventories of unsold goods by 1.1 percent in November. The previous month's decline was a revised 0.2 percent.

—In Washington, the new chairman of U.S. Chamber of Commerce brushed aside President Reagan's appeal for each business to hire one unemployed worker. "It is probably a good idea — but nothing more than a good idea." said Robert T. Thompson.

—The State Department, acting just two weeks before a scheduled visit to Peking by Secretary of State George P. Shultz, imposed import curbs on Chinese textiles after the two countries failed to reach a new quota agreement. John Hughes, the State Department's chief spokesman, said the decision is not expected to result in the cancellation of the Shultz trip, now set for Feb. 2-6.

—The president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, James Wooten, predicted that mortgage interest rates will not drop much more following a sharp decline in the past few months. "We may have come awfully close to where the bottom is," Wooten told a New York news conference at an economic outlook conference sponsored by the association.

Wilcat Committee honors Shell Oil

Shell Oil Company was honored Thursday evening with a Wildcat Committee reception at the Petroleum Club. The reception was given to recognize Shell's long history and prominent role in the Permian Basin oil industry.

Shell began as an oil marketing company on the West Coast. It moved into oil and gas production through the purchase of several production companies.

One of those companies, Roxana Petroleum Corp., was active in West Texas in the early days. It is through the purchase of Roxana that Shell came to the Permian Basin, said John F. Bookout, president of Shell Oil.

Shell maintained a large regional headquarters operation in Midland through the mid-1970s. Most of the staff was moved to Houston following a reorganization of company operations.

Today Shell has approximately 890 employees in the Permian Basin region, Bookout said. They work in the exploration, production, refinery and piepline divisions.

"On a production basis we still have about 70,000 barrels a day of oil production, about 235 million cubic feet of gas production per day and we extract about 16,000 barrels a day in plant liquids from gas," Bookout said.

Shell has done a lot of research and development in enhanced oil recovery, Bookout said. Shell is now convinced injection of carbon dioxide into producing formations is "the new frontier" and offers a lot of promise in the Permian Basin.

"That's where our large expenditures are going. Right now we're engaged in building an almost 500-mile pipeline ... to bring CO2 to this part of the country."

Half the CO2 moved down the line will be used in old Shell fields, Bookout said; the other half will be available for sale to other producers in the region for their own enhanced recovery projects.

Shell's first project will be in Wasson field's Denver unit, Bookout said.

The 25,000-acre unit in northern Gaines County has been produced under primary production techniques and by waterflooding, or secondary production techniques. When the CO2 injection begins, a third stage, or tertiary production, will begin.

"Really big dollars we're talking about there," Bookout said. "The building of the pipeline, development of the CO2 deposit in Colorado and the Denver unit expenditures alone will probably — for Shell and our partners — be about $1.3 billion.

"And we think another billion dollars will probably be spent in the future in applying CO2 recovery techniques to other fields.

Beer company ads clone worn concept

By The Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

Although hundreds of millions of dollars are being spent each year on advertising that stresses the differences in U.S. beers, foreigners often complain they all taste pretty much alike and there is little to choose among them.

Even the more candid of U.S. beer producers will privately admit the differences are not huge. Still, while it is geared to stressing whatever slight differences that do exist, the advertising itself has a sameness so prevalent that it appears to be by design. But it isn't.

With notably few exceptions — the Miller Lite campaign, the Olympia Artesians, the sparkling humor of the Henry Weinhard ads and the single Clydesdale running free in the surf and snow for Budweiser Light — the actors as well as the names of the beers in these commercials appear interchangeable.

The sameness is brought into sharper relief at this time of year because of the flood of sporting events on television and the proximity of the ads for the beer companies that sponsor them.

While privately acknowledging the sameness in much of the advertising, beer producers say that the narrow demographics of the audience they are trying to reach (young adults) limits the situations they can use.

"There's not a beer in the country that hasn't used the beach party clambake or the picnic scenario," says an executive of one Milwaukee brewery. "I guess we're all operating from the same 30 or so stereotype situations, but it isn't because we want to, it's because there just isn't as much creativity out there as you'd expect."

For the present, the beach party clambake is getting a rest, but the "country-western" saga is more than filling the void. This features excessively healthy young couples exuberantly dancing in a tavern despite the obvious constraints of pelvis-pinching jeans and cowboy boots.

A Busch beer commercial shows cowboys finishing chores and heading to a tavern after work for a Busch. Miller's new "Welcome to Miller time" campaign shows a series of vignettes of workers knocking off — farmers, cowboys, dock workers — and heading to a tavern for a Miller's. Coors has one showing a dock worker heading to a tavern for a Coors.

Olympia Gold is running a commercial showing two guys going one-on-one in basketball. Michelob has two guys going one-on-one in basketball. Budweiser Light has two guys going one-on-one in football and two others in racquetball.

In beer advertising, old ideas are never allowed to die. Lowenbrau used to have a bachelor-party commercial. Coors will soon run a bachelor-party commercial.

And a campaign is never exclusive. Natural Light for more than a year has been running a campaign associated with food. One commercial is a fishing scene with the seafood being eaten later. Old Milwaukee has a new commercial showing fishing in Louisiana, with the bass then being eaten. A second shows young guys catching and later eating stone crabs in the Florida Keys. Coors has a mountain cabin commercial. Lowenbrau has two mountain cabin commercials. And so the game goes.

But any viewer thinking that a break is due had better take another drink. Despite the $400,000 for 30 seconds that NBC is asking on the Super Bowl telecast, an Olympia spokesman says he expects to see "about a dozen brands advertised. Last year we counted nine."

SHARP ELECTRONICS USES AD SATURATION

No sooner had the Christmas video game advertising blitz abated than Sharp Electronics commercials began to pop up all over the TV screen. In the last couple of weeks Sharp has sponsored three Christmas specials as well as a major portion of the "Johnny Carson Show," the Cotton Bowl, the Rose Bowl and "Monday Night Football."

The push, with eight separate commercials so far, is the heaviest in the company's history by a wide margin, but it is only the beginning, according to Dan Infanti, marketing communications manager for Sharp's consumer electronics division.

"We intend to continue advertising heavily right through 1983," Infanti said. The campaign's theme is "From Sharp minds come Sharp products." The first 23 seconds of each commercial focuses on a specific product story, be it a microwave oven, a calculator or cash register. The final seven seconds features a micro chip held with a pair of tweezers with the voiceover, "We've replaced a half million transistors and diodes with one microchip," followed by the firm's logo.

Sharp Electronics, a division of Sharp Corp. of Japan, is based in Paramus, N.J., and has been operating in this country for 20 years.

Sharp's President T. Sugawa, in explaining the heavy advertising push, said that he expected an economic upturn and his company was doing its part to stimulate such a surge.

Infanti said that the advertising cutbacks by some other consumer product companies after the Christmas season had provided Sharp with extra opportunities to buy television time and that the company was looking for other programs to sponsor.

Lined up so far are the Pro Bowl, the Grammy Awards show and full sponsorship of a nationally syndicated NCAA basketball package, which will be seen in 85 percent of the country.

The cost for all this? Sharp isn't saying, but Infanti admits the company's ad budget had "more than doubled."

CRYSTAL — JUST FOR YOU

Anyone with a yen to buy something unique is being invited by the producers of Waterford Crystal to take advantage of them.

But unless you have at least $1 million, you need not apply.

The ad describes the $1 million offer as "an investment that defies simple arithmetic." Most people's anyway.

AMF Tuboscope Inc. employees at the company's Midkiff Road plant were informed this week the plant will shut down in two weeks for an indefinite period.

Thirty-two employees were given two weeks' notice of the layoff. They will receive vacation and severance pay, according to regional manager Wayne Thompson.

The remaining 40-45 employees, most with more seniority than the laid-off workers, will be transferred to AMF's other plant in Midland, which will continue to operate on County Road 128 West.

At both plants, employees treated tubing used in injection wells with anti-corrosive material.

The temporary shut down does not affect the company's field inspection office in Odessa.

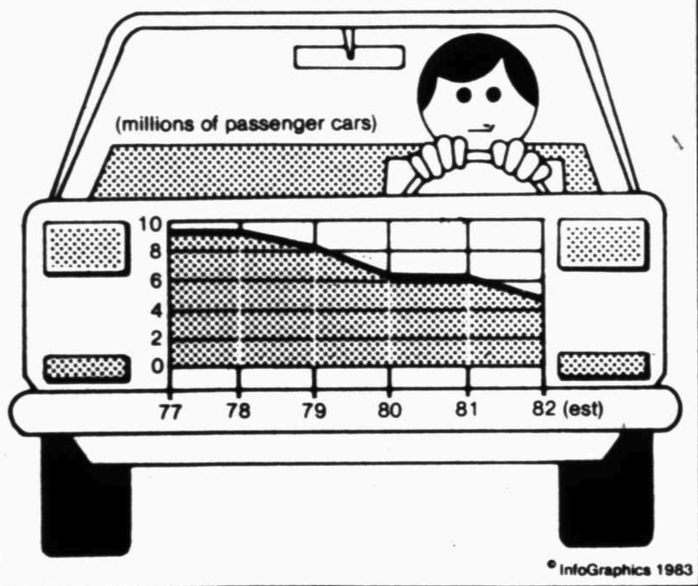

Thompson said he expects the Midkiff Road plant to reopen in three to six months, based on company hopes that secondary and tertiary recovery projects in the oil field will pick up in 1983, creating a demand for Tuboscope services. If the plant reopens, he said the hourly workers will be called back based on their seniority.

The Midkiff Road plant opened here in May 1982. "We were trying to operate two plants, but business slowed down such that I had to close one," Thompson explained.

The lay off reduces the AMF Tuboscope workforce in Midland by about 20 from the total employed during the boom in 1981, Thompson said. The workforce had been increased in May when the new plant opened.

Auto production falls

U.S. car production has dropped 45 percent since 1977, from 9.2 million to 5.1 million a year.

Gray will be nominated for board

WASHINGTON — Edwin J. Gray, a savings and loan executive and a longtime aide to Ronald Reagan, will be named by the president to chair the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, sources here said Thursday.

Gray, 47, is expected to be nominated by Mr. Reagan in two or three weeks to fill a vacancy on the three-member board and then succeed Richard T. Pratt as chairman in April or May.

LTV to sell rocket launchers abroad

DALLAS (SWN) — The LTV Corporation announced today that its Vought Corporation aerospace subsidiary has received the first foreign order for the Multiple Launch Rocket System.

The United Kingdom has placed a $5.2 million order for four MLRS launchers, 108 practice rockets and other training equipment for delivery in 1985.

The British contract award was an option in Vought's Fiscal 1983 production contract with the United States Army, principal customer for MLRS. The U.S. government will purchase the equipment from Vought and resell it to the U.K. as part of the Foreign Military Sales program.

MLRS is a new battlefield artillery system developed jointly by the United States, the United Kingdom, France, West Germany and Italy.

By DON FREEMAN
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — "One of the most complete personalities to have descended upon us in many a mournful moon," critic Walter Kerr once wrote about Leslie Uggams.

I like that line. I like its flavor and, most of all, I like its accuracy. A complete personality is what Leslie Uggams is and you see her and at once there is a rush of memories: Kizzie in "Roots," Lillian Parks in "Backstairs at the White House."

And, by all means, there is the remembrance of Leslie Uggams, at 17, singing with great style and maturity, on that vintage piece of television, "Sing Along With Mitch."

And now there is that disarmingly warm, buoyant and most appealing smile which comes to light as she talks about the next goal — she would like to play Josephine Baker. It is a name redolent of another era — two or three eras, in fact. Josephine Baker, a performer of stunning flair, a St. Louis woman, an American expatriate in Paris between the wars when Hemingway was there and James Joyce and Ezra Pound, and books were written and music was played and there were great black jazz musicians over from the states, playing in the boites.

"JOSEPHINE BAKER was a part of a special time and she was known for being outrageous and flamboyant and the dance she did wearing a lot of fruit and not much more," said Leslie Uggams in an interview. "In World War II, she worked with the French resistance forces and the Nazis caught her and forced her to drink some kind of poison. But she recovered and later she came to America and there was some incident in the Stork Club and Walter Winchell wrote terrible things about her."

Leslie paused now. There is as much pain as celebrity in Josephine Baker's long and tempestuous career. "She adopted a bunch of children. She was a very compassionate, giving woman. Everywhere she went, to the Far East or to South America and all over Europe, Josephine Baker was an enormous star. Only in America, her homeland, was she considered something less.

"From an earliest time, I knew of Josephine Baker. My mother danced in the chorus line at the Cotton Club back when Lena Horne was working in front of the line as a soubrette. Lena wasn't much of a dancer but when she started to sing she was really something.

"ANYWAY, MY mother used to talk about Josephine Baker and my father, who sang in the Hall Johnson Choir, would talk abou' Josephine Baker. I heard so much about the sensational Josephine Baker. And then, finally, Josephine Baker came to Los Angeles in the early 1970s, and my husband and I went to see her and she was marvelous. An incredible personality. Dynamic. No longer young but she had the fire and magnetism of old."

"Did you go backstage?" I asked.

Leslie smiled ruefully. "No," she said.

"But why not?"

"I don't know," she said, with uncertainty. "Shy, I guess. Whatever, I didn't and it would have been nice to have met her, to tell her, personally, how great she is and how I had heard about her all my life."

Leslie Marian Uggams grew up in New York. A black woman, her ancestral background includes traces of Scotch, Irish, Cherokee and Seminole Indian. Her surname, in fact, is said to be derived from an Indian word meaning "sweet one." She started singing when she started talking and soon she was a kid performer. She worked the old Milton Berle show and the Arthur Godfrey show and the Sid Caesar-Imogene Coca show. She went to Professional Children's School.

AND SHE performed at the Apollo Theater in Harlem. "I saw them all at the Apollo," Leslie says, saying the storied word "Apollo" with a blend of affection and awe.

"Louis Armstrong, Ella Fitzgerald, Dinah Washington, all of them, all the giants worked the Apollo. And I was always in the wings, every show, watching, studying. I learned how to talk, how to walk, how to get off a stage when your act was over, which is very, very important."

Now she is co-host of the weekday NBC series for kids called "Fantasy," but she became a TV star long ago on "Sing Along With Mitch."

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — The Cleopatra of Benedict Canyon sweeps into the room in snakeskin-tight faded blue jeans and a pink sweatshirt.

This is Cher, the better-looking half of Sonny; the bell-bottomed singer whose voice was like a foghorn; the deadpanning, superluminous star of weekly television. The Vegas headliner.

And now, Cher, the actress. She's 36 and although not necessarily all grown up, it's time, says Cher, to take her seriously.

That would have been difficult a year ago. Cher had been making the rounds in Hollywood for a good five years, knocking on the doors of producers and directors, asking if they didn't have something they could use her in.

"On the basis of what?" was the usual reply.

Since the release of Robert Altman's quirky film "Come Back to the 5 and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean," however, it all seems a bit more plausible. Among the performances by Cher, Sandy Dennis and Karen Black in the film, it's been Cher's acting that has been particularly singled out. Not necessarily great, the critics have said, but not bad either.

Has it taken her by surprise?

"I'm not really surprised. I mean, I'm not surprised that everyone would be so surprised that I could be good in a film. I knew that people didn't take me seriously. But everyone seems to be acting like I just crawled out of a rock or something."

The turning point came a year ago last November when she finally became so disgruntled with Hollywood's rejection of her that Cher went to New York to study acting with the late Lee Strasberg and to see what she could pick up off-Broadway.

Linda Ronstadt had something to do with the decision. "I don't want Linda to take this as anything bad," Cher says, "but I'd gone to see her in 'Pirates of Penzance' and I thought, well, if Linda Ronstadt can be up there on stage, I've got to go to New York."

Once there, Cher met with Joseph Papp, who greeted her skeptically. "I can't tell if you're talented from that crap you did on television," he told her. Nevertheless, he handed her the script of "I'm Getting My Act Together and Taking It on the Road," and asked her to rehearse it and then audition for him.

By coincidence, the day she auditioned (pleasantly surprising Papp in the process) she received a call from Robert Altman, who said he wanted to meet with her. Cher's mother, a friend of Altman's, had dialed Altman's phone number by mistake (!) and then mentioned that her daughter was in New York trying to make it as an actress.

Source predicts more resignations

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The mid-term "housecleaning" taking place within the highest echelons of the Reagan administration is "voluntary," report senior White House advisers, and will culminate in the resignations of two additional cabinet secretaries and two top presidential aides.

Following the surprise resignations of Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis and Health and Human Services Secretary Richard Schweiker, senior White House aides and an independent source close to President Reagan forecast the departure in the near future of the four additional officials.

They are: Housing and Urban Development Secretary Samuel S. Pierce of New York, Education Secretary Terrel L. Bell of Utah, Office of Management and Budget Director David Stockman of Michigan, and White House Deputy Chief of Staff Michael Deaver of California.

The source who enjoys a close friendship with the president said "before summer" he anticipates that Pierce, viewed as one of the "least effective" Reagan appointees, and Bell, who has failed to dismantle his department, will bow out. He said Deaver, an intimate associate of Reagan's for many years, also will leave prior to summer for a high paying job in private business.

STOCKMAN, A WHITE House source said, will depart after congressional approval of fiscal 1984 later this year. Stockman reportedly plans to return to Michigan to launch a 1984 campaign for the U.S. Senate seat held by Democrat Carl Levin.

Among the secretaries listed by the source as "entrenched" for the "duration" were George Schultz of State, William French Smith of Justice, Donald Regan of the Treasury, James G. Watt of the Interior, John R. Block of Agriculture, Malcolm Baldridge of Commerce and Raymond Donovan of Labor.

He said Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who has been ailing on and off, will remain as long as his health permits.

Lewis and Schweiker, the aides say, are departing because of lucrative job offers and not because of policy disagreements with President Reagan or his top staff.

"Drew would have liked to have stayed on but wanted to move to another job," an adviser to the president said. "He's an action oriented, dynamic guy and he said, 'hell, I have done all of these things. What else is there for me to do.' At the same time came a corporation and said, 'hey, how about doing this for us.' So he looked around (the White House) but there was nothing available so he took the private industry offer."

"DICK SCHWEIKER has been in public service most of his life and never made any money," the source went on. "Here is an opportunity to make a very large bundle and stay in Washington. Dick's father was a very prominent man, very highly regarded but the family, though comfortable, was not wealthy."

Lewis will become chief executive officer of the Warner-Amex Cable Communications Inc. and Schweiker will serve as president of the American Council of Life Insurance, lobbying group based in Washington.

The sources made no attempt to deny that the relationship between Schweiker and some White House staffers, especially Stockman, were stormy, at best, with fights over welfare, medical programs, health insurance and Social Security.

They pointed out, however, that except for a flap over Schweiker's 1981 proposal to cut Social Security benefits for early retirees, a plan that was rejected 96-0 by the Senate and then knocked down by Reagan, Schweiker won most of his battles.

Lewis, viewed as one of Reagan's best appointees, had made it no secret he wanted to stay on but wanted to move to a more visible and more challenging job. He was particularly interested in being appointed as the White House chief of staff, a job held by James Baker, a multi-millionaire Houston lawyer.

REAGAN OFFERED Lewis the chairmanship of the Republican National Committee party but Lewis turned it down. Reagan then chose his close friend, Sen. Paul Laxalt of Nevada, for the post.

Baker has also made it no secret he pines to be the attorney general. But French Smith, a rich Reagan family lawyer, loves the Washington social scene and does not want to return to California. He is interested in a Supreme Court seat. But there are no current vacancies.

One White House scenario has French Smith eventually getting the judgeship, Baker succeeding him at Justice and National Security adviser William Clark, who served as Reagan's chief of staff in California, sliding into the chief of staff post.

The source said that presidential counsellor Edwin Meese, another Californian, will stay on in his job as long as he wants despite rumors he had fallen out of favor and could be on his way out.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I had an abortion a few years ago when I was 18 years old because I just didn't feel emotionally mature enough to have a child. Now I am married and would like to start a family. Will the abortion hurt my chances of having a successful pregnancy? — Lois, Teaneck, N.J.

Dear Lois: According to a study by researchers at the University of Hawaii, there does not appear to be a significant association between induced abortion and subsequent pregnancy loss.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I stepped in a hole while jogging across a lawn and sprained my ankle. I thought sure the doctor would put it in a cast because it really hurt, but he didn't. The ankle is much better and I have no complaints, but it seems to me that a cast would have speeded things up and got me back on my feet a lot sooner. — Dave, Springfield, Ill.

Dear Dave: Some physicians believe that using a cast for an ankle sprain actually increases the period of disability. Dr. James G. Garrick, director of the center for sports medicine at Saint Francis Memorial Hospital in San Francisco, says he never uses a cast on an ankle unless a bone is broken. He explains that placing an ankle in a cast weakens the surrounding muscles.

Furthermore, it is a general principle among orthopedists that two days of rehabilitation are needed for every day that an ankle remains in a cast.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am 52 years old, in good health, and want to stay that way. I don't smoke, I'm careful about what I eat, and I exercise regularly. I also perform breast self-examination regularly, and what I'd like to know is whether you consider this sufficient protection against breast cancer. — Marie, Philadelphia.

Dear Marie: First let me congratulate you on doing those things that are within the power of everyone to do to protect their health. Your lifestyle certainly appears to be one that is conducive to good health.

As for you specific question, I can best answer that by citing the conclusions of the National Task Force on Breast Cancer Control of the American Cancer Society. After a five-year study that involved the screening of more than 28,000 women, it concluded that mammography performed annually in women over 50 years of age can reduce the death rate from breast cancer by approximately 30 percent.

Mammography is able to detect a cancer that is too small to be detected even by an experienced examiner. As you might imagine, the smaller the cancer, the more likely it is to be confined to the breast and to be curable.

For Randy, Hoboken, New Jersey: What makes you think that people from "good" families don't get syphilis? I can assure you that if an individual is exposed to syphilis, the organism does not inquire about the person's socioeconomic status. One thing you can say about the disease is that it does not discriminate.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Heart attack survivors who resume sexual activity "almost invariably" have a better chance of returning to work and socializing than those who do not, a psychiatrist says.

Dr. Thomas P. Hackett, chief of psychiatry at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, says it is a damaging myth "that once you have a (heart attack), you're over the hill and there's no sense in even talking about sex because you can't have it anymore."

Blood product may be linked to syndrome

By The Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

A freeze-dried blood product, widely used by hemophiliacs to stop bleeding, may be linked to changes in their ability to fight infections, according to two studies published earlier this week in the New England Journal of Medicine.

The changes are similar to those seen in a new and often fatal disorder, acquired immune deficiency syndrome, which was first discovered in homosexual men. The syndrome has also been found in a small number of patients with hemophilia, as well as drug addicts and people of Haitian descent.

The findings among small groups of hemophilia patients studied in Cleveland and Milwaukee have raised the question whether the 12,000 to 15,000 patients in the United States with classic hemophilia, most of whom use the freeze-dried material, should switch to an older, more cumbersome form of treatment.

Physician-researchers at Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, who conducted one of the new studies, have taken their patients off the freeze-dried product, although they admit that the evidence for doing so is still incomplete.

But many of those involved in the treatment of hemophilia are concerned that the freeze-dried products used may expose their patients to increased risk of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Both groups of researchers found changes in the infection-fighting white cells of otherwise healthy hemophiliacs who were using freeze-dried blood products to control bleeding.

The changes were similar to, but less severe, than those seen in patients who have acquired immune defiency syndrome.

The blood changes were not seen in small numbers of hemophiliacs who were being treated with a blood product, called cryoprecipitate, made by freezing blood and then thawing it slowly. The cryoprecipitate, unlike freeze-dried products, still contains water.

The freeze-dried product, however, is made commercially by pooling blood fractions taken from as many as 5,000 donors per batch. In the course of a year, a hemophiliac may use batches of the product made from the blood of hundreds of thousands of donors.

An associate editor of the New England Journal, Dr. Jane F. Desforges, suggests in an editorial that the new evidence about the freeze-dried material ought to cause physicians to consider changing the way they treat hemophilia.

But other physicians believe it is wrong to make a change that will drastically alter the lives of hemophiliacs, based on such limited studies.

"There has not been sufficient research to justify that radical a change," said Dr. Robert R. Montgomery, a physician on the staff of the Great Lakes Hemophilia Foundation in Milwaukee, and an author of one of the new studies.

Yet the evidence continues to grow that the new immune syndrome is a transmissible disease, possibly caused by a virus, that can be spread by blood products.

Last summer, the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta reported the first confirmed cases of the syndrome among hemophiliacs, who require blood products in order to survive.

Senators visit Latin America to look for end to conflicts

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Sen. John Glenn says he and Sen. Christopher Dodd are visiting four Latin American countries to look for ways to end the conflicts in Central America and improve the economic situation in the region.

"We want to think of how we can get a new focus on Central American economic affairs in order to figure out how to eliminate some obstacles that stand in the way," said Glenn, D-Ohio.

Saying he was expressing a personal view, Dodd, D-Conn., said, "I am sure the Central American crisis is one that must be solved through political rather than military means."

Dodd said they talked with the Mexican president about what the two countries could do about the international economic crisis and Central America.

It wasn't too long ago that Midlanders were buried under about eight inches of snow. But spring-like weather this week has allowed everyone to enjoy the outdoors once again. For Amanda Douglas, 3, and her brother Robert, 4, the pleasant weather offered a chance to try out that new wagon. Amanda and Robert are children of Frankie Douglas, 401 E. Magnolia.

Council considers airport zoning plan

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Plans to zone land around Midland Regional Airport to avoid problems from encroaching developments were reviewed Thursday morning by Midland City Council members with the decision being they couldn't accept any. They liked bits and pieces from two of the three plans, and the engineer was sent back to use that for designing a fourth zoning concept.

A continuation of Tuesday's regular session, the meeting was held in City Hall's conference room, which became cramped as the council, planning staff members, airport board members and some developers filled the space.

Midland is the fourth Texas city which is drawing up an airport zoning plan since the legislation was passed last year. The other cities are Dallas, Wichita Falls and Baytown, according to John Mason with the engineering and planning firm of Carter & Burgess, Inc., in Dallas.

"ONE THING I see as a regular occurrence is a city or military base will build an airport out in the hinterlands. Businesses and residences move in around the airport and then people discover it is a nuisance. People begin to complain to the city council and want it shut down. This law from the State Legislature ensures compatibility for future development in, near and around airports."

Midland Regional Airport is facing that problem of encroachment. According to Col. Wilson Banks, aviation director, "The sooner we get some kind of zoning, the better we'll be. They're moving in on us."

After the meeting, Banks explained there is a housing development north of the airport and a lot of mobile homes and houses going in directly south of it between Highway 80 and Interstate 20.

"We need to do whatever we can in the way of zoning to protect the airport, but at the same time approach it from the landowner's standpoint. We're not out to control their land.

"This airport," he added, "is the most important thing we have going for this area. You can't go out and find more land for an airport like this."

Under the new law, said the engineer Mason, municipalities can zone outside corporate boundaries for land use in airport zoning. And it allows the city to zone the land in any number of ways.

The primary consideration in land use zoning is the noise level, or pollution. The closer to the airport, the higher the noise level. The farther away a building is, the less the noise will be, Mason pointed out with maps and figures.

BASIC NOISE CONTOUR levels at Midland Regional Airport have been determined by the Texas Aeronautics Commission, he said. In addition, the city's zoning can be extended to five miles from the end of the runway and 1½ miles on each side. At Midland with two major runways, this gives 60 square miles over which the city can hold jurisdiction.

Using the noise contours and typical land use concepts, Mason said the five zones should be residential on the outer fringes, office closer in to residential, commercial or retail in the third area, warehouses or industrial inside of that and industrial manufacturing on the inside ring next to the airport.

"These land uses were placed on the basis of noise," he said.

Mason also referred to these designations as airport overlay zones (AOZ). Within that zone, the developer must comply with certain noise attenuations, or weakening of the volume.

The airport overlay zones were divided into four areas with the least noise impact being in AO1 and the highest being in AO4. Mason explained that manufacturing and warehouses could go in AO4 while residential could be located in AO1.

PLAN 1 OUTLINED in detail the various zoning that would be allowed. Plan 2 used primarily AO zones. And Plan 3 designated industrial uses in the internal map adjacent to the airport with AE uses placed on the fringes. This means, however, that anyone wanting to put residences in AE would have to go through the city's planning process for a zone change.

The councilmen told Mason they would like to see Plans 2 and 3 combined and the stricter industrial zoning extended east and west before they would consider approving a design.

Councilman Tom Sloan noted that this type of zoning "is so completely different that I don't think we should mix it up with the Planning and Zoning Commission. Let the Airport Zoning Board handle it. They (developers) could get a decision at one meeting without the million steps you have to go through with Planning and Zoning.

"We're not in the business of zoning the county and designing it as a city," he added.

Before any plan could be adopted, the council was told it would have to notify landowners. But because the mechanics of the new law haven't been set, the council said it didn't know if it should notify all landowners through personal notices or if publishing the proposed changes would suffice.

Marcus guest at Auction '83 luncheon

Successful fund raisers require expertise in the fields of marketing, management and organization, especially during times of economic insecurity. And most people will tell you that such times have arrived at Midland's doorstep.

Not that money is not still being spent here; it is. But it is being done in a decidedly more cautious manner.

Into these somewhat leaner times than experienced here in the past several years arrives the Museum of the Southwest's triannual auction packed with gift items designed to tempt the most untemptable.

Special guest for the event was a man whose name is synonymous in Texas with adding new dimensions to the worlds of marketing and management — Dallasite Stanley Marcus, chairman emeritus of the Neiman-Marcus stores.

"These days I'm working harder than I've ever worked before," Marcus said during the ride from the airport to the luncheon. "I have a consulting business (Stanley Marcus Consultancy Service) with clients all over the world."

In addition, Marcus spends his time lecturing and taping a daily radio program syndicated on 40 stations across the country. He has written three books, the last of which, "His & Hers: The Fantasy World of the Neiman-Marcus Catalogue," has recently been published.

"I have just completed an 18-city tour flogging it (the new book) across the country," Marcus said, smiling. His tour included interviewing for "47 radio programs, 35 TV programs and 65 newspapers and magazines, while drinking whole gallons of bad studio coffee," he added, again with a smile.

Still he sandwiched a visit to Midland in between California and New York to lend his support to the museum's endeavors. As he said, "This city here, of course, has been a great contributor to the Neiman-Marcus success story."

Mrs. Sid Curle, center, chairman of the Museum of the Southwest's Auction '83, introduces Stanley Marcus, chairman emeritus of the Neiman-Marcus stores, to Mrs. Lynn Durham during a kickoff luncheon in Midland Thursday afternoon.

It was certainly no surprise that when he arrived at the luncheon no one had to introduce him to most of the 50-plus guests.

This triannual event represents the museum's major fund raiser, with proceeds going toward the museum's operational, acquisitions and endowment funds. All museum exhibits are open to the public free of charge.

Serving as chairman for Auction '83 is Mrs. Sid Curle. Other members of the Auction '83 committee are Mrs. Bucky Bates, secretary; Mrs. Doug Scharbauer, treasurer; Mrs. Greg Gunter, in-town gifts; Mrs. Jack Wilkinson, out-of-town gifts, Mrs. Bob Koziol and Mrs. Jack Salners, invitations; Mrs. Frank Cahoon and Mrs. Mike Wisenbaker, sponsors; and Mrs. Frank Tirey and Mrs. Mott Williamson, assistants to the sponsors.

The black-tie invitational dinner affair, priced at $150 per couple, will present 100 items donated by concerns throughout the state that may be purchased through sealed, posted or live bids.

Seminar teaches coping with problem patient

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

An intoxicated accident victim can become irrational, obnoxious and unmanageable at the hospital emergency room. In a trauma situation, even relatives of an accident victim can become unruly.

At times, police officers are called to assist with the problem patient. And it requires certain skills to control the intoxicated, aggressive or violent patient.

About 40 health care and a handful of law enforcement professionals attended a workshop sponsored by Midland Memorial Hospital Thursday to learn how to manage the problem patient.

Many members of the hospital staff are uncomfortable with the trauma or intoxicated patient who becomes aggressive, either verbally or physically, according to Jane Dresser, MMH's clinical psychiatric nurse-specialist, who coordinated the day-long training program at the Knorr Building adjacent to the hospital.

Lucy Dowling, development services coordinator at the Texas Hospital Association in Austin, conducted the workshop, "The Management of Aggression, Violence and Intoxication."

Ms. Dresser explained that health care professionals and peace officers come across a number of intoxicated patients, who are apt to become aggressive. If a patient is violent, a hospital employee could be attacked.

Those attending the session included many of MMH's emergency room staff members, who deal with many intoxicated patients. They learned how to effectively intervene in situations of aggression or violence.

"The emergency room, in most cases, is where the chemically-influenced person is first seen at the hospital," Ms. Dresser said. "Many of the chemically-influenced people coming into the hospital have a tendency — because

Wood's widow testifies in Chagra murder trial

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — The widow of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. testified today that she was talking to her daughter on the telephone when she heard a shot and ran out to find her husband lying fatally wounded.

"I picked up his head and said 'John H., who shot you?'" Kathryn Wood of San Antonio testified in the murder trial of Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra, the man accused of hiring a hit man for $250,000 to eliminate the judge from a racketeering case. She said her husband, shot in the back, did not reply.

Her voice choking, one hand moving to cover her face and then back to her chin as she mustered her composure, Mrs. Wood said she loosened her husband's tie and belt, then ran back to the telephone.

"I said, 'Your daddy's been shot. Get off the phone. I've got to call the (rescue squad),'" she testified.

Under cross examination by defense attorney Oscar Goodman, Mrs. Wood said her husband had expressed no fears for his life even though an attempt had been made on the life of a U.S. attorney in San Antonio and Wood had been given federal protection for several weeks. She said he had grown tired of having U.S. marshals following him around and had dropped the protection before the assassination.

Also testifying was the daughter, Kathryn Johnston. She described how her mother came back to the phone and told her about the shooting. She said she rushed to her parents' condominium to find a crowd gathering and emergency lights swirling around her father's body.

In his opening statement to the jury on Thursday, Goodman said Chagra may have paid a killer thousands of dollars to keep quiet about the 1979 murder of Wood but never ordered the assassination.

Chagra delivered extortion money to convicted hit man Charles V. Harrelson after Harrelson approached him and said: "Chagra, I killed the judge. I want to get paid for it," Goodman said Thursday.

Goodman said the defense would not try to disprove that Harrelson shot Wood in the back with a rifle on May 29, 1979, the day the stiff-sentencing judge known as "Maximum John" was originally to begin presiding at Chagra's trial on drug-related charges in Texas.

"Jimmy Chagra does not know if Charles Harrelson killed Judge Wood," the Las Vegas attorney said.

He said Chagra had no reason to fear a stiff sentence from Wood because his attorneys were only five years apart from government prosecutors in an effort to plea-bargain a prison sentence.

Tape recordings in which Chagra allegedly bragged of the murder to another inmate at Leavenworth Penitentiary resulted from Chagra talking "like a tough guy in order to survive" in prison, Goodman said.

"When you keep your mind open, look for motive. And when you listen to the conversations, ask yourself if these are real things that are being discussed," he told jurors.

Chagra, 39, is accused of paying Harrelson $250,000 to kill Wood. He is charged with murder, conspiracy to commit murder and conspiracy to obstruct justice. The trial was moved to Jacksonville because of pretrial publicity in Texas.

Earlier, prosecutor Ray Jahn said Chagra, a flamboyant high-stakes Las Vegas gambler, had Wood killed to remove him from the case.

"The evidence will show that Jimmy Chagra was afraid. The evidence will show that he took every legal recourse he could to have Judge Wood removed. The evidence will show that, failing that, he had Judge Wood murdered," Jahn said.

The first prosecution witnesses called were police officers who were among the first to arrive at Wood's apartment after he was shot. Photographs they took were introduced as evidence, as were FBI scale drawings and a model of the Chateau Dijon Townhomes where Wood was killed.

Also called was Chrysanthe Lambros, a resident of the Chateau Dijon who described being bumped in an entranceway by a "squinty-eyed" man on the morning of May 29, 1979, before the shooting occurred.

She said 18 months later she picked the man out of a lineup in Houston and he was identified as Harrelson.

The museum's first auction, held in 1969, raised $35,000. Its last, held in 1980, grossed $275,000.

And the hoped-for magic number this year? Well, it isn't higher than past success, which is a clear sign that those responsible for marketing and presenting Auction '83 are being realistic about Midland's changed economic climate.

Texan to be in prison again

A 38-year-old West Texan, who has been in and out of federal and state prisons since his 1974 federal conviction for distributing marijuana, has been sentenced by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton for violation of probation.

In his latest court encounter, Enrique Arambula, who has lived in San Angelo, Sterling City, Lamesa, Odessa, and, among other prison sites, Leavenworth, Kan., was sentenced to one year in a federal prison and was ordered to undergo treatment for alcohol abuse.

Arambula had been on probation for five years after he had served a six-month jail-type term following his conviction for escape in 1977 from federal custody in Odessa, where he was living in a halfway house. He had been transferred to the halfway house as part of his rehabilitation program and re-entry into society, but walked away from the halfway house on Jan. 15, 1977, and was apprehended three months later. Before that, he was in federal prison where he was serving a five-year sentence on his 1974 marjiuana conviction.

U.S. District Judge D.W. Suttle, who then presided over the Midland-Odessa Division, sentenced Arambula to six months in jail-type confinement for his 1977 escape and then placed him on probation for five years.

He violated conditions of probation in 1982 by driving while intoxicated (DWI), being drunk in public, possessing marijuana and not attending Alcoholics Anonymous meetings as ordered by the court.

Arambula was convicted in 1979 for burglary for which he drew a five-year state prison sentence.

CRMWD water deliveries increase

BIG SPRING — Water deliveries by the Colorado River Municipal Water District increased by 3.96 percent during 1982 over the previous year. Total volume was more than 18 billion gallons.

According to a press release from the CRMWD, it was not a record year. However, in 1974 when the record of 20 billion gallons was attained, that figure included 7 billion gallons of oilfield deliveries. Oilfield deliveries dropped off in 1982 to 2 billion gallons.

Had the oilfield demands continued at 1974 levels, the district would have produced nearly 23 billion gallons last year. Deliveries in 1981 amounted to 17 billion gallons.

Municipal demand has been growing steadily, climbing to 15.8 billion gallons, up 841 million gallons, or 5.62 percent, over 1981. Deliveries to oil companies were 2.3 billion gallons, down 150 million gallons, or 6 percent.

During 1982 Big Spring received 2,901,531,400 gallons, an increase of 3.24 percent; Midland, 4,034,134,000 gallons, up 2.48 percent; Odessa, 7,643,309,000 gallons, up 12.08 percent; Robert Lee, 16,356,700 gallons, up 3.61 percent; San Angelo (which has Lake Spence as a standby source), 53,633,700 gallons, down 76.30 percent; Snyder, 1,028,933,000 gallons, down 2.13 percent; Stanton, 134,717,400 gallons, up 21.37 percent.

Ms. Dowling discussed proximity and visual zones of the aggressive individual. These are the areas surrounding a person when he is viewed or approached. There are three proximity zones, of which the third — six to eight feet — is the safest distance.

"This is a non-threating position," she said. "You're far enough away from the individual for maximum protection."

When approaching an individual in zone two, about three feet, the danger increases, if the patient is aggressive.

Likewise the visual zones — frontal, rear and peripheral — must be considered when viewing an individual, who may be potentially aggressive.

"If you're going to approach the aggressive individual, do it in the peripheral (outer boundary line) zone," Ms. Dowling said.

"These techniques are taught to cause the least amount of injury to an individual," Ms. Dowling explained. "We're not trying to break arms, gouge eyes...just learning how to defend ourselves."

'Child of Nazis' helping self, others heal from Holocaust

By JO TUBB
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — The entry was made on Nov. 12, 1933: "We demonstrated to Hede 'Heil Hitler.' Suddenly she raised her little arm and said 'Ha hiya.' Naturally, we are very proud of this, because this is her first word and her first little trick.

"That is how it was," she says, as much by way of apology, it seems, as explanation. "We learned to say Hitler before we learned to say Mama."

Von Nagel is an internationally recognized artist, a struggling writer and a budding lecturer. But above all and through all and after all, she is a child of Nazis.

THAT IS NOT TO SAY she is a Nazi or that she ever was one. Born in Germany the year Hitler came to power, she was too young to be involved in or to understand what was going on around her. But she says it has scarred her for life. And, in a way, it has made her as much a victim as those targeted openly by the Nazis.

Certainly, it has made her a survivor.

"Nobody ever talks about us, the children of Nazi parents," she says. "There is talk of how older Germans and Jewish Holocaust survivors were affected, but nothing about us. And we have stayed in the background because we feel such shame for our upbringing — and for our parents."

For those like herself, she says, the effect of the long silence has been guilt, resentment and abiding depression. Only after years of introspection and therapy has she begun to overcome them.

AND NOW HEDE also has begun to talk — to Jews, among others. In synagogues and in schools and in small gatherings, she talks about her childhood in Nazi Germany, her ensuing despair and her desire to be seen not as a damnable German but as a feeling person. Even, perhaps, as a nice German.

Her purpose is not to justify herself or the horror of the Holocaust; it is rather to begin a process of understanding and, hopefully, healing.

"I never chose to do this," she says over a cup of herb tea. "It is something that just happened. Now it is the task of my life."

She may actually have been assigned the task many years ago, she feels, when she was a youngster in a German town charred by bombs. She wanted to die then, and — except for what she calls divine intervention — she might have.

Adolf Hitler, whom she had been reared to regard as a god, had just fallen, and with him, the only world she'd ever known had crumbled.

"I was a skinny 12-year-old kid, and I spent the whole night in a barn contemplating suicide," she recalls. "There was a rope, and I was determined to use it. Then I heard a voice that told me to stop, that said I was destined for something else."

WHETHER THE VOICE was real or imagined, she doesn't know — or care. What matters is that from that moment she vaguely knew there was something to live for — even though she wouldn't know for years exactly what it was.

Before then, there had been only the fuhrer.

"I want people to understand what it was like for us," she says of herself and her peers. "Nazism really was all we ever knew. There were other people in Germany at the time, but I didn't know them.

"My parents weren't bad people," she continues. "They simply wanted law and order after years of bloodshed in the streets. Nazism seemed to work at first. Then they closed their eyes; they looked the other way."

Of the Jews, the people she is supposed to have hated, she says: "As a child, I didn't know that Jews actually were real people; to me they were mythological figures, like the devil in a fairy tale. I had never met one, and I was never told otherwise.

"Everything was the fuhrer," she adds. "He was highly visible, and we were taught he was always watching."

Even so, young Hede, a shy, artistic child, never was inducted into the Hitler Youth, and she recalls being uncomfortable at the Hitler rallies to which her grandfather dragged her.

SHE ALSO REMEMBERS the horrors of war — the hunger, the endless bombings, the running from shelter to shelter, the narrow escapes from death's tightening grasp. But nothing, she says, was as devastating as realizing all she had been taught was a lie.

"When I pieced it all together — the stories about Jews and concentration camps and Hitler — I crumbled. That is what happens when your life is saturated with one person.

"I became like a robot. I didn't think anymore. It was as if I drifted through life in a sleep. It was excruciatingly painful, like living a very bad dream."

Like most Germans, she says, she was unable to deal with the guilt, resentment and confusion she felt, so she buried it. Still an obedient child, she never even confronted her parents with it.

"I did not grow up to question my parents," she says, "I grew up to obey them."

Years later, at 29, she married a German lawyer who had been reared in a home different from hers: His parents had laughed at the fuhrer. So when he and Hede immigrated to New York in 1969, he had no problem working in a Jewish law firm. For Hede, it was an enlightening but disturbing time.

"I found that those around me were highly gifted and creative and I suddenly realized what we had lost, what we had done," she says. "I started facing the Holocaust, reading books and seeing movies about it."

"I also had my first confrontations with Jews in the United States, with them calling me a damn Nazi. I wanted to say 'Hey, I didn't do it,' but I couldn't. I felt that I was a victim, too."

OVER THE NEXT few years, as Hede continued to work out the problems her childhood had created, her marriage broke up and she moved to Los Angeles. While she was teaching at Otis Art Institute, she met a newspaper reporter who urged her to write a book about her experience in Nazi Germany.

"When I sat down to write the book, I had to confront what had happened to me," she says. "I ran through all my emotions, sometimes ranting and raving and screaming out my anger and pain. It was a catharsis."

It also led to a new conclusion — that she was not just a victim but an executioner as well.

"I was too young to be involved (in the Holocaust), but I realized that if I had been old enough, I might have been," she explains. "In a way, my role is more difficult than the Jews who survived it because they are just victims. I am both victim and executioner."

That realization, that acceptance of blame, is part of the message she wants to relate now to those who see her as a damn Nazi. No longer teaching, she is devoting her time to her book and trying to earn a living by lecturing.

She says she realized that was her task when she attended a conference of the Anti-Defamation League and was unexpectedly called on to speak.

"THE REACTION was incredible," she says. "Many of the people there were (concentration camp) survivors and there was a lot of hostility and shouting. I found myself being very attentive and compassionate and then I saw things changing. Only then could I tell them about myself. Suddenly, love began to flow and it was beautiful.

"Afterward, people came up to me and said they felt as if they had been healed. One man thanked me, saying he no longer had to hate."

Unexpected, unexplained heart attacks sometimes strike healthy young adults

By JOANN RODGERS
Hearst Feature Service

What causes a healthy young adult, with no history of cardiac problems, to drop dead suddenly — apparently of a heart attack? Such deaths are rare, but they happen.

"There is no registry of these deaths," says Dr. Marry Maron, a senior research scientist at the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute (NHLBI) in Bethesda, Md. "Far less than one percent, perhaps one hundredth of one percent of the population under age 40 suffers this kind of sudden cardiac death.

"We are not talking here about the middle-aged man who suddenly takes up jogging and dies of a a coronary," he added. Autopsies on the over-40 heart victim usually show evidence of long-standing disease.

Research has suggested several causes for the deaths of apparently healthy young adults. Among the more unusual is an inherited disorder called Marfan's Syndrome.

MARFAN PATIENTS, who may or may not know they have the condition, are usually tall, loose jointed, and long fingered. Their height and flexibility often lure them to athletic pursuits, particularly basketball.

In more serious cases, Marfan victims have obvious bone and joint deformities, bent spines, eye muscle problems, breathing difficulties and severe heart defects.

According to the National Foundation for Birth Defects (March of Dimes), the heart abnormalities include abnormal swelling and stretching of the aorta, a major blood vessel to the heart, and heart valve defects.

More likely, the kind of sudden cardiac arrest that kills young adults involves less detectable and less treatable heart abnormalities, or heart rhythm disturbances.

"Most of the cases I know about are electrical deaths," notes Dr. Anthony Moulton, a heart surgeon at the University of Maryland medical school in Baltimore. "The heart suddenly begins to beat wildly and then stops.

"Some others are due to heart or blood vessel defects that show up only at autopsy."

FAMILY MEDICAL HISTORIES don't help since the defects tend not to be inherited (except in the rare cases of Marfan's). Special dye and heart-sound studies probably could detect them, "but these are costly and some pose risks in themselves," Moulton said.

The NHLBI's Maron has investigated autopsies performed on 30 competitive athletes who died of cardiac arrest, including professional, high school and collegiate players.

Maron said half had enlarged and swollen hearts and all but one had "major structural defects of the heart" that could explain their deaths.

Like Moulton, he believes most could be detected with special studies, but questioned the benefit of committing vast resources to testing all young athletes. "We would have to screen hundreds of thousands to find just a few at risk."

It is possible, he added, that a university or professional team would choose to screen its players and pay the bill.

At least one study, at the University of Minnesota Hospitals in Minneapolis, disputes Maron's findings and pins the cause of the heart attacks on unpredictable bouts of extremely rapid heart beats.

Dr. D. Woodrow Benson,Jr., associate professor of pediatrics at Minnesota, said the kind of results Maron has reported are typical of research based solely on autopsies.

"We find an entirely different picture when we look at young men and women who have survived these attacks," he said.

BENSON STUDIED 11 of these survivors (from ages one to 29) who were saved by CPR and quick hospitalization.

"Their problem was not structural defects of the heart. Where these existed at all, they were trivial. But we don't think they are important enough for pathologists to pin the deaths on them," he said.

Eighty percent of the Minnesota survivors had no defects, but did have "an extreme capacity for tachycardia," or rapid heart beats.

"We don't yet know what triggers the rapid beats, but we do know that in half our cases, exertion had nothing to do with it. Two were sleeping when the attacks occurred," Benson said.

Medical treatment to prevent or slow down the tachycardia failed to prevent recurrences in many of the patients. Several have since died.

But the good news in all this, Benson said, "is that whatever is causing the fatal attack appears to us to be of long-standing and is probably due to some metabolic disorder. If that's the case, and we have some evidence that it is, then ultimately a diagnostic test should be possible to detect it very early in life and prevent the deaths."

Benson's team has identified one possible candidate for the cause — an abnormality in a biochemical called carnitine, which the body's muscle cells need to process fats. Animal tests show that carnitine defects may produce tachycardia.

WHILE SCIENTISTS continue the search for answers and ways to stop sudden heart deaths, heart specialists say the only hope now for most victims is rapid application of CPR (cardio-pulmonary resuscitation).

"If you are lucky enough to have an attack near someone trained in CPR."

By CAROLINE DREWES
Hearst Feature Service

Brenda Starr, that gorgeous redhead who started her career writing obits for the Flash in 1940, may be the best-known woman reporter since Nellie Bly.

But behind La Starr is Dale Messick, 76, the woman who has turned out daily and Sunday strips for four decades. "I've always been a half-assed celebrity," says Messick. "Everyone knew Brenda and nobody knew me."

The strip has been hard and lonely work, and also a "helluva lot of fun" for Messick. She described her brain child as "a sort of soap opera on paper with a few laughs." It made her the most successful woman cartoonist of her time.

It has also made Brenda Starr a household name. "There are quite a number of Brenda Starrs throughout the country, " says Messick. "People named Starr, who named their babies Brenda." Messick's own real-life daughter is named Starr Rohrman.

Messick grew up in Hobart, Ind. Her father was a sign painter and an art instructor, and her mother was a milliner. She herself was drawing comic strips at the age of 10 for the amusement of her classmates in a one-room schoolhouse "I was always a yarn-spinner. I entertained people. I still can."

She studied art for a couple of years, then got a job painting bathing beauties on oilcloth tire covers for Orange Crush. Then she designed greeting cards, but what she really wanted was to break into cartooning, an "overwhelmingly male preserve" at the time.

It wasn't easy. The first thing she did was change her name from Dalia to the male-sounding Dale. "It was very difficult to get anyone to look at a woman's drawings," she remembers. "If they did, they'd put the drawings down and say 'How about lunch?' " Eventually her drawings attracted the eye of another woman, Mollie Slott, an editor who later became manager of the Chicago Tribune-New York News Syndicate, now the Tribune Company Syndicate Inc. And eventually, Brenda Starr was born.

She was named for the New York debutante of the year, Brenda Frazier, who, says Dale, used to comb her long dark hair at the table; something Brenda Starr would never do. Nevertheless, not a hair of Brenda Starr's coiffure is ever out of place. Its style has changed through the years, just as Brenda always wears the latest fashions (Women's Wear Daily being Dale's authority), and Dale likes to point out that her star reporter wore a Farrah Fawcett hairdo before Farrah ever did.

Dale gave up drawing the strip two years ago; New York comic book artist Ramona Fradon took over the drawing job. She is also giving up the Brenda Starr story line; Linda Sutter is taking that over. But Brenda Starr remains close to Dale Messick's heart. Brenda has everything Dale says she wanted and never had. Except the ability to cook. Dale is a good cook; Brenda can't boil water. "I wasn't going to give her quite everything," says Dale. "Cooking I kept for myself."

Mrs. Coleman and Lizzie English both live at McRae Manor Nursing home, where they received a telegram Thursday from President Reagan, a phone call from Gov. Joe Frank Harris and mail from as far away as China.

By PAUL JACOBS
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Ask physicians how they get their information about the drugs they prescribe for their patients and most will say that they rely primarily not on drug company ads and sales pitches but on medical literature, according to studies by the American Medical Association and others.

However, a recent Harvard study indicates that, contrary to earlier surveys, doctors are much more dependent on drug companies for that knowledge than they think or are willing to admit.

In some cases, said Harvard Medical School assistant professor Dr. Jerry Avorn, physicians picked up erroneous information from drug company sales representatives and promotional campaigns, information that is simply not supported by scientific fact.

The issue is important because a new and powerful drug can have life-or-death consequences for the consumer, depending on how wisely it is used by the attending physician.

Each year, the prescription drug companies spend an estimated $2 billion a year to promote their products in the United States — much of it to support a sales force of representatives called "detail men," who promote their wares through direct contact with physicians.

IN ADDITION TO drawing from a sample case of free drug products, glossy brochures, selected scientific articles, ballpoint pens, memo pads and paperweights, the detail men sometimes also offer a free meal, a trip to a major convention, financing for a hospital-based seminar and a helping hand in obtaining research support.

In some cases, they fight to have their company's products included on hospital and government-program "formularies" — lists of drugs that are regularly stocked and that can be prescribed without restriction.

Most said that scientific papers were "very important" in their decision-making and that drug ads, detail men and patient preference were only "minimally important."

Then the Harvard team quizzed the same physicians on the proper use of two kinds of widely misused drugs — the cerebral vasodilators, drugs that open up blood vessels and theoretically improve circulation; and propoxyphene, a pain killer best known under the trade name Darvon.

Had physicians been reading the medical literature, Avorn said, they would have known that the vasodilators are no longer considered useful in the treatment of senile mental failure, and that Darvon and its related compounds are probably less effective than aspirin in treating moderately severe pain.

IN FACT, MOST OF the physicians had bought the claims of the manufacturers, Avorn and his colleagues reported in the July issue of the American Journal of Medicine.

A large majority — 80 percent — rated Darvon as more effective or equal to aspirin; 71 percent believed the unsupported theory that reduced blood flow to the brain was a major cause of senile mental failure, and a third said they found vasodilators helpful in treating those patients.

That the doctors polled by the Harvard team include some of the nation's finest, "more than our share of professors . . . makes these findings even more scary," Avorn said in a telephone interview.

"We have some real concern here that detail men and drug advertisements are the main source of information (for physicians), and they offer only a rather narrow view of drugs' strengths and weaknesses," Avorn said.

The drug company salesmen, whose salaries often are tied to total sales in their territory, are dealing with physicians whose education offers too little training in pharmacology — the scientific study of how drugs work — Avorn complained.

Physicians, in fact, do not know enough about the drugs they prescribe, said Jere Goyan, former commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration and now dean of the University of California, San Francisco School of Pharmacy.

"THE SCIENCE AND ART of diagnosis (of disease) are so demanding," Goyan said, "that I don't even know if physicians can both do that and be outstanding (prescribers of therapy)."

"In medical school, we teach students to prescribe on the basis of scientific evidence," said Milton Silverman, Ph.D. on the faculty at Universit of California San Francisco. "They learn this or we flunk them. Five years after medical school, they are not prescribing as they were taught. They are brainwashed by detailers. These detailers are damn effective."

A sales representative for a major drug company agreed that the physicians he encounters know very little about drugs.

The detail man asked that he not be identified. "If they knew I talked to you, I'd be fired," he said.

The detailing of drugs — so called because the salesman provides the doctor with details about the products — "is the most expensive way to sell, but the most effective," the detail man said.

To be effective, a sales representative must avoid the hard sell. "Overaggressive reps hurt themselves. Physicians don't like to be told what to do," he said.

At teaching hospitals such as Los Angeles County-University of Southern California, detail men operate under several restrictions. For example, they are not allowed above the first floor of the hospital without a specific appointment with a physician, and once in the corridors of the upper floors they are not permitted to collar physicians or nurses.

OFTEN THE DETAIL man will make his pitch over lunch. "You can't buy a doctor with a meal," he said. "It's like any other business, a lunch or dinner can serve a dual purpose. It's often the only time when you can reach some of these people."

The sales representative will also give samples of medications to physicians for their own personal or family use.

County-USC's medical director, Dr. Sol Bernstein, is concerned enough about recent reports of free lunches at drug company expense that he has formed a committee to look into the issue.

Bernstein said that it has not been a violation of hospital rules for medical center employees to accept free medications from sales representatives, although he added, "We try to discourage it."

The detail man also does other things to ingratiate himself with physicians at the hospital. His company frequently picks up the costs for a hospital seminar that may make mention of one of the firm's products. And occasionally he notices a "sharp, young doctor" and recommends the physician to his company as someone that the company ought to consider to run tests of experimental drugs.

Dr. Robert Maronde, a USC professor at the county hospital, complained about a sales representative from Hoechst-Roussel Pharmaceuticals Inc., when Maronde heard the man telling an intern at the hospital that Lasix, a Hoechst-made anti-hypertension drug, was better than hydrochlorothiazide, a less expensive treatment manufactured by several companies.

The Hoechst detail man was banned from the hospital for six months, said Morande, who is one of several USC faculty members who refuse to see detail men.

Another is Dr. Peter Lee, who tells students, interns and residents that they must "realize that a detail man is not an educator but a salesman," and to view with suspicion anything that a detail man does on a physician's behalf.

At Los Angeles County hospitals, drug companies regularly participate in "drug days," when they are allowed to set up displays in an auditorium to promote their products.

Dr. J. Michael Criley, chief of cardiology at Los Angeles County Harbor-University of California Los Angeles Medical Center, has steadfastly refused to attend the sessions at his hospital, which he described as "like a flea market."

He has also resisted other attempts by drug companies to curry favor.

LIMITED FUNDS, HE said, have made it increasingly difficult for research-oriented departments like his to get research fellows and staff to important conferences. And it is tempting, he said, to accept drug company invitations to appear at company-sponsored seminars in exchange for airfare and hotel accomodations.

Criley said he has accepted fees for appearing at drug-company-sponsored seminars held at local hospitals. He said he will only make such appearances for companies he regards as ethical and that allow him to speak freely. The money — $350 for a talk — is deposited in his department's educational fund to help pay for travel to conferences by research fellows.

Criley and others contend that it is not difficult for physicians to educate themselves about drugs through unbiased sources.

They provide the safety of "peer review" — articles in major journals are almost always reviewed in advance by experts in the field before publication.

Also high on the list of unbiased sources is The Medical Letter, founded more than 20 years ago as a Consumer Report of prescription drugs, written for the medical profession.

COMPARED TO SPLASHY drug company brochures, The Medical Letter is bland in appearance and cautious in the advice it gives to 150,000 subscribers — most of them physicians — in the United States and Canada.

Every other week, the publication reviews the latest scientific information on two or three drugs, and in plain, measured language assesses their usefulness.

Saving With No-Name Brands

The alternative is generic cigarettes.

For the first time since 1951, the federal government has increased the cigarette tax, from eight cents per pack to 16 cents per pack.

The result is an increased interest in generic cigarettes, which are cigarettes with no name, usually packaged in a plain wrapper or as "house brands" by major retailers. According to Gary Tobacco Co., a leading manufacturer of generic tobacco products, more consumers are trying generics.

Market research has shown that nearly 85 percent of the smokers who try generics like them as well or better than their current brand, and 94 percent of those who try them would buy generic again.

DEAR ABBY

Out-of-sight fiancee fears she's also out of mind

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My fiance is divorced and has two children who live with his "ex." We've been engaged for a year and have been living together for over six months. In the last year I've seen his children only once. His ex-wife does not want them near me, so I am not allowed to see them. My fiance does nothing to correct this. He doesn't realize how hard it is for me to handle being treated like I'm invisible.

He doesn't let me answer the phone, and he won't let me put my name on the mailbox. When I complain about the situation, he either doesn't want to discuss it or he changes the subject.

I don't think his ex-wife and children know that I still exist. I would like them to know that I am still a part of his life, love him very much and do everything in my power to make him happy.

Why does he keep me hidden? Is he sick, or am I just a fool? — FOOL IN THE CLOSET

DEAR FOOL: He is not sick, he's SLICK. He has all the benefits of marriage and none of the responsibilities. You're a housekeeper, bed partner and obedient servant who lives in the closet because your "fiance" wants it that way. Demand to be acknowledged, recognized and treated like a fiance. If he refuses and you continue to live in the closet, you are indeed a fool.

DEAR ABBY: Recently my son, Tony, got a speeding ticket while giving me a ride to a bingo game. He is angry about the ticket because he didn't want to do this in the first place. He says that's the reason he was speeding and, therefore, the reason he got the ticket. He insists that I go to court and say that he wasn't really speeding.

Abby, I don't want to be a liar, but with neither of us working, we just don't have the money to pay for a ticket. Also, I'm afraid of losing my son's friendship if I don't. — WORRIED

DEAR WORRIED: Don't lie for your son. What you lose in "friendship," you will gain in respect.

You need to get your priorities in order, Mother. Since you are unemployed, bingo is an extravagance you can ill afford. Think about it.

DEAR ABBY: Thirteen years ago, I underwent psychotherapy regularly for two years. Today I would like to have access to (and review) my files, but I do not wish to return to the same psychotherapist. Whose files are they? Mine or his?

What is the proper way to handle this? — WITHHOLD MY NAME

DEAR WITHHOLD: Although you are entitled to know what is in your records, your psychotherapist has the right to withhold them from you if he believes that reading them might injure you psychologically.

However, he is ethically obligated to send your records (or a detailed summary of what they contain) to another qualified psychotherapist of your choice if you request it in writing.

DEAR ABBY: Is an annulment the same as a Catholic divorce to a Catholic? — GINA

DEAR GINA: No. An annulment does not dissolve an existing marriage according to civil law. It is granted by the Catholic Church Tribunal when it can be shown that some essential element made the marriage invalid from the beginning. (Example: incompatibility.)

CONFIDENTIAL TO M. IN FLAGSTAFF, ARIZ: It's unwise to confide too much in a friend. Your friend has a friend, and your friend's friend has a friend.

Scientists identify disease agent

By ROBERT LOCKE
AP Science Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Scientists said today they have identified at least part of a tiny protein called a prion that is implicated in a wide range of diseases and seems to do the impossible — reproduce without genes.

The identification of the prion — which rhymes with neon — doesn't directly answer many questions about the protein, too small to be seen through an electronic microscope. But it is "the kind of step everybody's been searching for for three decades," said Dr. Stanley B. Prusiner, a microbiologist and neurologist at the University of California-San Francisco.

Prusiner contends prions, through some unknown process that is apparently unlike any other infection, cause such diseases as senility, multiple sclerosis, Parkinson's disease and amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, known as Lou Gehrig's disease.

Prusiner first reported the existence of prions — apparently a unique family of microbes — nine months ago and said they accounted for infections that have baffled researchers for years. The latest research is the first time prions have been identified through electrochemical analysis.

"Until now," he said, "the only way to determine whether the agent was present was to put some into animals and see if they got sick. That takes 60 to 100 days." Soon, identifying prions should be possible with laboratory tests that take only a few days.

Laborious research showed the prion was perhaps 100 times smaller than any known virus, Prusiner said. Repeated efforts found no evidence of genes and if prions contain any genetic material, they have too little to form a blueprint for reproduction, he said.

Statistics about love relationships

By ZENIA CLEIGH
Copley News Service

These are questions almost everyone would like to have answered. They are also questions around which there tends to be a good deal of misinformation.

According to John A. Grabel, Ph.D., a clinical psychologist in private practice in San Diego, one of the stumbling blocks to happy relationships between men and women is confusion about what love actually is.

Most couples are unaware that romantic love — the exciting, intense kind where you are constantly thinking about your lover — almost always dies. In fact, Grabel said, the research of University of Wisconsin psychologist Elaine Walster shows that "this type of love lasts between six and 30 months."

Then, problems arise, according to Walster and her sociologist husband, William, who co-authored "A New Look At Love," a book Grabel considers one of the best on the subject and which he uses as the text for his class.

"THOSE FEELINGS (of excitement) start to fade, and more of a companionship type of love replaces it," Grabel said. "It's a love where there is a feeling of security, stability, predictability, trust — and a lot of people are bothered by that change. We all have a need for a certain amount of excitement. What these authors are trying to say is that it is impossible this will continue."

Many couples experience a crisis when romantic love begins to fade, Grabel said. Some are tempted to find a new partner with whom they can experience the same intensity, so they become involved in an affair.

When love reaches this point, people should take a hard look at reality, Grabel said. "They have to understand that probably the feelings they're experiencing (in an affair) are going to fade just as they did in their first marriage, and at some point down the road, they may end up in a companionship relationship again.

"If a person wants a lot of excitement, newness, and intense, high feelings in a relationship, there's a high probability they are going to be involved in a number of relationships throughout their lives. If their values are for trust and loyalty, stability and caring, then that person will stay with the companionship."

Is having extramarital affairs then a way to keep both excitement and stability in your love life? Grabel doesn't recommend it. "I personally think affairs are going to detract from your companionship relationship," he said. "Maybe there are some people who can have it both ways, but romantic passion can be so addicting that it is going to have a negative effect on the marriage."

IT'S BETTER, HE said, for a couple to face the issue and devise new ways to keep excitement in their lives. "Some couples get into pornography or scanty underwear," Grabel said. "But there are a lot of ways besides improving sex to raise that excitement level."

Developing new hobbies and intellectual pursuits, taking more frequent vacations or learning an exciting sport are some possibilities he suggested. "Every couple has to go according to what their interests are and what their possibilities are, given their financial situation," Grabel said.

According to Elaine Walster, Grabel said, the relationships which tend to endure happily are based on what she calls the "equity theory."

"That is, after the romantic love cools down, couples tend to strike a balance in terms of what they contribute to the relationship. So beauty and money may be a tradeoff against brains and affection. Whatever the bargain, we negotiate intimate relationships as we do life's other transactions."

In addition, Grabel went on, Walster's research shows that inequitable relationships tend to fall apart. "Those who get more than they give, or give more than they get, tend to feel acute discomfort." Also, "the one who gives more than he or she gets tends to be the one who has an extramarital affair."

WALSTER'S EQUITY THEORY ties in with a book called "Styles of Loving" by Marcia Lasswell and Norman Lobsenz, Grabel said. Those authors say that "there are a lot of reasons you fall in love, but they suggest the most likely reason we select a certain partner is that this partner offers the best package of practical and emotional rewards at the smallest practical and emotional cost."

Another confusion about love, Grabel said, is the fact that "there are probably as many definitions of love as there are men and women in love. We think we know what love is and we assume our partner has the same concept." This, however, isn't necessarily true.

People need to learn that even if their mate doesn't express love in the same style they do, it doesn't mean they love them any less, Grabel said.

By DON CARTER
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — Ten years ago, if you told friends you were "meditating" they probably would have thought you were ready to shave your head, put on a robe and chant on street corners.

But since then, this Far Eastern import has settled comfortably on the American scene. Now that the psychologists have replaced the gurus, there's a lot more knowledge about meditation. It does work, but not for everybody. And it can be abused.

Marjorie Duxbury, a University of Washington counselor with a doctorate in psychology, is a believer in the value of meditation. She defines it simply as "a method of reaching relaxation, but it needs to be done in a very specific way, and with some guidelines."

Since many of the thoughts which spontaneously pop up in the mind tend to be negative, Duxbury says the point of meditation is to clear the mind of these negatives. Meditation works by concentrating the mind so completely on one thing that the negatives are excluded and, Duxbury explains, "the self becomes the leader, rather than the thoughts. You develop clarity of thinking. You can look at yourself with a detached perspective by shutting off that critical part of the mind and establishing a sense of flow, harmony, timelessnss, unity, release."

Duxbury believes many people meditate "in a lot of ways — they do it and don't know it." Any activity which causes you "to lose yourself and lose a sense of time" technically qualifies as meditation.

Prayer is a classic type of meditation, she explains. "It doesn't matter to whom you pray, it's putting the mind on a higher level — getting outside of ourselves and outside the negative limitations of the mind."

Those who walk, run, swim, juggle or do any other rhythmic exercise also may be meditating, Duxbury says, as long as they allow the rhythmic activity to take over and let their minds go with the flow. A runner who concentrates on the agony of it all, for example, isn't meditating.

What all this does for the mind and body, the psychologist explains, is to suppress the stressful "fight or flight" reaction which is triggered by negative thoughts. She notes that research has documented the relaxing physical effects, so that "we now know we can control our nervous systems much more than we thought." Thus, meditation has become a healing device for high blood pressure and certain other cardiovascular maladies, as well as an aid to dealing with such emotional problems as anxieties.

Duxbury says that the "best" meditation technique is a highly individual matter. For example, those with a highly-charged personality "who need to be in constant motion" may find that some of the quiet methods create more stress than they remove. For them, Duxbury would recommend one of the physical types of meditation.

Among the more popular quiet methods is disengaging yourself from your thoughts by picturing the negative thoughts passing through your mind as sort of a ho-hum parade in which you don't have to be personally involved. The "visualization" method involves focusing your mind on some scene — perhaps the beach, a mountain — so completely that negative thoughts are excluded.

Other methods involve being very quiet and concentrating on your breathing, focusing so intently on its rhythm that your mind can't wander. Then there's focusing on a word or "mantra." For mantra meditation, Duxbury suggests the use of words such as "one," "relax," or "serene." "Anything that's not distressing," she explains, noting that "hate" would be a lousy mantra.

The psychologist says she "doesn't like absolutes" about just how much daily time should be devoted to meditation for it to be effective.

Duxbury cautions that meditation is "not a panacea" for everyone and may actually be dangerous for some. Research has shown that migraine headache sufferers may actually induce headaches during the intense concentration. "And people with depression need to be very careful," Duxbury warns, "because it can reinforce the depression."

Singer writes her own gospel

By SUSAN MURPHY
The Phoenix Gazette

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — When Alma Thompson sings to praise God or inspire faith, she does so in a very personal way — in her own words set to her own music.

And lots of people have been singing along for years. Her song "If I Can Help Somebody," written during the Depression, has become something of a gospel standard.

It was written when she was about 30 years old, broke and distressed by the despair around her.

"I was living in Pittsburgh and I was very poor," she said. "Things were so rough and just about everybody was in the same boat. I remember going to the store and seeing some alcoholics. I tried to talk to them about making their lives better."

Shy and soft-spoken, she felt she could voice her longing to help most confidently through music. She went home and wrote:

"If I can help somebody as I pass along,

"If I can cheer somebody with a word or song,

"If I can show somebody he is trav'ling wrong,

"The words and the music just showered over me," she recalled. "It must have been an inspiration from God, as widespread as it's become. God must have had a part in it."

Paul and Linda had been married six years, and since their third anniversary had been going from doctor to doctor in a vain attempt to discover why "we can't have a baby."

Another couple, the Lansings, were also childless, but their problem was somewhat different. Their first baby had been stillborn–a tiny, full-term girl, barely weighing four pounds. They desperately wanted another baby, but feared something might happen again.

These three medical cases involve real people who seem to have little in common, except in each case the problem is sex related. And the prescription for each was identical: stop smoking.

Science has long known that heavy smoking can cause stillbirth and miscarriage. Now there is a suspicion that sexual performance may also be impaired. Although smoking is one of the toughest habits to break, Midland psychologist Marie Moore has successfully worked with hundreds of people in defeating this habit through hypnotherapy.

The behavior modification therapy used in hypnosis can be more effective than will power alone in eliminating the smoking habit and in keeping you from smoking in the future.

Marie Moore, hypnotherapist at Clinical Hypnosis, has a doctorate in psychology as well as being a registered clinical hypnotist. This is very important for a client to know, as the requirements for registration are very stringent. As Dr. Moore says, "It's important for my clients to know that they're dealing with a professional. Because I am a state registered hypnotist, they can be assured of my training and qualifications." Dr. Moore is a longtime Midland resident, a housewife and mother as well as a clinical hypnotherapist. She feels that knowing something about your hypnotherapist is very important prior to beginning treatment. "If a hypnotherapist does not have a minimum of a bachelor's degree in psychology, as well as a minimum of 300 hours of training in hypnotheraphy, I would be wary of their qualifications," she says.

For more information about breaking the smoking habit, as well as other self-defeating habits, call Dr. Moore at 685-3344

He, therefore, has made the preliminary determination to issue this permit.

The 1st year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8 3/8% loan to value interest will be charged at a rate of 12 3/8% for the 1st 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payment 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period the graduation in payment will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 12.875%. *Principle and Interest only is calculated in monthly payument.
