Official: Two more people die from nuclear disaster

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet official was quoted Saturday as saying the Kremlin should have reported the Chernobyl nuclear accident sooner and that two more people died as a result of the disaster, bringing the official death toll to four.

The Soviet Union on Saturday released radiation figures from the accident that it said showed Kiev was "absolutely safe," and said the fire in the graphite of the reactor core was out.

The West German newsmagazine Der Spiegel quoted Valentin Falin, chairman of the Soviet news agency Novosti, as saying the two had been among 18 people who were hospitalized in serious condition as a result of the April 26 accident.

The explosion and fire at the Chernobyl power plant 80 miles north of Kiev released a cloud of radioactivity over Europe.

In a four-paragraph statement released Saturday, the Soviet government said radiation levels in Kiev and at a radius of 35 miles from the reactor were "absolutely safe."

The statement said radiation was measured at 0.32 milliroentgens per hour in Kiev and at 0.33 milliroentgens per hour 35 miles from the plant, but did not say when the readings were taken. A milliroentgen is one-thousandth of a roentgen, the standard meaure of ionizing radiation.

Experts say exposure to 50 roentgens or more per year is dangerous and 400 roentgens per year can be fatal.

"On the country's western border, (the) radiation level is within the limits of the background," or normal level, the statement said.

Soviet officials have said they evacuated people and livestock within 18 miles of the reactor. The statement, distributed in English by the official Tass news agency, did not specify radiation levels at the plant.

The statement also said that the fire in the graphite of the reactor core was out, as announced Friday by officials of the U.N.-affiliated International Atomic Energy Agency. The graphite is used to slow nuclear reactions.

"The temperature inside the reactor went down substantially as a result of the...measures" taken by emergency crews, said the statement.

Der Spiegel quoted Falin, a former Soviet ambassador to Bonn, as saying, "Viewed in retrospect, it appears to me that it would have been better if the information we released on Monday (April 28) had already been released on Sunday."

But he was quoted as adding that "we have to take into account the fact that initial reports from the leadership at the Chernobyl nuclear plant were incomplete and later proved incorrect."

Western leaders have criticized the Soviet Union for not confirming an accident took place until two days afterward and then only when Scandinavian authorities detected high radiation.

Soviet officials previously have insisted they released information in a manner to minimize panic and ensure accuracy, and have dismissed as propaganda Western criticism of their handling of the accident.

'Nuisance' water bad for streets

Suzan Conder/Reporter-Telegram

The westbound lane of Scharbauer Drive will be shut off at the North A Street intersection Monday as the City of Midland begins a six-month street-reconstruction project. A Street is to be reconstructed between Scharbauer and just north of Dormard Avenue; Neely Avenue is to be reconstructed between A Street and Spruce Avenue; and a storm drain is to be installed on Ventura Avenue between A and I streets. Construction will continue through October, according to city officials.

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

In arid Midland, where rain is a rare event, many streets are ruined by the constant stream of water from sprinkler systems, and city officials may consider raising water rates to help staunch the flow.

Nuisance water, the overflow from water intended for lawns and shrubs, "has the same affect as if it rains every day," said Harvey Hansen, the city engineer. "It accelerates the deterioration of the asphalt. The caliche actually dissolves."

The results are evident to anybody who travels along Wadley Avenue and other drainage streets, which are designed to handle occasional storm overflow but not the steady, eroding trickle of nuisance water.

"It's the primary cause of most of the potholes we have," said City Councilman David Godfrey.

A six-month, $500,000 reconstruction project on North A Street which is to begin Monday can be attributed to the fact that the street is "continually saturated with nuisance water," Hansen says. "It's a major concern."

Such projects are costly and inconvenient. "A" Street, for example, will be reduced to two lanes between Scharbauer Drive and Dormard Avenue, and east-west detours will plague drivers through October, Hansen said.

Officials also note the irony of wasting water in a region where maintaining adequate water supplies is a serious concern. Midland taxpayers will be helping pay for such projects as the Stacy Dam, and some of that water eventually may be piped here from 150 miles away only to flow uselessly down the streets.

Budget board asking state agencies to 'prepare for worst'

"One year a prairie dog dug a hole in Joe Bob Texas' garden, and Texas asked each of his friends to bring him a rock to help fill the hole. The next year the prairie dog dug a hole twice as large, so Texas asked his friends to bring two rocks."

A parable

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — In 1985, Texas budget writers faced a one-rock, $1 billion prairie dog hole. Lawmakers brought some budget trimmings, a few fee increases and higher college tuition to fill the hole.

Next year, they will have a two-rock, $2.2 billion hole to fill. With political promises apparently ruling out boulders such as tax increases, budget writers are asking state agencies and universities to come up with the extra rocks this time.

The Texas state budget covers two years — one biennium — at a time. Agencies and universities submit their appropriation requests in the summer of every even-numbered year, more than 12 months before the start of the next biennium. The Legislative Budget Board reviews those requests through the fall and prepares a draft budget for the Legislature to start with when they meet in January of every odd-numbered year.

Lawmakers usually wrangle over the budget for most of the 140-day legislative session. By May, they agree on appropriations levels for the biennium, which begins Sept. 1.

Earlier this year, the LBB sent its instructions to the agencies and universities. With falling oil prices reducing expected revenues for the 1988-1989 biennium by about $2.2 billion, the LBB asked the agencies to prepare for the worst.

The budget board asks the agencies and universities to prepare their requests on four levels. Level 1 "identifies a level of funding below which the program should be discontinued because it loses its viability or effectiveness."

Until this year, Level 1 forced the agencies to develop a budget reflecting at least a 10-percent reduction from existing appropriations. Level 2 budgets were equal to current funding; Level 3 reflected a 10-percent increase; Level 4 had no limit and included everything the agency or university could reasonably justify.

Those levels help the LBB and the Legislature recognize the agencies' priorities when they make budget cuts or award increases.

But Comptroller Bob Bullock's Feb. 13 message announcing the $2.2 billion shortfall — the amount by which the state would fall short if it wanted to continue at current spending rates — forced the LBB and the governor's budget office to take a unique step.

This year, Level 1 requires a 20-percent reduction, Level 2 is a 10-percent cut, Level 3 equals current spending and Level 4 stays the same. In addition, rather than allowing the schools and agencies to use last year's appropriations for their current spending base the budget offices threw in another money-saving twist.

Others can learn how to 'help kids cope'

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Five-year-old Mary is from a battered home and she thinks all daddies beat their wives.

Ten-year-old Chris thinks he's responsible for his mom's alcoholism.

Chris and Mary are fictional, but they are examples of who counselors are trying to reach through Helping Kids Cope, a counseling program sponsored by the Permian Basin's Battered Women's Center.

On Tuesday the two-year-old program will begin training local day care providers on counseling kids from troubled homes. Teachers and others who deal with children may also sign up for the program.

Almost all families have problems in one form or another, according to Kristen Arnold, counselor with Helping Kids Cope.

"I think every family has problems to some degree," Ms. Arnold said.

About 20 percent of the children counseled through the women's shelter and day care centers come from alcoholic families and about 50 percent have some degree of problems at home, Ms. Arnold said.

Three-year-olds to 18-year-olds are counseled through the program, but each age group has different problems.

The age group affected the most by family problems are 3 to 5 years of age because they don't realize that all families are not made up of abusers or alcoholics, Ms. Arnold said.

"It's worse for them because they haven't experienced anything else. That's all they know and remember," she said.

STATE in brief

Bodies of couple found

ORE CITY (AP) — The bodies of a man and a woman of "comparable age" to a young couple who vanished during a lake outing were found near this East Texas town Saturday, authorities said.

The bodies were taken to Dallas for autopsies and identification, said Upshur County Chief Deputy James Beasley.

Beasley said he would not speculate as to whether the bodies were of Hawkins residents Bryan Boone and Gina Turner, both 20.

Sheriff's deputies found the bodies about 11:15 a.m. Saturday in a drainage ditch beside Farm to Market Road 1649 about three miles north of Ore City and 15 miles east of Gilmer, Beasley said.

Arson sentence studied

DALLAS (AP) — A Rowlett woman convicted of setting a fire that killed her husband, two daughters and a family friend faces a possible life prison sentence.

A jury convicted Peggy Marie Taylor, 33, Friday of arson in a fire that destroyed her home March 8, 1985. State District Judge Ron Chapman ordered the punishment phase of the trial to begin Monday.

Prosecutors said Mrs. Taylor set the fire to keep her husband, Eddie, 37, from learning that she had been stealing money from him for several months. Taylor was planning to visit his credit union the day after the fire, prosecutors said.

During closing arguments, Assistant District Attorney Mark Hasse said Mrs. Taylor poured gasoline in the living room of the house and retrieved her baby, but was unable to get to her other two children — Angela Michelle, 11, and Tonya, 9 — who died in the fire.

A family friend, Earl Schultz, 51, also was killed.

Murder charges filed

HOUSTON (AP) — A 22-year-old man was charged with capital murder in the death of a Rice University student who would have received her diploma Saturday, police said.

John Kennedy Barefield was charged Friday in connection with the death of Cindy R. Rounsaville, 25, a Rice architecture student whose body was found in a far southwest Houston in a field near on April 22, police said.

She was wearing only a blouse and a bra and had been shot twice in the head, police said. The rest of her clothing was found in a nearby ditch.

Ms. Rounsanville would have graduated Saturday, and she was to be married July 5 in Tulsa, Okla., where her parents live.

10-year sentence asked

AUSTIN (AP) — A Travis County jury has recommended the maximum 10-year prison sentence for a mechanic who ran over and killed a University of Texas honor student after a night out drinking with friends.

Friday's verdict was hailed by prosecutors and the victim's family as a stern warning to drunken drivers that the people of Travis County will hold them accountable for their actions.

State District Judge Jon Wisser scheduled formal sentencing for Robert Earl Fenton, 21, for May 23.

Military use discussed

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — There have been internal discussions within the Immigration and Naturalization Service on use of the military to combat the flow of undocumented aliens, INS Commissioner Alan Nelson said.

Speaking Friday to the Mexican-American Police Command Officers Association, Nelson said a military presence could be used if uncontrolled immigration became an emergency. But he declined to give details of any preliminary discussions.

'Stoney Armadillo' back in Breckenridge awaiting kidnapping trial

BRECKENRIDGE (AP) — Two years ago, a capital murder suspect raced into a bank in this West Texas town, fleeing from lawmen who were hot on his heels.

Wielding two guns and taking seven people hostage, the man began a 12-hour siege that eventually ended with his arrest. Friday, he came back.

Richard Donald Foster, also known as "Stoney Armadillo," returned a convicted killer who has been sentenced to die for a 1984 Springtown murder. He still faces trial on seven counts of aggravated kidnapping in connection with the hostage siege.

A tentative trial date has been set for June 16, but site of the trial is still undecided.

District Judge R.E. Thornton granted a change-of-venue motion, but said he will wait to rule on a trial site. He told attorneys, "Let's take a shot at San Angelo."

STATE

When Foster was brought into the courtroom, he shook hands with Mac Smith and his brother Brock Smith, who have been appointed as special prosecutors in the case.

John Neal was appointed to represent Foster in the kidnapping case but had to withdraw after he was appointed to replace Tim Eyssen as district attorney. Neal, however, also removed himself from prosecution of Foster because of his former connection with his defense.

Ironically, the Smith brothers successfully sought the death penalty against Foster last November for the murder of Gary Mitchell Cox, 32, of Springtown.

Foster said he was fleeing lawmen May 10, 1984, when he barged into the bank. In an interview with the Abilene Reporter-News, Foster said the day-long siege began when he learned he was wanted for capital murder in Parker County.

He said he shot 35-year-old Jack Bellinoff of Scotland, Texas, shortly before fleeing into the bank. Bellinoff had picked up a hitchiking Foster.

Police said Foster then stole another car in Throckmorton County.

Officials perplexed by language, origin of boy found at airport

EL PASO (AP) — Perplexed authorities are trying to figure out how a boy they have dubbed "John Doe" came to be wandering around El Paso International Airport two weeks ago.

But caseworkers for the Texas Department of Human Services can't understand him. Nor can anyone else.

"He says a couple of words in English," said caseworker Louis Armendariz. "But basically, whatever his language is, it's very difficult to understand. We've brought in several different interpreters and we still haven't been able to find out what it is."

Airport security personnel found the boy April 22 and said he had been wandering around about two hours when security workers called the Department of Human Services.

Armendariz said communication is so difficult that workers don't even know the boy's name.

"We've been calling him John Doe, but it's kind of difficult to refer to him as John Doe every time you see him."

He describes the boy as "oriental-looking," about 13 years old, 5-foot-1, slender, with brown hair and brown eyes. He was wearing a red corduroy jacket with matching pants, an off-white sweater with red and green stripes, and navy blue tennis shoes when he was found.

"There's a pretty strong possibility that he could have been abandoned," Armendariz said. "He was probably traumatized but we don't know exactly how. We had him checked out and he seems in good health. But we don't know, because he's very fearful of male adults."

Adding to the language barrier, the child appears to have Down's Syndrome, a form of mental retardation, that Armendariz said has added to the boy's shyness.

"When he's calm, he seems to open up," Armendariz said. "But when a stranger enters the room, he gets scared."

Since communication with the boy is limited, Armendariz said, he doesn't know what the chances are of reuniting the child with his parents or guardians.

"If the child is from El Paso, we have a very good chance of finding out who he belongs to because people will say, 'I've seen that kid somewhere,' but if the child's not from El Paso it will be more difficult."

Armendariz added that "there's a possibility that his guardians or caretakers wanted the state to take care of him."

If the boy's parents or guardians are not found, the department will look for permanent placement for him and try to enroll him in a developmental program, he said.

Board postpones teacher appraisals

AUSTIN (AP) — A sharply divided State Board of Education on Saturday postponed the beginning of career appraisals for Texas teachers from this September until the spring of 1987.

Supporters of the move said it would relieve the stress teachers have been under from implementation of the 1984 school reform act, including recent mandatory reading and writing tests.

"This is an emergency situation," said board member Carolyn Crawford of Beaumont.

The board also postponed until June, on another close vote, any action on a proposal to make local districts take immediate remedial action in schools that consistently have failing students.

"This is a very extensive change," said board member Katherine Raines of Cleburne. "We should defer any action until we first have a public hearing."

A public hearing was scheduled before the June meeting of the board.

The board first rejected, 6-7, then approved, 7-6, the plan proposed by Ms. Crawford and Ms. Raines to delay appraising teachers' work four times a year to see if they deserve additional pay and prestige.

The career ladder system was mandated by the 1984 reform act, with teachers getting $2,000 raises for each step they advance.

The vote provides that the first part of the 1986-87 school year will be used to allow teachers to become accustomed to being judged by a administrators and trained appraisers.

Scores for consideration on the career ladder will not begin until 1987.

"Teachers are just now recovering from the literacy tests, which caused a great deal of stress," said Ms. Raines. "They really don't understand the law on these appraisals."

On Thursday, the board heard results of a statewide competency test that showed 96.7 percent of Texas teachers passing. There were 6,579 teachers who failed the test. Failure rates were 6 percent among Hispanics, 18.4 percent among blacks and 1.1 percent among whites.

COPE

From 10 on up, children begin to blame themselves for family problems, she said.

The counseling groups are broken into different age groups including 3 to 5-year-olds, 6 to 9-year-olds, 10 to 12-year-olds and 13 to 18-year-olds.

Domestic violence tends to be repeated through generations with little boys growing up to beat their wives and little girls growing up to marry abusers, she said. Counseling children can help stop the cycle by teaching them to take out their aggressions in other ways beside violence.

"Ninty-nine percent of the time, children from battered homes are real aggressive. You have to educate kids that there is a better way."

"The kids are where you can stop it or slow it down later," she said.

However a lack of self-esteem is the biggest problem found among children from families with batterers or substance abusers.

"The cycle is such that even if they just see the violence then their self-esteem will be lowered," she said.

To build up self-esteem, counselors have the children do exercises such as listing all the people who love them or discuss why they are special.

Since there is no guarantee that their mothers won't return back to their husbands, Ms. Arnold teaches the kids such survival skills as learning how to dial 911, how to leave the house if their parents start fighting, and how not to get between parents when they do start fighting.

"They really feel that need to protect mom," she said.

But many times children are unintentionally hurt when they get between the abuser and his wife. Also, if a woman leaves without her children, the batterer tends to transfer the abuse to his children, Ms. Arnold said.

Along with teaching children to protect themselves physically and emotionally, they are taught to rely and confide in adults outside of the home, such as teachers.

Generally the children in the program love the counseling, because most of them are starved for attention, Ms. Arnold said. "It's the only chance they get to have a lot of attention paid to them and talk about what they want."

NUCLEAR

"In critical situations there are various ways to react," Falin was quoted as saying. "This time the best way was not chosen."

Earlier Saturday, Radio Moscow carried a brief, taped interview with the director of the International Atomic Energy Agency, Hans Blix, in which he praised the Soviets' "enormous amount of competence in the nuclear field."

Blix and two other agency experts returned Friday to Vienna, Austria, after five days of talks with Soviet officials and a helicopter flight over the damaged reactor. Blix said on Radio Moscow that international measures should be reached so the whole world "can learn from this accident and thereby improve nuclear safety."

The Soviet statement Saturday said simply, "Work is being done to additionally consolidate the reactor's foundation."

The statement did not mention the casualty toll. Previous statements have said two people were killed and 204 hospitalized, with 18 of them in serious condition. Several East European journalists have said Soviet officials told them a third person died of excessive radiation.

Der Spiegel's Moscow correspondent Andreas Lorenz said Falin told him five of the injured were in grave condition.

New precautions against radiation contamination have been adopted around Moscow, 500 miles north of Kiev. A traveler arriving on the highway from Kiev reported police were checking all cars with non-Moscow plates for radiation.

A spokesman for Moscow traffic police said checks also were being made on highways from Minsk and other southern routes into the city. He did not say when the checks started.

Snake delaying Stacy acre acquisition, official says

BIG SPRING, Texas (AP) — The Colorado Municipal Water District won't be "in such a hurry" to acquire needed acreage for the Stacy Dam project while a water snake threatens to delay construction, a spokesman said.

Joe Pickle said the district has acquired 871 acres, but "we have estimated that Stacy Dam will need at least 19,200 acres."

With construction scheduled to start May 1987, Stacy Dam is proposed for the Colorado River about 25 miles downstream from Ballinger. The dam's reservoir would flood about half of the Concho Water Snake's primary habitat along the Colorado and Concho rivers in Runnels, Coleman and Concho counties.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is reviewing whether the snake should be designated a threatened species. Pickle said that the deadline for the determination is next January.

The proposed dam would supply water to Odessa, Big Spring, Snyder, Midland, San Angelo and Abilene.

A statement filed by attorney Roland Boyd of McKinney said environmental protests over a 12-year period added $100 million to the cost of the Cooper Reservoir in northeast Texas.

Boyd said costs for the project skyrocketed while the issue lingered in the courts.

Land acquisition delays could add to the cost of the dam, but the amount can not yet be determined, Pickle said.

Pickle also said that for every month the project is delayed, the water district would be forced to pay interest on $53.5 million in bonds. He added that if the project were delayed as long as a year, the district would consider refinancing the bonds — costs that Pickle said would be passed along to water district customers.

District officials remain hopeful, however, that the federal government will follow the state's lead and issue the permit, Pickle said.

Bob Thompson, an engineer with Freese & Nichols of Fort Worth, reported to the water district Thursday that construction plans for Stacy Dam currently are 52 percent complete and that he expects to advertise for bids next March.

WATER

John Lowe, Midland's director of public utilities, estimates that about 5 percent of the city's annual water consumption is wasted by people "trying to grow grass in the middle of the street."

"I'd say the waste could be as high as 300 million gallons a year," Lowe said. "It's just a terrible waste of a very precious resource in West Texas, and I'd like to see it be a crime to do that."

That would mean passing an ordinance.

"The council's asked the legal office to come up with one," said City Manager Jim Brown. "They just don't know if they can write an ordinance that we could make stick."

The difficulty, according to City Attorney David Reagan, is tracing water in the streets back to individual culprits.

"How do you determine who is responsible?" he asked. "How do you structure such a law that would be, as a practical matter, enforceable?"

In lieu of such a law, the city has tried jawboning the managers of the north Midland apartment complexes which are the major offenders, urging them to make their sprinkler systems more efficient. That approach hasn't been very effective, according to Brown.

"The best method to use is a public relations program," said Reagan. "Let them know that what they're doing is going to cost them more in the end because they're ruining the streets."

"If we cannot educate the public, we would then reconsider the ordinance," he said.

But no formal publicity campaign against nuisance water has ever been tried, and none is in the works, officials concede.

Instead of appealing to citizens' consciences, the city may try appealing to their pocketbooks, Godfrey said.

Consumers currently pay a flat rate of $1.65 per thousand gallons of water used.

"Probably what we ought to do is make it an increasing rate," so the more water a person uses, the higher the price per gallon, Godfrey said.

"The best conservation (method) we've found is probably economic," he said. People will change their habits "if it's too costly to waste water."

BUDGET

After Gov. Mark White heard Bullock's Feb. 13 message, he asked all the agencies and colleges to reduce their spending by 13 percent to keep the state treasury in the black until the Legislature returns in January. In turn, the LBB told the agencies and universities to use that 13-percent reduction as Level 3.

So a $100 million-a-year agency, for example, this year must submit a Level 1 appropriations request at $70 million, a Level 2 plan at $78.75 million and a Level 3 proposal at $87.5 million. Under the old method, those figures would have been $90 million, $100 million and $110 million respectively.

The new levels scare some agency budget officers. Oscar Baxley, vice chancellor for finance at Lamar University in Beaumont, said a 25-percent cut from last year's appropriation would "wipe out summer school," cause severe reductions in other academic programs and "reduce personnel below emergency levels."

LBB director Jim Oliver said he asked agencies to prepare for budget cuts because "there's no way we'll have enough money to finance everybody at 100 percent. There's no way we'd have enough money to finance everybody at 80 percent.

"We could write a budget at 60 percent if we wanted to," Oliver added. "It's an early warning to tell people how bad the situation really is."

Baxley said the LBB seems to ask for more detail in the appropriations requests than it really needs. Oliver and House Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Rudd said neither the LBB nor lawmakers feel bound to follow the agencies' priorities.

A look at what happened to the Texas Department of Health in 1985 provides an example. The Legislature cut the Health Department's budget by 5.1 percent — nearly $13.6 million — the largest reduction for any state agency. The cuts came in some areas the department apparently considered important.

Lawmakers cut almost $7 million from the Health Department's $40.2 million crippled children's program, a reduction that took that program 4.5 percent below the Level 1 request. The Health Department had ranked the crippled children's program as No. 50 in importance out of its 274 budget items. In its appropriations request, the department said Level 1 would provide aid only "to children in urgent need of treatment."

On the other hand, the Legislature gave a 9.6 percent increase — almost full Level 4 funding — for the Health Department's communicable diseases program. The Level 4 request for that program — ranked No. 244 — asked for almost $2 million to purchase additional polio and diphtheria-tetanus-pertussis vaccines.

Rudd says lawmkaers use both the agencies' priorities and their own judgment — including comments from their constituents who have contact with the agencies — when deciding where to cut and where to increase.

"They're never willing to cut anything," he said. "They're always saying, 'Give us more.'"

White's call for agencies to cut back now, Rudd said, gives them "the perfect opportunity" to set their priorities and show they can save money. Those who comply with the governor's request will fare better next year than those that don't, he said.

"Don't come to me crying because we cut you someplace when you didn't cut," he warned.

From 10 on up, children begin to blame themselves for family problems, she said.

The counseling groups are broken into different age groups including 3 to 5-year-olds, 6 to 9-year-olds, 10 to 12-year-olds and 13 to 18-year-olds.

Domestic violence tends to be repeated through generations with little boys growing up to beat their wives and little girls growing up to marry abusers, she said. Counseling children can help stop the cycle by teaching them to take out their aggressions in other ways beside violence.

"Ninty-nine percent of the time, children from battered homes are real aggressive. You have to educate kids that there is a better way."

"The kids are where you can stop it or slow it down later," she said.

However a lack of self-esteem is the biggest problem found among children from families with batterers or substance abusers.

"The cycle is such that even if they just see the violence then their self-esteem will be lowered," she said.

To build up self-esteem, counselors have the children do exercises such as listing all the people who love them or discuss why they are special.

Snake delaying Stacy acre acquisition, official says

BIG SPRING, Texas (AP) — The Colorado Municipal Water District won't be "in such a hurry" to acquire needed acreage for the Stacy Dam project while a water snake threatens to delay construction, a spokesman said.

Joe Pickle said the district has acquired 871 acres, but "we have estimated that Stacy Dam will need at least 19,200 acres."

BUDGET

After Gov. Mark White heard Bullock's Feb. 13 message, he asked all the agencies and colleges to reduce their spending by 13 percent to keep the state treasury in the black until the Legislature returns in January. In turn, the LBB told the agencies and universities to use that 13-percent reduction as Level 3.

So a $100 million-a-year agency, for example, this year must submit a Level 1 appropriations request at $70 million, a Level 2 plan at $78.75 million and a Level 3 proposal at $87.5 million. Under the old method, those figures would have been $90 million, $100 million and $110 million respectively.

The new levels scare some agency budget officers. Oscar Baxley, vice chancellor for finance at Lamar University in Beaumont, said a 25-percent cut from last year's appropriation would "wipe out summer school," cause severe reductions in other academic programs and "reduce personnel below emergency levels."

LBB director Jim Oliver said he asked agencies to prepare for budget cuts because "there's no way we'll have enough money to finance everybody at 100 percent. There's no way we'd have enough money to finance everybody at 80 percent.

"We could write a budget at 60 percent if we wanted to," Oliver added. "It's an early warning to tell people how bad the situation really is."

Baxley said the LBB seems to ask for more detail in the appropriations requests than it really needs. Oliver and House Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Rudd said neither the LBB nor lawmakers feel bound to follow the agencies' priorities.

A look at what happened to the Texas Department of Health in 1985 provides an example. The Legislature cut the Health Department's budget by 5.1 percent — nearly $13.6 million — the largest reduction for any state agency. The cuts came in some areas the department apparently considered important.

Lawmakers cut almost $7 million from the Health Department's $40.2 million crippled children's program, a reduction that took that program 4.5 percent below the Level 1 request. The Health Department had ranked the crippled children's program as No. 50 in importance out of its 274 budget items. In its appropriations request, the department said Level 1 would provide aid only "to children in urgent need of treatment."

On the other hand, the Legislature gave a 9.6 percent increase — almost full Level 4 funding — for the Health Department's communicable diseases program. The Level 4 request for that program — ranked No. 244 — asked for almost $2 million to purchase additional polio and diphtheria-tetanus-pertussis vaccines.

Rudd says lawmkaers use both the agencies' priorities and their own judgment — including comments from their constituents who have contact with the agencies — when deciding where to cut and where to increase.

"They're never willing to cut anything," he said. "They're always saying, 'Give us more.'"

White's call for agencies to cut back now, Rudd said, gives them "the perfect opportunity" to set their priorities and show they can save money. Those who comply with the governor's request will fare better next year than those that don't, he said.

"Don't come to me crying because we cut you someplace when you didn't cut," he warned.

Electoral 'name game' can be fun

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Boy, elections sure are fun. Not campaigns — they're dreary and curmudgeonous — but the elections themselves. They make America great. They make Texas interesting. And someday — when we elect some wino with AIDS named Sam Houston Connolly Yarborough III — they may be the downfall of us all.

Saturday's primaries provided enough grist for dozens of columns, but let's try to boil it down to just the best.

First, in the governor's race, Bill Clements is already taking extreme pains to set himself up as the underdog against Mark White in November. "If we do everything exactly right," he told reporters soon after the elections, "we're going to barely win."

That's an interesting twist from a man who lost his last election because of overconfidence. Perhaps Clements is out for the sympathy vote (that's an interesting concept, a sympathy vote for Bill Clements), but more than likely he just wants to keep his campaign crew from letting down after their overwhelming victory Saturday.

But the numbers — ah, the numbers — show it's Clements' race to lose at this point. Sure, White drew more votes against five opponents than voted in the entire Republican primary. But those five opponents had virtually no name ID and they came within 38,000 votes of outpolling the combined GOP field.

White picked up 15 percent of his votes from Dallas and Harris counties, beating his top two opponents by about 5-to-1. But more Republicans than Democrats voted in those two counties, and — in November — Houston and Dallas voters tend to pull the GOP lever.

The problem for White is where his support didn't come from. Voters in the four largest East Texas counties supported Andy Briscoe and Don Crowder over White by a 14-13 margin. One observer chalked that up to a combination of the anti-seatbelt vote and the disgruntled-teacher vote, but White's folks have to be asking themselves if the traditional East Texas "yellow-dog Democrats" will stick with their man come November.

In the Rio Grande Valley, where a stupendous 1982 turnout helped White beat Clements, the governor beat Briscoe and Crowder only by about 11-to-6 in the four largest counties. Even in his home Rusk County, he lost to Briscoe and Crowder by more than 500 votes.

Back to the Valley. Democratic voters in the Brownsville-McAllen area turned out three incumbent state representatives on the strength of teacher opposition to their support of teacher testing and House Bill 72. Between them, Don Lee, Tony Garcia and Rene Oliviera had 18 years of experience and two of the five Hispanic seats on the key House Appropriations Committee.

That was an informed vote — in the sense that the teachers identified who they wanted out of office — but perhaps a shortsighted one on the part of the other voters who followed the teachers' lead. In financial terms, HB 72 helped the poor Valley schools more than any other in the state. Such an anti-HB 72 sentiment would have made much more sense if it had ousted reps who supported the bill even though it cost their constituents state aid.

Speaking of informed and uninformed votes, you gotta feel sorry for John Pouland. The Democratic candidate for Railroad Commissioner campaigned his heart out against the well-financed front runner John Sharp. Democrats will return to the polls to select a commission nominee June 7, but Pouland won't be one of the runoff candidates.

In the end, Pouland lost — not to a dead man, as one Austin TV station reported — but to a dead man's name. Percy "Sam" Ervin, who adopted the ballot name "Sam" in the apparently successful hopes that voters would associate him with his late, distant cousin of Watergate fame, nudged Pouland from the runoff ballot by about 4,400 votes. What little campaigning Ervin did focused on illegal aliens — an issue with no ties to the Railroad Commission.

Republicans weren't immune from the famous-name syndrome either. The leading vote getter in the race to oppose Land Commissioner Garry Mauro was an unknown dance hall manager from Kaufman County named M.D. Anderson Jr. He faces someone named "Yarbrough" in the runoff.

And then there's Aaron Bullock, one of the two men in the GOP lieutenant governor runoff. Bullock wouldn't even return phone calls from reporters who wanted to publicize his campaign, yet he ended up with almost as many votes as Kent Hance.

I think I'll change my last name to "Austin" and run for something.

Steve Levine heads up the Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau.

Most Hispanics voted in Democratic primary

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Despite the presence of a Hispanic on the state Republican ticket, most Hispanics participated in the Democratic primary, according to the Southwest Voter Registration Education Project.

Robert Brischetto, the project's research director, said Friday the organization is still surveying its sample of 100 precincts in Texas but that "it seems to run very strong in one direction and is very lopsided in favor of the Democrats."

According to Texas GOP leaders, almost 40 percent of Hispanic voters voted Republican in 1984, more than ever before.

But statewide results from the May 3 primary showed a Hispanic turnout of 23 percent in the Democratic primary and 1 percent in the GOP primary, Brischetto said.

"They didn't get the crossover that was expected" after recent presidential elections had shown a trend among Hispanic voters toward the Republican Party, he said.

Edwards, four co-defendants acquitted

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Gov. Edwin Edwards and his four co-defendants were acquitted Saturday of all charges in a federal racketeering and fraud case involving state approvals for new hospitals and nursing homes.

The trial was the second for the governor, his brother Marion and three business associates. A trial last year ended in a hung jury, but with jurors leaning heavily toward acquittal.

This time, the defendants mounted no case of their own, saying they felt the government's case was too weak to warrant a response.

Jurors deliberated for 12 hours over two days before finding the defendants innocent in what prosecutors contended was an illegal scheme to obtain state certification for $10 million worth of hospital and nursing home projects in which some of the defendants held interests.

Edwards, his brother and their business associates Ronald Falgout, James Wyllie Jr. and Gus Mijalis had been accused of racketeering and mail fraud, and all but Mijalis faced wire fraud counts as well.

"Freedom!" Edwards said jubilantly. "You don't know what it means when someone with power tries to take it away from you."

The governor was surrounded by family, friends and the other defendants on the courthouse steps where he launched into harsh criticism of U.S. Attorney John Volz.

He accused the Republican prosecutor of being on a political mission to convict Democratic officials who could not be defeated at the polls.

"His words come back to haunt him," Edwards said. "He told this jury to send a message to the people of Louisiana, and, brother, they sent one.

"The message is that this is a courthouse not a political headquarters. ... The message is this courthouse is a citadel of justice, not a cesspoool of Republican politics."

Volz responded, "He can say all the bad things he wants to about me, but all I can say is, 'God bless him.'"

Saying he was disappointed with the verdict, he added, "We don't go into anything to lose, but we praise the jury system when we win so we can't complain when we lose."

He maintained he still thinks Edwards violated the law and said, "We did the right thing." He said the case had to go to a second trial so it could be resolved.

Edwards has been Louisiana's the most successful politician since Huey Long. He won 15 straight elections in rising from Crowley city councilman to state legislator to congressman to governor and in 1983, he became the first person to win Louisiana's governorship three times.

By his own count, he had been investigated by grand juries 14 times. None returned an indictment until Volz won the racketeering charges last year.

The governor's verdict was read first and brought immediate screams and cheers from the side of the courtroom where his family sat. Edwards' wife, Elaine, sobbed and rested her head on the shoulder of their son David.

Marshals immediately cautioned family members to be quiet.

When all verdicts had been read, Edwards stood and said, "I would like permission on behalf of the defendants to thank the jury and thank the court and the personnel of the court."

Chances slim as boy gets liver transplant

BOSTON (AP) — A 9-month-old boy whose desperate need for a new liver caught the attention of Nancy Reagan underwent transplant surgery Saturday, but doctors said the operation probably came too late.

Alex Kevin Girard's condition had rapidly deteriorated, forcing a heart-lung bypass, just as a donor organ was found, doctors said.

"Unfortunately, it looks as if we're just about 24 hours later than we would like to have been," said Dr. Hardy Hendren, chief of surgery at Children's Hospital. "I would summarize the baby's present condition as desperate."

Hendren said Alex's chances of survival were "very poor.... At this moment it looks gloomy, but we are reluctant to use the word 'hopeless.'"

The operation, which began several hours before the donor liver arrived at 10 a.m. in a picnic cooler filled with ice, was expected to take 12 to 18 hours, according to Flora Iacchia, a hospital spokeswoman.

Ms. Iacchia said the liver was connected by 2:45 p.m., but doctors would not know for several hours whether the transplant took. She said Alex remained "very critical." The operation was expected to continue through the afternoon.

We Apologize To Everyone Who Just Bought A New Garment Bag

Because your new bag just became obsolete. Now introducing the System 4 Valet Garment Bag. After years of listening, researching and designing, we've developed the World's Greatest Garment Bag. Several of its features are so superior they have their very own patent pending, which won't be of much help to you if you've just bought a new garment bag. And for that we apologize. It really wasn't anything personal. Just a matter of perfection.

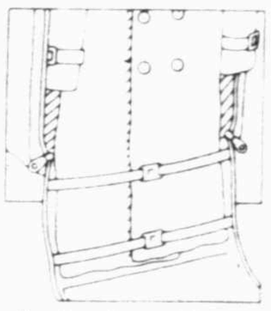

Our over the shoulder pockets. Altogether, System 4 has eight pockets. Two are in a most unusual area. An area normally wasted: the shoulder area. A space ideal for shoes or that awkward hair dryer.

Our hanger system. There isn't one. You can use the hangers your clothes are already hanging on or the hangers we give you. Because with our hanger lock they're all equally secure.

NATION IN BRIEF

Dotson freed year ago

CHICAGO (AP) — A year after Gary Dotson was granted his freedom on Mother's Day, he has put aside the fight to clear his name of charges that he raped Cathleen Crowell Webb and slipped comfortably into a life of relative anonymity.

Dotson

Gov. James R. Thompson commuted Dotson's sentence for rape a day after Dotson's tearful mother, Barbara, insisted her son was innocent and said, "I think a mother senses when a child is lying."

Strangers still stop Dotson, now 29, on the street, but less frequently than they did when the woman whose testimony sent him to prison came forward after six years and insisted she had lied.

"We're out and somebody looks and says, 'Aren't you Gary Dotson?'" said Dotson's wife of six months, Camille, 23. "He just brushes it off and smiles."

Dotson did not return repeated phone calls to his home requesting an interview.

Space program 'in hole'

HOT SPRINGS, Va. (AP) — Recent launch failures have put America's space program "in a slump and a very deep hole," an authority said Saturday.

"It is a serious situation...one that is going to require money and time to repair," Lew Allen Jr., director of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, told a news conference.

The assessment came followed a speech to the Business Council, an advisory group of about 60 executives of major corporations who are meeting here.

The laboratory operates the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's program of planetary exploration with unmanned spacecraft.

Ship recommissioned

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The battleship USS Missouri, modernized with nuclear missile capability and advanced computer technology, returned to service Saturday nearly 41 years after it was the scene of the Japanese surrender.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger called the recommissioning "a day to celebrate the rebirth of American sea power after years of dangerous neglect" and said it marks "one of the great satisfactions of my tenure."

The ship, which last saw action in the Korean War, is a key part of President Reagan's plan to bring the Navy's strength up to 600 ships.

About 12,000 guests joined the 1,654 officers and enlisted men in dress blues for the festivities aboard the 887-foot dreadnaught.

Forest fire spreading

HAMPSTEAD, N.C. (AP) — A fire that had charred 25,550 acres of forest land made a loop across southeastern North Carolina on Saturday, forcing homeowners to use sprinklers and hoses to douse their roofs as smoke reportedly spread into Florida.

Officials asked residents of 800 homes east of U.S. 17 to evacuate.

WE'RE HURTING.

Saving lives can be very expensive. The costs of our disaster relief and other humanitarian programs keep mounting. And we can't afford to come up short.

Please help.

Ten Tips for Buying a Diamond

1. Choose a jeweler in whom you have confidence. Make sure that he will talk to you, frankly and freely, about the diamond you want to buy and the price you want to pay.

2. All diamonds are rare, and certain types are very rare. The Four C's—carat weight, color, clarity, cut—explain why diamonds that appear to be virtually identical may show a wide range in value.

3. Carat. This is the unit of weight used for diamonds, a word derived from carob seeds used to balance scales in ancient times. There are 100 points in a carat, so a diamond of 27 points weighs a little more than a quarter-carat. The average rough diamond weighs less than a carat. Because the larger stones are rare they have a greater value per carat.

4. Color. A diamond may be any color of the spectrum; but most diamonds are "white," with a tinge of color. Completely colorless diamonds are rare, and therefore more valuable. Like a prism, a diamond breaks light into "fire"—every color of the rainbow. A diamond with a hint of color seems to have more fire, a warmer beauty.

5. Clairty. Most diamonds contain natural imperfections—spots, bubbles or lines included in the stone when it was crystallized from carbon millions of years ago. Where such "inclusions" do not interfere materially with the passage of light through the stone, they do not affect its beauty. However, the fewer inclusions a diamond, the more valuable it is. A "flawless" diamond-one that shows no imperfctions to a trained eye using 10-power magnification—is very rare.

6. Cut. The diamond's beauty depends on the way it hondles light for brilliance, fire, and scintillatic n ("twinkling"). "Cut" may mean make, or the precision of the placement of the facets to handle light for maximum beauty. It may also mean the shape of the finished diamond. Marquise, pear-shaped and oval diamonds tend to look larger than round (brillant) or emerald-cut diamonds of the same weight, but the round has more brillancy.

7. Gradations within each of the Four C's make for an infinite number of combinations to determine the value of any diamond. But there's a range of beautiful diamonds for any price you want to pay; it's just a matter of matching price with size and quality.

8. The solitaire, or single-stone engagement ring, is the best buy for a given sum because almost all its value is in the one diamond. However, you may prefer a more elaborate ring with side stones or other decorative features.

9. In other pieces of diamond jewelry—occasional rings, watches, pins, earrings, bracelets, necklaces—the cost depends not only on the diamonds but also on the other materials and the workmanship. Diamonds make any piece of jewelry precious—and very special.

10. When you buy a diamond—whether an engagement ring or another piece—buy what will mean most to her and to you. Diamonds say "I Love You" and they keep on saying it, forever.

Don't count that tax cut before compromise hatched

By JIM LUTHER
AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON — The latest plan to drastically overhaul the federal income tax has so much momentum, backers say, that it stands a good chance of being passed almost intact by the Senate. But don't count your tax cut yet.

The final version of a new tax law would be written, mainly behind closed doors, by a handful of senators and representatives picking and choosing from among hundreds of provisions in the separate 1,000-plus-page bills passed by the House and Senate. The list of winners and losers in the final compromise — the size of your tax cut — could be considerably different than under either bill.

"You're going to get a tax-reform bill because nobody should ever bet against the most popular president of our time," said David Berenson of the Washington office of Ernst and Whinney accountants. "But the bill will be written in the conference (of senior House and Senate tax-writers). What you see now is not what you'll get."

But this can be said with certainty: If Congress agrees this year on a tax bill, it will be one with radically lower tax rates, fewer deductions and exclusions, a sharply higher burden on corporations, a 100 percent income-tax cut for about 6 million of the working poor, and a tough crackdown on profitable businesses and wealthy investors who have managed to legally duck their share of taxes.

Those elements are included in the bill that passed the House last December and in the version that emerged from the Senate Finance Committee by a unanimous vote on Wednesday.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., Finance Committee chairman and chief author of the bill, predicts it will suffer no major damage during the Senate debate, even though he acknowledged he is likely to lose some amendments. If everything goes according to plan — and it seldom does in Congress — the final version could be in President Reagan's hands for his signature in early August.

Majority Leader Bob Dole says Packwood's bill — with unanimous endorsement of the Finance Committee and general support from Reagan — is so popular that "it's changed the whole landscape on tax reform." He sees it zipping through the Senate.

Reagan on Saturday described the Senate plan as "a giant step forward" although he noted it was not perfect. "The people won," the president said, endorsing the Packwood proposal.

Here are some of the major differences affecting individual taxes:

RATES: The House voted to cut the top individual rate (now 50 percent) to 38 percent, although most people would pay at either a 15 percent or 25 percent rate. In the Senate version, most would pay 15 percent; on paper the top rate would be 17 percent but some upper-income people could pay around 32 percent because of restrictions in other parts of the bill.

EXEMPTIONS: A $2,000-per-person exemption is included in the House plan for taxpayers who do not itemize and $1,500 for those who do. Packwood's bill has $2,000 for all but the wealthiest, some of whom would get zero.

RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS: The House voted to keep tax-deferred Individual Retirement Accounts for every worker who can afford one. The Senate plan would restrict a fully deductible $2,000-a-year IRA to a person not eligible for a company pension plan, although other workers could deposit up to $2,000 — without a deduction — and the interest would not be taxed until withdrawn. Because this affects more than 20 million families, this proposal has drawn more fire than any other part of the Senate bill.

INTEREST: Although both bills would permit deduction of mortgage interest on one or two homes, other non-business interest would be treated differently. The House bill would allow a person to deduct up to $10,000 of consumer interest ($20,000 for a couple) — including automobile and education loans — plus an amount equal to income from investments. The Senate plan would permit an amount equal to investment income but no deduction for consumer interest.

SALES TAXES: The House would allow itemizers to continue deducting all state and local sales, property and income taxes. The Senate plan would wipe out the deduction for sales tax, but Packwood predicts the full deduction is likely to be in the final compromise.

CAPITAL GAINS: For more than 50 years, the federal government has taxed these gains — profits from the sale of property, such as real estate and stocks — at a lower rate than ordinary income under the assumption that was needed to attract money to important but risky ventures. The top rate now is 20 percent; it can be as low as 4.4 percent. The House voted a 22 percent rate. The Senate plan would tax gains at the same rate as other income — 15 percent or 27 percent.

HOW THEY VOTED

Saudi arms deal key issue in both chambers

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending May 9, 1986.

KEY HOUSE VOTES:

House follows Senate's lead, blocks arms sale to Saudi Arabia. In a resounding defeat for the Reagan administration, the House overwhelmingly passed a resolution blocking the sale of $354 million worth of arms to Saudi Arabia. The 356-62 vote May 7, which came on the heels of similar action by the Senate, virtually guarantees that the House has the votes necessary to override a presidential veto. If all House members vote on the override, 289 would be needed to overcome a veto.

The actions by both the House and the Senate mark the first time both chambers have blocked an arms sale outright. The bipartisan vote in each chamber was surprising given that neither Israel nor the pro-Israel lobbying group American Israel Public Affairs Committee actively opposed the sale. The president, who was away from Washington when the votes in the House and the Senate were taken, is expectd to veto the resolution. A two-thirds majority of those present and voting in both chamberss is required to override a veto.

Those who favored blocking the sale said the Saudi government had failed to promote the U.S. national security interests in the Middle East, despite the fact that the United States had provided that country with nearly $50 billion in military equipment and services over the past three decades. They argued that the Saudi government provided financial support for the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and Syria and had also isolated Egypt after that country demonstrated a willingess to pursue peace with Israel. Others expressed anger at the Saudi condemnation of the recent U.S. air strike on Libya.

Opponents said that the arms sale was vital to U.S. interests in the region. They argued that Saudi Arabia could not match the military might of Israel and emphasized the threat posed to the comparatively moderate government in Saudi Arabia by radical nations such as Iran. "The security of the entire Persian Gulf region is at stake — and American interests in that vital part of the world are not served by undercutting those moderate Arab states that have long looked to American leadership and support as indispensable elements in maintaining security in the gulf," declared Gerald B. Solomon, R-NY.

Voting to pass the resolution blocking the arms sale to Saudi Arabia:

Reps. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio; Richard Armey, R-Denton and Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo.

Voting against:

Rep. Larry Combest, R-Lubbock

Not Voting: Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt.

KEY SENATE VOTES:

Senate rejects arms sale to Saudis. In a surprisingly lopsided vote by the Republican-controlled Senate, a proposed arms sale to Saudi Arabia was blocked 73-22 May 6. That is six more votes than would be needed to override a presidential veto if the full Senate is present and voting.

The resolution puts a hold on the delivery of about 2,500 missiles, including the highly sophisticated Stinger anti-aircraft weapon, the Sidewinder air-to-air missile and the Harpoon anti-ship rocket.

In order to block an arms sale of thei magnitude, each chamber must pass a joint resolution within 30 days of a formal request from the White House. President Reagan submitted his proposal to Congress April 8.

Supporters of the ban voiced concerns similar to those of House members and said that Saudi Arabia had failed to live up to the conditions set forth in the 1981 Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS) aircraft sale. They also argued that Saudi Arabia had failed to demonstrate a need for the missiles , which would not even be delivered until 1989. Others said that the easily transported Stinger missiles are greatly desired by terrorists. "It would be unwise to make such a longterm commitment to a nation which has repeatedly scorned both American and Israeli interests," said Alan J. Dixon, D-Ill. "This sale is important if we are to have any credibility as a player in the Middle East and if we are to maintain the intermediary role that has allowed us to achieve some very substantial successes in the region," argued Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Richard Lugar, R-Ind., who vigorously defended the proposed sale. Others said that if the sale were blocked, Saudi Arabia would look for weapons from nations less interested in furthering the cause of peace in the Middle East.

Voting to approve the resolution blocking the arms sale to Saudi Arabia.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas. Voting against:

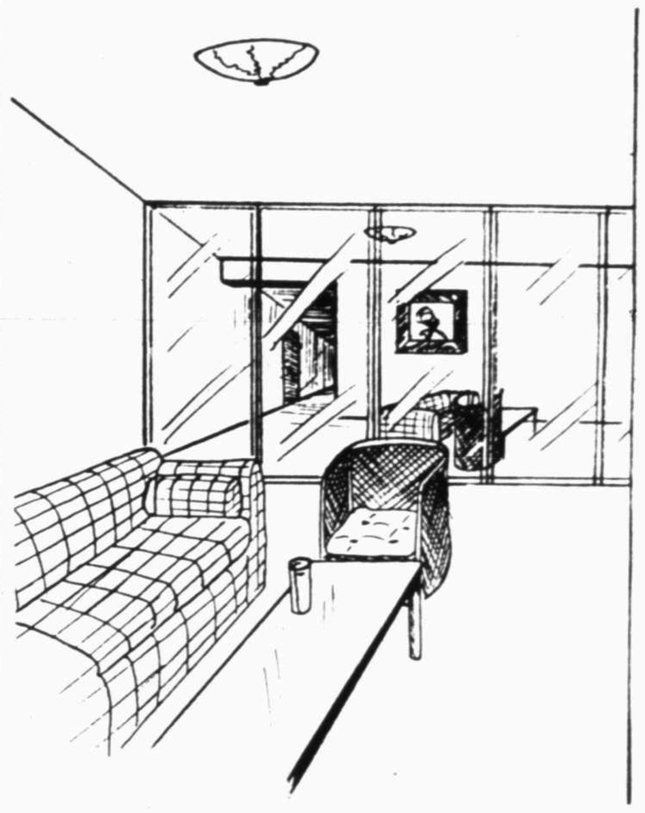

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

NATION IN BRIEF

Dotson freed year ago

Dotson

CHICAGO (AP) — A year after Gary Dotson was granted his freedom on Mother's Day, he has put aside the fight to clear his name of charges that he raped Cathleen Crowell Webb and slipped comfortably into a life of relative anonymity.

Gov. James R. Thompson commuted Dotson's sentence for rape a day after Dotson's tearful mother, Barbara, insisted her son was innocent and said, "I think a mother senses when a child is lying."

Strangers still stop Dotson, now 29, on the street, but less frequently than they did when the woman whose testimony sent him to prison came forward after six years and insisted she had lied.

"We're out and somebody looks and says, 'Aren't you Gary Dotson?'" said Dotson's wife of six months, Camille, 23. "He just brushes it off and smiles."

Dotson did not return repeated phone calls to his home requesting an interview.

Space program 'in hole'

HOT SPRINGS, Va. (AP) — Recent launch failures have put America's space program "in a slump and a very deep hole," an authority said Saturday.

"It is a serious situation...one that is going to require money and time to repair," Lew Allen Jr., director of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, told a news conference.

The assessment came followed a speech to the Business Council, an advisory group of about 60 executives of major corporations who are meeting here.

The laboratory operates the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's program of planetary exploration with unmanned spacecraft.

Ship recommissioned

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The battleship USS Missouri, modernized with nuclear missile capability and advanced computer technology, returned to service Saturday nearly 41 years after it was the scene of the Japanese surrender.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger called the recommissioning "a day to celebrate the rebirth of American sea power after years of dangerous neglect" and said it marks "one of the great satisfactions of my tenure."

The ship, which last saw action in the Korean War, is a key part of President Reagan's plan to bring the Navy's strength up to 600 ships.

About 12,000 guests joined the 1,654 officers and enlisted men in dress blues for the festivities aboard the 887-foot dreadnaught.

Forest fire spreading

HAMPSTEAD, N.C. (AP) — A fire that had charred 25,550 acres of forest land made a loop across southeastern North Carolina on Saturday, forcing homeowners to use sprinklers and hoses to douse their roofs as smoke reportedly spread into Florida.

Officials asked residents of 800 homes east of U.S. 17 to evacuate.

Ten Tips for Buying a Diamond

1. Choose a jeweler in whom you have confidence. Make sure that he will talk to you, frankly and freely, about the diamond you want to buy and the price you want to pay.

2. All diamonds are rare, and certain types are very rare. The Four C's—carat weight, color, clarity, cut—explain why diamonds that appear to be virtually identical may show a wide range in value.

3. Carat. This is the unit of weight used for diamonds, a word derived from carob seeds used to balance scales in ancient times. There are 100 points in a carat, so a diamond of 27 points weighs a little more than a quarter-carat. The average rough diamond weighs less than a carat. Because the larger stones are rare they have a greater value per carat.

4. Color. A diamond may be any color of the spectrum; but most diamonds are "white," with a tinge of color. Completely colorless diamonds are rare, and therefore more valuable. Like a prism, a diamond breaks light into "fire"—every color of the rainbow. A diamond with a hint of color seems to have more fire, a warmer beauty.

5. Clairty. Most diamonds contain natural imperfections—spots, bubbles or lines included in the stone when it was crystallized from carbon millions of years ago. Where such "inclusions" do not interfere materially with the passage of light through the stone, they do not affect its beauty. However, the fewer inclusions a diamond, the more valuable it is. A "flawless" diamond-one that shows no imperfctions to a trained eye using 10-power magnification—is very rare.

6. Cut. The diamond's beauty depends on the way it handles light for brilliance, fire, and scintillatic n ("twinkling"). "Cut" may mean make, or the precision of the placement of the facets to handle light for maximum beauty. It may also mean the shape of the finished diamond. Marquise, pear-shaped and oval diamonds tend to look larger than round (brillant) or emerald-cut diamonds of the same weight, but the round has more brillancy.

7. Gradations within each of the Four C's make for an infinite number of combinations to determine the value of any diamond. But there's a range of beautiful diamonds for any price you want to pay; it's just a matter of matching price with size and quality.

8. The solitaire, or single-stone engagement ring, is the best buy for a given sum because almost all its value is in the one diamond. However, you may prefer a more elaborate ring with side stones or other decorative features.

9. In other pieces of diamond jewelry—occasional rings, watches, pins, earrings, bracelets, necklaces—the cost depends not only on the diamonds but also on the other materials and the workmanship. Diamonds make any piece of jewelry precious—and very special.

10. When you buy a diamond—whether an engagement ring or another piece—buy what will mean most to her and to you. Diamonds say "I Love You" and they keep on saying it, forever.

Don't count that tax cut before compromise hatched

By JIM LUTHER
AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON — The latest plan to drastically overhaul the federal income tax has so much momentum, backers say, that it stands a good chance of being passed almost intact by the Senate. But don't count your tax cut yet.

The final version of a new tax law would be written, mainly behind closed doors, by a handful of senators and representatives picking and choosing from among hundreds of provisions in the separate 1,000-plus-page bills passed by the House and Senate. The list of winners and losers in the final compromise — the size of your tax cut — could be considerably different than under either bill.

"You're going to get a tax-reform bill because nobody should ever bet against the most popular president of our time," said David Berenson of the Washington office of Ernst and Whinney accountants. "But the bill will be written in the conference (of senior House and Senate tax-writers). What you see now is not what you'll get."

But this can be said with certainty: If Congress agrees this year on a tax bill, it will be one with radically lower tax rates, fewer deductions and exclusions, a sharply higher burden on corporations, a 100 percent income-tax cut for about 6 million of the working poor, and a tough crackdown on profitable businesses and wealthy investors who have managed to legally duck their share of taxes.

Those elements are included in the bill that passed the House last December and in the version that emerged from the Senate Finance Committee by a unanimous vote on Wednesday.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., Finance Committee chairman and chief author of the bill, predicts it will suffer no major damage during the Senate debate, even though he acknowledged he is likely to lose some amendments. If everything goes according to plan — and it seldom does in Congress — the final version could be in President Reagan's hands for his signature in early August.

Majority Leader Bob Dole says Packwood's bill — with unanimous endorsement of the Finance Committee and general support from Reagan — is so popular that "it's changed the whole landscape on tax reform." He sees it zipping through the Senate.

Reagan on Saturday described the Senate plan as "a giant step forward" although he noted it was not perfect. "The people won," the president said, endorsing the Packwood proposal.

Here are some of the major differences affecting individual taxes:

RATES: The House voted to cut the top individual rate (now 50 percent) to 38 percent, although most people would pay at either a 15 percent or 25 percent rate. In the Senate version, most would pay 15 percent; on paper the top rate would be 17 percent but some upper-income people could pay around 32 percent because of restrictions in other parts of the bill.

EXEMPTIONS: A $2,000-per-person exemption is included in the House plan for taxpayers who do not itemize and $1,500 for those who do. Packwood's bill has $2,000 for all but the wealthiest, some of whom would get zero.

RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS: The House voted to keep tax-deferred Individual Retirement Accounts for every worker who can afford one. The Senate plan would restrict a fully deductible $2,000-a-year IRA to a person not eligible for a company pension plan, although other workers could deposit up to $2,000 — without a deduction — and the interest would not be taxed until withdrawn. Because this affects more than 20 million families, this proposal has drawn more fire than any other part of the Senate bill.

INTEREST: Although both bills would permit deduction of mortgage interest on one or two homes, other non-business interest would be treated differently. The House bill would allow a person to deduct up to $10,000 of consumer interest ($20,000 for a couple) — including automobile and education loans — plus an amount equal to income from investments. The Senate plan would permit an amount equal to investment income but no deduction for consumer interest.

SALES TAXES: The House would allow itemizers to continue deducting all state and local sales, property and income taxes. The Senate plan would wipe out the deduction for sales tax, but Packwood predicts the full deduction is likely to be in the final compromise.

CAPITAL GAINS: For more than 50 years, the federal government has taxed these gains — profits from the sale of property, such as real estate and stocks — at a lower rate than ordinary income under the assumption that was needed to attract money to important but risky ventures. The top rate now is 20 percent; it can be as low as 4.4 percent. The House voted a 22 percent rate. The Senate plan would tax gains at the same rate as other income — 15 percent or 27 percent.

HOW THEY VOTED

Saudi arms deal key issue in both chambers

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending May 9, 1986.

KEY HOUSE VOTES:

House follows Senate's lead, blocks arms sale to Saudi Arabia. In a resounding defeat for the Reagan administration, the House overwhelmingly passed a resolution blocking the sale of $354 million worth of arms to Saudi Arabia. The 356-62 vote May 7, which came on the heels of similar action by the Senate, virtually guarantees that the House has the votes necessary to override a presidential veto. Security push aimed at violent township

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — More than 1,600 soldiers and policemen conducted a security sweep Saturday in the violence-torn black township of Alexandra. They erected roadblocks, searched homes and passed out pamphlets urging residents to inform on troublemakers.

In a day-long operation that began at midnight, the security forces sealed off the township on the northeast edge of Johannesburg and searched vehicles and pedestrians trying to enter or leave.

Scores of police and military vehicles patrolled the township's streets. No disturbances were reported, and by sundown many of the uniformed policemen had withdrawn, although soldiers and plainclothes men remained.

Police reported three deaths related to racial violence across the country Saturday, including a black man shot by the mayor of the black community of Port Alford, near Port Elizabeth. Police said the mayor opened fire with a revolver after he was stabbed three times by members of a mob that attacked his house.

The burned bodies of two black men were found elsewhere in the Port Elizabeth region.

More than 1,550 people, almost all of them blacks, have been slain in the violence since September 1984. Most were killed in clashes with security forces, but other black victims have included policemen, local officials and others suspected of collaborating with the white government who were slain by anti-apartheid militants. Apartheid is the system under which South Africa's 5 million whites dominate 24 million voteless blacks.

Police headquarters in Pretoria said 18 people were arrested during the day in the sweep through Alexandra, mostly for possession of drugs or stolen property.

A local journalist in Alexandra said police confiscated many cars, cameras, televisions and other items in an effort to determine whether they had been stolen. He also said policemen confiscated containers of gasoline and poured out the contents, apparently seeking to thwart potential arsonists.

On Thursday, an Anglican church and a private home in a white suburb adjoining Alexandra were targets of fire-bombs, as was a clinic in the township.

A police statement said security forces would maintain a high profile in Alexandra "as long as it was necessary to restore law and order."

The statement said the operation was launched "to control crime, unrest and other unruliness," including a recent wave of vehicle hijackings.

During the morning, members of the security forces distributed pamphlets in some neighborhoods which asked, "Are you tired of being harassed?" and said, "Let us protect you."

The pamphlets listed a telephone number which residents were told to call to complain confidentially about anyone who tried to prevent them or their children from going to work, to school or to boycotted stores.

Alexandra, a crowded ghetto of more than 100,000 people, was rocked by four days of anti-apartheid rioting in February in which more than 20 blacks were killed.

More violence hit the town last month after the resignations of the mayor and the other members of the town council, who had been under pressure from anti-apartheid activists to quit.

Remains pulled from Salvadoran well

WORLD

By JOSEPH B. FRAZIER

LOS MANGOS, El Salvador (AP) — It looked like a wishing well, but when human bones were hauled out newspapers began calling it "the well of death" and the "macabre well."

Officials decided to excavate the well in Los Mangos, 38 miles from the capital of San Salvador, after rumors persisted that bodies had been dumped there, said Dr. Herbert Valencia, a forensic pathologist overseeing the identification process.

Firefighters last week pulled up the contents of the 250-foot-deep hole which has been dry since 1935, and found the remains of four people. The discoveries have become another stain on El Salvador's past that refuses to fade.

At least 6,000 people are unaccounted for in the civil war between leftist rebels and the U.S.-supported government of Napoleon Duarte. About 60,000 others have died in the war, now in its seventh year. One million people have been driven from their homes, almost 20 percent of the population.

Human rights abuses continue, but on a smaller scale than in the past. Organized violence against civilians by rightist death squads and paramilitary organizations, blamed by human rights organizations for a majority of the deaths in the war, has all but vanished.

But President Duarte's 2-year-old administration has done little to address the memories and issues of the bloody past, which include the thousands of missing. The well is drawing attention to them again.

Nicely tiled around its circular mouth, the well has sat for 58 years in the shade of a mango tree. The woods around it are idyllic. There's even a humble peasant cottage nearby.

Last week, workers hauled up the contents of the well one bucket at a time and sifted them through screens, searching for clues to identify the victims. A man was lowered to the bottom by a winch and kept alive by ventilation from an air compressor.

"It will be difficult to say just how long they have been dead," said Valencia. "I would say not more than ten years and not fewer than two."

He said the levels at which the bones were found indicate they were put there at different times.

"There were a lot of people around here missing in the early 1980s," said Armando Zepeda, 72, who lives in Los Mangos, a collection of hillside huts and small plots of corn and beans.

"I don't think they used the well all that much. Mostly, they dumped them down in that gully," he said. "The last person around here to turn up missing was four years ago."

Relatives identified three of the four victims through scraps of clothing, dental work and, in one case, a scrap of hat that was recovered, Valencia said.

On the ground sat large plastic bags bearing what were identified as the bones of Juan Vicente Gonzalez, Dario Enrique Flores, Roberto Jimenez and a fourth person.

"Okay, the yellow shirt and hat belong to this one," said a judicial official from nearby Armenia to a coworker as they went over a list. "But we don't know which skull is his, do we?"

About 50 spectators, some of them relatives of missing people hoping for news, watched as firefighters worked the winch.

Before the excavation was ordered, rumors persisted.

Valencia said a prisoner had mentioned that the well was being used as a body dump.

Sandinista leaders protest alleged U.S. spying

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The leftist Sandinista government on Saturday accused two U.S. military officers attached to the U.S. Embassy of spying and said it sent a note of protest to the Reagan administration.

A Foreign Ministry communique said Col. Alden Cunningham, a defense attache, and Capt. Barbara Sims, identified only as a member of the U.S. armed forces, "were intercepted May 6 by the Sandinista army near Siuna," a military area in Zelaya province, 141 miles northeast of Managua.

"These people entered a war zone in open violation of government regulations for diplomatic personnel which require special authorization of the corresponding authorities," the communique said.

"Since these were North American military officers, the government of Nicaragua has all the right to assume that these people were carrying out works of espionage," the statement said, without providing further details.

The communique said Nicaragua "has formulated its most energetic protest to the government of the United States for these provocative actions and open violation of international regulations."

The note was sent earlier last week and said nothing about taking action against the two officers.

U.S. Embassy spokeswoman Susan Clyde, when asked to respond, said: "It is the rule for embassy personnel to travel through the country to get to know it." The embassy "never comments on these types of accusations," she said.

Libyan blames expulsion from Spain on Americans

MADRID, Spain (AP) — A high-ranking Libyan diplomat left Spain on Saturday after being accused of meeting with a right-wing Spanish officer who allegedly sought money from Libya to plot against the government.

The expelled diplomat, Saad Ismail, told reporters before departing for Tripoli that the accusations were part of a "campaign set up by the American imperialists." A government spokesman on Friday erroneously reported Ismail already had left Spain.

Ismail, identified by the Foreign Ministry as Libya's consul general and the effective head of the Libyan embassy in Madrid, was the fourth Libyan diplomat to be expelled since December.

He was accompanied by Rammadan Ruheim, Libya's commercial attache who was ordered expelled two weeks ago.

The government said it expelled Ismail "for activities not in keeping with his diplomatic function."

Officials cited intelligence reports that Ismail met several times with Col. Carlos Meer de Rivera and accompanied him to Tripoli to meet with Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy. Meer de Rivera allegedly sought funds for a plot against the Spanish government.

Socialist government spokesman Javier Solana on Friday told reporters Spain was considering breaking off relations with Tripoli over the incident, which reportedly was discovered by the Spanish secret service during an investigation of the activities of Meer de Rivera.

Meer de Rivera, 56, was jailed Friday in a military prison outside Madrid and was accused of seeking financial support to carry out terrorist acts and destabilize Spain's 10-year-old democracy.

Ismail, 38, told reporters that a photo on the front page of Saturday's editions of the independent El Pais newspaper showing him with Meer de Rivera at a Paris airport in January was fake.

"We never met Col. Meer. He never went to Libya unless it was as a tourist or a worker," Ismail said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Media role debated

LONDON (AP) — An attempt to ban a reporter from covering the House of Commons because he used material from a leaked document has stirred a new debate on how the legislature deals with the media.

A legislative panel on Thursday recommended 11-1 that Richard Evans of The Times of London be barred for six months for reporting on a document leaked by a parliamentary committee investigating radioactive waste disposal.

The Hose of Commons will vote on the recommendation later this month.

In Britain, reporters covering the legislature must obey a set of rules restricting what they can report from confidential material they obtain. Critics say the system allows the government to suppress unpopular news and put views across without taking responsibility for them.

Confrontation ends rally

MASAN, South Korea (NYT) — A peaceful anti-government rally and march by thousands of South Koreans ended Saturday evening with riot policemen firing tear gas to disperse several hundred students who attacked them with sticks and rocks.

So much tear gas was used that fumes filled the broad streets of this southern industrial city for hours. The police reported that 20 officers were injured and that 28 students were arrested in the confrontation.

But the protest was orderly for the most part, buoying dissident politicians who have led a series of rallies to press demands for constitutional change to allow direct elections before the term of President Chun Doo Hwan expires in March 1988.

They had regarded Saturday's rally as a test of their ability to maintain calm after a pitched battle in the port of Inchon last Saturday produced one of South Korea's most violent political episodes in recent years.

Artukovic still confident

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (NYT) — Facing an expected verdict of guilty and a possible death sentence for alleged war crimes, Andrija Artukovic insisted Friday that his four-week trial here has proved him innocent.

"Thank God my innocence has been proved, judge," said the minister of justice and the interior in the puppet state of Croatia set up by Nazi Germany during World War II.

The 86-year-old spoke in a firm voice after his attorneys had delivered their final arguments Friday afternoon, and he was asked by the court if he wished to make a final statement.

Presiding Judge Milko Cajski said the two judges and three jurors who heard the case in Zagreb District Court will announce a verdict next Wednesday.

Windsor letters 'spoil' romance

By EDITH M. LEDERER

LONDON (AP) — The love letters of the Duke and Duchess of Windsor take a lot of the magic out of one of the great romances of the 20th century.

British psychologists and media commentators say the ex-king comes across as an immature weakling and the American divorcee he gave up the British throne for as a strong-willed social climber who was as much a mother as a wife.

The duchess, who died at her Paris home April 24 at the age of 89, wanted their love letters published to appeal what she saw as the unfair verdict of history — that she seduced a king into abandoning his duty and giving up his throne.

The letters show that King Edward VIII was obsessed by Wallis Warfield Simpson, that he ignored her pleas to end their relationship, pushed her into a divorce and refused a final plea not to abdicate.

The Daily Mail, which paid a reported $750,000 for the serialization rights to the letters, is polling its readers on whether they believe she was "an adventuress" or "a victim."

Others have already reached a verdict.

The Daily Mirror said the one thing the world wasn't prepared for in the letters "was the embarrassing ordinariness of this historic couple.

"The duke shows himself to be a helpless weakling with a mother fixation and Wallis emerges as a rather empty mixed-up social climber," the tabloid said.

"No longer can their affair be seen as the grand passion that nearly brought down the monarchy. In future they will be viewed as two spoiled kids who couldn't bear to have their sweets taken away," the paper said.

She was 41 and he was 43 when they married on June 3, 1937, six months after his abdication. But in their letters they refer to each other as "the girl" and "the boy."

At one point, he describes missing his sweetheart and feeling alone and scared in a "spooky" room. She refers to his "boyish passion" and accuses him in one letter of not "growing up."

Five psychologists interviewed in the press generally echo the Daily Mirror assessment.

"The letters reveal Wallis Simpson as an adventuress and social climber," wrote Dr. Peter Hildebrand, chief psychologist at the Tavistock Clinic in London, in The Daily Express.

"His letters give the impression they've been written by an infatuated schoolboy.... He obviously placed her in the role of an adored parental figure."

Dr. Tony Whitehead, consultant psychologist at Bevendean Hospital in Brighton, said: "He was immature, particularly sexually, and she says so in at least one of her letters. This immaturity certainly gives the appearance of latent homosexuality.... She was domineering and selfishly ambitious, always dictating and expecting everyone else to conform to what she wanted.

"Both were self-centered, concerned only with themselves. People around them were playthings. In the end she lost control because she was trapped — either marry and stay, or vanish into obscurity and relative poverty. He, too, lost the game. He had to abdicate and accept all that followed," Whitehead wrote in The Daily Express.

For several commentators, Edward's abdication was a blessing.

Under the headline "Edward the Unready," the Economist magazine said his abdication "was the best thing that could have happened for his country...(but) anybody who had said this then would have seemed crazy."

Commentator John Akass, writing in The Daily Express, said: "We might easily have ended up with a dynasty founded by a lounge-lizard and an adventuress."

Nonetheless, there was sympathy for the duke and duchess because of the way they were treated by Britain's royal family, which ostracized them and left them in virtual exile — a sore point discussed at length in the letters.

"God, how I hate and despise the lot.... I hope one day to, and I mean to, get back at those swine and at least make them realize how disgustingly and unsportingly they have behaved," the ex-king wrote in March 1937.

The duchess was buried at Windsor Castle beside her husband.

Counties forecasts

Midland, Ector, Crane, Upton, Reagan, Glasscock, Andrews, Gaines, Martin, Howard, Borden and Dawson: Today, sunny and warmer. High mid 90s. Wind south 10 to 20 mph. Tonight, fair and warmer. Lows lower 60s. Monday, sunny with highs mid 90s.

Today's high may hit mid-90s

From Staff and Wire Reports

The weekend will continue to be fair and warm with a high in the mid 90s expected for today, according to the National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Airport.

Today will be fair and sunny with winds south at 10 to 20 mph. The low tonight will be in the lower 60s.

Monday will be a repeat of Sunday's weather with sunny and fair skies expected and a high in the mid 90s.

Saturday's high of 86 degrees missed the record mark by 13 degrees. The record high for Saturday's date was 99 degrees set in 1963. The overnight low of 55 degrees missed the record mark by 13 degrees. The record overnight low of 42 degrees was set in 1946.

STATE

Thunderstorms prowled much of Texas on Saturday before a trough of low pressure brought about clearing skies west of a line from Wichita Falls to Del Rio.

High pressure over the Gulf of Mexico continued to feed warm, moist air into the rest of Texas ahead of the trough.

Thunderstorms and patches of rain covered most of the coastal plains, as well as East and Southeast Texas.

The outlook today was for fair skies in West Texas and partly cloudy elsewhere. The National Weather Service held out a slight chance of thunderstorms Sunday for west and central parts of North Texas.

NATION

Heavy thunderstorms rained on parts of the Plains on Saturday, while gusty winds blew in Wyoming.

Severe thunderstorms brought quarter-size hail to northwestern Oklahoma.

Heavy thunderstorms caused record flooding along Walnut Creek near Des Moines, Iowa. Overnight and early morning rainfall totaled 4 inches in Guthrie Center, Iowa. A flash flood watch was issued across central and western Iowa.

Winds gusted to 49 mph at Casper, Wyo., while travelers' advisories warning of high winds were posted across the northern deserts and the Mojave Desert of California, southern Nevada and northwestern Arizona.

Elsewhere, showers and thunderstorms, some heavy, fell from southern Minnesota and Iowa through Oklahoma and Arkansas to eastern Texas, while locally heavy thundershowers rumbled over extreme south Florida.

"Watches" and "warnings," whether tornado or thunderstorm, are often confusing to the general public. According to National Weather Service meteorologist John Wright the distinction is clear: a watch means the potential is there for a tornado or thunderstorm while a warning means it's already in existence.

'Warnings, watches' are different terms, NWS says

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

It's a common scene in the spring months. You're piddling around the house when the ominous announcement comes over the radio: "Good afternoon. The National Weather Service has said there is a tornado watch for Midland County until 4:30 p.m."

Immediate thoughts often range from, "Does this mean there is a tornado already sighted?" to "So what. That doesn't mean a thing."

However, according to chief meteorologist John Wright of the NWS, "watches" and "warnings" are two distinctly different terms that have significant meaning for the general public.

"Basically, a watch means conditions are right for a severe thunderstorm or a tornado to form," he said. "Watches are issued for a six-hour period from the National Severe Storm Center in Kansas City, Mo., and can be extended beyond the six-hour period."

Wright described a severe thunderstorm as having winds 58 mph or greater and ¾-inch hail.

"That's the biggest difference," he said. "A watch means the potential is there. A warning means it's already in existence," he said.

Wright explained that a warning, be it tornado or severe thunderstorm, is a highly-complicated thing to predict and one that involves sophisticated techniques and involved reading of radar patterns.

"When we issue a warning, it's usually for one hour," he said. "We have certain radar criteria that must be met before a warning goes out. For a thunderstorm, we measure the thunderstorm intensity. A reflective pattern indicates a thunderstorm has reached the severe limits."

The radar information, combined with excessive wind speed and hail, precedes the actual issuance of a warning.

Warnings for tornados, too, depend on highly technical measurements, but may be put into effect when an actual twister is sighted by weather watchers.

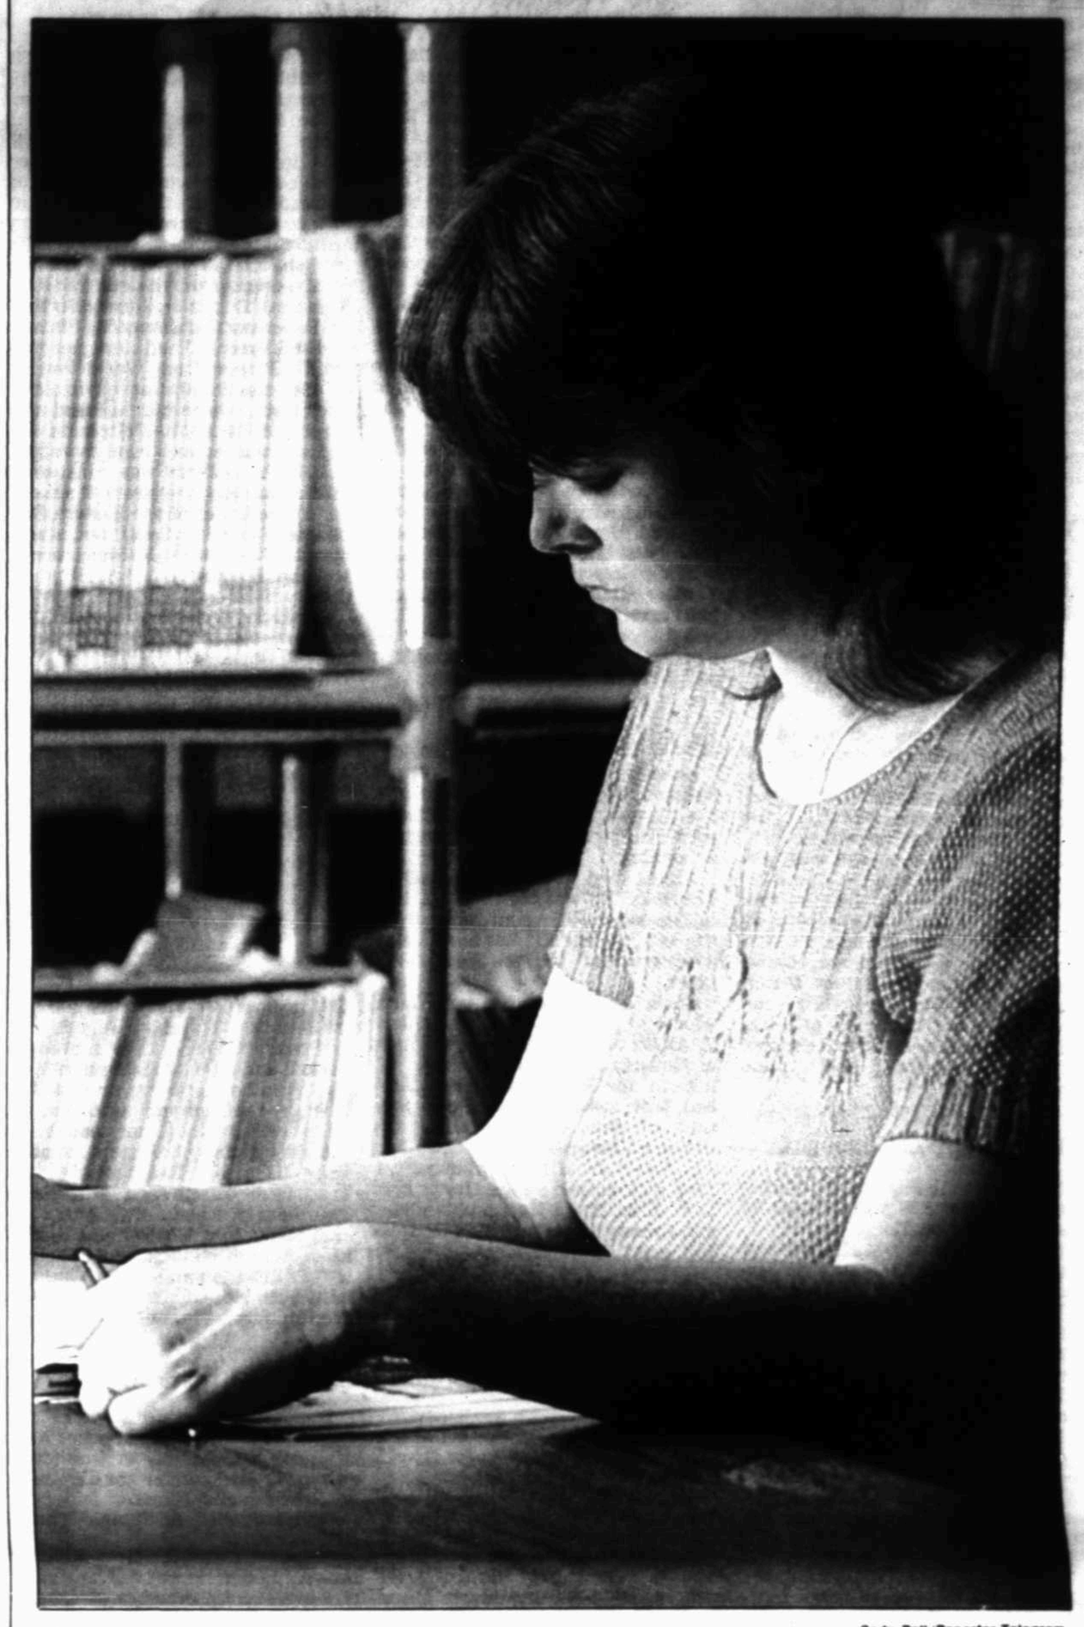

"There must be in existence, an authentic "hook echo" on the radar screen and other criteria, but we do get phone calls from people who have visual sightings," said Wright.

Wright and his crew at the NWS have the responsibility of issuing warnings and watches for an 18-county area including Lea County, N.M.

While most residents are within ear shot of a television or radio during the daylight hours, Wright said a device also is available during the sleeping hours which will keep people in tune with NWS watches and warnings.

"You can buy a special alarm feature for the radio that is activated when we push the warning button here at the NWS," said Wright. The devices, which range from $17 to $30, are available at most electronic stores, he said.

"The NWS recommends that everyone buy one of these," he added.

MC student to be honored for earning high GED score

The Bright Side

It's not especially unusual when a college student receives a scholarship for academic excellence unless, of course, that student is Lynda Flud-Gilman.

Ms. Flud-Gilman is a 28-year-old Midland College student who dropped out of school in the ninth grade, but has since gone on to earn the equivalent of a high school diploma, enroll in college courses, make the Dean's List and receive a $200 scholarship from the Texas Association for Continuing Adult Education.

She was awarded the scholarship recently after achieving the highest average score on the General Education Development test in the Western Region of the TACAE and is among those students to be honored at the GED graduation ceremonies on Thursday in the MC Student Center.

"My father had taken me out of school when I was in the ninth grade because I was being a bad girl, smoking cigarettes and things like that. At that point I didn't care. I didn't want to go to school anyway."

Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, Hispanic chamber to co-host lunch

From Staff Reports

The Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs and the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce are co-sponsoring a Wednesday luncheon featuring an appearance by Lynda B. Hemphill, a specialist in guiding minority businesses through the military procurement system.

The luncheon is set for 11:30 a.m. at the Midland Hilton, and costs $6.50 per person. The public is invited, and chamber members are encouraged to bring guests.

Ms. Hemphill is special assistant for minority business utilization for the Army and Air Force Exchange Service. Besides acting as liaison between minority businesses and the AAFES, she coordinates all activities offering specialized services and products to minority military personnel and their dependents.

A resident of Duncanville, she is a member of the Dallas Black Chamber of Commerce, the Dallas Regional Minority Purchasing Council and the South Central Purchasing Council, and sits on the board of directors for the AAFES Federal Credit Union.

Mary Pate is a "future gal" who never looked back on the past. She claimed the future and apparently gave no thought to age. She turned 100 years old last week.

Centenarian had been 'an action lady'

Mothers never cease to amaze their children.

And Mary Ada Pate is an example of children's pride in motherhood.

"Mother never talked about her past," Billie Stephens said of her 100-year-old mother. "She was a future gal — an up-to-date gal."

Today, on yet another Mother's Day, Mrs. Pate will be visited by her four living and loving children in the Westwind Care Center. The children will recall the past and behold the present.

"She had to have on her pretty clothes and make-up," said Nina Irvin, Mrs. Pate's middle child.

Mrs. Irvin, who lives in Belen, N.M., recalled the time when her mother observed her "working and keeping house...and going at a fast pace."

And her mother offered her this "little motherly advice: 'You'd better slow down, because there's a long trail ahead.'"

Mrs. Pate's trail on Earth began on May 7, 1886 in Comanche County, where her father, Jim Quinn, was a carpenter and a cotton ginner.

"Mother always said one of the highlights of her early life was when she rode the train from Comanche to Midland (in 1904) to visit her aunt and uncle," Mrs. Stephens said.

Mrs. Pate and her husband reared five children: three girls and two boys. A son died in 1980. At age 50, she was widowed when her husband, George Pate, a cotton ginner, was killed in the explosion of an old relic steam roller in Comanche. "He put cold water in a hot engine," Mrs. Stephens recalled, and the old engine blew up.

"SHE WAS WIDOWED in 1936," Mrs. Stephens said, "and had not worked outside of the house until then. She went to work for the WPA (Works Progress Administration) in a sewing room in Comanche."

Three of the five children still were at home. The youngest, Mrs. Stephens, was in the first grade then.

"She was a very caring person," Mrs. Stephens said of her mother. "She was concerned about everybody, and she loved her church."

Today, Mrs. Pate's days are restful. She is reticent, and occasionally goes through the motions of sewing and crocheting — her pastime in her later years. She exudes a mother's love.

Serious smooching should not be done in public

Let's get right to the point here: Excessive expressions of affection in public should be banned immediately. Stop it and stop it now.

There are a great many things that should be done in private and hugging and kissing for prolonged periods of time are two that should be near, if not at, the top of the list. They simply should not be done in front of others. We're not interested. Nor, are we impressed.

I'll give you an example.

I go to the laundromat to wash clothes. I'm standing in front of a dryer minding my own business and fantasizing about winning next month's U.S. Open golf championship. Out of the corner of my eye I see a young couple enter through the side door. They appear to be 19 or 20 years of age — young enough, at any rate, to still have stringy hair and acne.

They place the basket of clothes on the floor and immediately embrace one another and proceed to "make out," which in this case involved serious smooching and heavy breathing.

I was, to put it mildly, appalled. Why are they doing this, anyway? I mean, really. Have they no tact? No sense of decency?

I looked around to see if others shared my disgust. They did.

One overweight woman who was reading a religious publication began chanting in tongues.

Another, who had three small children with her, immediately wrapped socks around their tiny eyes so they could not witness what was happening.

And, an old man who had been watching the action very intently swallowed his snuff, began gasping for air and bolted from the laundromat, leaving behind three washers full of clothes.

The point is, serious smooching and heavy breathing should be done in the privacy of one's home, or the back seat of a '57 Chevy, and not in a public gathering place. That's a simple enough rule everyone should have mastered back in their high school health class.

Now, before any of you conclude that I'm an old fuddy-duddy stick-in-the-mud, allow me to add a footnote. I see nothing wrong with an affectionate hug among friends being performed in public. Likewise, an occasional peck on the cheek is acceptable behavior. The key is doing it quickly and without fanfare.

It is like X-rated movies. They go too far, leaving nothing to the imagination.

Such it is with heavy necking in public. It leaves nothing to the imagination. Public displays of affection should be in the form of flirtations. A pat on the knee here, a casual wink there. It is PG-13 material at best. Still, it allows the mind to run free.

Who knows what will happen later on? Maybe nothing. Maybe something big. But, that uncertainty is what makes life fun. It's a gamble of sorts.

Of course, if you happen to own a '57 Chevy your odds are greatly enhanced.

UTPB faculty members receive Presidential Achievement Awards

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Three new Presidential Achievement Awards were presented during Saturday's commencement ceremonies at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The new awards were presented to faculty members in recognition of outstanding research, service and teaching, according to to UTPB President Dr. Duane Leach.

Honored for outstanding service was Dr. Munro Shintani, professor of Special Education and the Teacher Certification Officer. Shintani has served students seeking to become teachers since 1973 at UTPB. He previously taught at the University of Kansas and earned his doctorate degree from the University of Iowa.

Receiving the Presidential Achievement Award for outstanding research was Dr. Roger Olien. Olien's new book, "Life in the Oilfields," is one of three that he and his wife, Diana, have authored based on original research from West Texas archival material and oral history interviews. Olien received his doctorate from Brown University and was appointed to the UTPB history faculty in 1973. He formerly taught at Southern Methodist University, and is currently president of the West Texas Historical Society.

Dr. Edwin Kurtz, chairman of the Life Science and Chemistry Department, received the Presidential Achievement Award for teaching. Kurtz is a Ph.D. graduate from the California Institute of Technology and has authored over 100 publications and reviews since his appointment to the university in 1972. He is a founding member of the editorial board of the national wildlife magazine for children, "Ranger Rick."

Kurtz has been actively involved in helping students prepare for professional schools and his contributions in the classroom has given the university significant prestige among medical and dental schools around the country.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

University of Texas of the Permian Basin Director of Student Life Woody Kupper reaches for a diploma to give to UTPB President Dr. Duane Leach, who presented them during Saturday's graduation ceremonies.

The faculty chosen for the awards were nominated by the chairs of the academic divisions. Leach made the selection based on those nominations and the faculty members' credentials.

Also recognized at the graduation was the AMOCO award winner, Dr. Thomas Schaefer. This is an annual award presented to an outstanding educator as nominated by students and faculty. A $1,500 gift is a part of the award.

Schaefer as served as a professor in the Division of Management since 1979. He earned his doctorate from Georgetown University and has taught at the Universities of Puerto Rico, Alaska and San Francisco in addition to Georgetown.

Schaefer was also a visiting scholar at Harvard University, a Fulbright Scholar and vice director of the Peace Corps Projects for Afghanistan and Ethiopia.

At Saturday's commencement ceremony, approximately 400 bachelor master degrees were presented to students.

But after awhile, Ms. Flud-Gilman said she had difficulties finding work or one that provided an opportunity for advancement. That's when she decided to go back to school to further her education — a monumental task that would last three years.

"I was working as a barmaid at Sidewinders and I learned about the (General Education Development) program through the employment office," she said. "At first I didn't want to go back, but then I realized it was stupid, that I'd never be able to do anything but what my mother did and that was waitressing.

"You see so many young people dropping out of school and it makes you wonder what you're going to do without your education," Ms. Flud-Gilman said.

It wasn't long after she enrolled at Midland College and began studying for the GED test in the free Adult Learning Center, that she decided to sign up for college credit courses on individual approval. In November of 1983, she took the GED test and achieved high scores and that same semester, she earned a 3.5 grade point average and was named to the Dean's List for her scholastic achievements.

Ms. Flud-Gilman, a single mother, lives alone with her 12-year-old son, Steven. She said her accomplishments have inspired him to study and value the gift of education as well.

"It was probably harder on him than it was on me, but I just couldn't see myself falling down for his sake. I think it's really helped him because he's seen that his mother really had to struggle," she said.

Ms. Flud-Gilman withdrew from Midland College in January for financial reasons, but said she'll be back in the fall to complete an associate degree in secretarial management.

The $200 scholarship and the money she earns through the Federal College Work-Study Program should enable her to pay for her education and go on to study real estate.

"No matter how tough it is right now, it's better to get that education rather than wait until you're my age when you have a family and job," Ms. Flud-Gilman tells young people.

Still, she believes her best years are ahead.

Barbecue thrown for military

ABILENE (AP) — More than 13,500 tickets were given away for the 21st annual "World's Largest Barbecue," an event that had city officials and civic leaders spiffing up their serving aprons.

The barbecue Saturday is the city's way of showing its appreciation for military personnel and their families — primarily those from Dyess Air Force Base, said event chairman Bob Deegan.

More than 13,500 tickets were obtained for base personnel in the event sponsored by the Military Affairs Committee of the Abilene Chamber of Commerce, he said.

And 215 members of the committee signed up to work the noon to 2 p.m. and 5 to 7 p.m. shifts, he said.

The barbecue began in 1966 as an appreciation picnic at the base, with the serving taking place in the "big hangar" along the flightline.

Deegan said the amount of food involved in the barbecue included more than 4,000 pounds of inside round cut, requiring more than 200 cows.

Five hundred gallons of beans, 400 loaves of bread, 100 gallons of barbecue sauce, 100 gallons of pickles and nearly 200 gallons of iced tea were provided.

MARY—

Before she moved into the nursing home in 1980, Mrs. Pate traveled quite a deal. She moved to Midland in 1948.

"Wherever there was excitement, that's where she wanted to be," recalled her oldest daughter," Eu Lee Gilbert of Midway City, Calif.

"She wanted to go where the action was," said the middle child, Mrs. Irvin.

"She wanted to be where somebody was doing something," said Mrs. Stephens.

And she had no penchant for baby-sitting the grandchildren.

"She loved her grandkids," said Mrs. Gilbert, "but she didn't baby sit with them."

Instead, she would find a reason to move on.

"IF WE EXPECTED her to baby sit, she would get on a bus or plane and take off," said her "baby" daughter, Mrs. Stephens.

"She was an action lady," Mrs. Gilbert agreed.

Mrs. Pate took her last airplane ride at age 92. But traveling by bus was her favorite way to go places. Her last bus "hitch" from Midland to Comanche was at age 93.

" 'The bus driver always liked for me to ride the bus,' " she told her daughters, " 'because I always looked after the older people.' "

But despite her virtues, she wasn't exactly perfect.

"She had her quirks like any other person," said Mrs. Gilbert. "She wasn't an angel. She was a very headstrong person, and she was very independent."

Mrs. Stephens recalled her mother's visits to her children's homes.

"When she was with Nina (Irvin), then I'm the one that did everything right," Mrs. Stephens said. "But when she was with me, then Nina was doing everything right."

The three daughters said their mother never "looked back" and did not speak of regrets or of those "what-if" laments.

"When she talked, she did not go back into the past like so many other people do," Mrs. Irvin said.

MRS. STEPHENS said her mother seemed not to worry and took care of today's problems today.

" 'Well, if you haven't solved your problems by bed-time today,' " Mrs. Pate would say, " 'you're not going to solve them this day. You might as well forget about them.' "

And she took no stock of the years of her life or in the increasing character lines in her face.

Mrs. Stephens recalled when her mother received mail addressed to her as a "senior citizen."

She was not endeared to the term or to its implications.

" 'Well,' " she'd say, " 'I'm not a member of that. Why are they sending me this stuff. Where did they get my name?' "

Among her leading admirers is her granddaughter, Kay Stephens.

"She's a very, very unselfish person," the granddaughter said. "She never lets anything upset her. She never seemed to worry. I'm sure she did, but she never showed it. She is a very loving person."

Kay Stephens recalled their recent embrace.

"I gave her a big old hug, and said 'I love you,' " she said. "Grandmother gave me a big old smacker."

Longhorn bull named 'Texas USA' is on the lam

FORT WORTH (AP) — The Sesquicentennial bull is on the lam.

"Texas USA," a longhorn that a Nebraska woman lent to the Lone Star State to help it celebrate its Sesquicentennial, has vanished from his pasture in Jack County, about 60 miles northwest of Fort Worth.

Larry Smith — who manages the 1,524-pound longhorn that sports a forehead birthmark in the shape of Texas — noticed the animal was missing from its 297-acre playground Wednesday.

He says he didn't mention it until now "because I didn't want to cause any alarm."

But after days of searching on the ground and in the air, Smith is gathering a posse to help him look for the red-and-white bull with white splotches on his hindquarters and belly and horns at least five feet from tip to tip.

Smith had figured the critter would be content among the 100 or so heifers that shared the pasture.

"If there are no cows to breed, longhorns are known to go out looking," he said. "But when he had them right here at home, there was no reason for him to leave."

Friends, neighbors, Jack County Sheriff's deputies and members of the Texas Cattle Raisers Association have searched at least 25 square miles of hills and brush on foot, by car, by pickup and by helicopter.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Final exams will be completed by Thursday

By H. A. TUCK

This is final exam week, plus graduation for a large number of students who are completing their work here. Exams finish up Thursday night and, for students, one of the most popular pastimes is looking on the windows where all the exam and final grades are posted by instructors.

Early counseling and pre-registration for the first summer session begins Monday in the Office of Student Services, which is located in the Administration Building. When students complete their pre-registration, they are issued time permits that assign them times to report for registration. The Student Services Office is open this week from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.on Friday. Pre-registration continues through May 27, registration is scheduled May 29 and classes start on June 2.

Today is the final day of the annual spring student art show in McCormick Gallery, located in the Allison Fine Arts Building. You can view paintings, drawings, sculpture, mixed media, photography, and architecture displays from 1 to 5 p.m. this afternoon.

•••

Continuing what has become a tradition, the Midland College Jazz Ensemble is presenting its "Mother's Day Concert" at Dennis the Menace Park this afternoon at 3 p.m. Conductor of the group is Dr. Don Grant. The jazz group has planned a program of both early-day jazz numbers as well as some modern compositions for what should be a delightful afternoon. Bring your lawn chairs and enjoy the afternoon of music.

Midland College stages its 13th annual Commencement Ceremony at 7 p.m. Saturday in the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center. Almost 200 graduates are slated to participate in the ceremony. Speaker for the occasion is Dr. Stewart H. McLauren, president of Kilgore College. Dr. McLauren also is president of the Texas Public Community/Junior College Association, which is comprised of the presidents of all the state's public two-year colleges. Music for the event is being provided by the Midland College Community Band, conducted by Walter Osadchuk, and the Midland College Chorale, which is directed by Dr. Michael Jordan. Candidates for graduation have a brief rehearsal for the ceremony at 5 p.m. on Thursday.

•••

Another graduation ceremony is being held on Thursday at 6:30 p.m. in the Student Center. This one is for the 65 persons who went through the Adult Learning Center this year and passed their GED tests. The General Educational Development diplomas are recognized in lieu of a high school diploma. Speaker for the event will be Midland pharmacist Allen Farnel, himself a GED graduate. Many of the past and current GED graduates continue their educations at Midland College.

EDUCATION

Gilbert Garcia, who teaches physical conditioning part-time for Midland College, proved that he can practice what he teaches. Gilbert participated in, and finished, the Republic of Texas Sequicentennial Marathon recently that went from College Station to Navasota. Gilbert admitted that, although he had trained hard, the hilly terrain and persistent headwind made it a difficult run.

Thirty-one employees were recognized during a faculty meeting for service to Midland College. Awards were given for 15, 10, and 5 years of service. Receiving 15-year awards were: Dr. Stan Jacobs, Virginia Land, and Dr. Hosni Nabi. Ten-year awards went to: Jo Aline Collins, Dr. Wayne McClure, Robert Meeks, Doris Muehlbrad, Ed Poulter, Katherine Seale, and Jo Ann Stella. Those receiving five-year awards included: Elise Coombes, Dr. Jerry Franks, Larry Griffin, Dr. Celia Harris, Dr. Glenda Hicks, Mari Nell Hurst, Dr. Michael Jordan, Carlotta Kellogg, Charles Klein, Dr. Sylvia Major, Sharon McCrary, Cecilia Miranda, Donna Mize, George Morgan, Dr. Jess Parrish, Dr. Eileen Piwetz, Jerry Preas, Ralph Sellmeyer, Mike Stevens, and Ron Sweatt.

According to Dee Windsor, registrar, our computer people have developed a new system of pre-registration. It will be introduced the first day of pre-registration for the first summer session.

Students who have attended Midland College since the fall of 1983 will be handed a pre-printed personal registration form that should eliminate the necessity of completing an entire application each registration. The form will, in most cases, only require the students' signature unless there are changes to existing personal information, for example, address and telephone number.

We will welcome your comments. Note: Only pre-registrants will be able to take advantage of the new process. People coming to pre-registration on May 29, will be required to complete an entire application/registration form.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

Test required for master's program

ODESSA — Midlanders interested in enrolling in the master's of business administration degree at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin this fall must register to take the Graduate Management Admission Test by May 19.

The GMAT is a required test for admissions at numerous colleges and universities across the nation. The test will be administered at UTPB on June 21.

Cost of the test is $30. Registration forms postmarked after May 19 are subject to a late registration fee of $10, but forms may be accepted through May 26.

Registration materials are available in the Graduate Studies Office at UTPB, room 452. For information, call 563-2400, extension 2144.

UTPB offers pool memberships

ODESSA — The University of Texas of the Permian Basin is offering swimming pool memberships to the public this summer. For $150, an entire family will receive a season pass to the Olympic size pool. The cost also includes the use of a basket in the locker room. An individual season pass costs $50.

Each season pass holder may bring a limited number of guests for an additional charge. For out-of-town guests, a one-week family pass is available for $25.

The university pool is open from noon to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday. Beginning May 21, it will be open from noon to 7:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

For information, call the Office of Student Life at 563-2400, extension 2136.

Open house slated for principal

Open house for Keller Stamy, retiring principal at Sam Houston Elementary School, will be from 2:30 to 6 p.m. Friday at 2000 W. Louisiana. Past and present students and co-workers are invited.

MISD to show thanks to volunteers

The Midland Independent School District will observe Volunteer Appreciation Week Monday through Friday, saying thank you to over 3,000 volunteers who have worked in the public schools this year.

Teachers' group scheduled to meet

The Classroom Teachers Association of Midland will meet at 4:15 p.m. May 19 in the Midland High School conference room. New officers will be installed.

Woman HSU's oldest graduate

ABILENE (AP) — Mabel Kaloupek is fresh out of a Hardin-Simmons University dorm and looking for a teaching job.

Music, German, mathematics, she can teach it all.

She's healthy, is a lifesaver class swimmer and has run an insurance business for 40 years.

On Saturday, 67-year-old Mrs. Kaloupek, who completed high school 50 years ago, was HSU's oldest graduate.

Mrs. Kaloupek was no "galloping granny" out looking for publicity, but a dignified, energetic businesswoman, church organist and the mother of five children.

Wait on change

In making the decision Tuesday of how to change the boundaries of Midland's two high schools — or even whether to make a change at this time — school trustees have the unenviable task of acting on a matter that will affect many Midland families in future years.

It's because the decision will affect so many residents that the trustees need to weigh not only how the proposed boundary change would affect both schools but also whether a boundary change is a pressing need in the immediate sense, that is, next week.

We don't believe it is because of a number of factors and strongly encourage trustees to follow the recommendation of a number of opponents to the change by holding off until fall enrollment figures are determined.

Trustees have two primary factors to consider in making the decision, along with a number of secondary considerations. First, they are elected to their positions to represent on the board the concerns of the voters who put them in office. Secondly, they are entrusted with the difficult responsibility of doing what is best for Midland Independent School District as a whole. In no way do we entertain the thought that trustees are taking that responsibility lightly in this regard.

On the contrary, we believe the Midland board of trustees has no desire to diminish one school four years from now, when the plan would go into effect, and that members' intentions are honorable. It would be ludicrous to assume that any Midland school board, for that matter, would entertain such a plan of action or that, if it did, it ever could get away with it.

Over the past couple of months, though, there has been an outpouring of comment from the community that has affirmed the seriousness with which this proposed change is regarded. Over the past week or so, and particularly on the following page of this edition, a number of letters from readers and a guest column make various points about the proposed change. Not all the comment have been in the form of opposition; the change has been supported by some who have written letters. Overwhelmingly, though, those who have written and appeared before school board hearings have been opposed to a change — at this time.

We stress the point in time because few if any Midlanders oppose the concept of equal high schools in terms of academics, sports and opportunities. But in recent weeks, as oil prices have plummeted and various Midland companies have faced the necessity of employee layoffs, there have been numerous calls for the community to hold together and not to factionalize and fall apart. That unity of purpose is crucial when a community is racked by hardship as Midland is now.

Over the course of the discussion of changing high school boundaries, little justification has been given for the urgency of doing it immediately. In making such an important change, surely school trustees would want to utilize the best available statistical information — even though the change would not take effect for several years.

The board voted in January to make the boundary changes in December of 1986 and later, in February, voted to accelerate the plan.

We believe now is not the time to divide an important and large segment of the Midland community. While that likely could happen later, as well, the board would at least have for its consideration the latest possible data on the effect of population changes in the two districts as those would relate to current economic conditions. And while we do not believe those changes will be as great as some have rumored them to be, likely they will be above normal. While the board's plan might well be the same as now, at least trustees would have had the advantage of working from peak enrollment figures which ordinarily are reached in October.

We hope the trustees will decide to return to the original plan and delay these boundary changes until December.

Another View:

Packwood's tax bill

The Senate Finance Committee has done a pretty amazing thing. Departing from a familiar past, surprising even its own members, it has reported out by a vote of 20 to 0 a bill that would genuinely reform the U.S. tax system. This is the same committee that over the years has been the source of most of the provisions the reformers wanted to strike. Maybe Halley's Comet did it.

Under the very good bill the committee sent to the floor, the poor would not pay, and the rich mostly would. By raising the personal exemption and standard deduction, the bill would lift the tax threshold above the poverty line and take millions of lower-income families off the rolls. At the same time it would do away with the preferential treatment of capital gains, which accrue mostly to the rich, and with one important exception also take the zing out of tax shelters by denying people the right to offset actual income with concocted losses.

These steps plus the lower rates they would help finance would extract the tax code from the economy, in the sense that tax considerations would no longer play so important a part in investment decisions. The rates would be 15 percent for most people and 27 percent at the top, as against a 50 percent top rate now. The low rates were what finally won the committee over. They were only possible because the committee also agreed to broaden the income base to which the rates would apply. That, of course, is what reform has always been about. It took the committee a while to discover its virtues.

The legislation is an enormous personal as well as professional victory for Finance Committee Chairman Bob Packwood. He redeemed both the bill and his own reputation by boldness. In the early voting he had been trampled by committee members seeking to increase the tax advantages of particular industries. He pulled back, proposed much more of a hands-off approach to business taxes (he would still raise them, but the bill would rely heavily on a minimum corporate income tax, simply limiting the use any corporation could make of all available preferences in any one year), and went after the advantages of wealthy individual taxpayers instead. It was a saving decision, both good politics and good policy.

The one interest group to which the committee did egregiously give ground was the oil industry. Over the objections of steadfast reformer Bill Bradley, it agreed to preserve oil and gas tax shelters even while wiping out all others. Members from oil and gas states said they had the votes to kill the bill otherwise — and they probably did. The trick will now be to keep further favors from being done for other such interest groups on the floor. The Senate is not exactly famous for saying no on such occasions. But then, neither was the Finance Committee.

U.S. cozying up (to cutthroats) in Iran

WASHINGTON — As the Reagan administration continues its secret, conciliatory tilt toward Iran, the president's advisers should not lose sight of the dubious background of the people they're cozying up to.

Jack Anderson

There are solid pragmatic grounds for seeking to paper over U.S.-Iranian differences. One of these, as we've reported, is the administration's hope that the United States will have at least some influential friends in Tehran when the Ayatollah Khomeini inevitably passes from the scene.

But lest the administration gets carried away, we'd like to remind it of an inescapable fact about the current Iranian regime: Khomeini and his top henchmen are bloodthirsty, unrepentant terrorists who have been demonstrably and rabidly anti-American in the past. Detente for practical reasons is fine; let's just not fool ourselves. We're dealing with a bunch of cutthroats.

Consider a likely successor to Khomeini, Hashemi Rafsanjani, speaker of the Iranian parliament. U.S. officials have pinned a substantial part of their hopes on Rafsanjani, and have presumably inspired sympathetic stories in the press, which referred to him as a "moderate" and credited him with helping to free the American hostages five years ago.

How moderate is he? Well, our sources inside Iran point out that before he rose to his present eminence, Rafsanjani was co-owner of a battery service shop in the Street of Cheragh Bargh in Tehran. That was in the late 1970s under the shah's regime. It was in Rafsanjani's shop in 1977 that the bodies of two U.S. servicemen were found hidden beneath two cars. They had been killed in the anti-shah, anti-American terrorism that eventually brought Khomeini and Rafsanjani to power.

One of the future parliament leader's employees was arrested and imprisoned for the murder of the two Americans. But he was quickly released when Khomeini seized power in 1979, and has since gone to work for the Mussavi terrorist family, which has done more to kill and terrorize Americans than any other group in the Middle East.

There are other high Iranian officials on the dishonor list:

— Sadeq Khalkali, who was Rafsanjani's partner in the battery service center. Khalkali is now a jurist on Khomeini's Islamic revolutionary tribunal; his nickname is "Judge Blood," partly deriving from the practice of having the blood drained from condemned prisoners for use as plasma on the Iraqi battlefront.

Khalkali has sent thousands to die before the firing squads of the notorious Evin prison in the foothills outside Tehran. By one responsible estimate, 4,000 Iranians have perished in Evin by gunfire, torture or suffocation from being packed 60 to a single prison cell.

Judge Blood is the man who desecrated the charred remains of the U.S. servicemen who died in the aborted hostage rescue mission in 1980. Khalkali was so proud of his grisly performance that he had himself photographed in the act and had the picture distributed throughout the world.

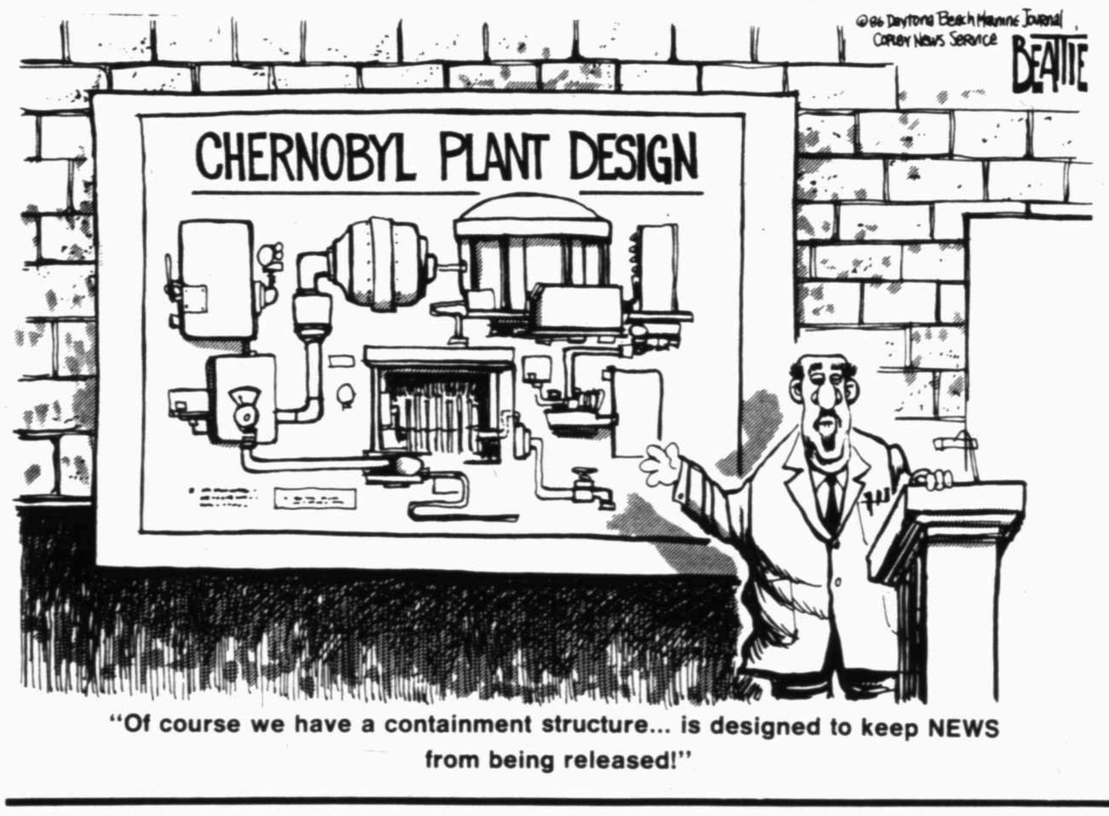

— Oil Minister Mohammed Gharazi. Trained in Libyan and Palestinian terrorist schools during the mid-1970s, Gharazi showed his ruthlessness when he was made commander of the Revolutionary Guards operating against the Kurd rebels in northwestern Iran.

In 1980, Gharazi ordered his troops to massacre the entire population of a Kurdish village named Garena. More than 150 men, women and children were literally put to the sword.

— Chief prosecutor Musavi Khoiniha. Khomeini's favorite pupil at the theological seminary in the holy city of Qom years ago, Khoiniha has been called "the ayatollah in the embassy" for his role in planning and leading the takeover of the American Embassy in November 1979. For more than a decade in his checkered past, Khoiniha was an "agent of influence" employed by the KGB. He learned well from his Soviet mentors. Khoiniha at least was aware of the interrogation and torture of CIA agent William Buckley in Tehran — if he didn't actually take part personally in it. Buckley died of torture-induced heart failure last year, according to intelligence sources.

— Iran's ambassador to the Vatican, the Ayatollah Khosrow-Shahi. Khomeini's former chauffeur, he was believed to be second-in-command of the students who seized the American Embassy. He is reliably reported to be running an international network of terrorist operations out of his headquarters on the Via Nomentana, Rome, next door to the Libyan Embassy. Khosrow-Shahi directs terrorists in Italy, Spain, France, West Germany and Britain, and the notches on his assassin's dagger include a former Iranian general and the United Arab Emirates' ambassador to France.

GEORGE F. WILL

Philosopher sowing seeds of enlightenment

WASHINGTON — May is Washington's mellowest month, a season of azalea and the Jefferson Lecture. That lecture leavens the deadening day-to-dayness of Washington events with thoughts never out of season. The Lecture, funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities, is a tribute to the maturity of the government, which has institutionalized an intellectual pause that refreshes. And there was special poignancy to this year's Lecture because of the winding path by which Leszek Kolakowski came to that podium.

George F. Will

On American campuses, the 1960s were years of living frivolously. Many "radicals" found mere speech inadequate to the expression of their thoughts and so they seized the dean's office and smoked his cigars. In Poland, dissent by "mere speech" was more dangerous.

When the fever of 1968 ignited student protests there, the regime dismissed Kolakowski from his teaching position at the University of Warsaw. His words had contributed to the shaking of the regime. He has not been home since, and now teaches at Oxford and the University of Chicago. In his Lecture, he taught a lesson about the philosophic prerequisites of pluralism.

Kolakowski's theme was sobered Jeffersonianism. He accepts the Enlightenment belief in diversity, but the belief tempered by the 20th-century experience with totalitarianism. The harshness of contemporary history has made Kolakowski cosmopolitan, suspended between national cultures, yet he praises immersion in the particularities of national histories. Having honed his mind on the abrasiveness of a closed society, he is qualified to warn that maintenance of an open society involves more than mere toleration of diversity.

The state can not be "neutral" regarding fundamental values. In pluralist societies, ideas are governed by the rules of the market. The consumer is sovereign. However, the freedom to enter the intellectual marketplace is the result of an ideological choice and institutional arrangements. Society and its collective will, the state, can not be neutral about them. Society should be partisan on behalf of the prerequisites of pluralism. Three prerequisites, says Kolakowski, are revisions of the thinking of Jefferson's age.

The Enlightenment taught that beliefs about good and evil are culture-bound and historically relative, and that to believe otherwise breeds fanaticism. But the good seed of temperate skepticism produced the dangerous fruit of dogmatic relativism. The values of pluralism and tolerance came to seem as relative as their opposites. And it is a short step from indiscriminate skepticism to paralysis: We are imperfect, so we have no moral standing to reproach evil.

Enlightenment optimism taught the compatibility of all good things — peace, justice, freedom, equality. But Kolakowski reminds that for 40 years Europe's peace has been based on the glaring injustice of the subjugation of the Eastern part of the continent.

Second, Enlightenment philosophy, says Kolakowski, stressed too much the socialization of the individual, producing an "uncertain and conceptually fragile status of human personality." The belief that the individual is "entirely society-made" means that "I" is a pronoun to which no morally important reality corresponds. That belief produces the notion that "society" is responsible for everything, "I" for nothing.

It also leaves us "conceptually defenseless" against totalitarianism. Today's world conflict, says Kolakowski, is not just the competition of large nations for enlarged influence, it is a clash of civilizations. At stake is "humanity as we have known it." This is not because "Sovietism" is militaristic and aggressive, which of course it is. Rather, the stakes are so high "because of its educational goals," which are to reduce people to replaceable parts of a state machine.

Kolakowski says the third needed revision of the Enlightenment legacy concerns historical consciousness. Enlightenment confidence became hubris, dismissing the past as a heap of ignorance and superstition. What we learn from history is not technical guidance for goverance, like consulting a manual to fix a machine. We study history to learn who we are. However, a sense of history is practical in this sense: the most consequential leaders often are those — Churchill, De Gaulle — most conscious of being immersed in a stream of history.

RUSSELL BAKER

A hand, please, for 'The Chicken American'

Ladies and gentlemen, we are proud to present the latest American sensation.

You have heard of The Vulgar American, you have heard of The Uncultured American, you have heard of The Quiet American, you have heard of The Ugly American, but the American you will now meet is something entirely new.

Russell Baker

Ladies and gentlemen, it is my honor to present, for the first time in four centuries, an entirely new style American. Ladies and gentlemen: The Chicken American!

"Thanks for that swell introduction, but get me out of here fast, will you? I don't like standing in front of crowds. You never know when there's going to be an Iranian terrorist in the balcony."

Wonderful, wonderful. Even though, at your insistence, we made every member of our audience submit to a body search, you, The Chicken American, still fear becoming the target of terrorist violence in this auditorium. I understand you have done something interesting about your summer vacation.

"Yes, I have canceled my plans to vacation in Europe this summer."

Being chicken, you are afraid you might accidentally drink the water, I suppose.

"Terrorism — that's what turned me off about Europe."

Even though statistically the risk is negligible, being posed by small numbers of dangerous armed youths, you are willing to sacrifice the glories of Rome, Paris, Madrid, London...?

"Cut the catalogue, friend. I'll give it to you short and sweet: they don't call me The Chicken American for nothing."

What will you do on your vacation?

"I'll stay home and watch Rambo."

Aren't movie theaters even more vulnerable to terrorist bombing than the Grand Canal in Venice?

"Sure, but who goes to the theater? I always watch Rambo at home on my VCR."

Does it embarrass you, as The Chicken American, to watch a man like Rambo recklessly expose himself not only to a foreign country, but also to desperate armed youths?

"You mean does looking at Rambo make me feel like a gutless wonder?"

Well, being chicken....

"Quit trying to mushmouth me, fellow. We Americans like straight talk. To answer your question, after I heard Sylvester Stallone — he's the one who plays Rambo, you know — after I heard he canceled plans to go to that film festival in France, I felt honored, because well, hey!, if Rambo is chicken, too, isn't it an honor to be The Chicken American?"

Mr. Stallone denies canceling France because, he says, he didn't plan to go in the first place. Does that change your attitude?

"Are you kidding? My own father couldn't embarrass me about wearing these chicken feathers."

Your father tried to shame you into enjoying a lovely European vacation despite your terror of terrorism?

"Yes, believe it or not. He said in his day Americans couldn't be scared out of going to Europe even though the place was swarming with millions of Wehrmacht and SS troops whose killing efficiency was fantastic by modern terrorist standards."

You were not impressed by his recitation of ancient history.

"'Dad,' I said to the old guy, 'then was then; now is now. In those days you didn't have IRA's and all the great tax-finagling schemes we've got now. You didn't know how to milk the government for an extra $20 billion in cost overruns to build a ship or a tank or a plane. So what did the war mean to you?' I asked him. 'Was it a chance to make a bundle and shelter it all against taxes? No way. So naturally all you old-timers could see in it was an opportunity to crawl across Europe on your bellies.'"

You were commiserating with the poor old fellow for being born too soon?

"Is it my fault he's stuck with a lot of worn-out old values that keep him from saying, 'I'm chicken and proud of it'?"

At certain times in the past Americans would have been angered by the people we now call terrorists, would have called them, unfairly perhaps, "nothing but a bunch of cheap punks with guns and dynamite," and would have said, "Ain't no cheap punks going to tell America what to do on its summer vacation. I'm going where I want to go." As The Chicken American, you believe that view is unrealistic?

Goddard faculty, staff thankful for volunteers

May 12-16 is Volunteer Appreciation Week, and the Goddard faculty and staff wish to extend our thanks to all the volunteers that helped to make our school year a little easier. It is the volunteer's giving of their time and talents that make it possible for the administrators, faculty and staff to perform with greater efficiency.

Volunteers are utilized in a myriad of activities which might not be provided for the students in our school without the unselfish and enthusiastic giving of these individuals.

We at Goddard Junior High think of these volunteers as very special people and wish to let them know that their help does not go unnoticed or unappreciated. Thanks VIPS!

Teachers driven off by unreasonable demands

Welcome to the club, ex-teacher Mary Davis! God bless you for having the guts to do what thousands of other teachers only give lip-service to. You lost another great one, Texas!

It's an alarmingly sad thing that almost every outstandingly good teacher I know has quit. They were mostly run out by either ungrateful parents whom you only hear from when they have a gripe or a demanding governor or principal who has no understanding whatsoever of the classroom's pressurized compartment.

The expectations are so high, too high, and ever increasingly so, that no mere mortal can do it anymore. I was expected to be secretary, accountant, nurse, counselor, mother, friend and IF I had the time left over, meet every child's needs in every subject on their own level! Dream on...

I quit, but I miss my kids so. Just as in abortion, the innocent suffer the most. So what is teaching today? Discipline? Psychology. Pay? Poor. Pressure? Unbelievable. Expectations? Supernatural.

So, God, help the children in public school. They'll need it! As for mine, I'm home schooling!

City need to keep ducks' habitat clean

On Tuesday, April 29, while walking past the "A" Street Park, I had a very unpleasant experience. As I approached the park, I was assaulted by a foul odor and was appalled to discover the source to be a duck which had died and was laying by the water's edge. If that were not bad enough, the areas around and in the pond were littered with trash, including a baby's soiled diaper, soda cans, beer bottles and empty bread sacks.

The following morning I called the City of Midland to bring this situation to its attention. I was told Animal Control would be notified and go out "sometime today" and the Sanitation Department would also be notified and do something about the litter. It was not until Saturday afternoon and two more calls later that the duck was picked up; but the trash is still there.

First of all, it should not have taken three days for the city to have taken action. How the duck met its demise one can only guess, but I wouldn't be surprised if he committed suicide in preference to a slow death in his polluted environment.

Secondly, if the city does not have the manpower to have litter hauled off on a more frequent basis, then give the public more cans in which to dump their debris. One garbage receptacle situated midway on the west side is obviously insufficient. It is not reasonable to expect people to walk half way around the park to dispose of their trash.

If the city does not want to take the responsibility of properly caring for the pond and its residents, then I suggest they drain the water and find homes for the ducks where they will have a happier, cleaner environment.

Midland doesn't need high-priced bureaucrats

Having complied with city Code Section 10-13-5-E, which cost this taxpayer upwards to $100 in time and money, I have this comment to make:

We need to rid city hall and county of bureaucrats that have been hired from cities such as Big D and Big Apple to raise appraisals and taxes. We can do real well without their high salaries and expense accounts.

Readers' views on: High school boundary changes

Other factors important in drawing boundaries

I do hope the school trustees will consider more than four indicators in deciding on high school boundary changes. The current proposal is based upon total enrollment, ethnic background, distribution of rural students and academics (CAT scores only).

At a recent public meeting it was stated by Parker Humes that the proposal should be accepted. He also stated that moving these students to Midland High would not greatly affect Lee's PTA since Rusk Elementary has a very active PTA. As VIPS chairman at Rusk for the last three years, I disagree.

In the past Rusk has had an active PTA in grades K-3. However this year there has been a decline in parent involvement in this area due to the economic recession. As the children progress in school, parent participation declines by as much as 75% by fifth grade and even more by high school age. Does it make sense to take most of the active groups in Lee High and move them to Midland High? The remaining schools cannot hope to fill this gap when so many families need both parents working just to make ends meet.

I urge the school trustees to seriously consider these changes and vote for what is good for all our children.

Why not send board members' kids to LHS?

Dr. Baressi and the school board members have stated that LHS and MHS will be equal under the proposed boundary plan. If they are sincerely convinced of this, they could prove their statement by sending their own children to Lee when they reach high school age, even though they reside in the MHS attendance areas.

I can think of nothing that would go further in regaining the confidence of the Lee parents. This should provide no hardship to them or their children, since they have been known to tell other parents that the children can adjust to changes if the parents will.

Readers' views on: Sesquicentennial wagon train

Friendly reception brightened journey

On behalf of The Morrison Milling Co., I would like to thank the citizens of Midland for the reception they gave the Morrison wagon when the Texas Sesquicentennial Wagon Train came through town recently.

This gracious hospitality brightened the long journey for Fred, Deb, David and Teresa Shivers and their daughters, and helped The Morrison Milling Co. celebrate the mill's centennial and our family's 50 years of association with it in grand style.

Officer should be rebuked for action

On Friday, May 2nd, my husband was returning from Odessa via route 191 when he encountered a Midland city police officer who was assigned to traffic control for the Sesquicentennial Wagon Train. He insisted that all traffic turn back using an alternate route.

This insistence was made even after my husband stated that he was having severe chest pain and was on his way to see his doctor. The officer advised my husband that the wagon train had priority, then allowed a water truck passage. As soon as my husband was attended by his doctor, he was admitted to the hospital.

We contacted the Midland Police Department and spoke to Capt. Jim Colburn who in turn turned the matter over to a lieutenant who told us that it would be impossible to find out who the officer involved was. We were assured that a general reprimand would be issued. It is hard to believe that it is an impossible feat as there was only one Midland city police unit at that roadblock at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

A general reprimand will not mean a lot to a family when anotner incident like this results in a fatal accident. Maybe then we can find out who the officer responsible was.

My husband is an 18-year law enforcement veteran.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, May 11, the 131st day of 1986. There are 234 days left in the year. Today is Mother's Day.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 11, 1943, during World War II, American forces landed on Japanese-occupied Attu Island in the Aleutians. In three weeks, the territory was retaken.

On this date:

In 1647, Peter Stuyvesant arrived in New Amsterdam to become governor.

In 1858, Minnesota became the 32nd state of the Union.

In 1910, Glacier National Park in Montana was established.

In 1949, Israel was admitted to the United Nations as its 59th member.

Also in 1949, Siam changed its name to Thailand.

In 1973, charges against Daniel Ellsberg for his role in the Pentagon Papers case were dismissed by a judge who cited government misconduct.

Ten years ago: Former California Gov. Ronald Reagan defeated President Gerald Ford in the closely contested Nebraska Republican primary, while Ford picked up an expected victory in West Virginia. In the Democratic race, Idaho Sen. Frank Church scored an upset victory over front-runner Jimmy Carter in Nebraska.

Five years ago: Singer and songwriter Bob Marley, who brought worldwide acclaim to Jamaican reggae music, died of cancer at age 36 in a Miami hospital.

One year ago: A flash fire swept through a jam-packed soccer stadium in Bradford, England, killing 52 people as millions of TV viewers watched in horror.

Today's birthdays: Composer Irving Berlin is 98. Modern dance pioneer Martha Graham is 92. Surrealist artist Salvador Dali is 82. Actor-comedian Foster Brooks is 74. Actor Denver Pyle is 66. Comedian Mort Sahl is 59. Actor Doug McClure is 51.

Thought for today: "All women become like their mothers. That is their tragedy. No man does. That is his." — Oscar Wilde, Irish playwright (1857-1900).

SPEAKING OUT

Why are changes necessary now?

By MICHAEL T. WEIS

Michael T. Weis moved to Midland in November 1980 where he became vice president of finance for Texas American Energy Corporation. He now serves on the allocation committee for United Way and is a 1983 alumni of Leadership Midland. All his children attend Midland Independent School District schools.

On Tuesday, the school board will cast their pivotal vote on high school boundary changes to either: A.) adopt the proposed change; B.) have the proposal revised for vote at a later date; C.) reject the proposal; or D.) defer the proposal to a later date for better data.

Fifty citizens from all parts of the city voiced their opinions on this matter at the public meeting. By my count, 43 spoke against this change for a variety of reasons, the most predominant of which were: 1) this is not the right time for a change and, 2) the change would cause serious imbalances in several major parameters that are used to measure equality between the two high schools. At that meeting, petitions signed by 2,411 citizens opposing the boundary change were presented to the board.

The board previously adopted the schedule, procedures, criteria and 33 parameters for dealing with a boundary change for the high schools. A proposed boundary change was apparently triggered because February enrollment figures indicated that Lee High School has 107 more students than Midland High School and Midland Independent School District projections indicate that the schools will be out of balance by 373 students in seven years. With the proposed change, MHS would have 43 more students than LHS in seven years. Thus, the proposed change will apparently improve the total enrollment imbalance by 330 students in seven years. The proposed boundary change affects the present high school attendance areas for approximately 3,200 of the 10,000 total students by changing high school assignments in many areas of the city.

A very significant majority of the people who are aware of this proposed change are against it because of several severe inequities in the plan and the rush to get it done. What Midland deserves is a boundary change proposal that balances substantially all (not just four or five) of the board's parameters for this decision. The only way we can have true equality is to balance the high schools in terms of race, total enrollment, socio-economics, academics and extracurricular activities.

Consider the following reasons why there is so much opposition to this particular boundary change:

Timing — Thousands of Midlanders in both high school districts and across all socio-economic lines are losing their jobs or having their income severely restricted. Statistics on homes for sale, electrical company disconnects, the decreasing number of telephones and projections of various civic groups indicate that a substantial change in population (and school enrollments) is under way in Midland County. Yet the projections on which this proposal is based are apparently founded on recent past experience which does not include any of these factors. In fact, the school system is projecting an increase in enrollment next fall. Logic says that this is not a good time to be making these projections. Logic says this is not the time to be splitting the people of Midland; yet this proposal, with its inherent inequities, is going to have just that effect.

Socio-economics — Apparently no weight has been given to these factors in the proposed boundary change. As a result, these factors would be completely out of balance. You can see this by studying a map of the proposed boundary changes. Beyond that, consider the following statistics for the section grids in Midland where the predominance of homes are valued at $100,000 or more:

	Homes		Students
	Existing	Proposed	Existing	Proposed
LHS	35%	19%	38%	21%
MHS	65%	81%	62%	79%

The board's own consultant on the boundary change matter, Dr. Taebel, told the board that he believes that if the schools are balanced socio-economically, all other factors for balanced schools will fall into place.

Academics — Consider the district's Gifted Education Midland program and those 15 blocks with more than 10 percent participation in that high achiever program for grades 4-6. Under the existing boundaries, 86 students (seven blocks) are in the LHS area and 82 (eight blocks) are in the MHS area. Under the proposed plan, 67 (five blocks) would be in the LHS area and 101 (10 blocks) would be in the MHS area. This statistic is based on real performance of the high school students of the future. The board has been given statistics by the school staff comparing CSI and CAT test scores for grades 4-6. The proposed boundary changes would apparently better balance the number of grade school students taking the test in the LHS and MHS areas. However, in both cases an imbalance in the higher scores in favor of LHS is corrected by creating a smaller imbalance in favor of MHS. The use of these test results alone to achieve academic balance is not conclusive as it measures potential, not performance.

Extracurricular — The "heart and soul" of both schools are the large number of students and parents involved in a variety of extracurricular activities available to our students. When one compares the grades 10-12 students at LHS that would be attending MHS today under the proposed changes, consider the following losses: Student Council/President Cabinet — 45 percent; Rebelee Court Honorees — 71 percent; Homecoming Court and Queen — 100 percent; Band — 43 percent; Track — 82 percent; Cheerleaders — 38 percent; Tennis — 39 percent; Baseball — 43 percent; Choir — 28 percent; Basketball — 30 percent; Football — 43 percent; Academic Awards recipients (4.0 average) — 36 percent; adult PTA members — approximately 50 percent. (These figures do not include those few students to be transferred from MHS to LHS.) These are existing participants in grades 10-12, not future projections. How will they be replaced? What would lead anyone to believe that participants would not come from those same areas of the city in the future?

In summary, the proposed boundary change excludes several significant factors that have been adopted for proper management of equality between the two high schools. Midland cannot have equality if it is determined solely on the basis of the very important racial and total enrollment statistics. True equality is achieved in ethnics, total enrollment, socio-economics, academics, and extracurriculars. Furthermore, it appears to be quite obvious that any number of these criteria are going to change dramatically between now and next fall. It is most appropriate, all things considered, for the board to rescind the existing proposal and return to their original time schedule. In the fall, have the statistics on all relevant criteria gathered, analyzed, reevaluated and if necessary, prepare a new proposal that balances all major criteria. This would provide more time to develop a properly balanced plan that is consistent with a prudent process that characterizes superior leadership.

Retirement shouldn't end one's usefulness

Bill Modisett

Probably the most significant statement anyone can make about this existence with all its troubles, grief, little joys and strife is that...life goes on. Not surprisingly, the older I grow, the more meaningful that observation becomes.

This week, a friend of mine died. That's sad within itself, but it was the circumstances surrounding his death that made it tragic. I'll not name him. The fact of who he was wouldn't alter the point made here even one degree. He was a good and decent man. I cared about him.

He had "retired" not long ago. Actually, he had been given early retirement by the company where he worked. That's a common experience for a lot of Midlanders when difficult economic times come along. I don't intend to imply that such a practice is bad or that it in some way contributed to this person's death. When the economy gets rocky, as it is nowadays in Midland, it places unusual pressures and demands on all businesses and all the city's residents. They must do in those times what they must to survive.

But for an individual who has worked all his life — worked hard — the pressures of not working can be even greater than any ever experienced on the job. How does one fill the time from before sunrise until bedtime? How does one occupy hands that are suddenly idle for the first time in several decades? How does one start to restructure a life turned upside down at a time at which a person normally would be beginning thoughts of retirement?

Those are difficult questions to answer for anyone who has come to believe that society needs his labors.

All around us there seems to be so many areas where our talents could be utilized, where our concern could make a real difference, where our life experiences could help lead others. If only...

My opinion regarding "retirement" has changed drastically in the past few years. I used to think of it as a sweet plum waiting for each of us at the end of the branch of employment. It was something I visualized as the best of both worlds — "retirement" wages in the form of pensions and the time to laze around the pool or the creek bank or whatever.

Now I realize that "retirement" can actually mean something far less attractive, and not only because of how changes in the economy have rendered savings accounts and pensions so dangerously insufficient.

A person must continue to feel useful and productive, and that their time and experiences are valuable. More importantly is how one views life. Is "retirement" an end or a beginning? Is it a time for looking back or looking forward? How a person views life could well determine the quality — even the length — of later life.

What is needed, perhaps, is a system of voluntary, gradual retirement that would allow individuals to reduce their number of work hours and wages over a period of years. In that way, maybe the shock of retirement would not be so detrimental and business could benefit from the experiences and knowledge of older workers.

My friend's death saddened me, but gave me reason to think about the future and about retirement.

Yes, life does and should go on.

Reagan returns from successful summit

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

William Randolph Hearst Jr.

NEW YORK — President Reagan is back in Washington dealing with the hurly-burly of congressional politics after a highly successful journey to Tokyo where he skillfully guided the world's seven industrialized democracies to a unified anti-terrorist agreement which singled out Libya's rogue regime and Col. Moammar Khadafy as the foremost criminal in the world.

The president, highly pleased with the results of the three-day summit formally billed as an economic conference, declared that this was the most successful of the half-dozen summit sessions he has attended so far during his presidency. He emerged clearly as the leader of the Free World.

The seven nations' leaders praised the gains made during the economic talks which saw unanimous agreement on plans to stabilize the world's monetary conditions. President Reagan clearly opposed protectionism, a position, he said, was shared by the majority of conferees.

Once the leaders in Tokyo agreed to work toward closer coordination of economic policies, prices on the U.S. stock market rose sharply and summit colleagues additionally praised the president for his economic policies in enhancing U.S. prosperity.

At a televised press conference President Reagan emphasized that the anti-terrorist declaration by all seven participants was a show of unity. The unified position, the president declared, will send a message to terrorists wherever they hide and to those countries shielding them. But Khadafy remains head of this modern "Murder Inc."

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was a staunch supporter of President Reagan throughout the conference, as she had been during our raid on Libya in permitting use of Britain's airspace for the long flight by American planes.

The litmus test for the allies — with the prominent exception of Prime Minister Thatcher — should begin shortly. Terrorist mastermind Abu Abbas told an NBC reporter at an undisclosed location that he vows to attack Americans inside the United States. Abbas, the chain-smoking leader of the a splinter group of the Palestine Liberation Organization, charged in his interview that America is conducting war "against us in behalf of Israel."

When told by American reporters of the challenge, President Reagan shrugged it off. To a shouted question, "are you scared?" he replied, flatly, "no."

Prime Minister Thatcher rejected an original two-page draft document for dealing with terrorism. She believed, according to Victor Ostrowidzki of The Hearst Washington Bureau who covered the summit conference, that it was not strong enough.

Ostrowidzki reported that the prime minister, aided by West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl who was standing beside her, wanted more teeth in the declaration.

Mrs. Thatcher, known to critics as "The Iron Lady," inserted a spine of steel into the declaration making it a sharp guide for handling terrorism.

France, which tried to soften the wording of the proposal, was represented by two delegates to the Tokyo summit — President Francois Mitterrand and the other, newly appointed conservative Premier Jacques Chirac. Mitterrand arrived earlier and was present for many of the discussions, while Chirac conversed later with his host, Japanese Premier Nakasone, Prime Minister Thatcher, Chancellor Kohl, President Reagan and Canada's Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

The consensus on terrorism emerged after some heated head-to-head discussion during a working dinner of the principals at the summit. There was no question but that President Reagan steered the six other leaders into adopting a hard-hitting statement reinforced with the impetus provided by Mrs. Thatcher.

The Soviet Union, which provides haven and training facilities for terrorists at half a dozen sites within its borders, has enough on its hands with the recent nuclear catastrophe at Chernobyl which the leaders at the Tokyo summit noted and criticized Moscow's secret handling of the disaster.

As the summit conference opened, five missiles were fired at delegates but fortunately they missed their mark and landed a good distance away. The extremists earlier demonstrated against the summit aim in their program to overthrow the existing Japanese government. They are supposed to be fairly small in number, but exceedingly militant basing themselves in the format of the late Mao Tse-Tung.

Although this was intended as an annual economic summit, President Reagan weeks before made it clear that he intended to press ahead with anti-terrorist measures.

The economic side, which will begin to show signs of some activity, concentrated basically on closer coordination of currencies so that industrialized economies do not falter.

Much of the idea was given to me by British economics whiz Harold Lever, now Lord Lever of Manchester, during an interview in London in 1978.

Terrorism, however, was the number one topic and President Reagan achieved a notable triumph which will not be lost on terrorists and their supporters.

Lee High achievements will be recognized in 'Rebels In Review'

From Staff Reports

Lee High School will celebrate 25 years of student achievement during "Rebels In Review" at 7 p.m. Thursday at 3500 Neely.

The event will begin with a sophomore orientation for current ninth grade students planning to attend LHS this fall. Students will meet in the school gymnasium while parents will meet in the auditorium for a brief PTA meeting.

During orientation, incoming sophomores will be introduced to grade-level prinicipals and counselors, cheerleaders, student council officers, Rebelettes and other student organizations. Students and their parents also are invited to tour the campus.

Parents will be introduced to PTA officers during the PTA meeting. School administrators, teachers, former prinicipals and other staff will be recognized for their service to the school during the past 25 years.

Following the orientation and PTA meeting, parents, students and guests will meet on the patio where the Dixie Dolls, band, orchestra, choir and drama classes will perform. Academic exhibits also will be on display.

Refreshments will be served in the cafeteria and child care for small children will be provided in the Home Economic Department by students in child care development classes.

Red Cross to give swimming lessons

From Staff Reports

Free swimming lessons will be offered by the Midland County Chapter of the American Red Cross from May 19-21 at the Midland High School pool.

Trainees must be at least 6 years old, must be registered in advance and must attend classes all three days.

The 30-minute classes will be taught by an authorized American Red Cross water-safety instructor-trainer. One group will begin its class each night at 6:30 p.m. and another group will begin at 7:05 p.m.

The trainees' skill levels will range from non-swimmers to advanced swimmers, and each trainee will receive individual attention from an instructor. For reservations, call 684-6161.

TEA: Tests prove remedial work needed

AUSTIN (AP) — Nearly half the students who took a new statewide achievement test failed to show grade-level "mastery" of reading, writing and math, according to a report by the Texas Education Agency.

The agency, in a report to the State Board of Education on Friday, said the results are "benchmarks" against which it can measure future benefits of the 1984 school reforms mandated by the Legislature.

According to the results from 948,600 students in the third, fifth, seventh and ninth grades, 50 percent of the third-graders, 55 percent of the fifth-graders, 56 percent of the seventh-graders and 53 percent of the ninth-graders mastered all three exams in reading, math and writing.

The results mean there are more than 100,000 students at each of the four grade levels who need remedial work, said Keith Cruse, the education agency's director of student assessment.

Cruse said it is a "dramatic finding" that nearly half the students are lacking in a core of knowledge that the agency now prescribes for each grade. But he said the 1985 reports show a higher level of mastery, and the situation can be remedied by better instruction.

Subject-by-subject mastery was stronger than the overall mastery of all three subjects, the TEA report said.

Specialist tells non-profit groups where to request funds

From Staff Reports

Gutherie

New "money power" can be realized by Midland-Odessa non-profit programs, churches, schools and individuals if only they knew where to look for funds, according to a program development specialist.

The money is there, said Houston resident Jon Guthrie at a recent workshop sponsored by the National Office of the Palmer Drug Abuse Program (PDAP) in Midland.

"The problem for agencies having financial difficulty is not one of there being no money available," Guthrie said. "It is a problem of the programs' not knowing where to look for funds or how to organize themselves in order to successfully compete for the money."

Guthrie noted that Harvard University, the champion private-sector fund-raiser last year, brought in almost $150 million in alternative money. The University of Texas System ranked No. 4 nationally in effective fund-raising by bringing in more than $120 million into the UT System.

"Other agencies have been very successful, too," Guthrie said. "And there is absolutely no reason for Midland-Odessa area programs not to be competitive."

To be competitive requires organization, he said.

Fund-raising approaches should be initiated to allow for asking three foundations each day for assistance with grants or donations. Such a system requires working about 30 minutes or an hour per day for the fund-seeking agency, Gutherin said. Those efforts have provided "substantial results" for agencies across the state and have caused Texas to be ranked third in alternative private-sector fund-raising effort.

The PDAP-Victoria agency, for example, received $2,000 in its first fund-raising effort, he said.

A Midland agency reportedly received $27,000 as a result of submitting a one-page application form for a grant.

Guthrie said agencies seeking funds can request Internal Revenue Service reports on foundations and can ferret out other means to apply for funds from foundations and trusts.

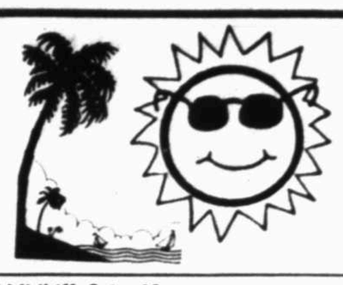

Guthrie noted that the Tax Act of 1939 really started the foundation boom, but that the Tax Act of 1969 hindered foundations' charitable works. Many went out of business. Today, however, the government once again is encouraging foundations to increase their nationwide giving. The private sector's philanthropic efforts increased 13 percent last year to $56 billion in spite of the "soft" economic conditions.

Midland consultant/writer Jheri Fleet, who helps non-profit groups prepare funding requests, said that quality preparation is essential.

"Most foundations and trusts don't require a great deal of paperwork but the documents should look good, be clearly written, and be interesting to read," Ms. Fleet said.

Guthrie said the process is simple.

"It's really very simple," Guthrie said of seeking grants. "Non-profit programs, schools, churches, and individuals not getting alternative funding assistance are not asking for such assistance. Those programs that do ask — in an orderly and organized fashion — get the money."

Commissioners will review jail-study bids

From Staff Reports

Midland County commissioners are to review bids on a study for Midland County courthouse and jail needs well into the 21st century in their 9 a.m. Monday meeting in the Commissioners' Courtroom in the Midland County Courthouse.

In other business, the commissioners are to consider a request for a computer by District Attorney Al Schorre, to discuss repairs to the Midland County Courthouse Annex, and are to enter a resolution on Texas legislative hearings on funding of misdemeanor probations.

Man attempted car theft in front of police station

HOUSTON (AP) — A would-be car thief nearly stole a red Corvette in a place many would believe to be the safest spot in town — in the shadow of the city's downtown police station, police said.

"When they told me somebody was in my car trying to take my T-tops (removable roof sections) off, I couldn't believe it. Not here in front of the police station," said Houston police officer Deborah Reeves.

The incident began Friday when a man trying to take the tops off the car asked officer David A. Raibon for help. Raibon said he thought the man was with the company that had just finished painting Ms. Reeves' car.

Raibon called Ms. Reeves, who ran to her car and asked the man what he was doing.

She said the man replied, "I'm trying to get the T-tops off of here. Deborah said I could."

Ms. Reeves countered, "Deborah didn't tell you that. I'm Deborah," and then she slapped handcuffs on him.

Off of what??

A consumer fraud alert in the public interest issued by the Jewelers Vigilance Committee, a non-profit industry supported association organized to promote ethical practices.

Exaggerated discount claims are always suspect. Deep discounts, when frequently offered by a store, may not be discounts at all. You should question the higher price which is often described as the "regular," "former," "compare at," or other comparative price. Is that discounted price one at which the item actually sold? Or is it a fictitious price that is meant to mislead you into believing you are getting a bargain??? Always comparison shop. Check the price of the item in several stores. You owe it to yourself.

Midland had high hopes of qualifying six or seven individuals and a couple of relays to next Saturday's Class 5A state track meet in Austin, but when the smoke had cleared last Saturday at the Region I meet in Lubbock, only Midland Lee's Quintus Hampton and Brad Cooper were left on the state road.

But even after qualifying efforts by Hampton and Cooper in Lubbock, a hollow ring was left in their qualifying bids as both suffered defeat for the first time in 1986.

Both had the fastest qualifying times in their respective events going into the Region I event and both got beat by career bests by opponents.

Hampton qaulified for state in the 300 intermediate hurdles while Cooper runs in the 400 meters.

HAMPTON ENTERS the state meet as the fifth best 300 hurdler in the state with a season best of 37.23. His best at the Region I meet was 37.37 in the prelims, but his 37.83 wasn't good enough for victory in the finals as Amarillo's George Jones posted a 37.38. However, the top two winners in each Region event advances to Austin.

Cooper produced a season best 47.81 in the Region prelims, but managed a 48.36 in the finals to fall to O.D. Wyatt's Pressie Ford, who had a 48.06. However, Cooper's 47.81 was his first effort of the year under 48 seconds and that was a major goal.

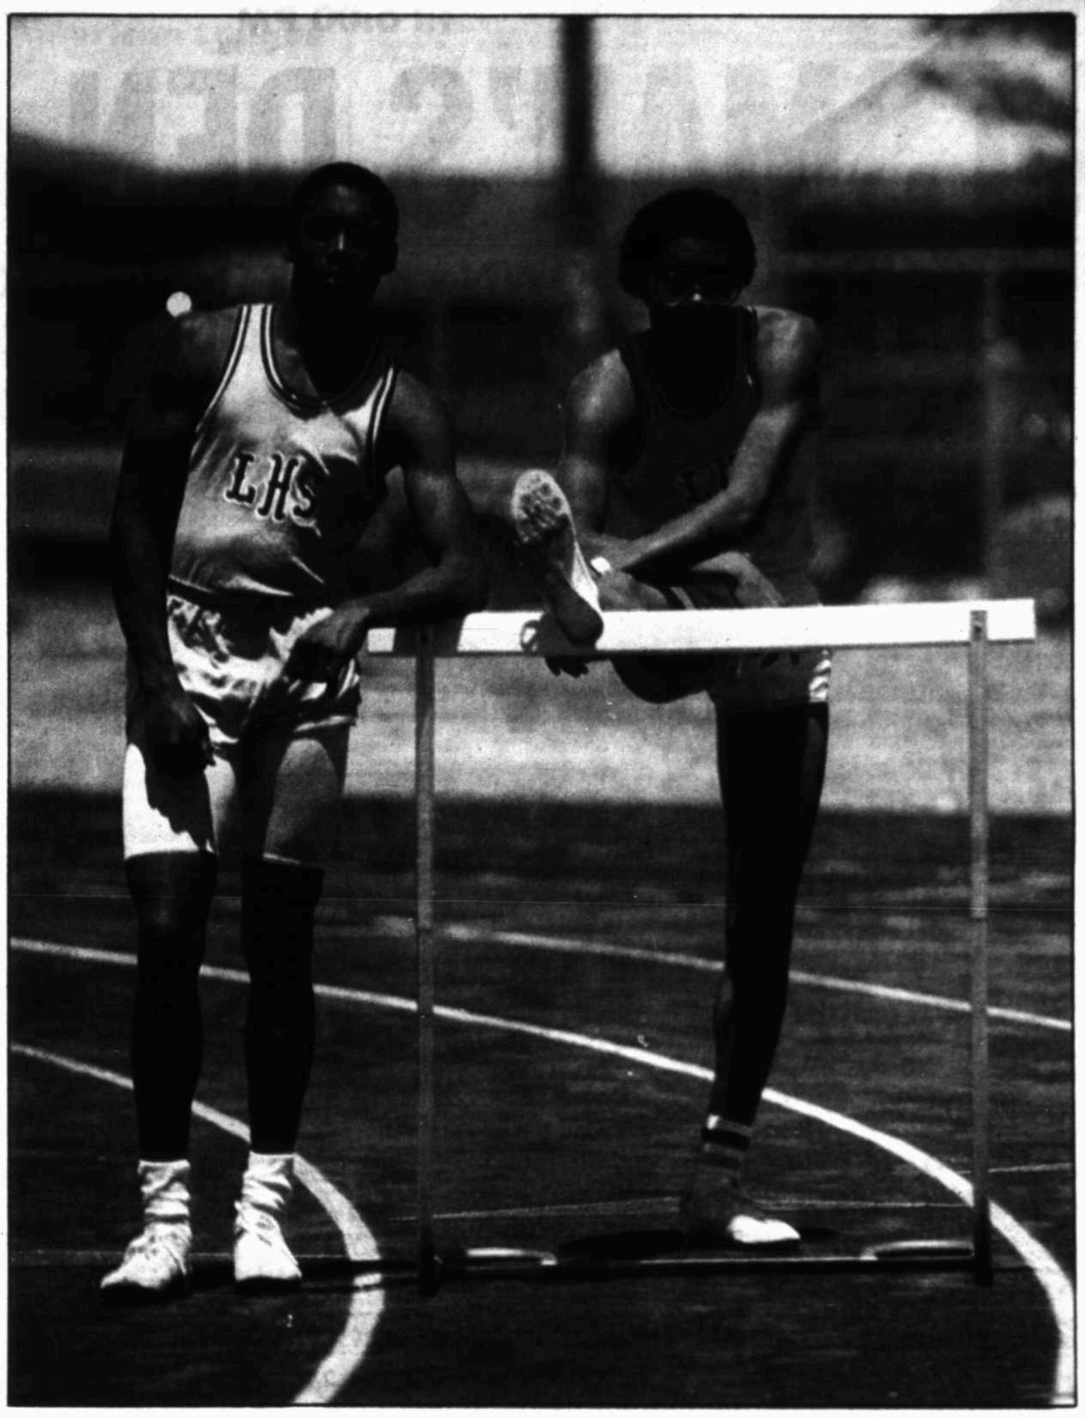

The two runners faced first time defeat with different reactions. Hampton was disappointed with his effort after nearly falling down before recovering in time to place second.

"I had him (Jones) beat if I hadn't twisted my foot over one hurdle," said Hampton. "I wanted to win the regional championship with a good time."

HAMPTON HAS said all year that a national record 35.7 was his goal. That appears to be a high standard with one race left in his high school career before he heads for the University of Texas on a track scholarship.

"I still think I should be in the low 36s if I run a perfect race. It always seems like I hit a hurdle or get my steps mixed up during a race. I still think I can run with the best," said Hampton.

Cooper took a different approach in his loss to Ford in the 400.

Cody Bell/Reporter-Telegram

Midland Lee's Brad Cooper, left, and Quintus Hampton will be carrying the Tall City colors in the state track meet in Austin next Saturday at Memorial Stadium.

"I'm not going to let this setback bother me because it was my goal to go to state," said Cooper. "I've been waiting for this chance for three years and nothing is going to get in the way of my qualifying for state.

"I accomplished everything I wanted through the regional meet. I wanted to be undefeated going into the regionals. I made that goal on New Year's day and that has been accomplished. My next goal was to go to state and I've done that. Now I want to place in the state meet and I'll have to work hard to do that."

FOR FIRST year Lee head track coach Eddie Wolski, his two senior state qualifiers are the first he has nutured to the state meet, and that alone, will give Hampton and Cooper a special place in Wolski's heart.

"I don't know what I would have done without these two young men," noted Wolski. "They provided a lot of the leadership for the team. They were always interested in what the other team members were doing on the track and they certainly led by example, both in practice and on the field."

Wolski thinks both deserve their berths in the state meet, but for reasons other than just times in competition.

Living legend towers over Rockets' twins

Associated Press

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — In the world of sports, old is in these days.

First, there was 46-year-old Jack Nicklaus winning the Masters Golf Tournament last month. Next was 54-year-old Bill Shoemaker guiding Ferdinand to the Kentucky Derby winner's circle last weekend.

And now, there's 39-year-old Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who's attempting to lead the Los Angeles Lakers to their second straight National Basketball Association championship.

Abdul-Jabbar, the oldest player in the NBA, scored a game-high 31 points, grabbed six rebounds and blocked three shots Saturday to lead the Lakers past the Houston Rockets 119-107 in the opener of the Western Conference finals.

Abdul-Jabbar, defended most of the time by 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson, went over and around his younger foe with relative ease as the Lakers beat the Rockets for the ninth time in 11 games between the teams dating back to the beginning of the 1984-85 season.

Abdul-Jabbar, the NBA's all-time leading scorer, has averaged 32 points in those games, usually getting the best of Sampson and 7-foot Akeem Olajuwon, Houston's other "Twin Tower."

"If I front him, they're going to lob over me," Sampson said. "If I play behind him, it works better. I'll play better Tuesday than I did today."

Abdul-Jabbar's performance against Houston was no surprise considering he's been especially dominant offensively against the Rockets in recent years.

With the arduous regular season over and the playoffs heating up, Abdul-Jabbar might be expected to be getting a little fatigued at this time, but he said such wasn't the case.

"I don't have a secret. I pay the price in the off-season. It's something I want to do. I enjoy the challenge," Abdul-Jabbar said.

The second game in the best-of-7 series will be played at the Forum Tuesday night with the third and fourth games scheduled at Houston next Friday night and Sunday.

The 7-2 Abdul-Jabbar had 28 of his points in the first three quarters as the Lakers took command of the game, played before a sellout crowd of 17,505 at the Forum and a national television audience.

"We were out of sync all day," Houston Coach Bill Fitch said. "I give the Lakers credit, their defense, their tempo."

Mears smashes record in race for Indy pole

By MIKE HARRIS

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A nervous Rick Mears drove the fastest qualifying lap in auto racing history — 217.581 mph — Saturday and earned his third pole-position start for the Indianapolis 500 with an incredible four-lap average of 216.828.

Mears, a two-time Indy 500 winner, smashed the Indianapolis Motor Speedway qualifying marks set earlier in the day by Penske Racing teammate Danny Sullivan and bumped the defending champion into the second of 33 starting spots for the May 25 race.

Twenty-five drivers qualified Saturday for what is virtually certain to be the fastest Indy field ever, with four surpassing the previous four-lap Speedway record of 212.583 set last year by Pancho Carter. Time trials continue Sunday and conclude next weekend. Only first-day qualifiers were eligible for the pole.

Other former Indy winners who qualified Saturday were Tom Sneva, Mario Andretti, Johnny Rutherford and Al Unser. Four-time winner A.J. Foyt, seeking a record 29th Indy 500 start, did not make a qualifying attempt but is expected to do so Sunday.

Mears acknowledged he had a case of the jitters when he squeezed into the cockpit of his March racer.

"I was a nervous wreck (after Sullivan qualified)," Mears said. "You never know what's going to happen from one minute to the next. Danny did a great job ... He really got my attention.

"But it's been this way every time I've stepped in a race car. In 1979, when I qualified at 194 (and won the pole), it was as nervous and scary as it was today at this speed."

Another factor was that team owner Roger Penske wanted to move the car to the back of the qualifying line and try to wait until later in the day, when the track would be cooler and traction would be better. Mears, however, wanted to go when his turn came.

Asked when he knew for sure he would make his attempt in the early afternoon heat, Mears replied: "When I got in the car."

Mears, the 500 winner in 1979 and 1984, turned in a four-lap, 10-mile qualifying run that shattered the records set only about an hour earlier by Sullivan in the battle for the inside-front row starting position for the 70th Indy classic. The pole position is worth $72,500.

Surprise playoff turn for Sears, Deande

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Sometimes life just doesn't work out as planned. Take, for example, the thoughts Matt Sears and Anthony Deande had on their 1986 Midland High athletic season.

The two Bulldogs are two-year starters in basketball and baseball and are working out for the upcoming bi-district playoff game against Lubbock Monterey. At the start of the season, it really wasn't expected.

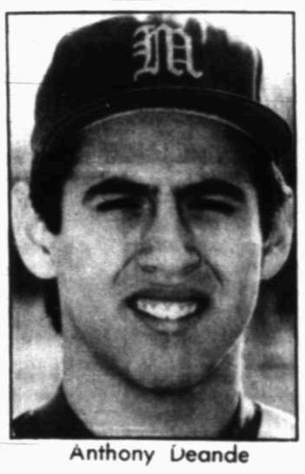

"I thought we'd go to the playoffs in basketball, not baseball," said Deande, the MHS left fielder.

Sears agreed. "I thought we would make it in basketball easy and that we would hardly have a chance in baseball but that's not how things turned out."

Sears and Deande came close to making the playoffs in both sports. In basketball, Midland High and Midland Lee tied for second place and, in the ensuing elimination game, the Rebels came away the winner, leaving the Bulldogs at home packing away their gear.

Spring followed and baseball equipment was uncrated and passed around. Early season polls were tabulated and the future wasn't too bright for the 'Dogs.

"When I came out for baseball after we lost to Lee and saw we were picked fifth, I thought, 'here we go again,'" said Sears. "Then things got going for us and we made it."

Anthony Deande

Matt Sears

MAKING IT to the playoffs is just one of the highlights Sears and Deande will have to look back on once the season is finished. To date, each has a special baseball moment that will be a long time forgetting.

"For me, the first game against Cooper is what I'll remember," said Sears. "Before that game I couldn't hit the ball at all."

Sears snapped out of his hitting slump against the Cougars with a 2-for-3 performance, including a two-run single in the bottom of the seventh to give the Bulldogs a 2-1 victory.

For Deande, the opponent is also Cooper but the game is the second meeting when he went 3-for-5, including his first home run of the year, scored two and drove in two. The Bulldogs went on to win 14-10.

The victories over Cooper, combined with the team's success during the rest of the season, helped narrow some ground between baseball and basketball in the minds of the two seniors.

"This year it's pretty close. Last year it was more toward basketball," said Deande.

"I'd feel a lot better if it was basketball because I'm a lot better at basketball," said Sears. "But, as long as we're in the playoffs."

Midland High coach Tim Whalen isn't concerned which sport his two players prefer, only that they have learned to compete.

"The fact that they're competing in other sports helps them a lot," said Whalen. "There's not much difference between going to the free throw line with the game on the line than there is going to the plate with the game on the line.

Spurned Cottier blasts Mariner management

SEATTLE (AP) — Fired Seattle Mariners Manager Chuck Cottier has blasted the owner of the American League baseball franchise, saying Southern California multimillionaire George Argyros embarrassed him on many occasions.

Cottier, 50, was fired by the Mariners on Thursday, and 57-year-old Dick Williams was hired as the Mariners' new manager Friday.

"Other owners walk through, ask, 'How you doing? How's the family?' and leave," Cottier said. "Not George. He had to apply his pressure. It was embarrassing."

Cottier made his comments in an interview with The Seattle Times Friday.

Argyros, in his sixth season as owner of the Mariners, made almost daily telephone calls to Cottier, the former manager said.

"Something has to be changed here or the team may always struggle," Cottier said. "As long as George owns the team if every day you walk into the ballpark feeling pressure, he is going about owning the wrong way.

"And every day, as a manager, coach or player, there are calls every day or visits and George says, 'We have to win today' because of the lease or because of attendance clauses."

Argyros' most frequent visits were in Anaheim, Calif., and in Seattle, said Cottier.

"He always was asking, 'How is so-and-so today? How is our pitcher? And the guy usually hadn't even come to the park yet," Cottier said.

"The worst thing was him going around to the players and telling them, 'We have to win today.' It's like they weren't trying to win every game they could.

Lee looks for two-way players

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee first year head football coach Earl Miller has had a week to look over his 1986 varsity hopefuls during spring training drills and a few experiments seem to be working out for the Rebels.

"The main thing we have found is that we have some kids who we think can play both offense and defense for us," said Miller. "We're going to have to have some of that this year due to the lack of depth at certain positions and the economic uncertainty we face in the city.

"We've had strictly offensive and defensive players the past three years, but I don't think we have that luxury this year. We're still going to go one way as much as possible.

"One way we will work this out is to work on offense one day and the next day, the wild cards (the kids learning both offensive and defensive positions) will move to defense. These kids won't have as much practice time at one position as they have in the past, so we have to make that time count."

Miller mentioned six players who will be working on both offensive and defensive positions. Most may not start both ways but can serve as backups when called on.

The players are John Bradley, tackle both ways; Jimmy Fennell, secondary and wide receiver; Geoff Rich, quarterback and linebacker; Freddy Dawson, secondary and receiver; Danny Elliott, secondary and quarterback; and John Kendrick, tight end and linebacker. Miller says that Bradley is a contender as a starter both ways and has picked up defense assignments quickly this spring.

"We have been surprised by the defensive unit this spring," notes Miller. "I think we have the makings of a good defensive team and that surprised me. Our secondary and down linemen have really looked strong.

"We still wonder if we can play 5A football with our linebackers. Mike Acosta is the only one who has established himself at linebacker. Kendrick has looked good and we're looking at Omar Mendoza and Carlos Pena very hard."

Miller is also concerned about his offensive line, saying, "We're still developing the line. We don't have any experience there and we're still swapping people around. They have a big challenge in front of them, but they are improving every day."

Overall, Miller is pleased with the effort of his kids after one week. "It's been hot, but these kids have worked and improved each day. We don't feel like we have wasted a day yet. We have a lot of leaders and enthusiasm out there and when you have that you have a chance to make something good happen.

"We've got the makings of a good football team if they continue to improve as much as they did this past week. And I really don't know why that won't continue."

Lee will end spring training activities Thursday, May 22, with the Maroon-White scrimmage game at Memorial Stadium.

Bonnie Lauer alone atop UVBG Classic

LPGA

SUFFOLK, Va. (AP) — Bonnie Lauer sank a 12-foot putt for par on the 18th hole to take sole possession of the lead after two rounds of the 54-hole, $250,000 United Virginia Bank Golf Classic Saturday.

Lauer shot a 1-over-par 73 for a 142 total over the 6,151-yard Sleepy Hole Golf Course.

One stroke back at 143 were Allison Finney and Lynn Connelly. A bogey on the 18th cost Finney a share of the lead and she finished with a 71 while Connelly also posted a 71. Neither has won an LPGA tournament.

"It is anybody's ball game Sunday," Lauer said of the final round of the tournament that will bring the winner $37,500. "There are so many people in contention who could shoot five or six under. It will be a matter of whose putts drop."

Behind the three leaders were six golfers grouped at 144, including four past UVB Classic winners, defending champion Kathy Whitworth, two-time winner Amy Alcott, Jan Stephenson and Sally Little. Others at 144 were veteran Debbie Massey and second-year pro Amy Benz.

Lauer struggled on the back nine. She was 4-under-par for the tournament and leading by two strokes until she bogeyed 16 and 17.

Flames grab 3-2 edge in series

NHL

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Dan Quinn scored twice in less than two minutes midway through the second period and Mike Eaves scored a key goal in the third to lead Calgary to a 4-2 victory over St. Louis Blues Saturday night and give the Flames a 3-2 lead in the Campbell Conference final.

Game 6 of the best-of-7 Stanley Cup semifinal series will be Monday night in St. Louis.

Eaves, who had retired earlier this season because of medical problems, scored his first goal of the playoffs, a wraparound shot at 13:19 of the final period, to kill a brief St. Louis comeback attempt.

Colin Patterson gave Calgary a 1-0 lead with a short-handed goal 3:11 into the opening period. Doug Gilmour tied the game at 4:08 of the second period before Quinn scored his goals 115 seconds apart.

Quinn's first goal, at 9:28, came on a power play and his scored his second at 11:23.

Mark Hunter brought the Blues to within one goal early in the final period but that was offset by Eaves' effort.

Steve Bozek led Calgary's outstanding penalty-killing effort as St. Louis was scoreless in eight chances and the Flames outshot the Blues 6-2 on those situations. That dropped the anemic Blues' power play in the series to two goals in 25 chances.

Bozek's efforts set up the game's first goal when he pounced on a loose puck and forced St. Louis' Rick Wamsley to make a tough save and then crashed into the goaltender carrying him back of the net. Patterson then put a backhander past defenseman Rob Ramage trying to cover the net.

Still, although Wamsley blocked seven other shots, it was actually St. Louis that had the better scoring chances in the period mainly because of Calgary's erratic shooting. Goaltender Mike Vernon had to be extremely sharp to foil Herb Raglan twice and Eddy Beers and Rick Meagher once each.

The Flames, however, moved the puck out of their zone with ease, had the Blues back on their heels much of the night and constantly beat St. Louis to the puck.

Lottery picks a mystery

NEW YORK (AP) — Call it the Who's No. 1 Lottery.

With no player a clear-cut favorite, the mystery of which team will win the No. 1 pick in Sunday's NBA lottery shares the spotlight with the question of who will be taken first in the June 17 draft.

A year ago, the first prize was obvious, and the drawing of team logos out of a barrel to determine the draft order was known as the Patrick Ewing Lottery.

This year, no single player is atop everyone's wish list.

"The No. 7 pick might be as good as No. 1 this year," said Ray Compton, vice president of operations for the Indiana Pacers, who finished second to the New York Knicks in the Ewing Lottery. "The lottery just doesn't have the same impact and excitement of a year ago."

Indiana was the only lottery team to admit it was leaning toward one player — Brad Daugherty of North Carolina.

GENERAL MANAGER Don Walsh said the Pacers probably would take the 6-foot-11 senior center, but also said a trade was possible if Indiana wins.

The lottery will be televised nationally by CBS during halftime of a playoff game, which will start at 12 p.m. CDT.

Besides the absence of a dominant player, this year's lottery has two other differences from last year.

In 1985, the seven teams involved in the lottery all were non-playoff teams, living up to the draft's theoretical premise that the weakest teams are supposed to get the best college players.

This year, however, three strong teams — Boston, Philadelphia and Dallas — are in the lottery via long-ago trades with teams that didn't make the playoffs. New York, Phoenix, Golden State and Indiana will join the Celtics, 76ers and Mavericks in the lottery.

"With Boston and Philly in there, it's like playing poker with the Rockefellers and the Kennedys," Compton said.

THE THREE teams that are not in the lottery and did not make the playoffs are Seattle, the Los Angeles Clippers and Cleveland.

Philadelphia acquired the Clippers' first pick when it gave up Joe Bryant in 1979; Dallas got first-round choices in 1983 and 1986 in a 1980 trade with Cleveland in which the Mavericks gave up Jerome Whitehead and Richard Washington; and Boston traded Gerald Henderson to Seattle in 1984 for the SuperSonics' first 1986 draft choice.

Another new wrinkle this year is that the lottery will determine the draft order of the first eight teams instead of the first seven. Although the Cavaliers are not in the lottery, they could pick as high as third in the draft because of an NBA agreement with the Gund family, which bought the team from Ted Stepien in 1983.

Pecos stumbles before scrimmage

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

For the Snyder Tigers, it's no longer news when they win the District 2-4A baseball title. The big story is when they lose like in 1985 when they failed to make the playoffs for the first time in 10 years.

This year, the Tigers ended the one-year playoff-less drought by fighting to a 9-1 record and a tie with Pecos for first place. Saturday, the Tigers also regained control of the district title with a 3-2, nine-inning 2-4A playoff victory at Angels Stadium.

The victory improves Snyder's record to 20-7 while Pecos falls to 17-8. In bi-district playoffs this week, Snyder will take on Lubbock Dunbar and Pecos will face Dumas.

The lack of scoring reads opposite of the opportunites each team had to notch numbers on the scoreboard. Pecos, for example, stranded 16 base runners, including eight in the final three innings.

Snyder didn't do much better. The Tigers left 13 on the bases, including eight in the first three innings.

The scoreless tie was broken in the third inning when Snyder's Jimmy Velasquez singled to left, stole second and scored on Pecos catcher Ponch Beficis' errant pickoff throw.

The Eagles countered in the bottom of the third. Jaime Mata walked and scored on Lupe Gabaldon's double to right.

The Tigers came back in the fourth with an RBI single by Brad Holcomb for a 2-1 lead, which held up until the bottom of the seventh. With one out, Gabaldon walked, stole second and, after two more walks, scored on Javier Solis' infield single.

Two innings later, the Tigers scored the winning run. With one out, Velasquez tripled to left and scored on Mike McWilliams' fielder's choice. Pecos loaded the bases in the bottom of the inning but couldn't score.

SATURDAY'S GAME against Snyder was the first of two in three days the Eagles are playing at Angels Stadium. On Monday, Pecos and Midland High, the District 4-5A runnerup, will meet in a scrimmage game at 6 p.m.

"Coach (Bubba) Williams and I talked about it and we're going to play the game as a tune up for the playoffs," said MHS coach Tim Whalen, whose Bulldogs will face Lubbock Monterey on Friday.

"We need this game for experience. I don't care if we win or lose," said Whalen. "Naturally, I want to win, but I want this game more for the competitive edge, to get us ready for Monterey."

The Bulldogs will start Ricky Castaneda on the mound but Whalen expects to throw Kenny De La Garza a couple of innings and will try and get Jaime Salazar and Eric Boyt some pitching time.

For Pecos, Williams is starting Oscar Mariscal, who played shortstop Saturday against Snyder.

"Both played very well for us. Anthony had a couple of miracle plays in the outfield and Matt has been steady. He's made a couple of big plays for us also."

In the player-coach relationship, the Bulldogs sometimes have trouble looking past the big kid in Whalen and finding the coach. Sears and Deande are happy for Whalen finally making it the playoffs.

"I didn't know how long it had been since Midland was in the playoffs until the end of the season," said Deande.

"I didn't know Coach Whalen had never been in the playoffs before," added Sears. "I feel pretty good for him because he's a good guy, a good teacher and a good coach."

IN THE 1985-86 sports season, Sears and Deande have some impressive statistics to look back on.

In basketball, the two seniors led the Bulldogs to a 21-10 overall record, 11-3 in 4-5A play.

Sears was Midland High's leading scorer for the year, dropping in 618 points in 31 games for a 19.9 average. Deande finished third with 431 points for a 13.9 average.

In baseball, it's Deande who has the more impressive numbers, with a .438 average in 4-5A play and .417 overall.

Sears, on the other hand, had a little trouble at the plate, hitting .250 in district games and .263 overall.

In the playoffs, the Bulldogs will host Lubbock Monterey Friday at 6 p.m. at Angels Stadium. The Plainsmen are the District 3-5A champions and haven't lost a game since the Tournament of Champions when both Midland High and Midland Lee tagged them with losses.

"I'm looking forward to it," said Deande. "Since we've played them we know what they're like. They're not awesome, but neither are we. They'll be after us since we've already beaten them."

Charles ties course mark in Seniors

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Bob Charles tied the course record with a 7-under-par 65 Saturday to take a two-stroke lead after the second round of the Benson & Hedges PGA Seniors golf tournament.

The southpaw birdied seven holes to tie the course mark that defending champion Don January set in last year's tournament.

In second place at 10-under-par 134 was Bruce Crampton, who fired a 5-under 67 on Saturday.

Bean stretches lead over Lanny Wadkins

By BOB GREEN

DALLAS (AP) — Andy Bean birdied the final hole and — with help from Bobby Wadkins — stretched his lead to two strokes Saturday in the third round of the $600,000 Byron Nelson Classic.

Wadkins, playing well in front of Bean, held the lead alone until he finished bogey-bogey and left the top spot to Bean.

"You just hate to finish like that," Wadkins, not yet a winner in 12 seasons on the PGA Tour, said.

Bean took full advantage of the situation, rapping in a 15-foot birdie putt on the 18th to complete a three-shot swing on the last two holes.

Bean, a one-stroke leader after 36 holes, had a 3-under-par 68 and completed three rounds over the rain-soaked Tournament Players Club at Las Colinas in 201, nine strokes under par.

Five players — Wadkins, George Burns, who matched the competitive course record of 63, Craig Stadler, Mark Wiebe and Payne Stewart — were at 203 going into the final round of the chase for a $108,000 first prize.

WADKINS TWICE holed out from off the green in a round of 66. Stadler, a former winner of this event, had a 65. Stewart, who appeared to have this title in his grasp until he made double bogey on the 72nd hole last year, shot 67. Weibe shot 68.

And the veteran Burns made 48 yards worth of birdie putts — including four of 25 feet or longer — in the 7-under-par score that matched the day-old competitive course record.

West German Bernhard Langer and Mark Hayes, the first-round leader, were another shot back at 204. Langer had a 66 and Hayes shot 68 in the cloudy, windy weather.

The start of the day's play was delayed two hours, 16 minutes by heavy morning rains that saturated the course and set up some extremely low scoring.

The conditions were such that players were allowed to lift, clean and place balls in the fairway.

"Anytime players like this get to pick up the ball and put it in their hands, scores are going to be good," Wadkins said.

But he put himself in positions where he couldn't get his hands on the ball on the last two holes — and he bogeyed both.

Jesse Owens track advances Midlanders

From Staff Reports

The West Texas preliminary meet of the 1986 ARCO Jesse Owens Games was held at Memorial Stadium Saturday and 19 Midlanders earned advancement for the Southwest regional competition in Dallas.

The regional meet will be held June 25 and winners there will earn the right to compete in the national ARCO Jesse Owens Games, which will be held in August in Los Angeles.

First place winners from Group 2 through Group 4 won advancement Saturday in the Midland meet.

Saturday's top finishers are as follows:

Boys Group 1

TRACK

"Brad gave himself to track this year," noted Wolski. "At the end of football season, Cooper weighed almost 180 pounds and has dropped 25 pounds for track. He started working the day football was over and hasn't quit. In fact, he works too hard sometimes."

Cooper was a starting defensive end for Lee's 10-3 state playoff football team, but that didn't come easily. In fact, "We didn't think he would be a starter in football, but the kid just earned it," said Wolski, who also coached him in football.

Hampton's track career has been on an up-and-down road. As a sophomore, he was a surprising District 4-5A champion in the 300 hurdles. As a junior, Permian had Gerry Guster, now with Baylor, running the hurdles and Guster was one of the state's finest last year. Hampton always seemed to be second to Guster as a junior. Hampton was third at the Region meet a year ago.

"I DON'T think Quintus enjoyed track very much last year, but he has worked so much harder this year and seemed to enjoy even the workouts. I don't think that could be said last year," said Wolski.

Wolski added, "Quintus was thinking about the state meet the first time I saw him in school. He has it printed on everything he has."

Going to the state meet isn't new to either Hampton or Cooper. Both were members of Lee's sprint relay team a year ago that qualified for the trip to Austin.

However, this is the first time for both in an individual event and both were hoping to also return in another relay — the 1600 relay. That goal fell at the Region I prelims when first — and what proved to be last leg — Kevin Witt pulled a hamstring. Sophomore Jimmy Fennell, Hampton and Cooper never got a chance to bring Lee another state qualifier.

"That was disappointing, but you can't blame anyone for that," said Hampton. "We all felt sorry for Kevin, but he couldn't do anything about that. Injuries happen. He was running a great leg, too."

But Hampton and Cooper are left to dream bigger dreams, and Saturday those dreams are set in destiny.

LaRussa still in, Cottier out, Martin ignored in shuffles

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Tony LaRussa still has his job as manager of the Chicago White Sox. Dick Williams has replaced Chuck Cottier in the manager's post with the Seattle Mariners. And Billy Martin, who talked with the management of both clubs this week, remains a Yankee broadcaster.

"Billy would like to manage again, but the deal has to be absolutely right," said Eddie Sapir, Martin's agent, in a telephone interview Friday from Arlington, Tex., where the Yankees were playing the Rangers. "It's got to give him and his family financial security, and it has to make him happy. We will do what is best for us business-wise."

"With Seattle, we had a good talk with George Argyros, but the bottom line was that they couldn't afford Billy," Sapir said, referring to the Mariners' owner.

"With Chicago, they understood that there was no way in the world I would entertain a one-year contract, no way I would think about a contract less than three years. Billy has a lifetime contract with the Yankees."

But Sapir added: "None of those things were stumbling blocks with Chicago. Ken Harrelson made the decision to give Tony added time. And Billy was happy with that. But Hawk told me that he was not going to give LaRussa the whole season to turn things around."

LaRussa was considered close to being dismissed by the foundering White Sox, but Ken (Hawk) Harrelson, the club's executive vice president for baseball operations, announced Friday that LaRussa would stay.

Chicago did make some changes, however. Carlton Fisk, who had been shifted to left field from his catching position, will go back behind the plate. Two of the club's coaches, Moe Drabowsky and Willie Horton, have been removed from their posts and will probably be reassigned to the White Sox's minor league system.

"If there have been any mistakes made, I made them," said Harrelson. "I came in with new ideas. They have not worked. The players have not responded and we are making a couple of changes."

Harrelson had discussed the White Sox job with Martin on Thursday.

"I talked with Billy and we were going to talk again, but under the current circumstances, I didn't want to make a change," he said.

"In my opinion, Billy's the best manager in baseball, but I've said that before."

Also Friday, one day after dismissing Cottier, the Mariners hired Williams, who took three teams into four World Series.

Williams, 58 years old, takes over his sixth major-league club in a big-league managerial career that began with the Red Sox in 1967. He managed Boston for three seasons, Oakland for three seasons, California for three seasons, Montreal for five seasons and San Diego for four seasons.

He took the Red Sox, the A's and the Padres into the World Series, and won the championship with Oakland in 1972 and 1973.

Williams resigned as manager of the Padres during spring training.

The Mariners were off to a 9-19 start when Cottier was dismissed. With a 98-119 record, he compiled the best won-lost percentage — .452 — of any Mariners manager in history.

TCU's Stockton takes UH post

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Christian's Bragg Stockton, once the right-hand man to University of Houston baseball Coach Rolan Walton, was named Friday as Walton's successor.

"This is a life-long dream come true," said Stockton, TCU's head baseball coach for the past three years.

Stockton was Walton's assistant coach at Houston from 1981-83. Walton retired last weekend after completing 12 seasons as Houston's coach.

Stockton, 47, becomes the third Houston baseball coach in the past 37 years. He also coached the San Jacinto College program from 1970-80, where he complied a 424-112 record

Fisk returns as backstop

CLEVELAND (AP) — Carlton Fisk was back behind the plate Saturday as the Chicago White Sox's starting catcher, after he spent the first part of the season as a left fielder.

Manager Tony LaRussa, reportedly under pressure from Ken "Hawk" Harrelson, chief of baseball operations, had put Fisk in left field during spring training and left him there for 26 regular-season games.

The experiment failed as Fisk, who had been a catcher during his first 15 years in the majors, appeared uncomfortable in the field and struggled at bat. He was hitting .210 with two homers and eight runs batted in entering Saturday's game against the Cleveland Indians.

Harrelson, in announcing Friday that the embattled LaRussa would continue as manager, said, "If there have been any mistakes made, I made them."

Joel Skinner and Marc Hill had shared catching duties most of the season. Skinner was hitting .157 and Hill .176, and both were on the bench at the start of Saturday's game.

Knepper, Davis guide Astros

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Glenn Davis hit two homers and a double and Bob Knepper became the National League's first six-game winner Saturday night as the Houston Astros beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 6-3.

Davis's first home run was into the left-field stands with two outs in the sixth inning against starter Rick Rhoden, 2-2. Jose Cruz, the previous batter, had walked, but was thrown out attempting to steal second.

NL

Davis added a two-run homer in the eighth off Bob Walk after Bill Doran had singled as the Astros maintained first place in the NL West.

Knepper, 6-1, allowed eight hits, walked three and struck out five in seven innings. Frank DiPino finished for his first save.

Mets 5, Reds 1

NEW YORK — Ron Darling pitched three-hit ball for eight innings and George Foster and Gary Carter homered, leading New York to its seventh straight victory.

The Mets are 20-4, the best record in the major leagues, and have won 18 of their last 19 games. The Reds, 6-19, with the worst record in the majors, have lost 14 of their last 15 games.

Darling, 3-0, did not give up a hit until Buddy Bell led off the fifth inning with a single. He struck out four and walked three. Jesse Orosco worked the ninth, completing the combined three-hitter.

Braves 3, Phillies 1

ATLANTA — Claudell Washington and Terry Harper both hit solo home runs, leading Atlanta over Philadelphia.

Left-hander Zane Smith, 3-2, allowed five hits in seven innings and struck out eight to regain the National League lead in strikeouts over Houston's Mike Scott. Smith walked two before leaving the game when a muscle tightened in his left side.

Washington's fourth home run, a drive over the right field fence leading off the third, came off Philadelphia starter Charles Hudson, 2-2.

Expos 3, Dodgers 2

MONTREAL — Herman Winningham singled home Al Newman from second base in the 11th inning and gave Montreal its seventh straight victory, a 3-2 decision over Los Angeles.

Newman led off the 11th with his third hit of the game, single against Ken Howell, 0-2. Mike Fitzgerald followed with a sacrifice, and both runners were safe when Howell threw late to second trying to get Newman.

Winningham then grounded a 1-1 pitch to left field that scored Newman with the winning run.

Dan Schatzeder pitched two innings, allowing only one hit, to raise his record to 2-0.

Cardinals 6, Giants 3

ST. LOUIS — Pitcher Ray Burris drove in three runs with a bases-loaded double and recorded his first victory of the year as St. Louis downed San Francisco.

Burris, a 35 year-old right-hander signed as a free agent by the Cardinals last month, was making his first major league start of the season after being called up from St. Louis' Triple A club at Louisville. His last win in the majors was on Aug. 26, 1985 while with Milwaukee.

Cubs 6, Padres 5

CHICAGO — Pitcher Dennis Eckersley and catcher Jody Davis hit two-run homers and Keith Moreland also homered to lead Chicago over San Diego.

John Kruk and Graig Nettles hit two-run homers for the Padres. Eckersley, 1-2, was the winner and LaMarr Hoyt, 0-1, took the loss.

Bip Roberts opened the game with a single and Kruk followed with his first major-league homer.

The Cubs tied it in the bottom of the first. Shawon Dunston doubled and scored on a pair of infield groundouts before Moreland hit his third homer.

Yankees' rally throttles Texas

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Butch Wynegar singled home Ken Griffey for the tie-breaking run in the eighth inning and Ron Guidry struck out 11 in seven innings as the New York Yankees defeated the Texas Rangers 4-3 Saturday night.

Guidry, 4-1, recorded the first nine outs on strikeouts and had six straight strikeouts in one stretch. The 11 strikeouts were the most by a Yankees pitcher this year and the most for Guidry since Aug. 7, 1984.

AL

Brian Fisher struck out three in relief but faltered in the ninth and Dave Righetti came on for his eighth save. Greg Harris, 2-4, took the loss in relief.

The Yankees scored two runs in the eighth to break a 2-2 tie. After a one-out fielding error by first baseman Pete O'Brien put Griffey on second and Mike Pagliarulo at first, Wynegar lined his hit to center off Harris. Bobby Meacham followed with a single to left, scoring Pagliarulo.

Twins 12, Tigers 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Steve Lombardozzi hit a three-run homer to cap a five-run first inning and Minnesota used a four-homer, 17-hit attack to trample Detroit.

Tom Brunansky, Greg Gagne and Kent Hrbek also homered and Hrbek drove in four runs in support of Frank Viola, 4-2, who allowed eight hits in five innings to win his first game since April 21.

Orioles 5, Royals 2

BALTIMORE — Mike Boddicker, activated from the disabled list earlier in the day, pitched three-hit ball for eight innings and Fred Lynn hit his first home run in a month as Baltimore defeated Kansas City.

Boddicker, 3-0, making his first start since April 19 because of a torn ligament in his right middle finger, hit Willie Wilson with his first pitch of the game.

White Sox 4, Indians 0

CLEVELAND — Carlton Fisk's two-run single highlighted a four-run 11th inning and Neil Allen and two relievers combined on a three-hitter to give Chicago a victory over Cleveland.

The victory was the second straight for Chicago, which had ended a six-game losing streak and also stopped Cleveland's 10-game winning streak Friday night.

Gene Nelson, 3-1, pitched three perfect innings for his second victory in two days. He had also won Friday night's game in relief. Bob James worked a hitless 11th.

Reds Sox 4, A's 2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Don Baylor hit a two-run homer in the 10th inning Saturday, lifting Bruce Hurst and Boston over Oakland.

Jim Rice singled with one out in the 10th off Oakland reliever Steve Ontiveros, 0-1. It was Rice's 2,000th career hit. Baylor followed with his fifth homer of the season, hitting a full-count pitch 10 rows deep into the left-field seats.

If you knew how much we love you and appreciate you.

Love, Rich, Mary
And Elizabeth

"HAPPY MOTHER'S DAY!"

TO DORIS MY MOTHER

I wish there were words in the human vocabulary that could express my love for you. It seems that LOVE, GRATITUDE, ADMIRATION (and many more) are just not the exact words I really long to say. I thank God every night for keeping you safe so that we can go through life together for many years to come and nothing separates us but the green grass of each of our graves but even then we'll be together.
I Love You, Kristi

Dear Mom,
I can't be home for Mother's Day but I will be thinking of you. Everyday is Mother's Day to me because I have you for a Mother and for that I will always treasure. I remember how you've always been there when we needed you. Ready to help us no matter what the circumstances or what it cost you. I love you Mom. I could not have asked for a better Mom. Being this far from you, I realize I would give anything to live next door to you and be able to come see you everyday. I Love you Mom and miss you.
Pam Presley.

MOM

Maybe soon you'll live here and you can read this in your paper.

I Love You The Most!
Sheila

KATHY

It's so much fun to finally live so near my sweet sister and her nifty family. You're a great Mom and a wonderful sister!

I Love You, Sheila

DEAR MOM
(MARY)

I love you more than words can say, but since I can't talk yet that's alright. But I can give you a big hug and you can know that it means "you are the most wonderful Mom a little girl could ever have.

CRYSTAL - (18 Months)

MOM DANSER

THO YOU MAY BE FAR IN MILES, YOU'RE ALWAYS CLOSE IN MY HEART

LOVE DAN

ELNORA HILL

I Love You for being you
There's no words to Express the little things you do.
I know I've been A Hassle
And now it's time to abandon your castle

Take This Mother's Day Greeting for as much as it means to me
You're the BEST MOTHER as CAN BE

Love Kathy

IN TODAY'S ARMY, THERE'S UP TO $25,200 FOR YOU IN COLLEGE MONEY.

It's like getting a scholarship for being a good, smart soldier and serving your country well. Here's how it works:

*You contribute $100 a month from your first full 12 monthly Army paychecks. (It's not difficult. Your food, lodging and medical are all paid for.) $ 1,200 You.

*The New GI Bill contributes $9,600 for a 3- or 4-year enlistment. 9,600 New GI Bill contributions.

*Then the New Army College Fund contributes $14,400 for a 4-year enlistment. 14,400 New Army College Fund.

*Effective July 1, 1985. $25,200 Yours for College.

Of course, there are qualifications you must meet, tests to be passed, but if you intend to go to college someday, the best possible route could be the Army. You'll gain knowledge, experience and a sense of self-worth that will be with you the rest of your life.

To find out more about this new way to get to college, see your local Army Recruiter today.

Today, the Audi 5000S becomes even easier to handle. $298 a month*.

The Audi 5000S sedan's ability to negotiate roadways crisply and efficiently is certainly one reason to admire it. That you can negotiate a lease of just $298 a month on this fine European luxury sedan is all the more reason to acquire it.

Performance aside, this 1986 Audi 5000S sedan comes with many standard features that increase comfort without altering the lease price. Electronic climate control, cruise control, power windows and door locks, AM/FM stereo cassette, and automatic transmission make this limited time offer a tempting invitation to unlimited driving pleasure.

A closer look will prove what words cannot. Come in for a test drive and complete lease details. Program ends May 31, 1986. And drive away in an Audi 5000S sedan at a lease price that is, well, easy to handle.

*This offer is available only from a participating Audi Leasing dealer through May 31, 1986 as a 60-month, closed-end lease. No purchase option. No down payment is required. First month $298 payment and $300 security deposit are required in advance. Monthly payments are based on manufacturer's suggested retail price and special lease terms exteded by VCI Leasing. Total lease payments $17,880.00 plus 10¢ per mile over 75,000. Registration, local fees, tax, options additional.

Classified PET NEWS

The Midland S.P.C.A. (Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals) Auxiliary is sponsoring a garage sale on Saturday, 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. The garage sale will be held at 2714 West Wall Street. This will be a large sale featuring a great variety of articles including furniture, clothes, etc.

Information about the S.P.C.A. will also be available as well as free educational brochures. S.P.C.A. T-shirts will be for sale along with several other items.

All money collected will go to the S.P.C.A. The S.P.C.A. Adoption Center does not place a time limit on their animal tenants. The S.P.C.A. Shelter accepts no more animals if the Shelter is fully occupied and has a policy of euthanasia only if required because of illness, injury, or failure to adopt. The cost of running the Shelter is in excess of $5,000.00 per month. Donations to the garage sale are therefore greatly needed.

Anyone needing more information or wishing to donate items for the garage sale may call Sylvia after 6:00 p.m. at 694-6063. People donating items should put a price tag on the item and a tax receipt will then be provided. Arrangements can be made for the S.P.C.A. to pick up any large items to be donated. All items donated are TAX DEDUCTIBLE.

Is your club or organization having a meeting or special event concerning pets? If so the Midland Reporter-Telegram would like to help you spread the word. We'll published the information for you-FREE. Every Wednesday, Friday and Sunday in the classified section under Pets & Supplies (class 500) you have the latest information on pet club happenings in the Permian Basin. Send or bring in the information to us at least two weeks before the event.

"Prime Choice" bill of fare for the West Texas mom

By GIGI MCKINNEY
Advertising Feature Writer

With all those wonderful gift ideas out there for Mother's Day, it's a tough decision to find that "just right" item for her. From buying her a star to a new producing oil well (a major achievement these days!), the possibilities are endless.

But on the cover are portions of three prime "menu selections" that any Mom would love. Unique idea? Just wait.

Quietly nestled within one of the most popular new areas of Midland, at 1405 Daventry, is a lovely home built by Roger Hawkins. In the U-shaped kitchen, (top right photo on the cover) sturdy solid oak cabinets with adjustable shelves and two built-in Lazy Susans will appeal to the lady with a sense of order and traditional style. Hotpoint appliances including a dishwasher, self-cleaning oven, microwave and stove lend well to convenience. Almond counters, curio shelves above each side of the double sink and parquet tile with a chic acrylic finish (designed for damp mopping) complete the look.

A high bar is perfect for serving snacks or buffet dinners into the dining area which views the backyard and covered patio. Companion wallpaper in muted tones blends with the "earthy" theme. Adjacent is a wet bar secluded by bifold doors. Mirrored with glass shelving, an almond counter and recessed lighting, this amenity makes entertaining those special holiday guests a pleasure.

This new home, with approximately 2,400 square feet, is available through Stephenson Realtors for $139,500.

A second "prime choice" on this week's bill of fare is a one bedroom loft at Hawthorne House Apartments, located on North Loop 250 (top left photo on the cover). Its versatile style blended with the contemporary charm of the studio look allow for a multitude of decorative appointments. The kitchen, living and dining areas of this dwelling merge to form a comfortable setting for any type of lifestyle. In the U-shaped kitchen, all electric appliances featuring a dishwasher, frost-free refrigerator, continuous cleaning oven and disposal provide all the conveniences of "home". Decorative appointments include almond linoleum, plaid wallpaper and stained wood cabinets.

The adjoining dining and living areas boast plush champagne carpeting, a fireplace in the living room and a low-hanging brass and glass lamp to dine beneath.

Throughout its approximate 844 square feet of living space, this apartment, which leases for $335 per month, makes a cozy setting.

Last, but most assuredly not least on this delightful bill of fare, is a beautiful home situated in the heart of Old Midland. At 1606 North D Street, seated upon almost an acre of prime real estate, is a "taste of the country in the heart of the city" (bottom photo on the cover).The kitchen is a gourmet's treat with every modern built-in convenience available: a microwave, bread warmer, double Jenn-air oven, dishwasher and gas stove with a pancake grill. A bay window, featuring Andersen windows with wood casements and mini blind appointments, above a tiled window seat, illuminate the parquet tile floor. Patterned Italian tile counters and raised panel cabinets create a feeling of comfortable elegance. But the piece de resistance is a five-sided island bar with wood counter, wet sink and storage beneath. This innovatively-shaped unit allows the user to prepare his or her menu items in a time-saving manner. Two full length storage cabinets centrally located, a powder room with a stepped-up modern decor and a built-in desk provide added convenience. And for ease while entertaining, a table height bar stands ready for use to serve guests in the immense, open great room.

With a back patio opening to a lush garden (a rare find in Midland!), outside holiday dining entertainment can also be a treat.

This established home is listed by Re/Max of Midland at $175,000 or can be leased for $1,000 per month.

So, now none of us can say that we just can't think of a single thing to give Mom! Selecting that one single thing is the real chore!!

Report ranks metro area housing costs

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — California upheld its reputation of having the highest housing costs in the nation last year, with San Francisco ranking No. 1, and two other West Coast cities rated among the top five, according to a study by the U.S. league of Savings Institutions.

Homes in the San Francisco metropolitan area sold last year for a median price of $152,000, more than twice the national median price of $75,000, the league reported. The median is the midpoint, with half the homes selling for more and half for less.

The league based its rankings of 46 metropolitan areas on information pulled from 16,300 conventional mortgage loans made by member associations.

After San Francisco, the most expensive area for home purchases was New York City with a median sales price of $129,700, followed by Boston, $126,000; Los Angeles, $123,000; and Anaheim-Santa Ana-Garden Grove, Calif., with a median sales price last year of $122,000.

At the other end of the scale, some of the cheapest housing was found in the Midwest, where a depressed economy has contributed to holding down home costs.

The least expensive city among those surveyed was Pittsburgh, where the median price of a home was $54,152, followed by Dayton, Ohio, $54,750; Cincinnati, $55,300, Bloomington-Normal, Ill., $55,900, and Akron, Ohio, and Reading, Pa., both with median home prices last year of $56,000.

The typical American buying a median-priced home of $75,000 last year made a downpayment of $14,000, representing just under 20 percent of the cost of the house, leaving a monthly mortgage payment of $573.

To the mortgage payment was added $75 for real estate taxes, $100 for electricity and other utility costs and $22 for insurance coverage for a total monthly median housing expense of $770 last year, according to the league survey.

At the two extremes, the median monthly housing expense in San Francisco was $1,370 compared with $673 in Pittsburgh.

Following in alphabetical order are the 46 metropolitan areas included in the league's study with the median sales price followed by the median monthly housing expense:

Akron, Ohio, $56,000 median sales price last year, $624 median monthly housing expense; Albuquerque, N.M., $83,500, $796; Anaheim-Santa Anna-Garden Grove, Calif., $122,000, $1,133; Atlanta, $87,250, $821; Baltimore, $75,157, $790.

Bloomington-Normal, Ill., $55,900, $668; Boston, $126,000, $1,166; Bremerton, Wash., $83,500, $853; Chicago, $87,000, $882; Cincinnati, $55,300, $626.

Cleveland, $62,500, $704; Dallas-Fort Worth, $94,750, $965; Danbury, Conn., $95,950, $954; Dayton, Ohio, $54,750, $619; Detroit, $61,000, $783.

Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood, Fla., $74,900, $739; Gary-Hammond-East Chicago, Ind., $62,000, $701; Greensboro-Winston-Salem-High Point, N.C., $68,625, $661; Harrisburg, Pa., $67,200, $732; Houston, $88,350, $986.

Kansas City, Mo.-Kansas City, Kan., $62,250, $726; Lansing, Mich., $58,500, $739; Los Angeles-Long Beach, $123,000, $1,206, Miami, $82,400, $863; Milwaukee, $69,750, $778.

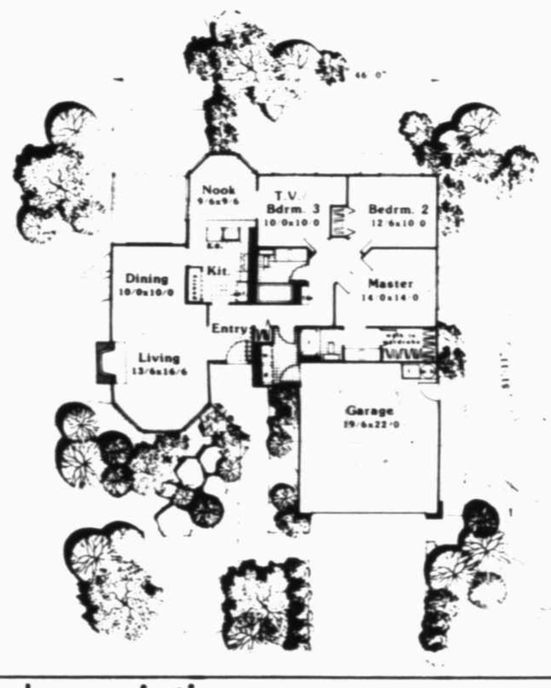

Nashua, N.H., $82,000, $891; Nashville-Davidson, Tenn., $69,000, $688; Newark, $116,000, $1,139; New Orleans, $90,500, $858; New York, $129,700, $1,141.

Oklahoma City, $80,500, $777; Orlando, Fla., $58,200, $604; Philadelphia, $69,450, $733; Pittsburgh, $54,152, $673; Portland, Ore., $69,900, $739.

Raleigh-Durham, N.C., $73,825, $802; Reading, Pa., $56,000, $621; Rochester, N.Y., $66,000, $699; St. Louis, $67,000, $702; Salt Lake City-Ogden, Utah, $66,000, $706.

Economy and style can be wrapped up in one

You don't have to sacrifice style for economy — as evidenced in this beautifully designed 1299 square foot home. Angled windows and flowing space are used creatively to give the impression of a much larger home.

A formal entry greets the visitor and leads into a spacious living and dining room combination. The kitchen contains a convenient pantry for additional storage space and opens up to a sunny nook.

The room off the nook can be used as a T.V. room or partitioned off and used as a bedroom. With its designed versatility it's no wonder this home has become an instant favorite with first time home buyers and empty nesters alike!

End repainting

Though the look of clapboard siding remains popular, some homeowners wish it didn't have to be repainted every few years. For the same look without the bother, side with solid vinyl siding.

Words Worth Knowing

FHA

Federal Housing administration—This federal agency,established by Congress in 1934, insures mortgage loans made by FHA-approved lenders on homes that meet FHA standards in order to make mortgages more affordable for consumers and more desirable investments for lenders.

Interest

The cost paid by a borrower for use of money borrowed to purchase a home.

Martgage

Pledge of property as security for payment of debt.

Mortgagee

The lender who makes a mortgage loan.

Fascinating Facts

by Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

The game of marbles has always been extremely popular in the United States. Championship matches, in which variations of early types of the game are played, are held in many cities and towns. And there is an annual national tournament for both boys and girls each year. The game of marbles is very old, is played in many lands and has a number of forms. They may be made of marble, baked clay, porcelain or glass. In the principal form of the game, one marble, called the shooter, or "taw", is shot with the thumb at other marbles in the circle. Those driven out belong to the shooter.

Does looking for a reliable plumber or technician for your heating or air conditioning system leave you feeling as if you've lost your marbles? For reliable service, just call SANITARY PLUMBING, HEATING & AIR CONDITIONING, (694-8871). We're licensed, bonded and insured. Our service technicians are fully trained and qualified.

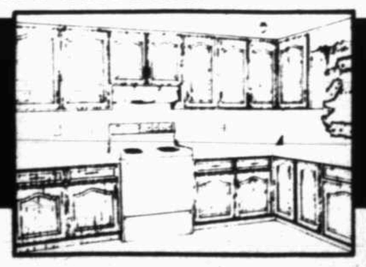

HELPFUL HINT: A map showing location of sewer, water and gas service lines could save your plumber time.

Coldwell Banker announces new sales program

Coldwell Banker announced the introduction of the Best-seller Plan, a comprehensive new guide to selling a house that includes discounts at major companies to help defray the cost of preparing a house for sale and moving. The product was announced the :he Celebration 80 Residential Affiliates Sales Conference at MGM Grand Hotel, Las Vegas.

The plan is an exclusive residential real estate product for home seller listing their houses with Coldwell Banker. It contains tips on how to make a house more appealing to buyer and can save money through the use of cost-saving coupons for home improvement products from Sear's, ranging from paint, lighting fixtures and nursery stock to carpeting, insulation and roofing — and special relocation discounts on services offered by American Airlines, United Van Lines, U-Haul, Hilton Hotels and Ramada Inns. There is also a plan for investing house sale proceeds with Dean Witter.

In announcing the new plan, Joe Hanauer, chairman and president of Coldwell Banker Residential Group, said, "We see ourselves as a company that satisfies the needs of people in not only buying and selling but also in maintaining and enjoying their homes. Just as the Home Buyer Savings Program was developed to help people save money in moving and in setting up housekeeping." He said the plan "is designed to help people save money on what they need to prepare their homes for sale and on relocation expenses. But in addition, it is an invaluable guide in helping people stay organized before, during and after they move."

Also included are tips in packing and moving and checklists on what to do before leaving and upon arrival. A "Home Inspection Worksheet" is a guide in evaluating the actual condition of the home before sale and steps to take to make it more appealing while showing it. A "Household Inventory Record" to fill out upon arrival is an aid in assessing and recording possessions for insurance purposes.

The Coldwell Banker Best-seller Plan will be offered through participating Coldwell Banker Residential Real Estate offices in March. The Bestseller Plan will be available in all but a few states where it is prohibited by law.

Coldwell Banker, America's largest full-service real estate company is celebrating its 80th anniversary in 1986. The company has over 1,400 residential offices nationwide and supplies a complete range of real estate services, including brokerage, relocation, mortgage, title, escrow and new homes marketing. Coldwell Banker is a member of the Sears Financial Network.

Nearly 2,000 residential affiliate broker-owners and sales associates attended the Coldwell Banker Sales Conference.

Coldwell Banker Adobe Inc., Realtors is and independently owned and operated affiliate member of Coldwell Banker Real Estate and will be offering the Bestseller Plan to their sellers' as well as the Home Buyers' Savings book to their buyers.

Asphalt shingles will resist fire

An ability to resist fire is a desirable quality in any roof. Asphalt shingles are manufactured to meet the "fire-resistant" rating of Underwriter Laboratories.

This means the shingles will not ignite easily, support the spread of fire over the roof area, nor add to a fire hazard by emitting burning brands that could start new fires. Those with a fiber glass base have a UL Class A label, which means they have been tested and rated for protection against more severe fire exposure.

Most homebuyers two-income families

A growing number of homebuyers are two-income families. According to a survey by Chicago Title Insurance Co., more than 70 percent of repeat hombuyer families had two wage earners, up from less than half in 1982. of first-time buyers, 86 percent had two incomes, up from 62 percent in 1982.

What frames glass is exceptionally vital

What goes into the frame and sash of a window can be even more important than the glass, says the National Wood Window and Door Association.

Good windows use wood in the sash and frame because wood is a natural insulator. Many are also covered with a protective exterior cladding that all but eliminates the need for periodic painting.

What goes up should not come down

When hanging wallcoverings, be sure to use the right adhesive. Follow the manufacturer's instructions, advises the Wallcovering Information Bureau.

Some adhesives are pre-mixed, others are in dry form. Use care in following the directions on the package.

May I discuss with you...
the recent rumors floating around town regarding a major end-of-school exodus, an unbelievable number of homes on the market and an anticipated major depreciation of property values?

First, investigation on our part through interviews with moving companies, major employers, banks and community leaders has uncovered no evidence to confirm a significant increase over previous years of transfers out of Midland. We can expect a slight increase in June, but this is a normal result of the 3 to 4 month accumulation of moves created by families electing to wait until the school session is over. Business in our own firm right now does indicate that we are serving more sellers than buyers, but again, this is a normal situation, usually reversed by summer.

Second, although there were 1588 properties on the residential MLS market May 5th, this is exactly 7 more than 1985 and 45 less than in 1984!

Third, although property values may have depreciated slightly from October's stabilizing trend, I personally think we can anticipate a firmer summer market because of several good reasons: continued low interest rates, a decrease over/last year in new construction activity, the usual June-August influx of transferees, and a current increase in the number of sales to "first time" and "move up" buyers.

Joanne Langston

So please, when someone tells you that 20,000 families are being transferred out in June, that there are 16,000 homes for sale, or that the sky is green and purple polka dot, DON'T REPEAT IT, DON'T EVEN LISTEN TO IT! Ask for "just the facts, ma'am!"

HOME OWNER FORFEITS EQUITY

HOUSTON, TX (SPECIAL) It happens everyday. Americans work very hard to purchase their homes, many change their lifestyles,making sacrifices to meet their mortgage payments, hoping some day to cash in on the equity (nest egg) in their homes.

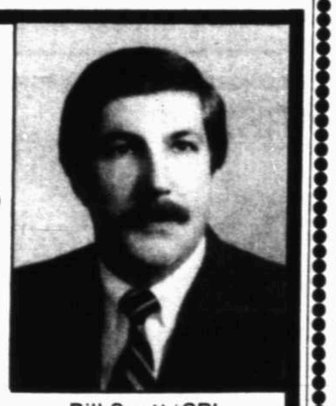

With todays bleak economy sellers will not let themselves be romanced out of their hard earned cash. They're retrenching, reviving a pioneering,"we can do it our selves"attitude.However, not knowing the ins-and-outs of real estate transactions, many sellers end up forfeiting large portions of their equity.

Buying and selling real estate is a hard ball game. Confidence, more than anything else, is what distinguishes the hard ball player from the rest. And, nothing fosters more confidence than knowledge.

Now owners can obtain: "How FIZZBOS Save Thousands of dollars in Commisions". FIZZBO is the pronunciation of an acronym FSBO (For Sale By Owner) used by real estate agents. This do-it-yourself '15 instruction manual details step-by-step; How to sell as quickly as possible; How to obtain the highest possible price; How to deal with mortgage lenders; and most importantly, it includes samples of the forms amd contracts to help you get TOP DOLLAR for your home without forfeiting any of your equity.

The decision is yours. The costly expense of trial and error... or... playing hard ball. Batter up! For information write to: Homestead Consultants 2211 Norfolk, Suite 700, Houston, Texas 77098.

Happy Mother's Day

Little things mean most to mom

Advertisers have a multitude of suggestions for the perfect Mother's Day gift. Their ads boast of items such as fragrances, lingerie, clothing, kitchen items, flowers and jewelry — but most moms seem to consider the gifts constructed with love by their children's tiny hands as a real "gem" of a gift.

Although most mothers do enjoy gifts purchased to honor them on their special day, all of a half-dozen Midland mothers interviewed, with children ranging from ages 1 to 32, agreed that their children's hand-made items mean the most. These cards, poems and "I.O.U.'s" their children have given them are the gifts their hearts will always treasure.

"The little things mean so much," said Lynne Ray, mother of three girls, ages 16, 15 and 14, and a son, age 10.

Some mothers reminisced of their children's creative gift endeavors while others were particularly fond of a diligent effort at a special purchase or school project.

THE MOTHER'S Day present Mrs. Ray recalled as special was her daughters' efforts to purchase jewelry for her as a gift.

"They went to a garage sale and bought some jewelry. It's big and gaudy, but I still have it," Mrs. Ray laughed.

"A hand-made card the girls made me," Ann Page said was her treasured gift. Mrs. Page is the mother of a 16- and a 14-year-old and the treasured gift was a Mother's Day card with a poem written by the girls when they were around 5- and 7-years-old. "I have it in a family album now," Mrs. Page said of her keepsake.

"Things they made by hand were always special," said Joanne Foster, mother of children ages 32, 29 and 26. "I still have a cigar box that is gold with macaroni all over it and 'Mother' written across the top. It makes me chuckle sometimes, but it's very special."

Leona Armentrout, mother of a son, 32, and a daughter, 25, said the little things her children made at school meant the most to her.

"As they got older, I enjoyed the little surprises and corsages," Mrs. Armentrout said, "But the most special thing is just that hug in the morning that says 'Mom, I love you!' "

A REPLICA of her son was Dala Fisher's fondest gift. She recalled, "Before we had our daughter (now 4 years old), my son laid down on a piece of brown paper, like a brown paper sack, and had someone trace his shape. Then he colored in his shirt and pants and made a picture of himself."

And "of course," she said, she still has the self-portrait.

Her son, now 9 years old, has also helped the Fishers acquire an "adopted family" of about 18 youngsters. He plays soccer for the Cheetahs, a city team of 12-year-olds and under. Mrs. Fisher serves as the team mother and her husband is the coach. For the past two years, Mrs. Fisher has spent her Mother's Day mothering the team members at out-of-town soccer tournaments and the team always remembers their "mom."

"The team gave me a musical card last year that they all signed and a necklace," Mrs. Fisher said. But her idea of a perfect Mother's Day this year has a little different twist.

"We are going to Lubbock for a soccer tournament and I want them to win it for me. They won a tournament on my birthday this year, but they've never won one on Mother's Day. Besides, Mother's Day is also the coach's birthday, so they have two good reasons to win," Mrs. Fisher said.

AMONG THE most common ideas the other mothers had for a perfect Mother's Day gift was the family being together.

"Sometimes you wish you could just close off the world for a day to be with your family," Mrs. Page said. "Of course you can't, but it would be nice."

"I wish everyone could be with their mothers on Mother's Day," Mrs. Ray said. "The most important thing to do is to be together and put all the trite stuff aside. I am lucky I have my family, my sister and my mom and dad here and we are going to take my mom out to eat."

Mrs. Armentrout agreed that being together was important. "This Mother's Day I would love to be with my kids or with my mother," Mrs. Armentrout said, but since being together is not always possible, she added, "We spend a lot of time telephone talking."

Jeannie Mayne, mother of two boys ages 3½ and 15 months, said her tots are young and haven't really caught on to the gift-giving idea of Mother's Day yet, but her ideal Mother's Day would be "being pampered all day."

"I would love it if the boys would be real nice and pick up all their toys," Mrs. Mayne said. "It would be real nice if they would take me to eat or fix dinner for me, which would really be more special. My 3-year-old loves to help in the kitchen. His favorite thing to make is biscuits or cut-out cookies and he gets flour everywhere," she said, adding that the home-cooked meal would be even nicer if a clean-up crew came with the package.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

As graduation nears, the party whirl quickens for seniors at both Midland and Lee High Schools.

Among the latest end-of-school festivities was a party given last weekend at the Cluster Apartments Clubhouse by 10 Midland High seniors, who have played football together through the years and who wanted one more fling before they graduate. The hosts were Brent Barton, Bart Brown, Chuck Dozier, Brian DuBose, Mack Harrison, Mike Keel, Jake Madrid, Steve Pruitt, Phillip Speight and Bobby Williams.

"Shipwrecked" was chosen as the party's theme. The clever invitations, which read "MHS Rescue '86," were hand delivered by the boys in empty wine bottles to carry out the theme.

Entertainment included swimming and dancing to music provided by DJs Steve Driscoll and Jon Austin.

Decorations featured hand lettered signs on rough-hewn boards designating the various party areas. The dance floor was dubbed "Native Dancers;" the DJs, "Ship's Orchestra," and the pool, "Midland Ocean." "Ports of Call" included a listing of various colleges and universities, and refreshments were served in the "Captain's Dining Room."

Other decorating touches included a rubber raft floating in the pool, life jackets, fish nets, shells, coconuts and pineapples. Balloons and candles in the school colors of purple and gold also were used throughout the party area.

From fresh fruit in a hollowed out watermelon made to resemble a sailboat to a huge cake decorated with boat and sailor, the abundant refreshments added to the shipwreck theme.

THREE MHS SENIORS, Melody McFadden, Mindy McAdams and Diane Schaefer, were honored with a brunch last Sunday noon at the home of Eloise (Mrs. Bill) Elgin.

Special guests were the girls' mothers, Mary (Mrs. Ron) McFadden and Faye McAdams, and Diane's sister, Angela (Mrs. DA) Harral of Fort Stockton. Diane is the daughter of former Midlanders Priscilla and Dave Schaefer of Houston.

Party decor featured the colors of the universities the girls plan to attend, orange and white for Melody's choice of UT-Austin and maroon and white for Mindy and Diane's future alma mater, Texas A&M. As favors, guests received personalized balloons, adorned with brightly colored streamers.

Melody also was honored with a skating party recently at Playland Skate Center. The hostesses were Monta Jo (Mrs. Ted) Johnson, Dorothy Perkins, Marian (Mrs. Charles) Reeder and Jane (Mrs. Bob) Ward.

A before-school breakfast was given in honor of Melody, Mary Carrasco and Marla Brusenhan. Marla's parents, Sue and Jim Brusenhan, hosted the party at their home.

Special guests were the other honorees' parents, Elidia and Manuel Carrasco and Mary and Ron McFadden. While Melody heads for UT, Mary and Marla will attend Texas Tech and Baylor, respectively.

LEE HIGH SENIOR Mitzi King, daughter of Rhonda and Jerry King, was feted with a May Day dinner at the home of Sharon (Mrs. Wilson) Heidelberg. Co-hosting the Mexican Fiesta were Mary Ellen (Mrs. Bentley) O'Quinn and Grace (Mrs. Walter) Osadchuk.

Special guests were Mitzi's mother and her sister, Sabra King. She plans to attend Cottey College in Nevada, Mo.

SUSAN LINDGREN and Juanice (Mrs. Lloyd) MacDonald recently honored two Midland High seniors with luncheons in Susan's home.

Erin Hotchkiss was the guest of honor at a baked potato luncheon. She is the daughter of Sharla and Bart Hotchkiss.

Sharon Graham was the honoree at a taco salad luncheon. Her grandmother, Velma Comer, was a special guest. Sharon is the daughter of Gerald Graham and the late Lou Ann Graham.

Both girls pay to attend Southwestern University at Georgetown.

MHS SENIOR Kaye Knox was honored with a brunch recently in the home of Pat (Mrs. Lloyd) Innerarity. Co-hostesses were Carol (Mrs. Pete) Crain and Linda (Mrs. Frank) Powell.

The honoree, who plans to attend UT-Austin, was presented with a Waterford desk pen from the hostesses. Among the 60 guests was Kaye's mother, Mary Alice (Mrs. Gordon) Knox.

LEE HIGH SENIOR Sandy Hood was entertained recently with a Texas Sesquicentennial alfresco dinner at the home of Mrs. Virginia Pickett.

Guests dined in a colorful red, white and blue setting on the patio, which was adorned with Texas flags, garlands, flowers and candles. Traditional Texas foods were served from a table decorated with an original arrangement of her own flowers by Louise (Mrs. A.D.) Berry, a friend of the honoree.

Guests included Sandy's mother, Elizabeth (Mrs. James D.) Hood, and her sister, Susie Hood.

FRANCES AND LARRY STAPP and daughters, Stacey and Brandy, recently entertained for two MHS seniors with separate Midnight Splash and Snack Parties at their home.

Paige Black, daughter of Sarilyn and Bill Black, was honored last weekend. Party decor featured purple and gold balloons floating in the pool and a balloon bouquet at the front entry. Among other refreshments, guests enjoyed making ice cream sundaes.

Paige, who is valedictorian of her class, plans to attend Texas A&M.

Courtaney Kyser was honored in late April. Hot dogs were grilled poolside, and the decor featured purple and gold balloons. Special guests were Courtaney's father, Don Kyser, and the Young Life sponsors.

Courtaney is planning to attend Angelo State University.

Moms find children most rewarding part of lives

Copley News Service

Today's moms have to be supermoms, whether they split their duties between office and home or devote all their time to motherhood. They're under pressure and had better be ready to handle it — because no matter whether a mother chooses the traditional homemaker or the working mother role, someone will criticize.

Some experts claim total motherhood no longer works, that it leaves the mother unfulfilled and frustrated and the child stifled.

Others contend that working mothers are abusing their children with a neglect that is the root for such problems as drug abuse, delinquency, suicide and other emotional dysfunctions among today's youth.

These accusations are guaranteed to fill any mother with concern that she's not doing the best thing possible for her child.

Still, no matter what mothering option is selected, most mothers find their children the most important and rewarding part of their lives.

"It's the most difficult role a woman can have, and it's sometimes thankless. But it's rewarding," said family sociologist Rose Somerville.

It also is "only one of the boxes of a woman's life," she said. "She also is a worker, a citizen, a student, a wife, because she has to be."

WOMEN WHO understand the complexity of today's world realize "they need more than one role. They must take education seriously. They must take an occupation seriously. They must take wifehood as well as motherhood seriously," Somerville said.

And that can lead to serious stress.

Mothers who juggle children, husband and career in a bid for having it all are sometimes downtrodden, always busy women who often feel guilty about a lack of time to devote to any one cause.

One working mother said it this way: "We have to make baby a part of our life, but not give up our life, and still get around the guilt of not being the classic all-giving mother."

Enid Blaylock, an educational psychology professor, however, said it's unrealistic to believe that a mother doesn't have to sacrifice her individuality, independence, freedom or career.

"Being a good mother requires some modification in all these areas," she said.

BUT THAT doesn't mean that any of these roles must be forsaken. A woman can fill a variety of roles and, indeed, may need to fill the roles to feel self-fulfilled.

But a woman doesn't have to tackle them all at the same time.

"Women have many years to pursue careers, engage in self-fulfilling endeavors and enjoy freedom and independence if they begin childbearing early," Blaylock said.

She believes that without the continuity provided by a loving, nurturing mother who stays at home during a child's first five years, that child can be plagued in adolescence by a slew of psychological problems growing out of insecurity and low self-esteem.

By age 5, a child is equipped physiologically and emotionally to cope without that maternal continuity, she said, and a mother can explore other avenues outside parenting.

"It matters very much if the mother is not the sole caretaker during her child's early formative years, from birth to 5 years," Blaylock said. "During the first six months, an infant forms a bond with its mother, an attachment that provides a sense of belonging, of continuity, of well-being.

"Maintaining this attachment is crucial to the development of a strong personal and family identity. ... No matter how loving the surrogate mother happens to be, she constitutes a disruption of this vital mother-child attachment."

Said Judy Todd, a psychology professor: "I've never seen a piece of evidence that substantiates a statement like that. In fact, there's a lot of evidence that children whose mothers go to work benefit in a lot of ways — they certainly learn independence quicker than most children, and they learn self-responsibility."

WHATEVER THE truth of this issue — if there is a truth — there's no avoiding the fact that the absentee father has been joined by the absentee mother as a high percentage of women enter the work force out of desire or economics or both.

Some people claim that the traditional mother role has been eliminated by fiscal necessity and changing social norms.

Women, even women who want to stay at home, no longer can because society won't allow it, Somerville said.

"We have to look at realities: The high divorce rate, high inflation. One sees that young women today have no choice, they probably will have to work," she said.

Blaylock, however, believes that financial security is confused with luxury because of commercial pressure to acquire material possessions.

"The idea that it doesn't matter who takes care of a young child as long as the caretaker is warm and loving was fabricated by the business world to encourage two-paycheck families, thus increasing earning power and better consumption," she said.

Blaylock acknowledged that some mothers actually need to work, but said they were only a minority.

Most psychologists today condemn neither the stay-at-home mother nor the working mother. Most take the middle-of-the-road stance that if a mother feels good about herself and what she's doing, the kids will adjust as long as they're well taken care of. Time will tell.

In the meantime, women will continue to be professionals, students, wives, mothers.

Whether motherhood is a woman's only job or whether she's juggling bottles with business, motherhood means sacrifice of some sort — a sacrifice of career, personal time or peace of mind.

No matter where they work, mothers take on a difficult role, one worthy of praise — and a special holiday.

Researchers trace Mom's Day origin

Copley News Service

Julia Ward Howe, author of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," is said by some researchers to have been the first to promote the idea of Mother's Day. She suggested during the Civil War that the Fourth of July be made a holiday devoted to peace by recognizing it as "Mother's Day." The idea was rejected.

Others trace the origin of the holiday to 1887 in Henderson, Ky., when a teacher, Mary Towels Sasseen, invited her pupils' mothers to attend a musical affair in their honor. It became an annual event.

Mother's Day history, traditions recalled

Copley News Service

Believe it or not, Mother's Day is not the brainchild of a greeting-card company or florist. It isn't the idea of a mother who was tired of being taken for granted.

"Thanks to the tireless, even obsessive labos of Anna Jarvis of West Virginia we honor all our mothers on the second Sunday in May, the anniversary of her own mother's death in 1905," according to American Heritage magazine.

While the holiday can be credited to Jarvis, the tradition of setting aside a day to honor mothers can be traced back as far as the days of ancient Greeks, who dedicated an annual festival to Rhea, the mother of Jupiter, Pluto and Neptune. Perhaps some vestige of this pagan celebration inspired early Christians to set aside the fourth Sunday of Lent to honor Christ's mother, Mary. On this day, also called "Mothering Sunday," the devout traditionally honored the Virgin Mary with gifts and flowers and in time became an opportunity to honor all mothers.

Despite this lengthy history, a day to honor mothers was not decared a U.S. holiday until 1914, after years of dedicated campaigning by Jarvis.

Jarvis was the eighth of 11 children born to Anne Reeves Jarvis, a Sunday school teacher at Andrews Methodist Church in Grafton, W.Va., who lectured adults and children on "Great Mothers of the World."

After her mother's death, Jarvis took this theme to heart. Determined to create a national day for honoring mothers, she campaigned for a number of years, enlisting the aid of sympathetic friends, politicians and clergymen. By 1907, she had arranged at the Grafton church a special service dedicated to mothers to mark the sacond anniversary of her mother's death.

Carnation becomes mom's day symbol

Copely News Service

Anna M. Jarvis, the originator of Mother's Day, purchased 500 carnations to be distributed at a 1907 church service that marked the second anniversary of her mother's death and honored all mothers.

Because of this gesture, white carnations became a symbol of Mother's Day. At first, only white flowers were worn on Mother's Day. Later, these came to symbolize dead mothers, while red carnations were worn for living mothers.

Mother's Day cards no longer just for moms

Copley News Service

To A Darling Mother For Mother's Day — Sorry to have to tell you, but the day does not belong exclusively to you.

When you open those sentimental messages from your daughters and sons, many other women — including some non-mothers — will be doing exactly the same thing.

On this Mother's Day there is a large group of females — relatives and non-relatives — who also will receive cards specifically addressed to them. These include:

To My Wife On Mothers's Day, To My Daughter, Niece, Aunt, Grandmother, Great-Grandmother, Granddaughter, Mother-In-Law, Step-Mother, Other-Mother, Like-A-Mother, Friend's Mother, Godmother and Mother-of-Someone Dear.

There also are cards for the mother-to-be and others designed to be sent from one mother to another. And as more women join the work force, baby-sitters and day-care providers are getting Mother's Day cards, too.

According to Rachael Bolton, a spokeswoman for Hallmark Cards, about 140 million Mother's Day cards will be given this year. That places it fourth on the card industry's best-seller list, behind Christmas, Valentine's Day and Easter. The greeting-card industry as a whole sells about 7 billion cards each year, Bolton said.

This year, Hallmark is offering more than 1,000 Mother's Day designs, she said.

Some are quite traditional looking, covered with flowers and home interior scenes, but still are new in the way the message is presented.

Cards are becoming more and more open, honest and straight-forward, perhaps because many card purchasers are '60s hippies turned Yuppies, Bolton said. These people are holding onto their desire to "tell it like it is," but at the same time have "taken on the traditional way of looking at things. It's tradition with a twist," she said.

Perhaps the greatest reflection of this twist is that, while messages still are quite complimentary, more cards are in prose and less in lengthy, rhymed verse.

And the messages are individualistic.

"We're finding that the card has to be just right or people won't buy it," Bolton said.

Psychologists say children's values become more like parents

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Remember when you were young and your mother kept giving you unwanted advice like, "Don't wear so much makeup, people will think you're cheap?" Or, "I'm only doing this for your own good. You'll thank me when you grow up."

And now that you are an adult, isn't there a niggling voice in the back of your mind that admits, sometimes grudgingly, that she was right?

Well, she was. And she wasn't.

Psychologists say it isn't so much that she was right — though her advice may have been sound — it's that you and your values are getting to be more like those of your parents.

"I'd like to say that the mother was perceptive but I think it's more that you have the same values and goals," said Dr. John Silver, clinical director of the Counseling Center of West Los Angeles.

So the next time you find yourself recalling mother's words or see your child shrugging off your advice, remember it's all part of growing up.

Trendy gadgets make fun gifts for busy moms

Copley News Service

Oh, the joys of having a trendy mother. Trendy items are fun to buy and wonderful to have, and this year selections are readily available for the office, home and adventure. So what's the roundup for a mom who definitely is up-to-the-minute?

Mom's home away from home, the office, probably could use a little personalization — matching desk accessories are a traditional gift for dad, but may be a new idea for mom. Blotters, appointment books and picture frames come in everything from padded chintz to rubberized latex and elegant leather. Leather folding cases for legal pads also can be elegant additions for the mother who attends many meetings.

Silver, rosewood or simple Plexiglas picture holders can frame family photos and give them a place of importance atop mom's desk. A potpourri of silver frames, combining traditional and modern looks, is the latest in desk-top fashion.

For the health-conscious mom, controlling her office environment not only is in vogue, but crucial. Gifts of personal desk fans, desk heaters, smoke eaters and air filters keep the air clean and at the right temperature to truly make her work space her own.

After a hard day at the office or chasing kids around the house, busy moms need homey pleasures to help them relax. A Jacuzzi attachment for the bath creates an instant spa. Or mom can plug in a VCR tape that about yoga, relaxation or an exercise routine for her fitness level.

IN FACT, videotapes may be the perfect gift this season. Aside from exercise programs, there are special tapes on cooking, starring such celebrities as Julia Child and famous San Francisco chefs, and other hobbies. Of course, you can buy mom her favorite movie. Imagine sending her "Casablanca" and a romantic dinner for two.

If not videotapes, consider audio cassettes. These are just right for the mother who drives long distances or is busy around the house but still has time to listen. Novels are a staple for this medium, but in addition, there are non-fiction tapes to be had that range in topic from job interview techniques to lectures on investment to inspirational talks by the likes of Joyce Brothers. Or, mom can learn the language of her choice from a taped set of lessons.

If mom has a personal computer, you might choose some new software that can handle recipes or household accounts. Or get her one of those Swedish chairs without a back for maximum comfort while sitting long hours at the terminal.

Later on, when it's time to relax, mom might love an adjustable bed. Ideal for TV viewing, reading or knitting in bed, these are available in single, queen or king models that can be adjusted separately.

Just for relaxation and the fun of it, a trendy mom deserves a present that takes her up and away from it all. How about a hot-air balloon trip, perhaps with champagne on board or a lunch in a lovely meadow at the end of the trip? Or a certificate for parachute lessons? If that's a bit too risky, offer her something more down-to-earth.

THERE ARE many wonderful classes available through a variety of sources — university extensions, junior colleges and private specialty schools. Classes in geology, pottery, hotel cooking, French gourmet cooking, scuba diving or languages are just a few that will keep mom up on the latest and ready for her next adventure.

Whether that adventure takes her into the hinterlands or just down to the nearest mall, one of the trendiest looks this spring is the safari look. Jackets, shorts and even dresses abound in all shades of khaki and beige and other earth tones. To finish off the look, crushable hats and good walking and hiking shoes or boots are basics for city and travel wear. And, if mom truly enjoys the outdoors, take the safari concept a bit further and offer her rain gear or a day pack for hiking or sailing.

When all the running around is over, a one-day makeover at a local beauty salon is a marvelous treat. A facial, new hairdo, manicure and pedicure, as well as a makeup consultation and color analysis, will have mom looking her best. Consider a one-hour lunchtime makeup consultation for the mother who is booked by the hour.

Or, if mom's simply too busy to leave the office, send her a telegram — regular, singing or giant-size — or a bouquet of balloons in her favorite color. These up-to-the-minute, quick-and-easy gifts tell the busy mom "I love you" in a language she can appreciate.

COOPER-MULDROW

Kerri Lynnette Cooper and John Muldrow, both of Midland, plan to be married at 2 p.m. June 7 in Parkies Baptist Church in Midland.

The bride-to-be is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James C. Cooper of Midland. The future bridegroom is the son of Robert Muldrow IV of Midland and Patsy Ann Muldrow of Hobart, Okla.

Lifestyle policies

The policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to run. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing on forms available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with bridal announcements, but are not required. Portraits of the either the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Quality reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Remarriages rising

Associated Press

The appeal of marriage is greater than ever, the old joke goes, so many people are doing it again. Though the joke may be rather weary, the point it makes is quite accurate. Remarriages today represent almost 30 percent of all marriages.

Perhaps as a result of the large number of remarriages, weddings in which one or both partners have been married before are becoming more elaborate. Whereas once a ceremony tended to be limited to immediate family, and the post-nuptial festivities occurred in a muted key, nowadays there are few, if any, restrictions. The remarrying bride may wear white; the ceremony and reception may be as large as the family wishes and can pay for; a second engagement may well be announced in the newspapers. Once, these actions were frowned upon, according to bridal authorities.

Instead of agonizing over whether or not the bride should wear white, current etiquette calls for concentrating on making guests comfortable and bringing feelings of pleasure to the members of the wedding party.

If, for example, the bride missed a big wedding with all the trimmings the first time, she can walk down the aisle in a formal dress, escorted by her father or a close family member or friend. If the bride or groom has children, they can be included in the ceremony as flower girls, ring bearers or pages. At a small ceremony, the children may stand with the couple or they might read a special poem or prayer, says Bride's Book of Etiquette.

Religious restrictions against second marriages have been eased in many faiths, but make an appointment to visit your clergyman after you have decided on the size and type of ceremony you'd like, Bride's suggests. If yours is reluctant to perform the ceremony you desire, ask other remarried friends for suggestions or call local churches.

Although the traditional form on invitations may be observed, it is also acceptable for the bride and groom to send their own announcement.

As a rule, the bride and groom may either split the cost of the wedding or one of the two may pay the entire cost. Often the couple divide the costs based on the finances of each. A typical division has the bride paying for her dress, the flowers and the cake, while the groom pays for the church, reception site and champagne.

One area in which remarriages have made a big difference is wedding dresses. According to Jackie McCord Leo, fashion and beauty editor of Modern Bride, not only is the remarrying bride older, she is also "out in the world. Often she and her husband are paying for the wedding themselves and they want to reflect their tastes."

As a result, manufacturers and retailers are making and showing a more varied selection of bridal outfits. Expect the same variety you might find in a store's evening department, Leo says.

Another area in which changes have been recorded is wedding gifts. Most remarriages are between individuals who already have been established in a household. As a result, those who administer bridal registries have expanded the variety of items for which a couple may register to include items such as luggage, new stereo equipment, even personal computers.

Tips to avoid tense first encounters

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Do you just drop by for coffee or agree to stay for dinner? Find out in advance what the parents are like or decide not to make a big deal about it? Dig out some conservative clothes or feel it is more honest to meet them in the punky stuff you normally wear?

Students and young adults bringing a steady boyfriend or girlfriend home for the first time face a real problem. Difficulties arise, psychologists and counselors say, because everyone has different expectations and everybody feels vulnerable.

"It can be a very tense encounter," said Ellen Galinsky, a faculty member at the Bank Street College of Education who has written extensively about parents and children.

The most comfortable introductions occur when some other activity is the focus. If an early, natural meeting is not possible, then "keep it short," said Madeline Hirschfeld, a psychologist in Lynbrook, N.Y., who specializes in the problems of adolescents and young adults. "Just stop in on the way to the movies or some other engagement," she said.

If the couple lives out of town, and this is not possible, it may help to make the friend part of a larger group. Introducing the friend to a sibling first can help reduce the friend's anxieties too.

Galinsky recommended that the couple arrange in advance to talk candidly about what happened after it is over to help alleviate tensions. At such a time it is important, she said, for the outsider to avoid insulting remarks.

'Thank you' notes important

By BARBARA MAYER
Associated Press

Saying thank you is as much a part of the wedding as shopping for the wedding dress. Done promptly and with love, it puts a fine "finis" on the event which has been called one of life's most satisfying experiences.

Brides are advised to take as their motto the old-fashioned homily to "start as you mean to go on." In other words, get started on the thank-yous as soon as the gifts begin arriving.

Some brides set up a system so they don't lose track of any gifts or donors. They may elect to use 3x5 cards, a ledger or a wedding planner book, but a simple notebook will also do quite well.

USING WHATEVER system you've decided upon, start by writing down the name and address of each guest couple or family and indicate as you learn of it whether they will attend the wedding and what gift they have sent. When the thank you note has been written, mark down the date you mail it.

That way you're unlikely to miss writing any notes and you'll also not have to telephone to find out if the guest has actually received a thank you note yet.

For super-organized individuals, it's a time saver to address an envelope when you first set up the system. Another way to be well-prepared is to order formal note paper suitable for thank yous at the same time you order wedding invitations.

It will come as no surprise to learn that it is expected that you will write a personal note of appreciation for every wedding gift you receive. The groom can help, especially for those individuals known only by him.

Etiquette books decree that that the note should be personal and mention the specific gift which has been given.

Another general rule of etiquette is that gifts that arrive before the wedding should be acknowledged within two weeks of their arrival. Those coming later should be acknowledged within a month after the honeymoon.

IF CHORES make it impossible to get to thank you notes, it is permissible to send printed cards to let your friends and family know their gift has been received and that you will follow up with a personal note.

A typical form suggested by Bride's magazine: "Miss Ann Marie Brown acknowledges with pleasure the receipt of your wedding gift and will take pleasure in writing a personal note at an early date."

The magazine also notes that the classic thank you note should be written in blue or black ink on a good grade of folded notepaper in ivory or white. Your name or monogram may be printed on the notepaper, but don't use your married name or initial until after the wedding.

A thank you note to a married couple is traditionally addressed to the wife with her husband referred to in the body of the note. Nowadays, however, you may address both without breaching the rules of etiquette.

If you have received money it is polite to to indicate how you plan to use it.

If a group gift has been given, perhaps from officemates, it is permissible to write one thank you note addressed to all in the group. Then you can thank the group's members individually when you see them.

If you are given a gift that you plan to return, however, mum's the word, according to Bride's. It's perfectly all right to return gifts you can't use as long as it can be done without asking the giver where the item was purchased.

Annoying habits 'lumps' in marriages

Hearst News Service

Irritating habits are the lumps in the mashed potatoes of marriage. But like mashed potatoes, a marriage just wouldn't be the real thing without a few lumps.

David and Connie have been married for 10 years. Like a lot of couples, it's the old "opposites attract"-type of relationship. Connie is compulsively neat. David is a state-of-the-art, leave-your-dirty-clothes-all-over-the-house slob.

David takes stuff out. Connie puts stuff back. Even when David puts stuff back, it often doesn't seem to work. Like the time he put an opened pack of hot dogs back in the refrigerator without wrapping them up properly and hot dog juice dripped onto a package of rolls. When Connie took out the bread the following morning, bingo! Hot dog juice meets clean white dress. "Davidddddd!!!!!!

"Nobody's going to say the reason they got a divorce was that their mate wouldn't put his dirty clothes in the hamper," says Louis Janda, psychologist and author of "How to Live with an Imperfect Person." "But I definitely believe that irritating habits, like being messy or being compulsively neat, can, over an extended period of time, eat away at the fabric of a relationship."

Of course, irritating habits are not alike. Not all have to do with neatness. Maggie gets bugged because Steve won't answer the phone and because he tends to be a bit shy at parties. An elderly woman is similarly bugged because her husband does Spanish dances at parties and uses his false teeth as castanets.

MANY OF these less-than-endearing habits are seemingly harmless, to be distinguished from out-and-out pathology, like drinking a quart of vodka each night. Impromptu Spanish dancing, on the other hand, doesn't usually send anyone anywhere, except up the wall.

In a marriage or a "committed relationship," irritating habits are psychological equivalent of Chinese water torture. Tiny drops of water (or hot dog juice) administered blip, blip, blip over an extended period of time eventually turn even the cool James Bond-type into a blithering, sputtering version of Donald Duck. Thirty years of finding clipped toenails on the bathroom floor can suddenly cause an otherwise sane person to snap.

The worst thing about a lot of these habits is that they are habits. Your partner does the same thing over and over and over again. There is something incredibly infuriating about knowing your partner is going to leave a string of used dental floss on the chest-of-drawers and then watching him do it.

The second worst thing about habits is that they're little; so little that a spouse usually doesn't even feel justified in discussing them.

"If you have a big difference of opinion, something like where the kids should go to school, then you feel that it's not trivial and you'll talk about it," says Janda. "But if it's just an irritating habit, the person will think, 'I'm being too small.' Still, if there are enough of those irritating things, people will feel angry and start to distance themselves."

WHILE A lot of people don't feel comfortable "discussing" a particular habit, many feel completely justified in screaming about it: "How COULD you leave that sweaty T-shirt in the middle of the living-room floor?" "You didn't put the butter away and the cat jumped on the counter and ate it AGAIN." "Thanks for leaving me with an empty tank of gas, AGAIN."

But screaming, as tacky as it seems, is not always such a bad idea.

"You've got to keep telling them about what they're doing and that it bothers you," says Robert Bramson, author of "Coping with Difficult People" and "The Stressless Home."

Typically, a criticized spouse will get angry, hurt, etc., and will deny the problem. He might even blame you for being too picky. Not to worry, says Bramson. Denial and blame are signs that your partner has already entered the "change process."

"Denial and blame are normal, natural responses," he explains. "They are a sign that the change is starting to take place. When that happens you've got to keep telling them about what they're doing and that it bothers you." On the other hand, change has not yet begun if a spouse responds to criticisms with indifference, says the author.

"People are always saying if he really loved me, he wouldn't be doing all these irritating things," Janda says. "What's important to realize is that people bring these irritating habits to the relationship. They've learned them over 20 to 25 years and they don't say anything about the relationship. If you take that perspective, it's less likely that you'll get angry or withdrawn, and that's going to make it easier to work out solutions."

"You're not going to change a total slob into a compulsively neat person," says Janda, "but you can learn to make some compromises."

Montana mom named 'Mother of the Year'

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A 72-year-old mother of 12 from Stevensville, Mont., was named National Mother of the Year at the annual meeting of American Mothers Inc.

"You know, I've said a mother really doesn't need any adulation — our children are our gifts," Martha Ann Burke said after she was chosen Sunday from among 50 contestants and presented with a bouquet of roses and a diamond ring.

Mrs. Burke and her husband, William, have been married 47 years. In addition to their 12 children, they have 20 grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

She worked as a nurse and teacher before she married and now writes a weekly column in her hometown newspaper.

Jane E. Oliver, 31, a Louisville, Colo., mother of two, was named Young Mother of the Year.

American Mothers Inc., a non-profit group based in New York, is dedicated to strengthening "the moral and spiritual foundations of the family and the home."

Contestants were judged on their influence on their children; their demonstration of love, understanding, compassion and courage; and their influence on their community, state and nation.

Booklet offered for newlyweds

United Press International

BASKING RIDGE, N.J. — Newlyweds setting up a first home may get some useful guidance from the "New Household Planner," a free 40-page booklet published for consumers by AT&T.

The booklet provides checklists and other step-by-step assistance with moving out, moving in and setting up the new place.

For room-by-room planning, there are special sections for listing room dimensions and making notes on comparison shopping for household items.

The booklet also offers advice on everything from name and address changes to budgeting.

All of this information is "based on the experience of others who have already been there ... newlyweds, new home owners, movers," according to AT&T representative Mary Sayre.

And, last but not least, there's a special section for telephone numbers of key people and services, including emergency contacts.

To order a copy of the "New Household Planner," call toll-free 1-800-CALL-ATT, ext. 189.

Overfeeding deadly to houseplants

By ED HUTCHISON
Hearst News Service

If your favorite African violet, philodendron or spider plant could talk to you, the message would likely be: Ease up on the food.

This message is universal among virtually all houseplants, for their world is confined to the container surrounding their roots. Unlike garden plants, this tiny world can accept only so much tender loving care.

Overwatering is the number one killer among houseplants. Overfeeding comes a close second. Insects, diseases and sunlight are way down on the list.

The guideline is simple: Feed a houseplant only when it is actively growing. This usually means March through November. During the other months, the plant reacts to lower light intensities by slowing its rate of growth; it's a built-in safety mechanism. When a plant "reads" that existing light cannot support photosynthesis — the process by which it makes sugar — it shifts into low gear and waits until conditions are more favorable.

Even houseplants grown under artificial light, where there's no such thing as a short day, benefit from a two- or three-month-long rest from fertilizer.

Overfeeding is deadly because it kills life-supporting roots. For the root system to take in water, it must pass through countless cell membranes. This can only happen when the osmotic pressure of the fluid already inside the root system is higher than that of the fluid it is attempting to absorb.

Fertilizers contain salts. These salts go into solution when the fertilizer is mixed with water or, in the case of pellets or granules, when water is added to the soil. Salt increase the osmotic pressure of the solution.

What happens to an overfed plant is that it cannot absorb the solution of water and fertilizer because the osmotic pressure outside is greater than that inside because of the build-up in fertilizer salts. Often, the imbalance is so great that water is drawn from the roots.

Backyard gardening popular occupation

NEW YORK (UPI) — Backyard gardening, which is growing in popularity, could well meet 50 percent of America's vegetable needs by the year 2000, says a gardening expert.

Herb Shiroff, president of the Mantis National Gardening Club in Huntington Valley, Pa., announced at a spring conference at New York's Tavern on the Green that 29 million backyard gardeners are currently cultivating an acre or less to grow vegetables for home consumption.

"The garden has captured American with a phenomenal magnetism," says Shiroff. "More people garden than drink champagne.... Gardening is more popular than golf, biking, tennis, swimming."

Shiroff cited a Gallup Poll survey of gardeners showing that most garden for high-quality fresh food, while others garden for fun and enjoyment, to be self-sufficient or to save money.

He also reported that a 20-foot by 30-foot garden can produce $1,000 or more worth of food annually after just a few years of intensive gardening methods.

Oddrey and Opal Nelson

50th anniversary to be celebrated

Oddrey and Opal Nelson of Midland will be honored with a 50th wedding anniversary reception 2:30-5:30 p.m. Saturday at Ranchland Hills Country Club's Mirror Room. Hosts will be Jan Nelson McElroy and Dr. Ed McElroy and Mark and Christy Nelson.

Nelson and the former Opal Ida Throgmorton were married May 15, 1936 in Bartlesville, Okla. They have two children, Mark Nelson of Midland and Jan Nelson McElroy of El Paso, as well as three grandchildren.

The couple has lived in Midland since 1948, after moving from Bartlesville. Nelson retired in 1974 from Reda Pump Co., where he was marketing manager. Mrs. Nelson is a registered nurse and was employed at Midland Memorial Hospital's Intensive Care Unit 1966-1975.

They are members of First Christian Church and Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Special charm in antique roses

Associated Press

Old garden roses have a special charm all their own. Nurtured by nature instead of commercial breeders, these surviving flowers of the past have delighted countless generations of gardeners with robust fragrances, subtle colors and delicate flower forms.

According to Country Home magazine, many of the antique roses that bloom in present-day country gardens have roots in the ancient gardens of Rome and Greece, the grandiose castle gardens of medieval Europe, the renowned French gardens of the Empress Josephine, and the modest dooryard gardens of early American settlers.

These garden ancestors are living proof that the enduring qualities of the past still flourish today. No other flower in history has enjoyed such timeless admiration as the rose.

Roses have symbolized love and beauty since the ancient Greeks ordained them "Queen of Flowers." In Greek mythology, the first rose bloomed when the goddess Aphrodite appeared from the sea. The Romans linked the rose with the goddess Venus. Grown throughout the empire, roses represented wealth and status.

Roman settlers took their valued roses with them to leave their mark as they expanded their reign into Europe. Often called the Adam of the rose family, the gallica (or French rose) is believed to be the rose from which the old European roses descended.

From Rosa gallica came R. damascena (damask rose), valued by the ancient Romans for its strong fragrance; R. damascena semperflorens (autumn damask), the rose first known to bloom twice a year; and R. alba (the White Rose of York), famous for the part it played later in England's War of the Roses.

A renewed interest in rose development during the Renaissance produced many new rose classes, including the cabbage rose (R. centifolia), and its sport, the moss rose (R. centifolia muscosa).

Like the ancient Greeks and Romans, early Christians revered the rose and used it as a symbol of their beliefs. The white rose, set apart from other roses for its purity of color and form, stood for the Virgin Mary. Roman Catholics call the string of beads they use to count prayers the "Rosary" because the original beads were carved in the shape of roses.

For two 15th-century English families, the rose became symbol of thorny hatred. Called the War of the Roses, this 30-year feud involved the House of Lancaster and the House of York, each having a rose as its emblem. Battles were fought between the troops under the Red Rose of Lancaster (R. gallica officinalis) and the armies of the White Rose of York (R. alba). A bouquet of roses, given as a peace offering, ended the war.

From time immemorial roses have been the flower of romance. English folklore says that when a young girl wears a rose near her heart, the first man to pluck it will be her true love.

ASK DR. RUTH

Relationship's development arrested

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Q. I am 20, she is 25. I can think of nothing else but her. My life is falling apart. When I told her how I love her, she said she never wanted to see me again. I went to her house to demand an explanation and she had me arrested for harassment. Don't women say they like a man who can express his feelings?

A. Some do, some have them arrested. You don't say how you expressed your feelings, but you see how she showed hers. The next woman you love may behave very differently, but I suggest letting the next relationship grow nice and slowly. Do drop this one and stay out of jail.

Don't rush to show how you feel so suddenly and alarmingly. Don't "demand." Give the next woman a week or so at least to see that you can show patience, gentleness, good sense. And listen to what she has to say. Don't make her call the cops to put it across.

Q. We have been involved intimately for a year and a half. He wants to marry me, I want to coast. I am 10 years older than he is and I've never told him. I'd have to tell him before saying yes, wouldn't I?

A. Yes, yes. And you have to decide whether you really prefer to coast or to marry him. I hear that he wants to marry you. Does anybody want to marry him. Like you?

Meanwhile, as you ponder that, you probably should take him by the hand and say, "I love it that you want to marry me. But I think we should go on having the happy time we are enjoying now, because it is precious. And before we marry we have to think about something that may be a big issue 10 or 20 years from now. We are not the same age. You do know that, but you don't know what the difference is.

"And you may want to burst out saying, 'It makes no difference,' but we have to let our thoughts and feelings about that age a little, too. I don't want you ever to look at me and think, 'You were older than I was. You should have known better than to agree to this marriage.' "

That would be graceful, loving, fair and wise. Also it may give you a little edge. Because some time later on he will ask, "How old are you?" You'll tell him, and he may think, "Is that all?" Worth a try, no?

Q. I have always loved this man from a distance. I dream about making love with him. Yesterday I told him my feelings and he said he was married. I am so heartbroken I am thinking of killing myself. What should I do?

A. Tell all your troubles to a friend, the kind who makes tea for you and listens while you pour your heart out and cry. This person may have some advice, but the main thing is for you to express your anguish to another person and be listened to — an old friend, a new friend, a nice aunt, your roommate or adviser, a person at your synagogue or church.

It may seem overdoing it to consider a professional counselor when perhaps all you need is to take down your hair, have a good cry, etc. With an acquaintance. But you may be isolated from the usual contacts with people if you are on a new campus or in a town where you know nobody. It may be more logical to talk to a spiritual guide or professional counselor than to an unqualified stranger.

And sometimes your nonprofessional listener senses a problem beyond his or her capacity and will suggest that you "see somebody." Maybe you have more outpouring than a nonprofessional can deal with. Perhaps your talk of suicide sounds ominous, more than an outburst of dramatic language. If your nice listener suggests a counselor, don't rule the idea out.

Q. You often use the expression "having sex." Why don't you use the correct word, "intercourse"? We always have sex, from birth onward.

A. OK. Instead of saying, "Don't smoke while having sex," I'll say, "Don't smoke while you intercourse." OK? Seriously, "having sex" is colloquial for having sex. Nearly everyone understands it. Few of my readers are such purists as you or they couldn't stand me. They let me say "have sex" instead of long expressions like "engage in unspecified sexual activity."

It's true that we do have sex from birth, and even before. And we have sexuality, meaning both gender and sexual physiology and reactions. But it has been many generations since "sex" meant "gender" and was used for nothing else.

I should point out that "having sex" includes more kinds of activity than "having intercourse." But I won't.

Cigarettes linked to atherosclerosis

United Press International

Cigarette smoking is believed to contribute to development of atherosclerosis, or clogging of arteries to the heart, but scientists aren't sure how.

Cornell University Medical College researchers have found a clue. They report two ingredients of tobacco smoke bind to smooth muscle of arteries. One ingredient, glycoprotein, increases reproduction of smooth muscle cells. Such proliferation is a key event in development of atherosclerosis.

The research, conducted on cattle arteries, also showed that smooth muscle cells contain binding sites that specifically allow for attachment of smoke molecules.

Atherosclerosis is a major cause of heart attacks, which will claim the lives of more than 230,000 cigarette smokers this year.

At Sylvan we help children perform remarkable acts of courage.

Sylvan understands how tough it can be for a child who's falling behind in school. And how good it can feel when failure turns into success.

This summer, we can help your child develop the self-confidence—and the courage—to do better in school next fall. In fact, we guarantee it.

Sylvan's proven approach to learning has already helped thousands of children. In a stress-free environment of positive encouragement and personal attention we guarantee your child's reading or math skills will improve by at least one full grade level in just 36 instruction hours. Or we will provide up to 12 additional hours at no further cost.

Our expanded Summer Program gives your child the perfect opportunity to catch up on crucial math or reading basics. So that, come September, you'll see a remarkable improvement in your child's performance. We guarantee it.

Measurement will be based on a nationally recognized achievement test for improvement in either reading (comprehension or vocabulary) or math (computation or application).

THE SUBJECT IS ROSES

Miniature Roses small but sturdy

By JOY BUTTS

When we talk of roses we usually mean Hybrid Teas, Grandifloras, Floribundas, Climbers or even Tree Roses.

However, there is another type of rose with all the same characteristics as those roses, except in perfect diminutive scale and proportion. They are true Miniature Roses.

Miniature Roses require the same things their larger cousins do — four hours to all day of direct sunshine, excellent drainage in their bed, and a good friable growing medium.

They are definitely ROSES, and they should never be considered "house plants." Although they can be successfully grown indoors, they grow much healthier, and happier, outside.

Most growers ship Miniature Roses in small pots, with their foliage already growing. They may be planted safely in our area between mid-March and mid-September. And, they are very quick and easy to plant with simply a hand trowel.

Because Miniature Roses grow on their own roots, not grafted as the bigger roses are, they are frequently more hardy.

They can also be grown more successfully in borderline situations, such as a little less sun than ideal, and always in smaller spaces.

The average Miniature Rosebush will range in size between 12-24 inches tall and usually not over 12-14 inches wide. Generally 12-inch heights and about 10-inch widths are most common. The Micro Miniatures will be from 4-8 inches tall and usually very tiny, compact bushes. Most Miniatures will need about an 8-inch square.

MINIATURE CLIMBING Roses will grow canes between 3-8 feet long. Not all Miniature Climbers must be trained to a trellis.

Shorter varieties may be allowed to spread like a ground cover, others may relax against an old stump, over a mound of rocks or in any number of other creative situations.

A Rock Garden is an interesting way to use Miniature Roses. They love having their own private little pocket to grow in. Just select the appropriate variety for the available space, install the proper growing medium in a sufficient amount, stand back and watch them show off.

Miniature Roses love a good acid growing medium, very loose in construction to provide maximum drainage. A combination of one-half good topsoil, one-fourth ground Canadian peat moss and one-fourth ground pine bark (organic humus) makes a very good medium for them. In addition, to further ensure excellent drainage, the planting bed should be raised 6-12 inches above ground level.

If planting in "pockets" or in pots, the space to be used should accommodate at least four gallons of growing medium per bush.

For pots, a mixture of one part each of topsoil, ground Canadian peat moss, ground pine bark and perlite is a good Miniature Rose medium. Always place 1½-3 inches of gravel in the bottom of the pot or barrel and make certain there are abundant drain holes in the bottom, and perhaps sides. Never pot a Miniature Rose in a container with no drain holes.

MINIATURE ROSES thrive in their own special bed or they may be planted as a border at the front edge of the big rose bed, as long as a minimum of 18- to 24-inches of space lies between the bud union of the big rosebush and the Miniature.

Great care must be taken not to get the fertilizer for big roses directly on the Minatures. Overfeeding with a fertilizer too strong for their tiny systems will kill Miniature Roses very quickly.

Allowing the roots to become too dry is another rapid way they can lose their lives. Otherwise they are easier to grow than big roses.

After planting your Miniature Rosebushes, mulch about 2-3 inches deep with ground pine bark or similar material, and keep moist. When the bushes have been in the ground six to eight weeks, abundantly water the bed, then feed a half cup per bush (all of their first season) a mixture of one teaspoonful of food to one gallon of water. (A suggested fertilizer is Green Light Super Bloom with chelated iron, 12-55-6.) Water well right after feeding.

Feed this very weak solution (and please do not make it any stronger) every four weeks, with the last feeding about September 15th. During the second season and afterward, larger bushes may be fed one full cup of the same food formula, with the smaller bushes still fed at a half cup per feeding.

Miniatures may be sprayed along with the big roses using the same strength insecticides. They can have any of the insects or fungus diseases any other roses may have, but no more than the larger varieties.

Miniature Roses do not produce "sucker" growth. Any new shoots appearing from the bottom will bear the same blooms as the original plant.

When the plants are 3- to 5-years-old and have grown too large, they may be dug up and divided while they are completely dormant.

ANYWHERE SOMETHING interesting or special is needed can be a good place for a Miniature Rose planting. Patio pots, hanging baskets, old tree stumps or logs, window boxes, whiskey barrels, wherever you have enough sun, they will grow. Condo and apartment dwellers can grow Miniature Roses, if no other type, and some people call them their "Pet Roses."

If Miniature Roses are not found in your locale, or if the varieties you wish are not available, send your name and complete address to P.O. Box 5464, Midland, Texas, 79704. You will receive a free Miniature Rose catalog.

Next month: Insect Control and readers' questions answered.

DEAR ROSIE wishes to thank the female readers for their response to last month's column. We have given 1987 Hybrid Tea Roses to Janet Scott of Gardendale, and to Liv Hill, a 10-year-old Burnet Elementary student from Midland. Thank you ladies, and good luck.

Did you give your mothers a rose today — or did you get one for Mother's Day? We want to give a 1987 Hybrid Tea and two Miniature Roses to the first three responses to this column. Send your name, address, phone number, and perhaps your mother's name, to P.O. Box 5464, Midland, Texas, 79704. After Sunday dinner, if possible, take your mother to visit the Midland Rose Garden at 1501 West Texas Avenue. Happy Mother's Day.

Joy Butts is an American Rose Society Consulting Rosarian and Accredited Rose Judge and past-president of the Midland Rose Society.

Summer lawn care begins in spring

NEW YORK (UPI) — For a lush, green lawn all summer, start a step-by-step lawn rejuvenation program this spring, advises Dr. Ellen Henke, a botanist with the lawn fertilizer division of Greensweep products.

Starting with a dry lawn (walking on wet grass can damage the root system), remove any sticks or other debris that may have accumulated over the winter. Next comes a good raking, which Henke compares to "a good massage — it gets the circulation going."

Lawns should be fertilized at least twice a year, and the first feeding should be done in mid to late spring. For best results, use a balanced fertilizer that contains nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium.

Proper watering is a must. The most common problems, says Henke, are insufficient and uneven watering. One inch of water once a week during the mowing season should be enough to keep your lawn healthy. As a guide, place a few empty cans around the lawn when you water and check to see when the level of water reaches an inch.

Herbicides and pesticides are most effective when used according to manufacturer's directions, she notes. Herbicides should be applied when weeds are actively growing and when daytime temperatures range between 60 and 83 degrees Fahrenheit.

The lava lamp: kinetic sculpture or kitsch? Black velvet paintings: fascinating texture or just tacky?

In a search for the answer to the eternal question of "What is art?" the Reporter-Telegram asked a few local art experts their opinions of such pop art phenomena as lava lamps and black velvet.

The recent Sixties Revival in music, fashion and design has brought sales of lava lamps — those psychedelic symbols of the 1960s — bubbling back up.

"We've been blessed with some very good sales in the last two years," said Howard Rosenberg, national sales manager of Creator's Lamp Corp., home of the Lava Lite.

At the same time, black velvet paintings — long a staple [illegible] border markets — have also received some [illegible]ist attention. Last November, Texas Mon[illegible]ted a multi-page spread to what it c[illegible]th century's most commer-

[illegible]ssioned five artists — Matt Mahurin, Lane — to do black velvet [illegible]ce titled "The Neo

[illegible], chairman [illegible]llege, when

[illegible]d was in [illegible]mmer- [illegible]ecided [illegible]ality and value. A lava lamp, in my definition, would fall short.

"I've never seen anything on black velvet — including Marilyn Monroe, Elvis or the crucified Jesus with a tear in his eye — that had an enduring quality.

However, "A work of art is in the eye of the beholder," he said.

Stewart once was involved with a graduate-level philosophy course in which the students spent the better part of a year trying to define "art."

"They never could," he said.

"I think we can be pleased and entertained by something other than a work of art. I like to watch a lava lamp," Stewart said.

"I've never seen the time or the place for black velvet." After a moment's pause, he chuckled and added, "I take part of that back, the place seems to be Acuna."

Sue Devine of the Museum of the Southwest, did see a definite time for these offbeat objets d'art.

"I think they're a cultural expression of the times, like the '60s with the lava lamp," she said. "I wouldn't call that 'fine art,' but I might consider it 'folk art.'

"Let's say that they aren't going to be written about in art history books in 50 years."

ON THE one hand, Ms. Devine did confess to a liking for the oddly lovable lava lamps.

"I think they're wonderful. I love the '60s revival stuff."

On the other hand, "I wouldn't want a black velvet painting hanging in my home, but I know some artists who have said they might like to try the material.

"I wouldn't say that the black velvet paintings you see around here have any intrinsic, artistic quality," she said. "However, there have been some well-known artists who have used black velvet, basically as a kind of pun, but taking it to a higher level."

"I'd put it into the same level as the gauche things painted on the side of vans," said Warren Taylor of the Midland College's fine art division.

"When it comes to music everybody is able to say that there's 'classical' music, that there's 'popular' music and there's 'country-western,' " he said. "What we're talking about here is 'popular' art.

"I don't think the Museum of Modern Art has one in its collection," he said of the lava lamp. The MOMA's collection does include such uncoventional art objects as exceptionally well-designed automobiles and watches.

"I doubt if Jackie O has one in her house," he added.

TAYLOR ATTRIBUTED much of the lava lamp's popularity simply to the fact that the molten wax 'lava' moves and lava light afficiandoes can "mindlessly watch motion."

"Isn't that the way we think of the early '60s, as rather mindless?" he said.

"Actually, I don't feel that way about the '60s," he added. Even though the word "schlock" kept popping up in his discussion of lava lamps, Taylor also said he didn't feel they were actually terrible either.

"I don't want to be judgmental on something like that. I'm not going to say that having it in one's home is the epitome of bad taste," he explained. "I wouldn't have one in my own home because I have two cats and if I just wanted to watch something move, I'd watch the cats."

Taylor admits that "maybe it was part of the beginning of what we now call kinetic art," but "however you slice it up, an egg is an egg and a lava lamp is a lava lamp."

Next month: Insect Control and readers' questions answered.

DEAR ROSIE wishes to thank the female readers for their response to last month's column. We have given 1987 Hybrid Tea Roses to Janet Scott of Gardendale, and to Liv Hill, a 10-year-old Burnet Elementary student from Midland. Thank you ladies, and good luck.

Did you give your mothers a rose today — or did you get one for Mother's Day? We want to give a 1987 Hybrid Tea and two Miniature Roses to the first three responses to this column. Send your name, address, phone number, and perhaps your mother's name, to P.O. Box 5464, Midland, Texas, 79704. After Sunday dinner, if possible, take your mother to visit the Midland Rose Garden at 1501 West Texas Avenue. Happy Mother's Day.

Summer lawn care begins in spring

NEW YORK (UPI — For a lush, green lawn all summer, start a step-by-step lawn rejuvenation program this spring, advises Dr. Ellen Henke, a botanist with the lawn fertilizer division of Greensweep products.

Starting with a dry lawn (walking on wet grass can damage the root system), remove any sticks or other debris that may have accumulated over the winter. Next comes a good raking, which Henke compares to "a good massage — it gets the circulation going."

Lawns should be fertilized at least twice a year, and the first feeding should be done in mid to late spring. For best results, use a balanced fertilizer that contains nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium.

Proper watering is a must. The most common problems, says Henke, are insufficient and uneven watering. One inch of water once a week during the mowing season should be enough to keep your lawn healthy. As a guide, place a few empty cans around the lawn when you water and check to see when the level of water reaches an inch.

Herbicides and pesticides are most effective when used according to manufacturer's directions, she notes. Herbicides should be applied when weeds are actively growing and when daytime temperatures range between 60 and 83 degrees Fahrenheit.

The lava lamp: kinetic sculpture or kitsch? Black velvet paintings: fascinating texture or just tacky?

In a search for the answer to the eternal question of "What is art?" the Reporter-Telegram asked a few local art experts their opinions of such pop art phenomena as lava lamps and black velvet.

The recent Sixties Revival in music, fashion and design has brought sales of lava lamps — those psychedelic symbols of the 1960s — bubbling back up.

"We've been blessed with some very good sales in the last two years," said Howard Rosenberg, national sales manager of Creator's Lamp Corp., home of the Lava Lite.

At the same time, black velvet paintings — long a staple of tacky border markets — have also received some revisionist attention. Last November, Texas Monthly devoted a multi-page spread to what it called "one of the twentieth century's most commercially successful art forms."

The magazine even commissioned five artists — Marshall Arisman, Jose Cruz, Matt Mahurin, Lane Smith and Thomas Woodruff — to do black velvet paintings for a tongue-in-cheek piece titled "The Neo Black Velvetists."

New York artist Julian Schnabel, has also been using the black fabric for some of his artwork.

Yes, but can these things really be considered "art?"

"OH, GOSH," said Charles A. Stewart, chairman of the division of fine arts at Midland College, when the question was posed to him.

Stewart noted that much of his background was in commercial art "and, mercy, that stuff's commercial." After considering the issue, though, he decided lava lamps and their ilk fell short of art.

"Well, a work of art must have an enduring quality and value. A lava lamp, in my definition, would fall short.

"I've never seen anything on black velvet — including Marilyn Monroe, Elvis or the crucified Jesus with a tear in his eye — that had an enduring quality.

However, "A work of art is in the eye of the beholder," he said.

Stewart once was involved with a graduate-level philosophy course in which the students spent the better part of a year trying to define "art."

"They never could," he said.

"I think we can be pleased and entertained by something other than a work of art. I like to watch a lava lamp," Stewart said.

"I've never seen the time or the place for black velvet." After a moment's pause, he chuckled and added, "I take part of that back, the place seems to be Acuna."

Sue Devine of the Museum of the Southwest, did see a definite time for these offbeat objets d'art.

"I think they're a cultural expression of the times, like the '60s with the lava lamp," she said. "I wouldn't call that 'fine art,' but I might consider it 'folk art.'

"Let's say that they aren't going to be written about in art history books in 50 years."

ON THE one hand, Ms. Devine did confess to a liking for the oddly lovable lava lamps.

"I think they're wonderful. I love the '60s revival stuff."

On the other hand, "I wouldn't want a black velvet painting hanging in my home, but I know some artists who have said they might like to try the material.

"I wouldn't say that the black velvet paintings you see around here have any intrinsic, artistic quality," she said. "However, there have been some well-known artists who have used black velvet, basically as a kind of pun, but taking it to a higher level."

"I'd put it into the same level as the gauche things painted on the side of vans," said Warren Taylor of the Midland College's fine art division.

"When it comes to music everybody is able to say that there's 'classical' music, that there's 'popular' music and there's 'country-western,' " he said. "What we're talking about here is 'popular' art.

"I don't think the Museum of Modern Art has one in its collection," he said of the lava lamp. The MOMA's collection does include such uncoventional art objects as exceptionally well-designed automobiles and watches.

"I doubt if Jackie O has one in her house," he added.

TAYLOR ATTRIBUTED much of the lava lamp's popularity simply to the fact that the molten wax 'lava' moves and lava light afficiandoes can "mindlessly watch motion."

"Isn't that the way we think of the early '60s, as rather mindless?" he said.

"Actually, I don't feel that way about the '60s," he added. Even though the word "schlock" kept popping up in his discussion of lava lamps, Taylor also said he didn't feel they were actually terrible either.

"I don't want to be judgmental on something like that. I'm not going to say that having it in one's home is the epitome of bad taste," he explained. "I wouldn't have one in my own home because I have two cats and if I just wanted to watch something move, I'd watch the cats."

Taylor admits that "maybe it was part of the beginning of what we now call kinetic art," but "however you slice it up, an egg is an egg and a lava lamp is a lava lamp."

Lava Lite floats past 20th anniversary

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — There were no parades, no letters from the president, no commemorative stamps, no promises from the Smithsonian. But last year was the 20th anniversary of pop technology's bubbling, befuddling masterpiece: the lava lamp.

In an age of sit-ins, love-ins and interpersonal encounters, it was full of strangeness-achieving, meaningful interaction. Then, like headbands, hip huggers and hippies, the light went out.

Now, in its 20s, it appears ready to bounce back on the scene. Check these vital signs:

■ Jack Mundy, president of Lava-Simplex Internationale, manufacturer of the Lava Lite, reports sales up 40 percent in 1984, and up another 35 percent in 1985.

■ Lava lamps are available in various metropolitan areas, at stores including Service Merchandise, Evans and Best distributors.

■ On chic Melrose Avenue in Los Angeles, The Soap Plant boutique has displayed the gelatinous jewels in the window. Their presence gives the glow-ahead to anyone who ever hoped to own a lava lamp but feared they lacked cachet. The store's Heidi Weeks reports that "they are selling really quickly. Adults say, 'Oh, wow! I remember these,' and kids say, 'OOOH WO-OW, these are wild!' "

■ Darryn Cray, road manager of Zuma II, a California band formed by two members of Oingo Boingo, maintained "about a dozen" lava lamps on stage for what Cray describes as very "techno-futuristic" performances. Once, after their truck broke down en route to San Diego, the band played sans lamps, and as Cray recalls, "people in the audience were yelling, 'Where are the lava lamps?' "

All this could well send lava fans stampeding to the attic to retrieve their lamps. (While not all garrets, of course, have lava lamps, Mundy estimates more than 2.5 million were sold in the United States. They must be somewhere.)

For those who never knew them — or perhaps blanked out the memory — lava lamps are glass cylinders filled with two indeterminate substances, one sort of liquid, one sort of solid. When the light is turned on, the solid substance glows, melts, splits, bubbles and bumps. That's all.

"We are celebrating a product which is of no real use. ... You can't read by its light," explains Bill O'Leary, president of a Washington lava-lamp club. But he thinks it is "just the thing for apartment dwellers who long for the cheery glow of a fireplace."

An official at the American Institute of Architects says the lamp's "kinetic sculptural elements constitute an intriguing relief from hard-edged rectilinearity."

An early '70s TV commercial put it another way, hyping the lava lamp as having "a motion for every emotion."

Mundy first saw the light as a student at Marquette University. "There was a store right on the edge of campus, and it had them going in the window 24 hours a day," he recalled. "So you're coming home from a bar at 3 or 4 in the morning, and you see these crazy things, so you can't help but stop and watch ... " he said. "And who ever would have thought ...?"

He had been working for the railroad when his father-in-law, Lawrence Haggerty, purchased Lava-Simplex in 1976 and persuaded Mundy to take over.

Chicago resident Adolf Wertheimer had founded the company in 1965 after seeing the lava lamp — then called an "Astrolight" — at a home-furnishings show in West Germany and arranging for its American distribution with the English inventor, Craven Walker.

Mundy recognizes strong emotional attachment to the product in some people. "There are a few who are always interested in what we're doing, especially new items," Mundy said. "And I know these people already have 15 or 20 in their homes."

Not everyone has shown such steadfast devotion to the motion for every emotion. Lava Lite sales hit bedrock bottom in the early '80s but since then have risen again. "It's really nothing we did," Mundy said of the resurgent interest. "It's just the fickle finger of fate."

Though the lamp's oily undulations suggest a life form evolving out of Dippity-do, William Bailey, professor of chemistry at the University of Maryland, gives a more plausible explanation of its function.

The light bulb beneath heats the "lava" enough for it to lessen in density and rise to the top of the liquid. When it cools, it becomes heavy again and sinks. According to Bailey, the viscosity of the lava determines whether you have "one big glob or lots of little globs."

The phlegmatic character of some older lamps concerns Jim Mannarino of the Washington Design Center. He suggests buying an electric timer. "Set it to go on an hour before you get home from work. The lava lamp will be able to give its soothing, simple peace as you come in the door."

Lava lamp family oozes its way to film stardom

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Editor

One major indication of the way lava lamps are oozing back into American consciousness is the frequency with which they're making cameo appearances in movies.

Among the recent films in which the lamps had supporting roles are:

■ "After Hours." The set designer for the new Martin Scorsese film, Jeffrey Townsend, was quoted in the Washington Post as saying everyone putting together the scene that includes a lava lamp "knew it had to be there without its being mentioned." The lamp sat in the apartment of a beehive-hairdoed, miniskirt-clad Terri Garr.

■ "Pretty in Pink." Director John Hughes used his lava lamp the same way Townsend did in "After Hours," to show that one of his movie's characters was still stranded in the '60s.

■ "Troll." This low-budget horror comedy featured Sonny Bono as a bachelor who was such a cool kind of guy that his swinging pad was furnished with not one, but two lava lamps.

■ "Jo Jo Dancer, Your Life Is Calling." A lava lamp had a slightly more sinister glow in this new Richard Pryor movie. Pryor walks in on his wife when she is committing adultery by the light of a lava lamp.

■ A few other not-so-recent movies featuring the illuminated lava included "Coming Home," "Superman II" and "Grandview USA."

Film fame has also spread to other members of the lava lamp family. The Lava Lite's cousin, The Wave, was also swept to renewed popularity after it appeared prominently in 1981's chic and critically-acclaimed French film, "Diva."

Simplex Internationale's line of decorator items, it actually belongs to an entire offbeat bunch of products, including The Wave.

Besides the Lava Lite, Lava-Simplex Internationale (part of Creator's Lamp Corp.) makes:

■ The Gemlite (a vertical tube of floating glitter swirled around by the heat of a light bulb; very disco '70s-looking),

■ The Wave (a horizontal tube with blue fluid forming rolling waves) and

■ Perhaps strangest of all, the Shower-Lite (a vertical lamp with droplets of mineral oil trickling down thin lines between its top and base to simulate rain).

In a burst of patriotism, the firm is even offering a special new model of the Shower-Lite called "Lady in the Rain."

The lamp — which is available as either a swag or table model in two different sizes and is priced from ~~$99~~-$219 — features a figurine of the Statute of Liberty with mineral oil dripping down all around her.

The lamps seems like a strangely appropriate tribute to the nation that made a nonconformist immigrant from Europe — the lava lamp — a success.

More than one way to light lava

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Editor

Although the original Lava Lite — what its manufacturer calls the Century Series 100 model — is certainly the best-known and most commonly seen of the lava lights, there are three other versions of the luminous lamps also available.

A brochure for the products proclaims that the Lava Lights are "Brilliantly Styled and Color Keyed to Complement Any Decor" (in fact, most come in two color combinations, red wax in yellow fluid or white wax in blue fluid), "Unlimited Decorative Possibilities," "Perfect for Every Room, Office and Commercial Establishment" and, of course, "Always the Ideal Gift."

Two of the other models — the Aristocrat and the Enchantress Lava Lites — closely resemble the Century Series 100 but have slightly differing sizes and proportions.

The truly different model is apparently designed for persons who don't want their lava lamp to clash with a Colonial-style decor. The Coach Light Series 6000 model is described by its manufacturer as an "authentic reproduction of Old English Coach Light of an earlier era."

This ye merry Olde English lava lamp looks like the result of a time warp between 1968 Haight-Ashbury and Victorian-era London.

GAME RULES:

The Midland Reporter-Telegram, A.M. 1510 KMND Memory Music T.V. Game is based on skill in identifying (6) T.V. show theme songs each week. There will be 12 weekly games beginning Monday, April 7th and ending Friday, June 27th. There will be weekly 1st, 2nd, and 3rd place winners.

Two excerpts from each of the (6) T.V. show theme songs will be broadcast over A.M. 1510 KMND each week. Excerpts will be broadcast at least six, times daily between 6:00 AM and 6:00 PM Monday through Friday. Each show's two excerpts will be broadcast at least twice during the week, with both excerpts from each theme (12 total) being broadcast at least once by 6:00 PM Thursday of each week.

Excerpts will be numbered one through six. The answer (the title of the show) must be printed or typed on the correspondingly numbered line on the official Midland Reporter-Telegram A.M. 1510 KMND Memory Music TV Game Entry Form. Each week's official entry form will be published Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Hand drawn facsimilies of the entire entry form will be acceptable, BUT MACHINE DUPLICATED COPIES ARE PROHIBITED.

CONTESTANTS MAY ENTER ONLY ONCE PER WEEK. The weekly game number must be marked on the lower left of the envelope on the address side. Envelopes must be postmarked by midnight Friday of each week. NO POSTAGE MACHINE CANCELLED ENVELOPES WILL BE ACCEPTED. ONLY ENVELOPES BEARING THE CORRECT POSTAGE AND CANCELLED BY THE U.S. POSTAL SERVICE OR ENTRIES HAND DELIVERED TO THE CONTEST ADDRESS BY 6:00 AM SATURDAY WILL BE ACCEPTED.

The weekly first prize will be awarded to the entrant with the most or all (6) TV shows correctly identified. In the case that more than one entrant has all the shows correctly identified a drawing will be held. 2nd and 3rd will be awarded to the two entrants with the most correct answers respectively. Again in the case more than one entrant having identified all (6) TV shows, a drawing will be held to determine 2nd and 3rd place winners.

The correct answer and the theme song itself along with the two excerpts will be played back twice on A.M. 1510 KMND Saturday morning between 6:00 A.M. and noon. Answers will also be published in Sunday's Midland Reporter Telegram. Weekly winners will be announced each Wednesday afternoon by A.M. 1510 KMND and in the Midland Reporter-Telegram

It is not necessary to purchase the Midland Reporter-Telegram to play the game. Copies of the MRT are available for free examination at the Midland Reporter-Telegram, 201 East Illinois and the Midland County Public Library.

All winners must sign a release form acknowledging that both the Midland Reporter-Telegram and A.M. 1510 KMND shall have the right to publish, publicize and broadcast his/her name, picture, voice and the fact that he/she won a prize. If the winner is a minor, a parent or guardian must sign a minor's release form prior to the prize being awarded. Winners are responsible for all taxes incurred on prizes.

Judge's decisions will be final in any interpretation of the rules of this game. Employees of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Bakcor Broadcasting, Inc. and members of their immediate families are ineligible. The Grand Prize, a cruise on The Mississippi or Delta Queen Steamboat is worth up to $4,000. Does not include bar tab, shore tours or gift shop purchases. It may be used at your convenience based on a 30 day space available basis. It includes round trip airfare to New Orleans.

The winner of the cruise will be determined by a drawing at the end of all 12 weekly games. All weekly 1st, 2nd, and 3rd prize winners will be entered in the drawing.

DEAR ABBY

Special thanks are due for mama's special love

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR READERS: The following Mother's Day column has been requested for an annual rerun. I think it's worth repeating, and hope you agree.

DEAR ABBY: I am a long-time reader but have never written before. I am enclosing a part of your column that I have kept in my Bible for years. As you can see, it is yellowed and shredded, and half of it is missing. I don't know how many hundreds of times I have read it. It gave me such a feeling of peace and comfort. It was titled "A Prayer for Mama."

Will you please print it again? I would love to have another copy. Thank you. — DOROTHY L.

DEAR DOROTHY: With pleasure:

DEAR ABBY: My beloved mother passed away recently, so I called the minister and asked him for the wording of a prayer I could say for my mother. He said, "I'm too busy — and a lot of good prayer will do her now!" You see, Mama went to church long ago, but my father never liked to go, so Mama finally quit going. Abby, I can't believe that heaven is open only to church members.

I've called all the bookstores in town and they say there aren't any prayers for the dead in any of the prayer books they have. I've heard there are places where you send a few dollars and they pray for the dead, but I don't know their addresses.

Abby, I'd be so grateful if you would print a short prayer I could say for my mother before I go to sleep. Any faith is acceptable. I can't let you send it to my home because my father looks over the mail first and I'm sure I'd never get it. Please don't turn down my odd request. It means the world to me. Thank you, and God bless you, Abby. Sign me ... A PRAYER FOR MAMA

DEAR PRAYER: I found this prayer in my Union Prayer Book. It is the one Jews recite on Yom Kippur (the Day of Atonement) to honor the memory of a deceased mother:

In Memory of a Mother

"I remember thee in this solemn hour, my dear mother. I remember the days when thou didst dwell on earth, and thy tender love watched over me like a guardian angel. Thou hast gone from me, but the bond which unites our souls can never be severed; thine image lives within my heart. May the merciful Father reward thee for the faithfulness and kindness thou hast ever shown me; may he lift up the light of his countenance upon thee, and grant thee eternal peace! Amen."

CONFIDENTIAL TO THE GREATEST MOTHER-IN-LAW ON EARTH — ROSE PHILLIPS IN MINNEAPOLIS: Happy Mother's Day ... I love you!

CONFIDENTIAL TO ANYONE FOR WHOM IT IS NOT YET TOO LATE:

The gestation period of a mother's advice is anywhere from one week to 50 years. Losing one's mother before having thanked her for the many precious things she taught you is one of life's greatest tragedies.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

MISTER ROGERS

Birthday celebrations not always happy

By FRED ROGERS with BARRY HEAD

Fred Rogers

"Happy Birthday" can be a lot easier to say than to make come true! Many parents find that presents and parties don't guarantee a happy birthday: Presents can bring disappointments, and parties can end in chaos, tears and grouchy grownups.

In talking with parents, we found that their unease about childhood birthdays tended to reflect three main concerns: fulfilling wishes, continuing family traditions and meeting social expectations.

Here are some examples. One father told us: "By the time of our son's third birthday, my wife and I had already come to the conclusion that 'What do you want for your birthday?' was a really dangerous question. How could Mark know what was reasonable to ask for? How could he know what we'd be happy for him to have and what we wouldn't? We felt such an open-ended question just set us all up for trouble."

What those parents did was to start making birthdays "surprise days" — days when Mark suddenly finds a package somewhere when he isn't expecting it. The first one might turn up at the breakfast table, and then others in other places during the day. The last two are always on his pillow at bedtime, one from his mother and one from his father, and they are always small things his parents have made.

Some of Mark's presents are things he wanted; his parents look and listen for clues beforehand. But even these come as surprises, and I think that family's approach, besides lessening the chance of disappointments, helps avoid another of birthdays' pitfalls: too much all at once and over too soon.

When a friend of ours was little, family tradition always made birthdays a formal affair even for the children. Everyone was expected to be all dressed up and on best behavior. Her birthday guests were mainly relatives; she was allowed to invite just one special friend of her own age.

She remembers feeling important and special with so many grownups paying so much attention to her, but she has other memories as well: "I can't say those days were fun or comfortable, even though they were exciting. It was so difficult to stay good and polite and neat for so long!

"We've broken that family tradition with our children. For us it's blue jeans and a picnic or an outing with several children, and a cake and ice cream is a quick ceremony. I know my parents don't approve, and I feel awkward about that. All the same, my husband and I feel good about starting new traditions of our own — ones that seem right for us and our children."

There are many ways to celebrate birthdays, and what works best for each family is what their celebration should be. After all, the reason for birthdays is to give our children a once-a-year, strong and special confirmation of the importance of their place in our family and among their friends.

Endangered butterflies defended

LONDON (AP) — A warning sounds for yet another animal group. This time, it's the swallowtail butterflies, regarded as the world's most beautiful insects.

There are 573 kinds and 78 of them face extinction, say two British scientists, Mark Collins, conservationist, and Michael Morris, a butterfly expert.

"Although the trade in all kinds of butterflies is a $100-million-a-year business, centered on Taiwan, the danger to them is not so much from hunters with butterfly nets but from man's destruction of the places where they live," Collins said.

"Swallowtails are at risk from the felling of trees, expansion of farming, alteration of pastures and encroachment of man in the countryside," he said in a telephone interview.

Collins works from Cambridge for the Swiss-based International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources (IUCN), which has just issued a book by him and Morris called "Threatened Swallowtail Butterflies of the World."

It belongs to a renowned series called the Red Data Books, which warn of endangered animals and plants. Crocodiles, coral reefs and the only known wild relative of the pomegranate fruit were among the subjects of earlier books.

The new volume is the first of the series to study butterflies and the publishers believe it's the first anywhere to examine the threat to a single group of insects.

The mix of small offices and suites in this plan has helped Texas Partners find renters even during a severe downturn.

Modified executive concept helps developer find commercial niche

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Finding a market niche is not always the easiest thing to do, especially in a downturn market. But Ron Harris, feels he may have found a niche in Midland's commercial real estate market that will work to his advantage and the advantage those in need of small office space.

"We were doing everything everyone else was doing," said Harris, who with his investors, Texas Partners, owns the Vaughn Building at Texas and Big Spring, "we ran the newspaper ads and sat back waiting for the public to come in. We got lots of calls, but they were mostly shoppers, out to compare. It occured to us if we were going to get clients we would have to go out into their territory and give them a reason to switch from where they were to our building. We had to develop a new concept."

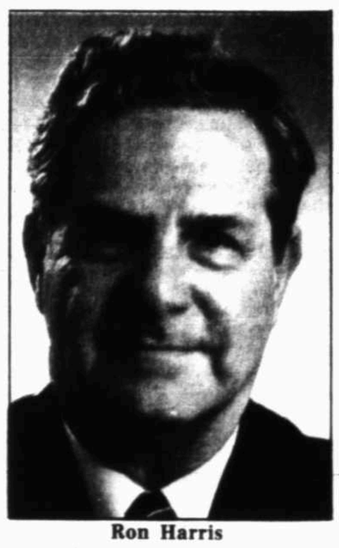

With over 30 years experience in commercial real estate, Harris is no stranger to developing new concepts and marketing strategies when the chips were down. A certified property manager, he was elected president of the Institute for Real Estate Management in 1984, and is author of the book, "Managing the Office Building." With that backlog of experience, he set out to devise a new office concept and marketing strategy.

The concept he finally settled upon, which seems to be working for Harris, is a modified executive plan. According to Harris, it is designed to fit the needs and budgets of oilpatch professionals — geologists, landmen, engineers, accountants — who suddently find themselves unemployed as a result of falling oil prices and decide to ply their skills as independents and consultants.

"There are no shortage of executive suites, within executive complexes, which offer a multitude of services for a price. Our aim was to forego some of the executive services to provide the most attractive offices for the lowest possible price," said Harris.

Harris's plan which cost $50,000 to develop and has been dubbed "Suite Eleven Hundred Concept" mingles single, one-man offices as well as two and three room suites in an elegant environment, thereby giving the shoestring entrepreneur the same advantages and prestige of an executive suite address. For little more than what two parking spaces once cost in downtown Midland new and seasoned entrepreneurs are now able to enjoy a tastefully decorated reception area complete with receptionist, conference room, coffee room and copier room.

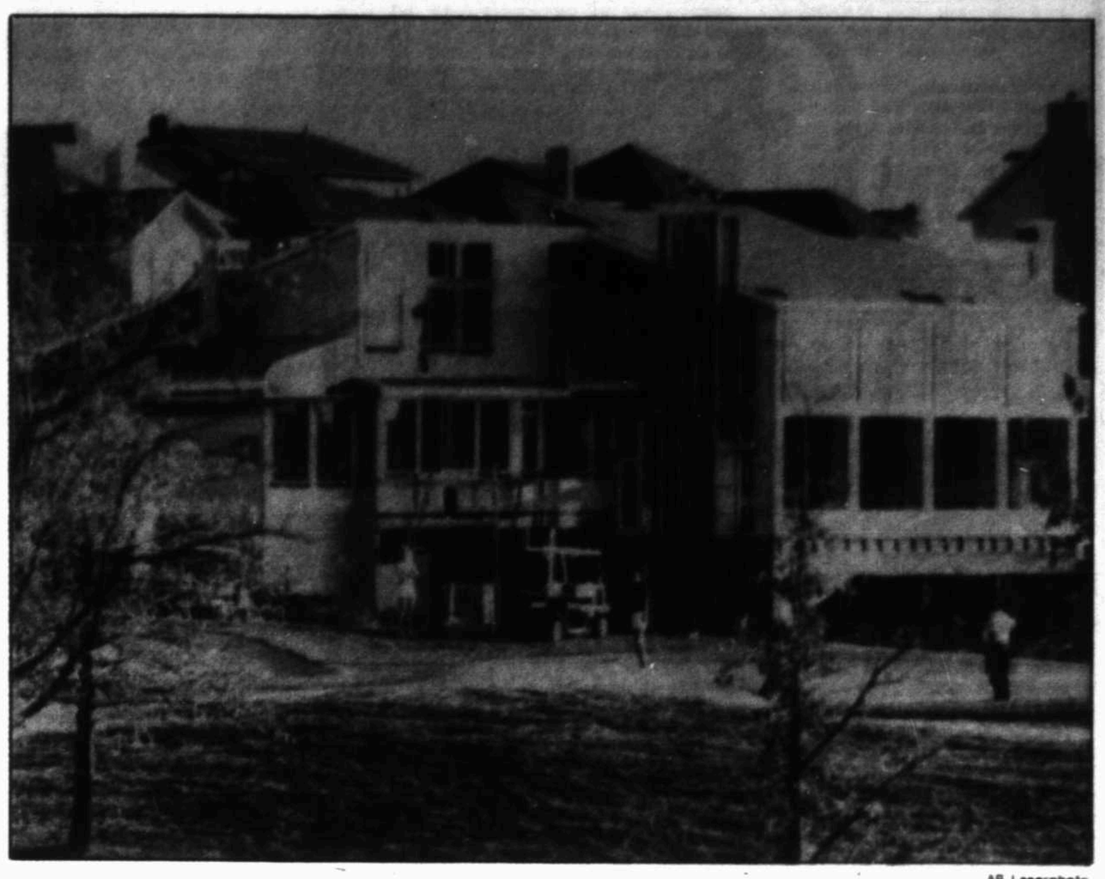

"I think you have to show the public you are willing to participate in the process," said Harris.

Ron Harris

After the concept was in place, his marketing strategy became distinctly more aggressive. Represented by C. Wallace Craig, sales represenatives began to make calls on people who might switch, namely those who suddenly find themselves in the downturn with more office space than they need, those paying too high rent, those who could upgrade their office facilities for less or the same amount of monthly rent and those who are working out of their home.

Golfers finish a round on the 18th hole of the Las Colinas Golf Course, as construction continues on a nearly completed house in the background. Texas real estate developers are using golf courses to woo home buyers.

Golf woos home buyers

Home developers 'right on course'

DALLAS (AP) — Parks are pretty, but golf is great.

So goes the thinking of a growing number of Texas real estate developers who are dumping designs for open spaces or parks and building expansive, expensive golf courses to woo home buyers.

"There has definitely been an increase in demand from developers for golf courses," says Baxter Spann, a golf-course designer for Houston-based Finger-Dye-Shirley.

"We're doing one in north Dallas now — it normally takes a year to build a golf course, but they're trying to do this in six months so they can start selling lots," he said.

Golf courses help sell homes faster and developers can hawk lots at much heftier prices.

At Las Colinas northwest of Dallas, for instance, 15,000-square-foot lots on one of the development's most exclusive courses go for up to $250,000, compared to $80,000 for less-chic sites, said development spokesman Scott Hanson.

"The golf courses (Las Colinas has five) have been of tremendous help to us," Hanson said. "We have yet to have a house built on a golf course that hasn't been sold before it's finished."

Golf course architects all over Texas are reporting an increased demand for more courses and for renovating older courses that compete with the newer ones.

Spann says that because the golf course-home marriage is increasingly profitable, his firm has two to three times the number of courses on the drawing board this year than last.

And Rick Robbins, vice president of the landscape firm Von Hagge & Devlin in Houston, says those projects account for nearly 80 percent of his company's business.

"Most of the justification for building them today is because of marketing or attracting people to a resort," he said.

"Parks are pretty, but have absolutely no chance of having any operational value," he added. "And many people don't want to live next to a public park because so many people use it. Golf courses are pastoral, used only during the daytime and — best of all — are maintained by somebody else."

Golf courses are expensive to build, however. They eat 130 to 180 acres away from the surrounding residential development and average $2.5 million to build. And the cost can run as high as $8 million in the rocky soil in the Austin-San Antonio area, Robbins said.

But developer Don Plunk, president of Doral Properties, says the cost is worth it.

"Golf courses have turned out to be a very potent sales factor for residential sites," said Plunk, who is involved in several golf course-home development projects in North Texas. "And it's been proven that the value of a golf course more than offsets loss from that use of the ground."

The phenomenon isn't just Texan, however.

"It's all over the world," says Joe Finger, president of Finger-Dye-Shirley. "People like looking over a manicured park instead of mowing their weeds themselves."

Slide in oil value imperils local tax base

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

While much has been said about the impact of low prices on the state government's tax revenues, the longer range impact on local taxing authorities, such as West Texas school boards, has been much less publicized.

The dramatic drop in property tax values resulting from the collapse of oil prices since the first of the year is comparable to a company having 30 to 50 percent of its income-producing assets destroyed, according to Texas Comptroller of Public Accounts Bob Bullock.

Although there is not a dollar-for-dollar connection between the lost assets (appraisal valuations) and income they could have produced (local property tax receipts); the loss makes it impossible to produce the same income without raising prices (taxation rates), Bullock's analogy continues.

Local school board property tax receipts for the 1986-87 school year are expected to be lower than last year's but the impact could be much greater in the 1987-88 school year if crude oil prices remain in their current depressed range.

Appraisal experts speculate that if oil is selling for $17 per barrel or less on Jan. 1, 1987, the taxable value of the state's oil and gas reserves could drop by 30 to 50 percent of their current value. Bullock notes that a 30 percent drop could lower the total taxable value of property in the state by as much as $26 billion. If the value falls by half, tax bases for local governments could be cut by $43 billion.

THE TEXAS STATUTE requiring Jan. 1 fair market property values to be used as the basis for tax appraisals during the year will postpone a portion of the hardship for local taxing bodies this year.

Because the precipitous drop in oil prices came after the first of the year, prices of $21 to $23 per barrel (based on Jan. 1 posted prices) will be used as the starting point for the complex computations that go into establishing the final tax appraisals rolls, explains Roland Wilkinson, chief appraiser for Midland County.

The Midland Independent School District is bracing for a 10 to 12 percent decline in the total property valuations on the county tax rolls, although certified figures will not be available until early this summer, according to Don Ferguson, business manager for the district.

Wilkinson predicts that the total appraisal of mineral properties in the county will be 25 percent lower than the 1985 tax rolls, when $27 to $29 per barrel prices were used as the basis of computations. Total appraisal values of all categories of property are projected to fall 12 to 15 percent short of last year, he adds.

In Midland County, mineral properties accounted for only 17 percent of the total tax base last year. Neighboring counties show a much higher reliance on oil and gas as a percentage of their total tax base. In Ector County last year, mineral properties' value accounted for 52 percent of the total, while in Andrews County, the figure was a whopping 95 percent.

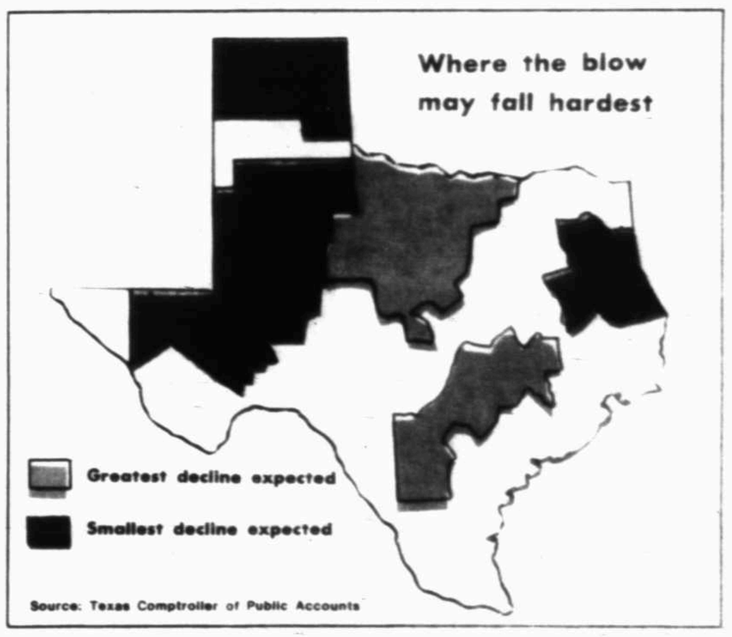

TOTAL ASSESSED valuation on Andrews County's rolls for the 1985-86 school year tallied $2.9 billion, only $200 million of which came from the general (non-mineral) property classifications. Preliminary estimates for the 1986-87 tax period project a loss of $350 million in total value, a 12.1 percent drop, attributable to the decline in oil and gas values.

"We won't be hit too hard this year. But even with a rebound in prices, if it falls short of the Jan. 1, 1986 level, we could have some problems going in to the '87-88 school year," notes Andrews Independent School District business manager Don Gilliland. "It's hard to predict what may happen. Our enrollment may drop in proportion with the decline in revenues, which wouldn't create as great a squeeze on teachers' salaries and other costs."

"Without a corresponding drop in enrollment, the situation could reach crisis proportions in coming years."

By contrast, the effect on City of Midland property taxes is expected to be negligible. Oil and gas reserves account for only one-third of one percent of the city's total tax base.

Please see TAX, Page 3G

Lower lifting costs and higher gravity crude production from fields in West Texas, the Panhandle and East Texas will buffer those areas from as severe an impact on their tax bases as is predicted for the higher cost areas in North and South Central Texas.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Good solutions are no match for bad politics

"I can see clearly now," goes the song. It may be a matter for speculation, but I think I do too.

After three days in Nashville last week, attending the Independent Petroleum Association of America's Midyear Meeting; listening to nonstop lectures and reports from some of the finest energy minds in the world, some of those vague, vaporous notions, floating around in my head finally materialized as concrete thoughts.

As IPAA reaffirmed its opposition to an import tax, it seemed all too clear to me that this is exactly what the oil industry needed to survive over the long run.

It also seemed perfectly clear that a stable price is the ultimate cure for industry ills, and that our energy ills are more political than economic.

Indeed, if oil were to soar to $50 a barrel tomorrow it would not be the cure-all we think. A crisis in confidence would still exist. For a time, venture capital would remain on the sidelines suspiciously eyeing the north and south meanderings of oil prices, not knowing whether to jump in or jump back. And, shell-shocked energy banks, unable to put a value on collateral because of yo-yo prices, would be hesitant to make oil and gas loans.

That's why price stability is the long term key to a healthy domestic oil industry. A capital intensive industry, given to long lead times simply cannot survive in a chaotic market.

A simple Spraberry well in Midland County can cost over half a million dollars and require two years from prospect to pipeline. A major tertiary recovery project can take 10 years from concept to completion and cost billions. Trying to achieve either type of project when oil prices are subject to dramatic swings is nearly impossible.

How can stable oil prices be attained? For all the debate, an import tax on crude oil is still considered the most workable but probably least attainable solution. Those in OPEC, particularly the Saudis, are perplexed that we have not already enforced such a tax. "It never occurred to them that America would permit the collapse of its domestic oil industry," James Akin, former Ambassador to Saudi Arabia explained to the IPAA gathering.

The mechanics of an import tax makes sense. It would put an established floor under oil prices to prevent future collapses that would destroy the industry and cause known reserves to be thrown out the back door (plugged.)

The tax which would ultimately be paid by the consumer at the pump, would not impose an overbearing burden and would go a long way toward solving some of our energy ills. When world oil prices are very low, most of it could be spent on cheap foreign crude (at non-supported world prices) to fill the Strategic Petroleum Reserves. More could be spent on accelerated research into enhanced oil recovery, effective utilization of coal, safer nuclear energy and tax incentives to encourage conservation and alternate energy sources, and all the other things necessary to reduce our dependence on imported oil.

In short, we could go back to doing a lot of the things we were doing in Jimmy Carter's administration and have ceased to do since.

Bless his heart, Jimmy Inadequate Carter, had some good ideas, but he couldn't make them work. For some unexplainable reason, every brilliant plan he came up with for dealing with the energy crisis, turned into another massive, blundering bureaucracy. The Department of Energy was almost as large as the oil industry itself, and who can forget the unwholesome acts of FERC and friends. We said it was because Jimmy Carter was a Democrat.

But now, the Republicans are telling us they can't do any better. Sen. Phil Gramm tells us that if Republicans were to attempt to stabilize oil prices with an import tax, it would turn into a massive, bungling bureaucracy, devoid of reason and fairness and full of exemptions and exceptions and inadequacies — just like the Democrats made.

"I think everyone in the industry, including IPAA, would support an import tariff if they thought it would not turn into a bureaucratic nightmare," said Bud Scoggins, president-elect of the IPAA. That sentiment has been echoed many times throughout the industry.

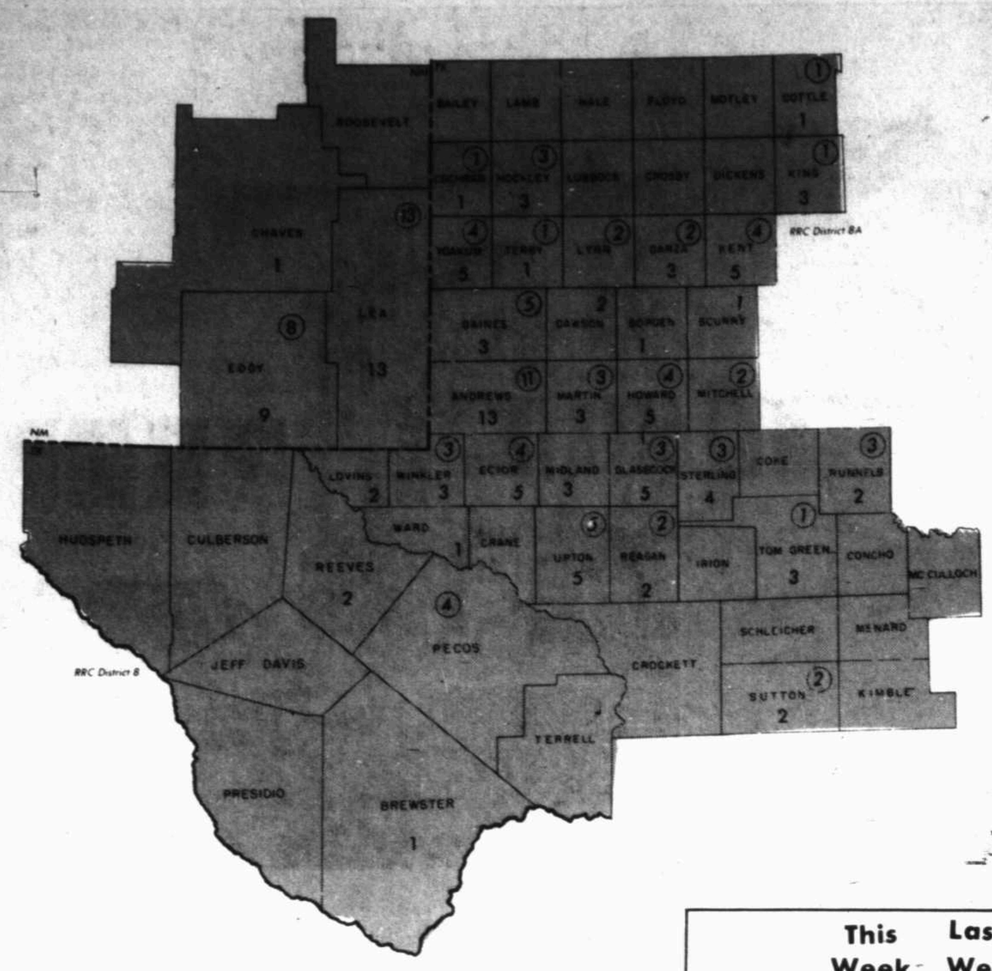

There are few that still reject the tax on principle, claiming we have a free market to protect, but many who reject a crude oil import tax, as a practical matter — for fear it would evolve into a bureaucratic-political nightmare.

Therein lies the rub. When viable solutions to an economic problem are known yet remain out of consideration, because of political impracticality, it is no longer an economic problem, but a political problem.

Hughes rig count breaks 100 mark

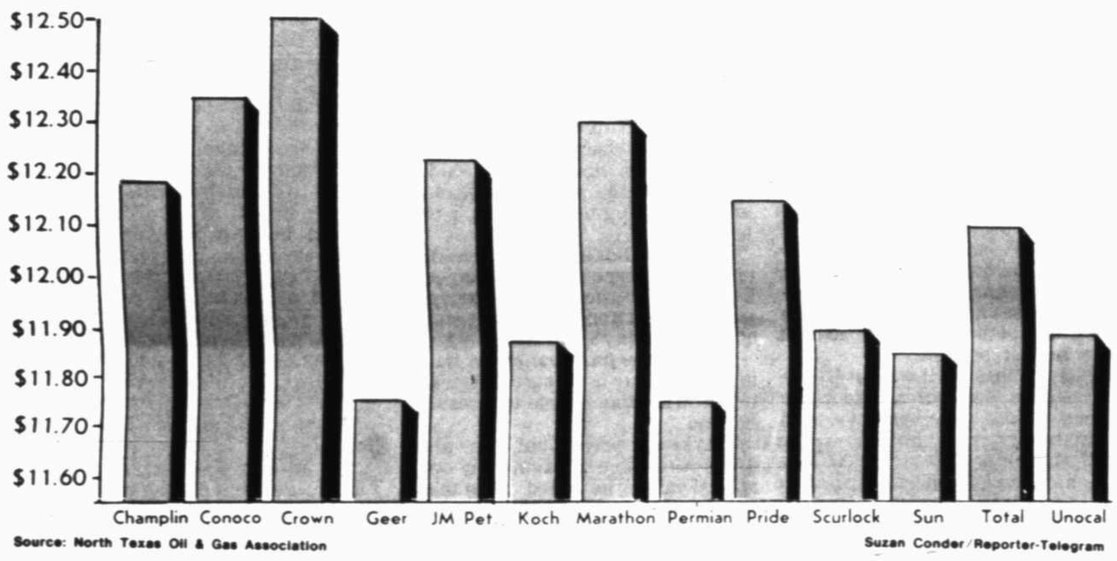

The rig count in the Permian Basin went through the historical 100 mark this week, according to the Hughes Rig Count, matching the Basin's all time low of 98 which was attained in 1963.

It should be pointed out, however, that the Reed Rig Count went up by two rigs to 117. The possible difference is methods of counting. Hughes counts only rigs that are making hole, but Reed counts rigs that are in transit to a location or rigging up on location.

Nationwides the Hughes count slipped another 28 rigs this week, nearing the all time benchmark low of 500. This week's count is 1,000 less than last year. (For a historical perspecitive of the national rig count for the past four years, see the graph on page 3G of this section.)

In the Permian Basin, Lea County, New Mexico with 13 rigs running was the most active county in the Basin.

The graph right shows the relationship of the present rig count crash. The count for 1983, 1984 and 1985 began the year almost at the same point, followed by big slides. For 1983 and 1984 the slide took a rebound in the summer, but 1985 flattened out for the remainder of the year and took a nose dive in 1986.

"We have some clients who have decided to move out of their office at home and to a downtown office to keep in touch," said Harris.

How has the concept worked? In less than two months, Harris says he has leased 57.3 percent of the space available in Suite Eleven Hundred of the Vaughn Building.

Said Harris: "I think we've proved that we've found the right target market and we're now considering remodeling another floor of the Vaughn Building with the same concept in the near future."

TAX

Working with preliminary estimates, MISD is preparing to cope with a possible multi-million shortfall in tax receipts for the coming school year, Ferguson says. With the predicted 10 to 15 percent decline in total appraisal values, the 1985 tax rate of 76.8 cents per $100 assessed valuation, will reap $4 million less.

STATEWIDE EFFECTS could be devastating, according to Bullock. At least 230 of Texas' 254 county governments and as many as 851 of the 1,069 tax collecting school districts derive at least some income from taxes on oil and gas deposits. In 1984, the last year for which complete figures are available, oil and gas represented less than 1 percent of the total assessed valuation in 210 of the 1,069 school districts with petroleum reserves.

However, at the other end of the spectrum, 20 districts — including Andrews County — rely on oil and gas to account for more than 90 percent of the total tax base. Another 191 districts have tax rolls with oil and gas property making up more than half the total value.

Actual reductions in taxable values around the state will depend on numerous variables, including grade and price of oil produced; estimated size and life of field reserves; and, production costs which affect the future value of the reserves.

The Comptroller's office predicts that based on these criteria, the hardest hit portions of the state will be the 'stripper well' provinces of North and West Central Texas and the Austin Chalk region of South Central Texas, where production costs are higher.

Petroleum suppliers want to export wares to Russia

DALLAS (UPI) — Petroleum equipment suppliers, severely hit by the oil price collapse, say one way to get relief is for the government to immediately remove the controls on the export of their products to the Soviet Union.

What angers them is the Reagan government's determination to keep the controls on petroleum equipment sales while at the same time willing to remove or relax other economic controls imposed in 1978 in retaliation for the human rights violations by the Soviet Union.

"Why are we being singled out? If they can remove the sanctions on grain sales, or allow Coca-Cola to sell there, why not us? We are not talking about any strategic or sensitive things but just ordinary petroleum equipment," says William J. Sallans, executive vice president of the Petroleum Equipment Suppliers Association.

The association, located in Houston, says prior to the imposition of the controls under the Commodity Control List, U.S. petroleum equipment exports accounted for 25 percent of Russia's imports.

Gene Lewis of the International Trade Administration in the Department of Commerce said he can sympathize with the association's predicament but noted his department must abide by foreign policy and national security considerations.

Lewis said the controls were put into effect because it was found that some of the equipment also had applications in anti-submarine warfare. He said some of the data processing equipment that use advanced computers also have strategic implications.

"We don't make foreign policy decisions here," Lewis said. "Congress has directed us to maintain these controls. We simply implement them as directed."

Lewis said the suppliers should note that the controls are not outright sanctions and that the regulations only require them to obtain export licenses. He said in "99 percent of the cases" the licenses are speedily approved by his department.

Corsicana remembers its oil heritage

AP Laserphoto

Tracy Keeling of Houston tips his snakeskin top hat as he holds trophy as the top cook at the Derrick Days celebration. The celebration began a decade ago to celebrate oil field heritage.

CORSICANA, Texas (AP) — The heritage of the first oil field west of the Mississippi is here. The history of Corsicana and Navarro County reeks with oil and its pursuit.

But until Derrick Days began a decade ago, you wouldn't have known it.

For years, Corsicana, a town of about 25,000 located 50 miles southeast of Dallas on Interstate 45, grappled with the idea of celebrating its history of oil reknown. Every town with a heritage as richly endowed as this wants something special to call attention to it — a tub-thumping, chest-beatin' extravaganza that brings in folks by the thousands.

Community leaders knew there was gold there to be panned and a fortune in public goodwill to be mined if only a way could be found. Corsicana was known worldwide for Collin Street Bakery and its fruit cakes and for Wolf Brand Chili. But they didn't tie the bow on a package that got down to the bedrock of what really has made Corsicana famous — oil.

More than 15 years ago, the chamber of commerce brought in public relations consultants to do just that. The consultants decided it could be done, but it would cost money, big money to do it "right."

That kind of money wasn't available and the idea had to be postponed.

But the chamber, a handful of determined people and a lot of well-wishers didn't give up. They finally came to a simple realization: involvement and dedication to a goal is what it takes, not tons of money. Building an annual event around Corsicana's colorful oil history became the challenge.

After all, didn't a crew that city fathers hired in the early 1890s to sink water wells stumble onto something? That oil kept oozing up and ruined what could have been a good water source. The city didn't give up, though, and on the crew's third try, got what it dug for water, not oil.

That was only the beginning of a variety of ways to turn misfortune into fortune that has smiled on this community ever since. Oil that had posed a problem was found to have commercial possibilities.

What had been viewed as a community liability soon turned into an asset that put Corsicana on the map.

In no time at all, Corsicana was alive with oil operators, roughnecks, wildcatters, dirt-pool drillers, leasehounds, oil scouts and shady characters who could smell a fast dollar to be made quicker than a buzzard could find a dead calf in a rain-swollen creek.

Expertise was needed in Corsicana badly; those hoping to exploit this great discovery sought out J.S. Cullinan of Pennsylvania oil fame. With his assistance, a refinery was begun to process the crude into kerosene, its most widely used by-product at the time, and into gasoline to put America on wheels.

The Cullinan-formed company later was to become Magnolia Petroleum, which has evolved into Mobil.

Another major oil firm started here, too — the Texas Company, now known as Texaco.

For those not quite up to date on history measured in Corsicana time, here are a few claims still worth boasting about:

— First oil field discovered west of the Mississippi River.

— First city west of the Mississippi to produce oil of sufficient commercial value to refine. (Nacogdoches claims it had oil oozing out of the ground before Corsicana, but theirs had no "commercial value," historians say.

— First city to oil its streets to keep down the dust. (A phenomenon noticed first by oil drillers who often had to wade through dirt streets turned into quagmires of mud during rains or spills from water wagons hauling water to cool off the early-day drill bits.)

— First city in the country to fuel boilers of steam locomotives with oil.

— First city in the country to erect towers from which natural flared gas was burned to provide illumination.

DR. S.J. MAZZULLO, in co-authorship with DR. A.M. REID and S.T. REID, all Midland consultant geologists, are the recipients of the prestigious A.I. Levorsen Award for Best Paper present at the annual meeting of the Southwest Section of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, held April 27 to 29 in New Mexico.

The title of their award-winning paper was "Evolution of Permian Carbonate Shelf and Foreshelf Detrital Systems, Midland Basin, Texas". The abstract of that oral presentation was published recently in volume 70 of the Bulletin of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists. The actual award will be presented at the next annual meeting of that Society, in Dallas in 1987.

Mazzullo is currently president of the Permian Basin Section of the Society of Economic Paleontologists and Mineralogists, and was recipient of the same award in 1983.

Millions of wives bring home more bacon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women still trail men in pay, but they're doing more than just supplementing family income in a growing share of cases, with nearly one in five working wives earning more than their husbands, the Census Bureau says.

Some 4.8 million wives — about 18 percent — in two-earner families had higher pay than their spouses in 1983, the most recent year for which figures are available. That's up from 16 percent in 1981 when 4.1 million wives earned more than their husbands, the study found.

"The working wife has become an integral feature of the U.S. economy and an important influence on the economic level of the family," said the new report by Mary F. Henson and Robert W. Cleveland of the Bureau's Population Division.

The study, released Tuesday, said the average 1983 income for all married couples was $28,570. But those with husband and wife working averaged $39,890, the study said.

Wives are most likely to earn more than their husbands in the 25-to-34 age bracket, the study pointed out, with higher-earning females making up about one-third of working wives in that group.

Cleveland suggested that part of the reason for this may be delayed childbearing among young women as they pursue education and careers.

Women in that age group are more likely than their mothers and grandmothers to have been to college, and their careers have not been interrupted by childrearing, as is more common among older wives, studies have shown.

"Wives earning more than their husbands were more likely to be working year-round, full-time, to have no minor children at home, have completed college, and work in professional specialty occupations or executive, administrative or managerial occupations," the study said.

An earlier Census Bureau analysis of couples in which wives earn more said that two possible explanations have been widely suggested.

"One is the 'female superstar' image which stresses the wife's occupational accomplishments. The other view, which might be characterized as the 'underachieving husband syndrome,' focuses on how the husband's characteristics — retirement, illness, disability, temporary layoff, or simple lack of initiative — might account for superior earnings of the wife," said that 1984 Census Bureau report by Suzanne M. Bianchi and Daphne Spain.

While the two views are stereotypes, they point out possible explanations and are not necessarily opposing outlooks, they said.

For example, Spain and Bianchi said, "a superachieving wife may have demoralizing effects on a husband, and an underachieving husband may quite possibly provide the incentive for a wife to enter the labor force and discover talents she otherwise would not have discovered."

Cleveland noted that the new report concentrated on income levels in 1983 for married couples in which both work — about 26 million couples. It did not compare them in detail with families with only one wage earner, or no one working.

Between 1963 and 1983 the number of women in the labor force grew from 24.7 million to 48.6 million, with the number of working wives nearly doubling, from 13.4 million to 26.2 million.

Although the study found many wives out-earning their husbands, and wives' income growing faster than their spouses', still, in most cases, males had higher incomes.

Average earnings by husbands were $22,980 in 1983, up 0.5 percent from two years earlier.

Wives' average earnings increased 7.9 percent in the same period, but still were only $10,164, 44 percent of what their spouses brought home.

"Differences between the earnings of husbands and wives result from a multitude of factors (and comparisons) ... cannot be used to examine issues such as possible sex discrimination and differences in the monetary gains from education," the study cautioned.

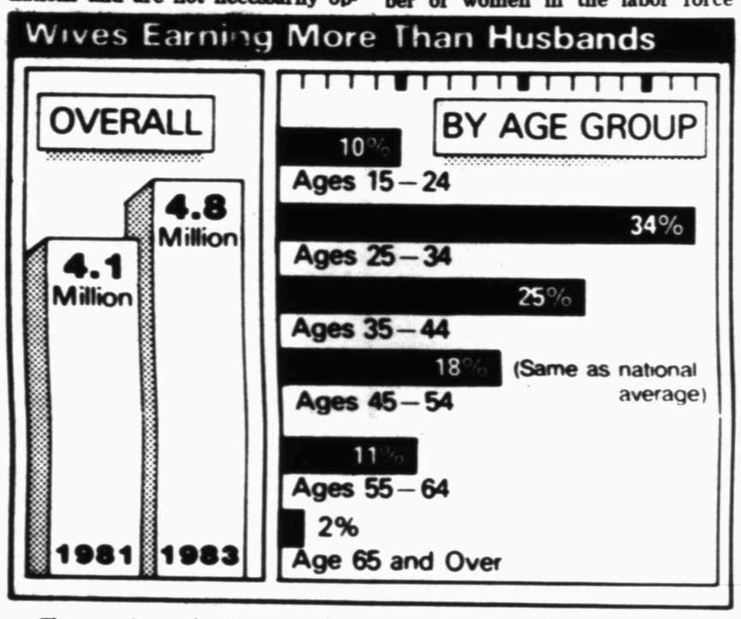

While professional women dominated those in higher income brackets, the most common picture of the two-earner family was that of a blue-collar husband and secretary wife.

"The data show that the most frequent combination of occupations for husbands and wives was a husband in the precision production, craft and repair occupations and a wife in the administrative support (including clerical) occupations," the report said.

By age group, some 34 percent of women aged 25 to 34 earned more than their husbands, and the share was 25 percent for ages 35 to 44.

For women aged 45 to 54, there were 18 percent earning more than their husbands — the same as the national average.

The share of wives earning more fell to 11 percent in the 55-to-64 age group, 10 percent for those aged 15 to 24 and only 2 percent for women aged 65 and over.

The number of wives earning more than their husbands in 1981 and 1983 is over 4 million. The largest percentage of higher-earning wives is in the 25 to 34 age group.

PBGC to offer two new courses

The Permian Basin Graduate Center has scheduled courses in Assertiveness Training and Hydrogen Sulfide Training.

"Assertiveness Training," is set for May 20, from 8:30 am. to 4:30 pm. This seminar is designed to help people express themselves more effectively and confidently, how to stand up for their rights — say yes and no — without infringing on the rights of others, and how to be forceful without being hostile. Marion Kimberly, counselor, will instruct. Participants are eligible for 8 CPE credits. The fee is $85 or $10 for persons unemployed within the past six months.

"Hydrogen Sulfide Training" will meet May 21, from 6:00 to 10:00 pm. This four-hour course meets certification requirements. Greg Bonner, co-owner of Javelina Energy Services, Inc., will instruct. The fee is $50.

For registration or further information, call 683-2832.

Utility company agrees to roll back Texas rates

AUSTIN (AP) — Gulf States Utilities Co. officials say a settlement the company has agreed to involving a $126 million rate reduction will decrease typical monthly residential electric bills by about $12.

The agreement reached Thursday follows seven weeks of Public Utility Commission hearings on Gulf States' request to increase rates by $133.4 million. The new Texas residential rates will be roughly comparable to what Gulf State's Louisiana customers now pay for power.

"I don't think we've seen anything like this in the history of utility regulation," said Public Counsel Jim Boyle, who represents residential and small commercial ratepayers at the PUC. "It's unprecedented when you consider the amount of the reduction."

The reduction includes an $80 million decrease in Gulf State's base rates and another reduction of about $46 million in the rate the company charges its customers for fuel.

Attorneys involved plan to meet today to begin putting the agreement in writing. Some aspects of the case, including construction of the company's $4.4 billion River Bend nuclear power plant, are not addressed in the settlement.

In turn, opponents to Gulf States' rate increase request agreed to a special bookkeeping measure for River Bend that will allow the company to retain a positive cash flow relative to the plant's costs.

"Without either the accounting treatment or a rate increase, we would have had zero earnings and could not have borrowed money," GSU spokesman Kim McMurray said. "It would have been a financial disaster."

"I think under the circumstances it's a good settlement for the company, our customers and our shareholders," McMurray said.

Members will also discuss several issues of important to the IADC.

Associate members will be welcome at the cocktail hour, followed by dinner at 7:30. Featured speaker, Ned Simes of Diamond M Drilling Co., will speak on "An Insider's View of the Drilling Business Today."

Wildflower popularity key to firm's growth

Seed company is 'blooming success'

ARVADA, Colo. — The roots of Applewood Seed Co. stretch back to a day in 1965 when Gene Milstein bought a one-pound package of columbine seeds someone else had gathered in the wild.

Milstein divided that pound, made up small packets and stuck them in the gift shop at the Denver Botanic Gardens.

"They sold like crazy," says his wife, Dee Milstein.

When the first seeds were gone, Milstein gathered more. The plain paper packages were improved when his mother made line drawings of the columbine, then other wildflower varieties as Milstein expanded what he still considered a hobby.

To pump up interest when Milstein decided to take his wares to a trade show in 1968, Dee Milstein nand-colored the seed packets.

Today, in wood-paneled corporate offices lined with brilliant photographs and pen-and-ink drawings of wildflowers, the Milsteins reign over a flowering company.

Indvidual species arrive in large burlap bags at Applewood from as far away as India. More than half come from European "flower farms," where seed is raised as a crop. Applewood's supply of blue columbine, Colorado's state flower, is grown commercially in the state.

In a room where the temperature remains 58 degrees year-round, Tibor Kubanyi uses a giant feed mixer or plastic children's wading pools to make the firm's mixes and special orders.

The Ohio Highway Department, for example, recently purchased 2,100 pounds of seed to beautify hundreds of acres of land near major highway intersections.

A national park in Canada ordered wildflowers to cover 10 acres.

Landscape designers at Castle Pines Golf Club, south of Denver, had Applewood put together a mix of red, white and blue wildflowers.

Applewood's staff botanists, Katheryn See and Sandra White, sometimes confer with landscape designers for weeks to ensure a customer gets what he wants.

Among the details See and White need before compiling a mix's "recipe" are the height of flowers wanted, the colors, the blooming seasons desired — spring, summer or fall — and the amount of water that will be available naturally once a stand is established.

Each January, White must place orders for seed that will not be sold until the following year. If she makes a mistake and there is seed left over in a season, it will be used first the next year.

"It keeps well here," White said, noting Colorado's low humidity and the cool temperature of the seed-storage room. "It's not like cream pies."

Individual states have varying standards for germination of certain seeds. Applewood insists that its seed exceed the highest such standard by at least 10 percent, White said.

The privately held company keeps its sales figures secret. There are 15 full-time employees and 15 part-timers who handle packaging, said Debbie Rainguet, product coordinator.

When Milstein sold those first columbine seeds, he was a dropout from the University of California at Berkeley helping his parents with their Denver-area retail clothing store. In his spare time, he experimented with hybridization in a greenhouse he had built at his parents' home and volunteered time at the botanic gardens.

Today, he is Applewood's president and general manager, and oversees research efforts and "whatever needs doing," his wife says.

Dee Milstein earned a degree in medical technology and "almost immediately decided I was in the wrong field." She met her husband just as his avocation was becoming his life's work.

Dee and Gene Milstein are pictured with a portion of their Wildflower seed product line at their office at the Applewood Seed Co. in Arvada, Colo.

As vice president at Applewood, she works on developing new products and writes much of the printed material the company produces.

Despite the slick catalogs and surroundings, some parts of Applewood remain a lot like the days when Milstein ran it from his parents' house.

Much of Applewood's line is still weighed, mixed and packaged by hand, Rainguet said.

Since 1971, Applewood has sold houseplant and herb seeds. In 1978, the company came out with kits to make it easy to grow edible sprouts in the kitchen. In 1980, "Sof-Pots," plastic bags with seeds and growing mixtures, were unveiled.

The Sof-Pot line now includes catnip and grass for cats, herbs and flowering plants for both inside and outdoors.

IBM shareholders defeat proposal to end South African operations

HOUSTON (AP) — IBM stockholders defeated a proposal calling for the company to halt operations in South Africa if apartheid is not abolished, according to results announced Monday at IBM's annual meeting.

About 6.9 percent of stockholders casting ballots voted for the proposal, said officials for International Business Machines Corp.

IBM Chairman John R. Opel, who is retiring June 1, said IBM was discouraged about the apartheid system. But he said the company would remain "as long as we can maintain an economically sound business and feel there is a chance that we can contribute to change."

The world's largest computer company also said that lingering troubles in the U.S. economy had prompted IBM to continue a cautious approach in 1986.

"The U.S. economy continues to show only moderate growth and has yet to emerge from the long year-and-a-half period of disappointing corporate profits and capital investment, now compounded by uncertainty over tax reform legislation," said John F. Akers, IBM president and chief executive officer.

IBM's pronouncements are closely watched by Wall Street as a sign of the outlook for computers and industry in general, and its stock fell slightly after Akers' remarks but rebounded to close at a 52-week high of $161.37½, up $1.87½.

"We believe the prudent course for IBM is to expect a demanding year ahead, to make ourselves a company as lean and vigorous as possible and thus ready ourselves to take on our competitors," Akers said.

New mobile phones unveiled

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — "Name, please?" the telephone politely asks.

Two versions of voice-dialed mobile phones, which are to be introduced this summer, were unveiled Monday by their competing developers at separate previews in Los Angeles and Dallas.

American Telephone & Telegraph's 1280 cellular telephone system is designed to recognize the speech patterns of the caller who earlier "taught" it up to 20 phone numbers. Speaking a code name — for example, John Doe — will cause the phone to scan its roster of speech patterns, select the appropriate one and dial the phone number.

"Obviously, dialing by voice is the easiest way to place a call while driving," said John Davis, executive director of AT&T's Consumer Products Laboratories. "It's about as simple as honking the car horn. It's accurate, friendly and safe."

On the other hand, the phone will respond only to the voice or voices that programmed the numbers. "We think of this as a personalized phone," said AT&T spokesman Mike Pollock.

In contrast, the phones to be built by British-based FCA Telecom, in its first U.S. venture, will include a voice-recognition device that will respond to virtually any voice that pronounces one of its programmed identifying names — for example, home, cleaners, airline, office.

FCA has licensed U.S. manufacturing and marketing rights for this cellular phone application from Dallas-based Voice Control Systems. It intends to hold a second demonstration of the book-size attachment, which will retail for about $300 (in addition to the cost of the cellular phone itself), this week in New York. Distributors include Cellular One in San Francisco, Bell South Mobility, Atlanta, and Bell Atlantic Mobile Systems, New Jersey.

AT&T's 1280 voice-dialed phone will carry a suggested retail price of $1,745. It includes a button-sized microphone that can be placed on a car's sun visor to allow the driver to hang up the receiver and continue a conversation while keeping both hands on the steering wheel. An extension jack allows conventional phones to be plugged into the backseat area of the car.

Both systems also accept conventional dialing.

AT&T recognizes additional applications of voice-dialing technology, such as meeting the special needs of certain handicapped people, but it intends to concentrate on the cellular market initially, Pollock said.

Oil analyst finds himself in print a lot

Nothing new for a reporter's son

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil industry analyst Peter Beutel finds his name in print quite often these days now that the price of oil is a major topic again. But he says talking to reporters is really nothing new for the son of a television anchorman.

"I've never been intimidated by journalists," having grown up with one, he said, referring to his father, Bill Beutel, who appears nightly on New York's WABC-TV.

As an analyst just promoted to assistant manager of the energy group at Rudolf Wolff Futures Inc., the younger Beutel found himself in the middle of a major news event when the price of oil started plummeting in November.

A story that had lost prominence after the price of oil peaked in early 1981 suddenly regained importance.

In the middle of many of the stories were the observations of Peter Beutel.

Beutel, who declines to give his age but appears to be in his late 20s, says he has been trading everything from stocks to cattle since he was 11 years old, and oil — as he points out with characteristic attention to detail — since Jan. 4, 1982.

"I've been a broker. I've been a trader. I've been a technical analyst, and I've been a fundamental analyst. So that's the one thing I want to pride myself on: being able to answer just about any question or know where I could get the answer if I don't have it," he said.

All that has stood Beutel in good stead since November, when oil prices plunged from about $31 a barrel to a low of $9.75, before recovering to hover around $14 on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Against this backdrop, the market's daily gyrations have provided occasionally dramatic news stories, which invariably include comments by Wall Street analysts and traders.

For the commodities trading companies and securities firms whose analysts get quoted — not to mention the analysts themselves — the heightened attention has meant plenty of free publicity.

Among the leading beneficiaries has been Rudolf Wolff, although Beutel swears that neither he nor the company ever planned it that way.

"Nobody here has ever said to me, 'Go out and get quoted.'," he said. "Nobody here has ever come to me and said, 'Here's some extra money for having been quoted.' Nobody has ever said to me, 'Gee, the fact that you get quoted has made you a star.'

"There are no stars here. We work as a team. We're very, very team-oriented," he said, referring to the other traders and analysts around the trading desk at Rudolf Wolff.

Beutel said he talks, "just about every day," to reporters from the Wall Street Journal, the Washington Post, the New York Times, the Financial Times of London, Cable News Network and all the major wire services.

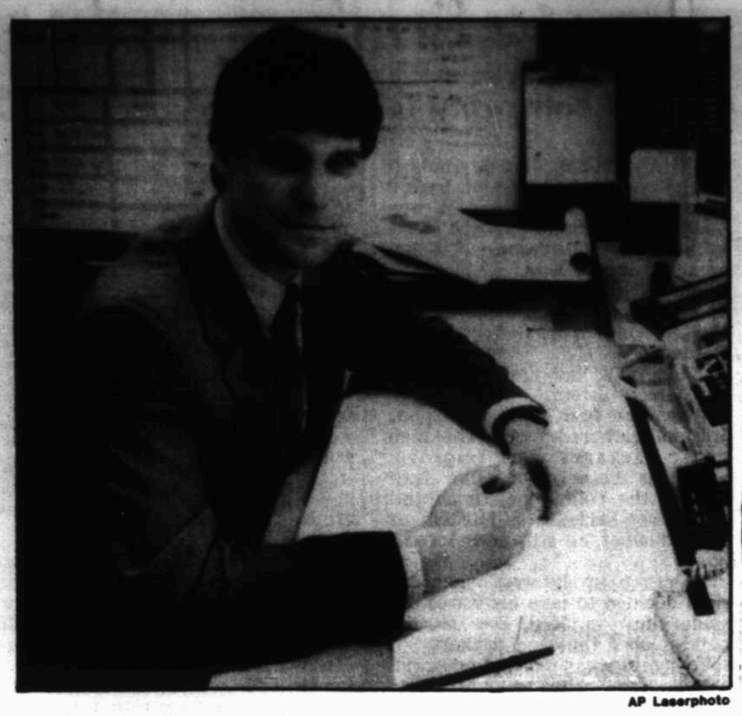

Most analysts are content to wait for queries from the press. But Beutel sometimes calls reporters on his own when he senses news brewing in the market.

While this may smack of glory-mongering, his tips can be helpful to reporters trying to keep track of the worldwide oil market.

"That's where my father ... really helped me: understanding what the composition of a good story is," Beutel said.

"I see my role as education," he said. "I'm not only doing it for Rudolf Wolff, but also for everyone in the industry, trying to get someone to understand the intricacies of our business, rather than just have superficial knowledge. So I think that helps everyone in the business."

Like many other successful young professionals ($60,000 a year in salary and commissions), Beutel describes himself as being extremely goal-oriented.

Oil analyst Peter Beutel poses in his New York office, where he works for Rudolf Wolff Futures, Inc.

Beutel said he attended school in London, when his father was posted there as a reporter for a TV network, then he went to Deerfield Academy, a prestigous New England prep school, and Dartmouth College.

While in school, he said, he made and lost money trading various commodities, then entered an E.F. Hutton trainee program in 1979, where he learned how to chart commodity prices and became a technical analyst.

Recruited to another commodities firm by an ex-Hutton employee, Beutel became an oil trader, then returned to Hutton's national oil desk in November 1982. In April 1984, Beutel and some friends from Hutton moved to another trading firm, before he wound up at Rudolf Wolff in December the same year.

For relaxation, Beutel says he writes — mostly about oil.

Among other things, every week he produces a review of the market's activity, and occasionally supplements this with topical essays.

He said he is not bothered by the stress of Wall Street's fast pace. On the contrary, he said, "if I stay home, I go crazy wondering what's going on here."

Drillers plan golf tournament

The Permian Basin Chapter of the International Association of Drilling Contracts will host its first annual golf tournament at Ranchland Hills Country Club on June 6, 1986. Play will consist of a four-man scramble, with a shotgun start beginning at 8:30 a.m.

Twenty-seven foursomes are available for sponsors at the price of $250 per foursome. Each sponsorship may pick their own foursome. Entry is on a first come first served basis, and each sponsorship includes golf carts, caps, shirts and green fees.

The driving range and practice greens will be open at 7:30 a.m. for anyone wishing to practice. Please check in for your foursome by 8 a.m. at the sign-in table.

Trophies will be awarded for first and second place teams, and there will be prizes for the longest drive and closest to the pin on designated holes.

To secure a foursome, call Debbie Kelly, Tri-Service Drilling Co., at 682-5111 or 563-1290. Payment must be received by May 30, 1986 to secure a spot.

Demand threatens lending program

WASHINGTON (AP) — The home mortgage program for veterans is threatened with a shutdown next month unless Congress approves a second increase in the Veterans Administration's loan guarantee authority this year.

The drop in mortgage interest rates that sparked this year's nationwide homebuying spree created an unprecedented demand for VA-guaranteed mortgages, R.J. Vogel, the VA's benefits director, told a House subcommittee.

The VA's $18.2 billion loan guarantee ceiling will be hit next month if the heavy volume of applications continues, Vogel told the Veterans Affairs housing and memorial affairs subcommittee.

Vogel's testimony followed Senate approval of a bill to raise the VA's guarantee authority to $30.9 billion. In March, Congress raised the loan guarantee authority from $12 billion to its current level.

The VA projects that it will guarantee 400,000 new mortgages during the current fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30, compared to the 179,000 it backed in the 1985 fiscal year.

Under the VA program, qualified veterans obtain mortgages at the current rate of 9.5 percent without making a down payment. The VA guarantees repayment of 60 percent of a mortgage made by a local lender, but not more than $27,500.

Vogel said the heavy demand for VA mortgages has also strained the agency's staff, which has been faced with budget cuts this year.

Congress cut $23 million from the VA's 1986 budget for non-medical operating expenses. The Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law eliminated another $32 million.

A survey of VA offices conducted by the panel indicated that the staff and budget cuts have lengthened the time it takes to process loan applications. One regional office reported that appraisals that used to take less than two weeks now take 10 or 11 weeks.

In addition, 73 experienced loan underwriters took early retirement this year and can't be replaced because of a hiring freeze, the subcommittee said.

"Without a doubt, the home loan guarantee services have been hit hardest and need immediate help," said Rep. Richard Shelby, D-Ala., the subcommittee's chairman.

"Staffing levels have declined to alarming proportions ... and there appears to be a serious deterioration of quality and timeliness of delivery of service in this program," Shelby said.

The subcommittee approved draft legislation that would exempt the loan guarantee program's operating budget from future sequestrations under Gramm-Rudman.

It also directs that $4.2 million earmarked in the VA's current budget for property appraisals be freed to hire more employees to process applications.

Harte-Hanks buys papers in Boston area

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. (AP) — Harte-Hanks Communications Inc. has reached an agreement to acquire Century Newspapers, which publishes six weekly newspapers in the Boston suburbs.

Terms of the agreement were not disclosed.

Under the agreement, Winchester-based Century Newspapers will become part of Harte-Hanks' News-Transcript Group, which is headquartered in Framingham.

Century newspapers include The Arlington Advocate, The Belmont Citizen, The Belmont Herald, The Winchester Star, The Newton Transcript and The Watertown Sun.

Century also owns the National News Service of New York, which produces the weekly Commercial and Financial Chronicle and the monthly Bank and Quotation Record, which are specialized financial publications.

The News-Transcript Group publishes three daily newspapers, the Middlesex News, of Framingham, the Daily Transcript, of Dedhamm, and the News-Tribune, of Waltham, and 10 weeklies.

Robert G. Marbut, president of Harte-Hanks, said the acquisition of Century Newspapers contributed to his company's strategy of concentrating its resources in fewer, larger markets.

Harte-Hanks Communications Inc. owns and operates 23 daily newspapers and more than 100 other publications, including weekly newspapers, city and tourism magazines and a trade publication for the radio industry.

The company also owns four VHF network affiliated television stations.

Offshore rig count expected to decline

HOUSTON (AP) — Offshore oil rigs, which averaged 570 last year, will decline to about 415 this year because of dwindling oil prices, Pennzoil Co. President Richard J. Howe predicted.

The rig count also will "bump along" at 400 for several years and not return to the boom levels of the early 1980s until 1995, he said. Pennzoil itself has trimmed its offshore drilling rigs to just two — one in the Gulf of Mexico's Mobile Bay and another in the Dutch North Sea.

"I can't think of a time when we've had so few rigs operating," Howe told a Monday news conference at the annual Offshore Technology Conference. "I guess it takes a lot more guts than most of us can muster to start drilling under the circumstances.

"It was neat when we could go out there and drill everywhere in the world and just throw dollars at it. But now we have to think about what will happen. And even if prices go back up there will always be that lingering thought about what happens if they go down again. I think people will be a lot more cautious."

Howe also predicted that oil prices will climb to $20 per barrel by the end of the year. He based his prediction on expectations that as U.S. production decreases, demand will increase. He also said he was hopeful that OPEC "will be figuring out some way to get production targets."

"There'll be a lot of pressure on individual members of OPEC to tighten valves a bit and get into the $20 range," he said.

He warned, however, that the rate of increase in crude prices would depend on how long prices are remain depressed now.

"If current prices should continue for several years, we will find ourselves in another unstable situation similar to what happened in 1973 and 1979," Howe said. "We have learned the hard way that sudden price increases like sudden price decreases benefit no one in the long run."

Crude oil prices were less than $15 per barrel Monday, up from even lower $12 levels of a few weeks ago but well off the $28-per-barrel range at this time last year.

"I think it's obvious the longer it stays at this low level the more difficult it is going to be," Howe said. "I don't think anybody knows — I certainly wouldn't venture a guess — as to how many companies might go by the boards. But if it (the price of oil) goes into the low teens and stays there, there will be a lot of companies leaving or not surviving."

Like many other energy companies, Pennzoil has been cutting costs, and last week announced 8 percent staff reductions affecting 600 of the Houston-based company's 7,200 workers.

Sam and Doris Harris can find anything the customer needs, despite the clutter, at the Simon Harris Sporting Goods Co. in downtown Baltimore.

Customers don't mind the clutter

Even longtime employees can get lost

BALTIMORE (AP) — Customers don't mind the dirt or the clutter at Simon Harris Sporting Goods Co. because the price is right, the merchandise is good and 82-year-old Samuel Harris, "your old friend," knows where to find everything.

Even longtime employees occasionally get lost in the disorganized heaps of sweat shirts and pants, the ceiling-high stacks of sneakers and gym shorts and the bulging inventory of goods in the basement and on two upper floors.

"Just like you know where everything is in your kitchen, we know where everything is here," said Doris Harris, Sam's wife, who is equally adept at finding her way through the sporting goods maze.

Adds Sam: "You put it away, you know where it is."

Long after other sporting goods stores fled Baltimore's downtown area for the suburbs, Simon Harris Co. continues to flourish in its original setting, where it was founded in 1887 by Sam's Russian immigrant father. And it does so without any effort to imitate its more flashy competitors.

Louisville Slugger baseball bats no longer sell for 98 cents like they did in Harris' early days, but customers still know they can get a good deal at a store that doesn't fret about its looks.

Boxes of shoes, sneakers and gym shorts line each wall, stacked nearly as high as the discolored ceiling. Near the front of the store, behind a dusty collection of golf bags, is a wooden bin filled with golf clubs, fishing poles and field hockey sticks.

"You look around, it looks like a lot of seconds," said Howard Gumpricht, an 11-year employee who yearns to spruce up the store's image. "But 70 percent to 80 percent of the stuff is perfect here."

An antique cash register that the Harrises still use to ring up sales sits on a wooden counter near the middle of the store. A sign wrapped around it proclaims: "No cash refunds. We reserve the right to check all packages."

There is no trace of wax on the linoleum floor. Need a seat to try on shoes? Try one of the five metal-and-vinyl kitchen chairs. Low overhead, say the Harrises, means lower prices.

One of the best bargains, at $2, is a T-shirt embellished with the store's motto, "Your old friend Simon Harris." The shirts, picked up by visitors to this port city, have been spotted around the world.

On the store's wrapping paper is written, "Another package from your old friend."

"That's my biggest asset — everybody comes looking for me," said Sam, who never went to high school. "That and the bargains." Another big asset is his wife, who, Sam confides, "can outsell them all."

The Harrises like to boast that their store is the only one in Baltimore where you have to wait to get in on busy days. On Saturdays, a guard is posted at the door as patrons line up outside; for security reasons, only a small number are allowed in at one time.

Nat Jackson, 48, has been shopping at Simon Harris since he was a teen-ager. Now the coach of a Little League team, he paid a recent visit to the store to order pants, jerseys and socks for his players, as well as some umpire equipment.

"Simon always gave you a good price, and he always gave you good equipment," Jackson said. "What more could you ask for?"

A number of famous athletes have been Simon Harris customers, including former world welterweight boxing champion Sugar Ray Leonard and former Baltimore Orioles baseball players Jim Palmer and Brooks Robinson. The store even once sold a set of left-handed golf clubs to the wife of the Shah of Iran.

But most of the shop's business comes from residents of nearby poor neighborhoods.

RRC's Wallace: Seeds of next oil crisis already sown

NASHVILLE, TENN. — Likening the country's oil industry to "a patient experiencing a severe cardiac arrest brought about by a lifetime of instability," Texas Railroad Commissioner Mack Wallace prescribed a fee on imported crude oil and petroleum products to revive and stabilize the industry.

Addressing a recent meeting of the National Stripper Well Association, Wallace said, so far, the "free market" treatment program of the administration and some in Congress has worsened the condition of the industry, not helped it.

"The administration wants to give the patient a drink of water, a couple of aspirins and a sunny room to recuperate," he said.

Wallace warned that if present conditions continue, the country will face a crisis as severe as the 1973 Arab oil embargo as low crude prices, rising imports and falling production combine to threaten economic stability and national security.

"We could lose fully one third of this nation's producing capacity within four years," he said. "When that occurs, we will find ourselves in a position of greater dependence on imports than in the darkest days of the 1970s."

The senior Railroad Commission member told the stripper well operators that low crude oil prices now threaten 450,000 stripper wells across the country, wells that produce a total of 1.3 million barrels of oil a day at rates of 10 barrels a day or less.

"At $15, the greatest bulk of the wells producing three barrels a day or less, and a significant number of more costly stripper wells will be plugged and abandoned," Wallace said. "In excess of 400,000 barrels a day of capacity will be lost over the next 12 months. If prices were to fall to $10, the loss would be closer to 900,000 barrels a day."

But, said Wallace, that's just the tip of the iceburg when it comes to loss of producing capacity. Low oil prices are slashing drilling and exploration for new reserves drastically. At $15 a barrel, Wallace foresees a production loss of 1.6 million barrels a day by 1990. That would jump to 2.5 million barrels a day at $10.

Other projected losses swell the total. Alaskan North Slope production will fall by 700,000 barrels a day by 1990 due to normal decline. By 1995, it will drop by 1.1 million barrels a day. Natural gas prices will continue to be depressed by the low crude prices. At $15 a barrel, some 400,000 barrels a day of natural gas liquids production will be lost, according to Wallace.

A sustained crude oil price of $10 to $15 would cause a loss of production capability outside of OPEC and the U.S. of between 2 and 3 million barrels a day. Add it all up, says Wallace, and the world is looking at a potential non-OPEC producing capacity loss of some 5 to 7 million barrels a day by 1990, 3 to 4 million barrels of which would be U.S.

Wallace blasted the administration's free market approach to oil policy saying, "To call the severe oil price decline of the 1980's a 'triumph not of government, but of the free market...' is ridiculous. Let's not mislead and confuse the issue with baseless chirping of 'market, market, market.'

"The unpleasant fact is that foreign governments, many of them unstable, are being permitted to manipulate this country's economic and strategic security under the phony guise of 'free market.'

Wallace said the administration and Congress must realize that 75 percent of the crude oil and petroleum products in the world is produced by governments, not oil companies, making the production, transportation and distribution of oil and gas an instrument of foreign policy.

The solution proposed by Wallace has as its centerpiece the immediate imposition of a sliding, temporary tariff on imported crude and crude products, a move recently supported by the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office as the best means of reducing demand for imports and stimulating domestic exploration.

Wallace said he also supports other measures to slow the oil industry dismantling process such as complete decontrol of natural gas, repeal of the windfall profit tax, repeal of the Fuel Use Act, retaining current tax incentives for energy production, and assistance for stripper wells.

"Notwithstanding the current euphoria over cheap gasoline prices, this nation simply must get back on a course of energy self-sufficiency," Wallace concluded. "We must come together as one wheel with many spokes, all determined to move the U.S. in the direction of energy production at home, which means jobs, self-reliance and national security."

Engineering students see job offers rescinded

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — At Stanford University last week Dr. Christopher Shinkman, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center, was giving pep talks to six unhappy engineering seniors who thought they had jobs and found they did not.

All had been interviewed on campus last fall. Five had accepted jobs with major oil companies in December, and one had agreed to go to work for a major manufacturing company. Thinking they had careers securely begun, the students relaxed.

Recently, however, they received letters from the companies saying the agreement was off because staffs could not be increased.

With graduation fast approaching the six students were distraught. "This is new to me," Dr. Shinkman said, adding that he had never heard of companies making firm offers and then backing out.

"The letters said, in effect, 'we still like you but business conditions have changed,' " he said. "These students have lost job-hunting time they cannot recapture. They are frustrated."

However, he has been urging them to search for jobs in a market that is fairly good for engineers, with salaries a little above 1985 levels.

At the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Robert Weatherall, director of the Office of Career Services, said he was not surprised. "It hasn't happened here yet this spring, but almost every year it does happen to one or two students," he said. "I always tell them it's better to know before they graduate than after six months on the job. It's not the end of the world."

Vicki Lynn, director of Career Planning and Placement at the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, said, "So far we have not had the experience this year, but it did happen here in 1983 for seven students."

"I'm not optimistic this year," she said, noting that campus recruiting by companies for RPI engineers has decreased 20 percent from a year ago, and that half of the companies have made no job offers so far. As for the oil companies, she said: "Chevron has hired one student and Mobil has hired two. Exxon has not hired any nor has IBM, which has a hiring freeze."

"Companies are only taking the cream of the crop," she continued, meaning students with close to a 4-point, or A, average.

"Why one of our good woman electrical engineers with a 2.7 average has not received an offer," she said, adding that the senior had been very active on campus. A 2.7 average out of 4 is about a B minus average and is considered good in a subject like electrical engineering. "I think I can help her find a job, but not exactly what she wants," she added.

"I think we have created a kind of a monstrous situation," Lynn said, pointing to years of successful recruiting for engineering students at well-respected schools like RPI in an economy that almost guaranteed good jobs to engineers.

"Now students this spring without job offers have a false sense of security," she added. As a result, she expects a busy summer with many students using the facilities of the career office.

The problem of job offer recisions has not reached engineering students yet at Carnegie-Mellon University, but J. Dennis Ryan, director of Career Services and Placement, said: "It is not surprising to me. It happened here back in 1983 to five of our students, and I think about 100 were affected nationwide. The company notified the students in late April or May."

Pickens predicts oil prices will rise soon

DENVER (AP) — Maverick Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens predicts the price of oil will start climbing soon and should hit $18 to $20 a barrel by July.

If not by then, "you can count on it by the first of the year," the president of Mesa Petroleum of Amarillo, Texas, told the annual meeting of the Society of American Business Writers and Economic Writers on Monday.

He also said he will form a stockholders' rights group to lobby Congress for secret corporate balloting.

As for oil and gasoline prices, Pickens said consumers will get one more round of lower prices at the gasoline pump before prices start up again.

Gasoline from crude oil that sold at $13 a barrel hasn't yet passed through refineries and reached gasoline pumps.

Pickens warned that the American oil industry's problems are not over yet, despite the expected rise in oil prices.

He noted that 828 drilling rigs are operating now in this country while 1,841 were at work a year ago.

Pickens said the key to oil prices lies in Saudi Arabia, the country that started the price plunge.

"And I don't blame them. Saudi Arabia was victimized by the other countries. When OPEC produces 18 million barrels, we get $10 to $12 oil. If they go to 16 (million barrels a day), the price should be between $18 and $20.

As for secret corporate balloting, Pickens said his lobby will seek a law "that says it's against the law to ask how anyone voted on a corporate matter. Then we'll have accountability. We'll get back to the primary point, stockholders own and managers manage."

Executives now can look at proxy statements to see who voted, how they voted and how many votes they cast, he said.

"There's two groups in Washington without representation, taxpayers and shareholders," he said.

Oil analyst finds himself in print a lot

Nothing new for a reporter's son

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil industry analyst Peter Beutel finds his name in print quite often these days now that the price of oil is a major topic again. But he says talking to reporters is really nothing new for the son of a television anchorman.

"I've never been intimidated by journalists," having grown up with one, he said, referring to his father, Bill Beutel, who appears nightly on New York's WABC-TV.

As an analyst just promoted to assistant manager of the energy group at Rudolf Wolff Futures Inc., the younger Beutel found himself in the middle of a major news event when the price of oil started plummeting in November.

A story that had lost prominence after the price of oil peaked in early 1981 suddenly regained importance.

In the middle of many of the stories were the observations of Peter Beutel.

Beutel, who declines to give his age but appears to be in his late 20s, says he has been trading everything from stocks to cattle since he was 11 years old, and oil — as he points out with characteristic attention to detail — since Jan. 4, 1982.

"I've been a broker. I've been a trader. I've been a technical analyst, and I've been a fundamental analyst. So that's the one thing I want to pride myself on: being able to answer just about any question or know where I could get the answer if I don't have it," he said.

All that has stood Beutel in good stead since November, when oil prices plunged from about $31 a barrel to a low of $9.75, before recovering to hover around $14 on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Against this backdrop, the market's daily gyrations have provided occasionally dramatic news stories, which invariably include comments by Wall Street analysts and traders.

For the commodities trading companies and securities firms whose analysts get quoted — not to mention the analysts themselves — the heightened attention has meant plenty of free publicity.

Among the leading beneficiaries has been Rudolf Wolff, although Beutel swears that neither he nor the company ever planned it that way.

"Nobody here has ever said to me, 'Go out and get quoted.'," he said. "Nobody here has ever come to me and said, 'Here's some extra money for having been quoted.' Nobody has ever said to me, 'Gee, the fact that you get quoted has made you a star.'

"There are no stars here. We work as a team. We're very, very team-oriented," he said, referring to the other traders and analysts around the trading desk at Rudolf Wolff.

Beutel said he talks, "just about every day," to reporters from the Wall Street Journal, the Washington Post, the New York Times, the Financial Times of London, Cable News Network and all the major wire services.

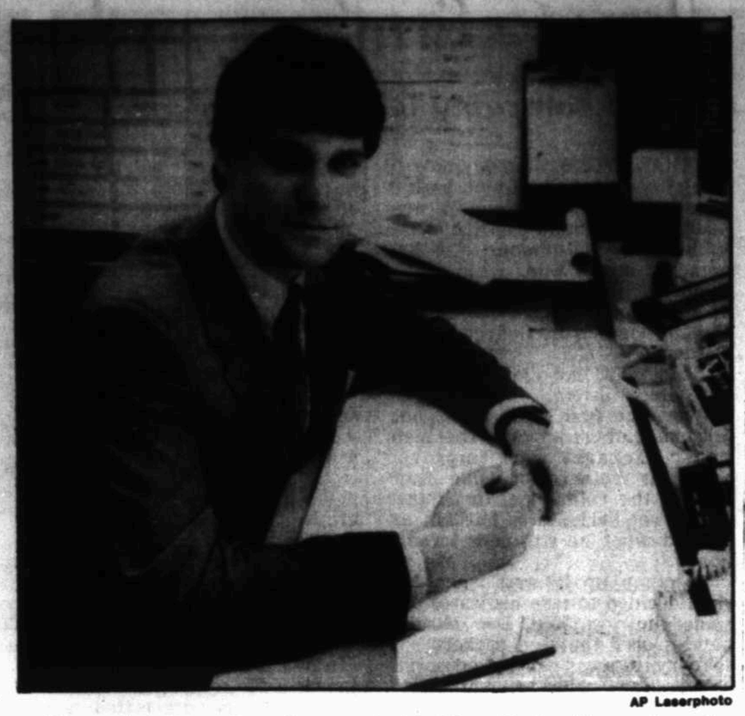

Most analysts are content to wait for queries from the press. But Beutel sometimes calls reporters on his own when he senses news brewing in the market.

While this may smack of glory-mongering, his tips can be helpful to reporters trying to keep track of the worldwide oil market.

"That's where my father ... really helped me: understanding what the composition of a good story is," Beutel said.

"I see my role as education," he said. "I'm not only doing it for Rudolf Wolff, but also for everyone in the industry, trying to get someone to understand the intricacies of our business, rather than just have superficial knowledge. So I think that helps everyone in the business."

Like many other successful young professionals ($60,000 a year in salary and commissions), Beutel describes himself as being extremely goal-oriented.

Oil analyst Peter Beutel poses in his New York office, where he works for Rudolf Wolff Futures, Inc.

Beutel said he attended school in London, when his father was posted there as a reporter for a TV network, then he went to Deerfield Academy, a prestigous New England prep school, and Dartmouth College.

While in school, he said, he made and lost money trading various commodities, then entered an E.F. Hutton trainee program in 1979, where he learned how to chart commodity prices and became a technical analyst.

Recruited to another commodities firm by an ex-Hutton employee, Beutel became an oil trader, then returned to Hutton's national oil desk in November 1982. In April 1984, Beutel and some friends from Hutton moved to another trading firm, before he wound up at Rudolf Wolff in December the same year.

For relaxation, Beutel says he writes — mostly about oil.

Among other things, every week he produces a review of the market's activity, and occasionally supplements this with topical essays.

He said he is not bothered by the stress of Wall Street's fast pace. On the contrary, he said, "if I stay home, I go crazy wondering what's going on here."

Drillers plan golf tournament

The Permian Basin Chapter of the International Association of Drilling Contracts will host its first annual golf tournament at Ranchland Hills Country Club on June 6, 1986. Play will consist of a four-man scramble, with a shotgun start beginning at 8:30 a.m.

Twenty-seven foursomes are available for sponsors at the price of $250 per foursome. Each sponsorship may pick their own foursome. Entry is on a first come first served basis, and each sponsorship includes golf carts, caps, shirts and green fees.

The driving range and practice greens will be open at 7:30 a.m. for anyone wishing to practice. Please check in for your foursome by 8 a.m. at the sign-in table.

Trophies will be awarded for first and second place teams, and there will be prizes for the longest drive and closest to the pin on designated holes.

To secure a foursome, call Debbie Kelly, Tri-Service Drilling Co., at 682-5111 or 563-1290. Payment must be received by May 30, 1986 to secure a spot.

Demand threatens lending program

WASHINGTON (AP) — The home mortgage program for veterans is threatened with a shutdown next month unless Congress approves a second increase in the Veterans Administration's loan guarantee authority this year.

The drop in mortgage interest rates that sparked this year's nationwide homebuying spree created an unprecedented demand for VA-guaranteed mortgages, R.J. Vogel, the VA's benefits director, told a House subcommittee.

The VA's $18.2 billion loan guarantee ceiling will be hit next month if the heavy volume of applications continues, Vogel told the Veterans Affairs housing and memorial affairs subcommittee.

Vogel's testimony followed Senate approval of a bill to raise the VA's guarantee authority to $30.9 billion. In March, Congress raised the loan guarantee authority from $12 billion to its current level.

The VA projects that it will guarantee 400,000 new mortgages during the current fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30, compared to the 179,000 it backed in the 1985 fiscal year.

Under the VA program, qualified veterans obtain mortgages at the current rate of 9.5 percent without making a down payment. The VA guarantees repayment of 60 percent of a mortgage made by a local lender, but not more than $27,500.

Vogel said the heavy demand for VA mortgages has also strained the agency's staff, which has been faced with budget cuts this year.

Congress cut $23 million from the VA's 1986 budget for non-medical operating expenses. The Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law eliminated another $32 million.

A survey of VA offices conducted by the panel indicated that the staff and budget cuts have lengthened the time it takes to process loan applications. One regional office reported that appraisals that used to take less than two weeks now take 10 or 11 weeks.

In addition, 73 experienced loan underwriters took early retirement this year and can't be replaced because of a hiring freeze, the subcommittee said.

"Without a doubt, the home loan guarantee services have been hit hardest and need immediate help," said Rep. Richard Shelby, D-Ala., the subcommittee's chairman.

"Staffing levels have declined to alarming proportions ... and there appears to be a serious deterioration of quality and timeliness of delivery of service in this program," Shelby said.

The subcommittee approved draft legislation that would exempt the loan guarantee program's operating budget from future sequestrations under Gramm-Rudman.

It also directs that $4.2 million earmarked in the VA's current budget for property appraisals be freed to hire more employees to process applications.

Harte-Hanks buys papers in Boston area

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. (AP) — Harte-Hanks Communications Inc. has reached an agreement to acquire Century Newspapers, which publishes six weekly newspapers in the Boston suburbs.

Terms of the agreement were not disclosed.

Under the agreement, Winchester-based Century Newspapers will become part of Harte-Hanks' News-Transcript Group, which is headquartered in Framingham.

Century newspapers include The Arlington Advocate, The Belmont Citizen, The Belmont Herald, The Winchester Star, The Newton Transcript and The Watertown Sun.

Century also owns the National News Service of New York, which produces the weekly Commercial and Financial Chronicle and the monthly Bank and Quotation Record, which are specialized financial publications.

The News-Transcript Group publishes three daily newspapers, the Middlesex News, of Framingham, the Daily Transcript, of Dedhamm, and the News-Tribune, of Waltham, and 10 weeklies.

Robert G. Marbut, president of Harte-Hanks, said the acquisition of Century Newspapers contributed to his company's strategy of concentrating its resources in fewer, larger markets.

Harte-Hanks Communications Inc. owns and operates 23 daily newspapers and more than 100 other publications, including weekly newspapers, city and tourism magazines and a trade publication for the radio industry.

The company also owns four VHF network affiliated television stations.

Offshore rig count expected to decline

HOUSTON (AP) — Offshore oil rigs, which averaged 570 last year, will decline to about 415 this year because of dwindling oil prices, Pennzoil Co. President Richard J. Howe predicted.

The rig count also will "bump along" at 400 for several years and not return to the boom levels of the early 1980s until 1995, he said. Pennzoil itself has trimmed its offshore drilling rigs to just two — one in the Gulf of Mexico's Mobile Bay and another in the Dutch North Sea.

"I can't think of a time when we've had so few rigs operating," Howe told a Monday news conference at the annual Offshore Technology Conference. "I guess it takes a lot more guts than most of us can muster to start drilling under the circumstances.

"It was neat when we could go out there and drill everywhere in the world and just throw dollars at it. But now we have to think about what will happen. And even if prices go back up there will always be that lingering thought about what happens if they go down again. I think people will be a lot more cautious."

Howe also predicted that oil prices will climb to $20 per barrel by the end of the year. He based his prediction on expectations that as U.S. production decreases, demand will increase. He also said he was hopeful that OPEC "will be figuring out some way to get production targets."

"There'll be a lot of pressure on individual members of OPEC to tighten valves a bit and get into the $20 range," he said.

He warned, however, that the rate of increase in crude prices would depend on how long prices are remain depressed now.

"If current prices should continue for several years, we will find ourselves in another unstable situation similar to what happened in 1973 and 1979," Howe said. "We have learned the hard way that sudden price increases like sudden price decreases benefit no one in the long run."

Crude oil prices were less than $15 per barrel Monday, up from even lower $12 levels of a few weeks ago but well off the $28-per-barrel range at this time last year.

"I think it's obvious the longer it stays at this low level the more difficult it is going to be," Howe said. "I don't think anybody knows — I certainly wouldn't venture a guess — as to how many companies might go by the boards. But if it (the price of oil) goes into the low teens and stays there, there will be a lot of companies leaving or not surviving."

Like many other energy companies, Pennzoil has been cutting costs, and last week announced 8 percent staff reductions affecting 600 of the Houston-based company's 7,200 workers.

Sam and Doris Harris can find anything the customer needs, despite the clutter, at the Simon Harris Sporting Goods Co. in downtown Baltimore.

Customers don't mind the clutter

Even longtime employees can get lost

BALTIMORE (AP) — Customers don't mind the dirt or the clutter at Simon Harris Sporting Goods Co. because the price is right, the merchandise is good and 82-year-old Samuel Harris, "your old friend," knows where to find everything.

Even longtime employees occasionally get lost in the disorganized heaps of sweat shirts and pants, the ceiling-high stacks of sneakers and gym shorts and the bulging inventory of goods in the basement and on two upper floors.

"Just like you know where everything is in your kitchen, we know where everything is here," said Doris Harris, Sam's wife, who is equally adept at finding her way through the sporting goods maze.

Adds Sam: "You put it away, you know where it is."

Long after other sporting goods stores fled Baltimore's downtown area for the suburbs, Simon Harris Co. continues to flourish in its original setting, where it was founded in 1887 by Sam's Russian immigrant father. And it does so without any effort to imitate its more flashy competitors.

Louisville Slugger baseball bats no longer sell for 98 cents like they did in Harris' early days, but customers still know they can get a good deal at a store that doesn't fret about its looks.

Boxes of shoes, sneakers and gym shorts line each wall, stacked nearly as high as the discolored ceiling. Near the front of the store, behind a dusty collection of golf bags, is a wooden bin filled with golf clubs, fishing poles and field hockey sticks.

"You look around, it looks like a lot of seconds," said Howard Gumpricht, an 11-year employee who yearns to spruce up the store's image. "But 70 percent to 80 percent of the stuff is perfect here."

An antique cash register that the Harrises still use to ring up sales sits on a wooden counter near the middle of the store. A sign wrapped around it proclaims: "No cash refunds. We reserve the right to check all packages."

There is no trace of wax on the linoleum floor. Need a seat to try on shoes? Try one of the five metal-and-vinyl kitchen chairs. Low overhead, say the Harrises, means lower prices.

One of the best bargains, at $2, is a T-shirt embellished with the store's motto, "Your old friend Simon Harris." The shirts, picked up by visitors to this port city, have been spotted around the world.

On the store's wrapping paper is written, "Another package from your old friend."

"That's my biggest asset — everybody comes looking for me," said Sam, who never went to high school. "That and the bargains." Another big asset is his wife, who, Sam confides, "can outsell them all."

The Harrises like to boast that their store is the only one in Baltimore where you have to wait to get in on busy days. On Saturdays, a guard is posted at the door as patrons line up outside; for security reasons, only a small number are allowed in at one time.

Nat Jackson, 48, has been shopping at Simon Harris since he was a teen-ager. Now the coach of a Little League team, he paid a recent visit to the store to order pants, jerseys and socks for his players, as well as some umpire equipment.

"Simon always gave you a good price, and he always gave you good equipment," Jackson said. "What more could you ask for?"

A number of famous athletes have been Simon Harris customers, including former world welterweight boxing champion Sugar Ray Leonard and former Baltimore Orioles baseball players Jim Palmer and Brooks Robinson. The store even once sold a set of left-handed golf clubs to the wife of the Shah of Iran.

But most of the shop's business comes from residents of nearby poor neighborhoods.

RRC's Wallace: Seeds of next oil crisis already sown

NASHVILLE, TENN. — Likening the country's oil industry to "a patient experiencing a severe cardiac arrest brought about by a lifetime of instability," Texas Railroad Commissioner Mack Wallace prescribed a fee on imported crude oil and petroleum products to revive and stabilize the industry.

Addressing a recent meeting of the National Stripper Well Association, Wallace said, so far, the "free market" treatment program of the administration and some in Congress has worsened the condition of the industry, not helped it.

"The administration wants to give the patient a drink of water, a couple of aspirins and a sunny room to recuperate," he said.

Wallace warned that if present conditions continue, the country will face a crisis as severe as the 1973 Arab oil embargo as low crude prices, rising imports and falling production combine to threaten economic stability and national security.

"We could lose fully one third of this nation's producing capacity within four years," he said. "When that occurs, we will find ourselves in a position of greater dependence on imports than in the darkest days of the 1970s."

The senior Railroad Commission member told the stripper well operators that low crude oil prices now threaten 450,000 stripper wells across the country, wells that produce a total of 1.3 million barrels of oil a day at rates of 10 barrels a day or less.

"At $15, the greatest bulk of the wells producing three barrels a day or less, and a significant number of more costly stripper wells will be plugged and abandoned," Wallace said. "In excess of 400,000 barrels a day of capacity will be lost over the next 12 months. If prices were to fall to $10, the loss would be closer to 900,000 barrels a day."

But, said Wallace, that's just the tip of the iceburg when it comes to loss of producing capacity. Low oil prices are slashing drilling and exploration for new reserves drastically. At $15 a barrel, Wallace foresees a production loss of 1.6 million barrels a day by 1990. That would jump to 2.5 million barrels a day at $10.

Other projected losses swell the total. Alaskan North Slope production will fall by 700,000 barrels a day by 1990 due to normal decline. By 1995, it will drop by 1.1 million barrels a day. Natural gas prices will continue to be depressed by the low crude prices. At $15 a barrel, some 400,000 barrels a day of natural gas liquids production will be lost, according to Wallace.

A sustained crude oil price of $10 to $15 would cause a loss of production capability outside of OPEC and the U.S. of between 2 and 3 million barrels a day. Add it all up, says Wallace, and the world is looking at a potential non-OPEC producing capacity loss of some 5 to 7 million barrels a day by 1990, 3 to 4 million barrels of which would be U.S.

Wallace blasted the administration's free market approach to oil policy saying, "To call the severe oil price decline of the 1980's a 'triumph not of government, but of the free market...' is ridiculous. Let's not mislead and confuse the issue with baseless chirping of 'market, market, market.'

"The unpleasant fact is that foreign governments, many of them unstable, are being permitted to manipulate this country's economic and strategic security under the phony guise of 'free market.'

Wallace said the administration and Congress must realize that 75 percent of the crude oil and petroleum products in the world is produced by governments, not oil companies, making the production, transportation and distribution of oil and gas an instrument of foreign policy.

The solution proposed by Wallace has as its centerpiece the immediate imposition of a sliding, temporary tariff on imported crude and crude products, a move recently supported by the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office as the best means of reducing demand for imports and stimulating domestic exploration.

Wallace said he also supports other measures to slow the oil industry dismantling process such as complete decontrol of natural gas, repeal of the windfall profit tax, repeal of the Fuel Use Act, retaining current tax incentives for energy production, and assistance for stripper wells.

"Notwithstanding the current euphoria over cheap gasoline prices, this nation simply must get back on a course of energy self-sufficiency," Wallace concluded. "We must come together as one wheel with many spokes, all determined to move the U.S. in the direction of energy production at home, which means jobs, self-reliance and national security."

Engineering students see job offers rescinded

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — At Stanford University last week Dr. Christopher Shinkman, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center, was giving pep talks to six unhappy engineering seniors who thought they had jobs and found they did not.

All had been interviewed on campus last fall. Five had accepted jobs with major oil companies in December, and one had agreed to go to work for a major manufacturing company. Thinking they had careers securely begun, the students relaxed.

Recently, however, they received letters from the companies saying the agreement was off because staffs could not be increased.

With graduation fast approaching the six students were distraught. "This is new to me," Dr. Shinkman said, adding that he had never heard of companies making firm offers and then backing out.

"The letters said, in effect, 'we still like you but business conditions have changed,' " he said. "These students have lost job-hunting time they cannot recapture. They are frustrated."

However, he has been urging them to search for jobs in a market that is fairly good for engineers, with salaries a little above 1985 levels.

At the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Robert Weatherall, director of the Office of Career Services, said he was not surprised. "It hasn't happened here yet this spring, but almost every year it does happen to one or two students," he said. "I always tell them it's better to know before they graduate than after six months on the job. It's not the end of the world."

Vicki Lynn, director of Career Planning and Placement at the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, said, "So far we have not had the experience this year, but it did happen here in 1983 for seven students."

"I'm not optimistic this year," she said, noting that campus recruiting by companies for RPI engineers has decreased 20 percent from a year ago, and that half of the companies have made no job offers so far. As for the oil companies, she said: "Chevron has hired one student and Mobil has hired two. Exxon has not hired any nor has IBM, which has a hiring freeze."

"Companies are only taking the cream of the crop," she continued, meaning students with close to a 4-point, or A, average.

"Why one of our good woman electrical engineers with a 2.7 average has not received an offer," she said, adding that the senior had been very active on campus. A 2.7 average out of 4 is about a B minus average and is considered good in a subject like electrical engineering. "I think I can help her find a job, but not exactly what she wants," she added.

"I think we have created a kind of a monstrous situation," Lynn said, pointing to years of successful recruiting for engineering students at well-respected schools like RPI in an economy that almost guaranteed good jobs to engineers.

"Now students this spring without job offers have a false sense of security," she added. As a result, she expects a busy summer with many students using the facilities of the career office.

The problem of job offer recisions has not reached engineering students yet at Carnegie-Mellon University, but J. Dennis Ryan, director of Career Services and Placement, said: "It is not surprising to me. It happened here back in 1983 to five of our students, and I think about 100 were affected nationwide. The company notified the students in late April or May."

Pickens predicts oil prices will rise soon

DENVER (AP) — Maverick Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens predicts the price of oil will start climbing soon and should hit $18 to $20 a barrel by July.

If not by then, "you can count on it by the first of the year," the president of Mesa Petroleum of Amarillo, Texas, told the annual meeting of the Society of American Business Writers and Economic Writers on Monday.

He also said he will form a stockholders' rights group to lobby Congress for secret corporate balloting.

As for oil and gasoline prices, Pickens said consumers will get one more round of lower prices at the gasoline pump before prices start up again.

Gasoline from crude oil that sold at $13 a barrel hasn't yet passed through refineries and reached gasoline pumps.

Pickens warned that the American oil industry's problems are not over yet, despite the expected rise in oil prices.

He noted that 828 drilling rigs are operating now in this country while 1,841 were at work a year ago.

Pickens said the key to oil prices lies in Saudi Arabia, the country that started the price plunge.

"And I don't blame them. Saudi Arabia was victimized by the other countries. When OPEC produces 18 million barrels, we get $10 to $12 oil. If they go to 16 (million barrels a day), the price should be between $18 and $20.

As for secret corporate balloting, Pickens said his lobby will seek a law "that says it's against the law to ask how anyone voted on a corporate matter. Then we'll have accountability. We'll get back to the primary point, stockholders own and managers manage."

Executives now can look at proxy statements to see who voted, how they voted and how many votes they cast, he said.

"There's two groups in Washington without representation, taxpayers and shareholders," he said.

Everly Brothers

Q. Can you tell me how old the Everly Brothers are, if they're married and where they will be in concert?

Linn Davenport
Norristown, Pa.

Also, are they really brothers? They don't look that much alike.

B.D. Simone
North Bergen, N.J.

A. Don is 49; Phil, 47, and yes, they are really brothers. Don has been married three times and Phil twice, but neither is currently married. Regarding concerts, they're starting a three-month national tour on June 20, but as we go to press, the cities haven't been firmed up.

Clarence Williams, top, Peggy Lipton, left, Tige Andrews, and center Michael Cole

Q. Can you tell me whatever happened to the three actors from the TV series "The Mod Squad"?

Jackie S.
Green Bay, Wis.

A. Peggy Lipton married composer-producer Quincy Jones in 1974, and apart from some backup singing with his band, a collaboration with him on a song for Frank Sinatra and the 1979 reunion "Mod Squad" TV movie, has pretty much retired to take care of their family.

Michael Cole left Hollywood for his native Wisconsin after the show ended, but returned a couple of years later and made some guest appearances on TV series. He was recently in an HBO film called "Nickel Mountain."

Clarence Williams III moved to New York after the series ended and began a 10-year stretch of working primarily in the theater, including a stint on Broadway in 1979 in the play "Night and Day."

He then returned to Hollywood, also made some guest appearances on TV series such as "T.J. Hooker" and "Hill Street Blues" and played Prince's father in the movie "Purple Rain."

Q. I've only seen Kathleen Turner in a couple of movies, but I'm taken. Please tell me about her.

G.R.
Princeton, N.J.

A. She's 30, from Springfield, Mo., the third of four children of a foreign-service diplomat and his wife. Because of her father's job, she grew up in Canada, Cuba, Washington, D.C., Caracas and London.

While in London, she became interested in acting. Just as she was about to pursue drama studies there, though, her father died and the family returned to Missouri. She entered Southwest Missouri State as a drama major instead, but after two years, transferred to the University of Maryland.

Upon graduation, she moved to New York and tried out for TV commercials, but was considered too sultry for the housewife type needed. She did land a role on a soap, however, the "Gemini."

In 1981, she made her film debut in the sizzling "Body Heat," then followed it with a turn onstage in "A Midsummer Night's Dream" in Washington. The movies that followed showed a good deal of range: the comedy "The Man with Two Brains," with Steve Martin, the backwoods drama "A Breed Apart," with Rutger Hauer

Kathleen Turner

(still unreleased), the romantic adventures with Michael Douglas, "Romancing the Stone" and "The Jewel of the Nile," and the nearly X-rated "Crimes of Passion" with Anthony Perkins. Next up is Francis Coppola's "Peggy Sue Got Married," due out in the fall.

She lives in New York's Greenwich Village with her husband of two years, real-estate developer Jay Weiss, whom she reportedly met when she was looking for an apartment.

Q. Please tell me what Mary Lou Retton is doing now.

Edward Hartranft
Williamstown, N.J.
Dana Maine
Jamieson, Ore.

A. She's been pretty busy representing her corporate clients, of which there are many, and doing appearances for charities such as the Muscular Dystrophy Foundation and Unicef. She's also taking an active part in the Hands Across America project to take place later this month.

And while she's continuing to train for gymnastics, she's thinking about taking her chances in acting — although, as her agent stresses, she's just thinking about it at the moment. Still, her planned move from her former Houston base to either Los Angeles or New York (she's living at home in West Virginia while she makes up her mind) suggests that she may be doing more than thinking about it before long.

Q. Are Max Baer of "The Beverly Hillbillies" and James Garner the same person?

Mrs. Walker
Fresno, Calif.

A. No, Max Baer Jr., son of the famous fighter, and James Garner are not at all the same person.

Q. Could it be possible that Bo Derek and Linda Evans are mother and daughter? They look so much alike.

K. Gribble
Modesto, Calif.

A. They do, indeed, but the answer is no.

Actress Bess Armstrong, who starred in "The Four Seasons" and "High Road to China," is now appearing in the TV series "All is Forgiven," which airs Saturday nights on NBC.

A born feminist

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features

As Paula Russell in the opening sequence of "All Is Forgiven," Bess Armstrong made television history by, in one day, landing the type of executive job for which most TV heroines have to climb a longtime ladder, married the man of her choice rather than searching for Mr. Right ad infinitum and zoomed into step-parenting only to discover that her teenage stepdaughter can't abide her. All of which is akin to having your cake and eating it because this type of spontaneity is very much the way Ms. Armstrong leads her own life.

"We're what I call this generation women," she explains, "women raised after the first wave of feminism — not pioneers, but those raised with the belief that we were able to be wife, mother, housewife, have a job and do it all brilliantly. My mother did, my mother does, but she was miles ahead of her time.

"At any rate, this series is so well written, so happily conceived. It's produced by the same people who do 'Cheers.' Doesn't that tell you something? It's comedy, but a very special, gentle, slightly off-center brand of comedy, without caution."

She explains, "I go for a job interview and end up with something I didn't anticipate: the job as producer of a failing soap opera in New York City. The man who talks me into taking it is Matt Russell (played by Terry Knoxx, who used to play Peter White on 'St. Elsewhere'). He has to be supportive because I'm slightly scared — the show is owned by an eccentric woman you never see, you merely hear her over an intercom and you know that voice is going to hang over my head forever like Damocles' sword.

"Matt is the ideal man left over from the '60s. As a student he organized peace rallies. Now he's a successful businessman. I am a woman with a wonderful but frightening job who also marries and becomes a stepmother all in one show. And we keep the same pace every week!"

The sit-com experience obviously agrees with Ms. Armstrong. She looks radiant wearing white sports clothes. When I first interviewed her she was making the movie "High Road to China," and wearing a short bob, at a time when everyone else was wearing long hair. Now with the short bob fashionable, she has her burnished hair long and with bangs.

After "High Road," you expected her to fall in love with everyone's favorite and her co-star Tom Selleck and to sign for a string of other films.

Instead, she fell in love — not with the star but with the second assistant director, Briton Chris Carreras with whom she then proceeded to travel all over the world, virtually dropping her own career in favor of his.

"I had a great time," she says enthusiastically. "I'd always dreamed of traveling. There comes a point in time when you have to remind yourself that art is supposed to imitate life. The problem is that in this business you're inclined often to stop living because you're working so much and you lose perspective. I think that whether I knew it or not, I'd reached a time where my work as an actress needed a break. I don't think there's any question I've come back stronger."

She married Carreras and loved living in Cheltenham, England, in the Costwolds, in Maidenhead outside the Thames Valley and of course in London. "The three summers I was there were the best summers England ever had, they tell me. Weeks and weeks of beautiful sunshine. I miss England, love England. And India."

Carreras was working on "The Far Pavillions" and Ms. Armstrong was part of the crew. "I took over the costume department and had a great time," she says, remembering gleefully how she worked with "20 crazed Hindu tailors and 10 seamstresses, none of them speaking one word of English. I had one translator. I'd follow him around with my little pad and pencil trying to figure out what was needed for the next day's shooting.

"Total disorganization! I ran that workroom for a month and it was tremendous fun. It gave me insight into handling huge egos and temperaments diplomatically and juggle them all — which is what my character Paula has to do daily on her soap opera."

And speaking of Paula, does Ms. Armstrong think herself equally capable of juggling a demanding career and marriage? She doesn't flinch. Her hazel eyes flash. "Having been through marriage, (to Carreras) albeit a brief one, I'm far more prepared than I was," she says candidly.

"I used to believe that I could do it all — remember the stupid perfume ad: 'She brings home the bacon, fries it in the pan and looks fabulous for her man'? I'm more realistic now in my expectations. I get more done now because I'm off my own back. I know it's likely that something will go by the wayside. I may not have time to buy the bacon and it doesn't matter in the least whether I'm the one who fries it. The important thing is eating it together. It's so good to earn your own money.

"Since I left Daddy, it never occurred to me that anyone was going to pay my bills. I have a really hard time with that sort of thing. My brief experience was all to the good. It prepared me for whatever is coming next. I truly believe that everything happens for a reason."

Hiding out affected artist's sculpture

By SHARON SINGER
King Features

Forty-one years ago sculptor Gena Tenenbaum hid in a cellar for 18 months to avoid capture by the Nazis, a terrifying experience at an early age that has profoundly influenced her art.

Two of her sculptures particularly express the vital necessity of warmth and caring. "Family," done in lava rock, shows a father, mother and child supporting each other and growing together from the same source.

"False God," a more abstract work, is a dark, organic fanciful figure-eight in African wonderstone, encircling a disc of white marble. For Ms. Tenenbaum, marble is a cold stone, and the piece is a microcosm of the materialistic world turning away from human fulfillment to values measured in "round silver dollars."

Having recently had a successful solo show, she would understandably feel that "everything is unfolding as it should." But her ambitions are skyrocketing toward larger and larger pieces. "I don't like the limitation of size or decor to influence my sculpture," she says.

This need for freedom and large-scale outdoor works that express "fundamental values with staying power" she traces back to the severe restrictions of her youth.

Born in Sambor, Poland, which is now part of Russia, Ms. Tenenbaum went into hiding in the basement of a grain warehouse with her mother, sister and 23 others during the Nazi occupation.

Before the war, her father had owned the warehouse, but the Nazis confiscated it as a vital food supply source, and needing her father's expertise to supervise it, kept him working for them.

The warehouse, in the center of Sambor, was outside the ghetto and therefore provided a perfect hiding place, unlikely to arouse suspicion. Led by Ms. Tenenbaum's father, the group smuggled everything required for a lengthy asylum into the cellar prior to their self-imposed incarceration — bedding, clothes, books, lumber to build bunks, sugar, oil, kerosene, grinders for the grain they would later steal from the warehouse. Under the floor, they dug a well for fresh water and constructed toilet facilities.

They slept by day while the factory worked. Cover of night allowed them to sneak upstairs to look out the windows and obtain the grain to be ground into flour for bread. This respite brought little relief, however, when from the windows they saw their friends and relatives being taken away or killed.

During this entire period, young Gena never saw her father, whom she adored, but she used to drop letters to his family through a window. Otherwise, the cellar was sealed off, except for one riser of staircase that opened onto a tunnel to the warehouse.

"Somehow, even in this situation," she recalls, "I felt I would survive. I felt my father would protect me." And survive they did. Their supplies and mental fortitude lasted until August 1944 when the Russians liberated Sambor.

Some of the other fugitives were not so lucky. They left the safety of the cellar too soon, thinking the liberation had come when they saw partisans in the streets. But the Germans returned and those who were impatient did not survive to see the liberation.

Within five months, each of the four members of Ms. Tenenbaum's family escaped separately, Gena with some friends of her father's. The joy of leaving was marred only by the necessary destruction of her diary, which had recorded the personalities, love affairs, quarrels and events of the cellar during those 18 months. The diary was in Polish and she was masquerading as a Greek. Nothing must betray their true identity.

Their route took them through Poland to Munich, where they settled into a new life. "These are my happiest memories, even though it was in Germany," Ms. Tenenbaum remembers.

Everly Brothers

Q. Can you tell me how old the Everly Brothers are, if they're married and where they will be in concert?

Linn Davenport
Norristown, Pa.

Also, are they really brothers? They don't look that much alike.

B.D. Simone
North Bergen, N.J.

A. Don is 49; Phil, 47, and yes, they are really brothers. Don has been married three times and Phil twice, but neither is currently married. Regarding concerts, they're starting a three-month national tour on June 20, but as we go to press, the cities haven't been firmed up.

Q. Can you tell me whatever happened to the three actors from the TV series "The Mod Squad"?

Jackie S.
Green Bay, Wis.

A. Peggy Lipton married composer-producer Quincy Jones in 1974, and apart from some backup singing with his band, a collaboration with him on a song for Frank Sinatra and the 1979 reunion "Mod Squad" TV movie, has pretty much retired to take care of their family.

Michael Cole left Hollywood for his native Wisconsin after the show ended, but returned a couple of years later and made some guest appearances on TV series. He was recently in an HBO film called "Nickel Mountain."

Clarence Williams III moved to New York after the series ended and began a 10-year stretch of working primarily in the theater, including a stint on Broadway in 1979 in the play "Night and Day."

He then returned to Hollywood, also made some guest appearances on TV series such as "T.J. Hooker" and "Hill Street Blues" and played Prince's father in the movie "Purple Rain."

Q. I've only seen Kathleen Turner in a couple of movies, but I'm taken. Please tell me about her.

G.R.
Princeton, N.J.

A. She's 30, from Springfield, Mo., the third of four children of a foreign-service diplomat and his wife. Because of her father's job, she grew up in Canada, Cuba, Washington, D.C., Caracas and London.

While in London, she became interested in acting. Just as she was about to pursue drama studies there, though, her father died and the family returned to Missouri. She entered Southwest Missouri State as a drama major instead, but after two years, transferred to the University of Maryland.

Upon graduation, she moved to New York and tried out for TV commercials, but was considered too sultry for the housewife type needed. She did land a role on a soap, however, the "Gemini."

In 1981, she made her film debut in the sizzling "Body Heat," then followed it with a turn onstage in "A Midsummer Night's Dream" in Washington. The movies that followed showed a good deal of range: the comedy "The Man with Two Brains," with Steve Martin, the backwoods drama "A Breed Apart," with Rutger Hauer

Kathleen Turner

(still unreleased), the romantic adventures with Michael Douglas, "Romancing the Stone" and "The Jewel of the Nile," and the nearly X-rated "Crimes of Passion" with Anthony Perkins. Next up is Francis Coppola's "Peggy Sue Got Married," due out in the fall.

She lives in New York's Greenwich Village with her husband of two years, real-estate developer Jay Weiss, whom she reportedly met when she was looking for an apartment.

Q. Please tell me what Mary Lou Retton is doing now.

Edward Hartranft
Williamstown, N.J.
Dana Maine
Jamieson, Ore.

A. She's been pretty busy representing her corporate clients, of which there are many, and doing appearances for charities such as the Muscular Dystrophy Foundation and Unicef. She's also taking an active part in the Hands Across America project to take place later this month.

And while she's continuing to train for gymnastics, she's thinking about taking her chances in acting — although, as her agent stresses, she's just thinking about it at the moment. Still, her planned move from her former Houston base to either Los Angeles or New York (she's living at home in West Virginia while she makes up her mind) suggests that she may be doing more than thinking about it before long.

Q. Are Max Baer of "The Beverly Hillbillies" and James Garner the same person?

Mrs. Walker
Fresno, Calif.

A. No, Max Baer Jr., son of the famous fighter, and James Garner are not at all the same person.

Q. Could it be possible that Bo Derek and Linda Evans are mother and daughter? They look so much alike.

K. Gribble
Modesto, Calif.

A. They do, indeed, but the answer is no.

Actress Bess Armstrong, who starred in "The Four Seasons" and "High Road to China," is now appearing in the TV series "All is Forgiven," which airs Saturday nights on NBC.

A born feminist

King Features

As Paula Russell in the opening sequence of "All Is Forgiven," Bess Armstrong made television history by, in one day, landing the type of executive job for which most TV heroines have to climb a longtime ladder, married the man of her choice rather than searching for Mr. Right ad infinitum and zoomed into step-parenting only to discover that her teenage stepdaughter can't abide her. All of which is akin to having your cake and eating it because this type of spontaneity is very much the way Ms. Armstrong leads her own life.

"We're what I call this generation women," she explains, "women raised after the first wave of feminism — not pioneers, but those raised with the belief that we were able to be wife, mother, housewife, have a job and do it all brilliantly. My mother did, my mother does, but she was miles ahead of her time.

"At any rate, this series is so well written, so happily conceived. It's produced by the same people who do 'Cheers.' Doesn't that tell you something? It's comedy, but a very special, gentle, slightly off-center brand of comedy, without caution."

She explains, "I go for a job interview and end up with something I didn't anticipate: the job as producer of a failing soap opera in New York City. The man who talks me into taking it is Matt Russell (played by Terry Knoxx, who used to play Peter White on 'St. Elsewhere'). He has to be supportive because I'm slightly scared — the show is owned by an eccentric woman you never see, you merely hear her over an intercom and you know that voice is going to hang over my head forever like Damocles' sword.

"Matt is the ideal man left over from the '60s. As a student he organized peace rallies. Now he's a successful businessman. I am a woman with a wonderful but frightening job who also marries and becomes a stepmother all in one show. And we keep the same pace every week!"

The sit-com experience obviously agrees with Ms. Armstrong. She looks radiant wearing white sports clothes. When I first interviewed her she was making the movie "High Road to China," and wearing a short bob, at a time when everyone else was wearing long hair. Now with the short bob fashionable, she has her burnished hair long and with bangs.

After "High Road," you expected her to fall in love with everyone's favorite and her co-star Tom Selleck and to sign for a string of other films.

Instead, she fell in love — not with the star but with the second assistant director, Briton Chris Carreras with whom she then proceeded to travel all over the world, virtually dropping her own career in favor of his.

"I had a great time," she says enthusiastically. "I'd always dreamed of traveling. There comes a point in time when you have to remind yourself that art is supposed to imitate life. The problem is that in this business you're inclined often to stop living because you're working so much and you lose perspective. I think that whether I knew it or not, I'd reached a time where my work as an actress needed a break. I don't think there's any question I've come back stronger."

She married Carreras and loved living in Cheltenham, England, in the Costwolds, in Maidenhead outside the Thames Valley and of course in London. "The three summers I was there were the best summers England ever had, they tell me. Weeks and weeks of beautiful sunshine. I miss England, love England. And India."

Carreras was working on "The Far Pavillions" and Ms. Armstrong was part of the crew. "I took over the costume department and had a great time," she says, remembering gleefully how she worked with "20 crazed Hindu tailors and 10 seamstresses, none of them speaking one word of English. I had one translator. I'd follow him around with my little pad and pencil trying to figure out what was needed for the next day's shooting.

"Total disorganization! I ran that workroom for a month and it was tremendous fun. It gave me insight into handling huge egos and temperaments diplomatically and juggle them all — which is what my character Paula has to do daily on her soap opera."

And speaking of Paula, does Ms. Armstrong think herself equally capable of juggling a demanding career and marriage? She doesn't flinch. Her hazel eyes flash. "Having been through marriage, (to Carreras) albeit a brief one, I'm far more prepared than I was," she says candidly.

"I used to believe that I could do it all — remember the stupid perfume ad: 'She brings home the bacon, fries it in the pan and looks fabulous for her man'? I'm more realistic now in my expectations. I get more done now because I'm off my own back. I know it's likely that something will go by the wayside. I may not have time to buy the bacon and it doesn't matter in the least whether I'm the one who fries it. The important thing is eating it together. It's so good to earn your own money.

"Since I left Daddy, it never occurred to me that anyone was going to pay my bills. I have a really hard time with that sort of thing. My brief experience was all to the good. It prepared me for whatever is coming next. I truly believe that everything happens for a reason."

Hiding out affected artist's sculpture

By SHARON SINGER
King Features

Forty-one years ago sculptor Gena Tenenbaum hid in a cellar for 18 months to avoid capture by the Nazis, a terrifying experience at an early age that has profoundly influenced her art.

Two of her sculptures particularly express the vital necessity of warmth and caring. "Family," done in lava rock, shows a father, mother and child supporting each other and growing together from the same source.

"False God," a more abstract work, is a dark, organic fanciful figure-eight in African wonderstone, encircling a disc of white marble. For Ms. Tenenbaum, marble is a cold stone, and the piece is a microcosm of the materialistic world turning away from human fulfillment to values measured in "round silver dollars."

Having recently had a successful solo show, she would understandably feel that "everything is unfolding as it should." But her ambitions are skyrocketing toward larger and larger pieces. "I don't like the limitation of size or decor to influence my sculpture," she says.

This need for freedom and large-scale outdoor works that express "fundamental values with staying power" she traces back to the severe restrictions of her youth.

Born in Sambor, Poland, which is now part of Russia, Ms. Tenenbaum went into hiding in the basement of a grain warehouse with her mother, sister and 23 others during the Nazi occupation.

Before the war, her father had owned the warehouse, but the Nazis confiscated it as a vital food supply source, and needing her father's expertise to supervise it, kept him working for them.

The warehouse, in the center of Sambor, was outside the ghetto and therefore provided a perfect hiding place, unlikely to arouse suspicion. Led by Ms. Tenenbaum's father, the group smuggled everything required for a lengthy asylum into the cellar prior to their self-imposed incarceration — bedding, clothes, books, lumber to build bunks, sugar, oil, kerosene, grinders for the grain they would later steal from the warehouse. Under the floor, they dug a well for fresh water and constructed toilet facilities.

They slept by day while the factory worked. Cover of night allowed them to sneak upstairs to look out the windows and obtain the grain to be ground into flour for bread. This respite brought little relief, however, when from the windows they saw their friends and relatives being taken away or killed.

During this entire period, young Gena never saw her father, whom she adored, but she used to drop letters to his family through a window. Otherwise, the cellar was sealed off, except for one riser of staircase that opened onto a tunnel to the warehouse.

"Somehow, even in this situation," she recalls, "I felt I would survive. I felt my father would protect me." And survive they did. Their supplies and mental fortitude lasted until August 1944 when the Russians liberated Sambor.

Some of the other fugitives were not so lucky. They left the safety of the cellar too soon, thinking the liberation had come when they saw partisans in the streets. But the Germans returned and those who were impatient did not survive to see the liberation.

Within five months, each of the four members of Ms. Tenenbaum's family escaped separately, Gena with some friends of her father's. The joy of leaving was marred only by the necessary destruction of her diary, which had recorded the personalities, love affairs, quarrels and events of the cellar during those 18 months. The diary was in Polish and she was masquerading as a Greek. Nothing must betray their true identity.

Their route took them through Poland to Munich, where they settled into a new life. "These are my happiest memories, even though it was in Germany," Ms. Tenenbaum remembers.

Ms. Armstrong is the kind of woman who was born a feminist but was never militant. "The trouble with the militants is that they denigrated the job of being a housewife. It's a full-time job, as anyone knows who's ever tried. I never did understand anyone who described herself as only a housewife.

"I've decided that the best thing to do is live my life as I want to live it and at least set an example of free will rather than getting too involved in the age-old battle between the sexes. The more freedom women gain, the more threatened men feel. And it's our own fault because we've raised our sons to believe they are princes destined to be kings.

"As incredibly educated as my mom was, she treated my brother just a little differently than she treated my sisters and me. He was the fourth. She had twin girls first, Weezie and Mary, then me, then Alex, and then, oops, about six years later, my sister Caroline. We are all very very close; I wouldn't have been born to any other family in the world.

"Our parents still live in Baltimore, in the same house where we were raised, my older sisters are married and live two minutes away, and my brother lives out here with me. He's a musician-singer-songwriter and we've had a great time together. We're just about to take separate apartments, as a matter of fact, because we've decided it's time to play grownups.

"Our family is one in a thousand. Our parents are such exceptional people and they understand us. They were the black sheep in their families in the era before black sheep were popular. They both fought in World War II. Mom was a code breaker in Washington, Dad was in the South Pacific."

She explains, "Mom was a reaction to her own Southern belle mother. She has told us how she used to overhear her mother's friends discussing her when she was about 26 and getting her Ph.D. in medieval romance languages. 'You know she'll never get married,' they'd whisper, 'because she'd turn down invitations to a dance in order to study.'

"And here was my father who dropped out of law school when his father was attorney general of Maryland! Both Mom and Dad experimented with acting, but they were born teachers. Both of them had kicked around a fair amount, which to me is what you should do. By the time they met and married, what they wanted was to settle in one place and never move, have children and make a stable life for those children.

"My dad taught English and staged all the school dramatics in the boys' school across the street from the girls' school my sisters and I attended. My mom had gone there too and my dad to the school where he taught.

Bess Armstrong

"We were so privileged because our parents took delight in having us and were so with us; we were the recipients of their experience and education. Our dinner discussions were never polite. They still aren't! They're wild, loud and opinionated on every subject in the world."

She continues, "I love going home. It's a haven. I was there for two weeks at Christmas. I've only missed one Christmas at home in my entire life. Now, with the grandchildren, it's wilder than ever. My mother will sit there, ladling out food, saying, 'This has to be the absolutely worst of all Christmas dinners, don't you think?'

"There were four under 5 sitting at their own separate table. The 1-year-old drank nail polish before the hors d'oeuvres and relieved herself of her diaper in the middle of the kitchen before anyone had seconds. The dogs were everywhere and the two music teachers who taught two generations of us come and spend the holidays with us and put up with all this insanity."

Ms. Armstrong's face kindles with laughter and you know her mother must be a beauty because this daughter certainly is. She won't accept it when you tell her. "That is the sort of assumption people are prone to make about me. They always tend to assume I was a prom queen or a cheerleader, when, actually, during my key years — 12, 13, 14 — I was the class nerd. I had scrambled hair, no social graces whatsoever, was very shy, and I played the violin. That was the kiss of death. The hip girls were the ones who had developed bodies. They were great in athletics. They were cheerleaders.

"All to the good, I guess, because it forced me to develop other aspects of myself, especially humor. Humor was highly prized in our family. I always thought my sisters the most drop-dead funny people I'd ever met. It took some years for me to come into my own.

"Drama was what helped most. I was a student at Bryn Mawr School for 14 years, and when I got into the high-school phase of it, there were a lot of plays. My parents made a deal with me: 'Stay on the honor roll and we'll stay out of your way,' they said. 'Just remember, theater is the whipped cream of life. You've got to do something substantial to support yourself.' Substantial meant Latin and Greek. I went on to Brown University, studied Latin and Greek and ended up by the end of my freshman year in the theater.

"By the time I finished college, I'd done more than 100 plays. Theater was my dream. I grew up without TV, ignorant of movies as well. Some people — my fiance, for example — grew up with movies in their eyes from the time they were born. He must have watched 'The Late Late Show' all of his life because if we flip to a movie on TV, he can within three frames tell you the name of any film there is."

Her fiance is a young film producer whom she has known for the past year and a half. "He's one of the baby executives...no, I'd rather not use his name...and no, we've never worked together. We're careful about that. Suffice it to say he's a very talented man and we're very different people because he knows the movie business from the ground up and I don't. I was only interested in theater. It was only by coincidence I ended up in television. Which shows you can never plan the course your life is going to take."

She was doing "Twelfth Night" off-Broadway when she acquired her first agent and began doing commercials. That led to TV and film auditions. The agent sent her to three auditions in one day, two for pilots, one for a soap opera.

She didn't know you could only accept one, so she accepted all three. What they gambled on was the only unsure thing, a screen test for the series "On Our Own." She won the role and it turned her career in a new direction. Her first major film was "The Four Seasons"; her second, "High Road to China."

"At that point what I wanted was adventure, to run all over the world and play every kind of part. I ran all over the world. Now I'm glad for the possibility of settling down a while."

If you can call settling down playing a woman with as complicated a personal life and as wild a career as the heroine of "All Is Forgiven." "We've done a whole season of shows and I'm still here," laughs Ms. Armstrong.

SCULPTURE

"My father was in business, bartering goods. Everything was rationed, but he would obtain shirts and exchange them for shoes. From his share, as well as the gold coins he had managed to hide during the war and bring with him, we were able to have a fabulous apartment.

"Private tutors helped me catch up — I had never been to school — French, English, skiing, typing. I wanted to learn everything. Then I jumped into the highest class possible. My sister, who is a physicist, wrote the high-school finals without attending class and immediately entered university. I studied modern dance and German literature and started to travel.

"I went with a girlfriend to Paris and Italy when I was 16, and I was exposed to a completely different world, going to museums, seeing all the art I could. My parents were very modern and liberal and encouraged me to explore everything."

After studying philosophy, medicine and fine arts at the University of Munich, she emigrated to the United States. In New York she began studying painting at the Art Students League, but it wasn't long before sculpture sang its siren song.

The masters in Europe — Rodin, Cellini and the Russian Archipenko — had made an indelible impression. She had to try it: "I found more satisfaction and challenge in sculpture. If you want something very badly, you have to try, otherwise, you'll never know."

In New York, she met and married real estate developer Joseph Tenenbaum. The prospect of handling both a career and a family didn't faze her. "I can do it all," she says matter-of-factly.

She has raised three children in a close family setting. At 30, Sidney, the eldest, is an architect in New York City. Gary, 27, is a computer consultant and runs the Toronto office for Swedish-owned Multitek Inc. Tamara, 20, is in law school.

It helped to have a supportive husband who is "very understanding, and has never put pressure on me. Everything I did was out of love, not duty," she says.

Ms. Tenenbaum began to work seriously after the three children were in school. In 1958 her husband's business brought the family to Toronto and she found "you can do more with your time here than in New York."

In the mid '70s, Igor Kuchinsky entered her life. A composer and piano virtuoso, Kuchinsky is, more importantly to Ms. Tenenbaum, also the director of the Galerie Heritage and a consultant to government and private art collections. He fell in love with her work at first sight and included her in a theme exhibition titled "Love Story" honoring International Women's Year in 1975.

"Of all the sculptors in my stable," observes Kuchinsky, "Gena has the best use of the stone. She treats it as a living thing."

"I learned how to talk to the stones," Ms. Tenenbaum says, "and they learned how to respond. I study the stone, the outer surface, veins and markings. A preconceived idea never corresponds with the stone.

"I believe there's a form within the stone already. I try to read it, to see what's there, to be in tune with it, and then to bring it forth. That's the most difficult part, fighting in yourself about what you're going to do. Once I decide, I'm at peace. The physical part is easy."

With stones weighing anywhere from 150 to 1,000 pounds, "easy" is not the word that comes to mind to an observer. But she says, "I have a forklift, two sons and a husband. They complained but they helped."

"I can turn at 200-pound stone around myself. My studio is in the house — there was a special provision made for it when the house was built. That also helps."

Her studio consists of two rooms on the ground floor of the house. One is sparse yet cluttered with rubber molds, clay models and maquettes. A smaller room houses the steel cabinet on which the works are carved, chipped at and chiseled.

The dust that falls from the stone while it's being carved is sucked up by three hoses attached to a vacuum motor. Despite this precaution, the walls, floor and ceiling are covered in white powder.

Ms. Tenenbaum wears a mask while working. A compressor is housed in a tiny room off the studio for the pneumatic chipping hammer. When the compressor and the vacuum motors are both on, the noise is deafening. A more peaceful work area has been set up on an outdoor pedestal in a small back courtyard, behind the house.

"When I'm working, there's an effusion of energy," she says. "At the end of the day, rather than being exhausted, I'm elated, especially when I'm happy with the work. With each piece I take on more challenges, more experimentation. That's why I can part with my pieces — I know the next one will be better.

"It's the idea that interests me. Once it's developed, I lose interest and have to force myself to complete the piece. Otherwise I'd have a roomful of unfinished sculpture. I have that staying power now and I know I can do it."

Preferring to work in stone, she selects each block individually in New York or Italy, buying up to 20 pieces at a time. "I like to see the stones first. I like rough shapes and unusual colors — Canadian lava rock, Pakistani onyx, grainless African wonderstone.

Considering the massive nature of the work and the gallery prices for the sculpture ranging from $1,200 to $12,000, it has taken time for Tenenbaum to be able to live from her work. As vice-president of the Sculptors Society of Canada, she is well aware of the problems facing sculptors everywhere.

"Early collectors didn't care about public opinion," she says. "They responded instinctively to the piece. They didn't care if the artist was famous. Very few people have this courage. Today in North America, collectors follow the accepted opinions of the critics."

Through the Sculptors' Society, her work has gone to Paris, London and Brussels and she has had three solo shows in Europe, as well as many group shows in Toronto, Montreal, Florence and New York. But her desire to do massive outdoor pieces has yet to be fulfilled.

She was commissioned to do a large outdoor piece for the Jewish Community Center in Calgary, to commemorate the holocaust, but then they ran out of money. Ms. Tenenbaum had designed an eight-foot-high work entitled Holocaust and sent them the maquette.

The inspiration for Holocaust was her aunt, a woman who lost all her children to the Nazis and yet survived the war to live with her husband to a very old age, perpetually in pain and filled with guilt.

"It would be a betrayal of everything I went through and to all the people that died if I didn't retain a commitment to Judaism," Ms. Tenenbaum says.

'Blue City' no Hamlet or Hammet

Forrest

A ruler is murdered. His widow immediately gets intimate with another man, then his young male heir believes he must avenge his father's death.

The basic plot for one of the greatest dramas of all time, William Shakespeare's "Hamlet," is turned into a juvenile Brat Pack crime action-drama in "Blue City."

Billy — played by Judd Nelson, one of the prominent members of the so-called Brat Pack of young performers — is the son of the powerful but slightly corrupt mayor of a South Florida town. He returns home after being away for years only to discover that his father was murdered six months earlier.

Billy, who was obviously spoiled rotten by Dad but hasn't bothered to call home in years, is suddenly overwhelmed by a Hamlet-like desire to avenge his father.

For some incomprehensible reason, a nice young woman, played by fellow Brat Pack member Ally Sheedy, falls for the rather obnoxious Billy and gets dragged into his vengeful scheming. Unfortunately, there's no real chemistry between Nelson and Ms. Sheedy, so the romance simply feels fake.

Ms. Sheedy is no Ophelia, but then again Nelson isn't exactly Hamlet himself.

Unlike Hamlet, Billy has no trouble making up his mind what to do. Without any real evidence at all (not even a visit from his father's ghost) he instantly decides a local casino operator — also his stepmother's new lover — is responsible for the murder.

Our erstwhile hero proceeds to threaten the man's life, blow up his car, rob his business and take an ax to his casino.

All the while, Billy wears a suede jacket — for that "Rebel Without A Cause" look, one supposes — even though everyone else around him is in shorts, T-shirts and other tropical attire.

Maybe the fact that he's sweltering under that heavy costuming contributes to his bad attitude.

He drips with sarcastic statements like, "Well, I'm real sorry that the family gene pool doesn't live up to your expectations." Many of Billy's wisecracks actually are clever, but there are certainly no "To be or not to be" soliloquies anywhere in "Blue City."

Billy is not the only one with startlingly outrageous lines. At one point Scott Wilson, who plays the casino operator, screeches, "It took 500 years of pure Anglo-Saxon breeding to produce something this big and stupid!"

Although Billy does some big and stupid things that should get him locked away in a prison for a long time, the movie never for a moment treats him as anything other than heroic.

The screenplay utterly lacks any of "Hamlet's" moral ambiguity. It may seem silly to expect that of an action flick, but the hazy line between the dark and light sides of the law was in fact vital to all the great film noir crime movies of the 1940s.

One might expect to see some film noir touches in "Blue City" since it was adapted from a Dashiell Hammet-style novel by Ross MacDonald, but the movie actually has much more in common with "Miami Vice" than "The Maltese Falcon."

"Blue City" isn't much like Hammet or "Hamlet."

"Blue City, rated R for violence, some strong language and sexual content, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

'Clan' features feminist caveperson

On the Caveman Movie Ratings Scale, "Clan of the Cave Bear" is neither as stunningly good as "One Million Years B.C." or as good as the not-too-hot "Quest for Fire."

"One Million Years B.C." was a spectacularly inaccurate look at man's prehistory starring Raquel Welch. Actually, since the scantily endowed Ms. Welch wore mankind's first leather bikini in that 1967 opus, it might be more accurate to say the film starred Ms. Welch's chest, which was certainly the most memorable thing in the movie.

"Quest for Fire" was 1982's ambitious and interesting — but often unintentionally funny — attempt to show how primitive man progressed against great hardships. Despite its flaws, the scenes of a tribe struggling to survive in the rugged Ice Age world weren't easy to forget.

"Clan of the Cave Bear" is the screen version of Jean Auel's bestselling novel of the same title and stars Daryl Hannah ("Splash's" mermaid) as a misunderstood Cro-Magnon woman in a Neanderthal world.

Judging from Ms. Hannah, Cro-Magnon humans were history's first race of fashion models, who just happened to wander the same globe as the less intelligent and considerably less good-looking Neanderthals.

As a young girl, Ms. Hannah's character, named Ayla, gets separated from her Cro-Magnon parents in an awful — awful-looking, actually — earthquake. The "quake" — blatantly created by heartily jiggling the camera — is even cheesier than most of the special effects in "One Million Years B.C."

After surviving this pseudo-catastrophe, Ayla is reluctantly adopted by a band of Neanderthals. There she blossoms into mankind's first fur-clad feminist — a big change from Ms. Welch's cave-dwelling sex kitten.

Most of the men in "Clan" — hairy guys with names like Creb and Broud — are male chauvinist cavemen, who constantly oppress Ayla with rules like "Women must not touch weapons!" She also gets raped disconcertingly often.

Naturally, Ayla can hunt as well as the men and is also smarter than any of them, inventing — as is typical for this film genre — a few handy things, like multiplication.

This movie's reverse discrimination view of cavepersons is as about as simplistic as most other male-oriented caveman flicks.

The film has a few truly effective moments, such as a realistic musk ox hunt and the scene in which Ayla learns how to use a slingshot in defiance of Clan rules.

For the most part, though, a silly scene in which Ms. Hannah realizes she doesn't have brow ridges like the rest of the cave-kids is about as close to memorable as "Clan of the Cave Bear" gets.

"Clan of the Cave Bear," rated R for violence (a bear rips a man's head off), sexual content (there are multiple rapes) and brief partial nudity, is now showing the North Park Cinemas.

'The Boys Next Door' cold killers

One early scene in "The Boys Next Door" has a high school graduation in the background which blares "Congratulations Graduates. The future is yours!"

Two of the school's new graduates don't seem to feel that they have much of a future. They're both outsiders. For some reason, their classmates have never accepted them and, at the age of 18, they also are already embittered.

Bo, played by Charlie Sheen, is a none-too bright kid who is vaguely reminiscent of James Dean in "Rebel Without a Cause" at least partially because young Sheen has his father's — actor Martin Sheen's — James Dean looks.

Roy, played by Maxwell Caulfield, is a big, beefy blond with a pretty boy face that gets very ugly when he's angry. Roy is angry a lot.

"I could have killed that guy," he casually remarks, talking about a car wreck he was in once.

"That's how I feel all the time," Roy coldly replies.

After commencement ceremonies, Bo and Roy go stare at the dark factory where they're due to start work.

"Walk in there Monday, run a drill press the rest of our lives," one of them grimly observes.

They decide to try to have a heck of a weekend before that dreaded Monday, though. They get into an old Plymouth Roadrunner and cruise into Los Angeles.

"This place looks like MTV!" Bo grandly observes.

During their weekend trip, however, the boys gradually descend into a murder spree that would surely make critics of violence in rock music videos blanch and run for cover.

While the film, is chillingly effective in showing how two vapid, alienated youths run amok, it fails to explain why they suddenly become so uncontrollable.

What makes their violence so cruel is that they do it so casually, virtually without thinking.

The closest thing to a reason given for their behavior is Roy's twisted rationalization of a girl's murder, "We gave her two seconds of pain. Girls like her gave us 18 years of pain."

The film was directed by Penelope Spheeris, best known for her punk rock documentary "The Decline of Western Civilization." She is to be commended for not making her young killers into heroes, but she in keeping their motivations too obscure.

"The Boys Next Door" is similar to Terrence Malick's 1971 "Badlands," which starred Martin Sheen with Sissy Spacek. That film was based on Charles Starkweather's real-life killing binge, which later also became the basis of the title track of Bruce Springsteen's "Nebraska" album.

Compared to "Badlands," "Boys" often seems amateurish, vague and simply isn't as attractively made as Malick's grim but carefully crafted work.

One character, late in "Boys," says, "If you know your place in the cosmos, the world is beautiful."

The world of "The Boys Next Door" is so coldly unbeautiful, though, that viewers are more likely to be repelled by it than anything else.

"The Boys Next Door," rated R for a great deal of violence, strong language and some sexual content, is now showing at the Texan Drive-In.

'Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour' auditions slated

COLLEGE STATION — Open auditions for the Globe Theatre's Sesquicentennial production, "The Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour," are scheduled for today at 7:30 p.m. and Monday and Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. "The Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour" is an original musical commissioned by the Globe for the Texas Sesquicentennial celebration.

Performance dates for "The Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour" are June 12-13, July 4-6, and 11-13. Singing and non-singing roles are available for men and women in age ranges from 20-50. Singers should prepare a short audition piece. Auditions will consist of selected scenes from the play.

The Globe has commissioned Rick and June Smith to write the book for "The Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour" with music by Cynthia Cole and lyrics by Cole, Rick and June Smith and Jerry Hamby. The play uses the format of a 1936 radio broadcast, sponsored by the mythical Bluebonnet Flour Co., to tell the birth of the Republic of Texas.

The characters in the show are Stephen F. Austin, who also serves as the radio announcer, Sam Houston, Gibb Gallsup, Sir Anthony Waco, Santa Anna, the Sound Effects Man, Governor Jimmy Allred and Maggie and Bea Monte, the Bluebonnet Flour Singers. Parts are also available for the Texas Settlers. Music for the show will be provided by Professor Willie Roberts and her "Heart o' Texas Orchestra."

While the play begins in 1936 during the Texas Centennial, the action quickly takes the audience back over 100 years as Stephen F. Austin prepares for the arrival of the first band of American settlers to the Mexican colony of Texas. The play traces the conflicts of the early settlers with the Mexican government, Austin's efforts to solve these conflicts and, with the arrival of Sam Houston, the eventual fight for independence from Mexico.

"The Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour" is being directed by David Weaver, Jr., with musical direction by composer Cynthia Cole, and choreography by Jan Collerd. In addition to acting roles, the Globe also needs volunteers for areas such as costuming, scenery construction, props, and lighting. For additional audition information, call the Globe Theatre at 332-1586.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Monday, May 12, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Good business news, a raise and a fulfilling new relationship are coming your way. You find the financial backing you need to launch a business or partnership. Others are eager to hear what you have to say. Set a good example for your subordinates. Be willing to put in the extra hours it takes to do a truly superb job. A loving, tolerant attitude leads to greater domestic bliss.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Florence Nightingale, First Lady Dolley Madison, newscaster Tom Snyder, comic George Carlin, baseball's Yogi Berra, Detroit Tigers slugger Lou Whitaker, music man Burt Bacharach, the Houston Astros' Kevin Bass, commentator Howard K. Smith.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Contradictory urges require you to put mind over matter. Keep business and pleasure separate and profits will rise. A letter about an old business chum fires you with ambition. Romance begins to intensify.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Machine malfunctions could cause delays, trying your patience. Concentrate on solo projects to make the most efficient use of your time. Choose low-key, quiet activities this evening. Romance is best postponed.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Seek peaceful ways to resolve petty differences with loved ones. The emphasis is on upgrading your property. Refurnish your quarters to make them more cheerful.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Community work and local travel keep you on the run now. A business opportunity arises unexpectedly. Rethink your ideas. You need to maintain your high ideals to preserve an important relationship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keep spending to a minimum if you have had heavy expenses lately. Be attentive to an older person who needs guidance in a personal matter.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your efforts to promote a partnership could yield big dividends. Business picks up. Financial progress is seen on all fronts. Socializing becomes increasingly important to your success. Dress to impress.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You discover new facets of your one-and-only's personality. Be careful not to let romance interfere with work. Exercise self-discipline. Ignore financial tips offered by well-intentioned friends.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Go ahead and create an aura of mystery if you think it will attract new business. Just be careful not to carry things too far lest you lose allies.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be prompt to appointments. Someone influential is evaluating your work performance. Now is the time to display your creative talents.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be cautious about any new venture. Friends prove their loyalty in new ways. Avoid someone who likes to play games in romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Prepare yourself to make some major changes. A past mistake can be corrected if you show ingenuity. Upgrade your skills by enrolling in a class or reading self-help books. Mate is supportive.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Begin new ventures with greater confidence and you will attract influential people. Sign contracts or legal papers. A new profession or business could prove highly lucrative in the near future. Plan ahead.

Ms. Armstrong is the kind of woman who was born a feminist but was never militant. "The trouble with the militants is that they denigrated the job of being a housewife. It's a full-time job, as anyone knows who's ever tried. I never did understand anyone who described herself as only a housewife.

"I've decided that the best thing to do is live my life as I want to live it and at least set an example of free will rather than getting too involved in the age-old battle between the sexes. The more freedom women gain, the more threatened men feel. And it's our own fault because we've raised our sons to believe they are princes destined to be kings.

"As incredibly educated as my mom was, she treated my brother just a little differently than she treated my sisters and me. He was the fourth. She had twin girls first, Weezie and Mary, then me, then Alex, and then, oops, about six years later, my sister Caroline. We are all very very close; I wouldn't have been born to any other family in the world.

"Our parents still live in Baltimore, in the same house where we were raised, my older sisters are married and live two minutes away, and my brother lives out here with me. He's a musician-singer-songwriter and we've had a great time together. We're just about to take separate apartments, as a matter of fact, because we've decided it's time to play grownups.

"Our family is one in a thousand. Our parents are such exceptional people and they understand us. They were the black sheep in their families in the era before black sheep were popular. They both fought in World War II. Mom was a code breaker in Washington, Dad was in the South Pacific."

She explains, "Mom was a reaction to her own Southern belle mother. She has told us how she used to overhear her mother's friends discussing her when she was about 26 and getting her Ph.D. in medieval romance languages. 'You know she'll never get married,' they'd whisper, 'because she'd turn down invitations to a dance in order to study.'

"And here was my father who dropped out of law school when his father was attorney general of Maryland! Both Mom and Dad experimented with acting, but they were born teachers. Both of them had kicked around a fair amount, which to me is what you should do. By the time they met and married, what they wanted was to settle in one place and never move, have children and make a stable life for those children.

"My dad taught English and staged all the school dramatics in the boys' school across the street from the girls' school my sisters and I attended. My mom had gone there too and my dad to the school where he taught.

Bess Armstrong

"We were so privileged because our parents took delight in having us and were so with us; we were the recipients of their experience and education. Our dinner discussions were never polite. They still aren't! They're wild, loud and opinionated on every subject in the world."

She continues, "I love going home. It's a haven. I was there for two weeks at Christmas. I've only missed one Christmas at home in my entire life. Now, with the grandchildren, it's wilder than ever. My mother will sit there, ladling out food, saying, 'This has to be the absolutely worst of all Christmas dinners, don't you think?'

"There were four under 5 sitting at their own separate table. The 1-year-old drank nail polish before the hors d'oeuvres and relieved herself of her diaper in the middle of the kitchen before anyone had seconds. The dogs were everywhere and the two music teachers who taught two generations of us come and spend the holidays with us and put up with all this insanity."

Ms. Armstrong's face kindles with laughter and you know her mother must be a beauty because this daughter certainly is. She won't accept it when you tell her. "That is the sort of assumption people are prone to make about me. They always tend to assume I was a prom queen or a cheerleader, when, actually, during my key years — 12, 13, 14 — I was the class nerd. I had scrambled hair, no social graces whatsoever, was very shy, and I played the violin. That was the kiss of death. The hip girls were the ones who had developed bodies. They were great in athletics. They were cheerleaders.

"All to the good, I guess, because it forced me to develop other aspects of myself, especially humor. Humor was highly prized in our family. I always thought my sisters the most drop-dead funny people I'd ever met. It took some years for me to come into my own.

"Drama was what helped most. I was a student at Bryn Mawr School for 14 years, and when I got into the high-school phase of it, there were a lot of plays. My parents made a deal with me: 'Stay on the honor roll and we'll stay out of your way,' they said. 'Just remember, theater is the whipped cream of life. You've got to do something substantial to support yourself.' Substantial meant Latin and Greek. I went on to Brown University, studied Latin and Greek and ended up by the end of my freshman year in the theater.

"By the time I finished college, I'd done more than 100 plays. Theater was my dream. I grew up without TV, ignorant of movies as well. Some people — my fiance, for example — grew up with movies in their eyes from the time they were born. He must have watched 'The Late Late Show' all of his life because if we flip to a movie on TV, he can within three frames tell you the name of any film there is."

Her fiance is a young film producer whom she has known for the past year and a half. "He's one of the baby executives...no, I'd rather not use his name...and no, we've ne worked together. We're care about that. Suffice it to say he' very talented man and we're v different people because he kno the movie business from the grou up and I don't. I was only interest in theater. It was only by coin dence I ended up in televisi Which shows you can never plan t course your life is going to take

She was doing "Twelfth Nig off-Broadway when she acquir her first agent and began doing co mercials. That led to TV and fi auditions. The agent sent her three auditions in one day, two pilots, one for a soap opera.

She didn't know you could on accept one, so she accepted all thre What they gambled on was the on unsure thing, a screen test for t series "On Our Own." She won t role and it turned her career in new direction. Her first major fil was "The Four Seasons"; her secon "High Road to China."

"At that point what I wanted w adventure, to run all over the wor and play every kind of part. I ran over the world. Now I'm glad for t possibility of settling down a while

If you can call settling down pla ing a woman with as complicated personal life and as wild a career the heroine of "All Is Forgiven "We've done a whole season shows and I'm still here," laughs M Armstrong.

"My father was in business, bartering goods. Everything was rationed, but he would obtain shirts and exchange them for shoes. From his share, as well as the gold coins he had managed to hide during the war and bring with him, we were able to have a fabulous apartment.

"Private tutors helped me catch up — I had never been to school — French, English, skiing, typing. I wanted to learn everything. Then I jumped into the highest class possible. My sister, who is a physicist, wrote the high-school finals without attending class and immediately entered university. I studied modern dance and German literature and started to travel.

"I went with a girlfriend to Paris and Italy when I was 16, and I was exposed to a completely different world, going to museums, seeing all the art I could. My parents were very modern and liberal and encouraged me to explore everything."

After studying philosophy, medicine and fine arts at the University of Munich, she emigrated to the United States. In New York she began studying painting at the Art Students League, but it wasn't long before sculpture sang its siren song.

The masters in Europe — Rodin, Cellini and the Russian Archipenko — had made an indelible impression. She had to try it: "I found more satisfaction and challenge in sculpture. If you want something very badly, you have to try, otherwise, you'll never know."

In New York, she met and married real estate developer Joseph Tenenbaum. The prospect of handling both a career and a family didn't faze her. "I can do it all," she says matter-of-factly.

She has raised three children in a close family setting. At 30, Sidney, the eldest, is an architect in New York City. Gary, 27, is a computer consultant and runs the Toronto office for Swedish-owned Multitek Inc. Tamara, 20, is in law school.

It helped to have a supportive husband who is "very understanding, and has never put pressure on me. Everything I did was out of love, not duty," she says.

Ms. Tenenbaum began to work seriously after the three children were in school. In 1958 her husband's business brought the family to Toronto and she found "you can do more with your time here than in New York."

In the mid '70s, Igor Kuchinsky entered her life. A composer and piano virtuoso, Kuchinsky is, more importantly to Ms. Tenenbaum, also the director of the Galerie Heritage and a consultant to government and private art collections. He fell in love with her work at first sight and included her in a theme exhibition titled "Love Story" honoring International Women's Year in 1975.

"Of all the sculptors in my stable," observes Kuchinsky, "Gena has the best use of the stone. She treats it as a living thing."

"I learned how to talk to the stones," Ms. Tenenbaum says, "and they learned how to respond. I study the stone, the outer surface, veins and markings. A preconceived idea never corresponds with the stone.

"I believe there's a form within the stone already. I try to read it, to see what's there, to be in tune with it, and then to bring it forth. That's the most difficult part, fighting in yourself about what you're going to do. Once I decide, I'm at peace. The physical part is easy."

With stones weighing anywhere from 150 to 1,000 pounds, "easy" is not the word that comes to mind to an observer. But she says, "I have a forklift, two sons and a husband. They complained but they helped."

"I can turn at 200-pound stone around myself. My studio is in the house — there was a special provision made for it when the house was built. That also helps."

Her studio consists of two rooms on the ground floor of the house. One is sparse yet cluttered with rubber molds, clay models and maquettes. A smaller room houses the steel cabinet on which the works are carved, chipped at and chiseled.

The dust that falls from the stone while it's being carved is sucked up by three hoses attached to a vacuum motor. Despite this precaution, the walls, floor and ceiling are covered in white powder.

Ms. Tenenbaum wears a mask while working. A compressor is housed in a tiny room off the studio for the pneumatic chipping hammer. When the compressor and the vacuum motors are both on, the noise is deafening. A more peaceful work area has been set up on an outdoor pedestal in a small back courtyard, behind the house.

"When I'm working, there's an effusion of energy," she says. "At the end of the day, rather than being exhausted, I'm elated, especially when I'm happy with the work. With each piece I take on more challenges, more experimentation. That's why I can part with my pieces — I know the next one will be better.

"It's the idea that interests me. Once it's developed, I lose interest and have to force myself to complete the piece. Otherwise I'd have a roomful of unfinished sculpture. I have that staying power now and I know I can do it."

Preferring to work in stone, she selects each block individually in New York or Italy, buying up to 20 pieces at a time. "I like to see the stones first. I like rough shapes and unusual colors — Canadian lava rock, Pakistani onyx, grainless African wonderstone.

Considering the massive nature of the work and the gallery prices for the sculpture ranging from $1,200 to $12,000, it has taken time for Tenenbaum to be able to live from her work. As vice-president of the Sculptors Society of Canada, she is well aware of the problems facing sculptors everywhere.

"Early collectors didn't care about public opinion," she says. "They responded instinctively to the piec They didn't care if the artist w famous. Very few people have th courage. Today in North Americ collectors follow the accepted opi ions of the critics."

Through the Sculptors' Societ her work has gone to Paris, Londo and Brussels and she has had thre solo shows in Europe, as well many group shows in Toronto, Mo treal, Florence and New York. B her desire to do massive outdo pieces has yet to be fulfilled.

She was commissioned to do large outdoor piece for the Jewi Community Center in Calgary, commemorate the holocaust, b then they ran out of money. Ms. Te enbaum had designed an eight-fo high work entitled Holocaust a sent them the maquette.

The inspiration for Holocaust w her aunt, a woman who lost all h children to the Nazis and yet su vived the war to live with her h band to a very old age, perpetua in pain and filled with guilt.

"It would be a betrayal of ever thing I went through and to all t people that died if I didn't retain commitment to Judaism," Ms. Te enbaum says.

'Blue City' no Hamlet or Hammet

Forrest

A ruler is murdered. His widow immediately gets intimate with another man, then his young male heir believes he must avenge his father's death.

The basic plot for one of the greatest dramas of all time, William Shakespeare's "Hamlet," is turned into a juvenile Brat Pack crime action-drama in "Blue City."

Billy — played by Judd Nelson, one of the prominent members of the so-called Brat Pack of young performers — is the son of the powerful but slightly corrupt mayor of a South Florida town. He returns home after being away for years only to discover that his father was murdered six months earlier.

Billy, who was obviously spoiled rotten by Dad but hasn't bothered to call home in years, is suddenly overwhelmed by a Hamlet-like desire to avenge his father.

For some incomprehensible reason, a nice young woman, played by fellow Brat Pack member Ally Sheedy, falls for the rather obnoxious Billy and gets dragged into his vengeful scheming. Unfortunately, there's no real chemistry between Nelson and Ms. Sheedy, so the romance simply feels fake.

Ms. Sheedy is no Ophelia, but then again Nelson isn't exactly Hamlet himself.

Unlike Hamlet, Billy has no trouble making up his mind what to do. Without any real evidence at all (not even a visit from his father's ghost) he instantly decides a local casino operator — also his stepmother's new lover — is responsible for the murder.

Our erstwhile hero proceeds to threaten the man's life, blow up his car, rob his business and take an ax to his casino.

All the while, Billy wears a suede jacket — for that "Rebel Without A Cause" look, one supposes — even though everyone else around him is in shorts, T-shirts and other tropical attire.

Maybe the fact that he's sweltering under that heavy costuming contributes to his bad attitude.

He drips with sarcastic statements like, "Well, I'm real sorry that the family gene pool doesn't live up to your expectations." Many of Billy's wisecracks actually are clever, but there are certainly no "To be or not to be" soliloquies anywhere in "Blue City."

Billy is not the only one with startlingly outrageous lines. At one point Scott Wilson, who plays the casino operator, screeches, "It took 500 years of pure Anglo-Saxon breeding to produce something this big and stupid!"

Although Billy does some big and stupid things that should get him locked away in a prison for a long time, the movie never for a moment treats him as anything other than heroic.

The screenplay utterly lacks any of "Hamlet's" moral ambiguity. It may seem silly to expect that of an action flick, but the hazy line between the dark and light sides of the law was in fact vital to all the great film noir crime movies of the 1940s.

One might expect to see some film noir touches in "Blue City" since it was adapted from a Dashiell Hammet-style novel by Ross MacDonald, but the movie actually has much more in common with "Miami Vice" than "The Maltese Falcon."

"Blue City" isn't much like Hammet or "Hamlet."

"Blue City, rated R for violence, some strong language and sexual content, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

'Clan' features feminist caveperson

On the Caveman Movie Ratings Scale, "Clan of the Cave Bear" is neither as stunningly bad as "One Million Years B.C." nor as good as the not-too-hot "Quest for Fire."

"One Million Years B.C." was an astonishingly inaccurate look at man's prehistory starring Raquel Welch. Actually, since the amply-endowed Ms. Welch wore mankind's first leather bikini in that 1967 opus, it might be more accurate to say the film starred Ms. Welch's chest, which was certainly the most memorable thing in the movie.

"Quest for Fire" was 1982's ambitious and interesting — but often unintentionally funny — attempt to show how primitive man progressed against great hardships. Despite its flaws, some scenes of a tribe struggling to survive in the rugged Ice Age world weren't easy to forget.

"Clan of the Cave Bear" is the screen version of Jean Auel's bestselling novel of the same title and stars Daryl Hannah ("Splash's" mermaid) as a misunderstood Cro-Magnon woman in a Neanderthal world.

Judging from Ms. Hannah, Cro-Magnon humans were history's first race of fashion models, who just happened to wander the same globe as the less intelligent and considerably less good-looking Neanderthals.

As a young girl, Ms. Hannah's character, named Ayla, gets separated from her Cro-Magnon parents in an awful — awful-looking, actually — earthquake. The "quake" — blatantly created by heartily jiggling the camera — is even cheesier than most of the special effects in "One Million Years B.C."

After surviving this pseudo-catastrophe, Ayla is reluctantly adopted by a band of Neanderthals. There she blossoms into mankind's first fur-clad feminist — a big change from Ms. Welch's cave-dwelling sex kitten.

Most of the men in "Clan" — hairy guys with names like Creb and Broud — are male chauvinist cavemen, who constantly oppress Ayla with rules like "Women must not touch weapons!" She also gets raped disconcertingly often.

Naturally, Ayla can hunt as well as the men and is also smarter than any of them, inventing — as is typical for this film genre — a few handy things, like multiplication.

This movie's reverse discrimination view of cavepersons is as about as simplistic as most other male-oriented caveman flicks.

The film has a few truly effective moments, such as a realistic musk ox hunt and the scene in which Ayla learns how to use a slingshot in defiance of Clan rules.

For the most part, though, a silly scene in which Ms. Hannah realizes she doesn't have brow ridges like the rest of the cave-kids is about as close to memorable as "Clan of the Cave Bear" gets.

"Clan of the Cave Bear," rated R for violence (a bear rips a man's head off), sexual content (there are multiple rapes) and brief partial nudity, is now showing the North Park Cinemas.

'The Boys Next Door' cold killers

An early scene in "The Boys Next Door" has a high school banner in the background which reads "Congratulations Graduates. The future is yours!"

Two of the school's new graduates don't seem to feel that they have much of a future. They're both outsiders. For some reason, their classmates have never liked them and, at the age of 18, they are already embittered.

Bo, played by Charlie Sheen, is a bone-too-bright kid who is strongly reminiscent of James Dean in "Rebel Without a Cause" — at least partially because Charlie Sheen has his father's — actor Martin Sheen's — James Dean-ish looks.

Roy, played by Maxwell Caulfield, is a big, beefy blond with a pretty boy face that gets very ugly when he's angry. Roy is angry a lot.

"I could have killed that guy," he casually remarks, talking about a car wreck he was in once.

"That's how I feel all the time," Roy coldly replies.

After commencement ceremonies, Bo and Roy go stare at the dark factory where they're due to start work.

"Walk in there Monday, run a drill press the rest of our lives," one of them grimly observes.

They decide to try to have a heck of a weekend before that dreaded Monday, though. They get into an old Plymouth Roadrunner and cruise into Los Angeles.

"This place looks like MTV!" Bo grandly observes.

During their weekend trip, however, the boys gradually descend into a murder spree that would surely make critics of violence in rock music videos blanch and run for cover.

While the film, is chillingly effective in showing how two vapid, alienated youths run amok, it fails to explain why they suddenly become so uncontrollable.

What makes their violence so cruel is that they do it so casually, virtually without thinking.

The closest thing to a reason given for their behavior is Roy's twisted rationalization of a girl's murder, "We gave her two seconds of pain. Girls like her gave us 18 years of pain."

The film was directed by Penelope Spheeris, best known for her punk rock documentary "The Decline of Western Civilization." She is to be commended for not making her young killers into heroes, but she in keeping their motivations too obscure.

"The Boys Next Door" is similar to Terrence Malick's 1971 "Badlands," which starred Martin Sheen with Sissy Spacek. That film was based on Charles Starkweather's real-life killing binge, which later also became the basis of the title track of Bruce Springsteen's "Nebraska" album.

Compared to "Badlands," "Boys" often seems amateurish, vague and simply isn't as attractively made as Malick's grim but carefully crafted work.

One character, late in "Boys," says, "If you know your place in the cosmos, the world is beautiful."

The world of "The Boys Next Door" is so coldly unbeautiful, though, that viewers are more likely to be repelled by it than anything else.

"The Boys Next Door," rated R for a great deal of violence, strong language and some sexual content, is now showing at the Texan Drive-In.

David Lee Forrest is film critic of the Reporter-Telegram.

Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour' auditions slated

ODESSA — Open auditions for the Globe Theatre's Sesquicentennial production, "The Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour," are scheduled for today at 7:30 p.m., and Monday and Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. "The Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour" is an original musical commissioned by the Globe for the Texas Sesquicentennial celebration.

Performance dates for "The Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour" are June 19-23, July 4-6, and 11-13. Singing and non-singing roles are available for men and women in age ranges from 20-60. Singers should prepare a short audition piece. Auditions will consist of selected scenes from the play.

The Globe has commissioned Rick and June Smith to write the book for "The Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour" with music by Cynthia Cole and lyrics by Cole, Rick and June Smith and Jerry Hamby. The play uses the format of a 1936 radio broadcast, sponsored by the mythical Bluebonnet Flour Co., to tell the birth of the Republic of Texas.

The characters in the show are Stephen F. Austin, who also serves as the radio announcer, Sam Houston, Gibb Gallsup, Sir Anthony Waco, Santa Anna, the Sound Effects Man, Governor Jimmy Allred and Maggie and Bea Monte, the Bluebonnet Flour Singers. Parts are also available for the Texas Settlers. Music for the show will be provided by Professor Willie Roberts and her "Heart o' Texas Orchestra."

While the play begins in 1936 during the Texas Centennial, the action quickly takes the audience back over 100 years as Stephen F. Austin prepares for the arrival of the first band of American settlers to the Mexican colony of Texas. The play traces the conflicts of the early settlers with the Mexican government, Austin's efforts to solve these conflicts and, with the arrival of Sam Houston, the eventual fight for independence from Mexico.

"The Bluebonnet Flour Radio Hour" is being directed by David Weaver, Jr., with musical direction by composer Cynthia Cole, and choreography by Jan Collerd. In addition to acting roles, the Globe also needs volunteers for areas such as costuming, scenery construction, props, and lighting. For additional audition information, call the Globe Theatre at 332-1586.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Monday, May 12, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Good business news, a raise and a fulfilling new relationship are coming your way. You find the financial backing you need to launch a business or partnership. Others are eager to hear what you have to say. Set a good example for your subordinates. Be willing to put in the extra hours it takes to do a truly superb job. A loving, tolerant attitude leads to greater domestic bliss.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Florence Nightingale, First Lady Dolley Madison, newscaster Tom Snyder, comic George Carlin, baseball's Yogi Berra, Detroit Tigers slugger Lou Whitaker, music man Burt Bacharach, the Houston Astros' Kevin Bass, commentator Howard K. Smith.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Contradictory urges require you to put mind over matter. Keep business and pleasure separate and profits will rise. A letter about an old business chum fires you with ambition. Romance begins to intensify.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Machine malfunctions could cause delays, trying your patience. Concentrate on solo projects to make the most efficient use of your time. Choose low-key, quiet activities this evening. Romance is best postponed.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Seek peaceful ways to resolve petty differences with loved ones. The emphasis is on upgrading your property. Refurnish your quarters to make them more cheerful.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Community work and local travel keep you on the run now. A business opportunity arises unexpectedly. Rethink your ideas. You need to maintain your high ideals to preserve an important relationship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keep spending to a minimum if you have had heavy expenses lately. Be attentive to an older person who needs guidance in a personal matter.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your efforts to promote a partnership could yield big dividends. Business picks up. Financial progress is seen on all fronts. Socializing becomes increasingly important to your success. Dress to impress.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You discover new facets of your one-and-only's personality. Be careful not to let romance interfere with work. Exercise self-discipline. Ignore financial tips offered by well-intentioned friends.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Go ahead and create an aura of mystery if you think it will attract new business. Just be careful not to carry things too far lest you lose allies.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be prompt to appointments. Someone influential is evaluating your work performance. Now is the time to display your creative talents.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be cautious about any new venture. Friends prove their loyalty in new ways. Avoid someone who likes to play games in romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Prepare yourself to make some major changes. A past mistake can be corrected if you show ingenuity. Upgrade your skills by enrolling in a class or reading self-help books. Mate is supportive.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Begin new ventures with greater confidence and you will attract influential people. Sign contracts or legal papers. A new profession or business could prove highly lucrative in the near future. Plan ahead.

Thouvenel String Quartet's last concert of season slated

The final concert of the Thouvenel String Quartet Chamber Music Series is at 8 p.m. today in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium, Midland College.

The performance, which is being held in conjunction with the third annual Celebration of the Arts, will include Beethoven's Opus 18, No. 4 in C minor, Shostakovitch's Quartet in A flat Major, Opus 118 and Schumann's Quartet in A minor, Opus 41, No. 1.

Beginning with its April 19 concert at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin, the Thouvenel has inaugurated a series of concerts for Odessa, sponsored by the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale and Interfirst Bank Odessa. The next Odessa performance is set for 3 p.m. May 18 at the Art Institute.

Upcoming events for the Thouvenel include a performance of Schumann Quartet Opus 41, No. 2, choreographed by Anthony Ferro, artistic director of Ballet Midland, for the ballet's May 22-24 performances at the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium. In June, the Thouvenel will perform a private concert for the patrons of the San Antonio Festival, coach and perform at New Mexico State University, Las Cruces, N.M., perform at the Lyric Arts Festival of Houston, and record the Barber Adagio in Dallas for a nature documentary.

After a brief vacation in July, the Thouvenel will perform and coach at the San Diego Chamber Music Workshop, San Diego, Calif.

Tickets may be purchased at the door. For more information call the Midland-Odessa symphony office at Terminal.

Ex-reporter's 'The Sisters' first-rate espionage novel

"The Sisters," by Robert Littell. Bantam. 312 Pages. $16.95.

By MARLENE A. EILERS
Associated Press

A Review

Francis and Carroll are two rather eccentric CIA agents who are planning the perfect crime.

A crime that will have severe repercussions on relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, which is precisely the intention of the two agents, who are better known as the Sisters Death and Night. The chain of events begins with the Sisters sending a false message to a Russian "Sleeper" who lives in Brooklyn.

Once awakened, the Sleeper, a trained assassin, will be instructed to murder a man known only as the Prince of the Realm. But more than halfway through this latest novel by former Newsweek journalist Robert Littell, it becomes clear the assassination Francis and Carroll are planning is President Kennedy's.

Enter the Potter, the former head of the school that had trained the Sleeper. Recently put out to pasture because three proteges had gone wrong, the Potter unwittingly betrays the Sleeper, but soon catches on to the Sisters' duplicitous actions. They arrange for his defection from Russia, but shortly after his arrival in Vienna, the Potter slips away from his American guards and heads for the United States in order to stop the Sleeper from obeying the false orders.

Even though the first chapters drag a bit, "The Sisters" is first-rate suspense, an espionage novel full of astonishingly complex conundrums that will keep readers wondering throughout.

'Jug Band' to play at Cabaret Pops

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Inc. will present its spring Cabaret Pops concerts Friday at Midland's Holiday Inn Country Villa and Saturday at Odessa' Holiday Inn Centre.

The symphony and chorale's Midland performance is being sponsored by Lantern Petroleum Corp., while the Odessa concert is being sponsored by Texas Commerce Bank, Odessa. Both performances begin at 8 p.m., with cocktails available at 7:15 p.m.

Appearing with the Symphony will be The Watermelon Mountain Jug Band from Albuquerque, N.M. This year marks the 11th year of music and merry-making for this Southwestern band.

Evolving from a community college course in jug band music, the band, comprised of five musicians, makes music from an assortment of unusual instruments. Accompanying a guitar and banjo, music is made from a comb wrapped in tissue, a stoneware jug, wooden spoons, an inverted washtub with string and bromm handle ("Gut-tub' bass) and a washboard.

The Watermelon Mountain Jug Band has a repertoire ranging from down-home hillbilly to country-and-western, to songs from the swing and jazz big band eras.

The evening includes complimentary wine with a cheese-and-fruit 'bar.' There will also be a cash bar available serving soft drinks, beer, wine, and mixed drinks.

Ticket prices for the event are $250 for a Conductor's Circle table which seats 10 people at the Midland concert; $200 for a Conductor's Circle table which seats eight at the Odessa concert; $15 for reserved table seating; and $10 for general admission table seating. Tickets may be purchased through the symphony office by calling 563-5269.

Art objects can be appraised

In observance of International Museum Day May 18, the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., is offering those who come by an opportunity to receive informal appraisal advice on their art objects.

Odessan Nelda Lee, a certified fine arts appraiser, will be at the museum from 1:30 to 5 p.m. to talk with those there about their art objects. those attending may bring a small painting, sculpture, print or photograph of a large object.

Ms. Lee will give an estimate of the value and condition of the item and will assist the owner in determining whether an in-depth appraisal is worthwhile.

Appraisers help to determine the values of property for donation of items to tax exempt institutions, for insurance coverage and for tax purposes.

International Museum Day is an annual event celebrated by museums around the world to focus attention on how museums serve the public.

Summer Mummers auditions slated

Villains, heroes, heroines, sidekicks, daddies, dancing girls, madams and other assorted characters are asked to present themselves at Theatre Midland for this year's Summer Mummers auditions.

The audition schedule is 3 p.m. today and 7:30 p.m. Monday. Olio auditions will be held at the same time. The theater says it is looking for "novelty acts, dancers, magicians and anyone who wants to make a fool of himself."

Mummers opens July 4 at the Yucca Theatre. This year's melodrama will be an old standard favorite of Mummers' fans, "Peril on the Pecos." It will be directed by Ron Hughes and produced by Doug Heck.

OC professor has one-man show

Steve Goff, assistant professor of photography at Odessa College, is the featured artist in a one-man show at Gallery 1114. His exhibition features his Green-House Series which he began in 1984 and completed last year.

Goff received his bachelor of fine arts and his master of fine arts from Ohio University, Athens, Ohio. Before coming to Odessa College in 1984, Goff taught at Lakeland Community College, Cleveland State University and Ohio University as well as at the Maine Photographic Workshops and the Cleveland Museum of Art.

The gallery, located at 1114 N. Big Spring St., is open Wednesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 1 to 5 p.m.

It's expensive date

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Joan Gustavel spent $2,800 for a date, but a night on the town with a television anchorman was worth it and went for a good cause, she says.

Ms. Gustavel, 42, picked her man, Channel 6 anchorman Glenn Rinker, from among 25 bachelors auctioned off to raise money for the American Heart Association toward fighting heart disease, the nation's No. 1 killer.

"It was a one-stop shopping bazaar," Ms. Gustavel said after the auction that drew about 400 women and generated $18,000.

BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

Q.—More and more players seem to be using weak two-bids with two clubs as the only force instead of the old forcing two-bids. Would you discuss the merits and drawbacks of the system?—N.E., Omaha, Neb.

A.—Before we discuss the advantages, and disadvantages, of weak two-bids, let's quickly outline the convention for those who are not familiar with it. Instead of using all opening two-bids to show powerful hands and length in the bid suit, bids of two spades, two hearts and two diamonds are used to show specific hands below opening bid strength.

Typically, the bid shows a good six-card suit and a hand of 6-11 points. All hands that used to qualify for a strong two opening bid are instead opened with two clubs, and you show your suit on the next round.

The weak two-bid is a two-way weapon, both offensive and defensive in outlook. Since it describes a hand within fairly precise limits, it is easy for partner to judge the potential of the hand. And since you are forcing the opponents to act at a relatively high level, the bid has considerable preemptive value.

Another reason why weak two-bids are gaining in popularity is frequency of occurrence. Hands of 25 or so points crop up rarely, whereas weak hands with a six-card suit are not at all uncommon.

There are two drawbacks to using weak two-bids. One is that players tend to abuse the convention and open hands that are not suitable for weak two-bids because of suit quality or strength. The other is that strong two-suiters are awkward to handle with an artificial, strong two-club opening, so you have to open them with a one-bid in one of your suits and hope the auction doesn't die on you.

To give you an idea of how effective weak two-bids can be, suppose partner opens two hearts, the next hand passes and you hold one of the following hands:

1. ♠AQ4 ♡K6 ♢A107653 ♣82
2. ♠954 ♡J632 ♢8 ♣KQ765

With both hands you should raise to four hearts. In the first case, you expect to make it. In the second, you have no defense against an opposing game, so you increase the preempt to make it more difficult for the opponents to enter the auction. Imagine the predicament of your left-hand opponent who could be holding:

♠KJ10632 ♡94 ♢KQ92 ♣A

If he bids and catches you with the first hand, it might prove expensive. If he doesn't bid and you have the second hand, he is missing a game and possibly a slam.
